Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wester Essenside, perhaps son of John. He is probably the Robert recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1791 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Wester Essenside as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably also the farmer at Essenside taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at New Mill on Slitrig, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He is probably related to the Robert recorded there in 1712. He was at ‘Newmiln’ in 1789 when his daughter Magdaline was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Robert (1806–70s) born in Ashkirk, son of surveyor James and Rachel Wilkie. He was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his parents and siblings at 27 Loan. His grocer’s and spirit merchant’s shop was at 9 High Street, on the ground floor of the house owned by joiner Walter Wilson. He later became factor for the Cavers estate. In 1861 he was listed as a land factor, still living with his mother and sister at 27 Loan. He also served as Chairman of the Cavers Parochial Board. Robert (b.1810/1) son of a shepherd at Bellsrigg in Deadwater. He was a shepherd in Rulewater, living at Blackburn Cottage in Southdean Parish. In the 1841 census he is recorded as ‘Skyehead’ and at Southdean Rig in 1851. He was one of the main early supporters of the Free Kirk at Wolfelee, being the first elder, one of the first two elders appointed in 1850 and one of the trustees. He married Margaret Armstrong, from Inverness-shire. Their children included: Andrew (b.1834/5), shepherd at Wigg; Helen (b.1836); Janet (b.1838); Esther (b.1840); Jane (b.1843), born at the Rig, who married carter James Moore; Thomas Armstrong (b.1845); John; and Euphemia. Robert ‘Bob’ (19th C.) son of Adam and Janet Cairns from around Newtown St. Boswells. When young he worked on a farm, but an accident injured his arm. He was appointed as postman in the Rulewater district, succeeding George Nichol about 1873. Starting on foot, he later got a horse and trap. In 1900 he was transferred to Newtown St. Boswells, and received a long-service medal from the King. He lived at Weens Cottages, was a keen gardener, librarian for Hobkirk, active member of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of shepherd Robert Hume. His children were: Adam, assistant gardener at Wolfelee, who married Martha Dalgleish; Robert, gardener at Hunthill, who married Margaret Eunson; James, blacksmith at Wark-on-Tweed, who married Euphemia Hope; George, footman at Kippilaw House; John, grocer; William, tailor; Charles, gardener; Helen; and Janet. Thomas (15th C.) recorded ‘in quithalch braa’ in 1494/5. He contributed ‘1 nag’ to the itinerant court held in Selkirk. His lands could be Whitehaugh Brae near Hawick. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1522, for the Homes of Wedderburn. Rev. Thomas (c.1577–1626) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1597, he became minister of Soutra in 1605 and was translated to Hobkirk in 1609. He died sometime in the first half of 1626, with William Weir becoming Hobkirk’s next minister. He married Janet Sinclair (who was buried in Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh in 1667), widow of James Brydon. Their son John became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1629, while another son was probably the Thomas who was minister to the garrison of the Earl of Callendar in 1645, then to a congregation in Hartlepool and finally to Slamannan. Rev. Thomas (c.1666–1716) minister at Southdean. He was son of Thomas, gardener to Andrew Edmonston of Ednam and descended from the family of Rousland, near Kinneil. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1686, was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1691 and became minister at Ednam in 1692. He was translated to Southdean in 1700 and remained there until his death. He is said to have died after being struck by lightning while exorcising a ghost from a building at Wolfelee (there seems to be some truth in this story, with a tradition that the main house there was haunted by a brownie, and evidence that he was buried quickly after his death, but few details are certain. He was a quiet man, little known beyond his congregation, but respected for his piety and pastoral duty. In about 1693 he married Beatrice Trotter of Wideopen (on Kale), daughter of Alexander Trotter of Fogo and Margaret Home of Bassendean, and she died in Edinburgh in 1725. Their children were: Andrew (b.1695); Alexander (b.1697); Isobel (b.1699); James (1700-48), well known as a poet, author of ‘The Seasons’; Margaret; Mary (d.1790) who married William Craig in Edinburgh and whose son James planned Edinburgh’s New Town; Elizabeth (d.c.1746), who married Robert Bell, minister at Strathaven, in Edinburgh in 1740; Jean (d.1781), who married Robert Thomson, Master of Lanark Grammar School; and John (d.1735), who acted as dictator for his brother James. A brass plaque was added to his gravestone at Chesters in 1867.

Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull, daughter of the Laird of Knowe in Minto Parish in 1721. He was re-buked by the Hawick Session for this ‘irregular marriage’, which took place in England. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Dryden in 1718 and their children included Adam (b.1722). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Janet (b.1724) and James (b.1726). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Denholm. He is probably the Thomas who married Marion Tudhope in Cavers Parish in 1728. His children included Adam (b.1734). He is probably also father of some of these children baptised in Cavers Parish (with the others being part of the other Thomas; family): Helen (b.1728); Bessie (b.1729); Helen (b.1730); Alison (b.1732); George (b.1732); Adam (b.1734); and an unnamed child (b.1739). Thomas (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 he was listed as holding part of Minto Hills farm ‘in tack’, the other part being held by Andrew Nichol. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1787. He married Margaret Elliot in 1785 and they had an unnamed son in 1787. Thomas (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who was already deceased when his daughter Marion died in Hawick in 1815. He is probably the carrier of that name who witnessed a baptism for John Hardie in Hawick in 1768. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Mervinslaw Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Roan. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) tenant in Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1702 he was listed as servitor to Gideon Scott of Fahnash. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included William (b.1702) and Margaret (b.1707). The witnesses in 1702 were smith John Dryden and Robert Riddell, miller at Newmill. William (17th/18th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eis the water’ in 1694. Perhaps the same William witnessed a baptism for smith John Dryden in 1705; Dryden’s wife was Isobel, who may have been his daughter. He could be the William who married Agnes Cook and whose children included James (b.1680); the witnesses in 1680 were William Wilson and William Paisley. He is probably the William ‘older’, who (along with William ‘younger’) witnessed a baptism in 1716 for James Scott in Stobicote. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘officer’ in the Hawick Session records of 1722, when he was asked to summon a person to the Court of the Baron Depute. He was probably a Burgh Officer of the time, but may instead have been a Kirk officer. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Janet Elliot in 1729. Their children included Margaret (b.1733). In 1733 he is recorded being at ‘New Miln’ (even although the batosm was in Roberton), making him confused with William in Newmill. William (18th C.) recorded ‘at New miln’ in Hawick Parish in 1740. He may be the William ‘younger’, who (along with William ‘older’) witnessed a baptism in 1716 for James Scott in Stobicote. He was ‘in Newmiln’ in 1720 when he witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott in Branxholme Town, William Mitchellhill in Branxholme Town and James Dryden in Newmill. He was probably son (or grandson) of Robert, tenant in Newmill. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1738); and Helen (b.1740). Janet (b.1736), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his daughter, as well as Margaret (b.1733), baptised in Roberton. The witnesses in 1740 were blacksmiths James Dryden, elder and younger. William (d.bef. 1791) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Beatrix Scott and she died in 1791. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is listed in 1780 as possessor (probably tenant) of the lands of Horse Park, with rent of £9 9s. William (18th C.) footman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. In 1791–73 he was still footman at Cavers for George Douglas and in 1794 and 1797 was a house servant at Cavers. His son could be the ‘William Thomson, Jun. Cavers’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Netherraw according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. William (18th/19th C.) listed at Gatehousecote on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (b.1799/1800) from Selkirk, he was a tailor on Allars Crescent. He was listed there in the 1851 census (when he employed 3 men) and in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was at 1 Manse Lane. His wife was Isabella and their children included Agnes, Margaret, William, Andrew, Ann and Jemima. William (b.1810) manufacturer of hosiery on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a son of surveyor James, and was living at about 27 Loan with his parents and siblings in 1841. William (b.1790/1) stone dyker living at Longhaugh on Hermitage Water in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Thomas, Jane (whose married name was Scott), Margaret and Janet. William (b.c.1820) stone dyker, born in Minto Parish. In 1851 he was living at Stouslie Schoolhouse with his wife Elizabeth and children Mary, William L. and James. William (19th C.) mason in Denholm in the 1860s. He was a registered voter at that time. William (19th/20th C.) farmer at Hummelknowes and later Coliforthill. William Lyndsay (19th/20th C.) High School Rector 1908–19. William ‘Bill’ or ‘Jimpy’ (1936–) worked in various mills in Hawick, and long involved with the British Legion, he was Common Riding Secretary 2001–05 (formerly spelled ‘Thomason’, ‘Thomesoun’, ‘Thompson’, ‘Thomson’, ‘Thomsonne’, ‘Thomsoun’, ‘Thomsoune’, etc.; also pronounced as in ‘Tamson’ or ‘Tham-son’).

Thomson’s Cave (tom-sinz-kāv) n. name given to a particular cave on the bank of the Teviot near Ancrum. This is said to have been a popular haunt of for the poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’), who wrote his name on the roof.

the Thomson Well (thu-tom-sin-wel) n. small ornamental iron drinking fountain on the site of the Mid Raw before the Brown Fountain was built. It was provided by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, Renfrewshire and handed over to the town in late 1897. It can be seen in a photograph of Drumlanrig Square taken in about 1898. It apparently bore the inscription ‘Presented by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, to his native town in commemoration of Queen Victoria’s record reign, 1897 . . . It’s yer ain; protect it’. However, it was only in place for a few years and its whereabouts are unknown.

thon (thon, thōn) adv., adj., pron. that, those, yon, yonder — ‘This is mine, that’s yours, but whae’s aucht thon?’ [JAHM], ‘Yiddie’s a bleeht fallih, bit A dinna leike thon Jock yin!’ [ECS], ‘What’s the name o thon close it the Croon Hotel?’, ‘But still, up thon weary brae, Outward aa blundert . . .’ [DH] (this form is peculiarly local, while yon appears in other British dialects; also sometimes thone: it is used to indicate more distant objects than ‘this’, while yon corresponds more often with ‘that’).

thonder (thōn-dr) adv., adj., pron. yonder, over there — ‘if ce’r lookin for yer fither heい’s ower thonder’, ‘Thonder was the monument A jaloozed ti be the Lilliard’s Edge Memorial’ [ECS], ‘Guid-nicht to my freend owre thonder’ [DH], ‘Away up thonder abune the Wusp . . . Westminster . . . ’ [DH].

thone (thon) adv., adj., pron. that, those — ‘A fair likeet Nardini’s ice cream. Was thone no the best?’ [We] (also thon).

thoom (thoom) n. a thumb — ‘he’s aa fingers an thooms’, ‘A ken ma thoom’s beelin, ‘cause it’s putt, puttn (throb, throbbing)’ [ECS], ‘. . . Wi’ an’ crackers no’ the size O’ even ane’s thoom nail’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘thoomb’ or ‘thoun’).

thoom-steel (thoom-steel) n., arch. a stall or covering for an injured thumb.

thoonsand (thoo-zind) n. a thousand — ‘. . . but A’d a thoonsand rather be sair hackin’ treis than hing about like this daein’ nocht’ [JEDM], ‘. . . for gettin’ a thoonsand folk throw their test’ [IW], ‘Ten thoonsand hands were raised on high, Wavin’ an’ raxin’ towards the sky’ [WP], ‘A thoonsand buttercups waited to confirm Yin’s likin’ for butter . . . ’ [DH], ‘What sacrifice To gie a pound Gin I’ve a thoonsand mair?’ [WL], ‘Weary an’ dowie, aye mysel A thoosand times I’ve tried ti tell . . . ’ [WP] (cf. thoosant).

Thor (thôr) n. Norse god of thunder, rain and farming. Son of Odin, he is traditionally thought as one of the gods in the Hawick battle cry ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’. It is unclear how old the tradition is of associating Thor with the Hawick slogan, but there appears to be little evidence that it precedes Victorian attempts to explain its origin. There is certainly no mention in Hogg’s song of 1819 (which does mention Odin), or in anything published earlier than that – ‘The spirit still lies on the Border side’ – ‘The spirit of Thor and Odin’ [JB], ‘With spirit rapt, and, full of kith and kin, Pray Thor of Holy Church exalt her horn’ [JBSS].

Thorbrand (thôr-brând) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1707 when Walter Deans was fined by the Council for summoning him to the Court in Jedburgh when the case was already being considered by the Court in Hawick. He is probably the Adam whose daughter Jean was baptised in Hawick in 1703. George (17th C.) son of wright James. He was witness to the document describing his father’s work on the ‘steiple-loft’ in St. Mary’s Kirk in 1684; he is referred to as ‘my sone wryter thereof’. He was probably son of the James who married Jane Veitch. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobum Thronbrand in Wiltoun’ in 1553/4 when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. It is not known where in Wilton he was tenant or whether he was related to later local Thorbrands. Bailie James (17th C.) recorded in 1660 when Bailie Walter Chisholme promised that he would not disobey the Burgh’s rules regarding ‘the question of neighbourhood for theiking’ between them. He could be the James who was one of Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). He was listed as Councillor in 1668 and Bailie in 1673. In 1669 a woman was fined for saying that ‘the jogges was mair fitting for him nor hir’; he was probably Bailie at that time. He was described as a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Lord of Queensberry in 1672. He may be the wright on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Also in 1673 he was witness to baptisms for John Chalmers, Thomas Cowan and James Newbie. In 1683 wright Francis Gledstains was fined for attacking him and for stealing the 4 ducks that he had caught. Also in 1683 he was the wright who was late ‘baylea in Havicke’ when charged with the task of constructing the first gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk. This was the ‘Steeple (or Middle) Loft’ in St. Mary’s in 1684. He was married to ‘Jeane Wetch’ (presumably Veitch). His sons included: Thomas (b.1652); and George (b.1654), who married Margaret Scott. Jane, who married William Laing, may have been his daughter. Given the confusion between the names he may well be the ‘Bailyea Thorburne’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1675 he witnessed a baptism for William Welch (or ‘Wetch’), who may have been related to his wife. James (19th C.) farmer at Stonedge in the 1860s. John (17th/18th C.) wright in the early 1700s. He is recorded in the Parish Records as ‘wright in Hawick, and this, with what Bailife Purdem pay’d him, is all he gote for placing about Mr Elliott’s grave stone, £12’. He may be the John who was listed as ‘student’ in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Elliot in Whitchesters. Robert (16th C.) witness to an instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1592. Simon Routledge was in ‘Cruik’, while he described as being ‘there’, presumably meaning he was a resident of Crook, but not a tenant (formerly ‘Thronbrand’; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorburn).

Thorburn (thôr-burn) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His property may be the ‘Thorburn’ marked on Buccleuch Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He had an unnamed child who died in 1798 and another who died in 1811 (where his is recorded as ‘Berwick Carrier’). He is probably the Adam who married Janet Paterson and whose children included: Agnes (b.1796); Janet (b.1803); and William (b.1807). Adam (1764–1837) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America, settling in Bovina, New York. He married Janet Patterson and their children were Adam, William, Catherine, Janet, George, Nancy and James. Andrew (19th C.) son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He is said to have gone out to the New Zealand gold rush with local builder John Eckford, and to have died in New York at the age of 99. Both his sister Janet and brother George are also said to have died at an advanced age. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. He could be the George who married Helen Tailor in Ashkirk in 1707. George (18th...
C.) smith in Ashkirk. He was said to have married Jean, daughter of James Anderson and Helen Lithgow; their daughter Jean married John Anderson, tenant at Newton, Wilton Parish, and whose daughter Jean married John Eckford, who later claimed the remains of the fortune of his ancestor Hector Lithgow. Another daughter, Betty, married John Russell in Ashkirk in 1760. Assuming that the genealogy is essentially correct, then he would have been born around 1725 and could have been son or grandson of the earlier George from Ashkirk. George (b.c.1755) farmer at Stonedge. He was listed there in 1841, along with his son John and his family. His children included: John (b.c.1790), who farmed Stonedge after him; Thomas (b.c.1800), born in Ashkirk Parish, who helped his brother John on the farm; Janet, who married farmer William Little and lived to be 99; Andrew, who went to New Zealand and died in New York, aged 99; and George, shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston, who died at over age 80. He is easy to confuse with a contemporary man from Ashkirk; the forenames used are similar enough that the 2 families are surely related (or being confounded here). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jeanie Henderson in Wilton Parish in 1786. Their children included: Jeanie (b.1788); John (b.1789); Anne (b.1791); George (b.1793), who was a carrier in Newcastleton; Thomas (b.1795); and James (b.1797). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkir Parish. His children included John (b.1828). He may be the same man as George from Castleton Parish. George (1793–1884) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of farmer George. He was a carrier in Newcastleton, operating a weekly service to Hawick according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed at about 4 Stopford Street. He could be the George of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Janet Geddes, who died at Stonedene in 1832, aged 33. He secondly married Mary Inglis, who died in 1889, aged 88. His children included: George (b.1818), who died in infancy; Andrew (b.1819); Jean (b.1821); Jane (b.1822); and Lieut. James (1824–58), who died at Aldershot Camp; John (b.c.1828): William (b.c.1840): Margaret; Isabella; and George (again). George (19th C.) said (by J.H. Haining) to have been son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He was shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston and claimed to have died at over the age of 80, like his sister Janet and brother Andrew. 2 of his daughters were: Kate, farmer at Harwood; and Jane, widow of wool agent William Dalgeth. However, there is no record of him on the local census records of the mid-1800s. George (b.c.1820) son of John. Like his father, he farmed at Stonedge. He was one of the 18 founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. He was tenant there in the 1860s. George Cumming (1905–1974) son of Park gardener Jack and brother of Hawick R.F.C. Secretary John. He worked at Forbes Nursery as a schoolboy, and was educated at Edinburgh University, where he received a Ph.D. in horticulture. He was founder and Managing Director of Global Horticulture Limited. He was Chief Guest of the 2009 Common Riding. James (18th C.) footman at Cavers in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for James Douglas of Cavers. James (19th C.) local schoolmaster of whom a portrait exists. James (b.1824) born in Hobkir Parish, son of John. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Probationer M.A. of U P Church’ when visiting the house of John Governlock in Ewesdale. He may be related to Rev. John, who was also from Hobkir. Janet (18th/19th C.) daughter of George, farmer at Stonedge. She married William Little, farmer at Salenside. She is said (by J.H. Haining) to have ‘lived to be 99, got second sight and a third set of teeth, although they decayed very quickly’. She has a brother Andrew who also lived to 99, and another brother George, who lived beyond 80. Jean (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when she was working for Thomas Turnbull. Probably the same person was a female servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was married to Janet Gillis and their children included John (b.1703). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Inglis in 1754. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Helen Bulloch in 1756. John (d.1794) carrier. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish. He was ‘killed by his own cart at Drydon’. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Minto Kames. He may have been son of Thomas, who was farmer there before him. He was recorded at Kames in the 1789–1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 12 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Kames in 1797. He is probably the John who married Betty Horsburgh in Minto Parish in 1785 and whose children included Isabella (b.1786), Nelly (b.1789), Margaret (b.1790), Betty (b.1792), Jane (b.1797) and Robert (b.1798). John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house and grocer on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same man as the carter and farmer. John (b.1784/5) farmer at Stonedge, son of George. His wife was Elizabeth and children included: George (b.c.1821); Eliza; Isabella (b.c.1835) and Jane (b.c.1837). He was at Stonedge in 1841 along with his elderly father. He was still living at Stonedge in 1851, along with his brother Thomas; he was then employing 4 men and farming 50 acres of arable land and 1250 acres of pasture. By 1861 his wife was a widow, and his son George had taken over Stonedge. John (b.1790/1) farmer up the Loan and also a carter. In 1841 he is listed at Green Wynd as a farmer, and in 1851 is a carter on the Loan and farmer of 10 acres. In 1861 he was a ‘House Proprietor’ at 32 Loan. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Beck, and their children included: Margaret Wilson (b.1819); Isabella (b.1821); John (or ‘Jack’, b.1827), also a carter; William (b.1829); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Galashiels mason Adam Thomson in 1859. He is probably the John born to Robert and Isabell Hall in Hawick in 1791. John (19th C.) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was associated with Allars Kirk in Hawick. He became 3rd minister of St. Paul’s Relief Kirk (in Aberdeen) in 1841. The church had financial difficulties, closed in 1842, to reopen in a new building, and in 1845 he resigned amid controversy. However, within a few months he was minister of the Relief Kirk at Dunning. He became minister at Gatehouse of Fleet in 1851, leaving in 1859 and dying in Glasgow. He married Jessie Walker and their children included John, Susanna, George and Elizabeth. John (b.1827) son of carter John. Like his father he worked as a carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 32 Loan along with his elderly father. His wife was Margaret (from England) and their children included Agnes, Susan, John and William J. John (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son Douglas in 1846. John (b.1829/30) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a ploughman. In 1861 he was living at Easter Essenside Cottage. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret, Andrew and Jessie. Mungo (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He was at Friarshaw in the 1780s and 90s according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isobel Redford and their children included: Robert (b.1791); Andrew (b.1793); Mungo (b.1795); William (b.1797); James (b.1799); and John (b.1803). Mungo (b.1794/5) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was farmer at Nether Bowerhouse in Berwickshire in 1861. Probably the same Mungo was at Headshaw in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Robert and Andrew. Robert (18th C.) wheelwright in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Rae and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1743. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer in Hawick recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Where he farmed is unclear. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Kames in Minto Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–88. He was surely related to John, who farmed there immediately afterwards. Thomas (b.1798/9) son of George, farmer at Stonedge, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at ‘Stonedge Stable’. In 1851 he was at Stonedge helping his brother John with the farm and in 1861 was a ‘Barnman’, helping his sister-in-law Elizabeth. He died unmarried. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Wooplaw in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was probably related to John, who farmed at the neighbouring Lethem. Walter (18th C.) tailor of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Ballantyne in 1762 and their children included: Robert (b.1763); Adam (b.1766); and an unnamed child (b.1773). The witnesses in 1763 were John Thorburn and Walter Ballantyne and in 1766 were Robert and Adam Thorburn, who were surely related. He may be the Walter who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1780 and 1785. His children included: Janet (b.1780); Thomas (b.1784); and Walter (b.1785). Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Langton in Ashkirk Parish. In 1797 he paid tax on 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse there. Walter (19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of 21 Bucleuch Street. His family’s land there is marked ‘Thorburn’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He was nephew of William of William Lockie & Co. He married Betsy Stevenson Huggan, daughter of hosiery worker Thomas. Their children were William Lockie (Cornet in 1911), Bessie and Mary Hall (who married Robert Laidlaw). Walter (b.1822/3) resident of Roberton Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Harden in 1841, was living with his mother Janet Lockie at Bothwickbrae Haugh in 1851 and was at Bothwickbrae Burnfoot in 1861. He married Beatrix Scott from Newcastleton. Their children included Wilhelmina (b.1850), William, Henry, James, Janet and Marion. Walter Lockie (20th C.) Cornet in 1937, who was Right-Hand Man for a second time after WWII in 1946. He was usually referred to as ‘W. Lockie’. William (d.1836) tailor on the Howegate. He was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in the late 1790s. He was possibly the son of Walter and Christine Ballantyne who was born in Hawick in 1768. He is recorded as tailor and ‘furnishing’ on the Howe- gate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Like some of the Independents, he later became a confirmed Baptist, and was effectively leader of that group in Hawick until his death. He married Margaret Renwick in 1792 and their son Walter was baptized the same year. The witnesses were weaver Robert Renwick (probably related to his wife) and tobacconist William Brown. He may also have married Margaret Lunn in 1800. William Lockie (19th/20th C.) son of Walter. He worked as a hosiery manager and was Cornet in 1911. He married Agnes, daughter of coal merchant Andrew Robson. Their son W. Lockie was Cornet in 1937 and farmed at Kidshielhaugh, near Duns (also written ‘Thorburne’; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorbrand).

Thorlieshope (thør-leez-hôp) n. farm in the Liddel valley near Saughtree, once a seat of the Elliots. The house is situated in a glen, with similarities with the location of Harden. It is ‘Thorleshope’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. ‘Robert Elwald’ was Laird in 1488 and ‘John Elwald in Thorleshope’ is recorded in 1498, along with other Elliot Lairds through the 16th century. It is probably the ‘Thornyshope’ recorded in the 1541 rental roll, with a value of 4 merks and with Robert Elliot as tenant. The house of ‘Thirleshope’ belonging to ‘Arche Elwode’ was burned by the English in 1541. Probably the same ‘Arche Elliot of Thirlshoup’ rented Southdeenrig and Caldecleuch from Melrose Abbey in 1557. Robert Elliot, called ‘Hob of Thorleshope’ was among the 34 thieves who were captured in Hawick in 1567 by the Regent Moray. John of Thorleshope is listed among the Elliots of the Braidlie branch in 1583, while John ‘of Thorlesope’ signed a bond of assurance in 1584, on behalf of the Elliots of Thorleshope. Adam ‘Rakkis’ was recorded there in 1611. The lands were already owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1613. John Elliot ‘callit Dods’ was tenant in 1623, as well as Robert Routledge. The lands appear to have part of the estate of Scott of Mangerton in 1643 and were valued at £520 in 1678, when John Elliot owned them. John Graham of Claverhouse (‘Bluidy Clavers’) wrote a letter from there to the Marquess of Queensberry on 3rd July 1685. Tax was paid on 5 hearths at ‘Thorlishopes hous’ in 1694. Thomas Hall was Laird in 1761 and William Walker by 1788 and still in 1811, when it was valued at £520. William Nichol was steward there in 1841. John Wilson lived there in the 1860s. It was farmed by the Jardines in the 19th century. It is said that the tower stood where the current garden is. A former house (perhaps the tower) was once described as being a ruined 2-storey building, with lintel dated 1682 and monograms ‘DME’ and ‘WEAC’ (surely related to William Elliot of Thorleshope and Christian Ainslie, since this is the year of their marriage). This lintel and some other stonework was built into the new farmhouse, erected in the 19th century. A mineral spring on the farm, up in Deadwater, was once regarded as having healing properties. There is also a disused lime kiln and quarry near the house, while further to the east, the Thorleshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries operated until at least the end of the 19th century. Thorleshope Pike is a nearby hill reaching 1,180 feet. A ‘decorated stone disc, smoked on one side, whole surface polished’ from here is in Hawick Museum. Sir Walter Scott used the name as the basis for ‘Charlieshope’ in ‘Guy Mannering’ (the name probably means ‘valley with the thorny clearing’; it is ‘Thorleshope’ in 1488, ‘thornlawishop’ in 1494/5, ‘Thorleshope’ in 1498, ‘Thorleshop’ in 1500 and 1516, ‘Thirleshope’, ‘Thorleshope’ and ‘Thoralshopp’ in 1541, ‘Thorlyshop’ and ‘Thorlyshope’ in 1546, transcribed as ‘Thorlishoup’ in 1547, ‘Thorlishoip’ and ‘Thorlishop’ in 1569, ‘Thornesope’ in 1583, ‘Thorlishop’ in 1594, ‘Thorlesop’ in 1595, ‘Thirlshope’ in 1613, ‘Thorelsop’ in 1623, ‘Chorlesoip’ in 1646, ‘Thorlishope’ in 1648, ‘thorshipp’ in 1678, ‘Thorleshope’ in 1690, ‘Thorleshope’ in 1692, ‘Thorlishop’ in 1704 and ‘Thorlishope’ in 1811; it is ‘Thorleshope’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Thorlishope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Thorleshope Burnfoot (thør-leez-hôp-burn-fi’) n. former steading in Castleton Parish, near where Thorleshope Burn meets the Liddel. Labourer David Jackson and his family were there in 1851 and 1861.

Thorleshope Heights (thør-leez-hôp-hîts) n. general name for hilly area to the east of Thorleshope farm, south of Thorleshope Pike. A triangulation pillar with a height of 396 m lies to the south, between here and Foulmire Heights.

Thorleshope Pike (thør-leez-hôp-pîk) n. hill on the eastern border of Castleton Parish, reaching a height of 360 m. The farm of Thorleshope is located to the west, and Thorleshope Heights to the south. George Watson writes in 1921 of thorn

a small stone cross lying in a quarry near there, possibly part of a boundary marker; there is no sign of it today.

thorn (thœrn) n., arch. the hawthorn tree (used in place names, e.g. Thorniewhats, Thornybank and Thornyhaugh).

Thornebogg (thœr-nee-bōg) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of Martin Crozier, however, the exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Thornhill (thœrn-hil) n. town in Dumfriesshire, the nearest major settlement to Drumlanrig Castle. This is where the Baron's Head Courts were held, which the landowners in Hawick were accustomed to attend twice a year. In 1670 they were explicitly excused from attending the Michaelmas Court on account of the poor state of their crops.

Thorniewhats (thœr-nee-whats) n. farm just to the east of Hollows (Gilnockie) between Langholm and Canonbie, once a seat of the Armstrongs. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch (it is ‘Thornyquhat’ in 1579, ‘Thornythaithe’ in 1583, ‘Thornyquhattie’, ‘Thorniquhatt’ and ‘Torniquhatt’ in 1585, ‘Thorniquhat’ in 1623 and ‘Thorniequhatis’ in 1663; it is marked as ‘Thorniwhat’ on Gordon’s c.1650 manuscript map; note that it should not be confused with ‘Thornycycleugh’ near Falnash).

Thornton (thœrn-in) n. former name for piece of land on the farm of Braidhaugh near Hobkirk, probably near to the Rule Water and ‘Thornton Pool’ (also ‘Thornitoun’).

Thornton Pool (thœrn-in-pool) n. deep pool in the Rule Water near the farm of Braidhaugh. The name was still in use in the early 20th century.

Thornwud Avenue (thœrn-wud-aw-vi-new) n. Thornwood Avenue, a street in Weensland, named for its proximity to the former Thornwood House and constructed in 1976.

Thornwud Hoose (thœrn-wud-hoos) n. mansion built by James Oliver in 1870, which eventually became the Mansfield House Hotel. The name probably derived from being ‘on a bleak hill side covered with whins and thorns’, according to a contemporary newspaper report. The original design, in a Greek Revival style (with Italian elements), was by Glasgow-based architect John T. Rohead in 1867. The house was sold to Lt.-Col. Mudie in 1936 and by the 1950s it had become a hotel (see also Mansfield Hoose).

Thornwud Park (thœrn-wud-pawrk) n. Thornwood Park, a street in Weensland, part of Daykins Drive. The whole street was called Daykins Drive when built in 1982, but this name was favoured by many residents and later made official. It derives from the proximity to Thornwood House.

Thornybank (thœr-nee-bawng) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish, probably located between the lands of Harwood and Fairnielees. This could be the same as ‘Thornydykes’, where Robert French is recorded in 1603 (‘ Thorniebankis’ in 1562).

Thornyhaugh (thœr-nee-hawch) n. flat land by the stream near Falnash. The ‘Chapel of Ease’ for the outlying parts of Cavers and Hawick Parishes was built here some time around 1715. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1738. It was repaired in 1722 and used until 1789, when a new church was built on the other side of the stream. There are now no signs of this building. The area had a teacher appointed in the 18th century. The farm there was occupied by John Hume in 1797 (it is ‘Thornihall’ in 1738 and ‘Thornihaugh’ in 1785; also written ‘Thorny Hall’ and ‘Thorniehall’, perhaps erroneously).

Thorsday (thœrz-dā, -di) n., arch. Thursday (cf. the more modern Thursdi).

Thorterdykes (thœr-tur, thor-tur-diks) n. old name for the land between roughly the Mote and the south side of Rosebank Road. It largely over-lapped with what was also called Moat Croft, and probably also included the areas of Easterdyke-back and Westerdykeback. It may also have been pronounced ‘Whirter Dykes’ in the 19th century. In the early 1760s there were sometimes open air services here for the newly established secession congregation, before the Green Kirk was built. The name is now in use for ‘Thorterdykes Roadhouse’, the pub there (it appears in 1666 as ‘the thorter dikes'; its origin is uncertain, but probably Old English for 'land lying athwart the Mote or a ditch').

Thorterdykes Roadhouse (thör'-ur-diks-röd-hoos) n. public house at Thorterdykes. It is based in the house that was constructed as a villa on Rosebank Road in 1882 for manufacturer Thomas Scott and lived in by the Bonsors.

thorter-ill (thor-tur-il) n., arch. a disease paralysing the necks of sheep.

Thorter Rig (thör'-ur-rig) n. ridge just south of Crooked Loch in the headwaters of the Ale.

Thorter Villa (thör'-vi-la) n. name used in the early days for the house at Thorterdykes, e.g. in the 1897 valuation rolls.

Thorterwud (thör'-ur-wud) n. Thorterwood, former farm on the western side of the Jed valley, just south of Bairnkine and west of Woodhouse. John Laidlaw was there in 1694 (marked on Blaeu's 1654 map and Stobie's 1770 map).

Thursdi (thurz-di) n. Thursday. This was formerly market day in Hawick (also spelled ‘Thrsd-die’; cf. the older Thursday).

the Thursdi (thu-thurz-di) n. common name for the Thursdi before Common Riding weekend. It begins with a Chase up the Nip Knowes, with the Cornet carrying the (unbusse) flag for the first time. After the ‘Hut’ there is a ceremonal singing of ‘Teribus’ in front of the farm-house at St. Leonard’s and a ride around the race-course at the Moor. Then the Principals visit local schools, requesting that the pupils be given the rest of the day and the next off school. In the evening is the Drum and Fife procession round the tolls, the Colour Bussing, the Burgh Officer’s Proclamation, the tying of the ribbons at the Horse monument and the Cornet’s Walk. The evening is the first time that the ‘B’g Threi’ wear their traditional Cornet’s uniforms of green jackets and tile hats. In early times the Halberdiers and musicians would visit the house of the Minister, Senior Bailie, Cornet and also various inns where the participants would dine on the Friday. At each location they would be greeted with refreshments, and they would also stop on the Auld Brig for snuff, with the bussing of the Flag itself being quite an informal affair. Until the 1880s the Flag used to fly from the Chief Magistrate’s house after the morning Chase until it was bussed in the evening. Until 1886 the Cornet and his followers used to call at the houses of his supporters for refreshments after returning from the Thursdi morning Chase. In the late 19th century there used to be a canter round the racecourse after ‘the Hut’ and then proceeded round by Wilton. In the years 1900-04 and in 1921 the Riding of the Marches and the Cutting of the Sod were tried out on the Thursdi morning after the Chase. The striking up of the Drums and Fifes at 6 p.m. on the Kirk Wynd is considered by many people to be the start of the Common Riding proper.

the Thursdi Mornin Chase (thu-thurz-di-mør-neen-chās) n. phrase used to distinguish the Chase of the Thursdi morning of Common Riding week from the other Chases. It is in a sense a rehearsal for the events of the following day. It begins with the usual muster in the Backdamgate, but at 6 m. the Cornet now has the (unbusse) Flag for the first time. As usual the married men go first, led by the Acting Father, followed by the Cornet and his unmarried supporters. There is usually a large crowd at the Vertish, to see the Flag again. The Acting Father takes the Flag at the top of the Nipknowes and carries it to St. Leonards, where it is displayed outside the farmhouse while the Cornet and supporters attend the Hut. Afterwards the Song Singer sings Teribus outside the farmhouse and the riders remount. They proceed via Pilmuir field to the Moor, where they ride round the racecourse, the Cornet leading with the Flag. The return is via Crumhaughhill and the Loan, passing the children arriving at Drumlanrig School. The route then takes the cavalcade along the High Street, over the North Bridge, along Dovemount and turning onto Princes Street, down Wilton Path, through the Sandbed and so back to the Town Hall. There the Principals dismount and the Flag is displayed from the balcony awaiting the Colour Bussing in the evening.

the Thursdi Night Chase (thu-thurz-di-ni’-chās) n. name often used for the Chase at the Nipknowes on the Thursdi evening before Common Riding week, officially called Orderin the Curds an Cream.

timmer-tuned (ti-mur-choon) adj., arch. having no ear for music, tone deaf (literally ‘timber-tuned’).
tinous (ti-mis) adj., arch. opportune, timely, keeping proper time – ‘…to the effect timeous tryall and inspection may be taken, whether such families or persons can live and subsist upon their own, without being troublesome and burdensome to the said incorporation’ [BR1699], ‘…Thomas Hardie, merchant, to carie the said Colour the forsaid day, and had formerly called and caused their officers to give him tymous advertisement upon eight dayes preceiding …’ [BR1706], ‘…and they were only rescued from the perilous situation by the timeous arrival of some of their neighbours’ [EM1820] (there are spelling variants).
timously (ti-mis-lee) adv., arch. punctually, early – ‘…to attend their respective posts on ye day following, without and within ye church, and to be timeously thereat’ [PR1717], ‘And finding that they have lost considerably through their not lifting the annual rents timeously …’ [PR1724] (there are spelling variants).

Timpendean (tim-pen-deen) n. ruined 16th century tower near Lanton, stronghold of the Douglases. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. The tower is high above the south side of the road, opposite the farm of Timpendean, which is on the other side of the A698. The area was referred to by Jedburgh residents as ‘Timp’. It can be reached via a farm track, and is surrounded by older earthworks. The land here was long owned by the Douglases, originally being part of the lands of Bonjedward, but granted to a 2nd son, Andrew Douglas, in 1479. In 1643 the widow of John Douglas held the lands in liferent, and the total value was £418. William Douglas paid the land tax there in 1663 and they still had the same value in 1678. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. By 1707 the estate was valued at £567, with Douglas of Timpendean having acquired additional land in Lanton. ‘Lady Ferninton’ (probably a Rutherford) paid tax for 23 windows there in 1748. In 1788 the estate consisted of ‘six husband-lands of Timpeandean’ (valued at £158), addition lands that had been liferented in 1643 to the widow of John Douglas (valued at £260), part of Lanton acquired between 1678 and 1707 (valued at £149) and another part of Lanton purchased from Capt. Scott (valued at £299). There is a plan of the farm drawn up in 1791. The lands were sold off by George Douglas, 12th of Timpendean to the Marquess of Lothian in 1843. It was tenanted by Scotts in the latter part of the 19th century. There are several circular structures and ramparts on a hill just to the south, presumably older than the tower. The tower is about 29 ft by 24 ft, with an addition made in the 17th century, in the direction of the earthwork. A polished stone axe found at the tower is in Hawick Museum and a bronze axe is in the National Museum of Antiquities – ‘Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikiminn, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lilliesleaf, Or the meriment of Redfordgreen’ [WL] (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh ‘dim pen’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘the valley by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Tympenden’ in 1499/1500, is ‘Tympyndeane’ and ‘Tympanedene’ in 1504, ‘Tympenden’ in 1540, ‘Tympintion’ in 1545, ‘Timpindene’ in 1551, ‘Tympyndane’ in 1557, ‘Tympenden’ in 1584/5, ‘Tympenden’ in 1590 and 1610, ‘Tempindene’ in 1600, ‘Temptanea’ in 1655, ‘Timpenein’ in 1680, ‘Timpingdean’ in 1714, and ‘Timpintine’ in 1739; it is ‘Timpendein’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is written ‘Timpentown’ in 1858).

Tindall (tin-dal) n. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Tyndale’.

tine (tin) v., arch., poet. to lose, suffer loss, mislay, forget – ‘Farewell, he cry’d, I maun gae o’er the hill, But I will see ye soon, or tyne my skill’ [CPM], ‘Come on, come on’, cried Lucky Skrae, And dinna tyne the waye’ [JTe], ‘Their love for thee they never tine Thou bonnie Border toon’[RH]’, ‘The mither tongue, what Scottish heart Its memory wad tine? The lightsome days o’ happy years, The blinks o’ langsyne’ [JT].

TINGS (TINGE) n., pl., arch. Tongs (also TAINGS and TYNGS).

TINK (TINK) n., ins. short for ‘tinker’, a somewhat derogatory name for a Traveller, someone who moves from place to place doing casual work and buying and selling things – ‘the right gypsies were fine, it was they tinks that aye left a mess ahint them’, more generally a mischievous child (see also GYPSY).

Tinkers’ Knowe (TING-KURZ-NO) n. hill on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, between the Teindside and Back Burns and east of Commonside Moor. It reaches a height of 301 m.

TINKLER (TINKLUR) n., arch. A tinker, metal-worker, itinerant peddler – ‘And on 4th july of the same year a tinkler is fined for giving ‘insolent and irreverent language to the two present bayleyes …’’ [DMW].

THE TINLEE STANE (THU-TIN-LEE-STAN) n. The Tinlee Stone, near Peelbraehope. It is an upright stone over 4 feet high, about 3 feet broad at the base, and tapering towards the top. It has been used as a boundary marker, but its original purpose is uncertain. It may be significant that it is situated close to a section of the Catrail. An archaeological report of 1981 describes ‘a stone with a badly weathered inscription’ found nearby.

TINLIN (TIN-LIN) n. Supposed name of the first Cornet, who carried the flag back from Horns-hole. This is possibly a confusion with the tales of Watt Tinlin, as further romanticised by Sir Walter Scott.

TINLIN (TIN-LIN) n. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, mentioned from 1669. In 1693/4 he donated money towards a town bell. Also in 1694 he was ‘John Tinling weaver’ among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1697 he was fined for publicly lying to John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, and then refusing to go to prison. He married Agnes Broun and their children were Robert, Thomas, George, Agnes and probably Walter, father of ‘Rob the Naig’, as well as 2 daughters who died in infancy. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Halliday in 1675 and another for William Bryson in 1680. John (c.1775–1844) son of Robert. He was William Wilson’s first apprentice in 1790. He may be the same John who was recorded as being a constable in 1801. He later lived in the Fore Row. He was there in 1841, with his sister Ann, and recorded as a woollen hose sorter. Joyce nee Cavers, known locally for her beautiful singing voice, making ‘The Fairest Spot o’ a’’ her own. She has served as President of Wilton Dean Women’s Institute and Chair of Hawick Saxhorn Band, and has been involved with the Bright Eyed Daughters. In 2015 she became the first woman to propose one of the main toasts at the Common Riding Dinner. She sings ‘‘The Fairest Spot o’ a’’ on ‘Hawick and Teviotland in Song and Poetry’ (2006) and ‘Soft Lowland Tongue of the Borders’ on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). Robert (1672–aft. 1725) eldest son of John and Agnes Broun. He was a weaver in Hawick. In 1702, 1704 and 1705 he witnessed baptisms for his brother Thomas. In 1697 he was fined by the Magistrates for publicly insulting John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, resisting the payment of a fine to the incorporation, and refusing to go to the Tolbooth. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for Alexander Stewart, dyker in Hawick. He was later quartermaster of the weavers himself along with Swan, as recorded in 1716 (when they complained about other people using their assigned seats in St. Mary’s). In 1721 he was recorded as a weaver when he witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver Andrew Jardine. He married Christine Purdom, and their children included: Thomas (b.1702), who married Janet Riddell; James (b.1704); Christian (b.1707); and possibly Robert who moved to Kirkwhelpington. The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Purdom (surely related to his wife, perhaps her brother) and carrier John Aitkin. Robert ‘Rob the Naig’ (1737–1815) son of Walter and Anne Tinlin. He was known as an outspoken and independent individual, said (just a few decades later) to belong ‘to a class now extinct’. He was Burgh Officer, hence acting as half the town’s police force. He was also beadle at Hawick Kirk, and in that capacity would sit directly in front of the pulpit; he would shake his head when he thought that a visiting preacher had gone on too long, and if the sermon continued he would eventually proclaim ‘hae dune’. Claimed to be a descendant of Watt, his more immediate forebears were said to be from Old Crumhaugh. He used to openly give his views on matters such as the election of Bailies, and always ended his proclamations with ‘Hawick for ever and independent’ (James Wilson suggesting that this custom may have been handed down from earlier Halberdiers). He was also said to be extremely loyal to the Crown and Government, perhaps on account of being the same age as the King; he would refer to anyone who did not support the Government as a ‘blackneb’. He is probably one of the two men (likely Burgh Officers) ‘Tinlin & Hardie’ paid during the 1767 flood for watching the Auld Brig. In 1771 he was paid by the Council for mending his halberd (confirming definitively that he was a Halberdier). In 1773 he was paid for ‘watching the town after fire’. He was the last Burgh Officer who collected the ‘yule fees’. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1760 and she died in 1816. Their children were: Ann (b.1761), who married John Kersel; William (b.1763), called ‘Wull the Naig’; Walter (b.1766), who died in infancy; another Walter (b.1767), who served as his assistant; and John (b.1775). He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1766 for Isabel (most likely his sister) and John Grierson. A story is told of an encounter between him and Wull Craw – ‘Sic a sight I never saw. A Naig sent up to herd a Craw’ [WiS]. Robert (19th/20th C.) farm worker, who moved to Rulewater about 1879, working at Cleuchhead and then becoming hedger at Wolfelee estate. He married Jessie, daughter of Robert Minto, gamekeeper at Wolfelee. Thomas (b.1677) son of John and Agnes Brown and brother of Robert. He was a weaver like other members of his family. He married Bessie Dryden in 1701 and their children were: Jean (b.1702); Nicholas (b.1704), a daughter; Euphan (b.1705); Anna (b.1707); Margaret (b.1710); and Robert (b.1713). The witnesses in 1702 included his brother Robert, in 1704 were his brother Robert along with merchant Robert Brown and in 1705 were Robert again along with Adam Brown ‘headhous elder’. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Kersel in 1720. He married Janet Liddell in 1719 and their children included: Isobel (b.1720); and Euphan (b.1725). The witnesses in 1720 were Archibald Scott of Boornaw and Robert Scott of Burnhead. Walter ‘Watt’ (c.16th C.) said to be a retainer of the Scotts of Buccleuch, holding a small tower in Liddesdale. He was a shoemaker by trade, but became famous as an expert archer, and supposedly shot the Captain of Bewcastle through the thigh. He was the inspiration for the fictional ‘Watt Tinlinn’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, and hence fact and fiction are hard to separate – ‘If I cannot sew’, retorted Tinlinn, discharging a shaft, which nailed the captain’s thigh to the saddle, ‘if I cannot sew I can yerk.’ [SWS]. Walter (d.1761) probably son of John and Agnes Brown, although possibly a grandson. He was a weaver in Hawick from at least 1715. In 1723 he married Anne, daughter of John Tinlin of Kirklands, Ancrum. Their children were: Christian (b.1725), who married a Langlands; John (b.1727); Ann (b.1729), who may have married Robert Farquharson; Robert (b.1737), ‘Rob the Naig’; and Agnes (b.1744), who may have been the mother of Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson. Isabel, who married John Grierson, may have been another daughter. Witnesses to the 1737 baptism of his son Robert were merchant William Tudhope and surgeon James Scott. Walter ‘Wat’ (b.1767) son of ‘Rob the Naig’ and brother of ‘Wull the Naig’. He was assistant to his father and a shoemaker by trade. He was known for his strength of character and quick temper, which ran in his family; it was said that his ‘angry word, like his father’s, was quickly followed by a blow’. He liked to claim the it was his ‘forfadder yat fetched the nag off Flowden Field’. William ‘Wull the Naig’ (c.1763–1836) another member of the family of Burgh and church officers. He was probably a son of ‘Rob the Naig’, and was a cousin of Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson. He may have been beadle at St. Mary’s for a while. However, he was known as a half-wit, who was tormented by youngsters with shouts of ‘Naig, Naig’ or ‘splonsters’. He became a beggar, but had the same blunt, outspoken nature as his ancestors, and was often involved in street skirmishes. He was a common figure around the town in the early 1800s, living near the bottom of the Fore Row. He is listed as ‘Will the Nag’ in the death register (also ‘Tindlin’, ‘Tinlan’, ‘Tinline’, ‘Tinning’, ‘Tinlin’, ‘Tylin’, ‘Tynlin’ and other variants).

Tinnis (ti-nis) n. lands in the Yarrow valley, between Hangingshaw and Yarrow. Modern maps show ‘Old Tinnis’ and ‘Tinnis Farm’. There were Crown lands here from around 1456, held by Sir James Liddell for his fee as Ranger of Yarrow, then John Murray from 1488, with Alexander, Lord Home thereafter. In 1494/5 Thomas, George and Robert Mark and David Pringle were recorded there. It contained some of the King’s flocks in 1502. James Pringle held the lands in feu according to a rental roll of 1541, with rental of £50. A branch of the Pringles held these lands in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there Tod (tod) n. Thomas of Drygrange (1726–1800), W.S., son of Archibald, writer in Edinburgh. His family were from Melrose. He was an advocate, who was one of the trustees for Dr. Robert Langlands when he sold off his estate to satisfy creditors in about 1780. He was on the roll of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1788 he was recorded as liferenter of the lands of Langnewton Mill, as well as lands in Newstead. He was also recorded in 1811 as owner of the feu-duties from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. By 1875 these duties were among the possessions of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Langhope in Ashkirk Parish. He finished editing the 1837 description of that parish for the New Statistical Account, since the minister, Rev. Hamilton, died before publication. He also wrote ‘The obligation of civil rulers to establish the means of religious knowledge and instruction: deduced from the universal moral government of God’ (1836) and an essay describing a device for compressing peat into fuel, published in the Transactions of the Highland and Agricultural Society in 1832 (see also Todd).

Todcleuch see Todcleuch

Todd (tod) n. Francis (1857/8–1910) came to Hawick in 1889 as choirmaster at St. Andrew’s Church, remaining for 15 years. He conducted the Hawick Select Choir and others throughout the Borders and was also a music teacher. Gladys Ruth (1901–2002) born in Hawick, she became a school teacher, returning to town in 1925. She spent 30 years at Drumlanrig School and then 4 years at Wilton, retiring in 1959. Always known as ‘Miss Todd’, she was fondly remembered by ex-pupils. A supporter of the Border Music Festival and lover of the Hawick songs, she lived to celebrate her 100th birthday. James (19th C.) stationmaster at Stobs in the 1860s. William (15th C.) witness to the 1469 sasine for Wolfelee. It seems likely that he was local to Rulewater. His surname is recorded as ‘Tode’. Sir William (d.bef. 1564) associated with Bedrule Kirk from 1541. He was recorded as Parson and Vicar of Bedrule in 1557 and was replaced by William Ker. His ‘tack’ of 1557 was used by Kerr of Ferniehirst to support their 1564 claim against the parishioners of Bedrule Kirk from 1541. He was recorded as Parson and Vicar of Bedrule in November 1557. It is feasible that this is a transcription error for ‘Ker’, who was a clergyman there soon afterwards; however, it seems that he resigned in 1557 and was replaced by William Ker. His ‘tack’ of 1557 was used by Kerr of Ferniehirst to support their 1564 claim against the parishioners of Bedrule that they had rights to the parish teinds (formerly spelled ‘Tod’ and ‘Tode’).

toddie scone (to-dee-skōn) n., arch. a small, round scone – ‘...an old lady called Porter stayed in the bottom flat and sold pies and toddie scones’ [JRa] (perhaps tatti-scone is meant; see also scone).

toddle (to-dul) v. to walk with unsteady steps, walk jauntily – ‘...Some playfu’ toddlin’ sweet wee bairn’; ‘Some lovely youth, or maiden dear ...’ [AD], ‘Come awa’, my little lambie, Toddle...
Todds (toz) n. William (18th C.). In 1693 his children Thomas, Robert, Archibald and Oliver had a decree against Adam Scott of Bowhill and William Scott in Langhope. He was probably a tenant on Langhope (near Ashkirk).

Todgiehill (to-jee-hill) n. former name for Todshawhill.

Todholes (tod-holz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Todholys’ in c.1376, with rental valued at 4 shillings. It is probably the ‘Toddellis’ recorded in the 1541 rental roll, valued at 5 shillings and with Christopher Armstrong as tenant; given the position on the roll, its location is somewhere near Mangerton (the origin could be ‘fox hollows’).

Todholes (tod-holz) n. former lands in the Barony of Cavers, listed in the 1511 charter of the Douglasses of Cavers, as ‘Denummains, called Todholis’ (or ‘Todheolis’). It was listed as the principle ‘messuage’ of the demesne lands of Denholm in 1687 when part of the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas and when inherited by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands were described as also having a mill. It is unclear where these lands were, although possibly the same as ‘Todlaw’ on the Dean Burn (it is transcribed ‘Todholi’ in 1687 and 1698).

Todholeside (tod-hol-sid) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf. Along with ‘Standستانerig’ these lands were sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to the monks of Melrose in the early 1200s, sometime between 1214 and 1249. The precise location is unknown, but it lay between Clerklands and the part of Lilliesleaf held by William, son of Alexander of Lilliesleaf (spelled ‘Thodholesid’).

Todhunter Grain (tod-hun’-ur-grän) n. stream in Castleton Parish which rises on Windy Edge and flows into the Tinnis Burn near Whisgills. There are old sheepfolds along its banks. The former farmstead of Grainfoot may have been at the foot of this stream – ‘Sad thoughts of the past often steal through my brain, As I fancy I see him on the ‘Todhunter-grain’’ [DA].

Todlaw (tod-law) n. farmstead in Cavers Parish, on the Dean Burn, lying between East Middle and Denholmhill. The farmer there in 1797 was Michael Anderson and in 1851 it was Robert Scott. The 1863 Ordnance Survey ‘Name Book’ describes it as ‘a one storey house with garden attached’. This could be the ‘Todha’ near the head of Denholm Dean mentioned in a story related in 1830 (and printed in the Border Counties Magazine of 1881).

Todlaw Wells (tod-law-welz) n. plantation in Bedrule Parish, to the south-east of the Dunion, lying on the route of the Borders Abbey Way. There is an enclosure, rig and furrow lines and a possible settlement in the area.

Todrick (tod-rik) n. older variant of Todrig.

Todrig (tod-rig, tød-rig, -rij) n. farm near the confluence of the Todrig Burn with the Langhope Burn (which flows into the Ale). Some time in the period 1248–58 Henry of Ashkirk gifted the lands to Coldstream Priory. In about 1260 there is a charter from Aymer de Maxwell granting the lands to Alexander de Synton. ‘Hector Landir’ brother of the Laird is recorded in 1494/5. Cuthbert Lauder from there was convicted of reset, comming with rebels and other crimes in 1508. There is a charter of 1511/12 confirming the lands (or perhaps the superiority) to John Lord Hay of Yester, which had previously belonged to his father. The Hays continued to hold the lands (or perhaps part of them) at least up until inherited by John, Lord Hay of Yester in 1610. The lands were held by the Scotts of Harden, with George of Todrig being the 3rd son of the first William of Harden. The family arms of this old branch of Scott of Todrig was cut into their seat in the old Ashkirk church in 1622. However, sometime around 1622 George’s son Walter sold the property to Thomas, younger brother of Sir Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Whitslade. For more than a century it belonged to this new branch of Scotts of Todrig or ‘Toderick’. The motto of this branch was ‘Pro aris et focis’. Tax was paid for 13 hearths on the estate in 1694. Thomas Scott’s lands in Roxburghshire were valued at £552 in 1678 (this being for Wester Essenside, Leaphill and their associated teinds). John Hendry was living there in 1710. The estate was sold off by Thomas Scott in 1746. George Pott was the proprietor on Ainslie’s 1773 map. Robert Brown was living there in 1787–89. The estate was valued at £576 in 1785 and 1802. The main house dates from at least the 17th century on the eastern side, with alterations from 1862 converting it to a more modern farmhouse. The original entrance can still be made out on the south wall. Adjacent farm buildings contain 2 stone panels, one with the date ‘1698’, the other having the initials ‘GP’ (probably for George Pott), together with a lozenge and inscription ‘REBUILT 1833’. A mill is marked nearby, on the opposite side of the Todrig Burn, on Ainslie’s 1773 map. A bronze tripod pot found
Todrig

Todrig (tod-rig) n. Alexander (15th C.) priest who witnessed an Edinburgh document in 1488. His name was spelled ‘Todrick’, and he may have had a connection to the local estate. Archibald (15th C.) described as ‘of Todrick’ when he was witness to a document made at St. Giles in Edinburgh in 1477. Probably the same ‘Archibaldus Todryk’ who was a Bailie of Edinburgh according to a charter of 1482. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. Probably the same Archibald was ‘Archibaldi Todrigh’, Burgess of Edinburgh in a charter of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith in 1504, where his son and heir William is also mentioned. George (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded as ‘Todrick’ in 1552. John (15th/16th C.) witness to an Edinburgh document of 1501/2, where his name is spelled ‘Todrick’. Thomas (15th C.) listed as resident of lands in Linlithgow in a charter of 1496. Thomas (16th C.) described as ‘Thomas Todrick, serjeand’ in an Edinburgh document of 1548. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wil. Tothrich’ in a charter of 1428 when he held lands in Edinburgh. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. William (15th/16th C.) referred to as ‘of Todrig’ in 1505 when he was a Burgess of Edinburgh and gained houses on Edinburgh High Street. He is also mentioned (as ‘Willelmi Todryk’) in a charter of Trinity Collegiate Church in 1511. It is unclear whether he had a local connection. Probably the same William was described as a Bailie of Edinburgh (and spelled ‘Todrick’ and ‘Tothrick’) in the period 1501–07 and witnessed another charter in Edinburgh in 1502. He married the King’s cousin Margaret Crichton and was given an exemption from customs for life.

Tod Rig (tod-rig) n. ridge to the north-west of Todrig farm and to the north-east of Langhope farm.

Todrig Burn (tod-rig-burn) n. stream that flows to the east out of Shaws Loch and past Todrig, before joining the Ale Water (it is ‘Toddrig-burn’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todrig Mill (tod-rig-mil) n. former mill near Todrig farm. Walter Nichol was there in 1763 and John Glendinning in 1781 (it is ‘Toddrig Miln’ in 1763 and ‘Todrig miln’ in 1781; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todscleuch (todz-klooch) n. former fortified house in the Liddle valley, near the present Steeleroad-end. It is probably related to Todshaw Sike, which is marked near there on modern maps. The farm is recorded as ‘Todcleuch alias Todclesheiside’ in 1632, among the lands possessed by Hab Henderson. Ninian Wigham was tenant there in 1694, with Andrew Pott, weaver, also a resident. Michael Dang was recorded as farmer at ‘Todscleughside’ in 1797 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with ‘Todscleughsie’ appearing on Stobie’s 1770 map; ‘Todscleuchsyde’ is recorded in 1659 and is ‘Todscleughsyde’ in 1694; the name is presumably related to the fox; note that there is an unrelated ‘Todcleuch’ near Canonbie).

Todshaw (tod-shaw) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley. It is unclear how far back the name goes, because of confusion with Todshawaugh. However, it may be that this general name came first and the ‘haugh’ was added to the nearby farm later. In any case ‘Todshaw’ is listed among those lands granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. The farm was part of the Harden estates in the 17th century. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely George Turnbull, Isobel Renwick, John Turnbull, Janet Turnbull, Walter Fairgrieve, William Henderson, Sarah Rule, Michael Renwick, John Aitchison, Janet Scott, Mark Colart, Janet Paterson, William Grierson, Mungo Brand, Isobel Shortreed, Marion Scott, Marion Brand and Grisel Hall. It was included within Hawick Parish (according to a valuation of 1678) and along with Todshawaugh, Todshawhill, Whithope and Whithope Mill was valued at £1658 when disjoined to the new Roberton Parish. It was included among lands inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester from his father Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1694. Mungo Scott, John Mowat and John Rule were listed as residents.
Todshaw

there in 1694. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. William Miller was there in 1703, Walter Scott in 1710–15, John Jackson in 1711, William Helm in 1720, John Stavert in 1720–26, Patrick Blaikie in 1722 and John Scott in 1725. It was sold by William Scott of Thirlestane about 1750 and was owned by John Murray of Philiphaugh in 1757 when its head lands were divided from those of Mabonlaw. Until 1689 when Roberton was formed, it was part of Wilton Parish, while the separate farm of Todshawhaugh was in Hawick Parish. William Purdie was there in 1763–67, George Coltart in 1767 and Walter Armstrong in 1789. In 1788 the owner is recorded as John Johnstone of Alva, when it was valued at £113 15s 3d and it was £130 in 1811 with the same owner. In about 1874 the owner was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell. It lay between Mabonlaw and Mervinslaw, as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map (while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows it between Mabonlaw and Harden, but this map is not always accurate). The geography is somewhat confused by the existence of several places of similar name stretching over about 2 miles. Todshaw Hill (268 m) lies behind Highchesters Hill, on the north side of the Borthwick valley, with Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean being in the upper reaches of the Wilton Burn. Todshawhaugh farm is on the south side of the Borthwick valley, near where Todshaw Cleuch joins the river, and below Todshawhaugh Hill. And a higher Todshaw Hill (288 m) and the farm of Todshawhill lie about another mile to the south, near Chapelhill farm (recorded as ‘Todschaw’ in a 1588 contract and again in 1643; the name is presumably related to the fox).

Todshaw (tod-saw-). James (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull in Roberton Parish in 1681. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Jean Kinnear in 1683 and their children included: John (b.1684); John (b.1685); and Elizabeth (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were James Scott and George Riddell. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism in Roberton for James Scott and Janet Elliot (formerly ‘Totchaw’).

Todshaw Cleugh (tod-saw-klooch) n. stream that rises near Todshaw Hill and runs in a north-easterly direction to join the Borthwick Water to the east of Todshawhaugh farm.

Todshaw Dean (tod-saw-deen) n. area along a stream in the headwaters of the Wilton Burn.

Todshawhaugh

Todshawhaugh (tod-saw-, to-jee-hawf) n. farm a mile or so along the Borthwick, opposite Highchesters. It was along a tenanted farm of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 167 acres, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Branxholme Park, Branxholme Mains, Todshawhill and Whames. It was also stated to have some stands of ash and birch trees. There was a William Turnbull there in 1426. It was among lands exchanged by Thomas Inglis of Manor with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1446. It is probably the lands of ‘Todschaw’ held by Robert Scott in 1463/4, and Robert Scott was there in 1484/5. John Scott ‘of Todshawhaugh’ is recorded in 1492 and Robert Scott ‘in todshawhalch’ in 1493. The tenant in 1549 was Walter Scott, who was one of the men who complained that their farms had been raided and burned the year before by a group of English and Kers. William Scott, who resided at Whames was also listed in 1549 as ‘alias callit Wille of Todshawhaugh’. Through the 16th century it was held by a branch of the Scotts. In 1627 it is described as paying ‘6 bolls in stok, 1 boll half boll in tenyd, 3 lb. in vicarage’. Walter Scott from Todshawhaugh was recorded in 1628 when he was accused of cutting down some of Scott of Buccleuch’s trees on his park there. There were 11 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Gledstains, Agnes Rule, James Scott, Andrew Cook, Agnes Davidson, Helen Wilson, Margaret Scott, Helen Robson, Walter Hogg, Isobel Scott and Lilias Armstrong. In 1650 John Renwick and ‘Pail’ Murray were tenants. It was part of Hawick Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90. Rev. Thomas Shiel and John Cuthbertson were tenants in 1672 and 1673, Thomas Shiel himself in 1675 and Thomas Shiel and Walter Scott in 1677. The minister was also recorded as tenant of the farm in 1690–93 and with his son Thomas also there in 1692. Robert Langlands appears to also have been tenant here in 1686. The householders recorded there in 1694 were Thomas Shiel, Thomas Turnbull, Robert Murray and Thomas Stavert, with Agnes Murray also listed there among ‘the poor’. William Shiel (also son of the minister) was tenant in 1696 and 1698. James Grieve was recorded there in 1716–23, James Brydon in 1725 and Robert Govenlock in 1727. It was also the site of a blacksmiths in the 18th and 19th centuries. James Grieve was tenant there in the early 18th century (from about 1712) and Walter Grieve (of Branxholme
Todshaw Haugh

Park) farmed there in the late 18th century, until he died in 1800. The farm was then leased to Robert Scott of Singlie. Walter Armstrong was living there in 1800. In 1841 Walter Scott was farm steward there and the residents at the cottages were Turnbulls and Millers. The flat land on the south side of the Borthwick there is known as Todshaw Haugh, and the hill to the west is Todshawhaugh Hill (also spelled ‘Todshawaughe’), etc., it first appears as ‘Todghishalch’ in 1426, is ‘Todshawauch’ in 1446, ‘Togehawch’ in 1484/5, ‘Todshawauchlach’ in 1486, ‘Todshawauch’ in 1490, ‘Todshawauch’ in 1492, ‘Todshawauch’ in 1549, ‘Todshawauch’ in 1591 and 1594, ‘Todschawhauch’ in 1627, ‘Todshahauch’ in 1628, ‘Todshawauch’ in 1648, ‘Todsh-haugh’ in 1678, ‘Todshawauch’ in 1692, ‘Todchhaugh’ in 1694, ‘Todshahaugh’ in 1721 and ‘Todgiehaugh’ in 1757; it is ‘Todshahauch’ on a 1650 parish map, appears to be marked simply ‘Hauch’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Todshaw Haugh (tod-shaw-hawf, -hawgh) n. flat land on the south side of the Borthwick Water, just to the east of Todshawhaugh farm.

Todshawhaugh Hill (tod-shaw-hawf-hil) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Harden Bridge, and to the south-west of Todshawhaugh farm. There are remains of a hillfort and earthworks on the northern spur. The nearly circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter has been almost obliterated by ploughing on the eastern side. The ditch of the ridge -fort appears to connect with this and runs for about 20 m to the south-west, with traces of a rampart along its inner side. A little further south is a peak called Ladies’ Seat, which is a little higher.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil, to-ja-, -jee-hil) n. hill above Chapelhill and Todswahill farms, between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys. It reaches a height of 288 m and has a fort on its summit and settlement a little to the north, as well as some small ponds. The former farm of Todshawhill stood here. To confuse things, another hill of the same name, reaching 268 m, stands on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, near Mabonlaw farm. This (southern) one has a fort on its summit, and the farm of Todshawhill is adjacent. Between these 2 hills is the lower Todshawhaugh Hill. The fort is on a ridge near the summit, about 90 m by 70 m in size, surrounded by 3 ramparts, with an entrance on the west. A crescent-shaped depression inside is probably a hut floor. The other archaeological site on this hill lies on the northern spur, covering an area of about 55 m by 40 m, surrounded by a single rampart, but much denuded by ploughing. There may be an entrance to the north-east and a scooped area inside could be a hut site. Note that there are several forts and settlements on the neighbouring Whitcastle Hill. There is yet another hill of the same name near Aleemor Loch, which is 352 m high.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, between Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean, just to the east of Mabonlaw farm. It reaches a height of 268 m, and can be easily confused with another hill of the same name near Chapelhill farm, on the southern side of the valley.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil) n. hill to the north of Aleemor Loch, which is 352 m high.

Todshawhill (tod-shaw-, to-ja-, -hee-hil) n. former farm near Chapelhill, about 2 1/2 miles west of Hawick. Its early history is closely related with that of Todshawhaugh, with which it can sometimes be confused. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 251 acres, bounded by the Todshawhaugh, Branxholme Mains, Branxholme Muir, Whithope and Whames. It was among the lands that passed from the Inglis family to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1446. From at least the mid-16th century it was another home of a local branch of the Scotts. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. Philip Scott is recorded as tenant in 1549. Andrew Scott of ‘Totchahill, from the family of Robertoun’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. It is described in a 1627 valuation as paying ‘21 bolls stock and teynd; estimat to pay in stock 12 bolls, parsonage 3 bolls, 3 lbs. vicarage’. The Land Tax Rolls of 1643 lists the value of the farm at £133 6s 8d, owned by John Scott of Todshawhill. There were 12 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Agnes Scott, Euphan Haliburton, Helen Haliburton, Joan Scott, Agnes Scott, John Renwick, Isabel Kedie, Robert Renwick, John Renwick, Bessie Hendry, Robert Scott and Margaret Turnbull. Adam and William Scott were tenants from 1632 until about 1671. James Nichol was listed as a tenant in 1671 and Ninian Elliot in 1672 and 1673. James Carruthers was also recorded as tenant in 1673. Walter Scott of Harwood was leasing the farm in 1677. It was part of Hawick Parish until becoming part of the new Parish of Robertin in 1689/90. In 1691 Todshawhillshiel

it was leased to William Ogilvie and in 1693 to James Moffat, William Nichol and Robert Anderson. In 1694 the householders listed there were William Ogilvie, William Young (ploughman), Robert Blaik (shepherd) and James Scott, with Robert Scott listed there among ‘the poor’. William Ogilvie was tenant again in 1696 and Capt. Francis Scott in 1697. Thomas Shiel was tenant there from at least 1699, when he had the farmhouse rebuilt on a more convenient site at about that time. 2 houses were built, each 42 feet long, one having 2 stone chimneys and 8 windows; it is unclear if anything survives from this time. This is probably the ‘Todchill’ where William Pott is recorded in 1702. John Douglas was living there in at least 1711–18 and James Leith-head in 1722. Thomas Shiel was still recorded as tenant in 1735. It was tenanted by several generations of the Scoon family, starting with John in about 1748, with Robert being the last Scoon tenant, who emigrated to the U.S.A. in about 1842 after defaulting on the lease. The farm was then amalgamated with Chapelhill. David Taylor was living there in 1762, James Scott in 1765 and 1771, James Crow in 1766, Andrew Henderson in 1771 and William Taylor in 1781. Robert Scoon is recorded as farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1841 the residents of the cottages there were the Hoggs and the Grahams – ‘The three Scotts o’ Commonside, The Tamsons o’ the Mill, There’s Ogilvy o’ Branxholm, And Scoon o’ Todgichill’ [DJG] (also sometimes incorrectly ‘Todshawmill’; it appears as ‘Todschawhillis’ in 1435, ‘Todschawhill’ in 1446, ‘Todschawhill’ in 1549, ‘Todschaill’ in 1627, ‘Toddiyhill’ in 1678, ‘Toddyhill alias Todschawhill’ in 1660, ‘Toitchaill’ in 1694, ‘Todgahill’ in 1791 and ‘Todgichill’ in 1856; it is ‘Todshahill’ on a 1650 parish map, marked ‘Todshahill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the name is presumably related to the fox; note there is a farm of the same name in Eskdalemuir Parish).

Todshawhillshiel (tod-shaw-hil-sheel) n. former shepherd’s cottage on the farm of Todshawhill. William Lawson was recorded there in 1716, James Thomson in 1721–26, John Stavert in the 1770s and Robert Riddell in 1788–90. William Scoon and Robert Riddell were there in the 1780s and George Michie was shepherd there in 1799 (it is ‘Todshaugh Hillshiel’ in 1771).

Todshawkip (tod-shaw-kip) n. former name for lands near Todshaw. Robert White was recorded there in 1721 when a child of his was baptised in Robertson Parish.

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream behind Highchesters Hill. It rises near Muckle Knowe, runs around Todshaw Hill and joins Wilton Burn.

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream that joins Taylor’s Cleuch and flows into the Liddel Water just south of Larriston. There is a complex of medieval and post-medieval buildings nearby. This may be the settlement once called ‘Todscleuchside’.

Tod Sike (tod-sik) n. small stream that rises on Cockplay Hill and joins the Twislehope Burn just to the west of Twislehope farm.

Todsteed (tod-steed) n. Todstead, former farm in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Todistede’ and with a value of 4 shillings in a rental roll of c.1376. It is unclear where this was located.

toff (tof) n., ins. a member of the upper classes, or more generally someone with a strong ‘proper’ English accent – ‘...A toff cam in wi’ bulging pack And dumped it in the pend’[WL].

toft (toft) n., arch. a homestead, farmstead and attached land (the word survives in the names of several farms, e.g. Tofts, Toftfield, Toftholm and Kirkton Tofts).

Toftfield (toft-field) n. former name of an estate near Melrose, adjacent to Abbotsford. It was purchased by John Usher in 1753, then held by his son James and grandson John. In 1819 it was bought from the Ushers by Sir Walter Scott, who changed the name to Huntlyburn and improved the simple two storey house there. It seems that it was formerly called ‘Tylehouse’, perhaps related to tile manufacturing for Melrose Abbey (the 1574 will of Gibbie Hatley of Gattonside refers to a ‘Faften field’ which may be the same place).

Toftholm (toft-hööm) n. farm in the Hermitage valley, opposite Shaws. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Tofts, covering 329 acres, bounded by Shaws, Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscote, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. Andrew Crozier was there in 1623. James Crozier was tenant in 1694 and William Crozier was also listed there. Thomas Pott was recorded as farmer there in 1797. Adam Scott was shepherd there in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. A sandstone axe-hammer found near here is in Hawick Museum. On the edge of a terrace just to the south-west there is an ancient enclosure and further south-west, on a small terrace, are the remains of a farmstead, named ‘Upper Row’ on the 1863
Ordnance Survey map. There is also a field system and rig lines there (marked as ‘Tothoome’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Toftsholme’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, it has its modern name on Stobie’s 1770 map; also called ‘Toftsholm’, it is ‘Taftsholme’ in 1694: this is probably from ‘howm’, meaning low-lying land beside a river; see also Toftsholm Sike).

Tofts (tofts) n. farm in Kirkton Parish, in modern times split into Nether Tofts and Upper Tofts. The place name is quite old, with ‘William of Tofts’ being recorded as Parson of Cavers in 1333, and possibly the Ingram, Robert and William ‘de Toftes’ recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 also being connected with this location. Hence it may have given rise to a surname. There are deeds from 1550, 1554 and 1639 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. John Turnbull ‘in tofts’ is recorded in 1493. It was owned by the Turnbuls ‘of Toftis’ in the 16th and 17th centuries. Martin Douglas of Tofts inherited lands from his uncle Archibald (presumably the lands of Tofts) in 1608. Martin Douglas ‘of Toftis’ is also recorded in 1615 and John Douglas, ‘called of Tofts’ in 1619. It was valued at £300 in 1643 (when owned by ‘Laird of Tofts’, who also held £ of land in Abbotrule Parish) and in 1678 (when owned by an unnamed Turnbull). William Turnbull of Tofts inherited the 2 farms from his father Thomas in 1695. William Turnbull paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. Anthony Turnbull was there in 1788 and still in about 1813, when still valued at £300. William Richardson Dickson of Alton were there in the 1870s. George and Robert Deans were farmers there in the 1860s (the origin is probably just ‘the homestead’ in Middle English, deriving from the Old Norse ‘topt’: it has its modern spelling at least by Gordon’s c. 1650 map, while Blaen’s 1654 map already shows ‘N. Tofts’ and ‘O. Tofts’).

Tofts (tofts) n. possible former name for Kirkton Tofts (it is unclear whether this is the same place or not).

Tofts (tofts) n. Adam of Norwich (13th C.) listed in 1291 among men who had letters of protection from Edward I. He was serving the English King at Roxburgh Castle. It is unclear whether he was related to the Roxburghshire Tofts family. Ingram (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296 along with William and Robert ‘de Toftes’. His name was listed first, so he may have been the senior member of the family. His seal consisted of a large fleur-de-lis and the name ‘S’INGRAMI D’TOFTIS’. Robert (13th C.) listed as ‘de Toftes’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows an 8-rayed figure and the name ‘S’ROBERTI D’TOFTIS’. William (13th C.) swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, along with Ingram and William. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmo de Toftys’ in 1363 when he was Rector of ‘magna Cauers’. He was most likely associated with the lands of Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and parson of the neighbouring parish of Cavers. He was probably a descendant of the earlier ‘of Tofts’ family.

the Tofts (thu-tofts) n. former farm in the Hermitage valley, just to the north of Toftholm. It is probably the ‘Toftys’ recorded as being in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ in a rental roll of Liddesdale c.1376, with a value of 5 merks. It is shown on Blaen’s 1654 map on the southern side of the valley, roughly opposite the present village of Hermitage. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Toftholm into a farm covering 320 acres, bounded by Shaw, Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscote, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. It probably included the area marked as Tofts Knowes on the modern Ordnance Survey map.

Tofts Hill (tofts-hill) n. hill in Kirkton Parish, just south of Upper Tofts farm. It reaches a height of about 250 m. There is a small pond on the north side and a quarry on the south side. Aerial photography has a slo shown 2 rectangular enclosures, some field banks and some rig lines to the south west of there.

Toftsholm Sike (tofts-hóm-sik) n. small stream that rises at Thiefsike Head and runs roughly parallel to the Hermitage Water, to join that river at Toftholm. There is the ruin of a cottage on its north side, and the remains of 2 shieling-huts in its headwaters, as well as old remains of sheepfolds and dykes (see also Toftholm).

Tofts Knowes (tofts-nowz) n. area of terrace on the southern side of the Hermitage Water, opposite Hermitage Castle. There are the remains of an old settlement there, with a farmstead, an extensive field system, rig lines and quarry pits.

togedder (to-ge-dur) adv., arch. together – ‘…were outlawed for being found togedder by the church censors, after the tenn hour bell was rung’[BR1702], ‘…the present Baylyeas, Robert Hardie and Robert Brown, haveing convened and called togidder the towne Counsell …’[BR1706] (also written ‘togidder’; cf. the more modern the-gither).
toilets (to-ɪ-lɪt) n., pl. there have been many public toilets over the years in Hawick. Present conveniences include those in the Haugh, Howegate, the Cross Wynd and Museum. The Burns Club was built on an 1843 ‘necessary’ and the one at the end of Bourtree Place was demolished along with the railway bridge in the 1970s. Other toilets were at Towerykeside, at the south end of the Little Haugh and by the McDonald Shelter (top of Mansfield Road). The first facilities were installed at the Moor in 1889. Two 1 penny locks were added to the closet doors in 1913 and a new urinal was built in 1925. The first Ladies toilets were built at the Paddock in 1963.

Tojo (tō-jo) n. nickname for High School teacher J. Anderson in the years after WWII.

Tokeley (tōk-lee) n. Albert Victor ‘Vic’ (1928/9–2003) born and raised in Yetholm, he lived most of his life in Hawick, working as an accountant and becoming Managing Director of Croall, Bryson. He was an all-round sportman in his youth. He became President of the Rotary Club, was President and long-time committee member of the Archaeological Society, and was a Tweed Commissioner for 34 years. He was well known as an expert on the Yetholm gypsies and on angling, writing ‘The Kirk Yetholm Gypsies’ (2002). A memorial stone was erected on Yetholm Green.

the Tolbooth (θu-tōl-booth) n. Tolbooths were generally the place where traders paid their fees on market days and where goods were weighed, as well as acting as the town jail. Hawick’s former Tolbooth was on the site of the previous Town Hall, before being demolished in 1781 (with the timber being sold for £1 6s.). It was said to be a ‘humble and primitive erection’ with a thatched roof of heather and a rough barn-like interior. It would have served many municipal functions in its day, including as the local court and town prison. The building was sold to the town by William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1657, although there was probably a building with a similar function before that, somewhere else on the High Street. In fact there is a mention in 1612 of the Town being in debt for a number of reasons, including ‘bigging of thair tolbuith’. The building was said to be in a ruinous condition in 1693 and was rebuilt around 1694. Its use by the Council for meetings is recorded in the Town Book in 1638 and 1660. There was some dispute in the 17th century over the rights of the agents of the Baron to use it for particular purposes. In 1704 it is recorded that it needed to be thatched. In 1724 the Council resolved to demolish the old building and rebuild it, ‘set out to the south corner of Horsliehills House’ (probably on the other side of the High Street), at a cost of 600 merks. In 1727 the Council decreed that the weigh-house ‘or under tolbooth’ should be leased. A stair-case was erected there in 1732. In 1737 the stair was mended and the building re-lined. 2 panes of glass were purchased for it in 1755. A man paid the Council for keeping ‘wild beasts’ in it in 1768. The lock of the old jail door is in the Museum. The word ‘Tolbooth’ was also later applied to the building at the Loan Toll, where the tolls were collected, as well as sometimes being used for other houses at toll-bars on the roads around Hawick – ‘The Court of the bruche of Hawick, halden within the Tolbuith thereof . . . ’[BR1638], ‘Item, whatsoever person that sall be commit- ted in waird, and brekis the Tolbuith, or cuneus furth thereof without license of the bailies, or ane of them, sal pay £10 money, and wardit during the bailles’ will’[BR1640], ‘Walter Scott . . . bailie of the regality of Hawick, under William Lord Drumlanrig, craves of the bailies of Hawick the key of the tolbuith . . . ’[BR] (also spelled ‘Tol- booth’ and ‘Tolbuith’).

tolerat (to-le-ri) pp., arch. tolerated – ‘. . . was ordered to bring a testimonie from Mr. Douglas, Minister of Kirkton, failing which he would not be tolerate to stay in ye toun’[PR1717].

the Toleration (θu-to-le-ră-shin) n. name sometimes used to refer to the 1689 Act of Toleration. This permitted freedom of worship for Protestant dissenters, but not for Catholics.

toll (tōl) n. a system of charging for the use of a road, introduced in the 18th century to fund major road improvements, but enormously unpopular with the general public.

the Toll (θu-tōl) n. name sometimes given to any of the former tolls, particularly the Loan Toll.

toll-bar (tōl-bawr) n. a beam placed across a road at a toll house, to prevent carriages from passing without paying the toll, also used to refer to the adjacent house itself. It was also sometimes also called a ‘turnpike bar’. There were toll bars tollbooth

every few miles along the main roads, following the Turnpike Acts of the mid-18th century. These toll houses were usually licensed for the sale of alcohol, and used as resting points by travellers.
Hawick also had toll bars at the main entrances to town, specifically the Wester Toll, Loan Toll (or ‘Auld Wester Toll’), Easter Toll, Dovemount Toll (or ‘North Toll’) and those at Crumhaugh and at the Common Haugh (also written ‘toll bar’).
tollbooth see tollbooth toll-hoose (től-hoos) n., arch. a toll-house, building in which a toll-keeper lived. These were built every few miles along the main turnpike roads in the 18th and early 19th centuries, as well as at the main entrances to towns. Many are still in use as dwellings today and are easily distinguished because they have a window which seems perilously close to traffic. Existing example include those at Wester Toll, Greenbank (Roberton), Colterscleuch, Fiddleton, Langholm and Heriot. The former toll-house near the end of what became Commercial Road can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races.

the Toll Hoose (thu-től-hoos) n. name used for any of the local buildings where tolls were collected. The name was particularly used in the 19th century for one near the corner of what became Albert Road and Commercial Road. tolls (tőlz) n., pl. one of several toll-bars at the entrances to Hawick or on the neighbouring roads.
In the 17th century even the main roads were in appalling condition. There was a Highway Act of 1669, and another of 1691, which led to little genuine improvement. General Wade’s roads, built in the Highlands in the 1720s and 30s, led to further calls for general improvement and the Turnpike Act of 1750. This made construction of improved roads compulsory, paid for by collection at toll-bars, typically located every 6–8 miles. Hawick was on the Scotch Dyke to Hare Moss toll road, which is now part of the A7. This was established by a special Act of 1764, published in 1770. There were also acts to regulate maintenance of local roads under the statutory Labour system. The highway toll acts were repealed in 1807, but already astonishing progress had been made locally. As well as toll-bars across the main roads, there were also tolls at the entrances to towns, Hawick having 4 of these at one point. They were: the Wester Toll (on the New Road, outside the present High School); the Loan Toll (in the middle of the Loan, for the old road South); the Easter Toll (on Bourtree Place near the old Con Club); and Dovemount Toll (at Dovemount on the road to Edinburgh). Plaques mark their positions. There were additional tolls at other times, e.g. across the Teviot Bridge by the Common Haugh, and another at Crumhaugh.

Tolm (tőm) n. former place name in Liddes-dale. On the 1863 Ordnance Survey map a small plantation in the middle of ‘The Steel’ is marked ‘Tolm Tourick’ (presumably meaning a little tower). Perhaps this was the claimed site of the former tower-house of Steele.
tomati (to-ma’i) n. a tomato – ‘You say ‘tomato’ and I say ‘tomati’; You say ‘potato’ and I say ‘potati’.
tombolo (tőm-bő-lő) n. former name for bingo,
in use around the 1950s.
tombstane (toom-stän) n. a tombstone – ‘. . . but also named on the family tombstane in Duns Kirkya’rd’[IW].
tome (tőm) v., arch. to draw out into a thin line – ‘ti toam taffie’[ECS] (also written ‘toam’;
cf. taw).

Tomes (tőmz) n. Alan ‘Toomba’ (?) rugby player, born in Hawick, but grew up in the Newcastle area, he worked for banks and the gas board. At about 6 ft 5 inches, he playing as a lock, and was known for his large stature. He played for Hawick R.F.C. from 1973, winning 48 caps in 1976–87, a record for a middle row player, and he also played for the British Lions in 1980.

Tomscotsteed (tőm-skő’-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Thomscotsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

the Tongue (thu-tung) n. narrow strip of land on the former boundary between Tofts and Hall-rule. It was said to have been given by Turnbull of High Tofts to Douglas of Cavers as a way of protecting him from any attempts by Elliott of Stobs to force him off his land (as he had done to Turnbull of Denesyde). The field still survives, just east of the Dean Burn, to the left of the A6088 a little before Hawthornsde.

the Tongue (thu-tung) n. spur of land in Castleton Parish, between the Green Burn and an unnamed tributary, situated north-west of Kirk Hill. There are the remains of a farmstead, a cottage and a sheepfold there. The farmstead may be 18th century; the cottage was known as Green-burn, and probably the farmstead also. At the southern end of the spur are further enclosures and ‘lazy-beds’.

the Tongue Burn (thu-tung-burn) n. small stream that joins the Braedlie Burn a little to the north-east of Gorrenberry, on the north side of the Hermitage valley.

tongue-ruits (tung-ritz) n., pl., arch. roots of the tongue, especially in the phrase ‘at one’s tongue-ruits’, meaning ‘on the tip of one’s tongue’ or about to be said – ‘It was at ma tung-ruits ti cry on the hoastery affair’ [ECS].

tongue-tackit (tung-taw-kee) adj., arch. tongue-tied, mumbling, inarticulate because of drunkenness or having something in one’s mouth.

Tonke (tongk) n. Walter (13th C.) recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh Castle in 1296. He was probably a clerk of the English King’s household.

the Too’er see the Toor

toom (toom) adj., arch., poet. empty, unoccupied, vacant – ‘‘Mr. Spunk’ll be lyin’ lookin’ up at St. Mary’s Kirk wi’ a green blanket ower his toom ribs’’ [JEDM], ‘‘He was tired and wat and the big creel was toom’’ [UB], ‘‘We view them now haith toom and bare Wi’ empty pouches’’ [RF], ‘‘Leaving the toom shafts o’ the trap To mock his fuddled ee’’ [WL], not running, idle – ‘‘A stane-nappin injin gaed-on leike a tuim mill’’ [ECS], v., arch. to empty, particularly a drinking glass – ‘‘An’ aye we ca’d the iither cog, An’ toom’d the remain’ horn!’’ [JT] (also spelled ‘toun’, ‘tume’; see also tuim, etc.).

Toomba (toom-ba) n. nickname for Alan Tonnes.

toon (toon) n. a town – ‘There’s a toon, o’ toons the pride That stands on bonnie Teviot side’ [JLH], ‘‘Frae the silent slopes on my native toon’’ [TC], ‘‘On earth, Hawick is the only toon The nicht afore the morn’’ [JMS], formerly any settlement situated at a major farm – ‘‘John Glendenin and Andrew were ordered to gather in the toons following, in ye landward part of ye parish, viz., Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Crofts, and Whitchesters, together with Closses’’ [PR1717], adj. relating to the town – ‘‘...that no other toume or landward heritor of tenements and houses within the said burgh ...’’ [BR1699], ‘‘But the toon-clock cheery chimes owre a’’’ [WL] (also spelled ‘toun’).
the Toon Council

The Toon Council (Thu-toon-koon-sul) n. Hawick’s Town Council. The earliest recorded composition of the Council was 12, plus 2 Bailies, the Clerk and the Treasurer. In 1701 the number was increased by 6 to 18. The Deacon Convenor from each of the Trades also sat on the Council. In 1759 it was decreed that all Councillors had to go on the Common Riding or else forfeit their place on the Council. By 1780 the Council consisted of 31 members, being the 2 Magistrates elected annually, 15 councillors (for life) elected by the sitting members, and 2 representatives (quartermasters) from each of the 7 incorporated trades. This was fixed by a ruling of the Court of Session in 1781, following an action raised by William Freeman and others. During the 19th century the Council met twice a month. The make-up of the body led to it being called ‘the Eternal Council’. The newer Town Council was constituted after the Police Act of 1861, with wider representation by all men paying a rent of £10 or over. The Council saw many changes over the years, particularly with the setting up of the County Council in 1889, and its extension in 1929, and particularly with the setting up of the County Council in 1889, and its extension in 1929, and the associated transfer of responsibility. It was disbanded in May 1975, following local government reorganisation, when power was removed from the burgus and centralised. A minority of people claim things improved.

toon end (toon-end) n., arch. part of a town, neighbourhood – ‘...For weel I ken d’bout yon toon end I’d mony a glowerin’ foe’ [WaD], the Toonfit Kirk (Thu-toon-fi’-kirk) n. the Townfoot Church in Newcastleton, the first to be built in the village. It was erected in 1803/4 for the Burgher congregation, which would become the United Presbyterian Kirk.

the Toon Guard (Thu-toon-gär’d) n. another name for the Watch.

the Toon Hall (Thu-toon-hall) n. the original Town Hall, sometimes called the ‘Town House’ it was built in 1781 and demolished in 1884. It itself replaced the Tolbooth, which dated from about 1694, and earlier buildings before that. The current building was erected on the same site, 36 High Street, in 1884-86 at a cost of £16,000, with architect James Campbell Walker of Edinburgh, selected in an 1883 competition. The design is said to be Scottish Baronial with French elements, and is reminiscent of the work of David Bryce (with whom Walker had worked). The memorial stone was laid by the Duchess of Buccleuch, and the builders were John & William Marshall. It contains the Council offices, as well as the old Council Chambers, the Magistrate’s Courtroom, the main Hall and the Lesser Town Hall. It is used for many municipal purposes, including council administration, concerts and shows, the Colour Bussing, dances, etc. It currently stretches over 34–44 High Street and is a grade A listed building – ‘In the Town Hall all things are ready, Knives and forks we’ll ply them steady’ [AB]. ‘There’s the Town Hall tower wi’ its clock tickin’ ower’ [IWS].

the Toonheid (Thu-toon-heed) n. Townhead, former name for the top of the town, i.e. an area around the West Port. It was used as a location in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory (e.g. for slater Robert Elliot). The Ordnance Survey map of 1863 marks St. Leonard’s farm as ‘Hawick Townhead’.

the Toonhead (Thu-toon-heed) n. former name used for the top part of Denholm village, at the west end.

Toonheid (toon-heed) n. Townhead, name used for lands in Hassendean Parish, probably the same as the modern Knowetownhead. It was also known alternatively as ‘East Mains’. In 1692 Thomas Gray paid the vicarage teinds for the lands there. Thomas Gray, James Thomson and John Hood were there in 1694 (it is ‘Tounheid’ in 1601 and ‘Tounhead’ in 1692 and 1694; it is ‘Toone head’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

toone head (toon-head) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish near Chesters. George Oliver was the tenant there in 1669.

the Toonheid Port (Thu-toon-heed-pör’) n. the Townhead Port, name given at one time to the West Port.

the Toonheid Toll (Thu-toon-heed-tōl) n. the Townhead Toll Bar in Newcastleton. It was located on North Hermitage Street. Christina Telfer was toll-keeper there in 1861. The house still exists, on the right-hand side of the road coming out of the village.

the Toon Herd (Thu-toon-herd) n. former Burgh employee, with responsibility for collecting the town’s cattle in the morning, taking them to the Common to graze and returning them by nightfall. In the early 19th century he also had the Toon Litter (thu-toon-li-'ur) n. carrier for bodies, hired out by the town, acting effectively as a hearse. It is referred to in 1722, when the charge was half a crown for those outside the Burgh or those not paying 'stent nor lott'. It is also mentioned in the Treasurer's Book in 1732. It is unclear when this stopped being used, or what form this took, but it was probably little more than a large wheel-barrow.

Toon-o-Rule (toon-ô-tool) n. Town-o-Rule, a farm north of Bouucher Bridge, formerly a significant settlement in the area, once one of the major estates of Hobkirk Parish, and later being a large part of the barony of Feu-Rule. There were houses along the left side of the syke there (according to Tancred), but there are no sign of where exactly they were. It has also been suggested (by Jeffreys) that the original parish church of Hobkirk was situated here. In 1535 there is a record of ‘Thome Turnbull et Andree alias Dauid Turnbull’ who were tenants there. This could be the ‘towene in Tevedall caulyd Rowlle’ burned by John Musgrave’s men in 1542. The ‘town’ was burned again during the English invasion of 1545. The lands are described in 1562 as lying between the Mains of Hallrule and Plewlandhill on the east and those of Hawthornside and Hoilhouse on the west. ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ obtained a charter of the lands in 1632. William Elliot was tenant in the mid-18th century. Thomas Rule was there in 1788. In 1805 it was sold off by Sir William Eliott to John Wilson of Hallrule, and at that time was also referred to as being the east part of ‘Over or Outer Hailrule’. William Mabon was farmer in the 1860s. There was also once a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The cottage on the north side of the farm was known as ‘North Town-o’-Rule’, referred to by locals as ‘Drythropple’, and renamed ‘Heathfield’ for a while. An old well there (built in circular form) was called ‘Dobie’ or ‘Dubbie’, and probably corresponds to the well marked to the north of the farm buildings on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The residents there used to use the Sun’s reflection off ‘Cloon Craig’ on Ruberslaw to tell the approximate time of day. An ancient oval-shaped earthwork once stood close to the farmhouse, but was largely obliterated by agricultural improvements before the mid-19th century. A prehistoric stone axe-head was found in one of the outfields in the 19th century (formerly spelled ‘Toon o’ Roull’ and variants; the name appears in the records of Jedburgh Abbey; it is ‘villa de Rowe’ in 1535 and ‘Toun of Roull’ in 1694; it appears as ‘Toou of Roull’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Toon-o-Rule Burn (toon-ŏ-rool-burn) n. Town-o’-Rule Burn, stream, running to the north-west of Weensmuir and Heathfield farms, and joining the Hallrule Burn.

Toon Piper (toon-pi-pur) n. official player of the pipes, probably the bagpipes. However, in earlier documents it is unclear precisely what kind of musical instrument is meant, with perhaps the Border pipes being used at some times and it is also possible the word ‘piper’ was also synonymous with ‘fifer’ in earlier times. Pipers are mentioned in connection with Hawick in the early 17th century, e.g. John Tait and John Laing were both ‘pyper’ in 1627. Adam Moffat was rebuked by Ashkirk Parish in 1638 for ‘pyping at bridals’ and was probably associated with Hawick or one of the other neighbouring towns. William Turnbull was appointed as Hawick’s piper in 1674. Thomas Beattie is recorded as piper in 1693/4. In 1700 the town’s piper was fined for playing through the town after the fair; it is recorded that he played the ‘great pipe’, which is unambiguously the Highland-style bagpipes. In 1703 the town’s ‘officers, pyper, and drummers’ were to be paid for ‘coatts att the Common rydeing in anno 1702’ and were also allowed ‘to have coatts att Common-Ryding this year, 1703, as formerly; this makes it clear that the piper and drummer (or drummers) were separate from the Burgh Officers at that time. James Oliver, ‘Jafra the Piper’, is mentioned several times in the Parish records of the 1710s (in connection with misbehaviour!). A man called ‘Fouller’ was paid to be piper in 1721; he was Robert Fowler, piper in about 1721–32. John ‘Meader’ (probably the same as Mather) was perhaps piper 1732–41. William Brown is recorded as Town Piper in 1745 and Walter Ballantyne in the 1770s, the last man whose name we know. Hawick had a town piper (along with a drummer and bellman, although they may well have shared duties) for probably a couple of centuries until the late 1700s, when he was replaced by a fifer (first mentioned in 1797). In 1803 the Council resolved ‘that the piper shall not be any longer continued’, and that was the last official mention. One of the last pipers may have been John Douglas, who is recorded as ‘late piper Hawick’ when his daughter died in 1810. However, there is a reference to him playing the riders back into town in Balbirnie’s version of ‘Teribus’. The Common Riding Procession of 1894 is reported to have been led by the brass band, the drums and fifes ‘and the pipers’. ‘Hawick Pipe Band’ traces its roots to 1937 – ‘... the piper is only allowed four pounds Scots to buy him ane coatt’ [BR], ‘The town’s piper, for his nicht revelling, on going on the fair nicht playing with the great pipe thro the hail town, is fined £100 Scots’ [BR1700], ‘Now Teri Odin blaws the chanter As rank and file the town we enter’ [AB].

Toonrig (toon-rig) n. former fortified house on the Hermitage Water, on the north bank of the valley just east of Gorrenberry (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Tounrig’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Visscher’s 1689 map as ‘Tounrig’).

toonsfolk (toonz-folk) n., pl. townsfolk, townsmen – ‘No’ sae lang syne a guid wheen o’ the toonsfolk didna’ hesitate tae condemn the invectives they could command’ [BW1939].

toonsmen (toonz-men) n., pl. townsmen – ‘I canna schule mysel’ tae fit Wi toonsmen, drawn sae keen the bright Upon each other’s avarice’ [DH].

toon’s officer (toonz-ô-fee-sur) n., arch. an officer of a burgh – ‘...and James Olifer, toon officer, playing before him’ [PR1718], ‘Rob Tinlin whae was the toon’s officer an the pairish beadle’ [HEx1965] (see Burgh Officer).

the Toon’s Purse (thu-toonz-purs) n. former prize race at the Common Riding. It was the opening event of the 1834–36 Friday Races.

the Toon Steel-yaird (thu-toon-steel-yârd) n. former steel-yard in Hawick, located on the High Street. It is recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory, when James Kennedy was ‘collector’.

the Toon Subscription Purse (thu-toon-sub-skrip-shin-purs) n. race run at the Common Riding in at least the 1840s to 1860s. It took place on the Friday on the Moor in many years, but in some years there was a race with this title on both days. Presumably the prize money was raised by subscription in Hawick.

the Toon Treasurer (thu-toon-tre-shoo-rur) n. former position on the Council, charged with gathering the money from Burgesses and others. The first record of the election of a person to this office in in 1655. The position was later named Burgh Chamberlain. The Treasurer kept records of the financial transactions of the Burgh, which provide valuable information about what went on in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries. In 1739 the amounts started to be written in sterling rather than in Scots money. The Treasurer was elected annually on the same day as the Bailies, i.e. the 2nd Friday in October. Extracts from the Town Treasurer’s books in the period 1721–1805 are given in James Wilson’s ‘Hawick and its Old Memories’ (1858). People who have held the office include: John Scott, around 1734; William Scott, at least 1763–69; William Wilson, early 1800s; Walter Wilson, early 1800s; James Scott, early 1800s; James Oliver, 1820s; James
D. Kenney, mid-1800s; John Murray, 1880s; A.S.
Lawson, late 1800s; Adam Laing, early 1900s; ‘toore’, ‘toier’ and ‘tour’).
George Gass, early 1900s.

the Toor (thu-toor) n. popular name for Drumlanrig’s Toor, for centuries the most imposing building and de facto geographical centre of Hawick. The word is also used generally for this area of Hawick (also spelled ‘Too’er’ etc.).

Toor (toor) n. former name for Spittal Toor (also written ‘Tour’).

Toor Brig (toor-brig) n. occasional name used for the Drumlanrig Bridge over the Slitrig near the Tower Knowe.

the Toor Burn (thu-toor-burn) n. stream that
Water at Spittal-on-Rule.

the Toor Close (thu-toor-klos) n. former name for a passageway next to Drumlanrig’s Tower, giving access to the area behind. In 1767 it is said that ‘trees, packs of wool, couples, joists, and household furniture’ were all deposited there by the flood. The close is wide enough to allow the cavalcade to emerge at the Common Riding, and the wall contains the Cornets’ Board.
the Toor Knowe

the Toor Knowe (thu-toor-now) n. area in front of Drumlanrig’s Tower, so-called because it was a few feet above street level into the 19th century. It would have seemed higher relative to the surroundings before all the houses were built, and it must have once had the mill lade crossing its nothern side, isolating it from the rest of the Town. It has been used as a street address since the late 19th century. It was formerly a small green hill, is said to have once had the ‘deuil tree’ upon it, and still had a few trees in the late 18th century. In the 18th century there were 2 small clay-built houses to the west of the river bank, the proprietors of which owned the Knowe itself. There was also formerly a row of single-storey houses extending for about 50 yards at the eastern end, which split the High Street in half at this point (running from roughly opposite 2 Tower Knowe to a point in line with 18 High Street). For a century from about 1760 it held the daily spectacle of arrivals and departures of the stage-coaches passing through the town. It was also where the Town Herd used to collect the cattle. It was formerly used as a marketplace and for annual hiring fairs, as well as being where bonfires would be lit to mark special occasions. No. 7 was formerly known as ‘Kedie’s Buildin’, but rebuilt by James Harkness, with a cantilevered section sticking out over the Slitrig. Essentially the entire street is composed of grade C listed buildings – ‘I wish tae guidness ee wad get alang the road tae the Too’r Knowe and no bother me wi’ eer bleethers’ [JEDM].

the Toor Knowe Brig (thu-toor-now-brig) n. Tower Knowe Bridge, another name used for Drumlanrig Brig.

Toor Mill (toor-nil) n. Tower Mill, built over the Slitrig approximately where the ‘Auld Brig’ once stood. It was constructed on the site of an earlier mill by William Elliot & Sons in 1852. The building is 3½ stories in whinstone with sandstone dressings, built over a flat-arched bridge, and is currently listed Category A. The magnificent arch over the river makes its design quite unique. It was water-powered originally, and provided the first electric lighting in the town (conveyed all the way to the house of Col. William Scott Elliot at Teviot Lodge). The water wheel still exists in the basement, and is the largest of its kind in Scotland. When the water was low it was supplemented by a steam engine, installed in 1882. At its height the workforce of the factory was 660. In the late 19th and early 20th centuries it operated as a carding and spinning mill, run by Col. Walter Elliot and then his son, Col. William Scott Elliot. Between the wars it was switched to hosiery production. During WWII the building was used as a grain and sugar store and then for several decades as a warehouse for Murray Brothers mail-order knitwear firm. The building fell into disrepair and ownership was transferred to the Scottish Historic Buildings Trust in 1995. It was refurbished to accommodate visitor facilities and commercial space, as part of the Heart of Hawick initiative. The architects for the conversion were Gray, Marshall & Associates. The ‘Bean Scene’ opened in 2007, with a glassed section overlooking the Slitrig, and the old water wheel visible underneath. The rest of the building includes a small cinema and creative workspace (also sometimes called ‘Toor Knowe Mill’ or ‘Elliot’s Mill’).

Toronto (to-ron-tô) n. largest city in Canada, in the province of Ontario. Many exiled Teries have settled in the area. In 1921 a number of them gathered at the home of James H. Ross and organised a Common Riding celebration of their own. It took place on 1st July (Canada Day) in High Park, with W. Matherston (who had lost a leg at Flanders) as Cornet and C. Inglis and W. Corbett as Right- and Left-Hand men, respectively. There was a replica flag, which was bussed, pipe music, a ‘snuffin’, Hawick songs, (non-alcoholic) beverages, races, a speech by Alex Craighead (from Galashiels), and all in over 30 C temperatures. Matthew Leydon probably served as Cornet in 1925. In 1926 the Cornet at High Park was Telfer Anderson Huggan, and the replica 1514 flag was bussed by Edith Whillans. In 1927 the Cornet was James Miller and the Lass was Annie Steele.

Torsonce (tor-sins) n. area on the Gala Water to the south of Stow, for long an important seat of the Pringle family. The last Clan Chief was John Hoppringle of that Ilk and Torsonce, who died in 1737. The mansion is built on the foundations of the older peel. Nearby are the ancient ‘Our Lady’s Well’ as well as the remains of a chapel.

Torwoodlee (tor-wood-lee) n. Georgian house north-west of Galashiels, built near to some older ruins, which were home to the Pringles. The tower dates from 1601 and replaces the one that was sacked in 1568. This was an attack by John Elliot of Copshaw and perhaps as many as 300 other Elliots, Armstrongs, Beatties and Grahams, when the master of the house (George Pringle) was murdered and a huge amount of loot stolen, including silverware and 17 horses. In the latter part of the 15th century the lease of the farm was granted to the Ranger of Tweed Ward for his fee. It was supposedly home of the Pringle who married Mary Scott in the ballad of that name. The house was used as a temporary refuge in 1681, by Covenanters the Earl of Argyll and John Scott (ousted minister of Hawick) on their escape from imprisonment. There are efforts underway to stabilize the crumbling structure. There is a golf course on the estate. A bridge nearby was built in 1808 and the modern house in 1783. The remains of Torwoodlee Broch (not to be confused with Torwood Broch, near Falkirk), perhaps 2,000 years old, is also nearby; it is similar to the better preserved one at Edin’s Hall – ‘The Leader, rolling to the Tweed, Resounds the en-senzie; They roused the deer from Caddenhead, To distant Torwoodlee’ [SWS] (it is ‘Torwartlee’ in 1456 and ‘Torvolest in 1552; it is ‘Torvoidle’ in 1607, and marked ‘Torwoodlie’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 and ‘Torrid Lee’ on Roy’s c.1750 map).

Tory Tam (tö-ree-tawm) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Wicked Tammy and Tidy Mars, The Sap, Paul Laidlaw and Tory Tam; Tip-na-Daisy fame hrae the wars, Johnny Macmannus and Neddy Lamb’ [Hi] (presumably someone called Thomas who was a Conservative supporter).

Tranter  (tran-tur) n. Nigel (1909–2000) writer, born in Glasgow and educated in Edinburgh. He wrote over 90 Scottish historical novels, and also the 5 volume study ‘The Fortified House in Scotland’. His ‘Cheviot Chase’ (1953), set in the 1930s and 40s, is about a modern enmity between the towns of Hawick and Hexham caused by the Horn-shole events, ‘Balefire’ (1958) is set in the Borders right after Flodden, while ‘Portrait of the Border Country’ is a useful work of non-fiction. He was an honorary member of the Hawick Archological Society and Common Riding Chief Guest in 1957.

Trantfille  (trawn’-fee??) n. former name for lands in Esesdale, recorded in a 1525 ‘letter of reversion’ between Simon Armstrong and George, Lord Home. The name occurs in a list between Unthank and Fiddleton, although the precise location is unknown (the origin may be related to that of ‘Tranty-fit’ etc.).

trantie  (trawn-tee) n., arch. a person who is intelligent above his or her station (once a common term, cf. the Tranties, Tranty-fit, and possibly Tibbie Tantry; origin uncertain, but perhaps related to Middle English ‘tran’), a trick, or the provincial ‘trantar’, a peddlar; the word seems to be peculiarly local, but was already obsolete by the 1850s).

the Tranties  (thu-trawn-tees) n., pl., arch. popular name for two sisters from Hawick who died about 1814 (according to James Wilson), Marjory and Isobel Hume. For about 30 years they kept a lodging house for beggars, near to the Auld Brig. They were said to be ‘rather more intelligent than their neighbours in a similar humble condition of life’. They are also mentioned in Agnes Douglas’ prize poem about the ‘Auld Brig’ – ‘Even in the Tranties, wi’ their beggars, The spoilers had founf fearfu’ fleggers’ [AD].

Tranty-fit  (trawn-tee-fi’) n. Tranty-foot, supposedly a witch, sister of ‘Speed-o’-foot’ who lived at Goldielands. It may also have been a name for one of the two towers of Goldielands – ‘...The wonder-working witches Tranty-foot and Speed-o’-foot, the occupants of Goldilands Peel’ [RW] (probably related to trantie, applied to someone who was so clever as to be suspected of witchcraft).

Traqair  (tru-kwär) n. house south of Innerleighen, in a secluded valley of the Quair Water. It is reputed to be the oldest home in Scotland, being lived in continuously since 1107. It is associated with several Scottish Kings of the 12th and 13th centuries, as well as with the Stuarts and the Jacobite cause. Prince Charlie was entertained there by the 7th Earl in 1745. The ‘Bear Gates’ (or ‘steekit yeetts’) were reputedly closed at that time, never to be reopened until a Stuart sits again on the throne (although there are other stories). Mary Queen of Scots also stayed here in 1566. The present structure is probably a 15th century core with alterations through to the 18th century. It is owned by the Maxwell-Stuarts, and now open to the public. The brewery in one of the wings of the house was built around 1700, although brewing on the site is even older. Brewing ended there in the late 19th century, but was restarted in 1965 (the first record of the name is ‘Treverquyrd’ about 1124; it is ‘Tracquhair’ in 1507/8, ‘Tracquair’ in 1527, ‘Trocuair’ in 1564/5 and ‘Trakwair’ in 1574; the first element may be the old p-Celtic ‘tref’ for ‘farm on the Quair’).

trespass (tres-paws) n., arch. crime, trespass, offence – ‘… whereupon ye Session thought fit he should satisﬁe publickly for his trespass, for the terror of others’ [PR1718] (formerly applied more broadly than to wrongful entry onto land).

tret (tre’, tret) pp. treated – ‘she tret oo ti an ice cream’, ‘They socht her frae the world’s end And tret her like a queen’ [WL] (this can be the past tense or past participle; cf. treatit).

Trevelyan (tre-vel-yin) n. Sir George Otto (1838–1928) historian and Liberal M.P. for the Hawick (or Border) Burghs 1868–86. He was the first such M.P. in 1868, winning subsequent elections in 1869, 1874, 1880, 1882, 1885 and 1886 (three of which were bye-elections on account of his appointment to senior government posts). Later in 1886 he lost to A.L. Brown by only 30 votes, the election campaign being focussed on the issue of Home Rule. By this time he was a Unionist, rather than a Liberal. He held appointments as Secretary to the Admiralty, Chief Secretary for Ireland and also Scottish Secretary. He is perhaps best known as biographer of his uncle Lord Thomas Macaulay, and for his more famous sons George and Charles. Trevelyan Terrace is named after him.

Trevelyan Terrace (tre-‘vil-yin-te-ris) n. street in the West-end, originally built in 1879, but demolished and rebuilt in 1974–76. It was named after Sir George Trevelyan. The first houses were built there by joiners Riddle & Graham and Eckford the builder.

trews (trooz) n. trousers, the traditional male dress in the Borders – ‘he was resplendent in his tertan trews’ (from Gaelic).

Trimontium (trɪ-mon-tee-um) n. Roman name for the Eildons, where there was a substantial fort, occupied from the late 1st through 2nd centuries. It was one of the most important sites on the northern frontier of the Roman Empire in those times, and guarded an important crossing of the Tweed. It was probably built around the year 80 and abandoned around the year 200 and not rediscovered until the building of the railway line in 1860. The fort itself covered about 15 acres, with an area of as much as 200 acres occupied. At one time it probably held about 1500 men from the 20th Legion ‘Valeria Victrix’ (Valiant and Victorious), with perhaps 1500 civilians living outside the fort. Many of the items recovered in the excavations are in the National Museums of Scotland, but some are in the Trimontium Museum at Newstead. The Trimontium Stone, a granite monument, was erected by the Edinburgh Border Counties Association in 1928.

the Trim Track (θuθ-trɪm-trawk) n. fitness course established in Wilton Lodge Park in 1978, made possible by a grant from the Silver Jubilee Fund.

Trinity (trɪ-ni'-ee) n. name for the area between the Bourtree's and Weensland, being called ‘the Trinity Lands’ from early times. These lands were part of the endowment of the Hospital Church of Soutra in the 14th and 15th centuries. Soutra was dedicated to the Holy Trinity and also known as ‘Trinity Hospital’, with a well there, also dedicated to the Holy Trinity, being known as the ‘Trinity Well’. This hospital was annexed in 1462 to Trinity College Church and Hospital, Edinburgh, which had been founded by Mary of Gueldres (widow of James II); the church lay at the foot of Calton Hill, and was demolished in 1848 because of railway development. The Hawick lands appear to have been among those owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. They gave their name to Trinity Street and Trinity School, as well as later (indirectly) to St. Ninian’s Road. The naming of the new Trinity Church (not in the old Trinity area) has somewhat confused the geography.

Trinity Gairdens (trɪ-ni'-ee-gär-dinz) n. Trinity Gardens, public gardens below Trinity Church, near the Horse. It is a popular hang-out spot for youngsters. The gardens were renovated and a new band-stand built in 1999. The land was once known as the Wheathole, and was later the site of the East Bank Kirk – ‘Doon at the Horse, on a sunny day Sittin' on a Trinity sate Or lookin’ up at Wulton Kirk Man it's hard tae bate'[AY].

Trinity Haugh (trɪ-ni'-ee-hauw, -hawf) n. former name used for an area by the river associated with the ‘Trinity lands’. This land was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch and was drained and feued in 1875.

Trinity Kilnhill (trɪ-ni'-ee-kiln-hil) n. former name for an area south of Weensland Road, Trinity Kirk

roughly opposite Trinity steps, and also known as ‘Kihlhill’.

Trinity Kirk (tri-ri'-ee-kirk) n. Trinity Church, off Brougham Place. It was built in 1843 to replace the old East Bank United Free Church meeting house, which stood lower down. In 1958 the three congregations of St. John’s, St. Andrew’s and Eastbank joined together to become Trinity, when Eastbank was renamed and the other two closed. The congregation was linked with Cavers and Kirkton in 2004. The building is set within its own grounds and has a session house and vestry at the south-west corner. The design is relatively plain and the architect is unknown (sometimes wrongly attributed to William Burn). It was extended to form a T-plan in 1872 and redecorated by William Jardine in 1892, with halls added in 1896. A pulpit and organ case, designed by Alexander Inglis, was added in the early years of the 20th century. The church, session house, vestry and halls are grade C listed building (the name comes from the 3 churches, and is unrelated to the Trinitylands to the east).

Trinitylands (tri-ri'-ee-lawndz) n. older name for the Trinity area of Hawick, dating back probably to the 14th century, and a connection with Soutra, also known as the ‘Trinity Hospital’. The same lands were also known as the ‘Soutralands’, since they were originally part of the endowment of Soutra, although the reason for this is not known. The boundaries and full extent of the lands are also unclear. In 1472 there was a court action brought by Sir Edward Bonkle, Provost of Trinity Collegiate Church, against Thomas Blair, for rent on the lands. They were confirmed to Trinity Collegiate Church by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1507. They are described (as ‘Soltracroft’) in a 1557 charter, as lying between ‘Ladyland’ to the east, the lands of the town of Hawick to the west, the highway to the south and the lands of West Mains to the north. In 1565/6 they were again leased to William Scott ‘in Hawik’ and his son and heir Robert; they are there described as lying between Ladyland, lands pertaining to the town of Hawick, and the West Mains. At least some of the lands were gained by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, since the inventory drawn up after his death in 1578 states that he ‘conquest the Sowtre lands in Hawik’. In 1627 it was a ‘three merk land called Trinity land’ estimated as ‘paying presentlie 20 bolls’ and possessed by the Lord of Buccleuch and Walter Gledstains of Dod. In 1628 Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch complained that several Hawick men had cut down trees on ‘his lands and barony of Branxholme and Trinitie lands of Hawick’. In 1692 the lands were leased by the Duchess of Buccleuch to Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. In 1696, it is included in a list of lands owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh; this could refer to part of the lands, perhaps the same as ‘Ladyland’, which was owned by the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in 1627. In 1748 a small part lying on the Wilton side of the Teviot was exchanged with the minister of Wilton for a part of his lands which the Duke wanted for carrying water to Burnfoot Mill. The name was still used as late as 1907 in plans for the location of new houses in the area (written ‘Trinity Land’, ‘Trinity Lands’, etc.).

Trinity Mills (tri-ri'-ee-milz) n. main factory of Hawick Hosiery Company on Earl and Duke Streets (and not Trinity Street, as the name might suggest), now the home of Hawick Cashmere Company, or ‘Hawico’. It was built in at least 1888, when it was occupied by Renwick & Raeburn, then the Raeburn brothers 1889–97. It was occupied by Messrs. F. Knox Cowie & Co. 1906, but cthat collapsed after about a year. Hawick Hosiery Company moved in in 1911 and was rebranded as Hawick Cashmere in 1990.

Trinity Schuil (tri-ri'-ee-skiil) n. Trinity Primary School, previously situated near the top of the steps on the south side of Weensland Road, to the east of the entrance to the Miller’s Knowes. It was built in 1876, and apparently originally called ‘St. Mary’s’, but changed its name when the new St. Mary’s School was built at the top of Brougham Place. It took the older pupils from St. Mary’s Parish School and another school which formerly existed in Weensland. The school moved to its present location in 1935/36, the architects being Reid & Forbes of Edinburgh. The old building was demolished and council houses built on the site in 1955. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1915–53 are in the National Archive and log books for 1873–1906 in the Borders Archive. William Murray was first Headmaster, from 1876 and Bill Scrimgeour from 1950.

Trinity Steps (tri-ri'-ee-steps) n. Trinity Steps, unofficial name for steps leading from Weensland Road down to the bottom of Trinity Street. There are 56 steps.

Trinity Street (tri-ri'-ee-stree') n. street running off Weensland Road, named after the Trinitylands, the former name for the area, relating to lands once owned by the church at Soutra. The main houses were built in 1885. It has long had a hotel at the top, and the primary school is at the bottom.

Trinity Thistle (tri-ni'-ee-thi-sul) n. Trinity Thistle Football Club, a rugby club from the Trinity area, existing before WWI. It may also have been referred to as ‘Trinity Union’.

trinkle (trin-kul) v., arch. to trickle – ‘Yill Waeter ... trinklin ti its treist wui Teiot’ [ECS].

trinnle (tri-nil) v. to trundle, roll, spin, waddle, trickle – ‘... trinnlin alang owre its staney chennel’ [ECS], ‘Yill Waeter, trinnlin alang owre its staney chennel’ [ECS], ‘The ba’ trinn’ inti the cundy’ [GW], ‘...Crying ‘Shairly it must be time, now, To trinnle my dydie egg!’ ’[DH], ‘So sklin’ high heaven, trinnle throw hell ...’ [DH], ‘At Easter A’ve trinnled dydie eggs ...’ [IWL], n. a gentle stream, the noise made by trickling water – ‘The trinnle o’ pule and stream ... the last lease-haud o’ youth ...’ [DH] (cf. trunnle).

trinnly (trin-lee) adj., arch. suitable for rolling, small and roundish – ‘Trinnly bits o’ coal’ [GW].

tripe (trip) n. cow innards, traditionally served when there’s an ‘R’ in the month (because it went off in summer). It can be boiled with onion and other ingredients, fried, or served in a white sauce. There were formerly several well known purveyors of tripe in town, including Jen McVitie, Mag Burns and Teenie Balmer.

trippin (tri-pin) adj., pres. part. having a dejected or miserable look – ‘his face was trippin him after they were bate toonty ti nithin’.

trippit (tri-pee, -pi’) pp. tripped – ‘...But hei trippit in the straw As a gangrel’s troosers’ [DH], ‘...Trooked whiles wi’ smuggled brandy’[??], n.

Trip ti Hawick Jig (trip-ti-hlk-jig) n. composition by Scottish accordion maestro Jimmy Shand, in 6/8 time.

trock (trok) v., arch., poet. to barter, peddle, deal with – ‘Trocked, whiles, wi’ smuggled brandy – Unless I dae him wrang’ [DH], ‘Now Wattie neither begs nor buys, Nor steals, nor sells, nor does he trock ...’ [WP], ‘What’re and Sundhope They ken the soond weel; It’s nau news to thaim That he troks wi the deil’ [DH], ‘Now a man that would net baith the fish and the troots Of his honesty, trowth, we may well have nets and then Ogilvies of Chesters were superiors. In 1788 it was listed as being part of the estate of Chesters (it is ‘the Tronhilly’ in 1536, ‘Tronnehill’ in 1548/9 and ‘Tronhilly’ in 1576; it is marked on Pont’s 1590s manuscript map as ‘Tronhill’; the origin may be the Celtic for ‘house with ash trees’).

troosers (troo-zuzz) n. trousers – ‘Forfochen at the seams As a gangrel’s troosers’ [DH], ‘...they taen on anybody in a per o troosers’ [IWL], ‘...a wumain can rin fer faster wae ir skirt up than a man can wae iz troosers doon’ [MB].

troot (troo, troot)* n. trout – ‘...And troots that i’ the Tei’ot tippile’ [DH], ‘Mebbe they’ve a gien up at last And taen to catchin troots ...’ [DH], ‘Now a man that would net baith the fish and the troots Of his honesty, trowth, we may well have oor doots’ [UB], ‘My bonnie troots ye come ti kill; Ca’ murder sport, an’ nurse yer thrill’ [WP].

trottit  (tro'-ee, tro-ti') pp. trottled – ‘...As he trottit aboot on his short bit legs, Watchin’ the rin o’ play!’ [DH].

Trotter  (tro'-ur) n.  George (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant on the High Street according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of William Beck. Their children were: Margaret (b.1806); Thomas (b.1809); William (b.1816); George (b.1818); Ann (b.1820); and Agnes Fulton (b.1822). James (18th C.) wright in Minto. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). James (18th C.) farmer at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded on the 1787-92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert of Bush (18th C.) listed in 1779 as liferenter of a set of lands in Minto Parish, valued together at £433 17s 10s. The lands probably corresponded with what was previously called Deeanfoot. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as having formerly been liferenter of these lands. The liferent of parts of Minto was perhaps just to get friends of Lord Minto onto the voters list in Roxburghshire. He was Postmaster General for Scotland. His wife’s portrait is painted by George Romney. William (1816–1904) stockingmaker who was long Secretary of the Hawick Stockingmakers’ Association (or Hawick Framework-Knitters’ Society). He was son of George and Sarah Beck. He was a second cousin of Provost Edward Wilson and manufacturer Charles John Wilson as well as a grand-son of William Beck. He married Elizabeth Revell in 1837. They were on the High Street in 1841 and at Howdenburn in 1851. Their children included Elizabeth, Sarah, William, Margaret and George.

The Trough Inn  (thu-trof-in) n. former inn on the right side of Weensland Road, by the old stone watering trough that remains there. A stockingmaker called Grey is recorded there when he died in 1840.

Trough Sike  (trof-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on the eastern slopes of Roan Fell and flowing into the Hartsgarth Burn. Near the head of the burn, on the south side is a circular sheepfold, with a carved stone inscribed ‘James Elliot, Shepherd Septr 30’, and a second stone inscribed ‘William Elliot Builder 1820’. Peden’s stone is just south of here.

Troutlawford  (trow-law-ford) n. point that formed the western boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter, remaining so until the Division of the Common in 1777. According to the 1767 description of the old boundaries of the Common, and the map drawn up by J.P. Alison, the Common came to a point here, between the road and the Gate Burn. Given the strange shape of the Common here, and the possibility that the farm of Hawickshiel may have once been within the boundaries of a larger Common, it seems likely that the ford had some special significance, so that it remained within the boundaries. The site is now where the Gate Burn crosses under the road, presumably being a ford in earlier times, and is marked by a plaque. There is an illustration ‘The Troutlawford: Hawick Burgesses on the Trail of Reivers, 1546’ by Tom Scott ‘...the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawfoord upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South’ [BR1734] (marked ‘Troutling Ford’ on some earlier maps, it is also sometimes ‘the Troutlawford’; it is ‘Trowtlaw For’d in 1767).

Troutling Ford  see Troutlawford

trow  (trow) v., arch., poet. to trust, believe, feel sure – ‘Sae did I trow, because I wiss’d it se; Wi’ hopes, alake! we aft oursels betray’ [CPM], ‘He tends me weel I trow’[??], ‘...And who, if here at this same hour, I trow would little praise the poor’ [AD], ‘But I’ll gie him his gilded ha’, – I trow he’s little skill ...’ [JT], ‘They’re some beauty-spots, aw trow, Where the Slitrig wimples throw’ [TK], ‘Baith auld and young are mixed I trow – Rob Lurgie lingers wi’ the lave, Caleb and Clinty seem cronies now Wi’ Hornie Robbie and Cannie Dave’ [HI].

trow  (trow) v., arch. to troll, to fish by dragging a line through the water – ‘Heels up, [he] trowed in the dam outright’ [HSR], to waddle – ‘Lang may you row, trow, gizzly, swatter’ [JoHa], ‘It rows aboot, it trows aboot, Baith near and far awa’; Whileis it is on the Maiden’s Paps, And whiles on Ruberslaw’ [TCh].

trow  (trow) n., arch. a small flat-bottomed boat, usually with an opening towards the centre, used for spearing fish, a confined river channel (see also trows).

trowant  (trow-in) n., adj., arch. truant.

Trow Brig  (trow-brig) n. name sometimes used for the bridge over the Teviot at Hornshole.

Trow Burn  (trow-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from the south near Hornshole, essentially a name for the lower part of the Kirkton Burn – ‘’Twas then the plunderers found a grave where Trow goes purling down; And hence this trophy cherished still, of those Callants who saved the town’ [JEDM], ‘...it was nae teime owregane or Trowburn Cottage

Trowburn Cottage (trow-burn-ko'-eej) n. cottage on the opposite side of the A6088, roughly opposite Beechurst, just outside of Hawick. The Trow Burn passes here. In a field to the west is a sand pit, seen as parchmarks in aerial photographs.

Trowen (trow-in) n., arch. a trowel.

Trowhaugh (trow-hauk) n. lands listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. They are also described in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. They were presumably the same as the Trows, or situated nearby. The description is of ‘ane land’ (presumably meaning a husbandland) ‘estimat to 4 bolls in stok, i boll teynd’ (it is transcribed ‘Troinhauch’ in 1615).

Trow Knowes (trow-nowz) n. farm just outside Hawick beyond Weensland, above Trow Mill. Andrew Nichol was there about 1880.

Trowmill see Trow Mill

Trow Mill (trow-nil) n. small woollen mill at ‘the Trows’, on the Teviot, about 2 miles down from Hawick. The factory was built in 1885, and was latterly run by Wrights of Trowmill Ltd. The area formerly held one of the corn mills of the Cavers estate, active up until the late 18th century. William Aitkin and William Borthwick were there in 1684. Archibald Aitkin was there in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths for ‘himself undermillers & kilns’. John Scott was living there in 1729. James Curle was tenant there in 1797 and the millers in 1841 were William Cranston and James Black. Alexander Goodfellow was miller there in the 1850s and Hugh Goodfellow was farmer in the 1860s. Known in the latter part of the 20th century for its mill shop and factory tours, it closed, with the site being cleared and redeveloped as housing – ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill. . . .’ [WL] (also written ‘Trowmill’, it is ‘Trow-miln’ in 1684, ‘Tromilne’ in 1694 and ‘Trowmiln’ in 1797; it is marked ‘Trowsmill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Trow Mill Cauld (trow-nil-kawld) n. weir upstream of Trow Mill (near the island in the Teviot there) supplying the former mill lade.

trowz (trowz) n., arch. a former small boat used for fishing in local rivers – ‘The ‘trows’ were shaped something like this, A. The man stood with a foot on each leg of the ‘trows’, and steered and propelled it with the leister. When the ‘trows’ were not in the water there was a movable wheel attached to its point, and it was pushed along the road like a wheelbarrow’ [JTu] (presumably related to both trow and trews).

