Carnarvon Street (kar-nar-vin-stree’ n. street in Wilton, built in 1879. It originally had eight cottages and a larger 2-storey building. It was named after statesman and essayist Henry Howard Molyneux Herbert, Earl of Carnarvon (1831–90), who was colonial secretary when Canada was granted confederation, as well as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. Originally named Maxwell Street until 1882, it has always had an industrial component, including Buccleuch Printers for example.

Carnegie (kar-nä-gee) n. Andrew (1835–1919) born in Dunfermline, he moved with his family to the U.S.A. at age 8, started working at 13, and eventually became a multi-millionaire in the steel industry. He gave away most of his wealth to public works, particularly involving education, and including Hawick Public Library. He was made an Honorary Burgess upon the Library opening in 1904, stating ‘I declare this library open and free to the people, and this I do in the firm faith that to generation after generation it must prove an ever-increasing harvest and blessed fountain from which only healing waters shall flow for the good of the people of Hawick’. The Museum renovations in 1959 were also helped by the Carnegie Trust.

the Carnegie Public Library (thu-kar-nä-gee-pub-leek-li-bru-ree) n. another name for the Library.

Carolshiels (ka-rul-sheelz) n. former name for Corrie’s Shiel.

Carpet Close (kawr-pi’-klös) n. passageway running from Orrock Place through to a path leading over what was formerly Morlaw’s Croft (also known as the ‘Back o the Yairds’) to the Coble. It still exists, but with no public access. Before the New Road was built in 1815, a favourite walk used to be through Carpet Close to the Coble Pool and the Spetch (named after the adjacent carpet manufacturers).

carpets (kawr-pits) n. carpet manufacturing begun in Hawick in 1752 and was once the main industry in town. Its fame soon spread, and orders came in from far afield. Hawick carpets were noted for their quality. Several manufacturers existed in the late 18th century, also making other heavy woollen articles, such as table covers, rugs and articles used by saddlers. The main factory, however, was in Orrock Place, started by William Robertson. It operated from 1752–1806 and gave its name to Carpet Close. By about 1776 the firm was operating 14 carpet-making looms. A partnership for the development of the local carpet industry was started in 1759 by John Elliot of Borthwickbrae, Walter Elliot of Ormiston, Thomas Turnbull of Minto (and Burnfoot) and William Robertson of Dunfermline, with the latter acting as manager. The original stock was £400, and this had risen in value by a factor of 10 by 1777. These gentlemen can be regarded as the founding fathers of Hawick’s knitwear industry. The partnership was renewed in 1779 between John Elliot, William Robertson and Thomas Turnbull (second son of the previous partner). The trade fell off after the death of 2 of the main partners and when war and banking restrictions raised the price of wool. However, the business was partially replaced with blanket manufacturing and Turnbull’s was carried on from the dyeing department of the old Hawick Carpet Company. The last carpet made in Hawick was in 1844. Some artefacts of carpet manufacturing are preserved in the Museum – ‘... and the carpet in the white bedroom, which was woven at Hawick ... the former days were better than now, in so far as pertained to the durability of the fabrics turned out by the looms’ [RJR].

Carr (kawr) n. Tom (1912–77) born at Allendale, Northumberland, he became a colliery blacksmith. After the War he worked in Newcastle, but then sustained a back injury, which required a change of occupation. His wife sent some of his drawings to a publisher that she met by chance while he was in hospital, and he received a commission to illustrate a book on hunting. He later moved to Dean Cottage in Southdean Parish and became well known as an artist, particularly for hunting scenes in a range of media.

Carre (ker) n. surname spelling variant used by some of the Lairds of Cavers Carre; see Ker.
Carr-Ellison

Carr-Ellison (kawr-ə-lee-sin) n. John Ralph Stockley (b.1867) 2nd son of Capt. Ralph of Hedgely Hall, near Alnwick. He farmed at Wauchope for 5 years and then at Greenriver (i.e. Hobburn) for about the same period. He inspired the formation of the Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905. In 1900 he married Alice Ursula, daughter of Frederick A. Lang of Toorak in 1900. He was a very keen rider with the Jedforest Hunt, serving as Whip 1897–1903. However, he left the area soon after this.

the Carres see the Kerrs

the Carriage Hill (thu-kärēj-hill) n. name used for the Pike, which is crossed by the Catrail. The name was used by Alexander Gordon in the 18th century, William Scott in describing the route of the Catrail and in the New Statistical Account of 1839.

Carrie (kaw-ri) n. George (b.c.1795) born in Earlston, he was a millwright in Lilliesleaf. His sons William and Thomas also worked there as millwrights, while George became a joiner in Melrose (this name may be the same as ‘Currie’).

carrit (kaw-ri) n. carrot (note the pronunciation).

carritch (kaw-rich) n., arch. the catechism, a book containing basic Christian principles in question and answer form, once the foundation of education – ‘He’s never out o’ some mischief, He’ll no’ gang to the schule, He tore his carritch leaf frae leaf To mak’ a dragon’s tail’ [JT].

Carritrig see Carewudrig

Carruthers (kaw-ru-thurz) n. Archibald (15th C.) bequeathed 30 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Brauxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Archibaldo Carutheris’. Henry (b.1816) 3rd son of William and Agnes Davidson. He was shepherd for most of his life, but later became tenant farmer at Netherhall, near Wilton Lodge, where he died. James (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Brauxholme. James (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Earl of Annandale. In 1673 he leased part of the farm of Todshawhill. Joseph (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Bessy Hardie and their children included: Janet (b.1744); and an unnamed child (b.1746). The witnesses in 1746 were flesher Robert Hardie and merchant James Hardie (who were probably related to his wife). Martin (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Betty Wilson and their children included: Betty (b.1760); and William (b.1764). Martin (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Margaret Fairbairn and their children included: William (b.1776); and John (b.1778). Robert (16th C.) servant to Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton. He is listed in 1535 as ‘Robert Carutheris’ among a list of men denounced as rebels for stealing cattle and goods from Craik. In 1535/6 he is listed as a servant of Simon Armstrong when Simon was re-convicted of the same crime. Robert (b.1811) son of William and Agnes Davidson, born at Limekilnsyke. He was shepherd at Upper Langhouse in North Tyne, Singdean and Hindhope. He developed ill-health when relatively young and died at Langburnshielis. Thomas (18th/19th C.) coachman who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It is unclear where he lived. Thomas (1820–96) youngest son of William and Agnes Davidson, he was born at Limekilnsyke. He was a shepherd at Langburnshielis, being for many years the managing shepherd for Langburnshielis and Wauchope for Daniel Mather. He was recorded at Langburnshielis in 1868. He also spent 17 years as manager at Hyndlee. He then moved to Athole Cottage, Kirkton. From about 1848 he was one of the first Trustees of Hawick Congregational Kirk. In 1863 he reported finding peculiar lines of stones, which were examined by members of the Hawick Archæological Society. In 1848 at Wolfelee Glen he married Margaret, daughter of dyker John Dalgleish, and she died at Athole Cottage, Kirkton in 1892, aged 66. They had 5 sons and 2 daughters, including: William, shepherd at Phaup; John, farmer at Barrow in Coquetdale, who married Christine Thomson; Jane; Thomas, farmer at Dodd, then in Northumberland; and Robert, who moved to Deadwater and married Kitty Dagg. Thomas (b.1857) son of Thomas and Margaret Dalgleish. He started his working life as shepherd at Clenchhead in Rulewater. He then became tenant farmer at Dod (owned by Mr. Pott) and later Featherwood, Rochester, Northumberland. He married Elizabeth Coleleuch Usher at Weensmoor in about 1880; she was eldest daughter of Thomas Usher of Eildon. Their children included Thomas Usher. He gave an account of his family tree to Tancred of Weens. William (18th C.) shepherd from Eildon. In 1773 he married Margaret Cochrane. Their children included William, who was born in Bowden Parish, and whose descendants lived at Langburnshielis in Rulewater. He died at Langburnshielis. William (b.1780) son of William and Margaret Cochrane, he was born in Bowden. It is said that he went to college, but decided to pursue the calling of a shepherd and moved to Langburnshiels in Rulewater. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Davidson and Catherine Williamson. Their children were: William; Robert, also a shepherd; Catherine, who married shepherd John Wilson; Henry, shepherd at Netherhall; Thomas, who died in infancy; Thomas, who was also a shepherd; and Margaret, who married John Hallyday, possibly the ‘Rustic Bard’. He lived until at least age 70. William (b.1809) eldest son of William and Agnes Davidson. He was older brother of Thomas, who was head shepherd on the Wauchope estate. He worked as a labourer and was living with his brother on the 1861 census. He is probably the W. Carruthers who donated several items to Hawick Museum in 1861, including 2 stone rings dug up at Robert’s Linn, some fossils and part of a stone quern. William (b.c.1850) eldest son of Thomas and Margaret Dalgleish. He became a shepherd at Plaup, Teviothead. He married Jane Routledge of Plashetts. They had 4 sons and 1 daughter (formerly ‘Carutheris’, ‘Cruthers’ and variants).

Carswell (karz-wel) n. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘Kareswell’, he could be connected with the lands of Cresswell in Hassendean Parish (which may have given rise to the name ‘Kersel’). Alternatively he could be related to the Kerrs. He married Isabel, Countess of Mar, widow of Donald, 12th Earl of Mar, and also widow of Geoffrey Mowbray. In 1347 he and his wife were granted by Edward III the Sherifflom of Roxburghshire and Keepership of Roxburgh Castle. In 1348 he received lands which had belonged to his deceased wife, until her son Thomas (Earl of Mar) came of age. He was still Sheriff of Teviotdale in about 1356. He also held the Barony of Roberton (not the local village) and Lordship of Kenback.

the Carter (thu-kawr’-nr) n. popular name for the Carter Bar – ‘. . . Nature’s Wardens of the Marches – The Cairter, Cattcleuch Shin, Peel Fell, Penchrise Pen, Skelfhill Pen, an the lave’ [ECS], ‘The rough road runs by the Carter . . . ’ [WL], ‘The long line of the Carter, Teviotdale flung wide, And a slight stir in the heather – a wind from the English side’ [WHO]. ‘Here on the crest of the Carter, Far though her children may roam, Scotland with arms wide open, Welcomes her wanderers home’ [WL] (also ‘the Cairter’).

Carterhaugh  (kar’, kawr’, kawr-tur-haw, -hawf, -hawch) n. flat area about half a mile long, where the Yarrow and Ettrick meet, below Bowhill and adjacent to Philiphaugh. In 1502 William Turnbull, in Branxholme, had remission for being involved in stealing cattle, horses and goods from the Murrays there. In 1541 it was listed among the lands ‘that war assignit for the keping of the hous of Newwerk and now ar occupit be the tennentis’. The Scotts of Buccleuch long owned the lands, as recorded e.g. in 1653, the Carterhaugh Baa

1663 and when they were surveyed in 1718. It was the scene of the famous poem ‘Tamlane’ and for many years the site for various rustic sports – ‘O I forbid you, maidens a’, That gear gowd on your hair, ‘To come or gae by Carterhaugh, For young Tam Lin is there’ [T].

the Carterhaugh Baa (thu-kawr’-, kär’-ur-hawf-baw) n. famous football game of Monday 4th December 1815, between those from Selkirk, led by Sir Walter Scott (Sheriff of the county) and men from the rural half of the shire, led by the Earl of Home, with the Ettrick Shepherd as lieutenant. Contingents from other towns, including Hawick joined the Soutars, and adopted fir twigs as their emblem, while country folk from Ettrick, Tweeddale and beyond joined the shepherds of Yarrow, and donned a sprig of heather. The organisation was by Bailie Clarkson and Robert Henderson, and the reasons for holding the contest were obscure even at the time. There is a suggestion that it arose out of an after-dinner conversation at Bowhill, perhaps to recreate the ancient feudal spirit. The game itself was started by the Duke of Buccleuch, whose pennant was again on display – ‘We met our opponents (their badge was the heather). Assembled in thousands on Carterhaugh Plain’ [JH], ‘Then hail! memorial of the brave, the Liegeman’s pride, the Border’s awe! May thy grey pennon never wave On sterner field than Carterhaugh!’ [ES], ‘Then strip lads, and to it, though sharp be the weather, And if, by miscalculation, you should happen to fall, There are worse things in life than a tumble on heather, And life is itself but a game of football’ [SWS].

Carterhouse (kawr’-, kär’-ur-hoos) n. Carterhouse, farm in Southdean Parish, situated on the right of the A6088 shortly before coming to the A68. A quern of mediæval type was found while digging there, as described in 1994.

cartlidge (kar’-leej) n. Joseph B. (b.1834) born in Edinburgh, he became a photographer and worked in Hawick in the period 1866-67. He may have been managing the studio for William Walker. He had previously worked for the Edinburgh Photographic Company, which had also employed John Aitken.

cartoosh (kawr-toosh) n., arch. a short jacket formerly worn by women (hence the nickname ‘Sibbie Cartoosh’; also cottoush).

cartrich (kawr’-rich, kawr-treech) n. a cartridge (note the ch rather than j and cf. cairtridge).

carvey (kar-vee) n., arch. a caraway seed, especially used as a decoration in confectionary – ‘…gingerbread men and horses, adorned with carvey eyes and acoutrments’ [WNK].

case (käs) n., arch. condition – ‘…to keipe and maintain the common toune knock in the steeple in ane good going order and sufficient caise and condition for knocking and chopping hourly …’ [BR1706].

Case (käs) n. nickname for John Turnbull tenant of Nether Bonchester.

cashie (kaw-shee) adj., arch. flabby, flaccid (said of food) – ‘A cashie turnip; cashie mutton’ [JAHM], of inferior quality (said of goods), unprincipled (of a person) – ‘A cashie fellow’ [JAHM], delicate, unable to bear fatigue (of sheep).

cashie (kaw-shee) adj., arch. forward, cheeky, talkative (noted by J. Jamieson who says ‘This, I suspect, is originally the same with ‘Calsheel’”).

Cashie (kaw-shee) n. nickname in the 19th century (presumably different from ‘Auld Cash’ and reeling to cashie) – ‘Wullie Dunlap and Big Frank creep Past us, and Cashie’s near at hand; cashmere (kawsh-meer) n. A garment knitted with wool from the Asiatic goat, having extremely fine fibres (mean diameter < 18.5 μm), and representing the luxury end of the knitwear industry.
There’s Kelso Wull and Wat the Sweep, And Wullie Goudlands leadin’ the Band’ [HI].

Cashmere is Scottish (kawsh-meer-iz-skoe’-eesh) n. Promotional film made in 1973 by Martin Kane Production, lasting 17 minutes. Directed by Abel Goodman and narrated by Bryden Murdoch, it describes the connection between cashmere and Scotland, shows various Scottish scenes, and with some garments modelled by Joanna Lumley. The knitwear was supplied by Pringle of Scotland, Ballantyne of Peebles, Braemar, Barrie, Glenmac and J. & D. McGeorge.

cass (kaws) n., arch. A set of 4 cherry stones used in the game of ‘papes’ – ‘Note: a caddle o paips, a cäss of paips = a set of four ‘paips’’ [ECS].

Cass (kaws) n. Mark of Cockpen (17th C.) from Northumberland. In 1658 he purchased the lands of Templehall in Hobkirk Parish from William Northumberland. In 1658 he purchased the lands of Templehall in Hobkirk Parish from William Northumberland. In 1658 he purchased the lands of Templehall in Hobkirk Parish from William Northumberland.

Cassa (ka-su) n., arch. Pavement, causeway; causey (see also causa and causey).

cassay see causey

cassayer see causey-er

cassen (kaw-sen) pp., poet. Cast – ‘Why art thou casen doun, o’ my saul?’ [HSR], ‘But thou hest casen aff an’ abhorret, thou hest been verra angrie wi’ thine anaintet’ [HSR] (also written ‘castin’; see also casten).

cast (kawst) v., arch. To cast, reappear, to swarm (of bees), to dig, especially to cut pieces of peat or sods and cast them up with a spade – ‘...to the thorter dikes to cast divots, and he went to the Myreslawgreen, and did cast there contrar the proclamation made against casting there’ [BR1666], ‘...did cast peats in the Common Mosses and turf and diviot on the Common Muir of Hawick ...’ [C&L1767], ‘Deed aye, for I mysel’ hae seen Folk casting peats in Myreslawgreen’ [WNK], (said of coloured cloth) to fade, to consider, assess, plan – ‘...and the bailies, appoint stent-masters, to cast on the sum laid on the town of Hawick as unfrie traders, by the act of the Committee of Parliament’ [BR1699] (see also cast oot, cast up, etc.).

casta (kaws-tu) n., arch. The stem of a cabbage (also castie).

casten (kaws-ten) pp., arch. Cast – ‘A party is fined for away taking six gang of divatts off the common of Hawick, which were casten for the use of the common kill’ [BR1680], ‘...the crose and the Tolbuith stair to be amended, and the Tolbuith to be casten with lime’ [BR1737], ‘But thou hest casten aff an’ abhorret, thou hest been verra angrie wi’ thine anaintet’ [HSR] (also written ‘castin’; see also cast up).

caster (kaws-tur) n., arch. Someone who casts peats.

castie (kaws-te) n., arch. The stem of a cabbage (also casta).

Castle Cary (kaw-sul) n. Andrew, pseudonymous column in the Hawick News, generally stirring up controversy.

the Castle (thu-kaw-sul) n. Popular name for several buildings around Hawick, usually being the tallest in the area. There was a ‘Castle’ near the top end of what is now Drumlanrig Square. It has also been a name for the high house on Morrison Place overlooking the bowling clubs, as well as houses on Lothian Street and the former large tenement building up the Dean.

Castle Cary (kaw-sul-ka-ree) n. Town in Somerset, formerly the main seat of the Lovel family. It lies a few miles north-west of Wincanton and almost directly between Bristol and Weymouth. Little is known of the town until Norman times, when it was allocated to Walter de Douai, who probably built the first ‘motte and bailey’. After his death it passed to Ascelin Gouel de Percival, then (at least according to some accounts) to his sons Robert and William, who probably built the first stone keep about 1130. It passed to William’s son Ralph, who changed the family name to Lovel. Note, however, that these early generations are very uncertain. The castle was about 78 feet square, and may have been similar to the original Tower built by the Lovels in Hawick. Nothing survives of the castle itself except for significant earthworks, the stone having been reused for local building. This tradition continued with the ‘Castle Rise’ development obliterating part of the earthworks around 2000. These remains are reached from the town centre along a footpath known as ‘Paddock Drain’, and includes the ‘motte’ on which the castle was built. The ‘Horse Pond’ and the ‘Park Pond’ are both remnants of the ancient castle moat (note, an actual ‘moat’, not a ‘motte!’). Park Pond is the source of the River Cary, the spring there, ‘Lady’s Spring’, being once considered holy and dedicated to the Virgin Mary (perhaps with a connection to the later dedication of St. Mary’s in Hawick). Other notable buildings in the town are the Round House and the Market House. The founder of the MacMillan Cancer Foundation was...

born here. Like Hawick, the town's former market day was Thursday. And Castle Cary's dominant local industry was also textiles, starting with wool, then flax, and also horsehair (it now has the only horsehair product manufacturers in the U.K.). Other (mainly coincidental) similarities with Hawick include: a train station (which survived the Beeching Report); seats to enjoy the view from the hill above the town; a High Street, as well as a Victoria Road and an area called 'the Sandbanks'; a public area known simply as 'the Park'; and a merger with the neighbouring town, Ansford in this case. Population approximately 2,700 (there is another place of the same name near Cumbernauld).

the Castle-End (thu-kaw-sul-end) n. another name for 'the Castle', which was somewhere near the top end of 'the Raws' or the bottom of the Loan.

Castlehill (kaw-sul-hil) n. former name for a farm on the north side of the Teviot above Newmill, perhaps associated with what is now called 'Whitcastle Hill'. The name thus seems likely to have been connected with earlier fortifications on the hills above, rather than having anything to do with the nearby Branhholme Castle. Robert Turnbull from there was charged in 1494/5 with stealing sheep. In 1627 the farm is described as paying 16 bolls in 'stock and teynd'. Alexander Paterson was tenant in 1671, Robert Thomson in 1690, William Nixon in 1692, William Gray in 1694, Walter Scott in 1696 and Walter Wilson in 1698. Archibald Riddell and William Gray were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, with James 'Bleack' as shepherd. Walter Wilson was there in 1700. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. At that time it consisted of 77 acres, bounded by Branhholme Town farm, the River Teviot, Newmill Burn (with Harwood farm on the other side), How Meadow farm and Chapelhill farm. There was a farmhouse marked near the middle of the land. The farm may once have been more extensive, perhaps including How Meadow and other higher parts, extending towards Whitcastle Hill (it is marked 'Castel hill' on Blaeu's 1654 map; also written 'the Castle-hill', it is 'le castel hil de branxame' in 1494/5, Castelhill' in 1627 and 'Castalhill' in 1694).

Castlehill (kaw-sul-hil) n. former home of a branch of the Scotts, near Ashkirk, presumably adjacent to Castleside. Scott of Satchells lists 'Scot of Castlehill' as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch (this probably relating to sometime around 1600), and possibly related to the Scots of Northhouse. George Scott 'callit of Deeringstoun' had sheep stolen from 'his landis of Castell-hill' in 1613 (however, it is possible this was the lands near Branhholme).

Castlehill (kaw-sul-hil) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. In the 1541 rental roll of Jedforest it was tenanted by John and Robert Waugh, paying 22s yearly. The precise location is unclear, but it was listed between Wattie's Spinels and Lethem (it is 'Castelhill' in 1541).

Castle Hill (kaw-sul-hil) n. small hill in the Borthwick valley, lying on the north side of the water, just to the south of Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, and south-west of Borthwick Waas cemetery. It is a tree-covered knoll, reaching a height of 176 m, and has been suggested to have been the original location of the castle of the Borthwick family. It was also associated with the name 'Africa' (although not known as such locally, and that is also attached to the archaeological remains at the Camp Burn), and had been claimed to be the remains of a motte and bailey. Now too much obliterated by cultivation, it is impossible to attach a date, or to guess as to the original extent of the earthworks.

Castle Hill (kaw-sul-hil) n. hill in a bend of the Ale Water, just to the north of Ancrum village. A fort occupies the flat top of the hill, to which it presumably gave its name. It may be an enclosed settlement dating from the Dark Ages.

Castle Hill (kaw-sul-hil) n. small hill in Liddesdale, being essentially the south-west projection of Swarf Hill, about 2 miles east of Newcastleton.

Castle Knowe (kaw-sul-now) n. name for a small rise just to the north-east of Cavers House, with another called Court Knowe nearby. It was said to have contained a ruin, visible in the mid-18th century, possibly being a watch-tower.

Castle Knowe (kaw-sul-now) n. hill just to the south of Billerwell, in the Rule valley. Probably the same place was also formerly called 'the Birkhill'.

Castle Law (kaw-sul-law) n. hill just to the south-east of Hummelknowes farm, reaching a height of 700 ft. The hill-fort there probably measured 75 m by 45 m, but has been partly obliterated by quarrying, although extensive ramparts are still visible. It surely had some association with the nearby fort on Kaim Law.

Castle Lodge (kaw-sul-loj) n. name sometimes used by locals for Stobs Lodge.

Castle O'er (kaw-sul-ô-ur, -ow-ur) n. hamlet about 9 miles north-west of Langholm, which gives its name to the surrounding forest. It is named after the nearby extensive Iron age hill-fort, the earlier name being Overbie or ‘Yethyre’. The Dell’s Jingle (linear earthwork) and King Shaw’s Grave (ancient cist) are also nearby.

Castle Park (kaw-sul-pawrk) n. name for a field on the south (or east) side of the main avenue leading to Cavers.

Castleside (kaw-sul-sid) n. farm just to the south-west of Ashkirk, opposite Salenside. It was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century. The lands were valued at £160 in 1643 and owned by Francis Scott; also in 1643 the teinds were valued (along with Leap Hill, Woll and Broadlee) at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. It was valued at £160 according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1694 there were 3 tenants listed there. The teinds were valued (along with Broadlee) at £62. Walter Noble was there in 1710. James Fairbairn was farmer there in at least 1789–97. It is listed in 1788 being owned by Thomas Wilkinson and valued at £160. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was valued (along with Salenside and Broadlee) at £519. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. G. Murray was farmer in 1868. There were formerly two ancient encampments there, but one was obliterated by ploughing in the early 19th century (it is ‘Castlesyd’ in 1607, ‘Castelsyde’ in 1623, ‘Castillside’ in 1638, ‘Castillside’ in 1661 and ‘Castalside’ in 1694; it is marked on Baleu’s 1654 map as ‘Castelsyid’ and is also on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Castleside Hill (kaw-sul-sid-hil) n. hill to the west of Ashkirk and just north of Essenside Loch. The summit contains the remains of a hill-fort or prehistoric settlement, measuring about 66 m by 60 m, with an entrance on the north-east side. It contains several circular hut platforms, which have been cut into the sides of 3 natural rocky spines. Traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation are all round the summit. There are also remains of a rectangular building on the south-west side. An ‘ancient mill’ found near the ‘square camp’ on the summit was presented to the Archæological Society in 1856.

Castle Sike (kaw-sul-sik) n. stream that rises on Hermitage Hill and roughly south-east to join the Hermitage Water. It effectively forms the eastern side of the defences of Hermitage Castle and has been partly diverted as a result. Further up the stream are the remains of a farmstead.

Castlesteed (kaw-sul-steed) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as vacant in the 1541 rental roll. The location is uncertain, but presumably near the site of either Liddel Castle or Hermitage Castle (it is ‘Castelsteid’ in 1541).

Castleton (kaw-sul’in) n. medieval village around Liddel Castle on the Liddel Water, about 2½ miles north-east of Newcastleton. In the 12th century it consisted of an earth and timber Norman Castle (home of the de Soulis family, and sometimes called Liddel Castle), the church of St. Martin and several houses around a village green. The land was granted to Jedburgh Abbey some time before 1165 and was part of the Barony given (or perhaps regranted) to Ranulph de Soulis by David I in the early 12th century. Edward I stayed here in 1296 on his expedition through Scotland, collecting the signatures that survived as the Ragman Rolls. The ‘Villa cum toll’ is listed in a c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 12 merks, and ‘Molendium’, i.e. the mill worth 58 merks. The village was once fairly substantial and gave its name to the surrounding parish. The church was demolished at the beginning of the 19th century, and another built a mile further down the valley in 1808, with alterations in 1885. Walter Scott paid tax on 2 hearths there in 1694. John and George Murray and Thomas Oliver were farmers there in 1797. It is said that the village was abandoned in the late 18th century when Newcastleton was built, but that the turf-covered ruins of houses were still visible in the early 20th century. The original burial ground is still in use and the new church has a hearse house attached. Little else of the village or castle survives except earthworks, and a stone stump that was the base of the former market cross. It is still possible to see a hallowed-out road on the north-east side of the graveyard and leading down to the river. There is also an area of rig lines to the west (occasionally written ‘Castletoun’ it was formerly ‘Castletoune’ etc.; there are several other Castletons and Castletowns in Britain; the name derives simply from the Old English ‘castel tun’ and first appears as ‘Casteltoun’ in 1220 and ‘Cassiltoun’ in 1275, ‘Cassiltoune’ in 1586, 1653 and 1633 and ‘Cassiltoune’ in 1662 and 1663, ‘Casteltoun’ in 1661 and ‘Cassiltone’ in 1663; it is ‘Castleton’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map and it is still ‘Castletoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but appears on Coronelli’s 1689 map of Scotland as ‘Castletóú’).

Castleton clogs (kaw-sul’in-kloz) n. clogs from Castleton, used as an epithet by people from neighbouring areas. It was said that visitors to upper Liddesdale would be asked where they were from, and after replying ‘Castleton’, the following question would be ‘then where are your clogs?’.
Castleton Croft

Castleton Croft (kaw-sul’-in-kroft) n. former name for lands near Castleton in Liddesdale. It is recorded in 1541 as ‘Cassiltoun croftis’, with no tenant at that time.

Castleton Cross (kaw-sul’-in-kros) n. ancient village cross of Castleton. It is about a 2 1/2 feet high base, 28 inches square, with a more recent concrete shaft inserted, and lies in an area of rough pasture to the south of the road opposite the site of the Castle.

Castleton Kirk (kaw-sul’-in-kirk) n. church of Castleton Parish. It existed from about the middle of the 12th century, was dedicated to St. Martin and before the Reformation belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. Rights due to ‘the chaplain residing at the church of Liddel and the prior residing there’ are described in a document of Glasgow Diocese in 1220 (although the names of these people are not given). The ‘vacariss de Castleton’ is also recorded in 1324. In 1604 it was united with the Kirks of Ettleton, Wheel-kirk and Bellskirk. There were also once chapels at Hermitage and Dinlabyre. After the Reformation the patronage of the Church passed from Jedburgh Abbey to the Earl of Home, then to Sir John Ker of Jedburgh then the Earl of Bothwell and by forfeiture to Scott of Buccleuch by 1632. In 1649 part of Cromwell’s army stayed a few nights there and they ‘brak down and burnt the communion tables and the seats of the kirk; and at their removing, carried away the minister’s books, to the value of 1000 merks, and above, and also the books of the session, with which they lighted their tobacco-pipes, the baptism, marriage, and examination rolls, from October, 1612, to September, 1648, all which were lost and destroyed’. They also took the church bell, leaving it at Stanwick in Cumberland. The original church was in Castleton itself, in the middle of the graveyard, and was demolished in the early years of the 19th century, although some stones from it may have been built into the new churchyard wall (one of which used to clearly read 1621). The former Manse lay ‘on the summit of a stupendous rocky precipice impending over the Liddel’. Both the original Kirk and Manse are shown on a 1718 survey of the farm of Byreholm (for the Buccleuch estates); the church is beside the place marked ‘Cemy’ on the modern Ordnance Survey map and the Manse between there and the river, with the Glebe lands stretching along the riverside. The new church was built at the confluence of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters in 1808. It was rebuilt in Newcastleston village in 1885, with a stone of date 1808 built into the back wall. It is still there, on Montagu Street in Newcastleston, sometimes called ‘Newcastleton Kirk’. The Manse was at 23 Langholm Street. Another small church was built at Sauthtree in 1872. Newcastleston also contained a Secession Church (built 1801–04, later part of the United Presbyterian Church), a Congregational Church (built 1850) and a Free Church (built in 1853). The history of the various churches in the parish is a complicated one. In 1950 the Castleton building closed and the former St. John’s became parish church. In 1976 there was a union into Castleton and Sauthtree Parish, and from 1993 it was called Liddesdale Parish Church. Recently the church merged into the charge of Canonbie United, Newcastleston and Sauthtree. The Olivers of Dinlabyre donated 4 sacramental cups to the Kirk in 1748. A roll of the ministry is: William Cotes, from 1535; Archibald Elliot, recorded in 1557; James Oliver, from 1559; Martin Elliot 1574; (vacant in 1575); Richard Thomson 1604–c.1606; Thomas Bannatyne 1607–10; Walter Scott 1612–49; Andrew Pringle 1650–89; Robert Armstrong 1693–1732; William Armstrong 1733–49; Simon Haliburton 1751–63; Robert Rutherford 1763–90; Thomas Martin 1791; James Arkle 1792–1800; David Scott 1801–22; Angus Barton 1822–61; James Noble 1861–83; William Vassie 1883–1917; John Morrison McLuckie 1918–26; Harold Andrew Cockburn 1927–31; Alan McDonald Craig 1931–61; Archibald Lamont 1961–64; Bryden Maben 1965–76; Mr. Galbraith 1976–79; Reginald Campbell 1979–89; Alan Reid 1989–2008; Stephen Fulcher 2009– (Castleton Kirk is still marked in its original position on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Castleton Manse (kaw-sul’-in-mawns) n. manse for Castleton Parish at 23 Langholm Street in Newcastleston. The former Manse was probably near to the older church, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters; in 1694 tax was paid on 3 hearths there and in 1748 it was taxed for 18 windows. In 1821 William Scott describes how the ruins of the old Manse and garden could still be seen on a precipice overlooking the Liddel. In 1839 the glebe was described as consisting of between 20 and 25 acres.

Castleton Moor (kaw-sul’-in-moor) n. Castle- ton Muir, area of moorland to the south of the former settlement at Castleton. Lands there were recorded as ‘Cassaltoun Moore’ in 1541, with a value of 5 merks. A long cist was discovered there, as described in 1982.
Castleton Pairish

Castleton Pairish (kaw-sul’-in-pa-reesh) n. parish centred on the former village of the same name, containing Newcastleton, and being the southernmost parish in Roxburghshire. It was bounded by England, Dumfriesshire and parts of Teviothead, Hobkirk and Southdean. It is almost synonymous with ‘Liddesdale’, the Liddel Water running through it roughly from east to south. It was also the largest parish in the south of Scotland, and approximately 1/5th of the area of Roxburghshire. In 1600 the Parish was stated to have been ‘waste’ for many years. The Parish was reorganised in 1604, there being a lack containing the areas that had been served by Etterlon Kirk, Wheel Kirk and Bellskirk. It then became the largest parish in southern Scotland. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £15,500. Originally part of the Presbytery of Langholm, in 1743 it became part of the Presbytery of Langholm and Synod of Dumfries, even although it lay politically within the County of Roxburghshire. There are Parish records from 1749. A Secession Church was established in the parish in the 1750s and a branch of the Free Church in the 1840s; at one point there were 6 places of worship in the district. Hiring days were formerly 2nd Friday of April for men and Fridays before the 17th of May and 8th of November for women. There was also once a lamb fair on the Friday before the 2nd Wednesday of September and other livestock fairs on the Thursday before the 2nd Tuesday in October and the 3rd Friday in November. There are Session minutes existing from 1660. Baptismal records for the parish begin in 1749 and marriages in 1759 (it should not be confused with parishes of the same name in Derbyshire and Dorset).

Castleton Schuil (kaw-sul’-in-skil) n. school in Castleton Parish. The old building is adjacent to the former Parish Kirk, just by the conjunction of the Hermitage and Liddel Waters. On its north gable there is a stone inscribed with the date 1621 and bearing a shield. John Oliver is recorded as schoolmaster in 1778. There were about 100 pupils there in the 1830s. Richard Fraiter was hired in 1707. William Scott was schoolmaster up until his death in 1761. Mr. Forsyth was master in the early 1800s. William Telford was teacher at Castleton in 1837.

Castleweary (kaw-sul- wee-ree) n. farm and former hamlet south of Teviothead and just beyond Binks, where the Phaup Burn joins the Frostlie Burn. Jean Scott, first wife of James Cavers ‘Auld Dunnerum’, came from here. John Scott, roadman, lived here for 40 years in the latter part of the 19th century. For a while it was the place used for changing horses on the stagecoach. There may once have been a tower-house there (mentioned in the New Statistical Account in 1839), but there are now no traces of it – ‘...But when near Castleweary the poor horse broke down, So they called on the farmer, a man of renown’ [JCG].

the Castle Well (thu-kaw-sul-wel) n. old name for a spring near the road at Ormiston, the name being in use until the early 20th century. It was situated immediately north of the site of the castle, separated from it by the driveway to the modern farmhouse (presumably related to Cocklaw Castle; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, north-east of the house).

the air with a bat – ‘They cauna play at cat and bat. And a’ their girs are hid the noo’ [WFC].

cat an clay (kaw'-an-klâ) n., arch. method of building construction in which wickerwork was plastered with clay – ‘In the hamlet of Deanburnhaugh sixty years ago there were twenty-one chimneys, constructed on what is known as the ‘cat and clay’ principle; that is, a wisp of straw mixed with clay, was laid upon a super-structure of wood fastened to the wall, each side about three feet long, the centre piece being about 3½ feet, and on that was laid the pieces of straw and clay, tier upon tier, gradually narrowing until the top was reached’ [HAST1909].
catch a plack (kawch-a-plawk) v., arch. to make money – ‘If by it he can steal a groat Or catch a plack’ [JR] (also ‘catch the plack’).
catch’d (kawchd) contr. catch it, receive punishment, be scolded – ‘ee’ll catch’d when yer fither gets hame’.
catched (kawched) pp. caught – ‘A catched threi troots’, ‘...she tried teh escape bit was catched an put on trial’ [BW] (used interchangeably with the English ‘caught’).
catchy (kaw-chee) adj., arch. changeable (of weather), unexpectedly showery, unsettled.

Catcleugh (kaw'-klooch) n. area around the Carter Bar. Catcleugh Shin (544 m, 1742 ft) is a hill in the Cheviots, just south of where the A6088 meets the A68. Catcleugh Reservoir in further down the A68, about 3 miles into England. The Byrness church has a plaque commemorating the 63 people who died during its construction 1891–1904 (also spelled ‘Catcleugh’; ‘Catcleuch’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Cat Cleuch (kaw'-klooch) n. small stream which rises on Catcleugh Shin and runs roughly northwards, crossing the A6088, to become part of Shaw Burn (the name may be related to the wild cat).

Cat Cleuch (kaw'-klooch) n. small stream in the upper Hermitage valley. It rises on Catcleuch Brae and flows southwards to join the Hermitage Water between Gortenberry and Twislehope.
cate (kâ') v., arch. to be in heat, desire a mate, especially of female cats – ‘The cat’s a-catin’’ [GW].

the Catechism (thu-kaw-te-zi-zum) n. a book giving a summary of Christian doctrine in question and answer form. Until the late 19th century every member of a congregation was expected to know this by heart, and it formed the basis of Sunday School education. Before the mid-1800s the minister would annually visit and catechise each member of the congregation. The ‘Longer Catechism’ was approved by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1648; it consisted of 196 questions. The ‘Shorter Catechism’ was also adopted in 1648; it consisted of 107 questions and was intended for ‘Catechising Such as Are of Weaker Capacity’. This was almost always the form used, and was locally referred to as the ‘carritch’.

Cat Gair (kaw'-gâr) n. area at the head of Cat Sike in the upper Borthwick valley, now deep within Craik Forest. It lies to the north-west of Wolfcleuchhead. Catgair Edge is marked on modern maps, being the north side of Ewelair Hill.

Cathels (kaw-thulz) n. Rev. Dr. David (1853–1925) born at Arbroath, he was son of Hohn and Katherine Boath. He was educated in Dundee and at Edinburgh University and licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1881. He assisted Dr. McRae in Hawick for a year, then became minister of Kirkton from 1882. However, he moved back Hawick as minister in 1892. In 1913–14 he visited and confirmed the Church of Ichang on the Yangtze in China. He was appointed Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1924. In late 1924 he unveiled the memorial to Rev. Johnman in St. George’s Kirk, and gave a eulogy on his former colleague. He was also involved in the Vertishill Sports and other local activities. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1925, along with Earl Haig, but died that same year. His published sermons are ‘Ourselves and Our Times, a Guild Sermon’ (published in Hawick, 1887), ‘Christian Manhood’ (Hawick, 1889), ‘Landmarks: a Common-Riding Sermon’ (Hawick, 1895), ‘Honour the king: a sermon preached in Hawick Parish Church’ (Hawick, 1897), ‘The Reformation and John Knox’ (Hawick, 1905) and his Moderator’s address for 1924, ‘The Permanent and the Transitory’. He married Mildred Margaret (who died in 1901), daughter of Peter Gardner and later Margaret Agnes (who died in 1940), daughter of John Hewat of Edinburgh. His children were: Katherine Stuart, who married Capt. Harold Mansfeld; Mildred Margaret Lindsay, M.B., C.M.; John Howard Crawford, Jane Gardner, who married James Johnstone, M.B.; and Louis Patrick (b.1939), Rector of St. Peter’s, Peterhouse. He is buried in the Wellowgate Cemetery – ‘Then upon the Sabbath day Ti the Pairish Kirk oo made oor way Reverend Cathels, grim and dour, Sermons went on owre an hoor’ [IWL].

Catheugh (kawt-hewch) n. name for a place in the eastern part of Castleton Parish. It is marked
Catheugh

Cathide Sike

Catholicism (kath-li-si-zum) n. branch of Christianity, with ecclesiastical centre in Rome, often referred to as ‘Roman Catholicism’ by Protestants and Episcopalians. Historically the split between Catholics and Protestants was wrapped up in national and royal politics and culminated with the Reformation of 1560, when the Scottish Parliament refuted the authority of the Pope and made celebration of Mass illegal. However, the suppression of the Catholic religion culminated with the Reformation of 1560, when the Scottish Parliament refuted the authority of the Pope and made celebration of Mass illegal.

However, the suppression of the Catholic religion was less bloody than in England, Catholic Priests were allowed to keep 2/3 of their income and monasteries were allowed to retain some property. It is worth remembering that before the middle of the 16th century, all Terries would have been Roman Catholics (and this includes the first few decades of Cornets!). However, the Catholic church did not grow again in Hawick until the early 19th century, largely because of an influx of Irish workers. A group of about 200 were discovered in 1837 by William Wallace, the private chaplain of Traquair. They had been making do with hiring a private hall (possibly the Subscription Rooms) and with visiting a priest in either Traquair or Edinburgh. After this period an Edinburgh priest, Stephen Keenan, visited every 3 months, while Wallace struggled to raise money for a chapel in Hawick. who then endeavoured to raise funds to provide a chapel. Most of them were Irish immigrants or of fairly recent Irish descent. They had been making do with hiring a private hall (possibly the Subscription Rooms) and with visiting the priest at Traquair or in Edinburgh. Stephen Keenan from Edinburgh there-after visited every 3 months. In 1840 William Wallace said of Hawick: ‘the seeds of animosity seem never to have been sown here, and that if attempted to be sown now, they would not prosper in a soil so adverse to their growth’. Unlike in the major Scottish cities, Terries can be proud of their lack of sectarianism. When S.S. Mary & David’s was built on Buccleuch Street in 1844 it was the first Roman Catholic Chapel in the Borders. Hawick also saw the arrival of 2 sets of nuns, the Dominican Sisters, associated with the Convent at Kyrelawgreen and St. Margaret’s Home, and the Augustinian Sisters, associated with St. Andrew’s Convent and Nursing Home at Stitches House. Both sets of nuns have now departed.

Cathrae (kath-rā, -ree) n. Andrew (1835–64) son of slate merchant William. He was born in Wilton and trained as a writer’s clerk. He moved to Australia by 1853, where he set up the firm of merchants Mark & Cathrae, based in Melbourne. He later moved to India, where he ran the Wilton Tea Factory in Hindustan; there is still a ‘Wilton Tea Estate’ School near there. He was decessed by 1870 when Laing & Irvine sued his family members to recover a debt for goods sent to his firm in Melbourne in the 1850s. Jenny ‘Jenny Tranllicts’, ‘Jenny Tranlketts’, ‘Jenny Ern-yetts’ or ‘Jenny Airn-yetts’ (19th C.) of unknown birthplace, she was once a familiar street figure. She had one leg shorter than the other and walked with a stick. She was known to be very pugnacious and was regularly taunted by the youth of Hawick. For a while she lived at Southfield, where an iron gate was erected to stop her continually burning the wooden gate for firewood, hence the cry ‘Ern Yetts! Ern Yetts!’ used to torment her. She died in Mill Port and is buried in the Auld Kirkyard. It is possible she was the Janet born in 1809 to Thomas Cathrae and Agnes Armstrong. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hoscoate in 1712 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. His surname is written ‘Cafrea’. He is probably the John who married Bessie Inglis in Roberton in 1705. John (1807–bef. 42) son of slate merchant Thomas, he was a
Cathrae’s Haugh

Hawick stockingmaker. His son James was transported to Australia in 1844 after several problems with the law, and still has living descendants there today. Martin (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton parish. He was at Chisholme in 1710, when his surname is written ‘cafrea’. His children included: Martin (b.1704); Isabel and Margaret (b.1706); and Martin (again, b.1710). Martin (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Wilson in 1755 and their children included: Betty (b.1760); and William (b.1764). Martin (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Fairbairn (or ‘Freebairn’) and their children included: Thomas (b.1774); William (b.1776); and John (b.1778). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1751. In 1751 he witnessed a baptism for James Dodds, resident in Clarilaw. He married Jean Mack and their son Martin was baptised in 1751, with witnesses James and William Scott. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His son Adam was baptised in 1754. Thomas (1774–1825) son of Martin and Margaret Fairbairn. He became a slate merchant who had a yard on Cathrae’s Haugh, adjoining the Upper Haugh, and owned other land along the edge of the Common Haugh. On Wood’s 1824 map he is owner of a field on the north side of the modern Victoria Road and another to the west of Wilton Mills off the modern Commercial Road. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory he is listed as a Slater on Damside. He married Agnes Armstrong in 1825. In 1830 and their children were: John (b.1803); William (b.1805); John (again. b.1807); Janet (b.1809), who married miller John Fiddes; Margaret (b.1812); Thomas (b.1815), who worked as a miller and grocer; and Agnes (b.1817), who was a seamstress. His wife Agnes (age 60) was living on Damside at the 1841 census, along with Thomas and Agnes. Thomas (b.1815) son of Thomas and Agnes Armstrong. In 1851 he was a journeyman miller with his brother-in-law John Fiddes at Roughheugh. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Licensed Hawker for Groceries’ on Wilton Path. Thomas (b.1831) son of William, he worked as a commercial traveller (probably as a coal merchant) before becoming a local newspaper editor. He had the house Rillmount built on West Stewart Place. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Newspaper Editor’ at 61 High Street. He was editor of the ‘Hawick Advertiser’ 1857–74 and had several apprentices who went on to bigger things. He was probably the Thomas who was Clerk to the Course at the Common Riding in the 1850s. He was Secretary of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce from the 1860s until at least the 1880s. In 1870 he and his sister Agnes Isabella were sued by Laing & Irvine to recover money for goods sold to his deceased brother Andrew. He was also known for having literary talents and wrote ‘History of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club’ as well as compiling the early discussions of that Club, which were later published in 1909. Additionally he published a booklet for the centenary celebrations held for Sir Walter Scott at Brantholme in 1871. He is probably the Thomas who married Jessie Haig in 1853; their children included Martin and William (who died in infancy). He died in Newcastle. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included Martin (b.1804) and Adam (b.1805). His widow could be the Elizabeth living on the Crescent in 1841, along with her daughter Isabella. William (1805–1862) son of Thomas and Agnes Armstrong. He succeeded his father Thomas as a slate merchant in Wilton and was also a bank teller at the British Linen Bank. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840, with the address changed from ‘Back Damside’ to ‘Wilton Grove’. He is listed as a slate merchant in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He built the house called Wilton Grove in the early 19th century. He was an early Trustee of St. George’s Kirk and also acted as the first Clerk of the Deacon’s Court of that church. He could be the William who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1830 and their children included: Thomas (b.1831); Margaret (b.1832); Andrew (b.1834); William (b.1836); John Hislop (b.1838); Agnes (b.1839); Jessie Turnbull (b.1845); Walter (b.1846); and Agnes Isabella (b.c.1848). They were at Wilton Grove in 1841 and 1851 and his wife was dead by the 1851 census (also formerly ‘Cafrea’, ‘Cathrea’, ‘Cathree’ and ‘Cathrie’).

Cathrae’s Haugh (kath-ráez-hawf hawf) n. land that adjoined the Upper Haugh, so-called because Cathrae’s slate-yard was once there. It was later developed as Albert Mills and later as Mactaggart’s skinworks.

Catlee (kaw-lee) n. former steading, near Wauchope, on the Catlee Burn. A Turnbull from there (first name illegible) was accused of being a riever in 1530. In 1540 among Scottish rebels listed as being in England we find ‘Pait Trumbill called Catle elder, Pait Trumbill called Catle younger,
the Catlee Burn

Jame Trumbill, young Pait’s brother’ and other Turnbulls. George Turnbull was there in 1567. It is probably the ‘Catlie’ listed among the Liddesdale possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in 1632. It was once part of the estate of Wauchope, and was part of the set of lands sold by William, Lord Cramstoun to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1659. In 1677 it was described as a ‘pertinent’ of Wauchope. It was part of the estate of Wolfelee when purchased by William Elliot in 1730. In 1788 (and continued in 1811), it was listed (along with Catleeshaw) among lands owned by Cornelius Elliot, valued at £233 6s 8d (possibly related to the wild cat; it was ‘Catlie’ in 1530, ‘Catlie’ in 1540, ‘Catlie’ in 1541, ‘Catlie’ in 1567, ‘Catley’ in 1677 and ‘Catly’ in 1788; note that it is easy to confuse with ‘Gatliehill’ on the Hermitage Water).

the Catlee Burn (thu-kaw’-lee-burn) n. stream that rises near the ‘Note o the Gate’, formed by the Hyndlee and other streams, passing Hyndlee and Wolfelee to become part of the Rule Water at Forkins. On the west bank of the stream, in the trees near Hell’s Hole, are a fairly extensive group of cultivation terraces, now partly destroyed by forestry plantation (also written ‘Catley Burn’ or ‘Catleyburn’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Catleeshaw (kaw’-lee-shaw) n. former remote steading adjacent to the lands of Catlee in upper Rule water. In 1677 it is described along with Catlee as a ‘pertinent’ of Wauchope, contiguous with the lands of Woolee. It was listed along with Catlee on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (recorded in 1659 and 1730 along with ‘Catlee’, it is ‘Cattleyshaw’ in 1677 and ‘Catlyshaw’ in 1788).

Catley see Catlee

Catlie see Gatliehill

Catlockhill (kaw’-lok-hil) n. former name for lands that were later called Branxholme Brae. This is probably the ‘Catslak’ mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, when the tenant was Roland Wilson. It is probably the ‘Catslockhill’ mentioned in the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer’. The name was apparently still known to Mr. Grieve, tenant of Branxholme Park in the early 19th century (according to a marginal note in his 1802 copy of ‘The Minstrelsy of the Border’) – ‘And when he cam’ to the Catslack hill He shouted loud, and cried weel hie, Till out and spak’ him William’s Wat, O wha’s this brings the fray to me?’ [T] (written ‘Catlochill’ by Grieve; it should not be confused with Catslack).

Cattraeth (ka-trāth) n. battle of the late 6th century, commemorated in the epic poem ‘the Gododdin’, which has been called the oldest Scottish poem (although it was written in ancient Welsh). The battle was between a band of Britons from near Edinburgh who set out to meet the invading Saxons. It was once speculated to have taken place at Hawick Moor, but is more likely to have been at Catterick in North Yorkshire (also ‘Caltraeth’ etc.).

the Catrail (thu-kaw’-rāl) n. an earthenwork ditch, which passes near the sources of the Borthwick, Allan, Slitrig and Teviot Waters. Its most easterly part ends near Robert’s Linn bridge (actually at the Flossh Burn) beside the Hawick to Newcastleton Road, and it runs intermittently for about 12 miles to Hoscoteshiel, near Girnwood farm on the Borthwick. It was first described by Alexander Gordon in his ‘Itinerarium’. Earlier Ordnance Survey maps (supported by the writings of Gordon, John Russell, Alexander Jeffrey and Francis Lynn) marked it extending to near Torwoodlee (west of Galashiels), via Stanhope Law etc., and also beyond Robert’s Linn into Liddesdale, but these extensions were not supported by subsequent investigations and excavations (and in several cases old roads and minor ditches were mistaken for parts of the structure). James Smail spent many days trying to trace its path, and wrote about it for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club in 1880. The exact course of the feature between Girnwood and Robert’s Linn is also uncertain, but it seems clear that the line of the earthwork is continued in places by streams. There are many other ancient ditches in the area, and some uncertainty about precisely which features may be part of the Catrail; some are probably of the same period, but with uncertain relationship. The ditch is around 9 ft wide, with a low bank on each side, but the width and height vary considerably (and today few parts can be discerned that are more than 6 ft wide and ½m wide). Local legend suggested that it was created by the Devil, who lived at Hellmoor, with his mother as housekeeper; he killed her in a rage when he found his porridge not to be ready and dragged her around, making the ditch, and threw her into the Devil’s Cauldron on Stonedge farm. It was also formerly associated with the Picts, hence sometimes called the ‘Pict’s Work Dyke’, and was considered to be a defensive barrier. However, clearer heads have prevailed, and it now seems likely to have been merely a boundary ditch (as first pointed out by W.N. Kennedy in 1858). It (and perhaps related ditches) was surveyed by Catrail Edge

Francis Lynn in 1898 and in the 1980s part within the Stanishope forest was excavated. Other linear earthworks in the area mark the boundaries between farms, but the extent of the Catrail means it must have marked a more significant boundary. It probably dates to the time of land disputes between Northumbrians or Bernicians (to the north-east) and the native Britons of the hillier regions to the south-west – ‘The next ane was ane careless scemp, Moss-muddled head and tail; Ye might trowed him the ghaisit o’ a’ guryl Pict Wha had shugheid i’ the grit Cattrail’ [T] (parts are marked on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Cattrail’; the origin of the name is obscure, but the first syllable could be from the old Celtic ‘cad’, meaning ‘battle’ and the ending perhaps being the Celtic ‘eil, which is associated with fences).

Catrail Edge (ka’-ræl-ij) n. area just to the west of the Pike, near where a piece of the Catrail is visible. The ‘edge’ is now along the side of the forest.

Cats-an-kitlins (katz-an-kit-linz) n., pl., arch. catkins, flowers of the hazel or willow.

Cat’s Cleuch (kats'-kloo-ch) n. small stream that rises near Shiel Knowe to the west of Saugh-tree. It runs roughly south-west to join Fawhope-knowe Sike. It also gave it’s name to Catscleuch Culvert on the railway line.

Catshawhill (ka’-shaw-hil) n. farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, south of Firth. It is probably the lands in Raperlaw owned by David Davidson in 1643. John Douglas was owner in 1678, when the lands were valued at £195. John Douglas was still there in 1694 and another John Douglas was owner in 1761. It was bought by Thomas Turnbull (who worked in the Hawick carpet trade) in the mid-18th century, but sold after a few years for a large profit. William Smail was owner in 1788 and Thomas Smail was owner in 1797 and still recorded there in 1811 (it is ‘Catchahill’ in 1694 and ‘Catsahill’ in 1761).

Catslack (ka’-slæk) n. tower and farm by the Catslack Burn, in the Yarrow valley, about 15 miles from Hawick. It was once owned by the Crown and stocked with the King’s sheep, it was leased to the Crichtons of Cranston-Riddell in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. In 1494/5 3 men called Mark from Tinnis had remission for the murder of John Tennant there. In 1539 the lands ‘with the tower and fortalice thereof’ were inherited by James Crichton of Cranston Riddell from his father. At that time they were valued at £71 16s. 8d., but 40 merks in time of peace. In 1541 it was valued at £70 3s. 4d. There was a discharge in 1542 for rentals of these lands (and others) associated with Janet Beaton (who had married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme), widow of the older James Crichton. In 1550 it was among lands leased to Janet Beaton by her son James Crichton for 19 years. In this tower Lady Elizabeth, the widow of an earlier Sir Walter of Buccleuch, was burned to death in 1547 by a band of English, supported by the Kerrs. John Scott was tenant there when he was in dispute with William Elliot of Horsleyhill in 1563, and in 1574/5 Elliot was forced to vacate the lands. In 1581 Robert Crichton of Sanquhar had a charter for these lands, along with Monthenger and others. William Scott ‘in Lies’ was also called ‘of Catslackknowe’ by Scott of Satchells (sometime around 1600) when listed among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch; he was said to be descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. The lands were still mentioned when James Scott (son of Walter ‘in Catslak’) was minister of Kirkton in the early 17th century, although they were still recorded as part of the Buccleuch properties in 1634, 1653, 1663 and 1693. William Scott of Catslack held lands in Hassendean Parish in 1643, valued at £52. Walter Scott of Catslack paid tax on lands with the same value in 1663 and John Scott of Catslack in 1678. ‘Catslackknow’ and ‘Catslackburne’ are on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties. By 1788 the lands that had been in Hassendean and held by the Scotts of Catslack were also known as ‘Millmac’, ‘Mewmaw’ or ‘Lees’ and owned by Scott of Burnhead. In 1785 and 1802 they were valued at about £330 and £880, respectively. Walter Forsyth was there in 1821. 2 brothers, Charles and Walter Scott were farmers there into the mid-19th century, both living into their 90s. Note that the place of a similar name mentioned in the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer’, may be ‘Catlochill’ near Branxholme (it is ‘Catslack’ in 1466, ‘Katsclack’ in 1459, ‘Cattisslak’ in 1488, ‘catslak’ in 1494/5, ‘Catslack’ in 1501 and 1510, ‘Cattislaik’ in 1539, ‘Catslak’ in 1541, 1542 and 1550, ‘Catslack’ in 1663 and ‘Catsluchc’ in 1678).

Cats’s Cleuch (ku-tawts-pool, -pil) n. deep pool below the Cauld, on the south side (the other side formerly being the ‘Ladies’ Pool’). The name came from its supposed use for drowning unwanted cats in weighted sacks. It was notorious as the site of accidental drownings, but has been largely filled in – ‘...Like gumpin’ eels ablow the Albert Brig, Or ‘katies’ in the deep Cat’s Pule’ [WL] (also written ‘Pule’).

the Cat’s Pool (ku-tawts-pool, -pil) n. deep pool below the Cauld, on the south side (the other side formally being the ‘Ladies’ Pool’). It was notorious as the site of accidental drownings, but has been largely filled in – ‘...Like gumpin’ eels ablow the Albert Brig, Or ‘katies’ in the deep Cat’s Pule’ [WL] (also written ‘Pule’).

cat’s-wesh (katz-wesh) n., arch. a cursory face wash.

Cattanach (kaw-te-nach) n. Rev. David Lynedoch (b.1882) son of Peter Lorrimer and Jane Bladworth Hardie, he was born in Edinburgh. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1904, was licensed in 1911, then was assistant at Park Parish in Glasgow before becoming minister of Golspie in 1913. During WWI he served as a gunner in the Royal Field Artillery. He was translated to Hobbirk in 1922 and remained as minister there until 1953. He was Chaplain of the Scots Memorial Church in Jerusalem 1923–24. He married Dorothy Agnes Leechman in 1914. Their daughter Isobel Mary Lorimer died in 1929.

the Cattle Tryst (thu-kaw'-ul-trist, -trist) n. name sometimes used for the cattle fair held on the 3rd Tuesday in October near Thorterdykes, when drovers would stop with their cattle on the way to southern markets. This was started in 1785 at the suggestion of the Hawick Farmers’ Club. Although it was never hugely successful, it ran for a few decades (it is a little unclear whether or not this was separate from the horse fair) – ‘There is a weekly marker and 4 fairs, besides a tryst, established, within these few years, for black cattle, &c. in October, between Falkirk tryst and Newcastle fair, which promises to succeed’[RRG].

stop flooding – ‘...and the stones were handy for caulding the river’ [RJR].

the Cauld (thu-kawld) n. popular name for the Coble Cauld – ‘You’ll hear me roar or softly sigh. And sing my Border lullaby, For such is life
– I am the Cauld!’ [WFC], ‘It’s nocht like what it used to be I doot I’ getting auld, There’s no a sowl to be seen now Doon at the cauld’ [DH].

Cauldleculeuch (kawl-klooch, kawld-klooch) n.
Cauldleculeuch Head is 1,996 feet (619 m) high, and is the highest peak within Roxburghshire (the only higher places are on the boundary with England). It is situated 10 miles south-west of Hawick and is an imposing backdrop to many local views in that direction. It is the source of the ‘Cauld Cleuch’, which runs into the Priesthaugh Burn, which in turn feeds into the Allan Water. The lands there were given to the monks of Melrose by William, 1st Earl of Douglas in about 1358;
the part granted was listed as ‘caldcluch infe-riori’, suggesting that there was also a ‘greater Cauldleculeuch’. They were inherited (along with Tillielee) by Robert, grandson of Robert Elliot in 1497/8, and at that point were held of the Laird of Cavers. They formed part of the Lairship of Ringwoodfield, along with Priesthaugh, Sto-bicote, etc., as recorded in a document of 1500 and other later charters. The lands were listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1511. Along with Southdeanrig, the lands were rented from Melrose Abbey by Scott of Synton and Elliot of Thorlieshope in 1557; at that time it was valued at £3 6s 4d. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. The lands were still part of the Lordship and Regality of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1663 and 1690. They were still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands may have given rise to a surname, recorded around 1600 – ‘An a merk on the shoorder o’ Cauldleculeuch To show where the cloudberries growe...’ [DH] (also sometimes ‘Caldleculeuch’; ‘Caldeclouheued’ is recorded in an English document listing the boundary of lands in the Cheviots in 1255; it is ‘Caldlecuch’ in 1497/8, ‘Cauldlecuch’ in 1500, ‘Caldlecuch’ in 1557 and 1640, ‘Cawleuch’ in 1653, ‘Caldlecuch’ in 1660, ‘Caldcleuch’ in 1663 and ‘Caldcleugh’ in 1687 and 1698; the name of the cleuch is presumably because it is a cold and wind-swept location).

Cauldleculeuch (kawld-kloech) n. James (17th C.) tenant in Braidwoodshiel in 1658 and por-tioner in Blainslie in the early 1660s. He is mentioned in records of the Regality of Melrose.
Thomas, who is also listed in some of the same records was his brother. John (d.1612) minister at Newburgh and Edbie and Master of St. Mary’s College, St. Andrews. He was part of the General Assembly in 1586 and became Professor of Theology at Glasgow. Perhaps the same John (son of John) inherited lands in Ugstoun in Lauderdale in 1602, and was married to Katherine Hardie.
He gave evidence at a trial for witchcraft in 1610, stating that the defendant was long ‘suspect to be ane wicket woman, and ane Sorcerer’. In 1612 there was a complaint against him and another man, that they had not paid compensation and so should be apprehended. His name may have de-derived from the lands in southern Roxburghshire.

John (17th C.) weaver who served as an apprentice in Edinburgh from 1643 until 1655. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Blainslie near Melrose in at least the 1650s and early 1660s. He held 3 husbandlands there, with teinds payable to the supeior. He was also tenant at Braidwoodshiel, with his brother James. William (16th/17th C.) servant and shepherd of Sir Patrick Hepburn of Lufness. He was tenant at Easter Gemieishilshes and recorded in 1601 when sheep were stolen from there (also written ‘Caldcleuch’, ‘Caldcleugh’ and ‘Caldleculeugh’).

Cauld Faulds (kawld-fawldz) n. alternative name for Cawfaulds.

Cauldhouse (kawld-hoos) n. Coldhouse, for-er house between the Stintyknowe and Drinkstone farm, marked ‘Coldhouse Kipp’ on the Ordinance Survey map. The house is long gone, but the site can still be discerned. There is also the remains of a hill-fort nearby. Scott of Satchells said that Robert Scott of Howford received the lands of ‘Cowdhouse’ for his service (probably in the late 16th century). Marie Scott was liferenter there according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when it was valued at £40. William Scott of Cold-house paid land tax on £40 in 1678. The lands became part of Wilton Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. Robert Scott paid tax on 11 windows there in 1748. Walter Scott was living there in 1780. Thomas Cranston is recorded as farmer there in 1797. Rev. Robert Scott of Innerleithen is recorded as owner in 1788 (and still listed that way in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was still valued at £40. John Nichol was farmer in 1835. There were Dalgleishes and Lockies there in 1841, but it was abandoned soon afterwards. The family of Scott of Coldhouse

Cauldhouse Kipp became connected with Chisholme House in the early 19th century, and also gained some fame through Alexander, who was a friend of Lord Byron’s (formerly written ‘Cawdhouse’ etc., it is ‘Cawdhouse’ in 1643, ‘Cawdhouse’ in 1678 and 1686, ‘Coldhous’ in 1690, ‘Coldichouse’ in Hawick in 1736, ‘Couddhouse’ in 1748, ‘Cawdhouse’ in 1797 and ‘Cowdhouse or Coldhouse’ in 1811; it is ‘Cawdhouse’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and a house is still marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Caulhouse Kipp (kawld-hoos-kip) n. Coldhouse Kipp, a ridge above Stichers, running north-east to south-west. There are the remains of a fort on top, with main ditches 380 ft apart, as well as evidence of other earthworks. The entrance appears to have been at the northern end, although there has been some damage caused by cultivation and quarrying (probably from ‘kip’, meaning the point of a hill).

cauldest (kawld-ist) adj. coldest – ‘...An’ warm eneuch to thaw The caulddest frost an’ snow’ [FL].

cauldit (kawld-dee’, -di’) adj., arch. having a cold, sick, diseased – ‘...Item, that nane keippe any eneuch to thaw The cauldest frost an’ snow’ [FL].

Cauld Kail (kawld-kail) n. nickname in use around the early 19th century – ‘The Sootie Kittlin and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI] (the origin is obscure; cf. Cauld Pottage).

cauldly (kawld-lee) adv. coldly – ‘...I thocht I wad gang daft wi’ joy, yet cauldly turned away ...’ [JCG].

Cauld Mill see Cauldmill

Cauldmill (kawld-mill) n. hamlet on the A6088 just outside Hawick, in a picturesque setting, at the junction with the road to Cavers. It formerly had a blacksmith’s shop, now a private house. Andrew Blyth was blacksmith there until about 1690. John Fleming was there in at least 1720–23. Adam Miller was there in 1723 and William Whillans in 1728. James Smith was blacksmith there in the early 19th century and Robert Scott in the mid-19th century. One of the corn mills of Cavers estate was there in the 18th century – ‘Horsleyhill and Cauldmill, Syne owre the Orchard braes; Crawbyres Brig and Hummelknowes, The hedges, hips and slaes’ [WL] (it is ‘Caldmyline, Cavers’ in 1690, ‘Kaldmilne’ in 1694 and ‘Caldmills’ in 1723; it is marked ‘Calmill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, although possibly on the wrong side of the Kirkton Burn; it is unclear whether the name relates to being cold, or a weir).

Cauld Pottage (kawld-po’-eej) n. nickname for Janet Scott.

cauldrite (kawld-rift, -rift) adj., arch., poet. cold, chilly, disaffected, indifferent – ‘...A feel the cauld, so A’m a cauldrite cratur’ [ME], ‘...Twas cauldrite death that gruesome carle, that closed her een sae blue’ [WE], ‘...Stirs na an echo in my cauldrite hert’ [WL], ‘...Gleanin’ what little comfort’s gaun Frae the cauldrite compromise That though as mony as ever get shot, There’s fewer get baked in pies’ [DH], ‘...And mony generations syne, Cauldrite, I should hae lairnt to care’ [DH].

Cauldsheils (kawld-shelz) n. small loch south of Tweedbank, below a hill of the same name. The lands there were owned by a branch of the Kers from at least the late 15th century. This is probably the ‘Caldschelis’ which was among the places listed in the 1535 trial of Robert Scott of Allanhaugh, accused of leading raids and stealing livestock from a number of farms.

Cauldsid (kawld-si’d) n. former fortified house in Liddesdale, on the west bank of the Liddel just south of Riccarton farm and opposite the modern Larriston farm. It seems likely it is related to Caulde Sike, which is further north, near Riccarton Tower; it is possible it is an alternative name for that tower-house (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Caldsyd’ and Visscher’s 1689 map as ‘Caldsyde’; the name probably relates to being cold and wind-swept).

Cauldsid (kawld-si’d) n. farm in Liddesdale, just into Dunfriesshire. Poet David Anderson spent the first 7 years of his married life living there, and wrote a poem about it in 1838. John Little and Michael Clarke were there in the early 19th century. George and William Armstrong, David Little, Robert Martin, John Scott and David Warwick were there in 1868 – ‘It would have ta’en Sir Walter’s skill To tell his beauties a’ – Each waving field and wimpling rill ‘Roun’ bont Cauldsid raw’ [DA].

cauld steer (kawld-steer) n., arch. a drink made of cold water or sour milk and oatmeal.

Cauld Well (kawld-wel) n. spring to the east of Salendale farm in Ashkirk Parish.

Cauldwell Sike (kawld-wel-sik) n. stream that rises on Cooms Fell in western Liddesdale and runs roughly eastwards, eventually joining the Black Burn.

Cauldwell Snab (kawld-wel-snawb) n. Coldwell Snab, slope on the southern side of Hermitage Hill, to the north-west of Hermitage Castle (‘snab' is an Old English word meaning a steep, short slope).
Caulker Grain

Caulker Grain (kaw-kur-grân) n. stream that rises on the north side of Hartsgarth Fell and flows roughly north-west to join Chapel Grain south of Twislehope farm (it is marked ‘Cawker Grain’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

cau nel see caunle

cau nle (kaw-nil) n. a candle – ‘now blow out yer birdih caunles’, ‘A curse on them that in-vinted caunle light’, ‘Aye’ was Caleb’s ready re-sponse, ‘and them that in-vinted day light too for working in’ [WK], ‘...that cooden haud the caunle ti Ancreum for wurth!’ [ECS], ‘Snot that caunle; it’s a gaun ti creesh’ [ECS], ‘I mind o’ boss turnips like faces, Wi’ caunle aa gaun ti creesh {there’s a waister on’t’ [EC], ‘Snot that cannle; it’s working in’ [WNK], ‘For thou wull licht my canel response, ‘and them that invinted day light too for yyr birdih caunles’, ‘ `A curse on them that in-vinted day light too for working in’ [WK].

causa (kaw-Za) n., arch. a street, particularly one laid with cobblestones rather than flagstones, v. to pave with cobblestones – ‘causing of the meikle guttur stone cas’ [BR1695] (many spelling variants exist, see cassa, causey, calsay and the causa croon; from Old Norse).

the causa croon (thu-kaw-Za-kroon) n., arch. to keep or take ‘the causa croon’ is literally to keep to the highest part of the street, i.e. the middle, hence figuratively it means to stay aloft, to maintain an air of respectability – ‘...to avoid the unsightly channels, preferred walking on the crown or ‘top rigging of the cassay’’ [V&M], ‘She aye has kept the causa croon, And ever independent’ [JT], ‘New fashions tak’ the causa croon’ [JT], ‘He ye might keep the causa’ croon Alang wi’ decent folk’ [JT] (see also Hogg, the Et-trick Shepherd: ‘sic a man ... will maybe keep the croon o’ the causey longer than some that carried their heads higher’).

causa-stane (kaw-Za-stän) n., arch. paving stone, cobble-stone, portion of a road – ‘an the pluifin ter froes up atween the causa-stanes’ [ECS].

Causewayfit (kawz-wä-fët) n. Causewayfoot, former cottage near Wolfelee, also known as ‘Causeyfit’.

causey (kaw-zee, kaw-zä, kaw-see) n., arch. a cobbled street, cobble-stone, formerly meaning a road suitable for wheeled traffic – ‘...to help mend the channels and caussays from their respective foordoors upon each syd of the street to the tope rigging of the cassay ... ’ [BR1715], ‘...While the muckle horse snorted, clattin’ the causays’ [DH], v., arch. to lay stones, pave – ‘...the middle o’t being casset wi’ loefe ... ’ [HSR] (spelled ‘cassae’, ‘cassay’, ‘causey’, ‘caussay’ and other variants; also pronounced causa and calsay; it occurs in some place names, e.g. ‘Causey Grain Head’, ‘Causeyrig’ and ‘Wheel Causey’; from French).

causeyer (kaw-zee-ur) n., arch. a road-maker – ‘Walter Henderson, causayer, admite Burgess, whose fee of admission was paid by cassaying of the meikle guttur stone cas’ [BR1695], ‘Paid Alexander Scott for ales to the cassers (paviors)’ [BR1721] (also written ‘cassaer’, ‘cassayer’ and cassay). variant).

Causeyend see kaw-zee-end n. former name for an area in Hawick, perhaps at the east end of the High Street. James Scott, dyer and Bailie, lived at the ‘Casaend’ around 1700. In 1704 John Scott is recorded as ‘taylor in Hawick near to ye Casyend’

Causeyfit see Causewayfit

Causey Grain Heid (kaw-zee-grän-heid) n. Causeway Grain Head, hill in the headwaters of the Teviot and the Giddenscleuch Burn. Other nearby features are called The Shoulder, Haggis Side and Corbie Shank. The name probably derives from the road that used to cross the pass here. It partly follows the road that was used to connect the Esk and Teviot valleys (the Read Roads) before the 18th century, but is probably earlier. It may also be connected with the claimed Roman road in this area. It has been suggested that it was built for the monks of Melrose Abbey to connect their Teviotdale and Eskdale churches.

causey-gress (kaw-zee-gres) n., arch. meadow grass, poa annua, which pops up as a weed in unfrequented streets.

causey-layer (kaw-zee-lä-ur) n., arch. a road-maker – ‘Count and reckoning is made with Pat-erson the casseylayer’ [JW1704].

Causey Rig (kaw-zee-rig) n. Causeway Rig, ridge in the southern part of Southdean Parish, north of Wheleig Rig. It lies near the Wheel Causeway. There were several linear earthwork crossings between the Raven Burn and Piper Sike, but they are now lost in the forest.

cave (kāv) v., arch. to butt or strike with the head or horns.

Cave (kāv) n. Walter (1814/5-53) mason in Hawick.

Caveling (kāv-lin) n. former place name in southern Cavers Parish. It is ‘Caullyne’ among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It is listed (along with Lungsdie, Blakehill, Singley, etc.) in a charter of Douglas of Cavers in 1511. It was purchased along with Bailielee in 1551 by Gavin Elliot (later of Horsleyhill) from Gilbert Kerr of Primside. His son David was a tenant there in the 1560s. In 1564 it is recorded that the lands pertained heritably to both Gavin Elliot (son of Robert of Horsleyhill) and William Douglas of Cavers, with David Elliot (son to Gavin of Horsleyhill) living there. In 1573 William Douglas of Cavers complained to the Privy Council that the 5 merk land there was ‘violentlie occupiit’ by Gavin, brother of William Elliot of Horsleyhill, with Elliot claiming he had ‘rycht and titill thairto’; Douglas was encouraged to pursue the matter with the Lords of Session. Also in 1573, William Elliot of Horsleyhill sold the lands to his uncle William (later also of Horsleyhill). William Elliot settled the lands on his son, who was also William, who sold them to Gavin Elliot of Stobs in about 1603. They remained among lands listed in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. It is further listed among lands owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. when inherited by Sir William Elliot in 1692. It is unclear exactly where it was or how it should be pronounced (also written ‘Cavelling’, ‘Cavilling’, ‘Kaveling’ and ‘Keveling’).

Caverhill (kā-vur-hil) n. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johanne de Cauerhill’ in 1420 when he witnessed the charter for the half barony of Branxholme passing to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1426 he was on the inquest for the lands of Eilrig, along with several other local men. He is probably the same ‘Johanne de Cauerrhyl de Breryzardis’ who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1456; he was thus Laird of Briery Yards. John (15th C.) listed in the 1488/9 remission for Roxburghshire men for helping the former King, James III. His surname is recorded as ‘Cavirhill’. Several of the other men were associated with Douglas of Cavers. Joseph (18th/19th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for William Easton in 1797. He may have been the son of Thomas baptised in Jedburgh in 1775. Thomas (18th/19th C.) nephew of Andrew from Jedburgh. He was resident of Bonjedward according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 2 carriage or saddle horses. He also paid the 1797 dog tax. He married Jane Jerdan and his only son Archibald adopted the surname Jerdan as heir to his grandfather. He secondly married Jane Douglas (who died in 1797, aged 38) and had several daughters.
Archibald (illegitimate son of James). However, the lack of confirmation by King Robert III led to confusion over the Barony. There was an investigation in 1401, referring to a grant of the Barony in 1374. Final confirmation came from James I in 1412, and Archibald became 1st of Cavers. William Douglas of Cavers resigned the lands to King James III to be regranted in 1488, just a few days before the King was assassinated. In 1464/5 the lands were valued at 500 merks Scots, and were held of the Crown for annual payment of a red rose at the feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist (24th June). In 1509/10 the lands (including Denholm, Denholm Mains, Rulewood, Fowlerslands, Stobs, Feu-rule, Cavers Moor, Gilslend and Whitriggs) were again ‘recognised’ to the King, but the Barony was regranted (in a charter of ‘novodamus’) to James Douglas in 1511. This grant included the lands, castle, manor and mill of Cavers, but no longer included Rutherford and Wells. At that time there were 2 ‘domain’ lands, namely Cote and Ashybank. The central part of the Barony became the main estate within the Parish. The Douglasses continued to hold this estate into the 20th century, although it became much diminished in size. The Barony and Teinds were valued at £4800 in 1643, with the full estate of the Douglasses of Cavers being £7250. The Cavers estate was once very extensive, including, in the 18th century the corn mills at Cauld Mill, Trow Mill, Denholm Mill and Spittal Mill. The estate was once over 10,000 acres, and eventually left the Douglas family hands entirely when the last part was sold off by James Palmer-Douglas in 1975. A book ‘Cavers: a keek in the window’ was written by Jean Muir in 2000 – ‘Then oot spak the dread weird wyf, wi’ stern prophetic e’e:– “Curse, curse, on bloody Cavers hoose, An’ a’ her progeny. Her line o’ males shall pass away Wi’ the halbert, brand and spear, Ane doitit race the distaff ply, an’ petticoats shall wear’’ [T] (first appearing as ‘Kaveres’ in the early 13th century and then often spelled ‘Caveris’ or ‘Caueris’ until the 15th century; it is ‘Cavers’ in 1290, ‘Kauirs’ in 1291, ‘Cauerys’ in 1353/4, ‘Caueris’ in 1397, ‘Cauerys’ in 1412 and 1431, ‘Cauersis’ in 1428/9, ‘Cauerys’ in 1450, ‘Caveries’ in 1464/5, ‘Cauers’ in 1500, ‘Caveries’ in 1545, ‘Cauersis’ in 1553/4, ‘Cawers’ in 1565, ‘Kaverse’ in 1574, ‘Cawers’ in 1586, ‘Kaveris’ in 1601 and ‘Caveres’ in 1643; ‘Cauers Castel’ and ‘K. of Cauers’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the name is probably ‘the enclosures’ like Cavers Carre in Bowden Parish and Caverton in Eckford Parish, but there are too many possibilities, including forts etc., to guess reliably what these enclosures could have been; James Murray suggested that the name is older, going back to ancient Britain).

Cavers (kā-vurz) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as witness to a charter of 1448 for lands in Linlithgow, in which Thomas and his son John are mentioned. So he may well have been related. He is referred to as ‘keeper of common seal of the burgh’. He is also witness to a 1451 Linlithgow charter. Adam (1780–1866) son of Robert, who was a ‘fail dyker’ and Margaret Henderson. He was born at Denholm and worked as a youth at Palace Hill, under a harsh master. After leaving coal across the Carter Bar and leaving his chains there for the next trip his employer docked money from him, causing him to enlist in the army at age 16. He joined the 3rd Light Dragoons, was sent to Ireland and served in the Peninsular War. The regiment was also sent to Waterloo, but did not make it in time. Wounded in the knee and lip, he was discharged in 1821 with a lump sum, but a small pension. Later in life Elliot of Wolfelee worked to have his army pension increased. He leased the farm of Langhaugh Walls from Scott of Wauchope following the death of his father, then moved to Swanshiel in 1840, but gave it up after a year. In 1841 he was at Swanshiel, was at Newton Cottages (in Bedrule Parish) in 1851 and by 1861 had moved to Stichill in 1861. He married Janet Clerk in 1825, she being 20 years his junior. It is said that his wife was a foolish and untidy woman. His sons were: Robert (b.1827), who died during blasting in the Australia goldfields, and whose daughter married John Short, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill; Adam (b.1830), who emigrated to America in 1849; Walter (b.1834), who appears to be confused with his uncle Walter in Tancred’s ‘Rulewater’ book; James, who probably died young; and William (b.1839), probably the son who was born deaf and dumb. He also had daughters: Isobel Minto (‘Bell’, b.1824); Joan (b.1829); Margaret (‘Meg’, b.1832), whose married name was Richmond; Janet (b.1836); and Elizabeth (‘Bess’, b.1841). Adam (1830–1901) son of Adam. He was educated at Hobkirk School and emigrated to Canada at age 18, then tried farming in Iowa and worked on the Panama railway. There he escaped the fever that decimated the workforce, but spent 160 days adrift on a ship in the Pacific before reaching San Francisco. He went from California to the Australian goldfields, then returned to Scotland after his brother Robert was killed in a blasting accident in Australia. He returned to America in 1855, settling in Iowa and marrying Caroline Ingmundson. They sold up in 1873 and travelled the world, including returning several times to the Rule valley. He died on a visit to Bournemouth. His wife contributed to several Rulewater charitable funds, including the Ewen Fund for a parish nurse. He left several diaries. Andrew (15th C.) Abbot of the Monastery and Convent of Lindores (in Fife). He is recorded in 1490 in a charter founding the chaplainry and altar of St. Blusius in the Parish Church of Perth and another charter for the parish church of Perth in 1491. He had a charter for lands in Fife in 1503. Aymer (13th/14th C.) listed as ‘aymero de cauers’ when he was witness to a gift of a tenement in Berwick in the period 1309–19. David (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in 1580 in a charter for land at Newbattle. His wife was Christina Clerk. Dennis (15th/16th C.) had sasine of the lands of Mugdrum in Fife in 1504. His name is recorded as ‘Dionisio Caveris’. Francis (1763–1810) son of James and Isabella Coulthard. His brother was James, ‘Auld Dunnerum’. He was a shepherd at Peelbraehope and Ropelawshiel. He married Euphemia Hogg in Robertson Parish in 1789. Their children were: James (1789–1875), shepherd; Thomas (1791–c.1840), ploughman; Francis (b.1793); Margaret (b.1796); William (1798–1873), shepherd; John (1801–80), who emigrated to Ontario, Canada. He was buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Francis (1813/4–1874) eldest son of Thomas and Helen Scott, he was a gardener at Wilton Dean. He was living at Pathhead in 1861. His wife was Agnes from Ewes and their children included Thomas F.S., George S., James, Adam S., William and John. He was assaulted by Walter Murray while walking from Hawick to Wilton Dean and died 3 weeks later, with Murray being imprisoned. Francis (b.1819/20) born in Cavers Parish, he was a shepherd at Hardlee on Hyndlee farm in Southdean. He was appointed as elder of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1851. He married Euphemia Armstrong and their children included Helen, James and Thomas. Francis (b.1828/9) son of shepherd William. He was also a shepherd around Ashkirk, being at Headshaw in 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included Margaret, John, David and William. George (d.c.1500) probably tenant at Synton. In 1502 David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stiches, had a remission for a raid on Synton that resulted in the death of him and George Newton.
his wife Jean Scott assisted him as teacher. After his second marriage in 1825 he stayed at Woodfoot, Lightpipe and Broomyhill. He also worked as a constable for Sir William Elliott of Stobs and moved to Hawick in 1831, where he had odd jobs. In 1841 he was living on the Backrow with his wife Jane and by 1851 they were on Kirkwynd. Later in life he was a seller of stationery and almanacs around the streets of Hawick, and was still doing this on his 97th birthday, when some of the townspeople collected a purse of money for him; he is recorded replying that he ‘had gane lang aboot, and wad gang langer yet, and though now gotten somewhat stiff in the joints, he hadna a pain in a’ his body’. In 1788 in Cavers Parish he married Jean Scott (1760–1813), who was from Castlewearry (also in Cavers). Later, in 1825 in Kirkton, he married Jean (d.1855), daughter of James Bole and Margaret Scott. His children included: James (1790–1861), who emigrated to Galt, Ontario, and died there; Christian (b.1793); David (1795–1874), who worked as a waiter in Edinburgh; Isobel (b.1797); Walter (b.1799); Robert (b.1801); John (b.1803); Jane (b.1826); Margaret (b.1829–52); Isabel (b.1832); Joan (or Joanna, b.1834); Walter Martin (b.1842), who also emigrated to Galt, Ontario; and James (b.1849), who died young. When his son James was born he was living at Barnes Shiel in Kirkton Parish. He enjoyed his full faculties until near his death and was buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard. A portrait of him exists, painted by Mr. Scott and presented to the Museum in 1863. James (1789–1875) born in Ettrick Parish, he was eldest son of Francis and Euphemia Hogg. He was a shepherd in a’ his body’. In 1788 in Cavers Parish he married Jean Scott (1760–1813), who was from Castlewearry (also in Cavers). Later, in 1825 in Kirkton, he married Jean (d.1855), daughter of James Bole and Margaret Scott. His children included: James (1790–1861), who emigrated to Galt, Ontario, and died there; Christian (b.1793); David (1795–1874), who worked as a waiter in Edinburgh; Isobel (b.1797); Walter (b.1799); Robert (b.1801); John (b.1803); Jane (b.1826); Margaret (b.1829–52); Isabel (b.1832); Joan (or Joanna, b.1834); Walter Martin (b.1842), who also emigrated to Galt, Ontario; and James (b.1849), who died young. When his son James was born he was living at Barnes Shiel in Kirkton Parish. He enjoyed his full faculties until near his death and was buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard. A portrait of him exists, painted by Mr. Scott and presented to the Museum in 1863. James (1789–1875) born in Ettrick Parish, he was eldest son of Francis and Euphemia Hogg. He was a shepherd at Stanishope and Hawkhass, and an Elder of Al- lars Kirk. He firstly, in 1813, married Jane Watson, who died in 1830. Their children were Margaret, Euphemia, Francis, Walter, Jane and Helen. He secondly married Janet Jackson, although they had no children. An early photograph of him exists. James (19th C.) farmer at Cogsmill, recorded in 1860 when he rented a field from Robert Grieve. James (1833–1903) son of Henry and Violet Turnbull, born in Castleton Parish. He worked as a carter and railway labourer. In 1856 he married Jane Corbett (1830–1901). Their children were: Henry (1856–1947), who was a railway guard and died in Carlisle; Margaret (1859–1930), who married railway guard Robert Milligan; Violet (b.1861), cook for the Laings at Ivy Bank in Hawick; Janet (b.1863); John (b.1865), died young; John (b.1867); and Thomas (b.1869), also died young. James MacPherson (1850–1910) born in Hawick, son of grocer Robert. He emigrated to Canada, originally working for the Hudson’s Bay Company at Fort Garry and Winnipeg. He ran a general store and post office in Manitoba from 1883, calling his business ‘Deloraine’ after his homeland. This was moved from ‘Old Deloraine’ to the modern location of the town in 1886/7. He married his brother John’s widow, Frances Jane Vincent and they brought up her 3 sons, Robert, John (or ‘Jack) and James. They also had children Frank, Elizabeth, Reta and Douglas. John (15th C.) Burgess of Linlithgow, son of Thomas. He is recorded in a charter of 1448 for land in Linlithgow and also as witness to a charter of 1454 in Edinburgh. John (15th C.) notary to a sasine for lands in Hassendean Parish in 1483, given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers. He is described as ‘John Caveris, MA, clerk, Glasgow diocese’. In 1487 he was notary for a sasine involving the lands of Boonraw in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. He was also witness to another Hassendean sasine of 1494, where he is ‘priest, clerk’. He was probably attached to Hassendean Kirk at that time. John (15th/16th C.) Chaplain of Linlithgow, witness to a mortification of 1497 (for the upkeep of a lamp at the parish church). Thomas ‘de Cavers’ was also a witness, suggesting that they were related. Probably the same John was also witness to a discharge of 1494 in Linlithgow. John (16th C.) ‘indweller’ in Hawick, recorded as ‘Jhonie Caveris’ in a court case of 1574. The other men listed were John Scott and Allan Deans. This may have been in connection with a raid of some sort, with the bond set at £1000 each. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Bessie Martin and their children included: Robert (b.1671); and Margaret (b.1674). The witnesses on 1671 were the same John was also witness to a discharge of 1494 in Linlithgow. skinner John Currer. He married Marion Newbie, with children including Helen (b.1715), John (b.1718), Mary (b.1719), Isobel (b.1720), Anna (b.1722) and Bettie (b.1724) and could also be the John who married Elspeth Young in 1725, with children including Walter (b.1729). The witnesses in 1720 were glover John Scott and candlemaker John Scott. John (18th C.) resident at Rigend in Wilton Parish. In 1771 his son Thomas was baptised in Roberton. He is probably the John who married Janet Graham in Roberton in 1768 and whose daughter Elspeth was baptised in Wilton in 1769. The witnesses were James Dryden and Gavin Turnbull, and the location appears to be ‘Whithaugh moor’ (although it is hard to read). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Francis’ Well in Wilton Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Philhope in 1774 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. Thomas (b.1771) and Margaret (b.1776) were probably also his children. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1793. He married Margaret Ballantyne, the marriage being announced in Roberton and Yarrow Parishes. Their children included: Katherine (b.1793); and Agnes (b.1797). He could be the John recorded as owner of a horse at Deanburnhaugh in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Teviothead and Hawick Parishes. In 1793 he married Elizabeth Hislop, from Yarrow. Their children included: Elizabeth (1794–1881), who married James Nichol; Robert (1801–71), a grocer in Hawick; John (d.1865), who was an ostler; and Jane (d.1861), who married frame-worker John Howison. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Threephead in 1808. He married Jane Scott and their children (baptised in Roberton) included: Margaret (b.1805); and John (b.1808). John (c.1769–1846) joiner in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 46 South Hermitage Street. In 1798 in Hawick he married Jane (or Jean, 1771–1855), daughter of James Douglas. Their children were: Henry (1800–61), a carter; Christian (1801–55), who married Edward Paterson; Beatrice (1803–34), who died in Gross Isle (probably the quarantine station in Quebec); Robina (1806–77), who married William Kyle, carter and farmer; James (1807–41), who died in Ontario; Thomas (1810–79), who emigrated to Beckwith, Lanark, Ontario; Mary (1812–72), who married Adam Pringle; John (1814–79), who emigrated to Bathurst, Lanark, Ontario; and Jane (1815–41). John (b.1801/2) born in Cavers Parish, he was a shepherd at Hayside, near Drinkstone. He was there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Agnes Gregor, from Canonbie. Their children included Francis, John, James and Catherine. John (1802/3–65) son of shepherd John. He was born in Teviothead and was ostler at the Change House there. His address in 1851 and 1861 is given as ‘Coach Station’. He married Margaret Cleghorn, from Ancrum. Their children were: John (b.1820), horse-breaker and coachman; Mary (b.1822), who married Andrew Harvey; Elizabeth (b.c.1823), who married John Wright in Minto and then James Robertson in Glasgow; Margaret (b.1826), who married Newcastleton joiner Robert Kerr; Jeanie or Jane (b.1827), who moved to Melrose and married James McHenry; Charlotte (b.1829), married John Rodger son in Teviothead; George (b.1831), coachman and fire-brigade driver in Glasgow; Agnes (b.1832), probably married John Grieve, and later lived at Yetholm; Janet (b.1834/5); and Robert (1837–59), journeyman tailor in Wilton. John (1820–73) eldest son of John and Margaret Cleghorn. Born near Lauder, he worked as a coachman and horse-breaker. He lived in Melrose and elsewhere. In 1852 he married Catherine Allan, from Haddington. Their children were John, Helen and Allan. His wife died in 1887, and was then described as ‘Keeper of a Temperance Hotel’ in Hawick. John (1827–1901) son of Henry and Violet Turnbull, he was born at Dykecrofts in Castleton Parish. He was a draper, moving to Luton in England, along with his brother Thomas and sister Jane. In 1873 in Pacras, Middlesex, he married Mary (b.1829), daughter of William Nichol, farm overseer at Thorleshope. He was buried in Castleton. John (1828–58) son of Thomas and Helen Scott, he was probably born in Wilton. He trained as a tailor. He married Sarah, daughter of George Duncan and they emigrated to Massachusetts. Their children were: Thomas Francis (c.1848–1861); Janet (b.1850), who married Thomas Bins; Ellen (1852–55); Sarah (b.1854), died in infancy; George Duncan (1855–79); Allen (b.1856), probably died young; and Helen (c.1857–90). He died in Boston and his wife returned to Hawick with most of the family. She remarried to Thomas Rattray in 1871. John (1846/7–84) son of grocer Robert. Along with his brother James, he emigrated to Manitoba, Canada. In about 1878 he married Frances Jane Vincent and had sons Robert, John and James.
He was killed in an accident, and his widow married his brother James. Sir Reginald (13th C.) witness to a charter of the Douglases in 1259. This involved a piece of land in Chamberlain Newton when the sister of Hugh Abernethy married Hugh, son of William Douglas. His name is given as Dominus ‘Reginald Cauers’. He may have been related to Thomas, who was recorded in about 1264. Richard (15th C.) recorded in 1459 when he was fined for fishing in the King’s waters in the Lincluden area of Dumfriesshire. Robert (14th C.) recorded in 1394 as a priest who was a Master of Arts who was given a benefice from the Bishop of Glasgow. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘roberto de cavernys’ in 1464/5 when he was one of the witnesses of the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He may be the earliest recorded man of the name who is associated with the Cavers area. Robert (d.bef. 1510) Burgess of Paisley. His brother Thomas (Burgess of Linlithgow) resigned lands in Paisley in 1510. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Barnes farm. His son Robert was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. Robert (17th C.) listed first in 1650 among ‘communicants’ at Roughheugh. He may thus have been the miller there. The second person named was Bessie Laing, who may have been his wife. Robert (1750–1823) born in Kirkton Parish, son of Walter and Jane Crozier, his brother Eben fought in the American War then settled at Chippaway Creek, Ontario. He married Margaret, daughter of Adam Henderson of Weens, and she died in 1830, aged 78 (having been described as a ‘cross auld body’). He worked as a ‘fail dyker’ (i.e. making turf walls) and lived in various places around Cavers Parish. Their sons were: Walter, who worked in the Hawick nurseries; James, who emigrated in 1808 to join his uncle Eben and died near Montreal in 1866; Adam, who served in the army and later took over the lease of ‘the Waas’; William, who later joined James in Canada and died in an accident; and Robert, who kept a whisky still, emigrated and died in Canada about 1860. Robert (18th/19th C.) merchant who was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1797. It is possible he is the same Robert who was a grocer and meal dealer on the Midrow on Pigot’s 1825 directory. Robert (1801–71) son of John and Elizabeth Hislop. He was a grocer and spirit dealer at 11 Howegate. He is listed on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory, and may be the grocer listed on the Midrow in 1825/6. He was also a Howegate grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at 11 Howegate in 1851 and 1861. He married Elizabeth MacPherson, from Ruthwell in Dumfriesshire. Their children included John (1846–84), who died in Manitoba, Canada; Agnes Wilson (b.1849), who died young; James McPherson (1850–1910), who emigrated to Deloraine, Manitoba; and Elizabeth Hislop (1853–63). He died at Wellington Street and is buried at the Wellogate. Robert (1827–54) eldest son of old soldier Adam, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. In Bedrule Parish in 1847 he married Helen Hymers. In 1851 he was listed as a labourer at Fastcastle in Cavers Parish. His children were: Margaret (b.1847/8), who married John Short of Hartshaugh Mill; Jessie (b.1849/50); and Helen (b.1851/2). In 1853 the family sailed to Melbourne, but he was killed in a blasting accident on the Australian goldfields within a year of his arrival. A 4th daughter, Robina (b.1854) was born after his death. The family returned to Scotland, and in 1861 were living at Ashtrees in Southdean Parish, with his wife’s parents. Simon (13th/14th C.) listed in 1298 among about 80 archers who were sent from Berwick to Roxburgh by Sir W. de Beauchamp and Sir J. de Drokenesford. He is recorded as ‘Simon of Cavers’. Thomas (13th C.) recorded as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in the Exchequer Rolls of about 1265. His name is given as ‘Thome Kauer’. He may have been related to Sir Reginald, who was recorded in 1259. Thomas (15th C.) Burgess of Linlithgow, recorded in a charter of 1448, between Isabella de Murray and his son John de Cavers for land in Linlithgow. This is one of the earliest instances of this surname; it seems reasonable to believe that he was related to William who was recorded earlier that century in Edinburgh. He is also a witness to a 1454 charter in Edinburgh, along with John, who must have been related. Thomas (15th C.) Burgess of Linlithgow, recorded in a bond of 1472, paying annual rent to the Bailies and Burgh of Linlithgow. He was also recorded as a customs collector in Linlithgow in the period 1479–86. He may be the same as the earlier Thomas, or more likely a younger relative. Probably the same Thomas was Bailie in Linlithgow in 1487, held a tenement there in 1495 and witnessed a Linlithgow record of 1497. He was probably related to John, Chaplain of Linlithgow. He may be the same Thomas, Burgess of Linlithgow (and brother of deceased Robert, Burgess of Paisley) who resigned some land in Paisley in 1510. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) resident of Cavers Auld Kirk

Hawick. He was recorded as ‘Thom’ in Hawick when entered before the Privy Council in 1574, but this probably a mis-transcription for ‘Jhonie’, indweller in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) farmer in Hawick. He married Beatrix Scott and their children included: an unnamed child (b.1766); and Robina (b.1771), who married blacksmith Andrew Richardson in Canongate, Edinburgh in 1797. Thomas (1791–c.1840) son of Francis and Euphemia Hogg. He was born in Ettrick Parish and worked as a ploughman around Hawick, settling in Wilton Dean. In 1813 he married Helen Scott (c.1792–1870), who was from Hobkirk, illegitimate daughter of joiner William Scott and Elizabeth Ingles. Their children were: Francis (b.1814); Helen (b.1815); James; John, who emigrated to Massachusetts; Margaret (who married Hugh Hall); Elizabeth; Thomas; William; Euphemia; and Jane. Walter (17th C.) resident at Horselee in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) listed as shepherd at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Walter recorded at Mabonlaw in 1697 when his daughter Helen was baptised. The witnesses were Adam Scott and Walter Miller. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Greenbank in 1767 and 1771. He married Isobel Coltart in Roberton in 1760. Their children included Margaret (b.1767), William (b.1770) and Walter (b.1771). Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at the Holt (in upper Teviotdale) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter (b.1778) born at Spittal-on-Rule, eldest son of Robert and Margaret Henderson. He worked in the Hawick nurseries, where he learned gardening. He married Margaret Clerk, who had saved money as a servant on the Wauchope estate. He worked as a hind on the Oxnam Water and later was tenant at Harwood Mill. He was there when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is recorded as miller at Harwood Mill in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He finished there in 1839, then farmed at Swanshiel and at Tower farm in Cavers Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he is recorded as farmer, living at the Dykes. He had no children. Walter (18th/19th C.) baker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (19th C.) shepherd at Ravenburn on Hyndlee farm. He was among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. He was still alive in 1906. Walter (b.1834) son of old soldier Adam, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He took a short lease of Harwood Mill, which was next to his father’s farm of Langhaugh Walls. He was later at Swanshiel and then Tower farm in Cavers Parish. He had no children. William (14th/15th C.) recorded as a juror in Edinburgh in 1402. He is probably the first known person with this surname, written ‘de Caueris’ in this case. It is unclear what his connection was with Cavers, but there seems little doubt that the name derives from the area to the north-east of Hawick. William (15th C.) Burgess of Perth who was witness to an instrument of 1449, his name being recorded as ‘Caweris’. This must be one of the first instances of the surname, ‘de Caueris’ being the explicit form. Probably the same Burgess of Perth is mentioned in a charter of 1434. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Hardie and their son John was baptised in 1644. William (17th C.) listed as miller at Roughheugh Mill in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the William, who, along with John, witnessed a baptism in Wilton in 1696 for Thomas Napier. William (17th C.) recorded at Stirches in a baptismal record of 1682. He married Margaret Reid and their children included: Bessie (b.1682), baptised in Roberton Parish; and Thomas (b.1695), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1682 were William and Robert Scott. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Barnes in Kirkton Parish. His children included ‘Elander’ (b.1719) and Walter (b.1721). He is probably the William who married Margaret Drydon in Kirkton Parish in 1718. William (1798–1873) born in Kirkton Parish, son of Francis and Euphemia Hogg. He worked as a shepherd in several places before settling in Ashkirk. He married Mary Hunter from Tinwald, Dumfriesshire. Their children were Francis, Mary, Elizabeth, Euphemia and David. In 1851 he was shepherd at Langtonheight (but was absent for the census). He died at St. Boswells. William (b.1817/8) born in Wilton Parish, he was a shoemaker in Lilliesleaf. He died in 1851 he was on the north side of Main Street and employing 10 men. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Margaret and their children include Margaret, Jane, Janet and Martha. William Bruce ‘Billy’. A farmer, he served as Cornet in 1949, with Della Hamilton as his lass. His grandfather was Cornet in 1879 (formerly also spelled ‘Caveris’, ‘Caverse’, etc.).

Cavers Auld Kirk (kā-vurz-awld-kirk) n. older church of Cavers Parish, the name being used to distinguish it from the newer building, erected in 1822. The building was largely rebuilt in the 17th century, a lintel bearing the date 1694.
1662, although it stands on the site of much earlier buildings, dating back to at least the 12th century. It was originally cruciform in appearance, the northern transept being the Elliott Aisle and the southern one being the Glestains Aisle (or ‘Porch’), this being demolished in the latter part of the 18th century. The altar at the east end was converted into the Douglas Aisle, with Laird’s Loft above, also in the mid-17th century. The loft was reached by an outside staircase. A long slit in the northern end there, sometimes referred to as a ‘lepers’ squint’ would have given a view of the sermons in pre-Reformation times.

Cavers Carre (kā-vurz-kawr, -ker) n. seat of the Kers (or Carres) of Cessford, in the Ale valley between Lilliesleaf and Belses. It is possible it is the ‘Kaueres’ in Lilliesleaf mentioned in a charter of Walter of Riddell in the early 13th century. The lands were once part of Clarilaw, which was owned by Melrose Abbey. The estate passed to the Kers in 1550, after which the addition of ‘Carre’ distinguished it from the Cavers near Hawick that was owned by the Douglasses (although it was still just ‘of Cavers’ in many records). Tax was paid on 36 windows in the former house in 1748. The current house dates from about 1800 and is a forbidding square 2-storey block built on the remains of an earlier house. The grounds contain a dovecote dated 1532, but probably much more recent. Some old stones in the house come from previous buildings, including armorial bearings from 1532 with the names of Ralph Kerr and Marion Haliburton. The estate eventually passed to the Riddells through marriage. A plan of the estate from 1791 is in the National Archives (the name derives from the Old English ‘cafor’ and means ‘enclosures belonging to the Ker family’; it first appears in 1567 as ‘Cauers’ and has its modern spelling from 1607; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Kauerss’, showing a null on the Ale).

Cavers Coach Hoose (kā-vurz-kōch-hoos) n. former coach house for the Cavers estate, now a private dwelling just to the north-east of the old church.

Cavers Cottages (kā-vurz-ko’-ee-jeez) n. former name for cottages in Cavers Parish, where a small girls’ school was located in the 1860s.

Cavers Cross (kā-vurz-kros) n. a large stone bonded with iron, adjacent to Cavers Old Churchyard, which is reputed to have stood at the heart of the former village. Its base can probably be seen in a photograph of about 1860, and it still exists by the old churchyard, although now little more than a crumbling stump. Assuming it occupies its original site, this was probably the market square for the village. A public well was also nearby, now covered up in an adjacent garden.

Cavers Hoose (kā-vurz-hoos) n. ancient home of the Douglasses of Cavers, now a roofless ruin. Its history goes back to the 12th century, when the estate was owned by the Baliols, and it has been held by the Douglasses since 1352. A significant dwelling was built by Sir Archibald Douglas in the 14th century and it was one of the early principal homes of the Black Douglasses. This early structure was sometimes referred to as the Warden’s Tower (and partly survives on the south-east side). A document of 1432 refers to ‘the old manor place, on the south side, near the kirk’, suggesting that at that point there were 2 distinct structures. For generations it was the home of the Sheriff of Teviotdale, and sometimes Warden of the Middle March. The house suffered much in turbulent times, for example being burned by Dacre’s men in 1542, apparently with the help of the Scotts. For centuries it held the Douglas Banner from Otterburn, together with Percy’s captured ‘gauntlets’ (actually a lady’s gloves, presumably given to Percy as a favour before going to battle). James VI stayed there on a return visit to Scotland in 1617. In 1694 tax was paid on 14 hearths at the ‘place of Cavers & offices houses’ on the estate. In 1748 Archibald Douglas paid tax for 76 windows there (a huge number compared to other local mansions) and 73 windows in 1753. It was a 5-storey tower-house, altered in the 17th century and converted around 1750–56 into a classical mansion for Archibald Douglas, joining the newer Sheriff’s mansion to the older Warden’s Tower. Estate offices and outbuildings were also constructed in this period. In the late 18th century there were as many as 10 domestic servants working there (including carriage drivers, grooms and gardeners, but over and above all the agricultural workers on the estate), so running the house was a substantial operation. The house can be seen in a photograph of about 1860. It was extended 1885–7, with architects Peddie & Kinnear, to become a Scottish Baronial mansion. The removal of the first-floor vault uncovered a ‘piscina’ niche of about 13th century date, possibly a remnant of the tower of...

the Baliols. It was said to have been surrounded by a moat, with a hollow still visible on the south-east and south-west sides. It also contained an unusual double staircase, a newer square staircase winding around an original steep spiral one. In the north-west corner was the spacious dining room, 2-storeys high, which contained family portraits, as well as ‘St. Peter’ by Rubens. Other legends include a supposedly haunted room, the suggestion that a secret passage led to a nearby giant ash tree, and (unfounded) stories of the house being partly destroyed by Cromwell’s men. In the 20th century the condition of the house became quite dilapidated and it was partially demolished in 1952/3. However, the demolition mainly removed the newer parts, while the solid walls of the older keep survived the blasts. The grounds contain the old church and kirkyard as well as the remains of the ‘Douglas Tree’. The location of the house are about 150 m south of the old church – ‘Green Cavers, hallow’d by the Douglas name, Tower from thy woods! assert they former fame!’ [IL].

Cavers Kirk (ku-vurz-kirk) n. parish church of Cavers, founded in the early 12th century or before. It was dedicated to St. Cuthbert, and is recorded in 1116, when it was the property of the Glasgow Diocese. However, in 1358 (with confirmations in the following several years) it is recorded being transferred to the monks of Melrose Abbey, with the ‘advowson’ being given by William, 1st Earl of Douglas, and confirmed by James, 2nd Earl; at that time the church was referred to as ‘ecclesie de Magna Caveris’. An investigation into the status of the Kirk in 1404 confirmed that it was in the Diocese of Glasgow, but belonged to Melrose Abbey, and the church of ‘Meikle Cavers’ was again confirmed to Melrose in a papal bull of 1419. The earlier grant of James, Earl of Douglas and Mar was confirmed again in 1488. The Abbey continued to hold superiority over the kirk lands until the Reformation. The presently existing building dates from 1662/3 (with a lintel marked ‘1662’ being over the west door), although the lay-out and perhaps parts of the walls (north wall and north-west corner) date from an earlier building. The west wall and parts of the south wall are clearly contemporary with the 1662 date, but much of the rest was reconstructed after the 17th century. It can be seen well-preserved and ivy-clad in a photograph from the 1860s. This building was later used as a community hall, with lectures in the winter, and then became the church hall. However, it has lain abandoned since the 1960s, becoming increasingly dilapidated, although re-roofed in 2005. The Manse was listed as being ‘waste’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 and listed among the ‘deficient’ in the Parish, with 3 hearths recorded; in 1748 tax was paid on 17 windows there and 14 windows in 1753. The graveyard has been in use since at least 1626. The main (eastern) vault beside it contains generations of the Douglasses of Cavers, while another (northern) side vault holds some of the Eliotts of Stobs (and is still owned by the Eliotts). A former third (southern) vault contained the Gladstains of Cocklaw, but was pulled down by the heritors in the 18th century. There are many old gravestones of other local families in the overgrown and neglected churchyard, some dating to the 17th century. A recumbant slab from the 13th century is now too weathered to make out details. One old stone, arranged perpendicular to the others, was known as the ‘Priest’s Grave’. Near the churchyard gate is the remains of the ‘Cavers Cross’. The new parish church is situated on the main road through Cavers. It was built in 1822 and had its interior remodelled in 1928. At some point its entrance was changed to a different side and the ornamentation on the roof was lowered. An illuminated memorial scroll was added after WWI, and the cemetery was extended in 1967. The manse is situated just to the west of the new church and was built in 1813. Note that Teviothead Church was sometimes referred to as Cavers ‘chapel-of-ease’ before the new Parish was established there in 1850. A link was formed with Kirkton in 1954, with St. Mary’s added in 1976. This link was broken in 1988, with a new link formed with Hobkirk, then the link renewed with Hawick (St. Mary’s and Old Parish) in 1996. It was instead linked with Trinity in 2004. The oldest communion token recorded is from 1699, round, made of lead, and with the initials ‘C.K.’ and traces of stars. A roll of the ministry is: Dolfinus, Parson c.1170; William de Bliburgh, from 1296/7; William de Clyf 1319; William of Tofts, Rector in 1363; Alexander de Caron 1367; John Gandon 1372; John de Boulton 1368; Matthew de Glendowyn 1376; Hugh Raa 1387; Henry Wardlaw 1389; William Croyser, from about 1418; Sir John de Redford, from about 1428; William Forester, about 1450; Fergus MacDowell, from about 1465; William Bithet, Vicar in 1454/5 and 1488; James Newbie, about 1500; William Lamb, Parson 1546/7; William
Cavers Knowes

Cavers Knowes (kā-vurz-nawz) n. farm near Kirkton, a few miles east of Hawick. It was once a tenanted farm on Cavers estate. Gavin Dryden was farmer there in 1797. George and Robert Hogg were farmers in the 1860s. There is a hill-fort to the south-west, overlooking the main A6088 – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes’ [T] (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Cavers knows’ in 1797).

Cavers Magna (kā-vurz-mawg-na) n. former parish of mediaval times, ‘Big Cavers’, distinguished from ‘Cavers Parva’ which corresponded to Kirkton. The term ‘Meikle Cavers’ was also used.

Cavers Mains (kā-vurz-mānz) n. farm to the north-east of Cavers itself, once part of the estate, presumably once the ‘home farm’ of the Douglasses of Cavers. It was once split East and West parts, with Cavers West Mains formerly a lint-spinning centre. To the south-west of the farmhouse is a small wood called Belvedere and the remains of a burial cairn (where a cist with a skeleton and some artefacts were found in 1896). Immediately to the east of the farmhouse a linear cropmark has been revealed in aerial photography, connecting with the side of the nearby site of a Roman temporary camp. Aerial photography also revealed signs of a separate enclosure in a nearby field.

Cavers Moor (kā-vurz-mūr, -moor) n. former lands in the Barony of Cavers. The ‘moor of Cavers’ is referred to in 1296 in an ordinance from the English King to his March lieutenant. They are listed as ‘Caueris Mure’ in 1509/10, among the holdings of James Douglas, part of the Barony since the time of King David. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It is unclear precisely what location they correspond to now (it is ‘Caverisnure’ in 1511, ‘Caversmuire’ in 1687 and ‘Caversmuir’ in 1698).

Caver’s Moss (kā-vurz-mos) n. former name for marshy land to the north of Acremoor Loch, with Caver’s Hill further to the north-west (it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Cavers Pairish (kā-vurz-pā-reesh) n. Cavers Parish, containing the former village of Cavers, as well as Denholm and a large amount of rural area. The Parish was once much larger in extent, covering a region about 20 miles wide in the east-west direction, with the southern part detached from the ‘main’ part by the parish of Kirkton. It included land as far as Teviot Stone and Merrylaw, as well as Mosspaul on the south side of the upper Teviotdale valley, until Teviothead Parish was formed in 1850, and hence once stretched all the way to Dumfriesshire. After 1850 the bounding parishes were Minto and Bedrule on the north, Hobkirk on the east, Castleton on the south and Hawick, Wilton, Kirkton and Teviothead on the west. Presumably the land was once held by a single baron, this setting the boundaries. However, by the time of the Douglasses of Cavers the Barony, while quite extensive, appears to have been significantly smaller than the Parish. An instrument of 1404/5, confirming a ‘process ecclesiastical’ of 1392/3, attached the Parish to Melrose Abbey. The total valuation of the Parish in 1643 and 1743 was about £19,000. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £16,500. The Free Church congregation at Denholm broke away in 1843. Church records for baptisms and marriages exist dating from 1694 and minute books from 1758; however, early registration was fairly irregular.

Cavers Parva (kā-vurz-pawr-va) n. mediaval parish, ‘Little Cavers’, probably corresponding to what was later known as Kirkton. It was ‘Petyt Cares’ on the 1296 Ragman Rolls.

Cavers Schuil (kā-vurz-skil) n. former school in Cavers Parish. It was in early times situated in the area of Cavers Townhead, then moved to Little Cavers as Denholm grew in population, and in 1802/3 moved to Denholm itself. Thereafter it is more often referred to as ‘Denum Schuil’. There were more than 90 pupils there in the 1830s and the schoolmaster’s house had 2 rooms a bed-closet and a kitchen. Three generations of the Oliver family were schoolmasters there. The first James Oliver was teacher during the Covenanter days. His son James Oliver was schoolmaster in the early 18th century (from at least 1702) and then Ebenezer Oliver in the 1760s. George Scott was schoolmaster around 1820s to 50s and John Greenfield in the 1860s. There was also a smaller school for girls, set up by James Douglas of Cavers in the mid-1800s; in 1861 the teacher there was Elizabeth Telfer, with Margaret Grierson as assistant.

Cavers Toonfit (kā-vurz-toon-fi’) n. Cavers Townfit, cottage on the Denholm to Cauldmill road, at the bottom of the avenue that was once the main street of Cavers town. It was built long after the town had been abandoned, but preserved the name.

Cavers Toonheid (kā-vurz-toon-heed) n. Cavers Townhead, buildings near Cavers Auld Kirk, once being at the ‘head’ of the town of Cavers. It was also once known as ‘Muckle Cavers’.

Cavers View (kā-vurz-vew) n. part of Burnfoot, connecting Burns Road with Eldon Road, built in 1953 and named after the Cavers district that can be seen across the valley.

Caverton (kā-vurtin) n. area in Eckford Parish, between Kelso and Morebattle, containing the farms of Caverton Hillhead and Caverton Mains and the hamlet of Caverton Mill. The Barony formerly belonged to the Soulis family, later the Fotheringhams and was acquired by the Kers in 1473. James Pott was recorded as owner in 1502 and Robert Ker was also recorded there in the same year. It is said that the Duke of Roxburgh hid the family valuables there during the passage of the army of Prince Charles in 1745. An old British fort is in the area (the origin of the name is probably the Old English ‘cafor tun’, meaning ‘farm by the enclosure’ and it first occurs as ‘Cavertone’ in 1296).

Caw (kaw) n. George (d.c.1823) printer and publisher who moved to Hawick from Edinburgh in 1782 or 1783, publishing Hawick’s first books. He may be the ‘George Caw, printer, Edinburgh’ whose name appears on the list of subscribers for the 1780 publication of the sermons of Rev. John Young, minister of Hawick. It seems likely he was a close relative of Alexander, a bookbinder active in Edinburgh in the 1770s and 1780s, and John, who was also a bookbinder in Edinburgh. The first book he published in Hawick seems to have been ‘The True State of the unhappy controversy about the Burgess Oath, being a discourse delivered before the Associate Presbytery of Earlston, at Kelso, the 8th day of October 1782, etc.’ by John Young. His printing office was described as being at the ‘East End of the town’. In 1784 he published ‘A display of genuine Christianity, and Christian love, &c’ by Rev. James Hervey. In the same year he printed ‘The Poetical Museum’, which influenced Walter Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’, and was the first genuinely significant volume published in Hawick. It also contains the names of many local people who subscribed to the book (as well as William Caw, shoemaker in Kincardine, who ordered 20 copies and was surely a close relative). In 1786 he printed the 3rd edition of Scot of Satchells’ ‘History of the Scotts’. The last book he published in Hawick appears to have been ‘View of the Covenant of Grace’, by Rev. Thomas Boston in 1788. About this time he returned to Edinburgh to publish ‘The Edinburgh Juvenile Library’ amongst other things. He was at Liberton Wynd in directories in 1805/6 and for many years afterwards, then he was a partner with Henry Elder at the Stamp Office Close 1817–21. His name lastly appears in 1822 as ‘Caw & Elder, Lyon Close, High Street’.

Cawsya (kaws-yə) n. former farmstead in Wilton parish, on the Hassendean Burn, just to the north-west of Horsleyhill. The lands are ‘Calffauld’ in about 1621 when John Scott of Brieryyards had a charter for them from the Commendator of Melrose and ‘Calffauld’ in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when George Hood was tenant there. Robert Liddell was there in 1727 and James Turnbull in 1728. Labourer James Paterson lived there in 1841 and William Potts was farmer in 1851. Jessey Michie died there in 1846, when it was written ‘Cauld Faulds’ (it is ‘Cafalds’ in 1709, ‘Caffields’ in 1727, ‘Coldfolds’ in 1728 and 1736, ‘Calf-folds’ in 1840 and ‘Calf-folds’ in 1841; it is marked ‘Calffauls’ on Stobie’s 1770 map, and also on the 1762 map of Hassendean Common).
Cawthorne

The location is uncertain (the pronunciation is also unclear).

Cawthorne (kaw-tho-rn) n. Anthony (1966–) born in Yorkshire and studying at the Wimbledon School of Art, he has lived in the Scottish Borders from the late 1980s. His work is mainly abstract, including landscapes in an abstract style, as well as more non-pictorial works. His 1997 painting ‘The Drumlanrig Bridge’ is in the Hawick Museum collection.

ceelinder (see-lin-dur) n., arch. a cylinder.

cemetery (see-mi-re) n., arch. a cemetery.

cipher (see-fur) n., arch. a troublesome person, someone of no account.

city (see-tee) n., arch. a city – ‘...parracket in ov a ceetic, mang reekin lums an chowkin smuists’ [ECS], ‘...wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark i the mids o a mighty ceetic fer away sindert!’ [ECS] (also written ‘ceetic’).

celebrate (se-li-bri) pp., arch. celebrated – ‘The Sacrament of the Supper of our Lord was celebrated with great decenice and semely order to ye great pleasure of all persons’ [PR1717].

the Ceremonial Committee (thu-re-mo-nee-al-ko-mi-ee) n. organising body of the Common Riding, formed in 1887 to formalise aspects of the town’s historic festival. The first meeting was held in the studio of J.Y. Hunter, and included James Edgar. The motivation was to separate the traditional aspects from those of the already existing Race Committee. It was not popular in all quarters, and referred to by some as the ‘Serio-Comic Committee’. It was constituted under the Race Committee until 1890, when it became a Town Council committee. However, it had taken over running the Cornet’s Races (rather than the others) from the beginning. Much of the detail of the present day Common Riding festival was defined in the early years of this committee. The committee was reconstituted in 1898 and was redesignated a sub-committee of the Common Riding Committee when reorganised in 1908.

certes (ser-teez) interj., poet. certainly, assuredly – ‘It gliffs the auld, it gliffs the young, And, certes, ’tis nae freak; At dark midnicht, on passers-by, ’Twill through the hedgerows keek’ [TCh], ‘...Gin I’m no Airchie, certes sirs, I’ve fund a bonny cairt’’ [WL], also in the exclamation of surprise or emphasis ‘my certes’ – ‘In A gaed ti fill ma empy keite, for my certes! A was howe!’ [ECS] (also written ‘certes’).

certification (ser-ti-fee-kah-shn) n., arch. a warning, particularly in the phrase ‘with certification that’ used to introduce a penalty for non-compliance – ‘...each Councillor to ride the said Marches yearly amongst with the Magistrates, with certification that if they fail or neglect to do so ...they are to forfeit their Councillship ...’ [BR1759].

cess (ses) n., arch. a tax, typically on land, roughly equivalent to rates – ‘...cast of poors

Johnstone’s tea rooms, which were used for temperance weddings and other social gatherings in the early 20th century. It became the location of the Hawick British Legion clubrooms.

Central Square (sen-trul-skwair) n. former name for the open area where the Horse is now located, the name not being sign-marked and going out of use after the monument was built. Named after the Central Hotel, which later became the Prudential building. There was once a large ornamental lamp roughly where the Horse was late built.

the Central Hotel (thu-sen-trul-hotel) n. hotel built in 1894–95 on the site of the earlier (temperance) Washington Hotel and part of the area formerly known as the ‘Coffin End’. It was built following the entrepreneurial plans of George Luff, who occasionally made public speeches from its balcony. The architect was J.P. Alison, and the dormer-heads carry details of the Alison, Luff, the builder and the Provost of the day (W.S. Barrie). It is notable for its Dutch-style gable and its balcony balustrade, originally with ‘Central Hotel’ in stonework, replaced later with ‘Prudential’. The building was constructed of red sandstone with Westmorland slate, and was built by Bell & Turnbull. It served as a hotel for only about 20 years. It gave its name to Central Square and became occupied by the Prudential Assurance Co. in about 1919.

the Central Rooms (thu-sen-trul-roomz) n., pl. rooms at 3 O’Connell Street, also known as cess upon the Heritors and Tenants of the Parish of Hawick for one quarter commencing the 26th February 1768 [PR], ‘Frugal temperance urged no cesses...’; v., arch. to tax, rate or assess.

Cessford (ses-furd) n. village in Eckford Parish, on the Jedburgh to Morebattle road, lying on the Cessford Burn. Cessford Castle, ancestral home of the Kers is just to the north-east and Hobbie Ker’s Cave is in a steep bank by the stream. A former ash tree there was for a long time pointed out as the ‘Jethart Justice Tree’. The estate belonged to Roger Mowbray before about 1325, then was granted by Robert the Bruce to Edward Marshal, before passing to the Sinclairs. It then changed hands several times (e.g. being in possession of James Newton in 1502) until coming into the possession of the Kers in the mid-15th century. The castle was among many burned by the English in 1544 – ‘While Cessford owns the rule of Carr. While Ettrick boasts the line of Scott, The slaughter’d chiefs, the mortal jar, The havoc of the feu-dal war, Shall never, never be forgot!’ [SWS] (the origin of the name is probably the Old English ‘cess worth’, meaning ‘homestead by the peat bog’; it first occurs as ‘Cessworth’ in 1296; it is ‘Ceseworth’ in 1325, ‘Sesworth’ in 1415/6, ‘Cesfurde’ in 1448, ‘Sessfurde’ in 1469/70, ‘Cesfurd’ in 1472, ‘Cesfurde’ in 1525, ‘Cesfund’ in 1547/8 and ‘Cesfurde’ in 1552 and ‘Cesfurde’ in 1564/5).

Cessford (ses-furd) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded as a Bailie in 1558. He is the first documented Bailie, in the earliest known detailed sasine relating to Hawick. This is also one of the first known instances of the surname Cessford. Presumably the same Adam is recorded as occupier of the lands of Campioncroft lying in the East Mains of Hawick in 1557 (and still recorded as occupier in 1565/6). He may be the same as the Adam Cessford listed in Hawick’s 1537 charter as holder of half a particate of land on the south side of the main street (with rentals due to James Blair). Agnes (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (16th C.) holder of a quarter particate of land on the south side of Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. It is possible that the same ‘Jacobus Cesfurde’ was shepherd on the King’s lands of Comimonside and Dryden who was paid £5 for 7 bolls and 2 firlots of grain according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1540. James (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785–90. Janet (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Janet (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (16th C.) owner of a particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Probably the same John was also holder of 2 particates on the north side, and separately listed as holder of another particate on that side (so there may be 2 men of the same name). It seems likely that he was related to Adam, James, Janet and William, who are also listed. John (17th C.) owner of a tenement somewhere in Hawick, recorded in 1635. It was to the west of the piece of land once owned by John Deans. John (18th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Bedrule Parish in 1748. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1490 resigning a ‘tenement’ in Hawick in favour of Robert Scott of Branxholme. This may be the first known Hawick sasine, and the first recorded use of the surname. The fact that he is recorded as ‘burrase of Hawick’ suggests that the Town was already a Burgh in 1490. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1511/2 sasine for the Barony of Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Willelmus Cesfurde’. He was probably a prominent man in Hawick at the time. He may be the same as the William who is recorded owning a quarter of a particate of land on the south side of Hawick in 1537. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair (spelled ‘Cesfoord’, ‘Cesfurd’, ‘Cesfurde’, ‘Cessfurde’, ‘Cesfurde’, ‘Sesfoorde’, etc., in early records).

Cessford Castle (ses-furd-kaw-sul) n. ruined ‘L’-shaped tower, about 10 miles east of Jedburgh. It was the ancestral seat of the Kers from the mid-15th century until their chief (now the Duke of Roxburghe) moved to Floors Castle around 1650. It was attacked by the Earl of Surrey in 1523.

the Cessfords (thu-ses-furdz) n. popular name for an important local family, referring to the Kers, rather than the Kerrs of Ferniehirst.

chack (chawk) n., arch. a snack, hurried meal, a bruise made by nipping, a slit in the edge of a cotton-reel for inserting the thread – ‘A spaik o Pharaohs chariot-wheel, The chack o’ auld Deborah’s reel, He’ll let you see’ [JoHa], ‘...sei Ancrum, an geet a chack o something ti serr as an off-pit’ [ECS], v., arch. to nip or bruise the skin, snatch with the teeth – ‘They guddled and chackit about his flanks, Till tired of the play’ [JTe].
Chaipel (chawk) v., poet. to check – ‘Then him I’d chase to get it back, Lest he it a’ in holes wad chack’ [TCh].

chackit up (chaw-kee’-*, -ki’-up) pp., poet. geared up a horse – ‘She chakyt him up with the red snaffle bitte; And O, she satte him fair’ [JTe] (this use is obscure).

chaff (chawf) v. to chatter – ‘...On the shundered bank where the Robbies stand, And chaff, and champ their shuin’ [DH], ‘...Chaffin and argin; clashin oot praise and blame; Ca-in the ref., and goal-kicks that gaed gleyed!’ [DH].

chaff-bed (chawf-bed) n., arch. a bed having a mattress filled with chaff. These were common among the labouring classes until the early 20th century. The chaff was replaced about twice a year, and in Hawick the banks of the Slitrig were once used as the dumping ground.

chaff (chawft) n., arch. cheek, chin, jaw – ‘The hurcheon raxed his scory chaffs, And gepit wi’ girming joye’ [JTe], ‘Though houghs grow thin and chaffs fa’ in, And hair grows white and scanty’ [MG], ‘...aw’ve seen the day when aw wad hae daddit yer chaffs for that trick’ [WNK], ‘...His chaffs were fa’en in, an his teeth were a’ gane’ [JT], ‘...where the caller air ud seek roses back ti the chaffs o the pallerest peenge’ [ECS], ‘Hello callant! What heh ee eer chaffs tied up for? A forker gaed inti ma lug, i herrst, an it’s aye been sair sinseine’ [ECS], ‘...I’ve seen oo ventur oot as fer as that, And come, chafts champin’, cheery doon’ [WL].

chaimical (kā-mee-kul) adj., arch. chemical – ‘...istead o caimeecal-laden cluds, a body can find the praicious scents o field an foggeege, fluressh an floorer!’ [ECS] (spelling varies).

chaipel (chā-pul) n. a chapel (also spelled ‘chapel’).

Chaipel (chā-pul) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf parish, presumably once attached to the Kirk there. A small tower there was dismantled in about 1830; there is a tradition, which says that in the mid-18th century it was lived in by a witch, and when she died there was a terrible storm. There is still a farm of that name there today, between Lilliesleaf village and Bewlie. It was the main home of the Middlemas family in the 16th and early 17th centuries. William Middlemas was there in 1622. It was owned by Edgar Hunter of Linthill in 1788, by William Riddell of Camieston in 1811 and passed to William Currie of Linthill before 1874. Andrew and Thomas Oliver were farmers there in the 1860s. It was formerly referred to as Lilliesleaf Chapel and Chapel Middlemas (Blaeu’s 1654 map shows a farm ‘Chapel’ near here; it is ‘Lillislie-Chapel’ in 1622, ‘Chappell’ in 1643, ‘cheppell’ in 1678 and ‘Chapple’ in 1797).

the Chaipel (thu-chā-pul) n. popular name for S.S. Mary & David’s Catholic Chapel in Hawick or for the Camerolian Chapel in Denholm.

Chaipel Burn (chā-pul-burn) n. side stream of the Northhouse Burn, which runs past Old Northhouse. It rises in a moss between Staney Hill and Bush Hill, flows roughly northwards to Old Northhouse, then turns to the west to join the Northhouse Burn (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Chaipel Cross (chā-pul-kros) n. another name for Shiplaw Corse.

the Chaipelflat (thu-chā-pul-flaw’) n. former name for lands near Hallrule Mill, recorded as ‘chaipp efflat’ in the 1562 Baronial dispute over lands in Feu-Rule.

Chaipel Grain (chā-pul-grān) n. Chapel Grain, stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises at Grain Head, on the border with Dumfriesshire, and runs northwards to join the Twislehope Burn near the farm of Twislehope (it is ‘Chappell Grain’ on the 1718 Bucleuch survey; there is no obvious connection with chapel).

Chaipelhill (chā-pul-hil, chaw-pul-hil) n. farm above Branzholme, reached via the narrow road near Branzholme Bridge. It was home of a branch of the Scotts from at least the 16th century. Scott of Satchells lists Walter Scott ‘of Chappell-hill’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Bucleuch. Robert Martin was there in 1623. In 1627 it is described as paying ‘in stok and teynd 15; estimat in stock to 8, in teynd 2, and vicarage 3 lbs’. Robert Armstrong was tenant in 1641. There were 9 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Edmond Scott, Robert Goodfellow, Adam Martin, Marion Liddell, Christine Scott, Jean Scott, Helen Moscrop, Bessie Armstrong and Helen Martin. Walter Scott (‘Reid Wat’) leased the farm in at least the period 1671–77. James Hume was tenant there in at least the period 1690–98. James Hume, Robert Turnbull and John Hislop were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William Gotteson was there in 1710, James Hume in 1718-20 and Simon Nichol in 1721. James Hume’s widow and son James became tenants in 1723. William Hume was also there in 1723 and James Telfer in 1726. James Hume was tenant in 1735 and Charles Scott in 1748. John Nivison was living there in 1743-52. John Craw was recorded there in 1761, William Gledstains in 1762 and 1763, James Nichol in 1764-65, Robert Lawson in 1774, Charles Miller in 1775 and John Davidson in 1790. James Hume was farmer there in 1792, replaced by his son James by 1795. There is a record of a ‘march fence with wester Parkhill’ being erected in 1794/5. In 1850 it was described as being in disrepair and unleasable, but James Paterson was farmer in the 1860s. There is an extensive series of hill-forts and settlements nearby, on the ridge between the Teviot and the Borthwick. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it consisted of 75 acres, bounded by the farms of Branxholm Muir, Banxholme Town, How Meadow and Reggs. The former farmhouse (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but of which there are no visible remains) was to the south of the road, overlooking the ‘Birns of Chapelhill’, which was once a fort and later a medieval chapel. It was part of Hawick Parish until being included in the new Roberton parish in 1690. The main road went past here formerly, to avoid the boggy land around the Teviot. A set of ‘wafer irons’ (or ‘gauffres’, used for making communion wafers) engraved ‘I H C’, said to be found here, are in the Museum – ‘Sall I come skirtin’ the braid muirs When the gloamin’ tide is still, And meet the track aboon Whitehaugh Or the road by Chapelhill?’ [WL] (it is ‘Shappelhill’ in 1684, ‘Chapelhill’ in 1690, ‘Chappelhill’ in 1692, ‘Chapphillhill’ in 1702, ‘Chapillhill’ in 1710, ‘Chapel hill’ in 1720 and ‘Chappelhill’ in 1797; it is ‘Chapelhill’ on a parish map of 1650 and is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map; note that there are other Chapelhills in Dumfries & Galloway, in South Lanarkshire, in East Lothian, near Cockburnspath and near Peebles.

Chaipel Hill (chā-pul-hil, chaw-pul-hil) n. hill between the Branxholme Lochs, with a triangulation pillar, reaching 313 m. The farmhouse of Chapelhill is about a mile to the east.

Chaipelhill Kirk (chā-pul-hil-kirk) n. former chapel at the Birns o Chaipelhill.

Chaipel Knowe (chā-pul-now) n. Chapel Knowe, small hill just west of Lethem in Southdean Parish. It is said that there was once a chapel there, although no traces of it survive. Just to the west of the hill are the remains of an enclosed settlement, consisting of 3 rock-cut platforms that originally contained wooden round-houses, within a stony bank. It may be attributed to the first millennium B.C.E.

Chaipel Knowe (chā-pul-now) n. Chapel Knowe, small hill in the southernmost portion of Castleton Parish, just to the east of the Muir Burn, on the farm of Ryleahead. There are remains of a chapel nearby, probably the ‘Chapel-knowe, on the borders of Canonby’ noted in the 1795 Statistical Account of Scotland.

Chaipel Moor (chā-pul-moor) n. Chapel Moor, the high ground between Satchels and Huntlaw, lying to the south of Bewlie Moor, about 5 miles north of Hawick. It is now marked only by the name of a plantation to the southwest. ‘Chapelmoor House’ is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map. A drove road used to pass by here (it is unclear what the connection with a chapel might have been).

chaipel o ease (chā-pul-ō-eez) n. a church built in a particular for location the convenience of those who live far from the parish church. The term was particularly used in the early 19th century to refer to Caerlenrig (Teviothead) church, which was used for Sunday services while it was part of Hawick Parish, although communions etc. were still only held at St. Mary’s.

the Chaipel Park (thu-chā-pul-pawrk) n. Chapel Park, the local name for a field behind Cogsmill School that has been identified with the Chapel of St. Cuthbert mentioned by Reginald of Durham in the 12th century. The area was also called ‘Cogs Knowes’. A stand of trees was planted there about 1830 to mark the position of the ancient chapel.

the Chaiplane Dykes (thu-chā-plin-diks) n. former name for small streams or ditches to the north of Templehall in Rulewater, described in a 1567 bounding charter (‘caiplane dykis’ in 1567 and ‘the chaplannie dyke biggit toward Titois Renis’ in 1604.

chairge (chārж) v. to charge – ‘hei was chairged wi peein up a close’, ‘as we sall be chaired, co-nuncttle and seueriale, sall releine the said laird of Balcleuch . . .‘ [SB1599]; ‘Syne chairge ye your glasses, and join the refrain – Lang life tae the lasses whea bussed it again!’ [CB]; ‘Chairege ye wae oor flag Safe Oot, tae Safe back tide ye in’ [MB]. n. a charge – ‘whae’s in chairge here onway?’, an ecclesiastical appointment – ‘. . .his second chairge was Hawick Congregational Kirk’ [IWL], arch. a

burden – ‘Of these the first half-dozen are bracketed ‘all these can work some’, although one is credited with being ‘a charge’’’ [JJV].

chairge an dischairge (chä-rj-an-dis-chärj) n., arch. account of payments made, literally the income received and the record of monies paid out – ‘. . . charge and discharge thereof being calculated together, rests in the said John Scott’s hands . . .’ [BR1639].

the Chairity Ball (thü-chä-ri’-ee-bawl) n. annual charity fund-raising event held in the early 19th century in the Town Hall, usually in April.

chairk (chärk) n., arch. a harsh grating noise, v., arch. to creak, grate, make a harsh grating noise – ‘But the childer o’ the kingdom sall be casan out intill outer mirk: ther sall be greetin’ an’ cherkin’ o’ teeth’ [HSR], ‘. . . an than a chairkin road-injin . . .’ [ECS] (also written ‘cherk’; from Medieval English: cf. chirk).

Chairlie (chär-lee) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Charles – ‘Hei said they ca’d um Chairlie Broon – Mind, it could hev been a lei . . .’ [DH].

Chairlie o the Crescent (chär-lee-ö-thu-kre-sin’) n. nickname for Charles Scott, linen manufacturer.

Chairlie’s Hill (chär-leez-hill) n. Charlie’s Hill, a small hill in Southdean Parish, just to the north of the main A6088 after Southdean Lodge. It is a small knoll among the higher Southdean Law to the west, Steel Knowe to the east and Southdean Rig and Charlie’s Knowe to the south. Note the confusion with the separate Charlie’s Knowe (which name it might also sometimes have). It reaches a height of 251 m. Here, on the west side of Jordan Sike are remains of rig lines, shooting butts, stock enclosures and boundary banks. To the south-west of the summit is an old farmstead, with 2 buildings and a couple of enclosures. It is said that the name came from a shepherd there, and the area was once the site for a market, frequented by people from both sides of the Border. It is possible this was the ‘chairleis’ where Ingram Oliver is recorded in 1493.

Chairlie’s Knowe (chär-leez-now) n. Charlie’s Knowe, hill to the north-west of Newcastleton, being on the lower slopes of Roan Fell. To the south-west is a broad terrace where there are at least 26 small cairns (also known as ‘Charlie’s Know’).
Chairter Box

James’ father, Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. This royal charter also records the fact that Hawick had the liberties and privileges of a ‘burgh barony’; if there was a related charter from the Baron to the town then it was lost. However, this could have not been the original, since there are Burgesses of Hawick recorded in documents of 1433, 1447, 1453, 1454 and 1490. Because Douglas of Drumlanrig took possession of the Barony around 1412, this suggests that the earliest Burgh charter was granted sometime in the period 1412–33. The fact that the existence of an earlier charter was ignored for centuries (as well as the mention of burghal status in the 1511 baronial charter) is entirely due to there being no copy in the Burgh Records, nor any mention in most of the earliest town histories. The 1511 document describes the lands forming the barony of Hawick, makes clear the powers vested in the Magistrates, and states that William Douglas and his heirs are to be paid an arrow ‘in blench-ferme’ annually at the Feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The 1537 and 1545 charters were long held in a spacial box, called the ‘Charter Chist’. It was stated in 1652 that ‘the burgh’s two charters, and extract thereof, under the hands of the Clerk Register, with informations for advocates in Edinburgh, of the privilege of the said charters, and freedom of Hawick, are delivered over by the widow of the deceased custodier to the newly appointed custodier thereof’; it is unclear who these custodians were, and unfortunately the additional ‘informations’ have been lost – ‘A soulless cynic is he, that would try to wrest from us, Our birthright charter sealed with blood, and survived in – Teribus’, ‘Guard the grey auld toon you cherish. See its charter rights allowed’ [IWS].

Chairter Box (thu-chär’-ur-boks) n. another name for the Charter Chist.

Chairter Chist (thu-chär’-ur-chist, -kist) n. official chest in the Town Hall, used to hold the Charter and other valuable items. This included the Flag at one time, as recorded in the Town Book in 1710, when it was entrusted to Robert Brown, with the keys held by 2 of the ex-Bailies. In 1715 it is recorded that ex-Bailie Robert Rucastle should have custody of the ‘charter little chest’, with 2 other ex-Bailies holding the 2 keys. It is unclear how often the chest itself was renewed. The existing one was moved from the Town Hall into storage in the Library. It was inadvertently cleared out after local government Reorganisation in 1975, and in 1978 was spotted for sale in an antique shop by R.E. Scott. It was then reacquired for the Town and is now in the Museum (also ‘Charter Box’, etc.).

Chairters (chär’-, chawr’-urz) n. (Charters) Andrew ‘de Charteris’ (13th/14th C.) probably son of Sir Robert and nephew of Thomas (the Chancellor). He was forced to give homage to Edward I in 1296. He was father of William, who inherited the half Barony of Wilton from Thomas (who was probably his brother or other close relative). He was listed in 1297 along with Robert the Bruce and other Scottish nobles invited to accompany the English King on an expedition to Flanders. An inquest of 1303/4 lists William’s mother as Agnes de Vesci, who was thus presumably his wife. Andrew (1914–2011) born in Newcastle-on-Tyne, son of a railwayman, he was educated at Hawick High School, boarding with a local family through the week. In 1933 he enlisted in the Scots Guards and later joined the Dunfries County Police, but was recalled to the Army during WWII, serving in the Cameron Highlanders. As a constable he starred in the government film ‘Country Policeman’, with a distinctive red handlebar moustache. As a result he was referred to as the ‘Best-known Bobby’. He served as bodyguard for visiting dignitaries to Dumfriesshire. He was director of studies at the Scottish Police Colleges, Deputy Chief Constable of Ayr Burgh Police and Chief Superintendent with Ayrshire Constabulary. He retired in 1971 with the Queen’s Police Medal. He later worked in security. His interests included racing pigeons, Ayr United F.C., for which he was Honorary President, and Burns, being President of Ayr Burns Club. Sir John of Amisfield (d.c.1639) son of Sir John and Agnes Maxwell. He held huge estates near Dumfries and was Warden of the West Marches in the reign of James V. In 1605 and appointed as one of the 5 Scottish Commissioners given responsibility to ruthlessly carry out the pacification of the Borders. He was one of the local Commissioners in 1623. His son Sir John was with the royalist forces at Philiphaugh in 1645, and was captured and beheaded in 1650. Sir Robert of Amisfield (d.1536) son of John and Elizabeth Somerville. In 1530 he accused Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick (and his own son-in-law) of treason. There being no witnesses, the crime was decided by single combat in a jousting tournament, before James V (in a loose sense this was a ‘Hawick vs. Wilton’ jousting contest!). In 1530 he also served as surety, along with Walter Scott of Branxholme, for John Johnstone of that Ilk. About 1540 he was one of the sureties for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme when he arranged to be released from ward. He married Marion Johnstone and was succeeded by his son John, 9th of Amisfield (who secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig). Robert George Beattie (‘George’ (1953–) born in Hawick and educated at the High School, he studied chemical engineering at Heriot-Watt University. He worked for Shell, Mars and Boots, then joined Safeway in 1995 and was C.E.O. of the Welcome Break business 2002–05. Robin (1930–2013) Hawick born and bred, and worker in the knitwear industry, he played centre for Hawick at age 17, and was capped 3 times for Scotland. He was educated at Drumlanrig and the High School and worked for the family firm, Scott & Charters, where he became managing director. He went on to be, variously, committee member, selector and coach for the P.S.A., the Y.M., Hawick, the South, Scotland and the British Lions, being President of the Scottish Rugby Union 1992–93. He was also a keen lawn bowler. He had 3 children with his wife Nan, Robert, Douglas and Jill. Rev. Dr. Samuel (1742–1825) son of Thomas, minister from Inverkeithing and Christian, daughter of James Wardlaw of Luscar. He was thus directly descended from the early Barons of Wilton. He was orphaned of both parents at age 4 and raised by his maternal grandmother, Jean (nee Morris), to whom he succeeded to the estate of Luscar about 1756. He was educated at Glasgow University (where he went quite young) and licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1764. He lived in Rotterdam for a while, then was ordained to Kincardine-in-Menteith in 1769. It is said that his appointment was violently opposed, but when he left the entire congregation were in tears. He was presented to Wilton Parish by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in late 1771 and moved there early the following year. His move to Wilton Parish Church was apparently through the influence of Lord Krames. He remained as Wilton’s minister for 52 years. In 1784 he turned down a move to the Church of St. Andrew’s in Glasgow, declining the Chair of Moral Philosophy, where he would have been successor to Adam Smith. He received a doctorate from Glasgow University in 1789. In 1791 he gave a speech in the General Assembly proposing the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts (a popular cause in Hawick at the time). In 1793 he headed the pro-peace side of a public meeting held in Hawick to discuss the possibility of war with France. His published sermons tend to focus on issues relating to everyday life, causing his colleague Dr. Young of Hawick to say (although not naming him explicitly) that his sermons bear ‘no more relation to the gospel of Christ than the discourses of a heathen philosopher’. He worked hard to dispell superstitions among his parishioners, with one influential sermon preached against belief in witchcraft, fairies and ghosts. He advocated freedom of worship for Catholics and spoke against slavery. He was also outspoken on the side of peace with France in the late 18th century (although he contributed a large sum to the subscription to support the war effort, and so shared in his contemporaries’ aversion of the French Revolution). He became known for the good relationship he had with most of the dissenting ministers in Hawick and neighbouring towns. At about the same time as Thomas Sharp of Hawick Parish (although perhaps slightly earlier, and certainly before James Henderson and David Russell) he set up one of the first Sunday Schools in Scotland; this is mentioned in the British Chronicle or Union Gazette for 1786, and although no names are given, the 2 Sunday Schools were surely started by the ministers of Hawick and of Wilton. In the early years this would last almost all day, but was hugely influential in teaching local children to read. He also set up a circulating library for his parishioners, which he left to his congregation; the books were kept by the schoolmaster and loaned out freely (it was said that he instructed it to be sold after his death and the proceeds used to buy bibles for the poor of the Parish). He was described as being a ‘wag from birth’ who ‘seldom carried his waggery into the pulpit’. In delivering sermons his voice was described as ‘low, solemn, and monotonous’. He was known as an eccentric, with an even temper and very deliberate habits, being described as ‘slow, grave, and solemn in his manner, though delightful and instructive as a companion’. He was of the ‘Moderate party’ in the church and his sermon style was said to be ‘laconic, consisting of very short sentences’. There are several stories told about his exploits around Hawick, some involving people who would steal from the Glebe lands, this motivating him to erect a sign saying ‘Thou shalt not steal’. One story is told of the ‘Tata Sermon’, when he preached on paying debts, after several parishioners had not paid him for potatoes dug on his land; this ‘Cravug Sermon’ was preached several times and was even published. It is said that his lack of ‘the evangelical’ may have led many Wilton Parishioners to seek the Secession and Relief Kirks in Hawick. His coach driver and servant for about 40 years was Andrew Leggatt, and Anti-Burgher, who never heard him preach. In 1788 he paid tax for having a female servant and for having a chaise-driver in 1797. He was listed on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls, having 2 horses by the end of this period. He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He published several of his sermons over a long period of time, many collected in the 2 volume ‘Sermons’ (1786, 1794, 1809, 1816), as well as ‘Sermon preached before the Society for Propagating Christian Knowledge’ (1779), ‘A Sermon on Intercession, and an Instruction concerning Oaths’ (Hawick 1785, running to 3 editions), ‘A Sermon on Alms’ (1788, 1795), ‘Two discourses on the revolution’ (Hawick 1793), ‘Sermon preached before the Society for the Sons of the Clergy’ (1798), ‘Sermons and Meditations suited to the Lord’s Supper’ (Hawick, 1807), ‘An Historical Sermon on the Revolution, 1688’ (Hawick, 1812), ‘Sermon on Backsliding’ (Hawick, 1812), ‘Sermon on the Duty of Making a Testament; to which is added the Form of a Testament, with Directions for making it valid, according to the Law of Scotland’ (Hawick, 1812) and ‘A Sermon on Devout Retirement’ (Hawick, 1825). ‘An Instruction concerning Oaths’ was drawn up following a complaint from the Sheriff to the Presbytery that many of the lower classes failed to understand the significance of an oath. In 1810 he edited Richard Baxter’s ‘Compassionate Counsel to Young Men’, which was published in Hawick.

He is said to have written the part on religious education in ‘Loose Thoughts on Education’ (1781) by Lord Kames, who had been his parishioner (and who is said to have helped get him presented to Wilton Kirk). He also wrote an ‘Essay on Bashfulness’ (Hawick, 1815), which was published anonymously, as well as contributing a sermon to Gillan’s ‘Scottish Pulpit’, and a description of the Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. Despite these published works, he gave instructions that his unpublished manuscripts should be destroyed immediately following his death. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He was a close friend of the historian Thomas Somerville (born in Hawick), who married his cousin Martha Charters. He was also a mentor of Dr. Thomas Chalmers, whose writings were very influential in his day. He met with romantic disappointment in early life and in 1786 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Burnhead, who was heiress of Crawhill (and probably Burnhead). When she died in 1815 she left her husband an annuity of £300. It is said that this money was often used for local charitable causes. It is also said that he refused to enroll as a freeholder, although he could have claimed the right to vote through his wife’s lands. His elder sister Jean died at Wilton Manse in 1806; she was mother of Rev. Thomas Samuel Hardie (whose published sermons he edited). His niece, Mrs. Semple, wrote some biographical notes about his life. His portrait (painted by Agnes Douglas), as well as his hat and flask, are in the Museum – ‘There is Lord Napier o’ the Lodge, And Gawin in the Hall, And Mr. Charters o’ Wilton Manse, Preaches lectures to us all’ [DJG]. He was buried in an aisle below the gallery in Wilton Kirk that he had partly paid for. Sir Thomas ‘de Charteris’ (d.bef. 1295) probably either son or brother of Sir Robert. The family name at that time was also sometimes Latinised ‘de Carnoto’. He was an ecclesiastic clerk who was appointed Lord High Chancellor of Scotland by Alexander III in 1280. He appears to have been confused with the Thomas, who was Baron of Wilton, and is fancifully connected with ‘Thomas de Longueville’ who was an ally of William Wallace. Details of these generations are vague, but it seems that the Longueville, Langlands and ‘de Charteris’ families may all be the same, or at least interrelated. His connection with Wallace is probably the source of the legend of the Wallace Thorn. He was ward for Andrew of Amisfield, who may have been a nephew. In 1291 there was an order (by Alexander Baliol) for the payment of his salary as former Chancellor of Scotland. Sir Thomas ‘de Chartres’ (d.1302) probably the 1st of the family who was Baron of Wilton. He conjointly held the half Barony with Lady Jane de Vesey, his wife, the grant being in the reign of Alexander III. His succession as Baron was determined by a jury in 1303/4, about a year after his death. It is there stated that he died ‘beyond the Mountains’ in Scotland on Tuesday before the feast of St. Andrew a year earlier, and at that time he was an enemy of the King. The lands passed to William ‘de Chartres’, who must have been a nephew or similar relative. Thomas ‘de Charteris’ (d.1346) appointed Lord High Chancellor of Scotland by David II in 1342. He witnessed an Edinburgh charter in 1344 (along with Sir Maurice Murray, Baron of Hawick at the time), where he is described as ‘de Carnoto’. He was killed at the Battle of Durham. Thomas (1830/1–84) originally from Berwick, he was a baker and confectioner at 66 (or 68) High Street. He married a daughter of merchant George T. Pringle. She had carried on her father’s business until she got married in about 1878 and after her husband’s death she moved to Liverpool. William ‘de Chartres’ (13th/14th C.) probably son of Andrew, with Agnes de Vesci being his mother. He was probably the William ‘delle counte de Rokesburgh’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, along with 5 men of the same surname, including Thomas, who was also from Roxburghshire. His seal shows a 6-rayed figure and the name ‘SWILL’ D’CHARTRIS’. He appears to have been captured at York in 1300 and was imprisoned at Nottingham Castle. In 1303 King Edward ordered an inquisition to be made into the succession to his lands (there is a suggestion that he may have been deceased at this point, but this appears to be incorrect). The inquest was held at Roxburgh, and found that he had inherited the half barony of Wilton, which had been held by his ancestor Thomas and Lady Joan de Vesci (who must have been closely related to his mother, perhaps her sister). He also inherited ‘Appeltrerig’ in the regality of Sprouston from his mother, who died 2 years before the inquest. He was at that time stated to be ‘a rebel who had come to the King’s peace’. He had to pay homage to Edward I in 1304, where he is described as being from Roxburghshire. He appears to have joined Robert the Bruce in 1306, but nevertheless Bruce rewarded Gilbert Maxwell with the half Barony after Bannockburn (the Latin form is ‘de Carnoto’; earliest spellings sometimes ‘Charteris’, ‘de Charteris’, ‘de Chartres’, etc.).

chalder (chawl-dur) n., arch. a unit of dry measure consisting of about 16 bolls, but varying depending on the type of goods – ‘The present stipend, decreed in 1820, consists of 16 chalders, and L. 8, 6s. 8d. for communion elements’ [RDB] (from Old French).

chalmerlain (chal-mur-lain) n., arch. a chamberlain, steward of a nobleman – ‘Payand thairfor zeirlie, the said Gilbert and his airis to me, my factouris or chalmerlains in my name …’ [SB1591].

Chalmers (chawn-urz) n. Rev. Daniel (d.1586) recorded being presented to the parsonage and vicarage of Ashkirk in 1585 on the death of Thomas Cranston. However, he was only there for about a year before his own death (although there is some confusion, since he may have started in 1583). Hector (b.1802/3) from Cockpen in Midlothian, he was manager at Hawick Brewery on Slitrig Crescent. He is listed there in the 1851 census. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is incorrectly listed as ‘Walter, brewer and maltster, Crescent’. His wife was Louisa Brown and their children were: James (b.1836/7); Louisa (b.1839/40); Walter (b.1843/4); Catherine Helen (b.1846); and Hector (b.1848). Hector (1848–1943) painter who attended school in Hawick, being the son of the owner of the brewery that was once at the ‘ Brewery Haugh’. The family left Hawick at some point. John (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Ovens. Their son John was baptised in 1673, with the witnesses being notary Andrew Rutherford and James Thorbrand (who was a Bailie). Rev. John (1826–94) born in Coltraine, Perthshire, son of farmer James and Jane Gray. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1852 and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1857. He spent six years as assistant classical master at Madras College, St Andrews. In 1863 he became minister at Newtyle and in 1871 was translated to Ashkirk. He married firstly Emily Rose Mason (daughter of a vicar from Ipswich), who died in 1864, and secondly Margaret Steels from Forfar, who died in 1918. His children were Walter James Mason, Rose Margaret (who married the minister of Forteviot), Henry William (who became a marine engineer), Louisa Jane (who married a banker in Buenos Aires), Edward Ernest (who ranched in Argentina and drowned in Loch Shiel), Richard Mason (architectural draughtsman, who died in New Jersey), John Steele (who moved to South Africa), Mary Elizabeth, Susan Agnes and Edith. Robert (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He could also have been ‘Chalmer’ or ‘Chamber’. Rev. Dr. Thomas (1780–1847) perhaps the most distinguished theological writer of his time, born in Fife, he became a minister in Glasgow and eventually helped found the Free Church. At university he was a close friend of William Berry Shaw, who became minister at Roberton. His first appointment was as assistant to Thomas Elliot at Cavers 1801–02. During part of that time he stayed in the Roberton Manse with his old friend Rev. Shaw, and then he lodged in Hawick, in an old house near the confluence of the Slitrig and Teviot belonging to the Kedie family (of bakers). Locally, Rev.
Chamberlain Newton

Grundi de Neuton’, which probably refers to the same lands (and who gave his name to Groundiston). The lands were later erected into a Barony and were of considerable extent, containing much of the northern part of Wilton Parish, as well as Hassendean Parish, and even Borthwickshiels was part of it in the late 14th century. In about 1380 there was confirmation of a grant of the lands by James of Lindsay to William of Lindsay. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle. It was a 40-pound land in 1501 when relief was granted to Alexander, Lord Home. Adam Turnbull was tenant there in 1502. In at least the period of the 1460s to 1480s the Baron was Lord Lindsay of the Byres. By 1506 the Baron was Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. In 1510/1 the lands of Over and Nether Newhall (which correspond to Burnhead and Burnfoot) were described as being in this barony. In 1511 the Barony was confirmed to Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. The lands of Nether Harden are described as belonging to it in 1540, while Harden appears to be part of Wilton in 1525 (with Stoulslie and Groundiston in this Barony). In 1528/9 the lands are described as pertaining to Simon Turnbull, servant to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Chauerbenton’ in an English letter of 1543, describing how it and Appletreelhall were raided by men from Tynedale. In the latter half of the 16th century, there was a dispute over rights to the tenancy of the 2 halves of the farm. A 6 merk land there was owned in 1567 by George Turnbull of ‘Wowlie’, who had a case to force off David Elliot (probably possessor of the other half). In 1573 one half was possessed by Margaret Turnbull, widow of David Elliot, and the other half was sold by George Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh, to Gavin Elliot of Ballielee. Margaret Turnbull sent her sons Walter and John Scott to attack James Storie, the servant of Gavin Elliot, injuring him severely; John Scott was declared a fugitive for non-appearance. William Scott of Chamberlain Newton is recorded in 1581. The Barony was confirmed to Francis, Earl of Bothwell in 1585 and was transferred to the Earl of Buccleuch after Bothwell forfeited his lands, being listed among the possessions of Buccleuch in 1632 and 1634. The Barony is still listed among the Scott possessions in 1653 service of heirs of Mary Scott of Buccleuch and in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. Walter Scott’s lands there were valued at £266 13s 4d in 1643.

Chambers’ Haugh

Samuel Charters of Wilton was one of his mentors. This period is described in his memoirs. After he left Hawick he continued to correspond with 2 of the daughters of Thomas Kedie, who had been very young when he stayed with them for 3 months. He left to become minister at Kilmany and later became Professor of Divinity in Edinburgh. He was the senior minister who introduced Rev. John Aikman Wallace to the Parish of Hawick in 1833. He was known for his work supporting the destitute, but Robert Wilson argued vehemently against his system of supporting the poor only through voluntary contributions.

Chambers’ Haugh (chawn-urz-hawf) n. another name for the Brewery haugh after the owner of the brewery there in the mid-19th century – ‘Whiles blythe in Chambers’ Haugh we’d play, Whiles speel up the Back Braes’ [WLlu].

chamberlain (chəm-bər-lin) n. a factor or steward for a landowner. In the Borders the Scots of Buccleuch specifically used the title Chamberlain to refer to their main factors, there being several different appointees to cover the different regions, Teviotdalehead, Eskdale, Ettrick Forest, etc. Rental records and accounts for the various Chamberlains of the Scots of Buccleuch exist in the National Archives from 1609.

Chamberlain (chəm-bər-lin) n. Sir Joseph Austen (1863–1937) son of Joseph and half-brother of Prime Minister Neville. He followed the Cornet on the Friday of the 1888 Common Riding and attended the Dinner, when he was a Liberal Unionist candidate for the Border Burghs. He also passed the Cornet on the canter round the racecourse! This was hardly popular and perhaps scuppered his chances of election victory. He later became M.P. in the Birmingham area from 1892 until his death and held many important positions in government, including Chancellor of the Exchequer, leader of the Conservative Party and Foreign Secretary. For his part in the Treaty of Locarno he was given a knighthood and shared the Nobel Peace Prize.

Chamberlain Newton (chəm-bər-lin-new’-in) n. former name for an area north of Hawick that became ‘Newton’ or the Nitton. It was granted to Walter de Berkeley, Chamberlain to William the Lion sometime before 1182. The addition of the word ‘Chamberlain’ came later, but probably derives from this period. In 1259 lands within the feu of ‘Chabirlayneutone’ are mentioned in a Douglas charter (when gifted by Hugh Abernethy when his sister married a Douglas). The Ragman Rolls of 1296 lists ‘Robert
the Chamberlain’s Hoose

Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton paid tax on his lands valued at £1182 in Hassendean Parish in 1678; as well as Newton, this included Pinnacle, Midshiel, Appletreehall and Crawhill. The farm was listed as ‘Newton, or Chamberlain Newton’ in 1788 and 1811, when owned by William Irvine and valued at £238 (also spelled ‘Chambrilane Neutone’ etc.; the name first occurs as ‘Chambirlayne neutone’ in 1259, ‘Chambirlayne-newtoun’ in c.1375, ‘Chambeylraylnewtoun’ in c.1380, ‘chambrelayn neuton’ in 1383, ‘Chambrerlaynnewtoun’ in c.1425, ‘Chawmerlayane-newtoun’ in 1433/4, ‘Chamerlan-newtoune’ in 1444, ‘Chawmerlayne-newtowne’ in 1445, ‘Chamerlane-neutone’ in 1455, ‘Chaumerlannewtoune’ in 1456, ‘Chaurnerlane Newtoune’ in 1471, ‘Chawmerlinewtoun’ in 1479, ‘Chawmerlane Newtowne’ and ‘Chamerlane Newtowne’ in 1484 and 1494, ‘Chawmerlane Newtoun’ in 1501, ‘Chalmerlane-Newtoune’ in 1502, ‘Chalmerlane-Newtoun’ in 1511, ‘Chalmerlen-neutowen’ in 1528/9, ‘Chalmerlan-Neutoun’ in 1532, ‘Chalmerlane-Newtoun’ in 1535, ‘Chambreron Neutowne’ in 1540, ‘Chalmrlenewtoun’ in 1550/1, ‘Chalmrlane-newtoun’ in 1566, ‘Chalmerlane Newtoune’ in 1573, ‘Chalmerlane Newtoune’ in 1581, ‘Chalmerlan-Neutowen’ in 1585, ‘Chalmerlanenewtoun’ in 1585 and 1664, ‘Chalmrylane Newtowen’ in 1594, ‘Chamlennewtoun’ in 1606’, ‘Chalmerlane-Newtoun’ in 1607, ‘Chamberland-Neutoun’ in 1610, ‘Chalmrlyane-Newtoun’ in 1634 and 1637, ‘Chamerlayne Newton’ in 1643, ‘Chalmerlane Newtoune’ and ‘Chalmerleane Newtoune’ in 1663, ‘Chalmerlan-Newtoun’ in 1661, ‘Chamerlayne of Newtoune’ in 1678 and ‘Chamberlandneutoun’ and ‘Chamberland-Newton’ in 1693, while the modern form ‘Newton’ is only established by the 17th century; it is ‘Chalmerlangeunton’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the name means simply ‘new farm belonging to the Chamberlain’, probably referring to Walter of Berkeley, who was Chamberlain about 1170–93, but other connections cannot be ruled out, e.g. Alexander Baliol, Lord of Cavers, who was Chamberlain of Scotland 1287–96.

the Chamberlain’s Hoose (thu-cham-burlinz-hoos) n. former house near the top of the Fore Raw, occupied by Walter Laing, Chamberlain to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, in the early 18th century. It was used as a mission in the early 19th century and removed in 1871 to improve the premises of the West Port Church. The house exists in an old sketch by Mr. Fowler of Longview.

Chambers (cham-burz) n. A. Gordon (20th C.) High School Rector 1968–84. Mr. ?? (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was presumably a minister of some sort, but his name seems otherwise unrecorded. Frederick Edward Hathway (d.1905) woollen merchant in Hawick at the end of the 19th century, in partnership with Alexander Innes. He was buried at Pucklechurch in Gloucestershire. Robert Maxwell (1831–1878) local engineer whose premises were built at the end of Carnarvon Street, which was named Maxwell Street after him from 1877 for a few years. William (18th C.) groome at Minto in 1793, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1794 he was listed as a footman.

the Change Field

the Change Field (thu-chānj-feeld) n. a field at the Nipknowes, opposite the 2nd hole at the Vertish, sloping up to Crumhaughhill Road. The origin of the name is uncertain. The field is one of two on the right-hand side of the Nipknowes that belong to the Common and are marked with a plaque.

change hoose (chānj-hoos) n. arch. a small tavern, ale house – ‘The sd. day Bailie Scott, Walter Wilson, and the two John Swans, were appointed to perlustrate ye town the ensuing month of Septr. to see if any were useing change houses after 8 o’clock at night’ [PR1713], ‘In Innerleithen, hei bade in a thached inn or changehoose as inns were cad then as they were centres o’ coachin activity and where horses wad be changed ti maintain the speed o the coach’ [IWL] (the name deriving from being an ‘exchange house’, i.e. a place of trade, as well as being where horses would be changed).

Changehouse (chānj-hoos) n. Changehouse, a ruined cottage to the right after crossing Teindside Bridge on the A7 south of Hawick. It was once used for changing the post-horses on the stage coach, and was presumably also a public house. In the 1851 and 1861 censuses it is listed as ‘Coach Station’, with John Cavers being the ostler there. Archibald Anderson was farmer there in the mid-19th century. The area is also known as ‘Mossy Knowe’ and has the remains of an enclosure to the west and a 10 m diameter burial mound to the south. This mound was excavated (described by J. Brydon in 1872) and found to be largely natural, but with some worked flints and calcined bone discovered. There were places of the same name beside Hassendean Kirk and near Wolfelee House.

the Change-hoose (thu-chānj-hoos) n. the Changehouse, a former inn in the Rule valley, near ‘Cleuch Heid’ or Blacklee, probably opposite the entrance gate to Wolfelee House. This was on the main route from Hawick towards the Carter Bar and Newcastle. The inn saw much activity in the years before the new road was built. In the early 18th century there was an annual horse race run nearby, and the inn is where people would gather for betting.

Changesflat (chān-jeez-flaw’) n. place in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded as ‘Ch’ngisflat’ in the early 13th century when it was part of lands granted by Walter of Riddell to the monks of Melrose Abbey.

Channelkirk (chaw-nul-kirk) n. hamlet and parish north of Lauder (containing Oxton), being the former north-west corner of Berwickshire.

The A68 goes through here, and the main route from Hawick north to Edinburgh passed this way for centuries, including the ‘Girthgate’ or road that the monks of Melrose used to travel north.

Channelstane Knowe (chaw-nul-stān-now) n. small hill in Liddesdale, essentially being a rise in the slopes of Larriston Falls, roughly between Larriston and Dinlabyre farms.

chantie (chawn-tee) n. arch. a chamber-pot.

Chap Landles (chawp-lan-dulz) n. familiar name of J.C.G. Landles.

Chapman (chawp-mun) n. David ‘Chappie’ founder member of the band Scocha. Born and educated in Hawick, he has long been a sales manager in the knitwear industry. Janice (1858–) educated at Wilton and Hawick High Schools, she trained as a teacher in Falkirk and had her first job in Galashiels. She later became head of Burnfoot Primary School. She was Chair of the Vision 2014 project, being heavily involved in organising all of the ‘Big’ events. In 2011 she received the Provost Council’s Achievement Award. She is married to David. John (d.bef. 1453) mentioned in a sasine of 1453. His property on the south side of Hawick was east of the ‘tenement’ which passed from John Turnbull to Robert ‘Wayte’. Simon (d.bef. 1502) recorded as ‘Symonis Chepman’ in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1502 when William Scott ‘in Hawick’ received a pardon for his murder. However, in the records of the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh be was put to the horn and his goods confiscated, following an announcement at the market cross in Jedburgh; his name there is ‘Symonis chepnam’. It is unclear who he was, or whether he was local to Hawick. However, he was probably closely related to the Simon recorded as a landowner in Hawick’s 1537 Charter, holding 1 particarte on the south side. Thomas (b.1806/7) from England, he was recorded as ‘Carter (Railway)’ at Gillbrahead in Castleton Parish in 1861. His wife was Mary. Thomas (b.1846) born in Lanarkshire, he was raised in the Yetholm area and became a constable in the Hawick police force. He published many poems under the name ‘Joseph’, was a prize-winner in the Verter Well competition and was presented with a purse of gold by the farmers of Upper Teviotdale. His book ‘Contentment and Other Verses’ was published in 1883. It contains a large number of poems, many of which are partially in dialect, including verses about Hawick personalities and Borders scenery. He married Margaret Watson and their children included: Margaret (b.1870); William (b.1872); and Thomas Alexander (b.1881), who was born in Hawick. He may have secondly married Annie Jeffrey and had son John baptised in Hawick in 1891 (formerly also ‘Chepman’).

chappin (chaw-pin) adj. unable to play at one’s turn in a game such as dominoes or cards, indicated by knocking on the table, hence out of luck in general – ‘if ee hink ee’re gettin ony mair ee’re chappin’, ‘...For if thae raid tae claim oor booze, wad find that thae waur chappin’ ...’ [MB].

chappin (chaw-pin) n., arch. a liquid measure equal to half a Scots pint – ‘The puder plate qch contained ye water for baptizing of Children was bartered for a Chappin stoup’ [PR1711].

chappin-stick (chaw-pin-stik) n., arch. a stick used for hitting.

the Charabanc Disaster (thu-sha-rubang-dee-zas-tur) n. motor accident at the Nipknoues in 2019. A motorised charabanc (i.e. primitive bus) originating in Dumfries, was being used to ferry passengers to and from the Moor on Common-Riding Friday of 1919. On its way down after the Races, filled with passengers, and with crowds of other people on their way home, its brakes failed, and in attempting to avoid a horse-drawn vehicle near the foot of Haggishaa Brae it struck a wall and overturned. This resulted in the deaths of 3 passengers and 2 young boys who were bystanders, as well as injuries to 21 others. This was a big blow to the Town in the first Common Riding after the horrors of WWI. The disaster was commemorated 100 years later, with a memorial plaque being added in 2019.

Charles (chaw-rulz) n. name of 2 Kings of the United Kingdom. Charles I (1600–49) King from 1625. Son of James VI (I of England). He battled with Parliament for several years, and his marriage to a Catholic French Princess also made him unpopular. In 1637 he tried to force a new prayer book (and Episcopacy) on Scotland, leading to the signing of the National Covenant and rebellion. This boiled over to the Civil War in England, and Charles’ forces were defeated by Cromwell’s New Model Army at Naseby in 1645. He surrendered to the Scottish army at Newark a year later. His refusal to sign the Covenant sealed his fate, however, and he was handed over to the English and executed. Charles II (1630–85) King from 1660. Son of Charles I, he escaped to France on the execution of his father in 1649, but returned to Scotland in 1650, where he was proclaimed King, after agreeing to sign the Solemn League and Covenant. On his way south he knighted Gilbert Elliott of Stobs on Large sands. However, his Scottish army was defeated by Cromwell’s forces at Worcester in 1651 and he fled again to France. After the dissolution of the Commonwealth he returned to claim the throne in 1660, usually referred to as ‘the Restoration’. However, he effectively became the first monarch to be less powerful than Parliament. His reign also effectively saw the political parties of Tory and Whig form themselves from the Cavalier and Roundhead supporters. He married Katherine of Braganza, but only had illegitimate children by several mistresses. These included James, Duke of Monmouth, later the 1st Duke of Buccleuch. Charles died of a stroke, converted to Catholicism on his death-bed and was succeeded by his brother James VII.

Charlesfield Halt (chaw-rulz-feeld-hawl’) n. former siding on the Waverley Line before St. Boswells.

Charles Street (chaw-rulz-stree’) n. part of Burnfoot, connecting McLagan Drive with Hillend Drive, built in 1950, named after Prince Charles, who was born in 1948. Until 1985 it was the only ‘Street’ in the Council housing schemes.

Charlton (chawrl-tin) n. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation as owner of lands in Hobkirks valued at £16 13s 4d. He is listed as ‘Thomasyne Charletoune in Rouletoun’, but since ‘Charlton’ is not known as a local surname, it is possible that this is a transcription error.

the Chartist Association (thingschawr'-ist-saw-sès-aa-shin, -chär-) n. radical political movement founded in Hawick in November 1838, following a public meeting by James Dodds (Free Church minister of Dunbar) in the Under Haugh a month earlier. The national working-men’s movement was inspired by William Lovett’s ‘People’s Charter’. In Hawick the first President was Charles Hunter and the first Secretary John Amos Hogg. They founded the Chartist Store the following year, which became Hawick Co-op.

the Chartist Schuil (thingschawr'-ist-skil, -chär-) n. private school in Hawick that lasted a short time around 1842, taught by M. Davies.

the Chartist Store (thingschawr'-ist-stör, -chär-) n. the Hawick Chartist Provision Store, the original name for what became the Hawick Co-operative Store, with its first shop at 1 Silver Street from 1839 (of which there is a sketch by T.H. Laidlaw). It grew out of the Chartist Association, with all subscribers members of that organisation. At first it was only open on Tuesday and Thursday evenings and Saturday afternoons. It moved to the Sandbed in 1842 and the shop at No. 7 there remained a Store for more than a century.

the Chase (thingschās) n. a ride at full gallop through the Nip Knowes, possibly representing the victorious callants of 1514 or the men of Hawick chasing off intruders (or both). The first of the Cornet’s Chases takes place on the Thursday evening of the week before the Common Riding (also called the Ordering of the Curds and Cream), followed by one each morning of Common Riding week. The first 3 morning chases are fairly quiet affairs, usually attended by only a few supporters, with no galloping and with the Hut being a relatively quiet affair. On the Wednesday the Cornet gets the practice flag at St. Leonards and takes it to the Mair and round the race course. Thursday morning Chase is the second important one, when the Cornet first rides with the (unbussed) flag. However, the Friday Chase is the main one, with the Acting Father leading the married men first, followed by the Cornet with the unmarried men. When the married riders pass the Cornet to prepare for the Chase, this is the only time that anyone is allowed to pass the Flag. After the Friday Chase the Acting Father gets to carry the Flag to St. Leonard’s. Before the Town was so developed the Chase was held from the foot of the Loan to Haggishaa Brae, with crowds lining the roadside. A supporter was unhorsed by a cow on the Loan in the Thursday night Chase of 1859. A spectator was killed at the Wednesday morning Chase of 1868 and another at the Thursday Night Chase of 1876. The Chase was moved to its present location after that. It was said that the turn-out was so poor in 1874 that many people predicted that the event would die a natural death. There also used to be another Chase from the Cross Wynd to the Wellogate, after the return from the Moor on the Friday, on the way to the Song Singing, which was discontinued from 1877. The Chase was first filmed around 1902 and there are good film clips from 1929 and the 1930s. The riders divide at Rosebank Road, with the married men going first, led by the Acting Father, then the unmarried men, led by the Cornet, followed by the Right- and Left-Hand Men. The crowd can tell when the Chase has started by the marshal lowering a white flag at the first rise near the golf clubhouse – ‘I almost feel my mother’s hand Wha led me oft tae see That glorious chase on meetled steeds By lads wha aye were free’ [WLu], ‘. . . Then at the Nipkowes ta’en oor place Ti sei the stirrin Cornet’s Chase’ [IWL], ‘morning is breaking, folk already waking Climbing the Nipknowes at the fence to take their place Horses are nearing, loud grows the cheering Friday morning chase’ [IWL].

Chatto (chaw-tō) n. hamlet south of Hownam in eastern Roxburghshire. John of Chatto was witness to a charter in 1357/8. It was long a Lairdship of the Rutherford family and was acquired by James Ker in 1595 (the origin is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Ceatta’ plus ‘hoh’ for ‘height’: it first occurs as ‘Chattehou’ around 1200 and is ‘Chatlow’ in 1428/8).

Chatto (chaw-tō) n. Alexander of Mainhouse (18th/19th C.) lived near Kelso. In 1783 he is recorded as owner of ‘four farms’ in Liliesleaf Parish, including some land that had been formerly held by the feuars, as well as Newhouse. These lands were sold by him and his son John to Mark Sprot of Riddell. In 1788 he was explicitly listed as owner of Liliesleaf Mill (valued at £167), ‘Twenty soums on Liliesleaf’ (valued at £60), ‘Lands in Liliesleaf disjoined from the feuars before 1678’ (valued at £180 15s), teinds of these lands (valued at £71 13s 4d) and some other lands in Lilliesleaf (valued at about £70).

Cheesser (che-sur) n. James (b.1823/4) from Crampdon, he was listed in 1861 as a public bath and washhouse keeper in Hawick. He was living at 17 High Street, with his wife Elizabeth and daughters Mary and Margaret, as well as brothers-in-law David and James Paterson. He was probably also the partner in the slaters, plumbers and glaziers Chesser & Henderson, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory.

chesset (che-se’) n. a cheese press, a mould for cheese.

Chester Cleuch (ches-tur-klooach) n. small stream in Liddesdale, between the old railway and the Liddel, just north-west of Dinlabyre.

Chesterhall (ches-tur-hawl) n. former farm near Ancrum, once a seat of a branch of the Turnbulls. There is another farm of the same name just north of Bowden.

Chesterhill (ches-tur-hil) n. name adopted for the combined farms of Gatehousecote and Over Boucher when they were purchased from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule by William Brodie in 1793. However, since the purchase was never formally completed, the lands went back to Ker, and the name was unused. It is recorded as ‘Chesterhall’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with ‘Mr. Broady’ owning 9 horses there, as well as ‘over Chesterhall’, with Thomas Fleck owning 1 horse.

Chesterhouse (ches-tur-hoos) n. former name for a farmstead near Chesters in Southdean Parish. In 1684 Adam Storie was tenant there when he was listed among men declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles.

Chester Knowe (ches-tur-now) n. small hill just to the north-east of Southfield, which was once near the edge of the old Common boundary and reaches a height of 826 feet. It contains the remains of three enclosures, a fort and another earthwork, partly obliterated by small quarries. The fort measured about 300 ft by 170 ft and had 2 sets of ramparts. The (presumably) later earthwork at the north-east of the ridge is about 220 ft by 125 ft. An enclosure lies within the boundaries of the fort, another to the south, a fifth structure overlies the south-west end of the fort, and there are fragments of other banks on the site also. This suggests occupation over an extended period. There is another probable fort less than a kilometre to the north-west, near Newbigging.
Chester Knowes

(the name, like other occurrences of ‘Chester’ suggests a fort).

Chester Knowes (ches-tur-nowz) n. farm in Lilliesleaf Parish, north of Friarshaw. R. Elliot was recorded there in 1868. There are earthworks to the north and west of the farm, partly obliterated by ploughing, but once consisting of an oval region with double ramparts. There is also clear signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation there (also written ‘Chesterknowes’).

Chesters (ches-turz) n. village at a crossroads of the A6088 on the way to the Carter Bar, about 10 miles from Hawick, and on the Jed Water. The village developed around this corner in the road, where the A6088 meets the Jedburgh road. Before the early 19th century, when the new road to the Carter Bar was built, the main settlement in the Parish was at Southdean. The Southdean parish church, built in 1876 is here (off the road towards Jedburgh), containing the super-altar stone from the original ‘Souden Kirk’ removed in the 1910 excavation of the first church (which is in the old hamlet of Southdean). The second parish church was also built in this hamlet in 1690, and its roofless walls stand in the churchyard, which is further along Chesters Brae. There is also a stone war memorial at the crossroads.

The farm of that name goes back at least to the 16th century; George Oliver was tenant in the 1570s and William Oliver in 1669. James Stewart, John Oliver, Thomas Oliver (smith), Agnes Oliver, Thomas Oliver, Agnes Law and (another) John Oliver were listed there in 1694, plus Andrew Ainslie and John Rule listed among the poor of the Parish. The horse-owners listed there in 1797 were Robert Reid, James Rae, John Douglas, Thomas Oliver, Gilbert Oliver, John White and John Whillans. It is said that there was once a tower in the village. The Bennets of Chesters developed a nursery here in the 18th century, rivalling that of the Dicksons of Hassendean. Note that there are several other places of the same name, e.g. one in Ancrum Parish and another in Northumberland, on the River Tyne, site of the best preserved Roman cavalry fort in Britain (most instances of the name Chester are related to the Old English ‘ceaster’, meaning ‘fort’; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Chesterr’ and on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland as ‘Chester’).

Chesters (ches-turz) n. village on the north bank of the Teviot south-west of Ancrum. The estate was long owned by the Bennet family. It was valued at almost £1500 in 1678. There was a nursery-garden for trees there around 1738–48, one of the earliest in Scotland. ‘Lady Chesters’ paid tax for 27 windows there in 1748 and 19 in 1753. The current Chesters House was built 1787–90 for Thomas Elliot Ogilvie, with designs by William Elliot. The estate was landscaped and replanted at about the same time. In 1788 the estate was valued at £965. There are some nearby remains of ancient forts nearby – ‘Dear to us too as you linger by Chesers, Hugging the haggs where the still graying lie; Dear where you dance through the gray Denholm arches, Lapping the piers in your hurrying by’ [WL] (also formerly written ‘Chesteris’; the name probably derives from the Old English ‘ceaster’, meaning ‘the forts’ and appears at least as early as 1595/6; it is also on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Chesters (ches-turz) n. former name for lands possibly associated with the forts on Whitcastle Hill and Todshaw Hill. It is mentioned as ‘chestris’ as forming part of the boundary of the lands in the Barony of Hawick that Richard Lovel granted in about the 1190s to the canons of St. Andrews, lying between Whithope and Whames.

the Chesters (thu-ches-turz) n. former name for lands, to the west or north of Templehall, west of Wauchope, as described in a bounding charter of 1567. Presumably he name is unrelated to the more familiar Chesters to the east of there.

Chesters Brae (ches-turz-brä) n. name for the road running east-west along the A6088 and continuing through the village after the main road bends to the south. It contains most of the houses in Chesters village.

Chesters Kirk (ches-turz-kirk) n. alternative name for Southdean Parish Church, located in the village of Chesters. It is to the north-west of the cemetery. It was built in 1690, with just part of the west end surviving (this probably once having a belfry). It is said that the entrance, at the west end of the south wall, was moved from the older church of Souden.

Chesters Toor (ches-turz-toor) n. former tower in Chesters village, Southdean Parish. In 1859 (in the Ordnance Survey Name Book) it was said that a delapidated wall near the cemetery was the remains of a tower. This could be the fortified house marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, but nothing else is known about it, and there is now no sign of the wall.

cheviot (chee-vee-i’) n. a white-faced breed of sheep with short, thick wool, common on Border hill farms, going back perhaps 300 years and once

providing the main raw material for the tweed industry. The breed gained in popularity and supplanted the black-faced sheep locally by about the end of the 18th century. Its thick fleece led to a higher quality wool, which helped propel the Borders woollen manufacturing business to the forefront. Local tradition (passed on by William Oliver of Langraw) suggested that the origin of the breed was in the ‘Thirteen Drifty Days’, when a large fraction of the Borders sheep perished, and the desperation to restock farms led to the new mixed breed – ‘A’ ye wha live by bonnie Teviot, And work ‘mong foreign woo’ and cheviot’ [RF].

the Cheviot (chee-vee-i’) n. highest hill in the Cheviots, 2,674 feet (815 m) high, often referred to as ‘High Cheviot’. It is situated about 25 miles from Hawick, and gives a handy rhyme for Teviot! – ‘O’er the vales of Tweed and Teviot, ‘Twee Moffat hills and lofty Cheviot’[JH], ‘Where fate invites them to the dread repast, Dark Cheviot’s eagles swarm on every blast’[JL], ‘The sun would peer o’er Cheviot’s fell, And deeper dye the heather bell’ [JTe], ‘This is the portal of wonder, Beckoning early and late, Over the threshold of Cheviot, Beauty and brotherhood wait’[WL] (the name is recorded as ‘Chuiuet’ in 1181, with ‘High Chvyiot’ in 1255; it probably has a pre-English origin, perhaps the Brythonic for ‘ridge’ with the extra suffix ‘ed’ that ‘Teviot’ also gained).

Cheviot Road (chee-vee-i’-rōd) n. street in the West End, built around 1930 and named after the Cheviot Hills.

the Cheviots (thu-chee-vee-its) n. the Cheviot Hills, to the south-east of Hawick and largely within the region of Northumberland, just over the Border, with some of the highest peaks marking the Border itself. They stretch for about 35 miles and are a favourite stomping ground for hill walkers. The major Scottish streams that rise within the region of Northumberland, just over the Border itself. They stretch for about 35 miles and are a favourite stomping ground for hill walkers. The major Scottish streams that rise there are the Hermitage and Liddel, which drain to the Solway and the Teviot and Beaumont, which run into the Tweed – ‘Our native land – our native vale – A long and last adieu! Farewell to bonny Teviotdale, And Cheviot mountains blue’[TPr].

Chevy Chase (chee-vee-chās) n. traditional ballad about the Percys of Northumberland hunting in Douglas territory on the Scottish side of the Cheviots, being essentially an English version of the ‘Battle of Otterburn’. Douglas’ men meet and oppose Percy’s men, and a battle ensues, which leaves both leaders dead (although the ‘Otterburn’ ballad has Percy surviving and being captured).

the Chief’s Pool

Chevy Chase (chee-vee-chās) n. name of an old coach that ran between Edinburgh and the Borders, specifically from Newcastle, via the Carter Bar and Jedburgh. It was running daily in 1834. Its last run was in 1848.

Chew Green (choo-green) n. site of several Roman camps and a small permanent fort, dating from AD 80. They lie to the east of the Carter Bar, not far over the Border into Northumberland, on Dere Street.

Cheyne (chān) n. Catherine (18th C.) long-time domestic servant of the family of Gledstains of Hilliesland. The ‘Gledstane Bible’ ended up in her hands, and after her death it passed to her nephew, William Smith, cutler in Hawick. This was probably ‘Wull the Cutler’, son of John Smith and Betty ‘Chein’. She could be related to the John ‘Shein’ recorded in Hawick in 1693/4.

chickenweed (chi-ki-n-weed) n., arch. the chickweed, Stellaria media.

the Chief (thu-cheef) n. another name for the Chief’s Pool.

Chief Guest (cheef-gest) n. official guest at the Common Riding ceremonies, with the specific duty of making a speech at the Colour Bussing, right after the Cornet has been given the Flag. Another ceremonial duty is to present the Cornet and Acting Father with riding crops at the Mair on the Friday. There were always guests at Common Riding events, and from the 1880s there were several short speeches after the Bussing of the Colour. The practice of having a single main speaker at the Colour Bussing only happened several years after it became a public event, with the first such speech being given by Robert Purdom in 1894 and the first person named to the position being in 1900. The extension of the invitation to be ‘Chief Guest’ for the entire Common Riding happened much later. A list since 1900 is included in an appendix.

Chief Magistrate (cheef-ma-ji-strā’) n. formerly the Senior of the two town Magistrates, another name for Senior Bailie. After the Council was reconstituted in 1861, the term was also sometimes used to refer to the Provost.

the Chief’s Pool (thu-cheefs-pool) n. a shallow pool in the Teviot in the Crumhaugh area, said to have been used for bathing by a former Laird of Crumhaugh. However, the name seems likely to be associated with Walter Scott, farmer at Overhall at the end of the 17th century, whose nickname was ‘Chief’.

chieled (cheiled) n., arch. a child, young man – ‘My father (rest his soul!) has left me gear, And a’ the chiels about me had a steer’ [CPM], ‘How mony buirdly chiels were born, And lasses trig and braw, Aneath the pendit arches O’ the auld Mid Raw’ [JT], ‘And often we speak o’ the wee barefit chiel, Wi’ the cowl and the auld sooty plaidie’ [JT], ‘A met twae aw-fih sairious-on chiels . . .’ [ECS], ‘He was a funny sort o’ chiel, A queer ane, Heather Jock; And antiquarians fain wad ha’e The auld fish pock’ [TCh], ‘When a chiel sings Annie Laurie with its tender, sweet refrain Till the tears are on their eyelids and – the drinks come round again’ [WHO], ‘And the chiels come frae far airts’ [??], ‘But aye in hert and heart the drinks come round again’ [WHO], `And sweet refrain Till the tears are on their eyelids

the Chinese Shelter (thu-chi-nee-zeh-shel’-ur) n. wooden shelter in Wilton Lodge Park, on the Avenue near the Laurie Bridge, officially called the Henderson Shelter. It was built in 1930 and presented by the sister of James Henderson of Wilton Burn, who was Mrs. Mark Currie. It originally had glass panels, which were removed in 1965. It was renovated in 2015 – ‘No more sliding down the helter skelter. No more kissing in the Chinese shelter’ [DF].

Chingills (ching-ilz) n. former seat of the Armstrongs in Liddesdale, located to the east of Mangerton, perhaps on the north side of the Tweedburn. However there may be confusion with ‘Glengills’ or ‘Gingillis’, which was in Ewesdale between Arkleton and Langholm and also with ‘Ginglenwells’ on the Hermitage Water. It is also possible that more than one place was meant by the name. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties the farm of ‘Jengles’ is shown to the east of Whithaugh and south of Dykecrofts. It covered 49 acres and had a share (with Greens and Yethouse) of a common of 116 acres. It was surely related to the stream there called Near Jingle Sike (it had a wide range of spellings, or perhaps was hard to transcribe from documents; it is ‘Chyngillis’ in 1556, ‘Cheingyllis’ and ‘Cheynegillis’ and ‘Chyngillis’ in 1557, ‘the Gyngillis’ in 1579, ‘Chyngillis’ in 1580, ‘Gingillis’ in 1580/1, transcribed ‘Gryngillis’ in 1585, ‘the Gingillis’, ‘the Chengillis’ in 1607 and ‘Chinglis’ in 1622; it is ‘Chingils’ on Blaen’s c.1654 map and ‘Jengles’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin could be the Scots ‘chingle’, meaning shingle or gravel).

chink (chingk) n., ins. a derogatory term for a Chinese or other Asian person, adj. Chinese, particularly referring to food.

chinky (ching-kee) n., ins. derogatory term for a Chinese take-out or restaurant. The first chinese restaurant in Hawick was the Red Rose in the 1960s and the first take-away was the Lam Wah, which opened in 1977 at 5 High Street.

chinnie (chee-nee) adj., ins. having a prominent chin – ‘Jim was aye in trouble frae Chinnie Weir’ [IWL].

Chinnie (chee-nee) n. nickname for several local people, including one in the mid-19th century – ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie lifts a sang Tae Shauchles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI].

chippie (chi-pee) n. a fish and chip shop, usually being a take-away, but sometimes having tables. Hawick has had a huge number of these over the years, with the height of popularity probably being the 1950s and 60s. There were at one point 11 shops between Silver Street and the top of the Loan. There have been fish and chip shops on: Bourtree Place; Dickson Street; Dowmount Place; Drumlanrig Square; Green Terrace; the High Street; Howegate; Kenilworth Avenue; the Loan; Oliver Place; Silver Street; Waverley Terrace; Weensland Road; and Wilton Path. Denholm also once had a chip shop – ‘Hei could buy chips in Langholm, and when hei got hame tae Hawick they were still hot’ [JCo].

chippit (chi-pee’, -pi’) pp. chipped – ‘...And the muckle Nipknowes trei chippit doon ...’ [DH].

chirk (chirk) v., arch. to make a grating noise (cf. chairk).

chirl (chirl) n., arch. cheap of certain birds, particularly the robin – ‘The robin’s chirl in wunter’ [GW], ‘The bird ga’e a chirl’ [GW], ‘I’m nae Franciscan: He does the preachin Wi sma frail wunter’ [GW], ‘The bird ga’e a chirl’ [GW], ‘I’m particularly the robin { ‘The robin’s chirl in winter’ [JCo].

Chirnburn (chirn-burn) n. probable name for a stream to the south of Coliford in the Slitrig valley. It is given as ‘Chyrnburn’ in a sasine of 1550 and could be another name for Horsley Burn.

Chirnside (chirn-sid) n. town in the middle of Berwickshire, near the confluence of the Blackadder and Whiteadder, and having woollen mills for local industry. The nearby Ninewell’s estate of the Homes is where David Hume came from, and has a surviving 16th century Dovecote. Population (1991) 1,253. ‘Chirnside: A Borders Village’ was published in 1919.

chirr (chir) n., arch. a prolonged trill, characteristic of a grasshopper, etc., v., arch. to make a trill – ‘There were butterflies to chase, grasshoppers chirred ...’ [DH].

chirt (chir’) v., arch. to squirt – ‘The tea chirtit oot’ [GW], n., arch. a squirt, squirting movement (cf. jirt).

Chisholm see Chisholme

Chisholme (chi-zum) n. estate on the south side of the Borthwick valley, about a mile beyond Roberton. It was the seat of the Chisholme family from the mid-13th century until 1624, with Chisholmes living in the immediate area long afterwards. In 1502 the superiority of the lands was held by William Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands were listed in 1511 among the lands held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick (Douglas of Drumlanrig), this continuing in the list for the promise of infeftment in 1559 and retour of Sir James Douglas in 1572. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands passed from the Chisholmes to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the early-to-mid-17th century and was among lands confirmed to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. It was valued in 1627, paying ‘120 lb., vicarage 20 lb.’, listed along with Parkhill and Lairhope. There were 4 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Little, James Little, Margaret Little and Bessie Murray. In 1678 Chisholme and Woodburn were together valued at £433 6s 8d. Thomas Riddell, Martin Cathrae and Walter Crozier were there in 1710, William Paterson in 1731, William Heatley in 1736, James Anderson in 1742, James Deans in 1743, William Elliot in 1773 and John Dunlop in at least 1771–75. About 1784 it was purchased back by William Chisholme (a descendant of Walter, 1st Laird of Stiches), who had made his fortune in the West Indies. It remained with this family for almost another century, being sold to the Dicksons around 1860. In 1888 (and still in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed along with Woodburn among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued at £433 6s 8d. In 1827 it was bought by James Bruce. Most of the present-day plantations around the estate date to the early 1800s. In about 1874 the owner is recorded as William Richardson Dickson of Alton. There is a plan of the estate by Andrew Hogg in 1826. The lands were originally in Hawick Parish, but passed to Roberton in 1689/90. Chisholme House, in the centre of the estate, was built in the mid-18th century on the site of a much earlier house (the name first occurs as ‘Cheshelme’ in 1254, later becoming ‘Cheshelme’, ‘Chesholm’, ‘Chesholme’, ‘Chisholme’ and variants and is ‘Chisholme’ by about 1650; it was ‘Chashelme’ in 1451 and ‘chishame’ in 1502; it has its modern spelling on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is probably ‘sheltered place where cheese was made’ from Middle English ‘cese helm’ and with the later substitution of ‘holm’).

Chisholme (chi-zum) n. Adam of Newton (17th/18th C.) owner of the lands of Newton in Bedrule Parish. He stood in as cautioner in the testament of 1690 for Mark Turnbull and Bessie Kerr, when William Turnbull, shoemaker in Jedburgh, failed to appear. The heiress of Mark Turnbull was Helen, who married Walter of Parkhill, who was surely related to him. Agnes (1751–1817) youngest daughter of Thomas, surgeon in Selkirk. She was thus a great-great-granddaughter of Walter, 1st Laird of Stirches. She is also sometimes named as Margaret, but that seems to be an error. She married Rev. William Scott, minister of Innerleithen, who was a son of Robert Scott of Coldhouse. Their son William inherited the Chisholme estate. Alan (16th C.) recorded as ‘Allen Chisholme in Parkhill’ in 1581. He served as one of the witnesses to a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. It is possible he was the same man as the Alexander in Parkhill recorded in the following decade. Alexander (13th C.) recorded in about 1250 as witness to a grant by Henry of Ashkirk of Bellendean and Todrig to Coldstream Priory. His name is recorded as ‘Allexandro de Cheshelme’. It is unclear how he was related to the John (usually given in family trees) who was nearly contemporary. Alexander (14th C.) son of John, he was the 4th Chisholme of that Ilk. He is described as ‘Laird of Chisholme in Roxburgh and Paxtoun in Berwickshire’ on a record relating to a Tweed fishing dispute in 1335. He had to pay an annual rent of 15 shillings to the English King for Chisholme in the period when the Scottish Borders was largely conceded to Edward III. His son and successor was Sir Robert (note there is great uncertainty in these early generations). Alexander (14th/15th C.) younger son of Sir Robert and brother of John. He is recorded in 1368 when he paid homage to the Bishop of Moray. In 1391 he resigned as Constable of Urquhart Castle in favour of his son Thomas. In 1436 (by which time he must have been quite old, or this date is incorrect) he inherited most of the Highland estates of his brother John; at the same time the Roxburghshire lands went to their younger brother Robert. He married Margaret de la Ard (or Aird), Lady of Erchless, daughter and heiress of Weyland of the Aird. Their children were: Thomas, who succeeded and was Constable of Urquhart Castle; and Margaret, who married Angus, son of Godfrey of Uist and Garmoran. Alexander of that Ilk (15th C.) probably son of Robert. He was on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424. In 1427 he was on the ‘inquest of retour’ for William Douglas in the Barony of Hawick; he is there recorded as ‘Alexandrum de Scheisholme’. Probably the same Alexander (no designation given) was the first witness of the ‘instrument of sasine’ making William of Drumlanrig the new Baron of Hawick in 1428/9 after the death of his father. In 1429/30 he was of ‘Scheysholme’ on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caerton. He was witness in 1431 of a document transferring the lands of Heap between Langlands and Scott. He wrote a letter of ‘attestation’ to this, where he is recorded as ‘Alysander off Chesholme off that ylk’. He witnessed a charter of Grahamslaw for Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1443, witnessed a lease for lands in Borthwickshiel in 1445, witnessed the charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch in 1446 and in 1447 he was witness to a charter of Margaret Cusing to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1451 he was witness to a document dealing with property in Edinburgh passing to Walter Scott of Kirkurd, and also on the charter exchanging Milsington with Heap. His daughter was probably ‘Katherine of Chisholme’ who is recorded in 1459 as wife of the deceased Walter Haliburton of Kinrossy (and 1st of Pitcur); she was said to be co-heiress of Alexander, suggesting that he was succeeded by 2 or more daughters (or had a later son perhaps). In 1432 it seems likely that his daughter Katherine (or Catherine) married her cousin, Walter Haliburton, who was son of Sir John Haliburton and Margaret Douglas, daughter of Archibald, 3rd Earl of Douglas. Alexander of Parkhill (16th/17th C.) youngest son of George of that Ilk. His probably the man recorded as ‘Alexandro Chishelme in Chishelme’ in 1567 when he was one of the witnesses for the marriage contract between Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. He is recorded in a sasine of 1595 granting half of Ferniehirst to John Scott. He is described as ‘bailie in that part’. He may be the ‘Alexander of Pilehill’ (mis-spelled or transcribed) in a ‘respite’ by King James VI for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands in 1593. He married the 7th daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade. He was said by Capt. Scott of Satchells to have been the 3rd husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade, who bore him 12 or 13 children. Andrew of Parkhill (17th C.) mentioned in a Hassendean Parish list of landowners in 1666. He was probably the ‘Chisholme, portioner of Parkhill’ who was recorded in a teind.