Trows (* thu-trowz*) n., pl. popular name for the area surrounding the Teviot near Trow Mill, and for the farm also called Trow Knowes. Simon Routledge is recorded there in 1494. George Douglas was recorded there in 1502. ‘Trows’ was one of the farms of the Cavers estate, listed as such in 1511. The name is also used in the earliest account of the 1514 incident (Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’) to describe the general location, rather than the word ‘Hornshole’, this being more correct if the skirmish took place on the south side of the Teviot. George Douglas of Trows is recorded in 1517. It was still part of the Cavers lands in 1558. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters’ sermons in the 17th century. It was inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698, with the mill. James Douglas was there in 1694. The precise site of the former house is unknown, although it is marked between the Crook and Westcote on Stobie’s 1770 map, and with Trowsmill down by the Teviot at the same time – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes’ [T], ‘The lazy Griersons o’ the Crook, An’ Douglas o’ the Trows, An’ Caddon wi’ his bluiddie shears, Fra’ clippin’ o’ his yowes’ [T], ‘Hawick better lo’ed sic needful rows As cowed the English band at Trows’ [AD] (often written ‘Trowes’, it is ‘le Trows’ in 1502 and ‘trowies’ in 1502, ‘Trows’ in 1511 and 1517 and ‘Trowes’ in 1694; it appears as ‘Trows’ on Pont’s c.1590 map, is still ‘Trowis’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, and ‘Trowes’ on Blaue’s 1654 map; the origin of the name is unclear, but one suggestion is the Old Welsh ‘tros’, which means ‘across’ something, and occurs in other place names associated with river crossings, while another suggestion is ‘trowch’ for a channel in a river bed, or a mill trough).

trouth (trouth) n., arch., poet. truth, troth – ‘Tweel ye hae walth to wale on if it’s sae; Sae sigh nae mair, for trouth ye mak me wae’ [CPM], ‘...Of his honesty, trouth, we may well have oor doots’ [UB], ‘Thaye stau’ sicer forvair an’ evir, an’ ar dune in trouth an’ urpichtness’ [HSR], ‘Trouth sail spring owt o’ the yirth ...’ [HSR] (also written ‘troth’; cf. trouth).

truslye (trus-lee) n. former name for lands near Groundistone, just to the North of Hawick, once part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. It was listed in 1535, along with ‘Groundeston’ as when the King revoked a former charter, and so its superiority passed from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to George, Lord Home. It is unclear precisely where these lands were.

trustit (trus-tee, -i) pp., arch. trusted – ‘Was unco clever, dealt sae fair, An’ illa day was trustit mair’ [RDW], ‘But I trustet in thee, O Lord: I said, Thou art my God’ [HSR].

try (trI) v., arch. to test, examine, scrutinize – ‘...the cordiners shall try this market for insufficient leather and unbarkit shone, and what fines they receive, the ane half thereof shall pertain to the town’s use, and the other half to the craft ...’ [BR1643]. ‘The quartermaster of the shoemaker trade tried the market, to find if the shoes were all of sufficient barked leather ...’ [JW1677].

tryit (trI-lee’, -i’) pp., arch. tried – ‘Item, whatsoever person that committs ryottis ...’, being tryit, sal pay 50 shillings ...’ [BR1640].

trykle (trI, tr-kul) n., arch. treacle – ‘Note that taffie generally signifies the sticky variety, made of trykul (treacle) or sayrup (syrup), in sticks or slabs ...’ [ECS], ‘...a shive o’ wheat bread, wi’ the maskins o’ peppermint leaves sweetened with trykle, an fegs we thocht oorsels gey braw!’ [V&M], ‘Wi try-cle on eer chowks. Better, daur-say, Brocht, factory-fresh (sei telly) til eer hame ...’ [DH] (also spelled ‘trycle’ and ‘trykull’).

trykle-taffie (tri-klee-taw-lee) n., arch. treacle toffee – ‘Taffie-join = a social evening, the principal feature of which was the making of a panful of treacle-toffy (trykul-taffie, trykle-taffie) ...’ [ECS] (also ‘trykle-taffie’, etc.).

trykle yill (trI-kul-yil) n., arch. treacle beer, a drink made with treacle or molasses, together with sugar, water and yeast, once brewed by housewives. It was a cheap and refreshing drink, popular up to the end of the 19th century. It was sometimes used in porridge instead of milk – ‘...and he remembered that his old grandfa- ther always had his jug of treacle yill’ beside his porridge plate’ [JeC].

tryst (trist, trist) n., arch. an appointment, rendezvous, meeting, meeting place, country get-together, market, particularly for the sale of livestock (but distinguished from a true fair or market in that it was not generally established by charter). In the 18th and 19th centuries there was a tryst in Hawick held on the third Tuesday in October, established in 1785 on the land at Thorton dykes, also sometimes called the Cattle Tryst. Black cattle were stopped at Hawick on the way from northern markets, such as Falkirk, to southern markets at Carlisle or Newcastle – ‘And fair or tryst aye proves the best To him wi’ a bit brawl in’t’ [MG], ‘When the tryst has been set in some lane leafy dell, That echoes the sound o’ the eight o’clock bell’ [JJ], ‘And can ye be the bonny lass That set the trysts wi’ me! And sat beside me on the grass ‘Aneath the hawthorn tree’ [JT], v., arch. to meet, engage to meet, fix an appointment – ‘They nivir trysted with the like emergence before them tabled …’ [PR1714], ‘Turn backward Carle Time wi’ me Through twice ten years o’ gloom. And tak’ me to the trystin’ tree Amang the yellow broom’ [JT], to arrange for someone to perform a service at a specific time or place – ‘Yeddie Kyle o’ Hayknowe, wha can han’le the tuck o the drum’ [JoHa], to befall, afflict – ‘…as justly he deserved the severest punishment to be trysted with’ [PR1717], to arrange at the same time, be coincident – ‘The Treasurer could not attend this day the Session in the Manse by reason of some emergencie he was trysted with and could not evite’ [PR1724].

the Tryst Grund (thu-trist, -trist-grund) n. part of the Common used for the annual horse fair in the Autumn, being in the Thorterdykes, with an area of 1 acre and 31 poles, and also being referred to as ‘Hawick Loanin’ or ‘the Green Gress’. The fair was established by the Magistrates in October in 1785. There was also a cattle fair established in the same year (in November), to encourage drovers to stop off in Hawick.

trystin (tris-, tris-tin) adj., pres. part., arch. meeting, getting together, bargaining, agreeing – ‘And voice calls to voice by the spirit mound Where the Burgess-Dead keep trystring-ground’ [JYH].

Trystin Sike (tris-, tris-tin-sik) n. Trysting Sike, stream that rises on Kirk Hill and runs roughly south-east to join the Liddel Water near Thistlesike, south of Mangerton.

Trystside (trist-sid) n. loop off Longhope Drive at the top of Crumhaughhill, constructed in 1980 and named for the area nearby that was used as a trystring place, in particular for a horse fair.

tuck (tuk) n., arch. a beat, bang, tap, especially on a drum (from Old French; see also tuck o the drum).

tuck o the drum (tuk-o-thu-drum) n. a proclamation made by public crier using his drum – ‘The officers are ordered to banish Elizabeth Miller …and ordained to discharge, by toucke of drum, all persons from harboring and resetting her’ [BR1695], ‘…to be brunt on the chick with the lette H, and thereafter to be banished the town by toucke of the drum’ [BR1697] ‘…and ane proclamation to go through the towne at night, by tuck of drume …’ [BR], ‘…and ordain the same to be intimated this day through the towne by tuck of drum accordingly’ [BR1736], ‘…A Cornet there’s been wi’ tuck o’ the drum’ [JEDM] (a familiar phrase in the 18th and 19th centuries).

the Tud (thu-tud) n. nickname for someone in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

Tudhope see Tudhope Hill

Tudhope (tu-dup) n. farm just to the west of Jedburgh, presumably the origin of the surname. There is a holy well on the farm. ‘Jhone off Towdop’ is recorded in the Burgh Court Book of Selkirk in 1523 and ‘William Tudhoip’ in the following decade.

Tudhope (tu-dup) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married ‘Gellan’ Dryden, probably about 1675. He may be the Adam who is listed as a resident at Ormiston in Cavers Parish in 1694. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Clerk there in 1699. He may have been brother of Thomas as well as Janet, who married John Douglas in Cavers in 1707. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Isabell Stewart in Bedrule Parish in 1716. Helen who married John Rutherford in Bedrule Parish in 1721, and Bessie who married William Mill in 1725 may have been his sisters. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Marion Oliver in Hawick in 1722. They had a daughter Isabel (b.1723).

Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Scott in 1798. Their son James was born in 1799. Bailie Charles (18th C.) merchant of Hawick, he was Magistrate in the 1750s. He witnessed baptisms in 1741, 1742, 1743, 1745 and 1757, suggesting that he may have been an elder of the Kirk. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). Francis (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was listed as a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the Francis who married Betty Miller in 1767, and whose children were: John (b.1770); Walter (b.1772); Isabella (b.1774), who may have married Joseph Henderson in 1794; Beatrix (b.1779); and Janet (b.1781). He is probably the Francis who paid for the use of the Parish ‘mortcloth’ in 1773. Francis (1805–70) born in Hawick, son of John and Isabella Dryden. He married Margaret Nutter from London. In 1840 he was selected as a teacher at Grahamstown in the Cape Colony, and went out to South Africa with his wife and 3 young sons, John, James and Francis. Gavin (b.1807) son of John and Isabella Dryden. He married Janet Watson (from Galashiels) in Wilton Parish in 1832. He worked as a wool-spinner in Selkirk (according to the 1851 census), and had at least one child, Ann (b.1842). He was listed as a spinner at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. James (17th C.) named on a list of men suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627, specifically they were said to be ‘fitter to be employed in his Majesties service nor to be suffered loyttering at hame’. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. James (17th C.) recorded as one of 3 men fined for the oats of Gilbert Watt (the Town Clerk) that their livestock ate in 1642. He may be the same James who was recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at 40 merks when provided for the Covenanting army ‘in case the horses come nocht back again or be lost’. He may be the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1642); William (b.1643); Alexander (b.1645); Walter (b.1647); Christian (b.1650); and William (again, b.1652). Alternatively he could be the James, married to Helen Clapperton, whose son Robert was baptised in 1635, or the James, married to Janet Fulla, whose daughter Janet was baptised in 1639. James (17th/18th C.) brother of Robert. He was called before the Hawick Session in 1717, but excused because he was ‘att Newcastle upon his brother’s service and business’. He could be the James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. James (18th C.) married Margaret ‘Badie’ in Hawick Parish in 1726. James (18th C.) Hawick resident married to Agnes Turnbull. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1729), who may have married Robert Balmour in 1762. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Marion (or May) Littlejohn and their children included: Charles (b.1737); and Agnes (b.1740). James (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Palmer in 1758. Their daughter Helen was born in 1760. It is possible he was the same James who married Margaret Henderson a year later. He may be the deceased James whose daughter Helen died in Hawick in 1798. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Margaret Henderson in 1761. Their children included: William (b.1762); Adam (b.1765), mother’s Christian name given as ‘Isabel’; John (b.1767); Adam (b.1769); Charles (b.1773); and Elspeth (b.1774). The witnesses in 1765 were smith Robert Young and carrier Robert Chisholme. He may be the James ‘Tuleup’ whose use of the Parish ‘mortcloth’ is recorded twice in 1773. James (18th C.) married Janet Mason in Wilton Parish in 1767. James (18th C.) married Betty Davidson in Hawick in 1784. James (d.1797) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was presumably a carrier, and the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. He is probably the carrier whose son William died in 1797. His death is recorded in Hawick, where he is stated to be ‘late Langholm Carrier’. James (b.1823) born in Hawick, probably son of Thomas. He was a tobacconist and china merchant at 10 Sandbed. In 1861 he lived with his sister Janet, and his housekeeper was Agnes Huggan. John (17th C.) described as maltman in Cavers in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Douglas of Cavers’ servant accused him and several other people of stealing his wallet in Hawick. John (17th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1686 he was appointed, along with James Boyd, as ‘marchers of the toune betwixt neighbour and neighbour an- nent the marching of yr. yards and gavell, being joyned to John Hardie, William Purdome, and William Paysley, who were former marchers’. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the John who married Isobell Huntly and whose children born in Hawick included Walter (b.1670), Margaret (b.1672), Marion (b.1677) and Jane (b.1679). John (17th C.) flesher on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was also listed as a flesher among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed as a flesher when he witnessed a baptism for wright Andrew Scott in 1704. He married Helen Gillespie and their children included: Robert (b.1693); John (b.1696); and Alexander (b.1702). The witnesses in 1702 were miller James Paterson and Bailie Patrick Richardson. He witnessed a baptism in 1714 for shoemaker Robert Elliot and in 1716 for Thomas Waugh (along with fellow flesher Thomas Wilson). John (18th C.) Hawick resident married
Tudhope

Their children included: Robert (b.1735); Andrew (b.1739); Francis (b.1742); and Walter (b.1744). He could be the John, from Hawick, who is on the list of subscribers for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Joseph Henderson and Isabel Tudhope in 1794 and the John who (along with Walter) witnessed another for the same couple in 1798. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident married to Isabel Dryden. His wife may have been the Isabel (b.1781), daughter of Gavin Dryden, born in Hobkirk Parish. Their children included: Francis (b.1805), teacher in South Africa; and Gavin (b.1807), who married Janet Watson. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was living at Raesknowe in 1704 and was herd at Over Southfield in 1709. He married Jean (or Janet) Scott and their children included Mary (b.1701), William (b.1704) and Robert (b.1707). The witnesses in 1704 were John Graham (also in Raesknowe) and Robert Riddell in Allanhaugh Mill. John (b.1709) was probably also his child. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was ‘servant to Falnesh’ in 1708. He married Esther Elliot and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1708, with witnesses Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and James Falsyde. Robert (18th C.) brother of James, mentioned in 1717. Possibly the same Robert was married to Helen Scott and had children: Helen (b.1727); Robert (b.1733); and Betty (b.1735). Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident married to Helen Hardie. Their children included: John (b.1730); Janet (b.1737), who may have married Robert. Renwick in 1766; and Anne (b.1741). He could be the flesher who witnessed baptisms for skinner John Currer in 1743 and 1745. This same flesher was involved in a pair of court cases in 1748, involving the payment of a debt by Robert Taylor to Thomas Turnbull, in which he was an intermediary. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Davidson in Hawick in 1760. Robert (18th C.) married Jean Ekron in Hawick in 1767. His wife was daughter of John Ekron and Jean ‘Dinlap’ (i.e. Dunlop) and died in 1775. Robert (18th C.) married Marion Pott in Hawick in 1777. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He may have been brother of Adam and Janet. His children included: Marion (b.1699), who probably married Thomas Thomson in 1728; and Thomas (b.1706). Thomas ‘Tammy’ (18th/19th C.) trader in toys and other items at local fairs. He was long remembered in Denholm by a phrase repeated by children, ‘Tammy Tudhope the toy-man!’ and the cry ‘The fair’s begun, yonder’s Tammy Tudhope’. It is unclear where he came from. Thomas (b.1791/2) tobacconist at the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was probably part of the business marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In 1841 he was listed on the Sandbed and at Teviot Square (probably about 10 Sandbed) in 1851, when he was listed as a master tobacco manufacturer, employing 1 man and 1 boy. He married Isabel Murray in 1816 and their children included: Mary (b.1817), who may have married George Porteous in 1848; Elizabeth (b.1819), who probably married Robert Biggar in 1846; Agnes (b.1821), who may have married Joseph Park in 1845; James (b.1823); John (b.1825); Thomas (b.1831); Janet (b.1835); and William (b.1837). Perhaps the same Thomas was one of the original deacons of Hawick Free Kirk from 1844. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick, married to Marion ‘Thor’. Their son John was born in 1634. Walter (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Graham in 1722. She was daughter of Walter Graham (perhaps the Bailie) and died in 1777. Their children included: Walter (b.1727); William (b.1729); Jean (b.1732); and John (b.1737). Widow (17th C.) listed among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear who her husband was. William (16th C.) farmer at Hallrule. ‘William Tudopis dwelling hous and yaird’ are recorded in the 1562 Baronial dispute over the lands of Feu-Rule. Bailie William (18th C.) elected Magistrate in 1737, although Bailie Burn complained that many of the voters were his servants or were minors. He was Bailie in 1738 when plans started for the building of the Teviot Bridge. He is also recorded buying a bag of ‘Irish happenies’ from the Kirk Session about 1711 and becoming an elder in 1723. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for druggist Gideon Scott. He paid tax for 19 windows in Hawick in 1748. He could be the merchant William who married Elizabeth (or Elspeth) Scott, and whose children were: Anne (b.1725); May (b.1728); May (again, b.1730); and William (b.1732). He witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller and another for shoemaker George Garner. He is probably the merchant William who witnessed the baptisms of children of Walter Tinlin and William Oliver in 1737. The baptism in 1725 was witnessed by teacher James Anderson and ‘Tacksman’ Robert Elliot. The 1728 baptism was also witnessed by...

‘Mr. Anderson’, as well as Robert ‘Pote’. He was ‘late Bailie’ in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Garner. He is probably the William who was former owner of lands (in Wilton Parish) that George Hailburton owned in 1788, having been purchased from Langlands of that Ilk. William (18th C.) married to Isobel Riddell. Their daughter Anne was born in 1739. William (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the ‘Hair Merchant’ who died in Hawick in 1808 and whose sister Janet died in 1811 (also spelled ‘Toudhop’, ‘Tudhope’, ‘Tudup’, ‘Tutop’, etc.).

Tudhope Hill (tu-dup-hil) n. hill east of Moss-paul, between the Allan and Hermitage Waters, on the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire. It reaches a height of 599 m (1,961 ft). A smaller peak, to the west, is called Little Tudhope Hill, and reaches 483 m (also sometimes just ‘Tudhope’ or ‘the Tudhope’ and occasionally ‘Tudhope Fell’; there were several former spellings, e.g. it is ‘Tutop’ in 1839).

Tuesdi (tezw-, chewz-di) n. Tuesday. This is early closing day in Hawick, and traditionally the day for the mid-week Ride-outs (also spelled ‘Tuithd’; cf. the older Teisday).

the Tuesdi (thu-tezw-, -chewz-di) n. sometimes referring to the Tuesday of Common Riding week. There is a Chase in the morning. This is also usually the day when the Principals, preceded by singers and members of the Drums and Fifes, visit the local hospitals and old-folks homes.

Tufty (tuft-tee) n. nickname for John Wilson, Burgh officer from roughly the 1810s to 40s – ‘...And the folk o’ Hawick were made aware By tuck o’ Tufty’s drum’ [JCG]. Also a nickname for some members of the Thomson family, e.g. Tommy, Cornet in 1955.

Tullie

‘the tuithache’; also spelled ‘tuithieck’; note the pronunciation; this has survived longer than the word ‘tuith’.

Tullie see Tully

Tulloch (tu-loch) n. John (19th C.) fishmonger at 30 High Street in the late 19th century. He was noted as a bass singer and was precentor of Allars Kirk. He moved to Campbeltown in 1899.

tully (tu-lee) n., arch. a quarrel, fight, struggle – ‘If it was het, the lang kail gully, Play’d smash amang’t to end the tully’ [JR].

Tully (tu-lee) n. David (b.1787/8) local farmer, who gave his name to the phrase ‘Tully’s Mill’ when he was dragged into the Slitrig at the Mill Port and had the upper half of his clothing torn off by the mob for being a Tory voter. This was during the election of 1837; 5 men were tried for mobbing and rioting and assault, against 7 victims. He may have been one of the Hawick men who went down to London to be witnesses in the investigation. The family lived at the Millpath, in a house that was removed to make way for the railway. His wife was Janet, and their children included James and Janet. In 1861 he was living at 25 High street with grandchildren Agnes Murray, David Murray, James Tully and Jessie Tully; he was then described as a farmer of 75 acres. James (b.1816/7) son of David. In 1861 he was living at 17 Howegate and listed as a farmer of 30 acres. His wife was Margaret and their children included James and David. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) mason who was chosen as ‘rebel’ Cornet in the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809 in opposition to the Council’s choice of John Kyle. The dispute was over new regulations regarding invitations to supporters. He was the second choice of the ‘Wesla Water’ group, after Henry Halliburton who had declined. He rode the Common on the Friday, behind the ‘royalist’ Cornet, although he had more supporters. He also entered the Haugh, although with some obstruction – ‘If you love your ancient freedom. Their new Cornet never heed him: From among you choose a Cornet, Hand it down to sons unborn yet’ [JH], ‘The Westla’ Lads warw Rebels ca’d, John Tully led them on a yau’d’ [MB]. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1635. Isobel Scott in Synton Mill complained that she had called her a witch and a thief; she denied the first, but claimed she could prove that Scott had stolen money from Andrew Nichol. However, after several witnesses were called there was no proof of theft, and so she had to sit in the place of repentance ‘in her linen sheitts, and to sit all the tym of preaching’, then ask the congregation for forgiveness. William (18th C.) local wigmaker immortalised in a rhyme – ‘Robert Miles the barber, and Michael up the stair, Willie Tully makes the wigs, and Jenny buys the hair’ [T] (also spelled ‘Tullie’ interchangeably in early times, as well as ‘Tulley’).

Tully’s Mill (tu-leez-nil) n., arch. term meaning rough treatment at the hands of a mob, or more specifically being thrown into the Slitrig at the Mill Port. The term came from David Tully, known as a Tory supporter, who received such treatment during the election of 1837. Similar treatment was common during the elections of the 1830s. David Waters wrote a facetious poem called ‘Holy Tammie’s Prayer, and thanksgiving for his marvellous escape from Tully’s Mill’ at the late election’, published in 1838 – ‘...he got Tully’s Mill in the Slitrig under the Tower Knowe bridge’ [JTu] (also written ‘Tuillie’s Mill’).

tummelt (tu-nil) pp. tumbled – ‘O! Mony’s the mirry mile I’ve railed, And mony a wainch in hey tummlet...’ [DH] (also written ‘tumml’).

tummle (tu-nil) v. to tumble – ‘...Losh he wammelt and tumm’led ower on to the floor’ [UB], ‘When a’ the world looks cauld an’ grey, An’ a’ things tum’lin under...’ [WP], ‘...Here they come at the spring-cleanin’, Tummelin’ oot o’ the derk again...’ [DH], ‘Syne aff frae his shouther’ll tummle his pack...’ [WL], ‘...And crystal rivers tummle doon’ [IW], n. a tumble – ‘hei took a right tummle doon they stair’.

tummle-car (tu-nil-kawr) n., arch. a kind of primitive box cart with wheels that revolved with the axle, and hence moved with a jolting motion – ‘...Roostit horse shoon, an’ queer wheel rings O’ tum’le cars’ [JoHa].

tumshie (tu-nil-shee) n. a turnip – ‘oo made tumshie lanterns it Hallow’e’en’.

tundle (tu-nil) n., arch. tinder, especially in the phrase ‘as dry as tundle’ (also written ‘tundl’; noted by E.C. Smith).

Tungrig (tung-rig) n. farm probably in upper Liddesdale, recorded in 1613 and 1622, relating to branches of the Scots.

the Tunnel (thu-tu-nil) n. name used in the 19th century for a long, dark close leading to Backdamgate from around 12 or 14 High Street. It contained several badly illuminated houses and was demolished around 1857 when the Royal Bank was built.
the Tunnel

the Tunnel (thu-tu-nul) n. epithet for the road between Hawick and Langholm, referring to the steep pass between upper Teviotdale and upper Ewesdale.

Tunno (tu-nō) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) notary in Melrose. In 1612 he is recorded as schoolmaster in Melrose. He is recorded in making an extract of the 1615 sasine of Robert Scott of Alton from Gilbert Watt’s Protocol Book, with the precise date is unknown. He is listed as procurator for some cases in the records of the Regality of Melrose in 1638–51. In 1642 his son Andrew is mentioned as a witness in Melrose and by the late 1640s was ‘younger’ and already a writer. His son was probably Town Clerk of Hawick (unless this was in fact him, rather than his son). Andrew (17th C.) Town Clerk of Hawick. It seems reasonable to presume that this man was son of the Melrose notary, who was described as a student in Melrose in 1642, and already a writer in 1643. In 1659 he is described as ‘notary in Melrose, now at Hawick’, in a bond referred to in a complaint against his tenant. He served as Town Clerk of Hawick 1659–70. In 1670 a case was raised against him by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the Melrose court of Regality (in which he is described as ‘portioner of Melrose’), complaining that he held the ‘protocol book’ of Gilbert Watt, notary, which contained 2 instruments of sasine relating to succession of the lands of Goldielands. He agreed to make copies, although they do not appear to have survived. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Men and women are listed, and so it is unclear if this was a male or female name. William (17th C.) servitor of Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. He witnessed the Earl’s last will and testament in 1633.

Tunny (tu-nee) n. James Good (d.1887) proprietor of the photography business J.G. Tunny & Co., which continued long after his death. The company had several studios in Edinburgh and also opened one at 47 High Street Hawick in the period 1903–06.

tup (tup) n. a ram, male sheep – ‘A large and powerful tup turned on Jock and attacked him’[RM], ‘I’m no acquaintance wi’ mealy pows; I was brought up wi’ tups and ewes ... ’[JR], ‘Your credit with us rises up each time you turn a stubborn tup ... ’ [TD] (this was formerly tuip).

tup-eild (tup-eild) adj., arch. barren – ‘A tuip-eild yowe’ [GW].

the Tup Fair (thu-tup-fair) n. name sometimes used for Hawick’s main ‘tup’ market, held on September 20th and 21st during parts of the 18th and 19th centuries. It was also for a while a major lamb fair.

Tup Knowes (tup-nowz) n. former name for lands near Hawick. They are mentioned among lost placenames by James Wilson in 1850, and may be part of the old Common.

tup-stane bottle (tup-stān-bo’-nl) n., arch. a form of stone bottle with a rounded bottom.

tur (tur) v., arch. to turf, cover with turf – ‘... that every inhabitant within the brughe shall have liberty to tur and theik, and sett ane ladder in his neighbour’s close’ [BR1660].

turbleent (tur-bleen’) n., arch. a sudden gust of wind, turbulence – ‘Yeh gowsty nicht (wui a wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wundilhs) a turb-bleent woare as the ordnar dang doon the first Peinelheuch Moniment’ [ECS] (also ‘turbleen’ and ‘turblin’; from the Medival English and Old French).

the Turf Hotel (thu-turf-hō-tel) n. former hotel at Langburnshiel, offering food, drink and accommodation to travellers. It was opened by Mr. MacDonald in early 1860. Later that year the guests and proprietor were attacked by a gang of navvies and there was an even worse riot on St. Patrick’s Day 1862. It is unclear how long the hotel operated.

Turfy Sike (tur-fee-sik) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Thorlieshope Burn.

Turie (too-ree) n. name for former lands on the Stobs estate. It is listed in 1657, between Horselee and Acreknowe, although the location is unknown.

Turk’s Close (turkz-klōs) n. popular name in the 19th century for a passageway between 58 and 60 High Street, home of the ‘Turks’. This was a nickname of long standing for John Scott and his family.

the Turk’s Halfpenny (thu-turkz-hāp-nee) n. name for a temporary trade union in Hawick, instigated as the result of John Scott (‘the Turk’) reducing the price of men’s hose by 6 pence per dozen (or a halfpenny each) in 1817. The stockholders of the Town levied 6 pence on each man and used the funds to try to fight the imposition of wage reductions. James Hog (of ‘Teribus’) and James Scott were arrested and spent several days in Jedburgh Jail before the employer yielded. The resulting celebration inspired James Hogg to recite the following verse – ‘See my dear comrades, turned to ashes, The cursed page that once did fash us, And bear in mind, we once did wish Our persecutors just like this; But innocence should aye get clear – Our bonds are dead and we are here’ [JH].

Turlenbrae (tur-lin-bra) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, probably near Coldhouse and Whitfield, according to its entry on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Henderson was tenant at that time (it is possible this is an error for some other place).

turn (turn) v. to become, grow – ‘Him and mei turned fast freends and A Hew him in New York now ...’ [JEDM], ‘Ee’re denner’s turnin caald’ [ECS], (more common than in standard English, and often with the participle coming after the noun; see also turnt).

turn (turn) n. the middle of something, particularly a night – ‘... the turn o the nicht’ [ECS], the act or process of changing – ‘... a turn for the better; ... the turn o the eer’ [ECS], a bout of illness, especially in the phrase ‘a bad turn’, a favour – ‘... ee’ve duine iz a guid turn wui that’ [ECS], a walk, stroll – ‘A’m duist oot for a bit turn afore A gaan ti bed’ [ECS] (these senses all more common than in standard English).

Turn (turn) n. former name of a farm near Stobs, roughly between Woodfoot Cottage and Railway Cottages. It could be the ‘turni’ where James Crozier located in 1494/5. It is probably the ‘Torne’ listed along with ‘Wenerton’ and ‘Fowler-awe’ as farms on the Slitrig belonging to the Laird of Gledstains, which were burned by the English in 1547/8. It was among the lands of Winnstoun purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. It was still listed as part of the Barony of Winnstoun at the end of the 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. William Turnbull was there in 1708 and James Nichol in 1720. George Fletcher was tenant there in the 1750s. When a valuation of the separate lands in the Stobs estate was made in 1779 an entry read ‘Part of Te-ourn or Turn, possession by William Elliott and Robert Potts in 1779’, valued at £178 5s 5d, with the other part being Smithfieldhaugh and valued at £15 10s. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, Sir William Elliott of Stobs owned part of ‘Te-ourn, or Turn’, a small part of which was called Smithfield-haugh’; together they were still valued at about £194. It was also referred to as ‘Acreknowe Turn’ and housed 2 separate families until about the early 1900s (also written ‘Turne’; it is marked as ‘Turns’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and still there on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is clearly marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but there is no sign of it today).

the Turn Again Stane (thu-turn-a-gän-stän) n. standing stone on the farm of Kae-side, overlooking Tweedbank, traditionally said to have been erected to commemorate the place where Elliot turned and speared Ker of Cessford to death at the battle of Skirmish Field in 1526. In fact the stone lies beside an ancient pathway, and probably predates the 16th century.

Turnbull (turn-bul, tru-mul) n. Adam of Whithope (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1390 as a witness to the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. in a charter of 1409 as ‘ade turnebule de quithope’ (i.e. Whithope) when his son John was granted lands at Hassendeanbank. Adam of Fulton (14th C.) listed among the witnesses to the 1390 charter where John Turnbull of Minto granted Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. Adam (15th C.) listed as one of the witnesses to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sherifdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas in 1432. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Turnbulls, but John of Bedrule and William of Hassendeanbank are also listed. He may be the Adam who witnessed a charter for lands in Sprouston in 1433/4, Adam of Wauchope (15th C.) described as ‘Adam de Wauchope’ (and listed after several Turnbulls) when part of an inquest into lands in Jedburgh in 1440. He may be the same Adam who was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn in 1446/7. Adam (15th C.) granted the lands of Greenwood in 1439 by charter of James II. These lands had previously been held by Walter Dalgleish of Greenwood and are probably the same as Girnwood on the Borthwick Water. He was probably father or grandfather of Thomas of Greenwood, recorded in 1488, and also related to the Turnbulls of Minto. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Ade’ in 1471 when he and George Cranston had remission for 2 ‘schelis’ in Ettrick Forest. Adam of Philiphaugh (15th C.) recorded in 1484 when James Turnbull claimed compensation from him for disturbing him in his lands of Westfield and spoliation of his cow at his lands of Kirkhope. In 1504 he was among a number of men who had remission for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is d-listed right after Mark, who may have been related, and before his son and heir William, followed by James in Kirkhope and James in Gar-gunnock. He is also listed in the 1506 remis-sion for the same crime. His son and heir Will-iarn is also recorded in 1504 as a procurator for Helen Rutherford, heiress to Rutherford of that Ilk. Probably the same Adam of Philiphau was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Ale-moor in 1509. Janet, who was granted a charter for Philiphau in 1509 was surely related to him. Adam (d.bef. 1509) resident of Horn-shole recorded at the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, specifically: stealing 2 bolls of bar-ley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools from John and Thomas Young of Minto; stealing ‘chattels’ from Katherine Stewart from Minto; common theft and pillage; stealing 36 ewes from the Murrays in Sundhope; stealing 56 ells of cloth and 2 horses from Lauder; stealing 40 sheep from Philiphaugh; and stealing 12 sheep from Thomas Williamson from the Kirkland of Wilton. Addi-tionally he and Walter, also in Hornshole, were allowed to compone for a series of other crimes: stealing livestock from 3 separate men in Minto; bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder Minto; and for common theft. Their surety was Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1494/5 he had remission for several related crimes: stealing sheep, cows and a horse from John Sinton in Synton, in the company of James Elliot; stealing further horses from Torwoodlee, Fairnilee and Lauder; stealing sheep from Glenrath; stealing an ox from Heartside and ‘chattels’ from Hugh Dou-glass; stealing cattle from Katherine Stewart in Minto; bringing in men from Tynedale to plunder from Thomas Wilkinson; and for common theft and delivery of stolen goods. His surety was Wal-ter Scott of Howpasley. He was also described as ‘in Hornshole’ (i.e. tenant there) in 1502 when he was indicted for stealing 200 oxen and 80 horses from James Newton, tenant of Synton. David Scott (called ‘the Lady’) tenant of Stirches was involved in the same or a similar incident at Synt-on. Later in 1502 he was ‘in Hornishole, now in Chalmerlane-Newtoune’ when he had remission for a series of crimes. This included stealing 80 sheep from Broadmeadows (probably also involving David ‘the Lady’ Scott in Stirches), bringing in Englishman Sir John Musgrave, stealing 160 sheep from ‘Hundalishop’, stealing 100 sheep from William Turnbull at Oakwood, stealing 60 sheep from ‘Caldschelis’, for helping Archibald and Ninian Armstrong to raid Synton, and stealing 17 cows, 2 horses, 100 sheep and goods from St. Leonard near Peebles. James Newton in Syn-ton and Walter Scott of Howpasley were sureties for him and Walter (son of Walter Scott of Head-shaw) appears to have been involved in 2 of the same incidents. Musgrave’s men burned Selkirk and stole 1000 merks worth of goods from the inhabitants; he also had remission for his role in this. George of Hallrule and Bartholomew in Rawflat acted as sureties for him. In 1509 Andrew Crozier was hanged for several crimes, including his murder, along with the murder of another Adam, called ‘Gabirlenzeis’. There are no details given for the incident leading to his death. He may be an ancestor of later Turnbulls who were tenants of Hornshole. He may be the ‘Ade Trumbull’ listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with David and Robert, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of An-gus responsible for their pledges. Adam (15th C.) member of the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Braxholme and Buccheuch in 1492. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam ‘Gaberlunzie’ (d.bef. 1509) killed along with Adam in Chamberlain Newton (so they may have been related). Andrew Crozier was hanged in 1509 for this and other crimes. No information is given about this incident and no clues as to the reason for his nickname, which is recorded as ‘Gabirlenzies’. He was surely re-lated to Walter, ‘gabirlenze’. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. The other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick. Note that there was also a separate Adam listed, but neither had another designation, and so it is impossible to know if they were the same as any of the other contemporary Adam’s. Adam (15th/16th C.) witness to the notorial instrument of 1501/2 for the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, relating to their lands of Feu-Rule in the Barony of Cavers. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of Walter in Stouslie. In 1502 William in Crumhau was surety for him at the Justice-aire, and was fined for his non-appearance. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded among the men who were put to the horn in 1502 for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Mark Ker of Dophinton, George of Hallrule, while John in Wells was also listed and so surely related. Adam (15th/16th C.)

described as ‘of Billerwell’ in 1502. In 1502 he was ‘de bullirwell’ when he was fined for failing to produce Ninian in court among a group of men charged with the murder if Robert Oliver. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Peter Turnbull in Bonchester. In 1506 he had remission for ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with William Turnbull of Minto, as well as with his accomplices, the rebels Mark, Edward and Walter Turnbull. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale; he was there recorded as being ‘in Bullerwell’. George Turnbull was Laird of Billerwell in 1589, so presumably a descendant. Adam (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with George and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander Lord Home. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant in Wolfelee who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; James was also listed there as tenants of ‘Wolffley’, and so may have been related. Adam (d.bef. 1532) killed along with Thomas Dalgleish, when a group led by Clem Crozier, Martin Crozier, Hob Elliot of Ramsiegill, Sym Forester and Johnnie Forester from Liddesdale raided ‘within the boundis of Teviotdale’. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Adam (16th C.) listed along with Gavin in 1534 when they were entered into ward in Blackness Castle, with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being discharged of the bond he had made to the King for their good behaviour. It seems likely they were either father and son or brothers (with his name given first), but it is not clear where they were from exactly (the names match the Turnbulls of Billerwell, for example). Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1552/3 as ‘Adam Trumbull of Woulie’ when he had a bond with John Ker of Ferniehirst and others to remain within Jedforest. He is probably the Adam who was tenant in Wolfelee (along with Walter) when listed among many Borders men in the remission of 1526 for riding against the Earl of Arran. Probably the same Adam signed a bond in 1557 (along with others) with John Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in William Nixon; he is there recorded as ‘Adam Trumbill in Wolviole’. Adam of Billerwell (16th C.) signed a bond in 1557 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, to bring in the thief William Nixon. Probably the same Adam of ‘Bullerwell’ is recorded in 1571 when he had to appear before the Privy Council and was warded. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troweyhill) and others, not to harm each other. He may have been the same ‘Adam Trumbill of Billirwall’ who was part of the ‘pacification’ granted by the King to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and his friends and servants in 1581. He must have been related to the Adam recorded a couple of decades later. Adam (16th C.) tenant in Westwood. He is recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. He could be related to the later Lairds of Westwood. Adam (16th C.) son of Sandy. He was recorded in 1567, along with Hector ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as ‘Isobel’s Robin’, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Olivars. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. Adam (d.bef. 1578) recorded as ‘in Belsis’ when he witnessed a charter in 1549, hence he was presumably tenant of Belses. The charter was for Robert Scott of Howpasley granting Appletreethall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Hallrule, Billerwell and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troweyhill), not to harm each other. Also in 1576 there was a pledge made before the Privy Council, that his sons ‘Hekie’, David, George and John would refrain from thieving. In 1576/7 his servant Patrick Bennet was attacked by Walter in Firth, servant of John of Minto (despite the bond that had been signed between the feuding Turnbull branches); his son Hector was also mentioned, with the pair appearing personally. His sons were all declared fugitives in 1578/9. Hector is recorded in 1580 having a brother-in-law called Patrick Richardson, and so presumably this was the husband of one of his daughters. Adam (16th C.) described as a ‘clerk’ at Hallrule in 1562, when his house and yard were part of the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. The Adam of half a century later must be a descendant. Adam of ‘Yaton Scott’ (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. Andrew was also listed as being at the same location, and although it is unclear where this was, most of the others were Turnbulls of Rulewater. Adam ‘Reid Adie’ (16th C.) tenant in Over Hassendean. He is recorded in 1576 when Sir Thomas of Bedrule was surety for him, promising that he would refrain from theft; the pledge was stated to have been broken in 1578/9. He is also recorded in 1583/4 among men of that area cited for failing to appear to give evidence relating to charges against sons of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. Adam (16th/17th C.) son of Stephen, from whom he inherited the right of rental of the lands of ‘Wowlie and Wowahoplie’ (i.e. ‘Wolfelee’ and ‘Wolfehopelee’) in 1590. He resigned the rental in favour of Sir William Cranstoun in 1607. In 1616 he was witness to a bond between William Scott of Todrig and Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh, where he is referred to as Adam ‘called of the Wowly’. He was surely related to the Adam in Woollee of the 1550s. Adam (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘sumityme servand to the said Walter Trumbill of Raffat’ in the 1603 trial of George Turnbull of Belses. George was accused of killing a son of Walter of Rawflat, and shooting another son, and also of capturing him ‘binding him with fetteris, and hinging him be the feit and schoulderis, ouer ane balk [beam], for the space of xij [12] dayis, quhairthrow his feit rottit fra him’. What became of him is unrecorded. It is possible he was the brother of David in Belses (with other brothers George and John) recorded in 1581 and 1583, when they were accused of attacking the farm of Rawflat. Adam (16th/17th C.) tenant of Wauchope in Rulewater, recorded in a court case of 1605. He may have been related to the George who was also a tenant there, and perhaps more distantly related to the Turnbuls of Wauchope themselves. Adam of Billerwell (16th/17th C.) one of the members of an inquest of 1610 to judge the proper succession to James Hamilton’s lands of Appotside and Tythhouse. In 1619 he had a bond, along with his son George, with John Haliburton of Mertoun, and this was witnessed by ‘my brother’ Andrew Turnbull. His son George was witness to a sasine of 1612. Probably the same Adam ‘in Bullerwall’ was one of the men accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in 1598–1605, when his brother Andrew was also listed; both were ‘past fra’, i.e. the case was not pursued. He then served as surety for the other Turnbuls. Adam of Abbotrule (16th/17th C.) involved in a dispute in 1610, where Andrew Turnbull accused him and others of grazing their animals on his lands at Stonedge and Harwoodtown. He is probably the Adam, called ‘of Tounheid of Abbotreull’, who had a bond with Walter of Bedrule in 1617/8. He had a bond with John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton, signed in Hawick in 1619 and registered in 1624. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Bonechester tounhead’ (i.e. Bonchester Townhead) in 1618 when he witnessed a bond between Walter of Bedrule and Adam of Abbotrule Townhead. In 1619 he had a bond with ‘his good friend, Walter Lorane in Gattascot’. Perhaps the same Adam is recorded being in ‘…head’, among Bonchester landowners, in the 1643 valuation for Abbotrule Parish; his lands were valued at £25. Adam ‘Adie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh, the Kirklands and Swanshiel. However, there may have been other Adams in the same family (uncles and cousins) at the same time, so it is uncertain this is all the same man. In 1623 he was served heir to his grandfather Hector of Hartshaugh in the lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ (i.e. Kirklands) in Hobkirk, as well as Wester Swanshiel and ‘Clerksbankis’. He is recorded as ‘in Hartshaugh’ in the Circuit Court of 1622 when (along with another Adam Turnbull) he was caution for James Turnbull of Braidhaugh, who was found guilty of stealing 24 sheep from ‘Hairlesyd’. In 1623 he was recorded as the miller ‘in Hartshauchmylne’ when Lyle Turnbull gave security for him and when he was acquitted of stealing cattle from Gilbert Elliott’s land at ‘Leisburne’. It is unclear when he succeeded his father in the lands that had been in the family for many generations. However, it appears that he neglected to ‘enter’ with his superior and so in 1630 he lost Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Hobkirk (to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), although he held on to Wester Swanshiel. He is still recorded as owner of Wester Swanshiel in 1643, when it was valued at £32 10s; he may also have been the Adam ‘in Swansheil’ who was tenant in the other part of Swanshiel, valued at £66 13s 4d. It is likely he is the same Adam recorded in Easter Swanshiel and Wester Swanshiel on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (even although he may have been deceased by then). Adam (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with David as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. Adam ‘Clerk’ (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester according to the 1643 county valuation. His lands were valued at £25. He was distinct from the 2 Adams recorded at Bonchester Townhead, but could be the same as the Adam recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1663. He could be related to Thomas ‘called Clack’ who is recorded as a landowner in Abbotrule in 1663. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownhead along with Walter in 1643. The lands were valued at £140. Adam of Rueltownfoot (17th C.) recorded in 1643 in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. Adam (17th C.) listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £104. He may have been related to Walter and William who also held Raperlaw lands at the same time. Adam (17th C.) recorded on the Land Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish in about 1663. Although difficult to transcribe it appears that he also paid for his part of Hallrule in 1663. Perhaps the same Adam ‘in Roull’ was listed on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Abbotrule Parish when he paid tax on £70. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick in 1673 when a woman was fined for telling him to hang himself and calling him ‘ane land loppon lowne’. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Nether Tofts. His will and that of his wife, Margaret Douglas, are recorded in 1682. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Hawthornside. In 1678 he paid tax on £40 at Hawthornside. In 1684 his son (whose name is not legible) was listed among people declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. The will of his wife Isobel Shiel is recorded in 1688. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Elphaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Adam married to Jane Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Janet (b.1670); Thomas (b.1673); Robert (b.1681); Michael (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1687). Adam (1653/4–1732) son of William of Bonchester. He was tenant farmer at Doorpool. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1731, aged 75. His only daughter Helen married Walter Scott, 4th Laird of Nether Bonchester. Along with his father and wife, he was buried in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Adam (17th/18th C.) merchant at the Westport in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright George Haliiburton in 1704. His children included Elspeth (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were carrier Andrew Clerk and innkeeper Francis Elliot. Bessie (b.1701), baptised in Hawick, may also have been his child. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hassendeanbank. He may have been son of William of Cockerheugh. He was succeeded in the tenancy by his son James and then his grandson, who was also Adam. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1714. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Helen Nichol in Minto in 1716. Adam (17th/18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His children included: Christian (1718/9–35); and John (1723/4–45). Andrew, who was also miller at Mangerton Mill, was probably also his son. They are buried at Ettleton. Adam of Deneside (17th/18th C.) last Turnbull Laird of Denesyde (also called ‘Nether Hawthornside’). He is said to have been a Jacobite supporter in the rebellion of 1715, probably accompanying William Kerr (‘Bitterbeard’) in fighting with the Old Pretender. As a consequence he was encouraged to leave (or possibly run out of) the area by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, who bought up all the ‘wadsets’ which the estate was under and advised him to leave the country. Elliott agreed to keep ‘St. Mary’s Well’ as a roadside watering place, and also gave him some money for his journey. He went south with his family, first to Tarsetfoot in Tynedale. His son Thomas was a weaver there, but some of his grandchildren returned to the local area. He may be the same Adam of Hawthornside whose son (first name not given) was among those listed as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Adam (18th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Oliver. Adam (18th C.) resident of Kilknowne. His wife Christian Lorraine died in 1762 and was buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. Adam (d.bef. 1769) schoolmaster at Abbotrule, recorded in 1769 when his daughter Elizabeth married Finlay Stewart in Edinburgh. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Stevenson and their children included: Helen (b.1768); and Walter (b.1770). Adam (1766–1810) tenant of Hassendeanbank. His father was James, who also farmed there, with his grandfather being Adam and great-grandfather probably William, tenant of Cockerheugh. He is probably the Adam recorded at Hassendean on the 1787–94 Horse Tax Rolls and also in 1797, where he is listed as owner of 8 farm horses. He also paid the dog tax at Hassendean in the same year. In 1788 he married Betty, daughter of James Scott of Skelfhill. They had at least 12 children, including: Jean (1790–1874); James (1791–1854); Robert (1792–1822); William (b.1794), who farmed at Falnash and Merrylaw; Adam Ogilvie (1796–1835), who became an architect; Gideon Pott (1797–1841), who died in Berbice (Guyana); Agnes (1799–1829), who married Pater Brodie; Gavin (b.1800–54); Thomas (1802–81); Helen (1803–79); Betsy (1805–63); and John Robson (1807–66), Master of Works at Windsor Castle. Adam (1760/1–1851) eldest son of Thomas and grandson of Adam of Denesyde.
He was a shepherd in Tyneside, but joined his younger brother Thomas on the farm at Grange, on the Abbotrule estate. He leased Midburn (also called ‘Africa’) in about 1823, and renewed the lease along with his eldest son Thomas in 1848.
He is listed at ‘Africa’ in 1851, but must have died soon after the census was taken. At that time the farm consisted of 50 acres of arable land, 100 acres of pasture and employed 3 people. He mar-rried in Tyneside and had a daughter Margaret (who was brought up by her aunt at East Fod-derlee and married James Stewart) and another daughter who died young. He secondly married Mary, daughter of John Turnbull, farm worker at Stonedge, and she died in 1852, aged 74. His children with his 2nd wife included Thomas (who farmed at Midburn), John (who married Jane Nichol and moved to Selkirk) and Michael (who married Beatrice Nichol, sister of his brother’s wife). Adam (18th/19th C.) tailor in Newcastle-ton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the Adam from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821.
Adam Ogilvie (1796–1835) son of Adam and Betsy Scott. Like his brother John Robson, he attended Minto School and trained to be an architect. He was a builder in Edinburgh and died there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His son James Somerville became a doctor and emigrated to New Zealand.
Adam (b.1817/8) grocer and spirit deal on the Mid Row. He was at about No. 4 in 1851 and was listed as a grocer on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Helen and their children included William, Robert, James and Alexander. Bailie Adam (1867–1946) son of Robert and Margaret Wilson. He was a teacher in Hawick. He was also well known on both the rugby and cricket fields. He played full back for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1880s. He was on both the South of Scotland teams in Rugby Union and Cricket. He took over from George Wilson as the second Secretary of Hawick R.F.C. He also referced at least 7 international rugby matches. He also acted as Session Clerk to Hawick Parish. He was a member of the committee of the Roxburgh and Selkirkshire Unionist Association. He mar-rried Helen Paterson (1867–1942), and they had 4 cchildren, including Rev. Robert Wilson (b.1893) and Helen (b.1895). He became blind 11 years before his death. Adam (19th/20th C.) stood
time this honour was given to someone who had not already been Cornet. It is said that he was meant to be Cornet in 1898, but either fell out with the organisers, or turned it down because his sister died about then. In any case he refused to act as Left-Hand Man again in 1898.
Agnes (16th C.) daughter and heiress of Walter in Dalkeith. She married Thomas Home, also from Dalkeith, and in about 1567 she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewlands in Rule-water. She passed them to Andrew, son of David Turnbull of Wauchope, who may have been a relative. Agnes ‘White Ersed Nannie’ (d.1805) her death is recorded in the Hawick parish records (along with her nickname!). There are several possible births of Agneses that could be her.
Agnes (b.c.1790) keeper of a lodging-house at 36 High Street. She was married to William, also known as ‘Wull the Bellman’. Their children included Mary, William and Isabella. In 1861
she was a widow, still running the lodging house.
Agnes (b.1814) daughter of Wilton Schoolmaster James and Margaret Dalgleish. She was teacher at the ‘Image Garden’ school in the 1840s, probably assisted by her mother, her father having died in 1834. She may have married David Host. The school building can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races, but probably did not last more than a few years. In Slater’s 1852 directory, she is listed as teacher at Wilton Cottage.
Alexander (15th C.) notary public in the Fife area in 1488/9. It is unclear how he might have been related to local Turnbills. He may be the same ‘Alexandro Turnbull’ among the witnesses to the charter granting Harden to John Turnbull in 1482, made at Kirkcaldy by Henry Wardlaw of Wilton. He was notary public for the diocese of St. Andrews in 1506, when there was a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Land-erdale) held by Melrose Abbey. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1493 being ‘in Wowlee’, i.e. resident of Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. The next entry was for Robert, also in Wolfelee. Alexander (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being in Unthank, which is presumably the farm in Rulewater. He was cited again at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was probably related to Henry, who was also recorded in Unthank in 1494/5.
Alexander (15th C.) son of Andrew of Dryden.
In 1494/5 he had remission for resetting Adam ‘howatson’ and Robert Jackson, who had stolen sheep from James Ker in Fastleugh and helped the ‘Thieves and Traitors of Levyn’ in killing the wife and 2 sons of Thomas Middlemas of Ploro, as well as stealing a long (and very detailed) list of his goods. He could perhaps be the same man as Alexander in Commonside, who served as surety for Adam Howison in Commonside, also in 1494/5. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in ‘bel-lentyne’ at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He probably lived at Bellendean. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for committing with ‘the traitors of Leven’. His brother ‘Blinnd John’ was also recorded as ‘sande turnbulis brother of bellentyn’ in 1494/5, when he contributed 2 cows for the expenses of the Justice-aire. Alexander (15th C.) son of Robert. He was recorded in 1494/5 when Thomas Lauder of Todrig had remission for several crimes, including resetting him. He had apparently stolen cattle from Thomas Yair in ‘laudoma’. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant at Braidlie in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig was convicted of stealing 2 horses from him. It is unclear whether his farm was the one on the Borthwick, the Hermitage or near Ashkirk.

Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 when his son Adam was among men who David Home of Wedderburn had to present to answer charges brought by Englishmen. Alexander of Hova (16th C.). In 1587 he was accused of being involved with taking sheep from Sir William Sinclair of Hermdandstoun, or at least of resetting the sheep stolen by his son Gavin. Sir Thomas of Bedrule appeared in his name, but he was found guilty and order to be confined until Sinclair received recompense. Alexander (d.c.1600) farmer at Crosscleuch, near Fulton in Bedrule Parish. He is listed as deceased in a letter of 1602 which states that ‘the ferme hes beine waist sen the pest tyme’, suggesting that he had died of the Plague. His wife was Margaret Cockburn. Alexander (1691/2–1761) married to Helen Murray, who died in 1780, aged 66. His son Thomas was a merchant in Denholm and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Alexander (18th C.) tenant in Langraw. His son was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738. Alexander (d.1810) recorded as ‘Brother to the Laird of Tofts’ when he died in Hawick. It is unclear who his brother might have been, but perhaps Anthony. Alexander (18th/19th C.) baker and keeper of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1834 electoral roll he was also joint proprietor of houses with joiner John Turnbull. Alexander ‘Auld Sandy’ (1791–1859) 5th son of James and Betty Adamson and brother of the schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He was a carrier, based at Nursery House, Bonchester Bridge, initially helping his grandfather George Adamson. In 1851 he is listed as ‘Carrier & Grocer’ at ‘1 Woodside’ in Bonchester. In later life he moved to Kirkton, where he died. In 1817 he married Elspeth (‘Betty’), daughter of George Alexander, farmer at Bonchester farm. Their children were: James (b.1817); Helen (b.1819); and George (b.1822), who emigrated to New Zealand and died in Dunedin; Agnes (b.1824); Isobel (b.1826); Elizabeth (b.1829); Ebenezer Alexander (1831–93), who died in Leith; and Margaret (b.1834). Alexander Rutherford (1835–97) of the firm Turnbull the dyers. He was son of the company’s founder, John. In 1861 he was master dyer, employing 30 people. He married Janet Armstrong Hume and their children were: Annie Hume (b.1865), who married Town Clerk John Ritchie Purdom; John Elliot (b.1868); James Armstrong (b.1871); and Arthur Rutherford (b.1873). Alexander Dobson (1853–1932) hosiery manager. He had Wellogate Villa and Woodside built for him by David and Peter Dalgleish (Glashiels builders, who were his brothers-in-law). He was a member of the Archaeological Society. He is recorded as ‘Alex. D.’, cashier at 2 Teviotside Terrace, where he died. He married his second cousin Mary Warwick. They had 8 children, including: William Dickson of the Crescent Cleaning Co., George, law clerk in Edinburgh; Keith; and Mary (b.1881), wife of Provost James D. Lawson of Pittenweem. Alexander (b.1867) born at Newton, Jedburgh. He worked as a servant on the Wolfelee estate. In 1893 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Little, shepherd at Gordenberry. Their children included John, Andrew, Helen and Alexander. Andrew of Dryden (15th C.) witness to a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. He is recorded as ‘Andrea Turnbule de Dryden’, his lands probably being in upper Teviotdale. The Andrew of Dryden recorded 4 decades later may be the same man, but is more likely to be his son. Andrew (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Stephen and John, who directly follow him, or Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Andreas Turnebule’. It is possible he is the same as Andrew of Dryden. Andrew (15th C.) witness to the sasine of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is recorded as being ‘of Hawick’ and Thomas of Stouslie was another witness. It is possible he is the same man as Andrew of Stouslie. Andrew (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1490 sasine in which Robert Scott purchased a ‘tenement’ of land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He is described as ‘Andrew Turnbull of Stowisle’, which is presumably Stouslie. He must be related to the Thomas of Stouslie recorded in 1488. Andrew (15th C.) recorded at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh as being at Bonchester. He was surety for George, son of Walter in Bonchester, and also served as surety for himself, being fined when the pair of them did not appear. Andrew of Dryden (15th C.) recorded as being ‘of Dryden’ in 1494/5 when his son Alexander had a remission for raids on Ker at Fastheugh and Mid- demas at Ploro. He was also recorded in that same year when his son John was named among men who John Scott of Deloraine was accused of associating with. This is probably the Dry- den in upper Teviotdale. He was surely related to John of Dryden, recorded in 1498, and probably a descendant of the earlier Andrew of Dry- den. Andrew (15th C.) recorded as being called ‘calvus’ (i.e. ‘bald’) in 1494/5 when he had remission for burning and stealing from Fastheugh, for resetting the ‘Traitors of Levyn’ (i.e. English- men) and helping them in a raid on Hangingshaw. The Laird of Whit hope acted as surety. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote. In 1502 he was among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while John and William in Gatehouse- cote were also mentioned and so surely related. Presumably the same Andrew in Gatehousecote is also listed on the 1516 remission that a number of Turnbulls had for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother William is also listed, as well as Thomas, Patrick and David, who were also at Gatehousecote, and so possibly related. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant at Bedrule in 1502, when he was listed among Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in court to answer to the charge of murdering Robert Oliver. Andrew in Gatehousecote was listed separately and hence was a different man. It is unclear how he might have been related to Thomas, Laird of Bedrule at the time. His surety was Mark Ker of Dolfinton. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 he was among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Mark Ker of Dolfinton. He was separate from Andrew in Gatehousecote and Andrew in Bedrule, who were also listed. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Sir Andrew’, chaplain, in 1512 when he was witness to a charter where Roger Langlands of Wilton sold Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandhill. He was thus probably the Chaplain of Wilton. Possibly the same ‘Sir Andrew’ was witness to a document at Kelso Abbey in about 1520. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Ful- ton in 1516, along with Adam and George (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turn- bulbs to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Overchester, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. His son Thomas was also listed. Other tenants there were Mark, Archibald, Mark younger, Richard, David and Ninian. Andrew (15th/16th C.) brother of David, tenant of Hassendeankbank. He is on the 1516 remission for Turnbulls and others who may have assisted the Homes. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rule, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. Ninian was also a tenant there, so possibly related. Andrew (d. bef. 1535) recorded in 1535 as ‘Andree alias Dauud Turnbull’ in the trial of Robert Scott of Al- lanhaugh. Along with Thomas, he was tenant in Town-of-Rule and said to have been cruelly killed by Scott and the men he brought in from Lid- desdale. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Hornishill’ (presumably Hornshole) in 1562/3 when Alexander Lord Home tried to have several men removed as ‘pretended tenants’ from the local lands for which he was superior. He may be re- lated to other Turnbulls who were connected with this place. Andrew (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Fahnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Re- gent. His name is recorded as ‘Andro’, and he is listed after George, to whom he was surely re- lated. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) son of Eckie (i.e. Hector) of Belses. In 1580 he, his father, and his father’s brother-in-law Patrick Richard- son were accused by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wed- derburn, of murdering her husband John Hamil- ton and were denounced as rebels. In a separate record of 1580, he was convicted, along with John Young ‘in the Cames’ of murdering and stealing from John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’. Young was hanged, but being still a minor he was delivered to Andrew Lindsay to be kept in ward. His name is given as ‘Andro Trumbill’ and also as ‘Dand Turnbull, sone naturall’ to Hector. Andrew (16th C.) son of David of Wauchope. He is recorded in a charter of 1567 when the lands of Templehall and Brewlands were feued to him by the superior James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) on resignation by Agnes Turnbull and her husband Thomas Home. The feu was extended to his nieces Jean and Beatrix Turnbull in 1604, daughter of his brother Walter of Templehall. Andrew ‘Spangand Andro’ (16th C.) listed as one of the 10 men accused in 1581 of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. His nickname may refer to ‘springing’ an arrow. There is no information about which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in ‘Yatton Scott’, listed in 1581 (along with Adam of the same place) among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. It is unclear where this location was, but presumably in Rulewater. Sir Andrew of Bedrule, ‘Auld Bedrule’ (16th C.) mentioned in the ‘Raid of the Redeswire’, so presumably Laird in the late 1500s. However, his relationship with other near contemporary Lairds of Bedrule is unclear, and it is possible that he never existed – ‘But little harness had we there; But auld Baderule had on a jack, And did right weel, I you declare, With all his Trumbills at his back’[T]. He was supposed to be such a notorious thief that Home and Kerr refused to sign a bond of alliance with the Turnbulls and Rutherfords, claiming that he had stolen cattle from Home of Wedderburn. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) tenant in Troneyhill. He is recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Minto, Bewlie and Kames), who swore not to harm another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belsches and Chesters). Watt from there is also listed and hence surely related. Andrew (16th C.) uncle of William of Barnhills. He is listed in 1584/5 as ‘Andro Turnbull of the Bernhills’ along with his nephews William, Robert, Gavin and Hector, among Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Andrew of Howden (16th C.) listed among the Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. His brothers George and Robert are also listed. Andrew ‘Andro’ (d.1601) brother of Robert of Bewlie and probably son of Walter. He was probably among the group of Turnbulls accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He was beheaded at the Market Cross of Edinburgh for his role in the murder of Thomas Ker and George Glaidner in Jedburgh. This was part of a feud between Turnbulls and Kerrs, in which 30 Turnbulls and associates attacked specific Kerrs on Jedburgh Fair Day, perhaps in retaliation for the earlier murder of Henry Oliver. He lost ‘the lytill finger of his left hand’ in the fight. The court case was long and complicated, and it seems that the legal system was stacked in favour of the Kerrs. Andrew (16th/17th C.) brother of Adam of Billerwell. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. However, the case against him and some of the others was dropped, with the main Turnbulls of Wauchope being pursued instead. Andrew (16th/17th C.) heir to Hector of Stonedige. In 1610 he is recorded in a legal dispute with Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and others for having their animals graze his lands at Stonedige and Harwoodtown. In 1611 he was ‘Andro Turnbull of Stanielege’ when John Riddell, younger of that Ilk was cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Bonchester. In 1612 he and his sons Thomas and John, along with John ‘in Elscheuch’ complained to the Privy Council that John, Lord Ker of Jedburgh, had unfairly imprisoned them, and they were ordered to be released. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule, he was also known as David. He was a butcher and Burgess of Jedburgh. In 1616 he had a bond with James ‘called of Bedrule’ (probably his uncle) and Mark in Hartshaugh. In 1619 he witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule and George Ker of Cavers Carre. Andrew (d.1622) recorded as ‘Andro in Belsches’ when he was tried for perjury and bribing witnesses Robert Ker, David Turnbull and James Young. They had apparently all lied in a case of theft brought by him against William and Walter Middlemas. He was sentenced to execution in Edinburgh. Andrew of Bewlie (17th C.) married Marion, daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, according to a marriage contract of 1627. In 1628 there was caution paid for him by Thomas of Knowe to ensure that he did not molest Adam Scott of Burnfoot, Walter Scott of Midshiels, or their tenants and servants. In 1640 he paid off a debt to his step-father and wife (probably part of the marriage contract). He was recorded as owner of Bewlie, valued at '56 bolls victual, half bear meal, bear £6, meal £8 [actually £7] the boll', corresponding to £364. Either he or his descendant was recorded as Andrew of Bewlie in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls when he paid tax on £367. Andrew (17th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £54. He could be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (17th C.) miller at Appotside Mill. He witnessed a Rulewater sasine of 1654, and may have been related to the Turnbull tenants of Harwood and Templehall who were also witnesses. It is also likely he was related to the man of the same name who was miller at Woollie Mill in the 1680s and 90s. Andrew (17th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1676 Samuel Newbie was found guilty of assaulting him and another mason, Andrew Wilson. Andrew (d.1691) tenant at ‘Woollie-mill’ (i.e. Wolfelee Mill) in 1684 when his servant John Hall was listed among those declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. His was one of the oldest gravestones in Hobkirk Kirkyard, the inscription being ‘Here lys Andrew Turnbull, miller in Wollie Miln’. His wife Elizabeth Lillie died in 1719. He could have been father of Robert, who was tenant at Wolfelee Mill later. His descendants were tenants of Hallrule Mill for 3 generations. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (17th C.) cooper in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was living on the west-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He could be the Andrew, married to Margaret Chisholme, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Robert (b.1670); an unnamed son (b.1676); John (b.1679); Andrew (b.1681); and Walter (b.1686). He could be the Andrew whose son Adam was baptised in Hawick in 1698, with witnesses William Swan and John Turnbull. Andrew (d.c.1688) tenant in Belses whose will was recorded in 1688. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hasseuden. In 1681 he married Isobel Scott and their children included: Bessie (b.1681); Janet (b.1684); and Andrew (b.1686). The witnesses in 1686 were George Scott and James (who may have been related to him). Andrew (1667–1747) son of Thomas, he is sometimes described as the last Laird of Bedrule, although he did not actually possess any of the ancestral lands. He farmed at Minto Cleuchhead. He married Jean Scott, who died in 1712, aged 32. He secondly married Agnes Turnbull, and she died in 1732, aged 39. His is the first name included on a memorial tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk. His children with his 1st wife were: Agnes; Thomas, of the Hawick carpet factory; and William tenant of Ancreum Woodhead. And with his second wife: Jean, who died unmarried; Margaret, died aged 16; Helen (Nellie); Stephen; and John. His brother William was probably tenant at Bedrule Mill. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1702 when he married Helen Paterson. Their children probably included Marion (b.1703). Other possible children are: Jean, daughter of William, who married William Fletcher in Minto in 1732; and Jean, daughter of William, who married Jean Paterson in Minto in 1735. Andrew (17th/18th C.) Hawick mason. He was listed as a mason among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was one of the tradesmen chosen in 1713 by the minister and heritors to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse in Hawick. He was also charged with valuing Andrew Rodger’s house for the Kirk Session, perhaps for the same purpose. Around the same time it was presumably the same Andrew who was paid by the Session for erecting a large sign with the name of Betty Thomson, who bequeathed money to the poor of the Parish. In 1720 he (along with mason John) witnessed a baptism for gardener Andrew Colwart. He witnessed an irregular marriage between merchant John Scott and Anna Laing in 1724. Along with John (also a mason), he witnessed a baptism for smith William Young in 1725. Also in 1725 he was a candidate for Session Treasurer. Probably the same Andrew, along with mason John, witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Andrew Scott and Janet Turnbull in 1721 and 1726. He witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness in 1742, when he is ‘elder’ and another in 1743 for former Bailie Depute Walter Scott, when he was described as ‘Senior’. He also witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Gardner in 1743. He was probably related to the earlier mason of the same name, The mason called Andrew who is recorded in the 1740s and 50s seems likely to have been his son. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in Drydenburn. His wife was Helen Beattie and their daughter Helen was born in 1725. Also in 1725 (on the same day) he witnessed a baptism for John Graham in Allanhaugh Mill. Andrew (17th/18th C.) servant of Rev. Robert Cunningham. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron. Andrew (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1719 he married Marion, daughter of James Falsyde. Their children included: James (b.1720); Andrew (b.1721); Robert (b.1725); and James (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1721 were baxters William Hodge and William Mitchel. Andrew (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1742 he was ‘Elder Carrier’ when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew ‘Younger, Town Post’. He was thus probably father of Hawick’s letter deliverer. Andrew (18th C.) recorded as ‘Town Post’ in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick. It is unclear what this meant, but one possibility is that he was a Burgh Officer (since the Town courier seems unlikely). He was also ‘Town Post’ in 1742 when one of his children was baptised. He was additionally ‘younger’ in 1742, suggesting he was son of the ‘elder’ carrier (and not the same as the family of masons). He married Esther Porteous and their son Andrew was baptised in 1742, with witnesses merchant Robert Scott and carrier Andrew ‘Elder’ (presumably his father). Andrew (d.1776) probably son (or other close relative) of the earlier Andrew. He was also a mason in Hawick. He was listed as Andrew ‘senior’, mason, when he witnessed a baptism in 1745. Probably the same Andrew, described as ‘elder’, was paid for fixing part of the steeple of St. Mary’s in 1755. Probably the same Andrew was among the men paid in 1755 ‘for the herd’s house building’. In 1757 and 1765 he witnessed baptisms for glazier William Turnbull and his wife Isobel Turnbull (one of whom was probably his relative). In 1759 he was ‘mason, senior’ when he witnessed a baptism for William Scoon. He may be the mason of that name who witnessed a baptism for William Burnet in 1766. Probably the later masons of the same name were his descendants. He is probably the ‘old Mason’ of this name who died in Hawick in 1776. Andrew (18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His wife Agnes Armstrong died in 1757, aged 39 years, and is buried at Ettleton. He was probably son of Adam, who was earlier miller of Mangerton Mill. Andrew (18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Agnes Deans in 1763. Their children included: Andrew (b.1764); Margaret (b.1765); Andrew (again, b.1767); and Nichol (b.1769). The witnesses in 1764 were Andrew (perhaps his father) and Robert Thorburn. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for George Deans in 1777. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Alison (b.1777); Mary (b.1780); and Agnes (b.1786). He is probably the Andrew whose daughter ‘Ailey’ died in 1776. Andrew (18th C.) farmer near Hawick. He is recorded in 1789 buying 600 hawthorn plants for a hedge. Andrew ‘Little Andrew’ (18th/19th C.) probably a descendant of the earlier masons of the same name. However, it is possible he is the same man recorded as mason in the 1740s and 1750s. His son Andrew was a mason who died in Hawick in 1810. He may be the Andrew ‘jun’ who witnessed a baptism for James Dodds in 1758. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for mason William Philip in 1777. Andrew (d.1810) mason in Hawick, who was son of Andrew. His father had the nickname ‘Little Andrew’ on the death register. He could have been the mason Andrew recorded earlier in the 18th century, but there is likely to have been another generation there. He is probably the deceased mason whose daughter Janet died in 1811. Andrew (dbef. 1811) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1811 it is recorded that his daughter ‘Menie’ (probably Wilhelmina) ‘Burnt to Death’. He is probably the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Thomas (b.1806); Janet (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); William (b.1812); Oliver (b.1816); and Isabella (b.1817). The witnesses in 1808 were wright William Hislop and Janet Paisley. Andrew (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer based on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the stockingmaker called Andrew whose young daughter died in Hawick in 1823. Andrew (1795/6–1827) from Jedburgh, he was Procurator Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He married Isabella Mein, who died in 1833, aged 35. Andrew (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory. Anna (17th C.) served heir to her brother James of Wauchope in 1674. Anne (b.1812/3) sewing teacher in Minto Parish. In 1841 and 1851 she was living in Minto village with her mother Jane and brothers John and William, who were agricultural labourers. In 1861 she was ‘Annie’, living with her brother John. Anthony of Knowe (18th C.) probably son of Thomas. He became a Burgess of Selkirk in 1712 when he was ‘younger of Knowe’. In 1737 he was the ruling elder of Jedburgh Presbytery at the 1737 General Assembly. He is recorded in a discharge of 1741 for rents paid to Thomas Thomson and in a bill dis- pute in 1743 with Walter Scott, late of Cocker- heugh. In 1741 he witnessed the baptism of Walter Scott, last of Crumhaugh. He paid the wind- ow tax in Minto Parish in 1748. Letters of 1748 exists that he wrote to William Elliot of Wolfelee (lawyer in Edinburgh) concerning rents at Hunt- law and in Selkirk. He was probably succeeded by Thomas, who was probably his son, making Thomas's sister Isabella his daughter. Anthony of Tofts (d.1811) recorded as owner of Tofts in 1788. These lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £300, and still listed being owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1813. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Turnbulls of Tofts. He is probably the ‘Laird of Tofts’ whose brother Alexander died in Hawick in 1810. His own death is also recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1813. He is listed at $1788. These lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £300, and still listed being owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1813. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Turnbulls of Tofts. He is probably the ‘Laird of Tofts’ whose brother Alexander died in Hawick in 1810. His own death is also recorded in Hawick. Archibald (15th C.) part of the ‘re- tour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to, but he is listed right before Lawrence, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Archibald (15th/16th C.) son of the deceased John, he is recorded in 1499 along with William of Minto having remission from the Privy Council for the murder of ‘Johne of Rutherfurd’ and for fleeing to England. Archibald (15th/16th C.) brother of Mark, who was tenant in Overchester. They were listed among several Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Archibald (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee in 1522. Hector is listed before him and possibly related. Archibald ‘Airchic’ (16th C.) son and heir of Wat of ‘Howatt’. This seems likely to be Howa in Hobkirk Parish. In 1553/4 he pledge for his father, as part of an assurance given by the Rutherfords and Turnbulls. Archibald ‘Airchic’ (16th C.) son of Thomas in Hartshaugh. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1586 as proprietor of Unthank, in Hobkirk Parish. He was on a list of defaulters who refused to appear before the judiciary court. He may well have been related to the earlier Leo, and the later Robert and David. Archibald ‘Airchic’ of Langraw (16th C.) listed in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to answer changes of raiding into England. He is also recorded in 1579 among a group of Turnbulls who were accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. He was also recorded in 1579/80 in a list of men accused of taking part in raids into England. His caution was the Laird of Bedrule. He was one of those charged to repay ‘Johmne Selby of Twysill tuiccheing the guidis taikin furth of Monlawis’. He could be the ‘Archy Trumble’ listed along with ‘Gib Lorreyne’ among men of Teviotdale in complaints of a raid into England in 1597 Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Broomhall in 1759. He married Mary Lamb in 1755 and their children included William (b.1756) and Margaret (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and Robert Easton. Archibald Oliver (1825–69) eldest son of Thomas Turnbull with his 2nd wife Mary Beattie. He was born at East middle and educated at Den- holm and then from the age of 12 at Minto under Mr. Grant. He was said to be Minto School’s second best scholar, after ‘General Knowledge’ Moodie. He became a legal apprentice to George Potts of Hawick at the age of 16. 4 years later he went to Edinburgh University, where he trained as a lawyer. In 1850 he became a junior partner with Elliot’s in Jedburgh then set up on his own in 1859. He researched and wrote about the Turnbull clan, and also gave recollections of Denholm, which are related in Tancred’s ‘Rule-water’ book. He is buried in the place of intern- ment of his ancestors at Bedrule. Bartholomew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rawflat in 1502 when he (along with George of Hallrule) was surety for Adam, in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton. Possibly the same ‘Bertholomeum Trumbull’ was on the 1508 panel for Adam Helpburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. Beatrice (1908–86) wife of Sir Richard, born in Armadale and died in Jedburgh. She is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Beatrice (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Templehall (also called ‘Wat o Wau- chope’). Along with her sister Jean she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewlands (in Rule- water) from her uncle Andrew (son of David of Wauchope). In 1605 she was represented by her ‘tutor’ George Turnbull, suggesting she was still a minor at this point. In 1632 she claimed the other half of the lands that had belonged to her by then deceased sister. Charles (b.1736) son of Robert and Euphan Douglas, born in Cavers Parish. He lived in both Wilton and Hawick, working as a gardener. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Euphan (b.1761); Robert and an unnamed child (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1766); Janet (b.1768); and Helen (b.1770). The witnesses in 1768 were Robert Scott (probably a relative of his wife) and Alex Bunyan. His wife may be the ‘Lizzy’, spouse of Charles ‘now in America’, who died in Hawick in 1809. Charles (b.1809/10) from Denholm, he was a joiner in Hawick. He lived at about 20 Kirk Wynd in 1841 and 1851, moving later to Drumlanrig Place. His wife was Isabella and their children included Thomas, Euphemia, Jane, Charles, Mary, Jessie and Isabella. Charles ‘Charlie’ Pipe Major of the Scout Pipe Band for about 25 years. He served with the Royal Marines. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Christian (b.1805) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Eleanor in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. She and her sister Esther were living with their mother Mary on Buccleuch Street in 1841. In 1851 she was a ‘Woollen Seamstress & Annuitant’ living on Al- lars Crescent. Cock (15th C.) son of John in Tofts. He was recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 when he had remission for stealing an ox belonging to William Rennie (or perhaps Rae), from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. His surety was John, who may be the same man as his father. His name is given as ‘Cok turbule’, but it is unclear if ‘Cock’ was a nickname or a short form of a forename. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford was allowed to compone for several crimes, including assisting and resetting him after this same theft from Minto. Probably the same Cock ‘of Fulton’ was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing an ox of his. David (15th C.) part of a ‘retour of inquest’ for the lands of Eilrig in 1426 and for the Barony of Hawick in 1427. Perhaps the same David was on a retour in 1439 for Douglas of Bonjedward. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Turnbulls. David (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1484/5 for lands in Mangerton, involving the Scotts of Branzholme. 2 other signatories were Turnbulls of Rule Water. He may be the ‘Daudid Turmbull’ who was among the witnesses for the last will of Sir David Scott of Branzholme in 1491/2 (and possibly the David who received 10 sheep in the will). Perhaps the same David was listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5; he was explicitly listed with George of Hawick. He may be the same as ‘David Turnbull with George Turnbull’ listed along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere pledging good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. It is possible that he is the same as David of Wauchope. David (15th C.) son of the Laird of Whithope, probably the one in the Borthwick valley (where Philip, son of William was recorded 40 years earlier). In 1494/5 he was recorded as being ‘in Ernheuch’ (probably adjacent to Singlie in the Ettrick valley) when he had remission for stealing 14 ewes from Ninian Murray at Kershope and for stealing a white horse from Thomas Forest at Innerleithen; his surety was Walter Scott of Tushielaw. Philip in Whithope was recorded in 1502, and may have been his son or brother. He was probably related to the John of Ern Cleuch recorded in 1464/5. David (15th C.) recorded being ‘in hosco[is]’ (i.e. Hoscoat) in the 1494/5 Justice-aire. In the accounts for the court held in Selkirk he contributed 1 horse. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David of Bonchester (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and George. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David of Bonchester (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when David Scott (called ‘Lady’) in Stirkshaws had a remission for several crimes, including being part of a raid with him on the farms at Minto Craigen. Other participants of the raid were Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong and ‘other Traitors of Levin and Liddalis- dale’. They burned the farms, including 7 horses (presumably in a barn), as well as stealing 16 oxen and cows, 4 horses and sundry other goods. Perhaps the same David ‘in bonechester’ was mentioned in 1493 when George Turnbull (there and in Stouslie) was fined for his non-appearance. He was surely related to the John in Nether Bonchester, who is recorded in 1494/5. Probably the same David ‘in bonechestir’ was recorded in 1502 among many Turnbulls and others who were declared as fugitives for their part in the murder of Robert Oliver. The people who were supposed to enter him into the court were George of Hallrule and Robert Elliot in Redheugh, who were fined for his non-appearance. William in Bonchester was also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as William’s son Lawrence, and were presumably related. David (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘in Tofts’ in 1502 when he was allowed to pay a fine for his crimes of assisting rebel Robert Turnbull, called ‘Muriale’ in the burning of Riddell and stealing of 240 sheep, 2 cows and goods. John Turnbull of Tofts served as surety, so was presumably his close relative. He may be the ‘Roberti Trumbull’ listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with Adam and David, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of Angus, responsible for their pledges. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Carlinpool in 1502 when he and Philip Turnbull in Whithope had remission for bringing in the ‘Traitors of Levin’ to raid Fastheugh and Hangeishaw. David (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to a charter signed in Edinburgh in 1506. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. David of Wauchope (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when the Laird of Cranston was fined for failing to arrest him. He is also listed in 1504 among men who were given remission for involvement in the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey; David, listed after him, may have been his son. He is also recorded in 1508 as ‘David Trumbull de Wauchope’ when he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He may be the same Laird of Wauchope who was injured by an arrow at the skirmish at Sclaterford in 1513. He probably had a son of the same name, since David of Wauchope is recorded in 1530 and 1567. David (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hassendeanbank recorded on the 1516 list of Turnbulls and others who had remission for any part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Andrew is also listed. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Overchester, listed among many Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Several other Turnbulls are also listed there, and so probably related, with Mark apparently the main tenant, and William and John his sons. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Thomas and Patrick. David of Wauchope (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1530, along with Walter Turnbull of ‘Howay’, Philip Nesbit of that Ilk, Robert Haig of Benemyside and others. He is recorded in 1549 when his brother Hector was granted 2 husband lands in Appltreehall by Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers. Thomas (possibly his brother or other close relative) was pledge for him in 1553/4. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Bramsholme and Buccleuch. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. He is probably the David of Wauchope among those who appeared before the Queen in 1561, promising to provide lists of thieves and then required by the Queen to appear later in Jedburgh to answer for their failure to apprehend fugitives; his brother Thomas also appeared. In 1564 he is probably the ‘Lard of Wauchop’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is probably the same David who was recorded in 1567 when his son Andrew was granted the lands of Templehall and Brewlands in Rulewater; another son, Robert, was a witness to the charter. He is probably the David of Wauchope whose brother Walter of Hobburn is listed among men ordered to appear in 1567 to answer accusations of raiding into England; he was also ordered to appear himself and to present his ‘man and servand’ Adam Lyle, while another brother of his, Thomas of Harwoodtown, was also instructed to present a servant. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573 along with his son and heir Hector, both ‘with our handis at the pen’. His son and heir Hector is recorded in 1572/3, when he swore allegiance to the Crown. David (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Rouchhope according to a rent roll of 1541. Perhaps the same David was also tenant in the neighbouring farms of Wauchopehead and Wauchopebank. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Davids, perhaps even David of Wauchope. David (d.1576/7) presented to the Parish of Hobkirk in 1550, replacing James Bennet as priest there. He was referred to as ‘Sir’ David of Minto in 1569, when he was among a number of Borders clerics who were called before the Regent and Privy Council for adhering to pre-Reformation sacraments. He was recorded as the deceased Sir David in about 1577 when John Douglas replaced him as Vicar of Hobkirk. His designation ‘in Minto’ when he was called before the Privy Council suggests that he was from the family of Turnbuls of Minto (rather than being minister at Minto). David (16th C.) recorded being ‘called David of Crawden’ in 1583/4 when he was listed among some Borderers denounced for failing to appear before the Privy Council. David (16th C.) tenant in Belses. He was listed along with his brother George among a group of Turnbulls accused of performing a raid into England in 1579. He was also leader of a group of Turnbulls who attacked the farm of Rawflat in 1581, killing Walter of Rawflat there. The others in the group were his brothers George, John and Adam, as well as Thomas of Billerwell; the complaint was made again by the widow of Walter of Rawflat in 1583. George was in 1603 found guilty of several related crimes. This was all presumably part of some family feud. David (16th C.) listed among the Turnbulls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He is transcribed as being ‘of the Cronyhill’, which was probably Toneyhill (and hence he may have been son of Thomas of Toneyhill). Failing to appear before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel in 1583 (mis-transcribed as ‘Andro Turnebill in Cronyhill’ in part of the citation). His son Thomas was listed in 1610 amongst Turnbulls who were to be apprehended for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. David of Wauchope (d.1598) son and heir of Hector of Wauchope. He married Margaret, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1593 (not 1567 as recorded in Tancred’s ‘Rulewater’). He may be the unnamed Turnbull of Wauchope who was on the 1584/5 list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in order to keep peace on the Border. He and his bride were infested in the lands of Langhaugh in Rulewater. He appears to have owned the lands of Wauchope still in 1604 when his son Andrew’s nieces inherited Templehall and Brewlands to the west of Wauchope. He was probably the same David of Wauchope who was slaughtered near his house in 1598, with his neighbour James Lorraine of Appotside being one of those implicated, along with Gilbert and Hector, uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. David (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Fowltoon’ in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. Other tenants of Fulton farm were Pate Clerk, Walter Turnbull, David Turnbull (son of Adam), Willie Turnbull (the ‘Guidman’) and Thomas Turnbull. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Mackside. In 1611 his son ‘Hob’ was convicted and executed in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert, who was tenant in Deneside. In 1611 his brother acted as cautioner for his appearance in court in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Lustruther. In 1622 he was found guilty of perjury, apparently having been bribed by Andrew in Belses to lie in the case of theft he brought against William and Walter Maddlèmes. He was sentenced to have his ‘toung pearcet with ane hett boitkyn; and thaireftir Banischet this realme’.

David (17th C.) tenant of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, along with Robert, recorded in 1643. They were probably related to the earlier Archibald. David (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with Adam as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. David ‘Millinaire Turnbull’ (18th/19th C.) younger son of Thomas of Fenwick and Brieryards. He left for India in 1799 as part of the medical service, became an indigo planter there and also speculated in cotton. In 1818 he was a civil assistant surgeon at Mirzapore, but retired some time after that. His nickname came from the large fortune he made in India as an indigo planter and cotton speculator. His son was William, who became Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and inherited Fenwick from his cousin. He died in India, during his father’s lifetime (probably 1820s). David of Fenwick and Brieryards (b.1837) son of William. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1875. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1878. He was involved with the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association in the 1880s. He succeeded to all of the family lands in 1891 (except Palace, which had been sold). He had the house at Brieryyards renovated. However, he later sold all his property and left the country. In 1875 he married Christian, daughter of Hawick lawyer George Oliver. They had 1 daughter and 6 sons: William, who worked in the nitrate business in Chile and married Marie Salmon; David Oliver, a vet in Zomba, Nyasaland, who married Muriel MacKinnon; Margaret Lindsay, who married Hal Worke and had a son who went to British Columbia; George Archibald, who worked for the Cape Civil Service and was killed in the Boer War; Harry, who married Flossie Salmon; John MacLeod MacKinnon, who worked for the South African Forestry Service and wrote for Cornhill magazine; and James, who married Violet MacKinnon and died in East South Africa in WW1. Ebenezer (19th C.) recorded in 1837 as apprentice to James Wilson, writer in Hawick. He could be the Ebenezer whose infant daughter’s death was recorded in Hawick in 1822. Edward (15th C.) resident of Bedrule. In 1493 he had remission for stealing a cow from Robert Davidson at 5 Slitrig Bank with his younger sister Jane. In 1851 she was described as an ‘Annuitant’, showing that she had been set up with an allowance from her father. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) received sasine of the lands of Lanton in Roxburghshire in 1506. This was along with Margaret, who was probably her sister. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) had a sasine for Gargunnock and other lands in Stirlingshier, along with Janet (perhaps her sister). Elizabeth nee Elliot (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gilbert Elliot of Stobs, she married John Turnbull of Minto. Her husband died in 1641 while on army service in Newcastle, and her son John succeeded while still a minor. She and her brother-in-law Rev. William of Makerstoun appear to have acted as guardians for the young Laird of Minto; in 1643 she was listed along with her son and Rev. William as owner of the Minto estate. Other children of hers included William and Robert, who became merchants’ apprentices in Edinburgh in 1650 and 1651, respectively, and probably Alison, who married William Douglas of Timpendean in 1655. Elizabeth (d.1698) resident of Minto Parish, possibly related to the Turnbulls of Minto or of Knowe, who are buried there. Her small headstone marked ‘Bessie Turnbull’ is still in the old graveyard, but her husband’s name is illegible. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.c.1770) listed as a flesher in Denholm on Pigot’s 1837 directory. She was living on Main Street in 1841, with surname Leyden, with Robert Laidlaw (probably her grandson) being a flesher. Elizabeth nee Wilson (1753–1828) eldest daughter of Walter Wilson, ‘Haunless Wat’. She married draper George Turnbull and worked in the draper’s shop at 14 High Street. She is said to have had 15 children, 10 of whom survived infancy. Several of her children died of consumption, and it is said that ‘when the last one was reported to her as being about to die, she would not even go to visit the sick one, so much had her motherly instincts been blunted by the constant visit of death to her children’. She was known in later life as ‘Auld Betty Turnbull’. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (19th C.) daughter of inn-keeper John. She took over as Bonchester post-mistress from her brother John and also ran the public house at Bridgend after her father died in 1838. However she soon afterwards moved to another public house in Moffat. Elliot (b.1794/5–1857) labourer living at Whisgills Edge in Castleton Parish in 1841. By 1851 he was living near Canonbie and farming 3 acres. He may be the man of that name listed at ‘Sorbies’ in 1821 among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who died in 1873, aged 62. Their children included: Betty; Janet; Elspeth; Robert; Agnes (1847–1900), who died at Newcastle; and Mary (1851/2–97), who died at Southfield. He died at Gillfoot and his wife in Newcastle. The family are buried at Ettrickton. Elspeth (17th C.) servant to Bailie Scott of Ormiston. In 1683 she was struck by stones thrown across the Teviot by a group of men, wounding her, when she and Isabel Hardie (daughter to cooper Robert Hardie) were watching linen clothing that was being bleached there. Elspeth (17th C.) tenant in Flatt in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Elspeth (19th C.) listed as a straw hat maker in Newcastle in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 she was living in the house of Rev. John Black. Esther (b.1809) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Christian in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. She and her sister Christian were living with their mother Mary on Buccleuch Street in 1841. In 1851 she was a ‘Woollen Seamstress & Annuitant’ living on Allars Crescent, in a separate household to her older sister. Fergus (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hillhouse, listed after James, also there, in the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls who might have assisted the Homes in actions against the King. This is not a common local name. Francis (b.1700/1) Burgh Officer of Hawick. He gave evidence during proceedings for the Division of the Common in 1767, when he was described as being married. He was also a Burgess, on which account his evidence was objected to by the Duke of Buccleuch’s lawyers. He became a Burgh Officer in 1733, and remained until at least 1767. He described how he and fellow Officer John Stewart once managed to drive cattle belonging to neighbouring tenants (which were being pastured on the Common, against the orders of the Magistrates) to the West Port; this was probably around 1743. He was recorded as ‘Town Officer’ in a baptismal record of 1743. In 1753 he was one of the 2 Burgh Officers who were granted a yearly salary of 10 shillings ‘on account of their age and infirmity’. He may be the Francis, son of William, born in Hawick in 1703. He married Elizabeth Gibson and their children baptised in Hawick, included: Isobel (b.1732); Isobel (again, b.1739); James (b.1740); and Gideon (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were Bailie Gideon Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. Francis (18th/19th C.) mason at Yethouse. He was among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. At Yethouse in 1841 were Janet Brydon (aged about 70) and mason Francis (aged about 40), who were probably his widow and son. Francis (b.1797/8) stone mason at Yethouse. His mother was probably Elizabeth Brydon, who was there in 1841. It seems likely that his father was Francis, the mason at Yethouse recorded in 1821. He was still at Yethouse in 1851, but by 1861 his name appears as Francis Armstrong. Francis ‘Frank’ (19th C.) shepherd at a farm near Saughtree. He was a collector of local antiquities, including coins, flints, an iron sword, which were examined by the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club when they visited in 1889. Gavin (16th C.) listed along with Adam in 1534 when they were entered into ward in Blackness Castle, with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being discharged of the bond he had made to the King for their good behaviour. It seems likely they were either father and son or brothers, but it is not clear where they were from exactly. Gavin (16th C.) recorded as ‘Gawenn Trumble of the Wowley’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The other men named included James of Stonedge as well as Oliver of Westerhouses. He presumably lived at Wolfelee in Rulewater. Gavin (16th C.) recorded as ‘called of Bullerwell’ when he witnessed a marriage contract between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Turnbull of Wauchope in 1593. The designation suggests that he no longer resided at Billerwell. He must have been related to the slightly earlier and late Adams. He may be the same ‘Gavin Trumbil in Bullerwall’ listed in a court case of 1605. Gavin in Howa (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert in Hallrule and Hector in Stanedge, as well as uncle of Hector of Barnhills. He is recorded in 1604, along with his nephews Hector and George, as well as Hector of Stanedge, being tried for the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton. In 1600 he is recorded as ‘Gavin Turnbill in Howe’, brother of Hector in Stanedge and the deceased Robert in Hallrule, when there was a summons for them to prosecuted the sons of Harry Grahamslaw who had been accused of the murder of Robert in Hallrule. There was clearly an ongoing feud between the 2 families. He is probably the ‘Gawen’, brother of William of Barnhills, who is listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. Gavin (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Bedrule. He is listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in ‘. . . side’ in Abbotrule Parish. This was probably Mackside, with his land being valued at £24. He may have been related to the Laird of Tofts, who held the bulk of the property in 1643 as well as £102 worth of land in Minto. Gavin of Clarilaw (17th C.) recorded in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean Parish. He was also listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Hassendean Parish, paying tax on £273. He was presumably related to the earlier Hector of Clarilaw. He could be the same Gavin who had a charter for ‘Kerswell’ in Hassendean from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1621. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in Robertson Parish (when it included Hassendean) in 1684. A ‘bastard child’s of his was baptised, with witnesses John (who was surely related, perhaps his father) and Andrew Leyden. Gavin (18th C.) clothier in Hawick. He was listed along with Thomas as witness to a baptism for weaver John Smith in 1764. It seems likely he was either father or brother of Thomas (who was a clothier and dyer, and father of poet Gavin). He may be the Gavin who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Wilton in 1769. He and Thomas were witnesses to a baptism for William Thomline (who may have been their employer at Roughheugh Mill) in 1770. It is possible that he was the Gavin, son of William, born in Kirkton Parish in 1731 (but this would be too late if he was indeed the father of Thomas). Gavin (d.c.1800) school friend of John Leyden’s. He was the first of his cohort to go off abroad, travelling to India, but dying soon after he arrived. He is mentioned in John Leyden’s poem ‘To Mr. James Purvis’ – ‘The first that tried the eastern sea Was Gavin, gentle youth, was he! His yellow locks fann’d by the breeze, Gleam’d golden on the orient seas: But never shall his steps be seen Bound-ing again on Denholm’s pleasant green’ [JL]. It is possible that he is the Dr. Gavin who was listed at Wiltonhall (in Wilton Parish) in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Gavin (1764–1816) born in Hawick, son of ‘Tammy Trumble’ and Beat-rich Ruecastle. He moved from Hawick when he was about 10, with his father seeking work in factories elsewhere, including Galashiels and being a dyer in a factory in Kilmarnock. Although his parents were once fairly well-off, their circumstances changed and he was forced to abandon his education and become an apprentice in a carpet factory (Gregory & Thomson) in Kilmarnock; he writes of himself that he was ‘deprived early in life, by unforeseen misfortunes, of the means of pursuing that liberal plan of education he once had a prospect of'. He was said to be small in stature and of a dark complexion. It is also said that he spent more time thinking about poetry than weaving and as a result lived in poverty in a small garret, where ‘the poverty of Burns, of which there has been much talk in the world, was opulence compared to it!’. In Kilmarnock he became a friend of Robert Burns (whose poetry style he imitated, and they both had many of the same influences). It has been suggested that he may have told Burns the story of the giant pin of the haggis served at Haggishaa, which inspired the lines in ‘Address to a Haggis’. He moved with his family to Glasgow, where he worked as a labourer, and it was there that his first volume of verse was published. He later became an actor with George Sutherland’s Company in Dumfries and wrote at least one short play, ‘The Recruit’. In Dumfries he became reacquainted with Burns. However, the acting company in Dumfries broke up (at least in part because of it’s revolutionary politics, which made it unpopular with the authorities). He married an actress (who appeared with him in ‘The Recruit’ in 1794) and in 1795 emigrated to America, settling in Charleston, South Carolina. There he joined a theatre company and contributed poems to the local newspapers. He lived in modest addresses in downtown Charleston and taught part time. In 1813 he became an American citizen. He had a brother, Thomas, who also emigrated to America, and has surviving relatives. His publications are ‘Poetical Essays’ (1788) and ‘Poems, by Gavin Turnbull, Comedian’ (1794). Many of his verses are elegies and pastorals, in the tradition of the late 18th century, with one known as ‘Silvanus, or The Genius of Tiviot’ and another ode to the Tweed (as well as several to Irvine Water); however, the most interesting are in Scots dialect and in a similar style to Burns’ best-known poetry. Note that the suggested years of his birth are given in some works as being as early as 1758 and as late as 1770, while the year of his death is sometimes suggested to have been much earlier than it was; in fact his death is recorded in a Charleston newspaper in 1816, where he is described as ‘late Comedian, whose talents as a performer on the stage, will long be remembered by many of the inhabitants of this city’. Shortly afterwards a notice appeared in a South Carolina newspaper asking for subscriptions to a volume of poems to support his widow (however, no such volume ever appeared).

The project ‘The Collected Poems of Gavin Turnbull Online’ was completed in 2015. He is buried in the cemetery of the First Presbyterian Scots Church in Charleston.

Gavin (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Mary Blake and their son Gavin was born in 1800.

Gavin (1800–54) son of Adam, tenant of Hassendeanbank, brother of Adam Ogilvie and John Robson. He was partly educated at Minto Parish school under William Grant. He became a surgeon with the East India Company. He may married Isabella Jane Fenwick in 1826 and they had 5 children. He secondly married Mary MacDougall Stuart in 1841. He died on Jersey.

Rev. Gavin (1800–32) born at Brieryhill, he became minister of Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ from 1821, and probably remained there until his death. He was certainly still preacher there in 1831. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He published ‘A Sermon on Meekness’ in Hawick in 1832. He was probably son of John, who was tenant farmer at Brieryhill in Wilton Parish.

George of Bedrule (15th C.) witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castlelaw in 1448. He may have been son of John of Bedrule, who was recorded in 1432. In 1461 he was witness to a sasine for lands near Branxholme, where he is recorded as ‘of Bethroul’; William of Minto was also a witness, so he may have been a close relative. He may be the George who (along with Hector, John and William of Minto) was on the 1464/5 panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. He was also witness to a sasine of Denholm Mains involving the Cranstons in 1465/6. Probably the same George ‘of Bethoroull’ witnessed a sasine of 1484/5 for Walter Scott of Branxholme for lands in Mangerton. He may be the George who witnessed a sasine for Wolfefe in 1479. He may be the George ‘de bethroul’ who had remission in 1493 (along with David Waugh, also from Bedrule, and weaver William White), their crimes being stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilmuir, associating with John of Gatehousecote, communing with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was Walter Ker of Cessford, while he himself served as surety for the other 2 men. He may be the Laird of Bedrule who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. ‘Thomas turnbule Junior dominus de bethroull’ served as surety for several Turnbulls in 1494/5; this suggests that he was still alive, but perhaps old and infirm, so that his son Thomas was effectively acting as chief of the Turnbulls at that time. He was probably succeeded by his son Thomas, mentioned as his heir apparent in 1501 and already mentioned several times in the previous decade. Thomas had a brother William, who was thus also his son. George (15th C.) infested by Walter Turnbull (probably Baron of Hassendean) in the lands of Hassendeanbank in 1493. He may have been a relative of Walter. George (15th C.) recorded being in Bonchester and also ‘in stowisle’ (i.e. Stouslie) at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh. He served as surety for David in Bonchester, and was also surety for himself, being fined for non-appearance of the pair. George (15th C.) recorded at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh as son of Walter in Bonchester. The entry is after that for George in Bonchester and Stouslie, and hence this is a different man. He failed to appear and his surety, Andrew Turnbull (in the same place) was accordingly fined. He was surely related to Walter of Stouslie, who is recorded in 1494/5. George (15th C.) recorded in the Justice- aire of 1493 along with 4 others. Their crime was concealing a trove of coins that had been found in Minto Kirk, but by rights were Crown property. The Laird of Bedrule served as surety for him and for John Sinclair. Perhaps the same George in Minto had remission in 1493 (in the very next case) for crimes before the date of his previous remission. George of Hall- rule (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘of Haw of Roull’ when he was witness to a charter of 1484/5, along with George of Bedrule and others. He was appointed as Captain of Hermitage by Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, probably around 1492. In 1493 he was ‘de aula de roule’ when he was surety for Archibald Pledgerth in Bedrule, as well as Simon in Clarilaw. Also in 1493 he had remission for a series of crimes: stealing sheep from Nettleflat on Gala Water; separately stealing a horse and tools from Nettleflat; plundering from Thomas Rutherford at Bonjedward; and involvement in the slaughter of Archibald Rutherford. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. In 1494/5 he and Patrick Earl of Bothwell (Lord of Liddesdale) were fined £10 Scots for the non-appearance of William Elliot and each of 85 other Borderers; he was there recorded as Captain of Hermitage. Also in 1494/5 he was also surety for Thomas Turnbull in Gatehousecote. He is probably the George ‘in the Hermitage’ who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498, along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere. Probably the same George of ‘Hawroull’ was listed in 1502 among about 20 Turnbulls and others who were fined for failing to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; he was supposed to enter into the court John, Andrew and William in Gatehousecote, William in Bonchester and his son Lawrence, David in Bonchester, and David, Andrew and Hugh Shiel. Also in 1502 he was surety (along with Bartholomew in Rawflat) for Adam, tenant in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton, who had brought Englishman Sir John Musgrave to burn and rob Selkirk. That year he was also surety (along with Robert Scott in Stirches) for Walter Turnbull in Braxholme, as well as for Hector Shiel. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. All of these records together show that he was a prominent man in Rulewater at the time. George (15th/16th C.) listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. He was listed as ‘georgii turnbule de hawik’ and explicitly listed with along with David, who was probably a close relative. He presumably lived or came from Hawick. George (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Georges. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘in Wyndis’ (probably Weens in Rulewater) when along with about 20 Turnbulls and others he failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Walter Scott in Newhall Burnhead and Thomas Brown in Cavers were called to enter him, with his surety being the Sheriff of Roxburgh. Failing to appear, he was put to the horn and forfeited his goods. George (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bedrule, recorded in the 1516 remission for Turnbulls and others who may have given assistance to Alexander, Lord Home. It is possible that he was the Laird of Bedrule, but he is clearly listed as being ‘in Bethroule’. He may be the same George ‘in Bedrule’ mentioned in 1523. George of Bedrule (d.bef. 1528) possibly son of Thomas of Bedrule, who is recorded in 1502. He is not mentioned on the 1516 remission for a large number of Turnbulls, suggesting perhaps that he was a minor, or elsewhere at the time (William of Minto is named first and is clearly the head of the family at that time). He was on an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523, along with George ‘in Bedrule’ (therefore possibly related). He may have been the Laird who was present at the signing of the bond among Border Lairds to help the Warden (Earl of Angus) in 1524/5. It is also possible that he was the George, son of Thomas, who was wounded by William Scott, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh. It is unclear exactly when this happened, but Scott had remission in 1535. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1519 and was succeeded by his son Thomas. In 1528 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme had a gift from King James V of the ‘ward, relief and non-entry’ of his lands, as well as the marriage of his heir, Thomas (then still a minor). He must have had other children, since Sir Walter Scott also had rights to the marriage of ‘ony vther aire or airis male, or female, of the said vnuquhile George’. In 1578/9 there is a record of John, ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’, who must have been his grandson (although the son’s name is unknown). Sir Walter Scott married his widow in 1530/1. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as being at Minto and listed right after William of Minto among a large number of Turnbulls pardoned in 1516 for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He may be the same as one of the other Turnbulls. George (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with Adam and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home.

George (16th C.) son and heir of Thomas ‘in Rawflat’. He is described in 1540 in a court case involving a dispute between his father Thomas and William Scott, tenant of Hassendean. Part of the dispute is over a 1536 marriage contract he had with William Scott’s eldest daughter and heir, Elizabeth. George (16th C.) listed as ‘in Bullorwell’ (i.e. Billerwell) when part of a panel deciding on disputed lands, held in Jedburgh in 1553. George (16th C.) son and heir of Thomas ‘in Rawflat’. He is described in 1540 in a court case involving a dispute between his father Thomas and William Scott, tenant of Hassendean. Part of the dispute is over a 1536 marriage contract he had with William Scott’s eldest daughter and heir, Elizabeth. George (16th C.) listed as ‘in Bullorwell’ (i.e. Billerwell) when part of a panel deciding on disputed lands, held in Jedburgh in 1553. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant of half the lands of Hyndlee in Jedforest. George of Standhill (16th C.) listed as pledge for the Laird of Minto in 1553/4. This was in the assurance given to keep peace with the Rutherfords and others. He and George ‘of the Tour’ were to remain in ward in Edinburgh, as pledges for Sir Thomas of Bedrule, Hector, Tutor of Minto and David of Wauchope. George (16th C.) farmer at Town-o-Rule. His yard there is listed among the lands disputed by the Barons of Feu-Rule in 1562. He may be related to the earlier Andrew and Thomas who are recorded as tenants there. George of Barnhills (16th C.) recorded in 1562 when he was ordered to be warded in Dunbar Castle. George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward was his surety. He was also listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls of Barnhills. George of Chamberlain Newton and Woollee (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh. He was recorded as Laird of Chamberlain Newton in 1563 when he witnessed a notorial instrument between Robert Michelson and David Home of Wedderburn regarding the lands of Blackhaugh (near Clovenfords). There were Turnbulls at Chamberlain Newton earlier, but it is seems that this George no longer lived in the Hawick area, and hence it is unclear how he was related to other local Turnbulls. He may be the George who witnessed a charter in 1549, when Robert Scott of Howpasley granted Appletreeshall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1567 he was ‘of Wowlic’ when he tried to eject David Elliot as tenant in his 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton. In 1572 he sold half of Chamberlain Newton to Gavin Elliott of Bailielee (and later Stobs) and his wife Jean Scott; they complained to the Privy Council that David Eliot’s widow Margaret Turnbull (who is not stated to be a relative, but that is unclear), who possessed the other half of Chamberlain Newton, encouraged her sons Walter and John Scott to attack Gavin Elliott’s servant there. George (16th C.) tenant in Catlee. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. George ‘Geordie’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was probably related to Andrew, who was listed right after him. George of Hassendeanbank (16th C.) listed among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was listed as ‘of Hassinbank’. George (16th C.) recorded as Reader at Bedrule in 1579 and 1580. There could be some confusion with John, who was Reader just before this. George (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Halrewll’ in 1557 when there was a complaint to the Regent about ‘molestations’ by him and Thomas of Bedrule. This related to the lands of Kirklands, Hallrule and Swimnie owned by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, suggesting that there was an ongoing land dispute. He was ‘of Halrhole’ in 1561 when listed among Border Lairds who appeared... before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was probably ‘The Guidman of Hal-rule’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1571 he appeared before the Privy Council and was instructed ‘to abide in Leith’. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turn-bulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troney-hill) and others, not to harm each other. Probably the same man was ‘in Hareul’ in 1581 when he and others were denounced as rebels for refusing to obey the charge to restore Sir Thomas Ferniehirst to the living of Bedrule parish. Also in 1581 he was listed among 10 men implicated in the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. In 1581/2 there was a charge to remove him and others from their lands for not complying. And in 1583/4 Sir Thomas Kerr had an ‘escheat’ to take his goods, along with those of John and Walter, farmers at ‘Roull’ and Hobsburn, respectively, who may have been close relations. He may be the George of Halrule named in 1587 as one of the 13 main Lairds of the Middle March who were charged to keep thieves in check. He may be the ‘Turnble of Hareul’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590, and is the George ‘of Halreull’ listed among Border lairds by Monipenie in 1597. The George of later decades may still have been him, but is more likely his son. George (16th C.) brother of James ‘of the Toire’. Along with his brother he was listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He is probable the ‘George Trumbill in Tour’ who signed the 1560 bond (‘at the pen led by the notar’) to settle the feud between the Rutherford and the Kers. He may be the George ‘of the Tour’ who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551 and who was one of the pledges for the Laird of Bedrule in 1553/4; he and George of Standhill were to remain in ward in Edinburgh. He is probably the George ‘of the Tour’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. George (16th C.) Laird of Billerwell in 1589, presumably a descendant of the earlier George and Adam. He was among men complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for a raid into England 3 years earlier; it was claimed that 200 men raided Doortrees and Stobs, taking 80 cows, 240 sheep, 10 horses, goods and 6 prisoners. The later Adam of Billerwell (whose son and heir was also George) may have been his son. If so he also had a son Andrew. He is probably also the ‘Turnble of Bullerwall’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is probably the Laird in 1598 who was among some Scottish prisoners taken from a large group who went into England to go hunting; he was released soon afterwards. He may be the ‘goodman of Bullerwell’ who complained in 1601 about Englishmen stealing his cattle, sheep and horses. George of the Tofts (16th C.) listed among landed men of the Borders in the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is probably the George ‘of the Tofts’ who was ordered to appear personally in 1567 to answer accusations about raiding into England. George ‘the Creelman’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘call-it the creilman in Crocecleucht’ (i.e. ‘Crossecle-uch’) in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton. George (16th/17th C.) farmer at Crosscleuch, recorded in 1602 (and separate from George ‘the Creelman’). He was son of the deceased John. George (d.1601) described as ‘in Phillophauch’ in 1601, when his son John was served heir to his 5-merk land in Phillphaugh, called ‘Bairborisland’. He may have been son of John, who inherited these lands from his mother in 1558. George of Belses (d.1603) brother of David in Belses, with other brothers being John and Adam. He was listed among a group of Turnbulls (led by sons of the Laird of Bedrule) who were accused in 1579 of raiding the lands of ‘Pansoun’ in England, stealing cattle and taking the Laird there prisoner; his brother David was also listed. The brothers were also recorded in 1581 when accused of attacking the farm at Rawflat and killing Walter of Rawflat. He was denounced in 1583/4 for failing to appear before the Privy Council; he was listed along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others. He was tried in 1603 for a long string of crimes, including: murdering John Hamilton of Cumnock; murdering William, son of Walter Turnbull of Rawflat; capturing and torturing Walter Turnbull’s servant Adam Turnbull (it is said that he had him hung by the feet and shoulders for 13 days, causing his feet to rot off); illegally carrying guns; shooting Walter Turnbull, younger of Rawflat; stealing 4 cows from John Donaldson in Melrose; stealing 6 cows, 20 sheep, 2 horses and goods from David Riddell in St. Boswells; stealing 16 cows from the Laird of Bemersyde; stealing 20 sheep from the Lady of Newton; stealing 5 sheep from George Davidson in Belses; stealing a horse from George Wilson in Langnewton; and being ‘a commone briggane and notorious commone theif’. He claimed to have killed William Turnbull in self
Turnbull

George Turnbull in 1610. He resigned a tenement of land off the Kirkwynd in `Howay', brother of Hector of Barnhill, who Turnbull convicted. He was probably the George Turnbulls of Wauchope were tried and Thomas acted as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ in the period 1617–21. George of Belses (16th/17th C.) possibly son of the earlier George of Belses, who was hanged in 1603. Andrew Ker of Roxburgh had a bond for him in defence (suggesting some intra-family feud). He also appears to have killed the elder Walter of Rawflat, after he was pronounced a rebel for refusing to leave the lands of Rawflat and part of Belses in 1581. He was acquitted of most of the offences, but nevertheless convicted of illegally carrying fire-arms and had his right hand cut off at the Market Cross of Edinburgh. Later the same year he appeared on charges of ‘the filthie cryme of Incest and Adulterie’ with his brother Jock’s wife Marion. At the same time he was accused of stealing a horse from Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1577, stealing 20 cows from Rawflat in 1579, stealing 4 horses from 4 millers in Jedburgh about 1600 and stealing a horse from the younger Walter of Rawflat. This time he was convicted of all charges, and hanged in Edinburgh, with all his lands and goods confiscated. He is probably the ‘Turnble of Belses’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans' of about 1590. He is surely related to the slightly later George of Belses, possibly his son, as well as the Hector of Belses recorded in 1604. George of Hallrule (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 when his daughter Isobel had a marriage contract with John, eldest son of Hector Turnbull of Barnhills. In 1603, as part of the marriage contract, he rented the half lands of Hallrule to the Turnbulls of Barnhills. George (16th/17th C.) tenant of the lands of Fulton, recorded in a 1602 letter, which lists 2 other George Turnbulls! He is distinguished with the appellation ‘callit of Crawden’. He was probably related to ‘David of Crawden’ recorded in 1583/4. George (16th/17th C.) brother of Hector of Barnhills. In 1604 he was denounced as a rebel (along with his brother Hector, uncle Gavin and also Hector of Stanedge) for failing to appear on the charge of murdering 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton. He could be the George ‘called of Howden’ who was named by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidssons), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. George (16th/17th C.) described as being in ‘Howa’ in 1606 when he was one of the Turnbull clan accused of laying waste to Appotside and Harwood in 1598–1605. The action against him was not pursued, although the Turnbulls of Wauchope were tried and Thomas Turnbull convicted. He was probably the George in ‘Howay', brother of Hector of Barnhill, who resigned a tenement of land off the Kirkwynd in Hawick in 1610. George (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Billerwell. He witnessed a sasine in 1612 and was part of a bond with his father in 1619, with John Haliburton of Mertoun. George (d.c.1637) 2nd son of Hector of Wauchope. In 1605 he was ‘tutor’ to his relatives Jean and Beatr ix Turnbull, daughters of Walter of Wauchope. He is also mentioned as 2nd son of Hector in a court case of 1605, where a separate George is also listed in Wauchope. In 1606 he was one of the men charged with stealing from and burning Appotside and Harwood, killing 3 men and cutting down Appotside woods in the period 1598–1605. Although he was tried (and probably involved), he was acquitted, with his older brother Thomas being the only one convicted. He is recorded in a ‘contract of wadset’ with Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam in 1612. He held the lands of Templehall (in the rule valley) in exchange for advancing money to Sir Andrew. He must have gained a portion of the lands, since in 1627 he granted them to Sir James Douglas of Mordington. In 1632 Templehall and BREWLANDS are described as ‘possessed by George Turnbull of Wauchope and his tenants’, but the feu of the lands were held by Jean Turnbull, niece and heir of Andrew, son of David of Wauchope (hence presumably a distant cousin). However, his son James renounced all rights to the lands to William Earl of Lothian in 1655. He may have been the George describe as ‘there in relation to Templehall in a sasine of 1604. In 1637 he was described as ‘called of Wauchope’ when the guardianship of his son James was given to Hector in Clarilaw, as his closest male relative; it seems likely that this Hector was his cousin (since the record would have stated if they were brothers). George (16th/17th C.) tenant at Wauchope, recorded in a court case of 1605 in which John Elliot of Copshaw and others were accused of stealing livestock from Wauchope. He is separate from the 2nd son of Hector of Wauchope, who is also listed there, but could be related to the Adam, also tenant of Wauchope. George (16th/17th C.) son of James of West Lees. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule. In 1618 he was witness to a bond between his father and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. George (16th/17th C.) acted as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ in the period 1617–21. George of Belses (16th/17th C.) possibly son of the earlier George of Belses, who was hanged in 1603. Andrew Ker of Roxburgh had a bond for him in 1622. He is later described in the Commissioners’ Court as ‘Geordie in Belsches’, when he is accused of having stolen 11 sheep from the lands of ‘Raffatt’ (e.e. Rawflat) belonging to the Davids, sons, in about 1612. He was sentenced to be hanged. Robert owned Templehall in 1647 and may have been his son. George (17th C.) proprietor of Todshaw in a list of communicants of the Bothwick valley in 1650. George (17th C.) recorded as ‘near Edderstonesheils’ (i.e. Adderstoneshiel) in 1684 when he was listed among people declared as fugitives for being a Covenantter. George (d.c.1685) tenant in Birkhill when his will was recorded in 1685. It is possible this was the place of that name in Hobkirk Parish, where Walter and Robert were in 1694. George (17th C.) tenant in Doreshaugh. In 1686 he was fined in Hawick ‘for having seedie and insufficient meale in the market, being about a goupice of seed sived out of half ane pecke of his full sacke’. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. There are 2 men of this name listed, and given how common the surname was locally, there is probably no way of determining who they were. George (17th C.) resident at Blackleemouth according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (1661/2–1728) tenant in Upper Bonchester, probably son of William of Upper Bonchester. He is buried in Abbotrule Kirkyard, as recorded on an old headstone there. He was probably related to William Turnbull, miller of Harestane, whose daughter Susan is recorded on the same stone. He appears to have bee the last Turnbull of Bonchester. His daughter Margaret married William Turnbull, tenant of Hartshaugh Mill. He is probably the George listed as ‘his sone’ after William ‘in ye midle of ye town’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; both of them are listed after William ‘in Boonchaster’. George (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. In 1716 he gave in a bond of £60 Scots granted to Margaret Waugh (widow of Thomas), which she had bequeathed for the poor of the town. Presumably this was some loan between him and Waugh, which Waugh’s widow decided to donate to charity. In 1712 he married Janet Cavers, who was also from Hawick and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1713. The witnesses were Bailie Robert Hardie and shoemaker Walter Scott. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Spittal in 1717 when his daughter Betty was baptised. He may be the George who married Betty Scott in Cavers in 1714. George ‘Young Whitegates’ (18th C.) married Elizabeth, daughter of John Dalgleish in Hawick Parish in 1720. Perhaps the same George and Elizabeth had a son John in Crailing Parish in 1724. The meaning of his nickname is unclear, but it may be related to the Scotts who were called ‘Whiteyetts’. George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Alemoor in 1723 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same George was at Mains in 1731 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised. George (18th C.) resident of Ashybank. His son William was baptised in Cavers in 1735. Other children who may be his include: John (b.1736); Ann and Archibald (b.1741); William (b.1743); Margaret (b.1744); Walter (b.1747); and George (b.1749). He was surely related to Walter, who was at Ashybank at the same time. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Isabel Henderson in 1754 and their son Adam was born in 1757. The witnesses were tailor John Turnbull (who was probably related) and shoemaker Robert Oliver. He witnessed a baptism for John Hardie in Hawick in 1768. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Appletreehall in 1772. He married Jean King in 1767 and their children included: Margaret (b.1768); George (b.1769); William (b.1772); John (b.1776); Betty (b.1778); John (b.1781); and Helen (b.1786). In 1769 the witnesses were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid and in 1772 Andrew Turner and John Mathieson. George (18th C.) resident at Roberton Parish. He was at Deanburnhaugh in 1773 and 1775 and Greenbank in 1781. His children included William (b.1773), Isobel (b.1775), Robert (b.1776), John (b.1779), Margaret (b.1781) and James (b.1783). George (18th C.) Hawick resident. He is probably the George ‘Senr.’ recorded on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls, and hence father of George junior. He is recorded as ‘senior’ when he (along with Walter Wilson) witnessed baptisms for George ‘Junior’ in 1776 and 1777. He may also be the same man as ‘George Turnbull Senr. Vintner’ in Hawick, who is recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls for 1794/5. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Hardie and their children included: John (b.1774); John (again, b.1777); and William (b.1791). The witnesses in 1777 were Bailie John Hardie (perhaps his wife’s father) and ex-Bailie William Elliot. George (18th/19th C.) draper in Hawick, with his shop at 14 High Street. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Junior Merchant’, and was hence son of another George, who had been a merchant before him. Note that the somewhat later drapers, William and James (at 11 High Street), were not closely related. He is recorded as George ‘Junior’ on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick in 1785–87 and 1791–97. He is probably the merchant George who witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson and Isabel Turnbull (perhaps a relative) in 1780 and the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1798. He is probably the ‘George Turnbull, jun. Hawick’ on the subscribers list for ‘Caw’s Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He is probably the George who paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He is probably the junior merchant of that name who was among the creditors of Walter Lunn in the court case for bankruptcy against Lunn in the years 1799–1803. He is still ‘Jun Mercht’ in 1791 and in 1795 when he witnessed a baptism for John Straiton and Agnes Wilson (his sister-in-law). In 1774 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Wilson, eldest eldest daughter of ‘Haunless Wat’; she died in 1829. Their children included: George (1776–1809); Katherine (b.1777), who married William Oliver; Janet (b.1778), who died unmarried; Betty (b.1779); Walter (1780–1809); Betty or Elizabeth (again, b.1781), who married tobacconist James Scott; William (b.1783); Jane (b.1784); Agnes (or Nancy, 1785–1827), who was unmarried; William (again, 1786–1806); Margaret (b.1787); Thomas (b.1788), who married Jane Veitch; and Isabel (b.1791), who died young.

The witnesses in 1776 and 1777 were George Turnbull senior and Walter Wilson (presumably his father and father-in-law) and in 1778 and 1779 were weaver George (perhaps still his father) and merchant Walter Wilson. In 1791 the witnesses were merchants Walter Wilson and William Wilson (probably his father-in-law and brother-in-law). In 1809 he was already deceased when his daughter Elizabeth married Hawick tobacconist James Scott. George (1776–1809) eldest son of draper George. He may be the ‘Junr. Mercht.’ listed in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It seems likely he was the George, son of George ‘Junior’, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 (along with John, son of George ‘Senior’) and who was listed as a merchant when he was elected Cornet in 1795. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Larriston. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as proprietor of the Cross Keys in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He had 3 work horses at that time. It is unclear whether this was the Cross Keys on the High Street or at the Sandbed. He was surely related to the John of the Cross Keys whose son Walter died in 1808. He could be the George ‘Senior’, whose son John was among those on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 (along with George, son of George ‘Junior’), and who was probably the John of the Cross Keys who was Cornet in 1796. George (1783–1861) eldest son of James and Betty Adamson. He was born at Hillshaugh and became a carrier in the Rulewater district, like his grandfather, George Adamson. It is said he frequently acted as the disseminator of news. In later life he moved to Newcastle and was a grocer and meat-dealer at about 41 North Hermitage Street. He was listed there on Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Scott (from Wilton Parish), who died in 1860, aged 89. Their children were: James, born at Kirknow; Thomas, born at Unthank; Betty; and an unnamed child. He and his wife were buried at Ettleton. George (b.c.1810) resident of Dearnburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded as a male servant. He married Rachel Clyde and their children included: George (b.1832); David (b.1834), labourer; James (b.1837), miller; Christian (or Christina, b.1841); and Margaret (b.1845). His wife was still recorded in Dearnburnhaugh in 1851 and 1861 (but he was absent, and so presumably deceased). George (b.1809/10) joiner at Applebeth. He was listed as wright there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was living there in 1841 with his siblings Betsy and William. His wife was Agnes and their children included Agnes, William, John, James, George and Isabella. George (19th C.) son of the gardener at Borthwickbrae and grandson of George, carrier in Rulewater. He was coachman to Hawick’s Provost Wilson. George (b.1819) son of weaver William and brother of John S. He was an accountant, for a long time cashier for Nixon & MacKie, then in business for himself, later moving to Edinburgh. In 1861 he was a Commercial Accountant, living at 57 High Street. He married Jessie Allan Mark in 1843; her brother founded the wool merchant’s firm W.D. Mark & Sons of Newcastle. Their children included: William (b.1844); John Mark (b.1846); George (b.1849); Christina Dobson (b.1850), who probably died young; Alexander Dobson (b.1853), cashier at Innes, Chambers & Co.; Margaret Ogilvie (b.1856); and Christina Dobson (again, b.1859). George (1821–72) seed merchant, who was Cornet in 1841. He came from the Turnbulls of Allars House, and was son of John. In 1851 he was a seedsman and merchant at 4 Bourtree Place. He set up a partnership with the Dicksos, with office at 18 High Street, and nursery grounds where Teviot Crescent and North Bridge Street were later built. He donated coins to the Museum in the 1860s. He married Agnes, daughter of Peter Amos, farmer at Earlside. Their children included: Margaret, who married John Brown; Violet, who married Frank Wilson; Helen (d.1910), who married Thomas Telfer Charlton; Euphemia, who married her cousin Peter Amos (b.1860); Jane, who married Gilbert Davidson; John, unmarried; Agnes, also unmarried; Peter, also unmarried; Jessie, who married Rev. Peter Brice Gunn; Alice, who married Thomas Brice Gunn; and George, who married Nancy Brown. He was said to resemble ‘John Bull’ in later years. George (1826–66) 2nd son of John and Wilhelmina (‘Mina’) Scott. His uncles were schoolmasters at Wilton and at Hobkirk. George Purvis (b.1861) son of James, tenant farmer at Bilerwell. He had a twin sister Mary. He emigrated to Canada, where he raised cattle. An earlier man of the same name (b.1821) was his uncle. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Newton in 1718 and Clarilaw in 1724, 1726, 1729 and 1733. He witessed a baptism in 1724 for James Ormiston, resident of Boonraw. He married Helen Scott in 1718 and their children included: Thomas (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); James (b.1724); James (again, b.1726); Janet (b.1729); Helen (b.1733); and William (b.1739). The witnesses in 1724 were James Ormiston and John Huntlie, in 1726 were Robert Scott and another Scott (probably William), perhaps relatives of his wife, in 1729 were Walter and William Scott and in 1733 were Robert Scott and Thomas Turnbull (who may have been related). Gilbert (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Patrick. They were both stated to be ‘at the horn’ when John in Dryden was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with them. Gilbert (b.1742) son of Thomas, who was one of the instigators of Hawick’s carpet trade. He was born in Minto Parish. In 1758 he became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He joined the Honourable East India Company. It is said that he had extravagant habits and would send his bills Grisel (d.c.1685) described as ‘in Roull’ when her will was recorded in 1685. It is unclear where in Rulewater she may have lived. Hector (15th C.) member of the inquest panel for Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5. Other men listed included George, John and William of Minto. Hector (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee in 1522 for the Homes of Wedderburn. Archibald is listed right after him, and possibly related. Hector of Barn-hills (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1531 as ‘Baillie in that part’, along with John Turnbull, in a sasine for William, Lord Herries of Terregles, Baron of Feu-Rule for Hector Lorraine of Harwood. Hector (16th C.) brother of David of Wauchope. In 1549 he was granted the 2 husband lands in Appletreehall belonging to Robert Scott of Howapasley. Along with his brother David and Patrick Gordon, he was already tenant of these lands at the time. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. Hector of Barnhills (16th C.) probably son of the previous Hector. In 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He had a sasine for the lands of Barn-hills in 1554. He may have been succeeded by William (recorded in 1584/5) and then the Hector recorded in about 1590. Hector (16th C.) recorded as ‘tutour of Mynto’ in 1551 when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledge was George of Standhill. Also in 1553/4 he was a member of the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, where he is recorded as ‘tutore de Mynto’. Hector of Barnhills was also listed, proving he was a different man, although it is unclear to which branch of the Turnbulls he did belong (but presumably associated with the Turnbulls of Minto). He was simple ‘of Mynto’ in 1561, when listed among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was ‘The Tu-tour of Mynto’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was ‘Tutor of Mynto’ when he signed the 1569 bond to suppress Border thieves, also signed by several other men of Roxburghshire and neighbouring areas. Hector (16th C.) listed among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present in 1567 to answer changes of raiding into England. He was recorded being of ‘Vowley’, which is probably Woollee. Hector (16th C.) listed in 1567 when he was among men to be entered by David Home of Wedderburn. He is recorded being ‘in Turnbull’ (although it seems likely this is a transcription error, perhaps for Town-o-Rule) and brother to George. Isobellis Robene’, as well as Adam, son to Sandie Turnbull, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Olivers were also to be entered from there. Hector ‘Heckie’ of Belsis (16th C.) son of Adam in Belses. He was recorded in 1579 when his son Thomas was listed among men accused of raiding cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. He was ‘Hekie’, son of Adam in Belses, for whom there was a pledge to stop stealing in 1576, along with his brothers David, George and John. Since his name was given first, he may have been the eldest son. The joint cautioners were Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and William Turnbull of Barnhilks. He was also ‘Ekkie Trumbill of Belsis’ in 1580 when his son Andrew (then a minor) was convicted of murder. This was probably the murder of John Hamilton of Cumnock who was slain ‘vnder silence of nycht in his bed within ane laych cha¨mer in the place of Polwart’. In 1580 there was a further complaint by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, that he, his son Dand, and brother-in-law Patrick Richardson, killed her husband (John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’), presumably the same man) at his home in Polwarth; they were all denounced as rebels. Sir George Home of Wedderburn received the ‘escheeat’ of his (Hector’s) estate, as well as that of the other convicted man, John Young in ‘Canys’. He was probably either deceased or exiled by 1581 when his brothers David, George, John and Adam were recorded. Hector of Wauchope (d.bef. 1612) son of David. In 1571/2 he joined several Borders lairds in signing a bond to act against thieves. In 1572/3 he was recorded as son and heir apparent of David of Wauchope, when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with William Ker of Caverton as surety. In 1573 he and his father signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. In 1580 he and Walter of Hobsburn were cautioned to appear before the Privy Council, with Henry, heir of John Stewart of Craighall as surety. Also in 1580 he was in a group of Turnbulls of Minto, Wauchope, Bsowie and Hobsburn, who had a band to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1591 he was among local chiefs who signed a bond to support the King against the Earl of Bothwell and Alexander, Lord Home. It is unclear how he was related to Thomas, who was declared a rebel in the 1590s. He was a signatory for the assurance of good behaviour of the Turnbulls descended from the house of Wauchope (separate from those derived from Minto) in 1595; he signed by ‘touching the pen of the notary’. He is probably ‘the old Laird of Vaughopp’ recorded in 1601 when and Englishman complained that he had stolen cattle from him. His 2nd son George was recorded in 1604 in a sasine for lands of Templehall. In 1605 he accused John Elliot of Copshaw of leading a group of about 100 riders who stole 80 cows, 100 sheep and 1 horse from Wauchope in 1602. His eldest son Thomas, 2nd son George and several other neighbouring tenants are also recorded; Elliot was found not guilty, however. His surety in this case was Robert Home, younger of ‘the Heuch’. In 1606 he was the most senior of the men accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605; his sons George and John are also listed. They were accused of stealing a huge number of livestock, cutting down virtually the whole wood at Appotside and killing the young Laird of Harwood and his younger brother, as well as a servant of their mother, Lady Appotside. It is unclear exactly what Margaret (herself a daughter of the Laird of Bedrule) had done to invoke the ire of her neighbours and distant kin. Although he and the others were eventually acquitted, his son Thomas was separately found guilty of the same crimes. Probably the same Hector is recorded in 1612, when his son George was involved in a contract with Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam relating to Templehall (in the Rule valley). His son and heir David married Margaret, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1593, but was killed before 1599; those involved in his death included Gilbert and Hector (uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood), as well as James Lorraine of Appotside; this was presumably part of the same family feud. Thomas was heir afterwards, with George being the next son. Hector of Clarilaw (16th/17th C.) listed in a bond of March 1594/5, along with Richard Turnbull, subscribed by James Gledstains of Cocklaw, that they would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. As well as other crimes, he was singled out for his involvement with stealing livestock from and burning Appotside in 1598. However, he was cleared of all charges. He was surely related to the slightly later Hector of Clarilaw. Either he or his son was the Hector of Clarilaw who was on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. He may be related to the Hector who had a charter for Pinnacle and Broomlands in 1550. Hector (d.aft. 1610) probably son of

Thomas of Hartshaugh (although some accounts suggest he was the youngest son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule). In 1580 he was a ‘kindlie tenant’ in possession of the lands of Kirklands of Hobkirk. His ancestors had probably been ‘kindly tenants’ of Jedburgh Abbey for several generations. In 1581 he was listed (along with his son Thomas) as ‘in Hartshauch’ among the 10 men accused of being involved with the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. He had a charter to lands of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel in 1604, specifically the lands and mill of ‘Hartishaugh’, the lands of ‘Wester Swoonshield’, including the wood called ‘Clerksbank’, and the ‘kirk lands called Vicar’s Lands of the kirk of Hobkirk’, except for the manse and glebe. These lands were in the Barony of Abbotrule. He is stated as having been tenant in Hartshaugh beyond the memory of man’. In 1610 he is recorded as ‘in Hartshauch’ when he was part of an inquest for succession to lands in Rulewater. His son Mark had a bond in 1616 (when he was presumably still alive) with William Scott of Todrig. He married twice, and his children (to his 2nd wife) were James, Mark and William. ‘Leonall’ (possibly Lyle) may have been another child. His grandson Adam was served heir to his lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ in Hobkirk, as well as Wester Swanshiel and ‘Clerksbankis’. It is unclear whether he is the same as any of the other contemporarv Hectors. Hector of Barnhills (16th/17th C.) surely directly related to the earlier Hector of Barnhills, and possibly son or brother of William of Barnhills. He had a charter of confirmation issued by James VI for the lands of Barnhills. He is also listed among landed men in the Borders in about 1590. He is recorded in a marriage contract of 1597 and a following grant of lands of Hallrule and others in 1603. In 1602 he was recorded along with Thomas, younger of Minto and Mark of Bewlie, when they were accused of robbing a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. His eldest son John married Isobel, daughter of George of Hallrule. He is probably the Hector of Barnhills who was tried in 1604 for the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton; also tried were his brother George, their uncle Gavin and Hector of Stanedge. They were denounced as rebels for not appearing; however, they were probably rehabilitated, since his he and his son and heir John were taken to court in 1609 by David, son of the late John Scott ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’ for not paying what they had borrowed. In 1607 he and Thomas of Wauchope brought a complaint against James, son of Edward Lorraine, ‘for presenting beheaded pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. In 1610 his brother George ‘in Howay’ is recorded resigning a tenement of land in Hawick. Hector of Bewlie (d.1604) recorded in 1601 in a document to capture him and William Middlemas for the slaughter of Thomas Ker of Crailing. This was the outcome of a serious fight between Kers and Turnbulls at Jedburgh Fair that year, which included Mark of Bewlie and his brother Robert (who was killed there); these 2 may well have also been his brothers. He was declared a rebel and there is a Commission of 1603 for the Provost of Jedburgh to gather men to apprehend him. He was killed at Lilliesleaf around Martinmas 1604 by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam. Ker had remission for this and other crimes in 1615. This was all part of an ongoing feud between the Turnbulls and the Kers, but the exact circumstances surrounding the events of these times are impossible to guess.