Chisholme

agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. In 1678 he paid the land tax for Easter Parkhill. He is also recorded in 1680 when his son John became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh, and in 1681 when his son William became a tailor's apprentice there. He is probably the same Andrew of Easter Parkhill who was a local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He is also recorded as Andrew of Parkhill in a bond of 1682. He is probably the Andrew who rented the east end of Branxholme Muir in 1691, 1696 and 1697, along with Walter (possibly his son). He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine in Hawick in 1655. Andrew (17th C.) wrote to Walter Earl of Tartras from Coldhouse in 1693. Precisely who he is unclear, since the connection between Coldhouse and the Chisholmes was not until much later. He may be the Andrew who married Margaret Scott in Wilton Parish in 1686 (as recorded in Roberton) and whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton in 1688. It is therefore possible that he married a Scott of Coldhouse. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism in 1687 for Robert Scott and Barbara Scott (perhaps the couple who lived at Tandlaw). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1713 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may also be father of William (b.1711), Janet (b.1715). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Harden in 1721 and Mabonlaw in 1728. His children included: John (b.1721); Walter (b.1724); and Andrew (b.1728). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1749 he married Margaret Scott, who was also from Roberton. Probably the same Andrew had a son Walter baptised in Roberton in 1750. Andrew (18th C.) resident at Craik who married Bett Scott in Roberton Parish in 1772. Their children included: an unnamed daughter (b.1773); and Andrew (b.1774). In the 1774 baptismal record he is listed as ‘junior’, suggesting that his father was also Andrew. Andrew (18th C.) mason in Roberton Parish. He was living at Borthwick Mains in 1798. He married ‘Ketty’ (or perhaps ‘Betty’) Elliot in 1797 and their children included Andrew (b.1797), Isabella (b.1801) and Thomas (b.1804). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Esther White. Their children included Walter (b.1817) and Peter (b.1820). Barbara nee Bennet (18th C.) wife of Mark, who she married in 1714. Her father was Archibald Bennet of Chesters. She is recorded as owner of West Foderlee in 1788 (when she must have been quite old), valued at £78 9s. Charles (1783–1823) of Chisholme, illegitimate son of William, the Laird of Chisholme, who had purchased the estate after making his fortune in the West Indies. He was thus also a direct descendent of Walter, 1st Laird of Stirches. He was a writer with the East India Company and was left £20,000 by his father after his death in 1802. He was referred to in his father’s will as his ‘son or reputed son’. He was living at Queen Anne Street, Middlesex in 1801. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1814 and was one of the subscribers to the Subscription Rooms. He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He married Helena Anne Ellice, sister of the M.P. for Coventry (Edward Ellice), but they had no children. After his death the estate went to his sister’s son, William Scott, who changed his name to Chisholme. In 1825 his widow married Walter Burrell of West Grinstead Park. She was probably the ‘Mrs Chisholme of Chisholme’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Christina nee Anderson (d.1800) daughter of Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. She was also known as ‘Christian’. A story is told of her youth, when she played a trick on Lord Monboddo in Edinburgh, taking his wig with the use of a kitten lowered out a window on a ribbon! In 1768 she married Gilbert of Stirches. She was known for her beauty and referred to as ‘one of the three belles of Scotland’. In 1785 she and her husband came across the balloonist Vincent Lunardi near Alemoor, when they were riding from Tushielaw to Stirches. She rode for 3 miles or so in the balloon, descending at Redfordgreen, and afterwards Lunardi was entertained at Stirches. In 1799 she gave the formal presentation of a standard to the Hawick Military Association at a ceremony held on the Common Haugh. Christina Madeline (19th C.) one of the last of the Stirches family, elder daughter of John and sister of Col. John James. In 1869 she married Robert Pringle (1832–99), M.D., son of William and grandson of John, 7th of Whytbank (with David of Wilton Lodge being his uncle). Edmund (15th C.) youngest son of Robert of that Ilk and Marion Douglas of Drumlanrig. He founded the Chisholmes of Cromlix in Perthshire. This branch were hereditary bailies of the Lordship of Dunblane, producing 4 bishops and several knights, eventually terminating in an heiress who married General Drummond, Lord Madderty. Frederick Diener (1838–89) born in Wilton, he married Wilhelmina Stevenson. From his name he must have been related to the Diener family. George of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to Richard Rutherford being served heir to his grandfather in 1499. This is confusing, since Robert was probably Laird at that time. He could have been Robert’s son George, but he was youngest of 3 brothers and so would not have been described as ‘of that Ilk’. However, ‘Georgis Chesam of that ilk’ is also recorded as an evaluator of Whithope in 1500 and witness to a sasine for Scott of Branxholme the same year, so he seems to have been Laird of Chisholme, even if his relationship to his near contemporaries is unclear. George (d.1536) 12th of that Ilk, son of Robert, he succeeded on the death of his brother John. In 1526 he was among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran; other Chisholmes listed there were Gilbert, James and George. He was a close ally of Scott of Buccleuch, taking part in the Battle of Skirmish Field in 1526, when they failed to wrest the young James V from the control of the Earl of Angus. He was cited to appear before the High Court accused of treason and murder (of Ker of Cessford), but escaped punishment and had remission on the accession of James V. In 1531 he received a charter of ‘Chisholme, Chisholme Middon, Mouslie, Woodburn, Merryner’ (possibly Merry Naze) and other lands. ‘The brether of vmquhile the Laird of Chisholme’ is recorded in the 1564 contract between the Scotts and the Kerrs, which suggests that he was a half-brother of William Cranston of that Ilk. In 1517 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Langlands of that Ilk. He had 4 sons and 2 daughters: Walter, who succeeded; John, who became Comptroller of the Artillery; William, who was associated with Melrose Abbey; Alexander of Parkhill; Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Hassendean; and Mary, who died unmarried. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in the long list of Borders men who had remission in 1526 for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is listed separately from George of that Ilk. But it is unclear where he came from. George (d.c.1596) recorded as ‘hird’ to Sir Robert Ker. He was slain ‘in plain daylight’ by Tom Storie ‘in Killaime’, Tom Armstrong ‘Bolfoot and Jamie Armstrong ‘how neif’. Ker stated he ‘was his chief guide to Killam and Woller’ and was killed in England when returning home. George of Woodburn (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as being ‘of Wodburne’, which may have been the lands in the Borthwick valley. ‘Raff Hair in Wodburne’ was accused of stealing 17 sheep from him, but was acquitted. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He could have been related to James and George, who are listed shortly after him. Gilbert’ Gibbie’ (1748/9–1826) 20th of that Ilk and of Stirches, son of John and Margaret Scott of Synton. When his brother died in 1761 he returned from college, and on reaching majority moved to London, where he lived a fashionable (and extravagant) life. After his marriage he moved to Stirches. With his father’s permission he sold some of the estate to William, son of Dr. Chisholme of Selkirk. However, he retained Tushielaw (although this was perhaps only as tenant), and would often stay there. In 1785 he and his wife came across the hot-air balloon of Lunardi, when they were riding from Tushielaw to Stirches; Mrs. Chisholme rode in the balloon for a few miles and Mr. Chisholme entertained the balloonist at Stirches. In 1788 he was listed as ‘Younger of Stuckshaws’ under ‘Votes of Rutherford of Edgerston’ among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was taxed for having a male servant (a house servant and groom) in the period 1785–97, as well as for having a female servant in 1785 and 1786, 2 in 1787 and 1788 and 1 in 1789–94. In the years 1792–95 he was listed in the Carriage Tax Rolls and he is recorded in the 1786 and 1788–91 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 carriage horses. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he was owner of 2 farm horses and 3 carriage or saddle horses; he also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs in the same year. In 1791 he witnessed the baptism of one of Lord Napier’s children at Wilton Lodge. In 1798 he was the main force behind raising the Hawick Military Association (Volunteer Corps) and was its Captain Commandant; there is a portrait in miniature of him wearing the uniform of the corps. In 1799 his wife formally presented the corps with its Standard. About 1800 he was one of the local men contributing to the subscription for the war against France. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was a keen sportsman, keeping a pack of hounds with which he hunted locally for many years. He was said (by the minister of Ettrick) to be ‘a somewhat pompous gentleman’. He also had a reputation for living a little beyond his means. He was forced to sell Philip, Rouchhope and Broadlee, and in 1810 even parted with Stirches to the young Capt.
Michael Anderson, a close friend (and probably relation) of the family. Anderson died in 1814, leaving the estate back to Gilbert, along with lands at Galalaw, Sillerbithall, Nethercroft and Greenhall. In 1678 at Posso he married Christina, 2nd daughter of Michael Anderson of Tushilaw (and probably brother of the later Michael). She was described as ‘one of the three belles of Scotland’, and died in 1800, leaving no children. In 1802 he secondly married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of John Scott of Whitehaugh, and she was still living at Stirches House in 1841. They had 2 sons, John (who succeeded) and Gilbert (who died unmarried in 1820) and 2 daughters, Margaret Scott (who died unmarried in 1854) and Christian Anderson. There were portraits of both him and his wife in Stiches House. The Museum has the ceremonial hat he wore as commander of the local volunteers. Helen nee Turnbull (18th C.) daughter and only heiress of Mark Turnbull and Bessie Kerr. Her inheritance is described in the testament of her parents (who died in 1689), recorded in Peebles, with the information given up by her husband, Walter of Parkhill. She inherited West Fodderlee and part of Ruletownhead from her father. She was recorded as Helen Turnbull, married to ‘W.’ (for Walter) whose son Mark had a nuptial contract in 1714, in which he inherited some of her lands in Abbotrule Parish. She was recorded as ‘Mrs. Hellen Chisholm’ in 1748 when she paid the window tax at Newton in Bedrule Parish. Henrietta (d.1783) daughter of William of Broadlee. She first married Robert Mercer, commission clerk of Selkirkshire. In 1741 she secondly married Andrew Lang, who was a lawyer in Selkirk. They had a son John and 4 daughters. Her 2nd husband drowned in the Ettrick in 1753, leaving her to raise a young family. John became Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. James (16th/17th C.) second son of Walter, he was the progenitor of the Chisholmes of Heyershope in Peeblesshire. He was Master of the Horse to Buccleuch and one of the gentlemen in attendance to the King. He is probably the ‘James Chessam servant to Bucklewhe’ recorded in 1587 when Lord Hunsdon stated that he and the Laird of Mangerdon save Captain ‘Bellowsis’ from being killed in a fray, and instead had him taken prisoner. It is possible he is the James who witnessed a document for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in Edinburgh in 1591. He is easily confused with his distant cousin Sir James of Cromlix, Master of the King’s Household; in an English letter of 1593 it is stated that he was excommunicated by the Scots, but the Ambassadors of Denmark were arranging his travel to Spain, because the English refused, with Lord Cary thinking he should have been helped out because ‘he could have done better service for us then he wyll doe against us’.

James ‘Jamie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Hawick in 1611 when ‘Hob Scot’, Bailie of Hawick, served as cautioner for him in Jedburgh. Perhaps the same James was owner of 2½ acres of ‘Jedburghside and Hawickgate’ (in Jedburgh), which later belonged to Thomas Waugh. James of Parkhill (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Parkhill. He is listed along with his father in 1633 when they owed more than £300 to the Earl of Buccleuch. He is recorded in a list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley in 1650, where it appears his wife was Margaret Scott, their son was Walter and there were other Chisholmes among the total of 16 living on the lands of Parkhill. In 1663 he is recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Hawick Parish, paying £200 for lands there (presumably Parkhill). He is also recorded in a list of major residents of Hassendean Parish in 1666 along with Andrew of Parkhill, who may have been his son or brother. His wife was Margaret Scott, and they had a son Walter, who was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1646. He could be the James who leased part of the farm of Brauxholme Muir before 1671, and was renting the east end along with Andrew in 1672 and 1677. He could be the James ‘laird’ who in 1677 was fined by the Hawick Bailies for moving the march-stones between his lands and those of Patrick Cunningham; however, later that year he complained to the Privy Council about the ‘oppression’ committed on him by the Bailies. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel Liddell and their children, baptised in Hawick, included Helen (b.1670), William (b.1673), Jane (b.1674), William (again, b.1677), Robert (b.1678) and James (b.1680). James (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1666 when he was involved in a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk with William Turnbull. He was sleeping in the church, when Turnbull pulled on his bonnet, causing him to fall out of his seat and grip at Turnbull’s leg, to which Turnbull reacted by striking his fingers with his staff, whereupon he drew a knife and cut Turnbull’s leg (church attendance was more exciting in those days!). He was found guilty and Walter of Stirches was his cautioner. He may have been the same as the later merchant, who was possibly a son of Walter of Stirches. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Aitkin and their children included: John (b.1684); William (b.1686); and Agnes (b.1688), who may have married Robert Mein in 1716. The witnesses in 1688 were Bailie James Scott and Walter Purdom. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1703. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for David Scott in Merrylaw in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, as stated in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1704, when his daughter Jean married George McFarlane. He was probably a son of Chisholme of Stirches, possibly Walter the 16th Laird and may have been the James who married Isobel Liddell in 1674. It is possible he was the James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may also be the ‘James Chisholm, laird’ listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Betty was baptised in 1745. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Young and their children included William (b.1686); and Agnes (b.1688), who may have married Robert Mein in 1716. The witnesses in 1688 were Bailie James Scott and Walter Purdom. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1703. Chisholme Castle. He was succeeded by his son, Alexander of Roxburgh and Paxton. John (d.1436) eldest son of Sir Robert, he may have been the first Chisholm to drop the ‘de’. He was referred to as ‘de le Ard’ or of the Aird, and is mentioned several times during his father’s lifetime. After his father’s death (probably in the 1390s) he succeeded to the family lands in the Borders as well as the Highlands. He married Catherine, daughter of Bisset of that Ilk, through whom he obtained several additional Highland estates (particularly in the Aird). In 1413 it appears he resigned the Chisholme estate to his brother Robert. His only child was Morella (or Muriel), who married Alexander Sutherland, Baron of Duffus; she succeeded to the lands of Quarrelwood, Clunie and Clova in Moray, which had been acquired by her great-grandfather. Further ‘pleadings’ of 1512 describe the descendants who still had a right to claim the lands of Chisholme in Teviotdale, as well as Paxton and others. The rest of his lands were inherited by his brother Alexander, who established the Strathglass family line, which continued as Highland chiefs. John (15th C.) 9th of that Ilk, eldest son of Robert and Marion Douglas. His brothers were Robert, William and Edmund. He supported the Royal cause during the rebellion and in return received lands at ‘Murynies’ (probably Merry Naze) in 1458. He was one of the witnesses for a charter of William, Lord Borthwick in 1461. In 1442 he married Janet, daughter of Erskine of Reidholm. He was succeeded by Robert and also had several other children. John (15th/16th C.) notary public on the 1505 charter where Robert Scott of Stiches was granted the lands of Boonraw by the superior of the lands, Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. It was witnessed in Edinburgh, but it is unclear which church he might have belonged to. He may be the same ‘Master John’, ‘writer of household books’ who is recorded in association with the Exchequer Rolls in at least 1508–13. John (d.c.1520) second son of Robert, he went to Flodden along with his brother Robert under their overlord Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. His brother was killed there, but he managed to return with the family pennon, the lance-head of which remained in the family until at least the early 20th century. The family arms were later supported by two knights in armour, representing these brothers. He succeeded to the estate in 1517, but died a few years later in a Border fray. He would have been 11th of that Ilk (although he is skipped in some histories). Unmarried, he was succeeded by his younger brother George. John (d.c.1615) son of George of that Ilk. He resided at Woodend of Wemyss. He served as a political agent for Queen Mary at the French Court. His name occurs frequently in the diary of John Leslie, Bishop of Ross. He was Director General of Artillery and Collector of Salt Duties. He was also referred to as Controller of the King’s Ordnance. He was ‘comptroller of the said artaiyerie’ in 1565. On the accession of James VI he was reappointed as Comptroller of the Artillery. Also in 1567 he was granted the lands of Kingswerk and others. On returning from France in 1571 he was captured by the reformers in Leith and underwent torture, but escaped to Edinburgh Castle. In 1573 he was Controller of the Ordnance in Leith. He had his estate restored to him by Act of Parliament in 1592. His eldest son and heir was James. John (17th C.) recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Rev. John (c.1643–1701) apparently deposed minister of Lilliesleaf who was brought in to replace an ousted Covenanting preacher. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1663, was licensed in 1667 and became minister at Lilliesleaf in 1674, replacing William Wilkie who refused to conform to Episcopacy. He in turn was cited by the Privy Council in 1681 for dissuading the magistrates of Selkirk (or perhaps Peebles) from taking the Test. He was deprived in 1689 for not ‘praying for William and Mary’ (i.e. remaining an episcopalian) and for not observing the thanksgiving. His children included Robert: schoolmaster in Selkirk; Eupham, who married James Pringle of Edinburgh; Esther, who married Francis Toward of Edinburgh and also Thomas Wilkie of Edinburgh, who may have been related to the previous Lilliesleaf minister; and William (b.1682). He is recorded as witness to a Gledstains birth in Hawick in 1674. Whether he was related to the local Chisholmes is unknown. He died in Edinburgh. It is possible that he was the ‘Mr. Chisholme’ who served as Hawick Parish Schoolmaster for a short period the late 1660s, before John Purdom took over in 1669. John (d.c.1679) recorded at Kirkstyle in Ewes when his will is listed in 1679. John (17th/18th C.) first regular preacher at Teviothead ‘Chapel-of-ease’, starting in about 1720. In May of that year he was ‘preacher at ye meeting house in Ridge’ when he witnessed a baptism for Francis Scott from Harwood. He also witnessed a baptism for John Nichol in Commonbrae later in 1720 and was ‘preacher at Carlangridge Chappel’ when he is recorded filling in for the absent minister in Hawick. Whether he lasted as long as the arrival of John Laurie in 1738 is unknown, as is his subsequent history. John (1682-1755) 18th of Stirches and that Ilk, son of William. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698 as ‘of Stirkshaws, younger’ along with his father William. In 1713 he purchased his cousin’s share of the lands of Broadlee, Philhope and Rouchhope; he resided at Broadlee, while his mother continued to live at Stirches. In 1719 he rented the farm of Eilrig for 7 years. In 1728 he paid for the bells of St. Mary’s to be rung on the death of his wife (Mary, Broadlee being in Hawick Parish). In 1734 he witnessed the marriage of John Oliver of Dinlineyre (his nephew) and Violet Douglas. In 1735 he appears to have been factor for the spinning school set up in Hawick to promote textile manufacturing. Not long after his mother died in 1736 he moved to Stirches. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. It is said that a group of Highlanders from the Jacobite army visited Stirches in 1745, and although he was a sympathetic and treated them well they returned the favour by driving off his cattle! In 1747 he witnessed a baptism for the Wilton Minister, James Simpson. He paid the window tax at Stirches in 1748. He married Mary (or Marion), daughter of John Oliver of Dinlineyre in 1707; his sister Mary married William Oliver of Dinlineyre, and hence his wife Mary was sister-in-law twice to his sister Mary! His children included: Agnes (b.1708); John (b.1712), who succeeded; Robert (b.1715); James (b.1717), baptised in Robertson; and Adam (b.1720), baptised in Robertson. The witnesses in Wilton in 1708 were the Lairds of Whitehaugh (William Scott), Galalaw (Adam Scott) and Hartwoodmyres (William Ogilvie). John ‘Laird’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is ‘Young Laird’ in 1710 and ‘called Laird’ in 1712. It appears that he is not the same as the Laird of Stirches, but a Hawick resident with the nickname ‘Laird’. He married Margaret Armstrong and their children included: James (b.1710); John (b.1712); Robert (b.1715); John (again, b.1720); and Elizabeth (b.1721). The witnesses in 1712 were Bailies George Martin and Robert Hardie. John (1712-94) of Stirches, 19th of that Ilk and 4th of Stirches, son of John. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1750 while still ‘junior of Stirches’. He succeeded his father in 1755. In 1759 he witnessed a baptism for John Miller in Wilton. He was also a local Justice of the Peace around the 1760s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761, as well as for Selkirkshire (incorrectly as ‘of Kirkshaws’). He was one of those involved in the action against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch over the division of Hassendean Common in 1762. He was taxed for having 2 male servants in 1778 and 1 in 1779. He was also recorded at Stirches on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785 and 1787 (but Gilbert was recorded there in 1788). He was recorded as owner of Stirches in the 1788 county valuation, valued at £214 10s. He is probably the Mr. Chisholme from ‘Sterchos’ who subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. In 1736 he married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Scott of Synton and Margaret Elliot; she died in 1792. His sons were: John (b.1737), who served in India and predeceased him; Alexander (b.1741), who died young; Gilbert (b.1743), who succeeded; and William (b.1749), who also served in the army. He was interred beside his wife in the family vault at Wilton. John (1737-1761) eldest son of John, 19th of that Ilk. He was a young officer, being Captain in the 79th Regiment and A.D.C. to Gen. Draper in India. He distinguished himself in the defence of Madras in 1759, but died of fever at Arcot 2 years later at age 24. Capt. John Scott (1810-1868) of Stirches, son of Gilbert and Elizabeth Scott of Whitehaugh. He was born at Sciennes House, Edinburgh. He was Captain of the 4th Roxburgh, Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (Volunteers), having the men regularly train at Stirches. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1852 he succeeded to the estate of his maternal uncle James Scott of Whitehaugh, with the condition of adding the name ‘Scott’ to his own. These lands included Whitehaugh, Whitehaugh Moor and Mains, Mervinslaw, Leeheads, Heip, Green-sidehall, Broomiebrae and Scawmill. He gave a piece of ground at Parkhillhaugh as the site for the Snoot Kirk in the 1840s. A Conservative in politics, he was generally popular with even the Liberals in Hawick. He tried to establish a pottery works at Stirches, during a time of depression in the tweed industry, turning it into a brick and tile works when the quality of clay was found to be inferior. He served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace, Tax Commissioner and member of the Police Board for Roxburghshire. He was also Chairman of the Carlisle, Langholm and Hawick Railway Company, arguing against the Newcastle tone line of the North British. In 1840 he married Margaret, eldest daughter and co-heir of Robert Walker of Mumrills in Stirlingshire. They had one son, John James (who succeeded), and two daughters, Christina Madeline (who married Robert Pringle) and Elizabeth Scott. His wife lived until the late 1890s, and one of her last acts was to return the standard of the Hawick Military Association to Hawick. His internment at Wilton Cemetery was one of the first military funerals seen in Hawick. He wrote some notes on his family genealogy, particularly squashing the idea that all Chisholmes were derived from the Highland line. There is a portrait of him in his Volunteer Captain’s uniform. Col. John James Scott ‘Jabber’ (1851–1899) only son of John Scott and last of the local line of Chisholmes, 21st (or perhaps 22nd) of that Ilk and 7th of Stirches. He inherited the lands of Stirches and Whitehaugh, as well as others. His name is written into the Land Tax Rolls in the mid-19th century, as owner of these lands, as well as ‘Nethercroft’ (perhaps Netherhall) and parts of Silverbuthall. He was born in Hawick, but educated elsewhere, and entered the army in 1872. He was recorded as owner of part of Easter Heap and Nethercroft in about 1874. He served in the 9th Queen’s Royal Lancers, seeing much foreign service including in Afghanistan, where he was decorated. He was transferred to the 5th Royal Irish Lancers in 1884 and for 2 years was Military Secretary to the Governor of Madras. He was wounded in battle on at least 2 occasions. He retired from the army in 1899, but raised a regiment of Imperial Light Horse and travelled to South Africa as their Colonel to take part in the Boer War. He was killed in a charge at Elangslaagte during the first few weeks of the War, leading the race for the summit, waving a red silk scarf tied to a walking-stick. Wounded in the leg and lung, his last words were ‘My fellows are doing well’ (before a bullet pierced his brain), this apparently reversing the tide of battle. A brass memorial plaque is in Wilton Church, and a pencil portrait by Melton Prior hangs in the Town Hall. The Museum also has the scarf that was found beside his body and was gifted to the Town by his brother officers (he is also referred to as ‘Scott-Chisholm’). Mark (17th/18th C.) eldest son of W. (either Walter or William) and Helen Turnbull. In 1714 he married Barbara (‘Barbry’) daughter of Archibald Bennet of Chesters. That year he inherited the lands of West Fodderlee and part of Rueltownhead, which had been his mother’s. He had 3 daughters: Barbara, who married George Minto, farmer at Langside and later at Rueltownhead, and she was mother of Lt.-Col. William Minto; Helen, who married Thomas White, a Jedburgh merchant; and Dorothea, who married Walter Turnbull of Firth. He is probably the ‘Mr. Chisholme, Parkhill’ who paid tax for 12 windows in Abbotrule Parish in 1753 (presumably for either Rueltownhead or West Fodderlee). He may also be the Mark of Parkhill who was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 (and must have been quite old by then). Mary (17th C.) along with Margaret Turnbull she was accused of witchcraft in Lilliesleaf in 1650. It was reported that they went to Selkirk for trial by the ministers and elders ‘quhairupon markis of Satan was found upon them both’. Their fate is not recorded. Mary of Stirches (b.1684) daughter of William the 17th of that Ilk. In 1708 she married William Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1698. Note that her brother John married Mary, sister of her husband (who was thus her sister-in-law twice!). Her son was John and her daughter Mary married John Scott of Synton. Michael (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1567 he had one third of the fruits of Paisley Abbey. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571. In 1572/3 he was ‘Maister Michaell Cheisholme burges of Edinburg’ when he was surety for Walter of that Ilk. He thus seems likely to have been closely related to Walter. He is recorded in 1573 as a Bailie of Edinburgh. Mr. ?? (17th C.) Hawick schoolmaster from some period after 1665 until 1669. He probably only served temporarily between the formal appointments of Walter Martin and John Purdom. His first name is not recorded, but the timing is right for this to have been John, who was licensed to preach in 1667 and became minister of Lilliesleaf in 1674. Richard (13th C.) called ‘de Chesholme’ (or variant spellings), son of John, he is the second known Chisholme of that Ilk. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, swearing fealty to Edward I of England. His seal on the Rolls gives his name as ‘S’RICARDI DE CHEISELM’ and shows a bour’s head. His sons were: Sir John, who succeeded; and Alexander, recorded forfeiting lands at the same time as his brother Sir John, and also Adam of Paxton. Sir Robert (d.c.1366) son of Alexander, he was 5th of that Ilk. He fought at the battle of Neville’s Cross in 1346 and was taken prisoner there. He witnessed a charter for Thomas, Count of Angus in about 1361. He married Anna, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Robert Lauder of Quarrelwood in Morayshire who was Governor of Castle Urquhart, and through whom he gained Highland estates. A dispute with the church regarding the payment of multures for his lands in Quarrelwood was not resolved until 1390. His known children are: Sir Robert, who succeeded; and William, who became Treasurer of Moray. His seal bore a horizontal stripe between 3 boars heads. Sir Robert (d.c.1390) son of Sir Robert, he was 6th of that Ilk, and was also referred to as ‘Lord of Chesholme’. He was named after his maternal grandfather, Sir Robert Lauder of Quarrelwood, whose lands in Inverness, Nairn and Moray he inherited in 1366. He was knighted by David II in 1357 and made Constable of Urquhart Castle and Sheriff of Inverness-shire in about 1359. In 1362 he granted lands to the Church of Inverness for the benefit of the poor. He was still Keeper of Urquhart Castle in 1364 and 1365. He is described as Justiciar of the Regality of Moray in a document of 1376 and he is recorded on a document relating to the lands of Badenoch in 1380. He resigned some lands in the Barony of Urquhart in 1382 and further lands in Inverness-shire in 1386. He was Sir Robert of ‘Cheshelme’ when he witnessed a charter in Forfarshire about 1390, and appended his seal to a document of 1393 relating to the lands of Aldrochty. He married Margaret, daughter of Haliburton of that Ilk (possibly Sir Walter) in Berwickshire. Their known children are: John, who succeeded, but died without male issue; Alexander, who succeeded to the northern titles and is the progenitor of the Chisholmes of Strathglass; Robert, who succeeded to the Roxburghshire lands and continued the Border line; and Janet (or Joneta), who married Hugh Rose of Kilravock in 1364, the marriage contract proving that Sir Robert was at that time head of both the northern and southern branches of the family. Robert (d.1438) son of Sir Robert and younger brother of John. He was given the Chisholme estate by his brother in 1413, including lands of ‘Chisholm, Chisholm Mill, Chisholm Meadow, Muselie and Parkhill’. A breve from the Chancery of James I in 1436 directs the Sheriff of Teviotdale ‘To serve Robert de Chesholme, brother of John of Chesholme, in all lands, etc., in which the latter died vest’. It is somewhat unclear whether he was older or younger than his brother Alexander (who inherited much of the lands in Inverness-shire). There is also some uncertainty about how the family estates were split between the brothers (and Morella, the only child of the oldest brother, John) and which branch of the family has claim to seniority. In 1442 he was one of the men who gave a decree on a document relating to the Stirling family. He married Marion, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig, Baron of Hawick. He had 4 sons: John, who succeeded; Robert, the 2nd son, whose descendants have not been traced; William, the 3rd, Vicar of Pettinain; and the youngest, Edmund, who founded the Cromlix (Perthshire) branch of the family. Robert of that Ilk (15th C.) witness in 1456 to a document relating to Whitchesters made at Branxholme for the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was clearly recorded as ‘Roberto de Chesholm de eodem’. However, this disagrees with published genealogies, which suggest that John (son of Robert) was Laird at that time. It is possible he is the same as the earlier Robert if the year of his death is in error. Robert (d.1517) 10th of that Ilk, son of John. He married Jane (or Janet), said to be a daughter of Elliot of Larriston. They had 3 sons and 1 daughter: Robert, who died at Flodden; John, who succeeded, but died unmarried; George, who succeeded his brother; and Mary, who possibly married William Scott of Harden and was mother of ‘Auld Wat’. Robert (d.1513) eldest son of Robert. He went to Flodden under Douglas of Drumlanrig and was killed there, while his brother John returned with the family pennon. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Esther Scott and their children included: Francis (b.1634); Helen (b.1637); and Andrew (b.1640). He may be the same Robert whose lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £4 in 1643. Robert (1653–c.87) second son of Walter of Stirches and brother of William. He was a lawyer who became Sheriff Clerk of Selkirkshire and the first of the Chisholmes of Selkirk. It was his great-great-grandson who re-purchased the Chisholme estate in 1784. In 1684, jointly with his brother William, he purchased Philhope, Rouchhope and Broadlee. He was Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1686, and in Selkirkshire may have been referred to as ‘Chisholme of Philhope’. He had 2 sons, Walter and William, both of whom succeeded. Robert (17th C.) son of William, portioner of Parkhill. In 1649 he was served heir to his father’s lands of East Parkhill. He was proprietor of Chisholme Mill in the list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley in 1650. He may have been married to Esther Scott and had children William and Jean. William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1643. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Philhope, among those ‘not Listed yet payd yr’. He may have been a descendant of the Lairds of

Chisholme

Stirches who purchased Phillhope in the 1680s. Robert (17th/18th C.) Rector of Hawick Grammar School 1718–21. He had previously been schoolmaster at Selkirk (where he is recorded as witness to a baptism in 1711, for example). He also served as a Bailie in the 1720s. He demitted his position in 1721, when he is described as ‘master and director of the school of Hawick’. James Anderson took over from him. Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1716 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Patrick Richardson. Their children included: Bessie (b.1717); Bessie (again, b.1721); Anne (b.1723); Mary (b.1725); Elisabeth (b.1726); Ann (again, b.1728); and an unnamed child (b.1730). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by cooper John Aitkin and weaver William Miller. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1768, along with weaver Francis Cairns, he witnessed a baptism for another weaver, John Smith. He could be the Robert who married Agnes Carr in Hawick in 1752. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Mains in 1765 and Howcleuch in 1767. He married Isobel Coltart in Roberton in 1764. His children included Isobel (b.1765) and Andrew (b.1767). Robert (d.bef. 1791) described as ‘Eggman’ in Hawick in 1791 when his son Robert died. Presumably he was a supplier of eggs (or else this was a nickname). He could be the carrier who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Tudhope in 1765. Robert Scott (19th C.) listed as owner of Chisholme house, among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was also recorded at Chisholme among the Roxburghshire signatories to an act of parliament in 1844. He was probably the ‘R.Chisholme, Esq. of Chisholme’ listed as a landowner in Roberton Parish in 1841. He must have been from the branch of the family who were related to Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He may have been son of William Scott Chisholme and perhaps father of the later man of the same name. The Robert Scott Chisholme (with the usual local spelling), Lieutenant of the Royal Navy, recorded from the 1850s to 70s was also surely related. Thomas (14th C.) son of Alexander and grandson of Sir Robert of that Ilk. He is recorded as ‘de Chesholme’ in several documents in the late 1300s. In the period 1391–95 he received payments for the custody and maintenance of Urquhart Castle. In 1389 he is recorded on a document relating to the ‘Wolf of Badde-noch’ and his wife Euphemia, Countess of Ross. He also appears as witness along with William Treasurer of Moray, who must have been a near male relative. He was Thomas ‘de Chesholme’, son and heir of Margaret ‘de le Ard of Ercles’, who had an indenture with William of Fenton for lands in several northern counties, including Inverness-shire. He could be the same Thomas who was a customs officer in Inverness in at least the period 1410–18. He married Margaret, daughter of Lauchlan Mackintosh. His children were: Alexander, Lord of Kinrossy, Strathglass and the Aird; and Wiland of Comar, who succeeded and whose son Wiland was the first to be known as ‘The Chisholm’. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as a Bailie of Edinburgh in 1498/9. His name is recorded as ‘Thomam Schesolme’. It is unclear how he might have been related to the local Chisholmes. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as tenant of the lands of ‘Quhithchil Bra, alias Cathmurlee’ in Ettrick. These lands were associated with Newark Castle. He was probably related to other Chisholmes of Selkirk. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Girnwood in 1710 and 1716. He married Isabel Murray in 1708 and their children included: Walter (b.1710); John (b.1712); Janet (b.1714); James (b.1716); and Thomas (b.1719). Dr. Thomas (d.1773) only son of William, who was 2nd son of Robert, Sheriff-Clerk for Selkirkshire. He was hence great-grandson of Walter of Stirches. He became a surgeon in Sekirk and was also Dean of Guild there. In 1731 he married Agnes Ballantyne. Their children were: Charles, who died at St. Helena; William, who made his fortune in the West Indies; James of Stonedge, who also spent time in Jamaica; Margaret, who died in infancy; Ann, who died aged 22; and Agnes (or Margaret), who married Rev. William Scott, minister of Innerleithen, who was a son of Robert Scott of Coldhouse. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter (d.1588) 13th of that Ilk, referred to as ‘Baron of Chisholme’. He succeeded his father George in 1536 and was infested in 1538. He may also have been half-brother of William Cranston. However, he was part of the band of Scotts and others who were bound over not to harm Sir Peter Cranston in 1557 after trying to kill him near St. Mary’s; the nature of the feud with the Cranstons is unclear (but it is romanticised in Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’). In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1558 he was ‘allegeit bailie deput’ of Melrose Abbey in a case involving a dispute in of Smailholm. In 1633 he was listed as owing to occupiers of the Abbey’s mills and yards; he said that ‘gyf ony man or officer execute ony sicyk precept at the said prior and brether command he suld stuw his luggis’. He was a strong supporter of Queen Mary, commanding some Border cavalry who assisted at Langside after her escape from Lochleven Castle in 1568. In 1568/9 he was one of the supporters of Walter Scott of Branxholme listed on the contract to try to end the feud between Scotts and Kerrs, with the Kerrs of Hirsel and Corbet having to appear at Melrose Kirk to apologise. He was warded in 1571 according to the records of the Privy Council. He shared in several exploits with Scott of Buccleuch and in 1571 accompanied the young Buccleuch on the raid on Stirling in which his horse was shot but he escaped. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. There are also frequent complaints against him by the English wardens. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and Regent, and gave assurance that he would not support Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst; his surety was Michael, Burgess of Edinburgh, who must surely have been related. Also in 1573 he signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summon to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. Also in 1581 he witnessed a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. In 1587 he was a guarantor for bills submitted by Englishmen regarding raids by Archibald, son of Gavin Elliot of Falnash, and others. He is probably ‘L. of Chesholme of that ilk’ listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 (but put together earlier) compilation of Border lairds. the He is listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. He married Ann, daughter of William Scott of Chapelhill and their children were: Walter, who succeeded; James of Hayerhope in Peeblesshire; and an unnamed daughter. Walter (d.1618) 14th of that Ilk, son of Walter. He is probably the Laird of Chisholme accused of being on a raid on Newcastle and Gilsland in 1588, along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the young Laird of Whithaugh, when they are said to have run into English watchmen and killed 4 of them. He was infested in his father’s estate in 1589. He would have been the Laird listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. He is named in 1590/1 in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives; his cautioners were Robert Scott of Haining and Walter Cairncross of Lugate (near Stow). He is included in a list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands in 1593. His tenants Thomas Tait (‘in Bowlan’) and others instigated letters of ‘horning’ against some Hoppringles in 1597 for stealing sheep. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. He was Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose in the early years of the 17th century, holding the Bailie Courts. In 1607 he was referred to as the appointee of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who was ‘Baillie Principal’. He was also said to be ‘alwayis secund and thrid of consanguine discendand from the said hous of Bukcleugh’. He married Margaret, daughter of John Graham of Newark. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; and James. Walter (d.1652) 15th of that Ilk, son of Walter. He was the last direct owner of the Chisholme estate. Being a minor at the death of his father, the estate was under the control of his feudal superior, Douglas of Drumlanrig, who had the right to arrange his marriage. On Walter refusing to marry a daughter of Robert Dalyell of Elliock (later the Earl of Carnwath) the wardship passed to her brother William Dalyell. Walter married Margaret Stirling, was unable or unwilling to settle the required fine and the estate passed to Dalyell in 1624. He became a soldier of fortune, accepting a commission in a regiment commanded by the Marquess of Hamilton about 1631. He went to Germany, fighting under Gustavus Adolphus, then fought for Sweden at Lutzen, before serving about 10 years in the army in Holland, returning only in 1642. He was a Royalist supporter in the civil war, joining Montrose with a body of Border cavalry, being wounded at Naseby and returning to Scotland when Charles surrendered. He again served in the King’s army in 1648 and was taken prisoner at the battle of Preston. After a long imprisonment at Lancaster Castle he was banished overseas and died several years later at Breda in the Netherlands. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; and William, who settled in the North of England. Walter of Parkhill (17th C.) listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. In 1630 he was the ‘Walter Schisholme in Parkhill’ who was assignee of Mary Borthwick, widow of Alexander Pringle of Smailholm. In 1633 he was listed as owing more than £300 to the Earl of Buccleuch; his eldest son James was also listed. He was also listed in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, with his lands valued at £200. He is probably the same Walter of Wester Parkhill who was a local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He was presumably descended from Alexander of Parkhill. Walter (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. A headstone for his children Elizabeth (d.1652) and Walter (d.1620) is one of the earliest legible in Bedrule kirkyard. It is unclear how he was related to other Chisholmes. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Lidderdale, and their children baptised in Hawick included William (b.1647). Walter (d.1681) 16th of that Ilk, eldest son of Walter (the last family owner of the Chisholme estate), he was the first of Stirkshaws. He was a successful merchant in Hawick, becoming a member of the council when little over 20 years old. He signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. In 1646 he was ordained to pay £5 for his fine, in contempt of the Bailies’ ordinance to go and convey James Elliot, sodger, to Jedburn to his cullors’. He was thus presumably not a supporter of the Covenantant army. Probably the same Walter was elected to the Council in 1648. He also appears to have acted as Procurator Fiscal for Hawick in the 1640s. He was a Bailie in the 1650s and in 1660 he was Bailie when he promised that he would not disobey the Burgh’s rules regarding ‘the question of neighbourhood for thee-ing’ between him and James Thorbrand (presumably owner of neighbouring land). Also in 1660 he is referred to as ‘Laird of Stirkshaws’ in the Town Book when the Council unanimously ordered him to resign as a Bailie; the precise reason for this unusual occurrence is not explained. He was described as a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Earl of Queensberry in 1672. He built Stirkshaws House from the much cruder tower that existed previously. In 1650 he married Margaret, only daughter of Maj. James Balderstone, through whom he gained a considerable fortune (however, this may be confusion with his son William, who married Mary Brotherstone). This enabled him to purchase Sirches (or ‘Stirkshaws’) from Thomas Scott of Whitslade about 1660. In 1662 he was appointed by the Council to ‘stent the town in £100 for discussing the suspension against the town of Jedburgh’. His children included: William, the eldest son, who succeeded; Robert (b.1653), who founded the Selkirk branch of the family; and possibly James, merchant in Hawick. His wife may be the ‘widow Chisholme’ who paid tax for 2 hearths on the east side of Hawick in 1694. Walter of Parkhill (17th C.) perhaps son of Andrew of Parkhill. He married Helen Turnbull, the heiress of Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. In 1690 he gave information for the testament describing the assets of his wife’s parents when they died the previous year. He was probably the Walter, married to Helen Turnbull, whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Helen (b.1684) and Helen (again, b.1686). He and his wife’s son Mark inherited some of the same Abbotrule lands through a marriage contract in 1714. He could be the Walter who leased the east end of Braxholme Muir along with Andrew (perhaps his father) in 1691, 1696 and 1697. Walter (17th C.) resident at Abbotrule Townhead according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Robert (Sheriff Clerk for Selkirkshire). He was served heir to his father in 1688, including the lands of Phillhope, Rouchhope and Broadlee. However, he died unmarried and they passed to his brother William. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hoscoate in at least the period 1703–1710 and at Chisholme Mill in 1713. His children, baptised in Roberton, probably included: Mary (b.1703); Margaret (b.1703); Robert (b.1704); an unnamed daughter (b.1705); Andrew (b.1710); Thomas (b.1710); and Margaret (again, b.1713). Walter (18th C.) leased the east end of Braxholme Muir along with William in 1735. He may have been brother of William of Parkhill. It is also possible he is the same as the Walter who leased Braxholme Muir 4 decades earlier. Walter (18th C.) listed as gardener at Burnhead in 1785, and ‘Ridingman’ in 1786, when he was working for William Scott. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as miller, along with David Fiddes, at Roughheugh Mill, in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the Walter whose mother died in 1795. William (14th C.) younger son of Sir John of that Ilk and brother of Sir Robert. He was a church official recorded several times in the 1360s to 1390s. In 1364 and 1365 he had permission to travel to England to study. He is mentioned in 1371 as Treasurer of Moray. In 1386 he was recorded as a monk receiving payment for the Abbot of Paisley. His name sometimes occurs along with Thomas ‘de Chesholm’, who was surely a close relative. He is last recorded as witness to a deed involving the Burgh of Elgin in 1399. William (15th C.) 3rd son of Robert and Marion Douglas of Drumlanrig. He trained for the church and became Vicar of ‘Pettin’ (probably Pettinain in Lanarkshire). William (15th/16th C.) leased a quarter of the eastern lands of ‘Warmwod’ in Ettrick Ward in 1479. Probably the same William was recorded in 1499 when he was granted the dues from lands in Ettrick Forest. He continued to receive payments from Crown lands in Ettrick Forest in 1502–07. Perhaps the same William had remission (along with Robert and John Davidson) for the murder of James Wilkinson at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493. William (16th/17th C.) 3rd son of George of that Ilk. He was trained as a cleric and associated with Melrose Abbey. It is said that a tower in the ruins was called ‘Chisholme’s Tower’ after him. William (17th C.) portioner of Parkhill near Chisholme. In 1649 his son Robert in Chisholme Mill was served heir to his lands of East Parkhill. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Robert was born in 1647. William (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (1652–1707) 17th of that Ilk and of Stiches, son of Walter (note that Tancred gets these early generations confused). He paid the land tax on £214 in Hassendean Parish in 1678. He is probably the William, son of Walter ‘of Strittshawes’ in a bond of 1682. In 1684, along with his brother Robert, he purchased Phillhope, Rouchhope and Broadlee. He trained as a lawyer, working for many years in Edinburgh and becoming a Burgess of that city in 1685. In 1690 he was one of the heritors (along with his son John) accused of instigating the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk. He was the Laird in 1694 when the tax was paid on 4 hearths for ‘Stirkshaws his house’. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, and was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. In 1704 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Selkirkshire, being referred to as ‘of Broadlilies’ and also ‘of Stirkshaws’ in his capacity as Laird of Phillhope. He married Mary, heiress of James Brotherton of Glencairn, at age 18, and she died in 1736, aged 83 (her father may have been the minister of Glencairn, in Dumfriesshire, who was deprived in 1662 and died before 1679); the bells were rung for ‘Lady Stirkshaw’s burial’ in 1734, which may have been her. His children were: John, who succeeded him; and Mary (b.1684), who married William Oliver of Dinalabyre. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1702 he married Lillias Littlejohn. William of Broadlee (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Robert, and grandson of Walter of Stiches. He inherited part of the lands of Phillhope, Rouchhope and Broadlee from his brother Walter. In 1713 he sold his interest in the Borthwick lands to John of Stiches, his cousin. In 1702 in Selkirk he married Ann, sister of John Rutherford of Knowesouth (and sister-in-law of Isabella Scott of Raeburn) and daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. Their surviving children were: Thomas, who was a surgeon in Selkirk; and Henrietta (or ‘Heny’), who in 1732 married Robert Mercer, commission clerk of Selkirkshire and secondly, in 1741, married Andrew Lang, lawyer of Selkirk. Other children included: Grissel (b.1703), baptised in Roberton Parish; Robert (b.1715), baptised in Selkirk; and Christian (b.1716) also baptised in Selkirk. Other children, baptised in Roberton, who could be his include: Isobel (b.1704); Helen (b.1705); Gideon (b.1707); Andrew (again, b.1707); Andrew (b.1711); and Isobel (b.1712). William (17th/18th C.) recorded as a ‘student’ in 1680 when he and another student witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish. It seems possible that he was connected with the Parish Kirk in some way. William of Parkhill (17th/18th C.) owner of half of Fodderlee in 1707. This probably included the lands of West Fodderlee and Ruletownhead, valued together at £175. He is probably the same as William of ‘Easterparkhill’ recorded in the early 1700s in a summons by Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Coldhouse in 1709. He is described as an ‘indweller’ in Canongate Parish in Edinburgh when he married Janet McElhan on 1721. He is also probably the ‘W. Chisholm’ recorded in a post-nuptial contract with Helen Turnbull in 1714 when his wife’s lands of West Fodderlee and part of Ruletownhead were inherited by their son Mark (who married Barbara, daughter of Archibald Bennet of Chesters). There is also a Walter of Wester Parkhill recorded becoming heir in 1682; this may have been his father. He is probably the William who leased the east end of Branxholme Muir along with Walter in 1735. There may be more than one William compounded here, but earlier Williams in Parkhill were probably his ancestors. It is possible that his wife was the Helen recorded paying the window tax at Newton in Bedrule Parish in 1748. William of Chisholme (1737–1802) 2nd son of Thomas, surgeon in Selkirk, and descendant of Walter of Stiches. He was educated in medicine and made his fortune in the West Indies, where he was owner of Thomas’s River, North Hall, Health
Chisholmebraes

Crawl and Breadland Pen in Clarendon, Jamaica. He also had a part share in Trout Hall, Green River, Troys and Chisholm’s Mamme Gully pen in Jamaica, with his brother James being the main owner. At this time these plantations would have been worked using slaves from Africa. He returned to Scotland in around 1780, perhaps in 1783. He then purchased the old family lands of Chisholme from Sir James Stewart of Coltness. By 1788 he also owned the adjacent lands of Easter Parkhill and Chisholme Mill. He paid the land tax for Philhope in Roberton Parish in 1785.

In the 1788 draft valuation for the county of Roxburghshire, he is recorded as owner of Philhope, Broadlee, Chisholme, Woodburn, Easter Parkhill and Chisholme Mill, with a combined value of £782 13s 4d. He is described as rich and living in London in a document of 1788, stating that he was a voter in Selkirkshire and about to be added as a voter in Roxburghshire, being ‘obliged to the Duke of Buccleugh for his vote in Roxburghshire’; the description adds that he ‘says he is head of his clan’. He was recorded as ‘William Chisholm of Chisholm Esqr.’ in 1797, when taxed for having a footman. He is recorded as owner of Chisholme on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse; he also paid the dog tax at Chisholme in the same year. In 1802 he paid the land tax at Philhope. He was still listed on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 as owner of Chisholme, Woodburn, Chisholme Mill, Easter Parkhill and Broadlee. He died at Carlisle on a trip to London, where he had a house at Queen Anne Street. He is said to have claimed himself as the head of the Chisholme Clan, although that honour formally lay with ‘The Chisholme of the North’. He never married, but had an illegitimate son, Charles, who succeeded to the estate, and to whom he left £20,000. He also left £20 each to the poor of the Parishes of Selkirk and Roberton, with his plantations going to his brother James. William (1749–1823) 4th son of John, 19th of that Ilk and Stiches. He was an ensign in the 51st Regiment, serving under his relative Lord Heathfield. He was present at the capture of Minorca and served in the American War. He retired as Captain. He married Maria, only daughter of Capt. Charles Eddington. He died at Sheffield. William (1785–1834) of Chisholme House, descended from the Selkirk Chisholmes and Walter, 1st laird of Stirches, through his mother Agnes (not Margaret as suggested in some sources), youngest daughter of Thomas. There are some contradictory accounts, perhaps confusing him with his uncles William and James. His father was Rev. William Scott, minister of Innerleithen, who was a son of Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He changed his surname when he inherited (or perhaps purchased) Chisholme House after the death of his cousin Charles in 1823. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert Scott Chisholme, who is recorded as owner of Chisholme in 1837 and in the 1840s. William Scott (19th C.) probably the son of Robert Scott Chisholme, and perhaps grandson of the previous William Scott Chisholme. He was descended from Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He was recorded as owner of Chisholme in a parliamentary record of 1853, but also as ‘younger’ of Chisholme in 1838. He was said to have been the last of the family to own Chisholme House, with the house remaining in the family until 1871. It seems likely that he was son of Robert Scott Chisholme was owner in the late 1830s and into the 1840s (also spelled ‘Chisholm’), along with other earlier spellings such as ‘Cheisholm’, ‘Cheisholme’, ‘Chesam’, ‘Chesame’, ‘Cheseholme’, ‘Cheshelm’, ‘Chesolm’, ‘Chesolme’, ‘Chisolme’, ‘Chisolm’, etc.; ‘Chisholme’ is the usual spelling for the Border branch of the family).

Chisholmebraes (chi-zum-brä) n. former farmstead near Chisholme, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when the farmers were ‘Messrs. Turnbull & Elliot’.

Chisholme Hoose (chi-zum-hoo) n. Georgian mansion about 6 miles west of Hawick in the Borthwick Water area, now used by a religious group. It is reached off the side road connecting the Borthwick and Teviot valleys via Branxholme Loch. The estate was the original seat of the Chisholme family from about the middle of the 13th century until 1624. It was part of Hawick Parish until annexed to Roberton in 1689. There was once also a blacksmiths near here (at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot). The current house was built in the mid-18th century by the Chisholmes, later passing to the Douglasses and the Homes. Around 1784 it was bought by William Chisholme, a descendant of the Chisholmes of Chisholme, who had made his fortune in the West Indies. Around 1860 it was bought by the trustees of William Richardson Dickson (related to the Hassendean nurserymen family), and inherited by his daughter Blanche Margaret when he died in 1881. The Henderson family modernised it at the end of the 19th century, and it lay empty from the 1950s until bought by the Beshara School in 1973. The house is 3 1/2 stories with Palladian windows flanking a collonaded porch. 1909 additions were by J. Jerdan & Son.

Chisholme Loch (chi-zum-loch) n. early name for Branzholme Wester Loch. The name was still in use in the early 20th century (it appears to be marked ‘Chishamra L.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Chisholme Mill (chi-zum-mill) n. former farm on the Chisholme estate, perhaps near where the Snoot Kirk was built, presumably once having a corn mill. Robert Chisholme is recorded as tenant in 1649. There were 7 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Chisholme, Esther Scott, John Wishart, Janet Little, William Chisholme, Katherine Scott and Jean Chisholme. Along with much of the area south of the Borthwick it was transferred from Hawick Parish to Robertson in 1690. Since 1707 the lands were part of Easter Parkhill rather than Wester Parkhill. Walter Chisholme was there in 1713 and John Murray in 1720. In 1788 it was listed as one third of the former lands of Wester Parkhill, and at that time back in the hands of Chisholme of Chisholme, valued at £33 6s 8d; in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was still listed in the same way. In about 1874 the owner is recorded as William Richardson Dickson of Alton. (also written ‘Chisholmemilne’, ‘Chisholm-mill’, ‘Chisholm milne’ and variants; it is ‘Chisholme mylne’ on a parish map of 1650).

Chisholme’s Toor (chi-zumz-toor) n. former name for a tower in the ruins of Melrose Abbey. It has been suggested that it was named after William, 3rd son of George Chisholme of that Ilk, who was associated with the Abbey in the mid-to-late 16th century. It may have been an example of lodgings that were built within the ruins of the Abbey and was still visible in the mid-18th century.

the Chisholme Wud (thu-chi-zum-wud) n. name used locally for the woods around Chisholme House, planted in the 19th century.

Scott, callit of Goldielands, and William Scott, to be bailies . . . ’ [BR1638] (cf. the earlier chese).

cholela (ko-le-ru) n. Hawick first suffered an epidemic in 1832, when there was an outbreak in January and February, contained to the Westend, where 4 people died, and a worse outbreak in October. In 1832 there were together 79 cases, claiming 39 lives. Dr. John Douglas wrote a detailed account of the outbreak of that year, including his own symptoms. Thousands of Scottish emigrants to Canada fell victim to the disease in 1834. In an outbreak in 1840 there are 10 people listed in the Town’s death register on the same day. There was another minor outbreak in Hawick in 1847. But the most devastating epidemic was in 1849, when there were 558 cases in the area over a period of about 15 weeks, resulting in 197 victims, 141 from Hawick and 56 from Wilton. In addition there were 29 fatalities in Denholm and many more in other local villages. The entire group of Irish navvies working on the railway, who drank from a spring that fed into the Teviot near the goods yard (later Mansfield Mills), died from the disease. The Hawick and Wilton victims were buried in a mass grave in the Wellogate Cemetery, with no ceremony, although a commemorative plaque was erected in 1999. In attempts to ward off the illness, tar barrels were burning in the streets and tar pitchers up the closes. A description of the 1849 tragedy was written by Rev. J.A. Wallace. The outbreak began in Orrock Place with the wife of an Irish navvy named Crombie (or Crummie), buried on the last day of July, and it lasted much of the year (with the final death on 18th November). Walter Wilson was the most prominent townsman who died, with people from all walks of life struck apparently indiscriminately. The High Street closes and the ‘Raws’ were particularly hard hit. Nearby villages and rural communities were also not immune, with William Kiddy, the minister of Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk dying in 1849. One positive outcome was the building of new housing, and the `Raws’ were particularly hard hit. Nearby villages and rural communities were also not immune, with William Kiddy, the minister of Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk dying in 1849. One positive outcome was the building of new housing, such as at the Terraces, along with the Allan Water reservoir and eventually a sewerage plant. Clare see de Clare clare constat (kla-rä-kon-stat) n., arch. deed formerly executed in Scots law by a superior to complete the process of inheritance of lands of a vassal. Normally this would mean that the vassal was recently deceased. The term usually occurs in the phrase ‘precept of clare constat’, and the words derive from the opening Latin of the deed, meaning ‘it is clearly established’ – ‘The session petitioned the Duchess of Buccleuch to grant a precept of clare constat to archibald Scott of Boonraw . . . ’ [PR1714].

Clarilaw (klä-ree-law??) n. hamlet on the B6359, about 3 miles north-east of Hawick. John Scott held the lands in the late 15th century, and Adam Scott of Clarilaw was probably a younger son of James Scott of Kirkurd. The Scotts of Alton were derived from this branch of the family. Simon Turnbull is recorded there in 1493. There were Turnbulls there in the 16th and 17th centuries, the last Turnbull Laird probably being Hector. For a while there were two separate farms, known as ‘Wester Clarilaw’ and ‘Easter Clarilaw’, with the west part being held by Scotts and the east part by Turnbulls. The west part passed back to the Scotts of Burnhead (descended from Hassendean and ultimately Buccleuch) through Hector Turnbull’s daughter Elizabeth marrying Robert Scott, tenant of Burnhead. Robert Scott in Clarilaw was listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. The ‘Mounkland’ was referred to as being in Clarilaw in about 1620. In 1643 William Scott of Clarilaw was owner of lands valued at £156, while Hector Turnbull of Clarilaw’s lands were valued at £273. In 1678 the east part was still valued at £273, but by then owned by Scott of Buccleuch, while the west part was valued at £182 and held by another William Scott of Clarilaw. William Dickson was living there in 1682 and William Scott in 1688. When the lands were transferred to Wilton Parish from the suppressed Hassendean in 1690 it was referred to as ‘The two Clerilaws’, suggesting it was at that time separated into 2 farms. The eastern section was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. Lands there owned by the Duchess of Buccleuch were leased to James Dryden and Thomas Henderson in 1692. Residents recorded there in 1694 were James Dryden, Thomas Dryden and Thomas Henderson; separately listed (and hence presumably the other farm) were Andrew Rodger, William Dickson, Walter Scott, John Armstrong, Walter Turnbull, William Scott and shepherd John Turnbull; additionally John Johnston was listed among the poor. Walter Turnbull was there in 1696. William Henderson was there in 1704 and 1709, William Coutart in 1708, William Crozier in 1711, James Lees in 1721, John Lamb, James Dryden in 1724–37, Thomas Liddell in 1724–29 and James Blyth in 1725. Gideon Turnbull was there in at least 1724–33, Thomas Henderson 1724–29, and Andrew Martin 1724–27. Andrew Harkness was there 1727–29 and Thomas Liddell and Andrew Martin in 1727, as well as Robert Scott of Burnhead living in the main house in at least 1721–27. James Graham and Robert Easton were there in 1737 and William Gray in 1738. James Dryden re-leased the lands from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744, when there was also a declaration about what to do if the adjacent Hassendean Common was divided. James Dodds and Thomas Cathrae were there in 1751, William Douglas and Thomas Douglas in 1772 and John Scott in 1780. Peter Scott was there in 1835 and there were 6 households living there in 1841. There was a village school there at one time, run by Wilton Parish. There was also once an annual Clarilaw Flower Show. The road from there to the Turnpike via the ‘Nitton’ is recorded being improved in 1775. A bronze dish and a brass 3-legged pot were discovered here in the 19th century, possibly being covered in the 19th century, possibly being covered here in the 19th century, possibly being used in the 19th century, possibly being used in the 19th century, possibly being used in the 19th century. Clarilaw (k lá-ree-law) n. farm in Bowden parish, about mid-way between Midlem and Longnewton. The land was once owned by Melrose Abbey, and included Cavers Carre. This is probably the ‘Clarelaw’ mentioned in 1535 when Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused of leading a raid to steal livestock and burn it, along with other places. Until about the 18th century there were 21 cottages here, each with 2 1/4 acres of land and pasture for 2 cows, with the rent being 2 bolls of meal yearly (the origin of the name is probably the Old English ‘clfre hlaw’, meaning ‘clover hill’; it occurs from about 1300 and was also spelled ‘Clarylaw’; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Claryly’; also written ‘Clairilhu’, ‘Clarelee’ and ‘Clarelee’).

Clegg (cleg) n. Libby, M.B.E., from Newcastle, she is a Paralympic sprinter. She won a silver medal in Beijing in 2008, silver again in London in 2012 and gold in Rio in 2016. She has also had success in the World Championships and Commonwealth Games. In 2017 she received the M.B.E. for services to athletics and charity.

Cleghorn (kleg-horn) n. Adam (d.1765) younger son of Alexander of Fairliehope and brother of Thomas. He was grandson of George, who lived at East Drygrange house and married to Katherine Shiel in 1685. He was a merchant in Edinburgh. He purchased Weens estate from the trustees of John Armstrong in 1760 and almost immediately made some improvements. He was listed being ‘of Weins’ among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. Becoming ill, a change of air was recommended to him, but he only got as far as Newcastle when he died. His nephew David (son of his elder brother Thomas of Fairliehope) succeeded to the estate. He was cousin of Thomas, who purchased Weens later. Andrew (b.1806/7) born in Yarrow Parish, he was a joiner and millwright in Ashkirk. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was at Sandyhawg and was still recorded there in 1868. He married Margaret Ballantyne, and their children included William, Eliza, Margaret, Euphemia (who probably died young). George (described as ‘Lame & Dumb from birth’, as well as being blind), Thomas, Andrew, Jane and James. David of Fairliehope and Weens (b.c.1740) son of Thomas of Fairliehope in Peebleshire. He was nephew of Adam of Weens, whom he succeeded in 1765. However, he sold Weens to William Sharp in 1767. Frances (1829–70) youngest daughter of George of Weens and Maria Catherine Dalton. She wrote poetry, including ‘The Emblems of Futurity’ and ‘The Valley of the Rule’, printed in her brother’s book ‘Rulewater and its People’. She had a lingering illness in the last years of her life, and died unmarried. George of Weens (1781–1855) 2nd son of Thomas and Mary Yule. He was grandson of James, who was 3rd son of Thomas and Katherine Shiel. Although his older brother James had succeeded to the Weens estate, he exchanged the lands for others with his brother a couple of years later. He was a well-known local landowner and involved with local politics as a Liberal supporter. He trained for the law, but never practised. A great lover of art, he spent about 6 months a year in Italy for several years, apparently driving there in his yellow post-chaise. From 1810 he was Captain in the 1st Regiment of Roxburghshire Militia. He was probably the George, W.S., who was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813, but later withdrew. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832. He was a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was also heavily involved in plans for the National Monument of Scotland (which ultimately foundered). In 1822 he married Maria Catherine, 3rd daughter of Col. John Dalton of Steningford Park near Ripon (and her niece married James Henry Innes-Kerr, 6th Duke of Roxburghe); they met at the Granby Hotel in 1821, on his way back from Rome and she died in 1866, aged 68. The couple lived for a while in London and Edinburgh, since Weens had been let to Maj. William Elliot of Harwood. Their children were: Mary Norcliffe (1822–54), married her cousin Lieut.-Col. Charles Dalton; Susanna (1824–60), married George Mellis Douglas and died in Quebec; Cecilia (b.1826), born at Weens and baptised in Hobkirk, a lover of poetry, who married Arthur Campbell of Catrine; Frances (1829–70), also born at Weens and baptised in Hobkirk, who wrote some poetry and died unmarried; George (b.1831), who succeeded to Weens and took the surname Tancred; James Charles (b.1833) of Hawburn, born at Weens; Thomas Angus (b.1835), also born at Weens, who died on return from China; and John Dalton (b.1835), twin of Thomas, who married Sarah, daughter of Col. Hawley from U.S.A. He moved to Weens House. His wife gave money to set up the ‘Sclenty Schuil’. He published ‘Strictures upon Ancient and Modern Art’ in 2 volumes. He died at Weens and was buried at Hobkirk. George (see George Tancred). Capt. James of Weens (1778–1852) son of Thomas. He was educated in Edinburgh and Paris and entered the 21st Fusiliers in 1796. He became a Captain in 1803 and retired in 1807. He is said to have had a large library. He succeeded his father in 1813, but 2 years later exchanged the Weens estate for other lands with his brother George. He purchased Hawburn, near Melrose, leaving it to his widow. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, when still ‘younger of Weens’ (although that was probably out of date). He lived most of his life in Paris and married Marie Seraphina Despards, but they had no family. They are buried in Père Lachaise Cemetery in Paris. James Charles (b.1833) 2nd son of George of Weens. He was born at Weens, and baptised in Kelso. He was educated at Edinburgh and Addiscombe, being in the same classes as his 18-month older brother. He entered the 7th Madras Cavalry as a Cornet in 1852. He returned to India from leave during the Mutiny, retiring soon afterwards. He travelled extensively and was known as a great reader and good sketcher. He inherited the farm of Hawkburn near Melrose from his uncle George, but later sold it. He also lived for a while at Hundalee. He joined the Jed-forest Club in 1864. In 1869 he married Sarah, youngest daughter of Rev. Thomas Walker, minister in County Derry. They had 1 son (Charles Angus of the Royal Artillery) and 5 daughters. He lived mostly at Twickenham and in Bedfordshire John (1768–1842) local shepherd, at Falnash and probably elsewhere. He was son of Thomas and baptised in Yarrow Parish. He married Isabella Oliver (1777–1851) at Ettrick Bridgend in 1799. In 1831 he emigrated with some of his family to Guelph, Ontario; the family had attended Caerlenrig Chapel and had a letter of recommendation from Gavin Turnbull, who was minister there. His children (the first 5 baptised in Ettrick Parish, the 6th in Roberton Parish and the rest in Hawick Parish) were: Janet, who died young; Thomas (b.1801), who married Agnes Matheson in Guelph; John, who married Christina Brydon in Hobkirk and died in Guelph; Helen (b.1804), who married Walter Laidlaw; Elizabeth (b.1806), who died young; William (b.1808), who married Ann Anderson and also lived in Guelph; Eliza, who stayed in Scotland;
Cleghorn

Robert Laidlaw (b.1811), who moved to Guelph and married Mary Quarry; Oliver (b.1813), also died in Guelph; James (b.1818), married Agnes Quarry in Guelph; and Elizabeth (again, b.1824), who died young. John Dalton (b.1835) son of George of Weens and Maria Catherine Dalton. He was an identical twin of Thomas Angus; they were born at Weens and baptised in Hobkirk. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy and University. He worked in Liverpool for a while and then went to the United States. In 1870 he married Sarah, daughter of Col. Ralph Hawley. Their children were Dr. Charles D. and Sarah. Thomas of Weens (1741–1813) 2nd son of James from East Drylaw, his mother being Malvina Angus (whose brother John married Margaret, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge). He was cousin of Adam, who had owned Weens in the 17th century. He was a businessman in partnership with Alexander Home, retiring shortly after his marriage. His business included being coachmaker in Edinburgh. He sold his Edinburgh businesses to John Learmonth of Dean (who built the Dean Bridge in Edinburgh). He purchased the estate of Weens in 1804, from the trustees of the recently deceased Adm. Thomas Pringle, this including feu-duties formerly held by Kerr of Abbotrule. In 1805 he added Town-o-Rule and Hallrule Mill to his estate, as well as the ‘north-east park of Hallrule’ and Hallrule Mill, purchased from John Wilson. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. In 1778 he married Mary (1753–1836), eldest daughter of George Yule of Gibslee; his wife was a great-granddaughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum. Their sons were: James (b.1778), who inherited Weens; and George (b.1781), who exchanged Weens with his brother. He died at his house in Edinburgh and is buried there. Thomas Angus ‘Tom’ (1835–60) son of George of Weens and Maria Catherine Dalton. He was an identical twin of John Dalton; they were born at Weens and baptised in Hobkirk. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy and University. He worked in an office in Liverpool and in about 1858 went out to China to work in the tea business there. However, it is said that the climate did not suit him, and he died on the voyage home a couple of years later.

Cleikum (klee-kum) n. pertaining to the Devil, or more specifically to a ceremony in Innerleithen, supposed to be ancient, but popularised by Sir Walter Scott in his novel ‘St. Ronan’s Well’ (1823). In the book the ‘Cleikum Club’ met in the ‘Cleikum Inn’. At St. Ronan’s Border Games there is the ‘Cleikum Ceremony’ in which a local schoolboy plays the part of St. Ronan, holding the ‘Cleikum Crook’ with which he ‘cleikit him’ by the leg or neck perhaps.

Cleikum Inn (klee-kum-in) n. former hostelry at the junction of the A698 (Denholm to Jedburgh road) with the A68 near Ancrum, and also the name given to the junction and general area. The more famous inn of the same name was in Peebles (now the Cross Keys), run by Marion Ritchie, who was the original of ‘Meg Dods’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘St. Ronan’s Well’ (and was a psuedonym for the author of ‘The Cook’s and Housewife’s Manual’ in 1826). It was given the name by Scott himself in about 1825. The inn hosted the Cleikum Club, which included Scott as a member, and organised some of the first Burns Suppers. This spawned the renaming of inns throughout Scotland, e.g. near Carfraemill and in Longley, Fife – ‘Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikiminn, East a mile or so of Timpendean’ [WL] (also spelled ‘Cleekimin’, ‘Cleikiminn’ and other variants; ‘Cleikum’ is an old name associated with trying to catch the Devil or ‘cleik um’).

cleisher (klee-shur) n., arch. a large specimen, whopper – ‘A maud-neuk fu’ o fairs – an’ muckle cleishers tae!’ [HA1861].

cleister (kli-stur, klee-stur) v., arch. to besmear, bedaub with something – ‘...finding himself the object of the pelting, or rather as an eye-witness calls it, the cleistering of the angry mob’ [RM], ‘It wad take a vast o sow-same, a richt claat o creesh, ti cleister a cloor gotten that gait!’ [ECS], n., arch. a mass of semi-liquid stuff, viscid mess, any sticky compound (also ‘cleester’; from Low German).

Cleithaugh (kli'-hawf) n. former farm in Jedburgh Parish, near Mossburnford. It was valued at 24 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. James Ainslie is recorded there in 1541, when it was valued at 25s. Roger (or Ralph) was there in 1590 and Thomas around 1600. Andrew Ainslie was tenant there in 1669, William Ainslie in 1694 and another Ainslie in 1738. There were Amoses there in 1797, when it was listed as part of Southdean Parish. James Wilson was farmer there in 1841 and labourer Robert Hobkirk’s family lived there. James H. Pringle was farmer in the 1860s (also written ‘Cleithaugh’, it is ‘Cleithaucht’ in 1538 and 1539, ‘Cleithauch’ and ‘Cleethaucht’ in 1541 and ‘Cleithaugh’ in 1797; the origin is probably Old English ‘claete halh’, meaning ‘burdock haugh’, and first occurs in the late 16th century.

Clemenson (klem-sin) n. John (18th C.) groom at Minto in 1791, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot.

Clement’s Hob (kle-mintz-hob) n. nickname of Robert Elliot, one of 10 Liddesdale rievers captured in Hawick in October 1567. Possibly the same man was mentioned in Maitland’s ‘Complaint Against the Thieves of Liddesdale’ – ‘There is ane callet Clement’s Hob Fra ilk pair Clement’s Will (kle-mintz-wil) n. nickname of William Nixon.

Clennel (kle-nel) n. Luke (1781–1840) born at Ulgham in Northumberland, he was apprentice to Thomas Bewick, becoming well known as an illustrator of works on natural history. In 1812 he produced an illustration of Hawick for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Border Antiquities’. It is a view from roughly the foot of Tannage Close, and is one of the earliest views of the town. He also made a sketch of the Auld Brig, published in the same book in 1814, which was copied as a vignette for James Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’. This view is drawn from below the bridge, roughly near the Burns Club.

Clerk (klerk, klärk, klawrk) n. Alexander (15th/16th C.) notary for the 1512 charter where Roger Langlands of that Ilk sold his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was probably from in or around the Barony of Wilton and may have been attached to Wilton Church. Probably the same Alexander was notary in 1511 (in Edinburgh) to a confirming charter for Simon Dalgleish of Falnash. Alexander (18th C.) from Edinburgh, he was foreman at Dickson’s nurseries in Hawick from about 1768 for several years. Andrew (17th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1698 he was fined for ‘carreing the ground of the Common and muckeing the arable land with the same contrair to all former practique in the said town’. It is possible that he was the Andrew, who leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1702 for weaver Adam Brown, in 1704 for merchant Adam Turnbull (who was at the Westport) and wright George Haliburton, in 1706 for weaver John Swan and in 1712 for smith Thomas Oliver. He could be the Andrew, son of John and Jean Elliot, born in Hawick in 1650. He could also be the Andrew, married to Marion Ruecastle, whose children born in Hawick included Walter (b.1679), Agnes (b.1680) and John (b.1682). Andrew (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He was listed as merchant on the west-side of Hawick (and separate from another man of the same name) on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when was taxed for 2 hearths. He (or the other Andrew) is listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. In 1706 his daughter Margaret married John Young, also a merchant in Hawick. This was an ‘irregular’ marriage, which took place in England. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of lands that had formerly been held by the feuars of Lilliesleaf, valued at £33 6s 8d. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 he is listed as holder of lands among those owned by Sprot of Riddell in about 1874. Archibald (b.1791/2) from St. Boswells, he was a blacksmith living at about 69 High Street in 1851. He was listed as a High Street blacksmith in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was a widower, with children Robina, Margaret, Archibald and Robert. Rev. Duncan minister of St. Mary’s from 1976–84, along with

Ebenezer (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Harden Anna in 1781. His children included William (b.1778) and James (b.1781). James (18th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, probably a merchant of some kind. He was owed £14 5 shillings for his services. James (17th C.) resident of Colterscleuch on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (1698–1761) tenant in Whitslade. He appears to be in Mabonlaw in 1737. His daughter Marion (who marroed William Scott, tenant in Parkhill) died in 1798, aged 68. He is probably the James who married Agnes Shortreed in Roberton Parish in 1731 and whose children included: Janet (b.1732); Marion (b.1734); and Margaret (b.1737). He is buried in Borthwick Waas. Janet (16th/17th C.) received money from the Wilton poor box in 1705. John (16th/17th C.) servitor of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme, recorded in 1599 when he witnessed a charter at Branhholme. Possibly the same ‘Johanni Clark’ was listed in the testament of William, younger of Branhholme, in 1552. John (17th C.) elected to the Hawick Council in late 1648. There were at least 3 men of that name in Hawick at that time: John married to Janet Langlands, whose children included Jean (b.1641), William (b.1642), Agnes (b.1644), Anna (b.1650), Walter (b.1652), John (b.1656); John married to Malie Shiel, whose children included Margaret (b.1648); and John married to Jean Elliot, whose children included Andrew (b.1650) and Ninian (b.1670). William (b.1647), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his son. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded being ‘at ye westport’ in 1704 and 1706 when he witnessed baptism for Hawick’s first known Cornet, James Scott ‘Laird’ (whose mother was probably Janet Clerk, and hence possibly related to him). The other witness in 1704 was James Scott ‘Westport’, who was Cornet in 1705. He is probably the John whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1696. It is likely that he was involved with the Common Riding, perhaps even once Cornet himself. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of Walter. He married Isobel Armstrong in 1712. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Lunn and their children included: Margaret (b.1725). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Overhall in 1752. He married Isabel Hoy and their children included: Walter (b.1752); Thomas (b.1753); Janet (b.1756); George (b.1758); John (b.1759); Isabel (b.1762); Christian (b.1765); and Bessie (b.1768). The witnesses in 1752 were James and Robert Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Borthwickbrae in 1772 when his son James was baptised in Roberton Parish. He could be the John who married Jean Scott in Roberton in 1771. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Roughheugh in 1780. He married Margaret Pott in 1770 in Hawick Parish. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: John (b.1770); Betty (b.1773); William (b.1775); William (again, b.1776); James (b.1778); Robert (b.1780); and Betty (again, b.1781). The witnesses in 1780 were John and William Thomline, operators of the Waulk Mill at Roughheugh (suggesting that he worked there). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Lochk Mill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. John (18th/19th C.) tenant in 1794 and 1797 at Templehall, when he paid the Horse Tax. He is listed along with Thomas, with his name appearing first, so they were probably father and son or brothers. The pair also paid tax on 3 dogs in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Fulton in Bedrule Parish. In 1797 he paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1797 he married Isabel Easton. Their son John was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1805. John (19th C.) farmer at Lymiecleuch in 1868. Rev. John Ashfield (1874–1921) educated in Ireland, he was licensed to preach by Omagh Presbytery in 1901. He became assistant at Creevan and was ordained as minister there in 1902, but demitted in 1916. He was then assistant at South Leith and Craigmiliar and ‘locum’ at Tranent from 1917. In 1919 he became minister of Hobkirk Kirk, but drowned in a boating accident on the Norfolk Broads only 2 years later. L. M. born in Hawick, he is known as a painter of fishing scenes. Mary ‘Mary the Bishop’ (d.1799) her death is recorded in the Hawick Parish register. Mr. ?? (19th C.) tenant farmer for a short period at Mackside. He hunted with the Jedforest hounds. Mr. ?? (19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant of Dickson Street. In the 1880s he presented the Cornet with a bottle of brandy after the return to Town following the Thursday Chase. Patrick (15th/16th C.) resident of Bedrule. In 1502 Martin and John Oliver in Strange were accused of stealing a cow from him. Peter (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Peter (b.1816/9) from Glenholm in Peeblesshire, son of George. In 1861 he was gardener and overseer at Woll Cottages. In a directory of 1868 he is listed at Woll Rig. His wife was Rachel and their children included Margaret and George Alexander. Peter (19th C.) blacksmith at the Sandbed, succeeding to the business of Thomas Anderson. Robert (18th C.) resident of Penchrise in 1729. His children (baptised in Cavers Parish) included William (b.1729) and Margaret (b.1732). Robert (1820/1–1905) hosiery manufacturer. He was son of William and Jane Murray (she was the aunt of Sir James A.H. Murray’s father and also of local historian Robert Murray). In 1851 he was living on Wilton Path and listed as a frame-worker. He was also listed as a greengrocer on Wilton Path in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was at 1 Kirkwynd, with occupation given as grocer and wool hosier. His house was later at 13 Allars Crescent. He married Margaret Johnstone, who died in 1881, aged 57, and he remarried to Sarah Beattie. He had 12 children with his first wife, including William (who married Christian Amos), Peter, Andrew (who married Agnes Dickie), John (who moved to Sheffield), Robert (slater and builder in Cowdenbeath, who married Christina Copeland), David, Joseph (stockmaker of Hexham, who married Mary Grieve), Mary (laundry keeper at Corbridge-on Tyne, who married mason David Crozier), Jane (who married Hexham postmaster John Aitchison) and Margaret (who married bricklayer John Bell), as well as another Joseph and Jane who died in infancy. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of hosiery manufacturer Robert, he became a slater and builder in Cowdenbeath. He married Christina Copland, and they had no children. He left £5,000 to the Cottage Hospital, the largest donation it had received at the time. Thomas (15th C.) witness to a charter in the Barony of Wilton in 1454. He is recorded there as ‘Thoma Clerc’. Most of the other witnesses were local men. Since his name appears after the Chaplain of Wilton, it is possible he was a clerk of the diocese. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tenant at Templehall along with John in 1794 and 1797. The pair also paid tax on 3 dogs in 1797. Walter (17th C.) married Margaret Dryden in Robertson Parish in 1687, they probably lived in the former Hassendean Parish. Their son James was baptised in 1687, with witnesses Thomas Henderson and John Dryden. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism in Robertson for James Scott and Janet Elliot. Walter (17th/18th C.) servant in Commonside. In 1706 he married Marion Dalgleish, another servant in Commonside. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Borthaugh in 1790. He married Janet Turnbull in 1776. Their children included: John (b.1777); Margaret (b.1779); Walter (b.1784), farm steward at Mabonlaw; William (b.1787); and William (again, b.1790), a mason at Harden Cottage. Walter (1784–1853) born in Wilton Parish, son of Walter and Janet Turnbull, he was farm steward at Mabonlaw. He was one of the founders and first elders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. In 1841 and 1851 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Mabonlaw. He married Margaret Hunter and their children included: Christian (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); Adam; Janet and Allan E. William (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘in denui’, which is probably an abbreviation for ‘dennum’, i.e. he lived in Denholm. Rev. William (d.c.1640) local minister. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1595 and became minister at Cavers in 1599, but was not presented to the vicarage there until 1601 (when Dean John Watson, portioner of Melrose demitted). In the following year he was a member of the Assembly and was translated to Wilton on the last day of 1602, following the death of John Langlands. There is also a suggestion (in James Wilson’s ‘Hawick and its Old Memories’) that he was jointly minister at Cavers and Wilton in 1599 and 1601. In 1607 he refused a call to Castleton and Ettleton Kirks (the letter of presentation from Walter, Lord of Buccleuch survives), the stated reason being an unfulfilled promised by Sir Gideon Murray. He is also recorded being presented to Borthwick in 1612 and gaving half of that living to Francis McGill. In 1627 he was part of a report on the state of the Kirk and Parish of Wilton. In 1632 he donated £20 towards building the library at Glasgow University. In 1633 he was owed money and grains for the year from the estate of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. It is unclear exactly when he died, but he left a widow, his second son was John and other sons were Andrew and William (who became a Hawick Burgess in 1640). When his son was made a Burgess he is not recorded being deceased, but must have died soon afterwards. William (17th C.) son of Rev. William, he was made a Burgess of Hawick in 1640. William (17th C.) Schoolmaster of Hobkirk Parish.
He was recorded in 1681 when he subscribed the names of the witnesses at Hartshaughmill for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Wauchope. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Colterscleuch. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Grieve, the same William was in Southdeanrig in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Grieve in Hartshaughmill. Probably in Colterscleuch. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded in 1792 when he married Betty Ledgerwood and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1793, witnessed by the Burgher Congregation. William (b.1777) born in Bowden, son of Robert and Margaret Willie. He was an agricultural labourer in Hawick. He was living at Wilton Damhead in 1841 and Uperdamside in 1851. He married Jane, daughter of Andrew Murray (and hence the great-aunt of Sir J.A.H. Murray). Their children included: Robert, hosiery manufacturer; Margaret (or Mary), who married tailor George J. Riddle; Andrew, who emigrated to Australia, farming in Tarnagulla, in Victoria and marrying Isabella Bell; Isabella Henderson, who married John Christison and later David Smith, and died in Australia; and Elizabeth, 'Betsy', who married Thomas Ferguson. William (b.1790) born in Wilton Parish, son of Walter and Janet Turnbull. He was a mason living at Harden Cottage in 1841 and 1851. He was born in Wilton Parish. He married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Armstrong in 1822 and they had a son James (b.1831). He was surely related to Walter, who lived at Mabonlaw at the same time. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. William (19th/20th C.) official Common Riding Song Singer 1883–1906 (also written ‘Clark’ and formerly ‘Clerke’).

Clerkcroft (kler-koft) n. former piece of land in Minto parish, mentioned in 1634. In that year it was among lands whose superiority was inherited by Thomas, Earl of Haddington. It was previously in Hassendean, mentioned as such in a return of 1637. In 1640 it was listed along with ‘Kerswell’ (i.e. Cresswell) among lands whose superiority was inherited by Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Haddington and then by his son John in 1645. It was further listed in 1670 as ‘the lands of Clerkcroft Kersual’. It was therefore presumably adjacent to Cresswell (the origin is possibly just ‘land belonging to the clerk’, suggesting glebe lands for the assistant minister, and may also be related to ‘Clerklands’).

clerkess (kler-kes) n. female clerk – ‘she worked as a clerkess in Pesco’.

clerkin (kler-in, -een) n. the act of being a clerk – ‘The sodgereen’s a hantle different be the clerken’ [ECS].

Clerklands (kler-lindz) n. hamlet about 8 miles north of Hawick, between Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, with an ancient fort site nearby. They were formerly owned by the monks of Melrose Abbey, being adjacent to the lands purchased from Adam, son of Adam of Durham, consisting of ‘Thodholesid’ and ‘Standestanerig’. This was confirmed by Walter Riddell of that Ilk in the 13th century. Part of the lands (specifically Easter Clerklands) were included among the properties of the Riddells of that Ilk, e.g. when inherited by Sir John Riddell in 1669; in 1643 they were valued at £182. The other parts were later owned by the Veitch and Scott families. The lands there were part of the estate of North Synton until 1641; in 1642 they were inherited by Helen, daughter of George Veitch of Clerklands. John Scott of Clerklands paid tax on £180 on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £182 in 1678. The 1694 Hearth Tax rolls states explicitly that the lands were not listed (suggesting perhaps an owner who also held lands in another parish). Robert Young was there in 1785. The lands were inherited by James Elliot of Ormiston, son of Walter Elliot and Margaret Currer. The lands were acquired by Sir John Buchanan Riddell from Thomas Currer before 1788, when they were valued at £182. James Lambert was farmer there in the mid-19th century. In 1851 the farm consisted of 575 acres. On the crest of a ridge to the west are the remains of a hill-fort, measuring about 60 m by 30 m (the origin is probably just ‘the lands belonging to the clerk’ or ‘cleric’; it first appear as ‘Clerkisland’ in the early 13th century, and is ‘clerklandis’ in 1493, ‘Clerklandis’ in 1502, ‘Clerklandis’ in 1609, ‘clerklands’ in 1678 and ‘Clairkland’ in 1694; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Clerkland’).

Clerkleap (kler-leap) n. area with cottages in southern Castleton Parish, just south of Manger- ton. J. Little was there in 1821 and labourer John Elliot and family lived there in 1841. There were 9 huts here housing railway workers on the 1861 census (it is ‘Clarlkeep’ in 1841).

Clerk o Works (kler-ô-wurks) n. paid official of the old Town Council who acted as overseer for the town builders etc.
Clerk's Banks

Clerk's Banks (klers-bawngks) n. former name for land adjacent to Hobkirk Church and churchyard, later called the braes of Kirknowe. In 1604 it was described as ‘the wood called Clerksbank’ when part of the lands of Wester Swanisle included in a charter to Hector Turnbull. It was ‘Clerksbankis’ when inherited by Hector’s grandson Adam Turnbull of Hartshaugh and a wood named ‘Clerksbank’ in 1683 when inherited by Gilbert Elliott of Craigend from his father Archibald.

Clesslee (kles-lee) n. former tower in Southdean Parish, located where the Pinkie Burn meets the Jed Water. There were formerly 2 cottages on the site, called Clessleypeel (recorded in the 1859 Ordnance Survey Name Book), which could be the ‘Cleslypeled’ marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. James Sinton was resident at ‘Clesslee-peel’ in the late 18th century. William White was farmer at ‘Clesspool’ in Southdean Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. There is now a mound there, with evidence of banks, some of which are probably walls of the cottages and some from the much older tower. Clessley Plantation is still marked on the modern Ordnance Survey maps, to the northeast. In 1850 an iron dagger ‘found under a cairn near Chesley Peel, Jed Forest’ was donated to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. Note that ‘Clerksbank’ when part of the lands of Wester Swanisle included in a charter to Hector Turnbull. It was ‘Clerksbankis’ when inherited by Hector’s grandson Adam Turnbull of Hartshaugh and a wood named ‘Clerksbank’ in 1683 when inherited by Gilbert Elliott of Craigend from his father Archibald.

Clessleeheid (kles-lee-heed) n. lost place name, recorded on Stobie’s 1770 map near the head of the River Jed in Southdean Parish, and probably associated with a former tower at ‘Clesslee’. (the origin is probably ‘the head of the clearing by the river Glass’, suggesting that the upper part of the Jed was once known by this name; however, another possibility is ‘gless’, which is an old Celtic word for ‘stream’; it is actually labelled ‘Cleslypeled’ on Stobie’s map).

cless (kles) n. class – ‘she was in ma cless it the schuill’, ‘Two two’s are four’, confirmed the cless’ [DH], ‘There cam a man o’ the preachin’ cless, Ae day to the royal court, ma e less . . .’ [WL], v. to class – ‘...for the stockingmakers o’ oor auld toon were clessed amang the maist intelligent an’ mentally wide-awake workin’ men in the hale country’ [BW1938].

Clesslee (kles-lee) n. site of a former peel tower in Southdean Parish (cf. Cleslyhed).

cleuch (klooch) n., arch. a gorge, ravine, narrow glen, invariably containing a stream – ‘...opposite to the Cleuch on the east side of the Dimples’ [C&L], ‘The ravished cleuch, in brushwood lost, Unenter’d, save by midnight ghost’ [JTe], ‘...But, in the dingle of the cleugh, I left them to their will’ [JTe], ‘...And on its tide, borne from afar, Wi’ rumbling rocks frae cleugh and scar’ [AD], ‘He kenn’d a’ the knowes, a’ the cleughs, a’ the cairns, These hills were his name – here he reared a’ his bairns’ [DA], ‘The oaks in the cleuch stood golden-red, The ripening nuts on the hazel hung ...’ [WHO], ‘...Still mebbe, wi a glint o late snaw in the deepest cleuchs’ [DH] (also spelled ‘cleugh’; the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong ù and oo: the word survives in several local placenames, e.g. Birny Cleuch, Blackcleuch, Buncleuch, Caulcleuch, Coltscleuch, Crosscleuch, Doecleuch, Gamescleuch, Giddenscleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Howcleuch, Lurgiescleuch, Lymiecleuch, Ramsaycleuch, Shirencleuch, Thornycleuch, Todscleuch, Whynney Cleuch, Wormicleuch and Wormscleuch; sometimes only part of the course of a stream is referred to as a ‘cleuch’).

Cleuch (klooch) n. former fortified house marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as being on the south bank of the Teviot valley, approximately opposite Dryden, and hence close to Colterscleuch (so the names may be related).

Cleuchfit (klooch-fit) n. Cleuchfoot, former name for a house in Robertson village, just after the Forman Memorial Hall, on the right-hand side of the road. It may be the same place called Roberton Woodfoot in 1841 and 1851.

Cleuch Heid (klooch-heed) n. Cleuch Head, hamlet near where the B6357 (‘Note o the Gate’) meets the A6088, about 8 miles south-east of Hawick, south of Hobkirk and east of Forkins. It was formerly known as ‘Blackcleughheid’. James Wilson was farmer there in the 1860s. There may have been a small threshing mill here, powered by water from a pond. There was a girl’s school there in the mid-19th century, established by Mrs. Elliot of Wolfelee, and with Miss Gibson as the teacher. In 1958 Walter Armstrong ploughed up a ‘discoidal flint knife’ there, which is now in the National Museum of Antiquities.

Cleuch Heid (klooch-heed) n. shepherd’s cottage on Brighouse Burn, just to the east of Steele Road in Castleton Parish. Hob Crozier from there was declared a fugitive in 1605. This could have been the site of the fortified house at ‘Brighousecleughhead’, which was once held by the Croziers. This is probably where Dr. Elliot of ‘Cleughhead’ lived, when visited by Sir Walter Scott on his trip to Liddesdale in 1797. It is probably also the ‘Cleughhead’ and ‘Cleughheads’ where John Elliot (perhaps the same Elliot) was farmer in at least the period 1785–97. Walter Robson was there in 1835. There were 6 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census. A funerary urn was said (in the Old Statistical Account) to have been found in an ancient cairn here (it is marked ‘Cleughhead’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Cleuchheid (kloo-ch-heed) n. farm situated to the north of Minto House, also called Minto Cleuchheid. It is situated near the end of a cleuch, with an adjacent mill pond; it is possible that it may be essentially the same farm as formerly known as Minto Mill. It was once a home of the Earl of Minto’s family. The farm was valued at £102 7d in 1779 and £109 in 1788 and 1811. The small body of water to the north was once a mill dam (marked ‘Cleughheed’ on Stobie’s 1770 map, it is ‘Cleugh-head’ in in 1779, 1788 and 1811).

Cleuchheid (kloo-ch-heed) n. Cleuchhead, name used for the main farm on the Wolfelee estate. It was farmed by Adam Pott in the early 18th century, later Thomas Shortreed, Thomas Scott (uncle of Sir Walter) until 1810, then was farmed directly by the Elliots of Wolfelee, also the Wilsons and then the Blyths (it is ‘Cleugh-heide’ about 1605).

Cleuchheid Sike (kloo-ch-heed-sik) n. Cleuchhead Sike, small stream in Liddesdale, rising on the southern slopes of Arnton Fell and running south into Bridgehouse Burn. The farmstead of Cleuchhead is on its eastern side.

Cleuchside (kloo-ch-sid) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, probably close to Steelendoor-road, perhaps associated with Cleuch Heid near there. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, along with Todscleuch, Fairside and Tailside, and described as ‘Cleuchside otherways designed Falset’ (there is a farm of the same name in Oxnam Parish, and probably elsewhere).

clever see cliver

cleverality (cli-vur-a-li-tee) n., arch. cleverness, a clever person, know-it-all, adj. clever – ‘Let cleverality, mockreef folk that are unco smert . . . ’ [ECS] (used as an adjective, transferred from the noun).

clichen (kli-chin) n., arch. something that is very light, comparatively speaking (noted by J. Jamieson).

clierts (kliurts) n., pl., arch. a disease affecting the glands of cattle or pigs (from Old Dutch).
Nether Cleifhoippis’ were inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden from his father Sir Walter in 1642. The farm was combined with Dawstonburn on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. Together they covered 2218 acres and were bounded by Singdean, Hudhouse, Saughtree, Stitchelhill and ‘Leys’ (it is ‘Cliefhop’ in 1632, ‘Cleifhopes’ in 1661 and ‘Cleifhope’ in 1718).

Cliffhope Burn (kli-fhop-burn) n. stream that joins the Dawston Burn just after Singdean on the Note o the Gate road. It is fed by several smaller streams, including Alison Sike and Dorothy Sike. The former farm of Cleehope were probably on its banks (it is written ‘Cliphope’ by James Smail in 1880).

Clifford (kli-fourd) n. George (1558–1605) 13th Lord Clifford and 3rd Earl of Cumberland, son of Henry, 2nd Earl. In 1603 he was appointed Warden of the English West and Middle Marches and also Lieutenant-General of Cumberland, Westmorland, Northumberland and the town and county of Newcastle. He married Margaret Russell, daughter of the Earl of Bedford and was succeeded by his brother Francis. Henry (1493–1542) 11th Lord Clifford of Clifford and 1st Earl of Cumberland. He was Lord of the English Western Marches 1525–27. He reported a raid he led into the Borders in February 1533, which included burming Branxholme and neighbouring farms, and capturing some servants of the Laird of Buccleuch. He married Margaret Talbot, daughter of the Earl of Shrewsbury and then Marquess of Mercia, and was succeeded by his son Henry. Robert (d.1314) 1st Lord of Clifford. He served as ‘Keeper of the Marches in the north towards Scotland’ from 1296. In that year he was directed by the English King to ‘keep the March of Scotland till three weeks after Easter next, taking hostages of the moor of Cavers, the vales of Lidel, Esche, Eves, Annand, Moffat, Nith and Galloway’. He married Maud de Clare and his children were Roger (who succeeded), Robert and Idonea (who married Henry, 2nd Baron Percy).

Thomas (c.1363–91) 6th Baron de Clifford, son of Roger the 5th Lord. He was jointly Warden of the English Marches along with Ralph Neville (Earl of Westmorland) from about 1388. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Lord de Ros and was succeeded by his son John, the 7th Lord.

Clifton Park (kli-f-tin-pawrk) n. former estate in Linton Parish. Although the house is demolished, the tudor-style north lodge and avenue of lime trees survive. The lands were owned by the Pringles, passing to the Eildons of Harwood through marriage.

climm (klim) v. to climb – ‘To climm in spirit up the heichts Where caller breezes blaw’ [WL], ‘But green gress for sturdy shoon To climm where grouse are skirlin’ [WL], ‘Some pech wi beagles owre the leys, And think it pleasanst – But Aa ken only yin clim’s treis To catch a pheasant’ [DH], ‘A love ti climm the Vertish braes Where yince A sledged in callant days’ [IW], a climb – ‘A beguid the climm as A meent ti end eet … ’ [ECS] (also written ‘clim’).

clint (klin; klint) n., arch. an outcrop of rock, projecting rock in a river, cliff, crag – ‘Ca’ in his pownyies throwe fair and foul By the clints o’ Robert’s Linn … ‘ [DH], ‘Mang rugged rocks and slippery clints, A queer and awkward place to hide’ [VW] (possibly from Danish; it occurs in local place names ‘Clinthead’, ‘Clints’ and ‘Clintwood’).

Clint (klin’, klint) n. former popular name for a large rocky outcropping in the Slitrig, where Clinthed was built. It is now under the road near where Silver Street meets the Kirkstile.

Clinthed (klin’-heed) n. house where generations of the Oliver family lived, who were shoemakers, tanners and tailors. More than one house stood on the site that was built on a rock (‘Clint’) at the Silver Street end of the Auld Brig. The location was essentially where the Exchange Bar was built. It was lastly the home of ‘Robbie Clinty’, famous from the J.E.D. Murray song and the William Norman Kennedy ‘Auld Brig’ poem – ‘I mourn thee in my hour of need, Warm-hearted patient, old Clint-head’ [WN].

Clintoogh Linns (klin’-hewh-linz) n. stream in the headwater of the Tweed Burn in south-eastern Liddesdale. It rises around Thwartergill Head and is fed by smaller streams, such as Newstell Sike and Claymore Sike.

the Clints (thu-klints) n. ancient earthwork near Chapelhill farm, just to the north of the road passing the 2 Branxholme Lochs, on the south-east slopes of Whitcastle Hill. It is oval in shape, measuring about 40 m by 30 m, being surrounded by a ditch and bank and with an entrance at the north-east. This is probably the remains of a settlement. Small quarries on the south side of the knoll probably gave the site its name (it is marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

the Clints (thu-klints) n. another name for Clintwood in Castleton Parish.
Clintwud (klin’-wud) n. former farm or fortified house in Castleton Parish, near Dinlabyre, once a seat of a branch of the Elliots. The site has been identified by locals as a rocky eminence enclosed by some sheepfolds, to the east of the ‘homestead moat’ marked on the Ordnance Survey map. It has also been suggested that the de Soulis family were there before moving to Liddel Castle, but that seems unlikely. William Elliot, ‘soune to Arche of Clintwood’ was among Scotsmen handed over the English Deputy Warden in 1597. Archie Elliot was still there in 1613. James Elliot possessed the lands in 1632. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands it appears to be combined with Kirndean and Flicht. The Old Statistical Account describes a round earthwork near here, where a surrounding wall was removed in 1793 to build dykes and a brass instrument and small sword were found. The New Statistical Account states that ‘the castle of Clintwood, on the farm of Flight, appears to have been a very strong building’. The notes for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club’s visit to Liddesdale in 1869 describe it as ‘the castle of Clintwood or the Clints, in the fork of two streamlets, forming the Boghill-burn, which falls into the Liddel at Dinlabyre’. However, it is unclear if any building of great significance was ever in this region (the name probably derives from the Old Danish ‘klint’, meaning ‘rock’ or ‘cliff’; it is marked ‘ye Clints’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map; it is ‘Clynztwod’ in 1611 and 1613 and ‘Clintwod’ in 1632).

Clinty (klin’-ee, klin-tee) adj., arch. abounding in ‘clints’, relating to ‘clints’.

Clinty’s (klin’-eez) n. bar, or bistro, which opened in the early 1990s at 4 Tower Knowe in the heavily ornamented former Commercial Bank building. It closed in 2002 and converted into the Bank restaurant, which closed after only a couple of years to become a bridal shop.

Clinty’s Song (klin’-eez-sawng) n. song written for the play ‘The Gutterbludes’ in 1905, with words by J.E.D. Murray and music by Adam Grant. This comic song was first performed in the play by William Turnbull, and has been a favourite ever since; since the character only really appears in the play to sing this song, it is suspected that this was written in simply as a vehicle for Turnbull, who was well known at the time for stage monologues. The inspiration for the song was Robert Oliver, nicknamed ‘Clinty’, who would have been known personally to the generation before the writers of the song. It was first performed at a Colour Bussing in 1908, again sung by William Turnbull, and published in sheet music form that same year.
clocker (klo-kur) n. a mechanical device for determining the number of knitting courses between the fashionings, usually consisting of a pawl and ratchet.

the Clocker (thu-klo-kur) n. nickname for William Crozier.

the Clocker (thu-klo-kur) n. former cottage in Hobkirk Parish, to the north of Templehall.

Clockerhaa ( Klo-kur-haw) n. Clockerhall, former farmstead, lying just to the south of Toshshawhaugh (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Clockerhaa (klo-kur-haw) n. Clockerhall, former cottage to the north of Hassendean.

Clocker Plantin (klo-kur-plawn-in) n. small plantation in Hobkirk Parish, on the side road between Forkins and Highend.

cloft (kloft) n., poet. a fissure, parting, cleft – ‘The nimble limb the clofts could climb’ [HSR].

clogs (klogz) n., pl. wooden footwear, common in Hawick before the 20th century. The clanking noise they made was once a familiar sound around the town. Wooden-soled shoes came back briefly while leather was scarce during WWII.

cloit (kloi) n., poet. a hard and sudden blow or fall – ‘. . . But got a clot upon my pow, That nearly spoil’d my sang’ [JT] (alternative form of clout).

clore (klo-kur) n., arch. to disguise, cloak, cover up – ‘Carmichael bade them speak out plainly, And cloke nae caise for ill nor gude . . . ’ [CPM].

Clommel (klo-med) n. Thomas (15th C.) resident of Minto, recorded in 1494/5 at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh. He ‘came in the King’s will’ for stealing a pig from Adam Thomson out of Grange, with his surety being Adam Scott in Wolfhope. This surname is otherwise unrecorded locally, although it could be the same as Clemen.

clood (klood) n. a cloud – ‘Lang syne it was, Thon sounchin sinmer’s day, Wi’ cloods that sailed Loutin to their shaddas’ [DH] (see also clud).

Cloon Craig (kloon-kraig) n. name for a particular rocky outcropping on the southern side of Ruberslaw. The reflection of the Sun off a fissure there was used by the residents of Toon-o-Rule to tell the time of day.

cloor (kloor) n., arch. a bump, bruise – ‘It wad take a vast o sow-same, a richt claot o creesh, ti cleester a cloor gotten that gait!’ [ECS].

cloot (kloo) n. a piece of cloth used as a washcloth, duster, etc., rag, nappy – ‘oo’ll juist yaise yer auld shirt is a cloot then’, ‘a bonnie face sets a dish cloot’, ‘. . . Wi’ a cloot that’s dipped in paraffin’ [LI] ‘Whip her in, whip her oot, Sax merks in a cloot’ [JP], ‘A bairn cleaning door handles with brasso and a cloot . . . ’ [DH], a garment, article of clothing – ‘ne’er cast a cloot till May is oot’, ‘I recall heavy winter ‘cloots’ being thankfully cast-off . . . ’ [BB], ‘The black gudewife o’ the Braes Gie baby clouts no worth a button’ [ES], v., arch. to patch clothing (also spelled ‘clout’).

clootie-dumplin (kloo-ee-dum-plin) n. a rich steamed fruitcake served as dessert, traditionally steamed in a cloth.

clootit (kloo-tee, -ti) pp., adj., arch. patched, mended – ‘The herd flang aff his clouted shoon, And to the nearest fountain ran . . . ’ [LHTB], ‘. . . Wi’ elbows out – his waistcoat bare – His breeks were cloutit here and there’ [RDW] (also ‘cloutit’).

cloft (klor, klort) v., arch. to make dirty, muddy – ‘In frae the fields, My shoon wi’ clie sae clortit!’ [WL] (not common Hawick pronunciation, cf. clart and clairt).

close (kloes) adj. muggy, humid (of the weather) – ‘it’s awfi close the day in’t eet?’.

close (kloes) n. an enclosed place, particularly a confined entryway leading off a main street, often opening into a courtyard, a common passage for a group of houses – ‘oo bade up the same close in Northcote Street’, ‘. . . and sett ane ladder in his neighbour’s close or yaird where they cannot win to tur and theirik . . . ’ [BR1660], ‘The paraffin lamp in the close Tae stop booglin’ aboot at night’ [AY], ‘. . . And in ma mind a sei again A berthit boy in Myreslawgreen Gaun dirtter hinym, without a care Doon oor close and up oor stair’ [IW], hence ‘up a close’ is used figuratively to indicate being in a quandary or hopeless position – ‘But we’re away up a close again. So let’s get back to Scotland . . . ’ [DH].

Closehooses (cloes-hoo-seez) n. Closehouses, former farm in Hassendean Parish, recorded in a charter of 1516 as being ‘1 merkland’ when being gained by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme after forfeiture by Alexander, Lord Home. Its location is uncertain, but it may be related to Wester- houses (the origin may be ‘houses by an enclosure’).

closes (klö-seez) n. there are now only a few officially named passageways in Hawick, mainly off the High Street. But in former times there were a huge number of these, giving access to what was usually poorer housing, often popularly named after someone who lived there. It is unclear when the first feature was given such a name in Hawick, but there were surely closes by the 17th century. Many closes off the High Street (as well as Silver Street, the Howegate and the Sandbed) sprang up through the 19th century, as housing expanded in the spaces behind the main street. In the mid-1800s almost every house along the High Street had a passageway through to the back (as seen on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map), and many (if not all) of these had popular names associated with the residents. Before street addresses were formalised, these close names would be given as the place of abode. Many of them had multiple names, and the location of some of the closes are now uncertain. Most have disappeared as the properties were redeveloped, with perhaps only the Crown Close and Round Close surviving. A list of former closes includes: All Was Others Close; Angus’ Close; Bunyan’s Close; Carpet Close; Cochrane’s Close; the Croon Close; Dalgleish Close; Dickson’s Close; Ewen’s Court; Factory Close; ‘Feelee Close; Graham’s Close; Grapes Close; Gunsmith’s Close; Guthrie’s Close; Henderson’s Pend; Hessel’s Close; Irvine’s Close; Kemp’s Close; Kyle’s Close; Linton’s Close; Mather’s Close; Marshall’s Close; Miller’s Close; Moncrieff’s Close; Nichol’s Close; Printer’s Close; Punch Bowl Close; Quaker’s Close; Reid’s Close; the Roond Close; Shaw’s Close; Sinton’s Close; Tait’s Close; Tannage Close; the Toor Close; Turk’s Close; the Wide Close; the Wide Close; the Roond Close; Shaw’s Close; Sinton’s Close; Tait’s Close; Tannage Close; the Toor Close; Turk’s Close; the Wide Close; the Wide Pend; Wull the Bellman’s Close; and Wulson’s Close. Denholm contained the Doctor’s Pend.

Closs (klos) n. former fortified house in Liddesdale, on the Roughley Burn not far from the Ninestane Rig. In 1632 it is ‘Over and Neather Close’ alias Welshaw, sett to John Scott and Gawin Elliot’. The farm of ‘Ouercloss’ was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. It was combined with Byreholm (although this may be an error), Bowholm, ‘Wallshaw’, Flasket, Millburn and Millburnholm, extending to 1295 acres, bounded by Roughlee, Toftholm, Hermitage, Sundhope and Stitchelhill. The house is shown near the modern Hermitage Cottage (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, then as ‘O. Closs’ and ‘N. Closs’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and on Visscher’s 1689 map as ‘Closse’).

Closes (klo-seez) n. former farm bordering on the old Common, between Whitchesters and Sea Croft, near the head of the Weatland Burn. A building on modern Ordnance Survey maps is marked ‘Closes Cottage’, along the track to the south-east of Whitchesters farm. Interestingly the lands there appear to be part of Hawick Common on a map made for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. Thomas Huntly was tenant there in the period 1729–64 – ‘John Glendinen and Andrew were ordered to gather in the towns following, in ye landward part of ye parish, viz., Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Crofts, and Whitchesters, together with Closses’ [PR1717] (also written ‘Clossis’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; there is a farm of the same name near Canonbie; the origin of the name may be from the fact that this was an enclosed space, bounded on 3 sides by the Common).

Clout (kloor, klowr) n., arch., poet. a blow, thump – ‘Richt ower frae Frostylee To Ker-sop in Siccan Stour, We garr’d the Southrons flee Wi’ mony a clash and clure’ [TK], ‘An’ gien an taen was mony a clowr, An’ dreadful lookin’ gashes’ [JoHa], the result of a blow, a bruise, swelling – ‘Another fell the harrows o’er, And raised upon his shins a clower’ [HSR], ‘… A spielin’ callant riskin’ screewe and cloure’ [WL], v., poet. to bruise, dent – ‘Sir Harry wi’ nimble brand, He pricket ma cap aje, But I cloured his heid on the strand, An’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T] (also written ‘cloure’, ‘clown’ and ‘clure’).

Clovenfords (klö-vin-förds) n. village 3 miles west of Galashiels, with an 18th century coaching inn, having a statue of Sir Walter Scott in front (apparently made of papier-maché). The main road from Hawick through Selkirk to Edinburgh used to go via Clovenfords until 1818, when it was re-routed through Gala. This was also where a vineyard was established in 1869, producing grapes until 1959 – ‘Catch the laughter-waking chords In the lilt of Clovenfords … ‘[WL].

Clover Field (klo-vur-feeld) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. It is listed as ‘Colver Field, or Mill Shot’.

Clown (klownz) n., pl., arch. butterwort plants, Pinguicula vulgaris – ‘This is named Sheep-root, Roxbh., also Clowns. It is said to receive the former name, because, when turned up by the plough, the sheep greedily feed on it’ [JoJ].

Clowr see cloure

the Club (thumb-klub) n. organisation of some sort that existed in Hawick in the middle of the 18th century, perhaps a forerunner of the Hawick Farmers’ Club. In 1749 it helped the Town deal with the debt incurred by building the Teviot clubhouse

clubhouse (klub-hoos) n. a clubhouse – ‘...Wi’ the worthies in the clubhouse At the Vertish Hill’ [IWL].

clubs (klubz) n., pl. organisations, particularly referring to private licensed ones with their own premises. In Hawick this has included the Border Club, the Burns Club, the Con Club, the Ex-Club, the Legion, and the Liberal Club, as well as the 2 Masonic Lodges and several sports clubs. Up until fairly recently they tended to be restricted to male members – ‘Much marvelled I that any one should think That Clubs were only there only that men might drink. There are, said I, low ‘Pubs’ as well as Clubs, From touch with which all decent men will shrink’ [JCG].

clud (klud) n., arch. a cloud – ‘In the daytime alsua he lede thame wi’ ane clud, an’ a’ the nicht wi’ ane licht o’ fire’ [HSR], ‘Thy mercie, Lord, is in the heavens, an’ thy faithfullness raxes untill the cluds’ [HSR], ‘The laveroch frea the fleecy clud Pours out his early sang’ [JT], ‘When nature gathers overhead, In dark and gruesom cluds, Then bursting, fills the Teviot’s bed, With heavy rolling floods’ [VW], ‘But gi’e to me the hills, An’ and o’ the top of Ruberslaw...’ [JTe], ‘As the clouds come from the Clumps in Hawick...’ [BR]

cludie (kuh-dee) adj., poet. cloudy – ‘He spak’ untill thame owt o’ the cludie piller ...’ [HSR].

cluff (kluf) v. to cuff, strike, usually with the open hand directed to the head – ‘...a good sound cluff o’ the lug was by him a daily form of chastisement’ [IWL], ‘Jack cluffed his lugs wi’ common sense, Subduced him in the present tense ...’ [FL], n. a cuff, slap with an open hand – ‘A’ll gie ee a cluff over the lug’.

cluít (ki’t, ki’ti’, klu’o, kluot) n., arch. a hoof, division of a hoof – ‘There’s auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw, Hei’s of’en shod ma clutes’ [JSB], ‘This aslua sall pleese the Lord mair nor ane stot or bullok that heth cluts an’ hoorns’[HSR], ‘...Thae Tory priests are very diels For mischief, roguey and cunnin’, Their cloven cloots they’ve shown at Lon’on’[RDW], ‘He will leave us nae doots That his tongue wad clip cloots ...

...’ [WL], feet – ‘Guid-bethanekeet, tui, nocht ailed ma cluits’ [ECS], (also spelled ‘clute’ and ‘cloot’; the pronunciation varies).

cluity (kli’-ee, kloo-tee) adj., poet. hoof-like, having the nature of hooves – ‘The sabille gowne hang thame owt o the cludie piller’ [HSR].

clumm (klum) pp. climbed – ‘they’ve clumm the stairs ti the great club-hoose in the sky’ [IWL] (the past tense is more often cf. clamm).

the Clump o Firs (thu-klump-ó-firz) n. former name given to a landmark near Ruberslaw. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describes the boundary between Sir William Eliott’s and John Wilson’s parts of Outer Hallrule being ‘in a straight line to the top of Ruberslaw, passing close by the Clump of Firs, the east fence of which is the march’.

the Clumps (thu-klumps) n. area just over the old railway line from Stobs Castle.

Clunie (kloo-nee) n. John (17th C.) barber in Hawick who is mentioned in 1682 as one of the Covenanter fugitives assisted by Lady Cavers. And in 1684 he was on the list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He may be the same ‘John Clunies, bowr in Hawick’ whose son William became an armourer’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1680. Rev. John (1708–84) minister at Whitekirk. In 1759 he sold Eilrig in the Borthwick valley to the Duke of Buccleuch; how he came to hold these lands is unclear. He is listed as ‘John Clunie Eillidge’ among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married twice and had 8 daughters and one son, James. Rev. John (18th C.) recorded as Precentor at Markinch and then licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1784. He was presented to Ewes Kirk by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1790, but translated to Borthwick Parish in 1791 (also written ‘Cluney’).

clute see cluit

cluve (kluov) pp., poet. cleaved – ‘...And her couter phiz it cluve the aire A yirde afore the brocke’ [JTe].

clype see Morris Clyde

Clyde’s Linn (klit-z-lin) n. former name for a waterfall in the upper part of Denholm Dean, north-west of the farmstead of Todlaw. It is referred to by James Murray in 1863 and is ‘Clyde Linn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. There is an earthwork a little to the north.

clype (klip) n. a tell-tale, informer, grass, snitch – ‘ee’re just a wee clype, yow’, v. to tell on, inform on someone, tattle – ‘whae clyped on is?’, ‘She’s aye claipin’’ [GW]. ‘Whilst times the cheaters wad git caught, or git cliped oan, an they’d git the belt for their bother’ [We] (from Old English; also written ‘clype’ and variants).

clyte (klī) n., arch. a smart blow – ‘...But his head got a heartsonm’ clyte That dinnled baith dour and deep’ [TK].

the Coach an Horses (thu-kōch-an-hor-seez) n. former hostelry at the Tower Knowe in the early-to-mid 19th century. The site became the new Commercial Bank at 4 Tower Knowe around 1852. The pub also had an entrances from Silver Street at the back. John Beck was innkeeper there in the 1830s. The last proprietor was James Shiel, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. It was one of the sites in Hawick used as a departure point for carriers.

the Coachhoose (thu-kōch-hoos) n. the coach-house for the Tower Hotel, situated where the Exchange Buildings were built (as seen in a photograph of 1860).

coachin (kō-chin) n. the business of transporting passengers by stage-coach. Hawick became a coaching centre in 1762, with the opening up of the road between Carlisle and Edinburgh. The first regular service was started in 1800 on Mondays Wednesdays and Fridays, the coaches leaving both Carlisle and Edinburgh at 2 a.m., and meeting in Hawick. The initial cost was 37 shillings and the speed was an astonishing 6 miles per hour. Coaches also started operating at about the same time between Kelso, Jedburgh and Edinburgh. The Tower Knowe was the main stopping point in town, and a scene of much activity 3 times a week for the first half of the 19th century, rising to become daily. Several years after they started they became mail (as well as passenger) coaches, perhaps in about 1807. The mail coaches carried up to 8 passengers, and the guards wore scarlet jackets, hats and top boots, all trimmed with gold braid. They also carried pistols and a blunderbus in case of attack. Two of the regular coaches used between Hawick and Carlisle in the 19th century were called ‘the Engineer’ and ‘the Favourite’. Walter Wilson, several other local manufacturers and Mr. Croall of Edinburgh ran a cheaper, rival coach service between Hawick and Edinburgh in the years 1823-46. All the coaches stopped after the Waverley Line was completed. The final run from Hawick to the south was with ‘the Engineer’ in 1862, with a great crowd sending them off from the Tower Knowe. Once the railway disappeared again, the coach essentially returned as the No. 95 bus.

Coach Park (kōch-pawrk) n. name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was listed in 1811 along with Spoutburn Park, with a joint value of £43 14s 6d.

coal-coom (kōl-koom) n., arch. coal dust – ‘...bar yeh haaflang chaap as black as Eppie Suittie (wui a face aa coo-coom ...)’ [ECS] (see also coom).

cobled (kōl-dee) n., arch. a pony used for carrying coal, particularly those travelling between Northumberland and Hawick. Drovers of these small, sturdy ponies would carry 2 or 3 bags (or creels) of coal, each weighing about 5 stones, from Northumberland, usually over the Carter Bar. Some coal also came via Canonbie and down the Teviot valley. Once in Hawick they would be lined up at the ‘Auld Brig’ waiting for customers. Ponies continued to be used until at least 1814. The coal brought in this way from Plashetts and other colieries was much cheaper than the Lothians coal, a situation that only changed with the coming of the railway to Hawick in 1845. These ponies were often commandeered by followers of the Cornet in the 19th century.

the Coal Pit Haugh (thu-kōl-pi-hawch) n. name for a field in Hobkirk Parish, on the former farm of U/thank. The name comes from a former proprietor who sank a pit to look for coal, but instead opened up a useful new spring.

coaland (kōl-rák) n., arch. a rake for coal – ‘Mr Cunningham is fined for deforcing the officers with ane collraice’ [BR1676] (this is the first mention of coal in the Town Book).

coal-smush (kōl-smush) n., arch. coal-dross, coal dust and small pieces of coal generally found at the bottom of a coal scuttle – ‘Coal-smush = coal-dross [Cf. coal-coom]’ [ECS] (see smush).

Coat o Airms see Burgh Seal

coble (kō-bul) n., arch. a flat-bottomed rowboat, skiff (from Old Welsh; see also cowble).

the Cobble (thu-kō-bul) n. popular name for the Cobble Pool or Cobble Cauld.

the Cobble Cauld (thu-kō-bul-kawld) n. weir at the west end of the Common Haugh, built to divert water for the mill lade system to the north of the river passing through Wilton (and ultimately coming out at Mansfield). It was formerly referred to as ‘Langlands’ Cauld’. An early version is shown on Wood’s 1824 map, labelled ‘Rough Heuch Dam Cauld’. In its modern form it was constructed in the early 1960s, with the addition of a salmon ladder through the middle. It is often just referred to as ‘the Cauld’.

Coble Entry (kō-bul-en-tree) n., narrow vennel that used to lead from Buccleuch Street to the Coble Pool, being an extension of the lane from Myreslawgreen (the ‘Common Vennel’) described in the 1537 Charter. There was once a well at the head of the lane. It was closed in 1948 and removed entirely in 1951 with the extension of the High School. At the same time a new lane along the water-side from the Coble Pool to the Lawson Bridge was constructed. A stone tablet on the wall outside the school marks its position.

coblemen (kō-bul-men) n., pl., arch. ferrymen at the Coble Pool. The first boatman on record is John Stoddart ‘coblman to the lard of Langlands’ in 1576 and 1578/9, and recorded again in 1605. The boatman in the late 17th century and early years of the 18th was William Scott; in 1694 he was listed ‘in Boathouse’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew Marshal was living at ‘boathouse’ in Wilton in 1725. Hector Blaikie was the last boatman. It is possible that the boatman was originally there mainly to ferry the Langlands family across the river, as well as to exercise their salmon fishing rights.

the Coble Pool (thu-kō-bul-pool) n. part of the Teviot near the Cauld, usually describing the area just above it. Its name comes from the ferry boat or coble that was used as the main way across the river when it was not fordable, prior to construction of the Teviot bridge in 1741. There is a boatman on record from at least 1576, with the last becoming redundant when the bridge was built. When frozen the pool was sometimes used in the 19th century for curling matches. It is the scene of the Dipping of the Flag and previous boundary marking ceremonies at the Common Riding – ‘You know me well – I’m harnessed to the Coble Pool And haste the waters when they’re full . . . ’ [WFC].

Cochran (kok-rin) n. Col. Alexander of Ashkirk (1814–1903) eldest son of Archibald, he was the 5th Baronet. He served as a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire around 1860. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1861. He was also a Justice of the Peace in Midlothian, on account of his other estate at Linkfield. He appears to have lived mostly in England as a career military man, but some of his children were born at Ashkirk. He was recorded in about 1874 as owner of the lands in Ashkirk that had previously been owned by Thomas Wilkinson, including Ashkirk Mill, Salenside and Castle-side. He married Fanny, daughter of C. Batsford. He secondly married Margaret, eldest daughter of Charles M. Caldecott of Holbrook Grange. His children included: Rear-Adm. Charles Home (1850–1930) of the Royal Navy; Lieut. Alexander (1848–1911) of the Royal Navy, who succeeded to Ashkirk; Archibald (1852–1885); Bertha Susan (b.1854); Evrard; Frances Margaret; Hermine Louisa; Cecil Geraldine; Ernest Frederick; Paul John; Randolph Alexander Grey; and Herman Randolph Purves. Lieut. Alexander (b.1848) eldest son of Alexander of Ashkirk. He served in the Royal Navy. He married Flora Curling Davison. Their children were: Alexander Charles Purves, who succeeded; Bertha Gabrielle; Flora Cecil, who married Ninian Lewis Elliot, grandson of Roxburghshire M.P. John Edmund Elliot and great-grandson of the 1st Earl of Minto; Rosamond; and Margaret Lucia, who married Sir Alfred Hamilton Grant. In 1881 the family were living at High Park Featherhead, St. Helens, Hampshire. Col. Alexander Charles Purves (b.c.1879) son of Alexander, he was born at Stewkley in Buckinghamshire. He owned Ashkirk House and also property at Inveresk. He was appointed Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire in 1939 and also served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Florence Hurd. Their children were probably Alexander, Daphne and Euphen Flora. Archibald of Ashkirk (18th/19th C.) owner of the lands and mill of Ashkirk, as well as the Barony, which include Salenside, Broadlee, Castleside, Leaphill, Rhymer’s Croft, Rye Croft, Roundhaugh and Lawhope. He bought these in 1795. He and his son, Archibald, younger, were listed as Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He planted more than 40 acres of woodland on his estate at Ashkirk. Archibald of Ashkirk (d.1841) son of Archibald. He is recorded as proprietor in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was also a merchant in the Fishrow in Edinburgh. He went through bankruptcy proceedings in 1824. He married Mrs. Elizabeth Somerville, but she died in 1804. In 1813 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Purves of Purves Hall in Berwickshire, and she died in 1833. Their children were: Alexander (b.1814), who succeeded; Alexander's elder twin, who died in 1816; Mary (b.1816); Euphemia (b.1818); and Vice-Adm. Thomas (b.1819). He is buried at Inveresk. Charles Home (1850–1930) son of Alexander of Ashkirk. He served in the Royal Navy. He was awarded the Ashantee Medal 1873/4, the Jubilee Medal 1897 and the Coronation 1902. He received the Royal Humane Society medal in 1883 from jumping overboard to save a man on a cold, windy night. Thomas (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there (note this spelling for the family of Baronets, although there are variants such as 'Coughran'; see also Cochrane).

Cochrane (kok-rin) n. Andrew (19th C.) tailor of 59 High Street. He was from the same family as the wife of Bailie James Douglas and also the 'Laird' Cochrane who lived in Brougham Place. Emily Mabel (19th/20th C.) nee Purdon, daughter of Hawick solicitor Robert. She married Gala manufacturer Walter Francis, who was a Captain in WWI and died in 1917 in Gaza. She had at least 4 children: Helen; Walter, who died aged 2; Robert, who died aged 21 in a motorcycle accident; and Archibald 'Archie' Leman (1909–88), who became an internationally-recognised epidemiologist, with the 'Cochrane Collaboration' set up after his death to systematically study randomised trials. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the Hassendean part. He married Margaret Renwick and their children included Agnes (b.1684), Margaret (b.1686) and Thomas (b.1688). The witnesses in 1684 were James ... and George Scott and in 1686 were James Veitch and James Turnbull. John (d.1823) farmer at East Lilliesleaf. He is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1787–97 as owner of a saddle horse. He is also recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 6 farm horses. He also paid tax for having 3 non-working dogs at Lilliesleaf in 1797. He died in his 80s. John (18th/19th C.) carrier, listed in Pigot's 1825 directory along with Thomas Winthorpe, between Hawick and Langholm. He could be the 88 year old farmer recorded on the Mill Path in the 1841 census. He could be the John who married (wife's name hard to read) in Hawick in 1796. Rev. John (1789–1832) minister of Hawick Parish 1823–32. He was son of John, farmer at Easter Lilliesleaf. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1811, becoming an assistant to James Stalker, minister at Lilliesleaf. He was then minister at Falstone (Northumberland) and at North Shields (succeeding his uncle, Walter Knox), before moving to Hawick. He was presented by the trustees of Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch (perhaps the first minister on record not to be presented by the patron) in the middle of 1823 and installed a few months later. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Jessie Elizabeth Knox, daughter of Thomas Knox, farmer of Lilliesleaf, and sister of William Knox the poet. A silhouette portrait of him and his family exists. His eldest daughter Barbara was mother of Peter Redford Scott Lang, who was Professor of Mathematics at St. Andrews. His other children were Jessie Knox and Jane Ayres. William (18th C.) tenant at Newton in Kirkton Parish. He was recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He paid the cart tax in 1791 and subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He may be the William who paid the Horse Tax at Ashieburn in 1797. William Elliot Armstrong (19th/20th C.) lived at 4 Douglas Square, Newcastleton. He was a Major in the 1/4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B. He took command when Lieut.-Col. John McNelle was killed in the attack of 12th July 1915, and wrote an account of the events in the Batallion war diaries. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire (formerly written ‘Cohrachne’, ‘Cowchrine’, etc.; see also Cochrane).

Cochrane’s Close (ko-krinz-klos) n. passage beside Cochrane’s Innery, near the Crown Hotel on the High Street.

Cochrane’s Innery (kok-rinz-i-nee-ree) n. tenement also known as Cochrane’s Row, immediately west of the Crown Hotel. It was once kept as an inn, at one point by local poet James Ruickbie, and demolished in 1861 to make way for an extension to the Crown.

coc-nit (kó-ki-ni) n., arch. coconut – ‘Thus cocknh-nit taiblet = cocoanut candy’ [ECS].

cock (kok) n., arch. to draw back, retract, eat one’s words.

Cock (kok) n. nickname of John Wigholm.
cock-a-leekie (ko-ku-lee-kee) n. a soup made from fowl boiled with leeks and other vegetables.

cock-a-leekie Cockburn

cock-bird (kok-burd) n., arch. a cock chicken, a puny youngster.

cock-brui (kok-brui) n., arch. the broth of a boiled cock.

Cockburn (kok-burn) n. former name for lands that were near Northhouse and Stobbicote. It is recorded along with them as 'Cokburn' in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540, when William Henderson was the King's shepherd there. It is possible that this is a mis-transcription for another farm.

Cockburn (kō-burn) n. Alexander of Ormiston (15th C.), 2nd son of Sir John, whom he succeeded in about 1470. He leased the lands of Craik to Robert Scott of Eilig in 1477 for 6 years. He was Sheriff in Midlothian, as described in a charter of 1477/8. His son and heir was John. He was listed as a debtor for the Master of Abernethy in 1491. He may be the Laird of Ormiston who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was probably the same Alexander of Ormiston Hall to whom Robert Scott of Allanhaugh owed 100 merks in 1500, with the lands of Whitchesters as security. He was still alive in 1503 when his son John witnessed a return for Helen Rutherford of that Ilk.

David (15th C.) received 10 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed among servants of the Laird. It is possible this was the same man as David of HENDERLAND, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. George (17th C.) resident at Alton on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He may be the George who married Margaret Shiel, and whose children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Margaret (b.1683); William (b.1686); and Hector (b.1687). The witnesses in 1686 were William Shiel (surely related to his wife) and Thomas Liddell. Mary from Alton, who married Walter Scott in Wiltonburn in 1713, may also have been his daughter. Rev. Harold Andrew (1895–1958) son of George Hanna, schoolmaster in Paisley, and Isabella Brodie Marshall. He served in WWI as a gunner with the Royal Field Artillery. He graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1921 and B.D. from St. Andrews in 1924. Licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1925, he became assistant at St. Michael’s in Dumfries. In 1927 he was ordained as minister of Castleton Parish, remaining until translated back to Dumfries in 1930. He served as liaison officer between Protestant churches in Britain and the U.S.A. in 1942 and was awarded the Norwegian Freedom Medal in 1947. He married Isabella, daughter of Dr. William Henry Manners. Their children were Eileen Mary and George Hanna Michael. He died in Dumfries. John (d.bef. 1512) probably son of John and perhaps grandson of Alexander. He is described as ‘of Ormiston of new’ in 1507/8 when he appears to have been given the lands of Whiteside (or perhaps just the superiority) by Robert Erskine. In 1508 he was granted the lands of Ormiston, on their resignation by his father John. He is described in 1508/9 as son and heir of John of Ormiston when he was granted the lands of Craik in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. He may have been the same John who witnessed a charter for Henry Wardlaw of Wilton in 1483 (or this may have been his father). It is possible he is the John ‘ga richtly ben’ (presumably a nickname) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5; probably this is also the ‘Johannis cokburn gareluhene’ (likely mis-transcribed) in Milsington in 1502 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch was fined for his non-appearance in court at Jedburgh. He may also be the ‘Jolne Cokburne’ who was among the men who had respite in 1504 for involvement in the death of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He married Margaret Hepburn, who may have been daughter of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, and was probably succeeded by his son Sir John. Sir John of Ormiston (d.1583) son of William and Janet Somerville. He served as Secretary of State. He was usually referred to as ‘Ormiston’, so that the contemporary James Ormiston of that Ilk was called ‘Black Ormiston’. In 1535 his lands at Craik were raided by a group of Armstrongs, who were denounced as rebels for stealing about 100 cattle and taking 3 of his farm servants prisoner, this was followed a few months later by another raid by the Armstrongs in which 2 oxen (possibly the only 2 left!) were taken. He had remission for assisting the Earl of Hertford in 1544. He is probably the John styled ‘formerly of Ormiston’ in a charter of 1548/9 in which Walter Scott of Branxholme (and his wife Janet Beaton) gained the lands of Easter Craik that he had forfeited through treason. However, he must have been rehabilitated. He was recorded in a bond of assurance along with the Earl of Bothwell and others in 1561. He was implicated in the murder of Rizzio in 1566. In 1567 he had a charter of the lands of Easter Craik, granted by James, Earl of Bothwell (presumably seized back from the Scotts of Buccleuch). There was a confirming Great Seal

However, he sold it again soon afterwards. He purchased Menslaws in 1860. In 1869 as minister of the West End or ‘Green’ Kirk, moving to Orrock Place with the congregation 5 years later. His time as minister saw the new church opened in 1874 and the Manse being replaced in 1875. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Doveshaghmill according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. William of Henderland (15th C.) son of Piers of Henderland. Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s wife Margaret Cockburn was his sister. In 1446 he witnessed the charter of Branxholme for his brother-in-law Sir Walter Scott; he was there ‘Willelmo de Kokburne de Henrilands’. He was witness to a 1447 feu charter of the lands of Birkwood near Hawick, where he is referred to as ‘Hanerland’. In 1449 he was ‘Willelmi de Cokburne de Henrilande’ when he witnessed another charter for Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was a supporter of the Black Douglas and forfeited some of his lands in the 1450s as a result. In 1451 either he or his son William paid a fine for killing the King’s deer in Ettrick Forest. He had a sasine for Henderland and ‘Bothill’ in 1457. In 1468 he resigned his lands of Lempitlaw to David Scott, heir of Walter. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. He married Egidia or Gelis, daughter of the famous riever of the same name. William of Henderland (15th/16th C.) eldest son of William and Egidia Fraser. Jointly with his wife he held the lands of Sunderlandhall, and he succeeded to all his father’s estates in the period 1480–5. This included part of North Synton, which had been forfeited by Veitch of Dawyck. He married Alexander Murray of Shillinglaw. He was probably the grandfather of the famous riever of the same name.

William of Henderland (14th C.) 3rd son Alexander of that Ilk and Langton, he was a descendant of the Piers who signed the Ragman Rolls. His name was written ‘Piers de Cokburn’ and variants. He is well-known because of the ancient gravestone, which long survived in the family chapel at Henderland, near St. Mary’s Loch, and was often confused with the grave of his riving descendant, William. His wife was Marjorie, who may have been a de Soulis, and inherited lands in Eskdale and Annandale. He was succeeded by another Peter. Peter of Henderland (14th/15th C.) son of Peter. In 1383 he had a renewal charter for his father’s resignation of all of his lands. He held lands in Selkirkshire (including Daigleish), Peeblesshire (including Kirkurd), Annandale and Eskdale. He was superior of the lands around the Timna Water, which the Scotts swapped for Bellendean with the monks of Melrose in 1415; he was recorded then as ‘Petrus de Kokburne’. He probably had the chapel built at ‘Henderland in Rodonna’, dedicated to his parents. His daughter Margaret married Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd. His sons were: William, who succeeded; Edward; and Thomas. His seal bore an ermine and 3 cocks. Rev. Samuel (d.c.1624) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1600, he became minister at Kirkmichael (Banffshire) in 1601 and was translated to Minto in 1609. In 1613 he was ordered by the Presbytery to pay back the minister of Hownam for a book of his! In 1619 he witnessed a bond between Adam Turnbull in Bonchester Townhead and Walter Lorraine in Gatehousecot. William Wishart served as his assistant in the period 1613–18. He is described as ‘verie seik’ in 1623 and died before August the following year. He had a son, Andrew, and a daughter, Helen. Thomas (19th C.) from the Duns area, he purchased Menslaws in 1860. However, he sold it again soon afterwards. He was a major landowner in Bedrule Parish in the 1860s. In about 1874 the land tax for Menslaws was paid by his trustees (suggesting he was deceased by then). Rev. Thomas (19th C.) minister of Orrock Church in the late 19th century. He was from Berwick, where he attended the Wallace Green Presbyterian Church. He came to Hawick in 1869 as minister of the West End or ‘Green’ Kirk, moving to Orrock Place with the congregation 5 years later. His time as minister saw the new church opened in 1874 and the Manse being replaced in 1875. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Doveshaghmill according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. William of Henderland (15th C.) son of Piers of Henderland. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. He married Egidia or Gelis, daughter of Fraser of Overtoun. His children included: William, who succeeded and married Katherine, daughter of George Rutherford of Chatto; Gilbert of the Glen; Marjorie, who married Walter Scott of Synton; Margaret, who married John Lindsay of Wauchopedale and secondly William Hay of Tallo; and Geillis, who married Alexander Murray of Shillinglaw. He was probably the grandfather of the famous riever of the same name. William of Henderland (15th/16th C.) eldest son of William and Egidia Fraser. Jointly with his wife he held the lands of Sunderlandhall, and he succeeded to all his father’s estates in the period 1480–5. John Veitch of Dawyck; and Christian, who married Robert Scott of Whitchesters. William of Henderland (d.1530) son of William and Katherine Rutherford. He was Laird of the lands of Henderland, as well as Sunderland in Peeblesshire. He is notorious as a reiver, although there is little reason to believe his behaviour was any different than other Border Lairds of the time. It does seem that he had financial difficulties, and was forced to sell some of his properties in the early 1500s, e.g. part of Bold to John Murray of Falshill. In 1518 and 1519 he was warded, and released only when his tenants complained that they were being attacked in his absence. Supposed to return to prison after 3 days, he evaded capture for the next decade. In 1529 Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme was charged by the King to apprehend him. In 1530 he was arrested along with Adam Scott of Tushielaw, and hung in Edinburgh as an example to other rievers of the time. He was explicitly convicted of high treason, in bringing Englishman Alexander Forester, his son and others to plunder lands in Scotland, as well as convicted of theft, reset, etc. He was hung in Edinburgh (probably not on his own door, as in the ballad) and his head fixed to the Tolbooth there. His lands and goods were confiscated, and in 1532 granted to James, brother of Malcolm, Lord Fleming, although his son William tried to have these restored, and eventually recovered some of them, with the help of Scott of Buccleuch. The story of his death was the basis for the ballad ‘The Border Widow’s Lament’, however, the name of his real-life wife is not recorded. Note that his name is given incorrectly as ‘Piers’ in several Border histories. William of Ormiston (16th C.) son of John. Some Kers were charged with causing trouble while hunting deer at night on his farm at Ormiston in 1528. He married his cousin Janet Somerville. He was succeeded by his eldest son John (formerly spelled ‘Cokburn’, ‘Cokburne’, ‘Kcoburne’, etc.).

Cockburnspath (kō-burnz-pawth) n. village in Berwickshire, surrounding a market square with mediaval cross surviving. The nearby Pease Bridge was the highest in the world (nearly 39 m or 130 ft) when constructed in 1786. The 15th century ruined Cockburnspath Tower is also close by (locally it is ‘Co’path’).

cocker (ko-kur) n., arch. someone who trains cocks for fighting. 6 were charged in 1863 after a public fight at the Nipknowes, 4 being found guilty of cruelty to animals, effectively ending the local activity.

cocker (ko-kur) v., arch. to oscillate, rock, teeter.

Cocker (ko-kur) n. James of Hawick (17th/18th C.) recorded as a yeoman in a lease in Lancashire in 1709. This may be ‘Hawick’ in Northumberland.

Cockerheugh (ko-kur-hewch) n. former farm near Hassendeanbank, precise location uncertain, but presumably close to Cocker Syke. Robert Scott of ‘Cockerhaucht’ is recorded in 1484/5. It is described as a ‘merk land in Hassendeanbank’ in 1556. William Turnbull of Knowe had a sasine for the lands in 1556, probably being the same ‘piece of land in Hassendeanbank’ which he held since 1536. His son Thomas of Knowe inherited the lands in 1622 and they were part of the lands included along with Knowe in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire. They were next inherited by Thomas Turnbull in 1655, who sold them to John Scott of Brieryyards and his sons in 1656. Walter Scott of Cockerheugh paid land tax on £52 2s there in 1678. Along with much of the area it became part of Minto Parish in 1690, when Hassendean was suppressed. John Scott is recorded there in the 1690s and Robert Turnbull in 1694. Walter Scott of Cockerheugh is recorded in 1721 when his sister Bessie married Walter Scott, uncle to Crumhaugh. Walter Scott, late of Cockerheugh, is recorded in 1743. By 1788 the lands were owned by the Duke of Roxburghhe. It is probably the place referred to by Lord Minto when talking about John Leyden – ‘...or seen anything more like a ship than a pair of trows in Cocker’s haugh pool’. W. Turnbull from there was witness to a baptism in Hawick in 1796. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was owned by the Duke of Roxburghhe and still valued at £52 (also ‘Cockersheugh’; it is ‘kokerheugh’ in 1694; not to be confused with ‘Cockleheugh’ near Melrose).

Cocklaw (kok-law) n. tower that has been identified with Ormiston, just outside Hawick. The ruin was covered up when the present farmhouse was built in the 18th century, with only the grass-grown mound in front of Ormiston house remaining. This was the site of the ‘Siege of Cocklaw’ in the Summer of 1403. King Henry IV had granted the Percy family some lands in southern Scotland (although technically still in Scottish hands), perhaps to placate them. As a result a force led by the younger Henry Percy, known as ‘Hotspur’ (and possibly his father), laid siege to ‘Cocklaw Castle’. The Duke of Albany (Robert Stewart), the Scottish Regent, threatened to send a great army to relieve Cocklaw, and King Henry essentially refused assistance. This led the Earl of Northumberland and his son ‘Hotspur’ to hatch their plot against the English King, entering an alliance with Albany and the Earl Douglas, which led to the Battle of Shrewsbury and Hotspur’s death. The siege itself apparently lasted a few weeks, with the owner James Gledstains apparently absent, but his esquire John Greenlaw putting up a gallant defence (Greenlaw is presented as the owner of Cocklaw in Wilson’s fictionalised account of the siege). It has been suggested that the whole episode was simply a ruse to gather allies for the attack on the English throne. The tower was mentioned by Bower in his continuation of the ‘Scotichronicon’, written about 1440. An earthenware jar containing many coins of a date preceding the siege were found in the mid-19th century close to the site of the old tower (and is in the Museum). The lands near Hawick were probably named after the Cocklaw in Lanarkshire (a few miles north of Biggar), adjacent to the ancestral lands possessed by the Gledstains of that Ilk. These may be among the lands inherited by Margaret Turnbull and passed to the Gledstains family through marriage in about the 1390s (and hence had only been occupied by the Gledstains for a few years before Cock Law (kok-law) n. area in Liddesdale, lying just to the north of old Castleton, the hill there reaching a height of 169 m. It is probably related to the former lands of 'Cocklaik'.

Cockle (ko-kul) v. to cock a limb or joint — 'A'm hirplin the day cos A cockled ma ankle'.

cockle (ko-kul) v., arch. to chuckle in triumph, to crow.

Cocklecooty (ko-kul-koo'-ee) n. former name for the Victorian villa known as the Coille about 2 miles north-east of Hawick. The nearby Cocklecooty Cottage is off the road between Bucklands and Hassendean. Robert Walker was farmer there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (it is 'Cocklecokie' in 1654 map as 'Coklak' and on Blaeu's Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of a circular earthwork near there (it is marked on Gordon's c. 1650 map as 'Coklaw') and in the Cheviots (also spelled 'Coklaw', 'Cocks-lawsis' and other variants; the origin seems likely to be Old English 'cocc hlaw').

Cockplay (kok-plā) n. nickname in use around the beginning of the 19th century.

Cocklaw (kok-plā-hill) n. hill to the south of Twislehope in the upper Hermitage valley. It reaches a height of 477 m and lies to the north of the higher Wetherhorn Hill (it is marked 'Cockplay' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; note there is another hill of the same name just about a mile to the west, in Dumfriesshire).

cock’s comb (koks-kōm) n., arch. the adder’s tongue, Ophioglossum vulgatum (said to be from its resemblance to the comb of a cockrel).

cock’s kaim (koks-kaim) n., arch. a red poppy, especially Papaver rhoeas, the cuckoo flower, Orchis mascula.

Cockslands (ko-koks-lawndz) n. lands in the village of Lilliesleaf, recorded in 1654 when inherited by James Pringle of Torwoodlee from his father George. The name is given in the service of heirs as ‘Cockslands’, but it is possible this is an error in the spelling of the adder’s tongue, Ophioglossum vulgatum (said to be from its resemblance to the comb of a cockrel).

Cocks Pairt (koks-pār’) n. Cockspart, former name for an area to the east of Robert’s Linn, on the farm of Langburnshiels — ...(where three lairds’ lands meet, named the Duke of Buccleuch, Stobs, and Harwood) vulgarly called Goks’ pairt or Cocks part [WaD] (described as part of the possible course of the Catrail in Wilson’s Annals of Hawick); it is marked as ‘Cockspairt’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, somewhere near Saughtree).

the Coffin End (thu-ko-fin-end) n. a group of low, wooden buildings, mainly used as shops, which extended from the end of Bridge Street to roughly where the Horse now stands. The shops were reached by descending a few steps from street level. They can be seen in a photograph of around 1890, and were demolished around 1894, when the Central Hotel was built. George Luff had offered to demolish them at his own expense if the Town granted him a liquor licence; although the offer was refused, he was granted a licence after improving his hotel and remained true to his word, demolishing the buildings and gifting the piece of land to the Burgh. The nickname came from the tapering shape of the group of buildings, which is still partly retained in the Prudential building, now the Coffin End coffee shop.

cöft (koft) pp., arch. bought, purchased — ‘...mair 30s. for skins coft and receivit by him at Whitsunday last ...’ [BR1642], ‘...the thrie barrels of strong watters coft be the said John Scott ...’ [BR1656], ‘Mind they congregatione, whilk thou hest coft o’auld ...’ [HSR], ‘...e'en til this mountan whilk his richt han’ had coft’ [HSR] (from Medieval Dutch).

Cogs Knowes (kögz-nowz) n., pl. local name for hills near Cogsmill schoolhouse.

Cogsmill (kögz-nil) n. hamlet on the Newcastleton Road, past Stobs. Little now remains of what was once a thriving village, except the community hall and former school. There were once several more houses, including a post office, which also served as a shop, as well as a school and blacksmith’s. For much of the 20th century there was a public phone box there. In a circle of trees behind the school lie the remains of what has been traditionally identified with the chapel of St. Cuthbert that is mentioned in 12th century writings. The village has also been the site of Ride-outs during the lead-up to the Common Riding. Philip Scott was recorded there in 1709 and John Nisbet in 1721. James Cavers was there in 1860 (it is ‘Cogsmiln’ in 1710 and 1721).

Cogsmill Burn (kögz-nil-burn) n. stream which rises from several smaller streams around Berryfell Hill and flows in a roughly western direction, through Cogsmill, to reach the Slitrig near Stobs.

Cogsmill Cottage (kögz-nil-ko’-eous) n. former name for a cottage to the south of the main road, west of the main part of the hamlet of Cogsmill (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Cogsmill Hill (kögz-nil-hill) n. name for a hill near Cogsmill, possibly the one also called ‘Denholm Hill’.

Cogsmill Post Office (kögz-nil-póst-o-fees) n. former village post office in Cogsmill, which also served as the only shop in Slitrig Water. It stood near the main road, in the former schoolhouse, at the corner of the side road to the later school building and was demolished in the latter part of the 20th century. In the early 1900s it was run by Mrs. Rutherford.

Cogsmill Schuil (kögz-nil-skil) n. former school at Cogsmill, near to the site of St. Cuthbert’s Chapel. There had long been a school run informally in that area, but it was not founded until 1829. It was run by Cavers Parish and later by the combined Cavers and Kirkton School Board. The schoolroom and schoolmaster’s house were built by public subscription. In 1841 it is referred to as ‘Slitrig Cavers’ and had more than 40 pupils in the 1830s. Thomas Shiel was schoolmaster from 1829. William MacNeill was teacher there 1849–55. James W. Scott is recorded as schoolmaster (as well as postmaster) there in 1857 and into the 1860s and Andrew Oliver in the 1880s. In the early 1900s there was a Mr. Scott, followed by a Mr. Wordhaugh. The building was also used for occasional sermons to the locals. The building was constructed as a school and house for the master in 1880, replacing an earlier schoolhouse (which stood close to the main road, to the south). It closed in 1961 and the building was then converted into a private dwelling.

cogster (kog-stur) n., arch. in flax making, someone who breaks the lint with a swingle and throws it to the heckler.

Coila (koi-la) n. Pictish King of the 2nd century, possibly the original for ‘Old King Cole’ and origin of the ‘Kyle’ district in Ayrshire. The word was used by Burns as the name for his muse, and is sometimes used for all of Scotland – ‘Give me the hills where Ossian lies And Coilla’s Minstrel sang’ [HSR].

the Coille (thu-koil) n. J.P. Alison designed home, easily seen from the Denholm Road below Crow Hill. It was built for manufacturer William Boyd Sime around 1910 and was formerly called Cocklecoty.

coinye (koìn-ye) v., arch. to coin – ‘...being £11 money of this realme thereuntil, being three 4 merk peices coneyyst (i.e. coined) with the milne rynd ...’ [BR1642] (‘coinyit’ would be the normal past tense, but several variants existed).

Coit Acre (koì'-ä-kur) n. former name for an acre of farmland in Lilliesleaf Parish. It was rented by William Middlemas (tenant farmer at Friarshaw) to John Redford in 1563.

Coitlaw see Cottlaw
Coklaw see Cocklaw
Coldhouse Kipp see Cauldhouse
Coldingham (kold-ing-hum) n. village near the coast in Berwickshire, partly hidden in a valley. The Mount is probably the ‘Holmelemon’, a Norman motte where courts were held. Population (1991) 512.

Coldingham Priory (kold-ding-um-prI-o-ree) n. ancient priory near Coldingham, founded by King Edgar in 1098 and dedicated to St. Mary. An earlier monastery may go back to the 7th century, established by St. Abba (or Ebba) who ran it until her death in 683. The nuns are supposed to have cut off their lips and noses to preserve their honour when thevikings attacked in 870. It was sacked by King John in 1216, burned by the English in 1430 and 1544 and demolished by Cromwell in 1648. It was then reconstructed in 1661 and partially rebuilt 1835–58 to form the parish church. From the 16th century the priory and estates were run by the Homes.

Coldingham Loch (köl-ding-um-loch) n. small loch about 2 miles north of Hawick, used for fishing?? Also a loch near Coldingham.

Coldinghamshire (köl-ding-um-shIr) n. unofficial name for the area around Coldingham in Berwickshire, once governed separately from the priory.

Coldstream (köl-old-stream) n. town on the River Tweed in Berwickshire, being for a long time the first reliable ford upriver from Berwick. Hence it was a historic crossing point for the Tweed and has a strong military past. The town gave its name to the Coldstream Guards in the late 17th century. It is built around a large Market Place, and once had a Cistercian Priory, destroyed by Hertford’s men in 1545. The town became a Burgh of Barony in 1621. The main bridge over the Tweed was built 1763–66, making the town one of the main Edinburgh to London routes, since it was the first bridge built between Berwick and Peebles. The bridge also has the Marriage-house at its north end, a reminder of times when the town served as the eastern version of Gretna Green for eloping couples from England. Coldstram Civic Week started in 1952 and includes a ride to the Flodden Memorial. A huge sycamore tree nearby is supposed to have been planted to commemorate those lost at Flodden. The local pronunciation is ‘Castrum’. Population (1991) 1,746. ‘Second to None – a History of Coldstream’ was published in 2010 (the origin of the name is related to the fact that a bridge was only built across the Tweed there in 1766).

Coliburn (ko-lee-burn) n. lands that were part of the former extensive Lairdship of Ringwoodfield, somewhere in or near the upper Teviot valley. It is not impossible it is connected with Colifort. It is transcribed ‘Co ...burne’ in the 1634 service of heirs, ‘Coatburne’ in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch and ‘Coatburn’ in the 1693 charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith (it is ‘Coiburn’ in 1621, ‘Coiburne’ in 1653 and ‘Coliburne’ in 1660 and ‘Coitburne’ or ‘Coliburne’ in 1661).

Colifort (ko-lee-for) n. former farm in the Slitrig valley, recorded as early as 1428, with the name surviving in ‘Coliforthill’. It was ‘Colifurdlansis’ in 1509/10 when listed as part of the lands of John Gledstains of that Ilk going back to much earlier charters. The ‘twenty shilling land of Collefurd’ is recorded in a 1511 charter of the Douglases of Cavers and was mentioned again in 1539. In 1550 William Scott, son of Wat ‘of Teviotdale’ took sasine of the lands from James Douglas of Cavers, and Hob Scott ‘callit of Colyfurd’ was hanged for theft and related crimes...
Coliforthill

Coliforthill (ko-leer-fur'-hil) n. farm on the Slitrig a few miles outside Hawick, with a hill-fort nearby. It was part of the Barony of Cavers, where the superiority was long held by the Douglases. It was for a time the home of a branch of the Douglas family. The site contains a fort; it is 'Colliford hill' and on Stobie's 1770 map as 'Collifordhill'.

In 1564, William Scott, 'sone to Wyll of Collefurde, callit Reid Wyllie' witnessed a document in Hawick in 1585. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. At that time along with Coliforthill it was described as a 20-shilling land. James Scott 'colifer't was recorded on the 1694 Hearth tax rolls in Hawick and in the Hawick Parish records of 1704, 1705 and 1713. Thomas Stavert was farmer there in at least 1785–93 (the origin is probably from the Old English personal name 'Cola' plus 'ford', since the spellings often ended with 'd' rather than 't' until about 1700, e.g. it appears as 'Colleford' in 1562 and 'Collefoord' in 1687; there is some confusion over the origin of the name, since the nearby hill contains a fort: it is 'Collyfort' on Gordon's c. 1650 map and is often spelled that way later).

Colislimn (ko-leez-lin) n. house 2 1/2 miles from Hawick along the Slitrig, built in the Scottish Baronial style in 1896 by the Haddons as a country retreat. The initials of Walter Haddon and his wife Caroline Ross are carved above the front door. The architect was J.P. Alison. The land was formerly part of Coliforthill farm, sold by Douglas of Cavers to the Haddons in 1896. In the 20th century it was home to the Young family. It is now available as a self-catering luxury holiday property. It is named after the nearby waterfall. The land was formerly part of Coliforthill farm, sold by Douglas of Cavers to the Haddons in 1896. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined building and enclosure to the south of the house – 'There comes from Slitrig's source a mournful din, Replied to by a groan from Coli's Linn' [WNK].

Collace (ko-las) n. Robert (16th/17th C.) described as 'reader of Hassinden' when he married Janet Blaikie in Edinburgh in 1606. The minister at this time is recorded as John Mader, so it was unclear who had the 'living' and who was actually the minister. In deeds of 1613 and 1632 he is recorded as schoolmaster in Hassendean Parish. He may have been one of the Collaces of Balmoun near Brechin (also spelled 'Collas').

Collar-binder (ko-ler-bin-dur) n. a person who attaches collars to garments in the knitwear trade, using a machine that makes a link chain. This was part of the clean side of the mill, after the wool had been washed, and traditionally a woman's job. Also sometimes called a 'linker'.

Collect (ko-lek) v., arch. to collect (also written 'colleck').

Collekit (ko-le-kee', -i') pp. collected – '...cursing the woman's 'lang tongue, which she might hae kept cannie till the happinies had been collecket' [WNK], '...The hampies, too, when young and glaickit, And strung in bands, like gems collekit' [AD].

Colledge (ko-leeg) n. Adam Norman McLeod (1872–1965) born in Summershall Edinburgh, son of Thomas and Elizabeth Darling. His grandfather William was born in Denholm, and his great-grandfather Joshua was probably brother of Denholm stocking manufacturer Thomas. After his father died his mother raised the family in Selkirk, where he became a solicitor's clerk, later moving to Annan. Keen on music, he became organist at Lamlash Parish Church, then at the Episcopalian Kirk in Edinburgh and at Walkerburn. Meanwhile he carried out formal training at St. Mary's Cathedral Edinburgh, gaining the A.L.C.M. diploma in 1901 and L.L.C.M. in 1903. In 1901 he became organist for the Old Parish Church, succeeding K.E. Reinle. He was a private music teacher in Hawick, living at 6 Dakers Place. He quickly became a part-time music teacher in Hawick schools, obtaining a full-time appointment at Hawick High School by 1907, remaining until his retirement in 1937. He lived at 6 Douglas Road and later ‘the Poplars’ in Denholm. Apart from music, his other great love was horse-riding, and he was an enthusiastic follower at Hawick and Selkirk Common Ridings as well as of the Buccleuch Hunt. In 1928 he who wrote the music for ‘The Mosstrooper’s Song’, with words by J.E.D. Murray. He married Agnes Lily Grierson, from Jedburgh. Their son Tom (1902–83) was Acting Father in 1953 and married Margaret Elizabeth Douglas Scott. Joshua (1766–1851) resident of Cavers Parish. It seems likely he was a brother of Thomas, who lived in Denholm at the same time; he also married a Leyden, his wife being Isabel. In the 1789 record of their marriage, his forename is given as ‘John’ and his wife’s as ‘Mellow’. Their children included: Jean (b.1795); Mary (b.1796); Isobel (b.1798), who married James Munn; Thomas (b.1800); Grace (b.1802); Anna (b.1803); William (b.1805), a surgeon in Edinburgh; Elizabeth (b.1807); Joshua (b.1809); James (b.1812); and Joshua (again, b.1815). Joshua Leyden (b.1815) born in North Leith, son of Joshua and Isabella Leyden. He was a stocking-maker in Denholm. In 1851 he was living at about Kirkside. He emigrated to New Zealand. In 1857 he donated ‘trophies from the Eastern war’ to the Hawick Archæological Society. He married Elizabeth Farquhar. Their children included: Elizabeth Isabella (b.1838), who died young; Isabella Leydon (b.1839), also died young; Joshua Leydon (1841–86); Elizabeth Farquhar (1842–99); Isabella Cowen (1844–89); Peter Farquhar (b.1846), died in infancy; Margaret (b.1847); Catherine (b.1849); James Farquhar (b.1853), died young. He died at Dunedin in New Zealand. Thomas (d.1841) probably the first hosiery manufacturer in Denholm, at the end of the 18th century. Andrew Scott was an apprentice with him. He married Janet Leyden. She was a widow living in Kirkside in Denholm in 1841 and 1851 (aged 79). Their children included: Janet (b.1796), who married stockingsmaker Robert Scott; Grace (b.1797); Jane (1799–1893), who married farmer Andrew Haig; William Wilson (1802–72), who died in Lanark; Mary (1804–72), who married grocer John Mack and then Jedburgh shoemaker James Haliburton; Leyden or Lydia (b.1806), who married John Ballantyne and died in New Zealand; and Betty (b.1808).

collie-bag (ko-lee-lin) n. name for part of the Ale Water near the farm of Dimpleknowe (note the similarity to Collie’s Lynn).

Collier (kol-yur) n. Andrew (17th C.) tenant at Grange in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is listed as ‘Collyer’ and he paid tax for 2 hearths. He could be the Andrew who had children Janet (b.1691) and Andrew (b.1693) baptised in Bedrule Parish. Andrew (18th C.) married Isabel Leyden in Cavers in 1713. Andrew (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. In 1719 he married Agnes, daughter of Walter Scott. Their children included: Katherine (b.1720); Margaret (b.1722); Violet (b.1724); Agnes (b.1731); Robert (b.1737); and Andrew (b.1740). Additionally, Margaret (b.1741) and Christian (b.1746), baptised in Cavers, may have been his daughters. The witnesses in 1720 were masons John and Andrew Turnbull. He could be the Andrew, son of James, baptised in Bedrule in 1693. His surname is also written ‘Colwort’.

Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Helen Brown and their children included: Andrew (b.1772); Christian (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1775). Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident of Whitriggs in Cavers Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her surname is transcribed ‘Coilliart’. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitlaw. His wife was Christian Turnbull and their children included: James (b.1699); Andrew (b.1702); and Janet (b.1704). The witnesses in 1699 were Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield and glover John Hart and in 1702 were James Lamb and Dand Gray in Whitlaw. James (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Another ‘J. Collier, London’ was also listed, and so there must have been a local connection to the family.

Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, possibly the son of Andrew and Agnes Scott born in 1737. He married Margaret Inglis and their children included: Janet (b.1774); Thomas (b.1777); and Margaret (b.1779). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Hawick weaver Charles Scott in 1766 (also formerly written 'Coalyart', 'Coliart', 'Collyeart', 'Colwort', 'Colyer', etc.).

Collier's Plantin (ko-lyurs-, ko-lee-urz-plawn'-in) n. former name for an area of trees in Wilton near Burnfoot Mill. It was named after a man called Collier who committed suicide there about 1817 (and his daughter is also recorded as taking her own life in 1855). It once held an old hovel, which until the late 19th century was about the only house between Hawick and Burnfoot (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, just to the south of the railway line, roughly opposite Weensland Mill, so further west than Burnfoot Mill).

collie-shangie (ko-lee-shawng-gee) n., arch. a dog fight, uproar, disturbance – ‘...the fitting of the seats with doors, by which each shepherd could keep his fidus Achates beside him, was the first blow ... to the almost weekly collie-shangie’ [RJR].

Collie's Lynn (ko-leez-lin) n. place name in the Slitrig valley, possibly and older name for the Horseley Burn. The name survives in the house 'Colislinn' (possibly related to Colifort). The village is the name of a stronghold of the Borthwicks – 'Colmslie stands home of the Cairncrosses of Colmslie and later a stronghold of the Borthwicks' [SIC].

Collie Sike (ko-lee-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near Hazelyside and flowing into the Hartsgarth Burn to join the Hermitage Water. On the western bank there are the remains of what may be a chambered cairn, as well as a homestead, some lazy-beds and a sheep-fold. To the south there is a separate ruined building.

Collifort see Colifort

Collin (ko-lin) n. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson, as it is known in the present day. His surname is written 'calline'. In 1687 he 'had a sone baptized gotten in fornica|tio|ne wt Issobell Magowins', with witnesses Thomas Caldwell and Thomas Lockie. Later that year he married Isobel 'Gowins' in Robertson Parish. William (17th C.) recorded at Horsleyhill in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in Robertson Parish. His name was written 'colline'. He married Grisel Scott and their children included: William (b.1680); Janet (b.1682); and Bessie (b.1687). The witnesses in 1682 were John Noble and Thomas Robson and in 1687 were John and Robert Noble.

Collingwood (ko-lin-wood) n. Sir Cuthbert of Elsington (c.1540–96) son of John, he was Sheriff of Northumberland and Commissioner for the English West and Middle Marches. He was taken prisoner by the Scots at the Raid of the Redeswire, but released soon afterwards. This is celebrated in the ballad – ‘But if ye wald a souldier search Among them a’ were ta’en that night. What name sae wordie, to put in verse, As Collingwood, that corteous knight’. In 1587 he led a group of 800–900 men into Teviotdale (without the knowledge of the Warden), presumably intending to raid the area. However, the Borderers were warned in advance and emptied their houses, so that he returned to England with nothing. Then Scott of Buccleuch and Ker of Cessford led a band over the Cheviots to Elsington, attacking the town and taking prisoners. He rode out with his sons and servants, was attacked, and then a group including Captain ‘Bellowsis’ fought with the Scots, several being killed on both sides and around 150 Scots prisoners being rounded up. One of his sons was wounded and another taken prisoner. He married Dorothy Bowes and was succeeded by his son Thomas. His descendant of the same name was second in command of the navy at Trafalgar and famous for writing the letter that gave the news of the death of Admiral Nelson.

collogue (ko-lög) v., poet. to chat together, be in league – 'The World, The Flesh, and the Deil are colloguin' there, As the Auld Year patiently stands to thole his assize' [DH].

collop (ko-hup) n., poet. portion of food, slice of meat – 'For the Cat will find out to her cost We’re a most expensive collop' [WE].

Colmslie (kömz-lee) n. ruined 16th century tower a few miles north of Galashiels, very close to Hillslap and Langshaw towers. It was the original home of the Cairncrosses of Colmslie and later a stronghold of the Borthwicks – 'Colmslie stands on Colmslie Hill, The water it flows round Colmslie Mill; The mill and the kiln gang bonnily, And it’s up with the whippers of Colmslie' [T] (the origin is probably Old English ‘cumb leah’ for ‘the clearing in the valley’, and is first recorded in 1160).

colour (ku-lur) n. flag, emblem – ‘...and voted Thomas Hardie, merchand, to be ensigne and to carry the colour’ [BR1706], ‘...Routed them and took their colour’ [JH], ‘Thus we boast a Moor and Colour, Won by feats of hardy valour’ [JH].

colour (ku-lur) v., arch. to represent falsely, pass off goods as one’s own – ‘I shall colour no man’s goods under colour of mine own, as I shall answer to God’ [BR1681], n. pretence, semblance, especially intended to mislead – ‘We doubt not but your lordschip sicklick, under colore, will shawe favoure unto us, seeing wee are mynded to keip’ [CBP1597].
The Colour (thu-ku-hur) n. original name for part of James Hogg’s song about Hornshole, now known as ‘Teribus’. It was published along with ‘Flodden Field’ (which has the same chorus, but is not now sung) in 1819. Although of course taking much poetic license, it nevertheless gives one of the earliest accounts of the events of 1514, including the first published mention of a connection with Hornshole. The publication was in Kelso rather than Hawick, with the two political verses removed, to be re-inserted decades later. The third edition of Hogg’s verses was entitled ‘Flodden Field and the Colour; or Hawick’s Common Riding’, and was printed in 1829. Hogg’s last revision was published in 1837, and since then the order of the verses has changed considerably, for example the original first verse, ‘Hawick shall triumph ’mid destruction . . .’, has been moved towards the end, and the original second verse, ‘Scotia felt thine ire, O Odin . . .’ is now the first.

The Colour Bussing (thu-ku-hur-bus-in) n. event in the Town Hall on the Thursday evening of Common Riding week, tickets being available by ballot. It is perhaps the highlight of the ceremonial part of the Common Riding, with a format that has been largely unchanged for over a century. The Cornet’s supporters traditionally fill the gallery, and are each given a ribbon by the Maids of Honour. At 7 p.m. the Burgh Officer asks the audience to stand as the Provost and Magistrates are played in by the Drums and Fifes, followed by the Lasses and the Maids of Honour. The Cornet’s Lass carries the flag and ‘busses’ it on the stage, by tying ribbons of blue and gold to the head of the staff as it is held by the Right- and Left-Hand Lasses. She then passes it to the Provost as Chief Magistrate, saying that she hopes he finds it ‘well and truly bussed’. The Provost presents it to the Cornet, charging him to ‘ride the meiths and marches of the Commonty of Hawick according to ancient custom’, and to return the flag ‘unstained and unsullied’. The Cornet’s Lass is also presented with her badge of office and puts the sash on the Cornet to complete his uniform. The Provost chairs the schedule of entertainment, introducing the Chief Guest, who gives their speech. This is followed by a programme of singing and recitations, ending with the Song Singer leading ‘Teribus’. The Drums and Fifes then play out the Principals and dignitaries, after which the Burgh Officer then reads the Proclamation from the balcony to the crowds outside. The Cornet then begins his procession round town, accompanied by the Saxhorn Band and the Drums and Fifes, stopping at the Horse to ‘buss’ the flag on the statue. This involves the Cornet climbing a ladder to tie blue and yellow ribbons onto the statue’s flagpole. The Cornet then removes his hat and raises it 3 times, leading the crowd in cheers. The origin of the bussing ceremony is surely quite ancient, although it is not mentioned in the Burgh Records until 1809, when it was stated that ‘the Cornet and his two men shall wait upon the Chief Magistrate the evening before the Common-Riding day to know the hour of his riding next day, and may then dress the Colour’. Before the Ceremonial Committee was formed the Colour Bussing was much lower key, being performed at the Senior (or sometimes Junior) Bailie’s house until 1861, with the Bailie refusing to allow this custom the following year. So until 1886 it occurred at an inn selected by the Cornet. It moved to the Council Chambers in 1887, with ‘Teribus’ sung from the window immediately afterwards, followed by the Cornet’s Walk and then musical entertainment and speeches in the Town Hall afterwards. The concert after the Bussing was tried out in the main Town Hall as a public event in 1894, although not repeated the following year. The Colour Bussing ceremony was first performed in the main Town Hall (but only by the Cornet’s invitation) in 1896, and was a public event from 1897. The first admission charge was made in 1906. Two separate ceremonies were carried out in 1914, 1919 and 1920, due to demand. ‘Bussing’ the flag on the Horse monument began in 1923 and loud speakers were introduced outside the Town Hall in 1928. The 1933 Colour Bussing was held in the Volunteer Park (part of which was filmed), while the 1934 ceremony was broadcast on BBC radio. The events were shown on TV screens visible from the Street since about 1990 and transmitted live to the Heart of Hawick since 2014 – ‘Come lads, get on with your work and let’s hear no more about the Buller-Cussing!’ [RM], ‘. . .if that pride to evident at the Colour Bussing could be bottled and sold, the town would be worth a fortune!’ [ZE] (sometimes hyphenated as ‘Colour-Bussin’).

Colquhoun (kol-koon) n. Rev. James (18th/19th C.) first minister of the secession church in Lilliesleaf. He was minister of the Relief congregation of Campsie, but was involved in some sort of dispute and was suspended. He was minister of the Congregational Church in Perth for 5 years and then in 1801 became minister at North Shields. His appointment at Lilliesleaf in 1808 was not sanctioned by the Relief Synod, because of his earlier suspension by Glasgow Presbytery. This resulted in the congregation being cut off and later becoming part of the ‘Burgher’ Kirk. He remained in Lilliesleaf until 1814 (being ‘ultimately suspended for intemperance’), returning to England where he stopped being a minister. He may be the Rev. Colquhoun who died in Hull in 1829 and was brother of Rev. Dr. John Colquhoun of South Leith.

Colt (köl’, koo-tur’) n. Rev. John (d.bef. 1688) second son of Adam, minister of Inveresk and Elizabeth Johnston. His father had previously been minister of Borthwick Parish in Lothian (making for some possible confusion). He was licensed by Dalkeith Presbytery in 1635, became minister of Longnewton in 1642 and appears to have continued there until about 1665. He was minister at Roberton during the time of the reinstatement of Episcopalianism (i.e. rule by bishops), roughly 1660s–80s. The parish was instituted in 1659, but suppressed again in favour of Hassendean in 1666, and not reinstated until 1690. Although it is unclear exactly when he served as minister, he appears to have been the first one, and may have started in 1663. He is recorded in a letter of late 1663 discussing financial matters with the Earl of Lothian, so he was still minister of Longnewton at that point (although could have held overlapping positions). He is recorded doing penance for immorality in Lilliesleaf Kirk in 1682. He married Margaret Douglas and their children included John, Rebecca (who married George Cleland, minister of Morton) and Margaret. His daughter Rebecca is recorded receiving support from the Kirk Session of South Leith in 1688. The date of his death is unknown.

Coltart (köl-, koo-tur’) n. Archibald ‘Airie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as tenant in ‘Quhelerig’, which is probably Wheelrig. He and Andrew Armstrong ‘Quhythauche’ were accused of stealing lambs from ‘Partburne’. He was found guilty of resetting the animals and ordered to be branded on the cheek. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Francis (18th C.) farmer in Woodburn in the Borthwick valley in the early 18th century. He is recorded at Woodburn in 1727, 1737 and 1742. In 1724 he married Isabella Young. Their children included: Mary (b.1727); George (b.1732); John (b.1734); an unnamed child (b.1737); Isobel (b.1737), who probably married James Cavers; William (b.1739); Agnes (b.1742); and Agnes (again, b.1745). George (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope in 1763, Whitfield in 1765 and Todshaw in 1767. He married Jean White in Roberton in 1758 and their children included William (b.1763), Jean (b.1765) and Francis (b.1767). Gilbert (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Heidshaw’ when he (along with several others) gave security for Mungo Scott of Castleside in 1623. His name was written as ‘Coutart’. He is surely related to William, who died in the same parish in 1765, aged 102. John (17th C.) resident of Shielwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. His name is written ‘Coutert’. John (18th C.) resident at ‘Borthwickburnfoot’ (i.e. Borthwickbrae Burnfoot) when Robert (b.1772) and William (b.1775) were baptised. He was probably the John who married Margaret Cowan in 1766 and whose other children included: Francis (b.1769); Jean (b.1770); John (b.1777); and Agnes (b.1782). Walter (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. His name is listed as ‘Couthart’. He is surely related to James, who was at Headshaw earlier. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for John Veitch and Jean Coltart in 1689 and another for James Murray and Helen Nivison in 1690. Probably the same Walter married Isobel ‘Heline’ or ‘Hellam’, with children including Janet (b.1689) and Mary (b.1692). The witnesses in 1689 were Robert Hope and James Murray. Walter (1698/9–1781) smith at ‘Brickhall’ (although it is unclear where this is) according to his gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. He may have been son of William, who was smith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He is recorded at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1736 and 1741. He married Agnes Reid in Roberton Parish in 1733 and she died in 1780, aged 69. Children baptised in Roberton Parish who were probably his are: William (b.1736); James (b.1738); Margaret (b.1741); Margaret (again, b.1745); Jean (b.1747); Robert (b.1751); and twins Walter and Robert (b.1756). Walter (18th C.) married Betty Rae in Roberton Parish in 1762. He was at Harden Burnfoot in 1771. His children included Francis (b.1771). William (1662/3–1765) smith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He is buried in Ancrum Parish, where it is recorded that both he and his wife Margaret Renwick (d.1749) died at the age of 102. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish.
Colterscleuch

He was at Clarilaw in 1708. His children included: Margaret (b.1707); and John (b.1708). William (17th/18th C.) living at Commonside in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson Parish. It is possible he is the same man as the smith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. William (d.1770) resident of Rulewater. He married twice, his second wide being Janet Armstrong in Langside. Their daughter was Elizabeth, who married mason Alexander Dalgleish. His name is ‘Coltherd’ in the parish register. He died at Hillshaugh. He could be related to the William ‘Coltherd’, smith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, who had a tombstone in Ashkirk Kirkyard recording that both he and his wife died at the age of 102 William (1701/2–62) wright at Langhaugh in the Rule valley. He married Agnes Mair, who died in 1757, aged 62. Along with his wife and daughter Helen, he was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. The family name was spelled both ‘Cowtard’ and ‘Colthard’ (also written ‘Coatard’, ‘Coltard’, ‘Colthart’, ‘Coltherd’, ‘Coutart’, ‘Coutert’, ‘Couthart’, ‘Couthart’, ‘Coltherd’ and variants; see also Coulter and note the possible confusion with Collier, which was also written ‘Colwort’).

Colterscleuch (kol-turz-clooch) n. area on the A7 just before Teviothead, once the site of a toll bar. This part of the road was upgraded in the mid-1990s, and formerly a notoriously bumpy stretch. The farm there has long belonged to the Duke of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Buccleuch properties, at that time covering 591 acres, bounded by Northhouse, Southdeanrig, Bowanhill, Commonside and the River Teviot. 3 flints found on the farm here are in the Museum, as well as a perforated stone disk. 4 people were recorded there in 1694. It was surveyed as part of Buccleuch properties in 1718; at that time it consisted of 593 acres and was bounded by Northhouse, Southdeanrig, Bowanhill, Commonside and the River Teviot. William Grieve was tenant in the mid-1700s. There was a Tully there in the late 18th century. James Ruickbie ran the toll-house there in the late 18th century, and Gideon Murray after that. In at least 1794–97 the farmer there was John Little, with John Turnbull being a shepherd at the same time. Henry Elliot and his son William were farmers through much of the 19th century, followed by Henry’s daughter Margaret, and then his daughter Joanna’s sons, called Harrison. It was said to be tenanted by Jock Grieve in one version of the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer o’ the Fair Dodheid’ – ‘He has turned him to the Tiviot side, E’en as fast as he could drie, Till he cam to the Coul tart Cleugh, And there he shouted baith loud and hie’ [T], ‘Coltherds Cleugh and Cauldcleugh-heid Sae lang’s ye mind thae words Lopin oot at ye fae the hauf-inch Tweeddale map Ye’ve sma cause tae be warsellin wi sair heid Ower the demise o the guid Scots tongue’ [LSF] (also written ‘Colterscleugh’; a house near there is marked ‘Cleck’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map, while ‘Cawthirscluech’ is marked by Blaeu closer to Colterscleuch Shiel and ‘Cousoldcleuch’ is marked between; it is ‘Couterscleugh’ in 1694, ‘Colterscluch’ in 1708, ‘Colthers cleugh’ in 1724, ‘Coutltres Cleugh’ in 1744, ‘Coutlterscleugh’ in 1797 and ‘Coltherdsclieuch’ in 1821; the origin is probably related to the ‘coulter’ of a plough, perhaps from the shape of the land).

Colterscleuch Monument (kol-turz-clooch-mo-new-min’) n. name sometimes used for the Henry Scott Riddell monument on Dryden Fell above Colterscleuch.

Colterscleuch Shiel (kol-turz-clooch-sheel) n. farmstead in the hills high above Colterscleuch Cottage, near the head of the Cromrig Burn. It has long been derelict.

Coltman (kol-min) n. Charles (b.1817/8) English stockingmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s and was one of the men who helped introduce cricket. In 1841 he was living at Dovemount. He married Charlotte Page in Hawick. Their children included Frederick, Charles (b.1855) and George (b.1861). F. (19th/20th C.) along with his bowling partner W.M. Pennycook, he was the first winner of the Pow Cup in 1905. James ‘Jim’ (?– ) a gas-man by trade, but well known as a local artist, particularly for the ‘Rum and Milk’ comic strips, other contributions to the Hawick News, and caricatures, some of which were published in ‘Yow Yins’ (1999). He also provided the sketches for the ‘Hawick Common Riding’ and ‘Aircie Olivers Birthday Cairds’. John L. ‘Jake’ (?– ) wrote ‘First hundred: Teviotdale Harriers Club centenary, 1889–1989’ (1989). Marjory H. (??– ) wrote ‘Lest We Forget: Tom Scott, R.S.A. – His Link with Hawick Common-riding’ in 1991 and ‘Tom Scott, R.S.A. : the Scottish Borders artist (1854–1927)’ in 1996.

Colville (kol-vil) n. Sir James of East Wemyss (d.1540) elder son of Robert of Ochiltree. He exchanged Ochiltree for East Wemyss in 1529. He was appointed Comptroller before 1527, then Director of the Chancery in 1529. He was Auditor of the Exchequer and in 1538 served as Comptroller for the lands of Jedforest that the Crown had gained. For his work on these accounts he was granted a fee, as well as the ‘fermes’ from Stryndis, Lethem and Wester Harelawcleuch. He became a judge of the College of Justice in 1532 and was one of the Commissioners for the truce of Newcastle in 1533. He was found guilty of treason in 1539 for supporting the Douglases0 Robert of Oxnam (14th C.) son of Sir Robert of Oxnam and Ochiltree. His father witnessed a charter relating to the town of Roxburgh in the 1330s. In 1354 he witnessed a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. He was witness to a charter of 1357/8 granting the lands of Altonburn to the Kers, a few years after being given up by the Rules. He also witnessed further lands being granted to the Kers by the William of ‘Blakdene’ in 1358. In about 1370 he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. He witnessed the grant of Drumlanrig to William Douglas in the period 1384–88. In 1390 he witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart. He was succeeded by his son Sir Thomas. Sir Robert of Oxnam and Ochiltree (d.bef. 1466) son of Robert of Oxnam and Margaret. He had the lands of Feu-Rule granted to him by Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1453. Also in 1453 he had a bond of loyalty with the same Andrew Ker. In 1464/5 he was on the panel that ruled on the argument over the lands of Flex between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar. Thomas (d.1219) son of Philip. He witnessed several undated charters of gifts to Melrose Abbey and the Church of Glasgow around the 1190s and early 1200s. His seal bears the legend ‘THEME DE COLLEVILLA SCOTTI’ and is referred to as ‘Thomas de Coleville cognomento Scot’ when he donated land to Melrose Abbey. He therefore joins a long list of men for whom ‘Scot’ was used as an additional name. He was imprisoned in 1210 for plotting against the King, but was redeemed. In about 1215 he donated land at ‘Keresban’ (Carsphaim in Galloway) to Vaudey Abbey. He had 7 children, John, William, Thomas and 4 unnamed daughters. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wilhelimum Colwele’ in 1427 when he was on the ‘inquest of retour’ for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. He is listed beside Turnbulls, Kers and other local men, and so is probably related to the Colvilles of Feu-Rule. Sir William (d.1508/9) grandson of Sir Robert. In 1488 he witnessed the charter for the Barony of Brauxholme. In 1499 he resigned half the lands of Feu-Rule into the hands of their superior, William Douglas of Cavers, in order to transfer them to Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing. He had a representative stand in for him at the Justice-aire in 1502, for his lands of Maxton. He also held the Barony of Oxnam and in that capacity granted sasine of Maxton Craig to William Turnbull (son of Adam of Philiphauge) in 1504. His daughter Elizabeth married Patrick Colquhoun and granted to her son-in-law, Robert Colville of Cleish, the reversion of the lands of Feu-Rule. In 1511 (by which time he was deceased) his daughter and heir Margaret granted lands in Oxnam to Andrew Kerr of Fernliehirst. (formerly ‘Coleuile’, ‘Colvil’, ‘Colvill’, ‘Colwil’ and variants).

Colvin (kol-vin) n. Mr. (18th C.) recorded as a dancing-master called ‘Colvinke’ in 1751 when he paid the Hawick Town Council for renting the Tolbooth for 3 months for dancing in. There is no other record of him, and so he may have gone round other towns at that time. There was a family of this surname in Kelso at about the same time. Rev. Robert Francis (1827–88) youngest son of Robert, minister of Johnstone in Annandale. He was educated at Glasgow University, became minister at Johnstone in 1852, resigned in 1854, was Chaplain in Bombay 1854–58, then minister at Kirkpatrick-Juxta 1865, resigning 1876 and living in Edinburgh without a charge for the next 8 years. In 1884 he became minister at Teviothead, where he remained until resigning in 1887. He died in Edinburgh. He married Helen Brown of Edinburgh and their children were Alice Mary, Annie Edith (missionary in the Calcutta Free Church), Robert Francis, Constance Helen, Marion and William.

Combe (köm) n. farnstead in Craik Forest, just south-west of Craikhope, also known as ‘Howpasley Combe’. The stream there is Comb Sike, with Comb Hass just to the south. Andrew Anderson was living there in 1762. John Beattie was shepherd there in the mid-19th century (it is ‘Coom’ in 1762, 1841 and 1851).

Combe (köm) n. Rev. Neil R. born in Stockport, he became a member of the Church of Scotland congregation of Sandyford Henderson Memorial in Glasgow and trained for the ministry after already holding a B.Sc. and M.Sc. He was assistant at Chryston near Glasgow before moving to St. George’s West (then combined with St. Margaret’s and Wilton South and Roberton) in 1984. He became Moderator of the Jedburgh Presbytery in 2008. He is married to Janet and has a son and 2 daughters. Walter (1892/3–1915) son of Walter and Margaret of Teviot Crescent. He is the only Hawick man killed on 12th July 1915 who has a known grave, at Skew Bridge Cemetery.

combination (kom-bin-ä-shin) n., arch. word formerly used to refer to a trade union – ‘Such combinations were at one time illegal, and queer schemes had to be adopted to evade the law’ [RM].

Combination Acts (kom-bin-ä-shin-actz) n. also known as the ‘Combination Laws’, a set of Parliamentary Acts passed in 1800 which essentially made it illegal to form trade unions, and made it difficult for workers to organise meetings. On one occasion the acts led to a meeting at the Little Haugh being officially chaired by a dog (Jock Paisley’s dog). The Acts were used against strikers in Hawick in 1817 and during the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ of 1822–23, but were repealed in 1824.

the Combination Pairhouse (thu-kom-bin-ä-shin-par-hooos) n. main poor house for the Hawick area, being a residential facility for the sick and poor, situated at the top left-hand corner of Drumlanrig Square. It was a long range of buildings, erected in 1856/7 to serve the needs of 11 neighbouring parishes, eventually extended to 13 (Ashkirk, Canonbie, Cavers, Ewes, Hawick, Hobbirk, Kirkhope, Kirkton, Lanholm, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Roberton, and Wilton). The building was designed to accommodate up to 133 inmates. It was built out of whinstone, with red sandstone dressings. The building was used by the military authorities during WWII. After 1930 it became the Drumlanrig Poor Law Institution, and served the whole of Roxburghshire. As social welfare norms changed it was converted to a care facility for the elderly and disabled, becoming Drumlanrig Hospital. The building had the Burgh coat of arms from the Buccleuch Memorial incorporated into its gable in the early 1970s. It ceased to be used as a hospital in 1994, and has been unoccupied since 2001.

combinations (kom-bin-ä-shinz) n., pl., arch. a one-piece undergarment with long sleeves and legs – ‘The daft cavortin’ o’ combinations …’ [DH].

the Combined Trades (thu-kom-bund-trädz) n. name of the informal team that started during WWII and was renamed ‘Hawick Trades’ when it joined the Border Junior League in 1946.

Comb Knowe (köm-now) n. hill on the south side of the Borthwick valley, across from Borthwick Mains farm. It is essentially a northern spur of Easter Park Hill.

comins (ku-minz) n., pl., arch. the dried radicles of malted barley, the last milk drawn from a cow.

the Commercial Bank (thu-ko-mer-shul-bawngk) n. the first Hawick agent for this bank was John Oliver, the Town Clerk, around 1820, in premises at 11 Buccleuch Street (now Pesco’s). This was the first building erected on the New Road after it was opened up. George & James Oliver were listed as local agents of the bank in 1852 and 1868. The purpose-built Hawick branch was constructed at 4 Tower Knowe by James Harkness, builder, in 1852. It was probably designed by David Rhind, the Commercial bank’s official architect (and not as sometimes attributed to John Dick Peddie, who worked with the Royal Bank, which this building would later become). The design is enhanced through Italian-style ornamental stone-work by Alexander Pirnie. The building was renovated and enlarged in 1935, when Armstrong’s ironmonger’s shop on the corner was demolished. The renovations involved intricate interior fittings by Scott Morton & Co. The bank later became the National Commercial, and amalgamated with the Royal Bank of Scotland in 1969, with the branch closing in 1986. The building then houses Clinty’s bar, followed by the Bank restaurant, and has an unprecedented view down the High Street.

the Commercial Inn (thu-ko-mer-shul-in) n. Hawick inn of the mid-19th century, on Buccleuch Street, opposite the Grapes Inn, at about No. 13. Robert Watson was innkeeper there in 1841 and his wife Isabella was proprietor there in 1852 and James Wood in 1856. Its assembly rooms (previously the Subscription Rooms) were used for lectures and other entertainments. The building was later used as Brodie’s school and several other uses (also sometimes called the ‘Commercial Hotel’).

the Commercial Inn (thu-ko-mer-shul-in) n. former name for a hostelry in Newcastleton. It was probably at 17 Douglas Square, having previously been the King’s Arms, and later the Ladedesdale Hotel. John Scott was proprietor in the 1860s.

Commercial Road (ko-mer-shul-röd) n. originally part of the Common, being the Under Haugh, it was developed for industry through the 19th century, particularly in the period 1871–74. The owners paid feus (rent) to the Town, and later purchased parts outright. Many feus continued to be paid into the Common Good fund until the Land Tenure Act of 1974. The street was opened to traffic in the 1870s, named in 1884 and once had granite setts that were only replaced by tarmac in 1962. Previous to the naming, the north side was referred to as Common Haugh and the south side as ‘Teviotside Road’. Before the North Bridge was built the road used to split in two, part leading up to the bridge level and the other part leading along the riverside through a small arch. Nos. 16, 18, 20, 24 are grade C listed, and 31 and 32 grade B listed.

commissar (ko-nee-sar) n., arch. a commissary, official delegate, representative of a Burgh, deputy of a Bishop — ‘…nor yet pursue ane and other before the Sheriff, Commissar, or other judge, but before the Bailies of this Bruch in ther awin Court …’ [BR1640], ‘A party is fined by the bailies for giving summons to another before the Commissar’ [JW1678].

commission (ko-mi-shin) n., arch. delegated authority, charge to perform a task — ‘By Walter Earl of Tarras and Francis Scott of mainger-toune, Jon Scott of Gorrenberrie, Jon Scott of Woall John Scott of Rennaldburne, mr David Scrimgeour of Cartmore, Gideon Scott of Outer-syde and mr duncan mcarthur of Bardyne conforme to Comission granted to them or any five of them for tht effect. By the said Dutches of Buccleuch[’Buc1692], ‘…the Baillies and Coun-cill hereby impower Bailie Roucastle and Walter Scott of Cunrhoaugh to concert with Robert Paisley, wright, anent the rebuilding of the Bailie’s seat …, whereament they have hereby full com-mission’ [BR1734].

Commissioner (ko-mi-shi-nur) n. a person appointed to represent a county at the Scottish Parliament, essentially the antecedent of Members of Parliament. This followed an Act of 1427 prescribing that 2 such men should be selected from among the ‘small Barons’, although it was not fully enforced until after a new Act of 1587. A set of disputes led there to be no Commissioners appointed when the small Barons and free-holders were ordered to convene to make appointments in 1628. Roxburghshire thus had 2 presentatives to the Scottish Parliament until the dissolution of that body in 1707, with perhaps 2 extra Commissioners being appointed in the last decade or two. The word ‘Commissioner’ was also used to refer to the 10 members of the commission set up in 1605 by King James to bring law and order to the Borders. The 5 Scottish Commissioners met in Hawick in August of that year.

the Commissioners Court (thu-ko-mi-shi-nurz-kör) n. Commissioners’ Court of Judiciary of the Sheriffdoms of Roxburgh, Berwick, Selkirk, the Commissioners o Supply

Peebles and Dumfries, and the Stewartries of Kirkcudbright and Annandale, also known as the Circuit Court. It may have replaced the ‘High Court of the Judiciary’ or King’s itinerant ‘Justice-aire’ for which there are local records in the period 1493–1513. The Commissioners’ Court existed from at least the 16th to the 19th centuries, and typically met twice a year at Jedburgh or Dumfries. By the 19th century the area had been extended to include Ayrshire. Originally it mainly heard cases from the wildest rieving regions of Liddesdale, Annandale, Nithsdale, etc. From the time Hawick was a Burgh the Magistrates would deal with crimes committed within the Town’s boundaries, but rural cases, and later more serious crimes, would be dealt with by the Circuit Court. The Border Commission met in Hawick in August of 1605. Copies of the proceedings from 1622 and 1623 were preserved in the Town archives, probably because Hawick Town Clerk Gilbert Watt had been Clerk to the Circuit. The Commissioners at that time were Walter Scott of Buccleuch, Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam, Sir William Seton of Kylesmure, Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh and William Lord Cranstoun. Commissioners in 1623 included James Maxwell of Kirkconnell, Sir William Grierson of Lag and Sir John Charteris of Amisfield.

the Commissioners o Supply (thu-ko-mi-nee) n. organisation set up in each county to collect land taxes and raise the local militia, following the Act of Convention in 1667. Individuals were usually appointed on an annual basis. They were later concerned with the upkeep of roads and bridges, the success of the harvest and maintaining law and order. The Head Court of the Commission was held on the first Tuesday of October each year. Early lists of Commissioners for the county of Roxburghshire are useful information about the most prominent landowners of the time. Their responsibilities were largely taken over by the newly created County Councils in 1889. In Hawick they made contributions in 1761, 1762 and 1763 to help pay off the debt incurred by building the Teviot Bridge.

commit (ko-mi) pp., arch. committed – ‘in an egregious and most insolent ryott commit by him upon Adam Young . . . ’ [BR1685], ‘. . . and was in a most sharp manner told if he commit the like fault in time coming he should not reside either in town or ye Landward part of this parish’[PR1718].

common (ko-min) n. a tract of land belonging to the community, as described in a town charter and used by the citizens for certain purposes, e.g. pasturage and peats – ‘. . . That some day they, Like mei, will turn grey, Yet Commons they’ll ride for a’, Yet Commons they’ll ride for a’’ [JEDM], adj. relating to the common, public.

the Common (thu-ko-min) n. Hawick’s common land. When granted in 1537 it consisted of about 1,549 acres in the ‘Common Moor’, together with land at Myreselawgreen and beyond, and other parts within the Burgh boundary, particularly the flat land on the west of the Teviot. The Common Moor extended from the Vertish to the current racecourse, and to beyond the ‘Caa Knowe’. It was described in the 1537 Charter in pidgin French as ‘le common hauch et le common mure de Hawick’, making it clear that these rights pre-dated the charter. The Common was certainly granted earlier than 1537, and most likely at least as early as the first (lost) charter giving Hawick its ‘burgh of barony’ status in the 15th century; it may even have existed as communal land before the granting of any charter. The earliest description is ‘between Burnford on the east, Troutlawford on the west, and the syke of Wintownmoss on the south, and the ditches of Goldielands and Fynnik on the north sides from the one to the other’. A map surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718 shows the estimated outline at that time, bounded by Burnflat, the Slitrig, Little and Meikle Whitlaw, the lands of Eliott of Stobs, the farms of Over and Nether Southfield, Newbigging, Whitchesters, Alton Croft, Goldielands, Cumnhaugh and the West Mains; there are some minor differences compared with the map drawn up by J.P. Alison in the 1890s and the area was stated to be 1706 acres. In 1734 it was described as ‘lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawfoord upon the west, the dykes of Common

Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South'. The boundary of the old Common stretched for over 10 miles in length. The Common was certainly granted earlier than 1537, and most likely at least as early as the first (lost) charter giving Hawick its 'burgh of barony' status in the 15th century; it may even have existed as communal land before the granting of any charter. In about 1766 the Council reserved some higher ground for plantations, but they were not planted until almost 60 years later, covering about 60 acres. Following a legal opinion about ownership from advocate James Montgomery, parts of the Common at Myreslawgreen were first feued in 1766 and in the same year small pieces of the Common were let, adjacent to the lands of the neighbouring tenants, in an attempt to prevent encroachment onto the Moor. This led to clashes with the tenants of the Duke of Buccleuch and a formal legal action to discussion the division of the Common was brought by the Duke's agents in 1767. In that year a small party (including legal representatives from both sides) walked around the full Common, pointing out the precise boundaries; this was commemorated by a walk around the old boundaries in 1717. After 1777 the Common Moor was reduced to 1,084 acres (or in Scots measure, 852 acres, 1 rood and 28 falls), the other roughly 1/3 went to neighbouring landowners; parts were then enclosed and used to generate rent for the town, while preserving certain rights of access and use for fairs and the Common Riding. The Trysting Ground (now Thorterdynes) was feued in the late 18th century and part of the Under Haugh (now Commercial Road) was sold off in 1847. Also in 1847 a field of 7 1/2 acres at the west of the Vertish Hill was sold to the heritors of Hawick Parish and exchanged with the Duke of Buccleuch for a piece of land that was used for part of the Wellowgate Cemetery. J.P. Alison drew a map of the Common, which was published as part of Craig & Laing's 'Hawick Tradition' book (1898). Norman R. Kennedy also drew up a plan of the Common in 1949 and Frank Scott drew up another map of the state in 1977, with field names included – 'We've a Common, we'll defend it From the spoiler evermore' [TC], 'T for Teri, O for Odin, H for Hawick and C for Common' [T], '...Aye defend your Rights and Common' [JH], 'Purse and person we'll support him, Round the Common we'll escort him; Still preserving peace and order, Like the bowmen of the Border!' Common (ko-min) n. A. (18th/19th C.) resident of Burnmouth in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's ' Beauties of the Border'. He must have been related to 'Miss A.' who was also at Burnmouth and subscribed. Adam (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name is given as 'Adame Cawmande', among a list of Olivers from Jedforest. Adam (b.1781/2) from Hobkirk Parish, he was tenant farmer at High Tofts in Kirkton Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was living there with his brother Andrew and sister Janet. In 1851 he was farmer of 405 acres, employing 3 labourers. Andrew (18th C.) tenant farmer at Over Whitton in Howman Parish, who was ancestor of the Southdean Commons. He may have been son of James and Isobell Lindsay. He married Agnes Sharp and their children were: Christian; James, farmer at Wolfhehopeee; John; Richard; Janet; and Margaret. Andrew (b.1783/4) from Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at High Tofts. In the 1833 electoral roll for Hawick he was listed, along with Adam, as a joint tenant of lands owned by Andrew Dickson of Al ton. In 1841 he was farmer at High Tofts with his brother Adam. Andrew (b.1796) eldest son of James. He was said to be a great reader, knowledgeable about local folklore and keen on wild flowers. He farmed at Westshiels in South dean Parish from at least 1841. In 1861 he was recorded there as farmer of 950 acres. He was still farmer at 'Westhills' in a directory of 1868. He married Isabella Murray. Their children were: John; who emigrated to New Zealand; Margaret, who married George Balfour, a Jedburgh grocer; William, who became a marine engineer; and Andrew, who served as a volunteer in South Africa. Andrew Ainslie (1841–1903) son of a surgeon, he was born in Newcastle Upon Tyne, but was related to the family of South dean Parish. He trained as an engineer, then became a professional astronomer. He was involved with early astro-photography, eclipses and telescope making. He received the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1884, later becoming the Society's Treasurer and then President. He was also elected a Fellow of the Royal Society and also received an honorary degree from St, Andrew's University. In later years he also worked on gun sights and range-finders. He lived at Ealing and died of a heart attack. David (17th C.) resident of Falside according to the 1694 Hearth

Tax Rolls. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) housemaid at Cavers in 1785, when she was working for Capt. John Douglas. J. (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘Miss J. Burnmouth’ in 1821 when she subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He must have been related to ‘A.’ who was also at Burnmouth and subscribed. James (b.1751) eldest son of Andrew. He farmed at Wolfehopelee and then at Easter Fodderlee around 1812–30. He was at Wolfehopelee on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He married Isabella Wood around 1795 and their family of 8 were born at Wolfehopelee. Their children were: Andrew, who farmed at Westshiels; Mary, who married Kennedy Storie and emigrated to Guelph, Ontario; William; Agnes, who lived into her 90s; Richard, ‘Dick’, said to have been a bit of a character; Janet; Christian, who married James Irvine; and Adam. James (b.1843) eldest son of Andrew. He was tenant farmer at Dykeraw and Westshiels in Southdean Parish. In 1895 he married Elizabeth Oliver from Newcastleton. They are probably the Mr. and Mrs. Common of Dykeraw who were said to be often provide refreshments to members of the Jedforest Hunt. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1571/2, listed among men for whom William Oliver in Lustruither was pledge. John (b.1754) tenant farmer in Rulewater, he was probably the 2nd son of Andrew and Agnes Sharp. Around 1778 the small lands of Highend, Little Gledstains and the Sneep were combined together and he was the tenant. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he was recorded as tenant of Highend and Midburn, and owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Millburn in 1797. His children included Adam (b.1782), Andrew (b.1784), James (b.1796), Christian, Janet (b.1779) and Margaret (b.1778). Other sons, John (b.1788) and Richard (b.1790), were baptised in Hobkirk Parish when he was at Highend. Additional children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish at about the same time were presumably also his, namely Thomas (b.1780), Janet (b.1786), Robert (b.1792), Sibella (b.1794), Robert (again, b.1798) and Jean (b.1800). John (b.1788/9) from Hobkirk Parish, he was a local farmer. He was probably son of John, tenant at Highend and other farms in Rulewater. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Middlemoss in Ewes. In 1861 he was at High Tofts in Kirkton Parish, farming 390 acres, employing 2 labourers. He married Euphemia (or Elspeth) Turnbull and their children included Cecilia, John, Esther, James, Thomas, Elizabeth and Francis. John (b.1804/5)

... born in Castleton Parish, he was tenant farmer at Meikledale. He was recorded there in 1841 and by 1851 was farming 2000 acres, with 6 employees. In 1851 his niece Helen Dalgleish (a widow) was his housekeeper. He was still there in 1868. Richard ‘Dick’ (19th C.) Kirk Elder in Newcastleton around 1800. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (19th C.) tenant at Westshiels in Southdean Parish. His father and the wife of ‘Sookin’ Sandy Airmstrong were sisters. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Borthwickbrae in 1761, 1763 and 1764. He married Janet Laing in Roberton in 1760. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included David (b.1761), Nelly (b.1763) and Thomas (b.1764). Thomas (b.1779/80) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was an agricultural labourer in Kirkton Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was at High Tofts. He married Mary Shiel in 1810 and their children included: Janet (b.1812); Mary (b.c.1815); John (b.1817); Andrew (b.1820); and Thomas (b.1823). William (16th C.) recorded at Blackchesters in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His surname was given as ‘Cawman’, and he was only one of 2 Commons listed among many Olivers of Jedforest. William (b.1849) son of Andrew, farmer in Southdean. He was a marine engineer. In 1889 he married Janet McNeil, daughter of farmer Robert Boyd. Their children included Andrew Ritchie and Norman (also written ‘Commoun’; the name is probably the same as the earlier Conyn). Commonbrae (ko-min-brä) n. area in the upper Teviot valley, reached by the side road at Teviothead. The farm there is where Commonbrae Sike joins the Teviot, and Commonbrae Hill is above. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed along with Rashiegrain and Wormscliffeuch, valued jointly ‘in stok 120 lb., in teynd 20 lb’. Part of these lands were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. This could be the ‘Couny’ transcribed among a list of lands in upper Teviotdale that were part of the Barony of Cavers when inherited in 1687 and 1698. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. Walter Elliot was there in 1705–08. By 1707 it was valued along with Rashiegrain at £261 19s 4d. John Nichol was there in 1720. They passed to Turnbull of Fenwick in the mid-18th century. Ninian Elliot was shepherd there in the mid-18th century. In 1788 it was owned by
Common Cleuch

William Turnbull of Rashiegrain. John Anderson was farmer there in 1797. In 1811 it was still valued (with Rashiegrain) at about £262. Walter Murray and his family lived there in 1841 (marked ‘Comonbrae’ on Blaen’s 1654 map; it was ‘Comonbrae’ in 1675 and ‘Comonebrae’ in 1695).

Common Cleuch (ko-min-klooch) n. small stream that joins the north side of the Hermitage Water just north of the farm of Shaws. There were formerly several pieces of common ground in Liddesdale that were shared by neighbouring farms, which could explain the name.

Common Cleuch (ko-min-klooch) n. small stream that joins the south side of the upper Hermitage Water to the east of Twislehope.

the common coffin see the common kist

the common good (ko-min-good) n. funds and lands that can only be used for the benefit of the whole community, derived from the common (here ‘good’ is in the sense of ‘goods’ and so ‘common guid’ would be incorrect).

the Common Good (thu-ko-min-good) n. Hawick’s community fund, with the Magistrates and Town Council formerly acting as trustees, and now administered by the Council – ‘Hawick Common Good canni be vaised ti benefit other toon’s’. The peculiarly Scottish concept of the Common Good dates back to the 1491 Act of King James IV. Hawick’s Common Good consists of the lands that were granted to the Town through receiving Burgh of Barony status in the 15th century, and subsequent changes to those lands and rights. Historically the income from Hawick’s Common, which became the Common Good funds, arose after the Division of the Common in 1777. After this point lands were enclosed and parts let to individuals, typically on a yearly basis, as well as revenues from market stands etc. Hawick’s Common Good also includes moveable assets, such as Burgh regalia, and paintings and other gifts that were donated to the Town prior to Reorganisation in 1975. The administration of the Common Good by the local authorities has been a matter of constant debate since the 1970s.

the Common Haugh (thu-ko-min-hawch, hawf) n. former name for a piece of land on Deanfoot farm. It was recorded in 1780 as ‘the haugh called the Common-haugh’ and presumably lay on the north bank of the Teviot.

the common kist (thu-ko-min-kist) n. shared coffin for those who could not afford one of their own. Session records of 1723 state ‘seeing ye Box is burdened frequently by paying of coffins to strangers, and maintaining of ye poor, ... the coffin commonly called ye common coffin should be made use of unless they be persons of good character’. Up until about 1770 the poor of Hawick Parish were all buried in the same coffin, which had bolts that could be pulled out to release a false bottom as the coffin was lowered into the grave. The same strong, roomy, oak coffin was said to have been used for centuries.

the Common Lone (thu-ko-min-lou) n. former name for the Loan, used up until about 1860.

the Common Moor (thu-ko-min-moor, -newr, mür) n. another name for the main part of the Common. The phrase ‘le commoun hauch et commoun mure de Hawick’ occurs in the 1537 charter.
common ridin (ko-min-ri-din) n. the marking of the boundaries of a town’s common, also called the riding of the marches. This is carried out in many Border towns in a ceremonial manner, long after the marking itself has become unnecessary. Locally, only Hawick and Selkirk have ancient traditions with a continuous history. Some Border towns, such as Lauder and Peebles, have reinstated older traditions, while others have less ancient traditions, such as Langholm, or instituted similar festivals in the 20th century, such as Galashiels, Kelso, Jedburgh and Melrose. These events no longer take place in the English Border towns, although many parishes in England used to have a perambulation of the boundaries on Ascension Day (and some still do). Other Scottish towns with similar march-riding traditions include Annan, Dalkeith, Lanark, Linlithgow, Rutherglen (discontinued in the 19th century) and Sanquhar. Edinburgh’s tradition was held from at least 1579 until 1718, with a one-off in 1946 and revived in 2009. Hawick’s festival was exported to the Boston area, the Guelph/Galt and Toronto areas in Ontario and the Vancouver area in British Columbia, with exiles and their families holding their own festivals for many years in the late 19th and early 20th centuries (note that the original meaning of ‘ride’ in this context was ‘to fix boundaries’, but it became compounded with riding on horseback).

common ridin (ko-min-ri-din) n. a monetary gift given at the Common Riding, particularly to children – ‘here’s yer commin ridin son’ (cf. New Year).

the Common Ridin (thu-ko-min-ri-din) n. ceremony that links the traditional marking of Hawick’s Common lands with the celebration of the victory at Hornshole in 1514. Each year an unmarried young man is chosen to be Cornet; records of the Principals go back as far as 1703, with the riding of the town’s marches first mentioned in 1640, and it is clear that the ceremony had been going on long before. It has taken place each year since, with the exception of the 1915-18, 1940-45 and 2001. The earliest descriptions are of a party armed with swords and pistols setting off at noon to ride the boundaries of the Common. Nowadays the Cornet leads his supporters on horseback on a series of Ride-outs in the weeks before the main three days in early June. This starts with the Colour Bussing on the Thursday night, the actual riding of the marches on the Friday and the return of the Flag on the Saturday. Previous to 1752 (when the Gregorian Calendar was introduced) the Common Riding took place on the last Friday in May, but is now the first Friday after the first Monday in June. The popularity of the ceremony has fluctuated over the years, with the Council debating whether to continue the Common Riding in at least the years 1786, 1790, 1791 and 1794. There were major disputes in 1706, 1790 and 1809, and much arguing amongst the Council in the second half of the 19th century. The accompanying celebrations have always involved alcohol, with the Hawick minister complaining in 1723 of ‘that scandalous practice of distributing strong Liquor to one another in the open street to an excessive measure’. In 1840 there were almost 100 unmarried men in the Cornet’s party and about 60 in the Magistrates’ party. However, over the next few decades the popularity of the ceremonies waned. In the late 1800s the local clergy, with only a few exceptions, vehemently attacked the Common Riding from the pulpit. Several of them refused to attend functions when specifically invited, causing great resentment, particularly because almost none of the incumbents were from Hawick. In 1891 the Council withdrew its support, only reinstating it after 2 public meetings. The popularity rose again at the beginning of the 20th century. Hawick’s Common Riding is the first of the other similar Scottish Borders events of the summer. Interestingly, in the early 20th century, the actual riding of the marches was tried on both the Thursday and the Saturday, finally moving back to the Friday in 1934. Hawick Exiles held Common Riding celebrations for many years in the Boston (1877 until at least 1926, perhaps intermittently), Toronto (1921 until at least 1927) and Vancouver (from 1920 for a few years) areas. There are also records of a celebration at Hespeler, Ontario in 1889 and annual dinners in Brisbane from 1890, as well as elsewhere – ‘Item, quhatsomever persoune that beis not present yeirlie at the Commoune ryding and setting the ffairis sall pay fourtie schillingis . . .’ [BR1640], ‘The said say the Common rydeing was ordained to be upon Fryday, . . . James Scott, called laird, was voted to carry the pencell’ [BR1703], ‘This colour or its emblem has been carried round the marches of the burgh property at the Commonriding ever since’ [RW], ‘. . .Where its brave sons the flag they pride in Bore off to grace the Common-ridin’ ’ [AD], ‘Absent Teries’ thoughts fly homewards On each Common Riding morn’ [TC], ‘It’s no in steeds, it’s no in speeds, It’s something in the heart abiding, The kindly customs, words and Common-Ridin (ko-min-rí-din) adj. relating to the marking of the boundaries of Hawick’s Common or the ceremonies taking place each year in June – ‘No colour to be carried on the Common-Riding day, but the town colour allenary’ [BR], ‘…remembered so fervently each June during the annual ‘riding of the marches’, the Common-Riding celebrations’ [RES], ‘Here’s much good cheer, join in the fun, There’s laughter in the air, The Haugh goes smiling once a year, At Common-Riding Fair’ [WFC] (more often hyphenated when used adjectivally than as a noun).

the Common Ridin Committee (thu-ko-min-rí-din-ko-n’ee) n. committee that organises the Common Riding events, with a large part of the responsibility falling on the Secretary. Originally the Race Committee was the important organisational body, with Common Riding events being arranged by the Council and by the Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men. A Ceremonials Committee was established in 1887, at a public meeting in April, followed by the first Committee meeting in J.Y. Hunter’s photographic studio, with Hunter as the first Chairman, James Edgar as the first Secretary and Walter Boyd and others also present. They immediately took charge of the Cornet’s Races, as well as the other ceremonial aspects, and saved the Common Riding from the downward spiral into which it had descended. The annual public meeting in April was a focal event, but detracted from business of the committee: it was reorganised in 1908 with the main Committee consisting of 22 members appointed by the Town Council, and being composed of 3 sub-committees: Ceremonial; Race; and Games. Since local government Reorganisation the Common Riding Committee has operated independently of the Council. At the end of 2003 the General and Ceremonial Committees were amalgamated. It is also referred to simply as ‘the Committee’.

the Common Ridin Sang (thu-ko-min-rí-din-sawng) n. name used for both Arthur Balbirnie’s song of about 1800 and James Hogg’s of 1819, also known respectively as ‘The Auld Sang’ and ‘Teribus’.

Common Ridin Week (ko-min-rí-din-week) n. main week of events at the Common Riding, beginning with the Kirkin and continuing through to ‘the Seterdi’.

commons (ko-minz) n. lands used by a whole community. Most burghs and many baronies had such lands, with specific rights of pasturage, peat-cutting etc. enjoyed by the citizens, often with special rights enjoyed by burgesses. Locally these ‘commonties’ were mostly ‘divided’ in the later part of the 18th century, driven by the major landowners, who typically gained land in exchange for allowing the citizens to build walls and develop the rest. Minto Common still existed in 1695, disappearing some time in the following century. Bedrule Common was divided in 1696. Hassendean Common was lost entirely in 1762–63, Wilton Common in 1764–65, and many others in the Borders around the same time. Of course Hawick lost 30% of its own Common in 1777, after years of wrangling and legal battles. The annual perambulation or riding of the boundaries of commons tended to die out after divisions; Hawick’s Common Riding survived in ceremonial form, probably because of the additional connection with the 1514 Flag.

Commonside (ko-min-süd) n. farm and hamlet about 8 miles south-west of Hawick on a side road off the A7. It was once the site of a major ford across the Teviot. Teviotdale Lodge Country House is near there and a footbridge crosses the Teviot nearby. The carved stone at Bothwick Mains was once here. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 1911 acres, bounded by Outer Slaidhill, Inner Slaidhill, the River Teviot, Falnash, Woodburn, Chisholme, Philhope and Broadlee. The lands were given in 1462 (along with Dryden and Over Harwood) in security for a loan by Stephen Scott of Muirhouse to Robert Muir of Rowallan. The loan was fully discharged in 1477 by Robert Scott of ‘Doghauch’. Adam ‘howatson’ and Alexander Turnbull were recorded there in 1494/5. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenantry’ by the Baron of Hawick: this continued until at least 1572. However, it seems that there may have been 2 parts of the lands with separate owners. In 1574 they were listed among the lands of Scott of Buccleuch, but held ‘in chief’ of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig (for payment of a penny Scots), and valued at £5 ‘in time of peace'. The lands were owned by George Scott of Borthaugh in the early 16th century and were sold by Alan Mossman, Burgess of Edinburgh, to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1532. James Cessford was shepherd of the King’s lands there in 1540 when he was paid for grain. John Scott in Commonside signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It was described as a 40-shilling land in 1591 when leased by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholm to Gilbert Elliot. ‘Wester Comonsyde’ was released to Gilbert Elliot in 1603. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. In 1627 the farm was described as a ‘12 lb. land’ paying ‘240 lb. in stok, 48 lb. in teyn’. It was tenanted by Harry Stewart, son of Francis, Earl of Bothwell in the 1640s. The lands were listed in 1663 (and confirmed in 1686) among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Grievs farmed there in the 17th century and then Scotts in the 18th. The householders listed there in 1694 were James Grieve, William Grieve and John Waugh. William Coltart was there in 1722. It is said that turnips were first grown locally at this farm in 1764. Charles Scott is recorded there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with 10 horses on the farm. Archibald Scott was there in 1841, with 5 servants. In the mid-19th century there was a small community of people living in the neighbouring cottages, including Gamekeeper Alexander Robertson, tailor William Wylie, gardener John Morton, labourer David Scott and farm steward John Michie, with their families. J. Stevenson was farmer there in 1868. One stone of a quern and the possible site of an ancient cremation were discovered there in about 1870. Flints, stone beads and hammerstones have also been recorded being discovered in the farm in the 19th century – ‘Warn Wat o’ Harden, and his sons, Wi’ them will Borthwicke water ride; Warn Gaudilands, and Allanhaugh, And Scoon o’ the three Scotts o’ the Mill, There’s Ogilvy o’ Branxholm, And Snoon o’ Toddghill’ [DJG] (the name appears at least as early as 1462, where it is spelled ‘Colmanside’, the ‘Colemanside’ in 1508/9, later being ‘Comansid’, ‘Comonsuide’), ‘Comounsye’, ‘Commonsye’, ‘Comounsye’, ‘Comonsyde’, ‘Comonside’, etc., it is ‘Comonsyde’ in 1510/1, ‘Commonside’ in 1540, ‘Commonside’ in 1540, ‘Commons Side’ and ‘Commonsyde’ in 1572 and 1591, ‘Comounsyd’ in in 1574 and 1594, ‘Comonsyd’ in 1615, ‘Comonsyd’ in 1663, ‘Comunsyde’ in 1686 and ‘Comonsyde’ in 1694: it is marked as ‘Comonsyde’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map; ‘O. Comonsyde’ and ‘N. Comonsyde’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is probably ‘Colman’s slope’ from an Old Irish personal name and Old English for ‘slope’).

Commonside Lynn (ko-min-siid-lin) n. former farmstead near Commonside. William Robinson lived there in 1841.

Commonside Park (ko-min-siid-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Rulewater near Blackleemouth, between the Catlee and Harwood Burns, shown on a map of 1772.

commonty (ko-min-tee) n., arch. Scots law term meaning a piece of land having common rights by more than an individual person, another name for common – ‘Men bound together in runrig commonty And in the old unity of hall and hallan, tholing together . . . ‘[DH].

the Commonty (θu-ko-min-tee) n., arch. Hawick’s Common land – ‘. . . upon account whereof some difference betwixt the Earl and the town anent the Commontie, whereunto the town has undoubted right and possession’ [C&L1673], ‘. . . betwixt the landes of Burneflatt, which is his propertie, and the Commontie of the said towne . . . ‘[BR1713], ‘. . . the Baillies and Council prohibite and discharge and Burgesses of the Burgh to keep or pasture on the Commonty of Hawick any number of sheep, &c, exceeding twenty . . . ‘[BR1733] (also written ‘Commontie’).

the Common Vennel (θu-ko-min-ve-nul) n. appellation in the 1537 charter for the path running from the Coble Pool to Myreslawgreen, which formed part of the Town boundary. It probably followed roughly Morrison Place and Coble Pool Lane: ‘lying between the lands commonly called Bourtrees on the east and the common vennel at Myrselawgreen on the west parts’. It is also mentioned in a session of 1558 (note this is ‘Common’ as in common).

commune (ko-mewn) v., arch. to meet with, discuss, confer – ‘. . . and agreed that Falnash, Bailie Martin, Bailie Scott, and W.R. Purdom, and John Swan should commune with ye said Bailie . . . ‘[PR1718], ‘. . . ye Brethren of ye Presbyterie went into ye kirk and communed among themselves . . . ‘[PR1722].
communicant (ko-mewn-yee-kin') n., arch. someone who takes part in communion. Historically, this only applied to adults (although the precise age is not clear). An important local list of communicants exists from 1650 for the Borthwick valley (made up as part of discussions to suppress Hassendean Parish and create a new Parish of Roberton); it clearly contains only adults, and lists wives with their maiden surnames.

communion (ko-mewn-yin) n. celebration of the Eucharist, formerly an important event in the calendar. In Hawick this was held annually (although with exceptions), often following the harvest, usually in October, but the date changed regularly, depending on convenience and other events. It appears to have sometimes been held in a tent erected in the churchyard. For about 50 years after the Reformation the morning service started as early as 5 a.m. By at least the 1720s there was also an associated fast day, on the Saturday before the Sunday Communion. In those days there was an extended series of lengthy sermons on the Saturday, Sunday and Monday, with other local ministers helping out; the Sunday service started at 9 a.m. and rarely concluded before 6 p.m., although there was a 1 hour break in the middle! Seen as a time of general celebration, some people attended communions in several neighbouring parishes. Previous to about 1700 one strictly needed to have been issued with a token in order to attend that parish’s events, but this seems to have been relaxed later; there are even records of tokens being given to neighbouring ministers to distribute. In former times the wine used was a claret, and in relatively large quantities. It is unclear what kind of bread was.

the Companion (thu-kom-pan-yin) n. the ‘Companion to Hawick and District’, written by R.E. Scott, with original sketches by the author. It was first published in 1970, revised in 1981, then again in 1998 by Frank Scott, with a 4th edition in 2010, updated by Frank’s 3 sons. It is the definitive modern Hawick guide.

the Community Gallup (thu-kow-mew-n-i-ee-gaw-lup) n. community horse riding track built in Nip Knowes Field; on the right just before St. Leonard’s, in 2003.

the Community Council (ko-mew-ni-ee-koon-sul) n. independent voluntary body set up to deal with local matters, organise community activities, etc. It began after Reorganisation in May 1975, partly to act as a watchdog for local affairs. Bizarrely there is a separate council in Burnfoot.

communion token (ko-mewn-yin-tö-kin) n. specially produced coin-like token that was given to church members, and possession of which entitled the bearer to take communion. They were often made of lead, or an alloy, and were fairly plain in early times, eventually having elaborate inscriptions. They were important in the Protestant Church for about 2 centuries. finally being replaced with printed cards. Many local early examples still exist. Records show that 420 such tokens and a stamp were made for Hawick Kirk in 1751. Cavers Parish has examples dating from 1699 and Kirkton has 2 heart-shaped examples from 1734 and 1761. Mr. Heatlie donated his collection to Hawick Museum in 1901 (also just token).

Community Cooncil (ko-mew-ni-ee-koon-sul) n. independent voluntary body set up to deal with local matters, organise community activities, etc. It began after Reorganisation in May 1975, partly to act as a watchdog for local affairs. Bizarrely there is a separate council in Burnfoot.

compairt (kom-part) pp. compared – ‘hei looks the pairt, it least comparit ti yow onywi’, ‘And what’s a rabbit’s chowkan dance Compare’t wi snares o circumstance’[HSR] (note the pronunciation).

compear and (kom-pee-rins) n., arch. appearance before a court – ‘…in respect of both, their compeirances, confession and judiciall producing of ane testimoniall …’[BR1706].

compearance (kom-peer-ind) v., arch. appearing before a court, presenting oneself – ‘… and the said Samuel Newbie compeirand personallie acknowledged and confess ...’ [BR1669], ‘...David Young was fined ...for not compeirand when personally summons to compeir ...’ [BR1707].

compeir (kom-peer-i’) pp., arch. appeared before a court – ‘The quhilk day, comperit ane honest young man, Alexander Scot, sone and aery to Stevin Scot ...’ [JW1558].

compeir see compair

competeetion (kom-pe-tie-shin) n. a competition – ‘...In ony competeetion A never make the cut’ [IWl].

competent (kom-pe-tin’) adj., arch. suitable, appropriate – ‘...the said Kirk Session should have the power to ...give the said Janet Wight such a competent allowance as they should judge proper for her subsistence ...’ [PR1751] (this shade of meaning no longer in use).

complainand (kom-pla-nand) pres. part., arch. complaining – ‘...to mak satisfaction to al parteis compleenande eftir the forme and tenor of an Act extract be ...’ [SB1500].

compleen (kom-pleen) v., arch. to complain – ‘Oh, the cluds then grew starless and black, An’ my hert could do nocht but compleen!’ [FL], ‘...And farmers now uae mair compleen Of esses feeding on their clover’ [TCh], ‘I murn in my compleenin an’ mak’ ane noyse’ [HSR].

complice (kom-plis) n., arch. an accomplice, associate – ‘...were attacked by them ‘and their complises, all bodden in fear of weir ...’’ [C&L1673], ‘...their adherents, complises and resseters, for stealing out of the complainers’ housses ...’ [BR].

compliment (kom-plee-min’) v., arch. to present, give as a gift – ‘...that Walter Elliot, late Baillie Depute of the Regalitie, had complimented to the toun as much oak as was ane axtree to the great church bell’ [BR1721] (this sense already archaic in standard English).

compone (kom-poun) v., arch. to compound, to settle a dispute by making a payment. This word is particularly used in old legal documents, e.g. in the itinerant courts of many centuries ago. Componing appears to have been used as a way of avoiding formal fines or other punishment for crimes and it seems hard to avoid the conclusion that this was often an abuse of the system by those with powerful connections.

composition (kom-po-zhi-shin) n., arch. a fee, particularly that paid for admission as a burgess – ‘Walter Turnbull, English Schoolmaster in Hawick, was sworn and admitted heritable burgess of this Burgh in common form, and his composition past from, for his service in the place’ [BR1737].

comprise (kom-prlz) v., arch. to appraise, assess value, particularly of agricultural goods – ‘...their declaration, that they comprised the said corn to three half firlots aits, and in £7 for the boll thereof’ [BR1642], ‘Sic lyke, there is comprised ane seck pertaining to Andrew Leyden, to 20s. ...’ [BR1644] (cf. apprise).

compt (kont) n., arch. a count, accounting, inventory – ‘...Robert Scott of Allanehauch, his gudschir, my tutour for the tyme of all comptis of the intromission ...’ [SB1569], ‘The quhilk day, in presence of the bailies and council, the haille comptes for the receipt of the monies for advancing of the sogders ...’ [BR1644], particularly in the phrase ‘compt and reckoning’, meaning a formal statement of expenditures – ‘...another to pay £7, 16s. as compt and reckoning for a boll of wheat’ [BR1638], ‘...to see right compt and reckoning done and perfyted betwixt John Hardie and the sd. Walter Rowcastell ...’ [BR1693]. ‘...the toun counsell did take in the comptes of Baylyea Graham, and after compt and reckoning did find that ...’ [BR1701], v. to reckon, enumerate, make an account – ‘...being all comptit and allowit, rests in the hands of William Liddell, merchant ...’ [BR1644].

comptable (kom-ta-bul) adj., arch. accountable – ‘...that as he should answer to God he would make them all comptable to him for their intromissions’ [PR1718] (also spelled ‘comptable’ etc.).

compter (komp-tur) n., arch. a counter, count – ‘...the haille compter for the receipt of the monies ...’ [BR] (from the French).

the Comrades (the-kom-rädz) n. popular name for the 1/4th K.O.S.B. Gallipoli Comrades Association, which was established in 1933, following more informal meetings starting in 1925. Based in Hawick, it included men from around the Borders, and had the aim of fostering ‘the old-time comradeship’ and paying ‘annual tribute at the local war memorial to the Comrades who made the supreme sacrifice’. The main event in the calendar was the annual dinner on 12th July. To mark the 50th anniversary in 1965, there was a parade of members from the Drill Hall to Trinity Church for a special service, followed by remembrance at the War Memorial. Inevitably membership dwindled over the years and in 1974 the Callants’ Club took over the administration of the Association’s affairs (and ownership of the decorative shell-case displayed every year at their...

dinner. The last surviving Comrade, John Murray, passed away in 1992. A memorial plaque, recognising the ‘loyalty of the members of the Hawick Gallipoli Comrades Association’ was unveiled near the Horse in 1988.

Comrade’s Haa (kom-rädz-haw) n. wooden and corrugated iron hall erected in September 1921 at the lower end of the East Bleaching Green in Denholm by the Comrades of the Great War (later the British Legion) for recreational and social uses. The building had previously been the Y.M.C.A. at Stobs and was moved to Denholm. It later became a grocer’s shop.

Comyn (ku-min) n. John ‘the Red’ (d.c.1277) son and heir of Richard. He probably owned Bedrule along with other lands in Galloway, Liddesdale and Nithsdale. He was also known as ‘Kirkintulloch’ and succeeded his uncle, William Earl of Montkeith as Lord of Badenoch. He made a grant to Melrose Abbey in 1250. He is listed in the 1256 assize roll for Northumberland, holding lands near Corebridge. He was an important figure during the minority of Alexander III, being appointed Justiciar of Galloway in 1258. In 1258/9 he was among Scottish noblemen who signed a bond with some of their Welsh counterparts. He was part of the Scottish force, also led by John Baliol and Robert Bruce, who helped Henry III against the rebellious English Barons in 1264. Several of his supporters were killed at York in 1268, but the 2 Kings forced the citizens to pay him compensation. He may also be the ‘Johanni Comyn’ of whom someone held lands at Newcastle on the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He may have been the Comyn who had Bedrule Castle built, since it certainly existed by the late 13th century. He married firstly Eva (whose surname is unknown) and secondly Alice de Lindsay. His children included: William, who married a daughter of the Countess of Montkeith, but died without issue; John ‘the Black’, who succeeded; Alexander, who signed the Ragman Roll of 1296; John, described as ‘junior’; Robert; Alice; and 5 unnamed daughters. John of Badenach ‘the Black’ (d.c.1302) second son and heir of John ‘Red’ Comyn. In 1277 he succeeded his father as Lord of Badenoch. He owned the lands of Bedrule among others, including Tynedale. In 1279 Alexander III confirmed a grant by him of the lands of ‘Rulehalch’. He was present at Roxburgh in 1281 when the marriage of Margaret, daughter of Alexander III was agreed on with the King of Norway. He was one of the Magnates Scotiae who maintained the title of the Princess of Norway in 1284 and one of the 6 Guradians of Scotland appointed after her death. He was probably the Sir John who was witness in 1284/5 to a resignation of lands by Simon Cornet, along with Sir John of Buchanan, Sir William of Kirkintilloch and Sir William de Souls. He swore loyalty to Edward I of England in 1291 and 1296, where he is Sir John ‘Dominus Johannes de Badenach, senior’; his seal read ‘S’SECRETI JOH’IS CVMIN’ has an equestrian symbol, with garbs on shields and trappings. He and his son John junior were listed in 1296 among Scotsmen who were to be removed from their lands in Northumberland. He was one of the 13 claimants for the Scottish crown, through being descended from Bethoc, daughter of Donald III (and through whom he may have inherited Bedrule). But he later supported the claim of Baliol (who was coincidentally connected with Cavers, neighbouring Bedrule). He was security for his brothers Alexander and Robert and his son John in 1297, after their capture by the English. He married Marjory (also referred to as Eleanor), sister of King John Baliol. He had a daughter called Dornagilla (who married Archibald Douglas, Lord of Galloway) as well as his heir John. He died at Lochindorb. John ‘the Red’ of Badenoch (d.1305/6) son of John ‘the Black’, but called ‘Red’ like his grandfather. He was also nephew of John Baliol and married a cousin of Edward I of England. He held numerous lands, including the Barony of Bedrule and part of Tynedale. He swore fealty to Edward I in 1291, with his seal reading ‘S’JOHANNIS COMYN’ and showing an eagle. He was part of the Scottish army that invaded Cumberland, but he was captured by the English at Dunbar in 1297, along with several other Comyns and many other Scottish nobles. He was appointed sole Guardian of Scotland in 1302. Following supposed treachery, he was slain by Robert the Bruce and his supporters at Dumfries. After his death, King Robert granted all of his lands to Sir James Douglas, and thus Bedrule passed to the Douglases. His married Joan, daughter of William de Valence. Their children included: John, who was killed at Bannockburn; Adomar, who swore allegiance to Edward I in 1296; Elizabeth, who married Richard Talbot and Sir John Bromwich; and Joan, who married David, Earl of Atholl. Marion (14th C.) wife of John Langlands of that Ilk. In about 1363 she had a charter for the lands of Milsington and Outerside. Her name is recorded as ‘Mariote Cumynye’. It is unclear how she was related to other Comyns. Richard (12th C.) nephew of William, who was Chancellor to Henry I of England. Sometime around 1160 he married Hextilda (or Hestilla), daughter of Bethoc and Uchtred, son of Waldeve; she was grand-daughter of Donald III of Scotland. He thus gained the Barony of Bedrule, which passed to his son William. He was also Lord of Tynedale, with the grant of his lands in Tynedale being confirmed to his great-grandson John by the English King in 1261/2. He is listed as holder of a ‘wenelachia’ (near Todrig) that neighboured the lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk in about 1170. He was ‘Ricardo Cumin’ when he witnessed a royal charter for the lands of Whitlade at Traquair about 1170. He is probably the Richard, who, in 1174, witnessed a document whereby King William of Scotland yielded the castles of Roxburgh, Berwick, Jedburgh, Edinburgh and Stirling to King Henry of England.

Richard (d.c.1249) eldest son of William. He witnessed several charters along with his father, who died in 1233. Thereafter he inherited the family lands, probably including Bedrule. Along with 2 of his brothers he was a guarantor for a 1244 treaty with England. His only known child was John (although these generations are uncertain). Walter of Rowallan (13th/14th C.) holder of lands in the Barony of Hawick during the reign of Robert the Bruce. He specifically held a portion of Bransholme, consisting of 7 pounds and 6 pennies of the lands; the rest went to Henry Baliol. Before 1320 Sir Maurice Murray, Earl of Strathearn was granted the ward of these lands, along with the town of Bransholme, and perhaps the Barony of Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other Comyns or what these lands near Hawick were. William (c.1160–1233) son of Richard, Lord of Tynedale and Hextilda, who was a grand-daughter of King Donald III. He inherited his father’s lands in Northumberland and Scotland, which probably included Bedrule from his mother. He was an envoy to England for William the Lion and also served as Sheriff of Forfar and Justiciar of Scotland. He married Marjory, Countess of Buchan, thereby becoming Earl of Buchan. He founded Deer Abbey in Buchan, and made grants to several religious orders, including Dryburgh. In 1221 he witnessed a charter granting dowry lands to Joan of England (the new Queen of Scotland), including Jedburgh, Hassendean and Lessuden. Also in 1221 he was granted by the English King a weekly market at his manor of Thornton in Tynedale. In 1230 he witnessed a charter by Henry, King of England, confirming that King Alexander of Scotland had granted his Tynedale lands to his younger sister Margaret for marriage. He had 2 sons with his first wife (whose name is unknown): Richard, who succeeded to most of the lands and titles; and Walter, Earl of Menteith. His children by his second wife were: Alexander, who succeeded as Earl of Buchan; William; Fergus; and Elizabeth. William (13th/14th C.) son of John ‘the Black’. He was appointed as Keeper of Selkirk and Traquair Forests in 1291/2 by Edward I. However, Thomas de Burnham was appointed only a few months later. He died without issue. (also spelled ‘Cumyn’ and connected with ‘Cumm’ing’ and possibly ‘Common’).

The Comyns (thur-ku-minz) n. family that was locally important in early times, and related to the modern Cumnings, Common, etc. The first mention is of a Norman family, granted lands in Northumberland, and in the 12th century they gained lands in Scotland, including at Bedrule. It seems possibly that the original ‘Bethoc’ of Bedrule was part of the Canmore family of Scottish Kings, into which the Comyns married. In the late 13th century John Comyn was one of the claimants of the Scottish throne, because of this connection. In 1306 John ‘the Red’ Comyn was killed (probably by Robert the Bruce) and they were branded as traitors, with their influence in Scotland soon being over. It is suggested that Walter Comyn, 4th Earl of Monteith may have been involved in construction at Hermitage Castle. Marion ‘Cumyne’ was the wife of John de Langlands in the 14th century, and they held local lands at Milsington and Outerside, as well as Langlands. It is possible that the family of ‘Common’, known from at least the 16th century in Jedforest and Rulewater, were related.

Conacher (ko-na-chur) n. Alexander (1803–73) son of John and Margaret Borrie, he was born in Tullybelton, Auchtergaven, Perthshire. He was at Little Cavers as a forester in 1841 and then worked in Hawick as a dyer. He lived on Allars Crescent, then at 1 Village and lastly in Wilton Place. He was said to have been a strict Calvinist. He married Margaret (or ‘Mary’) Scott and their children were: John Craig (b.1825), who emigrated to Australia and took the surname Scott; Peter (b.c.1827–1904), who died on the Isle of Wight; Alexander (1829/30–94), who also went to Australia, dying at Creswick, Victoria, and also took the surname Scott; Robert (b.1836/7); Susan (b.1838/9–55); and Elizabeth (b.1844/5). Mungo (b.c.1880) born in Dumfriesshire, he had a joiners business at 6 Mansfield Crescent. His business went bankrupt in 1906. He emigrated to Alberta, Canada right after that (also written ‘Conachar’ and ‘Connacher’).

concaive (kon-säv) v., arch. to conceive.

the Con Club (thu-kon-klub) n. a social and political organisation, Hawick Conservative Club, situated for over a century at 22 Bourtree Place. The club began in 1895, meeting in the Temperance Hall. The memorial stone for the new Bourtree Place premises were laid by the Countess of Dalketh in 1897 (as can be seen in photographs). The site there was formerly stabling etc. for the Wellogate fields farmed by the landlords of the Tower Inn. The design for the new building was by J.P. Alison. The club was known as the Hawick Constitutional Club until its name was changed, only in 1970. The building contained a billiard room on the lower level, with 6 full-sized tables, plus a bar, other small rooms, and a large hall upstairs. The roof of this function room is held up by a concealed cast-iron frame. There was also a second-floor flat, which was originally the residence of the club master. The building was converted into a Weatherspoon’s restaurant in 2011 and renamed ‘the Bourtree’. It is a grade B listed building. The club meanwhile moved to smaller premises on Croft Road.

concrete (kong-kree’) n. early concrete houses in Hawick included a block of flats on the corner of Union Street and North Bridge Street (built by Charles Drake and demolished after a fire in the 1980s) and the Congregational Manse on Orchard Terrace (built in 1874 with material supplied by Charles Drake’s Patent Concrete Building Company).

condeetion (kon-dee-shin) n., arch. condition – ‘...an’ keep hissel’ mair or less in that condeetion durin’ the twae days at least, if no’ gey wee intae the next week’ [BW1939], ‘...I think that a wat airy simmer and a dry August are the best condeetions ...’ [DH], ‘And a’ sorts and condeetions o travellers are bustling about wi bags and trappings’ [DH].

condenser (kon-den-sur) n. a machine in the knitwear industry, combining the functions of the billy and piecing machines. It was introduced to Britain in around the 1840s, after initially failed attempts to copy machines seen in America by Thomas Roberts of Galashiels and Simeon Bathgate of Selkirk. Once perfected, it was quickly adopted by Hawick manufacturers.

condescend (kon-dee-send) v., arch. to as-sent, agree, acquiesce – ‘...the soum of two hundred merks Scotts as the pyerce condescended and agreed upon betwixt Mr John Langlands, minister at Hawick, and me ...’ [BR1684], ‘Bailie Graham being summond to compearre this day and not appearing, the Session unanimously condescended and agreed that ...’ [PR1718].

condignly (kon-din-lee) adv., arch. suitably, fittingly – ‘...if he could not refrain from drinking to excess, he would be given up to ye bailie of regalie of this place, to censure him condignly ...’ [PR1717].

Condosus (kon-dō-soos) n. place name mentioned in the royal charter for the lands of Whitslade in about 1170. It lay on the south of the Ale Water, although the precise location is unclear. The description appears to define the lands of Whitslade proceeding along the Langhope Burn as far as ‘Condosum’ on the south side of the Ale (which does not make much sense!).

Conneveth (kon-veth) n. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johan de Conneveth, persone del eglise de Alnecrom’ when he paid homage to Edward I in 1296. He was thus an early parson of Ancrum Kirk. His name appears twice, and these are apparently the same man, although the second name is transcribed ‘Corweth’, but also parson of Ancrum. His seal is a ‘vesica’ with an eagle standing on a scroll and the name ‘S’JOH’IS DE CONVETE CLERICI’.

the Confessions of Faith (thu-kon-fe-shinz-ov-faith) n. formal name for the document denouncing episcoplianism, signed in 1638. A different copy was made for each district, signed first by the major aristocrats, then by M.Ps. and lastly by the local men. The local one is believed to have been signed in Hawick, and preserved for centuries at Cavers House. It is 32 inches by 28 inches in size. It reads ‘Confession of Faith, subscribied at first by the kingis majestie and his household in the year of god 1589. Thairefter by persons of all rankis ... and now subscribied in the yeir 1638 by us noblemen, barons, gentlemen, burgesses, ministers, and commones undersubcriybeing, togider with our resolution, and promeis for the causis after specified to mentein the trew religion and the kingis majestie ...’ The first local signature is Sir William Douglas of Cavers, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, and there follows at least 79 other names. Some appear to have signed in blood. It was transcribed by Sir James Murray for an article in the 1863 Transactions, and contains a valuable record of the most important men of the Hawick area at that time.

the Confessions of Faith
confessit (kon-fe-see", -si") pp. confessed – ‘...and being apprehendit, and judicillie accusit, confessit the opening of his kist with false keys ...’ [BR1641].

confiscate (kon-fis-kä") pp., arch. confiscated – ‘...and what corns they find insufficient, be the same meill, beir, or other corns, shall be confiscate’ [BR1656].

confoond (kon-foound) v. to confound – ‘Let thame be confuundet an’ putten til shame that seik after my saual’ [HSR], ‘Confoondit by philosophy, I gove’t at him, he glowert at me, And, Ah, he had an elleer ee!’ [DH].

conform to (kon-förm-too) adv., arch. in keeping with, in accordance with – ‘...conform to the supplication given in by the craft to the Bailies and Council of this Bruch thereafore’ [BR1640], ‘...John Scott, Southfield, was outlawed and ameriatt ‘conforme to the acts and practique for abussee the marches of Hawicke ... ’ [BR1677], ‘...Conforme to Commissione granted to them for that effect by the sd [said] Dutches & Charles Lord Cornwalls her husband’ [Buc1690], ‘...upon the Fryday before, being the 24th day of the said moneth, conforme to ancient custome had elected and voted ... ’ [BR1706], ‘...conform to ye desire of the other two hammermen concerned’ [PR1715].

confusion (kon-füz-zin) n., arch. ruin, downfall – ‘A party is fined because he did drink the militia confusion’ [BR1669].

the Congregational Kirk (thu-kong-gree-ga-shin-ul-kirk) n. church on Bourtree Place with a complicated early history. Its roots in Hawick lie with the Independent Church formed after the visits of evangelical preachers (such as Robert Haldane and John Aikman in the late 18th century). Although this went defunct, evangelical preaching was continued by itinerant preacher Francis Dick from about 1824. A church was founded in 1836 in O’Connell street, partly from members of the Independent Church, which sided with the Congregational Union of Scotland, a group having strong temperance leanings. It originally had 15 members and met in an upper flat of either 3 or 5 O’Connell Street, with William Munro as minister. It lasted until around 1877, although never with a large congregation, and had dwindling numbers in the later years. A separate congregation formed in 1842 (as the 2nd Congregational Church, hence presumably before the demise of the 1st), following the interest in evangelical preaching and the temperance movement, with William Dobson as minister for a year or two. It is unclear how long this 2nd church lasted (and how it was related to the later Evangelical Union Kirk), but not long past 1845. In Spring of 1848 John Rutherford of Kelso took up the invitation of William Munro to preach a ‘mission’ in Hawick. Joined by Rev. John Kirk of Edinburgh (with relief from several other preachers), the intense series of prayer meetings and sermons lasted 7 weeks, moving from O’Connell Street to the East bank Kirk and finally expanding to the Subscription Rooms, and leading directly to the founding of the Evangelical Union Kirk in Hawick (which became formally part of the E.U. in 1859, became the E.U. Congregational in 1897 and finally changed its name to the Congregational in 1930). Apparently some dispute led to Mr. Munro withdrawing his support for the ‘mission’, hence the forming of the E.U. Kirk, separate from his own, which lasted perhaps into the 1870s. The first meeting of the new E.U. Kirk was in May 1848, led by Rev. John Hunter Rutherford in the Subscription Rooms, with 45 founding members (perhaps mostly having come from Rev. Munro’s Congregational Kirk). Further meetings were held in the Town Hall during Common Riding week! The evangelism of the early ministers held a hostile reception from Hawick’s more established churches, this only really changing in the time of Rev. David Hislop. The church was originally run by 6 Deacons. Disputes over association with the E.U. rather than C.U. led to 25 members leaving for Mr. Munro’s C.U. church in 1859. The schism was finally healed by a positive vote in 1894 and formalised in early 1897. A chapel was erected in O’Connell Street in 1848–9 (now a doctor’s surgery), designed by Robert Hobkirk and built by James Hobkirk (farmer at Broadhaugh). The interior can be seen in a photograph of 1892. The present church was built in Bourtree Place in 1893–4, following an abortive plan to build next to the Buccleuch Memorial a few years earlier. The architect was J.P. Alison, and the Early Gothic-style design includes some fine interior detailing as well as adjacent church halls. It is a grade C listed building. The foundation stone was laid by John Wilson, M.P. for Govan and President of the Evangelical Union. A manse was built on Wellogate Brae in 1874 (an early concrete building, with material supplied by Drake’s Patent Concrete Company). An organ was added to the church in the mid-1920s. A Handbook of the Hawick Church was published in 1889 and ’Congregationalism in the the Congregational Manse

Border District, 1798–1898' in 1898. Note that there was also a Congregational Church in Newcastleton, the congregation being established in 1849, and another in Denholm, which used the Cameronian Chapel from about 1830 until about 1876. An approximate roll of the ministers is: William Munro 1836–73 (earlier Congregational Kirk); W.L. Walker 1873–76 (earlier Congregational Kirk); W. Matheson 1877 (earlier Congregational Kirk); Archibald (or Alexander) Duff 1849–56; James Proctor 1857–58; Robert Mitchell 1860–64; David Hislop 1864–1902; Winning Russell (assistant) from 1894; W.J. Ainslie 1903–21; Eneas Anderson 1922–27; Alexander Baxter 1927–33; John Safely 1934–41; George Burill Hewitt 1942–??; Douglas Malcolm Rogers 1969–71; ??.

Cook (kook) n. E. David (?– ) from Hawick, he is a Baptist theologian, with a particular interest in medical ethics. He received a B.A. from Arizona State University, then an M.A. at Edinburgh, followed by a Ph.D. there in 1973. He is a Fellow of Green College, Oxford and Holmes Professor of Faith and Learning at Wheaton College. He has written several books, e.g. ‘The Moral Maze’ and articles and was interviewed on ‘Da Ali G Show’ in 2000. George (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Bramholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Cuke’. James (17th C.) resident of Acreknowe on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name appears to be written ‘Cuock’. James (b.1786/7) born in Wilton Parish, he was a green grocer on O’Connell Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at 3 O’Connell Street (perhaps the modern No. 13). By 1861 he was a retired grocer at 3 O’Connell Street. He married Helen Smail and their children included: Cook (b.1821); Thomas (d.1838); and Janet (b.1834). John (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He probably lived near Hassendean Mains. John (b.c.1710) shepherd at Whitcheisters. He was there for 23 years in 1761, when he was one of 3 men chosen to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft in order to regularise it. He gave evidence at the court case for the division of the Common in 1767; he was then said to have been shepherd at Whitcheisters for 27 years, ending in 1764. After that he lived at ‘Millside’ (although it is unclear where that might have been). He may be the John, son of Walter, born in Hawick in 1710. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Greensidehall in 1797. He married Janet Ferguson in 1795 and their children included: William (b.1795); and John (b.1797). Kelly (18th C.) cook and maid at Cavers in 1791, when she worked for George Douglas. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Scott and their children included Helen (b.1685) and Jean (b.1687). Jean’s baptism was witnessed by Walter Scott of Alton, who may have been related to his wife. He could be the Robert recorded as resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Robert in Branxholme who was given £3 10s. in 1701 ‘for teaching poor lads to read’ and the Robert in Branxholme who witnessed baptisms in 1705 for carrier Robert Scott (also in Branxholme) and for William Oliver, ‘servitor’ in Todshawhaugh. Robert (1771/2–1845) innkeeper in Hawick. He was listed as a vintner on the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was proprietor of the Plough Inn on the 1841 census. Margaret, who also lived there, may have been his sister. He married Janet Lockie, from Cavers Parish, and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish) included: Jane (b.1804); Agnes (b.1805), who married a Scott; Margaret (b.1807); Janet (b.1810); William (b.1813); Mary (b.1815); James (b.1816); and perhaps Elizabeth (b.c.1820). Burgh Officer Thomas was also their son. In 1851 his widow Janet was living with their daughter Agnes Scott. Robert M. (1851/2–95) baker in Newcastleton. He married Lillias Finney, who died at Biggar in 1930, aged 77. Ronnie (1914–2008) ‘Cook o Hawick’, from Myreslawgreen, he was a baker to trade. He lived for about 50 years in Langholm, but still answered the phone ‘Cook o Myreslawgreen’! A great old character, he was taped by Ian Landle, these audio recordings providing a wealth of stories about Hawick between the wars, and including many examples of dialect usage (some of which are quoted in this Word Book). David Stevenson called one of his racehorses ‘Cook o Hawick’ after him. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Dovemount in 1790. He married Janet Pot in 1790 and their children included: James (b.1786); and John (b.1790). Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) son of Robert and Janet Lockie. He was landlord of the Bridge Hotel and also served as Burgh Officer and Bellman. He is recorded at the Bridge Hotel in 1875. He acted as Halberdier in the 1880s, for many years along with Michael Wintrup. Like many of his predecessors he was known as a great wit. He may be the Thomas who married Elizabeth Brown in Hawick in 1870. Walter (18th C.) recorded at Greensidehall in 1708. His children included John (b.1760) and Jean (b.1768). John (b.1710), Margaret (b.1710), and Isabel (b.1716), baptised in Hawick, may also be his children. He is probably the Walter, married to Jean Mitchell and whose children included: Isobel (b.1718); Helen (b.1720) His daughter may be the Jean who married James Blaikie in Minto in 1732. Walter (18th C.) gardener at Branxholme. His wife was Isobel Stavert and their daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1740. The witnesses were William Veitch (gardener at Branxholme for Robert of Midlem Mill) and John Telfer (‘Coater there’). He may have been related to Robert, who was earlier associated with Branxholme. William (18th C.) resident of Wiltonburn. He married Agnes Crawford in 1769 and their children included: John (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). The baptism in 1772 was conducted by Rev. John Young of the Green Kirk and the witnesses were James Scott and Adam Crawford. William ‘Willie’ (19th/20th C.) one of the last 2 men to work on stocking frames in Denholm (the other being John Stafford). They worked in a building to the east of the Fox and Hounds (formerly also ‘Cooch’, ‘Cooke’, ‘Couke’, etc.).

county (coon’-ee, koon-tee) n., adj. territorial division for administrative, judicial and political purposes. Specifically, Scotland was divided into 33 counties following the Local Government (Scotland) Act of 1889, Hawick being in Roxburghshire. County Councils ceased to exist after 1974, but the old counties are still used for land registration and some other purposes – ‘...an the-gither oo turnt ti the richt for the Teiot an the county toon’[ECS], ‘The auld kirk bell’s no long rung. A’ the shairper ‘Gentry o’ the County’ll be throngin’ in ere long’ [JEDM].

the County Council (thu-koon’-ee-koon-sul) n. county council, specifically Roxburghshire County Council, set up in 1889 following the Local Government (Scotland) Act to deal with roads, some policing and legal administration, health and sanitation supply. Jedburgh was adopted as the county town, but there was an unsuccessful proposal to substitute it for Hawick in 1891. Its powers were extended through the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929, when it took over education and poor law from the parochial councils, as well as some further power from the Town Councils. It was replaced by Roxburgh District Council in 1975. Papers from the County Council are in the Borders Archive.

the County Police Station (thu-koon’-ee-po-les-sta-shin) n. county police station, which was on the Mill Path at the end of the 19th century.

the Co-op (thu-kō-op) n. Hawick Co-operative Society, which began as a local branch of the Chartist Association formed in 1838, opening its first shop in Silver Street in 1839. Its success led to the lowering of food prices throughout the town. Specialising in general provisions to start with, the Society eventually sold almost everything. The drapery and shoe departments opened at 65 and 67 High Street in 1873. The main shop, ‘the Store’ opened on the High Street in 1885, covering Nos. 65–67, redesigned by Michael Brodie and having a decorated stone frontage. It eventually stretched from 65–71 High Street, from Tannage Close to Baker Street, and closed in 1987 after more than a century. In its hey-day it employed close to 100 staff, and was the envy of other Border towns, with its modern fittings and the vacuum tubes to move accounts quickly between floors. It ca be seen in a picture of about 1886. There were also further general shops in the Sandbed, Havelock Street, Wilton Place, Myreslawgreen and the bottom of Trinity Steps (the Weensland Store), plus a grocery shop at 62
Cooper

High Street and stableyards on Orchard Terrace. The Hawick Society merged with others, first becoming Hawick & Jedburgh Cooperative Society, eventually becoming part of the Scottish Co-op, which in turn merged with those in England. Customers were also stake-holders, receiving an annual dividend and later collecting stamps to redeem for goods. However, by the 1980s there was little to distinguish the Co-op from any other supermarket, and it was running at a loss. Once the biggest shopping institution in Hawick, the one at Burnfoot is all that remains. However, the Co-op purchased the Summerfield supermarket chain, and so in recent years the store on Croft Road has effectively become a Co-op.

Cooper (koo-pur) n. Rev. Charles Guthrie (b.1882) born in Broughty Ferry, son of George and Helen Janet Conacher. He was licensed by St. Andrews in 1907, became assistant at Ayr and was ordained at St. David's, Kirkintilloch in 1909. He was translated from Strathbunge to Wilton Parish Kirk in 1926. Copas (kö-pus) n. Janet listed in 1837 as operating ‘Copas’ Circulating Library’ on the Sandbed in Hawick.
ce (kōp) n. top course of a wall, coping, a copstone, v. to lay with copestones.
Copeland (kö-p-lind) n. John (d.c.1363) from the land of ‘Coupland’ near Wooler. However, he also held lands in Scotland, including Ormiston in Roxburghshire. He was probably at the siege of Dunbar Castle in 1338. In 1340 he was in the group of English soldiers, under Thomas Grey and the garrison of Roxburgh, which routed the Earls of March and Sutherland. He is credited with capturing the young King David at the Battle of Neville’s Cross in 1346. Thereafter he was knighted by the English King and given an annuity as well as additional lands. From 1347 he was Governor and Constable of Roxburgh Castle, and also referred to as Sheriff of Roxburghshire.
He also acted as Sheriff of Northumberland, and in 1352 was given the collectorship of the forests of Selkirk, Ettrick and Peebles, as well as collecting fee-farm rents in Roxburghshire. He was several times appointed to a commission for arranging or keeping truces with Scotland. In 1353 he was ordered to resign the offices of Governor and Constable of Roxburgh and Sheriff of Roxburghshire in favour of Henry de Percy. He is recorded as ‘Johanni de Coupland’ in about 1354
when he and his wife ‘Johanne’ were granted the lands of ‘Haletonburne’ (i.e. Altonburn) by Adam of Rule. In 1357/8 he granted these same lands to John Ker, who thus became the first of the Kers of Altonburn. He was associated with the garrison at Berwick in the late 1350s and in 1359 was appointed as a Lieutenant to the Wardens of the East Marches. In 1361 he was reappointed as Sheriff of Roxburghshire and became Warden of the Marches. It is unclear how he died, but he was possibly slain by other Englishmen in 1363.
He was buried at Carham, but his widow had his body moved to the Priory of Kirkham. He marnied Joan, sister of Henry del Strother of Kirknewton. Peter (18th/19th C.) gardener at Wilton Lodge in 1797, when he was working for Lord Napier.

Copelaw Gair (köp-law-gär) n. evocatively named hill region, south-east of Eskdalemuir – ‘Scotland Sheet Five is a square o’ singing waters, And names that are sangs, gin ye’ve a lug to hear: – Copelaw Gair, Langtae, Bye-hass, Ladder Law, Brunt Rigg, Lamblair, Cauld Face, Blueberry ... ’[DH].
copfi (kop-fi) n., arch. a cupful, bowlful – ‘£4, and £4, 16s. for the boll of malt; a firlot of malt 45s.; ground malt a great the copful’ [BR1638].
Copit Rig see Cappitrig
the Coppers (thu-ko-purz) n. house outside Roberton, between Howeurchshiel and Greenbank, which was the local police station until

Coppitholme (ko-pi‘-hōm) n. farm, or possibly mill, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map on the south side of the Borthwick near Roberton. It is unclear what this corresponds to on modern maps.

Copshaw (kop-shu, -shee, -shaw) n. former lands in Liddesdale, now used as an alternative name for Newcastleton. In 1541 the farm there was valued at 5 merks and tenanted by Robert Elliot. Tom Armstrong was recorded there in 1587/8 – ‘oo drove oot be Copshaw’, adj. someone or something from Newcastleton – ‘she was a Copshaw lassie’ (this name goes back to at least 1541, when it is ‘Copschaw’; it is ‘Copshaw’ in 1580, ‘Copschaw’ in 1580, 1581, 1584 and 1599, ‘Copshaw’ and ‘Capschaw’ in 1607 and ‘Cop-shawes’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

Copshaw (kop-shu) n. nickname for Francis Elliot.

Copshawholm (kop-shu-hōm) n. familiar name for Newcastleton, so called because it was built on the site of three former holdings, Cop-shaw Ha’, Copshaw and Copshaw Park. In 1597 an indenture was signed at ‘Copshaw Holme’ in which pledges were made for the delivery of 5 Scotsmen to the English Deputy Warden, by the Lord of Liddesdale, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch.
The farm of ‘Copshawholm’ is explicitly listed under the Liddesdale possessions of Thomas Kerr.
of Ancrum in 1632 – 'Great-uncle Wull at Copshaw Holm, Wha dealt in swine and kye, Relished 'bune ony butcher-meat, A denner o' crawpie' [DH], '...Till the lost joy that gar'd me roam I recaptur' by Copshaw Holm' [WL] (the name derives from the Old English 'copp sceaga', meaning 'wood by the summit'; it occurs at least as early as 1541 as 'Copschaw', while 'Copshaw Holme' occurs in 1597 and 'Parke callit Copshaholme' in 1632; it is on Gordon's c. 1650 map as 'Copshaw' and on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Copshaha', 'Copshaw' and 'Copshaw Park').

Copshawholm Fair (kop-shu-hōm-fār) n. hiring fair held in Newcastleton. At one point there were 3 of these a year, in April, May and November. The fairs were held twice yearly, in May and November, in the early and middle parts of the 19th century and later became yearly, lasting until 1912. It is also the name of a song, written by David Anderson in 1830, to the Northumbrian pipe tune 'The Wild Hills o' Wannie', which celebrates the occasion. These were the highlights of the year for the country folk, with 'shows' and other attractions, as well as the actual hiring of farm labourers.

Copshawholm Kirk (kop-shu-hōm-kīrk) n. name originally used for the Secession church that was later called Newcastleton Burgher Kirk.

Copshaw Park (kop-shu-pāwrk) n. former name for lands close to the modern Newcastleton, also known as 'Park'. It appears as 'Copshepark' on the 1694 Hearth Tax records, with Walter Scott the tenant there at that time. It is 'Copsha park' and 'Copshepark' in 1718 in a survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch. At that time it consisted of 527 acres and was bounded by the Liddel Water, Millholm and Blackburn. The house is shown along a strip of young wood, surrounded by a grove of ash trees (see also Park).

Copshaw Place (kop-shu-plis) n. street in Newcastleton off South Hermitage Street, opposite Stopford Street.

Copshaw Toor (kop-shu-toor) n. former tower at the modern Newcastleton. It has been suggested that is lay just beside the Langholm road, on a bend just outside the village, but there is no proof of this (the tower is marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map opposite and slightly south of Whithaugh and between 'Copshaha' and 'Copshaw pk').

Copshaw Tub (kop-shu-tub) n. principal in the Newcastleton summer festival, which is effectively a spoof of the Common Ridings in Hawick and Langholm. It started in 1998, founded by 9 locals. The 'Tub' is elected in May and leads a bicycle cavalcade during the traditional music festival, accompanied by the 'Flake'. The village flag, prominent in the festivities, carries the motto 'Purious Bunkumos' (the name is an ice-cream-inspired joke).

Copshie see Copshaw

the Coquet (thū-ko-ki') n. river in Northumberland, in the east of what was the English Middle March, with principal town Rothbury. There was no direct path from the head of the Coquet valley into Scotland, although the river rises only about a mile from the Border.

Coquetdale (kō-ki'-dāl) n. valley of the river Coquet in Northumberland, known for being picturesque, formerly part of the English Middle March – 'In Coquetdale, Reed and Tyne We drive a prey wi' glee, And lunder the lubberts like swine, And wha daur meddle i' me?' [T].

Corbet (kōr-bi') n. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Barnes in Cavers Parish. He paid the Horse Tax at Barnes in 1785–94. In 1788 he was listed under 'Votes of Sir Francis Elliot' among the voters of Roxburghshire (suggesting that he was given freehold of some land in order to vote in the county). He was recorded as owner of 6 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Matilda (12th/13th C.) probably daughter of Walter, Lord of Yetholm and Morebattle. She was wife of William of Ryedale, or Rid dell. She is recorded in a charter of unknown date (but sometime around 1200) in which Walter of Riddell granted lands in Lilliesleaf that she had previously held in dowry. This included 'Limentikes', 'Benelandes', 'Burnerig', 'Kaueres' and 'Ch'ngisflat'. Her dowry lands are mentioned as neighbouring properties that were gifted to Melrose Abbey in the period 1185–1215, where she is recorded as 'matilde corbet'. Sometime in the period 1214–40 she resigned her lands in Lilliesleaf to her superior Patrick of Riddell. She may have secondly married Philip Seton and had a son, Alexander Seton. ‘Rogier Corbet’ from Roxburghshire signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and could have been related; he held the lands of Fairmington (also written ‘Corbett’).

Corbett (kōr-bi') n. Raymond (d.2007) rugby columnist for the Hawick News, using the pseudonym 'Waverley'. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and was also a keen golfer and bowler.

Corbie (kor-bee) n., arch., poet. a crow, sometimes also a raven – 'He looked o'er fell, and looked o'er flat, But nothing, I wist, he saw,
Corbie

Save a pyot on a turret that sat Beside a corby crow’ [JL], ‘The auld gray corbie hoverit abone, While tears downe his cheeks did flowe’ [JTe], ‘...his okls ar thyk curlet an’ blak als ane corbie’ [HSR], ‘...His hair was black as the corbie’s wing, His dark eyes deep as the Hellmuir wa-ter’ [WHO] (also ‘corby’; occurring in some place names, e.g. ‘Corbie Shank’ and ‘Corbyhaa’).

Corbie (kor-bee) n. nature columnist for the Southern Reporter, when??.

the Corbie (thu-kor-bee) n. nickname for Robert Liddersdale.

Corbie Shank (kor-bee-shawngk) n. spur at the head of the Wrangway Burn (in the headwaters of upper Teviotdale), lying between Causeway Grain Head and Haggis Side. There are signs of an old road near here.

Corby Burn (kor-bee-burn) n. small stream in Hobkirk Parish. It rises in Stonedge Forest and runs roughly eastwards, past Harwood House, near where it joins the Harwood Burn (the name may be associated with crows or ravens).

Corbyhaa (kor-bee-haw) n. Corbyhall, former shepherd’s cottage to the south of Stonedge, in Stonedge Forest. James Douglas, tenant there, was buried in Hawick in 1829. The Ordnance Survey maps show a small building and an enclosure, and there is an old quarry to the north (the name is probably a jocular one from being a small cottage on Corby Burn).

cord (körd) n. one of several ropes traditionally held by male friends and relatives and used for lowering a coffin into the grave, now carried out symbolically.

cordiner (kör-di-nur) n., arch. cordwainer, explicitly someone who works in cordwain, i.e. Cordovan leather, but often synonymous with ‘shoe-maker’. In 1722 the ‘cordiners’ of Hawick petitioned the Council to be incorporated separately from the shoemakers (who were those cobbler making single-soled shoes). Together they had been an incorporation from early times, with the original date unrecorded in the Burgh Records – ‘The said day, it is statute and ordained that the cordiniers shall try this market for insufficient leather and unbarkit shone ...’ [BR1643], ‘Robert Hardie, cordener, fyned for ane night rambling ... disguised in women’s apperall, qrbly he terrified and afrighted sevearl persons’ [BR1702] (several spelling variants exist).

Corlaw Burn (kor-law-burn) n. stream that rises near Teviot Stone and flows to the west to eventually join the Meggat Water. There is a linear earthwork there, about 590 m in length.

Cormack (kor-mawk) n. Mr. ?? Headmaster at St. Cuthbert’s School from about 1945 until 1948.

corn (körn, kö-rin) n. generic term for grains, including wheat and also oats (plural sometimes corns).

corn (körn) v., arch. to feed with oats, used in the phrase ‘waur ti witter than ti corn’ applied to an alcoholic – ‘A maun heh been woare ti watter as ti corn, a hantle, for A’ll ouwn A was dry again’ [ECS].

cornet (kör-ni’, kor-nï’) n. a young man in certain towns in south-east Scotland chosen to be standard bearer. This includes Langholm, Lauder and Peebles, as well as (of course) Hawick, and the exiles’ communities in the Boston and Vancouver areas in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

the Cornet (thu-kör-, -kor-nï’) n. principal during the Common Riding, representing the young man who returned from Hornshole with the flag. By tradition he must be a ‘Teri’, unmarried, and remain so for the following 2 years. Usually he has been a mounted supporter for several years previously. The first known list of Cornets was published by John Elder (in Edinburgh) in 1836, along with Hogg’s ‘Teribus’, and contained the names from 1719 to 1835 only; it is unclear who compiled the list, or who added the extra names later, when it was extended. The first recorded Cornet, in 1703, was James Scott, ‘called Laird’, although it is clear there had been Cornets long before that. However, it may have been that the Cornet was previously not such a central figure. Until 1784 the Cornet and some of his supporters rode the marches armed with pistols. In the early days it was traditional for the Cornet to be chosen alternately from the ‘Easla’ and ‘Wasla’ sides of Hawick. And once appointed the Cornet was allowed to sell spirits from his house, without a licence, in order to raise money. Until the mid-19th century only the sons of Burgesses were eligible, therafter it could be any man born in Hawick. After 1993 the rule changed to having birth registered in Hawick and born of parents living in Hawick. Before 1865 one of the Cornet’s duties was to collect funds for the races. He first started to get an allowance from the Committee in 1856, with a token amount now being given annually. Originally the Cornet was selected by the Town Council by voting from a short list, but more recently he has been chosen after considering the nominations forwarded by the previous
the Cornet-Elect

2 years’ Cornets. In 1706 the Cornet-Elect refused to carry the flag due to its state of disrepair, and so the Bailies had to do the duty. Disputes led to there being two Cornets in both 1790 and 1809, and almost again in 1825. The Council declined to elect a Cornet in both 1856 and 1877 (with the election being at a public meeting instead), and there were further votes over whether to elect a Cornet in 1857, 1860, 1862, 1876 and 1878, leading to a virtual severance of ties between the Common Riding and the Council until the 1880s. Previous to 1891 the Cornet wore white trousers, then changing to white riding breeches and top boots. He traditionally wears a green coat, with unknown origin. I photograph taken about 1894 show a group of 20 Cornets, this being supplemented with another dozen individual photographs and issued as a postcard in 1905 – ‘... and nominat James Scott, called of Westport, to be Corronett for that year’ [BR1705], ‘We’ll follow oor Cornet, follow oor Cornet, follow oor Cornet roon’’ [DJ], ‘While ’ere they come’ is heard the cry, ‘The Cornet’s First’ the bairns reply’ [RH], ‘Then rally around the good old flag – let the slogan ring out again! I’ll try to behave like a Cornet brave, you will follow, I know, like men’ [JEDM], ‘The Cornets, God bless them, all Gentlemen, true, They still guard the Pennon and new life imbue’ [WFC] (from Old French ‘Cornette’, the ensign of a company of cavalry).

the Cornet-Elect (thresh-kör-nits-ee-lekt) n. designation for the young man selected to be Cornet, used before the official Picking. Since the name is meant to be secret the phrase is rarely used except in relation to the Picking itself. Note that in the late 19th century the term was used for referring to the Cornet in the days leading up to the Friday of the Common Riding itself (also ‘Cornet Elect’).

the Cornet’s Band (thresh-kör-nits-bawnd) n. popular name for the drum and fife band, from the fact that they march directly in front of the Cornet during some Common Riding ceremonies.

the Cornets’ Board (thresh-kör-nits-börd) n. large oak plaque, placed in the vennel at the Tower in 2014, containing the names of all known Hawick Cornet’s. It was commissioned by the Callants’ Club and made by Alec Cuthbertson, with lettering by Ray Nichol and Colin Wilson.

the Cornet’s Breakfast (thresh-kör-nits-breaf-íst) n. ceremonial breakfast on the Friday morning, for the Cornet and guests, joined by the Drums and Fifes after their march round the old town. Principals from neighbouring towns are also invited, and there is a simulataneous breakfast for the Provost, Bailies and guests. The breakfast took place for the last time in the Cornet’s own house in 1885. The event really took off when Rev. John Thomson (of St. John’s Kirk) accepted the invitation to attend in 1887, when it was held in the Buccleuch Hitel. It later took place in the Tower Hotel, while the Provost and guests breakfasted in the Town Hall. Most recently the breakfast has been held at Robbie’s. After the breakfast the oak leaves are distributed and the Old Song is sung at the door of the Tower. After the Chase the Cornet and followers have a second ‘breakfast’ of curds and cream at St. Leonard’s.

the Cornet’s Chair (thresh-kör-nits-börd) n. ornamental oak chair specially designed for the Cornet to sit on during the quincentenary Colour Bussing. It was made by local craftsman Alex Cuthbertson (with additional help from Hawick Upholstery and Wilson Signs) and gifted to the Common-Riding Committee. It contains the dates 1514–2014 and the words ‘Lest We Forget’. Embarrassingly left out of the 2014 ceremony, it was first used in 2015.

the Cornet’s Chaplain (thresh-kör-nits-chawp-lin) n. title used to refer to the minister officiating at the Kirking of the Cornet ceremony.

the Cornet’s Chase (thresh-kör-nits-chäis) n. name given to the part of the Chase involving the Cornet and the unmarried men, distinguishing it from the Acting Father’s Chase. This particularly refers to the Thursday and Friday mornings, when the Cornet carries the Flag – ‘... The road is cleared, and now the Cornet’s chase Attracts all eyes. Now to the Nipknowes’ crest The eager horses with their riders fly, All madly striving hard to do their best’ [JCG].

the Cornet’s Crop (thresh-kör-nits-krop) n. race-crop presented to the Cornet on the Friday of the Common Riding, the tradition beginning in 1906. It has been inscribed before presentation since 1958. A crop is also presented to the Provost and guests breakfasted in the Town Hall. Most recently the breakfast has been held at Robbie’s. After the breakfast the oak leaves are distributed and the Old Song is sung at the door of the Tower. After the Chase the Cornet and followers have a second ‘breakfast’ of curds and cream at St. Leonard’s.

the Cornet’s Dance (thresh-kör-nits-dans) n. the earliest name for the Ball.
the Cornet’s Denner (thu-kōr-nits-den-nur) n. formerly another name for the Denner and in more recent times for the Greetin Denner.

Cornetship (kōr-ni’-ship) n. the position of being Cornet – ‘Mosstroopers in their hunders folled Chairlie Bell that June, Honoured in nineteen forty-six wae Cornetship o’ toon’ [MB]. ‘It’s a hunder eer this eer sin their ancestor, Gördie Cavers, was the first o’ the name teh gaun the Cornetship’ [BW1979].

the Cornet’s Kirk Parade (thu-kōr-nits-kirk-pu-rād) n. the procession of the Common Riding Principals and their supporters from the Council Chambers to the Kirking. There is a specific order to be followed, with the Cornet first, flanked by his Right- and Left-Hand Men, then the Acting Father, then ex-Cornets, ordered by year of office, then ex-Acting Fathers by year of office, and finally the rest of the supporters. Everyone except for the Principals walk in pairs.

Cornet’s lad (kōr-nits-lawd) n. phrase formerly used to describe any of the young men invited to attend the Common Riding festivities.

the Cornet’s Lancers (thu-kōr-nits-lawn-surz) n. piano tune written by T. Tinniswood, when ??.

the Cornet’s Lass (thu-kōr-nits-laws) n. partner of the Cornet during the Common Riding. She is selected by the Cornet, and does not have to be from Hawick. Although she does not ride, she plays more of a role in Hawick than in most other Border town festivals. Most importantly, at the Colour Bussing ceremony, she carries in the Flag and ties the ribbons on it, saying ‘Provost ..., I very much appreciate the great honour conferred upon me in being allowed to present this ancient banner and trust you will find it well and truly bussed’. After that she puts the sash on the Cornet to complete his uniform. She also lays the wreath at Hornshole, attends most of the functions, and generally supports the Cornet. She also returns for the next 2 years to support him as Right- and Left-Hand Man. For these 3 years she also helps make all the ribbons that decorate the Principals and their horses, as well as the lads in the gallery, etc. at the Colour Bussing. At the Colour Bussing the Flag is held by the 2 previous Cornet’s Lasses as the new Lass tied on the ribbons. At the Ball she partners the Cornets in the Grand March, and wears his sash during the dancing of the Reel. The position only gained importance with the rejuvenation of the Common Riding in the 1880s, when the Colour Bussing became a more ceremonial event. The first known Lasses are from this period, and are recorded as the person who bussed the colour and as the Cornet’s Ball partner. It is unclear when the term ‘Cornet’s Lass’ began to be applied. However, in earlier times there was not a clearly defined role, e.g. in 1855 ‘the young ladies of the town had a manful struggle for the coveted honour of sewing on the first ribbon’. Previous to about 1890 the Lasses would only attend the Moor in an informal capacity, and even then mostly just on the Saturday. The Cornet of 1893 (W.P. Scott) started a tradition of the Cornet presenting his Lass with a bracelet (the design probably being his own). The Lass was first given a modest allowance in 1973, and has been presented with a special brooch at the Colour Bussing since 1957. There was an exhibition of Lasses’ memorabilia in the Museum in 1989 – ‘We’ll pledge his health, his Lass as well and give them our salute’ [NM].

the Cornet’s Lasses Association (thu-kōr-nits-law-seez-aw-sō-see-ä-shin) n. the Cornet’s Lasses and Acting Mothers Association, also known as the ‘Ex-Cornet’s Lasses and Ex-Acting Mothers Association’. It supports Common Riding activities and was started in 1954 by Ex-Cornet’s Lass Peggy Davidson, with Acting Mothers invited to join in the following year. They hold a dinner to celebrate the start of events on Picking Night.

the Cornet’s Lass’s Badge (thu-kōr-nits-law-seez-baj) n. badge or brooch presented to the Cornet’s Lass each year at the Colour Bussing. The first year this was done was 1957, with each surviving Lass being given a brooch that year.

the Cornet’s Lass’s Lunch (thu-kōr-nits-law-seez-lunch) n. lunch for the 8 Common Riding Principals taking place on Kirking Sunday.

the Cornet’s Medal (thu-kōr-nits-me-duul) n. gold medal memento presented since 1895 to each cornet at the Dinner on the Friday (already referred to as ‘customary’ in 1899). It bears the Burgh coat of arms, crossed halberds, oak leaves, Burgh motto, date and Cornet’s name. When it was first issued, several of the previous Cornets had Rutherford the Jewellers also make medals for them, and so earlier examples exist than the first one presented. When the original batch (die-stamped from Birmingham) ran out in 1997, Hamish Smith made a hand-made replica, and has done so annually since then (note, it is distinct from the Cornet’s Badge).

the Cornet’s Pairy (thu-kōr-nits-pär’-ee) n. name sometimes used to refer to the Big Eit.

the Cornet’s Races

the Cornet’s Races (thu-kör-nits-rā-seez) n. the races at Hawick Mair that are specifically for horses and riders that have followed the Cornet. Some of these races are also restricted to married or unmarried men. The races were for a long time organised and officiated by members of the Ceremonial Committee. The prizes have often been silver-mounted riding crops, etc.

the Cornet’s Reel (thu-kör-nits-reel) n. another name for the Reel.

the Cornet’s Room (thu-kör-nits-room) n. name used to refer to a side room for entertaining the Cornet’s guests during the Ball. Formerly in the Tower Hotel and moving to other venues, the last year there was such a room was 2003. The phrase is also used to describe a private room used by the Cornet’s party at other times, e.g. after returning from the Mair on the Friday. This has been located in the Queen’s Head and the Angling Club.

the Cornet’s Sash (thu-kör-nits-sawsh) n. crimson silk sash worn by the Cornet during the Common Riding. The origin of the tradition of wearing the sash is unknown. He gets it from his Lass just before the Provost gives him the Flag at the Colour Bussing on the Thursday evening. At midnight during the Ball he gives it to his Lass, who wears it while they dance the Reel, and then returns it to him. A new sash was sent from Nottingham by William Nixon in 1806, which is still preserved. It is possible that this was the first one, and also the beginning of the wearing of a formal uniform of any sort by the Cornet; this is simply unknown. George MacNee presented a new sash in 1898 and in 1959 a new sash was made by hosiery apprentices at the Henderson Tech.

the Cornet’s Schottische (thu-kör-nits-sho-teesh) n. piano tune written by T. Tinniswood, ?.

Cornet’s Silver Challenge Cup (kör-nits-sil-vur-chaw-linj-kup) n. cup presented at the Common Riding race meeting, for a race run over 6 1/2 furlongs. It is also known as just ‘the Cornet’s Challenge Cup’ and was bought by public subscription in 1888. The original was kept by Mr. Robson of Havelock House in 1892, after winning it 3 times. A new one was then provided by the Ceremonial Committee in 1893, with the stipulation that it would not become the winner’s property, even if won 3 times! This cup stands nearly 2 feet high, has the Burgh arms engraved upon it and is topped by a model of the Cornet holding the Flag aloft. It was supplied by Lawson the jeweller. The winner of the cup also received a gold medal.

the Cornet’s Stables (thu-kör-nits-stä-balz) n. stables used for the horses of the Common Riding Principles during the main 6 weeks of ride-outs and Common Riding week. It was situated on Rosebank Road until 1993, moving then to off the Mill Path.

the Cornet’s Sweepstakes (thu-kör-nits-sweep-stäks) n. former race run at the Common Riding as part of the Cornet’s Races, from at least 1894.

the Cornet’s Tie (thu-kör-nits-tl) n. neck-tie chosen each year by the Cornet-Elect, and worn by many supporters during Common Riding functions and during the following year. The Cornet gives his input to the design of the tie while he is ‘Cornet Elect’. Traditionally it is only revealed in a shop window right after the ‘Pickin’ and not worn until the Kirking and then not again until the Colour Bussing. Ties go back to the late 19th century, but there is a continuous run from only 1914 onwards. In recent years they have been made by Lochcarron. In 1953 the Cornet reverted to wearing stock instead of a tie during Common Riding Friday and Saturday, but from 1957 this has been left to the Cornet’s choice.

Cornet’s Up (kör-nits-up) n. traditional toast that ends Common Riding dinners etc. The Cornet, Right- and Left-Hand Men, and all ex-Cornets present stand on their chairs and each sing a verse of ‘Teribus’, while the rest of the company stand. This happens at the Dinner, as well as at the Overseas Night (but not the Colour Bussing, for example). The Cornet always finishes with ‘Peace be thy portion, Hawick for ever! …’.

Cornet’s Walk (kör-nits-wawk) n. perambulation by the Cornet and followers around the town after the Colour Bussing. The traditional route starts at the Town Hall after the Proclamation has been read. The Saxhorn Band, Drum and Fife band and Halberdiers lead the Cornet and his followers. Usually the 2 previous Acting Fathers join the current Acting Father on the walk. It proceeds along the High Street, with a stop to tie ribbons on the Horse, then continues along Bridge Street to Princes Street, and then down Wilton Path via the Sandbed to Grape’s Close, back to the Sandbed and up to the Loan Old Toll Bar, then via the Kirkwynd, Slitrig Bank, Old Manse Lane, Kirkstilie and back to the Town Hall along the High Street. The precise route has changed over the years. The march is led by the Drums. and Fifes and the Saxhorn Band playing alternately. Following the walk many of the children proceed to the Shows. In former times there were two additional walks, one after the Picking, and one after the May hiring fair. Both were discontinued in the 1880s, but the one after the Picking was reinstated later. In 2002 the Walk was tried out before the tying of the ribbons at the horse.

deCornmill Court

The Corn Exchange (thu-körn-iks-chân) n.

Built in 1865/6 on the banks of the Slitrig to conduct agricultural business as well as to provide an entertainment venue. The land was gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, the decision to build came in 1861, and money was raised by subscription to a private company. The design was by John T. Rochead, and included a large open structure, together with a corner tower and lower adjacent structure. There were many delays in construction, including the collapse of the arch during building work in 1863. The foundation stone was laid in 1865 to great jubilation, with a public holiday, 310 Freemasons in attendance, and a glass ‘time capsule’ placed in the stone. It served many purposes over the years, but principally as a municipal entertainment complex rather than an agricultural hall. In about 1910 it was acquired for showing ‘moving pictures’, and was renamed the King’s Theatre in 1920. Subsequently renamed the Odeon, the Classic and then the Marina, it became a bingo hall and then a nightclub, ‘Humphrey’s’. The building largely burned down in 1992, with only a small part remaining, the rest being turned into a car park. A coat of arms bearing the date 1865 had previously been removed to behind the War Memorial in the Park.

Hawick’s main mill for grinding corn, built around 1805 and still surviving on the Mill Path. It is a 3-storey building of whinstone with red sandstone dressings, while the adjacent Mill House is 2-storey. It was re-developed in 2002 into housing for older people. It is a grade B listed building. An earlier Corn Mill stood at Mill Port, and was largely swept away in the great flood of 1767. Wood’s 1824 map labels this as the ‘Flour Mill’, with the ‘Corn Mill’ being a separate building on the modern Allars Crescent.

Cormmill Court (körn-nil-kör) n.

Housing developed by Eildon Housing in the old Corn Mill building in 2002.

Corrie (ko-ree) n. George (18th/19th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1778, when he was working for James Douglas. His name appears to be ‘Corie’. John (d.1917) born in Langholm, he played for Langholm R.F.C. from an early age, moving to Hawick in 1912. He worked at Noble’s and played for Hawick R.F.C. as a forward until WWI started. He was called up to the Lancashire Yeomanry in 1914, and kept a war-time diary. Honorably discharged in 1916, he re-enlisted in the Machine Gun Corps, became a tank driver, was promoted to Lance-Corporal and was killed during the taking of Messines Ridge (on what would have been Common Riding Thursday). His diary was returned to his sweetheart, Lizzie Rutherford, who never married.

Corrie’s Shiel (ko-reetz-sheel) n.

Former farmstead in the hills near Hartsgarth, above the Hermitage Water. It is probably the place recorded as ‘Carryscheulis’ on a rental roll c.1376. It could be the same place marked as ‘Hersheules’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map around the Ralton Burn. In 1479 the lands were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh, along with ‘Layhalch’ (probably Leaugh) and Hartsgarth. It was possessed by the Elliots of...

Corrie Sike (ko-ree-sik) n. stream that runs north to join the Frostlie Burn near Castleweary, in the headwaters of the Teviot. There was formerly a farmstead here, called Corriesike.

Corriesike (ko-ree-sik) n. former farmstead by the stream of the same name, in the headwaters of the Teviot. It belonged to Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1561 when rented to Archibald ‘Willat’, also recorded as ‘Arche Elliott’. It was purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620, along with Langbyre, Giddenscleuch and Caerlenrig. It was ‘Corrysyke’ owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. The lands were included among those of Lymiecleuch (along with Langbyre and Giddenscleuch) when sold by William Elliott of Stobs to a group of Elliots in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. It was included in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and his brother Archibald in 1698. It was among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott of Stobs from his father in 1692 (marked ‘Corysyvick’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it could be the ‘Corrisheuc’ recorded in 1494/5, is ‘Corresyke’ in 1561, ‘Corresik’ and ‘Corresyke’ in 1569, transcribed combined with Binks as ‘Corisykbinks’ in 1687 and ‘Corissykthebank’ in 1698 and ‘Corrysyck’ in 1692).

corrup’ (ko-rup) v., adj., arch. corrupt – ‘Thaye ar corrup, an’ speik wicketlie anent oppressione …’ [HSR].

Corronett (kör-ni’) n. first recorded spelling of the word ‘Corney’, from the 1704 Burgh Records.

corse (körs) n., arch. a cross, market cross, wayside cross – ‘…and theirof gert mak opin proclamatioun at the merkat cors of Jedworth …’ [SB1500] (in place names, e.g. Corsecleuch, Corse Grain and Shiplaw Corse).

Corsecleuch (körs-klooch) n. former farm on the east side of Rule valley, between Bedrule and Fulton, also known as Crosscleugh. The minister of Bedrule formerly had the right to cut turf annually on the moor here. It was among lands owned by Sir Thomas Ker in 1643, valued at £160. It was owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788. It was among lands owned by William Elliot of Bedrule in 1811 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, it is ‘Corscleugh’ in 1643 and in about 1795 and ‘Corse Cleugh’ in 1811).

Corse Scott

Corsecleuch (körs-klooch) n. former lands in the Ettrick valley, probably near to Atrieve. They were assigned to Adam Scott of Tushielaw and his son Walter in 1513. John Scott in Thirlestane was tenant in 1541, paying £12 yearly. The Scotts were ‘kindly tenants’ of the lands for about a century, with Robert Scott of Thirlestane purchasing them from Alexander, Lord Home, in 1590. This is probably the steading of ‘Corsley’ in Ettrick Forest where in 1575/6 Walter Veitch of North Synton complained that he was due the ‘mails’ (it is ‘Crocecleuch’ in 1541).

Corseflat (körs-fla’) n. name formerly applied to the flat fields in the ‘carse’ of the river, between Longbaulk Road and the Teviot, in the general area of the playing fields. This could be the ‘Corsback’ listed among the lands of the Scotts of Crumhaugh in 1696.

Corse Grain (körs-grän) n. stream in Craik Forest, at the extreme western edge of Roxburghshire. It leads from Craik Cross Hill to the north, joining the Northhope Burn. The name presumably derives from the wayside cross that was formerly on the road there.

Corses (kör-seez) n. former farm near Ashkirk.

Corse Scott (körs-skó) n. John (1756–1840) of Bughtrig, born John Corse, he changed his name after marrying Catherine Scott of Synton. He owned the Synton estate and was proprietor of Synton Mill in the early 19th century. When in India he was in charge of his company’s elephants, and contributed elephant skulls to the East India Company museum in 1801. He was listed as owner of Synton and Synton Mill in the Land Tax Rolls of 1803. He was also the Capt. Scott of Synton who commanded one of the 2 local volunteer units that was mobilised at the False Alarm of 1804. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary (for 3 copies). He was a Director of the Royal Bank of Scotland in 1816. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory lists him as proprietor of Synton. He and his wife both subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1828. He planted about 230 acres of woodland on his estate. His sons were: John (b.1801), who succeeded; Henry; Lt. Col. Alexander (b.1804), of the Bengal Native Infantry; Maj. James (b.1810) of the Bengal Native Infantry; and Edward Williams (b.1820), who also served in India. His daughter Helen Eliza married William Downe Gillon, M.P. for Linlithgow and Falkirk. He may be the John whose daughter Catherine married Edward Binny Glass and whose youngest daughter Margaret married David Laird of Strathmartin. One of his daughters was born in 1806. John of Synton (b.1801) son of the first Corse Scott of Synton, he was born in Edinburgh. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819 when still younger of Synton. In 1844 he wrote letters to the Duke of Buccleuch relating to the trapping of foxes. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1881. He married Mary Baptie and was succeeded by his son John. His younger brother Alexander also died in 1919 of disease caught during WWI. He was probably the cottage hospital instigator for the hospital was Dr. J.R. Hamilton, and although there was some early opposition, a series of health lectures were used to raise an initial fund, with a committee formed to gather the rest of the money. The memorial stone was laid with full masonic honours by the Grand Master Mason of Scotland, the Earl of Mar and Kellie in 1884 (a photograph of the event exists). The building was designed by John McLachlan (of Edinburgh), who later designed the hospital in Coldstream; the design has particularly interesting downpipes on the gables. After opening it served the health needs of Hawick for accidents and non-infectious cases, with X-ray and physiotherapy departments added. It also had a dispensary in its earliest years. Alexander Inglis and J.P. Alison were both involved with alterations in the early 1900s. The Esmond Elliot wing was built in 1924 (opened by the Prince of Wales, later King Edward VIII) and the James Henderson Memorial building in 1933. The hospital was taken over by the National Health Service in 1948. D.W. Cameron wrote an article on its first hundred years in 1985. The hospital was run by the Borders Health Board, and from 1987 the majority of surgical cases were transferred to the B.G.H. In the late 80s the community radio station Radio Roxburgh was run out of space there. Minor treatments moved to the Hawick Community Hospital in 2005 and the hospital finally closed in 2007. The Borders College purchased the land and developed their new Hawick Campus at the Buccleuch Street level, opening in 2009. Hospital records are archived for the period 1884–1948.

Cottage Park (ko’-eej-pawrk) n. name for the field at St. Leonard’s where the horses are kept while their riders are in the Hut. It is named after the former cottage (‘Annie Jolly’s’) across the road by the old curling pond.

Cottar (ko-, kō-tur) n., arch. a tenant who lives in a cottage having only a small amount of land, and works for the landowner at harvest in lieu of rent – ‘The cottar lassie paid nae charge, But Lairdy he paid double’ [JRE], ‘...got his peats and turf ... from the mosses and muir in the Common, as did the other cottars’ [C&L], ‘It’s hard terms at present, of this I am sure, That puir cottar bodies find it ill to endure’ [JCG] (also formerly written ‘coatar’ and variants).

Cottlaw (ko’-law) n. former name for lands near Hawick, listed along with Midshiels, Appletreehall and Crawhill in the 16th and 17th century. In 1562/3 it was one of the lands around Chamberlain Newton and Hassendean that the superior Alexander Lord Home tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’ from. It may be the same place as ‘Courtthill’ (also called ‘Cotlaw’; it is ‘Cotlaw’ in 1535 and 1562/3, and ‘Cotlaw’ in 1611).

Cotton’s Patent Frame (ko’-inz-pā’-in’-frām) n. knitwear frame patented by William Cotton of Loughborough in 1864. With some modifications over the years it became the main manufacturing machine in Hawick for almost a century. It could knit up to 10,000 loops per minute, and allowed garments to be shaped automatically.

of the 19th century – ‘Dan Narre and Kit i’ the Bar, The Cud and Coulter and Five O’clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock’ [HI] (perhaps related to ‘Coulter’s Candy’ or to a ‘cooter’, i.e. a blade of a ploughshare or a big nose).
Coulter (kool-tur) n. Francis (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1732 he was at Woodburn. His children included: Mary (b.1727); George (b.1732); John (b.1734); an unnamed child (b.1737); Agnes (again, b.1742); and Agnes (b.1745). Francis (1771–1846) from Hawick, he moved to Stamford, Delaware. He mar-rried Nancy Glendinning (d.1873). Their children were: Isabella (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1800);

James (b.1808); Ellen (b.1810); David (b.1813);
and William (b.1817). His grandson James A.
was born in Bovina in 1834 (see also Coltart).
Coulter’s Candy (kool-tur-kawn-dee) n. confection formerly made by Robert Coltart, who was based in the Melrose and Galashiels areas.
He travelled around selling his wares at fairs and other events throughout the south of Scotland.
The candy was aniseed-flavoured, but the recipe was lost on Coltart’s death in 1890. He would also sing a jingle as a form of advertisement, which he is said to have been composed himself – ‘Ally bally, ally bally bee, Sittin’ on yer mammy’s knee, Greetin’ for another bawbee, Tae buy some Coul-ter’s Candy’ [T].
Coulter Sike (kool-tur-sik) n. small stream appeals. It was the national court that heard the case of the division of the Common in 1766.

Cousaldsyid (cow-sald-sid) n. house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, just south of Braidhaugh, the modern identification of which is unclear.

couched (kooshd) adj., arch. ?? – ‘A’m gettin’ about sick o’d, this Canadian wunter’s a couch’d’ [JEDM].

Cousin (ku-zin) n. Margaret (15th C.) daughter of William (who must have been an important landowner, but no identification has been made). She was wife of Simon Routledge according to a charter of 1447 in which the ‘Cusinglands’, which were her dowry lands, were conveyed by her husband to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Her son and heir is stated to be Robert Scott, which provides support for the version given by John Leyden, although it is not possible that she was widow of Robert Scott of Rankilburn, making her step-mother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, with her son perhaps being Robert of Haining (but this is all speculation). In the accompanying sasine she is stated to be daughter and heir of William ‘Cusyne’. Her name is given as ‘Margareta Cusing’ and ‘Mergrete Cusyne’ (formerly written ‘Cusyn’, ‘Cusing’ and variants).

cousing (kow-zing) n., arch. a cousin, kinsman – ‘I, Schir Walter Scott of Brauxhelme, knycht, be the tennour heirof, grantis me weill content, satisfiet and payit be my cousing, Robert Scott ... ’ [SB1569] (cf. the later cuisin).

Cousinlands (ku-zinlandz) n. lands referred to in a charter of 1447, when they were sold to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch by Margaret Cousin. The lands were referred to explicitly as being commonly called ‘Cusingisland, in the town and territory of Brankishame, on the north part thereof, in the barony of Hawick’. The ‘precept’ between Margaret Cousin and her son Robert Scott was signed in Hawick. It is possible this is the same as the house marked ‘Cousaldsyid’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map (it is ‘Cusingisland’ and ‘Cusynlandis’ in 1447).

Coust (koo’ kow’) n., arch. a young horse, colt, a mildly contemptuous term for a young man – ‘He yet might keep the causa’ croon Alang wi’ decent folk – A raggit coust a race has won, And sae might little Jock’ [JT], ‘The eddy, in which he perished, is still called the Cout of Keldar’s Pool ... and the popular epithet of Cout ... is expressive of his strength, stature, and activity’ [JL] (also spelled ‘cowt’).

Coutard (koo-tur) n. variant of the surname Coltart.

the Coutard Fund (thu-koo-tur’-fund) n. fund set up in the mid-19th century to help poor residents of Hobkirk Parish. It was established form a £1,000 bequest by John and William Dalgleish in memory of their mother Elizabeth Dalgleish, nee Coutard.

couthily (koo-thu-lee) adv., arch., poet. pleasantly, agreeably – ‘Aye, they tell it still when the tale they raise, Hoo the pair lived couthily an their days’ [WL].

Coulair Knowe (koo-ler-now) n. hill in Craik Forest, about midway between Craik and Buccleuch. It reaches a height of 418 m and has a triangulation pillar on top.

Cout o Kielder (koot-keel-dur) n. ballad about the young Laird of Kielder, particularly known from the version collected by John Leyden. In the story Kielder rode to Liddesdale and was invited into Hermitage Castle by Sir William de Soulis, who then tried to kill him. Kielder escaped, but was drowned in 'the foamy linn', i.e. a pool in the nearby river. This happened about 1290, and he is supposedly buried in a low mound at Hermitage Chapel – 'And now young Kielder reached the stream Above the foaming linn; The Border lances round him gleam And force the warrior in' [JL], 'If all be true which records tell, The 'Cout' of Kielder here is laid; In that deep pool, 'tis said, he fell, And it we wondrously surveyed' [TCh] (see cout).

Cout’s Pool (koots-pool) n. pool in the Hermitage Water, just upstream of where the bridge crosses for access to Hermitage Castle. It is here that legend says ‘Cout o Kielder’ was drowned.

the Covenant (thu-kuv-in-an’-ezerz) n. in the 17th century a group of Presbyterians who supported one of two agreements intended to defend and extend their religion against the rules of Charles I, and in particular the Anglican-type prayer-books he attempted to introduce in 1637. Almost all prominent men of Teviotdale signed the Covenant of 1638. It led to great complications in Scotland’s relationship with England during the English Civil War, and also fervent passions, culminating in the massacre at Philiphaugh. Hawick collected monies for the Covenanters’ army in 1639 and 1641 and local soldiers were recruited through the 1640s. Sheriff Douglas raised a strong force in Teviotdale to fight for the Covenanters’ ideals, eventually fighting alongside Cromwell’s Ironsides, with several locals being at Aulderne in 1645. When Charles II assumed the throne, lay patronage returned, the Covenant was declared treasonous, and the tide turned. The remaining Covenanters had to hold secret meetings in the countryside, and many people were persecuted and died fighting for their beliefs. The Rule valley was a local Covenanting centre in the mid-to-late 17th century, and a band of fugitive Covenanters, led by Turnbull of Standlaw, successfully laid siege to Drumlanrig’s Tower in 1679. Other local landowners who were sympathetic to the Covenanting cause were Scott of Harden and Douglas of Cavers. Preachers William Veitch and George Bryson hid in a remote part of Southdean Parish. After their disastrous defeat at Bothwell Brig in 1679 many local men were captured, including about a dozen who perished when the ship they were being transported to America in wrecked off the Orkneys; there is a monument to this disaster near the spot the ship went down at Deerness. Into the early 1680s proclamations were fixed to the town market crosses bearing the names of those accused of frequenting Conventicles; this was the ‘Killing Times’, when attending field conventicles was punishable by death. The Town Council repudiated the Solemn League and Covenant in 1681 and a long list of fugitives was declared in 1684, including many from Hawick and neighbouring areas. The tailors and weavers in Hawick petitioned the Council to let them take ‘the test’ (against Covenanters, etc.) en masse, which they did in 1684. In the following year 9 local farmers took the same ‘test’ in Hawick, in the presence of Sir William Elliott of Stobs, the Earl of Lothian’s Lieutenant. The number of followers (and hence harsh punishments) declined in about 1686 after the death of Alexander Peden. And the whole situation turned around again with the Revolution of 1689/90 and the re-establishment of Presbyterianism. Many of the Episcopalian ministers were ousted and those surviving Presbyterians who had been ejected in the 1660s were restored. The Cameronians continued for a while as the lingering extremists of the Covenanters days (including a group around Denholm) and would ultimately join the Free Kirk. The history of the period was later romanticised, partly due to the work of Hawick-born Robert Paterson, immortalised by cover points

Sir Walter Scott as ‘Old Mortality’, who travelled the country erecting graves to Covenantant martyrs.

the Cow (thu-kow) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century. There was also separately Robbie the Cow and Babbie the Cow.

Cowan (kow-iin) n. Andrew (1768/9–1848) shepherd at Northhouse. His wife was Hannah Gillespie (1778/9–1849). They are buried at Teviothead. Rev. Andrew Hutton (1820–85) born in Kilmarnock, he studied at Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. He was ordained at Denholm Free Kirk in 1844, but left for Troon in 1846. He was Elliot (b.1825) son of William and Anne Henderson, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a hosiery worker in Hawick, but married Jeanie Hunter and took over his father-in-law’s farming activities up the Loan. The family were living at about 5 Drumlanrig Place in 1861, when he was a warehouseman. He married Jane Hunter in 1853 and they celebrated their golden wedding in 1903. Their children included: William (b.1853), who probably died young; Thomas (b.1856), who carried on the farming; Margaret Dodds (b.1859); Annie Henderson (b.1861), who married John Smith, plumber and Cornet; Mary (b.1864); Janet (b.1867); and Agnes (b.1870). His grandson Elliot Cowan Smith was named after him. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included Agnes (b.1703) and Elspeth (b.1705). James (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1707 he was witness for a baptism for fellow tailor John Hardie. He was recorded in 1724 being paid ‘for ribbons to the race, mell, and calk’; given that this was in late May, it seems likely that it was connected with the Common Riding, although the meaning of ‘mell’ (perhaps a mallet given as a booby-prize) and ‘calk’ (perhaps chalk used for marking for races) are obscure. He married Marion Falsyde in 1706 and their children included: Margaret (b.1705), born in ‘forn.’; John (b.1707); and James (b.1715). The witnesses in 1705 were Henry Orrock and merchant James Weens. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded in Hoscote in 1733 and Deanburnhaugh in 1737. He married Margaret Clerk in 1728 and their children included: William (b.1729); Jean (b.1731); Isobel (b.1733); Thomas (b.1735); an unnamed child (b.1737); William (b.1738); and Elizabeth (b.1740). James (1861–1924) son of James and Alison Lees, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was a stonemason. He married Janet (1863–1947), daughter of James Cavers; she died in Hawick. Their children were: James (b.1886); Jane (b.1888); Frank (1890–1917), who served with the K.O.S.B. and died in Palestine; and Alice (b.1889). John (18th C.) part of the group of 3 men and 1 woman who were jailed in Edinburgh for their conduct in opposing the arrival of the new minister of Castleton Parish, Simon Haliburton, in 1751. He was surely related to William, who was also imprisoned. The group were soon released. John (17th/18th C.) Burgh Officer of Hawick recorded in 1723. That year he was given money by the Session because he was ‘at present labouring under a sad and severe sickness’. He may have been the John born in Hawick in 1670 to Thomas and Margaret Waugh. Katherine (18th C.) recorded at Woodburn in 1765 when her daughter Isobel was baptised in Robertson Parish. Margaret (1801–62) resident of Newcastleton, son of William and Alison Hardy. She married Walter Armstrong (1800–34), who was a mason in Castleton, son of mason John and Isabella Marshall. She was a ‘Widow & Teacher’ on North Hermitage Street in 1841 and in 1851 was listed as a mason’s widow, receiving parish relief. Mary (18th/19th C.) resident of Borthaugh in Robertson Parish. Her son Robert (b.1806) was baptised in Robertson in 1808, with ‘the mother being Spencer’. It is possible she was the Mary, daughter of Robert, baptised in 1765. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded at the 1623 Circuit Court when Simon Wilson (Priesthaugh), John Martin (Branxholme Town) and William Cowan (Craik, his brother) were surety for him. He was described as ‘Hob Cowane in Ailmure’. Robert (17th/18th C.) Wright in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably also the Robert listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is possible he was the Robert fined in 1700 for ‘breach of the fair, in throwing of ane stoupe full of wine, and striking at William Aitkin’. In 1711, along with John Boyd, he was fined for being found in an alehouse on the Sabbath. He could be the Robert who married Helen Fowler and whose children born in Hawick included Bessie (b.1679), John (b.1681), Robert (b.1686) and Helen (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were ‘cordiner’ John Scott and tailor Walter Gledstains. He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms for James Brydon and William Scott in 1676 and for John Glendinning in 1678. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Borthwick Mains, where he was recorded in 1710 and 1716. He is probably the Robert who was married in Roberton in 1702. His children included: Bessie (b.1702); Adam (b.1704); Thomas (b.1706); John (b.1716); and Helen (b.1719). He could be the Robert from Roberton Parish who paid for the use of the Wilton mortcloth in 1705.

Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was married in 1718, with no wife’s name recorded. Perhaps the same Robert also married in Wilton in 1715, also with no wife’s name given. He is probably the Robert who was married to Marion Scott and living at Borthaugh in 1724. Their children included: Margaret (b.1720); Jean (b.1722); Helen (b.1724); an unnamed son (b.1728); Robert (b.1730); and John (b.1732). The witnesses in 1724 were William Turnbull and James Scott; in 1724 he also witnessed a baptism for James Scott at Borthaugh. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Ridnessed a baptism for James Scott at Borthaugh. Turnbull and James Scott; in 1724 he also wit-nesses in 1724 were William and James Scott; in 1724 he also witnessed a baptism for James Scott at Borthaugh.

Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isobel Telfer and their children included William (b.1690) and Isobel (b.1693). The witnesses in 1690 were John Scott and Andrew .... William (d.c.1706) herd in Southfield. He married Marion ‘Bleak’. He was already deceased when his daughter Agnes was baptised in 1706. The witnesses were Robert Scott in Newbigging and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield. He could be the William listed at Whitchестers among ‘The poor in Hawick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) herd in Hawick Parish. He may have been son of the earlier William. In 1713 he was herd in Nether Southfield when his son Thomas was baptised, with witnesses John and Walter Scott, tenants in Whitchesters. William (18th C.) resident at Parkhill in 1743 when his son James was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. He- len (b.1740) and Margaret (b.1746) were probably his daughters. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. Along with John and 2 oth- ers he was imprisoned in Edinburgh for opposing the ordination of Simon Haliburton as the new minister in 1751. The group were soon released and returned to Liddesdale. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Anne (also known as Agnes) Henderson. Their children included: John (b.1812); Francis (b.1815); Margaret (b.1816); Walter (b.1818); William (b.1821); George (b.1824); and Elliot (b.1825). He is probably the William, son of John and Mary Robson born in Castleton in 1786. He appears to have been deceased before the 1841 census. He could be the William who was shep-herd at Kershope on a list of heads of households in 1835-41 (also formerly ‘Couan’ and ‘Coine’).

Cow Andrew (kow-an-droo) n. nickname for someone in the early 19th century.

the Cowie (thu-kow-e) n. fairy that is said to have inhabited the farm of Gorrenberry. According to legend it was a helpful spirit, which assisted with work about the farm, which belonged to the Elliots at that time. However, it would also lament loudly as a portent of a coming death. When the last Laird, Adam Elliot, perished after falling from his horse when fording the Hermitage Water, it is said that the Cowie wailed louder than ever, and then was heard no more.

Cow Jean (kow-jeen) n. fictional character in J.E.D. Murray’s play ‘The Gutterbludes’, also known as ‘Jean Kaishie’. She sings the song ‘Oor Gutterblude’, otherwise known as ‘Cow Jean’s Oration’.

Cowladyhaa (kow-lä-dee-haw) n. Cowladyhall, former farm above Branxholme Park, reached by the side road connecting the Teviot and Borthwick valleys. There were probably Scoons there in the mid-19th century. A building is shown there as ruined on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Cowman (kow-mun) n. Adam ‘Ade’ (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s.

the Cowney dogs (thu-kow-nee-dög) n., pl. breed of pale-headed terrier, said to have originated in the Hawick area near the beginning of the 19th century, then travelling to England, perhaps being the precursors of the ‘Bedlington’ and ‘Dandie Dinmont’ breeds.

cowp (kowp) v. to spill, overturn, topple, tip, pour, empty out – ‘cowp them inti this bowel’, ‘He’d whine and bark, upon me loup, And in his nonsense while he’d coup’ [TCh]. ‘...When you’re taken by the extor and you’re couped into a chair’ [WHO], n. a spill, tumble – ‘A’m pairched, let’s gaun an get some cowp-age’, ‘They’ll rue the coup as sure’s a gun, The neist big flude ’ill how them fun’ [WNK] (from French via Middle English, also spelled ‘coup’).

Crackwell (krawk-wel) name for lands in Ashkirk Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. It is written ‘Crackuooll’ and appears between Ashkirk Mill and Dryden, with 4 tenants there. The name might be an error for ‘Clerklands’, since there are no other obvious possibilities for where this was.

Craft (kraft) n. nickname for James Wilson.

Crag Bank (krag-bawngk) n. steep slope on the east side of Wolfhopelee Hill, between Wolfhopelee and Hyndlee.

Craggs (kragz) n. farm in Lilliesleaf Parish, also known as ‘Lilliesleaf Craggs’. It lies just to the east of the village. William Gray was there on the 1797 Horse Tax rolls. James Alexander was farmer there in 1841 and Archibald Brown in the 1850s and 60s.

Cragwood (krag-wood) n. former place name that was once home of a branch of the Turnbulls. In a 1540 list of Scottish rebels who had fled to England 3 sons of ‘Cragwode’ are mentioned, namely ‘Pate’, ‘Hodghe’ and ‘Ade’. We might speculate that ‘Cragwode’ himself was also a Peter. They were listed with Turnbulls from Catleee, and so they may also have been from the upper Rulewater.

the Craggy Burn (thu-kraw-gee-burn) n. name sometimes used for a stream near Hawick Mossbrow. It was mentioned in descriptions of the Common given in the court case brought in 1767, but it’s precise location is unclear.

craig (kräg) n., arch. a crag, cliff, projecting rock, rocky ground – ‘O they may sing o’ ither lands Wi’ craig and wild ravine’ [JEDM], (the word is used in local place names, e.g. Alemoor Craig, Burnt Craigs, Craig Hill, Dean Craig, Minto Craigend and Skelfhill Craig).

Craig (kräg) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, specifically the Hassendean part. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for James Main (who may have been related to his wife). In 1681 his son William was baptised in Robertson, with no mother’s name given and witnesses Thomas Scott and John . . . . He married Isobel ‘Maine’ and their children included: Adam (b.1683), James (b.1687) and Bessie (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were William Martin and Thomas Robson, in 1687 were Dand Elliot and James Scott and in 1688 were John Hardie and James Main. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at ‘Falsecastle’ (presumably Fastcastle) in 1717. His children included: Isabel (b.1712); Bessie (b.1714); Margaret (b.1716); and Bessie (again, b.1717). Alan McDonald Craig (20th C.) minister of Castleton Parish Kirk from 1931. In the 1950s he wrote papers on the medical history of Castleton Parish in the 18th century. His wife was the first President of the Parish Guild, formed in 1932. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His name is written ‘Craige’. Rev. Archibald (1781–1876) minister of Bedrule. Born at Coldingham, son of a farm labourer (who was apparently living near Prestonpans the day of the battle of 1745). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1810, and there became an expert in Greek. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Chirnside in 1812 and became assistant at Bedrule in 1832, taking over in 1836 and remaining until he died. He read in several European languages, as well as ancient Hebrew. He published ‘A Monody to the Memory of Joseph Hume, Advocate’ (1819), ‘Introduction to Greek Accentuation’ (1832), and a translation of ‘Apollonius Rhodius’ (1876). In addition he kept a diary and wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account; this contains much useful information c.1837, including a brief discussion of dialect, with some examples, ending with the condescending statement that ‘these peculiarities of dialect are, of course, generally confined to the lower ranks of the people, – although, such is the effect of habit and imitation, you hear sometimes people, from whose education and rank you might augur differently, utter the same harsh and barbarous sounds’. He was known for his generally conservative views, including on locally hot topics, such as enfranchisement. He lived to an old age, being able to clearly recall incidents from his early life. He died unmarried and is buried in Bedrule churchyard. John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of Craig the chemists at 17 High Street. Bottles still exist for ‘Craig’s Stone Ginger’. A ‘codd bottle’ for lemonade is in the Museum, labelled ‘Lemonade, J. Craig, Chemist, Hawick’. Mrs. ?? (d.1914) wife of pharmacist John Craig, she was a member of the School Board. Mary W. from Stow, she wrote ‘The Border Burnings – The Story of the Witchcraft Trials of the Scottish Borders’ (2008). Matthew Robert Smith ‘R.S.’ (1867–1921) Hawick-based advocate, with premises at 22 Buccleuch Street. He was writer of the words for ‘Safe oot, Safe in’ and ‘Teribus: The Ballad of Hornshole and the Fight of 1514’ (better known as ‘1514’) as well as poems such as ‘The Mosstroopers’, ‘A Border Town’, ‘Queen of the Moorlands’, ‘To Teviot’, ‘Teviot’, ‘A Dream of Flodden’ and ‘St. Mary’s’. He co-wrote ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898) with Adam Laing and wrote ‘Hawick and the Borders’ (1927), as well as his collected poems ‘In Borderland: Border and Other Verses’ (1899 and 1922). The careful research behind ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ led to an end of the 19th century criticism of the lack of historical basis for the Common Riding. He emigrated to Australia in the period 1899–1905, thereafter living in the south of England, where he died. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Rev. Neil D. (20th C.) minister of St. Andrew’s Kirk of Roberton Parish, specifically the Hassendean part. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for James Main (who may have been related to his wife). In 1681 his son William was baptised in Robertson, with no mother’s name given and witnesses Thomas Scott and John . . . . He married Isobel ‘Maine’ and their children included: Adam (b.1683), James (b.1687) and Bessie (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were William Martin and Thomas Robson, in 1687 were Dand Elliot and James Scott and in 1688 were John Hardie and James Main. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at ‘Falsecastle’ (presumably Fastcastle) in 1717. His children included: Isabel (b.1712); Bessie (b.1714); Margaret (b.1716); and Bessie (again, b.1717). Alan McDonald Craig (20th C.) minister of Castleton Parish Kirk from 1931. In the 1950s he wrote papers on the medical history of Castleton Parish in the 18th century. His wife was the first President of the Parish Guild, formed in 1932. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His name is written ‘Craige’. Rev. Archibald (1781–1876) minister of Bedrule. Born at Coldingham, son of a farm labourer (who was apparently living near Prestonpans the day of the battle of 1745). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1810, and there became an expert in Greek. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Chirnside in 1812 and became assistant at Bedrule in 1832, taking over in 1836 and remaining until he died. He read in several European languages, as well as ancient Hebrew. He published ‘A Monody to the Memory of Joseph Hume, Advocate’ (1819), ‘Introduction to Greek Accentuation’ (1832), and a translation of ‘Apollonius Rhodius’ (1876). In addition he kept a diary and wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account; this contains much useful information c.1837, including a brief discussion of dialect, with some examples, ending with the condescending statement that ‘these peculiarities of dialect are, of course, generally confined to the lower ranks of the people, – although, such is the effect of habit and imitation, you hear sometimes people, from whose education and rank you might augur differently, utter the same harsh and barbarous sounds’. He was known for his generally conservative views, including on locally hot topics, such as enfranchisement. He lived to an old age, being able to clearly recall incidents from his early life. He died unmarried and is buried in Bedrule churchyard. John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of Craig the chemists at 17 High Street. Bottles still exist for ‘Craig’s Stone Ginger’. A ‘codd bottle’ for lemonade is in the Museum, labelled ‘Lemonade, J. Craig, Chemist, Hawick’. Mrs. ?? (d.1914) wife of pharmacist John Craig, she was a member of the School Board. Mary W. from Stow, she wrote ‘The Border Burnings – The Story of the Witchcraft Trials of the Scottish Borders’ (2008). Matthew Robert Smith ‘R.S.’ (1867–1921) Hawick-based advocate, with premises at 22 Buccleuch Street. He was writer of the words for ‘Safe oot, Safe in’ and ‘Teribus: The Ballad of Hornshole and the Fight of 1514’ (better known as ‘1514’) as well as poems such as ‘The Mosstroopers’, ‘A Border Town’, ‘Queen of the Moorlands’, ‘To Teviot’, ‘Teviot’, ‘A Dream of Flodden’ and ‘St. Mary’s’. He co-wrote ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898) with Adam Laing and wrote ‘Hawick and the Borders’ (1927), as well as his collected poems ‘In Borderland: Border and Other Verses’ (1899 and 1922). Craig-Broon 1941–46. R. Hunter (19th C.) minister of Newcastleton Congregational Kirk 1891–95. William (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed baptism in 1708 for baxter Walter Boyd and in 1713 for carrier William Rae. He married Mary Roderick and their children included: Janet (b.1707); William (b.1709); and Mary (b.1714). The witnesses in 1709 were baxter John Whillans and William Hodge (formerly written ‘Craige’).

Craig-Broon (krāg-broon) n. (Craig-Brown)

Thomas (1844–1922) born in Galashiels and educated at Edinburgh University, he was appointed as editor of the Border Advertiser shortly after graduating. He had a wool-spinning business and was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He was Provost of Selkirk 5 times. He purchased the old prison of Selkirk and presented it to that town. He contributed several articles to local learned societies and his most important work was his ‘History of Selkirkshire’ (1886). He also edited the ‘Letters of Mrs. Cockburn, 1713–1794’ (1900).

Craig Douglas (krāg-dug-lis) n. farm on the Yarrow Water, between the Gordon Arms and St. Mary’s Loch, also called Douglas Craig. Blackhouse tower is up the Douglas Burn to the north. It was formerly also known as ‘Douglas Craig’. There was once a tower here, one of the seats of the Earls of Douglas, which was destroyed by James II in 1451. The lands were owned by the Crown after being forfeited (along with much of Ettrick Forest) by the Douglases. It was leased to Alemoor of that Ilk in the late 15th century and to John Murray and David Pringle in the early 16th century (formerly written ‘Douglascrag’, ‘Dowglascrag’ and variants).

Craigend (krāg-end) n. name formerly used for part of Minto, presumably because of being at the (north-east) end of Minto Crags. Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (‘Gibbie o the Gowden Garters’) and some of his descendants were sometimes called ‘of Craigend’. Thomas Young was tenant there shortly before 1502 when it was burned by a group of Scott, Armstrong and Turnbull rievers. ‘The Cragge End’ at Minto was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. It is listed as part of the estate of Stobs when purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. A later Gilbert Elliott (also of Hartsgarth) had a charter of the lands in 1638. In 1643 it was valued (along with Deanfoot) at £600. Dying without male issue, it was inherited by his nephew Archibald, whose son Gilbert inherited it in 1683, when it is described being valued at £8 10 shillings of new extent, and included a piece of land called ‘lie Grassland’, as well as common pasture rights in Minto. Gilbert Elliott in turn sold it to Lord Tarras. To confuse matters, the lands were among those purchased in 1703 by Sir Gilbert Elliot (a different, but related Gilbert), who united them with Minto into the Barony of Minto and Craigend. This could be the ‘Craigend’ or ‘Craighed’ where the Douglasses of Cavers held 4 acres of land, as recorded in 1687 and 1698. There are 10 men listed there in the 1694 Hearth Tax records, owners of 12 hearths. In 1779 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), there are several separate pieces of land listed there as part of the Minto estate, including ‘Craigs’ (valued at £73), ‘Mill Banks’ (£91 5s), ‘Haugh be-east Spittal-road’ (£65 14s), ‘Three Parks at Craigend’ (£125 18s 7d), ‘Craigend haugh’ (£18 5s), ‘Mill haugh’ (£45 19s 10d) and ‘House and yeard’ (£1 16s 6d), all having the liferent held by Sir John Stewart of Allanbank. In 1780 the boundary of the former ‘Craigend and Minto-mill farms’ was described as being ‘Stobbedge planting dyke’, Cleuchhead farm, Lillielaw Park, the road from Minto to Jedburgh, Spittal and Barnhills (it is ‘Cragend of Mynto’ in 1502 and ‘Craigend’ in 1638; a tower on Pont’s manuscript map of the 1590s appears to be marked ‘Cragend Cast or Barnheills’, but does not appear on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Craigend Burn (krāg-end-burn) n. small tributary of the Teviot in Minto Parish, between Minto Crags and Barnhills farm. The site of the former Barnhills peel-house is probably on its banks. Although on the east side of Minto Crags, it may be that the farm of Craigend was on the west side.

Craighill (krāg-hil) n. James (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw, along with his mother Marion. in a rental roll of 1541. Their steading was valued at 12s 6d. Marion (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in 1541, along with her son James. Her name is recorded as ‘Mariote Craighill’.

Craig Hill (krāg-hil) n. hill to the east of the Rankle Burn, a mile or so north of Buccleuch, having rocky outcroppings on its western side and reaching a height of 384 m (it is marked ‘Kraig Hill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

craigie (krā-gee) n., arch. neck – ‘Ma collar lay roond ma craigie as wanrest finh as branks an brench roond a yaud’ [ECS] (diminutive of craig).

craigie (krā-gee) adj., arch. craggy, rocky – ‘...But I missed my fit in a craigie slit, And fell over the lugs wi’ a plash’ [WaD] (also written ‘craigie’).

Craigie (krā-gee) n. John of Kilgraston (d. bef.1762) son of Lawrence of Kilgraston and Anne Drummond of Megginch. He was described as Commissioner and Cashier to Buccleuch. In 1762 his widow Mrs. Alice Powell (alias Scott) received £200 sterling from the Scotts of Buccleuch as part of an agreed half-year’s rents from the Barony of Hawick and other parts of the Buccleuch estate. He may also be the John who married his cousin Anne, daughter of Lawrence Craigie. Robert Craigie, advocate, had worked for the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 1730s, and was presumably related. John of Kilgraston (18th C.) Edinburgh advocate, probably son of the earlier John of Kilgraston. He feued the lands of Howpasley and others from Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1763. He also served as Chamberlain of the Duke for Eskdale and Canonbie for at least the period 1760–66. He served as Commissioner and Cashier for the Duke of Buccleuch during the first court case for the division of the Common in 1767. His son John was Deputy Commissary General for Lower Canada. John (18th/19th C.) eldest son of John, who was Commissary-General of Lower Canada, and Susan Coffin. He was Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire 1835–61. In this capacity he was present in Hawick at the election of 1837, in which the crowd attacked several of the Tory voters. He tried to close the poll (which he really did not have the authority to do), but was pressed to reopen it; he called in the military to help keep the peace. He bought Jedbank. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Rev. Henry Hutton and assumed the additional surname ‘Moreton’. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1836.

craigit (krā-gee’, -gi’) pp., poet. necked – ‘Back cam’ the soople spugs And ate the auld breid, But puri laug-craigit hernseugh Had mair pride than greed’ [DH], ‘...O yon arra-heid o geese, Straucht-craigit and shair, I’ the reid-rosie, the caller, the clear, Sunset air!’ [DH].

Craigmorno (krāg-nōr) n. original name for the village Woodnorton in Sunnyhill.

Craigmount (krāg-mown) n. private school for girls, based at Minto House from 1952–66. The school originally leased the house, purchasing it in 1962, but went into liquidation 4 years later. The school appears to have existed elsewhere before it moved to Minto, since School Inspectors’ Reports from 1931 are in the National Archives.

Craig Pool (krāg-pool) n. pool in the River Teviot, located in a bend to the south just near Ashybank (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Craigis (krāgs) n. former name for a farm on the Minto estate. It is listed in 1779 (and later in 1811) as part of the estate of Lord Minto, valued at £73, and appears to have been associated with Craigend. It was stated that Sir John Stewart of Allanbank had held the liferent of these lands.

Craig’s (krāgz) n. chemists at 17 High Street for several decades at the end of the 19th century and beginning of the 20th, proprietor John Craig.

Craigview (krāg-view) n. large house just to the south of Denholm. It was built for the Walter Scott of Lyle & Scott, and is now called Denholm Lodge.

craik (krāk) n., arch. a rasping or croaking noise, grumbling talk – ‘A ray now on their souls had dawned, Which their keen craik silenced’ [HSR], ‘...Whusst e’en a gledge At the craik and penwhusle O yon arra-heid o geese ... ’ [DH], v. to croak – ‘Do they craik and churl and gossip, there, I’ the gethering derk ... ’ [DH], to complain, harp on about.

Craik (krāk) n. village on the Borthwick Water, about 11 miles west of Hawick, and beside Craik Forest. The site was formerly a farm, with the first known owner perhaps being Henry Turnbull ‘de Craik’, who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1431. It was owned by the Cockburns of Ormiston from at least the mid-15th century to the mid-16th century. John Morton was recorded there in 1502. In 1508/9 it was granted to John, son of John Cockburn of Ormiston, and was at that time included in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. It is recorded in the early 16th century being occupied by Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1535 the farm there, belonging to John Cockburn of Ormiston, was raided by a large group of Armstrongs and others, who stole 70 oxen, 30 cows and other goods, and took away 3 of the farm servants ‘detaining them against their will for a certain space’. In 1548/9 Walter Scott of Branxholme (and his wife Janet Beaton) had a charter of the lands of Easter Craik, which had been forfeited by John Cockburn (for treason). But in 1567 the Earl of Bothwell (then superior of the lands) granted them back to Cockburn of Ormiston, including the mill there, this being confirmed in 1573/4. It is unclear who owned Wester Craik in the 16th century. Walter Scott was tenant there in about 1610 and William Cowan in 1623. By at least 1643 it was owned by the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch. There were 12 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Adam Pott, Malie Dickson, John Hisston, John Nichol, Robert Laidlaw, Bessie Elliot, William Laidlaw, Marion Grieve, William Stoddart, Bessie Pott and Janet Laidlaw. Tax was paid on 4 hearths there in 1694. William Ogilvie was there in at least 1713–27, James Murray in 1720, George Dickson in 1720–22, Andrew Goodfellow in 1721–33, William Park in 1726 and Walter Stewart in 1733. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it was combined with the lands of ‘Winniecleuch’ (i.e. Whinney Cleuch’); at that time it covered 2620 acres and was bounded by Borthwick Water, Wolfcleuchhead, Buccleuch, Henwoodie common and Meadshaw. It was later the home of the Potts and was leased from the Buccleuch Estates by Walter Scott of Merrylaw in 1744. Robert Scott and William Rieve were there in 1742 and John Watson in 1743. There was flood damage reported in the area in 1745. John Nichol was there in at least 1762–66, Walter Currie in 1762, William Brydon in 1762–71, Robert Beattie in 1771, Andrew Chisholme in 1774 and John Anderson and Walter Currie in 1785. John Grieve inherited the farm from his uncle George Potts and his son George Grieve was farmer there in at least 1787–94. The farm was valued along with Whinneycleugh and Midshiel at about £667 in 1785 and 1802, and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. About 1819 it passed from George and Walter Grieve to their sister Jane and her husband William Moffat. Thomas Douglas and family were there in 1841. John Moffat was farmer there in the 1860s and 70s. The small cluster of houses was built up after WWII to provide accommodation for forestry workers. However, they are now mainly used as holiday homes, or by people commuting into Hawick. A Roman road leads from near here across Craik Cross Hill to a Roman fort by the White Esk River. This was part of a main east-west highway until the 19th century. A Halifax bomber crashed nearby in 1944, marked by a plaque in the car park (the origin is probably the Old Welsh ‘creic’ for ‘rock’, although the Gaelic for ‘fell’ has also been suggested; the name first definitely appears in 1508/9 and spelling variants include ‘Craick’, ‘Craike’ and ‘Creak’; it is ‘le craik’ in 1502, ‘Crayk’ in 1610, ‘Crek’ in 1713, ‘Creak’ in 1725 and 1726, ‘Craick’ in 1742, 1771 and 1785, and ‘Creak’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; it is ‘Craike’ on a 1650 parish map and ‘Craick’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Adair’s c. 1688 map).

Craik (krāk) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) listed as ‘Adam de Crake’ in an inquest of 1303/4 for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. Given that most of the other men were local, this is likely to be the Craik in the Borthwick valley. He was probably related to the slightly earlier James. David (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Dawe Craik’ in 1500 when he witnessed a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope, directed by William Douglas of Cavers. James (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘James de Craik’ of Selkirkshire when he swore fealty to Edward I of England in 1296. This could well be Craik at the head of the Borthwick valley, which at that time was probably in that county. There are also 2 other men of the same name listed, Henry (of Dumfriesshire) and John (of Edinburgh), who may have been related. Richard (14th C.) recorded in 1335/6 when he was pardoned by Edward III for crimes in Scotland, along with Eustace Lorraine and William Falsyde. His name is listed as ‘Rico de Crake’ and it is possible he was a descendant of James.

Craikburn (krāk-burn) n. former name for a cottage near Craik, perhaps on the Craikhope Burn. Francis Elliot was recorded there in 1788.

Craik Cross (krāk-kros) n. one of the highest points in Craik Forest, 1,482 ft (451 m), once used as a Roman signal station. The Roman road can easily be followed from Craik village to the summit here, sometimes being a cumbered grassy causeway and sometimes a hollow track. At the summit a roughly square mound just beyond the boundary fence marks the signal station. Forest tracks then follow the Roman road all the way to Eskdalemuir. There was presumably once a wayside cross here that gave its name to the hill, but there is no evidence of where this may have been or when it disappeared. It was a significant boundary marker in the 16th century, with reports of the English attack on upper Teviotdale in the spring of 1514 being described as being from the mouth of the Borthwick to here, and later Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being appointed Warden of the Middle Marches from here to Minto Crags – ‘Craik-cross repent, Eldon relent, And so may Ettrick head; { Let Ruberslaw to Jedburgh shaw, Sad news, that Whitslade’s dead’ [CWS]. ‘On my hills the moonbeams play From Craik-cross to Skelfhill-pen, By every rill, in every glen’ [SWS] (it is marked as ‘craicks cors’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map; it is ‘Craike-cross’ in 1514, ‘Craykcorse’ in 1540 and ‘Craykcorse’ in 1550).
Craik Faulds (krāk-fawl’dz) n. former shepherd’s cottage on Craik farm, located to the north of Craik village. The last shepherd there was Robert Byres. The house has been a ruin since at least the middle of the 20th century. A bike track now passes near there.

Craik Forest (krāk-fo-rist) n. man-made forest straddling the Scottish Borders and Dumfries & Galloway Regions, about 10 miles to the west of Hawick. It was mainly planted in the 1960s and 1970s, and many of the trees matured by the 1990s. It is managed by the Forestry Commission. The Borthwick Water and Runkle Burn both have their source there. It contains several hills, including Craik Cross Hill and Black Knowe, and a picturesque waterfall on the Wolfcleuch Burn. There are extensive woodland walks (Policy Wood, Green Ride, Aithouse Burn, Wolfcleuch Waterfall, Drove Road and Crib Law) as well as mountain bike trails (Wolfcleuch Loop and Crib Law Trail).

Craikhope (krāk-hōp) n. herd’s cottage in Craik forest, up above Howpasley, below Ladder Law. The farm was listed along with ‘Noirhop’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish; together they were estimated at ‘100 lb., vicarage 16 lb’. There were 4 ‘communicants’ listed there in 1640, namely William Little, William Little ‘Younger’, Margaret Nichol and Bessie Nichol. It formed the most distant part of Hawick Parish, until Roberton was created in 1689/90. It was listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. There is a survey in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch farms; at that time it covered 1077 acres and was bounded by Howpasley, Longshawburn, Wolfcleuchhead, ‘Mudlaw’ and the Borthwick Water. Alexander Bell was there in 1721, John Nichol in 1723, William Moffat in at least 1726–36, Thomas Park in 1728, George Anderson in 1731–36, Robert Anderson in 1736 and James Scott in 1742. The tenant there reported that floods had damaged the crops in 1745. It became a ‘led’ farm, rented along with Billhope in Eskdale, which had a larger farmhouse. James Scott was there in 1742, Robert Renwick in 1753–57, William Dickson in 1762 and William Beattie in 1763–80. John Anderson was there in 1781 and Andrew Beattie in 1794. It is probably the ‘Clarkhope’ listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with William Beattie as farmer. James Beattie was living there in 1799. In 1841 it is recorded that one resident was ‘Traveler’ Sarah Brown and her 5 children named ‘Gilles’, and Alexander Armstrong and family were also there.

The shepherd there was Andrew Glendinning in the mid-19th century and his grandson James in the late 19th and possibly early 20th centuries. The dilapidated cottage was turned into an outdoor education centre by the local Duke of Edinburgh’s Award Scheme group about 1980 (it is recorded as ‘Craich-hope’ in 1690, ‘Creakhop’ in 1723, 1726 and 1728 and ‘Craikhope’ in 1757, 1781 and 1851; it is ‘Craikhope’ on a parish map of 1650, ‘Craikhope’ on the Buccleuch survey of 1718 and is ‘Craikhope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Craikhope Burn (krāk-hōp-burn) n. stream that joins the Howpasley and Wolfcleuch Burn to form the Borthwick Water. It passes the old farmstead of Craikhope. It is fed by smaller streams, including Hazely Sike, Comb Sike, Ladder Cleuch, Garnel Sike, Gulf Sike, Shiel Cleuch and Little Shiel Cleuch. Kidd’s Scar is a cliff on the steam.

Craik Moor (krāk-moor) n. high area between Craik village and Craik Cross, with the Roman road running through it. A millstone was found by the side of Craik Cross Road there, reported in 1974. There is also a place with the same name above the Hownam Burn.

Craikshiel (krāk-shiel) n. former shepherd’s cottage in what is now Craik Forest, just to the east of Ropelawshiel. John Laidlaw was recorded there in 1712, James Murray in 1718 and Henry Mitchellhill in 1726. William Anderson and family were there at least 1841–61 (it is ‘Craikshiel’ in 1712 and ‘Creaksheils’ in 1718 and 1726).

Craik Sike (krāk-sik) n. small stream joining the north side of the Borthwick Water just to the east of Craik village.

Crailing (krā-lin) n. village a few miles east of Jedburgh, and also the name of the surrounding parish. The more recent parish contains the ancient parishes of Crailing, Nisbet and Spittal; Crailing and Nisbet were united in 1606, and there is an existing communion token labelled ‘C.N.K.’ from 1699. There were once 2 medieval hospitals here, at Crailing Spittal (near Monteviot) and at Spittal (in the extreme north). The estate of Crailing was once a seat of the Cranstouns. The Marquess of Lothian, with residence at Monteviot House, has long been the major land owner of the parish. The village has a church dating from about 1775, as well as formerly a Free Kirk and a school. The 1803 Crailing House (designed by William Elliot) also stands above the Oxnam Water there. There was formerly a toll at the village on the main Hawick to Berwick road. A bridge was built over the Oxnam...
Crailing Court

Water here in the 1830s, replacing an inconvenient old bridge and ford (the origin of the name is uncertain, perhaps meaning ‘slope by the river Crail or ‘the ridge at the corner’; it first occurs as ‘Crailingis’ in about 1147).

Crailing Court (kr̩-lin-k̩r, kr̩-lin-k̩r) n. part of Stirches, off Roxburghie Drive, built in 1976 and named after the village of Crailing.

craitur see cratur

Kenneth W. Depute Town Clerk in Hawick from 1969, having previously been senior legal assistant in Inverness. He became Director of Administrative and Legal Services and Chief Executive from 1987.

cramp (krawmp) n., arch. an iron spike – ‘…this incantation, ‘Wi’ cramps and cleeks may he be pest, An’ o’ diseases be a nest’” [EM1820].

Cramptlands Croft (krampt-lindz-kroft) n. former name for lands that were part of East Mains, hence perhaps somewhere near Crumhaugh Hill. They were sold in 1684 by Patrick Cunningham to Alexander Hislop, who dispossed them to his wife Bessie Ruecastle in 1688. The lands were bounded by ‘the King’s hie streat’ on the east, ‘the Burn called the ever Burn’ on the south and ‘the arable lands’ of the Duke of Buccleuch on the west and north.

crane (kr̩n) n. a crayon.

crane (kr̩n) n., arch. the cranberry, Oxycoccus palustris – ‘Ye broomie howes and crane-red fens, The rural cot, and lofty ha’’ [JoHa].

Cranksteale (krawngk-steel) n. possible name for a piece of land in the Barony of Cavers. This is the way the name is transcribed when Cavers was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and it is ‘Crankswell’ when Archibald Douglas succeeded to the Barony of Cavers in 1698. However, it may be a transcription error for another place.

cranreuch (krawn-rooch) n., poet. hoar frost – ‘When munelicht glintin on the beads o’ cranreuch . . . ’ [WL], ‘There wasna snaw on the braes then, But the cranreuch glistened white . . . ’ [WL].

Cransfield Drive (krawms-feeld-driv) n. short street in Ashkirk.

Cranston (kraw-stin) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as resident of Oakwood in 1494/5 when he had remission for several crimes. This included stealing sheep from Harthern and from Yair, stealing goats from Glensax, resetting George Henrison and plundering Fastheugh. The Junior Laird of Cranston (possibly William) served as his surety. He may be the Adam ‘in elinburn’ who served as surety for David Lauder at the Justitie- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. Alastair Gerald (1949–) born in Hawick, he has lived most of his life near Lilliesleaf. He played centre for Hawick R.F.C. and also served as Captain. He was capped 11 times for Scotland in the period 1976–81. He was associated with the Borders rugby team. He was elected Councillor for Hawick and Denholm in 2012. Alexander of Mordiston (16th/17th C.) received lands of Midshiels, Appletreehall, ‘Coitlaw’ (‘Courtill’ perhaps) and ‘Cranlaw’ (‘Clarilaw’ perhaps) in the Barony of Hassendean from Philip Scott of Dryhope in 1611 (through a ‘letter of revision’, suggesting he had previously owned the lands and they were being held ‘in wadset’). There is a confirming charter from him to Scott of Dryhope in 1617. It is unclear how long he was superior. His great-great grandson James, Lord Cranston, was served as his heir in 1681. Andrew (15th/16th C.) one of the Bailies appointed by Sir James Douglas of Cavers in 1512 to give sasine of the lands of Denholm to William Cranston of that Ilk. He was also witness to the 2 related charters. It is unclear how he was related to other Cranstons. Andrew (1695–) born in Hawick, he attended Drumlanrig and the High School. He then studied art at Manchester Polytechnic and Grays School of Art in Aberdeen and graduated with an M.A. in painting from the Royal College of Art in 1996. He has had several solo exhibitions, including one in 2013 inspired by his grandfather’s memories of living at the Wilton Lodge Stables, and the painting of it made by his uncle Walter. Charles (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1512 as ‘Karolo Cranstone’ when he was witness to the charter of Denholm given to William of that Ilk. He was probably related to the other Cranston witnesses, Andrew and Patrick. George (17th/18th C.) contributed £100 to the Darien Company in 1695. He is listed being ‘in Baxtounleyes’, which could be the farm near the edge of Liddesdale later known as Peel. George of Longnewton (18th C.) listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was recorded in 1788 as liferenter of part of the Ancrum Parish lands of Sir George Douglas. He was probably one of the men added to the voters’ roll for purely political reasons. Henry (17th C.) probably a younger son of Sir William (although he may be the next generation), and brother of Lord John. In 1627 (referred to as ‘Harry’) he was part of the marriage contract between William, son of Simon Elliot of the Binks and Christian Grahamswal, whose own father had died. He himself married Margaret Wauchope about 1653. In 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He is probably the ‘Hendrie Cranston, uncle to the Lord Cranston’ who named on the Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border in 1648. He may have been partly the inspiration for ‘Henry of Cranston’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’. Isobel (17th C.) inn-keeper in Ashkirk. In 1642 she was accused by the kirk Session of selling ale after sunset, but denied this. James of that Ilk (d.c.1494) son of Sir Thomas, succeeding after his older son William died. He may be the Laird of Cranston who was assigned the 3 steadings of Redford in 1480 for 11 years. He was probably succeeded by his cousin John. James Master of Cranston (d.1633), 2nd son of Sir William, the 1st Lord. He assisted his father (and brother Sir John) on the commission to keep peace on the Border in the 1610s. He married Elizabeth Makgill of Cranston Riddell, and secondly Elizabeth Stewart, daughter of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. His son William became 3rd Lord Cranston, while his daughter Isobel married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and Margaret married a Cockburn of Clerkington. James (d.bef. 1688) 4th Lord Cranston, son of William. In 1642 he was probably the James, Master of Cranston, who was named to a commission to try a large number of Borders fugitives. He paid the land tax in Crailing, Hobkirk, Jedburgh and Smailholm Parishes in 1678. By this time the family’s lands in Cavers Parish were in the hands of the Douglasses of Cavers. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire charged with raising money for the King, and again in 1685. In 1679 he was served heir to John, Lord Cranston, who was his grandfather’s brother and in 1681 he was served heir to his great-great grandfather Alexander of Mordiston. Like generations before him, he still owned land locally. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Alexander Don of Newton. Their oldest son William became 5th Lord and married Jean Kerr, eldest daughter of the Marquess of Lothian. Another son Alexander died without issue. James of Crailing (d.1773) 6th Lord Cranston, son of William and Jean Ker, daughter of the 2nd Marquess of Lothian. He retained superiority over lands in Rule Water, e.g. granting a disposition for Wolfelee in 1740. In 1767 he sold off his last local estate, Wauchope, to Walter Scott of Howcleuch, in order to pay off debts. The family had held Wauchope for more than 150 years. He married Sophia, daughter of Jeremiah Brown of Abscourt, Surrey. His sons William and James in turn succeeded, and since neither of them produced an heir, succession then went to his younger son Charles’ son James. The family soon also sold off Crailing, and so held no land in Roxburghshire. James (1800/1–74) son of mason Thomas and Agnes Small. He was a mason and farmer at East Lees in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41, when he was at Lees. In 1851 he was farmer of 16 acres at East Lees, as well as mason. In 1827 he married Susan Scott, who was probably a daughter of millwright Gideon Scott. Their children included Thomas, Gideon, Mary (who married blacksmith William Pow), Agnes, William, James, Margaret, Helen, John and Jane. He died at Blacklee in Hobkirk Parish. John (14th/15th C.) squire of the Earl of Douglas. In 1403, after his father’s death, he was granted the town and lands of Sprouston by Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. His father is stated to have been Sir William, but this may be an error for Thomas. John of that Ilk (d.aft. 1494) son of William, and probably nephew of Sir Thomas, succeeding from his cousin James. He held lands in and around Denholm. He leased the Weststead of Gildhouse in 1479. In 1483 William Douglas of Cavers gave him the lands of ‘Fowlerislandis’ and half of Denholm Mains. He was Bailie of Ettrick Forest, and for his fee had the rental of the farm of Kirkhope in the period 1473–90. He also leased Redford, Mount Common and Langhope in the 1480s, was responsible for the ‘grassums’ of ‘Weststeid of Langhop’ and was involved with the customs from Selkirk and Jedburgh. In 1492 the lands of ‘Gildhouse’ and Middlestead were assigned to him. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. He was succeeded by his son Sir William. Another son John married Agnes Whittal (and may be the John who witnessed the sasine for Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell in 1508). Thomas, recorded in 1494/5 as brother of Lord Cranston, may also have been his son. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when the Olivers in Strange were allowed to compone for stealing a horse from him from Crailing. It is unclear how he was related to other Cranstons. John of that Ilk (d.1552) son of Sir William. He held lands at Denholm. In 1521 he had a ‘precept of clare constat’ of the lands of Denholm, ‘Fowlersland’, Little Rulewood and others from Douglas of Cavers. In 1525 he was on the panel for the succession of the Gordons of Stichill. In 1526 he had a charter of the lands of Smailholm and Sprouston. Also in 1526 he was part of the remission for a large number of Borderers (led by Walter Scott of Branxholme) for fighting against the Earl of Arran. Additionally he was named in the letter of treason, nominally written by King James V, for his role in the Skirmish at Melrose, led by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. However, in 1527 he was among the Lord lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. Also in 1527 he was witness to a bond of friendship between William, Lord Borthwick and Walter Scott of Branxholme.

In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to the King to keep better order. Also in 1530 he was recorded as a witness in Selkirk to proceedings taken against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk. In 1541 he is probably the Laird of Cranston recorded in 1541 as tenant of Shaws, ‘Elineburne’, Kirkhope, ‘Fawdschele’ and ‘Fawdgrans’ in Ettrick. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He could be the John who witnessed a lease at Branxholme in 1550 and the John mentioned in the inventory of goods after the death of William Scott of Kirkurd in 1552. He married Jean (or Janet), daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch and was succeeded by his son Sir William. Robert, brother of Sir William, is recorded in 1560, and hence presumably was another son of his. He also had an illegitimate son, Capt. John. Sir John of that Ilk (16th C.) son of Sir William. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1574 he had a discharge with William Douglas of Cavers for rentals on his lands of Denholm Mains, Little Rulewood and Fowlerlands, and for non-entries of lands in the Lordship of Denholm, including Denholm Dean, ‘Balze Hag’ and Stobs. Also in 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott; he also served as an executor for the will of Sir Walter Scott in 1574. In 1581 he was among the lairds at Melrose, led by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, but died without an heir. Having no children, he was succeeded by his brother James’ son William. John (b.c.1685) recorded in Saughtree in 1683 when his will is listed in the Peebles Commissariat.

Cranston

of Ferniehirst. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret Ker and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He gained lands at Kirkhope in 1592. He married Margaret Ramsay of Dalhousie and had 6 children. His son John died without issue and the family lost their lands at Denholm. His daughter Sarah married Sir William the 1st Lord Cranston, while Margaret married Sir James Douglas of Cavers, Elizabeth married William Douglas and Jean married Thomas of Huntingdon. John (d.bef. 1648) 2nd Lord Cranston, son of Sir William. He assisted his father on the commission to keep peace on the Border in the 1610s. He was served heir to his father in 1627, this including the Regality of Sprouston, as well as lands in Smailholm, Nether Crailing, Langton and ‘Fawdscheil’. He also became Laird of ‘Woollee’ (i.e. Wolfee), which included ‘Over Wolley’, ‘Natherwolley’ and ‘Wolfhipley’, and held other local lands (or the superiority of these lands in some cases), including Wauchope, Langhaugh, Denholm, Denholm Mains, Rulewood, ‘the foulleris lands’ and Stobs. He resigned these lands in 1636 in order to pass them to his nephew William. In 1643 he was one of the men appointed Colonel of Foot for Roxburgh and Selkirk. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued in 1643 at £1850, in Hobkirke (consisting of Wauchope and Catlee) at about £1670 and in Southdean at £1000; he also held lands in Crailing and Smailholm Parishes. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Walter Scott, ‘the Bold Buccleuch’, and later Helen Lindsay of the Byres, but died without an heir. Having no children, he was succeeded by his brother James’ son William. Patrick (15th/16th C.) witness in 1512 to the charter to William Cranston of that Ilk for the lands of Denum. He was probably related to the other Cranstons who were witnesses, i.e. Andrew and Charles. He was also one of the Bailies appointed by James Douglas of Cavers to give sasine to William Cranston. Sir Peter (16th C.) Chaplain and factor of the Church of St. Mary of the Forest. He was probably ‘Sir’ (or ‘domino’) because of his status as a priest who lacked a masters degree. In the 1540 Exchequer Rolls it is recorded that he was paid for the teind lambs and teind wool bought for the King. He was said to be an enemy of the Scotts, perhaps being suspected of involvement in the 1552 murder of Sir Walter Scott. In 1557 a band of about 200 Scotts and others broke open the doors of the Cranston

Kirk of the Lowes at St. Mary’s Loch looking for him. Later many of the Scots paid fines for this crime, including Scots from Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Haining, Harden, Howpasley, Synton and Thirlestane; the attempt to kill him was unsuccessful and the Scots had to promise not to harm him or his servants in future. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1730. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Bellendean in 1781. He married Ann Lees in 1780, the wedding being recorded in both Roberton and Selkirk Parishes. His children included Margaret (b.1781). Thomas (d.bef. 1409) son of John, and great-grandson of the first known Cranston. He may have been the first of the family to have local lands. He was granted the lands of Little-Rulwood near Denum by William, Earl of Douglas during the reign of David II; these may have been lands once owned by the family of Rule. In 1368 he witnessed a resignation of lands in the Barony of Cavers by Thomas Baliol to his superior, William, Earl of Douglas. Sometime before 1375 (perhaps 1368) he was granted the lands of Denholm, Denholm Dean and ‘Balleolhage’ by Thomas, Earl of Mar and Lord of Cavers; this excluded the domain lands of Cavers and the lands of Stobs. There was a confirming charter for ‘Foullerysland in Denum, and Little Rulwod near Denum’ in the 10th year of the reign of Robert II (i.e. c.1380). And sometime in the period 1384–97 he was granted the lands of Fahnash in Roxburghshire and others in Tranent by James Sandiland, Lord of Calder and John, Lord Haliburton. His wife’s name was Marion and their sons were William (who succeeded) and John. If the sasine for John was dated 1403 (and not 1413 as stated by the ‘Scots peerage’) and this John was really his son (and not the son of Sir William as stated), then he was dead by 1403.

Sir Thomas of that Ilk (d.c.1473) son of William. He was Receiver-General of the King for the area south of the Forth from about 1426. He served as a Scottish ambassador to the Court of Eric, King of Denmark, Norway and Sweden in 1426 and helped negotiate with the English. He was the first to be called ‘of that Ilk’. He may be the Thomas who was on a ‘retour of inquest’ in 1424 in Hawick for lands of Hownam. And in 1427 he was on another panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. He had a charter of the lands of Denholm in 1428. In 1429/30 he was on the ‘retour’ for the lands of Caverton. In 1430 he witnessed a contract between Andrew Rule of Primside and Andrew Ker of Altonburn. In 1432 he was specially deputed by the King as Bailie of Cavers to assign sasine of the Barony to William Douglas. Also in 1432 he had a charter for lands in Sprouston, from Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He was witness to a charter involving the Inglis family in lands at Branxholme etc. in the Barony of Hawick in 1435, a sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee for the Homes of Wedderburn in 1436 and a sasine for the lands of Graumslaw in 1436/7. In the 1436 sasine he is ‘of Denum’ and it was also witnessed by George and James, who were probably related. He was granted the lands of Denholm by Thomas, Earl of Mar, for faithful service, having to pay a yearly amount of one penny of silver. This was confirmed in a charter of 1441. He witnessed a charter for lands in Primside for the Kers of Altonburn in 1439. He had a further charter for lands in Sprouston in 1446, for his services to William, Earl of Douglas. In 1446/7 he witnessed a document for Oswald Abernethy, regarding the lands of Teindside and Harwood. He was witness to a feu charter of 1447, for the lands of Birkwood (possibly the present day Duke’s Wood) between Simon of Routledge and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was recorded as Constable of Edinburgh Castle and customs officer for the King in the 1440s and 50s, being receiver of rents on Crown lands south of the Forth. He was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. In 1450 he witnessed a charter for Douglas of Cavers, for the lands of Blackpool. In 1451/2 he had a charter for the Barony of Greenlaw in Berwickshire. He was probably the Laird of Cranston who was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh in 1456. He was appointed Bailie of Ettrick Forest from 1456, for which he had the rent of Kirkhope for his fee. In 1458/9 he had a discharge with Archibald Douglas of Cavers over his lands of Denholm Mains, Little Rulewood, Stobs, Denholm and Fowlerslands. He was appointed Warden of the Marches in 1459. He also rendered the accounts of the Bailies of Jedburgh and Selkirk in the 1460s. In 1463/4 he witnessed the document rewarding a number of local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. In 1464/5 he was on the inquest for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. Also in 1464/5 he was involved in the court case between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains over the lands of Flex; he acted as ‘forespekare’ for Gledstains at the justice aire. He transferred Cranston Cranston

Denholm Mains to his son William in 1465/6, and made a deal with Archibald Douglas for half of it shortly afterwards; the family held lands at Denholm for over 200 years. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1468. Also in 1468 he was on Parliamentary inquest for Roxburghshire ‘gif he be hale’ (suggesting he was already elderly and failing). He was still listed as Bailie for Ettrick Forest in 1471, for his fee having the lease of Kirkhope. His eldest son William pre-deceased him, so he was succeeded by his younger son James. Mary, who was probably his daughter, married Sir Richard Maitland, while another daughter married Patrick Ruthven of that Ilk. A ‘natural’ son, also William, is mentioned in a 1461 document. Another son, George, is mentioned in 1469 in relation to a fine remitted to him in Ettrick Forest. The widow of the late Thomas is mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of that Ilk (c.1478–1515) son of John.

In 1499 he was witness to the resignation of the Bishopric of Glasgow. Although he continued as minister at Ashkirk for a while, he was translated back to Liberton again some time between 1582 and 1585. He married Janet Liddell, Lady Makerstoun and later Janet Mowbray. His son Michael became minister of Selkirk in 1580 and then moved to Liberton like his father. Another son, Andrew, became schoolmaster at Peebles, and there was also a daughter, Isobel. He may have held some of the benefice of Ashkirk until his death. He may be the ‘Maister Thomas Cranstoun’ who in 1541 claimed to hold in feu the lands of ‘Elineburne’ in Ettrick (also claimed by John, Lord Cranston). Thomas (17th/18th C.) notary public in Roxburghshire. In 1696 he was involved with the legal proceedings to divde Bedrule Common. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Coldhouse (Wilton Parish), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the son, married to Agnes Smale, whose son James (d.1874) was also a mason and farmer; he married Agnes Smale in 1796 and their children included Nelly (b.1795), William (b.1796), Janet (b.c.1801, who married William Pringle(e), Walter (b.c.1804) and Thomas (b.c.1811). Thomas (b.c.1811) son of Thomas. He was listed at Newton among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1840 he was listed at Pityhouses and in 1841 at Parkhouses. In the 1841 and 1851 censuses he was a journeyman mason, living at Parkhouses in Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Ormiston and their children included Elizabeth, Agnes, Helen, Margaret and Isabella. Walter (b.c.1803/4) mason at Appletreehall, probably son of Thomas and Agnes Smale. He was listed at Appletreehall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He married Mary Glendinning and their children included Thomas (also a mason), Janet, John, Agnes, Helen (b.1837/8, who married John Tait), Margaret, Christian, Isabella, William and Mary. William (d.bef. 1428) son of Thomas, he must have also held lands near Denholm. A sasine apparently dated 1403 for John ‘son of the late Sir William’ is confusing, but may be understood if this John was his brother, son of Thomas. He witnessed a charter for Haliburton of Dirleton in 1409. He was ‘Lord of Denum’ in 1417 when he witnessed a charter for the Earl of Douglas. Another William, possibly a relative, was recorded as a notary for an instrument in the presence of the Regent Albany in 1410. He was father of Sir Thomas, who succeeded. William of Crairling (d.c.1466) eldest son of Sir Thomas. He had a charter for Nether Crairling in 1443. He was witness to a Linlithgow sasine for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1451/2. In 1464/5 he was ‘William of Cranstoun of Crayling’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. His father transferred the lands of Denholm Mains to him in 1465/6, but he died soon afterwards, and the estates were later inherited by his brother James. William (d.bef. 1483) father of John of that Ilk, as recorded in a document of 1483 relating to Denholm Mains. He was probably another son of Sir Thomas of that Ilk. Sir William of that Ilk (c.1478–1515) son of John. In 1499 he was witness to the resignation of the lands of Feu-Rule by Sir William Colville into the hands of their superior, Sir William Douglas of Cavers. In 1500 he was ‘Wilzem of Crenston’ when among the men chosen to value the lands of Whithope. In the years 1498–1501 he gave the accounts for Selkirk, Jedburgh and parts of the related counties, according to the Exchequer Rolls. He served as Coroner for Roxburghshire and had sasines for Sprouston, Smallholm and Nether Craeling. He was also assigned the ‘West-stede’ of Langhope in 1499 and 1501. In 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, failing to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Smallholm. In 1502 he also served as surety for James Davidson in Sprouston and was recorded as ‘coronator principalis de Jedworth’ when he was fined several times for failing to arrest James Mofat, John Rutherford, Edward Oliver and David Turnbull of Wauchope. He received further payments for Crown lands in 1504. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh and in 1508 was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was fined in 1510 along with 35 others for ‘destroying the Woods of Ettrick-forest’. He feued the lands of Kirkhope and Howford in 1510, and acted as pledge for Patrick and Thomas (probably his sons). In 1512 he had charters from James Douglas of Cavers, for the lands of Denholm, Fowlerslands and Little Rulewood. He married Margaret Hume and was succeeded by his son John. Sir William of that Ilk (d. bef. 1569) son of John and Janet Scott, who was daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1553/4 he was ‘William Cranston of Smalem Knycart’ listed along with several Scots and others in a pledge made by the Kers not to harm them. He was also listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers. He appeared, along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, as cautioners for his brother Thomas, who was to remain in ward in Edinburgh as their pledge. Alexander Hoppringle of Newhall was charged with killing cattle on his lands in 1556. In 1560 he was stated to have been present when Rutherfords killed Andrew Ker of Corbethouse, and as part of the agreement for ending the family feud his brother Robert was to ask forgiveness of James Ker of Corbethouse. Also in 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; additionally Sir Andrew Ker of Littldean agreed to ask forgiveness from him and his brother Robert for being present at the slaying of their uncle, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563 he and his brother James and ‘George Wodderat, in Lawder’ were charged with attacking lands of Alexander Hoppringle of Craigleith, trying to kill him. In 1563/4 he served as cautioner for John Gledstains of Cocklaw. He is probably the ‘Lard of Cranstoun’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he was listed among the supporters of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in a contact with the Kerrs (and there is referred to as brother of the deceased Laird of Chisholme). He may also have been a half-brother of Walter of Elphinston. He had 8 children, including Sir John (who succeeded), Marion (who married Robert Scott of Aikwood) and Margaret (who married Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane). He is probably the William of that Ilk, whose grand-daughter Margaret Cranston married Sir James Douglas of Cavers in 1580, and whose great-grandson Sir William Douglas of Cavers was served as his heir to some lands in 1629. William (d.1567/8) held the benefice of Kirkton Parish until his death, when it was presented to George Douglas. He was presented to the Parish in 1550, following the resignation of Archibald Heriot. He may only have held the ‘living’ rather than the ministerial duties. It is also possible that this is the same as Sir William of that Ilk. He is said to have died in 1563, although was not replaced until about 4 years later.

Sir William (c.1560–1627) son of John of Morriestoun, he became 1st Lord Cranstoun. He may be the ‘f iar of that Ilk’ who had a dispute with Arthur Scott in 1593, and besieged the house at Thirlestane, where a messenger had taken refuge. In 1596/7 he was ‘The Laird of Cranston’ when he brought charges to the English Warden against Lionel Heron, presumably for raiding his lands. In 1600 he sold ‘Eliburn, Scarowis alias Middelsteid of Gield in Ettrick forest’ to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1601 he complained about several Englishmen stealing his livestock. In 1605 he purchased the superiority of lands in Rulewater (including Stonedge) from the Earl of Angus. Also in 1605 he purchased Over and Nether ‘Woollee’ (i.e. Wolfelee) from Sir George Home, and a few years later he also bought Wauchope. He was appointed chief of a new police force of 25 horsemen by an English/Scottish commission set up in March 1605. His men spread terror, scouring the Borders for criminals, who were tried at special ‘courts’ in Hawick, Jedburgh, Peebles and Dumfries. 32 men were hanged in the first year alone. His tactics also included the first forced emigration (to Ireland) of Border families. Local men who were hanged during his period of control include Thomas Turnbull of Harwoodtown and Archibald Crozier of Brighouse of Cleuchhead. For his 'good deeds' he was created the 1st Lord Cranston in 1609. He was later part of the local Commissioners' Court, where more reasoned justice was meted out. He sometimes met with resistance, however, for example reprimanding the Bailies of Jedburgh for not imprisoning his captives. Correspondence shows that he was living in Denholm during some of that period. In 1608 he sat in Parliament as a minor baron for Roxburghshire. In 1612 it was described that those assisting him in his Border commission included 2 of his sons (Sir John and James), one of his brothers (John), 2 other Cranstons, an Elliot and an Armstrong. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to try 2 murderers in Jedburgh. In 1623 he was a Commissioner on the Justice Court. He married Sarah Cranston, daughter and heiress of Sir John and was succeeded by his son John, who married Elizabeth Scott of Buccleuch. Another son was Harry, and one of his granddaughters married Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs.

William (17th C.) 3rd Lord, son of James, he succeeded his uncle John. In 1649 he was served heir to some of his grandfather William's lands. He was last of the family to own the 'Woollee' (i.e. Wolfelee) estate. He also held the superiority of lands in Rulewater. He accompanied Charles II south in 1651, was captured and imprisoned in the Tower of London. Before leaving he made a private arrangement with Gilbert Elliot, younger of Stobs (and including his father William) to sell his lands of Woollee and Stonedene, confirmed by his Commissioners in 1659 (when Sir Gilbert also receive Over and Nether Wells and Macksideshaw). He may have sold the lands of Denholm and Spittal to Sir Archibald Douglas in 1658, after his family had held them in feu for generations. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers, Crailing, Hobkirk, Jedburgh and Southdean Parishes in 1663 (e.g. £1000 in Southdean). He married Mary Leslie, daughter of 1st Earl of Leven. His children included James (the 4th Lord). His estates were seized, but his wife and children were given an allowance by Cromwell.

William (d.1726/7) son of James, he became 5th Lord Cranston. He was probably the Lord Cranston whose name heads the list of those on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. He married Jean, eldest daughter of William Kerr, 2nd Marquess of Lothian. They had 5 daughters and 7 sons, including James of Crailing, who became 6th Lord Cranston, and William Henry, who achieved some notoriety. William Henry (1714–52) 5th son of William, 5th Lord Cranston, and brother of James, the 6th Lord. He was thus ancestor of the family that had been important in Cavers and Rulewater. He was said to be unattractive in appearance, short in stature and scarred by smallpox. While he was in the army he secretly married Anne Murray from Leith, who was a Catholic, but disowned her a year later after she gave birth to a daughter. His wife brought a court action against him, which she won. While this was ongoing, still married, he formed an attachment with Mary Blandy, a promising heiress from Henly-on-Thames. Their relationship forbidden by her family, Mary poisoned her father, perhaps with the help of William Henry, for which she was hanged in 1752. He fled to France and Belgium, where he died in miserable circumstances, perhaps through taking poison himself (also spelled 'Cranston', 'Cranistone', 'Cranstone', 'Cranstoun', 'Cranstoun', 'Cranystoun', 'Crenstone' and 'Crenstoun').

the Cranstons (\textit{thu-kran-stinz}) \textit{n.} family that takes its name from Cranston in Midlothian (although Lanton was also formerly known as 'Cranston'). Elfric de Cranston is the first on record about 1170. The family owned land around Edinburgh and also in Roxburghshire. In particular, Sir Thomas received lands around Denholm in the early 15th century, and the family held them until purchased by the Douglases in the mid-17th century. The family failed in the direct male line and the heiress, Sarah, married Sir William, from another branch of the family, who became first Lord Cranston. It was he who was in charge of the force that ruthlessly hanged rievers in the early 17th century. After that the family had little local involvement, and the Lordship ended with the death of the 11th in 1813. There is a family tomb at Melrose Abbey. The family motto is 'thou shalt want before I want' – 'Then Tiviotdale came to wi speed, The sheriff brought the Douglas down, With Cranstane, Gledstane, gude at need, Baith Rule-water and Hawick town' [CPM], 'Johnstone and Maxwell also cam Their wooing skill to prove, And young Cranston, of Crailing, too, But he never told his love' [JTe] (spelled 'Cranston' in earlier documents).

Cranswat (\textit{kranz-waw'}) \textit{n.} former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

crap (crap) n., poet. crop – ‘Says the auld laird ‘We’ll hae nae crap This drookit year’’ [WL], ‘For an that I’ve sawn I’ve a guid crap gathered, The herest has aye come roun’’ [WL].

crappin (kra-pin) n., arch. a person’s stomach – ‘Twill warm your crappin’’ [HSR], ‘I’ve gi’en ye meat wi’ sugar sweet, Your little crapin’s ach { `Twill warm your crappin’ ’ [HSR], `I’ve gi’en ye meat wi’ sugar sweet, Your little crapin’s ach { `Twill warm your crappin’ ’ [HSR].

cratur (krā’-ur) n., arch. creature – ‘…As flower, an’ herb, an’ leevin’ cr’ature (Wi’ doughty care), That crawl in earth, or soon in water, Or wing the air’ [JoHa], ‘Fleis an midges an bunnies …kittle craturers (mae ways as yin) …’ [ECS], ‘He owned a bit land near the side o’ the waiter, No worth tippence a year to ony puir cratur’ [JCG], ‘A wiry wee cratur and yauld. Wi’ his bundle an’ shears At the guidwife he speirs Gin we’re aa keepin’ clear o’ the cauld’ [WL] (there are various spellings, including ‘craitur’, ‘craiter’, etc.).

crave (krāv) v., arch. to beg, ask for, request by a court – ‘Seeing the said James, her husband, was of late craved and required to pay the bygone rents …’ [PR1721].

craw (kraw) n. a crow or rook – ‘There fairer seems the tunefu’ race, Mair fair the very craw …’ [DA], ‘Threi craws sut upon a waa …’ [T], ‘…And Back-Brae craws on the riggin’’ [DH], ‘The craw coored ower the dry stane dyke …’ [WFC], ‘O’ Juden Murray, ye craw and threep Like a struttin’ cock on the midden heap’ [WL], v. to crow, caw, croak, boast, brag – ‘…because mine enimie desna crouie craw over me’ [HSR], ‘…she’s been croose enuch tae craw’ [JEDM], ‘We rise today, to-morrow fa’, O’er those that’s doon we need not craw’ [TCh], ‘He crawled and flappit ower the dyke, An’ roosed the craw’ [JEDM], ‘We rise today, to-morrow fa’, O’er those that’s doon we need not craw’ [TCh], ‘He crawled and flappit ower the dyke, An’ roosed the craw’ [JEDM].

Craw (kraw) n. (Crow) A.H. (19th C.) printer with the Hawick Express, eventually becoming a partner with James Dalgleish. He was secretary of the Golf Club for many years in the latter part of the 19th century, and also served as Club Captain. He was additionally a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert’s. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Allan, and their children included: John (b.1640); Janet (b.1643), perhaps the husband of John Roger whose son John was born in 1674; and Robert (b.1644). George (18th C.) weaver who was living at Weensmoor in 1776. He married Mary Scott in 1774, the marriage being recorded in both Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes. His children included: James (b.1775); Archibald (b.1776); and George (b.1777). Helen ‘Nellie’ (18th/19th C.) member of the family from the Bramsholme area. She told some of her family stories to James Grieve of Bramsholme Park, including the connections with the ‘Bonnie Lass o Bramsholme’. Grieve wrote in 1821 that ‘during her lucid intervals [she] was very intelligent’. She may have been the Helen (b.1763), daughter of James, or perhaps an earlier generation. James (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably the tenant farmer at Hawick Shiel mentioned in evidence given in 1767 about the former state of the Common; he apparently complained to Auld Falnash about their flocks being disturbed by the Hawick Town Herd when they encroached upon the Common. James (b.1656) son of William and Margaret Murray. He is recorded in the period 1690–93 as tenant of one fifth of the farm of Bramsholme Town, and 2½ in 1694–97. He is probably the James listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was later a tenant at Bramsholme Town along with his brother Walter. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for a Grieve in 1698 and for James Storie (undermiller at Newmill) in 1700. In 1707 it is recorded that he was provided with the timber that he needed (presumably for building purposes). In 1707 he witnessed a baptism for Walter in Bramsholme Town (probably his brother). In 1710 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, carrier in Bramsholme Town. In 1712 they were both summoned to appear before the Hawick Session for breaking the Sabbath, his specific crime being that he gutted herring on Sunday evening ‘thinking they would spile if lying ungutted until ye Monday’. His ‘servant’ John Riddell was also implicated, as well as William Wilson, servant to Alexander Thomson, Whitchesters. This being their first offence, they were let off with a mere rebuke. He is probably the James who was in arrears for rental of Braxholme Town in the period 1713–18. He was still renting in 1725. In 1715–24 he was witness to several baptisms for the Scoon family, also tenants at Braxholme Town. He was probably also the James in Braxholme Town who witnessed the baptism of John Wilson’s son William in 1705 (suggesting that Wilson’s wife Margaret Craw was his sister or other close relative). In 1723 he appealed to the Hawick Session to provide support for Archibald Riddell, who had moved to Roberton, but had no income. In 1728 the rental arrears he was owed was lessened, but in 1729 he was made to pay his neighbours for encroaching on their lands. He married Marion Scott and their children included: Bessie (b.1702); and Marion (b.1704), who married Adam Hogg in 1725. His wife Marion is recorded on a gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery, stating that she died in 1707, aged 42. He secondly married Janet Turnbull and their children included: Mary (b.1710); William (b.1711); Bessie (b.1713); Janet (b.1717); Francis (b.1721); and Robert (b.1723). The witnesses in 1711 were Robert Scoon and John, also tenant in Braxholme Town (perhaps his brother) and in 1713 were Elders James Gray and Andrew Riddell. Other children that were probably his (with no mother’s name given) are James (b.1715) and John (b.1719). He may be the James who was recorded leasing half of Braxholme Town farm in 1735; it seems probable that he was son of a previous tenant in Braxholme Town. Probably the same James was also in arrears for rent on Braxholme Town in 1742. James (18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. He was also recorded in Whithope in 1764. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included Janet (b.1761), Helen (b.1763), Bessie (b.1764), and James (b.1766). James (18th/19th C.) mason in Robertson Parish. He was living at Harden in 1798 and 1800. His wife was Helen Scott. Their children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Mary (b.1796); John (b.1798); Scott (b.1800); Walter (b.1803); Elizabeth (b.1806); James (b.1809); and Thomas (b.1811). John (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Braxholmetown. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for James, who was also tenant at Braxholme Town (and probably his brother or other close relative). In 1712 he was ‘fowler in Braxholm toun’ when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, younger in Weens. In 1724 he married Joan (or Jean) Shiel in an ‘irregular marriage’ at Carham, and afterwards refused to give anything to the poor box as a fine. It was suggested that Joan was from Kelso, but alternatively it is possible this was the same as Jean, daughter of Thomas Shiel, tenant in Todshawhill, related by marriage to the ‘Bonnie Lass o Braxholme’. He was surely related to James and Walter, who were also in Braxholmtown at about the same time; in 1725 they both witnessed the baptism of his son William, who may have been ‘Blind Willie’. He replaced Walter as tenant at Braxholme Town in 1726. He could be the John whose widow was recorded in rental arrears for Braxholme Town in 1740–42. John (18th C.) married Bessie Little in Roberton in 1758. He was living at Chapelhill in 1761 and Whitecleughside in 1763. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: James (b.1759); Walter (b.1761); and Mary (b.1763). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant at Braxholme Town, who is also described as a ‘servant’ there. He was recorded as tenant ‘in Braxonhontoun’ in a baptismal record of 1708. According to the Buccleuch records he was renting part of Braxholme Town in 1708 and was in arrears in the period 1712–17. At that time he was renting 1/5 the farm with John Wilson. Also in 1712, along with his brother James, he was summoned to appear before the session for breaking the Sabbath; the offence involved transporting a load of herring along with William Wilson (servant at Whitchesters), arriving at Hawick on the Sunday morning. He was still renting part of Braxholme Town in 1725, but was replaced by John Craw in 1726. He is probably the Walter in Braxholme Town whose daughter ‘Margrie’ (i.e. Marjory or Margaret) was baptised in Roberton in 1717. He is probably the Walter recorded in 1746 still being in arrears for rent from Braxholme Town from 1726. He married Janet Hastie in 1706 and had children William (b.1707), James (b.1708), William (again, b.1710), Francis (b.1717), Mary (b.1720) and Martha (b.1724). Other children baptised in Hawick to Walter were John (b.1713) and Margaret (b.1715). ‘Margrie’ (b.1717), baptised in Robertson Parish, may also have been is child. The witnesses in 1708 were Robert Graham and James in Braxholme Town (who was surely related to him). Walter (18th C.) shepherd at Fulton. An old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard recorded the deaths of his young daughter Isobel and young sons Thomas and Hector in the early 1780s. William (1618/9–71) buried in Borthwick Waas Cemetery, where he had one of the earliest readable gravestones, with his name spelled ‘Crou’. He is described as a ‘guner’, with the back of the stone depicting a gun, a dog and 2 birds (although none of this now legible); this presumably meant that he was a gamekeeper, perhaps on the Bransholme estate. He was surely related to the later John, who was recorded as a ‘fowler’ in 1712. His wife Margaret Murray died in 1707, aged 77. He is said to have been a gamekeeper for Buccleuch; a story is told of his struggle to get his cottage repaired, so he dragged a fallen tree in front of the Duke’s carriage and when accosted said ‘a pity a Craw couldna take a bit stick to its nest withoot being quarrelled for’t’, which eventually resulted in him getting a new cottage (however, the same story is also told, more credibly, about the much later ‘Blinnd Wullie’, who was probably his descendant). James (b.1756) was his son. He is buried along with James’ wife Marion Scott.

William ‘Wullie’ or ‘Blinnd Wullie’ (18th C.) son of a Bransholm gamekeeper, and said to be descendant of Jean the Ranter. He may be the William, son of John and Joan Shiel, born in Hawick Parish in 1725. He was described in the diary of James Grieve of Bransholme Park, as recounted in Sir Walter Scott’s The Antiquary. At one time he carried all the bread from Hawick out to Bransholme Park, and ”laid the town of Hawick under contribution for bawbees, and he knew the history of every individual”. He was blind, but said to have the gift of second sight. For example, he is meant to have predicted the time that the Highland host of 1745 passed Bransholme Cross. He produced rhyming couplets about local families, and some of his poetry was said to have been published, but lost. He wandered the Borders, walking with the aid of 2 sticks. He had the free use of a house at Bransholme Town, and spent much time in Hawick, where he would make scurrious rhymes about people until they gave him a small coin to go away! In order to get his cottage repaired he is meant to have dragged some tree branches across the road in front of the carriage of the Duke and his Chamberlain and said ‘Aw daursay it’s come to a puir time o’ day when a Craw canna get a grain to build a nest wi’, for a the trees there is at Bransholme’ (however, the same story is told of an earlier William, probably an ancestor). His portrait hangs in the Museum and he is buried in Borthwick Waas. When once locked in to his cottage (for some misdemeanor) he apparently climbed up to the joists himself, after which the cottage was known as ‘The Spider’s House’. When ‘Rob the Naig’ (the beadle) sat next to him in Hawick Kirk, he is said to have uttered ‘The likes o’ this I never saw, A ‘Naig’ set doon to herd a ‘Craw’' [RM]. William C. (19th C.) printer and publisher from Dumfries, he was proprietor of the Hawick Express for a few years towards the end of the 19th century (formerly spelled ‘Cra’, ‘Crae’, ‘Crou’, ‘Crow’, ‘Crowes’ etc.).

the Craw (thu-kraw) n. nickname for Wullie Craw.

craw-bell (kraw-bel) n., arch. the daffodil, Narcissus pseudo-narcissus – ‘Mid yellow crow-bells, on the riv’let’s banks, Where knotted rushes twist in matted ranks’ [JL].

the Crawbrae (thu-kraw-brā) n. former name for part of Hallrule farm. In the mid-19th century workmen making a quarry there discovered 2 Roman bronze coins of the emperor Maximinus.

Crawbyres (kru-bīr) n. area around Crawbyres Cottages and Crawbyres Bridge. Thomas Turnbull was farmer there in the 1860s. There was once a curling pond near there. There may also have been a mission set up near here to cater to the navvies working on the railway about 1860 – ‘...While Greenbraehead (in older times Priestcrown) To meet Crawbyres send the signal down’ [WNK] (note the usual pronunciation puts accent on the second syllable).

Crawbyres Brig (kru-bīr-brig) n. bridge across the Slitrig just outside town on the Newcastleton road. It is a grade C listed building – ‘In through the knowes o’ bracken That huddle roun’ Winnington Rig: Or slowly alang the ribboned road That saddles Crawbyres Brig?’ [WL].

Crawbyres Cottages (kru-bīr-ko’-ee-jeez) n. Crawbyres Cottages, along the Slitrig just south of Hawick, once occupied by railway workers.

Crawbyreshaugh (kru-bīr-hawch) n. Crawbyreshaugh, former name for part of the East Mains of Hawick, presumably a flat piece of land by Crawbyres. It was recorded in 1822 when William Scott in Milsington complained to the Duke of Buccleuch over interference with his rights of ‘tack’ of the lands.

Crawbyres Pond (kru-bīr-pound) n. Crawbyres Pond, a curling pond on the opposite side of the Slitrig from Crawbyres Cottages. It was opened in December 1890, with the first stone thrown by ex-Provost Milligan. It can be seen in a photograph of 1902.

Crawdenford (craw-din-furd) n. another name for the place on the Fodderlee Burn also known as the Sclaterford.
Crawfieldsteed

Crawfieldsteed (craw-feeld-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Crawfieldsteid’. It is unclear where these lands were.

craw-fit (kraw-fi’) n., arch. crowfoot, plant of the ranunculus family with white or yellow flowers.

Crawflat (craw-flaw’) n. former lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as part of the area called Ermidon. It was listed as being valued at 14 shillings. Note that there is a Crow Sike just to the east of Steele Road, which may be associated.

craw-floorer (kraw-floor) n., arch. crowflower, common name for the hyacinth – ‘The swift-pinioned swallows ha’e left the auld shed; The crow-flower and blue-bell sae bonnie are dead …’[TCh].

Crawford (craw-furd) n. Adam (15th C.) received 1 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He may have been a local man. It is possible that the same Adam was killed by Robert Scott of Whitchester; Scott was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime at the Justice-killed by Robert Scott of Whitchester; Scott was a carpenter. It is possible that the same Adam was killed by Robert Scott of Whitchester; Scott was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime at the Justice.

James (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Oldisleave in 1787. He could be the same farmer who was later at Appletreehall.

James (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Apple treehall, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He is probably the James who was married to Janet Elliot and whose daughter Janet was born in Bilton Parish in 1784. Perhaps the same James was recorded at Clarilaw in 1790 and secondly married Nelly Armstrong, with children including John (b.1788) and James (b.1790). James ‘Jimmy’ (20th C.) band leader of the Drums and Flies. Jessie E. nee Burnet (b.1900–73) born at Newton Cottage, Barnes, near Stobs, daughter of shepherd John, with her maternal grandfather being blacksmith Robbie Davidson. She gave an account of early stories from her life and gathered from her family, relating to Appletreehall, Stobs and Cogsmill in particular. She married William G. Crawford (who died in 1967) and they lived at Ruberslea in Denholm. They are buried in Denholm Cemetery.

John (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Hownam in 1702, the couple both being from Ashkirk. Their children included Robert (b.1703); and Christian (b.1706). Matthew (16th C.) farmer at Weens. ‘Mathew Crawforddis dwelling hous and zaird’ are listed in the 1562 Baronial dispute for lands in Feu-Rule. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1549 as chaplain and notary for a charter for lands in Hassendean Parish, granted by Robert Scott of Howpasley to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. He was thus presumably chaplain of Hassendean or a nearby kirk. In 1554 he was the notary for an instrument granting an acre of land in the Barony of Cavers to Archibald Elliot of Gorbenberry and for the following letter of reversion; he was there described as a Persbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow. It seems likely he was the same man as ‘Sir Patrick Crawford’, who was ‘vicar perpetual’ of Longnewton and died in 1565. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, probably in the Branxholme area. He married Helen Martin and their children included: Marion (b.1640). She is probably the Marion who had an unnamed child with John Paterson in 1673. Robert (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. Robert (c.1695–1732) minor Border poet, son of Patrick and descended from the Crawfords of Drumsoy. He was a friend of Allan Ramsay and William Hamilton. His pastoral poems ‘Tweedside’ and ‘The Bush aboon Traquair’ remained popular throughout the 18th century. Robert (d.1767) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His headstone in the burial ground is marked ‘Here lyes …Robert Crawford …doed 1767 aged 363 years’; this is presumably a mason’s error. Robert (18th C.) resident of Branx holmtown. He was one of the founding group of seceders, who met in Hawick in 1763, leading to the establishment of the Green Kirk. Robert (d.bef. 1816) wright in Hawick, who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1792 he was mentioned as husband of Betty Weens, who was found guilty of stealing a shirt, but absolved. His wife Betty Weens died in Hawick in 1816. They had a son Robert (b.1786), who was probably the joiner. Robert (b.1785/6) joiner on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was probably son of wright Robert. He may be the ‘Mr. Crawford’ whose piece of land is shown on the right side of the top of the Loan on Wood’s 1824 map. He is recorded at about 44 Loan in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Margaret. Thomas (d.c.1680) merchant in Edinburgh, referred to as ‘juniors’ and ‘merchant burgess of the said town’. In 1681 his son Thomas inherited his lands of ‘exterioibus et interioibus de Slaidhills, superioribus et inferioribus de Harwood’ (i.e. Outer and Inner Slaidhills and Over and Nether Harwood) in the Parish of Hawick. It is unclear how he acquired these lands. He could be the Thomas who was admitted a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1654, and whose son Thomas was admitted in 1675. Thomas (17th C.) son and heir of Thomas, merchant in Edinburgh. He was served heir to his father’s lands of Slaidhill and Harwood in 1681. Thomas (17th C.) son of Thomas. In 1683 he was served heir to his grandfather’s 300 merklands of Slaidhill and Harwood in 1681. Presumably his father had already died by then. Rev. William (1682–1737) minister of Wilton Parish. He was born in Kelso, graduated from Edinburgh University in 1700 and was licensed by Dalkeith Presbytery. In 1711 he argued for appointment of ministers by election rather than presentation. He was called to Wilton in 1712, ordained in the middle of the following year, and remained until his death. At the very end of 1712 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Crozier (weaver in Clarilaw). In 1718 he was one of those appointed to examine the candidate for Schoolmaster in Hawick. He published ‘Dying thoughts in three parts’ (1738, reprinted in Hawick in 1814), ‘Christ the Power of God, and the wisdom of God, a sermon’ (1731), ‘A short Manual against the Infidelity of this age’ (1734), ‘Zion’s Traveller, or the Soul’s Progress to Heaven’ (1743), a 2 volume ‘The Works of William Crawford’ (1748) and a ‘Short Practical Catechism, to be answered by the Young People in the Congregation of Wilton’ (1834). The last of these must have been very familiar to a generation of Wilton school children. He was apparently of a delicate constitution and described as ‘a person of great modesty, piety and worth’ and beloved by his parishioners. It is also sometimes suggested that he set up the first Sunday School in Scotland in the 1730s (although this may be a confusion with Samuel Charters half a century later). He married Helen Riddle, daughter of the Laird of Muislie (i.e. Muselee) in Edinburgh in 1716 and she died in 1751, in her 68th year. Their children included David, who died in 1720, aged 1716 and she died in 1751, in her 68th year. Their children included David, who died in 1720, aged 64 and William Beattie in 1780. William Scott of Burnhead owned the lands (along with Appletreehall and Midshields, to James Lundie; instead they passed back to the Homes. In 1611 the same lands are resigned by Philip Scott of Dryhope to Alexander Cranston. Robert Scott of Falnash was living there in 1733 and James Scott in 1738. Mrs. Betty Scott paid the window tax for 11 windows there in 1748. John Scott was there in 1751–64 and William Beattie in 1780. William Scott of Burnhead owned the lands (along with Appletreehall Townfoot) in 1788 and according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls; they were owned by William Scott Watson in about 1874.

Craw Hill (kraw-hil) n. small hill between Bucklands and the Coille, which formerly gave its name to the general area. It reaches a height of 139 m. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as a small wooded hill.

crawghill (kraw-hil) n. Crowhill, former name for an area in Wilton around Crow Hill. The general area later became known as Burngrove and then Bucklands. It was farmed by the Scotts of Burnhead, and there was also a corn-mill there. The lands there may also have been known as ‘Crawhill’. It is probably the ‘Crawlawhill’ recorded in 1535 when there is a revocation of the charter giving superiority of lands in Hassendean, together with Appletreehall and Midshields, to James Lundie; instead they passed back to the Homes. In 1611 the same lands are resigned by Philip Scott of Dryhope to Alexander Cranston. Robert Scott of Falnash was living there in 1733 and James Scott in 1738. Mrs. Betty Scott paid the window tax for 11 windows there in 1748. John Scott was there in 1751–64 and William Beattie in 1780. William Scott of Burnhead owned the lands (along with Appletreehall Townfoot) in 1788 and according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls; they were owned by William Scott Watson in about 1874. Rev. James Scott, minister at Perth and great antiquarian, was born here, son of Robert Scott of Falnash. Stocking-maker John Turnbull and family are recorded at ‘Crawhill Pk.’ in 1841 – ‘One day I was fishing at bonnie Crawhill, An’ trying my best twa three trouts to kill’ [UB] (it is ‘Crauhill’ in 1611 and ‘Crahill’ in 1733; marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Crawknowe (kraw-now) n. former lands in Ashkirk Parish. There are deeds relating to the lands among the papers of the Elliots of Minto. Robert Scott of Headshaw had a charter for the lands in 1605. In 1643 the lands were valued, along with Headshaw and Clews, at £760 10s. In 1691 they were inherited along with Clews in Ashkirk Parish by Mary Scott, brother of John of...
Craw Knowe

Headshaw. There were 2 poor people listed there on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. It was included (along with Headshaw, Dryden and ‘Clews’) in lands ratified by royal charter to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1705. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Gilbert Elliot from his father in 1778. In 1780 ‘Infield Crawknowes’ was listed among the lands in Dryden and Clews whose inheritance had been given to Dr. William Elliot. The name was later used for the house that held the village blacksmiths, recently converted to a pub. John Matthewson was living there in 1868 (it is transcribed ‘Craknok’ in 1605, ‘Crawknowes’ in 1643, ‘Cranknow’ in 1691 and ‘Crawknow’ in 1705).

Craw Knowe (kraw-now) n. Crow Knowe, small hill in Liddesdale, on the opposite side of the Liddel from Riccarton Mill.

crawpei (kraw-pe, kraw-pi) n., arch. meadow vetchling, Lathyrus pratensis, having yellow flowers and pea-like pods – ‘While in summer the crawpea and nodding blue bell, ARE lovingly twined round the auld Verter Well’ [VW].
craw plantin (kraw-plawn-tin) n. a noisy place, din – ‘it sounds like a craw plantin in here the night’.
craw road (kraw-rôd) n., arch. the direct way, as the crow flies – ‘He got ... shelter in a garret for three days and three nights, after which he took the craw road to Stirling’ [RM].

Crawshope (kraw-sup) n. former lands in the Lairdship of Ringwoodfield, recorded in 1621, 1634, 1653, 1661, 1663 and 1693. It is included as part of the farm of Braithwaugh in the 1718 survey of properties of Scott of Buccleuch, but it is unclear which part corresponded to Crawshope (it is ‘Crowshoip’ in 1634, ‘Crawshope’ in 1661, ‘Crowshoip’ in 1663 and ‘Crawship’ in 1718).

Crawsuph (kraw-shup) n. Jenny (19th C.) credulous individual from Hawick, often the butt of practical jokes, particularly an elaborate one involving her potential marriage to Blind Jock. She had been married to a Mr. Brown, became hen-keeper for Mr. Pringle, schoolmaster, and worked at Wilton Mills (the name could be ‘Kershope’).

Craw’s Moss (krawz-mos) n. Craw’s Moss, small boggy area on the Minto estate. It was opened as a marl pit in 1755 and used by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto to fertilise 200 acres, possibly the first done locally. In 1780 there was a description of the lands of Minto Muir Parks, describing that ‘Crowsmoss’ was part of the northern boundary, adjacent to ‘Walrigpark’ and near the road connecting Lilliesleaf and Jedburgh. It is probably associated with the modern Crowbrae Plantation.

Craw Sike (kraw-sik) n. small stream to the east of Steele Road in Liddesdale. It runs into Bridgehouse Burn.
craw steps (kraw-steps) n. stepped stonework running up the side of a gable.

Crawstruthers (kraw-stru-thurs) n. part of Hawick Common Moor, lying near Wulliestruther and Reedwell Knowes, but whose precise location is no longer known. One possibility is that it was part of the boggy area which became Wulliestruther Loch after damming in the early 19th century. It was mentioned in depositions given in 1767 regarding the former use of the Common, and there it was stated that the road to Lincart Moss lay on its north side (the name derives from Old Scots ‘struther’, meaning a marsh, with the prefix probably suggesting crows or perhaps a sheep-fold from the Gaelic).

creat (kree-a) pp., arch. created, appointed – ‘...John Gledstaines of Hillisland, and John Scott, smith, were admittit and creat Burgesses and gave thair Burgess Oaths’ [BR1692], ‘The said day Michael Trumble was admitt and creat burgess upon the acount that he built the stone stair that goes up to the steiple’ [BR1714].
creater see cratur

creddle (kre-dul) n., arch. cradle – ‘...the insect-world Hummed wi’ a busyness that became a creddle-sang’ [DH].
creel (kreeel) n. a basket, especially a wicker basket used by anglers for carrying fish – ‘Tis thought they ken the verra creel O’ Lean Yeddie Gibson’ [T], ‘Wull has gotten a creel like a muckle big kist, And swears he will filled { let us a’ dae oor best’ [UB], ‘Come wi’ ye’re rods, come wi’ ye’re creels. When ye ha’e time for sportin’ ...’ [TCh], a basket worn on the back for carrying produce – ‘...as he just went out with graip and creel to his father’s tata field ...’ [RM], ‘...an A thocht the sowd wand take a dwam, an kilt owre, – banyels, creel, an aa thegither’ [ECS] (from Old French or Gaelic).
creelfi (kreeel-fi) n., arch. the fill of a creel – ‘She bought from James Thompson ... ane creelful of salt’ [BR].

the Creelman (thu-krel-mun) n. nickname of George Turnbull in Bedrule Parish.

creenge (kreenj) v., arch. to cringe.
creeper

creeper (kree-pur) n. a device in weaving that keeps the cloth moving through the machine. Formerly also an alternative name for a ‘creepin cloth’, onto which ‘cardings’ were connected, while it was continually in motion, to feed the carded wool into the ‘slubbin billy’; before the mid-1800s this job was done by children, who worked long hours, and whose fingers would sometimes bleed as a result of the repeated action of the threads and the roughness of the cloth of the creeper.

creepie (kree-pee) n., arch. a low stool, once ubiquitous throughout Scotland, the usual design having 2 flat sides with notches cut to make legs and with the top overhanging on the other 2 sides. They were used at home and also in church until part way through the 18th century.

creepit (kree-pi, -pee) pp. crept – ‘Sae or twa towmonts by had crepit, The gear and Cash accounts he keepit’ [RDW], ‘…Then quietly creepit into kirk, Wi’oot ae sound or ca’’ [WFC] (also written ‘creepet’; cf. crap, which is the past tense and cruppen the past participle).

creeple (kree-pul) n., arch. a cripple – ‘John Rae creeple in ye toum had a child baptized called Elizabeth …’ [PR1708], ‘Paid to Walter Scott, beddall, for taking away creples £0 3s 6d, and he was ordered to take ye creeple out of ye toum’ [PR1711], ‘To a creeple that did trouble us no more, 2s’ [PR], ‘…ye Box was much prejudiced both by hiring horse for taking away of creeples …and other indigents in ye toum and landward part of ye parish’ [PR1721] (there are spelling variants; what exactly was done with these unfortunate is unclear).

creesh (kreesh) n., arch. grease, fat – ‘Gang coole i’ the same creesh ye hette, Or haith, ye’se rue youre raide’ [JTe], ‘It wad take a vast o sow-same, a richt claet o creesh, ti cleester a clor gotten that gait!’ [ECS], ‘Snot that cannl; it’s aa gaun ti creesh – there’s a waister on’t’ [ECS].

creeshy (kree-shee) adj., arch. greasy – ‘…or clairy wui lifty ghaar an creeshy glet thre fooeel seidaer an brander’ [ECS], n., arch. a greasy person, especially a mill-worker.

creest (kreest) n., arch. a crest, a boaster, self-important person, v., arch. to brag, boast, assume airs.

crestin (krees-tin) adj., arch. boastful, self-important, bumptious – ‘He’s a creestin’ craitur’ [GW], ‘Monie a creestin bit wui a guid riuce o itsel A ken that coordna hau the canne ti Ancrum for wurth!’ [ECS].

cretic (kree-ik, kree-tik) n., arch. a critic.

the Crescent (thu-kres-sin) n. original name for Slitrig Crescent, and popularly used long after the name was officially changed to distinguish it from other crescents (also sometimes just ‘Crescent’).

the Crescent Brig (thu-kres-sin-brig) n. name sometimes used for Slitrig Crescent Brig.

Crescentfit (kre-sin-fi) n. Crescentfoot, name used for a while for houses at the east end of Backdamgate, e.g. in the 1861 census.

Cresswell (kres-wel) n. former lands in Hassendean Parish, with precise location uncertain. Around the 1220s these lands were granted by Christina (daughter of William son of Adam of Hassendean) to Hugh, brewer of Hassendean. The land was held for a penny, to be paid annually at Pentecost. It is also possible that this was the ‘Crosswalde’ which was granted by Walter of Berkeley to William, son of Richard in about 1190 (although it has been suggested this was a different place in Kirkcudbrightshire). ‘Symund de Cresseuelle’, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, could have been associated with these lands, and may have been a descendant of Hugh. The lands may be connected with the surname ‘Creswell’ (perhaps even leading to the local name ‘Kersel’), which may have originated even earlier in a place of the same name in Renfrewshire; however, there are Cresswells elsewhere, and it may be that the name was transplanted between some of them by the same family. One of the earliest known is Alexander ‘de Cressewell’ who witnessed a charter at Loch Kindar in about 1198. ‘Rogerus filius Simonis de Cressewell’ and ‘Robertus le Serjuant de Cressewell’ are recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland, suggesting that the place of the same name there (on the coast between Amble and Ashington) may be connected with the same family; they held the Northumberland estate and were still a prominent Northumberland family into the 19th century. As another example, William ‘de Cressewell’ was Chancellor of Moray from about 1294 and precentor there later. The name was still used for the Hassendean lands in about 1621 when Gavin Turnbull had a charter for them from the Commendator of Melrose; he paid the yearly sum of 13s 4d. It was listed along with the lands of Clerkcroft in 1640 when the superiority was inherited by Thomas Hamilton, 3rd Earl of Haddington. The lands of ‘Clerkcroft Kersual’ are recorded in 1670, when they were still part of the Lordship of Melrose, and were inherited in the same year by Charles Hamilton, Earl of Haddington (it is ‘Cressewelle’ in the 1220s ‘Kerswell’ in about 1620 and ‘Kerswell’ in 1634, 1640 and 1670).