Hector of Lilliesleaf (16th/17th C.) declared a rebel in 1604 for failing to appear to answer the charge of murdering Thomas Ker of Crailing and his servant George Glaidner. Hector of Belses acted as cautioner. It is possible he is the same man as Hector of Bewlie. Hector of Stanedge (d.1611) recorded in 1596 as ‘Hector Trumble of Stoney letch’ when he was accused of crimes by Englishman Thomas Selbie and fined ‘for lack of answer’. He is recorded as ‘in Stanileche’ in a bond of 1603 when he gave all his goods to Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst for being unable to pay his debts and also apparently because Sir Andrew had saved his life. In 1604 he was one of the Turnbulls involved with slaughter and burning at Appotside and Harwood. Also in 1604 he was tried, along with 3 Turnbulls of Barhills, with the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton; they were denounced as rebels for nonentry, with their cautioners being Robert Home of Carolside, Hector Turnbull of Belses and James Douglas of Cavers. In 1606 he is recorded as ‘ Hector Turnbull in Steneledrig’, brother of Gavin in Howa and the deceased Robert in Hallrule, when there was a summons for them to prosecute the sons of Harry Grahamslaw who had been accused of the murder of Robert in Hallrule; there was clearly a feud between the 2 families. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605; however, the case against him was not pursued. In 1607 he sold the lands of ‘Carlinghall, Laisell, Brownishall, Brumeslewis and Roberthill’ to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Also in 1607 he brought a court case against Robert Scott in Northhouse. Additionally in 1607 he was cautioner for John Maxwell, Lord Herries. He is also recorded as ‘of Steinmole’ in a set of documents in 1609 relating to the lands of ‘Hardwodtoun’, ‘Fairneleys’ and ‘Staineleche’. Andrew held these lands in 1610, and so was probably his son. This also suggests that he had been declared a rebel by then. In 1610 he was named by the Privy Council when a commission was made to apprehend him, along with 7 other Turnbulls and 2 Davidsons, since they were ‘unrelaxed from hornings’ following the murder of Thomas Ker of Cralinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. Hector of Belses (16th/17th C.) acted as cautioner in 1604 for a group of Turnbulls from Stanedge and Barnhills (including 2 other Hectors!) accused of killing 6 sons of Grahamslaw of Newton. Also in 1604 he was cautioner for Hector of Lilliesleaf, charged with the murder of Thomas Ker of Craling. He must have been related to the George of Belses who was executed in 1603. Hector (16th/17th C.) had a charter of ‘feu farm’ for the lands of Standhill in 1610. He was probably ancestor of the later Turnbulls of Standhill. Hector of Clarilaw (17th C.) possibly son of the earlier Hector. In 1637 he was appointed (as closest relative on his father’s side) as tutor to James, son of George ‘called of Wauchope’. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £273. In 1643 his daughter Elizabeth married Robert Scott of Burnhead. He probably had no sons, since Clarilaw appears to have gone to the Scotts of Burnhead after that. Hector of Firth (17th C.) feuded Firth from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning in 1632. He was probably the son of the earlier Hector of Firth. John and Walter leased Firth later in the later 1600s, and must have been his descendants. He is recorded in a marriage contract of 1637 of his daughter with George Clerk. In 1643 his lands in Lilliesleaf Parish were valued at £195. Hector (17th C.) recorded in ‘Rule’ in the 1643 valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. Hector (d.c.1683) tenant in Grundistone whose will was recorded in 1683. Hector of Wester Swansehill (18th C.) son of William. He was succeeded by his son James. Helen of Fodderlee (17th C.) recorded as owner of £80 of land in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. She was probably related to James, who was also recorded at Fodderlee in 1643. Helen (17th/18th C.) see Helen Chisholme. Henry of Craik (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1431 ‘letter of transumpt’ of the earlier charter granting half of the barony of Branxholme to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Henrico Turnbull de Craik’. Henry (15th C.) leased a quarter of the lands of Appletreehall according to a document of 1470, with Alexander Scott of Howpasley having the other parts. He was probably related to Walter, who is recorded holding the lands of East Mains (of Hassendean) in 1493/4. Henry (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘in dénut’, which is probably an abbreviation for ‘dennum’, i.e. he lived in Denholm. He was cited again in 1494/5 for failure to appear. Henry (15th C.) tenant in Unthank, listed at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was indicted and did not appear, with his surety, Matthew Hobkirk being fined. He was probably related to Alexander, recorded in Unthank in 1493. Henry ‘Harry’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Wauchope in Rulewater, recorded in a court case of 1605. He is listed as ‘Harie Trumbill’. Henry ‘Harie’ (17th C.) holder of part of the lands of Westwood near Bonchester in 1643. His lands were valued at £12 Scots, while those of Thomas (presumably his father or brother) were worth £40 Scots. Henry (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whirriggs in Kirkton Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of a total of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. He married Betty Stavert in Kirkton in 1789; she was born in Hawick in 1766, daughter of George. Their children included: Henrietta (b.1791); Elizabeth (b.1793); and John (b.1795). Herbert (15th/16th C.) recorded in connection with lands.

in Bedrule in the early 1500s. Helen Rutherford of that Ilk had the ‘half merk land of Bethiroull’ confirmed to her by the King, this being near the Parish Church and ‘held in tack by Herbut Turnbull’. It is possible that his name is an error for the much more common ‘Hector’. Herman (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1479 for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. It could be that this is a transcription error for ‘Hector’. Isobel (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Rawfalt, sister of William and Walter. In 1603 she was one of the ‘persewaris’ of the case against George Turnbull of Belses, for a list of crimes, including killing her brother William and shooting her brother Walter. Another of the persuers was George Rutherford ‘as kinsman’, so he was either her husband or married to one of her relatives. In 1632 probably the same ‘Issobella’ was ‘heir portioner’, along with her sister Margaret, to their brother in the lands of the Mains of Feurule. Isobel (17th C.) resident of ‘Crawknow’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Isobel (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Isobel (17th C.) recorded as resident of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isobel (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isobel (18th C.) cook at Stirches in 1791, when she was working for Gilbert Chisholme.

Sir James (1320–55) son of William, the first Turnbull. He married Mary Haliburton and died at Nisbet Moor. James (15th C.) listed among the squires who witnessed an agreement in 1432 between the Rules of Primside and the Kers of Altonburn. James of Hornshole (15th C.) witness in 1456 to an instrument relating to the lands of Whitchesters, made at Branholme. He is recorded as ‘Jacobo Turnbule de Hornshole’. He may have been an ancestor of the later Turnbulls who were at Hornshole. James (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was described as a ‘common thief’, who had stolen things with John Davidson, resident of Minto. Davidson was allowed to ‘compone’ for his crimes, including stealing a horse from him. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as the brother of the Laird of Whithope (probably the one near Harden in the Borthwick valley). He had remission for stealing 18 ewes from Bowhill, with the help of Walter Dalgleish. His crimes also included stealing iron windows, doors and ‘crukis’ from the tower of Howpasley. His brother the Laird of Whithope was surety for him. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1484 when he claimed compensation from Adam of Philiphaugh for the ‘wrangwis vexacion and disturblance’ of him in his lands of Westfield and ‘wrangwis spoliacion of a kow’ at his lands of Kirkhope. Probably the same James ‘in Kirkhop’ is listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any part in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as brother of Mark in Bonchester in 1494/5. He failed to appear and so his brother, serving as his surety, was fined. He was also recorded as brother of Mark in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted; as well as his brother, there were Turnbulls of Fulton, Bonchester and elsewhere also listed. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hornshole listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, among mostly local men who had been fined. He was probably related to Adam, who was tenant at Hornshole in 1502 and John in 1516. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Jameses.

James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Gargunnock. In 1504 he was among a number of men who had remission for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He may be related to the contemporary Walter of Gargunnock and Hassendean. James (15th/16th C.) witness to a charter for John Stirling for lands in Dumbarton, signed in Edinburgh in 1508. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant of Wolfelee in 1516 on a list of many Turnbulls pardoned for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in the lands of Hillhouse, listed among the men who had remission in 1516 for any assistance given to the Homes. Fergus is also noted as being there, and so presumably related. It is unclear if these were the lands in Liddesdale or other lands in Rulewater. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jane Trumbill, young Pait’s brother’ on a list of Scotsmen reset in England in 1540. He was probably son of Peter (or perhaps Patrick) of Catlee. James of Abbotrule (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jame’ in 1565 when there was a bond with Walter Turnbull, tenant of Howe (in Rulewater) to present him to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He may be one of the unidentified James Turnbulls who are on the list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. James (16th C.) listed as tenant in ‘Sironsheill’ (probably Swansheil) in 1581 among 10 men (mostly Turnbulls of Rulewater) accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of

Bewlie. James of the Toor (16th C.) recorded as ‘of the Toure’, along with his brother George, in a 1579/80 case of men accused of raiding into England. They were asked to pay recompense to the Laird of ‘Panstoun’, from whom they had presumably been accused of stealing. He is also listed among the men who were asked to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5 to explain how they had been helping to quiet the Border. He was also listed as one of the landed men of the Borders in about 1590. He was probably related to William ‘of the Tour of Roulwode’ recorded in 1622. His lands were presumably at Spittal Tower. James (16th C.) tenant in ‘Stenleche’ (i.e. Stonedige) in 1567 when Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. He was recorded being ‘of Stonyletche’ and ‘of Stonyleache’ among men complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for 2 separate raids into England in 1587. In one raid he is listed first and there were more than 40 other men involved, including his servant ‘Jocke Weittie’. In the other raid there are several Turnbulls listed, among a group of about 200. James ‘Baneist James’ (16th/17th C.) one of a group of Turnbulls involved in a melee at Jedburgh Rood Fair in 1601. This resulted in the death of Thomas Ker and his servant, and the wounding of many men. As a consequence several Turnbulls were later convicted and hanged. Although he was one of those found guilty of murder and illegally carrying pistols, it is unclear whether or not he was executed. In 1610 he was named (as ‘called Baneisht James’) by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsions), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Craillinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. It is not stated to which Turnbull branch he belonged, but probably somewhere around Minto. His nickname is presumably Scots for ‘banished’. James (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. In 1616 he is described as ‘called of Bedrule’ when along with David (or Andrew, probably his nephew), butcher and Burgess of Jedburgh, he had a bond with Mark in Hartshaugh. And in 1618 he is ‘brother german to Walter of Bedderreull’ when he had a bond with James Jamieson of Lessuden. James (d.bef. 1619) eldest son of Hector of Hartshaugh. In 1608 he had a charter of the lands of Wester Swanshiel, granted by his father to be held in feu for rental. He was also the successor to the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands. However, he could only have been Laird for a very short time after his father’s death, before his own son Thomas succeeded in 1619. He must also have been related to the contemporary Adam and Lyle (probably either brothers or sons). James ‘Jamie’ of West Lees (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 when his son George was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioner’s court in Jedburgh. He was also recorded in 1617 in a bond with James Haswell, surgeon of Jedburgh; his son and heir William was also mentioned. James (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Willie of Braidhauche’, he is recorded in the 1622 Circuit Court, where he was found guilty of stealing 24 sheep from ‘Hairrlesyd’, this being possessed by the ‘fear of Cavers (William Douglas) and his tennentis’ (hence probably Earlside). He was ‘clengit’, i.e. found not guilty. His cautioners were Adam in Hartshaugh and another Adam, who were perhaps related. In 1628 there was a complaint by Robert Kerr of Cavers against him and his father, for opposing his apprehension after he was declared ‘an idle and masterless man’ (i.e. fit for military service). Also in 1628 he is named when his father William paid caution to the Privy Council, promising to atone for the disturbance they had caused at Abbotrule Kirk. James (d.bef. 1632) described as ‘in Hassidenbank’ and already deceased in 1632 when his son Walter feued part of Raperlaw. Probably the same James ‘of Hassindanebank’ was complained about in 1607 by George Scott in Castleside, with his surety being Thomas Ker of Cavers. James (17th C.) recorded as owner of £180 of land at Fodderlee in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. He was probably related to Helen ‘of Fodderlie’, who was also recorded in 1643. They were presumably distinct from the people with the same names who were at Bowshot Hill at the same time. James (17th C.) recorded at ‘Bossithill’ (i.e. Bowshot Hill) in Abbotrule Parish in a valuation roll of 1643. He was there with Helen, who was presumably his wife. Their land was valued at £33 6s 8d. James of Wauchope (d.c.1674) only son of George of Wauchope. In 1653 he inherited the 20-pound land of Wauchope in Jedforest from his uncle Thomas of Wauchope. In 1655 he renounced all claims to the lands of Templehall (in the Rule valley) to William Earl of Lothian. His sister Anna was served as his heir in 1674. James of West Lees (17th C.) probably a descendant of the earlier James. In about 1663 he was recorded paying £66 13s 4d on the Land Tax Rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Fenwick. He married Isobell
Margaret Stoddart and their children included Robert (b.1682), James (b.1685) and an unnamed son (b.1688). The 1682 baptism was witnessed by John Law and Robert Turnbull (who was presumably closely related). James (17th C.) tenant in Kirkton. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. James (d.c.1686) tenant farmer who also served as ‘pyper’ for the Parish of Abbotrule. His will is recorded in 1687 when he was ‘piper, in Abotroull’. He left a reasonably sum of money to his only daughter. James (17th C.) tenant in Hartshaugh. The will of his wife Agnes Turnbull was recorded in 1688. James (d.c.1688) tenant in ‘Caverspark’ when his will was recorded in 1688. It is unclear if this was associated with Cavers Parish or Cavers Carre or elsewhere. James (17th C.) referred to as ‘James Trumble’ in 1688 when he was fined for assaulting the Bailie and Town Officers. They were trying to take him to the tollbooth ‘for certain riots and bluids’ and threatened ‘to take yr lives wt ane drawn penknife in his hand’. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘servitor of said Dame Magdalene’ in 1690 when he witnessed a bond. He was thus some sort of employee of the widow of Stobs. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. He may be the James who married Margaret Lillico in Bedrule in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Acreknowe on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Holburn according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant at Doorpool in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Adam, who was tenant there at about the same time. James (17th C.) cottar at Ruel-townfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant in Hudhouse in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1715 when his daughter Helen was baptised. Perhaps the same James was in Denholm in 1720 when his son John was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Tofts in Kirkton Parish. It is unclear if he was related to the Turnbuls of Tofts. His children included: James (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1718). He was recorded at Nether Tofts in 1718. James (d.c.1724) son of Adam and grandson of Thomas. His father had lost the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Kirkton through ‘non-entry’. In 1682 he was entered with his superior in the lands of Wester Swanshiel as successor to his grandfather. He was at that time already married to Elizabeth Scott. He may be the same James ‘portioner of Swan-sheil’ who was among those declared as fugitives in 1684 for not conforming to Episcopalianism. He was probably the James recorded as resident at Easter Swanshiel in 1694. His son and successor Walter was born about 1700. He was succeeded by Walter (called William in Walter Deans’ history). James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Aitken, ‘younger carier’. He married Agnes Henry, who is recorded in 1721 as a teacher of poor children. Probably the same tailor James is listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is probably the tailor recorded in the Kirk Session records paying 18s ‘for 3 sticks lost from the quire’. He witnessed a baptism for fellow tailor Alexander Hislop in 1705 and another (along with fellow tailor George Scott) for tailor Archibald Scott in 1714. He married Margaret Forrest in 1703. Their children included: James (b.1705); and Isobel (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were baker John Willans and tailor William Gledstains. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Wester Parkhill in 1714 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Other children who could be his include: Adam (b.1702); Anna (b.1706); and Mitchell (b.1712). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Cawfaulds in 1728. He married Elspeth Martin and their children included: Margaret (b.1718); and Archibald (b.1728). The witnesses in 1728 were Thomas and Walter Turnbull (who may have been related). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism (along with Andrew Martin) for James Dryden in 1737. James (b.1709) son of William, he was born at Bedrule Mill, and the family claimed descent from the Turnbuls of Bedrule. He became tenant farmer at the Dykes. He married Helen Spindie in Cavers Parish in 1739 and their eldest son Thomas was born a year later. Their other children included James, Agnes and William. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Margaret Currie in 1758 and their children included Robert (b.1758), Janet (b.1760) and Thomas (b.1762). James (b.1736) tenant farmer at Hassendean Bank, son of Adam, who was also tenant there. He could be the James who in July 1774 was paid 2s 5d for ‘sharpening Picks’ as part of a boundary dyke at Hassendean and who in 1782 was tenant of the ‘East end farm of Hassendean’. He was recorded at Hassendean Bank in the Horse Tax Rolls 1785–94. He was still tenant of Hassendean in 1793, when part of the farm was enclosed. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Turnbull (of Burnfoot and the Hawick carpet factory). Their children included Adam, who married Betty, daughter of James Scott of Skelfhill. He was the ancestor of the Turnbulls of Merrylaw. James ‘Auld Meldrum’ (d.1781) recorded in the list of deaths in Hawick. He may be the same man as one of the other Jameses. He was surely related to John, who was also recorded as ‘Meldrum’ in 1787 when his daughter Lizzie died. James (d.1787) wright in Bedrule. He married Euphan Peden, who died in 1792, aged 62. Their children included: Mary, who died aged 9; James, died at 16; and William, who lived at Lanton East Park. James (18th C.) resident of Scaumill. He married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1764 and their children included: John (b.1766); George (b.1767); William (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1770); Margaret (b.1772); and Ann (b.1774). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Reid and Robert Ormiston. James (18th C.) resident of Courthill. He married Jean Douglas and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Janet (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Esther (b.1764); Isabel (b.1766); James (b.1768); William (b.1770); Jean (b.1771); Helen (b.1774); and Rebecca (b.1776). The witnesses in 1770 were John Mathieson and Andrew Turner. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1774. James (d.1797) resident of Hawick Parish. His death record states he was ‘Schoolmr. Billetmaster & dean of the guild’. Presumably he held the position of Dean of Guild in Hawick, and was also a teacher somewhere. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, described as ‘Strong man’. His wife Agnes Thomson died in 1787. James (18th C.) farmer at East Middle in Cavers Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as an ‘eggler’, i.e. a peddler who collected eggs to sell at markets. In 1794 the death of his daughter and another child are recorded, with his wife Nelly Wilson dying in 1795. James (1752–1844) younger son of Walter, portioner of Ancrum. In 1787 in Cavers Parish he married Helen (also called Agnes) Rutherford (1761–1821), daughter of the farmer at Knowesouth Orchard. He farmed at Broomhall near Ancrum and later at Newcastleton (probably not Bewcastle, as reported by some sources). He may be the James, grandfather of William G. about whom a story is told regarding a smuggler dropping 2 kegs from his horse as he rode past the farm, which he managed to conceal while pointing the excisemen in the direction the smuggler had gone. His children included: John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule; James (b.1789); Elizabeth Rutherford (b.1791); Betty (b.1793); Helen (b.1795); Isabella (b.1797); and Agnes (b.1799). He was recorded as ‘Independent’ at ‘Honey town’ (i.e. Honeyburn farm) in 1841, and he died there. James (b.1754/5–1825) ancestor of the Turnbulls of Bonchester Bridge and the Hawick grocers. It is unclear precisely where he was born and who his parents were. He lived at Hoddleswoodie and other places near Bonchester. He married Betty, daughter of George and Catherine Adamson (possibly the Betty born to George Adamson in Hobkirk in 1760); she died in 1828, aged 77. Their son James (b.1786) was schoolmaster at Denholm and Wilton. Their other children included: George (1783–1861), carrier in Rulewater; William (b.1787), schoolmaster at Hobkirk; Adam, who died in Edinburgh; Alexander, carrier; Thomas, carrier in Newcastleton; and John, grocer in Newcastleton. He and some of his family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. James (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) tenant at Hobkirk Manse lands, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘HightoFs’ (i.e. Upper Tofts), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax on 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf as owner of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax at Greenhouse at 1797. James (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Highchesters, when he owned 3 horses. He also paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs at Highchesters in the same year. Probably the same James at ‘Haychesters’ was on the 1821 subscription list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. James (b. 1774) son of John of Wester Swanshiel. He was born in Hobkirk Parish and became a tenant farmer. In 1799 he was tenant at Philhope when his son was baptised in Roberton parish. He was later tenant farmer at Galalaw outside Hawick, the lands being purchased by his elder brother Robert. He is recorded in the 1841 census at Galalaw Braefoot. He married Mary Stavert in 1798, the marriage being recorded in Yarrow and Roberton Parishes. Their earlier children were baptised in Roberton. They included: John (b. 1799), Mary (b. 1800), James (b. 1812) and Helen (b. 1815), all baptised in Roberton; Eliza (b. 1801), Catherine (b. 1803), Mary (b. 1805), Robert (b. 1807), Ann (b. 1808), Walter (b. 1811), Agnes (b. 1814), Margaret (b. 1816), Margaret (again, b. 1818) all baptised in Yarrow; and William (b. 1821), baptised in Wilton. James (18th/19th C.) married Annie ‘Maire’ in Roberton Parish in 1800. James (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Ainslie. Their children included: Walter (b. 1801); an unnamed child who died in 1816; and Janet, who married coal carrier William Graham. James (1773–1858) son of Walter of Chesterhall near Ancrum. He became farmer at Billerwell in the Rule valley, along with his sons. He married Margaret, daughter of Mark Turnbull, tenant of Lanton Mill, and she died in 1862, aged 78. His wife’s brother was also Mark Turnbull, tenant of Lanton Mill, whose grandson was Provost of Melrose. Their children were: Walter (1805–64, who was the last of Chesterhall); Thomas (b. 1809); James (b. 1815); John (b. 1817); Robert (b. 1819); George Purvis (b. 1821); Margaret (1824–56), who died unmarried; and Mary (1812–360), who married John Laidlaw in Jedburgh. His daughter Elizabeth married Robert, son of John Grieve in 1853. William may have been another son. James (b. 1782/3) stocking-maker in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton in 1835, when he was at Damside, and in 1840 and 1841, when he was at Roadhead. His wife was Mary and their children included William, James and Mary. He may be the stockingmaker James whose infant child’s death is recorded in 1822. James (18th/19th C.) listed at Wilton among subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. James (b. c. 1780) thatcher living at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was there in 1851 with family members Janet and Andrew. James (1786–1834) son of James and Betty Adamson (not Anderson, as stated in one source). He was born in Hobkirk Parish, being baptised at Hoddeswoodie, and came from the Nursery House Turnbulls. He was schoolmaster at Denholm and then became the successor to James Elliot at Wilton School in the 1810s. His brother William was schoolmaster at Hobkirk. He was said to have a reputation for being an excellent teacher. He married Margaret Dalgleish (cousin of William Dalgleish, who established the ‘Coutard Fund’) in Cavers Parish in 1808 and they had 12 children, including: James, Clerk of Session in Edinburgh; John, who died in London; Agnes (who was also a teacher); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who married James Dalgleish; Jane or Janet; Charters, who married Elliot Armstrong; Elspeth; George; Jane; Mary Scott; and William, auctioneer in Edinburgh. His wife and eldest daughter ran the ‘Image Garden’ school around the 1840s, and she survived him by about 50 years. James (18th/19th C.) son of Mark and an Elliot. He was descended from the Chesterhall, Ancrum branch of the Turnbulls. He was a shepherd at Minto Kames, then at Barnes and later at Old Fodderlee. His children include Robert (also a shepherd), Mark (a joiner in Peebles), James (a shepherd in Kingledoors) and a daughter (who kept house for him at Old Fodderlee). James ‘Wiggam’ (18th/19th C.) Denholm tailor who was described as ‘half-witted’. He also acted as the village crier, ringing the Dead Bell, announcing the name, and time and place of the burial and usually adding ‘and ye’re a’ invited to the funeral’. James (b. 1799/1800) originally from Bowden, he was a blacksmith, grocer and spirit dealer at Appletreehall. He was listed as blacksmith at Appletreehall among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. In 1851 he was farming at Fenwick, having 140 acres and employing 2 servants. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jane, Jessie, Agnes, James and Thomas. He is recorded at Appletreehall in 1861 as a grocer and widower, with children Agnes and Thomas. James ‘Jimmie Springkie’ (b. c. 1800) Hawick shoemaker who lived to an old age. His nickname derived from that of his father, ‘Auld Springkell’. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a shoemaker on the Cross Wynd. He is probably the James recorded at 4 Cross Wynd in the 1851 and 1861 censuses, employing a handful of men in his shoemaker’s business. He lived with his sister Margaret. He could be the son of Robert and Mary Laidlaw, born in Hawick in 1798, with sister Margaret born in 1793. He probably married Martha Blythe, who died in 1826, aged just 21. James (19th C.) son of Hawick stocking-maker William. He was one of 5 men charged for mobbing Tory supporters during the 1837 election. He was found guilty and imprisoned for 12 months. James (b.1800/1) born in Southdean Parish, he was farmer at Harelaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 11 acres. His wife was Allison and their children included William, James, Isobella, Eliza, Jane and Christina. James (1801/2-77) born in Minto Parish, he was forester at Cavers estate for almost 50 years. In 1828 he married Jane Weir, who appears to have already been deceased by 1841. He was living at ‘Cavers Cottage’ in 1851 and at ‘Cavers Wood’ in 1861. The family belonged to the Associate congregation in Jedburgh. He had a family of 2 daughters and 3 sons: John (b.c.1829), the eldest; Margaret (b.c.1830); Robert (b.1832), clothier in Denholm: James (b.c.1837); and Jean (b.c.1840). James (19th C.) recorded being ‘in Gillbraehead’ in 1832 when accused of fathering a child with Janet Scott from Gillfoot. However, he denied it. He was surely related to the blacksmiths of Gillbraehead. James (1814–74) son of Robert and Ann Mathieson. He was a Hawick draper, conducting the town’s highest class drapery business of the time at 11 High Street. This is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living with his parents on the Cross Wynd. In 1851 he was listed as a Master Draper, employing 4 apprentices, 5 women and 4 girls. In 1861 he was employing 2 men, 2 boys and 5 women. He was on the ‘Eternal Cooncil’ and was twice Senior Bailie. He was probably the Turnbull who was Junior Bailie in 1859, when he was croupier for the centenary Burns night. He was also Treasurer of East Bank Kirk, succeeding his father, was appointed Session Clerk in 1851 and was presented with a plate service by the congregation in 1865. He married Wilhelmina, daughter of Walter John Grieve, farmer in Southfield; she died in 1878, aged 58. Their children included: Robert (1850–53); Ann (c.1855–61); and Christina Mary, who married John Wield. He died at Wilton Grove (his son-in-law’s house) and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. James (1815–88) son of James, farmer at Billerwell. He was joint tenant of Billerwell with his brothers, and also of Prieston. He also farmed for a while at Ashkirk Mill. He is probably the James recorded as farmer at Wester Fodderlee in the 1860s. He married Mary, daughter of William Scott. Their children were: James Robert, who emigrated to Edmonton; William Scott, farmer at Tythelhouse; Annie; George Purvis, who emigrated to Canada; Mary, twin to George Purvis; Walter, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill; Mark, twin of Walter; Elizabeth, ‘Betsy’, married Samuel White from Stow; Janet; Thomas, farmer at Greenholm, near Newcastleton; and Andrew, also farmer at Greenholm. He died at Midburn in Hobkirk Parish. James (b.1819) eldest son of James, Wilton Schoolmaster, and Margaret Dalgleish, he was born in Wilton. He became Clerk of Session in Edinburgh. It is said that he knew the law so well that he was often consulted by the professional lawyers. He married Jessie, sister of banker Archibald Douglas. Their children were Catherine (who married Henry Bunge) and James (a clerk in Register House). James (b.1822/3) born in Ancrum Parish, he was a blacksmith and shepherd at Spittal-on-Rule. He was recorded there in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Jane Scott, daughter of a Hawick joiner, with his mother-in-law being Agnes Scott. Their children included George B. and Adam. James (b.1823) eldest son of John. He took over the tenancy of Spittal farm. He was miller at Spittal Mill on the 1852 directory. He is recorded there in 1861, as farmer of 500 acres, employing 17 labourers. He was living there with his step-mother Anne E. James (1825–78) eldest son of John, grocer of Newcastleton, and descended from a Hobkirk branch of the Turnbulls. His uncle James was schoolmaster at Wilton. In 1855 he acquired the old-established grocery and wine merchants at 51 High Street, and it lasted for more than a century. He also ran a cart out to Whitrope when the tunnel was being built there. Accounts for the period 1889–1964 are listed in the National Register of Archives. In 1854 he married Anne, eldest daughter of James Robson, a Jedburgh shoemaker; she died in 1890, aged 65. Their children were: Isabell Young, who married Charles Firth of Fell Grove, Yorkshire; Mina, who married William Cunningham of Brisbane, Australia; James Robson, who died unmarried; John; William, who emigrated to Toowoomba, Queensland; Mary, who married Frederick William Sykes from Leeds; Margaret; and Robert, who moved to Brisbane, Australia. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. James (19th C.) recorded in 1852 as saddler and ironmonger in Lilliesleaf. If this was not an error for ‘Thomas’, then they must as least have been closely related. It is also possible he was the same James who ran the Subscription Library in Lilliesleaf.

in 1852. James (b.1824/5) shepherd at Blawearie in Cavers Parish in 1861. His wife was Jane Scott and their children included George B. and Adam. James Douglas (b.1833) son of Thomas and Mary Beattie. He emigrated to Australia, where he farmed at Mount Prospect, Leichardt and Kotupna in Victoria, and in 1885 settled at Guy Fawkes (now called ‘Ebor’) in New South Wales. Robyn Crosslé wrote a book ‘Turnbull: lives and letters’ (c.1994) about him, containing extracts of many family letters, especially from his brother Gen. Peter Stephenson. He married Esther Rathie, daughter of his cousin Barbara Andison and James Rathie. Their children were Thomas Scott, Barbara, James Douglas, Mary, Archibald, Esther, John, William, Adam Robert and Barbara Esther Mabel. James (b.1836) son of Robert, he was farmer at Galalaw. He married Margaret, daughter of builder George Tait. Their children were: Robert, who was an engineer in Toronto; James, who later farmed at Galalaw and married his cousin Amy, daughter of draper and tobacconist J.A. Turnbull. John, a science teacher in Kilwinnin; and George, town missionary in Kirkintilloch. James (19th C.) schoolmaster at St. Cuthbert’s School during part of 1893, between Mr. Jay and Mr. Inglis. James (19th C.) resident at East Bank House. He was one of the executors for the firm of Dickson & Turnbull when it folded in about 1876. He may have been a brother of George, the main Turnbull partner. James (1846–1923) engineer born in Hawick, who was long involved with Allars Kirk. His father died during the cholera outbreak of 1849. He wrote a memoir, which was published (at the insistence of John R. Purdom) as ‘Hawick in Bygone Days’ (1927), which contains an invaluable record of Hawick shops, businesses, people and customs of the mid-1800s. James Robert (b.1852) eldest son of James, tenant at Billerwell. He emigrated to Canada and worked as an auctioneer in Edmonton. James (19th/20th C.) son of James, he was farmer at Galalaw like his father. He married his cousin Amy, daughter of draper and tobacconist J.A. Turnbull. Jane (b.c.1775) originally from England, she was listed as grocer and spirit dealer at Bonchester Bridge in 1841. She was probably proprietor of the Horse and Hounds Inn. She lived there with Thomas and John, who were probably her sons. Jane nee Scott (b.1777/8) postmistress in Denholm in the mid-19th century. She is probably the vintner of that name recorded in Denholm in 1837 and 1852. She married Alexander. In 1841 she was ‘Jeany Turnbull Senr.’ living at the Cross Keys Inn with her joiner son John, daughter Jeany and nephew John Scott. She was listed as post-mistress in 1851, with her daughter Jane as assistant. Jane (1792–1866) daughter of William of Burnfoot. She lived at 5 Slitrig Crescent with her older sister Eleanor. They were referred to as ‘the Misses Turnbull’ among the gentry of Hawick in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 she was living at the same address with her niece, also Eleanor Turnbull. Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter and co-heiress of Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock. In 1501, along with her sister Margaret, she was infefted in the lands of Hassendeanebank. In 1509 she and Elizabeth (perhaps another sister) had sasines for Gargunnock and other lands in Stirlingshire. She probably married Thomas Elphinstone, who had a charter for half the lands of Hassendeanebank (along with her) from Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn in 1512. And she may later have been the Mrs. Janet Seton (nee Turnbull) who infefted Archibald Douglas of Timpendean in Hassendeanebank. She may be the Janet who had a sasine for Lanton in 1502 (with Elizabeth and Margaret having the sasine in 1506). Janet (15th/16th C.) granted a charter for Philiphaugh in 1509. She may have been daughter or wife of Adam of Philiphaugh. She seems unlikely to be the same Janet recorded possessing Philiphaugh in 1555. Janet (16th C.) recorded in 1555 when her son John was served heir to her lands of Philiphaugh. She could have been wife of Robert of Philiphaugh, who is recorded in the 1530s. Jean (d.bef. 1632) daughter of Walter of Templehall. Along with her sister Beatrix she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewlands from her uncle Andrew (son of David of Wauchope) in 1604. She must have been a minor then, since in 1605 her ‘tutor’ George Turnbull (2nd son of Hector) acted on their behalf to removed several people from their lands. In 1632, by which time she was deceased, her sister claimed the other half of their inherited lands. Jean (b.1819) daughter of Alexander and Jane Scott. Her mother was postmistress in Denholm, and her brother John was a joiner. They lived at the Cross Keys Inn, where she was also a spirit dealer. John (14th C.) had a charter for the lands of ‘Hundallwalschop’, i.e. Hundleshope in Peeblesshire. This was given by King David II in 1357, as documented in a transumpt of 1534, with his surname recorded as ‘Trumbull’. His daughter and heiress Margaret married William Gledstains of that Ilk. Margaret later resigned her lands of Roberton to her son John; this suggests that this John of Hundleshope was from the Borthwick Water Turnbulls. John (14th C.) granted lands in Dumfriesshire by Dougal McDougal in the reign of David II. The lands were ‘Litlegrewy’, ‘Glengarg’ and ‘Glencraig’. John (14th C.) Sheriff of Selkirkshire according to the Exchequer Rolls of
iff in 1364. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls in Selkirkshire. John (14th/15th
C.) granted the lands of Wauchopehead in a chartr of Robert III in 1404. The lands had been forfeited by `John Bour'. John (14th C.) Sheriff of David II. The lands were `Litlegrewy', `Glen-der Turnbulls. John of Hundleshope was from the Borthwick Wa-ty to her son John; this suggests that this John of Hundleshope was from the Borthwick Water Turnbulls. John (14th C.) granted lands in Dumfriesshire by Dougal McDougal in the reign
of David II. The lands were ‘Litlegrewy’, ‘Glengarg’ and ‘Glencraig’. John (14th C.) Sheriff of Selkirkshire according to the Exchequer Rolls of
iff in 1364. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls in Selkirkshire. John (14th/15th
C.) granted the lands of Wauchopehead in a char-
tr of Robert III in 1404. The lands had been forfeited by ‘John Bour'. John (14th/15th C.) son of Adam ‘of Whytehope', i.e. Whithope in the Borthwick valley. He was granted lands at Hassendeanbank in 1409 by the Baron, William Cunningham of Kilmaurs. Several generations of Johns subsequently held these lands. Sir John of Falshope (14th/15th C.) said to have had a daughter who married George Scott, 2nd Laird of Synton. His lands were either Phawhope near the head of the Ettrick or Fauldshope opposite Oakwood. He may have been ancestor of Sir Thomas who held the same lands in the late 15th century.
John of Minto (d.1423), nicknamed ‘out with the sword’ for his fiery temperament. In 1390 he granted part of the Barony of Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedworth, probably his nephew.
He was captured by the English in 1399 (along with Sir Richard Rutherford) and imprisoned in the Tower of London until 1413. Thereafter he took part in the Battle of Cravant (part of the Hundred Years War), supporting the French, at which perhaps as many as 3,000 Scots fell. He appears to have died there, although it is also allledged that he died later of leprosy, causing dispute over the title to his lands. He was succeeded by his son Walter. There was an inquiry in 1424 into whether the grant to Sir William Stewart was legal, because of his supposed leprosy. His sister may have married Sir Alexander Stewart of Darnley. John of Fulton (15th C.) part of the investigation into the leprosy of John of Minto in 1425/6. About the same time he also witnessed a retour of Walter Scott in the lands of Eilrig, and is there recorded as ‘Johannem Turnbull de Foultoune’, along with David Turnbull. He may be the John who was on the 1429/30 ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. In 1432 he was recorded as ‘of the Fulton, Bailie of the regality of Sprouston’, when he witnessed the resignation of the lands of Primside from Andrew Rule to his son George. In 1438 he was Bailie of the Regality of Sprouston at the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. He is probably one of the 3 men named ‘Johannem Turnbul’ on a retour for Douglas of Bonjedward in 1439. He is described as ‘of Fouloute’ when part of an inquest into lands of Newlands, held at Jedburgh in 1440. Philip and James Turnbull are also named, and so may be related. He may also be the John who was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn in 1446/7. John of Bedrule (15th C.)
recorded as ‘Johne tumbull domino de Bedorowll’ in 1432 when he was one of the witnesses to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sherif-dom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. It is not impossible that he is the same man as John of Fulton. His relationship to other Turnbulls is unknown, although he was probably closely related to William, founder of Glasgow University.
He was probably succeeded by George of Bedrule, recorded from 1448. He may be the ‘Johne Turnbule’ who was on the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of the charge of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. John of Lanton (15th C.) recorded as being of ‘Langtoun’ and constable of ‘le Newerk’ when he witnessed a charter in 1439. The document was a grant by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, to Andrew Ker of Al-tonburn, for lands in Primside, and was made at Newark Castle. John (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1451, when the custom of his goods was paid to Lord Crichton. In 1453 the rentals from the west side of Dunmure (it is not clear where this was) were in his hands. John of Hassendeanbank (15th C.) recorded in 1464 resigning the lands of Hassendeanbank to ‘William de Edmondston’. This may simply have been resigning them to his superior before they were granted again, since the family appear to still hold the lands about a century later. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. He is surely related to the William of Hassendeanbank who is recorded in 1432. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Bal-veny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, Stephen and Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Turnbule’. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Ern Cleck (15th C.) member of the panel that met in Jedburgh to rule on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. Probably the same John ‘Turnbull’ was on the inquest panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony

of Cavers in 1464/5 (along with Hector, George and William of Minto). He is probably related to the David of Ern Cleuch who is recorded 30 years later. John (15th C.) granted the lands of 'Stowislee' (i.e. Stouslie) in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, resigned by William Lindsay of Garmilton. He is described as dwelling in Borthwick (presumably the Borthwick Water). In a document of 1468 he binds himself on payment of 100 merks Scots on 40 days notice to resign the lands in favour of John Lord Lindsay of the Byres. John (15th C.) recorded in 1468 when he was one of 2 men appointed to represent Selkirkshire on a Parliamentary inquisition to assess the tax on barons. It is unclear whether the is the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Harden (15th C.) probably the last Turnbull of Harden, son of Walter (who is recorded in 1468). He had a charter for the lands of Harden in 1482, granted by the Baron of Wilton, Henny Wardlaw. A letter under the seal of James IV in 1491 requires John Scott, Baron of Wilton to receive Alexander, Lord Home as tenant in the lands of Harden, which had fallen into the King's hands because he had 'died a bastard without lawful heirs'. He could be the same John who held the lands of Stouslie. He may be the John who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infesting David Scott of Branhholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. John (15th C.) listed in 1476 as being ‘of Phirth’, which could possibly be Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is among a number of Border Lairds involved in an action over lands in Linton Parish, registered with Parliament. He is probably the John ‘duellands in the Fithe’ who in 1479 was ordered (along with James Alemoor of that Ilk) to pay rentals of lands in Cavers Parish to Robert of ‘Murheid’. John (15th C.) son of Thomas of Phaup. He leased Phaup at least in the period 1483-7. He was listed as son and heir of Thomas ‘of Fawlishop’ in 1486 when he leased the lands of Huntly. John (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas of Greenwood to Robert Scott of Allanbaugh. It was signed at St. Mary’s Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as ‘Johanne Turnbull’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) recorded in 1490 when he was assigned the lands of ‘Corscleuch’ (i.e. Crosscleuch) by James IV. He may thus have been the first of the Turnbulls of Crosscleuch. John (15th C.) son of Robert in Wolfelee.

He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493. John (15th C.) tenant in Ruecastle, recorded in 1493. He had remission for stealing 6 oxen, 2 horses and 12 cows from tenants ‘de slittrik’ (i.e. on Slitrig Water). His surety was the Laird of Bedrule. Probably the same tenant in Ruecastle was fined in 1502 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire, when he was surety for himself. Additionally he was one of the 20 or so Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in 1502 to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; Thomas of Bedrule was fined for not entering him in the court. John of Gatehousecote (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire at Jedburgh in 1493. George of Bedrule had remission for several crimes, including assisting him in his ‘theft and treason’. Separately, George Waugh in Hawick was allowed to compone for resetting him when he was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of Archibald Rutherford. He was surely related to Thomas, who was also recorded in Gatehousecote at the same time. Perhaps the same John ‘in gaitous coit’ was recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while Andrew and William in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. John (15th C.) recorded being ‘in Hawick’ at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Along with Robert Scott in Todshawhaugh, he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of bringing in Englishmen and he was also charged with common theft. His surety was the Laird of Howpasley. John ‘de Newhalburn’ (15th C.) listed in the pardon granted by the King to Sir Thomas of Phaup in 1494. He may have been a son of Sir Thomas (perhaps the same son recorded in the 1480s); he and Robert of ‘Mudlaw’ are listed, with one of them being ‘suorum filiorum’ (his son), but it is unclear which one. His residence (transcribed as ‘Newhalby’ in Pitcairn’s book) may have been the Newhall Burn to the south-west of Traquair. John (15th C.) listed in the will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme being bequeathed 40 sheep. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John ‘Case’ (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his nickname there is given as ‘casy’. He is also recorded as ‘Johne Turnbule, callit Case, in Nethir Bonechestir’ in the accounts for the Jedburgh Justice Aire of 1494/5; he contributed 4 cows. He was probably related to the David of Bonchester recorded in 1502. John (15th C.) recorded as being in

Minto in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he ‘came in the King’s Will for treasonably concealing and Stouthreif of ten score pas-pennys pertaining to the King, found in the Kirk of Myuto’. His surety was the Laird of Bedrule. It is possible he is the same as John of Minto, who was recorded in the early 16th century. Perhaps the same man was recorded in 1498 as ‘Suer[?] Johannes turnbul’; along with William of Minto, Ralph Ker and others, he was part of a bond to act upon men who were already declared as fugitives. He may also be the John who was recorded as father-in-law to Robert Young in Minto, for who William of Minto served as surety in 1502. John (15th C.) resident of Bedrule, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He had remission for committing theft before the time of his previous remission and also for involvement with the Duke of Albany during the earlier revolt. John ‘Blind John’ (15th C.) recorded in 1495/5 as ‘Sande Turnbulis brothir of Ballentyn, callit blind Johne’ in the accounts of the Justice-aire of Jedburgh, when he contributed 2 cows (for the expenses of the court, presumably in lieu of a fine). This is probably Bellendean near Roberton, but other places may be possible. His brother was clearly Alexander. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1495/5 as resident of Dryden. He was allowed to compone for the crimes of communing with rebels who were at the horn, specifically Patrick and Gilbert. Probably the same John, son of Andrew of Dryden was recorded in 1494/5 among men who John Scott of Deloraine was allowed to compound for associating with; they were said to have stolen 60 sheep belonging to William Murray from Sundhope. In the Register of the Privy Seal in 1498 he is listed being ‘in Dridane’, presumably meaning he farmed at Dryden, near Teviothead. Along with John Scott from Northhouse, he received a pardon for his crimes of assisting the English. John (15th C.) son of Matthew in Hassendean. In 1494/5 he and his brother Nicholas had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains as surety. They are recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. John (15th/16th C.) name of 2 men listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, Ninian, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. John (15th/16th C.) son of Philip, probably the Laird of Whithope. He is mentioned in 1494/5 when the Laird of Bedrule acted as his surety and was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire. He was also recorded in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted, including Turnbuls of Fulton and Bonchester; his name is recorded as ‘Johannis Turnbull Philipson’. John ‘Blue John’ (15th/16th C.) one of the Turnbuls and others who were failing to appear in court in Jedburgh in 1502 to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Many of the others were from Rulewater, suggesting he was also. His nickname was recorded as ‘blew Johne’, and he was distinct from John in Ruecastle, John in Jedburgh and John in Wells, who were also listed. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Jedburgh in 1502 when he was among a large group of men who failed to appear to the charge of murder of Robert Oliver and were declared as fugitives. Mark Ker of Dolfinston was fined for his non-appearance. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant in Wells in 1502. Along with about 20 Turnbuls and others he failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Mark Ker of Dolfinston was called to enter him, and subsequently fined, while he was put to the horn and forfeited his goods; the Sheriff of Roxburgh served as his surety (unlike for most of the other men). He was probably related to Adam in Wells, who was also listed. John of Tofts (15th/16th C.) served as surety in 1502 for David, described as ‘in Toftis’, who was surely a close relative. David, along with Robert, called ‘Muriale’ had been involved in a raiding party that burned and stole livestock from Riddell. Probably the same John ‘in toftis’ is mentioned in 1493 when his son Cock had remission for theft of an ox from Minto. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. James Davidson ‘in camys’ (perhaps Camieston) was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘de france’ in 1502 at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh. The Master of Angus (George Douglas) was fined for failing to arrest him. It is unclear where ‘France’ was located. John of Minto (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as an associate of Peter in Bonchester. Along with his accomplices, they had burned grain belonging to George Rutherford at ‘Sandystans’. He may be the same as one of the 2 men called John ‘in Myuto’ who were listed on the 1516 pardon for Turnbuls who assisted Alexander, Lord Home; one of these men is stated to be a cousin of William of Minto. John (15th/16th C.) Abbot of Newbattle 1503–20. It is unclear how he might be related to other Turnbuls. John (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert as witness to a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) and Melrose Abbey. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant of Hornshole in 1516, on a long list of Turnbulls given remission for any role in helping the treasonous Homes. He was probably related to Thomas and Adam, recorded as tenants at Hornshole in 1501 and 1502, respectively John ‘Black Sow’ (d.1531) hanged for ‘Common Theft, outputting and inputting thereof’. There is no information about his relationship to other Turnbulls. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Bailie in that part’ along with Hector of Barnhills in a sasine in the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1531. John (16th C.) listed in 1531 as ‘tutor of the lord of Philliphaucht’ and grandson of Robert ‘Trummill’ when an acknowledgement was made in Selkirk for a tack being given to Mark Ker (Burgess of Selkirk) for 5 years for lands in Philliphaugh. John of Hassendeankirk (d.1540) recorded in a court case of 1540 involving a dispute between Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Rawfalt, with William Scott of Hassendeankirk, over a ‘wadset’ of his (as well as other issues) for the lands of ‘Nether Copit Rig’ and ‘Easter Mains, called Copit Rig’. His family appear to have held the lands of Hassendeankirk since 1409. John (16th C.) early example of a Turnbull not directly associated with the Borders. He was Deacon of the Guild of Wrights in Cupar, Fife. In 1554 he and others were imprisoned for leading the Craftsmen of Cupar in a revolt against their Provost and Bailies. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. John (16th C.) recorded in 1559 as Clerk of Minto Parish. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. It is possible that he is the same as ‘Johanne Trummill’, who acted as a witness for the inventory after the death of William Scott of Kirkurd in 1552. John of Philliphaugh (16th C.) recorded in 1558 when he was served heir to his mother Janet, in her 5-acre lands of Philliphaugh. He was also recorded as witness to the 1560 bond between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He is probably the ‘Lard of Philliphauhach’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He could have been son of Robert, who is recorded in the 1530s. John (16th C.) tenant farmer at Hallrule. His house and yard are referred to in the 1562 Baronial dispute over the lands of Feu-Rule. This could have been the same as John ‘in Roull’ recorded in 1583/4 along with George in Hallrule and Walter in Hobsburn, when Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had an ‘escheat’ to seize their goods for not vacating their lands. John of Hassendeankirk (16th C.) recorded in 1564 when he accused David Elliot (son of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill) of stealing 80 sheep from his lands of Hassendeankirk. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls of Hassendeankirk. John of Gatehousecote (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among the list of men accused of treason for assisting James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. Probably the same ‘Jok Turnbull in Gaithous Cott’ was listed in 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. John (16th C.) tenant in Abbotrule. In 1569 he was warded within the Sheriffdom of Perth, with his sureties being Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and Robert Kerr of Woodhead. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Deneside (16th C.) described as holding a peel house. He was probably a direct ancestor of Adam, who left Deneside in 1715. He may have been descended from Robert and David who were recorded in 1611. John of Howden (16th C.) recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Hallrule, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. He is surely related to the later John of Howden. John (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Bedrule 1576–78. George was Reader right after this, so it is possible that one of the names is an error. He also appears to have served as Reader at Abbotrule and Lessuden. It is possible that he was an ex-monk of Dryburgh Abbey. John (16th C.) nephew of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, with his father perhaps being Robert. He was listed in 1578/9 as ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’ when members of the family were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for the murder of Thomas Shiel. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Nether Bonchester. In 1581 he was listed among the 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. He could be the brother of David in Belses (with other brothers being Adam and George) accused of harassing the widow of Walter of Rawflat in 1583. John of Minto (16th/17th C.) possibly son of John. He may have been a minor when he succeeded, since Hector Turnbull ‘tutor of Minto’ is recorded in 1553/4 and in 1569. In 1571 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers, along with Sir Thomas and 2 Rutherfords. In 1571/2 he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the ‘Bond of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. He also served as surety in 1576. In 1576 he was listed among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill), who had a bond not to harm another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Bilerwell, Belses and Chester); however, there was a complaint a few months later that his ‘servand and dependar’ Walter in Firth attacked Patrick Bennet, servant to Adam of Belses. In about 1578 he signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls and another bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. In 1580 he was ordered, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule and Wat of Bewlie, to enter pledges into ward in Edinburgh Castle (which apparently he did) or be declared a rebel. He and Wat of Bewlie had a caution for £2000 that they would appear before the Privy Council, with William Redpath of Greenlaw as surety. Also in 1580 he was head of a group of Turnbulls of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobson who had a a bond to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. In 1581 he and Martin Elliot of Braidlie were caution for the re-entry of Hob Elliot of Braidlie, as pledge for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. In the same year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their riev- ing crimes and additionally among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. Also in 1581 he was accused of being head of a group of Turnbulls who came to the farm of Rawflat and there harassed the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull, then stole the cattle and goods from the farm. In 1583 the Kerrs of Ancrum paid surety for him not to harm Agnes, widow of Walter of Rawflat and her tenants and servants; the document was signed for him, because he could not write. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. And he is recorded in 1584/5 as the first name on a list of Turnbulls, Douglasses and others who were to appear before the Privy Council ‘concerning their obedience to his Majestie and quieting of the countrie’. He is also listed about 1590 among landed men of the Borders and in 1591 when he was among the Barons who pledged their support for the King against the Earl of Bothwell. He is also recorded in 1595 when he was one of the main signatories of a letter of assurance for the behaviour of the Turnbulls descended from the house of Minto; this included the Turnbulls of Hallrule, Barnhills, Gatehousecote and ‘David Daviesoun of the Cambes’. In 1599 he served as cautioner for entering the Lorraines who were accused of the murder of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope. His name is recorded in 1603 on a long list of local landowners whom the Baron of Haseenden (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencarn) was trying to remove. In 1603 his son Thomas was served heir to his lands in Minto (suggesting he was deceased by then). John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) nephew of George of Belses. In 1603 he was recorded as ‘Jok Trumbill in Belis’ when his un- cle George was convicted of ‘the filthie cryme of Incest and Adulterie’ with his wife Marion. John (16th/17th C.) from Braidhaugh. He is recorded in 1601 among a group of Turnbulls and Lor- raines accused by Englishman Gray of Morpeth of stealing from him. William ‘of Brodehaughe’ is listed after him and so presumably his brother or son. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Macks- side. He is recorded in 1601 when he was ac- cused by Mr. Gray of Morpeth of being part of a group of Scotsmen of stealing from him. The oth- ers were Lorraines of Appotside and Turnbulls of Braithwaugh. He is also recorded as ‘in Maksyd’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear at court in Edinburgh. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Tempilhall’ in 1604 when he was ‘Bailie in that part’ for James Sandilands, Baron of Feu- Rule. In 1605 he was one of the people asked to remove themselves from the lands of Temple- hall and Brewlans. Another John, also tenant at Templehall or Breвлands, is also mentione in the same action. John of Barnhills (d.c.1628) eldest son of Hector of Barnhills. He had a marriage contract of 1597 with Isobel, daughter of George Turnbull of Hallrule. This was followed by a grant of the half lands of Hallrule in 1603, when he was still a minor. He had a charter for the lands of Barnhills in 1607, and a charter of confirmation in 1618. In 1609 he and his father Hector were part of an action brought by David, son of John Scott ‘of the Tour in Hawick’, for not paying what they had borrowed from him. In 1613 he sold ‘10 acres of Easter Barnhills’ to Ragwell Bennet. In 1617 there was a ‘renunciation’ to him from James and George Scott (which branch of the Scotts is unclear). He had a ‘wadset’ with Gilbert Elliott (both elder and younger) of Stobs in 1617, and some kind of financial arrangement with Ragwell Bennet in 1618. His brother William in Langraw succeeded to the lands of Barnhills in 1628. John (16th/17th C.) one of the Turnbulls who were accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Trumbill, sone to Hector of Wauchope’. His brothers included George (also accused in this trial), Thomas (who succeeded to Wauchope) and probably David (who was originally the heir). He was acquitted, although his brother Thomas was found guilty. John (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and grandson of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He married Judith Forster, probably in the 1590s. John (17th C.) son of George in Philiphaugh. In 1601 he was served heir to his father’s 5-merk land there, called ‘Bairborisland’. He could be the same man as John of Philiphaugh, who was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was in turn succeeded by his son William in 1606. John of Howden (17th C.) member of the ‘assyse’ in Dumfries in 1622 and 1623. He could be the Turnbull of Howden who held half the lands of Philiphaugh in the early 1600s, succeeding his father George in the 5-merk land there, called ‘Bairborisland’. He could be the same man as John of Philiphaugh, who was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was in turn succeeded by his son William in 1606. John of Howden (17th C.) half-brother of Walter Scott of Woll, described as ‘apparent of Harden’ in 1608 (even although there had not been any ‘Turnbull Lairds of Harden for a century). Along with John Scott (brother of Walter of Woll) he attacked some of the citizens of Selkirk, and when apprehended by the Selkirk Bailies the pair were forcibly taken from imprisonment by a gang of Scots and Turnbulls. They were then ordered to appear in Edinburgh or be declared rebels. John (16th/17th C.) part of a group of Scots and their followers who forcibly released 2 of their kin from the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. He is listed as ‘apparent of Hundley’ (presumably Huntly). His brothers Robert and Andrew were also involved. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Elscheuch’ recorded in 1612, this probably being Elfhaugh. Along with Andrew in Boscroster, and Andrew’s sons Thomas and John, he complained to the Privy Council that John, Lord Ker of Jedburgh, had unfairly imprisoned them, and they were ordered to be released. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish in 1619 when he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear in court along with several other Turnbulls. Their crime was taking wood from the Laird of Traquair’s land at Huntliehill. William was also tenant there, and so presumably a relative. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Newton’ (possibly the one in Bedrule Parish) when he acted as caution (along Gilbert, son to Gavin Elliot of Brugh and 3 men from Headshaw) in 1623 for Mungo Scott from Castleside. Perhaps the same John was ‘in Bedrule’ in 1643 when his lands were valued at £34. John of Minto (d.1641) possibly son of Thomas. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. His sons William and Robert became merchants’ apprentices in Edinburgh in 1650 and 1651, respectively. His son John succeeded while still a minor. He died while on army service in Newcastle, this fact convincing his superior to allow his son to marry before he was of age. He is probably the John of Minto whose daughter Alison married William Douglas of Timpendale in 1655. John of Minto (b.1620s) son of John and Elizabeth Elliott. He was brother of William and Robert. He married Rachel Inglis in 1641, even although he was technically too young; this was because his father had died while in military service (and also through the help of his uncle William Turnbull, minister of Makerston). In the 1643 Land Tax Rolls he was owner of the main part of Minto, along with ‘Mr. William Turnbull’ (his uncle) and Elizabeth Elliot (his mother), valued at £2006 13s 4d. He was also listed as holding the ‘Minister of Makerston’s Lands, being Hornshole’, valued at £100. He is probably the John who was in 1655 served heir to his father John of Minto in 1/3 of the lands and Barony of Minto, including a half merk of land in Minto, with advowson of the church, ‘2 parts of the said lands undispos’d’. At the same time he also inherited 1 merkland of Hornshole. It is unclear what his relationship was with John of Knowe, but it seems easy to mix them up; in 1655 he received from John of Knowe his third of the rent of Hyndlee... and Rouchhope and in 1565 rented Minto Craig to him (definitively proving they were not one and the same man). In 1657 he was the heritable proprietor of the lands of Hornshole when he had a ‘wadset’ for them with John Scott of Brieryyards, with the consent of William Turnbull, minister of Makerston. He appears to have owned part of Standhill in 1660 and could be the John in Standhill recorded in the 1643, 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls. Payments to Lord Lyon in 1662 suggest this is when the family matriculated their arms. He was renewed as a Roxburghshire J.P. in 1663. He had one child, also John, and father and son are also easy to confuse. It was probably his son John who sold off the Minto estate. John (17th C.) described as ‘indweller in Machsyde’ when he was witness to a sasine in Rulewater in 1653. John of Minto (d.1684) son of John. He was involved in a bond with John Turnbull of Knowe, partly paid off in 1668. He was probably the John, recorded along with William in James Wilson’s list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was probably also the same John of Minto who was later married to Rachel, daughter of Cornelius Ingles of ‘Eastbarnes’ (she is recorded as his wife in 1681). In 1672 he had a charter of the Barony of Minto, which was ratified in 1681. In 1673 they were involved in a land deal with Walter Scott of Harwood, selling off the Minto estate, and ending its connection with his family, which had lasted many generations. He also sold about a third of the lands of Minto to Gilbert Elliot of Craigend (who was probably his maternal uncle, and not the same man as Sir Gilbert Elliot, who would unite them into the Barony of Minto in 1706). It seems likely that he was forced to sell off his lands to clear debts (but it may be that the arrangements in the 1670s were only wadsets, and he lost the lands for good in the 1690s). In 1674 he became a Burgess of Edinburgh in right of his wife Rachel (so her father must have been a Burgess too). His wife is recorded recovering the ‘wadset’ with the Earl of Tarras over lands in the Barony of Minto in the period 1682–94. This must be the same John of Minto described as deceased in 1684 when his son John was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh in his right. He had unnamed children buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1670 and 1674. John of Langshaw (17th C.) appointed one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire (along with Harry McDougall of Makerston) in 1665. John of Knowe (d.1675/6) probably eldest son and successor as Laird to Thomas. In 1652 his brother William was appointed as tutor to the children of their relative Thomas in ‘Chesterhouse’ (probably Chesterhall near Ancrum). He appears to have rented Hyndlee and Rouchhope (along with other farmers) from John of Minto in 1655, and he rented Minto Craig from John of Minto in 1656. In 1655 he is recorded in a ‘tack’ with Thomas Turnbull, farmer at Hassendeanbank, and in 1657 in an ‘inhibition’ against Robert Turnbull, son of a Jedburgh merchant. In a discharge of 1658 he is listed along with other Turnbells, suggesting that he was son of Thomas and brother of William. He is recorded in a bond with James Scott in 1658. He was fined £2,000 in 1662, after the Restoration. He was recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, paying £227. He was on a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666, and he complained against the planned division of that parish in the same year. In 1668 he is mentioned as cautioner for John of Minto (making it clear that they were not the same person, although their relationship is unclear). It was established in 1670 that he owned the burial place within the bellhouse of Hassendean Kirk. His wife Agnes Liddell died in 1648. He was probably succeeded by another John, who may have been the John (son of John) who became an apprentice surgeon with Walter Turnbull in Edinburgh in 1675. His daughter Helen married Thomas Turnbull of Tofts in 1669. In 1678 Grizel (sister of Thomas of Knowe), who married Adam Scott of Burnhead, was probably his daughter. His children John, Alexander and Isobel are recorded in 1679 receiving money from his estate. Two wills (one dated 1661, while he was still alive, and another in 1676, possibly after he died) are among the papers of the Horsburgh family in the National Archives. His death is recorded on a table tomb in the old Minto graveyard, along with Thomas of Knowe (d.1646). John of Firth (17th C.) recorded receiving land from Walter Riddell in 1645. He paid tax on £200 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1664. In 1675 he led a ‘poinding’ against Bessie Murray, widow of James ‘Bucholme’. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Lilliesleaf Parish for his lands of Firth. John (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically his ‘quarter wanted ane drop’. It is unclear if he was from Hawick or elsewhere, but he must have been a trader at the market in Hawick. He may be the merchant John recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Cavers. He is recorded in 1684 when his former servant James Johnston was among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included George (b.1680). John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Rutherford and their children included Agnes (b.1682). John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Fowler and their children included William (b.1679), Margaret (b.1681) and John (b.1683). The witnesses in 1681 were James Todshaw and John Armstrong. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Agnes Brown and their children included William (b.1683), Thomas (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Thomas Henderson and Andrew Rodger. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Margaret Dodds and their children included Robert (b.1686) and Patrick (b.1688). The witnesses in 1686 were Patrick Dodds (who was surely related to his wife) and Thomas Robson and in 1688 were Patrick and John Dodds. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1687. John (17th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. His wife was Margaret Turnbull and their children included Agnes (b.1671). The baptism witnesses were John Scott and John Aitkin. In 1684 he was listed among many people declared fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Aitken and their children included John (b.1689). The witnesses in 1689 were George Johnstone and Andrew Fletcher. John (17th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. He was fined in 1689 for his ‘exhorbitant’ marriage with Christian Scott. He may be the same man as the John declared a fugitive in 1684. He was ‘John Trumble, candlemaker’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693. He was also listed as a candlemaker on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. John (17th C.) servitor of Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge who is recorded as witness to a bond of 1691 and again in 1693. Possibly the same John is described in 1694 as servitor of ‘Mr Harie Mauld of Kellie’ in another document relating to a bond of 1691 with Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge and Gavin Elliott, his uncle. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton, and ‘The malt kilne’ is listed after him, suggesting he may have been maltman at Newton. John (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) carrier at Tofts according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in West Middle on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the later John in West Middle. John (17th C.) tenant in Fodderlee according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in Minto Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Horsleyhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed ‘in Hawick’ when his wife’s will was recorded in 1690. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Knowe (17th/18th C.) probably succeeded John. He may have been the John who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1675. He is recorded in 1689 bringing an action against Rev. Francis Scott, after he had been removed by the Privy Council. John of Minto (17th/18th C.) son of John and Elisabeth Elliott of Stobs. He sold the Minto estate in 1703 to his cousin, Sir Gilbert Elliot of Headshaw, ancestor of the Earls of Minto; it is also stated that he sold it to Walter Scott of Hawwood in 1673, but perhaps this was a wadset only. His connection with the other Turnbuls (of Minto and/or Knowe) seems unclear, but he was probably the John (described as a merchant) who became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in right of his father in 1684. It may have been his son Patrick who became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1704, in right of his deceased father (in which case he died about 1703). John (17th/18th C.) cooper of Hawick, brother of Michael and Robert, who were also cooperers. All 3 brothers were involved in a case before the Bailies in 1678. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed as cooper on the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1700

he was a witness for a baptism for flesher Robert Renwick. He was a cooper in 1709 when one of his children was baptised and when he witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He was an elder of the Kirk, and in 1717 charged with collecting money 'from ye foot of ye play la to the west end of ye toum', suggesting he lived in this area perhaps. He was still an elder in 1718. He was recorded as a cooper in 1699 when his son Andrew was baptised, with witnesses shoemakers Robert and George Oliver. It seems likely he was father of the cooper John who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1710; if so his wife may have been Agnes Moffat and other children were James (b.1684) and Elspeth (b.1688). He married Helen 'Junk' in 1706 and had children including: James (b.1707); Michael (b.1709); Isobel (b.1712); Helen (b.1714); Mary (b.1716); and John (b.1719). The witnesses in 1709 and 1712 were cooper Michael and weaver Robert (his brothers) and in 1716 were 'Mr' Robert Douglas and mason John Napier. John (17th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was separate from the contemporary cooper of the same name. John (17th/18th C.) listed as 'oye to Mr James Ker Sometimes Minister att Abbotroule' in 1704 when his son Thomas was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Bailie George Martin and Patrick McLellan. He was presumably either nephew or grandson of James Ker, but the precise relationship is unclear. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was shepherd in Whitchesters in 1710. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Malie (b.1710); and Agnes (b.1712). The witnesses in 1710 were Walter Nixon and Henry Orrock. John (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Boonraw in 1708 and 1711 when his sons William and Archibald were baptised in Wilton Parish. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Wester Groundstone in 1721 and 1725. His wife was Janet Colvin and their children included: Janet (b.1717); John (b.1718); Marion (b.1721); Andrew (b.1723); and Agnes (b.1725). The witnesses in 1721 were George and Richard Scott and in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. John (17th/18th C.) mason of Hawick. He is probably the mason who in 1706 (along with mason John Napier) witnessed a baptism for mason Peter Mitchell and in 1711 (along with mason Nichol Turnbull) witnessed a baptism for mason Peter Mitchell. In 1717, along with John the cooper, he was ordered to collect monies from the west end of the Town, suggesting he may have lived there. It is possible he was related to the other John. In 1720 he (and mason Andrew) witnessed a baptism for Andrew Colwart. He was still an elder in 1722. In 1725, along with Andrew (also a mason), he witnessed a baptism for smith William Young. Probably the same mason John had a child called Nichol in Hawick in 1709, the mother being Jean Dunlap (labelled 'fornicat.'). In 1721 he was recorded as a mason when he witnessed a baptism (along with Andrew) for shoemaker Andrew Scott and Janet Turnbull (who may have been related); the same 2 men were also witnesses in 1726. John (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1710 he was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet. He was probably son of an earlier cooper of the same family; he may be the John born to John and Agnes Moffat in Hawick in 1686. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Mossbrae in 1718 when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Other children, baptised in Robertson Parish, who may be his (although some are probably children of John at Roberton) include: Michael (b.1703); Margaret (b.1707); Isobel (b.1709); Mary (b.1709); William (b.1712); Janet (b.1713); Margaret (b.1715); and James (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Roberton itself in 1718, and was distinct from the John who was at Mossbrae. His children included Janet (b.1718). He may be the John who married Janet Little in 1705. John (17th/18th C.) described as 'servitor to Walter Elliott, bailie-deput of the regaility of Hawick' in 1718 when he was rebuked for having a horse race with Thomas Porteous on the Common Haugh on a Sunday. John (17th/18th C.) mason in Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. His son James was baptised in 1721. James (b.1724), Margaret (b.1728) and Anne (b.1732), also baptised in Kirkton, may also have been his children. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick man who was paid in 1721 for gilding the hands of the Kirk clock. He may thus have been a clockmaker or other tradesman. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at West Middle in 1723 when his son John was baptised. He is probably related to the earlier John in West Middle. John (1712/3–87) tenant in Mackside. His family were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard (although he appears to also be referred to there as Thomas). His wife Isabel died in 1756, aged 41. Their children included Betty, James and Thomas (who probably carried on as tenant of Mackside), as well as William, Mary, Elspeth and Margaret, who died in infancy. John (18th C.) resident of Parkhill recorded in 1725, 1728, 1733 and 1743 when children of his were baptised. He may have been brother of Walter who also had children baptised at Parkhill around the same time. They could both be descended from James who was at Parkhill a couple of decades earlier. His children included: Robert (b.1725); Margaret (b.1728); Janet (b.1733); and Robert (again, b.1743). Several other children baptised in Roberton could also be his. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Timbersidemill in 1747. He married Margaret Easton in 1737 and their children included: Mary (b.1738); James (b.1741); William (b.1743); Thomas (b.1747); John (b.1749); Helen (b.1752); and Robert (b.1755). The witnesses in 1747 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. John (18th C.) tanner in Hawick. He paid the tax for 15 windows in Hawick in 1748. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. John (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for weaver George, who was probably related to him. John (1723–81) son of William, he was born at Whitrig in Kirkton Parish. Around 1744 he was schoolmaster at Kirkton School, also serving as Session Clerk. That year he married Isabel Scott in Wilton. By 1750 he was at Ewes, where he was also Session Clerk. He married Bridget Monet in Hawick in 1759. His children (with his 1st wife) were: William; Betty; and John. With his 2nd wife he had at least one child: Janet. He died in Hawick. John of Wester Swanshiel (b.1729–1820/1) son of Walter, whom he succeeded in 1750 (note there is some confusion here, since Walter Deans says he was son of James). In 1778 he sold Wester Swanshiel to Cornelius Elliot of Woollee, in order to lease a bigger farm (although he is recorded as still being the owner in 1788, so perhaps the sale had not gone through yet). This ended an association of those lands with his family for perhaps 300 years. In 1780 he occupied the farm of Berryfell and also rented Howashiel. He was a major heritor of Hobkirk Parish along with Henry Elliot of Harwood and Thomas Scott of Stonedoge. He is recorded as farmer at Berryfell on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls and on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He later farmed at Whitehill Brae, where he died. He married Esther Douglas, a relative of Douglas of Trows. Their children were: Janet; Walter, who used to write songs and sonnets, entered the army, moved to England and had a single daughter; Esther; John, who was tenant at Brieryhill and later Minto Kames; Robert, who purchased Galalaw; Betty; and James, tenant farmer at Galalaw. The combined age of he and his wife on their Hobkirk tombstone is 184 (he being 91 and his wife 93). His descendants included Mr. Turnbull of 2 Tower Knowe in the early 1900s. John (d.1772) mason in Minto. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. John (18th C.) cooper in Hawick, probably related to the earlier cooper of the same name. He married Christian Veitch and their children included Agnes (b.1756) and Elizabeth (b.1760). John ‘Garleek Jock’ (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1762. Later that year he married Margaret Storie (who died in 1806), the couple being rebuked for their ‘irregular marriage’. Their children included: William (b.1763); Robert (b.1763); Elizabeth (b.1766); and Margaret (1770–1808), who died in Hawick. The 1766 witnesses were Robert Turnbull and Thomas Pringle. He is recorded as ‘garlic jock’ when his wife died. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (1743/4–1816) probably son of Thomas. He was tenant farmer at Mackside. He is recorded there on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Mackside in the same year. He married Ann Common, and she died in 1803, aged 41. They had a daughter who died in infancy. The family are recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard (although some of the names and generations may be confused). John (b.c.1745) farm worker at Stonedge. By his first wife he had sons William (a forester in Jed-forest) and James (farm worker at Unthank, who died at Midburn). He secondly married Christian Grieve, and their children were: Robert, shepherd at Philiphaugh and elsewhere; Kate, who married and moved to London; Margaret, who married George Henderson, weaver at Kihowe and was great-grandmother of Euphemia Henderson who lived at Weens Lodge; Mary, second wife of Adam Turnbull, farmer at Midburn; and Jane, who married Andrew Turnbull, gardener at Weens. John ‘Meldrum’ (18th C.) recorded in 1787 when his daughter Lizzy died in Hawick. He is surely related to James, ‘Auld Meldrum’, who died in 1781. James ‘Auld Meldrum’ (d.1781) recorded in the list of deaths in Hawick. He may be the same man as one of the other Jameses. He was surely related to John, who was also recorded as ‘Meldrum’ in 1787 when his daughter Lizzy died. John (18th C.) groom at Braxzholme in 1785–88, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch. He was listed as house servant at Braxzholme in 1791. In 1794 possibly the same John was gamekeeper at Stobs for Sir William Elliott. However, in 1797 he was a house servant at Braxzholme again. John (1762/3–1841) weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Howegate with his brother James, who was also a weaver. He is buried in St. Mary’s along with his siblings Robert, James and Janet. John (b. bef. 1770) served as an officer in Stuart’s Regiment of the Scots Brigade in Holland before turning to medicine. He was apprenticed to Benjamin Bell in Edinburgh and studied at Edinburgh University, receiving the Diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1793. He practised at Belford, Northumberland and then in Hawick. He received his M.A. and M.D. from St. Andrews University in 1796. John (d. bef. 1816) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Scott in 1773 and she died in Hawick in 1816. Their children included: John (b.1774); Margaret (b.1776); Christy (b.1778); William (b.1785); Margaret (again, b.1787); and Robert (b.1788). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott and Catherine TT in 1797. He is separately listed as servant at Cavers in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for George Douglas. It may just be a coincidence that there was a servant with the same name earlier at Braxzholme and at the same time at Stobs. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Robertson and Wilton Parishes. He was living at Harden in 1787, 1789 and 1794 and at Langlands Dean in 1797. He married Isobel Gray in 1786 and their children included: John (b.1787); Thomas (b.1789); Isobel (b.1792); Walter (b.1794); William (b.1797); and William (again, b.1800). John (18th/19th C.) said to be son of Robert, who was farmer at Hallrule Mill. A story is recounted by Walter Deans in 1887, who said that he was ‘imbued with the ancient spirit and dar-draper or grocer recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John (b.c.1780) mason in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He probably lived on Main Street in 1841. His wife’s name was Elizabeth. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. John (b.c.1780) joiner on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1836 electoral roll he was listed as joint proprietor with John junior. He is probably the ‘John & Son’ listed as joiner on the Round Close in 1837. His wife was Margaret. He is probably the John recorded along with his wife Margaret as a joiner on the 1841 census, around 10 High Street. John (b.1780/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was a servant at Stirches. He was listed as servant at Stirches among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was footman at Stirches House on the 1851 census. His wife was Isabella and they had a daughter, Ann. John (b.1780/1) stocking-maker in Wilton Parish. He was listed as stocking-maker at Crawhill Park among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was also an elder in Wilton Kirk. His wife was Janet and their children included Isabella and George. In 1851 the family were living on Wilton Place. John (b.c.1784/5) agricultural labourer, both in Southdean Parish. He was living at Todshawhaugh Cottages in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Beatrict and their children included Robert, Janet and John. John (b.1786/7) shepherd at Burngrove in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Isabella. John (1787–1857) 2nd son of James, who farmed at Ruecastle. In 1811 he became tenant farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He was recorded at Spittal in 1841 and 1851. He is probably the ‘Mr. Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule’ who was said to take a keen interest in the Scelnty Schuil. In 1827 in Wilton Parish he married Isabella Lockie. Their children included: Janet (b.1820); Helen Rutherford (b.1822); James (b.1823), who took over the tenancy of Spittal; Mary (b.1825) and Isabella A.G. (b.1830). He secondly married Ann Euphemia Burnett (from Edinburgh) and further children included: John Rutherford (b.1838); Margaret Catherine (b.1840); Elizabeth Rutherford (b.1842); William George (b.1844); Alexander Jamieson (b.1846); Agnes R. (b.1847); Walter Douglas (b.1849); Anne Euphemia (b.1851); and Jessie Catherine (b.1856). Ann is recorded as ‘Late Farmer’s Widow’ in the 1861 census. John (b.c.1787/8) eldest son of John, farmer at Brieryhill and Minto Kames. He carried on the tenancy of Minto Kames when his father retired. He married Esther Turnbull. His children included John, Isabel, Thomas, James, Agnes, Robert (who became a solicitor) and Walter (a stone mason). In 1851 he is listed as retired and living at Newton in Wilton Parish with his wife Esther and children Margaret, Robert, Walter, Esther and Mary, plus his brother Thomas. In 1861 he was at Wilton Dean. He retired from farming and lived to the age of 88. John (1788–1849) son of Thomas (‘Bailie Tammy’) and Margaret Darling. He may also have been a Bailie. He was a dyer on the Crescent, carrying on some of his father’s business and founding the company John Turnbull & Son, Slitrig Dyeworks in 1819. He is recorded as dyer in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and as a dyer and carpet manufacturer in the 1837 directory. He maintained the Baptists within Hawick after the death of their local leader William Thorburn; he helped the congregation acquire a room for worship on the ground floor of 8 Allars Crescent. He married Isabella Rutherford in Jedburgh in 1831. His children were: Thomas (b.1833); Alexander (b.1835); John D. (b.1838); Catherine (b.1840); and Margaret Darling (b.1842/3), who married Thomas Bell, and whose daughter Isabella R. was the first person baptised in the new Baptist Kirk on Bourtree Place. In 1841 he was living on the Crescent with his wife Isabell and 4 children, but by 1851 his wife was a widow there. He is probably the John, dyer on the Crescent listed in Slater’s 1852 directory, even although he was deceased by then (since the firm continued). A portrait of him exists. John (b.c.1795) born in Minto Parish, he was a seedsman and spirit dealer on Allars Bank. In 1851 he was living at Allars Bank and listed as a farmer of 130 acres (employing 5 labourers) and a nursery and seedsman (employing 42 people). In 1861 he was at the corner of Bourtree Place and North Bridge Street and listed as ‘Nursery & Seedsman’. His wife was Violet H. Thorburn, and their children included: George (b.1820); Euphemia; Jessie; William; John; Isabella (b.1830); and James (b.c.1838), who worked in the nursery business. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer. By 1861 he had moved to the east side of Bridge Street. John (1796–1875) youngest son of William of Burnfoot and Eleanor Stephenson. He succeeded his father as farmer at Burnfoot and West Buccleuch. He also carried on his father’s reputation as a breeder of short-horn cattle at Burnfoot. In his younger days he was a keen follower of the Buccleuch Hunt. He was probably the John listed at Burnfoot among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is listed as farmer at Burnfoot in 1835–41, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He is recorded in 1851 and 1861 as farmer of 200 acres, employing 9 labourers and was still farmer at Burnfoot in 1868. He married Mary Kilner Anderson, who was from Huddersfield. Their children included: William (b.1833); Betsy Anderson (b.1836); Eleanor Stephenson (b.1833); Thomas Anderson (b.1839); and Mary (b.1841). His last 20 years were spent in failing health, and he was seldom seen in public. He died at Burnfoot. John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included Robert (b.1826) and George (b.1830). John (b.1803) youngest of 7 sons of James and Betty Adamson, he was born at Hobkirk Kirkstile. He had brothers who were schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He became a grocer in Newcastleton. He was listed as a grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the carter in Newcastleton listed as male head of his family in 1835. In 1824 he married Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’), daughter of George Scott, shepherd at Lodgegill. They had a family of 10: James (1825–78), grocer in Hawick; George (1826–86), who died in Edinburgh and had a daughter Elizabeth Lawrie who was also a teacher: Elizabeth (b.1828), who married Jedburgh baker W. Hollands; Thomas (1830–60), who died at Morebattle, and had a son Dr. Adam Robert, who was medical superintendent at the Fife and Kinross Lunatic Asylum; Robert (1832–64), who died unmarried at Saratoga Springs, U.S.A.; William (b.1834), who died in infancy; William again, who also died (d.1836); William Elliot (1838–68), clerk at Register House; Walter Hall (b.1831) provision merchant in Edinburgh; and Margaret (b.1842), married Linlithgow paper merchant John Lovell. He is buried with his wife at Rosebank cemetery in Edinburgh. John (1807–c.49) son of John and Margaret Murray, he was born in Hawick Parish. In 1833 he married Helen (1808–98), daughter of William Laidlaw and Helen Douglas. In 1841 he was a joiner living on the Round Close, but emigrated soon afterwards, settling in Galt, Ontario. His children (the first 3 born in Hawick) were: John (b.1835); William (b.1836); Helen (b.1841); and Thomas (b.1850). John Robson (1807–66) youngest son of Adam, farmer at Hassendeanbank, and Betty Scott, from Skelfhill. He attended Minto School and Edinburgh University and became an architect. He was Master of Works at Windsor Castle in the period 1845–66. He married Ann Oliver from Middlesex and they had 5 children. He is buried at Windsor Castle. John (b.1808) son of Alexander and Jean Scott. He was a joiner and innkeeper in Denholm. He is probably the joiner recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was proprietor of the Cross Keys on Main Street. In 1851 he was living with his mother Jane, who was postmistress, his sister Jane and his nephew John. In 1861 he was with his sister Jean and cousin Agnes Scott. John (19th C.) educated in Selkirk, he became schoolmaster at Millburn (otherwise known as Hermitage) in Castleton Parish in 1838. It seems unlikely that he was there for long. John (b.c.1810) joiner in Hawick, listed at the Round Close in 1841. He is probably son of John, who was also a joiner, and was part of the ‘John & Son’ listed as joiners on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His wife was Helen, and their children included John, William and Helen. John (19th C.) farmer at East Middle, probably son of Thomas. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. John (19th C.) son of Robert. He was a grocer to trade, with his shop at Bonchester Bridge. In 1835 he became the first postmaster of the Rule valley, however he died not long afterwards and was succeeded by his sister Betty. John (19th C.) resident of Appletreehall. In 1863 he donated a Roman bronze fibula to the Museum. It is possible this was the ‘fibula, made apparently either of jet or cannel coal and bearing a fine polish’ found on the borders of Hawick Parish and described in 1839. John (b.1803/4) shepherd and agricultural labourer in Florida in Liddesdale. He was listed there among heads of households in Castleton in 1836–41. The 80 year-old James who lived with him in 1841 was probably his father. By 1851 and 1861 he was a shepherd and he is recorded as farmer at Florida in 1868. His wife was Jane, and their children included James, Janet, Walter, Elizabeth, John, William and Andrew. John (c.1818–c.1905) 2nd son of Adam and great-grandson of Adam of Deneside, he was born at Old Fodderlee. He married Jane, daughter of William Nichol, farmer at Newlands, Minto, and she died in 1896. He later lived in the Back Row, Selkirk. He had 2 sons and 3 daughters. John (19th C.) coachman at Weens estate. He married Helen, daughter of Walter Amos. Their son Walter Amos was carpenter at Bonchester Bridge and married his cousin Janet

Kerr Amos in 1881. John (1825/6–75) eldest son of Alexander, who was forester at Cavers. He married Helen, daughter of James Stoddart, shepherd at Falahill. Their family consisted of 6 sons (including Alexander, servant at Wolfelee) and 5 daughters. He died at Westerhouses. John (19th C.) mason in Denholm. In 1863 he donated an old coin to the Museum. John (19th C.) son of Thomas, who was shepherd on Templehall. He married Agnes, daughter of shepherd Robert Telfer. Among their children was John, who was shepherd at several farms in Rulewater. John (19th C.) eldest son of John, farmer at Minto Kames. Along with his brother Thomas he went out to Australia when gold was discovered near Melbourne in the 1850s. He returned to Hawick and married Mary, sister of builder Adam Scott in 1866. He farmed at Priestrig. His children were John, Thomas, Christina (who married Rev. John Stevenson of Bedrule) and Esther (who kept house for her 2 brothers at Bonchester). John (19th C.) Race Judge at the Common Riding in the 1840s. John (b.1826/7) shepherd in Rulewater, son of John and grandson of Thomas who was shepherd on Templehall farm. He was born in Hawick Parish and was related to the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel and also coachman John. He worked for Henry Elliot, senior and junior, then at Town-o-Rule, Westerhouses and finally Weens East Lodge. In 1861 he was shepherd at Westerhouses. He married Margaret Elliot from Newcastleton. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Janet, who was laundrymaid at Weens; Isabella; Agnes; John; Elizabeth; and Thomas. John (b.1828) son of tobacconist William, he was a baker in Hawick. In 1851 he and his father were both living at about 3 Howegate, and he was employing 2 men in his baker’s business. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed on the Howegate. John Struthers (b.1829) son of weaver William. He was a bank accountant, working in Jedburgh by the time of the 1861 census. His wife was Janet and their children included Ellen L., William and John W. (who was with Thomas Purdom & Sons). John (d.1891) related to the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel. He took over driving the Hawick to Carlisle coach from Sandy Elder for the last few years that it operated. He later farms at Wiltonburn along with his brother William. John Anderson (19th C.) solicitor in Hawick. He was one of the members of the first committee of Hawick Golf Club in 1878, and was later Club Captain. He was also one of the founder members of the Hawick Billiards Club. John (19th C.) clerk at William Watson & Sons, he was an influential early member of the Hawick R.F.C. committee. John (19th/20th C.) wine merchant at 51 High Street. He was probably son of the founder of the grocery and wine store. John A. (19th C.) draper on the Howegate. He was later a tobacconist. His daughter Amy married her cousin James Turnbull, farmer at Galaigh. John (1836–1915) from the family of Bedrule, he was born in Jedburgh, where he worked at the Procurator Fiscal’s Office before becoming the first accountant of the Hawick Branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland. After holding this position for 15 years he moved to the Gala branch where he was appointed Agent in 1902 and retired in 1909. He was also actuary for the Gala branch of the Trustee Savings Bank for almost 40 years. He married Isabella Ewen Turnbull (1834–1917) and their children were James Brydon, John William, Gilbert Kilpatrick, Helen, Robert John (killed on a train in the U.S.A.), Douglas (of the Imperial Yeomanry, died at Pretoria), George Hector (died in Nashville, Tennessee) and E.J. (of Dayton, Ohio). John (1838–1910) son of John and grandson of ‘Bailie Tammy’. He worked in the family dyers business. He lived at Kirkton House, which in 1901 had 9 rooms and 2 servants. He married Sarah Hall, who was from England. Their children included: Sarah Thompson (1862–78); John D. (b.1865); and Williamina Thompson (b.1869), who married James Boyd Sime. John (b.1859) son of grocer James and Annie Robson. In 1889 he married Mary Stewart at Ilkley. Their children were James Stewart; Charles Stewart; Isabella Young Firth; Donald MacLeod Victor; Frederick William Barrie; and Douglas Elliot Scott. John Turnbull (b.1868) son of John, farmer at Priestrig and Mary Scott. He was born in Wilton Parish. He became joint tenant at Bonchester with his brother Thomas. John Weir (b.1870) clothier in Denholm, son of clothier and tailor James. He was educated in Denholm until the age of 16, acting as pupil-teacher there. He was an apprentice with his father until 1890 then worked in Glasgow for 2 years, returning to Denholm to join his father in ‘R. Turnbull & Son’, later becoming the sole partner. He acted as local Registrar in Denholm and lived at Rosebank. In 1895 he married his cousin Isabella MacDonald; she was daughter of Jessie Scott, daughter of Robert Scott, farmer at Todlaw. John (19th/20th C.) cashier with Wilson & Armstrong at Weensland Mills. He later became a partner in Turnbull Turnbull & Hodgson, coal merchants, then had his own coal business and finally was involved with Teviot Tweed Co. He married Barbara Scott Davidson, daughter of James. John (19th/20th C.) became Managing Director of Pringle's in 1929, following J. Boyd Sime’s resignation. He himself resigned in 1933, to be replaced by Arthur Oddy and Wullie Mactaggart. John Fisher ‘Guttie’ or ‘Gutty’ (1932–82) local grocery merchant and Town Councillor, husband of Myra. He served an apprenticeship with Wilson & Glenny before taking over the family business in 1954, based at 51 High Street. He revived the Turnbull clan in 1977, after effectively being dormant for centuries. His business also sold a blended whisky called ‘Teviotdale’. He was a Town Councillor for 11 years, starting in 1969. His children were Barrie, Deborah and Hamish The Turnbull Clan named their lifetime achievement award after him. Joseph (19th C.) postman in the Denholm area in the 1860s. Lawrence (15th C.) part of the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to, but he is listed right after Archibald, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) son of William in Bonchester. In 1502 he was listed among many Turnbulls and others who were declared as fugitives for their part in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person who was supposed to enter him into the court was George of Hallrule, who was fined for his non-appearance. His father William was also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as David in Bonchester, who was probably related. Lawrence ‘Laurie in Maxsyde’ (16th/17th C.) found guilty at the 1622 Commissioners’ Court of stealing 2 cows from William Douglas of Cavers’ land at Langside about 1614 and 2 sheep from elsewhere in 1619, and sentenced to be hung. He is also referred to as ‘Lancie’. Lawrence ‘Laurie’ of Hartshaugh (17th C.) recorded on the valuation for Abbotrule Parish in 1643. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls who lived at Hartshaugh. Leo (15th/16th C.) tenant in Unthank listed among Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for any role they played in assisting the Homes. Presumably these are the lands of Unthank in Rulewater. Lyle (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Lyle Turnbull in Hartishanache’ (presumably Hartshaugh) in 1618 (registered in 1623) for a ‘wadset’ of lands in Hobkirk Parish. He was also recorded in the 1623 Commissioners’ Court when he was surety for Adam Turnbull in Hartshaugh Mill. He was surely related to Adam. He may be the ‘Leonall’ who was possibly a younger son of Hector of Hartshaugh, who witnessed a bond between Walter of Bedrule and George Rutherford (younger in Abbotrule) in 1618. Margaret (14th C.) forfeited lands in Eyemouth (in Coldingham) which were granted to ‘Ade Corfour’. This was during the reign of David II. It is unclear how she was related to other Turnbulls. Margaret (14th/15th C.) daughter and heiress of John, who was granted Hundleshope in Peebleshire by David II in 1357. She also held lands in Roberton and in the town of Selkirk, suggesting that her father was from the Borthwick Water and Selkirkshire Turnbulls. She married William Gledstains of that Ilk. They had a son John, to whom she resigned the lands of Hundleshope in her lifetime, probably around 1400. During the reign of Robert III she also resigned to her son John the lands in Roberton and in Selkirk. It may be that the lands the Gledstains family soon possessed near Hawick (Ormiston, Orchard, Hummelknoves, etc.) also came from her and the Turnbulls. Margaret (15th/16th C.) daughter and co-heiress of Walter of Gargunnock. Along with her sister Janet she was infested in the lands of Hassendeanbank in 1501 (her brother William probably dying before then). Margaret (15th/16th C.) received sasines of the lands of Lanton in Roxburghshire in 1506. This was along with Elizabeth, who was probably her sister. Margaret see Lady Margaret Lorraine. Margaret (16th C.) wife of David Elliot, who was tenant in Chamberlain Newton. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls she came from. There was a court case to get her husband removed from the other half of the farm (owned at the time by George Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh) in 1567. There appears to have been an ongoing dispute over this half of the lands, since in 1573 Gavin Elliott of Bailielee and Stobs (who purchased the half from George Turnbull) complained that she had ordered her sons, Walter and John Scott, to attack his servant there. By this time she was widow of David Elliot (who was also from the Horsleyhill branch, like Gavin Elliott of Stobs), and must have married a Scott. She claimed that although she had no title for the lands, she had possession ‘be virtew of tak and asseidation’, although her accusers claimed these ‘ar of lang tyme bigane outrunin’. She was represented before the Privy Council by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (perhaps therefore a relative of her husband) and was ‘visiit with seikines’ and did not attend herself. Her son John Scott did not appear and was declared a fugitive, while she and her son Walter were declared fugitives later in 1573, but then bound to Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme and John Tweedey, tutor of Drumelziet, not to molest Gavin Elliott, his wife Jean Scott, their children or servants. It seems likely that Walter and John were sons from her first marriage, perhaps to a Scott of Newton (but it this unclear). Walter and John also had a brother David, recorded in 1588, who was presumably also her son. Margaret (d.1593) daughter and heiress of William (younger of Bedrule) and Margaret Home. On the death of William, her lands and gift of marriage then came into the hands of the Crown, who appointed her uncle Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes and her grandfather Sir Thomas of Bedrule as tutors. However, Sir Thomas was declared a fugitive, leading to a lack of clarity over her future. In 1584 she was recorded as ‘oy’ (i.e. granddaughter) of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and also niece of Alexander Home of Huttonhall when there was a claim by Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes (her ‘moder broder’, i.e. another uncle) over ‘the exhibition of the said Margaret’, but the Privy Council decreed that control over her should remain with her ‘keeper’ Alexander Home. It was then ruled that she should stay in the house of Alexander Clerk of Balbirny, Provost of Edinburgh, until a decision about her future was made. She later married Robert French, Laird of Thornydykes and Abbotrule, but had no children.

Margaret (17th C.) sister of Walter of Rawflat. In 1632 she and her sister Isobella were ‘heirs portioner’ to their brother in the lands of the Mains of Feu-Rule. Margaret (17th C.) along with Mary Chisholme were ‘heirs portioner’ to their brother in the lands of the Mains of Feu-Rule. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in Bonchester, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Walter Aitkin in Minto was convicted of associating with him and William, while they were ‘at the horn’. His location is not given. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, when he served as surety for his brother James. He was also surety for himself, and was fined for the non-appearance of both of them. He is also recorded in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted, with his name recorded there as ‘Marci Trumbull’; his brother James is also listed, as well as Turnbulls of Fulton, Bonchester and elsewhere. Mark (15th/16th C.) listed among the many men connected with the Archbishop of Glasgow who had remission in 1504 for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed before Adam of Philiphaugh, who may have been related. In a separate list his name is right before David of Wauchope. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant of Over Chester when he was listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Archibald is also listed, along with ‘Marc younger’, presumably his son, as well as ‘Richard Turnbull with her daughter Agnes, this being known as the ‘Image Garden’. The 1841 census records her living at ‘Wilton Cottage’ with children Agnes, Elspeth, Jane, Mary and William. In 1851 she was still there, with Agnes, Mary and Margaret and in 1861 just with Mary. Margaret (b.1819/20) born in Minto Parish, daughter of Janet Deans. She was listed as a teacher in Lilliesleaf in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a teacher of ‘Female School teacher (of Sewing &c)’ in Lilliesleaf, along with her mother. They lived on the north side of Main Street. Marie (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when she owned £40 in Hobkirk Parish. She is listed being in the same place as Mary Rutherford ‘of Rydvell’; however, it is unclear where this was. Marion nee Lorraine (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter, called ‘of Wauchope’, whose daughters Jean and Beatrix inherited Templehall and Brewlands from him in about 1604. In 1605 their ‘tutor’ George Turnbull (2nd son of Hector of Wauchope) had her and several others removed from the lands there. This must have been part of some family feud. She was perhaps daughter of Hector of Harwood (although there is no proof for this). Marion (17th C.) listed as a widow living at Effledge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Her name appears just after William, to whom she was probably related. Mark (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. Walter Aitkin in Minto was convicted of associating with him and William, while they were ‘at the horn’. His location is not given. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, when he served as surety for his brother James. He was also surety for himself, and was fined for the non-appearance of both of them. He is also recorded in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted, with his name recorded there as ‘Marci Trumbull’; his brother James is also listed, as well as Turnbulls of Fulton, Bonchester and elsewhere. Mark (15th/16th C.) listed among the many men connected with the Archbishop of Glasgow who had remission in 1504 for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed before Adam of Philiphaugh, who may have been related. In a separate list his name is right before David of Wauchope. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant of Over Chester when he was listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Archibald is also listed, along with ‘Marc younger’, presumably his son, as well as ‘Richard Turnbull.

Turnbull

with Marc Turnbull in Overchester, David Turnbull with the same Marc, William Turnbull, John Turnbull his sons'. Presumably they were all related. Mark (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh. He was Provost in 1561 and in 1565 (when his name is given as 'Marcus'), during a dispute with Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Humeale. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Mark of Bewlie (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert and probably son of Walter. He was probably among the Turnbulls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He was one of a group of about 30 Turnbulls who entered Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601, as part of a feud with the Kers. At the end of the fight Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost) and his servant were dead, along with 2 Turnbulls, one of whom was his brother Robert. There were also several serious injuries, and he himself lost 'the thowme of his left hand' in the fight. Another brother, Andrew, was also involved in the raid and lost his little finger. In 1602 he was recorded along with Thomas, younger of Minto and Hector of Barnhills, when they were accused of robbing a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. He must also have been related to Hector of Bewlie, who was killed by the Kers in 1604 for his part in these events. He was convicted in late 1601, but it is unclear whether or not he was executed. He was also one of the 'pursuers' of the case against the Kers for the murder and maiming of several men in his party. He is probably the Mark listed in 1606 in letters of apology by the men responsible for the death of William Kerr of Ancrum. He is probably the Mark, brother of William 'called of Bewlie' who was named by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend them and 6 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidson's), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahams brothers. Mark (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether Bonchester. He was recorded as being 'in Nethir Bunecheister' in 1605 when he was pledged to appear in court in Edinburgh, along with 2 other Turnbulls. In 1606 he was the occupier of the lands of Weens and Hobbsburn when they were sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott. He could be the Mark listed along with Turnbulls of Braidhaugh and Mackside and Lorraines of Appotside, accused of stealing from an Englishman in 1601. Mark of Howden (d.bef. 1631) recorded in 1612 among local men accused by the Privy Council of charging more than the allowed amount of interest. He was surely related to other Turnbulls of Howden. He failed to appear to answer the charge and was denounced as a rebel. In 1631 his son John of Howden was served heir to his lands of Philhope in the Barony of Hawick. Mark (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He is probably the Mark in Bedrule who witnessed the bond between Robert in Bedrule and Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule in 1614. Mark (16th/17th C.) son of Hector in Hartshaugh (who appears to have lived to an old age) and younger brother of James. In 1616 he had a bond with William Scott of Todrig, and another with James (called of Bedrule) and David (or Andrew), butcher of Jedburgh. He is recorded as 'in Hairtishaugh' in 1619 when he was cautioner for Thomas Turnbull 'in Rowlisplittle'. Mark (d.1689) described as 'partition of fotherlie', it is unclear which Turnbulls he was related to. However, it seems likely he was related to John, who was at Fodderlee in 1694. He is recorded in 1678 when he paid the land tax at Fodderlee for land valued at £100 (in one transcript of the valuation the name is given as 'Margaret'), but that is clearly an error. He married Bessie Kerr, who was surely related to the Kers of Fodderlee; their only child (and heir) was Helen. The testament of him and his wife Bessie Kerr was recorded at Peebles in 1690, by Walter Chisholme, whose wife was Helen, his daughter. When he died the assets of him and his wife consisted of 2 cows, 31 sheep, half a boll of sewn barley and 'insight and plenishing' of their house, valued at £30 Scots. Additionally William Turnbull, shoemaker in Jedburgh (who was surely related to him, perhaps his brother), acted as cautioner for the list of people who owed him money, namely: Robert Bonnar in Knowesouth; Adam Young in Hassendeanbank; Andrew Oliver in Bairnkine; William Scott in Birkhill; William Turnbull in Fulton; Andrew Rutherford in Rule; James [blank] in Earlside; and John Ker of Fodderlee. When no one appeared, Adam Chisholme in Newton became cautioner instead. Mark (18th/19th C.) related to the Turnbulls of Chesterhall, Ancrum. He married an Elliot. His children included James (shepherd at Minto Kames) and William (who emigrated to New Zealand). Mark (b.1806/7) from Ancrum, he was land steward at Menslaws farm. He was recorded there in 1851, with his wife Betsy
Turnbull

(probably the same Michael, son of William of Burnfoot. In 1704 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Beattie. In 1709 and 1712 he and Robert witnessed baptisms for cooper John (probably all 3 were brothers). In 1715 there was a dispute between the hammermen and the weavers over seating precedence in the gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk. The Session determined that ‘for his lifetime, [he] should have ye head of ye fore seat of ye loft, conform to ye desire of ye other two hammermen concerned’. To take this prized seat he had to be waiting at the Loft door when it was opened, and was not allowed to pass anyone else on the way to his seat. This right was not to carry on to his descendants. He may be the same Michael who, in 1714, was ‘creat burgess upon the accompt that he built the stone stair that goes up to the steiple’ (of St. Mary’s). He could be the Michael, son of Robert and Janet Scott, born in Haick in 1645. It seems likely he was the Michael married to Bessie Bridges, whose children baptised in Hawick included an unnamed son (b.1672), John (b.1676) and Helen (b.1679). Michael (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1704 he had a son John baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses Patrick Angus and Bailie George Michael (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1731 when his daughter Mary was baptised. Michael (18th/19th C.) hosier at Appletreehall. He was declared bankrupt in 1821. Michael (1787–1849) son of William of Burnfoot. He inherited the Great Seal of the Turnbulls after his elder brother was effectively disinherited. He married Mary (possibly sister of Dr. Walter Graham of Hawick, who died in 1832), and after her death emigrated to Canada with his 5 children in 1842. Their children (baptised in Hawick) were: Margaret Scott (1818–1908); Walter (1821–49); William (b.1822), who died young; Peter Stephenson (1826–89); Mary (1829–80); and William (1828–1901). He died at Woodside in Brantford, Ontario. Michael (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer of the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the Turnbull marked at No. 31 or around No. 66 on Wood’s map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He could be the same as Michael, son of William of Burnfoot. Michael (d.1894) 3rd son of Adam and great-grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He helped his brother Thomas farm at Midburn (or ‘Africa’). He married Beatrice Nichol (known as a great beauty), sister of his brother John's wife. He died at the old schoolhouse, Wolfee. Myra S., J.P. (1932– ) ‘the best wuman Provost Hawick has ever hed’, born and bred in the West End, she worked in Wilson & Glenny’s office and married local merchant John F. She was elected to the District Council in 1984 and Provost 1988–1992. She also served as Chairman of Roxburgh District Council. Nichol (15th C.) recorded in 1488/9 as witness to an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. Most of the other witnesses were local clergymen, and so the same was probably true for him. Nichol (17th/18th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1711 he witnessed (along with mason John) a baptism for fellow mason Peter Mitchell. He is recorded as a witness at Hawick Parish Session in 1718, inquired about whether he saw Andrew Jordan coming out of the Beadle’s house at a very late hour. He was probably related to mason John, who had a son called Nichol baptised in Hawick in 1705. Nichol (d.1840) stocking-maker in Hawick. He married Margaret Laidlaw, who died in 1819, aged 56. They had a son Andrew (d.1804), who married Jean Ormiston (d.1838). Nicholas (15th C.) son of Matthew in Hassendean. In 1494/5 he and his brother John had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains as surety. They are recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King (where his name is ‘Nichol’). Ninian (15th C.) son of William. He is recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh when he failed to appear and the Thomas, Laird of Bedrule was fined. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls. Ninian (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. Perhaps the same Ninian was also listed in 1501 among 10 men, mostly Turnbulls, whose fines were remitted. In 1502 he was among more than 20 Turnbulls and others who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for the charge of murdering Robert Oliver; Adam of Billerwell was fined for his non-appearance. He may be the same Ninian, son of William, recorded in 1494/5. Ninian (15th/16th C.) tenant at Overchester, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Mark, Mark’s brother Archibald, Mark younger, Richard, David, Andrew, and Andrew’s son Thomas. He was probably related to some of these men. Ninian (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rule, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. His lands were referred to as ‘Roule’, which could be the same as Town-o-rule perhaps. Andrew was also listed as a tenant there. Norman (1942–2014) born in Edinburgh, he grew up on a farm and served in the R.A.F. He then ran a garage, before becoming a shepherd in the Hawick area. After retirement he became record-keeper for the Turnbull Clan Association. In 2012 he married Terri Booth. The Clan awarded him their lifetime achievement award in 2014. Norman High School history teacher. He was Acting Father in 1997. He was President of the 1514 Club in 1982, the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1990 and the Callants’ Club in 2007, becoming the first person to have held the chain of office of all 3 clubs. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as ‘Patricio Turnbull’ in 1447 when he witnessed the sasine for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s puchase of the Cousinlands. This was signed in Hawick, so he must have been a local man. His name appears at the end along with John Stoddart, so they may have been the Bailie’s of the time. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Gilbert. They were both stated to be ‘at the horn’ when John in Dryden was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with them. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded at Wauchope Tower at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh 1494/5. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with Turnbulls who were ‘at the horn’ for the murder of James Rutherford. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was also recorded in 1502 as ‘in Walchope’ (i.e. Wauchope) when he had remission for associating with Archibald and Ninian Armstrong and William, son of David Scott of Tushielaw. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn in for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who was fined for his non-appearance. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Patricks. Patrick (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Thomas and David. Patrick (16th C.) witness to a Lorraine sasine for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornsine in 1531. He is listed beside Robert, so they may have been related, as well as possibly related to the Lorraine family. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in the 1538 Exchequer Rolls as occupier of the lands of Wauchopebank and Templehall, which were at that time owned by the Crown. He is probably related to earlier and later Patricks of associated with these same places. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th/17th C.) tenant at Wauchope in Rulewater. He is recorded as ‘Pait Trumbill’ in a 1605 court case. He may be a descendant of the earlier Patrick in Wauchope. Patrick (16th/17th C.) tenant at Templehall and Brewlands, along with Walter Scott, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ for the lands in 1612. In 1614 (registered in 1616) he is ‘of Templehall’ of marriage between his daughter Margaret and William, son of John Ainslie, Burgess of Edinburgh. His son Thomas was cautioner, while witnesses were William ‘fiar of Bedrule’ (probably his brother), Robert (possibly his uncle), and George also ‘there’ (in Bedrule or Templehall). (and probably another relative). Along with Walter Scott, he is also recorded as sometimes occupier of Templehall in 1627. He is probably the Patrick who was son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. His children included Thomas and Margaret (who married William Ainslie in 1614). Patrick (16th/17th C.) recorded in Macksipe in 1618 when he was witness to a bond between Walter of Bedrule and Adam in Abbotrule Townhead. Patrick (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Anna, daughter of William Douglas. Paul (16th C.) tenant of one of the farms of Midshiels, Appletreehal, Broadlee, Cottlaw or ‘Burnside’ in 1562/3 when Lord Alexander Home tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. Andrew Turnbull in Hornshole is also listed among others. Percy (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of the Stonylethe’ (i.e. Stonedge) in 1601, when 2 Englishmen accused him of stealing their livestock. He was fined ‘for lack of answer’. ‘Percy’ is not a common Scottish name, and so it is possible that this was an error and he is the same as one of the other Turnbulls associated with Stonedge. Peter (15th C.) son of the Laird of Bedrule. In 1493 he served as surety for John Waugh, who had remission for stealing sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope and for associating with the Duke of Albany. Peter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester who had remission for his involvement in a long list of crimes in 1502. This included the murder of James Rutherford at the Kirk of Hawick, burning and stealing goods from George Rutherford of Longnewton at Barnhill, stealing livestock from John Grahamslaw at ‘Camys’ (probably Minto Kames) with Turnbulls who were ‘at the horn’, bringing a party of English to raid from the lands of Robert Lauder at ‘Merch-cluche’ and capturing him for ransom, stealing sheep from George Tait and his tenants at ‘Fichopi’, stealing sheep from John and William Cleghorn at ‘Lethanhope’, burning grain and stealing sheep from George Rutherford at ‘Sandyestonias’, with the help of John of Minto and others, and for associating with the rebels Mark and John. Adam of Billerwell served as surety. Peter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Macksipe in 1502. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh he was surety for Michael in Abbotrule and was fined for his non-appearance. Peter (15th/16th C.) feued the lands of the east steading of Gildhouse, also called Bailielee in 1510. Peter ‘Pait’ (16th C.) recorded in 1540 as ‘Pait Trumbill called Cate’ on a list of ‘Scottesmen rebels resete within England’. His son ‘Pait’ called ‘Cate younger’ and another son ‘Jame’ are also listed. They presumably came from Catlee near Wauchope. Peter ‘the Monk’ (d.1561) listed in 1540 among Scottish rebels who were hiding out in England. He is recorded as ‘Peter Trumbill called the Monk’, and he is listed among Turnbulls from Catlee and Cragwood (several of whom were also called Peter). He was hanged for theft and reset, along with William Elliot ‘callit Woddir-nek’ and Henry Black in Softlaw. It is unclear where he came from. Peter Stephenson (1836–1921) 14th son of Thomas Scott of East Middle farm, and direct descendant of the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He was said to have been born at ‘Deneburn’ near Denholm, but his baptism was registered in Kirkton. He studied at Glasgow University, graduating M.D. in 1859, then studying briefly at Edinburgh Medical School before entering the army. He received a medal for serving during the Abyssinian campaign in 1867–68. In 1893 he became Surgeon Major General of the Indian Medical Service in Bombay. He was a fellow of the University of Bombay and Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay. In 1896 he returned to Britain, receiving a good-service pension, and was appointed honorary surgeon to the King. In 1870 he married Mary Oliver, daughter of George Oliver the Hawick solicitor, and she died in 1902. Their children were: Thomas (1871–72); Margaret Lindsay ‘Meta’ (b.1873) who married Maj. W.G. Cooper of the 34th Poona Horse; Mary (b.1874); Evelyn Jane (1875–76); George Oliver (b.1877), who served with the Indian Army; Nora Christian (1879–1974), married Rev. John Robert Paterson Sclater of New North Church, Edinburgh; Bruce (b.1880), Lieut. in the 23rd Sikh Pioneers; Hugh Stephenson (b.1882), who became a 2nd-Lieut. in the 57th Rifles; Percy Douglas (b.1886); and Dorothy Lillian (b.1887). He is named on the memorial tablet to the Turnbuls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk, which its 4 surviving children had put up in 1955. He is buried in Grange Cemetery in Edinburgh. Many of his letters are incorporated into the book ‘Turnbull: lives and letters’ (c.1994). Philip (15th C.) son and heir of Richard of Harden. He inherited the lands in 1448 through a charter by Henry Wardlaw, Baron of Wilton. He was probably succeeded by Walter, who resigned the lands to the Lady of the Barony in 1468. Philip (15th C.) son and heir of William of Whithope. He witnessed a charter for ‘Irlandis landis’ in the Barony of Wilton in 1454. Probably the same Philip witnessed a document in 1455 attesting that John of St. Michael inherited the lands of Whitchesters from his father. A charter of 1456 from William Douglas of Drumlanrig grants him the lands of Whithope in the Barony of Hawick. He may have been related to the neighbouring contemporary Philip (at Harden). Philip of Whithope (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. In 1488 he was one of the bailies appointed by Sir Thomas Turnbull for the precept leasing Greenwood and Lyne to Robert Scott. In 1494/5 Thomas, Junior, Laird of Bedrule, served as surety for his son John (unless there was another contemporary Philip). He also served as surety for his brother, Stephen, who had raided the lands of John and Ninian Murray at Kerhope. He was probably the Laird of Whithope ‘in Ernheuch’ who was surety for David Craik in 1494/5, who had remission for pillaging from Harthorn. In 1500 he had 4 oxen taken from him, appraised and then given to Walter Scott of Branxholme, assignee for the Murrays; since no other goods could be found, he also lost his lands of Whithope to Scott of Branxholme. In 1509 he was witness to the instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Branxholme inheriting lands from his grandfather. Probably the same Philip is described as ‘in Quithip’ in 1502 when he and David in Carlinpool had remission for bringing in the ‘Traitors of Levin’ to raid the farms of Fastheugh and Hangingshaw. He was surely related to David, son of the Laird of Whithope recorded in 1494/5, may have been his son. It also seems likely he was related to the earlier Philip of Harden. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn in for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who was fined for his non-appearance. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbuls. Richard of Harden (15th C.) recorded in 1431 when he was among a number of witnesses who attested to being at the transfer of the lands of Heap between James Langlands of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Buccleuch; John and David are also listed beside him (although with no designation) and so may be related. He was possibly dead by 1448 when his son Philip inherited the lands of Harden in the Barony of Wilton. This family is probably related to the Turnbuls of Whithope. He may be the same Richard who was on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam. Richard (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbuls who were named (Andrew, Stephen and John) and may be the same as Richard of Harden. He is recorded as ‘Ricardus Turnebule’. Richard (15th/16th C.) tenant in Overchester, listed among several Turnbuls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Several other men are also listed there, and so probably related. Richard (16th C.) listed along with Hector of Clarilaw (so presumably his son or brother), in a pledge made by James Gledstains of that Ilk in 1594/5, that they would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. Richard (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed there. He is probably the Richard who witnessed a baptism for William (probably a relative) and Christian Oliver in Roberton Parish in 1688. He may be the Richard whose son William was in Minto in 1718 when he got married. Richard (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1722 when he was paid for a joist for the steeple in St. Mary’s Kirk. He was probably a joiner or builder. He could be the Richard who married Janet Porteous in Hawick in 1714 and whose children included: William (b.1716); Mary (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); Mary (again, b.1721); John (b.1723); Janet (again, b.1726); and Robert (b.1729). Richard (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiels in 1729 and surely related to Robert, who was there at the same time. He married Helen Turnbull in 1726, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included Robert (b.1729), with witnesses James Thomson and William Turnbull. He is probably the Richard who witnessed a baptism in Wilton in 1729 for George Scott, resident at Wester Burnfoot. Sir Richard of Ferniehirst (1908–98), G.C.M.G. Career diplomat, he was Governor of Tanganyika during its hand-over and later Governor of Aden. His wife Beatrice is buried in Bedrule churchyard. His twin children are Alison and Julian. He is supposed to have remarked to Denis Healey, then Defense Secretary, that the British Empire would be remembered for only 2 things: ‘the popularization of Association Football and the term ‘f... off’.

Robert (15th C.) Presbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1431 he was the notary for the ‘letter of transumpt’ for the 1420 charter of half the lands of Braxholme being granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. This letter was made in the church of Cavers. Hence he was probably a local church official. Robert (15th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf from about 1460. In 1440 the Pope revoked the gift to the Bishop of Glasgow and attached the advowson to the Holy See. It was later given to him, and he resigned it back to the Pope in 1480.

Robert (15th C.) Abbot of Jedburgh 1476–78. In 1478 he is recorded as witness to a charter granting David Scott rights in Selkirk. Also in 1478 he was involved in a case registered with Parliament involving ‘mails’ on Stewartfield, belonging to the Stewarts. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Robert of Hoscote (15th C.) resigned the lands of Hoscote into the hands of their superior, William Lord Borthwick. They were then conferred upon Alexander, Master of Borthwick. His wife Beatrice is buried in Bedrule churchyard. His twin children are Alison and Julian. He is supposed to have remarked to Denis Healey, then Defense Secretary, that the British Empire would be remembered for only 2 things: ‘the popularization of Association Football and the term ‘f... off’.

Robert (15th C.) was fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. The previous entry was for Alexander, also in Wolfelee and a later entry was for his son John. Robert (15th C.) recorded being ‘in laris’ at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493. His lands may have been Lairhope above Falnash. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crimes of: stealing livestock from Blackhope in Eddleston Parish; stealing 2 cows from Shieldgreen; stealing 4 cows from Matthew Gotterson in the Forest of Lauderdale; and common theft. His surety was George, Master of Angus. In 1494/5 he had remission for stealing a horse, a dagger and other items from John Smith, with surety being John Murray ‘in the Forest’; he was again described as being ‘in laris’. Robert (15th C.) resident of Wells. He is listed at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Robert of Mudlaw (15th C.) possibly son of Sir Thomas of Phaup. He is mentioned in the royal pardon for Sir Thomas in 1494/5, whose crimes involved receiving stolen sheep from him and other men, namely John ‘de Newhalburn’, Thomas Newton and Alex Gray; either he or John appear to have been son of Sir Thomas (but the Latin is ambiguous). He is also recorded in the Justice- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 when he was fined for failure to appear (with Thomas of Phaup listed just after him). His lands were probably near where Moodlaw Loch is, on the boundary between Selkirkshire and Dumfriesshire. He is probably also the Robert listed along with Alexander in 1494/5 when Edward Dunn in Phaup had remission for stealing more than 100 sheep from them, from the Waters of Yarrow and Tweed; Thomas in Phaup was surety for Dunn. Robert (15th C.) recorded as brother to the Laird of Bedrule in 1494/5. Thomas Turnbull, ‘Junior’ Laird of Bedrule served as his surety; it is unclear if this means he was brother of Thomas or uncle of Thomas (i.e. brother of George, the elder Laird). Robert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was tenant ‘in le castel hil de branxame’, i.e. Castlehill near Braxholme. He ‘came in the King’s will’ for stealing 15 score sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope, with his surety being Lord Home. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when Walter Rutherford was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including stealing from him. The theft was of 14 sheep from ‘sowdane braa’ (presumably Souden Brae). Robert (15th/16th C.)

listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with Adam and David, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of Angus, responsible for their pledges. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with 2 Johns, Ninian, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘de bonechester’ at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was surety for himself and fined for not appearing. Probably the same Robert was also recorded as tenant in Bonchester in 1501 among 10 men, mostly Turnbulls, whose fines were remitted. In 1502 he was surety for himself at the Justice-aire; he was fined for non-appearance, denounced as a fugitive and had his goods escheated. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls from Bonchester. Robert ‘Muriale’ (15th/16th C.) described as one of the King’s rebels and already ‘at the horn’ in 1502 when David Turnbull in Tofts was allowed to pay a fine for associating with him. They had burned Riddell, as well as stealing 240 sheep, 2 cows and sundry goods. On the same raid they killed a black mare belonging to Robert Scott. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness to a charter for Alexander, Lord Home, signed in Edinburgh in 1506. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls for Ettrick Ward in 1507, when he had an obligation for a payment. He may be the same Robert who was aid for a silver cup in 1513 in association with Yarrow. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded along with John as witness to a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) and Melrose Abbey. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1507 as a rebel, along with Simon, when several Dalgleishes (tenants of Braidhaugh) were given remission for associating with them. He was probably from somewhere in the Rule valley. His name is written ‘Roberto Turnebule’. Robert (15th/16th C.) feued the east steading of ‘Warmwood’, also called Langleuchhead in Ettrick in 1510. Either the same Robert or a descendant was tenant in 1541 of the Crown lands of ‘Est Syde of Warmwood, alias Huitralburn’ in Ettrick. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hassendeanbank, listed on the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls and others who may have assisted Alexander, Lord Home. David is also listed as tenant at Hassendeanbank. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hallrule who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; William and Thomas were also listed there as tenants of Hallrule, and so may have been related. Probably the same man was also listed among the Borderers who were pardoned in 1526 for their role in marching against the Earl of Arran. Also on the list are his ‘brethir sonnis’ (i.e. nephews) David and George. He was also among the local lairds who had remission in 1527 for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field and at Linlithgow. He was thus presumably a supporter of Scott of Braunholme. Robert (16th C.) listed in 1530 as ‘Tutour of Philiphauch’ when he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep the rievers under better control. In 1531 he is probably the Robert who formally acknowledged to his grandson John, ‘tutor of the Philiphauch’, that a tack had been given to Mark Ker (Burgess of Selkirk) for 5 years for lands in Philiphaugh. He could have been married to Janet and father of John, who was served heir to his mother’s lands of Philiphaugh in 1558. Robert (16th C.) witness in 1531 to a Lorraine sasine for Harwood and Hawthornside. Other witnesses were Patrick (possibly a relative) and 2 Lorraines. He could be the same as Robert in Hallrule. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘incola’ (i.e. resident) in 1563 when he was witness to the transfer of Spittal-on-Rule from Douglas of Cavers to Ker of Primside. Robert ‘Feeble Hob’ (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1537 for stealing from Sir Walter Ogilvie of ‘Dunlugus’ at ‘Colbrandispethe’. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. His nickname is listed as ‘Febill Hob’. Robert (16th C.) probably farmer at Hobsburn. ‘Robert Turnbullis hous callit the auld hous and yaird thairof’ are listed among the disputed lands in the 1562 Baronial dispute in Feu-Rule. His rig lay at the ‘schadow’, i.e. west side of the lands, adjacent to Hawthornside Wood, and were assigned to Agnes Herries as superior. He may have been father of Walter, who is recorded as Laird there in 1568 and 1574. Robert (16th C.) tenant in ‘Siron Shiell’, i.e. Swanshiel, recorded in 1567 among men charged to appear before the Regent Moray. He was also listed in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. Robert ‘Isobel’s Robin’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567, along with Hector ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as Adam, son to Sandie Turnbull, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Oliver. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1579 among a group of Turnbulls accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’. Robert (16th C.) listed as ‘Robert Trumbill, sometime tutor of Barnhills’ among a large number of men in a summons of treason of 1592. The list was started with Dame Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell, and Francis Stewart, sometime Earl of Bothwell (and presumably the rest were their supporters). He is probably the Robert, brother of William of Barnhills (as well as Gavin and Hector) who was listed in 1584/5 among Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Probably the same Robert ‘of the Barnhill’ was among men complained about in 1590 by the English Warden for a raid into England. He is probably the ‘Robert Trumble of Barnehill’ recorded in 1601, along with James Douglas of Cavers and William Douglas of Whitriggs, when Henry Woodrington accused them of stealing his cattle. Robert (16th/17th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire. He took over after the death of George Douglas, as recorded in the Ker-Turnbull feud case of 1601. Probably the same Robert was Sheriff Depute in 1600 for the ‘retour’ for the Kers of Cessford. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bewlie (d.1601) probably son of Walter, and among the Turnbulls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He had brothers William, Mark and Andrew. He was murdered in Jedburgh at the same time as John Middlemas (from Lilliesleaf), as well as ‘Henry Davidsoun of Combis’ and others were mutilated. There was a remission for John Middlemas (from Lilliesleaf), as well as his brother, with John Middlemas also being killed, and many other men being wounded. Several Turnbulls were late convicted and hanged for their involvement, including his brother Andrew. His brother William was appointed tutor for his son Andrew in 1603 and Andrew was served as his heir in 1607. Robert (d.c.1605) tenant in Hallrule. He was brother of William in Barnhills, Gavin in Howa and Hector in Stanedge. In 1606 the Bailies of Hawick apprehended William and George Grahamslaw for his murder. They were sons of Adam Grahamslaw of Little Newton, and were transferred to the Edinburgh Tolbooth. His widow, children and brothers were accused of trying to ruin the 2 accused, rather than prosecute them. The summons mentions his widow Grizel, as well as his brothers Gavin and Hector, and his eldest son Robert. Robert (16th/17th C.) probably brother of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He is probably the Robert ‘son of the Laird of Beddroule’ who was among Turnbulls and others charged to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. In 1614 he was witness to the marriage of the daughter of Patrick of Templehall, probably his nephew. Also that year he was probably the Robert in Bedrule who had a bond with Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule. And in 1618 he was witness to a bond between Walter of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. However, he is easily confused with Sir Thomas’ son Robert (his nephew). It is probably his son John who is listed in 1578/9 as ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’. Robert (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Robert in Hallrule, with his mother being Grizel. He is recorded in a summons of 1606, in which the family are directed to prosecute the men accused of murdering his father within 15 days, or else they would be released from the Edinburgh Tolbooth. Robert (d.1611) son of David in Mackside. He was convicted and educated in Jedburgh in 1611. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Densye. In 1611 he acted as cautioner for the appearance of his brother David in court in Jedburgh. Robert (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and brother of Walter of Bedrule. In 1618 he witnessed a bond of his brother Walter. He was witness to a bond of 1620 between Thomas Turnbull ‘in Rowllspittle’ (probably his brother) with Robert Pringle (probably later of Stichell). Also in 1620 he was probably the Robert called ‘of Bedrourl’ whose son Thomas had a bond with Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. He married Margaret Erskine and their children included John and Thomas. He is difficult to distinguish from his uncle Robert, who lived at a similar time. He is probably the Robert ‘son of the Laird of Beddroule’ who was listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. Robert (17th C.) tenant farmer at Templehall in Rulewater, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ of 1647 and another of 1642, and witness to a sasine of 1654. He was also named in a disposition of 1652. His brother was Thomas, tenant at Harwood. And he must have been related to George and to James. He could be the Robert in ‘Rouletoun’ recorded in 1643, with his lands being valued at £104, and Thomas also listed there. Robert (17th C.) tenant of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, along with David, recorded in 1643. Their lands were valued at £66 13s 4d. Robert (d.c.1662) tenant in Swanshiel. His daughter ‘Mariota’ (probably Marion) was served as his heir in 1662. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Andrew (b.1643), Michael (b.1645) and Robert (b.1648). He could be the father of weaver Michael (recorded from the 1670s until the 1710s), who also had brothers Robert and William, as well as a sister. Robert (d.c.1682) listed in Hawthornside when his will was recorded in 1682. He was surely related to William, whose will was also recorded on the same day, as well as Adam who was recorded there in 1688. Robert (d.c.1682) tenant in ‘Horslie’ when his will was recorded in 1682. These are probably the lands in the Slitrig valley. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part that was Hassendean. He married Agnes Rennick and their children included Agnes (b.1689). He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Roberton in 1681, another for William in 1686, one for William Scott and Bessie (who may have been related) in 1687, one for George Hood in 1687 and one for John Rennick in Horsleyhill in 1688. Robert (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Repertslaw’ in a 1684 list of Roxburghshire men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism; this was probably Raperlaw. His name is given in another version of the record as ‘Thomas’. Robert (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident in Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to Walter, who was tenant there. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident at Chapelhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Cockerheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He may have been son of Thomas, who was at Cockerheugh about a generation earlier. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the same Robert listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1712 he appears to have been the first person to be allowed to plan for the erection of a ‘through-stone’ over his grave in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. This followed the reading of an Act of 1708. He was allowed permission, but asked to contribute to the poor box. He may be the same weaver who was recorded in a sasine of 1687 disposing a West End tenement to his wife Helen Paisley, and whose daughter Isobel was born in 1688 (with witnesses Robert Allan and Michael Turnbull). He may be the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptisms for shoemaker Robert Paisley in 1700. Robert (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick, brother of Michael and John. In 1678 all 3 brothers were involved in a case before the Bailies. In 1708 he is described as ‘couper’ when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Turnbull, younger. In 1709 and 1712 he and Michael witnessed baptisms for cooper John (probably all 3 were brothers). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Appletreehall in 1711 when his son James was baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitlaw. He married Janet Donaldson in 1710. Their children included: John (b.1713); Robert (b.1719); James (b.1722); and Janet (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Archibald Paterson and James Johnstone. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the ‘younger weaver in ye Howgate bewest ye water in Hawick’ recorded in a baptismal record of 1708, and hence son of the older Robert; the child was called William, and the witnesses were cooper Robert Turnbull and Andrew Riddell, tenant in Goldielands. He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Porteous in 1713. He may also be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid in 1713. He married Margaret Elliot (perhaps the Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, who married a Robert in Hawick in 1707). Their children included: Margaret (b.1716); Janet (b.1718); Walter (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); Isobel (b.1725); and Michael (b.1727). The witnesses in 1716 were Bailie Robert Ruecas-...

Turnbull

(b.1718); Janet (b.1719); Thomas; and William. Probably the same ‘Miller in Wooleemlin’ had a son Robert baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1737. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiel in 1729 and surely related to Richard, who was there at the same time. He married Elspeth Douglas and their children included Margaret (b.1729) and John (b.1738). The witnesses in 1729 were Andrew Stewart and William Douglas (who was surely related to his wife). Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Isobel Kedie. Their children included: John (b.1737); Janet (b.1738); Isobel (b.1740); and Thomas (b.1741). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cavers itself in 1730 when his daughter Euphan was baptised. There are lot of other children, baptised in Cavers, who could be his. Robert (18th C.) gardener in the Hawick area. In 1733 and 1736 he was living at Midshiel. His wife was Euphan Douglas and their children included: Janet (b.1731), Helen (b.1733) and Charles (b.1736), baptised in Wilton; and Robert (b.1743) and and George (b.1745), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1733 were James Dryden and Andrew Douglas (perhaps related to his wife), in 1736 were John and James Dryden and in 1743 were merchants Robert Taylor and James Douglas (who was probably related to his wife). Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Janet Kersel and their children included: Adam (b.1760); John (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); and James (b.1768). The baptism in 1768 was witnessed by the ‘whole congregation’. Probably the same weaver Robert witnessed a baptism in 1761 and another in 1766 for James Taylor. He was already deceased in 1803 when his wife died. Robert of Standhill (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may be the ‘Captain Turnbull Standhill’ listed in the Window Tax Rolls for Ancrum Parish in 1748. In 1737 his daughter Ann became the 2nd wife of Andrew Bennet of Chesters. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbuls of Standhill. Robert (18th C.) recorded at Whitlecuelghside in 1761 when his son Archibald was baptised in Robertson Parish and at Mabonlaw in 1763 and 1766 when his sons William and John were baptised. Other children baptised at a similar time to a Robert include Walter (b.1759) and Robert and Janet (b.1768). Robert (d.1766) miller at Hallrule Mill. He married Helen and their sons were Thomas and Walter (who were millers at Southdean Mill, along with another Robert). In 1774, by which time he was deceased, his widow rented the farm of Doorpool. He was buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Robert (1738/9–99) blacksmith at Gillbraehead. He married Margaret Little, who died in 1797, aged 55. They were buried in Etteleton Cemetery along with 5 of their children and Elspeth (1760/1–1833). Thomas (1770/1–1854), also blacksmith at Gillbraehead, was probably his son, as well as William (1777/8–1851), who married Isabella Young. Robert (18th C.) miller at Southdean Mill. In 1773 his co-tenants William and Robert were cautioners for the rental of Doorpool by Helen Turnbull, their mother, who was widow of Robert, miller at Hallrule Mill. It seems likely that the 2 Roberts were related to each other. He may be the same Robert who was recorded as tenant of Hallrule Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Hallrule Mill. He was married to Tibbie Donaldson, and their son John was said to have been prone to fighting at local fairs. It is unclear how he might have been related to the miller of Hallrule who died in 1766. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Whithope Mill in 1780 when his son John was baptised. Robert (18th C.) farm labourer in the late 1700s. He is recorded planting trees at Whitchesters in 1790–91, cutting the foundation for a dyke in upper Teviotdale in 1792 and quarricing stones for a dyke in Liddesdale about 1793. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Synton in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Alexander Scott. Robert (d.bef. 1809) mason on the Cross Wynd. His daughter Margaret died in 1809. Robert (b.1765) 3rd son of John of Wester Swanshiel. He purchased Galalaw, just outside Hawick, probably from Robert Pott around 1815. In 1821 he was a witness to the birth of William Turnbull to James (his brother) and Mary Stavert. He is listed as ‘Turnbull, R. Esq. Gallawlaw’ in 1821 on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. Wood’s 1824 map shows him as owner of a piece of land at Dovemount. He may be the Laird of Galalaw who acquired a part of the lands of Silverbuthall from James Scott. Elizabeth, a widow (aged 83) recorded at Galalaw in 1851 may have been his wife and Robert who farmed at Galalaw in the early-to-mid 19th century was probably his son. Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer in Roughley on the Hermitage Water. He is recorded there on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He loaned money to Alexander Anderson (who purchased Hobkirk Kirkstile in 1807). He was listed as one of the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bewliehill in Lilliesleaf Parish, listed in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. Probably the same Robert paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–91. Robert (1755/6–1832) weaver in Hawick. He is buried in St. Mary’s, along with his siblings John (1762/3–1841), James (d.1846) and Janet (who died aged 84). Robert (1756/7–1847) shoemaker on the Loan. He could be the Robert, son of Robert and Margaret Riddell, born in Wilton in 1757. He is probably the man known as ‘Auld Springkell’. He could be the ‘R. Turnbull’ whose property is shown in the middle of the west side of the Howegate in Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he was living at about 21 Loan with his wife Mary, together with Margaret and Robert, probably their children. In 1789 he married Mary Laidlaw, and she died in 1848, aged 86. Their children included: Janet (1789–1821); Margaret (b.1793); James (b.1798), ‘Jimmie Springkie’; Mary (1805–1817); and Robert (1805/6–47). The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, including his grandson Robert Sibbald (d.1840) and Martha Blythe (d.1826), wife of John, Christian and Andrew. He may have been the same Robert described as ‘Officer’ for the Excise Office in Hawick in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was also Treasurer of East Bank Kirk. He is listed in the 1841 census as a farmer on the Cross Wynd. He married Ann Matthison, and their children included: Ann Scott (b.1808); Elizabeth (b.1812); and James (b.1814), who was a draper. He is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Robert (b.c.1815) blacksmith at Stirches Croft in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included John, Christian and Andrew. He may have been related to Walter, who was joiner there at the same time. Robert (1832–97) son of James, forester in Cavers. He was a tailor and clothier in Denholm. In 1859 he married Margaret (1833–96), daughter of Robert Scott, farmer and Elizabeth Wilson. Their children were: Robert Scott (b.1860); James (b.1862); David Wilson (b.1866); John Weir (b.1870); Elizabeth Wilson (b.1874), who died young; Thomas Mungo (b.1876), also died young; Thomas Mungo (again, b.1878); and Elizabeth Jane (b.1880), died young. The forst 2 children were born at Todlaw. He and his wife are buried in Denholm Cemetery. Robert Laidlaw (1830–74) son of William and Margaret Scott, he was from the Merrylaw family, and presumably named after the proprietor of Falnash. He attended St. Andrews University 1847–9. He was recorded as farmer at Falnash in 1868. He was owner of Merrylaw according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. In 1867 he married...
Apalina Christina Hogarth, daughter of Alexander Pott in Teviothead Parish in 1867. Their children included: Apalina Margaret Scott (b.1869); William Lairdlaw (b.1870); Jean Elliot (b.1871); and Alexander Pott (b.1872). He died aged 44.

Robert (19th/20th C.) son of James, he was descended from the Charterhall, Ancrum branch of the Turnbulls. He was a shepherd and then a farmer. In 1886 he married Isabella Gutterson, whose father had been a servant of Atholl Hay. They had a son James, and 3 daughters.

Robert (19th/20th C.) Bailie of Hawick. He was on the Council 1890–1900. Robert (1864–1932) gamekeeper at Arden Hall in Yorkshire, he was tenant farmer at Weensmoor around 1910. He married Isabel Gotterson and their children were Jim, Cecilia and Tib. Rev. Robert Wilson (b.1893) born in Hawick, son of schoolmaster Adam and Helen Paterson. He was educated at Hawick High School and Edinburgh University. He served as a Lieutenant in the Black Watch and the Royal Fusiliers. He was licensed to preach in 1915, was then assistant at the Tron Church in Edinburgh and also in Hawick from 1919. He was ordained as minister of Dunsyre in 1921. He married Catherine Russell, daughter of Joseph Strang. Their children were: Helen Blair Paterson (b.1920); Katherine Margaret Strang (b.1922); Dorothy Annie Wilson (b.1925); Evelyn Josephine Cathels (b.1929); and Adam Michael Gordon (b.1935).

Roland (15th C.) resident of Edinburgh. In 1476 he and his wife Peronell summoned Henry Liberton to appear before the Lords Auditors over a claim for rental on a tenement in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Roland (15th C.) tenant in Fulton. He was recorded in 1493 when he and Thomas had remission for the theft of sheep from ‘pryndadotis in Weddale’; their surety was the Laird of Bedrule. Simon (15th C.) tenant in Clarilaw. In 1493 he had remission for associating with the ‘rebels of Leven’ (i.e. Englishmen). His surety was George of Hallrule. Simon (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Simone Turnbule’ in 1507. Several Dalgleishes of Braidhaugh (probably in Rulewater) received remission for receiving and communing with him and others. Robert Turnbull was also mentioned, and so presumably a relative. They must have been declared rebels for some rieving activity. He and Robert were also recorded in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig was hanged for associating with them. And in 1510 John Dalgleish was convicted of several crimes including ‘Inter-communing with Symon Turnbull and his accomplices, Englishmen’. Simon (16th C.) holder of the lands of Chamberlain Newton according to a ‘discharge’ of 1528/9 relating to ‘non-entries’ and other fees of the local Scotts. He is there described as the ‘grantor’s servant’ (i.e. servant to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell). Stephen (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, John and Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Stephanus Turnebule’. Stephen (15th/16th C.) brother of Philip of Whithope. He was recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Stephanus turnbule frater domini quhithop’ when he had remission for bringing in ‘traitors of Leven’ for the plundering and burning of Kershope, stealing 80 cows and slaughtering John Murray; his brother the Laird of Whithope served as his surety. In 1500 Philip was assessed for payment due to Murray, with 4 oxen being taken, appraised and given to Walter Scott of Brauxholm. Where he himself lived is not recorded. Stephen (16th C.) son of Watt in Howa. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. Stephen (d.c.1590) recorded as ‘of Wowlie and Wowahoplie’ (i.e. ‘Wolfelee’ and ‘Wolfehooplie’) in 1590 when he was succeeded by his son Adam. The family possessed the right of rental of the lands, which were still owned by the Homes of Wetherburn. He may have been son of the previous Adam. Stephen (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Appothsyd’ when he witnessed a sasine for Appotside in 1632. Stephen (17th C.) became an elder of Bedrule Parish in 1691 and was probably connected directly with the Turnbulls of Bedrule through his grandfather, who was also Stephen. He may be the ‘Stiphon’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. Stephen (17th C.) resident of Brauxholm. He was recorded in 1703 when the Parish Session collected money for ‘his numerous family of motherless children’. He was called to the Session as a witness, but could not attend because ‘the water was not passable’. Thomas (14th C.) witness in 1390 to the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. His designation is not given, but other Turnbulls listed were Adam of Whithope and Adam of Fulton. Thomas of Penchrise (15th C.) recorded in 1464/5 as witness to the sasine granting the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1471 as being ‘of Faulish’, which could be ‘Fahnash’, but seems more likely to be the same as ‘Fawlishope’ (as recorded the following year). He was ordered to pay 3 year’s worth of taxes for the lands of Chamberlain Newton pertaining to Lord Lindsay, but failed to appear. He is probably related to the John who was connected with Stouslie (in the same Barony) in 1468. Sir Thomas of Greenwood and the Lyne (15th C.) had a sasine for the lands of Greenwood in 1461. He leased the lands of Greenwood and the Lyne, in the Barony of Minto, to Robert, son of David Scott of Buccleuch in 1488. This corresponds to the modern Girnwood. He kept 1 acre of the lands of Greenwood and 1 acre of the lands of Lyne, both in the north part, presumably for himself. He is probably son or grandson of the Adam who was granted Greenwood (or Girnwood) in 1439. In 1488 he also had a charter from James III for the lands of ‘Traringzeane’ in Ayrshire; this was for his service to the King at Blackness. He is also mentioned as resigning the same lands to Alexander, Lord Home in a charter of 1492/3. He may have been part of the family of the Turnbulls of Minto, who sold the lands about half a century later. He is probably the Sir Thomas who witnessed a confirming charter for the Barony of Wilton in 1494/5. He may be the Thomas of ‘Grynwald’ who in 1462 witnessed the copying of a discharge made a few years earlier between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers. He may be the Thomas who gave a pledge for James Rutherford in 1471. Thomas of Stouslie (15th C.) witness to the 1488 sasine in which the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is surely related to the Andrew of Stouslie who is recorded in 1490. Andrew Turnbull of Hawick was also a witness to the same sasine, and so probably related. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as ‘in Gaithous cot’ in 1493 when he had remission for being at the Boroughmuir of Edinburgh with the Duke of Albany. In 1494/5 he had remission for stealing sheep and a horse from John Sinclair in Lauderdale, with George in Hallrule acting as his surety. He was surely related to John, who was recorded in Gatehousecote at the same time. Perhaps the same Thomas, tenant at Gatehousecote, was listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Patrick and David. Sir Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1490 when the lease of ‘Faulishope’ was granted to him without ‘grassum’, and granted to him again in 1492. He is also recorded in 1494/5 when he had a precept from King James IV for any crimes he might be accused of committing before the King’s coronation seven years earlier. It is unclear whether he was a Turnbull of Bedrule or from another branch; however it is possible that he was the same man as Thomas of Bedrule. He is recorded as being ‘in Fawlishop’, which seems likely to be Phaup near the head of the Ettrick (although it could be Faulshope further down the Ettrick). The crimes included stealing many sheep, cattle and horses from Patrick Murray at ‘Skaddamness’ (probably Scaddow Ness or Rig) and Lewenshope, and stealing from David and George Tait ‘de Pryny’ (i.e. Pirn, near Stow), John and William Cleghorn at ‘Lechtanchop’ and John Scott at ‘Glensax’, as well as resetting Robert of ‘Mudlaw’ and John of ‘Newhalburn’; one of these Turnbulls was his son (the Latin making it unclear which one is meant). His son and heir John leased the lands of Phaup in the period 1483–87 and Huntly in 1486. In 1494/5 he was surety for Edward Dunn in Phaup, who had remission for stealing more than 100 sheep from Alexander and Robert Turnbull (who may have been his sons or other near relatives) from the Waters of Yarrow and Tweed. In 1495 he was recorded as a controller of some sort for the Crown lands in Ettrick Forest. In 1499 and 1501 half of the lands of ‘Faulship’ in Ettrick were let to his wife, Janet Scott. In 1471 probably the same ‘Thomas Turnebull of Fawlishope’ was ordered to repay Thomas ‘Folkert’ for 2 sacks of wool. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Fulton. He was recorded in 1493 when he and Roland had remission for the theft of sheep from ‘pryndadotis in Weddale’; his surety was the Laird of Bedrule. He was also recorded in 1494/5, when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. He is also listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls among a group of Turnbulls and others whose fines were remitted; ‘Thome Troumbull junioris’, listed before him may have been his son. Thomas of Bedrule (15th/16th C.) son and heir of George of Turnbull. It is possible he is the same man as the Sir Thomas who was tenant in Phaup in Selkirkshire (and fined at the Justice-aigne in Selkirk in 1494/5). In 1493 Peter, ‘filio domini thome milititis’, served as surety at the Justice-aigne in Jedburgh in 1493; this suggests that Sir Thomas was indeed the Turnbull Laird (although ‘Bedrule’ is not explicitly mentioned). He is probably the Laird of Bedrule also recorded in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493, when Walter Ker of Cessford served as surety for ensuring that he and his attendants would not harm James Dunn in Jedburgh (suggesting some sort of feud). He is probably also the Laird of Bedrule who served as surety for David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick in 1494/5. In 1494/5 he was also ‘Junior dominus de bethroul’ when he served as surety for himself and was fined for not appearing at the Justice-aire; the ‘Junior’ appellation suggests that his father was still alive, but that he was serving as the effective chief of the Turnbulls. In 1494/5 he additionally served as surety for: John, son of Philip; Ninian, son of William; and Robert, brother of the Laird of Bedrule (who was therefore presumably either his brother or uncle). He was recorded in 1501 when a fine of £40 imposed on 6 Turnbulls was granted to him. He was also recorded in 1502 as being ‘of Bethroul’ when he was one of about 20 Turnbulls and others who failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; Ralph Ker in Greenhead was fined for failing to enter him in the court, and was fined £100 (considerably more than for the other men, indicative of his standing). His brother William was also listed, as well as Andrew in Bedrule, who may have been related. Additionally he was fined for failing to produce John in Ruecastle to answer for the same crime. He had a sasine for the lands of Bedrule in 1502. He may be the Laird of Bedrule who served as surety (along with William Langlands) for John Sinclair in Minto, John in Ruecastle and the Turnbulls in Fulton in 1493, as well as for Gilbert Shiel in Minto in 1494/5. He may have been son of George of Bedrule, who is recorded about a generation earlier, and must have been related to the George of Bedrule who is recorded in the next decade. He is probably the same Thomas, son and heir of George, who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 and perhaps 1528. He is probably the Laird of Bedrule from whom 10 sheep were stolen by the Olivers in Strange before 1502. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘junior’ in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted. Turnbulls of Fulton and Bonchester were also listed, and so he was probably from this area, and from his name was likely to have been son of another Thomas. Thomas in Fulton is listed directly after him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hallrule who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; Robert and William were also listed there as tenants of Hallrule, and so may have been related.

Thomas (d.bef. 1535) tenant in Town-of-Rule. Along with ‘Andree alias Daviud’ he was recorded in 1535 when Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused (but found not guilty) of their cruel murder. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when accused of having been on a raid into England. He and George Rutherford, along with 100 other men were said to be responsible for the deaths of John Routledge and Robert Noble. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Sir Thomas of Bedrule (c.1520-c.85) son of George. In 1528 there was a gift of the ‘ward, relief and non-entry’ of his late father’s lands, to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Included in the gift was the right to arrange his marriage, since he was then still a minor. He may be the ‘Trumble of Bedroule’ who was listed among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds in 1545. In 1550/1 he gave a ‘precept of clare constat’ involving Robert Scott, heir of Adam Scott in the lands of Little Drinkstone. He signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledge was either William of Hassendean Kirk or George of the Toor. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme etc. by Sir Walter Scott. There was a complaint against ‘the molestations’ committed by him and George in Hallrule, made by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557, and he had to appear to answer these charges (the resolution is unrecorded, however). In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1561/2 Sir John Stewart of Traquair was surety for him to answer to an accusation of stealing 3 horses from Lord Gray. In 1563, along with the parishioners of Bedrule he brought an action against Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, William Kerr (the Parson) and Sir John Allan, demanding that they produce the proof that they had the rights to the benefices of Bedrule; Kerr won the legal battle in 1564. There is a ‘certificate of relaxation’ for the teinds of Bedrule between him and Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1564/5, and a bond between them in the same year. Also in 1564 he was listed as ‘The Lard of Badrewll’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he was one of the sureties for Robert Kerr of Woodhead. He was recorded as being at Mary Queen of Scots’ wedding to Darnley in 1566. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He had a bond of 1567 with the Warden, Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to present ‘Rengen Foster called Can’. A few years afterwards he assisted in stopping the Regent Moray from seizing the Crown. He later supported the Regent Morton, along with the Rutherfords, but against the Scotts and Kers. In 1569 he signed the bond to suppress the thieves on the Border. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Along with his sons Walter and Thomas he was put to ‘escheat’ as a perjured rebel at one point. Additionally in 1569 John Rutherford of Huntill was surety for him, while he was surety for Adie Elliot ‘of the Cowdais’ and John Elliot of Thorlshope. He was one of the ‘curators’ for the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane around the 1570s. In 1571/2 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Oliver as well as for Andrew Hall of ‘the Sykis’ and some Robsons of Hownam. Also in 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was cautioner (along with Richard Rutherford of Edgerston) for several men from Southdean. Also in 1572/3 he was surety for William, Burgess of Edinburgh (who was thus probably a close relative). In 1573 he (and his son and heir William, and other son Walter) were among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. Also in 1573 he signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. In 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. In 1576 he was involved in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Auncrum; also on his side were his son Walter, William in Barnhills and Mungo Bennet in Chesters. Also in 1576 he was cautioner for the Turnbuls of Howden, Hallrule, Bilerwell and Belses in their bond not to harm other Turnbuls. In about 1578 (perhaps earlier) he signed a bond with other Turnbuls and Rutherfords, and another between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1577/8 his sons Thomas and Walter were acquitted of the murder of John Forbes. He was also one of the ‘curators’ of the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane. In 1576 he was a cautioner for some Borderers who were accused of rieving, and in 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned (in his case as pledge for Adam of Over Hassendean and also Sim Armstrong). He was then declared to be liable for the fines, or the amounts would be made from his ‘movabill guidis and geir, and, faiylinge of thair movabill guidis, to appryse thair landis’. However, he appeared personally, and was let off, provided that the Davidsions for whom he stood as caution appeared before the Justice Court of Roxburgh. Also in 1578/9 John Johnstone of that Ilk was caution for his appearance, as well as his sons Walter and Thomas, his nephew John and his son-in-law Edward Lorraine; this was for the slaughter of ‘Thomas Schevill’. Also in 1578/9 there is mention at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop a feud between him (along with several Rutherfords and Douglas of Bonjedward) and the Kers of Cessford; there was also another agreement between him and George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward. Kinmont Willie Armstrong appeared before the Privy Council in 1579 because of a feud between their families, and also Christie Armstrong of Barnglies, for the same reason. In 1579 his sons Walter and Thomas were on a list of men accused of raiding into England; also listed were ‘Hobbat Hall and Mekie Hall, banished Englishmen, and servants to the Laird of Beddroule’. In 1580 he is listed as head of a group of Turnbuls who were bound over to keep the peace with John Turnbull of Minto and his followers; his group included his son Walter, as well as William of Barnhills and Edward Lorraine, younger of Harwood. Also in 1580 he was ordered along with John of Minto and Wat of Bewlie, to enter wards in Edinburg Castle or be declared a rebel; later he was said to have disobeyed and was denounced as a rebel. In 1581 he was cautioner for men of the Jedburgh area and was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. Also in 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was denounced in 1583/4 for not appearing before the Privy Council; he and his sons Walter and Thomas were denounced as rebels for taking ‘the cumpany of utheris thevis and rebellis, intending to continew in thift and oppressioun’. He was also the Laird of Bedrute whose sons are mentioned in a letter by the King in 1584 ‘for an attempat committ be thame at Preswen in England’ for which they were found guilty. In about 1584 he lost his position as one of the tutors to his niece Margaret (daughter and heiress of William), since he had been declared a rebel. He was probably the Laird of Bedrule referred to in 1584/5 when his son Robert was one of the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they were helping to keep peace on the Border. He is also recorded in 1587 representing Alexander of Howa; either the date is an error or this is his son Thomas. He married Mary Ker and secondly Janet Turnbull, widow of Philip Bennet of Chesters. A marriage contract of 1542 also exists between him and Margaret, daughter of George Home of Spott. He had at least 9 children: William, who probably pre-deceased him; Walter of Fulton, who succeeded to Bedrule; Thomas, probably tenant at Spittal-on-Rule; Robert; Margaret, who married Edward Lorraine, this union apparently being unpopular with the Rulewater Turnbulis; Patrick, probably tenant at Templehall; Mark, tenant at Hartshaugh; James; and Hector, who owned Hartshaugh and Swanshiel, although this may be a confusion with the son of Thomas of Hartshaugh. Another daughter Agnes is recorded in an undated marriage contract with Robert, son of deceased Robert Scott of Raesknowe. Although some genealogies have him dying in 1572, it seems this is wrong (or else 2 Thomases are hopelessly confused). Thomas (16th C.) described as being ‘in Rawflat’ in a court case of 1540 when he disputed a ‘wadset’ with William Scott of Hassendean. Another case heard at the same time involved a marriage contract of 1536 between his son and heir George and Elizabeth, eldest daughter and heir of the same William Scott. Curiously in 1538 he had remission for the crime of stealing letters of reversion for the lands of ‘Coppitrig’ from a box belonging to William Scott of Hassendean in Nicholas Rutherford’s house in Edinburgh. Thomas (16th C.) described as ‘in the Tronyhill’ in a charter of 1536, where William Scott of Hassendean gave him ‘two husbandlands’ in ‘le Easter Hassendean’ described ambiguously. It is possible he is the same Thomas who farmed at Rawflat 4 years later. He may have been father of David of Troneyhill, who is recorded later in the 1500. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Trumble of the Gaittuscott’ in a document of 1550. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Hartshaugh or possibly Laird there. He is recorded in 1557 when he signed a bond (along with others) with the Warden John Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in the thief William Nixon (‘Clement’s Will’). Hector was probably his son. Thomas in Abbotrule was another son. His son Archie was recorded in 1567. Thomas (16th C.) brother of David of Wauchope. In 1561 he and his brother were among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. He may be the Thomas who was pledge for the Laird of Wauchope in 1553/4. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Harwoodtown, brother of David of Wauchope. ‘Thomas Turnbulis byir and barneyaird’ are listed among the lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule under dispute in 1562. He is listed as brother of David in 1567 when he was instructed to present his servant Ingram Oliver to answer charges relating to raids into England. It was either him or (more likely) his son who was hanged during the period when Sir William Cranston was a Border Commissioner, i.e. shortly after 1605. Thomas (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Hassindenbank’ in 1567 when James Heriot of Trabroun was surety for entering him into ward in Edinburgh. He was recorded as tenant in Hassendeanbank in 1571 when he and his wife, Margaret Scott, had a charter in Melrose for lands in Darnick. Their eldest son William was also mentioned, and the witnesses included Robert Scott of Over Hassendean, who may well have been his father in law. This charter was confirmed in 1616. The Thomas, younger, listed in 1579 was probably a son of his. He could be the same man as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas ‘Blue Tom’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. His is listed being ‘callit blew Thome’, but it is unclear what this nickname might have meant. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. In 1577/8 he and his brother Walter were acquitted of the murder of John, son of John Forbes of Ardmurdoch. In 1578/9 he was among members of the Turnbull family who were ordered to appear before the Privy Council to answer for slaughter of Thomas ‘Schevill’. In 1579/80 he and Walter were on a list of men accused of raiding into England. He and his brother Walter were accused of stealing 19 cows from Englishman Edward Grays in 1582. In 1583 he and Walter were supposed to be turned over to the English Warden, but William Ker of Cessford (a relative of some sort) sent them back to Scotland and they were acquitted. Ker gave caution for the pair in 1583/4 and John Cranston of that Ilk paid the £2000 penalty. He became tenant at Spittal-on-Rule in 1612. He is recorded as ‘in Rowllspittle’ recorded.
Turnbull

in a bond of 1619 with Robert Pringle (probably later of Stichill), servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, with cautioners being Mark Turnbull ‘in Hairtishaugh’ and Thomas ‘Allenstone’ Bailie of Jedburgh. There may also be some confusion between him and Thomas of Minto, who lived about the same time. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh, he was recorded as tenant in Abbotrule in 1579, when listed among Scotsmen accused of committing raids into England. He was said to have been in a party of about 40 men, led by the sons of the Laird of Bedrule, who stole 40 cows, and took the Laird there prisoner. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Hekie of Hartishaugh’. In 1579 he was listed along with several Turnbulls and others of raiding cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. Thomas ‘the Tutor’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1579 as ‘Thome Turnbull, younger in Hassindanebank, alias called the Tutor’, when he was among a group of Turnbulls accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. The group was led by sons of the Laird of Bedrule. He may have been son of the previous Thomas in Hassendeabank. Thomas of Billerwell (16th C.) listed in 1581 among men accused of murdering Walter of Rawflat. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls, but the Belses branch were also named in the accusation. Thomas of Hobsburn (16th/17th C.) accused in 1590 of raiding Middleton Hall in England in the previous year. His name is recorded as ‘Thomas Trumble of Hoppesburn the younger’, and others named were Douglasses, Laidlaws and Shiels. He is probably the ‘Thomas Trumble of Hoppesborne’ listed along with Douglasses, Laidlaws, Shiels and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton in 1590. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Trogwhen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; he was there ‘Thome Trumble of Hoppisburne’. He was also one of the ‘Turnbulls accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appside’. He was probably related to some of the others who were on trial (from Wauchope, Billerwell, etc.), but the exact relationships are not clear. He is referred to as ‘houseold man to Thomas Trumbil younger of Wauchope’. He was eventually acquitted of the crimes. Either he or his son was ‘younger of Hoppisburn’ in 1606 when he sold Hobsburn and Weens to John, brother of Walter Scott of Allanmouth. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of David of Troneyhill. In 1610 he was named along with 7 other Turnbulls (and 2 Davidsons) for continuing as rebels following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamswal brothers. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Walter, tenant in Fulton. Along with his father and several other Turnbulls, he was accused by the Laird of Traquair of cutting down and removing wood from his lands at Huntliehill in 1619. He was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear. This may be the last record of a Turnbull of Fulton. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to James Home, son of the historian David Home of Godscroft (in Berwickshire). He witnessed a bond for Home of Godscroft in 1627. Thomas of Bedrule (b.c.1585) son of William and probably grandson of Sir Thomas (although these generations are uncertain, and he could have been great-grandson of Sir Thomas). He is probably the Thomas ‘son of William Turnbull, fiar of Bedreaull’ who was a witness in 1618/9 to a bond by Walter of Bedrule to Adam of Abbotrule Townhead. By the time he succeeded, the castle was long destroyed, and the Kers had taken possession in 1623. It is unclear who he married, but he seems to have been succeeded by William and then another Thomas (last of the Lairds of Bedrule). Thomas of Wauchope (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Hector. In a court case of 1605 (in which they accused John Elliot of Copshaw of stealing livestock from their farms) he was still ‘younger of Wauchope’: his brother George and other neighbouring tenants are also mentioned. He was perhaps the leader of a band of Turnbulls who systematically raided the estates of Appotside and Harwood over the period 1598–1605. Although the rest of his family and associates were acquitted, he was separately brought to justice in 1606, but failed to appear and was declared a rebel. James Gledstains, younger of Cocklaw, acted as his surety. Willie Scott ‘man to Young Waucho’ may have been his servant, when declared a fugitive in 1605. In 1607 he and Hector of Barnhills brought a complaint against James, son of Edward Lorraine, ‘for presenting bended pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. Hector of Wauchope may have been his son, with Thomas his grandson. However, in 1653 his nephew James (son of his brother George) was served heir to his 20-pound land of Wauchope. Thomas of Minto (16th/17th C.) son of John. In 1601 he was ‘Tho. Trumble the younger layrd of Myntaw’ who, along with another Thomas, as well as James Douglas of Cavers, was accused by several Englishmen of stealing their livestock from the Stobs and the Crag. He is probably the Thomas of Minto who was one of a large band of Turnbulls who were involved in a serious fight in Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601. About 30 Turnbulls entered Jedburgh and tried to get Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost) to come out of his house, whereupon the men of Jedburgh took up arms. The fight left Thomas Ker, his servant and 2 of the Turnbulls dead and many men injured, and as a result several Turnbulls were later convicted and hanged. In 1602 he was recorded as younger of Minto when, along with Hector of Barnhills and Mark of Bewlie, he robbed a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Greatna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. In 1603 he was served heir to his father in the half Barony of Minto, including 5 husbandlands in the town of Minto. In 1604 he acted as cautioner for William Middlemas and his son James, charged with the crimes related to the 1601 skirmish. He is probably the Laird of Minto who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire in 1610. Also in 1610 he acted as cautioner for James Douglas of Cavers and his son William, that they would not harm Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk or his colleagues. In 1611 he had licence to travel abroad for 5 years. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to try 2 murderers in Jedburgh. He is also mentioned in 1622 when his son Walter became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He witnessed a report by the Justices of the Peace of Roxburghshire in 1627. In 1627 he paid caution for William of Braidhaugh and his son James. He is also recorded in 1628 when he feued lands in Midshiels. He paid the caution for the next few generations! There are several bonds and discharges in the archives of the Horsburgh family that mention him in the early 1600s. In 1626 he and Walter Scott of Ancrum had a ‘letter of deliverance’ (probably related to a debt) against Rev. Alexander Forrest of H assendean Knowe (d.1647) probably the Thomas included in the list of local men that the Baron of Hassendean was trying to remove from their lands; his son Walter (perhaps William) is also listed. He was Laird of Hassendean Knowe. In 1613 Sir George Ramsay paid him the teinds for the lands of Knowe. In 1619 he raised ‘letters of horning an poinding’ against William Turnbull, brother of the deceased Robert. He was also a juror at the 1623 Commissioners’ Court. His relationship with Thomas of Minto is unclear (but the families seemed to use the same names John and Thomas for the next few generations!). There are several bonds and discharges in the archives of the Horsburgh family that mention him in the early 1600s. In 1626 he and Walter Scott of Ancrum had a ‘letter of deliverance’ (probably related to a debt) against Rev. Alexander Forrest of Hassendean Knowe (d.1647). In 1628 he was Thomas ‘in Know’, who, along with Walter, were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with Walter Scott of Midshiels and other Scotts. He paid the caution in 1628 for Andrew of Bewlie not to molest the Scotts in Burnfoot and Midshiels. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He is further recorded in 1640 in dealings with Walter Gledstains, factor to the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of Knowe in Hassendean Parish, valued at £279 10s. The name of his wife does not appear to be recorded, however a carved panel on the house at Knowetownhead has ‘T.T.’ and ‘H.T.’ and the year 1628, suggesting that he married another Turnbull (probably Helen, which was the name of one of his granddaughters). His daughter Marion married Andrew Turnbull of Bewlie about 1640. Another daughter Elizabeth married Walter Scott (subject of a legal dispute against Walter and Janet Scott in 1644); she is the ‘Bessie’ who secondly married Andrew Riddell in 1652, tenant at Over Whitton.
He was deceased by 1649 when his daughter Barbara married John Grierson (son of the deceased Andrew), and she appears to have put an ‘inhibition’ on her husband in 1657. One of his sons was William (recorded in 1658), while John (who appears to have succeeded as Laird) was probably his eldest son. His death is recorded on a table tomb in Minto old churchyard, along with that of John of Knowe (d.1676). Thomas of Westwood (17th C.) holder of lands near Bonchester in 1643, along with ‘Harie’, who must have been his brother or son. They appear to have held separate lands, with his valued at £40 Scots. Thomas (17th C.) described as ‘in Tempilhall’ when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1654. He was brother of Robert, the tenant at Templehall. He could be the Thomas in ‘Rouletoun’ recorded in 1643, with his lands being valued at £40, and Robert also listed there. Thomas (d.c.1655) son of William, from whom he inherited the lands of Cockerheugh (part of Hassendeanbank) in 1622. He is probably the Thomas who was infested in the lands of Hassendeanbank by the Commendator of Melrose in about 1622. He is recorded as possessor of the lands of Hassendean Bank in the tax roll of the Abbacy of Jedburgh in 1626. His son Thomas succeeded to the lands in 1655. Thomas of Upper Bonchester (17th C.) Laird in 1643, and probably father of William (d.1686); this is according to Walter Deans, writing in 1887. He is probably the Thomas of Bonchester whose lands were valued at £30 in 1643. He could be the same as Thomas ‘called Clack’ who is listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls among landowners in Abbotsrule Parish; it is unclear what that name meant, or whether he was related to the Scotts who shared a similar appellation, or Adam ‘callit Clerk in Bonchester’ recorded in 1643. He may have been progenitor of the Bonchester Turnbulls who were later tenants at Wolfelee Mill, Hartshaugh Mill, Harwood Mill and Hallrule Mill. Thomas of Tower (17th C.) listed by James Wilson among the list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He is recorded being of ‘Tour’, which probably meant Spittal Tower. He paid the land tax of £104 in Cavers Parish in 1643. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas of Tofts (d.c.1690) son of William of ‘Weddelliswallis’. In 1647 he was served heir to his father’s 5 husbandlands of Minto. He was recorded in a marriage agreement in 1669 between him and Helen, daughter of John Turnbull of Knowe. This may have been for one of his sons, since he himself married a daughter of Rev. Robert Brownlie of Kirkton. He was listed by James Wilson as one of the main local landed proprietors of the mid-17th century. He was recorded as being ‘of Tofts in Kirktonme paroch’ when he paid land tax on £402 in 1663. He may be the unnamed Turnbull who paid the land tax on Tofts, valued at £300 in 1678. He is probably the Thomas ‘in Tofts’ whose testaments were recorded in 1686 and 1689. His son William was served as his heir in 1695, in the lands of ‘Over et Neth Tofts’. Thomas of Bedrule (17th C.) son of William of Bedrule. He is probably the Thomas who is recording owning half of the Mains of Bedrule in 1643 (the other half being owned by William of Bedrule). In 1668 he was served heir to his father in the lands and Barony of Bedrule. He was the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule, although by the time he inherited the family had already lost most of its lands. There was a final instrument of resignation of the Barony to Ker of Cavers in 1668. He was nevertheless allowed to remain in Bedrule Mill (where he is recorded in 1673) and part of the Mains of Bedrule. His wife’s name is not recorded, but he was succeeded by his son Andrew, and was grandfather of Thomas of the Hawick carpet factory. His other son was William, tenant at Bedrule Mill. There was also a tradition that his eldest son died in India leaving a great fortune that was taken by the government. Thomas (17th C.) brother of William, who was a mason in Newton (probably in Bedrule Parish, but possibly on Slitrig). He was one of those accused by a servant of Douglas of Cavers of stealing his wallet in a Hawick inn in 1642. He gave evidence to the Magistrates at the trial. Thomas (17th C.) brother of John of Knowe. In 1652 he was appointed as the tutor to the children of the deceased Thomas in ‘Chesterhouse’ (probably Charterhall near Ancrum), Thomas, William, Helen, Jean and Margaret. He was the nearest male relative, probably their uncle. Thomas (17th C.) son of Thomas, from whom he inherited the lands of Cockerheugh in 1655. He is recorded as ‘in Hassendeanbank’ in 1655 in a ‘tack’ with John Turnbull of Knowe for ‘Cosier’s Acre’ in Cockersyke, at the east end of Hassendean Knowe meadow (it seems likely that he was distantly related to the Turnbulls of Knowe). He had a ‘wadset’ with John Scott of Brieryyards and his sons in 1656, also involving the ‘merk land of Hassendeanbank’ (i.e. Cockerheugh). In 1658 he had a further bond with John Scott of Brieryyards. His eldest son was probably John (according to an undated document). He could be the Thomas, tenant in Hassendean, who is recorded paying the land tax for £52 in 1663. Robert, who is recorded at Cockreugh in 1694, seems likely to have been his descendant. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1662 as ‘in Roultonfute’. He was ‘Bailie in that part’ for the Earl of Lothian or perhaps to Walter Riddell. He may have been the same as Thomas, tenant of Templehall. Thomast ‘Captain’ (17th C.) tenant of Swanshield. He is named (along with 7 others) in a proclamation fixed to the Mercat Cross in the early 1680s, accused of frequenting Conventicles. He is also on the long list of fugitives proclaimed in 1684. Thomas (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1665 (although this would make more sense as 1685) he was accused of throwing his mother-in-law Helen Briggs (wife of Mungo Swan) downstairs, when ‘coming to see his spouse, her daughter then att the poyn of death’. His wife was probably Helen (b.1657), with whom he had a daughter Helen in 1681. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver William Brown in 1687. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for weaver ‘White John’ (perhaps his brother-in-law) in 1701. Thomas of Allerton (17th C.) resigned the lands of ‘East Mains of Hassindene called the Know’ to his cousin Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1690. How this relates to the history and political fortunes of the Turnbulls of Knowe is unclear. Thomas of Standhill (d.bef. 1658) recorded in a discharge of 1658 between Thomas of Knowe’s son William (‘tutor’ to his son Thomas) and John of Knowe. It seems likely that he was a close relative of the Laird of Knowe. He may be the Thomas of Chesterhouse (near Howman) whose widow made an agreement in 1664 with his younger brother William (and tutor to his children Thomas, William, Helen, Joan and Margaret) to resign the lands of Standhill to their superior Sir Walter Riddell. Thomas of Knowe (1651/2–1730) probably son of John. He was a Covenanter supporter. Note that some of these events may refer to 2 different generations. In 1678 he paid land tax on £227 8s in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Knowe). In 1680, along with others, he was declared a rebel by Adam Urquhart of Meldrum, with the implication that he was involved in the uprising at Bothwell Brig. In 1681 he was summoned to appear before the Lords of Council and Session in Edinburgh for failure to answer to a ‘decreet of horning’. The same year his property was confiscated by Adam Urquhart of Meldrum. But he had a ‘decreet of absolution’ in 1681 and in 1683 he is recorded raising ‘letters of horning’ against the minister and several officials of Selkirk. And in 1684 he is listed among men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism, his crime being ‘for rest’. In 1678 his sister Grizel married Adam Scott of Burnhead. He is probably the Thomas of Hazintoun Know’ recorded in a bond of 1679 with his brother John and sisters Margaret, Marion and Elizabeth. He is also recorded in 1690 as one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in that year, for which he was arrested. Also in 1690 there is a record of Thomas Turnbull of Allerton resigning the lands of the ‘East Mains of Hassindene called the Know’ to him; it is unclear whether this was just some legal maneuver. He appears to have acted as a collector of the Hearth Tax for Roxburghshire in 1694. He also served as an elder for Minto Kirk. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He rented Huntlaw from Archibald Forrest of Huntlaw in 1703 and was still renting it in 1715. He bought Hassendean Townhead from William Little the same year. A bill for William Little from Gideon Scott of Highchester was passed on to him by Bailie Robert Hardie of Hawick in 1705. He paid a similar bill for William Little according to a discharge by Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1705. In 1716 he brought a libel case against James Elliot, an Edinburgh waiter. About 1720 he is recorded in a document relating to teinds in Wilton Parish (the part that had been in Hassendean). A letter of 1724 from James Clerk suggests that they were brothers-in-law to each other. His will of 1682 (while he was still alive) is in the National Archives. He married Agnes Mackie, who died in 1716 in her 58th year. He was probably succeeded by his son Anthony and in 1721 his daughter Agnes married Thomas Thomson, merchant in Hawick. He and his wife were buried in Minto Kirkyard. Thomas (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright Francis Gledstains in 1682. He is probably one of the Thomases recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Johnston and their children included James (b.1688). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. His children included John (b.1688). He could be the Thomas whose daughter Jean married William Beattie in Robertson in 1705. He is probably the Thomas who (along with Michael) witnessed a baptism for William in Roberton in 1686. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (1644/5–1729) tenant in Dyke farm, son of Thomas, who was also tenant there. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably one of the 3 men of that name who are listed in the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. Thomas of Stand-hill (1644/5–1729) son of Thomas. He is recorded in a discharge of 1658 when Thomas of Knowe’s son William was his ‘tutor’. He was known as a leading local supporter of the Covenanting cause, being converted by John Livingstone, who preached at Auncrum. In 1676 he helped John Blackadder escape after the Sheriff broke up a meeting near Selkirk. He paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He fought at Bothwell Bridge in 1679, and escaped the battlefield along with Walter of Bewlie. He was persecuted, had his possessions removed from him, and was sentenced to execution, but escaped capture and eventually returned to his estate at Standhill. He is probably the Turnbull ‘of Stainhall’ listed among those named as officers of the militia to defend against ‘the papists’ in 1689. He is listed among those appointed to visit schools in the Act of Parliament established in 1690 after the Revolution. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire (but may have already been deceased). He had 2 sons: one was a soldier; the other was Deputy-Governor of Dumbarton Castle. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick on the shortlist of candidates for Cornet in 1711 and 1712. It is unclear how he was related to other Turn-bulls. He may be the same man as the merchant involved in a court case in 1748, in which writer Robert Taylor paid his bill with money that perhaps did not really belong to him; he also took Taylor to court to recover his money. He may be the Thomas whose mother was given money by the Hawick Session in 1723 for teaching poor children. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Turnbull in Wilton in 1714. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1717 when he married Janet Dryden, the marriage also being proclaimed in Jedburgh. Thomas (1680/1–1753) son of Thomas, tenant in Dykes farm. His wife Marion Brown died in 1743, and their son Thomas died in 1752,
Turnbull

aged 25. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Thomas (1691/2-1768) resident of Hawick Parish who married Betty Scott, who died in 1777, aged 72. Their children included: James (b.1725); ‘Beatie’ (b.1726); James (b.1727); Isabell (b.1728); Thomas (b.1731); James (again, b.1737); Walter (b.1738); Betty (b.1739); and Anne (b.1741). He may be the same man as Bailie Thomas. He was buried under a tablestone at St. Mary’s. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1725 he was living at Mabonlaw when his daughter Mary was baptised. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Helen Telfer in Wilton in 1729. Bailie Thomas (18th C.) father of Bailie Thomas of Fenwick. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he came from (but presumably not closely related to Bailie ‘Tammy’ and the Minto branch, despite the similarity of names). He may be the Thomas who sold East Mains (of Hawick) to the Duke of Buccleuch, along with John Scott and Rev. Patrick Cunningham in the 1740s. He was probably the Thomas who was a Bailie in the 1730s, 40s and 50s. He witnessed a baptism for skinner Walter Scott in 1746. He was ‘Bailie Thomas Turnbull, elder’ when he served as Magistrate in 1757. In that year there was a dispute over residents of farms near the Common making ‘bakes’ at Blackgrain Moss, which were broken up on the orders of the Council (when he was visiting Newcastle) and the offenders fined, with him settling with them in opposition to the other Bailie, Robert Scott. He is probably the Bailie Thomas who purchased Fenwick in 1762 and other properties in 1771, including Rashiegrain and Commonbrae. In 1763 he was engaged in business in London when his son (also an ex-Bailie by then) was commissioned by the Hawick Town Council to write to him to arrange for an exchange of a new bell for St. Mary’s. Also in 1763 he was ‘Bailie Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick’ when he witnessed a baptism for his son Thomas. In 1765 he is probably the Thomas ‘senior’ who witnessed a baptism for glazier William. In 1767 he was described as ‘Thomas Turnbull, elder of Fenwick, Merchant in Hawick’ when he produced the Hawick Town Charters at the court case for the Division of the Common. In 1777 he was one of the claimants for a share of Hawick Common, when it was divided, gaining more than 15 acres. He is said to have left 2 sons and 2 daughters (although these generations seem confused by multiple Thomases!). He was succeeded by his son, also Bailie Thomas. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for glazier William (who was probably related to him) and in 1764 witnessed a baptism for his son Thomas (called ‘Junior’ at that point), as well as for a daughter of schoolmaster William Dyce (when described as ‘late Bailie here’). In 1764 ‘Bailies Turnbull older and younger’ and in 1766 both ‘Bailie Turnbull Senior’ and ‘Junior’ witnessed baptisms for baker John Osburn. Thomas (b.c.1730) son of Adam of Denesyde. After the family were forced to leave the Rule valley he became a weaver in Tarsetfoot, Tynside. His sons Adam and William returned to the Rule area, but he could not be convinced to move. He also had a son Michael (who died young), and daughters Isabella (who married William Walker, farmer at East Fodderlee) and Mary (who married Thomas Telfer). He lived to be 99. Thomas ‘Tammy’ of Knowe (d.c.1770) probably succeeded from Anthony, who may have been his father. He is recorded in a discharge of 1758 and in 1763 when he leased Appletreehall, Townhead and part of Clarilaw. He is easily confused with Thomas of Minto, who was probably a distant cousin. He was involved in an action against the Duke of Buccleuch over teinds in the parishes of Minto and Hassendean in the period 1749-65. He is probably the Turnbull of Knowe recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was one of those who raised an action against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, over the division of Hassendean Common in 1762. In 1769 he had a marriage bond for his son John with Agnes, daughter of Walter Riddell of Muselee. He married Sussana Scott, daughter of Robert Scott of Falnash in Edinburgh in 1755 (and she made a disposition in 1789). He was succeeded by his son Thomas. His daughter Violet married Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk in 1778, and the titles and lands probably passed to the Horsburgh family thereafter. Another daughter, Elizabeth, married Dr. James Watson in Kelso, and was also an heiress of his lands. His will from 1764 (when he was still alive) is in the National Archives. Some of his correspondence also survives (in the Horsburgh family collection) including letters from his cousin Patrick Heron, brother-in-law James Holt and sister Isabella. Thomas of Knowe (d.c.1788) son of Thomas. He is recorded as part of the bond for his brother John’s marriage to Agnes, daughter of Walter Riddell of Muselee in 1769. He is recorded in an ‘assignation in trust’ with Robert Scott, cashier in Jedburgh in 1774. He was listed on the roll of elector for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is still recorded in 1786, although it appears that the estates passed to the Horsburgh family through marriage to his sister Violet. He was taxed for having a gardener and a footman in the period 1778–86. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–86, when he had 3 carriage horses, and 2 in 1787. He was taxed for owning a carriage in 1786 and 1787 and for having a female servant in 1785–87. The ‘Mrs Turnbull of Know’ who paid the female servant tax in Hawick in 1790 is probably his widow. There is a disposition by him (among the Scott of Raeburn papers) in 1787, and another to Alexander Horsburgh (among the Elliot of Minto papers) in 1788 relating to Clarilaw and Hassendeans. His trustees were recorded as owners of Alton, parts of Wester Clarilaw and Appletreehall Townhead in the 1788 county valuation (and 1811 Land Tax Rolls). Thomas (1706–74) of Burnfoot, and also described as ‘of Catshill’ (i.e. Catshawhill). He was son of Andrew and Jean Scott. He was factor to the Minto estate in 1738 (and hence sometimes confused with the Turnbuls of Minto) and farmed at Minto Cleuchhead. He also managed the estate of Haining and the farm of North Synton for Lord Alemoor, where he planted numerous hedges and plantations. He bought the farm of Catshawhill, but sold it after a few years (for a large profit). He was involved in the beginnings of the local carpet trade about 1753. There is a record (from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of Thomas Turnbull & Company, Hawick, manufacturing woollen articles (presumably carpets) in 1763. He joined with others in 1769 (or perhaps 1759) to form a partnership in the main carpet factory in Hawick. He obtained the lease for Burnfoot and also West Buccleuch in 1760. He also acted as a local money lender before there were banks; he loaned money to William Kerr of Abbotrule, Thomas Scott of Stonedge, Henry Elliot of Harwood, Gideon Scott of Fulfash, Douglas of Cavers and Lord Minto. He was appointed as an arbiter for the process of deciding on the division of the Common (one of a group of 2 lawyers and 2 country gentlemen), but died before the process was completed. In 1735 he married Nellie (or Nelly) Thomson, who was said to be from Whitleee, Redewater, and she died in 1747, aged 34. In 1753 he secondly married Esther, daughter of James Douglas (farmer at the Trows); she was widow of Alexander Ogilvie and aged 38 when she remarried, but still had 3 children. He was recorded as factor to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1758, when his son Gilbert became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This son joined the Honourable East India Company, was inclined to be extravagant, and it is said he eventually refused to pay his bills. His children with his first wife were: Andrew (b.1736), who died in infancy; Agnes (b.1737), who married James Turnbull, tenant of Hassendeansbank; Jean (b.1739); Andrew (again, b.1740/1), who also died young; Gilbert (b.1741/2) who was a surgeon in the East India Company and died unmarried; an unnamed son (b.1743); William (1745–1825), who inherited Burnfoot; and Marion (b.1747), who died young. With his second wife he had: Nelly, who married George Thomson, farmer at Bught-Rig; Esther, who married Thomas Scott of Peel; and Thomas, who became a manufacturer in Hawick. He died at Burnfoot. Bailie Thomas (1730/1–1825) of Fenwick, merchant in Hawick. He was eldest son of Bailie Thomas, and is easy to confuse with his father. He may have been the Thomas born in Hawick to Thomas and Betty Scott in 1731. He was Cornet in 1753. In 1758 he was recorded as a skinner. He was already a Bailie by 1763, when he is described as ‘younger of Fenwick’. Also in 1763 he was described as ‘junior’ when asked to write to his father in London to arrange for an exchange of the great bell of St. Mary’s for a new one; they are described as ‘Thomas Turnbuls, late Baillies, Senr. and Jun.’ Both he and his father witnessed baptisms for baker John Osburn in 1764 and 1766. He was one of the Magistrates during the dispute over the Division of the Common, and also a neighbouring landowner, getting 15 acres himself. He may be the Bailie Turnbull whose garden wall formed part of the boundary of the Little Haugh in 1767. He is probably the Thomas of Fenwick who gained 15 Scots acres in the Division of the Common in 1777. He is probably the Thomas who was a Bailie in the 1770s and 80s. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of Fenwick (valued at £100), land in Weensland (valued at £35 18s 7d), as well as owner of two parcels of lands (valued at £31 19s 4d and £31 19s 4d, possibly near Burnflat) that had belonged to Patrick Cunningham. He paid tax in Hawick Parish for having a female servant in 1788–91 and also paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was ‘of Fenick’ in 1787–97 when he paid the horse tax, being called ‘Mercht.’ in 1794 and 1797. In 1797 he was probably the Thomas who was ‘Esq.’ on the Horse Tax Rolls, having 3 work horses and the merchant who paid tax on a saddle horse in Hawick, as well as paying the dog tax. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (along with his son William). In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of Fenwick, Brieryyards, Hornshole, part of Weensland, part of ‘Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands in Hawick’ and ‘Part of Particolt Lands in Hawick’. He was the largest owner of land within the Burgh of Hawick on Wood’s 1824 map, although he must have been extremely old by this time; he was therefore an important heritor in the Parish. His lands included: the area later named Fenwick Park; a large section of the Terraces; fields on the north side of the Loan; and Wylie’s Dub. In 1806 the farms of Palace and Shortaces were added (and they would later own the Rodono Estate in Yarrow as well). In 1757 he married Martha, daughter of David Ogilvie of Brieryyards, through which his family gained Brieryyards in 1783; she died in 1806. His children included: Thomas (b.1758), who died young; Martha (b.1759); William, who succeeded (b.1760); Thomas, again (b.1763); Elizabeth (b.1764); and David, who died in India before his father. In 1758 the witnesses were David Ogilvie of Brieryyards and James Weir. For the 1763 baptism he was described as ‘late Bailie’ and the witnesses were Bailie Thomas of Fenwick (his father) and Bailie John Scott. The witnesses in 1764 were ‘Bailie Turnbull Senior’ (his father) and Andrew Scott. It is possible he is the Thomas whose daughter Betty died in Hawick in 1777. A portrait of him, painted by Scott of Edinburgh, is in the Museum (and donated by Andrew Kennedy). He died at the venerable age of 94. Thomas (1731/2–95) merchant in Denholm, son of Alexander (d.1761) and Helen Murray (d.1780). His wife Agnes Rutherford died in 1783, aged 29. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Thomas ‘Tammy Trumble’ (18th C.) clothier and dyer in Hawick. It is said that the family were once quite well off, but their fortunes changed and he had to move to find work, including as a dyer in a factory in Kilmarnock. It was also said that he ‘was rather an eccentric in his way’, being a frequenter of ale-houses and ‘fond of singing songs, not always of the most delicate character’. He may be the same as Thomas the dyer in Hawick who was paid in 1757 for ‘dyeing and dressing officer’s clothes’. He was listed (as a clothier) along with Gavin as witness to a baptism for weaver John Smith in 1764: he was probably son or younger brother of Gavin. He was also recorded as a dyer in 1764 when he witnessed a baptisms in Hawick for George Scoon. In 1770 he was living at Roughheugh and recorded as a parishioner of Wilton, and in 1772 was at Damside. In 1770 he and Gavin were witnesses to a baptism for William Thomline (who may have been their employer at Roughheugh Mill). By 1774 the family were in Galashiels and in 1778 were in Portsburgh, St. Cuthbert’s Parish, Edinburgh. He married Beatrix Ruecastle in Hawick in 1762; she is probably the Beatrix, daughter of Bailie John Ruecastle, who was baptised in Hawick in 1742. Their children were: Jane (b.1763), who probably married Ebenezer McLellan in Hawick in 1794; Gavin (b.1764), baptised in Hawick, poet and actor; Betty (b.1766), baptised in Hawick; John (b.1768), baptised in Hawick; Walter (b.1770), baptised in Wilton; Thomas (b.1772), baptised in Wilton, who later emigrated to America; Euphemia (b.1775), baptised in Galashiels; Henry (b.1778), baptised in Edinburgh; and Walter (again, b.1781), baptised in Kilmarnock, who was a weaver and died in Glasgow. The record in 1781 states that Walter was the 6th son and 9th child, and that this was the first marriage for both parents. The baptismal witnesses recorded are: in 1763, John Ruecastle (probably his father-in-law) and Gavin Turnbull (perhaps his father); in 1764 and 1766, the whole congregation; in 1768, ‘present Magistrates’ Walter Ruecastle (probably his brother-in-law) and William Elliot; in 1770 Robert Scott (perhaps the miller at Roughheugh) and Thomas Scott; in 1772 James Scott and John Mathieson; and in 1778 Edinburgh dyers Henry Duncan and James Fairney. Based on the children, his parents names were probably Gavin and either Jane or Euphemia. He may have been related to the later dyers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Heap in 1770. He married Margaret Henderson and their children included: John (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Scott. Thomas (b.1740) eldest son of James, farmer at Dykes, and Helen Spindie. He was born at Dykes in Cavers Parish. He was locally very well-known in his day as a writer of poetry. He wrote a piece about the old village of Bedrule called ‘the Deserted Village’ and he also put the Shorter Catechism into verse. He was grand-uncle to John Turnbull of Sunlawhill farm. It is said that he made a lock for the old burial ground at Spittal-on-Rule, which was preserved at Weens in the early part of the 20th century. He is probably the Thomas recorded as farmer at Dykes on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Thomas (1756–97) son of Thomas and sister of Janet. He was probably grandson of John and brother of John, who farmed at Mackside. The family were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Dodburn in 1789 when his daughter Isabel was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Bailie Thomas ‘Bailie Tammy’ (1758–1823) local businessman and Magistrate. He is easy to confuse with the contemporary Thomases of Fenwick. He was the youngest son of Thomas of Minto and his 2nd wife Esther Douglas, and was father of John Turnbull of the Dyeworks. He became a partner in the Hawick Carpet Company in 1779. He later carried on the dyeing department as a separate business, for a while situated where Bridge House was later located. This business ultimately led to ‘Turnbull’s the Dyers’. He was involved in a large number of local business enterprises in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. He was listed as a manufacturer in Hawick on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1794 and 1797 and on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797, as well as the manufacturer of that name on the subscriber list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He was also the first agent for the British Linen Bank in Hawick, his appointment lasting until 1806. He was known for being an independent thinker and having a caustic manner, e.g. when he ordered Warren Hastings off his land at Wilton Glebe. He was listed as a bankrupt carpet manufacturer in 1820, and hence it appears that his business did not go so well in the latter part of his life. He appears to have married 3 times: Margaret Darling (d.1829); Isabella Aitkin; and Mary, sister of John Oliver, Town Clerk of Hawick. His children (with his first 2 wives) were: John (b.1788); Isabella (1805–83), who married James Orniston and David Miller; Christina (b.1815); Ester (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1818). He is probably the Bailie Thomas of the Sandbed whose son Thomas died in Hawick in 1811. The death of one of his daughter is recorded in 1838 as ‘Miss Turnbull daughter of Bailie Turn- bull Carpet Manufacturer’. Thomas (1770/1–1854) blacksmith at Gillbraehead, probably son of Robert, who was previously blacksmith there. He is listed among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Isabella Elliot, who died in 1815, aged 44. Their children included: Robert (1799/1800–23); and Isabella, who died age 14. They are buried in Et- tleton Cemetery. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Crosshall in Wilton Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) manufacturer in Hawick, who was on the shortlist for Cornet in 1794. It is possible this could be the same man later known as ‘Bailie Tammy’, although that Thomas appears to have been married by 1794. Thomas Scott (1784–1867) eldest son of William of Burnfoot. He was effectively disowned after his mother disapproved of his marriage to Margaret Goodfellow about 1810. He was at East Middle when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He farmed at East Middle from at least 1841. In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 400 acres and employer of 7 people, while in 1861 he farmed 380 acres, employing 9 men and 3 boys. He is listed on the tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk. He was a registered voter in Cavers Parish. In politics he was firmly a Tory and took a leading part in local events surrounding the Reform Bill and the disruptions at the local elections in the 1830s. In 1837 he was one of those who were besieged in the Tower Hotel (possibly for several days), and he was one of the witnesses who travelled to London for the Parliamentary inquiry. His first wife died in 1823 and about a year later he married married Mary Beattie (who died in 1880). His children with his 1st wife were: William (1812–47), whose twin brother died at birth; Thomas (1814–76); Michael (1816–92), died at Southsea; Elizabeth (b.1818); Eleanor (b.1820); and Agnes (b.1822). And with his 2nd wife: Agnes; Archibald Oliver (1825–69), who became a lawyer in Jedburgh; Peter (1826–27), who died young; John (1828–84); Margaret (b.1829); Peter, again (1831–34), also died young; James Douglas (b.1833); Jane (b.1834); Peter Stephenson (1836–1921), who was Surgeon General; Robert Dempster (1838–93); Scott (1839–59); and Adam (1841–80). It was said that he was heir to a fortune that had been left by a son of the last Laird of Bedrule, who died in India; he apparently told the Rev. Craig of Bedrule that if the money could be recovered he could take half himself. Thomas (1788–1883) younger son of Thomas and grand-son of Adam of Denesyde. He farmed at Broombalks and then for a while at Tandlaw. About 1810 he married Ellen Chisholm and had 9 children. He emigrated to Huron, Canada in 1860, following his son Andrew. Thomas (1795–1856) 6th son of James and Betty Adamson. He had 6 brothers, including the Schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He was born at Hobkirk Kirk- stile. He moved to Newcastleton and became a carrier there. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory operating to Edinburgh once a fortnight. His cart also left the Nag’s Head in Hawick every Saturday, bound for Newcastleton. In 1851
he was at about 1 Whitcheaster Street. In 1852 he was listed leaving the Coach & Horses bound for Jedburgh and Kelso every Wednesday, and to Newcastle on Thursdays from the Bull & Butcher. He married Elspeth Anderson, who died in 1873, aged 76. Their children included: James (b.1817), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (1821/2–55); Henry; John B.; Thomas; and Agnes. In 1852 he is recorded operating a twice-weekly service between Newcastle and Hawick. He may have been the Tom from Castleton who was listed among subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshie. He was a shepherd on Templehall farm. His son John was also a shepherd, who married Agnes Telfer. Thomas (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was son of draper George and Betty Wilson (daughter of ‘Haunless Wat’). He married Jean, daughter of John Veitch and Jean Elliot in 1813. Their children were: Elizabeth, who died at Lanton; Jean or Jane (b.1815), who also died at Lanton; George (b.1818), who emigrated to Australia and married Margaret Watt; Jane (b.1820), who married; Margaret, unmarried; and Georgina, also unmarried. Jean, who died in Hawick in 1816, recorded as daughter of merchant Thomas, may have been his daughter. Thomas of Fenwick (1799–1874) only son of William of Fenwick. He was said to be ‘of weak intellect’ and his estates were placed in the charge of trustees, under whom they prospered and expanded. This included the purchase of Midshiels in 1852 and the Barony of Rodono and farm of Over Kirkhope. He was probably the Thomas ‘Esq. Younger of Fenwick’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is recorded as Thomas ‘esq. (of Palace)’ and residing at Brieryyards along with his father, who died in 1840. In 1841 he was recorded as ‘independent’ at Brieryyards, with Alison (his mother) and Martha (probably his aunt), plus 3 servants. In 1861 he was living at Briery Yards along with his head trustee David D. Scott; he is described as ‘incapable’. Nevertheless he was still formally a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was succeeded by his cousin William. Thomas (b.1800/1) frame-worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and in 1851 on Teviot Square. His wife was Margaret. It is possible he was the same man as ‘Tam-a-Linkin’. Thomas ‘Tam-a-Linkin’ (1801/2–61) town crier. Orphaned at an early age, he became a Town officer, using both bell and drum, serving as Halberdier at the Common Riding and crier at public meetings etc. For a while his fellow Officer was Jamie Smith. He was known as a wit and used to refer to the Common Riding as ‘the coming struggle’. He died suddenly after becoming ill on the street, and was buried in an unmarked grave in the Wellogate. A cairn was placed there in the 1980s. A portrait of him exists (painted by ‘Scott’), and he has been immortalised in a poem by J.C. Goodfellow – ‘Nae mair ‘sheepheads an’ plucks’ he’ll cry, Sae much a head; his drum and bell are baith laid by – Tam-a-Linkin’s dead’ [JCG] (there are various spellings of his nickname). Thomas (1802–81) younger son of Adam, tenant in Hassendean-bank. He was baptised in Minto Kirk. He is recorded as farmer at Brieryhill in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In Perth in 1837 he married Margaret Oliver and they had 6 children. He farmed at Brieryhill but later emigrated to Guelph in Canada and died in Bosworth, Ontario. He is probably the Thomas recorded as farmer at Brieryhill in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Thomas (19th C.) listed in 1852 as carrier between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh once a week. He left for Hawick from Abbey Place in Jedburgh, every Wednesday. Thomas (b.1806/7) farmer at Lees in Wilton Parish, recorded in 1861. His wife was Isabella and their children included George, Mary, Thomas and Robert. Thomas (b.1809) son of Walter and Helen Oliver, he was smith at Stobs Woodfoot, like his father before him. In 1856 he presented to the Archaeological Society a walking stick owned by Gen. Elliot, who defended Gibraltar, and a lock from Fast Castle. In 1857 he read a paper at the Society, on ‘Certain phases of the Great Exhibition of 1851’. He is recorded at Stobs Woodfoot in the 1861 census, living with his mother Helen. Thomas ‘Tommy’ (1811/2–77) eldest son of Adam, descended from the Turnbulls of Denesyde. He farmed with his father and brother Michael at Midburn (or ‘Africa’). They worked hard to improve the land and ended up fairly well off. He is recorded as farmer there in the 1860s. He died unmarried. Thomas (b.1816/7) shepherd at Newton (‘the Nitton’) in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Thomas, William, Janet and James. Thomas (b.1818/9) from Jedburgh, he was saddler and post-master in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as the postmaster (and perhaps listed in error as ‘John’ as saddler and ironmonger, as well as librarian). He may have been son of the earlier saddler Robert. In 1841 he was living with Margaret, George and Robert, probably his siblings. In 1851 he was living with his sister Betsy and brother Robert. In 1861 he was living on Main Street, as postmaster and saddler (employing 2 men). His wife was Agnes F. and they had daughters Agnes M. and Margaret P. Thomas (19th C.) teacher at Glendouglas School in the 1860s. Thomas (b.1822/3) born in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Whitlaw and then at Newmill on Slitrig. He is recorded there in 1856 and in 1861 was farming 100 acres and employed 2 men and 2 women. He married Mary Hardie in 1858 and their children included Walter, James, Ina Elliot, Robert, David and Euphemia. Thomas (b.1823/4) born in Ancrum Parish he was farm steward at Spittal-on-Rule in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Elizabeth S., and their children included Sarah, Margaret, James and John. Thomas (1824–1907) born in Glasgow, son of solicitor Joshua and Jeanie Marshal. He is said to have been raised by a relative in Denholm after being orphaned. He became an architect in Edinburgh, then emigrated to Australia and later moved to California and then New Zealand. He is responsible for the designs of several churches and other buildings, particularly in Wellington. Thomas (b.1828/9) born in Wilton Parish. He was recorded as ‘fundholder’ on the 1861 census, when he was living at 13 Kirkwynd. He married Mary Hardie in 1858 and their children included: John (b.1859); Margaret (b.1861); Jane (b.1864); Mary (b.1866); Esther (b.1868); and James (b.1871). Thomas (d.1890) Hawick solicitor of the late 19th century. His parents lived in Appletreehall. He was in partnership with Walter Haddon from 1880. He was a supporter of the Common Riding. He was also a prominent member of the St. John’s Lodge and was buried with Masonic honours. Thomas Scott (1836/7–77) from Hawick. He was recorded dying of consumption at Stirling East in Australia. Thomas (19th/20th C.) 2nd son of John, farmer at Minto Kames. He went to Australia with his brother John when gold was discovered there (probably in the early 1850s). After returning he farmed at Easter Boonraw, then moved to Greenhouse in Minto Parish. In 1858 he married Mary Hardie, daughter of a Hawick farmer. Their children were John (b.1859, who farmed Boonraw and Stouslie), Margaret (b.1861), Jane (b.1864), Mary (b.1866), Esther (b.1868, who died young) and James (b.1871, who farmed at Greenhouse).

Thomas (19th/20th C.) resident of Bonchester. He was on the Committee of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. Walter of Minto (14th C.) possibly a son of the original William of Rule. He held the lands of Minto, perhaps from 1329, being confirmed by David II before 1370. Perhaps the same ‘Waltero Tornebole’ was the witness to a charter of Adam of Roule, for the lands of Altonburn, in about 1354. Also in 1354 he witnessed a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. About the same time he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden for Melrose Abbey; he is recorded there as ‘Waltero Tornbul’. Walter of Minto (15th C.) son of John. He instituted an inquiry in 1424 in order to try to invalidate the grant his father had made to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh in 1390. This was on account of John Turnbull having leprosy at the time (making the transaction void under Scots law), together with the rumour at the time that Sir William Stewart had died in France. However, the Stewarts continued to hold the half barony of Minto. It was said that in 1429 he interrupted the sasine ceremony to invest Sir William Stewart in Minto, again claiming his hereditary right. As a result it seems that the barony of Minto was split, so that thereafter there were 2 families who were ‘of Minto’. Walter (15th C.) on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam and another for the Barony of Hawick in 1427. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th C.) Bailie of Selkirk recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1451. Walter of Minto (15th C.) son of William. In 1458/9 he was granted the lands in the Barony of Minto that had belonged to his father. Walter of Harden (d.bef. 1482) recorded in 1468 when he resigned the lands of Harden to Margaret Wardlaw, Lady of the half Barony of Wilton. His son John had a charter for Harden in 1482, suggesting he either died just before this, or John reached maturity then. It is possible he was the same Walter who witnessed a charter for Thomas Middlemas for lands in Peeblesshire in 1476. Walter (15th C.) mentioned at the 1493 Justice-ai in Jedburgh as tenant in Bonchester, when his son George did not appear and Andrew (in the same place) was fined. Walter (15th C.) resident of Hornshole. He is recorded in 1493 along with Adam, also in Hornshole, when they were allowed to ‘compone’ for a series of crimes: stealing livestock from 3 separate men in Minto; bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder Minto; and for common theft. Their surety was Robert Scott of Howpasley. Walter (15th C.) recorded in a 'letter of reversion' for the lands of East Mains of Hassendean, which are probably the same as 'Knowe'. This letter was transferred from the old baron to the new baron in 1493/4. He may be an ancestor of the later Turnbulls of Knowe. It is also possible that he was related to the Henry who held a quarter of Appletreehall in 1470. Walter (15th C.) member of the household staff of James IV. In 1490 he was given cloth and in 1497 when he was given a horse. He is recorded being in the King's Chamber in 1492 when he was given his fee for the term. It is not known what branch of the Armstrongs he was from. Walter 'Gaberlunzie' (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. In 1494/5 he was again fined for non-appearance, serving as his own surety, with his nickname given as 'gabirlenze'. He was surely related to Adam 'Gabirlenzies', who was killed in 1509. Walter of Gargunnock (d.c.1527) recorded in 1482 when William Douglas, Sheriff of Teviotdale protested that he had caused him (the Sheriff) to be summoned, but had not himself appeared. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. He also had a 1482 action against Walter Bertram, Burgess of Edinburgh for money owed, and a 1483 action against Elizabeth Somerville and others. In the judicial proceedings of Parliament in 1484 he had to prove that his neighbour stole cattle from his lands of Gargunnock (in Stirlingshire). Also in 1484 he leased the Crown lands of Singlie and Erncleuch. In 1479 and 1486 his son William had a lease for the 'Weststeid of Hartwod' in Ettrick Ward. In 1492 he gave a charter infefting Andrew Douglas in the lands of Hassendeanbank. His son William is also mentioned. In 1493 he had a precept of sasine to George Turnbull (probably also a relative) for the lands of Hassendeanbank. And in 1501 there was a sasine to his heirs Margaret and Janet Turnbull for Hassendeanbank. He may be the 'Waltero Turnbulle' who witnessed a sasine for Scott of Branxholme in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, and appears to have been Baron of Hassendean. Walter of Stouslie (15th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He served as surety for himself and was fined for not appearing. He was listed as 'Walterus turnbule de stowislee'. He was also listed in 1494/5 as owner (along with Walter Scott of Howpasley) of sheep that were stolen from Stouslie by the Grahamslaws of Newton. He was surely related to George, who was recorded in Stouslie in 1493. In 1502 his son Adam failed to appear at the Justice- aire and his surety, William in Crumhauwa, was fined. Walter (15th/16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1501, among 10 men whose fines were remitted. There were several other Turnbulls listed, including from Fulton and Bonchester. Walter (15th/16th C.) tenant of Branxholme. In 1502 he had remission for stealing 168 cows and sundry goods from the Murrays at Carterhaugh, as well as stealing 2 horses from there 'in company with the Traitours of Levin'. George Turnbull of Hall-rule and Robert Scott in Stirches were sureties. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded as one of the King's minstrels in 1504. His name is listed as 'Watte Trumbull'. Walter (16th C.) tenant in 'Wollee' (i.e. Wolfelee). In 1526 he was among the Borders men who accompanied the Homes on attacks against the Earl of Arran. Adam 'there' is also listed, so probably a son or brother. Walter Wat of Howa (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1530 along with David of Wauchope and others, for 'assistance given and afforded to Thieves and Malefactors in violation of their Bonds'. He was recorded there as being 'of Howay'. He could be the 'Watt Trumbill of Howatt' whose son and heir Archie was pledge in 1553/4, as part of an assurance given by the Rutherfords and Turnbulls. He is probably the Wat recorded 'in Howa' in 1565 when he had to 'enter' James Turnbull of Abbotrule to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is probably the Watt 'in Hova' whose son was among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present in 1567 to answer changes of raiding into England. It is possible that 2 generations are represented here. He was presumably an ancestor of the later Turnbulls of Howa. Walter (16th C.) owner of 1 particat of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter 'the Flooer' (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. His is listed being 'calit the Flour', but it is unclear what this nickname might have meant. Walter (d.bef. 1567) described as 'in Dalkeith' in 1567 when his eldest daughter Agnes became heir to his lands of 'Tempillandes and Browlan- des' at the head of the Rule. Walter (16th C.) recorded as 'Walter Trumbill in Caveris' when he witnessed a Melrose Abbey charter relating to the lands of Crook in 1569. There is no way to know where in Cavers he may have been tenant. Walter ‘Watt’ of Bewlie (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Bewly’ in 1576 among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Minto, Kames and Troney-hill), who swore not to harm another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chester). In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Wood-head of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was listed along with John of Minto, Hector of Wauchope and Wat of Holsburn in a bond of 1580 to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. Also in 1580 he was ordered, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule and John of Minto, to enter persons into ward in Edinburgh Castle (which he apparently did) or be declared a rebel. William Redpath of Greenlaw was his surety (for 1000 merks) that he would appear before the Privy Council. In 1581 he was accused of being in a group of Turnbulls who came to the farm of Rawflat and there harassed the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull, then stole the cattle and goods from the farm; his sons Robert, William, Mark and Andrew were also listed. This accusation was repeated in 1583, and in that year Robert Kerr of Ancrum and his son William Kerr were caution for him not to harm Agnes, widow of Walter of Rawflat, and her tenants and servants; John Andrew signed for him ‘because I can not wret’. In 1583/4 he was granted half of the meadow of Belses by Andrew Home. He was listed in 1584/5 among Border Lairds who were to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they had been helping to quiet the Borders. His son Walter was killed in 1580. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. Walter ‘Watt’ (16th C.) tenant in Troneyhill. He is recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Minto, Bewlie and Kames), who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chester), not to harm each other. Daniel from there is also listed and hence surely related. Walter ‘in Rafflatt’ is recorded in 1576/7 in a complaint that the bond of 1576 had been broken; hence he may be the same man as Walter of Rawflat. Walter (d.1580) son of ‘Watt of Bewlye’, recorded in 1581 when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst made a list of 10 men who were called to account for his murder in the previous year. He may have been the Walter whose son Hector was killed at Lilliesleaf by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in 1604. Robert, who was killed in 1601 was presumably either his brother or son, and Robert’s brother Mark must have been similarly related. Walter ‘Wat’ of Templehall (16th C.) witness in 1593 to the marriage contract between a daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and a son of Hector Turnbull of Wauchope. He was deceased by 1604 when his daughters Jean and Beatrice inherited Templehall and Brewlands. He was also called ‘of Vauchope’, suggesting he was probably a son of the Laird of Wauchope. His widow Marion Lorraine (along with several Turnbulls) was forced to leave Templehall and Brewlands, following a court case of 1605. It has been suggested that she might have been a daughter of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. Walter ‘Wat’ of Bedrule (1560—c.1623) son of Sir Thomas and Janet Turnbull. He was listed along with his father and brother William among the group of men accused in 1573 of raiding the farm of Ancrum Woodhead. In 1576 he was listed along with his father, William in Barnhills and Mungo Bennet in Chester in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Ancrum: he was by then listed as son and heir of Sir Thomas. It appears that by the time he succeeded the Turnbulls of Bedrule were no longer very powerful, with the Castle in ruins and much of their Barony lost through defaulted ‘wadsets’. In 1577/8 he and his brother Thomas were acquitted of the murder of John, son of John Forbes of Ardmurdoch. In 1578/9 he was among members of the Turnbull family who were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for ‘the slauchter of umquhile Thomas Schevell’. In 1579/80 he and Thomas were on a list of men accused of raiding into England. He was included along with his father and others in a bond of 1580 to keep peace with the Turnbulls of Minto and others. In 1583 he and his brother Thomas were charged with offences against an Englishman (Edward Grays), but the Warden, William Ker of Cessford, ‘in respect of the neirnes of kin with him’, delivered them back to Scotland, instead of to the English Warden. At that time he was referred to as being ‘of Fulton’. In 1583/4 several men of Hassendean were cited for failing to appear to give evidence against him and his brother; it was later confirmed that they were all declared as rebels, although this situation must have been resolved. About 1590 he was listed as ‘in Bedrule’ among landed men of the Borders. In 1591 James Douglas of Cavers was surety for him, probably for failing to keep good order. Also in 1591 he was one of the local Barons who signed a pledge to support the King against the Earl of Bothwell. In 1607 a case was brought against him by William Alanson, Bailie of Jedburgh. In 1618 he had a bond with George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule, for which the witnesses were his son George, Robert in Bedrule (probably his brother) and Lionel in Hartshaugh. And also in 1618 he had a bond with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule Townhead; his wife Helen Lillico is also mentioned. He had a bond in 1619 with Robert Ker of Fairnington, and another with George Ker, heir of Cavers Carre relating to the good behaviour of his son William. Also in 1619 he was among the Turnbulls who were accused by Sir John Stewart of Traquair of cutting down timber on his lands at Huntliehill, and was denounced as a rebel. However, he must have received remission, because in 1623 he had a bond for the good service of his friend George Deans, servitor to Thomas Nicholson, advocate in Edinburgh. In 1623 he served as cautioner to David Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh. Also in 1623 he testified that he had seen Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst’s flocks grazing on certain lands for ‘fifty yeir syne and mair’. In his old age he is said to have been quite a nuisance, along with his sons and grandsons, and they were denounced as rebels for several crimes, including injuries done to Stewart of Traquair, owner of Wells. Lord Cranston the Border Commissioner tried to remove him from the ‘waste ground’ he occupied, although this attempt failed. He married twice, his first wife’s name being unrecorded. His second marriage was to Helen Lillico by 1618. He had at least sons, Andrew, Adam, George and William (who succeeded). In 1587 it is stated (by English Warden Lord Hunsdon) that ‘a sunne of Bedroolees’ was slain in the encounter between Borderers and Englishmen under Sir Cuthbert Collingwood. He was probably also father of ‘Gawin Turnbull, son of the Laird of Bedroull’, who was declared a fugitive in 1605. Walter ‘Wat’ of Hobbsburn (16th C.) possibly son of Robert. He is recorded in 1567 being ‘of Hopisburne’ and brother of David of Wauchope; he was among men ordered answer accusations of raiding into England, with his servant David Scott also listed. He is also recorded at Hobbsburn in 1568. In 1574 he had to appear before the Regent and the Lords of Secret Council to answer the charge of building his own mill without permission, but after producing a charter of ‘feu-ferme’ for his lands he was discharged. In 1580 he and Hector of Wauchope were cautioned to appear before the Privy Council, with Henry, heir of John Stewart of Craighall as surety. He is listed along with John of Minto, Hector of Wauchope and Wat of Bewlie in a bond of 1580 to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. He is probably the Walter recorded as ‘in Hoppsisburne’ in 1582 when he was ordered to restore Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to his lands in Feu-Rule. Kerr had an ‘escheat’ for his goods in 1583/4, along with George and John (in Hallrule and ‘Roull’), who may have been close relatives. There is another charge in 1585 for witnesses to appear to decide the ongoing court dispute. He is ‘Watt Trumble of Hoppesborne’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1590. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘callit Sir Davidis Wattie’ in 1601 when he was part of the band of Turnbulls who attacked Kers in Jedburgh. Walter of Rawflat (d.1581) tenant who was declared a rebel and asked in 1581 to remove from the lands of Rawflat and part of Belses. He was later that year killed by a group of Turnbulls, including David of Belses and his brothers George, John and Adam, as well as Thomas of Billerwell. In 1583 his wife Agnes complained to the Privy Council about this and also how another group of Turnbulls, led John of Minto, harassed her and her children by coming to Rawflat, ‘bodin in armes, with hagbuttes and pistolettis’, stole goods and livestock, and shot at them. The excuse given was that he himself was already declared a rebel, but clearly there was some family feud involved here. In 1583 Robert and William Kerr of Ancrum paid caution for Walter of Bewlie not harming his widow, or her tenants and servants. More details were recorded in the 1603 trial of George Turnbull of Belses for a long list of crimes. This included killing him, as well as his son William in 1600, capturing and torturing his servant Adam Turnbull, and shooting his son Walter. His daughter Isobel was one of the pursuers of the case. George Turnbull was acquitted of most of the crimes, but had his right hand cut off for illegally carrying fire-arms, and was later executed for other crimes, including stealing a horse from Rawflat in 1577 and 20 cows in 1579 (as well as adultery with his nephew’s wife). Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Fulton in 1619 when he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear in court along with several other Turnbulls. Their crime was taking wood from the Laird of Traquair’s land at Huntliehill. His son Thomas is also mentioned. He was presumably related to the Turnbulls of Bedrule. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as being in Skelfhill in the Commissioners’ Court in 1622 when he was cleared, along with Geordie Morton in ‘Harrett’, of stealing 2 sheep from ‘Laird Swarley’ (an Englishman). Walter of Rawflat (16th/17th C.) sold Rawflat, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1623. He is probably the ‘Walter Trumbill, younger of Raflat’ who was shot in the arm and thigh in 1602 by George Turnbull of Belses, this taking place between Jedburgh and Belses. He also had a horse stolen from him by George of Belses about the same time, this being included in George’s final trial before his execution. In 1632 his sister Margaret was served as ‘heir portioner’ to him in the 10-pound lands of the Mains of Feu-Rule. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as being a resident in Know in 1628, when he was charged along with Thomas in Know to keep the peace with Walter Scott of Midshiels, Adam Scott of Burnfoot and others. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Rultownhead along with Adam in 1643. The lands were valued at £140. Walter (17th C.) son of James ‘in Hassiden bank’. In 1632 he feued part of Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He is probably the Walter listed on the 1643 county valuation ‘for his lands in Raperlaw, 17 bulls half mean half bear, £110, should be £110 10s’. He is probably also the could be the Walter of ‘Rapparlaw’ listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, with the same value. Walter (17th C.) from Nether Ancrum, he is recorded in a valuation of 1643. He was part of the Chesterhall branch and ancestor of the Turnbulls who farmed Spittal-on-Rule through the 19th century. He probably had sons Walter and William. He was probably related to Andrew in Nether Ancrum (son of Andrew), who was served heir to his mother ‘Malie Krinklaw’ in 1636. Walter (d.c.1682) tenant in Strange when his will was recorded in 1682. His farm was presumably the one in Abbotrule Parish. Walter of Bewlie (17th C.) appears to have sold Bewlie to Thomas Elliot, tenant in Borthwickeholds, in 1672. However, this may have been only part of the lands (or else he retained the designation ‘of Bewlie’ after selling the family lands). He was recorded as ‘portioner of beulie’ in 1678 when he paid the land tax in Lilliesleaf Parish for part of Bewlie, valued at £390. He was declared a fugitive for being present at the Bothwell Brig uprising in 1679. He was Laird in 1684 when the Laird’s brother William was listed among the men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. However, it is unclear what happened to him, and he may have been rehabilitated at the Revolution of 1689.

He was recorded in the 1690 Act of Parliament for the visitation of schools. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Janet Knox in 1686. They had daughters Bessie (b.1687) and Margaret (b.1689). The witnesses in 1687 were William Young and John Turnbull (who was probably related). Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, or more likely the part that was once Hassendean. He married Janet Welsh in 1679 and their children included: Mary (b.1680); Janet (b.1684); and Bessie (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were Thomas Scott and William Young and in 1687 were Thomas Scott and John Dodds. Walter (17th C.) married Janet Martin in Roberton parish in 1687. Walter (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Walter (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. There are 2 men of this name listed, and given how common the surname was locally, there is probably no way of determining who they were. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Birkhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Robert, who was also there at that time, as well as possibly George, recorded in 1685. Walter (17th C.) resident of Deanbrae according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant at ‘mylnholme’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear whether this was was ‘Millholm’ (or Millburn) near Hermitage village or the much further south Millholm. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Foulshiels in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the ‘Walter Trumble, at the East Port’ listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) tailor on the east-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the same as the Walter at the East Port. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller in Hawick in 1700. Walter (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident of Deanbrae according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the ‘Walter Trumble, at the East Port’ listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) tailor on the east-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the same as the Walter at the East Port. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller in Hawick in 1700. Walter (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. Walter (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was also recorded there in 1696. He married Agnes Cowan and their children included William (b.1696). The witnesses were John Armstrong and Andrew Rodger. Walter (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1711 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Lamb in 1719. Walter (d.c.1743) portioner of Ancrum, part of the Chesterhall branch. In 1707 he had a son Walter and in 1710 a daughter Ann. His son Walter was still ‘younger’ in 1742, but not in 1743, suggesting the year of his death. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Deanhead in 1717, when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be the Walter who married Helen Huntly in 1714. John (b.1715), Margaret (b.1722), Janet (b.1728), John (b.1731) and Walter (b.1733) may also be his children. Walter of Wester Swanshiel (c.1700–c.50) son of James and Elizabeth Scott. He succeeded his father in the lands of Wester Swanshiel in 1724. His children included Helen (b.1726), Magdalene (b.1727), John (b.1729, who succeeded), William (b.1729, probably a twin of John, who did not long survive), James (b.1731) and William (again, b.1733). He may also have been father of George (b.1739) and Walter (b.1741) who were baptised at Lilliesleaf. Walter (18th C.) Schoolmaster at Minto in the early 1700s. He may have been the same as the Schoolmaster at Hawick slightly later. In 1725 he raised ‘letters of horning and poinding’ (to try to recover a debt) against ‘John Mekell’ tenant in Hassendean Townhead. And in 1733 his son Gilbert became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Walter ‘the Little Maister’ (d.c.1756) Schoolmaster in Hawick in the mid-to-late 1700s. He was master of the Parish or ‘English’ school (in distinction to the Grammar School). His office and school were down the Punch Bowl Close. He was also Dean of Guild as well as Session Clerk in the 1730s. He served as one of the first postmasters in Hawick, but was found not to be suitable after a short trial. His nickname came from his diminutive stature. He had very brittle legs that were constantly being fractured and became curved into ‘S'-shapes. Apparently some bones of this description were once kept in St. Mary’s steeple after being found by the grave-digger! In 1737 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick ‘for his service to the place’. He is recorded as Schoolmaster in 1739, when his daughter Margaret married William Easton (Schoolmaster at Ewes) in Edinburgh, while when his daughter Ann married Alexander Ogilvie in Edinburgh in 1758, he was already deceased. It is known that James Inglis became Schoolmaster of the Parish School in 1756. Assuming there were not two local schoolmasters called Turnbull at the same time, then he is probably the same Walter recorded as Schoolmaster at Minto in 1733. The same Walter was probably the collector for the poor in Hawick, recorded in the 1740s. It is possible that Maizie (d.1808), recorded as daughter of the deceased schoolmaster Mr. Turnbull, was his daughter. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1723 and 1724 he was at Highchesters. His children included Agnes (b.1723) and Janet (b.1724). Perhaps the same Walter was at Borthwick Mains in 1727. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1729 he was at Howcleuch when his daughter Janet was baptised. There are several other children born in Roberton around this time who could be his. Walter (18th C) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1721, 1731, 1734, 1736 and 1743 (although it is possible there are 2 generations here). His children, baptised in Roberton included: Bessie (b.1721); Walter (b.1731); Walter (again, b.1733); Jean (b.1734); Ann (b.1735); Robert (b.1736); John (b.1739); Thomas (b.1741); Bessie (b.1743); and Thomas (again, b.1745). He may have been brother of John who was also at Parkhill. Walter (1702–73) farmer at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. His connection to other local Turnbulls is unclear. He paid the window tax for Firth in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. His first wife may have been Isobel, sister of Walter Elliot of Ormiston, the marriage being in Roberton Parish in 1738. He married as his second wife Dorothea, daughter of Mark Chisholme and Barbara Benett. He had 3 daughters: Barbara (1752/3–1821), who married George Pott of Todrig; an unnamed daughter; and Isabella (1757–1835), who married John Grieve of Hoscote and Craik. He also had a son, whose name is unknown, but whose children included Christian and John, who moved to Ontario. The payment for ‘ye bells to Lady Firth’s borile’ (i.e. announcement of the burial with St. Mary’s bell) recorded in Hawick in 1731 probably refers to his mother. Possibly the same Walter of Firth purchased the farm of Greenhouse (in Minto Parish) from Andrew Davidson in 1769. The ‘Mrs Turnbull of Firth’ who paid the female servant tax in Hawick in 1789 and 1790 is probably his widow. He is buried in Lilliesleaf Cemetery along with his 2 wives and daughter Barbara; he may have died in 1777, aged 74, his 2nd wife dying in 1804. Walter (1707−97) son of Walter, he was a portioner of Ancrum. He married Betty Dun (1718−88). Their children included: Isabel (1742−98); Walter (1743−1822); Janet (1745−48); John (1747−80); James (1751−1844, ancestor of the Turnburls of Spittal-On-Rule); and Agnes (b.1754). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Shiel. He married Mary Scott and their children included: ‘Somervel’ (b.1737), clearly named after the minister; William (b.1740); and Alexander (b.1745). The witnesses in 1745 were merchant Robert Taylor and William Scoon, servant to Rev. Somerville. Walter (18th C.) resident of ‘Mainse’ (presumably Borthwick Mains) when his daughter Ann was baptised in Roberton Parish. Margaret (b.1761) was probably also his daughter as well as an unnamed child (b.1763). He is probably the Walter who married Betty Hume in Roberton in 1760. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1764 he married Katherine Dyce, as registered in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: Thomas (b.1764); William (b.1766); William (again, b.1767); James (b.1772); and Robert (b.1774). Walter (18th C.) rented Easter Swanish from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1767. Walter (18th C.) of Rashiegrain, Hawick Parish heritor around the 1770s. He was probably connected with the Turnburls of Fenwick, who owned Rashiegrain a little later. He may be the ‘Turnbull, Esq; of Rashiegrain’ (with no first name given) listed in the 1788 county valuation as owner of Rashiegrain and Commonbrae, valued at £260 19s 4d. The lack of name may mean he was deceased at about that time and succession was unclear. It is also possible he is confused with William of Rashiegrain. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1776. Walter (d.1776) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Wilson in 1773. 3 years later his death is recorded as ‘Husband to Mary Wilson’. Walter (18th C.) tradesman in Hawick, being a carpenter, wheelwright and agricultural instrument maker. Gideon Scott was apprentice to him around the 1780s. Walter (1743−1822) son of Walter, he was portioner of Ancrum, like several generations of Walters before him. By 1781 he was ‘of Chesterhall’ rather than ‘younger, portioner of Ancrum’. He was listed as owner of part of Nether Ancrum in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He married Elizabeth Borthwick, and she died in 1827, aged 70. Their children included: Margaret (b.1771); Walter (b.1774); Mary (1781−1812) and James (b.1781, who farmed at Billerwell). Walter (18th C.) carrier of Belses, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1794, when his daughter Catharine married James Allan. She could have been the ‘Kathrine’ born to Walter in Ancrum in 1768. Walter (b.c.1765) wright in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was probably living on Canongate in 1841. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1789 he married Janet Hogg, from Kirkton Parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) tenant at Harwood Mill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He is probably the tenant who was said (by Walter Deans, writing in 1887) ‘to have been a man of great strength and agility, and a famed player at the Hobkirk Ba’’. Walter (b.1776) son of Thomas, he was blacksmith at Stobs Woodfoot in Kirkton Parish. In 1841 he was at ‘Birkwood Foot’. He is probably the Walter listed at Woodfoot among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His married Helen or ‘Nelly’ Oliver in 1806. Their children included: Mary (b.1807); Thomas (b.1809), was also a blacksmith; Francis (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); William (b.1815); Eliza (b.1818); and Helen (b.1819). Walter (18th/19th C.) doctor in Hawick from 1800, also acting as a ‘man-midwife’. Walter (b.1787/8) joiner at Stiches Croft. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, James, Mather, Ann and George. Walter (b.1794/5) born in Roberton Parish, he was a farmer. In 1851 he lived at No. 4 Burn Row in Wilton Dean, and was a ‘Proprietor of Houses formerly Farmer’. By 1861 he was farming 380 acres and employing 6 people at Acreknowe. His mother was Margaret and their children included Williamina, John and Ann. Walter (18th/19th C.) listed as vintner on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Walter (1805−64) eldest son of James of Chesterhall, who later farmed at Billerwell. He was the last of the Walters of Chesterhall. Bailie Walter (19th/20th C.) corn merchant who was in Hawick Mill for a while. His mother was Janet Knox, daughter of the tenant at Little Whitlaw. He was probably the Councillor of that name who was one of those who turned out for the Common Riding in the late 1800s, adding to its popularity among respectable men of the Town. Walter (b.1861) son of James, tenant farmer at Billerwell. In 1896 he married Georgina Louisa, on ly child of Rev. A.C. McPhail of Hobkirk. He farmed Hartshaugh Mill, was also for a while Parson in or near Hawick, canonic law student at Louvain in Belgium. He drews in 1420 and spent the early 1430s as a in the old church. He graduated from St. An-

and the `Willelmum Turnbull de Philiphalch' on the `retour' panel for the lands of Caverton in 1425 and 1429/30. William (c.1400–54) reported to have been a younger son of the Laird of Bedrule and noble on both sides (his mother perhaps being a Stewart of Minto). It is unclear who his father was, although he was surely closely related to John of Bedrule who is recorded in 1432. He was probably born in Bedrule Parish and baptised in the old church. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1420 and spent the early 1430s as a canon law student at Louvain in Belgium. He was also for a while Parson in or near Hawick, being described as ‘Rector of Hawick’ in 1430 when appointed as Dean of the Arts Faculty at St. Andrews. He was witness to a local charter (swapping Heap between the Langlands’ and the Scotts) in 1431, where he is ‘Magistro Willemlo Turnbule rectore de Havic’. He also wrote a letter testifying to being a witness to this, where he is ‘persone off Hawyc’ (i.e. Parson). Sometime before 1434 he was presented by James I to the benefices of the deceased Walter Stewart, Dean of Moray, although he already held ‘the parish church of Haroyk (rectius Hawyk) in the diocese of Glasgow’; he is described as being ‘a chamberlain of the pope, a bachelor of canon law, and the said king’s proctor in the Roman court, and who is related to divers barons in the third and fourth degrees of kindred’. He was in Florence afterwards and in 1439 graduated as Doctor of Canon Law at the University of Pavia. He had privileges bestowed upon him by Pope Eugenius IV, including Archdeacon of Lothian and appointment to the See of Dunkeld in 1447. He was Vicar of Edinburgh around 1446 and became Bishop of Glasgow in late 1447 or early 1448. He was also important in the Scottish court, becoming Keeper of the Privy Seal, and as such witnessing many documents for James II (e.g. in 1444 and 1446 for the Earl of Athole and in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1440s and 50s). He obtained a Papal Bull that led to the founding of Glasgow University in 1451. However, his plans for developing the new University were derailed following his death only a few years later. In 1450 he was witness the a charter of Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Branxholme. In about 1452 he witnessed a document for the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. It was stated by a later chronicler that he played a part in the downfall of William, Earl of Douglas (superior of the Barony of Hawick), who was killed by James II in 1452. He certainly loaned the King money, and earned special treatment for himself, his see and his newly adopted town (which became a regality). A tradition states that he founded Jedburgh Grammar School (although there is no evidence to support this). He probably died in Glasgow. There is a memorial to him in Bedrule Church, unveiled in 1954. A school in Bishopbriggs is named after him, as well as the Catholic Chaplaincy at Glasgow University. William of Hassendeanbank (15th C.) recorded as a witness in 1432 to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He is probably related to the later William of Hassendeanbank.

William of Whithope (d.bef. 1456) witness in 1431 to the transfer of the lands of Heap from Langlands to Scott. In his letter of ‘attestation’ he is ‘Wylliam Turnbule off Qwythope’. He was recorded as witness to the 1447 charter by Margaret Cusing to Walter Scott of Buccleuch for the ‘Cusingland’. His son Philip received a charter of the lands of Whithope in the Barony of Hawick in 1456. William (15th C.) Chamberlain of the Bishop of Glasgow. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1453, 1454 and 1455, and appears to be different from William, Bishop of Glasgow.

William of Minto (15th C.) recorded in 1456 as ‘Willelmus Turnbule de Mynto’ in a document regarding the lands of Whitchesters; it is possible that this refers to his being witness to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. In 1458/9 his son Walter had a confirming charter for his lands in the Barony of Minto. He was witness to a safe of lands near Branxholme in 1461, given by Sir Walter Scott to Katherine Inglis. He is recorded there as ‘Wyl Turnbull of Myntow’, while George of Bedrule was also a witness. In 1464/5 he was ‘William Turnebull of Mynto’ when he was on the panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. Given that there was a suggestion that Bishop William Turnbull’s mother was a Stewart of Minto, there may be a close family connection. William (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Annan when he witnessed a charter for the Church of Carlaverock in 1492/3. He may be the Master William recorded in 1490 when he was given lambs on the Crown lands of ‘Gildhouse’, because of the wars. William (15th C.) recorded as resident in ‘langhop’ in proceedings of the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for several crimes, including stealing from him: 3 cows and an ox; a cow and an ox on another occasion; a grey horse; one other horse; and 60 sheep at different times. It is unclear where ‘langhop’ was, presumably Langhope, possibly the one near Todrig, but perhaps one elsewhere (or a transcription error). He may be the same William who had something stolen from him at Shielwood Meadow by Thomas Lauder of Todrig. William of Hassendean (15th/16th C.) son of Walter. He is listed as son and heir of Walter in 1479 when he leased the western part of Hartwood (which probably corresponds to Hartwoodburn). He was also son of Walter of Gargunnock in 1486, when he leased ‘Weststeid of Hartwood’ in Ettrick Ward. In 1492 he was listed as son of Walter of Gargunnock when he infefted Andrew Douglas in the lands of Hassendeanbank. In 1493 he is the ‘umquhile Wilzam Trumbull of Cargun

- In 1431, William of Whithope witnessed the transfer of the lands of Heap from Langlands to Scott.
- William of Minto (15th C.) was a witness in 1447 for the transfer of the lands of Whithope.
- William of Minto was a chamberlain of the Bishop of Glasgow in 1456.
- William of Minto was the son of Walter, who was listed as son and heir in 1479.
- Andrew Douglas inherited the lands of Hassendeanbank in 1493.

Oliver; the person called to enter him was George Turnbull. At the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 he served as surety for George Young, resident of Minto, as well as for Robert Young, son-in-law of John Turnbull, and John Young, and was fined for their non-appearance. He was also surety for David Scott, ‘Lady’ (who had remission for raiding farms at Minto, among other crimes). Also in 1502 he was recorded at the Jedburgh Justice-aire as having stolen 120 sheep from George Rutherford at Longnewton (which were reset by Adam Scott in Highecheaters). Additionally in 1502 he served as surety for David Scott called ‘Lady’, in Stirches, who had a remission for his part in several different raids, including burning and stealing from the tenants at Minto and also stealing livestock from Broadmeadows and from Haining. Furthermore, he was fined for failing to enter Walter Aitkin in the court and was surety for Thomas Young. And in 1506 Adam of Billerwell had remission for associating with him and his accomplices, the rebels Mark, Edward and Walter Turnbull. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh for lands relating to the Lords Home. He was also in 1506 recorded as superior of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood). In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1510 he was a witness to an indenture between the Erskines and the Kerrs for lands in Synton. He may be the William of Minto who was the first in a long list of Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King; George Turnbull ‘there’ is also listed, as well as John ‘in Mynto’ and another John ‘in Mynto’, cousin of William of Minto. He may be the same William of Minto who is recorded in 1522 being asked by James V to receive George Lord Home as tenant in his lands of Greenwood (or Girnwood), with a precept of sasine following in 1525. He may have been succeeded by William, who was ‘fiar’ of Minto in the 1530s. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Crumhaugh. At the Justice-aire in 1502 he was surety for Adam son of Walter in Stouslie, who failed to appear, and so he was fined. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. Walter Aitkin in Minto was convicted of associating with him and Mark, while they were ‘at the horn’. His location is not given. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote. He was recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while Andrew and John in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester. He was recorded in 1502 among men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the people called to enter him were George of Hallrule and John Rutherford of Hundalee. His son Laurence was also mentioned in the same case at the 1502 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, as well as David in Bonchester. William (15th/16th C.) brother of Thomas, Laird of Bedrule. He was recorded in 1502, when he was listed among Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in court to answer to the charge of murdering Robert Oliver. His surety was Mark Ker of Dophilinton. He was distinct from William in Gatehousecote and William in Bonchester, who were also listed, but he may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) Abbot of Melrose 1503–07, as a rival to David Brown. The disputes of the time were resolved when he was transferred to become Abbot of Coupar in Angus, where he served until 1524. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. William (15th/16th C.) son and heir of Adam of Philiphaugh who was listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any involvement in the death of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Also in 1504 he was recorded as son and heir of Adam of Philiphaugh when he had a sasine for the lands of Maxton Craig, as a procurator of Helen Rutherford, heiress of Rutherford of that Ilk. He is probably the William who had a sasine for ‘Barbourisland’ (part of Philiphaugh) in Selkirkshire in 1503. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant ‘in Crag’ in 1516, when he had remission, along with several other Turnbulls, for their assistance given to Alexander, Lord Home. This was presumably Minto Craig. William (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hallrule, listed there along with Robert and Thomas in a 1516 pardon for a large number of Turnbulls for assisting the Homes against the King. William (16th C.) described as ‘fiar of Mynto’ in 1533 when he was part of an inquest held at Jedburgh into the ownership of lands at Longnewton. He is probably the same as William of Minto, or else his son. He may also be the ‘William Turnbull in Mynto’ listed along with William of Minto and many other Borders men in a 1526 pardon for acting against the Earl of Arran. David ‘there’ is listed afterwards, and hence perhaps his brother. William (16th C.) tenant of Rulewood recorded in the 1516 pardon.

for Turnbulls who may have assisted Alexander, Lord Home. He is also listed as ‘in Rowlewod’ on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. He is also recorded as ‘in Roulwod’ when part of a panel deciding on disputed lands, held in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably the tenant of John Gourlay of Rulewood, and possibly related to the later William of Rulewood. William of Hassendeanbank (16th C.) recorded in 1550 in a bond of obligation with Thomas Turnbull of Bothwell. He may be the William in Hassendeanbank who is recorded in a contract with John Gourlay of Rulewood in 1540 (probably not 1640, as recorded). Probably the same William had a sasine for a piece of land at Hassendeanbank in 1536 and sasine for a ‘merk land’ in Hassendean called Cockerheugh in 1556: this William’s son and heir was Thomas, who inherited Cockerheugh in 1622 (or perhaps there was another William between). He may be the ‘William Trumbill of Hassindane Kirk’ listed as one of the pledges for the Laird of Bedrule in 1553/4. It seems likely he was related to the Turnbulls of Knowe and he was probably related to John of Hassendeanbank who is recorded in 1564. It is possible he was the William who was son to Thomas and Margaret Scott, recorded in a charter for lands in Darnick in 1571, confirmed in 1616. William ‘Proffit’ (16th C.) part of the panel for trying John Gledstains of Cocklaw with murder in 1561. It seems likely that he was relatively local. William of Minto (16th C.) recorded in 1532/3 when his son and heir William sold the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne in the Barony of Minto to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably either the same man or the son of the William of Minto recorded in 1499 and the early years of the 16th century. In 1526 he was listed among the large number of Borderers who had remission for rising up against the Earl of Arran; he is there the first listed of several Turnbulls. And in 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. In 1528 he had a royal pardon for crimes of treason (presumably assisting the Laird of Branxholme at Skirmish Field), along with Scott of Howpasley, Scott of Allanhaugh and Scott of Hassendean; there he was described as ‘franktenementar of Mynto’ (i.e. free-holder). He may be the William who was listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He was also listed among the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. Also that year he was fined for being responsible for certain Turnbulls from Rulewater, particularly a Turnbull of Catlee who had stolen horses and goods from Alexander ‘Berthilmow’; he had to pay for the stolen goods or else the penalty would be to ‘byrne his house, expell and hald him furth of ye cuntre’. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. It seems likely he was the deceased Laird of Minto mentioned in 1548 when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was given ward of his lands until such time as his heir became of age. His heir (possibly the John recorded from the 1590s) was presumably the Turnbull of Minto who was recorded as superior of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) in 1551 and for whom Hector Turnbull was recorded as ‘tutor’ in 1553/4. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. William (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1565/6 he brought a case against Robert Kerr of Woodhead, over his lands of Over Auncrum. Probably the same William, Burgess of Edinburgh, was obliged in 1572/3 to remove himself from that city, on the orders of the Regent; Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule was his surety, and hence he was probably related. William (16th C.) tenant in Bonchester. In 1581 he was declared a rebel for failing to appear to answer to the charge that he stole a horse from Archie Elliot of the Hill. William (16th C.) described as a wright and Burgess of Jedburgh. He was tenant of Spittal-on-Rule from 1586. William (c.1541–c.75) eldest son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He had a charter granting him Bedrule in 1570/1, but probably predeceased his father. In 1573 he was recorded as ‘sone and apperand air’ of Sir Thomas, when they were listed among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. He appears to have been deceased by 1576 when his brother Walter was described as son and heir of Sir Thomas. He was deceased by 1584 when the Privy Council let her uncle Alexander Home continue to have the right of choosing the husband of his daughter (and perhaps only child) Margaret, rather than yield to the claim of another uncle, Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes. In fact Margaret eventually married Robert French, Laird of Thornydykes and Abbotrule, but died in 1593. William of Barnhills (16th C.) recorded in 1571/2 when he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1573 he was among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. In 1576 he was listed along with Sir Thomas, Walter (son of Sir Thomas) and Mungo Bennet in Chesters, in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Auncrum. He was also listed in 1576 as joint cautioner, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule, for Hector, David, George and John, sons of Adam in Belses. Additionally in 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Hallrule, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who has a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other; he was one of the cautioners for John Turnbull of Howden and others. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He was then found liable for the fines imposed. He was also listed in 1580 along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule, Thomas’ son Walter and Edward Lorraine, younger of Harwood, in a bond to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Minto; he signed with ‘my hand at the pen’, meaning he was unable to write. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was listed among the Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. His brothers Robert, Gavin, and Hector, and uncle Andrew of Barnhills were also listed. He is also recorded on Monipennie’s c.1597 (but drawn up earlier) list of Lairds in the Borders. William ‘Will the Lad’ (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen accused in 1590 of being involved in a raid on farm across the Border in 1588. He is cited along with David Laidlaw of Antroch and Adie Laidlaw ‘Great Legs’. William (d.1600) son of Walter of Rawflat. In 1603 George Turnbull of Belses was denounced as a rebel for a long list of crimes, including his murder, and although acquitted of the new charges, he was later executed for similar crimes. This may point to some sort of feud among the Turnbulls of the Lilliesleaf area about that time. William of Knowe (16th/17th C.) one of a group of about 30 Turnbulls who were involved in a skirmish in Jedburgh in 1601, part of an ongoing feud with the Kers. He was also referred to as being ‘in Tounheid’. In the skirmish 4 men were left dead and many were wounded, including himself being shot ‘in the wambe, be the schot of ane pistolet with twa bulletinis’. It is unclear how he was related to the later Turnbulls of Knowe. He is probably the William ‘in Munto-tounheid’ recorded in 1610 when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsions) for not having found caution following being found guilty for the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Graham law brothers. William of Bedrule (c.1580–c.1625) son of Walter. He was probably the William whose letter of 1602 to Thomas Ker of Cavers (his father-in-law and presumably his superior) still exists, detailing how he took over possession of Fulton, and listing the tenants there. In 1612 he was William of Bedrule, who, along with William of Hawthornside, were complained about to the Privy Council by William (perhaps a distant relative), merchant in Edinburgh, for not paying him. He is probably the William ‘fear of Bedrule’ who witnessed the marriage of the daughter of William of Templehall (probably his brother) in 1614. He may have been the ‘fear of Bedrule’ whose son Thomas witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule in 1618 (however, these men could also be his uncle, son of Sir Thomas, and brother of Walter). In 1619 he was ‘fear of Bedrule’ when his father Walter had a bond for him with George Ker, heir of Cavers Carre, for not ‘finding caution of lawburrows to him’. He probably only succeeded his father Walter in about 1620, and although he was still called ‘Laird of Bedrule’, he lost most of his family’s hereditary possessions. He gave caution for David Turnbull of Jedburgh at the Commissioners’ Court of 1623, and probably died shortly afterwards. He married a daughter of Thomas Ker of Cavers and was succeeded by his son Thomas. He may have been the William whose only daughter Margaret married Robert French of Thornydykes and Abbotrule; however, the dates do not work out, since she died in 1593, and her mother was supposed to be Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. William (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert of Bewlie, who was killed in Jedburgh in 1601. He also had brothers Mark and Andrew. In 1603 he was appointed as tutor to his nephew Andrew, who was served heir to Robert in 1607. William ‘Willie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Wille Turnbull, callit the guidman’ in a letter listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in 1602. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as William ‘called of Beulie’ in 1610. He was named among 8 Turnbells and 2 Davidsons when a commission was appointed by the Privy Council to apprehend them for failing to find caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers; his brother Mark was also listed. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Hawthornside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1612 along with William of Bedrule when there was a complaint to the Privy Council by William (perhaps a distant relative), merchant in Edinburgh, for not paying him. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbells. William ‘Will’ of Braidhaugh (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 among a group of Turnbells and Lorraines accused by Englishman Gray of Morpeth of stealing from him. John ‘of Brodehaugh’ is also listed and so presumably his father or brother. He is also described as ‘in Braidhawche’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear at court in Edinburgh. In 1606 James, son of Edward Lorraine of Harwood was declared a fugitive for resisting a messenger that came to apprehend him, after he had been declared a fugitive for theft and slaughter. William Turnbull of Braidhaugh. He was recorded in 1611 when Robert Home of ‘Carrolsy’ was cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court; however, he was acquitted. His son James was found not guilty of stealing sheep from ‘Hairrlesyd’ (probably Earlside) in 1622. In 1627 Robert Kerr of Cavers complained that he had acted to resist the apprehension of his son James (who had been declared fit for military duty), and hence should be held in Edinburgh Tolbooth until James was produced. Also in 1627 he paid caution to the Privy Council, promising that he and his son James would satisfy the minister and session of Abbotrule Kirk ‘for the insolence committit be him at the said kirk upoun Sonday the tyme Divine service’. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish, along with John. With several other Turnbells, he was accused by the Laird of Traquair of cutting down and removing wood from his lands at Huntliehill in 1619. They were denounced as rebels for failing to appear. William of Tour (16th/17th C.) cautioner for Adam Turnbull in a bond he had with John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton in 1619 (registered in 1624). In 1622 he was ‘in Tour’ when he sat on the assize at the Justice Court held in Jedburgh. He is also recorded in 1622 as ‘of the Tour of Roulwode’ (i.e. Rulewood) when he had a ‘letter of apprising’ against John Elphinston of Henderstoun (in Peeblesshire) for non-payment of several bonds. He thereby obtained the Barony of Henderstoun and half of the lands of Glen-sax, but sold them in 1628. He was probably son of James ‘of the Toure’, recorded in 1579/80. William (16th/17th C.) served heir to his father John in Philiphaugh in 1606, inheriting the 5 acres there called ‘Barbourisland’. He is probably the William in Philiphaugh who was attacked by William Elliot (formerly Laird of Horsleyhill) in 1619, with Elliot attempting to stab him with a ‘whinger’ after he had loaned a plough to Sarah Lough in Selkirk, to till a piece of land that Elliot wanted for himself. Probably the same William was recorded as ‘portionar of Phillophauch’ when he was on the assize at the Commissioners’ Court in 1623. William (16th/17th C.) son and heir of James of West Lees in Hobkir Kirk Parish. He was mentioned along with his father in 1617 in a bond with James Haswell, surgeon of Jedburgh. He was owner of West Lees in 1643, when it was valued at £66 13s 4d. William (d.bef. 1647) recorded as being of ‘Weddellis-wallis’ in 1647, when his son Thomas of Tofts was served heir to his 5 husbandlands in Minto. It is unclear where ‘Weddellis-wallis’ might have been or if he was the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He may have been the Laird of Tofts whose death before 1643 meant that the family lands in Kirkton and Abbotrule Parishes were just ascribed to ‘Laird of Tofts Turnbull’, with no forename. Also in 1643 there were £102 of lands in Minto owned by ‘Turnbull of Tofts’. Given that most of the rest of Minto was owned by the Turnbells of Minto, it is possible that he was related to them. William of Barnhills (17th C.) brother of John of Barnhills who succeeded to the lands in 1628 and immediately sold them to William Bemmet. William (17th C.) described as ‘ma- son in Newton’ in 1642, when, along with his brother Thomas and several other people, he was accused by Douglas of Cavers’ servant of stealing his wallet in Hawick. He gave evidence, saying that he never saw the wallet. William of Langraw (17th C.) signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was ‘in Langraw’ in 1628 when served heir to his brother John of Barnhills. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands valued at £104. He may have been father of the

William of Langraw recorded in the late 1600s. Rev. William (c.1606-c.67) son of Thomas of Minto, he had 3 other brothers who were also ministers. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1626 and became minister of Makerstoun in 1635, continuing there until his death. In 1632 he feued lands in Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. When his brother John of Minto died, he helped arrange for his nephew John to marry (Elizabeth Elliott of Stobs), even although he was under age. He probably acted as legal guardian for this nephew, and continued to have some rights over his estates later. He was recorded as owner of Hornshole in 1643, with John (probably his nephew, or just an error in the name) holding them in his stead. Also in 1643 he is probably the ‘Mr. William Turnbull’ who was listed as owner of most of Minto (along with John, his nephew, and Elizabeth Elliott). He may be the William listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £104. He may be the William of Minto, listed along with John in James Wilson’s list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was a member of the Assembly in 1645. In 1657 he gave his consent to a ‘wadset’ between John of Minto (his nephew) and John Scott of Brieryards for the lands of Hornshole. He is probably the ‘Mr William Turnbull’ recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Hornshole, as well as in Liliesleaf Parish. His son William became minister of Eckford, and is recorded giving his permission to a disposition of 1671 relating to Hornshole. William of Bedrule (d.c.1667) perhaps son of Thomas and grandson of the William who died about 40 years earlier. He is recorded in the 1643 valuation of the county, as owner of half of the Mains of Bedrule, valued at £130, and Bedrule Mill, valued at £200. In 1668 his son Thomas was served as his heir in the lands and Barony of Bedrule. This Thomas would be the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule. William (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £44. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where 2 Adams and a William also held lands. William (17th C.) married Janet Hobkirk in Ashkirk Parish in 1645. William of Bonchester (1624/5–86) recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard along with his son Adam (tenant of Doorpool) and Adam’s wife. He may have been son of Thomas of Upper Bonchester. He was probably succeeded in Upper Bonchester by his son George. Bonchester Turnbuls also later tenanted Wolfelee Mill, Hartshaugh Mill, Harwood Mill and Hallrule Mill. It was said that the Turnbuls who farmed Doorpool were descended from the Turnbuls of Bedrule. William (17th C.) son of Thomas of Knowe, he is recorded in a discharge of 1658 in which he was ‘tutor’ for Thomas Turnbull of Standhill. He was probably brother of John of Knowe, and it is also possible that Thomas of Standhill was another brother, in which case he was also tutor to the children (Thomas, William, Helen, Joan and Margaret) of the same Thomas ‘of Chesterhouse’ in 1664 when his lands were resigned to their superior Sir Walter Riddell. William (17th C.) elected town piper in 1674. He was ‘directed at even and morn and other solemn occasions, to go through the town with the drum’. This suggested that he was Burgh Officer, with duties including both pipes and drums. His salary was £13, 6s, 8d Scots. If he was not the same man as the piper recorded in 1702, then they were surely related. William (17th C.) brother of Walter, Laird of Bewlie. He is recorded on a 1684 list of men declared fugitives for religious non-conformity. They were probably arrested in 1678 and condemned to be sold as slaves to the plantations. Whether he was among the men who escaped from their ship in London and returned to Scotland, is unknown. William (d.c.1682) listed in Hawthornside when his will was recorded in 1682. He was surely related to Robert, whose will was also recorded on the same day, as well as Adam who was recorded there in 1688. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (or the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1680); Robert (b.1683); Janet (again, b.1685); and George (b.1687). The witnesses in 1683 were Thomas Robson and John Brown and in 1687 were William Rodger and John Turnbull (who may have been related). He is probably the William who (in turn) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Robson and Isobel Turnbull (probably related to him) in 1684. He may also be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leyden in 1681. He may be one of the 2 Williams who witnessed a baptism for William Rodger in 1687. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton

Parish, probably in the Hassendean area. He married Christian Oliver in Roberton in 1683 and their children included: Margaret (b.1686); and Agnes (b.1688). The witnesses in 1686 were Thomas Brown and Robert Turnbull (probably a relative) and in 1688 were James Redford and Richard Turnbull. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Margaret Clerk in 1685. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Bessie (b.1686). The witnesses were Michael and Thomas, who were probably relatives. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is on a 1684 list of men declared as a fugitive for frequenting conventicles. If he was later exonerated then he could be the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. William of Langraw (17th/18th C.) probably the Turnbull of Langraw who paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678. He is recorded in 1693 when he witnessed a bond between Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge and Sir John Pringle of Stichill. His eldest son William was also a witness. He was also ‘of Langraw’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for having 2 hearths. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He was also Provost of Jedburgh. He was the last Turnbull of Langraw, his heirs selling off the lands in 1801. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at ‘fioulton’ (i.e. Fulton) in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Efflodge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. William (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) listed as cottar at Ruletown on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Westwood in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the earlier Lairds of Westwood. William (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the earlier William of Bonchester. William (17th C.) listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls right after William in Bonchester. He is listed as ‘in ye midle of ye tooun’, this presumably meaning Bonchester. His son George is listed after him. William (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same William was gardner in Midshiels when his daughter Janet was baptised in Wilton in 1711. He may be the William who married Jean Scott in Wilton in 1708. William (17th C.) resident at Hassendeankbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Richard, who was also listed there. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Galalaw in 1697 when his son Thomas was baptised. The witnesses were George and Francis Scott. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1702 when his son William was baptised. Probably the same William was still at Ormiston in 1720 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may also be the William who was in Cavers in 1723 when his daughter Ann was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as piper in Hawick in 1702 when he married Margaret Elliot from Wilton Parish. He was also recorded as a piper in the 1706 baptism of his son. His children included: Walter (b.1706) and Adam (b.1710). The witnesses in 1706 were Henry Orrock and merchant Robert Robson. It is possible he is the same man as the piper recorded in 1674, or otherwise his son. William (17th/18th C.) miller at ‘Harestane mill’, which may be a version of Hartshaugh Mill (otherwise it is unclear where this is). His daughter Susan (1717/8–40) was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard, along with George, tenant at Upper Bonchester, so they were presumably related. He may have married Margaret, daughter of George of Bonchester (according to Walter Deans). William of Tofts (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas of Tofts. He was served heir to his father in 1695, in the lands of ‘Over et Nether Tofts’ in the Barony of Hawick and Regality of Drumlanrig. He is listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698 and 1704. He was probably Laird of Tofts in 1694 when ‘Tafts his hous’ was taxed for having 2 hearths there. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Thomas (b.1708); Ann (b.1709); Euphan (b.1712); and William (b.1715). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Turn. His son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Crook. His son Andrew was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1708. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Douglasses of Crook. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bedrule Mill whose son James was buried in Bedrule churchyard in 1711, aged 32. He must have been a descendant of the Turnbulls of Bedrule, and was probably a son of Thomas and brother of Andrew (the last Laird of Bedrule). He is probably one of the 3 men of that name listed in the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. He is probably the William ‘in Bedroutl’ whose wife Helen Scott’s will is recorded in 1685. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Ballantyne and their children included: Jean (b.1704); Rachel (b.1714); and Robert (b.1717). William (17th/18th C.) cooper of Hawick Parish. In 1712 his daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick, having been born in ‘forncat:’ with Elspeth Stoddart. The witnesses were James Falsye and ‘Mr’ Thomas Falsyde. William (17th/18th C.) merchant in Bedrule. His son Robert was buried in Bedrule kirkyard in 1722, aged 2. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls of the area. He may have been the William whose son James was born at Bedrule Mill in 1709, and claimed descent from the Turnbulls of Bedrule. William (17th/18th C.) tenant of Hassendeanbank. In 1723 his daughter Bessie married Andrew, son of Thomas Irving in Westerhouses. His son Adam took over the farm. William (17th/18th C.) son of Richard, he lived at Minto. He got married in 1718, as recorded in Wilton and Minto Parishes (but with no wife’s name listed). William of Wester Swan-shiel (d.1731) successor to James, who was probably his father or brother. He was succeeded by his son Hector and was buried in Hobbirk. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Midshiels in 1733. He married Grissel Elizabeth Morton (or perhaps Martin) in Minto, apprently in 1736 (but that is surely an error). Their daughter Grissel was baptised in 1733, with witnesses James Thomson and Andrew Stewart. He could be the William who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Richard, resident of Midshiels. Rev. William (1703–64) son of George, minister of Tyn-ingham (or another account says son of Adam of Doorpool and Margaret Turnbull). It was claimed (in a history of the Scots of Bonchester written in 1834) that he was a direct descendant of the Turnbulls of Bedrule, but that there was no documentable proof of this. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1729 and became minister of Abbotsrule in 1730, where he remained until his death. He paid window tax at ‘the mance’ in Abbotsrule Parish in 1748 and 1753. He died unmarried. His sister Helen, married Walter Scott of Bonchester. William (1708-64) son of Andrew and Jean Scott, he was born in Minto Parish. His father was tenant at Minto Cleuchhead, and sometimes described as the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule. He became tenant at Ancrum Woodhead. He married and had children, including Andrew and Thomas, who died young. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded as ‘Broadlees’ in 1735. It is unclear if this is the farm in Ashkirk Parish or the one in Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Shiel and their daughter Beatrix was baptised in 1735 with witnesses Robert Scott and James Dryden. William (18th C.) servant of Robert Buckham of West Lees in Hobbirk Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1738. William (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for workman Thomas Oliver. William of Langraw (d.1787) last Turnbull Laird of Langraw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779. In 1786 he let the lands of Langraw to George and Walter Barry for 15 years, but died before the lease was up. He was succeeded by his closest relative, Mrs. Janet Rutherford, who had married Mr. Easton, an American settler, who sold the farm. He is listed in the 1788 county valuation as owner of Langraw (valued at £104), as well as ‘Sheil’s lands, and Boston’s half of Kirk-know, exclusive of that part belonging to Mr Elliot of Woolie’ (valued at £68 5s). His through-stone was on Cowdie’s Knowe by Hobbirk Kirkyard. William (18th C.) glazier in Hawick. His wife was Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Thomas (b.1758); Margaret (b.1759); Andrew (b.1761); Martha (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); and Isobel (b.1767). The witnesses to the 1758 baptism were Bailie Thomas and mason Andrew, senior (who were surely related to him or his wife) and in 1765 were Bailie (probably Thomas) Turnbull, senior, and Andrew Turnbull, senior. Dr. William (c.1729–96) born in Hawick, from the family of Turnbull of Bedrule, who were dissenters. He was educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh University (where he obtained his M.D.) and then at Glasgow. He settled in Wooler around 1752, where he was known for his care of the poor, and had patients sent to him from as far away as Edinburgh. He became Physician at the Bamburgh Infirmary. In 1777 he moved to London, where he lived at Well Close Square in Whitechapel and was a physician with the Eastern Medical Dispensary. While in Wooler he contributed medical articles to the ‘Ladies’ Magazine’ and the ‘Scots’ Magazine’ and also acted as medical editor for ‘Middleton’s Universal Magazine’. These included discussions of croup and diseases of women and children.
He wrote medical articles for the ‘New and Complete Dictionary of Arts and Sciences’ (1778). He was preparing the publication of a practical system of medicine when he suffered a short and severe illness and died in London. His wife’s name is unknown, but her first name may have been Ann. Their children included: an eldest son, who died in the prime of life (possibly John Strother, b.1754); William, who became a surgeon with the Eastern Medical Dispensary and may be the same as the ex-naval doctor who wrote ‘The Naval Surgeon’ (1806); and a married daughter, possibly Anne. His son William posthumously published the first volume of ‘The Medical Works…Containing a Popular Treatise on Health and the Means of Preserving it’ (1803). There is a portrait of him in the form of an engraving. William of Tofts (18th C.) paid the window tax at ‘Tofts-house’ in Kirkton Parish in 1748. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was also recorded in an account of Lady Cavers in 1769. He was probably tenant farmer at Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and may have been related to the later James. He could be the ‘Tofteses Son Will’ who was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1715. William (18th C.) resident at Damside in 1751 and 1759. He married Agnes Robson in 1749 and their children included: Christian (b.1751); Robert (b.1752); George (b.1754); Euphan (b.1756); John (b.1758); Euphan (again, b.1759); and Agnes (b.1763). The witnesses in 1751 were John and Robert Scott and in 1759 were Thomas Scott and John Anderson (probably a relation). William (d.c.1814) tailor of Hawick. He owned property at 66 High Street, as well as the buildings behind No. 66 and 68. These were bequeathed to a relative, stockingmaker Walter Murray, and later known as Murray Place. William (1739/40–1820) tenant in Minto Townhead. His son Archibald died in 1832 and they are buried in Bedrule kirkyard, adjacent to the families of Andrew (tenant in Minto Cleuchhead) and William (tenant in Woodhead), who are probably closely related. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Swan, who died in 1778. William of Burnfoot (1745–1825), son of Thomas of Burnfoot (and sometimes called ‘of Minto’), he was born in Minto Parish. He ran the farms of Burnfoot and West Buccleuch and also managed the properties of Wilton Lodge and Tofts. He also spent a few years as joint tenant (with Charles Scott of Wauchope) of Mervinslaw; they are recorded as such on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Burnfoot on the Horse Tax Rolls from 1785–86 and in 1788–94. He was recorded as being ‘in Burnfoot’ in 1788 on a list of voters within Roxburghshire. He is recorded at Burnfoot on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He was a successful breeder of short-horn cattle before that was common. He was first President of the old Hawick Farmers’ Club, perhaps the first club of its kind in Scotland. An oil portrait of him was painted by John Watson-Gordon in 1821, at the expense of the Hawick Farmers’ Club, and once hung in the Tower Inn where the Club met; it was returned to the family in 1869. He leased the limestone quarry at ‘Slitrighead’ from Elliot of Harwood. He also carried out some money-lending, like his father before him. He is probably the William who was paid ‘for leading wood’ to help repair fences and for ‘banking the water’ of the Teviot at Hawick in 1785. In 1789 he and Robert Dickson were arbitrers for judging the value of a boundary dyke near Hawick. In 1797 he is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls at Burnfoot, with 4 work horses and 10 other horses. He married Eleanor (or Helen) Stephenson (of Kethorn, Durham) in Hawick in 1782 and she died in 1840, aged 84. Their children were: Elizabeth (1783–1831), who married John Renwick in 1814; Thomas Scott (1784–1867), who farmed at East Middle; Eleanor (1785–1853), who lived at 5 Slitrig Crescent with her sister Jane and died unmarried; Michael (1787–1849), who emigrated to Canada and died at Woodside, Brantford; Agnes (1788–1836), who also died unmarried in Hawick; William Ogilvie (b.1790), who died in infancy; Jane or Jane (1792–1866), who also died unmarried in Hawick; William (b.1794), who became a doctor; and John (1796–1875), who farmed at Burnfoot and West Buccleuch. They are mainly buried at Bedrule cemetery. William (18th C.) servant on the Cavers estate. He was listed as a gardener in 1778 and coachman in 1779. William (18th C.) tenant at Branxholme Town and Castlehill farms, where he was replaced by James Grieve in about 1792. William (1761/2–1842) second son of Thomas, and grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He was the first of the family to return to the local area, after his grandfather had been driven away, partly for being a Jacobite supporter. He farmed near Camptown, then at Grange on the Abbotrule estate, where he was joined by his brother Adam. He married Agnes Pott, who died in 1841, aged 80. Their children included: Mary, who was born in 1793; Isabella, who died aged 19; and Agnes, who died in infancy. He later farmed at West Fodderlee until he retired in 1831, moving to Bongate, Jedburgh. His family are recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirk- yard. William (18th C.) served to the Laird of Wauchope in 1786 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. William (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1787 he married Nelly Mitchelhill from Hawick Parish. His son Adam was baptised in Bedrule Parish in 1794 (with his wife’s surname given as ‘Mitchel’). William (18th/19th C.) smith at Minto, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded separately from the blacksmith and just before William at Westerhouses, and also owned 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Westerhouses in Minto Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) footman at Midshiels in 1797, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. William of Fenwick (1760–1840) elder son of Thomas of Fenwick. He succeeded to the lands of Fenwick and Brieryyards on the death of his father in 1825. He was ‘younger of Fenwick’ in 1784 when he subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’. He was also recorded as ‘younger of Fenwick’ among the freeholders at the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811 and on the list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1819. He is probably the William ‘of Rashiegrain’ listed as owner of Rashiegrain and Commonbrae on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He is mentioned as an important Hawick Parish heritor in the 1820s and 1830s, and was one of the Orrock Trustees appointed in 1834. He was listed at Brieryyards in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In 1837 he was listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory as William of Fenwick, residing at Brieryyards. He married Alison Turnbull and had an only son, Thomas. His trustees were recorded as owners of Brieryyards, Hornshole, Midshiels, Fenwick, Rashiegrain, Commonbrae and part of Weensland in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. William (18th C.) stockmaking and Commonbrae on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He is mentioned as an important Hawick Parish heritor in the 1820s and 1830s, and was one of the Orrock Trustees appointed in 1834. He was listed at Brieryyards in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In 1837 he was listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory as William of Fenwick, residing at Brieryyards. He married Alison Turnbull and had an only son, Thomas. His trustees were recorded as owners of Brieryyards, Hornshole, Midshiels, Fenwick, Rashiegrain, Commonbrae and part of Weensland in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. William (18th C.) stockmaking in Hawick, who was on the subscribers list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the stockmaking (son of smith Thomas), whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1816. William (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. William (b.c.1770) tailor in Wilton Parish. He was listed as tailor at Appletreecroft among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1840 he was at `Pity- houses’ and in 1841 at Parkhouses. On the 1841 census he was living at ‘Parkhouses’ (i.e. Burn- head Cottages). Elizabeth and William (also both called Oliver) were also there, probably his daughter and grandson. William (1787–1846) 3rd son of James and Betty Adamson and brother of Wilton Schoolmaster James. He was born at Hoddeswoodie, Bouchester. In 1821 he became master of Hobkirk School, and served there until a few weeks before his death. He was very fond of books and collected a small library at the school. He is probably the William listed at Hobkirk among subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is recorded as Schoolmaster at Hobkirk in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 census. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (1794–1870) 3rd son of Adam and Betty Scott, he was born in Minto Parish. He farmed at Merrylaw and Fal- nash. He was left the lease of Hassendeanbank when his father died in 1810. He also took on the lease of Skelfhill, which had been in his mother’s side of the family. He was recorded at Falnash in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1851 he is listed as farmer of 4500 acres, employing 17 labourers. He is probably the William of Merrylaw who acted as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably also the William of Hassendean who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He married Margaret Scott (1810–45, who was probably born at Todshawhaugh). Their children included: Robert Laidlaw (1830–74); William Scott (1833–70), who died in New South Wales; James (1836–88), who died in Melrose; Thomas Scott (1837–77), who died in Adelaide; and Gideon Pott (b.1840). He secondly married Elizabeth Elliot, probably daughter of John Elliot of Binks. William ‘Wull the Bell- man’ (c.1785–1859) Burgh Officer and bellman in roughly the 1820s to early 50s, being Halberdier along with ‘Tufty’ Wilson. He was born in Melrose. He lived in a house at the end of a close beside the old Town Hall, depicted in ‘An Old Hawick Close’. It is labelled ‘Mr. Turnbull’ on Wood’s 1824 map, and would be at about No. 36. In 1841 he was living on the High Street with his wife Agnes and children Mary, Isabel and William. In 1851 he was at about 36 High Street and still listed as Town Officer. He was listed as ‘bellman, High Street’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 his widow Agnes was a lodging house keeper at 36 High Street. William (b.1785/6) originally from Southdean, he was a weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Ogilvie, who may have been related to the family of Thomas Ogilvie & Sons, woollen merchants in Aberdeen. In 1841 he was on Brougham Place and listed at No. 4 there in 1851, when he was a widower. His children included: George (b.1819), cashier with Nixon’s; Joseph (b.c.1826); John Struthers (b.1829), who was a bank accountant; and Mary (b.c.1832).