Cresswell (kres-wel) n. Adam see Adam Kersel. Robert (13th C.) listed in 1296 in an English document with the names of of men dwelling in Scotland whose servants were to be removed from their lands in Northumberland. Many of the other names were from Roxburghshire or nearby. He was listed in 1296 as a Scotsman holding the lands of ‘Heburne’ in Northumberland; his name is given there as ‘Roberti de Cresswell’. He was captured at Dunbar in the same year and imprisoned at ‘Hardelaghe’ (i.e. Harlech) Castle. He may well have been a close relative of Simon. In 1303/4 he had his lands in England returned to him; he had acquired those from John ‘Daguillon’ and his wife Joanna. Note that an earlier Robert Cresswell, recorded in 1248, was an English knight. Simon (13th C.) recorded in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He was son of ‘Roberti de Greenswell’ and gave lands in ‘Grescwell’ to the Priory of Tynemouth. His name is also written ‘Kercewell’ and ‘Cressewell’. These were presumably lands in Cresswell in Woodhorn Parish in Northumberland. Nevertheless, it seems likely he was a direct ancestor of (or even the same man as) the Roxburghshire Simon of 40 years later. ‘Rogerus filius Simonis de Cresswell’ is on the assize roll of Northumberland in 1279 is surely his son. John ‘de Cresswel’, who owned a free tenement in ‘Rothewell’ is also mentioned in 1256 and presumably related. Simon (13th C.) recorded as ‘Symbnd de Cresswelle’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His lands were in Roxburghshire and could be the place of that name in Haseendale Parish. His seal bears an 8-rayed figure and the words ‘SYMONIS D’CRESVILE’. Another swearer of fealty in 1296, David, of the same designation but in the county of Lanark, may have been related. In 1300 he was ‘Simone de Cresseville’, when he had his lands restored to him. Another potential relative is Robert ‘de Cresswelle’, who is also mentioned in 1296 and is recorded in 1303/4, having his lands in Northumberland restored. William (12th/13th C.) witnessed in about 1200 to a renewal of lands and rights in Hownam and Mow to Melrose Abbey. Probably the same William witnessed 2 other documents for Melrose Abbey in about the 1210s. It is unclear if he was connected to the local Cresswell lands.

the Crib (thu-krib) n. area just north of Lairhope in the upper Teviot valley, with Crib Sike passing through it and Crib Head to the north.

Crib Heid (krib-heed) n. hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, just to the north of Lairhope. There is a linear earthwork there, stretching at least 160 m, from the deep gully at the head of Crib Sike to a hollow that drains down to Philhope Loch.

Crib Law see the Crib Law o Craik

the Crib Law o Craik (thu-krib-law-ô-kräk) n. hill just to the north-west of Craik village in the upper Borthwick valley. It reaches a height of 424 m (1,389 ft) and contains a fire tower. A forest walk leads from Craik village to its summit. The hill has a fairly conical form, but this is now obscured by forestation. It was formerly in Selkirkshire, until the boundary was moved to the north (also called just ‘Crib Law’; there is another hill of the same name in the Lammermuirs).

Crichton (kri-in) n. Alexander (15th C.) listed as a witness in 1464/5 to the sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. He is recorded there as ‘Alexandro Crechtoune’. Alexander (d.1588) Rector of Abbotrule in 1539. He was also recorded as Parson of Abbotrule when he was witness to a document of the Homes in 1552 and another charter confirming transfer of the lands of Harden in 1559 (although this may be 1550). In 1556 he was ‘rector’ of Abbotrule when he witnessed another document for Alexander Lord Home. Also in 1555 Alexander ‘Creychtoun’ brought an action against 12 Turnbulls for spoliation of his glebe lands. He probably served the Parish until the time of the Reformation. He may be related to the later Rev. Alexander. Rev. Alexander (d.1605) minister of Abbotrule up until 1605 when the parsonage and vicarage of that parish is recorded being presented to Joseph Tennant. He probably held the position since about 1595 when John Bonar was translated to Girton. It is possible he was directly related to the earlier Alexander (but is unlikely to be the same man, who was meant to have died in 1588). Daniel (b.c.1785) gardener at Minto House. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Catherine. David of Cranston Riddell (d.bef. 1485) Keeper of Edinburgh Castle and Ranger of the Ward of Tweed. He held a lease of the King’s lands of Catslack in 1460. He was granted lease of the Crown lands of Montberger, Catslack and Blackgrain (in Yarrow) in 1480. He married Margaret Shaw and was succeeded by his son Patrick. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. George (d.1454) eldest son of Stephen of Cairns. He was Sheriff of Linlithgowshire and was later Lord High Admiral of Scotland and Keeper of Stirling Castle. He was granted the lands of Borthwickshiel by his father-in-law Sir William Douglas of Strathbroke. In 1433/4 he sold half of these lands to Andrew Ker of Altonburn; he was then referred to as ‘of Blackness’. He confirmed this with another charter in 1444, in which he granted all of Borthwickshiel to Ker. He secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir William Borthwick of that Ilk, widow of Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith. He was succeeded by his son James (despite serious disputes between father and son). He also had a daughter, Janet, who married Robert, 2nd Lord Maxwell. James of Cranston Riddell (16th C.) son of Sir James and Janet Beaton, who became wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1541 he held the lands of Montbenger, Blackgrain and Catslack (in Yarrow) in feu. In 1550 he leased the lands of Cranston Riddell, Catslack, Montbenger and Blackgrain for 19 years. This was with the consent of his curators, William Scott of Kirkurd and Walter Scott of Synton. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johanne de Creichtoun’ in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Many of the other witnesses were local men. Sir Patrick of Cranston Riddell (15th C.) son of David. He succeeded his father as Master Ranger of Tweed in 1485. He was also Keeper of Edinburgh Castle. He leased the Crown lands of Catslack, Montbenger, and Blackgrain until at least 1510. His son and heir was James of Cranston Riddell and he had other sons, David, Robert and William (spelled ‘Crichtone’, ‘Creichtoun’ and variants).

cried (crid) pp., arch. to be cried means to have one’s name read out in church as an announcement of a forthcoming wedding, to have one’s banns read. The local tradition was that the name was read on 3 separate occasions, and it was considered unlucky for the woman to attend church those days – ‘Ther names’ll be cried i Sunday’ [ECS] (see cry and cries: names-gaein-in).

the Crimean War (thu-kr-i-mee-in-wawr) n. war of 1854–56 with Britain, France and Turkey fighting to stop Russia controlling the Dardanelles. A bonfire was lit at the Tower Knowe in celebration of victory, nearly setting fire to one of the houses. This would be the last bonfire there. The hillside at Gala law was also set on fire, and took many years to recover.

Cringle Law (kring-gee-law) n. one of the highest hills to the south of the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, reaching a height of 353 m. On the unnamed peak to the east there are the remains of a settlement.

Cringles (kring-gulz) n. former farm in Lilliesleaf Parish. Robert Scott was recorded as tenant there in 1585. In about 1620 Andrew Riddell of that Ilk had a charter for half of these lands from the Commendator of Melrose, with Sir Robert Scott of Thistlestone having a charter for the other half. It is recorded in 1643 as ‘Cringles, or Cringlaws’, when owned by the Riddells of that Ilk and valued at £100. It is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map just to the east of North Synton. In 1643 the lands were valued at £156 and owned by Robert Scott of Satchells. In 1663 it was valued at £156, split between William Ormiston and John Riddell. The lands were still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. According to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, the lands were valued at £100 (with no owner’s name given). In 1788 it was owned by Sir John Riddell. The area today is marked with North Cringles Strip and South Cringles Plantation (spelled ‘Cringills’ in 1564, ‘Cringillis’ in 1585 and in about 1620, ‘Cringills’ in 1643, ‘cringilles’ and ‘Cringley’ in 1663 and ‘Cringleis’ in 1670).

Crinkle (kringk-law) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Merton’ and they had an unnamed child baptised in 1708. James (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is possible that the name was ‘Crinklaw’. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (when it contained Hassendean). He married Margaret Brunton in 1682 and their children included John (b.1682) and William (b.1683). The witnesses in 1686 were James White and John Hope.

Crink Law (kringk-law) n. hill in Southdean Parish, to the left of the A6088, just before the turn-off for Lethem. It reaches a height of 301 m. The area is a rich archaeological landscape, particularly on the north-west side, with a scooped settlement (perhaps from the first millennium B.C.E.), prehistoric field system, rig lines, remains of 3 buildings and several banks and enclosures. There are also patches of cord rig visible on the north-east side, along with the remains of 2 turf-walled buildings, 2 turf huts and several enclosures and boundary banks. And on the northern slopes are a square enclosure and disused quarry.

cripple (kri-pul) n., arch. the crupper of a horse, i.e. the leather strap passing under a horse’s tail to secure the saddle – ‘At the Ca’ knowe we halt a little; Slack our girths and ease the cripple’ [AB].

Cripple Meg (kri-pul-meg) n. nickname for Margaret Scott.

crivvens (kri-vinz) interj. mild exclamation of surprise (perhaps shortened form of ‘Christ defend us’).

croak (krok) n., arch., poet. an old, barren ewe – ‘Our croaks and our hogs in the spring time might dec’ [HSR] (also ‘crock’).

Croall Bryson’s (kröl-brï-sinz) n. Croall, Bryson & Co. Ltd., garage at 1 Earl Street.

croft (kroft) n., arch. a small-holding, a piece of high quality land kept under crop – ‘...with power to any that finds them in their skaithe, corne yairds, orcroftes, within the said space ...’ [BR1640] (the word appears in many local place names, e.g. Alton Croft, Croft Angry, Dykecroft, Monk’s Croft, Morlaw’s Croft, Northcroft and Sea Croft).

the Croft (thuo-kroft) n. former name for a field in Denholm on the north side of Eastgate, opposite the police Station.

Croft Angry (kroft-awng-gree) n. older name for the region known later as ‘the Allars’, delineated by Backdamgate, Cross Wynd, Millpath and the Slitrig mill lade. Held by the Scotts of Crumhaugh for many years, it was last referred to in the mid-1800s. In 1678 it was the ‘tocher’ given by James Burn when his daughter Marion married Robert Burn (presumably a cousin or other relative). In 1728 it was granted to Marion and Robert’s son James Burn, who sold it to Walter Scott (formerly tenant in Crumhaugh and uncle of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh). By 1744 it had passed to Robert Scott, Walter’s youngest son with his first wife. It is then described as ‘now enclosed and turned into an orchard or garden, with houses thereon, and others, including the mill that is presently occupied by the said Bessie Scott (2nd wife of Walter) as liferentrix thereof’. The name occurs in several other parts of Scotland, but its origin is uncertain, and may not all be the same; the ones in Edinburgh and Wigtown have both also been written ‘Croft-an-Righ’, with the Edinburgh house at Abbeyhill said to mean ‘field of the King’ (once the residence of the Regent Moray). Also note that ‘Chrystal Croftangry’ was the fictitious editor of the ‘Chronicles of the Castlegate’ used as a pseudonym by Sir Walter Scott, and this may have popularised the name elsewhere in Scotland from the early 19th century. The name is preserved through a house on Allars Bank (it was ‘Croftangry’ in 1728 and 1743).

Croft Cottage (kroft-ko’-cej) n. former cottage that stood a little north of Denholm Kirk until the early 1900s. In its last years it was occupied by a thatcher. Also the name of a house at the top of the Loan on the right hand side.

Croft Field (kroft-feeld) n. new street on the north side of Denholm.

Croft Plantin (kroft-plawn’-in) n. forestry plantation in Southdean Parish, a little north-east of Southdean Lodge. Nearby is a quarry, some hollow ways and a track leading north to the Jed Water, which might be part of a drove road.

Croft Road (kroft-röd) n. street off North Bridge Street, named in 1877 and developed from Crombie Cromwell

1880. Before that it existed as a narrow lane. The name derived from the croft (or field) belonging to the Brieryyards estate, used as a nursery, which was in the area now between Oliver Crescent and Dovecote Street. The street had the Post Office at its corner for about a century, while No. 6 has been the Temperance Hall, ‘Wee Thea’ and Salvation Army Citadel. No. 1 is grade C listed.

Crombie (krom-bee, kru-mee) n. Andrew (17th C.) cleric of St. Andrews Diocese. In 1632 he was notary for the charter of Harwood, sold by Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir to Gilbert Elliott, as well as the sasine for Appotside and Tythehouse. He was also notary mentioned in the document whereby Edward Lorraine sold Harwood outright to William Elliot in 1637. Probably the same Andrew was Sheriff Clerk in Jedburgh and married to Bessie Turnbull. Archibald (18th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire. He may have been son of John, who earlier held the same position. He was somehow a relative of the Gledstains of Cocklaw and gained the lands of Orchard from them, which he sold to Robert Howison in 1744. John (18th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Teviotdale, based in Jedburgh, in the 1690s and early 1700s. He may also have served as ‘curator’ for the Laird of Whitlaw around 1711. He contributed £100 to the Darien Company in 1695. John (d.1849) Irish navvy, living at the Sandbed (probably Orrock Place). He apparently died of ‘gluttony’ on July 29th 1849, with his wife Margaret being buried 2 days later, her death was caused by cholera (although there is some confusion over whether he was in fact the first cholera victim). His name is also given as ‘Crummie’. Margaret nee Miller (d.1849) wife of John. She was Hawick’s first victim in the devastating cholera epidemic. She is buried in the chancel section of the Wellygate Cemetery. Robert (18th C.) ‘postillion’ (i.e. in charge of the coach) at Borthwickbrae in 1792, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. His name appears to be written ‘Crumbie’. William (17th C.) son of John. He was Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire in 1668 when involved in clearing a debt between John Turnbull of Knowe and John Turnbull of Minto. He is probably the William who paid the land tax for the stock of Bankend in 1678. William (18th C.) listed as ‘William Crumbie of Ormstone’ among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is possible he was a son of Archibald, who held the lands of Ormiston. He is probably the William who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748 (also formerly ‘Crummie’ and ‘Crumbie’).

Cromdale (krom-dal) n. John (14th C.) Canon of Moray, who was Prebendary of Botarie, Master of Ballencrieff, Papal Chaplain and also Rector of Hawick. His name is written ‘Cromdoll’. He became Canon of Moray in 1364 and was probably Rector of Hawick after John Leche, who held the benefice until 1378.

Crom Rig (krom-rig) n. hilly ridge to the left of the A7, south of Commonside. Its slopes contain old signs of cultivation, including ‘cord rig’ and enclosures. There is an earthwork, probably the remains of a settlement on the north-east side of the ridge, at a height of about 260 m, measuring about 60 m by 50 m. Lower down, about 180 m to the north-east are the remains of a farmstead, and nearer to the road is another enclosure. The farmstead has a larger double-walled building and 2 smaller structures, and may have been a medieval fortified house. South of the peak there is a linear earthwork about 340 m in extent, stretching between the Cromrig Burn and part of the Nest Burn. Like the nearby Catrail, this was probably a boundary ditch continuing a line marked out by streams. All of these archaeological features suggest that the area was once a more significant site.

Cromrig Burn (krom-rig-burn) n. stream that meets the Northhouse Burn from the south before joining the Teviot. Crom Rig is a long ridge between the burn and the Teviot, above Colterscleuch Cottage, having earthworks and an old farmstead on it. A mound by the lower banks of the stream was excavated sometime before 1872 and found to contain worked flints and calcined bones. Another adjacent cairn was dug out before 1856 and found to contain an urn with bones; the stream is referred to in 1856 as ‘Cromrigg or Cromlech Burn’ (possibly marked as ‘Cairtann B.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Cromwell (krom-wul, -wel) n. Oliver (1599–1658) born in Huntingdon, of fairly humble beginnings, he converted to Puritanism, became an M.P., and began criticising the royalty. He then led the New Model Army in the English Civil War. In the early 1640s Scottish Covenanters fought alongside him, but his men fought against Scottish forces in the 1650s. He became Lord Protector and resisted being named King. He was buried in Westminster Abbey, but after Charles II resumed the throne, his body was exhumed and hung, with his head remaining on display for the next 20 years. Hawick soldiers fought alongside Cromwell’s Ironsides in the 1640s. He may have visited Hawick himself in 1648. Part of his army, under Colonels Bright and Pride stayed in Castleton for a few nights in 1649, during which time they ruined the church and lit their pipes using the session books. During the time of the Commonwealth some of the Parliamentary army were quartered in Hawick in 1651/2. One resident (‘Lord Olifer’) is on record for refusing to act as guide for them to Langholm.

Cronin (kro-nin) n. Arthur (20th C.) shopkeeper on Wellington Street, who later became Registrar in Hawick.

croo (kroo) v., arch. to coo (like a dove).

crooch (krooch) v. to crouch, huddle up – ‘He crooched an’ streekit as wi’ bile, An’ threespit wi’ himsel’ the while’ [WFC]. ‘Sae Wull sat crooched wi’ his hurdies chilled, His heid wi’ the black forebodin’ filled’ [WL], ‘Croochin wi scaly claws lockit ticht to the spalk . . . ’ [DH].

croodlin doo (krood-lin-doo) n., arch. a wood pigeon, a term of endearment – ‘And yet ye winna close yer een – Ye wee croodlin’ doo’ [JT].

crook (krook) n., arch. a pot-hook – ‘. . . ane pot and flaggon, ane pyt stoup, crook, girdle and pot cof fer’ [DMW1681], ‘Come haste and mak a clean hearth-stane, Gar shine the crook and swey . . . ’ [DA] (see also cruik).

crook (krook) v., arch. to make lame – ‘. . . run after Mungo Armstrong’s dogs and beat them off either with stones or a stick, and crooked one of the dogs, and he minds that dog’s name was ‘Company’’ [C&L1767].

Crook (krook) n. former name for a farm on Cavers estate, marked at roughly the present location of Trowburn Cottage on Stobie’s 1770 map. John, son of Simon Routledge in the Trows was recorded being here in 1502. There are deeds relating to the lands from as early as 1529/30 (not a century earlier, as appears to have been written) when Routledges held half of the lands of Crook. In an instrument William ‘Routlech’, son of the deceased John, resigned all rights to his half of these lands, the ‘kyndness’ of which was held of James Routledge. It thus appears that the Routledges held land here from some years earlier. In 1568 there is a charter from the Commandator of Melrose Abbey granting the abbys ‘three merk lands’ there to William Douglas. Other residents mentioned in 1568 and 1569 are William Paterson and Walter Scott. Probably the same William Douglas was recorded in 1574 when it was recorded in the testament of Walter Scott of Branxholme that there was a dispute over the tithes at Crook. In 1581 William Douglas ‘of Cruik’ and his wife Elizabeth Scott granted several pieces of land to their son James; this included a small herb garden (’hortulo herbario’) called the ‘Taillyard’ on the west, a barn called ‘Trone et Troneland’ in the north, perhaps a small orchard, and ‘lie onesett de Cruik’. In 1592 the lands were inherited by Martin, son of William Douglas. Other residents at that time were Simon Routledge and Robert Thorbrand. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. The lands were still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. Residents (called Grierson) from there were supposedly involved in the riot at the roofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. John Douglas was listed there in 1694. It could be the ’Cruik’ recorded in 1698 when Archibald Douglas was served heir to the Barony of Cavers, including 3 merkland of land there that were among the kirklands of Cavers. Francis Riddell was there in 1737. The name seems to have disappeared not long after this – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes’ [T], ‘The lousy Griersons o’ the Crook, An’ Douglas o’ the Trows, Ani’ Caddon wi’ his bluddy lang shiers, Frae the clipping o’ his ewes’ [T] (the name presumably comes from a curve in the burn there; it is ‘le cruk’ in 1502, ‘Crouk’ in 1529/30, ‘Cromk’ in 1553/4, ‘the Cruke’ in 1565, ‘Cruik’ in 1568, 1574, 1581 and 1601, ‘Cruke’ in 1575, ‘the Cruiks’ in 1584, ‘Cruik’ in 1640 and 1670 and ‘Cruke’ in 1694; it is marked ’Cruk’ on Pont’s c.1590 map and ‘Cruik’ on Blaeni’s 1654 map, between Cauldmill and Trows, but probably incorrectly placed on the western side of the Kirkton Burn; note that Douglas of Crook could easily be confused with Douglas of Cruixton/Crookston in Forfarshire; there are several places of the same name elsewhere).

Crookedhaugh Moss (kroo-ked-hawch-mos)
n. boy area just to the north of Priestrig farm, between Fiddle Hill and Coldhouse Kipp (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Crooked Loch (kroo-ked-loch)
n. small loch on the Roxburghshire/Selkirkshire border about 8 miles west of Hawick, between Windy Law Loch and Kingside Loch. A small stream to the south is Crookedloch Sike (it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Crooked Wat (kroo-ked-waw’)
n. nickname for Walter Scott. Town Herd of Hawick in the early 18th century.

crookit (kroo-kee’, -ki’)
adj., pp. crooked – ‘Some cruikit beam about the moon Was said ti play on Robbie’s croon’ [WP], ‘Grand auld cruikit sneeshin’ horn, Worthy sic a glorious morn’ [RH] (also spelled ‘crukit’).

Crookit Bank (kroo-kee’-bawngk)
n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Cruikit Bank’ on the 1541 rental roll. The lands were valued at 10 shillings and 8 pence and tenanted by William Armstrong. The location is unclear, but it is listed between Whitaugh and Mains, and is probably the ‘Cruckhanck’ shown to the south of Whitaugh on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, on the west side of the Liddel Water, roughly opposite Armstrong. It is possible this was the ‘Crouke’ among lands granted in 1476 to Robert Elliot by Archibald, Earl of Angus.

n. George (19th/20th C.) long-time resident of Rulewater. He worked for a while as ploughman to John Waugh at Highend. He was well-known as a singer of humorous songs at local concerts. In later life he lived next to the blacksmith’s shop in Boinchester Bridge. In 1879 he married Elizabeth Burrel, whose father was a farm steward in Berwickshire. They had 3 sons and 2 daughters. George worked in Weens garden and James in Harwood garden. Peter (1799–1844), W.S., daughter of Peter, gardener at the Dean in Edinburgh. He became Writer to the Signet in 1821. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and hence presumably had a local connection. In 1824 he married Marion, daughter of Peter Dods.

n., arch. a transverse bar built into a fireplace to hang a crook from – ‘...she clung with amazonian resolution to the crook-tree and refused to be removed ...’ [RW].

croon (kroon)
n. a crown, monarch, royal head-dress – ‘See the grey auld croon As the Queen o’ the auld Scottish Border’ [IWS], ‘...The wud hei weers like a croon’ [DH], ‘The croon o’ contentment is light on her broo’ [WAP], top of the head – ‘...A crackit croon to claw’ [JT], ‘...And, oh! his croon got many a knock, For scuar on scuar had Davie’ [TCh], ‘...Was said ti play on Robbie’s croon’ [WP], crest, highest point – ‘the causa croon’, ‘...to pay the sand and stones for their respective interests to the Crown of the Cassey’ [JW1721], a coin formerly worth five shillings – ‘can ee len is half a croon?’ ‘Ee couldn’a afford tae fling owts oot, No wi’ rents at half-a-croon’ [AY], an old Scottish coin of value 13 shillings 4 pence, v. to crown – ‘...croonin the braeheeds hich abuin Tweed an forenent bieldy Dryburgh’ [ECS], ‘The Mermaids, croon’d wi’ cockleshells, Heave a’ their pows aboon’ [JL].

n. the Crown Hotel formerly at 20–22 High Street, next to the ‘Croon Close’. It was tenanted by Robert Hay in the early 19th century, then by his wife Ann, followed by his daughter Mrs. Jane Grieve from 1848 until 1866 (also helped by her husband Robert Grieve). In 1861 the building to the west, which had been Cochrane’s Innery, was demolished to make way for an extension to the hotel. Jane Burns was proprietor in 1871. It was altered to designs of J.P. Alison in the early years of the 20th century. Later it became a popular dance venue. The hotel closed in the late 1980s and the ballroom was destroyed in a fire in 1990. It was converted to offices (the Crown Business Centre) in 1993. The building is distinctive for its French style mansard roof, with the upper dormer making this one of the few 5 storey buildings on the High Street. The mosaic flooring in the entrance to No. 22 still proclaims this as the Crown Hotel. Apart from that the only part of the original interior surviving is the staircase. A solid iron key, of mediaval type was found was found when digging the foundations for the hotel, and is in the Museum. Around 1992 a well was discovered under the south-east end of the former hotel.

n. the Crown Buildings, government offices opposite the Library on North Bridge Street, built in splendid 1974 architectural style, housing the Inland
the Croon Close

Revenue and Department of Social Security (also sometimes ‘Town Buildings’).

the Croon Close (θu-kroon-klōs) n. Crown Close, passageway off the east side of the High Street, named for its proximity to the Crown Inn, later Crown Hotel. This right of way originally gave access to the stables which served the inn, as well as a blacksmith’s. Before the latter part of the 19th century the close did not exist, access to the stables being via Backdamgate. The area surrounding and behind the close was redeveloped in the 1990s. An old building behind the High Street there was once the Hawick Advertiser printworks and was recently converted into a private dwelling.

the Croon Inn (θu-kroon-in) n. former public house in Denholm, at 3 Main Street. Robert Bulman was there in 1853 and James Elliot was proprietor in the 1860s.

the Croon Inn (θu-kroon-in) n. former public house in Newcastle, at 8 Douglas Square. It was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, when Thomas Scott was the landlord. John Richardson was inn-keeper in 1852, Richard Murray in 1861. It had a ballroom, which was the first place used by Newcastleton Free Church in 1850.

Croon Lane (krooon-lān) n. a name sometimes used for the Croon Close, e.g. as the address for Telfer’s the blacksmiths.

the Croon Plantin (θu-kroon-plawn’-in) n. plantation in the Rule valley. It lies just to the east of the B6357, where it joins the A6088, south of the farm of Braidhaugh, and north-east of Cleuch Head.

croons (kroonz) n., pl. crowns, heads of state. In the earliest times for which there are records, Hawick would have been in the Kingdom of Bernicia, which became part of Northumbria perhaps around 600, and part of Scotland in 1018. The union of the crowns meant that Hawick’s monarch was also that of England from 1603. The early information is quite uncertain, and the dates given below are one interpretation of the available information (and spelling also varies). Hawick’s Kings and Queens have been: Esa (c.500, possible 1st King of Bernicia); Eoppa (c.520–c.47); Idla (547–59); Glappa (559–c.60); Adda (c.560–c.68); Æthelric (568–72); Theodoric (c.572–c.79); Fruithwulf (c.579–c.85); Hassa (c.585–c.593); Æthelfrith (c.593–616); Edwin (616–32); Eanfrith (c.632–c.33); Oswald (633–42); Oswin (642–70); Ecgfrith (670–85); Ældfrith (685–704); Eadwulf (704–05); Osred I (705–16); Ceoldred (716–18); Osric (718–29); Ceolwulf (729–37); Eadberht (737–58); Oswulf (758–59); Æthelwald Moll (759–65); Ealdred (765–74); Æthelred I (774–79); Ælfwald (779–89); Osred II (789–90); Æthelred I (again, 790–96); Osbald (796); Eardwulf (796–806); Ælfwald II (806–08); Eardwulf (again, 808–10); Eanred (810–41); Æthelred II (841–44); Rædwulf (844); Æthelred II (again, 844–48); Osberht (848–63); Elle II (863–67); Ecgbelhrt I (867–72); Ricsige (872–76); Ecgbelhrt II (876–78); period of the Norse Kingdom of York, unclear whether they held sway over the Borders; Eadulf (?–913); Ealhred I (913–30); Osulf (930–63); Waltheof (963–970); Uchtred (995–1018); Malcolm II (of Scotland, 1018–34); Duncan I (1034–40); Macbeth (1040–57); Lulach (1057–58); Malcolm III (of Scotland, 1058–93); Donald III (of Scotland, 1093–94); Duncan II (1094); Donald III (again, 1094–97); Edgar (1097–1107); Alexander I (1107–24); David I (1124–53); Malcolm IV (of Scotland, 1153–65); William I (1165–1214); Alexander II (1214–49); Alexander III (1249–86); Margaret (1286–90); John Baliol (1292–96); Robert I (1306–29); David II (1329–71); Edward Baliol (1332–38); Robert II (1371–90); Robert III (1390–1406); James I (1406–37); James II (1437–60); James III (1460–88); James IV (1488–1513); James V (1513–42); Mary I (1542–67); James VI (1567–1625); Charles I (1625–49); Oliver Cromwell (Lord Protector, 1653–58); Richard Cromwell (Lord Protector, 1658–59); Charles II (1660–85); James II (of England, 1686–89); Mary II (1689–94); William III (of England, 1689–1702); Anne (1702–14); George I (1714–27); George II (1727–1760); George III (1760–1801); George IV (1801–20); George IV (1820–30); William IV (of England, 1830–37); Victoria (1837–1901); Edward VII (of England, 1901–10); George V (1910–36); Edward VIII (of England, 1936); George VI (1936–52); Elizabeth II (of England, 1952–).

Croontail Plantin (kroon-tāl-plawn’-in) n. plantation in Hobkirk Parish, to the north of the Croon Plantin. It is in irregularly shaped plantation to the east of Braidhaugh farm.

Croon Wud (kroon-wud) n. Crown Wood, area of woodland, covering about 13 hectares, south of Bonchester Bridge and near the farm of Cleuch Head. It is managed by the Borders Forest Trust.

Crosbie see Croszier
Crosbie (kroz-bee) n. James (19th C.) boot and shoe maker recorded in Newcastleton in 1852. He could have been the brother of teacher Robert. John (18th/19th C.) gamekeeper at Orchard Cottage in 1797, when he was working for Robert Scott. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as brewer in Hawick on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he had 3 working horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. John (19th/20th C.) woollen merchant of 8 Howegate. He married Nellie, daughter of baker John Young. Mrs. ?? (18th/19th C.) marked on Wood’s 1824 map of Hawick as owner of land at Orrock Place. She was presumably a widow, but it is unclear who her husband was, although it is possible it was the brewer John recorded in 1797. Robert (b.1825) born in Applegarth, Dumfriesshire, son of Robert and Jean Sales. He was a teacher in Newcastleton (but not at the Parish School). In 1851 he was living on North Hermitage Street with his mother Jane and brother James. In an 1852 directory he is incorrectly listed as John. Thomas (b.1797/8) from Hawick, he was a frameworker. The family were on Slitrig Crescent in 1851 and at the Dean in 1861. He married Agnes, daughter of James Elliot (who in 1861 was a Chelsea Pensioner). Their children included James, Robert, Thomas, Janet, George, William, Mary, Agnes and Walter (see also Crosby).

Crosbie Bow (kroz-bee-bō) n. nickname of the 19th century – ‘There goes Magenta (whose face is woe) – Whose tales wi’ simple fun are gay, And there’s Jock Buckham and Crosbie Bow, And Tammy Porritch and Uffie Rae’ [HI].

Crosby (kroz-bee) n. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Hardy in Hawick Parish in 1794. Their children included: John (b.1795); Thomas (b.1796); and Rebecca (b.1796). The witnesses in 1796 were Bailie John Hardie (perhaps his father in law) and W. Turnbull, Cockfighter. John (18th/19th C.) painter on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 register. Thomas E.

Crosscleugh

Cross (kros) n. Mary Ann ‘English Mary’ (19th C.) Hawick resident of the mid-1800s. Her name presumably referred to her place of origin. She married Charles Affleck, Hawick stockingmaker.

the Cross (tθu-kros) n. Hawick’s ‘Mercat Cross’, also the former popular name for the area around the Cross, basically meaning the centre of town. ‘The Town Hall’ is the modern equivalent. The Cross itself was removed in 1762 and in 1793 a ‘tree to liberty’ was planted there. The ‘Police bounds’ of the town in the early 19th century were taken to be within 1000 yards of the Cross – ‘Bailies Martin and Ruecastle were ordered to gather from ye Cross upon both sides of ye toun even unto the bridge’ [PR1717], ‘Payd for lead to the Cross building’ [1730], ‘… and the present Baillies for the time to take their horses at the Cross, respectively, yearly, in all time coming’ [BR1735].

Crosssar see Croszier

Crosscleugh (kros-kloo-et) n. hamlet that formerly stood between Bedrule and Fulton tower. It is probably the ‘Corscleuch’ listed among Crown lands in the Exchequer Rolls in the latter half of the 15th century. It was settled by the Turnbulls before 1490, with John Turnbull being assigned the lease by the King in that year. It was destroyed by Hertford’s men in 1545. In 1571 it was granted to Margaret, daughter of John Home of Cowdenknowes, along with Fulton. George Turnbull was tenant there in 1516.
There were Turnbells farming there at the beginning of the 17th century when it was described as consisting of ‘twa rowmes’. In 1619 John and William Turnbull were tenants there when they were among a group of Turnbells accused of cutting down wood on a neighbouring farm. It was part of the lands held by the Kers of Cavers Kerr in the 17th century (also written ‘Corsecleuch’; it is ‘Corscleuch’ in 1456, ‘Corscleuch’ in 1490, transcribed as ‘Crossebewghe’ in 1545, is ‘Crosecleuch’ in 1571 ‘Crocecleucht’ in 1602, ‘Corscleuch’ in 1619 and 1623, ‘Corsecleugh’ in 1672, ‘Corriscleuch’ in 1678 and ‘Cariscleugh’ in 1684; it is marked ‘Corscleuch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Crossgill Sike (kros-gil-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale that rises on Priest Hill and runs southwards to join Whitlaugh Burn.

Crosshaa (kros-haw) n. Crosshall, former name for a house at the site in Stirches where the Heap Cross was located, near the end of Guthrie Drive. Thomas Turnbull was farmer there in 1797 (marked ‘Crosshall’ on Stobie’s 1770 map, to the east of the main road, shortly before Stirches House).

the Cross Keys (thu-kros-keez) n. former inn at the Sandbed, favourite hostelry of James Hogg and friends in the early 19th century. It was at the Buccleuch Street side of the Sandbed, at No. 11, on the south side of the Plough Inn, in a building that later became an office of Mactaggart’s. It was started by William Aitchison and his wife Mary Shortreed (parents of Elliot the local poet) in about 1784, and he was still proprietor in 1825. Nellie Nisbet was also a well-known proprietor. It is easy to confuse with the hostelry of the same name on the High Street.

the Cross Keys (thu-kros-keez) n. former public house on the High Street. It was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory when the proprietor was William Armstrong (although this may be confusion with the pub of the same name on the Sandbed). It might be the place where Robert Scott was recorded in 1766. This was probably the same as the inn of that name started by Walter Wilson (‘Haunless Wat’) at 9 High Street; Walter’s death is recorded at ‘Auld Cross Keys’ in 1795. It is probably the place where George Turnbull was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 work horses. John Turnbull was proprietor in the early 19th century. The newly built stables for the inn were carried away by the flood of 1767.

the Cross Keys (thu-kros-keez) n. inn situated on Main Street in Denholm, overlooking the Green. It was built in 1800 as a bakery and later became a coaching inn. It is today a local pub, with bed and breakfast accommodation, and is a regular venue for folk music. There were once stables in the back. The proprietor in 1861 was John Turnbull and later in the late 19th century was Mr. Anderson (also sometimes called the ‘Auld Cross Keys’).

the Cross Keys Inn (thu-kros-keez-in) n. public house in Newcastleton, probably located at 48 South Hermitage Street. The location, on the corner of the square, now has a bank. John Armstrong was proprietor in 1837. Joseph Pattison was inn-keeper there in the 1840s and 50s.

the Cross Keys Inn (thu-kros-keez-in) n. public house in Lilliesleaf. It is situated on the west side of the village, on the north side of the Main Street. It was built in the 18th century. James Young was innkeeper for at least the years 1841 to 1852.

Crosslee (kros-lee) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, just north of Tushielaw. It was once part of the parish of Rankilburn. It was formerly Crown lands, assigned to William, son of Alexander Cockburn of Lanton until 1488 and then William Vietch of Dawyck and his son John. In the 18th century it was farmed by Walter Byrdon, friend to the family of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd. When surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718 it was ‘Craighill alias Corslee’ and there was a common between this farm and Tushielaw. There were Goodfellow and Scotts there in the 19th century (it was ‘Corsle’ in 1488, ‘Corsles’ in 1492, ‘Corslee’ in 1541 and ‘Corslies’ in 1650; there is a farm of essentially the same name on the Gala Water).

the Cross Port see Crosswynd Port

the Cross Road (thu-kros-röd) n. former name for Wester Braid Road, called that either because it crossed Wellogate Brae or because it crossed from the Wellogate towards the Slitrig.

the Cross Roads (thu-kros-rödž) n. name sometimes used in the 19th century for the Tower Knowe.

cross-trei (kros-trei) n., arch. a cross-beam – ‘Paid whisky when putting up the cross-tree in the Fleshmarket, L.0 1 4’ [BR1755].

the Cross Well (thu-kros-wel) n. former public water supply at the bottom of the Cross Wynd, fed by the spring at the ‘Well o Gate’. The site is marked by a stone, bearing the date 1755, which was moved to the pavement in the 1980s. There is a resolution recorded in 1755 to ‘bring in a well to the Cross from the Wellygate’ and a further record to erect a street well at the Cross in 1783 (which may have been a re-construction). Its position can be seen in the existing photograph of the old Town House in about 1880.

Cross Wud (kros-wud) n. small wooded area between the farms of Wollrig and Outer Huntly. This is probably connected with the place referred to as ‘the cross’ in a charter of about 1170, in which the pasture granted to Orn of Ashkirk is described. It is possible that the ‘cross’ was an early marker in roughly the same position as the Bishop’s Stone, which is just a little to the northwest of the wood.

the Crosswynd see the Cross Wynd

the Cross Wynd (thu-kros-wind) n. street named after the Market Cross that used to stand in the middle of the High Street at the bottom of this road. It was once the site of the South Port (at least partially removed in 1732, and fully removed in 1762 along with the Cross) also called the Crosswynd Port, and the beginning of the main road to Newcastle until the 1830s. It was later referred to as the Policeman’s Brae for the police station there. Further up the street the name changes to Allars Bank and then Wellogate Brae. There used to be a second Chase here on the Friday of the Common Riding, after the races were finished in the Haugh, the practice discontinuing when the races were moved. However, the cavalcade still goes up the street before the Song Songing ceremony. Allars Church was on the south side behind the Town Hall from 1810–1947. Nos. 2 and 4 are grade B listed buildings (also written ‘Crosswynd’).

the Cross Wynd Kirk (thu-kros-wind-kirk) n. popular name for Allars Kirk. It was formally known as the Cross Wynd United Presbyterian Church after 1847, when the Relief Church merged with the Secession Church, and the name was officially changed to Allars soon afterwards.

Crosswynd Port (kros-wind-pör) n. name sometimes given to Sooth Port or the ‘Cross Port’. The name is recorded in 1732 when lime was taken there, presumably to repair it, and there is also a record of ‘what was spent that night the Cross Port was taken down’. It could only have been partly taken down, since in 1762 there is a record of payment to labourers ‘for taking down the Cross, and Cross Wynd Port’ and also for auctioning off the materials from there. This was part of the removal of all the Town’s ports during a time when roads were being improved, e.g. the Edinburgh and Carlisle Turnpike Roads (also written ‘Cross Wynd Port’).

crottled (kro-tul) v., poet. to crumble, cover in small fragments – ‘But naebody’s seen him In the caller pule First crottled wi’ soil, Then white – the auld fule’ [DH].

crowp (krowp) v., arch. to croak, speak hoarsely, make a noise like a frog – ‘And he croupit sae queer when he offer’t to talk, That the youngsters, affrighted, did yelloch and jauk’ [JoHa].

the crowp (thu-krowp) n., arch. croup.

Crozier (krō-shur, -zur, -shee-ur) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Adam Croser’ and ‘Crosar’ in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1510 as an associate of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. A group of Liddesdale men were given respite for their crimes for 19 years to come. ‘Liell Croser’ is also listed, so possibly his son or brother. He is also listed in another remission given to Robert Elliot of Redheugh and his associates in 1515/6. Adam (16th C.) resident of Adderstoneshiel in 1544, when he was among Scotsmen who pledged allegiance to Henry VIII. John is also listed, and so probably a close relative. Adam ‘Ade’ (16th
C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Adde Cossryer Marko Cossyer sone’, with his brother Archie also listed, although it is unclear who Mark was. Adam ‘Ade’ of Adderstonesheils (16th C.) recorded in the records of the Privy Council in 1571, when there was ‘relief at the hands of’. He was ‘Ade Crosar of Edderstonshells’. It is possible he was the same man as ‘Megget’s Ade’ or ‘Kate’s Adie’. Adam ‘Meggat’s Adie’ (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants at Hummelknawes in a bond of security signed at Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Ade Crosar, alias Meggattis Ade’, suggesting perhaps that his mother was Margaret, or that his father’s nickname was ‘Megget’. He was surely related to the other Croziers listed. In 1574 he was ‘Adie Crosar callit Megettis Adie’, listed among Croziers in Earlside who William Douglas of Cavers was fined for not removing. In 1579 he was ‘Adie Crossar, callit Meggottis’, when stated to be in ward within ‘Traif’ castle. Adam ‘Kate’s Adie’ (16th C.) listed in 1574 among accused thieves who resided at Earlside. His name was recorded as ‘Kaitis Adie’. ‘Kate’s Jock’ was also there (and presumably his brother) as well as ‘Cock’s Clem’ and several other Croziers. He was also accused in 1590 along with Martin’s Clem, John and Archie, as well as Archie Elliot of the Hill, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. His mother was presumably Kate. Adam ‘the Pleg’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Eddy Crosar the Pleg’ in 1590 when he was among a group of Croziers accused of stealing goods and livestock from Englishman Nicholas Storie. Others listed were John of Staneshiel, ‘Quentin’s Archie’ and Quentin’s brother Hob. His nickname may indicate that at one point he was a pledge for someone else. Adam (16th C.) recorded along with ‘Quentin’s Airchie’, ‘Adie’s John’ and Hob Armstrong ‘the Tailor’, when they were accused of stealing horses from John Heron of Chipchase. His name is recorded as ‘Edward Croser alias Adey Farlandes’. It seems likely he was ‘Adam’ rather than ‘Edward’, but the meaning of his nickname is unclear. Adam (17th C.) resident near Redheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (19th/20th C.) born in Hawick Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1901 he was living at Adderstoneshields Cottages. His wife was Catherine and their children included Agnes and Janet. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th C.) recorded as son of Edward when he was among family members who supported the English Crown in 1544. It is unclear where their lands were. Andrew (d.1509) convicted for killing Robert Scott of Synton, Adam Turnbull in Chamberlain Newton, Adam Turnbull called ‘Gaberlunzie’ and John Fenton of that Ilk. He also stole a horse and other goods from Thomas Bell ‘in Baginw’ and brought in ‘Englishmen and traitors of Levin’ to raid Blindhaugh and to raid the farms of Alexander and James Chalmers. For these and other crimes he was drawn and hanged in Edinburgh. He could be the same ‘Andrea Crossare’ recorded in 1507 among rebels, which some members of the Dalgleish family had remission for associating with. Perhaps he was one of the 2 Andrews who were listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5; one after James, ‘turni’; and the other not immediately beside other Croziers on the list. Andrew ‘Dandy’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Dande Crosyer Martyne Crosyer sone’, with Martin perhaps being resident at Earlside. Andrew ‘Dandy’, ‘Richardtoncleucht’ (16th C.) one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 by the Earl of Murray and taken to Edinburgh tolbooth. His surname is transcribed as ‘Grosar’, which is surely an error. His nickname probably derives from the lands of Riccarton Cleuch, where Croziers were tenants in 1541. Andrew ‘Mark’s Andra’ (16th C.) listed in a 1569 bond of security signed at Hawick by ‘Clame Crosar’ and his tenants. His name is given as ‘Andro Crosar alias Markis Andro’. His father was presumably Mark. He must have been related to the other Croziers named in the bond. Andrew ‘Part’s Dand’ (16th C.) tenant of the Hummelknawes area listed in a 1569 bond of security if 1569 along with 8 other Croziers (probably relatives). His name is recorded as ‘Dande Crosar alias Parttis Dande’, so he was presumably Andrew, son of someone with a nickname of ‘Partt’ (perhaps an error for ‘Pate’, i.e. Patrick). Andrew ‘Maddy’s Dand’ (16th C.) among men accused of stealing cattle from a farm at Huntly in 1581/2. His name is listed as ‘Dandie Crosar, callit Maddeis Dandie’. He was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. Andrew (16th/17th C.) resident of Toftholm. In 1623 his son Hob appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Andro Crosar, called Jeans Andro, in Greinis’ when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in 1623. He presumably lived at Greens in Liddesdale and had a mother.
called Jean. Andrew (1825/6–1909) son of William and Margaret Elliot, he was a clogger in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was with his brother Robert (also a clogger), and in 1861 was at about 24 South Hermitage Street. He married Isabella Inglis and she died in 1929, aged 101. Their children included: Margaret (1850/1–1907); Isabella (1851/2–91); William; James; and Robert. He and his wife are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He and his brother were singers at the Burns centenary dinner in Newcastleton. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Arche Cresser Markes sone’, with his brother Ade also listed, although it is unclear who their father Mark was. He could be the same man as ‘the Piat’. Probably the same ‘Archie Crosar callit Markis Archie’ was listed in 1574 among men residing at Earlside, who William Douglas of Cavers was supposed to have removed from there. A separate ‘Archie Crosar thair’ is also listed. Archibald ‘Airchie the Piat’ (16th C.) tenant of the Hummelknowes area recorded in 1569 as ‘Arche Crosar alias Arche the Pyatt’, his nickname presumably coming from some perceived similarity with the magpie. In 1574 he is ‘Archie Crosar callit the Pyott’, listed after Barty in Kirkton and Mirk Hob in Penchrise. This was among Croziers who William Douglas of Cavers had been ordered to remove from his lands. Archibald ‘Gib’s Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many Elliots. His name is listed as ‘Arche Crosar Gibs Arche’, meaning that his father was Gilbert. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1584 when, along with Clem, he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, ‘for all the Crosers in Liddesdale’. He may be the Archie along with Will who was accused of raiding into England in 1590; they were acquitted by their oaths, referred to the oaths of Robert and Martin Elliot, but then found guilty when Robert refused to swear. He is probably the Archie accused in 1590, along with Martin’s Clem, John and ‘Kate’s Adame’ Croser, as well as Airchie Elliot of the Hill, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. He may be the ‘Archie Crosar’ listed among residents of Earlside in 1574, when their superior was fined for not removing all the Croziers accused of being thieves. He may be the same as one of the other Archies. Archibald ‘Quentin’s Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when the English Warden accused him and ‘Ill-willed Will’ of stealing cattle from ‘Medupp’. He was also accused in 1590 of stealing livestock and goods from Englishman Nicholas Storie; others listed include his brother Hob, John of Staneshiel and Adie ‘the Pleg’. Additionally in 1590 he and ‘Adie’s John’ were accused of stealing sheep from the Herons of Chipchase, and along with 2 Liddesdale Armstrongs he was accused of stealing more sheep from the same place 2 days later, as well as stealing horses 6 months later, cows after that, and horses on 2 earlier occasions; he was there recorded as ‘Whynynes Arche’, ‘Whyntons Arche’ and similar. He was also accused by William Hall of ‘Gersonfeild’ in 1590 of rieving at ‘Steward sheile’, along with Hob Elliot of Staneshiel and others. Additionally in 1590 he was among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of ‘Allenton’ and ‘Linbriggs’, taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. It is unclear which Quentin was his father. He may have been brother of ‘Quentin’s Hob’, recorded in 1595. Archibald ‘Airchie’, ‘Henheid’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Elliots, Armstrongs and others accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. His name is recorded as ‘Arche Crosar Henhead’ and the other Crozier listed was ‘Quentin’s Airchie’, who may have been related. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Bowholm (16th C.) recorded in 1591 as part of a group (mostly of Elliots) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (d.c.1605) farmer at Brighouse of Cleuchhead in Rulewater. He was one of the local men hanged following the draconian efforts of Border Commissioner Sir William Cranston to stamp out lawlessness. Bartholomew ‘Barth’ (16th C.) father of Matthew, who gave his assurance to the English in 1544, along with many other Croziers from the Slitrig valley and elsewhere. His brother (or possibly son) Hugh was also listed, and he was probably the same Barth whose son John was also named. Bartholomew ‘Barty’ (16th C.) resident of Kirkton. He is recorded in 1574 among Croziers who had been ordered by the Privy Council to be removed from William Douglas of Cavers; Douglas was fined for their non-removal.
Crozier

He is listed as ‘Barty Crosar in the Kirktoun’. He was probably related to the earlier Barth.

Clement (16th C.) recorded in 1531/2 when he and Simon Armstrong had remission from the King for burning Little Newton, as well as the ‘tresonabil taking of Walter Scot of Brauxhelm, knyght, in cumpany with Inglismen’. Clement ‘Clem’ (16th C.) recorded in 1532 as ‘Clemme Crosar’ along with Martin (to whom he was surely related), Elliots and Foresters, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Clements.

Clement (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Elliots who were accused of having killed Englishman Robert Hall at ‘Tredermayn’. It is unclear when this event occurred. He could be the same as one of the other Clements. He could be the ‘Cleny Crosar’ from Liddesdale mentioned in another English document of 1541, listing English rebels who had been reset in Scotland; these men included Robsons, Dods and Charltons. He was listed along with Robert Elliot of Thorlieshope (perhaps a neighbour) and also John, who was surely related to him.

Clement (16th C.) tenant of Byrestead according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert is listed first, and then also Leon and Gilbert. Either he or a different Clement is also tenant of ‘Culigrath’ (or ‘Kilgarth’) on the 1541 rental roll. He may be the same as one of the other Clements. Clement (16th C.) recorded as ‘Clemme Crosar alias Cokkis Clemme’.

Clame Crosar in Hummelknowes’. His name is given as ‘Clemme Crosar alias Cokkis Clemme’. His father’s nickname was thus probably ‘Cock’, and seems distinct from Clem of Stobs and Clen, brother of Jeffrey (or William). He seems likely he was the Clement who, in 1548/9, was sent (along with Adam Scott of Burnfoot and William Scott of Harden) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDonald, probably to extract a horse from him. Clement ‘Clem’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 among those who supported the English Crown. He was recorded as ‘Clame Crosyer his brother’, probably meaning he was brother to Jeffrey, or perhaps William. In any case, he seems distinct from Clem of Stobs. Clement (16th C.) son of John, he was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brothers may have included Jamie, Martin and John. Based on the 1544 list he may have been grandson of ‘Cock’, and seems distinct from Clem of Stobs and Clen, brother of Jeffrey (or William). However he may be the same as one of the later recorded Clements.

Clement (16th C.) listed in 1544 as Gib Croszier’s son, among the local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His brother (or possibly his father’s brother) Willie is also listed. It is unclear who their father Gilbert was. Clement ‘Clame’ (16th C.) recorded as one of the men who signed the bond of security in Hawick in 1569. Thomas Ker was surety for him. He clearly lived locally, given the Scotts and Elliots of the lands south and west of Hawick who also signed. He was probably the same as the ‘Clame Crosar in Hammilknowis’ who was surety for his tenants in 1569, these being 8 other Croziers. In 1578/9 he was ‘Clemme Crossar, sumtyme in Hummyll Knowis’ when the Privy Council re-stated that he was to be entered into ward with John Maxwell in Nether Pollock, with John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk, as surety; however, ‘young Clemmy Crossar has not re-enterit in ward’, and so his cautioner was fined. He could be the ‘Clemie Crosar’ accused by the English of stealing cattle and taking Thomas Routledge prisoner in 1581. He could be the ‘Clemye Croser’ recorded in 1584 when, along with Airchie, he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, ‘for all the Croziers in Liddesdale’.

Clement ‘Cock’s Clem’ (16th C.) listed among the tenants near Hummelknowes in a bond of security signed at Hawick in 1569, hence clearly distinct from the proprietor Clane Crosar in Hammilknowis’. His name is given as ‘Clemme Crosar alias Cokkis Clemme’. His father’s nickname was thus probably ‘Cock’ (like John Wigholm in Liddesdale around 1500). His brothers John and ‘Rowy’ are also listed, and he was probably related to the other 6 Croziers.
also named in 1569. Also in 1569 it is recorded that the Lairds of Cessford and Buccleuch were sureties for ‘Cokkis, Clame Crossar and Rowy Crossar in Yairdsyde’ (i.e. Earlside). In 1574 he is recorded as ‘Clemme Crosar callit Cokkis Clemme in Yairlside’, listed first among men accused of crimes who Douglas of Cavers was fined for not removing from his lands; they were specifically meant to have ‘removit thame selffis, thair wyiffis, cornis and guidis outwith the Swyris’. His brothers John and ‘Rowy’ were again listed along with other Croziers residing in Earlside, Kirkton and Penchrise. Clement ‘Clement’s Clem’ (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His nickname suggests that his father was also Clem. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Clements. Clement ‘Neble’s Clemie’ (16th C.) indicted in 1584 for raiding with 100 others in the Middle Marches, stealing 300 oxen and 49 horses, ‘spoiling’ 30 ‘sheles’ and taking 20 prisoners. His name is given there as ‘nebles Clemen’. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584 (perhaps the same one), along with Elliots, Armstrongs and about 300 others, accused of stealing 500 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men. His brother ‘Rowie’ was among a large group of Elliots, Armstrongs, Croziers and others accused of rieving in 1590. He is recorded among Borderers in Monipennie’s list of the 1580s as ‘Nobles [or ‘Nebles’] Clemis Croser’. It is unclear if his father was nicknamed ‘Neble’ or ‘Noble’, or whether his nickname was ‘nebles’ (i.e. noseless). Clement ‘Martin’s Clem’ or ‘Martin’s Cleemie’ (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1590 of stealing horses from Middleton Hall in England in the previous year. He was named along with men associated with Elliots of Redheugh and others. Thomas Laidlaw of Haugh was also charged with resetting him, along with William Oliver of Lustruther and others. He is recorded as ‘Martin’s Cleemie’ in 1590 when he was among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott’s of Carrick; others listed include Elliots of the Hill, James Douglas of Earlside, Thomas Laidlaw of ‘the Hawghe’ and John Henderson of Plederleith. Along with his father Martin he was also accused of rieving from ‘Borne’ in Redesdale in 1590, along with the Elliots of the Hill and others. His name was also given in 1590 along John Elliot of Heuchhouse and Gib Foster of Foulshiels, who were accused of stealing livestock and a detailed list of items from a servant of Sir John Forster. He was further accused in 1590, along with other Croziers and Aircie Elliot of the Hill, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. He was further listed in 1590, along with Nixons, Nobles and Shiels, accused of stealing from the tenants of ‘Lynbrieggis’. Also in 1590 Thomas Laidlaw of Haugh was accused of having reset him (and William Oliver of Lustruther) in the previous year. He could be the Clement, listed along with his father Martin ‘late of Baxtoun lee’ among a group of Teviotdale men accused in 1590 of a raid on Woodburn. Perhaps the same Clement was accused of further raids in 1595. Clement of Burnhead (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with a group of Armstrongs accused by Ralph Anderson of ‘Davisherle’ of stealing oxen and ransoming an Anderson prisoner. He is recorded being ‘of Bornheadeis’, which is probably Burnhead in Liddesdale. Cock (16th C.) important member of the local Crozier family in the first half of the 1500s. His sons Clem, ‘Cock’, John, Lyle, Rowie and Thomas are all recorded about the 1540s to 1560s, some clearly in relation to Hummelknowes and other lands around the Slitrig valley. It is unclear whether ‘Cok’ or ‘Coke’ was a nickname or a short form of some forename. It is also possible that there was more than one man of that name at about the same time, since there is no direct proof that all these brothers were sons of the same man. Cock (16th C.) brother of John and presumably another son of ‘Cock’. He was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brother ‘Lyell Crosyer’ was also on the list, and other brothers may have included Clem, Rowie and Thomas. David (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He may have been related to James, who is listed after him. David (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was listed ‘apud templihal’, i.e. at Templehall. He was also recorded as ‘at the Tempilhall’ in 1498 when he pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, along with a large number of Croziers, Elliots, Armstrongs and others. It seems likely this was Templehall in Rulewater, but this is uncertain. Edmond (16th C.) recorded in 1544 when his son ‘Dyke’ (presumably Dick) was among local men who gave their support to King Henry VIII. Edward (15th C.) recorded as ‘Senior’ among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. This suggests that there was also a younger contemporary Edward. Edward (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Edwarde Croyser Martyne son’, with Martin perhaps being resident at Earlside. It is possible he was the same Edward whose son Sandy is also listed in 1544. George (15th C.) brother of Jack, was listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was probably related to other Croziers who were listed there. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant of Byrestead according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert is listed first, and then also Clement and Leon. Gilbert ‘Gib’ listed in 1544 as ‘brother son’ to John, among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. His brother Tom is also listed. It is unclear which brother of John was their father. He could be the Gib whose son Clement (and probably other son Willie) is also listed, although this seems likely to be other people of the same generations. Hugh (16th C.) either brother or son of Barth. He was listed in 1544, among local family members who gave their assurances to the English, his name appearing as ‘Hewe’. His nephew (or brother) Matthew was also listed. Ingram (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. There are 2 men of the same name listed: one right before William, James and Andrew; the other along with George, David, Quentin, Jack, John, Matthew and Lyle. Ingram (16th C.) recorded in 1544 when his son ‘Rane Cresser’ (probably Ringan, i.e. Ninian) was among the local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. It is unclear how he was related to other Croziers. James (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobi Crosare’ in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. James (15th C.) proposed as Archdeacon of Teviotdale on the resignation of William ‘Croyser’ in 1440. It is not known if the 2 men were related. It does not appear that he took up the appointment. James (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He may have been related to David, who is listed before him. He may be the James whose son William is also later on the list. James (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. He is listed as ‘Jacobi crosar turni’ (and separately from another James). It is possible that he resided at Turn near Stobs, or alternatively the designation was a nickname. James (15th C.) listed among men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name was given as ‘longi Jacobi crosar’, his nickname of ‘Long’ presumably to distinguish himself from other Jameses. James (16th C.) son of Ninian. At a Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale in 1537/8 he is named along with brothers Clement, John and Adam, swearing not to harm John Gledstains of that Ilk, or his friends or servants, with the Elliots of Redheugh as cautioners. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of the lands of Dawston. James (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Jame Crosyer Martyns brother’, with Martin perhaps being resident at Earlside. He may be the James whose son Lyle is also listed in 1544 and also the James whose son Rowie is listed. James ‘Jamie’ (16th C.) son of John, he was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brothers may have included Clement, Martin and John. He appears to have been grandson of ‘Cock’, and may have been the same as the later ‘Taylor’. James ‘Jamie the Taylor’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of the Hummelknowes area listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. He was probably related to the other 8 Croziers listed. His name is given as ‘Jame Crosar the tailyeour’, suggesting he may actually have been a tailor, rather than this being a nickname. James ‘White Lips’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 among defendants in cases brought by the English Wardens involving raids by men of Liddesdale. His name is given as ‘Whitlipps’ Jame Crosier’. James (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded being ‘in Hasindane’, which is presumably Hasseudean. James (17th C.) resident of Minto Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant in Toftholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William was also listed there and so probably closely related. James (b.1795/6) joiner in Newcastleton. He was listed as a wright in Newcastle in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 10 Doncaster Street. He married Jeanette Scott, who died in 1848, aged 53. In 1850 he secondly married Margaret Turnbull. His children included: William (1832/3–41); and Elizabeth (1832–89). In 1851 his step-daughter Margaret Blacklock (b.1836) was living with them. Jeffrey (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Swansdale in Liddesdale in 1541. His name is recorded as ‘Jaffray Crosar’. It is possible he was the Jeffrey whose sons Quentin and Willie and brother or (other son) Clem were among the Croziers who gave their support to England in 1544. John (15th C.) mentioned in 1493 as one of the accomplices that helped George Heiton of Gateshaw in stealing sheep from Yair. He may already have been a rebel at that time, but it is unclear how he might have been related to other Croziers. John (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name was given as ‘Jac crosar’. He is probably the ‘Jak’ whose brother George was also recorded in 1494/5. John (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 for a document dealing with the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Quentin is also listed, so probably a relative. Perhaps the same John was listed (separately from ‘Jack’) among men of Liddesdale in 1494/5. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Clement. They were accused of resetting English fugitives in Liddesdale. John (16th C.) mentioned in 1541 when his son Matthew was listed among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. His cousin Matthew Hunter was also listed. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) recorded in 1544, with a connection to ‘Cleerie’, which was near Adderstoneshiel. He could be the same as the tenant of Hummelknowes. He is probably the same as ‘John Crozier of Agerstoneshieldes’ who was the first Crozier listed among many local men swearing allegiance to Henry VIII. John (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘John Crossyer Thome Crossyer sone’, along with other Croziers of the Slitrig valley, although it is unclear who his father Thomas was, or where they resided. John (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 along with Thomas and 3 Elliots. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. It seems likely that he lived in the Slitrig valley. John (16th C.) brother of ‘Clemme’ and ‘Rowy’, listed among the tenants of Hummelknowes in a bond of security signed at Hawick in 1569. He was also listed along with his brothers Clam and Rowie (along with other Croziers) as tenants of William Douglas of Cavers at Earlside in 1574, when Douglas was fined for not having them removed. Since Clement was known as ‘Cockis Clemme’, then presumably their father’s nickname was ‘Cock’. This makes it likely he was the same as ‘Cockes John Crosyers’, who was listed as possessor of the lands of ‘Askar Knowe’ (probably Acrekowość) in 1547/8 when they were burned by the English (unless this was an earlier generation). He may be the same ‘John Crosyer’ whose name appears on the list of Border chiefs. Thomas Crossier of Liddesdale in 1541. His name is recorded as ‘Cokki Crosyer sone’ who was among Croziers who supported England in 1544; also listed were his brothers Lyle and ‘Coke’, sons Clement, Jamie, Martin and John, and ‘kynsman’ Matthew Hunter. He is probably also the John whose servants, Quentin Crossyer, Thomas Crossier and ‘Wille Redde’ are also listed in 1544, along with his nephews Gib and Tom Crozier. He must have thus been an important leader in the clan at that time. He may be the John who witnessed (along with a Bailie of Hawick and others) a bond for entering Elliots as prisoners with Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1546. He may be the same as ‘Cokkis John’ who appears on Monipennie’s c.1594 (but probably drawn up in the 1580s) list of Border chiefs. John (16th C.) son of John, he was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brothers may have included Clement, Jamie and Martin. John (16th C.) son of Barth, he was among the local men who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. He is presumably distinct from the other Johns listed in the same document. John ‘Adie’s John’ (16th C.) recorded in 1590 as ‘Eddies John’. Along with Martin’s Gib Elliot and Will Elliot of Heuchhouse, he was accused of stealing from William Henderson of ‘Fallofeeld’. Additionally in 1590 he and ‘Quentin’s Airchie’ were accused of stealing sheep from the Herons of Chipchase, as well as of stealing horses from the same place 6 months later, later also stealing cattle, and having stolen other horses 2 years before; he is there recorded as ‘Eddies John’ and ‘Adams John’. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls.
Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. It is unclear which Adam was his father. John ‘Kate’s Jock’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1574 among Croziers residing in Earlside. ‘Kate’s Adie’ was also listed and hence presumably his brother. They were among a list of men accused of being thieves who were to be removed from their lands. John (16th/17th C.) accused in 1590, along with Martin’s Clem, Archie and ‘Kate’s Adame’ Croser, as well as Airchill Elliot of the Hill, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. Probably the same John is on a list in 1590 of Ellists, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. Perhaps the same John is recorded in 1595 among Ellists, Nixons and others of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England. John of Staneshiel (17th C.) recorded in 1590 when he was accused of stealing livestock and goods from Englishman Nicholas Storie. Others listed include ‘Quentin’s Airchie’, his brother Hob and Adie ‘the Pleg’. John ‘the Friday Thief’ (d.bef. 1642) recorded in 1642 when his brother Will was listed among Borders thieves who were to be captured and tried. He was probably from somewhere around Liddesdale. John (17th C.) resident at ‘Julian’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Nether Greena in Castleton Parish in 1697. He was rebuked, together with Archibald and James Armstrong in Haughhead, for not observing the Sabbath. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Young in 1767 and their children included: Janet (b.1775), possibly an error for 1775; Jane (b.1768); Margaret (b.1770); and Robert (b.1773). His wife died in Hawick in 1778. John (18th C.) grooms at Midshiels in 1788, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Phaupknow’ in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was shepherd there on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. John (b.1774/5) from England, he was a shepherd in Castleton. In 1851 he is recorded at Leaugh and listed as ‘Formerly Shepherd’. His wife was Isabel. He could be the shepherd at Tweeddenhead listed among heads of households in 1835–41. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Kershope in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. John (b.1808/9) shepherd at Hartsgarth and Whithaugh Mill. He was listed as shepherd among heads of households in Castleton in 1840 and was at Hartsgarth in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was shepherd at Whithaugh Mill. His wife was Nancy (or Agnes) and their children included John, William, Christian (or Catherine), Isabella, Thomas, Robert, Janet, Walter, Elizabeth and James Armstrong. John (1822/3–63) draper in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was at about 4 North Hermitage Street. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a draper, and may also be the same John listed as a grocer and spirit dealer. He married Margaret Nichol, who died in 1910, aged 87. Their children included: Marion (1847/8–65); and Sibella (b.1850), who died in infancy. John (1861/2–1906) mason in Newcastleton. He married Annie Ashley Davenport, who died in 1935, aged 70. Their children included: Margaret (1893/4–1956); and Mary (1901–06). Leon (16th C.) tenant of Byrestead according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert is listed first, and then also Clement and Gilbert. Lyle (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Liell Crosar alias Schevill’ when he pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He was probably from somewhere around Liddesdale. He may be the same ‘Liell Crosar’ listed in 1510 among associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh receiving respite for their crimes; Adam is also listed, so probably a near relative. He may be the same Lyle recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Lyle (15th C.) brother of Adam, he is recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Another Lyle is listed separately. Lyle (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Lyell Crosyer James Crosser son’, with James perhaps being a brother of Martin of Earlside. Lyle (16th C.) brother of John and presumably another son of ‘Cock’. He was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brother ‘Coke Crosyer’ was also on the list, and other brothers may have included Clem, Rowie and Thomas. Lyle (17th C.) recorded among a 1642 list of fugitives as ‘Lyell Crosar’. His son (whose name is not transcribed) was also listed. He was probably from somewhere around Liddesdale, and the name suggests that he was descended from the earlier Lyle. Mark (16th C.) local Crozier, probably of the Slitrig valley. His sons Ade and Archie were listed in 1544 among members of the family giving their support to England. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1532 along with Clem (to whom he was surely related, Elliots and Foresters, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Martins. Martin (16th C.) tenant of Riccarton Cleuch, along with Patrick, as recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Probably the same Martin and Patrick Crozier were also tenants of the neighbouring lands of Riccarton (along with Roland and William Elliot). Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1544 as ‘Martyn Crosyer of Yarsaye’, when he was among Olivers, Nixons, Croziers and others who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Given that he was named along with Croziers of Adderstoneshiel and Stobs, it seems likely that his lands were Earlside, or ‘Yairlside’, as they were then known. He appears to have been an important leader of the clan, since his brothers Patrick and James, and sons Dandy, Hob and Edward were also named in 1544. Martin (16th C.) recorded as son of Willie when he was among family members who gave support to the English in 1544. It is unclear if this was Willie son of Jeffrey, or some other William. Martin (16th C.) listed among the local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name was given as ‘Martyn Crosseyer Wille Crossyers sone’, and he was presumably distinct from other Martins mentioned there. It is unclear which William might have been his father. Martin (16th C.) son of John, he was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brothers may have included Clement, Jamie and John. He appears to have been grandson of ‘Cock’. Martin (16th C.) listed as possessor of the lands of ‘Thornebogg’ on the Slitrig valley in 1547/8, when they were burned by the English. He was probably related to Clement, who was at Hummelknowes, and ‘Cockes John’, who was at Acreknowe. Perhaps the same man was recorded in 1574 as ‘Martene Crosar his broder in Hawik’, after Clem in Hummelknowes; this was in a list of men who had been ordered to be removed from local lands, these 2 men in particular being the reponsibility of James Gledstains of Cockley in 1547/8, when they were burned by the English. He was probably related to Clement, who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Matthew (15th C.) son of John. He was listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. The others listed were Armstrongs, Elliots, Nixons and others of Liddesdale. Matthew (16th C.) son of Barth. He was among local family members who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. Ninian (16th C.) probably a Crozier of the Slitrig valley or Liddesdale. At a Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale in 1537/8 his son James is named along with brothers Clement, John and Adam, swearing not to harm John Gledstains of that Ilk, or his friends or servants. He may be the same as the son of Ingram, or otherwise related to him. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) probably name for ‘Rane Crosser Engram Crossers sone’, listed in 1544 among many local family members who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He may be the Ninian ‘of Schawis’ listed on the bond of 1506 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he was to shake hands and ask forgiveness from Thomas Haitlie, brother of the Laird of Mellerstain. He signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he could not write himself. Ninian (18th/19th C.) shepherd and labourer at Kershope, on the English side. He is listed among heads of households in Castleton Parish in 1836–38. Patrick (16th C.) tenant listed after Martin in the lands of Riccarton and Riccarton Cleuch. They were probably father and son or brothers. He could be the ‘Patan Crosyer Martyns brother’ listed in 1544 among...

Scotsmen who gave their support to England. His son Quentin was also listed. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th C.) local family member who gave his assurances to the English in 1544. He was son of ‘Wille Crosyer’, although it is not clear where their lands were. His brothers (or possibly his father’s brothers, since the wording is ambiguous) Hob and Rowie, also signed the bond of allegiance. Philip (16th C.) recorded as ‘Philippo Crosar’ in 1541 on the rental roll of Liddesdale. He was tenant of Hudhouse. Quentin (15th C.) tenant in ‘hirdmanstoun’ listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He may have been from Hermiton. It is possible that Matthew ‘filli quintini’, recorded in 1494/5, was his son. Perhaps the same Quentin was listed as ‘Quyntin Crosar’ in 1497 when he was one of the Liddesdale witnesses for a precept of sasine for Robert Elliot of Redheugh; John was also listed, so probably a close relative. Quentin (16th C.) listed as ‘quintino crosar’ in 1550 when he was witness to a sasine for Douglas of Cavers, for the lands of Colifort. He may have been related to the earlier Quentin. It is possible he was the ‘Qwinten Crosyer Patte Crosyer sone’ listed in 1544 among men who gave their support to the English Crown. Quentin (16th C.) son of Jeffrey and brother of Willie. In 1544 he was among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Quentin (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘John Crossers servaunte’, among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Croziers. He could be the Quentin who was father of Archie, recorded in 1590 and Hob, recorded in 1595. Quentin (17th C.) resident at Mains in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Richard ‘Lang Dick’ (16th C.) listed among local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name is given as ‘Lange Dyke Crossier’ and his nickname was presumably to distinguish him from the other Dick who was listed. Richard ‘Dick’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Dyke Crossier Emond Crosiers son’ in 1544 when he was among a group of Croziers, Olivers, Nixons and Halls who gave their assurances of support to the English. His father was presumably Edmond. Robert (16th C.) tenant of Byrestead in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Also listed as tenants were Clement, Leon and Gilbert, some of whom may have been related. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Hobe Crossier Martyne son’, with Martin perhaps being resident at Earlsdie. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) local family member who gave his assurances to the English in 1544. He was son of ‘Wille Crosyer’, although it is not clear where their lands were. His brothers (or possibly his father’s brothers, since the wording is ambiguous) Pate and Rowie, also signed the bond of allegiance. Robert (16th C.) prisoner recorded in 1548 when a group of Liddesdale Elliots had a bond to hand him over to the Laird of Ferniehirst. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert ‘son o Cockston’ (16th C.) one of the 10 thieves captured in Hawick in 1567. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) son of John. He was listed in 1574 among Croziers and others who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Douglas of Cavers. His name appears as ‘Hob Crosar, sone to John Crosar’. He may be the same as one of the other Hobs. Robert ‘Hob of Ricarton’ (16th C.) listed among Border chief’s in Monipennie’s compilation published about 1594. He is the first of the ‘Crosers’, along with Martin, ‘Cokkis’ John and ‘Noble Clemeis’. He may thus have been the chief of the family at that time. He may be the Hob recorded in 1590 among a group of Elliots, Nixons and others accused of taking livestock and goods from Over Warden in England. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) son of Quentin. He was accused in 1590 of stealing livestock and goods from Englishman Nicholas Storie; others listed include his brother ‘Quentin’s Airchie’, John of Staneshiel and Adie ‘the Pleg’. He was also listed in 1595 among men of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England; he was listed there along with Will ‘Greathead’, to whom he may have been related. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) resident of Cleuchhead. He was listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew in Toftholm. In 1623 he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Robert (b.1716/7) workman in Hawick, one of the 6 representative Burgesses appointed to perambulate and define the boundaries of the Burgh’s land in 1767, during proceedings for the division of the Common. He married Margaret Bridges and their children included John (b.1741), Jean (b.1743) and Isobel (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were baker Robert Scott and merchant Charles Tudhope. Robert (b.1802/3) carrier in Newcastle.
Robert (b.1818/9) clogger in Newcastleton, son of mason William and Margaret. He appears to have been recorded as a clogger in Pigot’s 1837 directory (unless that was an older relative) and in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 25 South Hermitage Street. His brother Andrew also worked at a clogger, while other brothers William and Archibald were masons. He married Elizabeth Inglis, who died in 1908, aged 83. Their children included: William (1853/4–92); James (1854/5–1920); John (b.1857), who died in infancy; Adam (b.1859), who died in infancy; Margaret (1861/2–80); and Andrew (1866/7–1941). The family are buried in Ettleton. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Rowe Crosyer James sone’ in 1544 when he was among family members who gave their assurances to England. James may have been brother of Martin of Earlside, but there may well have been another contemporary James. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th C.) local family member who gave his assurances to the English in 1544. He was son of ‘Wille Crosyer’, although it is not clear where their lands were. His brothers (or possibly his father’s brothers, since the wording is ambiguous) Pate and Hob also signed the bond of allegiance. He could be the ‘Rowie’ whose son Thomas is also listed in 1544. Roland (16th C.) listed as ‘Rowy Crosar’ among the tenants of Hummelknowes in a 1569 bond of security signed in Hawick. His brothers Clem and John were also listed, and he was likely to be related to several of the others. His name is given as ‘Rowy’, probably a short form of Roland, but this is not certain. Their father’s nickname was probably ‘Cock’. Also in 1569 he is recorded as ‘Roway Crossar in Yairdsyde’ (i.e. Earlside), along with ‘Cock’s Clem’, when the Lairds of Cessford and Buccleuch were sureties for them. In 1574 he was listed along with his brothers Clem and John, among tenants of William Douglas of Cavers at Earlside, when Douglas was fined for not having them removed. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Crozier, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; there he was ‘Rowie Crosrer brother to ‘Nebles’ Clemye’. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Hartsgarth. In 1611 he was ‘Rowie Crosre in Harthskarthburnfute’ when failing to appear at court in Jedburgh; Roger Scott, Captain of Hermitage was fined for his non-appearance. In 1622 Robert Elliot of Redheugh acted as his cautioner at the Justice Court in Jedburgh, and this was continued in 1623. Thomas (16th C.) probably a Crozier of the Slitrig area. In 1544 his son John was among locals who gave their support to the English Crown. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as ‘Cokis Crosser son’ in 1544 when he was among local family members who gave their assurances to England. His father was presumably the same ‘Cock’ who was father of Clem, John and Rowie. Thomas (16th C.) tenant of ‘Cowardous’ (probably near Saughtree) in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Thome Crosser John Crossers servaunte’, among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Croziers. Thomas ‘Tom’ listed in 1544 as ‘brother son’ to John, among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. His brother Gib is also listed. It is unclear which brother of John was their father. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as Gib Crozier’s son (or possibly his brother, since the wording is ambiguous), among the local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His brother (or possibly his father’s brother) Clement is also listed. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) recorded in 1544 as son of ‘Rowie’ when he was among local men who gave their support to King Henry VIII. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 along with John and 3 Elliots. They were to be presented by John Gledstaines of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. It seems likely that he lived in the Slitrig valley. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in ‘Hilhous’ in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. He was probably from Hillhouse in Liddesdale. Thomas (b.1788/9) dyker of Branxholme Park who was elder in Allars Kirk. In one famous incident he kept the key for the church, preventing a former elder (who had become a revivalist minister) from giving the fill-in sevice while the regular minister was out of town, to the amusement of many of the congregation. In 1841 he was listed as a grocer at Martinhouse. In 1851 he was a dyker living at Toshdawhill. His wife was Elizabeth (from Yarrow) and their children included Isabella. Janet, whose death is recorded at ‘Meerhouse’ in 1820 was surely related to him. William (d.c.1461) cleric associated with Cavers Parish from about 1418. There was a man of the same name who was Professor of Philosophy at St. Andrews in 1410 and another who was Canon.
of Dunkeld in 1424 (and probably the same man). He was proposed as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1418, and took up the position after the resignation of John de Scheves. He was restored in 1425 after being mistakenly deprived. In 1441 he was deprived for adherence to the council of Basel, and condemned for treason in the papal courts of Florence. However, he was restored again in the late 1440s. By 1455 he had lost all his local possessions, and remained overseas until his death.

William (15th C.) recorded among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice- aire held in 1494/5. In fact 2 men of this name are separately listed, but with no other designation. One is listed after Andrew, son of Quentin and the other is listed between Ingram and James. A third was son of James. William (15th C.) son of James, listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Wille Crossyer Jefferays sone’, although it was unclear who his father Jeffrey was. He may be the William whose son Martin was also listed in 1544 (although that may be another of the Willies). William ‘Will’ (16th C.) local man whose sons Pate, Hob and Rowie gave their assurances to the English in 1544. It is unclear who he is, or where he lived, but other men listed were in the Slitrig valley. Note that the phrase ‘his brother’ is also ambiguous, and so some of these men may have been his brother, rather than sons. William of Riccarton (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He is recorded there as ‘Will Crosre of Ryckerton’. William ‘Ill-willed Will’ (16th C.) recorded in 1590 as ‘Will Crosre, called ill wild Will, belonginge to Martin Elliott’. Along with ‘Quentin’s Archie’ and Martin’s son Sim Elliot, he was accused of stealing 8 cows from ‘Medupp’. He was presumably a servant of Martin Elliot of Braidlie. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Elliots, Nixons and others of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England. He is recorded as ‘alias greathead’ in accusations for 2 raids, one along with Hob, son to Quentin. He may be the William along with Archie who was accused of raiding into England in 1590. He may also be the man whose name is transcribed as ‘Wille Croyme’ in 1590 in a complaint against Nixons, Elliots and others for a raid in 1588. William ‘Will’ (17th C.) brother of John ‘called the Fryday theefe’. In 1642 he is on a long list of Borders ‘notorious criminals, theves and ressetters of thift’ who were to be captured and tried. William (17th C.) resident at Toftholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James was also listed there and so probably closely related. William (17th/18th C.) weaver at Clarlaw, where he was recorded in 1711 and 1712. In 1708 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Turnbull. Their children (all but the first baptised in Hawick) included: Marion (b.1711), baptised in Wilton; James (b.1712); Bessie (b.1715); included Margaret (b.1718) and Janet (b.1721). The witnesses in 1712 were ‘Mr’ William Crawford (newly appointed minister of Wilton) and Robert Huntly and in 1721 were Walter Scott (‘uncle to Crumhaugh’) and shoemaker Robert Elliot. He could be the same man as the weaver at Appletreehall, whose daughter Agnes was baptised in Wilton in 1708. William (b.1713), baptised in Cavers, could also be his child. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1786 he was living at Wolfsleuchhead. He married Katherine Little and their children included: Thomas (b.1786); William (b.1790); and Helen (b.1792). William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Langburnshiels, who later became a country trader. In 1814 he married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Smith (farmer at Hartshaugh Mill) and Mary Scott, ‘the Flooer o Rankleburn’. They had several children, including William, who was landlord of the Tower Hotel in Hawick. In later years he and his wife lived at Harwood Lodge. He may have been known as ‘the Clocker’. William (b.c.1780) mason in Newcastleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was one of the builders of the Holm Brig. In 1841 he was living at about 25 South Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Elliot (1769/70{1745), who was living at about Wolfcleuchhead. He married Katharine Little and their children included: Thomas (b.1786); William (b.1790); and Helen (b.1792). William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Langburnshiels, who later became a country trader. In 1814 he married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Smith (farmer at Hartshaugh Mill) and Mary Scott, ‘the Flooer o Rankleburn’. They had several children, including William, who was landlord of the Tower Hotel in Hawick. In later years he and his wife lived at Harwood Lodge. He may have been known as ‘the Clocker’. William (b.c.1780) mason in Newcastleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was one of the builders of the Holm Brig. In 1841 he was living at about 25 South Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Elliot (1769/70–1745), who was born at Deeburn. Their children included: John (b.1804); William (b.1806), also a mason; Mary (b.1810); James (b.1812), who probably died young; Robert, clogger; Archibald, mason; and Andrew, clogger. William (b.1791/2) born in Castleton Parish. In 1851 and 1861 he was a cattle dealer living at Harwood Lodge in Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Margaret and their children included Thomas and Margaret. He could be the William, resident of New Harwood in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. William (b.c.1795) grocer recorded at Martin’s House in 1841. William (b.1807/8) mason in Newcastleton, son of the earlier mason William. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His brother Robert was a clogger, and in 1851 he was living with him and 2 other brothers on South Hermitage Street. William (c.1825–77) son of shepherd William, he was long time hostler of the Tower Hotel and also driver of the mail coach. There is one story told of how, during a snowstorm, he steadfastly arrived with the coach in Hawick nearly 6 hours late. He was the last driver of the coach south from Hawick in 1862. In 1873 and 1875 he was one of the Stewards at the Common Riding Races. He was advised to take a trip to Australia to help with his failing health, but died on the outward journey. He was buried at sea, and a memorial was erected in the Wellogate cemetery. A portrait of him exists (there are many early spelling variants, including ‘Corser’, ‘Crossar’, ‘Crosare’, ‘Croser’, ‘Crosier’, ‘Crossar’, ‘Crosser’, ‘Crossier’, ‘Crosseyer’, ‘Crosyer’, ‘Croyser’, ‘Crozar’, ‘Crozer’ and incorrectly as ‘Groser’).

Crumbirche

Cruikshank (crook-shawngk) n. Arthur (1932–2011) palaeontologist, who latterly lived in Hawick. Born in Kenya, son of Scottish expatriates, he was educated in Scotland and spent holidays in Coldstream as a youth. He studied zoology at Edinburgh University, followed by a Ph.D. at Cambridge, returning to Edinburgh as lecturer, then to Napier College, before moving in 1967 to the University of Witwatersrand in South Africa. He became a specialist in the Permian and Triassic periods, and particularly dicynodonts (herbivorous land vertebrates). He returned to Scotland in 1978, taking up a number of temporary posts, working for museums and the Open University. Living for a while at Minto and then Jedburgh, he helped catalogue ancient buildings in the Borders, and catalogued and rearranged geological and natural history specimens in Hawick Museum. After his wife was appointed as a librarian in Rugby, he worked with Leicestershire Museums, focussing on plesiosaurs, and he travelled extensively to compare the British species with those found elsewhere. He married Enid, daughter of Hawick solicitor and Denholm farmer Andrew Haddon, and their children are Peter, Susan and David. They moved to Denholm in 2006 and then to Hawick. David (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He had a daughter Helen in 1691. Phoebe (d.1930) widow of Rev. Charles Alexander Davidson of St. Andrews and Lhanbryde Church. She died in Hawick at the age of 93 (also written ‘Crookshanks’).

cruik (krik, krook) v., n., arch. bend, crook, hook – ‘A cruikett ma hoach an clappeet masel doon’[ECS], ‘There’s a feck o’ braw bit nuiks Where the silvery Teviot cruiks’[TK] (see also crook).

Cruik see Crook

cruikit see crookit

cruisie (kroo-zee) n., arch. an iron lamp with a rush wick, consisting of two bowls, one above the other, suspended from a bar – ‘...In ilka hoose a cruisie licht, in ilka heart a prayer’[JYH], ‘...’Twas Maggie’s cruieze, flaiming bright, Its beams across the nuirland throwin’[JT] (there are examples in the Museum; also spelled ‘cruzie’).

cruit (kri’) n., arch. a decrepit or misshapen person, undersized child or animal, runt.

cruivle (kri-vul) n., arch. a sour-tempered person (also written ‘cruivlle’); pronounced with a deep vowel containing elements of i and å.

Crumbirche (krum-birch) n. former lands in the upper Teviot valley, mentioned as part of the boundary of Ringwood, when it was given to the monks of Melrose in the 1160s. The precise location is unclear, but it seems likely this the same as Cromrig (the name suggests an origin as ‘crooked birch’).
Crumbletoun Croft

Crumbletoun Croft (kru-mul-toon-kroft) n. former farmstead near Hawick, the name being used after the farmhouse itself was gone. It is mentioned by James Wilson in 1850 and J.J. Vernon in 1900, by which time the location was already uncertain (also written ‘Crumbletown Croft’).

Crumelknowes (kru-mul-nowz) n. house at the top of Crumhaughhill. The name was invented for the house when it was built in 1954/5 for Provost James Henderson. To the south-east of the farm are some irregular hollows that may be the result of quarrying.

Crumhaugh (kru-uch) n. flat land by the Teviot below Crumhaugh Hill, more or less corresponding to the modern Parkdaill. It is possible that the lands here were the ‘Crumesethe’ that were recorded in 1165 as part of the possessions of the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. The lands were given by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to his son and heir William in 1494; at that time valued at 40 shillings ‘of old extent’. William Turnbull was recorded there in 1502. In 1511 the lands are listed among those held by the Baron ‘in property’, this continuing in the lists recorded in documents of 1559 and 1572. In 1627 it was described as paying ‘20 bolls aits; estimat to 8 bolls victual in stok, 2 bolls teynd’. The tower and land here was once the domain of the Scotts of Crumhaugh, who were descended from the Scott of Goldielands (although the precise succession of the generations in the 16th and 17th centuries is quite uncertain). The lands of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh were valued at £1116 13s 4d in 1678. This branch of the Scotts died out in 1809. In former times the main road into Hawick was over the Longbaulk, while Crumhaugh (where one of the few Teviot river fords was located) had a Toll Bar with a turnstile to prevent the passage of horsemen, sometimes referred to as ‘the Auld Tollbar’. John Martin is listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694 (origin probably Old Welsh for ‘crooked, winding’ or Old English for ‘low lying land in the bend of the river’; the name first appears as ‘Crumhawch’ in 1494 and is ‘Crumhauch’ in 1502, 1511 and 1514, ‘Crumhawcht’ in 1511/2, ‘Crumhauch’ in 1572, ‘Cruhauch’ in 1594, ‘Crumhauach’ in 1615, ‘Crummuck’ in 1733 and ‘Croumach’ in 1737; it is marked ‘Crummhauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; there is an unrelated place of the same name in Lanarkshire).

the Crumhaugh Aisle (thu-kru-uch-I-ul) n. former name for the part of the pre-1763 plantation at Crumhaugh, being situated opposite Parkdaill, immediately to the left of the A7 when leaving Hawick. The knoll there contains the remains of a medieval farmstead and older long house.

Crumhaugh Road

Crumhaugh Road (kru-uch-rodl) n. street developed in 1933 and named for leading to Crumhaugh Hill (also sometimes with a single ‘h’, ‘Crumhaughill’). passing for the house when it was built in 1954/5 for Provost James Henderson. To the south-east of the farm are some irregular hollows that may be the result of quarrying.

Crumhaughhmill Road (kru-mul-hil-rød) n. street developed in 1933 and named for leading to Crumhaugh Hill (also sometimes with a single ‘h’, ‘Crumhaughhill’).

Crumhawch (kru-uch) n. flat land by the Teviot below Crumhaugh Hill, more or less corresponding to the modern Parkdaill. It is possible that the lands here were the ‘Crumesethe’ that were recorded in 1165 as part of the possessions of the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. The lands were given by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to his son and heir William in 1494; at that time valued at 40 shillings ‘of old extent’. William Turnbull was recorded there in 1502. St. Mary’s Kirk below the steeple. This was the burial place of the Scotts of Crumhaugh and Goldielands, and was used as an additional seating area in the church – ‘Walter Purdom to collect in ye Bailies Loft, Crumhaugh Isle, Parkhill Loft, and porch’ [PR1718].

Crumhaughhill see Crumhaugh Hill

Crumhaugh Hill (kru-uch-hil) n. hill, farm and surrounding area, being the heights along Longbaulk Road (the ‘Lumback’), named after the haugh at its northern base. The highest point of the hill was once the ‘Watch Knowe’, site of the warning beacon in former warring days, and where sometimes a beacon was lit for special celebrations. The farm is probably the ‘towne in Tevedali caulyd Cromokhilles’, which was burned by an English raiding party led by Robert Forster in 1542. By 1707 it was valued along with Blackcleugh at £266 13s 4d. By the late 18th century it was part of the Buccleuch estates. James Oliver, ironmonger in Hawick was tenant there. The tenant of the farm in 1797 was Walter Scott, and he was recorded having 6 horses at that time. James Hogg was tenant in the mid-19th century. It is still valued (with Blackcleugh) at £266 13s 4d in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch (but mistranscribed in 1788 as ‘Crumhaugh-hott’). A ‘little wheel’ from the farm, once used to spin lint, was presented to the Museum by Mrs. Hogg in 1863. Some flint and stone artefacts from the area were donated to the Royal Museum of Scotland by Mrs. I. Turnbull in 1948/9. In the 1950s and 60s it had a TV receiving mast for a local TV relay company run by Frank and Alec Lawrence. The farm was the location for the Curds and Cream repast (i.e. the Friday morning ‘Hut’) in 1860 – ‘Or spellbound stand on Crumhaugh Hill And view the silvery Teviot’ [JC].

Crumhaughhill Road (kru-uch-hil-rød) n. street developed in 1933 and named for leading to Crumhaugh Hill (also sometimes with a single ‘h’, ‘Crumhaughhill’).

Crumhaugh Hoose (kru-uch-hoos) n. sheltered housing built in the early 1990s, taking some of the residents from Drumlanrig Hospital.

Crumhaugh Plantin (kru-uch-plawn‘in) n. plantation at Crumhaugh, being situated opposite Parkdaill, immediately to the left of the A7 when leaving Hawick. The knoll there contains the remains of a medieval farmstead and older long house.

Crumhaugh Road (kru-uch-rød) n. street in the West End built around 1930, and named after Crumhaugh. This is confusing both because it isn’t near Crumhaugh and because it can be confused with Crumhaughhill Road.

Crumhaugh Toor (kru:n-u:k-toor) n. tower possibly once in the Crumhaugh area, overlooking Parkdail, marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map as being in Crumhaugh Plantation, but of which there is no sign. The site of this low hill was excavated by the Archæological Society during 1962-65 and found to contain evidence of a 16th or 17th century farmstead built on the site of a roughly 14th century long house, with no evidence for any stronger building.

Culbertson

Culbertson (kul-bert-sin) n. Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. Thomas (b.1859) born in Newcastle-on-Tyne, son of Robert (who was from Morebattle and whose family had been blacksmiths) and Anne Riddell (whose family were Border shepherds). Brought up in Oxnam, at age 14 he became the pupil teacher there, moving after 5 years to the Edinburgh Training College, and becoming qualified as a teacher in 1881. He worked at Denholm School for about 4 years, returned to further education at the University of Edinburgh and in 1886 was appointed schoolmaster at Hobkir. He was elected a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Culgate

Scotland in 1901. He also served as Inspector of Poor and Registrar for Hobkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Nichol, who was from Denholm. They had 2 sons and 1 daughter (also written ‘Culbertson’, this could be simply a variant of Cuthbertson).

Culgate (kul-gat) n. lands in Liddesdale written as ‘the tuef shilling land of Culgatis’ in 1586. They were said to be occupied by Martin Elliot of Braidlie, and then leased by Francis, Earl of Bothwell, to ‘Wille Elliot, sone to vmqshile Willie Elliot, callit the Tod’. It is unclear where these lands were, but one possibility is that they are the same as Kilgarth.

Culling (ku-ling) n. William (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname could be a transcription error for some more familiar name.

culyie (kul-ye) v., poet. to fondle, cherish – ‘...thay culyie wi’ thair tung’ [HSR].

cum (cum) v., arch. to come to a person’s attention – ‘Tyll all and syndry off qwam the knawlege thir presentis letterys ma to cum, gretyng ...’ [SB1431], ‘Till all and sindry qhais knaulage thir present lettris sal to cum ...’ [SB1470].

Cumbria (kum-bree-a) n. county in the extreme north-west of England, over the Border from Dumfriesshore and Roxburghshire. The county was formed in 1974 from Cumberland and parts of neighbouring counties. It contains Carlisle, the Lake District and the western end of Hadrian’s Wall. The name comes from the Cumbrian language once spoken there, essentially ancient Welsh, which was also spoken in Hawick and into the Lothians. The name is etymologically related to the word ‘Cymru’, the modern Welsh name for Wales. The area corresponded with the English West Marches, and incursions over the Border into the Scottish West and Middle Marches were common until into the 17th century. The Cumbrian dialect shares many similarities with Border Scots.

Cumbric (kum-brik) n. form of the p-Celtic language spoken in southern Scotland and northern England, essentially the same as what is also called Northumbrian. Its distinction from Old Welsh is based on very limited evidence, mostly just place names. It probably differentiated after Wales broke off into a separate kingdom in the 7th century, and was likely to have been displaced by Anglo-Saxon in the 11th century, although perhaps with pockets surviving longer.

Cumisbodinn (kumz-þo-din) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll. The location, pronunciation and spellings are all uncertain.

cummie-wull (ku-mee-wul) n., arch. a ‘come-o’-will’, an illegitimate child, an animal that appears unbidden, a plant that sprouts spontaneously (also come-at-wull).

Cumming (ku-min, ki-min) n. Agnes ‘Nannie’ (c.1790–c.1851) daughter of Jean, and sister of Katie, she was the last of the family to run the hardware shop on the Howegate (around No. 4). She never married, but was a popular shopkeeper, and in her later years was sought out for stories of old Hawick. There is an amusing story of a horse getting into the shop and her sister panicking outside, shouting to her ‘If you’re leevin’ speak, and if you’re dead shoot your head out at the window!’ She also used to tell of the day that James Know ran past her shop-door to raise the ‘False Alarm’ in Hawick in 1804. She is listed on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory and in the 1841 census. By 1851 she was listed as a ‘Retired Hardware Merchant’. She is still listed on the Howegate in Slater’s 1852 directory, but may have been deceased by then. Her portrait, by Adam Brown, is in the Museum.

Catherine ‘Katie’ (18th/19th C.) daughter of Jean and sister of Nannie. W.N. Kennedy describes her as ‘an old spinster in the Howgate, remarkable for her unbending Calvanism, sound theology, good needles, snuff taking and nasal obstructions, who judged everything under the sun as she did her needles, by their eyes and points’. She was an Anti-Burgher. She did not approve of anything she deemed theologically unorthodox, stating about a child baptised in its parents house on account of its illness, ‘point o’ fack, an’ in the eye o’ the gospel an’ the law, that bairn’s nather mair nor less than a sooking Pagan’ and referred to a non-Anti-Burgher publication as being ‘fon o’ inspeepedity’. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Scott in 1715 and their children included: Margaret (b.1717); Robert (b.1722); Robert (again, b.1724); and Andrew (b.1726). Francis (b.c.1760) agricultural labourer, living at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish in 1841. His wife was probably Helen, and they also had a daughter Helen. James (18th C.) married Helen Elliot in Ashkirk Parish in 1744. His name is written ‘Cumming’. It is unclear how he might be related to other local Cummings. James (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Janet Fairbairn (probably in 1757) and their children included: Nelly (b.1758); and James (b.1759). James (b.1788/9) from Bedrule Parish, in 1861 he was an agricultural labourer living at Clarilaw with his niece Helen Rutherford. Jean nee Stevenson (1762–c.1825) son of Robert Stevenson and Agnes ‘Red’. She married Robert, but must have long survived him, because she was known as ‘Widow Cumming’ for many years. She was proprietor of a shop on the Howegate in the late 1700s and early 1800s, which sold almost anything edible or useful. She was described by William Norman Kennedy in an early Transactions and was also the subject of a song by ‘Soap’ Ballantyne (which unfortunately does not survive) in the early years of the 19th century. She was an early member of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. In later years she used an ear-horn to help her hearing, and this is preserved in the Museum. Her sister Betty and her daughters Agnes (‘Nannie’) and Catherine (‘Katie’) were all known as eccentricities. She is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as ‘Jane Cummings, smallware dealer, Howgate’, and her place is marked ‘Cumming’ on Wood’s centrics. She is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and Catherine (‘Katie’) were all known as eccentricities. She is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as ‘Jane Cummings, smallware dealer, Howgate’, and her place is marked ‘Cumming’ on Wood’s 1824 map. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Elspeth Elliot. Their children included: Janet (b.1689), who probably married William Hutton and had children in the 1720s. John (c.1800–bef. 1841) weaver living on the High Street in 1841. His wife was Mary and their children included Janet, Margaret, Mary, William and Elizabeth. In 1851 his widow was living at ‘Facing Teviot’, probably meaning the back house of 11 High Street. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet ‘Dunlape’ in 1706. Their children included Elspeth (b.1708), who probably married John Brown in 1727. Robert (b.c.1760) possibly son of Walter, he was born in Hawick. In 1788 in Hawick Parish he married Jane (b.1762), daughter of Robert Stevenson and Agnes ‘Red’. Their children included: Agnes (b.1788); Robert (b.1790); and Catherine (b.1793). He is probably the merchant whose death is recorded in 1794. His wife was ‘the Widow Cumming’, who became known as an eccentric who kept a shop on the Howegate. He is probably the merchant Robert whose son Robert died in Hawick in 1811. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Mary, who was from Hobkirk, daughter of Alexander Lillico and Isabel Douglas. Their children included: Mary Marion (b.1818), who married Alexander Smith; and Helen Catherine (b.1820). Robert (c.1805–67) born in Ashkirk, probably son of Robert. He worked as a woolsorter and lived on O’Connell Street. In 1827, in Wilton Parish, he married Isabella, daughter of Walter Laing and Janet Brown. Their children were: Robert (b.1828), who married Helen Dodd; Walter (b.1829), who married Jane, then Isabella Deans, and finally Mina Nelson, and died in Ontario; Janet (b.1831), who married Ormiston Hardie; Margaret (b.1838), who died young; N.H.; Margaret (again, b.1843), who married Alexander Greig and died in Ontario; and Elizabeth (b.1845), who died in Ontario. In 1857 he emigrated with his wife (and some of his family), and they both died in Ontario, Canada. Robert (1828–85) from Hawick, he was son of Robert and Isabel Laing. He worked as a skinner, being listed at about 77 High Street in 1851. In 1861 he was working at Cumledge Mill in Duns. In 1848 he married Helen Lennox Dodd, and she died in 1914, aged 85. Their children were: James Laidlaw and Alexander Greig, who both died young; Isabella (1849–1918), who died in Hawick; Janet (1851–1918), also died in Hawick; Robert (1853–1929), joiner, who married Christina Goodfellow and moved to Sheffield; John Dodd (1855–1913); Margaret (b.1857); Walter (1860–1937); Edward Dodd (1862–86); Elizabeth (1864–89); Francis Bell (1869–1940), a draper’s traveller; and Eleanor Lennox (b.1873), who married Thomas Henderson Brotherstone. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1853–1929) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Helen Dodd. He moved to Sheffield to work as a joiner. He married Christina Goodfellow in Wilton in 1878 and they had 7 children (also spelled and pronounced ‘Kimming’: other alternative forms include ‘Cumming’, ‘Cummin’ and ‘Cummine’; it is possible that this name is a variant of ‘Common’ and ‘Comyn’).

Cummings Hill (ku-minz-hil) n. small hill between the Rule and Jed valleys, situated to the north of Belling Hill and roughly between Westerhouses and Mervinslaw. It reaches a height of 302 m and has an enclosure and quarry on its north-eastern side.

cundy (kun-dee) n., arch. a covered drain or gutter at the side of the street, particularly one for receiving rain water, a conduit – ‘ma bool’s doon the cundy’, ‘...Doon the cundies o’ The Loan’ [DH], a rabbit hole – ‘Jim had seen him sit down at one end of a cundy, while he put the dog in at the other’ [RM] (also written ‘cundie’).
cundy-hole

kun-dee-hōl n., arch. a hole through a wall for sheep - ‘I mind whan neighbour Hewie’s sheep, Through Wattie’s cundy-holes did creep And eat the corn’ [JR].

Cunningham (ku-ning-hum) n. Sir Adam of Woodhall (d.1639) Commissary of Dumfriesshire and one of the Senators of the College of Justice. He purchased Arkelton from Robert Elliot of Fahnwe in 1623. In 1633 he also had a charter for the lands of Meikledale and Meikledale-hope. However, there was a case before the Court of Session in 1727, claiming that his original purchase was merely a ‘wadset’ and hence that the Earl of Nithsdale (Maxwell) retained a right to reversion (i.e. repurchase the property). Adam (17th C.) son of Sir Adam. He sold Meikledale and Meikledale-hope to to Walter Scott of Braidhaugh in 1643. In 1651 he sold Arkelton to Walter Scott of Harwood. Sir Alexander (d.1488) son of Sir Robert. In 1452 he helped James II defeat the Douglases and was thereby had his lands erected into the Barony of Kilmaurs and became Lord Kilmaurs in 1460. In 1462 he granted lands in Edinburgh to Sir John Cockburn. He confirmed a land transfer at Hassendeanbank in 1464 and in 1464/5 a record shows him as Baron of the eastern part of Hassendean, protesting to the King that the land should be formally pledged to him. However, royal letters of the 1470s charge him to yield up lands to George Cunningham, which had formerly belonged to his father, William of Belton. He later became the 1st Earl of Glencarn. He married Margaret Hepburn (daughter of the Master of Hailes) and was succeeded by his son Robert. Alexander 5th Earl of Glencarn (d.1574) son of William and Katherine Borthwick (daughter of the 2nd Lord Borthwick, who still held lands in the Borthwick valley). He succeeded as Earl in 1548 and was confirmed in the Barony of Hassendean in 1551, as heir to his grandfather Cuthbert. In 1556 he granted the lands of Hassendeanbank and Capelrig to Sir Walter Ker and his wife Isabel. In 1557 he granted lands in Kilmaurs, the sasine listing several other Cunninghams. He wrote a poem called ‘The Hermit of Allareit or Loretto, near Musselburgh’, which expressed his anti-Catholic sentiments. He was among the prominent men of the nation who signed the document declaring James as Monarch (in place of Mary) in 1567. He is also said to have been responsible for defacing the Chapel Royal of Holyrood when Mary Queen of Scots was taken to Loch Leven in 1567. He firstly married Johanna, daughter of James Hamilton, Earl of Arran, and secondly Janet, daughter of John Cunningham of Caprington. He was succeeded by his son William. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Leaheads in 1747. He married Janet Hood in Wilton in 1742 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1746); Janet (b.1748); and Jean (b.1756). The witnesses in 1746 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. Andrew (b.1785/6) from Mertoun in Berwickshire, he was farmer at Jerusalem near Lilliesleaf. His wife was Isabella and their children included Janet and Isabella. Charles Alexander (19th C.) son of James, from whom he inherited the Abbotrule estate in 1891. He was recorded as owner of part of Abbotrule in the Land Tax Rolls from about the end of the 19th century. He attended Harrow and entered the Army in 1899, joining the Leicestershire Regiment, but fell into ill-health in Egypt and retired in only 1904. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married a daughter of John M. Barwick of Lowhall. His children were: Sybil, who married her cousin Mr. Church and settled in Northern England; and Violet, who rode with the Jedforest hounds. Cuthbert (d.1540/1) 2nd Lord Kilmaurs and 3rd Earl of Glencarn, he was son of Robert. In 1492 he had a sasine for the lands of Hassendeanbank and Brieryyards. He may be the Laird of Hassendeanbank fined for not being present at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. He led his clan in an attack on Irvine in 1499 and in 1503 had the title Earl of Glencarn restored by James IV. He was granted the lands and half Barony of Hassendean in 1510/11. However, in 1511 he forfeited the lands of Briery Yards, ‘by reason of having alienated the greater part of them’. The lands of ‘Lang Hassindean’ (also referred to as ‘Eister Hassindene’) were confirmed to Elizabeth Cunningham by him in 1514. In 1512 he gave a charter of half the lands of Hassendeanbank to Thomas Elphinstone and his wife Janet Turnbull. He was present at the Battle of Flodden and is said to have managed to escape from the battlefield. He was wounded in 1526 trying to rescue James V from the Douglases at the Battle of Linlithgow. In 1540 he was superior of the lands of Hutton, which he assigned to the Homes of Wedderburn. In 1492 he married Marion (or Marjory or Mary), daughter of Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus. Their children included: William, who became 4th Lord; and Alexander. Elizabeth (15th C.) daughter and heir of George of Belton. She married John, Lord Hay of Yester in 1469. In 1480/1 she claimed lands in Hassendean from Alexander, Lord Kilmaurs, superior of the half Barony of Hassendean. She had a ‘revert’ for Appletreethall in 1482 and was finally given the lands of ‘Ester Langhassindene’ in 1483 in a sasine of William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburgh. Alexander, Lord Home gained her lands at Appletreethall in 1494. Her husband died in 1508 and in 1511 David Scott ‘of Gallowlaw’ claimed a right to her lands in Hassendean, which were confirmed to her in 1514. The sasine mentions ‘and tower thereof’, suggesting that these lands contained Hassendean Tower. The ‘precept of sasine’ of 1514 refers to the lands of ‘Ester Hassindene’, which are probably the same, and confirmed by the Baron Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn, who must have been a distant relative. She was mother of Sir John Hay, 2nd Lord of Yester, who died at Flodden. Francis of North Synton (d.c.1691) recorded on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. In 1691 his sister Maria was served as his heir to the lands of North Synton. George of Belton (d.bef. 1482) son of William of Belton. Royal letters from the 1470s charge Alexander Cunningham, Lord Kilmaurs to give him the lands in the eastern half of Hassendean, which had been held by his father. He also held the lands of Appletreethall. His daughter and heiress Elizabeth married John, Lord Hay of Yester. George (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He also worked as a manager at a woollen factory, perhaps Nixon’s. In 1795 he married Betty Cook from Melrose, with Robert Heymers as cautioner. She died in 1840, around the same time as a cholera outbreak in Hawick. Their children included: Beatrice (b.1796), who married William Broadswood; Anne (b.1799), who married Robert Kennedy; Margaret (b.1800), who married Thomas Turnbull; Helen (b.1808), married John Lunn; Janet (b.1810), married Andrew Byers; Andrew (b.1812); William (b.1814); and Catherine Nixon (b.1815), married William Scott. George (b.1842) born at Lynnwood Mill on the Slitrig. He became a clerk with the railway at Jedburgh in 1857, being appointed Superintendent of the Western District of the North British Railway in 1884, retiring in 1907. Sir James (13th/14th C.) son of Gilbert and nephew of Robert (whose head was put on top of Lochmaben Castle by the English in 1299). In 1316 he was granted the lands of Hassendean by King Robert I, presumably in reward for support at Bannockburn etc. This was confirmed in a charter of 1321. He held Hassendean in feudal and military tenure, for the payment of £11 at Whitsunday and Martinmas. James (14th/15th C.) holder of the lands of Hassendeanbank, which he resigned to Sir William of Kilmaurs. A charter of 1409 describes him as son and heir of the deceased ‘Christal Cunningham’, relative of Sir William. James (c.1552–1631) 7th Earl of Glencairn, son of William, grandson of Alexander. The family owned extensive lands and titles in Renfrewshire, Dumbartonshire, Ayrshire, Stirlingshire and Dumfriesshire, as well as the half Barony of Hassendean. He is recorded in 1588 and 1591 requesting that individuals produce charters to lands they owned within Hassendean, suggesting perhaps that he was a tough Baron. He was confirmed in the Barony in 1599, as heir to his grandfather Alexander (who had died about 15 years earlier). In 1601 he issued a warning to Alexander, Lord Home, Robert, Lord Roxburgh, Walter Scott ‘of Edislaw’ and others to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hassendean. And in 1603 he issued a ‘summons of removing’ to a large number of Scotts, plus some Douglases, Eliotts and Turnbulls who are described as ‘pretended tenants’; he must have been unsuccessful in this attempt. He is recorded in 1604 still being the superior of the eastern half barony of Hassendean, and he is confirmed to his rights in Hassendean in 1610. In 1610 he granted some lands in the Barony of Kilmaurs. He resigned Hassendean to the King in 1615 in favour of his son William, who succeeded in 1618 and a ‘bond of relief’ for these lands is recorded in 1622. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Colin Campbell of Glenorchy and was succeeded by his son William. James (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, with a value of £2 14s 11d. In 1811 it was owned by Lord Minto and valued at £1 16s 7d. James W.B. (1846–91) son of John and Eleanor Brodie, he came from the Hyndhope family. He was tenant farmer at Grahamslaw. He was a cousin of David Henderson, from whom he inherited the Abbotrule estate in 1887. He had the main house internally renovated, and the lands improved in various ways. However, he was in the house for only about a year before he died. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He married Julia Dinsdale, daughter of John Marshall Barwick of Lowhall, Yeadon. The Abbotrule estate was inherited by his son Charles Alexander.
He also had 2 daughters. He was buried at Southdean. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Howpasley in 1711 when his son Alexander was baptised. Keith local police sergeant. He played for Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club for 35 years, being on the first XI in the years 1974–2005. Maria (17th/18th C.) sister of Francis of North Synton, she was also known as Margaret. In 1691 she was served heir to her brother’s 50-shilling land of North Synton. In the same year she married Gideon Elliot, surgeon pharmacist and Burgess of Edinburgh, who was 3rd son of Thomas Elliot, Laird of Bellowie and tenant of Borthwickshiel. Neil (15th C.) son of William, who granted him lands at ‘Langhas-seandein’ in 1457. It is unclear how he was related to the other family members who held land in that parish. Rev. Patrick (1636–c.1706) probably eldest son of Robert, the Hawick minister and Margaret Shaw. He is recorded as residing in Hawick after he graduated from the University of Edinburgh in 1666. In 1669 he was a Burgess in Hawick and stated to the Council that thereafter he would no longer sit in the Baron’s Court (this presumably being considered to conflict with his interests as a Burgess). He is mentioned in the court case following the disturbances at St. Jude’s Fair in Hawick in 1673, when there were disputes between the Baron’s tenants and agents and the townspeople; the court case mentions ‘in special occasion of some debates and differences between them and Mr Patrick Cunningham, vassal to the Earl’. He is probably the Patrick (named explicitly as ‘Mr’) who was fined for reproachful language against the Bailies in 1676, ‘saying that in spite of them, and they were hanged, they should not point him upon their decreet, and that he had been £1000 out of their way already, and would be another, and would make them stand where they should tremble’. He was additionally fined that year ‘for deforning the officers with ane called’, i.e. a soldier. In 1677 James Chisholme was fined by the Hawick Bailies for moving the march-stones between their properties. In 1678 his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £126 13s 4d; the precise location of these lands is unclear, but by 90 years later they are recorded being separated into parts owned by George Oliver at Burnflat, as well as parts owned by Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick, by John Scott (at Allars) and by Walter Scott. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh, becoming minister at Lochrutton in 1684 and being presented to Kirkton in late 1686 and installed there the following year. He remained in Kirkton until his death, and appears to have been one of the few local ministers not to have been ‘outed’ during the Revolution of 1689. However, whether he carried on as minister continuously is unclear. In 1684 he is described as ‘Mr Patrick Cunningham burgess in Hawick’ when he sold ‘Cramptlands Croft’ (in the East Mains of Hawick) to Alexander Hislop. In 1692 he paid the feu duty on the 4 acres of land in Hawick that had been feued to his father by the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1694 ‘Mr Patrick Cunningham for an kiln’ is recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls for the west-side of Hawick Parish. It was stated in 1767 that lands he had once possessed were then partly in the hands of Bailie Turnbull; they were still referred to as ‘Mr Patrick Cunningham’s Lands in Hawick’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when 2 parts were owned by Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick and valued jointly at £47 13s 4d; Walter Scott owned another part, valued at £28 1s, and the part called ‘Allers Garden’ was owned by John Scott and valued at £10 19s. He married Marion Turnbull, with their sons, baptised in Hawick, being: Robert (b.1669), who became minister of Wilton and later Hawick; Thomas (b.1671), who probably died young; John (b.1680), who became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1727; and William (b.1682). The witnesses to the 1671 baptism were ‘Mr’ George Scott and ‘Mr’ Archibald Gledstains, and in 1680 were Robert Burn and William Laing as witnesses. Rev. Patrick (18th C.) probably related to one of the local ministers. In 1742 he was described as Chaplain to Col. Stewart’s Regiment in service in Holland, when, along with ex-Bailies John Scott and Thomas Turnbull, he sold the lands of East Mains of Hawick to the Duke of Buccleuch. This is probably related to lands connected with Rev. Robert in 1649 (hence he was likely to have been an ancestor). In 1763 he is still recorded in documents relating to teinds on his lands in Hawick, by which time he was Chaplain to Col. Villegas’s regiment in Holland. Probably the same ‘Mr Patrick’ was recorded as a heritor of Hawick Parish in 1725, since the earlier Rev. Patrick died about 20 years before that. He inherited the lands of his forebears in Hawick and that he is the ‘Mr. Patrick’ whose lands were still called after him in the early 19th century. Sir Robert of Kilmours (d.c.1450) son of Sir William. In 1413 he was granted the lands of Kilmours, ‘Lambrachton’, Kilbride, ‘Skelmorele’ and ‘Polqwharne’ in Ayrshire, Redehall in Edinburgh, ‘Ranfarule’ in Renfrew and Hassendean in Roxburghshire. His brothers Thomas, Alexander and John are also mentioned, as well as their cousins Sir Humphrey and Archibald. In 1422 he is recorded as superior of lands in Larkshire. He married Anne Montgomery and was succeeded by his son Alexander, Earl of Glencairn. Another son, Archibald, is recorded as witness to a document for Alexander in 1452. Rev. Robert (d.1656) graduating from Glasgow University in 1608, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Haddington in 1617 and was presented to Hawick Parish by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in April 1625. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He was the minister who first recorded the need for a school in Hawick in 1627 and signed the National Covenant at Hawick in 1638. He was a member of the Assembly in 1638 and the Commission in 1647. In 1633 he was owed £266 13s 4d for his stipend from the deceased Earl of Buccleuch, and £14 8s for the communion. A document of 1649 from Francis, Earl of Buccleuch records teinds of lands in Hawick given to him. He is recorded in the Land Tax Rolls paying £20 for ‘the crofts of land’ in Hawick Parish in 1643, as well as being recorded as one of the owners of part of West Mains and paying an additional £66 13s 4d for other lands in Hawick. In 1692 his son Patrick paid the feu duty on the 4 acres feued to him by the Earl of Buccleuch. He married Margaret Shaw and their children were: Patrick (b.1636), minister of Kirkton; Catherine (b.1635); Thomas (b.1637); Margaret (b.1639); James (b.1640); Alexander (b.1643); Anna (b.1644), who may have died in 1662 and been buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh; and Francis (b.1646), who is recorded becoming an apprentic in Edinburgh in 1663. The witnesses to the 1640 baptism were James, Earl of Queensberry and Rev. Alexander Reid, minister of Ashkirk (whose wife was also a Shaw). His widow discharged payment to Sir William Scott of Harden for building and repairing the manse in 1665. Rev. Robert (d.c.1690) minister of Ashkirk. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1642 and was admitted to Ashkirk Parish in 1649. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He was ousted from Ashkirk in 1662 for opposition to Episcopacy, and probably forced to leave the limits of the Presbytery of Selkirk. Nevertheless, he was ‘indulged by the Privy Council’ (i.e. reinstated) in 1679, although deprived again in 1685 (and must have overlapped for a while with Archibald Inglis). In 1678 he is recorded as owner of North Synton, valued at £600. However, he survived past the Revolution and became Presbyterian minister again in 1689 for about another year (he was certainly dead by July of 1691). He married Elizabeth Scott in 1654 and she died in 1661 (it is unclear which branch of the Scotts she came from). Their only surviving daughter was Mary, who married Gideon Elliot, surgeon in Edinburgh. However, Margaret (b.1657), William (b.1659), Margaret (again, b.1660) and Francis (b.1661), also baptised in Ashkirk Parish, were also his children. It is interesting that there are 3 separate local ministers of the same name who lived in the same century, with no clear indication that this one was related to the others (although probably the Wilton and Hawick minister was grandson of the Hawick one). Rev. Robert (c.1668–1722) probably son of Patrick, minister at Kirkton, and hence grandson of the previous Rev. Robert of Hawick. He may be the Robert ‘student’ who witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick in 1682. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1689 and was licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1693. He became minister of Wilton in 1694 (having also received a call to Selkirk), becoming the first minister after the Revolution, and filling a vacancy of over 5 years. He had to deal with several matters of discipline early on, but soon became a popular minister. He joined Alexander Orrock (plus Robert Bell of Cavers and possibly Robert Scott of Roberton) in a protest against an Act of the Synod in 1705 (or possibly 1703) relating to the government of the Church. In 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, his lands there were valued at more than £80; this was probably the croft of land granted to his grandfather by the Earl of Buccleuch. In the 1718 survey of the properties of the Duchess of Buccleuch he is recorded as ‘Mr Robart Killinggame’, who owned 2 acres, 1 rood and 1 perch within the East Mains of Hawick (but the precise location is not described). He was called to Hawick Parish in late 1711 and moved across the Teviot in 1712, despite efforts of the Wilton Parishioners to keep him, and debates at the Presbytery for several months. This included an initial vote against the call to Hawick, which was appealed by Gideon Scott of Falnash, the Duchess of Buccleuch’s representative; there was also an objection by the Hawick Bailies and others that he could not be heard in the west-end. of the Kirk. He appears to have been more diligent than his predecessor in exacting fines for various transgressions. He acted to suppress 'irregular marriages' and non-observance of the Sabbath in any form and also increased the eldership from 8 to 19. He is the first Hawick poet of which there is authentic record, writing the poem 'Ode to Hawick' in 1710; it is also known as 'Lines written on the situation of the burgh and town of Hawick'. Originally in Latin, the poem was translated to English by Town Clerk Walter Gladstains. In 1714 his servants Robert Henderson and Andrew Turnbull witnessed a baptism. He was often in ill-health in later years, and so helped by an assistant, Charles Telfer, who would eventually succeed him. In 1721 he went to Cornwall for his health, but died a year later. He married Marjory Ker of Sunderland Hall, and their children included: Robert (b.1704); Jean (b.1707), who married bookseller Arthur Armstrong; Alexander (b.1713); and Janet, who married Henry Erskine, minister of Roberton.

William (b.1703), Marion (b.1706), Elizabeth (b.1708) and Marjorie (b.1710), baptised in Wilton Parish, were probably also his children (but may not have survived). It may also be that Patrick, who is recorded in around the 1720s as owner of some of the same family lands in Hawick, could have been another son. He is buried in St. Mary's churchyard. Robert (19th/20th C.) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles in the early 1900s. He lived at Branzholme, but owned the farm of Menslaws. He was earlier manager of the Earl of Home's estates in Jedforest. He also served on Roxburghshire County Council. He had one son and several daughters.

Sir William of Kilmours (d.bef. 1415) cousin (distant possibly) of Robert Stewart, Duke of Albany, who was Governor of Scotland. He was son of William and Margaret Danielston. He was Sheriff of Ayrshire. Among other holdings, he was superior of the half barony of Hassendean, as confirmed by Robert III in 1399. He witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. In 1409 he confirmed lands at Hassendeanbank to John, son of Adam Turnbull. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Danielston of that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Sir Robert of Kilmuars. Other sons (named in the 1413 charter to Sir Robert) were Thomas, Alexander and John. He may have been the Sir William whose daughter Margaret married Fergus Macdowell of Malkerstoun. William (15th C.) described as 'Laird of Beltoun' in a charter of 1457 where he gave some lands in Hassendean to his son Neil. His son and heir George was one of the witnesses. It is unclear how he was related to the Cunninghams of Kilmours, who held the eastern half Barony of Hassendean. His brother was Thomas (possibly of Wemyss). William (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. He is listed there as Laird of the feu lands of Kilmours, and was fined for failing to appear to 'give suit' for his lands of Hassendeanbank. It is possible that he was the same as William, son of Cuthbert, but it seems more likely he was from an earlier generation, perhaps son of Alexander. William (15th/16th C.) Parson of Hawick, witness to the 1519/20 marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and James Gladstains. He is listed as 'Master Wilzaime Cvinghaim, person of Hawyk' and 'Sir Johanne Hardy, chaplane' is listed as well. He clearly had a masters degree and was the main clergyman at that time, presumably replacing Alexander Newton, who is recorded as Vicar in 1514. Sir William 5th Earl of Glencarn (d.c.1548) son of Cuthbert. In 1525, while still Master of Glencarn, he was part of a group (including Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) who had remission for a breach of peace and crime committed by them in Edinburgh, upon condition that they submit to punishment by the King, and help in 'repressing of murmurs among the people and among strangers': on the back of this document is an obligation to them for 'the slauchtir of Duchemen, etc.' In 1527/8 (when still Master of Glencarn) he was one of the men listed as caution for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme during his exile to France. He succeeded his father as Earl of Glencarn in 1540; this included being Baron of the half lands of Hassendean. In 1519 (before he succeeded) he gave a 'precept of clare constat' for Hassendeanbank to William Elphinstone, and in 1543 had the lands resigned to him by Walter Ker of Cessford, to be regranted in 1543 to Walter and his wife Isabel. He was taken prisoner at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542 and was said to have been involved in the assassination of Cardinal Bethune in 1544. He was succeeded by his son Alexander after only a few years as Earl. Another son was Robert, recorded as a witness in 1540. William (c.1575–1631) 8th Earl of Glencarn, son of James. He was confirmed in the half Barony of Hassendean in 1618. However, he appears to have sold the Barony in 1622 to James Scott from Leith. He married Janet, daughter of Mark Kerr, Earl of Lothian and was succeeded by his son William, 9th Earl. Other children included Robert (Usher to King Charles II, who married Anne Scott of Scotstarvit), Elizabeth (who married Sir Ludovic Stewart of Minto), Margaret, Jean and Marion. William (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigenhead who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is listed as owner of 4 hearths along with John Haliburton, but it is unclear who they were or why they were listed together. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘notar’ in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for John Little, tailor in Hawick (the spelling varies as ‘Cunnygham’, ‘Cuninghaum’, ‘Cunninghame’, ‘Cunningame’, ‘Cunningham’, ‘Cunyngham’, ‘Kurkhaugh’, ‘Carboch’ etc.).

Curfew (kur-few) n. the bells of St. Mary’s, Wilton and the Town Hall used to ring a nightly curfew, celebrated in James Jamieson’s poem ‘The Aicht O’Clock Bell’. The ringing of the 8 o’clock curfew bell was certainly an ancient tradition and may have originated in Norman times. In the 18th century the public houses were supposed to close on the ringing of the 10 o’clock bell. Wilton Church ended the tradition by the first years of the 20th century, but the tradition continues at St. Mary’s – ‘...When Hawick he pass’d, had curfew rung’ [SWS], ‘There’s the old Kirk of St. Mary’s that still peals the curfew hour, And has seen the Slitrig raging, with majestic, awful power’ [WFC].

Curle (ku-rul) n. Dr. Alexander Ormiston (1866–1955) son of Alexander, whose family held lands around Melrose. He went to Cambridge University. Like his older brother James, he was trained in the law, but became well known as an archaeologist who excavated extensively around Scotland in the early 20th. He made spectacular discoveries at Traprain Law, Newstead and elsewhere. He is the only person to have held positions at the 3 main Scottish historical institutions. He was Secretary of the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland, Director of the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland and Director of the Royal Scottish Museum. He led the important investigation of the Hawick Mote in 1911, confirming its Norman origin, as well as excavations at Ruberslaw. In 1908 he wrote an article for the Scottish Historical Review describing the 1729 rental book of the factor of Wells House. In 1898 he married Katharine Wray, 2nd daughter if George Tancred. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Trow Mill, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. His surname is recorded as ‘Currie’. James (1862–1944) eldest son of James and brother of Alexander. He owned several pieces of land around Melrose, Gattonside, Darnick and Newstead (the family home at Priorwood was later turned into a Youth Hostel). He was a Melrose solicitor who was a self-taught archaeologist. In the years 1905–10 he led an excavation of Trumontium, raising money through the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland.

curlin (the Hawick Archæological Society gave £10). This was an important and influential study, published as ‘A Roman Frontier Post and its People. The Fort of Newstead in the Parish of Melrose’ (1911). His notebooks were discovered recently and made available on the internet. He was on the first Roxburghshire County Council and was a member of the Jedforest Club. Richard (17th C.) one of the tenants in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. His name was given as ‘Ritchart Curles’ and he was listed along with John, who was probably his son or brother. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Redford and their children included Janet (b.1689). Thomas (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls.

curlin (kur-lin) n. game similar to bowls on ice, sometimes called the ‘roarin game’. It was formerly played in Hawick at Hilliesland, on the Coble Pool, at Laidlaw’s Cauld and at Loch Park. A pond was opened near St. Leonard’s in 1866 and a new one at Crowbyres in 1890. A pond at Borthwickbrae Heights was used by residents of the Borthwick, where the game was extremely popular in the 19th century. There were other local clubs based at Branxholme, Rulewater, Hassendean and Minto. The Hawick Curling Club was established in 1803, with patronage by several prominent local gentlemen, including Rev. Dr. Young and Provost Milligan. A minute of 1812, when there were 13 official members, mainly discusses the process of betting on the outcome of various short games; in 1826 members of the club were engaged in a wager over whether Dovemount Well was higher than Hassendean Pond! The game died out locally before about the time of WWI. There are some examples of old local curling stones in the Museum. One stone used in Hawick was called ‘the Whaup’, since its handle curled { `the Toon Clerk’. The pond had a sluice gate at one end that would open automatically when the water level got too high, emptying into Wullie-struther. There was an earlier curling pond at Loch Park and another in the hills behind the Miller’s Knowes.

Curlin Pond Plantin (kur-lin-pond-plawn’) n. plantation to the south of the road after Greenbank, on Borthwickbrae Heights. The former curling pond is situation within the woods there (marked clearly on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

curlit (kur-lee’, -ll’) pp. curled – ‘The pert little eskis they curlit their tails, And danced a myrthsome reele’ [JTe].

curry-doddy (kur-lee-do-dee) n., arch. any of various plants having a rounded flower head – { `...Scabious, of which the larger (Knautia arvensis) is familiarly known as Curly Dod"ies’ [JAHM].

Curly Hogg (kur-lee-hög) n. nickname in the 20th century.

curmudd (kur-mud) adj., arch. snug, comfortable – ‘Sittin curmudd ahint, an geetin a hurl for nochts, twae-threi bleitheike fallihs...smokeet their claey peipes’ [ECS].

curney see curny

curny (kur-nee) adj. curranty, containing currants – ‘she made a grand curny banni’, ‘There’s a sugar bool an taffy, tipenny pies, curney rants { `she made a grand curny banni’, ‘There’s a faisable mael oot o pei-soop...wui twae rake o curny-dumpleen owre-an-abuin’ [ECS], ‘Donce as a curny dumplin’ Sat The Moat’ [DH] (also spelled ‘curney’).

curny banni (kur-nee-baw-nil) n. a rich curranty cake with a pastry covering – ‘A sheive o’ curnie-banna’ [ECS] (cf. Selkirk banni).

curran (ku-rin) n., poet. a currant – ‘The tossilit curran weips hir teirs of blude, Nae primroisis will starre the wanhope wud...’ [DH].

Currer (ku-rur) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1742. Andrew (18th C.) tenant in Whitrigs. He married Betty Riddell and their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Margaret (b.1781); Andrew (b.1783); Walter (b.1784); Thomas (b.1786); Janet (b.1788); George (b.1790); Margaret (again, b.1794); Robert (b.1798); and John (b.1800). George (16th/17th C.) tenant at Hartwoodburn. In 1627 he forcibly ejected from the lands that he leased from the Earl of Home, this by a band led by Walter Scott of Whitaugh, who claimed some right to the lands. He must have been ancestor of the later George. George (17th C.) tenant at Hartwoodmyres, recorded in 1692 when his son Thomas witnessed a document. In 1695 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Selkirkshire when he was ‘off Hartwoodburn’. Probably the same George paid the land tax on Lindean in Selkirk Parish in 1678. It was probably his son George who had a ‘special retour’ to his father in 1713. George (18th C.) tenant at Hartwoodburn. His daughter Margaret married Walter Elliot of Ormiston in Roberton in 1735. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Lockie (or Turner, or perhaps both) and his children included: William (b.1701); Isobel (b.1706); Isobel (again, b.1722); and Agnes (b.1724). James (18th C.) eldest son of William and Anna Elliot. He was tenant at Stanedge when recorded in a discharge of money to William Elliot of Harwood in 1725. It is possible he was the James whose children included: Henry (b.1727), baptised in Hobkirk; James (b.1728), baptised in Hobkirk; Robert (b.1731), baptised in Bedrule; Margaret (b.1733), baptised in Bedrule; Helen (b.1735), baptised in Bedrule, who married Hawick shoemaker John Oliver; and Elizabeth (b.1737). He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1766 for shoemaker John Oliver and Helen Currier (who would therefore be his daughter). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Mary Hogg. Their children included: Ann (b.1767) and Isabel (b.1767). John (d.1776) skinner in Hawick. He paid tax for 11 windows in Hawick in 1748. He married Isabel, daughter of merchant John Cavers. Their children included: Thomas (b.1742); Mary (b.1743); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1743 were workman Robert Boyd and flesher Robert Tudhope and in 1745 were surgeon Robert Scott and flesher Robert Tudhope. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Billhope in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He is probably the John from Castleton who in 1788 was tenant in Ormiston. The will of his wife Margaret was recorded in 1806. Although it is unclear if this is the Ormiston near Hawick, he may be related to the later Currers of Ormiston. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Chisholme in 1710 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Hyndhope in the Ettrick valley. In 1692 he married Anna, daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood. Robert and Thomas, son of George were witnesses, so presumably close relatives. Their son was James, recorded as tenant at Stanedge in a discharge of 1723. He may be the same as ‘William Curror in Halydean’ who witnessed a bond for Elliot of Harwood in 1693 and ‘William Curror in Newhouse’ who witnessed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Harwood in 1700 (also written ‘Curror’, ‘Curreur’, etc.; formerly mixed up with the name Currie). Currie (ku-re) n. Adam (d.1840) resident of Stintyknowe. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was described in 1827 as a ‘hosier, manufacture of lambs wool hose, shirts, drawers, dresses’. He was listed as a manufacturer among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and as a hosier when he died. He married Elizabeth Borthwick (1794–1836). Their children included: William (b.1813), who married Anne Lugton; Martha (b.1814); Robert (b.1815), hosiery manufacturer; David (b.1820/1); Adam (b.c.1825); Margaret (b.1827/8); Eliza (b.1830/1); Jeannie (b.1833/4); and Lawrence (b.1836). He died at Stintyknowe, where several of his family are recorded living in 1841. Andrew (18th C.) tenant farmer of Hallrule. He is recorded as ‘Andrew Curror in Harule’ in 1758, among parishioners in Hobkirk Parish who were asked to provide broom for thatching the roof of the kirk. He was also ordered to buy ‘42 ells of harden at Selkirk Fair at 2d per ell, with 500 tacks’, presumably also for the church ceiling. The family were originally of Brownmoor (Dumfriesshire) and later of Howden. His son George married Elizabeth Sibbald, Jean married Andrew Blaikie in 1768 and Margaret married Robert Oliver of Ancrum in 1763. A story is told of how he always used to gather his family and labourers together for a meal after the day’s work, when he would pray for the devil to be chained to protect the crops for the season, until some of the youthful diners sneaked into the loft and rattled a chain during this prayer! He may be the ‘Andrew Currier, town of Rule’ who subscribed to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). Archibald (17th C.) tenant in Abbotrule in 1685 when his wife Margaret Ker’s will was recorded. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hallrule, according to the Horse Tax Rolls in 1786 and 1789-97. Note that his name appears to be written ‘Curre’ on some of these records. He is recorded in 1797 as owner of no less than 17 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs in 1797. George (19th C.) millwright in Lilliesleaf in 1852. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. John (16th/17th C.) resident of Todshawhaugh who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands. He was named along with Walter Scott of Todshawhaugh and James Donaldson in Cavers. John (17th C.) recorded as an ‘indweller’ at Weens when he was witness to a Rulewater sasine in 1631. His son Thomas was also a witness. John (b.1838/9) partner in a small hosiery firm with his older brother Robert. In 1851 he was lodging at the Commercial Inn and listed as a commercial traveller. Mark (1845–1916) tweed merchant, probably son of John Bunyan and Janet Wright. As a monitor he assisted with the school run by William Murray, which became St. Mary’s School. His firm was Currie, Lee & Gawn. He had a large double cottage built for him at Loch Park in about 1879. He married Janet, daughter of farmer James Henderson; she may be the Mrs. Curie who presented the ‘Chinese Shelter’ to the Town. Richard (17th C.) recorded as ‘Richer Currill in Mervingsislaw’ when he witnessed a document for William Elliot of Harwood and Appotside in 1657. Robert (b.1815/6) born in Wilton, son of Adam and Elizabeth Borthwick, he was a hosier man manufacturer. He was listed as a stocking-maker at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. In 1841 he was listed as a hosier on Wilton Damside. His partnership with his brother John was listed on Allars Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living at about 16 Buccleuch Street, and listed as a manufacturer of woollen hosiery, employing 26 men. His wife was Jane and their children included Eliza, Sarah and Robert. Lt.-Col. Thomas (d.1815) probably son of farmer Andrew. He served at the Battle of the Nile under Sir Thomas Trowbridge of the Culloden where he was Captain. He was later promoted and after retiring he lived at Town-o-Rule farmhouse. He is buried in Hobkirk cemetery. Thomas (b.1791/2) millwright in Lilliesleaf. In 1851 he was on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Agnes and their children included William, Jessie, Jane, George, Thomas, Helen, Robert and John. Walter (18th C.) resident at Craik. His son George was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762. He is probably the Walter ‘Corrie’ who acted as sponsor for the baptism of a child of Robert Aitchison in Roberton in 1771. He may have been father of the later Walter. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Craik in 1785 and Broadlee Burnfoot in 1787. He was married in 1784, although his wife’s name is not recorded. His children included Walter (b.1785) and James (b.1787). William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His name appears to be written ‘Currey’. William of Linthill (d.1858) from Lanark, he purchased Linthill in 1822 from William Riddell. He married Jane Falconer. Their children included: Charles Russell (1825–55), the eldest son, who died while on duty with the Edinburgh County Militia; Jane Falconer (b.1826), who married John Cowan; George Falconer (b.1827), who died young; Mary (b.1829), who married Walter Riddell-Carre, as his second wife; William (b.1831); and Helen. William of Linthill (1831–89) son of William. Either he or his father was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire, as well as a Tax Commissioner for the county. He lived at Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish, and was recorded there in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was recorded at Linthill in a directory of 1868. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 he was owner of lands in Chapel, Porteous Croft and other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, including those formerly owned by William Manuel and Thomas and John Telfer. He custodier (kus-tō-dee-ur) n., arch. a custodian – ‘...of the said charters, and freedom of Hawick, are delivered over by the widow of the deceased custodier to the newly appointed custodier thereof’ [BR1652].

Cuthbert (kuth-bur’) n. David ‘Cannie Davie’ (1855–1900) born in Leslie, said to be a simpleton he loitered around in Hawick, Selkirk and Galashiels at the end of the 19th century. He disliked work and was often drunk, dying in Dysart Poorhouse. J.C. Goodfellow wrote a poem about the injustice of the Hawick Magistrate sentencing him to 21 days in Jethart Jail for begging, when a wife-beater was fined only a few shillings – ‘To puir Cannie Davie, O Hawick be kind, To work or to want he was never inclined’ [RM].
Cuthbertson

Cuthbertson (kuth-burt-sin) n. Alexander ‘Alec’ or ‘Cubby’ local joiner, known for his craftsmanship. He presented a ceremonial lectern to the Council in the early 2000s and the ornamental chair for use at the Colour Bussing in 2014. He also gifted several hand-crafted items to the 1514 Club and Burns Club and created the Cornets’ Board by Drumlanrig’s Tower. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk, who in 1642 confessed to the Session there that he and George Allan had shared part of a quart of ale after sunset, purchased from Isobel Cranston. John (17th C.) leased half of the farm of Todshawhaugh in 1672 and 1673. Perhaps the same John witnessed a baptism for John Scott and Janet Jackson in Hawick in 1673. Robert (17th C.) schoolmaster and reader in Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as schoolmaster there in deeds of 1618 and 1629, the first teacher on record. He was also recorded as ‘reader of Ashkirk’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. William Fergusson, F.S.A., ‘W.F.’ (1885–1947) librarian of Hawick Public Library. He wrote poetry, much collected into ‘Just Ebb and Flow’ (1930) and ‘Teries All, Poems, Hawick and the Borders’ (1946). He also wrote the children’s books ‘Teri on the prowl, more adventures of the black cat’ (1944), ‘Teri on the prow, more adventures of the black cat’ (1946), and ‘Naughty Coyote’ (1947) which he illustrated.

The Cutted Syke (thu-ku’eed-sik) n. name given in the 1767 description of the Common for the upper part of Fenwick Burn, near Whitchester’s farm. It formed part of the old boundary of the Common – ‘...and then north by hillocks along Whitchester March to the cutted Syke’ [C&L1767] (it is unclear if this is intended as a name, or simply a description).

cutter (ku’ur) n. someone who cuts material in a textile mill, specifically the person who cuts the neck shape before the collar is attached.

cut-throwe (kut-throw) n., arch. a short-cut – ‘He’d a bonny cut-throwe on Mansfield Brig, And away, like a blue-tailed fly ...’ [DH].

cuttikens (ku-tee-kinz) n., pl., arch. gaiters.

Cuttin the Sod (ku’in-thu-söd) n. ceremony performed by the Cornet at the outermost part of the town Common, where the ‘Three Lairdships’ meet, at the end of the Bull Field beyond what was once called Winnington Moss. This is on the Friday of the Common Riding, during the Riding of the Marches itself, and before proceeding to the Moor. In the past there would have been many sods turned over to mark different parts of the Common. Now there is a ceremonial sod turned over in the corner of a field, at the southern extremity of the Common, a nearby plaque marking the spot. A ceremonial implement, ‘the Flachter Spade’, is used for the task and the 25-year Cornet observes the event, giving a short speech afterwards. A ceremony of cutting a sod at the western extremity of the Common was inaugurated in 1905, but was soon abandoned. The ceremony may also symbolically replace the calling of the Burgess Roll, which used to take place at the Caa Knowe, further south (and no longer within the Town’s Common) – ‘Then ride the marches; cut the sod, An’ dip the flag in Teviot water’ [IJ], ‘...Mindin’ o’ the Cornet whae’d lang syne cut oor sods’ [MB].

cuttit (ku’ee’, kut-i’, -tee’) adj., pp. cut – ‘...an’ thyae that be curset o’ him sall be cutt aff’ [HSR], ‘For he hs brokin the yettes o’ brass, an’ cut the bars o’ ern asinder’ [HSR], arch. abrupt, sharp in reply – ‘A cuttit craitur’ [GW], ‘...all hennis, cockis, and caponnies, be cuttit and schorne in the wing, and all young foulis be cuttit in the foir toe ...’ [BR1655].

Cuttin Sike (ku’ee’-sik) n. small stream that rises on Fanna Hill, joins Lang Sike and then becomes part of Singdean Burn.

cutty (ku’ee, ku-tee) adj., arch. stumpy, short, particular in the terms ‘cutty-pipe’ and ‘cutty-spun’ – ‘O how ye did revive our hope, Whene’er ye fill’d the cutty stoup!’ [JR].

cutty stool (ku’ee-stool) n. a short backless seat often with 3 legs, where those guilty of immoral behaviour would be castigated by the church elders – ‘Had the Chancellor of the Exchequer belonged to the united associate church, he ought to have taken a public rebuke on the cutty stool ...’ [RW], ‘...how little has been accomplished either for virtue or for religion, by the disgusting penance of the ‘cutty stool’ ...’ [RW], ‘A weel filled pipe, a cutty stool, A gude peat fire loving bonny’ [DA] (also spelled ‘cuttie stool’).

Dacre (dā-kur) n. Sir Christopher (c.1470–c.1540) 3rd son of Humphrey, 1st Lord Dacre. He is sometimes referred to as 'Cristell', 'Kers-tiale' and variants. He was Sheriff of Cumbria and later Northumberland and Deputy Warden of the East Marches. He was brother of Lord Thomas, who led part of the English force that ravaged the Teviot valley in late 1513. His force effectively arrived as reinforcement from Belling Hill when Lord Dacre's attachment was surprised by the Scots at the Sclaterford. He also assisted his nephew, William on the Border. He was part of the force that assailed Ferniehirst in 1523. In 1534 the pair were accused of using his Scottish contacts to further his family's English feuds. They were imprisoned in the Tower of London, but later acquitted, and he was pardoned in 1534. He is last recorded in 1540, and it is not known if he married or had offspring. Philip (15th/16th C.) brother of Lord Thomas. He was Captain of Norham Castle. He led part of the detachment that laid waste to the Border in 1513, having a force of 300 men, which burned Rucastle, 'with all the cornes in the same and thereabouts, and wan two towres in it, and burnt both roffe and flores'. He was captured by the Scots at Flodden. Sir Thomas (d.1525) 2nd Lord of Gillesland. English nobleman and Hawick arch-villain, from an old Cumberland family, with their seat at Gilsland. He was appointed Warden of the East and Middle Marches in 1512, and was reputedly cruel and fierce in this role. His main residence was then at Harbottle Castle, and he was also Bailiff of Hexham. He fought at Flodden, where he commanded the reserve forces and supposedly found the body of James IV. He led several bands of raiders into Scotland, to ransack towers, pillage towns and burn crops, himself writing that 'there was never so mekill myschefe, robbry, spoiling, and vengeance in Scotland than there is nowe, without hope of remedye; which I pray our Lord Gode to continuwe'. There were raids within a few miles of Hawick recorded in November 1513 and May 1514. He wrote to the English Privy Council on 17th May 1514 describing the destruction of Liddle, Ludder (uncertain what this is), Caerlenrig, Ewes, Teviot down to Branzholme, Borthwick from Borthwick mouth to Craik Cross, and Ale valley, describing that 'all, and euery of them, waist now, and noo corne sawne upon none of the said grounds'. The events at Hornshole could well have been during this campaign. In his own words to Henry VIII: 'In the next (noon)light, I shall, God willing, perform the said raid, and in the meantime shall cause small raids to be made, which shall be as great annoyance to the Scots as a great raid shall be, and thus shall your money be employed to the best I can and to the greatest hurt and destruction of the Scots'. He married Elizabeth of Greyestoke and was succeeded by his son William. He was killed in a fall from his horse – 'So much to sing. Do you remember fearfully Dacre’s red bull’s full-throated routing roar, And Teviot’s pastures pilaged piteously Blastend and broken, swept and savaged sore?’ [JYH], ‘Yet when bold Dacre sent a force By Hornshole to raid, Two hundred Callants bravely marched, Nor any disobeyd’ [WFC]. Sir Thomas (bef. 1527–66) eldest son of Sir William, he was 4th Lord of Gillesland and Greystoke, but only for 3 years. There is another contemporary Sir Thomas, who was an illegitimate son of Thomas, 2nd Lord Dacre; as a result he was sometimes referred to as ‘younger’. He may be the Thomas (cousin of Thomas Wharton) who accompanied Sandy Armstrong and others in burning Dumfries in 1542. He was knighted at Roxburgh in 1547. He appears to have spent most of his life assisting his father as Warden of the West Marches. A bond of 1558 by him and his son and heir ‘Christoll’ promises to present a certain Englishman to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He died intestate, his heir being the 5 year old George. His widow married the 4th Duke of Norfolk. Sir William (d.1563) 3rd Lord Dacre of Gilsland, continued as Warden of the West Marches for several years after his father Thomas’s death, probably serving 1549–53. He is probably the Lord Dacre who led a raid on Eskdale in 1527, with 2,000 men, although this was resisted by the Armstrongs. Along with Sir Christopher (his uncle), they led a force that burned Denholm and Cavers in 1535 (supposedly with the assistance of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholm). He married Elizabeth Talbot and was succeeded by their son Sir Walter Scott of Branxholm). He married Elizabeth Talbot and was succeeded by their son Thomas. His lead coffin was stolen out of Lanercost Priory in 1775.

daiths (däths) n., pl. deaths. The number of deaths recorded in the Parish of Hawick in 1791 was 71, and it was exactly double that in 1836, although skewed in the following year because of cholera. When someone was known to be dying the Minister in 1839 said that an old custom was for the friends and family to gather at the house and worship together, singing a few verses of Psalm 107.

Dakers (dä-kurz) n. Rev. John Rose (1827–1899) a native of Dundee, he was Episcopal minister in Brechin 1852–3. He was then minister of St. Cuthbert’s Episcopal Church 1854–82, being the incumbent when the new church was built on Slitrig Crescent. He introduced morning services 3 days a week and a daily evening service. His sister was the first recorded organist and choir-leader of St. Cuthbert’s. He was also a Director of Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Co., Ltd., as well as being President of the Archæological Society, having joined in 1856. He gave evidence before a Parliamentary Commission about the effects that local child labour had on education. He left Hawick in 1882 for Cumbrae, becoming Rector of St. Andrews and Canon of Millport Cathedral. In 1892 he retired to Clifton near Bristol. Dakers Place is named after him. He married and his children were Francis Scott and Bernard William (a surgeon who died in East Africa).

Dakers Place (dä-kurz-plis) n. street in the Terraces, with houses constructed in 1880, named after Rev. J.R. Dakers.

Dalcove (dä-köv) n. farm near Makerstoun, on the north bank of the Tweed. A tower here was razed by Hertford’s men in 1545. James Newton of Dalcove owned lands at Boonraw in the late 15th century (it is ‘Dawcofe’ in 1481, ‘Dalcov’ in 1484, ‘Dawcofe’ in 1494 and ‘dalcof’ in 1502).

dale see dail
dale (dāl) n. a river valley, used locally to split the Borders into its major watercourses, hence Eskdale, Ewesdale, Liddesdale, Teviotdale and Tweeddale.

Dalfernocksgill (dal-fer-noks-gil) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Dalfernoksgill’ in the c.1376 rental roll. They are listed under the ‘Foresta’ Section, with a value of 40 pence. This is probably the lands of ‘Dalferno’ that were leased by Simon and Christopher Armstrong according to a rental roll of 1541, with a value of 20 shillings.

Dalgetty (dawl-ge-tee) n. Sgt. ?? (18th/19th C.) local man who was a member of the Curling Club in 1812. He was presumably serjeant in some military unit.

Dalgleish (dawl-gleesh) n. former name for lands in Ettrick Parish, on the Tima Water, near the border with Dumfriesshire. This may be the original location that gave rise to the surname. Note that it was included for a long time as part of a barony, along with Synton and Whitslade, even although it is on the far side of Selkirkshire: so it was essentially a detached part of the Barony of Synton. The Nether Dalgleish and Over Dalgleish Burns, with their adjacent farms, are still marked on the Ordnance Survey map, near Tima Loch on the B709. In 1383 Peter of ‘Kœburn’ (Cockburn of Henderland) resigned the superiority of ‘Dalges’ (the annual rent from the lands or a pair of gilt spurs) to Thomas Erskine of Dun. There was already a family by the name of Dalgleish living there in 1407 and Simon ‘of Dalges’, was Vicar of Ashkirk in the early 15th century. It was inherited by Alexander Erskine in 1489 and the Erskines continued as superiors through to the early 17th century. In 1507/8 the land passed from the Erskines to John Glendinning, Coroner of Eskdale. It was owned by the Scotts of Thirlstane in 1609 and tenanted by Matthew Graham and William Dickson, with his mother Margaret Scott. It was annexed to the Barony of Synton and inherited by Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Whitslade in 1647. It was inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade in 1655. Thomas and Adam Scott were there in 1797. It was part of the Buccleuch estates in the 19th century (the name was formerly ‘Dalglise’, and variants, being ‘Dalges’ in 1415 and 1418, ‘Dalgesche’ in 1507/8, ‘Dalgesiche’ in 1609 and ‘Dalgliss’ in 1635 and 1647; ‘Dalgleisshes hill’ is marked on Blaeu’s c. 1654 map; it has been suggested that the origin is ‘de l’eqlise’, i.e. an association with church lands, however the initial ‘dal’ may be Cumbric for ‘haugh’, with ‘gless’ being a stream).

Dalgleish (dawl-gleesh) n. Adam (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He may be related to other contemporary Dalgleishes. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded being in ‘candill neis’ in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. He served as surety for himself, but was fined for not appearing. It is unclear where he lived, perhaps ‘Candle Naze’. Adam ‘Ade’ (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Ade Dalgeslach in Braidhauch’ in 1507 when he received remission for receiving and communing with Simon Turnbull, Robert Turnbull and others. Thomas and William are also mentioned, and so may have been his sons or brothers. In 1507 he separately had remission for associating with ‘Willelmo Dalgesch’, ‘Andrea Crosare’ and rebels of the ‘Levin’ (probably the Leven valley in Cumbria). This seems likely to be the Braidhaugh on Teviot (but it is not impossible it was the one in the Rule valley). He may be the Adam who was listed in the 1526 remission that a large number of Borderers had for attacking the Earl of Arran. He may also be the ‘Adam Dauglesche’ listed in the Exchequer Rolls for 1501, when he had a fine remitted for absence from Jedburgh Aire. He was surely related to William, who is recorded in Braidhaugh at about the same time. Adam (16th C.) owner of the lands of Deuchar in Yarrow, according to a rental roll of 1541. Adam (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Hoscoat in 1718 and Outerside in 1725 and 1727. His children included: William (b.1718); Adam (b.1720); Helen (b.1723); Maly (b.1725); William (again, b.1727); and Archibald (b.1730). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Mary Elliot in Roberton in 1723. Adam (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Ann (b.1741), William (b.1745), George (b.1747). Mary (b.1743), baptised in Jedburgh, may also be his child. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Hardie in 1750, both being from Wilton Parish. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (18th C.) warder at Oakwood Tower in 1745, according to a story told about the Laird of Harden escaping the dragoons there, after he was on the run following the 1745 Jacobite rebellion. He could be the Adam, son of Walter, born in Yarrow Parish in 1694. Alexander (1754–93) son of John, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish and was a mason.
of Rulewater, living at Hillshaugh. His brother John was also a mason, while William may have been another brother. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Coutard, and she died in 1835. They had sons John (b.1787) and William (b.1792), who became merchants in London, as well as a daughter Janet (b.1790). Alexander (b.1799/1800) stocking-maker in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households at the Dean in 1835. He was living at Coldhouse in 1841, perhaps the last person to do so. By 1851 he was on Wilton Kirkstyle. He married Margaret Lockie and their children included Jane (b.1819), Walter (b.1821), John (b.1825), James (b.1828), Mary (or Marianne, b.1831), Margaret (b.1834) and Alexander. David (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1484/5 for Mangerton lands going to the Scotts of Branxholme. Given the other signatories, he was probably a local man. It seems likely that he was related to the earlier clergymen John, Thomas and Simon. He may be the ‘Dauid Daugles’ who witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch in 1491/2 (unless that was ‘Douglas’); he was also listed among those owing Sir David money. He may be the ‘Dauld Dalgleece’ who witnessed a document for Scott of Branxholme in 1550. George (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Blackgraine’ when he was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the period 1622–24. George (1752/3–1828) resident of Newcastleton. He married Violet Elliot (1744/5–1832), who was daughter of William Elliot in Park. Their children included: William (1789/90–1869), who married Jean Beattie and died at Gillside. He is probably the resident of Newcastleton recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobs de Dalgless’ in a record relating to Glasgow Diocese in 1478. He was a Bailie of Glasgow. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Outerside in 1710. He married Mary Armstrong in Roberton in 1700 or 1701 and their children included: Michael (b.1702); Janet (b.1704); and Mary (b.1710). James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Outerside in 1763 and 1766. His children included: William (b.1758); Janet (b.1759); John (b.1761), Jean (b.1763); James (b.1766); and George (b.1768). He is surely related to the earlier James in Outerside. James (18th C.) resident of Goldielands. He married Mary Scott in Hawick Parish in 1777. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included Mary (b.1778) and Adam (b.1780). The witnesses in 1778 were Adam Hart and William Dalgleish. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Ruletownhead according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. James (b.1791/2) born in Wilton Parish, he was a spinner in a woollen mill and father of publisher James. He was precentor of Wilton Kirk for many years. One of his daughters frequently contributed poems to the local press. He was listed among heads of households at Damside in 1835–41. He married Betty Turnbull in 1812. Their children were: Walter (b.1813); Thomas (b.1815); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1817); James (b.1819); William (b.1821); John (b.1823); Alexander (b.1825): Jane (b.1827); and Helen (b.1830). James (b.c.1805) woollen factory foreman. He lived on Teviot Crescent. His wife was Jean and their children included Rebecca, John, Christian, Ann and Mary. James ‘Auld Velvet Feet’ (1819–1897) bookseller, printer and publisher. He was son of James and Betty Turnbull, and was born in Upper Damside. An apprentice printer with John D. Kennedy, he started his own business when only 18 in a shop at the foot of the ‘Tunnel’, where he sold whisky and bibles. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a bookseller, stationer and printer on the High Street. He was the original publisher of ‘The Hawick Advertiser’ (Hawick’s second newspaper, and the sole one existing for a period of over 15 years), which he started in January 1854, selling it to James Haining 6 months later. He then went to Langholm to start a tweed business, but was unsuccessful and returned in 1857, when he took over the stationary business from Haining. After Haining refused to take his son William into partnership, he started ‘The Hawick Express’ in 1870 and later published the ‘Hawick Monthly Advertiser’ for a short period. He continued in business at 11 High Street until 1892. He then severed his link with the Express and went into business as a stationer at Oliver Place with his son William. He was an early Trustee of St. George’s Kirk and served as Treasurer 1873–76. He was also for a while on the ‘Eternal Cooncil’. He married Elizabeth Nichol (sister of Provost John), who died in 1891, aged 71. Their children included James (who became a doctor in Reading), William (who worked with his father) and a daughter (who married Robert Blair), as well as Margaret, Jane, Mary and Isabella N., none of whom reached adulthood. James (1900–59) local tenor singer. He was born in Gala, oldest of a family of 8, who were brought up in Brougham Place, with his father being clubmaster at the Liberal Club. He had brothers Harry, who was a painter, and George, who had a shoe shop in Hawick. He
Dalgleish

John Dalgleish was his father. He sang with the Selkirk Opera. He toured America with an operatic company and also sang solo. He made several records for the Beltona label, mostly in about 1932, usually using his own arrangements. These recordings included: ‘The Hawick Common Riding, Parts 1 & 2’ (Bel 1796); ‘The Selkirk Common Riding, Parts 1 & 2’ (Bel 1797); ‘Braw, braw lads o’ Gala Water & Border Ballad’ (Bel 1798); ‘Jedburgh Songs & Langholm Common Riding’ (Bel 1834); ‘Dumfries guid Nychburris Day, Parts 1 & 2’ (Bel 1835); ‘Peebles Beltane Queen Festival, Parts 1 & 2’ (Bel 1836); ‘Gala Toon & Bonnie Kelso’ (Bel 1837); and ‘Hawick Cronies & Hawick’ (Bel 1838). In 1923 he married Ethel Gwynn Thomas, with both of them being described as ‘music hall artistes’, and she also recorded for Beltona as ‘Gwen Thomas’. They divorced in about 1950 and he later married Dien Bodika, who was Dutch. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannes de Dalgesch’ in 1438 when he was served heir to his brother (also a chaplain) Thomas’ property in the Burgh of Irvine. He is also recorded in Glasgow Diocese records in about 1465 and in 1477. He may have been related to the slightly later David and James. John of that Ilk (d.c.1495) recorded in 1494 when he received remission for his crimes. He was probably succeeded by his son John. He must have been a descendant of the earlier Simon. John of that Ilk (15th C.) recorded in 1495 as son and heir of the late John of Dalgleish. Probably the same ‘Johannis Dalgleschi’ was recorded in 1507 along with Robert and Adam receiving remission for associating with ‘Wilehmo Dalglesi’, ‘Andrea Crossare’ and rebels of ‘Levin’. He may be the same John who was hanged in 1510 for being involved in many crimes, including the burning of Branxholme (with some Englishmen) and Ancrum (with the Armstrongs), stealing sheep from Thomas Murray, stealing horses, cattle, grain and other goods from Branxholme, stealing cattle from John Scott at Northhouse, stealing horses from Philip Fawlaw, associating with ‘the Armbrangis’ and with Simon Turnbull, resetting William and Simon Dalgleish and assisting English thieves, including ‘Black John’ Routledge. He must have been related to the other nearly contemporary family members, such as Simon, Thomas and William. William might have been his father. John (16th C.) servant to George Ker, who was assistant to Walter Ker of Cessford. In 1581/2 Walter Scott (probably of Goldielands) came to Hermitage and got their help to track the gang that had raided Harwood on Teviot. John (16th C.) tenant in Whitehope in the Yarrow valley. In 1582 his farm (along with those of Montbenger and Deuchar) were attacked by a gang of Armstrungs and their followers. He was probably related to Thomas in Deuchar. John (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed as ‘servant and officer of the forest’ in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. John (17th C.) tenant in ‘Carsope’ (probably Kershope, perhaps the one in Yarow). In 1685 he was charged, along with other local men, with being a Covenanter. All the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. John (17th C.) resident at Peelbrae in Cavers Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th/18th C.) wright at Alton Croft. He married Bessie Cowan and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Marie (b.1700); Euphan (b.1702); and probably John (b.1704) and Beatrice (b.1707). The witnesses in 1700 were Walter Martin and William Bell in Whitechesters. He may be the John whose daughter Elizabeth married George Turnbull ‘Young Whitegates’ in Hawick in 1720. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He was probably a mason, like his sons Alexander and John. He married Janet Henderson in 1749 and their children included: William (b.1749); Robert (b.1751); Alexander (b.1752), a mason in Rulewater; Janet (b.1753); Agnes (b.1758); and John (b.1760), also a mason in Hobkirk Parish. He may have secondly married Margaret Currier in 1761 in Kirkton and had another son Thomas (b.1764). John (b.1760) son of John and brother of Alexander, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish. He was also a mason, like his brother, and lived at Tythehouse farm. He married Margaret Scott and had children: Margaret (b.1789), who was a teacher in Wilton; John (b.1792), mason and dyker at Swanshiel; and Janet (b.1796). John (1787–1850) son of Alexander, born at Bankend in Hobkirk Parish. Along with his brother William he went to London and the pair became successful merchants there. They made a bequest to the ‘Coutard Fund’ in memory of his mother Elizabeth Coutard, to help the poor of the Parish. John (1792) son of John and Margaret Scott. He was resident of the Harwood estate and related to the other Dalgleishes of Hobkirk Parish. He had many jobs, including mason and dyker. In 1851 he was an agricultural labourer living at the earliest known Dalgleish and may have been father of the Ashkirk Vicar. He witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. He is probably the ‘Symon of Dalgleish’ who was on a ‘retour of inquest’ in 1424 made in Hawick for lands in Hownam and the ‘Symonem de Dalges’ on the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick in 1427. In 1429/30 he was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. Simon (d.1475/6) possibly son of the earlier Simon, he was certainly an early member of the family from ‘Dalgleish’ in Selkirkshire. Probably the same ‘Simon de Dalges’ was notary for the sasine giving William Douglas the Barony of Cavers in 1432, and also notary for a sasine of lands of ‘Silwynislandis’ in 1436. He is recorded as ‘Master Simon of Dalges’ in 1448 when he was Canon and Prebendarry of Glasgow and Vicar of Ashkirk. He was recorded as ‘licentiate in decreets, precentor and official general of Glasgow’ in 1459 in a ‘transumpt’ relating to the Earldom of Lennox, and as an official of Glasgow Diocese in 1460/1 when he authenticated a copy of the same document. He was Precentor of Glasgow from sometime in the period 1456–71 probably until his death. He was ‘Symore de Dalges, Judge and Official of Glasgow’ in 1459 and ‘Master Simon of Dalges’ in another Glasgow document of 1462. He may have been a son of the earlier Simon. It seems likely he was related to the roughly contemporary clergymen David, John and Thomas ‘of Dalges’, as well as William of Falnash. Simon (15th C.) probably son of William of Falnash. In 1464 he had a sasine for the lands of ‘Fallinesch, Candelles, Calfshawis, et tribus husbandis in Mynto’. He thus must have succeeded to the lands of Falnash and Minto that has been held by William. Calfshaw is adjacent to Falnash, and presumably the same is true of ‘Candelles’. Simon of Falnash (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1511 when James IV confirmed a charter for the lands of ‘Fawnesch, Cawsya, et Tandilnes’ in Roxburghshire, with the consent of his son Kentigern and his son’s wife Elizabeth Elphinstone. His lands were presumably those of Falnash and ‘Tanalaw Naze’, with the meaning of ‘Cawsya’ being less clear. He also held a 40-shilling land in the town of Minto. Perhaps the same ‘Symone Dalges’ was witness to the 1505 charter of Boonraw, granted to Robert Scott of Stirches by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. He seems likely to have been succeeded by his son Kentigern (or Mungo). Simon (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1510, along with Walter, when Thomas in Bradhaugh was accused of stealing horses. Probably the same ‘Symon Dalges’ is also listed in 1510 along with William as ‘Thieves and Traitors of Levin’ in the conviction of John Dalgleish for associating with several different rebels and other crimes. Thomas (15th C.) Chaplain, recorded in 1438 when his brother John (also a chaplain) was served heir to his lands in Irvine. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1455 to the document attesting that John of St. Michael inherited Whitchesters from his father, signed in Hawick. Another witness was William, so probably a near relative. He is surely the same Thomas who witnessed a related document for the Scotts of Bucleuch in 1456. William was again listed right after him, as well as a second William (one of whom was surely William of Falnash). Thomas (15th/16th C.) farmer at Bradhaugh, perhaps the one on Teviot. He is recorded in 1510 for stealing horses, with his kinsmen Simon and Walter also mentioned. He is also recorded as ‘Thome’ in 1507 along with ‘Ade Dalgesch in Bradhauch’ and William, receiving remission for associating with Simon and Robert Turnbull. In 1510 he was imprisoned with the promise that he would be hanged if surety could not be found. At the same time he was convicted, along with William, also in Bradhaugh, of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of Crookston, as well as for resetting Walter. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1516 receiving remission for his crimes, along with several Nixons and other men from Liddesdale. It is unclear if he is the same man from the Rule valley. Thomas (d.bef. 1532) killed along with Adam Turnbull, when a group led by Clem Crozier, Martin Crozier, Hob Elliot of Ramsiegill, Sym Forester and Johnnie Forester from Liddesdale raided ‘within the boundis of Teviotdale’. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Deuchar on the Yarrow Water. In 1578/9 there was a complaint that he had not paid the ‘mails’ on his farm. In 1582 his farm was raided by a group of Armstrongs and others, and he was taken hostage, along with Adam Scott from the nearby farm of Montbenger. His son John is also mentioned, as well as John ‘in Quheithoip’, who was probably related. W. (18th/19th C.) resident of Whitrupfoot in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. Walter of Greenwood (15th C.) resigned the lands of Greenwood, which were granted to Adam Turnbull by a charter of James II in 1439. This is probably Girnwood in the Borthwick valley. Walter (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as an accomplice of James Turnbull, brother of the Laird of

Whithope. Their crimes included stealing sheep from Bowhill and also for stealing doors and windows from Howpaysle. It is possible he is the ‘Wantoun’ Walter recorded in 1494/5, when William Dickson in Ladhope was convicted for resetting him and William Scott, with surety being Walter Scott of Howpaysle. Walter (15th/16th C.) mentioned in 1510 along with Simon when their kinsman Thomas in Braidhaugh was accused of stealing horses. Also Thomas was accused of resetting him at ‘the time of the Theft if xvij oxeb from the said David [Hoppringle of Tinnis], furth of Bochill’. William (15th C.) Steward to the Bishop of Glasgow in 1452 and later also Steward to the King. He was probably related to the other contemporary Dalgleishes, possibly a son of Simon. Probably the same ‘Wilelmo Dalglies’ witnessed a charter in Wilton in 1454 and a document in Hawick in 1455. William of Falnash (15th C.) had a sasine for Falnash in 1456, before which the farm had been temporarily in the King’s hands. He was witness to a sasine of lands near Branxholme in 1461. He is recorded as ‘Wyl Dalgyle of the Fallyn Eche’, and since all the other signatories are local, this is probably the Falnash in upper Teviotdale. He must be one of the 2 Williams who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch (made at Branxholme) in 1456. He is probably the William who had a sasine for lands in Minto in 1457. He was probably succeeded by Simon, who had a sasine for Falnash and other lands in 1464. Either he or a son may have been ‘Wilzam of Dalgyle with Hector Armistrangs brother’ who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498, along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere; they are listed right after John Burn ‘in Branxholm’. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Braidhaugh (probably on Teviot, but possible the one in Rulewater). In 1502 Walter Scott of Buccleuch was surety for him at the Justice-aine in Jedburgh, and was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded in 1507 in the Register of the Privy Seal as ‘Willelmi Dalglesch’ along with Adam and Thomas ‘in Braidhauch’ when they received remission for associating with Turnbull and other rebels. He could be the same as ‘Willelmo’ who was one of the rebels who Adam and other Dalgleishes separately had remission for associating with, also in 1507; however, this may be a different William. It seems likely that the same William ‘common Thief’ was one of those rebels who John Dalgleish was convicted of assisting in 1510, particularly in the theft of 80 sheep from Thomas Murray; he was also mentioned along with Simon, who could have been his brother or other close relative. Also in 1510 he and Thomas, both ‘in Braidhauche’ were convicted of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of Crookston and imprisoned to await execution if surety could not be found. William (17th C.) listed at Over Southfield among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William born to Walter and Bessie Scott in Hawick Parish in 1643. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Yarrow Parish. He married Agnes Kedie in Ashkirk Parish in 1702. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Porter Lodge’ in 1790 (but it is unclear what that meant, perhaps the lodge for Wilton Lodge or another mansion). In 1791 he was at Roadhead. He married Peggy Dalgleish and their children included Walter (b.1790) and Ann (b.1791). The witnesses in 1790 were ‘Mr. Scott’ and ‘Mr. Johnston’ and in 1791 were George Scott and James Blaikie. William (18th/19th C.) tenant at Tytheclose, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He also paid the dog tax there in 1797. He could be the William (b.1749), son of John, who was baptised in Kirtoun Parish, and whose brother John was a mason at Tytheclose. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Abbotshaws in Castleton Parish in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. William (1792–1849) son of Alexander, born at Bankend, on the Harwood estate in Rulewater. Along with his brother John he moved to London, becoming a successful merchant. They bequeathed the ‘Coutard Fund’ of £1,000 to help the poor of the Parish, as well as a gift to the Hobbirk Library. This fund was set up in memory of their mother Elizabeth Coutard. His cousin Margaret Dalgleish married Wilton Schoolmaster James Turnbull. William ‘Willy’ (b.1827) son of James, labourer at Tytheclose and Mary Falside. He was a carpenter with Douglas Taylor at Bonchester Bridge for many years. His mother died giving birth to his twin siblings, James and Mary, when he was about 4. He married Jane Buckham and their sons were James (shopkeeper in Hawick) and Robert (in Lord Provost Gibson’s workplace in Edinburgh). He left the Parish after Douglas Taylor left. William (19th C.) son of publisher James. He was said to be rather simple, and although he went into partnership with his father in the Oliver Place stationers, he ended his days selling newspapers on the streets of Edinburgh. William (19th/20th C.) grandson of carpenter William. He lived at Hillshaugh and was probably raised by his grandfather's 2nd wife, Margaret Buckham. He married Janet Wilson, daughter of the shepherd at Birney-Knowe and Bella Elliot. Their children were Isabella, James (carpenter in Denholm), William, Robert and Margaret. William (19th/20th C.) helped James H. Haining with transcriptions of the monumental inscriptions in St. Mary's Kirkyard (formerly spelled 'Dagleish', 'Dalgeses', 'Dalgles', 'Dalgleis', 'Dalglesieche', 'Dalgleshe', 'Dal-glesch', 'Dalglesche', 'Dalgese', 'Dalglies', 'Dal-gliesh', 'Dawgleis', 'Dawgles', etc.).

Dalgleish Close (dawl-gleesh-klös) n. passage off the High Street in the middle of the 19th century, position uncertain, but named for James Dalgleish.

Dalkeith see Earl o Dalkeith

Dalkeith Hoose (dawl-keeth-hoos) n. large stately home north-east of Dalkeith, on the banks of the Esk, one of the main residences of the Scots of Buccleuch, but recently leased to the University of Wisconsin. It was probably first built in the early 14 century, owned by the Gra-ehams and then the Douglasses, becoming for a while known as 'Dalkeith Palace'. It was built by the Scots of Buccleuch in 1642 and largely re-built 1701–11 for Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch by architect James Smith, with later later additions by John Adam and James Playfair. The Duchess would occasionally visit her tower in Hawick during the time she stayed there.

Dalkeith Place (dawl-keeth-plis) n. street in the Terraces of the Wellogate, built in 1870 by Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Company, and named after the title 'Earl of Dalkeith' borne by the heir of the Dukes of Buccleuch. The lower houses were called Branxholm Terrace until 1882.

Dallmeyer (dawl-mI-ur) n. Andrew (1945–) born in St. Boswells, he became a well-known actor, writer and director. He has directed more than 50 productions and written over 40 plays, including 'The Boys in the Back Room' (1982).

Dalmahoy (dawl-ma-hoi) n. Alexander of that Ilk (15th C.) probably son of Robert. His main lands were in the Lothians. In 1484 he had a lease of half the lands of Douglas Craig. The lease was joint with his son, also Alexander. He also leased Alltrieve at about the same time. David (15th/16th C.) witnessed to the 1512 charter where Roger Langlands of that Ilk granted Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was probably a resident or near neighbour of the Barony of Wilton. Probably the same man is recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. William (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scots, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. David is also listed, so surely a relative.

Dalman (dal-mun) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, probably the same as the later De-mainholm. The lands of 'Dalmanyne per forincecum [i.e. for outsiders] et vi lbr piperis' and 'Dal-raynemore' are recorded as part of the 'Foresta' area, with a value of 10 shillings.

Dalrymple (dawl-rim-pil) n. David of West-hall (1719–84) son of Hew, Lord Drummore. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, who was raised to the Bench as Lord Westhall and lived at Advocate's Close in Edinburgh. In 1779 he is listed as lifier-enter of Minto Hills, Hawthorn Park and Mailches-ter Park. This was almost certainly just a ploy by Elliot of Minto to get supporters of his on the voters' roll for Roxburghshire; the lands were valued at £438 2d, just over the required £400. De-spite objections by Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule, his name was added to the list of freeholders in Rox-burghshire. However, he was deceased in the draft Land Tax Roll of 1788, but listed as having held the liferent of Minto Hills farm and other lands in Minto Parish. Any local connection is unclear (although one of the Lady Elliots of Minto was a Dalrymple), but he was probably just a Whig friend of Elliot of Minto. Sir John of Cousland (1726–1810) advocate, chemist and author, he was eldest son of Sir William of Cranstoun and was also known as Baron Dalrymple. He was a co-founder of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He was disposed lands within the Barony of Minto by Sir Gilbert Elliot; this was probably merely for the purposes of allowing him to vote in Rox-burghshire and hence to support the candidacy of Elliot. After lengthy discussion he was allowed to be enrolled as a voter, although the vote was only 28 to 22. His ‘property’ consisted of the liferent of Kames, Kameside Park, Muir Park and Minto Muir Parks, valued at £413 18s 3d (just over the £400 required to be considered a free-holder).

Dalton (dawl-tiu) n. Thomas (18th/19th C.) listed as a vintner on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory.

Dalton’s (dawl-tinz) n. popular name for the Exchange Bar, because John Dalton was propri-eter in the years around 1900.
Dalyell (daw-yel) n. Sir Robert (d.1639) of Ellnock and that Ilk, eldest son of a prominent Lanarkshire family, his father being Robert of that Ilk and his mother Janet Hamilton. He sat in Parliament in 1628 as Lord Dalyell and became the first Earl of Carnwath just before he died. The family gained lands from the Chisholmes, but may have also held other local estates. There was certainly a connection between this family and that of the deceased Sir William Douglas of Hawick. He married Margaret Crichton and their children were: Robert, who succeeded; Sir John of Glenae and Newton and later of Amisfield; James; Thomas; William; Margaret; Mary; and one other daughter. Robert (d.1654) eldest son of Robert, he was 2nd Earl of Carnwath. He was a Privy Councillor, but was later charged with treason and forfeited his estates (although late recovered them). He is supposed to have convinced King Charles to flee at the Battle of Naseby. He was captured at Worceste and imprisoned in the Tower of London, dying while still a prisoner. He is listed as owner of land (along with Robert Scott of Hartwoodmill) in a 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish (the lands being valued at £533 6s 8d). He married Christian Douglas, daughter of Sir William of Hawick, and their children were: Gavin, 3rd Earl of Carnwath; William, who died unmarried; and Anna, who married John Hamilton of Preston. He secondly married Katherine, daughter of John Abingdon of Dowdeswell. William (d.1647) son of Sir Robert and brother of Robert. His sister was offered in marriage to Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, by right of his feudal su- perior Douglas of Drumlanrig. When Chisholme refused, the wardship of the estate was given to William, and after the required fine was not paid he gained the Chisholme estate (in the Borthwick valley) in 1624. The lands may have passed to his brother Robert later (also spelled ‘Dalzell’ and ‘Dalziel’).

dam (dawn) n. a lade, more specifically used to refer to an open stretch of water in a lade – ‘oor mother aye telt oo no ti play near the dam’, ‘This is the maist damnable cry I’ve gi’en this day, for the dam will hae tae be dammed tae get the horse oot, so will Maister Melrose o’ Hopehill please come forrit at aince tae assist in gettin’ the dammed horse oot o’ the dam’ [JEDM], ‘Wellington Street, that’s a thing o’ the past Where the dam ran deep and wide’ [AY].

Dam Brig (dawn-brig) n. former name for an area of Hawick, presumably relating to the bridge over the ‘dam’ or main mill lade running alongside the Slitrig. It seems likely this bridge went over the lade at the Backdamgate, but the foot of the Mill Path is also possible. In 1704 the ‘dam brigs’ are mentioned in the Burgh Records.

dam brod (dawn-brod) n., arch. a board for playing draughts – ‘Jethart Castle! A body was need ti ken’d off leike as Wattie Laidlaw kend eet, for ti tell owre, off-luif, aa its dambrod-checket story’ [ECS] (also written as one word).

dame (dām) n., poet. an unmarried woman – ‘...amang thame wer the yung dames playin’ on timbrils’ [HSR].

Damfit (dawn-fī) n. Damfoot, house on the left-hand side of the road at the beginning of Newmill. It was once near the end of the lade for the mill there. John Inglis was joiner there in the mid-19th century.

Dam Gate (dawn-gā) n. another name for Backdamgate. It is marked thus on Wood’s 1824 map.

Damheid (dawn-heed) n. former name for an area in Wilton near the head of the mill dam. The name occurs in the 1841 census.

damnify (dam-ni-fī) v., arch. to damage, injure – ‘All owners of cocks and hens are ordained to clip their wings and toes instantly, under the pain of five grots, toties quoties, besides damages to the party damnified’ [JW1701].

dampnage (damp-nij) n., arch. damage, injury – ‘...alswele of costis, skathis, expensis, dampni-gis and interessis ... ’ [SB1470], ‘...for the skath, dampnage and byrnyng of the place of Kershop ... ’ [SB1500].

the Damside (thu-dawn-sūd) n. area alongside Wilton Dam, with the main street renamed Victoria Road in 1864. Also called ‘Upper Damside’, it bordered the Upper Haugh and lay along the top stretch of the mill lade. The lade crossed Victoria Road near the end, before what became the supermarket. The name also appears to have applied to the lower part of Wilton Path. Residents there included William Turnbull in at least 1751–59, James Scott around the 1760s, Robert Stewart in the 1770s, Thomas Turnbull in 1772 and James Knox and James Wilson in 1780. George Weir was a wright there around 1784 and James Knox was gardener there at the end of the 18th century. John and William Purdom were hosiers there in the early 19th century. In 1825/6 Robert Blaikie was a wright there, Thomas Cathrae was a slater and Andrew Walker was a cooper. Dr. Robert Douglas had his premises there in the early 19th century. The male heads of families there in 1835

Dandie Dinmont (dawn-dee-din-mon’) n. breed of terrier, long and low in shape, with a distinctive silken top-knot and scimitar-shaped tail. The breed is an old one, with its origins in the Border country, where the dogs were probably raised to kill vermin. Similar dogs appear in the 1770 Gainsborough portrait of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. It is called after the character of the same name in Sir Walter Scott’s novel ‘Guy Mannering’ (1814). He was a farmer who kept this sort of terrier, and is at least partly based on James Davidson, farmer of Hyndlee, and perhaps also by Willie Elliot, farmer at Millburnholm. The breed was popularised by Scott’ novel, and the Dandie Dinmont Club, formed in Melrose in 1876 claims to be the oldest continuously existing breeders’ club in the world (also erroneously written ‘Dandy Dinmont’).
dang (dawng) pp., poet., arch. smote, overcame, struck, blew with great force, pushed forcibly – ‘When they cam to the Stanegirthisde, They dang wi’ trees, and burst the door; They loosed out a’ the captain’s kye, And set them forth our lads before’[T], ‘Yeh gowsty nicht (wui a wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wundils) a turbilent woare as the ordinar dang doon the first Peinellheuch Moniment’[ECS], ‘... She kept the lads a’ jumpin’ crazy An’ dang them a’’[WP] (past tense of ding; cf. dung, the more usual past participle).
Dang (dawng) n. Michael (18th/19th C.) farmer at Todsclugheishide, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses. He also paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797.

Dangerfield (dän-jur-feeld) n. name of the ‘haugh’ which defined the boundary of the Common at its north-west end, probably the site of an archery range in former times. On Wood’s 1824 map the area so marked in between the mill lade and the track that became Commercial Road, between Watson’s Mill and Wilton Mills.

Dangerfield Mills (dän-jur-feeld-milz) n. spinning mill and tweed factory built by Wilson & Watson’s in 1804, on land next to the Common Haugh, off the present day Commercial Road, with address 24 Commercial Road. The more recent building was constructed 1872–73 for William Watson & Sons, extended in 1882. It was 3-and-a-bit stories and into the 21st century contained some original machinery, including Platt spinning mules and a lineshaft driving system running the length of the building. This represented probably the oldest collection of spinning machines in working order in the Borders. In its hey-day (around the 1870s) the mill employed about 600 people. The building was largely empty in the latter 20th century, and as a ‘Category A’ listed building, there were some attempts to save it. However, it was destroyed in a fire in 2003 and demolished in early 2004.

the Danger Signal (thu-dän-jur-sig-nil) n. nickname in use around the early 19th century.
danner (daw-nur) adj., arch. to wander, stroll – ‘...An’ we hae dannert i’ the howes where flowers were ever fair’ [JoHa] (cf. the more common dandner).

Danny o the Dean (daw-nee-ö-thu-deen) n. nickname for Daniel Stewart of the Dean in the 19th century.

Darcy (dawr-see) n. Sir Anthony (d.1517) Frenchman who was appointed Lord Warden General of the Scottish Marches in 1516 in place of Lord Home, who was executed for treason through the orders of the Regent Albany. In 1517 he was killed by Sir David Home of Wedderburn in revenge, at the farm of Swallowdean in Berwickshire, his head being displayed atop Home Castle. He is also referred to as ‘De la Bastie’ or ‘Seigneur de la Beauté’.

darg (dawrg) n., arch., poet. a day’s work, more specifically the amount of turf that can be cast with one spade in a day, formerly part of the lease agreement for a farm – ‘The schoolmaster’s salary is L.26 sterling, with the usual quantity of garden ground, and six days darg of turf’ [RAC], ‘He has the right to cast 10 darg of turf annually, viz. 6 on the muirs of Fulton, Corscleugh and Bedrule ...’ [RWB], ‘...the proud though poor inheritors of till and daily darg’ [HAST1863], ‘The day’s darg or day’s casting of turf was afterwards changed ...’ [JAH], ‘And some dear day, when my darg is dune, Oh it’s back that I wad be ...’ [JYH], ‘...A lassie sings at her darg forbye, As she busies but and ben’ [WL].

Dargavel (dawr-ga-vul) n. Rev. John graduating from Edinburgh University in 1665, he became minister of Southdean in 1667. He was translated to Prestonkirk in 1670, but after only 1 week in office he was accused before the Kirk Session (by Isabel Cruickshanks) of ‘immorality’, and was probably deposed soon afterwards (also written ‘Dargavel’).

the Darien Scheme (thu-da-ree-in-skeem) n. name often given for the Company of Scotland Trading to Africa and the Indies, set up in 1695 to establish Scotland as a world trading nation, specifically by establishing a colong, ‘Caledonia’, on the Gulf of Darién on the Isthmus of Panama. A huge amount of money was raised in Scotland, with the promise of huge returns and national glory. It is estimated that 25–50% of all money circulating in Scotland was collected for this venture. However, it was ill-conceived from the outset and poorly planned, with disease and a siege by Spain resulting in abandonment of the colony by 1700. This financial failure virtually ruined Scotland at the time, and may have led to weakened resistance to the 1707 Act of Union. Many of the Borders gentry (including Douglases, Elliots, Riddells, Rutherfords and Scotts) contributed substantial amounts to the cause, as well as the Burgh of Selkirk.

Darling (dawr-lin) n. Adam (1855/6–1908) apprentice with William Watson’s, he became a manager of Ballantyne’s in Innerleithen in 1888, and a partner in Kedie, Darling & Co. in 1898. He lived at Langside (39 Weensland Road) and married Anne, daughter of Hawick jailor Michael Anderson. Their children were Thomas (Cornet in 1900), Agnes Reid of the Buccleuch Hotel, Anderson (commercial traveller who married Jane Thompson), Adam (a sheep farmer in America), George (also emigrated to America), Rita (who became Mrs. Lindsay), Michael and Jenima. Rev. Robert (1668/9–1716) born in Galashiels, he was son of Andrew and brother of Hew, minister of Innerwick. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1685. He was ordained as assistant and successor at Ewes Kirk in 1694. Although called to Gask in 1699, he did not accept the call, but remained at Ewes until his death. Apparently not liked by some of his parishioners, he was nicknamed ‘the malignant’. In 1697 he married, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of James Urquhart, merchant in Linlithgow. Their children included: Rev. James, minister of Kintore; Elizabeth, who married Edinburgh gardener John Harley; and Alison, who married sailor Robert Spence. He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers and Wilton Parishes. He was living in Denholm in 1730 and at Boghall in 1733. He married Agnes Young in 1729, the marriage being proclaimed in both Cavers and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: Adam (b.1730), baptised in Cavers; and David (b.1731) and Helen (b.1733), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1733 were John Noble and Walter Scott. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Wiltonhall’ in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) slater in Hawick. He married Helen (or Nelly) Smith, who died in 1808. Thomas D. Darnick

He married Agnes (d.1953) daughter of the Bucleuch Hotel proprietor William Reid, who had been his Cornet’s Lass. It is possible that he is seen in an old photograph outside his premises in the building next to the Auction Mart offices. He worked for the family firm of Keddie, Darling & Co., riverside Mills He later worked as a commercial traveller in Huddersfield. He was also President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1910/1. Both he and his wife were present in Hawick as Jubilee Cornet and Lass. He was buried in Wellowgate Cemetery.

Darnick (daw-nik) n., village that is essentially the western part of Melrose. It contains the 1595 Darnick Tower (home of the Heitons, coveted by Sir Walter Scott and much altered in the 19th century), and the 16th century Fisher’s Tower (altered in the 18th century). It also had railway sidings in the days of the Waverley Line. The battle of Skirmish Hill (located between Darnick and Melrose) in 1526 is sometimes called the Battle of Darnick. The village was also burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. There was an ancient bridge near there (at ‘Briggend’), which was the only bridge across the Tweed between Peebles and Berwick, but probably destroyed in the early 16th century. There was thereafter a ferry and then a bridge from 1750. The village was also on the main road north from Hawick to Edinburgh until 1755 (the origin is Old English ‘derne wic’. meaning ‘the hidden dwelling’ and it is recorded as early as 1124).

David (dā-vid) n. name of 2 early Scottish Kings. David I (1084–1153) youngest son of Malcolm III, he succeeded his brother Alexander I and was succeeded by his grandson Malcolm IV. He grew up in Norman England and had earlier been Earl of Cumbria, ruling an area south of the Clyde and Forth. He established the abbey at Selkirk (later moved to Kelso), Jedburgh and Melrose. He resided for a while at Jedburgh. He gave land grants to many Anglo-Norman families, entirely changing the feudal landscape. This included the Lovels in Hawick and the de Charterises in Wilton, as well as the Riddells and many other local families – ‘Efter a while, David cam up frae the Sooth Wi scarcely yin guid Scots word in his mooth, Accompanied bie Norman-French freends in wee bands. He settled them here an gied them wide lands’ [WaE]. David II (1324–71), King from 1329, son of Robert the Bruce. When Edward de Baliol, with English support, was victorious at Halidon Hill in 1333, he forced the young King to move to France. He returned in 1341, invading England in 1346 in the interests of France. He was imprisoned after Neville’s Cross, remaining in England for 11 years, returning in 1357 when a ransom treaty was signed at Berwick. There then followed a period of dispute with some of his noblemen, in which he tried to make a son of Edward III successor to the Scottish throne. In fact he was succeeded by his nephew Robert II. Thomas de Charteris (of the Langlands family) was his High Chancellor 1342–46. He granted the Barony of Hawick to Maurice Murray in the 1330s and later to Thomas Murray, and he knighted Robert Chisholme of that Ilk in 1357.

Davidson (dā-vid-sun) n. Adam (15th C.) received 1 merk in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Ade Dauysun’. Adam (17th C.) property owner in Lilliesleaf Parish. He paid tax on £101 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. He was surely related to Andrew and David, who were also listed. Agnes (b.1798/9) from Minto Parish, she was a temperance hotel-keeper in Lilliesleaf. In 1851 she was living on the south side of the village with daughters Margaret, Jemima and Andrew. In Slater’s 1852 directory she was listed as proprietor of a ‘temperance coffee hse’ in Lilliesleaf. Alan ‘Taburner’ (15th/16th C.) one of a number of Turnbulls and others who were fined in 1502 for failing to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. He was described as ‘tawbonare’, i.e. his nickname was ‘player of the taburn’ or drum. Several of the others mentioned were from Rulewater, suggesting that he may have been from the Rulewater Davisons. Rev. Alexander (1828–76) son of John, a forester of Mintlaw, and Ann Ross, he was educated at Edinburgh University and became a teacher at the Royal Caledonian School in London. He was appointed assistant minister at Melrose and at Bedrule, probably in the early 1860s. He was then ordained as minister of Cavers in 1866 and remained there until his death. He died unmarried. Alison (b.1789/90) owner of a house on Slitrig Crescent. She was already a widow by 1841. Along with her daughter Jessie, she ran a school in their house. In 1851 Jessie is recorded as a teacher of English, Music and French. She was still alive in 1861, when they were at 1 Slitrig Bank. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) tenant in Kaims. He was listed 1576 among a group of Turnbulls (led by John of Minto) and others who had a bond with another group of Turnbells and others (in Barnhills and elsewhere), not to harm each other. Andrew (17th C.) described as ‘in Raperlaw’ when he feued lands of Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning in 1632. Ralph was also mentioned and so was probably a relative. He is listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £65. He is probably related to David who also held lands there at the same time. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in Lilliesleaf on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Andrew whose son Thomas was born in Lilliesleaf in 1691. He may have been the Andrew who was listed in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He is probably the Andrew who paid the land tax for part of Raperlaw in 1678; he may have been related to Ralph of Greenhouse who also paid the land tax for another part of Raperlaw. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident at Newbigging in 1710. Along with Thomas (probably a close relative) he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for George Glendinning. Andrew (18th C.) resident at Howcleuch in 1752 and Parkhead in 1763 when his children were baptised in Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Murray in Robertson in 1750. His children included Bettie (b.1751), Andrew (b.1752), Robert (b.1754), Isobel (b.1758), Andrew (b.1761) and Jean (b.1763). Andrew (18th C.) owner of part of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He paid the window tax for Greenhouse in 1748. In 1769 he sold the farm of Greenhouse to Walter Turnbull of Firth. He was probably related to Walter who was in Greenhouse in 1694. In 1788 his lands were valued at £256 18s 10d, split into 4 parts: ‘Ralph Davidson’s part of Greenhouse’, valued at £104; ‘A. Davidson’s part of Greenhouse’, valued at £65; teinds, purchased from the Duke of Roxburghe, valued at £41 5s 6d; and lands that had previously been owned by the feuars of Lilliesleaf, valued at £46 13s 4d. He was further recorded as former owner of ‘Part of Davidson of Greenhouses’ Lands in Lilliesleaf’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls when owned by William Riddell of Camieston, with another part owned by Robert Laidlaw in Kingleedoes. Andrew (b.1821) son of William and Barbara Laidlaw, who lived at Spittal-on-Rule. He was a ploughman at Bursfoot in Wilton Parish. He married Eliza Irving, who came from Ewes. Their children included Eliza H.B., Jane, Agnes Jessie (b.1857) and William F. Archibald (19th/20th C.) commercial traveller with Innes, Henderson & Co., he held offices at St. George’s Kirk in the early 1900s.

David (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘of the Kamis’ in 1601, this being presumably Minto Kamis. His son Henry was maimed in the skirmish between Turnbells and Kerrs and their supporters at Jedburgh Rood Day. His sons ‘George, Raff, James and William’ were also involved. He may be the same Davidson ‘of Kaymes’ recorded owning land at Belses and Raperlaw in the 1626 tax roll of the Abbacy of Jedburgh. Perhaps the same David is listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £195; he may be related to Andrew who also held lands there at the same time. David of Newlands (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £80, with his designation transcribed ‘Newlawes’. These same lands were held by the Marquis of Douglas ‘for Newlands’ in 1678 and were later transferred to Minto Parish. He was a landowner in Lilliesleaf Parish, where he paid tax on £200 according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He was probably related to Walter who was tenant at Newlands in 1632. David (19th C.) proprietor of Wells Sawmill from 1863. Douglas (1806/7–75) farmer at Wooplaw in Southdean Parish. He was son of Richard, who farmed at Winnie. He married Isabella Sinton, who died at Chesters in 1885, aged 64. Elizabeth (b.1798/9) born in Lilliesleaf Parish. She was the head of the household at West Boonraw farmhouse in 1841 and 1851. George (15th C.) tenant in Raperlaw. In 1493 he was given remission, along with Thomas Brown in Minto, for stealing livestock, as well as for associating with the former Duke of Albany and for stealing sheep along with James Elliot before his earlier remission; his surety was Sir Robert Ker. In 1494/5 he had remission for a set of crimes, including: stealing livestock from Crookston with the ‘traitors of Leven’; stealing sheep from Trabroun; resetting Christie Taylor and other Englishmen; burning Standhill; stealing cows and horses from David Murray; and common theft before the date of his previous remission. His sureties were John Rutherford of Edgerston and Ralph Ker. He was surely related to James, who was also recorded at Raperlaw in 1494/5. In 1502 he had 2 horses and 14 sheep stolen from him from Raperlaw by the Olivers in Strange. George (16th C.) recorded on a list of occupiers of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. George of Birnyrig (16th C.) listed in 1583/4 among some Borderers for failing to appear before the Privy Council. He may be the Davidson of Birnyrig who was ordered in 1567 to present his son James to answer allegations of raiding into England, along with Dame Janet Beaton’s (Lady Buccleuch) servant. He was surely related to David in Birnrig, and David’s brother Willie, who were declared fugitives in 1605. George (16th/17th C.) tenant somewhere around Belses. In 1603 George Turnbull of Belses was accused of a long list of crimes, including stealing 5 sheep belonging to his servant. George of Kames (16th/17th C.) one of the men (along with Robert Scott of Thirlestane, Gavin Elliot of Brugh and others) who broke out of Selkirk jail in 1625. It was stated that he did not help with the escape, being ‘compelled by fear of Selkirk jail in 1625. It was stated that he did not help with the escape, being ‘compelled by fear of his life to swear that he should conceal their flight’. George (17th C.) tenant of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) in 1665, along with Walter and James Wright. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson, or the part corresponding to Hassendean Parish. He married Isobel Bennett and their children included: William (b.1680); Ralph (b.1683); and Walter (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were Patrick Dodds and John Hardie. Probably the same George was listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (1721/2–1816) farmer at Hyndlee. He was father of James, the inspiration for ‘Dandie Dinmont’. He is probably the George, farmer at Roughleeneuk, recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1790–97. He is recorded as owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at Hyndlee on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He married Helen Jerdon, who died in 1803, aged 72. Their children included James (1764/5–1820). He died at the age of 94, and is buried in Oxnam. George (b.c.1820) farm steward at Easter Lilliesleaf in 1841. George (b.1822/3) from Old Machar in Aberdeenshire. In 1851 he was a teacher of English and Geography, living on the Round Close. His wife was Jessie, from Stow. It is possible he was son of James, who was a teacher in Newcastle. George (b.1836) son of George and Catherine Hughes. He was a wool spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living in Jedburgh with his mother and brother Somerville. He married Esther Kersel (1837–83) in Hawick in 1855. They had 7 children: Margaret (b.1855), baptised in Wilton; and George, Katherine, Adam, John, William and James Maxwell. He died in Ontario, Canada. His wife secondly married Andrew Hewie in 1872. George (1846–1923) writer of many poems, including ‘Auld Hawick where I was Born’, which was adapted as a song by Adam L. Ingles in 1950. He was born in Hawick, son of William and Mary Tait. He worked as a plasterer, following his father’s trade. Developing an interest in poetry he became Masonic Bard to Lodge 111, where he would often recite his own pieces. He died at 24 Bridge Street and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. George (d.1927) secretary and director at Wilson & Glenny’s. He was also a Trustee of Allars Kirk. His daughter Isabella married William Coutts Hunter. Rev. George (1855–1936) from Dundee, son of an engine-driver. He worked as a clerk in a factory in Dundee and attended St. Andrews University 1875–79. He was ordained as minister of Allars Kirk in 1883. He moved to Flinders Street Church, Adelaide in 1897, later becoming Moderator of South Australia and receiving a doctorate. While in Hawick he wrote a poem entitled ‘I’ll never play golf any more’. His wife led the Sunday School at Allars, and they raised two sons, Dan and Lundie, in Hawick. He visited Hawick again in 1909 when there was a reception for him. He died in Adelaide. Gilbert (1833–96) local banker (with the British Linen Bank) and farmer. He was son of banker and farmer William. He served as Treasurer for the Cottage Hospital. He was a contributor to the Common Riding in the 1880s. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1879. He left a sum of money to the town for an amenity that all townspeople could enjoy. This led to the construction of the ornamental fountain in front of the Museum. 3 stained glass windows were also placed in the Old Parish Church, in his memory, and in memory of his mother and father. Gilbert (19th/20th C.) probably son of banker Gilbert. He was farmer at Burnhead in the 1910s. Harry of Belses (1755–1837), W.S., on of James, merchant in Dysart, he became a Writer to the Signet in 1781. He was Sheriff-Substitute for Middlothan 1791–1820. At some point he purchased the Belses estate. He was listed there as a Commissioner for Roxbroughshire in 1805, and along with his son James in 1819. In 1811 his lands of Belses were valued at £600. He married Ann Gillespie. Henry (16th/17th C.) son of David of ‘the Kamis’, presumably Minto Kames. In 1601 he was maimed by having his right hand cut off, this being in a fight between Turnbulls of the Minto area and Kers in Jedburgh, part of an ongoing feud between the 2 families. His brothers ‘George, Raff, James and William’ were also involved. In 1610 he and ‘Raff’ were named by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend them and 8 Turnbulls, for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder...

of Thomas Ker of Craling
tenant farmer at Hyndlee. He himself farmed at Hyndlee and was partly formed the basis of the character Dandie Dinmont in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’. He was a keen fox hunter, said to have the best hounds on the Border. He named 2 of his best terriers ‘Mustard’ and ‘Pepper’ after their colours. He is said to have been very independent of character, as well as superstitious, keeping a fast day on the anniversary of when his house at Roughlenuk was struck by lightning with no injuries. After Sir Walter Scott’s book became popular he received ‘Dandie Dinmont’ as a nickname. His children were boarders at the Yarrow school where James Scott was master. He is buried in Oxnam and his gravestone includes the nickname. James (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. His wife Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Crombie died in 1816. Their children included John (b.1776) and Agnes (b.1778). James (b.c.1770) tailor on Fore Row in Wilton Dean. He was recorded there in 1841 along with Isabella, probably his wife. James (1782–1854) son of Richard and Janet Turnbull, he was born in Southdean Parish. He became a grain, provision and wine merchant of the Sandbed, and later a draper in Silver Street. He was cousin of James Davidson of Hyndlee, who was the model for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Dandie Dinmont’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was one of the founders of the Relief Church in Hawick. He married Agnes Mundell (who came from Greensidehall). She presented a frame containing 32 pencil sketches of celebrated characters to the Archaeological Society. James (19th C.) farmer at Greensidehall in 1841. James (b.c.1800) farmer at Greensidehall. During the election ‘riots’ of 1837 he had his coat torn and was knocked down. He was one of the men who went down to London to give evidence at the inquiry. He was at Greensidehall in 1841. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Richard, Adam, Janet and John. James (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Lochend in the 1860s. He was also a registered voter in Cavers Parish. James (19th C.) Hawick resident who married Helen Ekron in 1851. It is unclear who his wife’s parents were. James (1831/2–1899) known as a quiet man, he worked as a woolsorter and later as a coal merchant. He was associated with the Evangelical Union Church and the Hawick Home Mission. He married Elizabeth Laurie, who died in 1862. They had 4 daughters: Barbara Scott, who married coal merchant John Turnbull; Jane Gould; Christina, who married John Cairns, Director of the Scottish Co-operative Wholesale Society Ltd.; and Lizzie, who married Robert Oliver. His brother-in-law John R, Laurie wrote some lines in his memory and John C. Goodfellow wrote 2 sonnets about him. He lived at Dalkeith Place and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery – ‘...And thus through life’s allotted span he lived, And died as he had lived, a gentle man’ [JCG]. James Norman Grieve ‘Norman’ (1931–) first person born in the Haig Maternity Home. He played cricket for Scotland in 1951 and rugby for Scotland 1952–54. He was also Captain of the Scotland squad for one match. Jessie (b.1820/1) teacher at the Crescent in 1852, along with her mother Jessie. She is recorded in 1851 as a teacher of English, Music and French at about 2 Sliitrig Crescent and in 1861 as a teacher of music, dancing and French at 1 Sliitrig Bank. It seems likely that her and her mother ran a small school for girls. She produced a pen and ink sketch of St. Mary’s Kirk in about 1850; it was drawn from near the bottom of the Mill Path and shows the area before there were any houses along Sliitrig Bank and Old Manse Lane. She presented a frame containing 32 pencil sketches of celebrated characters to the Archaeological Society. John (15th C.) member of the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He was recorded as ‘Johannem Davidsone’. John (15th C.) tenant in Minto recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was allowed to ‘com-pone’ for several crimes: stealing 10 sheep from Archibald Rutherford; common theft committed with James Turnbull; stealing a horse from the same James Turnbull; stealing 100 ells of woollen cloth from Spittal-on-Rule; and reset of thefts ‘old and new’. His surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster at Minto in 1616. Rev. John (17th C.) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1628, he became minister of Southdean in 1635. He gave £10 towards building the library at Glasgow University in 1636. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. He was confined to his parish in 1662 for refusing to conform to Episcopacy, and in 1666 was deprived ‘for fornication’ (although it is possible this was an excuse to get rid of a Covenanter). He married Agnes Mitchell, who died in 1640, aged 30. John (17th C.) listed at Whithope among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident of the Flex. He married Jean Gledstains in Hawick in 1713 and their children included: Walter (b.1716); Bessie (b.1718); John (b.1720); and George (b.1722). The witnesses in 1716 were tailor Walter Gledstains (probably related to his wife) and beadle Walter Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Howcleugh in 1780, although his wife was at Eildrig (an unusual baptismal entry). Perhaps the same John was living at Chapelhill in 1790. He is probably the John who married Margaret Inglis in 1777 and had children: Walter (b.1778); John (b.1780); Betty (b.1783); Thomas (b.1790). His wife is probably the Margaret (b.1755), daughter of John Inglis, who lived at Broadlee and Eildrig. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Davidson in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) plasterer in Hawick. His daughter Christian died in 1808. John (b.1793/4) blacksmith at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was at about 1 Orrock Place in 1841, living with his wife Esther and children Walter, Mary and James. He was also there in 1851 and listed as a blacksmith on Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. John (b.1803/4) from Cavers Parish, he was a joiner in Denholm, probably on Canongate. In 1851 he was living at Spittal-on-Rule. He married Janet Archibald. John (c.1825–84) plasterer, perhaps originally with William Davidson’s. He was an early Trustee of Hawick Free (later St. George’s) Kirk. He may also have been the same John who was the first Secretary of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from about 1848. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Scott, the Kelso man who published the evangelical newspaper ‘The Christian’. In 1871 he was described as an ‘architect and surveyor, modeller and plasterer and cement musher’ employing 5 men. He lived in Allars Crescent and later at Wellogate Villa. His son John became a religious publisher and he also had a daughter. John (b.1832) son of banker and farmer William. He was farmer at Adderstoneshie in. In 1861 he was recorded there, farming 1200 acres and employing 9 people and was recorded there in 1868. He married Anne Stavert and their children included Jane A., Margaret, William and Andrew. John (b.1842) born at Burnside, he was son of William and Euphemia Pow. In 1867 in Teviothead he married Betsy, daughter of Gavin Pow. They lived in Hobkirk and Wilton Parishes where they had 4 children: Betsy (b.1868); John (b.1868); Euphemia (b.1869); and Gavin (b.1871). They then emigrated to Ontario and had 4 more children, Walter, Jean Laidlaw, William and Robert James. John (b.1868) probably son of John. He was farmer at Adderstoneshie in 1901. His wife Sarah came from England. John (d.c.1933) son of plasterer John. He trained in the offices of ‘The Christian’ newspaper and became manager of Oliphants, Ltd., another religious publishers. John (1963–2017) born in Hawick, son of Pym and Isabel, he grew up in Newcastle-on and attended the High School. He spent a brief period in the R.A.F., attended teacher training college in London and worked for 24 years for the Northumbria Police. In 2005 he emigrated to Canada, settling in Abbotsford, British Columbia. He was killed in the line of duty. Highly regarded by his colleagues and adopted community, his memorial service was attended by thousands. Joseph (18th C.) of Southdean, made an Honorary Burgess in 1777. Joseph of Stewartfield (18th/19th C.) listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was probably son of the Scottish antiquary and lawyer, John, who co-founded the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Margaret (17th C.) sister of James. In 1690 she was recorded as joint tenant, along with her brother, of half the farm of Newbigging. In 1692 she was still leasing part of the farm, with her brother ‘James being caut[ione]r for his sister for this year’, and in 1694 and 1698 they were leasing half of Newbigging ‘conjunctly and severally’. She was also listed at Newbigging among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (d.1986) Cornet’s Lass to Tom Winning in 1919, in the first Common Riding after the war. She founded the Comet’s Lasses and Acting Mothers’ Association in 1954 and was Captain of the 1st Hawick Guides. She was unmarried, and stayed near her brother in Berwickshire. Marion (16th C.) tenant at ‘Esslesche’, probably Effledge, when in 1535 she had 7 cows and oxen stolen on these lands by William Scott ‘in Layk’. Arthur Douglas and Thomas ‘Fresall’ are also mentioned as being in the same lands. Ralph (16th/17th C.) son of David of Kames. He was referred to as ‘Raff’ when, along with several of his brothers, he was part of the attack by Turnbuls and others on Kers in Jedburgh in 1601. In 1610 he and his brother Henry were named, along with 8 Turnbuls, when the Privy Council appointed a commission to apprehend them, since they were still ‘unrelaxed from hornings’ following the murder of Kers and Grahamslaws. Ralph of Greenhouse (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He paid the land tax for part of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1678, this being valued at £104, and being the lands then known as Greenhouse. He was probably related to Andrew, who was recorded as owner of another part of Raperlaw in 1678. He may have been the same ‘Ralf Daviesone in Raperlaw’ recorded in 1632 when he feued part of Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. It is possible that he was related to the ‘Raff’, son of David of Kames, who was part of the attack by Turnbuls and others on Kers in Jedburgh in 1601. Either he or a later Ralph was the former owner of ‘Ralph Davidson’s part of Greenhouse’, recorded among the properties of Andrew Davidson in 1788 and Robert Laidlaw in 1811. Richard (1763/4–1838) tenant farmer at Swinnie. His children were baptised in Southdean Parish. He married Janet Turnbull (1772/3–1860) and their children included: James (b.1782); an unnamed child (b.1786); William (1789/90–1838), who died at Gladstone Terrace, Edinburgh; John (1794–1866), tenant in Arks; Richard (1797–1852), who also farmed at Swinnie; George (b.1796); Agnes (b.1799); Walter (1801–05); Mark (b.1802); Helen (1804–62), who died at Southdean Mill; Walter (again, 1805–47), who died in Australia; Douglas (1807–75) tenant in Wooplaw; and Jane (b.1816). The family are buried in Oxnam. Richard (1797/8–1852) 4th son of Richard and Janet Turnbull. He was farmer at Swinnie, and was related to the ‘Dandie Dinmont’ family, being a great-nephew of James Davidson. He hunted with the Jedforest Hunt and had terriers that were derived from those of his great-uncle. His daughter Agnes married William Bell, miller of Southdean Mill. Robert (15th C.) mentioned at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Edward Turnbull in Bedrule had remission for stealing a cow from him at Newton. This seems likely to be the Newton in Bedrule Parish. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) tenant of lands for which the superior was Alexander Lord Home, recorded in 1562/3. He was one of the ‘pretended tenants’ who refused to leave Midshiels, Appletreehall, Broadlee, ‘Cotlaw’, Burnside and mill, and ‘occupied the lands by violence’. He could be the man of the same name who was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with William Ker of Caverton as surety. Robert (17th C.) Covenant supporter and fugitive. He was hired by ‘the Good Lady’ Cavers as her gardener, which was cited as part of the evidence of her crimes when she was arrested in 1682. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was living at Newbigging in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for John Wilson, tailor there. He was surely related to James, who was tenant in Newbigging in the 1790s. Capt. Robert of Pinnacliehill (18th C.) brother-in-law of Cornelius Elliot and cousin of Adam Ogilvie. He was in the Bengal Army and made a small fortune in the East Indies. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He was Captain in the Kelso Volunteers. Probably the same Robert of Pinnacliehill was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. In 1780 he married Helen, daughter of William Elliot of Wolfelee. His daughter Margaret married James Elliot of Wolfelee. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Mervinslaw, recorded on the 1790–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Woll Rig, recorded as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (1778–1855) labourer, born in Lempitlaw, who lived much of his life at Morebattle. He is remembered for his poetry, published in 3 collections during his lifetime, the last being ‘Leaves from a Peasant’s Cottage Drawer’ (1848). Robert ‘Robbie’ (1789–1836) well known Hawick figure of the early 19th century, regularly pushing his wheelbarrow between Nixon’s mill and warehouse. There is an Adam Brown portrait of him in the Museum, although no known portrait exists of his employer, John Nixon. Robert ‘Robbie’ (1845–1921) son of Walter, blacksmith at Newmill. He went to Appletreehall as a blacksmith journeyman. In about 1874 he became blacksmith at Stobs Woodfoot. When the military bought the estate in 1903 and the old smiddy was demolished, he moved to Whithlaw Haugh. In 1866 he married Jane, daughter of James Grieve, from Newcastleton. They had 4 boys and 4 girls (mostly baptised in Wilton Parish) including: Elizabeth (b.1867); Walter (b.1869), who emigrated to the U.S.A., sent for his Galashiel sweetheart and farmed at Red River; Mary (b.1871); and Jessie (b.1873). 2 of the daughters emigrated to the United States, but both returned, one marrying Jim Duncan from Aberdeen, who became joiner at Appletreehall. 2 brothers also went to South Africa (including Jim). There is a photograph of him in his working apron, beside his 2nd daughter. Samuel George (19th/20th C.) Hawick doctor of Buccleuch Street. Near the end of the first decade of the 1900s he became partner with Dr. David Murray, who died in 1911. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Little and their children included Bessie (b.1678) and Margaret (b.1680). The witnesses in 1680 were Michael and William Turnbull. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Stobicote in 1716 when his son Walter was baptised. Perhaps the same Thomas married Margaret Waugh in Cavers in 1716. Perhaps the same Thomas along with Andrew in Newbigging witnessed a baptism in Hawick for George Glendinning in 1710. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Pott in 1717 and Margaret Pott in 1730 (the marriages being recorded in Cavers Parish). Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Broadlee in 1772 when his son Thomas was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the Thomas who married Isobel Miller in 1763 and also had children Walter (b.1770) and John (b.1782). Thomas of Milnholm (18th/19th C.) one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826. Thomas (b.c.1825) shoemaker on the Sandbed in 1841 and living at the Village in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included James, Ewen, Thomas and John. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1838–70) born probably in Oxnam Parish, son of shepherd Jonah and Frances. His father used to walk 15 miles evey Sunday to attend the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. His father moved to near Ancrum when he was 11, and he attended school there, before moving on to Jedburgh and Edinburgh University. He then trained for the United Presbyterian Church and became a ‘probationer’, but ill-health forced him to stop preaching in 1866. He became known as a poet and writer of songs. A memoir and collection of his poems etc. was published by James Brown. A memorial was erected in Oxnam Churchyard by his friends. Thomas (1846/7–93) merchant in Newcastleton. He married Margaret Oliver, who died in 1937, aged 87. They are buried at Ettleston. Walter (17th C.) tenant at Newlands who had a feu-contract with Thomas, Lord Binning in 1632. In 1665 he was later recorded as tenant of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) along with George and also James Wright, when they made an agreement with neighbouring tenants regarding the boundaries between them. He was probably related to David, tenant of Newlands in 1663. Walter (17th C.) listed at Falnash Mill among ‘The poor in Hawick Paroch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) recorded at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to the earlier Ralph of Greenhouse. Walter (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassanden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Wilkie in Hassendean in 1683. Walter (b.c.1770) blacksmith at Newmill. He is listed there in 1841 with children Walter, Christian and Betty. He is probably the Walter who married Mary Grieve in Hawick Parish in 1790. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bitchlaw, in Cavers Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. Walter (b.1807/8) blacksmith at Newmill (on Teviot), son of Walter, who was blacksmith there before him. He is listed there in 1851 and in 1861 he was employing 2 people at Newmill. He married Elizabeth Nichol and their children included: Walter (b.c.1841); Mary (b.1843); Robert (b.1845), blacksmith at Stobs Woodfoot; Jane (b.c.1847); William (b.1849); Helen (b.1853); James Grieve (b.1856); and Alexander (b.1858). Walter (b.1815/6) weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Weensland Mills, was on Slitrig Crescent in 1851 and at Lynnwood Cottages in 1861. He worked at Lynnwood Mills and set music to the song ‘Lean Yeddie Gibson’. He may be the Walter whose presence was reported as being a great miss at the 1875 Common Riding. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Margaret, who died young; James (b.1841); James (again, b.1843); Joan (b.1845); Margaret (b.1849); William (b.1853); and Walter (b.1855); as well as adopted children Margaret and Thomas Stavert. Walter (1815/6–61) plasterer. He was living at the West Port in 1841, probably No. 5 Loan. In 1851 he was on the Backrow and at 52 Loan in 1861. He married Isabella Sharp, who died in 1859, aged 46. Their children included Margaret, John, Agnes, Gilbert, Janet, James, William and Helen. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Walter (b.1832/3) born in Wilton Parish, he was farm steward living at East Cote in 841. Walter (19th/20th C.) originally from Hawick, he trained as a pharmacist, then moved to Dundee, where he bought a bankrupt chemist’s in 1897. He built this into a thriving set of chemist’s and veterinary shops across East Central and North East Scotland. Rev. Walter (b.1875) born at Sunnyside in Cavers Parish, son of William and Mary Douglas. He was educated at Kirkton, Oxnam, Smalholm and then Edinburgh University, graduating in 1913. He taught in several schools before being licensed as a minister in 1914 and became minister at the Tron Kirk the following year. In 1906 he married Rosetta Ann, daughter of Lorenzo Padgett and Frances Beaumont. His children included: Lorenzo Douglas; Frances Mary; and William Leslie Beaumont. William (15th C.) described as one of three bailies ‘in that part’ in a document on 1448 in which Stephen Scott of Castelaw gained the ‘Burrellands’ in Eckford. He was son of the deceased Richard, Burgess of Jedburgh. William (16th C.) resident of somewhere in Teviotdale. He was recorded in an English letter of 1542 as a leader of a raid, along with George Young, and described as ‘oon of the Pringles’. They robbed a village in England, but were intercepted on their return and 14 men captured. William (17th C.) described as ‘in Carlanrig’ in 1632 when he and several others feued the lands of Westbarns from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. William (17th C.) merchant and Bailie in Jedburgh. In about 1688 he bought the lands of Blackhope (in Liddesdale) from Robert Elliot in Larriston, who had become bankrupt. There may have been a further charter of adjudication of the lands in 1695. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Holt. His wife was Janet Aitkin and their son Adam was born in 1702 and the baptism was witnessed by Adam Elliot of Arkleton and his servant John Bell. William (1754/5-1807) portioner in Lanton. He married Agnes Turnbull, who died in 1849, aged 92. Their son George was also portioner in Lanton, and married Margaret Main. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard, with their names inscribed on a stone bearing 17th century initials of Turnbuls. William (18th C.) footman at Stobs in 1786–88, when he was working for Sir Francis Elliott. In 1791 he was listed as a house servant at Stobs and was a footman again in 1797. William (1781/2–1871) portioner in Lanton, son of William. He married Margaret Main, who died in 1850, aged 66. They are buried in Bedrule. William (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitchesters on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably related to James, who was at Sea Croft at the same time. William (18th/19th C.) agricultural labourer who lived at Spittal-on-Rule. In 1815 he married Barbara Laidlaw. In 1841 the family were living in Roxburgh and in 1851 were at Howden Moor. Their children (baptised in Cavers Parish) included: William (b.1817); Jeanie (b.1819); Andrew (b.1821); Agnes (b.1823); John (b.1826); Walter (b.1828); George (b.1831); James Laidlaw (b.1834); Thomas (b.1838); and Barbara (b.c.1848). He and his wife are buried in Bedrule Cemetery. William (b.1792/3) banker of Hawick, of whom a portrait exists. He was born in Lilliesleaf Parish. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was an insurance agent for the British Fire Office, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory for Hawick. He is probably the partner of ‘Dickson and Davidson’ who were listed as Hawick agents of the British Linen Bank in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was also a farmer. He was listed as the Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant in Ropelawshiel in 1837, and is probably the William who was tenant at Adderstoneshiel in the 1860s. In the 1841 census he is a bank agent on the High Street, and in 1851 was at about No. 18. He married Jane Aitkin, from Kirkton Parish. Their children included: John (b.1832), who farmed at Adderstoneshiel; Gilbert (b.1833), also a banker; Jane Amos (b.1836); and William (b.1842). In 1861 he was at 18 High Street. William (b.1803) of the family of plasterers, son of John and Janet Thorburn. He was listed as a plasterer on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the Loan in 1837 and 1852. He was living at 41 Loan on the censuses for 1841–61. He married Mary Ekron in 1823, and they had 4 children together. Mary died in 1830 and he secondly married Mary Tait, having 8 more children. His 12 known children are: John (b.1824); William (b.1826), who emigrated to Australia; Andrew (b.1827), also went to Australia; Helen (b.1829); Janet (b.1834); Catherine (‘Kitty’, b.1836); Walter (b.1838); Isabel (b.1839); James (b.1840); Mary (b.1845);
Davie Aathings

George (b.1847), who carried on the business; and Agnes (b.1849). William (1822/3–97) from Kelso, he came to Hawick at the age of eight and worked as a weaver. Around 1875 he and his brother-in-law (Adam Paterson) went into partnership in Haddington as a tweed manufacturer. About 1883 he started his own business in Oliver Crescent. He married Helen Paterson, who died in 1903, aged 83. Their children included William (who became Provost of Haddington), Jeanie (who married Walter, son of barber Frank McKenzie). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery and Helen (b.1860). William (1863–1938) son of manufacturer William, he was born in Hawick. He worked as a designer with his uncle’s firm Adam Paterson & Sons, West Mills, Haddington, and became Provost of that town. He married Margaret Beatrice Brown, who died in 1936, aged 76 (formerly spelled ‘Davidsone’, ‘Davidsson’, ‘Davidsohn’, ‘Davidsson’, ‘Davison’, ‘Davison’, etc.).

Davie Aathings (dà-vee-aw-thingz) n. former nickname for a man in Hawick, probably a shopkeeper – ‘Here’s Soapy Ballantyne and Wull Slush, Here’s Todd Lowrie and Peggy Neil; Davie A’-things and auld Kush-Mush, And Jenny A’-things is here as weel’ [HI].

Davie wi the Tod’s Tail (dà-vee-wi-thu-tòdz-tàl) n. literally ‘Davie with the Fox’s Tail’, nickname for David Scott of Howpasley.

Davies (dà-veez) n. George (1818/9–72) butcher at 6 High Street. He came from Granton. He is listed (as ‘Davis’) in Slater’s 1852 directory, with fleisher’s shops on the High Street and the Howgate. He married Margaret Scott, who died in 1876, aged 53. She was daughter of William Scott, tenant of Girnwood, and a descendant of the Scotts of Milsington. Their children included Annie (who moved to New Zealand), and Jeanie (who married Provost John Wilson, farmer at Greenbanks. Their children included Walter (who also farmed at Harwood), John (who lived near Duns), Elizabeth (who married George Scott Easton of Todrig), Jeanie, Annie (who moved to New Zealand), and Margaret (who became a nurse).

Davington (dà-vìn-tìn) n. hamlet in Dumfriesshire, on the White Esk, about 6 miles south of Ettrick. The lands were formerly part of the estate of the Scotts of Thirlestane, being retained by the senior branch of the family when they lost the main estate in the mid-17th century. Legal battles among descendants of the Scotts of Davington led to final debts, and the farm was sold to James Beattie in 1784. A meteorological observatory was built nearby in 1904–07 and the Kagyu Samye Ling Tibetan Centre from 1967 – ‘Warn Davington, and Rennelburn, with Tandhill bold and free, To meet me in full armour, the morn at Woodhouselee’ [WSB] (also written ‘Davinton’).

Davis (dà-vis) n. Edward (b.c.1815) coach driver from England. He was at Mosspaul on the 1841 census. John (18th C.) footman at Riddell in 1794, when he was working for Lady Riddell. Probably the same man is listed as ‘Thomas’ at Riddell in 1797.

Davit (dà-vi’) n., arch. Christian name, usually a pet form of David ‘Dauvit had dwalt i’ the Mid Raw And plied wi’ his cairrur cairt Jinglin’ raig’lar ilk a week Owre-by the Copshaw airt’ [DH] (there are several spelling variants, e.g. ‘Daavid’ and ‘Dauvit’).

daw (daw) v., poet. to dawn – ‘Quhill the daye daw, an’ the skaddaws flie awa . . .’ [HSR], ‘. . . mair nor thaye that watche for the dawin’ o; the daye’ [HSR].

dawalt (da-wawt) pp., arch. tired, wearied – ‘. . . whan the bruizzin, frizzlin heat turns frush things tewd an rizzert, an leify folk dawalt an waaf’ [ECS], ‘A was keindih dawalt oot, but A’ve gaen ti the spriggit and swaibblt masul weel up wui waeter’ [ECS] (also written ‘dawallt’; the verb is ‘daul’, from Old English).
Dadmundsteed (dad-mund-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed in a rental roll of c.1376 in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ (roughly the western side of the Hermitage Water). The name is recorded as ‘Dawdemoundstedte’, but the pronunciation, and precise location, are unknown.

Dawson (daw-sin) n. Archibald (c.1820–54) tailor in Hawick. He is recorded at about 23 High Street in 1851. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1892, aged 70. Their children included Matthew, Mary, Thomas, Janet, Mary (again) and Robert. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (18th C.) tenant farmer at Frogden, in Linton Parish. He was sent to England to learn new farming methods, coming back to farm at Frogden in 1753. He soon introduced the successful farming of turnips, as well as new grasses and other methods, which proved successfully, and were adopted by many of his neighbours. He is sometimes called the Father of Scottish Agriculture.

Dawson International (daw-sin-in-ter-naw-shi-nul) n. cashmere firm, established in the 1870s by Bradford mill owner Joseph Dawson. It grew to be a multi-product company, including Scottish manufacturers such as Ballantyne, Pringle and Barrie. It purchased Pringle of Scotland in 1967, initially seeing boom years for Scottish knitwear. However, the movement of senior management out of Hawick was extremely unpopular in the Town, and blamed for the inability of the firm to cope with foreign competition. Pringle’s was sold in 2000, although Dawson held on to Barrie’s. At one point it employed more than 3,000 people. The original Joseph Dawson business was sold in 2004. By 2012 down-sizing had led to the firm’s finances being dominated by pension liabilities and it went into administration.

Dawstane Burn see Dawston Burn

Dawston Rigg (daw-stin-rig) n. area in Liddesdale, about 11 miles south west of Hawick, near the B6357, on the Dawston Burn. It is suggested to have been the site of the Battle of Degastan in 603. It may also be associated with ‘Dalstanys’, recorded on a rental roll of Liddesdale c.1376 (the name is possibly a corrupted form of ‘Degastan’; a house there is marked ‘Dastenrigg’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Dawstonburn Abbey (daw-stin-burn-aw-bee) n. abbey or chapel suggested by several writers to have existed near the former Dawstonburn railway viaduct. This idea perhaps grew from the discovery of stone crosses near there, one in 1850 and another about 30 years later, these probably being boundary markers. Both were donated to Hawick Museum, and one of them may be the head use for the reconstruction of the Hawick Mercat Cross. There is no physical evidence that there was a religious building here. However, the property did originally belong to Jedburgh Abbey, which explains the names Abbey Sike, Abbey Knowe and Abbey Park recorded nearby; it is possible that the abbey had a grange here. About a mile above the Dawstonburn Viaduct, on the left bank, are the remains of what is probably a farmhouse.

Dawstonburn Brig (daw-stin-burn-brig) n. bridge over the Dawston Burn in upper Liddesdale. It is where the B6357 crosses the stream, north of Saughtree. It is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Dawstonburn Grain (daw-stin-burn-grän) n. name given in 1841 for the cottage at Saughtree Grain.

Dawston Burn (daw-stin-burn) n. stream that flows into the Liddel Water at Saughtree. The general area is commonly associated with the 603 Battle of Degastan. A fortified house near here is marked as ‘Dasenburn’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Dasten burn’ on Blaeu’s map of c.1654. However, there is no evidence for where exactly this may have been located. In the Liddesdale rental roll of 1541 it is ‘Dawstoun’ and valued at 20 shillings, with James Crozier as tenant. ‘Dastoun burne’ is listed among lands once held by Jedburgh Abbey. In 1632 the farm is listed among lands owned by Scott of Buccleuch and also the lands possessed by Hab Henderson. In 1694 Alexander Armstrong was tenant and Robert Armstrong was also residing there. The farm was combined with Cliffhope, on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. Together they covered 2218 acres and were bounded by Singdean, Hudhouse, Saughtree, Stitchelhill and ‘Leys’. There were 19 huts housing railway workers there on the 1861 census (formerly ‘Dawstone’ etc., it is ‘Dastounburne’ in 1632 and ‘Dastonburne’ in 1694; the farm of ‘Dastonburne’ is on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Dawstone’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; the name may derive from the Old English æt Dægsan stan’, meaning ‘at the stone of Ægesa’, identifying it as the site of the Battle of Degastan, occurring as ‘Æt Egesanstane’ or æt Dægstane’ in Bede about 730 C.E.; it should be stressed that this is little more than a supposition).

Dawston Rigg (daw-stin-rig) n. area in Liddesdale, about 11 miles south west of Hawick, near the B6357, on the Dawston Burn. It is suggested to have been the site of the Battle of Degastan in 603. It may also be associated with ‘Dalstanys’, recorded on a rental roll of Liddesdale c.1376 (the name is possibly a corrupted form of ‘Degastan’; a house there is marked ‘Dastenrigg’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).
Daykins Drive (dā-kinz-drīv) n. street built off Weensland Road in front of the Mansfield House Hotel in 1982. It was named after WWI hero John Daykins.

daylight (dā-licht) n., arch. daylight – ‘And the auld Moat, . . . Waitin for daylight and her dancin Callants . . . ’ [DH].

Day Sike (dā-sīk) n. stream joining the Hermitage Water between Hermitage Castle and Braedlie. There are the remains of a small building on the east side and remains of a farmstead on the west side. An old boundary dyke crosses from here to Lady’s Sike on the east.

deacon (dee-kin, dee’-n) n. a Protestant layman who assists the minister, in Presbyterian churches ranking below the minister and elders. Also another name for a master, chairman or quartermaster in a guild, sometimes also called a ‘deacon of trade’. There were formerly 2 of these selected annually for each of Hawick’s 5 (later 7) incorporated trades, and they also sat on the old Town Council – ‘Haveing conveined the toune counsell and old and young late baylyeas . . . togider with the deacons and quartermasters of the hail trades’ [BR1703]. It appears that in some of Hawick’s Trades there may have been a Deacon Convener, serving as effectively the President, together with 2 quarter-masters. Unlike the Magistrates, who were always thereafter called ‘Bailie, the title of ‘Deacon’ lapsed once the person retired from office, according to the old lines ‘Bailie aine, Bailie aye, Deacon aine, Deacon die’ [T] (note the occasional pronunciation with the second vowel sound swallowed).

Deacon Convener (dee-kin-kon-vee-nur) n. title for the senior of the 2 deacons (or quarter-masters) of a Trade, or for the President of the Trade, with the other office-bearers called quarter-masters. It may be that different incorporations have different numbers of and titles for their office-bearers. In Hawick he served as a member of the Town Council in the 18th century. The annual election was the highlight of the calendar of each Trade, being a grand social occasion.

Deacon Dandy (dee-kin-dawn-dee) n. Hawick character of the mid-19th century, presumably someone named Andrew who was possibly with his own shotgun. He never married. He is buried in Jedburgh and his medals were presented to the Regimental Museum. He was recognised in Hawick in 1982, when Daykins Drive was named after him. A commemorative paving stone was unveiled in Jedburgh in 2018.
Deacon of one of the local churches – ‘Deacon Dandy, man but ee’r handy – Yer wit never seems tae desert ye, For ee soon got relief wi’ ‘Bet the Gaird’s’ beef, Deacon Dandy’ [T].

deal (deal) n. a plank or board cut to a standard size – ‘Keep as near tae th’ Land as ye can, for micht there’s naething but a fir deal atween us an’ eternity’ [JTu] (cf. the older dail).
dean (deen) n. a dale, especially the deep, wooded valley of a small river, Glen – ‘She lookit hiche to the bodynge hille, And laighe to the dark-lynge deane . . . ’ [JTe] , ‘ . . . teld the coorse o bon-nie Teviot, wumplin bye paster an pairk an bussy dean’ [ECS] (it is ‘dene’ in English; the word is more common in place names than in modern speech, e.g. Bellendean, Deanbrae, Deanburnhaugh, Denholm Dean, Hassendean, Kirndean, Littledean, Singdean, Timpendale and Wilton Dean).
Dean (deen) n. Robert (13th/14th C.) Parson of Wilton Church, who was one of the signatories of the Ragman Rolls in 1296 (i.e. he was among the list of Scottish nobility and clergy who swore fealty to Edward I at Berwick). His name is recorded as ‘Robert de Dene persone del Eglise de Wilton’. It is possibly that the ‘Dene’ refers to Wilton Dean, but there are many other possibilities. Note that his name has also been transcribed ‘Done’. He is the earliest clergyman of Wilton of whom we have any record.
the Dean (thu-deen) n. familiar name for Wilton Dean – ‘We’ll soon gan gang by the Dean, my lass, And I’ll hold your hand in mine, The flo’ers and trees will be in bloom, As in days o’ auld lang syne’ [WFC].
Deanbrae (deen-brä) n. farm on the A6088 (Bonchester road) between Cauldmill and Kirkton. It was formerly the site of one of the toll-bars for the main road south via the Carter Bar. At the junction with the main road is the war memorial for Cavers and Kirkton Parishes, unveiled by Archibald Palmer Douglas in 1920. It seems likely that this was the home of William Douglas ‘of Denbray’, who was listed in 1488/9 among those Roxburghshire men given remission for their support of the former King, James III. John ‘Long’ (probably ‘Young’) ‘in Denbray’ is also listed in the same remission. The same William Douglas ‘in denebra’ is recorded in 1494/5, as well as John Young, ‘scissor’ (probably carver) there. James Douglas ‘called of Deynebray’ is recorded in 1592, and may have been brother of the Laird of Cavers. James Laidlaw and John Aitchison were there in 1716 and Adam Hart and Walter Nichol in 1733. The land was once part of Gladstains estate, which bordered on Cavers, but was sold to the Douglasses of Cavers by Archibald Crombie of Gladstaines in 1744. James Davidson was there in 1686. Walter Turnbull and Walter Laidlaw were listed there in 1694. The main house here was the residence of Archibald Douglas of Cavers in the 18th century. John Thomson was farmer there in 1797 and Henry Ballantyne in the 1860s. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls for Cavers Parish state that these lands were included ‘in Valuation of Ormiston (in name of Thomas Currer)’, but later sold to the Douglasses of Cavers and valued at about £95. There was also once a toll-bar here (it is ‘Deynebray’ in 1592 and ‘Deanbrae’ in 1686).
Deanbrae Mill (deen-brä-mil) n. former knitwear factory on Weensland Road.
Deanbrae Toll (deen-brä-tól) n. toll-house at Deanbrae in the 19th century, part of the main road from Hawick to the Carter Bar. Jessie Cairns was the toll-keeper in 1861.
the Dean Burn (thu-deen-burn) n. stream that joins the Borthwick from the north-west at Deanburnhaugh. One of the streams in the headwaters appears to have formed part of the Catrail, with the section coming up from Girnwood stopping just near the stream.
Deanburn (deen-burn) n. lands listed as ‘Deneburne’ as part of the estate of Stobs when purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. ‘Denecraig’ was also listed, and it seems likely these lands were associated with Dean Craig near Cogsmill, rather than connected with the Dean Burn near Denholm.
the Dean Burn (thu-deen-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot at Denholm.
the Dean Burn (thu-deen-burn) n. name probably most often used for the Cala Burn, which runs through Wilton Dean. There are many other streams with the same name, e.g. one near Hawthornside – ‘. . . He would give the great Pacific for the Dean Burn’s waterfall’ [GHB].
Deanburn Cottage (deen-burn-ko’-cej) n. cottage in Denholm, to the south of Westgate Hall. It may also have been referred to as ‘Deneburn’.

Deanburnhaugh

Deanburnhaugh (deen-burn-haf) n. hamlet where the Dean Burn meets the Borthwick Water, once a thriving community, which now consists of only a few houses. It was referred to locally as ‘the Haugh’. The road running through the old village was part of the main drove road between the Scottish Midlands and the North of England, passing from Groundistone around the west of Hawick to the upper Borthwick valley and Eskdalemuir. Near the bridge can still be seen parallel dykes from the droving days. The area was part of Wilton Parish until Robertson was formed in 1689/90. A list of residents of Robertson parish and their distances from the nearest church, compiled in 1658, shows 30 people residing at here and Hosscote together. John Scott was recorded there in 1722; John Laidlaw in 1743, John Hislop in 1769–72 and George Turnbull in the 1770s. John Cavers was recorded as owner of a horse there in 1797. Thomas Scott was recorded there in 1800. George Scott was a joiner and merchant there in the early 1800s. It had over 100 residents at its peak in the early 19th century and in the 1851 census there are 58 people listed as residents, when there were more than 20 houses. Part of the lands there were owned by Douglas of Cavers and sold off in the period 1875–1924. Part of the old village can be seen in a photograph from the mid-19th century. There was once a pub, grocers, joiners, cobblers and a post office. The joiners shop of Matt Rodger operated well into the mid-19th century. There was once a mill there (perhaps the same as ‘Minto Mill’), with a mill dam just to the north-west of the farm. The road running past the farm is called Deanfoot Bank, from where a track leads to Spittal Ford. Near this track there are signs of rig and furrow cultivation (it is ‘Dean-fute’ in 1683).

Deanfield Home (deen-feeld-hööm) n. Residential Home and Day Centre based on the site of Deanfield House in 1987. It is formally known as Deanfield Residential Care Home.

Deanfield Hoose (deen-feeld- hoos) n. house on Roadhead, formerly the home of Charles John Wilson of Wilson & Glenny’s. It was built about 1879 for Charles Wilson, designed by John Guthrie. It was demolished to make way for the old-folks home, opened in 1987.

Deanfit (deen-fi) n. Deanfoot, farm and lands in Minto Parish, directly between the village and the Teviot. Along with Craigend they were sold by John Turnbull of Minto to Gilbert Elliot of Craigend in the mid-17th century. In 1643 they were valued along with Craigend at £600. When inherited by Gilbert Elliot, son of Archibald, in 1683, they were a 50-shilling land of new extent, and came with rights to pastureage on Minto Common. In 1779 the livery of these lands was disponed by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto to Robert Trotter of Bush, as part of a plan to add Whig supporters to the Roxburghshire voters’ roll. The lands explicitly included ‘the haugh called the Common-haugh, mains, and Long-haugh parks, Minto-bank, Yethope park, the six parks or inclosures called the Bankhead parks, and four parks or inclosures called the Old-glebe parks’. The boundary was formed by the Minto-to-Hawick road, Hassendeanbank, Denholm Haugh, the Teviot, the Minto-to-Jedburgh road. In about 1788 the lands were described as ‘Lillilaw park’, ‘Squarehaugh park’, ‘Lake’s-haugh’, ‘Main’s-haugh’, ‘Longhugh’, 11 ‘Bankend parks’, ‘Nutbank’, ‘Hutcher’s river-side’ and ‘House and yeard’, valued together at £433 17s 10d. John Wilson was farmer there in 1797, James Brodie in 1851 and James Amos in the 1860s. There was once a mill there (perhaps the same as ‘Minto Mill’), with a mill dam just to the north-west of the farm. The road running past the farm is called Deanfoot Bank, from where a track leads to Spittal Ford. Near this track there are signs of rig and furrow cultivation (it is ‘Dean-fute’ in 1683).
Deanfit

Deanfit (deen-fi’) n. Deanfoot, former name for lands that were probably somewhere in the Borthwick valley. The lands were among those inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester in 1694.

Deanfit Mill (deen-fi’-mil) n. former mill at the corner of Victoria Road and Roadhead, being part of Howlands Mills, with its distinctive square tower. The mill at the western end of Victoria Road was originally called ‘Howlands Mill’, but changed to ‘Dean Mill’ in the 1913. The whole was incorporated into Victoria Mills just before WWII, while the name ‘Deanfit’ continued to be used for the part at the foot of Roadhead. Despite some efforts to have the tower incorporated into the design of the new hospital, it was all demolished in 2004.

Deanheid (deen-heed) n. former farm on the Cavers estate, between East Middle and Denholm Hill, and near the head of Denholm Dean. Walter Turnbull was there in 1717 and Archibald Learmonth in 1737. In a field to the south-west are signs of an old enclosure of some sort.

Dean Mill (deen-mil) n. former name for a corn mill on the Cala Burn in the Langlands estate. The precise location is unknown, so it is unclear if it was in the same place as the later spinning mill (but that seems likely). The area is recorded in 1650 when there were 18 ‘communicants’ there, namely Robert Langlands, Margaret ‘Per’, George Langlands, Adam Langlands, Margaret Langlands, John Mitchell, John Ross, Patrick Hardie, Robert Turnbull, James Pearson, Marion Scott, Bessie Riddell, Isobel Little, Margaret Scott, Janet ‘Morling’, William Scott, Janet Scott and Margaret Scott; at that time it seems that the name was probably synonymous with Dean village. In the 1694 Hearth Tax records the area is listed as having a tenant, 2 cottars, a shepherd and a resident in the boathouse, as well as the house of Langlands of that Ilk. Adam Wright was recorded there in 1729 (it was ‘Deanemilne’ in 1650, ‘Dean milne’ in 1694 and ‘Deanmihn’ in 1729; it was marked ‘Dennmil’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

the Dean Mill (thu-deen-mil) n. the Dean Spinning Mill, the only real industry to develop in the area of Wilton Dean. It was situated on the Cala Burn, with proprietor John Scott in the early part of the 19th century. William and Oliver Thomas were listed there in Pigot’s 1837 directory, manufacturing both woollens and hosiery. The buildings were demolished by the Laird of Langlands in 1860. In its last few years it was used as a store-house, and also held an illicit whisky still. The mill pond was filled in to provide a drying green and play area for the tenants. The ‘Deanfit Mill’ was also sometimes known as ‘Dean Mill’. In the 17th century there was a ‘Deanmilne’ on Langlands estate, probably a corn mill situated on the Cala Burn.

Dean Mills (deen-mils) n. later name for Howlands Mill, at the western end of Victoria Road, and also known as the ‘Deanfit Mill’. It was built by Greenwood, Watt & Co. in the 1880s, with the design by John Manuel. In 1911 it was sold to Sime, Williamson & Co., and by 1913 the name was changed from ‘Howlands Mill’ to ‘Dean Mills. In the late 1930s it was sold to Innes, Henderson & Co., and incorporated into their Victoria Mills. Empty through the 1990s, it was demolished in 2004 to make way for the new hospital.

Dean o Guild (deen-o-gild) n. magistrate in a Scottish Burgh appointed onto the town guilds to resolve trading disputes. By about the mid-19th century the main duty was to supervise the erection of new buildings to ensure they conformed to the law. It was then synonymous with the Master of Works. Hawick’s Dean of Guild was originally a public official appointed by the Council. Sometime in the later 19th century it became a position taken by one of the elected councillors, with the responsibility of dealing with building plans. James Turnbull held the position before his death in 1797. The position was done away with before Reorganisation, with the last perhaps being ‘Bull’ Finlayson.

Dean Road (deen-ro’dl) n. road that is the continuation of Sunnyhill Road, named after Wilton Dean. It was once part of the main road to the Borthwick.

Deans (deenz) n. Agnete (16th C.) listed in 1552 among the people owed money in the last testament of William Scott, younger of Branholme. It is unclear whether ‘Agnete’ was a first name, or whether it referred to a relative on the father’s side. Allan (15th/16th C.) appointed as special Sheriff of Roxburghshire in order to administer the sasine for the Barony of Hawick for Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511/2. His name was recorded as ‘Alanus Denis’ and sasine was given at the Mote. He is probably the ‘Alano Denys sergiando’ who witnessed the 1514 sasine of the barony of Hawick for James Douglas of Drumlanrig; he was thus an official of some sort, perhaps even Burgh Officer, but more likely an official of the Sheriff. Allan (16th C.) possibly related to the other early Deans. He was one of 4 Hawick ‘indwellers’ named in a court
Deans

Deans have double the punishment. Andrew do the same again in future, otherwise he would Watch Knowe. However, he was warned not to of May, 1645’, but was let off since he was at the meeting of the Common, upon the 24th Hawick who was accused of not being at the ‘riding in Edinburgh. He may be the Alan in Hawick who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628. They had to swear allegiance to the Crown, suggesting that they had been supporters of the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, and perhaps involved in Borders raids. His name is there recorded as ‘Allane Denys’ and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig acted as their cautioner in 1572/3. Possibly the same ‘Allane Dennes’ of Hawick is mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He may also be the same ‘Allane Deins’ who witnessed a bond of 1594/5: this was drawn up by James Gedstains of Cocklaw to prevent fighting between local Turnbuls and Elliots and was signed along with Robert Langlands of that Ilk and William Scott if Allanhaugh, suggesting that he was a man of some importance in the Town. Allan (17th C.) miller in Hawick who in 1621 was acquitted along with 2 others of regularly carrying a pistol in public and shooting his neighbours doves and fowl (he may have been a descendant of ‘John Deans’). He was also on a list of men suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627. However, when produced by the Bailie before the Privy Council he was charged 300 merks caution for appearing again if required, and dismissed; presumably he was therefore not sent to the wars. His caution money was paid by George Deans, servitor to Robert Burnet, advocate, who seems likely to have been a relative living in Edinburgh. He may be the Alan in Hawick who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands at Braxholme or Trinitylands. Probably the same Allan was still a local miller in 1641 when his servant Margaret Ainslie is recorded having confessed to stealing money from him. Allan (17th C.) grandson and heir of Robert, who was a Burgess of Hawick. In 1622 he had a sasine for a piece of waste land adjacent to the Slitrig in the middle of Hawick, which had belonged to his grandfather. He could be the same as one of the nearly contemporary Allans. Allan (17th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Janet Scott. Their children included: Walter (b.1636). Allan (17th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Agnes Gedstains. Their son Allan was born in 1648. Allan (17th C.) ‘traveller’ of Hawick who was accused of not being at the ‘riding an meithing of the Common, upon the 24th of May, 1645’, but was let off since he was at the Watch Knowe. However, he was warned not to do the same again in future, otherwise he would have double the punishment. Andrew (17th C.) named on a list of ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Andrew (17th C.) skinner, who was recorded in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642, when he was forced to pay debts and expenses to Walter Robson. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Margaret Oliver. Their children include: John (b.1641); George (b.1643); Malie (b.1647); Thomas (b.1650); and Robert (b.1650). Andrew (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Margaret Nichol in Bedrule Parish in 1692. Their children included: Thomas (b.1696); and Robert (b.1701). He could be the Andrew who witnessed a Hesendean baptism for Walter Sanderson in 1683 and another for Francis Scott in 1687. Colin (1555–) Hawick born rugby player in the Hooker position. He first played for Scotland in 1978 and gained 52 caps, also playing for the British Lions and being awarded the M.B.E. for services to rugby in 1988. He now manages a window firm and published an autobiography, ‘So you’re a hooker then’ (1987).

D.D. (19th/20th C.) first Secretary of Wilton Bowling Club. Edward (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for Francis Paterson in Hawick in 1687. He was listed as ‘student’, but it is unclear what that meant. Francis (1769/70–1851) butcher of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 5 High Street in 1841. In 1816 he (and baker William Duncan) were found accused of ‘falsehood, fraud, and wilful imposition, as also of contriving and executing wicked projects, and deceitful and false machinations, and also of forgery’, and found guilty of some of these charges. He firstly married Helen (Nelly) Wilson in 1799, and secondly Margaret Turnbull. His children were: George, who probably died young; Wilson (b.1801); George (b.c.1807), also a butcher and farmer; an unnamed child (d.1809); Robert (b.1815), butcher and farmer with his brother; and Agnes (b.1816), unmarried, who lived with her brothers. He may also be the Francis whose illegitimate child with Margaret Duncan died in Hawick in 1816. Francis (1831–1900) son of Robert. He succeeded his father as Hawick Postmaster, but only held the position briefly. He was postmaster in Paisley from the mid-1860s. He could be the ‘Sergt. F. Deans’ who is listed as best shot in the Hawick Corps of Rifle Volunteers in 1863.
In Gala in 1857 he married Catherine Gowans (1838–1928) from East Linton, Prestonkirk, East Lothian; she was heavily involved in the Primrose League of Scotland. They had at least 11 children, the first 4 of which were born in Hawick: Joanna Frances (1858–1925), who married chemist Gustav K. Hohbach; Robert Rutherford (1860–1922), who married twice; Ellen Rutherford (b.1861), who died unmarried in Edinburgh; Capt. James Gowans (1863–1930), who became a vet and moved to County Durham; George Henry (b.1870); Catherine Gowans (1871–1927), who married Maj. Joseph Robert Crone; Francis William (1875–1955); and Nora (1879–1969). G., (17th C.) recorded as Bailie when the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’ was signed. This may be an error (in ‘Annals of Hawick’) for ‘R.’, since Robert Deans was replaced as Bailie a few months later, when he was convalescing from illness. George (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 when he was served heir to his father John, Burgess of Hawick. George (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire when his lands in Hawick were valued at £19 10s. As a landowner, he was presumably a prominent citizen in the Town at that time and was surely related to Bailies of this family. George (17th C.) Hawick resident whose daughter Janet was born in 1646. George (17th C.) Hawick resident. In 1685 he defied the Bailies, refusing to take a message for Graham of Cleverhouse to Galashiels to act against the Covenanters. He was also charged with using irreverent language to the Bailie, ‘menacing him with ane great stone in his hand’ and refusing to go to the Tolbooth when instructed. He is probably the George who married Agnes Scott and whose children baptised in Hawick were: Janet (b.1673); Robert (b.1675); George (b.1678); Walter (b.1680); Agnes (b.1682); and Margaret (b.1687). The witnesses in 1673 were James (presumably related) and Mr. Walter Gedstains and in 1680 were ‘students’ Charles and Walter Scott (perhaps related to his wife). He may be the flesher of that name on the 1673 list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. George (17th C.) possibly son of Robert and Susanna Scott. He was married to Agnes Scott and their children include: Janet (b.1673); Robert (b.1675); George (b.1678); Walter (b.1680); Agnes (b.1682); and Margaret (b.1687). George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. George (17th C.) skinner who is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same George is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is likely the same as one of the other Georges. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick recorded in the Town Book of 1703, when he and 2 other men were ordered to ‘pay into Bayleya Mertine sex pound per piece, . . . for payt. of the officers, pyper, and drumers coats att the Common rydeing in anno’ 1702’. It is unclear why he was asked to contribute in this way, perhaps as a fine of some sort. He may be the same as one of the other Georges. George (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He cornet in 1707, being the first Cornet to carry the new Flag. This is the Flag containing the date ‘1707’, which is the oldest existing specimen. In 1712 he married Jean Purdom (also from Hawick Parish) and she secondly married William Oliver in 1720, so he was presumably deceased by then. He was probably father of Christian (b.1714), who was baptised in Hawick Parish. George (17th/18th C.) married Janet Cuthbertson in Bedrule Parish in 1717. George (1708–85) flesher in Hawick, son of Robert and Janet Cook. He is probably the ‘George Deans and Son’ whose 3 houses near the Auld Brig were carried off by the flood of 1767. He married Isabel Oliver in 1730, and she died in 1796. Their children included: Robert (b.1731); George (b.1731/2); Agnes (b.1735); William (b.1737); James (b.1740), who died young; James (b.1742); and Janet (b.1747). George (1731–1816) flesher in Hawick, son of George and Isabel Oliver. His death at the age of 85 is reported in the Scots Magazine. He was said to have been present at the market in Edinburgh during the rebellion of 1745, and was also reputed to be able to walk from Edinburgh to Hawick in 7 hours. His death record in Hawick clearly states that he was son of the deceased flesher George. He is probably the George ‘junior’ who witnessed a baptism in 1765 for shoemaker Robert Oliver. He witnessed a baptism for William Jackson in 1793. In 1758 in Wilton Parish he married Janet Allan (1739–1811), who died in Hawick. Their children included: Janet (b.1759), who married John Goodfellow; Isabel (b.1760); George (b.1764), shoemaker; Margaret (b.1767); Agnes (b.1773); Robert (b.1777); and Agnes again (b.1778). In the 1764 baptismal record he was a farmer. The witnesses in 1777 were Andrew Turnbull and Robert Aitken. He was witness to a couple of the baptisms of children of his daughter Janet. George (1764–1827) according to a family tree he was master shoemaker in Hawick and son of flesher George. In 1793 he married Janet, daughter of Archibald Douglas and Janet Kedie. Their children included: Janet (b.1792); and Betty (1793) and possibly Robert. He was probably the shoemaker George whose son George died in Hawick in 1795. He may be the George, shoemaker in Hawick, who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). George (b.1806/7) son of butcher Francis. He took over from his father, moving from the High Street to 8 Allars Crescent. He lived there with his brother Robert and sister Agnes. He also farmed at High Tofts in Kirkton Parish. Late in life, in 1866, he married Marion Nichol, from Tundergarth. Their children were: Francis (b.1866), who died young; Wilhelmina Nichol (b.1868); Margaret Turnbull (b.1870); Marion Jean Nichol (b.1875); and Francis (d.1850), who emigrated to the U.S.A., and died at Arminto, Wyoming. George (1833/4–98) son of printer Robert. He trained as a clerk and in 1861 was working as a cashier in a woollen factory. He is probably the George listed as postmaster in Hawick in 1868. However, he later moved to Australia. Gideon (b.1819/20) son of Robert, he was also a joiner in Minto Parish, based at Horsleyhill. In 1861 he was living with his mother Margaret, sisters Janet and Agnes, nephew Robert Graham and niece Margaret. In 1867 he donated several items to the Hawick Museum, including the frame for the baptismal font used in the East End Meeting House (suggesting he was a member of that church). He may be the Gideon who married Jane Dryden in Wilton Parish in 1861. Helen (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1641. Isobel Morlaw was ordered to pay money that she owed as her fee for a period in the previous year, ‘but assoziled fra her hois and schone’ (i.e. stockings and shoes). I Presumably she was a servant of Morlaw’s. Isabel (18th C.) chambermaid at Branxholme in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Isobel Henderson. Their son Thomas was born in 1679. He witnessed a baptism for James Sanderson in 1681. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who was married to Margaret Rule (or ‘Rowll’). Their daughter Margaret was born in 1694. James (17th C.) shepherd at Wester Groundistone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th C.) tenant in Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (d.1705) joiner in Wilton Parish. He was buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. His gravestone was partly illegible, but the opposite side described the burial of Walter Deans, late tenant of Howahill (and his family), who were therefore surely related. Bailie James (17th/18th C.) recorded as a Bailie in 1678 and 1685, ‘late Baylyea’ in 1685, Bailie again in 1692 and 1694. He witnessed baptisms for wright Robert Scott and for flesher Thomas Wilson in 1700, for Robert Wright and for Bailie Robert Wright in 1702, for Robert Scott ‘Pope’ in 1704, for carrier Walter Gledstains in 1706 and for Robert Lamb in 1708. He was still alive in 1715. He is probably the James who served as Procurator Fiscal in Hawick in the 1670s. He was ‘present baylyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell (although it is unclear if this was 1693 or 1694). He was probably the ‘Bailyea Deans’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1697 he was one of 4 men who protested against the continuing of Robert Ruecastle as Bailie, through there being a vacancy and on account of an agreement made with the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch, until a new election for Bailie was held. He appears to have still been Bailie during the 1710s. He was probably son or brother of Robert, since he was involved in a dispute in 1715 over the right to sit in the pew allocated to Robert in 1683, and for which he gave Robert half a boll of barley. Probably the same Bailie James witnessed a baptism for merchant James Simpson in 1721. He may have been the James born to Robert and Margaret Watt in Hawick in 1644. He may be the James, married to Margaret Routledge, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish includes: Margaret (b.1670); an unnamed child (b.1674); and Gilbert (b.1675). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for George (perhaps his brother) in 1673, and the James in 1676 who (along with John, who was surely related) witnessed a baptism for Walter Oliver and another for Walter Gledstains (the Town Clerk), as well as the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in 1678. He was also ‘balyie’ when he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Gledstains in 1688. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Jean Scott in 1705. Their children included James (b.1707). James (18th C.) resident recorded at Chisholme when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Goodfellow in 1738 and their children included: Janet (b.1743); and Margaret (b.1747). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Margaret Cowan in 1758. Their children

James (168–1858) was born in Roberton, 3rd son of Walter and Janet Douglas (of the Trows family). Like his father he was a cattle dealer. He lived in one of the cottages at Hobkirk Kirkyard. He moved to Opens in Hobkirk Parish later in life (being recorded there in 1851) and lived into his 80s. In 1821 (at the age of 53) he married Margaret ‘Boe’ (or Bowie), who was born in Minto Parish in 1777. His only child (born when his wife was 46) was Walter, historian of the Rulewater district. He died at Kirkstyle and his wife died there 2 years later. He was said to always be seen wearing a high hat, swallow-tail coat with brass buttons, breeches and leggings.

James (b.1805) was born in Roberton, he was a farmer worker. In 1841 he was living at Highceters Mill, in 1851 was at Wiltonburn Cottages and in 1861 was a shepherd (of 633 acres) at Whitfield in Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included: Peter (b.1830); Robert Elliot (b.1832); Margaret (b.1835); Isabella (b.1838); Janet (b.1841); and Charles Kin near Greenhill (b.1845). Capt. James Gowans (1863–1930) son of Hawick postmaster Francis and Catherine Gowans. He trained as a vet and served with the R.A.V.C. in WWI. He was also Scottish Amateur Boxing Champion. He moved to County Durham. He married Ethel Helenora Crone, cousin of his veterinary ex-partner Maj. Joseph Robert Crone (who married his sister Catherine Gowans Deans). He had a daughter, Mary Gowans, and a son, James Robert Crone, who died young. Janet (b.1790) from Minto Parish, she was a dressmaker and teacher of sewing and similar subjects in Lilliesleaf. Her daughter Margaret Turnbull was also a teacher. John or ‘John Deans’ (d.1546). His tombstone is in St. Mary’s churchyard, stating ‘Heir lyis ane honest man, John Deanis, qvha vas tenant kyndlie of Havik Mhn and slan in deabuit of his nichtbouris geir, the zeir of God, MDXLVI’ i.e. he was killed defending his neighbours goods (perhaps cattle) from raiders in 1546. Tradition suggests that he was slain near Skelfhill. The tablestone is particularly elaborate, suggesting that the townspeople paid for its erection as a tribute to his sacrifice. He may have been the same John Deans mentioned in the 1537 charter and hence great-grandfather of Robert from the early 17th century. He was surely related to other near contemporary people of the same surname within Hawick, e.g. the ‘John Denys’ who was a witness to the 1512 sasine where Harden was transferred from Walter Scott of Synton to his brother William. The tablestone was replaced with a replica in 1930/1, with the original in the Museum. John (16th/17th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to the Burgh Charter of 1537. He was great-grandfather of Robert, who was served as heir to his 2 tenements (or particates) in Hawick in 1613 (and had a further charter in 1635). He owned one of these 2 tenements himself. It seems likely he was the same man as the John (d.1546) with the elaborate memorial stone in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. It seems likely that he is closely related to Allan and Allan’s late grandfather Robert who are recorded in 1622. John (d.c.1617) Burgess of Hawick. His son George was served as his heir in 1617. He was surely related to the other nearly contemporary Deanses. John (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Margaret Aitchison. Their children included Margaret (b.1670); George (b.1672); Isobel (b.1675); and Bessie (b.1678). He may be the John who (along with James, who was surely related) witnessed a baptism for Walter Oliver in 1676. He may be the John recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Young in Bedrule Parish in 1706. Their children included: Janet (b.1707); George (b.1710). John (b.1824/5) from Berwick, he was Head Gardener at Teviot Lodge. He married Christian Fairgrieve. Their children were: George A.; Robert; Christian; Isabella (b.1857); Jane (b.1860); and William (b.1864). John (b.1828/9) born in Minto Parish. He was a joiner at Riddell Cottage in Lilliesleaf Parish. His wife was Agnes and their children included Robert and Walter. John (19th C.) Director of the Hawick Working Men’s Building Society and also President of the Hawick Co-op for a while. Peter (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is recorded as ‘Petro Denis’. Peter (b.1820) farm worker in Roberton Parish, he was son of Peter and Isabella Elliot. He was not baptised until 1827. In 1841 he was living at Hardenburnfoot and in 1851 was ‘Game Guard’ at Todshawhill. He married Agnes Elliot in 1842 and their children included: Janet Elliot (b.1843); Peter (b.1845); Henry (b.1847); Walter Elliot (b.1850); James (b.1855); and Isabella (b.1857). The last 2 children were baptised in Teviothead. Peter Young (18th C.) listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a druggist on the High Street. Robert (16th C.) described as ‘Robert Denis, surgeone' when witness to a 1558 sasine relating to a land transfer in Hawick. He may well have been related to the other men of the same surname who lived at a similar time. He may have been the grandfather of Allan, recorded in a sasine of 1622; he had a ‘clare constat’ from William Douglas of Drumlanrig for a piece of waste ground in the centre of Hawick, between the ‘King’s Highway’ and the Slitrig. Given the forename, he could have been son of John (owner of 2 particates in Hawick) whose great-grandson Robert was served as his heir in 1613. Robert (16th/17th C.) inhabitant of Hawick. He was served heir to his great-grandfather John in 2 tenements (or particates) of land in Hawick in 1613. This John seems likely to have been the man named in the 1537 Burgh Charter, and potentially the same man with the elaborate memorial stone (from 1546) in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. Presumably the same Robert had a confirming charter for 2 tenements in Hawick in 1635, granted by the Earl of Queensberry, one of which had been owned by his great-grandfather John. It is possible that he was the same man as Bailie Robert. Bailie Robert (17th C.) described as at the East Port in the 1638 ‘leet’ for the election of the Bailies. He may have been Bailie along with William Scott of the Cross at the time of the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’ (although apparently signed by ‘G. Deanis, Bailie’ and with Robert listed on the Council). In April he was replaced as Bailie by Robert Scott ‘callit of Goldielands’, while he ‘convaleces of his sickness’. In late 1640 he is described as ‘late bailie’ when he was fined for injuring Robert Scott of Grundistone, specifically ‘bluiding of the said Robert Scott upon the cheek and hand’. He may be the Robert who inherited 2 tenements that had belonged to his great-grandfather John, as recorded in 1613 and 1635. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Hardie in 1641. Robert (17th C.) married Susanna Scott in Hawick in 1634. Their children were: Margaret (b.1636); Robert (b.1639); Bessie (b.1640); Anna (b.1643); George (b.1644); John (b.1645); Isobell (b.1647); Allan (b.1648); and Mary (b.1649). He could be the same man as the Bailie recorded in the 1630s and 1640s; he was on the ‘leet’ for choosing Bailie in 1638, in one of the first entries in the Town Book, and was described as being at the East Port. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Margaret Watt. Their children include: Isobell (b.1640); Margaret (b.1642); James (b.1644); John (b.1646); Janet (b.1647); Isobell (b.1649); and Robert (1653). He could be the Robert who was Councillor in 1668. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘lister’ (i.e. dyer) in 1648 when he was elected on the Hawick Town Council. He is probably the same as one of the other Roberts. He served as Bailie during the 1650s. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Agnes Scott. Their daughter Helen was born in 1651, with witnesses Thomas and Robert Scott (who were probably related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) advocate who served as procurator for Walter Lorraine for a bond with Walter Scott in Wauchope in 1681. The bond was signed at Hartshaughmill, which suggests he was a local man. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘particat man of ye lands of Hawick’ when allocated a pew in St. Mary’s Kirk in 1683. James (presumably either his son or brother) gave him ‘ane half boll of beer for ye building of said pew’ and was involved in a dispute over it in 1715. Possibly the same Robert is recorded in 1725 when his servant Helen Bell was rebuked by the Session. He may have been the Robert born to Robert and Margaret Watt in Hawick in 1653 or the son of Robert and Susanna Scott born in 1639. Given that he was a ‘particat man’, he was probably a direct descendant of John, who owned 2 participates in the 1537 Burgh Charter, and whose great-grandson Robert was served as heir in 1613. Robert (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Burnfoot in 1697. He married Janet Laidlaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694. Their children included: Jean (b.1695); and Isabella (b.1697), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1697 were 2 William Scotts. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of George and Agnes Scott according to a family tree (and hence born in 1675). He was a skinner in Hawick. He married Janet Cook in Hawick in 1705 and their children included: Arthur (b.1703); Janet (b.1705); George (b.1708), flesher in Hawick; Robert (b.1710); James (b.1713); Margaret (b.1715); and Agnes (b.1718). Hawick in 1705, and whose daughter Agnes was born in 1718. The witnesses in 1710 were Bailie James Deans (perhaps related) and merchant Walter Oliver. Robert (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. In 1712 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Bryson. It is possible he is the same man as the skinner. Robert (17th/18th C.) miller in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Lamb in Cavers Parish in 1701 and the couples’ children were born in Bowde: Maddie (b.1709); Gilbert (b.1711); and Robert (b.1715). Robert (18th C.) married Janet Turnbull in Cavers Parish in 1731. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Nevison in Roberton.
Deans in 1733. Robert (18th C.) married Isobell Gray in Ashkirk Parish in 1739. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Barbara Ormiston in 1776. Robert (18th C.) married Betty Clerk in Roberton Parish in 1790. Robert (b.1782/3–1850s) joiner at Horsleyhill. His wife was Margaret and their children included: Gideon (b.1819/20), who carried on the joinery business; Archibald; Margaret; Janet (b.1825/6), who was deaf and dumb; John; Agnes (b.1830/1); and William. Robert (1797–1879) born in Glasgow, although a family tree has him as the son of Hawick shoemaker George and Janet Douglas. He was a printer and one of Hawick’s early postal workers, being sortor and deliverer for Robert Armstrong. His printer’s business was at 8 Buccleuch Street, although in 1841 he is listed as residing on Silver Street. He was involved with the Relief Kirk and a portrait of him exists. He married Helen Rutherford (1800–76). Their children were: Alison (b.1822); Janet (1823–96), who married manufacturer James Wilson; Agnes (b.1825); Francis (b.1831), who was also postmaster in Hawick; George (c.1834–98), who moved to Australia; and Robert Rutherford (1840–1910), who was a banker and died unmarried. Robert (b.1815) son of Francis and younger brother of George. He was a butcher with his brother on Allars Crescent. They also farmed at Tofts. Robert Rutherford (1840–1910) younger son of postmaster and printer Robert. He worked as a banker, with Allahabad Bank. He died unmarried. Robert Rutherford (1860–1922) son of postmaster Francis, and nephew of the earlier Robert Rutherford. He was born in Hawick, and the family lived at 44 Loan. However, they soon moved to Paisley, where he grew up. He worked as a stevedores manager in Lanarkshire, married twice and died in Southport. With his first wife, Lucy Jane Roberts, he had children Robert Rutherford and Marjorie Milsom.

Thomas (17th C.) mentioned in a Magistrates Court case of 1640 in which he is absolved of paying the costs claimed against him by Adam Scott, smith. It seems that he was a servant, who had a dispute with Scott, the record saying ‘that he offered his service to him, quha wauld not receive him, except he wauld gif him of his ...’. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Margaret Gledstains. Their children included: Margaret (b.1679); and Bessie (b.1680). Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident whose daughter Margaret was born in 1692 and son Thomas in 1696. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Janet Renwick in Bedrule Parish in 1702. Their children included: Henrietta (b.1706); George (b.1707); and John (b.1709). Thomas (17th/18th C.) tenant of Wester Burnfoot Mill in Wilton Parish. He married Janet Gray in 1703 and their children included Jean (b.1717). Although the mother’s name is not given, his children were: David (b.1704); James (b.1708); Isobell (b.1712); and Walter (b.1713), farmer at Howahill. Thomas (1764–1817) son of Walter. He was farmer at Howahill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses. He also paid the dog tax at Howahill in 1797. His death is recorded in Hobbirk Parish and he is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. Walter (17th/18th C.) carrier who married Isobell Scott in 1712. They were both described as being ‘in the town of Hawick’. Their daughter Agnes was born in 1720. He may also be the father of George (b.1713), Agnes (b.1715) and Margaret (b.1715). He may be the Walter born in 1680 to George and Agnes Scott. He is probably the carrier recorded in 1707 when he was fined by the Council for calling Adam Thorbrand to the Court in Jedburgh when the case was already being considered by the Court in Hawick. Walter (1713–90) son of Thomas, he was born in Wilton Parish. He became a cattle dealer in Hawick and was also tenant at Howahill and Highend. In 1762, 1764, 1767, 1771 and 1774 he was recorded at Howcleuch. He appears to have married late in life. In Robertson in 1761 he married Janet (although her name is recorded as ‘Isabel’ in Hawick Parish), daughter of Robert Douglas, from the Trows family; she died in 1799. Their children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Janet (b.1762); Thomas (b.1764); Robert (1767); James (b.1768), father of local historian Walter; Agnes (b.1771); and Walter (b.1774). The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard; their names are recorded on the back of the headstone of joiner James Deans, who must have been related. Walter ‘Watty’ (1823–1904) son of James and Margaret Boa, he was born in Rulewater, but descended from the Hawick family. He was said to be an odd, quiet child, and was taken under the wing of the governess at Weens. However, he received little formal schooling, and was soon helping his uncle Thomas, who was mason at Bonnieheaven Bridge. He worked with his uncle as a mason, and grew to have an appreciation of ruined buildings in the district. He also later worked as a grocer, living at Kirkstyle, Hobbirk. He became known as an antiquarian, particularly an authority on everything to do with the history, families and folklore of Rulewater. He was encouraged in these pursuits by James Smail of Jedburgh, who married his cousin Margaret Boa. He wrote 'The Old Kirk and Kirkyard of Hopekirk' in 1874, 'On Bonchester, Rule Water' for the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club in 1887 and 'Memorials and Reminiscences of the Parish of Hobkirk' in 1895. He helped with the description of the Slitrig valley when the Berwickshire Club met at Hawick in 1890. In 1892 he described a supposed track connecting the upper Rule valley with the Slitrig near Berryfell, speculating (unfortunately with no real evidence) that it could be connected with the Catrail. He also provided information for Tancred's 'Rulewater' book. For a long time he was in charge of the Hobkirk kirkyard, which was adjacent to his house, and he could describe every stone and the family who were buried there. He also collected curios from the district. In 1859 he married Margaret Armstrong (from Hartsgarth) in Newcastleton; she had previously been housekeeper for Daniel Mather at Hallrule. Their children were: James (b.1860); Christina (b.1862); Margaret Boa (b.1868); and William (b.1872). There is a photograph of him with George Tancred in 'Rulewater and its people'. William (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1511/2 sasine for the Barony of Hawick. His name is recorded as 'Willelmus Denis'. He was probably a prominent man in Hawick at the time, and may have been related to Allan, who acted as attorney for the sasine. William (18th/19th C.) Denholm man who had a poem included in James Ruickbie's 1826 'Poems'. Another poem was included at the end of James Murray's 1863 article on Denholm, dated 1819. There was an article about him in the Transactions for 1960 (formerly the holm, dated 1819. There was an article about the end of James Murray's 1863 article on Den-

1826 'Poems'. Another poem was included at the Thursday night Chase of 1876 by the Acting Father's horse { `Auld Edward Dearden met demise, Nae chance against the horse's size' [MB]. He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included Thomas (b.1840), Sara (b.1844) and John (b.1847).

Dearden (deer-din) n. Edward (1802/3–76) from England, he was a weaver in Hawick. He came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. He was listed as a weaver at Weensland among heads of households for Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. In 1841 (recorded as ‘Edmund Derden’) he was living at Weensland Mill Cottage. He was later a watchman of the Kirkwynd, and was fatally injured at the Loan during the Thursday night Chase of 1876 by the Act-

tract of 1763 to the heritors of the Comonnty of Hassendean relating for building a bridge across this stream. In 1861 George C. Hardie was living there with his family (also written 'Deerly').

Dearly Burn (deer-lee-burn) n. stream that rises near Groundistone and flows roughly eastwards to join the Hassendean Burn.

the Dear Year (thu-deer-yeer) n. popular term for the year 1800, when there was famine and war, and food riots in Hawick, as well as elsewhere around Britain. 1799 was a year of heavy rain (186 days locally), and there was a great drought the next summer. There was a shortage of food, a general increase in prices and distilleries were stopped by Act of Parliament. James Ruickbie commemorated this with a poem on the death of whisky, and the reopening of the distilleries with another, the ‘Resurrection of Whisky’ – ‘Our fathers never saw, nor we, their hapless sons, till now, a time so big with woe’ [JR].

Deaton (dee-in) n. Angus (1945-) born in Edinburgh and brought up in Bowden, he attended Hawick High School in the period 1957–9. He took the Waverley Line to school every day and also worked at Pringle’s as a summer job. He also attended Fettes College and then Cambridge University. He worked at Bristol University and then moved to Princeton University in 1983, where he became Dwight D. Eisenhower Professor of International Affairs. He was awarded the 2015 Nobel Prize in Economics for analysis of consumption, poverty and welfare. As a further Hawick connection, his mother was the sister of Danny Nuttall’s wife.

deave (deev) adj., arch. to deafen – ‘Let preachers rare an’ ranters root Till deave wi’ their ain clatter’ [VW], ‘If there’s a greater bore, it is The monologuish woman; She’ll deave yer vera soul wi’ din Till baith yer lugs are bumin’’ [FL], ‘…maist deaved an daivert an donnert wui the rummellin dunner o an eend-on bizz’ [ECS], ‘I stood in the mids’ o’ the merket square, Deeved by the thrang o’ the Gooseberry Fair, And I sichted a couple o’ colliers there, As merry as weel may be’ [WL] (also spelled ‘deeve’; cf. the more common deifen).

debauch (dee-bawch) n., arch. a debacle – ‘That a man or wumin should bei sae misguided as tae yase the occasion for a debacle shouldna bei laid at the door o’ the festival’ [BW1939].

de Bliburgh (du-bl-bu-rn) n. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as having the living of Cavers Parish from Edward I of England, after the previous incumbent failed to sign the ‘Ragman Rolls’. ‘Bliburgh’ is Blyburgh near Gainsborough. He was Rector of Ordsall 1277–97 and was also a Deacon. It is unlikely he ever visited Cavers.

de Bolton (du-bol-tin) n. John (14th C.) cleric mentioned in connection with Cavers in 1368. Since he was an English appointee, he probably merely collected the living of the Parish and never set foot there. Probably the same man was Rector of ‘Bolton by Bowland’ from 1330. He is also recorded acting as Justiciar of Ireland in 1357 (also spelled ‘Boulton’).

de Bondington (du-bon-ding-tin) n. William (d.1258) probably from Peeblesshire, he was Rector of Eddleston and Archdeacon of Lothian. He served as Chancellor of Scotland from 1231 and Bishop of Glasgow from about 1232. He was thus Bishop in the area around Hawick. He was an important figure in the court of Alexander II. He travelled to Rome in 1240. His time as Bishop saw a significant increase in the assets of the Diocese. He was buried at Melrose Abbey. His seal bore the figure of a bishop with the words ‘SIGILL. WILLELMI [DEI] GRA. GLASGUENSIS EPI’.

debosherie (de-bō-shu-ree) n., arch. debauchery – ‘There was this day a Fast for . . . suppresing of debosherie, cursing, swearing, and blaspheming the name of God’ [PR1722].

de Braideley (du-brād-lee) n. William (13th C.) recorded as ‘de Bradelaye when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His lands were in Roxburghshire and could correspond to Braideley on the Hermitage Water. His seal showed a tree supported by two hares and the name ‘S’WILL’I DE BRADELEY’. Henry ‘de Bradeley’ was part of a panel at Wark in Tynedale in 1287 and another in 1289/90, while John ‘de Bradely’ swore fealty to Edward I at Berwick in 1291; these men could have been relatives. deburse (dee-burs) v., arch. to disburse, pay out — ‘...the two hundred merks allowit by the Earl of Queensberry and debursed be the town of Hawick ...’ [BR1644], ‘...and which sum was necessarily and truly debursed by him for hiring and fully outreiking the said soldiers’ [BR1688].

decait (dee-sä’) n., arch. deceit.
de Cardonnel (du-kawr-do-nel) n. Adam (d.1820) from Northumberland, he studied medicine, but became an antiquarian and numismatist. He published ‘Picturesque Antiquities of Scotland’ in 1788. This included a sketch of old Hassendean Kirk (also known as ‘Adam Mansfeldt de Cardonnel-Lawson’).
de Caron (du-kaw-rin) n. Alexander (14th C.) had the benefice of Cavers Parish from 1367. He was a nominee for the position of Abbot of Melrose but apparently took a lesser position at St. Andrews so that Mr. Matthews, the Clerk of William Earl of Douglas could be appointed.
decession (de-see-shin) n. a decision — ‘it was a gie hard decession ti make’.
December (dee-zem-bur) n., arch. December (note the disappearing use of z rather than s).
decern (dee-sern) v., arch. to adjudge, decree — ‘...and decernit to have the stenth of thair decreit thairof ...’ [SB1569], ‘...were decerned and ordained to remaine in prison’ [BR], ‘Decerns Thomas Oliver to content and pay to James Scott, lorimer, 3 half firlots of aitits eitten by his guidis and geir ...’ [BR1642], ‘...in respect qrof the baylyeas has descerned and ordained their haill moveable goods and gear be sequesterate ...’ [BR1689] (Scots law term; also ‘descern’).
deces (dee-sees) v., arch. to die, become deceased — ‘...and gyff it happynis the said Johanne Gledstansis, zounger, to deess, and the said lardship of Coklaw to cum to the airis famail ...’ [SB1519] (there are spelling variants).
Dechan (dee-kin) n. Bailie Martin, J.P. (1852–1915) chemistry teacher and public analyst, who was a Bailie, as well as Acting Father in 1903. Born in the High Street, son of a farmer who left Ireland during the famine, he grew up in Gotterson’s Innery and then at Langburnshiel. After working as a hind, he became a tweed finisher with Walter Wilson, later taking science and art classes at Teviot Grove and qualifying as a teacher of chemistry. After teaching classes in various locations in local towns, he took over the practical chemistry lecture room and laboratory of the Buccleuch Memorial, and gave up his factory job to become a full time chemistry teacher in 1884. He also continued to study himself, publishing several papers, becoming a fellow of the Institute of Chemistry and being elected a fellow of the Chemical Society of London in 1885. He served on the School Board for 9 years, pressing for educational opportunities for all classes. He then became a Town Councillor (the first Roman Catholic in any local town), soon becoming a Bailie. He was partly responsible for establishing technical schools in Hawick and Galashiels. He became public analyst for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and the Burghs of Melrose and Kelso, as well as District Analyst for Selkirkshire under the Board of Agriculture. Along with W.P. Kennedy, he took over science classes in the reorganised Buccleuch School around 1900, and prizes for scholarship in science were set up in their memory by former pupils. As well as this, he was an enthusiastic Common Riding supporter, and can be seen riding near the head of the Procession in the 1899 Gaylor film. He was one of the main instigators for founding the Callants’ Club, and would have been the first President had he not insisted that the first should not be a Roman Catholic, in case that caused controversy. So instead he was the first Vice-President and the second Club President. He married Catherine Murphy and their children included: Patrick (b.1875); and George (b.1886).
de Charteris see Chairters the de Charterises (thu-du-chawr’ur-is-eex, -chawr’-ur-is) n. family name of the Earls of Wemyss and March, deriving from Chartres in France, with multiple possible spellings. William de Chartre accompanied William the Conqueror to England, his son or grandson following David I to Scotland, and being granted lands in Dumfriesshire. The family received the half-barony of Wilton in the late 13th century, holding it for a few decades. There is a complicated relationship with the Longuevilles and the Langlands family, with the likelihood that they are all one and the same. Sir Robert Charteris fought a duel with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1530. Later the family dropped the ‘de’ (spelled many ways, including ‘Chartres’ and the modern ‘Charters’; family members are included under Chairters).
de Cheam (du-cheem) n. John (d.1268) from Surrey in England, he was Archdeacon of Bath and Papal Chaplain. He was appointed as Bishop of Glasgow in 1259, in opposition to the originally elected Nicholas de Moffat. His appointment was objected to by King Alexander III, but the next Pope (curiously, Alexander IV) refused to budge.
and he remained. He was thus the ecclesiastical head of the church in the Hawick area for almost a decade, but it is unclear if he ever visited the region. He witnessed the Treaty of Perth in 1266. After continued objections by the Canons of Glasgow he resigned in 1267 and died in France.

declarator (de-kla-ri'-tôr) n. a judicial decision, specifically an action raised to decide upon a legal right – ‘...has raised a process of declarator and division of the said Commonty before the Court of Session ...’ [BR1769] (Scots law term).

de Clare (du-klâr) n. Richard (b.c.1286) grandson of the Earl of Gloucester and nephew of Margaret de Clare, Countess of Cornwall. Some-time between 1306 and 1311 he obtained the ‘benefice’ of Hawick church, along with several others, at the insistence of his aunt and with the Pope’s permission. He was thus Rector of Hawick for several years, although it is doubtful if he ever set foot in the town; he was Canon, Rector or Prebendary of churches all over Britain, including Penkridge (near Lichfield), Youghal (in Ireland) and Dunmow (in Essex). He resigned Hawick probably in 1311 (not to be confused with his more famous ancestor the Earl of Pembroke).

de Clyf (du-klîf) n. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as holding the living of Cavers Parish in 1319, being given it by the English King Edward II. He bought the manor of Theydon Bois in 1319, being given it by the English King Edward II. He died at Paris on the return journey. The Canons of Glasgow elected John de Egglescliffe (a juidicial decision, specifically an action raised to decide upon a legal right – ‘...has raised a process of declarator and division of the said Commonty before the Court of Session ...’ [BR1769] (Scots law term).

deddy langlegs (de-dee-lawng-legz) n. a daddy longlegs, harvestman, or sometimes a cranefly – it was a muckle lang-leggit deddy langlegs’ (cf. jenny langlegs).

Dedrig see Deedrig
deduce (dee-doos) v., arch. to deduct, subtract – ‘...fourtie shilling being deduced for the buttis bigine’ [BR1658].
de Dunnideer (du-du-ui-deer) n. Stephen (d.1473) presumably from Aberdeenshire, was Parson of Conveth in 1301 and Chamberlain of King Robert I from about 1309. He was elected as Bishop of Glasgow in late 1316 or early 1317. He then travelled to Rome for consecration, but the Pope rejected him due to pressure from Edward II of England. He died at Paris on the return journey. The Canons of Glasgow elected John de Lindsay as his successor, while the Pope chose Englishman John de Egglescliffe.

de Durisdeer (du-riz-deer) n. Andrew (d.1473) from Galloway, he is also sometimes referred to as Andrew Muirhead. He was educated at St. Andrews and Paris and became a subdean of the Diocese of Glasgow, where he was a close associate of William Turnbull. He became a Dean of Aberdeen Diocese and acted as an ambassador for King James II at the papal court in the early 1450s. Following the death of William Turnbull he was personally appointed as Bishop of Glasgow by Pope Calixtus III. He was active in national politics, being appointed to the Council of Regency for James III and attending the parliaments of 1464, 1467, 1468, 1469 and 1471. In 1468 he was one of those who went to Denmark to arrange for the marriage of the King with Margaret of Denmark. His seal showed St. Kentigern holding a fish and a crozier and a shield with the arms of Aberdeen, and Planting and erecting the kirk of Roberton, modelling the said paroch’, ‘...by the decreit arbitral following on this submission, the town of Hawick was cut out of a considerable part of their Commonty ...’ [C&L1780], v., arch. to decree, order – ‘...forsamekile as it is Durham, he was appointed as Bishop of Durham in 1317 by Pope John XXII, as an alternative to the proposed Stephen de Dunmideer. However, the Canons of Glansgow had meanwhile appointed John de Lindsay. Because of the war between England and Scotland at that time, he never took up the position, and in 1323 was translated to Connor in Ireland and then to Llandaff (also written ‘Eglesliffe’).

dee (de’) v., poet. to die – ‘But ye sall dee like men, an’ fa’ like auld o’ the chiefs’ [HSR], ‘I salna dee, but leive, an’ speik furth the warks o’ the Lord’ [HSR], ‘O love that winna’ dee . . . ’ [JEDM], ‘I fain would be Till the day I dee Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet’ [TK], ‘And will be till I dee mysel’, And meet wi’ her again’ [WE], ‘The muirland wide and the wind blawn free This be my rest when I come to dee’ [WL] (cf. the locally more common dei).

Dee Burn (dee-burn) n. stream off Hermitage Water, to the east of Braidlie, reached from the road via a footbridge. The farmhouse of Deeburn was formerly there, once home of the Elliots (it is marked as ‘Debrun’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Deed Bell

... [DMW], ‘. . . a grocer body . . . gien iz the weel-wurn hail: ‘It’s a grand-day!’ ‘Deed ay!’ says A’ [ECS] (also deed ay).

deed as a maulk (deed-iz-a-mawk) adj., arch. literally ‘dead as a maggot’, absolutely lifeless, stone dead – ‘. . . aw felled every yin o’ them as cauld deed as a mack’ [RM] (also spelled ‘mack’).

deed ay (deed-I) interj., arch. yes indeed – ‘Deed ay, for I mysel’ hae seen Folk casting peats in Myreslawgreen’ [WNK], ‘It’s a grand day!’ ‘Deed ay!’ says A’ [ECS] (also written ‘deed ay’; see also deed).

the Deed Bell (thu-deed-bel) n. hand-bell once belonging to the Magistrates, which was used when someone died. The Burgh Officer (or perhaps the Kirk beadle) would walk the streets, lifting his hat, ringing the bell and announcing ‘I hereby take ye to wit, that . . . our brother/sister, departed this life at . . . of the clock, according to the pleasure of our Lord’. The bell would then be placed on the deceased’s bed until they were interred. The bell bore the date 1601, and was made in Holland, inscribed ‘R.S.I.D. HAWICK’ around the neck (probably the initials of the magistrates of the time, likely Richard or Robert Scott and James or John Deans or Douglas) and ‘IAN, BVR-GUS.HVISHEFT.MY.GEGOTE,ANNO.1601’ around the rim (i.e. ‘Made by John Burgushouse in 1601’). It is said that it was paid for with a bag of ‘doits’ amassed from years of Kirk collections. When the main Kirk bell was recast at great expense in 1693 it was enacted that ‘neither the great Bell nor hand deid bell’ should be used for anyone other than those on the list of subscribers or their successors; hence it was kept in the Treasurer’s house. It is recorded being mended in 1722, with an iron handle added to make it easier to use with one hand. It was used until about 1780, apparently twice escaped being melted down, and is now in the Museum. The tradition was said to have been a relic of pre-Reformation times, suggesting that there would have been an earlier bell. Note that in 1694 the Council approved the use of a ‘little hand Bell for the use of the tooun concerning the going through the tooun’; if this was the same bell, then it had already been in use for almost a century, and the Council was just clarifying the payment for its use. Since the last bellman, Alexander Stainton, died in 1926, there certainly a later bell in use in Hawick through the 19th century, but for announcements other than deaths. There was also

deed-chap (deed-chawp) n., arch. clicking sound made by the death-watch beetle, supposed to be a portent of death (also deed-rap, deed-ruckle and deed-watch).

deed claes (deed-klæz) n., arch. a set of clothes made from yarn spun by a new bride and hidden away, to be only brought out secretly or when needed at her funeral.

Deedhaugh (deed-hawch) n. former name for an area between Croft Angrigg and Usuchhaugh, named in the 1537 charter, and corresponding today roughly to the area around Slitrig Crescent and perhaps including Wellogate Cemetery. This was once where the town’s archery targets were, and it was also used for other games and sports. It may have once been where some of the Common Riding festivities once took place, hence its continued use as the site of the Song-singing ceremony. The origin of the name is obscure, but may refer to an area associated with some unrecorded battle or burial (perhaps similar to the Deed Haugh near Spittal-on-Rule, which was the scene of the execution of a number of Turnbulls in 1510, although ‘deid’ could also just mean ‘flat’).

Deed Haugh (deed-hawch) n. area near Rule-mouth, similar to the ‘Rulehaugh’ where many Turnbulls were said to have met their end in 1510. The story is that about 200 of them met there to ask for pardon from the King (James IV), dressed only in linen sheets and with nooses around their necks. But instead, one in ten of them were hanged. Bishop Lesley reported that the King rode from Edinburgh to Rulewater, where ‘he tuik hanged. Bishop Lesley reported that the King

Deedlie Field (deed-lee-feeld) n. Deadlie Field, flat area on the east side of the Rule Water near Fulton. ‘Deadlie Dean’ lies just to the south.

Deedlie Stumps (deed-lee-stumps) n. nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Here’s Andra o’ the King’s Head clad In ancient garb, wi’ cheery smile; Blind Wull gangs by wi’ carefu’ tread And Deedlie Stumps in gallant style’ [HI].

deedly (deed-lee) adj. deadly – ‘I the said Walter sall do siclke suffrage as vse and custome is of deidly feid ...’ [SB1527], ‘The deildiest knuckler was share tae take hame ...’, ‘Dear alike in childhood’s prattle, And the deidly din of battle’ [RK], ‘He dinna coont on the layman’s sword That sprang frae its scabbard free, An wi’ ane swift an’ deidly stroke Made his heid frae his body flee’ [FL], n., arch. deadly persons, especially in the phrase ‘against all deedly’ – ‘...and leiffull actionis aganis all deidlie, the Kingis graces auctoritie allanerlie exceptit ...’ [SB1585].

deed man’s bellows (deed-mawnz-be-lōz) n., arch. the bugle, Ajuga reptans.

deed man’s bells (deed-mawnz-belz) n., arch. the foxglove.

deed man’s hand (deed-mawnz-hawnd) n., arch. the spotted palmate orchis, Orchis maculata.

Deedman’s Haugh (deed-mawnz-hawf) n. another name for Deed Haugh.

deed o (deed-ō) n., arch. culprit (even applied to inanimate objects), the cause of something – ‘A lookeet aabits for’t, bit A fand ett i the hinder-end. The press was the deed o’d’ [ECS].

deed-rap (deed-rwap) n., arch. death-rattle, a mysterious knocking sound, said to be a premonition of death – ‘Did the deed-rap soon throwe its gampy ends, A wunder, i the nicht etter guid King Alisaundar’s waddeen-foy?’ [ECS] (see also deed-chap).
Deedrig

Deedrig (deed-rig) n. former name for lands in the eastern part of Hassendean, whose precise location is uncertain. They were recorded in a charter of 1510/1 when confirmed to David Scott of Hassendean and referred to as the ‘20 shilling land called le Dedrig’. In 1532 they were described as the ‘20 shilling lands of Deedrig in the half barony of Hassendean’ when confirmed to William of Hassendean, along with Easter Hassendean and Over and Nether Newhall. The lands were transferred from Robert Scott of Hassendean to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1604. They were still owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1661 and 1663, when they were still described as a 20 shilling land, lying within the Barony of Hassendean (it is ‘Deedrig’ in 1532 and 1661 and ‘Deedrig’ in 1663).

Deed-ruckle (deed-ru-kul) n., arch. death-rattle – ‘Whan naigs an troopers – the deed-ruckle ghutherin i ther weizants – war cowpeet inti ilka seike’ [ECS] (also deed-chap and deed-rap).

Deed-throw (deed-throw) n., arch. death throes, agony of death – ‘Sprawling in thair deid-throws upon the ground’ [JW1619], ‘Yin comprehensive tairm Covers them a’ – Birth-pangs, rheumatics And dead-throw!’ [DH].

Deed-watch (deed-wawch) n., arch. ticking sound made by the death-watch beetle, said to portend death (also deed-chap and deed-ruckle).

Deedwitter (deed-wi’-ur, ded-waw’-ur) n. Deadwater, general name for the area near the Border, to the east of Saughtree. The stream there is one of the sources of the North Tyne, and the name comes from the fact that it is flat for some distance, hence the water flows only slowly through this boggy area. There is the farm of Deadwater on the road between Saughtree and Kielder, with Deadwater Fell and Deadwater Moor above being the heights on the Border between Liddesdale and Tynedale. A sulphurous spring in the area (in the upper part of Thorleshope farm) was used for the cure of skin conditions in the 18th century and early 19th centuries, and visited annually by people from Hawick – ‘...the balefu influence o the Stanes can be felt as fer doon as Deidwaitter’ [DH].

Deef (def) adj. deaf – ‘er ee deef’?, ‘speakin ower much makes ee deef’. ‘...To a’ that’s guid they’re deef an’ blind, They only like to stab an’ teer’ [FL], ‘But I as ane deef man heerdna, an’ I was as an dun man that opinetna his mouth’ [HSR], ‘...thaye ar like the deef eddart that stapps hir lug’ [HSR], ‘Hauf-daized, like deef auld men, listenin’ ’...’ [DH] (also spelled ‘dief’).

Deef an Dumb Asylum (deef-in-dum-u-slun) n. institution built in 1825 where??.

Deefen (deef-in) v. to deafen – ‘there was a deefenin cheer when Hawick scored the wunnin try’.

Deefenin (deef-in) n. deafening, the material placed between the floorboards and the ceiling below to reduce transmission of noise, often mortar, soot, etc.

Deef Robbie (deef-ro-bee) n. nickname for Robert Blake.

Deefy Danny (deef-fee-daw-nee) n. nickname for Daniel Fisher.

Deek (deek) n., arch. a peek, peep, concealed look – ‘Yeh bit sate on the kri-stane o the brig; yeh deek at the gurlin Yill’ [ECS].

Deelet (deel’) pp. dealt – ‘He hasna deelit sae wi’ onie ither natione ...’ [HSR], ‘Thou hest deel weel wi’ thy servant ...’ [HSR].

Deep Gill (deep-gil) n. stream in the headwaters of Twisleshope Burn in the upper Hermitage valley, south of Twisleshope Hope. It rises near Mid Hill, being formed from Muckle Sike and East Grain (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Deephope (deep-pup) n. farm on the Tima Water, just south of Ettrick village. It was formerly part of Rankilburn Parish. It was a Crown steading, said to be part of Mount Common. In 1486 it was leased to William Scott, and then to It was Stephen Scott by 1492. In 1499 it was released to Stephen Scott, with an obligation for him to pay the arrears. In 1510 it was again assigned to Stephen Scott. In 1541 it was ‘Montcolmone, alias Deiphope’, when occupied by William Scott. Adam Scott from there was recorded in 1573. Walter Scott of Deephope was said to have been one of the men in the raiding party that freed Kinmont Willie in 1596 (it is ‘Deiphope’ in 1486, 1492, 1499 and 1512, and ‘Deiphoip’ in 1573; ‘Deepup’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Deep Pool Brae (deep-pool-brà) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Deep Slack (deep-slawk) n. hill in the upper Borthwick Water, about 3 km north of Craik village, reaching a height of 362 m.

Depth (deepth) n., arch. depth.

Deer-hair (deer-här) n., arch. the club-rush, a coarse kind of grass that bears small yellow flowers, Scirpus caspius or the spike-rush Eleocharis caspicta – At the Skelf-hill, the cauldron still The men of Liddesdale can show; And on the spot, where they boil’d the pot. The spreat and the deer-hair ne’er shall grow’ [JL].

Deer Park (deer-pawrk) n. name given to fields to the south-east of old Cavers house. Presumably this used to be the deer park for the estate.

The Deer Park (thu-deer-pawrk) n. Jedforest Deer and Farm Park, a visitor attraction on Mervinslaw Estate, off a side road between Jedburgh and the Carter Bar. As well as deer there is a petting farm, adventure playground and birds of prey demonstrations.

dee’t (dee’, deet) pp., poet. died, perished – ‘...I wad hae deet owtricht in mine afflickshon’ [HSR].

deevil (dee-vul) n. devil – ‘whae the deevil din that?’; ‘She’ll ca’ mei a drucken auld deevil ...’ [RM], ‘...and the deevil dirt Sent roarin’ yince again’ [DH], ‘New-fangled deevils never heed them’ [WNK], ‘When deevils drive, ane needs maun rin; And aie I ran to Maggie Miller’ [JT] (cf. deel).

Deevil Bell (dee-vul-bel) n. nickname in use around the 19th century – ‘Black Andra’ and the Birsin’ Badger, Tammy Robertson, Deevil Bell; The Blue Laird and the Gallopin’ Cadger, Baillie Birsleton and the Mell’ [HI].

deevilish (dee-vul-ish) adj. devilish – ‘...But brash and brazent she raised her voice And tell’t her grim and deevilish choice’ [WL].

Deevil’s Shin (dee-vulz-shin) n. Devil’s Shin, the name of a field at the edge of Hawick Common, being an area of moorland to the north-west of the racecourse.

deevision (dee-ve-shin) n. a division – ‘...afore gettin his ain fowre-deevision frame at Pringle’s’ [WL].

deficient (dee-fi-shin’) adj., arch. a defaulter – ‘Spent by bailies at ordering officers to poind the deficiencies for the clock, ...0 1 4’ [BR1761].

deforce (dee-fors) v., arch. to prevent an officer of the law from performing his duty, impede by force – ‘Item, whatsomever person that sal deforce the officer in execution of his office, efter tryal sall pay £10 money, and wardit during the bailies’ will’ [BR1640], ‘Mr Cunningham is fined for deforcing the officers with ane colfracie’ [BR1676].

defforcement (dee-fors-min’) n., arch. the act of deforcing, i.e. using force to prevent an official from performing their duties – ‘...onlawed in ane deforacement of yr. officer when he come to poynd for his fyne ...’ [BR1693].

Degastan (de-ga-stan) n. battle of 603 between Æthelfrith and a combined army of Dalriadan Scots and Strathclyde Britons under King Aedan. Victory by the Angles probably determined that English rather than Gaelic became the language of the eastern Borders. The site is believed to be at Dawston in Liddesdale, about 11 miles from Hawick. Although few details are recorded the two bands are surmised to have met in the valley of the Dawston Burn, close to the road to Kielder Water before it enters England. Another location suggested (by Jeffrey) for the battlefield is ‘Dawstones or Daegstons’, located on the farm of Florida, close to Castleton. And a third suggestion is Dalston near Carlisle.

de Gray (du-grä) n. Barons of Wilton in Hereford in the 13th to 16th centuries, not to be confused with the Barons of the local Wilton.

deh (de) v. don’t – ‘deh come eet wi mei’, ‘deh tell is’, ‘A deh ken’, ‘deh worry yersel’, ‘deh git yer knickers in a twist’, ‘if ee deh like eet, ee deh hev ti hev eet’, ‘ee deh ken where that’s been’, ‘And if A deh feel just thi ticket ...’ [IW], ‘...deh forget oo’ve played for yin Cornet twice’ [CT] (also written ‘de’; effectively a shortened form of dinni; cf. divven, which is used interrogatively).

de Hawick (du-hlik) n. Adam (13th C.) described as ‘Senescallo de Hawhie’ (i.e. steward) when he witnessed a charter of John, son of Ylif (or Ellif) of Elliston (near St. Boswells) in the reign of Alexander II (sometime between about 1220 and 1243). His relationship to other ‘de Hawicks’ is unknown. The title of ‘steward’ suggests he was an official of the Abbot of Melrose in particular lands (acting like a Bailie of Regality). Alexander (12th/13th C.) witness to a charter of Robert of Pollock to Melrose Abbey around 1200. Andrew (b.1375–bef. 1425) apparently of noble birth (according to one papal record), although his lineage is unknown. He was Canon of Dunkeld and incumbent of Ruffil parish before he was twenty, probably to support his studies abroad. He was a scholar of canon law at Avignon and also described as ‘papal chaplain’. In 1394 he was in the service of Sir John de Remorgny, Ambassador to the Scottish King. He was granted canonnies in Aberdeen and in Moray in 1394, although may not actually have taken them up, for he is again petitioning for a canony in Aberdeen in 1406. However, from 1406 he acted as secretary to the Duke of Albany, Regent of Scotland, which must have been a position of great responsibility. In that year he was made Rector of Liston (i.e. Kirkliston) and resigned Ruffil in Dunkeld (which was of lesser value), although he had dispensation to also hold a second benefice in the following years. He was one of the witnesses to the charter to William Douglas of Drumlanrig for the Barony of Hawick in 1406 or 1407. Through to 1417 his name appears frequently in the Register of the Great Seal as a witness to charters issued by Albany; for example, in 1409 he was witness to a charter involving lands in Haseadean, in 1410 witnessed the resignation of the lands of Borthwick by Robert Scott and the grant to Sir William of Borthwick, and in 1413 to a charter for succession of the lands of the Cunninghams of Kilmaurs (including the Barony of Haseadean). His name also appears many times in the Exchequer Rolls in connection with the Duke of Albany, in the period 1404–17. In 1418 he had bestowed upon him the handsome pension of 200 gold ‘scudi’ deriving from the priory of St. Andrews. He also acted as Auditor of the Exchequer for 8 years, but did not attend in 1418 and had been replaced by 1420. In 1420 he ‘exhorted the faithful’ to help build a bridge between Linlithgow and Edinburgh. Also in 1420 he was assigned the Canonry and Prebend of Kincardine, although he already possessed Canonries of Glasgow, Dunkeld and Murray, together with several Prebends. He appears to have been Archdeacon of Teviotdale (being proposed after the apparently mistaken removal of John Croyser), in 1424–25, suggesting that he died about this time. Also in 1425 John Gray was appointed Rector of Liston, made vacant by his death. Geoffrey (13th C.) mentioned in a dispute of 1279–80 involving the Earl of Cornwall and rights on the rivers Ure and Ouse. Among those appointed to serve on the Yorkshire jury were ‘Willelmus Lovel et Galfridus de Hawyk’. It is therefore possible that he was a Lovel. Henry (15th C.) recorded as one of the members of the inquest relating to Culross in 1448/9. His name is there written ‘Henry Hawye’. Hugh (12th/13th C.) mentioned in an entry in the Roll of Expenses of King John of England in 1209. This is one of the earliest dated examples of the appellation ‘de Hawick’ (spelled this way here). He may be the same as the person appearing as a witness to a charter of Robert de Lundris of Ruthven Church in the ‘Registrum de Aberbrothec’ sometime in the period 1180–1214. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Hugonem de Hawyk’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was probably associated with the Northumberland Hawick. John (12th C.) mentioned in a charter granted by Auselmi de Molla (i.e., Mow) to Melrose Abbey in the reign of William I, where one of the witnesses was Roger, son of ‘John de Hawic’. This was in the period 1170 to 1190. He is probably also the John of Hawick who witnessed the charter of Henry Lovel of 2 oxgangs of lands in Branxholme to the Priory of St. Andrews in the period 1163 to 1183. John (14th C.) received a letter of presentation to the Church of Hawick from Edward III of England (as holder of the lands belonging to the heir of Richard Lovel) in 1355/6. He is the only known example of someone clearly within Hawick itself having the appellation ‘de Hawick’. He may also have been mentioned in other documents of the time, e.g. in a letter of safe conduct for him and 4 mounted companions to visit various holy places in England in 1365/6. His son Roger was witness to a charter connected with Melrose Abbey at about the same time. Nothing more is known about him, although he may be the same person as John Fleming who is recorded as holding the Church of Hawick until 1363. John (14th C.) Canon of Glasgow who is recorded as witnessing a deed relating to the Hospital of Polmadie in 1395. Whether he is the same as any of the other Johns is unknown. John (14th C.) granted a letter of protection by Richard II in 1380, along with several other clergymen, in order to pursue studies for a year at Oxford. He was described as a clerk (‘John de Hawewyk, Clerk’). He may be the same as the following entry. John (14th/15th C.) priest and bachelor of Canon Law who is mentioned many times in Glasgow Diocese records from 1384 until 1410. He may be the same John described above. He petitioned the Pope for a benefice in 1384 and appears to have been appointed Vicar of Dunlop. In 1387 he asked for a canonry of Aberdeen, but seems to have obtained a living in Glasgow. He was proposed as Precentor of Glasgow in 1398 and probably succeeded Henry Wardlaw in about 1403, when Wardlaw was promoted to Archdeacon. However, he appears to have been dispossessed around 1403–6 by William de Lander. He resigned Dunlop sometime before 1404. By 1405 he also had the canonry of Petty and Brackly, a prebend of Moray in Inverness-shire. His canonry of Glasgow was confirmed in 1406. The Prebendary appears to have been Carstairs (‘Castilaniys’), but exchanged for Renfrew in 1410. In 1406 he also held the Canonry and Prebend of Petyt and Brachlyn in Moray. In 1409 he received the further Canonry of ‘Moy’ in Moray John (14th/15th C.) Vicar of St. Mary’s, Edrom, in Berwickshire and Kinkel in Aberdeen, he is recorded as sending no less than 4 petitions to the Pope in 1394. He asks for a canonry in Moray, a canonry in Aberdeen, a canonry in St. Andrews and a benefice in the gift of the Bishop of St. Andrews. He is referred to as priest, honorary papal chaplain and scholar of canon law at Avignon. He also had the support of Prince David (Duke of Rothesay, eldest son of King Robert III) in petitioning for a canonical marriage to Dunkeld. He resigned Edrom about 1401, since in 1419 John Brown is said to have unlawfully held the vicarage of Edrom for 18 years after it was vacant following his resignation; however, it is unclear when he died, or if he might be the same as one of the other Johns. John (14th/15th C.) another of the same name is mentioned along with the precentor of Glasgow in a charter of 1408, where he is described as ‘Sir John of Hawik, presbyter and notary public’. He may be the same as one of the next described. John (14th/15th C.) notary public who is recorded in legal documents connected with the Diocese of Glasgow in the years 1413 (relating to Andrew Kinglass), 1429, 1440, 1446/7 (relating to a mill in Glasgow) and 1450. John (d.1431/2) Precentor in the Church of Glasgow, apparently separate from the earlier one recorded in in the period 1384–1410 (but this is not certain). He is recorded in Glasgow Diocese records of 1417, 1425 and 1429. He appears to have held the office of Precentor (or Chanter) 1398–1432, and his recent death is mentioned in late 1432. He was appointed by Henry Wardlaw, when he became Archdeacon of Glasgow, but was dispossessed by William de Lauder around 1403–06. In 1431 he was described as Canon of Glasgow when he resigned some of his other benefices. He witnessed a charter for John Maxwell in 1423. His death was recorded in March 1431/2, and in 1436 ‘David Cadw’ was presented to the precentorship of Glasgow, vacated after his death. John (14th/15th C.) Vicar of Saltoun, mentioned in 1414 as receiving money on behalf of Patrick of Abernethy, nephew of the Regent Albany. He is noted as ‘domini Johannis Hawike’. John (14th/15th C.) mentioned in a petition of 1416 by William de Colyn. He apparently had a prebend in the Collegiate Church of Abernethy, but about this time was appointed to the Archdeaconry of Sodor instead. John (14th/15th C.) resigned the perpetual vicarage of Mearns in 1422. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) mentioned in a law suit debating who has the living of Kylmany Church in the diocese of St. Andrews in 1432. He is described as ‘John Hawik’. John (15th C.) precentor of Glasgow who appears in the records of the College of Glasgow in 1435. Perhaps this is confusion with the Precentor of the same name who died about 1432. John (15th C.) recorded in 1448 as ‘Johanne de Havie’ when he was witness to the sasine for Birkwood and Burnflat. The other witnesses were all Scots, and so it seems likely he was a local man. John (15th C.) Vicar of Dunlop, whose name appears in a deed of the vicarage of Glencairn in 1454, ‘Magistro Johanne Hawyc, baculario in decresit, vicario de Dunlop’. This surely cannot be the same John who was Vicar of Dunlop 67 years earlier. John (15th C.) sea-man who is recorded (along with John Christison) in the Exchequer Rolls of 1459 in connection with 2 voyages to transport wheat and barley from Findhorn to Leith. John (15th/16th C.) notary and presbyter who is also referred to in some documents as a chaplain (assuming these are the same person) in Glasgow Diocese records of 1507–13. Malcolm (d.bef. 1459) recorded as Rector of Yetholm Church in 1435 in Glasgow Dioces records, where he is described as ‘Dominus Malcolmus de Hawyk’. He is recorded in 1459 as being the deceased ‘Malcolm de Habuk (recte Hawik)’ when Qunitin Weir had a petition for the rectory of ‘Zethem’ and other benefices. Margaret (14th C.) nun of the priory of Nesham in County Durham. In 1350 she was referred to as ‘Dame Margaret Hawyck’ when listed among the nuns charged with electing an abess. She is probably from the Little Eden family. Margaret (d.1334) recorded in a register of wills. She was married to ‘John de Apeton’ and her will of 1334 (perhaps one of the dates is an error), drawn up in London, says that her mansion should be sold for the upkeep of the Church of St. Dionisius, with Isabella Godchap as the preferred purchaser. Margaret (14th/15th C.) daughter of Walter of Little Eden. She is said to have married William Brus (1372–1427). Her daughter Maud married William Marshall. Patrick (14th/15th C.) friar (‘fratris Patricii de Hawic’) recorded being paid the pension due to the Master of the Hospital of St. Laurence of haddington in 1413. Robert (13th C.) listed as being ‘of Hawic’ in 1230 in relation to an assize held at Newcastle-upon-Tyne. It seems likely that he was associated with the Hawick in Northumberland. Robert (13th C.) recorded as ‘Roberto de Hawik’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was somehow associated with prisoners in Newcastle Castle, but is unclear if he was Scottish or English. He could be the same man as the Robert who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. Alternatively he could be a descendant of the Robert...

de Heriz de Heriz
decorated half a century earlier. Robert (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls of 1296, appearing as ‘Robert de Hawyk’ in Roxburghshire (also transcribed as ‘Hanwyk’, which is clearly an error). His seal bears a lion coiled within 2 squares and the name ‘S’ROB’TI DE HAVWIC’.
Robert (14th/15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. His name appears frequently as witness to deeds in connection with St. Giles Church. He was deputy of the Collectors of Customs and deputy Chamberlain to John Stewart, son of the Regent Albany in 1406 and deputy of Sir John Forrester in the period 1410–21, his name appearing several times in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1410 he was in charge of the masons who demolished Jedburgh Castle and also in renovations to Edinburgh Castle. Thus he appears to have been acting as Master of Works.
From 1422–25 he was Collector of Customs for Edinburgh and ‘deputy of clerk of coquet and of tronar’. In 1428 he was on a jury for an inquisition in Edinburgh. Roger (12th/13th C.)
mentioned as witness to a charter of Anselm de Molla to Melrose Abbey during the reign of William I (around the 1170s), where he is referred to as son of ‘John de Hawie’. He is probably the same Roger, son of John of Hawick, who witnessed a charter about the same time wherein Henry Lovel granted lands in Branxholme to St. Andrews Priory. Roger (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Cap-tane of the Airmetage’ (i.e. Keeper of Hermitage Castle) when he failed to appear at the 1612 court case dealing with the death of Jock Elliot of Liddesdale in Hawick. Simon (12th/13th C.)
mentioned to a charter for Torpenhow in Cumberland, for Philip de Valognes. This was perhaps made at a session of Roxburgh sheriff court (because of the list of witnesses). It is undated, but given sometime in the period 1195 to 1205. His name appears as ‘Simone de Hauuic’. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as being a member of the Monastery of Dundrennan in the Exchequer Rolls around 1460 in connection with a gift from the King for service to a sick member of the King’s retinue. Walter (13th C.) mentioned in a charter of Coldingham Priory, around the 1240s, relating to a land exchange between Chisholmes. He is referred to as ‘Waldef de Hawie’. Walter (14th C.) recorded in the 13th reign of Edward I (i.e. about 1285) in the ‘Calndar of Inquisitions Post Mortem’ for Northumberland, the will of Margery de Gosbeck. He was ‘Walter de Hawik’ and gave 4 shillings service for the manor of ‘Hawik’. Walter (14th C.) mentioned as witness in a charter of 1340 involving the Prior and Convent of Durham. He may be the same person mentioned 2 years later being admitted to the ‘first tonsure’ by the Bishop of Bisaccia, on the authority of the Bishop of Durham. Walter (14th C.) recorded in 1360 as being of ‘Hauwyk’ when he directed his attorneys Nicholas Bagot and William of Ry-don to deliver sasine of the manor of ‘Hauwyk’ to Alan of Strother. This was done at Durham, so the place was presumably Hawick in Northumberland. Possibly the same Walter is mentioned in a bond of 1373 to Sir William de Claxton (in the Diocese of Durham), along with John de Sad-bergh and William de Blacden. Walter of Little Eden (d.c.1430) held lands near Horden in County Durham, which had been in his family for some time. About 1417 the manor was conveyed to him in trust. His son Walter and brother William are also mentioned. His wife appears to have been Joan, and his heiress was also Joan, who married Robert Rhodes of Newcastle. In 1426 he settled the estate on his trustees and went to fight for Henry VI in France. English fortune in France changed, Joan of Arc was burnt at the stake, and he never returned to England.
He is recorded in 1437 in an inquisition relating to the inheritance of the late Thomas de Haddam in Durham. Little Eden passed from his daughter to Robert Rhodes and then to John Trollope of Thornley. William (14th C.) recorded (along with Walter) on a list of 56 people admitted to ‘first tonsure’ in Durham Priory records in 1340.
William (14th C.) mentioned in letters of safe duct to England of 1362 (along with 2 companions and 3 horses), 1367 (with one lad and 2 horses) and 1369, where he is stated to be a merchant. This may have been the same ‘William de Hawyk’ who was magistrate of Edinburgh and seems to have acted as treasurer for the city in the period 1367–69, when there were monies collected to pay the Edinburgh portion of the King’s debt. William (d.c.1431) clerk in the Diocese of St. Andrews. He was first Rector of the Church of Guthrie, dedicated to St. Mary, which was a prebend of the Cathedral of Brechin. His name is recorded in deeds for 1434. Probably the same ‘William de Hawyk’ is recorded in a dispute over the Canonry of Brechin in 1444, more than 3 years after he died (also spelled ‘Hawyk’, etc.; some of these people may also have had surnames that are simply not recorded; see also Hawick and the Hawicks).
de Heriz (du-he-reez) n. Nigel (b.c.1195) son of William and father of Henry. He was owner of the Deil's Jingle (thu-deelz-jing-gul) n. linear earthwork located near Castle O'er in Eskdale. It may be similar in age and function to the Catrail, although only appears to exist as a short section, running roughly north-south on the east side of the White Esk.

the Deil's Pool (thu-deelz-pool) n. former name for a deep pool in the Borthwick Water.

the deil's wund (thu-deelz-wund) n. wind supposed to blow when Satan was about – ‘One evening the deil’s wund, as it was proverbially called, having begun to blow . . . ’ [EM1820].

the land around Rankilburn, including the Buccleuchs and was Ranger of Ettrick Forest in 1246. He also witnessed an agreement between Henry of Ashkirk and Henry’s brother Alexander sometime before 1249. He further witnessed a grant for lands in Leptlaw about 1250. The family ceased to be Rangers in 1249, and soon afterwards Richard Scott of Murthockstone acquired the lands of Rankilburn (also written ‘Herries’).

delikt (dee-lich) v., n., arch. delight – ‘I satt doun anunder his skaddaw wi’ grit delicht . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Delicht thyself alua in the Lord; an' he sall gie thee the wushes o’ thine hait’ [HSR], ‘Hosts with patriotism warming, Hearts and hames delichted charming’ [RK].

the Dell's Pool (thu-deelz-pool) n. pool in the Borthwick Water, said to be a place of evil spirits (hence the name presumably ‘Deil’s Pool’).

Deloraine (de-lo-ran, -rën) n. area around where the Deloraine Burn meets the Ettrick Water, where the farms of Easter and Wester Deloraine are. It was a Crown land from at least 1456, assigned to George Lauder in 1488, Sir David Scott of Buccleuch in 1490, Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell in 1491 and Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1499. John Scott of Deloraine is recorded in 1493 and he and Robert of Deloraine in 1494/5. It remained Crown property until at least 1504 when it was let to the son and widow of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Walter Scott of Buccleuch held it in 1512. In 1541 these lands and ‘Wardishope’ were occupied by Thomas Anderson, John Dickson, William Laidlaw and others, paying £72 yearly. It was possessed by the Scotts from at least 1543, becoming an Earldom in 1706, with the title held by the younger sons of Scott of Buccleuch, and dying out with the 4th Earl in 1807. West and East Deloraine are shown in the survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when the farms covered 2700 acres.

and 1002 acres, respectively. Scott of Satchells states that William Scott, ‘Cut-at-the-black’, was among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch and was given the lands of Nether Deloraine for his service. The lands inspired Sir Walter Scott’s fictional character William of Deloraine, of whom there was a stained-glass representation at Silverbuthall House, now in Drumlannig’s Tower. West Deloraine was tenanted by Walter Laidlaw (d.1712). The farm of Over Deloraine, later called ‘West Deloraine’, was farmed by descendants of the Scotts of Singlie in the 19th century. East Deloraine was tenanted by John Grieve (of Kilburn) from 1800. In 1802 Nether Deloraine was valued at £854 and Wester Deloraine at £1049 (perhaps derived from St. Orran, with the initial element possibly being the Cumbric ‘dal’ meaning ‘haugh’, however, it has also been suggested that the name comes from an association with the family ‘de Lorraine’; it is ‘Dalloryane’ in 1456, ‘Dalloriane’ in 1468 and 1471, ‘Dallorian’ in 1488, ‘Dauloriane’ in 1490, ‘dalloryane’ in 1493, ‘Dallorien’ in 1494, ‘Delloraine’ in 1494/5, ‘Dauloriane’ in 1499, 1501, 1502 and 1512, ‘Dellorien’ in 1594, ‘Dalloriane’ in 1494/5, ‘Dolorian’ in 1499, ‘Delloraine’ in 1494, ‘Dalloriane’ in 1490, ‘Dolorian’ in 1493, ‘Dalloriane’ in 1494/5, ‘Dauloriane’ in 1499, 1501, 1502 and 1512, ‘Dellorien’ in 1594, ‘Dalloriane’ in 1494/5, ‘Dolorian’ in 1634, ‘Doloriane’ in 1653 and ‘Dolleriane’ in 1661; it is marked ‘O. Dallor’ and ‘N. Dallor’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it gave its name to a town in Manitoba, Canada.

Deloraine Court (de-lo-rān-kör) n. part of Stirches, off Guthrie Drive, built in 1977, named after an area in Selkirkshire, which was an Earldom in the 18th century and inspired the character in Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ – ‘Then William of Deloraine, good at need, Against a foe ne’er spurr’d a steed’ [SWS].

Deloraineshil (de-lo-rān-sheel) n. former name for a cottage near Deloraine. Michael Johnston was there in 1753.

Delorne (de-lōrn) n. local variant of Deloraine – ‘Ah! would I might read by yonder star That wheels on the crest of dim Delorne The gleam of the blades off Carter Bar Bringing me homeward my eldest born’ [WHO].

deludit (dee-loo-dee’, -di’) pp. deluded – ‘Ah, puir deludit Maggie Broon! Ahe theocht the High Street Belnaged the Toon’ [DH].

dem (dem) v., arch. to dam, stem – ‘Trying to dem the stream’ [JAHM].

Demainholm (dee-mān-hōm) n. farm in Castleton Parish, a couple of miles south of Newcastleon. It is probably either the ‘Dominium inferius’ or ‘Dominium superius’ on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section attached to the Mangerton estate. It was ‘Dalman’ when, along with Bluntwood and ‘the Crouke’ it was owned by David Purdom and then in 1476 granted by Archibald, Earl of Angus to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It was part of the lands of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larrass until passed to James Elliott, who married the heiress in 1637. It seems to have been the main dwelling place of Robert Elliot of Redheugh in about 1624. In 1677 it was sold by Robert Elliot of Larrass to John Elliot, who continued to own it into the early 18th century. It was valued at £200 in 1678. It is probably the ‘Manholm’ listed in 1694 when tax was paid for 4 hearths there. The lands are part of the Buccleuch estates and have been partly planted as woodland. A Mr. Paterson was recorded as owner in 1788. Andrew Kyle was there in 1792 and Adam Armstrong in 1797. Robert Pott and Matthew Little were owners in 1811, when it was valued at £200. It was farmed by Joseph Armstrong in the 1830s and 40s and Thomas Scott in the 1850s and 60s. By about 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. John Holliday was tenant in the early 20th century (also written ‘Dmainholm’; it is ‘Dmainhoo’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is recorded as ‘Dalman’ in 1476, ‘dawmane’ in 1489, ‘Dalemane’ in 1526, ‘Demayne Holme’ in 1583, ‘downmane’ in 1613, ‘Downmanie’ in about 1624, ‘Demaynehelme’ in 1624, ‘Downaynhelme’ in 1637, ‘Manholm’ in 1718 and ‘De Mountholm’ in 1797).

demm (dem) interj. damn, used to express mild irritation, contempt or disappointment – ‘demm, A didin wun again’, ‘Wi’ a gledge at the sky As the cutty reeks, A demm at a thistle And on wi’ his breeks’ [DH], adj. damned – ‘wull ee git they demn things oot the road’, ‘ee’re a demn nuisance yow’, ‘...was heard ti say ‘A loved ma wife that much that A yince demned near tellt her!’ [IWL] (cf. dern and desh).

demned (demd) adj., pp. damned – ‘Fair fa’ ma honest, sonsie face!’ – Look at your ain – a dem’d disgrace!’ [DH] (also written ‘dem’d’).

dempster (demp-stur) n., arch. an officer of a court who announces the sentences – ‘Hawick forever and independent’, a formula ... handed down from one dempster to another ...’ [RM] (Scots law term).
Dempster (demp-stur) n. John (16th C.) witness to a 1622 sasine in Hawick for Allan Deans. He is recorded as ‘mollitore’, i.e. ‘miller’.

demuirred (de-mewrd) adj., arch. sad, downcast – ‘...whan A turw dowie an hum-jum or take a demuirrd dwam, fair leike ti faa off the spake wui the wuddles an the vexes w o woark’ [ECS].

den (den) v., poet. to hide, escape into a den – ‘We’ve den’d ‘aneath the blooming slaes, And row’d amang the ferns’ [JT].

Dene (dee-na) n. poetic name for the Dean valley around Denholm – ‘Dena! when sinks at noon the summer breeze. And moveless falls the shade-work of the trees, Bright in the sun thy glossy beeches shine, And only Ancram’s groves can vie with thine’ [JL].

Dene see Dean

Dene Road (deen-röd) n. road leading out of Denholm to the south.

Deneside (deen-sid) n. former farm in the Rule valley, also known as Nether Hawthornside, lying on the left-hand side going up Hawthornsde Brae. It was part of the old barony of feu-Rule and its exact boundaries are not known. In 1562 ‘Johnne Turnbullis peill thair’ is described, when assigned to Agnes Herries as superior. Robert Turnbull was recorded there in 1611. It was ‘Deanside’ among the properties of Sir William Eliott of Stobs in the Barony of feu-Rule in the late 17th century. There were Turnbull Lairds there until about 1715, when Adam Turnbull fled, due to a combination of debts and having been a Stuart supporter (written ‘Deansyd’ in 1562).

Denholm see Denum

Denholm (denōn) n. municipality in Quebec, Canada, about 40 km north of Gatineau. The area is popular with summer cottage vacationers. It was named in 1869, after the village near Hawick. Several mines once operated nearby. The population is a few hundred.

Denholm Hill (de-num-hil) n. hill just before Cogsmill, on the left-side of the B6399, reaching a height of 863 ft. The name is confusing, since there is no obvious link with Denholm. The hill contains the remains of 2 hill-forts, the later one being a roughly 310 ft by 120 ft enclosure, with extensive ramparts and ditches and signs of a rectangular building inside. To the south-west is the earlier fortified structure, largely obliterated by the other one. A stone axe was found here and is in the Museum (cf. Denumhill).

denner (de-nur) n. dinner, often meaning the main meal of the day, traditionally served at mid-day – ‘...he’s played at coontless dances, ceilidhs, concerts, denners, Burns Suppers an’ weddings’ [IWL]. ‘Heavy wi’ denners: And heat, the scholars dreamed o’ the Dunk’ [DH]. ‘The Priest o’ the parish, the spruce young Dissenter, Were daily attendants at denner and tea’ [JT], ‘Cry on iz whan the denner’s ready’ [ECS], ‘A faand the guid o that denner as suin as A’d gaen wu’d’ [ECS], ‘A ayeways look forrit ti this speech being delivered it the Callants Club den- nur ...’ [IHS] (also written ‘dennur’).

the Denner (thu-de-nur, thu-de-ner) n. Common Riding Dinner on the Friday, after the Marches have been ridden, and the Flag returned for the night. The Provost presides, and the Cornet is presented with his official medal. There follows many toasts and songs, including a special silent toast to the ‘Memory of Drumlanrig’. The dinner is mentioned in the Burgh Records at least as early as 1809, and presumably was already an old tradition. Before the Under Haugh was sold off (1854) the Cornet and his guests used to march there after the Dinner, wearing their oak chaplets, to dance the Reel. This ‘Denner’ was a lunchtime affair (or early afternoon, since things usually ran late!), immediately after the Song Singing, and another dinner also took place on the Saturday. In the mid-19th century the event was for the Cornet and his unmarried supporters only, there being a separate dinner for the Cornet’s Father and his supporters, and the Magistrates. In 1886 the oak leaf tradition was revived as part of the Friday Dinner proceedings, and the timing eventually moved to later in the day. After the Dinner a procession, headed by the Fifes and Drums and some fiddlers, would proceed to the Games at the Haugh, displaying their oak emblems, where the Reel was danced. In the late 19th century there was also a Dinner on the Saturday, between the morning Races and the afternoon Games. Nowadays the Dinner is followed soon after by the Ball. Until 1902, and in a few other years in the early 20th century, it was held in the Town Hall, but since then has been in a variety of hotels etc. The dinner of 1946 was recorded by the B.B.C. Formally a very popular event, tickets were restricted to 250 in 1955, but since then numbers steadily dropped. To counter this in 2004 the event became a mixed one and the formal name is now ‘the Common Riding Dinner’. In 2007 it was held along with Ball in the Town Hall. A separate event, ‘the Greetin Denner’ or ‘Cornet’s Dinner’ is held on the Saturday night after the Common Riding has come to a close.
dent (den') n., arch. a layer of tough clay — 'There is also throughout the district, and covering the sandstone, so as greatly to interfere with its being quarried, a deposit of reddish clay, known by the local name of dent' [RDA].

Denton (den-ton) n. John (18th C.) 'postillion' at Riddell in 1794, when he was working for Lady Riddell. He was probably brought from elsewhere.

denty (den-tee) adj., poet. dainty — 'Hech, sirs! The denty fowk! Primpin by, pair by pair, Kirkgaun . . .' [DH].

Denum (de-num) n. Denholm, village surrounding a spacious green, about 5 miles east of Hawick, famous as the home of both John Leyden and James Murray. The village is mentioned as early as 1296 when Guy of Denum signed the Ragman Rolls. Originally built around the confluence of the Teviot with the Dean Burn, the early village was burned during English raids in the 16th century. The lands were granted to Thomas of Cranston by Thomas Earl of Mar and Lord of Cavers, sometime before 1375. Cranston was to pay a silver penny in the town of Denholm at Whitsunday in blench farm' if asked. This shows that Denholm was already considered a town by the late 14th century. It then continued as the seat of the Cranstons until purchased by Sir Archibald Douglas in 1658, reuniting the area with the Cavers estate. Henry Turnbull, William Clerk, Adam Nichol, John Hobkirk, Patrick Thomson and James Nichol were recorded as residents there in 1493 and 1494/5. The lands were included in the Barony of Cavers in documents of 1509/10 and 1511, and regranted to Sir William Cranston in 1512; it was then referred to as 'the ten pound lands of the granter's dominical lands of Dennen'. It may have been burned by Dacre's men in 1535 and was plundered by the English in 1541, with all the cattle taken, 3 houses burned and 2 men killed. Like much of the area, it was burned by the Earl of Hertford's men in 1545. It was probably also burned by Dacre's men in the previous decade. The town was still included in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687, including the 10-pound land of the demesne lands of Denholm. There were 17 people listed there on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. In 1696 the Scottish Parliament enacted 2 annual fairs in the village, on 16th June and 5th November, each lasting for 8 days; in 1698 Parliament enacted a weekly market on Wednesdays. The present village layout dates to the 17th century after Sir Archibald Douglas feued 8⅔ acres for houses and gardens around the Green in 1764–66. It is a rare unspoiled example in Scotland of a village planned around a green. The village had a small but thriving hosiery industry from the late 18th century until the early 20th (with Andrew Scott and Dickson & Beattie being prominent manufacturers); in 1844 it is reported that there were 87 stocking frames in the village. There is an existing plan of the village from 1835, when the feuars gave up their rights to turfs at Denholm Mill in exchange for gardens and lands. Until the early 19th century it was known as 'Dirty Denholm', with the Green being filled with middens, storage heaps and animal pens. The village was designated a Conservation Area in 1971, listed as a 'planned village'. A suspension footbridge erected at Denholm in 1826–27 was the only way of crossing the Teviot between Ancrum and Hornshole; it was removed in 1875 (although the pylons remain) following the construction of Denholm's own Teviot Bridge in 1864/5, using stone from Denholmhill. The town has long had its own primary school. A stone cross was erected as a memorial after WWI. Several artefacts from the area are in Hawick Museum, including flints, whetstones, stone axes, hammer-stones and spindle whorls. The village probably gave rise to most instances of the surname 'Denholm' or 'Denholme' (although there is also a parish of Denholm in Dumfriesshire). A plan of the village was drawn up by G. Scott in 1835. A book 'Denholm: a history of the village' was written by Margaret Sellar in 1989. Population (1991) 591 — 'A pickle blewe reek thre the hoose-lums o Denum draiglet in a swutherin clud' [ECS], 'But Denholm noo is growing up, And hooses stand up fast, Around the bield whaur Leyden dwelt, She's found her place at last' [WFC] (the origin has been suggested as Anglo-Saxon or Old English 'dene holm', for 'river meadow by the narrow wooded valley', but is more likely to be simply from 'act them denum', meaning 'at the valleys', where the dative plural ending of 'dene' has been retained; the name is first recorded in 1296 as 'Denum', although the 'vill of Dennum' in Northumberland is recorded in 1287, with a possibility that the origin is the same, or even that the name was transplanted from there; the spelling is a variant on 'Denum' until the mid-17th century, with the extra 'h' appearing first in 1633 and presumably being an error or affection; it is 'Denome' around 1370, 'Denum' in 1436, 'Dennowme' in 1483, 'Denhave' in 1490, 'Dennaum' in 1493, 1494/5 and 1509/10, 'Dennom'
Denum

and ‘Dennome’ in 1512, ‘Dennvme’ in 1545, ‘Denhame’ in 1548/9, ‘Dennovme’ in 1574 and ‘Den-holm’ in 1636; it is marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Denhooome’ and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Dennhoome’).

Denum (de-num) n. Alan (14th C.) recorded in 1326/7 in a charter of the Barony of Skravelyn in which he gained ‘Robertstoun’ from William of Govan. His wife Agnes is also mentioned. Guy (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls of 1296, where he is ‘Gwy de Denum’. This suggests that he came from a family that owned the lands at Denholm, but nothing else is known about him.
In 1303/4 he is ‘Guy de Denhom’ on the inquest for inheritance of the Barony of Wilton involving the de Charters family. He was also on a jury in 1304 at Dumfries (made up of men from Dumfrieshire and Roxburghshire) to decide on the privileges claimed by Robert Bruce, Earl of Carr-rick (and later King); he is there ‘Gy de Denhom’.
John (14th C.) recorded along with William in the rolls of Edward III in the period 1333–57. It is unclear if they were brothers or father and son, but they were surely both descended from Guy.
Denholm may already have been a possession of the Earl of Douglas by this time. Certainly there is no evidence that the family played any local role after this time. John (15th C.) Chaplain of Lesmahagow, recorded in 1459 on a ‘retour’ for lands of Broughton. Simon ‘of Denum of Rober-on’ in 1489/90. In 1497/8 he is ‘Simon Denum’ when he resigned the lands of Newham near Peebles. Will-IAM (14th C.) recorded as ‘William de Denum’ in 1330 when he received a pension for service to Scotland. He is presumably the same William mentioned in the rolls of Edward III in the period 1333–57, along with John. They are likely to both be descendants of Guy.

Denum Acres (de-num-à-kurz) n. former farm near Denholm, part of the Cavers estate.

Denum Baa (de-num-baw) n. handball game that takes place annually in Denholm on the Monday after Shrove Tuesday – ‘First comes Candlemas, then the new moon, the following Tuesday is Fastens E’en, the following Monday is Denholm Ba’ Day’ [T]. Formerly the single men were the ‘uppies’ and the married men the ‘doonies’, while today the ‘doonies’ are those living in the village while the ‘uppies’ are outsiders. The ‘baas’ are sponsored, often by newly weds or by pubs. The game is centred on the Green, with the ‘hails’ being the bridge at Honeyburn and the ‘Gang’ on the Jedburgh road. The spikes on the railings opposite the Cross Keys were the scene of many accidents, including a man called Best who was killed there one year. At one point there was a game at 9 a.m. for the apprentices and another at 1 p.m. for the men, with a separate boys game on the Friday. The single game now takes place in the afternoon.

Denum Band (de-num-bawnd) n. former band from Denholm. It is mentioned in a report from 1835, when it lead the reform supporters from the district as they paraded into Hawick for the voting.

Denum Brig (de-num-brig) n. bridge over the Teviot at the northern exit from the village, on the B6405. It was built in 1864/5 by Marshall and Ballantyne of Hawick, funded by local subscription, to connect with Hassendean Station 1½ miles away, and replacing the 1827 pedestrian chain suspension bridge. This was opened to connect the village with the train station at Hassendean, and at the time was the only substantial bridge across the Teviot between Horns-hole and Ancrum. Douglas of Cavers chaired the bridge opening ceremony of July 1865. There is a crude fish carved into the wall along the middle of it. The bridge over the Dean Burn on the way into Denholm is also called by the same name; this was swept away in 1806 and rebuilt a little lower down the stream.

Denum Cauld  (de-num-kawld)  n.  weir in the Teviot at Denholm. J.P. Alison may have been involved in the design of renovations in the 1890s.

Denum Congregational Kirk  (de-num-kong-gree-ga-shu-nul-kirk)  n.  church of the Congregational Union, also known as ‘Denum Independent Kirk’. It was established in 1826, following the efforts of James Douglas of Cavers, who hired Francis Dick as an itinerant preacher. There were 7 initial members, 2 from Denholm, 2 from Cavers, 2 from Hawick and 1 from Jedburgh. The first full time minister was appointed following the death of the Cameronian preacher James Duncan. From the early 1830s the congregation used the former Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, but by the late 1870s had run out of steam. An approximate roll of the ministry is: Francis Dick (summers) 1824–34; Robert Wilson 1835–42; John Spence 1844–46; John McRobert (1846–76).

Denum Court  (de-num-kör)  n.  Denholm Court, street planned for Stirches, but never built, despite appearing on Burrow’s street map.

Denum Cross  (de-num-kros)  n.  former market cross in Denholm, also known as the ‘Corse’. It was a low, circular stone, surmounted by a small cross. By the early 19th century all that remained was the base of the cross, with a hole where the shaft once fitted. It was then converted into a drinking trough for the village cows.

Denum Dean  (de-num-deen)  n.  sheltered woody glen, about 1 mile long, being the last part of the Dean Burn before it joins the Teviot near Denholm. The lands were granted to Thomas Cranston sometime before 1375. It is listed in 1511 as part of the lands of the Barony of Cavers, and held ‘in tenantry’ by the Baron in the 1558 charter. In 1574 it is among the lands listed in a discharge between John Cranston of that Ilk and William Douglas of Cavers, included in the non-entry fees for lands in the Lordship of Denholm. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was for a long time the property of the Laird of Cavers, who made it into a pleasure garden that became popular with locals in Victorian times. The cottage there was originally built around 1730 as a hunting lodge, becoming a tea pavilion in the 19th century, then being the home of the local woodcutter until 1948, after which it became ruined. An earthwork on the western side measures about 235 ft by 155 ft, and is probably the remains of a settlement, with an entrance on the south side. A spearhead found near here in 1937 was donated to Hawick Museum. The area inspired parts of Leyden’s ‘Scenes of Infancy’ – ‘... Where tangled hazels twined a screen Of shadowy boughs in Denholm’s mazy Dean’[JL], ‘Fair Denholm Dean, thy praises have been sung By many a bard whose harp is now unstrung’[TCh], ‘For Denholm sits serene and calm, Yet she’s mair sprijtly noo, E’en though the bonnie sheltered Dean Lies ravaged in the dew’[WFC] (it is ‘Dennumisdene’ around 1370, ‘Dennumisdene’ in 1551, ‘Dennunnisden’ in 1558 and ‘Dennovme Dein’ in 1574, ‘Denholmesdean’ in 1687).

Denum Fair  (de-num-fair)  n.  2 fairs were established by the Laird of Cavers in 1696, the summer fair taking place in early June (later moving to May) and the ‘mart’ fair in November (the day before Jedburgh’s fair). They were the highlights of the village year for the next couple of centuries, taking place on the Green. They would be opened by the Laird of Cavers riding up to the Cross (‘riding the fair’) and making a proclamation; he also had the right to collect dues on all transactions. Both fairs were used for local hiring purposes, and the ‘mart’ fair was when families would get in the winter’s provisions of salted provisions. The November fair would also end with a bonfire, the ‘bough-a-bale’. Both fairs died out around the end of the 18th century, the winter one lasting a bit longer. An unsuccessful attempt was made to continue the fair through the introduction of games in the early 19th century. The tradition of lighting a bonfire on the eve of Jethart Fair continued until the Green was enclosed.

Denum Ferm  (de-num-furm)  n.  former name for a farm near Denholm. It was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when Robert Scott was the tenant, and owned 4 horses (distinct from ‘Denholm Hill’ and ‘Denholm Mill’). It is probably the same as ‘Denum Haa’ and was so recorded with Robert Bulman as farmer in 1868.

Denum Feuars  (de-num-few-urz)  n.  Denholm’s first feuars followed the 1658 decision by Sir Archibald Douglas to feu 8 3/4 acres of land for houses and gardens around the Green. There were originally 47 feuars of these ‘auld yairds’. At about that time they had a guaranteed right to a ‘darg’ (i.e. day’s casting) of peats from an area on the lower slopes of Ruberslaw, as well as a load of divots for building or roofing from the Loaning. The feu duty was originally 1 merk Scots. Later each feuar was assigned a specific piece of the Common. In 1707 the lands of the Feuars were valued at £30. More land was feued in the 18th century along the Canongate. In 1835 James Douglas extended the gardens (by about 6 acres) in exchange for the feuars cleaning up the Green. At that time they also lost their right to peats from Ruberslaw, this being exchanged for other privileges, particularly grazing on the common pasture and river haughs. They also cultivated strips of land on the village ‘loaning’, and were known for breeding geese, this giving rise to the phrase ‘Denum for lean geese’. By the mid-19th century there were 60 feuars of the ‘new yairds’. The committee set up to administer the Green, including collecting rental for grazing, and for spending on community improvements was called the Feuars. In 1920 all but one of the feuars of land around the Green bought their feus from the Laird, and in 1946 they formally became owners of the common land. At that time the Feuars Committee was replaced by the Feuars and Householders Council. They represented the general interests of the village until the Community Councils were set up in 1972, but today still serve the function of looking after the common land and rights of way. The chairman of the committee was formerly known as the ‘Chief Feuar’.

Denum Flid (de-num-flid) n. name sometimes used to describe a flood which particularly hit Denholm on 9th August 1806. ‘Like the Great Flid’ in Hawick 4 decades earlier, this was a surprise flood on a summer’s day. There was a terrific lightning storm from about 2 p.m., and the Dean Burn swelled to a great size, carrying trees down, including the ‘King of the Dean’, and sweeping away Denholm Bridge. The flood had entirely abated by 9 p.m.

Denum Ford (de-num-ford) n. former ford across the Teviot at Denholm. It was situated a little downriver from the later bridge, at the end of the road leading directly north out of the village, where the river is fairly shallow (still marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Denum Free Kirk see Denum Kirk

Denum Granny (de-num-graw-nee) n. jocular term applied to a player in a game (particularly dominoes) who comes back to win from a position of nearly overwhelming defeat — ‘hei was twae nil doon, bit then ’ei din a Denum granny an bate is threi twae’.

Denum Green (de-num-green) n. centre of Village life in Denholm. The houses were laid out around the Green in the 17th century. However, the Green became quite unkempt and filthy, having around its extremities pig-houses, dung and ash heaps and mounds of sticks and peat for fuel. There was also once a ditch across it at the lower end. In 1835 the Laird of Cavers, wishing to ‘improve and beautify’ the Green, encouraged the village feuars to clean it up in exchange for extra garden ground behind their homes. This meant that the Green itself could be used to raise money for the Denholm Common Good, through grazing rental or cash crops. And so the Green was enclosed in 1836. From 1802–58 the ‘Auld Schuil’ stood in the middle of the Green. Leyden’s monument was erected there in 1861, near where the old ‘mercant cross’ used to be. In the 19th and early 20th centuries the Green was let for grazing, and used occasionally for fairs and army recruitment camps. A large bonfire, the ‘Bow o Bale’ was also annually held there. And it was long the place where locals would meet friends on New Year’s Day. There were formerly 6 large elm trees on the Green that were used for pinning notices to: 2 opposite the Cross Keys; 2 opposite the Fox and Hounds; 1 at Elm Cottage; and 1 opposite the Kirk. In 1959 a proposal to build a road diagonally across the Green was fortunately abandoned. The high wall round the Green was removed in the 1950s. The gates and railings were removed during WWII, but new gates were added in 2000, when the surrounding wall was also repaired — ‘How many dear illusions rise, And scenes long faded from my eyes, Since our bounding steps were seen Active and light on Denholm’s level green!’ [JL].

Denum Haa (de-num-haw) n. Denholm Hall, a farm at the north-west end of Canongate in Denholm. The farmhouse was built about 1837, replacing the farmhouse of Denholm Townfoot, next to the Mill Wynd. It was farmed by the Bulman family almost continuously until the last family member died in 2003. In the late 19th century it had a horse-driven flour mill and there was also once an adjacent bleaching green. The property is now being developed for housing.

Denum Haugh (de-num-hawf) n. former name for a piece of land on the north side of the Teviot near Denholm. In 1780 ‘Denholm-haugh’ is recorded as part of the boundary of the lands of Deanfoot in Minto Parish.
Denumhaugh Cottage

Denumhaugh Cottage (de-num-hawf-ko'-eej) n. house in Denholm, located south of the junction of the A698 with Westgate.

Denumhill (de-num-hil) n. Denholmhill, farm on the western slopes of Ruberslaw, with the disused Denholm Quarry nearby. It has been a farm since the late 18th century when it was part of the Cavers estate. James Scott was farmer there in 1797. Walter Laing was tenant of the farm and quarry, with his son Walter taking over in the mid-19th century. The quarry here was used from some time in the 18th century until around 1900. A slab of white sandstone with roughly incised figures was turned up by the plough here in 1905. A small Roman brooch (with a swastika emblem) was found there and purchased by the National Museum of Antiquities in Scotland in 1930. A small axe-head or chisel was found there in about 2006. Between the farm buildings and the quarry are the remains of the earthwork known as Whitecastle Fort.

Denumhill Quarry (de-num-hil-kwa-ree) n. another name for Denum Quarry.

Denumhill Wud (de-num-hil-wud) n. Denholmhill Wood, strip of woodland north of the quarry at Denholmhill, south-east of Denholm village.

Denum Hoose (de-num-hoos) n. former name for a large house in Denholm, probably Westgate Haa (listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax records).

Denum Hoose (de-num-hoos) n. Victorian villa in Denholm, roughly at the corner of Sunnyside and the Minto Road. Kenneth Oliver lived there for a while.

Denum Independent Kirk (de-num-in-deep-en-din'-kirk) n. congregation founded in Denholm in 1826 following James Douglas of Cavers hiring Francis Dick as an itinerant preacher in the summers from 1823 or 1824.

Denum Kirk (de-num-kirk) n. main church in Denholm. The original parish church was at Cavers, with the Cameronian chapel built in the village around 1740. Denholm Parish Church itself was built as a Free Church in 1844/5, with the land being granted by James Douglas of Cavers, and some of the stones being collected from the river. The congregation had broken away from the parish church in 1843, and included people from Minto and Bedrule. The adjacent Pitt Memorial Hall was built in 1892. The church was always known locally as ‘the Kirk’, and officially became the United Free Church in 1900. The congregation rejoined the Church of Scotland in 1929. It formed a link with Bedrule Church in 1963, with Minto in 1975 and since 2003 has been linked with a larger area called Ruberslaw, which also includes Hobkirk and Southdean. The cemetery was in use from only the second half of the 19th century, with burials being at Cavers before that. A partial roll of the ministry is: A.H. Cowan 1844–46; James McClymont 1847–86; Thomas C. Pitt 1881–92; John Smith 1892–1928; John W. Ross 1929–53; Robert Waugh 1954–74; James F. Falconer 1975–77; John T. Stuart 1978–84; Moira Herkes 1985–88; Thomas Preston 1989–92; William McG. Longmuir 1992–2003; Anthony Jones 2003–.

Denum Library (de-num-II-bru-ree) n. subscription library set up in Denholm in 1805 by schoolmaster Andrew Scott and 4 others, including William Barrie. In 1839 it contained 880 books. William Barrie became librarian and his family continued to run it until it closed in 1906. It was situated in Barrie’s cottage at the corner of the Wynd.

Denum Lodge (de-num-loj) n. large house on the southern edge of Denholm village, along the Dene Road. It was built for Walter Scott (of Lyle & Scott) and originally called ‘Craigview’. In about 1917 it was purchased by J.B. Scott, son of manufacturer Peter Scott (no direct relation) and in 1922 there were major renovations undertaken by J.P. Alison. Recently the house was split into 2 separate units.

Denum Mains (de-num-mänz) n. former estate in Denholm. In 1458/9 there is a discharge between Douglas of Cavers and Cranston of that Ilk for the rentals of the ‘twa partis’ of it. It was transferred from Thomas Cranston of that Ilk to his son William in 1465/6. Part was still owned by the Cranstons in 1574. Half of it was owned by Douglas of Cavers by 1483 and it was still part of that families holdings in 1509/10 and 1511. It was referred to in 1636 being resigned by John, Lord Cranston to William Douglas, Sheriff of Teviotdale. It is unclear exactly where these lands were. They were still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698 (it is ‘Mains of Demnum’ in 1458/9, ‘Demnum Maynes’ in 1509/10, ‘Demnumains’ and ‘Demnum-manis’ in 1511, ‘Demnovme Mains’ in 1574 and ‘Denholme maines’ in 1687).

Denum Manse (de-num-mans) n. manse for the church in Denholm, located on the left side of Denum Mert (denum-mer) n. former auction mart in Denholm, on part of the Little Green. Sales were held here on alternate Wednesdays throughout much of the 19th century and there was also a big sale at Christmas.

Denum Mill (denum-mil) n. former corn and flour mill in Denholm, near where the Dean Burn enters the Teviot. It operated from at least the 18th century, and had a mill lade. The earlier mill was further to the east, near where the modern bridge crosses the Teviot. John Scott was tenant of the mill in 1797 and Thomas Tai in the 1860s. It became a farm in the mid-19th century, gaining lands from Denholm common, but its water-powered mill operated until the early 20th century. The Laings were tenants and then the Oliviers for some time. The buildings were converted into a small housing development in the late 20th century, reached by a road off to the left before entering the village from Hawick. A 'retouched flint' found there is in Hawick Museum, as well as a spindle whorl (note, this should not be confused with Westside Mill, a former textile mill just off the Green; it is 'Denholm Mill' in 1797).

Denum Quarry (denum-kwaw-ree) n. former stone quarry, near Denholmhill farm, on the western slopes of Ruberslaw, producing a characteristic fine red sandstone. Much stone had been used privately in the 18th century, being started by Mr. Ferguson and continued by Mr. Little. The stone was used to build houses around Denholm, as well as for the renovations at Cavers House. The quarry ran as a business from 1810, with expansion happening around 1818 when the proprietor was Walter Laing, the farmer at Denhomhill. The first quarry opened was the one beside the old hind's house, with the commercial eastern (white) and western (red) quarries both started by Walter Laing. It rose to fame after the stone was used for building Bowhill House, being in great demand for the next half century, with the red sandstone being used for many buildings in and around Hawick. At its height the quarry employed about 200 men, and 60 carts left daily to transport the stone to Hassendean Station. However, it is said that many of the workers suffered from lung disease because of the stone dust. It closed sometime shortly before 1900, with St. Margaret’s Convent, opened in 1912, believed to be the last major structure in Hawick built using this stone.

Denum Rob (denum-rob) n. distinguishing nickname for one of the Hawick men called Robert Scott in the mid-1800s.

Denum Schuil (denum-skil) n. school in Denholm, first situated on the the Green from about 1803 when it took over from the school at Little Cavers (which itself replaced the former school at Cavers Townhead). This was later called ‘the Auld Schuil’, and can be seen in an early painting. The clock from this school was moved to the church (where it still runs). The new school was built on Sunnyside in 1852 and until the early 20th century was a single-roomed building, partitioned into 3 separate classrooms. After WWII the school became a Junior Secondary, but the secondary department closed in 1972, with the children going to either Jedburgh or Hawick. The present building was opened in 1965, with the old one on Sunnyside becoming the canteen and later the village hall. The new school suffered a serious fire in 2006 and was rebuilt, opening again in 2008. 3 generations of Oliviers were masters at Cavers School before it moved to Denholm. George Scott was master there in the 1820s to 50s. Thomas Culbertson was schoolmaster there about 1882–6 and Andrew Moss in the early 1900s.

Denum Toonfit (denum-toon-fi) n. former name used for the lower part of Denholm, closer to the Teviot.

Denum Toonheid (denum-toon-heed) n. former name used to describe the near side of Denholm around where the main road reaches the Green, i.e. around where Westgate and Westside meet the A698.

desirit (dee-zï-re’, -ri’) pp., arch. desired – ‘...quhilkis premises the said Adam Gowanlock desirit to be insert in the common toun-buik of Hawick’ [BR1641], ‘Upon all and sundry the said James Scot desyrit ane instrument fra me, notar-public under written...’ [ JW1558].

de Soulis (du-soo-los) n. Ernengarde (14th C.) daughter of William, the last de Soulis Lord of Liddesdale. Her name is also written ‘Ermygarda’ and similar. After her father’s death she held the income from half the lands in Liddesdale, forfeited some time shortly before 1338, when they went to William (or John) de Warren. This severed the long link between this family and Liddesdale. Fulco (12th/13th C.) successor to Ranulp, as recorded in 1222/3. He also served as King’s Butler. In 1262 he was recorded owing money for lands in Cumberland that had belonged to Ranulp. He may be the ‘Fuleon de Sules’ who witnessed an Athole charter in the late 1190s.
He was probably succeeded by his son Nicholas. Another son was William, who drowned. Sir John (d.c.1310) probably son of Nicholas and elder brother of Sir William (as confirmed in a charter of c.1280 between Sir William and Jedburgh Abbey). Probably in the 1280s he also witnessed a grant of lands in Fogo to Melrose Abbey, and was listed as brother of Sir William. In 1288 he was paid his knights fee by the Chamberlain of Scotland and in 1290 was among those confirming the Treaty of Salisbury. It is likely to be the ‘John de Soulys’ who had custody of the lands of the late Hugh Lovel in 1291, with further lands and privileges granted in 1292/3, and confirmed in 1294: these probably included Hawick, as well as lands in England. He had protection from Edward I in 1293 and in 1294 witnessed documents for the Bishop of Durham. In a letter of 1295 he is described as a messenger and procurator of King John Balliol. He witnessed a confirming charter of English lands relating to the Steward of Scotland in 1296. He is probably the ‘Dominus Johannes’ recorded several times in the Ragman Rolls of 1291–96. His seal there (and elsewhere) had 3 horizontal bars and a ‘riband dexter’, with the words ‘SJOHIS DE SOULES MILITIS’. In 1297 there was a petition to the English King from the brothers of the hospital at Berwick, complaining that he had dispossessed them of a certain piece of land in Liddesdale. In 1299 he is described by Edward I as one of his enemies when he was returning to Scotland as an ambassador to France, with the English trying to intercept them on the journey from Flanders. He was Guardian of Scotland for a while, jointly with John Cumming, after Wallace abdicated in 1300. He is said to have captured Sir Andrew Harclay, commanding 300 Englishmen, with the aid of 50 Borderers. He led an attack at Lochmaben in 1301, and there is a letter from Robert Hastings to King Edward in that year, decrying actions taken against him. He was a fugitive from England in 1303/4 when he leased the castle and barony of Durisdeer, and his lands at Westerkirk were taken. Around the same time he was given a letter of safe conduct by Edward I. In about 1321 he was granted lands in Dumfriesshire by King Robert. He died fighting for Robert the Bruce at the Battle of Dun-dalk (or Faughart) in Ireland. He married Hawise Fitz Alan (or Stewart), heiress of Old Roxburgh, and secondly (although this seems uncertain) married Margaret of Ardross. His daughter (and possibly only child) was Muriel, who married Sir Richard Lovel. Muriel (d.1318) daughter of Sir John, she married Sir Richard Lovel, Baron of Hawick, about 1305. She obtained the manor of Old Roxburgh from her mother Hawise Fitz Alan. Her children were Eleanor, Joan and James. Sir Nicholas (d.1264) Lord of Liddesdale, who probably built the original Hermitage Castle. He was probably son of Fulco, following whom he served as ‘pincerna regis’ or Royal Butler. He was recorded in a charter of the period 1230–36 involving the monks of Newbattle. In 1244 he was among Scottish noblemen who swore to keep the peace with England. He was also Sheriff of Roxburgh, recorded in 1246, when he was among men who perambulated the Border. In 1248 there was a complaint against him for transgressing the approved March customs. He held the lands of Stanfordham in Northumberland in the 1250s. In 1255 he was removed from the King’s councils. He married Annora de Normanville, who is recorded in 1244, when the couple’s lands in Stanfordham and ‘Stokesfeud’ were restored to them. His sons were Sir William, Sir John and Thomas (as confirmed in a charter of around 1280, where Sir William granted lands to Jedburgh Abbey). He died at Rouen.

Sir Nicholas (d.aft. 1296) probably grandson of the previous Nicholas. He was the son of William and Ermengarde Dorward, who was daughter of Marjory, illegitimate daughter of King Alexander II, and hence he was one of the claimants to the throne when Queen Margaret (the ‘Maid of Nor-way’) died. He was mentioned as son and heir of William in a record relating to the former lands of the Earl of Fife in 1293. He signed the Ragman Rolls of 1291 and 1296, where he was ‘Nicol de Soules, baro’, but died soon afterwards. His seal is attached to the Rolls and has 6 vertical stripes, with another seal showing a raven. The Nicholas from Fife who paid homage in 1296 may have been a different man. He must have been in charge of Hermitage Castle when the army of Edward I reached there in May 1296. Also in 1296/7 his wife Margaret asked for her ‘terce’ of the ‘Wal de Lydel’ (i.e. Liddesdale) which were formerly held by her husband. In 1311 he is listed among Scotsmen whose lands had been taken by Edward II, but were now returned (specifically his lands of ‘Tulk and Cluny’) because they ‘came to his peace’. He married Margaret (or Marjorie), daughter of Alexander Comyn. His children included: William, his heir; John; Thomas; and a daughter, who married John de Keith. His seal bore a device of a bird surrounded by tracery and the words ‘SIGILLUM NICOLAI DE SOULI’.

Ranulph (b.c.1102–bef. 1170) Norman knight, possibly either in Perthshire or belonging to the family of Doddington in Northamptonshire. He was given land in Liddesdale by David I, becoming Lord of Liddesdale. He held the important position of King’s Butler to Malcolm IV and perhaps also to William the Lion. Charters of c.1147–51 describe him as the ‘cup-bearer to the King of Scots’ when he gave several lands and rights to Jedburgh Abbey, including the church of St. Martin in Liddesdale as Osbert his Chaplain held it, and the church of Dodington (near the original family seat in Northamptonshire), as well as the hunting teinds of Liddesdale (according to a confirming charter in this same period); these rights were confirmed in about 1165. He is recorded as ‘Ramulf de Sola’. His grant of lands in Liddesdale to the hospital of St. Peter in York was given during the reign of David I and confirmed by Malcolm IV. He is believed to have built the first castle in Liddesdale, at Castleton (near the confluence of the Liddel and the Hermitage Water), sometime in the 12th century. His daughter Julienne married William de la Haya. Probably having no male heir, he was succeeded by his nephew Ranulph. Ranulph (d.1207) probably nephew of the previous Baron of Liddesdale and son of William. He may have been the Ranulph who gave a charter of further lands (‘Wambehope’) to Jedburgh Abbey sometime in the late 12th century. One of the witnesses was his brother Richard. In the period 1178–88 he witnessed a grant to Cambuskenneth Abbey (along with Gervase Avenel, Lord of Eskdale, Robert of Wilton and Walter Berkeley, Chamberlain). In 1208/9 he was fined in Northumberland for being found with venison (although he may have been already deceased by then). He was assassinated by his domestic servants (presumably in the castle), this story being later confounded with that of his descendant of a century later, William. Richard (13th C.) witnessed a grant in about 1280 where William gave lands near Castleton to Jedburgh Abbey. He was thus a close relative of William, perhaps his brother. He was pardoned by Edward I in 1292 for ‘forcibly carrying off Richard de Tayllur from England into Scotland’. The pardon came at the request of William and John (who were probably closely related to him). Sir Thomas (d.1304) another of the family who swore allegiance to Edward I in 1296, where he is described as being from Roxburghshire. His seal there showed a ‘bend’ and the words ‘S’THEME DE SOULIS’. He was probably another son of Nicholas and Annora de Normanville and younger brother of the Nicholas who also signed the Ragan Rolls. He is probably the Thomas recorded in a Northumberland document of 1283. He is listed in 1296 among former Englishmen dwelling in Scotland, whose servants were to be removed. Also in 1296 he is listed as owner of the lands of ‘Hoghe’ in Northumberland. In 1298 his lands in Stamfordham, Northumberland, are described, and he is then described as a rebel. In 1300 he was delivered as a prisoner to Exeter Castle. In 1303/4 his widow Alicia had the lands of her uncle John ‘de Mulcastre’ restored and later in 1304 she petitioned Edward I to grant her her husband’s lands in Stamfordham. William (d.1278/9) son of Fulco. He is recorded drowning in the ‘water of Erthingge’ (probably Ichring in Cumbria) after falling off his horse, with the court judging it as ‘misadventure’. Sir William (c.1245–c.93) probably son of Nicholas and Margaret Comyn (or perhaps the other Nicholas and Annora de Normanville). He was knighted by Alexander III in 1270. He is probably the William who is recorded being assigned a knight’s fee in Stamfordham in 1271. In 1277/8 he and the Bishop of St. Andrews were sent as envoys by King Alexander to talk with Edward I regarding crimes committed on the Border. About 1280 he granted lands near Castleton church to Jedburgh Abbey, specifically 2 arable acres near the cemetery and half an acre of meadow which High the smith held of him; this charter confirmed that he had brothers Sir John and Thomas, and it was also witnessed by Richard ‘de Soul’, who must have been a close relative. In the period 1279–86 he granted lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey. In 1283 he petitioned English justices for his rights at Stamfordham. He served as Justiciar of Lothian, recorded when he witnessed a document in 1284/5. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh Castle in 1289/90 and Sheriff of Inverness in 1291. He was at the Parliament at Brigham in 1290. He signed the Ragan Rolls of 1291, swearing fealty to Edward I. He was replaced as Sheriff of Inverness in 1291/2. In 1293 he is probably the William whose lands former lands of ‘Tholybovile’ are recorded, along with his son and heir Nicholas. He married Ermengarde Durward, whose mother was Marjorie, daughter of King Alexander II. His children probably included: Nicholas, of Liddel Castle; Ermengarde, who married Patrick, Earl of Dunbar; and another daughter, who married John of Atholl. William (d.c.1321) son and heir of Nicholas. He had a letter of protection from Edward I in 1304.
He claimed the lands of Liddesdale in 1306/7, but they were given to Johanna, widow of Sir John de Wake, until he came of age. However, he was later restored in the family’s lands and became Lord of Liddesdale, as well as taking up the position of hereditary Royal Butler. He also gained other lands through forfeiture, e.g. Westerkirk, Kirkandrews, Gilmerton, Nisbet, Longnewton, Caverton, Maxton and Merton. He was one of the signatories of the Declaration of Arbroath. His family held Hermitage Castle until about 1320, when he was accused of attempting to murder Robert the Bruce, and probably died a prisoner in Dumbarton Castle. The conspiracy may have involved a plan to place him on the throne instead of Bruce. It is said that he led a lavish and privileged lifestyle and had 360 squires in his livery when apprehended at Berwick in 1320. Known for mistreatment of his servants, his reputation reached legendary status after his death, popularised by John Leyden and others. His reputation may have arisen from Bruce’s propaganda machine, mixed with stories of his ancestors. He is reputed to have dabbled in black magic, and to have been responsible for the disappearance of local children, with the help of his assistant ‘Robin Redcap’. He also supposedly slew ‘Cout o Kielder’ by drowning him in a nearby pool in the river. He is said to have been boiled alive in lead at the Ninestane Rig by his own men, perhaps helped by Walter Scott of Branxholme, and the cauldron (although absurdly small for the task) long preserved at Skelfhill. He is often referred to simply as ‘Soulsis’. He does not appear to have had an heir, but his daughter Ermengarde (or simply as ‘Soulis’. He does not appear to have

dear (dew-chur) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, between Tinnis and Whitefield. It was founded in the 15th century, being leased to the Borthwicks in the 1480s and 90s and feued to the Homes in the early 16th century. James Moffat was said in 1494/5 to have had cows and goods stolen from there by Adam Scott in Annelshope. Adam Dalgleish held the land in feu according to a rental roll of 1541. There was once a tower there, perhaps built for the Murrays of Deuchar in the early 17th century. Later there was a corn mill. There was also a connection with the Scotts of Harden around that time, and later Lairds were the Dewars of Deuchar. There may once have been a chapel near here. It was the site of the first bridge across the Yarrow, used by people from the south side of the valley, and the Ettrick Water, to get to the north side. Dalgleishes farmed there in the late 16th century. The farm was attacked by a gang of Armstrongs and others in 1582, and the farm was taken hostage. The original bridge was said to have been built for the Earl of Buccleuch probably around 1653, and had the arms of the family on it. A flood of 1734 broke the south arch, which was repaired about 1748, but the mis-matched new arch only lasted about a century before collapsing again. Parts of the old bridge can still be seen (there are many spelling variants, such as ‘Douchir’, ‘Ducher’, ‘Duchir’, ‘Duchore’ and ‘Duquhir’).

Deuchar (dew-chur) n. John (d.c.1691) tenant in Whiteropfoot. His will is recorded in 1691.

dev (dev) v. to do – ‘ee dev so’, ‘A dev not!’, ‘they definitely dev hev yin’ (a variant of div, often used emphatically; note that the second person uses dez).

detestit (dee-tes-tee’ , -ti’) pp., arch. detested – ‘Detestit wretch! I say, restore, Else I shall haunt thee evermore’ [RDW].

deth (deth) v., poet. doth – ‘The Lord deth bigg up Jerusalem, he gethers thegither owt-casen o’ Israel’ [HSR], ‘... he that deth thai things sall nevir be muvet’ [HSR].

deuch (dewch) n., arch. dough (also daich).
deval (de-val) v., arch. to stop, cease – ‘…an garrd the hyll yins devall an take a barley’ [ECS], ‘Her tongue never devall’d’ [GW] (also written ‘devall’, cf. devald).

devald (de-vald) v., arch. to cease, give over – ‘Never devaaldin ti crack prood an massy aboot its bonnie bits an its history’ [ECS], ‘Hei blethert an blethert at, till A thocht ei’d never devald’ [ECS] (also deval).
dever (de-ver) v., arch. to stun, confound { `Dod dever ee’ [GW] (also daver).
devert (de-vurt) adj., arch. confounded – ‘My grandfather …sometimes would say ‘Dod deld!’ Sometimes ‘Deverr desht’. And if he was very upset, he descended to ‘Dod deld dever desht!’’ [JeC].

the Devil’s Beeftub (thu-de-vulz-beef-tub) n. deep valley north of Moffat, where tradition says that rievers gathered their cattle in former times.

the Devil’s Cauldron (thu-de-vulz-kawl-drin) n. deep pool in a stream on the farm of Stonedale. This is where the Devil is supposed to have flung his mother’s body after dragging it around the area to make the Catrail.

devoor (de-voor) v., arch. to devour – ‘Margaret Oliver was fined 50/s for calling Isabell Scott, witchesgait and saying that she devoored her awine child …’ [BR1658], ‘…the Lord sall swallie thame up in his wrth, an’ the fire sall devoor thame’ [HSR], ‘…an hir the wild beast o’ the desart deth devoor’ [HSR].

Dewar (joo-ur) n. Donald Campbell (1937–2000) born in Glasgow, his parents were unwell in his early years and he spent most of youth at preparatory schools, including spending time at Beverley, based at Wolfelee House. His accent for the rest of his life reflected time spent in the Borders, although from age 9 he was schooled in Glasgow. He trained as a lawyer and entered politics, eventually becoming First Minister of Scotland.

de the Dewars (thu-joo-urz) n. local annual golf outing, originally involving sales reps from Dewars distillers.

Dewyhaugh (Joo-ee-haugh) n. former farmstead near Teviothead, located on the flat land just south of where the Frostlie Burn joins the Teviot, i.e. close to the modern church. David Scott was recorded there in 1791 and 1797 (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Dewyhaugh’ in 1791 and ‘Dewiehaigh’ in 1797).

del Wilton (dee-wil-tun) n. Joanna (13th C.) recorded in a charter of sometime in the period 1260–85, in which she is described as ‘Lady Johanna de Wilton’. Her son and heir Walter ‘Pershay’ granted the lands of Tarvit (in Fife) and others to Thomas, son of Adam ‘Walens’ (i.e. Wallace). The grantor’s brother William was a witness. In a later confirmation of 1312 (relating to the same earlier date) she is described as daughter and heir of Sir John de Wilton. Since Walter was said to be son of Robert de ‘Percehay’ and Joan de Vesey, it is possible that she was this same woman, and that her marriage to Percehay was her second. It is also not inconceivable that she is also the Lady Jane Vesey who was later recorded as holder of the halg Barony of Wilton.

John (12th/13th C.) recorded in several charters in the reign of William the Lion. For example, in the period 1195–1205 he witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes. Although this involved land in Cumberland, the other witnesses were mostly from Roxburghshire, including Simon of Hawick and Alan of Rule; he is recorded as ‘Johanne de Wiltune’. Several of the charters were given by Earl David, brother of King William, in the early years of the 13th century. In 1201/2 he witnessed a document for William Comyn. In 1204 he witnessed an agreement between the Bishop of St. Andrews, Durham Cathedral and Coldingham. In 1197 he witnessed a gift of lands in Tayside to Lindores Abbey. He was probably father of the ‘John junior, Lord of Wilton’ who is recorded about 25 years later.

John ‘younger’ (12th/13th C.) recorded in a charter of some time between 1214 and 1227. It seems likely that he was son of the earlier John. The charter established to the Bishop of Glasgow 5 marks annually in the name of the procuration of the church of Wilton, following an arbitrated dispute he had had with the Bishop. This seems to establish definitively that this John was associated with the local Wilton (rather than some other place). It seems likely he is the same man as recorded as ‘Johannes de Wiltoun’ recorded in a charter made sometime in the period 1220–38 in which he granted his sister Matilda lands in Tarvit (probably in Fife), but to remain with him if she died childless. He is recorded as deceased in a charter of 1260 in which William Avenel and his wife Matilda granted ‘Tarveht In dan’ to Thomas Wallace, to be held of his heirs. Presumably the same Sir John had a daughter and heir Joanna (mother of Sir Walter de Pershay or Percehay) who is recorded in a confirming charter of around 1284, referring to this earlier charter of 1260 involving the lands of Tarvit. Robert (12th/13th
C.) mentioned during the reign of William the Lion. In the period 1170–90 he was witness to the gift of Anselm of Mow to Melrose Abbey (also witnessed by Roger, son of John of Hawick). In the period 1178–88 he witnessed a grant to Cambuskenneth Abbey (also witnessed by Gervase Avenel, Lord of Eskdale, and Walter Berkeley, Chamberlain). He was surely related to Sir Roger, who was his contemporary (probably the son, unless the names are confused). Robert (12th/13th C.) probably separate from the Robert of about 1180. In the period 1211–33 he was witness to a charter for William Comyn, Earl of Buchan; he is there ‘Roberto de Wiltona’. And in about 1221 he witnessed another grant for William Comyn. He may be the same as the Robert listed in a couple of court cases from Cumberland in 1211/2, with his son ‘Hogge’ also mentioned (although this could be an entirely different English Wilton). Probably that same Robert is listed in a document of 1211/2, relating to the King of Scotland’s lands in Tynedale. Robert (13th C.) referred to as ‘Robertus de Wyltona’ in a charter of about 1290/1 in which he granted lands around Tarvit (in Fife) to John, son and heir of Thomas Wallace (son of Adam). He was probably son of Walter who had granted adjacent lands to that family before him. Sir Roger (12th/13th C.) witness to more than 20 documents during the reigns of Malcolm IV and William the Lion. In the period 1153–62 he witnessed an agreement involving the Canons of St. Andrews and in 1160–2 he witnessed 2 other documents for the Bishop of St. Andrews. Other documents involve the Bishop of Aberdeen, Arbroath Abbey, Cambuskenneth Abbey, Glasgow Cathedral and Kinloss Abbey. He is sometimes the only non-cleric on the list of witnesses, suggesting he had a special relationship with the church. In the period 1175–95 he witnessed a charter from Anselm of Whiton to Melrose Abbey, and in the period 1189–95 he witnessed a grant of land in Sprouston to Kelso Abbey. He was ‘Ro de Wiltune’ and ‘Rogerio milite de Wiltona’ when he witnessed documents for St. Andrews Priory, also involving the Bishop of Aberdeen. These were some time in the period 1172–83. He is also recorded as ‘Rogerio de Wyltona’ and variants. The last documents are from 1203–14 or 1211–33, and hence it is possible that there are 2 generations represented here. Apart from the 2 documents involving Roxburghshire, there is no evidence to connect him with the local Wilton. Roger (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘de Welleton’ when he was Archdeacon of Teviotdale in the period 1307–10. He may have been ‘of Wilton’, although this is not certain. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as ‘de Willtoun’ in a document of 1428/9 giving the Baronry of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig, following the death of his father. The other witnesses had surnames, but there are no obvious clues to his. Walter (b.c.1233) recorded as ‘Walter de Pertchay’ when he received half the Baronry of Wilton (most likely the western part of the Parish) from Edward I in the late 13th century, along with William de Charteris. Both were vassals of Edward I of England. He lost the lands after Bannockburn, with a confirming charter of about 1321 granting Wilton to Henry de Wardlaw. His surname is sometimes written ‘Percehay’, and seems to have been different from ‘Percy’ of Northumberland. A charter in about 1283–85 records him as son and heir of Lady Johanna de Wiltoun, ratifying a charter of William Avenel granting the lands of Tarvit to Thomas Wallace. His son was probably Robert. Walter (13th/14th C.) clerk recorded in 1307 in a document relating to payment in the English army. He and Nicholas de Lughteburgh were paid for ‘going from Berwick to Lanark and Glasgow to receive the service due to the king in his war on both sides of the Forth’. It is unclear if there was a local connection. William (13th C.) recorded as ‘William de Wilton’ in 1292 when he was on a jury in Carlisle to decide on whether Gilbert was heir of ‘Patrick de Suthaik’ near Tiwald in Scotland. It is unclear whether he had a connection with the local Wilton. He could be the same man as ‘Willelmum de Wylton’, listed in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland.

Dick (dik) n. David (18th/19th C.) Hawick stockingmaker who wrote an account of the Book of Revelations, published in 1799 in Edinburgh. He was also one of the founder members of the Independent Kirk formed in Hawick in about 1798. Francis (18th/19th C.) Scottish itinerant evangelical minister of the early 1800s. A native of Monifieth and originally a fisherman in Broughty Ferry, he first toured the south of Scotland in the summer of 1823 or 1824 at the invitation of James Douglas of Cavers. For the next 19 summers he regularly preached at the Cameronian Kirk in Denholm, at Cavers old Kirk, and in Hawick at the Haugh, in the Town Hall and in the Subscription Rooms. This led to the formation of Congregational and Evangelical Churches in Hawick and Denholm. His preaching at the Subscription Rooms specifically led to the establishment of a new Congregational Church by 15 members in 1836 (following the earlier demise of the Independent Kirk). He was described as an 'undersized stout gentleman, strongly pitted with smallpox, carrying an equally corpulent and weatherbeaten green cotton umbrella, and hurrying along the street on a Sunday evening, with short and rapid step'. John (18th C.), junior, of Camptown, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1751. John (18th/19th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1799 he married Barbary (or 'Baby') Miller, and she died in 1822, aged 63. Rev. John (19th/20th C.) from Dundee, he was Baptist minister at Leven and then at Maxwelltown. He served as minister at Hawick Baptist Kirk 1908–10. During his time the debt for the building of the new church was cleared. He organised free teas for the unemployed during those tough economic times. He was at Harper Memorial (Paisley Road) 1910–17 and Wishaw Baptist Church 1917–21. William (18th/19th C.) baker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). His wife Jane Leech died in 1798.

Dickie (di-kee) n. Mary (18th C.) housemaid at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot.

Dickie Lyon (di-kee-li-in) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the mid-1800s, presumably with surname ‘Lyon’ – ‘Scottie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam’l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grim’ [HI].

Dickieson (di-kee-sin) n. Alexander (1798–1835) farm steward of Bowknowe, who was a Trustee and elder of the Relief Kirk (see also ‘Dickison’).

Dickison (di-kee-sin) n. Rev. Benjamin (1754/5–1833) licensed by the Presbytery of Kelso in 1779, he was presented to Kirkton Parish in late 1786 and became minister there in 1787. He paid the Horse Tax at Kirkton in 1789–97. In 1800 he was translated to Hobkirk, where he remained until his death. He is recorded contributing to a local subscription for the defence of the country in 1803. He was described (by Tancred) as ‘the last of the old school of Hobkirk ministers, who said and did many eccentric things’ and was said to sometimes drink to excess, ‘particularly after the exertion of dispensing the Sacrament’. He married Jean (or Jane), daughter of William Scott of Woll in 1792, and she died in 1824; she was one of the 5 (or 6) daughters of Scott of Woll who were all said to be more than 6 feet tall. He wrote a description of the Parish of Kirkton for ‘Sinclair’s Statistical Account’. He was described as the last of the eccentric old style ministers, often getting drunk during the administering of the sacrament (spelled ‘Dickesoun’, ‘Dickisoun’, etc., and possibly the same as ‘Dickison’).

Dickman (dik-mun) n. David William (19th/20th C.) saddler in Denholm. He bought the business of James Scott in 1905 and moved it to Main Street. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. William (d.c.1688) tenant in Hawick. His will was recorded in 1688.

Dick Newall (dik-new-ul) n. character in Hawick in the mid-19th century. There was a family of that surname in the Village in 1851 and Factory Close in 1861, with Robert Newall being a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howgate in 1841 – ‘Pooedge and Peedhun gang doon the toon, Sly Tammy and Kittlin’ Soup gang up; There’s Paddy Barratt and Jamie Broon, And there’s Dick Newall and Johnny Whup’ [HI].
Dick o the Cow

_Dick o the Cow_ (dik-ō-thu-cow) n. Border ballad that first saw print in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), published in Hawick, perhaps communicated by John Elliot of Redhugh. It tells the story of a simpleton after whom the song is entitled, whose 3 cows are stolen by Johnie Armstrong. Dick goes to Liddesdale to try to recover his cows, steals 2 horses and is pursued by Armstrong, after which there is a struggle and Dick ends up with 3 horses. He returns to Cumbria, and pleads to his superior (Lord Scrope) that he only stole from those who had stolen from him, thereby being rewarded. However, fearing reprisals from the Armstrongs, he moves further away, to Brough under Stainmore. Caw adds that ‘The Armstrongs at length got Dick o’ the Cow in their clutches; and, out of revenge, they tore his flesh from his bones with red-hot pincers’; this part was said to always be added (with some relish) when the ballad was recited in Liddesdale. It is said to be based on events from the latter part of the 16th century.

Dickshaw (diks-haw) n. Dickshall, former area in Kirkton Parish. Walter Watson was recorded there in 1788 when he had a child baptised. It is unclear where this was located.

Dickson (dik-sin) n. Abraham (b.1807/8) from Moudewald, he was shepherd at Haggishaw. In 1861 he was recorded at 2 Burnflat with his granddaughter Margaret Henderson. Adam (16th C.) ‘ipothecar’ who was one of the men who witnessed the final will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. This was witnessed in Hawick, so he may have been a local man. Adam (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms as the start of the Dickson’s nursey-grounds in 1694. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 (although when exactly he was ‘of Alton’ is unclear). His death is recorded in 1838, when his executors agreed to close his business of Messrs. Dicksons and Company, Nurseries and Florists, Waterloo Place Edinburgh; his trustees were Archibald of Chatto, James of Housebyres, James of Alton (his heir), Archibald Scott of Howcleuch, Charles Scott of Bush and William Richardson of Edinburgh. Andrew (1773–1837) younger son of James of Alton. He is probably the Andrew ‘Esq. of Alton’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 (although when exactly he was ‘of Alton’ is unclear). His death is recorded in 1838, when his executors agreed to close his business of Messrs. Dicksons and Company, Nurseries and Florists, Waterloo Place Edinburgh; his trustees were Archibald of Chatto, James of Housebyres, James of Alton (his heir), Archibald Scott of Howcleuch, Charles Scott of Bush and William Richardson of Edinburgh.

Dickson cousins, ‘traitors of Leven’ to plunder George Cockburn and his offspring; bringing in Dickson consouns, ‘traitors of Leven’ to plunder James Crawford and John Hall in Bourhope; and for reset before the date of his compounding. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpsley. Perhaps the same Andrew was one of the 4 men asked by the Sheriff of Roxburghshire to appraise the goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope in 1500; his name is recorded there as ‘Andro Dickson’.

Andrew (1773–1837) younger son of James of Alton. He is probably the Andrew ‘Esq. of Alton’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 (although when exactly he was ‘of Alton’ is unclear). His death is recorded in 1838, when his executors agreed to close his business of Messrs. Dicksons and Company, Nurseries and Florists, Waterloo Place Edinburgh; his trustees were Archibald of Chatto, James of Housebyres, James of Alton (his heir), Archibald Scott of Howcleuch, Charles Scott of Bush and William Richardson of Edinburgh.

Andrew (19th C.) inhereted Alton in 1846, it is said after the death of his nephew James (son of his brother Archibald), but this may be confusion with the Andrew who died in 1837. He died unmarried and left Alton to his sister Isabella’s son William Richardson. He may be the Andrew of Tofts who is recorded as a heritor of Kirkton Parish in 1838. Andrew (b.1787) eldest son of Archibald Dickson of Housebyres and Marion Fisher. He was elected Cornet in 1817, from a short-list of 5. In fact in this year the Council had decided not to elect a Cornet, ‘taking into their consideration that the Common-Riding has been very hurtfull to the morals of the young people in the Town’, and he was one of the leaders of the petition to get the decision reversed, ensuring that regulations would be in place. In 1816 he was on the assize for a trial in Jedburgh, but his name was entered as ‘Henry Dickson, younger of Housebyres’, this clerical mistake leading to the acquittal of the prisoner. In 1819 he was listed (along with his father) as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire, when he was ‘junior of House Byre’. However, he never succeeded and died in Australia. Archibald (1718–91) son of nursey-owner Robert, he was born in Cavers Parish. He was the main proprietor of the Hassendeanburn nurseries from when his father died in 1744. He was responsible for establishing the nurseries and seedsmen’s business in Hawick in the 1760s. His residence in Hawick was where the main Cooperative Store’s premises would later be built. He purchased from James Lawrie the lands previously known as ‘Lawrie’s Denn’, which would be used as the start of the Dickson’s nursery-grounds in Hawick. He was recorded at Hassendean Burn on the 1785–90 Horse Tax Rolls (along with his son, Archibald junior in the last 2 years). He is probably the Archibald listed in 1788 as owner of... part of Weensland, valued at £38 5s 6d (probably purchased from the Scotts of Horsleyhill), as well as the south part of Horsleyhill (valued at £255). In 1811 his heirs were recorded as owners of the north half of Horsleyhill, as well as Huntlaw. He married Christian, daughter of James Thomson, Midshiels, and she died in 1799. Their children were: Robert (b.1742), who succeeded in the family business; Agnes, who married Walter Dunlop of Whitmuir Hall; James of Alton; Janet, who married Alexander Clerk of Flatfield; Margaret, who married Mr. Turnbull of Greenhouse, and whose son Archibald carried on the nursery business in Perthshire; William of Bellwood, nurseryman in Perthshire; Archibald of Housebyres (b.1755); Elizabeth (‘Betty’), who married Charles Scott, 3rd Laird of Wauchope; Walter of Chatto; and Christian, who married James Henderson in Kelso. There is an account book between him and Walter Scott of Harden covering 1749–51 in the National Archives. His wife may be the Mrs. Dickson recorded as owner of Wester Housebyres in Melrose Parish in 1788.

Archibald (18th/19th C.) ironmonger on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory.