William (b.1794) 4th son of William of Burnfoot and Eleanor Stephenson, he was born in Wilton Parish. He trained as a doctor and became Senior Physician of Huddersfield Infirmary (where his portrait hangs). His choice of location was probably influenced by the connections with his father’s wool sales. One of his sons was Vicar of Penniston in Yorkshire and Canon of Wakefield Cathedral. He died in Huddersfield. William (18th/19th C.) butcher at Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory William (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer on Backdamgate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Williams.

William of Menslaws (1794/5–1886) Accountant at the Royal Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh. He could be the William, merchant in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (b.1799/1800) born in Wilton Parish, he was a tobacco manufacturer and grocer on the Howegate. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory his partnership is listed as ‘Irvine & Turnbull’, although it is unclear who the Irvine was. In the 1837 directory he was listed as a tobacconist himself on the Howegate, and is probably also the same man listed as a grocer and ‘victual dealer’ there. He was also listed as a Howegate tobacconist and grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Jessie. In 1841 and 1851 he was a widower living at about No. 3 Howe-gate with his 4 children: John (b.1828), a baker; Andrew (b.1830), millwright; Margaret (b.1832); and William (b.1835). William (19th C.) farmer at Minto Townhead in the 1860s. He is surely related to the earlier farmer of the same place with the same name. William (b.c.1810) draper who was living at about 10 Slitrig Crescent on the 1841 census. His wife was Jean. William (b.1816/7) wood merchant on Havelock Street. In 1861 he is recorded employing 3 men, and was at about No. 12. His wife was Isabella and their children included William, Agnes, George and Isabella.

William (b.1817/8) from Edinburgh, he was a grocer in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Orrock Place and listed as a journeyman grocer. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is a greengrocer on the High Street. His wife was Janet and their children included Robert, William, John and Margaret. William (b.1819/20) head groom on the Minto estate in the 1860s. He was a non-resident voter of Cavers Parish. His wife was Elisabeth and their children included William, Isabella, Janet and John. William (1830–1906) youngest son of James, Schoolmaster in Wilton, with his mother being Margaret Dalgleish, who later ran the ‘Image Garden’ school. In 1864 he co-founded the Edinburgh auctioneering firm Lyon and Turnbull. He married Jane Barbour and their children were William James, George Barbour, Charles Henry, Dr. Frederick John, Isabella Barbour, Margaret Mary and Jane Barbour. William Scott (1833–70) son William, farmer at Falnash and Merrylaw, his mother being Margaret Scott. He studied at St. Andrews University 1847–9. He died in New South Wales. William (d.1891) son of David (who made his fortune in India) and grandson of Thomas of Fenwick. He was born in India and lived for a while with his uncle William at Brieryyards. He leased the farm of Muirdean, near Kelso, then moved to the Channel Islands. In 1874 he returned to the Hawick area to deal with the family estates when his cousin Thomas died. He lived at Briery-yards and was a Justice of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He also became a member of the Borders dining and coursing club, the Forest Club. In 1875 he was ‘Treades’ Steward’ at the Common Riding Races and was again a Steward in 1875 (when listed as ‘junior’ of Brieryyards). He later moved back to the Channel Islands, where he promoted the Presbyterian Church. He sold the Rodono estate and other lands in 1890. In 1836 he married Christian Hogarth, who pre-deceased him. His sons (all born at Makerston) were: David, who succeeded; William of Kilburn, Guernsey; and Dr. George Hogarth of Kelso. William (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Parkhead, recorded in relation to Stobs estate in the 1850s. He was probably related to James, farmer at Billerwell. William (19th C.) shepherd at the Pietsnest in Hobkirk Parish. He was one of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk, along with his wife, Euphemia Armstrong. He was also made an elder in 1851. William George (b.1844) son of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He continued the tenancy in Spittal-on-Rule after the death of his father. He was recorded as farmer there in 1868. He married Mary Mitchell, daughter of George Greig of Eccles in 1894. They had 4 children. William Scott (b.1856) son of James, who was tenant at Billerwell. He was educated as a chemist, but preferred the life of a farmer. He was tenant at Tythhouse in Rulewater.

Turnbull an Scott’s (turn-bul-an-skots) n. engineering firm based at 16, 18 and 20 Commercial Road. They moved into these buildings (previously the Urban Electric Company) when the company was established in 1933. The main office block is unusual in Hawick in having a Tudor style. The company were originally millwrights, but now specialise in custom-built heating systems. It started as Turnbull & Aitkin, later becoming Turnbull, Aitkin & Scott, and changing to Turnbull & Scott in 1955. More recently the firm moved to Burnfoot.

Turnbull an Sons (turn-bul-an-sunz) n. Charles Turnbull & Sons, a photography company of the latter part of the 19th century. Based on Jamaica Street in Glasgow, the firm branched out to Greenock, Kilmarnock, Hawick and elsewhere. In Hawick they set up their studio at 7 North Bridge Street in 1886, but only lasted until 1889. The building may have continued as a photography studio (under the name Torrance) until 1893.

Turnbull-Robertson (turn-bul-ro-burt-sin) n. main carpet manufacturing company in Hawick, operating in the second half of the 18th century in Orrock Place. It was founded by William Robertson in 1752, with Thomas Turnbull and others joining in 1769. They feued the land in the middle of the Sandbed in 1791, and the houses they built there were demolished in 1987. The Carpet Close is the one reminder of their existence.

the Turnbuls (thu-tur-buls) n. local family, powerful during rieving days. The name is traditionally ascribed to when William de Rule saved King Robert from a bull, being rewarded with lands and the name of ‘Turnebull’. The first recorded instance of the name is a William Turnbul of Philiphaugh (possibly the same ‘William de Rule’) in 1313. Other lands in the Ettrick valley followed, as well as Minto and Bedrule in the 14th century. By the 15th century the family controlled much of the Rule valley and also held lands around Denholm and in the Borthwick valley. Closest to Hawick, there were Turnbuls Lairds at Whithope in 1454, Hornshole in 1456, Penchrise in 1464/5, Harden until 1468 and at Hassendeanbank through the 15th century. In a panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5, out of 21 prominent local landowners there were 4 of the surname Turnbull. Although no Turnbull collected a peerage, at the height of their influence they were as powerful as the Douglases, Scotts, Kerrs, Elliots and Armstrongs. Like other Border clans they played an important role in frustrating the English, but were also involved in feuds and power struggles on the Scottish side of the Border. A feud in Teviotdale with the Rutherfords was noted in Parliament in 1479. Probably because they never rose to the nobility, their strength was challenged, their lands lost and the family eventually dispersed. In one incident in 1510 James IV publicly humiliated 200 Turnbuls at the ‘Deed Haugh’ near Rulemouth, and it is said that as many as 20 were hanged. In 1516 about 45 Turnbuls (and a few others) were pardoned for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King (the document survives among the papers of the Dukes of Roxburgh and gives a valuable record of the main family branches at that time). They are said to have sided with the English in some raids, but they fought for the Scots at Ancrum Moor in 1545, and were probably at the Redeswire in 1575. They once held towers at Minto, Barnhills (base of Minto Craggs), Bedrule and Fulton, much of which passed to the Elliots and others. The Turnbuls of Bedrule and the Turnbuls of Minto appear to have been the most powerful branches in the 16th century, but their power waned in the early 17th century, with the Minto branch being involved in a serious feud with the Kerrs of the Jedburgh area in the years around 1600. Both of the main baronies were sold off before the last quarter of the 17th century. However, a related branch, the Turnbuls of (Hassendean) Knowe were important local landowners until well into the 18th century. Descendants of the Turnbuls of Minto moved to Burnfoot, and were among the founders of the textile trade in Hawick. The Great Seal of the Turnbuls used to be in the possession of the Turnbuls of Burnfoot, before it moved to Canada when Michael Turnbull emigrated. There have been at least 18 Hawick Cornets with this surname. It seems likely that the roots of all Turnbuls can be traced back to an area within 20 miles of Hawick. Tumbles are probably derived from this family, through the early local pronunciation, and the French and French-Canadian family Tremblay may also come from Turnbuls who fought in France during the Hundred Years War. The clan as a family association was revived in 1977 by Hawick man John Turnbull. A book ‘I Saved the King: the Story of the Turnbuls’ was written by R.E. Scott in 1977. A statue, commemorating the turning of the bull and sculpted by Angela Hunter, was unveiled near the Heritage Hub in 2009 – ‘But little harness had we there But auld Badrule had on a jack, And did right weil, I you declare, Wi’ a the Turnbuls at his back’ [CPM], ‘Between red ezlar banks, that frightful scowl, Fringed with gray hazel, roars the mining Roul; Where Turnbuls once, a race no power could awe, Lin’d the rough skirts of stormy Ruberslaw’ [JL].

Turnbull’s (turn-bulz) n. John Turnbull & Sons, dyers and finishers, founded in 1819, with their main premises at 1–4 Slitrig Crescent and also later on Victoria Road/Carnarvon Street. In 1871 the firm employed 40 people. There was a major fire at the Slitrig Crescent works in 1940. The Victoria Road cleaning and dyeing works was to the west of Albert Mills, just over the mill lade, built in the early years of the 20th century. The central office block had a 70 ft high chimney tower, emblazoned with a distinctive ‘T’; it was all was demolished in 1990. The surviving administration building was constructed in 1911, with designs by Alexander Inglis. It has a harled facade with red sandstone details, making it quite unique among Hawick factory buildings. The corner water tower is particularly distinctive, with architectural elements of the Modern Movement.

An additional concrete building was constructed in 1920, and also demolished in 1990. The company had the largest dyeworks in the Borders, but went into liquidation in 2000. Part of the buildings were occupied by N. Peal, cashmere manufacturers from 1990 until 2006.

He is probably the William recorded as owner of the Wheathole in 1767. He could be the William born to Andrew and Isobel Aitkin in Hawick in 1738. He may also be the William who married Agnes (or Janet) Lamb in 1757 in Wilton Parish and had children baptised in Hawick: Janet (b.1758); Margaret (b.1761); Elizabeth (b.1765); Jane (b.1767); Margaret (again, b.1770); Rebecca (b.1772); Mary (b.1773); and John (1778–1997). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were gardeners Andrew Turner (perhaps his father) and William Aitkin. William (19th C.) grocer on the High Street, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory (formerly ‘Turnair’ and variants).

Turner an Rutherford’s (tur-nur-in-ruthur-fordz) n. hosiery manufacturers that operated at least from 1885 until 1955, based at Mansfield Mills. The partnership was between Mr. Turner and John Rutherford, and they moved to Mansfield Mills in 1891. It may be that the firm never recovered from the 1955 fire, which destroyed part of the older buildings; at that time they employed 300 people. Their minute books and ledgers are stored in the Museum. Braemar took over the factory about 1969 and it later became Jaeger before being converted into flats.

Turner’s Corner (tur-nurz-kör-nur) n. former popular name for the sharp corner on Liddesdale Road by Lynnwood Cottage. It was named for the manufacturer who owned the property there. It was later also known as ‘Fraser’s Corner’. The road was eventually straightened to accommodate the passage of tanks from Stobs.

Turner’s Holm (tur-nurz-höm) n. area near where the Kershope Burn meets the Liddel Water. This was traditionally the site of the duel between William Armstrong of Greena and Forster of Stanegarthside (according to Sir Walter Scott, the name came from ‘turnary’, since games of chivalry were formerly practised here.

the Turnpike Act (thur-turn-pik-awkt) n. parliamentary act of 1768 which improved the roads in the Borders, specifically between Kelso and Hawick (now the A698), Jedburgh and Lauder (now the A68) and Hawick and Galashields (now the A7). The Scotch-Dyke to Haremoss road (sometimes referred to as Mossaulgreen to Haremoss) was also part of this general improvement. The work was paid for by landowning subscribers, who recouped their money through the tolls. This led to Toll-bars being set up at all the major routes out of Hawick.

the Turnpike Bar (thur-turn-pik-bawr) n. name sometimes used for the toll gate over the main road in one of the directions in and out of Hawick. It is explicitly used in the 1767 description of the Common to refer to the toll-bar at the top of the Loan – ‘. . . and from the Ford by the north dykes of the Common Loan

Turvill (tur-vil) n. John ‘Jack’ (19th C.) stockings maker from England who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. Along with his brother Henry, and several other Englishmen, he helped introduce cricket to the Town. In 1841 he is recorded at about 57 High Street, along with Sibbald, who may have been his wife (also written ‘Turville’).

Tushielaw (too-, tu-shee-law??) n. hill at the western end of the B711, reaching a height of 435 m. Tushielaw Inn is at its base, and nearby on the hillside is the ruined Tushielaw Tower (dating from about 1600, but built on an earlier house). This was home of the Scotts of Tushielaw, from at least the mid-15th century. It was owned by the Crown from at least 1456, being part of Ettrick Forest that was forfeited by the Earl of Douglas. William Scott held the lease in 1484 and Walter Scott (also of Howpasley) in 1488. John Burnet was recorded there in 1494/5 and recorded stealing 71 sheep from William Hall, who was also there. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. The Scotts of Tushielaw branch later included Mary (of the ballad ‘Mary Scott’) and Adam ‘the King of Thieves’. William Scott was tenant there in 1541, paying £24 yearly. There was a feud between the Scotts of Tushielaw and Thirlestane in the 17th century. The lands were once part of the parish of Rankilburn. The lands of the Laird in Selkirkshire were valued at £1615 in 1678. The lands were sold to Michael Anderson in 1688, and Andersons continued as Lairds until the mid-19th century, with the Chisholmes of Stirches also often living there. There was a fire there in the 1760s – ‘Ilk petty robber, through the lands, They taucht to stand in awe; And affen checked the plun-drin’ bands Of famous Tushilaw’ [ES] (variously written as ‘Tuschelaw’, ‘Tuschellaw’, ‘Tushelaw’, ‘Tushielaw’, etc.; it appears as ‘Torschelelaw’ in 1455, ‘Torschelelaw’ in 1456, ‘Turneschelelaw’ in 1468, ‘Tureschelaw’ in 1471, ‘Turfschelaw’ in 1477, ‘Trusschelaw’ in 1484, ‘Tusschelaw’ in 1488, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1490, 1494/5 and 1503, ‘Turfschelaw’ in 1501 and 1502, ‘Truschelaw’ in 1507, ‘Tusche1aw’ in 1513, ‘Truschelaw’ in 1524/5, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1526, ‘Tusslyllaw’ and ‘Tuschellaw’ in 1528, ‘Tuschilaw’ in 1530, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1541, 1564 and 1573, ‘Tweshelaw’ in 1574, ‘Tuschelaw’ and ‘Tuchalaw’ in 1581, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1583/4, ‘Tuscholaw’ in 1607, ‘Tuscholaw’ in 1619, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1633, ‘Tuschillaw’ in 1636, ‘Tuschielaw’ in 1649, ‘Tussilaw’ in 1662, ‘Tushelaw’ in 1676, ‘Tushallaw’ in 1687 and ‘Tushalaw’ in 1690: it is ‘Tusshyla’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is obscure, with theories including ‘tor-schele-law’, i.e. ‘rock shelling law’ and ‘throssil-law’, i.e. ‘thrush law’).

Tushielaw Inn (too-shee-law-in) n. inn in the Ettrick valley, at the road junction of the B711 from the Borthwick valley to the B709. It was once an important coach house.

tweed (tweed) n. generic name for fabrics made by twill weaves of coarse but soft wool, or products made from such fabrics, for which the Borders is famous. It began in Hawick probably with Wilson & Watson manufacturing ‘Scotch plaiding’ in 1817, followed by blankets, flannel and twill. The origin of the word is apparently due to an order from William Watson & Sons’ clients Messrs. Harvey in London in around 1832, with ‘tweel’ (or perhaps ‘twee’d’, meaning ‘tweedled’) being misread as ‘tweed’ when the customer reordered. Alternatively it is suggested that essentially the same story came from William Wilson & Sons, with client James Locke of London in 1826 (and yet another account suggested it was Watsons and Locke). We shall probably never know which of these versions is correct, but it seems likely that it was due to a misreading of an order from a firm in Hawick, probably with an influence of association with the River Tweed. By 1850 it was estimated that the weight of yarn used annually in Hawick to spin tweed and other woollen cloth was about 1,250,000 pounds.

The Tweed (thu-tweed) n. Tweed River, principal river of the Borders, being 97 miles (155 km) long and the 4th largest in Scotland. Its source is Tweed’s Well north of Moffat (interestingly only about a mile from the sources of both the Clyde and the Annan) and flows into the North Sea at about 3108

Tweed Commissioners (tweed-ko-mi-shinurz) n., pl. the River Tweed Commissioners, a body set up by private Acts of Parliament of 1857 and 1859 to manage salmon fishing on the Tweed and its tributaries. Another Act of 1969 extended their responsibilities to include all freshwater fish. Their activities are funded from levies on owners of fisheries. The current Council is the ruling body, with 81 members, 43 of whom are appointed by the local authorities to represent angling clubs and other community groups.

Tweeddale (tweed-dail) n. valley of the River Tweed, often referring to the upper part of the valley specifically, lying between the Yarrow and Gala watersheds. Historically the word was used to refer collectively to Peeblesshire and Selkirkshire. It was later a district of the Borders region, essentially the same as Peeblesshire (it is ‘Tweed-dail’ in 1519/20).

Tweedene (tweed-din) n. former seat of the Armstrongs, just to the east of Newcastle-on-Tyne. ‘Young Ector Armstrng’ was there in 1541, when he reset some other Armstrongs, referred to as English rebels. It is recorded as ‘Twyde’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. Ringan, Hector and Jock of Tweeden are recorded in 1583 and Ninian of Tweeden in 1606. William and John Armstrong ‘of Tueden’ are recorded in 1611. ‘Johne Armstrang, callit of Tueden’ is recorded in 1622 and Francie ‘callit Tueden’ in 1623. It may be the same place that is on the list of parts of the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1632 as ‘Helene Tweidmes lands’. In the same document is recorded the farm of ‘Megie Twedmes’, whose meaning is also obscure (it is ‘Twedem’ in 1541, ‘Twydana’ in 1576, ‘Tuwen’ in 1580, ‘Tweedon’ in 1583 and ‘Tuuden’ in 1599 and 1622).

Tweedenebank (tweed-din-bawngk) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, close to (or perhaps the same as) Hillhouse. Labourers Francis Nichol and Johna Armstrong lived there in 1841 (it was ‘Twyden Bank’ in 1841).

Tweedden Burn (tweed-din-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale that runs to the west to join the Liddel Water north of Mangerton. There was once a spring here, said to famous for its ‘petrifying qualities’, with calcified formations on the moss around it. The stream also contains some waterfalls - ‘An’ bauld wi’ hindberries frae the syke, I lap an’ ran a turn Alang the divots on the dyke, Doon to the Tweeden burn’ [ECB] (the name is said to derive from it being a boundary between Mangerton and Whithaugh.

Tweedside (twee-sid) n. pipe tune dating from at least the late 17th century, with several alternative sets of words – ‘From Teviot’s banks I see them wind their way: ‘Tweedside’, in sad farewell, I hear them play’ [JL].

Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue Team (tweed-vaw-lee-mown’-in-res-kew-teem) n. organisation formed as a volunteer group in 1966 and is now a registered charity. It has helped in many search and rescue operations in the Border hills. The organisation grew out of the Cheviot Walking Club in the early 1950s, with the first search and rescue team set up in 1963 and named the Borders Search and Rescue Unit. This was in response to the growing number of inexperienced hikers walking the Cheviots. This outfit split into 3 sections (based at Yetholm, Duns and Gala), with the Gala-based section being renamed Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue Team, with police officer Tony Robinson as its first Team Leader. From humble beginnings, the group has grown into a well organised and experienced group, which works closely with other organisations. In 1988 they helped with the Lockerbie disaster as well as countless less serious incidents. The Team trains every Wednesday night.

Tweedy (twee-dee) n. Lawrence (15th C.) sub-Prior of Melrose Abbey. In 1484 he gave a grant of bailiary to David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert, covering the Abbeys many lands, including Melroseland, Ettrick, Rodeno, Eskdale, Ringwoodfield and East Teviotdale (formerly ‘Tuedy’ and variants).

Twirlees Steps

Road. The turnstile was there until the mid-19th century, and consisted of two wooden bars fixed cross-wise onto a strong post.

Twirlees Steps (twir-leez-steps) n. name sometimes used for the stairs between the end of Twirlees Road and the Braid Road.

Twirlees Terrace (twir-leez-te-riis) n. street in the Wellogate between Twirlees Road and Douglas Road East, named in 1915, and taking its name from the name already in use for the general area.

Twislehope (twiz-lup) n. farm just to the south off the Hermitage Water road, where the Twislehope Burn meets the Chapel Grain. The lands were valued at 8 merks in 1541. It was owned by the Earl of Buccleuch by 1632. Archibald Goodfellow was tenant there in 1694. There were Elliots there in the 17th century, when it was sometimes referred to as ‘Castlehope’ (althought that may just be an error). It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it covered 2225 acres, bounded by Billhope, Carewoodrig, Dinlees, lands held by the Laird of Hoscote, Tarras, Unthank and Blackhall. It is stated that ‘here is but little corn land or meadow for this farm is very mountainous’. In 1792 Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed visited ‘auld Thomas o’ Twizzlehope’, who was known for his skill on the Border pipe, and was said to have the original tune for ‘Dick o’ the Cow’. Thomas Elliot was recorded there in 1797. Alexander Easton was there in 1821. Andrew Elliot was tenant there in the mid-19th century and Andrew Scott was shepherd there in mid-to-late 19th century. Walter Elliot is recorded at ‘Cawslip’ in a directory of 1868 (also written ‘Twizzlehope’ and variants; the name probably derives from the Old English ‘twisla hop’, meaning ‘valley where two streams fork’; it is first recorded as ‘Cwyslehop’ in 1376 and is ‘Twylshop’ in 1541, ‘Twislehope’ in 1632 and ‘Tuilshope’ in 1694; ‘Tuilslöppq’ appears to be the spelling on Blaen’s 1654 map and ‘Tuislehope’ and ‘Tuilshope’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, with the modern spelling appearing on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Twislehope Hope (twiz-lup-hööp) n. farmstead in the Hermitage valley, up the Twislehope Burn from Twislehope itself. There were Scotts there in 1841 (note the double use of ‘hope’).

Twizel (twi-zul) n. village near where the Till flows into the Tweed. The 15th century bridge there has a single-arched span of about 27 m, the longest in Britain at the time. This was a significant crossing point, where Surrey’s men crossed behind the Scots at the Battle of Flodden (also spelled ‘Twizell’).

twun (twun) n., adj. twin – ‘...his twun brother whom’s his absolute double’ [IWL], v. to twin – ‘Hawick was twunned wi Bailleul’.

tyre (ti-ur) v. to tire – ‘did ee tyre um oot?’; ‘...O’er the Verish hill nor tire’ [AB], ‘Though oo’ve been apairt a while again, Though oo’r gei tei’rd n’ teary, What’s ne’er been lost can aye be fund, On the hill abin Blawearie’ [IHS/GM] (often spelled ‘tire’ even although the hard i pronunciation is implied).

tyred (ti-ur) adj., pp. tired – ‘A’m ower tyred ti gaun on’, ‘A’m no seek, A’m just tyred’ (note the pronunciation with the hard i and the glottal stop).

Tyr-ibus Ye Tyr Ye Odin (tee-ree-bus-see-tee-ree-ö-dín) n. town slogan, also spelled ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ and other variants. This particular version is the one that appears on the town coat of arms (the origin, meaning and age of this phrase are all uncertain).

Tyr hæbbe us ye tyr ye Odin (tee-ree-bus-ee-tee-ree-ö-dín) n. another version of the slogan, displayed at the Colour Bussing in the early 20th century. This spelling is inspired by one suggestion for the slogan’s meaning, ‘Thor keep us, both Thor and Odin’, from the Anglo-Saxon.

Tythehoose (티-tis, 틀-이, 틈 hoos) n. Tythehoose, farm in Hobkirk Parish, on the road between Forkins and Harwood. It was for a long time part of the Harwood estate, being in 1637 described as the ‘2 merkland’ which is a ‘pendicle’ of Harwood. It passed (along with Harwood) from William Lord Herries to James Hamilton in 1602 and confirmed to Francis Hamilton in 1610. Not long afterwards it was part of the estate of the Lorraines and then sold to the Elliots along with Harwood in 1637. ‘Tithous with 4th part of the lands of Fernilie’ were listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. William Dalglish was tenant there in 1797, Thomas E. Boog and W. Maben in the 1860s and Tom Smith in the late 19th century. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building and enclosure near the Harwood Burn, to the south-west of the farm, as well as a cottage and garden just north-east of the farm, neither of which are extant. There was also formerly a mill pond running to the 2 mill ponds to the south-west, which probably powered a threshing mill (it may be the place transcribed as ‘Tytos Renis’ in a bounding charter of 1567 a threshing mill (it may be the place transcribed as `Tyth house’).

Tythehoosefield (티-tis-feeld, 틈 hoos-feeld) n. former name for lands in Rulewater, recorded as ‘Tythhousefield’ in a 1649 discharge of a loan, along with Tythehouse and Harwood. This may be the same farmstead as ‘Titus fuord’ recorded as ‘Tythas’ in 1655, ‘Tithouse’ in 1656 and 1694, ‘Tythefield’ in 1699, ‘Titehous’ about 1700, ‘Tythehouse’ in 1769 and ‘Titus’ in 1797; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Tyth house’.

Uchtred (ooch-trid) n. (12th C.) son of Oswulf and grandson of an earlier Uchtred. With his consent his father regranted the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in about 1166. His son Thomas and maternal uncle Edmund were witnesses to the same document, as well as Ralph ‘son of Uchtred’. A further confirmation at about the same time was made by his son Thomas. He is probably the ‘luctredo filio ululi’ who witnessed the grant of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey by Patrick Riddell in the period 1175–89, as confirmed in 1454 (also written ‘Uctred’ and ‘Uhtred’).

Uffie Rae (u-fee) n. nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘There goes Magenta (whose face is woe) – Whose tales wi’ simple fun are gay, And there’s Jock Buckham and Crosbie Bow, And Tammy Porritch and Uffie Rae’ [HI].

Umfraville (um-fra-vil) n. Gilbert (c.1244-1307) Warden of the Marches in the late 13th century. He was created Baron Umfraville and was 2nd Earl of Angus. He was recorded in 1265/6 in regard to lands in England, swore fealty to Henry III in 1266/7. Also in 1266/7 he was granted free warrant of his lands in Northumberland and granted a market at his lands in Rutland. In England he held the title of Lord of Redesdale. In 1269 he was in dispute with William Douglas over the lands of Faudon in Northumberland. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1291. He lived at Prudhoe Castle in Northumberland, married Elizabeth Comyn and was succeeded by his son Robert. Sir Ingram (d.c.1321) son of Robert. He inherited the English and Scottish estates of Ingram Baliol. As an ambassador he helped establish the ‘Auld Alliance’ in 1295. In 1296 he was on the English side at the siege of Berwick and fought on the English side at the Battle of Falkirk in 1298, but was on the Scottish side at the siege of Stirling Castle in 1299. In 1300 he was appointed as a Guardian of Scotland, but resigned after a year, to be replaced by John de Soulis. He was involved in the siege of Lochmaben Castle in 1301, was made Sheriff of Jedburgh Castle in 1302 (possibly acting as Sheriff for the county) and was an ambassador to France again in 1303. Forfeiting his lands to the Englishman Sir Henry Percy in 1304, he had them reinstated by Robert the Bruce in 1306. However, he switched to the English side again in 1307, being made Guardian of South and West Scotland by Edward II. He also fought with the English at Bannockburn, being captured and ransomed afterwards. He died in England. Sir Robert (d.1436) Governor of Berwick and Vice-Admiral of England. His men burned Jedburgh in 1410 and 1416. He owned the tower at Otterburn, and defeated the Scots at Yeavering, near Wooler, in 1414. His forces probably razed Selkirk and its castle in 1417, and burned Hawick in 1418. He was also present at the burning of Peebles. He was the last of the male line of Umfraville, a once powerful Northumberland family.

the Under Haugh (thu-un-dur-hawch, -hawf) n. formerly part of the Common Haugh, lying to the north of the main road from Hawick to Wilton (now Albert Road), which separated it from the Upper Haugh. It extended approximately to where the Baths were later built and covered a little over 7 acres. It was once the site of the Bleachfield, and also formerly used for some Common Riding events. Part of it (7 424/900 acres around where the Burns Club is now) was sold to the North British Railway Company in 1847 and passed into local business hands in 1854. For the Friday afternoon and Saturday Common Riding Races, there were 4 pieces of movable fence separating the Under from the Upper Haugh, so that both could be used together. The selling of the Under Haugh probably contributed to the decline in the popularity of the Common Riding in the 1860s and 1870s. But soon afterwards the area was used in the industrial development of the town and the raising of feats for the Council on Commercial Road (note this is sometimes mistakenly identified with the Little Haugh, which is sometimes called the Lower Haugh).

underlie (un-dur-II) v., arch. to submit to the process of law, have the judgment of a court imposed, undergo — ‘...Janet Scott ...shall compear personally ...and underly the law, for all causes of witchcraft ...’ [BR1644], ‘...and order them to underlie the punishment ...which is to stand at the cross for a season, and be banished the town and liberties thereof’ [BR1700].

the Union Flag (thu-yoon-yin-flawg) n. name sometimes given to the earliest existing Common Riding flag, of 1707, from the erroneous assumption that it was made to commemorate the Union between Scotland and England. The flag still exists in the Museum. It measures about 34 inches along the staff and was pennon-shaped, bearing the date 1707, and the much faded yellow and blue colours. It was made to replace an earlier flag, which had deteriorated too much to use, and which some have suggested may even have been the original of 1514. The connection to the ‘Union’ appears to have been made by James Wilson and then William Norman Kennedy, presumably just because of the date. It is now on display in Drumlanrig’s Tower, having undergone restoration work in 1992.

Union Haa (yoon-yin-haw) n. Union Hall, former property that was part of the Linthill estate, the mansion house standing on the south side of the Ale Water. In the early 18th century it was owned by Rev. William Hunter of Lilliesleaf. The lands there were valued at £121 10s in 1788 (it is ‘Unionhall’ in 1788).

Union Street (yoon-yin-stree) n. street winding between North Bridge Street and Bourtree.
Union Street

Place, built around 1865 as a useful bypass from the Jedburgh to Edinburgh roads. The name was chosen before any building started, with the houses built soon afterwards. At the end of the 19th century the Procession on the Friday of the Common Riding would pass along this street and then stop at the Bourtree Place end while the Cornet and supporters went to Bogleiearns. Th street is still used on the route to loop back to the High Street on the evening after the Thursday Night Chase. A pet shop stood at No. 1 for a long time and Lodge No. 424 is at No. 8 (the name probably comes from the Union of the two main roads, but there may also be a connection with the Border Union Railway).

Union Street (yoon-yin-stree’) n. street in Newcastleton, off the main B6357 near Douglas Square.

Union Street Hall (yoon-yin-stree’-hal) n. name sometimes used for the public hall on Union Street, next to the Masonic Lodge.

Unshank (un-shawngk) n. name for lands that were once in Liddesdale. It is listed in a rental roll of 1541 as ‘Unshank’, when it was vacant. This could be the same place as John Armstrong ‘called ‘Unschank’ on a list of thieves to be apprehended in 1642. It is possible this was Unthank in Ewesdale.

Unshope (unshöp) n. probably name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, recorded as ‘Vnishap’. In 1519/20 they were promised from James Gledstains as part of the marriage contract for his son James, and a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear where exactly these lands were, but the other lands listed were Giddenscleuch. It is recorded in a list of Ewesdale lands from at least as early as 1506 when the superiority was granted to Alexander, Lord Home. Hob Elliot was ‘callit Hob of Unthank’ in 1569. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. Franklin D. Roosevelt was descended from James Murray who was born and farmed here, and emigrated to North Carolina in 1735. Miss Elliot was recorded there in 1787, Charles Aitchison in 1792 and Mrs. Aitchison was in 1797 and James Thomson in 1799. Edward Aitchison was farmer there in 1841, and teacher John Little was also living there. David Scott was farmer there in the 1860s (unrelated to the place of the same name in Hobkirk Parish; it was ‘Vthank’ in 1535 and 1663; the origin may be Old English ‘unthances’, meaning ‘without leave’, i.e. referring to a squatter’s farm, or it may refer to lands with ‘ungrateful’ soil).

Unthank (un-thawngk) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, located between Hobkirk Kirk and Forkins, on the west side of the Rule valley. Forkins was sometimes formerly known as ‘Forkins of Unthank’. Alexander Turnbull was recorded there in 1493 and both he and Henry Turnbull in 1494/5. Leo Turnbull was tenant there in 1516. At the reformation the teind sheaves were valued at 1 boll and held by the Earl of Lothian. Archibald Turnbull is recorded there in 1586. In 1643 the proprietors were Robert and David Turnbull, and it was valued at £66 13s 4d. In the late 17th century it was part of the lands of Stobs whose rents were assigned to the widow of Sir Gilbert Elliott, Magdelen Nicolson, and her surviving children. It was separated from Stobs to become part of the estate of Stonedale in 1671. In the early 18th century it was owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stonedale and valued at £66 13s 4d. He sold it to Thomas Scott of Stonedale, who had the lands enclosed in a turf dyke, with a double thorn hedge and a row of beech trees (some of which survive). The ‘Cleugh or back brae of Unthank’ was sold by Thomas Scott of Stanedge to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757; this piece of land appears to have been valued at £67 11s 1d, and was £64 2s 8d in 1788. Andrew Oliver was then tenant, followed by Rev. John Riccarton. The the Upper Haugh (thu-u-pur-hawch, -hawf) n. the Upper Common Haugh, or Big Haugh, now largely a car park. The Upper and Under Haughs were separated by the main road from Hawick to Wilton (now Albert Road). This was the location of the afternoon races of the Common Riding until 1854 (‘the Nugget year’), when the persistence of accidents there caused the races to be moved to St. Leonard’s Park.

Upper Larriston (u-pur-law-ris-tin) n. farmstead near the Larriston Burn, far to the south-east of the present main house at Larriston. It has been suggested that somewhere near here was the original site of the tower of the Elliots. It may have corresponded to the former farm of Over Larriston. A late 18th century cottage there has a carved stone built into it, with the date 1677 and an Elliot monogram. There is also a disused lime works near there, with evidence of an old field system to the south (this is roughly where ‘Larristown’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Upper Raw (u-pur-raw) n. Upper Row, former name for a row of houses in Wilton Dean. It is used in the 1841 census to distinguish it from Fore Row and Burn Row. It probably corresponded to the houses on the track running uphill from the green in the main part of the village. The name was probably never in general use and disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.

Upper Raw (u-pur-raw) n. Upper Row, farmstead in Castleton Parish, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, lying to the north-west of Netherraw and south-west of Toftsholm, also known as ‘Over Raw’. Gavin Beattie was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 193 acres, bounded by Toftsholm, Nether Raw, and lands of the Laird of Hoscoe. The farmhouse is shown to the south of Totholm Sike, where there is no sign of habitation on modern maps. James and William Scott were tenants there in 1797. There are remains of buildings, a field system and rig lines there (it is ‘Overraw’ in 1632 and ‘overraw’ in 1694; it is probably the ‘O. raa’ marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, ‘Ouer Raw’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is ‘Upperraw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Upper Rig (u-pur-rig) n. name for the field on Hawick Common that is to the east of Pilmuir Rig and north of Bottom Rig (‘rig’ here presumably refers to a strip of ploughed land).

Upper Soothfield (u-pur-sooth-feeld) n. former name for part of Soothfield farm, probably the same as Ower Soothfield.

Upper Teviotdale (u-pur-teev-yi'-däl) n. name generally applied to the Teviot above (and sometimes including) Hawick, much of which later became the Parish of Teviothead. The area was burned by the English around May 1514, when it was described as ‘the heid of the Watter of Tevyote, from Branksholme up unto Ewse Doors, within the same Marche, beyng 8 miles in lienth, wherupon was 24 pleughes’.

Upper Teviotdale and the Scotts of Buccleuch (u-pur-teev-yi’-dál-ri-fúl-kōr) n. Volunteer company set up in 1860 at the instigation of William Elliot, with the Patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch, motivated by the perceived threat from France. The uniforms were grey, and it was the 4th Corps in Roxburghshire, with John Scott Chisholme of Stiches becoming Captain. A second company was formed in 1864 and a drill hall built at the foot of the Mill Path, which became St. Mary’s Church Hall. Some members left in an early dispute to form the Hawick Volunteer Corps later in 1860. The Corps evolved into the Border Rifles in 1868, and after several other changes became the 4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B. in 1908. Their ‘armoury’ or drill hall was at the corner of Allars Crescent and the Mill Path in the late 19th century and later became the Salvation Army headquarters.

Upper Tofts (u-pur-tofts) n. farm beside Kirkton, about 4 miles east of Hawick, and south-west of Nether Tofts. It was formerly also known as ‘High Tofts’ and ‘Over Tofts’. There were Turnbuls there for many generations. The lands were inherited by William, son of Thomas Turnbull of Tofts in 1695. John Lorraine was there in 1722. Thomas Hall was there in 1794 and James Turnbull in 1797. It was farmed by George and Robert Deans (Hawick butchers) in the mid-19th century. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building to the west that is now gone. There are a couple of disused quarries on Tofts Hill nearby.

Upper Village (u-pur-vi-lej) n. former name for the upper part of the Village, distinct from the Under Village. It was first developed between 1824 and 1828 with the erection of the ‘Hen’s Nest’, on a site later occupied by ‘Woodlands’.

uppie (u-pee) n. someone who plays towards the lower ‘hail’ in a game of ‘ban’ – ‘On nearing the uppies’ hail the leather found its way into the water and was carried across by an uppie who took it away’[HNe1906].

uppish (up-ish) adj., arch. ambitious, aspiring, arrogant (noted by E.C. Smith).

upricht (up-rich) adj., arch. upright – ‘My saufgaird is in God, which saufes the upricht saufgaird is in God, which saufes the upricht who is upright { `My saufgaird is in God, which saufes the upricht who is upright’[HSR].

uprichtness (up-rich-nis) n., poet. uprightness – ‘Thaye stan’ siccer forevir an’ evir, an’ ar dune in trouth an’ uprichtniss’[HSR], ‘I wull praysye thee wi’ uprichtniss o’ hairet when I lae learnet thy richteousniss an’ speiks the trough in his hairet’[HSR].

uprichtly (up-rich-lee) adv., poet. uprightly – ‘...do ye jujde uprichtlie, O ye sons o’ men?’[HSR], ‘He that gangs uprightlie, an’ wurks richteousniss, an’ speiks the trouch in his hairet’[HSR].
upryse (up-riz) v., poet. to rise, get up in the morning – ‘The sun upräesës, thaye gether thamesel’s thegither an’ laye thame doun in thair dens’ [HSR].

upsides wi (up-sidz-wi) adj., arch. on a level with (noted by E.C. Smith; also written ‘upseides wui’).

upstannin (up-staw-nin) adj., arch. regularly, periodically constant – ‘She’s been gey fort-ri[ES]. ‘Hir man’s hed aye a guid upstannin waige’ [ECS].

upstert (up-ster’) pp., poet. upstarted, rose suddenly – ‘The brocke upsterte with yerlish youle, And round the kyrk graye . . . ’[JTe].

uptake (up-tak) v., arch. to pick up, collect payments – ‘. . . to intromet with and vptak the hail mails, fermes, profittis and dewiteis of the saidis landis . . . ’[SB1569] (also written ‘uptak’).

up the stair (up-thu-stair) adj. upstairs – ‘in oor hoose the livin room’s up the stair’, ‘Robert Miles the barber, and Michael up the stair, Willie Tully makes the wigs, and Jenny buys the hair’[T].

Up wi’ Auld Hawick (up-wi-awld-hIk) n. song written for local singer John Bell, with words by Thomas Caldwell and music by Adam Grant. It was first sung at the 1902 Colour Bussing by Colin Jardine, and then at the following 3 Colour Bussings by John Bell. It is the only song of Grant’s with the verses and chorus having different rhythms (the change is from 4/4 time to 3/4). The tune of the verses may have been influenced by Charles Darnton’s ‘The Rescue of Lot’ (1895), while the chorus bears a similarity to part of Elgar’s ‘Pomp and Circumstance March’. However, the song is very much Grant’s own, setting it to Caldwell’s words, which had been written about 1900. Part of the enduring popularity of the song is because it is traditionally the ‘hugging song’, where during the chorus everyone links arms with their neighbours and sways to the waltz beat. Whether this practice originated with the song, or was added later, is unknown; however, such audience participation was popular in Victorian and Edwardian music halls. As sung there is usually a change to the last note in each verse, as well as an inclination to sing ‘she’s Queen’ rather than ‘the Queen’ in the chorus.

Up wi’ the Banner (up-wi-thu-baw-nur) n. song written by James Thomson, with music by William Inglis Robson. The words were written by Thomson only about a year and a half before his death. It was dedicated to Cornet Tom Scott and sung at the 1887 Colour Bussing by Robert Paterson to the tune of ‘Hail to the Chief’. Thomson’s words are clearly inspired by that earlier song (written by Albert Gamse, with music by James Sanderson), which became associated with the President of the United States. These words were themselves loosely based on the ‘Boat Song’ (Canto II XIX) from Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Lady of the Lake’. Hence Thomson’s first line ‘Hail to the banner that proudly floats o’er us’ derives from Scott’s first line ‘Hail to the chief, who in triumph advances’, and ‘Join in the old refrain – Shout Teriodin again and again’ is inspired by the end of Scott’s first verse ‘Sends our shout back agen, ‘Roderigh Vich Alpine Dhu, ho! i-e-roe!’ . In any case, Robson’s tune was composed in late 1887 and published early the following year. The new version was presented at the Colour Bussing of 1888, again sung by Paterson. It has been sung at almost every Colour Bussing ever since. Its popularity at that event is presumably partly because it is such a rousing song, but also because it is a triumphant song in which the Flag is prominent. Note that Thomson originally wrote ‘Boast, Scotland, boast of the deeds of your fathers’, but that quickly became ‘Boast, Hawick, boast!’! The original version also had the chorus after the first 2 verses being ‘Fling out the standard high . . .’, but that is no longer sung. Robson’s tune has an introductory fanfare, which is seldom played. Adam Ingles took the key down a tone for the 1957 song compilation.

ur (ur) v. are – ‘ur ee no Hawick then?’, ‘the Greens ur gaun ti wun the Seevins’ (er and ir are also used).

Urban Electric (ur-bin-ee-lek-treek) n. Urban Electric Supply Company, based at 18–20 Commercial Road. It was the first supplier of electricity in Hawick, starting in 1901 with The Theatre and then the Co-operative Society store. In 1945/46 the electricity supply was changed from locally generated D.C. to A.C. from the national grid. The building was sold to the council in 1968 and now houses an engineering firm.

Ure (yoor) n. Rev. Neil Shaw (1828–84) born in Renfrewshire, son of William and Margaret Brown. He studied at Glasgow University and was licensed to preach by the Free Kirk Presbytery of Lanark in 1858. He was minister of Newcastleton Free Kirk 1861–75. There was a case of libel brought against him in 1875, which appears to have led to his resignation. He appears to have failed in a draper’s business in Manchester 1877 and then lived in Largs, Ayrshire, where he died. He married Jessie Simpson in 1877. Their children were: William Simpson (1879–1940), who was killed when a U-boat sunk his ship; and Annie Williamson (1881–84).
Urquhart

Urquhart (ur-kur’) n. Adam of Meldrum (1635–84) from an Aberdeenshire family, he was made a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire in 1679 in order to assist Henry Ker (Sheriff-Depute of the county) in prosecuting Covenanters. He was zealous in his duties, and subsequently hated in the district. He brought an action against Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and against the young William Douglas of Cavers and his tutors. He married Mary Gordon, daughter of the Marquess of Huntly and was succeeded by his son John. Rev. George minister at Southdean (linked with Edgerston) 1966–72. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as ‘William, esq. Crescent’. His house on Slitrig Crescent (around No. 2) is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’.

usefi (yoos-fi) adj. useful (cf. yissfi).

Usher (u-shur) n. Adam ‘Adie’ (d.1624) born in ‘Birkinhauch’ in Liddesdale. He was a servant of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1624 he was convicted of several instances of sheep and cattle stealing, along with his son William, and sentenced to hanging, with his son being banished. The chief of the Elliots escaped punishment for his part in the incident. He and his son were recorded as ‘Adie and Wil Vshearis’; the 2 cows and an ox stolen from William Charlton of ‘Ilsysyd’ were said to have been eaten in the house of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Alexander Balmer ‘Sandy’ (1902–40) son of Sir Robert, 2nd Baronet. In about 1921 he took over running Bedrule on the family estate. He was a Major in the Lothian and Border Horse, and was killed during the Dunkirk retreat. His tombstone is at St. Valery-en-Caux, while there is a memorial plaque in Bedrule Kirk. Andrew (c.1782–1855) son of James of Toftfield. His uncle Thomas of Courtill arranged for him to be employed as a retail apprentice for 1 year at Nixon’s hosiery manufacturers in Hawick when he was about 20. He started his own hosiery shop in Edinburgh in 1803, but after a few years had moved into the spirit trade. In 1813 he founded Andrew Usher & Co., whisky distillers and blenders and the Usher Brewery of Edinburgh. He introduced the Glenlivet blend in 1853, had a distillery at Sciennes in Edinburgh and is credited with producing the first mass-produced blended whiskies. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Balmer of Ettrickbrae, and she died in 1860. They had 13 children, including Andrew and John, who continued the family firm, and James and Thomas who set up the brewery. Sir Andrew John (1963–) 8th and present Baronet, eldest son of Sir William John Tevenar. He married Charlotte Louise Alexandra Eldridge and their children are Rory James Andrew and Callum William.

Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’.

He was known as an all-round sportsman, being a keen horse-rider, fisherman, shooter and follower of the Jedforest Hunt, although apparently not such a good farmer. He joined the Border Mounted Rifles at their inaugural meeting in Hawick in 1872, where he became Colour-Sergeant. He was also a member of the Lothian Yeomanry. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. In 1875 he was a Steward at the Common Riding Races. He was Whip of the Jedforest Hounds 1885–92. He mar-rried Isabella, 4th daughter of William Aitcheson of Brieryhill. They had only one child, a son who died in infancy. He died of pneumonia after a period of ill-health (it is said he died of a chill contracted at the Derby). Sir John (1828–1904) 1st Baronet of Norton and Wells, youngest son of Andrew. Along with his brother Andrew he carried on the family whisky distilling business in Edinburgh. He gifted the `John Usher Institute of Public Health' to Edinburgh (while Andrew gifted the Usher Hall to the city). He purchased the farms and estates of Hallrule, Bedrule (including Fulton) and Wells (including East Fodderlee) from Elliott of Stobs in 1895/6; these also came with associated baronies. He also owned Norton (near Edinburgh Airport), Pitheavlis Castle (near Perth) and land in Caithness. He was said to be a keen fox-hunter, enjoying riding with the hounds till his last days. He served as Whip for the Jed-

John of Toftfield (1766–1847) born in Melrose, son of James of Toftfield. He was the 3rd and last Laird of Toftfield, selling the estate to Sir Walter Scott in 1819, and moving to Leaderfoot and Quarryford in Haddingtonshire. Toftfield had been purchased by his grandfather, also John, in 1753. He married Janet Oliver of Chesters and later Agnes Blaikie of Melrose. Altogether he had 14 children, including James, S.S.C., John (Makerstoun) and Jane (last surviving member of the family, dying in 1897). John (1794–1864) W.S., son of Thomas and Isabella Pott. He trained as a lawyer in Edinburgh and became Writer to the Signet in 1822. He sub-scribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 `History of Ha-a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Jean Elspeth Usher, daughter of Harry and grand-daughter of the brewer Thomas. Their children were Katherine Alice and Jacquelin. He was succeeded by his brother Sir R. Stuart. Mary Anne (1868–1955) wife of Thomas Leadbetter. She was President of Bedrule Women’s Guild 1944–53. There is a memorial plaque to her and her husband inside Bedrule Kirk. Sir Peter Lionel of Norton and Wells (1931–90) created 5th Baronet after the sudden death of his father. Along with his brother Robert, he had Downe’s Syndrome, and was brought up in Argentina to avoid family shame. His appointment as Baronet caused great consternation in the Usher family and ultimately led to the estates being sold off. Sir Robert of Norton and Wells (1860–1933) 2nd Baronet, son of Sir John. He earned the title of the ‘Whisky King’, with his huge warehouse at St. Leonard’s in Edinburgh. He found the old house at Wells to be unsuitable and so had it demolished, with the new Edwardian house built there in 1906. He also funded the enlargement of Bedrule Kirk in 1914 (with a memorial plaque to his parents placed in the church). He was the first President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905. He married Katherine Scott Turnbull, who died in 1948 and was daughter of James Turnbull of Abbey St. Bathans. They had 6 sons: Sir John Turnbull, who succeeded; Ronald James, who died young; Sir R. Stuart; Maj. Alexander Balmer; William Dove; and Brig. Thomas Clive. His daughters were Jean and Grizel Mary, who both died as infants. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Sir Robert Stuart ‘Stuart’ of Norton and Wells (1898–1963), brother of Sir John and son of Sir Robert, he was the 4th Baronet. Note that his name was also written ‘Stewart’. He was a keen country sportsman and died at a meeting of the Buccleuch Hunt. He married Gertrude Marta (who died in 1984), and their sons Peter and Robert both suffered from Downe’s Syndrome. Robert Edward of Norton and Wells (1934–94) 6th Baronet and last of the Ushers to reside at either Norton or Wells. He suffered from Downe’s Syndrome, like his brother Peter, who he succeeded. Since he could not make a will, the estates were liquidated on his death. He is the last Usher to be buried at Bedrule. Thomas of Courtillih (1755–1824), son of John of Toftield, near Melrose. He was a ‘writer’ in Hawick and Sheriff Substitute of Roxburghshire. He served as ‘deponent’ for the estate of William Oliver ‘Old Cash’, after his death in 1808. He was a writer and bachelor in Hawick in 1787 when he paid tax for having a female servant. He also paid the same tax in Hawick in 1789, but in 1791 in Jedburgh. He was in Jedburgh in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He was a writer in Jedburgh in 1794 when he paid the Horse Tax there. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–89 and in Jedburgh from 1790. He is probably the Thomas who was recorded at Burnhead in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Wilton; he owned 9 farm horses at that time, as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Burnhead in 1797. He married Isabella Pott of Penchrise (of whom an oil painting exists). The couple resided at Courtillih and were highly regarded in their day. When Dr. Chalmers was Minister at Cavers he was a frequent visitor. He was associated with Chalmers publication ‘Sermon on the duty of making a testament, to which is added the form of a testament’, published in Hawick in 1812, and where he is referred to as a notary public. He is recorded as a subscriber to many literary works of his day, including ‘The Poetical Museum’ (published in Hawick in 1784) and Robert Burns ‘Poems, chiefly in the Scottish Dialect’ of 1787, as well as Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (published in 1825). He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. His children were: John (b.1794), W.S. in Edinburgh; James (b.1796), died aged 25; Janet (or Jean, b.1797), married John Elliot, banker of Jedburgh; and Thomas (b.1803) of Courtillih, who married his cousin Jane Usher. He is buried in old Wilton cemetery. Thomas of Courtillih (1803–82) son of Thomas. He farmed at Courtillih, like his father. He was listed at Courtillih among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 399 acres, employing 19 labourers and a factor, and in 1861 was farming 363 acres and employing 14 people. He was an elder of the Hawick Free Kirk for 32 years, and served as a Commissioner at the 1865 General Assembly. He also served as a Commissioner for the county of Roxburghshire. He married Jane Usher of Edinburgh. Their children were Thomas and Margaret. He became blind in later life. A photograph of him exists. Thomas (1819–94) son of Thomas and Helen Ewart. He was the 13th Usher to be feuar of lands at Eildon. His brother John trained for the ministry, but died aged 19. He was a shepherd at several farms, including Hawthornside. He married Ann Murray in 1854, and their children included: Elizabeth

the Ushers

Coleleuch, who married Thomas Carruthers; Helen Anne, who died at Mansfield Square in Hawick; and Margaret Murray, who also died at Mansfield Square. He later lived at Weensmoor with his sister Mrs. Renwick. Thomas (1826–1902) born in Edinburgh, son of James S.S.C., he worked as a law clerk. He married Eliza Dickson McFarlane and they had 6 children. He was founder and for a long time Acting Secretary of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He also wrote an account of ‘The Usher Family of Darnick’ in 1893. Thomas (1850–1910) farmer at Courtthill, son of Thomas. He married his cousin Gretrude Usher of Edinburgh (daughter of brewer Thomas). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. In 1897 he journeyed around the world, visiting Africa, Australia, New Zealand and Canada, to find opportunities for his sons. His children were Eliza Jane, Gertrude, Thomas, Charles Cog and Harry. Thomas (1882–1972) born in Wilton, son of Thomas of Courtthill. He married Margaret Dorothy, a distant cousin (keeping up the tradition of marrying into the family, being the 3rd successive Thomas to marry his cousin!). He emigrated to Calgary, Canada in 1902, building up the Usher Brother’s ranch with his brother Charles. He had 5 surviving children. Thomas Clive (1907–82) career soldier. He was Military Advisor to the British High Commissioner in India 1955–57, Commanded the 18th Training Brigade of the Royal Artillery 1957–58, was Aide-de-Camp to the Queen in 1958 and in 1958 became Brigadier of the Royal Artillery Scottish Command, retiring later that year. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. William ‘Will’ (17th C.) son of Adie. In 1624 they were both convicted of a series of thefts of cattle, sheep and goats. His father was hanged in Edinburgh, but given his minority he was banished from the United Kingdom. William Dove (1904–69) son of Sir Robert and Katherine Scott Turnbull. He married Christa Elizabeth von Tevenar and their sons were William John Tevenar and Stuart Alexander. Sir William John Tevenar (1940–98) 7th Baronet. He married Rosemary Margaret Houldsworth. His eldest son Andrew John is the 8th and present Baronet.

the Ushers (thu-u-shurz) n. family who have long connections with the Borders, with the Courtthill branch being particularly local. The family is mentioned in the Peebles area in the 15th century, then in the Bridgend, Darnick and Melrose areas from the 17th century. Originally weavers and small-holders, Toftfield was the first family seat, from which sprang the Courtthill, Leaderfoot, Stodrig and Edinburgh branches. This last diverged into brewing and whisky blending (leaving the Usher Hall to the city, for example) and gaining several large estates, includes those at Hallrule, Hyndhope, Norton and Wells – ‘The Ushers o’ Courtthill, They’re a’ sae kind to me, Whiles they send me tatties And whiles a pickle tea’ [RM].

Usuch Haugh see Usuch Haugh

Usuch Haugh (oo-such-hawch) n. part of the original Common at the southern end of town. Its precise location is not known, but it seems likely that it corresponds to the Brewery Haugh. Whisky Houses is probably also the same place and a corruption of the name. It is recorded in 1737 that the Bailies and Council ‘marched that part of the Common called Usuch Haugh, adjacent to the Duke of Buccleuch’s interest, by setting down 8 marchstones on the east side, and one on the west side of the Water of Slitrig’ (origin uncertain, but perhaps derived from Gaelic ‘watery’ plus haugh).

Utnomound (ut-nô-mownd) n. possible name of lands in southern Liddesdale, listed along with Whisgills and Purvinen in the 1541 rental roll. The name is transcribed as ‘Utnomound’, and it does not appear to correspond with any place on contemporary or modern maps. It is also transcribed as ‘Burnmouth’ and so it is possible the name is just an error.

uttermaist (u-tur-mâist) adj., arch. utmost, greatest – ‘...at the vtermost of our powaris, as an gentilmann aucht to do to their chieff’ [SB1585]. ‘A party, admitted Burgess, makes oath to defend the religion professed, and maintain and assist the bailies, officers, and the town to his uttermost’ [BR1640].

Utterside see Outerside

uz (uz) pron., arch. us, emphatic use in particular situations (a variant of huiz).

vacance (vâ-kins) n., arch. vacation, schoolholidays (noted by E.C. Smith; also spelled ‘vaikins’, ‘vaikance’ and ‘vaigands’: from French).

vaigabun (vâ-gu-bun) n., arch. vagabond – ‘...and the multitude were divided in their opinions – one part crying ‘Aih the blaggards!’ and the other, ‘Aih the vaigabun!’’ [WNK].

vaigetable (vâj-tu-bul) n. a vegetable – ‘their inability ti understand their gairdener’s Hawick...
vaigtable
tongue led ti him plantin vaigetables in the flooer gaerden’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘vaigtable’; cf. the older veegtable).

vail (vail) n., arch. a tip given by guests to domestic servants, or any other servants’ perks.
vaignance (vain-jins) n., arch. vengeance.
vainosity (vain-ee) n., arch. vanity — ‘... wha hethna liftet up his saul untill vainitie, nar swurn wrangouslie’ [HSR], ‘The Lord kens the thoughts o’ man, that thaye ar vainitie’ [HSR].

Vair (vair) n. James T. (1840–1908) reporter and publisher who launched the Hawick News along with John McNairn in 1882. He was born in Selkirk and worked on the Southern Reporter and elsewhere before coming to Hawick to work on the Hawick Advertiser. He died from complications following a collision on his bicycle on the Hawick Advertiser. He died from complications following a collision on his bicycle on the Hawick Advertiser.

Vair (vair) n., 2nd Earl of Pembroke (c.1275–1324) 3rd son of William and Isabella of Angoulême. He held extensive lands in England, as well as France and was extremely powerful in the time of Edward II. In 1300 he was responsible to Edward I for provisioning Selkirk Castle. He served as a commander on the Edward I’s Scottish campaign, winning at Methven in 1306 and being beaten at Louden Hill in 1307. In 1306 he received a gift of Selkirk Castle, with forest and lands, as well as the heritable Sheriffdoms of Selkirk and Peebles. He was Edward II’s Lieutenant in Scotland, and was present at Bannockburn in 1314. He also served as Sheriff of Roxburgh. He married Beatrice, daughter of Raoul de Clermont, and secondly married Marie de St. Pol, daughter of Gui de Châtillon, who founded Pembroke College in Cambridgo. He had one (illegitimate) son, Henry. He died while travelling to France. Andrew (15th C.) listed among local men as witness to the 1464/5 sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. His name is recorded as ‘Andrea Valance’.

Valentine (vay-lin-tin) n. Alec Richard (b.1928) from Hawick, he played flanker for Hawick R.F.C. He was capped 3 times for Scotland in 1953. His younger brothers Dave and Rob also played for Scotland. David ‘Dave’ (1926–) born in Hawick, he played rugby locally, then was capped for Scotland in 1947. Later that year he signed for English Rugby League side Huddersfield and eventually played for Great Britain, including leading the team to victory in the 1954 World Cup.

Vales see Valesburn

Valesburn (valez-brig) n. bridge taking the A7 over the Valesburn, just after Newmill. There were the remains of an earthwork on the opposite side of the Teviot from here, but now almost totally obliterated by ploughing.

Vales Burn (valez-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from roughly the west at Newmill, rising near Slaidhills Moss. It marks the boundary between Hawick Parish and Teviothead Parish. A farm near there had the same name. An aqueduct is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, conveying the mill lade for Newmill across the burn.

Valesburn (valez-burn) n. farm just to the west of Newmill, where the Valesburn joins the Teviot. It is ‘Vailles’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. It is probably the ‘waills’ adjacent to Newmill where John Laidlaw was listed as tenant in 1694 and the ‘vaills’ where William Nichiol was listed among the poor of the parish. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, consisting of 36 acres and bounded by Branxholme Moor, Hott and Harwood. The name ‘Valesburn’ is recorded on the 1841 census and the 1853 Ordnance Survey map, to the left of the A7 just after Newmill. James Elliot was shepherd there in the early 19th century. Riddells and Millers lived there in 1841 (also written ‘Vales Burn’, it is ‘Vailles’ in 1718).

valetudinary (va-li-chew-di-nu-ree) adj., arch. in poor health, sickly, ill, feeble — ‘... in regard he is become valetudinarie and troubled with an uneasiness in his hough and feet whereby he is not able to go up to the usual place of repentance’ [PR1721], ‘... and the other of them is not so, his wife being valetudinary, and can make no shift for a livelihood’ [PR1725].

Valognes (va-lo-nes) n. Philip (d.1215) 3rd son of Roger de Valognes, and Agnes, daughter of John Fitz Richard. He became Chamberlain of Scotland under William the Lion, serving about 1165–1171 and again about 1193–1214. He was reappointed Chamberlain under Alexander II, but died soon afterwards. The family lands were in Hertfordshire, however, he also held Benvie and Panmure in Angus, Torphichen in Cumberland and Ringwood in Roxburghshire. Some time in the period 1165–71 he granted the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey, confirming the earlier grant by Osulf. He was Chamberlain some time in the period 1173–82 when Walter of Berkeley was granted the lands of ‘Neutun’ by King William. In about 1185 he witnessed a confirmation of the grant of lands in Eskdale to Melrose Abbey by the Avenels. His son William became Chamberlain after him. His daughter Sibyl married Robert de Stuteville, who held the lands of Liddell in Cumberland.

valuation roll (vawl-yoo-ä-shin-röl) n. a list of rateable values in a city, burgh or district, along with the name of the owner and tenant. These are useful documents for tracing the history of specific properties. Hawick valuation rolls from 1868 (when Hawick became a Parliamentary Burgh) are in the National Archives, before that the Town’s roll was included in that for Roxburghshire.

van (vawn) n., poet. abbreviated form of ‘vanguard’, the forefront – ‘So I like auld Hawick and her spirit I like, That leaps still forth to the van’ [FH], ‘The first and foremost in the van Where truant laddies flock: The leader o’ the ranger clan Is our little Jock’ [JT], ‘When drum and fife went through the town On Common Riding morn, Wi’ deadly halberts in the van, By burgh beagles borne’ [??].

Vancouver (vawn-koo-vur) n. largest city in British Columbia, and area to which many locals emigrated in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. A Hawick Callants’ Club was formed in Vancouver in 1913 with over 30 members. They held their own Common Riding for many years, with an elected Council. About 60 people apparently enjoyed the celebration in 1920, and there are photographs of the ‘Hawick Common Riding Annual Picnic’ on Bowen Island in c.1919, 1921, 1922 and 1923, some showing around 150 people gathered there.

vaper (vä-pur) v., poet. to boast, act with bravado – ‘Then with new keenness wad they caper, He slyly smug’d to see them vaper . . .’ [CPM].

Vass (vaws) n. Henry (b.1730) son of William, he was born in Hobkirk Parish and lived in Abbotrule. In 1762 he married Isobel Scott, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Southdean Parishes. Their children included: William (b.1763); Walter (b.1768); Nelly (b.1770); Walter (again, b.1772); Henry (b.1772); an unnamed child (b.1776); and Isobel (b.1779). In 1776 he is listed in Tidlerhill. His surname may be a variant of some more common name.

Vassal (vaw-sul) n. Col. Rawdon John Popham (c.1801–84) son of Spencer Thomas, who died in the assault on Monte Video in 1807. He was younger brother of Sir Spencer Lambert Hunter, naval captain. He was Major in the 78th Regiment of Highlanders. He married Margaret Emily Boswell in 1848; she was sister of Theresa, wife of Sir William Elliott of Stobs and Wells. He lived for a while at Wells House, possibly only during the summer months for the ‘shooting’; he is also referred to as ‘of Stobs’, and seems also to have similarly taken Stobs Castle. Many transactions involving him are recorded in the diary of Robert Grieve in the late 1850s. Along with his wife he presented a silver flagon to St. Cuthbert’s Kirk, and they were also present at its consecration in 1858. His wife presented the Crowbyres Mission with a library in 1860, probably to serve the railway navvies (there are different spellings).

Vassie (vaw-see) n. Rev. William (1856–1917) born at Croftonhill in Lanarkshire, 3rd son of John and Mary Lamb Murray. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1878 and B.D. in 1881, and was licensed by Lanark Presbytery. His first charge was as assistant at Govan. Then in 1883 he was ordained as minister of Castleton Parish Kirk. In 1885 he married Cecilia Pitcairn, daughter of David Playfair, minister of Abercorn. Their children included: John (b.1887), who was a sales manager in Tacoma, U.S.A.; Jane Kincaid (b.1888); Ethel Mary (b.1890); William Playfair (d.1895); and William (1896–). He died at Kingussie and his wife died 3 weeks later.

vast (vawst) n., arch. a large number, great deal, lot, big portion – ‘A vast o folk dinna ken whan they’re weel off!’ [ECS].

Vaughan (vawn) n. Rev. Idris John (b.1901) born in Abertridwr in South Wales, he was educated at Brecon Memorial College and became preacher at Berea in Monmouthshire in 1952. He moved to Ashby-de-la-Zouch in 1955 and Bethany, Glasgow in 1958. He was then minister of Newcastleton Congregational Kirk 1965–71. In 1971 he mobed to New Maria, Neath in Glamorgan. He was later a missionary in Nigeria. He published a Masters thesis about his life in Nigeria, ‘Pilgrim with a Limp’ (1983) and a history of the British Apostolic mission in Nigeria in 1991, at the age of 90.

V-bed (vee-bed) n. a knitting machine in which there are 2 beds of needles arranged at roughly 90° to each other.

V.E. Day (vee-e-dâ) n. 8th May 1945, officially marking the Allied victory in Europe. In Hawick this was celebrated with a victory parade and dancing in the streets. It was a more muted affair than V.J. Day, with little evidence of celebrations along the High Street, although other areas, such as Dickson Street were festooned with flags and bunting. There was a 50th anniversary ceremony in the Haugh on May 7th 1995.

veecious (vee-shis, veesh-yis) adj. vicious – ‘An sic veeshis fechteen as it was, tuil!’ [ECS] (there are spelling variants).

veetable (veej-tu-bul) n. vegetable – ‘Tippence worth o veetable, ma mind pictures galoore’ [AY] (cf. the more common vaigetable).

veesion (vee-zin) n., arch. a vision – ‘Than thou spakist in veesion til thy Haly Ane …’ [HSR], ‘Eh whow! the glamourie an’ richt That ane sae dune, sae auld, Should, in a veesion o’ the richt, Be young again, an’ yeauld’ [ECB].

veesit (vee-zi’) n. a visit – ‘Syne we arrived at Langholm toon And paid a veesit tae ‘The Croon’’ [DH], ‘…frace commercial aerial photography ti coverin twae royal veesits’ [IWL].

veesitor (vee-zee’-ur) n. a visitor – ‘A hear ee’ved hed veesitors the day’, ‘And so, we salute, and we a’ welcome a’ veesitors At ilka Festival …’ [DH].

Veitch (veech) n. Adam (16th C.) listed as ‘Adam Vache’ in 1526 when he was among the Borders men pardoned for accompanying the Homes on an attack on the Earl of Arran. It is unclear to which branch of the Veitches or Waughs he belonged. Alexander and George are listed later in the same 1526 document. Adam (d.1801) ‘under miller’ of Hawick (i.e. an assistant to the miller). He had 2 children (one illegitimate) die in 1799, and another in 1801. Agnes (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Alexander (13th C.) recorded as ‘Alexandro la Uache’ around 1250 when he witnessed a charter for Henry of Ashkirk to Coldingham Priory. He also witnessed an agreement between Henry of Ashkirk and Henry’s brother Alexander. He is probably related to later local Veitches (or Waughs). Alexander (15th/16th C.) eldest son of William of Dawyck in Peeblesshire. He succeeded to his father’s lands in 1502 and had payments from the ‘fermes’ of Peebles in 1507. However, before that, in 1481, he granted a charter of the Mains of Synton (probably North Synton) to his brother in exchange for Easter Dawyck. And in 1497 he had a sasine for Dawyck and North Synton. In 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, failing to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Synton. His son was Bernard, although he appears to have been succeeded by his brother William. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Alexander Vache’ on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scots, Turnbuls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. Alexander (19th/20th C.) one of a family of eleven, descended from James Veitch of Inchbonny. He farmed at Wauchope and Harwood Mill. Andrew (d.1808) recorded in the Hawick register of deaths as ‘a old man from Alewatter’. Archibald of Bellevue (19th/20th C.) cattle-dealer and tenant farmer at Wauchope and Harwood Mill. He was a descendant of James Veitch of Inchbonny, being great-great-grandson of the James who bought Inchbonny in 1738. Barnaby of Dawyck (1370–aft. 1436) probably son of William. In 1407 he was granted a charter of North Synton by Archibald, Earl of Douglas; his name is recorded as ‘Barnabas le Vache de Dawyck’. This may be the first connection between the family and the lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1420 he witnessed the charter of the granting of half of the Mains of Synton (probably North Synton). In 1497 he had a sasine for Dawyck and North Synton. In 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, failing to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Synton. His son was Bernard, although he appears to have been succeeded by his brother William. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Alexander Vache’ on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scots, Turnbuls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. Alexander (19th/20th C.) one of a family of eleven, descended from James Veitch of Inchbonny. He farmed at Wauchope and Harwood Mill. Andrew (d.1808) recorded in the Hawick register of deaths as ‘a old man from Alewatter’. Archibald of Bellevue (19th/20th C.) cattle-dealer and tenant farmer at Wauchope and Harwood Mill. He was a descendant of James Veitch of Inchbonny, being great-great-grandson of the James who bought Inchbonny in 1738. Barnaby of Dawyck (1370–aft. 1436) probably son of William. In 1407 he was granted a charter of North Synton by Archibald, Earl of Douglas; his name is recorded as ‘Barnabas le Vache de Dawyck’. This may be the first connection between the family and the lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1420 he was witness to the charter of the granting of half of Branxholme from the Inglis’s to the Scots; he is there ‘Bernaba de Wache’. In 1434/5 he witnessed charter for the Hays of Yester. He was succeeded by his son Paul. Capt. ?? (17th/18th C.) served with the 21st Fusiliers. He was said to be a brother of Lord Bowhill (John Murray), so presumably a brother-in-law. He married the widow.
Veitch

of a private in his regiment, and she was a Gledstains, related to the Gledstains of Dod. Sometime in the early 1700s his wife inherited the lands of Dod. However, he is said to have been extravagant and fairly quickly sold the lands to James Pott. Douglas ‘Champion Doug Veitch’ (1960– ) born in Hawick, he worked as a house-painter, but turned temporary pop star, being referred to as ‘the King of Caledonian Cajun Swing’. He made several records in the 1980s and had his own minor record label, ‘Disc Afrique’, which was one of the first in Britain to promote African music. His hit ‘One Black Night’ reached No. 45 in the U.K. charts in 1985, ‘Jumping Into Love’ made the NME top-50 list for the same year, and he holds the record for the most consecutive singles (6) to make the NME single of the week. His other singles are: ‘Lumiere Urbain’, ‘Another place, another time’, ‘Not the Heart’, ‘Gone Train’ and ‘Margarita’. He was also involved in bringing the Bhundu Boys to Britain (and Hawick!), which helped fuel the World Music fashion of the mid-1980s. He released an album of Scottish dance music in 1989 under the name ‘Martin, Doug and Sara’ and has recently been touring with ex-Bhundu Boys guitarist Rise Kagona. George of North Synton (d.c.1530) son of John. He was confirmed in the lands of North Synton by his superior William Veitch of Dawyck in 1525. The following year his son Walter was confirmed as heir to the lands. However, by 1535 they were owned by John, probably another son. George (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branhholme) pardoned in 1526 for an earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. George of Clerklands (d.c.1641). His daughter Helen married James, son of Walter Veitch of North Synton. She was served heir to his lands of Clerklands in 1641/2. Helen (17th C.) daughter of George of Clerklands. She was served heir to her father’s lands of Clerklands in 1641/2. James of Dawyck (d.c.1552) received the estates from his father William in 1536. This included the lands at North Synton. About 1510 he married Margaret Cockburn, sister of the reiver William Cockburn of Henderland, and probably through her acquired the lands of North Synton. After her brother was hanged in 1530 and his lands forfeited, the superiority of the Cockburn estates passed to James Cockburn of Skirling in 1552. However, the ownership of North Synton (as well as Dawyck) passed to his son and heir William. James of North Synton (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of North Synton. In 1582/3 he was a cautioner for Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch (and someone else subscribed for him ‘because I can not wrett’). He was probably the James, ‘younger of North Synton’ who, along with Andrew Veitch (brother of the Laird of Tourhope) killed John Tweedie (tutor of Drumelzier) on Edinburgh High Street in 1590. This was in revenge for the murder 4 days earlier of Patrick Veitch (son of William of Dawyck) by James Tweedie of Drumelzier among others. The feud continued between the families until at least 1611 when King James issued a proclamation on the matter. The 2 Veitches were eventually pardoned by the King; however, the family feud continued for at least another couple of decades. He was served heir to his father Walter in North Synton in 1601; the lands were described as having ‘tower and for talice’ and being annexed within the Barony of Dawyck. In 1604 he held a charter of the lands of Corslie in Ettrick Forest (on Gala Water) and was said to also be the tenant there. He was succeeded by his son Walter in 1609. James (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of North Synton, who had sold off most of the family estates in 1641. He and John are recorded in 1643 as owners of Clerklands in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £182. He married Helen, daughter of George Veitch of Clerklands, who must have been a close cousin. He may be the ‘George Taite’ listed among the residents of North Synton estate in the Hearth Tax roll of 1694; John is listed after him and so presumably related. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson, when it contained Hassendean. He married Helen Turnbull in 1684 and their son Robert was baptised in 1686. The witnesses were James Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and George Scott. He witnessed baptisms for John Cochrane and John Rule in Robertson in 1686. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (1672/3–1766) blacksmith at Fahalash. He married Mary Riddell in Hawick in 1706 and she died in 1743, aged 66. Their children included: Margaret and Jean, who probably died young; and James (1721/2–1807), who married Helen Elliot, who died at Binks. He died at Fahalash Mill. James (1695–1775) 2nd son of wright John. He is the progenitor of the Inchbonny branch of the family. He lived at Mossburnford, working as a joiner and wood merchant. He purchased Inchbonny Braes from Sir John Rutherford in 1738. He married (possibly Isobell Richardson in 1722) and his sons were John (who carried on the business, but died unmarried), James (who farmed at Inchbonny and is the ancestor of the Jedburgh and Rulewater Veitches and William (who was a wright at Inchbonny). James (1727/8–92) tenant farmer at Spittal Mill. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), daughter of John Murray, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule; she died in 1808, aged 73. Their children were: Jean, who died in childhood; Andrew, who died young; Thomas, also died young; John, who succeeded his father in the farm; James, who was a doctor in Jamaica and died at Montego Bay in 1800; William (d.1786); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who married her neighbour Thomas Bunyan; and George (d.1821). Most of the family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. James (1762–1800) 2nd son of James and Betty Murray, born in Cavers Parish. He was educated as a doctor and practised in Montego Bay, Jamaica, where he died. James (d.c.1833) farmer at Binks, listed there in 1791 when he paid the cart tax. He was also on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He left the farm in about 1822, setting up as a grocer and meal dealer in Langholm. He is probably the James listed at Langholm in the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He does not appear on the 1841 census, and so presumably was deceased by then. He is probably the Teviothead resident, married to Isabel Brydon, whose children included: James (b.1795), a labourer in Langholm in 1841; Walter (b.1796); Thomas (b.1800), who drove meal etc. from Hawick for his father; and Margaret (b.1803), who married Francis Scoon. James (1771–1838) eldest son of wright William. He farmed at Inchbonny. He was described by Sir Walter Scott as a ‘self-taught philosopher, astronomer and mathematician’, and had a strong influence on the young David Brewster. He was said to be a great maker of telescopes, which he used to observe the heavens; he was the first person in Britain to see the great comet of 1811. He also made clocks and a new plough design. He is supposed to have preserved the sword of the famed Ringan Oliver, whose sister was his own great-grandmother (this was among historical artefacts shown by his descendant James in 1924). He is listed as a maker of telescopes, microscopes, etc., in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was a great friend of Hawick millwright and amateur astronomer Gideon Scott. His children were William (millwright at Inchbonny, who married Agnes Barrie from Hawthornside), John (who died young), James (who became minister of St. Cuthbert’s in Edinburgh), Betty (who lived to her 90s, and was one of the last people living to have spoken with Sir Walter Scott) and other daughters. James (19th/20th C.) tenant of Harwood Mill. He was Secretary of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. Janet (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (15th/16th C.) 3rd son of William of Dawyck. In 1481 he was granted a charter of the Mains of Synton (possibly North Synton) by his brother Alexander, in exchange for Easter Dawyck. He thus started the branch of the Veitches of North Synton (although the lands were held by the family since at least 1407). He and his father William were granted the lease of Crosslee (in Ettrick) in 1488, until at least 1492. He is probably the ‘Johanne Waiich de Sbynoun’ who witnessed the document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for Scott of Whitchesters in 1507/8, and probably the ‘Johamem Vaiche’ on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alemoor in 1509. He may also be the same man as the contemporary John Waugh. He was succeeded by his son George. John of North Synton (16th C.) probably a younger son of George. He possessed the North Synton estate from at least 1533, when he was part of an inquest in Jedburgh over lands in Longnewton. The next owner was probably Walter, likely to have been his son. In 1535 there was a dispute with William Veitch of Dawyck, his superior, which ended with him giving up Corslie (on the Gala Water) in return for keeping North Synton. He could be the ‘John Vache’ who was listed among the Border Lairds of Selkirkshire who submitted themselves to James V in 1530, to keep better order. He was probably the ‘Johanne Waithe’ who had 5 cows stolen from ‘Corsle’, as claimed in the 1535 trial of Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. John (16th C.) tenant in Hassendean. He is recorded in 1583/4 among men of that area cited for failing to appear to give evidence relating to answer charges against sons of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. John of Dawyck (1579–1606) son of William. He is referred in 1595 as ‘Johne Waiche, fear of Daulk’ when he signed a ‘bond of manrent’ in Hawick with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. The witnesses were Andrew and 2 Williams (one of them surely his brother). He succeeded to Dawyck on the death of his father in 1602. He married Janet Stewart. In some histories he is succeeded by his son Malcolm. However, in 1606 his eldest son William is recorded being served as his heir in the 10-pound land (of old extent) of North Synton (perhaps just being the superiority of the lands). John (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with James as owner of Clerklands in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £182. John (17th C.) wright at Bedrule in the late 1600s. His eldest son was Thomas and a younger son was James. He is probably the John listed on the Hearth Tax roll for Bedrule in 1694. He could be the John who married Bessie Lillico in Bedrule in 1708. John (17th C.) resident of North Sinton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is listed right after James, to whom he was presumably related. He may be related to the earlier John, associated with Clerklands. He is probably the John who married Jean Coltart and whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Ashkirk in 1689. The witnesses in 1689 were Walter Coltart and James Pringle. John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. John (17th C.) listed among the poor of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was ‘in Burnfoot’. This was presumably Hassendean Burnfoot. John (1759–1816) eldest son of James and Betty Murray. He succeeded his father as tenant at Spittal-on-Rule. He is probably the John who is recorded at Spittal Mill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Jean Elliot from Knowesouth in 1791. Their children were: Jean, who married Thomas Turnbull, merchant in Hawick; James, who trained as a minister; William, also trained as a minister; Betty (d.1838); John, who was a gardener; Robert (d.1834), became a minister and Greek scholar; George, died in Lanton; Margaret, who died in infancy; Mabel (d.1848), who died unmarried; Margaret, who also died in infancy; Elliot (d.1842); and an unnamed girl. His wife Jean, died a few days after the last child was born. John (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. It is said that he was unable to convince his wife to stop home-brewing ale, which had become illegal, and so he informed on her to the authorities in Jedburgh, who, however, were amused by his honesty and let her off with a warning. He was recorded as tenant in Spittal Mill on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) listed as a meal dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Kathleen Anne (1908–68) daughter of tweed manufacturer James and Margaret Anne Currie. She became an Associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1930. About 1931–4 she worked for the Duke of Roxburgh on estate improvements. She exhibited watercolours at the Hawick Art Club in the 1930s. In about 1937 she designed Little Salt Hall adjacent to Summerfield (possibly her parents’ home), off Rosalle Brae. It has an unusual curved plan, with Arts & Crafts elements. She was unmarried and lived with her sister Maude in a house she designed near Gattonside. After retirement she converted to Catholicism. From 1958 she spent the last decade of her life working on renovations of the Church of Our Lady and St. Joseph in Selkirk. She spent time at the Catholic retreat at Elie (in Fife) and went missing from there. Her body was later found on the beach and she had been strangled. Her murder was never officially solved, although the later accidental death of a worker dismantling the railway there may have been the cause of the police shutting the case. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Philhope in 1715 and 1718 and Broadlee in 1722. His surname is written ‘Veatch’. He is probably the son of James and Helen Turnbull, born in Roberton Parish in 1686. His children included: Jean (b.1713); Helen (b.1715); Mary (b.1718); William (b.1719); and Christian (b.1722). Thomas (17th C.) recorded as ‘mealmaker’ at Newton Mill, Bedrule Parish in 1691, probably related to John the wright at Bedrule. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694, with ‘The Kilne’ listed right after him. He is probably the Thomas whose children, baptised in Bedrule, included William (b.1691) and Isabel (b.1694). Thomas (b.1692) son of wright John. He was shepherd at Spittal Tower. His children included: Thomas (b.1714), baptised in Bedrule; Walter (b.1716), baptised in Cavers; and William (b.1719), baptised in Bedrule. Helen (b.1728), baptised in Cavers, may have been his daughter. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included William (b.1737). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Agnes (b.1764). Thomas (1720/1–1807) gardener in Edgerston. His wife, Mary (or Mariane) Scott, died in 1780, aged 50. Their son Archibald (1777/8–1836) lived for a while in Jamaica. They had an unnamed son baptised in Jedburgh in 1767. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard and must be related to the Spittal Mill family. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Jane Cockburn and their son James was baptised in 1761. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Agnes Hall and their son Adam was baptised in 1773. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797

Horse Tax Rolls. He probably also farmed at Wester Swanshiel, and other nearby lands, which were at that time let along with Unthank. ‘T. Veitch’s wife’ who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1812 could have been his wife. Helen (b.1773), Margaret (b.1775), Ann (b.1777) and Betty (b.1782), baptised in Hobkirk, could be his daughters. Thomas (b.1800) son of James. He drove meel etc. between Langholm and Hawick for his father, who had farmed at Binks and then moved to Langholm. He is listed at Binks in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. Walter (16th C.) son of George of North Synton. He was given these lands in a sasine of 1526, but by 1535 they were owned by John, who may therefore have been a younger brother. Walter of North Synton (d.c.1600) probably son of John, although these generations are uncertain. He may be the ‘Walter Vache of Syntoun’ who is recorded as a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch in the 1564/5 contract between the Scotts and the Kerrs. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for his steading of ‘Corsley’. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He may have been involved in the attack by the Scotts of Headshaw on 2 sons of Martin Elliot of Braudie. He failed to appear for the first summons to the Privy Council in 1581. He was probably succeeded by his son John or perhaps James. He may also be the ‘Walter Vaitche of North synton’ listed among landed men in the Borders in about 1590 and as ‘Walter Vaitch of Northsinton’ in Monipennie’s list of about 1597. His grandson Walter inherited North Synton from him in 1609. Walter of North Synton (16th/17th C.) son of James. He was served heir to his grandfather Walter in the lands of North Synton in 1609. His father resided at Corslie, which also inherited in 1609. He married Jean Cairncross, and with her permission sold Corslie to George Pringle of Torwoodlee in 1625. He later married Janet Ker; with her permission and that of his eldest son James, he sold North Synton (with the exception of Clerklands) to Francis Scott of South Synton in 1641. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Nicholas (b.1708); and James (b.1711). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was in Appleterehall in 1718 when he married Margaret (or Marion) Turnbull. They were living at Galalaw in 1724. Their children included: Isabel (b.1724); and Martha (b.1728). The witnesses in 1724 were John Easton and James Telfer. Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in ‘Longtown’ (probably Langtonheight) in Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Archibald and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1719. William of Dawyck (d.c.1502) probably son of Paul. He and his son John were granted a lease of the lands of Crosslee in Ettrick in the period 1488–92. His children included Alexander, William and John. He could be the William who had a sasine for North Synton in 1475. William of Dawyck (d.c.1545) 2nd son of William. He had a charter for North Synton in 1509. He held the family estates in Peebleshire, succeeding to his brother Alexander. He was also superior of the lands of North Synton, granting a charter to his nephew George in 1525 and a ‘precept of sasine’ to George’s son Walter in 1526. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted to James V to keep better order. In 1535 he had a debate over these lands with John Veitch, but received Corslie (on the Gala Water) in return for John retaining North Synton. William of Dawyck (d.1602) son of James. He was known as ‘the Deil of Dawyck’. He inherited the family lands, which included acting as superior for North Synton, as embodied in a crown charter of 1564. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. He married Marion Fleming and his sons included: John, who succeeded; Patrick, killed by the Tweedies in 1590; and William. William (16th/17th C.) eldest son of John. In 1606 he is recorded being served as heir to his father John in the lands of North Synton, including the advowson of the church. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Mill in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. His surname is written ‘Vaithe’. He would be the William who married Agnes Bowie and had children (baptised in Ashkirk): Jean (b.1690); and William (b.1692). The witnesses in 1690 were James Kennedy (who was probably also at Ashkirk Mill) and John Bowie (who was probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) wright listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. William (18th C.) gardener at Branxholme. In 1740 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Cook (gardener at Branxholme). He is listed as ‘Gardiner to Midlamih in Branxome’, i.e. he worked for Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill, who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch.
Living at Branxholme. William (d.bef. 1787) merchant in Hawick. In 1758 he was witness to a baptism for Walter Rae and another for merchant Andrew Scott. He married Christian Scott in 1753. Their children included: Agnes (1757–87); Elizabeth (b.1759); Andrew (b.1761); William (b.1763); Elizabeth (again, b.1765); Alison (b.1768); James (b.1768); and Andrew (again, b.1768). The witnesses in 1757 and 1765 were merchant Andrew Scott (possibly related to his wife) and shoemaker John Oliver. William (b.1738) 3rd son of James of Inchbonny. He was a wright at Inchbonny, inheriting part of the property on the death of his father, his descendants later becoming sole owners. His eldest son James was well known as a self-taught philosopher and astronomer and his 2nd son William became a millwright in Jedburgh. He could be the William listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. His daughter Agnes died in 1787. William (b.1800/1) born in Linton, he was farmer at Dykes in Cavers Parish. He is recorded there in 1861 as farmer of 290 acres and was still recorded there in a directory of 1868. He married Janet Davidson. Rev. William (1794–1885) son of John Veitch and Jean Elliot, he was probably born at Spittal-on-Rule. Like 2 of his brothers (and his cousin James Veitch, D.D.) he trained for the ministry. He was educated in Jedburgh and then at Edinburgh University. He was a seceder, with severe Presbyterian views. He devoted much of his life to teaching Greek in Edinburgh and wrote ‘Greek verbs, irregular and defective’ (1848), which was reprinted several times. As a result he was made LL.D. In late life he lived in Edinburgh and wrote 33 articles for the Transactions. He also helped James Sinton compile his memoirs.

Veltoun (vel-tin) n. old form of Wulton, used on a Church of Scotland register of 1586. Velvet Heels (vel-vi’-heels) n. nickname sometimes used for Rev. John Aikman Wallace.

Vennel (ve-nul) n., arch. an alley, narrow lane – ‘the common vennel that leads from the town head to the back dam of the mill’ [BR] (early Hawick documents speak about the ‘Common Vennel’ and the ‘Back Vennel’; from French).

the Vennel (tho-ve-nul) n. name sometimes used for the ‘Common Vennel’ running from Myreslawgreen down to the Coble Pool, which marked part of the town boundary in the 1537 Charter.

Venner (ve-nur) n. Corbyn Morris (d.1803) Captain in the East India Company. His first name is also written ‘Corrybline’. He was Captain of the ‘Queen’ in 1796 and the ‘Walpole’ 1797/8, which ship he purchased in 1803. In 1800 he was served heir to his uncle James Lauder of Whitslade. As well as gaining the lands of Whitslade, he also got Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiels. The 1802 Land Tax Rolls lists him paying tax on £169 for those farms and £266 13s 4d for Whitslade. His will describes him as ‘of Inner Temple, City of London’. John (18th/19th C.) succeeded his brother Corbyn in 1805, gaining half of the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiels. He also gained the other half of the lands that had previously belonged to his great-uncle John Adam of Whitslade (also written ‘Vennor’).

venterlokist (ven-ter-lö-kist) n., arch. a ventriloquist – ‘Wull the Bellman duly announced the entertainment which he said was to be given by a ‘venterlockest’’ [RM] (note the accent on the 3rd syllable, rather than the 2nd).

Vernon (ver-nil) n. Joshua John (c.1847–1923) born in Midlothian, he worked as a dentist in Hawick. He was writer of ‘The Parish and Kirk of Hawick, 1711–1725’ (1900) and the text for ‘Pictures from the Past of Auld Hawick’ (1911) with J. McNairn. He was one of the earlier writers to insist that the Mote was the remains of a Norman palisaded stronghold. He was Exhibition Secretary for the Hawick Fine Arts Association and also wrote 33 articles for the Transactions. He also helped James Sinton compile his Hawick-related bibliography. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. In 1874 he married Isabella Douglas, daughter of butcher William Nisbet. His second wife's name was Mary Jamieson.

the Verter (thu-ver-tur) n. shortened form of the Verter Well – ‘Thus keep it intact frae the rude ruthless hand, And protect the famed well o’ the Verter’ [RF].

the Verter Well (thu-ver-tur-wel) n. spring that entered the Teviot near the Dunk, about 350 yards upriver from the Pipleghen Well. It supposedly had healing powers, and even had its mineral properties tested once. A pipe was fitted in the 1860s and an iron fountain was erected on the river bank in 1874, with its position moved to the other side of the road in 1888. There was a poetry competition inspired by the Verter Well in 1888, with the best entries published in a booklet. The iron fountain, paid for by the wife of Rev. Thomson of Rosaclea, had a Latin inscription which translated as ‘Drink, pass on, give thanks to God’. However, the supply was never the same after being interfered with. Before the end of the 19th century the spring had found another channel and the well dried up – ‘From Hawick Verter Well shall sprin A cure for every evil thing’ [T], ‘Ne’er mix it wi’ spirits, but take it itself’, There’s a pure healing virtue in our grand Verter Well’ [VW], ‘Or aiblins gin we will’d it how we’d scamper aff sae fell To play the truant lad-\dies at the auld Verter Well’ [VW] (the origin is from the word ‘verter’ or virtue, but note there was a more famous Verter Well near Airdrie, popular in the 18th century).

the Vertish (thu-ver-‘esl, -teesh, -tish) n. popular name for the Vertish Hill, which extends from Burnflat to the Nip Knowes. Long in use as a recreational part of the Common, it was the location for horse racing at the Common Riding until 1819. It is now home of the Hawick Golf Club, venue for the Vertish Hill Sports, well trodden during the Chases, and offers a glorious panorama of the Borders – ‘Sune we maun climb the Vertish heicht To watch the honoured em-blem waving’ [RH], ‘Fit yet to face the Nipknowes or storm the Vertish high, For the drums and fifes are calling, and the Cornet’s riding by’ [JY], ‘But hei has the Vertish to bield his back ...’ [DH] (in older documents it is ‘Fertish’, suggesting an origin in the Gaelic ‘fair tais’, meaning a damp ridge).

the Vertish Brae (thu-ver-‘esl-brâ) n. occasional name for the Vertish Hill, or the Nip Knowes – ‘... Nae gallop up the Vertish Brae, Nae rider, horse nor goal’ [WP].

the Vertish Hill (thu-ver-‘esl-hil) n. part of the Common, let to the Golf Club for a nominal rent, and used annually for the Vertish Hill Sports since 1881. Up until 1803 the riders at the Common Riding used to go over the hill on their way to the Moor. The hill reaches a height of 856 feet and the land covers an area of 68 acres. It is more commonly known simply as the Vertish – ‘... O’er the Vertish hill nor tire’ [AB], ‘But I’m fain for a sicht o’ the Vertish Hill Wi’ his plaid flung owre his shooder’ [DH], ‘... For there’s never a hill like the Vertish Hill To a gutter-bluid Wast-ender!’ [DH], ‘But when A stand on the thirteenth tee The view ma hert diz thrill Lookin’ sooth owre God’s ain country Frae the Vertish Hill’ [IW] (it is still ‘Fertish Hill’ in 1863).

Vertish Hill Sports 2000

Vertish Hill Sports 2000 (thu-ver'-eesh-hil-spörtz-twä-thoo-zind) n. video made by members of the Hawick Film and Video Group at the request of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee to commemorate the special millennium Vertish Hill Sports. It runs for approximately 37 minutes.

Vesey see Vesey

Vesey (vee-see) n. Agnes (d.1301/2) mother of William ‘de Chartres’, and probably wife of Henry Charteris. She died at ‘Appletreehall’ (probably Appletreehall, although stated to be in the regality of Sprouston) at Martinmas in 1301 and the lands there were inherited by her son William. Lady Jane (13th C.) probably heiress of the half-barony of Wilton, her name is also given as ‘Joan’. It seems reasonable to suppose that she was daughter of John, Lord of Alnwick. Her husband was Sir Thomas de Charteris, with whom she jointly held the half-barony in a grant by Alexander III, after having previously resigned them into the King’s hands. According to an inquest of 1303/4 these lands were inherited by William de Charteris, son of Andrew and Agnes de Vesci (who may well have been her sister). It was said at the 1303/4 inquest that the jurors ‘know nothing about the manner of such enfeoffment … they know there was such, but not its tenor’; hence there is some mystery surrounding how she came to hold the half-barony. Note that an earlier member of her family, Margaret, married Sir Patrick of Riddell, and an even earlier member, Sybil, married Walter Bombeck, who gifted the original ‘Hermitage’ in Liddesdale. Her husband Thomas died in 1302 and she died earlier, ‘long before the Scots war’. To further complicate matters, the Barony had earlier passed through Walter de Percehay, from his mother Joan de Wilton, except that Walter de Percehay’s mother appears to have been Joan (or Jane) de Vesey; the names cannot be coincidental, but it is unclear what the relationships were (also ‘Velsey’, ‘de Vesey’, ‘de Vesci’, etc.).

veshel (ve-shell) n., poet. a vessel – ‘…I am like ane brokin vesHELL [HSR].

vesit (ve-zit) pp., arch. visited, inspected – ‘…after thai war sworne, passit and wesit the saidis landis …’ [SB1500].

Vetch see Veitch

vex (veks) n. a worry, concern, annoyance, regret – ‘A was seek on Thursdi an hed ti miss the Colour Bussin, which was a right vex’, ‘A war is an awfih vex’ [ECS], ‘…fair leike ti faa off the spake wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark …’ [ECS] (only used as a verb in standard English).

vexed (veksetd) adj. concerned, troubled, distressed, annoyed, sorry – ‘A’m awfi vexed for um’, ‘An’ ee felt sae vexed when his team got bate’, ‘A was vext A’d naebody nen iz ti speak ti …’ [ECS], ‘A war is an awfih vex’ [ECS], ‘…But lookit sae vexed when his team got bate That ye gied him half your pie’ [DH] (also written ‘vext’; this word is used more commonly in Hawick than in standard English, and with a slightly different meaning).

the Viaduct (thu-vl-a-dukt) n. popular name for the Station Viaduct.

the Vic (thu-vik) n. the Victoria Hotel, existing from the 19th century at 52 High Street. It was designed by J.P. Alison around 1893 and built on premises formerly occupied by Nixon’s hosiery factory. The hotel closed in the 1970s and was demolished in 1980.

vicarage (vi-ku-reej) n., arch. a minor tithe, originally payable to the local vicar (rather than parson), also referred to as ‘vicarage teind’ – ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toun are estimat to pay nyne scor 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great teynd, laik ane firlot, and 20 libis of vicarage’ [PR1627], ‘Thomas Gray peyed formerly for the vicorage of Hassindeane alias Tounhead 13s 4d’ [Buc1692].

Vicar’s Hill (vi-kurz-hil) n. former name for lands near Hobkirk Kirk, long owned by the church and later called Kirknowe. This is probably the ‘Vicarie-hill’ referred to in the documents relating to Rev. George Douglas in 1602. It could be the ‘Viccars Hall’ mentioned along with ‘Viccars land’ of Hobkirk Kirk when inherited by Gilbert Elliott from his father Archibald of Craigenid in 1683.

Vicar’s Land (vi-kurz-lawnd) n. former name for lands attached to Hopkirk Kirk. They are mentioned as ‘Viccars land’ in 1683, along with ‘Viccars Hall’ and Wester Swanshiel, among lands inherited by Gilbert Elliott from his father Archibald of Craigenid.

Vicar’s Rob (vi-kurz-rohb) n. nickname of Robert Elliot, one of the thieves captured at Hawick market in October 1567. He may be the same man as ‘Vicar’s Hob’ recorded in 1589.

Vicar’s Waas (vi-kurz-wawz) n. former name for a field near Hobkirk Church, which had been the site of the old vicarage lands, a little to the west of the steadings of Kirknowe.

vicker (vi-kur) n. a chestnut that has won a game of ‘conkers’, being referred to as ‘a ‘vyn vicker’, ‘twae vicker’ etc., depending on how many games it has won, and the surviving chestnut inheriting the score of its opponent – ‘if ma cheggy baits your eeleeven vicker, then mine’ll be a twal vicker’ (presumably from ‘victor’).

Victoria (vik-tó-ree-u) n. Alexandrina Victoria (1819–1901), grand-daughter of George III, she was Queen of the United Kingdom 1837–1901, during a time of great political change in Britain and the building of the Empire. In Hawick she gave her name to a street, a hotel, a bridge and a laundry, amongst other things. She was a frequent visitor to Bowhill. On her first visit to Scotland in 1842, she was a guest of the Duke of Buccleuch at Dlkeith. On another royal visit to the Borders, the train passed through Hawick at a walking pace, with crowds lining the railway.

Victoria Mills

Victoria Mills (vik-tó-ree-u-milz) n. the main knitwear manufacturing factory of Innes, Henderson & Co., situated on Victoria Road, and later becoming Braemar Knitwear. The firm had started in modest premises at Wilton Grove, building this new Mill in 1875. Innes & Co. split century, run by John Saunderson. It may have originally operated as a public bathing facility, but became a laundry when the ‘Baths’ opened nearby in 1912.

Victoria Brig (vik-tó-ree-u-brig) n. footbridge from the Little Haugh to Commercial Road. The first wooden trellis bridge was built in 1851/2, by Walter Scott the builders (Buccleuch Street) and painted by Andrew Kennedy in white, blue and yellow (imitating the Crystal Palace). It was situated a few yards further down the river than today’s and was built by subscription (with the final debt cleared by the Road Trustees) to provide a link to the High Street area from near William Watson’s factory. The bridge was named in honour of Queen Victoria by the Bridge Committee. It was replaced in 1873/4 by a narrow iron bridge, which was widened in 1910, but destroyed in a flood of 1938. The bridge was rebuilt in 1939 and then again in 1991. Before the bridge existed there were stepping stones across the river there, and some of Watson’s workers used stilts to cross at the same general location.

Victoria Hotel (vik-tó-ree-u-hō-tel) n. hotel formerly at 52 High Street, which held dances and other social events. It was for a time a temperance hotel. The building was of red sandstone in an Elizabethan style. It was built on the former site of Nixon’s hosiery premises, which from 1831–61 was the residence of Dr. John Douglas. James Scott was proprietor in 1868. It was remodelled sometime around 1900, with designs by J.P. Alison dated 1893. The hotel was demolished in 1980 (also known as the Vic).

Victoria Laundry (vik-tó-ree-u-lawn-dree) n. the Victoria Steam Laundry on the Teviot side of Commercial Road, which operated through much of the 20th century, closing in the 1970s. It also contained baths in earlier times, but developed into a laundry, presumably when the public swimming baths opened nearby. It was used by many local hotels etc., and also by householders for their special linens. Items were deposited there for washing (in distinction to ‘the Steam’, where one had to do it oneself) and it also had dry cleaning facilities. The last manager was Mr. Stanger. The building was later used as a warehouse, but has been empty for many years.

Victoria Baths (vik-tó-ree-u-bawths) n. former name for the Victoria Laundry, operating on Commercial Road in the latter part of the 19th from Henderson & Co. in 1885, with Henderson in the front and Innes in the rear. There was an extension in 1891 and a further 2 storeys were added to the front building by 1912. Because of the split between Innes and Henderson, the mill had 2 separate boilers and hence 2 chimneys. Innes-Henderson reamalgamated in 1920 and later bought the adjacent Howlands Mill. This meant that precisely what was known as ‘Victoria Mills’ changed over the years. In 1976, with the closure of Rodono Mills, the administration department of Pringle’s was moved there. The factory closed in the 1990s and was demolished in 2004, along with the neighbouring Howlands Mill (also sometimes singular ‘Mill’).

Victoria Road (vik-tu-rec-u-ród) n. street alongside the Common Haugh, originally called Damside, then Upper Damside (after Wilton Dam) before being renamed after Queen Victoria about 1864. There were a few houses there (some thatched) from at least the early 19th century, with fruit gardens where the factories were later built. The development of the area for hosiery mills started in the late 19th century. The former offices of Turnbulls are a grade C listed building.

victual (vik-tu-wal) n., arch. produce, foodstuff, particularly grain or other crops – ‘The lands of Clarilaw sett to James dryden and Thomas Henderson in tack for 26 bols victual half meall & half bear’ [Buc1692] (spelling and probably punctuation varied).

vielence (vii-lins) n., poet. violence – ‘He saill redeem thair sauls frae deceite an’ vielence . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Delifer me, O Lord, frae the ill man: preserfe me frae the man o’ vielence’ [HSR].

Viewforth (vew-fórh) n. former name of a house on West Stewart Place, built for hatter George Porteous in 1878. It was then the home of I. Washington Wallis of Braemar, and later became Kirklands Hotel.

the Vikings (thu-vi-kinz) n., pl. Norse people who plundered the coasts of Northern Europe in the 8th–10th centuries. Groups mainly from Denmark started a conquest of Northumbria from 867, establishing their capital at York in 876. Whether the Hawick area was ruled from here is uncertain, but in general Bernicia was largely unaffected by the Viking presence (and you can’t get very close to Hawick by boat!). Vikings settled and presumably inter-married with the natives, but their political influence in Scotland ended with the Battle of Largs in 1263. Hawick’s Thor and Odin myth may relate to a pre-Christian Anglian past, but almost certainly has nothing directly to do with the Vikings. However, some words and place names of Norse origin survive (although they may well have come only indirectly from the Vikings). Hog-back gravestones (symbolic of a longhouse) usually indicate Viking influence; two fragments are in the church porch at Bedrule, plus one at Ancrum and another at Nisbet (not in the Museum).

the Village (thu-vi-leij) n. group of houses by the Slitrig, to the west of the Kirkwynd, presumably named for their former relative isolation from other parts of the town. The separate names Under Village and Upper Village appear in the early 19th century, with the houses renumbered as simply ‘the Village’ in 1904. The land was formerly known as Matthew Henderson’s Croft and then as Nichol’s Croft. The large tenement there was erected by Messrs. R. Elliot & Co. in about 1879. A white briar bush that grew there was supposed to have been planted by some supporters of Prince Charlie around 1745.

Viltoun (wil-toon) n. former spelling for Wulton (e.g. in the testament of William, son of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1552.

the Violet Wuds (thu-vil-li-wuds) n. also known as the Violet Wood, popular name for the picturesque wooded glen in the Netherhall wood of Wilton Park, just by Wilton Dean. It forms part of the boundaries of the town, and a path through the woods offers a popular walk. On the hill to the north are the remains of an earthwork and possible homestead – ‘My thoughts serene in Violet Woods I gaze on Teviotdale’ [JCa], ‘. . . Where the gentle breezes rustle Through the Violet Woods serene’ [WL] (named after the wood dog-violet that grows there).

Virgin Kate (vir-jin-ká) n. nickname for a Hawick resident in the mid-1800s – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here’s baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dunnerum danders over the knowe’ [HI].

Viscoont Hermitage (vi-koon’-her-mi-ej) n. title created in 1706 for Henry, 2nd surviving son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and James, Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth. The lands of Hermitage had been in the hands of the Scotts of Buccleuch for more than a century. The title (along with Earl of Deloraine and Lord Goldielands) was used by descendants until the death of the 4th Earl in 1807.

Vision 2014 (vi-shin-twâ-thoo-zind-in-fow-ur-teen) n. umbrella term for a series of events in the years leading up to the quincentennial. Originally suggested by Kate Houston and Janice Chapman, the idea grew from an event to celebrate the 2012 London Olympics to encompass the 2014 quincentenary and celebrate several aspects of life in the Town. 2011 was the year of Arts and Culture, with the focal event being the Big Sing. 2012 was the year of Sport, with several events, including the use of the Hawick Torch in the Big Parade. 2013 was the Year of Industry, with the Big Show in the High Street. Finally, 2014 was the Year of Heritage, culminating in the Big Return.

the Visit (thu-vi-zî’) n. Hawick-based pop band of the early 1980s, with single ‘City Lights’. They won an award from the Prince’s Trust, ??.

V.J. Day (vee-jâ-dâ) n. official end to WWII hostilities, on 15th August 1945. On this evening in Hawick there were spontaneous celebrations, with sirens going off, houses lighting up, the gas company’s hooter, etc., and people pouring into the street. On the following day there was a parade by the massed pipe bands and Saxhorn Band in the High Street, as well as Reid’s radio van, an address by the Provost from the Town Hall balcony, fireworks and bonfires at the top of the Loan and on the Miller’s Knowes, as well as in the hills around Stobs Camp.

Vogan (vô-gin) n. man listed in 1543 as one of those people who failed to appear to answer charges that they had assisted the English in their raids that year. He was recorded as being a tenant in Borthwickshiel, but his full name is not given.

Vogan (vô-gin) n. George (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. William (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. His name is given as ‘Willelmus Vogane in Schilbund’. It is unclear where he was from, but the other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick.

voit (voit) n., arch. a vote – ‘… and after maniest voittis, all electit and choisit the Robert Scott, callit of Goldielands, and William Scott, to be bailies …’ [BR1638].

the Volunteer (thu-vo-lun-teer) n. Volunteer Park, on Buccleuch Road, it was purchased by the Common-Riding Committee from the Duke of Bucleuch in 1920. It has been extensively used for the Common Riding Games since 1893, as well as High School sporting events, junior rugby, etc., and has clubrooms behind the grandstand. A shed was erected for use at the Games in 1908 and a new stand opened by Mrs. Renwick, wife of the Provost, in 1923. The facilities there have been used jointly by the Linden and the Trades since 1963. Administration of the Park was handed over to the Common Good in 2003. In 2005 an all-weather sports pitch was opened further to the south, on what was formerly called ‘The Playin Fields’, and is also now known as Volunteer Park.

volunteers (vo-lun-teerz) n. voluntary members of military units who are civilians subject to military regulations when in service. In Hawick there were several units formed in response to perceived threats of French invasion, each unit lasting for typically a few years. The first units appeared following the Volunteer Act of 1794, with large numbers formed by landowners in 1798. Officers were typically local landowners and their military titles were often used long afterwards. Many of the wealthier citizens, or those with access to a horse, were in the yeomanry cavalry. The Hawick Military Association operated from 1798–1802, followed by the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers 1803–09. During the False Alarm of 1804 the local men were mobilised and commended for their readiness. Their uniforms then consisted of red coat, white buckskin breeches and leggings and a feathered hat. These volunteer units were disbanded after Waterloo, but following other invasion scares units were formed again from about 1859. Later local volunteers were the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (4th Roxburgh) 1860–68 (ultimately becoming the 4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B.) and Hawick Volunteer Corps (5th Roxburgh) 1861–63. Note that the Volunteers were technically distinct from the Militia (usually formed by ballot in each county) and the Yeomanry, but all were inter-related and together were the forerunners of today’s Territorial Army – ‘... And ‘Teribus’ the battle cry O’ Hawick Volunteers’ [JT].

Von Holbein (von-hol-bin) n. Baron (18th/19th C.) prisoner of war in Hawick during the Napoleonic Wars. He stayed with James Elliot of Goldielands in the period 1812–14.

the Votadini (thu-vo-dee-nee) n., pl. Bronze Age or Iron Age tribe, with their centre at Edinburgh and boundaries covering much of the Lothians, Borders and Northumberland. The original capital may have been at the Traprain Law hill-fort. Hawick was surely within their territory, and many local hill-forts would have been Votadini outposts. They were essentially the same people who were referred to as the Gododdin in Roman and post-Roman times. The Romans recorded them as a British tribe, coming under Roman occupation in the area between the Antonine and Hadrian’s Walls; they may later have had some sort of alliance with the Romans. The Gododdin kingdom was formed around 470, although the southern part of the Votadini territory became a new kingdom of Brynacih (or Bernicia). The Votadini/Gododdin occupied land to the north and east of the Selgovae (the tribe of the upper Tweed and Teviot valleys); whether Hawick was inside or outside its boundaries at this time is unclear. A sub-tribe under Prince Cunedda is supposed to have migrated to Wales, driving out the Irish settlers there, and establishing a direct connection between the Lothian/Borders Scots and the modern Welsh.

Margaret (b.1786) and Agnes (b.1788) (see also Weddell).

Wadeshill (wadz-hil) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish, between Slack and Northbank.
Andrew Laidlaw was tenant in 1541, paying 22s yearly. Andrew Waugh is recorded there in 1590.
The tenant there in 1669 was John Laidlaw, with James Laidlaw at ‘Wadsholm’, which was probably nearby. Robert Laidlaw and Robert Oliver were there in 1694, with William Storie and Isobel Young listed among the poor of the Parish.
Judging by the location, it could correspond to the more modern farmstead of ‘Waterside’, even although the older Waterside may have been further to the west (it is ‘Waldoishill’ in 1541, ‘Waldoshill’ in 1571/2, ‘Wadishill’ in 1590, ‘Wadshell’ in 1669 and ‘waddest hill’ and ‘wadisshill’ in 1694;
whereas ‘Wadeshills’ on Blaue’s 1654 map;
note that there could be confusion with ‘Wattie’s Spindles’ to the south-east, marked ‘Wadespin-nells’ on Blaue’s map).

The Wail of Flodden (thu-wai-ul-flo-din) n. song with words by J.E.D. Murray and musc by Adam Grant, written for the Quater-Centenary Pageant of 1914, specifically Part V ‘Fatal Flodden’. Dedicated to Jessie E. Murray (who later became Grant’s daughter-in-law), it is and one of the few Hawick songs suited to a female voice. Note that in ‘They ta’en away the wale . . .’, the word ‘wale’ means ‘choicest’, but the title may be a play on words. A folk version of the song was popularised by John Wright, and another version appears on Scocha’s 2003 album ‘Bordering On’.

Wake (wák) n. Baldwin (d.1281) son of High and Joan de Stutville. He held the manor of Liddel in Cumberland, which was presumably Liddel Strength. His lands are described in a record of 1281/2, although it is unclear to what extent this included lands in Scottish Liddesdale. He married Hawise de Quincy. His son John was Baron of Liddel. Sir John (1268–c.1300) eldest son of Baldwin of Bourne and Liddel (on the Cumberland side). He became the 1st Lord of Liddel. He was gifted Hermitage Castle and lands in Liddesdale by Edward I. He married Joan (or Johann), who was possibly daughter of the Baron of Fiennes. Their children were Thomas and Margaret (both of whom married Plantagenets). His widow retained possession of the revenues of these lands after his death, and successfully petitioned to continue this during the minority of William de Soules. His lands were given to Sir Simon Lyndsay in 1300, when he was deceased.

He was factotum for John Henderson at Abbotrule until Henderson died in 1861, then became coachman for David Pringle of Wilton Lodge. His wife Margaret was from Morebattle. Their children included Mary, Agnes, James and Andrew. John (18th C.) factor for Walter Scott of Harden in at least the period 1764–72. He could be the writer of that name who was in Kelso at about the same time. John (18th C.) carrier from Hawick to Edinburgh recorded in a ‘Process of Scandal’ with Robert Scott, merchant of Lasswade, in 1790. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was probably closely related to carrier George. John (d.c.1825) hosier manufacturer based in Slitrig Crescent. He went into partnership with Robert Pringle and Peter Wilson at the Whiskyhouse Mill in 1815. By the time of Wood’s 1824 map the factory belonged solely to him; it is marked ‘Wool Manufactory’ and straddled the mill lade, near the north end of the modern Stonefield Place. He could also be the ‘Mr, Waldie’ who owned property on the Tower Knowe on Wood’s map. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a manufacturer of stockings and woollen cloth. He lived near the corner of Silver Street and the Howe-gate, the well near there being known as ‘Waldy’s Well’. He married Helen Scott, and their children included: Helen (b.1787); Betty (b.1789), who married postmaster Robert Armstrong; George (b.1791); and Adam (b.1793). His daughter Helen was living in the family property in the 1840s and 50s, and appears to have been his heiress. John (b.1792/3) dyer who lived on Slitrig Crescent. His wife was Agnes and their children included William, Charles, Janet and Mary. He was probably son of Thomas. John (b.1844) son of John, he was born at Roxburgh, with his mother coming from Maxton. He worked with John Robson Scott at Newton and then became tenant farmer at Braidhaugh in the Rule valley, He was a member of the Hobkirk School Board and Parish Council. He married Christina Laidlaw (daughter of a shepherd from Eskdalemuir and Rachel Scott from Deloraine) at Mervinslaw in 1868. His wife was known as a great buttermaker. His nephew William Douglas worked at Weens. John (19th/20th C.) Burgh Officer of the early 1900s. The same John may have been one of the early members of the committee of Hawick R.F.C. Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1792 and Highchesters in 1795 and 1798. He died in an accident near Musselburgh. His wife was still living in Hawick in 1881, but the following year emigrated to New Zealand with her daughter Emma (also spelled ‘Waldy’, ‘Waltho’ and variants in earlier documents).

Waldie’s (wawl-deez) n. hosiery firm of J. & W. Waldie, with factory on Slitrig Crescent in the early 19th century. Waldie, Elliot & Co. also operated Tower Mills. Earlier, Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co., hosiers, bought the Waulk Mill (Whisky House Mill) in 1815 for carding and spinning. They received a grant from the Board of Trustees for Manufacturers of £150 in 1816, with their total investment in machinery etc. being over £1600, a huge sum in those days. This company was essentially the progenitor of Pringle’s of Scotland. However, Robert Pringle (probably on his own) moved to Cross Wynd in 1819. Wood’s 1824 map shows Whiskyhouse Mill belonging to John Waldie, and Pigot’s 1825/6 directory has it as J. & W. Waldie, manufacturing stockings and woollen cloth.

Waldy’s Well (wawl-deez-wel) n. popular name for a former public water supply at the foot of the Howewgate, also sometimes known as ‘the Printer’s Well’. It was named after John Waldy (or Waldie) who owned the house there, which had once belonged to ‘Hab o Hawick’.