Archibald of Housebyres (1755–1834), later of Huntlaw and Hassendeanburn. Born in Hawick, he was the 4th son of Archibald, seedsmen of Hassendeanburn. He himself became a prosperous seedsmen and bank agent, with nurseries originally near Hassendean and later also in Hawick. He was one of the founders of Dicksons & Laings. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He was recorded as ‘Archibald junior’ at Hassendeanburn along with his father on the 1789–90 Horse Tax Rolls, and then appeared on his own 1791–97. He was probably the Archibald ‘Esq.’ who was listed having 3 work horses and 1 saddle horse in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as paying the dog tax. He was British Linen Bank agent (along with James) from 1806. He apparently refused to be a Magistrate of Hawick, being fined £10. He was an important heritor in the Parish, and was also one of the Orrock Trustees. He was also a heritor of Minto Parish. Around 1800 he contributed to support the war with France. He was also one of the first members of the Hawick Curling Club. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805, and was listed along with his son Andrew in 1819. He was listed on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of part of Weensland, this passing to James Macmillan-Scott of Wauchope later in the 19th century. On Wood’s 1824 map he is shown as owner of Lawrie’s Denn, as well as the area around where Teviot Crescent and Oliver Crescent were built. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1783 he married Marion (or Mary), daughter of Andrew Fisher of Housebyres, and succeeded to his father-in-law’s properties. His sons were: Andrew, who died in Australia; Archibald (b.1788) of Chatto; Robert (d.1811), who was a surgeon; Walter, who was a lawyer; James of Chatto and Housebyres, partner in the mill and also bank agent in Hawick; Alexander (b.1801, in Hawick), who died without issue; and William (b.1800, in Hawick), also without issue, who was also partner with James. He also had daughters: Isabella, who married William Whitehead Winterbottom in Hawick; Christian (d.1827, although this may be an error), who was unmarried and died in Hawick; and Marion Margaret, who married Thomas Grieve of Skelfhill. An unnamed child of his died in 1794. He died at Hassendeanburn. His portrait and that of his wife were painted by William Irving. Archibald (c.1770–1819) elder son of James of Alton. He was elected Cornet in 1794, from a short-list of 5 names; this was in the year that the Council had resolved not to continue the Common Riding, but reversed their decision following a petition from the inhabitants. He was a banker and merchant, like other family members. In 1811 he married his cousin, Christian, daughter of Charles Scott of Wauchope, and she died in 1861. He died during his father’s lifetime, near Fushiebridge, when travelling to Edinburgh with his wife and her maid. He had 2 sons: James of Alton and Pinnaclehill; and Charles (b.1818), who died unmarried. Maj. Archibald of Chatto (1788–1846) 2nd son of Archibald and Marion Fisher. He served with the 60th Bengal native infantry, retired in 1836 and died at Pembroke Square, Kensington. He had a son, Archibald William, as well as a daughter. They were involved in a court case of 1852 relating to the inheritance of Chatto. Archibald of Hassendeanburn (d.1846) elder son of Robert and Beatrice Pott. He was a Lieutenant in the 1st Regiment of Roxburghshire Militia from about 1810. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813. He is probably the ‘A. Dickson, Esq. of Huntlaw’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory, being ‘of Huntlaw’ and living at Hassendeanburn (although this may have been an outdated entry for his deceased father). In 1812 he married Hannah, daughter of Adam Stavert of Hoscote. He died without children. Archibald William (19th C.) only son of Archibald and Christian Scott?? He was Captain in the 17th Regiment. He was disinherited, but his son Archibald became Laird of Hassendeanburn. Col. Archibald of Chatto, Buhtrig and Housebyres, J.P. (1829-95) eldest son of James and Christian Scott of Todshawhaugh. He was trained as a lawyer, becoming an advocate in 1852, but never practising. He inherited his father’s estates when he died in 1876; this included Hassendeanburn, which he had rebuilt shortly afterwards. He was Captain of the Haddington artillery, later becoming Major and retiring as Lieut.-Col. He was also Deputy Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, as well as a Tax Commissioner for the county. He was a member of the Highland Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1854. In 1880 he married Alex Florence, daughter of J.W. Seaburne-May and sister of a naval Captain. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1876. He died without children and is buried in Minto churchyard. He left everything to his wife except for the estate of Hassendeanburn, which went to Archibald, grandson of Maj. Archibald of Chatto. Archibald of Hassendeanburn (19th/20th C.) son of Archibald William, grandson of Maj. Archibald of Chatto and great-grandson of Archibald of Housebyres. In 1895 he inherited the estate of Hassendeanburn from his distant relative Col. Archibald. Blanche Margaret (19th C.) elder daughter of William Richardson Dickson of Alton and Chisholme. She inherited her father’s estates when he died in 1881. She married Capt. Herbert Barron of the 72nd Highlanders, and secondly married George Dove, farmer at Boswells Bank. Christian (b.c.1790) resident at Teviot Lodge, according to the 1841 census. She is probably the ‘Miss Dickson’ listed there on Wood’s 1824 map and in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. She is likely to be the Christian (b.1775) who was daughter of James of Alton and Hassendeanburn. She was also probably related to William, who lived at Teviot Lodge later. She was still alive in 1848, and appears to have died unmarried. She was probably one of the ‘Misses Dickson’ of Hassendeanburn listed among the gentry of Hawick in 1852. She may be the Christian recorded as a 76 year old ‘Landed Proprietrix’ at Hassendeanburn in 1861, who was a daughter of Archibald of Housebyres and brother of James of Chatto and still listed as ‘Miss Dickson’ at Hassendeanburn in 1868. There could be 2 separate people conflated here, confused by the the preponderance of names Archibald and James. Sir David James Hamilton (1780-1850) youngest and last surviving son of the minister of Bedrule, where he was born. He was licensed by the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1798, became a surgeon in the Navy and served in Holland and Egypt. In 1806 he was acting physician in the Leeward Islands and in 1813 became superintending physician of the Russian Fleet in the Medway (for which he was nominated as a knight of the order of St. Waldimir), then serving in the Mediterranean and at Halifax. He became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1816 and of London in 1822. In 1824 he was appointed physician to the Royal Naval Hospital at Plymouth and in 1840 became Inspector of Hospitals. He was knighted in 1834 and was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh and the Linnaean Society. He published many many medical works and was instrumental in setting up a library at the Naval Hospital in Plymouth. He married a Miss Tracey and died in Plymouth. Edward (16th C.) Reader at Minto 1576-78. He probably replaced William McGowan, or else one held the Parsonage at the same time as the other was Reader. Probably the same ‘Edward Dikson’ was recorded as Reader of Longnewton in 1575. Elizabeth see Elizabeth Scott. Francis (1778-9/1820) born in Ewesdale, he moved to Teviothead in about 1810. He became shepherd at Soothdean Rig Shiel. He married Margaret Elliot (1782-1823). They had a son, also Francis (b.1806). Francis (1806-81) son of Francis and Margaret Elliot. Like his father, he was shepherd at Soothdean Rig Shiel. He married Jane Elliot (1807-82). Their children were: Margaret (b.1833); Francis (b.1833); Thomas (b.1836); Sarah (b.1838); James (b.1840); Henry (b.1842); Christopher (b.1844); and Janet (or ‘Jessie’ b.1845). G. (19th/20th C.) native of Ewesdale. He wrote about the history of Ewes in the Border Magazine in 1907. George ‘the Wran’ (17th C.) named among 15 other ‘idle and masterless men’ by the Hawick Bailie in 1627, and suggested as being fit to be sent to the war in Germany. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. His nickname suggests that he was small. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Craik in 1720 when his unnamed child was baptised and in 1722 when his son James was baptised. George (18th C.) owner of part of the lands of Ruletownhead. In the 1788 his trustees are listed as owner of lands there, valued at £96 11s. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he was still listed as former owner. Perhaps the same George was also owner of lands in Lanton (previously belonging to Alexander Ferguson) valued at £61 12s, with his trustees recorded as owners in 1788. Rev. George (d.1787) son of George and Catherine Hamilton of Whitehill, Earlston. He was called to Bedrule Parish in 1747 and ordained there the following year. He paid the window tax at the manse there in 1753. There was a dispute with the heritors over his right to cut wood on the glebe land in 1754. He purchased the lands of Lanton in 1770. He was a strenuous opponent of the suppression of Abbotrule Parish in 1777. He was apparently nicknamed ‘Cool-the-kail’, because of the length of his sermons; it is said that those from Bedrule who travelled to church in Jedburgh were often back in Bedrule while he was still going. He paid the Horse Tax in Bedrule Parish in 1785. In 1755 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Howison of Orchard, and she died in 1760. In 1762 he secondly married Anne (or Ann) Buckham, who died in 1784. His children were: William (b.1756), who inherited Orchard from his grandfather Bailie Howison; Robert (b.1757), who died young; Margaret (b.1758), who married Lieut. William Miller; Katherine (b.1760), who married Horatio Thomas McGeorge; Agnes (1763–95); John (b.1764), who died young; Anne; George (b.1766); Mary (b.1767); John (‘Jock’, b.1771), a simpleton who travelled round the local country; Anne (b.1775); and Sir David James Hamilton (1780–1850), Inspector of Hospitals. He is buried in Bedrule cemetery. His servant James Robson died in Hawick in 1781. George (18th/19th C.) recorded in ‘Esq. Hassendeanburn’ in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. It is unclear how he was related to the other Dicksons of Hassendeanburn. George (19th C.) originally from Melrose, he was coachman at Abbotrule through the 1860s, 70s and 80s. He is listed as groom in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included William and Agnes. George (19th C.) from Newcastleton, he was a Hawick baker. In 1861 he donated 2 stuffed penguins to the Museum. In 1854 he married Annie (b.1833), daughter of David Affleck. Their daughter Maggie (b.1858) married Walter Nisbet, picture framer at Myreslawgreen. Henry (1842–1913) son of Francis and Jane Elliot. He was shepherd for John Moffat at Billhope. He firstly married Margaret Cranston and secondly married Janet Armstrong. His children were: Francis (b.1867); Thomas (b.1869); James (b.1871); Isabella (b.1873); Helen (b.1880); John (b.1882); Robert (b.1886); Christina (b.1888); William (b.1890); Henry (b.1893); and Isabella (again, b.1897). James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he had a cow stolen by Walter Rutherford in Phaup. He may have lived near Minto, where another cow was recorded being stolen. James (17th/18th C.) son of John of Westerhall and Mary Home. In 1693 he was served heir portioner, along with John Shoreswood and Alexander Morrison, in the Barony of Home, inherited from Jean, daughter of John Home. This included superiority over lands in Hassendean, and explicitly Appletreehall, as well as the lands of Redfordgreen, Drycleuchlea, Huntly and Hartwoodburn. His father was already deceased in 1693. It is unclear what happened to the Barony afterwards. James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Huntly in Hawick in 1713. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Robert Ballentyne in Overhall in Wilton Parish in 1724 and another for George Scott in Silverbuthall in 1728. James (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1734 he was one of the witnesses to the notorial instrument in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He is probably the tailor who witnessed a baptism for Gideon Scott in 1765 in Hawick Parish. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He may be the James who was Bailie in the 1770s and 80s. He could be the James, son of William, born in Hawick in 1704. He could be the James, married to Anne Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1738) and Beatrix (b.1741). James (1738–1822) born in Peeblesshire, son of Robert and Margaret Dunn, his father coming from Eckford. He must have been related to the local Dicksons and may have spent some of his youth at Hassendeanburn. Following his family trade, he established a nursery at Perth, before moving to London, where he eventually set up as a seedsman at Covent Garden in 1772. His first wife died young and he remarried a sister of Mungo Park. He became an expert on British cryptogamic plants, and gained a botanical reputation by publishing ‘Fasciculus Plantarum Cryptogamicarum Britanniae’ in 4 volumes (1785–1801). He also published several other descriptive volumes. In 1788 he became...
Dickson

one of the original members of the Linnaean Society. He toured the Highlands in search of plants, the expedition of 1789 being with Mungo Park. The tree fern family ‘Dicksonia’ was named after him. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Linhope in 1786. His children included: Nelly (b.1786). He could be the James who married Nelly Lilly in Yetholm in 1784. James of Alton and Hassendeanburn (1746–1820) 2nd son of Archibald of Hassendeanburn. He was a nurseryman and bank agent for the British Linen Co. in Hawick, from 1806 (along with Archibald). He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the merchant James who (along with Walter Ruecastle) witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson in 1777. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of land in Weensland, valued at £19 13s 7d. In 1791 he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1785–97. He was listed as a merchant when he paid the Dog Tax in Hawick in 1797. He may be the ‘Mr Dickson’ who paid the Council £3 in 1794 for ‘one year’s street dung’. He is probably the James who contributed locally around 1799 to help the war against France. He was also a heritor of Hawick Parish and an Orrock Trustee. He is probably the James who was a Bailie in the early 1800s, both before and after 1810. His house in Hawick was the easternmost house on the north side of the High Street, adjoining the nursery-ground there. He presumably bought the lands of Alton from the Horsburghs of that Ilk, after they were sold by Francis Scott of Alton in 1742. In 1811 he was still listed as owner of part of Weensland, as well as ‘Part of Particot Lands of Hawick’ valued at £18 16s 6d. He married Christian (or Jean) Turnbull, probably in Hawick in 1768; she died in Hawick in 1812. Their children were: Archibald (b.1770), who married Christian Scott of Wauchope, but died before him; Isabella (1771–1807), who married William Richardson; Andrew (b.1773), who succeeded to Alton after his brother; Christian (b.1775), who may be the Christian residing at Teviot Lodge; Robert (b.1776); and Jane (b.1777). Margaret, who died in Hawick in 1806 was probably also his daughter. The witnesses in 1777 were Walter Ruecastle and Archibald Paterson. He is buried in St. Mary’s. James of Chatto and Housebyres (1798–1876) 5th son of Archibald and Marion Fisher, he was christened in Hawick. He was a partner in the Dicksons and Laings manufacturing firm in Hawick, and was also a bank agent in Hawick. In 1834 he was listed in the electoral roll as joint proprietor of the spinning mill, along with his brother William, left them in their father’s will. Also in 1834 he was nominated as a trustee of the Orrock Bequest. He inherited Chatto from his uncle Walter. He also acquired the estates of Bughtrig and Castlaw. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1837. He was listed as a trustee of Andrew of Alton (who died in 1837). He is listed in 1839 among the major landowners of Hawick Parish. He was living at 67 High Street in 1841. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In about 1874 he was listed as owner of the both halves of Horsleyhill. In 1827 at Todshawaugh he married Christian, daughter of Robert Scott. His children were: Archibald, who succeeded to his lands; Robert, who must have died young; William, who succeeded to his share of Dicksons and Laings; Marion Fisher, who was unmarried and died at Morelands; and Jane, who also died unmarried. In 1845 he made out a bond to help support James, ‘a lunatic, grandson’. James of Alton and Pinnaclehill (c.1815–1846) younger son of Archibald and grandson of James of Alton. He was listed as heir of Andrew of Alton (who died in 1837) in the legal wrap-up of his nursery business in Edinburgh. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1837 and was listed in 1839 among the major landowners in Hawick Parish (along with his distant cousin, James of Housebyres). He married Charlotte, daughter of Capt. Vigors, who was widow of Mr. Lodor; they had no children. He is said to have gone insane and been admitted to the Royal Edinburgh Asylum. He died at Morningside Cottage. Alton went to his uncle, Andrew, while Pinnaclehill went to Scott of Wauchope, the family of his mother. James of Huntlaw (19th C.) probably a descendant of Robert of Huntlaw. In about 1874 it is recorded that he owned part of Childknow, as well as parts of Greenhouse, both in Liliesleaf Parish. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as one of the tenants of the lands of Deloraine and ‘Wardishope’ in Ettrick. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Milston in 1720 when his daughter Janet was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1727. John (18th C.) recorded as a servant at Minto House in 1788, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. He was listed as a footman at Minto in 1791. The same John could be the resident of Minto who is listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. John ‘Jock’ (b.1771) son of Rev.
George, minister of Bedrule. He was said to be a simpleton, who would wander round all the local manses. He had a new suit made every year, this being a long blue coat, which was very wide, with long tails and a double row of brass buttons down the front and back. He also wore knee-breeches and shoes with buckles. Children would sometimes follow him shouting ‘Daft John Dickson! Buckles and pouches! buckles and pouches!’ It is also stated (by Rev. James Dickson) that he had a good appetite, but rarely said much. John (1781/2–1846) cow herd in Newcastleton. He was recorded as head of his household in 1835–41 and was living at about 5 Doncaster Street in 1841. He married Margaret Elliot, who died at ‘Teenie’ in 1857, aged 75. Their children included: William (1805/6–35); Robert (1810/1–15); James (1813/4–31); and Isabella (1829/30–32). They are buried at Ettleton. John (19th C.) tailor on Buccleuch Street, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. John (b.1834/5) from Kelso, he was corn miller at Haughhead in 1861. His wife Agnes was from Hawick, and their children included Betsy, James and Margaret. Margaret (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Marion (15th C.) bequeathed a sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branzholme. She is listed as ‘Mariote Dicsoun’. Possibly the same ‘mariota dikisone’ was recorded as widow of the deceased William in Selkirk in 1494/5 when Lawrence Rutherford in Oakwood had remission for stealing goods from her, out of ‘balzeree’ (which may be Bailielee). Nellie (18th C.) proprietor of the King’s Head inn around the late 1700s. She was apparently short and deformed. She may be related to ‘Wullie the King’ Scott, who was a later proprietor, whose wife was a Dickson, and whose daughter was ‘Nellie the King’. She was the proprietor of the lodging house there when John Howard visited in 1786. Nichol (19th C.) teacher in Lilliesleaf in 1852. It is unclear where his school was. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) cordiner mentioned in the will of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He is recorded as ‘Hobbe Diksoun’ and was probably from Hawick, since he was listed along with other mainly Hawick merchants (and is not recorded as a Burgess of Edinburgh). He was owed ‘for buittis and schone, sevintene pundis’. Robert (d.bef. 1610) mentioned in a sasine of 1610 as the deceased former owner of a garden somewhere between the Village and the Kirkwynd. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick mentioned in a court case of 1673. William Scott was accused of striking his brother Robert Scott, apparently because he (Robert) had provoked Thomas Brown into insulting William; the situation was clearly confused! He could be the Robert married to Margaret Aitkin whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Helen (b.1669) and 2 unnamed sons (b.1671 and 1674). The witnesses in 1674 were James Scott and James Burn (probably the Bailies). He could be the Robert who witnessed baptisms for Patrick Scoon and William Ruecastle in 1673 and witnessed the marriage of John Scott (in Cavers) and Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1680. Robert (d.1744) founder of the nursery at Hassendeanburn in 1728 or 1729. It is unclear where he was born, or who his parents were, but historically the Dicksons were based in Berwickshire. He was the first of his family to become involved in horticulture and forestry. He was tenant at Hassendeanburn, and also owned part of Weensland, and other land in Hawick. The nurseries at Hassendean later spread to Hawick and became the largest supplier of seeds and plants in Scotland. He also acted as a money-lender in Hawick, before any banks were established. There is a record of him selling 500 young firs to Capt. Elliot of Wells in 1729. His wife died in 1758, aged 78. His family included: James (b.1712); Archibald (b.1718), who succeeded him in the family business; and probably Walter. For several generations there were descendants of his running nurseries all over Britain. Robert of Huntlaw (b.1742) eldest son of Archibald, whom he succeeded on his death in 1791, although he was already involved in the family nursery and seed business long before then. He is probably the Robert recorded as owner of the north part of Horsleyhill in 1788 (valued at £382), as well as Huntlaw (valued at £66 13s 4d) and part of the former lands of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish (also referred to as ‘part of the muir of Childknow’, valued at £33 9s 2d). He is probably also the Robert recorded at Horsleyhill in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. He is probably the Robert recorded being ‘of Huntlaw’ on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He was listed at Hassendeanburn in the 1792–94 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 8 horses and also paid the dog tax at Hassendeanburn in that year. In 1777 he married Beatrix, daughter of George Pott of Todrig. Their children were: Archibald of Hassendeanburn; George, who married a Miss Campbell in Edinburgh, but died childless; Elizabeth, who died unmarried; and Christian, also unmarried. In 1792 he secondly married Catherine, daughter of Charles Scott of Woll. There is a 1775 letter from him to Scott of Harden in the National Archives. He is probably the Robert of Huntlaw who was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in both 1805 and 1819, along with Archibald, junior of Huntlaw. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of part of Childknow, purchased from Dr. Hunter of Linthill. He was also owner of ‘South-end of Horsley-hill’ in 1811. Robert (1747/8–1830) teacher, probably in Castleton Parish. He married Betty, daughter of James Renwick, tenant in Mangerton; she died at Castleton in 1829, aged 86. They are buried in Etottle Cemetery. Their daughter Margaret was born in 1783. Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant of Dimpieknowe farm, along with Peter. In about 1817 there were actions and counter-actions between them and their landlord, John Corse Scott of Sinton, relating to their rent, and whether the acreage of land was fraudulently stated to be larger than it really was. Robert (1789–1811) 3rd son of Archibald of Housebyres and Hassendeanburn, one of the founders of Dicksons & Laings, with his mother being Marion Fisher. He became a surgeon and died en route to Batavia on the ‘Anne’. Robert (b.1815/6) from Applegarth, he was farmer at Dinley on Hermitage Water. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 1400 acres and employer of 4 people. His wife was Jane. Robert (b.1816/7) from Newcastleton, he was a shepherd at Branxholme Park Cottages. His wife was Margaret and their children included Helen, Margaret, Mary and John. Robert (19th C.) farmer at Weensmoor in the 1860s. Robert H. (1858/9–1921) joiner to trade, he served for 30 years as compulsory officer with the Hawick School Board. He also served on the local Military Tribunal in WWI. His sons were David (insurance agent) and Walter (hosiery traveller, who married Eileen M. Angwin). Rev. Robert Marcus (19th/20th C.) ordained as minister of St. John’s Kirk in Hawick in 1902. He was translated to Lanark in 1905. Thomas of Ormiston (15th C.) witness to the 1446 charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. In 1479 he leased the middle steadings of the Crown lands of Glenpyet in the Yarrow valley, and in 1485 leased half of Glenpyet. In 1491 either this Thomas or a descendant had a ‘procuratory of resignation’ to resign the lands of Ruecastal into the hands of the Abbot of Jedburgh, then granted to John Rutherford of Hundalae. Walter (15th C.) received 10 shillings in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. Walter (18th C.) son of Robert, he established a plant nursery at Leith Walk in Edinburgh, considered the most extensive in Scotland for a time. His company became Dicksons and Shankley, with a partner being James Dickson, who was (quite confusingly) not a direct relation. He is probably the Walter, florist of Edinburgh who subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. Walter of Chatto (1759–1836) 5th son of Archibald and Christian Thomson. He was uncle of Andrew, Archibald, George and James Dickson, as well as Walter Scott of Wauchope. He died at Redbraes near Edinburgh and left his estates to his nephew James. He is also referred to as ‘Major Dickson’. He may be the ‘Mr Walter Dickson, Hassendeanburn’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He left Chatto to his nephew Archibald, with his will stating that it was then to go to his other nephews George, Andrew and Capt. Archibald. Walter, W.S. (1797–1843) 4th son of Archibald and Marion Fisher. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to William Renny. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He died unmarried. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Grieve and their children included Robert (b.1650). He witnessed a baptism for James Laidlaw in 1651. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Young and their son John was baptised in 1685. William (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll amongst ‘ye poor’. William (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw according to a baptismal record of 1682. He was also listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He married Marion Wilson and their daughter Marion was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1682, with witnesses Robert and William Scott. William (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for candlemaker John Scott. He married Margaret Goodfellow in Cavers in 1698. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: James (b.1704); Janet (b.1707); Anna (b.1709); William (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); John (b.1715); Margaret (again, b.1718); Margaret (again, b.1720); and John (b.1726). The witnesses in 1709 were Bailies George Martin and Robert Ruecastal. William (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick and elder of Hawick Kirk. He was recorded as a merchant in 1704 when one of his children was baptised. In 1717 (along with Thomas Hardie) he was appointed to collect monies from ‘Hilhousland, Weensland, and Weensland milne’, suggesting he may have lived in this general direction. In 1722 he was to assist in collecting monies from between the ‘Meekle bridge’ to his house, with the next area being from his house to the East Port, including the Cross Wynd; this suggests his house was in the middle of the High Street. In 1724 he appears to have been standing in for the Session Treasurer. His children included: James (b.1704); Janet (b.1707); Anna (b.1709); William (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); and John (b.1715). The witnesses in 1704 were Bailies George Martin and Margaret. William (b.1713); and John (b.1715). The witnesses in 1704 were Bailies George Martin and Patrick Richardson. William (18th C.) resident at Craikhope when his son William was baptised at Craikhope when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762. William of Orchard (1756–88) son of Rev. George. He was grandson of Bailie Robert Howison, from whom he inherited Orchard in about 1780. He is recorded on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was was listed as a bachelor at Orchard in 1785–87 when he was taxed for having 1 female servant and 1 male servant. He was also taxed for having 2 saddle horses at Orchard in 1785–87. In 1788 he was listed as owner of part of Weensland, valued at £47 8s 4d, which had formerly belonged to William Irvine and another part, valued at £41, which had formerly belonged to Adam Ormiston. He died in Kelso and Orchard was inherited by his uncle, Robert Scott. William of Bellwood (1753–1835) 3rd son of Archibald of Hassendeanburn. He held lands in Perthshire and carried on the nursery business in the Highlands. He left his business and lands to Archibald Turnbull, son of his sister Margaret. Liet. Col. William (18th/19th C.) of Kilbucko, Peeblesshire. Severely wounded at Alexandria in Egypt, his regiment, the 42nd Royal Highlanders (i.e. the Black Watch), were ordered home after the Treaty of Amiens. When they passed through Hawick on their way to Edinburgh Castle in 1802 he was made an Honorary Burgess along with 2 fellow officers. William (b.1800) youngest son of Archibald and Mary Fisher, was a manufacturer and seedsman in Hawick. He is probably the William ‘residing in Hawick’ who is recorded as a joint proprietor along with bank agent James in the 1834 electoral roll, owners of a spinning mill provided for them in their father’s will. He lived with his wife at 67 High Street in the mid-1800s. They are recorded there in 1841, when he was employer of 905 men as a woollen manufacturer and 54 men as a seedsman. The house at No. 67 can be seen in an 1864 photo, before the site was rebuilt as the Store drapery department. He was still at 67 High Street in 1861 (and listed as a woollen manufacturer), but later moved to Teviot Lodge. His wife was Agnes; she may be the Agnes, daughter of Robert Scott who married William Dickson in 1839. William Richardson of Alton (1806–52) son of William Richardson and Isabella Dickson. He succeeded his uncle Archibald of Hassendeanburn and Horsleyhill, after the death of his uncle Andrew Dickson, perhaps in 1846; originally Richardson, he assumed the additional name of Dickson when he inherited. He is probably the grocer and spirit dealer listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1838 he was listed as a trustee of his uncle Andrew of Alton, and was then ‘Nurseryman, Edinburgh’. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also purchased Philhope in the Borthwick valley. According to the Land Tax Rolls he was owner of Alton, part of Wester Clarlaw and Appletreehall Townhead in the mid-1800s. In 1840 he married Mary Smith Mitchell, daughter of Edinburgh merchant Robert Mitchell. He was succeeded by his only son, also William Richardson. He also had 2 daughters, Jessie and Isabella. His widow secondly married Rev. William Henry Gray. William Richardson of Alton and Chisholme (1846–81) son of William Richardson and Mary Mitchell. The estate of Chisholme was purchased by his trustees while he was still a minor. He paid the land tax for Tolts (in Kirkton Parish) in about 1874 and was also then recorded as owner of Chisholme, Woodburn, Chisholme Mill, Easter Parkhill, Wester Parkhill and Broadlee in Roberton Parish. In 1873 he married Jessie, daughter of Glasgow merchant David Colville. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1869. He left 2 daughters: Blanche Margaret of Alton and Chisholme, who married Capt. Herbert Barron; and Jessie Mary (or Isabella), who married lawyer George Greig of Eccles, and secondly George Dove, farmer at Boswells Bank. He died at Chisholme. William of Wellfield (b.1835/6) younger son of James of Chatto and Housebys, and brother of Archibald of Chatto. He inherited his father’s share of the Dicksons and Laings manufacturer’s business when he died in 1876. In 1861 he was living at 14 Buccleuch Street and listed as a woollen manufacturer. He must have had Wellfield House built for him shortly after that. He was an ensign in the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (Volunteers). He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1868. He never married. A few years before his death he sold his share of the business, purchased Morelands in Grange Loan, Edinburgh and died there. He left everything to his sister Marion, who left it all to his older brother Archibald (formerly spelled ‘Dickson’, ‘Dicksonne’, ‘Dicksonn’, ‘Dikkesoun’, ‘Diksoun’, ‘Dixson’, etc.; it is rarely ‘Dixon’ in Scotland).

Dickson an Beattie’s (dik-sin-an-bee’-eez) n. hosiery manufacturing firm set up in Denholm in 1793. The partnership was started by Archibald Dickson and George Beattie. Their scouring house was the cottage where Leyden was born. The Dickson family also started manufacturing in Hawick and moved out of Denholm in 1803. By 1815 the Denholm factory had been incorporated into Dicksons, Beattie & Laings, which became Dicksons and Laings on Beattie’s retirement.

Dickson an Laing’s (dik-sin-an-längz) n. hosiery and tweed manufacturers, founded in 1793 in Denholm by Archibald Dickson of Housebyres, Archibald Dickson of Huntlaw and Hassendeanburn and George Beattie. David and Alexander Laing joined the firm in 1802, and the Laings managed the firm for 3 generations. They introduced the first 4 power-loomds to Hawick in 1830, supplied by Sharp & Roberts of Manchester. They were also represented at the Great Exhibition of 1851. In Slater’s 1852 directory they were listed at Wilton Mills, and also at Glassford Street, Glasgow. They were mainly responsible for constructing the Mansfield extension to Wilton Dam, and were involved in at least a couple of law suits with other companies, protecting their rights to the dam. They were one of the leading mills in the 19th century, but were defunct by 1908. The company’s bankruptcy was partially due to the imposition of higher tariffs imposed on imports in the U.S. The factory on Commercial Road (Wilton Mills), distinctive for the huge clock tower, was sold off in 1913. These buildings lay empty for many years, and were used by the Council. In its later years the clock was stuck at either 20 to 6, quarter to 6 or 10 to 6 (depending which face you were looking at). After a long period of neglect, and little genuine effort to save it, the clock tower was demolished in 2015, removing one of the Wilton’s most characteristic landmarks. The Museum has ledgers and other documents covering the period 1813–1907 (actually ‘Dicksons & Laings’, but ‘Dickson’ is not popularly pluralised).

Dickson an Turnbull’s (dik-sin-an-turn-bulz) n. nurserymen with office and seed shop at 18 High Street in the mid-19th century. The firm was the continuation of Dickson’s nurseries at Hassendeanburn, which had expanded to Hawick in the 1760s and moved its centre of operations there by the early 1800s. The firm was still ‘Archibald Dickson & Sons’ in Slater’s 1852 directory, listed as ‘Nurserymen, Seedsmen and Florists’. The new company was a partnership between the Dicksons and ex-Cornet George Turnbull. Their nursery ground was behind a 5 foot wall between what became North Bridge Street and Teviot Crescent. Some of the workers lived in houses at the east end of the North side of the High Street. They also used ‘Wester Nurseries’ which were off the New Road.

Dickson Court (dik-sin-kör’) n. street consisting of a block of flats built off the north side of Dickson Street in 1984.

Dickson’s (dik-sinz) n. general name for the nursery business established in Hassendean by Robert Dickson in 1728 (some say 1729), more formally called Dickson & Co., Nursery & Seedsman. The business was extended to Hawick in 1766 and ran for over 100 years, in the later part as Dickson and Turnbull’s. They dealt with a wide variety of seeds, trees and plants, including exotic species. They also trained many of the gardeners for the grounds of the local noblemen. In the late 18th and early 19th centuries their nurseries, in the eastern part of Hawick, covered what is now Oliver Place, Oliver Crescent, Croft Road, North Bridge Street, Union Street and the north side of Bourtree Place. In the early 1800s they also took over lands around what became Trinity Street and the top of Weensland Road, as well as near Dickson Street and both sides of the New Road. At about this time they employed roughly 100 people, and by 1830 Dicksons & Turnbull was cultivating about 100 acres. Wood’s 1824 map shows them having nursery grounds around Wellfield, and Mr. Dickson owning the land around Oliver Crescent as well as Lawrie’s Denn. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory the company is listed on the High Street as ‘nursery & seedsmen, as well as florists. In 1837 it was ‘Archibald Dickson & Sons’, even although Archibald was deceased by then. Day books from the firm exist for the period 1739–74.

Dickson’s Brae (dik-sinz-brä) n. former lands probably in Minto or Hassendean parish. In 1653 William Bennet inherited from his father ‘the lands of Barnhills and Dickeson’s Brae’. It could be the same as Dickson’s Rood.
Dickson’s Close

Dickson’s Close (dik-sinz-klös) n. name in use in the mid-19th century for a close off the High Street, possibly near No. 67.

Dickson’s Nurseries (dik-sinz-nur-se-reez) n. originally established at Hassendean, there were also plant nurseries on the east side of Hawick in the middle-to-late 19th century.

Dickson’s Rood (dik-sinz-rood) n. former name for lands in Hassendean Parish. In 1610 this was included in a list of lands from which Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig tried to remove William Scott of Howpasley. And it is also listed in 1618 among lands inherited by William Scott of Howpasley (it is ‘Diksounes Reid’ in 1610 and ‘Diksounesrude’ in 1618; the name presumably means a small area related to someone named Dickson; see also Dickson’s Brae).

Dickson Street (dik-sin-stree’) n. street built in 1850-55 and named after the Dicksons of Dickson & Laings. It originally had tenement housing up both sides, and was filled with the families of workers in the nearby factories. On V.E. day in 1945 the street had a particularly splendid display of flags and bunting. The houses were demolished in 1971/72, with the Wilton Bar or ‘Genties’ at the foot of the street being the last to go. The street was then entirely redesigned, having new houses only on the south side, including a small shop and 1 other business, and with a garden and car park on the other side. The top stone of a rotary quern from this street is in the Museum.

Dickson’s Well (dik-sinz-wel) n. former public water source mid-way up Dickson Street, also known as the ‘Dickson Street Well’. The water came from a spring at Lockieshedge. It was heavily used by residents of Wilton long before Dickson Street was built, and gave its name to the Wellfield area.

Dick’s Trei (dik-tri) n. Dick’s Tree, a location near Canonbie which was the site of the blacksmith’s where the Bold Buccleuch had the irons of Kinmont Willie removed.

diet (dI-i’) n., arch. a session of a court – ‘The diet against Robert Hardie is continued until an inspection be taken, whether the town or regall officer was the first attacher’ [BR1698].

Diener (dee-nur) n. Lieut. Fredrick (18th/19th C.) French prisoner of war, held in Hawick during the Napoleonic Wars. He was father of Fredrick William, with Hawick woman Willhelmina Paisley as mother, but returned to France in 1814. His wife secondly married William Lawrie. Fredrick William (1814–86) son of Fredrick and Willhelmina Paisley, he was a joiner and cabinet-maker of Bourtree Place. He was listed as a joiner on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He spoke at the 1884 franchise rally held at Loch Park. He married Agnes Grey and their children were Mina Diener and William Fredrick. William Fredrick (1852–1906) local manufacturer, son of Fredrick William, he was a partner in Armstrong & Diener & Co. He married Lottie Matilda-Cropley.

Dimpleknowe  (dim-pul-now) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish, on the south side of the Ale Water, north of Satchells and east of Synton Mill. It is also spelled ‘Dimpleknow’. John Simson was farmer there in at least the period 1787–97, with 4 work horses. Robert and Peter Dickson were tenants there in 1818. James King and W. Douglas were farmers in the 1860s.
the Dimples  (ti-dim-pulz) n. name for an area to the east of Burnflat, on the boundary of the Common, above Lynnwood Scar. It is marked on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common, lying in a clearing between the plantation at the top of the golf course and the Whitlaw Wood. In about 1784 a suicide, John Webster, was buried there, where 3 lairds’ lands meet (the name occurs in a description of the Common in 1767; it is unclear if it relates to the Scots for ‘dibble’, i.e. a tool for making holes for planting seeds or to the English word ‘dimple’ or something else entirely).

dinger  (ding-ur) n. a vigorous course of action, to ‘go one’s dinger’ or ‘go a dinger’ is to do something enthusiastically, boisterously or vigorously, to go the whole hog or to lose one’s temper – ‘ee went a bonnie dinger’, ‘Oo must hev been gaun a dinger Baith at the Haugh and the Muir’ [RM], ‘When oo picked oot oor sides Oo wad gang a real dinger’ .
Dingleton  (ding-ul-in, ding-gul-in) n. psychiatric hospital on Bowden Moor just outside Melrose, built as an insane asylum in 1870–72. The land was north of the original boundary of the Abbotsford estate, and previously undeveloped. It was originally constructed to house about 150 patients from the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick. For a long time it was the local mental health facility, closing in 2000 when its services were dispersed through several Border towns. In its early days it was referred to as ‘Bowden Moor’ or even just ‘Bowden’. Always spoken of locally in slightly hushed tones, the hospital was internationally known for some of its innovations, including the Therapeutic Community (i.e. the open-doors policy and involvement of the surrounding community). The name applied to a former estate there, which was burned by Hertford’s army in 1545 (formerly spelled ‘Danyelton’ etc.; the name first appears as ‘Danielstoun’ in the late 13th century, and may derive from Daniel who was recorded as a prior of Melrose in 1139).
Dinlabyre

ding-on (ding-on) n., poet. a torrent, downpour – ‘Last nicht a guid ding-on o' rain, Wi' deid leaves sotherin' under fit …’ [WFC].

dinkly (dingk-lee) adj., arch. sprucely, smartly – ‘Dinkly dress't up for the Common Ridin’’ [GW].

Dinlabyre (din-lee-bir) n. farm in the Liddel valley, north of Castleton, once a seat of the Elliot. William Nixon was there in 1544. Edward Nixon was Laird there in 1579/80 and in 1584/5, when he signed a bond of assurance for the behaviour of all of his branch of Nixons. Another Edward Nixon was there in 1638. ‘William Ellwald of Duneleabyre' was among Scotsmen delivered to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. There were Ellots of Dinlabyre in the 17th century, with William Elliot recorded in the 1643 valuation when it was valued at £400 and also in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls. William of Dinlabyre, who died in 1693, probably rebuilt the main house and then extended it, these being marked by the lintels there with the dates 1668 and 1682, along with the initials of William Elliot. The Hearth Tax was paid for 3 hearths at ‘Dinlibrs house' in 1694. It was purchased by John Oliver in about 1698. The present farmhouse was modernised in the late 19th century, but probably incorporating parts of the former structure. It is also said that there was an ancient chapel on the site. John Oliver paid tax on 23 windows for the house there in 1748. The nearby Dinlabyre Aisle, built in 1749, is a Georgian burial enclosure for the Oivers of Dinlabyre and Liddelbank. Gilbert Jardine was there in 1786 and James Telfer was shepherd in 1797. The farm was valued at £400 in 1788 and 1811. James Moor was shepherd there in 1841. Andrew Kyle farmed there in 1851. Robert Douglas was farmer there in the mid-19th century, and was the oldest member of the Associate Kirk in Newcastleton in 1879. William Jackson was also there in 1868 (the name first appears as ‘Donleybeir' in 1544, is ‘Dunleybire' in 1584/5, ‘Dunlybyir' in 1579/80, ‘Duneleabyre' in 1597, ‘Dunleybeir' and ‘Dinallybire' in 1599, ‘Dunlabyre' in 1612, ‘Dunlibyre' in 1623, ‘Dinleybire' in 1676, ‘Dunlabyre' in 1691, ‘Dunliebire' in 1761 and has its modern spelling in 1797; it is on de Wit's c. 1680 map of Scotland as ‘Dunleyoyre', is ‘Denlabyre' on a Buccleuch survey of 1718 and is on Stobie’s 1770 map; its origin is probably Old English ‘dun leah byre', meaning ‘cowshed at the clearing by the hill').

Dinlabyre Aisle (din-lee-bir-I-ul) n. mausoleum on the Dinlabyre farm in Liddesdale, built in 1749 for the Oivers of Dinlabyre and Liddelbank. It is shown clearly on the 1857 Ordnance Survey map.

Dinlabyre Burn (din-lee-bir-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Hurklewinter Knowe and flows roughly westwards to join the Liddel near the farm of Dinlabyre. Side streams include Hog Sike and Boghall Burn. It contains some waterfalls.

Dinlabyre Chaipel (din-lee-bir-chi-lj-pul) n. reputed chapel near Dinlabyre farm in Liddesdale. A turf-covered structure, about 35 ft by 20 ft was described in the 1958 Transactions as being consistent with a chapel, but the evidence was far from conclusive. It is also said that gravestones were visible in the adjoining churchyard into the 19th century. The area is located near the Chapel Well, which is also circumstantial evidence. However, it is now buried in an area of forestation. It is also sometimes called ‘Killoley Chapel', after a farm of that name mentioned in the 13th to 16th centuries; however, that name is probably associated with Kelly Cleuch about 1 km to the north.

Dinlabyre Mill (din-lee-bir-nil) n. former corn mill on the farm of Dinlabyre. It was labelled on Stobie’s 1770 map, a little up the Boghall Burn from the main farm.

Dinlayback Yetts (din-lâ-bawk-yets) n. former name for an area on the road to Orchard farm. It is unknown precisely where this was located (mentioned in 1863 by Sir James Murray).

Dinlees (dn-leez) n. older form of ‘Dinley', a farm on the Hermitage Water, just to the west of the Castle, with Dinley Burn, Fell and Moss nearby. It is probably the ‘Dunle…' which appears on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. On the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is valued at 5 merks and the tenant was Archibald Elliot. Adam Elliot, son of Davie ‘of Dunlies’ is recorded in 1590. George Scott possessed the lands in 1632, but it may also be the ‘Dyna' listed among the possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in the same document. Archibald Henderson was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it was combined with Gingenwalls, consisting of 1067 acres and bounded by Greystonehaugh, the Lord of Hosscote’s lands, Twislehope, Rispylaw and Gorrenberry. The house in 1718 was in the same place as today’s farmhouse. It was once split into the separate ‘Over Dinley’ and ‘Nether Dinley’. William Elliot was farmer there in 1785–97 and Robert Dickson in 1861—‘But he’s tane aff his gude steel cap, And thrice he’s wav’d it in the air—The Dinlay snaw was ne’er mair white, Nor the lyart locks of Harden’s hair’ [SWS] (also referred to as ‘the Dinlees’; the name probably derives from the Old English ‘dun leah’, meaning ‘clearing by the hill’; it first appears in 1508 as ‘Dunley’, is ‘Dunle’ in 1510, ‘Denly’ in 1516, ‘Dunlie’ in 1541, ‘Dunlie’ in 1566, ‘Dinlay’ in 1632, ‘Dunly’ in 1694, ‘Dinlaw’ in 1786 and ‘Dinly’ in 1797; the house is marked as ‘Dunlyhill’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, both ‘N. Dunlay’ and ‘Dunlyhill’ appear on Blaeu’s 1654 map, it is ‘Dinley’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, ‘Dunlay’ on Moll’s 1745 map and ‘Dunlee’ on Stobie’s 1770 map.

Dinley (din-lee) n. modern form of Dinlees on Hermitage Water.

Dinley Burn (din-lee-burn) n. stream in the Hermitage valley, which rises around Hartsgarth Fell and flows roughly north-east to join the Hermitage Water near the farm of Dinlees. There are waterfalls in its headwaters, called Dinley Lins and its smaller tributaries include Hare Grain, Scarry Cleuch and Long Grain. Note that Dinley Sike is a smaller separate stream to the east, consisting of 1067 acres and bounded by Greystonehaugh, the Lord of Hosscote’s lands, Twislehope, Rispylaw and Gorrenberry.

Dinley Cleuch (din-lee-klooch) n. stream on the southern side of the Hermitage valley, just to the east of Dinlees. There is an old sheephound shown on the Ordnance Survey maps.

Dinley Fell (din-lee-fel) n. high ground to the south of Dinlees farm, reaching a height of 399 m. It is essentially a shoulder on the higher hills to the south-west, including Hartsgarth Fell and Roan Fell.

Dinleyhaughft (din-lee-lawf-hi) n. Dinleyhaughfoot, former name for an area on the Hermitage Water to the east of Dinlees farm, once having a farmstead of the same name. There is a footbridge over the river there. Labourer John Scott was there in 1835 and farm worker Walter Elliot and his family were there in 1851 (‘Dinleayhaugh’ in 1851).

Dinley Moss (din-lee-mos) n. high, marshy ground to the south of Dinley Fell, in the headwaters of Hartsgarth Burn in Liddesdale.

Dinley Sike (din-lee-sik) n. small stream south of the farm of Dinlees, which flows into the Hermitage Water. Note that it is separate from Dinley Burn to the west and Dinley Cleuch to the east.

dinmont (din-mon) n., arch. a castrated male sheep after its first shearing—‘...wedderis, gynnir et Dynmont octingenta’ [SB1492], ‘Item, tventie scoir tua dynmonthis and tuperes, price of the scoir ourheid, xiiij £’ [SB1574], ‘...mylk yhawis with their lambs, 21d.; dynmonthis and tuperes, 14d.’ [JW], ‘A lamb is smeared at the end of Harvest when it is denominated a hog; hence the phrase harvest-hog. After being smeared the second time, a ewe-hog is denominated a gimmer, and a wedder-hog a dymond’ [JL] (also ‘dymond’ and variants).

Dinmontlair Knowe (din-mon-lair-now) n. hill in southern Castleton, between Old Castleton and the Border, to the south-west of Wilson’s Pike. It reaches a height of 395 m and the region immediately to the north-east is called Dinmont Lair.

the Dippin o the Flag (thu-di-pin-o-thu-flawg) n. ceremony on the Friday afternoon of the Common Riding, following the races at the Moor. After the mounted procession has ridden by Crumhaughhill Road, via Cheviot Road and Bright Street to Myreslawgreen, the Principals proceed to the Coble Pool, via Beaconsfield Terrace, St. George’s Lane and the path along behind the High School. There they mark the old Burgh boundary with Wilton at an an- cient custom. The main 3 riders enter the water, while the Acting Father watches from the bank as the Cornet plunges the staff of the Flag into the Teviot 3 times. The Lasses and other towns- folk gather on the opposite bank to watch. After the Dipping, the principles return up Beaconsfield Terrace to rejoin the cavalcade. The earliest de- scriptions suggest that the boundary at the Coble was once marked by throwing stones and divots into the river there. The ceremony was first filmed in 1927, with other clips in 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934 and 1937 – ‘Then ride the mairches; cut the sod, An’ dip the flag in Teviot water’ [IJ].

the Disruption (thu-dis-rup-shin) n. historic event of 1843 in Scottish church history in which 474 ministers signed the Deed of Demission, forming the Protesting Church of Scotland, which became the Free Church. The dispute centred on a number of factors, including the appointment of ministers without consultation with the congregation. This split was partially healed when the United Presbyterian Churches united with the Free Churches in 1900, with the Highland Free churches remaining separate. These churches in turn re-joined the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1929. In Hawick Rev. J.A. Wallace along with 6 elders (George Blaikie, John Johnstone, James Smith, William Nisbet, John Routledge and William Butler) and about 600 of the congregation left St. Mary’s in June 1843 to meet in the East End Meeting House until the Free Church (St. George’s) was built in 1844. West Port Free Church, St. Andrew’s Free Church and Wilton South followed later.

division (di-vi-shin) n., arch. formal partition of land, allocation of seating in a church – ‘Mr John Purdom presented ane register, in which, at the division of the church, anno 1683, the brethren of the presbytery mett and did allocate to the heritors their seats in the body of the church below the lofty …’ [PR1714].

the Division (thi-di-vi-shin, -di-vee-shin) n. controversial arrangement to divide and enclose the Common in 1777. Originally the dispute arose between the people of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners, particularly the Duke of Buccleuch, over the precise rights and ownership of the Common; this may go back to a proposal from about a century earlier to split the Common evenly between the Town and the Baron (then Douglas of Queensberry), with a Commission struck by the Town to bring the case to the Court of Session. In the 18th century court proceedings lasted about a decade and resulted in Hawick losing 30% of the Common to Buccleuch and others, including the site of the Caa Knowe. In 1765 the Town wanted to know if it could lease or enclose parts of the Common and sought the legal of advocate James Montgomery, who suggested that the Common was effectively owned by the successors of the particulate owners named in the 1537 Charter. As a result in 1766 the Town let 9 small pieces of the Common, adjacent to the lands of the neighbouring tenants, in an attempt to prevent encroachment onto the Moor. This led to clashes with the tenants of the Duke of Buccleuch, and a second legal opinion in 1766 suggested that the Duke’s tenants may in fact have pasturage rights on the Common and that the matter needed to go to court to settle once and for all. In 1767 the agents of the Duke of Buccleuch (then a minor) raised an ‘action of declarator and division of the Commmonty’ at the Court of Session. There followed depositions by many witnesses, regarding the former use of the Common. The Town’s lawyer, Robert MacQueen, gave an opinion in 1768 that the situation was unclear. In 1769 the Town appointed 9 men to act as commissioners to negotiate on their behalf with the Duke of Buccleuch’s managers. In 1774 Robert MacQueen offered his revised opinion that the neighbouring landowners had a claim to part of the Common, and suggested that the Town might concede 1/3 of the land. It then went to arbitration, with the final decision made in 1776 and the Division happening physically in 1777. In reading the dispositions of witnesses given in 1767, and considering the established nature of the Town’s rights to the Common, it is hard to escape the conclusion that there was a travesty of justice in 1777. On the positive side, after that time the Town was allowed to enclose the land with dykes and fences, ending the practical need for riding the Marches. It also enabled the Town Council to raise rents, enabling it to make several improvements, including erecting a Town House, paving roads and building wells. However, many saw this as a treacherous move against the traditional rights of the townspeople. To mark the bicentenary in 1977 the ‘Big Fower’ rode to the Caa Knowe after the cutting of the sod and there briefly met the Provost and Bailies – ‘Our marches rode, our landmarks planted, But divni (div-ni, -na) contr. don’t, do not – ‘mibbe ee div, bit A divni’ (used for emphasis, cf. the more common dinni).

divot (di-vi’) n. a thin oblong piece of sod used as roofing or fuel – ‘... make in and away take of your Commone Muire of Haviecke as many divots as will thatch his said stable ...’ [BR1704], ‘An’ divots an’ rough-heads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK], turf in general – ‘But I’ll up throwe thir divots Afore him, massy, his lane, Ablow thon lee’in’ hunderwechts O’ marble stane!’ [DH], a thick slice of bread (diviot and other variants exist as older spellings).

the Divoty Plantin (thu-di-vi’-ee-plawn’-in) n. plantation near Hummelknowes Moss. Just to the north-east is an earthwork on top of a slight ridge. It is an oval enclosure, about 65 m by 30 m in size, surrounded by an earthen bank, with the original entrance probably being at the south-west, and any internal structures being destroyed by ploughing.

divven (di-vin, -ven) contr. don’t, do not – ‘ee div, divven ee?’, ‘divven they bide up the Loan?’ (shorter form of divvent; cf. divni).

divvent (di-vin’, di-ven’, di-vent) contr. don’t, do not – ‘divvent ee no?’, ‘aye, divvent they jist’, ‘Ee dinna mean Tam, divn’t ee no?’ [ECS] (also written ‘divvint’; this form used interrogatively and always precedes the pronoun, cf. dinni or divni, which always follow the pronoun).

the Dixie Seeven (thu-dik-see-see-vin) n. local dance band, which played regularly for a very extended period, peaking in popularity in the 1950s and early 1960s. Members included Dave Young on trumpet and Jim Hogarth on percussion.

Dixon (dik-sin) n. Dr. Charles James Whitehead (19th/20th C.) from England, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1890 and became a doctor in Hawick. His practice was at 25 Bridge Street. He wrote poetry under the pseudonym ‘James Whitehead’, publishing ‘Love’s tribute: a sonnet-sequence’ in 1904. Dr. Simpson took over his surgery in about 1924.

Dobbie (do-bee) n. Alexander (19th C.) lived at Eskbank. In about 1874 he was listed as owner of Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish. Alexander ‘Alec’ Hawick Halberdier 1929–58. Rev. Andrew (19th C.) owner of part of the lands of Hungry-hills and others listed in the Land Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish in about 1874, having previously belonged to Andrew Gray. He was also listed at Hillhead in 1874. Rev. John (d.c.1832) minister at Teviothead until about 1832. It was after his death that Henry Scott Riddell was appointed minister there.

Dobie (dô-bee) n. former name for a well near Town-o-Rule (possibly ‘Dubbie’).

Dob’s Linn (dôbz-lin) n. quarry off the A708 south of St. Mary’s Loch, famous for graptolite fossils. The nearby Birkhill Cottage has a plaque commemorating the geological work of Charles Lapworth here in the 1870s – ‘For Hab Dob and Davie Din, Dang the deil owre Dob’s Linn’ [T] (also called ‘Dob Linn’ and ‘Dobb’s Linn’).

Dobson (dob-sin) n. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1693 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. William (b.c.1810) spinner in Hawick, living beside Nixon’s Mill (i.e. at Lynnwood) in 1841. His wife was Mary, and their children included Adam, Thomas and Agnes. He became an elder in Alars Kirk in 1837. He later left Hawick and became a minister in the Congregational Union of Scotland. He returned in 1843 to preach at Alars Kirk while the minister was out of town, but was prevented by one of the elders withholding the key. He was minister of the 2nd Congregational Church in Hawick for a year or two about this time, then became the first Congregational minister at Innerleithen. Mr. ?? (19th C.) inn-keeper at the Station Hotel. He had drink tents at the Moor and Haugh at the Common Riding of 1881 (at least).
docht (docht) n., poet. power, strength - ‘...ane michtie man isna deliferet be meikle doucht’ [HSR] (also written ‘doucht’).

dochemy (doch-te) adj., arch. doughty, powerful - ‘Door an dochty, framin the view, war rankeet Naeter’s Wardens o the Mairches’ [ECS].

dock (dok) n., arch. the buttocks, a push, hoist, v., arch. to push, hoist, particularly when climbing a wall (also dook).

dock-up (dok-up) n., arch. a push up by the buttocks, a help (also the more common dook-up or dooks).

ducken (do-kin) n. dock plant, Rumex, especially its leaves - ‘dis eet really help a nettle sting if ee rub docken leaves on eet?’; ‘As soople as a docken’ [GW], ‘A dinna care a docken’ [GW], anything of little value, especially in phrases like ‘no gie a docken’ - ‘The clubs and pubs pursued their way, and never cared a docken; At last the scandal settled down, and then no more was spoken’ [JCG].

the Doctor (thu-dok-tur) n. nickname for James Scott in the early 18th century. Also a popular name for Dr. W.T. Barrie. Additionally in the early part of the 19th century the name was used for the Rector’s assistant at the Grammar School.

Doctor H’Yiggs (dok-tur-lyigz) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the 19th century - ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sall’ [HI] (the origin is obscure).

Doctor Jaickets (dok-tur-fa-kitz) n. nickname for James Aitkin.

the Doctor’s Pend (thu-dok-turz-pend) n. former name for a pend in Denholm.

dod (dód) n., arch. a hill, generally with a rounded top. The word survives in the name of several local hills, e.g. Black Dod, Little Dod and Muckle Dod, as well as possibly Dod Burn.

Dod (dód) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of George.

Dod (dód) interj. exclamation of suprise or affirmation - ‘Dod, will Ah, puir fella, for ee’re no like yin o’ thae imposters that come sae muckle about ma lodgin’ hoose’ [JEDM], ‘Dod, the snirtin body!’ [ECS], ‘He sometimes would say ‘Dod deld!’ Sometimes ‘Deverr desht!’ And if he was very upset, he descended to ‘Dod deld devert desht!’’ [JeC] (euphemism for ‘God’).

Dod (dód) n. farm on the Dod Burn, reached by the track beside the Dodburn Filter Works. There is also a 6 m diameter round-house nearby, as well as signs of cultivation rigs. The recently excavated foundations of a peel tower (possibly Peelbrae or Dodrig) is beside the grassy track beyond the farm. On the south-eastern spur of White Hill, overlooking the farm, are the remains of a hill-fort, measuring about 205 ft by 150 ft, with a double rampart; it is covered by a later homestead (or perhaps this is 2 phases of single settlement), with at least one hut circle. The lands here were once owned by a branch of the Gledstains family, under Gledstains of Cocklaw, since at least 1509/10 (in a document for Douglas of Cavers, referring to much earlier charters). In 1643 the lands were valued (along with Hunthill) at £180. When the last Gledstains of Dod died, the lands went to a distant female of that name who married Capt. Vetch (brother of Lord Bowhill). He sold it to James Pott, who became the first Pott of Dod. By 1707 the lands had been disjoined from Hunthill and valued at £130. Gideon Pott was listed as owner of ‘Dod or Dodrig’ in 1788 (and still recorded in 1811), when it was valued £130 (sometimes written ‘Doddi’; it was ‘Dod’ in 1509/10).

the Dod (thu-dód) n. hill just north of Akermoor Loch, in the headwaters of the Ale, reaching a height of 364 m. A former farmstead near here may have been the home of ‘Jamie Telfer of the Fair Dodhead’ (there is a house marked ‘Dodhead’ in roughly this location on Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Dodbank (dód-bawngk) n. name for a former farm at ‘Dodhead’ above the Ettrick valley. This may have been the location for the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer of the Fair Dodheid’ (although there is no evidence there was ever a Telfer there, or indeed that the ballad is anything other than fiction). It was possessed by a branch of the Scotts, Walter, son of Robert having the lease in 1510. Walter Scott in Synton was tenant in 1541, paying £18 yearly. James, 4th son of John, younger of Synton had a lease on it in the late 16th century. Robert of Satchells, son of James, had a charter for the lands in 1609. The lands may have been known as the west steading of 'Gildhouse' or 'Gilkhouse' in the 15th century (it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Dod Burn (dod-burn) n. stream flowing into the Allan Water from the south, joining near Dodburn farm. It was mentioned as early as the 1160s, when 'Brunemore super Dod' was part of the description of the boundaries of Ringwood when granted to Melrose Abbey. The area is rich in prehistoric remains and part of the stream may have formed a section of the boundary line of the Catrail. A flint arrow-head was found up the burn in the 1970s. In a clearing near the head of the stream there is the remains of a settlement, including foundations of longhouses, enclosures and signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation.

Dodburn (död-burn) n. name used for the water supply system at Dodburn Filters, generating part of Hawick's drinking water since 1882.

Dodburn (död-burn) n. humorous name for local tap water, so-called because of the supply coming from Dod Burn – 'Can A hev a whusky an Dodburn?'.

Dodburn (död-burn) n. farm near where the Dod Burn joins the Allan Water. 'Sym Elliot of Dodburne' is recorded in 1569. 'Rynion Elliott of Dodborne' is recorded in 1589 and 'Sym Elliot in Dodburn' in 1573. It was once split into the lands of Over and Nether Dodburn. In 1621 these were granted by Robert Elliot of Redheugh to Gavin Elliot of Brugh. In 1631 Gavin's widow sold the lands to William Elliott, younger of Stobs. However, Gilbert of Stobs had purchased 5 merks of land there in 1622 (without prejudice to Gavin of Brugh's infeftment) from Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with the rest of the lands of Wintonning. 'Over and Nether Dodburners' were listed among the lands held by Elliott of Stobs in 1657 and was part of the Lordship of Wintonning in the late 17th century. It was listed as 'Dodburne in Kirktoun Parich' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (although probably in Cavers Parish at that time); Robert Moscrop, James Goodfellow and John Pott were there. Robert Nixon was there in 1705. John Leyden was there in 1709, Robert Hall in 1771, Thomas Turnbull in 1789 and William Reid was farmer there in 1797. Upper and Nether Dodburn were valued at £132 14s 7d in 1788, as part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs. They had the same value in the Land Tax Rolls of 1813.

A perforated stone disc from there is in the Museum (note that this is about a mile north of the farm called Dod; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Dodburne' and it is Dodburne Ovir et Nethir in 1670).

Dodburn Filters (död-burn-fil-urz) n. Hawick water supply system on the Dod Burn, with facilities originally gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, and opened in 1882. This consisted of a reservoir that was constructed to hold the water. Two hill burns (Priesthaugh and Skelfhill) supply the water, which is gravel-filtered before being fed to the town. At the opening ceremony the Town was decorated with banners, flags and floral displays. A huge procession met the Duke of Buccleuch, including the Cornet with the Flag, Freemasons with their aprons and sashes and many other representatives of organisations within Hawick. This was followed by dinner for about 500 people in the Exchange Buildings, followed by a ball. The Duke of Buccleuch was presented with an engraved jug. The house at the filters is called Dodburn Filter Cottage, and is on the east side of the road roughly opposite a complex of ancient earthworks. About 30 m north-east of the filters themselves are the remains of a round-house, 6 m in diameter, with associated signs of cultivation.

Dodburn Hill (död-burn-hil) n. small hill to the east of Dodburn. It reaches a height of 292 m (963 ft). There are a group of archaeological remains on its summit, similar to those to the east on White Knowe, but more complex. It consists of a roughly oval enclosure, composed of double ramparts and ditches (now ill-defined). There is also a hut circle inside the eastern side of the earthwork, about 11 m in diameter, contained within a roughly triangular enclosure. There used to be a military firing range (for Stobs Camp) on its eastern side.

Dodd (död) n. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Janet (b.1671); Robert (b.1675); Bessie (b.1677); Thomas (b.1682); and Isobel (b.1687). Witnesses in 1671 were Robert Jolly and William Swan. Andrew (1682/3-1717) precentor of Jedburgh Kirk and assistant schoolmaster at Jedburgh Grammar School, who is buried in Bedrule (although the reason for this is not known). His gravestone contains 28 lines of Latin, including 'A Theology candidate, and not unskilled in the art of Medicine. He excelled in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, as well as in the vernacular. He was a strenuous upholder of the Reformed religion and the discipline of the suffering church oh his native land’. John ‘Jack’ (19th C.) maternal grandfather of J.E.D. Murray. He fought at the Battle of Waterloo. For many years in the early 1800s was the chief drummer in the Drums and Fifes, 1848 being his last Common Riding. His drum and stick were later possessed by Andrew Ballantyne. John Thomas (19th/20th C.) farmer at Riccarton. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. William (18th/19th C.) flesher in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William of Greenholm (b.1792/3) mason in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was living at about 1 Douglas Square. In 1852 he was listed as ‘Dodds’ among Newcastleton masons. By 1861 he was ‘Land Proprietor’ at the same address. His wife Elizabeth was from England, and may be the hat-maker listed in Newcastleton in 1852. Their children included Elizabeth, John, Jane and Margaret. His name is ‘Dodds’ in a directory of 1852 (formerly also spelled ‘Dod’).

doddie (do-dee) n., arch. a hornless bull, cow or sometimes sheep – ‘... doddies an stirks an queys an stots an gimmers an hoggies an grumphies an guisies’ [ECS].

Dodds (dödz) n. Adam ‘Ade’ (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when Robert Scott of Thirlestane was charged to enter him at the Tolbooth in Edinburgh. He was listed as ‘Ade Doddis, callit Pais Polk in Ramseclewis’. He probably lived at Ramsycleuch in the Ettrick valley, but it is unclear what his nickname meant. Andrew (17th C.) blacksmith at Minto according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (d.c.1682) tenant in Bedrule whose will is recorded in 1682. He could be the same man as the Andrew recorded in 1694, or perhaps his father. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be related to John who is listed in the same Parish. He is probably the Andrew whose children baptised in Bedrule Parish included: Walter (b.1691); John (b.1695); and Margaret (b.1698). He is surely related to John and Thomas, who are recorded in Bedrule at about the same time. Andrew (17th C.) blacksmith at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. It seems likely that he was related to the blacksmith in Minto. Andrew (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Isobel Turnbull, and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Janet (b.1671); Robert (b.1675); Bessie (b.1677); Thomas (b.1682); Isobel (b.1687); and Janet (again, b.1689). He is probably the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Glack in Hawick in 1680. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Denholm. His children included: Andrew (b.1728); Margaret (b.1730); William (b.1732); and William (again, b.1735). Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hassendean. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Rev. Andrew (1809–76) from Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and Margaret Thomson. He was ordained as minister of Avonbridge Burgher Kirk in 1846. He owned the farm of Hillhead. He married Christian Anderson. Anthony (1818–87) schoolmaster of the Grammar School and then Buccleuch School in the late 19th century, and probably one of the most highly respected townsmen of his day. The youngest son of a shepherd, Robert, and Isabella Hume, he was born in Linton and educated at Eckford. He went to Edinburgh University, became a private tutor and then was appointed Mathematics teacher and assistant to James Murray in Hawick in 1840. He originally lived in the schoolhouse with the Murrays and taught the junior boys. He took over as Headmaster of the Grammar School in 1853, and retired in 1880. James A.H. Murray joined him as an assistant teacher in 1854 when only 17. He referred to himself as ‘Rector’, and lived in the house adjoining the school. A presentation tea service, clock, etc. were given to him by former pupils in 1878, at a dinner arranged in his honour. He was also Parish Session Clerk from about 1851 until his death, and served as Hawick’s first Registrar 1854–87, helping to locally implement the 1854 Registration Act. He married Helen Scott of Hawick in 1850 and later Elizabeth Armstrong (daughter of the Sandbed baker). His children were Isabella, Robert, John and Annetta, and they lived at 15 Allars Crescent, and in later years at 11 Slitrig Crescent. His 2 sons moved to America, while Isabella became an infant teacher in Hawick. Although he retired as Rector, he remained as Registrar for many more years, carefully recording locally marriages, births and deaths. He is buried in the Wellowgate Cemetery and a portrait of him exists. Elizabeth (19th C.) milliner in Newcastleton, recorded in 1852. She may be the wife of mason William, listed on Douglas Square in the 1851 census. George W. (19th/20th C.)
helped James H. Haining with transcriptions of the monumental inscriptions in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. Probably the same George was involved with the Borders Music Festival. James (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John and William, who were also listed there. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1751. He married Margaret Dryden in 1749 and their son James was baptised in 1751, with witnesses James Scott and Thomas Cathrae. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded at Whitcheasters in 1758. He married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Glendinning in 1756 and their children included: Walter (b.1758); twins John and Robert (b.1766); and Helen (b.1771). The witnesses in 1758 were Andrew Turnbull and James Glendinning (probably a relative). Thomas Miller and Alexander Bunyon witnessed the baptism in 1766. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Carlisle who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. John (15th C.) mentioned in the 1479 resignation of the lands of Broadlee in the Barony of Hawick. It was signed at Broadlee, and so he was probably a local man. His name is recorded as ‘Johannem Doddis’. John (17th C.) tenant of John Riddell of Museee. In 1665 he made an agreement with the tenants of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) over boundaries between them. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name is written ‘Doods’. He could be the John whose children baptised in Bedrule Parish included: Jean (b.1693); Thomas (b.1694); Andrew (b.1697); and Isobel (b.1697). He is probably related to other Dodds‘ in Bedrule. John (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to James and William, who were also listed there. He may be the same as the John recorded in 1665. He could be the John who witnessed baptisms in the Hassendeane part of Robertson Parish in 1687 and 1688. He could be the John who (along with Patrick) witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull and Margaret Dodds (surely a relative) in 1688. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and merchant in Newcastle. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–38. John (b.c.1790) from England, he was recorded as an Army Pensioner on Teviot Crescent in 1841. His wife was Isabel, and they had a daughter Helen. By 1851 his wife was keeping a lodging house on O’Connell Street, and he was presumably deceased. Patrick (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendeane Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed baptisms in Robertson Parish for Thomas Scott in Hassendeane in 1683, for William Scott in 1686 and for George Davidson and Walter Young in 1687. Additionally in 1686 and 1688 he witnessed baptisms for John Turnbull and Margaret Dodds (who may have been his sister or other close relative). Thomas (15th C.) resident of the Bedrule area mentioned in 1494/5. George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 40 silver shillings from him, as well as a stone of butter and other goods and ‘flammeis sue uxoris’ (which may mean that he burned his wife). Thomas (17th C.) tenant ‘in Newtoune’ (probably in Bedrule Parish). The will of his wife, Margaret Henderson, was recorded in 1685. He may be Thomas whose children baptised in Bedrule Parish included: Andrew (b.1694); Walter (b.1696); and Thomas (b.1699). He was surely related to Andrew and John, who lived in Bedrule at the same time. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. he married Helen Veitch and their children included: Agnes (b.1717); and Andrew (b.1720). He witnessed a baptism in 1724 for John Lamb in Clarilaw and another in 1736 for Archibald Scott in Burnhead. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Ashkirk Parish, in 1793 he married Jane Scott of Cavers Parish. Their son Peter was born in Selkirk in 1794. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Kirkton Parish, in 1792 he married Margaret Anderson from Cavers Parish. William (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to James and John, who were also listed there (also written ‘Dods’).

Dodds’ Schuil (dödz-skil) n. popular name for the Grammar School in the mid-19th century or Buccleuch School in the later 19th century. This was when Anthony Dodds was schoolmaster, and the name still in use slightly later – ‘Sic thoughts bring back my boyhood’s days: The schule in Orrock Place, Auld Dodds, his Buirdly form I mind, And Webster’s smiling face’ [WLu].

Dodds’s whulps (dö-d-zeez-whulps) n., arch nickname for the pupils at the Grammar School, used insultingly by the pupils from the Academy in the Subscription Rooms (‘Madie’s Monkeys’) in the mid-19th century.

Dod Fell (död-fel) n. hill to the east of the ‘Note o the Gate’ road, just south of Singdean. It reaches a height of 433 m. This is probably the ‘Dod’ listed among the highest hills in Castleton Parish in 1839 – ‘... No tae speak o’ Meg’s Shank for gettin yer gruntles intae ...Muckle Dod Fell’ [LSF] (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Dod Filter Cottage (død-fil’-ur-ko’-eej) n. cottage at the Dodburn Filter Works, just north of Dod farm, also referred to as ‘Dodburn Filter Cottage’.

Dodgson (doj-sin) n. Thomas (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1728 for Adam Armstrong in Burnhead. His surname is written ‘Dodsand’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Mary Wilson and their son Thomas was baptised in 1795.

Dodheid (død-heed) n. Dodhead, possibly a farm near the head of the Dodburn. This has been claimed by some as the location for the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer o’ the Fair Dodheid’. However, there is no evidence there was ever a farm of that name in this location, and if there is any historical truth to the ballad, it is much more likely to have been set at the place of that name in the Ettrick valley.

Dodheid (død-heed) n. Dodhead, farm above the Ettrick valley, which seems the most probable location for the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer o’ the Fair Dodheid’. It is recorded in 1455 as one of the ‘four stedes of Redefurd’. It (or perhaps a neighbouring farm) was also known as ‘Dodbank’ and belonged to a branch of the Scotts, being tenanted by them in the late 17th centuries, and then in 1609 Robert Scott of Satchells had a crown charter for the lands. By 1628 it belonged to Scott of Harden. John Shiel was recorded at ‘dodheadsheils’ in 1728. James Mercer of Scotsbank was owner in the 1802 Land Tax Rolls. There is no evidence there was ever a tenant there called Telfer, although there was a Simpson farming there in 1510 (it is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Dod Hill (død-hill) n. hill on the north side of the Hermitage valley, north-west of Gorrenberry farmhouse. It reaches a height of 432 m.

Dodimead (do-dee-meed) n. Henry (b.1812/3) from England, he was a carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was at 10 Allars Crescent. His wife was Agnes. He is probably the Henry, married to Agnes Fox, whose daughter Agnes was born in Bristol in 1841.

Dodlands Cottage (død-lindz-ko’-eej) n. cottage on the road to Bonchester, between Beechhurst and Woodburn. It was birthplace of John Daykins, who was awarded the Victoria Cross. It is probably the place referred to in the 19th century as ‘the Dodlins’.

the Dodlins (thu-dod-liz) n. former name for an area off the Bonchester road, near where Beechhurst was built and where Dodlands Cottage is now.

Dodrig (død-rig) n. former home of a branch of the Elliots, somewhere on the Dod Burn. It probably lay not as far south as the hill called Dod Rig, which is above the Priesthaugh Burn, to the west of the headwaters of the Dod Burn. Robert Elliot held the lands in 1583, and his father Archibald before him, going back to about 1547. In 1574 Robert Elliot of Redheugh served as surety for the residents there. In 1583 there was a complaint that the men of Robert Elliot of Redheugh came to the farm repeatedly and ‘thair cruellie strak and dang his servandis and put thame fra occupying and labouring thairof, invading thame for thair slauchter’. The lands of ‘Dodrig or Dod’ were owned by Gideon Pott in 1788, when valued at £130. The pele house from that time may be the one whose remains are on the south-eastern side of Gray Coat, beside the grassy track leading south from Dod farm (marked ‘Doddrigg’ on Blaue’s 1654 map, but appears to be located in the upper valley of the Langside Burn).

Dod Rig (død-rig) n. ridge lying between the Priesthaugh and Dod Burns, to the east of Priesthaugh-hill steadings. It reaches a height of 410 m, with a second peak to the south reaching 416 m.

Dod Witter Scheme (død-wi’-ur-skeem) n. name sometimes used for the public water supply from the Dod Burn, opened in 1882 (see also Dodburn Filters).

Doecleuch (dö-klooch) n. former steadings between Old Northhouse and Priesthaugh, east of Doecleuch Hill. It is described in 1660 as a ‘pendicle’ of Stobcote. In 1694 David Minto was there, as well as shepherd Andrew Irvine and also Margaret Scott ‘in Brugh’. It was probably farmed by Robert Scott, ‘Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill’ in the late 17th century. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 32 acres and was bounded by Brugh, Skelfhill, Northhouse and Stobcote. In 1788 (and still recorded in 1811) the lands were listed among those in Cavers Parish belonging to Scott of Buccleuch, but which had been acquired since 1643 and were then valued at £140. The hill to the east contains a stone circle and several settlements, and the Cattrail passes close by. One of these earthworks was sometimes referred to as ‘Doecleuch Castle’, although it is not clear which one. The small stream there is the ‘Doe Cleuch’ and forms part of the probable boundary line of the Cattrail (also written ‘Doecleuch’, ‘Dogeleg’, ‘Docksleg’, ‘Dockcleuch’, etc.; it appears to be ‘Dobcleuch’ in 1599, is ‘Dolcleuch’ in 1694 and ‘Dockcleugh’ in 1811; it is marked ‘Dockcleugh’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Dockcleugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name may be the obvious ‘doe’ for female deer, but that seems to be rarely used in placenames).

Doecleuch Hill (dō-kloɔ̃-hил) n. hill to the west of the road between Priesthaugh and Old Northhouse, rising to 316 m. The Cattrail crosses its northern slopes, while to the south-east aerial photography shows a possible settlement.

Doecleuchshiel (dō-kloɔ̃-shiel) n. former farmstead just to the south of Old Northhouse (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Dockcleughshiel’).

Doesgate (dōz-gā’) n. former name of a geographic feature on Essenside farm, near Leap Hill.

Dogbank Hill (dōg-baʊnɡ-hил) n. hill just to the west of the Note o the Gate, being the southern shoulder of Dog Knowe.

the dog dish (θu-dōɡ-diʃ) n. water dish for dogs to drink out of, fixed to the pavement outside 4 Tower Knowe. It was there through much of the 20th century.

dog-hip (dōɡ-hip) n. rose-hip, the fruit of the dog rose, Rosa canina.

the Dog Hoose (θu-dōɡ-hoos) n. popular name for a former house on the left of the present entrance to Rosalee. It was possibly named for the place where dogs of the Langlands estate were once kept. The house itself was used as a women’s school and for several other purposes, and existed well into the 20th century.

the Dog Knowe (θu-dōɡ-noʊ) n. hill just to the west of the Note o the Gate, reaching a height of 459 m.

Dog Knowe (dōɡ-noʊ) n. hill of 365 m to the west of Twislehope farm, in the upper reaches of the Hermitage valley (it is marked ‘Dog Know’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

dog-luggit (dōɡ-lu-ɡi’, -ɡi’) adj. dog-eared – ‘...dog-luggit ...tide-merked Wi mony a drowe and drookin’’ [DH].

Dog Pintle (dōɡ-piŋ⁴-ul) n. nickname for Archibald Elliot.

Dogscleugh see Doecleuch

Doegrabbit it (dōɡz-raw-bi’-ee’n) exclam., arch. indeed, really – ‘Doegrabbit it, what’s keepit ye, ye lazy molehead?’ [WNK].

doit (dɔi̯, dɔit) n., arch. a small Dutch copper coin, worth about half a farthing or one penny Scots, used in the 18th century to describe small, foreign or worthless coins in general – ‘The session desire the bailies to take the doyts put up in a bag and sell them to the best advantage, and return the price thereof to the poor box again’ [PR1711], ‘Besides also much money now in his hands that he has made up of Doys and other bad money’ [PR], ‘4s 0d Recd. for Doits’ [Hob1760] (also written ‘doyt’; cf. dite).

doitard (dɔi-tur̩) n., poet. a dotard – ‘What ails the orpit doyterd stycke’, The kerlyn loudly said [JTe], doitit (dɔi’-ee’, dɔi-tee’) adj., arch. stupid, bewildered, muddled – ‘...Her line o’ males shall pass away Wi’ the halbert, brand and spear, Ane doitit race the distaff ply, an’ petticoats shall wear’ [T].

Doles (dōlz) n. James (15th C.) proposed as Archdeacon of Glasgow in 1478, on the death of Patrick Hume. Nicholas Forman also appears to have been proposed, but neither were confirmed.

Dolfinus (dōl-fɪn-is) n. parson of Cavers recorded in about the 1170s. Reginald of Durham mentions him in a couple of his stories about the life of St. Cuthbert. He was responsible for the chapel devoted to St. Cuthbert, which has been identified with a site at Cogsmill, and said to be associated with several miracles. He probably told these stories to Reginald, including how travellers were protected from a storm in the roofless chapel, how Rosfritha and Seigiva (from Hawick) had a candle appear when their own candles had gone out, and the tale of a poor widow, unable to hire a shepherd, but her flock was protected from the wolves near the chapel. His mother (or perhaps his clerk’s mother) had a disease that made her swollen for 17 years, but apparently cured by appealing to St. Cuthbert, whereupon a vision of him appeared, piercing her belly with the point of his staff and releasing the poison; she was a domestic servant in the household of Osbert, Abbot of Jedburgh (also written ‘Dolfinius’).

dolly dumper (do-lee-dun-pur) n. a machine used in the knitwear industry to strengthen Dolly Rig and soften a garment through pounding between wooden blocks in a vat of soapy water (cf. waulk mill for tweeds).

Dolly Rig (do-lee-rig) n. ridge to the north-west of Hoscote on the north side of the Borthwick valley. This must be the land of ‘Dualyrrig’ stated to be to the west of Milbsington in a charter of 1451. There is a linear earthwork on the lower slopes, running from near Girnwood to the woods above Hoscote. It has been suggested that this is part of the Catrail, but it seems more likely to be a more recent agricultural boundary.

Dolphinsonsteed (dol-fin-sin-steed) n. former lands in the northern part of Liddesdale, listed under the ‘Ermyldoune’ section in a rental roll of c.1376. The precise location is uncertain. It is recorded as ‘Dolfynesostede’, with a value of 10 shillings.

Dolphinston (dol-fin-stin) n. farm and moor south-east of Mossburnford in Jedburgh Parish. In early times it was associated with the Ainslie and Ker families (the origin is probably the Old Norse name ‘Dolgifnr’ or ‘Dolphin’, which was common in Northern England; the name first appears as ‘Dolfineston’ in 1296; it is ‘Dolphinston’ in 1454, ‘Dolphinstone’ in 1502 and ‘Dolphinsteone’ and ‘Dolphingstoune’ in 1525; it is on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Dolphincaun’, while Stobie’s 1770 map also marks the mill by the Jed).

domiciles (do-mi-seels) n., pl., arch. household effects – ‘Item, in vtencilis and domicilis by the airmiship, estimat to the somme of ane hundreth pundis’ [SB1574].

the Dominican Convent (thu-do-mi-nee-kin-kon-vin) n. original name for the Convent established by the Dominican nuns, firstly at 14 Buccleuch Street and then at Myreslawgreen.

dominie (do-mi-nee) n., arch. schoolmaster – ‘lei often got the tawse frae his dominie’, ‘After the witches had accomplished their diabolical purposes with the poor dominie, they joined the party of fairies on the highest pinnacle of the Abbey . . .’ [EM1820], ‘The grassy green where Leyden passed Still welcomes with a smile, For here the Dominie of yore Would sit and rest awhile’ [WFC], ‘. . . As the dominie glowered oot owre his specs – I wot they’d be better weans!’ [WL].

Domingo (do-ning-go) n. Robert son of Robert. He was an apprentice journalist with the Hawick Advertiser, later becoming editor and manager. He also became local correspondent for the Scotsman and The Evening Dispatch, making him one of the best known reporters in the area. He retired in 1935 after 42 years in journalism. He married Mary Knox of Martin’s House and their only child was Robert Knox.

Don (don) n. Sir Alexander (1751–1815) eldest son of Sir Alexander, he was the 7th Baronet. He had a strathspey named after him, which is said to have been a forerunner of ‘Auld Lang Syne’. He played a prominent part in the formation of the Border Union Agricultural Society and was one of the first Vice-Presidents. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1780 and both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1786. He may have planned the house and estate at Newton. He was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (although already deceased), along with his son Alexander. He married Henrietta (or Harriet) Cunningham, sister of a patron of Burns and eventual heiress of the 13th Earl of Glencarn. He subscribed to 4 copies of Burns ‘Edinburgh Edition’ in 1787, with his wife subscribing for another 4. Their children were: Alexander, who succeeded; Mary; and Elizabeth. Both daughters drowned in the Eden in 1795. Sir Alexander of Newton-Don (b.1779–1826) son of Sir Alexander and Henrietta Cunningham. He was the 6th Baronet. His 2 sisters both drowned while trying to save a companion in crossing the swollen River Eden. He was in Paris when Napoleon issued an edict against foreigners leaving France, and so was stuck there until 1810. He was present at the meeting led by his father in 1812 at which the ‘Border Society’ (to become the ‘Bordern Union Agricultural Society’). He succeeded to the estates when his father died in 1815 and had a new house built at Newton Don in 1817–19. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was defeated by Gilbert Elliot (later Earl of Minto) in the Roxburghshire election of 1812, the margin being 6 votes (although some accounts differ). However, he was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1814–26. He was said to be ‘the model of a cavalier in all courteous and elegant accomplishments’, but had expensive habits (particularly horse-racing), and had to sell off his estate at Ochiltree. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He married Lucretia, daughter of G. Montgomerie from Norfolk and secondly married Grace, eldest daughter of John Stein, M.P. His children were: Sir William Henry; and Alexina Harriet, who married Frederick Accolm Milbank. Peter (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. Sir William Henry (1825–62) son of Sir Alexander, he was 7th Baronet. His father died in his 1st year, and parts of the estate and furnishings of Newton Don were sold off to pay debts. When he reached age 21 he sold off the remains of the family estate to Charles Balfour. He joined the 5th Dragoon Guards and was aide-de-camp to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, was soon promoted, but then left the army in great debt. He took to acting, appearing on Broadway and living in America for a few years, where he married. He then toured Britain in the mid-1850s. He lived at Borthwickbrae for a while in this period. He used to organise cricket teams to play against the men of Hawick in the Haugh, before there were formal competitions. He was said to have ‘some pretensions to theatrical talent’, which he took on a tour of the goldfields of Australia, where a successful racehorse was named after him. He died in Hobart, Tasmania, ending the family line. An 1856 portrait of him exists.

Donald (do-nuld) n. name of 3 Kings of Scotland. Donald I (c.812–863) and Donald II (d.900) ruled over a kingdom which did not extend as far south as Hawick. Donald III (c.1033–99) King of Scotland 1093–4 and 1094–7, also known as Donald Bane. He was son of Duncan I and brother of Malcolm III. After Malcolm Malcolm died he took the crown, expelling the English from the court. He was deposed by his nephew Duncan II in 1094, but resumed power after Duncan’s death, with another nephew Edmund being his heir and ruling the southern part of the kingdom. It is not known how he died, although there are several conflicting stories. He appears to have had no sons, but had at least one daughter, Bethoc. It is possible she was the person of that name who once owned the lands of Bedrule. He was succeeded as King by Edgar, eldest son of his brother Malcolm.

Donald (do-nuld) n. Alexander (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He married Betty Johnston and their children included Thomas (b.1742). The witnesses were merchant Francis Gledstains and tailor Thomas Wilkie. He may be the same Alexander who later married Agnes Hardie. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Hardie and their children included: Isobel (1744–1822), who firstly William Aitkin and had a son William, and secondly married Robert Hotson from Langholm, and had 10 children; Elizabeth (1746–1818), who married shoemaker William Purdom; Marjory, who married William Roger; Agnes (b.1757), who married John Laing and had 9 children; and Jane (b.1760). In 1764 he witnessed the baptism of his grandson William Aitkin. Andrew (17th C.) resident at ‘mihurmae’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish; this may have been the farm of Moormaw. He may be the tailor Andrew who witnessed a baptism in Robertson (the Hassendean part) in 1681 and another for James Dryden in 1684. Perhaps the same Andrew married Jean Coltart and had children (baptised in Robertson) including Marion (b.1680), Jean (b.1682) and Margaret (b.1684). The witnesses in 1682 were John Armstrong and James Johnstone. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1694 he was recorded as owing his Burgess fee, suggesting he had just become a Burgess. He could be the Andrew whose son Andrew was born in HAWICK in 1703. Rev. George Henry (19th/20th C.) became minister at Southdean in 1902 and was translated to First Charge, Haddington in 1906. He received a doctorate from Edinburgh University on 1948. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Minto in 1502. He was indicted and failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with his surety William Turnbull of Minto being fined. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Newcastleton. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Patrick (15th/16th C.) listed last on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1517. He must have been a prominent man in Roxburghshire, like the others. His name is recorded as ‘Patricium Donal’. Rev. Thomas W. minister of Lilliesleaf Kirk, linked with Bowden and Ashkirk, 1977–87. William ‘Nimble’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a trial of 1612 for a claimed murder of 1610 (stated by the Hawick officials to have been a suicide). He may have been a Burgh Officer. William (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1689 for William Allan. He is probably the William, married to Malie Johnstone, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included Thomas (b.1690) and William (b.1692). William (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Jean Ronaldson in 1704, with his surname recorded as ‘Donaldson’ in Hawick Parish (but ‘Donald’ in Wilton Parish). Their children included: Andrew (b.1707); James (b.1709); William (b.1713); and George (b.1715).
Donaldson

He could be the same man as the Burgh Officer ‘Donaldson’ recorded in the early 1700s (also formerly written ‘Donnald’).

Donaldson (do-nul-sin) n. Rev. A. (20th C.) minister of St. John’s Church in the 1940s. Charles Edward McArthur (d.1964) Conservative M.P. for Roxburghshire & Selkirkshire 1951–55 and for Roxburgh, Selkirk & Peebles 1955–64. He originally defeated A.J.F. MacDonald by only 829 votes. James (16th/17th C.) tenant in Cavers. He was recorded in 1628 among Hawick men who were accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands at Branxholme or Trinitylands. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included: George (b.1707); Hector (b.1709). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1720 and 1723 and Mossbrae in 1725 and 1728. His children included: Janet (b.1720); and Helen (b.1723). Grisel (b.1725); Jidn ames (b.1728). John (16th C.) listed as ‘Donaldson’ in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). John (1741/2–1811) son of John, who was tenant farmer somewhere in Rulewater. Both were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. He was tenant at Swanshiel on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed as owner of 2 horses. He died at Highend. He is probably the Donaldson tenant of Wester Swanshiel whose wife was Peggy Duncan, said to have ‘shure a hairst’ (i.e. reaped during the harvest) at the age of 77. Margaret (17th C.) recorded as liferenter of ‘an Merk of land of Heap’ in the valuation for Wilton Parish in 1643. Her name appears there as just ‘M. Donaldson’, but it seems clear this was the Margaret listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. Then Robert Langlands of that Ilk paid tax on £89 for lands in Wilton ‘sometime pertaining’ to her. It is possible that she was his wife or mother. William (17th/18th C.) Burgh Officer of some sort. In 1726 the Council allowed him a pair of shoes, at the same time that the officers and drummer got ribbons for the Common Riding. He is probably the William ‘Donald’ given money in 1727 to fetch the cup for the Races. He is also recorded as an ‘officer’ when he witnessed a sasine in 1728. He could be the William who married Jean Rennaldson in Hawick in 1704 and had several children in Hawick, with his surname given as ‘Donald’. William (19th C.) married Agnes Hobkirk in Castleton Parish in 1863 (also formerly ‘Donaldson’ and ‘Donnaldson’).

Doncaster Street (dong-kas-tur-stree) n. street in Newcastle, off the east side of North Hermitage Street, opposite Langholm Street.

Doniere Portussis (do-nee-er-pur-tu-sis) n. term used in Hawick’s first existing sasine with a detailed description (from 1558). It is the designation used for the area to the east of the ‘tenement’ of land sold by Alexander Scott to James Scott, which from its description, with the Common Vennel to the west, sounds similar to what was later called ‘Wylie’s Dub’ or ‘Bridgehaugh’ (the identification of this phrase is very unclear, but perhaps it relates to the minor port near the foot of the Howegate).

donnart see donnert
donner (do-nur) v., arch. to daze, stun, stupefy.
donnt (do-nur) adj., pp. stupid, stupefied – ‘is hei deif or juist donnart?’, ‘Gudeness, here’s the Jumpin Jecks tae, Ah think Ah’im gettin donnert’ [JEDM], ‘...o’ muckle snow-drifts, twal fit deep, o’ heidstrang dugs, and donnert sheep’ [TD], ‘So this man gets nearer. dooth see doot doocot (doo-ki’, doo-ku’) n., arch. a dovecote, pigeon loft. Local examples can still be seen at Bucklands and Knowesouth, with many others throughout the Borders. In 1795 it is written that Bedrule Parish had 1, with 3 others nearby. Placenames suggest they also once existed at Doocote Street (in Hawick), Langlands (near Kilmeny), Spittal-on-Rule, Stobs and Teviothead – ‘But the dow aye seeks the doocot And it’s here your hert belongs’ [WL], ‘Praying for a miraculous pullulation in doo-cots, Chewing the rangy sinews of cast hens . . .’ [DH] (also spelled ‘doocat’ and ‘doo-cot’).
the Doocot Haugh (thu-doo-ki’-hawch) n. former name for a piece of land near the water at Spittal-on-Rule. There was once a strongly-built dovecote there, with attached privileges (written ‘Doucket Haugh’ in Tancred’s book).
Dooglas (doog-lis) n. variant of the name Douglas – ‘. . .when the Dooglas an the Scott wrat off a wheen auld scores an saw day-aboot wu the auld enemy’ [ECS], ‘. . .in oor Charter o’ 1537 Doogless o’ Drumlanrig gei’d Tam Broon threi particates o’ land’ [BW1979].
dook (dook) v. to duck, dip, bathe, swim, get wet – ‘The sun began to dook i’ the main, The merle drappit singing . . .’ [JTe], ‘. . .we would spend a happy afternoon ‘dooking’ there, making valiant attempts to learn to swim . . .’ [BM1905], ‘. . .Tae see Delaney in the Haugh, Or dook in Cobble Pool’ [WL], ‘. . .Or hear the mavis lift her sang, Or dook in Teviot’s cool’ [WL], ‘. . .Dookin in the Spetch was braw Divin in off the Dunk wa’’ [IWL], n. a duck, dip, bathe – ‘let’s gaun dookin blind-fauld in a basin For apples, or ‘dooker’ meaning the buttocks, but perhaps also related to dook, a wooden peg fitted into a hole used to fix up shelves etc.).
dook-up (dook-up) v., arch. to push or hoist up, assistance in climbing a wall etc. (also ‘dooks-up’, cf. the shorter form dooks and the less common dock-up, which is the form elsewhere in Scotland).

Doorpool (dor-pool, -pil) n. farmstead and former boggy region on the Abbotrule estate, about a mile south of Abbotrule House, and shortly before coming to Chesters on the A6088. There were Turnbulls there in the late 17th and through much of the 18th century. James Turnbull is recorded as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Walter Scott as another householder. Andrew Oliver is recorded there in 1794 and George Elliot in 1797. It was listed (along with Midquarter) among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbot-rule in 1811, with a value of about £210. William Inglis was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £210. When the area was drained around the 1870s the skull and horns of an elk and several stag’s skulls were discovered. Some bronze implements were found near here in the 19th century and preserved in Jedburgh Museum. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond (it is ‘Douverpool’ in 1694; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).
Doorpool Hill (dor-pool-hil) n. hill just to the north of Chesters, reaching a height of 270m. On the south-east side are the remains of a hill-fort, circular and about 200 ft in diameter. It has been much denuded by cultivation, but is still visible as a circular depression, with traces of 3 ramparts.
A stone cist was turned up by the plough in 1952, shortly before the doors ‘Up the doors’, ‘down the doors’, ‘along the doors’, etc. – ‘There on the road,

Safe Oot, Safe In and Safeway’ [IWL], ‘Here in Hawick oor hame, oo’ve lots ti shout aboot, Oo’re the Queen o aa the Border, of that there is nae doot’ [IWL], v. to doubt – ‘If it a’ be true that I’ve heard ye say, The country, I’m dooting’s, in a very bad way’ [JCG], ‘This gruesome sight gars me declare, I doot gif I’m an Oliver’ [WKN], ‘It was kindeh wat, nae doot . . .’ [RM], ‘He preened an’ straik’d his ae black suit, An’ thinkin’ hard, begun to doot’ [WFC], to be inclined, incline, believe something – ‘A doot it’ll be rain this eftrenin’ (note the two meanings are essentially opposites! also written ‘doobt’).

doothi (dooth-fi, doo’-fi) adj. doubtful – ‘His kindly heart was a’ his wealth, Thegither wi’ a doobtfu’ health’ [WP] (also spelled ‘doobthfu’ etc.).

doothfi (dooth-fi) adj., arch. gloomy – ‘But ilk ane’s rinning raving, doothfu’ – Guid weather’s dead’ [JoHa] (cf. dooth).

doric (doo-reek) adj., poet. broad and rural (applied to Scots dialects from outside the central cities, particularly used for the dialect of the north-east, but also other parts of Scotland; origin probably in analogy with Edinburgh being ‘the Athens of the North’).

Dorothy Sike (do-ri-thee-ik) n. stream in Castleton Parish, to the west of the B6357, between Singdean and Saughtree. It is joined by Alison Sike and then runs into Cliffhope Burn, which becomes part of the the Dawson Burn. (it is marked ‘Dorroty Grain’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is unclear who Alison and Dorothy were).

dort (dort, dor’) n., poet. the pet, the sulks – ‘Nae wonder that I’m in the dort, And wae to see them’ [RF].
dose (dooz) n. a dose – ‘A’ve got an awfu dose o the cauld’, ‘I dinna wear a copper nose, Wi’ guzzling them’ [RF].

Dougal (doo-gul) n. one of the guards (the other well-known one being Hope) on the Royal Mail coach in the early part of the 19th century, hav- ing a lively of scarlet and gold, and armed with blunderbuss and pistols.
dough-banni (doo-baw-ni) n., arch. a bannock made with prepared dough (also ‘banna’).
dough-boy (doo-boi) n. a dough-ball, dumpling, particularly when cooked with mince (the commonly used term for this varies regionally throughout Britain).
dought (dowcht) v., poet. was doubtful, dreaded, feared – ‘But Dickie’s heart it grew sae great, Fala, &c. That ne’er a bit o’ he dought to eat . . .’ [CPM].

Douglas (du-, doo-glis) n. Adam (15th C.) witness in 1492/3 for the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. His name is listed right after Walter, Vicar of Hassendean and many of the other witnesses were also local. Perhaps the same Adam was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 15 of his ewes from Bedrule. Adam (15th/16th C.) brother of William of Cavers. In 1502 he was called on to enter into the Justice-aire Thomas Rufy, who was partly responsible for the slaugh- ter of John and James Jackson. Agnes (17th C.) sister of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire. She was probably daughter of Sir William of Cavers and sister of Sir Archibald. In 1663 she paid tax on £180 of land in Cavers Parish. Agnes (1783–1858) often referred to as ‘Miss Douglas’, she wrote ‘Auld Brig o’ Slittrick’s Last Address to the Magistrates, Town-Council and Inhabitants of Hawick’, which was the silver medal winning prize poem in the Auld Brig poetry competition of 1851. Her poem ‘Address to the Teviot’ was also published in ‘Living Bards of the Border’ in 1859. She was eldest daughter of Robert, surgeon at Damside, and Margaret Aitchison. She was sister of Dr. John and Robert (also a surgeon in Hawick), as well as Mary. She was known for her paintings as well as her literary abilities. Her portrait of Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton is in the Museum. In 1832 she had relatively mild symptoms of cholera while attending her sister Mary, who had a violent bout of the disease, but recovered. She is probably the ‘Miss Douglas’ who donated to the Archaeological Society the family seal of Langlands of that Ilk in 1856. Alexander (d.bef. 1841) farm worker in the Hawick area. He was a member of the Relief Kirk. He married Isabella Scott (b.1796/7, from Cavers Parish) and their children (born in Hawick and Cavers Parishes) included: William Douglas (b.1815); James (b.1817); Elizabeth (b.c.1819); Thomas (b.c.1821); Robert (b.c.1830); Henry (b.c.1832); and Agnes (b.c.1835). In 1841 and 1851 his widow and several children were living at ‘Wester Braxholme Loch’. Andrew (13th C.) son of Archibald and brother of William. He may have been known as ‘of Hermiston’. His son was William of Midlothian, who was grandfather of Sir William of Liddesdale, ‘the Flower of Chivalry’. Andrew of Timpendean (15th/16th C.) first Laird of Timpendean, which he inherited in 1479 from his father George of Bonjedward. He was probably 3rd son of George, 4th Laird of Bonjedward. He is recorded in 1492 when he had a charter of the lands of Hassendeanbank from Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock. He is probably the Andrew who was on the panel of 1492 for Walter Scott inheriting Braxholme and Buccleuch. He is also listed in a sasine of 1499/1500, along with Andrew McDougall of Makerstoun, George Ormiston and Archibald Heriot. He was probably the Andrew who was among a long list of men who had remission in 1504 for any involvement in the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey; he is listed right after George of Bonjedward and before John, Robert, William and Master Steven, some of whom may have been closely related to him. In a separate list Robert is recorded as his brother. He is also listed on the 1506 remission for the same crime (perhaps suggesting he was directly implicated in these events), with his brother Robert listed after him. In 1504 he appears to have been acting as an official for the sasine of Maxton Craig granted to William Turnbull. He may have died about 1527, when Archibald of Timpendean (his son) was infefted in these same lands. He may also have had a son called Steven. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as ‘andro douglas’. This was on a list of associates of James of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Braxholme. His name appears first on the list, perhaps suggesting some importance. Andrew of Timpendean (16th C.) son of Archibald. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He is probably the Andrew who acted as bailie in 1555 in a sasine for the Haliburtons of Muirhouse, preserved in the Melrose Chartulary; the associated instrument of sasine was in 1557. He was also recorded as bailie for a sasine of Colmslie in 1557. He married Katharine, daughter and co-heiress of William Gledstains of Lanton. He was succeeded by his son Andrew. Patrick or ‘Patie’ may also have been his son (mentioned as Andrew’s brother in 1584/5). Andrew ‘Dand’ of Timpendean (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew, he was the 4th Laird. He is mentioned in the Register of the Great Seal in 1574 and 1575 and in the Privy Council Register in 1576, 1584/5, 1591 and 1592. In 1584/5 he was one of the Border Lairds asked to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they had helped in ‘quieting of the countrie’; his brother ‘Patie’ is also listed. In 1600 he was on the ‘retour’ for the Kers of Cessford. He was recorded in 1610 when he was part of an inquest for lands in Rulewater. He may have been Laird in the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. He married Margaret, daughter of Gavin Turnbull of Ancrum Mill in 1562. He was succeeded by his son Stephen who married Jean, daughter of Andrew Haliburton of Muirhouselaw. Andrew (d.bef. 1607) occupier of Friarshaw, in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was probably son of William, and hence 2nd Laird. In 1592 he is recorded as joint occupier, along with his brother John, of ‘Freischaw’, when he and his son George had a regranting of the charter of the lands from Melrose Abbey. He was thus probably Laird between William and George. He may be the ‘Archibald’ of Friarshaw (if the transcription is in error) recorded being granted the lands in 1595/6. In 1606 there was a charter of Friarshaw to John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw; the lands had fallen back to the Commendator of Melrose because he and his son George had alienated the lands without the granter’s consent. In 1607 James in Friarshaw (presumably his son) was in a court case with Haliburton over an obligation of a debt to James Douglas of Cavers. Rev. Andrew...

(d.1607) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1595, he became minister of Southdean in 1595 and was translated to Hownam in 1605. Perhaps the same ‘Doctor’ Andrew was recorded as a schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1603 and 1612. Andrew of Friarshaw (d.bef. 1645) son of George, he was the said to be the 4th Laird. He was probably the ‘Andro Douglas, appearand of Frierschaw’ who was on the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1623. Either he or his son was listed as ‘A. Douglas of Friarshaw’ in the 1643 valuation for Lilliesleaf Parish, with his lands being valued at £285 13s 4d. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, while William may have been another son. Andrew (17th C.) listed at ‘Roule’ in 1632. He was one of the witnesses to the sasine for Appotside and Tythehouse, sold by Rev. William Weir for Lilliesleaf Parish, with his lands being valued at £285 13s 4d. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, while William may have been another son. Andrew (17th C.) listed at ‘Roule’ in 1632. He was one of the witnesses to the sasine for Appotside and Tythehouse, sold by Rev. William Weir to Edward Lorraine. Andrew (17th C.) listed as tenant in Southdean Law in the 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He could be the same Andrew listed in Southdean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (d.c.1685) tenant in East Middle. His will is recorded in 1685. He was surely related to William, who was recorded at the same farm in 1687. Andrew of Friarshaw (d.1698) son of Andrew, he was said to be 5th Laird. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. He married Jean Home, who came from the Polwarth family. He was succeeded by his son Henry, while other sons may have been William and George. Andrew (18th C.) son of Thomas, who was 5th son of Sir William of Cavers, with his mother being Jean Pringle of the Haining. He was described as a merchant of Suffolk Street in London. A letter (probably) of his from Suffolk Street in 1761 is in the archives of the Hotham family. He signed charters in 1190 and 1232, and other undated ones. He also witnessed a charter for the Earl of Monteith in 1213 (recorded when it was inspected in 1261), along with William. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Crawford of Crawfordjohn, and his sons probably included: Sir William, who succeeded; and Sir Andrew of Hermiston, ancestor of the Earls of Morton. Sir Archibald (d.1294–1333) son of Sir William Lord Douglas ‘le Hardi’ and brother of ‘the Good Sir James’. He is referred to as ‘of Liddesdale, Cavers, etc.’ as well as ‘of Douglas’. In the 1320s he received estates at Morebattle and Kirkandrews. He was tutor to Sir James’s son after his death in 1330. He is said to have engineered Edward Baliol’s defeat at Annan in 1332. He became Regent of Scotland after the capture of Sir Andrew Murray in early 1333. He then (probably illegally) occupied Liddesdale and other Border lands. He led a force that devastated northern England and then travelled to relieve the siege at Berwick. He was killed at the ensuing Battle of Halidon Hill. He was sometimes later referred to as 'Tyneman' (i.e. 'loser') like a later Archibald. He married Beatrix, daughter of Alexander Lindsay of Crawford (and after his death she secondly married Sir Robert Erskine of Erskine). Their children included: William, who became 1st Earl of Douglas; James who was killed by the English in 1333; possibly John, a knight recorded in the retinue of David II; Eleanor, who apparently married 5 times, to Alexander Bruce, Earl of Carrick, Sir James Sandilands of West Calder, Sir William Tours of Dalry, Sir Duncan Wallace of Sundrum and Sir Patrick Hepburn of Hailes; and Elizabeth (although this could be confusion with a later generation), who married Alexander Stewart of Garlieston. Sir Archibald 'The Grim' or 'Black Douglas' (c.1328–c.1400) Lord of Galloway and 3rd Earl of Douglas, illegitimate son of James 'The Good'. He was also related to Sir William, Knight of Liddesdale, whose legitimate male line had died out. He witnessed a Douglas charter in 1351. He may be the Lord Archibald who witnessed a confirmation of the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the 1360s by Earl William of Douglas. He was appointed Warden of the Western Marches in 1364 and held the position from 1368 until his death. He held lands in Liddesdale and was also later appointed Warden of the East March. He became Sheriff and Constable of Edinburgh and later Lord of Galloway and Bothwell. In the period 1384–88 he witnessed the granting of Drumlanrig to William, illegitimate son of James, Earl of Douglas. He succeeded to the Earldom of Douglas and other estates on the death of his father in 1388. In 1389 several lands were confirmed to him, including Bedrule and Selkirk Forest and he also inherited lands from his cousin, James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, who fell at Otterburn; this included Cavers. He witnessed charters during the reigns of Robert II and Robert III. In 1393 he was already Baron of Hawick, according to a charter of the lands of Teindside and Harwood. He was involved in many campaigns, being captured at the battle of Poitiers in 1356 and helping include Scotland in the 1391 peace negotiations between England and France. He also prepared a special code of law for the governing of the Marches. His death came possibly during a siege by Henry IV. In 1362 he married Joan Murray (or Moray), who was probably grand-daughter of Maurice, Earl of Strathearn, and daughter of Sir Thomas Murray, Lord of Bothwell. Note that some accounts say he married Sir Thomas' widow, but this seems likely to be a confounding of mother and daughters of the same name; however, it is possible that he has contracted to marry the mother, who then died in the plague and instead he married the daughter. In any case, his wife was heiress of the Bothwell titles, which included the Barony of Hawick. Their children were: Archibald, who succeeded and also held the Barony of Hawick for a few years; James, who succeeded his great-nephew as 7th Earl; Margaret, who married David Stewart, Duke of Rothesay, son of Robert III, and secondly married Walter Halyburton of Dirleton; Eleanor, who married Sir Alexander Fraser of Philorth; and an illegitimate son, Sir William of Nithsdale, who married Lady Egidia Stewart, daughter of Robert II. Archibald 'The Tyneman' (c.1372–1424) 4th Earl of Douglas, eldest son of Sir Archibald, the 3rd Earl and Johanna Moray. He was also Duke of Touraine. He witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. In 1400 he was made Lord General of the Marches, defeating the force of the Earl of March and Henry 'Hotspur' Percy at Preston in 1400. In 1401/1 he succeeded his father as Earl of Douglas, including the Realities of the Forest of Ettrick, Lauderdale and Romanno. He lost an eye in the Battle of Homildon Hill, but fought with the Percys at Shrewsbury in 1403. In a 1403 sasine for Sprouston his bailie in that part was James Gledstains (probably of that Ilk and Cocklaw) and John Cranston (son of sir William of that Ilk) was described as his squire. He was reconciled with the Earl of March while in captivity, returned to Scotland in 1409, but later went to France with a Scottish army. Sometime around 1406 or 1407 (while a prisoner in England) he granted Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig the lands and Barony of Hawick, ‘for his service’. It was possibly he who took possession of the lands around Hawick from the Lovels in a charter of 1412, with the support of James I, and may have began building the first part of the Tower in Hawick (this is complicated by the lands having been given to the Murrays by an earlier Scottish King, and passing to the Drumlanrig branch of the Douglasses at a similar time). In 1413 there is a ‘letter of precept’ recording how James Gledstains of that Ilk was serving as his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers. Charles VII, King of France made him Duc de Touraine in 1424. Sometime before 1390 he married Margaret Stewart, daughter of King Robert III. They had 2 known children: Archibald, who succeeded; and Elizabeth, who married John Stewart, Earl of Buchan, secondly married Thomas Stewart, Lord Badenoch, and thirdly married William Sinclair,

Douglas

Earl of Orkney. Dogged by apparent bad luck in battle, he earned his nickname the ‘Tyneman’, i.e. ‘loser’. He was killed at Verneuil along with his 2nd son James, fighting against the Duke of Bedford. Archibald (1373–c.1435) 1st Laird of Cavers, illegitimate son of James Earl of Mar, he is said to have borne the Douglas banner at the Battle of Otterburn where his father fell (but must have been quite young at the time). He was granted the Lordship of Cavers and the heritable Sheriffship of Roxburghshire by his aunt Isabella, Countess of Mar, but this was not confirmed at the time by King Robert III, and hence followed many years of confusion over the Barony of Cavers. He finally took up his inheritance after the death of his aunt, the confirmation of her original charter being granted by James I in 1412. He had Cavers House was built for him. Note that some sources suggest he did not die until 1456, but this must surely have been a later Archibald. He was Sheriff in 1415 when he witnessed the swap of lands between Robert Scott of Rankleburn and Melrose Abbey. He was Sheriff in 1424 when a ‘retour of inquest’ for lands of Hownam was made in Hawick. And he was probably the Archibald who was Sheriff in 1424 in a document for lands of ‘Swynset’. He was Sheriff of Teviotdale when he witnessed a charter of for Patrick Lindsay in 1425. In 1428/9 he was given sasine of the lands of ‘Mal Patrikhope’, ‘Bradele’ and ‘Le Schewis’ in Liddesdale by William, Earl of Angus. He was Sheriff in 1429/30 at a ‘retour of inquest’ for lands of Caverton. In 1430 he is designated ‘Lord of Cavers’ when he witnessed a charter between Andrew Rule of Primside and Andrew Ker of Altonburn. In 1431 he witnessed the ‘letter of transumpt’ of the earlier charter where the Inglist’s granted half of Brauxholme to the Scotts and the same year was ‘Archibaldo de Douglas vicecomite de Roxburgh’ when he witnessed the document transferring Heap from the Langlands to the Scotts. In his attestation to the same transfer he was ‘Archibald Dowglas, lord of Cauerys and Scherraffe off Teuidaylle’. In an existing sasine of 1432 his son William was given the Barony of Cavers and Sherifffdom of Roxburghshire, but with a ‘frank tenement of the lands and exercise of the office of sheriff…for all the days of his life’. It therefore seems reasonable to assume that he was becoming aged or infirm at that time, and it is said that he died during the reign of James I (i.e. before 1437). He witnessed charters for Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1430 and 1433/4. A feu charter of 1433 (regarding the lands of ‘Byrkwoode’, near the present Duke’s Wood) was witnessed by him. He married Margaret and was succeeded by his son William; although some genealogies suggest he was succeeded by Archibald, this was probably his grandson. He may also have had a daughter, Eleanor. Archibald (c.1390–1438) grandson of Archibald ‘the Grim’ and son of Archibald ‘the Tyneman’. He was 5th Earl of Douglas, as well as Earl of Wigtown, 2nd Duke of Tournaine and 1st Count of Longueville. In 1407 he witnessed the confirming charter from his father to William of Drumlanrig for the Barony of Hawick. A charter he granted in 1423 contains the first mention of Newark Castle. In 1427 he granted the Barony of Hawick to William, son of Sir William of Drumlanrig. In 1435 he granted the lands of ‘Brankishelme, Goldilandis, Quitlaw, Quitrig, Todschawhillis, Harwood and Kirkton Tofts. He was Lord of the Regality of Jedwood Forest, and in that capacity in 1436 he bestowed the lands of ‘Wolle and Wolhopelee’ (i.e. Wolfelee) to his esquire David Hume. He also held the superiority of Ettrick Forest, but gave up part of his rights there to James I. He may also have founded the Collegiate Church of Bothwell, to which Hawick was attached as a canony and prebend in 1447 (although this could have been his son). He married Matilda, daughter of David Lindsay, 1st Earl Crawford. He secondly married Euphemia, daughter of Sir Patrick Graham, Earl of Strathearn; she married James, Lord Hamilton after his death, and continued to receive income from the farms of Winterburgh, Altrieve, Berrybush and Craig Douglas. His children (all by his 2nd marriage) were: William, who succeeded; David; and Margaret, the ‘Fair Maid of Galloway’, who married both the 8th and 9th Earls of Douglas.

Sir Archibald (1410–c.58) probably 3rd Laird of Cavers, and likely the son of William. However, there is some confusion over these generations, no general agreement among published genealogies, and the years of his birth and death are unconfirmed. He is easily confused with the earlier Archibald (1st of Cavers). In 1445 he was witness for a lease for the lands of Harden Wood in Borthwickshiel. He witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castelaw in 1448. In 1450 he witnessed the ‘retour’ of William Douglas for the Barony of Hawick and in 1451 witnessed the charter for exchanging Milsington with Heap. In 1452 he and his son William were appointed as Bailies of Liddesdale and Keepers of Hermitage Castle by George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus and Lord of Liddesdale; this came with income from lands in Liddesdale. In 1454/5 his seal was attached to a document for Walter Ker of Altonburn, since Ker did not have one of his own. He was Sheriff in 1455 when he gave in the accounts for Roxburghshire. In 1456 he was ‘Archibaldo de Douglas, milite, domino de Cauers ac vicecomite de Roxburgh’ when he witnessed a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Buccleuch; his son Archibald was also mentioned. In 1457 he was Sheriff of Roxburgh when he was appointed as one of the conservators of the truce with England. In 1458/9 he had a discharge with Thomas Cranstoun of that Ilk over rents for Denholm Mains and other lands. In 1464/5 he appears to be still Sheriff of Roxburghshire in the sasine granting Kirkton Mains and Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1469/70 the Governorship of Hermitage Castle was granted to Sir David Scott of Buccleuch (and his son Walter), taking over from him and previously his father William. He may be the Archibald of Douglas mentioned in a document relating to the lands of Broadlee in the Barony of Hawick in 1479 and the man of the same name who acted as a bailie for Archibald, Earl of Angus to give sasine for Wolfelee in the same year. Also in 1479 a feud was mentioned in Parliament between his part of Teviotdale and his uncle and the Laird of Cranston. He was succeeded by his son Sir William and also had a son Adam, who is mentioned in 1502. His daughter Elizabeth married Sir Alexander Stewart of Garlies. It is possible there are 2 generations being confounded here; in 1470 William Douglas of Cavers was granted certain lands on Hermitage Water (with the sasine being given in 1472), and these were to go to his ‘brother-german’ Archibald if William had no male heirs. Archibald (c.1449–1514) 5th Earl of Angus, called ‘The Great Earl’ or ‘Bell the Cat’, he was son of George, the 4th Earl. He inherited many titles and estates from his father, including the Lordship of Liddesdale and Ewesdale. He had a sasine for Liddesdale and Jedforest in 1464. Also in 1464 he (or someone in his name) bestowed the lands of Stonedge on David Home of Wedderburn. In 1469/70 he assigned David Scott of Buccleuch and his son Walter as Keepers of Hermitage Castle. In 1470 he gave a charter of certain lands on Hermitage Water to ‘his kinsman’, William of Cavers, with David Scott mentioned as his kinsman. And in 1471/2, after Walter had died, he arranged for David’s 2nd son David to marry his sister Jean, renewing the arrangement of the Scotts as Bailies of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale. In 1474 it is recorded that one of the King’s courriers was paid to send him and David Scott a message about a day of truce on the Border. In 1476 he granted lands to Robert Elliot of Redheugh ‘for his guid and faithful servis’, with further Liddesdale grants in 1479 and 1484. In 1478 he granted a ‘tack’ of lands in Selkirk to David Scott, heir of David of Branhomrne. In 1474 and 1479 he was superior of the lands of Wolfelee when they passed from George to David Home. He was appointed Warden of the East Marches in 1481. In 1482 he was Lord of Douglas, Jedworth forest and Liddesdale when Thomas Armstrong resigned Mangerston to him and he granted the lands to David Scott of Branhomrne. He also served as Justiciar for Lothian in about 1483. He led the mutiny of nobles against Cochrane, who had been governing for King James III. When the fable of the mice tying a bell round the cat’s neck was related to the nobles he apparently said ‘I will bell the cat!’ (hence his nickname). He was also involved in other intrigues with England. During the minority of James IV, around 1488, he became Sheriff of Roxburgh, as well as 3 other counties, and in 1488/9 resigned the Lordships of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale to his son and heir George. In 1491 he made some deal with the English King over conditions under which Hermitage would be surrendered, and word of this reaching the Scottish King caused him and his son to surrender their Liddesdale estates and Hermitage Castle. Thus he exchanged Liddesdale and Hermitage with Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, for the lands and castle of Bothwell. Too old to fight at Flodden, he died the following year, but 2 of his sons (George and William) and perhaps 200 other Douglases fell at Flodden. It is also said that he did accompany the expedition into England, but argued with the King about accepting Surrey’s challenge and stood out the battle. He was said to have had a liaison with Joan, daughter of John, Lord Kennedy, who was later a mistress of James V. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Boyd, Lord of Kilmarnock. His surviving sons were Sir Archibald of Kilspindie, who became High Treasurer of Scotland and Provost of Edinburgh, and Gavin, Bishop of Dunkeld. Archibald (15th C.) brother of William. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; given that he was ‘fratrem Willemi’, who was mentioned in the next case, it seems likely that they were both related to the Douglases of Cavers, but the exact connection is not known. He was also called in 1494/5, when stated to be brother of William, and the Sheriff was fined for his non-appearance (as well as that of his brother). Archibald (1489–1557) 6th Earl of Angus, son of George, Master of Angus, who was killed at Flodden, and grandson of the 5th Earl. His sister Alison married Robert Blackadder (killed at Flodden) and later David Home of Wedderburn, who was 4th Laird of Wolfleetu. In 1509 he married Margaret, daughter of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. He later married Margaret Tudor, widow of James IV. This marriage contributed to civil war, with Margaret losing her regency to the Duke of Albany. He was accused of treason in 1521 and deported to France. However, he soon returned to Scotland with the support of Henry VIII. In 1524/5 he was sworn in as Warden and Lieutenant of the Borders, with the Kerrs, Scotts, Rutherfords and others promising to help him keep order. In 1525, as Warden of Middle and East Marches, he suppressed trouble in the Borders. He also led raids that captured many men, destroying their houses and goods, including at Borthwickshiel in 1526, aided by Lord Fleming and others. In 1526 he led a surprise raid on Liddesdale that carried off 600 oxen, 3,000 sheep, 500 goats and a large number of horses. In 1526 Scott of Buccleuch and others tried to wrest control of the young King James V from him at Skirmish Field, near Melrose. He was listed in 1526/7 among prominent men charged by James V not to attack the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton while those men were in ‘respite’ for the charge of treason. After James V gained control over his own destiny, he was forced to flee south of the Border, and assisted the English in attacks on his countrymen. A summons for him in 1528 also contained a list of his supporters, including John Langlands and John Gourlay (both probably local Lairds). In 1529 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was granted his Lordship of Jedforest. He returned to Scotland in 1542, attempting to gain the hand of Mary Stuart for Henry’s son Edward. He himself married a third Margaret (Maxwell this time). After Lord Hertford’s rampage through southern Scotland he turned against his former English supporters, was appointed Lieutenant of the South of Scotland in 1544 and the following year fought at the Battle of Ancrum Moor. He was also involved with the Battle of Pinkie, and narrowly escaped capture by the English in 1548. Finally resigning his Earldom in 1547, he was succeeded by his nephew David Douglas, while his only surviving legitimate child, Margaret was the mother of Lord Darnley. Archibald of Timpendean (16th C.) son of Andrew, he was 2nd Laird. In 1527 he had a gift of lands in ‘Langton’ in Roxburghshire. He also had a ‘precept of clare constat’ for the lands of Hassendeunbank. These had belonged to Andrew his father. In 1517 he married Ann, daughter of Peter Marshall from Lanton, and was succeeded by his son Andrew. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Archibald 8th Earl of Angus (1556–88) son of David, the 7th Douglas Earl. He succeeded to his titles in 1558. He was one of the executors of the will of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1574. In 1573 he was appointed a Privy Councillor and Sheriff of Berwick, in 1574 Lieutenant-General over all the Borders, in 1577 Warden of the West Marches and Steward of Fife and in 1578 Lieutenant-General of Scotland. Following his support of Morton he was declared guilty of high treason in 1581 and fled to England. He then lost his estates, baronies and lordships, including Feu-Rule, Wells and Hallrule. Along with other banished Lords he captured Stirling Castle in 1585 and secured an agreement from the King to restore their estates. In 1586 he became Earl of Morton and was again appointed Warden of the Marches and Lieutenant-General of the Border, but died 2 years later. He married Mary Erskine (daughter of the Earl of Mar, who held lands at Synton), Margaret Leslie (daughter of the Earl of Rothes) and Jean Lyon daughter of Lord Glamis). He was succeeded by his cousin William. Archibald (d.1610) son of William of Cavers, he became Chaplain of the Archdeaconry of Glasgow in 1573, holding the Parsonage and Vicarage of Peebles. There was a feud between the Douglases around Peebles and the Horsburghs. In 1607 he made assurance that he and his kinsmen would not harm William Horsburgh in Sarogis; his named kinsmen were his sons John and James, his nephews William Elliot in Peebles, James Elliot and Thomas Douglas and William, son of James Douglas of Cavers. His son John was Parson of Kilbucho, and was served heir to him in 1611. A second son was killed by William Horsburgh of that Ilk in 1610 and his daughter Agnes married John Galloway, an Edinburgh lawyer. In 1653 his granddaughters Margaret and Jean were served heirs to his tenement of land in Peebles. Archibald (d.c.1602) recorded in 1602 when his son William was served heir to him in a cottage-land of land within the town of Lilliesleaf. Perhaps the same Archibald in Friarshaw is recorded being granted a cottage-land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. Archibald of Tofts (16th/17th C.) said to be one of 4 natural sons of the Regent James, 4th Earl of Morton, who was executed in 1581 after being captured by a Stewart. There could be confusion between Archibald of Pittendreich and Archibald of Tofts, although it seems that they may have been the same man. He was one of the associates of Sir James of Parkhead and Torthorwald (perhaps his nephew), who was killed on Edinburgh High Street by one of Stewarts in 1608. Also in 1608 his lands (of Tofts presumably) were served to his nephew Martin of Tofts (son of his brother William of Crook); this establishes a connection between the Douglases of Crook and Tofts, even if these families are still confusing. He was Commissioner for Berwick at the 1617 Scottish Parliament; he may have been the first of Tofts and also Laird of Fastcastle (although this may be a different Tofts and hence a different man). In 1619 he had a charter for the lands of ‘Pittilisheuch’ and in an undated charter the lands of Hartsyde. In 1620 he was lart of a Commission to appoint Robert Swinton of that Ilk as Sheriff of Berwick. His wife may have been Alison Home. His children included William of Tofts and Archibald of Lumsden. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1607 as master of an ‘adventure school’ in Hawick. He was thus one of the earliest Hawick teachers that we know about, even although there is no other information about him. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as possessor of ‘Porterleyne Greina’ in Liddesdale in 1632. This is Greena in the very south of Roxburghshire. He was a servant of William, Earl of Morton. In 1634 his daughter Margaret was served heir to his lands of Greena, Purvinen and Burnmouth. Archibald (1609–55) eldest son of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas, from whom he inherited the title Earl of Angus. He signed the National Covenant, but appears to have been unwilling to take up arms in its defence. Among his titles was the superiority of Jedforest (i.e. Southdean). He married firstly Anne, daughter of Esme Stewart, 3rd Duke of Lennox, and secondly Jane, daughter of David, 2nd Earl of Wemyss. His eldest son James succeeded to the Lordship of Jedforest and would become 2nd Marquess of Douglas. Rev. Archibald (c.1641–96) youngest son of Douglas of Tilwhilly, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1661. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Kelso in 1663 and ordained that year at Douglas. He was translated to Cavers in 1664, where he was minister for about 9 years. He moved to Newton in 1673 and then Newbattle in 1681, but was deprived later that year for refusing to take the Test. He was re-admitted in 1683 in Saltoun, where he remained until his death. He married Janet Carmichael (daughter of the minister of Eves) in 1694. Their son Archibald became Wagon-master General to the British Forces, and his son John became Bishop of Salisbury. They also had 2 daughters, Helen and Janet. Archibald of Hawthorne'd (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He paid the land tax for Hawthornside in 1678 when it was valued at £171. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglases. Sir Archibald (d.1669) 10th Laird of Cavers, son of Sir William, he was also 'of Denholm and Spittal'. In 1634 he and his wife Rachel Skene had a charter from Charles I for several lands, including the town of Denholm. He was one of the signatories of the Covenant of 1638 in Hawick. In 1642, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was 'fear of Cavers' when listed among the members of the Committee of War for Roxburghshire; father and son served as Convenor in 1649. He may have commanded in the Parliamentary Army in the 1640s. In 1648 he (along with his father) was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He bought the lands of Kirkton from Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1655. He succeeded on the death of his father in about 1658. In 1658 he bought Denholm and Spittal from William, Lord Cranston (whose family had held them in feu for generations), uniting these lands with the Cavers estate. In 1660 he was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire, serving until 1663. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was fined £3,600. This is partly because he took the side of the ministers who were ejected from their livings in that year, declining to approve of the appointment of the replacement for Rev. Gillan. Also in 1662 he resigned his lands and titles in favour of his eldest son William, and William's wife Katherine Rigg, following an agreement made as part of their 1659 marriage contract. He was probably the Sheriff who paid the land tax on £5344 for lands in Cavers Parish and £4480 in Kirkton Parish in 1663. He married Rachel, daughter of Sir James Skene of Halyards, who was President of the Court of Session; their initials (S.A.D. and D.R.S.) appear over the fireplace in Westgate Hall, which they had built in 1663. He was only Laird for a few years, and was succeeded by his son Sir William. He also had daughters, Elizabeth, who married Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh, and Anne, who married Robert Bennet of Chesters in 1652. Archibald (17th C.) described as 'tutor of Cavers' when he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678. It is unclear who this refers to, perhaps an uncle of the 12th Laird, William, who was in his minority. Archibald (17th C.) listed at Whithope among 'The poor in Hauick Paroch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Archibald (17th/18th C.) weaver in Nether Southfield. His son Francis was baptised in 1706, with the witnesses being Bailies Walter Graham and George Martin. Archibald (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1706 he married Marion Wright and their children included: Marion (b.1707); Archibald (b.1709); and John (b.1722). The witnesses in 1709 were James Scott 'Doctor' and Robert Elliot. It is possible he is the weaver called Douglas (with no first name give) whose son Thomas was baptised in Hawick in 1713; the witnesses were Thomas Shiel (probably in Todshawhill, who may have given his name to the child) and 'drover' James Scott. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of 'Rige' in Kirkton Parish. This is perhaps Winningtonrig. His children included William (b.1716), Robert (b.1718) and Agnes (b.1720). Archibald of Cavers (c.1668–1741), 13th Laird, son of Sir William and younger brother of Sir William the 12th Laird. In 1695 he was the 'brother to Cavers' who was appointed as a Commissioner of Supply to Roxburghshire. He was also described as brother to Sir William of Cavers when he contributed £500 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1696 he rented Minto from Helen, Countess of Tarras for 3 years. He succeeded to the Cavers Lairdship from his brother William in 1698. He was also Sheriff Principal of Roxburghshire. He was listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. He became a Privy Councillor in 1703. He was Commissioner for Roxburghshire to the Scottish Parliament (i.e. M.P.) 1700–07. He voted for the Union in the last Scottish Parliament of 1707. He then represented Roxburghshire in the first Parliament of Great Britain 1707–08. He also represented the Dumfries Burghs as M.P. 1727–34. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £7263 in 1707. A letter to him (from the Duke of Argyll) as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1716 complains about the local men who have apparently deserted from the King's service. He was Reciever General for Scotland 1705–18 (it is said the appointment was due to his strong Hanoverian leanings). He complained that his dismissal was part of an intrigue by pro-Jacobites, but he was granted a £400 pension in 1721 and in 1725 was appointed Paymaster (or Postmaster) General for Scotland. He was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1707. He was a curator for the Dukes of Douglas and Queensberry when they were minors. He was said to have been a great supporter of the loyalist cause in the Jacobite uprising of 1715, advancing money to the Scottish exchequer and raising forces in Roxburghshire. He also supported Andrew Murray (ancestor of James ‘Dictionary’ Murray), a loyalist who had been persecuted in the north, settling him in the lands at Spittal Tower. He was also one of the main instigators for setting up a spinning school in Hawick in 1734. Also in 1734 he witnessed the marriage of his niece Violet Douglas with John Oliver of Dinlabyre. In 1738 he sold Over Hassendean to Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch and in 1739 sold ‘Ladylands’ to John, Duke of Roxburgh. In 1739 he and his son were among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. He married Anna, daughter of Francis Scott of Gorrenberry (in Edinburgh in 1693) and possibly later Elizabeth Scott of Gala (although this may be confusion with his son Archibald); he may also have been the Douglas of Cavers who secretly married Mary Houston in 1708. His sons William, Archibald, James and John all became Laird in turn. His daughter Ann married William Campbell of Fife. He also had daughters Catharine and Euphane (who later lived with their brother James at Cavers). The bells of Hawick Kirk recorded being rung for ‘Lady Douglas’ in 1728 are probably for his wife. Archibald (1694–1761) son of the 3rd Marquis of Douglas. He succeeded at the age of 6 and was made Duke of Douglas at age 9. He had several titles restored to his family, including Viscount of Jedburgh Forest. He was owner of extensive lands, including in the Jed valley and Southdean Parish. His wife Margaret (‘Peggy’) was known for her intelligence and wit. Having no heirs, he settled his estates on his nephew Archibald James Edward. He had Douglas Castle rebuilt to plans by Robert Adam. He secondly married Frances, daughter of Francis, Earl of Dalkeith (and sister of Henry, Duke of Buccleuch). His children were: Archibald, 2nd Baron Douglas; Charles, 3rd Baron; Jane Margaret, who married Henry James, son of Sir Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, and who later inherited the estates; Caroline Lucy, who married Adm. Sir George Scott; Frances Elizabeth, married William Moray Stirling; Mary Sidney, who married Robert Douglas; Sholto Scott; Rev. James, 4th Baron, who married Wilhelmina Murray, and after whom the title became extinct and the estates went to Lady Montagu; and George. Capt. Archibald (18th C.) probably 2nd son of Thomas, and grandson of Sir William of Cavers. He was Inspector of Works at Berwick. He was named in the will of his cousin Rev. Dr. James Douglas of Cavers, and would have succeeded if Andrew (probably his older brother) had not had male issue. Archibald of Timpendean (1725–81) son of William, he was the 10th Laird. He appears to have taken on the Bonjedward title as well, because of the death of the last of that line (although this is not proven). In 1739 he became an apprentice with merchant Archibald Angus in Edinburgh. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was taxed in 1778 for having a male servant. In 1765 he married Helen, daughter of Andrew Bennet of Chesters, and she died in 1808. His children included: William (b.1770), who succeeded; Andrew (1772–1827), Physician in the Royal Navy, who died in London; Robert (b.1774); and Archibald (b.1778). Archibald (d.1814) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1768 he married Janet (1745–1811), daughter of baker John Kedie. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1769); Janet (b.1771), who married shoemaker George Deans; Robert (b.1774), hosier, who married Sally Beck; John (b.1780), stockingmaker, who married J. Aitchison. Archibald of Adderstone (1755–1825) younger son of Andrew, grandson of Thomas and great-grandson of Sir William of Cavers. He was christened at St. Martin in the Field, Westminster. On the death of Capt. James of Cavers in 1786 his brother George succeeded to Cavers, while he inherited the lands of Adderstone (consisting of Adderstonelee and Adderstoneshiel) and Midshiels and lived at the latter. He held the lands of Midshiels and Coliforthill by 1788 and also held Bankend, as well as teinds of lands in Jedburgh Parish (including Hawickgate). He was at Midshiels in the period 1788–95 when taxed for owning a carriage and was taxed for having up to 5 carriage or saddle horses at Midshiels in the period 1787–97. He paid tax on 3 female servants at Midshiels in 1787, 2 in 1788, 1 in 1789 and 2 in 1790 and 1791. He also had 4 male servants at Midshiels in 1790, 3 in 1791–92, 2 in 1793 and 4 in 1794 and 1797. He also had 2 farm horses in 1797 and also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs in the same year. He was probably the Douglas of Midshiels who subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He was recorded as owner of Midshiels in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, as well as lands in Jedburgh Parish (including Bankend and part of the teinds of ‘Hawick-gate’) and Adderstone plus Adderstonelee. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He married Jane Gale from Whitehaven. Their children were: Andrew John, who died at Midshiels in 1806; Archibald Pringle, who succeeded him; Anne Mary (b.1787); Jane (b.1789); Katherine Rachel (b.1790), who married James Dove of Wexham House near Windsor; Elizabeth (b.1792), who married Ensign Aaron Reid of the 72nd Highlanders; and Grace Thomasina (b.1793). Archibald (18th C.) resident of ‘Kirktown’ in 1791 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He is probably the Archibald who married Janet Laidlaw in Kirkton Parish in 1789. Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded at Raesknowe in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was the Archibald, married to Janet Kedie, who had several children baptised in Hawick Parish about the 1770s. Archibald (1773–1844) 2nd Baron Douglas, son of Archibald, 1st Baron. He was educated at Eton and his main residence was at Bothwell Castle, Lanarkshire. He inherited his father’s lands in Southdean Parish, where he was the major heritor. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, while still younger of Douglas. Archibald Pringle of Adderstone (1798/9–1860) eldest son of Archibald, from whom he inherited the lands of Adderstone and Midshiels. He was ‘Jun. Esq. of Adderstone’ in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was a reform politician and M.P., who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1834. He owned the lands of Adderstoneshiel and Adderstonelee and lived for a while at Midshiels (being listed there in Pigot’s 1837 directory). He was one of the 4 heritors of Kirkton Parish. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1851 he was recorded as ‘Landed Proprietor Justice of the Peace’ at Midshiels. He married Margaret Violet, daughter of Mark Pringle of Haining and Clifton, and she died in 1868; she is recorded as proprietor of the Haining in a directory of 1868. They had one child, Anne Elizabeth, who succeeded to Fairmile and Haining, married John Pattison in Melrose and was eventually succeeded by Andrew Seth Pringle Pattison, Professor of Logic and Metaphysics at Edinburgh University. Archibald (b.1803) son of Robert and Catherine Beck. He was a frameworker and later postman, living in the Round Close. In 1841 he was living at about 7 Sandbed and was at the Round Close by 1851. He is recorded in the 1860s as postal messenger for Cavers Parish. He married Barbara (or ‘Barbary’) Scott in 1834. Their children included John, Janet, James, Catherine, Robert, Ninian, Mary, Barbara and Helen.

Archibald William (1818–58) 8th Marquess of Queensberry and also Baron of Hawick, among other titles. He married Caroline Clayton and was succeeded by his famous son John. Arthur (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as ‘in Efflesche’ when, along with Thomas ‘Fresall’, he had 13 cows and oxen stolen by William Scott ‘in Layk’. He was presumably a tenant farmer at Effledge. Arthur (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Kirktoon’ when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Crook in 1569. He is presumably the same Arthur who was one of the agents to whom the precept of sasine was directed for the same lands in the previous year, suggesting that he was related to the Douglases of Crook. He may be related to (or the same man as) Arthur in Effledge. William in Kirkton was also a witness in 1569, and so probably a son or brother. Rev. Charles (d.1745) son of Andrew, he was minister of Cavers. Licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in early 1738, he was presented by Archibald Douglas of Cavers later that year and remained minister until his death. In 1735 in Bedrule Parish he married Isabel Douglas (who died in 1748), daughter of Walter, minister of Linton. Their children were: Andrew (b.1735); Walter (b.1737); Archibald (b.1739); Isobel (b.1740, or Isabella), who married James Newgigging in Edinburgh in 1759; William (b.1742); and Charles (b.1744). Charles 3rd Duke of Queensberry (1698–1778), 3rd son of James, the 2nd Duke. He inherited the dukedom, since his elder brother James (who was allowed to inherit the Marquessate and Earldom) was criminally insane and kept locked up. He was created Viscount Tibbers and Earl of Solway, and retained several Scottish titles, including Lord Douglas of Hawick. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Dumfries and Kirkcudbright. He was a patron of the poet John Gay. He married Catherine, daughter of Henry, Earl of Clarendon. His wife was a friend of many of the writers of the day, and she apparently died from eating too many cherries. Since he was predeceased by his 2 sons, upon his death the English titles expired, while the Scottish ones went to a cousin William, grandson of William, Earl of March. Charles of Kelhead (1777–1837) son of Sir William Douglas and Grace Johnstone. He was the 6th Marquess of Queensberry, succeeding on the death of his cousin William in 1810, although the Dukedom passed to Henry Scott of Buccleuch. He acquired the Marquessate through marrying Caroline Scott, daughter of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. This made him also Viscount Drumlanrig and Lord Douglas of Hawick. He may be the ‘Honourable Charles Douglas’ to whom the superiority of Wauchope was conveyed by Charles Scott in the early 1800s. He was one of Scotland’s representative peers 1812–32. He served as Lord Lieutenant of Dumfries 1819-37. Having no male issue, the titles passed to his younger brother John. Charles ‘Charlie’ wrote ‘Happy memories of Gatehousecote and Rulewater’. Christian (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Christine of Trows (16th C.) recorded in 1574 in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when she still owed grain for her share of the teinds of Cavers Parish. Her name is recorded as ‘Cristiane Douglass, Lady Trowis’. It is unclear who her husband had been and how she was connected with the Douglases of Cavers. Craig one of Hawick’s most successful athletes, winning many middle distance races in the 1960s and early 1970s. He was Scottish 880 yards champion in 1963 and champion over 1500 m in 1969 and 1971. David (15th C.) witness to a 1483 sasine given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, relating to lands in Hassendean. Since he was listed immediately after William, then he may have been his son or brother. Either the same man or a different David was on the inquest panel for James Douglas of Cavers inheriting the Barony from his father. Probably the same David was on the 1482 panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean; George of Bonjedward, James and Patrick are also listed, and possibly closely related. He may be the David, son of William, for whom the Sheriff (William of Cavers) was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; it seems unlikely that his father was the same William as the Sheriff. He could be the ‘Dauid Dowglas’ who was among the bailies appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, for giving a sasine of the lands of Grahamslaw to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1500. He may be the same ‘Dauid Dawgles’ who witnessed a sasine for Scott of Buccleuch in 1500. David (16th C.) recorded as ‘Davie Dowgles’ in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Warden. His name is listed along with local Gledstains, suggesting that he was from somewhere around Hawick. David Harrington Angus (1929– ) 12th Marquess of Queensberry, also holding the title of Baron of Hawick. He was educated at Eton and served in the Royal Horse Guards. A noted pottery designer, he was Professor of Ceramics at the Royal College of Art 1976–78. He married firstly Ann Jones, secondly Alexandra Mary Clare Wyndham Sieh and thirdly Hseun-Chun Liao. He had 4 daughters and 3 sons, the eldest being Sholto Francis Guy Douglas, Viscount of Drumlanrig, who will succeed to the titles. He also had an illegitimate son, Ambrose Jonathan Carey, head of a security and intelligence firm, whose half-sister married Salem bin Laden. Elizabeth nee Graham (14th C.) wife of William Douglas ‘the Knight of Liddesdale’. After her husband’s was killed in 1353 she sought protection from England, retaining rights to Hermitage and Liddesdale from Edward III, provided she married an Englishman. She did so, marrying Hugh, brother of William, Lord Dacre, and together they were granted Hermitage Castle and Liddesdale in 1355. This arrangement allowed her daughter and nephew, who had been kept as English hostages, to be released. However, by 1358 the castle was in possession of William, Earl of Douglas (the same relative who had killed her husband). Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) recorded in the Council records of 1665 when dyer James Scott swore that she reproached Bailie Deans. She specifically said ‘that Bailie Deans was made bailie out of pity, and that the yard pertaining to John Pasley was not truelie marched’[BR1665]. Elizabeth (b.1678) daughter of John Douglas, she married Sir William, 12th Laird of Cavers about 1690. He died about 8 years later and in 1700 she remarried Sir Andrew Home, Lord Kinnerghame, son of the Earl of Marchomont. Elizabeth ‘Lizzy’ (18th/19th C.) married to James. In 1835 she became the first letter-carrier of the Rule valley, going with her donkey and cart twice a week to Jedburgh; her husband was almost blind by then. She lived at Hoddleswoodie. Her children included Mary (b.1797), James (b.1799), Charles (b.1800) and Nelly (b.1808). Elizabeth nee Beattie (1779–1858) from Langholm, she married joiner John Douglas (1778–1838). She was post-mistress in Newcastleton in 1851, living around Langholm Street. Her daughter Christina assisted her. She was also listed as postmistress in a directory of 1851. Francis Archibald Kelhead (1896–1954) 11th Marquess of Queensberry, also holding the title of Baron of Hawick. He served with the Black Watch and was wounded twice during WWI. He was succeeded by his son David. Gavin (c.1474–1522) 3rd son of ‘Bell the Cat’ who was traditionally said to have been Rector of Hawick for a short time from 1496 before becoming Provost of St. Giles, Edinburgh and then Bishop of Dunkeld. However, it seems more likely that he was in fact Parson at ‘Haugh’, which was an old name for Prestonkirk parish, and not at Hawick (although things are further confused by both churches being attached to the College of Bothwell around that time, and by a claim that there was an oral tradition going back to the mid-18th century that he was associated with Hawick, independent of the documentary reference to the word ‘Haugh’). He wrote poetry in the vernacular and translated Virgil into Scots, later fleeing to England and seeking the protection of Henry VIII because of political intrigues and rivalries. He died of the plague in London while in exile and is buried in Savoy Church. He may have had an illegitimate daughter, but left no heirs. His fame is as a poet and translator, although probably nothing was published during his lifetime. His most noteworthy contribution was a translation of Virgil’s ‘Æneid’ into Scots. He is possibly the first person to refer to his language as ‘Scottish’ – ‘Here Gawin Douglas took his way, On Sabbath morn and holy day When vested priests in cope and stole Said masses for Drumanrig’s soul’[WNK] (also spelled ‘Gawin’ or ‘Gawain’). George (c.1378–c.1403) 1st Earl of Angus, illegitimate son of William, 1st Earl of Douglas with Margaret Stewart, Countess of Angus and of Mar (who was his father’s brother-in-law’s wife). Sir William 1st of Drumanrig and Archibald 1st of Cavers were his nephews. Confusion over the lack of confirmation of the charter of Cavers to Archibald led to James Sandilands gaining the lands (as well others). Sandilands passed them to him, according to a 1397 charter confirmed by Robert III; this included the Barony of Cavers, Sheriffdom of Roxburgh, Lordships of Jedburgh and Liddesdale, town of Selkirk, lands of Bonjedward and many other titles and estates, following the death of Isabella Countess of Mar (his half sister). However, this never transpired, since the right was given back to James Sandilands (the King’s brother-in-law) in 1404/5, after his own death (although some lands were later recovered by his son William). There is also an agreement of 1399 in which Sir Malcolm Drummond, Lord of Mar, agrees to give him the rights to lands in Liddesdale, including recovering the rents and other dues from Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith, in return for rights to lands in Angus. Attempts to recover Liddesdale and other lands led to a feud with Sir James of Dalkeith. He married Mary Stewart, daughter of King Robert III. His children included William (2nd Earl and the first of the ‘Red’ Douglases), George and Elizabeth (or perhaps Mary). His wife remarried 3 times after his death. He was captured by the English at the Battle of Holidon Hill and probably died in English captivity, possibly during an outbreak of the plague. George (d.1462) 4th Earl of Angus, probably the younger son of William the 2nd Earl (although some sources suggest he was a 2nd son of George, the 1st Earl). He was Lord of Liddesdale and Jedburgh Forest, as well as holding many other lands. He had a sasine for Jedforest and

Douglas

Liddesdale in 1447. He served as Warden of the East Marches and also the Middle Marches. He was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. In 1453 he appointed Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers, Sheriff of Roxburgh, and his son William, as Bailies of Liddesdale and Keepers of the Castle. In the power struggles of the mid-16th century he was head of the ‘Red Douglases’ and probably led the royalists at the Battle of Arkinholm in 1455. For services against the English he was also made Lord of Douglas. In 1458/9 he was granted superiority of Eskdale, which had been held by James, Earl of Douglas. He married Isobel, daughter of John Sibbald of Balgony in Fife. In 1471 his wife Isobel, countess of Angus and her children (John of Douglas, Isobel Douglas, Elizabeth of Douglas, Margaret Douglas, Giles Douglas and Alison Douglas) against her brother-in-law William of Douglas of Cluny for withholding grain and other goods and rentals from several lands, including Hawick. His children included: Archibald, ‘Bell the cat’, who succeeded as 5th Earl of Angus; John, who probably died young; Anne, who married William, 2nd Lord Graham; Isobella, who married Sir Alexander Ramsay of Dalhousie; Elizabeth, who married Sir Robert Graham of Fintry; Margaret, who married Duncan Campbell of Glenorchy; Jane, who married David Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1472; Giles (or Egidia); and Alison. George of Bonjedward (d.c.1452) 3rd Laird, son of John. He was retoured as heir to his father in the demesne lands of Bonjedward in 1439. He was succeeded by his son George. Another son, William, is mentioned in 1476, and John may also possibly have been a son. George (15th C.) witness in 1433 to a feu charter between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Simon of Routledge for Birkgwood, just outside Hawick. The other witness was Archibald of Cavers, and so he may have been his son or other close relative. He may be the same ‘Georgio de Douglas’ (esquire) who witnessed (at Hadwic) the sasine for the Barony of Hawick going to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452. And perhaps the George who witnessed a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456, where he was listed after Sir Archibald of Cavers, and Archibald’s son, also Archibald, suggesting he may have been a son or brother to the Laird at that time. George of Bonjedward (15th C.) son of George, whom he succeeded in 1452 as 4th Laird. He denounced some lands to Jedburgh Abbey in 1458. He was a member of the panel in 1464/5 ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburgh to Archibald of Cavers; he is recorded as ‘of Bone Jedworth’. Probably the same George (recorded as an esquire) was witness to the sasine made at Cavers for the same purpose. He may have been a relative of the Cavers branch, as well as related to James, who was also a witness. In 1464/5 he was also on the panel to rule on the dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains; he is there ‘of Buniedwort’. In 1468 he was witness to a charter for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk, in 1471 for James Rutherford of that Ilk and in 1475 for Walter Ker of Caverton. William ‘brodir to George of Dowglass of Bonegedworth’ was recorded in 1476. He was a witness to the ‘tack’ granting lands in Selkirk to David, younger of Braxholme, in 1478. He was probably the George who was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting Appletreehall in 1482. He may also be the George who witnessed the sasine for the Barony of Hawick at the Mote in 1484. In 1485/6 he witnessed a charter for Robert Ramsay of Cockpen. In 1488 he witnessed the grant of Auld Roxburgh to Walter Ker of Cessford. In addition he could be the George who was mentioned in a document relating to Ruecastle in 1491 and who was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Braxholm and Buccleuch in 1492. Either he or a later George was the George of ‘Bunjedworth’ who witnessed a document relating to George, Master of Angus on 1499. He may be the ‘Gorgis of Dowglas’ who was one of the assessors of the lands of Whithope in 1500 and the ‘Gorgio Dowглаis’ who was appointed Sheriff Depute of Roxburghshire in 1500 in order to give sasine of lands to Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1479 he granted the lands of Timpendale to his son Andrew, with the consent of his oldest son, James; this separated the family line into 2 (although they would merge again later). However, James does not appear to have inherited Bonjedward, and so presumably predeceased him. John and William, brothers of the Laird of Bonjedward, were convicted of attacking Sir William Colville in 1502; this seems unlikely for men in their 60s, supporting the idea that there are 2 generations compounded into 1 man here. The 1504 list of men associated with the Archbishop of Glasgow who had remission for the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey includes George of Bonjedward, who is either him or his son; the list follows with Andrew, John, Robert, William and Master Steven. George of Bonjedward (15th/16th C.) probably son of the earlier George or possibly son of William. He could be the Laird in 1502 whose uncle Robert acted as surety at the Justice-aint in Jedburgh. He was ‘bailie in that part’ in 1504 when sasine was given to William Turnbull for the lands of Maxton Craig. In 1504 he was among the long list of men who had remission for involvement in the killing Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey; Andrew, John, Robert, William and Master Steven are listed immediately after him, and so perhaps his close relatives. In a separate list John is recorded as his brother, while Robert was brother of Andrew of Timpendean (and certainly also related). He was also listed on the 1506 remission for the same crime (suggesting he was more closely involved perhaps); there his brother John is listed after him. In 1508 he was fined by the High Court of the Judiciary. He served on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1508. He is probably the Laird of ‘bone Jedworthie’ on an assize in 1508/9 for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. He was appointed as temporary Sheriff of Roxburghshire (along with John Rutherford of Hundalee) in 1509 to hear the inquest for James Douglas inheriting Cavers from his father William. He would have been the Laird of Bonjedward who is recorded as one of the leaders of the men who had a skirmish with superior English forces at Sclaterford in 1513. He is probably the George (with no affiliation given) who was appointed as temporary Sheriff to oversee the sasine for the Barony of Hawick in 1514. He was ‘of Bunjedward’ in 1523 when he was on a panel in Jedburgh for the Homes. He may be the George who was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stickhill in 1525 and the George of ‘Boonjedward’ who witnessed the indenture between the Scotts and the Kers in 1529/30. Note that these generations are rather confused, with the possibility that several Georges are compounded. He may have had brothers John, William and Hugh, and a sister Jane who married Sir Archibald Rutherford. His children may have included William (who succeeded), Isobella, Hugh and possibly John. The witnesses John and James Douglas listed in the sasine for Maxton Craig in 1504 (for which he acted as bailie) may have been his brothers or sons. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as tenant of Trows when David Oliver ‘in Strondis’ had remission for stealing 20 sheep from his lands, as well as several other similar crimes. In 1517 he was ‘Georgum Douglas de Trowis’ when he was on the panel for deciding on the inheritance of Scott of Branxholme. He may have been the uncle of Sir William of Cavers recorded in 1500 and the George who served as depute for the Sheriff of Roxburghshire (Sir William) in a 1501 retour for Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He may also have been the George who was listed (third, after Douglas of Cavers and Douglas ‘of Denbray’) in the 1488/9 list of Roxburghshire men given remission for their support of the former King, James III. He may additionally be the George for whom William of Cavers was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aint in Jedburgh in 1493 and again in 1494/5. George (d.1513) Master of Angus, he was eldest son of Archibald, ‘Bell the Cat’. In 1488/9 he was appointed to the Lordship of Liddesdale and other titles, after they were resigned by his father; this included Eskdale and Ewesdale. The family were forced to give them up entirely in 1491, probably following a deal they made with the English (although he may have retained Eskdale and Ewesdale). Following this, his father handed him over as surety to King James. Patrick, Earl of Bothwell got the lands of Liddesdale, and he received the Barony of Bothwell in return. However, it appears that he was confirmed in the Lordships of Douglas, Jedforest, Liddesdale, Selkirk, Ewesdale, Eskdale, etc. in a sasine of 1499. In 1493 he was surety for Robert Turnbull ‘in laris’ (possible Lairhope) and in 1494/5 he was surety for John Young in Rowhelee. In 1501 he was liable for the pledges imposed upon Adam, David and Robert Turnbull. In 1502 he had to concede the lands of Falside in Jedforest to Ralph Ker of Primside Loch; this was for failing to deliver ‘Sym Scott of Arkyn’. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aint held in Jedburgh in 1502. He was also fined in 1502 for not arresting a reiver named Davidson, ‘Grace-behind-him’, and the King deprived him of the Lordship of Eskdale. Additionally in 1502 he was fined for failure to arrest 3 Olivers, as well as John Turnbull ‘de france’ and others. In 1505 there was a summons for him from James IV, for failing to pay the dowry of 250 merks promised to Sir William Douglas of Cavers for the marriage of his daughter Alison and Sir William’s son and heir; he also had to pay £500 Scots for loss and interest. In 1506 his lands of Ewesdale, including Fiddleton were granted to Alexander, Lord Home. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John, 1st Lord Drummond, and their children included: Archibald, who succeeded; Sir George of...
Douglas

Pittendreich; William, Abbot of Holyroodhouse; Elizabeth, who married John Hay, 3rd Lord of Yester, owner of land at Hassendean; Alison, who was contracted to marry William Douglas of Cavers, but married Robert Blackadder, who died at Flodden, and secondly married Sir David Home of Wedderburn; Janet, who was burned at the stake, but had earlier married John Lyon, 6th Lord Glamis, and secondly Archibald Campbell of Skipnish; and Margaret, who married Sir James Douglas, 7th Baron of Drumlanrig and Hawick. He died at Flodden along with his brother Sir William, and the titles went to his eldest son Archibald. Sir George of Pittendreich (d.1552) son of George, Master of Angus and brother of Archibald, 6th Earl of Angus. He was an important member of the Red Douglases in their attempts to control the young James V in 1528, after which he lived in exile in England. Around 1541 and 1542 he is mentioned many times in letters from the English March Wardens. Having his lands restored in 1543, he was involved in negotiations of peace with England, which failed and effectively led to the Rough Wooing. He was later a supporter of Mary of Guise. In 1547 he represented the Douglasses, with George Lord Home representing the Homes in a case before the Privy Council regarding a feud between the families. He narrowly escaped capture by the English at Dalkeith Palace in 1548. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of David Douglas of Pittendreich. His children included: David, who became 7th Earl of Angus, and whose daughter Margaret would marry Sir Walter Scott of Branholme, as well as Francis, Earl of Bothwell; James, who married the Earl of Morton’s youngest daughter Elizabeth; an illegitimate son George, who became George of Parkhead. George of Bonjedward (16th C.) son of William. In 1560 he was ‘of Abone-jedburgh younger’ when he witnessed the bond between the Rutherfords and the Kers at Ancrum Spittal. He was still ‘younger and fear’ in 1562 when he served as surety for George Turnbull of Barnhills. In 1566 he was ‘younger of Bonjedward’ when he married Isobel Ker. In the register of the Privy Council he was surety in 1571, for William Kirkton of Stewartfield in 1572/3, for Englishmen in 1575, separately for Gavin Elliot Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and John Turnbull of Minto in 1576 and for others in 1577. He was still ‘younger of Bane Jedburgh’ when listed among the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles in 1575. In 1576/7 he was charged with paying the fine of £1000 for a supporter of John Turnbull of Minto breaking the bond between factions among the Turnbulls and violently attacking a servant. He signed an agreement with Rutherfords and Turnbulls in 1578, nulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop a feud between him (along with several Rutherfords and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford; there was also separately a feud between him and Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1580 Archibald, Earl of Angus, made a promise to the Privy Council on his behalf for the behaviour of the men of Teviotdale. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their riving crimes and also listed among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was still ‘younger’ on a list of men charged to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 and on a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, about the same time. He was a Commissioner appointed by Parliament in about 1588. He was probably the Laird referred to in 1597 in an English letter listing Scotsmen who had reset English fugitives. He is probably the Laird in 1598 who was wounded when a group of Scotsmen out hunting were attacked by a larger English group, and his son taken prisoner. He is probably the George who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire in 1610 and may have been the Laird of Bonjedward from whom 10 cows were stolen in 1611. He married Margaret Stewart of Traquair in 1573. He appears to have been succeeded by William, presumably his son. He may also have been the father of Hugh and Hobbe (recorded in 1540/1, unless that was an earlier generation). George (16th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire, referred to in a case of 1601 as having been deceased for several years. Robert Turnbull took over the office after his death. He is probably the ‘Maister George Dowglas, notar publict’ who witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and Kers, signed in Melrose. He is also probably the same ‘Magistrum Georgium Douglass clericum vicecomitis’ and notary public for the brief of 1569 where Grizel Borthwick inherited the supeiority of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall. George ‘Pealmann’ (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with Thomas and Thomas Ainslie of Swinside when they were accused of a raid into England 3 years previously. His surname is written ‘Dugles’, which seems likely to be Douglas. It is unclear what his nickname meant or how he was related to other Douglases. George (d.c.1597) obtained a gift of the parsonage and vicarage of Kirkton from James VI in 1567/8, following the death of William Douglas. He is also recorded as Reader there in 1575, when William Auchmowtie was Minister for several parishes. In 1576 he was ‘non-resident’ and an unnamed Reader was paid the Rectory and Vicarage revenues. He was also mentioned as Minister in 1585. He is recorded as deceased in late 1597 when the parsonage and vicarage was given to John Douglas. He is clearly distinct from the slightly later minister of the same name of Southdean and Hobkirk, although it is not impossible they were related.
Douglas

Rev. George (c.1579–1609) local minister. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1599. He held the vicarage of Hobkirk from 1602, then was presented to Southdean by William Earl of Angus in 1607 and translated to Hobkirk in 1608; however, it is unclear for what period he held these simultaneously. He also had the intake from the lands ‘callit the Vicarie-Hill’ probably in Hobkirk.

George of Friarshaw (d.1623) said to have been son of William and brother of John in some genealogies. However, he is probably the George, son of Andrew in Friarshaw recorded in 1592 when the pair had a charter from Melrose Abbey for the lands of Friarshaw (in Lilliesleaf Parish). He was said to be the 3rd Douglas Laird of Friarshaw. He is recorded in 1610 as ‘George Duglas of Freirschau’ when he was part of an inquest into lands in Rulewater. The year of his death is unclear, since he appears to have been listed in 1628 among the major landowners of Roxburghshire who met to elect M.Ps. He married Margaret Middlemas and was succeeded by his son Andrew. George of Bonjedward (d.1682) probably son of William. His sister Mary married John Douglas of Timpendale. In 1631 he was recorded as ‘appeareand of Bonjedburgh sheriff of Teviotdale’. In 1632 he made a discharge of 20,000 merks to Sir Patrick Murray of Elibank. In 1636 he had a tack for mills in Jedburgh. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives.

He is probably the George of Bonjedward mentioned in 2 Parliamentary documents in 1643 and he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in that year. In 1643 his estate was valued at about £5000; this included the Town, Mains and Mill of Bonjedward, the ‘Herd’s House’, the Mains of ‘Tour’ and lands in Ulston and associated teinds, as well as Philogar in Hownam Parish and Cunzierton in Oxnam Parish. Also in 1643 he made arrangements to provide for his sister Mary, who had become widowed. The tutors of his children are mentioned in 1658. He is recorded in a deed of 1665 obtaining the teinds on Bonjedward from the Earl of Lothian. He paid tax on his estate valued at £4000 in 1678. In 1678 he was fined 27,500 merks for irregularities and was George ‘of Bonjedburgh’ when fined 6,000 pounds Scots in about 1680 for being a Covenanter. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Patrick Murray of Elibank; she was recorded as ‘Lady Bonjedburgh’ in 1641 and again in about 1677. Their children included: George, who succeeded; John; Alexander; and Henry. George of Bonjedward (d.1695) son of George. He was mentioned in 1641 in the ‘Commission for receiving of the brotherly assistance from the Parliament of England’. He inherited Bonjedward from his father in 1682. He was served heir to lands in the Barony of Ulston in 1682, which had been owned by his father George and great-great-grandfather William. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh as a Covenanter in 1685, ‘having now lien in prison three months, being sickly’. He was probably Laird when ‘Boon Jethert his hous’ had tax paid on it for 17 hearths (a huge number at that time). He was succeeded by William, presumably his son. Another son was probably Gilbert, ‘brother-german to the Laird of Beasedbrugh’, who became an apprentice to John ‘Weier’, wigmaker in Edinburgh in 1699. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissariat in 1695. George (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Whitfeld’ in 1705 when he leased Todshaw from Gideon Scott of Highchester for 11 years. George of Friarshaw (1673–1753) son of Henry, he was the 7th Laird. He was an advocate, probably in Edinburgh. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum. His children included: Henry (b.1703), who succeeded to Friarshaw, but had no male heirs; Sir James of Springwood (b.1704), who was a Rear Admiral; Peter (1714–35); Andrew (1725–72); Robert, who was a Lieut.-Gen.; and Agnes, who married Capt. Robert Scott of Horsleyhill (b.1727). George of Bonjedward (d.c.1750) son of William. He probably sold part of the family lands to Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston in the period 1710–15. The rest may have been sold by his creditors, Lord Cranston, Lord Cassilis, the Master of Ross and Mr. Wauchope in the 1730s.
Douglas

and 40s. He is probably the Douglas of Bonjedward who witnessed a marriage in Melrose in 1711. He was on a list of prominent local lairds in 1713. He was succeeded by his son John in 1754 and may also have had a daughter, Christian, who was mentioned to be included on the charity roll after his death. George (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1738. George of Cavers (1754–1814) eldest son of Andrew, merchant of London and grandson of Thomas, who was the 5th son of Sir William of Cavers. He was christened at St. Martin in the Fields, Westminster. He became the 18th Laird of Cavers on the death of his father’s cousin Capt. John in 1786 (some accounts of an intervening Thomas seem confused). He was previously a paymaster for the Royal Navy. His younger brother Archibald inherited the lands of Adderstone and Midshiel; however, he was also listed on the 1787 tax roll as being ‘of Midshiel’, where he employed 4 male servants. In 1788 his lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £7350, including lands previously owned by Lord Cranston, William Douglas, Turnbull of Toor, Lady Symington and William McGill. As well as Cavers estate, in 1788 he was listed as owner of Kirkton, Effledge, Whitriggs and East Middle in Kirkton Parish (valued at £1480), Haughhead (in Hawick, which was listed as formerly part of Scott of Horsleyhill’s lands of Weensland) and Cunzierton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish. He was probably the Laird of Cavers who subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid tax on 3–5 female servants in the period 1786–91, 4–5 male servants in 1786–93, 6 in 1794 and 5 in 1797 (in 1788 his servants were entered elsewhere). He was also taxed for owning a carriage in the years 1786–98, and for having 7 carriage horses in 1786 and 3 in 1787. In 1788 all his horse tax was recorded in Lothian, then he had 4 carriage horses 1789–94. Also in 1797 he is recorded as owner of 6 farm horses at Cavers on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as 5 carriage or saddle horses. Additionally he was taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire and was described at this time as having ‘a good estate’ and ‘inclined to Opposition’. In 1797 he exchanged his lands at Denholm Haugh with those of the Duke of Roxburgh at Hassendeanbank. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. In 1808 he famously rode to the top of Ruberslaw in a coach-and-four, to meet the Laird of Wells to settle a boundary issue over dinner. In 1811 he became a member of the Caledonian Horticultural Society. Also in about 1811 he was listed as owner of the Barony of Cavers (valued at £7250) in the Land Tax Rolls, and the part of Weensland called Haughhead, as well as Kirkton, Effledge, Whitriggs and East Middle. In 1812 he petitioned, along with his trustee Archibald Tod of Drygrange for exemption on the land-tax on Cavers estate. He married Lady Grace Stewart (also known as Jane Stuart), daughter of Francis, 8th Earl of Moray, in Edinburgh in 1789, and she died in 1846. Their children were: James, who succeeded; Francis James (d.1821), a Lieutenant in the Coldstream Guards; and Jane (d.1809), who died unmarried. Sir George of Friarshaw and Springwood (1754–1821) son of Adm. Sir James of Friarshaw. He was the second Baronet. He was a Captain in the 25th Regiment of Foot and also commanded the Kelso Volunteers. He sold off Friarshaw in 1788, the year after he succeeded. He is probably the Sir George who owned the lands of Longnewton in 1788, as well as other lands in Ancrum Parish. He was taxed from 1791 for having a housekeeper and 3 male servants at Springwood and 4 female servants in London. In the period 1789–98 he was taxed for owning a carriage and horses. In 1784 he became M.P. for Roxburghshire, retaining his seat until 1806. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811; he paid the land tax in 1811 for lands in Ancrum Parish, Roxburgh Parish and elsewhere. He was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (although deceased by then). He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Boyle, Earl of Glasgow (who was the niece of his stepmother). His children were: Elizabeth Georgina (d.1795); Helen (d.1791); and Sir John James, who succeeded. George (18th/19th C.) tenant at Belses Mill, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. George (b.c.1794) gamekeeper in Newcastleton. He was listed as a labourer in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835, and was listed as a ‘game watcher’ from 1836. He was living at around 11 North Hermitage Street in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret, Elizabeth, Janet and Agnes. He could be the ‘G. Douglas, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Capt. George of Timpendean (1819–65) son of William, he was the 12th and last Laird to hold the family lands. He sold the estate in 1843 to the Marquis of Lothian. When stationed in the Channel Islands he was accused by a local farmer of killing a bullock, exonerated in the civil court, but found guilty by court martial. He was Chief Commissioner of Western Gold District in Australia. He married Mary Beevor Carver. Their children included: Emma (b.c.1844); and Sholto George (b.c.1846), who died aged 13. He died at Bathurst, New South Wales. His brother Henry Sholto succeeded as head of the Timpendean line. George (1825–94) born in Ashkirk of humble stock, youngest of 3 sons of John and Mary Hood. His family emigrated to Canada in 1832 after his father’s failing fortunes as a miller. After trying a succession of jobs he became a Methodist, and eventually became President of the Wesleyan Theological College of Montreal. He was made LL. D. by McGill University in 1869. He married Maria Bolton Pearson in 1855 and they had 4 daughters. Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas George (1840/1–1913) farmer in Oxnam Parish. He became tenant at Ruletownhead in the late 1800s when Tom Brown retired from farming. He later held several separate farms, including Hindhope, Pledgerleith and Mainside, plus Campvale in Northumberland. He married Isabella (1842/3–1907), daughter of Andrew Turnbull, farmer at Redlees in Northumberland. His children included: Andrew (b.1865), who farmed Riccalton, Doorpool, Philogar and Saughtree; Mary (b.1867); Thomas (b.1869), who took over at Ruletownhead; John (b.1870); Alice (b.1872); and John (again, b.1874). He hunted with the Jedforest Hounds. He and his wife are buried at Oxnam. Sir George Brisbane Scott (1856–1935) poet, writer and critic, born in Gibraltar, but with a long connection to Kelso, where he lived at Springwood Park (and descended from the Douglasses of Cavers through the Friarshaw branch). He was son of Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas and inherited the family estates after his elder brother had died in the Zulu wars. He was a Justice of the Peace and Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He wrote ‘History of the border counties, Roxburgh, Selkirk, Peebles’ (1899), and edited many books of Scottish poetry, fairy tales, etc., e.g. ‘Scottish Fairy and Folk Tales’ (1894, 2000). He helped manage the ‘Scott Bequest Fund’ in the later part of the 19th century, which was used for educational and charitable purposes in Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He never married and was succeeded by his nephew Sir James who squandered the family fortunes. Rev. G.H. (19th/20th C.) from East Bank congregation in Hawick, he was ordained as minister of Patna in Ayrshire. Probably the same man was Presbyterian minister in Singapore, retiring in 1929. Henry of Friarshaw and Belses (d.1701) son of Andrew and Jean Home of Polworth. He was said to be 6th Laird of Friarshaw and also Laird of ‘Belches’. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1700 he was listed in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose. He married Martha, daughter of Samuel Lockhart of Castlehill in 1672. He was succeeded by his son George. Henry of Friarshaw (1703–78) son and heir of George of Friarshaw. He was recorded (incorrectly as ‘of Triershaw’) as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He left a daughter Maj. Henry George Sholto (1820–1892) son of Maj.-Gen. William. He succeeded his brother Maj. George as 13th Douglas of Timpendean, although the family estate had been sold by then. He was a Deputy Lieutenant of Leicestershire and held the Lordship of Fowlmere Manor. He married Mary Mitchell and had 13 children, including Lt.-Col. Henry Mitchell Sholto, who succeeded as head of the family line. Lt.-Col. Henry Mitchell Sholto (1847–1931) son of Henry Sholto. He married Georgina Ethel Gilbard and was succeeded by their son Maj. Henry James Sholto. Maj. Henry James Sholto (b.1903) son of Lt. Col. Henry Mitchell Sholto. He was the great-grandson of Maj.-Gen. William of Bonjedward and Timpendean. He matriculated arms in 1952 as the representative of Douglas of Timpendean. He married Cynthia Armorel Emily Fyers and their son James Alastair Sholto was born in 1939. Henry Scott (1935– ) local farmer and official Common Riding Song Singer 1985–1999. He was born at Catslackburn in Yarrow and attended school at Yarrow and Philiphaugh, and then attended Hawick High School when his father moved to Craik. They then moved to Hyndlee and finally Howahill (near Bonchester) in 1949, where he took over and farmed for about 50 years. He was Acting Father in 1978 and has been involved in many other aspects of the Common Riding. He was President of each of the Callants’ Club, the Ancient Order of Moststroopers and the 1514 Club. He sings regularly in the Borders and beyond and has released 2 tapes, ‘Singing for Fun’ in 1988 and ‘The Border Way’ in 1998, which include some of his own compositions. He sings ‘The Lasie That Works In The Mill’ on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, having partly adapted the more minimal tune sung by Walter Peden. He chaired the Callants’ Club sub-committee which brought out the 2001 edition of ‘The Hawick Songs’. His ‘Hosie’s Whistle’ features on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). His son John was Cornet in 1989 and his daughter Jill was Chief Guest in 2002. He himself was the ‘quincentenary’ Chief Guest in 2014. He was awarded an M.B.E. for services to the community of Banchester in 2014. Hugh ‘the Dull’ (1294–c.1345) Lord of Douglas, he was 2nd son of William ‘the Hardy’ and younger brother of Sir James ‘the Good’. In 1325 he is recorded as a Canon of Glasgow and Priest of Roxburgh and in 1329 witnessed a confirming charter relating to the Church at Roxburgh. He succeeded to the Douglas titles in 1333 after the death of his brother Sir Archibald and his nephew William, Lord Douglas. He probably fled to France during the time that England controlled southern Scotland. In 1342 he resigned his estates and titles (including the Lordship of Jedforest and Selkirk Forest, and several Baronies, such as Bedrule, Eskdale and Westerkirk) into the King’s hands, to be regranted to his nephew William, who became 1st Earl Douglas. Hugh (b.c.1431) recorded as Prebendary of Hawick in 1460. He was also Rector of Carnismuir (or Kirkymuir) in Whithorn, Treasurer of Glasgow, Canon of Aberdeen, Brechin and Bothwell and held the prebends of Kincardine and Guthrie. He was Treasurer of Glasgow from about 1457 until at least 1460. These were clearly financial and titular positions, and he is unlikely to have ever set foot in Hawick. He held the office through its connection with the Collegiate Church of Bothwell, and the patronage of the Douglases. He was nephew of James, Bishop of St. Andrews and directly related to King James II. He was probably a younger son of William, 2nd Earl of Angus. Hugh (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Hew of Douglace’ when, along with ‘Rinzeane of Ruthfurde’ he took George Young from Minto, for ‘Hugonin Dowglas’ when, along with ‘Rinzeane of Ruther- bly a younger son of William, 2nd Earl of Angus. Hugh (17th C.) recorded as ‘Hew Douglas’ residing at Blackleemouth in Hobkirk Parish when he witnessed a sasine in 1637. Hugh (b.1825) probably son of James and Mina Henderson. He was a flour miller in Rulewater who later became a warehouseman. He married Agnes, daughter of William Laidlaw. Their daughter Mary married Police Judge James McMorren. Isabella Countess of Mar (1360–1408) daughter of Margaret, Countess of Mar, and William, 1st Earl of Douglas. She firstly married Sir Malcolm Drummond. She was also known as ‘Isabel’. She inherited several of the Mar titles (including Cavers) when her brother James was killed at Otterburne. She granted the lands of Cavers to her (illegitimate) nephew, Archibald Douglas, but the confirmation of Robert III was not obtained, and the lands were ‘recognised’ to the King. According to a ratification of 1397 the lands of Cavers were given by James Sandilands (the King’s brother-in-law) to George Douglas, Earl of Angus (her half-brother and the King’s son-in-law). However, she outlived both Sandilands and the Earl of Angus, and the lands may have returned to her. In 1405 Robert III granted Cavers and the Sheriffdom of Roxburgh to Sir David Fleming, who was killed a few months later. In 1412 her charter was confirmed by James I and her nephew Archibald finally succeeded to become 1st of Cavers. In a similar way her lands of Drumlanrig went to her other nephew, Sir William, 1st of Drumlanrig. And in 1404 she granted the lands of Bonjedward to her (half) sister Margaret, who became the 1st Laird there. She secondly married Alexander Stewart, son of the ‘Wolf of Badenoch’. Her seal bore an image of a lady holding the Douglas and Marr shields. Isobel see Isobel Scott. Sir James of Lothian or Loundoun (d.1330) probably son of William of Mid- lothian. He had 4 children: Sir William of Liddesdale, ‘the Flower of Chivalry’; Sir John, ancestor of the Earls of Morton; Andrew; and William, perhaps illegitimate. Sir James Lord of Douglas (c.1286–1330) known variously as ‘The Good’ or ‘The Good Sir James’, ‘The Black Douglas’ and ‘The Brave Douglas’. He was son of Sir William and brother of Sir Archibald of Liddesdale and Cavers. He fought alongside Robert the Bruce, and after Bannockburn chased the young Edward II and his men all the way to Dunbar Castle, where he escaped to England by ship. He was believed by the English to have almost supernatural power. After the death of John Comyn (in 1305/6), who was branded a traitor, King Robert the Bruce gave him all of Comyn’s lands. This included the Barony of ‘Bethocroul’, i.e. Bedrule. He was also granted the town, castle and forest of Jedburgh, as well as the forests of Selkirk, Ettrick and Traquair. He commanded the left wing at Bannockburn, probably including thousands of Borderers. He also recaptured Roxburgh Castle, 1314, apparently disguising his men as oxen. He was made Warden of the West Marches about this time, when the Scottish army went to Ireland. His local residence was at Lintalee. In 1316 he killed Edmond of Caillou of Bordeaux, English Governor of Berwick, after a foray into Teviotdale. He was also involved with some other engagements with the English around Berwick in 1316. And in 1317 he ambushed an English force near Lintalee, using birch branches woven together to prevent escape; a wreath of stakes was added to his arms in 1325, possibly to commemorate this incident. In 1320 he was granted Jedburgh and its Castle and this was renewed in 1325. He was also one of the signatories of the Declaration of Arbroath in 1320. He may have been granted the Forest of Ettrick in 1322. He is also recorded being granted (probably around 1320) the lands of ‘Sonderland, in the barony of Hawick’, as well as ‘Lintonrothrekis’ (this was in ‘Robertson’s Index’, and probably corresponded to Sunderland in Selkirkshire along with lands connected with Linton in Roxburghshire). In the Douglas ‘Emerald Charter’ of 1324 there are many lands listed as being conferred upon him by the King, without some of the usual feudal obligations; this was at least partly in lieu of a large ransom payment that he could have collected for 3 French knights who surrendered to him at the Battle of Biland. These lands included the Barony of Douglas, Forest of Selkirk, Constabulary of Lauder, Forest of Jedburgh, with Bonjedburgh, Barony of Bedrule, and Baronies of Westerkie, Staplegordon and Romanno. Other lands were confirmed to him at that time, probably including Cavers, and Ringwood. He died in Spain, at the Battle of Teba, while returning the Bruce’s heart to the Holy Land. He had 2 children by unknown mothers: William, Lord Douglas, who incorporated the ‘bloody heart’ into his arms and died at Halidon Hill; and Archibald ‘the Grim’, who was illegitimate, but later became Earl of Douglas – ‘There was a man so dark and true, What Scotland loved so dear, There was a king whose lang will rue, The Scot what fled him here’ [T]. J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Stonedge in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. James (c.1358-88) 2nd Earl of Douglas and of Mar, son of William, the 1st Earl and Margaret, Countess of Mar. He held the Lordship of Liddesdale after his father’s death in 1384 (and possibly a few years before), as well as succeeding to extensive Douglas estates in southern Scotland. He witnessed several charters during the reign of Robert II. He had French assistance in the war with England in 1385. In the period 1384–88 he granted his Barony of Drumlanrig to his son William. He had a confirmation of rights in the Barony of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1388. In 1388 he assembled an army under the Douglas banner, which marched into England. He captured Percy’s pennon near Newcastle and was killed at the Battle of Otterburn, as told in the ballads, where ‘a dead man won the field’. He held several local pieces of land, including Cavers estate (although these may have been formally held by his mother Margaret, Countess of Mar in her own right). He married Isabella (also known as Eupheme) Stewart (daughter of Robert II), possibly at the age of only 15. However, since he left no legitimate heirs, was succeeded by his cousin Archibald ‘the Grim’, Lord of Galloway; his widow secondly married Sir John Edmondstone of Dunreath. His illegitimate sons William and Archibald eventually became heads of the Drumlanrig and Cavers branches, respectively. He also had daughters Eleanor and Joan (who married William, 5th Lord Dacre). His wife Isabella kept the Lordship of Liddesdale in her own right after his death and his sister (also Isabella) inherited many of his lands. He is buried in Melrose. Stories are told of his armour being kept at Cavers House, but these are merely legends. James ‘the Gross’ (d.1443) 7th Earl of Douglas, he was 2nd son of Archibald the 3rd Earl and succeeded his great-nephew, William (who was beheaded in 1423). Before becoming Earl he was referred to as ‘of Balveny’. In 1405/6 he killed Sir David Fleming, who held the lands of Cavers at the time. In 1427 he was one of the witnesses to the charter granting the Barony of Hawick to William, son of Sir William of Drumlanrig; he is listed there as ‘Jacobo de Douglas de Balvany’. In about 1432 he was superior of the Barony of Cavers when the grant of the Kirk to Melrose Abbey was confirmed. In 1432 he witnessed a charter of Sprouston for his nephew, Archibald, 5th Earl of Douglas. He was also made Earl of Avondale in 1437. He served as Justiciar for the South of Scotland. As such he ruled on a legal dispute regarding the ownership of East Mains, siding with the Baron of Hawick, his relative! He also served as Warden of the Marches. He married Beatrice, daughter of Robert Stewart, Duke of Albany. In 1424 he secondly married Beatrix Sinclair, daughter of the Earl of Orkney, and with her had 11 children: William, who succeeded; James, who succeeded his brother, and was a twin with Archibald; Archibald, who became Earl of Moray, and was killed at the Battle of Arkinholm; Hugh, who was executed after capture at Arkinholm in 1455; Sir John, Lord of Balveny, executed in 1463; Henry, who was a priest; George, who died young; Margaret, who married Sir Henry Douglas of Borg; Beatrice, who married Sir William Hay of Erroll and secondly Arthur Forbes; Janet, who married Robert Fleming; and Elizabeth, who married William Wallace of Craige.

James (d.1446/7) 3rd Earl of Angus, eldest son of William, the 2nd Earl. He was served heir to his father in 1439, and this probably included the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1439 he was superior for Jed Forest on a document for the Douglases of Bonjedward. He died without issue and was succeeded by George, who was probably his brother.

James (15th C.) part of the panel for the ‘retour’ of William Douglas inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1450, done in the presence of Archibald of Cavers. All the panel members were prominent Roxburghshire landowners, but it is unclear who he was exactly. Probably the same James was witness to a charter for William of Cavers (for the lands of Blackpool) in 1450. He may be the same as James, Captain of Drumlanrig, who was the Earl’s Bailie, recorded in the 1452 in the sasine for the Barony of Hawick to William of Drumlanrig. James (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobo de Douglas’ when he was the first witness of the sasine made at Cavers in 1464/5 for Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire. This suggests he was a relative of the new Baron, perhaps an uncle. George was also a witness, so probably related. He may also be the James who was mentioned in 1476 in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville.

James (1425–1491) 9th Earl of Douglas, 2nd son of James the 7th Earl, he succeeded his twin brother William. He had sasine in 1452 for superiority of the Baronies of Sprouston, Smallholm, Hawick, Bedrule and ‘Broundoun’. As superior of the Barony of Hawick, he gave the ‘precept of sasine’ for the barony for William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452. He headed a revolt against the King that appeared to have ended in 1452, but resumed in 1454, with the King’s force destroying many of his towers, including lands in Ettrick Forest. He forfeited many of his titles in 1455, including Lord Warden of the Marches, after which this ceased to be hereditary. In 1463 the Scotts of Buccleuch received new charters from the King for assisting on the King’s side in the rebellion he led. In 1453 he married Margaret ‘the Fair Maid of Galloway’, daughter of Archibald Douglas, the 5th Earl, and widow of his brother William (hence she had been his sister-in-law). He secondly married Anne Holland, daughter of the Duke of Exeter. James (15th C.) recorded as deputy to the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, William Douglas, in 1471. He was also listed in regard to extracting fines from the courts of Ettrick Forest in 1471. It is unclear who the William was (probably a Douglas of Cavers, but perhaps William of Cluny); his identity is a mystery, but he may have been a brother of the Laird of Cavers, possibly a younger son of Sir Archibald, 3rd Laird. James (d.1498) 5th Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He was son of Sir William, to whom he succeeded in 1484. He had a brother, Archibald, who was ancestor of the Cosgole branch. He married Janet (probably eldest) daughter of Sir David Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, the marriage contract being signed between the fathers in 1470. When he inherited the Drumlanrig and Hawick Baronies, he and his wife already held the demesne lands of East Mains and Kirkton. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Drumlanrig by Grierson of Kepanoch in 1490. In 1492 he granted the Barony and Castle of Drumlanrig to his son William, retaining the liferent for himself. In 1494 he gave the lands of West Mains and Crumhaugh to his son and heir William. His Bailies appointed for the purposes of this sasine were George, William and James Douglas (probably relatives of some sort) and Gilbert ‘M’Cawill’. His children were: William, who succeeded; Gavin; and Janet, who married Roger Grierson of Windiehill (who died at Flodden). He appears as Baron in a charter of 1502 for Whithope (the dates perhaps being in error). Sir James (d.1545) 5th (or 6th) of Cavers, son of Sir William, who he succeeded in 1506. In 1508 he had a charter for the churches of Spittal and Caeerlenrig. He was already Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1508 in the ‘retour’ for Adam Hepburn as heir to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, in the Lordship of Hermitage. In 1509 he received special consideration from the King as his father’s heir.
Douglas

because of ‘the gude and thankful service done to the Kingis hienes . . . quhilk deit in defens of his realm and resisting of his inimies of Ingland and rebellis’. This included the lands and Barony of Cavers, with free disposition of his marriage and other rights. He was ‘in the King’s ward’ before this, suggesting he was a minor until 1509. In 1509/10 the lands and Barony of Cavers were ‘recognosed’ in the King’s hands to be regranted; this finally resolved the issue of inheritance that arose a century earlier. In 1511 he had a royal charter of ‘novodamus’ from James IV, for the town of Cavers, with the lands, castle, manor and mill; the charter lists the lands within the Barony of Cavers at that time. Also in 1511 he resigned his superiority of the lands of Rutherford and Wells, into the King’s hands, to be given to Helen Rutherford. In 1512, along with his wife Elizabeth Murray, he had a charter for the lands of ‘Zarlside’ (presumably Earlside) and ‘Pencrîse’. He would have been Sheriff of Teviotdale at the time of Hornshole, as well as the earlier Sclaterford skirmish. In 1515 he is recorded as Baron of Hawick giving a charter of Whithope to William Scott, brother of Walter of Branxholme. He was Sheriff in 1517 for the ‘retour’ of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was on an inquest for the succession of the lands of John Home in 1523. In 1529 he served as surety that James of Drumlanrig would not attempt to escape from ward in Edinburgh Castle. In 1530 he was one of the Lairds who submitted themselves to the ‘King’s will’ to keep peace on the Border. He is recorded in 1529/30 when William Routledge resigned his half of the lands of Crook to him. The resignation was to an honourable man, James Douglas of Cauveris, in name and on behalf of Martin Douglas’ (whose relationship is unknown). In 1538 he was convicted (along with Kers and Rutherfords) of allowing several rebels to live on their land etc. In 1541 he complained to the Lords of Council that Walter Scott of Branxholme had burned his farm of Whitriggs; 41 of his associates (probably mainly tenants) are listed in the case. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Murray of Falahill, who was probably ‘the Outlaw Murray’. His known children are: Sir James, who succeeded: William, 1st Laird of Friarshaw; and Robert of Todhills. Sir James (d.1558) 6th (or 7th) of Cavers and Sheriff of Teviotdale, son of Sir James and Elizabeth Murray. In 1545 he succeeded his father as Baron of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburgh, as well as the lands of Kirkton Mains in the Barony of Hawick. In late 1545 a Parliametary decree arranging 500 horsemen to be mustered in Teviotdale stated that 25 of them could be chosen among his followers and friends and captained by either him or his brother. In 1546 he is recorded in a bond along with several other Borderers presenting Elliot of Thorlieshope as prisoners to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Around 1547 he was among the Border Lairds who paid homage to the Duke of Somerset. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’, ‘with my hand at the pen’ (suggesting that he could not write). He was indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1553/4 he was Sheriff for the ‘retour’ of the young Sir Walter Scott as heir to his grandfather. In 1554 he gave a notorial instrument for an acre of land in the Barony of Cavers to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry. He married Christian, daughter of Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, and her testament is recorded in 1581. His children included: Sir William, who succeeded; James, mentioned in 1584/5; and Robert, mentioned in 1585. After his death his wife kept the ‘liferent’ of Effledge, Cote and Kirkton Mains. Sir James (1498–1578) 7th Baron of Drumlanrig and also Baron of Hawick, son of William. He re-granted the town its charter in 1537 when he was 39. It is traditionally said that he was born in the Tower in Hawick, but there is no evidence for this. In 1514 he inherited the Barony of Hawick, with special dispensation from the King because of his age (this would have been shortly after the Hornshole incident). ‘Bonds of manrent’ to him are recorded in 1518 (with Lord Robert Maxwell), 1526 (involving Ninian Crichton of ‘Bellibocht’), 1527 (involving John Menzies of the ‘Castalbyll’), 1544/5 (involving Andrew Rorrison of ‘Bardanocht’), 1545 (involving John Cunningham of ‘Byrkschaw’) and 1550 (involving John and George ‘CARRYDDERIS of HOLMENDIS’). In 1545 he was among Border lairds who gave assurance to ‘have na intelligence with Ingland’ and also among lairds of Teviotdale who signed an assurance to end feuds. In 1526 he had a ‘respite’, along with James Gordon of Lochinvar and 37 of their kinsmen and associates for communing with Alexander Forester (and others dwelling upon ‘Levin’) and for the murder of Thomas McClellan in Edinburgh. He helped in the attempt to rescue the young James V from his step-father the Earl of Angus in 1526, along with Scott of Branxholme. Also in 1526 he protested that what was done against the Scotts of Howpasley, Allanhaugh and Borthaugh, who all held lands of him, should do him no prejudice. In 1529 he was held in Edinburgh Castle, with James of Cavers serving as surety that he would not attempt to escape. However he was later engaged by the King in many battles. In 1532 he was accused of treason by Robert Charteris of Amisfield (with the reasons not being recorded) and the challenge was settled in single combat at Holyrood, but ended without injury on either side; in one description of the combat he is described as ‘sumquhat sand-blind’ (i.e. short-sighted). In 1535 the King revoked several charters relating to the superiority of lands formerly held by the Homes, including Broadlee in the Borthwick valley that had involved him. In 1536/7 he had a gift from the King of all the non-entries, taxes, etc. due from his lands in Dumfriesshire, while they were in the King’s hands after his father’s death at Flodden; this was confirmed by another grant by Queen Mary in 1541/2 and charters of 1544/5. In 1538 he had a marriage contract for his daughter Janet to marry William, son of Archibald in Cashogil (probably a first or second cousin). He was in England in 1541, apparently having been accused as accessory to murder, and having fallen out of favour with the Scottish Crown. He was taken prisoner after the battle of Solway Moss in 1542. In 1543 he joined the Earl of Angus in warlike movements against the Earl of Lennox and others. He also appears to have given his support to the English about that time. In 1543/4 he was charged with the murder of the Rector of Kilbride. He was appointed as a ‘justiciary’ to apprehend criminals in his area in 1546. In 1549 his lands at Drumlanrig were plundered by Lord Wharton. An inventory and will was drawn up for him in 1550. In 1551 he was recorded as superior of the lands of Broadlee in the Borthwick. In 1552 he was appointed as one of the Queen’s Commissioners to meet the English Commissioners. In 1553 (or perhaps earlier) he was knighted by the Regent, the Duke of Chatelherault and appointed Warden of the Western Marches, with the use of the Castle of Lochmaben during his warrenry. He was continued as Warden according to a Commission of Queen Mary in 1555. In 1556 he accompanied the Earl of Bothwell on expeditions against the Armstrongs. In 1558 there was an agreement between him and Charles Murray of Cockpool to submit to the decision of James, Lord Somerville. In 1559 he infefted his son William as his heir in the lands of Drumlanrig, Sheriffdom of Dumfries and other lands including the Barony of Hawick; this consisted of ‘the town of Hawick with mill, lands of Eist Manis, West Manis, Crunach and Kirkton Mannis, Flekkis, Carlinpile, &c., and in tenantry Howpaslet, Chesholme, Quhitechestir, Edgaristoun, &c.’. He was present in Parliament in 1560 when the Confessions of Faith were ratified and in 1561 at Edinburgh Tolbooth he signed the first Book of Discipline of the Convention of Estates. It has been stated that his support for the Protestant cause at that time would have virtually exonerated the people of Hawick from maintaining the lamp before the altar of St. Mary’s. In 1563/4 he had a marriage contract for his daughter Janet and William, eldest son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. In 1564 he and his son Sir William of Hawick were given remission for associating with James, Earl of Moray and others. In 1564/5 he witnessed the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs to end their feud. He was in great favour with Queen Mary, but acted against her in 1567 when she was captured at Carberry. He was at the Battle of Langside in 1568 (although quite an old man by then), fighting on the side of the Regent Moray. In 1569 he served as surety for Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton. He is recorded several times entering accused men before the Privy Council in the years around 1570. He was himself taken prisoner in 1571 by David Spence, Laird of Ormiston, probably on the orders of the government; his son narrowly escaped not knowing if he was alive or dead he had his captors let him send this letter: ‘Willie, Thou sall wit that I am haill and feare. Send me word thairfoir how thou art hwther deid or livand? Gif thou be deid, I doubt not but friendis will let me know the treuth, and gif thou be weid, I desyre na mair’. He visited John Knox on his death bed in 1572. In 1573 he was liable to a fine when the man he was cautioner for failed to appear. Also in 1573 he signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. Also in 1574 there was a deed where he agreed to infeft his lands to his grandson James, son of the late Sir William of Hawick. There is a bond of 1575 relating to offences against him by friends or servants of John Johnstone. Also in 1575 he was ‘surety in relief’ according to the register of the Privy Council. In 1578 he appended to his will a statement of concern that his grandson and heir should not be influenced by the ‘wickit nature’ of his mother. Called ‘Old Drumlanrig’ towards the end of his life, he was succeeded by his grandson Sir James. He is known locally as ‘the Generous Donor’ because of the 1537 charter (although there is some ambiguity about whether his father is meant). He was responsible for building the 'L-shaped' main part of Drumlanrig's Tower, probably around the 1550s. It has also been fancifully suggested that he may have been the one to carry the flag back from Hornshole, but this seems highly unlikely. He married Margaret, daughter of George Douglas, Master of Angus, and sister to Archibald, 6th Earl of Angus. They had 3 daughters: Janet, who married Sir William Douglas of Cashogle, and secondly John Charteris of Amisfield (possibly a descendant of the Charteris family of Langlands, and son of the man who had accused him of treason); Margaret, who married John Jardine of Applegarth; and Nicholas, who married James Johnstone of Johnstone. Things did not go well with this marriage, a notorial instrument of 1530 legally recording that he ‘required her earnestly to go with him to his place and dwelling of Drumlanrig, and adhere to him as spouse ought to spouse’, which she had previously refused to do. The couple divorced, and they were still arguing in court about the financial settlement in 1539. He secondly married Christian, daughter of John Montgomery, Master of Eglington, whose testament is recorded in Edinburgh in 1581. In 1540 he resigned his lands of Drumlanrig and others into the hands of his superior, in order to regrant them to his heirs and to his wife Christain Montgomery ‘in liferent’. In about 1540 the couple had a letter of dispensation from a Cardinal in Rome, allowing them to marry, although they were ‘within the simple third and quadruple fourth degrees of affinity’. With her he had 1 son, Sir William of Hawick (who predeceased him), along with 4 daughters: Margaret, who married 3 times, to the Lord of Sanquhar, the Earl of Monteith and Wauchope of Niddrie; Helen, who married Roger Grierson of Lag and Rock Hall; Janet, who married James Tweedie of Drumelzier, and secondly William Ker of Cessford (with a daughter Mary Ker marrying Sir Walter Scott, ‘the Bold’ Buccleuch); and Christian, who married Sir Alexander Stewart of Garlies. He also had a son John (perhaps illegitimate) who was described as ‘in Steppis’ when he was denounced as a rebel in 1556 for murdering a Dalyell; a natural son, John ‘in Erschemortoun’ is recorded in 1564 (presumably also the one mentioned in 1556). Being predeceased by his only legitimate son, he was succeeded by his grandson (i.e. William’s son) Sir James. When his grandson succeeded him in 1578, there was an inventory of his possessions drawn up, stating that he had ‘beildit the haill hous and pallice of Drumlanrig’, held the ‘hous and toure of Hawik, and conquest [i.e. acquired] the Sowtre landis in Hawik’. His wife’s testament was drawn up in 1581. His seal showed 3 mullets (i.e. stars) in the 1st and 4th quarters, a heart in the second and third and 3 crosses on a band across the top – ‘Then Douglas of Drumlanrig. He helped to ease the pain, By granting lands his charter Made Hawick’s heart beat again’ [GLG]. James 4th Earl of Morton (c.1516–81) 2nd son of George of Pittendreich, who was Master of Angus. In 1553 he succeeded to his father-in-law’s titles and estates, including Dalkeith House. He was involved in politics and warfare during the Rough Wooing, and was held prisoner in England. He was appointed Lord Chancellor of Scotland in 1563. He was also heavily involved in national affairs during the Reformation and led the army that defeated the forces loyal to Mary, Queen of Scots in 1568. In 1572 he became Regent of Scotland (the last of the 4 men to hold this position), eventually being forced to resign in 1578. In 1574 he was the main executor named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. After being found guilty for taking part in the murder of Darnley, he was executed in 1581, using the ‘maiden’ that he had helped introduce to Scotland. He was succeeded in the Earldom by his nephew Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Douglas, 3rd Earl of Morton. Although he had no children with his wife, he is said to have had around 7 illegitimate children (including James and Archibald, who were exiled in 1583/4). His capture was instigated by accusations from Capt. William Stewart, which led to a reprisal, with Stewart being killed by James of Parkhead in 1596, and then James being killed by a Stewart in 1608. James (16th C.) probably son of Sir James of Cavers and brother of Sir William. In 1565 he (along with William of the Crook) was fined for the non-appearance of William Elliot of Larriston and William Elliot of Falnash at the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He is listed as brother of the Sheriff in 1584/5 among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. James of Earlside (16th C.) recorded as ‘goodman of Yerlesyde’ in 1590 when he was among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott's of Carrick. Others listed include Elliot of the Hill, Martin's Cren Crozier, Thomas Laidlaw of the Haugh and John Henderson of Penderleith. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Douglases. James (16th C.) listed as ‘James Dowglas called of Deyneb ray’ when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for Crook in 1592. He must have had an association with Deanbrae, and may be the brother of Sir William of Cavers recorded in 1565. James of Todhills (16th C.) recorded as surety with the Privy Council in 1572 for a man in Edinburgh. He is surely related to the later James, ‘apperand of Todhoill’. Sir James (d.1612) 8th of Cavers, son of Sir William and Euphemia Ker. In 1576/7 his father resigned his lands, Barony and Sheriffship to him, reserving ‘liferent’ for himself. It thus appear that he took over running the Cavers estates during his father’s lifetime. In 1579 he was ‘younger of Cavers’ when he witnessed a sasine for Midshiels and Appletreehall. In 1588 he was Sheriff of Roxburghshire (but still ‘younger’ of Cavers). About 1590 he was listed among landed men of the Borders. In 1591 he served as surety for Walter Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1593 he (along with the Warden, William Ker of Cessford) was granted a warrant to apprehend Sir John Ker of the Hirsel. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1601 when he appeared at the trial over the Kerr-Turnbull feud in Jedburgh. Also in 1601 he was one of the Scotsmen (along with Turnbull of Minto) accused by several Englishmen of stealing their livestock from the Stobs and the Crag, as well as being in another group accused by Henry Woodrington of stealing cattle from him; in the same year he accused some of the same people of stealing 2 horses from him. In 1604 he served as surety for the Turnbulls of Stanedge and Barnhills, who were tried for killing 6 sons of Graham slaw of Newton. About the same time he bought the lands of ‘Nuke’ from Andrew Friarshaw, the related financial obligation being the focus of a court case of 1607. In 1610 he was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire. Also in 1610 he and his son William had a bond (with Thomas Turnbull of Minto acting as cau tioner) not to harm Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk or his colleagues; the nature of this dispute is unclear. He married Margaret (or perhaps Janet) Cranstoun in 1580, having a son Sir William, who succeeded. He later married a daughter of Sir James McGill and had 2 sons who took the surname McGill: James, probably related to the later minister of Cavers, Walter McGill; and Thomas, who became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1634. The 1643 valuation of Cavers Parish lists both ‘Anna McGill, Lady Summing ton’ and ‘Mr Walter McGill’ as landowners, suggesting that they may both connected to his family, perhaps his children, or otherwise siblings of his 2nd wife. His daughter Elizabeth married William Elliot of Stobs, and later Sir William Douglas of Kelhead. Another daughter, Margaret, married John, son of Archibald Douglas, Archdeacon of Glasgow in 1607. The James of Cavers who wrote a letter to the Privy Council in February 1613 is presumably his son, since he was deceased by then. Sir James (d.1615) 8th Baron of Drumlanrig and also Baron of Hawick. In 1572 he was served as heir to his father, Sir William Douglas of Hawick and grandfather Sir James of Drumlanrig. This included the town of Hawick, with its mill, together with the lands of ‘Eist Manis, West Manis, Cruhauch et Kirkton Manis, Flekakis et Muryneis, Ramsay Clewis, Braid Ley, Teinesyde, Carlingpule et Almonslandis’ and in tenandry the lands of ‘Howpaslet, Chesholme, Quhitehoip, Drydame, Commounside, Ovir Harwood, Emetschellis, Netir Harwood, Wyndislandis, Ovir Harwood, Wyndislandis, Eister et Wester Heislehoip, Langhauch, Laurs Toftis, Kirkwood, Harwoodhill, Quhitechestir, Fynnik, Edgaristoun, Edgaristounscheselis et Quhomis’. There was a further deed of 1574 where his grandfather declared him to be his heir. He succeeded to Drumlanrig in 1578 on the death of his grandfather James (his father having already died). At that time an inventory of his possessions was drawn up, showing that he owned many pieces of land. In 1581/2 he was ordered to enter a number of Bells, Grahams and others before the Privy Council. In 1582 he was cautioner (along with Robert, Provost of Lincluden) for William Bell for rieving, the pair were committed to ward in 1583 for gathering 50 or so men and raiding the farm of Bonshaw, and in 1585 was surety for Robert himself. He had a confirming charter of his lands granted by James VI in 1591/2 and ratified by Parliament in 1594. This listed the Barony of Hawick as including the lands transcribed as ‘East Manys, West Manys, Cruhauch and Kirtoun of Manys, Flekis, Maisteraynies, Ramsay Clewis, Braidley, Teinside, Carling Pule and Almonslandis’ and in tenandry the lands of ‘Howpaslet, Chisholme, Whitehope, Dryden, Commonside, Over Harwood, Emeschellis, Nether Harwood, Weyndislandis, Easter and Wester Hessilhoip, Langhaugh,

Douglas

Douglas

Laws, Tofts, Kirkwood, Harwoodhill, Whitchester, Fynnik, Edgerston, Edgerston Scheillis and Quhawmes'. In 1593 he signed a bond of cooperation with Maxwell of Castlemilk and Kirkpatrick of Closeburn against Sir James Johnstone of Dunskellie. In 1595 he accompanied Lord Hay on a foray into Annandale. A bond of 1601 between the Bailies and Burgesses of Hawick and him led to a dispute that lasted for many years after his death. In 1603 he was caution for John Douglas, in lands of Glencairn. In 1607 there was a complaint made against him and others by Adam Menzies of Enoch; this mentions his son and heir William, 2nd son (probably James) and his natural son John. He was served heir to his grandfather James' lands in Dalswinton in 1608. He sat in Parliament as a minor baron in 1608 and 1609. He had a remission in 1609 from the King, for any killing or other acts committed by him during his time as Warden of the West Marches of Scotland, before the union of the crowns. In 1609 many of his lands were united into the Barony and Regality of Drumlanrig by Crown charter. He sat in the General Assembly in 1610. About 1610 there was a dispute between him and Walter Scott, Lord of Buccleuch over the lands of Whithope. Also in 1610 he brought an action against William of Howpasley and James Gledstains of that Ilk to remove from lands of his (including Howpasley), as well as for taxes he claimed they owed him as superior. In 1610 he was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace of Dumfriesshire and in 1612 was appointed a commissioner for keeping the peace in that county. In 1612 the Bailies of Hawick made a legal challenge to Drumlanrig’s hereditary authority by imposing a stent on householders within the Burgh and also a tax at the market (in order to pay off debts the town had contracted) without the permission of the Baron; he complained to the Privy Council, also alleging that they were refusing to allow his own men to collect the traditional market dues and confined his ‘tacksman’ to the steeples of St. Mary’s! In 1615, sometime after gaining the lands of Howpasley, about 60 of his sheep were slaughtered by a band of men collected by Lady Scott of Howpasley and Jean Scott of Satchells. It is clear from all of this that he (or perhaps his local officers) was far from popular locally. He married Mary Fleming, sister of John, 5th Lord Flemming, the marriage contract being in 1581; his wife was granted liferent of the demesne lands of Hawick in 1616. In later life his affairs were taken over by his son William, who eventually succeeded and became 1st Earl of Queensberry. Another son was Sir James of Mouswald (or ‘Mousell’), who was an M.P. His natural son John married Isobella, daughter of John Douglas of ‘Killivarrand’ in 1607. Other children may have included: George of Pinzerie; Janet, who married William Livingstone of Jerviswood; and Helen, who married John Menzies of Castlehill. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘apperand of Todhooil’ in a 1601, when he was described as being shot ‘with twa bulletis in the wambe’ when listed among the wounded in the skirmish between the Turnbuls and Kers in Jedburgh. He appears to have been an ally of the Turnbuls of Minto. He is also recorded as surety in a trial of 1612. He was presumably related to earlier Douglastes of Todhills (or ‘Todholes’). James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 as ‘in Cruik’ in the court case dealing with the skirmish between Turnbuls and Kerrs (and their supporters) on Jedburgh Fair Day. He was wounded ‘in the neife’ (i.e. fist) and dismembered ‘of ane pairt thairf’. Several others in the Turnbull party were killed and others maimed, while 2 on the Kerr side were killed. He was probably related to the earlier William of Crook and Martin in Crook. He is probably the same James who was granted lands within Crook by his father William in 1581. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1607 as being ‘in Freirschaw’ in a court case with John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw. The case centred on an obligation of £1,000 that James Douglas of Cavers had paid to Andrew of Friershaw for the lands of ‘Nuke’. He must therefore have been a close relative of Andrew, although the connection is not clear. James (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Cavers’ in a 1612 document listing people convicted of charging too much interest on loans. Along with John (also in Cavers, and probably a relative) he failed to appear and was denounced as a rebel. Sir James (c.1591–1656) 1st Lord Mordonig. He was brother of William, who was 10th Earl of Angus and 1st Marquess of Douglas. He held lands in the Rule valley, being granted Templehall and Brewlands in 1627. He married Ann, daughter of Laurence, 5th Lord Oliphant and was succeeded by his son William. James of Lochleven (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William, 6th Earl of Morton. He was Com- menderator of Melrose Abbey in about the years 1569–1606. He thus held the superiority of some local lands, including the kirklands of Hassendean and Cavers. In 1573 he led a court case against Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for the ‘wranguis minister of Cavers. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1637, became the assistant to

Walter McGill at Cavers in 1647, and succeeded after his death 4 years later. He is recorded as still being minister in April 1658 and probably

ning over later that year). Note that the minister of Hobkirk at about the same time had the same name. He may have been closely related to the Douglases of Cavers, and/or the previous incumbent Walter McGill (this being the surname of the 2nd wife of Sir James of Cavers who died in 1612). However, the precise relationship is uncertain. James (c.1646–1700) son of Archibald,

Earl of Angus and 1st Earl of Ormond. He succeded his grandfather William as 2nd Marquess de Douglas. He is probably the Marquess of Dooglas for whom Thomas Laidlaw paid the Land

Tax in Southdean Parish in 1663. In 1668 he was served heir to his father in several titles, including Lordship of the Barony of Jedforest and of Selkirk; he thus held the superiority of Southdean

Parish. He paid tax on land valued at £4475 in Southdean Parish in 1678, as well as lands in Jedburgh and in Selkirkshire. He contributed £500 to the Darien Company in 1695. He was a Privy

Councillor under Charles II and James VII. He married Barbara, daughter of John Erskine, Earl of Mar and secondly married Mary, daughter of Robert Kerr, 1st Marquess of Lothian. The end of his marriage with his first wife is immortalised in the ballad `Waly Waly'. His children included:

James, Earl of Angus, who died at the Battle of Steinkirk, aged 20; William, who died in infancy; and Archibald, who became 3rd Marquess.