Walker (waw-kur) n. Alexander (b.1835/6) from Dysart in Fife, he was a tutor to the Elliots of Minto. In 1861 he is recorded as ‘Preceptor’ at Minto House. Andrew (18th C.) elder of Hobkirk Parish, recorded in 1725. Rev. Andrew (1722/3–1772) assistant minister at Craillings, he became preacher at Teviothead 'chapel-of-ease' from 1745 until probably 1750. That year he was translated to Ettrick, and moved again to Canonbie in 1765. He married Martha, daughter of John Stoddart of Williamhope. She later married Capt. William Elliot and died in 1806. Andrew (18th/19th C.) cooper of Damside, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Andrew sprinter from Hawick. He won the 1982 'Powderhall' New Year Sprint. Charles (d.1955) headmaster of St. Cuthbert's School from 1948 until his death, being the last head of that school. He came to Hawick from Alyth. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1702 he was recorded as a 'Meal-maker in Kirkhouses'. He married Janet Thomson and their children included: Helen (b.1700); Thomas (b.1702). Col. George (1830–97) of Crawfordton, Captain in charge of the Dumfries Militia for a while in Hawick, he later became M.P. for Dumfriesshire 1865–68 and 1869–74. Rev. George Arthur Everett (b.1875) born in Selkirk, he trained in the Presbyterian College in Manitoba, Canada. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Winnipeg and was minister at Lenberg Church there in 1906–07. In 1908 he became minister at Newcastleton Congregational Kirk. He remained until 1912, when he moved to Catrine in Ayrshire. He was later minister at Westray United Free Church, then Deerness, then Corgarff and finally Benholme. He married Edith Gibson Donaldson and secondly Annie Webster Japp Henderson. Helen hockey player from Hawick. She was educated at Drumlanrig and the High School and trained as a P.E. teacher at Heriot-Watt. She captained Heriot-Watt to victory at the British Universities Championships. She then played for Edinburgh Ladies and Glasgow Western. She was capped more than 100 times for Scotland, and also served as co-Captain. She has also coached the under-18 Scottish team. Horace (1910–94) born in Aberdeen, he graduated from university there, studying English and then Divinity. He was ordained in 1935, worked for 3 years for the Student Christian Movement, then was assistant minister at St. Mary's in Dundee before being ordained as minister at West Port Kirk in Hawick about the time WWII broke out. He remained in Hawick through most of the War years, also being seconded to Orkney to serve the forces there for a while. In 1944 he moved back to Aberdeen and in 1948 became Secretary-Depute of the Church of Scotland’s Home Board, later becoming Secretary, Managing Co-ordinator and Executive Director. He helped establish new parishes and extend the work of the Church through the 1950s, when attendance across Scotland was probably at its peak. He retired in 1977 and was then Chairman of the ecumenical Scottish Churches Council for 4 years. He received an honorary D.D. from Aberdeen University in 1967 and an O.B.E. in 1978. In 1945 he married Annie Wyles Duncan (b.1918), who he met in Hawick, and they had 2 daughters. James (1762–1840) stockmaker of Hawick, who was one of the 18 founders of the Relief Kirk. James (18th/19th C.) married Janet Graham in Hawick Parish in 1796. Their son Irvine was baptised in Bowden in 1797. In 1841 he was on the South side of Main Street. He had a daughter, Mary. It may be his father who was the Lilliesleaf tailor who subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James (c.1795–bef. 1864) nephew of William. In 1832 he inherited the farm of East Fodderlee from his uncle. He was listed at East Fodderlee among the gentry of the Jedburgh area in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1864 the farm was sold to Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs by his son James, when it was heavily burdened by debt. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His wife was Jane and their children included James, Isabella, Jane, Agnes, John, Thomas and Margaret. His daughter married Dr. A.B. Bruce, Professor of New Testament Theology in the Free Church College in Glasgow. James (19th C.) son of James, from whom he inherited East Fodderlee. Since there were many debts, the farm was placed in the hands of the Crown and sold in 1864 to Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs. He was said to be a great lover of books, and after the farm was sold he moved with his books to Edinburgh, where he worked as a book-seller. However, his health was never very robust and he died fairly young. James Campbell (1821–88) architect from Auchenmuchty, who designed the first Carnegie Library in Dunfermline, built 1881–83, as well as Hawick Town Hall, 1884–86. Dunfermline Town Hall is probably his other building that most closely resembles Hawick Town Hall. Other local contributions include Galashiels Poorhouse, Langlee and Netherby (near Galashiels), Waverley Hydropathic (Melrose), enlargement of Lilliesleaf Kirk and Auncrum Police Station. He trained in the office of William Burn and David.
Walkerburn

Bryce and set up on his own in 1856/7. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Wacar’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Daigleish etc., and so he is probably local. John (d.bef. 1532) recorded in 1532 when his nephew and heir William sold a croft and tenement in Hawick to John Morlaw. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ruletownhead, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. In the Land Tax Rolls for about 1874, David Henderson is listed as owner of ‘Part of Ruletownhead formerly belonging to Walter Turnbull’. Norman member of the Hawick Saxhorn Band for over 60 years. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Cocklecotterock, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (1813/4–61) from Jedburgh, his mother was Margaret Douglas. He was a baker in Hawick, with his shop at Orrock Place. In 1851 and 1861 he was listed at 2 Orrock Place and in Slater’s 1852 directory he was a baker on Central Square. His wife was Isabella and their children included Elizabeth Douglas and Margaret Hall (1850–68). His widow later moved to Bonjedward, where she died. Robert (19th C.) stocking frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 25 Loan. In 1852 he married Elizabeth (c.1824–1900), daughter of Adam Kersel. Their children included: Margaret (b.c.1852); Mary (b.c.1854); and Robert (b.1855). Robert (19th C.) smith who owned 72 High Street in 1875. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. He was surety for William Waugh, who was also in Belses. Thomas (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘William Walker of Hawyx’, nephew and heir of John Walker, in the Selkirk Protocol Books of 1532, when he sold a croft and a tenement in Hawick to John Morlaw. The ‘certain croft in the bounds of the lordship of Hawyx’ was presumably Morlaw’s Croft, while the tenement was on the north side of the High Street, bordering on the Slitrig, i.e. was at the Tower Knowe. The sale included an agreement that he would pay 40 shillings Scots if necessary to rebuild the tenement there in ‘better form than now’. His name does not appear as an owner of any particates of land on Hawick’s 1537 Charter; this suggests that his uncle John had owned the lands in Hawick, but he himself lived elsewhere (maybe Selkirk) and sold off all the Hawick property he inherited. William (18th/19th C.) owner of Thorliewhope according to the 1788 county valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He may be the same man as the farmer in Mervinslaw. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mervinslaw. In 1815 he purchased East Fodderlee from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. He married Isabella, daughter of Thomas Turnbull, and grand-daughter of Adam Turnbull of Deneside. His wife died in 1857, aged 76. Having no children, his nephew James inherited the lands. William (19th C.) early photographer in Fife and Edinburgh who also ran a studio somewhere in Wilton in 1866–67. It may be that J.B. Cartlidge was acting as his manager, and that he never himself worked in Hawick. Rev. William Lowe (1845–1930) born in Inverarity and Methy Parish, Angus. He trained at Edinburgh Theological Hall and became minister of Hawick Congregational Union Kirk in the period 1873–76, taking over from William Munro. Note that this was the dwindling original Congregational Church, and not the Evangelical Union Church, which later changed its name to become today’s Congregational Kirk. He left to become minister at Thurso and then of a Unitarian church in Great Hamilton Street, Glasgow. He was finally a minister at Laurencekirk. He married Janet Rutherford in Edinburgh in 1870 and their children included Mary Louisa (b.1871) and Agnes Margaret (b.1873) (formerly ‘Waker’).

Walkersburn (waw-kur-burn) n. village about 20 miles north of Hawick, between Galashiels and Innerleithen, on the A72. It was effectively founded to house workers after the construction of Henry Ballantyne’s Tweedvale mill around 1850. In the 1920s a novel system for powering mills was built here, with water pumped up to a reservoir and used to drive turbines. The town has a Museum of Textiles in the converted Ballantyne’s Mill, and the unusually patterned sandstone house, the Kirna, dating from 1867. Population (1991) 658 (from ‘Wauker’s Burn’).

Walker’s (waw-kurz) n. general store on Wellington Street in the early-to-mid 20th century.

the Walker’s Road (thin-waw-kurz-ród) n. former name for the road that connects the A698 with the Rule valley, between Denholm and Spittal, also known as ‘Jenny Walker’s Brae’. It was said to have been given the name because people would get off their horses or carts to make the pull up the steep hill easier.

Walkingshaw (waw-kin-shaw) n. William (1840/1–1927) married Martha Lyon, who was

Wallace (waw-lis) n. Bartholomew ‘Bartie’ (16th C.) servant of Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst at the Kirklands of Bedrule in 1557. There was a complaint made to the Queen that Kerrs servants there were attacked by a group including Turn-bulls of Bedrule and others. His name is given as ‘Wallanche’. Sir David James (1945 – ) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Jenny of Silverbuthall, he was a pupil at the High School and then studied at Edinburgh University, where his Ph.D. was supervised by Nobel Laureate Peter Higgs. He had a fellowship at Princeton before taking up a lectureship in Physics at Edinburgh University in 1972. After a brief interlude at the University of Southampton, he became Tait Professor of Mathematical Physics at Edinburgh University 1979–93, Head of Physics 1984–87 and Director of the Edinburgh Parallel Computing Centre 1990–93. His interests developed from a variety of topics in theoretical physics to applications of parallel computing, for services to which he received the C.B.E. in 1996. He was Vice Chancellor of Loughborough University 1994–2005, is a Fellow of the Royal Society and has served on several national education and science committees. He was Director of the Isaac Newton Institute for Mathematical Sciences in Cambridge in 2005–11, and Master of Churchill College, Cambridge 2006–14. He has also been Chair of the Council for Mathematical Sciences, President of the Institute of Physics, Deputy Lieutenant of Leicestershire and Vice-President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He was Common Riding Chief guest in 1987 and was knighted in 2004 for services to U.K. science, technology and engineering. His wife is Elizabeth and they have a daughter, Sara. Eric (1938/9–2004) presenter on Border Television from 1968 until he retired in 1998. He was probably the most recognisable news reader during that time. Gavin (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1770 for Anthony Haig. George (18th C.) wool-comber who was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1741. He may have come from outside the Town, as part of efforts to encourage the wool trade. He may be the George, married to Margaret Waugh (probably in 1736 in Wilton, with no wife’s name given), whose children, baptised in Wilton, included James (b.1737), an unnamed son (b.1739) and Anne (b.1741). He was recorded at Roughheugh in 1737, when the baptismal witnesses were John Lockie and James (who was surely related). George (18th/19th C.) witnessed a baptism for James Murray (whose son was born at Damside) in 1810, along with John Thomline. He may be the 75-year old ‘Parish Pauper’ recorded at Wilton Pathhead on the 1841 census. Rev. James Nisbet (b.1842) son of John A., he must have grown up in Hawick. He was himself ordained as a minister in 1867 and served for a long time in Swindon, and then in Torquay. He returned to Hawick for the jubilee celebrations of Hawick Free Kirk in 1893. His son was Vicar of St. Matthew’s in Nottingham. Rev. John Aikman (1802–70) born in Edinburgh, son of James, a gunmaker, and Janet Clapperton. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by the Presbytery there in 1825 and became assistant minister at Burntisland in 1827. He was minister of the Parish of Hawick from 1833, being presented by Walter Francis, Duke of Buc-leuch on April 1st, following the suggestion of Dr. Chalmers. Early in his ministry he made a useful record of the number of people living in each street in Hawick. He was nominated as a trustee of the Orrock Bequest in 1834. He was residing at Hawick Manse in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1840/1 he was called to Gala, but his translation was refused by the Presbytery, after considering the petition signed by 815 Hawick communicants. During the Disruption of 1843, he walked out with about 3/4 (close to 600) of the congregation to form the Hawick Free Kirk (which later became St. George’s). He was thus the first local Free Church minister, and served until 1864. In 1858 he became senior minister (of the Presbytery presumably). As a result of leaving the established church his annual salary dropped dramatically. He lived on Wilton Path. There are several letters preserved in the National Archives relating to his subsequent disputes with the Duke of Buccleuch (his former patron). He was also a skilled woodworker and much of the pulpit and other ornaments of the original Free Kirk were carved by himself. He was sometimes nicknamed ‘Velvet Heels’ or ‘The Pope o Hawick’ by his opponents. He gifted a bell to the new Free Kirk in Kelso. He wrote a description of the Parish in 1839 for the New Statistical Account of Scotland, including in it a detailed list of the insect and plant species found in the Parish, as well as descriptions of the Auld Brig, the excavation at the Caa Knowe, the local prevalence of nicknames, etc. He also wrote ‘Statistics having reference to the ravages of Cholera in the town and neighbourhood of Hawick in 1849’ (1850).

His other publications included ‘The Death of the Righteous’ (in ‘The Protestant Pulpit’, 1830), ‘The Church built by Human Agency’ (1831), ‘Sermons’ (1838), ‘The Seven Churches of Asia’ (1842), ‘Reasons for concurring in the Resolutions of the Convocation’ (1843), ‘Pastoral Recollections’ (1843, 1854 and 1864), ‘Testimonies in Favour of the Principles and Procedure of the Free Church of Scotland’ (1844), ‘The Chariot of Israel, and the Horsemen thereof, a discourse’ (1847), ‘The Railway Guide’ (1847), ‘A Pastor’s Legacy’ (extracts from manuscripts of Rev. Robert Nichol of Gala, 1864), ‘Jewels for the Crown of Glory’ (1864), ‘Attributes and Aspects of the Divine Redeemer’ (1864), ‘Communion Services according to the Presbyterian Form’ (1865), ‘Waymarks for the Guiding of Little Feet’ (1866), ‘Lessons from the Life of James Nisbet’ (1867) and ‘Farewell Addresses’ (1870). He also wrote a hymn, entitled ‘The Power of Prayer’, which has sometimes been attributed to other writers. In 1857–59 he took a 2 year rest, travelling on the continent, and was assisted as minister by William Gaulter 1858–64. He was presented with a silver epergne by his congregation. He married Isabella, daughter of James Nisbet, a London bookseller; she died in 1859 and is buried in Highgate Cemetery. Their son James Nisbet also became a minister at Woolwich in England. Their other children were: James Nisbet, who died young; Jeanetta Nisbet; Wilhelmina Hepburn, married Rev. John Macgregor of Hawick Free Kirk; Isabella Duncan; Catherine Nisbet; Hamilton Gordon, Captain in the African Mail S.S. Co.; Alexander Duff Leadbetter, Edinburgh Bookseller; and Amy Jeanetta. He retired when Rev. Gaulter was translated, moving to Trinity in Edinburgh, where he died. He is buried at Rosebank Cemetery in Leith, but there is also a family obelisk in Wellogate Cemetery to which his name was added about 1930. A portrait of him still exists in St. George’s. John (b.1811/2) born in Wilton Parish, he was a butcher on the High Street. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 79 High Street. In 1833 in Jedburgh he married Jean, daughter of shepherd William Oliver (from Chesters); she died in 1855, ged 42. Their children included: David (d.1834); William (b.1835/6); John (b.1840/1); David (d.1847); and Andrew Oliver (b.1844/5). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott in 1689 and others in 1690 for Thomas Scott and for William Scott. Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Probably the same Thomas was witness to a baptism for William Jackson in 1793. Sir William (c.1270–1305) from humble birth in the West of Scotland he sought to regain independence for the nation. He is often referred to simply as ‘Wallace’. He was declared Guardian of the Kingdom of Scotland at Selkirk in 1298. He is said to have visited Langlands around 1297 and tethered his horse to a thorn bush behind the Lodge (now Museum). A stone marks the site, but there is no evidence to support the story, although there is a connection between him and the Longueville/Charters family who were connected with the early Barons of Langlands. A large boulder on Meigle Hill near Galashiels is known as ‘Wallace’s Putting Stone’ and a boundary line on Minchmoor (north of Yarrowford) is ‘Wallace’s Trench’. He was barbarically executed by the soldiers of Edward I. An imposing 31 foot high red sandstone statue was erected near Dryburgh Abbey in 1814, and in Hawick Wallace Court was named after him in 1870 – ‘O Wallace! that Scotchman is not worth his room Who weeps not when he remembers thy doom’ [JR], ‘... Banners waved by Bruce and Wallace! What would future ages call us?’ [JH].
Wallace Court

‘What need we say how Wallace fought, And how his foemen fell? Or how on glorious Bannockburn The work went wild and well?’ [HSR]. Fr.
william (1768–1854) born near Huntly, he was educated in Banffshire and the Scots College of Douay, escaping back to Scotland at the outbreak of the French Revolution. Ordained at the Scots College of Valladolid in 1798, he remained there for 10 years, but had to flee Spain when Napoleon’s soldiers arrived. He then worked in Perthshire, back in Spain, then at the Edinburgh Mission, before becoming Chaplain at Traquair House. After deciding that there should be a chapel somewhere in the Scottish Borders, he ‘discovered’ a group of Catholics in Hawick in the summer of 1837. In an 1840 appeal for funds to build a Chapel in Hawick he states ‘it is remarkable that the seeds of religious animosity seem never to have been sown here, and that if attempted to be sown now, they would not prosper in a soil so adverse to their growth’. He sought out the help of the Magistrates and Council of Hawick and after raising the money (including his own savings) purchased the land (from William Wilson). He officiated at the foundation stone laying ceremony, and lived to see the chapel flourish, as well as providing additional financial help to establish a Catholic school in Hawick. He is buried at Traquair. He wrote some lines as a tribute to the new chapel – ‘Now’s the day when exiled truth Returns to galdren Hawick’s youth; It fears no gag to gall its mouth; It heeds no Border foray. To bid the light of truth to shine, Our hearts and morals to refine, And wing our hopes to joys devine, Such is its peacefull story’. William (b.1806/7) born in Earlston, he was a butcher on the Howegate. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 8 Howegate. He married Margaret McLean and their children included Jane, William, David, Margaret, Robert, Mary Ann and John. William (19th C.) local shepherd. At one of the earliest recorded sheep-dog trials, the Hawick trial of 1883, this gentleman astonished everyone by his ability to control his dog with quiet hisses and whistles, influencing other shepherds with his methods (formerly written ‘Wallas’).

Wallace Court (waw-lis-kör’) n. part of Mayfield, built in 1970 and named after William Wallace.

the Wallace Statue (thu-waw-lis-sta’-ew) n. statue of William Wallace near Dryburgh, built in red sandstone and standing about 7m high, with saltire shield and double-handed sword. It was erected in 1814, carved by John Smith (of Darnick) for landowner the Earl of Buchan, and repaired in 1991.

the Wallace Thorn (thu-waw-lis-thörn) n. thorn tree where William Wallace is reputed to have tied his horse when he visited the Langlands estate about 1297. The tradition can be traced back at least to the mid-18th century (appearing in James Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’). Despite there being little evidence to support this story, a memorial stone (actually the weight from an old cheese press) marks the site on the driveway behind the Museum. It was placed there in 1899 shortly after the tree was destroyed in a storm. An old well, presumably once a water supply for the Lodge, is also nearby. The story may have started through confusion of the name ‘Langlands’ with Sir Thomas (or Robert) de Longueville, a friend of Wallace, who is sometimes also said to have been a French pirate, the ‘Red Rover’. However, the connection with the Langlands estate is confused by the romanticised version of history and the identity of this Longueville. Nevertheless, there may be a connection between him and the Langlands family, although this does not lend any support the idea that Wallace visited Wilton. A piece of wood from the tree is in the Museum – ‘These words prophetic uttered then Were down the ages borne; Their echo lingers in the glen Where waved the Wallace Thorn’ [JI].

the Walled Gairdens (thu-wawld-gär-dinz) n. ornamental and show garden, which is the pride of Wilton Lodge Park, and winner of many competitions. It lies on the road above the western side of the Park, and was formerly part of the Wilton Lodge Estate. Originally the gardens had been near the public bowling greens, but were moved to their present location by David Pringle in the 1850s. For a while the town let them as a market garden, before the Parks Department took them over as a showcase for the public and a nursery for plants in the Park and elsewhere. It contains floral displays, and a tropical greenhouse, as well as a scented garden and an aviary. The range of plants is beyond compare in the Borders. A sports changing facility was built adjacent to it in 1978.

waller (waw-lur) n., arch. a confused crowd, large number of living creatures, especially a flock in motion, swarm – ‘A waaller o bairms = a numerious family of children’ [ECS], ‘…a waller o barefit gets; a wumman wui a bairn carriying i the shawl’ [ECS], ‘…threih whan the slogan waekent the waller an sterteet the fray’ [ECS], ‘A walrig park (wawl-rig-pawrk) n. former name for lands near Minto Kames farm. In 1780 there was a description of the lands of Minto Muir Parks, describing that ‘Walrigpark’ was part of the northern boundary, adjacent to ‘Crowsmoss’ and near the road connecting Lilliesleaf and Jedburgh. It is probably associated with the modern ‘Wellrig Strip’.

walrig o’ birds’ [GW], v., arch. to wallow, swarm, heave, surge – ‘A muck-midden wallerin’ wi’ worms’ [GW] (also written ‘waaler’ and ‘wauler’).

the walligate (thu-waw-lee-gă) n. another version of the name for the Wellogate – ‘Yet their mirry memorials Where they stand their state Arena in modest stones In Walton and Wallogate ... ’[DH], ‘And I couldna fancy the Walligate: It’s fer owre fer ootbye ... ’[DH] (also written ‘Walligate’).

wallis (wawl-lis) n. I. Washington (?-??) of Innes-Henderson in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, ??., Isaac Grey (b.1879) born in Wakefield, Yorkshire. From a Quaker family, he was son of Robert, hosiery manufacturer in Wakefield. He moved to Hawick at some point, becoming a manger for Innes-Henderson, later Braemar. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Ikie’ by his workers, although his family called him ‘Grey’. He lived at Woodside in Sunnhill. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He can be seen in a pin-stripe suit in a photograph of the firm’s picnic of 1924. He married Margaret Frances Lindsay, daughter of manufacturer Patrick Anderson Laing, and she died in 1917. He secondly married Helen Scott. He was President of the Scottish Cricket Union in 1931.

Walter (wawl-tur) n. (12th C.) name of the Chaplain of ‘Lillesclive’ (i.e. Lilliesleaf) who was witness at Linton in 1174 to a grant of land from William the Lion to William de Somerville. He also witnessed a charter from the Bishop of St. Andrews in about 1150 (although this has been suggested to be a fabrication). He may have been related to the later John of Lilliesleaf. He is probably also the ‘Gauterio de Lilleschive’ who was a Clerk of the Bishop of Glasgow in 1177.

Walter (wawl-tur) n. (13th C.) Dean of Teviotdale recorded sometime in the period between 1227 and 1238. His surname is unknown.

Walter, James see James Watson

the Walter Mason Collection (thu-wawl-ur-mā-sin-ko-lek-shin) n. collection of old documents relating to Selkirk and surrounding area, including some that date back to the 16th century. They were collected by Selkirk parish, but ordered to be burned during WWII, along with other documents kept in attics and vaults, which were regarded as a fire hazard. Walter Mason, baker in Selkirk, who stole into the garden of the bank next door and rescued several bags of ancient documents. Fearful of prosecution Mason kept the existence of the documents secret until just before his death in the early 1970s. He handed them over to Walter Elliot, who set up a trust and deposited the documents in Selkirk Library for safe keeping.

Walter’s Wynd (Wal’-urz-wind) n. narrow street running from the middle of the High Street (between nos. 47 and 49) to the Teviot, once an area of very over-crowded housing. Before about the middle of the 18th century it was known as Horsleyhill’s Wynd, and renamed after Walter Scott, tailor (‘Wattie o the Wyndheid’), whose shop was there. The name certainly was fixed by 1790. The North Port stood at the top of the road, which was one of the old entrances to the town, and to mark this the drums and fifes march here on the Thursday night. There was formerly a pended house at the top of the Wynd, and in the early 19th century there was a public house in the Wynd. The foot of the street was once the site of the main ford used to enter the town through this gate, and the main route towards Selkirk and Edinburgh until the Teviot Bridge was built in 1741. John Nixon’s hosiery factory was here, later becoming Pringle’s, and renamed Rodono. The Drums and Fifes walk up this street as part of their march around town on ‘the Nicht Afore the Morn’.

Walter Wilson’s (waull’-ur-wul-sinz) n. Walter Wilson’s factory, on Allars Crescent (No. 7) at the foot of the Mill Path, and at Teviot Mills in Weensland, in the latter part of the 19th century. Walter Wilson & Sons began in 1851, as part of the split up business of William Wilson & Sons, when Walter’s share was the mill on Allars Crescent, the property at 13 High Street and a piece of land in Weensland, on which he had Teviot Mill built. The firm manufactured tweeds at Teviot Mill and hosiery on Allars Crescent. After Walter the company was run by his sons Francis Elliot and Edward.

ward (wawrd) n. former division of a district, e.g. Teviotdale was split into an Easter Ward and Wester Ward, while Selkirkshire was composed of the wards of Tweed, Ettrick and Yarrow, more recently an electoral division within a town or district. In Hawick there were 5 wards established after the Police Act of 1861: North High Street; South High Street; Slitrig; Teviot; and Wilton. This number grew to 8 wards in more recent times: Teviot North; Teviot South; Burnfoot East; Burnfoot West; Wilton North; Wilton South; Slitrig; and Weensgate (see also waird).

Warden (war-din) n., arch. an official charged with the enforcement of certain laws, particularly applied to the Wardens of the Marches on both sides of the Border in the 15th and 16th centuries. There were 3 Wardens on each side (West, Middle and East), often a powerful local chief, who held warden-court for the settlement of disputes and breaches of the March laws (see also Lord Warden).

the Warden’s Toor (thu-wawrd-dinz-toor) n. name sometimes used for the late 14th century tower built by the Douglasses, which formed part of Cavers House.

wardin (wawrd-din) n., arch. the act of imprisoning – ‘...and for the second contravention £40, and fifteen days warding’ [BR1660].

wardit (wawrd-dee’, -di’) pp., arch. warded, imprisoned, confined under guard – ‘...sall pay forty shillings toties quoties and wardit without license or any lawful excuse’ [BR].

Ward Law (wawrd-law) n. farm in the Ettrick Yarrow just south of Tushielaw. Also a hill in the Ettrick valley lying north of Ettrickhill, reaching 594 m, and another in the Yarrow valley north of Dryhope, reaching 421 m. A charter of 1618 records transfer of the lands of ‘Wairdlawrig’ from John Lord Hay of Yester to Robert Scott of Tushielaw. There is also a hill of the same name near Caerlaverock Castle in Dumfries & Galloway, which was the rallying place of the Maxwells (‘Wairdla hill’ is on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the name is related to a ‘ward’ or ‘watch’ hill, and probably has no direct connection with the Barons of Wilton).

Wardlaw (wawrd-law) n. Adam (14th C.) recorded as collector of the contributions from the Sheriffdom of Roxburgh in 1360. Andrew (b.c.1417) probably son of Sir William (although possibly his younger brother), he was the 4th Baron of Wilton and 1st of Torrie. He married Christian, daughter of Sir James de Valonius (or Vallance), through whom he succeeded to the Torrie estates. He was succeeded by his son Sir Henry. George may have been another son. Henry ‘Henrico de Wardlaw’ (d.1329) granted the western half of the Barony of Wilton (with Gilbert Maxwell being granted the other half) by King Robert the Bruce, about 1306, presumably as a reward for services to Scotland’s liberator. However, it may be that he could not take possession of the lands until after Bannockburn and other events ended English control of Teviotdale. There appears to be a confirming charter in about 1321 (in ‘Robertson’s Index’), stating that the lands had previously belonged to William de Charteris and Walter de Pertchay. The ‘reddendo’ for this grant was the fifth part of the service of one soldier, along with 3 suits yearly at the King’s Court in Roxburgh. The family later gained land in Fife, and were known as ‘Wardlaw of Torrie’, probably being the descendants of all the Wardlaws in Scotland, including the later Henry who was Bishop of St. Andrews. He was the first of the Wardlaws of Wilton, a family connection that lasted for over a century. He married a Stewart (possibly Mary, daughter of Sir James Stewart of Durrisdeer) and their children may have included Ellen, Henry (who succeeded), Walter (who became Cardinal of Scotland), William, Gilbert, Christian and at least one other daughter. Henry 2nd of Wilton (c.1318–c.98) son of Henry and brother of Bishop Walter. He married a daughter of Halket of Pitfirrane. He is mentioned in a record of around 1365. It may be that he died soon after, since his brother Walter is said to have held lands in Wilton in 1367. His children were Sir William, Alexander, Walter, Henry (Bishop of St. Andrews) and a daughter (who married Sir John Carmichael). These generations are confused, since it is also said in some accounts that Andrew was his son. Henry (d.c.1440) son of Sir Andrew (although some accounts suggest he was the youngest son of Henry of Wilton) and nephew of Sir Walter, Bishop of Glasgow. He is also sometimes confused with the later son of Sir Andrew. He was educated at Oxford and Paris, returned to Scotland in 1385 and received many benefices. Included among these was Cavers in 1389. He was Precentor of Glasgow from about 1388 until 1403 and was then Archdeacon of Glasgow; John de Hawick succeeded him as Precentor. He still held Cavers in 1389 when he was given the Canony of Aberdeen and Prebend of ‘Balhelvi’. He became Bishop of St. Andrews 1403–40 and founded the university there. He was also tutor to the young James I, helped arrange his release from English captivity, crowned him at Scone in 1424 and then acted as one of his most trusted advisors. In 1433/4 he witnessed an ecclesiastic gift by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He was buried at St. Andrews Cathedral, which he had helped restore. He is also credited with founding St. Andrews University in 1411. Sir Henry (15th C.) son of Andrew. He was 5th of Wilton and 2nd of Torrie. An indenture of 1435 records him inheriting all the lands and rights from his mother Christian of Valance in return for some other lands in Fife for her and her second husband, John of Cockburn. In 1448, as Laird of the half Barony of Wilton he granted lands of Harden to Philip Turnbull. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1452. In 1454 he was Baron when the Irelands-lands were granted to David Scott. He may be the Henry who had a sasine for Hownam in 1458. He married Christian Lander (or perhaps Lauder) and was succeeded by his son Henry. His daughter Isobel married Sir Laurence Mercer of Aldie (as recorded in a charters of 1497 and 1511) and then Patrick Mercer of Inchbrakie. Other children included Walter, Sir Robert and Sir John. Henry (15th C.) son of Sir Henry, he was 6th of Wilton and 3rd of Torrie. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Oliphant of Aberdallie. In 1468 she had the lands of Harden resigned to her, with Robert of Wardlaw as a witness (so possibly a son). In a 1468 document for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk it is recorded that Andrew Ker of Cessford and his son Walter acted as procurators for him. Also in 1468 he witnessed a charter for lands in Kincardine. He is probably the Henry ‘of Torry’ who received money from the Kers of Cessford for lands in Hownam in 1468. His children were Sir Henry and Isabella (who married George Durie of that Ilk of Balcurrogal). Sir Henry (d.c.1513) son of Henry. He was the last Wardlaw of Wilton, being usually designated as the 7th Baron of Wilton and also of Torrie. In 1477 he had a charter for lands in Fife. In 1479 he had a sasine for Wilton. He is recorded in 1482 transferring lands at ‘Underchesteris’ (in the Barony of Wilton) to Robert Scott of Muirhouse. Also in 1482 he was Baron when he gave a charter for Harden to John Turnbull. He was 8th of Wilton and 4th of Torrie.
Wardle

James have died at Flodden. (Edinburgh). Given the year of his death, he may have died at Flodden. James (18th C.) farmer in Riccarton, recorded in 1748. Simon (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Wilton when he was witness to a charter in 1432, along with Henry Wardlaw of Sprot and Sir William Wardlaw, Chaplain. He was probably a younger son of the Baron of Wilton. Probably the same 'Symon de Wardlaw', presbyter of Glasgow Diocease, was the notary for the instrument of sasine in 1464 whereby Archibald Douglas took possession of the Barony of Cavers. Walter (c.1317–1387) son of Henry, he is recorded as holding part of the Barony of Wilton in 1367, and was the 2nd (or possibly 3rd, the confusion probably being due to both his father and elder brother were Henrys) Wardlaw of Wilton. However, it may be that he simply held part of the lands, or held them while his brother’s son was in his minority. He attended Paris University and had a doctorate of theology by 1358. In 1361 he had passage for going to London and York. By 1359 he became Archdeacon of Lothian within the Diocese of St. Andrews and was elevated to Bishop of Glasgow in 1367, on the death of William Rae. He was also Secretary to the King and auditor in at least 1364–66 and was part of an envoy to England in that period. He received many benefices, partly due to the support of William Landels, Bishop of St. Andrews, whose family also had a Roxburghshire connection. He was also appointed Royal Secretary to David II in the 1360s. However, he had a less close connection with Robert II, and spent many years away from Scotland during his reign. In fact in 1374 he was rumoured to be dead and his assets in Scotland were seized. In 1383 he was appointed as the first ever Cardinal from Scotland. He helped negotiate the Anglo-Scottish truce at Berwick in 1380 and the Franco-Scottish alliance at Vincennes in 1383. His nephew Henry was Rector of Cavers and Bishop of St. Andrews. Sir William (d.c.1417) probably son of Henry, he was the 3rd Baron of Wilton (although these early generations are confused). A charter of Robert III (probably around 1405) granted him the lands of ‘Uchterseatmylne, Sametoun, Todshaw’ in the Barony of Wilton. He married Margaret Wardlaw and their children included Andrew and probably Henry, although other accounts suggest he died childless, with Andrew and Henry being his brothers (formerly written ‘Vardlaw’ and variants).

Wardle (war-dul) n. Joseph (b.c.1790) from England, he was a framesmith in Hawick, being listed on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 15 Backdamgate with his wife Mary and daughter Charlotte.

Ware (wär) n. Rev. Douglas Powell (b.1854) born in Ashton, Devon, son of Rev. John Middleton, Rector of Ullingsworth. Educated at St. John’s College, Cambridge, he became an curate of St. Mary’s Episcopal Cathedral in Glasgow. He was then moved to Hawick as minister of St. Cuthbert’s Church 1882–92. His incumbency saw the properties of the Church being given to the congregation by the Duke of Buccleuch and St. Cuthbert’s being transferred from the Diocese of Glasgow and Galloway to the Diocese of Edinburgh. He was also Honorary President of St. Cuthbert’s (rugby) Football Club. In 1892 he exchanged with J.W.T. Hart, minister of St. Paul’s, Swindon. He married Mary Jane Ocatavia Sankey in 1879. He wrote ‘Confirmation in the Bible’ and ‘Six Questions and Answers for Good Friday’. The church contains a brass plaque commemorating him.

the War Memorial (thu-wawr-me-o-re-ul) n. memorial to the dead of two World Wars, located beside Wilton Lodge Museum. The site was chosen after much controversy, with the Tower Knowe being the plan at one point, and other locations also suggested. The life size bronze ‘Spirit of Youth Triumphing over Evil’ is by Alexander J. Leslie of London. Its inclusion was highly controversial at the time, with many Teries considering it inappropriate. James B. Dunn, A.R.S.A. was commissioned to design the memorial, which consists of a pedestal in front of a 27 ft (6.5 m) high cenotaph of Doddington stone, from near Wooler. The pedestal contains two lamps, modelled on those in the Burgh coat-of-arms, which are always illuminated. It was unveiled in October 1921 by Robert Munro, M.P., Secretary of State for Scotland. The Cornet and his Right and Left-Hand Men lay wreaths there on the Saturday morning of the Common Riding. There are also memorials to the dead of both World Wars in most of the local churches, including stained glass windows in Wilton Kirk, an alabaster and bronze tablet in Alars Kirk, a memorial window and brass plaques in St. Cuthbert’s, plaques from both World Wars in West Port Kirk (moved to St. George’s), a marble plaque and window in St. George’s (Teviot) Kirk, as well as the Roll of Honour in the Museum. Warwick (waw-reek) n. Adam (16th C.) listed as ‘Adame Warrok in Braidley’ in 1576, when he and Matthew Little in Lairhope were pledged to the Privy Council not to be involved in thieving. The sureties were Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. His name seems likely to have been Warwick, and given the sureties he was probably a tenant in Broadlee in the Borthwick valley, rather than Braidlie on Hermitage Water. He was among those declared as rebels in 1578/9. Thomas ‘Tom’ (d.2002) shepherd from the Robertson area, well known for his local poems and recitations. Born near Bentpath, he worked on farms throughout the Borders, coming to Girkwood in 1958, and retiring to Hawick in the 1990s. He served on many committees in Roberton, and was particularly remembered for his renditions of ‘Tam o’ Shanter’ and ‘Copshawholm Show’. Walter (b.1815/6) from Langholm, he was a needle-maker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Back Row, and he was listed there in Slater’s 1852 directory. the Watch (thu-wawch) n. the Association for Watching Hawick Churchyard, also known as ‘the Toon Guard’, an organisation set up around 1817 to protect the town’s recently buried bodies from ‘resurrectionists’. Every night 3 men, selected by ballot (or their paid substitutes), patrolled the churchyard. The Guard House was one of the buildings in ‘Old Churchyard’, opposite the Wester Kirkstile, and is seen in an old photograph. There were similar arrangements in Wilton.

watchit (wawch-ee”, -i”) pp., arch. watched – ‘...whan Saul sendet, an’ thayie watchet the hous til kill him’ [HSR].

watch-knowe (wawch-now) n., arch. a hill used as a look-out position – ‘Allane Deanes, trave’oured, being accusit for not being at the ryding and merching of the Commone upoun the 24 of May, 1645, compeirand confest he was at the Watch-Know’ [BR1645], ‘...yin o thae watch-knowe hichts, clean abuin haugh an howe’ [ECS] (there are several hills in southern Scotland so-named).

the Watchknowe (thu-wawch-now) n. hill above the south-west of Hawick, being the highest point at Crumhaugh Hill, to the right of the road. It was used as a lookout station and for setting warning bonfires in former more warring times. In the early years of the 19th century it was attended by Serg. Stewart of the regular army, who lived with his wife in a flat-roofed house there, with the barrel of tar waiting on top. The last time it was used in earnest was during the ‘False Alarm’ of 1804 – ‘See! the Watchknowe beacon blazing, Tower and town and water rasing’ [RSC]. Essentially the same place had a bonfire litten there for the False Alarm centenary and bi-centenary. The name is also used for the hill adjacent to Hummelknoswes farm and another next to Borthwickshiel farm. It is also a hill near Bedrule, 957 ft high, which is the site of a Bronze Age burial cairn (sometimes written as two words).

Watch Hill (wawch-hil) n. hill just to the north-west of Langhope farm and south-east of Akermoor Loch. It rises to 351 m.

Watch Knowe (wawch-now) n. hill to the south-west of Teviothead, this being the ‘rig’ of Caerlenrig. It contains Caerlenrig farm, and just to the north are the remains of a fort, overlooking the steep descent to the Teviot. The fort was probably originally about 250 ft in extent.

Watch Knowe (wawch-now) n. small hill between Bedrule and the farm of Swinnie to the south-east. The area contains several grass-covered cairns, which are probably quarry or clearance heaps.

Watch Knowe (wawch-now) n. hill between Roberton and Borthwickshiel.

Watch Knowe (wawch-now) n. hill in Liddesdale, between Ewe Knowe and Wilson’s Pike, south-east of Dinlabyre. It reaches a height of 356 m.

the Watch Knowe see the Watchknowe

Watch Sike (wawch-sik) n. small stream that runs in a roughly westerly direction to join Dawston Burn near Dawston Burn Brig.

wate-men (wä-men) n., poet. watchmen – ‘The wate-men that gae aboot the citie fand me ...’ [HSR].

waterfaa (wa’r-faw) n. a waterfall – ‘...It jumps the rocky waterfa’’ [JBS] (cf. witterfaa).

watering (waw-tu-ring) n., arch. a formal or ‘posh’ form of witterin, the playing of handball in the river.

Waterloo (waw’r-loo) n. final battle of the Napoleonic Wars on 18th June 1815, with a British force under the Duke of Wellington being assisted by Prussian and Dutch troops at Waterloo near Brussels. The battle was decided on the Sunday, but news did not reach Hawick until the following Saturday, when there were celebrations. When the London newspapers arrived on the mail-coach it was flying the red flag as a sign of victory, and Robert Wilson read out the newspapers from his window at the Sandbed. Penielheng monument was later built to commemorate the victory – ‘Here’s a health to valient Wellington, brave Blucher we’ll observe, Likewise General Bullo, with his army of reserve, And every gallant Briton in station high or low; For their firm undaunted valour on the field of Waterloo’ [BY].

the Waterloo (thu-waw'-ur-loo) n. former name for the Railway Hotel on Albion Place in the 19th century. It was also known as ‘Waterloo House’. Hugh Anderson was proprietor there according to a large stone bottle in the Museum.

the Water o Milk (thu-waw'-ur-o-milk) n. small valley between Annandale and Eskdale, which was the home of the Jardines in rievings days.

Waters (waw'-urz, wi'-urz) n. Alexander (b.c.1795) gardener at Lawrie’s Denn in 1841. His wife was Jane and they had a son, John. He is probably the same Alexander who was one of the first deacons at St. George’s Kirk, from 1844.

Rev. David (1813–89) a native of Hawick who only got 1¼ year’s schooling, becoming a spinner at Lynnwood Mill and later a Minister elsewhere. In 1841 he was living at Nixon’s Mill, with his wife Ann and children Margaret, Janet and William. He was active in the temperance movement and wrote some poetry, much of which he later disapproved of. This included the publication of ‘The Tw A Frien’s: or, The Ghost o’ Coiffer-Ha’, published in 1838 (in a booklet, along with 2 other poems). This was about the story, popular in Hawick at the time, that Franky Ballantyne had swindled his boss ‘Auld Cash’ (William Oliver), whose ghost haunted him afterwards. He died in Shipley, near Bradford – ‘Yonder’s David wi’ his een glentin’ like brass tacket in his heid’ [RMi].

Tibbie (19th C.) one of the 4 Dicksons & Laings operators of the first power looms to arrive in Hawick in 1830.

Wat Hardie (waw'-hawr-dee) n. character from ‘The Gutterbludes’, described as ‘Hardie frae the Green’, one of 3 Teri schoolmates who emigrated as settlers to Canada.

wather (waw-thur) n., arch. the weather – ‘Oo hedneh the best o’ wather . . . ’[RM], ‘Oo aye, he’ll never fetch her into the woods in this wather . . . ’[JEDM], ‘. . . sair duifft an neit-ec e nei ec wui Teime an waa’th’[ECS], ‘Hab says it’s a game played against the wather . . . ’[DH], v., arch. to weather – ‘Ah’m seek o’d tae Watty lad, but oo’ve wathered eet often afore and oo’l wather’d again’[JEDM], ‘Yet still, as I think on the seasons I’ve wathered, I daurna weel gie a froon . . . ’ [WL] (sometimes ‘wather’; also wither).

wather-gaa (waw-thur-gaw) n., arch. an atmospheric appearance, such as part of a rainbow, presaging bad weather, something desired but that one will not obtain – ‘It’s a wather-ga’ [GW].

wather-gleam (waw-thur-gleem) n., arch. twilights; specifically a band of clear sky visible at that time – . . . een as the faam o the wather-gleam skails afore’d the cluds threth an owrecuis-sen lift’ [ECS].

watin (wu-in) n., poet. knowledge – ‘Hae the wurkers o’ inequitt nae watin?’ [HSR] (related to wat and wot).

wat-like (wa-lik) adj., arch. looking wet, having a wet appearance.

Watlin Street (waw-lin-stree’) n. Watling Street, another name used to refer to the Roman road Dere Street. There are other tracks having the same name in England, leading to some confusion.

Watmilnersteed (waw’-mil-nur-steed) n. possible name for lands in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Watmilnersted’ in a rental roll of c.1376 in the charters of the Douglastes of Morton. It was valued at 4 shillings.

Wat o the Knowe (waw’-o-thu-now) n. familiar name for Walter Scott of the Knowe, near Teviothead.

Watshod (wa-shod) n. nickname for Archibald Henderson.

Watson (wat-sin) n. Abraham (17th/18th C.) innkeeper of Hawick. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Session for being at a drunken brawl in Thomas Huggan’s house. Abraham (18th/19th C.) farmer at Harden in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 4 horses at that time. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as Schoolmaster at Hobkirk when he witnessed a sasine of 1693. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1757. His children included Jean (b.1754), John (b.1757) and Mary (b.1760). Ann (18th C.) maid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Charles (1816/7–c.1860) from Musselburgh, he was a local artist, who had a painter’s business in the back of 10 High Street in the mid-19th century. He is listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Some of his paintings of local characters, e.g. Rachel Anderson, are in the Museum. In 1844 he married Margaret Tod, who was from Prestonpans. Their children were: Isabella Hutton (b.1844); Jane (b.1846); Margaret (b.1848), who died young; Rachel Tod (b.1850); Charles, also died young (b.1852); Mary (b.1854); another Charles, commission agent; John William (b.1856), grocer of Edinburgh; and Nancy Tod (b.1860). David McBurnie (1838–1902) commission agent in Hawick. He was son of Robert and Isabella, and brought up at the Commercial Inn on Buccleuch Street. He worked for William Laidlaw & Sons for about 30 years, latterly as cashier. In the early 1880s he set himself up as a commission agent. In 1861 he was a woollen manufacturer's clerk, living at 6 Bridge Street. He was a lifelong promoter of Hawick Public Library, for which he served as Secretary to the Committee, and collected antiquarian books for the reference room. He was also a member of the Library Association of the United Kingdom and of the Scottish History Society. He was a founder member of the Hawick Parliamentary Debating Society and active in local Liberal politics. Joining the Archæological Society in 1857, he served as Secretary and Treasurer, as well as President 1874–75. He was a frequent contributor to the Transactions in the late 19th century, specialising in well-researched articles on early Hawick history. Of particular value are the articles he wrote about extracts from the Burgh Records of Hawick, which he had trawled through personally. He also acted as Secretary for the Science and Technical School. He married Margaret Kennedy (who was related to Bailie James Kennedy), and she died in 1892. Their children were John (said to be a clever student, who died at Glenmoral, Queensland, aged 29), Robert (bank teller in Hawick, who died aged 31) and Mary (2nd wife of Alexander Steven, newspaper proprietor in Berwick), as well as another Robert who died in infancy. He secondly married Marjorie, daughter of mason Adam Laidlaw; she was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library. He lived at Hillside Cottage and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. A portrait of him was painted by Frank Watson Wood. George (b.c.1785) Skinner on Buccleuch Street. His wife was Anne, and their children included Thomas, Andrew, Launcelot, William, Christopher and Isabella. ‘Watson & Sons’ was recorded as a tanner and skinners on Buccleuch Street in 1837, and was the family firm. George (1814–46) youngest son of William Watson. He emigrated to Canada and died at Hamilton, Ontario. Rev. George Bruce Scoular (1843–1923) born in Methven, son of George Bruce, minister there and Jane Scoular. He had brothers who were ministers at Lauder, in South Melford, Yorkshire, and at Maidstone Prison, Kent. He was educated in Edinburgh and licensed by the Presbytery there in 1874. He was ordained as minister at Logie (Dundee) that year, but translated to Cavers in 1876. He married Elizabeth Whitson Fleming and their children were: Dorothea Margaret Fleming, who married Robert Calvert Sibbald; and Mabel Jane, who married John James Scott Morrison, minister of John Knox in Aberdeen. He remained minister until his death at the very end of 1923. George Marr (1876–1950) native of Jedburgh, son of Peter and Elizabeth Marr. He had an early interest in local history, being appointed Curator of Jedburgh Museum in 1901. He then became a lexicographer on the staff of the Oxford English Dictionary. He worked there 1907–1927 under the main editor of the time, William Craigie, having special responsibility for the letter ‘U’. He served with the Devonshire Regiment from early 1917 (when married conscription came in) and is said to have edited dictionary proofs at the front, and even for a while in a captured German dugout. He wrote the extraordinarily comprehensive ‘ Roxburghshire Word-Book’ (1923), research for which included reading virtually all sources of dialect literature available at the time, and corresponding with a veritable army of helpers over many years. He also contributed extensively to the Archæological Society Transactions throughout the first half of the 20th century, having joined the Society in 1900. Additionally he helped with the proofs for James Sinton’s Hawick-related bibliography in 1908. He moved to Chicago in 1927 to join Craigie to work on the ‘Dictionary of American English’. He received an honorary M.A. from Oxford University. He returned to Oxford in 1937, but remained on the staff of the University of Chicago (teaching a proof-reading course by correspondence) until 1946. His last contribution to the Archæological Society Transactions appeared only a few months before he died. Rev. George (1925–98) a native of Dundee, he served with the Reconnaissance Corps during WWII and afterwards in the Black Watch, He then obtained his M.A. from St. Andrews University in 1950 and B.D. in 1953. He was licensed by Dundee Presbytery in 1953 and immediately became minister of Brechin Maison Dieu Church. He moved to Wilton Church in 1960, soon becoming an adopted Teri. He earned his Mosstroopers badge in 1963 and was Chief Guest at the 1979 Common Riding. He was active in the Masons, becoming Senior Grand Chaplain to the Grand Lodge of Scotland as well as Provincial Grand Chaplain for Roxburgh, Peebles and Selkirk. In addition he was Chaplain to Wilton School, Industrial Chaplain to Turner & Rutherfords and Honorary Chaplain to the Callants’ Club. He also had responsibility for Teviothead Kirk 1989–91. He acted as Clerk to Hawick Presbytery 1965–72 and to Jedburgh Presbytery 1972–85. He was also involved with the Weens House Committee and the R.S.S.P.C.C., becoming Chairman of the local committee. An accomplished cross-country runner as a youth, he later became a keen hill walker. He retired in 1991, having been minister for 31 years, and moved to the Dean with his wife Betty. Isabella nee McBurnie (b.1815/6) from Kirkpatrick in Kirkcudbrightshire, she married Robert. Her husband was innkeeper of the Commercial Inn on Buccleuch Street, and their children were David McBurnie (of the Archaeological Society) and Mary. By 1851 she was a widow, listed as the innkeeper herself. Her uncle David McBurnie, a retired innkeeper from Holywood, Dunfriesshire, was also living with her. James (d.1418) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1408 until his death. He witnessed a charter of James Douglas of Dalkeith in the 1410s. In 1414 the name of the Archdeacon is given in Latin as ‘Jacobi Walteri’ and in 1415 as ‘Walteri Jacobi’, and so there appears to be some confusion about his name. James (18th C.) recorded at Harden in 1771 and Threiphead in 1773 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the James who married Mary Thomson in 1770 and whose children included Betty (b.1771) and Nelly (b.1773). Dr. James (18th/19th C.). He purchased the farm of Muirfield (formerly part of Hassendean Common) in 1789 from the trustees of Thomas Turnbull. His son was Thomas. He was probably the Kelso doctor who paid taxes for having servants and horses in at least the period 1789–94. James (1810–61) younger son of manufacturer William. He became a draper in Tyneside. He lived at North Shields, Tynemouth and Newcastle. In 1835 (in the Friends’ Meeting House in North Shields) he married Mary, daughter of Robert Spence, and she died in 1871. Their children were William Lindsay, Margaret, Robert Foster, Emma, Edith, Alice, Anna, James, Ernest and Emma Lindsay. James (1836–98) son of weaver Andrew, he was born in Jedburgh. He worked as a soda factory manager, grocer and newspaper reporter. However, he became known as the pre-eminent Jedburgh historian, writing ‘Jedburgh Abbey: Historical and Descriptive’ (1877) and ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859). James (19th C.) letter carrier in Rulewater, recorded in the early 1860s. He operated between Hawick and Hobkirk Parish. Due to some irregularity with the deliveries both he and Miss Renwick (the postmistress at Bonchester) were relieved of their positions. This was probably in the late 1860s. Rev. James minister of Lilliesleaf Kirk, linked with Bowden, 1888–94. Jessie (b.1802/3) from Selkirk, she was a grocer on the Howegate, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she is listed as a ‘Provision dealer’ at about 14 Howegate. She was unmarried and living with her sister Elizabeth. Jessie (19th/20th C.) sister of Provost Robert Fraser, she bussed the Flag at the 1887 Colour Bussing ceremony, the first to be held in the Town Hall. Rev. John (16th/17th C.) son of Peter, minister of Fisk, and Christian Stanehouse. He is recorded as Reader at Kirkton in 1588 and as Dean at Cavers in the 1580s. He may have been the same John connected with Kirkmichael 1579–86 or with Melrose in 1569. He demitted the vicarage of Cavers in 1601 (in favour of the Parson there, William Clerk), when he is described as ‘portioner of Melrose’. He may thus have been Cavers minister from the early 1580s until about 1599, but held on to some of the ‘living’ of the parish for another couple of years. It is possible he was the ‘Dene Jhone Watsone’ recorded along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk deputes of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in the Regality of Melrose. Note that the minister of Melrose was one of the witnesses to the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and Kers, signed in Melrose. John (16th C.) recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as being the collector of the crops and other rents for the farms around Hawick. He also held money for a land deal between John Scott of Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Over Hassendean. Additionally he was left ‘fourtie bollis beir’ in the will and was one of the witnesses to the will. He could be an ancestor of the Clerk to the Regality of Hawick recorded more than a century later. John (d.1720) writer who was Clerk to the Regality of Hawick. He was recorded as Clerk to the Bailie of Regality in 1710 and was made a Burgess of Hawick in 1713. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Hawick Session for being at a late night drinking session that turned into a brawl. He married Anna Laing in Hawick in 1709: she was born in Hawick in 1688, daughter of William Laing and Jane Thorbrand. They had 6 daughters, Jean (b.1710), May (b.1711), Margaret (b.1713), Anne (b.1715), Agnes (b.1717) and Christian (b.1718). In 1724 his widow married John Scott in an ‘irregular marriage’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His irregular marriage in Edinburgh to Helen Scott is recorded in 1720. He could be the John recorded at Borthwickbrae in 1721 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton and the John at Parkhill in 1725 when his daughter Janet was baptised. John (18th C.) resident at Roberton Parish. He was at Hosocate in 1737 and Craik in 1743. His children were Thomas (b.1737), William (b.1739), Helen (b.1741), Isabel (b.1743) and James (b.1747). He could be the John of ‘Castledean’ Parish who married Jean Bennet in Ancrum Parish in 1735. John (18th C.) recorded at Mabonlaw in 1773 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. John (18th C.) groom at Weens in 1778, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. By 1785–92 he was listed as ‘Stable Servant’ or ‘Groom’ at Weens. He was probably related to Walter, who was a house servant for Oliver of Dinlabyre. He was overseer at Dinlabyre when listed as male head of household in 1835. He is probably the John who died at Dinlabyre in 1837, aged 80, and is buried in Castleton along with his daughter Mary (d.1809). John (b.c.1810) carter in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 1 Doncaster Street. He may be the same John who was proprietor of the Buck Inn in Newcastleton in 1837. John Edward (1821–85) born in Hawick. He was articled to John & Benjamin Green in Newcastle as an architect in 1840, leaving in 1852 to set up his own business. He entered a design for the Great Exhibition, for which he was commended by Prince Albert. In 1869 he became President of the Northern Architects Association and became F.R.I.B.A. in 1877. He worked on Bowes Estate, at Barnard Castle and at Streatham Castle. He died at Newcastle. Lancelot (19th C.) native of Hawick who moved to Waco, Texas, and painted an 1889 portrait of Henry Scott Riddell which he was commended by Prince Albert. In 1869 he became President of the Northern Architects Association and became F.R.I.B.A. in 1877. He worked on Bowes Estate, at Barnard Castle and at Streatham Castle. He died at Newcastle. Lancelot (19th C.) native of Hawick who moved to Waco, Texas, and painted an 1889 portrait of Henry Scott Riddell that hangs in the Museum. He was a guest at the 1887 Colour Bussing. He may have been the ‘Launcelot’ who was born in 1825/6, son of skinner George. Margaret ‘Meg the Manty’ or ‘Meg the Mantua’ (1808/9–66) 19th century character who came to Hawick from Minto Parish with her mother, and referred to herself as ‘Miss Walker’ (although this may be an error for ‘Watson’). In the 1841 census she was living with her mother Eleanor, a ‘mantua-maker’ in Minto village. She was a tenant at 70 High Street (and also 5 Melgund Place) and was eccentric but harmless, her great weakness being for extravagant dress, particularly hats. She affected the manners of the upper classes and was regularly taunted by the youth of Hawick. She became the most expensive pauper for Hawick Parish, because of the extended legal wrangling with Minto. She met with an accident in the Spring of 1866 and died 2 months later – ‘Braw news has come to the toon, Braw news has come to the toon, Meg the Manty’s married’ [T] (the name derived from ‘manty’ meaning a mantle or woman’s gown). Ninian (16th/17th C.) listed in 1605 among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. He was said to be ‘sometime in Tynnesburne, now in Quhitliesyde’. Robert (d.bef. 1707) landowner in Abertrule Parish. In the 1707 county valuation, ‘Grange’s lands’ were held by ‘Airs of R. Watson’ and valued at £396. He presumably purchased part of the former estate of Kerr of Abertrule, or perhaps was related to the daughters of George Scott, who inherited Grange and other lands in 1670. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Watsons. Robert (b.c.1795) innkeeper on Buccleuch Street according to the 1841 census. This was the Commercial Inn at about No. 13. He married Isabella McBurnie, and she carried on as innkeeper after his death. His children were: David McBurnie (b.1838), who became a local historian; and Mary (b.1841). Robert (b.1803) eldest son of manufacturer William Watson. He attended Ackworth School in Yorkshire. He moved to North America about 1834, settling near Guelph. Robert (b.1818/9) from Chirnside, he was stationmaster at Hassendean Station in the 1860s. His wife was Margaret and their children included James, George P. and Robert. Robert Fraser (1839–1904) born at Wilton Bank, he was son of William Lindsay and brother of Thomas. He became senior partner of William Watson & Sons, Dangerfield Mills, tweed manufacturers. He was a councillor for Wilton Ward for 18 years from 1869 and Provost for 3 full terms, 1878–87. A Liberal in politics, he was President of the Hawick Liberal Association. There were many town improvements under his Provostship, including the Dobburn water scheme, the new Town Hall, widening of North Bridge Street, Duke Street built, and Pilmuir divided into two farms. He was the first to have the Provost’s Lamp outside his house from 1882. He was an ardent advocate for the Liddesdale railway line, a follower of the Buccleuch hounds, an ensign in the Hawick Volunteer Corps, and the first Captain of Hawick Golf Club in 1878. He was a strong Common Riding supporter, introducing members of the Council to patronise the Common Riding again after a period of much debate over Council involvement. This was effectively the start of the period of revitalization of the Common Riding. He inaugurated the Provost’s breakfast in 1885 (at Wilton Bank), and led the Councillors in the Procession to the Mair, as well as organising the first Colour Bussing in the Council Chambers in 1887, with the Provost Presiding. He was also President of the Archaeological Society, Governor of Hawick Savings Bank, a director of Hawick Gas Company and involved with the Library, Cottage Hospital, Buccleuch Memorial Science and Art Institute and Sacred Harmonic Society. In 1887 he represented Hawick a function in London to celebrate Queen Victoria’s Jubilee and can be seen in his court dress in a photograph from that time. In 1892 he stood as Liberal candidate for the Hawick Burghs, being defeated by Thomas Shaw. In later life he lived at Brieryards and Hassendeanburn, and never married. He purchased the writing desk that Napoleon had used on St. Helena (from the estate of the former island Governor Gen. Walker of Bowland, near Galashiels). He is buried in Wellowgate Cemetery and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by Knighton Warren in 1888). He can also be seen riding near the head of the Procession in 1899, the first year the Common Riding is recorded on film. Robert (1868/9–1900) elder son of D. McBurnie. He worked as a bank teller with the National Bank of Scotland in Hawick. He died of consumption, like his younger brother John the year before. Robert Hamilton Lindsay (1886–1956) son of Thomas, from whom he took over the family manufacturing firm. He was educated at Cambridge University, which he represented in the sports of hammer and billiards. He played rugby for Hawick and was capped by Scotland in 1909. He also represented Britain in the hammer throw in the 1908 Olympics, finishing 10th overall. He was clearly an all-round sportsman. He was a Lieutenant in WWI, losing 2 fingers at the Battle of Loos, and never playing rugby again. He took over the family firm of William Watson & Sons after the death of his father in 1925, and oversaw its gradual decline during the depression of the 1930s. His name is sometimes given as ‘Lindsay-Watson’. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Teindside. He sold Teindside to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, about 1755. He may have been the same man as the Hawick lawyer. Thomas (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) at Burnfoot in Wilton Parish. He was recorded as Clerk to the Regality of Hawick in 1721. He was appointed one of the Commissioners overseeing the construction of the Teviot Bridge in Hawick. In 1724 and 1727 he witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott of Burnhead. He was recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1735. He was one of 4 men who proposed building a stillhouse and brewery (probably in Hawick) in 1737, possibly becoming the original ‘Whisky Hooses’ on Slitrig Crescent. He witnessed a baptism (for weaver George Swan) in 1737 and another (for Robert Oliver, shoemaker) in 1738. In 1744 he leased from the Buccleuch Estates the lands of ‘Reidmoss’ and others in Castleton, plus Gerwald and others in Eskdalemuir Parish. He is mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1750 when his daughter Marion (possibly born in Hawick in 1726) married Thomas Weir, Commissary of Lanark. He is described as ‘clerk to the regality of Hawick’ (i.e. the Baron’s agent in the Town) when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1742 and still has the same title in 1757 when John Horsburgh of that Ilk tried to recover a debt from him. He notarised a sasine relating to lands in Hobkirk Parish in 1757. In 1720 he married Euphania (or ‘Euphan’), daughter of William Scott of Burnhead, and sister of Robert of Burnhead. This was an ‘irregular marriage’ at Kirk Arthur, with a licence being given by the Bishop of Carlisle, which suggests that he was a supporter of the Episcopal church. Their children included: Agnes (b.1721); William (b.1724), who became heir of Burnhead when his cousin Margaret (wife of Rev. Dr. Charters) died without any children; John (b.1730); and Thomas (b.1732). Thomas (18th/19th C.) son of Dr. James. In 1804 there was a ‘retour’ determining him as the legitimate son of James. He inherited the farm of Muirfield in the same year, and also purchased parts of the old Common that had been allocated to William Scott of Burnhead. He appears to have sold these to Lord Minto in 1808, but perhaps bought them back, since he still held the lands in 1814. Thomas (1807–42) 3rd son of William and brother of William Lindsay. In the electoral roll of 1834 he is listed along with his brother as joint proprietor of the Hawick spinning mill left to them by their father. He lived on Slitrig Crescent according to the 1841 census. He married Mary Renny and their children included: William Renny (b.1837); and Mary, who married Spencer Shelley. Thomas Lindsay (d.1925) son of William Lindsay and brother of Robert Fraser. He lived at Brieryards and was prominent in local Liberal and Unionist politics. He also had a town-house at Leaburn. In about 1874 he and his mother were listed each as half owners of John Hardie’s former lands in Weensland. He played for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1890s, scoring the winning try in 1896 which won Hawick its first Scottish Championship. He was also Captain of the Golf Club at one time, and an early player of tennis. He was also a contributor to the Common Riding in the 1880s. He was long connected with St. Cuthbert’s Kirk, being a Churchwarden and Lay Elector there, and unveiling the War Memorial plaque in 1921. The firm was taken over by his son Robert Hamilton Lindsay. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Bothwickbrae in 1723, 1725, 1726, 1728, 1729 and 1734. He married Agnes Easton in 1722 and their children included: Margaret (b.1723); William (b.1724); twins George and Agnes (b.1725); Margaret (b.1726); Helen (b.1728); John (b.1729); Janet (b.1732); and Walter (b.1734). Walter (18th C.) tenant in Harrowood on Teviot. He married Bettie Birnie in 1755 and their children included: Margaret (b.1756); an unnamed child (b.1758); Elizabeth (b.1760); and Walter (b.1760). Walter (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1785–88, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Walter (18th C.) resident of ‘Dicksall’ in Kirkton Parish. His daughter Jean was baptised in 1788. William (15th C.) recorded as late Vicar of Ashkirk in the Protocol Book of Glasgow Diocese in 1508. It appears that David Scott filled the vacancy, at least temporarily. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Bennet and their children included John (b.1654). William (17th C.) resident at Shaws in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William of Burnhead (d.1818) son of Thomas and Eupham Scott of Burnhead. He succeeded to Burnhead after the death of his cousin Margaret Scott (daughter of Robert Scott of Burnhead) in 1815. He married Rebecca Peters in Naussau, Island of New Providence (modern Bahamas) in 1785. They had 1 son and 2 daughters. He died only 3 years after he succeeded to Burnhead and was succeeded by his son William. William (1773–1843) hosiery manufacturer, originally from Dalkeith, he was son of Robert and Agnes Brown and grandfather of Provost Robert Fraser. He was a dyer in Dalkeith, moving to Glasgow in the 1790s, where he became a retail draper. He became a customer of William Wilson, hosier in Hawick. On account of asthma, Wilson found it hard to travel and so was looking for a partner. He married Margaret Brown and the couple became Quakers, settling in Hawick in 1804. In that year he started his partnership with William Wilson, forming Wilson & Watson and building Dangerfield Mills. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He probably had the villa Wilton Bank (also called ‘Old Wilton Bank’, or No. 2 Wilton Bank) built for him on the modern Princes Street; he was living there in 1841 with his wife and 2 servants. The partnership at Dangerfield effectively began the factory system in Hawick. The firm was split in 1819 with Dangerfield Mills remaining with William Watson & Sons, which then became known as Watson’s. As well as manufacturing hosiery, his firm also spun yarn and made blankets. He was a Liberal in politics. In 1818 he wrote to the British and Foreign School Society regarding Tom Jenkins and his suitability for a missionary post. His wife Margaret died at Deanfield, Perthshire in 1850, aged 76. His children included: Robert (b.1803), who emigrated to America; William Lindsay (b.1805), who took over the hosiery firm; Thomas (b.1807); James (1810–61), who married Mary Spence and became a draper in North Shields; Agnes (b.1812), who died in infancy; George (b.1814), the youngest son, who died in Canada in 1846; and Margaret (b.1816). A portrait of him exists. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. William of Burnhead (1787–1870) son of William and Rebecca Peters. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1840. In 1841 he is recorded as an ‘Independent Gentleman’ at ‘Burngrove’ (i.e. Bucklands). He served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and member of the Police Board for Roxburghshire. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He held parts of Wester Clarilaw and Pinnacle, as well as Appletreehall Townfoot, Crawhill and Lees. In 1818 he married Bridget, daughter of William Abraham Bowles of Bath. They had 3 sons and 1 daughter, Margaret, who married John Stavert of Hosocate. He was succeeded by his eldest son, William Scott. William Lindsay (1805–49) 2nd son of William and father of Provost Robert Fraser. He married Janet (or Jessie) Fraser, sister of Provost Fraser, and worked in the family hosiery and tweed firm. He is listed on the 1834 electoral roll, along with his brother Thomas, as joint proprietor of the spinning mill left to them by their father. In 1841 he was at about 16 High Street. His children included William, Robert Fraser, Rebecca and

Thomas Lindsay. He lived on the High Street, possibly No. 16. He did not live for many years after his father’s death in 1843; the firm was managed by John Paterson until his sons Robert Fraser and Thomas Lindsay took over in 1864. He died at Wiltonbank and was buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. His wife was listed in about 1874 living at Wilton Bank and owning half of John Hardie’s former lands in Weensland (the other half being owned by his son Thomas Lindsay).

Dr. William Scott of Burnhead (1819–85) eldest son of William and Bridget Bowles. He was educated under Dr. Arnold at Rugby and then studied medicine at Edinburgh University. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1842, practised in Brighton, but gave up when he married in 1851. He then lived in Edinburgh and Melrose until 1860 when his father gave him Bucklands House, where he is recorded in 1868. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1873 and was also a member of the Ettrick Forest Club. He became a Lieutenant in the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (Volunteers) when it formed in 1860. He later became Captain-Commandant of the 2nd Company. He also served as Justice of the Peace, member of the first School Board, Commissioner of Supply and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. He was listed as owner of Burnhead, part of Wester Clarilaw and Pinnacle, Appletreehall Townfoot, Crawhill, Lees and Hummelknowes in about 1874. In 1851 he married Louisa Sarah, daughter of Thomas Dennis of Pilton. They had a large family: William Scott (1855–1929), who succeeded; Thomas John (1859–60); Charles Abraham (1861–90), who died in Australia; Bridget Sarah (1852–85); Anna Louisa Elizabeth (1853–74), who died in a riding accident; Louisa Margaret (1856–88); Susan Harriet (1858–75); and Frances Emmeline (1863–1905), who married Ernest Leonard Mahon. Sir William Renny (1838–1900) born on Slitrig Crescent in Hawick, son of Thomas and Mary Renny. He became an engineer and bank director, being partner in Watson & Tait, later Mirrlees, Watson & Yaryan Co., who manufactured cane sugar machinery in Glasgow. He was Chairman of the Glasgow and South Western Railway Company. He was a Director of the National Bank of Scotland, served for a few years as Councillor in Glasgow and was a member of the Clyde Trust. Having a keen interest in the arts and sciences, he was President of a local branch of the Royal Geographical Society. In later life he devoted efforts to charitable work, for example serving as Director of the Glasgow Workmen’s Dwellings Company and Chairman of Governors of the Victoria Infirmary. He lived at Braco Castle in Perthshire and was knighted in 1892. He gifted a large cup to Hawick Golf Club. In 1866 he married Mary Ann Caird (d.1925). William Scott of Burnhead, J.P. (1855–1929) son of William Scott and Louisa Sarah Dennis. Educated at Cambridge, he was Captain in the 1st Essex Regiment. He sold Bucklands House in 1887. He was a speaker at the Common Riding in 1889. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1898. In 1892 he married Mabel Agnes, 4th daughter of Lieut.-Col. Thomas Mahon. Their son William was born in 1893 and appeared to have ‘Scott Watson’ as a surname (also formerly ‘Watsone’, ‘Watson’ and ‘Wattson’).

Watsonians (wats-ôn-ce-inz) n. rugby football club, established in 1875 for ex-pupils of George Watson’s College in Edinburgh. The club lost the first Scottish Cup final in 1996 with a score of 15 to Hawick’s 17.

Watson’s (wat-sinz) n. Messrs. William Watson & Sons, hosiery and tweed manufacturers. Founded in 1819, after William Wilson and William Watson split their partnership, it occupied the large mill at Dangerfield. The name was usually applied to the main Dangerfield mill, or collectively to the group of buildings there. It is labelled ‘Spinning Mill, Mr. Watson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. It was an apparent error in reading an invoice from this firm that led to the word ‘tweed’ being coined in about 1832 (although other accounts connect it with Wilson’s). The company is listed as both a woollen and hosiery manufacturer in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory it was listed at Dangerfield Mills and Selkirk. From about 1863 the hosiery part of the business was carried on by George Hogg. The tweed business was carried on by the sons and then grandsons of William Watson. In 1871 the firm was employing 250 people, manufacturing over 170,000 pounds of goods yearly and dying 100,000 pounds. The company suffered during the depression and in 1939 needed a bond from the British Linen Bank for £10,000. Later the firm turned away from tweeds and back to hosiery. In 1982 the last Lindsay-Watson retired and the company was sold to Thuleknit Ltd. In 1986 a fire in the offices destroyed most of the firm’s records, including pattern books and the letter establishing the word ‘tweed’. The firm finally went into liquidation in 1991, although the mill was used.
Watt

from 1996 by International Knitwear. The carding shed off Bath Street burned down on Common Riding Friday 2003, followed by the main mill a month later. Company records from the period 1847–1950 are stored at Edinburgh University, and a single pattern book for the years 1924–30 survives.

Watt (waw’) n. Adam, W.S. (d.bef. 1674) recorded in a discharge by his 2nd son Patrick in 1674, when his lands within the Barony of Hawick were sold to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. It is unclear what his Hawick connection was. Allan (19th/20th C.) born in Dundee, he became a journeyman printer. Travelling as far as London and Ireland for work, he spent some time in Hawick, where he met and married Margaret Shiell Smith, daughter of James Smith, Cornet in 1846. He became Foreman Printer with the Hawick Advertiser, but in 1880 rented a wooden hut near the station. There he started a newsagent and printers of Station Road. This firm, Allan Watt & Son, lasted for more than a century, being run in turn by Allan junior, and then by a third Allan. The tenement built at the corner of Station Road and Commercial Road in about 1894 was designed by J.P. Alison. He married Margaret (‘Maggie’) Smith in 1875. Their children included Allan S. (b.c.1877) and Helen Sutherland (‘Maggie’) Smith in 1875. Their children

Watters (waw’-urz) n. Alexander Marshall (19th/20th C.) High School Rector 1919–45. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1903, was a geologist by profession, and served as a Sound Ranging Officer in the 3rd Army in WWI. It is said that his ruddy complexion gave rise to the nickname ‘Le Pêche’ which became ‘the Pesh’. He wrote a history of secondary education in Hawick for the Transactions in 1927. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh.

Wattie Scott the Cairrier (waw'-ee-sko'-thu-kah-ree-ur) n. usual name given to Walter Scott of the early 19th century.

Wattie’s Hill (waw'-eez-hil) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. It was described in the 1538 and 1539 Exchequer Rolls as 2 steadings valued at 44 shillings. It is distinct from ‘Wattie’s Spinnels’, which is also recorded in the same lists (it is ‘Wawdoshill’ in 1538).

Wattie’s Spinnels (waw'-eez-spi-mulz) n. Wattie’s Spindles, former settlement in Southdean Parish, just west of Lethem. The remains are at the top of a small hill of that name, which is also known locally as Katey’s Croft. They consist of the turf-covered walls of 2 long recatangular buildings and a third to the west. A peel house was at the centre, but has been so robbed of stones that it is hard to make out anything other than its size, about 5 m by 4 m. There are other enclosures, boundary banks and rig lines nearby; the rig extends over at least 12 hectares, going west to the Windy Cleuch. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 3 steadings and was valued at £3 6 shillings. John Laidlaw was tenant there in 1541, paying 44s yearly. The 1694 Hearth Tax return lists a single occupant with hearth there (Alexander Stenson), but the place is not marked on maps of the 18th century. The 1724 will of Alexander Stevenson, shepherd in ‘Wadiespinnells’ is in the Douglas of Cavers papers (it is ‘Wawdospindillis’ in 1538, ‘Wawdosynillis’ in 1539, ‘Waldospindillis’ in 1541, ‘Wadiespindles’ in 1684, ‘wadispindels’ in 1694 and ‘Wadespinnells on Blaue’s c.1654 map).

Wattie Wilson’s (waw'-ee-wul-sinz) n. popular name for the factories of Walter Wilson & Co., particularly the one at the corner of Teviot Road and Mill Port, which was latterly used by Glenmac – ‘… We lairned oor bible in the Templar’s Hall Aback o’ Wattie Wilson’s Mill’ [WL].

Watts (wats) n. Reuben pseudonym for Daniel Marriot.

Watt’s Burn (wats-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, just to the east of Thorleshire farm (it is unclear who the ‘Watt’ was, but the fact that this is a ‘Burn’ rather than a ‘Sike’ might suggest the name is relatively modern).

Watt’s Burn (wats-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on the western slopes of Arnton Fell and running approximately south-west to join Roughley Burn. It is unclear who the Watt would have been. It is presumably unassociated with the other stream of the same name in the same Parish.

Watt’s Jock (wats-jok) n. nickname for John Scott in Hawick around 1600.

Watt Tinlinn (waw'-tin-lin) n. fictional character in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, who brings the first news of the approach of the English to Branxholm. wauch (wawch) adj., arch. insipid, unpalatable – ?? [JAHM].

Wauchope (waw'-chup) n. area in Hobkirk Parish by the Wauchope Burn, with a farm and other cottages, and once a major estate. A tower there is mentioned in 1494/5 and was burned by the English in 1545. The site of this tower and foundations of cottages in the adjacent settlement could still be made out in the early 20th century; this was referred to as ‘the old town’ on a map of 1772 (this map, drawn by William Scott, also shows other forgotten feattures). It was in the wood to the south west of the modern farm. The family who took their names from the lands are first recorded in the late 12th and early 13th centuries, establishing that the original estate was in Roxburghshire. It appears that William ‘de Walhope’ exchanged his lands in Ireland with the lands of Wolfelee and Rouchhope in the early 1300s. Alexander ‘de Walchope’ was confirmed in the lands in 1389. The Tower was originally held by the Wauchope family, followed by the Glendinnings. Later the lands were owned by the Homes of Wetherburn, who sold them to Sir William Cranston shortly after 1605. At that time the tenants were Turnbulls, who held them on feudal tenure from the Douglases, this going back to at least 1530. David Turnbull was Laird in 1508. The Laird of Wauchope (probably a Turnbull) is recorded as being hurt by an arrow and his horse slain during pursuit of Lord Dacre’s force in Rule Water in late 1513. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at £20. A local tradition says that Mary Queen of Scott’s horse drank at the well by the old tower on her return ride from Hermitage Castle in 1566. David Turnbull of Wauchope is recorded in 1567, Hector Turnbull was recorded there in 1580 and another David Turnbull of Wauchope was slaughtered near his house in the early 17th century. In 1602 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope accused John Elliot of Copshaw of leading a band of about 100 men to steal 80 cows, 100 sheep and 12 horses from Wauchope. In 1653 the 20-pound land there was inherited by James Turnbull, as heir of his uncle Thomas of Wauchope. The superiority of the lands passed from the Cranstons of that Ilk to the Eliotts of Stobs in the 1650s, and are described in 1677 as the ‘twenty pound land of Wauchope with pertinent called Catley and Cattleyeschaw’. There were Scott tenants there in the latter part of the 17th century, e.g. Walter in 1681. In 1678 the lands are valued at £1433 6s 8d. Walter Scott was there in 1694 when he paid the Hearth Tax for 3 hearths at the main house and 2 for his shepherds. In 1767 it was ‘the Twenty pound land of Waughope and Longhaugh of the old extent with the Castle, Tower, Fortalice, Miln thereof, Miln-lands ... ’. In that year Walter Scott (a descendant of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh) purchased the estate from James Cranston. The estate was passed to his descendants, down to the Macmillan-Scotts into the 20th century. In 1811 Walter Scott of Wauchope is recorded as owner of Wauchope Common, Wauchope-rig, Wauchope House and Wigg; the whole was valued at £1433 6s 8d, with Walter being superior of part of the lands, holding them directly of the Crown. In 1797 the shepherds there were John Wilson, James Scott, Walter Riddell and Alexander Lillico. The mottos of this branch of the Scot family are ‘Miseris Succuro’ and ‘Ardenter Amo’. A new mansion was built in 1875/6 to replace the house visited in by Burns. But even that new Wauchope House is no more, the ruin being purchased by a religious order, pulled down and the stone used to build their Seminary at St. Boswells. There are now self-catering cottages on the former grounds. An old piece of pottery found on the farm is in the Museum. The house was visited by Burns on his Border Tour of 1787, perhaps the closest he came to Hawick. A cairn was built there (by Henry Brown) using some stones from the former house; this is visited annually by the Burns Club and a pipe tune (written by Brian Gillis) called ‘Wauchope Cairn’ is played – ‘All Rule Water, east and west, Bowed to the spell of Turn- bull’s name, And among the proud of the Border’s best There was none so proud as the Wauchope dame’ [WHO] (also spelt ‘Waughope’, spelling variations exist in earlier documents, including ‘Walchop’, ‘Walchope’, ‘Walyhope’, ‘Walkhope’, ‘Wauchop’, ‘Wauchup’, ‘Wauchhop’, ‘Waugh- hope’, ‘Waughop’, ‘Waughope’, ‘Wawchop’ and ‘Vauchope’; the origin may be a family name, although there is a suggestion that if it is very old it may be ‘valley of the strangers’, since the Anglians referred to the native Celts as ‘Waugh’, meaning ‘Welsh’; it occurs as ‘Wachope’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and is ‘Wouchope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it should not be confused with the area of the same name near Langholm, although the name was probably transplanted to there).

Wauchope (waw-choo) n. area around the Wauchope Water, just west of Langholm. It is easily confused with the place of the same name in Hobkirk Parish, both sites probably being connected with the Wauchope family. It was later the seat of the Lindsays. The parish of Wauchope was united with Canonbie about 1609, and in 1672 (along with other eastern Dumfriesshire parishes) was attached to Roxburghshire, although probably not for long. It was finally united with Staple Gordon in 1702.

Wauchope (waw-choo) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) witness of a charter by Simon de Lindsay of lands in Molle to Melrose Abbey in the reign of William the Lion. His name was recorded there as ‘Ada de Waleuhop’. He also witnessed another charter for lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey about the same time. He was also witness to a charter of lands in Elliston to Melrose Abbey sometime in the period 1220 to 1243; he is there ‘Ada de Walchope’. Given that the other witnesses were mainly connected with Roxburghshire, it is likely that his lands were those in Hobkirk Parish. Adam of Techmiry (16th C.) witness to the marriage of William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murry, ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’, in 1544. Alan (12th/13th C.) listed as ‘Alano de Walchope’ when he witnessed a charter in Kincardineshire sometime in the period 1203–13. It is unclear how he was related to other Wauchope. He may have been father of the Robert recorded in 1247 as son of Alan. Alan (13th C.) Chamberlain to Donald, Earl of Mar. He is recorded in transactions in 1291 and 1292 as well as 2 undated documents. Alexander (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Walchope’ in 1389 when the lands of Wauchope (probably in Eskdale) were confirmed to him by James, Earl of Douglas. His daughter married Adam ‘de Glendonwin’, whose family eventually acquired Wauchope. George of Pinnacle (17th C.) recorded as owner of Pinnacle in 1678, with the lands valued at £500. He was listed as ‘George Wauchop of Pendicle’ and was probably son of Gideon, owner in the 1660s. Gideon of Pinnacle (17th C.) described as ‘of Pinickle’ when he witnessed a contract involving lands in Hobkirk Parish in 1652. He is probably the ‘Jedion Wauchope’ who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644, 1646 and 1649. He was fined £2400 in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenant supporter; he was there described as brother to the Laird. He was taxed for Pinnacle in about 1663. John (13th C.) recorded receiving a grant in Invernesshire in 1263. John (d.c.1280s) granted lands in Ireland by Edward I in 1278. These lands were in ‘Ballihaulis’, ‘Baliotyre’ and ‘Ballimacihores’, and this was probably the start of the connection between this family and Ireland. He left a widow, Margery and 2 daughters, Alienor and Margaret. In 1300 the Irish lands were passed to his brother William. John (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Walchope’ in a charter of 1359, confirming the lands of ‘Tullibotil’ and ‘Little Culter’ to Alexander Burnard, which had formerly belonged to him. Sir Robert (13th C.) recorded in several charters in the period from about 1240 until 1271 in the counties of Aberdeen, Fife, Angus and Perth. His name is given as ‘Roberto de Wauchope’ and variants. He is probably the Robert, son of Alan, who had the lands of Culter in Aberdeenshire confirmed to him in 1247. Robert (13th C.) listed as ‘Robertus de Walghop’ when he paid homage to Edward I in 1296. It is unclear where he came from. There was a separate Robert ‘de Waghope’ from Fife, although this could be the same man entered twice. If so he was surely related to the earlier Sir Robert. There was also a Thomas Walghop’, tenant of the Bishop of St. Andrews in Edinburgh, listed in the Ragman Rolls. Roger (13th C.) witness to some documents in Fife in the period 1260–62. Thomas (13th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Walghope’ in the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows a hawk killing a bird. Thomas (d.1389) Bailie for the lands of Queen Margaret, wife of David II in the Sheriffdom of Perth in 1368 and 1373. His name was listed as ‘Thome Valchope’ and ‘de Walchop’. He appears to have been Deputy Sheriff of Perth, and was given annuities in the 1380s. In 1380 he was auditor of accounts for Strathearn and had an annuity paid to him in the years 1381–88. Perhaps the same Thomas ‘de Wauchope’ is recorded in 1371 when he witnessed a charter relating to lands in the county of Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Wauchope. William (13th/14th C.) probably brother of John, who was granted lands in Ireland by Edward I in 1278. After the lands were lost to the Crown, on the death of his brother, he recovered them again in 1300. He petitioned the King sometime in the period 1300–07 to exchange his lands in Ireland for 20-pound lands in Jedforest, then yielding 34 marks yearly to the King. These were specifically the lands of ‘Wlleys’ (probably Wolfelee) and ‘Rughope’ (Rouchhope), which would become the lands of Wauchope. The lands were bounded by lands held by Jedburgh Abbey, by William de Soulis and by Sir Alexander de Baliol. His request was because he was in the King’s service at the ‘conquest of Berwick’, at Dunbar, at Falkirk, at Melrose and at ‘many other journeys’. William (14th C.) Constable of Edinburgh in 1382. Wauchopebank (waw-chup-bawngk) n. former name for lands lying to the west of Wauchope. In 1538 and 1539 the lands were valued along with Templehall at 40 shillings, and occupied by Patrick Turnbull. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s yearly. The lands are described in a bounding charter of 1567 (it is ‘Wauchopbank’ in 1538 and 1539, ‘Wauchope Bank’ in 1541 and ‘Wauchop bank’ in 1604).

Wauchope Cairn (waw-chup-kærn) n. commemorative cairn erected at the site of old Wauchope House, using some of the house’s stones. It was erected in 1985 by local Burns Clubs to mark the visit of Robbie Burns visit to Wauchope House in 1787, the nearest he came to Hawick. It has been visited annually (in July) since it was built. A stone tablet in the ground by the cairn reads ‘F.S. + E.C. WAUCHOPE’.

Wauchope Castle (waw-chup-kaw-sul) n. ruined castle south-west of Langholm, on the Wauchope Water, formerly home of the Lindsays. It was once a very impressive fortress, built in the late 13th century and ruined by the late 16th.

Wauchope Common (waw-chup-kaw-sul) n. former name for part of the lands of Wauchope in upper Rulewater. In 1811 it is ‘those parts and portions of the Lands of Wauchope called Common’ on the Land Tax Rolls when it was part of the estate owned by Walter Scott of Wauchope.

Wauchope Forest (waw-chup-fo-ris) n. large commercial forest to the south-east of Hawick. It combines with Kielder Forest to form the Border Forest Park and was named after the area at the head of the Rule valley.

Wauchopeheid (waw-chup-heed) n. Wauchopehead, former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish in the upper reaches of the Wauchope Burn. In 1404 it was granted to John Turnbull after being forfeited by John ‘Bour’. The farm is one of those that passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands, which had been in waste for the previous 20 years. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s. It is recorded in 1562 in the document describing lands disputed by the Barons of Feurule. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was ‘part of that called Hawkleytongues, or Waughope-head, now known by the name of the North-west division of the said Lands of Waughope’ (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1404 and ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1538, ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1539 and ‘Wauchopeheid’ and ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1541).

Wauchope Hoose (waw-chup-hoo) n. former house at Wauchope. It was originally a tower, owned by the Wauchopes, then the Turnbulls and then the Scotts. The site of this old tower could still be made out in the early 20th century, with foundations of cottage nearby marking the former settlement. In 1694 the tax was paid on 3 hearths there by Walter Scott. The newer house was developed in the 18th century, and was famously visited by Burns in May 1787. His hostess was Mrs. Scott who was known as an artist and poet in her own right, writing the epistle ‘The guid-wife of Wauchope to Burns’. The tumbler out of which Burns drank was long preserved by the family. There is a sketch of the house by Mrs. Macmillan Scott in 1848, and was still there in the 1890s when the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club visited. Situated beside the public road, it was of the typical farmhouse construction, being of 2 1/2 storeys, with large, white-sashed windows, and two lateral wings of a single storey. The house was rebuilt in 1875/6 by Walter Macmillan-Scott, 6th Laird, to plans by Peddie, Kinnear & Co, built of red sandstone. It survived into the mid-20th century, but was torn down in 1936 after being purchased by a religious group, and most of the stones used to construct their college in St. Boswells. However, some of the stones were also used to build a cairn in the house’s location, which is visited annually by the Burns Club. The site now has some shingles-clad holiday cottages.

Wauchope Rig (waw-chup-rig) n. hill above Wauchope in the Rule valley, to the west of the main road between Wolvehopelee and Hyndlee. Part of the lands here were where the house was built; the 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists ‘Waughope-rig, now known by the name of the House, or middle division of the Lands of Wughope’. An ancient earthwork situated, on the north-east spur, has been used as a quarry. It is said that some Roman coins were found there. The earthwork was probably a small settlement, and unlikely to be Roman; it is now within the forest. The sides of the Rig also have signs of old terracing.

Wauchope Waas (waw-chup-waawz) n. another name for Langhaugh Waas.

Wauchope Witter (waw-chup-ur) n. river that meets the Esk at Langholm. The valley is sometimes known as Wauchopedale, and its history is wrapped up with that of the Wauchope family. It should not be confused with the Wauchope Burn, which flows through Wauchope Forest to meet the Rule Water (although the names may of course be related).

waucht (wawght) n., poet. a draught of liquid, long drink, swig – ‘A waucht o waeter’ [ECS], ‘an slokent ma drooth . wui a lang waucht that garrd iz sich’ [ECS].
wauf  (wawf) n., arch. a waft – ‘For ilka wauf o’ wind that blaws dings dauds o’ on the lea ... ’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘waff’).

wauf  (wawf) adj., arch. wayward, like a vagrant, disreputable – ‘They’ll plan the waft aboon the wise, The false o’ heart aboon the true’ [HSR], feebly in mind or body, ineffectual – ‘The heat turns leify folk dawallt an wauf’ [ECS], ‘When a popular preacher mounted the rostrum, the people all flocked to the tent; when a wauf hand turned up, the tide was all the other way’ [RJR], lacking strength, paltry, weakened – ‘Our wa’s atweel are waft enough’ [HSR], ‘My strencht he mde waft bie the waye; he shortenet my dayes’ [HSR], ‘It’s juist about the richt thickness; neither owre wauf nor owre solid’ [DH], n., arch. a wastrel, worthless person – ‘(also spelled ‘waaf’ and ‘waff’).

Waugh  (waw) n. Agnes nee Purdom (19th/20th C.) from a Liddesdale family. Her aunt married William Laidlaw (farmer at Bonchester). Her father died in London and her mother moved to live with a twin sister in Ross-shire. At age 13 she moved to Bonchester to live with her aunt. She later married mason Andrew. Andrew (16th C.) resident of Wadishill. He is recorded among Scotsmen complained about by the English Warden in 1590 because of a raid in 1588; he is recorded there as ‘Andrew Wawghe of Wadishill’. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills around 1700. In 1701 he witnessed a baptism for William Oliver, who was also tenant there. Andrew of Shaw (17th/18th C.) probably owner of lands near Shaws Loch. In 1711 he was one of the founders of the ‘Honest Country Club’. Andrew (18th C.) listed along with James as farmer at Broomibraes in 1792, when they were leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He could be the Andrew who married Janet Elliot in Hawick in 1764, and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Thomas (b.1765), Robert (b.1766), James (b.1768), Betty (b.1770), Walter (b.1772) and Adam (b.1775). Andrew (1784–1836) probably father of Bailie Andrew, he was a clothier on the High Street, and one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk in 1810. He was recorded as a High Street tailor in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. ‘Andrew & David’ were recorded as High Street tailors in 1837, probably referring to him and a son. His premises at around 38 High Street are marked on Wood’s 1824 map. His wife may have been Janet (who was living there in 1841). Andrew (b.c.1785) music teacher in Denholm. His wife was Martha, and their children included Mary and Betty. Bailie Andrew (1813–85) tailor and clothier at 38 High Street. In 1841 he was there with his wife Euphemia and brothers William and Robert. In 1851 he was employing 4 men and 2 apprentices. He was listed as a High Street tailor in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was the last Senior Magistrate of the town in 1861. He presented a coin to the Museum in 1863. He was a long time manager of Allars Kirk and Treasurer for 26 years. He married Euphemia Kerr, and their children included: Euphemia (b.1842); Janet (b.1844); Mary Kerr (b.1846), who probably died young; Andrew (b.1849); Jane (b.1851); Thomas (b.1853); Robert (b.1855); and Georgina (b.1861). Andrew (b.1839) builder who lived on the Wolfelee estate at Blackcleugh Cottage and later at Wolfelee School Cottage. He was son of Thomas, mason at Denholm and his grandfather had been a music teacher who went from house to house. He is probably the journeyman mason recorded in 1861 at 61 High St., Hawick. He could be the Andrew who is recorded as a supporter of the Jedforest Hunt in the latter part of the 19th century. He married Agnes Purdom at Bonchester farmhouse. Their children were: Mary, who was nurse at Weens and married Will Robson; Thomas Waugh, mason who married Agnes Goodfellow; John, mason who married Jane Moore; Janet, who married William Mackay; Agnes, who married James Renwick; Robert, who married Jane McQueen; Andrew; William, who emigrated to America; and Arthur Young. He became deaf later in life, but kept up his business as well as an association with the Jedforest Hounds until late in life. Andrew (d.1924) third generation clothier of the same name. He was a Trustee and Manager of Allars Kirk. He was known for being ambidextrous. He is probably the Andrew from Hawick who was a collector of local fossils. Andrew (19th/20th C.) barber in Hawick. He was an enthusiastic supporter of the Hawick Home Mission. He served as President of the organisation at the times of its 40th, 50th and 70th anniversaries. Archibald (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Isabel Farquharson and their daughter Isabel was born in 1757. The death of his boarder is recorded in Hawick in 1777. David (15th C.) resident of Bedrule recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Along with George Turnbull of Bedrule and weaver William White they had remission for stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilmuir, associating with John Turnbull of Gatehousecote, communing with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was George Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1494/5 he was ‘in Bedrule or in Hawick’ when he had further remission for several crimes, including: stealing 24 sheep from Thomas Scott of Bowerhouse; stealing 26 cows from James Pringle of Pilmuir; stealing 85 cows, 3 heifers, 13 horses and tools from John Borthwick of Crookston and his tenants; and for common theft before his previous remission. His sureties were the Laird of Bedrule and Robert Scott of Whitchester. His surname was given as ‘Walch’. Edward (16th C.) tenant in part of the farm of ‘Burrwinyet’ in Jedforest in 1541. William and George were tenants of the other part and surely related. Evelyn Arthur St. John (1903-66) writer, born in London and educated at Oxford University, he was already a fairly established author when WWII broke out and he joined the Royal Marine Infantry Brigade, being their oldest recruit at age 36. He transferred to the Commandos, and saw some active service, but disputes with senior officers led to several other transfers, and him spending much of his time in training. This included a move to Hawick where he trained as part of ‘5RM’, in the latter part of 1941. His most famous novel ‘Brideshead Revisited’ was written while on medical leave (after breaking his leg in parachute training) in the first half of 1944. George (15th C.) mentioned as one of the witnesses to the sasine of 1490 when Robert Scott purchased land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He is probably the same man as ‘Georgius Walch in hawic’ who was fined at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493, his surety being John Lidderdale. Additionally in 1493 he was allowed to ‘compone’ for: re-setting John Tmbull of Gatehousecote, who had been declared a rebel for the murder of Archibald Rutherford; stealing 4 cows from Matthew Gotterson in the Forest of Lauder; stealing 22 sheep from Thomas Scott in Bowerhouse; and common theft. His surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. George (16th C.) tenant along with William in part of the farm of ‘Burrwinyet’ in Jedforest in 1541. Edward was tenant of the other part and surely related. George (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with Thomas, as well as 2 Purdoms. George (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Isabel (17th/18th C.) recorded in Wilton Parish in 1705. She confessed in front of the Session that she was having the child of Walter, son of John Scott of Cockersheugh. She stood ‘in the publick plais of repentance’, probably for several Sundays, and then had to pay 10 groats into the poor box. The father, Walter, was fined £4 Scots, but there is no record of him sitting on the stool of repentance. Isabel (18th/19th C.) one of the Waugh’s of Luggage Hall. The death of her unnamed child is recorded in Hawick in 1808, with the notation ‘a Bastard . . . Lugage’. Isabella (18th C.) jailed in Edinburgh along with 3 men, for their conduct in opposing the arrival of the new minister of Castleton Parish, Simon Haliburton, in 1751. James (16th C.) recorded as tenant of part of Mervinslaw in a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. His steadying was valued at 18s 9d. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘James Vauch’ in 1543 when he was one of the men who failed to appear to answer for helping Henry VIII’s men burn and sack Borthwickshiel and neighbouring areas. James (16th/17th C.) grandson of John of Heap. In 1635/6 he was served heir to his grandfather’s 5 merklands of ‘Eister Heip’ in the Barony of Wilton. The name of his father is not recorded, but this could have been Robert of Heap, who is recorded in 1615 and 1616. James (17th C.) ‘officiar’ named on a list of ‘idle and masterless men’, suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627. They were described as ‘fit-ter to be employed in his Majestis service nor to be suffered to ly lotttering at home’. However, when later produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. He presumably had worked as some kind of officer, perhaps a Burgh Officer. James (17th C.) resident of Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish. In 1640, along with James Allan, he was accused by the Kirk Session of ‘sowing cloathes about some of their sheep’. Presumably this was a discretion on the Sabbath. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, specifically the Hassendean Part. He is recorded ‘in hassendan’ in a baptismal record of 1688. He married Janet Waugh in 1683 and their children included: John (b.1683); Helen (b.1685); and Marion (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Thomas Lockie and Thomas Caldwell. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1757); Robert (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Jane (b.1765); Sarah (b.1768). The witnesses in 1757 were shoemaker John Scott (probably related to his wife) and butcher Thomas Waugh and in 1765 were the whole congregation. He was probably also father of shoemaker Thomas. He could be the James, son of John and Helen Riddell, born in Wilton in 1722. James (18th C.) listed along with Andrew as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792, when they were leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. James (18th/19th C.) stockmaking-maker who was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in 1810. James (19th C.) Curator of the Archaeological Society collection when located in the Buccleuch Memorial in the 1880s. John (15th C.) witness to an instrument of 1454 relating to the lands of Burrell in the barony of Eckford. Information was given by Alexander Henderson ‘in tenement of John Walche, elder, in town of Hawic’. ‘John Walch, younger’ was also a witness, as well as Robert Scott. They are all described as Burgesses, presumably of Hawick. Probably the same ‘Johanne Walch’ is listed as a witness to the sasine granting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452, where he is ‘Johanne Walch’. And he is probably the John who witnessed the charter of 1453 relating to the first known sasine within the burgh of Hawick. In 1455 he is one of 4 Burgesses listed on a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, and is listed as a Burgess in a related document in 1456. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johanni Walch in bone jedworth’ (i.e. Bonjedward) at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. John Wilkinson in Nether Ancrum had remission for a crime against him. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannes Walch’ at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He had remission for stealing a large number of sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope and also for associating with the former Duke of Albany. His surety was Peter, son of Sir Thomas Turnbull. It is possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘John Wach’ as a witness to a charter of David Scott of Hassendean in 1510/11. He was probably related to the later John, tenant of Clerklands. Perhaps the same ‘Johannem Walch’ was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean in 1482. He may be the same ‘Johanne Walche’ who was notary among the witnesses for the charter of Over Newhall in 1484. John (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Probably the same John was also holder of a particate of land on the north side. He may be a descendant of the earlier John in Hawick. John (16th C.) tenant in Castlehill in Jedforest in 1541. He jointly held the lands with Robert. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Wacht’in Clerklandis’ (i.e. near Lilliesleaf) when he was witness to a confirming charter of the lands of Harden in 1559. The name ‘Wacht’ could also be the modern ‘Veitch’ or other possibilities. John (16th C.) tenant in Auld Jedburgh. In 1567 he was listed among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. John of Heap (16th/17th C.) owner of the lands of Easter Heap. In 1635/6 his grandson James was served as heir to his 5 merklands of ‘Eister Heip’ in the Barony of Wilton. John (17th C.) tenant in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest, with his name recorded as ‘Wach’. He may have been descended from the much earlier Robert. John (17th C.) shepherd at Orchard according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed as tenant at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the earlier Waughs from Heap. John (17th C.) resident at Commonside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Slaidhills in 1701 when he is recorded giving money to the Parish after the burial of his son William. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1725. He married Helen Riddell in 1719 and their children included: James (b.1720); Robert (b.1722); Bessie (b.1725); William (b.1736); and Thomas (b.1738). The witnesses in 1725 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. John (18th/19th C.) slater in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1798. John (b.1814) son of Thomas and Sarah Beattie. Like his father, he was a farmer at Burnmouth, in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was recorded as cattle dealer at Under Burnmouth. His wife was Isabella and they had children Margaret, Sarah, George, Janet and Mary Jane. John (1824–1904/5) son of Robert and Elizabeth Hindmarsh, he was born in Southdean Parish. He succeeded his father as blacksmith at Chesters. He was there for about 20 years, and then became tenant farmer at Highend (in Rulewater) for 32 years, while his nephew Elliot Murray succeeded as blacksmith at Chesters. He married Euphemia Turnbull at Roughlea. They had 2 children, Mary (1860–77) and Robert (1861–92), both of whom died at Highend, along with their mother. He moved to Kirknowe where he died. John (b.1868) son of Andrew and Agnes Purdom. He was born at Wolfelee Glen and became a Rulewater masson. In 1893 he married Jane, 5th daughter of James Moore and Jane Thomson, at Blacklee Brae. Their children included Jane Thomson, who was born at Swanshiel. Margaret (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth
for the benefit of the poor of Hawick Parish in 1716. Margaret (b.c.1810) recorded as a mid-wife at about 12 High Street on the 1841 census. She lived there with Mary and Margaret, who are probably her daughters. Philip (15th C.) recorded as ‘Philippo Walch, perpetuo vicario de Sibbaldby’ in 1451, when he witnessed the charter exchaning Milsington with Heap. This was dated at Wilton Kirk. It is unclear where ‘Sibbaldby’ is. This is surely the same ‘domino Philiippo Walch capellano’, who witnessed a charter in the Barony of Wilton in 1454. Richard (b.1830) from Lessuden, son of James and Maregaret Mercer. He was also a descendant of the Weens family, who were shoemakers in Hawick.
He became a successful businessman in Winnipeg.
In 1904 he wrote a memoir of his early life, which contains some interesting anecdotes of the mid-19th century. Robert ‘de Hep’ (13th C.) entered in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. His seal showed a star enclosed by a serpent. This is probably Heap in Wilton. Adam ‘de Hep’ (his surname being effectively ‘Heap’ and so presumably not related) also signed, so they probably separately held the west and east parts of the lands of Heap. There were still Waughs associated with Heap about 400 years later. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Mervinslaw. In 1502 he had remission, along with several Olivers from Jedburgh and Rulewater, for the murder of Robert Brig and Adam ‘Barnisfader’ at ‘Kcleshop’. His surety was Ralph Ker of Primside Loch. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Castlehill in Jedforest in 1541. He jointly held the lands with John. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in a sasine of 1615 for the lands of Easter Heap, following a charter by George Langlands of that Ilk. He is probably also the ‘Robert Wauch of Hoip’ who was on the 1616 jury for the trial of Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler’, for sheep-stealing. He may have been son of John and father of James; certainly in 1635/6
James was served heir to the lands of his grandfather, John of Heap. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Grund-destone in 1759. He married Bessie Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1753) and Betty (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Knox and Robert Scott. Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick who is listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He must have been closely related to the contemporary tailor Thomas (or else this is an error in the name). He is probably the tailor and merchant Robert whose son Robert died in Hawick in 1815 and the tailor Robert whose daughter Mary died in Hawick in 1819. Robert (1774–1859) blacksmith at Chesters. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Hindmarsh at Newcastle-on-Tyne. He was blacksmith at Chesters for 45 years, being succeeded by his son John and then John’s nephew Eli-liot Murray. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1815), who married Adam Sinton; Catherine (b.1817), who married Thomas Robson, blacksmith at Teviothead; Helen (b.1819), who mar-rried Robert Murray, farm steward at Dimpleknowe; William (1822–81), vet in Hawick; John (1824–1904), who was blacksmith at Chesters and at Highend; Mary (b.1827), who married John Kedie, master blacksmith at Heatherlie, Selkirk; and Robert (1830–59), who helped his father as blacksmith. Robert (1783/4–1827) shepherd at Whitehaugh Mains. He is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Robert (b.1783/4) born in Ewes Parish, he was tollkeeper at the New Toll Bar in Ewesdale in 1851. He married Mary Irving and their children included William and Janet. Rev.
Robert minister of Denholm 1954–74, linked with Bedrule from 1963. Serg. ?? (18th/19th C.) recruiting sergeant for the Dumfries Militia.
In 1809 he loaned his sash for use by the ‘rebel’ Corney, John Tully. He also tried to take the coach to Selkirk to find musicians in Selkirk for the rebel party, but was pushed off the coach at Pathhead, the guard having been paid off by the ‘royalist’ party. Stephen (16th C.) tenant in Wadeshill in 1571/2 when he was listed among men of the Southdean area for whom William Oliver of Lustruther was pledge. Thomas (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with George, as well as 2 Purdons. His name is given as ‘Thomas Walgh’. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick merchant who was arrested in about 1678 for attending field conventicles. Margaret Barclay and William Turnbull were arrested at the same time. They were condemned to be sold as slaves to the plantations. Thomas (d.bef. 1716) merchant of Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for fellow-merchant Bailie George Martin. In 1716 his widow Margaret gave in a bond for £60 Scots (which she held with candlemaker George Turnbull) for the benefit of the poor of the Parish. He could be the Thomas who paid tax for 2 hearths on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Thomas (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. In 1711 he witnessed baptism for smith Thomas Huntly and for merchant Walter Scott. His wife was Bessie Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1716); James (b.1718); and an unnamed son (b.1721). Witnesses in 1716 were fleshers John Tudhope and John Wilson. Thomas (b.1711), Margaret (b.1713) and Thomas (b.1715), were probably also his children. Thomas of Hawkburn (1717/8–1804) writer in Jedburgh, also referred to as being ‘of Hagburn’. In 1767 he served as Proctor for the Duke of Buccleuch in the perambulation of Hawick Common, carried as out as part of the court case over the division of the Common. His lands in Jedburgh Parish are listed in the 1788 draft valuation of the county, including parcels of land in Hawickgate: he also owned Hawkburn and other lands in Melrose Parish. In 1790 and 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, his private description being ‘Rich. An only daughter married to CaptainOrmiston, Jedburgh. Attentive to interest. Will probably go with Sir Gilbert Elliot’. He paid tax on servants and horses in the 1770s to 1790s. Thomas (18th C.) butcher in Hawick. In 1740 he witnessed a baptism (along with fellow flesher William Renwick) for cooper William Richardson. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James, who was probably a close relative. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for wright Gideon Easton. He could be the Thomas, son of Thomas and Betty Clerk, born in Hawick in 1735. He may be the same Thomas who married Christian Henderson in 1773 and had a son William baptised in 1777. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tailor of Hawick. In 1762 he married Helen Ferguson from Wilton Parish; he was already deceased in 1805 when she died. Their children included: John (b.1763); Isabel (b.1765); Robert (b.1767); Thomas (b.1769); and Alexander (b.1770). Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. During the 1767 flood he and John Oliver ‘got to the top of the klin’, but then needed people to throw ropes to save them. He could be the Thomas whose son was one of 2 men carried off from the Auld Brig during the great flood of 1767. He may have been father of shoemaker James. Thomas (d.1811) shoemaker, son of James. His death is recorded in Hawick. He may have been grandson of the earlier Thomas. Thomas (b.1779/80) farmer at Burnmouth in the south part of Castleton Parish. He was listed at Burnmouth among heads of households in 1835–41. He married Sarah Beattie. In 1841 he was also living with Robert (probably his brother), and Janet (either daughter of niece). In 1851 he was farming 45 arable acres and 355 acres of moorland, with 5 labourers. His son John was also a farmer at Burnmouth. He could be the drover of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) weaver in Hawick. It is said that during the procession to the election in Jedburgh in 1831 he walked by the coach of the popular candidate, Sir William Francis Eliott, and whenever the crowd became quiet would shout ‘Rend the Heavens with another cheer’. Thomas (19th C.) son of a music teacher, who went door to door. He became a mason at Denholm. He married Jessie Tait in 1833. Their children were Rachel, William, Andrew and Martha. Thomas (b.1866) son of Andrew and Agnes Purdom, he was a mason in Rulewater. He married Agnes Goodfellow and their children included Emma (housemaid at Weens), Andrew (telephone boy and gardener at Weens), Robert, James and William. Tib (18th C.) local character of the early 1700s century. Walter ‘Wattie’ (16th C.) merchant mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He supplied ‘butter, saip, and vthir necessaries’ and hence was clearly a merchant, probably from Hawick, given the other people with whom he is listed. His name is given as ‘Wattie Waucht’. Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashybank. He married Janet Douglas in Wilton in 1734. Their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: George (b.1734); Isabel (b.1736); Helen (b.1739); and Janet (b.1740). He was surely related to George, who was at Ashybank at the same time. weavers ( wee-vurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades or guilds in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were a very old incorporation, preceding the Burgh Records (i.e. existing from before 1638). In early records they were referred to as ‘websters’. In the 1640 Burgh Act it is described how the incorporation would call meetings, with members fined for not attending, and how no weaver should take work from someone who had not paid another weaver for earlier work. They are referred to in 1643 when each of the ‘wobstaris’ was fined 12 shillings for breaking the rule of not reeling out yarn out of sight of the owner. In 1660 they fined someone for taking less money for weaving than the agreed rate. In 1684 they contributed money for the society’s weal’ [IWS], ‘...in doing what little he had done for the society’s weal’ [??], ‘...And breathe a prayer for Scotland’s weal, My country, and my Hame’ [JT] (there are spelling variants).
the Weaver’s Loft

the Weaver’s Loft (thu-wee-vurz-loft) n. former name for the balcony level in St. Mary’s Church, on the western side. It was probably first constructed in 1683, at the same time as the Bailies’ Loft. It was also reconstructed in the new church in 1763. In the former church building it had been called ‘the Merchant’s and Weaver’s Loft’ or ‘the Wobster’s Loft’. The Bailies regulated sitting in the loft in 1710. There were squabbles over precedence in the seating, one dispute between the hammermen and weavers being ruled on by the Session in 1715, with the senior official for the hammermen having the first seat, followed by the 2 quarter-masters of the weavers and then by the other 2 hammermen. There were further scuffles in the Kirk in 1716, with some men breaking down the door when it had been locked to keep them out. The gallery was also known as ‘the Wester Loft’ to distinguish it from ‘the Bailie’s Loft’. The right to these seats was given as a result of a special payment by the guild towards the expense of rebuilding the church in 1763. The front row of this gallery was reserved for use by the Magistrates until into the 20th century.

Weaver’s Moss (wee-vurz-mos) n. area between the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’ and the Ale Water, between Esdale Sike and Harehope Sike.

Weaver Will (wee-vur-wil) n. character mentioned in Arthur Balbirnie’s version of ‘Teribus’, from whose whisky flask the riders take a drink at Haggishaa. There is no reason to doubt that this was a real person of the late 18th century, but his full name is not known.

He was described as an assistant in the Parish School around 1860 and on the 1861 census was Burgh Schoolmaster and living on the Kirk Wynd. In 1862 he was described as mathematics teacher of the United Schools. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archaeological Society, being elected as first Vive-President. He also gave the very first lecture at the Society, on 27th September 1856, the subject being ‘The Study of Archaeology’. He stated ‘The man, who gives a proportion of his time to the study of the relics of years that are gone, will become a wiser and it may be reasonably concluded a better member of the community’. He was also a local poet, publishing ‘Here’s to Hawick’s Bonnie Lasses!’ and ‘To the Teviot’, amongst other things. He married Mary Henderson Thomson, from Leven in Fife. Their children were: David John (b.1854); Elizabeth (b.1855); Peter M.; George Lawson (1858–1919); Barbara Lawson (1860–61); James Hay (1862–1927); Henry Darling (1865–86); Isobella Thomson (b.1866); Mary Georgina (1868–1940); Helen Linton (b.1870); and John Jaffray (b.1872). In the 1860s he left Hawick to become Parochial Schoolmaster in Dunbar and died at West Barns, Dunbar – ‘. . . Auld Dodds, his buirdly form I mind, And Webster’s smiling face’ [WL]. George (b.1824/5) from Brechin, he was a draper in Hawick. In 1851 he is listed as a journeyman draper, living with James R. Laing and his family at about 2 Howe gate. The draper’s firm of Laing & Webster is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. It appears that the business expended and he moved to Australia. Later they split and George Webster & Co. failed in 1896. John (d.c.1784) said to have been buried at the Dimples ‘where three lairds’ lands meet’, because he was a suicide. He could be the John who married Betty Ruecastle in Hawick in 1770 and had a daughter Elizabeth (b.1770).

wecht (wecht) n., arch. weight – ‘The wecht gars the string hing strecht’ [??], ‘Item, that ilk merchand that buys cuntrie gier with trone wecht, sall sell it agin in small with the lyik wecht . . . ’ [BR1640], ‘George Scott was fined £10 for keeping false weights, viz. ‘Flemes wecht for French wecht’’ [JW1651], ‘She’s borne the awfu’ wecht o’ baith pestilence an’ sword’ [JEDM], ‘We’ve smoored it wi’ a wecht o’ fun And hidden it frae sight’ [WL], v., arch. to weight – ‘. . . the Wee Green (thu-nee-green) n. the Little Green in Denholm, as distinct from the main or ‘Big Green’, being off the road towards Minto. This is part of the land managed by the Feuars. An auction mart took place here until the early 20th century, and then there was a market garden until the mid-1960s, when it was grassed over and the surrounding wall removed.

the Wee Haugh (thu-nee-hawf, -hawch) n. the Little Haugh, a triangle of land bordered by Teviot Crescent and the river, with many uses over the years: once the traditional burial-ground for horses; a public drying green; an impromptu sports ground for many generations of children; and now planted with shrubbery. It was the detached part of the Common lying on the east side of the Teviot, the area stretching from Ewen's Court to 'The Rock' on old maps. In 1767 it was described as 'a little Haugh on the south side of the Teviot, bounded by William Kerr and Bailie Turnbull's garden dykes'. The area was rented soon after the Division of the Common, but later came back to public use. Since at least the beginning of the 20th century a footpath has crossed the area from the bottom of Baker Street to the end of the riverside path leading to Laidlaw Terrace. At the end of the 20th century it was redeveloped, with the public toilets being removed and a playground located there – 'To the Little Haugh fu' sorry, While the horses neigh 'Memento Mori' [AB] (also known as the 'Esther Common Haugh' or 'Lower Haugh', and sometimes included in the 'Under Haugh', which was across the river).

Note that the first 2 recorded residents of Hawick, Sregifa and Rosfritha, were women, ‘dua mulieres de villa Hawick dicta ipsius proventiae Teviétdale’ according to Reginald of Durham (also spelled ‘weemin’ and sometimes ‘weemeen’; the singular is wumman).

the Weemen’s League (thu-wee-minz-leeg) n. the Women’s League of Health and Beauty, founded in London in 1930 by Mollie Bigot Stack. There was an active Hawick branch in the mid-20th century, running exercise classes in the Crown Hotel.

Weens (weenz) n. estate just north of Bonchester, containing a mansion house that was converted to a nursing home. The estate was once part of the Barony of Feu-Rule and formerly an important part of Hobkirk Parish, being recorded before the Reformation. The lands were owned by the family of Weens of that Ilk in the 15th century and Alexander ‘Wyndis’ of that Ilk was recorded in 1502. George Turnbull ‘in le wyndis’ was also recorded in 1502. The town was burned by the Armstrungs in 1544. There were Turnbull Lairds there from at least the early 16th century and it was sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott (brother of Walter in Allamouth) in 1606. In 1643 it was part of the lands in Hobkirk Parish owned by Lord Balmerino. Andrew Scott was there in about 1663 and John Scott in 1678, when it was valued at £200. John Scott was there in 1694, when he paid tax for having 3 hearths. James Oliver was tenant in 1738. The Scotts held the estate until 1744 when John Scott sold it to John Armstrong in Brieryhill. His executors sold it to Adam Cleghorn in 1760, and it passed quickly to David Cleghorn, William Sharp and then William Oliver of Dlnalbyre, who built the current house about 1775 (the wood used being the finest Baltic timber, carried by wagon from Berwick). In 1793 Oliver sold it to Robert Nutter Campbell of Kailzie, then it was sold to Adm. Thomas Pringle in 1796 and in 1804 the estate was bought by Thomas Cleghorn, who quickly added Town-o-Rule and Hallrule Mill; his descendants renovated the house in the mid-19th and early-20th centuries. In 1788 (and still in 1811) the farm was valued at £200. In the mid-19th century the estate consisted of Nether Bonchester, Weensmoor, Town-o-Rule, and Hallrule and covered about 800 acres. A red sandstone doorway from the old house has been set into a wall of the kitchen garden, where there is also an old sundial. It was also said that an old baptismal font stone in the garden here was from Hob Kirk Kirk – ‘Most justly, too, they earn his praises, Those loftier hills and glorious scenes; Yet more I love the humble daisies That grow around my home at Weens’ [FMC] (the mansion is also referred to as ‘Weens Hoose’; formerly spelled ‘Weinds’ and at Weens’ [FMC] (the mansion is also referred to as ‘Weens Hoose’; formerly spelled ‘Weinds’ and `Weems’ in 1653, ‘the Weyns’ in 1654, ‘weimes’ in 1562, ‘Weynds’ in 1606, ‘Wayns’ in 1652, ‘Wen-`Wyndis’ in 1502, ‘Weynis’ and ‘Weinnis’ in variants; sometimes also formerly ‘the Weens’; it as ‘Weens Hoose’; formerly spelled ‘Weinds’ and at Weens’ [FMC] (the mansion is also referred to as ‘Weens Hoose’; formerly spelled ‘Weinds’ and

| (weenz) n. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1437 as ‘Alexander of the Wyndys’, when he resigned his lands of Weens into the hands of the superior, Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. This was probably the lands later known as Weensland. His ‘procurators’ were James of ‘Paiblis’ of that Ilk and George of ‘Pringil’. Alexander of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Wyndys’ in 1502 when he was convicted of the ‘forethought felony’ done to ‘Philip Faula’ on St. Mary’s Day while he was riding to Branxholme, with Robert Scott being fined for non-appearance. It is unclear precisely what the crime was. Also in 1502 he was fined for failing to enter John ‘ruffy’ at the Justice-aire, this man charged with murdering 2 Jacksons; his surety was the Sheriff of Roxburgh. He was probably owner of the estate of Weens in the Rule valley and descendant of the earlier Alexander of Weens. Alexander (17th/18th C.) listed ‘eist the wa-ter’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He could be the ‘Sanders Weins’ recorded in 1676 among several Hawick people found guilty of using insufficient weights; specifically he was gound to have a ‘half-pecke about half ane inch short’. Alexander (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. He married Janet Douglas and their children included: James (b.1709); William (b.1711); Walter (b.1713); Bessie (b.1715); Alexander (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); William (b.1721); and John (b.1723). The witnesses in 1709 were weaver David Miller and shoemaker Robert Elliot, in 1711 were merchant William Oliver and Bailie Robert Brown, in 1713 were carriers James Richardson and James Aitken, and in 1721 were cooper John Aitken and ‘tenent’ James Richardson. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Alexander (b.1759). He may be the Alexander whose daughter Isabel died in Hawick in 1781. Alexander (d.1794) tailor from Hull whose death is recorded in Hawick. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1786–1868) cobbler who was son of Tam and younger brother of Jock, with shop on the Kirkstile. They are listed at ‘Silver Street Head’ on the 1841 census – ‘Auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’s there, Biddy the Hawker’s sellin’ preens; Wat Inglis is at his tricks yince mair, And there’s bairn Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI]. Ebenezer ‘Eben’ (b.c.1790) woollen spinner, living at the Maltsteep in Wilton. He was part of the party of Hawick men who took part in the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815, perhaps being the man who scored the first ‘hail’. As the band came back to Hawick he triumphantly carried the Yarrow banner, which had been stolen from the field. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was recorded at Malt Steep among heads of households in 1835 and 1840. He married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1819 and their children included: Mary (b.1824); David Stevenson (b.1826), who married Ganes Duncan; Jane (b.1830); Esther (b.1833); and Alexander (b.1833). In 1851 his wife was a widow living on the Cross Wynd. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) from Hawick, she was sister of shoemaker ‘Tam’. In about the 1750s she was hired as a girl on a farm in Liddesdale, her wages being half-a-crown, a pair of clogs, and all the wool she could gather off bushes. When she died she left her niece 40 gold sovereigns. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) wife of Robert Crawford. She was found guilty of stealing a shirt in 1792, but absolved of blame later. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Baptie and their children included Alexander (b.1795). James (17th/18th C.) Hawick merchant. He is listed among those who subscribed to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is also probably the James ‘weins’ listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. In 1699 he was fined for selling oatmeal at higher than the set price. He witnessed a baptism for tailor James Cowan in 1705. He is recorded in 1706 regarding his appointment the previous year to collect some of the ‘stent’ imposed on the Burgess to pay for putting lead on the steeple of St. Mary’s. He could have been the James born to Alexander and Elspeth ‘Corsall’ in Hawick in 1648. He could be the James, married to Janet Aitkin, whose daughter Janet was born in 1687. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Mary Hart and their children included: John (b.1720); and Walter (b.1725). James (18th C.) tenant in Weens. His son John was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738. Other children baptised there who may be his include Marion (b.1732), Margaret (b.1735), Samuel (b.1749) and Janet (b.1751). James (18th C.) married Isabel Beattie in 1776. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Davidson and their children included James (b.1811). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Scott and their children included: James (b.1721); Alexander (b.1733); Thomas (b.1735); Mary (b.1737); and Janet (b.1741). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Napier and their children included Janet (b.1759). John (d.bef. 1801) weaver from Hawick. His son James died in 1801. He could also be the John whose son Walter died in 1809; this child was also recorded as grandchild to ‘John Scott mill’ (possibly miller), suggesting that he married a Scott. John (d.1835) shoemaker in Hawick, whose death is recorded in the Parish Records. He was surely related to ‘Jock’ and ‘Sandy’, perhaps their uncle. John ‘Jock’ (1784–1866) elder brother of Sandy and son of Tam, the family were cobblers who lived at the head of Silver Street, with a shop on the Kirkstile. They were known for their outspokenness and resistance to change, and their motto was ‘ready money for cobblin’. He is recorded as ‘John Wemyss’ in Silver Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1841 census he is listed with his brother Alexander, as well as Margaret, who was probably his daughter. He appears to have been married to Mary Fachney and their children included: Alexander (b.1810) and Margaret (b.1813). Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures. She was specifically found to have a peck that was ‘ane double gill short of the ordinar gadg of the town’. Perhaps the same Margaret was the resident of Hawick ‘eist the water’, who paid the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. She was probably an innkeeper or shopkeeper of some sort. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), with his name recorded as ‘Wemyss’. He could be the son of Thomas born in 1761. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Clerk and their children included Elizabeth (b.1739). Thomas ‘Tam’ (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick, sister of Betty. He married Margaret Aitkin in 1759 and their children included: Thomas (b.1760), probably the father of shoemakers Jock and Sandy; Robert (b.1761); Walter (b.1765); William (b.1768); and Jane (b.1770). The witnesses in 1765 were shoemakers William and Andrew Scott. It is said (by Richard Waugh, a later relative) that he had 6 sons, all of whom fought at Waterloo, with only 1 surviving (however, this seems a little late, and so may be confusion with other family members). His wife’s ‘muckle press’ was carried away from their house by the great flood of 1767, and he found it 15 miles down the Teviot, with the clothing inside hardly damaged. He was probably the Thomas born in Hawick in 1735, son of John and Janet Scott. Thomas ‘Tam’ (18th/19th C.) father of Jock and Sandy, also a shoemaker. Like his sons he was known for his cantankerous nature. He was apparently the first Hawick resident to possess a pound note, and was visited by many curious Terries at the time. He was probably the Thomas born in Hawick in 1760, son of Thomas and Margaret Aitkin. He married Janet Scott in 1781, with children including John (b.1784), Alexander (b.1786), Margaret (b.1788), Margaret (again, b.1789), Henry (b.1791) and Janet (b.1793). The witnesses in 1793 were Bailie Andrew Scott and John Hardie. Thomas (b.1787/8) woollen factory foreman. In 1841 he was living at Dovmount and on Wilton Place in 1851. His wife was Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Isabella; Alexander (b.1813); Mary (b.1819); and John (b.1821). He could be the ‘Thomas Wemyss, spinner’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825.
Weens Cottages
(17th C.) merchant in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for mason Peter Mitchell. He married Bessie Lunn and their children included: Alexander (b.1704); Walter (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were William Brunfield and Henry Orrock. He could be the Walter whose daughter Elspeth married Robert Wilson in 1718. Walter (d.1809) son of John. The record of his death states that he was ‘Called Ballea Weens’, suggesting that he may have been a Bailie. He may be the Walter who married Margaret Knox in Hawick in 1791. However, he is probably the ‘Bailie Weens’ whose wife Betty Ballantyne died in 1795. He could be the Walter ‘Weens’ who witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas Ballantyne in 1768.

William (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax (see also Wemyss, with which it was interchangeable in early documents; also written ‘Weyndis’, ‘Weems’, ‘Weims’, ‘Wiems’, ‘Wymes’, etc.).

the Weenses (thu-ween-zeez) n. well-known Hawick shoe-making family of the 18th and 19th centuries, attending local fairs and markets throughout the Borders. Jock and Sandy were probably the last of this cobbbling line (also called ‘Weenses’).

Weensforth (weenz-forth) n. purported tweed factory in Hawick, the name being used by conman John Graham Henderson in the late 19th century.

Weensgate (weenz-gä’-) n. electoral ward in the town, being approximately the combination of Weensland and Wellogate districts.

Weensgate Drive (weenz-gä’-driv) n. housing development built in 1964 off Weensland Road and named because of its proximity to Weensland and the Wellogate, and from being in the Weensgate Ward.

Weens Hoose (weenz-hooz) n. mansion house just north of Bonchester, now used as a nursing home. It was built about 1775 for William Oliver of Dinlabyre, in red sandstone with 18th century wrought-iron gates. The previous house, dating from perhaps the early 17th century, was demolished in 1774, although some parts were built into the new one; it stood about a hundred yards to the east, with a former doorway later being used as a garden entrance. The new house can be seen shortly after it was built in a sketch of 1804. It was the home of George Cleghorn in the mid-19th century and was substantially renovated in the early years of the 20th century by George Tancred. A plaque was unveiled there in memory of George Tancred in 1981. The Cornet’s party traditionally visit the nursing home during the Bonchester Ride-out. It has been suggested that the location of the original peel house was one of 2 circular earthworks near the old main drive to the current house, but there is no evidence for this; Tancred suggests it was ‘on the top of the bank above the garden walk not far from old Weens loaming’ and that foundation stones had been dug up there occasionally.

Weensland (weenz-lind) n. area around Weensland Road on the flat land south of the Teviot in the eastern part of town. ‘Weens’ is probably a corruption of ‘Wyndis’, who may have been an early the owner of the land (like Weens in Rulewater, perhaps even being related to the same family). The lands probably once covered an extensive area; in a 1718 survey of the lands belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch it appears to extend down the east side of the Burgh boundaries. In 1437 Alexander ‘de le Weyndis’ resigned the lands of ‘Weyndis’ (in the Barony of Hawick) into the hands of the Baron, Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands were among those lands held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, when confirmed to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511 and when inherited along with the Barony by James Douglas in 1572. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. In 1627 it is described as consisting of 3 husbandlands, yielding 12 bolls in stock and 3 in teind. William Scott of Horsleyhill was granted part of the land in 1653 by James, Earl of Queensberry, described as a ‘four merk land’; it remained in that family until about 1772. Some of it may be the land of ‘weemes’ valued at about £133 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (among the Earl of Queensberry’s rents). Robert Scott of Horsleyhill was owner in 1678, when ‘Weimesland’ was valued at £264. George Armstrong was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. In the early 18th century, the tenants of the lands there paid the Hawick Town Herd to have their sheep under his care, along with the Town’s animals. Another place of the same name near Harden (in the lower Borthwick valley), sometimes with the prefix ‘Wester’ is mentioned in the 16th and 17th centuries, suggesting this was once owned by the same family. James Henderson was tenant.

there in 1709. The Douglases of Cavers owned the superiority of part of it in the later 18th and early 19th centuries. By 1788 parts of the lands were held by John Hardie (valued at £36 5s 8d), Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick (valued at £35 18s 7d), James Dickson of Orchard (valued at £47 8s 4d, previously owned by William Irvine and valued at £41, previously owned by Adam Ormiston), Archibald Dickson (valued at £38 5s 6d), William Irvine (valued at £18 1s 8d), and George Douglas of Cavers (the part called Haughhead, valued at £27 6s 8d). In 1811 the parts were listed being the same, but Robert Scott had purchased the parts from William Irvine and Adam Ormiston (valued at £64 8s 10d) and Andrew Porteous purchased part from Robert Scott (valued at £23 19s 6d). The name was later specifically applied to some of the first houses built there, also known as ‘Weensland Cottages’. It grew as a residential area as a result of the growth of mills alongside the Teviot, and until the early 20th century was an isolated village and mill. The rows of houses there were called Weensland Place, Heronhill Terrace, Teviot Row and Weensland Terrace, almost all of which have been demolished and the street names lost. Oliver Park in the Weensland area, was the first council housing development in town in 1922. When the old Trinity School was demolished in 1955 more council houses were built on the site, and there was further housing built at the far end in the 1980s. The road through the area, skirting the south bank of the Teviot, has been the main route from Hawick to Denholm and Jedburgh since time immemorial. But the connection to the Carter Bar, via Haughhead, Deanbrae, Kirkton and Bonchester was only laid out around the 1830s. A bronze socketed spearhead found in the river here is in the Museum (the first record of the name is as ‘terras meas de le Weyndis’ in 1437, then ‘Weyndis Landis’ in 1511; it is ‘Weyndislandis’ in 1572, ‘Weyndislandis’ in 1615, ‘Weyndislands’ in 1627, ‘Weynestlands’ in 1654/5, ‘weimes land’ in 1678, ‘weinsland’ in 1694 and ‘Wienzland’ in 1764).