Rev. James (1624/5–65) younger son of William Douglas of Bonjedward and brother of John, who was minister of Yetholm and Crailing. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1645 and became minister at Hobkirk in 1652, where he remained until his death. There is a discharge of 1657 for vicarage teinds of Harwood in the National Archives involving him. He was one of the few conformist ministers in the district who were not expelled in the early 1660s. He married Jean

Martin and their children included: William, who succeeded to the lands at Newhall and Plewlands

in 1669; and Robert, who became an apprentice apothecary in Edinburgh in 1679. Thomas, lawful son of James, witnessed a document for Hobkirk teinds in 1657, but would have been too young to be this James’ son. He was buried in Hobkirk graveyard, on ‘Cowdie’s Knowe’, his gravestone (a through-stone) being marked

‘MAISTER IAMES DOWGLAS SONE TO THE

LAIRD OF BOONIED(BR)GH LATE MINIS-

TER OF HOBKIRK’. James (d.1671) 2nd Earl of Queensberry and also Baron of Hawick, son of William, the 1st Earl. He succeeded his father in 1640 and acquired many additional lands (particularly in Dumfriesshire) to add to the family estate. In 1640 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Rev. Robert Cunningham. In 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being ‘notorious criminalls, theeves and ressetters of thift’. In a county valuation placed on his lands in the Barony of Hawick. Around 1670 he disputed Hawick’s rights to the Common (this battle being taken up by his son William after he succeeded as Baron of Hawick). He firstly married Mary, 3rd daughter of James, 2nd Marquis of Hamilton, the marriage contract being in 1630; they had no issue. In 1635 he married his second wife Margaret, eldest dughter of John Stewart, 1st Earl of Traquair

(he died in about 1673). They had 9 children:

William (b.1637), who succeeded and became 1st

who was at Bothwell Bridge and the Battle of the Boyne; John (d.1675) who died in the Siege of Treves; Robert (d.1676), who died in the Siege of Maastricht; Mary, who married Alexander Stewart, 3rd Earl of Galloway; Catherine, who married Sir James Douglas of Kellhead; Henrietta, who married Sir Robert Grierson of Lag; Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth; and Isobel, who married Sir William Lockhart of Carstairs. James (d.1674) brother of Sir William of Cavers. He was stabbed by Andrew Rutherford of Townhead when they were returning from dining at Swanside near Jedburgh, and died from the wounds. Rutherford was caught, tried and beheaded in Edinburgh. James (17th C.) son and heir of William, who was described as an advocate in 1672 when he inherited his father’s Lordship and Barony of Jedforest (i.e. the superiority of lands in Southdean). They were probably related to the Marquesses of Douglas, who had held this Barony in the decades before. He was probably dead by 1684, when his sisters Margaret and Jean were served as joint heirs to this same Lordship. James (17th C.) tailor in Roberton Parish. He married Janet Henderson and their children included: James (b.1682); and Thomas (b.1686). The witnesses in 1682 were Thomas Henderson (probably related to his wife) and James Dryden, and in 1686 were James Dryden and John Armstrong. James (17th C.) recorded as a ‘student’ in 1678. He witnessed (along with another student, Walter Laing) the baptism for Andrew Angus in Hawick Parish. James (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He was probably related to Jean and John, who were also listed. James (17th C.) listed in the 1694 Horse Tax rolls at Cavers. James 2nd Duke of Queensberry (1672–1711), eldest son of William the 1st Duke. He was served heir to his father in 1695. He was created Baron Rippon, Marquis of Beverley and Duke of Dover in the British peerage, and still held several Scottish titles, including Lord Douglas of Hawick. While Earl of Drumlanrig he was appointed Colonel of the 6th Horse Guards Regiment, and ‘Drumlanrig’s troop’ mustered in Hawick in 1687. He was made a Privy Councillor in 1690 and was one of Scotland’s representative peers in Parliament 1707–08. He served as Lord High Treasurer of Scotland as well as Secretary of State and Lord High Commissioner and is credited with drafting the ‘Act of Union’ of 1707 (hence being sometimes known as the ‘Union Duke’). In 1706 he resigned his titles into the hands of the Queen, to be regranted to himself and his heirs. He married Mary, daughter of Charles, Lord Clifford. One of his daughters married Francis, Duke of Buccleuch. The titles of Marquess and Earl passed to his insane son James, while the Dukedom passed to a younger son, Charles. James (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Kirktoun’ farm. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Betty (b.1718), John (b.1720) and Robert (b.1725). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at East Mains in 1716 when his daughter Elspeth was baptised. James of the Trows (17th/18th C.) related to the Cavers family, the connection said to be through an illegitimate son. He may also at one point have been Laird of Earlside. In 1720 he was tenant at the Trows when he made a loan to Archibald Douglas of Cavers. His daughter Margaret (b.1709) married James Oliver and another daughter Esther (b.1715) married Thomas Turnbull (of the Hawick carpet factory). He is probably the same James who was listed at Trows on the 1694 Horse Tax records. His son-in-law James Oliver is said to have taken over the farm of Earlside from him. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at ‘brodlees’ in 1721 and 1724. It is unclear whether this is the Broadlee in Ashkirk or in the Borthwick valley. He married Agnes Davidson in 1708 and their children included: Jean (b.1716); Janet (b.1718); Margaret (b.1721); and Agnes (b.1724). The witnesses in 1721 were William and James Douglas (who were surely related) and in 1724 were William douglas and James Dryden. Sir James of Friarshaw and Springwood (1704–87) 2nd son of George and brother of Henry of Friarshaw. He was the 8th Laird of Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish, and the 1st Baronet. In 1750 he purchased the lands of Bridgend near Kelso and changed the name to Springwood Park (although it was also known as ‘Springfield Park’). He became a rear Admiral. In 1759 he carried back to Britain the news of Gen. Wolfe’s victory at Quebec. He later served as M.P. for Orkney. He is probably the James of Bridgend listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He succeeded to Friarshaw after the death of his brother in 1778. He is listed being taxed for having several male servants from 1778. He is also recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls, Horse Tax Rolls and for having female servants tax roll (with as many as 6 servants) at Springwood Park in the 1780s. In 1753 he married Helen, daughter of Thomas Brisbane. He later married Helen, daughter of John Boyle, Earl of Glasgow. His children included: Sir George, who succeeded; James, also an Admiral, who was among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; Thomas (d.1785); Henry, a judge at Patna; and Mary Isabella, who married Sir H.H. Macdougal. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at ‘Broadlees’ in 1747. He married Janet Turnbull in Wilton in 1738 and their children included: Rachel (b.1739); James (b.1740); William (b.1742); Agnes (b.1744); Gavin (b.1747); and Jean and Martha (b.1748). The witnesses in 1747 were John and Walter Scott. He is surely related to the man of the same name who was at ‘brodlees’ 2 decades earlier. James (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for gardener Walter Irvine and another for gardener Robert Turnbull and Euphan Douglas (who may have been related). He may be the man of this name who paid tax for 14 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the James whose son Alexander died in Hawick in 1781 and the deceased merchant whose daughter Janet died in Hawick in 1809. Rev. Dr. James (d.1780) 16th Laird of Cavers. He was 3rd son of Archibald, and became heir and executor for his brother Archibald in 1774. He was Prebendary of Durham and received a Doctorate in Divinity. It is said that he had a road built by which a coach and 6 could ascend to the top of Ruberslaw. He was taxed for having 5 male servants in 1778 (a butler, a footman, a coachman and 2 gardeners) and 6 in 1779. In Edinburgh in 1750 he married Jean Halyburton (or ‘Peggy Halliburton’), sister of Col. Halyburton of Pitcur, but they had no surviving children. He was in turn succeeded by his brother John. His will stated that if his brother John failed to have male heirs he was to be succeeded by his cousins Andrew, then Capt. Archibald, then Robert, and ‘whom failing, to my lawful heirs whatsoever’. His sisters Catharine and Euphan were also provided for at Cavers. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1781. James (18th C.) butler at Cavers in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for James of Cavers. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hoddleswoodie in 1790 when his son Hugh was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He is probably the James whose wife Elizabeth became the first letter-carrier of the Rule valley in 1835, by which time he was said to be almost blind. Their other children included Mary (b.1797), James (b.1799), Charles (b.1800) and Nelly (b.1808). Other children, baptised in Hobkirk around the same time, who may have been his, include Francis (b.1792), Isabel (b.1794), William (b.1795) and Wilhelmina (b.1806). James (d.1829) tenant at Corbyhall. James (18th/19th C.) tenant at Upper Southfield according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (1743–1827) born at Braidlie in Castleton Parish, he was son of John and Christian Nichol. He married Christian Scott (1745–1825) in Dykeraw. Their children included: Christian (b.1770); Jane (1771–1855), who married John Cavers; Helen (b.1775); John (1778–1838), a joiner in Castleton; Walter (b.1780), who kept the Douglas Hotel on St. Andrew Square in Edinburgh; and Violet (1788–1856), who married William Hardie, and died at Burnmouth Schoolhouse. James (b.1764/5–1840) shepherd, probably at Meadshaw. He married Margaret War- wick, who died at Meadshaw in 1829, aged 48. Their 4th son John was shepherd at Craik and died at Meadshaw in 1840, aged 20. He himself died of smallpox in Kedzie in Melrose Parish. The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. James of Cavers (1790–1861) son of George and Lady Grace Stuart, he succeeded on the death of his father in 1815. He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. In 1824 he established a School for the Arts in Hawick, and instituted popular educational lectures, as well as being instrumental in setting up an Agricultural Society. For acts such as these he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1825. He also supplied books to libraries in the outlying areas (e.g. to Ashkirk Parish, as described in 1837). About 1824 he also offered to support a preacher to visit among people in the Hawick district, being turned down by the Se- cession Kirk, but being accepted by the Congregational Union of Scotland, from whom he engi- gaged Francis Dick to preach in the area over the next 19 summers. Apparently a group of such travelling preachers that he supported were re- ferred to as the ‘Cavers missionaries’. He sub- scribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He served as Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was a heritor of Cavers and Kirkton Parishes, and also listed in 1839 among the major landowners of Hawick Parish. In 1841 he was living at Cavers House with his wife, 7 children, 9 female servants and 1 male servant. In 1851 he was still there, with 3 children, 5 female servants and 1 male serv- ant. He may have been the James of Cavers who wrote words for the song ‘Hollin, Green Hollin’. He was said to be well read in many fields, and contributed articles on religious topics, publish- ing booklets such as ‘The Advancement of Soci- ety’ (1825), ‘Errors Regarding Religion’ (1830), Douglas Douglas (1826–1885) born at Horsleyhill Bailie James a new vault attached to old Cavers churchyard. He became Mrs. Palmer Douglas. He was buried in the year of the 'Droothy Summer', he was 3rd son of farmer John of Easter Essenside. He was an apprentice with John & George Oliver, writers, then was cashier with William Wilson & Sons and Wilson & Armstrungs before becoming Actuary of Hawick Savings Bank (also known as the National Security Savings Bank of Hawick). He was the first Manager of the Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, Ltd., later being their Actuary, and was a Director of Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Co. He was also a member of the Total Abstinence Society, becoming their President and a keen speaker on temperance subjects. He was additionally a member of the Hawick Literary and Scientific Society about 1850. He first became a Councillor in 1868 and returned again in 1883, when he was made a Magistrate. He was long remembered for his integrity and honesty. He married Isabella Cochrane (related to Andrew the tailor), who died in 1857, aged 27. They had at least one child, John, who died in infancy. Douglas Road was named after him, and for a time also Douglas Terrace. James (19th/20th C.) member of the Drums and Fifes band who received a presentation for 50 years' service at the 1921 Colour Bussing. Janet (15th/16th C.) worked at the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Scotland.

- ‘The Structure of Prophecy’ (1850), ‘Popery and Infidelity’ (1852), ‘Rome and Maynooth’ (1852), ‘The Truths of Religion’ (1830), ‘The Philosophy of the Mind’, etc. In 1820 he married Emma (d.1882), daughter of Sir David Carnegie, 4th Baronet of Pittarrom. Their children were: James (b.c.1824), who succeeded: Agnes (b.c.1825), died unmarried; Mary (b.1825/6–59), who married William Elphinstone Malcolm of Burnfoot (Dumfriesshire); Emma (b.c.1829–70), who married Capt. Robert Erskine Anderson; Ellen (1830–1911), who married Rear-Adm. George Palmer; Stuart (b.1833/4–50s); and Lucy (b.1840/1), also died unmarried. His widow stayed at Midgard after his death. James (1806–82) born in Edinburgh, but baptised in Castleton, son of John and Betty Beattie. He was a carpenter in Newcastleton and farmer at Roan. He was listed as a joiner in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1851 he was at about 6 Langholm Street and employed 5 men. He also ran a saw mill, according to an 1852 directory. By 1861 he is recorded as farmer at Roan (and a widower), employing 2 shepherds and 3 labourers. He was listed at Roan in a directory of 1868. In 1881 he was a master carpenter employing 5 men and a farmer of more than 3000 acres, employing 7 people. He firstly married Charlotte (1809–57), daughter of Adam Glendinning. In 1863 he secondly married his cousin Elizabeth (1819–87), daughter of Edinburgh hotel keeper Walter Douglas. James of Cavers (1822–1878) son of James and Emma Carnegie, he succeeded in 1861. He was either the 20th or 21st Laird in descent from Archibald, son of the Earl of Douglas. Bet Young wrote a poem commemorating his birth. He was interested in local antiquities and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. James Wilson dedicated ‘Memories of Hawick’ (1858) to him. He chaired the ceremonies for the opening of the Teviot Bridge at Denholm in 1865. He held the lands of Haughhead, formerly part of Weensland, as recorded in about 1874. In 1858 he married Mary Graham, daughter of Sir Andrew Agnew, 7th Baronet of Lochnaw in Wigtonshire. He died without a male heir and was succeeded as Laird by his niece, Mary (who was daughter of his sister Mary and William Malcolm and who became Mrs. Palmer Douglas). He was buried in a new vault attached to old Cavers churchyard. Bailie James (1826–1885) born at Horsleyhill the year of the ‘Droothy Summer’, he was 3rd son of farmer John of Easter Essenside. He was an apprentice with John & George Oliver, writers, then was cashier with William Wilson & Sons and Wilson & Armstrungs before becoming Actuary of Hawick Savings Bank (also known as the National Security Savings Bank of Hawick). He was the first Manager of the Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, Ltd., later being their Actuary, and was a Director of Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Co. He was also a member of the Total Abstinence Society, becoming their President and a keen speaker on temperance subjects. He was additionally a member of the Hawick Literary and Scientific Society about 1850. He first became a Councillor in 1868 and returned again in 1883, when he was made a Magistrate. He was long remembered for his integrity and honesty. He married Isabella Cochrane (related to Andrew the tailor), who died in 1857, aged 27. They had at least one child, John, who died in infancy. Douglas Road was named after him, and for a time also Douglas Terrace. James (19th/20th C.) member of the Drums and Fifes band who received a presentation for 50 years' service at the 1921 Colour Bussing. Janet (d.c.1494) daughter of George, 4th Earl of Angus. In 1472 she married David Scott, younger of Bucchleuch, who died in 1484. In 1484 she made a claim for 8 years worth of rent for lands held by Walter Scott of Howpasley. Before 1492 she married George, Earl of Rother. Her brother Archibald, Earl of Angus, was her executor. Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter of Archibald, 5th Earl of Angus. In 1455 the Barony of Terregles was granted to her by James IV; this included the lands of Feu-Rule. She married Andrew, son of Herbert, Lord Herries of Terregles in 1495. Janet (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1541 as ‘jonet douglass’. This was on a list of associates of James of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Janet (16th/17th C.) daughter of Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick. She married William Ker of Cessford, and their daughter Mary married to Sir Walter Scott, ‘the Bold Bucchleuch’. Janet (19th C.) worked at the British Linen Bank and was involved with Allars Associates of James of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Janet (16th/17th C.) daughter of Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick. She married William Ker of Cessford, and their daughter Mary married to Sir Walter Scott, ‘the Bold Bucchleuch’. Janet (19th C.) worked at the British Linen Bank and was involved with Allars Kirk in the 1820s. Jean (17th C.) daughter of advocate William Douglas. In 1684 she and her sister Margaret were served as joint heirs to the Lordship and Barony of Jedforest, as well as the Barony of Chirnside, after reversion from their brother James about a decade earlier. Jean (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Jean (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1749 she ‘compeared in the publick place of Repentance for he relapse in the sin of fornication with Thomas Heatlie’. After repentance for several Sundays and paying a fine, she was absolved. Tax Rolls. She was probably related to James and John, who were also listed. Jill (1969–) daughter of Henry, television rugby commentator, married name Hogg. She was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2002. John of Bonjedward (d.1438) son of Margaret Douglas and Thomas Johnstone, who took the surname Douglas. He succeeded his mother to the lands of Bonjedward and was succeeded by his son George in 1439. John of Balveny (d.1463) son of James, 7th Earl and brother of William and James, the next 2 Earls. Along with his brothers and others, he was part of a force that tried to wrest power from the King in 1455. The Scotts of Buccleuch led a force that met them at Arkinhom (Langholm); this battle must have included a great many Borderers. He was later captured and executed. Robert Scott of Todshaw and others received a reward from the King for his capture. John (16th C.) younger son of William of Drumlanrig, who was killed at Flodden. He was brother of Sir James of Drumlanrig and Hawick. He was described as brother of James of Drumlanrig in a respite of 1526, as well as when he witnessed a charter in 1530/1, and when he witnessed his brother resigning his lands of Drumlanrig and others in 1540 in order to be regranted. In 1544 he had a notorial instrument for accepting money from his brother James on the condition that he no ‘play at cartis, dyse, tabblis, or lay by hand at the said playis wytht any man’. John (d.1574) son of Robert and cousin of Hugh, who was son of William of Bonjedward. He was born in Longnewton, and his precise connection to the Douglasses of Bonjedward and Timpedean is unclear. He matriculated as St. Leonard’s College, St. Andrews in 1515 at the same time as some future reformers, and graduated in 1517. His subsequent movements are unclear, although he spent some time in Paris. He eventually became the first Protestant Archbishop of St. Andrews in the years 1572–74 and was Chancellor of the University there. He was one of the ‘six Johns’ who wrote the ‘Scots Confession’ and ‘First Book of Discipline’ of 1560. He was claimed to be uncle of George, who was martyred as a catholic priest in England in 1587. John (16th C.) recorded as minister of Bedrule in February 1563/4. He must have just taken over from John Stewart or William Kerr, and was only minister himself for a short time. Whether he was the same as the later minister of Hobkirk and Southdean is unclear. He was designated ‘Sir’, meaning that he was a priest with only a Bachelor’s degree. John (16th C.) presented by James VI to the vicarage of Hobkirk in 1576/7 on the death of Sir David Turnbull. Probably the same John was Reader of Southdean 1574–87 (although this last date may be an error, since John Scott was also Reader during that time); he was certainly recorded as Reader there in 1575. It is possible that the same John had the parsonage and vicarage of Kirkton bestowed upon him in 1597, on the death of George Douglas. John of Whitriggs (16th C.) recorded in 1585 when William Douglas of Cavers and Edward Lorraine of Harwood were cautioners for him. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglasses of Whitriggs. His location is recorded as ‘Quhysyterig’. John (16th C.) recorded in 1583 when he was among men charged to appear before the Privy Council. His designation was given as ‘of Welles or Todhoillis’. He may have been father of James of Todholes, who was recorded slightly later. John (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Martin in Crook. In 1592 he received a ‘letter of pension’ from the Commendator of Melrose, with 7 merks to be taken from the kirkland of Hassendean and 3 merks from the lands of Crook. John of Brieryyairds (d.bef. 1606) recorded when his son Robert was served as his heir in 1606. The lands he inherited were Easter and Wester ‘Rouchlie’, ‘Rowchlienwik’, ‘Breirbuss’, the 20-shilling lands of ‘Quhitsyde’ and a 4-pound land in ‘Fawsyde’, all lying in Jedforest. John of Friarshaw (d.bef. 1610) eldest son of William of Friarshaw. He was the 2nd Laird of Friarshaw. He is said to have died without male issue and been succeeded by his younger brother George. However, he may be the brother of Andrew ‘in Freirschaw’ mentioned as joint occupier of Friarshaw in 1592, when Andrew and his son George had a charter for the lands from Melrose Abbey. He may also be the ‘Joannis Dowglas in Freirschaw’ whose son William was granted ½ husbandlands in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. John ‘Johnnie’ (16th/17th C.) from Cavers, he was on a 1612 list of men convicted of charging more than the allowed rate of interest on loans. Along with James (also in Cavers, and probably a relative) he failed to appear and was denounced as a rebel. John (16th/17th C.) witness in 1619 to a bond signed in Hawick between Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded as being ‘called of Toftis’, presumably meaning he had been associated with the lands of Tofts in Kirkton Parish. John ‘Hallass’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 among a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands near Hawick. It is unclear what his nickname might have meant. John (17th C.) ‘in Cavers, called of Piehill’ recorded in a ‘summons of reduction’ (i.e. court case to nullify illegal deeds) brought by William Bennet in 1630. His son was William. John of Timpendean (d.bef. 1643) recorded in the 1643 valuation roll when his heirs had their ‘6 husbandlands’ in Jedburgh Parish valued at £158 and his widow’s land at £260. His wife was the ‘John Douglas’s Widow’ who had liferent of Timpendean in 1643. It seems likely he was son of Stephen and that this is an extra generation compared with some family trees. John of Timpendean (d.1671) he was said to be 6th Laird and son of Stephen, but may have been son of the previous John. In 1632 he married Mary Douglas of Bonjedward and she was still alive in 1661. He was succeeded by his son William. John (17th C.) landowner in Castleton Parish. In 1663 he paid the land tax of £420 for his lands in Castleton and £200 for his lands ‘in Kirktooun’ (although it is unclear if this meant Kirkton Parish or lands in Castleton). John of Gervald (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir William of Cavers. He was Sheriff-Depute in 1637 when giving sasine of lands in Maxton to David Erskine. He could be the ‘John Douglas’ (no designation given) who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in 1643. His wife was the ‘John Douglas’s Widow’ who had liferent of Timpendean in 1643. It seems likely he was son of Stephen and that this is an extra generation compared with some family trees. John of Timpendean (d.1671) he was said to be 6th Laird and son of Stephen, but may have been son of the previous John. In 1632 he married Mary Douglas of Bonjedward and she was still alive in 1661. He was succeeded by his son William. John (17th C.) landowner in Castleton Parish. In 1663 he paid the land tax of £420 for his lands in Castleton and £200 for his lands ‘in Kirktooun’ (although it is unclear if this meant Kirkton Parish or lands in Castleton). John of Gervald (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir William of Cavers. He was Sheriff-Depute in 1637 when giving sasine of lands in Maxton to David Erskine. He could be the ‘John Douglas’ (no designation given) who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he was granted lands of Burnmouth, ‘Greina’ (Greena) and ‘Purvinen’ in Liddesdale ‘in fee’, with his father having the ‘liferent’. He was probably the John ‘of Garvart’ who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. Archibald ‘of Garvat’ was probably his son; he was involved with court action in the 1690s to recover debts from Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. One of his daughters married George Scott of Boonraw, Bailie-depute of Hawick. John (17th C.) tenant in Bedrule Mill. In 1674 he was fined by the Hawick Magistrates ‘for forestalling the market by his selling meal at two prices in one market day’. John of Timpendean (b.1656) 8th Laird, he was retoured as heir to his father William in 1688. He paid tax on 3 hearths at his house in 1694. He is probably the John Douglas of Timpendean who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695 and 1704. He was probably the Laird who acquired Lanton sometime between 1678 and 1707. In 1679 he married Euphan, daughter of William Turnbull of Sharplaw and Christian Ker (and descended from Douglas of Cavers). Their children were: Christian, who must have died young; William, who succeeded; Alison; John; Euphan, who married William Grey in Jedburgh; Mary, Christian (again), who married William Smeal in Jedburgh; George; and Archibald, who became an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1714. He and his wife were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism, and his father-in-law gave a bond of caution for the couple. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Janet Henderson and their children included: James (b.1682); and Thomas (b.1686). In 1681 he witnessed a baptism in Roberton for William Scott and in 1688 another baptism for Thomas Henderson and Margaret Turnbull. John (17th C.) married Helen Runciman in Roberton Parish in 1687. She was probably brother of Walter Runciman who was married the previous year. John (17th C.) ‘workman’ listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. Probably the same Workman is recorded in 1705 when his son James was baptised, with witnesses tailor David Miller and gardener Patrick McLeilan. John (17th C.) listed as a resident in Nether Tofts in Kirkton on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He may be related to the John recorded in Nether Tofts in 1720. John (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He was probably related to James and Jean, who were also listed. John (17th C.) pedlar in Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident of Crook who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) recorded at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. The later John of Catshawhill may have been his son. It is possible he was the John who paid the land tax for part of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1678. John (b.1673/4) ‘indweller in Hawick’ who in 1767 gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common. He was said to be 93 years old, married, and had lived within a mile of Hawick for the previous 70 years. He gave many details relating to the Common, particularly from around 1710. He stated that he was a Burgess of Hawick, although possessing no property in the Town, and since his sight had failed him about 10 years previously, he had been on the Poor Roll, with also some support from his son. There was a John born to John Douglas in Jedburgh in 1673 and another born to George in Jedburgh in 1674; one of these may well be him. It was said that he was blind for his last 10 years. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. He is recorded there in 1711 and 1718. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: John (b.1710); Grizell (b.1711); and John (b.1718). Rev. John (c.1679–1750) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1699, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1705. He was presented to Kirkton Parish in 1706 and became minister there at the beginning of the following year. In 1711 he carried out a marriage in Hawick Parish (after the death of the minister, Alexander Orrock). In 1718 he was one of those appointed to examine the candidate for Schoolmaster in Hawick, and preached at least twice in Hawick, in 1721 and 1722. In 1737 he officiated at the baptism of a son of his colleague Rev. Hugh Kennedy of Cavers. He paid the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Kirkton Parish in 1748. He died unmarried. A heart-shaped communion token inscribed ‘K.K. 1734’ (the earliest in existence from the Parish) dates from his ministry. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Whitriggs in 1716 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. There were several marriages in Cavers that could be his. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Nether Tofts. His son Archibald was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. Other children baptised in Kirkton who were probably also his included: Archibald (b.1720); Thomas (b.1722); Robert (b.1724); Archibald (again, b.1725); John (b.1726); William (b.1728); Jean (b.1730); Walter (b.1731); Jean (again, b.1733); Isobel (b.1734); Janet (b.1736); and George (b.1738). John (b.c.1712) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Christian Nichol and their children included: James (1743–1827); Janet (1743–1834), who married shepherd Ninian Elliot; Isabel (b.1748); Margaret (b.1751); Robert (b.1753); and Christian (b.1758). John (18th C.) piper who is recorded being paid in the Kirk Session records of the early 1700s. He may be related to the later piper of the same name. John (18th C.) merchant who was tenant at Braidhaugh in the Rule valley in 1740. It is unclear what his profession really was. John of Bonjedward (d.1760s) ‘retoured’ to his father George and grandfather William in 1754. He is already recorded paying the window tax at Bonjedburgh in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was the last Douglas ‘of Bonjedward’, although the family lands had already been lost (but he may have sold the last part to Archibald Jardine in 1775). It is possible that he had a son Andrew who was factor at Bonjedward for the Lothian Estates in 1733. This branch of the family appears to have at some point failed in the male line. Lieut. John (18th C.) of H.M.S. Speedwell, made an Honorary Burgess in 1778. He may have been related to the local Douglasses. Capt. John (d.1786) 17th Laird of Cavers, and also of Midshiels. He was the 4th son of Archibald to succeed to the Lairdship. He served with the Royal Navy, commanding H.M.S. ‘Greyhound’ in 1745, when he captured 2 heavily-armed privateers, and later commanded H.M.S. ‘Unicorn’, which helped take the privateer ‘Marshall Broglie’, belonging to Brest. He retired from the Navy about 1750 and then purchased Adderstonelee and Adderstoneshiel from Francis Scott of Gorrenberry (possibly his cousin). About the same time he also bought Midshiels from Scott of Crumhaugh, and was therefore sometimes known as ‘of Midshiels’. He was also known as ‘of Ederton’ (presumably meaning ‘Adderstone’). He may be the John ‘of Adderstoun’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is recorded in 1762 as one of the men raising an action against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch over the division of Hassendean Common. In 1775 he was involved with Turnbull of Knowe in arranging the repair of the road leading to Hawick ‘by the back of Meadshiells’ and the road leading by Clarilaw and Newton to the main Turnpike road. He was listed (as ‘of Adderstone’) on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He succeeded to Cavers on the death of his brother Rev. Dr. James in 1780, but was already an old man by then. He was taxed for having 3 male servants in Wilton Parish in 1778 and 1779 and 4 in 1785. He was also taxed for having 5 female servants and 7 carriage horses in 1785, as well as for a carriage in 1786. He married Ann, younger daughter of Hugh Scott of Gala, who may have been the sister of his brother Archibald’s wife. Having no male issue, he was succeeded by George, son of his cousin Andrew. John of Catshawhill (18th C.) recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may have been son of the previous John associated with these lands in Liliesleaf Parish. John (18th C.) postillion (i.e. assistant coachman) at Cavers in 1779, when he was working for James Douglas. John (18th/19th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick. Unnamed children of his died in 1811 and 1816. He could be the John who married Isobel Douglas and whose daughter Mary was baptised in 1793, with witnesses Robert and John Hardie. John ‘Johnnie’ (18th/19th C.) itinerant beggar known throughout the valleys.

of Yarrow, Ettrick, Eskdale and Liddesdale, his parish of origin being unknown. It is said that he never let his clothing go to rags, but replaced each item as necessary. He slept over winter in the barn of some kind farmer, then started his wanderings again each Spring. Communion services at the rural churches were his special pleasure. He died after a very short illness. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hartsgarth in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the shepherd ‘James’ taxed for having 3 non-working dogs at Hartsgarth in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Bewlie, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (d.bef. 1810) one of the last pipers in Hawick. He may have been related to the piper John who was mentioned in the early 1700s. The death of his daughter Betty is recorded in 1810; she may have been the Betty born to John and Isabel Hardie in Hawick in 1783. He may thus have been the John who married Isabel Hardie and whose children included: William (b.1777); Helen (b.1779); Betty (b.1783); John (b.1785); Margaret (b.1793); and Janet (b.1795). The witnesses in 1793 and 1795 were Robert and John Hardie (who were probably related to his wife). John (1778–1838) born at ‘Greeennna’ in Castleton Parish, son of James. He was a joiner and cabinet-maker in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was also an elder in the Parish. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–38. In 1837 he was listed as a wright ‘and saw mill’. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1779–1858), daughter of William Beattie, from Langholm. His wife worked as post-mistress in Newcastle. In 1841 his widow (along with Christina and 2 joiner’s apprentices) was living at about 6 Langholm Street. Their children were: Helen (1804–80), who married farmer James Elliot; James (1806–82), carpenter; Christina (1808–79), who married George Hall; William (1810–25); Janet (1815–47), who married farmer Thomas Elliot; Mary (1817–91), who married Langholm ironmonger Archibald Glendinning; Margaret (1819–97), who married shepherd William Robson; Walter (1822–99), who died in Santiago de Cuba; and John (1822–92), who emigrated to Mobile, Alabama. John (c.1780–bef. 1851) farmer in Cavers and then Minto Parishes before becoming tenant at East Essenside, where he is recorded in the 1841 census. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in Cavers Parish in 1819. Their children included: John (b.1820); Elizabeth (‘Betsy’, b.1822); William (b.1824); James (b.1826), who probably died young; Helen (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); Agnes (b.1831); Robert (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); and Thomas (b.1837). In 1851 his widow was living at Easter Essenside with his eldest son and several of his children. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at Ashkirk Mill, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Mary Hood and they had 3 sons: James (b.1821); John (b.1823); and George (b.1825), who became a Methodist minister. He emigrated to Montreal in 1831, after failing fortunes as a miller, with his family following in the next year. John (1779–1856) 7th Marquess of Queensberry, inheriting the titles (including Baron of Hawick) from his elder brother Sir Charles. He married Sarah, daughter of James Sholto Douglas, and was succeeded by their son Archibald. John (1786–1851) shoemaker of Hawick, who was Treasurer for the Relief Kirk. He was recorded as a Howegate shoemaker on Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was listed at about 13 Howegate in 1841. His widow Elizabeth (b.1788/9) was still there in 1851, along with her brother John Kedie, tobacconist. He was also listed in Slater’s 1852 directory (although deceased by then). Dr. John (1788–1861) local doctor and philanthropist, who was younger brother to Agnes, Mary and Robert. He was born in Hawick, son of Robert (also a doctor), with his mother being Margaret Aitchison, niece of William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’. Athletic in his youth, he excelled at several sports, and retained an interest in gymnastics throughout his life; he boasted of his ability to jump across Wilton Dam when he was young. He was also known for his literary interests and his writing and speaking abilities. He appears to have studied medicine in Edinburgh in 1809, and then served in the army, joining the 46th Regiment of Foot as a Surgeon’s Mate in 1810, after receiving a medical diploma in London. He sailed for the West Indies and was promoted to Assistant Surgeon in 1811. In 1813 he transferred to the 8th Regiment of Foot and served during the American War, being based in Niagara in the campaigns of 1813–15. By 1814 he was in charge of the hospital in York (near Toronto), which treated the wounded shipped back from the front. He completed his medical degree in Edinburgh in 1815 and 1816, and he received a pension of half-pay after 8 years in the army, when he returned to Scotland. He then joined his father’s medical practice in Hawick, being also joined by his brother...
Robert. As the most active doctor in the dominant medical practice in Hawick, he grew to be a much respected member of the community, known for his generosity. In 1819 he published 'Medical Topography of Upper Canada', which was one of the only first person accounts by a surgeon in the War of 1812; the book also describes the topography of the region where he was stationed in Canada, as well as the standard of living of the Canadians and a description of the native peoples. He also wrote a detailed account of the cholera outbreak of early 1832, including details of his own bout with the disease (although propriety forbade him from discussing in detail the case of his sister Mary). And he is said to have fought valiantly in the 1849 cholera epidemic. Working with his brother Robert, the Douglas practice had the bulk of Hawick's medical business in the early-to-mid 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is recorded as a physician on Damside on Pigot's 1825/6 directory and on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He became a member of the Wisp Club in its second year. From 1831 he lived at 52 High Street (where the Victoria Hotel was built). He chaired the Coronation Dinner held in Hawick in 1831. In 1841 he was there with his siblings Robert, Agnes and Mary, as well as his wife Jane (from Teviothead) and daughter Margaret. His brother Robert contributed less to the practice in his later years, and died in 1845. He then continued with Dr. McLeod as a partner, and left the practice entirely in his hands by the mid-1850s. He published several medical articles were said to be held in high esteem for the soundness of his views and clarity of his writing. In Hawick he helped edit books for publisher Robert Armstrong, and was particularly fastidious about punctuation. He also contributed to the Hawick Advertiser, writing obituaries of Elliot Aitchison, Capt. Thomas Scott of Shielwood and Hawick's Dr. Walter Graham. He donated items to the Archaeological Society Museum, including a 'cluster of marine zoophytes' in 1857. He could be the John who was listed as a Steward at the 1836 Common Riding Races. In politics he was a Liberal, and strong supporter of the Reform Bill. In 1851 his children were Margaret, Mary and Robert, and his sisters Agnes and Mary still lived with them. In 1861 his widow Jane and children Margaret and Mary are recorded at 52 High Street. He appears to have married late in life, his wife probably being Jane Aitchison (who may thus have been a cousin of some sort), daughter of William Aitchison, farmer at Linhope. Their children were: Margaret (b.1840); Mary (b.1841–1915), who married Walter Pringle (son of manufacturing founder Robert); and Robert (1845–61), who died of consumption only a couple of weeks before his father. Three young children of his also died within a few weeks of each other. A portrait of him exists (although its whereabouts are unknown). He was well-known for his literary interests, and believed to be the author of some anonymous 'jeux d'esprit'; it has even been suggested that he wrote the words for 'Pawkie Paiterson' (although it is more generally attributed to 'Soapy' Ballantyne). He was also a supporter of the local literati, sharing the hospitality of his home with Thomas Pringle, William Knox and Henry Scott Riddell. The only surviving poem of his is 'The Sunflower', which was taken down in shorthand by James Jamieson and later published in the Hawick Advertiser. He was a sought-after speaker, the last such occasion being at the centenary event for Burns' birth, held in Hawick in 1859. He was said to have often treated people without fee or reward, and to attend to patients irrespective of their social status. At his funeral, all the shops on the High Street closed as a mark of respect. Partly as a result of his efforts during the cholera outbreak, he had a Memorial erected in his memory in Wellogate Cemetery, in what was once an ornamental annex. This was constructed in 1879 in the form of a decorative drinking fountain, sculpted by Mr. Beveridge of Edinburgh, and probably the most grandiose monument in the entire cemetery. It (unusually) contains a likeness of him, and the inscription reads 'A skilful physician. An accomplished scholar. A public spirited citizen. A wise counsellor, and a charitable and sympathising friend to the poor & suffering during a lengthened professional career in this town and district.' John (b.c.1800) born in Jedburgh Parish, he was a shepherd in Southdean. In 1841 he was a labourer at Ashtrees and in 1851 and 1861 was shepherd at Doorpool. He married Agnes Oliver in 1835 and their children included: Robert (b.1836); Eliza Robert (b.1837); George (b.1840); William (b.1842); Thomas (b.1845); and James (b.1847). In 1841 their household also contained: Adam (b.c.1827); John (b.c.1829); and Elizabeth (b.c.1831). John (b.1814/5) joiner living on the High Street. He was at about the top of the Millport in 1841 and 1851. He was listed on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory, and was also listed as a 'turner'. His wife was Agnes, and their children included Andrew, John, James and William. John (b.1820) son of John and Elizabeth Turnbull, he was born at Stobs in Cavers Parish. He was tenant at East Essenside like his father. They had 2 bronze ‘cels’ that were found on the farm in the 1880s, and also in 1856 presented to the Archæological Society an ‘ancient mill’ found on Castleside Hill. In 1851 he was recorded at Easter Essenside as farmer of 120 arable acres and 380 acres of pasture, as well as employing 3 labourers. In 1854 in Hawick he married Alison Munro Scott (1828-97), daughter of Charles Scott; she was a cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. Their children included: Margaret Scott (b.1855); Eliza (b.1857); Alice (b.1859), who probably died young; Ellen Mary (b.1860), who married Roberton schoolmaster Thomas Wilson; Agnes Mcewen (b.1862); John (b.1864); Charles (b.1866); Alice (again, b.1868); and Elizabeth Williamina (b.1871). Sir John James Scott-Douglas John Sholto (1844–1900) 9th Marquess of Queensberry, with other titles including Baron of Hawick. He married Sibyl Montgomerie and later Ethel Weedon. He served as 4th Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk. John member of Hawick Saxhorn Band for more than 60 years. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walker Scott of Branxholme. Lady Katherine née Rigg (17th C.) wife of Sir William the 11th Laird of Cavers. She was daughter of Thomas Rigg of Athene and Euphemia Monipennie. Her niece Janet Rigg married Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk, and she was descended from John Row of Perth, a colleague of John Knox. Known as ‘The Good Lady Cavers’ (or ‘the Guid Leddy o Cavers’), she turned Cavers house into a Covenanting centre, sheltering the famous preachers Peden and Cargill. She also had her own private chaplain, Adam Abercorn. Along with her husband, she was an ardent supporter of the Covenanters. As a result her eldest son William was removed from her and placed in the care of tutors appointed by the Privy Council. Widowed in 1676, 3 years later she was ordered to hand over her infant sons as punishment, but refused to do so; this was on account of her having her children educated at home, instead of in the way prescribed by the men appointed as their tutors. She was pursued by the King’s advocates Sir John Nisbet and Sir George Mackenzie and the infamous commissioner Urquhart of Meldrum. Although no real evidence could be produced against her, she refused to swear an oath and was declared guilty. She was imprisoned first in Edinburgh Tolbooth, and then spent 2 years in Stirling Castle. The fines imposed on her were several times larger than her estates could support, and as a result her tenants were expected to pay additional rent, to which they tried to appeal. After her son William returned from abroad he paid the fines and presented a bond that she would either conform within 14 days or leave the country; she chose the latter, spending her last years in exile in England. However, she appears to have returned to Cavers after the Restoration and died there. Her story is described in the book ‘The Ladies of the Covenant’ (1851). Margaret (b.c.1376) illegitimate daughter of William, 1st Earl of Douglas. She was gifted the unentailed lands of Bonjedward by her half-sister Isabel Douglas (while George Douglas obtained the entailed lands), and thus she was the first Laird of this line of Douglases. This was in 1404 (although it is possible it was a confirmation of an earlier grant). She married Thomas, son of John of Johnstone (but it is unclear who exactly he was), who changed his name to Douglas in order to inherit. They were succeeded by their son John. She was still alive in 1425. Margaret ‘Dame Margaret’, Countess of Bothwell, see Margaret Scott. Margaret (17th C.) sister of Sir William of Cavers. She married John Douglas (who died in 1616), minister of Kilbucho and later Robert Livingstone, minister of Skirling in 1631. Her children with her first husband were William and James. Margaret (17th C.) daughter of Archibald of Greena. In 1634 she was served heir to her father’s lands. This included Greena, Purvinen and Burnmouth in Liddesdale as well as lands near Duns Kirk.
Douglas

Her father was described as a servant to the Earl of Morton. Margaret (17th C.) daughter of advocate William Douglas. In 1684 she and her sister Jean were served as joint heirs to the Lordship and Barony of Jedforest, as well as the Barony of Chirnside, after reversion from their brother James about a decade earlier. Margaret Violet nee Pringle (1800-68) daughter of Mark Pringle of Fairnilee, Clifton and Haining. Her brothers John and Robert were M.P. for Selkirkshire. She married Archibald Douglas of Anderstone and succeeded to Haining and Clifton on the death of her brother Robert in 1842. She also held the lands of Easter Alemoor in 1845. After her husband’s death in 1860 she was one of the principle landowners in Kirkton Parish. Mark (16th/17th C.) clerk of Glasgow Diocese. He was notary in 1600 for the assise of the lands of Hobburn and Weens, sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott. He may thus have been attached to Hobkirk Parish or one of the other neighbouring parishes. Martin (15th C.) recorded in 1529/30 in an instrument of resignation by William Routledge, tenant of half of the lands of Crook. The resignation was to ‘an honourable man, James Douglas of Caueris, in name and on behalf of Martin Douglas’. It is unclear who he was or how he was related to James, who was Laird of Cavers at the time. Martin (16th C.) listed in 1566 among men who were to be entered with the Warden of the Middle Marches. The record states that Richard Rutherford of Edgerston was to enter ‘Martine Dowglas at Howanturk’ (but it is unclear where this might be). Martin of Tofts (16th C.) witnessed a sasine of 1579 for the lands of Midshiels and Appletreechall. William of Cavers ‘gave sasine’ and James ‘younger of Cavers’ was a witness, so he may have been a near relative. It is unclear how he was related to the later Martin. Martin of Crook (16th/17th C.) son of William of the Crook. He is recorded in the 1581 document whereby William granted lands within Crook to his son James, this being part of a promise made before the marriage contract between his son Martin and his wife. This suggests that he was the elder son and heir (although this is unclear). His wife’s surname was Hoppringle, but curiously her first name was left blank. In 1592 he was son and heir of the deceased William when he had the disposition of the ‘mails’ of Crook (extending to 40 shillings and 7 merks), as well as the kirk lands of Hassendean and Cavers, given by Melrose Abbey. He had a precept of ‘clare constat’ for inheriting his father’s of Crook, with his agent being William Scott ‘in Hawik’. In 1592 his 2nd son John received a ‘letter of pension’ from the Commendator of Melrose. In 1608 he is ‘of Tofts’ when he was served heir to his uncle Archibald, brother of his deceased father William of Crook; he thus seems to have held both the lands of Crook and Tofts. In 1615 there was a confirmation of the tack of the teinds, patronage and vicarage of Kirkton received earlier from George Douglas; his son William is also mentioned. Mary (d.1859) daughter of James of Cavers and sister of James. In 1857 she married William Elphinstone Malcolm of Burnfoot in Dumfriesshire. Her only child Mary was born soon afterwards and would succeed to the Cavers estate on the death of her uncle James in 1878, later marrying Capt. Palmer. Mary see Mary Palmer-Douglas. Matthew (16th C.) listed in 1566 among men who were to be entered with the Warden of the Middle Marches. The record states that John Rutherford of Hunthill was to enter ‘Mathow Dowglas’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Douglases. Matthew (d.bef. 1759) apparent minister of Cavers. His daughter Isobel is recorded marrying James Newbigging in Edinburgh in 1759. However, this would appear to be an error for Charles. Mungo (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Kentigernum Douglas’ in 1517 when he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branholme. Mungo (16th C.) name of two men recorded in 1541 as ‘mongo dowglass’, presumably one was senior and the other was junior. This was on a list of associates of James of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branholme. Oliver son of Tim. He is Assistant Curator of the Museum of English Rural Life in Reading. Percy Sholto (1868–1920) 10th Marquess of Queensberry, also Baron of Hawick. He was 2nd son of John, the 9th Marquess, his brother Francis Archibald having pre-deceased their father. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as uncle of the Laird of Bonjedward. He was surety for James Oliver in Strynds. It is unclear which Douglas of Bonjedward may have been his father. Robert of Lochleven (d.1513) son of Sir Henry of Lochleven Robert and Elizabeth Erskine. In 1508 he was recorded as former superior of the Lordship of Liddesdale and other lands, which were inherited by Adam Hepburn. He married Elizabeth, daughter of David Boswell. He is probably the Robert who is recorded being ‘in Langnewton’ in 1508 when he was on the panel. of ‘retour’ for Adam Hepburn in the Lordship of Liddesdale. He could be the same Robert who had a saisine for Longnewton in 1476. An illegitimate son of his, John, became Archbishop of St. Andrews. He died at the Battle of Flodden, along with (it is said) his oldest son, Sir Robert. However, his son Robert inherited Lugton in 1514. In 1522 his grandson Robert had a saisine for Lugton, as well as a precept for the Barony of Langnewton. A later descendant was jailer to Mary, Queen of Scots. Robert (16th C.) grandson of Robert and heir apparent of Robert of Lochleven in 1522 when he had a saisine for the lands of Lugton. He also had a precept from Chancery for the Barony of Langnewton. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1540/1 when he was among a list of Scottish rebels who were ‘resett’ in England. His name is given as ‘Hobbe Douglas of Bunjedward’, and he was further stated to have been delivered to the Scottish Wardens at Coldstream. He may have been a son of George of Bonjedward. He is probably the same ‘Robert Douglas, brother to the Laird of Bone-Jedburgh’ (William at that time) who was ‘found caution’ in 1537 for the burning of Cumzierton and the slaughter of William and Andrew Hall. Robert of Todhills (16th C.) son of Sir James of Cavers and Elizabeth Murray. He was brother of the next Sir James of Cavers. He married Helen Douglas, who was heiress of Todhills (also written ‘Todalia’, ‘Todholes’ and variants). Probably his son James ‘of Todholes’ was listed among the men implicated in the murder of David Rizzio in 1565. Either he or a later Robert of Todhills had his lands forfeited at the Scottish Parliament in 1584. Robert (16th C.) son of Sir James and brother of William of Cavers. He was explicitly recorded in a list of 1585 of men who had been supporters of the King and had forfeitures and other legal processes on them lifted. However, he may already have been dead by then, the service being much earlier (since his brother William was already succeeded by his son James). He could also be the Robert of Cavers who was among men complained about by George Oliphant of Bachiltoun in 1607. Robert of Nether Hassendean (16th C.) recorded in a decree of 1588, along with Robert Scott, where they were ordered to turn over all documents concerning the lands of ‘the Hilton’ of Wester Hassendean. Robert of Brieryyards (16th/17th C.) recorded in a loan document of 1588, involving the lands of Roughlee and Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is also included on a long list of local men whom the Baron of Hassendean issued with a ‘summons of removal’ from their lands in 1603. He is probably the Robert who was served as heir to his father John of Brieryiards in 1606. The lands he inherited were Easter and Wester ‘Rouchlie’, ‘Rowchliuik’, ‘Breirbuss’ and the 20-shilling lands of ‘Quhistsyde’. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) servant to Martin Elliot. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Robert (16th/17th C.) member of the court of James VI, who was rewarded in 1605, along with James Maxwell, with the former Debatable Lands. These were erected into the Barony of Tarras. However, in 1607 the two men brought a case against many Armstrongs and others who had tried to prevent them from possessing the lands. He was explicitly stated to be an equity of the son of James VI. A second Act of 1609 mentions Maxwell, but not him. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Whitriggs. In 1612 he, along his brother and William Stewart, all servants of James of Cavers, was accused by Gavin Elliot of Brugh of attacking his family on their way home from Cavers Kirk. However, the group were acquitted after swearing that the claim was untrue. It is possible that the was the ‘Hob Douglas in Quhytrig’ who was captured as a fugitive in Dysart in Fife in 1610 (along with a servant of William Middlemas of Chapel and others). Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He was married to Helen Somerville. Their children included Isobel (b.1640), Bessie (b.1647) and Robert (b.1651). Witnesses to the 1640 baptism were James Scott and William Douglas. Robert (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is probably the shoemaker listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th C.) carrier in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed separately from the shoemaker of the same name. He could be the Robert who was fined in 1687, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son John was baptised in 1699, with witnesses William (who was probably related to him) and William Gledstains. Robert (17th/18th C.) from the Trows family. His daughter Janet married Walter Deans from Wilton, who farmed at Howahill. It is possible he was the Robert son of James born in Cavers Parish in 1697. He could be the Robert in Earlside whose daughter Janet was born in Cavers Parish in 1726. Robert (18th C.) last proprietor... of the small inn at Highend in Rulewater. He had 3 daughters who were probably: Janet (b.1726); Easther (b.1728); and Agnes (b.1732). Each daughter married a farmer in Hobkirk Parish.

Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife was called Nicholas Scott and their children included: Archibald (b.1743); James (b.1745); and Janet (b.1747). Merchant George Scott witnessed the baptism in 1743 and so may have been related to his wife. In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for weaver James Roger. Robert (18th C.) probably a younger son of Thomas, and grandson of Sir William of Cavers. He was a planter in Jamaica, and was named in the will of his cousin Rev. Dr. James Douglas as being next in succession after Andrew and Archibald (probably his older brothers). Dr. Robert (d.1829) doctor in Hawick, whose connection with earlier local Douglases is not known. However, he is probably the ‘Dr. Douglas’, the death of whose father Robert is recorded in Hawick in 1781. He may be the Robert who was recorded as a medical student in Edinburgh in 1769. He was a surgeon in the navy, and later established a medical practice in Hawick, being based at Damside. He was one of the local people who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–97. He married Margaret Aitchison in Hawick in 1781 (although her name is not given in any of the birth records of his children); she was niece of William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’, and named in Oliver’s will. His children included: Robert (1782–1845), doctor in Hawick; Agnes (1785–1858), who wrote the ‘Auld Brig’ poem; Henrietta (1787–87), who died young, her name being recorded in Hawick’s death records as ‘Henny’; Dr. John (1788–1861), also a surgeon in Hawick; and Mary (1790–1850s). Rev. Robert (1747–1820) son of Rev. John of Jedburgh. He was licensed to preach by Haddington presbytery in 1769 and ordained as minister of Galashiels in 1770. He is sometimes called ‘the father of Galashiels’, being a great promoter (and financial supporter) of the manufacturing industry in the town and establishing the Galashiels Library. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott and sold him part of the estate that became Abbotsford. In 1797 he obtained a D.D. from Aberdeen. He married Robina Lothian from Edinburgh. Their children were: George, a Glasgow merchant; Helen, who married Rev. John Thomson of Maxton; Arabella; and Beatrice. He wrote ‘General View of the Agriculture in the Counties of Roxburgh and Selkirk’ in 1798, which is a useful early record. Robert (b.1774) son of Archibald and Janet Kedie. He was a hosier in Hawick and also a commission agent, perhaps leaving the area. In 1800 he married Catherine (perhaps also known as ‘Sally’), daughter of manufacturer William Beck. She died in Edinburgh in 1829. Their children included: Margaret or ‘Peggy’ (b.1801); Archibald (b.1803); Janet (b.1806); Catherine (b.1807); Catherine (again, b.1810); Elizabeth (b.1812); William (b.1814); and Sarah (b.1817). Dr. Robert (1782–1845) elder brother of Dr. John, and son of Robert and Margaret Aitchison. He was born in Hawick and was engaged as a medical officer, seeing active service through the entire Peninsular War. After this he returned to Hawick as a surgeon, joining his father’s practice at Damside, and later helping his younger brother, Dr. John. He was probably the Robert who matriculated in Edinburgh as a medical student in 1798, but only studied there for a year, joining the Royal Army Medical Corps in 1802. He was recorded as one of the first members of the Hawick Curling Club in 1803. He was one of the doctors involved in the murder case in 1814, resulting in Hawick’s last hanging. He apparently liked to tell stories of his time in the war, one example being a recounting of a dangerous retreat, when the men would lie flat to avoid injury from bomb blasts, and he lay too long; one of the men spoke out that their doctor was dead and he would have his nice boots, to which he replied ‘I’m not quite gone yet’. His premises were on Damside (i.e. Victoria Road). He is recorded at Damside in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, but unlike his brother John was not listed as having an M.D. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1830. He and John are listed as physicians on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded as ‘independent’ at the home of surgeon John on the High Street. He was said to be of ‘enfeebled health in his latter years’, resulting in him being a less active doctor in Hawick than his brother. Robert (1794/5–1880) Liddesdale farmer. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1851 he was farming 40 acres and employing 4 labourers at Hewsbright. In 1861 he was at Dinlabyre, farming 2,000 acres and employing 5 men. In 1879 he occupied the chair at the celebration of the jubilee of Rev. John Black, since he was the oldest member of the congregation at that time. His wife was Janet and their children included Elizabeth, James, George, Agnes, Jane, Robert and Archibald. Robert (1819/20–95) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Rob-son, who died in 1888, aged 55. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He could be the shepherd from Traquair who was at Old Larriston in 1861. Samuel (d.1679) from Cavers Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on ‘the Crown of London’ when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. Stephen (15th/16th C.) Commissioner of the Archdiocese of Glasgow. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502 it is recorded that he repledged William Watson and John Beirhope as chaplains. It is unclear if he was related to local Douglasses. Stephen of Timpendale (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew, he was the 5th Laird. In 1611 Robert, Burgess of Jedburgh (possibly a relative) was caution for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. In 1595 he married Jean, daughter of Andrew Halliburton of Muirhouselaw. Their children included: John, who succeeded; and Andrew, probably in- dweller in Edinburgh, who was deceased in 1656 when his son John became a cordier’s apprenticetere. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with George ‘Pealman’ and Thomas Ainslie of Swinside when they were accused of a raid into England 3 years previously. His surname is writ-ten ‘Dugles’, which seems likely to be Douglas; he was presumably related to George and they were probably relatively local. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Dowglas of Cavers’ when he was witness to a letter of assurance of the Turn-bulls in 1595. He could have been a younger son of Sir James, 11th Laird of Cavers. He was born posthumously. He married Jean Pringle of the Haining, possibly in Selkirk in 1706. Some accounts give him a son Thomas, which is incor-rect. His children included Andrew, merchant of Suffolk Street, London, whose son George suc-ceded to Cavers. Capt. Archibald and Robert were probably younger sons. He was probably the father of Violet, who married John Oliver of Dinlabyre. Thomas (17th/18th C. C.) resident of Denholm. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1708. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Earlsdie. His daughter Violet was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1708. It is hard to separate his children from those of Thomas in Denholm. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘Mr’ when he witnessed a baptism for cooper John Turn-bull in Hawick in 1716. He may have been a teacher or preacher of some sort. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Burnhead in Wilton Parish. He married Euphan Douglas in 1749. Their children included: Peter (b.1750); Thomas (b.1752); Mar-garet (b.1754); John (b.1757); Agnes (b.1759); Euphan (b.1761); and Archibald (b.1765). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and James Dryden. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Clarilaw in 1772. He was probably related to William, who also lived at Clarilaw. He married Jean Harvey in 1770 and their son James was baptised in 1773. The wit-nesses were James Dryden and James Martin. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Wilton Parish, in 1787 he married Nelly Ferguson from Cavers Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1791 he married Sarah Winthproe, who was from Lilliesleaf. Thomas (18th/19th C.) innkeeper in Lilliesleaf. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. Thomas (b.c.1805) agricultural labourer. He was living at Harecleuchhead in Kirkton Parish in 1841 and was shepherd at Hawick Shiel in 1851. He married Wilhelmina (‘Mina’, 1810–92), daughter of John Amos. Their children were: Isabella (b.1833); William (b.1834); John (b.1836); Mary (or Marion, b.1839); Thomas (b.1842); Robert (b.1846); James (b.1849); and Alexander Hogg (b.1852). Thomas (b.1809/10) born in Hobkirk Parish. He was an agricultural labourer at Tythehouse in 1841. In 1861 he was married Jane Weir in Roxburgh Parish in 1699. He may be the Walter whose marriage (with no wife’s name given) is recorded in Kirkton Parish in 1759. His wife may be the Christian, daughter of John Deans of Gatehousecote. Born in Hawick, he was the son of James, John, William and Jane. Their children included: Elizabeth; Isobel, who was a carter at Bairnkine Toll-bar, recorded as ‘Carrier & Hawker of Groceries’. His wife was Ursula and their children included Isabella, Elizabeth, James, John, William and Jane. Thomas ‘the King’ (19th C.) one of the last residents of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish. He is mentioned by Walter Deans in his history of Unthank. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1869) son of George, who farmed at Wester Hyndhope. He was tenant farmer at Ruletownhead and a keen supporter of the Jedforest Hounds. He may be the Thomas who was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 as owner of the farms of Ruletownhead and Gatehousecote. He was also recorded as owner of Gatehousecote in the Land Tax Rolls from about the end of the 19th century. Timothy G.O. ‘Tim’, ‘Timmy’ (1943–) born in Hawick, from a well-known local farming family, he was brought up at Gatehousecote near Bonchester, and later took over the farm there. He began to write poetry while in Australia in 1969/70 and resumed 10 years later following a back injury. ‘The Lambing Man’ was his first published poem and he had several broadcast on Radio Scotland. His poetry features countryside themes, as well as rugby verses, several of which are published in ‘Country Places’ (1983) and others in ‘Borderline Ballads’. He also lyrics for some Henry Douglas songs, e.g. ‘A Glorious Gloat’ about the 1984 rugby Grand Slam. He has 4 children, including Oliver. Walter (15th/16th C.) uncle of Sir William Douglas of Cavers and so presumably a brother of Sir Archibald of Cavers. In 1488/9 he was Vicar of Hassendean when he was bound not to interfere with the rights of the Abbot of Melrose to the ‘erde siluer of ye quer of ye said kirk of hassinden’ (i.e. the fees charged for burials in the kirk choir). In 1491/2 he was recorded as Vicar of Hassendean when he witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers. In 1492/3 he was Vicar of Hassendean when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. In 1500 he was a witness to the grant of the lands of Feu-Rule by their superior, Sir William of Cavers, to Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing (possibly later of Ferniehirst). He is recorded along with George as ‘Sir Walter Douglas vicar of Hassendean my uncles’, with Archibald also mentioned. He is thus the earliest known minister of Hassendean. Rev. Walter (1674–1727) son of William of Bonjedward. He was minister of Linton from 1698. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1724. He may be the Walter who married Jane Weir in Roxburgh Parish in 1699.

Douglas

English King in 1261). His children probably included: Sir Archibald; Brice or Bruce, Bishop of Moray; Hugh; Freskin; Henry, who witnessed a charter for Kelso Abbey; Alexander; and Margaret. Sir William (d.bef. 1274) probably son of Sir Archibald (although these early generations are confused) and brother of Andrew. He married Constance of Batailm and their children probably included: Hugh, who married Marjory Abernethy; Sir William ‘le Hardi’; and Willelma, who married William of Galbraith. He is probably the William recorded in a Newcastle court case in 1256, in which his underage son William is also mentioned. In 1259 he had an agreement with Sir Hugh of Abernethy, over the marriage of his son Hugh to Abernethy’s sister Margerie; the dowry included lands in Chamberlain Newton. He denied being at the siege of Alnwick Castle, against the English. He and his wife ‘Custancia’ are mentioned in 1269 in relation to their lands of Fawdon in England. William of Midlothian (13th C.) son of Andrew. He had at least one child: Sir James of Loudoun. Sir William ‘le Hardi’ or ‘the Hardy’ (d.1298) probably the Douglas starting with whom the family pedigree is secure. He was either: son of Sir William and brother of Hugh, with his grandfather being Sir Andrew (or Sir William) and his great-grandfather Sir Archibald; or he was son of Sir Archibald. He swore fealty to Edward I in 1291. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander Stewart, 4th High Steward of Scotland. He secondly married Eleanor, daughter of Matthew de Louvaine and widow of Sir William de Ferrers; Edward I complained to the Guardians of Scotland that she had been abducted. In fact he spent some time imprisoned for this and was fined £100. His sons were: Sir James ‘the Good’; Hugh ‘the Dull’; and Archibald of Liddesdale, Cavers, etc. He died in prison in London. William Lord Douglas (d.1333) eldest son of Sir James ‘the Good’. He incorporated the ‘bloody heart’ into his arms, representing the heart of Robert the Bruce that his father had died in taking it to Jerusalem. He died accompanying his uncle Sir Archibald to the Battle of Halidon Hill. He was still a minor when he died and his titles passed to another uncle, Hugh ‘the Dull’ who was a Canon of Glasgow and Parson of Roxburgh. Sir William ‘the Flower of Chivalry’ or ‘the Knight of Liddesdale’ (c.1300–53) natural son of Sir James of Lothian. He helped expel Balliol and his followers from Scotland, was captured at Lochmaben in 1332, and spent 2 years in captivity. He may have gained lands in Liddesdale through marrying Elizabeth (or Margaret) Graham of Abercorn, this being around 1338. In that year he marched to take possession of Hermitage, gathering provisions from an English convoy intercepted at Melrose on the way, and recovered all of Teviotdale from the English (apart from Jedburgh and Roxburgh). He probably had the square towers built at the corners of Hermitage Castle. He later continued to fight against English raiding parties, expelling them from most of southern Scotland and recovering Edinburgh Castle. He is probably the Sir William of Douglas who in 1341 received a crown charter of the lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale, which had belonged to Sir James Lovel (probably son of the Baron of Hawick) and William de Soulis. He was confirmed as Lord of Liddesdale in 1341/2, against a claim on the lands by Robert, the Steward of Scotland. He was referred to as ‘Dominus Vallis de Lydel’ in 1346, 1347 and 1351. He was probably also Sheriff of Teviotdale (or at least desirous of the position) before the post was given to Sir Alexander Ramsay (along with the Keepership of Roxburgh Castle) for retaking Roxburgh Castle from the English. Thus he had Ramsay captured while holding court in Hawick Kirk in June 1342, and then had him murdered in Hermitage Castle. He was disgraced for this and spent 3 years in hiding, but was ultimately pardoned, apparently at a court in Hawick, shortly before the Battle of Durham. There he was given all his lands and the Sherifdom of Teviotdale and Governorship of Roxburgh Castle. Sometime between 1342 and 1349 he is recorded as Lord of Liddesdale when he gave a grant of land in Little ‘Nudref’. He was also Warden of the Middle Marches some time during this period. He commanded part of the Scottish force at Durham (also known as Neville’s Cross) and was taken prisoner there. He was freed only after making a deal with Edward (to allow his men free passage through Liddesdale). He further agreed to allow his daughter and nearest male heir to be kept as hostages in England, while at the same time swearing allegiance to the Scottish King. However, shortly after returning to Scotland was killed in Ettrick Forest by his kinsman (actually his Godson and chieftan, with whom he is sometimes confused) William, 1st Earl of Douglas, as told in a ballad – ‘The Countess of Douglas out of her bower she came. And loudly then did she call: It is for the lord of Liddesdale That I let the tears down fall’ [T]. The location on Minchmoor was called Galsewood (or Galford) and renamed Williamshope, and a cross stood there for several centuries. His body was taken to Lin-dean Church near Selkirk and buried at Melrose Abbey. After his death his widow retained rights to Hermitage and Liddesdale and married Hugh Dacre. Their daughter Mary married Reginald More of Abercorn and later Sir Thomas Erskine of that Ilk. Sir William (c.1327–1384) 1st Earl of Douglas and Mar and Earl of Angus, son of Sir Archibald. He was grandfather of Sir William, 1st of Drumlanrig, and Archibald, 1st of Cavers. Raised in France, he was known as a cruel noble. He is easily confused with his kinsman (and originally Guardian) William, ‘the Flower of Chivalry’, whom he killed. Indeed he is sometimes also referred to as the ‘Knight of Liddes-dale’ later in life. In 1342 he was granted several lands that had been resigned by his uncle Hugh Douglas, including the lands of Douglasdale, the Lordship of the Forest of Selkirk and the Barony of Bedrule and Eskdale. He killed the previous Knight of Liddesdale in Ettrick Forest in 1353 (at a place called Galford or Galsewood, near the Glenkinning Burn). In 1353/4 he was granted the lands of Liddesdale, although these were held by the English at the time. David II also granted him the town, castle and forest of Jedburgh in 1354 (as well as Drumlanrig and other lands), previously belonging to his uncle James and father Archibald (although still considered by the English to be held by Percy). In 1356 he was at the Battle of Poitiers. That year he was also made Justiciar for southern Scotland and Warden of the East Marches. He witnessed charters during the reigns of David II and Robert II. He was made an Earl in 1356/7 and soon afterwards captured Hermitage Castle from Dacre and was made Lord of Liddesdale. In 1357 he had a confirming charter for all the lands that had previously belonged to his father Archibald and his uncle James, including Drumlanrig, which had been granted to him by Thomas, Earl of Mar (his brother-in-law). In 1358 he granted the ‘advowson’ of Cavers Kirk to the monks of Melrose Abbey, as well as giving them Penanpishope and Caulkleuch. In about 1360 he gave a confirming charter of the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey. Sir William of Gledstains was then referred to as his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers, thus marks a connection between the Douglasses and the Gledstains of that Ilk that lasted several generations. He was appointed Justiciar of Lothian from sometime before 1360 until 1374. In about 1361 he had a confiming charter for the Lordship of Liddesdale and other lands. He spent his last years repelling Border raids, and in 1378 he commanded the Scottish troops who defeated Musgrave (then Governor of Berwick) near Melrose. He married Lady Margaret, sister and heir to the Earl of Mar in about 1340. Through her he inherited several estates, including Cavers. After his death she secondly married Sir John Swinton of Swinton.
Douglas

He was succeeded by his son James, who fell at Otterburn. His daughter Isobel became countess of Mar in her own right, while his illegitimate son (with Margaret Stewart, Countess of Angus) George later became Earl of Angus. He also had an illegitimate daughter, Margaret, who became the first Laird of Bonjedward. He is said to have died of a fever and is buried at Melrose. His seal bore a heart and 3 stars. Sir William (d.1421) 1st Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He was the illegitimate son of James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, who granted him the Barony of Drumlanrig sometime in the period 1384–88 (the charter still surviving). However, he could only hope to claim other Douglas titles after the death of his aunt, Isabella, Countess of Mar. In 1389 there is a charter confirming that his mother and her second husband (Sir John Swinton of Swinton) would not molest him in the lands of Drumulanrig. He was granted the lands and Barony of Hawick sometime after the middle of 1406 by his cousin Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas, ‘for his ser-ce’ (while the Earl was a prisoner in England);
this was confirmed in a charter of 1407 by Robert, Duke of Albany. He was said to have taken and plundered Roxburgh Castle (then in the hands of the English) in 1411. In 1412 he received a confirming charter of the Barones of Drumlan-rig, Hawick and Selkirk from James I (written in the King’s own hand, while he was a prisoner in England). Also in 1412 he was appointed one of the Commissioners to negotiate a truce with England. He was appointed by the Duke of Albany as an ambassador to negotiate with Henry IV for the release of James I and in 1414 he was among a few Scotsmen who had passports to visit England to negotiate for the King’s return. Also in 1414 he witnessed a charter for Michael Ramsay at Lochmaben. In 1415 he was among a group of supporters of the Earl of Douglas who refused to pay customs to the King. In 1416 he and the Earl of Athole were involved (unsuccessfully) in negotiations with the English over the release of King James I, and he was an attendant of the King when taken to France by the English. In 1416/7 he was alleged to have been approached by the English party that wanted the Scots to attack while the English King was in France, with the ‘Foul Raid’ happening as a consequence. He visited King James in France in 1420. He died in France and was succeeded by his son, also Sir William (whose ‘retour’ of 1427 states that his father had been dead for 6 years); this means that he cannot have died at Agincourt in 1427 as some have claimed. He married Elisabeth, daughter of Sir Robert Stewart of Durisdeer and Rosyth, and was succeeded by his only known son, Sir William. It was probably his daughter Marion who married Robert Chisholme of that Ilk. His daughter Margaret may have been mother of the illegitimate son of William Elphinstone, also William, who founded Aberdeen University. Sir William (d.1444) 2nd Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick, son of Sir William. Note that these generations are confused, since there were several consecutive Williams (and he is sometimes stated to have died in 1458). In 1426 he witnessed a charter for Michael Ramsay at Lochmaben. He is recorded in a ‘retour’ of 1427 for his father’s lands and titles, 6 years after his father’s death. And the Baronies of Drumlanrig and Hawick were confirmed by his superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas, in 1428/9. This suggests that he was a minor when his father died (and so may have been born in 1405/6). He may have been one of the hostages held in England in exchanged for James I in the 1420s. In 1429 there was an indenture between him and William Douglas, Lord of Leswalt, in which the Lord of Leswalt was to deliver to him the Castle of Drumlanrig, which he had held for 10 years. He is recorded in a local feu charter of 1433 granting lands at ‘Byrkwode’ (possibly the ‘Duke’s Wud’) to Simon of Routledge, who was a Burgess of Hawick. It is therefore possible that he was the Baron who granted Hawick its original burgh of barony status, during his first few years as Baron. In 1437 he recovered the lands of East Mains near Hawick from Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains. In 1450 his son William inherited his lands, and he was said to have been deceased for 6 years at that time. He was certainly already deceased in 1446, when a charter for the Scotts of Buccleuch was confirmed by the Earl of Douglas as superior of the Barony. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of Sir Herbert Maxwell of Carlaverock, and was succeeded by his son, also William. He also had a daughter, Angelica, who married Sir Robert Innes of Innes. Sir William of Strathbokie (14th/15th C.) descendant of John, brother of William, Knight of Liddesdale. He appears to have acquired the lands of Borthwickshiel from Sir Laurence Abernethy, probably through marriage. He is said to have been nephew of Helen Abernethy. He had a daughter who married George Crichton of Cairns, later Earl of Caithness. He granted the lands of Borthwickshiel to his son-in-law in about 1425. William (c.1398–1437) 2nd Earl of Angus, eldest son of George the 1st Earl and Mary Stewart. He succeeded his father around 1403, although only some of the lands and titles went to him (including eventually Liddesdale and Jedburgh), the rest going to Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. In 1406 he is recorded as Baron of Cavers, when the Church was confirmed to Melrose Abbey. He was a strong ally of his uncle, James I from 1424, becoming extremely powerful in south-eastern Scotland in the following decade. He was described as ‘of Liddell’ in 1427, although it is unclear if he ever had possession of Hermitage. In 1428/9 he directed his Bailie in Liddesdale to grant certain lands to his kinsman Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1433 or 1434, but died only 3 years later. In 1436 he granted the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee to David Home of Wedderburn. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Hay of Locherworth and Yester and was succeeded by his sons James and then George. However, after his death the reigns of power were taken by the Black Douglases. William 6th Earl of Douglas (1423–40) eldest son of Archibald, the 5th Earl. He seems to have been superior of the Barony of Cavers, as recorded in a document of about 1432, when Cavers Kirk was confirmed to Melrose Abbey. He also held the Regality of Ettrick Forest. He married Janet, daughter of David Lindsay, 3rd Earl of Crawford. He was beheaded, along with his brother David, at Edinburgh Castle. He was succeeded by his grand-uncle, James. William 8th Earl of Douglas (c.1425–51/2) eldest son of James, the 7th Earl, and twin brother of James. He was also Earl of Avondale and Lord of Galloway. He had a sasine for the Barony of Hawick and other lands in 1446 (probably during the minority of Douglas of Drumlanrig). As superior of the Barony of Hawick, he confirmed the transfer of Branxholme and other lands in the Barony from Thomas Inglis of Manor to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1446. It was also on his authority that Hawick Kirk became a canonry and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell in 1447. He was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. He was Lord

Warden of all the Marches of Scotland in 1450. In 1451 he was confirmed by James II in all of his lands and superiorities, including the Barony of Sprouston, Hawick, Bedrule and Smailholm in Roxburghshire (which at that time were incorporated into the Barony of Sprouston). In 1451 he refused to grant a sasine to Sir William of Drumlanrig (and Hawick), since he was ‘in the King’s respite’. In 1444 he married Margaret ‘the Fair Maid of Galloway’, daughter of Archibald the 5th Earl of Douglas, who was his cousin. He died without an heir, possibly killed by James II in Stirling Castle (and it is said that Bishop William Turnbull was involved in his downfall). He was succeeded by his twin brother James, who married his widow! William of Cavers (d.bef. 1440) son of Archibald and Margaret, he was the 2nd Laird as well as hereditary Sheriff of Roxburghshire. An existing sasine of 1432 records how he was given the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire, but with certain rights to his father, including the sheriffdom for the rest of his life. Despite conflicting accounts in some existing genealogies, it seems clear that there are additional Lairds in the mid-1400s, and that this William is distinct from the one recorded 2 decades later. He was succeeded by Archibald, who was Laird by at least 1448. William (d.1464) 3rd Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He succeeded his father in 1450, after 6 years, suggesting he reached majority then (and so was born in 1428/9). He was probably the William of Drumlanrig who fought at the Battle of Sark in 1448. He also held the Baronies of Sprouston, Bedrule and Smailholm according to a charter of 1451. In 1451 he was also in dispute with his superior William, Earl of Douglas, who refused to grant him a sasine since he was ‘in the King’s respite’. In a charter of 1452 he resigned the Barony of Hawick into the King’s hands in order to receive a new infeftment, and the associated sasine was confirmed to him, probably in an outdoor ceremony at the Mote (‘super solum diciturum terrarum de Hawik’). He may have been the ‘William of Douglas, younger’, who witnessed one of Hawick’s earliest known sasines in 1453. In 1456 he granted the lands of Whithope to Philip Turnbull. In 1459 he was regranted his lands in the Barony of Hawick, which had been in the hands of King James II ‘for certain causes’. He was present at the 1460 siege of Roxburgh Castle (where James II was killed) and at the Battle of Alnwick in 1462. In 1463 he witnessed charters for Robert Charters of Amisfield, for Andrew Crichton and for Robert Crichton, all signed in Edinburgh. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Carlyle of Torthorwald. He was succeeded by his son, also William. He may also have had another son, James, who was witness to a sasine of 1489, where he is described as uncle of James of Drumlanrig. William of Cavers (d.1464) son of Archibald (and distinct from the William of 2 decades earlier). He witnessed a lease in 1445 (for lands in Borthwickshields) along with his father Archibald and others. In 1450 he is Laird of Cavers in a letter of reversion from Walter, son of Andrew Ker of Altonburn for the lands of Blackpool in the Barony of Cavers, as well as a charter granting these lands to Walter (who was probably his nephew). He was listed as son and heir of Archibald when he witnessed the charter for exchanging Milsington and Heap in 1451. Along with his father he was created a Bailie of Liddesdale and Keeper of Hermitage Castle in 1452 by George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus (and Lord of Liddesdale), and was given lands along with these responsibilities. Also in 1452 he was recorded as son and heir of Sir Archibald when he was granted the 40 merk land of ‘Luthre’ in Fife by James II. In 1456 he was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1461 he was witness to a sasine of lands in the Barony of Branxholme, along with Archibald, his son and heir. In 1469/70 he was deceased when the Governorship of Hermitage Castle was given to Sir David Scott of Buccleuch; it is said that he and his son Archibald, ‘shirafis’, had certain lands for keeping the castle for 6 years. He was succeeded by his son Sir Archibald in 1464/5. His daughter Janet married John Ainslie of Dolkhanton and another married Andrew Ker of Cessford. He may have had 2 other sons, George and Walter (vicar of Hassendean), who are recorded in 1500 as uncles to his grandson Sir William of Cavers. Note that another William was Laird of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1470 when granted Mosspatrickhope, Braidlie and the Shaws, with the ‘precept of sasine’ following in 1472; it is thus unclear if there was one extra William in the line of Barons. William of Cluny (d.1475) 3rd son of William, 2nd Earl of Angus, and brother of the 3rd and 4th Earls. He was made Warden of the Middle Marches in 1464. In 1471 Isobel (Sibbald), Countess of Angus, brought an action against him for withholding and spoiling grain, goods and rent from the lands of Tantallon, Abernethy and Bonkle, Pinnacle and Hawick. He may be the William who was recorded as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1471, but that seems more likely to have been a Douglas of Cavers. In 1471–74 he was recorded as Master Ranger of the Ward of Tweed when given Torwoodlee for his fee. In 1473 he also leased Galashiels, Blindlee and Mossielee. He died without an heir. William of Cavers (15th C.) recorded as Laird of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1470. He was at that time granted Mosspatrickhope, Braedlie and the Shawes, with the ‘precept of sasine’ following in 1472. However, Sir Archibald was Laird at that time, and so it is unclear who he was, suggesting perhaps another generation of Douglasses of Cavers, or perhaps that a brother inherited (or similar). Perhaps the same William was recorded as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1471 in the Exchequer Rolls, with James as his deputy (although this could be William of Cluny, who was Ranger of Tweed, but there is no proof of this); in 1471 and 1473 probably this same William was given the lease of the Haining near Selkirk. Sir William (d.1484) 4th Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He succeeded his father William in 1464. In 1464/5 he (or perhaps his guardians, if he was a minor) was involved in a dispute over the lands of Kirkton and Flex in the Barony of Hawick, against Alexander Gledstains, winning right to the lands; this probably followed the earlier William (his grandfather) of Drumlanrig’s successful reclaiming of East Mains from Janet Murray (widow of James Gledstains). In 1470 he had an agreement with David Scott of Buccleuch over a sum of 200 merks, with the lands of Whitchesters as guarantee. In 1470 he had a marriage contract for his son and heir James with Janet, daughter of David Scott of Buccleuch; the dowry was 500 merks, and he agreed to infeft the couple in the East Mains of Kirkton as well as lands in Drumlanrig, while David Scott agreed to give the lands of Whitchesters to him ‘in ward and relief’. In 1482 he was recorded along with his wife gaining a crown charter of lands in the Barony of Drumlanrig that he had previously resigned to the crown; these were ‘then held in chief of the Crown, not of Earl Douglas, as formerly’, an arrangement which may also have applied to his Barony of Hawick. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar. His children included: James, who succeeded; Archibald, ancestor of the ‘Coscholgill’ (or Coshogle) branch; Robert; John (perhaps the ‘Dene Johne Dowglas’ who signed the marriage contract for Elizabeth in 1496/7); Margaret, who married John, 2nd Lord Cathcart; Janet, who married William Somerville of Carnwarth; and Elizabeth, who married John Campbell, younger, of West Loudon. He was killed at the Battle of Kirtle (also called Kirkconnel), near Lochmaben, fighting for the Crown against his cousin the 9th Earl of Douglas and the Duke of Albany. William (15th C.) brother of George of Bonjedward. He was recorded in a document of 1476 recording a lawsuit between the Somervilles and Ormistons over the lands of Blacklaw near Linton. William (15th C.) recorded as being ‘of Denbraw’ when he was the second man listed (after William of Cavers) on the list of men being forgiven in 1488/9 by James IV for their support of the former King. It seems likely that his lands were at Deanbrae. Probably the same William ‘in denebra’ was recorded in 1494/5 when he was charged to enter John Edmondson for the murder of Thomas Hoggarth. William (15th C.) uncle of Archibald, recorded in 1493 when William of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was once more cited in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was again his surety. It is unclear if he was uncle of the same Archibald (brother of another William) who was also listed in 1493 and in 1494/5. William (15th C.) brother of Archibald. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; given that he was ‘fratrem archibaldi’, who was mentioned in the next case, it seems likely that they were both related to the Douglasses of Cavers, but the exact connection is not known. He was also called in 1494/5, when stated to be brother of Archibald, and the Sheriff was fined for his non-appearance (as well as that of his brother). William of Hornshole (15th C.) listed among the 24 Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 for their support of the former King, James III, particularly on the field of battle at Stirling. In 1491/2 he witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers. He acted as surety in 1494 for the case of Walter Scott of Buccleuch trying to get damages from the Routledges who burned and pillaged Buccleuch. It seems likely he was closely related to the Douglasses of Cavers, and is recorded as being ‘of hornshole’ (and hence not the same as Sir William of Cavers, who may be the other ‘William of Douglas’ mentioned in the same 1494 decree). He may be one of the Williams on the inquest panel for Robert Elliot inheriting lands in Cavers in 1497/8. He may also be one of the 2 Williams on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. William (15th/16th C.) referred to as being ‘of Caverismilne’ when he witnessed a document relating to George, Master of Angus inheriting titles and lands in 1499. It is unclear where this ‘Cavers Mill’ was. Sir William (d.1506) 4th (or 5th) Laird of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburghshire. He was son of Sir Archibald. It seems unlikely he is the William of Cavers recorded in 1470 (but these generations may still be confused). In 1482 he was Sheriff of Teviotdale when he protested against Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock, who had summoned him but not appeared. He gave a sasine for lands in Hassendean in 1483 and may have been the William who was first witness for a sasine of the lands of Boonraw in 1487. In 1484 he was sheriff of Roxburghshire when he gave sasine for the Barony of Hawick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was said to have been a Warden of the Marches in his father’s lifetime and was at the Scottish Parliament in Edinburgh in 1487. In 1488 he resigned his Barony in order to get a new charter from the King, James III. This was after he had promised to be faithful to the King and to defend him ‘against all that live or die shall’; however, the King was assassinated only a few days later after Sauchieburn. It is said that he supported the King following a letter from the aged Earl of Douglas, who was imprisoned in Linlithgow. He had a remission (along with 24 other residents of Roxburghshire, including several tenants of nearby farms, and many Douglasses) from James IV only a few months later for their ‘reasonably being present against him in the field and battle near Strivelin, on St. Barnabas Day last by past’ (i.e. Sauchieburn). In 1491/2 he gained from George Muirhead for his lands in Denholm and Cavers. In 1492 he was Sheriff for the retour of Walter Scott to Branxholme and Buccleuch and in 1494 for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. He gave a charter to Rutherford of that Ilk in 1493. In the earliest surviving Justiciary Court book, starting in 1493, he is recorded several times as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, being called to enter many men before the court (including the brothers William and Archibald, who were probably related to him); he appears to have been absent for reasons not given and was fined £310. He also served as surety for several people at the 1494/5 Justice-aine in Jedburgh. In 1497/8 there was an inquest before him to rule on the inheritance of the lands of Tillelee and Cauldcleuch by Robert Elliot; the Douglasses on the panel were William, Archibald, Adam and (another) William. In 1498 he had remission (along with William and Archibald, surely his near relations) for communing ‘with the rebels and traitors of ‘Levin’. Also in 1498 he was involved in declaring a number of Rutherfords and others as rebels for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. In 1499 he was superior of the lands of Feu-rule when they were resigned by the Colvilles and he granted them to the Kerrs in the following year; the witnesses were his uncles George and Walter, as well as Archibald (possibly his brother). He was Sheriff in 1500 in an appraisal of the goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope; this document survives as an early example of local Scots. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aine held in Jedburgh in 1502. In 1502 he also was fined for the non-appearance of Robert, son of John Scott in Deloraine, for whom he had been surety. Additionally in 1502 he dealt with the escheated goods of James Morrison and Patrick Ruffy. His brother Adam was also recorded in 1502. In 1502 there was a document of ‘respite and protection’ to William, his son and heir, plus a group of Rutherfords and their kin, friends and tenants during the time he was in Denmark. In 1505/6 he had an acquittance of 1000 crowns ‘for all sounze of money or gudis restand awand apoun hym in the chekker rollis before 13 Dec. 1503’. He was on an inquest in Jedburgh for lands owned by the Homes in October 1506 and died before the end of that month. He was succeeded by his son Sir James, who received special consideration from the King in 1509 (probably when he came of age), where it was said that his father ‘deit in defens of his realme and resisting the inimeis of Inglend and rebellis’. His elder son, William, had died earlier. Either he or his son William had a marriage contract in 1506 with Alison, son of George Douglas, Master of Angus (but he may have died before it was carried out). William (d.bef. 1506) eldest son of William of Cavers. He is recorded in 1502 as son and heir of Cavers. However, he died before his father and his brother James succeeded to the titles. It is possible he is the same man as William of Hornshole, recorded earlier, or the other William (with no designation) listed on the 1488/9 remission. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Wilelmo Douglas in Pencress’ when he was a Sheriff of Roxburghshire who gave sasine to Adam Hepburn, inheriting his father’s Lordship of Hermitage and other lands. He was presumably tenant at Penchrise, which was connected with the Douglasses of Cavers around then. He was likely to be a close relative of James, who was Laird of Cavers at that time (possibly James’ son William, later of Friarshaw). The sasine was carried out at Hermitage Castle and he was said to have ‘took a black ox for the execution of his office’. William of Bonjedward (15th/16th C.) suggested to have been the son of George of Bonjedward who inherited instead of his brother James. However these generations seem quite confused, and it is not clear that he existed at all. His son may have been George, 6th Laird. He may also have had children John, Jane, William and Hugh, who were siblings of this George. Hugh was separately referred to as son of William of Bonjedward and cousin of Archbishop John. Sir William (bef. 1480–1513) 6th Baron of Drumlanrig, son of Sir James, was also Baron of Dalgarlock, Tibbers and Hawick. He is also occasionally known as ‘the generous donor’, although that title is more usually applied to his son Sir James. He is probably the ‘fille domini de Drumlangryk’ who was bequeathed 2 cows in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. In 1492 he had a charter of Drumlanrig, as son and heir of James. In 1494 he was given the lands of West Mains and Crumhaugh by his father. His father died in 1498, but it is unclear if he succeeded right away. He was witness to a sasine in Dumfriesshire in 1489, when he was still heir apparent to his father William. In 1497 he held a letter of exemption from the jurisdiction of the Sheriff of Dumfries because of the enmity between them (he is already ‘of Drumlanrig’, although his father died in the following year, so there is some confusion here). In 1500 he had a charter for lands in Dalgarlock. In 1501 he had an agreement with George Scott over the lands of Laris, for which his father was superior. In 1502 he was fined for not appearing at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh (both for not ‘giving presence’ and not ‘giving suit’) for his lands of Hawick, as well as for Chisholme and Teindside. In 1507 he confirmed a charter of the ‘Soltrelands’ in Hawick to the Church of the Holy Trinity in Edinburgh. He had an alliance with the Maxwells and in 1508 helped Lord Maxwell drive Lord Sandquhar from Dumfries; he was present at the Battle of Dumfries Sands, where he was responsible for the killing of Robert Crichton of Kirkpatrick. In 1508/9 he had a charter for the Barony of Tibbers and documents record him paying the money owed to the former Maitland owners. In 1508/9 he was on an assize for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. In 1509 he was witness to a marriage contract between Archibald, son of George, Master of Angus, and Margaret Hepburn. Also in 1509 he signed a marriage contract between his daughter Janet and Sir Robert Maxwell. Hawick was reaffirmed in its ‘burgh of barony’ status through his charter of 1511, granted by James IV. This charter renewed Douglas’ right to the Hawick lands granted in 1412 (while enacting the rights of the town), which had been removed by the King in 1510. In 1512 he was involved in a court case with Robert, Lord Crichton, in which he and his associates were exonerated for the murder of Robert Crichton of Kirkpatrick because he was an outlaw at the time. In 1512/3 he sold Broadlee (in the Northwick valley) to Alexander, Lord Home. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar. Their children included: James, who succeeded; Robert, ancestor of the Douglasses of Burford, and possibly same Robert who was the last Provost of Lincluden; Janet, who married Robert Maxwell, Lord of Carlaverock; and Agnes, who married Andrew Cunningham of Kirkshaw. Another son may was John, who was described as brother of James of Drumlanrig in a respite of 1526, as well as when he witnessed a charter in 1530/1, and when he witnessed his brother resigning his lands of Drumlanrig and others in 1540 in order to be regranted. He was killed at Flodden (perhaps dying the day after, since it is recorded that he ‘died in Northumberland, in the field of war, 10 September 1513’. An inventory of his goods was drawn up by his widow, including 3500 sheep, with a total value of more than £1000 in goods. William of Brieryards (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Wilelmum Douglas de Brezardis’ in 1517 when he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is surely related to the later William. William (16th C.) owner of 3 parcates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. It is unclear how he was related to any other Douglasses. William of Bonjedward (16th C.) probably son of George. He was cautioned in 1536 and 1537. He may be the William who was given the ‘fermes’ of Falside and Roughlee in 1538 for his roll in the accounts for Jedforest. He was probably the Laird of Bonjedward who gave his pledge to England (along with Kerr Lairds) in 1544; however, it also appears from English documents that he switched to the Scottish side at Ancrum Moor. He acted as chief of council for Sir George Douglas. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. Also in 1545 he was appointed as one of the temporary Sheriffs of

Roxburghshire in order to deal with the inheriting of Cavers by James Douglas. He was therefore presumably the ‘Lard of Bune Jedworth’ whose house was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. In late 1545 he was to have 16 of the 500 horsemen mustered in Teviotdale by Parliamentary decree. He was probably the ‘lard of Bouniedworth’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1549 he was among the supporters of Walter Kerr of Cessford who was accused by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in assisting the English in raiding and burning his farms in the previous year. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He is probably the Laird of Bonjedward who was appointed as a deputy warden in 1553. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he was among landowners summoned before the Privy Council to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Huddale and the people of Jedburgh. From 1566 he held the fruits of the Rectory of Southdean (suggesting that Hugh, who was minister there at the time of the Reformation, was possibly a close relative). He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. Also in 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle, with his surety being James Heriot of Tra-boun; at the same time he himself was surety for James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. In 1571/2 he joined other lairds in signing a bond to act against Borders thieves and he signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He was Deputy Warden of the Middle Marches in 1576 when there were communications with Sir John Forster regarding ‘outrages committed by the inhabitants of West Teviotdale’. He could be the Douglas of Bonjedward who was at the Raid of the Redeswire. He is probably the William of Bonjedward who wrongfully occupied lands belonging to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. He may also be the William who was listed among the landed men of the Borders about 1590. His children probably included: George, who succeeded, and was ‘younger’ of Bonjedward since the 1560s; John, possibly the brewer in Edinburgh, whose son George was martyred for adhering to the Catholic faith at York in 1587; Archibald; and Elizabeth, who married Alexander Laurie of Gosford. Robert, son of William ‘in Bonjedward’, who witnessed a sasine near Melrose in 1582, may have been another son. Additional sons might be Patrick, Donald and James, who are described as ‘in Banejedward’ when they witnessed a 1568 charter, as well as Andrew who was ‘in Bonajedburgh’ when he witnessed a Calhull charter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. William of Brieryards (16th C.) witness in 1551 to a sasine confirming Alexander Cunningham as Baron of Hassendean. He was probably related to the William of Brieryards recorded in 1517, and Robert must have been his direct descendant. William of Crook (d.1584) recorded in 1534/4 as ‘Wilelmum Douglass in Crowk’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch by Sir Walter Scott. In 1565 he was ‘William Dowglass of the Cruke’ when he and James of Cavers (probably son of Sir James) were fined for the non-appearance of 2 Elliots to answer for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He had a charter in 1568 from the Commendator of Melrose Abbey for ‘their three merk lands of Cruik . . . to be held . . . in feu farm and heritage for ever’ for a payment of 40 shillings yearly, plus an augmentation of 3s and 4d. In 1569 he signed the bond to suppress thieves in the Borders. According to the register of the Privy Council he was warded in 1571 and served as surety in 1576. In 1574 he served as surety for a number of Borderers, specifically the residents of Earlsde, Penchris and Kirkton. He is also named in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; he is listed as being ‘of Cruik’ and along with Gavin Elliot of Horsleighill and Robert Elliot (‘Young Robin’) is listed ‘for the wrangus spoliatioun and awaytak-ing of thair teindis’. Note that Christine Douglas, Lady of Tows, is also named in the same document (and must have been a close neighbour). In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. A document of 1581 (among the Cavers papers) records his wife as ‘Eliza Scot’, when he granted his son James several pieces of land within Crook (including a herb garden called ‘Taillyard’ and a barn called ‘Trone et Troneland’); this was part of a promise made before the marriage between his son Martin and a Hoppringle. This suggests that Martin was probably the elder son and James the younger (although this is far from clear). His will, where he is recorded as ‘in the Cruiks’, is also among the Douglas Douglas of Cavers papers. It seems likely that he is closely related to the Baron of Cavers, perhaps son of Sir James of Cavers. His son and heir, Martin, is recorded in 1592 and 1608. He had a brother, Archibald, possibly the same man as Archibald of Tofts, as recorded in 1608, when his lands were inherited by Martin (his son, Archibald’s nephew). Sir William of Hawick (d.1572) son of Sir James the 7th Baron of Drumlanrig. In 1559 his father promised to infest him as his son and heir, in all his lands, including the Baron of Hawick. In 1564 he and several other Douglases were given remission for the murder of High Douglas of Dalveen. He long fought beside his father and is listed along with him in a declaration by an extensive list of noblemen in 1570. In 1568 he commanded 200 horsemen at the Battle of Langside, fighting against Queen Mary. He was ‘yongar of Drumlanrig’ in 1569 when obliged to enter certain men to the court in Dumfries and was ‘Sir William Dowglas of Hawk knycht’ in the same year in a case involving Grahams. He gained the lands of ‘Bagbie’ (probably Begbie) in Lothian. He narrowly escaped when his father was captured in 1571, but his father wrote ‘Willie, Thou sall wit that I am hail and feare. Send me word thairfor how thow art, whether deid or livand?’ Nevertheless, he pre-deceased his father, the baronies of Hawick going to his son Sir James; this was in March 1572/3, with the Barony and lands being in the hands of Crown since his death about 6 months earlier. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar. Their other children were: Margaret, who married Sir Robert Montgomery of Skelmorlie; Janet, who married Sir James Murray of Cockpool; Helen; Christian; Jean; and William. There is a ‘letter of reversiion’ of 1594 relating to lands held by his daughters Janet and Christian, and another of 1606. His father clearly did not get along with his wife, writing an amendement to his will in 1578, calling on his son (Sir James) to ‘not receive her in household with him’. William of Friarshaw (d.1575) younger son of Sir James, 5th Laird of Cavers. He became the 1st Douglas Laird of Friarshaw. He married ‘Eufame’ Davidson (whose testament is recorded in 1580) and was said to have been succeeded in turn by his sons John and George. However, in 1592 the lands of Friarshaw were held by Andrew and John, with a regranting of the charter to Andrew and his son George. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Kirkton’ when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1569. Arthur in Kirkton was also mentioned, and so they were presumably related. William (16th C.) tenant in Ferniehirst. In 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. Sir William (d.c.1585) 7th of Cavers. He may be the William ‘in Cawaris’ who witnessed a notorial instrument for Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1550. He succeeded his father Sir James in 1558, with the ‘retour’ signed by Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch, Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun, Robert Kerr of Woodhead, and others. He was stated to be ‘of lawful age by reason of the Queen’s letters of dispensation’, suggesting that he was somewhat younger than 21 at the time. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1563 he sold the lands of the Mains of Spittal-on-Rule to Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch. Also in 1563 he served as security for Robert Elliot of Redheugh being appointed Deputy Keeper of Hermitage Castle. In 1564 he was listed as proprietor of part of the lands of Caveling (with Gavin Elliot holding the other part) and was ordered to present their tenant David Elliot before the Privy Council. In 1564 he was probably the ‘Sheref of Teviotdaill’ when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He is recorded in a bond of 1567 to present ‘Richie Thomson’ to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, the Warden. In 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and Regent, probably in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. Also in 1573 he tried to have Robert Elliot of Redheugh removed from the lands of Langside and Gavin Elliott removed from the lands of Caveling; he appears to have later lost this legal battle. In 1574 he had a discharge with John Cranston of that Ilk for rentals of Denholm and other lands. In 1574 he was involved in a dispute with William Elliot of Gorrenberry over lands at Caerlenrig (which his father had wadset to Archibald Elliot) and with Gavin Elliott of Baillielee (later Stobs) over lands of Caveling. Additionally in 1574 he was surety for a number of Croziers at Earlside, Penchrise and Kirkton, and was found liable to pay 5000 merks for not replacing those claimed to be thieves with ‘trew men to dwell thairin’. Also in 1574 he is ‘vmquhile’ when named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as still owing on a bond, with sureties being Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch, his son Andrew Ker and the deceased William Ker of Yair. However, he appears to be still alive in 1579 as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in a sasine relating to Midshiels and Appletreehall, in which James, younger of Cavers, was witness. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. In 1576/7 he resigned his lands and Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to his son James, but reserving the ‘liferent’ to himself. This suggests that perhaps he was not in good health by that point. He signed a bond with Rutherfords and Turnbulls in 1578. He also signed a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably in the early 1580s. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their relieving crimes. Also in 1581 he was among men who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was denounced as a rebel again in 1583 for non-appearance. He appears to still be alive in 1583/4 and 1584/5, when he was listed among Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. He married Euphemia, daughter of Sir William Ker of Cessford (although it has also been suggested that he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Cranston of that Ilk). He was succeeded by his only known child, Sir James. Rev. William (16th C.) recorded as minister at Southdean in 1585. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1580. William (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Laidlaws, Turnbulls, Shiels and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton Hall in 1589. He is recorded being ‘of Yerneside’ and ‘Yarnside’, which is probably Earlside, given that some of the other men were from Rulewater. William (c.1540–1606) 6th Earl of Morton, son of Robert of Lochleven, with his mother being Margaret Erskine, a former mistress of James V. He was half brother of James Stewart, Earl of Moray, Regent of Scotland. He succeeded to the Earldom of Morton in 1588 on the death of Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He held many lands, including church lands in Hassendean and Cavers that were part of the Lordship of Melrose. He owned the island castle where Mary, Queen of Scots was imprisoned. He married Agnes, daughter of George Leslie, 4th Earl of Rothes. They had 11 children, and he was succeeded by his grandson William, son of Robert. James, Commendator of Melrose was another son. He also had a daughter who married Alexander, 1st Earl of Home. William (1552–1611) 10th Earl of Angus, son of William. He became a Catholic while visiting the French court, being dispossessed of his return. But he succeeded to his father in 1591 and in 1592 he was appointed Warden of the West Marches. Embroiled in plot with the English and Spanish, he was imprisoned for treason in 1593, lived as a rebel, but eventually renounced his religion and had his estates restored in 1597. The following year he was appointed Lieutenant of the Border, orchestrating the ‘Raid of Dumfries’ against the Johnstones. In 1605 he sold off his lands in Rulewater, including the superiority that his family had held for many generations. However in 1606 he was still ‘Lord of the Regalitie of Jedburgh-forest’ when he was in court to represent his subjects, a group of Turnbulls of Wauchope and others, charged with murder, theft and fire-raising at Harwood and Appotside. He was later excommunicated again and died in exile in France. He married Elizabeth Oliphant and his children included: William, 1st Marquess of Douglas; James, 1st Lord Mordington; Francis; Catherine, who married Sir Andrew Ker; Mary, who married Alexander Livingstone, 2nd Earl of Linlithgow; and Elizabeth, who married Sir John Campbell. William (1582–1648) son of Robert and grandson of William 6th Earl of Morton, whom he succeeded as 7th Earl. He was served heir to his grandfather in 1606. Among the many lands he inherited were church lands of Hassendean and Cavers that were part of the Lordship of Melrose. He was Lord High Treasurer of Scotland. He raised money for the Royalist cause by selling his Dalkeith estate to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1642. He married Anne, daughter of George Keith, 5th Earl of Marischal. He was succeeded by his son Robert. William (16th/17th C.) granted 1½ husbandlands in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as son of John in Friarshaw, although how they were related to other Douglases of Friarshaw is unclear. William (16th/17th C.) son of Archibald. He was served heir to his father in a cottage-land in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1602. He could be related to the Douglases of Friarshaw. William of Whitriggs (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601, along with James of Cavers and Robert Turnbull of Barhills, when Henry Woodrington accused them of stealing his cattle. He is also mentioned being ‘of Quhitrig’ in the Dumfries Circuit Court of 1622, when John Ainslie (Bailie of Jedburgh) and James Haswell (surgeon) were caution for him. Probably the same William ‘of Whytrig’ was recorded in 1612 when Gavin Elliot of Brugh complained that he and several other sevants of James Douglas of Cavers had attacked his family; his brother Robert was also involved. He is probably related to the John ‘of Quhitrig’ listed among the landed men of the Borders in about 1590. His son may be Thomas, recorded as heir apparent to Whitriggs in 1637. William (16th/17th C.) was recorded as ‘in Harwood’ in 1599 when his son James became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This may be Harwood on Rule. But more likely he is the William, son of John of Little Harwood (in the Barony of Calder in Edinburghshire) who had sasine for Little Harwood in 1583. William (c.1582–1640) 1st Earl of Queensberry, son of Sir James of Drumlanrig and great grandson of the Sir James who granted Hawick its 1537 Charter. He took over running his father’s affairs before becoming Baron on his death in 1615. In 1611 he was accused of imprisoning William Kirkpatrick in Drumlanrig Castle. He is probably the Sir William who had an action against the Bailies of Hawick in 1612. In 1612, while still ‘younger of Drumlanrig’, he was accused of kidnapping William Kirkpatrick of Kirkmichael and of illegally carrying guns, but was let off on technicalities. In 1615 he was served heir to his father’s lands, including the Barony and Regality of Drumlanrig, as well as the Barony of Hawick, along with the mill and several specific lands. In 1616, as Provost of Lincluden College, he resigned his lands in Kirkcudbrightshire. In 1616 and the following years he aggressively pursued those who were responsible for the attack on his father’s sheep at Howpasley (and court records suggest that several people favourable to him were on the jury). He entertained King James VI at Drumlanrig in 1617. He acquired the lands of Sanquhar and the Barony of Morton. In 1621 he was involved with a feud with the Douglases of Caschogill and others. He was made Viscount Drumlanrig, as well as Lord Douglas of Hawick and Tibbers in 1628 by Charles I and was created Earl of Queensberry in 1633; that title came from a high hill in Closeburn Parish, Dumfriesshire. He must have been Baron of Hawick in 1627 when it is stated that several men conscripted into the army were his ‘men and servants’ and so should perhaps be sent to join his brother, Sir James Douglas of Mouswald. He is recorded paying the vicarage and parsonage teinds of Teviotdalehead to the Earl of Buccleuch for 1627–33. He married Isabel Kerr, daughter of Mark, Earl of Lothian (the marriage contract being in 1603) and was succeeded by his eldest son James. Another son, Sir William of Kelhead had descendants who would take over the Queensberry line later. He also had children: Archibald of Dornock; Margaret, who married James, Earl of Hartfell; and Janet, who married Thomas, Lord Kirkcudbright. William (1589–1660) 1st Marquess of Douglas, he was eldest son of William, 10th Earl of Angus. He was a Catholic, like his father, and was deeply embroiled in the politics of Scotland in the 17th century. He was created Marquess of Douglas in 1638 and was a Lieutenant on the Borders. He was recorded as owner of Swinnie, Old Jedburgh, Lintalee, etc., as well as ‘his lands of Jed Forrest, being four-score steids’, according to the 1643 valuation rolls. He escaped from the Battle of Philiphaugh in 1645 and was later fined by Cromwell. He was probably the Marquess of Douglas recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 paying £366 13s 4d in Southdean Parish. He married Margaret Hamilton, daughter of Lord Paisley, and secondly married Mary, daughter of George Gordon, Marquess of Huntly. His children included: Archibald, 1st Earl of Ormond, whose son James became 2nd Marquess of Douglas; William; James; William, 1st Earl of Selkirk; George, 1st Earl of Dumbarton; James; Margaret, who married William, Lord Alexander; Jean, who married John Hamilton, 1st Lord Bargany; Grizel, who married Sir William Carmichael of that Ilk; Henrietta, who married James Johnstone, 1st Earl of Amandale; Catherine, who married Sir William Ruthven of Dunglas; Isabel, who married William Douglas, 1st Duke of Queensberry; Jane, who married James Drummond, 4th Earl of Perth; Lucy, who married Robert Maxwell, 4th Earl of Nithsdale; and Mary. William (16th/17th C.) son of Martin of Tofts. He is recorded in 1617 (along with his father) in letters confirming their earlier receipt of the teinds, parsonage and vicarage of Kirkton. In about 1621 he was infefted in the lands of ‘Pit-tilesheuuche’ by the Commendator of Melrose. He may be the William of Tofts who wrote a eulogic poem about Robert Kerr, 2nd Earl of Lothian in about 1624, and who was said to be involved with Kerr’s wife, Annabella, Countess of Lothian. He is probably the Douglas of Tofts mentioned in a document of the Bishop of Aberdeen in 1622, also relating to Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was also recorded in about the same time as brother of Archibald of Lumsden. He may be the unnamed Laird of Tofts whose lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £300 in 1643. It is unclear how this branch is connected with local Douglasses. William of Bonjedward (d.c.1636) probably son of George. He was ‘Fiar of Bonjedward’ in 1597 and it is unclear when he succeeded. He was probably the ‘lard of Bonejedward younger’ who was among some Scottish prisoners taken from a large group who went into England to go hunting; he was released soon afterwards. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to try 2 murderers in Jedburgh. He served as Justice Convener for Roxburghshire, and was charged in 1628 with holding courts in Jedburgh and elsewhere. He was listed in 1628 as one of the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for the county. In 1632 he was Convenor of the Sub-commissioners for the Presbytery of Jedburgh. He may be the William (‘of blank’) listed as owner of lands valued at £195 in Cavers Parish in 1643. He appears in a document of 1633 relating to Sir John Auchmaty of Gosford. He married Rebecca, daughter of Sir John Drummond of Hawthornden in 1600. He may also have married her sister, Elizabeth. His children included: George, who succeeded; Rev. John (d.1671), minister of Yetholm and Crailing; Thomas (d.1672); Rev. James (d.1665), minister of Hobkirk; and Mary, who married John of Timpedean in 1632.

Sir William (d.c.1658) 9th of Cavers, son of Sir James. He was ‘fiar of Cavers’ in 1612 when he served as cautioner for John Rutherford in Jedburgh and Richard Rutherford in Littleheuch not to harm Lord Roxburgh and others. He is probably the William, feuar of Cavers, who received the teinds of Kirkton from the minister in 1617. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to try 2 murderers in Jedburgh. He is probably the Douglas of Cavers who sold Corrisike, Langbyre, Giddenscleuch and part of Caerlenrig to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1620. He is probably the ‘fear of Cavers’ recorded in 1622 when sheep were stolen from his lands of ‘Hairlesy’ and Langside. He acted as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for the Parliaments of 1612 (when still ‘younger’), 1617, 1621, 1628–33, 1639–40, 1644, 1645–46 and 1650. He was also a member of the Privy Council of Scotland in the 1640s. In 1617 he entered into a negotiation with James VI over surrender of the Sherifship of Cavers to the Crown, but nothing was resolved at that time. Following a decree of 1620 he arranged to give up the Sheriffship and the teinds of Cavers Kirk for the sum of £20,000 Scots. However, he complained in 1633 that he had only been paid £4,000, and Parliament agreed to let him keep the office until full payment had been made (and in fact the family were Sheriffs until the final abolition of such offices in 1747). The record he made still exists of the proceedings for the 1628 election of M.Ps. (or ‘Commissioners’) for Roxburghshire, including a list of all the major landowners of the county. In 1629 he was served heir to his maternal great-grandfather William Cranston of that Ilk (although it is unclear what lands he thereby gained). He became a Burgess of Edinburgh ‘gratis’ in 1630. He was a cautioner for Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and was recorded as cautioner for George Douglas of Bonjedward in a marriage contract with the Murrays of Elibank in 1632. In early 1638 he was one of the local men given special powers to attempt to stop the spread of the plague. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the ‘Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union’ (i.e. the ‘Covenant’), and as Sheriff of Teviotdale he led the Hawick signing of the document that was afterwards preserved at Cavers. In 1639 he was one of the Commissioners of the Scottish army sent to negotiate with Charles I. In late 1640 he commanded the advance guard of the Covenanters army that was sent to Newcastle, where they were surprised to be welcomed as friends. In 1640–41 he was in England on state business, missing 2 sessions of the Scottish Parliament. In 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being ‘notorious criminalls, theefes and ressetters of thift’, and was appointed one of the assessors to the Justice General for these courts. Also in 1642 he gained Burmouthe, ‘Greina’ (Greenholm perhaps) and ‘Puriven’ in Liddesdale from Douglas of Spott. In 1643 he was appointed to a ‘commissioner for the establishment of manufacturies’. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £5344 6s 8d, in Kirkton at £1480 (for Kirkton, Effledge, Whitriggs and East Middle), in Hobkirk £171 and in Castleton at £420. In 1643 he was one of the 2 Convenors of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire, and he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644, 1646 and 1648. He commanded a regiment of horse, who defeated a force from the north of England on their march to join James Graham, Marquess of Montrose in 1646 and was also one of the Commissioners for trying the followers of Montrose. In 1647 he and his son Archibald were confirmed by Charles I in the office of Sheriff for their natural lives. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1650 he was named one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He married Ann (or Anne), daughter of William Douglas of Whittinghame and was succeeded (briefly) by his son Sir Archibald. His other children were: John of Gervald; and Helen, who married Sir William Bruce of Stenhouse. Agnes, recorded in 1663 as sister of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, was probably also his daughter (and may have been the same as Helen). William (d.c.1672) described as an advocate in 1672 when his son James was served heir to his Lordship and Barony of Jedforest (i.e. he was superior of lands in Southdean). He was probably related to the Marquesses of Douglas, who had held this Barony shortly before him. However, he may have died by 1684 when his sisters Margaret and Jean inherited the same Lordship and Barony. Sir William (d.1676) 11th of Cavers, son of Sir Archibald. He may have been the Sir William, 'younger of Cavers' who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1649 (but his brother Sir Archibald would have been the heir apparent at that time). He was removed as Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1662 when he refused to take the Test, thereafter encouraging and protecting Covenanters. He was also cited for appointing a private chaplain and tutor who was not licensed by the Bishop. In 1659 he married Katherine, daughter of Thomas Rigg of Atherne and Eupham Moneypenny (who remarried to Sir John Scott of Scotstarvit); she was 'the Good Lady Cavers', who was indicted for similar crimes after his death and imprisoned for several years (as described in the 1851 book 'The Ladies of the Covenant'). According to the marriage contract his father resigned his lands and titles to him, this being confirmed in an 'instrument of resignation' of 1662. In 1676 he was fined for having a chaplain who was not licensed by the Bishop. He was declared an outlaw, but died before any actions were taken against him. He was succeeded by his sons Sir William and then Archibald. His younger sons were John, James and Thomas (who was born after his death, and whose grandson George continued the family line). His son William was not served as his heir until 1687. William of Coliforthill (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He paid the land tax on £266 13s 4d in Cavers Parish in 1678. This was the same land owned by William Gledstains of Coliforthill in 1643 and that would be owned by Archibald Douglas of Adderstone by 1688. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglases. William (17th C.) tenant of the Cavers estate. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers (also William Douglas), returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He may be the same man as William in East Middle. William (d.c.1687) tenant in East Middle. His will is recorded in 1687. He was surely related to Andrew, who was recorded at the same farm in 1685. William recorded in Middle in 1720 may be related to him. William of Timpedean (d.c.1688) son of John and Mary Douglas, he was the 7th Laird. In 1655 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Lanton. He is recorded on the Land Tax Rolls for Timpedean in 1663. In 1655 he married Alison, daughter of John Turnbull of Minto and Elizabeth Elliott of Stobs. Their children were: John, who succeeded; Elisabeth; Andrew, who married Helen Scott in Jedburgh; William; Robert John; George; and Alison. William (17th C.) son of Rev. James, minister of Hobkirk and grandson of William of Bonjedward. In 1669 he was served heir to his father's lands of Newhall in the parish of 'Boldoun' (perhaps Soudon). He also succeeded to Plewlands, which are probably the lands of that name in Hobkirk Parish. William (17th C.) listed as 'carrier in Kirkwynd' among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the William listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He may be the William who was fined by the Magistrates in 1689 for his 'exhorbitant' wedding with the daughter of Thomas Lunn. This was against the new Act of Parliament, limiting the cost of the marriage feast. Sir William of Cavers (d.1698) 12th Laird, eldest son of Sir William. He was removed from the care of his mother, Katherine Rigg, after she was cited for supporting the Covenanters. He was then placed under the care of tutors appointed by the Privy Council, these including Sir William Elliott of Stobs, his uncle Thomas and 2 other Douglases. There is an undated bill (c.1670s) brought by him and his tutors William and Thomas Elliot against Adam Urquhart of Meldrum. In 1678 he is probably the William of Cavers who paid the Land Tax (along with his grandmother, presumably wife of Sir Archibald, Rachel Skene) on £7694 in Cavers Parish and £1480 in Kirkton Parish. He was list of the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He must have been the William who was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1684. He was not served heir to his father until 1687 (presumably because of the changing political situation), this including extensive lands in Cavers Parish and the Rule valley, as well as a few elsewhere (e.g. Carlawerock Kirk). He was an officer in the Scots Greys, being Captain in 1689 (when the regiment was commanded by another Sir William Douglas). In 1689 he was also appointed Lieutenant Colonel in the local Militia regiment. He was Sheriff Principal of Roxburghshire and was appointed as an additional Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1690, serving until his death. He was also Convener of the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and was a Commissioner in 1690. He may be the Sir William mentioned in Dalrymple’s ‘Memoirs’ when his French Protestant wife was forbidden from leaving France by Louis XIV in 1685. He left the army in 1694 when his regiment went to Flanders. In about 1690 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Douglas of Newcastle. Dying without an heir, he was succeeded by his brother Archibald. His widow later married Sir A. Home. William 1st Duke of Queensberry (1637–95), eldest son of James the 2nd Earl. He succeeded his father as 3rd Earl in 1611. In 1665 he is recorded as William, Lord Drumlanrig, when the Scottish Parliament agreed to his request to allow 2 additional yearly fairs in Hawick, and also to grant him remission for the valuation of his Barony of Hawick. By 1667 it is clear that he was already seeking legal opinion over his powers as a superior in the Barony of Hawick. In 1669 there was an Act in his favour for 2 additional yearly fairs at Hawick. In about 1672 (i.e. shortly after he succeeded his father) it appears that he or his agents proposed that the Common of Hawick be divided between him and the Burgh, but this came to nothing, and so presumably was resisted by the Town (although the surviving draft of the Hawick Commission leaves it unclear who started the proposal). In 1673 he brought an extraordinary (and frivolous) case against the Bailies and inhabitants of the Town (with 32 men named), complaining to the Privy Council that his Bailie in Hawick was attacked when he was trying to ‘set the fair’; the Hawick Bailies countered by stating that this was a ‘groundless libel’ brought because of an ongoing dispute between the 2 parties. It is clear that the relationship between the Town and its Baron had completely broken down at that time. However, in 1675 he lost the Barony and lands (although he kept the title of Baron of Hawick), which were granted to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in 1675, ending about a century and a half of control of the Barony of Hawick by the Douglas family. He was appointed Justice General of Scotland in 1680, made Extraordinary Lord of Session in 1681 and in 1682 was raised to the Marquisate, made High Treasurer and appointed Constable and Governor of Edinburgh Castle. His titles already included Earl of Drumlanrig and Sancar, Viscount of Nith, Torthorwald and Ross, as well as Lord Douglas of Kinmont, Middlebie and Dornoch, and the family additionally held the title of Baron of Hawick and Tibbers. In 1684 he was made Duke of Queensberry. James II appointed him High Commissioner in 1685. But soon afterwards he argued with the crown over the repeal of laws against Catholicism and was deprived of his offices. He then retired and focussed on re-building Drumlanrig Castle, most of the work there being in the period 1679–91. Back in favour, he became Lord of Session again in 1693. He introduced a set of instructions for Scottish High Commissioners, which mostly became Acts of Parliament; this included the Act ‘declaring all preaching at Conventicles in houses (as well as in fields) to be death in the preacher, and banishment and great fines in the hearers and landlords’. Additionally he introduced an instruction that prisoners being sent to the colonies who did not recognise the King’s authority were to have an ear cut off, and he was also said to have brought into use a steel thumbscrew that was used to extract confessions. He is probably the Duke of Queensberry who contributed £3000 to the Darien Company in 1695. He married Isabel, daughter of the Marquess of Douglas and was succeeded by his son James, the 2nd Duke. His other children were: William, Earl of March; Lord George (d.1693); and Anne, who married David, Earl of Wemyss. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Kirkton on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. William of Cunzierton (17th/18th C.) paid the land tax on £440 in Oxnam Parish in 1678. He was Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. In that same year there is a marriage contract between his sister Christian and Hugh Scott of Gala, preserved among the papers of the Douglasses of Cavers. It seems likely he was a near relation of the Cavers branch. Cunzierton lies between Oxnam and Hownam. William of Bonjedward Douglas (d.aft. 1705) probably son of George. He is mentioned as Laird in 1685, 1695 and 1704. He was probably the Douglas of ‘Bonjedburgh’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. In 1670 in Jedburgh he married Margaret Scott, and in 1699 in Jedburgh (perhaps also recorded in Ashkirk Parish) he secondly married Beatrix Scott. His children with Margaret Scott included: George, who succeeded; Rev. Walter (b.1674), minister of Linton and member of the General Assembly; and probably Isobell (b.1677), Charles (b.c.1679) and Marion (b.1683). His children with Beatrix Scott included: John (b.1705), who was baptised in Hawick Parish; and Isabella (b.1703), also baptised in Hawick. His connection with Hawick is not clear, but perhaps his wife was from there, and possibly the ‘Auld Wat’ Scott who witnessed the baptism in 1705 could have been his father in law. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Scott. Their children included: Helen (b.1687); and James (b.1702). The witnesses to Helen’s baptism were James Scott and James Douglas, who may have been related to the parents. William (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. William ‘Skail the Mercat’ (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘merchant in Hawick distinctionis causa called Scail the mercat’ in a baptismal record of 1706. His nickname presumably meant ‘disperse the market’, but it is unclear what its origin might have been. He is perhaps the same merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the William listed ‘eis the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. His children included Bessie (b.1706), with witnesses Walter Wilson and Walter Oliver (both fellow merchants). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1694), John (b.1696), James (b.1699), Walter (b.1701), Margaret (b.1703), William (b.1706), Agnes (b.1707), and Thomas (b.1707). 2 families may be represented here. Some of Andrew (b.1708), Bessie (b.1709), Janet (b.1709), an unnamed son (b.1712), Robert (b.1712), Elspeth (b.1713), Elspeth (again, b.1718) and Archibald (b.1718) could also be his children. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Glendinning in Hawick in 1705. William (17th/18th C.) married Jean ‘Irwin’ in Hawick Parish in 1710. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at ‘new mains’ in 1716 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) described as ‘packman’ in 1716 when there were complaints made against him and John Runcastle for sitting in seats in Hawick Kirk that were meant to be assigned to the incorporated trades. Apparently they even broke open the door to the ‘Weaver’s Loft’ when it was locked. William (17th/18th C.) Sheriff Officer in Hawick. He married Bessie Scott. This happened shortly before the death of Rev. Alexander Orrock. There is a record in late 1711 of him receiving back the ‘consignation money’ which had been ‘panded’ for his marriage, having been distributed to the poor by Rev. Orrock on hearing that ‘some women in ye toun did drink their quarts of Ale apiece at ye making of ye Bed’. He was ‘officer’ in 1714 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Elliot. William (17th/18th C.) married Helen Redford in Wilton in 1713. William of Timpendean (1684–c.1730) son of John, he was the 9th Laird. He was Bailie of the Baron Court of Nisbet in 1715. He was present during the drunken meeting in the Black Bull in Jedburgh after the election of 1726 in which Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs killed Col. Stewart of Stewartfield. In 1718 he married Jean, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston (as her 2nd husband), and she died in 1748. His children included: Archibald (b.1718), who succeeded; Susanna (b.1718), eldest daughter, who married Robert, son of Sir John Clerk of Penicuik in 1740; John; Euphan or Euphemia, who married George Balderstone in 1737; and William. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He was ‘in Middle’ in 1720 when his daughter Janet was baptised. William (b.1723) may also have been his son. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in ‘Rig’, i.e. Winningtonrig. His son Gilbert was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. William (17th/18th C.) recorded being ‘in Denholm’ in 1721 when his son John was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Presumably he used to live in Kirkton Parish, and may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Cavers (d.1748) 14th Laird of Cavers, eldest son of Archibald. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire, elected in 1715, 1727, and again in 1742, remaining as M.P. until 1747. There were gaps in the years 1722–27 (when Sir Gilbert Elliott was Roxburghshire M.P. and he was M.P. for Dumfries Burghs) and 1734–42 (when John Rutherford was M.P.). He became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1715, by right of his father Archibald. He was Keeper of the General Register of Hornings in 1728 and Storekeeper of the Customs House, Ireland. In 1739 he and his father were among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. He had to yield up the hereditary Sheriffsip to his brother Archibald, in order to remain an M.P. for the county. He died unmarried. William (18th C.) married Janet Harkness in Cavers Parish in 1720. William (18th C.) married Catherine Gilroy in Kirkton Parish in 1726. William (18th C.) married Betty Scott in Bedrule Parish in 1732. William (18th C.) married Janet Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1733. William (18th C.) resident of Spittal in 1733 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Eastcote in 1733 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th C.) married Catherine Gilroy in Kirkton Parish in 1734. William 4th (and last) Duke of Queensberry, ‘Old Q’ (1725–1810). He was 3rd Earl of March, until inheriting the Queensberry titles (and huge estates), including the Lordship of Hawick, on the death of his cousin Charles. He was also created Baron of Amesbury and was Lord Lieutenant of Dumfries. In his earlier years he served as an M.P. He was known as an eccentric and for his pleasurable pursuits, which involved extravagant spending of his vast fortune. He was a patron of horse-racing, and famous for indulging in various luxuries. He lived at Neidpath Castle and was criticised for cutting down the adjacent woods (as commemorated in a sonnet by Wordsworth). He died unmarried, and his estates were the subject of litigation after his death, the titles eventually being split between 3 distant cousins: the Marquess of Queensberry, Viscount Drumlanrig, and Lord Douglas of Hawick and Tibbers descended to Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead; the Earl of March, Viscount of Peebles, Lord Douglas of Neidpath and others descended to the Earl of Wemyss; and the Duke of Queensberry, Marquess of Dumfriesshire, Earl of Drumlanrig and Sanquhar, Viscount of Nith, Torthorwald and Ross, Lord Douglas of Kinmont, Middlebie and Dornock devolved to Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. William (18th C.) resident of Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. He married Alison Thomson in 1770 and their children included: Isabel (b.1772); and Janet (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were Thomas Blyth and James Dryden. William (18th C.) resident of Moorfield in Wilton Parish. He married Mary Thomson and their children included Margaret (b.1772). The witnesses were Robert Fairbairn and Robert Thomson. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Common (or perhaps Cumming) and their children included Betty (b.1775), James (b.1777) and John (b.1780). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Nelly Redpath and their children included Elizabeth (b.1778) and Margaret (b.1780). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1795). William (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Ann Kersel, who died in 1797. Their children included William (b.1794). William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was surely from one of the local families. Sir William of Timpedean (1770–1834) son of Archibald, he was 11th Laird. He entered the army in 1786 as an ensign in the 1st Battalion of Foot, becoming a Lieutenant in 1789 and serving in the West Indies. He raised an independent company in 1793 and moved to the 6th Battalion, serving during the Irish Rebellion and becoming Assistant Quartermaster General. He helped form the 98th Regiment, was appointed Lieutenant Colonel and served in Canada, Bermuda and the coast of America. He was promoted to Colonel in 1813 and Major General in 1819. His estate of Timpedean (including parts of what had been Lanton) was valued at £866 in 1788. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1813 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls at Timpedean. He married Marianne Tattershall in 1810 in Liverpool, and she died in 1835. They had 9 children: William (c.1811–26), who died at Harrow; Helen (c.1814–74), who married Rev. Thomas Boyles Murray; Marianne (b.c.1815), who married Rev. George William Murray; Thomas (c.1816–36), who died in Edinburgh; Capt. George (1819–65), who succeeded, but sold Timpedean; Maj. Henry George Sholto (1820–1892), who was 13th of Timpedean; Frederick (1823–73), Surgeon with the rank of Major, who died in Nova Scotia; Emma (b.c.1824), who married Col. Thomas Mauborg Baillie in 1843; and William Archibald (c.1827–84), who died in Melbourne, his home there being named Timpedean. In 1843 his trustees (presumably with the agreement of his son George) sold Timpedean, Broomhall and part of Lanton to the Marquess of Lothian. William (b.1777/8) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the Fore Raw and in 1851 he was living at Kirkcaldy. His wife was Mary. He could be the same man as the shoemaker whose wife Ann Kersel died in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) glover... on the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. William (b.c.1800) shepherd living at Leahead in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Leahead. The family seem to have disappeared after that and so perhaps emigrated. His wife was Christian and their children included William, Walter, Margaret, Mary and Elizabeth. William Scott (1815–83) born in Hawick, he was son of accountant Alexander and Isabella Scott. He was educated at Heriot’s in Edinburgh and worked as a mercantile accountant. In his spare time he became an expert on the life and works of Burns. He edited ‘The Complete Poetical Works of Robert Burns with Memoir’ (1871, revised 1876) and the 6 volume ‘Works of Robert Burns’ (1877–79). He became secretary of the Edinburgh Burns Club in 1877. The widow of Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson presented to him the edition of Burns that the Ettrick Shepherd had given her husband. He married Isabella Forbes and their children included: William; Daniel; David Gordon; Isabella Scott; and Jessie Irving. He drowned off the East Pier at Leith. William (b.1882) born at Ploughlands near Jedburgh. His father was William and his mother was Margaret Waldie, sister of the tenant in Braidhaugh. He worked on the Weens estate. In 1903 he married Jane, daughter of Andrew Thomson and they had a son William (b.1806). His great-grandparents were farm servant Thomas and his wife Janet Moscrope. His grandfather was ploughman William, who died at Nisbet Mill (occasionally spelled ‘Douglass’ and formerly ‘Douglash’, ‘Dowglace’, ‘Douglass’, ‘Dowglasse’, ‘Dowgleiss’, ‘Douglasses’, ‘Duglass’, ‘Duneglas’, etc.).

the Douglas Airms (thu-dug-lis-ärnz) n. former name for the public house at the end of Drumlanrig Bridge, later known as the Office. It was the Douglas Arms in the early years of the 20th century, and until at least the 1930s.

the Douglas Banner (thu-dug-lis-baw-nur) n. pennon held for centuries in Cavers House, after being taken from the field of Otterburn. It is about 13 feet long, and has on it a lion passant, St. Andrews cross, 2 hearts, a mullet and the words ‘Jamais arryere’. It was said to have been the standard of James, Earl of Douglas, and carried from battle by his illegitimate son Archibald, 1st of Cavers. It is now in the Museum of Antiquities in Edinburgh.

Douglas Burn (dug-lis-burn) n. stream that flows roughly south-east from Blackhouse Heights to join the Yarrow Water at Craig Douglas – ‘Tarras and Dod and Douglas, Timnis Water and Trow; To the drone of bees On the clovered leas, Would sing me a welcome now’ [WL].

Douglas Court (dug-lis-kör) n. street in Denholm where there were new houses built around 1966.

the Douglas Crypt (thu-dug-lis-kript) n. burial aisle at Cavers Old Kirk. This was formerly the altar end of the church in Pre-Reformation days. It was converted into a burial chamber for the Douglasses of Cavers in the middle of the 17th century, about the same time the church was largely reconstructed, and a Laird’s Loft was added above the crypt.

Douglas Drive (dug-lis-drīv) n. street in Denholm, parallel to and the south of Main Street, where new houses were built around 1966.

the Douglasses (thu-dug-li-seez) n. local landowning family, which gave Hawick its burgh status as well as its existing charter, and supplied Sheriffs of Teviotdale for generations. The 2 branches of the most importance locally are derived from 2 illegitimate sons of James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, namely William, 1st Baron of Drumlanrig and Archibald of Cavers. The Douglasses held the Barony of Hawick from the late 14th century, confirmed to Douglas of Drumlanrig in in 1412. The lands remained in Douglas of Drumlanrig hands until passing to the Scots of Buccleuch in 1675. However, the title of Baron (or Lord) of Hawick remains with the family unto this day. The Douglasses held the patronage of St. Mary’s Kirk in Hawick from 1447 until 1448 and again in the 17th century until 1675. The Douglasses of Cavers were there from the 14th century, with the male line dying out with the 20th Laird, although the local Palmer-Douglasses still have a connection. Almost all the Lairds of Cavers were called Archibald, James or William. The Douglasses of Douglas and of Angus were significant nationally, although they had little local influence after the early 16th century. Other minor branches with local influence include the Douglasses of Bonjedward, Timpendean and Friarshaw. There were also Douglasses in early times at Hornshole, Brieryyards and the Trows. The Douglas heart represents the heart of Robert the Bruce, which was taken to the Crusades by Sir James Douglas. The family motto is ‘Jamais Arrière’ (never behind) – ‘There circles Douglasfield

many a legendary tale, Of Douglas’ race, foredoom’d without a male, To fade, unblest’sd, since on the churchyard green, Its lord o’erthrew the spires of Hassel-deun’ [JL].

Douglasfield (dug-lis-fœld) n. former farmstead just south of the Dearly Burn, east of Muir-field. Robert Henderson was farmer there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Douglas Haig Court (dug-lis-hāg-kōr’) n. accommodation built on the site of the former abattoir, or ‘Killin Hoose’, at Eskdail Bank in 1976 by the Royal British Legion to provide accommodation for ex-servicemen and their dependants.

Douglasshaugh Plantin (dug-lis-hawf-plawn’-in) n. plantation in the Borthwick valley, between Hoscote and Outsides.

the Douglas Hotel (thu-dug-lis-hō-tel) n. former temperance hotel on the Tower Knowe, where the Office Bar is now located, also known as ‘the Douglas Temperance Hotel’. In the latter part of the 19th and early 20th centuries the proprietors were Cecilia and Bessie Wight (cousins of Adam Grant’s wife).

Douglas’ Loup (dug-lis-eez-lowp) n. former name for a part of the Wauchope Burn to the west of old Wauchope House (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Douglas o Scotländ (dug-lis-ö-sko’-lind) n. knitwear firm based at the corner of Lothian Street and Allars Bank, formerly Scott & Telfer’s mill, built about 1874. The firm specialised in cashmere and other luxury garments. It started in the 1950s and went through liquidation at the end of 2005.

Douglas Road (dug-lis-rōd) n. street of private houses in the Wellogate area, built in 1903, and named after Bailie James Douglas. J.P. Alison designed one of the original houses there, a double cottage.

Douglas Road East (dug-lis-rōd-est) n. extension of Douglas Road, joining Twirless Terrace round the hairpin bends to Weensland Road, built in 1906.

Douglass (dug-lis) n. Frederick (c.1818–95)
African American social reformer. He escaped from slavery and became a leader in the abolitionist movement, noted as an orator and serving as a dramatic counter-example to slavery proponents views on black people. He travelled through Britain and Ireland for 2 years, 1845–6, and lectured in Hawick and other Border towns in April 1846. A story was told by abolitionist George Thompson (apparently when later visiting Hawick, as recounted in the Hawick Advertiser and later in the Border Counties’ Magazine of 1881) that he and Douglass had stopped off in Jedburgh around midnight on a carriage ride from Newcastle to Edinburgh, and described the comical sight of the innkeeper of the Spread Eagle there, scared to his wits end that he has seen ‘the very deevil himself’ when he caught sight of Douglass by the light of his candle (his surname was changed after he became free, the suggestion coming from a friend who had been reading Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lady of the Lake’, with the extra ‘s’ being added as a deliberate decision to spell it differently).

Douglas Square (dug-lis-skwär) n. main square in Newcastleton. North and South Hermitage Street runs to the north and south off the square. The Grapes Hotel is at Nos. 16 and the Liddesdale Hotel at No. 17 are also on the square.
The square contains a war memorial, consisting of a granite plinth topped with the figure of a soldier in K.O.S.B. uniform. No. 8 was formerly the Crown Inn. There was also an old public pump well there.

Douglas Terrace (dug-lis-te-ris) n. name originally given to the lower houses in Wellogate Place, after Bailie James Douglas, but discarded
in 1882.

the Douglas Tragedy (thu-dug-lis-traw-ji-dee) n. traditional ballad telling of the death (in one version at least) of the 7 Douglas brothers.
This followed the elopement of their sister Lady Margaret with Lord William, having a tragic ending near Craig Douglas farm, east of St. Mary’s Loch. It was further popularised in the 1755 play by John Home – ‘Lord William was buried in St Mary’s kirk, Lady Margaret in Mary’s choir, And from Lord William’s breast there grew a red rose,
And from Lady Margaret’s a sweet brier’ [T].

the Douglas Trei (thu-dug-lis-tri) n. chestnut tree that stood by Cavers Church until 2000.
Legend said it was planted in the reign of James VI, and that if ever a limb fell a family member would die. For the last part of its roughly 600 years it was supported by wooden beams and iron chains. Another tree of perhaps the same age is still standing nearby.

dour (door) adj. sullen, sour in aspect, stern, severe, bleak, gloomy, obstinate, stubborn, barren – ‘he could try ti be a wee bit less dour’, ‘it’s lookin gei dour oot there’, ‘Yet up he raise, the to the area around and east of Dovecote Street, before it was developed into Union Street.

Dovecote Park (duv-ko'-pawrk) n. former name for a field just south-west of Timpendale Tower. No sign of the former dovecote remains.

Dovecote Street (duv-ko'-stree') n. street off North Bridge Street, with the main housing built in 1862. It is named after a Dovecote that stood there from early times and is marked on Wood's map of 1824. The bus garage was for a long time near the top of the street, and the area at the foot was known as the Drill Hall until recently, with the Evergreen Hall on the opposite side (also formerly spelled 'Dovecot').

Dovemount see Doveshagh

Dove Knowe (duv-now) n. hill above Overhall Wood, reaching a height of 168 m. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Dovemount (duv-mown') n. name for the eastern part of Wilton which was previously called Easter Howlands, bounded by Wilton Crescent Lane on the west, the Heaps on the north and the lands of Wilton glebe (i.e. Mansfield) on the east and south. Presumably the name derives from this being locally up a hill frequented by doves (perhaps from a nearby dovecote) – but how it could be both a 'mount' and 'howlands' is interesting! George Haliburton acquired the lands from Robert Langlands in about 1770. In 1788 the lands were probably those listed as 'W. Tudhope’s lands) belonging to George Haliburton and valued at £25. Thomas Cook was living there in 1790. The lands were sold off in parts by George Haliburton and his heirs from the late 18th century. In about 1810 ‘Auld Dovemount’ was built, along with John Graham’s inn. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls George Haliburton is listed as owner, with the lands valued at £25; by about 1874 Thomas Laidlaw was owner. Sections were renamed Havelock Street and Wilton Place in 1864. Dovemount Place was named simply ‘Dovemount’ until 1874 (note also sometimes ‘the Dovemount’ and occasionally ‘Dovesmount’).

Dovemount Nurseries (duv-mown'-nur-su-reez) n. plant nursery at Wellfield, run by John Forbes in the 1870s, before he moved to Buccleuch Nurseries.

Dovemount Place (duv-mown'-plis) n. street between North Bridge Street and Wilton Hill, originally called ‘Dovemount’ after the area...
Dovemount Toll

through which it passed and officially renamed Dovemount Place in 1874. The road was built in 1832 to connect the east end of Hawick with Wilton across the new North Bridge. A well was by the roadside for more than a century, and one of Hawick’s tolls was situated nearby. A post office at the corner with Havelock Street closed in 1966. Note that because of the old railway station there are no houses on the east side of the street.

Dovemount Toll (duv-moun’-töl) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses. It was probably built around 1832, when the new road was built to connect Hawick and Wilton across the North Bridge. A plaque is near the site by the Leisure Centre, at the junction of Dovemount Place with Princes Street. It was also known as the ‘North Toll’ or ‘Wilton Toll’ and sometimes ‘Wilton Place North Bar’. Mary Beattie was the toll-keeper in 1841.

Dovemount Well (duv-moun’-wel) n. well just off Dovemount Place, which was one of the main sources of water in Wilton until shortly after 1855, when it was condemned after sickness and fever broke out. An inscribed stone on the grassy bank marks its site, and the outflow from its source can still be seen entering the river near the new Waverley Bridge. The water was once regarded as having medicinal properties. It collected into a trough fed by 2 pipes, which was on the north side of the turnpike road through the 18th century until 1832. In that year the North Bridge Street/Dovemount road was built, the street level was raised and the well moved to the south side of the road. It was moved again a few times as the road was altered and closed off for good when its water was blamed for sickness (also called the ‘Auld Dovemount Well’).

dover (dō-vur) v. to doze, sleep lightly, be in a daze – ‘A was just doverin’, ‘O I gatte him in a dovering sta’, He will be ill to beate’ [JTe], ‘He wullna thole my feet til be muvet: he that keepes theewullna dover’ [HSR], ‘...there’s the ancient toon o Hawick, steeple and lum an a’, doverin, already in a kind o sunny dwam ...’[DH].

dovert (dō-vur’) pp. dozed – ‘Aathinghs whufft an dovert bar the midges an mei’ [ECS].

Dovesford (dō-vur-furd) n. farmstead in South-dean Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as ‘Doverford’, when the farmer was James Hardie. It is located near Camptown, and may actually be in Edgerston Parish.

Doveshaugh (duvz-hawf) n. place name in Rulewater, a little to the south of Spittal Tower and west of Dykes. It was referred to in 1634 when inherited by James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh from his father; it was associated with Holm and Middle and was a 3 merkland. It was formerly within the Barony of Cavers, being on the west side of the Rule Water, but in the 18th century was listed among parts of Hobkirk Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. George Turnbull was tenant there in 1686. The farms of Doveshaughbraehead and Doveshaughmill are recorded on 18th and 19th century grave-stones. The lands were formerly part of the extensive Wells estate. In the 19th century there was a single farm there, by the Bedrule Bridge. Robert Elliot was there in 1851 (it first appears as ‘Dowishauch’ in 1634 and its origin is probably Middle English ‘doue’ and Old English ‘healh’, simply meaning ‘the dove haugh’; it is marked ‘Dovehaugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and the same on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; it is unclear if it is related to ‘the Doocot Haugh’ near Spittal-on-Rule).

Doveshaughbraeheid (duvz-hawf-briheed) n. former farmstead that was later part of Doveshaugh. John Fiddes was a wright there in 1788.

Doveshaughmill (duvz-hawf-mil) n. former farm on the Tower Burn, south of Spittal Tower and north-west of the main Wells estate. There was a mill there since at least the 16th century, when it belonged to the Douglasses of Cavers, was referred to as ‘Helme et Middill’ and had a fuller’s mill as well as a grain mill. Walter Cockburn and James Henderson were tenants there in 1797, when it was recorded on the list for Hobkirk Parish. It is still recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, with miller William Swanston (the mill is marked without a label on Blaeu’s c.1654 map; it is ‘Doveshaughmill’ in 1797).

dow (dow) n., arch. a dove – ‘...beald, thou art fair; thou hest dows’ eyne’ [HSR], ‘An’ I said, Oh that I had wings like ane dow!’ [HSR], ‘But the dow aye seeks the doocot ...’[WL], a dear one (cf. doo, which is more common elsewhere in Scotland).

dow (dow) v., arch. to be able, ‘A downa ...’ meant ‘I cannot be bothered to ...’ – ‘...With as meikle gude English gilt, As four o’ their braid backs dow bear’ [CPM], ‘...I am sae tribulet that I downa speik’ [HSR] (from Mediaeval English; see also downi).

Dow (dow) n. George (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1479 for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. It is unclear if his surname may be something else (since this is otherwise unknown in the area at that time). Rev. John (1785/6-1865) from Dunkeld, he was a Master at George Watson’s Hospital in Edinburgh and tutor to the family of Sir James Montgomery Cunningham of Corsehill. He was licensed by Ayrshire Presbytery in 1818 and ordained as minister of Largs in 1831. However, he left the Established Church at the Disruption of 1843. He remained in Largs for a few months, preaching to those who had left with him. In 1845 he became first minister of Roberton Free Kirk (‘the Snoot Kirk’), serving until 1852. He was living at Harden Cottage in 1852. He died in Edinburgh.

Shiela educated in Hawick, where she was a keen debater. She then moved to the Universities of St. Andrews, Manitoba, McMaster and Glasgow, before becoming Professor of Economics at Stirling University. She was also Director of the Stirling Centre for Economic Methodology. Her research focusses on the history and methodology of economic thought, as well as on money and banking. She has also advised the House of Commons Treasury Select Committee.

dowble (dow-bul) n., v., arch. double – ‘...gif ever he do the lyik he sall pay the dowble of the penalty, conforme to the act, and double punishment’ [BR1645] (see the more modern double).

dowchtna (dowcht-na) contr., arch. be unable to, not have the strength to – ‘Nearly obsolete, used in such phrases as ...’ Hey dowchtna reyse,’ he could not exert himself so as to rise’ [JAHM].

dowd’ (dowd) adj., arch. lukewarm (of meat etc.).

dowf (dowf) adj., poet dull, listless, sad, melancholy – ‘Weel, bide ye last, but dinna die sae soon; The thought o’ it makes me dowf, and out o’ tune’ [CPM] (see duiff for the local version).

dowg (dowg) n., arch. a dog – ‘...there was a man wawkin’ on afore mey, wi’ a doug at his fit!’ [BCM1880], ‘...an’ wi’ a peculiar whus’le an’ cry he used to gather a’ the dowgs o’ the village to him’ [BCM1881] (also written ‘doug’; cf. dug).

dowie (dow-ee) adj., arch., poet. sad, melancholy, dejected, dismal, miserable, dreary, ailing – ‘Weel, lassie, nane has sic a pleasing To cheer my thoughts, and raise my dowie heart’ [CPM]. ‘But her answer aye was a dowie nay, When her friends would keenly press ...’ [JTe], ‘In the green vale o’ Teviot, baith half-bred and Cheviot Are downcast and dowie, nae mair dae they play’ [TCh], ‘...As dowie I gang for the Burnnft bus’ [DH], ‘...in just the same way as we dae in dowie November’ [DH], ‘There’s a balm for the heart that is dowie wi’ care In the sweet soothing music that floats through the air’ [JJ], ‘...When a Bobby I met looking in juist every ane ... that aw dowa tell aw’ll tell ye ae gude thing came oot o’ – that aw downa tell every ane ...’ [BCM1880] (cf. dow; also written ‘downa’).

dowp (dowp) n. a cigarette butt, end, stub – ‘...often, no even botherin ti take the dowp oot his mouth, bit hei niver missed a note’ [HHS] arch. the butts, fundament – ‘The bride sat upon his mooth, bit hei niver missed a note’ [IHS].

dowieness (dow-ee-nis) n., arch. sadness, misery – ‘Nae dowieness can fash the lassie lang ...’ [WL].

dowiest (dow-ee-ist) adj., arch. saddest, dreariest, most dismal – ‘Her Callants ha’e been true in her dowiest o’ days’ [JEDM].

dowless (dow-lis) adj., arch. lacking in strength, listless (also written ‘dowless’; once pronounced with a longer o-oo diphthong).

The Dowie Dens o Yarrow (thu-dow-ee-denz-o-ya-ri) n. Border ballad, existing in several versions. Sir Walter Scott claimed that it was about the duel between John, son of Sir Walter Scott of Tushielaw, and Walter, brother of Sir Robert Scott of Thistlestane. However, this seems less clear from other versions. Another theory is that it is about the slaying of John, son of Sir Walter Scott of Harden by the Scotts of Gilmansecleuch. It is also said to be connected with a standing stone near Yarrow Kirk. William Hamilton of Bangour wrote a poem ‘The Braes of Yarrow’, which is based on the ballad.

dowse (dow) v. to douse (note the s rather than the English z).
dowt (dowt) n. a cigarette butt (dowp is more common locally).

dowter (dow-tur) n. a daughter – ‘there were nae dooters among her dowters’, ‘...and she sent her dowter Lady Sybil Scott to dae’nd insteild ...
’ [WL] (cf. the older dochter).

dowth (dowth) adj., arch. melancholy, spiritless, gloomy – ‘...thae thots help iz ti cast ma dowth, thole-muiddy boot’ [ECS] (also written ‘douth’).

Doyle (doy-ul) n. Sir Arthur Conan (1859–1930), famous Scottish writer. He gave the ‘Immortal Memory’ at the 1905 Con Club Burns Supper in Hawick, and ran unsuccessfully as a Unionist candidate for the Border Burghs in the 1906 election, giving an address to an audience of about 1800 in the Town Hall. He was also presented with Tom Scott’s painting of Goldielands (now back in the Museum) as a wedding present by the local Unionists, and was officially a member of the Cycling Club in 1905. His 1911 short story ‘Through the Veil’ is a supernatural tale set at Trimontium and featuring some Borders accents.

Drileth (dri-lith) n. former lands in the Barony of Cavers. The name is listed in a charter of 1511, along with ‘Murelaw, Elrechill, and Denumains’. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. However, it is unclear where these lands were or how the name is pronounced (it is separately transcribed in 1511 as ‘Driloch’ and was ‘Drylough’ in 1687 and 1698).

the Drill Hall (thu-dril-hawl) n. former red brick building, constructed in 1889, to designs by J.P. Ailsan, at the bottom of Dovecote Street for the local 4th Battalion Kings Own Scottish Borderers territorial units and used as a training centre. It was also used for other occasional purposes, such as during the Annual Congress of the Textile Institute held in Hawick in 1912. Later it saw use as a spacious dance hall in promotions organised by Stan Reid, and for other events, such as the New Year carpet bowling tournament. It was leased to the Post Office in 1971 as a sorting area and finally demolished in 1983, being replaced by the houses of Dovecote Mews. The Army also had temporary buildings to the west of there, including the Cadet Hall.

Drinkstone (dringk-stin) n. farm to the north of Hawick, reached by going straight at the ‘Fower Road Ends’. It was known at least as early as the 16th century, when it was home of a branch of the Scotts. John Scott of Drinkstone is recorded in the 1550s to 1570s. John Scott ‘in Drinkston’ was listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch (probably some time around 1600). Robert Scott paid land tax there for £66 13s 4d in 1663. It was part of the Buccleuch estates by 1678. The tenant there in 1694 was Robert Scott, along with James Learmonth and Robert Shortreed, with Walter Scott as shepherd. The lands became part of Wilton Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1696, John Easton in 1698 and Walter Scott in 1704. William Scott was tenant in 1709 and James Grieve in 1711. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 206 acres and was bounded by Easter Grundistone, Boonraw, Tandlaw, Coldhouse and Wilton Common. John Thomson was living there in 1722 and John Kersel in 1729. The farm was re-leased from the Buccleuch Estates by John Lamb in 1744, along with a declaration about what to do if the adjacent Hassendean Common was divided. Adam Ormiston was farmer there in at least the period 1780–97. William Anderson was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. A ride-out to there took place in 1899 (the name is first recorded as ‘Dryngstoun’ in 1528/9 and 1550, as ‘Dringistoun’ in 1556, ‘Dringston’ in 1559 ‘Driggestoun’ in 1574, ‘Drunkston’ in 1603, ‘Deringstoun’ in 1616 and Drinkston’ in 1643; it is commonly ‘Drinkstoun’ in the 17th and early 18th centuries and is still ‘Drinkston’ in 1744; the origin is probably ‘the dreng’s or freeman’s farm’ and may imply a feudal relationship with the adjacent Boonraw).

Drinkstone Cleuch (dringk-stin-klooch) n. small stream to the north-east of Drinkstone farm.

Drinkstone Cottage (dringk-stin-ko’-eej) n. cottage near Drinkstone farm. The Hogg family were living there in 1841.
Drinkstone Hill

Drinkstone Hill (dringk-stin-hil) n. hill just north-west of Hawick, height 318 m, with a triangulation pillar. Before about the middle of the 18th century there was an old road that came from Teviothead over into the Borthwick valley, past Harden and behind Drinkstone Hill to Groundistone Height, avoiding Hawick. A drove road also used to follow a similar route.

drive a prey (driv-a-pra) v., arch. to drive off stolen cattle – ‘In Coquetdale, Reed and Tyne We drive a prey wi’ glee, And lunder the lubberts like swine, And wha daur meddle i’ me?’ [T]. ‘The Captain of Bewcastle hath bound him to ryde, And he’s over to Tevidale to drive a prey …’ [T].

drong (drong) n., arch. a droning sound – ‘Ma lang Dander … cam ti an end … ti the droang o’ the Toons clock’ [ECS] (also written ‘dron’).

drook (drook) v. to drench, soak – ‘Ae lambin’ richt o’ drookin’ weathar a flock o’ lambin’ men did gather …’ [TD] (cf. drack).

droofed (drooted) pp., adj. drenched, soaked – ‘the Friday was aaright, bit oo a got drooked on the Seterdi’, ‘the simmer oo get birsled, Oo get drooked bei autumn’s rain, An then the wund turns snell yince mair, An the wunter comes again’ [IWL] (cf. drookit).

drookin (drookin) n. a drenching or soaking, often one given to a person by surprise or against their will – ‘they ganged up an gave him a drookin in the river’, ‘…dog-hugget … tide-merked Wi mony a drowe and drookin’’ [DH], adj. soaking, wet through, drenched – ‘the terrible drookin’ wet Common Ridin’ o’ 1923’.

drookit (droo-kee, -ki) pp., adj. drenched, soaked – ‘the Heavens opened an oo got drookit’, ‘The riven claes, an’ drookit skins, That mony gat …’ [RDW], ‘…for my heid is drookit wi’ dew, an’ my loks wi’ the draps o’ the nicht’ [HSR], ‘…He soon was unca drookit craw’ [WFC], ‘…But drookit to the verra sark I couldna raise a froon’ [WL], ‘The Landlord’s poker face seems dour. He tells the tourist ‘It’s drookit stour’ …’ [TD] (also spelled ‘drootkit’, ‘drookeet’, etc.; cf. drooted).

droon (droon) v. to drown – ‘carefi it the river, A deh wa’ ee comin hyim drooned’, ‘deh droon that whusky wi witter’, ‘When a’ the lave to bed are gane, An weary toil lied drooon’d in sleep’ [JoHa], ‘Mony waters canna slocken loe, naither can the fluids droon it’ [HSR], ‘Minglin’ wi’ the notes of wailin’ Droon’d by base degenerate railin’’ [RK], ‘…Which Tam, puir cratur’; couldna bide, Mair like his sorrows droon’ [WFC], ‘…It’s droonin’ tae, that sets mei frettin’, In dramas and yill’ [DH].

Droonin Sike (droon-in-sik) n. Drowning Sike, small stream just to the east of the Maidean, which flows into Harwood Burn to eventually join the Silltrig. It is crossed by a section of the Catrail.

droonit (droo-nee, -ni) pp., arch. drowned – ‘…promiest be him to bring hail, saif and sound to Hawick, qhillik he brak, drownet, and lossit be the way’ [BR1652].

droon the miller (droon-thu-nil-lur) v., arch. to add too much water to an alcoholic drink or to in cooking.

droot (droo’t) n. a drought. There was a severe drought in Hawick (and elsewhere) in 1826, sometimes called the ‘Droothy Simmer’, and another in 1844 which brought the Town’s mills to a standstill – ‘…And brunt broon in the lang droot Are the neep shaws’ [WL].

drooth (drooth) n. thirst, dry mouth, drought, prolonged period of dry weather – ‘they sautty peanuts hev gien is a right drooth’, ‘Ilk Oliver a drought inherits, Leevin or dead we stick by spir’its’ [WNK], ‘For daye an’ nicht thy han’ was hivie apon me: my moustir is turnet intill the drouth o’ simmer’ [HSR], ‘…the untmet cuddies slocken their drouth’ [HSR], ‘Sin’ that ane that slocken Samson’s drooth I’ the jawbone o’ the cud-die’ [VW], ‘C’away and slacken yer drouth and we’ll drink tae the best o’ docters …’ [JEDM], ‘In mony a toun I’ve quenched my drouth And gi’en for mony a toast the order’ [GWe], ‘There’s mony ane that talk o’ drouth When drouth they never fin’, ‘And mony a ane creates a drouth Wi’ drinking late at e’en’ [DA], ‘…an than A gaed inti a bit an slokent ma drooth’ [ECS], ‘…Wi’ the ‘Paul as a bieldy Limbo Where the lost droothis Dwell’ [DH], ‘…His is nae mealy-mooth, He’s a suden-doon drooth, But his crack is aye herty and free’ [WL] (also spelled ‘drotch’; cf. the less common drowth).

drough (drooth) n. drought. Probably the worst local drought in recorded history was in the summer of 1826, ‘the Droothy Simmer’.

1800, ‘the Dear year’ also had a drought, following on a winter of heavy rains. There was another serious drought in 1723, with the Hawick Parish records showing there was to be a fast day so ‘that God may be pleased in His mercy to put a stop to ye great drought …’.

drouthy (droo-thee) adj., arch. thirsty, craving alcohol – ‘Long fashed wi’ a thriftless and drouthy guidman – Wad ha’e drunken the ocean when ance he began’ [JT], extremely dry – ‘...the drouthy summer of 1826 brought about a change ...’ [WSR], ‘...no least Ronnie Tait, his ancient trusty drouthy cronie’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘drouthy’ and ‘drouthie’).

the Droothy Simmer (thu-droo-thee-simmer) n. popular name for the summer of 1826, which was hot and rainless. Whitsunday (May 15th) had a downpour, then the drought set in until the first week of August. Wheat increased in yield, while oats were very stunted and the oatmeal was full of soil and sand. Water power to some mills stopped altogether, while moorland and forest fires raged throughout Britain. Hawick’s rivers (as well as the Rule) almost entirely dried up, bringing the water-powered mills to a standstill (and encouraging the introduction of steam power, starting 5 years later). It caused commercial havoc, resulting in several hosiery firms going out of business. The Common Riding that year was held very late, on 16th and 17th June. Local events were dated from this year for many decades.

drop (drop) n., arch. a disappointment – ‘Now that’s exactly where I got a drop that raether than iz ti the fair!’ [ECS].

drope (drep) n., arch. a measure of some kind, probably corresponding to a ‘drop wecht’, which corresponded to a 16th of an ounce – ‘...James Scott Laird’s quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop, his twa unce wanted half a drop and more’ [BR1676], ‘Item, for six drope of Silke ... 00 12 00’ [BR1707].

drop-scone (drop-sköm) n. a small round flat cake cooked on a griddle, called ‘a Scotch pancake’ in England (see also scone).

dross (dros) n. coal or peat dust, formerly used to damp down a fire – ‘The power my grandeur to destroy No yellow dross from him could buy’ [WNK].

drove roads (dröv-rödz) n., pl. routes used for driving sheep and cattle. There were formerly several of these passing near to Hawick, which were particularly used for driving cattle from the Highlands to the markets of northern England. They typically avoided difficult river crossings (e.g. the one passing north of Hawick into the Borthwick valley), as well as major towns and tolls. These routes became well established after the Union of the Crowns in 1603, and were well used until about the first quarter of the 19th century, when there was increased carrying trade on the improved toll roads. Hawick was a major stopping point for droves travelling between markets such as Falkirk and those around Newcastle and Carlisle. The Council forbade droves from using the Common after the Division of 1777, but in 1785 agreed to let them stop for 3 days at the Moor as part of a cattle fair held around Thorterdykes and Haggishaa in November (or perhaps October). The exact routes of the drove routes presumably changed with time, and several of them had overlapping sections. Most of the local examples can hardly be traced any more, although there are some sections that are still quite visible, e.g. at Muselee. There were at least 5 distinct drove roads that passed near Hawick: one via the Loan, the Nipknowes, Pilmuir, Pilmuir Rig, the Caa Knowe, Troutlawford, Harecleuchhead, Penchrise and over a ford near Shankend; a second came across the old ‘Thief’s Road’ from Liddesdale (the ‘Maiden’s Way’ may be essentially the same route) joining the existing road near Dod farm and hence up towards Hawick; a third came from Harelaw (between Lilliesleaf and Hassendean), along the north side of Bewlie Moor and Chapel Moor to Groundistone Heights, then crossing the Hawick-to-Selkirk road, passing behind Drinkstone Hill to Harden Cottage, then along the back of Borthwickshiel to Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, Milsington, Deanburnhaugh, Craik, Howpasley and over the hills into Eskdalemuir; a fourth road went from Newlands (on the Hassendean-Lilliesleaf road), passing Hassendean Common to Moorfield, then following the Hawick-to-Selkirk road until Boghall, then the ‘Fower Road Ends’, Stouslie, Dykeneuk, towards the Cala Burn, past Whitehaugh, Wilton Dean, turning right to Brieryhill, connecting with Overhall-Wiltonburn road, behind Highchesters Hill and by Harden Burnfoot to Borthwick Mains and on to the upper Borthwick valley; and a fifth road came over the Limekilnedge and up the Slitrig valley, crossed a ford at Newmill-on-Slitrig, passed behind Coliforthill (still marked as a drove road on the Ordnance Survey map) to join the Lover’s Lane, merging with the old high road to Newcastle at Ormiston, and hence via Birneyknowe, Appotside, the Forkins and on to the Carter Bar to Newcastle or via the Note-o-the-Gate to Liddesdale. Another choice was to leave the road at drowe  (drowe) n., arch. a cold, damp mist, drizzle, particularly in the phrase ‘a Liddesdale drowe’ – ‘I have heard an old lady remark, quoting a local saw: A Liddesdul drow Weets a Tibidull man Throw and throw’ [BM1933], ‘The daggy drowe comes driffin on’ [ECS], ‘. . . doog-luggit . . . tide-merked Wi mony a drowe and drookin’’ [DH], ‘Ah weel, my man, I dinna doobt to drizzle – ‘. . . Into shabby broun in the rain’s drowin’ weet’ [WL] (this was once pronounced with a longer ȳ-oo diphthong).

drowth  (drowth) n., arch. a drought (cf. the more common drooth).

drucken  (dru-kin) adj., arch. drunken, addicted to alcohol – ‘Moo indeed, ye drunken auld thief that ocht tae be ashamed o’ yrsel’ [JEDM], ‘. . . the bust o Thomson which was ti be crooned as the culmination o the ceremony bein smashed in a drunken frolic afore its erection’ [IWL], ‘She’ll ca’ mei a drunken auld deevil An’ try an’ look roosed a’ day!’ [RM], ‘Bousie wi flourish, My rowan beams Like a drunken bride . . . ’ [DH], ‘The wine was flowin’, the haa was ringing Wi’ drunken lauchs, and the soun’ o’ singing’ [WL], pp., arch. drunk, drunken – ‘I haw drunken my wyne wi’ my milk . . . ’ [HSR], ‘I dinna ken how much whisky they took, mem, but they’ve drunken sax gang o’ watter!’ [V&M], ‘. . . Wad ha’e drunken the ocean when ance he began’ [JT], ‘A felt A cood heh drunken waeter . . . till ma lugs played crack!’ [ECS].

drugget  (dru-gi’) n., arch. a coarse cloth made of worsted and hemp woven together. It was manufactured locally on the hand-loom in the late 18th century.

the Druids  (tuu-droo-idz) n., pl. ancient mystical British priest class, supposed to have been associated with the Mote and other local places. Whether they ever existed at all is debated, but certainly there is nothing to link them with Hawick. There is also sometimes claimed to be a connection between the wearing of oak leaves on Common Riding Friday and the Druids. Their supposed connection with the Mote may be entirely the fault of Sir Walter Scott – ‘Dimly he view’d the Moat-hill’s mound, Where Druid shades still flitted round’ [SWS], ‘Hawick shall triumph ‘mid destruction’ Was a Druids dark prediction’ [JH], ‘It first be torn not by the plough The ancient bonny green Moat-Knowe: For sair I fear it, too, maun fall, Though reared by hands Druidical’ [AD], ‘And this snug little town that nestles down Where druid and pagan prayed . . . ’ [TK].

druil  (dril) v., arch. to cry mournfully.

Drumlanrig  (drum-lan-reeg, drum-lan-rig, drum-lan-dreeg) n. title of the house of Douglas, particularly applied to refer to James Douglas, who granted Hawick its 1537 charter. The lands are in Nithsdale, Dumfriesshire, about 15 miles north of Dumfries. They were owned by Douglases since at least the early 14th century and the Barony was granted by James, Earl of Douglas, to his illegitimate son William some time in the period 1384–88; this started the line of Douglases of Drumlanrig. The lands reverted to their superior (the Crown) several times in the 15th century and also for 32 years after the death of William of Drumlanrig at Flodden. The present version of the castle was constructed in the late 17th century and is owned by the Scotts of Bucleuch – ‘We’ll a’ lie to the muir a-riding; Drumlanrig gave it for providing’ [AB], ‘. . . ’Twas then Drumlanrig, generous donor, Gave (immortal be his honour!’ . . . ’ [JH] (the origin of the name is uncertain, but possibly ‘ridge long ridge’, with the first element either Cumbric or Gaelic; note the variety of pronunciations and the huge variety of former spellings; it is ‘Drumlanrig’ in 1353/4, ‘Drumlangryg’ in 1357, ‘Drumlanrig’ in 1407 and 1412, ‘Drumlanryg’ in 1415, ‘Drumlangryg’ and ‘Dromlanryg’ in 1427, ‘Drumlanrigge’ and ‘Dromlanrygk’ in 1452, ‘Drumlangryg’ in 1459, ‘Drumlanrigg’ in 1464/5, 1479 and 1484, Drumlanrig

Drumlanrig (drum-lan-reeg, drum-lan-dreeg) n. popular name for Drumlanrig School and surrounding area (many different pronunciations exist).

the Drumlanrig Bar (Thu-drum-lan-reeg-bawr) n. pub at 29–31 Drumlanrig Square.

Drumlanrig Brig (drum-lan-reeg-brig) n. Drumlanrig Bridge, the main bridge over the Slitrig, originally called Slitrig Bridge. It was built by public subscription in 1776–77, with stone from a Bedrule quarry, and formed of two flat arches. It made a dramatic improvement to the town, giving greater accessibility between the eastern and western parts than had been possible with the neighbouring Auld Brig and the route through Silver Street. On completion there was a public procession of the town’s piper, the drums and fifes, the Magistrates, Council etc., with a speech on the bridge made by Bailie Hardy while the Cornet James Richardson waved the Flag on top of the bridge. Although a great improvement, it was still quite narrow, being the width of a cart, with a recess on either side. It was widened in 1828 to facilitate the market which met there. Then it was further widened to a triple width structure in 1900, with the stone parapet replaced by ornamental ironwork. This was redesigned after structural strengthening in 1978. The 50th mile-stone from Edinburgh used to stand on the northern parapet.

Drumlanrig Castle (drum-lan-reeg-kaw-sul) n. castle in Upper Nithsdale in what was formerly Dumfriesshire, this was originally the home of the ‘Black’ Douglas family, with the present castle being built in 1679–1691 by William Douglas, the first Duke of Drumlanrig and 3rd Earl of Queensberry. On the death of the 4th Duke of Queensberry the Castle and the Queensberry title passed to the Dukes of Buccleuch, becoming one of the four major Scottish houses they owned (the name comes from the spur of a ‘drum’ or ‘long ridge’ on which the castle is built).

Drumlanrig Court (drum-lan-reeg-kör’) n. development off the left-hand side of Drumlanrig Square, constructed in 2001.

Drumlanrig Home (drum-lan-reeg-hōm) n. another name for Drumlanrig Hospital.

Drumlanrig’s March

Drumlanrig Hospital (drum-lan-reeg-hos-pi-ul) n. the poor-house, turned into an old folks hospital, situated off a drive at the top left-hand corner of Drumlanrig Square. The building was constructed in 1856/7. It is a 2-storey, 11-bay construction on a rectangular plan, built with whinstone, with red sandstone dressings. It was built to hold 133 inmates, at a cost of £4,000. In WWI it was used as an army hospital. In the 1930s it was renamed Drumlanrig Poor Law Institution and later became a geriatric hospital. It closed in 1994, with many of the residents moving to St. Margaret’s or Crumhaugh House. It was converted into flats in 2009/10. A gable contained stonework saved from the Buccleuch Memorial, which was removed during the latest renovations. It is a grade B listed building.

Drumlanrig Place (drum-lan-reeg-plis) n. street in the West End, joining the north side of the Loan a little higher up than the Mote. It was built in 1850–55 and named after the Douglasses of Drumlanrig. The corner of the street used to have a public well with water coming from Haggishaa and Dodburn. On the Saturday of the Common Riding the Drums and Fifes stop here after leading the mounted procession up the Loan, and they play Teribus as the riders pass.

Drumlanrig Schuil (drum-lan-reeg-skil) n. Drumlanrig and St. Cuthbert’s Primary School, on the Loan. It started as the Hawick and Wilton Industrial School, built in the West-End around 1855. It was supported by the Duke of Buccleuch at the suggestion of Rev. Dr. MacRae. It was taken over by the new School Board in 1872 and a new school was built in 1873 by public subscription in a field behind Nos. 13 and 15 Loan, being renamed Drumlanrig. The small school associated with West Port Church merged with it in 1875. The pupils from St. Cuthbert’s School joined in 1956, when the name was extended. The school was entirely rebuilt starting in 1960, with several more recent additions. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1874–1953 are in the National Archives. The earliest known photograph of the school is from about 1906. James Ker was Headmaster from 1860, John Fowler from 1860 and Basil Wilson in the mid-1900s.

Drumlanrig’s March (drum-lan-reeg-mawrch) n. name used for the song or tune ‘Teribus as the riders pass.’
Drumlanrig Square

Drumlanrig Square (drum-lan-reeg-skwir) n. open area between the Howegate and the Loan, known as ‘the Raws’ prior to 1886 when it was the site of the Fore Raw, the Back Raw and the Mid Raw. J.P. Alison designed some houses there, particularly at Nos. 26 and 31 in about 1891 and No. 16 in 1901. It changed considerably with demolition at the end of the 19th century and with the construction of the gardens, clock and Brown Fountain in the centre in 1910. Since then it has popularly been known as ‘the Square’. Eildon Housing carried out extensive renovations on the south side of the Square in 1997. It has housed several pubs, including the Drumlanrig Bar and Barclay’s currently, as well as other businesses (named after Douglas of Drumlanrig, the ‘generous donor’).

Drumlanrig’s Toor (drum-lan-reegz-toor, -tow-ur) n. the oldest building in Hawick, being a fortified ‘L’-shaped tower dating mainly to the 1550s, surrounded by later building work, particularly from the 18th century. There is also some evidence of an earlier building on the site, which probably replaced the Baron’s wooden tower on the Mote, perhaps in the 14th century. Depending on the age of the first construction, it was probably built for either the Lovels or the Douglases. It is possible this was the ‘tower between the bridges’ referred to in 1507/8 as a property of the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Whitchesters (in which case that would be the earliest specific record). It may also be the same as the tower belonging to the Laird of Buccleuch that was burned in the English raid on Hawick in 1547/8. It is sometimes also referred to as ‘the Black Tower’, which may be connected to it surviving one of the times that Hawick was burned (however, there may be other explanations). As the most prominent Hawick building, it has served many purposes. In 1562 the King arranged for a court to be set up in the Tower which sentenced 20 ‘criminals’ to be drowned in the Teviot. The Scotts of Branxholme took up residence there temporarily from 1570, after Branxholme was blown up by the English. The tower was then used as a holding place for criminals, the prison later being converted to the wine cellar of the inn. The Scotts of Buccleuch took over the tower (and the lands around Hawick) in 1671. Covenanters successfully laid siege to it in 1679, in order to take the militia arms stored within. It was then derelict until about 1701. Anne Duchess of Buccleuch had the Tower renovated, particularly in 1702-04, turning it into a major residence. It was extended to its present proportions and used as a country retreat from the main family seat at Dalkeith. It was used by troops during the Jacobite rebellions of 1715 and 1745 when they passed through the town. It was repaired in 1730-32, and when the Duke of Buccleuch paid tax for 42 windows in Hawick in 1748 that was probably for the Tower. By about 1750, with the Scotts moving to Bowhill, it was abandoned as a town house; there is an inventory of the Duke’s furniture and pictures there in that year and again in 1756. In 1773 (or perhaps 1771) it was converted into an inn, with Michael Stevenson as the first landlord, running successfully for two centuries. Probably around this time the additional stables and other buildings were added in the back. Robert Armstrong was landlord in the 1790s, followed by Billy Brown. In the early 19th century the walls were thinned as part of renovations, the material being used to build part of a spinning mill. From about 1760 until 1862 it was the staging post for the main stagecoach from Carlisle to Edinburgh. The Tower was also the focus of unrest associated with the county elections of 1832, 1835 and 1841, when it was the main poling station in Hawick. It was sold by the Buccleuch family in 1935 and run as a private hotel, later becoming part of the North British Hotels chain. A plaque was unveiled by the Dowager Duchess of Buccleuch in 1951, stating that ‘Incorporated within these walls is the Black Tower of Drumlanrig’. The stabling area became Croall Bryson’s garage and was also used for a while by the ambulance service. By the 1970s it had fallen into a state of disrepair and was closed as a hotel in 1981, being purchased by the local authority in 1985. It was renovated from 1991 by Gray Marshall Associates for the Scottish Historic Buildings Trust and reopened in 1995 as a visitor attraction. ‘Drumlanrig’s Tower Tourist and Information Centre’ contained displays focussing on the history of Hawick, the area and the tower, as well as a gift shop. Parts of the earlier building are now uncovered, including a vaulted cellar and the baronial hall. Much of the garage area was redeveloped to make Lovel Court in the early 1990s. In 2010 the tower was renovated again as the ‘Borders Textile Towerhouse’, with a focus on textiles history. A plaque outside marks the visit of Sir Walter Scott with the Wordsworths in 1803, and the iron door knocker bears the date 1677. It was in former times extensively used for events during the Common Riding, and some of those uses have been resumed – ‘The grey old walls of Drumlanrig’s tower Rang out with a heartening cheer’ [JB],
Drummond

Drummond (dru-mind) n. Agnes (17th C.) mother of 2 illegitimate children of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch; one of these was John Scott of Gorrenberry. She later married Patrick Graham. In 1635 she petitioned the 2nd Earl, pointing out that she had received nothing since the late Earl’s decease 2 years earlier; she was given a small sum under the condition that she asked for nothing more. Alexander (b.1808/9) originally from Gordon in Berwickshire, he was farmer at Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farming 349 acres there and employing 8 people. He was also listed there in 1868. His wife was Ann and their children included Agnes and Robert. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1733 he witnessed a baptism for William Easton, resident of Hep. He married Helen Scott and their children included James (b.1726). Archibald Hamilton ‘Airchie’ (1868–1915) 2nd son of George, corn merchant of the Sandbed, he also became a corn merchant. He was Cornet in 1888, his horse being called ‘Lady Oliver’, after his Lass, and he won one of his own Cornet’s Races on it. He was well known as a cyclist, winning many races on grass tracks, and was generally an all-round athlete. He was one of the founding members of the Callants’ Club in 1903 and President in 1906. He was also President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1912. It has been said that the face of the callant on the Horse Monument was modelled after his. He married Elizabeth (1872–1966), daughter of Andrew Ekron. Their children included Jessie, Anne, Elizabeth, Margaret Ekron (1899–1988) and Archibald Ekron (1915–62). George (b.1832/3) from Greenlaw, he was a corn merchant in Hawick. In 1861 he was living a Sandbed. He married Annie Hamilton, who was from Melrose. Their children included: Isabella Hendry (b.1860); Annie (b.1862); Annie Ovens (again, b.1864); Jessie Hamilton (b.1866); Archibald Hamilton (b.1868), who was Cornet; George Ovens (b.1870); John William (b.1872); and Annie Hamilton (again, b.1874). James (c.1615–75) 3rd Earl of Perth. He was son of John, 2nd Earl of Drummond and Jean Ker, who was daughter of Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburgh. In 1634 he inherited one third of the properties of his uncle William, Master of Roxburgh, with the other parts going to his aunts, Maria and Isabella. This included many lands around Kelso, but also Alton near Hawick. His brother William later became 2nd Earl of Roxburgh. He married Anne Gordon, daughter of the Marquess of Huntly. John of Stobshall (c.1438–1519) son of Sir Malcolm and Mariota Murray. He was 1st Lord Drummond. He was appointed a Lord of Session in 1471 and later was made Justiciary General of Scotland.
Drummond an Laing’s

He acted as Depute Justiciar at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh and Selkirk in 1494. He was a Scottish Commissioner to negotiate Border grievances with England in 1495, 1511, 1513 and 1514. Sir Malcolm (d.1403) eldest son of Sir John, 11th of Lennox and Mary Montifex. He was head of a powerful, land-owning family. He married Isabel, only daughter of William, 1st Earl of Douglas; she was Countess of Mar in her own right. He was present at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, where the death of his brother-in-law James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, led to him succeeding to the Earldom of Mar. His wife also held the Barony of Cavers, and he is recorded in 1390 as superior of Cavers when the Gourlays were confirmed in their lands of Rulewood. He may have acted as Sheriff of Roxburghshire from about 1389. He died in captivity after being captured by some opponents, perhaps related to Alexander Stewart, ‘the Wolf of Badenoch’, who later married his widow and acquired the Mar titles. He had no children.

Margaret (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who was convicted in 1697 of stealing several items of clothing and a large loaf.

Drummond an Laing’s (dru−mind-an-laingz) n. hosiery firm on Wilton path (near the top of the ‘Hunder Steps’) in the early 20th century. It was formed as a partnership in 1908 by John Laing and his son Ivan, but taken over by Henderson’s in 1913. This amalgamated into Innes & Henderson in 1919, which later became Braemar Knitwear.

drum oot (drum−oo’−toon) v. to forcefully reject, overwhelm – ‘A thought oo should carry on, bit A was drummed oot’. This expression derives from the expression ‘drum out of town’ a form of banishment from a town and frequently a county, which in Hawick continued well into the 19th century, with the last recorded occasion being 1824. The drummer in the last years was Caleb Rutherford, assisted by Burgh officers Sandy Bryson and ‘Tufty’ Wilson. The ‘Rogue’s March’ would be played on the drum throughout the procession from the old jail to the toll-bar.

drums and fifes (dru−nz-in−fifs) n. the combination of drums and flutes began to be used as military marching bands in the 16th century, reaching its peak of popularity in the 17th century. A fifer is first mentioned in Hawick town records in 1797. In 1798 the town gave a donation for the Volunteers to purchase drums and fifes. Selkirk and Langholm both have drum and fife bands, and other towns like Edinburgh used to – ‘I hear the drums and fifes gang by and clatter o’ horse and folk’ [JEDM], ‘…For the drums and fifes are calling, and the Cornet’s riding by’ [JYH], ‘…Like the drums and fifes oot airly, And the jowe o’ St. Mary’s bell’ [WL], ‘That wakens again the auld mem’ries tae life – The jubilant strain o’ the drum and the fife!’ [CB].

the Drums an Fifes (thu−drumz−in−fifs) n. the band that plays a significant role at many of the ceremonies associated with the Common Riding. They are often referred to as ‘the Cornet’s Band’, and do not play officially outside Common Riding season. The first record of a fifer at the Common Riding is in 1797, and individual drummers were employed much earlier than that (from at least 1672). The band itself (with 2 drummers and 2 fifers) can be traced back to at least 1823. The tunics or uniforms date from 1907, and by the early 1900s the complement was 3 drummers and 5 fifers. Their official duties begin with the Picking, and they are usually considered to start the Common Riding proper (although opinions differ on whether this is on the Thursday night or Friday morning). At the Colour Bussing procession, they start from the Kirk Wynd at 6 p.m. on the Thursday night, visiting the approximate sites of the old tolls to mark the boundaries of the old town, playing ‘Teribus’ the whole time. They also accompany the Cornet on his walk round town, playing specific tunes at specific locations. On the Friday morning they begin at 6 a.m. (with ‘Teribus’) in the Kirkwynd, proceed to the Snuffin, and follow the same route around the old tolls to wake up the Town. Having received their rum and milk refreshments, they start again at the Kirkwynd (with ‘Dumbarton Drums’), walking to the old Loan Toll, then along the High Street to the Horse. At about 7.30 a.m. (playing ‘John Paiterson’s Mare Rides Foremost’) they walk from the Kirkwynd to the Tower Know, via Drumlarig Square and the Howegate. They join the Cornet’s Breakfast, and later join the Procession, leading the Cornet and his supporters. From the top of the Loan to Thorterdykes they play ‘Teribus’ and ‘Jockey to the Fair’ in preparation for the Friday Chase. They also lead the march from Drumlanrig Square to the Mill Path for the Song Singing and on to the Town Hall and Tower. On the Saturday they start at 8 a.m., marching from West Port to the Horse, and later play at Drumlanrig Place as the riders pass. After the Moor they lead the Cornet to the Town Hall for the Handing-Back, playing ‘Teribus’ twice through when he emerges with the Flag. Finally they lead the procession to the Tower, with the Principals carried on others’ shoulders, where the Bull Reel is danced. In all they march about 12 miles each Common Riding. The band’s complement varies, but now consists of 3 drummers and about 10 fifers. Their most characteristic tunes are ‘Rumblin’ Brig’, ‘Teribus’ and ‘Dumbarton Drums’, and at specific times they also play ‘Pawkie Paitserson’, ‘Hazeldean’, ‘Jockey to the Fair’ and ‘John Paitserson’s Meir Rides Foremaist’. Their repertoire has also included ‘Auld Brig’, ‘This is no my ain Hoose’, ‘The Girl I Left Behind Me’, ‘Cock of the North’, ‘Stumpy’ and ‘Kate Dalrymple’ – ‘Our standard is reared once more, my lads, and its folds are flaunting free, The drums and fifes bestir the air in their summons to you and me’ [JEDM]. ‘Anon the drums and fifes send forth their strains Of martial music, rousing old and young, And many a glance from friend reveals The pleasante thoughts unspoken by the tongue’ [JCG].

dry-bowk  (drI-bowk)  n.  a retch, attempt to vomit without substance.

Dryburgh  (drI-bu-ru)  n.  area around Dryburgh Abbey, once a thriving town, linked to Jedburgh and Melrose by fords across the Tweed. It was razed by the English in 1545. The estate was held by the Erskines in the 18th century.

Dryburgh Abbey  (drI-bu-ru-aw-bee)  n.  picturesque abbey on a loop in the Tweed between St. Boswells and Newtown St. Boswells. It was built around 1150 by the Order of Premonstratensians (also known as the White Canons) from Alnwick. The site is only a few miles from Melrose Abbey and not much further from Jedburgh. The abbey was ruined by Hertford’s men in 1545. The Abbey was purchased in 1780 by David Erskine, the Earl of Buchan, who carried out improvements and preservation. It has some remarkably complete ruins, including a rose window and the Chapter House. The grounds contain a very old yew tree, which tradition says was planted by the monks in 1136, before the foundation of the abbey. This was also the central location for David Erskine’s planned ‘Temple of Caledonian Fame’, which helped preserve the structure and explains the elaborate historical Erskine Obelisk. The Abbey is the burial place of Sir Walter Scott – ‘Praise to the bard, immortal Scott, Who sleeps in ‘Dryburgh Bowers’ . . . ’ [JT] (the name derives from the Old English for ‘dry burgh’!).

Dryburgh Abbey Hoose  (drI-bu-ru-aw-bee-hoo)  n.  mansion house near Dryburgh Abbey, substantially rebuilt in 1877, and home of the Erskines. It is now run as Dryburgh Abbey Country House Hotel. The Temple of the Muses near there is topped by a bust of James Thomson, author of ‘The Seasons’. There is also a dovecote nearby.

Drycleuchlea  (drI-klooch-lee)  n.  farmstead just to the north-west of Redfordgreen. This is the steadying of ‘Drycleuchshele’ mentioned along with Hindhope and Redford in 1501. It had been occupied for the 6 previous years by Robert Scott. In 1510 it was ‘Dricleuchsheil’ when feued by Alexander, Lord Home. In 1621 it was valued at £15 13s 4d. It was inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade from his brother Sir Walter in 1655.

The superiority was still held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. It was listed along with Redfordgreen in the 1785 and 1802 Land Tax Rolls. John Anderson was tenant in ‘Drycleugh’ around 1800 (it is ‘Drycleuchsheil’ in 1621, ‘Drycleughshiel’ in 1655 and 1693 and ‘Drycleughshieils’ in 1802).

Drycleuchshiel  (drI-klooch-sheel)  n.  former name for Drycleuchlea.

the Dry Dean  (thu-drI-deen)  n.  stream that follows the A7 down from the TV mast past Ashkirk, passing the farm of Dryden and joining the Ale Water. The name is particularly applied to the lower, wooded end (it seems reasonable to assume that the stream was sometimes dry and gave its name to the neighbouring farm).

Dryden  (drI-din)  n.  valley just before Teviothead, with Dryden Fell and Drydenhope nearby. There was formerly a fortified house here. In 1462 the lands were given (along with Commonside and Over Harwood) by Stephen Scott of Muirhouse to Robert Muir of Rowallan in security for a loan. They were returned to Robert Scott of ‘Doghauch’ on full payment of the loan in 1477. This could be the Dryden where Turnbulls were recorded in 1493 and 1494/5. Stephen Scott’s son George of Whames, had the lands confirmed to him in a grant of ‘warrandice’ in 1508/9. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in ten- andry’ by the Baron of Hawick, this continuing in the list of 1572 for the retour of James Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands were sold by Alan Mossman to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1532. James Cessford was shepherd of the King’s lands there in 1540 when he was paid for grain. In 1574 they were listed among the lands of Scott of Buccleuch, but held ‘in chief’ of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig (for payment of a red rose), and valued at £5 ‘in time of peace’. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615.
The lands were listed in 1663 (and confirmed in 1686) among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. John Scott was shepherd there in 1738. Robert Nichol was shepherd there in the mid-19th century. Running from here over Hunt Law to the north is a linear earthwork, running about $3/4$ of a mile (the origin is probably Old English ‘dryge denn’ meaning ‘the dry valley’, appropriate since this valley is noticeably dry compared with the surrounding land; the name appears in 1456 as ‘Driden’, is ‘Dridane’ in 1462, ‘Drydane’ in 1447, ‘Dridane’ in 1508/9, transcribed ‘Dry Dam’ in 1540 and later ‘Draiden’, ‘Dridane’, ‘Drydane’, ‘Drydean’, ‘Drydon’, etc.; it is marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Drydenn’.

Dryden (drI-din) n. farm just north of Ashkirk, off the A7. Along with Headshaw, it was owned by a branch of the Scotts, being sold by Robert of Headshaw to Andrew Hay in 1605. However, John Scott of Headshaw had a charter again for the lands in 1636 and in 1691 they were inherited by Mary Scott from her brother John of Headshaw. The lands were valued in 1643 and 1678 at £290. They were probably sold along with Headshaw in 1696 to the Elliots of Minto. In 1694 there were 5 people resident there who were taxed for having a house with a hearth, as well as 6 poor people who were unassessed. In 1705 they were included among Sir Gilbert Elliot’s lands as part of a new Barony of Headshaw. Most of the lands there were liveryed to Dr. William Elliot in 1779. They were listed among the properties of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1788, with the same value of £290. William Huntly is recorded as farmer there in 1797. In the 1830s the farm was still owned by the Earl of Minto. James Young was farmer in the 1860s. Into the south wall of the stable yard has been built a disc quern, said to have been found when clearing an old water mill. About 400m north-east of the farm there are traces of rig lines (it appears as ‘Drydenn’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Dry dean’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; it is ‘Drydenn’ in 1694 and ‘Drydon’ in 1797).

Dryden (drI-din) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1704. Adam (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married ‘Catron’ Scott in Roberton Parish in 1722. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Betty Pringle in 1761. Their children included Alison (b.1762). Adam (b.1820/1) spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on O’Connell Street. His wife was Agnes and their children included Isabella. Alexander (19th C.) married Margaret Neilson in Hawick in 1845. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Alexander (b.1856); Helen (b.1859); Adam (b.1867). He could be the weaver of Wilton who was recorded in Jedburgh Jail in 1864 and 1867. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who married Isabell Best in 1693. His children included Andrew (b.1694) and James (b.1697). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1728); John (b.1733); Thomas (b.1736); and George (b.1743). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Euphan (b.1762); Andrew (b.1757); Charles (b.1767); Charles (again, b.1769); John (b.1770); and Margaret (b.1773). Andrew (1779–1848) son of Thomas and Jean Thomson. His father was blacksmith in St. Boswells, where he was born. He lived at Wilton Dean, then in 1810 moved to Lees and in 1818 to Brazhologue Park Woodfoot. In 1803 he married Janet (1785–1864), daughter of John Cairns. Their children were: Mary Ann (‘Ann’, b.1803), who married William Rae; Thomas (b.1806), who married Agnes Kennedy; John (b.1808), married Margaret Shiel; Robert (b.1811), married Mary Clerk; Jane (b.1813), married James Brown; Andrew (b.1817), married Elizabeth Kennedy; William (b.1820); James (b.1822), married Mary Swan from Lilliesleaf; and Walter Kerr (b.1827). The witnesses in 1803 were Thomas Cairns and James Kerr. The family emigrated to Galt, Canada in 1834 when cholera was visiting the area. They established a home there near North Dumfries known as ‘the Dryden Settlement’. Andrew (b.1817) son of Andrew. He was a wright of Everhall and also a member of Alars Kirk. Archibald (15th C.) listed along with John and William among the Roxburghshire men who had remission from James IV in 1488/9 for their support of James III at Stirling. It may be that the 3 men were brothers. It is claimed that he stayed in Roxburghshire, while John and William moved to England (although there is no proof of this); he may therefore be an ancestor of local Drydens. It is also suggested that he was a son of Henry, recorded on the council of James Kennedy, Bishop of St. Andrews in about 1452. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the ‘Gavin’ who married Janet Miller in 1695 and whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included: Margaret (b.1697); James (b.1699); Janet (b.1702); John (b.1704); George (b.1706); John (again, b.1708); Margaret (again, b.1711); and Euphan (b.1714). He may be the Gavin whose daughter Margaret married Adam Turnbull in Minto Parish in 1739. Gavin (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Adderstoneshiel. His daughter Margaret was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1718. Gavin (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1723. His forename appears to be written ‘Gain’ and he was living at ‘Foulbrae’ (although it is unclear where this was). Gavin (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: John (b.1776); Robert (b.1778); and Isabel (b.1781), who may have married John Tudhope. Gavin (18th/19th C.) farmer at Cavers Knowes, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. He could be the Gavin whose daughter baptised in Cavers included William (b.1784), who was a millwright in Wilton. George (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Braxholme. He was probably related to John and Thomas, who were also listed.
Dryden

George (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as a resident at Cavers. He is listed after Gavin, to whom he was presumably related. He could be the George whose children baptised in Cavers included Alison (b.1694) and Janet (b.1697). George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Ann Turnbull. Their son Gavin was baptised in 1752. Other children who may be his include Janet (b.1745), Gavin (b.1747) and Mary (b.1748). George (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1771); John (b.1776); and Euphia (b.1780).

George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Ann Ferguson in 1818. His wife may be the widow living at about Turk’s Close in 1861, with her children Helen, Betsy, Jean and William. George (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Christian Elliot in 1828. George (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Ann Gordon and their children included: Alexander (b.1858). Isobel (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was ‘deficient’ on the tax roll. Perhaps the same James had a daughter Margaret baptised in 1693. James (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. James (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. In 1692 he was renting half the Duchess of Buccleuch’s lands of Clarilaw (with Thomas Henderson having the other half). He may be a descendant of the later James in Clarilaw. He is probably the James who (along with Thomas Henderson) witnessed a baptism in Robertson Parish in 1682 for James Douglas and Janet Henderson and another (along with John Armstrong) for the same couple in 1686. He is probably the James who married ‘Manie’ Henderson and their children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included Helen (b.1680) and Adam (b.1684). The witnesses in 1684 were Robert Scott and Andrew Donald. It is also possible that he was father of blacksmith James. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1692. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1723. He married Isobel, daughter of Andrew Rodger, in Wilton Parish in 1712. Their children included: Bessie (b.1716); and Helen (b.1723). The witnesses in 1723 were John Dryden (surely related) and John Scott. He is probably the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for James Leithead in Boonraw, in 1725 for John Waugh in Appletreehall, in 1728 for John Blyth in Stirches, in 1729 for James Easton in Alton and John Miller in Appletreehall and for others in the 1730s (sometimes with John). However, it is hard to tell which of these were him and which were the contemporary James at Clarilaw, who married Alison Irvine in 1721. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, who married Janet Mack in 1697. He may be the James whose son William was baptised in 1703. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Newmill. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Braxholme Town. He married Margaret Riddell in 1715. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); William (b.1723); Walter (again, b.1726); and Margaret (b.1729). An unnamed son baptised in 1716 was probably also his child as well as Margaret (b.1730), with mother’s name given as ‘Ann Riddel’. Witnesses to the 1720 baptism were Robert Scott in Braxholme Town and William Thomson in Newmill and to the 1725 baptism were William Thomson and John Riddell. In 1724 he was witness to a baptism at Newmill. In 1740 the witnesses to a baptism for William Thomson at Newmill (and also for Walter Hume, carrier at Braxholme Town, who married Helen Dryden) were ‘James Drydens Elder & Younger Smiths’; this suggest that he had an older son who was also James. He was probably related to the later Drydens in that area. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Gibson and their children included Isobel (b.1719). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He is recorded at Birneyknowe in 1726. His children included: James (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); George (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1726). Robert (b.1729), baptised in Kirkton Parish, may also have been his child. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, who married Margaret Turnbull in 1732. Children baptised in Cavers who may be his include: Helen (b.1733); William (b.1733); John (b.1736); Walter (b.1736); Margaret (b.1738); Marion (b.1740); and Bessie (b.1741). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Clarilaw in 1724, 1735 and 1737. He is probably the James who (along with John) witnessed baptisms for Thomas Liddell, resident of Clarilaw, in 1727 and 1729. He may also be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Gray, resident of Clarilaw, in 1738. He married Alison Irvine in 1721 and their children included: Adam (b.1722); Many (b.1724); Margaret (b.1725); Many (again, b.1728); Anna (b.1730); James (b.1732); Mary (b.1734); Elizabeth (b.1735); and Alexander (b.1737). The witnesses in 1724 were James Irvine and John Dryden (who were surely related to his wife and him), in 1735 were Robert Graham and William Nichol and in 1737 were Andrew Martin and James Turnbull. He may be the same as the farmer at Clarilaw. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Smith (resident of the Stiches area) and Margaret Dryden (perhaps his daughter) in 1747. Note there are several men of the same name living in this and neighbouring parishes at this time. James (18th C.) farmer at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish, tenant of the Buccleuch Estates. A record of 1744 discusses what he would do in the event of a division of Hasseendea Common, which adjoined his land. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Laidlaw at Stirches in 1747. He is probably also the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton Parish for James Lorraine in 1753. He is then probably the James who witnessed several baptisms in Wilton (e.g. at Stouslie, Appletreehall, Heap and Clarilaw) in 1758, 1759, 1769, 1770, 1771, 1772 and 1773 (suggesting that he may have been an Elder in the Kirk). He may be the same man as the James who married Alison Irvine. James (18th C.) married Barbara Scott in Hawick Parish in 1754. James (18th C.) married Mary Gray in Hawick Parish in 1760. James (18th C.) married Agnes Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1766. James (18th/19th C.) smith in Hawick, who was Cornet in 1772. He was referred to as ‘Deacon Dryden’, suggesting that he was Deacon in the Hammermen’s Guild. He is likely to be the James who, along with Walter Freeman, was leader of the ‘Patriots’ who opposed the Council and Bailies in the period 1778–81. In 1778 he and Freeman were jailed in Hawick over the weekend and then taken off to Jedburgh Jail for another 2 days before being bailed. He is mentioned as ‘Deacon Dryden’ in the story of the ‘rebel’ Common Riding of 1809, as one of the men on the West-enders side who helped keep order to avoid bloodshed. He was grandfather of Cornet James Smith and great-grandfather of Cornet John Smith. His Common-Riding cuff-links are still in the Watt family. He is probably the smith who married Agnes Pott (or Potts) in Hawick Parish in 1780; her death is recorded in 1795. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lugiersleuch in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He could be the James, son of William, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1783. James (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His could be the property marked ‘Dryden’ on the Howgate on Wood’s 1824 map. He could be the smith who married Agnes Potts (d.1785) in 1780 and who was Cornet in 1772. If so, he married again and was father of Elizabeth (b.c.1800), who married John Smith. James (1746/7–1820) shepherd at Merrylaw. His wife was Jane Pott (d.1838). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1795 he married Christian Scott. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Scott and their children included Barbara (b.1799) and Jean (b.1801). John (15th C.) listed as ‘John Drydane’ among the Roxburghshire men who had re- mission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. William and Archibald are also listed, so presumably close relatives. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. He was probably related to George and Thomas, who were also listed. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married ‘Marie Mure’ in Roberton Parish in 1684. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Clerk in Roberton Parish in 1687. John (17th C.) recorded in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks as a debtor ‘for a part of Fairnelies’ in 1662. John (17th C.) blacksmith at Newmill on Teviot. He was probably related to the James who was blacksmith there a little later. He was recorded at Newmill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He witnessed a baptism for John Beattie in 1673. He is probably the John, married to Agnes Hope, whose children included: John (b.1675); Adam (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1685). Gideon (b.1694), with no mother’s name given, may also be his son. The witnesses in 1675 were Robert Thomson and Alexander Riddell. John (17th/18th C.) smith at Newmill, probably son of the earlier smith at Newmill. He is probably the smith in Newmill who witnessed baptisms for Robert Thomson in Newmill in 1698 and for William Thomson (servant to Gideon Scott of Falnash) in 1702. He is probably also the John who witnessed a baptism for William Allan (in ‘Park’) in 1712. He married Isobel Thomson and their children included: William (b.1700); Adam (b.1703); Helen (b.1705), who married Walter Hume; and Isobell (b.1708). The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Thomson in Newmill (who was probably related to his wife), in 1705 were Robert Manuel and William Thomson (also probably an in-law) and in 1708 were Walter Scott at Nether Southfield and John Wilson, tailor in Newbigging. He may be the John, son of blacksmith John, born in Hawick Parish in 1675. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Robert Thomson in Newmill in 1698. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1721 for James Lees in Clarilaw, in 1723 for James (surely a relative) in Appletreeshall, in 1724 for James in Clarilaw, for John Lamb in Clarilaw and for Thomas Liddell in Clarilaw, in 1727 and 1729 (along with James) for Thomas Liddell in Clarilaw, also in 1727 for James Scott in Borthaugh, in 1729 for Robert Graham in Lees, James Scott in Wester Mill and John Miller in Appletreeshall and Thomas Henderson in Appletreeshall. He is probably also the John who witnessed several baptisms in Wilton in 1733. Based on all these baptisms it is possible that he was an elder of Wilton Kirk. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son John was baptised in Maxton Parish in 1728. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Mary Davidson in 1745. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Helen Riddle and their children included: Gavin (b.1754); and Margaret (b.1755). Other children who may be his are Janet (b.1746), Gavin (b.1748), Magdalene (b.1759), John (b.1764), John (again, b.1766) and George (b.1769). John (18th C.) married Betty, daughter of Walter Amos, in Hobkirk Parish in 1767. He may be the John whose daughters ‘Euphry’ and Janet were baptised in Bedrule Parish in 1769. John (18th C.) married Betty Waugh in Hawick in 1789. John (b.1786/7) blacksmith at Brieryshaw in the Ewes valley. He was listed there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included Andrew, George and Janet. John (b.c.1800) recorded as ‘Software Pedlar’ in 1841, when he was living on the Loan. His wife was Mary. John (1808–78) 2nd son of Andrew and Janet Cairns. He was born at Lees, near Appletreeshall. In 1831, like the rest of his family he emigrated to Canada. Several letters he wrote back to Scotland still survive. He married Margaret Shiel from Kelso and they had 8 children. John (19th C.) married Agnes Nichol in Hawick in 1841. John (19th C.) married Susan Ritchie in Hawick in 1852. John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Isabella Muir. Their children included John (b.1855). John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Fraser in Hawick in 1874. Their children included John (b.1874), whose baptism was recorded in both Hawick and Minto Parishes. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1737. Robert (b.c.1785) farmer in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was living at Firth with the slightly older Walter, who was probably his brother. Robert (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Dalgleish in 1828 and their children included: George (b.1829); and James (b.1835). Robert (19th C.) married Mary Pringle in Hawick in 1834. Robert (1811–75) 3rd son of Andrew and Janet Dryden. He may be the Robert listed at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He married Mary Clerk. Like the rest of his family he emigrated to Ontario. He had a tavern and blacksmith’s shop in Eramosa Township there. He had 6 children. Robert R. (19th C.) married Isabella Preston in Southdean Parish in 1858. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. He was probably related to George and John, who were also listed. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to James, who was also listed there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included William (b.1712). Perhaps the same Thomas also married Isabel Dryden in Cavers in 1725. Thomas (b.1744) son of Andrew, he was born in Crailing Parish. He worked as a wheelwright at Nisbet and was then a blacksmith at St. Boswells. In 1771 he married Jean, daughter of John Thomson. They had 6 children, Ann, Janet, Andrew (who lived at Wilton Dean), Thomas, Robert and Jean. He secondly married Janet, daughter of Robert Fletcher and had 4 more children, William, Walter, Margaret and Thomas. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Betty Paterson in Hobkirk Parish in 1817. Thomas (b.1792/3) from Selkirk, he was spinner at a woollen factory in Hawick. He was a member of Allars Kirk. In 1841 he was living at Gilsnose in Wilton. He married Janet Reid in 1816 and their children included: John (b.c.1820); William (b.1820), who became an engineer in Preston; Jane (b.c.1825); Elizabeth (‘Betsy’, b.1824/5); Jessie (b.1828/9); Margaret (b.1830/1); Robert (b.1832/3); Mary; and Thomas (b.1837/8). Thomas L. (b.1806) son of Andrew, he was a wright at Everhall. Like the rest of the family he was involved with Allars Kirk and emigrated to Ontario. He married Agnes Kennedy in 1828. They settled in North Dumfries Township, near Galt in Ontario. He worked as a joiner and then an innkeeper. They had 9 children. Thomas (19th C.) house factor and yarn agent. In 1863 he married Agnes, daughter of baker Walter Wilson. Thomas (19th C.) married Helen Anderson in Wilton Parish in 1866. He may be the Thomas, ‘Engine Smith’, living at Wilton Kirkhouse in 1861. Walter (15th C.) father of William. His son William was recorded in 1493, when the Sheriff of Roxburghshire was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter (18th/19th C.) elder of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded on the heritors council in 1803. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Douglas and their children included: Nelly (b.1807); Gavin (b.1809); Isabella (b.1813); John (b.1814); Robert (b.1819); and Margaret (b.1821). Walter (b.c.1780) farmer at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was at Firth with Robert (probably his brother), plus Gavin, John, Robert and Helen (probably his children), as well as a female servant. William (15th C.) son of Walter. He was listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Other men listed were local and so he was probably from the Cavers or Rulwater areas. Perhaps the same Walter is recorded in 1502 being ‘super aquam de slittrik’ (i.e. on Slitrig Water) when he had remission for stealing sheep from Bowhill; his surety was George Douglas in the Trows. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included Thomas (b.1680). William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who married Rachel Turnbull in 1694. His children included: James (b.1696); and Isabel (b.1698). William (17th C.) resident of Muckle Cote who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William who married Margaret Huntly in Cavers Parish in 1697 and whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included Helen (b.1698), Isabel (b.1699), William (b.1700), Adam (b.1700), James (b.1702), William (again, b.1703) and Margaret (b.1704). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1707. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Helen Lunn in 1725. His children (baptised in Cavers) probably included Isabel (b.1727), Janet (b.1730), John (b.1733) and Isabel (again, b.1742). for the 1725 baptism he is recorded being in Denholm. William (18th C.) married Bessie Knox in Wilton Parish in 1749. Their children included: probably Helen (b.1753); Margaret (b.1756), baptised in Cavers Parish; David (b.1759, Hawick), mother’s name ‘Margaret Knocks’; Robert (b.1761, Hawick); and Isabel (b.1766, Hawick), mother’s surname ‘Isabel’; Mary (b.1768, Hawick); Margaret (b.1770, Hawick), with mother’s name given as just ‘Knox’. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Falside and their children included Mary (b.1746). William (18th C.) from Bedrule Parish. His children included: William (b.1781); and an unnamed son (b.1792). Perhaps the same William had a son James baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1783. William (18th C.) married Margaret Black in Hawick in 1783. William (d.1794) smith whose death is recorded in Hawick. He may be related to James and John who were contemporary blacksmiths. William (b.1784) from Cavers Parish, son of Gavin. He was a millwright in Wilton. He was listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Wilton Place, probably corresponding to about 30–32 Princes Street and in 1861 he was at about 24 Princes Street. He married Agnes Dobson (from Galashiels) and their children included: Jean (b.1819); Walter (b.1821); Isabel (b.1823); Elizabeth (b.1825); Agnes (b.1830/1); Margaret (b.1832/3); and William (b.1837/8). William (b.1820) born at Branxholme, son of spinner Thomas. He left around the 1840s and founded an engineering business in Preston, which eventually became the world-renowned Thomas Dryden & Sons. He is said to have eloped with Margaret Weens, daughter of Sandy (although the marriage is recorded in Hawick in 1846). He was a guest at the 1888 Colour Bussing. William (19th C.) Hawick resident who married Mary Leyden. Their daughter Jane was baptised in 1857. William (19th C.) married Jane Dalgleish in Hawick in 1868. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1869. William (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Mary Grant and their children included: James (b.1862); and Mary (b.1864). Perhaps the same William also married Jane Dalgleish and had children Margaret (b.1869), William (b.1870) and William (again, b.1872). William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Richardson in Hawick in 1872. Their daughter Margaret Kerr was baptised in 1874 (formerly written ‘Draydone’, ‘Dreden’, ‘Dreiden’, ‘Dridane’, ‘Driden’, ‘Dryddon’, ‘Drydon’, ‘Drydone’ and variants).