Weensland (weenz-lind) n. former name for an area in the Teviot or Borthwick valleys, perhaps near Harden and Whames. Its is listed in 1594 as ‘Weyndislands’ among lands to the south and west of Hawick for which the Baron of Hawick was superior. There are several writs for 1654–55 in the Buccleuch papers for ‘Weynse-lands called Wester Weyndis, and Quhalmes, in barony of Hawick, regality of Drumlanrig, sheriffdom of Roxburgh’. The 1686 ratification of the Barony to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch lists ‘the lands of Windlands, commonly called Wester Winds’, which were occupied by Robert Grieve in Commonside. There is also in 1686 a privilege listed of ‘free chappell and chancellary within the bounds of the said lands of Windslands and Whalmes for the Baron, perhaps suggesting a connection with the former chapel at Chapelhill. Presumably there is a connection, at least through former ownership, with the Weensland within Hawick (see also Wester Winds).

Weensland Cauld (weenz-lind-kawld) n. weir near Weensland Mill, first dammed around 1839 to supply water through the mill lade to drive the mill machinery – ‘As they came up by Weensland Cauld, And through by the Sker Pool, They were met by lots o’bairns, Sir, As they came frae the school’ [JCG].

Weensland Cottages (weenz-lind-ko’-ee-jeez) n. housing built around 1836, also known just as ‘Weensland’ at the time, and renamed Weensland Place in 1875, only to be demolished about 1960. It may also have been referred to as ‘Weensland Village’ in the 1861 census. It is marked ‘Weensland Cottage’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Weensland Haugh (weenz-lind-hawch) n. former name for the flat land near the Teviot in Weensland. There is a plan of the area in 1825 in the Douglass of Cavers papers.

Weensland Mill (weenz-lind-mil) n. in the 18th and early 19th centuries this was the name of a corn mill in the Weensland area, between the main road and the river. James Scott was there in 1729. It was still active when John Shiel was listed as miller in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. The name was later used for 2 woollen mills, built in the same area by Walter Wilson & Sons, beginning in 1835. The Corn Mill was purchased from Douglas of Cavers at this time, jointly by William Wilson & Sons and John Oliver & Sons (who quickly got out of woollen manufacturing). The erection of the new Weensland Mill led to the construction of a much more substantial mill lade a few years later, and a hamlet of workers’ cottages developing nearby. The original equipment consisted of ‘four sets of Carding Engines, 60 inch Scribblers, and 42 inch Carders with placing machines attached’. Fire destroyed much of the mill in 1852, but it was rebuilt by 1858. The mill had a 20 foot diameter water wheel, made by Melrose’s. In the late 19th century it was the name given to the premises of Wilson & Armstrong’s, before 1876, when they reconstituted as Wilson & Glenny’s. Wilson & Armstrong’s made tweed and blankets there. It later housed several companies, including the Weensland Spinning Co., and Sime & Williamson. By 1888 there were 3 separate tweed companies operating in Weensland, George McLeod & Son (which only lasted a year), Scoon & Barrie and the Weensland Spinning Company, and the name ‘Weensland Mill’ or ‘Weensland Mills’ was applied to all of them. The name also came to include the adjacent ‘Athenic Mills’. The oldest part of the structure was 4 storeys high and built of whinstone, and the mill was partly destroyed in a fire in 1999. The structure had a mixture of mainly 19th century styles, including an unusual cupola with open colonnade and ogee roof. It was acquired by the Scottish Development Agency, partly demolised and developed since 1991. The main surviving part was once a spinning mill, but converted more recently into the offices and store for the Weensland Spinning Company, and now a function suite. It is 2 storeys high with a loft space, having 8 bays and a rectangular plan, built in the mid-19th century. The building is listed as category C. (also sometimes ‘Weensland Mills’; it is ‘Weensland milne’ in 1717).

n. houses built in 1939 off Weensland Road.

Weensland Place (weenz-lind-plis)

n. original name for Weensland Terrace and new name for Weensland Cottages in 1875, but the houses were demolished about 1960 and the street name lost.

Weensland Road (weenz-lind-rôd)

n. main road leading out of town to the north-east, named because it was the road to Wyndis or Weens land. The old Trinity School was demolished and new houses built in 1955, when the whole street was renumbered and Eskdaill Bank incorporated into Weensland Road.

n. a lost street, built in 1866, renamed Heronhill Terrace and demolished in 1966.

Weensland Slated Hoose (weenz-lind-slâ’-eed-hoos)

n. former name for a house in Weensland, possibly the same as Ivybank. It was used as an address on the 1841 census.

Weensland Spinnin Company (weenz-lind-spi-nin-cum-pi-nee)

n. tweed manufacturers based at Weensland Mills from the late 19th century and finally closing in the 1990s. Most of the structure was badly damaged in a fire in 1999. The surviving part was converted into a function suite, containing the restaurant Spinners.

Weensland Terrace (weenz-lind-te-ris)

n. housing built in 1864, originally named Weensland Place, then for a time Alexander Terrace, becoming Weensland Terrace in 1885. The tenement block at the western end was demolished in 1978.

Weensmoor (weenz-moor)

n. farm in Hobkirk Parish, on the side road between Hawthornside and Town-o-Rule. It is also known as ‘Weensmuir’. In 1745 one of the cottages was occupied by the Sclater family, and it is said that the Highlanders stopped at the farm on their march to England, when only the children were at home. The Barry family were also there in 1748. Thomas Oliver was there in 1774 and weaver George Craw in 1776. James Laidlaw lived there from at least 1780. The old, thatched, clay built cottage there was torn down in the late 19th century and the foundations showed that there had previously been 2 houses there. The separate farm steading was renovated in 1841 and still survives. A spring there flows into the cleuch on Toon-o-Rule farm to join the Rule Water. Robert Dickson was farmer there in the 1860s and Robert Turnbull in the early 1900s (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Weens Place (weenz-plis)

n. short street in Bonchester.

Weens Sike (weenz-sik)

n. small stream running in an easterly direction to join the Teviot between Commonside and Colterscleuch. It gave its name to the lands of Wester Weens, which were attached to the farm of Commonside.

Weenswud (weenz-wud)

n. former name for a wood near Weens in the Rule valley. It is recorded as ‘the Weyniswode’ in 1562 in the document regarding the Baronial dispute over lands in Feur Rule (i.e. Hobkirk Parish).

n., pl., arch. bands of fabric worn on the sleeves as a mark of mourning. Locally such bands of light linen fabric were stiched on the sleeves of male relatives and worn for 2 or 3 weeks – ‘Male relatives wore ‘weepers’, a narrow band of lawn stitched on the cuffs of the coat’ [V&M].

weer (weer)

v. to wear – ‘what on earth er ee weerin the day?’ [IWL], ‘if the shoe fits, weer eet’, ‘ee’e no gaun oot weerin that, ir ee?’ [MB], ‘… and that’s because hei was juist a boy and hei’s depicted weerin his fither’s breast-plate …’ [IWL], ‘… The wud hei weers like a croon’ [DH], ‘… For A weer Nick Faldo jerseys Frae the Pringle factory’ [IWL], ‘Hard-weepin worset theirds for waipr …’ [WL], ‘… Tae weer the Cornet’s livery’ [MB] (sometimes spelled ‘weir’; as well as the usual English forms, the past tense can be writ and the past participle wurn).

weer (weer) v., poet. to proceed slowly, walk quietly – ‘The mither tongue grows dearer now, When wearin’ doon the brae; The aged heart the closer clings To youth’s unclouded day’ [JT] (also spelled ‘wear’).

the Wee Thea (thu-wee-thee) n. the Hawick Picture Theatre, also known as ‘the Theatre’, a picture-house in Croft Road, redesigned from the Temperance Hall, and showing films from the early 1900s. J.P. Alison was responsible for designs for renovations in 1901. Adam Grant was the managing director in the early days. It was renamed the ‘New Theatre Picture Palace’ in 1913, when there is an existing picture (with another of 1914 showing the audience). Mrs. Pankhurst, the suffragette, spoke here in 1913. The interior had 3 levels, the stalls, dress circle and gallery, or ‘the Gods’, with plush red seats and plaster gilt crowns around the front of the gallery. It was destroyed by fire in 1955, and the site rebuilt in 1961/2 as the Salvation Army Citadel.

weetit (wee-et, -i) pp., arch. wet, wetted (alternative past tense and past participle form to wat).

wee winkies (wee-wing-kees) n., pl., arch. popular name for the gas lamps introduced to Hawick streets in 1813. They used train oil and were lit nightly in the winter months. They were replaced by gas lamps about 1833.

Mr Weir’s death’. James Wilson suggests that he died in 1762. His wife was Christian Watson. Their children included: Anne (b.1738), who may have married John Gledstains; Thomas (b.1739); Mary (b.1741); John (b.1743); Thomas (b.1745); James (b.1747); Thomas (b.1756); and John (b.1757). The 1738 baptism was witnessed by William Ogilvie of Hosocate and Bailie John Scott, the 1743 one by Bailie Gideon Ruecastle and ex-Bailie Robert Boyd, the 1745 one by ex-Bailies John Scott and Gideon Ruecastle and the 1757 one by Bailies John Scott and Charles Tudhope. James, junior (d.c.1770) Town Clerk for a very brief time, perhaps as short as 1 month or as long as 1768–70. He took over after John Gledstains (probably his brother-in-law) refused to take the oaths of Government. He was presumably son of the previous Town Clerk. James Wilson says that he was elected as Town Clerk in October 1768 and died a month later. In April of that year he was witness to a baptism for writer John Gledstains. John (18th C.) recorded being in Ashkirk Parish in 1794 when his marriage to Isabel Henderson was announced in Melrose Parish, with James Ballantyne as cautioner. Rev. Samuel minister of Robertson Kirk 1960–65. Walter (19th/20th C.) employee of Innes, Henderson & Co., he served as Clerk of the Deacon’s Court at St. George’s Kirk around the 1920s. Rev. William (d.1651) nephew of John, an indweller in Edinburgh, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1606. He was presented to Southdean in late 1609 and ordained there in early 1610. He was translated to Hobkirk in 1626. In 1630 he had a sasine of the lands of Appotside and Tythehouse, granted by Francis Hamilton, his brother-in-law, as well as gift of ‘non-entry’ of the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. In 1630 he was also involved in a ‘wadset’ for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside by Edward Lorraine, the lands being resigned by Lorraine the following year, but used in another ‘wadset’ with Gilbert Elliott in 1632. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. His children included James (who witnessed local documents in 1648 and 1649 and may have been the Schoolmaster), Margaret (who married Thomas Wilson from Dryburgh) and William (who became minister at Linlithgow). James (the eldest son) and William (the 2nd son) were both mentioned in a discharge of 1657 relating to repayment of money spent repairing the Manse at Hobkirk. He was buried in the west corner of the churchyard, where a flat stone bore the inscription ‘I HAVE FIN(ISH)ED MY

Weisz (wës) n. Otto (d.1994) Pringle’s designer, credited with creating the cashmere ‘twin-set’ around the 1940s, popularised by actresses such as Jean Simmons, Deborah Kerr, Heddy Lemarr and Dorothy Lamour. The idea to name the product the ‘twin-set’ is meant to have occurred to him after seeing a woman pushing twins in a pram on Ha

Hawick High Street! His designs were partly responsible for Hawick knitwear’s post-war success. In Hawick, he rode at the Common Riding. He was a Jewish refugee from Austria, being apprenticed to Bernhard Altmann of Vienna. Originally an artist, he was appointed by Pringle’s in 1934 (on his 3rd attempt to get hired), becoming a Director in 1937, Assistant Managing Director in 1952 and Joint Managing Director in 1964. He fi-

Building & Investment Co., Ltd. in the latter half of the 19th century. A number of the streets in the Terraces had different names for the upper and lower houses (as well as for each side if the street) until rationalisation of the names by the Council in 1882. The ‘Well o’ Gate’ spring was marked by a monument in 1985. A stone ball found in the area is in the Museum. The name is also used more specifically to refer to Wellogate Brae – ‘In wellogate the Eastern Gate...’ [NM], ‘...sioned I found mysel alone In Wellogate, Where deid folk mony a year lae lain – Cauld, calm, sedate’ [WP] (the name occurs in many forms, including ‘Walliegate’, ‘Woollee gate’ and ‘Wellygate’ in the 18th century, and ‘Wooliegate’, ‘Wallygate’ and ‘Well o’ Gate’ in the 19th; it is ‘Woolie Gate’ on Wood’s 1824 map; it is likely to have derived from ‘Woollee Gate’, i.e. the way to Wolfelee, with some later influence on the name from the wells or springs there).

the Well o Gate (thu-we-lo-ga’) n. name for the spring at the top of Wellogate Brae, which was used as a water supply in the latter half of the 19th century. There was a drain on the right hand side of the road above the cemetery entrance, which is marked by a restored well and plaque (carved by R.E. Scott in 1985). The spring was on John Kedzie’s land. The supply was piped to the Cross Well, the Council resolution for this being in 1755. It was also piped later to Allars Church, as well as supplying a watering trough used by horses and cattle entering the town (it is ‘Wellygate’ in 1755).

Wellogate Bank (we-lo-ga’-bawngk) n. house on Wellogate Brae, roughly opposite the cemetery gates.

Wellogate Brae (we-lo-ga’-braw) n. main road leading out to the east of Hawick, being the continuation of the Cross Wynd and Allars Bank. It was officially named in 1934, with council houses built on the right hand side at the top, along with Fisher Avenue.

the Wellogate Brig (thu-we-lo-ga’-brig) n. name sometimes used for the road bridge over the railway line at the top of Allars Bank.

Wellogate Geemetry (we-lo-ga’-see-mi’-ree) n. one of Hawick’s two main cemeteries, lying between the old railway line and Fisher Avenue in the Wellogate district. 7½ acres of land on the Common was sold to the heritors of Hawick Parish in order to be exchanged with land for the new cemetery. It was opened in 1849, as an overflow for St. Mary’s Churchyard, and almost immediately had to cope with the 1849 cholera epidemic, with most of the victims buried in the vacant middle area. The Heritor’s area, containing the final resting place of many of Hawick’s worthies, was opened in July 1849 and its control transferred to the Parish Council in 1903. The entrance to this area was formerly higher up than the present main gate. The cemetery has expanded several times since then. A staircase also connects with the former railway. There is a shelter within the grounds, designed by J.P. Alison. It was for a while known as ‘Hawick Cemetery’ to distinguish it from Wilton Cemetery – ‘Then one day as gloamin descends on my valley, As dark shadows lengthen and evening comes still, I will be ready to take my last journey, To lie wi oor fithers on Wellogate’s hill’ [IWL].

Wellogate Place (we-lo-ga’-plis) n. street in the Wellogate, built in 1875 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company. The lower houses were originally called Douglas Terrace until 1882.

Wellogate Villa (we-lo-ga’-vi-la) n. house on Wellogate Brae, built in the mid-19th century by Galashiels builders David and Peter Dalgleish for their brother-in-law Alexander Turnbull.

the Wellogate Well (thu-we-lo-ga’-wel) n. another name for the Well o Gate.

Well Plantin (wel-plawn’-in) n. plantation in Hobkirk Parish, lying just to the west of Braidhaugh.

wells (welz) n., pl. in Hawick there used to be public wells situated at several points down the Loan and Howegate and along the High Street, and elsewhere in the area, as well as many private supplies. They were the traditional gossiping place in town, with women gathering in line with their pitchers. The important thing to understand is that a ‘well’ (or ‘wall’) was typically a stand-pipe and trough, and not the traditional draw-well (like the new fake one in the Park) which is the more modern meaning of the word. Water would be fed to the wells through pipes from sources such as the Smaile Burn, the ‘Wellogate’ and other natural springs. In 1731 the Council paid for 3 loads of clay for ‘the well’ and in 1737 the well in the High Street was directed to be rebuilt. In 1783 the Council resolved to provide 2 street wells using piped spring water, these being the Cross Well and the Pant Well (and masons William Philp & Co. were paid for the work). In 1786 the Council paid for white paint ‘for wester fountain-head’, suggesting that these public wells were painted. In 1797 the Schidder Springs were piped into Hawick, providing 6 additional public wells. However, there were also smaller, local or private wells (often named after a nearby inhabitant), and several more which were opened up through the 19th century. These open wells were largely responsible for outbreaks of cholera and other diseases, and the decline in their use came with the opening of the Allan Water supply in 1865.

Wells (welz) n. estate near Bedrule, formerly owned by the Douglases of Cavers, the Rutherfords and the Cavers-Carre families. In some of the earliest documents it was known as ‘Wollis’. The area was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. The superiority appears to have passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. The first Rutherford of Wells was James of that Ilk, who held it from at least 1492 (when it was described as a 5-pound land and granted by Douglas of Cavers). Robert Turnbull was recorded as tenant there in 1493. John Turnbull and Adam Turnbull were recorded there in 1502. ‘Non-entry’ of the lands is recorded in 1508. It passed to James’ grandson Richard, then to Richard’s sister Helen. About this time it was separated from the Barony of Cavers, with the Crown being the direct superior thereafter; an extract charter of 1511 confirms how James Douglas of Cavers resigned the superiority into the hands of the King, to be given to Helen Rutherford and her husband John Forman. Since Helen had no children, the lands passed to James Stewart of Traquair (the husband of Katherine, sister of Richard and Helen). In 1524/5 the Laird (probably a Stewart) was among the Border Barons who swore the bond of allegiance to the Earl of Angus (Warden at that time). Several generations of the Stewarts of Traquair were Lairds until Charles, the 4th Earl, sold the estate to Thomas Rutherford of Wells in 1687 (and thus the estate passed back into the hands of the Rutherfords after 2½ centuries). Stewart of Traquair was owner in 1643, when the lands were valued at £214 10s in Cavers Parish and £409 10s in Hobkirk Parish. Andrew Ker paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d there in 1678; he may also be ‘The walls’ who paid tax on £214 10s in Cavers Parish in the same year. Thomas was the last Rutherford Laird, selling the estate to William Elliot (descendent of the Elliots of Brugh) in 1706/7, who had a house built there. Meanwhile Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs had a charter of the lands of Over and Nether Wells in 1659 indirectly from William, Lord Cranstoun. Archibald Jardan was factor there from 1728 until the 1760s; his rental book gives many details of the running of the estate in the 18th century. The rentals (including Ormiston and Hadden) amounted to £744 in 1729 and £921 in 1735 (but with many farmers in arrears). Archibald Jardan paid tax on 45 windows there in 1753. In 1788 part of the lands were listed in Cavers Parish, valued at £214 10s. It was sold to the William Nassau Elliot, M.P. towards the end of the 18th century. It was valued at £409 10s in 1811. It passed to Sir William Francis Elliot in 1818 when William Nassau Elliot died. The house was extended around 1862. The house was leased to John Bald in the period 1865–76. The estate having a considerable debt, the trustees had lots of the old trees cut down in the late 1800s, this being locally quite unpopular. Sir William and Lady Elliot of Stobs lived there themselves in the years around 1890. But the estate was sold to the Ushers in 1895/6, who rebuilt the main house in 1906, although it was demolished in the 1950s. The new development included a herony, as well as alterations to the banks of the Rule to form a small lake. The wrought-iron gates are retained from the 18th century, while an armorial pediment from about 1690 is in the Museum. Extensive and irregularly shaped plantations also survive. The entire Wells and Hallrule estates were sold off in 1995 – ‘Adieu, fair Wells! I gladly quit Thy mutilated glade, But who can look without regret Upon thy ruined shade? Years, countless years, may come and go, And heirs thee still retain, But what thou wert in former years Thou’lt never be again’ [T] (often formerly written ‘Walls’, ‘Welis’, etc.; it is ‘le wellis’ in 1502; it is already marked by its modern name ‘Wells’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Wells (welz) n. former estate to the east of Jedburgh, including Over Wells, Nether Wells, Wells Shawhead and Wells Mill, long owned by the Kerrs. The spelling varied as ‘Wollis’, etc., and is thus easily confused with Wells in the Rule valley (formerly ‘Wells’ and variants).

Wemyss (weenz) n. Bailie Alexander (b.1813) Hawick Magistrate of the latter part of the 19th century. His parents were Thomas, foreman at Wilton Mills, and Elizabeth Scott. He began working at Wilton Mills in 1827, becoming a commission agent later in life and retiring in 1889. He was the last living standard-bearer of the great Reform Bill procession of 1832. He was also present at the election in Jedburgh when Sir Walter Scott was supposedly assaulted by Hawick men, but vehemently denied this version of events. He also acted as sergeant-in-chief of the special constables appointed during the troublesome 1841 election. He was for a long time on Wilton Parochial Board, entered the Council for Wilton Ward in 1868 and became a Magistrate in Wilton Cemetery. James (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident recorded in 1616. He was one of the men (along with ‘Bonnie Johnnie Scott’ and James Lethen) who took the pistol from ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott, before he could shoot the Baron, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. James (b.1819/20) born in Hawick, he was a wool spinner. He married Margaret Duncan in 1839. Their children were James, George, Charles, Janet and Margaret. They emigrated to Boston in 1854. He emigrated to the Boston area in 1854, with the rest of his family. He worked as a furniture maker, eventually becoming owner of a large company. In Boston he was an Oddfellow and Mason and was President of the Scots’ Charitable Society, the British American Association of the State of Massachusetts, the Boston Curling Club and the Hawick Club. James (b.1840) born in Hawick, son of James and Margaret Duncan. Thomas (1787/8–1861) manager at Dicksons & Laings. He was sent to Manchester to learn about power looms about 1830 (in order to avoid the exorbitant fees the company there charged to set up the machinery), which were then introduced to Hawick. ‘Thomas Wenyss, spinner’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He remained responsible for running the looms until he died. He was listed as foreman at Wilton Mills among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was recorded as woollen factory foreman, living at Dovemount in 1841 and on Wilton Place in 1851. In 1861 he was a widower living with his son Alexander. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott and sister of Dr. William Scott. Their children included: Isabella (1812–58), the oldest daughter, who became 2nd wife of John White, miller of Hawick, and her cousin; Alexander (b.1814), who also worked at Wilton Mills; and Mary. A portrait of him exists (also spelled ‘Weymes’ and variants; the name was once interchangeable with Weens).

Welnelaciam (we-ne-la-see-um) n. place recorded in the late 12th century in a document relating to the lands of Glasgow Diocese in Ashkirk Parish. Most of the other locations are recognisable, but the modern equivalent of this particular name is unclear.
Wenerton

Wenerton (we-ner'-in) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of the Laird of Gledstains, along with ‘Torne’ (probably Turn) and ‘Fowler-awe’. The exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

West (west) n. Fr. Joseph (19th/20th C.) first Chaplain appointed to St. Margaret’s (Dominican) Convent in 1912. He helped the priest of S.S. Mary & David’s with the extra early morning services he had instituted. He also offered mass at Stobs Camp. However, by 1914 he had moved on.

Westburns (west-bawrnz) n. former lands in Belses Barony, near Lilliesleaf. In 1569 it was listed among the lands sold by Jedburgh Abbey to Adam French. In 1632 it was feued from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning, to Robert Grieve from Commonside, William Davidson from Caerlenrig, John Gray from Lilliesleaf and Robert Law from Kames. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. (it is ‘Westburnis’ in 1569 and ‘Westbernis’ in 1588 and ‘Westbyres’ in 1670).

West Beechwud (west-beech-wud) n. name for a field on Hawick Common to the north of the road between Williestruther cottage and the Flex.

West Boonraw (west-boon-raw) n. farm reached by taking the right hand road at the ‘Power Road Ends’, just next to East Boonraw, on the Boonraw Burn. It was also known as ‘Wester Boonraw’. Elizabeth Davidson lived there in 1841 and 1851 and labourer William Hewitson was there in 1841 (see also Boonraw).

West Buccleuch (west-bu-kloo) n. farm on the south-west bank of the Rankle Burn, off the B711, near East Buccleuch, in the centre of Scottish country. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it extended to 3909 acres and the farmhouse is marked in much the same location as the present one. The ‘West side of Buccleugh’ stock and teind was valued at about £916 in 1785. It was tenanted by Turnbells in the early 19th century and was then composed of 1,400 acres of land. It was for a time run as a hotel. Part of the old drove road can also be seen near here. There was a Ride-out here in 1888 (also sometimes ‘Wester Buccleuch’).

West Burnfit see Wester Burnfit

West Burnfit (west-burn-fit) n. West Burnfoot, farm in the Ale valley, being the partner of East Burnfoot. It is also known as ‘Wester Burnfoot’ and is easily confused with the place of the same name in Wilton Parish. There was also a mill there, although it may have been a separate farm. There were 3 tenants listed there in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, namely James Henderson, Walter Wilson and Robert Culbertson. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map off the streamlet that emerges from Shieliswood Loch. The location is south of the other farm, but actually a little further to the east on Ainslie’s map (it is ‘Westburnfoot’ in 1744; see also Burnfit Mill).

West Burn Park (west-burn-pawrk) n. name for the field on the Common opposite the entrance to the racecourse and north of Burn Park.

Westburnflat (west-burn-flat) n. former tower of the Armstrongs on Hermitage Water, perhaps just south of its junction with the Liddel. It was listed as a land with rental 37 shillings and 4 pence in a c.1376 list of the area around Mangerston among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. Archie of Westburnflat is listed by Monipennie among Border chiefs in the late 1500s. It was burned in 1599 by the Gideon Murray of Elibank, Walter Scott of Harden and Gilbert Elliot of Horsleyhill. It was possessed by Lancel Armstrong in 1632 and John Armstrong until about 1683. John Glendinning was tenant there in 1694, with William Elliot also listed as a householder. It is said that one of the last owners, William Armstrong, was captured for stealing cattle and hanged at Selkirk, in the early 1700s. Labourer Francis Armstrong was there in 1835 (it is ‘Westburnflat’ around 1376, ‘Wastburneflatt’ in 1599 and ‘westerburnflat’ in 1694; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

behind Linden Park. It was once a tenanted farm on the Cavers estate and sold off in the early 19th century. John and James Bunyan were tenants in 1794 and James Bunyan in 1797. Robert Shiel was farmer in the early 20th century. The name distinguishes it from the farm of Eastcote (also spelled ‘West Coat’, ‘Westcote’, etc.; it is marked ‘Westcot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Westcoterig (west-ko’-rig) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot Valley, perhaps on the Cromrig Burn north of Southdean Rig, although its precise location is uncertain. It was recorded in 1540 among lands (probably part of Ringwoodfield) farmed by the King’s shepherd Richard Henderson. In 1557 it was ‘Westcoit’ when rented from Melrose Abbey by Walter Scott and William Elliot; at that time it was valued at £5. It was listed as part of the Lairdship of Ringwoodfield in 1621 and 1634 and listed among the same upper Teviotdale lands in 1693. In 1620 Sir Walter Scott of Goldielands was infeft in these lands, along with those of Goldielands. It was recorded as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1744 it was leased along with Colterscleuch by William and Gideon Grieve (marked on Blaeu’s map as ‘West cotrigg’); it is ‘Vestcotrig’ in 1663 and ‘West Coitrig’ in 1661. The farm remained with the Scotts, but it was transferred to Roberton Earl Boswell, to Walter ‘the Bold’ of Buccleuch in 1594. The farm was in Selkirkshire in 1511 when it was included in a grant of lands to Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. The separate farm of Easter Alemoor is known from at least 1573, when it had a separate owner. Wester Alemoor was forfeited (along with many other estates and titles) by Francis Stewart, the 5th Earl of Buccleuch in 1594. The farm remained with the Scotts, but by the late 18th century was owned by Elliot of Borthwickbrae. It was transferred to Roberton in 1689 when that Parish was created. Thomas Scott and Walter Scott were recorded there in 1734 and Robert Anderson in 1741. John Sinton was there in 1771–74. John Elliot of Borthwickbrae paid the land tax on £308 3s 4d there in 1785 and William Elliot in 1802. The new farm was built adjacent to the B711, just before the Loch is reached, essentially south of Easter Alemoor. The earlier location for the farm was covered by the reservoir extension, and chimneys from the old farmhouse can be seen in the Loch when the water is low. The name is also used for the modern street layout was mostly developed in the 19th century. A stone bottle from there (when the proprietor was James Shiel) is in the Museum (also known as the ‘West End Spirit Bar’).

West-ender (west-en-dur) n. someone from the West End of Hawick – ‘Maister Thompson, a Wastender like masel’ [HE1924] (also spelled ‘Westender’, cf. the older Wast-ender).

the West End Kirk (yu-wes-tend-kirk) n. previously known as the Green Kirk, it was home of the Anti-Burgher congregation and then part of the United Presbyterian Church from 1847. It should not be confused with the West Port (Free) Kirk.

the West End Meetin Hoose (yu-wes-tend-mee’in-hoo) n. the West End Meeting House, also known as the Green Kirk, at Myreslaw Green.

Wester Adam (yu-wes-tur-aw-dum) n. nickname for Adam Scott.

Wester Alemoor (yu-wes-tur-äl-moor) n. farm just before Alemoor Reservoir on the B711. The present farm was built fairly recently, with the older one close to the dam at the end of the reservoir. This was formerly the site of a peel tower, on the high left bank of the Ale Water, dating probably from the 15th century. There are several enclosures and signs of former cultivation near the old farm location. The farm was in Selkirkshire in 1511 when it was included in a grant of lands to Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. The separate farm of Easter Alemoor is known from at least 1573, when it had a separate owner. Wester Alemoor was forfeited (along with many other estates and titles) by Francis Stewart, the 5th Earl Boswell, to Walter ‘the Bold’ of Buccleuch in 1594. The farm remained with the Scotts, but by the late 18th century was owned by Elliot of Borthwickbrae. It was transferred to Roberton in 1689 when that Parish was created. Thomas Scott and Walter Scott were recorded there in 1734 and Robert Anderson in 1741. John Sinton was there in 1771–74. John Elliot of Borthwickbrae paid the land tax on £308 3s 4d there in 1785 and William Elliot in 1802. The new farm was built adjacent to the B711, just before the Loch is reached, essentially south of Easter Alemoor. The earlier location for the farm was covered by the reservoir extension, and chimneys from the old farmhouse can be seen in the Loch when the water is low. The name is also used for the modern street west of Alemoor Hill, which lies north of the Loch, with peaks 366 m and 376 m and an observation tower (also called ‘West Alemoor’, it is ‘West: Ealmuir’ in 1734; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wester Alemoor
Wester Barnhills

Wester Barnhills (wes-tur-barn-hilz) n. former name for part of the lands of Barnhills. In 1618 it was gained by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from John Turnbull of Barnhills. In 1678 it was combined with Easter Barnhills when both were owned by Sir William Bennet. In 1780 Robert Bennet gave sasine of the lands to Alexander Allison ‘in liferent’ and Matthew Stewart of Barnhills ‘in fee’. By 1788 the lands were owned by the Misses Stewart and valued at about £350.

Wester Boonraw (wes-tur-boon-raw) n. another name for Wester Boonraw.

Wester Braid Road (wes-tur-bräd-röd) n. extension of Braid Road to the other (southern) side of Wellogate Brae. The track there was formerly also known as the Cross Road. It was developed in the early 1930s to provide access to Fisher Avenue. The road continues as a right of way to Hardie’s Hill.

Wester Broadlee (wes-tur-bröd-lee) n. formerly part of the farm of Broadlee. In 1650 the ‘communicants’ recorded there were William Wylie, Margaret Armstrong, William Chisholme and Bessie Spence.

Wester Buckcleuch see West Buckcleuch

Wester Burnfit see West Burnfit

Wester Burnfit (wes-tur-burn-fi’) n. former name for part of the lands of Burnfoot in Wilton Parish. It should not be confused with a place of the same name in Ale Water. James Shiel was living there in 1682 and 1688 and Robert Wait was a gardener there in 1688. In 1718 it was owned by the Scotts of Buculeuch, unlike the adjacent Easter Burnfoot. It consisted of 226 acres, bounded by Easter Burnfoot, the River Teviot, Wilton, Burnhead and Galalaw. The mill is shown in the south-eastern corner, and there are woods near there along the river, as well as along the Boonraw Burn. James Easton was living there in 1722, James Young in 1724, William Scott in at least 1724–35, George Scott in 1729, William Lamb in 1735 and Adam Laidlaw in 1736.

Wester Burnfit Mill (wes-tur-burn-fi’-mil) n. another name for Burnfit Mill.

Wester Bushes (wes-tur-bu-sheez) n. hilly area in Craik Forest, west of Howpasley, and north-east of Craik Moor. It is crossed by the Roman road. There are old enclosures there, visible on aerial photographs.

Wester Clarilaw (wes-tur-kla-r-rue-law) n. former name for the western half of Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. In 1678 it was owned by William Scott of Clarilaw and valued at £182. In the 1718 Buccleuch survey it was not owned by the Scotts of Buculeuch, although the eastern section was. It was stated that 6 acres of land belonging to it were mixed with Easter Clarilaw, while one acre mixed with it belonged to Wester Clarilaw. Part of it was recorded being owned by the trustees of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1788 and on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (valued at £65), with the other part owned by William Scott of Burnhead (valued at £117). The parts were later owned by the Dicksons of Alton and Watson of Burnhead.

Wester Commonsdie (wes-tur-ko-min-süd) n. name for part of the farm of Commonside. It was described as a 40-shilling land in 1603 when leased to Gilbert Elliot (it was ‘Westir Comoundsyde’ in 1603).

Wester Craik (wes-tur-krak) n. former name for part of the lands of Craik.

Wester Dykeback (wes-tur-dik-bak) n. land lying approximately between Burnflat Brae and Cruinhaughhill Road, probably once the back part of the area known as Thorterdykes, and distinguished from Easter Dykeback, which was to the north-east. The Burgh boundary passed diagonally through here.

Wester Essenside (wes-tur-e-sin-süd) n. farm west of Ashkirk, close to Easter Essenside, along the Todrig Burn. It was owned by the Scotts of Burnfoot on Ale in the early 17th century and was farmed in the 18th century by the Laings. In 1643 it was valued at £400 and owned by Thomas Scott. It was valued at £540 according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. David Henderside was owner in 1761. By 1788 the lands were valued at £400 and owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae (with the teinds of these lands and Leap Hill being another £12). John Thomson was farmer there in at least 1789–94. Robert Thomson was farmer there in 1797. It was owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1788 (and still recorded in about 1811) and Allan Eliott Lockhart by 1874. William Aitken was there in the mid-19th century and J. Paterson in the 1860s (see also Essenside; it is ‘Wester Eschinsyde’ in 1609 and ‘westessen-syd’ in 1663; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wester Grundistone (wes-tur-grum-dee-stin) n. former lands at Grundistone, which, along with ‘Easter Grundistone’, were owned by the Scotts in the 16th century. ‘Thomas Scot in Wester-groundiston’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buculeuch. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. Francis Scott was tenant there in 1694, with James Dean as shepherd, and Adam ‘Inglis’ recorded being ‘out of the shire’. Walter Scott was tenant there in 1709. In the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties it covered 362 acres, bounded by Easter Grundistone, Boonraw, Drinkstone, Wilton Common and Salenside. A stream separated it from Easter Grundistone, and in 1718 farmhouses are shown on either side of this stream. John Turnbull was living there in at least 1721–25. Robert Scott was there in 1729. The lands were leased from Buccleuch Estates by Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1744, along with a declaration about what would happen if the adjacent Hassendean Common was divided (it is ‘Wester Grundiston’ in 1643, ‘Westergrundiston’ in 1694, ‘Wester Grundistone’ in 1718 and ‘W: Grundiston’ in 1725).

Westerhall (wes-tur-hal) n. house in Eskdale, near Bentpath, long a seat of the Johnstones. The mansion was largely built in the 17th century, and repaired following several major fires, the last in 1955 – ‘The Johnstones met at Westerhall, And they sang o’ the raid and the moon, Wi their ‘Ready aye ready’; the Johnstones cry, For they’re ‘ready’ baith late and soon’ [T].

Wester Hassendean (wes-tur-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for the lands which were ‘commonly called Horsliehill’ according to a charter of 1616, when they were sold by the Earl of Home to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs.

Wester Heap (wes-tur-heep) n. older name for the farm at East Whitehaugh and surrounding area. It was exchanged for Milsington between the Langlands and Scott families in 1453. In 1650 there is a list of 8 ‘communicants’ there, namely Bessie Scott, Marion Scott, Bessie Scott, Robert Waugh, Thomas Scott, Margaret Easton, John Almond and Jean Scott. Robert Scott paid £448 in land tax there in 1663. Scott of Whitehaugh paid the land tax for these lands and Whitehaugh in 1678, with joint value £648 10s. In 1694 John Barrie was blacksmith there and 7 other householders were listed. ‘Wester Heap, otherwise called Easter Whitehaugh’ is recorded on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (and the 1788 county valuation) as part of the estate of Scott of Whitehaugh (also spelled ‘Hepe’, ‘Heip’ and other variants; it is ‘Wester heape’ on a 1650 parish map).

Wester Hermiston (wes-tur-her-mis-tin) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade in 1643 and valued at £156. Thomas Scott of Whitslade owned the lands in 1678 and they were combined with Easter Hermiston by 1743. They were all owned by William Govan in 1788.

Wester Highchesters see West Highchesters

Wester Hislop (wes-tur-hiz-lop) n. former part of the farm of Hislop, mentioned in the 16th century and early 17th century (it is ‘Wester Heilsheip’ in 1572 and ‘Wester Heissilhoip’ in 1615).

Westerhooses (wes-tur-hoo-seez) n. Westerhooses, farm near Bonchester Bridge, just to the east of Rulletonhead. The farm includes a lade and mill pond. In 1538 it was valued, along with Strange, at £6 5s; the two sets of lands were together referred to as 5 steadings. In 1541 the Nicholas and Margaret Oliver were tenants in part of the farm, paying 18s 9d yearly, and Alexander Oliver in another part, paying 6s 3d. There were 3 hearths recordede on the tax rolls there in 1694. In the 18th century Andrew Murray is meant to have found a box of gold coins on the farm while ploughing one day. William Oliver was farmer there in 1794 and 1797. Henry Elliot was farmer there in the 1860s. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. A ‘polished felsite axe’ was found there in the 19th century. To the east is an area of rig and furrow, and further east lies the ruined peel tower of Kilnsike, and also an ancient earthwork, called Iron Castle (it is ‘westirhous’ in 1538, ‘Westirhousis’ on 1539, ‘Westirhous’ in 1541, ‘Wester Houssis’ in 1571/2 and ‘West houses’ in 1797).

Westerhooses (wes-tur-hoo-seez) n. Westerhooses, a former farm between Clarilaw and Horsleyhill. It is referred to in a charter of 1516, when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme gained this (and other lands) after being forfeited by Alexander, Lord Home, and belonging to John Murray of Falahill. This charter was revoked by the King in 1535, when superiority returned to George, Lord Home. It was listed in 1582 among lands for which Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill demanded the charters of his father from the widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford; it is there said to have also been called Little Hassendean. It became part of Minto Parish in 1690. James Smith and Walter Armstrong were there in 1694. It was farmed by the Dicksons of Hassendeanburn in the 18th century. William Turnbull is recorded as farmer there in 1797. Later the lands became part of Horsleyhill, and is now called Horsleyhill Cottages. An axehead (made of felsite) found there is now in the Westerkirk

National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland (it is ‘Wester Houssi’ in 1535; referred to as ‘Westhouses’ in 1690, it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Westerkirk (wes-tur-kirk) n. village and surrounding parish in Dumfriesshire, to the north-west of Langholm. Thomas Telford was born here. The church was granted to the monks of Melrose by John Graham, Lord of Westerkirk and confirmed by Robert I in 1321. A separate chapel (at Boyken) within the parish was founded following a charter of 1391, dated at Glendorwyn (in Ewesdale) in which Archibald, Earl of Douglas mortified certain lands in the Barony of Hawick to pay for its foundation, under the direction of his Bailie Adam of Glendorwyn (or Glendinning); the chaplain was to pray for the souls of the late James, Earl of Douglas and for his ‘brother’ Sir Simon of Glendorwyn (who also died at Otterburn), as well as the living Douglasses. In 1447 William Scott was presbyter and ‘perpetual vicar’ in this parish, when he witnessed the sasine for the Cousinlands, signed at Branxholme. The patronage and teinds of the parish were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. The parish was briefly united with Roxburghshire and in 1788, was part of the estate of William Richardson (it is ‘Waststirk’ in 1324).

Wester Kirkstile (wes-tur-kirk-stil) n. name once given to the western approach to St. Mary’s Church, which is now gone, but shown in old drawings (e.g. a water-colour sketch by T.H. Laidlaw) as steps leading through the wall in drawings (e.g. a water-colour sketch by T.H. Laidlaw) as steps leading through the wall in St. Mary’s Place. This was formerly where auctions and other public notices would be announced by the town bellman after Sunday services. Wilton Crescent was also once known as ‘the Wester Kirkstyle of Wilton’ (also spelled ‘Wester Kirkstyle’).

Wester Lilliesleaf see West Lilliesleaf

Wester Loch (wes-tur-loch) n. name used for the western of the 2 Branxholme Lochs, also known as Chisholme Loch. ‘Wester Loach’ and ‘Wester loch house’ must have been a cottage near here, where Walter Heatley was living in at least 1771–74.

the Wester Loft (thu-wes-tur-loft) n. name sometimes used for the Weaver’s Loft in St. Mary’s Kirk, also known as ‘the Bailie’s Loft’ – ‘...it was found therein specified that ye loft westew the church door was allocat to the Mechanics in ye town as is att more length set down in Anno 1683 ...’ [PR1717].

Wester Middle see West Middle

Wester Mill (wes-tur-mill) n. former name for a corn mill in Wilton Parish. It is unclear exactly where it was located, but it is possible it was the same place as Wester Burnfit Mill. James Scott was there in 1727 and 1729, George Lamb in 1751 and Archibald Irvine in 1759.

Wester Moormaw see Moormaw

westermaist (wes-tur-miast) adj., arch. furthest west (variant of westmaist; also wastmaist and wastermaist).

Western Bank (wes-turn-bawngk) n. bank based in Glasgow, which became the second largest in Scotland. The Hawick agent was Charles Kirk in the mid-19th century. The bank failed in 1857, ruining many people around Scotland, and was eventually taken over by the National Bank of Scotland.

Western Star (wes-turn-stawr) n. one of 3 cricket teams set up in 1849, representing the western part of Hawick. The team only survived for a short time.

Western Tollbar (wes-turn-töl-bawr) n. another name for Wester Toll.

Wester Nurseries (wes-tur-nur-su-reez) n. former nurseries between the New Road and the river, starting at the Coble Entry. The area was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and used as a nursery for raising forest trees and shrubs by Dickson & Turnbull’s in the 19th century. The land was gifted to the town in the 1930s. Also called ‘West Nurseries’.

Wester Parkhill (wes-tur-pawk-hil, -perk-) n. former name for part of the farm of Parkhill, to distinguish it from Easter Parkhill. In 1678 Walter Chisholme paid the land tax there for the farm and mill, when it was valued at £100. James Turnbull was there in 1714 and James Scott in 1733. Robert Elliot and Robert Scott were there in 1774 and Thomas Elliot in 1781. By 1788 (and still recorded that way in 1811) it was valued at £66 13s 4d and owned by Thomas White, merchant in Jedburgh; however, £33 6s 8d of Chisholme Mill had been separated out and was then part of the Chisholme estate. William Rodger was farmer in 1797 and David Johnstone was living there in 1799. Cattle dealer Adam Scott was living there in 1841, as well as labourer George Richardson, and their families. By 1874 it was part of the estate of William Richardson Dickson of Alton (along with Easter Parkhill).

Wester Perk Hill (wes-tur-perk-hil) n. Wester Park Hill, hill just to the north-west of Wester Roughlee

Branxholme East Loch, lying between Chapel Hill and Easter Park Hill, with the farm of Parkhill to the north-west. It reaches a height of 303 m. The farm of Wester Parkhill was nearby.

Wester Roughlee (wes-tur-rowch-lee) n. former name for a stead ing in Jedforest. It was recorded along with Midroughlee and Roughlee nesk in 1538 and 1539, valued at 20 shillings (it is ‘terrain de Rouchleis vocataram Westir Rouchele’ in 1539; see Roughlee).

Westershielhope (wes-tur-sheel-hôp) n. former name for lands in Jedforest, recorded as ‘Westirschelehoip’ in 1538 and ‘Westirscheilhop’ in 1539. It was among lands that passed from the Douglasses to the Crown in about 1537, which had lain waste for the previous 20 years, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch accused of occupying it during that period.

Wester Swanshiel (wes-tur-swansheel) n. former farm in Hob Kirk Parish, the western part of Swanshiel, the division happening around the early 17th century. In 1622 the lands were inherited by Adam Turnbull of Harsthaugh from his grandfather Hector. In 1643 the western part was smaller, and valued at £32 10s. Adam Turnbull was there in about 1663, when it was valued at £32 10s. The lands of ‘Wester Swansheil’ are recorded in 1683, when inherited by Gilbert Elliot from his father Archibald of Craigend. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1694. It was held by a branch of the Turnbulls until the late 18th century, being recorded belonging to John Turnbull in 1788. It was let along with the neighbouring farm of Uthank in the late 18th century. A tenant in the late 18th and early 19th centuries was John Donaldson, whose wife Peggy Deans was still reaping at harvest time at the age of 77. It was then tenanted by the Taylors and others, before being incorporated into Kirknowe. A cottage there has a corner stone, previously a lintel, bearing the dates 1684 and 1798. In 1811 it was owned by John Turnbull and valued at £33 6s 8d. By about 1875 it was owned by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee (it is ‘Wester Swanscheild’ in 1622, ‘wester Swansheil’ in 1663 and ‘Wester Swansheil’ in 1694).

Wester Toll (wes-tur-tôl) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses, which was in use when the New Road opened. Its position is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. A plaque marks its position near the Coble Entry by the High School. There was once a well there at the head of the Coble Entry. The earlier ‘Auld Wester Toll’ was also known as the Loan Toll, and was at 26 Loan (also called the ‘Western Toll-bar’ and other variants).

Wester Weens see Wester Winds

Wester Wells (wes-tur-wels) n. former name for a farm that was part of the Wells estate in Rulewater, distinct from Easter Wells.

Wester Whitehaugh (wes-tur-whîi-tuf) n. former name for the lands known as Whitehaugh.

Wester Winds (wes-tur-wînds) n. former name for lands in the upper Teviot valley also called Weensland, situated near Weens Sike. They are mentioned in the 1686 confirmation of lands to the Scotts of Buccleuch and were at that time in the middle of lands possessed by Robert Grieve in Commonside. ‘Wester Weens (in Hawick)’ was valued at £179 according to a valuation of Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1707. The lands of ‘Wester Weines’ are listed as part of Commonside in the 1718 survey of Buccleuch lands. In 1811 ‘Wester Weens, acquired from Earl of Queensberry’ was part of the Buccleuch estates, valued at £179 (see also Weensland).

Westfield Works (west-feeld-wurks) n. small knitwear factory on the left-hand side of Drumlanrig Square, at Nos. 27–28. It is run by William Lockie & Co. Ltd. It had previously been George Scott & Son.

West Fodderlee (west-fo-dur-lee) n. part of the lands of Fodderlee in the lower Rule valley, lying west of Easter Fodderlee, and south of Old Fodderlee. It was also referred to as ‘Wester Fodderlee’ and was separated from East Fodderlee in the 17th century. It was owned by Helen Turnbull in the late 17th century, and after she married William Chisholme of Parkhill it passed to their son Mark. William Chisholme was recorded as owner in 1707 when it was valued (probably along with Ruletownhead) at £175. By 1788 it was owned by Barbara Chisholme and valued at £78 9s. Henry Oliver was farm steward there in the 1850s and 1860s. James Turnbull was tenant there in the 1860s. It was recorded being owned by David Henderson of Abbotsrule in about 1874, and valued at £78 9s. The Bruces became tenants in 1887 and ‘Mrs. Joan Wood or Bruce’ is recorded as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of the end of the 19th century, when it was valued at £142. The farm is the location for the Sclaterford, where there was a skirmish between Lord Dacre’s men and a band of Scots in 1513, with the Sclaterford bridge being located just to the south. There was probably a small threshing mill here, powered by water from a pond. In the fields to the south-east a linear cropmark was found in aerial photographs (see also Fodderlee; it is ‘Wester Fodderley’ in about 1874).

Westgate (west-ga’) n. street leading out of Denholm to the south, passing the War Memorial and Westgate Hall and turning into Dene Road.

Westgate Haa (west-gii-haw) n. oldest house in Denholm, at the corner of the main street and Westgate, essentially marking the south end of the village. The name was used to distinguish it from ‘East Castle’. It was built in 1663 for Archibald Douglas, possibly on the site of a much older building, West Castle, which belonged to Guy of Denum around 1300. The house measures about 17 m by 7 m and consists of 2 floors plus a garret (with a modern addition to the south-west and modern fore-stair). A lintel over the entrance on the north-east side bears the date 1663. A corner stone of the roof has a Douglas heart, and there are other carved stones on the exterior. The Douglas coat of arms and monogrammed initials of Sir Archibald and his wife Dame Rachel Skene are still carved over a fireplace inside. It may be the ‘Denholme House’ listed with 3 hearths on the tax records of 1694. In 1907 the upper level was given by the Palmer-Douglases for use as a village meeting hall, with an outside staircase added. It was used for this purpose until the 1950s. It is now a ‘Class A’ listed building.

West Highchesters (west-hi-ches-turz) n. former name for the main estate of Highchesters, distinguished from the smaller estate of East Highchesters. There were 11 communicants there in 1650, namely Robert Riddell, Maly Cowan, John Riddell, William Riddell, William Brash, Janet Robson, Bessie Riddell, Marion Riddell, Walter Gledstains, Margaret Wilson and Janet Brown. It was listed as ‘Wester Highchesters’ in 1788, when owned by Walter Scott of Harden. James Wilson was living there in 1792.

Westla (west-la, wes-la, -lu) adj., arch. a version of Wesla or Western. Used formerly to describe the half of the town west of the Slitrig.

Westlands (west-linze) n. James (17th/18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick. In 1702 he was fined ‘for keipping of company drinking in his hous, with the pyper playing, after the ringing of the tenn hour bell’.

West Lees (west-leez) n. farm just north of Hawick, between the A7 and Appletreethall. In the 16th centuries the lands were known as ‘Wester Moormaw’ and were held by John Scott, Vicar of Hawick from the 1530s, afterwards passing to his illegitimate son James. It was home of a branch of the Scots in the 16th and 17th centuries. William Scott ‘in Lies, alias Milma’ was (sometime around 1600) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Bucleuch. The lands here were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690 after which they fell within the bounds of Wilton. John Wilson was farmer there in 1841 (also spelled ‘Lies’, etc.; it is marked as ‘Westlies’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map, but as just ‘Lees’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

West Lees (west-leez) n. farm just north of Hallrule, which was one of the estates of Hobkirk Parish, recorded before the Reformation. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. James Turnbull held these lands in at least the period 1605 to 1616. It was included in the lands inherited by James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh from his father in 1634. William Turnbull was owner in 1643, when it was valued at £66 13s 4d. James Turnbull was there in about 1663 when it has the same value, which also continued in 1678. Robert and Thomas Caldwell were there in 1694. The lands were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Robert Buckham was Laird there in at least 1738–45. The farm became part of the estate of Wells in 1775. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Hobkirk Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. George Rutherford was tenant there in 1797. In 1811 it was still valued at £66 13s 4d, when owned by William Elliot of Wells. It was later owned by Sir William F. Eliott of Stobs. John Armstrong was tenant in at least 1841–1861 (also written ‘Westles’; marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it may be the ‘west leis of Nether Bullerwall’ recorded in 1562, is ‘Weast leas’ in 1545, ‘Westleyis’ in 1617, ‘Westlies’ in 1634, ‘West lies’ in 1663 and ‘lie Steedings de Westlies’ in 1680).

West Lilliesleaf (west-li-leez-leef) n. former name for lands adjacent to Lilliesleaf, probably the same as what was later called Riddell. This name, or ‘Wester Lilliesleaf’, was in use from the 12th century until the 16th century. The granting of lands here to Walter Riddell in the mid-12th century is one of the first known charters from King David I to a layman. The relief of these lands of James Riddell was gifted to Walter, son of Sir David Scott of Bucleuch. In 1636 the lands of ‘Wester Lillieslie’ called ‘Murieknow’, which lands are called Riddell, were inherited by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk from his father. In 1669 part of the lands of ‘Wester Lillislie lie Muirieknow now called Riddell’ were inherited by Sir John Riddell, as well as the remaining 6-pound lands of Wester Lilliesleaf, which were presumably not called Muirknow (it is ‘Westillisleif’ in 1471 and ‘Wester Lelesleif’ in 1503).

West Mains (west-, wast-lin) adj., poet. western, westerly, from or in the west – ‘Phoebus had sunk adown the westlin wave . . . ’ [JTe], ‘. . . To view the bonny gownden screen, That hang alang the westlin sky’ [JTe], ‘Old people invariably talked of westlin and eastlin winds’ [HAST1902] (also written ‘wastlin’).

West Linton (west-lin'-in) n. town on the Lyne Water in the old county of Peeblesshire, known for its sheep markets, stone carvers and silver and lead mines. Two well preserved prehistoric burial cairns are in the hills nearby, as well as the remains of old silver and mining operations. A festival associated with the Whipmen, an old horsemen’s society, has been held most years in June since 1803. Population (1991) 1,157.

West Ludge (west-luj, -loj) n. former lodge house for Cavers estate, located by the main road near Deanbrae, at the end of a track leading to Cavers House. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, while today’s maps only show the wood called ‘West Lodge Covert’.

Westly Sike (west-lee-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on the western slopes of Larriston Fells and flowing roughly north-west to join the Larriston Burn.

West Mains (west-mänz) n. former name for lands owned by the Baron of Hawick on the west side of the Town. This was part of the demesne lands of the Baron, distinct from East Mains, which was to the east of the Town. Rather than being a specific ‘home farm’, this was just the name given to a set of lands. In a survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718 its detailed outline is shown at that time; it was composed of 2 parts, the largest part bounded by Hawick Common, the River Teviot and the western edge of the Burgh lands, including Myreslawgreen and the Loan, while the smaller part was on the eastern side of the Loan, from Burnflat to about the Kirkwynd, and going all the way down to the Slitrig. Over time parts of the lands were sold to the Burgh or incorporated into neighbouring farms. In 1494 it was given (along with Crumhaugh) by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to his son and heir James; it is there valued at £5 ‘of old extent’. In the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick it is listed explicitly among the lands held ‘in property’ by the Baron. It is named in the 1547 Charter and had a boundary with the Common.

It is also listed among the Baron’s properties in a promise of infeftment in 1559 and in the retour of 1572 for Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1590 there is a document of rental of the land by Sir James Douglas from Walter Scott, younger. It is described there as a ‘2 merkland’. It probably once formed part of the ‘demesne’ lands of the Baron, and is listed among the Baron’s property in the ratifying Parliamentary Act of 1594. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls it was ‘possest and wadsett’ by Rev. Robert Cunningham, William Rucelcastle, James Laing and Walter Scott at West Port. In 1686 it is described as ‘extending to eight husband lands’. In 1675 it was described as ‘extending to 8 husband lands, when there was a ‘wadset’ on it, and it is still recorded among the rental records of the Scots of Buccleuch in 1690. When surveyed in 1718 it consisted of 186 acres, mostly of ‘corn land’ and ‘moderately good but very stoney’. In the 18th century it was described that the tenants of these lands had similar privileges to the Common as the Burgesses of Hawick. Based on the 1767 description of the Common it lay to the west of the Nipknowes by that time. It is unclear when the name ‘West Mains’ ceased to be used to describe lands – ‘Then east the martch dyke with Crumhaugh to the march with the Westmains of Hawick, and along the Westmains dyke down to the Burnfoord . . . ’ [C&L1767] (it is ‘Vest Manys’ in 1494 and 1511, ‘West Many’ in 1511/2 and 1514, ‘Vest Many’ in 1514, ‘Vest Manis’ in 1559 and 1572, ‘West Manys’ in 1594, ‘West-maynes’ in 1615, ‘West Maynes’ in 1686 and ‘Westmains’ in 1767; there are many places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland).

West Mains (west-mänz) n. name of farm that was formerly part of the Cavers estate. It was once a centre for spinning. It is on Stobie’s 1770 map, located near the modern farm of Kinninghall. In at least 1794–97 the farmer there was Robert Hall.

the West March (thu-west-märch) n. the West March, consisting of Dumfries & Galloway and neighbouring areas on the Scottish side, generally held by the Maxwells. More specifically it consisted of the valleys of Esk, Ewes (although this was sometimes in the Middle March), Wauchope, Annan and Nith, along with part of Galloway.

West Port Kirk

westmaist

west o the gate (west-ō-thu-gā’) adv., arch.

(west-māst) adj., arch. furthest west (also wastmaist, watermaist and westermaist).
West Middle (west-mi-dul) n. farmstead in Cavers Parish, just south of Midgard. The name distinguishes it from East Middle. John Turnbull was there in 1694, Thomas Scott in 1716 and another John Turnbull in 1723. Alexander Ferguson was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘Wester Middle’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and still so marked on the Ordnance Survey map; it is ‘Westermidle’ in 1694 and ‘West Middles’ in 1797).
West Middles (west-mi-dulz) n. farm just south of Lilliesleaf. John Preston was there in the 1860s (there is no obvious connection with East Middle in Cavers Parish; ‘Westermiddles’ and ‘Eastermiddles’ are marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).
West Minti (west-min’-i) n. former farm near Minto village. It was among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545.
the West Nurseries (thu-west-nur-su-reez)
n. a former name for the land that became the Buccleuch Playing Fields, now forming the part of Wilton Lodge Park on the south side of the river, also called ‘Wester Nurseries’.
Weston (wes-tin) n. Rev. Thomas (16th C.) Parson of Wilton recorded in 1567, perhaps serving until 1574, when he demitted. In 1567 he and Robert Scott of Thirlestane relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for Archie’s Will in Gorrenberry and Sim Elliot in Dodburn; he was recorded there as ‘Maister Thomas Westoun’.
Presumably the same ‘Maister Thomas Westoun, aduocat’ was mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, with Sir Walter still owing him for an account. Thomas, advocate, is recorded demitting the vicarage of Hassendean Parish in October 1576, and appears to have been recorded in that benefice from 1568; so he may have held the vicarage of Hassendean for 2 years after he was Parson of Wilton. He is probably the ‘Mr. Thomas Westoun, attornay’ who presented the briefs in Roxburgh Sheriﬀ Court for the serving of heirs to David Scott and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1569. He is probably the same ‘Maister Thomas Westoune, aduocatt’ who witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and the Kers at Melrose. He may be the same as ‘Maister Thomas Westoun, advocat’ who was the notary for the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574 and who prepared ‘And Inventare of Walter Scot of Branxholme’s evidentis’ in 1577 (also spelled ‘Westoun’).

in a westerly direction, westwards (also ‘west the gate’).
West Port (west-pōr’) n. original entrance to the town from the west and south-west directions, i.e. the Carlisle road. It was once known as the Townhead Port and situated at the foot of the Loan. Work was done on it in 1734. The old gate was removed around 1762, with a jutting stone at pavement level indicating its position, with a matching rybat stone in the Museum. It remained the main entrance to the town from the south until the New Road was opened in 1815. The roadway was widened in 1895, and the Loan/Beaconsfield Terrace junction altered in 1978. A plaque at No. 2 Loan was erected by the Callants’ Club in 1964 to mark the Toll location.
The area was home of a branch of the Scott family in the 17th and 18th centuries. James Scott ‘Westport’ was Cornet in 1705. John Clerk was recorded ‘at ye westport’ in 1704, Adam Turnbull was merchant there in 1704 and Thomas Oliver was smith there in 1712.
Westport (west-pōr’) n. nickname of Walter Scott in the 17th century.
West Port Hoose (west-pōr’-hoos) n. sheltered housing built on the site of the former West
Port Church in 1971–73, at 19 Drumlanrig Square
(also known as West Port Day Unit or West Port Sheltered Homes).
West Port Kirk (west-pōr’-kirk) n. church near the former western entrance to the town, at the upper left-hand corner of Drumlanrig Square.
It was built in 1866 following the establishment of a Free Church Mission in 1855 (in the building vacated by the stocking-shop of Andrew Haddon.
In the early days it was sometimes referred to as the ‘Territorial Church’, to distinguish it from the main Free Church in Town. The building was constructed in a plain Gothic style, and a church hall was added in the 1890s. The congregation merged with St. George’s in 1956 and its War Memorials were moved to that church. The building was used for a while as a factory, bought by the council in 1961 and demolished to build sheltered housing in 1971. A school associated with the church, taught by Mr. Fowler, ran from 1865–75, when it was merged with Drumlanrig. Kirk Session records for 1859–92 are in the National Archives.
A roll of the ministry is: R.R. MacQueen 1869– 72; Robert Fordyce 1872–93; Alexander Westwater 1894– ; . . . Horace Walker 1939–44; Tom Morton 1945–51; . . . (not to be confused with the West End or ‘Green’ Kirk).

West Port Mission

West Port Mission (west-pōr‘-mi-shin) n. branch of the Free Church established in Walter Haddon's old stocking-shop in the Fore Raw in 1855, supported by William Kedie and others. It led to the establishment of the West Port Church, which was erected in 1866.

Westport Road (west-pōr‘-röd) n. old name (on Wood's 1824 plan, for example) for what became Beaconsfield Terrace.

Westrop see Wilthrop

West Riddell (west-ri-dul) n. farm on the former Riddell estate. Thomas Orr was farmer there in the 1860s.

Westshiels (west-sheeels) n. farm in Southdean Parish, near Lustruther, now in the middle of Dykeraw Plantation. Patrick Oliver was tenant there in 1794 and 1797, with William Telfer the shepherd in 1797. It was farmed by Andrew Common from at least the 1840s to 60s. Part of a polished stone axe was found on the farm about 1974 (also written 'West Shiels'; it is 'Westshields' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Westside (west-sid) n. street in Denholm that runs along the west side of the Green, and continues south of Main Street.

Westside Mill (west-sid-mil) n. stockmachine mill in Denholm, on the west side of the Green behind Greenview. It dates from the late 18th century. It has three storeys and small windows for lighting each machine, and represented an early stage in the development of textile factories. It ceased operating as a textile mill in the late 19th century and later became a warehouse for Scott the joiners, then a barn for a nearby farm. Around the 1980s it was converted into a house, preserving the building (it has been locally known as 'The Old Mill' and 'The Stocking Shop' and has also been referred to as 'Denholm Mill', confusing it with the old corn mill near the river).

West Sooth Croft (west-sooth-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish, 'Wester Southcroft and house' was valued at £43 4s 1d in 1779 and it is 'West South Croft and House' in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. It is 'Wester south croft' in 1779, among the lands inherited by Rev. Robert Elliot, and listed separately from Sooth Croft Park.

West Stewart Place (west-stew-ur‘-plis) n. street off Wilton Hill in the area known as Stewartfield, with houses built in 1879, and named after Rev. James Stewart. It contains Kirklands Hotel, Abbeyfield House and Wilton Bowling Club.

West Teviotdale Agricultural Society (west-teev- yi‘-däl-aw-gree-kul-chu-rule-su-sl-i‘-ee) n. local farmers' organisation established by James Douglas of Cavers in 1835. It included the parishes of Ancrum, Ashkirk, Bedrule, Bowden, Cavers, Hawick, Hobkirk, kirkton, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Roberton, Southdean and Wilton, with its annual meeting being held in Hawick on the 1st Thursday in August. It existed along with Teviotdale Farmers' Club through the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Its office was listed as Bridge House in 1852, with James Oliver as Secretary and Treasurer. It may have become more of a horticultural society than a farmers' club. It organised shows in the Volunteer Park until 1955.

West Teviotdale Farmers (west-teev-yi‘-däl-fer-murz) n. West Teviotdale Farmers' Book Association ran a library, based at 50 High Street, in the late 19th century, and presumably was associated with the Agricultural Society.

west the (west-thu) adv., arch. towards the west, 'west of the'.

West-the-witter (west-thu-wi‘-ur) adj., arch. another form of Wesla or Westla, i.e. referring to the part of Hawick on the western side of the Slitrig – '...for east the water Alexander Hyslop and William Hardie, and for west the water Peter Scott and James Badie' [BR1701], 'Bailly Gledstanes and James Gledstanes, taylor, for west the water, to collect the subscriptions for the bridge' [BR1740] (cf. East-the-witter).

Westwater (west-waw‘-ur) n. Rev. Alexander (1857–1941) born in Lochgelly, he studied at Edinburgh University and New College there. He was minister of West Port Church from 1894. He was a member of Hawick Parish Council and gave lectures on social reform. In 1899 he married Chrissy Henderson. He retired to Edinburgh, where his house on Liberton Brae was called 'Ruberslaw'.

West Whitfield (west-whi‘-feeld) n. former farmstead south-west of Whitfield, in the headwaters of the Wilton Burn. Agricultural labourer Robert Glendinning was living there in 1841 (when it is 'Whitefield West'). Buildings are shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. A nearby enclosure is also shown in the corner of an adjacent field.

Westwud (west-wud) n. Westwood, a Victorian villa-style house in Sunnyhill, designed by John Guthrie in an Italianate style. It has a striking cast-iron porch, and interior features including a heavily arched staircase topped by a stained-glass cupola. It was built in 1880 for Thomas Purdom, Town Clerk, and his son Robert Purdom also lived there later. It is a grade C listed building.

Westwud (west-wud) n. former farmstead on the south-west side of Bonchester Hill. All signs of settlement there have been erased, and it is no longer clear exactly where it was located. However, it was probably on the former ‘hie gait Street to Jedburgh’, which went by the south side of the Hill. Adam Turnbull was tenant there in 1567. Thomas and Harie Turnbull are recorded as Lairds there in 1643, with their lands valued at £40 Scots and £12 Scots, respectively. William Turnbull was tenant there in 1694. The lands were absorbed into the estates of Abbotrule and Wolfelee (it is ‘Westwod’ in 1657 and ‘westwood’ in 1694).

we’ët (we’ët) pp. went – ‘hei we’ët ti Wulton Schuil’ (see also we’ëi).

Wether Law (we-thur-law) n. hill near the boundary of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire. It lies roughly between Lightning Hill and Millstone Edge and reaches a height of 509 m.

wey (wi) v. to weigh – ‘. . . ye wie the violence o’ your han’s in the yirth’ [HSR], ‘Heyh, wei this poak-fih meal, an sei at it’s wecht!’ [ECS], n. an act of weighing – ‘Gie’s a wei ti see what wecht A im’ [GW], a weight, particularly in a pair of scales (also written ‘wei’ and ‘wie’; cf. weigh).

wey (wi) n. way – ‘In fact,’ ‘. . . definitely ma biggest hero, for mair weis than a care ti gaun in-’ [IHS], said he, ‘we’ve a wey o’ dealin’ Wi’ forritsome callants that come here stealin’ ’ ’ [WL] (also spelled ‘wei’).

the Wey-hoose (wi-hooos) n. the Weigh House, formerly occupying the lower level of Hawick’s Tolbooth. In 1727 it was ‘now possessed by Henry Orrok and others, tacksmen of the customs’ when the Council decreed that it be leased. In 1786, when the Duke of Buccleuch gave money towards the erection of the new Town House, it was stated that ‘the tacksman shall possess the weigh-house till such time as the weigh-house falls, or decays so much as to render a new one necessary’. This surveyor of weights and measures was a tenant of the Baron in the 18th century, as a late vestige of the feudal system. In the 19th century the last 2 superintendents were James Kennedy and then George Hunter.

weys (wëiz) n., pl., arch. a weighing machine, scales (noted by E.C. Smith; also written ‘weiz’ and ‘weis’).

wey the butter, wey the cheese (wi-thë-bur’-ur-wi-thë-cheez) n., arch. a game played between 2 children, linking arms and picking each other up on their backs by turns, while singing something like ‘Wey the butter, wey the cheese, yow up, mei doon, An this is the road ti London toon’ (see also rockety-rowe).

wha (whay) pron., arch. who – ‘. . . what compeiring judiciallie, confessed the said pettis in the noch . . . ’ [BR1638], ‘How this weary warl’ runs Wi’ them wha still are living’ [HSR], ‘Hard is the fate of that poor wight, Wha wad be unco willin’ . . . ’ [JR], ‘. . . Wha’s fame has reach’d the world wide’ [JLH], ‘. . . Wha winna’ join the fray’ [JT], ‘And wha were like the statesmen O’ the Auld Mid Raw’ [JT], ‘I was ta’en, I mind, as a lad-die Wha neither kent nor cared . . . ’ [DH] (cf. the older quha and the more common whae).

Whack (whawk) n. nickname for several of the Scott family who were milliners at 47 High Street in the early 19th century.

whacked oot (whawkd-oo’) pp., adj., arch. tired, exhausted, dead beat.

Wha Daur Meddle Wi Me? (wha-dawrn-mel-ul-wi-née) n. Border ballad about ‘Wee Jock Elliot’. The refrain is a Scots version of the Latin motto of the royal coat of arms ‘Nemo me impune lacessit’. Apparently the tune was played when the Liddesdale men marched to Hawick to muster for the ‘False Alarm’ in 1804. When Dr. John Leyden heard of this in a letter read to him at his sick-bed in India he leapt out of bed to sing the song with wild and enthusiastic gesticulations – ‘Oh, ma name it’s wee Jock Elliot, an’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T].

wha-div-ee-caaed (wha-dee-vée-kawd) n. whatchamacallit, something whose name has been forgotten, thingumajig, ‘. . . unless its a box that they’re nintent whatdiveecaud comes in’ [We].

whae (whë) pron. who – ‘whae din eet?’, ‘whae, mei?’, ‘whae let off and didni let on?’, ‘. . . Lang life tae the lasses whae bussed it again!’ [CB], ‘It’s me’, he focht at last ti say, ‘But tell me whae an’ what are ye?’ [WP], ‘. . . Whae wad ye say had won, my lad?’ ‘The referee’, says Dye’ [DH] (E.C. Smith notes that it was not used in his day as a relative pronoun, but only interrogatively; see also wha and quha).

whae’d (whëd) contr. who’d, who had – ‘whae’d hev thought it?’, who would – ‘whae’d dae seek a thing?’, ‘A wee group came in 1926, relatives o the men whae’d been killed . . . ’ [IWL].
whae-ever (whā-ī-vur) pron. whoever – ‘Whae-ver was responsible for suggestin’ th’ Remembrance Day deserves tae publicly thankit’ [BW], ‘Now Hawick’s aye chunked wi cars And the plan that wad relieve eet Means hevin ti move the Horse Whae-ever wad hev believed eet’ [IWL].

wham (wham) pron., poet. whom – ‘...ane people whom I haena kennet sall ser’ me’ [HSR], ‘Blisset is the man thom thou chusist ...’ [HSR].

Whames (whānzu) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley, between Whithope and Todshawhaugh. It is probably the seat of Adam of ‘Wamms’, recorded around the 1190s when lands adjacent to his were granted to the Priory of St. Andrews by Richard Lovel, Lord of Hawick. It is probably also the seat for ‘Henry (or perhaps John) del Whommes’ who was on the 1303/4 inquest into inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It was owned by Robert Scott of Muirhouse and Whames in the late 15th century, probably passing to his son, George Scott of Borthaugh. Robert Scott was recorded as tenant in 1501. It is listed in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615 among the lands that the Baron of Hawick held ‘in tenandry’. This may be the lands called ‘Quhomnis’ in 1528 when passed from John Scott of Borthaugh to his brother Walter. It is possibly the ‘Whelley’, which was burned by the English along with Braxholme and Whitchesters in 1533/4. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch, which were burned by a band of Englishmen supported by the Kers. Scott of Satchells lists ‘Scott of Whames’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch, and descended from the Northhouse Scotts (this applying to some time around 1600). In the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish it is estimated to pay ‘40 merks, vicarage 8 merks’.

In 1650 it is recorded as ‘Quhames’ on a list of communicants of the Borthwick and western Wilton Parish; 8 ‘communicants’ were recorded there, namely William Laidlaw, William Stewart, John Cook, Patrick Cook, Marion Hardie, Katherine Laidlaw, Marion Scott and Margaret Pott. It is likely the same as the ‘Quhalmes’ which were part of ‘Weyneslands’ in the Barony of Hawick, subject of several writs of 1654–55 in the Buccleuch papers. In 1672 and 1673 it was the ‘Rowme of Whelms’, formerly possessed by William Scott, which was leased to Ninian Elliot along with Todshawhill. In the 1686 confirmation of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is recorded that this farm was ‘sometime occupied by Robert Langlands in Todshawhaughs’. It is also recorded that Robert Laidlaw was tenant about that time (unless this is an error for ‘Langlands’). Originally part of Hawick Parish, it became part of the new Parish of Roberton in 1689/90. In 1691 it was recorded that ‘Whelms dissolved from this rental and annexed to the new rental of the Lordship of Hawick', suggesting that it was administered along with Hawick properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch thereafter. It was listed among the Buccleuch properties in 1707, when valued at £124 5s 8d. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 105 acres, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Todshawhaugh, Todshawhill and Whithope; it was also stated that there were trees along the Whithope Burn there, but no farmhouse at that time. It was leased along with Todshawhaugh from Buccleuch Estates in 1744 and 1751 by James Grieve, by Walter Grieve in 1792 and by Robert Scott in 1802. It was still valued at £124 5s 8d in 1788 and 1811. It is uncertain exactly where this farm was, but it came between Todhsawhaugh and Whithope in the 1686 rental list. The small stream 'Holm Sike', to the east of Whithope is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and may be the same name (it is 'Qhaimes' on a 1650 parish map, is marked 'Whommes' on Blaeu's 1654 map, between Todshawhaugh and Whithope, close to the Borthwick, and 'Whelms' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is 'quhamys' in 1493, 'Quhammis' in 1501, 'quhomys' in 1502, 'Quhomys' in 1505/6, 'Quhomyes' in 1508/9 and 1511, 'Quhammys' in 1510, 'Quhoomyns' in 1517, transcribed as the Quhanmys' in 1549, 'Quhomis' and 'Quhomys' in 1572, 'Quhawmes' in 1594, 'Quhammis' in 1615, 'Quhoims' in 1627, 'Quhelmes' in 1654/5 and 1686, 'Quhomes' in 1663, 'Whelmes' in 1686, 'Whelms' in 1677 and 1744, 'Whelmes' in 1705 and 1751, 'Whelmes' in 1707, 'Helmes' in 1802 and 'Whalmes' in 1811; the name could be related to Scots 'wham', meaning a broad hollow through which a stream runs).

Whames

Adam (12th C.) recorded in about the 1190s in a charter of Richard Lovel, Lord of Hawick, when he granted lands adjacent to those of Adam of 'Wammes' to St. Andrews Priory. Henry (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'de Hommes' in 1296 when he paid homage to Edward I. He was also recorded as 'Henry del Whommes' on the 1303/4 inquest into inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. However, there seems to be confusion over whether he was John or Henry. It seems likely he was descended from the earlier Adam. His seal attached to the Ragman Rolls shows a stringed hunting horn and the name 'S'HENRICI DE WOVVMVS'. It seems likely that his lands were Whames in the Borthwick valley, but there are probably other possibilities.

Wharton (whar'-in) n. Sir Thomas 1st Lord Wharton of Helagh (c.1495-1568) son of Sir Thomas, he was Deputy March Warden under Lord Scrope. In 1542 he described a plan to 'burn the towne of Awyke' in West Tevidell' in an attempt to punish the rievers of that area. The plan was further discussed in 1543/4, but it is unclear if actually happened. However, he did send a force to attack Liddesdale at that time, burning 19 houses, killing 2 men, and taking 3 prisoners, along with 240 head of cattle and a great amount of goods; as a result Hermitage Castle was sent pieces of artillery by the Scots. He was made Warden of English West March in 1547. He also fought at Solway Moss. In 1553 he was made Deputy Warden General of all the Marches under the Duke of Northumberland. He was later Deputy Warden to the English Middle and East Marches until his death. He married Eleanor Stepleton of Wighill and was succeeded by his son Sir Thomas. His tomb can still be seen in Kirkby Stephen Church, although the locals still blame him for demolishing the village of Wharton because it was a blight on the view from his house.

Whaup-nebbit (whawp-ne-bee', -bi') adj., arch. having a nose like a curlew, hook-nosed.

Whaup o' the Rede (whawp-ō-thu-reed) n. epic poem published by Will Ogilvie in 1909, subtitled 'A Ballad of the Border Raiders'. It tells the story of a child who was accidentally taken along with the spoils of a raid into England by Walter Scott of Harden and his men. The story derives from an old tradition that Mary Scott ('the Flower of Yarrow') raised such a child, who became a poet and wrote several of the Border ballads.

Whaupshaw (whawp-shaw) n. isolated farmstead in the Borthwick valley, near the head of Borthwickbrae Burn. William Inglis was shepherd there in 1851 and 1861. It may also have been known as Milsingtonshiel (it is 'Whap Shaw' in 1851).

Whaur (whawr) adv., arch. where – 'Whaur Teviot, Gala, or Jed's bonnie streams ...' [WS], '...Rypit the reid-cheekt aipples whaur they hung' [WL] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation).

The Wheathole (thu-whee'-hōl) n. name used up until the end of the 18th century for the area corresponding to Trinity Gardens, named presumably for being a hollow in which wheat and other crops once grew. It was owned by William Turner in 1767, in a description of privileges to Hawick Common enjoyed by various tenants. The East End Meeting House (later East Bank Church) was built there around 1780 – 'The Burgher congregation assembling at Wheathole was the second dissenting body which obtained a footing in Hawick' [WNK] (sometimes just 'Wheathole' or 'the wheal hole').

Wheeech (wheech) v. to move quickly, remove suddenly – 'she went wheechin past on her bike', 'hei wheeched eet away afore A could git a drink'.

Wheeg (wheeg) v., arch. to jog, frisk, dance about – '...coonjert wui its moween an its skeletin-maigs, aa the braw folk wheegin an dancin'?' [ECS].

Wheelans (whee-linz) n. James, C.B.E. 'Jim' (?–2004) born in Hawick, he graduated in law from Edinburgh University in 1935. He became a solicitor, ultimately being President of the Law Society of Scotland. He became Lieutenant-Colonel during WWII, being Commandant at Brussels after its occupation, for which he was awarded the M.B.E. His private legal career started in Galashiels. He became involved in the Law Society, and served as President 1974–76, for which he received the C.B.E. (the surname is a variant of Whullans).

The Wheel Causeway (thu-wheel-kawz-wā) n. old road, said to be Roman, running from Jedburgh over Swinnie Moor, through Rulewater and Southdean Parish and on into Liddesdale and England. It was known by locals as the 'Wheel Causey'. The road may have been a continuation of the Maiden Way, running from Lancashire to Bewcastle, then through Deadwater to Wolfelee, the track thereafter becoming unclear. It is suggested that it was used by the Romans, but was built by the Britons. In some earlier records it is termed the 'Via Regia' (i.e. King’s Way). It was used by Edward I in 1296 when he marched with his army from Roxburgh to Castleton and back again, referred to there as 'Wyel'. It was a route later used in rieving days, and was first referred to as the 'Wheel Causeway' perhaps in 1533. Part of it was also used as a drove road in the 17th and 18th centuries. Sections can still be made out, but because of the multiple uses over many centuries, it is impossible to trace the age of specific parts. In Southdean Parish the route north passes through Wauchope Forest via Wardmoor Hill and then appears to separate into 3 paths, one going slightly west to cross the eastern slopes of Wolfelee Hill, another proceeding more northward and the third going further east over Highlee Hill and Lustruther farm. Other branches are said to follow along each side of the upper Jed Water, one past Westshielis and Dykeraw Tower and the other over Millmoor Rig. Sections are also hard to trace because there were actually multiple alternative routes in places, e.g. on Causeway Rig in Southdean Parish, where there are at least 2 sets of tracks (it is marked 'ye wheele Cawsey' on Sandison’d c.1590 map; the origin of the name may be the Old English for 'wheel', but it seems unlikely that this was because the track was suitable for wheeled carts, as has been suggested).

The Wheel Causey (thu-wheel-law-zee) n. former name for the Wheel Causeway, used by locals in Southdean Parish – 'He also says that some stones of the 'wheel causey' were torn up to build the faulds' [GT].

The Wheel Kirk (thu-wheel-kirk) n. former church in Castleton Parish, which may have once been the main one in the area. It was situated near the Wheel Causeway and not far from Deadwater at the head of the Liddel. Apparently Edward I spent the night here when he was on a pilgrimage to St. Ninian’s shrine in Galloway in 1296. It is also mentioned in a document of 1346, where ownership is stated to belong to William of Emeldon. The nearby village was called ‘Whel’ and gave its name to the church. It was given to William de Sandeford by Edward III in 1347. The tower of Peel (or Baxtoullis) also stood nearby. The church was already disused when Castleton was united into a single parish in 1604, and is still shown on Blaeu’s c.1648 map. Over and Nether Wheelkirk and ‘Wheelland’ were once among lands held by Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. They are probably the ‘Quhytekerk and Quytyteland’ (mis-transcribed) referred to among lands granted to Scott of Harden by John Home, Abbot of Jedburgh, around the 1530s. The lands there were listed in 1632 among those owned by the Earl of Buccleuch. However the lands of ‘Quheilkirk’ and ‘Quheillands’ were inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden from his father Sir Walter in 1642. ‘Over and Nether Whillkirk’ was listed (along with Wheellands, Wormscleuch, Abbotsike and Abbotshaws) among lands inherited by Mary Scott of Bucceuch in 1653 and by her sister Anne in 1661. ‘Kirk Wheelland’ was listed along with ‘Nether Wheell’ in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch from the Scott possessions in the ‘lordship of Liddisdaill, abacie of Jedburgh, and schirrefdome of Roxburgh’.

Gravestones were still visible in the Old Statistical Account of 1793, and in 1880 the outline of the church was clearly delineated by changes in the grass. A holy water basin from the church was used as a dish in one of the cottages of Peel farm, but had been broken up before 1851. An old quern was also said to have been taken from the site, and several stones in the nearby sheepfold showed carvings. There is little remaining of the church or village, but an investigation was carried out by the Hawick Archological Society in 1914. A fragment of carved stone (specifically a voussoir) from the church is in Hawick Museum. The site was robbed for stone, and by the 19th century all sign of tombstones in the graveyard had disappeared. The remains are probably about 100 m from the north-east corner of the sheepfold, the building being about 12 m by 6 m, with an enclosure on its north-west side, 20 m by 15 m, possibly being the graveyard. There are also other enclosures, banks and quarry-pits in the area, probably associated with a former farmstead and perhaps the older village. Unfortunately much of the site has been destroyed by forestry ploughing. One theory of the origin of the surname ‘Whillans’ is that it comes from ‘Quheillands’, being the lands near here – ‘At Wheel-Kirk, within the Catrail, Priest David had thirty-and-three Gude fowt that were stown head and tail By Percy o’ Keelderstanelee’ [T] (the name itself is of obscure origin, but probably derives from the Old English ‘wheol’, meaning wheel, perhaps deriving from a circular camp; it first occurs in 1296 and is still marked on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland; spelling variants include ‘Wheelkirk’, ‘Whele’ and ‘Quhelekirk’; also written ‘Wheel Kirk’, without the article, and ‘Wheelkirk’ without the space).

Wheellands (wheel-linds) n. former name for lands near the Wheel Kirk, usually referred to along with those of the old church.

Wheel Rig (wheel-rig) n. ridge in the north-eastern part of Castleton Parish, between the Wormscleuch and Peel Burns, and with the Wheel Causeway running across it. It was ‘Quheilrig’ in 1623 when Adam Coltart was there. An old enclosure there is of unknown date. A little further north, at Wheelrig Head there is a linear earthwork, running about 650 m. The area was once used as a meeting point for shepherds in the area, who would gather there twice a year to exchange stray sheep (also written ‘Wheelrig’).

ween (ween) n., arch. a few, several, indeterminate but reasonably large number – ‘Peisooop, a wheen grand thing A faand thum’ [ECS], ‘A maircht eend ti the ‘Gazette’ Office, an bocht a wheen picter-postcairds’ [ECS], ‘…set a guid wheen hertstrings quiverin’ [IWL], ‘…bit they left quite a wheen offspring ahint thum that still leeve in the toon’ [BW1979], ‘…By a wheen o’ soople shanks’ [WL], ‘Let water-drinkers rant and whine, They’re but a wheen conceited asses’ [GWe] (from Anglo-Saxon, sometimes followed by ‘of’ and sometimes not).

weenie (ween-nee) n., poet. a little bit, small amount – ‘…O’ days a wheenie warm, the sun sae unco bricht’ [WFC].

wheesht (wheesht, weesht) n., interj. silence, quiet, hush, shush – ‘wheesht, wull ee no?’, ‘haunder wheesht’, ‘Wheesht, ye daft haveril, gie us facks …’ [WNK], ‘‘Mam – whae was ma faither?’ ‘Wheesht, lass … (ee’ll hev um wakent) … Howts – juist a ‘stranger’ in ma tei’’ [DH], ‘Wheesht, wumman – that’s aboot a’ she can get oot o’m . . .’ [DH] (also wheest).
Where Teviot Rins

wheest (wheest) interj., arch. silence, shut up, shush – ‘Wheest – now what’s that? [Both spring their weapons – Wat looks through the loop hole’ [JEDM], ‘. . .there’s often matters being discussed that we ken oughts about, and ee wad be best to keep wheest and no’ let on eer ignorance’ [JHH] (see the more common wheesht).

Whelpinside (whel-pin-sid) n. former farm in Feu-Rule, i.e. Hobkirk Parish. The precise position is uncertain, but it appears to have been west of Fernielee and adjacent to Broonsike. In 1413 there is a charter by Robert Colville, Lord of Oxingham to William of Symington for his lands at ‘Nether Whelpinsyld’. And the dispute over the superiority of the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1561 and 1562 lists ‘Quhelsynd’.

whereanent (whär-a-nen’) adv., arch. concerning which – ‘. . .the Baillies and Council hereby impower Bailie Roucastle and Walter Scott of Crumhaugh to concert with Robert Paisley, wright, anent the rebuilding of the Bailie’s seat . . ., whereanent they have hereby full commission’ [BR1734].

wherebie (whär-bee) adv., poet. whereby – ‘Thy arras ar sherp in the hartin’ the King’s enemies, wharebie the peiple fa’ anth thee’ [HSR].

where’re (whär-rur) contr. where are – ‘where’re ee gaun?’. Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet (whär-sli’-rig-in-teev-yi’-nee) n. song by Tom Ker, performed by him at functions of the Teviotdale Amateur Cycling Club and other venues (e.g. the Callants’ Club dinner in 1905), but then forgotten. It was resuscitated by Adam Grant junior, saved from memory, and notes of his father’s. It was sung again at the Callants’ Club smoker of 1949, performed by William Oliver. It was not included in the 1957 song collection, perhaps because some of the words seem far from Ker’s best. Ian Seeley provided a new piano accompaniment for the 2001 ‘Hawick Songs’ book.

Where Teviot Rins (whär-teev-yi’-rinz) n. song with words and music by Ian Seeley, written for Alison Seeley in 1994, and first sung by her at the 1514 concert in 1995. It is the 2nd of Seeley’s 5 Hawick songs, and the accompaniment being sparser than for the others.

wherewi (wer-wi) prep., poet. wherewith – ‘Wharewi’ thine enimies hae reprochet, O Lord; wharewi’ thay hae reprochet the fitstepps o’ thine anaintet’ [HSR].

Whether or No (whe-thor-or-nô) n. nickname for Bailie John Hardie’s brother.

whew (whew) v., arch. to howl, yelp – ‘As he bruisit and whewed the bullet-shells, and bang’t the drum away’ [DH] (cf. yuoot).

whey (whi) n. whey – ‘And bonny scab, bairn-high, Whiter than whey, On a girny simmer’s day Wi’ a tear in its e’ [DH] (note the pronunciation). Whey Brae (whi-brâ) n. former name for a road out of Denholm – ‘. . .scourin’ round the hoose ends for the Whay Brae, where he was sittin’ wuris’lin’ on them, an’ then for the Law’ [BCM1881] (the location is uncertain).

wheesht (wheest) adv., arch. silence, shut – ‘Wheest wheest whilk’ [JHH] (see the more common wheesht).

Whelyysey (wê-si) n., arch. a tub in which milk is curdled (in [HAST1910]).

the which (thu-which) adj., pron. which – ‘The which day the Baillies and Council unanimously appoint the two present magistrates of Hawick . . .’ [BR], ‘The qch day Robert Welsh in Fahnish . . .confest his guilt of fornication with Isbel Batie . . .’ [PR1720] (once used in a relative adjectival sense with the definite article; also shortened in various forms; see quhich and whilk).

whidder (whi-dur) conj., poet. whither – ‘Whidder is they beloefet gane, O thou fairist amang wemen?’ [HSR], ‘Whidder the clans gae up, the clans o’ the Lord . . .’ [HSR].

whiff (wif) interj. eufemistic ‘hell’, used to express scorn or disagreement – ‘ee er whiff’ (cf. the more common whuff).

whigmaleerie (whig-ma-lee-ree) n., arch. a vague, whim, a fanciful piece of ornamentation (see also kickmalleerie).

whiles (wîlz) adv. sometimes, occasionally, at times – ‘For ane that lo’ed ye dear, Ye’ll whiles drap a tear’ [JTe], ‘Whiles found half-dead, just in his sark . . .’ [RDW], ‘. . .but the meat’s whiles in ane door and the mouth in the other’ [RM], ‘And whiles wi’ frends frae ower the main Auld memories to revive again’ [RH], ‘. . .Whiles coursing through a placid pool, Whiles rippling o’er some pebbly bar’ [JCG], ‘And whiles in the glooming gray, Or the mirk afore the dawn . . .’ [TK], ‘. . .Whiles drank a stoup wi’ Dandie, And saw the yeomen thrang’ [DH], ‘The Dean’s still fine to look upon. The Slitrig’s bonnie whiles’ [WFC], ‘But aince and again their lauchs wad droon The dunt as at whiles they brocht ane doon . . .’ [WL], ‘. . .A’we whiles on waxcloth slied’ [IWL].

wilk (wîlk) pron., arch., poet. which – ‘The quhille day Patricke Richardson and Walter Graham the two present baylyees haveing conveined

whinger n., arch. a stifled bark, yelp — ‘A little, wee creature, … coming straight for him, whyles gie’in a whink o’ a greet’ [HAST1922], v., poet. to yelp, bark in a suppressed manner — ‘Butte aye he ran with whinkin scream, Till he drappit in a swoone’ [JTe].

Whinington Sike (whin-ing-tin-sik) n. stream in the upper Liddesdale valley, rising on Windy Knowe and running roughly westwards, just to the north of Thorlshope.

Whinney Cleuch (whi-nee-klooch) n. small stream in the upper Bothwick valley, joining the river on the north side between Meadshaw and Craik. It is fed by Moss Sike on the north side. The farm there was listed in the 1718 survey along with Craik. The lands there were leased from the Buccleuch Estates by Walter Scott of Merrylaw in 1744. The farm of ‘Whinnycleugh’ is valued along with Craik and Meadshaw at about £667 in 1785 and 1802, and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1779 it was among the lands liferented by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Woll. The stream is fed by Moss Sike (it may be the same as Wormiecleuch; it is ‘Winniecleuch’ in 1718 and ‘Whinniecleugh’ in 1744: the name presumably means the gorse-clad stream; it is probably unrelated to Whinny Park).

Whinney Park (whi-nee-pawrk) n. former name for a farmstead near Whitchesters. The lands of part of the estate of the Scotts of Harden. In 1779 it was among the lands liferented by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Woll. The lands of ‘Mabenlaw and Highchesters Whinney-park’ were valued at £327 13s 4d in 1788 and in 1811 at £312. It seems easy to confused with Whinney Cleuch, but is probably unrelated (it is ‘Whinny park’ in 1779).

whirken (whir-kin) v., arch. to choke, suffocate, particularly with smoke — ‘Butte a rumbling noise they hearde aneath, And a whirk’ning reek they fand …’ [JTe] (J. Jamieson notes, perhaps in error, ‘thwricken’ in use in Tevioldale: also whurken).

whirlagigg (whir-la-gig) n., arch. a whirligig, spinning toy, roundabout, hectic thing — ‘…if aw got the chance an’ was yibble tae participate in the whirlagigg o’ fun …’ [BW1939].
Whirter Dykes

Whirter Dykes (whir-tur-diks) n. alternative name for Thorterdykes (mentioned by William Norman Kennedy in 1863).

Whisgills (whiz-gilz) n. farm south of Newcastleton, on the Tinnis Burn. It was once home of a branch of the Armstraungs. In 1541 the lands of ‘Over Guhisgillis, Nether Guhisgillis, Purvanen et Vtomomound’ were valued at 9 merks and tenanted by Bartholomew and Ninian Armstrong. Adam Armstrong of Whisgills is recorded in 1581, ‘Lancie’ of Whisgills was one of the Armstraungs accused by the English of raiding near Newcastleton in 1587 and the ‘the Whisgills’ was included among Scotsmen accused of another raid in 1588. ‘John of the Whisgills’ (probably also an Armstrong) is recorded in 1601. Thomas Wilson was possessor of both Over and Nether Whisgills in 1632, with a separate entry for just Whisgills under the possession of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. John, son of William Wigham in Nether Whisgills is recorded in 1642. Robert Oliver and Alexander Wilson were recorded as Nether Whisgills in 1694 and Robert Blaiklaw and William Armstrong in 1698. John Murray was farmer at Whisgills in at least the period 1788–91. Thomas Murray was farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and still farmer in the 1830s. James Murray was farmer in 1861 and David Murray was there later. The New Statistical Account describes in 1839 how there was a cairn where ‘the quantity of stones is immense, and they are mostly of very large size’, with a 5 foot high standing stone nearby; this could be the cairns and standing stones noted on modern maps to the south of Tinnis Hill, just over the border into Dumfriesshire. The top stone of a quern from near the farm is in Hawick Museum (it is ‘Quhisgillis’ in 1581, ‘Whisgills’ in 1632, ‘Quhisgillis’ in 1642, ‘netheruhisgiels’ in 1694 and ‘Whisgles’ in 1797; it is ‘ye whisgills’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whisgills Edge (whiz-gilz-ej) n. hilly region on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, to the south-west of the farm of Whisgills (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey of the farm of Nether Whisgills).

whisht (whisht) interj. silence, be quiet – ‘Whisht! I hear his doggie barkin’, – Yon’s his bonnet on the hill!’ [JT], ‘…Whisht, bairnies, whisht! while frae her e’en Tears on the hearststone fa’ ’ [TCh] (variant of wheesht).

whist drive (whist-driv) n. a group of people playing progressive whist. This was a very popular form of entertainment in the early-to-mid 20th century. There were whist nights organised by several of the mill social clubs etc., and it was possible to play almost every night. There were prizes for the winners and often a booby prize also. It was effectively replaced by bingo from around 1960.

whit (whi) adj., arch. white – ‘Payd to James Simson for lintseed oyle and whit lead got to the weather-kok . . . ’ [BR1731] (see also quhyt).

100 ft obelisk erected to Gen. Sir John Malcolm in 1835 on Whita Hill above Langholm. It is locally referred to as simply ‘the Monument’.

Whitcastle Fort (whi’-kaw-sul-for’) n. hillfort just to the south of Denholmhill farm, on the north-western slopes of Ruberslaw. It has been mostly destroyed by Denholmhill Quarry, but a roughly 60 m long rampart on the north side of quarry still exists. It is unclear if the site is a genuine hill-fort, or a mediaeval fortified house.

Whitcastle Hill (whi’-kaw-sul-hil) n. hill between Chapelhill farm and Branxholme Easter Loch, containing several earthworks and settlements, which are extremely clear in aerial photographs. It appears to have formerly been known as simply ‘Castle Hill’. The ridge on the east side of the summit is the location for a particularly good example of Iron Age earthworks, consisting of a fort and 6 smaller earthworks. The fort is about 65 m by 40 m, with double ramparts and an entrance at the south-west. The other earthworks are of a range of sizes and shapes, some appearing contemporary with the fort and some later. There is also a linear earthwork round the ridge to the north, with a sharp bend in it. A finger ring found here was said to be perhaps Roman. There is another earthwork south-east of the summit, on a ridge sloping to the north-east, much denuded by ploughing. It is probably the remains of a settlement, internally about 47 m by 87 m and containing 3 possible hut scoops. On the south-eastern slopes, just north of the road, about 300 m south-west of Chapelhill farmhouse, are the remains of a settlement, known as ‘the Clints’. About half a kilometer to the west, and also just north of the road, is another similar settlement on an oval rocky knoll. It measures about 32 m by 27 m and has an unnamed tributary (possibly Whitcastle Sike) of the Newmill Burn passing round its west side. There are also archaeological remains on the neighbouring Todshaw Hill, and a little to the south was the location of a former chapel, possibly also built on the site of one more fort (the name is likely related to the nearby ‘Whitehope’ and ‘Whitrig’ as well as the former ‘Whitlaw’ which was probably nearby).

Whitchester see Whitchesters

Whitchester (whi-ches-tur) n. farm in Berwickshire, not to be confused with Whitchesters near Hawick. It lies on the north side of Black Hill, about 8 km north-west of Duns. The farmhouse was converted into a mansion in the late 1800s (it is ‘Whichest’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Whitchester-holm (whi-ches-tur-äm) n. farm tenanted by Philip ‘Faulo’ (probably ‘Fawlaw’) about 1510 when 4 horses were stolen from there by associates of John Dalgleish. The place is recorded as ‘Whichest-holme’, and it seems reasonable to associate it with Whitchesters, since Branxholme is mentioned in the same document and Philip Fawlaw is also recorded being attacked while riding to Branxholme in 1502. It was also among the farms burned by the English in 1533/4 (it is ‘Whichestre-helme’ in 1502). In 1533/4: possibly related to ‘howm’, meaning low-lying land near a river).

Whitchesterhooose (whi-ches-turz-hoos) n. recorded as ‘Whitchesterhouse’ in 1545 on the list of farms and towers in Teviotdale that were burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men. It is listed right before Timpendean, suggesting this is a place in Bedrule Parish.

Whitchester Lane (whi-ches-tur-län) n. street in Newcastleton, off the east side of North Hermitage Street, just before Whitchester Street.

Whitchester Retreat (whi-ches-tur-reetree’) n. Whitchester Christian Retreat and Guest House, located at Borthaugh House (and not Whitchesters, confusingly).

Whitchesters (whi-ches-turz) n. farm in the hills to the south of Branxholme, with a hill-fort nearby. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 243 acres, bounded by Alton Croft, Hawick Common, Newbigging, Raesknowe and the River Teviot. The lands were held by the St. Michael family from before 1183 until about 1445, when they were forfeited. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle. In 1399 Elizabeth St. Michael, widow of John Ker, resigned her lands there to have them granted to her new husband, John Maxwell of Pollock. In 1455 John of St. Michael was attested to have inherited his father’s lands there, valued at £20 Scots (and so they may have been in dispute). The lands were granted by James II to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1455, along with some annual rents in Hawick. The lands were held of the superior on payment, if asked, of a silver ‘denarius’ on the Feast of Pentecost. Technically it was for a while a Lordship, within the Barony of Branxholme. The traditional Lairdship of Whitchester (usually not plural) was transferred to the Barony of Branxholme in 1463, and is now held by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1470 the lands were promised as part of a marriage contract (between the heir of Douglas of Drumlanrig and a daughter of Scott of Buccleuch), to be held in ward and relief by William Douglas of Drumlanrig and his heirs. In 1484/5 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh had a charter of the lands and Lordship from his father David of Branxholme. He still held the lands in 1500 when he surrendered them to Walter Scott of Branxholme (his nephew) as security for a loan; the lands of Whitchesters are mentioned, along with ‘the husband lands of the town of Quhitchestir’. Adam Scott was recorded there in 1502. The Scotts of Whitchesters are described in 1507 as possessing a tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’, one of these presumably being the ‘Auld Brig’, but it is a mystery what the other one could have been. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, i.e. Douglas of Drumlanrig; this continued until at least 1615. It could be that the Douglases and Scotts both held part of the lands at the same time, since it was included in the list of lands inherited by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (from his great-uncle David Scott) in 1574. The farm was among those around Branxholme that were burned by the English in 1533/4. The lands were valued at 20 pounds Scots in 1553/4 and in 1627 were ‘estimat to 16 bolls in stok, 4 bolls parsonage, 7 lb. 10 sh. vicarage’. The farm there was long a tenanted one owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Jock Henderson was tenant there in 1628. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. It was still valued at £20 in 1653. The tower house of the Whitchesters Scotts was already in ruins by 1663. The householders listed there in 1694 were Alexander Thomson, William Bell, Janet Cessford, Walter Scott, Robert Scott and John Scott, with William Cowan listed among ‘the poor’. Tenants in 1706 included William Scott, Robert Scott and Alexander Thomson. Thomas Penman and James Gray were there in 1708. William Scott was tenant in 1709. John Turnbull was shepherd there in 1710. Alexander Thomson was tenant in about 1710, with John Bell also there. Alexander Thomson was there in 1712. The farmers recorded there in 1797 were George Scott and William Davidson, with William Elliot also there. Robert Griev was farmer in 1841. The Curds and Cream (i.e. the Friday ‘Hut’) took place at the farm there in 1846. The modern farm buildings are situated quite a bit to the east of the original farmhouse. Ancient flints and a small circular polished stone found there are in the Museum (the name means first occurs as ‘Whitchester’ in about 1383, and is ‘hawchester’ in 1502; other variants such as ‘Quichester’, ‘Quichesters’, ‘Quichester’, ‘Quitchester’, ‘Quitchestir’, ‘Quhitchester’, ‘Quhichester’, ‘Quhichestir’, ‘Quhytchester’, ‘Quhytchestir’, ‘Quhyttehe-stir’, ‘Quhitchester’, ‘Quhyttehe-stir’, and ‘Quitchester’ occur in early documents until the modern form from 1592, although it is also later still sometimes singular ‘Whitechester’ or ‘Whytchester’, or ‘Whitchester’, as on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is still ‘Quitchester’ in 1636 and ‘Whitechester’ in 1694; the origin is simply ‘the white camp’ from Old English ‘ceaster’; there is still ‘Quhitchester’ in 1636 and ‘Quhitchesteris’ in 1502; other variants such as ‘Quhichester’ were ‘hawchester’ in about 1383, and is ‘hawch-knee’ [ECS] (also written ‘wheat’; the past tense is ‘whutte’ and was part participle ‘whutten’, as noted by E.C. Smith).

Whitchesters Bank (whi-ches-turz-bawngk) n. former place name near Whitchesters. In 1790 willows were planted there, presumably to serve as a shelter for livestock.

Whitchesters Cottage (whi-ches-turz-ko’-eej) n. cottage on a farm track to the east of Whitchesters farm.

Whitchesters Hill (whi-ches-turz-hil) n. hill just to the south-west of Whitchesters farm, reaching a height of 259m. On the summit is a memorial cairn for Nan Lyle, unveiled in 2011. The granite toposcope that caps the cairn indicates the directions of local landmarks, as well as distant countries where work was done by the Borders Exploration Group.

Whitchesters Moss (whi-ches-turz-mos) n. boggy area by Sea Croft, above Whitchesters farm, originally being part of Hawick Common. It is mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common. In the 1777 Division of the Common, the south side was given to Robert Oliver, John Laing and Thomas Turnbull, while the rest went to the Duke of Buccleuch.

Whitchester Street (whi-ches-turz-stree) n. street in Newcastleton, off the east side of North Hermitage Street, opposite Montagu Street.

white (whi) v., arch. to whittle, pare – ‘Dina gaun an wheit ma kitcheen taibl, callant! That kneif’s a keindih daingeriss waipin thay’ve gien ee’ [ECS] (also written ‘wheat’; the past tense is whate or whut and past participle whutten, as noted by E.C. Smith).

White (whi) n. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Sandy Quhuyt in Foulton’ in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. Andrew (1819–49) youngest son of miller John. He worked as a baker. He married Christian Hogg, sister of George Hogg, manufacturer in Hawick; she died in 1882. Their children included John, Ann S. and Andrewina. He was buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as ‘Archibald Quhite’ in 1531 on a list of the occupiers of the lands of Newton in Bedrule. Claire (1888–) last person to be born in the Haig Maternity Home. George (16th C.) farmer at Weens, recorded as ‘George Quhittis’ when his barn and yard are listed among the disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1562. George (17th C.) tenant at Fulton in Bedrule Parish according to the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1716. He married Jean Scott in Cavers in 1709 and their children included John (b.1710), Margaret (b.1712), George (b.1714), Walter (b.1716), James (b.1718), Robert (b.1721) and Adam (b.1724). His son may be the George who married Margaret Scott in Minto in 1738. George (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1753, 1763 and 1767. He married Janet Gledstains in Robertson in 1759. He was probably father of Isobel (b.1753), Janet (b.1760), Betty (b.1763) and Jean (b.1767). George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Falside in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was an active member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. James (15th C.) resident of ‘aula de Roull’ or Hallrule. He was recorded in 1493 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for not producing him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He also failed to appear in 1494/5 and Douglas was fined again. James (16th C.) farmer at Borthwickshiel. He was recorded about the 1540s when John Scott of Robertson was surety for him. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it included Hassendean. In 1686 he witnessed a baptism for Hermitage Street, opposite Montagu Street.

White (whi) n. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Sandy Quhuyt in Foulton’ in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. Andrew (1819–49) youngest son of miller John. He worked as a baker. He married Christian Hogg, sister of George Hogg, manufacturer in Hawick; she died in 1882. Their children included John, Ann S. and Andrewina. He was buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as ‘Archibald Quhite’ in 1531 on a list of the occupiers of the lands of Newton in Bedrule. Claire (1888–) last person to be born in the Haig Maternity Home. George (16th C.) farmer at Weens, recorded as ‘George Quhittis’ when his barn and yard are listed among the disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1562. George (17th C.) tenant at Fulton in Bedrule Parish according to the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1716. He married Jean Scott in Cavers in 1709 and their children included John (b.1710), Margaret (b.1712), George (b.1714), Walter (b.1716), James (b.1718), Robert (b.1721) and Adam (b.1724). His son may be the George who married Margaret Scott in Minto in 1738. George (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1753, 1763 and 1767. He married Janet Gledstains in Robertson in 1759. He was probably father of Isobel (b.1753), Janet (b.1760), Betty (b.1763) and Jean (b.1767). George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Falside in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was an active member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. James (15th C.) resident of ‘aula de Roull’ or Hallrule. He was recorded in 1493 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for not producing him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He also failed to appear in 1494/5 and Douglas was fined again. James (16th C.) farmer at Borthwickshiel. He was recorded about the 1540s when John Scott of Robertson was surety for him. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it included Hassendean. In 1686 he witnessed a baptism for

Walter Crinklaw. He married Helen Miller in 1685. He may also be the James who witnessed a baptism for Robert Thomson in Burnfoot in 1697. James Oliver (1830–1901) son of Hawick miller John. He married Janet Wallis (or Wallace) Pringle in 1854. They emigrated to Australia, where he worked as an early photographer (from about 1862). He later moved to Otago, New Zealand, where he lived for a while at ‘Hawick Street, Roxburgh, Teviot valley’. James Pollock ‘Jimmy’ (1905–2010) Hawick man, known for his quiet and unassuming nature. He reached his 100th birthday in 2005, repeating the earlier feats of his mother and sister. He worked for 51 years in Lyle & Scott’s knitting department. He married Janet Telfer and had one daughter, Kathleen. He was a founder member of the Probus Club and spent much of his time in his Wellogate allotment. He died at the age of 104, perhaps being the oldest ever Teri. John (d.c.1683) tenant in Belses Mill. His will was recorded in 1683. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included Marie (b.1690). The witnesses were Andrew Scott and Andrew Riddell. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th C.) breeches maker in Hawick. The death of a child of his was recorded in 1790. John (1774–1836) miller of Hawick Corn Mill. In 1797 he married Ann Scott (1778–1852), who was sister of Dr. William Scott. Their children included: John (b.1798), who was also miller; James (b.1803); Andrew (b.1819), who was a baker. He is probably the ‘John White Mealman’, whose unnamed child died in 1808. John (1798–1866) eldest son of miller John, he was also proprietor of Hawick Corn Mill. He inherited a large sum of money from an uncle, Dr. William Scott, and took a lease on Midshiels. He is recorded as farmer at Midshiels among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840. He may be the John recorded as a meal dealer on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded at Midshiels, and is there in 1851, farming 157 acres and employing 4 labourers. In 1820 in Wilton Parish he married Isabella Oliver, said to be daughter of the miller of the Roughheugh Mill, but more likely daughter of John Oliver, from Ashkirk. Their children included: Anne (b.1821), who married Andrew Haddon; John (b.1823); William (b.1824), who joined the Navy; Isabel (b.1827); James (b.1830), who married Janet Wallace Pringle and emigrated to Australia; George Tucker (b.1833); and Oliver (b.1839). His wife died in childbirth in 1839. In 1841 he secondly married another Isabella, daughter of Thomas Wemyss (who worked at Wilton Mills); she was his 1st cousin. They had 2 daughters: Janet, who died in infancy; and Elizabeth Scott (b.1842), who married James Church and lived in Langholm. He is buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. Leonard (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Robert (d.bef. 1453) Burgess of Hawick. He must have died just before the ‘instrument of sasine’ in which he gained lands in Hawick from John Turnbull in October 1453, sasine being given to his widow Janet. His name is written ‘Wayte’ and the ‘tenement’ was on the south side of Hawick, between those of John Chapman and John Scott. Robert (15th C.) resident of Fulton recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was listed as ‘Roberto quhte de foulton’. George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 4 of his ewes from Bedrule. He was surely related to William of Fulton, who also had sheep stolen at the same time. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Todshawkip’. An unnamed child of his was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1721. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Ann Ruecastle in 1754 and their children included: Betty (b.1756); John (b.1757); and Jane (b.1760). John was unusually witnessed by the ‘Whole Congregation’. He could be the Robert, son of Walter, born in Hawick Parish in 1713. Robert (19th C.) historian of Northumberland. In Vol. II of ‘The local historian’s table book, of remarkable occurrences, historical facts, traditions, legendary and descriptive ballads’ he wrote an introduction to James Telfer’s ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’, describing some Borders stories relating to fairies. S. (18th/19th C.) owner of land in Wilton Parish, recorded on Wood’s 1824 map. His land was located roughly where part of the Mayfield scheme was built. Simon ‘Syme’ (16th/17th C.) from Alemoor. In 1623 along with William White he acted as caution for ‘Hob Wigholme, sum tymne in Ailmire’. Simon (b.1777) son of John and Agnes Larson. He was a weaver in Hawick. In 1800 he married Janet, daughter of Michael Anderson. His daughter Agnes died in 1801 and an unnamed daughter died in 1808. His father-in-law died in 1823, aged 80. Thomas (15th C.) resident of Bedrule. At the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh he produced a remission for common theft before his existing remission. His name is recorded as ‘Thomas quhote in bethroull’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) merchant in Jedburgh. In an assessment of the valuation of Roxburghshire in 17888 (and again in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he is recorded as owner of Wester Parkhill in Roberton Parish, valued at £66 13s 4d. Thomas (1787/8–1860s) from Southdean Parish, he was joiner at West Port. Probably the same Thomas was listed as joiner at Overhall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He was recorded at about 3 Loan in 1841 and the back house of 8 Fore Row in 1851. He was on the ‘Middle row’ as a joiner in Slater’s 1852 directory, but also on the ‘Front row’ as a wheelwright. He married Mary Oliver, who died in 1867. Their children included: John; Isabel, who married James Rae; William, James, Barbara, Agnes and Thomas. Walter (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Jean Ker in 1709 and their children included: James (b.1710); Janet (b.1712); Robert (b.1713); Adam (b.1716); Walter (b.1718); Adam (again, b.1720); Helen (b.1723); Jean (b.1725); John (b.1727); and James (again, b.1728). The witnesses in 1710 were the 2 Walter Paisleys in Weensland and in 1712 were miller Walter Paisley and weaver David Miller. Walter (d.bef. 1779) resident of Hawick Parish. He was already deceased when his daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1779. William (15th C.) weaver, probably in Bedrule. He was recorded at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Along with George Turnbull of Bedrule and David Waugh, also in Bedrule, they had remission for stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilnair, associating with John Turnbull of Gatehousecote, communing with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was George Turnbull of Bedrule. His surname was given as ‘quhyt’. Perhaps the same William ‘de fouldtoun’ was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 11 of his ewes from Bedrule. He was surely related to Robert who was also a Fulton resident in 1494/5. William (16th/17th C.) farmer in the ‘heid of the parochin of Hawick’ recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholm as owing him money for crops and teinds. He may have acted as Sir Walter’s factor or chamberlain in the outer parts of Hawick Parish. He could have been ancestor of the later William from Muselee. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) from Muselee. He acted (along with Syme White from Alemoor) as security for Robert Wigholm of Braidaugh in 1623. In the Circuit Court records his name is written ‘Quhytt in Muslie’. William (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. His surname was written as ‘Whitt’. William (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Clesspool’ in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He was probably tenant of the lands associated with Clesslee Peel. William (18th/19th C.) tenant of Denholm Mill and later Whinfield, he was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. William (b.1800/1) dyer in Hawick. In 1841 he was on O’Connell Street and was at 16 Buccleuch Street by 1861. His wife was Ann and their children included Janet, John, Ann S., James, Isabella and Elizabeth. William (b.1813/4) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on Silver Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living on Silver Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Janet from Hobkirk, and it appears that they had no surviving children. Rev. William Spranger (19th C.) Episcopal minister of St. John’s in Jedburgh, where the church was consecrated in 1844. He started a mission in Hawick in 1846. The mission proved so successful that the master of St. John’s School in Jedburgh was transferred to Hawick as the new Episcopal minister the following year. William (1824–53) son of Hawick miller John and Isabella Oliver. He was in the Navy, his last ship being the S.S. Inflexible. He is said to have caught some disease and returned to Hawick to die, his pregnant wife disappearing to London afterwards. His wife was Eliza Dearden (formerly written ‘Quhyte’, ‘Quhyt’, ‘Whyte’, ‘Whytt’ and variants).

Whiteacres (whi’-ä-kurz) n. former farmstead on the western side of Whiteacres Hill, south of Kaimend farm (marked ‘Whitacres’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whiteacres Hill (whi’-ä-kurz-hil) n. hill south-east of Hawick, beyond Kaimend, reaching 275 m and containing an ancient enclosure on its slopes. It is also described as part of the Kaimend Hills, and sometimes called the ‘second Kaimend’ (it is ‘Whitacres Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whiteburn (whi’, whi’-burn) n. farm on the main A6088 between Chesters and Southdean, near where the White Burn joins the Jed Water. The Manse for Southdean Kirk is situated just to the east. John Amos was farmer there in White Burn

1851. This could be ‘the Burne’ listed in 1571/2 among places where William Oliver of Lustruther was pledge for the Olivers there.

White Burn (whī’-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, rising near Highlee Hill and flowing north to join the Jed Water near Chesters. A field near the upper part of the stream is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and the area also contains rig and furrow lines and lazy beds (the stream is labelled ‘Whyburn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Whitcastle Fort (whī’-kaw-sul-fōr’) n. earthwork just south of Denholmhill farmhouse. It has been mostly destroyed by the large quarry to the south, with the only surviving feature being a rampart about 200 ft in length. It is unclear whether this is a mediæval homestead or an older hill-fort.

Whitcastle Hill (whī’-kaw-sul-hil) n. name sometimes used for Whitcastle Hill near Chapelhill farm.

Whitcastlepark (whī’-kaw-sul-pawrk) n. former name for a farmstead in Cavers Parish, situated on the Dean Burn to the west of Denholmhill, in roughly the same location as the modern Todlaw (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

White Cleuch (whī’-kloo) n. stream that rises on Harden Moss and Mabonlaw Moss and flows in a southerly direction. It is also labelled as Marchelton Burn on the Ordnance Survey map, as it continues past Mabonlaw farm to join the Harden Burn south of Harden Glen. The farmstead of Whitcleughside was formerly along its banks.

Whitcleuchside (whī’-kloo-sid) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley, just west of Mabonlaw. It was on the west side of the White Cleuch, a burn that flows past Mabonlaw to join the Harden Burn just above Harden Brig. It is shown on draft maps of the neighbouring parishes in 1650, with 2 ‘communicants’ recorded there, namely Walter Fairgrieve and Maly Richardson. It was part of Wilton Parish until Robertson was created in 1689/90. William Elliot was recorded there in 1727 and Robert Turnbull in 1761. In 1841 mason William Elliot and family, along with Charles Scott and family were living there (also spelled ‘Whitescleuchside’, ‘Whitecleugh-side’, ‘Whitscleughside’, ‘Whytecleuchside’, ‘Whytcleuchside’, etc.; it is ‘Whitecleuchside’ on a parish map of 1650).

Whitehaugh

White Coomb (whī’-koom) n. craggy hill rising 821 m above the Grey Mare’s Tail, just over into Dumfries & Galloway.

the White Dyke (thu-whī’-dík) n. ruined dry-stone wall around Hermitage Castle, probably once the boundary of the deer-park. It starts at the Hermitage Water between the village and the Castle, running uphill, then along Green Sike, turning west across the southern slopes of Hermitage Hill ending near Coldwell Snab. It is about 5 ft high and 4 ft thick and built of limestone blocks in a different style from the local farm walls of later times. It has been much robbed of stones, and hence its full extent is hard to ascertain. In its interior are other walls and ditches that are probably a deer trap.

white-faced (whī’-fāisd) adj. having a white face, in distinction to ‘black-faced’ – ‘An all-round increase of at least 4d. per lb. for whitefaced wool’ [HEx1917].

Whitefield (whī’-feeld) n. farm in the Yarrow valley. The ‘Yarrow Stone’ is here, near the main road, turned up by the plough at the beginning of the 19th century, along with some bones. 2 other nearby stones are probably related, the ‘Glebe Stone’ and the ‘Warrior’s Rest’. There were also formerly about 20 large burial cairns on the moor above, and it appears that the site was used for burials from the Bronze Age through to early Christian times.

Whitefield (whī’-feeld) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish that were owned by Lord Minto. In 1779 (and also 1811) there are 4 pieces of land listed separately (valued together at £190): Quarter of Whitefield House and North Croft Park; Langlands and Quarter of Whitefield; Howden and Quarter of Whitefield; and Quarter of Whitefield and House. It was among the lands formerly called ‘Minto Townhead’, which were inherited by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779 (it is ‘Whitefield’ in 1780).

the White Hart (thu-whī’-hawr’) n. 19th century hostelry at 31 High Street until replaced by the National Bank Building about 1870. It had a thatched roof and the proprietar at one time was Mr. Lake (although that could be an error for ‘Leck’). The property there was labelled ‘Turnbull’ on Wood’s 1824 map. Robert Leck was publican there in 1841 and 1851. It was also known as ‘the Buck Inn’.

Whitehaugh (whī’-uf, whī’-tuf) n. farm and mansion house (built in 1822) beyond the Dean, named after the white flowers (daisies etc.) which grow on the level parts near there. The road passing here used to be part of a drove road, avoiding Hawick on its way to the Borthwick valley. David Scott was granted the lands of Whitehaugh in 1479 and the estate was in the family for (on and off) about 400 years. Walter of Whitehaugh was recorded in 1488 as one of the heirs of Sir David Scott, although the precise relationship is unclear. John Scott ‘de quhilhalch’ is recorded in 1493 and John Scott was mentioned as tenant there in 1501 and 1502. Walter Scott of Whitehaugh sold the estate to his maternal uncle Robert Scott of Headshaw in the early 17th century. Robert’s son sold the lands in 1623 to lawyer Andrew Hay, who sold them to Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1656, and he sold them to his nephew Walter Scott of Headshaw in 1671. The 1643 Land Tax Rolls ‘Scott of Headshaw’s Lands, being Wester Whitehaugh’ being valued at just under £450, while ‘Scott of Park’s Lands, being Easter Whitehaugh, or Wester Heap’ were valued at £200. There were 13 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Thomas Scott, John Scott, William Scott, James Scott, Thomas Mitchell, Alexander ‘Aikeneid’, Janet Robson, Marion Scott, Margaret Easton, Bessie Easton, Agnes Thorburn, John Bell and Bessie Scott. James Scott of Whitehaugh is recorded paying £200 in land tax there in 1663. Scott of Whitehaugh paid the land tax for both these lands and Wester Heap in 1678, with joint value £648 10s. 5 separate households were listed in 1694, with Robert Brown as tenant; in Hawick ‘Leddie Whithaugh’ was taxed on 2 hearths for a house on the west-side. William Scott of Whitehaugh paid tax on 17 windows there in 1748. The first Seccession services in Hawick took place here in about 1770. In 1788 ‘Whitehaugh, now called Wester Whitehaugh’ was owned by John Scott of Whitehaugh (as well as Easter Whitehaugh), and valued at £448 10s; John Scott of Whitehaugh was still listed as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. John Hume was there in 1797. Walter Scott, Esquire, was there in 1841. The last of the family died in 1852, when the lands became part of Stiches estate. John James Scott Chisholme was listed as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. A circular stone pot lid from here is in the Museum – ‘Sall I come skirrin’ the braid muirs When the gloamintide is still; And meet the track aboon Whitehaugh Or the road by Chapelhill?’ [WL], ‘We’ve roamed far o’er the countryside, But the grandest to be seen Is the burn that takes our fancy, Frae the Whitehaugh to the Dean’ [WFC] (also formerly spelled ‘Whithaugh’, ‘Wytthauch’, ‘Wytthauchie’, ‘Whitehaugh’, ‘Whithauche’, etc.; it is ‘Quhitehauch’ in 1488, ‘quhilhalch’ in 1493, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1501, ‘quhilhalch’ in 1502, ‘Quhithauchie’ in 1510, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1580/1 and 1619, ‘Quhitheach’ in 1627, ‘Whytthauchie’ in 1648, ‘Whithaugh’ in 1692, ‘Wytthaugh’ in 1721 and ‘wythaugh’ in 1724; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as ‘Whithauchie’, and on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Wytheauchie’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Wytthauchie’). Whitehaugh (whi-tuf) n. farm in the Liddel valley, between Castleton and Dinlabyre. It is easily confused with the more significant Whithaugh, a former seat of the Armstrongs. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it covered 148 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Dinlabyre, Kirkndean, Cocklaik and a common (on the north). It included a small piece of land on the east side of the Liddel Water and the farmhouse is shown close to the modern Whitehaugh Ford. The land was said to be ‘much dammed by the water, and the pasture is sorry land in generall’. It appears to be the place recorded as ‘Wythauchie’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale (given the places it is listed near). It was then valued at 10 shillings and 8 pence and tenanted by James Armstrong. Given that it was then associated with the Armstrongs, it may be that the 2 places in Liddesdale with essentially the same name were once connected. Will Armstrong possessed the lands in 1632. It is probably the ‘Whithaugh’ where Thomas Armstrong was tenant in 1694. It is possible this was the ‘Litle Whithaugh’ listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Thomas Mather as tenant. John Telfer was farmer there in 1797. John Ballantyne was shepherd there in 1835. Gilbert Telfer was gamekeeper there in 1861. There is now a row of 19th/20th century cottages there, but there was an earlier farmhouse in the same vicinity (it is ‘Wythteachie’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, ‘Wheatheach’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is shown on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Wheeteagh’; it is ‘Whitehauchie’ in 1632, ‘Wheatheach’ in 1797 and ‘Wheatheach’ in 1861). Whitehaugh Aisle (whi-tuf-Il) n. isolated memorial at Whitehaugh farm, which is the burial place of the last 2 Scotts of Whitehaugh, Walter and James. Whitehaughbrae (whi-tuf-brä) n. former lands that were owned by a branch of the Scott
Whitehaugh Cottages

The Whitehaugh Cottages were once Crown lands in the Ettrick Ward of Selkirkshire (and hence presumably unrelated to Whitehaugh in Wilton), probably associated with ‘Whitehillbrae’ on modern map. In 1541 the wester side of ‘Warnewod’, ‘alias Quhitehauch Braa’ was occupied by Walter Scott in Synton, but claimed by Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, paying £24 yearly. Also ‘Quhitehill Bra alias Cathmurlee’ was tenanted by Thomas Chisholme, paying £35, with 3 steadings and the mill set by Patrick Wright, Chamberlain to the Forest. Thomas Scott was the first Laird at the end of the 16th century, passing the lands to his son Walter, from whom they were inherited by a cousin, Thomas of Salenside in 1621. This could be the ‘quithalch braa’ where Thomas Thomson was recorded in 1494/5 when he contributed a sheep to the inquirer court held in Selkirk (incorrectly written ‘Whitchauchbrae’ by Keith Scott, it is ‘Quhityehauchbraes’ in 1621).

Whitehaugh Cottages (whi-tuf-ko’ee-jeez) n. group of cottages on the left-hand side of the road just before Whitehaugh farm. There were 2 families there in 1841.

Whitehaughmains Slack (whi-tuf-mänz-slawk) n. pass to the east of Wiltonburn Hill and south-west of Whitehaugh farm (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whitehaughmoor (whi-tuf-moor) n. farmstead north of Whitehaugh, reached by the ‘Forty Fits’ track. Andrew Chisholme lived there in 1841. There are remains of 5 rectangular structures and a later sheepfold about 500 m to the north-west. Aerial photography has also shown at least 4 rectangular enclosures about 1.2 km north-west of the farmstead.

Whitehaugh Moor (whi-tuf-moor) n. area of moorland around Whitehaughmoor farm.

Whitehaugh Park (whi-tuf-pawrk) n. alternative name for the main house at Whitehaugh.

Whitehaugh Road (whi-tuf-röd) n. street built in the Dean in 1971 along the road leading to Whitehaugh farm (although the road was popularly given this name long before the houses were built).

Whitehaugh View (whi-tuf-vew) n. part of the Longbaulk housing development, constructed in 1970 and named for the view of the Whitehaugh area across the valley.

Whitehead (whi’-heed) n. James pseudonym of Dr. Dixon. William ‘Bill’ (b.c.1800) from England. He was said to be among the ‘finishers’ who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. He was listed as a ‘Fuller Journeyman’ in 1841, with his brother John having the same job; by 1851 he was a ‘Fuller Miller’. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Path-head and in 1851 at Roadhead. By 1861 his widow was living at 4 Tannage Close. His wife was Nancy and their children included John, Betsy, Martha and Janet.

Whitehillbrae

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill just south-east of Hawick, with a triangulation pillar and height 301 m. Note that this is a common hill name, including 5 others (listed separately) and another to the west going into Selkirkshire.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill above the Dod Burn, to the west of Penchrise, reaching a height of 397 m. It contains a linear earthwork (probably an agricultural boundary) running from the head of Pen Sike to the north-west for about 350 m. Another pair of earthworks cross the south-west shoulder of the hill, connecting a tributary of Pyatkowe Sike with the Dod Burn. There are also 3 other overlapping linear earthworks, although none seems connected with the hill-fort on the southern spur. Some of the earthworks were formerly associated with the Catrail, but they are of a different character. The hill-fort appears to have had a later homestead built on it; it measures about 60 m by 45 m, with double ramparts and a ditch. The homestead built inside is about 45 m by 30 m, with a hut circle and hut scoop inside that.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill between Cogsmill and Earlsdie, reaching 299 m. It contains an earthwork consisting of 3 ramparts and with a linear earthwork to its south-west, as well as cultivation terraces on the north-west slopes.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill to the east of Penchrise and south of Stobs, reaching a height of 311 m. It should not be confused with the more prominent hill to the west of Penchrise. On its north-east side is some kind of enclosure.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill behind (i.e. to the south-west of) Skelfhill, reaching 474 m.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill in Craik Forest.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 262 m and containing a hill-fort. Aerial photographs show extensive rig lines of various types surrounding the entire hill.

Whitehillbrae (whi’-hil-brae) n. former farmstead between the farm of Dodburn and Dodburn Filters, on the western slopes of White Hill. ‘Archie Elliott callit Possettis’ was recorded as tenant in 1574, when listed among men accused of being thieves who were to be removed from their farms. Gilbert of Stobs purchased 5 merks of land there in 1622 (without prejudice to Gavin of Brugh’s infeftment) from Robert Elliot of Red-heugh, along with Dobburn and the rest of the lands of Winnigton. Walter Scott was the ten-ant there on the 1694 Horse Tax rolls. George Pott (ancestor of the Potts of Caerleurig, Dod, Hoscopte and Todrig) was there in the early 1700s. Archibald Tait was tenant in about 1760. James Sibbald (the publisher) had the lease of the farm there for a few years until 1779. In 1788 it was valued (along with Newton) at £455 7s 4d, being an extensive farm on the Elliott of Stobs estate. It was still valued along with Newton at the same amount in 1813. It was occupied until the 1930s. The remains of the cottage and stone dyke enclosures are still visible (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Quheittilbray’ in 1574, ‘Whithilbray’ in 1622, ‘Whithilbrae’ in 1708 and ‘Whitehallbrae’ in 1760).

Whitehillshiel (whi’-hil-sheel) n. farmstead in Castleton Parish, south of Saughtree and east of Burnmouth farm. It may correspond roughly to Dyekcroft, as marked on Blueu’s c.1654 map. The top stop of a quern found there is in Hawick Museum.

Whiteholm (whi’-hōm) n. farmstead in South-dean Parish, on the side road from the A6088 to Hass on the A68. There are remains of an enclosure and signs of ancient cultivation there.

Whitehope (whi’-tup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, just west of Yarrow village, with standing stones and the Yarrow Stone nearby. These were Crown lands in the late 15th century, being leased to the Ranger of Yarrow for his fee. It was still crown property in 1541, occupied by Robert Scott of Howpasley, paying £24 yearly. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. There were Ballantynes there in the 1720s when the Abbot of Jedburgh granted a set of lands to the Scotts. This is probably an error for ‘Whelland’, lands attached to the Wheel Kirk.

Whitelaw see Whitlaw

Whitelaw (whi’-law) n. former place name in Melrose Parish, probably corresponding to the modern ‘Whitelee’ (the origin is probably Old English ‘withig hlaw’, meaning ‘willow hill’ and is first recorded about 1200 as ‘Wythelew’; there are several other places with the same name, e.g. near Duns and near Peebles, as well as others like ‘Whitlaw’ and ‘Whitelee’).

Whiteknowe (whi’-now) n. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Alexanderum Quhitalw’ in 1508 when he witnessed the sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. He could be the same Alexander who witnessed a charter for Archibald Whitelaw, Archdeacon of St. Andrews in 1493. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1505 charter of Bounraw, granted to Robert Scott of Stirches by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. He is recorded as ‘Andrea Quyttlaw’. Probably the same ‘Andrea Quintlaw’ was witness to the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale, as well as the associated sasine. Henry (b.1827/8) from Coldstream, he was a shoemaker in Hawick, probably son of Francis and brother of John. He was part of the firm of ‘Francis & Sons’, listed in Slater’s directory of 1852. This firm, with branches in Coldstream, Duns and Hawick, was dissolved in 1851. In 1851 he was at about 38 High Street, and employing 4 men and 1 apprentice. His wife Cathrine was from Jedburgh. John (15th C.)
Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1475. He may have been related to Archibald who was Archdeacon of Lothian in 1483 when he confirmed the charter transferring the half Barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw to John Scott of Thirlestane. He could be the same John, Rector of Pennicuik who witnessed a charter for Archibald Whitlaw, Archdeacon of St. Andrews in 1493. Mrs. Mary see Mary Shannon. Patrick (16th C.) Parson of Hawick in 1532, recorded in a letter from Lord Dacre to King Henry VIII. He states that on hearing of a possible raid of the Scottish King into Liddesdale, this parson ‘the Parsonne of Awyke, one Pate Whitelow’ and 2 Hepburns, kinsmen of the Earl of Bothwell, went to Hermitage to safeguard it from the King’s forces. His name was presumably Patrick, and ‘Whitelow’ may be the same as ‘Whitlaw’ or ‘Whitlaw’ (although a connection with Whitlaw by the Flex seems possible, but unlikely); a distant cousin of the Earl’s, Margaret Hepburn, daughter of Sir Patrick of Waughton, married Patrick Whitelaw in about the right decade, and this may be the same man. If so he was Sir Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk, who later married Margaret Hamilton, was accused of treason in 1567 for helping James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, and died before 1571. Patrick of that Ilk was also recorded in 1534/5 along with Sir Patrick Hepburn of Waughton, and several other Hepburns (some of them priests) for killing Gilbert Wanchope on the highway. And in 1526 Patrick of that Ilk was listed in a remission for Sir Patrick of Waughton, ‘Mr. John Hepburne’ (possibly the priest of Hawick) and others for assisting David Home of Wedderburn (also spelled ‘Whitlawe’).

Whitelea Gill (whi’-lee-gil) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Thorleshope Burn.

Whitelee (whi’-lee) n. farm near the head of Redesdale, just over the Carter Bar on the A68. It was formerly the site of a roadside inn. This is the area where ‘Parcy Reed’ met his end at the hands of the Croziers in the Border ballad.

Whitelow see Whitelaw

the White Peel (thu-whi’-peel) n. former popular name for the fortified house at Satchells, so-called because it was white-washed.

white puddin (whi’-poo-din) n. a type of sausage containing oatmeal, suet, onions and spices, also known as ‘mealie puddin’ and sometimes served battered in a fish and chip shop – ‘A’ll hev twae white puddin suppers please’.

whiterick (whi-tu-rik) n., arch. a stoat or weasel (cf. whutret).

the White Rose o Liddesdale (thu-whi’-röz-ô-li-diz-däl) n. nickname for Helen Elliot.

White’s (whits) n. White of Hawick Ltd., knitwear retailers at 2 Victoria Road, specialising in lambswool and cashmere. The firm was established by James White in 1968. It was later owned by Bill Atkins and sold to Locharron of Scotland in 2008.

white-seam (whi’-seem) n., arch. plain needlework – ‘Yince in a day the maist o this weite-seem was shewd be hand’ [ECS].

Whiteside (whi’-sid) n. former farm in the upper Jed valley, a little to the east of Chesters, on the north side of the river, between Roughlee and Falside. Patrick, Gilbert, Andrew and John Oliver were there in 1541. ‘Jake’, ‘Gorge’ and ‘Patte’ ‘Ollyver’, as well as ‘Eddie Ladlay’ were listed there in 1544 when they were among Oliver’s who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Dand Oliver was mentioned there in 1571 and 1572/3 and David Oliver in 1571/2. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards from his father John in 1606. Robert Laidlaw, Thomas Oliver and William Oliver were tenants there in 1669 and Thomas Oliver in 1694 (it is ‘Quhitesse’ in 1536, ‘Quhitsyde’ in 1541, ‘Whitside’ in 1544, ‘Quhiteside’ in 1571/2, ‘Quhitsyde’ in 1572/3 and 1606, ‘Whytysd’ in 1690 and ‘Whittsyd’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Whytysde’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and shown to the south-west of Roughlee on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the White Swan (thu-whi’-swawn) n. former hostelry on the Howegate. Also the name of a former hostelry in Denholm, now Leyden’s View.

White Well (whi’-wel) n. spring in southern Liddesdale, near the former farmstead of Powgill-craig, to the west of Burnmouth.

whitewesh (whi’-wesh) n. whitewash – ‘Dirty white-wesh, deid-rot treis, Baked bean tins and mawky fleis . . .’ [DH].

Whiteyetts (whi’-yets) n. local place of uncertain location, where John Scott was living in the late 1600s and early 1700s. Additionally George Turnbull ‘Young Whitegates’ is recorded in 1720, but it is unclear if this was the same place or not (it is ‘Quhites’ in 1680, ‘Whiteyetts’ in 1682, ‘Whyteyets’ in 1701 and ‘Whiteyatts’ in 1718).

Whitfield (whi’-feeld) n. farm about 2 miles north-west of Hawick, near Calaburn farm, and reached via the ‘Forty Fits’ track off the road past Whitehaugh. There are about 9 Bronze Age ‘cairns’ or ‘saucer barrows’ on the hills to the west of here, 7 on the north-east slopes of Pigsah Hill (although these have also been suggested to be ‘ring-ditch houses’). There is also the remains of an old dyke, about 1900 yards (1500 m) long, stretching from the headwaters of the Cala Burn, crossing the Wilton Burn near West Whitfield, and ending to the north-east of Mabonlaw; it was probably an agricultural boundary. Aerial photographs have shown an area of rig-and-furrow cultivation to the north-west of the farmhouse. There were 8 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Jean Scott, Jean Gray, Robert Tweedie, Margaret Brown, Thomas Hunter, Walter Miller, Margaret Miller and Isobel Hislop. In 1694 it was listed among the lands held by Langlands of that Ilk and there were 6 separate householders listed there. John Leithead was there in 1698. William Lorraine was gardener there in the early 1700s. Andrew Bell was there in 1709 and John Hendrie was gardener there in at least 1709–21. James Learmonth was there in 1713. Robert Scott was there in 1732, Robert Smith in 1751, Andrew Fletcher in 1759, John Scott in 1762, George Coltart in 1765, Walter Scott in 1770 and 1772 and Walter Rae in 1772. The farm was once part of the estates of the Scotts of Harden, with Walter of Whitfield, being the 2nd son of Walter, Earl of Tarras, and succeeding to the Harden titles himself on the death of his 2 nephews without male heirs. By 1788 it had been sold off from the Langlands estate and was owned by John Johnstone of Alva, valued at £352 2s 2d. It later passed to George William Hutton Riddell. William Hart was living there in 1790. John Oliver and Robert Scott were farmers there in 1797 and Walter Hume was there in 1799. Turner was farm overseer there on the 1841 census, when it is listed as ‘Whitefield East’. There are many other places of the same name (also sometimes ‘Whitefield’ and formerly ‘Whitfield’; it is marked ‘Whitfield’ and ‘Whitefeldle’ on 1650 parish maps, ‘Whitfield’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Whitefield’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Whitfield (whi'-feild) n. former farm in the northern part of Liddesdale. It is recorded as ‘Qwytfeld’, with a value of 20 merks, in the ‘Foresta’ section of the Liddesdale rental roll of about 1376. Its precise location is uncertain, but perhaps near the Hermitage valley.

Whithaugh (whi-tuk, -tuf) n. farm and former home of the Armstrongs in Liddesdale, just to the north of Newcastleton, on the other side of the Liddel. Note that there can be confusion with the less significant ‘Whitehaugh’, further up the Liddel valley. It was listed as being worth 4 merks on a rental list c.1376 among the charter of the Douglasses of Morton. As an Armstrong seat it was second in importance only to Mangerston. It was valued at £400 in 1678. In 1580 a band of Scotts and Gladstains, who were returning from following a party that had raided Whitlaw, were attacked here by the Armstrongs; Walter (or perhaps William) Gladstains was killed, more than a dozen others were wounded and about 40 men captured, including Walter Scott of Goddiedlands. The house was taken by the English in 1582 and burned in 1599. The tower was once raided by a party of men from Bewcastle, led by a Taylor, when Armstrong was away in Ewesdale; they captured documents that they later burned, resulting in Armstrong riding into Cumberland where he burned Taylor’s house. Andrew, Francis and John Armstrong, sons to the ‘auld laird of Whithaugh’. Lancie Armstrong was owner in the 1630s. It was valued at £400 in 1643 and again in 1678. It is probably the ‘Whithaughs house’ on which tax was paid on 3 hearths in 1694. It is said that tower was once used to obtain a commanding view of the horse races that used to take place on the flat land where Newcastleton would later be built. About 1730 it was bought by William Elliot for his eldest son John. John Elliot was taxed for 25 windows there in 1748. William Lockie was living there in 1746. Half of the lands were sold to the Duke of Buccleuch before 1788; in that year the Duke’s lands there were valued at £199 17s. The remainder of the lands were in 1788 owned by John Elliot of Whithaugh and valued at £200 3s. The tower was destroyed in about 1770 and stones used to build the new farmhouse, including an armorial stone dated 1552 and inscribed ‘BIGIT B(E) LONSI ARMSTRONG’; there is an original cellar beneath. John Elliot was there in 1785. It is said that Sir Walter Scott wrote parts of some of his novels while visiting Elliot there. John Elliot is recorded as farmer with 6 horses there in 1797, with Walter Elliot also there with 1 horse. John Elliot was listed as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when it was valued at about £177 (although he had sold off Snaberlee, and part was already owned by the Duke of Buccleuch). In the 19th century it was left to John Elliot’s nephew, William Keir, and later to Keir’s nephew William Little. In 1924 Little sold it to William Armstrong, who had worked as a detective in Shanghai (note the former local pronunciation; the name probably means simply ‘the white haugh’; it is ‘Qwhythawlgh’ around 1376 and is recorded in relation to the Armstrongs from at least as early as 1541, when it is ‘Whithauch’, although this could be the Whithaugh to the north; it has various spellings, such as ‘Whithawch’ in 1562, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1576, ‘Quhittachauchis’ in 1580, ‘Quhittachauch’ in 1580 and 1581, ‘Whitaugh’ in 1582, ‘Whetaugahe’ in 1583, ‘Quhythawch’ in 1587, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1592, ‘Quhithauchis’ in 1593, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1616, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1623, ‘Whithauch’ in 1632, ‘Quhithawch’ in 1638 and ‘Whithawch’ in 1678; it occurs on Sandison’s c.1590 map as ‘Whithaugh’, Gordon’s c.1650 map as ‘Whithauk’, on Blaeu’s 1654 atlas as ‘Whithauch’, although this could be the former ‘Whithauch’, with ‘Lit. Whithauk’ to the east and is ‘Witthauch’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whithaugh Burn

Whithaugh Burn (whi-tuf-burn) n. stream that rises on Priest Hill and Stell Knowe and runs roughly westwards past the farm of Whithaugh to join the Liddel at the north end of Newcastleton.

Whithaughburn (whi-tuf-burn) n. former farmstead near Whithaugh, on the Whithaugh Burn, to the north-eat of Newcastleton. Labourer James Elliot and family were there in 1851.

Whithaugh Mill (whi-tuf-mil) n. former corn mill attached to the lands of Whithaugh in Liddesdale, just north-east of the modern Newcastleton. John Graham was there in 1642. Robert Riddell was the miller there in 1743. Christopher Armstrong is recorded there in 1797 when it is ‘Whithaughmill’, William Armstrong is there on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, Walter Armstrong in 1837 and John Crozier in 1851 (it is ‘Quhithauchmiln’ in 1642 and ‘Whitthaugh-mill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whithope (whi-tup) n. farmstead in the Borthwick, on the opposite side of the valley from Harden, formerly in the Barony of Hawick. The outline of the farm was shown in a survey of 1718, with Whames to the east, Todshawhill to the south and Branxholme Muir and Parkhill to the west. At that time there was also a mill by the Borthwick and ash and birch trees, especially near the Whithope Burn and in a wood near the mill. The lands may have once been more extensive and have a long history. This is probably the lands of ‘Wichiop’ near Branxholme, mentioned in a charter of the Lovel’s in about the 1190s. Adam Turnbull of Whithope is recorded in 1390. John, son of ‘ade turnebule’ of Whithope was granted the lands of Hassendenbank in 1409. ‘Philippo Turnbul de Quhithop’ is first recorded in 1454. This Philip Turnbull, son of William of Whithope had a charter of the lands in 1456. David Turnbull was son of the Laird there in 1494/5. In 1500 Philip Turnbull of Whithope had the lands taken from him in part payment of his brother Ninian’s fine for raiding a farm belonging to the Murrays, with Whithope going to the assignee, Walter Scott of Branxholme; the lands were then valued at 400 merks and were held of the Baron of Hawick for a penny at the Feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist. Philip Turnbull was tenant in 1502. Whithope Knowe is the adjacent hill, and there was another farmstead there called Whithope Mill, presumably with a corn mill, and near to the river. A charter of 1502 shows the ‘20 merklands’ confirmed to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, and in 1515 they went to his 2nd son William (the charter being granted by James Douglas of Drumlanrig). They were still owned by Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, but held ‘in chief’ of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, and valued at £5. The lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615. The tenant in 1549 was recorded as Adam Scott, with other residents being William Elliot, Thomas Telfer, James Scott and Helen Scott; they were among those who complained that their lands had been burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers. There was a dispute over the lands between Walter, Lord of Buccleuch and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig about 1610. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. John Scott was tenant there in 1627. In the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish it was listed as ‘ane corne rowme estimat to pay 16 bolls’ in a typical year, ‘3 bolls in personage, 7 lb. 10 sh., in vicarage’. There were 16 ‘communants’ recorded there in 1650, namely John Scott, Adam Scott, Bessie Scott, James Noble, Walter Miller, James Scott, Malie Scott, Robert Miller, Adam Glendinning, Bessie Govenlock, Margaret Scott, Bessie Runciman, Helen Thomson, William Currie, Helen Wigholm and Isobel Almond. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Barony of Hawick. The lands passed from Hawick Parish to Roberton in 1690. Francis Scott was tenant of the Duchess of Buccleuch there in 1692. The householders recorded there in 1694 were James Scott, Robert Goodfellow, John Wilson, Robert Cook and John Riddell, with Archibald Douglas, Robert Lawson, James Noble and John Davidson listed there among ‘the poor’. The rental rolls of 1694 and 1696 state that ‘Fahnes [the Duchess of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain] is to see the wood fenced and hained’. Walter Scott, younger of Woll, was renting the farm in 1696. John Scott and Walter Scott of Merrylaw rented in 1698. This is probably the ‘Wheatoph’ where James Burnet was tenant in 1701. Walter Scott was there in 1703, James Scott in at least 1710–26, James Halliday in 1716, James Greenshields in 1717–21, John Murray in 1718–21, John Hume in 1721, John Wilson in 1722, Andrew Main in 1722 and 1728, James Nichol in 1734 and William Scott in 1742, Robert Scott in 1757–65, William Reid in 1757–63, Walter Taylor in 1761, James Scott in 1763 and 1766, George Coltart in 1763, James Crow in 1764 and Walter Elliot and Thomas Scott in 1767. William Miller and William Reid were there in the 1770s. Gideon Scott was living there in 1794 and Gideon Goodfellow in 1795–98. Adam Scott was tenant in 1797 and William Richardson was living there in 1808. In 1841 the Laidlaw family lived there, as well as pauper Helen Broad along with her daughter and granddaughter, and others. There are signs of a settlement a little to the west of the present steading – ‘...To Whitup and to Black-grain, To Commonside, and Milsanton-hill, And Eliridge is left all alone, Except some Town Lands in Lanton’ [CWS] (also sometimes ‘Whitehope’ it was formerly spelled ‘Quhithope’, ‘Quithop’, etc.; the name dates to at least 1390, when it is ‘Quhytthope’; it is ‘quhithope’ in 1409, ‘Qwythope’ in 1431, ‘Qwhithop’ in 1447, ‘Qhiithop’ in 1454, 1484, 1500 and 1594, ‘Quithope’ in 1500, ‘Quithithope’ and ‘Quithoph’ in 1511, ‘Quhiithoip’ in 1549, ‘Quhihoip’ in 1550, ‘Quhiethoip’ and ‘Quhiithoip’ in 1572, ‘Quhiithoip’ in 1574, ‘Quhitehoip’ in 1615, ‘Qhiitthoip’ in 1627, ‘Whitope’ in 1650, ‘Quhytthope’ in 1663, ‘Whitthope’ in 1686 and ‘Whitthope’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Whititup’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Whittop’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin is probably just ‘the white valley’ from Old English ‘hop’; note there are places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. near St. Mary’s Loch).

Whithope Edge (whi-tup-ed) n. hill among the headwaters of the Teviot, reaching a height of 475 m (1506 ft) and lying at a corner of the border with Dumfries and Galloway. The boundaries of Hawick Parish once reached this far in the southwest (also written ‘White Hope Edge’).

Whithope Knowe (whi-tup-now) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick, just west of Whithope steading. It has an enclosure at its summit, with some structures within it; this is probably a livestock enclosure of no great antiquity.

Whithope Mill (whi-tup-mil) n. former farm on the south side of the Borthwick near Harden and adjacent to the separate farm of Whithope. It once had one of the local corn mills. The position of the mill and mill lade are clearly marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch (when it was part of the farm of Whithope). There were 3 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely George Riddell, Margaret ‘Colban’ and Mary Riddell. It was a mong lands from Hawick Parish that became part of the new Parish of Roberton in 1690. Walter Riddell was living there in at least 1714–29, John Johnstone in 1743, John Riddell in 1765, another Walter Riddell in 1767–74, Robert Turnbull in 1780, William Duncan in 1781 and George Scott in 1786. John Scott was tenant in 1797 (referred to as ‘Whithope-mill’ in 1678, ‘Whithope-milne’ in 1690, ‘Whithopmilne’ in 1717, ‘Whotipmilne’ in 1725, ‘Whitewhop Milne’ in 1729, ‘Whitopmiln’ in 1774 and 1780 and ‘Whitupmill’ in 1808; it is just ‘The mylne’ beside Whithope on a parish map of 1650, is ‘Whitehopemill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Whitehope Mill’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Whithope Moss (whi-tup-mos) n. marshy area to the north of Branxholme Easter Loch and east of Wester Park Hill.

Whithope Sike (whi-tup-sik) n. small stream that runs past Whithope farm, joining Holm Sike to become Howford Sike and then run into the Borthwick Water (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whitlaw (whi-, whit-law) n. area in the Slitrig valley from Lynnwood to the Acreknowe Burn, rising to the Vertish Hill in the west. There was once a small thriving hamlet there, with a teacher in the 18th century. The name more specifically refers to the farm or farms of Whitlaw, near the bottom of the Flex road, at the edge of the old Common. They were owned by the Gledstains family in the 16th and 17th centuries, and then passed to the Duke of Buccleuch. Scott of Satchells lists Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw as one of the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch (the only one not called Scott), and suggests he had the lands of Whitlaw for his service. It is probably the ‘Manis of Quhytlaw’ recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when there were ‘nyne drawand oxin’ there. Sir Walter left the farm to John Gledstains in his will. In 1580 part of the lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell, when 100 sheep were stolen by a gang of Elliots and Armstrongs; this is in addition to the lands of Meikle Whitlaw being raided by a gang of English and Scottish thieves a couple of months earlier. The lands were said in 1627 to be '1 myll from the kirk, neuer payit ferme [probably never having been let to a tenant for rent], estimat to pay 100 merkis in stok, 2 bolls in parsonage, 5 lbs. in vicarage'. The estate of Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw was valued at £266 13s 4d in 1643. There were disputes over the boundary with Hawick Common; in 1668 the Council decreed to support the 'casting doune the dykes builded be Whitlaw and other adjacent nighboures upone the Common Dyke of the Common'. The estate of Francis of Whitlaw was still valued at £266 13s 4d in 1678. A sundial from here, engraved with the initials F.G. (for Francis Gledstains), the date 1693, and the motto 'Fide et Virtute', was saved from destruction by William Norman Kennedy and presented to the Museum collection. It is probably the 'place of Gladstens' listed on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with tax paid on 5 hearths. William Armstrong was also listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. James 'Colwort' (probably Collier) was tenant there in at least 1698–1702 and Dand Gray in 1702–09. Robert Cairns was recorded as tailor there in 1704 and James Gray was there in at least 1708–09. Robert Turnbull was tenant in 1725 and James Scott in 1766. James Knox, David Knox and Peter Scott were tenants there in 1797. By 1788 the former lands of Whitlaw had been divided into 'Meikle and Little Whitlawes', owned by the Duke of Buccleuch (and valued at £152 2s 7d) and Flex, owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae (valued at £114 10s 9d). Two farms here were long called 'Meikle Whitlaw' and 'Little Whitlaw'. The 2 farms were still valued in 1811 at about £152. They were still owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch until 1895, when they were exchanged for Fenwick with James Elliot of Flex. This was once the point where the boundary of the Common passed through a house, so during the riding of the marches, a sod was placed on the roof and the Flag passed over it. The area was used at the end of the 19th century for rifle practice by Hawick Volunteers. The 'Quhitlaw' recorded passing from the Inglis to Scott families in 1446 may be a different place near Branxholme, perhaps related to Whithope and Whitecastle Hill. However, 'Wygth law and Lytle Whetlawe the larde of Bowcloughes' were listed among farms burned by the English in 1547/8 – '...When, on their palfreyes, they wad soon Frae Linnwood skip, and Whitlaw-braes, Beneath the soft-eyed summer moon' [AD], 'And echoed sternly back by Whitlaw braes – Renowned alike for bairns, and nuts and slaes' [WNK], 'O happy were the days I spent at Whitlaw braes, Pu'ing haws and slaes, A merry hearted boy' [JCG] (also spelled 'Whitelaw', 'Whitla', 'Wytlaw', etc.; presumably named for being a white hill, possibly because of the white-blossomed blackthorn that grows there, although the Old English 'withig hlaw' for 'willow hill' is also possible; it is recorded as early as 1433 as 'Quhiteleaf', is 'Wytlaw' in 1564, 'Quiytlaw' in 1574, 'Quhitelaw' in 1580, 'Quhytelaw' in 1616, 'Quhitlaw' in 1622 and 1627 and 'Quhytelaw' in 1627, and has its modern spelling by at least 1660, although is still 'Quhitlaw' in Buccleuch papers of 1656, 'Quhytelaw' in 1661, 'Wytlaw' in 1672, 'Wytla' in the Hawick Session records of 1716 and 'Wytlaw' in 1738; sometimes transcribed, perhaps in error, as 'Whitfull' from early records; 'N. Wytlaw' and 'O. Wytlaw' are marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Whitlaw (whi'-'. whit-law) n. lands near Branxholme, probably adjacent to Whitrig. In 1446 the lands of 'Quihtilaw et Quihteryg' are listed among those exchanged between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. It seems unlikely these were the same as the Whitlaw on the Slitrig.

Whitlaw Bank (whi'-law-bawng) n. farmhouse off the main Newcastleton road shortly after Crowbyres Bridge.

Whitlaw Burn (whi'-law-burn) n. former name for the Flex Burn. It is so named in the 1767 description of the Hawick Common.

Whitlaw Gairdens (whi'-law-gar-dinz) n. street built on the edge of Hawick on the Newcastleton Road and named after the area in 2006. It is built roughly where the former curling pond was located.

Whitlaw Haugh (whi'-law-haf) n. part of the Common near Whitlaw, once used for shows etc. (e.g. for the Buffalo Bill Wild West Road Show in 1904). It is uncertain exactly what area this referred to, although it seems likely it was the flat land between the B6399 and the river, opposite the bottom of the Flex road. The name is also applied to a farmstead on the left-hand side of the road before Colislinn, presumably at the southern end of the Haugh. After the cottages at Stobs Woodfoot were pulled down about 1903, the joiners bought a piece of land here and built a joiner’s shop, as well as a smiddy (it is ‘Whitlawhauch’ in 1716).

Whitlaw Mains (whi’-law-mänz) n. former name for the major farm at Whitlaw. It is recorded in 1574 in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as the ‘Manis of Quhy-law’, when the livestock and crops there are inventoried.

Whitlawside (whi’-law-síd) n. farm in the lower Liddel valley, a few miles south of Newcastleton into Dumfriesshire. It was a former seat of the Armstrongs with Simon of Whitlawside and his close kin listed in 1583. ‘Sime of Whitiesdds’ tower is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the debatable land, and he is listed as ‘Sym in Qhihtley Syde’ in Monipennie’s Border chief’s list of c.1594. There are Wigholms there in 1622. ‘Geyrdy’ (probably Armstrong) of Dykeraw and Whitlawside was tried for resetting cattle in 1633. A later tenant named Simon Armstrong is recorded in 1642 and 1646. The lands are listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. John Armstrong of Sorbie leased the farms of Over and Nether ‘Whitlawsyde’ from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1673. There were generations of Scoons there from the late 18th century (it is ‘Qhihtlesyd’ in 1605, ‘Qhihtlesyd’ in 1622, ‘Whytlysyd’ in 1633, ‘Qhihtlesyside’ in 1642, ‘Whitlysde’ in about 1645, ‘Qhihtlesyd’ in 1663 and ‘Whitleasid’ in 1792).

Whitlaw Slap (whi’-law-sláp) n. small stream that joins the Flex Burn at Whitlaw and effectively marking part of the old boundary of the Common. It is marked on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777, running roughly southeast from the back of the Vertish Hill to join the Flex Burn to the west of Meikle Whitlaw. Farm draining must have obliterated much of its course, since it is now scarcely visible.

Whitlaw Wud (whi’-law-wud) n. proper name for the wooded area that was more often known as the Duke’s Wud. The wood has been felled frequently, leading to a diversity of plant species. There have been several botanical surveys there from the 1970s. It is partly a reserve of the Scottish Wildlife Trust.

Whitmuir (whi’-mewr) n. lands just to the east of Selkirk Common. This is probably the ‘Whither’ granted to Kelso Abbey around 1150. A tower near there was said to have been built in 1250 and pulled down in the 18th century. William Ker was there in 1494/5. A branch of the Ker family acquired the lands in 1566 from the Condemitator of Kelso Abbey. This include Whitmuir Hall, further to the east. James Ker is recorded there in 1663, with Whitmuir Hall owned by Andrew Ker of Maisondieu. In 1678 John Currer paid tax on £392 13s 4d for Whitmuir and Samuel Morrison paid tax on £281 at Whitmuirhall. John Goudie (Divinity Professor from Edinburgh University) acquired the property in the mid-1700s from the last representative of Thomas Ker. In 1760 it was bought by James Dunlop, and passed down through that family until sold by Archibald in 1818, with Whitmuir Hall continuing to be held by the Dunlops for another couple of generations.

Whitriggs (whi’-, whit-rig) n. another name for Whitriggs.

Whitrig (whi’-, whit-řig) n. wood on the Chisholm estate, near Chapel Hill. This may be the ‘Quitrig’ in the barony of Hawick, mentioned as an Inglis possession in a 1435 charter, and among the lands swapped by Inglis of Manor for lands belonging to Scott of Buccleuch in Lanarkshire; in this charter it is listed along with Whitlaw, which was presumably adjacent. It is also recorded as ‘Quhitrig’ in the Barony of Branxholme in a contract of 1482 between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme. The lands were part of the Harden estates and were passed from Sir William Scott of Harden to his son Sir William in 1649 – ‘...And or we passed the Whitrig road A mirky lap cam doun’ [WL] (it is ‘Quitrig’ in 1435, ‘Qhihteryg’ in 1446, ‘Whitrig’ in 1649 and ‘Qhiritrik’ in 1511; it is also the name of a bog on the road to Smallholm, famous for its bird life).

Whitriggs (whi’-, whit-řigz) n. farm to the east of Cavers, in Kirkton Parish. Whitriggs Cottages are between Whitriggs and Effedge. It was listed as part of the ancient holdings of Douglas of Cavers in 1509/10, dating back to the time of King David. In about 1541 James Douglas of Cavers and others complained that ‘a peil and hous of stane’ there, valued at £20, had been burned by Scott of Buccleuch. It was also burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. There are deeds in the Douglas of Cavers papers for the years 1527, 1530, 1570 and 1620. William Douglas of Whitriggs is recorded there in 1601 and 1612. It was owned by Douglas of Cavers in the 1643 and 1678 county valuations. Douglas of Cavers paid the land tax on £195 there in 1663. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. There was additionally a merkland of land there that was part of the kirklands of Cavers, called ‘Housie’ in 1698. 7 individuals are listed there on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John Douglas was there in 1716, James Huntly in 1720, John Turnbull was a mason there in 1721 and Robert Temple and Gideon Scott were there in 1737. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. Andrew Currer was tenant there in the 1780s. Henry Turnbull was farmer there in at least the period 1791–97. Thomas Blyth was farmer there in the early part of the 19th century, with his nephew William Blyth taking over around the 1850s. It was still part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in the 1870s. Flints found there are in Hawick Museum, and a flint knife and arrowheads in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland (also ‘Whitrick’ etc. in earlier documents; it first appears as ‘Quhitrig’ in 1509/10, is ‘Quhitrik’ in 1511, ‘Quhittrig’ in 1541, ‘Whitrick’ in 1545, ‘Quhitrik’ in the later 16th century, ‘Whytrige’ in 1687, ‘Whytrig’ in 1698, ‘Whitridge’ in 1694 and 1716, ‘Whitrich’ in 1721, ‘Whitridge’ in 1737 and ‘Whitrig’ in 1797; it is ‘Whytrig’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Whittrigg’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Whitrope (whi-trup) n. area around Whitrope Cottages and Whitropefoot, about 12 miles south of Hawick along the Newcastleton Road. The farm there is listed as ‘Wytwrahop’ in the c.1376 rental of Liddesdale, valued at 8 merks. It was still valued at 8 merks on the 1541 rental roll when the tenants were William Elliot in Ramsiegill, Leon, John, Robert and (another) Leon. It is probably the ‘Quhithop’ (with the ‘r’ missing) listed in 1632 along with Stichelhill and ‘Laidhop’ as lands in Liddesdale (among the rentals of Kelso Abbey) owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1718 it was combined with Laidlawhope in the farm of Stitchilhill, with the farmhouse marked near the modern Whitropefoot. The area changed dramatically in 1859 when it became a centre for navvies working on the nearby tunnel and viaduct on the railway. More than 100 huts were built, along with a carpenter’s shop, blacksmith’s and Jamieson’s store, arranged around a square with a belfry in the middle. Huts typically contained a married couple and children in one room, and several lodgers in the other. The village was temporary, however, since the railway was completed by 1862. 4 flints found near here are in Hawick Museum, as well as a spear-head, was subject of a ‘treasure trove’ dispute in 1861 (also spelled ‘Whitterhope’ and ‘Whiterope’, it is ‘Whytrerope’ and ‘Quhitterhop’ in 1541; it is marked ‘Whitrupp’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Whitrope Tunnel (whi-trup-tu-nul) n. railway tunnel on the Waverley Line, about 12 miles south of Hawick, being 1,208 yards (1104 m) long, and constructed underneath Sandy Edge. There were numerous casualties during its construction, (whit-, whi'-sheelz) n. area just north of Langholm, to the east of the A7, now marked by Whitshiels Bog and Whitshiels Knowe. It was leased to Walter Scott (but it is not clear which one) in 1494. The superiority was inherited in 1550 by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert Maxwell in 1619 and by John, Earl of Nithdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithdale in 1696. The farm was owned by the Scots of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1661. William Armstrong of 'Kirktown' was there in about 1641. There were Elliotts there in the 17th century (it is 'Quhitecheselis' in 1494, 'Quhichtheis' in 1550, 'Quhichtsheilis' in 1641 and 'Whytseilis' in 1661; it is marked 'Whytsheds' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Whitshields' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).
Whitshiels

Whitside (whi'-sid) n. farm on the upper Jed Water, also known as Whiteside.

Whitslade (whi'-slad) n. former 16th century tower in the Ale valley, about 6 miles west of Hawick, also known as 'Whitslades', the area now being a farm of the same name. The name is first recorded as 'Whitslade in Alne' in the reign of William I in a document describing the boundaries of lands granted to Orm of Askirk, and another royal charter granting the lands to Andrew, son of 'Uviet' in about 1173. The boundaries of the lands are described there, although some of the place names are not recognisable. The 'petra stante' (possibly 'standing stone') between Whitslade and Alemoor is mentioned, as well as the Langhope Burn, another stream called 'Harwude', 'Condosum', 'Wiuenesae' and 'Blake-dei'. The house there was burned by a group of Armstrongs and Hector Lauder in Clerklands some time before 1502; they also stole 16 cows, 2 horses and goods. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) appear to have passed from the Erskines to John Cockburn of Ormiston in 1507/8. It may be that Walter of Synton (who married a daughter of Cockburn) gave up Synton to his son John, and resided himself at Whitslade. Walter's second wife, Margaret Riddell died at Whitslade in 1585. The first Scott of Whitslade was Walter 'The Hawke', son of Robert of Stiches, who held the Lairdship from 1575. The superiority of the lands resided with the Erskines, and was part of the Earldom of Mar in 1635. In 1643 the Roxburghshire teinds were valued at £80 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. The estate was valued at £586 in about 1663. Thomas Scott paid land tax on £1048 10s in 1678 and the lands in Selkirkshire belonging to the Laird of Whitslade were valued at £2168 in that year. Tax was paid on 17 hearths on the estate in 1694. In 1707 the Roxburghshire estate of the Laird of Whitslade was valued at £786 8s, and the lands liferented by Lady Whitslade at £262 2s. The estate was finally sold off by John Scott in 1722. It was then owned by the Adam family, and passed to the Venners through marriage. Tax was paid on 15 windows in 1748. Francis Riddell was recorded there in 1753. James Anderson was farmer there in at least 1792–97. In 1803 it was valued at about £267. The motto of this branch of the Scots of Whitslade was 'Amore Patriæ'. Essentially the same Scotts also owned the estate of Stiches for about 200 years, selling it to Walter Chisholme in about 1660. The tower stood beside a small stream that runs east into the Ale, close to the present-day farmhouse. In 1502 it was burned by Hector Lauder (in Clerklands) along with a band of Armstrongs. John Kerr of Gogar received the monies for 'non-entry' in the 1660s. The lands were sold to James Adam in 1723, as confirmed by the superiors, the Erskines. It was then owned by John Adam, and passed to the Venners through marriage. James Anderson was there in 1786. The Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858 says that the foundations of the tower were dug up 'some years ago' for the sake of the lime. In the first half of the 20th century the foundations could still be traced under an ash tree in the garden to the south of the farmhouse. Today only a set of indistinct bankings and turf walls can be made out in this general area. It has been suggested that there may once have been an extensive lake to the east of the farm. A dormer pediment with fleur-de-lys finial (as well as perhaps a cross) from there) is preserved in the Museum. The Laird of Whitslade (probably Thomas, who died in 1671) was sung about in a ballad (probably written by Scott of Satchells) – ‘...Whitslades, wi’ mony a sigh and groan’, thought to be written by Walter Scot of Satchells – ‘Craik-cross repent, Eldon relent, And so may Etrick-head; – Let Ruberslaw to Jedburgh shaw, Sad news, that Whitslade’s dead’ [CWS]. A local version of the ballad ‘Ewe-buchts’ (or ‘The Broom...
Whitsun (whit-sun) n. short form of Whitsunday.

Whitsunday (whit-sun-dā) n. one of the Scottish quarter days, typically when annual rents were due. It originally fell on 26th May, but shifted to 15th May in 1752, with the adoption of the Gregorian Calendar. The date is close to the seventh Sunday after Easter, which is also known as Pentecost, a Christian feast. It is also known as ‘Whit’ or ‘Whitsun’. In 1886 all of the Scottish ‘term days’ were set to be the 28th of the appropriate month. This was the day on which it was formerly common to see the families of shepherds and other farm labourers travelling by cart between farms – ‘...that is to say Witsunday and Martynses in wynir, be twa ewynly porcionis ...’ [DoR1445] (see also Whiussunday).

Whittle (whi-tul) n. Thomas (18th C.) groom at Cavers in 1794, when he was working for George Douglas. His name was recorded as ‘Whetle’.

Whitton (whi-in) n. farm south of Morebattle, between Oxnam and Hownam. The lands there were long the property of the Riddells of Riddell and Whiton and were once split into Over Whitton and Nether Whiton, which were annexed to the Barony of Riddell. There were Davidsions recorded farming there in 1494/5. The lands were valued at £1600 in 1643, when owned by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk. The name is preserved in the hamlet of Over Whitton, as well as Whiton Edge and Whiton Loch (it was formerly ‘Quhittoun’ and variants; the origin of the name is either ‘Whita’s farm’ or ‘white farm’ in Old English; it first occurs as ‘Wittunes’ in 1156).

Whitworth (whi-wurth) n. William (b.c.1785) from England, he was innkeeper at the Plough Inn in Lilliesleaf in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and they had children Isabella, Ann and Robert.

the whole o (thu-hōl-ō) adj. all of something – ‘Examples of the Hawick usage of the phrase are:– Oo’ve gaen wu the whole o thon bannih; oo’ve gaen wu the whole o thon sheivs o bannih’ [ECS] (used more commonly than in standard English; see also hale).

Whullans

Whullans (whu-linz) n. (Whillans) Aaron (1766–1856) son of Robert and Janet Scott. His forename is said to have come through the Scott family. He may have worked as a drover and lived at Turnpikeside in Southdean Parish. He married Margaret Swan (who was surely related to his aunt Mary Swan). His children included: an unnamed girl; Jennet (b.1796), who married Andrew Hume; Robert (b.1798); William (b.1800), who married Isabella Riddell; Thomas, who died young; Agnes (b.1804), who married John Murray; Nelly (b.1806); Aaron (b.1808); Thomas (b.1811), who married Helen Brown; and James (b.1813), who married Mary Lawrie. Charles Noel ‘Chuck’ (1924–2018) local knitwear retailer and Common Riding stalwart. His father was John Bell and he was great-grandson of Kinly Stick. He and his family have been involved in owning and training racehorses. He was Cornet in 1948 and in 1967 was Acting Father to George Peden, son of the man who was his own Acting Father. He was also President of the Mosstroopers’ and Callants’ Clubs and Common Riding Master of Ceremonies for 18 years. He was one of the men who rode the marches during WWII. He donated a new Common Riding flag in 1992. He rode during the Common Riding in his jubilee year and celebrated 50 years as Acting Father in 2017. He was also a President of Hawick R.F.C. He married Nan and has children Alister, Donald and Ian. Christopher Glendinning (b.1876) born at Bewliehill, Lilliesleaf. He worked as a builder and as a tenant farmer. He married Elizabeth B. Steadman in 1898. He had 3 sons: John ‘Jack’ Glendinning, who had a shop in Hawick; Robert Glendinning (1901–58), who emigrated to Australia in the 1930s and died there; and Christopher G. (d.1968), who had a grocer’s shop on Havelock Street. Cuthbert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Glendinning and their son John (possibly the later baker) was baptised in 1657. Walter (who married Margaret Lamb) was probably another son. The witnesses in 1657 were James and John. Cuthbert (17th C.) resident of Northbank in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His name is among those crossed out (presumably to be entered again on another page); it is written ‘Culbert whilands’. It seems likely he was related to (or the same as) the earlier man from Hawick Parish. Cuthbert (b.1718) baptised in Jedburgh Parish, son of William, who was a weaver at Firbank. In 1744 at Elsdon in Northumberland he married Elizabeth Robson and they had at least 5 children. His name is sometimes written ‘Culbert’. George (b.1758) son of William and Elizabeth Kerr, he was born in Cavers Parish.

George (b.1758) son of William and Elizabeth Kerr, he was born in Cavers Parish.
He moved to London, where he married Eleanor ‘Haston’ in 1786. Their children included William (b.1787), Eleanor Merrylees (b.1789), George (b.1791) and James (b.1794). George ‘Kingly Stick’ (1818–81) born in Kirkton Parish, son of Richard ‘Willans’, who was a molecatcher and his 2nd wife, Mary Miller. He was the model for the character in Easton’s song ‘Kingly Stick’. He appears to have also been known as ‘Dick’ or ‘Pim’. Although working as a stocking-maker, he was a well known local poacher, often escaping punishment by knowing about loopholes in the law. He was also fond of quoting poetry. He joined the Dumfries Militia at its formation, but military life did not suit him. His nickname came from the name he gave to an old flint gun, ‘the Kinly Stick’, which he used for poaching. in Hawick. He was living with his mother and siblings on the Mid Raw in 1841, in 1851 he was living at the Back Row, at 2 Fore Row in 1861 and by 1881 he was at 10 Kirk Wynd. He married Helen Turnbull, who was born in Edinburgh, and she died in 1875, aged 55. Their children included: Margaret (b.1840); Elizabeth (b.1843/4); Richard (b.1845/6); John (b.1848/9); James (b.1851); and William (b.1853/4). In 1875 he was living at Kirk Wynd when he was charged in the death of his wife Helen, who had been found in her bed covered in blood; he was found not guilty of his wife Helen, who had been found in her bed covered in blood; he was found not guilty of his wife Helen, who had been found in her bed covered in blood; he was found not guilty of his wife Helen, who had been found in her bed covered in blood; he was found not guilty of his wife Helen, who had been found in her bed covered in blood; he was found not guilty of his wife Helen, who had been found in her bed covered in blood; he was found not guilty of his wife Helen, who had been found in her bed covered in blood; he was found not guilty of his wife Helen, who had been found in her bed covered in blood; he was found not guilty of his wife Helen, who had been found in her bed covered in blood. He himself died after falling down some stairs. Irving (b.1938/9) son of John ‘Jack’ Glendinning and Netta Irvine. He was known locally as an arsonist, responsible for at least a couple of mill fires, pleading guilty to setting fire to Wilson & Glenny’s. He ironically died in an accidental fire in his flat on Allars Bank. James (16th/17th C.) servant of John Watson in Coldingham. He was recorded ‘as ‘Quhillans’ as a witness to a sasine in 1622, which may be the earliest record of this surname, albeit in Berwickshire. How he may have been connected to the Roxburghshire family members is unknown. James (17th C.) witness in 1657 to the baptism of John, son of Cuthbert. He was surely a close relative of Cuthbert (perhaps even his father), as well as James, the other witness. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick brewer mentioned in 1702, where his name is recorded as ‘Weelands’. He may be the same as John ‘Whillace’ who was born in Hawick in 1657 and may thus have been a baker as well as brewer. He was listed as a ‘baxter’ in several baptismal entries. He witnessed baptisms in 1699 for Walter Wilson in Hawick and for tailor Walter Riddell in 1700 for merchant Michael Scott, in 1702 for Michael Scott and for merchant Patrick Angus, in 1705 for Bailie Walter Graham, in 1706 (along with Bailie John Binnie) for Bailie Robert Hardie and in 1709 for Walter Riddell, for tailor James Turnbull, for candlemaker John Scott, for Bailie Robert Hardie again and for merchant William Craig. John (b.1657) son of Cuthbert and Bessie Glendinning, with the baptism witnessed by John and James Whillans. His surname when baptised is recorded as ‘Weillands’ He is probably the John ‘Weillands’ who was mentioned as a ‘baxter’ (i.e. baker) in Hawick in 1694 and 1710. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and was probably the John who paid tax for 2 hearths on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may have witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in Hawick in 1699. He was ‘John Weelands baxter’ when he witnessed a baptism (for tailor Walter Riddell) in 1702; John Forman (the other witness in 1702) later married Margaret ‘Weelands’, who was probably his daughter or sister. He witnessed another baptism (along with William Gledstains, perhaps related to his wife) in 1705. He was a baxter and member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He is probably the John who married Margaret Gledstains and had children: Margaret (b.1690); Margaret (again, b.1691); and John (b.1693). Note that James Gledstains married Helen ‘Whillance’ and had a daughter in 1683; they may have been related to his wife and to him, respectively. John (1718–1813) son of James and Jean Lookup. He was born at Blackchester in Southdean Parish and lived in Castleton. In 1765 he married Mary Swan and she died in 1806. Their children included: James (b.1766) who married Ellen Weare and moved to England; Thomas (b.1768) who married Agnes Riddell; John (b.1772) who married Mary Geddes and lived in Castleton; Jean (b.1780) who married Thomas Oliver; William (1779–1856) who married Agnes White and died in Ontario; Robert (b.1781) who must have died young; and Robert (again, b.1783) who married Barbara Oliver and also emigrated to Canada. He is buried at Southdean. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He was living at Henlawshiel when most of his children were baptised. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: John (b.1769); Charlotte (b.1771); Hannah (b.1773); and Archibald (b.1774). It is possible that a 2nd Archibald (b.c.1779) and Sophia (b.1779) were also his children. John (b.1768) son of John and Mary Swan. He lived in Castleton Parish. He married Mary Geddes in about 1795. Their children were: John; David; William; Margaret; Agnes; James; Mary; Andrew; Isabel; and Jean. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is recorded as owner of 2 horses. It is possible he is the same as John (b.1718). John Bell (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Alison Muir and their son James was baptised in 1794. John Bell (c.1896–1928) son of Isabella and an unknown father, he married Agnes Alice Walker Darling in 1920. Their children were Alice Darling (b.1921), Charles Noel (‘Chuck’, b.1924) and Catherine Darling. His wife secondly married John Bell and died in 1973. He died in a biking accident near the Mair. John ‘Jack’ (20th C.) eldest son of Christopher G. He was father of Irving. Margaret (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. Her daughter Margaret was baptised in 1723, with her surname listed as ‘Whollis’. Walter ‘Whillis’ accepted responsibility for sponsoring the child’s education (suggesting perhaps that he was the grandfather, and hence may be Walter from Denholm, whose wife was Margaret Lamb). Richard (d.bef. 1841) possibly born in Dent, Yorkshire, in 1781, he was the father of ‘Kinly Stick’. He worked as a mole-catcher in Kirkton Parish, and later his family moved to Hawick. He firstly married Katherine (or Christian) Stevenson, and she died in 1816. Their children included: Walter (b.1809); and Janet (b.1813). He secondly married Mary Miller, and their children included: Mary (b.1818), who married Broughton Newell; George (b.1819), also known as ‘Kinly Stick’; Margaret (b.1822); John (b.c.1827); Jane (b.1830/1); James (b.1834); and Betty (b.c.1835). His wife Mary was listed as head of the family on the Mid Row in 1841 and as a widow on Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) in 1851. Robert (1723–87) son of James and Jean Lookup. He lived in Southdean Parish, specifically at ‘Roughhint’ and Roughlee and married Janet Scott. Their children were: James (b.1759); Janet (b.1762); Robert (b.1763); Aaron (b.1766); Jean (or Ellen, b.1770); Betty (or Isabel); and Andrew. The family name is sometimes recorded as ‘Hollans’. He died at Chesters. Robert (b.1783) son of John and Mary Swan, he was born at Chesters. He married Barbara Oliver in 1808 and their children were: John; Margaret; Thomas (b.1814), who married Mary Anderson; Mary; George; Betty; and Jane. He emigrated to Canada in 1837, like his brother William, settling at Hurdman’s Bridge near Ottawa, Ontario. His grandchildren included Rev. Robert and Rev. Dr. George. Robert (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He had 2 sons who died in 1819. Robert (18th/19th C.) butcher of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Presumably the same Robert is also listed as proprietor of a public house and stabler on the High Street. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a meal dealer on the High Street. He may be the same as the agricultural labourer recorded at about 20 High Street in the 1841 census, along with his wife Margaret and daughter Isabella. Thomas (b.1768) 2nd son of John and Mary Swan, he was born in Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Riddell (or perhaps Liddell) in about 1794 and their children included John and ‘May’ (probably Mary). It may not be a coincidence that Agnes, daughter of John Riddell and Agnes Whillans was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1799. Thomas (d.1810) lived at Town-o’-Rule and is buried at Southdean. This is according to an old gravestone. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1843–1924) born in Southdean Parish, youngest son of William. He became head gardener to the Duke of Marlborough at Blenheim. He suffered from ill-health and moved to Oxford. His children included David, Maude, Isabel Frances, Ralph and Sydney James. Walter (17th/18th C.) probably son of Cuthbert and brother of John. He married Margaret Lamb. When he had a daughter baptised in 1690 he was living in Hawick, but subsequent children were baptised in Cavers Parish, with his address specifically listed as Denholm Deanhead in 1705 and 1712, and Denholm Dean in 1708. His children probably included: William, who married Janet Stothart; Elspeth (b.1690); Archibald (b.1700); Janet (b.1703); Walter (b.1705); Ann (b.1707); Christian (b.1708); and John (b.1712). Note that in 1703 his name appears as ‘Mcwhillance’. Walter (18th C.) recorded as a ‘fowler’ in 1729 in the rental book for Archibald Jerdon, factor to Capt. Elliot of Wells. He is probably either the man who lived at Denholm Dean, or his son who was born in 1705. Walter (b.1720) son of William and Janet Stothart. He was baptised in Hawick Parish. In 1756 he is probably the Walter who married Jean ‘Dowgall’ in Glasgow. Their children were Margaret (b.1757), Walter (b.1759), John (b.1761), Isobell (b.1763), Janet (b.1771), Alexander (b.1774) and David (b.1774). Walter (b.1819) son of Richard and Katherine Stevenson, he was an older brother of George ‘Kinly Stick’. He lived at the Back Row (where he is recorded in 1841) and worked as a hand-loom weaver. He married Catherine Stevenson (who had the same name as his mother), daughter of Thomas Stevenson and Isabella Turnbull. William (17th/18th C.) weaver at Firbank in Jedburgh Parish. His children included: Culbert (b.1718); and Elizabeth (b.1720). William (17th/18th C.) smith at the Flex. His younger brother was Walter, possibly the fowler. In 1714 he was cited at the Session, along with William Leithead, for their ‘supernumerary marriage’. This was probably the marriage of Leithead to Bessie Stevenson, and may have been held at the Flex, with apparently more guests than then allowed by law. He married Janet Stothart in 1714; she was a ‘servitrix’ to Hawick innkeeper William Shiel. Their children were: Margaret (b.1715); Robert (b.1717); Walter (b.1720), who probably married Jean Dougal and moved to Glasgow; Janet (b.1722); Ann (b.1725), who probably married John Hunter in Minto Parish; William (b.1728), who married Elizabeth Kerr and was a wright in Oxnam Parish; and Mary (b.1729). Some of his later children were born in Hobkirk and Cavers Parishes (rather than Hawick or Kirkton). Suggesting that he had moved from the Flex. In 1725 he is recorded at Shiplaw Corse, in 1728 at Cauldmill and in 1729 at New Mill (in Kirkton Parish). William (b.1728) son of William and Janet Stothart, he was a resident of Cavers Parish, later being a wright in Oxnam Parish. He married Elizabeth Kerr in 1753 and their children probably included: Agnes (b.1754); John (b.1755); George (b.1758), who moved to London; William (b.1760); Hannah (b.1764); and Helen (b.1768). William (1779–1856) son of John and Mary Swan, he was born in Southdean Parish. He emigrated to Canada in 1824, settling in London, Ontario (with his brother Robert settling near Ottawa), where he built a home at Ilderton. He married Agnes White and they had 9 children: John (b.1814); Jean; William (b.1818); Mary; Betty; Adam; Robert (b.1828); Thomas (b.1830); and Agnes (b.1833). He died in Ontario. William (18th/19th C.) possessor of part of the lands at Acreknowe. He is recorded as former owner in a valuation of 1779 (when the lands were owned by Sir Francis Elliott) and also on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (when Sir William Elliott of Stobs paid the tax there). It is recorded that £22 5s 8d of land that was of Acreknowe was ‘possessed in 1779 by William Whillands’. He could be the William (b.1728), who was earlier associated with the Flex or his son William (b.1760). William (1800–68) son of Aaron and Margaret Swan. He was a dyke builder and lived at Chesters in Southdean Parish. He was the enumerator for Southdean Parish for the 1861 census and probably also the William who is recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book. In 1828 he married Isabella Riddell, who was also from Chesters. Their children included: Jane (b.1828); Aaron (b.1830); Margaret (b.1832); Robert (b.1835); William (b.1837), died young; Walter, twin of William; Jessie (b.1838), who married John Inglis; William John (b.1841), who married Jane Maben and was a letter-carrier; Thomas (1843–1924) gardener; James, twin of Thomas; and Catherine (b.1846), who married Thomas Rutherford, coal merchant in Hawick. Of his sons emigrated to America. William John (b.1841) son of William. He was born in Chesters, his family being in that area for at least 3 generations before. He was educated at Chesters, and for a few years (starting at age 10) acted as letter-carrier between Southdean and the post office at Bonchester Bridge. After working with his father, in 1868 he became the letter-carrier between Bonchester and Hawick. He lived at Weens Lodge in the period 1868–73, but retired as postman in 1883 due to ill-health and moved to Bonchester Bridge, where he also acted as carrier to Hawick. He and his wife moved to Hawick in 1893. In 1873 at Melrose he married Jane, daughter of farmer James Maben, in a ceremony in which his sister Catherine also married Thomas Rutherford. His son was William James (b.1889) and his daughter Annabell became a teacher. William son was William James (b.1889) and his daughter Catherine also married Thomas Rutherford. His James Maben, in a ceremony in which his sister whusker (whus-kur) n. a whisker.

whusky (whus-kee) n. whisky. The first local record of ‘acquawyttie’ is in the Town Book in 1642. In 1737 Robert Elliot of Fenwick, William Ogilvie, Robert Harrison and Thomas Watson (in Hawick) proposed the building of a stillhouse and brewery to the Duke of Buccleuch’s Commissioners, and in the following year land on the eastern side of the Slitrig was leased to Robert Elliot of Fenwick for that purpose. Hence we might suppose that whisky was produced locally at the ‘Whusky Hooses’ site on Slitrig Crescent from about that time. It is first mentioned in terms of payment for workers (in place of the earlier brandy) in the Town Treasurer’s books in 1747. However, it did not start being a common local drink until about 1770, but soon after was being used as a cure for almost every ailment! The drink had many illicit stills at one time, and in the late 18th century a great deal of smuggling to England, where the duties were much higher. It was only legitimately manufactured in Hawick around 1818–19 – ‘Whisckie given the workers at the bridge, 1 pint, 1 gill, ...0 2 10. Half-a-mutchkin whiskie to glaziers and ofﬁcers, ...0 0 4’ [BR1747], ‘Wi’ what some bellums ca’ the bottle, An’ I ca’ whisky, When ’boot yer plans ye freendly tattle, An’ speech gets hurke’ [JoHa], ‘...While someone slips a whisky in your tumbler unaware’ [WHO], ‘Aw can ofer ee maist o’ the usual things The likes o’ whisky, rum or beer ...’ [AY], ‘...aboot ice-cream ﬂavoured wi port, sherry, whisky and sic-like alcoholic beverages’ [DH].

the Whusky Burn (thu-whus-kee-burn) n. stream entering the Slitrig near ‘Whusky Hooses’, which must have been buried for at least a couple of centuries (mentioned in Parish Records of 1762).

Whusky Hoose Mill (whus-kee-hoos-mill) n. Whisky House Mill, on Slitrig Crescent (at No. 14). It was built for William Richardson in 1787–88 and used for the manufacture of cloth and then carpets. This firm was continued by William’s son Walter until his death in about 1808. From 1815 it was owned by Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co., and probably from about 1819 was solely Waldie’s, becoming J. & W. Waldie, manufacturers of stockings and woollen cloth. It was sold off in 1829 and later the building became a storehouse as part of James Melrose & Sons, millwrights. It was also popularly known as ‘the Royal George’ or ‘the George’. This may have been the first real ‘mill’ in Hawick and the beginnings of the tweed industry (note that it is probably named after an already existing name for the area, and only coincidentally related to a distillery).

Whusky Hooses (whus-kee-seez) n. Whisky Houses, old place name for an area immediately next to the Slitrig near what became Melrose’s on Slitrig Crescent. Sometimes the name was applied more to the area between the Crescent and the river. It was probably the same as the area that was earlier called Usuch Haugh, and later called the Brewery Haugh. A 1738 record of Robert Elliot of Falnash leasing from the Buccleuch Estates a "stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slitridge, and of ground adjacent; also, a malt kiln and barn yet to be built; all lying in parish of Hawick" may refer to this site. It was used as the town dump until the latter part of the 18th century (origin uncertain, but probably a corruption of Usuch Haugh).

Whusky Meg (whus-kee-meg) n. nickname of the years around 1800, perhaps meant as a familiar name for James Ruickbie's wife – "An if ye meet wi' Whisky Meg, That honest hearted carlin, Gude faith your cares will get a fleg, Though baith the deil an' Merlin Ye meet that day' [JR].

whusle (whusyl) n. to whistle – ‘...a boagly, gloomin plantee, where the whussellin wund gaed soachin throwe’ [ECS], ‘Man, but the time fair whusles bye’ [WL], ‘...Mugger hedna been invented And ee could whusle and sing’ [AY], ‘...He’ll whusle whiles, an’ whiles he’ll sing, O’ trifles Watti makes nae fuss’ [WP], ‘He gethers his trappin’ and maks for the door, And he whusles awa oot o’ sicht’ [WL], ‘Aye, the engines whusle defiantly, and try to hide the Station ahint their black reek ...’ [DH], n. a whistle – ‘...And hear the blackbird’s cheery whusle Frae ilka bush’ [RH], ‘Losh, Ali’ve forgotten the ginger breed men an’ the ha’penny whusles ...’ [JEDM], ‘Sleekit collies rinnin’, birds whusslin’ and yellin’ ...’ [DH], ‘For me, the music o’ the shaw, The blackie’s mellow whusle’ [WL], ‘Then heigh for the tug an’ the tussle, Though the cost should be Jethart tree; Let the Queen an’ her troopers gae whusle, An’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [MG] (also spelled ‘whusle’ and ‘whussel’).

whusses (whu-sulz) n., pl. whistles from the main mills in Hawick used to go off at regular times and could be heard at home by most of the employees. Each mill’s whistle had a distinctive tone, and they were once familiar to all Teries. Typical times were 8 a.m., 12.30 p.m., 1.30 p.m. and again at night. The practice was suspended during WWII and never really picked up again.

Whussunday (whu-sun-di) n., arch. Whitsunday – ‘Oo’ll beide i this hoose ti Whussenday, an than oo’ll fitt’ [ECS] (also written ‘Whussenday’; see Whitsunday).

Whussun-tide (whu-sun-tid) n., poet. Whitsun-tide, the season of Whitsunday – ‘I’ve been to your waddins Ower often afore, At Whussan-tide’ [DH].

Whutson (whut-sin) n. (Whiton or Hewitson) Betty see Betty Whutson. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Hoscote in 1711 when his daughter Janet was baptised. His surname is written ‘Huotson’, which has been transcribed ‘Knotson’, but could be a variant of ‘Watson’. It is possible that he is the John Watson whose son Walter was baptised in Roberton in 1721. Rev. John (1826–1902) trained at Glasgow and Kilmarnock Evangelical Union Halls, he was minister at John Street, Montrose 1866–70 and then at Beith and at Anstruther East. He was minister of Newcastleton Congregational Church 1890–91. Nancy nickname of Agnes Hewiton. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in Kirkton in 1720. His name is written ‘Hotson’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick who was married to Janet Scott, probably in Cavers Parish in 1729. Their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: James (b.1730); Walter (b.1739); and Helen (b.1741). In 1741 he is recorded being ‘at Blackcleugh’ and the witnesses were Walter Scott at Commonside and Archibald Elliot at Bowanhill. He could be the Robert whose son Thomas was baptised in Cavers in 1746 and the Robert whose daughter Marion was baptised in Kirkton.
in 1731. His name is variously spelled ‘Howison’, ‘Huison’, ‘Hutson’, ‘Whitson’ and ‘Whotson’. He could be the same man as Bailie Robert Howison.

Widow Richardson (wi-dö-ri-churd-sin) n. lady who kept a lodging house in Hawick in the early 18th century. This is recorded in the 1723 Parish records, although further particulars of her name, her husband and her address are not given.

Wield (weeld) n. Bailie John (1836/7-77) druggist of 48 High Street, who was Hawick Magistrate. He came from the Annan area, son of a farmer. His chemist’s business operated for about 20 years, and he was succeeded by W.R. Ross. He started a paraffin works on Commercial Road around 1866 (where Donaldson’s later had an oil extracting works), but he was bankrupt in a couple of years. He was a Councillor for Teviot Ward from 1871, immediately being appointed as a Magistrate, but retired in 1875 due to business difficulties following the Collie failure. In 1870 he married Christina Mary, daughter of draper James Turnbull. In later years he lived at Wilton Grove and is buried in Welloigate Cemetery.

wifie (wi-lee) n. a wife – ‘Aw’ll maybe pick up a bit wifie o ma ain in the by gaun ...’ [JEDM], mildly derogatory term for a woman, particularly a middle-aged one – ‘The gawsie auld wifie cam’ bustlin’ ben ...’ [JJ], ‘If ye want a bit wifie that’s usefu an’ neat ...’ [WAP].

Wigg (wig) n. farm on the B6357 in the upper Rule valley, near where the Wigg Burn meets the Hyndlee Burn. William, Lord Cranstoun (superior of the Barony) owned the woods there in 1621 when 2 Shiels were denounced as rebels for cutting down his ‘greenwood’. James Laidlaw was shepherd there in the early part of the 18th century. John Elliot was living there around 1770 and Thomas Grieve in 1788. The lands there were held by Walter Scott of Wauchope in 1811, along with part of Wauchope-head, ‘now known by the name of the South-west division of the Lands of Wauchope’, with the superiority held by Archibald Scott of Howcleuch. George Scott was shepherd there in the mid-19th century and Andrew Thomson was shepherd in the latter part of the 19th century (it is ‘Wig’ in 1621).

Wiggam (wi-gum) n. nickname of James Turnbull of Denholm.

Wigg Burn (wig-burn) n. stream in the upper part of Rulewater. It rises on the slopes of Wigg Knowe and flows roughly north to meet the Hass
Wiggins

Sike and then the Hyndlee burn near the farm of Wigg. Recorded in 1677 when the lands of Wauchope are described as ‘on Southside of water called Wig’.

Wiggins (wi-ginz) n. possible name for lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, and for which Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch was granted the office of Bailie in 1524, confirmed in 1525. It is unclear where these lands were, but the others named were Melroselenads, Ettrickhead, Rodono, Eskdalemur, Ringwoodfield and East Teviotdale. They are not listed in the earlier grant of 1519 (it is ‘Uiggynnis’ in 1524 and ‘Wggennis’ in 1524).

Wigg Knowe (wig-now) n. hill in the Wauchope Forest, to the west of the Note o’ the Gate. Wigg Burn rises on its eastern slopes. It reaches a height of 491 m and has a communication mast on top (it is ‘Wyiggs hill’ on Pont’s c.1590 map and ‘Wriggs hill’ on Blaeu’s map of 1654).

Wigham see Wigholm

Wigholm (wi-gum) n. Adam ‘Edy’ (16th C.) listed in 1541 among English rebels who had been reset in Scotland. He was listed among some Armstrongs who were reset by young Hector Armstrong at Tweedden. Probably the same ‘Eddie Wigham, servante to Anton Armstronge’ was listed in 1541 among a group of Armstrongs, Eliots, Croziers and others accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Arche Wiggein’. He is surely related to the ‘Rynne Wiggein’ who was tenant of a farm near Skelfhill. Helen (16th C.) merchant of some sort recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. She was owed money for supplying fowls. Given the others she is listed alongside, it seems likely she was from Hawick. John ‘Cock’ (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne Wighame alias Cok’ in a document of 1500 listing men of Liddesdale and neighbouring areas who gave pledges for good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. Perhaps the same ‘Cok Wighame’ is listed among many men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. John (17th C.) son of William, tenant in Nether Whisgills. In 1642 he is on a long list of Border ‘notorious criminalls, theeves and ressetters of theft’ who were to be captured and tried. Matthew (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Actually there are 2 separate men listed with the same name. They may have been related to other Wigholms who were also listed, namely Cock and William. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) listed among the tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Rynne Wiggein’ (and there is some guess work on his name). Ninian (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Niniane Quhigholme in Peilbrae’ in 1612 when he was on the jury for the case of the death of a man while imprisoned in the Hawick Kirk steeple. Ninian (17th C.) tenant in ‘Todseleighsyde’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) from Braidhaugh and formerly Alemoor. William White from Muselee and Simon White from Alemoor were caution for him at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1623. William (15th C.) listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether Whisgills. In 1642 his son John was listed among many Borderers wanted for theft and other crimes. ‘Wilwigholms steid’ is listed in 1632 among the lands possessed by Thomas Kerr of Ancrum, and seems likely to have been the farm he tenanted in Liddesdale. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Newton in Roxburghshire (although it is unclear which Newton) in 1684 on the list of men declared rebels for not taking ‘the Test’ (also written ‘Wiggam’, ‘Wigham’, ‘Wighame’, ‘Wigoure’, ‘Quhigholme’, etc.).

Wight (wi’t, wi’t) adj. arch. stout, strong, mighty, brave – ‘…That had he been as wight as Wallace was, Away brave Noble he could not win. Fala, &c.’ [CPM], – ‘…one of these wight and wannel lads …’ [HSR], ‘When Wallace wight, and Douglas stern, Led on the spearman o’ the Border’ [JS], ‘Whiles, at the Daisy and the Bard, They [gulls] tak their spite – But it’s a gey coorse maa daur fyle Wallace, wight’ [DH].

Wight (wi’t) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Ellen Clerk (1776–1860). He died abroad and is commemorated on the family gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. Adam (b.1805/6) farmer at Newton in 1841. In 1851 he was working as a ‘miller’s man’ at the Maltsteep in Wilton. His wife was Helen and their children included John, Jane and Mary. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at the Grange in Southdean Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th/19th C.) living at Over Kirkhope in Ettrick Parish in 1799 when his son Andrew was baptised in Roberton. Andrew (19th C.) cabinet-maker of Scott & Wight, 58 High Street. Their premises may be the place marked ‘Mr. Scott’ around No. 58 on Wood’s 1824 map. The business is listed on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. They are listed as ‘Scott & Wight’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Rutherford, and they had no children. Daniel ‘Dan’ (19th C.) landlord of the Half-Moon Inn in the latter part of the 19th century. He was also well known as a Powderhall runner. In 1889 he refuse to sell some land to allow an extension of the Evangelical Union Kirk on O’Connell Street, presumably because of their promotion of temperance. George (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick who was Cornet in 1709. He married Helen Cook in Hawick in late 1711 and their children included James (b.1712), Janet (b.1714), Robert (b.1717), Margaret (b.1719) and Jean (b.1722). The witnesses in 1712 were cooper Robert Hardie and James Scott ‘Doctor’. Note that his name was written ‘Wright’ in 1712. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1728 he married Janet Beattie from Langholm Parish. In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert, who was surely related. James (17th C.) weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1700 for carrier David Minto, in 1704 for workman Archibald Elliot and in 1709 for George Johnston, tenant in Hilliesland. Janet (18th C.) widow of someone called Leithead. In 1751 the Hawick Session resolved to provide her with an allowance from the sale of her husband’s house. John (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who were also listed there. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Milsington in 1725 when his son Andrew was baptised. John (18th/19th C.) listed as a shepherd at Bedrule on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. Mary (b.c.1780) listed as a widow who was a midwife at about 25 High Street in 1851. Robert (17th C.) indweller of Unthank in Ewesdale. In 1653 he inherited half a husbandland in Midlem from James Bald, his grandmother’s brother. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto in 1706. In 1715 he married Jean Bridges (‘or Swan’); she may therefore be the Jean who previously married Mungo Swan in 1702. Their children included: Robert (b.1716); Margaret (b.1717); James (b.1718); Janet (b.1720); James (again, 1721); Helen (b.1723); George (b.1725); and Robert (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1716 were merchant Francis Elliot and wright William Murray, and in 1721 were wright John Pringle and weaver George Wight (who was surely related). Thomas (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John, who were also listed there. Walter (d.1819) tailor in Hawick. His name is the second one on the list of ‘Donations’ to the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. William (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. William (1806–92) son of Adam and Ellen Clerk, born in Roberton Parish. He was a slater at Borthaugh Cottages. He donated some interesting stones to the Museum in 1863. He married Helen Lillico, who died at Borthaugh in 1850, aged 40. He may also have married a second time. His children included Christian, Helen Clerk (1851–1883) and Isabella Douglas (1853–1936). His mother Helen (or Ellen) Clerk was also living with him in 1841 and 1851. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. William (19th/20th C.) joiner and cabinetmaker who ran the business ‘Scott & Wight’ at 58 High Street. In 1906 he transferred the firm to his son Andrew (also formerly written ‘Weight’).

the Wilderness ([ɔθu-wil-dur-nis]) n. former name for a plantation on the east side of the approach road to the original Wilton Manse, i.e. near where the bowling part of the Leisure Centre is located now. A little stream used to run through the grounds (long buried in conduits).

the Wilderness Road ([ɔθu-wil-dur-nis-rōd]) n. name once used for the approach road to the original Wilton Manse, located where the Station was built. The road ran between 2 high hedges and was called after the popular name for the plantation on its eastern side.

wild hyacinth ([wild-hi-a-sinth]) n. usual name in Scotland for the flower called the bluebell in England.

wile ([wil] v., arch. to deceive, beguile, entice – ‘...O but ye be a wilin’ rogue – Fareweel John Barleycorn!’ [JT], ‘Until a lass wi’r saft sweet words Did wyle the glove in play ...’ [DH], n. poet. a snare, trap – ‘Kepee me frae the wyles whilk thaye hae layde for me, an’ the girns o’ the wurkers i’ inequitie’ [HSR] (also written ‘wyle’).

Wilkie ([wil-kee]) n. James (17th C.) cottar at Ruletownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Janet (d.1760) described as being ‘in Hartshaught milln’ when her funeral is recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1760. John (17th C.) tenant in Hassendean. He is recorded in 1684 when his... servant Thomas Brown was listed among those declared fugitives for being Covenanters. Also in that year the will of his wife Helen Davidson is recorded. He is probably the John ‘glkie’ who witnessed a baptism for Thomas in Hassendean in 1683. John (d.c.1685) listed as ‘younger, in Rafflit’ in 1685 when his will was recorded. He was presumably farmer at Raw.

John (d.bef. 1808) wright in Hawick. His son John was a shoemaker whose death was recorded in 1808. John (d.1808) shoemaker in Hawick, son of wright John. Margaret (16th C.) probably name of a tenant of Sir James Douglas of Cavers according to a list in the court proceedings of the Lords of Councill in 1541. Mary (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a shop somewhere around the Hove gate in the early 19th century. She sold ‘tam trot’, gingerbread and other confectionaries. T. (18th/19th C.) listed at Minto House among subscribers for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was probably a house servant at Minto.

Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to a sasine of the Erskines in Synton lands in 1508, where he is ‘Thomas Wykinson’. He may have been local, since several of the other witnesses were.

Rev. Thomas (d.c.1638) first post-Reformation minister at Lilliesleaf (those earlier being just readers). He was related to John Row, the Reformer. He was educated at St. Leonard’s College and St. Andrews University, becoming ‘laureated’ in 1583. He became Lilliesleaf minister in 1588 (after being Reader for 2 years) and continued until at least October 1638. He was presented to the parsonage and vicarage by Robert, Lord Roxburgh about 1609. He is said to have frequently shed tears while preaching. In 1615 he was rebuked for allowing ‘the gudewife of Sinton’ (possibly the widow of Walter Scott of Synton) from Ashkirk parish to take communion, ‘she being a contemner of her awin minister and of her awin kirk’. He may be the same man as Thomas ‘M.A.’ recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1626 and 1629. His elder son was Thomas (who was Reader at Selkirk and then minister of Crailing), and his younger son William (who succeeded as minister at Lilliesleaf).

Rev. Thomas (c.1592–c.1658) probably son of Thomas, minister of Lilliesleaf, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1614 and became minister of Crailing in 1621. He left a widow and son, John. Note that there were other ministers of the same name living at a similar time, and who were probably related. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Rev. Thomas (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1659, he was a minister in London and then became minister of Galashiels in 1665. He is recorded holding lands at ‘Feirlienown, Bewlie’ in 1669. He was translated to North Leith in 1672 and translated to the Collegiate or Second Charge of the Tolbooth (Edinburgh) in 1687. Rev. Thomas (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1668, he was licensed in 1676 and later the same year became minister at Abbotrule. He was translated to Beith (Ayrshire) before mid-1687. But he was only minister there for 2 years. Rev. Thomas (1645–1711) nephew of Rev. Thomas (who was minister at Galashiels and the Tolbooth in Edinburgh, and who held lands at Bewlie). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1662 and was part of the meeting of Lothian and Tweeddale ministers after the Toleration. In 1689 he became first minister of the Canongate. He was twice Moderator of the General Assembly. He married Rachel, daughter of John Sinclair, minister at Ormiston. Note that it is easy to confuse the various nearby contemporary ministers of the same name. He may be the Thomas who was said to have officiated at a field conventicle in 1679 when Graham of Claverhouse was searching the local countryside.

Thomas (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Adam Inglis ‘in huntla’ (i.e. Huntlaw) in Roberton Parish in 1682. Probably the same Thomas ‘glkie’ is recorded in Hassendean in a baptismal record of 1683. His wife was Janet Dodds and their children included Helen (b.1683) and William (b.1684). The witnesses in 1683 were John ‘glkie’ and Walter Davidson. Thomas (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism for gardener Alexander Donald. He paid tax for 11 windows in Hawick in 1748. In 1720 he married Margaret, daughter of John Purdom. Their children included: Marion (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); John (b.1724); Margaret (b.1725); Margaret (again, b.1727); Robert (b.1729); Christian (b.1731); Margaret (again, b.1734); and William (b.1737). The 1726 baptism was witnessed by William Sadler and Henry Orrock. He could be the merchant Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom (perhaps related to his wife) in 1760 and the merchant Thomas who witnessed a baptism for baxter William Elliot in 1763. Thomas (b.1806/7) from Kirkliston in Midlothian, he was a farmer in Newcastleton. In 1861 he is listed as a horse hirer on Willans (wil-linz) n. Rev. Jonathan Michael Arthur (b.1959/60– ) minister at St. Cuthbert’s Church in Hawick 1988–91. He moved to Hawick from Larne, having also served in the Ulster Defence Regiment. He made several improvements to the Kirk, but some of his comments from the pulpit and literature he distributed proved unpopular with much of the congregation and he left (for a new charge at Brockham Green, Surrey) amid acrimonious dispute. He is now minister at Leigh, Surrey. He also wrote a controversial book ‘Proof the Bible is True’, became well known for chairing a survey of church attendance published in 2005, and also posts responses on a ‘Bible Questions Answered’ web-site.

William (wi-lee-un) n. name of one King of Scotland and 4 Kings of the United Kingdom. William I ‘the Lion’ (1143–1214) King from 1165. His name came from his standard, the red lion rampant on a yellow background. He was part of the Canmore family and was Earl of Northumbria from 1152, until forced to yield the title to Henry II of England in 1157. He tried to regain Northumbria, but was captured at the Battle of Alnwick in 1174 and taken to Normandy. To be released he had to acknowledge Henry as his feudal superior in the Treaty of Falaise, which lasted for 15 years. Because of this focus on the Borders, it is probable that he passed near or through Hawick. He certainly spent some time in Jedburgh, where he granted many charters. He also arranged the ‘Auld Alliance’ with France, which effectively existed for the next 300 years. He was succeeded by his son Alexander II. William III of England (1650–1702) King of England from 1689, taking the crown from James II in the ‘Glorious Revolution’ and re-establishing a Protestant monarchy with Mary II. He was son of William II, Prince of Orange and Mary Stuart (daughter of Charles I). He married Mary, daughter of James II and ruled the United Provinces of the Netherlands from 1670, until invited to England by James’ opponents. In 1689 the clergy were required to pray for the new King and Queen and to denounce James II or lose their positions. Only 3 ministers out of 33 in the Presbyteries of Jedburgh, Kelso and Selkirk did this. There was also continued opposition in Scotland from the Jacobites. William IV (1765–1837) King from Douglas Square. He was on the Town Committee of Management in the 1860s. His wife was Agnes and their children included John and Margaret. Rev. William (d.1671) probably son of Thomas, Lilliesleaf minister, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1614 and himself became minister at Lilliesleaf in 1640. While preaching at Melrose in 1640 he was apparently interrupted in the middle of a sermon by the passage of English troops going from Berwick to Duns. His initials are inscribed on a panel containing a sun-dial that is built into the modern kirk at Lilliesleaf and bears the date 1642. The county valuation of 1643 records that £20 was paid to telhe Reader, who was probably him. He was confined to his parish in 1662 for not conforming to Episcopacy. He apparently died suddenly. His son Thomas was the first minister of the Canongate in Edinburgh (formerly written ‘Whilkie’ and ‘Wilky’).

Wilkinson (wil-kin-sin) n. Charles (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Huntlywood, Melrose, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1751. Thomas of Chesterhall (18th/19th C.) merchant in Amsterdam, who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He was admitted in 1780, with no objections. He was recorded as owner of lands in Ashkirk Parish in 1788 (and still according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), which had previously belonged to Scott of Whitslade, including Ashkirk Mill, Kirhouses, Salenside, Castle-side and Broadlee. Some of these lands were sold to Archibald Cochrane in 1795 (sometimes written ‘Wilkieson’; see also Wullison).

will (wil, wul) n., arch. power, choice, particularly in phrase ‘to come in someone will’, meaning to surrender to someone’s wishes – ‘The said day, Bessie Henderson, ...confessed of the said pettis in the nicht, and cam in will for the said day, Bessie Henderson, meaning to surrender to someone’s wishes’ [The particularly in phrase ‘to come in someones will’, became well known for chairing a survey of church attendance published in 2005, and also posts responses on a ‘Bible Questions Answered’ web-site.

Willglen Mill (wil-glen-mil) n. name sometimes used for the building at 22 Commercial Road. It was built as part of Wilson & Glenny, and used 1940–1964, and then became the Scout Headquarters (also sometimes written ‘Wilglen’).

Elliot.

William I ‘the Lion’ (1143–1214) King from 1165. His name came from his standard, the red lion rampant on a yellow background. He was part of the Canmore family and was Earl of Northumbria from 1152, until forced to yield the title to Henry II of England in 1157. He tried to regain Northumbria, but was captured at the Battle of Alnwick in 1174 and taken to Normandy. To be released he had to acknowledge Henry as his feudal superior in the Treaty of Falaise, which lasted for 15 years. Because of this focus on the Borders, it is probable that he passed near or through Hawick. He certainly spent some time in Jedburgh, where he granted many charters. He also arranged the ‘Auld Alliance’ with France, which effectively existed for the next 300 years. He was succeeded by his son Alexander II. William III of England (1650–1702) King of England from 1689, taking the crown from James II in the ‘Glorious Revolution’ and re-establishing a Protestant monarchy with Mary II. He was son of William II, Prince of Orange and Mary Stuart (daughter of Charles I). He married Mary, daughter of James II and ruled the United Provinces of the Netherlands from 1670, until invited to England by James’ opponents. William 1830, being crowned after the death of his brother George IV. There was a Coronation Dinner held in the Town Hall in 1831, chaired by Dr. John Douglas. He was originally a Whig supporter and helped push through reforms, although by the time the Reform Bill was passed he had switched his sympathies to the Tories.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (11th/12th C.) 2nd Abbot of the abbey in Selkirk (which would become Kelso Abbey. He took over from Radulf in 1117 or 1118, but retired in 1119, after only a couple of years. He returned to Tiron and was succeeded by Herbert.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (12th C.) one of the chaplains (‘capellano’) probably of Hawick (along with Algar) who was recorded as witness to a charter in about 1183, the first mention of a church at Hawick. He is also one of the first people associated with Hawick of whom we have record, although whether he actually resided there is unknown. He may be the William, Clerk of Hawick (‘Willo, Cleric de hauwic’) mentioned as witness to: a Lovel charter of about the 1190s, swapping the lands of Branxholme for some nearby lands in the Barony of Hawick granted to the canons of St. Andrews; a charter of Geoffrey Riddell to Kelso Abbey in the period 1185–1204; a charter of Ralph de Vere to Kelso Abbey sometime in 1165–1195; and a charter of William de Moreville to Melrose Abbey in 1189–1195. He may have still been Hawick chaplain when St. Mary’s was dedicated in 1214.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (d.1227) son of John, who was son of Orm, who gave his name to Ormiston on Kale Water. He was referred to William of Hownam and also William de Landales. He confirmed his father’s gift of land in Hownam to Melrose Abbey, but there followed a dispute with the monks, and he ended up having the property for his life. He witnessed many grants to religious institutions, e.g. in the period 1165–85 a grant of Anselm of Whitton to Melrose Abbey, lands in Clifton around the 1180s, lands in Whitton by William, son of Walter de Ryedale in the period 1185–1215 and lands in Eskdale and elsewhere in Dumfriesshire by Gervase, son of Robert Avenel. In the 1210s he witnessed a grant to the Convent of Dunfermline and perhaps a little later a grant to St. Andrews Priory. In the 1210s he also witnessed a grant by Patrick of Ryedale of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey, and a further grant of lands in Lilliesleaf by Walter, son of Patrick of Ryedale to Melrose Abbey. He witnessed further grants to Melrose and Kelso in about 1220. He was last recorded as witness to a transaction by Alexander of Chatto to Melrose Abbey for lands in Hownam in 1226. His wife was Donancia de Cleresei. They had sons: John of Landles, who may have been ancestor of the later Landles’; and William of Ormiston, ancestor of the Ormistons.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (12th/13th C.) son of Hugh. In the period 1214–49 he witnessed the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham. It seems likely he was a local man, perhaps a cleric.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (13th C.) Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, recorded sometime in the period between 1251 and 1274. His surname is unknown.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (13th C.) Vicar of Hassendean. He is recorded as a witness for several undated documents, preserved in the chartulary of Coldstream Priory, from around 1280.

William Beck’s Stockin Shop see Beck’s William Fawlaw’s Close (wi-lee-um-faw-lawz-kkis) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule, i.e. Hobkirk Parish, mentioned in a land dispute of 1561 and 1562. It lay to the east of Nether Billewer.

Williamhope (wi-lee-um-hōp) n. farmstead between the Yarrow and Tweed valleys, just south of Ashiestiel Hill and west of what is now Yair Hill Forest. These were Crown lands from around 1456 and were leased by Thomas Ker of Merchiston in 1488 and David Murray in the early 16th century. Sheep were recorded being stolen from there in 1494/5. Alexander Pringle in ‘Cragslese’ held the lands in 1541, paying £24 (the name occurs as ‘Williamehop’ in 1456, ‘William hop’ in 1494/5, ‘Williamhop’ in 1502 and ‘Williamhoip’ in 1541).

William Inglis’ (wi-lee-um-ing-ul-zeez) n. carrier’s firm of the early 19th century, operating weekly between Hawick and Dumfries (there was a separate ‘Inglis’ which ran to Berwick).

William Laidlaw Memorial Hall (wi-lee-um-lād-law-me-mō-ree-ul-hawl) n. village hall in Bonchester Bridge, designed by J.P. Alison in 1899. Its erection was funded by Sir Robert Laidlaw in memory of his son William, who died in infancy, and his father, also William. It was renovated with help from the Lottery Fund in 2003.

William Lockie’s Well (wi-lee-um-lo-keez-wel) n. a former private pump, also sometimes used by the public, its precise location uncertain.
William of Deloraine

There are at least a couple of possible William Lockies after whom it might have been named.

William of Deloraine (wi-lee-un-ov-de-lo-rin) n. fictional character in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’. He is the champion of the Lady of Branxholme, who rides to Melrose Abbey to get Michael Scott’s mystic book, is injured by the evil dwarf page of Henry of Cranstoun and through magic is impersonated by Henry for the final duel with Sir Richard Musgrave – ‘A stark moss-trooping Scott was he, As e’er couch’d Border lance by knee; Through Solway sands, through Tarras moss, Blindfold, he knew the paths to cross’ [SWS].

William of Hawick (wi-lee-un-ov-hlk) n. prebend (i.e. member of the clergy receiving a stipend) of Sir David Guthrie, mentioned in 1435. There was also a ‘William, clericus de Hawick’ who witnessed a charter of about 1300.

Williams (wi-lee-unz) n. A.S. (19th/20th C.) teacher at the Buccleuch School who moved to Teviot Grove Academy in 1895 when it became the new secondary school. He was the main assistant teacher of the senior classes, replacing Mr. Brown. John (18th C.) servant at Borthwickbrae when his child (or perhaps he himself) was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1775. He was footman at Borthwickbrae in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for John Elliot. By 1785 he was a house servant at Borthwickbrae. His name is transcribed in one document as ‘William’, Robert (18th/19th C.) stabler and public house proprietor of the High street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825 directory.

William’s Cleuch (wi-lee-unz-klooch) n. small stream rising on Burnt Craig and running north-east to join the Slitrig.

William Scott’s Well (wi-lee-un-skots-wel) n. a former private pump at the foot of the Green Wynd (Beaconsfield Terrace, or perhaps the continuation of Morrison Place).

Williamshope (wi-lee-unz-höp) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, located somewhere in upper Teviotdale. It is listed between Corriesike and Giddenscleuch when the Barony was inherited in 1687 and 1698. There may be a connection with ‘Williamshrig’, which was also in the Barony. However, it seems unlikely to be related to ‘Williamshope’ in the Yarrow valley.

Williamson (wi-lee-un-sin) n. Alan (1969/70– ) from Dunfermline, he came to Hawick to teach History and Modern Studies, moved to the Highlands, then was Principal Teacher of History at Earlston, returning to Hawick as Depute Head-teacher in 2002. He was High School Rector from 2006. Charles (19th C.) Hawick draper, listed on the 1837 electoral roll. He was also recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a draper on the High Street. He was mentioned in connection with ‘fictitious voters’, having a reciprocal life-rent agreement with John Robertson in Selkirk. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as Secretary of the Hawick Reading Room at the Tower Knowe. He had a business at the Tower Knowe, which was taken over by William Kedie and Walter Armstrong when he emigrated to Australia in 1839. He sailed on the ship Palmyra and founded a business in Collins Street in Melbourne. He married Elizabeth Waldie and their children included Joan (d.1833), who is buried at St. Mary’s and Isabella (d.1840), who died in Melbourne. Cornelius (b.1814/5) from England he was a ‘sinker maker’ in Hawick. In 1841 he was on O’Connell Street and was at about 12 Howegate in 1851. He was also listed as a ‘sinker maker, Back row’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Sarah. Rev. George (1741/2–1817) native of Alloa, he was the first minister of the East Bank (‘Burgher’) Church, from 1774. However, he lasted only about 9 years, there being disarray among the congregation and argument about his stipend. The precise details of why a segment of the congregation turned against him are now unknown, but one suggestion is that he declined to marry someone who had effectively been selected for him, and another idea is that his acceptance of charity from Dr. Charters of Wilton was resented. James Winthrope published a pamphlet about the dispute, ‘A Dialogue between Two Burghers on the Ejection of the Rev. Mr. Williamson from the Eastend’, but no copies are known. He finally left in 1783 following disagreements with his congregation, his successor referring to his ‘offensive peculiarities’. Nevertheless, he remained in Hawick for several months, preaching to his sympathisers in the Little Haugh. The East-end congregation subsequently had a difficult time finding a new minister, calling at least 2 other men before James Henderson was ordained in 1791. In 1785 a group of the congregation obtained a ‘decret of removing’ from the meeting house against him. After leaving Hawick he attached himself to the ‘Auld Licht’ party and was a probationer for 6 years before becoming minister at St. Andrews in 1789. However, in 1795 there was again a dispute over the payment of the stipend, with him claiming he had not been paid, but then a paper being produced in which he signed for the payment. He left to become an independent preacher, suffering from ill-health and poverty and dying in Kirkcaldy. He wrote ‘Separation no schism . . .’ (1800). In Hawick in 1775 he married Betty Dalgleish, daughter of the farmer at Fastheugh in Yarrow. An unnamed daughter of his died in Hawick in 1781 and a son Simon in 1782. There is no known portrait of him. George (b.1814/5) born in Collesie in Fife, he was head gardener at Minto House in the 1860s. His wife was Margaret and their children included Eliza and George. James (b.1821) born in Southdean Parish, son of Alexander and Helen Jamieson. He moved to Edinburgh with his parents when young. He married in 1845 and travelled around the countryside with his wife selling baskets. In 1866 his wife died after he had assaulted her and he was sentenced to 15 years in prison. In 1868 there was a legal dispute between Southdean and an Edinburgh Parish over who was liable to support his children Helen and Anne. His other children were David and John. James ‘Nellie Swinton’ (19th/20th C.) well-known Hawick character whose nickname was, for some reason, that of a woman. He was noted for training runners. His father had died from a fall in the Sandbed while decorating a shop for Edward, Prince of Wales’ wedding. Margaret (19th C.) merchat of the Kirk Wynd. She was daughter of Alexander Russell and Margaret Crozier. May (20th C.) writer of ‘The Non-Celtic Place-Names of the Scottish Border Counties’, submitted in 1942 as a Ph.D. thesis at the University of Edinburgh. It is the seminal work on the origin of local placenames. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as resident of ‘kirkland de Wiltoun’. Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including stealing 12 sheep from him. W. (18th/19th C.) minister in the Hawick area who was one of the first members of the Curling Club in 1803. William (b.1807/8) from Edinburgh, he worked as a tinsmith and gas-fitter in Hawick. In 1841 he was at ‘Kirkyard’ and in 1851 on the Loan. His wife was Mary, and their children included Margaret, James, Charles, William and Ann.

William’s Rig (wi-leez-umz-rig) n. ridge in the Slitrig valley, to the north of Burnt Craig and just to the west of an extensive series of earthworks. The ridge contains the remains of an enclosure, about 38 m in diameter. This is probably the ‘Williamrig’ described being in Cavers Parish and owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott in 1692. It appears on a list between ‘Herretburn’ and ‘Mirrilaw’. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and and by his brother Archibald in 1698 (it is ‘William-rig’ in 1678, transcribed ‘Williamisligd’ in 1687 and is ‘Williamisrig’ in 1698).

William Wilson & Sons (wi-leez-um-wul-sin-an-sunz) n. William Wilson & Sons hosiery manufacturers from 1819–51, founded by William Wilson, who had been in business since 1788. It began with Langlands Mills and with warehouses behind 13 High Street. The warehouse moved to the top of Wilton Path and a mill was opened at Weensland in about 1835. They started with hosiery, but branched out into flannel, blankets and tweed. The company received regular support from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures through the 1830s. With business booming and the families of the original ‘Sons’ having several sons growing up to enter the trade, in 1851 the business was essentially split among the 3 sons who mainly controlled it, Walter, John and George: Ladylaw and Langlands Mills went to John Wilson; Weensland Mill went to George Wilson; and additional land at Weensland, together with Allars Crescent and the property at 13 High Street went to Walter Wilson.

Windburgh Hill (wind-bu-ru-hil) n. hill above Langburnshielfs off the Newcastleton Road, 507 m (1,662 ft) high. There are the remains of 2 old cairns on the summit, as well as evidence of a formc enclosure. The hill is the source of several streams that flow into the Slitrig. By tradition it was a home of the fairy folk, a bottomless loch near its summit being the home of a kelpie, which, if disturbed, would send a flood into the burn below; Leyden describes poetically how a careless shepherd caused the Slitrig flood of 1767 – ‘From yon green peak, black haunted Slatas brings The gushing torrents of unfathomed springs: In a dead lake, that ever seems to freeze, By sedge enclosed from every ruffling breeze, The fountains lie; and shuddering peasants shrink To plunge the stone within the fearful brink’ [JL], ‘…Then Greatmoor and Windburgh against a purple sky’ [WHO] (also spelled ‘Wyndburgh’ and formerly ‘Wineburgh’).

Winnington

for the Lothian and Berwickshire Imperial Yeomanry in 1905, before attending Edinburgh University, where he trained as a lawyer. He apprenticed in Hawick with James Barrie, W.S., then with an Edinburgh solicitor before returning to Hawick, where he became a partner in Guthrie and Winning by 1912. On the outbreak of WWII, he joined the Lothian and Borders Horse, and after training was posted to France, then to Salonika. Demobilised in March 1919, he was Cornet that same year, the first since the end of the war. He settled back in as a solicitor in Hawick, becoming first President of the Mosstroopers' Club and Common Riding Committee Secretary 1923–25. However, in 1925 he moved to Edinburgh to set up Hamilton & Winning, solicitors, in Dundas Street. He was appointed Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Scotland.

Winnington (wi-ning-tin) n. area to the north-west of Stobs, containing the farm of Winningtonronig and the marshy land at Winnington Moss. Stobs army camp was on this land. The farm of Winningtonhall was lower down, perhaps near the present Woodfoot Cottage. The lands were long held by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and for a period had the status of a barony, including ‘the lands and towns of Wymington, the lands of Wyndingtonhall and mill, the lands of Smynisteid, Over and Nether Kirkwood, Barndsyd and Horslie’ and some pieces of land in Jedburgh; in 1610 the barony was inherited by Marion, Jean and Margaret Hamilton, heirs of Patrick Hepburn. In 1621 Winnington and Winningtonhall were purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (from the Whitslade Scotts) in 1670. Along with Winnington it was valued at £120 in 1788 and 1813 (it is ‘Wyndetounhall’ in 1463, appears to be ‘Windytourhall’ in 1483, then is ‘Windytonehall’ in 1484/5, ‘Wintounhall’ in 1497/8, ‘Wyndtoun Hall’ in 1593, ‘Wynningtoun-hauch’ and ‘Wintounhall’ in 1605, ‘Wintounglaw’ in 1607, ‘Wyndtounhall et molendino ejusdem’ in 1610, ‘Wintounhall’ in 1622, ‘Wintounhall’ in 1657 and ‘Wintoun-hall’ in 1813; it is sometimes ‘Wintoun Haugh’).

Winnington Mill (wi-ning-tin-mill) n. former corn mill at Winnington. In 1788 the value of separate parts of the estate of Elliott of Stobs are given and ‘Wintoon-mill and mill-lands’ were listed as £62 19s 9d. It is unclear where exactly this was, with one possibility being that it is effectively the same as Newmill-on-Slitrig.

Winnington Moss (wi-ning-tin-mos) n. boggy area between Winnington Rig and Hawick Moor. The boundary of the Common ran through it, this being the ‘Wintoun moss on the south’ described in the 1537 Charter. Acreknowe Burn rises there. A field in this area is the most extreme part of the modern Common of Hawick, where the ‘Cuttin o the Sod’ ceremony takes place annually. Peat was cut there by Burgesses, although there were orders for it not to be used, e.g. in 1713 and 1733. In 1755 the Burgh Officers and others were paid ‘for baking bakes, and breaking and throwing the same in the moss’ there – ‘...the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawfoord upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South’[BR1734], ‘...in all the Mosses of the Comonty of Hawick for the present year, 1743, except in Windington. It is ‘Windingtonerig’ in 1622, ‘Windingtounrig’ in 1694, ‘Winnockrig’ in 1710, ‘Windingtounrigde’ in 1717, ‘Winnockrigde’ in 1722, ‘Winnockrigde’ in 1744, ‘Winnockrig’ in 1788 and ‘Winnockrig’ in 1797; it is ‘Winnockrigde’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Winnington Rig (wi-ning-tin-rig) n. farm above what was the Stobs Military Camp, extending over to the edge of the Common. It was once part of the Barony of Winnington. In 1622 the farm was sold by Robert Elliot of Redheugh and his brother William Elliot of Hartgarth (also know as ‘of Rigg’) to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs: it was an 11 merk land, sold along with the rest of Winnington. It was then owned by the Elliotts of Stobs for many generations. The family of Sir Andrew Smith also lived on the lands belonging to the farm. There was once a small community there, with several houses. Mungo Dalgleish was there in 1622 and John Penman in 1688. There were 6 householders listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, 3 Scots, 2 Falsides and a Glendinning. John Harkness and John Cavers were there in about 1710 and William Hall and William Martin around 1720. William Douglas was also recorded as a tailor there in 1720. Gilbert Elliot was there in the early part of the 18th century. John Scott was there in 1744. It was valued at £319 14s 6d in 1788. William Elliot farmed this and other lands in at least the period 1785–97. John Tait was also there in 1787. James Henderson was there in 1811. It was still valued at about £320 in 1813. George and Alexander Aitchison were farmers there in the 1860s. It was farmed by Mr. Brydon around 1900. A story was once told (probably originating in the 18th century) of 2 fairies that used to frequent the farm, often performing helpful tasks, but once, when their piping revels were disturbed, they made all the farm animals call loudly for the whole of the next day. The main farmhouse has long been deserted. There are more buildings and enclosures depicted on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map than currently exist. A perforated stone disc from here is in the Museum – ‘In throwe the knowes o’ bracken That huddle roun’ Winnington Rig: Or slowly alang the ribboned road That saddle Crawbryes Brig?’[WL] (often written as one word ‘Winningtonrig’ and as ‘Winningtonridge’; it is ‘Windingtonerig’ in 1622, ‘Windingtounrig’ in 1657, ‘Winding-toun-rigg’ in 1688, ‘Winningtonrigde’ in 1694, ‘Winnockrigde’ in 1710, ‘Windingtounrigde’ in 1717, ‘Winnockrigde’ in 1722, ‘Winnockrigde’ in 1744, ‘Winnockrig’ in 1788 and ‘Winnockrigg’ in 1797; it is ‘Winnockrigde’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Winnock (wi-nuk) n., poet. a window – ‘For the growling jarr came on the gust, And the winnock glinted bright’[JTe], ‘Like skinklin stars When mirk haps doun Are winnocks lit Ovre a’ the toun’[WL].

Winraw (win-raw) v., arch. to built peat into stacks – ‘After a like period they were ‘winrawed’, that is, the peat was built loosely into rows so that they were exposed to the wind, hence the name ‘winraw’’[BM1907] (cf. wun).

Winterburgh (win-tur-bu-ru) n. former farmstead in the Ettrick valley, between Newburgh and Crosslee. These were Crown lands from at least 1456. They were let to Robert Scott in 1483, then in 1488–92 let to William Roger and Robert Scott. It is probably the ‘Wynterburn’ where John Laidlaw was located in 1494/5 when he had remission for murder. In 1499 they were let to John, son of John Murray of Falahill. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. By 1512 it was feued to James, 2nd son of John Murray of Falahill. Robert Scott of Wamphray claimed tenancy of the lands in 1541, paying £21 yearly. The lands were later owned by a son of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. It was owned by the Scotts of Newburgh in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. The lands were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in Ettrick Forest in 1663 and part of the Buccleuch estates afterwards (it is ‘Wyntyrburgh’ in 1456, ‘Wyntyrburgh’ in 1460, ‘Wintyrburgh’ in 1469, ‘Wintirburgh’ in 1488, ‘Wintirburgh’ in 1490 and 1492, ‘Wyntirburgh’ in 1499, ‘Wintirburgh’ in 1501, ‘Winterburgh’ in 1541, ‘Wintirburgh’ in 1578 and ‘Wynterburgh’ in 1583/4).

Winthrope (win-, wun-trup, -thrup) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) joiner of some sort in Hawick in the early 1700s. He is recorded in the Hawick Parish records making stools, church doors, etc. In 1727 he mended the ladder to the steeple in St. Mary’s. In 1740 he was a witness to a baptism for wright James, who seems likely to have been his son or brother. Andrew S. (1876/7–1900) son of Mrs. Wintrup of 20 Trinity Street, he was a grocer to trade. He served with the 1st Battalion, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and was killed in South Africa. He is listed on the Hawick Boer War Memorial. George (b.1847) son of James and Margaret Rutherford. He became Burgh Surveyor of Castle Douglas. He married Isabella, daughter of joiner Richard Purdom. James (d.bef. 1798) wright in Hawick Parish. In 1735 the Council paid him for providing ‘falding brods in Bailies’ loft’ for St. Mary’s Kirk. In 1755 he was paid for ‘helping the fit-gang of the bailies’ loft’. He married Margaret, whose surname was also ‘Wintrop’. Their children included: James (b.1737), who probably died young; Elizabeth (b.1740); James (b.1742), Hawick lawyer; and Thomas (b.1745). Perhaps the wright in Jedburgh. Andrew (b.1733) and Christian (b.1736), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his children. The witnesses in 1737 were baker Robert Boyd and gardener Robert Ker, in 1740 were wright Andrew (probably his father or brother) and former Bailie John Scott and in 1745 were merchants Francis and John Ruecastle. He was already deceased when his son James, the writer, died. James (d.1798) lawyer in Hawick, son of James. He was probably the James born in Hawick in 1742, his mother being Margaret. He is recorded as ‘the Clerk Writer in Hawick’ in 1778. He may have been Town Clerk from about 1783. Around that time he published a pamphlet about the dispute that had led to the demission of the minister of the East-end Kirk entitled ‘A Dialogue between Two Burghers on the Ejection of the Rev. Mr. Williamson from the Eastend’, of which there are no known copies. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Easton in 1795. He married Agnes (1745–1828), daughter of William Wilson and Mary Hardie. Their son was also James. James (d.1820) son of writer James and Agnes Wilson. He served in the army in France. James (1775/6–1849) tailor of the Sandbed who was also a pawn-broker, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may also be the James listed there as an insurance agent for ‘Hercules’. In 1837 he was a tailor and clothes dealer on the Sandbed. His premises were at ‘Sandbed Bridge End’, and according to the 1841 census his wife was Margaret and they had at least one child, William. James (b.1812) born in Ancrum, he was son of Thomas, who was a carrier in Hawick. He was a shoemaker of the High Street (around No. 48), listed there in 1837 and 1841. He was near the Crown Close in 1851 and later at 7 Cross Wynd. He also worked as an auctioneer (and was listed as such in Slater’s 1852 directory). He married Margaret Rutherford (daughter of Thomas of Haysike) in 1839. Their children included: Jane (or Jean), who married builder George Aitken; George, who became Burgh Surveyor of Castle Douglas; Helen, dressmaker of Oliver Crescent; Christina, who married builder John Elliot; Thomas Hope; and John (b.1855). James (19th C.) school friend of John Inglis, known locally as a poet. He left Hawick in the early 1880s and emigrated to Ontario, where he called his boat ‘Teri Odin’ and continued to write poetry. He was the ‘Border Minstrel’ mentioned in Inglis’ ‘Hawick Among the Hills’. John (17th C.) resident in Riddell according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (18th C.) assistant Town Clerk to John Gladstains roughly 1762–68. It is unclear how he was related to other Winthropes. John (b.1802/3) probably born in Cavers Parish, he was miller at Leaderfoot Mill in Melrose Parish. He was said to be son of Thomas, who was a miller in the Hawick area and buried in Hawick. He married Margaret Gray, and their children included: Thomas (b.1827/8); James (b.1829); William (b.1832), who is meant to have served in the U.S. Civil War; Robert (b.1834), who emigrated to America in the 1880s; Mary Ann (b.1837); John (b.1838/9); and Michael (b.1841/2). He is buried in the graveyard at Melrose Abbey. John (b.1805) son of Robert, he was born in Lilliesleaf Parish. He moved to Liverpool, where he became a master brewer. In 1841 he published the poem ‘Friendship, Love, and Truth’, which are the foundational principles of the Society of Oddfellows. In Liverpool in 1831 he married Anne Evans, and she died in 1848. Their children were: Robert (b.1832); Ann (b.1836); Mary (b.1839); and John (b.1842). All 4 children emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Delaware. John Ainslie (b.1853/4) son of Michael. In 1872 he married Eliza Robertson. Their children included: Thomas Michael (b.1872); and John Kemp (b.1873). Margaret (b.1766/7) from Lilliesleaf Parish, in 1851 she was a widow living around the Crown Close and listed as ‘Formerly (Farmer)’. She was probably sister-in-law of Thomas, the carrier who lived next door. Michael (b.1814/5–94) shoemaker who lived at the Howegate and then Old Manse Lane. He was Burgh Officer and Halberdier from about 1860, for a while along with Jamie Smith and then with Thomas Cook. He also acted as town Bellman and drummer. In 1851 he was at about 16 Howegate. In 1861 he was living at 2 Manse Lane. In 1863 he donated to the Museum an old collection ladle and iron font stand from St. Mary’s. In the 1870s he kept the Teribus Arms at the Fore Raw. In 1847 he married Helen Kemp.
from Melrose. Their children included: Thomas (b.1847/8); John Ainslie (b.1853/4); Margaret (b.1853/4); Helen (b.1855), who probably died young; Andrew (b.1857); James (b.1860); William Robert (b.1862); and George (b.1863) – ‘The Duke o’ the Dean comes staggerin’ doon; O’ the ring i’ the Haugh auld Broughton’s boss, And Michael Wintrup gangs roond the toon, Cryin’ siller that’s squandered at Pitch and Toss’ [HI].

Robert (b.1787/8) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1841 he was living in Maxton with his younger son Robert and is probably the retired shepherd living in St. Boswells in 1851 and 1861. In 1804 in Ancrum Parish he married Douglas Hall (with what now seems an unusual first name for a woman). Their children included: John (b.1805), who moved to Liverpool; Isobel (b.1808); Euphan (b.1811); Agnes (b.1813); Margaret (b.1815); Jessy (b.1820); Christian (b.1824); and Robert (b.1827). Agnes (b.1806), baptised in Ancrum Parish, was probably also their daughter. Robert (b.1821) born in Hawick, son of Thomas and Helen Anderson. He was a carrier in Hawick like his father. His wife was Janet, from Langholm. Robert (1835–1909) born in Melrose Parish, he was son of John, miller at Leaderfoot, but probably related to the Hawick Wintrups. He married Cecilia Fairbairn in 1856 and their children were: John (b.1856); Janet (b.1858); George (b.1860); Thomas (b.1862); Robert (b.1868); Margaret (b.1870); and Archibald (b.1871). The last 2 children were baptised in Hawick Parish. In the 1880s he emigrated to the U.S., following some of his children. He died in Philadelphia. Thomas (d.1776) writer in Hawick. In 1746 the Town Treasurer paid for giving an account of the poor rates to him. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1756 and 1759 (for William Scoon and Sara Wintrup, probably a relative). Around the 1760s he assisted as Town Clerk; James Wilson says that he and John Gledstains refused to take the Oaths of Government and so resigned in 1768. He may be the same Thomas who was notary for the sasine for the sale of Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains to Walter Scott, farmer at Commonside. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1765. It is possible he is the same Thomas who was Provost of Jedburgh in 1767. His daughter Christina married James Murray, and was the paternal grand-mother of Sir James A.H. Murray. He owned land at the Wheathole (now Trinity Gardens) where East Bank Church was built.

His wife was Jean Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick, were: Sarah (b.1745); Thomas (b.1756); and Charles (b.1757). The witnesses to the 1757 baptism were Bailie James Scott and Bailie Kerr. His daughter Elizabeth married William Ormiston, barber in Kelso. In 1799 his daughter Elizabeth’s elder son, James, was served heir to him. His office cabinet is in the Museum. Thomas (18th C.) writer in Hawick. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness (although this could be confusion between writer James and writer Thomas). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Easton and their children included: Margaret (b.1770); and William (b.1775). Thomas (b.1776/7) born in Lilliesleaf. He was a carrier in Hawick, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory operating along with John Cochrane between Hawick and Langholm. In 1837 he was operating between Hawick and Langholm, leaving from the Grapes every Tuesday and Friday. His premises were on Buccleuch Street in 1841 and the High Street (near the Crown Close) by 1851. In 1852 he was operating Mondays and Thursdays to Dumfries and Langholm, leaving from the High Street. He married Helen Anderson and their children were: Isabella (b.1808); Janet (b.1810); James (b.1812/3), shoemaker; Thomas (b.1816); Robert (b.1818); Robert (again, b.1821); and Michael (perhaps the shoemaker and Burgh Officer). He was still alive in 1861. Thomas (b.1801/2) tailor on Orrock Place. He was listed as a tailor on the Howeagate in 1837 and at ‘Teviot square’ in 1852. In 1851 he was at 6 Orrock Place. In 1861 he is recorded at ‘1 Backhouse’ in Hawick. His wife was Margaret and children included Margaret, James, Adam, Isabella, Thomas and George. Widow ?? (18th/19th C.) keeper of a tavern in the early 19th century. There is a record of a Town Council meeting there in 1808 (spelled ‘Winterup’, ‘Wintrop’, ‘Wintrup’ and other variants in early records; see also Wintrope).

Wintoun (win-tin?) n. variant of Winnington, ‘the syke of Wintoun moss’ forming the southern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter.

Wintrope (win-trup) n. Jean (1927–) organiser of the annual Hawick Amateur Operatic shows since 1978, having been involved with the organisation since 1948. She started the Two Rivers Theatre Company in 2000, putting on ‘The Gutterbludes’ over 25–28 April, the first time it had been performed in almost a century. She was Hawick’s Citizen of the Year in 2003 – ‘Wintrop and Lyons, and thame treading the boards wise (wi) n. H.C., M.P. (19th C.) made a pencil sketch of the Auld Brig in 1850, perhaps from the foot of the Mill Port. It shows some of the houses formerly at the head of Silver Street.

Wishart (wi-shur’) n. Agnes listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. She probably ran an inn or shop of some kind. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1623. Presumably the same Alexander ‘Wishart’ was officer of Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick. In 1612 the Magistrates stopped him collecting customs at the market in Hawick, took him from his house and had him imprisoned in the steeple of St. Mary’s tower. This was also apparently because of him striking Robert Roger of Burnfoot Mill (presumably at the market). He was there for 4 days and nights until released on the orders of the Sheriff of Roxburgh. This incident was part of a complaint by the Baron to the Privy Council. In 1613 it was recorded that there was no schoolmaster in Melrose but he ‘keips the schole’ there. He was presumably related to other clerics from that same family, which produced Bishops of Glasgow in the 13th and 14th centuries. James (b.1825/6) from Dalmeny in West Lothian, he was toll-keeper on Wilton Hill in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Isabella D. and Jeanie Manual (who married Alexander Scott). James (19th C.) mason at Blackburn in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there in 1879. Janet (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (d.1337) probably directly related to the earlier Wisharts connected with the Diocese of Glasgow, he was Archdeacon from at least 1321. He became Bishop in 1335 and was consecrated at Avignon in 1337, but died a few months later, as a result of being captured at sea by the English. His seal showed a bishop in a niche and a kneeling bishop with the words ‘SIGILLUM JOHANNIS DEI GR[A. EPI.] GLASGUENSIS’. Marion (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. She could be the Marion, married to Adam Martin, whose son William Martin was born in Hawick in 1674. Robert (c.1240–1316) probably son or nephew of William, Bishop of St. Andrews, who made him Archdeacon of Lothian in 1267. He was elected Bishop of Glasgow in 1271, after William (who was Bishop-elect) was appointed to St. Andrews. As Bishop of Glasgow, he held authority over Teviotdale. He was Bishop when John Comyn donated the land of ‘Rulehaleh’, as confirmed in 1279. He became one of the Guardians of the Kingdom after the death of King Alexander III in 1286. He was active during the Wars of Independence, being a strong supporter of Robert Bruce (grandfather of the future king) against John Baliol. He stated to the English King Edward that ‘the kingdom of Scotland is not held in tribute or homage to anyone save God alone’; however, he swore fealty to Edward, along with other prominent Scotsmen in 1296. He is believed to have encouraged William Wallace in 1297, and was imprisoned for a while, then censured by the Pope for opposing English authority. In 1306, instead of excommunicating Robert the Bruce (for murdering John Comyn in a church of his Diocese) he absolved him, and was present at his corontaion later that year. Taking an active part on the battlefield, he was captured at Cupar and held as a prisoner 1308–15. He lived out his last year or so back in Scotland, although blind. John, who was a later Archdeacon and then Bishop of Glasgow, may have been his son. He is buried in the crypt of Glasgow Cathedral. His existing seal is of fine workmanship, depicting a full-length figure of a bishop standing on a lion, with heads of 2 saints and a bird below him and the words ‘S’ ROBERTI DEI GRATIA EPI. GLASGUENSIS’. William (d.1279) probably son of John, Sheriff of Mearns. He was Archdeacon of St. Andrews from 1254 and was said to have as many as 12 benefices. In 1270 he was elected Bishop of Glasgow after the death of Nicholas de Moffat. However, he was not consecrated in that position before being elected as Bishop of St. Andrews (which was seen as a more senior appointment) in 1271. He died in Morebattle, Teviotdale; however, his association with the region is uncertain. He may have been father of Robert, who was the next Bishop of Glasgow. Mary, who married William Oliphant, may have been his daughter. William (13th/14th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was surely related to the Bishop of the same name and also Bishop Robert, although the precise connection is unknown. He became Archdeacon of Teviotdale by 1288, and in that year is listed as ‘Guillelmo Thevidaliae’ in a papal bull. He was mentioned again as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1297. In about 1306 he was imprisoned by the English, and replaced by Edward II soon afterwards. Rev. William (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John of Pitarrow and Jean Douglas. He graduated from King’s College Aberdeen in 1606, and was given the charge of Fettercairn in 1611. In 1613 he was translated to Minto as helper to Samuel Cockburn, and returned again to Fettercairn in 1618, so that he never became Cockburn’s successor. He sat on the Court of High Commission in 1634 and became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1636. He was translated to South Leith in 1630, but deprived in 1639 ‘for erroneous doctrine’. An opponent of the Covenant, he was forced to flee Scotland in 1639 and died in Cornwall several years later. He married Elizabeth Keith, heiress of Phesdo, and their children were: John, who married Elizabeth Home of Manderston and was killed at Edgellhill; Jean, who married Alexander Wood of Benholme; and Elizabeth, who married Sir William Forbes of Monymusk. He wrote ‘An Exposition of the Lord’s Prayer’ (1633); ‘Immanuel, a poem’ (1642) and ‘Aaron’s Obsequies’ (1635). Rev. William (c.1625–92) minister of Minto Parish, possibly the grandson of the previous Rev. William. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1676 and was ordained at Minto in 1682, where he was presented by Thomas Rutherford of Minto. In 1685 he gained the ‘escheat’ (i.e. goods forfeited as the result of criminal prosecution) of Alexander Wishart, merchant and Burgess of Glasgow (and presumably a near relation). In 1684 a letter from him to the Earl of Tarras describes the manse as so ruinous that he cannot live in it. He was presented to Sprouston Parish in 1686, but the move did not happen. He was deprived of his living in 1690, presumably for refusing to give up Episcopalianism. He appears to have married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Commissary Wishart in 1685 in Edinburgh (this may have been John Wishart, member of the Commissary Court of Edinburgh, who was nephew of George Wishart who had been Bishop of Edinburgh). She may also have been known as Elizabeth, or else he remarried. They had a daughter Catherine (who married Ninian Wishart from Gen. Hamilton’s Regiment). Helen Wishart, servant to his widow Elizabeth, married James Walker in Edinburgh in 1708 (the interrelationships among the family must therefore have been extremely complicated!). Note that there are several contemporary Scottish ministers with the same name, e.g. Rev. William (1621–92), son of Alexander of Pittarrow (and thus a cousin), minister of Kinniel, who was a member of the Dissenting Presbytery from 1651–59 and then spent 13 months in prison, was accused of keeping conventicles in 1675, sentenced to banishment in 1685 for refusing to take the ‘Test’, but eventually let off and later allowed to preach at Leith (also spelled ‘Wischart’, ‘Wischart’, ‘Wyshart’, ‘Wischart’, ‘Wishart’, etc.).

the Wisp (thu-wisp, -wusp) n. Wisp Hill, immediately to the west of Moss paul, reaching a height of 1,953 ft (595 m). It is topped by a triangulation pillar and a cairn, and from the summit on a clear day the Solway and the Lake District can be seen to the south, as well as a magnificent prospect of the Borders to the north and east; it is even said that the Isle of Man has been seen. J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant wrote a musical play called ‘The Witch o’ the Wisp Hill’. There was also a farmstead on the western side (reached from the Merylaw road), with John Anderson and family living there in 1861. James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’) was shepherd lad here for a couple of years. There is an ancient cairn on the summit, about 9 m in diameter – ‘Emerging from the glen so drear, With giant Wisp upon your rear; The Vale of Ewes its charms display, Bright shining in the noon-tide ray’ [WSB], ‘To count each magic summit frae the Wisp to Ettrick Pen, Frae the Black Hill to the Eildons and the heights by Harden Glen’ [JYH] (the origin is unclear; note there is another Wisp Hill near Eskdalemuir).

the Wisp Club (thu-wisp-klub) n. former club of the mid-19th century, which met at Moss pual. It was formed in the Spring of 1826 at a meeting at Moss pual by several of the local farmers. The founding members were: Alexander Pott, Burnfoot, Langholm; William Brown,

The Club dined annually on the Friday after the Dumfries Spring Horse Market, and set prices for cattle, sheep and wool; records exist for the prices of lambs and wool for the period 1796–1852. Dr. Adam Elliot of Goldielands and Henry Scott Riddell were Honorary members. The last annual dinner of the Club appears to have been in 1858.

Witterside (wi’-ur-sid) n. Waterside, former farmstead and possibly fortified house on the south side of the Jed Water, a mile or so east of Chesters. It was valued at 22 shillings in 1538 and 1539. James Oliver was there in 1541, along with Marion and Robert Young, paying 22s yearly. Hob Young was there in 1571/2. The tenant there in 1669 was Thomas Douglas. The tower indicated there may be the one whose remains are near where the Langslack Sike meets the Jed Water, about 150 m east of Hyndhaughhead; this is close to where it is marked by Pont around 1600. The more modern farm is located much further to the east, alongside an old drove road (near where Pont marked ‘Wadeshill’). The remains of the house there probably date from the late 17th century (perhaps replacing the pele house) and was latterly used as a stable. It consists of a single storey plus a garret, with 3 bays and chamfered dressings. It is at the south-east corner of a large enclosure, and there are rig lines in the surrounding land (marked on Blaeu’s map of 1654 as ‘Watersyd’, but further west than on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Wattersyde’ in 1538 and 1541, ‘Watterside’ in 1571/2, ‘Watersyde’ in 1669 and ‘wattersyd’ in 1694).

witter-works (wi'-ur-wurks) n. water-works. Hawick’s first modern water supply came from the Allan, constructed in 1865, with an extension to the supply in 1932. The second supply came from the Dodburn Filters, starting in 1882.

wittin (wi-tin) n., poet. knowledge, notion, information — ‘Hae the wurker o inequity nae waein?’ [HSR], ‘...he that teeches men wtin, sall he nat ken?’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

Witton (wi-tin) n. Adam (13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Wyttton’ in Selkirkshire, where he paid homage to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore a small shield and the name ‘S’ADE DE WITTON’. Michael (13th C.) another of the men who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. He was from Selkirkshire, like Alan, and had the same surname, ‘de Witton’, as the Parson of Hawick at that time. His seal showed a deer running and the name ‘S’MICHAELIS DE WITTYN’. He was also mentioned in about 1300 in a letter to King Edward written at Melrose, where he craves the tithes of Bothwell. Richard ‘de Wyttone’ (13th/14th C.) Parson of Hawick, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He is thus one of the earliest Hawick clergymen on record. His seal shows a lion fighting a dragon and the words ‘S’RICARDI DE WYNNHOV’. He appears to have only lasted a year before being replaced by another appointee of Edward I. Although one might suspect the name ‘Wyttone’ or ‘Witton’ is a corruption of ‘Wilton’ there were 2 others of the same designation in the Rolls, Adam and Michael, both from Selkirkshire. Additionally the Parson of Witton Parish is listed, with a clear spelling distinction. These may be the lands of Whiton in Morebattle Parish. Probably the same ‘R. de Wyttone’, clerk of St. Andrews was listed in an inquiry of 1288 made into debts of the late King of Scotland, and in the related writ in 1289. In 1292 he is recorded holding the church of ‘Soureby’, which had been granted to him by the King of Scotland.

Wolfcleuch Burn (woolf-clooch-burn) n. stream in what is now Craik Forest, joining the Aithouse Burn, which becomes part of the Borthwick. There is a footpath from the car park at Craik village to the scenic waterfall on this burn. The lands of ‘Wolcleuche’ are recorded in 1535/6 when a horse was stolen from there, belonging to Robert Scott of Howpasley. The stream is fed by several smaller water courses, including Cat Sike.

Wolfcleuchheid (woolf-clooch-heed) n. Wolfcleuchhead, a former shepherd’s cottage near the head of the Borthwick, about 12 miles from Hawick. Until 1689/90, when Robertson was formed, it was part of Hawick Parish. The building is in a clearing of Craik Forest just above the 20 foot high waterfall on the Wolfcleuch Burn. It is said that conventicles were held there in the 17th century and also supposedly used as a hiding place for Peden. One story tells of a thick mist that came down and hid the cottage from the dragoons. There were 4 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Michael Anderson, Margaret Grieve, Thomas Anderson and Bessie Grieve. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718; at that time it covered 1224 acres and was bounded by Craikhope, Langshawburn, Buccleuch, Craik, Howpasley, Borthwick Water and Craikhope. William Park was there in 1734–37 and Andrew Park in 1737–41. Another William Park was there in at least 1763–75 and William Crozier in 1786. Robert Pringle was shepherd there in 1797, farm labourer Andrew Scott in 1841 and William Armstrong in 1861. The cottage was still occupied into the early 20th century. It was renovated and used as an outdoor centre for groups from Wester Hailes in Edinburgh. Just to the north are the remains of a small turf-banked enclosure (sometimes written ‘Wolfcleughhead’, it is ‘Wolfcleuchhead’ in 1650, ‘Ouvlcleuch head’ in 1737 and ‘Wolfcleughhead’ in the 1760s and 1770s; it is marked ‘Woolfcleuch’ on a parish map of 1650, ‘Wolfcleuchhead’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wolfehopelee (woolf-fup-lee) n. farm on the B6357 between Wolfelee and Hyndlee, long part of the Wolfelee estate. The lands were partly in Hobkirk, but mostly in Southdean Parish. David Home of Wedderburn was granted these lands, along with those of Wolfelee in 1436. They passed to the Cranstons of that Ilk who sold them to Eliott of Stobs in the 1650s. The tenant farmer was John Telfer in the early-to-mid 1800s and later Robert Inglis (also written ‘Wolhopelee’; it is ‘Wolhople’ and ‘Wolhople’ in 1436, ‘Wolpho’ in 1479 and 1515, ‘Wolfullee’ in 1522, ‘Wilfuplie’ in 1525, ‘Wolhoplee’ in 1550, probably ‘Woofles’ in 1564, ‘Wolhopley’ in 1574, ‘Wowahoplie’ in 1590, ‘Wolhopley’ in 1627 and ‘Wolhoplelie’ and ‘Wolhopley’ in 1677; it is marked as ‘Wolhoplee’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Wolffhopelee’ on Stobie’s 1770 map, when, curiously, ‘Wolfelee’ was still known as ‘Woollie’, so the name may indeed be related to ‘wolf’).

Wolfehopelee Burn (woolf-fup-lee-burn) n. stream that rises to the east of Wolfehopelee Hill and is joined by the Cross Sike and the Catlee Burn, becoming part of the headwaters of the Rule. Near the head of the stream there was a linear earthwork linking to the head of the Battering Sike.

Wolfehopeshiels (woolf-fup-sheeldz) n. former herds cottage associated with Wolfehopelee. It is recorded in 1762, but there was already no sign of it by the mid-19th century.

Wolfelee (woolf-, woo-lee) n. mansion, estate and hamlet south-east of Hawick, beyond Bonchester, in Hobkirk Parish. On the near side of Wolfelee Hill there are the remains of an ancient settlement, where Roman remains were discovered. In early times the lands may have been owned by Jedburgh Abbey. It is probably the lands of ‘Wileys’ which William of Wauchope was granted in the early years of the 14th century. The lands were given to David Home of Wedderburn in 1436 by William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, who was Lord of the Regality of Jedwood Forest. They were held of the superior for a red rose and were possessed by 7 Home Lairds, until sold to Sir William Cranston by Sir George