Drydenburn (dri-din-burn) n. former name for a farmstead near Dryden in what became Teviothead Parish. John Scott was there in 1713. Andrew Turnbull was tenant there in 1725 (it is ‘Dryden-burn’ in 1713).

Dryden Burnfit (dri-din-burn-ﬁ) n. former name for Teviothead Cottage, used in the 1851 census. The cottage there is listed as ‘drydden burnfoott’ in 1694 when John Scott was shepherd.

Dryden Fell (dri-din-fel) n. hill north of Teviothead, reaching a height of 351 m. On its lower slopes the Henry Scott Riddell monument can easily be seen from the A7. On the north side, between Cauldron Hole (at the head of the Back Burn) and Cat Cleuch (at the head of the Philhope Burn) is a linear earthwork, about 500 m long. It is probably an ancient boundary ditch.

Dryden Greenhill (dri-din-gren-hil) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish, east of the television mast, between North Synton and New Greenhill farms. It was previously known as simply ‘Greenhill’ and was recorded as ‘Greenshill’ in 1797. James Johnstone was tenant there in 1797. Gowanlocks were tenants there through much of the 19th century. An axe, possibly early Bronze Age, found on the farm is in Selkirk Museum. Several flint arrowheads and other implements picked up in the surrounding area were described in 1927 by J.B. Mason.

Drydenhope (dri-din-hop) n. hill and former farmstead, to the right of the main A7 after Ashkirk, topped by a B.B.C. television mast, and reaching a height of 303 m (994 ft).

Dryden Linn (dri-din-lin) n. steep, wooded part of the Dryden Burn, with waterfalls, just north of Teviothead.

Dryden Quarry (dri-din-kwa-ree) n. small quarry by the side of the A7 just after Dryden farm. This gives an exposure of rock where folding of Silurian strata can be seen.

Dryfe Sands (dri-sawndz) n. area where the Dryfe Water joins the Annan, west of Lockerbie. It was the site of a conflict in 1593, between the Maxwells and the Johnstones and their supporters. Often stated to be part of a family feud, it was more likely to be part of a struggle for political control of the Western Marches. The Maxwells under John, 7th Lord Maxwell, assembled about 2,000 men to invade Annandale; this included contingents led by Douglas of Drumlanrig, Charters of Amisfield and others. But Sir James Johnstone of Dunskellie had advanced warning and gathered the support of several local families, including Scotts and Elliots from Liddesdale and Teviotdale. Although outnumbered, the Johnstone side used surprise to rout the Maxwells, killing perhaps as many as 700, including their chief. Some accounts state that it was the intervention of Scott of Buccleuch and the his followers that swung the battle in favour of Johnstone. It is said that the wounds inflicted during the pursuit of the fleeing Maxwell supporters gave rise to the term ‘Lockerbie Lick’. A ‘respite’ was given in 1594 to Sir James Johnstone and 160 others for the killing of Lord Maxwell; this included Armstrongs of Liddesdale, Scotts and Chisholmes from near Hawick. A reconciliation meeting was arranged in 1608 between Sir James Johnstone and the young Lord Maxwell (who had escaped the battle); Maxwell shot Johnstone with a pistol and escaped to France, but was later beheaded in Edinburgh.

Drygrange (dri-granj) n. hamlet on the A68 just to the north of Newtown St. Boswells, once the principal farmstead associated with Dryburgh Abbey. The estate there was owned by the Tod’s of Drygrange, inherited by Sir George Leith through a daughter and sold to Edward Sprot in 1867, when a new mansion was built (the origin of the name is ‘the grange of Dryburgh’ and it first occurs as ‘Grangian’ in the early 13th century).

Dryhope (drI-up) n. ruined tower in the Yarrow valley, famous as the home of Mary Scott, the ‘Flower of Yarrow’. It was a property of a branch of the Scotts of for several generations; they were closely connected with the Scotts of Harden and Headshaw. The arms of this branch are the same as for the Scotts of Headshaw, with an extra border. In 1541 Philip Scott occupied the farm (along with ‘Farmynhop’). In 1589 the Scott clan bond was signed by John, Philip and Simon Scott of Dryhope. The tower may have been razed in 1592 by royal order, because of Walter Scott of Harden’s role in the Falkland Raid. The superiority over the lands was held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1661. The present building dates from the rebuilding of 1613, and the renovations of 1788. It measures 33 feet by 22 feet, and was 4 storeys high. There are earlier sites nearby. The balloonist Lundari attempted to come down on the hill here in 1785, losing his anchor, and not descending until he reached Alemoor. It was farmed by Milnes in the 19th century. With the aid of Heritage Lottery funding in 2003 it was renovated, as a visitor centre, with a new spiral staircase allowing visitors to enjoy the view from the roof. A carved panel has been built into the neighbouring farm building, bearing the date 1613 and the initials ‘P.S.’ and ‘M.S.’ (for Philip Scott and Mary Scott). It is possible that the tower was also home of ‘Dickie’ Armstrong of ‘Dryupp’, a notorious riever of the late 16th century – ‘Now Dickie of Dryhope led that band, And nevir a word o lear had he’ [T], ‘Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me’ [WSB] (written ‘Dryhoip’, ‘Dryhop’ and variants).

dry-in-green (drI-in-green) n. a communal lawn used for drying clothes on washing lines, often behind a tenement. Hawick formerly had many communal drying greens with poles set up for clothes lines; a few still exist, e.g. at the Little Haugh and Mote Park. There were formerly greens at Lothian Street and Garfield Street – ‘A dryin’ green? Aye man, it’s no afore time! Yon’s a sicht that I canna weel thole . . .’ [WL].

dry-killit (drI-ki-lee’, -li’) pp., arch. kiln-dried – ‘. . .for horsing of him from Edinburgh to Hawick, and in 9s. Scots for one dry killit fische’ [BR1655].

Drysdale (drIz-däl) n. William (19th C.) ran the Hawick Poorhouse in the West End around the 1850s.

dry-stane (drI-stän) adj. constructed of fitted together but uncemented stones – ‘ee canni get onybody ti mend dry-stane dykes ony mair’, ‘The craw coored ower the dry stane dyke, Whaur wild bees bumbed around a bike’ [WFC].

dry-stane dyke (drI-stän-dik) n. a wall made of fitted together stones, used to divide lands and enclose livestock. The main building phase locally was roughly 1750–1850, with a peak perhaps in the 1820s. It was stated that a recently as the 1920s there were 22 dykers who would leave Hawick every morning to go out to fix dykes.

drystraiks (drI-sträks) n., pl., arch. blows that do not lead to bloodshed – ‘Item, what-somever person that committs ryottis, in giving of dry cuffis and straiks . . .’ [BR1640], ‘Some of these names . . . arose from . . . a brawling disposition, or a proneness to drystraiks’ [WNK] (see also straiks).

Drythropple (drI-thro-pul) n. former farmstead in Hobkirk parish, just north of Weens-moor. The house was built as a shepherd’s cottage for Town-o-Rule farm in 1815 by George Cleghorn of Weens (the owner at the time). He was a teetotaller, and refusing to give the masons their traditional drink, it was given the nickname, which stuck. There was a later attempt to rename it ‘Heathfield’, but the locals always used the nickname. For a while it was the location for one of the hails in Hobkirk Baa. Tenants included Gilbert Aitken (‘Gib o Drythropple’) and John Halliday (‘the Rustic Bard’). Dyker William Armstrong was there in 1861.

Drythropple (drI-thro-pul) n. former place name to the north-east of Denholm, on the north side of the Teviot, south of Minto Glen. A track there is so marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. ‘Drythropple and Ground’ was listed as part of the Minto estate in 1779, 1788 and 1811, when valued at £3 12s 6d. Old river courses there can be made out in aerial photographs (also ‘Drythrapply’).

du (du, doo) v., arch. do – ‘And that Aw du weel ken’ (the vowel sound can be somewhere between oo and a).

dub (dub) n., arch. a puddle, small pond, pool, particularly of marshy water – ‘Ilk step they redouble their haste, As through dirt an’

the Dub (thu-dub) n. former name for the area east of ‘the Vennel’ (roughly Morrison Place), also known as ‘Wylie’s Dub’ and also called ‘Bridgehaugh’, once a boggy area between the Howegate and the modern Buccleuch Street (also spelled ‘Dubb’ and sometimes ‘Dubs’ and ‘Dubbs’).

the Dubbs (thu-dubs) n., pl. former name, from around the 17th century for the marshy region between the Howegate and the Teviot (also known as ‘the Dub’, although that may have been a more specific area).

ducatoon (du-ki-toon) n., arch. an old silver coin, possibly referring to several types, but most usually one from the Netherlands – ‘Likewise there was found among the consignment money before marriages and half Ducatoon and twenty shillings Scots piece pawnded by Jo. For man merchant in Hawick ...’ [PR1711].

She was born on Christmas Day in London, Princess She married Henry William Frederick Albert Windsor, 1st Duke of Gloucester, who was son of George V. She was thus an aunt of Queen Elizabeth II. She was Colonel-in-Chief of the K.O.S.B., and during WWII worked with the Red Cross, the Order of St. John and the W.A.A.F. In 1946 she had a vacation at Branxholme with her mother the dowager Duchess of Buccleuch, and inspected the K.O.S.B. in Hawick. Her sons were Prince William and Prince Richard (who succeeded as Duke of Gloucester). After her husband’s death in 1972 she was allowed to be known as Princess Alice as a courtesy from the Queen. She ceased to carry out public functions in 1999, and lived to be 102.

the Duchess’s Room (thu-du-chi-sees-room) n. name of a room in the former Tower Hotel, overlooking Towerdykeside, which had been the apartment of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. The room was decorated in a royal style, with a gold-mounted bed and footstool, which had been a marriage present from her father-in-law Charles II. She apparently visited many times with some of her 6 children. The room retained the name long after the Tower had been sold as a hotel.

Duckfield (du-kin-field) n. George (19th C.) dramatist who staged a production with ‘Hi-I-Obby’ as the hero, the part being played by the man himself. He was a frequent visitor to Hawick, staging theatrical performances, often in the Upper Haugh, and playing many of the parts himself.

duck huntin (duk-hun-tin) n. a former cruel sport, which locally took place until the mid-19th century at the Coble Pool. Ducks would have their wings clipped and be chased in the pool by dogs.

dud (dud) n., arch. a wretched person, someone easily injured by the cold or wet – ‘He’s a saft dud’ [JoJ], ‘...you poor half starved creatures, with faces as pale as clay, and ilka dud bidding another good day!’ [WSB].

duddie (du-dee) adj., arch. rugged, tattered – ‘The poor man’s case is nae disgrace, Though he be rough and duddie; His hands and health are greater wealth Than a’ their heaps o’ money’ [DA], ‘A gruesome auld carle ance cam’ to our door, Wi’ a bairnie baith barefoot an’ duddie’ [JT], ‘A met a doiterin, duddie, auld hallan-shaker as A lampeet doon that lang brae’ [ECS], (of a bone or joint) not picked clean, having fragments of meat remaining (also spelled ‘duddy’).

the Duddie Laird (thu-du-dee-lard) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century – ‘Eppy Sootie and Wullie Pairk, Geordie the Buck and Higgins Phill, Jamie Nichol the Hawick band clairk, The Duddy Laird and Shallow Bill’ [HI] (also spelled ‘Duddy’, this presumably meant ‘ragged’).

Dudgeon (du-jin) n. Thomas (b.1832/3) from Smalholm, he was a young teacher in Denholm in 1851. In a directory of 1852 he is listed as teacher of the Free Church school in Denholm.

Dudley (dud-lee) n. John (1502–53) son of Edmund, he became a Knight and military commander. He was part of Hertford’s force that sacked southern Scotland and burned Edinburgh in 1544. He was created 1st Duke of Northumberland in 1551. That year he was also appointed Lord Warden General of the English Marches, succeeding to his son’s father-in-law, Lord Dorset. He was later Warden of the Middle and East Marches. His elder son Guilford married Lady Jane Grey and like the other co-conspirators was beheaded after she was deposed.

the Duke o Cumberland (thu-jook-Ô-kum-bar-lind) n. (1721–65) son of George II, he was William Augustus. He was a career soldier, and defeated the Jacobites at Culloden in 1746, ordering that no quarter be given. As a result he earned the nickname ‘the Butcher’ and Robert Wilson says that after wards ferocious bulls or dogs were often locally given the name ‘Will’ or ‘Cumberland’.

the Duke o Queensberry (thu-jook-Ô-kweenz-bu-ree) n. title in the Scottish peerage, connected with both the Douglastes of Drumlanrig and the Scotts of Buccleuch, also spelled ‘Queensbury’. An associated title is the Lordship of Hawick and Tibbers, formerly held by the Douglastes of Drumlanrig. The 1st Duke was William Douglas, who had been Marquess of Queensbury until 1684, and was a direct descendant of the Douglastes of Drumlanrig (and Hawick). His son James became 2nd Duke and he passed the title to his own 3rd son Charles (the 1st dying in infancy and the 2nd, James, being disinherited), after which the 4th Duke was William, great-grandson of the 1st Duke. With the 5th Duke, Henry Scott (3rd Duke of Buccleuch) the title transferred to the Scotts, while the Marquessate of Queensberry was inherited by Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead.

the Duke o Roxburgh (thu-jook-Ô-roks-bu-ru) n. title created in 1707 for John Ker, 5th Earl of Roxburghe and now held by the Innes-Kers, with their seat at Floors Castle. The name comes from an old spelling of Roxburgh. The eldest son of the Duke is called Marquess of Bowmont and Cessford.

the Duke o Teviotdale (thu-jook-Ô-teev-yi’-dâl) n. supended royal title. It was granted (along with the Dukedom of Cumberland and the Earldom of Armath) to Prince Ernest Augustus, 5th son of King George III, in 1799. Ernest became King of Hanover in 1837 and died in 1851. The 2nd Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale was Prince George Frederick Alexander Charles Ernest Augustus, who married Princess Marie Alexandrine Wilhelmine Katherine Charlotte Therese Henriette Louise Pauline Elisabeth Friedrike Georgine, daughter of the Duke of Saxe-Altenburg, and was later deposed as King of Hanover in 1866. He was succeeded by his son Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick, who was also Duke of Brunswick-Lüneburg. Being associated with the enemy during WWI he was deprived of his titles and the peerages were removed from the Roll of Peers in 1919.

the Duke o the Dean (thu-jook-Ô-thu-deen) n. nickname in use around the mid-19th century, presumably for someone from Wilton Dean – ‘The Duke o’ the Dean comes staggerin’ doon; O’ the ring i’ the Haugh auld Broughton’s boss. And Michael Wintrup gangs roond the toon, Cryin’ siller that’s squandered at Pitch and Toss’ [HI].

the Duke’s Airch (thu-jooks-ârch) n. arch in the south wall of St. Mary’s Kirk, put there during rebuilding in 1763 when it was found that the wall would interfere with the Buccleuch Vaults. It marks the probable site of the burial place of the early Scotts of Buccleuch.

the Duke’s Loft (thu-jooks-loft) n. eastern gallery, over the choir in St. Mary’s Church, also known as ‘the Buccleuch Loft’. The site of the Buccleuch Vault is said to be under the stairs leading to this loft.

Duke Street (jook-stree’) n. street running along the east side of the Teviot, constructed in 1887, involving building up of the road to the bridge level. The area was previously undeveloped, being marked ‘Nursery Grounds’ on Wood’s 1824 map. It was named after Walter Francis Montagu-Douglas-Scott, the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It used to have the Buccleuch Memorial at the top, built in honour of the 5th Duke, now the site of the tax and social security offices. J.P. Alison designed the tenements at Nos. 1 and 2 in 1902. The street also used to run under the railway viaduct until that was removed in the 1970s. The Trinity Bar is at No. 18, and at the bottom of the street a footpath continues along the river bank. A decorated spindle whorl from there is in the Museum.
the Duke’s Wud

the Duke’s Wud (thu-jooks-wud, -diks-) n. popular name for Whitlaw wood, south and south-west of the Slitrig, and behind the Vertish. It can be reached from the lane that skirts the left-hand side of the golf course. The wood was formerly on the Duke of Buccleuch’s land, and presumably was given the name to distinguish it from the town’s woods at the Vertish. The wood is now managed as a nature conservancy area by Scottish Wildlife Trust – ‘And yonder is the Duke’s green wood And Whitlaw’s flowery braes’ [GD] (see also the Duik’s Wud).

dule (dool) n., poet. grief, sorrow, misery, suffering, dolour, state of lassitude – ‘Mine ee is consumeit becaus o’ dool’ [HSR], ‘… mine ee is waistet wi’ dool, yis, my saul an’ my bellie’ [HSR], ‘When news o’ Flodden’s day o’ dule Made dark baith hut and ha’’ [JT], ‘In dule or disappointment, praise or blame, Teviot ran liiting on its rippling way …’ [JYH], ‘… Its dule I woudna dreed’ [WL], ‘Can we forget those olden days, The doul their evils wrought’? [JEDM] (also spelled ‘dool’; cf. dui).

the Dule Trei (thu-dool-tri) n. ancient ash tree near Brannholme Tower, said to have been used for hangings. It can be seen in a painting from the mid-19th century, which is in the Museum. The tree was probably not as old as traditionally claimed, perhaps dating from the mid-17th century. It was said to once be part of a large rookery. It was largely blown down about 1880.

dull (dul) adj., arch. slow on the uptake – ‘Gutterblude? Hoots, Aw’m aw’fri’ dule o’ the uptake, ee’r a’ Gutterbludes – the best o’ Hawick’s Gutterblude’ [JEDM].

Dumbarton Drums (dum-bawr’-in-drumz) n. one of the tunes traditionally played by the Drums and Fifes. The tune is similar to the traditional bagpipe tune ‘The Haughs of Cromdale’. It is entirely different from the regimental tune of the Royal Scots (who were once known as ‘Dumbarton’s Regiment’), which dates back to the early 18th century, with suggestions it was the ‘Scots March’ referred to by Samuel Pepys in 1667. It is uncertain when or why the local tune was given this name. The tune is played during Picking Night on the march to the Cornet’s house, if the route takes the band to the north. It is also played at other specific times, for example when the band lead the mounted cavalcade from Drumlanrig Square and along the High Street after the Dipping of the Flag, and to rouse the Town on the Saturday morning. The tune was combined with ‘Rumblin Brig’ in the Scocha song ‘Bottles at Dawn’.

the Dumb Precentor (thu-dumb-pre-sen-tur) n. sometimes nickname of Job Gadd.

Dumfries (dum-breik) n. Mrs. Euphemia née Kinnear (1810–79) born in Rhynd, Perthshire, daughter of Charles Kinnear and Euphan Ritchie, she married John Dumbreck in 1830. She had daughters Euphemia Ritchie (b.1835) and Catherine Elizabeth (b.1837). She came to Hawick in 1865 with her husband and 2 daughters, setting up a boarding and day school for girls on North Bridge Street, named Teviot-side House (and now 1 Teviotside Terrace). The school taught English, French, German, Italian, Music, Singing, Drawing and Painting. She is remembered in Hawick as composer of the music for ‘I Like Auld Hawick’. Her husband died only about a year after the family’s arrival in Hawick, but the school was continued by her and her daughters until 1885. She died at the District Asylum, Melrose and is buried at St. Cuthbert’s in Edinburgh. Euphemia Ritchie (b.1835) daughter of John and Euphemia. In 1861 she is recorded as governess for the family of Walter Wilson of Orchard. Since this family were Quakers, then this may also have been true of the Dumbrecks. This was 4 years before the Dumbreck family moved to Hawick to start a school for girls. She and her sister Katherine probably continued to run the school after their mother’s death in 1879. It is said that they retired to Colinton in Edinburgh (sometimes erroneously ‘Drumbecket’).

dumfoonder (dum-foon-dur) v. to dumbfounder, nonplus – ‘Fierce Bothwell I vanquished clean, Gar’d troopers an’ fitmen flee; By my faith I dumfoondert the Queen, An’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T], ‘… he schot owt ichtin’s, an’ dumfoonderet thame’ [HSR].

dumfoondert (dum-foon-dur) pp., adj. dumbfoundered, nonplused – ‘The twa’ dumfoondert, stood appall’d, An’ trembling, swat – their blood ran cauld’ [RDW].

Dumfries (dum-frees) n. main town of Dumfriesshire, and later of Dumfries & Galloway Region, lying in Nithsdale, about 70 miles from Hawick. Although well to the west of Carlisle, it still retains a flavour of the Borders, and was the major metropolis of the Scottish West March. It has been a Royal Burgh since 1186, and a bridge there is recorded as early as 1283. Long a market town it also developed significant hosiery and tweed mills from the 18th century. The town was a major centre during centuries of strife on the Border, being burned by the English many times.
Dumfries an Galloway

It was also a haunt of Robert Burns, where he spent the last 5 years of his life, and where he is buried. The town was known as a manufacturer of textiles, rivalling Hawick in the 19th century. The ‘Guid Nychburris Festival’ is the local version of the Common Riding, taking place on the third Saturday in June. The town is sometimes called ‘The Queen of the South’ and has as its slogan ‘A Loreburn’! Population 32,136 (1991).

Dumfries an Galloway (dum-frees-in-ga-lu-wā) n. neighbouring region to the west of the Borders Region. It kept its name after the local government changes of 1995.

Dumfries Militia (dum-frees-mi-li-sha) n. the Royal Dumfries Volunteers were raised in 1795 as a local force of gentlemen. A second corps, begun in 1797, became the Dumfries Militia and recruited extensively across the Borders, including in Roxburghshire. Recruitment was initially by balloting eligible men in each parish (with the possibility of claiming exemptions or paying yourself out), with men serving for 5-year periods. The the Regiment of Militia was raised in Dumfriesshire in 1798 (to meet the perceived threat from France) and stood down in 1802, then re-formed again in the period 1803–14. In the 19th century many poor people in Hawick would sign up for spells in this regiment. When in Hawick they used the under flat of a house next to the old Town Hall as a guardroom, and during the Crimean War they used the Brewery Haugh for drilling. Bet Young wrote a couple of poems to celebrate them in the early 19th century. They were also known as the Dumfries, Roxburgh and Selkirk Militia and the Scottish Borderers Regiment of Militia, and they essentially evolved into the King’s Own Scottish Borderers.

Dumfriesshire (dum-frees-shir) n. county to the south-west of Roxburghshire, entered on the A7 just after Mosspaul. Parts of the parishes of Staplegordon, Wauchope, Ewes, Canonbie and Westerkirk belonging to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch were moved to Roxburghshire according to an Act of Parliament of 1672, but most returned to Dumfriesshire later. In the early 19th century there were many people living in this county who were working on frames for Hawick manufacturers, particularly in Dumfries, Langholm, Lochmaben and Lockerbie. Some of them settled in Hawick in the mid-19th century.

Dummy (du-mee) n. formerly a local nickname for someone who is unable to speak. Note that this was descriptive rather than disparaging.

‘Dumbie in Braxholmtoun’ is entered in the Session records receiving poor payments in the early 18th century.

the Dump (thu-dump) n. town rubbish tip, near the ‘Power Road Ends’, above Stichers, adjacent to Stouslie. The earliest recorded dump (in the 18th century) was between the Sltirrig and the modern Sltirrig Crescent. For a while the location was in the middle of Hawick Moor (where it is said that a circus elephant is buried, after dying while performing at a circus in town, as well as the fever hospital beds). There was later a dump off a road at the top of the Wellowgate Brae and then the main location was near Haughhead, between the A698 and the Teviot.

dumple (dum-pul) n., arch. a quantity, bundle – ‘And some brought dumplings o’ woo’ And some brought fitches o’ bacon’ [ES].

dumplin (dum-plin) n. a spicy fruit pudding, often boiled in a cloth – ‘A feeneshd ma denner wui twae rake o currn-dumplin’ [ECS] (see also clootie-dumplin).

the Dumplin (thu-dum-plin) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

theumps (thu-dumps) n. called ‘the bumps’ in England, a mild beating traditionally given to a child by school mates on birthdays, often one thump on the back for each year – ‘hei hed ti rin hame efter schuil ti avoid theumps’.

Dunbar (dun-bawr) n. Gavin (c.1490–1547) 3rd son of John of Mochrum and Janet Stewart. In 1518 he became Dean of Moray, succeeding his uncle, also Gavin Dunbar. By 1520 he was also Prior of Whithorn (although not after some dispute), and was also Preceptor to James V. In 1524 he was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow, thus becoming the superior of the church in Teviotdale. Although he had been given exemption to the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of St. Andrews (as Primate of All Scotland), there was a long running feud with his fellow archbishop David Beaton, including a brawl between the attendants of the 2 archbishops in Glasgow Cathedral in 1545, in which both processionals crosses were broken! He was Chancellor of Scotland 1528–43. He fought against early reformers of the Church and was known for his ‘Monition of Cursing’ against the Border Rievers, issued in 1525, an astonishing curse, running to about 1500 words, which all parish priests were required to read out, including ‘I curse their heid and all the haris of their heid . . . I curse them gangand, and I curse them ryand . . . ‘I curse their wiffis, their barnis, and their servandis participand with thaim in thair deides . . . thair catales, thair woll, thair scheip, their horse, their swyne, their geise, their hennys ... and the gudis and housis that is necessair for their sustentatioun and wellfair', and condemning the rievers to ‘all the vengeance that evir was takin sen the warlde began for oppin synnys, and all the plagis and pestilence that ever fell on man or beist’. He was a witness to several charters relating to the Scotts of Buccleuch around the 1520s. He attanded the trials and signed the death sentences of several early Protestants, who were later considered as martyrs. He was buried in an elaborate tomb he had constructed for himself in Glasgow Cathedral, which was destroyed by reformers 13 years later. His seal showed an elaborate image of St. Kentigern and the words ‘SIGILLUM GAVINI ARCHIEPI. GLASGUIS’. Patrick (16th C.) Reader at Cavers Church from 1576–78.

Dunbush (dun-bush) n. former name for a piece of land owned by Scott of Harden. In the 1788 assessment of the county valuation it is ‘Dunsbush’ and valued (along with Harden and Highchesters Mill) at £463 9s. In the 1788 county valuation (and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it was listed along with Harden and Highchesters Mill as ‘Dunbush’ (or ‘Dunsbush’). This was clearly the name for a piece of land near Harden, but the precise location is not clear.

Duncan (dung-kin) n. name of 2 Kings of Scotland. Duncan I (d.1040) King from 1034, succeeding his maternal grandfather Malcolm II. He was son of Bethoc, who was daughter of Malcolm. He was previously ruler of Strathclyde. He was slain by Macbeth, and his sons Malcolm III and Donald were both Kings afterwards. Duncan II (c.1060–94) King of Scotland from 1093, when he drove out his uncle Donald (Bane) III. He was a Canmore, son of Malcolm III and his first wife Ingibiorg and spent much of his life in the English court. He was killed, probably by a supporter of Donald.

Duncan (dung-kin) n. George ‘the Admiral’ (19th C.) Hawick character of the mid-19th century. Having been in the navy he would always turn out on special occasions wearing a blue coat with brass buttons, hence his nickname. He could be the George (b.1796/7) living on the Loan in 1841 and 1851, widower of Janet Thorburn and with children Agnes, Sarah, Martha, George and William. James (16th C.) resident of one of the farms in the lower Borthwick whose residents complained in 1549 about a raid by the English, assisted by Kers and others. He may have been at Wilton Green, and was probably related to William, who stayed at Wiltonburn and John, who was at Borthaugh. James (19th C.) one of the main organisers of the Hawick Reformers of the early 1800s. He is probably the man of the same name who was listed at Hawick in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. Rev. James (1745/5–1830) born in Kirkcaldy, he was minister of the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm from 1774, taking over from John Arnot. He was said to be a great linguist and tutored the young John Leyden in classics. He was described as a plain preacher who ‘possessed none of the grandiloquent embellishments in delivery’. He was a strict disciplinarian with his congregation, regularly rebuking people from the pulpit. He had a ‘Black List’ detailing all the sins that would stop people from taking communion; this included ‘All those persons who carry any sticks from Cavers plantations without authority’, for which the Laird of Cavers granted him an annual pension. He managed to keep the congregation united, but after his death they ceased to worship together and were effectively absorbed by the Independents. He married Isabella Scott and their son James was the first minister of Teviothead Parish, as well as being known as an entomologist. His gravestone, erected by the congregation, said that they cherished ‘the sincerity and exemplary piety of his character, his faithfulness in the discharge of his ministerial duties, and unwearied solicitude for their best interests’. Rev. James (1804/5–61) born in Denholm, son of the minister of the Cameronian Chapel there and Isabella Scott. He was educated at Edinburgh University, spending a few years afterwards as a private tutor and in studying botany and entomology. He helped Rev. David Aitken of Minto compile a list of the rarer insects and plants seen in the Parish of Minto for the New Statistical Account in 1838. In 1850, at the urging of friends and family, he became minister at Teviothead, being the first incumbent of the newly created Parish. However, this was said to be against his own judgement, and a struggle because of his nervous temperament in public. He was deprived in 1853 and published a ‘Letter to Members of the Church and Inhabitants of the Parish of Teviothead’ in Hawick that year. However, he flourished as an entomologist, publishing a ‘Catalogue of Coleoptera’ in 1834, ‘The Natural History of Foreign Butterflies’ (1837), ‘Introduction to Entomology’ (1840), and ‘The Natural History of Exotic Moths’ (1841), as well as writing the chapters on Geology, Botany and Natural History for Jeffrey's 'The History and Antiquities of Roxburghshire', which included a list of indigenous plants. He also indexed the entire 'Encyclopedia Britannica' for the publishers. He was preparing a biography of John Leyden when he died in Denholm, and was a primary instigator for the erection of the Leyden Monument. His interest in nature and other topics were an early influence on James 'Dictionary' Murray. He made a catalogue of plants observed in the area around Jedburgh, including many species listed as being found at Denholm Dean, Minto Hill, Ruberslaw, etc. These were to have formed a chapter in Jeffrey's 'History of Roxburghshire'. James 'Jim' (19th/20th C.) from Aberdeen originally, he married one of the daughters of Appletreehall blacksmith Robert Davidson. The couple lived at Deanbrae and then he became joiner at Appletreehall. He was known for his prize gooseberries. He had a son Hector. John (16th C.) recorded as holder of the vicarage of Hassendean in 1538. In that year he was 'escathed for barrayt' (i.e. negligence and trade in the sale of church appointments) and the fruits of the benefice were granted to George Scott. In 1544 he resigned Hassendean in favour of John Anderson. In 1553 he resigned from the Clerkschip of Melrose. James V described him as a worthless old man, and he is also stated to have been 'a notorious character of the period and one of the most typical of the band of Scots who at this time were hangerson at the papal court and agents in the purchase of benefices'. John (16th C.) resident of Borthaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He was probably related to William who was a resident at Wiltonburn at the same time, as well as James. John (17th C.) described as a 'traveller' in 1685 when he was charged, along with other local men, with being a Covenanter. All the men took the 'Test' in Hawick and promised not to frequent conventicles, the letter being signed by Sir William Elliott of Stobs. John (17th/18th C.) surgeon who arrived in Hawick around 1714. He is recorded in the Hawick Parish records, with the minister questioning the testimonial he had from his former parish. He was married to Anne Munroe. Rev. J.W. minister at Burnfoot until 1866 when he was translated to Aberdeen. Margaret 'Peggie' or 'Peggy' (19th C.) cock-eyed character in the song 'Pawkie Paiterson'. It was said that 'she could not be characterised as a beauty', but the extent to which the song was accurate is unknown. She is listed as an agricultural labourer on the Kirkwynd in the 1841 census, living there with her son William (and next door to Thomas Duncan and his family, probably her brother). In 1851 she was a hosiery seamstress on the Back Row. She was probably the daughter of William and Betty Duncan born in Hawick in 1800 – 'Peggy Duncan and Jenny Din, Nellie Herkness and Mensie Mein; The Wilton Priest wi' his coat o' skin, Staney Stewart and Candy Jean' [HI]. Rev. Thomas (see Duncanson). Thomas (b.1793/4) weaver living on the Kirk Wynd in 1841 and 1851 with his wife Ann and children Margaret, Betty, Mary, Kirsty, William and James. He is probably the Thomas who was one of the men in the vanguard of the Hawick band at the Carthagha Baa in 1815. W.F. (19th/20th C.) schoolmaster at Teviot Grove Academy. He married Jane Fisher, daughter of Peter Laidlaw. They moved to Vancouver, Canada. Walter (18th/19th C.) thong-maker in Hawick. The death of a child of his is recorded in 1819. Walter (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. William (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. It seems likely he was related to John who was a resident of Borthaugh at the same time and also James. William (18th C.) servant at Midshiels in 1788, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. His name appears to be written 'Duncian'. William (d.1797) wright from Eskdale who died in Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Whithope Mill in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He married Margaret Miller in 1779. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Turnbull in 1780 and their children included: William (b.1781); Christian (b.1782); John (b.1784); Helen (b.1786); Thomas (b.1788); Betty (b.1790); Thomas (again, b.1793); and James (b.1795). The witnesses in 1793 were Robert Wilson and Walter Inglis. William (18th/19th C.) baker and publican in Hawick. His daughter Janet died in Hawick in 1808. His wife Betty Turnbull died in 1815. In 1816, along with butcher Francis Deans, he was found guilty of unspecified fraudulent activities. He may be the William born to William and Betty Turnbull in Hawick in 1781 (also formerly 'Duncane' and 'Dunkan').
Duncan’s Grain

Duncan’s Grain (dung-kinz-gran) n. small stream forming part of the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn. It rises on Millstone Edge and Tudhope Hill.

Duncan’s Hole (dung-kinz-hol) n. earthwork along the south side (right bank) of Hob’s Burn, between Bonchester Bridge village and Hobbsburn house. It is on a narrow tongue of land between the burn and an old channel for the Rule Water. It consists of a rampart and external ditch, possibly of medieval date.

Duncanson (dung-kin-sin) n. Rev. Andrew (17th C.) son of Rev. Thomas, who he assisted as minister of Bowden briefly. He moved to St. Boswell’s in 1618 and was still there in 1654. He married Margaret, brother of William Riddell of Greatlaws (in Lilliesleaf Parish). In 1630 his wife was served heir to her brother. Their children included: Andrew, who was minister at Maxton; and Thomas. Rev. Andrew (d.bef. 1672) son of Andrew. In 1631 he was served heir to his mother Margaret Riddell. He was minister at Maxton from 1640 and confined to his Parish in 1662 for not conforming to Episcopacy. He succeeded to his mother’s lands of Greatlaws. He was recorded in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when he paid £104 for Greatlaws. He was also listed at Greatlaws in 1678 (although probably already deceased). He additionally paid the land tax at Maxpoffle in 1678. Rev. Thomas (d.1621) probably son or grandson of Thomas of Maxpoffle and Janet Oliphant. He was presented to the vicarage of Bowden in 1567 and admitted to his care, although he had the assistance of two readers, with also individual readers at each of the 4 parishes. When he died he was ‘father of the church’, i.e. the oldest surviving minister. His son was Andrew, who succeeded him as minister of Bowden. He may be the Thomas ‘Duncan’ who is recorded in a deed of 1612 as schoolmaster at Yair (also formerly ‘Duncason’; it was interchangeable with ‘Duncan’ in early times).

dunch (dunch, dunsh) v., arch. to strike, knock — ‘Cairts an hurbalrihs an yirrint-vans an thing, that every-see-bittie dunshet other i the strooshie’ [ECS], n., arch. a knock, blow, bump — ‘But yet, what reck? we downa jook, We’ll stamn’ a dunch, nor think o’ fa’in’” [JoHa], ‘... wu a yerkin an a dunsh an a stech an an ‘Parp!’’ [ECS], ‘Oor Jock hed ti gie’s a dunsh for ti waken iz even than’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘dunsh’).

duncht (duncht, dunshit) pp., arch. struck, knocked, bumped — ‘... whan A’m owther geetin jaappeet an spairggieat wui durt, or dunshit wui folk’ [ECS] (also ‘dunshit’).

Dundas (dun-das) n. Jean (b.1773/4) born in Bombay, she was ia dealer in small wares, listed at about 19 Howegate in 1841. In 1851 she was there as a servant with retired mason Peter Taylor. William Pitt (1801–83) son of Robert of Arniston, he was an advocate, who became the first Register General for Scotland, from 1854. There is some suggestion that he was not particularly assiduous in his post. He was assisted by his Superintendent of Statistics, Dr. James Stark, who may have done most of the work. His name appears at the foot of several local parish records (e.g. for Cavers in the late 18th century), suggesting that these were copied out from deteriorating originals.

dung (dung) pp., arch. knocked over, smote, overcame (past participle of ding, with dang being the usual past tense).

Dungeon Plantin (dung-jin-plawn’-in) n. plantation of trees by the main entrance to Weens House, lying south of the house, and east of the B6357. There are 2 small hills there surrounded by a turf bank. It has been suggested that one of them was the site of the original Weens peal house, but there is no physical evidence for this. There is also a nearby linear earthwork, of unknown age or function.

Dunhog Moss (dun-hog-mos) n. marshy area to the right of the A7 shortly before coming to Selkirk, lying further to the east than Hare Moss. It now forms part of the Hare & Dunhog Moss Nature Reserve. There are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation on a field to the south-east.

the Dunion (thin-dun-yin) n. hill on the back-road from Denholm to Jedburgh, formerly reaching a height of 1,092 ft (333 m). The hill lay entirely within the bounds of Bedrule Parish, but part of it may once have been in Jedburgh Parish. It was the site of an Iron Age settlement, and the summit was used as a beacon during the times of perceived threat of French invasion. More recently the contours of its peak have been changed by extensive quarrying for road metalling. The fort had a massive drystone wall surrounding the summit, enclosing an area about 170 m by 55 m, separated by a dyke into 2 enclosures. There were also external ramparts, as well as 7 hut circles, which are probably later in age, and the foundations of 2 rectangular buildings, which could have been mediaval look-out posts. The fort was excavated in 1961 and 1962, but mostly destroyed over the next decade or so. However, further excavation in the 1980s revealed that the fort covered an area much larger than just the summit. On the north-east side are 14 roughly circular scoops, corresponding to a settlement associated with the fort, with carbon dating giving an age around 100 B.C.E. A cinerary urn was found on the northern slopes by Mr. Pott of Dodd in 1885, and later donated to the National Museum of Antiquities. A stone axe-head, and 2 flint arrow-heads have also been collected from the hill. Before quarrying removed much of the summit, it was said to command one of the most glorious views in the Borders – ‘See the Dunion grey mark the Eildon’s rise Like sentinel watch towers to greet the skies’ [TC], ‘When Ruberslaw puts on his cowl, The Dunion on his hood, Then a’ the wives o’ Teviotside Ken there will be a flood’ [T] (the name appears in a 1513 report by Lord Dacre as ‘the Dunyon’; it is ‘Dvnzone’ in 1576, ‘Dunzeon’ in the 1650s, ‘Dunyon’ in 1662 and ‘Dunian’ in 1795 and 1839; it is ‘Hill of Dunyon’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and has its modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map; its origin may be ‘hill with the dungeon’).

Dunion Hill see the Dunion

Dunira (dun-I-ru) n. Victorian mansion on Buccleuch Road, being the last house inside the town boundaries on the New Road. It was probably designed by J.P. Alison and erected around 1892. It was built for tweed merchant William Laidlaw Stevenson and manufacturer James Boyd Sime later lived there. More recently it became a guest house and when the owners moved further along Buccleuch Road to the old manse house, they (confusingly) moved the name with it.

the Dunk (thu-dungk) n. deep pool at a bend in the Teviot at the southern end of the Park, often used for swimming in the summer months – ‘Heavy wi’ denners And heat, the scholars dreamed o’ the Dunk And Coble …’ [DH], ‘Aa want naething else adaie Wi money Except to sit at the Dunk And watch the auld currency Floatin’ bye’ [DH], ‘…Or by the Dunk to Goldilands Ayont where waters meet’ [WFC], ‘We don’t fo swimming in the Park, In the Dunk oo hev a dook’ [IWL] (possibly from mediaval Scots ‘donk’ meaning ‘damp, moist’).

Dun Law (dun-law) n. hill in the Borders to the south of Soutra at the western end of the Lammermuirs, reaching 393 m (1,289 ft). It is the site of a large wind farm built in 2000, consisting of 26 turbines on 40 m high towers, and easily visible from the A68.

Dunlop (dun-lop) n. Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in Selkirk Parish according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He was surely related to Walter, who farmed at Whitmuirhall. He was listed as owner of parts of Silverbuthall in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Archibald of Whitmuir was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. James (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. William was also listed at Birkwood and so surely related.

James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Rutherford and they had an unnamed daughter in 1738. James (18th C.) probably son of Walter of Whitmuir, he was a doctor in Rochdale and also in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the ‘Dr Dunlap of Rochdale’ who married Miss Fisher in Hawick in 1797. His daughter Nancy died in Rochdale in 1806 and his wife Margaret in 1820, aged 50. John (b.1710) son of Walter. He was probably also tenant of local lands. In 1760 he purchased Whitmuir Hall (east of Selkirk) from John Goudie (Divinity Professor in Edinburgh). He was succeeded by his son Walter, while another son was John. He may be the John who married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk Parish in 1745. John (18th C.) younger son of John. He was tenant of Chisholme farm. His children (born in Roberton Parish, but with no mother’s name given) included: James (b.1770); George (b.1771); John (b.1773); Rev. Walter (b.1775), minister at Newcastle and Dumfries; and William (b.1777). Margaret (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Her surname is written ‘Dilape’. Patrick (15th C.) probably name of a presbyter of Glasgow Diocese who was a witness to the 1464/5 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. His name appears as ‘[j]atrio de Dunlop’ (with the first letter illegible). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant of Ashkirk Town and Synton Parkhead in the early 1700s. He and his brother John also between them held the farms of Chisholme, Whitslade and others. His son was John. Walter of Whitmuirhall (1738–1808) eldest son of John and brother of John. He was recorded at Whitmuirhall on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1788 he was listed as owner of both Whitmuir and Whitmuirhall, valued at £673 13s 4d. He was recorded as owner of 7 horses in the 1797 Horse Tax Roll for Selkirk Parish and also paid the dog tax there in the same year. In 1761 in Ashkirk Parish he married Agnes, eldest daughter of Robert Dickson of Hassendeanbourn. He had 7 sons and 5 daughters, including: James (b.1766), who was a physician in Rochdale; Katherine (b.1768); Archibald (b.1770), who succeeded his father and sold the farm of Whitmuir in 1818; Isabel (b.1772); Walter (b.1774); John (b.1776), 4th son, who lived in Ayrshire and died unmarried; Janet (b.1778); Jean (b.1780); Robert, cloth merchant in Huddersfield; William (b.1785), 6th son, who became Quartermaster-General of the Bengal army; and Charles, who purchased Whitemuir Hall from the trustees of his brother William. The earlier children were baptised in Ashkirk and the later ones in Selkirk. Rev. Walter ‘Wattie’ (1774–1846) son of John, who was a younger son of Walter of Whitmuir Hall. His father was tenant of Chisholme and he was born in Roberton Parish. His mother was Agnes Hunter. He was in Prof. Lawson’s junior class at Selkirk. The family attended the East Bank Kirk in Hawick. He was apprenticed to a baker in Leith, but switched careers to train for the ministry in Edinburgh and at the Burgher Theological Hall in Selkirk. He was ordained at Newcastleupon-Bedgurth Kirk in 1804 (the first minister in the new building). He was said to be known for his ‘ready and pungent wit’, although no stories survive relating to his time in Liddesdale. It is said that he baked the pie for his own ordination dinner. He lived in a manse that was built next to the new church in Newcastleupon-Hawick. He was called to Dumfries in 1809, but had greatly increased the congregation during that time. In Dumfries he became the first minister of the new Secession Kirk on Buccleuch Street there, where he served until about 2 years before his death. He married Isabella Scott, who died in 1814. He secondly married Janet Jessie McLean, who died in 1828. Their son Archibald emigrated to Australia, while his oldest daughter Catherine (or ‘Kitty’) died in 1838. William (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He was presumably related to James, who was also listed at Birkwood. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray and Bessie Dunlop in 1689 and others for John Murray, William Scott and William Allan in 1690 (formerly written ‘Dilape’, ‘Dinlap’, ‘Dinlop’, ‘Dunlap’, ‘Dunlap’ and variants).

Dunlop see Wullie Dunlop

Dunn (dun) n. Eling (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpsalay in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for all of his tenants, appearing in Hawick to assure that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. It is unclear what this forename corresponds to, and whether this might be a woman’s name. James (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for gardener William Riddell (along with gardener James Falsyde). He is probably the James who married Margaret Ker and whose children included: Jean (b.1707); Janet (b.1707); Robert (b.1708); Helen (b.1710); Mary (b.1713); Margaret (b.1716); James (b.1719); and Adam (b.1721). The witnesses in 1713 were gardener William Riddell and Robert Ker (probably related to his wife). James B., A.R.S.A. (19th/20th C.) Edinburgh architect famous for designing the Scotsman Building with James Leslie Findlay. In Hawick he was commissioned to design the Hawick War Memorial. Jean (17th/18th C.) born in Selkirk, she was a servant to Andrew Jerdon in Hawick, being put out of the Town twice for failing to produce a testimonial from her former Parish. She was also servant to Mrs. Fraser (although whether this was Hawick is unclear) and travelled between the parishes of Hawick, Galashiels and Prestonpans. John (1780/1–1807) from Ruletownhead, he died of fever and was buried at Byrness in Northumberland. Margaret (b.1811/2) from Jedburgh, she was a grocer and spirit merchant at Bonchester Bridge in 1851. Marilyn (??– ) from Hawick, she graduated from Edinburgh University and is Senior Lecturer in Medieval History at the University of Glasgow. She has published books on Byzantine and monastic history. Thomas (15th C.) probably from the Rule valley. In 1493 Archibald Plenderleith in Bedrule was charged with stealing a cow and an ox from him. Perhaps the same ‘Thomas dwn de Jedworth’ was also mentioned in 1493 when Walter Ker of Cessford served as surety for the Laird of Bedrule not harming him. It is possible he was the same Thomas for whose murder John Robson in Auld Roxburgh was declared a fugitive in 1502. Thomas (19th C.) gardener at Stobs. He married Ann Henderson. Their son Robert died of consumption in 1857, aged 36. William (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas Turnbull to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary’s Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as ‘Willelmno Dun’. Probably the same William is recorded in 1494/5 when Thomas Turnbull of Phaup was fined for his non-appearance in Selkirk. William (19th C.) said to have been one of only 2 residents of Bouchester Brigend who stayed in their houses during the devastating flood of 1846.

William (19th C.) carrier, listed in 1852 leaving the Black Bull in Hawick on Thursday’s, traveling to Canonbie and Annan.

Dunnan (du-nin) n. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Dunnand’, which might correspond to some other modern name. He is actually the last man named.

dunmer (du-nur) v., arch. to make a noise suggestive of thunder, rumble, clatter – ‘Thunmers dunnered o’er ye’, ‘…and though it gard the divots stour off the house riggins and every ners dunnered o’er ye’, ‘suggestive of thunder, rumble, clatter { ‘Thunerring to Canonbie and Annan.

Dunsmuir (du-nur) n. resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in century. His name is written ‘Dunse’.

Dunsmyre (dun-smyr) n. Robert (15th C.) witness to a charter of 1453, the first known relating to lands in Hawick. His name was written ‘Dunsmyre’.

Dunstone (dun-stun) n. area just to the south-west of Lilliesleaf village. The hill immediately west of the village was formerly called Dunstone Height and is now marked ‘Dunstone Roundle’, reaching a height of 169 m. Dunstone Mill is probably an old name for Riddell Mill. Some of the lands of Riddell of that ilk in Lilliesleaf are described in 1595/6 as being called ‘the West-Maynis alias Dunstone or Myris’. Adam Young was farmer there in the 1860s (also written ‘Dunston’).

Dun (dun) n. small market and former county town in Berwickshire. Originally called Dunse and built on the dun (Iron Age fort), it became a burgh of barony in 1190. Duns Castle includes part of a 14th century tower, and Duns Law is the site of the Covenanters’ Stone. Nearby stands Manderston House, as well as Nisbet House and Wedderburn Castle. It was the birthplace of Duns Scotus (who indirectly gave us the word ‘dunce’) and also has the Jim Clark Museum. Duns summer festival was started in 1949, and takes place in July. It includes a ride to the summit of Duns Law by the Reiver and his supporters. The town motto is ‘Duns Dings A!’!, relating to a rout of the Earl of Northumberland’s men there in 1377. The town handball game was carried out until 1886 and revived recently as part of the Summer Festival. Population (1991) 2,444 (formerly spelled ‘Dunse’).

Duns (dunz) n. Patrick (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. His name is written ‘Dunce’.

Dunside Rig (du-nis-dig) n. hill to the south-west of Buccleuch and north of Phenzhopehaugh, reaching a height of 367 m.

Dunsmyr (dun-myr) n. Robert (15th C.) witness to a charter of 1453, the first known relating to lands in Hawick. His name was written ‘Dunsmyre’.

Dunserine Haa (du-ne-rin-haw) n. an old cottage that stood near Barnes in the early 19th century. It was the home of James Cavers, known as ‘Auld Dunnernum’, who reached the age of 98.

Dunnett (du-ni) n. Rev. Arthur Henry (1882-1940) son of William, minister in Kilmarnock, he was educated in Kilmarnock and at Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. He was licensed by Irvine Presbytery in 1910, assisted at Dalziel and St. Mungo’s in Glasgow and was ordained as minister of St. John’s in Hawick near the end of 1913. He was translated to Teviothead in 1920. He demitted in 1924 when he was appointed as Depute Home Mission Secretary. After the Union of 1929 he became one of the Secretaries of the Home Board for the Church of Scotland. He married Jessie, daughter of John Lamb, the West Kilbride minister. Their children were Fiona and William Gavin (b.1919). He published ‘The Child’s Prayer Book’ (1920), ‘Book of Prayers’ (1925) and an article ‘For Christ or Congregation’ in ‘The Church in Changing Scotland’ (1934).

Dunt (dun) n. a blow, thump – ‘A gien eet a right guid dunt’, ‘Yet up he raise, the truth to tell, And laid about him dunts fu’ dour . . . ’[CPM], ‘. . .for it wad be a gey sair pliskie ti rin dunt up again’ the braw moniment at the fit [ECS], ‘But nought will scare him frae his neuk, Or gar him raer, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fervent prayer’[DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule raier, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fer-vent prayer’[DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule raer, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fer-vent prayer’[DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule raer, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fer-vent prayer’[DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule raer, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fer-vent prayer’[DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule raer, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fer-vent prayer’[DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule raer, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fer-vent prayer’[DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule raer, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fer-vent prayer’[DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule raer, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fer-vent prayer’[DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule raer, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fer-vent prayer’[DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule raer, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fer-vent prayer’[DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule raer, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or fer-vent prayer’ [HSR].
Duntersdales

Duntersdales (dun-turz-dälz) n. former name for land lying south of the Slitrig, between and up-hill from Usuch Haugh and Deidhaugh. In 1892 it was feued by the Duke of Buccleuch to John Laing & Sons and James Melrose & Sons, both of Slitrig Crescent (the origin is uncertain, perhaps relating to ‘dunters’, the spirits that inhabited old castles, or alternatively a combination of Old English and Gaelic for ‘hill fort athwart the valley’).

Dun Tae (dun-tä) n. hill between Carlin Tooth and Carter Fell. It may be the ‘Dun’ listed among the highest hilles in Castleton Parish in 1839.

Dupligis (doo-pligz) n. place name listed as ‘Duplicis’ among the farms and towers that were burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. It is listed under places on the Rule Water, but beside ‘Tronnyhill’ (which is probably Troneyhill ‘Dupligis’ among the farms and towers that were the highest hilles in Castleton Parish in 1839. and Carter Fell. It may be the ‘Dun’ listed among the highest hilles in Castleton Parish in 1839.

Dutchburn (duchs-burn) n. John (b.1788/9) from the Sunderland area, he was a tailor in the West-end. In 1841 he is recorded on the Back Row, and was on the Loan in 1851. His wife Jane was from Gatehouse-of-Fleet.

Durie (joo-ree) n. Andrew (d.1558) son of John of Durie in Fife, and brother of George, who was Archbishop of St. Andrews. He became Bishop of Galloway and Abbot of Melrose, under very dubious circumstances, it is said. He is meant to have been a very poor Abbot. In 1524 he was recorded as Postulate of the Abbey when he re-granted Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme the office of bailiary of the Abbey’s lands. In 1529 he witnessed the indenture to keep the peace between the Kerrs and the Scotts. He is said to have died of shock after Protestant rioters attacked St. Giles Cathedral. His shield bore the figure of Mary, together with a kneeling bishop, the arms of Durie and the words ‘S’ ANDREE ABBATIS DE MEL-ROS’ (also spelled ‘Dury’).

Durrough (du-roch) n. Mr. ?? (17th/18th C.) described as ‘dancing-master’ in the Hawick Parish records. He was in Hawick for part of 1715 and 1716, presumably teaching dance, and received a certificate for good deportment to carry to his next abode (possibly the same as ‘Durrow’ or ‘Darrow’, a family well-represented in Berwickshire).

Durstni (durs-nil) contr. dared not (also durstni).

Durham (du-rum) n. small city in northeastern England, centre of the Anglican Diocese of Durham. This traces its history to the Kingdom of Northumbria in the 7th century, the headquarters shifting from Lindisfarne to Chester-Le-Street and then the cathedral built in the loop of the River Wear from the late 10th century (and the present building started in 1093). The Cathedral still contains the remains and relics of St. Cuthbert. Teviotdale may have been part of this diocese until transferred to Glasgow sometime around 1100. Reginald of Durham, in his description of miracles attributed to St. Cuthbert, makes the first mention of Hawick in the 12th century. The town was also the location for the Battle of Nevill’s Cross in 1346, also sometimes known as the Battle of Durham.

Dun Tae (dun-tä) n. hill between Carlin Tooth and Carter Fell. It may be the ‘Dun’ listed among the highest hilles in Castleton Parish in 1839.

Dupligis (doo-pligz) n. place name listed as ‘Duplicis’ among the farms and towers that were burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. Durie (joo-ree) n. Andrew (d.1558) son of John of Durie in Fife, and brother of George, who was Archbishop of St. Andrews. He became Bishop of Galloway and Abbot of Melrose, under very dubious circumstances, it is said. He is meant to have been a very poor Abbot. In 1524 he was recorded as Postulate of the Abbey when he re-granted Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme the office of bailiary of the Abbey’s lands. In 1529 he witnessed the indenture to keep the peace between the Kerrs and the Scotts. He is said to have died of shock after Protestant rioters attacked St. Giles Cathedral. His shield bore the figure of Mary, together with a kneeling bishop, the arms of Durie and the words ‘S’ ANDREE ABBATIS DE MEL-ROS’ (also spelled ‘Dury’).

Durrough (du-roch) n. Mr. ?? (17th/18th C.) described as ‘dancing-master’ in the Hawick Parish records. He was in Hawick for part of 1715 and 1716, presumably teaching dance, and received a certificate for good deportment to carry to his next abode (possibly the same as ‘Durrow’ or ‘Darrow’, a family well-represented in Berwickshire).

Durstni (durs-nil) contr. dared not (also durstni).

dwinglt (dwing-ul) pp., arch. lingered, tarried – ‘A cood fain heh dwinglt, an daikert aboot in sleepery Bosells’ [ECS].

Dyce (dis) n. Isobel nee Gordon ‘Mem Dyce’ (1769/70–1859) wife of ‘Lang Tam’. She ran a school for girls in Hawick, and was apparently the first such teacher to insist on being called ‘Mem’, hence her nickname. She is said to have been a Catholic and died at an advanced age. Rev. Thomas ‘Lang Tam Dyce’ (b.1740) son of William, Rector of Hawick Grammar School. He was educated at St. Andrews University and became preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ in 1792. He also sometimes substituted at St. Mary’s. His nickname suggests that he must have been tall. He was described as ‘a man of some learning, talent, and a vast amount of eccentricity’. Several stories are told of him, e.g. on one occasion he set the congregation to sing the 179 verses of the 119th Psalm, saying to them ‘chow on that the now till A gaun throwe to Faulnesh for ma denner!’ On another occasion, impatient at shepherd’s dogs fighting in the church, he quipped ‘A’ll hev a shillin on the black yin!’ He is probably the minister of Teviothead who signed up for the Volunteers, although above the usual age. He apparently went insane (possibly around 1804 when Robert Shaw took over at Teviothead) and retired to Hawick, where he died. He got married in 1792; his wife Isobel, daughter of Alexander Gordon of Fochabers, was a Roman Catholic and died in Aberdeen in 1859 at the age of 90. William Norman Kennedy wrote an account of his life and character in the 1868 Transactions. His is probably the death recorded in 1809 in Hawick as ‘Mr. Dice son to Decd. Mr. Dice latin schoolmaster’. William (b.1706) father of Rev. Thomas. He was son of James in Belheric, Aberdeenshire. He was schoolmaster at Hawick Grammar School approximately 1746–73 (although differing dates are given). In 1751 he was one of 4 men appointed by the Hawick Session to deal with the affairs of the deceased Bailie Gideon Ruecastle. He is listed among the subscribers to the 1752 reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’. He witnessed a baptism for clockmaker Walter Freeman in 1758 and another for weaver John Elder in 1760. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for merchant William Turnbull and Katherine Dyce (who was probably his daughter). He is probably the William, married to Katherine Forbes, whose children baptised in Selkirk Parish included: Janet (b.1733); Isobel (b.1734); Katherine (b.1737); William (1739–44); and Thomas (b.1740). Based

don this, he may have been schoolmaster in Selkirk before moving to Hawick (also formerly ‘Dice’).

dydie (dl-dee) adj. dyed – ‘...deidy (dyed) paips ...’ [ECS] (also written ‘deidy’).

dydie-egg (dl-dee-eg) n. a dyed hard-boiled egg, especially one prepared for rolling down a hill at Easter – ‘...Golfers and sedgers and dydie-eggs’ [DH], ‘...’Shairy it must be time, now, To trinnle my dydie egg!’ [DH] ‘At Easter A’ve trinnled dydie eggs ...’ [IWL].

Dydie-egg Day (dl-dee-eg-dá) n. Easter Saturday, when ‘dydie-eggs’ were traditionally rolled.

dyein (dl-in) n. the process of dyeing fibres, particularly cotton or wool. The Hawick dyeing industry grew up in support of textile manufacturers. Turnbull the Dyers was an offshoot of the original Hawick Carpet Company, the dyeing department being started by Thomas Turnbull in the late 18th century and located where the Bridge Hotel is now. In the early 19th century there were 2 main businesses operating in town. John Turnbull & Sons became a large operation through much of the 19th and 20th centuries, with factories on Victoria Road and Slitrig Crescent, but went into liquidation in 2000.

dyester (dl-stur) n., arch. a dyer – ‘John and William Tomlins, dyesters in Reughheugh ...’ [BR], ‘Paid Thomas Turnbull, dyster, for dyeing and dressing officer’s clothes ...0 12 0’ [BR1757] (also written ‘dyster’).

dyke (dik) n. wall, especially a ‘dry-stane dyke’ on a farm, formerly referring to a turf or ditch boundary – ‘Item, whatsoever person that monds tp big ane stane dyck betwixt his nich-bour and him ...to big the hale dyck upon his neighbour’s ground that refuses, and to pay the hale expense thereof’ [BR1640], ‘...there was a fold dyke built on the Common by the possessors of Fenwick, which dyke was levelled by order of the Magistrates and rendered useless’ [C&L1767], ‘Auld Ringan stood against the dyke, And levell’d weel his gun’ [JTe], ‘Dinna sit clavierin’ Doon at the dyke’ [GWe], ‘The barns ...gaed lowpin an rinnin aboot deike an gers’ [ECS], ‘...bye seike an deike an waeter; bye burn an brig an haa’ [ECS], ‘He crawed and flappit ower the dyke ...’ [WFC], ‘...and a glimpse o yon auld battered dyke that rins at intervals up the hill’ [DH], v. to build a dyke (sometimes written ‘dike’ or ‘dyck’; the word appears in several place names, e.g. Dykeback, Dykecroft, Dykehead, Dykeneuk and Dykeraw).

the Dyke (thu-dik) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed between Killoley and Hietreis on the 1541 rental roll. The lands were valued at 10 shillings and the tenant were George and Edward Nixon. Thomas Nixon and ‘Fargathe Nixon’ were there in 1544. The precise location is uncertain (and is not Dykeraw, which is listed separately). The land of ‘Stellis, within the Dyk’ is also listed on the rental roll. This was probably the home of ‘Ekkie Nixson in Dyk’, recorded in 1611. In 1632 it is ‘Dyke’ when listed among Gavin Elliot’s lands in Liddesdale, along with Ower Heuchhoose, Nether Hightreis, Killof and Byrestead (suggesting it was somewhere near Saughtree).

dyke-back (dik-bawk) n. the back of a wall, used as an an epithet for something lowly – ‘I was a dyke-back gett: A bondager’s wean, Wi’ never ocht but the bothy-cat To ca my ain’ [DH].

Dykeback (dik-bak) n. former name for land beyond the splitting of the road at the Loanhead, lying between Longbaulk Road and Rosebank, and being separated into Easter Dykeback and Wester Dykeback. Presumably it was originally the back of the area known as Thorterdykes.

Dykeheads

Dykeheads (dik-heeds) n. Dykeheads, farm in the upper Rule valley, south of Wauchope farm. South-east of the farm, on the gentle slopes of Wauchope Rig, are the remains of a settlement, about 55 m by 50 m. Its interior contains the foundation of a small cottage, and it is recorded in 1892 that it was surrounded by a stone wall. The remains were once described as a ‘homestead moat’, but now seem more likely to be from the Iron Age, with a later cottage. Nearby there are also field boundaries and rig and furrow lines.

Dykenook (dik-nook) n. small loch, out past Stitches, near the side of the road between Stoulslie and Calaburn farm. It is known for its bird life, and also called Leahead Loch. There was formerly a farmstead there, where Robert and Isabella Scott lived in 1841 – ‘There’s Lockie o’ the Stinty Knowes, There’s Nicol o’ Dick-neuk, And Bryson o’ the Priestrig, And Hall into the Heap’ [DJG] (also spelled ‘Dykenook’ and variants).

Dyker (di-kur) n., arch. a person who makes dykes – ‘I am informed, that the old Session records of the parish of Hobkirk take notice of a female who was commonly known by the soubriquet of Bessy Loup-the-Dykes; and who is said to have been brought before the Session for having been guilty of dyke-loupin’ [JoJ].

Dykeraw Toor (dik-raw-toor) n. tower in Southdean Parish. It was burned by Dacre’s men in late 1513, ‘both roof and floor’, with Dacre adding in his correspondence ‘and so smoked them out’. It was burned again by the English in 1544. The remains can still be seen on the track leading towards Dykeraw farm, which is further to the south-east. The tower was oblong in shape. Part of the south-west side still exist, but not all of this is contemporary with the tower (it is ‘Dyker’ in 1513, ‘Dycray’ in 1544).

Dykers (diks) n. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Redford in 1646 and their children included Agnes (b.1653), Isobel (b.1656), Janet (b.1658) and Marion (b.1661). In 1658 his name is transcribed ‘Thomas’, but that is surely an error. This seems to be the only occurrence of this surname in the district (also written ‘Dickses’, ‘Dikes’, ‘Dyeke’ and ‘Dykes’).
the Dykes (θu-diks) n. farm in the Rule valley, just to the west of Bedrule and east of Spittal Tower. It may have previously been known as ‘Middle’ and ‘Holm’. It was farmed by Turnbulls in the late 17th and 18th centuries. William Murray was there in 1724 and James Murray in 1730. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. Thomas Turnbull is recorded as farmer there in 1797, Walter Cavers in 1841 and 1851 and William Veitch in the mid-19th century. It became part of the estate and Barony of Wells, despite being in the Parish of Cavers. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was ‘That part of the barony of Wells, called Dykes’, owned by William Elliot of Wells and valued at £214 10s. By the 1870s it was held by the trustees of the late Sir William F. Elliott of Stobs and Wells. ‘Dykes Moor Cottage’ was a small cottage there in the 19th century (also just ‘Dykes’; it is marked as ‘Dyks’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Dykes Burn (diks-burn) n. stream that rises on the north side of Ruberslaw and runs in a roughly northern direction, passing the Dykes, to join the Rule Water at Fastcastle.

Dykesmuir (diks-mewr) n. former farmstead in Cavers Parish, south of Dykes and just to the north-west of Blawearie. George Ordston and his family were there in 1851 (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Earl o Strathearn (e-rul-ô-straw-thern) n. title of Maurice Murray (or Moray), who was Baron of Hawick and Branxholme in the early 14th century.

the Earl o Tarras (θu-e-rul-ô-ta-ris) n. title often used for Walter Scott of Highchester and Harden.

Earlside (e-rul-ˌ, yu-rl-sîd) n. farm off the side road leading from near Cogsmill to Hawthornside, south of Hawick. It was among lands resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It was formerly part of the Cavers estate, having been acquired by Douglas of Cavers at least as early as 1511. In that year the ‘mains thereof’ are also mentioned, and these ‘dominicales earundem’ are still mentioned in 1687 and 1698. This is probably the place transcribed as ‘Yarsaye’ where Martin Crozier resided in 1544; he appears to have been a prominent member of the clan at that time. In 1574 this was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty for the crime of theft in tyne bigane’, this including ‘Cock’s Cleugh’ Crozier, his brothers John and Rowie, ‘Kate’s Adie’, ‘Kate’s Jock’, ‘Megat’s Adie’, Airchie and also ‘Mark’s Airchie’. James Douglas was ‘goodman of Yerlesyde’ in 1590. It was listed among the lands of Stobs purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. Adam Scott was tenant in 1641. James Stavert was tenant in 1682 and James Leyden in 1688. Part of the lands here were among those inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. In the 1694 Hearth Tax roll there is an entry for 3 hearths there. Thomas Douglas and Richard Main were there in 1708. Robert Douglas and Walter Nichol were there in 1726. John Lorrain was there in 1732 and Thomas Telfer in 1733. John Huggan was recorded as farmer there in 1749-97 and James Lunn as shepherd. It was farmed by Peter Amos in the early 19th century, followed by his sons Thomas and then Gilbert. There is a story of some mysterious fires being set there when the Amoses were tenants; the culprit could not be found and so they procured a savage dog, which they paraded through Hawick, then let it be known how a nephew of Mr. Amos narrowly escaped being savaged by the dog, after which there were no more fires. There was formerly a mill pond just to the north of the farm buildings. There is an ancient earthwork on the slopes of nearby White Hill (spelled ‘Yarlside’, ‘Yairlsid’). There were no more res. There was formerly a mill pond just to the north of the farm buildings.

Eastbank see East Bank

East Bank (eest-bawngk) n. former name for the area near where Trinity Church now stands, which formed the eastern extremity of the town boundary. This was the site of the East Bank Kirk, and the lower ground was once called the Wheathole.

East Bank House (eest-bawngk-hoos) n. Manse of East Bank Church, beside Trinity Gardens at the start of Bourtree Place. Once the building was turned over to secular use it became a shop, run by A. Kyle then Fred W. Robertson as a souvenir and art supplies shop in the early 20th century. It is now Hamish Smith’s jewellery shop, Nos. 2 and 4 Bourtree Place, and is a grade C listed building.

the East Bank Kirk (thu-eest-bawngk-kirk) n. church formerly built at the Wheathole, being the lower part of the current Trinity Gardens. It was originally erected in 1780 as the East End Meeting House of the East End Burgher Congregation, which had been founded in Hawick in 1773 by the ‘dissenting seceders’, and previous to that members of this congregation had travelled to Selkirk for services. The first minister was George Williamson, but he left after disagreements with his congregation, and it was 8 years before James Henderson was appointed. He significantly increased the numbers, placing the congregation on a firm footing. Many worshippers came from the neighbouring Parishes of Wilton, Cavers, Kirkton and Hobbirk. There were 673 members in 1806. From 1847 it became part of the United Presbyterian Church, and formed an offshoot in 1886, which became Wilton South Church. The original structure was an unpretentious, square, 2 storey building with an attached church hall. An adjacent manse was built in 1793. In 1837 a dispute over whether to build a manse for the assistant minister caused a schism in the congregation. The church was enlarged in 1877. Members of the Free Church worshipped there for about a year, before St. George’s was built. The old meeting house was converted for use as a private school for a few years (the forerunner of St. Mary’s and Trinity schools), and was last used by a joiner’s firm in the early 20th century. Photographs of it exist from the late 19th century. The present building was constructed in 1843 higher up than the original, was officially called the East Bank United Free Church, and later became part of the Church of Scotland again. In the 1890s a Church Hall was built to designs by J.P. Alison. In 1958 the church merged with the nearby congregations of St. Andrew’s and St. John’s to become Trinity Church. An entrance pillar from the former gates by the Horse was dumped in the Teviot at Mansfield, but rescued to form the base of the Frank Scott Memorial Seat on the Miller’s Knowes. The oldest existing communion token is marked ‘Rev. J.H. 1791’ and ‘Ass-o-c-Hk.’ on the other side. A history was written by Stewart Richmond Scott in 1923. A roll of the ministers is: George Williamson 1774–83; James Henderson 1791–1840; Adam Thomson 1833–60; James McEwen 1862–72; James Orr 1874–91; Charles Allan 1892–99; James Brand Scott 1900– .

the East Bleachin Green (tha-east-bleichin-green) n. former public drying green off the Loaning in Denholm. Comrades Hall was built on the lower part in the 1920s, while the upper part continued to have clothes poles until about 1960, when it was turned into a children’s playground.

East Boonraw (east-boon-raw) n. farm reached by taking the right hand road at the ‘Fower Road Ends’, just next to West Boonraw, on the Boonraw Burn. It probably corresponds to the location of the main farm of Boonraw. Robert Scott was farmer there in at least the period 1841–72 (see also West Boonraw).

East Buccleuch (east-bkleu-klee) n. farm in the Rankle Burn valley off the B711 and near West Buccleuch. This area gave its name to the Scotts of Buccleuch. The present house stands on the site of a much older manor house, near where the Clear Burn joins the Rankle Burn. This was probably the first local seat of the Scotts of Buccleuch (or ‘Rankilburn’, as it was originally). The modern farmhouse was built in 1832, during the construction of which the foundation walls of the castle were discovered (at the western end). The house incorporates a freestone door-rybat from the earlier mansion, as well as a stone above the door bearing the crescent moon of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is said that an old spur, a bridle bit and other relics were once dug up there. It is also said that when a fireplace was replaced in 1921 that the floor gave way, revealing the vault of the old house. The original ‘castle’ there was probably a fortified house and may have been ruined in an attack by the Routledges and accomplices in about 1490, although it has also been speculated that it was destroyed by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1544. There are nearby signs of possible other buildings and rig field systems. The farm also once contained the lands of Gairloch and Ropelawshiell. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it extended to 2265 acres, with the farmhouse in roughly the present location. The ‘East side of Buccleugh’ stock and teind was valued at about £1145 in 1785. David Park was tenant there until about 1800, when it was taken over by James Grieve of Branxholme Park (also sometimes ‘Easter Buccleuch’).

East Burnfit (east-burn-fi) n. East Burnfoot, former farmstead in the Ale valley, corresponding approximately with the modern Burnfit on Ale, with the ‘West’ farm actually to the south east. James Hart was tenant there in 1711 and Robert Riddell in 1721 (it is ‘eister burnfoot’ in 1688).

East Burn Park (east-burn-pawrk) n. name for the field on the Common to the east of West Burn Park and to the west of Williestruther cottage.

East Castle (east-kaw-sul) n. fortified house said to have been at the east end of Denhom village, so-called to distinguish it from Westgate Hall, at the other end of the village.
East Cavers (eest-kā-vurz) n. former farm on the Cavers estate, also known as Easter Cavers.

Eastcote (eest-kō) n. farmhouse just outside Hawick, about half-way between Weensland and Denholm, lying on the left between the A698 and the Teviot. It was formerly part of Cavers estate and is now the ‘Eastcote House Archery Centre’. William Douglas was there in 1733. John Johnston was farmer there in at least 1794–97 and Thomas Scott in 1841. Thomas Armstrong was farmer in the early 20th century. Aerial photography revealed the outlines of what appears to be a Roman temporary marching camp in the nearby fields. The name was used to distinguish it from West Cote and it is essentially the same as the earlier Little Cote (also spelled ‘East Cote’, ‘East Coat’ etc.; it is marked ‘Eastcot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

East Cote see Eastcote

eaestle (ees-tul) prep., arch. on the east of (also eassel).

the East End (thu-eest-end) n. former name for the area around the High Street, to distinguish it from the ‘West End’. This was the commercial part of Hawick, where the merchants etc. lived. The name came later to refer to the eastern boundary of Hawick, around where the Horse now is. In 1770 there were 96 houses there owned by Burgess, with a value of over £17,000. On the 1841 census it was used as an explicit address (also written ‘Eastend’).

the East End Kirk (thu-eest-end-kirk) n. the East End Church, also known as the East End Meeting House, the original name for what became known as the East Bank Church. The name distinguished it from the other Secessionist church, the West End (or Green) Kirk.

Easter Alemoor (ees-tur-āl-moor) n. farm beyond the dam at Alemoor Loch, on the Easter Burn, and actually to the north of the modern Wester Alemoor. It appears to have existed as a separate estate from at least the mid-16th century. David Armstrong ‘of Ailmure’, recorded in 1573, may be the first known owner. It was owned (along with Wester Alemoor) by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 17th century, but by the late 18th century was the property of Pringle of Haining. Alexander Pringle, a prominent Scottish Judge, became ‘Lord Alemoor’. The farm was in Selkirk Parish until incorporated into Roberton in 1689. William Lamb was there in 1714, Walter Scott in 1716, James Govenlock in 1715, Walter Scott in 1716, George Sinton in 1720, William Scott in 1725, James Anderson in 1753, John Storie in 1757 and James Grieve in 1765. John Pringle of Clifton paid the Land Tax of £308 there in 1785 and Mark Pringle in 1802. There are signs of rig and furrow cultivation nearby and former buildings to the north-west (it is ‘Easter Ealnuir’ in 1725; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Easter Barnhills (ees-tur-barn-hilz) n. former name for part of the lands of Barnhills. It was sold by John Turnbull of Barnhills to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1613. In 1678 it was combined with Wester Barnhills when both were owned by Sir William Bennet. By 1788 the lands were valued at about £450 and held by the Miss Stewarts.

Easter Boonraw (ees-tur-boon-raw) n. another name for East Boonraw.

Easter Broadlee (ees-tur-bro’d-lee) n. formerly part of the farm of Broadlee. In 1650 the ‘communicants’ recorded there were John Hope, Helen Scott, Margaret Martin, Janet Hutton, Walter Martin and Helen Scott.

Easter Buccleuch see East Buccleuch

Easter Burnfit (ees-tur-burn-‘fit) n. former farm bordering on Midshiels and Appletreehall, all tenanted farms of the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the late 17th century. It was part of the lands of Burnfoot, distinct from Wester Burnfoot. The mill there is recorded from 1574, when William Scott ‘in Harden’ and James Scott ‘in Quhit-sla’id paid back Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside for a loan on the lands. James Shiell was living there in 1682. Robert Wright was a shoemaker there in 1690. The residents there in 1694 were Alexander ‘Hymers’ and Robert Wright. There is still mention of ‘easter Burnfoot mylne’ in 1718 and in the survey of Buccleuch properties in that year it was not owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, unlike the adjacent Wester lands. Robert Riddell was recorded there 1721–29, Alexander Moore in 1723, Walter Riddell in 1725 and James Scott in 1733–35 (it is ‘Easter Burnfoot’ in 1694 and ‘E: burnfoot’ in 1725).

Easter Cavers (ees-tur-kā-vurz) n. former farm on Cavers estate, also known as East Cavers’. John Miller and William Nichol are listed there in 1694. Walter Lorraine was there in 1714. It is possible it was the same as Little Cavers.

Easter Clarilaw (ees-tur-klā-ree-law) n. former name for the eastern half of Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. It was included in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it covered 146 acres and was bounded by Midshiels, Wester Clarilaw and Hassendean Common.
Easter Clerklands

It was also stated that 6 acres of land belonging to Wester Clarilaw were mixed with it, while one acre mixed with Wester Clarilaw belonged to it.

Easter Clerklands (ees-tur-klerrk-lindz) n. former name for part of the Clerklands.

Easter Common Haugh (ees-tur-ko-min-hawf) n. former name for the Wee Haugh, including the extended area now occupied by Teviot Crescent.

Easter Craik (ees-tur-kräk) n. formerly half of the lands of Craik. In 1548/9 these lands were granted by Mary, Queen of Scots, to Sir Walter Scott and his wife Janet Betoun, having been forfeited by John Cockburn of Ormiston. The lands were re-granted to John Cockburn by James, Earl of Bothwell in 1567. It was inherited by Simon Scott in Newton in 1618, from his brother Walter. It is probably the ‘Easter Craig’ listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch according to the 1653 and 1661 services of heirs and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The lands were also described as having a mill (it is ‘Eistir Craik’ in 1548/9, ‘Eister Craik’ in 1567 and ‘Eister Craig’ in 1661).

Easter Dykeback (ees-tur-dik-bak) n. former name for land lying on the north side of Rosebank Road, probably once part of the area known as Thorterdykes, and distinguished from Wester Dykeback, which lay further to the south-west.

Easter Essenside (ees-tur-e-sin-sid) n. farm west of Ashkirk, adjacent to Wester Essenside. It was part of the estate of the Scotts of Headshaw in the late 16th century. In 1643 it was owned by Francis Scott of Synton and valued at £200, with the teinds being valued at £60. There were 6 tenants listed there on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. James Nichol was there in 1710. The Shortreeds were there in the 18th century, with James Shortreed being the owner in 1759. In 1778 it was purchased by John Elliot, younger son of the 2nd Lord Minto (who would become an Admiral and settle at Monteviot); when he died in 1808 it passed to his nephew, the next Lord Minto. In 1788 it was valued at £365 (and had a value of 10s more in 1811). In 1820 it may have been sold to Miss Ann Carnegie (perhaps a relative of the Elliots by marriage). John Scott was farmer there in 1789–97. It was farmed in the 19th century by John Douglas (father of Baille James) and his son, who was also John. 2 small bronze axe-heads (or ‘celts’) were discovered on the farm, in 1882 and in 1887, as well as a bronze armlit, possibly loaned to the National Museum of Antiquities by Tom Scott.

Easter Hassendean

Easter Fodderlee (ees-tur-fo-dur-lee) n. alternative name for East Fodderlee.

Easter Grundistone (ees-tur-grun-dee-stin) n. former house and farm, which was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 16th century, situated near Grundistone. ‘Robert Scot of Eastergrundiston, brother-son to Robert Scot of Headshaw’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. George Scott was there in at least 1682–88. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. George Scott and Robert Stewart were there in 1694, with William Bell as shepherd and James Young there among the poor of the Parish. William Miller was there in 1711. In the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties it covered 371 acres, bounded by Hassendean, Newton, Boonraw, Wester Grundistone and Synton. A stream separated it from Wester Grundistone, and in 1718 farmhouses are shown on either side of this stream. The small farmstead of Boghall was also included within its limits. John Armstrong was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘Easter Grundiston’ in 1643, ‘eister groundiston’ in 1688 and ‘Easter Groundiestone’ in 1718).

Easter Hassendean (ees-tur-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for the eastern half barony of Hassendean, the name being used from at least the 15th century to refer to the part with barons being the Cunninghams. This is distinct from the western part, which included some of the northern Borthwick valley. In 1510/1 the lands were granted to David, son of James Scott of Hassendean. In 1514 Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glancarn grant the lands to Elizabeth Cunningham, widow of John, Lord Hay of Yester. And in a charter of 1529, John, Lord Hay of Yester takes possession of the ‘ten merkis landis of ald extent’ of ‘estir hassindane’, previously belonging to his grandmother Elizabeth Cunningham. This was confirmed to the Hays of Yester in 1617, when the daughters and heirs of another John, Lord Hay of Yester dispossed the lands to him. Although the Cunninghams and Hays held the superiority, the lands were possessed by the Scotts of Hassendean, with a confirmation to William Scott of Hassendean in 1532. In 1606 Walter Scott of Alton was served as heir to his grandfather Robert in half the lands of ‘orientalium de Hassinden’ with the mill there. The lands, including ‘the toure, fortalice, and mylne thairof’ were listed among the possessions of the Scotts.
Easter Heap

of Buccleuch in 1661 and 1663 (it is ‘Eister Hassindene’ in 1514, ‘Estir Hassindene’ in 1532 and ‘Easter Hassindean’ in 1663).

Easter Heap (ees-tur-heep) n. former name for an estate roughly corresponding to the modern Silverbuthall, and being part of ‘the Heaps’. In 1635/6 James Waugh was served heir to the lands there belonging to his grandfather, John Waugh ‘de Heip’; this was explicitly land valued at 5 merks. In a 1650 list of ‘communicants’ there are 39 people listed on the estate, namely (using modern spellings) Adam Welsh, Margaret Davidson, Marion Waugh, Janet Percival, Margaret Sheen, John Percival, Walter Scott, Bessie Scott, James Aitchison, Gavin Elliot, Janet Percival, Robert Easton, James Easton, Margaret Fletcher, William Easton, Isobel Fowler, John Scott, James Scott, James Stevenson, Bessie Easton, Bessie Stewart, William Easton, Janet Gray, Helen Johnstone, James Stewart, Agnes Scott, Patrick Lorraine, William Lorraine, Marion Rule, Robert Scott, Margaret Percival, Robert Aitkin, James Aitkin, David Aitkin, Bessie Brydon, Adam Aitchison, Robert Mitchell, James Learmonth and Isobel White. In 1788 it was ‘Easterheap or Silverbuthall’ when valued at £80 and owned by James Scott. The 1808 will of William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’ mentions ‘Easter Heap or Heip now commonly called Silverboothall’. ‘Three Inclosures and Stackyard, part of Easter Heap, or Silverbuthall, formerly belonging to James Scott, and possessed by Robert Smith, acquired from James and Walter Knox’ are listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, with the owner being Archibald Dunlop of Whitmoor and the value being £13 (also spelled ‘Heip’ or ‘Hepe’; it is ‘Eister Heip’ in 1636 and ‘Eister heape’ on a parish map of 1650).

Easter Hermiston (ees-tur-her-mis-tin) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were owned by Andrew Scott and William Johnstone, both valued at £130, along with teinds valued at £51 10s 2d. John Scott of Syn- ton and John Johnstone owned the lands in 1678 and they were combined with Wester Hermiston by 1743. They were all owned by William Govan in 1788.

Easter Highchesters see East Highchesters

Easter Hill (ees-tur-hil) n. hill just south of the western part of Alemoor Loch, reaching a height of 344 m.

Easter Parkhill

Easter Hislop (ees-tur-hiz-lop) n. former part of the farm of Hislop, mentioned in the 16th century and early 17th century (it is ‘Eister Heislohp’ in 1572 and ‘Eister Heissilhoip’ in 1615).

Easter Hoose (ees-tur-hoos) n. house in Robertson that used to be the local manse.

Easter Howlands (ees-tur-how-linds) n. old name for the area that was later called Dovemount (mentioned as early as 1511), making up a large part of Wilton east of Roughheugh, or today east of Wilton Crescent and Stirches Road. Note that the name does not signify that it is east of Howlands, but rather that it is the eastern lands (of the Langlands estate) which lie in the hollow. A 1726 charter granted Easter Howlands to William and Charles Tudhope, then it passed to John and William Sharp of Maxside in 1763 and George Haliburton in 1770, by which time it was known as Dovemount and subsequently parcelled off.

Easter Kirkstile (ees-tur-kirk-stil) n. former name for the Kirkstile.

Easter Langbaulk (ees-tur-lum-bawk) n. former farm on the ‘Lumback’ road. Archibald Scott was farmer there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

Easter Lees (ees-tur-leez) n. ??.

Easter Lilliesleaf (ees-tur-li-leez-leaf) n. farm near Lilliesleaf. The mill, lands and town of ‘Easter Lillislie’ were listed in the service of heirs for Sir John Riddell in 1669. The farmer there in 1851 and 1861 was George Alexander.

Easter Loch (ees-tur-loch) n. name. sometimes used for Branxholme Easter loch eastermaist (ees-tur-mäst, -mest) adj. arch. furthest east (variant of eastmaist, also written ‘eastern’est’).

Easter Mertin’s Hill (ees-tur-mer’-inz-hil) n. hill to the north of Crumhaugh Hill farm. It was the location for a view of Hawick painted by Andrew Richardson about 1835.

Easter Middle see East Middle

Easter Moormaw see Moormaw

Eastern Star (ees-tern-stawr) n. the Order of the Eastern Star, effectively a women’s version of the Masons, although men can also be members. The Hawick branch started in 1911 and closed in 2002, being the last one in the Borders. The leaders were called Worthy Matron and Worthy Patron, and were typically appointed for 2 years.

Easter Parkhill (ees-tur-pawrk-hil) n. former name for a farm in the southern Bortwick valley, adjacent to Easter Park Hill. The former farm of Parkhill was at some point split into west and east parts. Andrew Chisholme paid the land tax there in 1678, when it was valued at £100. John Hume was recorded there in 1717 and Walter Scott in Easter Perk Hill

1718. John Scoon was recorded as farmer in 1797, James Aitkin in 1800 and William Miller in 1819. In the 1788 county valuation (and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued at £100. In about 1874 it (as well as Easter Parkhill) is recorded being owned by William Richardson Dickson of Alton (see also Parkhill).

Easter Perk Hill (ees-tur-perk-hil) n. Easter Parkhill, hill in the southern Borthwick valley, south of Roberton village, reaching a height of 295 m, and with a peak to the north-west reaching 276 m. Nearby was the farm of Easter Parkhill.

Easter Sike (ees-tur-sik) n. small stream that rises on Saughtree Fell and runs roughly south-easterly to join Dawston Burn to the north of Ashtree Cottage.

Easter Swanshiel (ees-tur-swansheel) n. former part of the farm of Swanshiel in Hobkirk Parish. It was situated on a promontory jutting into the Swanshiel Cleugh. In 1643 it was the larger part of Swanshiel, and valued at £66 13s. 4d. It was owned by a branch of the Turnbulls, then acquired by the Grieves of Easter Swanshiel in the early 18th century, before being sold and annexed to Wolfelee. Adam Turnbull was there in about 1663, when it was still valued at £66 13s 4d. James Turnbull was there in 1694. The last occupant of the steadings there was a pauper by the name of Loraine. By 1788 it was owned by Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and still owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 (it is ‘eister Swanshell’ in 1663 and ‘Easter Swansheall’ in 1694).

Easter Toll (ees-tur-tal) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses, a plaque marks the site on Bourtree Place near the Conservative Club. The toll house is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. George Grieve was tollkeeper in 1841.

Easter Weens (ees-tur-weenz) n. former stables on the Weens estate, located north of the main house.

Easter Wells (ees-tur-welz) n. former name for farm that was part of the Wells estate in Rulewater, distinct from Wester Wells.

Easter Whitehaugh (ees-tur-whi’-uf) n. former name for the lands also known as Wester Heap.

Easter Winds (ees-tur-winda) n. former name for lands somewhere near Dryden, Commonside etc. Distinct from ‘Wester Winds’, this may have been an early form of ‘Weensland’. It is listed in 1686 among lands tenanted by Robert Grieve in Commonside in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch.

Eastfield Mills (eest-feeld-milz) n. main premises of Blenkhorn Richardson & Co. Ltd. on Mansfield Road, opposite the footbridge. The main building, along with an engine room and a huge single-storey weaving shed, was erected in 1882/3 by Bell & Hill, Builders, with Melrose’s planning most of the engineering. The frontage is in the style of a French Renaissance chateau. The main warehouse, fronting the Teviot, was 120 feet long, with free-stone from Woodburn Quarry. It was extended in 1886 to incorporate the spinning of worsted yarn, with the addition of 2 extra 2-storey structures, as well as a matching gatehouse. There was further expansion in the period 1895–1921, with enlargement of the weaving sheds and an additional office block on Rossevale Street. The mill carried on through troubled times, until it sounded its whistle for the last time in 1976. Since 1981 it has been home to a knitwear mill for Johnstons of Elgin. The large octagonal chimney, spinning sheds and engine house were all demolished. The mill is a grade B listed building. There is a piece of film of workers leaving the factory in 1909/10.

Eastfield Road (eest-feeld-ro’d) n. built in 1962 in an area where Waverley Mills and part of Blenkhorn and Richardson’s, Eastfield Mills had been. Some of the council flats there were demolished in 1998.

East Fodderlee (eest-fo-dur-lee) n. eastern part of the lands of Fodderlee in the lower Rule valley, lying east of West Fodderlee, and also Old Fodderlee. It was also known as ‘Easter Fodderlee’. Near the bend in the road to the south are Easter Fodderlee Cottages, and a little further south is Easter Fodderlee March Wood. The owner in 1707 was Mary Kerr, when the value was £80. The lands were disposed by James Thomson to William Riddell in 1784 and then granted to John Thomson 3 years later. However, the lands are recorded being owned by George Thomson in 1788, and still in 1811 (so there may be some confusion with names). John sold them to Thomas Gregson in 1802, who sold them to Charles Kerr of Abbotrule 4 years after that. Kerr sold them to William Walker in 1815, and they passed to Walker’s nephew James in 1832. However, in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls the farm is recorded being owned by George Thomson and valued at £80. In 1864 the farm was purchased by Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs, who had plans to encourage the railway to pass through the land. James Fairbairn was farmer there in 1861 and his widow was recorded as farmer in 1868. The farm was bought by John Usher of Norton and Wells in 1895. There was probably a small threshing mill here, powered by water from a pond. A polished stone axe found there is in the Museum (formerly written ‘Fotherlie’ and variants; see also Fodderlee).

Eastgate (eest-ga’) n. street running through the middle of Denholm, being part of the A698. It is also known as Main Street.

Eastgate House (eest-ga’-hoo) n. house on the Loaning in Denholm. It was the home of the local master joiner around 1900.

East Highchesters (eest-hl-ches-turz) n. former name for a smaller part of the main Highchesters estate, distinguished from West Highchesters. There were 9 ‘communicants’ there in 1650, namely John White, Bessie Allan, Adam Noble, George Heatlie, Janet Adam, John Gavin, Robert Renwick, Helen Napier and James Scott. It was within Wilton Parish until the Parish of Robertson was formed in 1689/90. It was probably the farm within Wilton Parish owned by Robert Scott of Glack in 1678. In 1694 there were 5 separate householders recorded there. John Wilson was there in 1714–20. John Hume was there in 1736 and John Scott in 1742. It was purchased from Elliot of Fenwick by the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1756. George Hart was farmer there in 1797. In 1788 and 1811 it was part of the Buccleuch estates and valued at £130 (also called ‘Easter Highchesters’, it is ‘Easterhaychasters’ in 1694 and ‘Easter Heichester’ in 1718).

East Hill (eest-hil) n. hill just to the south-east of the Note o the Gate. It reaches over 420 m (it is marked ‘Easter Hill’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Easthope (eest-hop) n. John (d.c.1899) son of a soldier, his widowed mother and sister came to the Hawick area, where they slept in the barn at Branxholme Braes. The mother died overnight and the children were taken charge of by Mr. Grieve, then raised by Nancy Ewart. He attended school in Newmill, was apprenticed as a stone mason, and taught the herds’ children at Penchrise, later starting a school in Hawick. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as a teacher on the Back Row, but it was also said that his private school was on the Mid Row. He wrote some articles for the Kelso Chronicle, which helped secure him a Civil Service job in London, where he rose to a high position.

eastin (ees-tin) adj., poet. east, eastern (noted by J. Leyden).

East Mains

Eastla (eest-la, ees-la) adj., n., arch. the eastern part of Hawick, as opposed to the ‘Wesla’, i.e. the part to the East of the Slitrig, also known as ‘Eastla Water’. The rivalry between the two parts of town used to be quite strong, with, for example, competing bonfires at the ‘King’s Ranting’ in the 18th century, and a tradition for the Cornet to be elected from alternate sides. In the 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson) there used to be gangs from each side, made of youths under about 16 years old, which formed ‘regiments’ with drums, flags, halberds, clubs and even swords. They would battle in the 2 or 3 weeks before and after ‘Fastern’s Eve’ (the time of the ‘Baa’ game), when injuries were common. They also used to have competing bonfires on July 4th, with material collected over the preceding month, and regular raids on each other’s store of fuel. The rivalry survived into the Baa game of the 19th and early 20th centuries – ‘...a total of 86 deaths ...34 were in Eastla water, and 52 in Westla water’ [JE] (cf. easla.

Eastla Witter see Eastla

Eastlea Drive (eest-lee-driv) n. street in Denholm, off the main road after the Ashloaning, with construction began in the 1930s and finished after WWII. The local police station was on the corner with the Jedburgh road until it closed in 1971.

East Langlands Ludge (eest-lawng-lindz-huj, -loj) n. former gatehouse for Langlands House, now a separate dwelling, situated on Sunnyhill Road. It is dated 1880 and has picturesque detailing, including deep overhanging eaves. It was probably designed by the Edinburgh firm Kimber & Peddie. It is a grade C listed building.

East Lees (eest-leez) n. former farm adjacent to West Lees, between Newton and Appletreehall. James Cranston was farmer there in the mid-19th century (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

East Mains (eest-manz) n. former name for a set of lands to the east of Hawick, distinct from West Mains. The boundaries probably changed over time, but it consisted of essentially all the land to the east of the Burgh. Together these were originally part of the ‘demesne’ lands of the Baron. The detailed outline is shown in a survey of the lands held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718. At that time it consisted of 572 acres, bounded by the Slitrig, Meikle Whitlaw, Hammelkowes, Weensland and the eastern limits of the Burgh; the enclave of Hilliesland and some smaller portions of lands were not included and the land was described as ‘corn land which is indifferent good, but it lyeth very inconvenient by reason that there is so many hills and valleys in it’. A great deal of what is currently the eastern part of the town (including the Terraces, the Welvogate, Slitrig Crescent, etc.) was once part of these lands. Over time various parts were sold to the Burgh and other landowners, or incorporated into neighbouring farms, so that eventually the name ‘East Mains’ ceased to be used. There was a court case of 1437 where William Douglas of Drumlanrig recovered part of these lands from Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains. The lands of ‘Est Manys of the Kirktoun’ recorded in 1470 are probably the same as Kirkton Mains, and not the East Mains of Hawick. These are probably the ‘easter dominical lands’ which James Douglas, together with his wife, held in 1484 before he inherited the Barony of Hawick. They are listed as part of the lands held ‘in property’ by the Baron in the 1511 charter. Part of these lands are referred to as being to the north of the Trinitylands in a charter of 1557 (assuming that ‘Vest manis de Hawik’ is meant for ‘East Mains’). The lands were included in the Baron’s property in a promise of infiefment in 1559, the return of 1572 and in the Parliamentary ratification for Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1594. It was listed among the lands of the Earl of Queensberry in Hawick Parish on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, valued at £1120. The lands were described as having a mill, although it is unclear where this was simply Hawick Mill, or referred to another, perhaps on the Slitrig, would have been, and whether on the Teviot or Slitrig. In 1630 Drumlanrig gave a quarter of the lands to Thomas Lidderdale of the Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire). They are described as ‘extending to 19¾ husband lands’ in 1675. In 1684 a piece of land called Crumptlands Croft, within East Mains, was sold by Patrick Cunningham to Alexander Hislop. In the 1686 ratification of the Barony to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch it is listed first (supporting the idea of this as part of the demesne lands) as being ‘nineteen husband lands and three fourth parts’. Rentals for the lands are included in the Buccleuch archives from 1690. However, it appears that some of the lands were purchased in the 1740s by the Duke of Buccleuch from John Scott and Thomas Turnbull (ex-Bailies of Hawick) and Patrick Cunningham. Improvements to the lands are mentioned in 1764. The lands of Crowbyreshaugh are recorded in a dispute of 1822 as being part of East Mains (it is ‘Est Manys’ in 1511 and 1514, ‘Eist Manis’ in 1514 and 1559, ‘lie Eist-manis’ in 1565/6, ‘Eist Manis’ in 1572, ‘Eist Manys’ in 1594, ‘Eist Maynes’ in 1615 and ‘East Maynes’ in 1686).

East Mains (eest-mânz) n. former name for a farm in Cavers Parish. It was presumably to the east of West Mains, and once formed part of the demesne lands of the Baron. James Douglas was there in 1716.

East Mains (eest-mânz) n. former name for Knowetoonheid in Hassendean. It is referred to by this name in a ‘letter of reversion’ by Walter Turnbull, when it was assigned to the new Baron of Hassendean, Alexander, Lord Home in 1493/4 (and hence was originally the ‘home farm’ for the Baron). The name distinguished it from ‘Middle Mains’, which was also referred to in early times as part of Hassendean.

the East Mairch (thu-eest-mårch) n. the East Marches of Scotland coincided with the area known as the Merse, with wardenship often held by the Home family. It was also more or less the same thing as the Sheriffdom of Berwick. The English East March, more or less Northumberland, often had wardenship by the Percy’s.

eastmaist (eest-mâist) adj., arch. furthest east (also eastermaist).

East Middle (eest-mi-dul) n. farm by the Honey Burn, east of Cavers. The name distinguishes it from West Middle. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers, but in the Parish of Kirkton. It was owned by Douglas of Cavers in the 1643 and 1678 valuations. Andrew and William Douglas were there in the 1680s. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. It was farmed by James Turnbull in 1785, Thomas Blyth in 1797 and by the Turnbulls in the 19th century (it is ‘Easter Midle’ in 1685; it is marked ‘Easter Middle’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Easter Middles’ in 1797).

Easton (ees-tin) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Greensidehall. His son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. Margaret (b.1715) may also be his child. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Overhall in 1723 and 1725. He married Mary Turnbull and their children included: Anna (b.1720); Jean (b.1723); Beatrix (b.1725); Agnes (b.1728); Gideon (b.1731); and William (b.1734). The witnesses in 1723 were William and Robert Easton (possibly his father and brother) and in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He may be the Adam who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for Robert Wilson and in 1729 for Adam Wright in Dean Mill. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, perhaps living at Wiltonburn. He married Isabel Renwick and their children included: Agnes (b.1770); and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas (perhaps his father) and Thomas Hoy. He could be the Adam who (along with George) was recorded owning part of Roughheugh in 1788 (valued at £11 8s 8d), and still recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Oxnam Parish. In 1791 he married Isobel Helm, who was from Cavers. Adam (b.1783) son of Andrew and Margaret Kedie, he was farmer at Overhall. In 1851 he was farming 62 acres and in 1861 he was a widower farming 60 acres. In 1814 he married Janet, daughter of John Michie from Old Northhouse. Their children included: Isabella (b.1815); Margaret (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); William (b.1821); Robert (b.1824); John (b.1826); George (b.1828); Christian (b.1830); and Helen (b.1833).

Agnes (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who received poor money from the Session in 1706. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Twislehope in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He is probably the shepherd at Broadleehope listed among heads of households in 1835-37 and Broadlee 1838-40. He may be the Alexander, married to Jean Kyle (daughter of Andrew Kyle and Jean Murray), whose children, born in Castleton Parish, included: William (b.1822); Andrew (b.1824); Jane (b.1826), who married Walter Gledstains; Alex (b.1828); Robert (b.1834); James (b.1835); Isabel (b.1836); and Elizabeth (b.1838). This family emigrated to Ontario, Canada in 1840. He left around the same time as the other Alexander, who was surely related.

Alexander (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1836, when he was at Whithaugh. He was at Bellshiels in 1838 and 1840, and emigrated to America about that time. He was surely related to the other shepherd Alexander. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He could be the Andrew, married to Helen Swan, whose son Stephen was born in 1671. Andrew (18th C.) mason in Hawick. The death of one is his children is recorded in 1782. He could be the Andrew who married Margaret Kedzie in 1771, with children including Robert (b.1773), George (b.1775), Thomas (b.1777), Agnes (b.1779), an unnamed child (b.1782), Adam (b.1783), Christian (b.1786) and Andrew (b.1789). Andrew (1743–1820s) tenant farmer at Overhall, son of Robert and Christian Murray. He was recorded as farmer at Overhall in 1797, with Thomas also listed there. He owned some property in Edinburg and would go there for a couple of days a year to collect the rent. On one such occasion he returned early to find his daughter Christian holding a party. Being a strict and disapproving man, he said nothing until leaving the next time, when he told her ‘Kirsten, if you’re going to again have a party, you’d better have it a day earlier’, and so no party was held again. In 1771 he married Mary (or Margaret) Kedzie, who died in 1809, aged 63. Their children included: Robert (b.1773), who became a minister in Montreal; an unnamed child (b.1782); Adam (b.1783); Christian (b.1786); and Andrew (b.1789). It is said that his wife was excommunicated from East Bank Kirk for attending the service of a minister she knew who was preaching at a neighbouring church, and so the family moved to the Green (Anti-Burgher) Kirk. Andrew (b.1805/6) born in Robertson Parish, son of George. He was farmer at Easter Alemoor and then Todrig. He was farmer at Alemoor, according to an electoral roll of 1837. In 1841 he was at Easter Alemoor. In 1851 he was at Todrig, farming 1376 acres, 46 of which were arable and in 1861 he was farming 1400 acres and employing 3 labourers. His wife was Isabella. Francis (1758/9–1829) gardener in Hawick. He was probably son of Overhall farmer Thomas (since they were recorded on the same headstone). He is probably the Francis who was recorded as a gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, as well as at Robertson (for the minister James Erskine) in 1779. He may be the same Francis who was gardener at Stobs in 1794 and 1797. He married Elizabeth Ormiston, who died in Hawick in 1833, aged 53. George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He came right after William, to whom he was presumably related. Perhaps the same George was married to Bessie Murray and had a son William baptised in Ashkirk in 1705. George (17th/18th C.) servant to William Henderson in Clarilaw. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Margaret (b.1702); and Helen (b.1709). George (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787. George (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of part of Roughheugh, along with Adam. They were still recorded as owners on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to Adam, or the other Eastons. George (1785–1875) born at Upper Glendivian in the Ewes valley. He was recorded as a roadman at Glendivian in the 1841 census. He moved to Edinburgh and became an agent of the Scottish Temperance League, who talked all over Scotland about abstinence and sobriety. In 1834 he married Mary Hetherington. Their children included: James, Douglas and Margaret. His autobiography was published in 1869. George (b.c.1810) son of William. He was a hairdresser in Hawick, who was an early Trustee and deacon of St. George’s Kirk. On the 1861 census he is listed at 1 High Street. He married Elizabeth Jane (b.c.1828), daughter of William Scott, and sister of Sir James A.H. Murray’s first wife. Their children included: William, local song-writer; Robina Ann; James D.; and Elizabeth D. George (b.c.1775) farmer at Easter Alemoor. He was there in 1841 with his son Andrew. He is probably the resident at Borthwickshiels who subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He married Elizabeth Brack and their children included: Andrew (b.1805); George (b.1809); and Margaret (b.c.1810). George (19th C.) farmer at Fenwick, recorded on the 1834 electoral roll as a tenant, with lands acquired from William Turnbull of Fenwick. Gideon (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1765 he witnessed a baptism for Gideon Scott in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Irvine in Hawick in 1763 and their children included: Margaret (b.1766); Elizabeth (b.1768); and Janet (b.1771). Witnesses to the 1766 baptism were butcher Thomas Waugh and smith Robert Telfer. He could be the Gideon, son of Adam and Mary Turnbull, born in Wilton in 1731. He may have earlier married Margaret Laidlaw in 1758. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at West Burnfoot in 1722 and Alton in 1729. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: John (b.1714); Jean (b.1716); Helen (b.1719); Robert (b.1722); and Adam (b.1729). The witnesses in 1722 were William and Walter Scott (who may have been related to his wife) and in 1729 were James Dryden and Thomas Irvine. He could be the James recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Heap in 1725. He married Isobel Aitken (probably in 1714, although no wife’s name is given) and their children included: Anne (b.1716); Isobel (b.1720); Agnes (b.1723); and Robert (b.1725). He is probably the James who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism in 1725 for James Smith, also resident at Heap. James (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Geamscleugh’ (i.e. Gamescleuch) in Ettrick Parish in 1716 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the William who married Helen Stavert in Roberton in 1716. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Scott and their son James was baptised in 1764, with witnesses John Anderson and James Hogg. James (1739/40–95) tenant at Broom, which must have been in Rulewater or nearby. He was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard, along with his son William and an unnamed daughter. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the James who owned land in Lilliesleaf in 1788 (still recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £26 13s 4d, which was among those owned by Sprot of Riddell in about 1874. James (18th/19th C.) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (18th/19th C.) listed as a wright in Wilton on Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the James born to Andrew and Margaret Kedie in Wilton in 1782. John (17th C.) tenant at Salenside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Drinkstone in 1698 when his daughter Helen was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Scott in Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Tandlaw. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694, distinct from the James in Salenside. One of them is probably the John who married Janet Easton and had children George (b.1699), Isobel (b.1702), William (b.1704), John (b.1707), Thomas (b.1709) and Robert (b.1715), all baptised in Ashkirk. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Leith-head and their children included Janet (b.1706) and Agnes (b.1709). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Galalaw in 1723. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Veitch in Galalaw. He married Isobel Larnmtoh and their children included John (b.1718), Isobel (b.1720), Margaret (b.1723) and Agnes (b.1726). William (b.1715), with no mother’s name given, may also be his child. The witnesses in 1723 were Robert Taylor and John Scott. John (18th C.) from the Damside family. He married Euphan Douglas. Their daughter Rachel married Merrylaw farmer William Goodfellow in 1773. The 84 year old Euphan who was recorded as ‘Independent’ on Underdamside in 1841 could be his daughter. John (18th C.) barber in Hawick. The death of his wife (name not given) is recorded in 1805. John (18th/19th C.) wright on Damside, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the John who married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton in 1797. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be the Robert who married Isobel and had a son James (b.1690), with witnesses Robert Scott and John . . . He may also be the Robert who married Margaret Henderson and had a daughter Margaret (b.1698). Robert (17th C.) tenant in Teindside. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, but some of the dates were unreadable. Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Todshaw’ in 1696 when he leased the lands of Todshaw for 5 years from Gideon Scott of Highchester. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Anna ‘Kair’ in Wilton in 1708. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes ‘Steward’ and their children included Robert (b.1708). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Cavers and their children included Robert (b.1717) and William (b.1719). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Greensidehall in 1725. He may be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1722 (along with William) for Thomas Liddell, in 1723 (along with William) for Adam Easton and in 1733 for William Goodfellow. He married Margaret Scott, the marriage probably being the one recorded in 1715 (with no wife’s name given). Their children included Anna (b.1725) and Isobel (b.1728). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He may be the Robert who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for James Smith in Wilton in 1722 (along with James) for Thomas Smith and John Smith, both of the family, who died in Edinburgh, aged 84; James (1763); and James (again, b.1765). The witnesses in 1763 were cooper Alexander Scott and church officer Alexander Bunyan. Elizabeth (b.1760), with no mother’s name given, was probably also his child. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish, his children included: Adam (b.1767); and William (b.1768). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dickson and their children included Helen (b.1771). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Tibby was baptised in 1773. Robert (1749–1823) land surveyor of Jedburgh, only son of William of Rankend and Isobel Bridges of Maxton. He was said to be a ‘self taught student of natural science, chiefly astronomy and mathematics’. He married Mary, elder daughter of George Douglas (from the Timpendean family), tenant of Howden, and Agnes Oliver from Dykeraw. His wife survived ‘nearly all their family’. Their children were: William, who died in childhood; Jane, who died young; Betty, also died young; Agnes (1784–1856), who died unmarried; Isabella, who married William Mattewson and died in Greenlaw; Mary, last of the family, who died in Edinburgh, aged 84; Esther (1789/90–1839), who married John Tinlin; Jean (1793/4–1865), unmarried. A memorial stone was erected to the family in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Easton and their children included Francis (b.1790). Rev. Robert (1773–1831) son of William and Nelly Thomson, he was baptised in Selkirk. His father was a gardener and he was the eldest of 4 children. Note that there is an alternative suggestion that he was eldest son of Andrew, farmer at Overhall. He attended Hawick grammar school, then Edinburgh University. He was licensed as a Burgher minister in 1793 and ordained at Morpeth in 1798. Along with 5 other clergymen he emigrated to New York in 1802 and moved to Montreal in 1804. He ministered privately to Presbyterians there and then helped found St. Peter's Street Presbyterian Church (also known as St. Andrew's), Montreal. In 1818 he helped set up the Presbytery of the Canadas. He also worked with the British and Foreign Bible Society. With his eyesight failing, he retired in 1824. He married Mary Beattie and they had 4 children, 2 of whom died in infancy. He had sermons published in 1815 and 1816. Robert (b.1797/8) weaver in Hawick, son of William, who was from Southdean Parish. He was living with his father on Bourtree Place in 1841 and 1851. On the 1861 census he was at 2 Bourtree Place, living with his sister Isabella and described as ‘Woollen Weaver & Chelsea Pens’. This suggests that he spent some time in the army. Stuart (1883– ) born and educated in Hawick, he became a motorbike racer. He was British Supersport Champion in 2002. He has ridden for Ducati, Kawasaki and Honda. He suffered a serious crash during practice in 2011. Thomas (d.1800) farmer at Overhall, probably younger brother of Robert, who also farmed there. He was recorded at Overhall in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew is also listed there, who was probably his nephew. His wife Margaret Easton (apparently the same surname) died in 1777, aged 50. This was at Whitehillbrae (part of Dodburn farm), suggesting he earlier farmed there. Their children included: Margaret (1742–67); Mary (1746/7–65); Robert (1762/3–98); and Gideon, who died in infancy. The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. Hawick gardener Francis may have been another son (since he was recorded on the back of the same headstone). Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Groundstone. His daughter Mary died in 1811. Thomas (1780/1–1846) precentor of the West-end Church, who ran a school for teaching English and Music on Silver Street in the early 19th century. He is recorded there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His school later moved to the Fleece Inn Ballroom (presumably the High Street location where he was recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory), and it was here in 1838 that the meeting took place to organise the opening of the Chartist Store. He only taught reading, writing and counting, with Saturday morning lessons consisting entirely of reading the Bible and the Shorter Catechism. On Saturday afternoons he went round the district cleaning clocks, often accompanied by a pupil of mechanical bent. He also held singing classes in the evenings. He is listed on Tannage Close in 1841, with his wife Margaret. Thomas (b.1787/8) born in Selkirk, he was gardener at Chisholme. He was listed at Chisholme in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Anne Lumsden in Robertson Parish in 1917 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1818); Helen (b.1820); Robert (b.1822); Charles (b.1823); Isabella (b.1826); William (b.1827); and John (b.1839). William (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. George appears right after him on the list, and so was probably closely related. He is probably the William who married Isobel Dodds and whose children (baptised in Ashkirk) include a son ‘Betreck’ (b.1697) and another son William (b.1690). The witnesses in 1690 were James Veitch and George Scott. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His daughter Agnes married Walter Hall (from Jedburgh) in 1713. He may be the William who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for Thomas Liddell and for Adam Easton (perhaps his son) and in 1724 for Andrew Martin at Clarilaw and James Young at West Burnfoot. William (18th C.) cotter in Castle-side in Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Smail and their children included: Margaret (b.1719); Isobel (b.1722); Helen (b.1724); George (b.1726); and Isobel (again, b.1728). William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1727 he married Jean Scott and their children included an unnamed son (b.1727) and William (b.1731). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1732 he married Margaret Scott, the marriage being recorded in both Robertson and Wilton Parishes. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Heap in 1733. He was probably related to the earlier William who was at Heap. He married Margaret Scott in 1732 and their children included: James (b.1733); Robert (b.1735); and Bessie (b.1736). The witnesses in 1733 were Andrew Drummond and Robert Easton (who was surely related). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1759. He married Janet Scott in 1758 and their children included Jean (b.1759) and Elizaebth (b.1762). The witnesses in 1759 were Walter and Robert Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1773); and Joanna (b.1777). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1769 he married Violet Lorraine. Perhaps the same Violet Lorraine married Walter Turnbull in Hawick Parish in 1771 (in which case he must have been deceased). William (b.1768) son of Robert, he was born in Southdean Parish. He was probably the William recorded as gardener at Green River (working for James Chisholme) in 1797. He later lived in Hawick, where he worked as an agricultural labourer. He lived on Bourtree Place in 1841 and was described as a retired gardener in 1851. His children included: Robert, weaver and ‘Chelsea Pensioner’; Margaret; and Isabel. William (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Smith. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included: Janet (b.1795); Joseph (b.1797); Margaret (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1800); George (b.1804); and Adam (b.1806). The witnesses in 1795 were James Winthrop and Thomas Huggan, and in 1797 were Joseph Caverhill and James Scott. William (b.1783/4) barber in Hawick. He is recorded as a hairdresser on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, as well as a fishing tackle maker. He is listed in the 1834 electoral roll along with his son George as a joint proprietor. In 1837 he was listed as a High Street hairdresser, as well as a fishing-tackle maker. He is still listed as a High Street hairdresser in Slater’s 1852 directory, as well as a toy dealer and fishing-tackle maker. He lived at about 2 High Street according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He married Elizabeth Richardson and their children included: an unnamed child (d.1809); George (b.c.1810), who took over the business; Catherine (b.1815); John; William (b.1822); and James (b.1824). William (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he is recorded as simply a ‘dealer’ on the High Street. This could be the same man as the hairdresser. William Scott (1853–1877) son of hairdresser George and Elizabeth Jane Scott. He was related on his mother’s side to local poet William Scott. He was well known for writing satirical rhymes and doggerel, leaving us with the familiar ‘Kinly Stick’ and ‘The Anvil Crew’, as well as ‘Run Them In’. Robert Murray says that ‘his best pieces are now lost, never having been committed to paper’. He was Bard of Masonic Lodge St. John 111, but could not have lived long in that position. He died tragically at age 23 in a shooting accident when training with the Volunteers. He had apparently stood in to replace someone else as a marker during practice at the Whitlaw Range near Hummelknowes. A poem ‘Alane’, found in his private notebook, was published after his death, but essentially nothing else survives (formerly spelled ‘Easten’, ‘Eastoun’, ‘Eistone’, ‘Eistonne’, ‘Estoun’, ‘Esten’, etc.).}

\textit{east o the gate} (eest-ø-thu-gat) adv., arch. in an easterly direction, eastwards – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here’s baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dunnerum danders over the knowe’ [HI] (also ‘east the gate’).

\textit{East Port} (eest-pö-rë) n. old entrance to the town, situated roughly opposite Baker Street, corresponding to the modern 74 High Street, removed in the mid-18th century. An entry in the Town Treasurer’s Book for 1751 states that a tanner is paid ‘for lime to the East Port Cross’, which is the only mention of the possibility of a ‘cross’ being there (but may be an error). The port is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. This once marked the beginning of the road out of town along Bourtree Place towards Jedburgh. A plaque was erected by the Callants’ Club beside the Waterley Bar (78 High Street) in 1964. The place was formerly used to distinguish among families of the same name that lived in different parts of the Town, e.g. ‘Walter Scott at the Eist-port, Robert Deannes, thair’ in 1638 – ‘...Bailie Scott and Thomas Hardie from Wm. Dickson’s house to ye East Port on both sides of ye toun’ [PR1722].

\textit{East Spittal Road} (eest-spi-ul-roë) n. former name for a road in Minto Parish. A ‘Haugh be-East Spittal Road’ was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

\textit{East Stewart Place} (eest-stew-ur-plis) n. street off Wilton Hill in the area known as Stewartfield, built in 1886, and named after Rev. James Stewart.

\textit{East Teviotdale} (eest-teev-yi-dål) n. name used to refer to lands owned by Melrose Abbey in the 15th and 16th century. They were among a list of lands to which the Scotts of Buccleuch were appointed as bailie. It is unclear precisely the location and extent of the lands so-named (it is ‘Estwydail’ in 1519, ‘Estwydail’ in 1524, ‘Esteywail’ in 1524 and ‘Est Teuidaill’ in 1553/4).

\textit{east the} (eest-thu) adv., arch. towards the east, ‘east of the’ – ‘...differing ten minutes or so from its modern sister east the street’ [WNK] (this was formerly a common expression).
East-the-witter (eest-thu-wi’-ur) adj., arch. another form of Easla or Eastla water, i.e. referring to the part of Hawick on the eastern side of the Slitrig – ‘By cash for stent collected east the Water of Slitrig, ... 3 8'” [BR1761], ‘As soon as public worship began, the elders started on their quest, two being appointed for ‘east-the-water’ and two for ‘west-the-water’’ [JJV] (cf. West-the-witter).

East Whitehaugh (eest-whi’-af) n. former farm in the hills behind Wilton, once also known as Wester Heap.

ey (ee-zee) adv. easily – ‘We were that easy pleased when we were bairns ...’ [WL].

ey-osie (ee-zee-o-zee) adj. easy-going, flexible, insouciant, unconcerned about a choice – ‘A’ll take either yin, A’n easy-osie’ (also written ‘easy-osy’ and ‘easy-ozie’; an example of ‘rhyming reduplication’).

eyte (eech) n., arch. an adze.

eytin-hoose (ee’-in-hoos) n. an eating-house – ‘There was a snod bit leikely-leike eateen-hoose, nerr bye ...’ [ECS].

eyave (n., arch.) n., arch. a nave, hub of a cart-wheel (noted by J. Jamieson).

eyber (e-bur) adj., arch. shallower – ‘The good apostle’s whisky cask, Would grow but little eber’ [JR].

eybit (e-bi”) interj., arch. yes but, literally ‘aye, but’ or ‘ah, but’ – ‘Ehbit NA!! Nehh!!’ [ECS], ‘Eh, bit gaun back teh 1707 an oo find that yin o’ the toon’s twae bailies was a Rob Broon ...’ [BW1979] (also written ‘eh, bit’ and variants).

Eben (e-bin) n. short form of ‘Ebenezer’, occasionally used in Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries.

Ecclefechan (e-kul-fe-kin) n. town in Amandale, off the M74, birthplace of Thomas Carlyle at the Arched House, built by his father and uncle in 1795. The nearby Hoddon Castle was a Maxwell stronghold. Population 857 (1991) (named after the church of St. Fechin).

Eccles (e-kulz) n. village north-east of Kelso, in Berwickshire, also being the name for the associated parish. The village contains the ruins of St. Mary’s Priory, burned by Hertford in 1545. The mansion house there dates from 1898, replacing an earlier house. Surviving estate buildings include a clock tower, dovecote and lodged gateway (the origin is probably from ‘church’, since there are the remains of a Cistercian Convent there; it is ‘Ekkils’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Eccles Hoose (e-kulz-hoos) n. large house near Kelso, built 1895–8 in a Scottish 17th century revival style.

ech (ech) interj., arch. exclamation of disgust, surprise or sympathy – ‘Eh, ech, preserve us a’. What now?’ [JEDM].

echi (e-ki) n., v. echo (also spelled ‘echi’).

echt (echt, ech) n., arch. eight – ‘A gaed ti bed at neine an À sleepeet on till echt, gey nerr the clock roond ...’ [ECS], ‘The daily wumman had arrived at Sharp’s hoose as usual, at echt in the morning ...’ [DH], ‘Is my clock an echt-day or a thirty-hour movement?’ [DH], ‘Echt days, ech’ days, a week (ago): ‘this time (or day) echt days!’ [GW], an eighth (this was once the common pronunciation; cf. aicht, aucht, aught, eicht and eit).

echty (ech-tee) n., arch. eighty – ‘He threw frae seeventeen-fifty-five And leaved to be echty-yin’ [DH] (also citty, eichty and eaitheight).

Eckford (ek-fur’d) n. village about 5 miles east of Jedburgh, and also the name for the surrounding parish, containing the villages of Eckford, Cessford and Caverton. The lands were granted to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1450 and erected into a barony in the following year. They remained part of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch through the 17th century. The lands were valued at £20 in 1574, and along with Lanton were held ‘by the service of ward and relief’. The lands were given in livery to Margaret Ker when she married Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1586. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The Barony was coupled with the lands of Hawick and Lempitlaw in the rental records of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1692, when set to Sir Patrick Scott. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties. The village was burned during the ‘Rough Wooing’ of 1544/5. The church dates from 1771, with some earlier fragments. There is an existing communion token from 1696. The bridge at Eckford Mill was built in the 1690s (the origin of the name is probably ‘Ecca’s Ford’, from the Old English personal name; it first appears as ‘Eckeford’ about 1200 and was ‘Eckford’, ‘Eckfur’d’, ‘Eskfur’d’, ‘Hecfur’d’, and other variants).

Eckford (ek-fur’d) n. Andrew George John Nichol ‘A.N.’ (b.1851), son of John. He carried on his father’s grocer and spirit merchant business. The Museum has a stone bottle labelled ‘Andrew Eckford’s celebrated nourishing stout, 21 High Street, est. 1838’. John ‘Johnny’ (c.1770–1843) stocking-maker in Hawick. He was described thus: ‘a quiet inoffensive man of plodding habits and taciturn disposition. Dressed in a short tailed blue coat and knee breeches, his legs encased in coarse blue stockings, a low crowned broad brimmed hat on his head, his short thick body bent forward as if pressing in advance of his legs, while the firm way he planted his feet on the ground bespoke of a decided determination of character indicative of the man’. He married Jean, daughter of John Anderson, tenant at Newton in Wilton Parish, and she died in 1829. His wife was descended from Helen Lithgow, sister of Rev. Robert, minister of Ashkirk. Through her he claimed the residue of the estate of John Lithgow, who had made a fortune while serving in India. He devoted his life to trying to prove his right to the fortune, travelling widely to see headstones and interview people, and becoming known to the law courts in London, as well as Sir Walter Scott, the Earl of Minto and others. He died in London, still pursuing his cause, and although he was ultimately not successful, he apparently had his expenses paid in the form of ‘discovery money’. However, the people of Hawick who supported his labours as ‘cent per cent callants’ presumably never saw any money. His marriage to Jean Anderson (or ‘Andisone’) was in Wilton in 1802. Their children included: Jean (b.1804); Agnes (b.1806); John (b.1808); and Michael (b.1811). John (c.1805–88) born in Cavers Parish, he was a grocer at 24 High Street. He is recorded at about 38 High Street in 1841, No. 35 in 1851 and Melgund Place in 1861. He was listed as a grocer at 24 High Street. He was recorded on the Cross Wynd with his wife Jean, recorded in 1841 and so possibly his wife.

Eckford’s (ek-furdz) n. grocer’s shop at 21 High Street in the mid-19th to early 20th centuries.

Edgar (ed-gur) n. (c.1072–1107) King of Scotland from 1097, he was the son of Malcolm III and succeeded his brother Duncan II. He died unmarried and the nation was split between his brothers Alexander and David.

Edgar (ed-gur) n. James (17th C.) served as ‘procurator’ to Walter Scott of Goldielands in 1670. This was when Scott of Goldielands brought an action in Melrose against Andrew Tunno to make copies of instruments of sasine far Goldielands, which Tunno had in the previous Hawick Town Clerk’s ‘protocol book’. It is unclear if he was a Hawick or Melrose lawyer. James (b.1780/1) born in Kirkcudbrightshire he was a teacher pupil, but gave up due to ill health and took up work as a stockingmaker, becoming an apprentice in Hawick in 1801. He was one of the main organisers of the Hawick Reformers of the early 19th century. He married Jean, a daughter of shoemaker Robert Oliver. In 1841 he is recorded on the Cross Wynd with his wife Jean, as well as Robert and John, probably his sons. He died in his 80s, after working about 60 years as a stockingmaker in Hawick. James (b.1827/8) from Canonbie, he was a merchant in Newcastleton. He was at about 18 Douglas Square in 1861. He married Elizabeth, daughter of shepherd Walter Jackson. Their children included Jane, Helen, Isabella, William and James (1860–1920, who died at 11 Oliver Crescent, Hawick). James (19th/20th C.) eldest son of Robert and cousin of editor James. He worked for Pringle's and was known for his lay preaching. It is said that when given some lily of the valley he planted it within a biscuit tin in the ground, saying ‘Aw’m no gaun to have a weed in ma gairden’. He married Mary Scott. James (1862–1940) son of John and Isabella Richardson. He was proprietor and editor of the Hawick Express, who wrote several local books, including ‘Hawick Common-Riding’ (1886), ‘Hawick Songs and Recitations’ (1892, 1901), ‘Hawick in the Early Sixties’ (1913), ‘History of Lodge St. James’ (1932) and ‘The Provosts of Hawick’ (1933). He was also responsible for publishing many more books, such as ‘Hawick Songs’ (1914) and ‘Hawick Guide: Directory and Yearbook’ (1903). A keen Common Riding supporter, he was Secretary of the Committee from 1887 until around 1908, and acted as Clerk of the Course at the Races. His letter to the Hawick Express on 2nd April 1887 suggesting changes to the Common Riding ceremonies led to the resuscitation of the festival in the following years. In 1928 he was gifted a grandfather clock for 32 years of service on the Common Riding Committee (and this is now in the Museum). He was also one of the founders of the Callants’ Club, being the first Honorary Secretary and President in 1924. He was a Town Councillor for several years. He was the initiator of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column in the Hawick Express. He was also Honorary Secretary of the Cricket Club. He married Janet, daughter of Bailie John Richardson, and she died in 1930, aged 65. Their son John was a banker in Edinburgh. John (c.1826–1909) son of the first Hawick James. He was a warehouseman in Teviot Crescent, lived at 3 Village and was father of newspaper proprietor James. He was a prominent Common Riding supporter of the mid-1800s. He married Isabella, daughter of James Richardson of ‘Saut Haa’, and she died in 1909, aged 78. Their children were Margaret (who married baker James Scott) and James (who became editor of the Hawick Express). Rev. Nicol (1658–1724) minister at Hobkirk, he was a son of John and Elspeth of Wedderlie. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1677 and was licensed by Earlston Presbytery in 1693. He was ordained as minister at Hobkirk in 1694 and served there until his death. There is a story of how one night about midnight in the church, he confronted a ghost that had been haunting the churchyard, finding it to be the spirit of a murdered cattle-dealer, and an arrangement was made that it be allowed instead to roam freely between Huddleswoodie and Hawbank. Whatever the basis of this story, he was apparently thereafter looked on with suspicion by some of the parishioners. He preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. He married Susanna, daughter of John Veitch, minister of Westruther, and she died in 1713, aged 52. Their children were Susanna, Elizabeth (who married Robert Blyth in Edinburgh in 1739) and John (who died age 17). He was buried in Hob Kirk kirkyard, but it is said he was dug up shortly afterwards to be buried in some lonely spot, but his arms coming free and striking one of these superstitious men, they dropped him in the ditch and fled, so that he had to be reburied the following day. The inscription for his burial was carved into the same stone as that of Rev. James Douglas. Robert (1815/6–99) son of the first James and brother of John. He was a hosiery worker in Hawick. He was one of the first members of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, joining in 1838. He married Helen Armstrong, who died in 1888, aged 75. Their sons were James (who worked for Pringle’s), Robert (who married Mary Robson, sister of the joiners, and became a baker in Inverness) and John (who married Jessie Anderson and became a mill cashier in Inverness). Walter H. (1885/6–1933) grocer in Newcastleton. He married Betty Nichol, who died in 1900, aged 31. He secondly married Jane Elliot, who died in 1910, aged 41. He thirdly married Margaret Nichol, who died in 1935, aged 60. William (d.1907) heavily involved with the Vertish Hill Sports and St. George’s Kirk. He held the position of Church Officer for the 2 years before his death. He was also Clerk of the Scales at the Common Riding Races.

edge (ej) n., arch. a watershed that does not have a prominent ridge, the word being used in several hill names, e.g. Firestone Edge, Grundis- tane Edge, Lamb Blair Edge, Limekilnedge, Mill- stane Edge, Reidcleuch Edge, Whigills Edge, Whithope Edge and Wundy Edge.

the Edge (thu-ej) n. former popular name used in Liddesdale to refer to the pass over into Teviot- dale, perhaps named after the Limekilnedge and Sandy Edge.

Edgie (e-jee) n., arch. to be quick in doing something (noted by J. Jamieson).
edgy (e-jee) adj., arch. sharp, smart, quick – ‘Be edgy’ [GW], ‘Look edgy’ (= hurry up)’ [GW].
Edie (e-dee) n. William (1865–1936) son of Robert, joiner in Hawick, and Christian Miller. He attended school in Roberton and was educated at St. Andrews University from 1882 and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1892. He was minister at King Edward 1893–1905, Dumfries Greyfriars 1905–1910 and Inveresk from 1910 until he died. He translated ‘Textual Criticism of the Greek New Testament’ by Eberhard Nestle (1901).
Edina Place (e-dee-na-plis, e-dī-na-plis) n. street in the Terraces of the Wellogate, with houses built in 1885, and called after a poetic name for Edinburgh, e.g. Burns: ‘Edina! Scotia’s darling seat!’.
Edinburri (e-din-bu-rī, -ru) n. Scotland’s capital since the 15th century, now seat of the Scottish Parliament, lying between the Firth of Forth and the Pentland Hills, approximately 51 miles north of Hawick by road. Linked to Hawick by rail from 1849–1969 and by road via the A7, it has been the most important city for Hawick people for many centuries. The main A7 was dramatically improved locally as the Scotch-Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike in the late 18th century. In Hawick the main road north went up Wilton Path (after crossing the ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd or the Teviot Bridge after 1741) and then up Stiches road towards Ashkirk. In the early 18th century the road to Edinburgh then proceeded to Selkirk, followed by Darnick, and then by way of a ferry, ford and bridge to Lauder, Oxton, Channelfirk, Fala and via Dere Street to Dalkeith. The new road from Selkirk to Edinburgh was built in 1755 and went via Fairnilee and Clovenfords and along the west bank of the Gala Water. The modern route via Galashiels, Stow, Heriot and Fushiebridge was not laid out until 1833. Population (1991) 401,910 – ‘Did ee gang ti sei eer freends the teime ee was in Edinburrih?’ [ECS] (Teries often talk about going ‘inti Edinburgh’ rather than using another preposition).
Edinburgh an Hawick Railway (e-din-bu-ru-an-hlk-rāl-wi) n. line operating between Hawick and Edinburgh, owned by the North British Railway. It began as the Edinburgh and Dalkeith Railway, in 1831, incorporating the Marquess of Lothian’s Waggonway in 1845, extended to Gorebridge in 1847 and reaching Hawick in 1849. After being extended to Carlisle the route was renamed the Waverley Line.
Edinburgh Borderers’ Union (e-din-bu-rör-der-urz-yoon-yin) n. former club in Edinburgh, with rooms at 22 Forth Street. It was founded in 1874. The organisation gave prizes for essays and offered aid to Borderers who were in difficulty. They also published an edition of Leyden’s poetry and a life of Sir David Brewster, as well as having their own reading room. From 1890 they instituted an annual excursion and a choir was formed in 1894, followed by a Literary and Debating Society, a Cycling Club, a Whist Club, a Golf Club and a Cricket Club.
the Edinburgh Cup (θnu-e-din-bu-ru-kup) n. presented by Teries in Edinburgh, it was competed for at the Common Riding Games in the late 1800s, the event being the 250 yards foot race on the Saturday.
Edinburgh Road (e-din-bu-ru-rōd) n. popular name for the ‘new road to Selkirk’ leading north out of town. It was used as a street name up until the mid-20th century for that part of the road beyond Wilton Hill, but still within the Burgh.
Edin's Hall

Edin's Hall (ee-dinz-hal) n. remains of an Iron Age broch and several other contemporary walls and earthworks on the hills above the Whiteadder outside Duns. This is the best preserved example of a broch anywhere near Hawick (also called ‘Edwin’s Hall’, ‘Edenhall’ and other variants).

Edmonds (ed-mindz) n. Rev. Donald Kinloch (b.1941) born in Hawick, son of Alexander McDonald and Catherine Maria Balfour Kinloch. He was educated at George Watson’s, Dalkeith High and Edinburgh University.

Edmondson (ed-mind-, -mee-, sin, -stin) n. George (c.1842–1900) son of Isaac, he was a butcher in Hawick. The family were members of the ‘English Kirk’. In 1871 he married Jane Bowie, who appears to have been the aunt of his brother Isaac’s wife, Jane Bowie. Their children included: Isaac (b.1870), who died young; Isaac (b.1872), also died young; Isabella (b.c.1874); Isaac (1876–1959), who died in Galashiels; Richard (b.c.1878); Elizabeth (b.c.1880); Janet (1883–1971), who married George Henry Cairncross; and George (b.c.1887). They also had 2 children who were illegitimate from Joan: Cathrine (b.1863), whose name is also given as Oliver and married Robert Anderson; and John (b.1868). Isaac (b.c.1875) from England, he came to Hawick probably in the 1830s, and worked as a dyer. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on the Round Close. He was listed as a dyer on the Round Close in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Johannah Lewarne, who was still alive (on Allars Crescent) in 1861. Their children included: George; Isaac (b.c.1820); Richard; and Johanna. Isaac (c.1820–55) from Coldbeck, Cumberland, he came to Hawick with his parents Isaac and Johanna. He worked as a skinner. He married Isabella Montgomery. Their children included: George (c.1842–1900); Richard (b.c.1843), who married Elizabeth Pattison Kennedy; Johanna (or Hannah, b.c.1848); and Isaac (1855–1924), who married Jane Bowie. He died in Hawick. Isaac (1855–1924) 3rd generation of Isacs. He was born in Hawick, but died in Edinburgh. In 1876 he married Jane Bowie, who was the niece of his brother George’s wife, Joan Bowie. His son was also Isaac (1876–1942), who died in Hawick. Isaac (1876–1942) 4th generation of Isacs in Hawick. He married Margaret Little in Hawick in 1897. James (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. His name is recorded as ‘James Edmestone’. James (1872/3–1947) married Mary Murray, who died in 1955, aged 81. They are buried in Wilton Cemetery. They had a son John Murray (1903/4–88). John (15th C.) recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. William Douglas in Dearnbrae was charged to enter him for the slaughter of Thomas Hoggarth; Oswald Mason was also accused of the same crime, with Ralph Ker charged to enter him. Failing to appear he was denounced a rebel and his goods escheated to the King. Given that his surety was a Douglas from Dearnbrae, then he may have been local. John of that Ilk and Ednam (16th C.) son of James of that Ilk and Katherine, daughter of George Home of Wedderburn. In 1530 he was charged (along with Sir Walter Scott of Branholme and John, Abbot of Jedburgh) with disisting from his claim to the lands of Ednam. In 1567 he was cautions for ‘Dand Elliot’ of Caveling. Either he or his son was listed among the men who signed a bond in 1569 to suppress thieves on the Border. In the same year Robert Kerr of Woodhead promised to relieve him of a bond to make payment to an Englishman. In 1529 he married Euphemia, daughter of Gilbert Wauchope of Niddrie-Marischal. He was succeeded by his son John. Sir John of that Ilk and Ednam (16th C.) son of John, he was Sheriff of Lauderdale. In 1593 he resigned his lands at Synton and Synton Mill to John, Earl of Mar. He may be the same Sir John who in 1569 signed the bond to suppress thieves in the Border and he signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1574 he was on the retours for Sir Walter Scott of Branholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott and his father Sir Walter. In 1575 he was found to have falsely accused Robert Fraser in Overton of stealing horses belonging to Englishman Sir George Heron. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. His father was probably the John of that Ilk who was on a panel of ‘retour’ in 1551 for David Home of Wedderburn. He married Agnes, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford and was succeeded by his son Andrew. He may be the John of that Ilk whose daughter Margaret married George Scott of Synton. Rev. John (1801–1865) son of Thomas, an Edinburgh ironmonger and Isobel Howden. He was dux at Edinburgh High School in 1815, graduated from Edinburgh University, and was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1825. He was presented to the Parish of Ashkirk by Gilbert, Earl of Minto and became minister there in 1837. He may have been assistant there previous to the death of Rev. Hamilton in 1837. He walked out during the Disruption of 1843 and became minister of Ashkirk Free Kirk. It is said that he suffered great hardship as a result, for example sheltering in a small house 4 miles from the church, and then having to move to a dilapidated farmhouse 3 miles further away, before in 1845 finding a residence in Selkirk, 6 miles from his congregation (a distance that he would walk every week). He married Janet (or Jane) Waddell in 1842, and she died in 1895. Their children were Jessie Traill, Thomas William (farmer), Isabella Howden (who married William Ross), Wilhelmina Euphemia, Elizabeth, and Mary Margaret (who married William Ebenezer White). In 1854 he edited an edition of ‘Paradise Lost’ and ‘Paradise Regained’ for schools and was assistant editor on ‘Works of John Owen, D.D.’ (1850–54). His surname is sometimes given as ‘Edmonstone’. Richard (b.c.1843) 2nd son of Isaac. He was a hand-loom weaver in the 1861 census. He married Elizabeth Pattison Kennedy (b.c.1849) in Hawick in 1868. Their children included: Isaac (b.1869); Elizabeth Pattison (1871–1918); James (b.1872); Isabella Montgomery (b.1874), who married Bailie Francis Scott; Ann; Janet; Mary; Joanne; Richard (1884/5–1915); George; and John (b.1891), who married Jessie Hogg Wilkinson (who may have been his father’s half-sister) and emigrated to Canada. Richard (1884/5–1915) son of Richard and Elizabeth Kennedy. He served in the 5th Battalion Cameron Highlanders and was killed in action. He is commemorated on the Loos Memorial in France. He married Elizabeth Robertson, who lived in South Shields (formerly ‘Edmondston’, also written ‘Edmestoun’, ‘Edmonston’, ‘Edmonstone’, ‘Ed蒙stoun’, ‘Edmontoun’, etc.).

Ednam (ed-num) n. village a few miles north of Kelso. Birthplace of James Thomson, who wrote ‘Rule Britannia’ and Henry Lyte, who wrote ‘Abide With Me’. This is also the name of the surrounding parish, which is claimed to be the first named parish. It borders Sprouston, Kelso and Stichell, as well as part of Berwickshire. The Eden Water crosses the parish and the Tweed forms its south-east boundary. The church has communion tokens from the late 17th century. A book ‘Ednam and its indwellers’ was written by John Burleigh in 1912 (the origin is ‘town on the Eden Water’; it first occurs as ‘Ednham’ in the early 12th century).

educat (e-joo-kaw’, -kat) pp., arch. educated – ’...ane of the chief causes theirof being this, for want of scholes qr children may be educat’ [PR1627], ‘...ye mortcloth latele sent by Mr Elliot in London (born and educat in Nether Southfield) ...’ [PR1721].

Edward (ed-wurd) n. name of eight Kings of England. Edward I ‘Longshanks’ (1272–1307) English King who invaded Scotland in 1296, removing the ‘Stone of Destiny’ and historical records, and beginning the War of Independence. He was thus partly responsible for the unrest that plagued the Borders for the next three centuries. After dispute over succession of the Scottish crown, he gained overlordship of Scotland and chose Baliol as the King. Later many Scottish nobles swore fealty to him rather than to Robert the Bruce. In 1307 for example, the Lovels lost their lands around Hawick as a result. After invading in 1296 he also called a ‘parliament’ at Berwick and forced about 2,000 Scottish landowners and clergymen to sign the ‘Ragman Rolls’, this becoming a valuable historical document (partially making up for those he destroyed!). In 1297 he made a presentation to Cavers Kirk, since the former Baron’s lands were now in his hands. It is also said that he visited Bedrule Castle in 1298.

Edward II (1284–1327) English King from 1307, son of Edward I. He was never very popular as a King, partly because he was heavily influenced by Piers Gaveston (who was possibly his lover) and later Hugh Despenser. He tried to continue his father’s subjugation the Scots, including his disastrous expedition in 1314 to relieve Stirling Castle, which led to the Battle of Bannockburn. He was forced to flee from Bannockburn, pursued by James Douglas. He was denied entrance to Stirling Castle, but made it to Dunbar, where he escaped to England by ship. He was forced to abdicate in favour of his infant son Edward, and died in a dungeon, possibly the result of a red hot poker up the backside – ‘Gang cry the hounds of Douglas vale, Gang scream the Ettrick wall, Gang warn the spears of Liddlesdale, That Edward leads the foe’ [T]. Edward III English King from 1327–77, including a time of much war and the Black Death. He renounced the Scottish throne in the 1328 Treaty of Northampton, accepting Scotland’s right to independence. But he continued to battle the Scots and was victorious at the Battle of Halidon Hill in 1333. He was given much of southern Scotland by the puppet King Edward Baliol in 1334. And he took full possession of the Borderland in the 1340s, restoring lands to families who had supported England. The Lovels regained (at least on paper) their lands of Hawick in 1347. Edward was the self-appointed patron of St. Mary’s Kirk in 1355, presenting it to ‘John de
Edwards

Hawyk’. Edward VIII British King who abdicated in favour of his brother. He visited Hawic in 1924 when he was Prince of Wales, opening the Laurie Bridge, laying a foundation stone for wards at the Cottage Hospital and giving an address in the Town Hall. The avenue from the new bridge to the Park gates were lined with school children to see the Prince, escorted by the Provost – ‘The Prince was resplendent with his Chain and Ermine Robes, escorted by a Wee Soldier’.

gave a silver cup for the Cornet’s Races in the 1880s and also donated a gold-mounted whip to be competed for by married supporters on several occasions through to the mid-1890s.

Edwin (ed-win) n. (585–633) King of Northumbia. He was the son of Ælla, who had been King of Deira, before it was united with Bernicia by Æthelfrith. He was expelled by Æthelfrith around 605, but was part of the force that defeated him and reclaimed the kingdom around 617. He is also believed to have brought Christianity to the region. He was killed by Cadwallon and his allies around 618, but is the most ancient member of the royal house of Northumbria. He is also reckoned as the founder of the diocese of Durham, and the first Bishop of Ripon. He was the father of Ethelwald, the first Bishop of London.

eendy-teendy (een-dee-teen-dee) n. a children’s counting game often used for selecting players, ‘eendy-meanie-minnie-mo’ being more common in England. The full version is something like ‘eendy-teendy, tithery-mithery, amba-zooka, over-dover, dick-ma-lamb, tam-toosh, ee’r oot’.
Another version (ascribed to joiner Walter Wilson in the early 19th century) is ‘Zeendy, teendy, tethery, methery, Bomba, zitye, over, Dover, Dick Milan, Tam toosh, eir are oir out’. Variants on this are to be found throughout southern Scotland and northern England, and the obvious connection to Welsh counting suggests that this is e’enin

a remnant of the ancient p-Celtic language once spoken here.

Effie (e-fee) n. pet name for Euphemia.

Effledge (ef-lij, ef-leej) n. farm to the east of Cavers, between Nether Tofts and Whitriggs, in Kirkton Parish. Effledge Cottage is just off the road to the north-east. It was once part of Cavers estate, listed among the lands belonging to the Barony of Cavers in charters of 1511 and 1558. There is a 1535 record of William Scott ‘in Layk’ being charged with stealing 13 cows and oxen from Arthur Douglas and Thomas ‘Presall’ (possibly Fraser) and 7 cows and oxen from Marion Davidson, all from the lands there. Walter Noble was tenant there in 1868 when declared a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It was still held by Douglas of Cavers in 1867 and 1698. William Turnbull, widow Marion Turnbull and James Gledstains were all there in 1697. James Goodfellow was there in 1710, James Henderson in 1716, Walter Graham and Robert Scott in 1720 and Robert Stavert in 1794. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. James Bunyan was farmer there in 1797 and it was farmed by William and then Thomas Grierson in the 19th century. William Blyth was farmer there in 1868 (also spelled ‘Efflidge’; the name first occurs in 1511 as ‘Elflesche’, and is ‘Effleshe’ in 1535, ‘Elfleche’ in 1558, ‘Elfledge’ in 1684, ‘Elfletch’ in 1687, transcribed ‘Afflech’ in 1698 and ‘Efflech’ in 1710 and 1716; it is ‘Elfledge’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is possibly from the Old English personal name ‘Elf’, plus the Middle English ‘leche’, meaning ‘a bog’, but ‘the elf-swamp’ has also been suggested).

Eildon Road (eel-din-rōd) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1953 and named after the Eildon Hills, which can be clearly seen from here.

The Eildons (thu-eel-dinz) n. the Eildon Hills, between Melrose and St. Boswells. They are somewhat peculiarly known as Eildon Mid Hill, Eildon Hill North and Eildon Wester Hill, with heights of 422 m (1385 ft), 404 m (1327 ft) and 371 m (1216 ft), respectively. The northernmost summit held the largest Iron Age fort in Scotland, constructed around the 10th century B.C.E. The Romans built a signal station there in the 2nd century, as well as an extensive fort and settlement nearby, and called the hills Trinontium. By local legend they were separated by Michael Scot the wizard, and also Arthur and his knights supposedly sleep here, waiting to return – 'From Eildon’s cairns no more the watch-fire's blaze, Red as a comet, darts portentous rays' [JL], 'Gaze where Eildon's triple height Guards the steppe; they had the same value in 1553/4. The lands were included in a list of those formally inherited by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch from his great-uncle David Scott in 1574; they were at that time annexed to the Barony of Branxholme and valued at £10. In 1581/2 the lands were held by Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell, when she complained that a gang led by the Armstrongs of Whithaugh and Braidlie had raided the farm; they came 'bodin in feir of weir, with jakkis, steilbonettis, speris, swordis and utheris wappinis invasive', stealing 24 cows, a horse and some goods. The lands were listed (along with Philhope) as a 'pendicle' of Broadlee among lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. 'Rowie of Huttihill, furth of the Lyn beside Eilrig' is recorded in 1616. The lands were estimated to pay '200 lb., in vicarage to 32 lb.' in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. There were 7 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Walter Grieve, Margaret Hall, Janet Grieve, Janet Murray, Robert Grieve, Margaret Scott and Maly Lnaing. It was still valued at £10 in 1653. Sir William Scott was recorded paying the land tax on £500 in 1663. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls it was still valued at £500 and listed as 'Flerig' or 'Flerig' under Walter Scott of Raeburn. John and Robert Grieve were there in the 1680s. Walter Herd was there in 1710, John Johnston and William Black in 1712, John Shortreed in 1718 and James Rutherford in 1728, Walter Laidlaw in 1733-36, John Nichol in 1735, William Scott in 1736 and Archibald Henderson in 1743. In 1759 it was sold to the Duke of Buccleuch by Rev. John Clunie of Whitekirk, when the lands are still described as being in the Barony of Branxholme. John Mitchellhill was

James III in 1464 to Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. Robert Scott of Eilrig is recorded in 1477 renting the lands of Craik. In 1492 the lands were described as being then waste, but normally valued at £10 Scots. In 1501 the tenant was Simon Scott. In 1517 the lands were part of the estate of the Scotts of Buccleuch and said to be then 'waste', but valued at 10 pounds in times of peace; they had the same value in 1553/4. The lands were included in a list of those formally inherited by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch from his great-uncle David Scott in 1574; they were at that time annexed to the Barony of Branxholme and valued at £10. Eilrig

Eildrig (eel-rig) n. older name for the area around Eilrig and still used for the hill and stream there. There was a building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map at Eildrigburnfoot, of which there are now no visible remains.

Ei-lid (i-lid) n. an eye-lid – 'she didni bat an ei-lid when A telt her', 'I wullna gie sleepe til mine eyne, or sloom til mine eelyds' [HSR].

Eilrig (eel-rig) n. farm on the 'Eild Rig', south of the Borthwick Water about a mile before Craik. Before 1689 (when Robertson was formed) it was part of Hawick Parish. The lands were held by Robert Scott of Rankillburn from the early 15th century. In 1426/7 Robert’s son and heir Walter, was granted the lands by the Baron of Hawick. They were then valued at 10 merks and given 'by the service of one penny', due at the feast of St. John the Baptist. The lands were included in those resigned in 1463 and re-granted by there in 1764, William Lawson in the 1770s, Andrew Geddes in 1781 and Francis Elliot in 1786. James Tait was farmer there in at least 1787–1797. In 1788 and 1811 it was valued at £500. James Tait was there in 1798. James Scott was shepherd there in the 1840s and 1850s – ‘Have you along the lonely road When the storm was raging near, Down by the old stone bridge At Eilrigg?’ [WFC] (the name first appears in 1426 as ‘Elerig’, with several later spelling variants, including ‘Ealrig’, ‘Ealrigg’, ‘Ealrigge’, ‘Eildrig’, ‘Eildrige’, ‘Eilbridge’, ‘Eilrigge’, ‘Elrigge’, ‘Eldrig’, ‘Eldrige’, ‘Eldrige Shank’ [ECS], ‘Eis chuffy chowks aa fairnyt-acht’, depending on the preceding consonant; also spelled ‘‘eisel’, ‘eis sel’, ‘eis-sel’ etc.).

ei-stern (i-stern) n., poet. the eye muscle – ‘The eye-stern of his gallant grey Fell trickling down his nose; The pricker was a bruised wight, Full hardly up he rose’ [JTe] (this can also be ‘eye-string’).

eit (ɪt, it) n. eight – ‘If we comin oot the night it eit?’ (note the other pronunciations in eaight, as well as echt and eicht; also sometimes spelled ‘eight’ even when pronounced properly).

ei-tteen (ɪ-teen) n. eighteen – ‘Hawick was a hotbed o radicalism in the ei-tteen hunders’ (also aichteen, auchtteen, echtteen and aeighteen).

ei-teen (ɪ-ce, i-tee) n. eighty (also eechti, eichty and aeichty).

ei-wink (i) n., arch. an eyelash, eyelid (also ‘ei-winker’).

eke (eek) v., poet. to increase, supplement, add – ‘an destna eke til thy walth bie the pryce’ [HSR], ‘Eek punishmint til thair enqui-tie, an’ let thame nat cum until thye richte-ness’ [HSR].

eke (eek) adv., poet. also – ‘Myself, and eke your brothers three, Took ev’ry man his brand …’ [JTe].

Ekron

Agnes (b.1788) daughter of John and Ann Johnson. She was a grocer on the Loan, probably at about No. 17 in 1841, and at about 8–10 in 1851. Andrew (18th/19th C) resident of Hawick Parish. He erected a stone in St. Mary’s Cemetery to commemorate his children: Agnes (1814/5–20); Ann (1816–29); Agnes (again, 1819/20–23); John, Mary and Eliza, who died in infancy; and James (1828/9–30). Given that all these children died young, it is possible he is the same Andrew as the son of John, who had several surviving children with Elizabeth. Andrew (b.1792) Hawick framework knitter, son of John and Ann Johnstone. His wife was Elizabeth (surname unknown). In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Walter’s Wynd. His children include: Margaret (b.1826/7), who married George Pringle in 1851; Helen (b.1828/9); Mary (b.1831/2), who married Alexander Scott; Agnes (b.1834/5), who may have married Allan Stewart in 1857; and Ann Johnstone (b.1838/9), who was living with her cousin John Hall in 1861 and married Robert B. Wilson in 1862. His daughters Helen and Mary were lodging with Jane Turnbull on the High Street in 1851. Andrew (b.1829) frameworker in Hawick, son of James and Margaret Thomson. He lived at 48 Loan, 7 Back Row and 13 Drumlanrig Square. He married Elizabeth Stewart in Hawick in 1850. Their children include: Jane (b.1851/2); John (b.1856); Margaret (b.1858); James (b.1861); Janet (b.1862); James Stuart (b.1864), who married Nettie E. Blodgett in Michigan in 1895 and died in Indianapolis; Walter (b.1866), married Grace Waites, but had no children; Robert (b.1868), who lived in Philadelphia and Chicago; Elizabeth (1872–1966), who married Archibald Drummond and died in Jedburgh; and Helen (1875–78). Family stories said that James and Robert emigrated to America, with one of them being an opera singer in Boston and the other one having a wooden leg! He was still alive in 1891. Andrew (1894–c.1952), son of John and Jemima Baxter, was born in Hawick. He changed his name to Arthur Stewart Scott, apparently due to some mix-up during WWI (because he deserted or got separated from his unit and needed a new name in order to get back into the army). He married Althea Theadora (‘Dora’) Jones (1895–1973). They had a son, Arthur Frederick ‘Fred’ Scott (b.1920). He probably died in Wales. Ann (b.1790) daughter of John and Ann Johnson. She was a grocer on the Mid Row, recorded there in 1841. She had an illegitimate daughter, Adeline (or Adelina, d.1897) with French prisoner of war Adam Bellom. Apparently she lived with Bellom for several years, but they never married. She appears to have died before 1851. James (1721–87) son of William and Mary Graham. He was a merchant in Hawick, presumably a book-seller, since he is recorded on the subscribers list for the reprinted Buchanan’s History of Scotland (1752, 2 volumes), ordering 13 sets. He was also on the subscriber’s list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), for 12 copies, and listed there as ‘merchant, Hawick’. He is additionally recorded as ‘Messrs James Ekron, Hawick’ when listed as one of the sellers of ‘A Display of Genuine Christianity and Christian Love’ (1784), Caw’s second book published in Hawick: a copy of the book bears the inscription ‘When this you see, Remember me, James Ekron’. He appears to have operated as a bookseller in about the period 1757–84. He owned property in Silver Street and in the Crescent. In 1780 he was one of 6 trustees for the East Bank Meeting House who had a bond with them for erecting the building. He is probably the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Adam Ormiston (at Drinkstone) in 1780 and James Black (at Packhouses) in 1781. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was probably owner (and not James Aitkin, as suggested in notes) of a book, ‘The Duty and Advantage of Religious Conferences, Proved from Scripture and Reason’ (1743) by Rev. John Wilson; this book (which survives and is in the Museum collection) passed to his direct descendant, Sir James A.H. Murray, who wrote on 3 pages at the beginning, describing the book’s provenance. He was at Kelso Fair during the great Slitrig flood of 1767 and on returning was surprised to see some of his own goods left lying on the haugh at Menslaws. His house was one of those carried away by the flood waters, his wife escaping just in time by crawling along a ladder laid horizontally to an upper window of a house on the other side of Silver Street, across the rushing water (their house must have therefore been between Silver Street and the river). His bed was found stranded on the Common Haugh after the flood, with the cat still sleeping on it. He may be the ‘Joseph Eckron’ (written in error) whose ‘whole onstead of houses’ were stripped of furniture etc. during the great flood of 1767, and several people helping save items had to be rescued themselves; these houses were close to John Kedie’s house and it said that the damage to them amounted to £1000. He married Isobel Betty Richardson, who was probably daughter of merchant James Richardson and died in 1764. Their children included: Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1746–85), who married merchant Walter Scott in 1765; Agnes (1748–80), who married John Oliver in 1766, was mother of Margaret Oliver who married Charles Scott, and was maternal grandmother of Sir James Murray; and William (1758–60). He had another daughter, who married a Mr. Adams and emigrated to America; she gained his Silver Street property after his death, with the Crescent property going to his daughter, Agnes Oliver. Mary, who married John Thomline in 1772 may also have been his daughter (based on the names of her children). The witnesses in 1746 were shoemaker Robert Oliver and maltman John Moss and in 1758 were James Beattie and George Telfer. He also had young children who died in 1759, 1760 and 1764. He witnessed baptisms for his daughter and merchant Walter Scott in 1766 and 1768. He secondly married Margaret Brown in Hawick in 1766; she was traditionally said to be his former maid servant and died in 1802. ‘Mrs Eckron Mercht in Hawick’, listed on the 1789 female servant tax roll, was probably his widow; she also paid the same tax in 1790. His death is recorded in Hawick in 1787. James ‘The Blast’ (b.1757) son of William and Elizabeth Dobbie. He was said to be a merchant and bookseller in Hawick in the latter part of the 18th century; however, it is possible he is being confused here with the man of the same name born a quarter of a century earlier. The origin of his nickname is uncertain, perhaps related to smoking. He was probably a member of the Masons. He was Cornet in 1779 and also wrote some poetry. He married Helen Turnbull (from Kirkton Parish) in Hawick in 1781. They had a daughter Janet (b.1782), possibly the ‘Jane’ who married Benjamin Hooven. He could be the James who is recorded as recently deceased in a letter of 1794 between Hawick men living in Pennsylvania. James (b.1793) South African settler, born in Hawick. He is sometimes said to be son of John and Ann Johnson, but that may be confusion with another James (based on the names of his children, it is possible that he was a son of James ‘The Blast’). He worked as a ploughman. He was in the party of settlers of Robert Pringle (farmer at Blakelaw) who went to South Africa in 1820, and worked as a ploughman. He is mentioned in John (son of Robert) Pringle’s ‘Narrative of a residence in South Africa’ (1834) in connection with a lion hunt. In 1832 he was sentenced to 2 years hard labour for the murder of a ‘Hottentot’ with whom he was living. He firstly married Elizabeth Keen (1796–1870), but they seem to have had no children. He secondly married Mary Ann Moffat (from Gloucestershire) and their children were: James (1835–1916); Margaret (b.1836) and Matthew (b.1837), who died in infancy; William Moffat (b.1838); Janet Margaret (b.1840); John (b.1842); Mary Anne (b.1844); Mathew Charles Linton (1849–1915); and Thomas Edward (1852–1925). James (b.1794) Hawick frameworker, son of John and Ann Johnson. He was living somewhere on the Back Row in 1841 and 1851 and was at 7 Back Row in 1861. He married Margaret Thomson in Ettick in 1821. Their children include: John (b.1822); Elizabeth Anne (b.1824), who married John Rae; Andrew (b.1827); Andrew (again, b.1829); Helen (or ‘Nelly’, b.1831), who was a servant with grocer Adam Turnbull in 1851 and later that year married Alexander Ballantyne; Janet (b.1834), probably the Janet who married John Little in 1866; and Johnson or Johnstone (b.1839), who is said to have emigrated to America and worked as a lady’s maid. A photograph of him exists. Jane (18th C.) recorded in Hawick Parish in 1787 when her daughter Janet was born. Perhaps the same ‘Janet’ had a child who died in Hawick in 1795 and a ‘bastard child’ who died in 1802. It is unclear who her parents were. John (18th C.) waulker, dyer and tenant in Hawick. He was brother of William, but the identity of their parents has not been established. The surname seems to be peculiarly Hawick and has not been found any earlier than the early 18th century; given that the local pronunciation was ‘Aikren’, it seems possible that there was some kind of name change, e.g. from ‘Aiken’. He married Jean ‘Dinlap’ (presumably Dunlop) in 1714, this being the first known record of the surname. Their children included: William (1714–80), who married Elizabeth Dobbie; John (b.1715), probably died young; Janet (b.1716); John (again, 1718–1801); Jean (1721–75), who married Robert Tudhope in 1767; Helen (b.1723); and George (b.1725). Witnesses to the 1714 baptism were Robert Henderson and Andrew Turnbull, servants to Rev. Robert Cunningham. Witnesses in 1716 were Bailies William Laing and George Martin, in 1718 were William Laing and flesher George Renwick, in 1721 were William Laing and Robert Renwick, in 1723 were George Martin and John Glendinning and in 1725 were Robert Scott of Falnash and Hugh Somerville. In 1721 he is recorded as ‘John Aikron Tenant in Hawick’. John (1718–1801) mason in Hawick, son of John and Jean Dinlap and uncle of James ‘The Blast’. He married Agnes Douglas in 1752. Their children include: John (1754–1816), apparently known as ‘Esau’; Mary; and Agnes (b.1762), who died young. He may be the John who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–88. John (1754–1816) probably son of John and Agnes Douglas. He was said to be known as ‘Esau’ (for reasons that are not clear). He married Ann Johnston (or ‘Johnson’, 1759–1820). Their children include: Janet (b.1782), who died young; Janet (again, b.1784), probably the 66 year old seamstress ‘Jane’ living at Kirkgate in 1851, and the seamsman living at Kirkyard in 1841: John (b.1786); Agnes (b.1788), grocer; Ann (b.1790), probably the grocer on the Mid Row recorded on the 1841 census; Andrew (b.1792); James (b.1794), who may have moved to South Africa or have been a weaver in Hawick; Margaret (b.1796), perhaps the Margaret who married Andrew Anderson; Helen (1800–30), who married William Davidson in 1823; and Elizabeth (b.1807), who may have married John Brown in 1835. He may be the ‘John Ekron Jun.’ who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. He and his wife are buried at St. Mary’s. John (b.c.1790) army pensioner. He was living on the Loan in 1841, along with Agnes (about 40 years old) and James Oliver (about 15). He is probably the son of John and Ann Johnson, born in Hawick in 1786. John (d.1854) son of James and Margaret Thomson. He was listed as a framework knitter at about 28 High Street in 1851. He may also have helped his aunt as a grocer on the Fore Raw. In 1844 he married Margaret (d.1858), daughter of stocking-maker Thomas Anderson and Isabella Scott. John (1856–1916) son of Andrew and Elizabeth Stewart, he was a frame-worker who lived on O’Connell Street. In 1881 he was living at 50 O’Connell Street, in 1891 was a stockmaker at 17 Loan and later lived at 35 Loan. He firstly married Agnes Carruthers (d.1883) in Hawick in 1875. In 1887 he secondly married Jemima Baxter (1865–1935), but separated from her after the death of their son James. His children were: Mary (b.1875), who married Andrew Wilson; Elizabeth (b.1876), who married Andrew Elliot; Andrew (b.1878), who died in infancy; Helen (or ‘Nellie’, 1879–1943), who married twice, had no children, and died in Edinburgh; Jane (b.1881) and John (b.1882), who died in infancy; an unnamed child (b.1883); Jane (b.1887), died in infancy; Andrew (1888–91); James (1890–1906); Margaret (b.1891), died in infancy; Janet (1892–1971), who married Hugh Gilroy and died in Glasgow; Andrew (1894–1952), who changed his name to Arthur Stewart Scott and died in Wales; Mary Jane (1897–1913); Isabella (1899–1935), who married Wilson Hogg and died in Hawick; and Jemima (b.1902), who married John Douglas also died in Hawick. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick, probably brother of John and great-uncle of James ‘The Blast’. Where he came from, or the identity of his parents, have not been established. He firstly married Mary Graham and their children included: James (1721–87); and George (b.1725). In 1726 he secondly married Margaret Douglas and their children included: Marion (b.1727), who may have been the Mary who married Walter Ballantyne in 1760. Witnesses to the 1721 baptism were shoemaker Robert Allan and Robert Hardie, tenant. The witnesses in 1727 were Bailie Purdom and candlemaker John Scott. William (1714–80) son of John and Jean Dunlop. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Dobbie in Hawick and their children included: James (b.1757), ‘The Blast’; plus William (b.1762), Elizabeth (b.1766) and another William (b.1768), who all died young (also spelled ‘Ackren’, ‘Aickren’, ‘Aikren’, ‘Aikrin’, ‘Eckron’, ‘Eckron’ and ‘Ekrin’; this family seems to have been almost entirely based in Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries; the origin of the name is unknown).
He may have witnessed a baptism for Margaret (presumably his daughter) and Alexander Inglis in 1791. He married Jean Stewart (b.1729) in 1769. It seems likely that this was his second marriage and that he had first married Mary Brown in 1756, with children: Mary (b.1757); John (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Alexander (b.1764), publisher in Peebles, and said to be brother to Walter; and Thomas (b.1766). In 1764 this John was living at the Sandbed, in Witon Parish. The witnesses in 1760 were schoolmaster William Dyce and shoemaker John Scott and in 1764 were Thomas Scott and Robert Ormiston. His children with Jean Stewart included: Walter (b.c.1770), Ann (b.1771), who married Robert Henry; and Jane (b.1773). He is probably the John whose unnamed granddaughter died in Hawick in 1778.

John (18th C.) book-seller in Hawick. His daughter Peggy died in 1795. It is possible he is the same man as the weaver. Robert (b.1797/8) frame-work knitter, originally from Peebles. He is recorded at about 41 High Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Margaret O., Robert, Susan and John McRae. Turnbull (b.1822/3) from Jedburgh, he was a tailor at Kilknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. He married Agnes Tait in 1847 and their children included Margaret, Rachel and John.

Walter ‘Watty’ (1770–1849) bookbinder in the Fore Row and Howegate in the early 19th century. He was son of John and Jean Stewart. He subscribed to 12 copies of William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and 2 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His brother Alexander was a bookseller and printer in Peebles (and also subscribed to Wilson’s book). He was the seller for the 1836 edition of James Hogg’s ‘Tory’. This was printed by John Elder of Edinburgh High Street, who was surely a relative of some sort. He was listed as a bookbinder on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded on the Kirk Wynd, still as a ‘book binder’, aged 70. In 1790 he married Isabelle Lamb (d.1831). Their children included: Mary (b.1791), who was 2nd wife of hairdresser James Brisbane; Jean (b.1792); John (1796–1844); Janet (b.1800); Alexander (1804–22); and Ann (1806–31). Walter (b.1802) son of Walter and Isabelle Lamb. He was a stocking-frame-worker, recorded on the Fore Row in 1841, on the Kirk Wynd in 1851, at 69 High Street in 1861 and 11 Teviot Crescent in 1871. In 1835 he married Margaret (1818–1901), daughter of hairdresser James Brisbane. Their children include: Walter (b.1835); Christine (b.1837); Isabella (b.1839); Janet (b.1841–65), the first to survive past infancy; James (b.1843); Sarah (b.1845); Walter (b.1847); Isabelle (b.1849); John (b.1851); John (again, b.1853), who married Ellen Turnbull; Mary Ann (1856–63); William Brisbane (b.1857); and Margaret (b.1860). Alexander (b.c.1822), coachman at the Tower Hotel, was possibly a son from an earlier marriage. Walter (1847–1926) son of Walter and Margaret Brisbane, he was born in Hawick. He married Jane Johnstone. Their son William Johnstone was born in Monktoun, Ayrshire.

elderin (el-dur-in) adj., arch. growing old, advanced in years, elderly — ‘An eldrin’ lad’ [JoHo], ‘...But a five-bar fence I sprang in a glance, And ran like an elderin’ hare’ [WaD] (also ‘eldern’ and ‘eldrin’).

Elder Knowes (el-dur-nowz) n. small hilly area to the south-west of where the Eildrig Burn meets the Borthwick Water. Here there are remains of an earthwork, about 40 m across (the name presumably derives from ‘Eildrig Knowes’).

elderman (el-dur-num) n., arch. a councillor, bailie or head of a guild — ‘...quhilk being considered be the said bailie, and eldermen and council of the said bruche . . . ’[BR1641] (it is uncertain precisely who this term applied to; the same as an ‘alderman’ in England; not locally in use since the 17th century).

eldership (el-dur-ship) n. a body of elders, the office of being an elder — ‘...a new silver Bason for ye Baptisms, almost containing a pynt, qch the said Bailies present to ye sight of ye Eldership, and were well satisﬁed therwith’ [PR1711].

elding (el-ding) n., arch. fuel of any kind, particularly peat or turf — ‘...the Deponent, got elding off the Common for the use of his family, and he was never interrupted’ [C&L1767].

Eldinhope (el-din-hop) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, on the B709, before the Gordon Arms Hotel, with Eldinhope Knowe to the east. It was a Crown property from 1456, mentioned many times in the exchequer Rolls. It was assigned to Sir Walter Scott in at least the period 1460–67, Alexander Scott in 1469 and Sir David Scott in the period 1475–90, transferring to the Earl of Bothwell in 1491 and remaining with him until at least 1496. In 1499 it was assigned to John Murray of Falahill and David Pringle, with sheep for the King’s flocks there being mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1501 it was again assigned to Walter Scott. It remained Crown property until at least 1510, when it was leased by John Murray and David Pringle. In 1541 the tenants were Andrew Brydon, John Blackstock, William Tait, John Hislop and Margaret Melroe, paying £92 yearly. The former tower there was built by the Scotts. It later became part of the Buccleuch estates, being mentioned in services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661. Over and Nether Eldinhope were valued at about £900 in 1785, with Eldinhopeknow valued at a further £370. Francis Scott was farmer there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries; he lived to the age of 94 and still travelled to church on a pony when he was 90. It is said that it suffered some of the heaviest losses of sheep during the harsh winter of 1794, around 120 animals. Note that it is easy to confuse with the ‘Auldshope’, whose name became the modern Aneleshope in the Ettrick valley (it is ‘Eldanehope’ in 1456, ‘Aldanehop’ in 1468, ‘Eldashop’ in 1469, ‘Eldainhope’ in 1477, ‘Aldanishop’ in 1479, ‘Auldanehop’ in 1480, ‘Aldanap’ in 1481, ‘Aldanehope’ in 1486, ‘Auldanehop’ and ‘Eldanahoip’ in 1487, ‘Eldanhop’ in 1490 and 1491, ‘Eldahope’ in 1494/5, ‘Eldinhop’ in 1499, ‘Eldanehop’ in 1501 and 1507, ‘Eldanhop’ in 1502, ‘Eldinhope’ in 1541, ‘Eldinghope’ in 1576, ‘Eldhoip’ in 1634, ‘Eldingshop’ in 1653 and ‘Eldingshopes’ in 1661; the origin of the first part may be Old English ‘Aldwine’, ‘Eldinhopeknow’, ‘Middle Eldin’ and ‘Over Eldin’ are on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

eldrin (eld-rin) n., arch. a freshwater fish – ‘How out of that pool there we drew many a fine young ‘eldering’ with the bait!’ [BM1905].

Elec see Elick

Elec the Bellman (e-leek-thu-bel-mawn) n. nickname for Alexander Stainton, immortalised in a poem by William Peffers.

the Election Denner (thu-ce-lek-shin-den-nur) n. celebratory dinner of the old and new Town Councils in the 18th and early 19th centuries. It was held during October, and was at the town’s expense up until about 1817.

Election Night (ee-lek-shin-ni) n. phrase sometimes used for the night of the Pickin.

Election Riot at Hawick (ee-lek-shin-r-i-i’-i-hIk) n. engraving by ‘D.H. Tristam’ of the supposed riot at Hawick during one of the elections of the 1830s. It appears in Cassell’s ‘Illustrated History of England’ (c.1860). The engraving depicts a pitched battle between a crowd of men on the Auld Brig.

Elibank (e-lee-bawng) n. ruined 16th century tower overlooking the Tweed, between Galashiels and Walkerburn. It was home of Sir Gideon Murray from 1594, who married off his daughter electit (ee-lek-tee’, -ti’) pp., arch. elected – ‘...quhill council and communitie, all in ane vois, electit the said Gilbert Watt, notar, clark for ane yeir to cum ...’ [BR1638].

electricity (e-lek-tri-si’-ee) n. first introduced publicly into Hawick by the Urban Electric Supply Company in 1901. The first electricity in town had been generated using the water wheel under Tower Mill some years earlier, this being constructed by William Melrose and William Elliot used to provide light in Mr. Elliot’s house at Teviot Lodge.

eleeven (e-lee-vin, a-lee-vin, u-lee-vin) n. eleven – ‘At yin-and-eleevenipence-hap’n a bag Ee daurna pit et higher’ [AY] (also spelled ‘eleeven’ etc.; cf. eeleven).

elements (e-in-mintz) n., pl., arch. the bread and wine used at communion – ‘James Gray in Wh entitlement, James Davidson in Newbigging, with James Scott in Branxholm, by reason of their old age to wait upon the Elements’ [PR1718].

the Elephant’s Back (thu-e-lee-fintz-bawk) n. common name for a rock at ‘the Dunk’ from which diving is popular.

eleventh {elei-vint} adj., arch. eleventh – ‘...faithfullie maid and gevin vp be his awne mouth vpoun the eleventh day of April, the zeir of God foirsaid ...’ [SB1574] (cf. eeleevinth).

Elfhaugh (elf-hawch) n. former farm in the Rule valley, to the south of Braidhaugh, probably close to Cleuch Head. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Elscheuch’ in 1612 when John Turnbull was tenant there. It is marked on Turnbull’s map of the late 16th century, this being ‘Elffhauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map) and close to the modern Mackside (although Mackside itself is marked much further to the north). Adam Turnbull was tenant there at the time of the 1694 Hearth Tax records. There is no obvious incidence of a similar name later (it appears to be ‘Elpheshet’ in 1694; it is also marked as ‘Elfcleuch’ on Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650).

elf-shot (elf-sho’) adj., arch. said of diseased cattle, with the supposition that they have been bewitched by fairies – ‘...with any sudden disease, (the cause of which was usually ascribed to the malignant machinations of the fairies,) she was said to be elf-shot ...’ [EM1820].

Elibank (e-lee-bawng) n. ruined 16th century tower overlooking the Tweed, between Galashiels and Walkerburn. It was home of Sir Gideon Murray from 1594, who married off his daughter ‘Muckle-mou’d Meg’ to William Scott of Harden in 1611. The ballad version of the story was popularised in Hogg’s ‘Fray at Elibank’. Sir Patrick Murray (sister of ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’) became the 1st Lord of Elibank in the 17th century, and his great-great-grandson was Gen. James, first Governor-General of Canada. A more modern house was built there in the 1840s – ‘But when they arrived on the Elibank green, The yeet was shut, and the east grew pale; They slinkit away, wi’ the tears i’ their een, To tell to Auld Harden their sorrowfu’ tale’ [ES] (also called ‘Elibank Castle’ and formerly ‘Eliburn’).

Elick (e-leek, -lik) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Alexander (also spelled ‘Elec’).

Eliott (e-li’, e-lee-i’, el-yi’) n. (see also Eliott) Alexander (1805–83) youngest son of Sir William of Stobs, christened in Cavers Parish. He was a naval storekeeper at Devonport. He was appointed as a trustee of his brother’s Wells and Haddon estates in 1863. He died unmarried. Alexander Boswell (1830–82) 2nd son of Sir William Francis of Stobs. He was christened at Cavers. He was in the Royal Navy for a short period. In 1855 he married Katharine Wigrane, daughter of John Craigie, a builder in Portobello. This was apparently just 5 days after they met, with her being just 16, and the couple eloping to Lamberton Toll Bar near Berwick. With his wife pregnant, neither family approving and him not having a job, he enlisted in the 17th Regiment of Foot and was sent to India, while his wife and son went off to America with his brother-in-law James and settled in Chicago. He later obtained a divorce and secondly married Annabella, daughter of Neil Carmichael. His children were Arthur Boswell (only child with his first wife, who inherited Stobs from his uncle William Francis), Alexander Boswell Vassal (who married Hannah Josephina Kavanagh and settled in Australia), Charles James (who settled in Alaska), and Rawdon Popham Vassal (who married Nellie Thompson and died in Alaska). Archibald of Middlestead (17th C.) 3rd son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartens’. He inherited the lands of Middlestead and Blackmiddings in Ettrick from his father, according to a charter of 1637. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638 (along with his brothers Gavin and Gilbert). In 1662 he was fined £ for supporting the Commonwealth and then his lands were ‘appraised from him’ to pay his debts. There are no records of him after that. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Learmonth of Birkhill. Archibald of Craigend and Deanfoot (d.c.1683) 2nd son of William of Stobs. He inherited Craigend from his uncle Gilbert. In 1656 he witnessed the resignation by Edward Lorraine of the lands of Appotside and Tythelhouse in Rulewater (in favour of William Elliot of the Binks and Harwood) and another contract in which the Lorraines reserved a small piece of land for themselves. He had at least 2 children, Gilbert and John. His son Gilbert was served as heir in 1683 to his lands of Craigend, Deanfoot and Minto. Archibald (1710–59) younger son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. He was born at Stobs and baptised in Cavers Parish. He was a merchant in London, being Secretary to Ramsgate Harbour. He married Frances Seer in 1737. He had an only child, Vernon (who was left a legacy by his uncle William).

Sir Arthur Boswell of Stobs (1856–1926) 9th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. Born at Portobello, he was the only son of Alexander Boswell and his first wife Catherine Craigie. He never really knew his father, being taken by his mother to join his uncle James Craigie in Chicago when only a few months old. He returned to Britain to attend school, but his mother’s condition was that he not see his father. He spent the holidays with his aunt Blanche, but also was not allowed to see his uncle Sir William (due to the dispute between his aunt and uncle). After school he moved to Australia, where there were several Eliott relatives. There he purchased a sheep farm, but was forced to return to Britain after several droughts. He then tried dairy farming in the United States. He succeeded his uncle Sir William in 1910, but by then Stobs and Wells had both been sold. He received some compensation for these sales, and invested it in his father-in-law’s business in Burbank, which failed. After difficult years, he made a career as a stockbroker in Boston and then New York. In 1884 he married Lilla, daughter of John Burbank of Boston and had 3 children: Sir Gilbert Alexander Boswell, who succeeded; Marie Vera Margaret Emily Boswell, who married Edward Bois Cowles and secondly John Francis Barry and died in the Bahamas; and Beatrice Maud Boswell, who married Frank V. Burton. He died while visiting his son near New York and was brought to Scotland to be buried in Cavers Kirkyard. His wife was also buried there in 1945. Sir Arthur Francis Augustus Boswell of Stobs and Redheugh (1915–89) 11th Baronet and 28th Chief of the Elliots. He was elder son of Sir Gilbert and Flourney Hopkins. Born in New York, he was educated at Harrow and Cambridge, where he studied economics. He joined his father in the City, and became a Member of the London Stock Exchange before WWII. He served in the K.O.S.B. and King’s African Rifles during WWII. After the War he returned to the city, becoming a member of the Stock Exchange Council in 1965 and retiring in 1968. He then spent more time in Scotland. He was therefore able to move the family seat back to Redheugh after many generations. Along with Lady Eliott he started the Eliott Clan Society. He was a member of the Royal Company of Archers. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1978. In 1947 he married Frances Aileen, elder daughter of Lt.-Col. Sir Francis Kennedy McClean (a British flight pioneer). They had a single child, Margaret Frances Boswell. Charles (1709–56) son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs, he was born in London. He trained as a lawyer. He was a member of the 3rd Provincial Council of Charleston, South Carolina and served as Attorney General for North Carolina for a few months before he died. He is buried at the Episcopal Church, New Bern, Craven County, North Carolina. His gravestone is inscribed ‘An honest lawyer indeed’. Charles (18th C.) son of the 2nd Gilbert of Stanedge. He was Master of a ship in the Lisbon trade. Charles (1800–19) 6th son of Sir William, 4th Baronet of Stobs. He served with the East India Company. He was killed during the siege of the fort at Capaul-droog. Charles Joseph Alexander (1937– ) 12th Baronet of Stobs, distant cousin of the 11th Baronet. He married Wendy Baily in 1959 and had 5 children.

Sir Daniel (1798–1872) christened in Cavers, a younger son of Sir William of Stobs. He was at school at Houghton-le-Spring in Durham, along with his 3 brothers, and he was later at Edinburgh Academy. He joined the East India Company at the age of 19 and sailed to Madras. He showed an aptitude for Indian languages and law. He was appointed deputy Tamil translator to the Madras Government in 1822 and Marátá translator in 1823. In 1838 was appointed as the Madras member of the Indian Law Commission, helping to draw up the Indian codes. By 1848 he was a member of the Council of Madras and in 1850 became President of the Revenue, Marine and College Board of the Madras Government. He returned to Britain in 1853, but returned a year later to be Madras representative of a new supreme legislative council for India, and remained there until 1860. In 1867 he received the order of the Star of India. In 1818 he married Georgina, daughter of Gen. George Russell of the Bengal Army. Their children were William Russell (who became a Major-General and married Jessie McIntosh and Frances Helen Cloete), Henry Manning (also a Major-General, married Jessie Fennell), Edward Frederick (married Rykie Sophia Cloete), George Augustus Robertson, Georgina Mary (married John Hutcheson Fergusson), Caroline Mary (married Col. Charles Colville Young), Emma (married Richard Stuart Palmer), Mary Bethia (married Maj.-Gen. W.C. Russell), Cecilia Wheatley (married Maj.-Gen. Eustace Hill) and Claudine Francis Leonora (married Rev. T.D. Gray). He died at The Boltons, West Brompton, London.

Dora Flourney nee Hopkins (20th C.) wife of Sir Gilbert of Stobs. She carried out 40 years of research into the family history. Dorothy (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gavin of Stobs. She was served as heir (along with her sister Esther and niece Jean) in 1607. Shortly afterwards her half-brother Gilbert purchased Stobs, although it took him until 1614 to pay the amount in full and became sole owner of Stobs. She married George Haliburton of Pinnacle before 1608 and had children. Elizabeth (17th C.) daughter of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’. She married John Turnbull of Minto in 1641 (although Turnbull was technically too young), and their son John became Laird of Minto. She long survived her husband and lived at Hillhouse. It is possible she was the ‘Lady Minto’ recorded paying £200 in Southdean Parish on the Land Tax Rolls of 1643. Ellinor Jane Augusta (1829–34) daughter of Sir William Francis of Stobs and Wells. There is a memorial plaque to her in Bedrule Kirk stating that she ‘died after a lingering illness born with the most exemplary patience, aged 4 years 11 months’. Capt. Eliott (1712–45) younger son of Gilbert, 3rd Baronet, brother of John, William, Gilbert, Anne, Charles, Archibald, Gavin and George. He was born at Stobs a few weeks before a major fire there and was christened at Cavers. His first name was spelled like the non-Stobs branches of the family. He served in the Royal Navy, being 3rd Lieutenant on H.M.S. Argyll, then spending some time in the West Indies and in the merchant service. He was a Lieutenant on the St. George in 1742 and a year later was Captain on the H.M.S. Lively, on which he died at sea. He also captained the fireship Aetna, on which his young distant cousin John Elliot (son of Capt. John Elliot and Jean Grieve) served. In his will he left money to his nephew Vernon and nieces and Anne and Eleanor. Esther (16th/17th
Eliott

Eliott C.) daughter of Gavin, 1st Laird of Stobs. In 1607 she and her sister Dorothy, along with their niece Jean, were served heirs to Stobs. Shortly afterwards she sold her share to her half-brother Gilbert, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins’. She married Gilbert Ker of Lochtour, eldest son of John of Hirsel, and had children with him. Sir Francis of Stobs (d.1791) eldest son of Sir John, he was named after his aunt, Lady Frances de Nassau d’Averquerque, who was wife of Col. William Elliot of Wells, and a close friend of his parents. When young he served with the 3rd Regiment of Foot Guards. He was still ‘younger’ in 1761, when listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He succeeded in 1768 as the 5th Baronet, having already been favoured by his grandfather, who changed his will to leave all his personal estate to him (under the condition that he lived continuously at Stobs). He was known locally as ‘Frankie o the Stobs’ and was said not to have kept up his position in society and to have made a poor marriage (i.e. he mixed with common people!). He planned the new mansion at Stobs, but died before building work commenced. He was on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was listed as brother of William of Horsleyhill); against him before the Privy Council (when he was 7 years old. He married Sarah Jane Richards and they had 6 sons and 2 daughters. Gavin or ‘Gawain’, ‘Gawin’, etc. (d.1606/7) Laird of Stobs, also ‘of Bailielee’ and ‘of Horsleyhill’. He was probably the 5th son of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill (with his 2nd wife) and was descended from the Elliots of Redheugh. It is sometimes claimed incorrectly that he was a son of William Elliot of Larriston and Mary Scott (daughter of Sir Walter of Buccleuch). He gained Bailielee after the death of his brother Andrew in 1563/4 and execution of his brother Robert in 1564. He was acquitted of any involvement in the 1564 murder of David Scott of Haddo, and gained the escheat of his 3 relatives who were executed for the crime. He is probably the ‘Gawin Elliot in Skelfhill’ recorded in 1569 when he signed a bond of security in Hawick for his tenants, with the ‘young Laird of Greneheid’ (probably a Ker) acting as surety for him; he had 9 tenants at that time, including on farms at Skelfhill and Priesthaugh. In 1569 he was managing the lands of Skelfhill, Peeltbrae and Penagushope for the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh (probably his stepson) when he signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ promising the Regent Moray to suppress rebels. He was ‘of Skelfhill’ when he was one of the designated relief pledges for Gavin Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Also in 1569 he was ‘Gawin Elliot of Skelfhill’ when there was an order from the Privy Council that he should enter into the Regent’s custody on 8 days warning, wherever he should be. Also in 1569 he was surety for 9 men, who were presumably his tenants. His pledge in 1569 was ‘young Greneheid’ and his son (actually step-son) Robert promised to enter if his father required it. He was sold Horsleyhill by his nephew William in 1569, but it seems that young William had also sold the same lands to his brother William, who won the court case to keep them in 1573/4. In 1573 a complaint is recorded against him before the Privy Council (when he was listed as brother of William of Horsleyhill); William Douglas of Cavers complained that he had no right to occupy his lands of Caveling. He is listed as 'of Bailielee' in 1573, when, along with his wife Jean Scott, he complained that his servant James Storie was attacked on his newly purchased 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton; the attackers were Walter and John Scott, possessors of the other half of Chamberlain Newton (they were step sons of Margaret Turnbull, widow of David Elliot, who was also from the Horsleyhill Elliots). Later in 1573 Margaret Turnbull and Walter Scott promised not to harm, his wife, their children and servants. In 1575 he is probably the Gavin, brother of William Elliot of Horsleyhill who was ordered to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He is ‘in Skelfhill’ in 1575/6 when he complained that he was owed the ‘mails’ for his steading of Bailielee. He is probably the Gavin who Walter Scott found surety not to molest in 1576. He was first to gain the lands at Stobs, purchasing them around 1580 (or perhaps as late as 1584) from ‘Gladstone of Stobbis’. Thereafter he was referred to as being ‘of Stobs’. In 1584/5 he was ‘Gawin Elliot of the Stobbis’ when listed among the Border Lairds who had to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they were helping to keep peace on the Border. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. His son may have been Gilbert, ‘Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins’, although information about these early generations are unclear (and there are claims that they were entirely unrelated). In 1592 he was a tutor to William of Horsleyhill, his grand-nephew (although he had to fight a court case to win this right over William’s father’s half-brother, also William). There is a bond of 1594/5 in which James Gledstains of Cocklaw pledges that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw shall not harm him or William Elliot of Horsleyhill; presumably there was a feud at the time between these two families. He is probably the Gavin among the Elliots who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He is probably the ‘Gawen Elliot who said he was Buccleuch’s deputy’ recorded in an English letter in 1597 giving excuses for not delivering up Scottish prisoners. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss ‘the present disordouris of the Bourdours’. Also in 1600 he was on the ‘retour’ for the Kers of Cessford. In 1603 he is on a long list of local landowners to whom the Baron of Hassendeain (James Cunninghman, Earl of Glencairn) issued a ‘summons of removing’ to vacate their lands. He married Jean Scott, sister of Buccleuch (but it is unclear which one) and widow of Robert of Redheugh; it has been suggested that the marriage was part of attempts to end the feud between the Elliots and Scotts in the 1560s. His surviving children were: Jean, who married Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston, and pre-deceased her father; Dorothy, who married George Haliburton of Pinnacle; and Esther, who married Gilbert Ker of Lochtour. His wife brought him 5 step-sons, including the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh (who acted as surety for him on several occasions). Having no sons of his own, he appointed his stepson Gilbert along with Gilbert Ker of Lochtour (his son-in-law) as executors, shortly before his death, and they were also appointed as factors and attorneys by his widow in 1608. When he died he held no fewer than 19 farms (which he had run with his stepson Gilbert’s help). His daughters Dorothy, and Esther and grand-daughter Jean Rutherford inherited Stobs in 1607. There was another service of heirs in 1619, to Dorothy and Esther and also his great-grandson Robert, with a further service to these 3 in 1621. Gavin or ‘Gawin’ (c.1625–bef. 1678) of Grange, ancestor of the family of Midlem Mill, and also of the Elliots of Minto. He was probably born at Stobs, 4th son of ‘Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins’. He was ‘of Grange’ in 1640 when he and his wife had a charter of North Prieston and Sunderland Hall. He is recorded in 1643 being in possession of Midlem Mill as well as North Prieston in Bowden Parish and part of Grange in Ancrum Parish (valued at £260). He was apparently a royalist, his actions on behalf of the King in 1645 and 1646 were enough to grant his son Gilbert remission in 1685 for being involved in the Argyll rising. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. He was appointed Commissioner of Excise in 1661 and was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663. He settled Midlem on his son Robert in 1653, followed by ‘Graystainhauch’ in 1671. He also appears to have sold Grange before he died. He paid tax for Midlem on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He firstly married Mary Bennett, probably in Jedburgh (and she died without children); given the connection between the Bennetts of Chesters and the lands of Grange, his first wife was probably from that family. In 1646 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Hay of Haystoun, Principal Clerk of Sessions. His sons were Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and Gilbert Elliot, the first Lord Minto (note the change of
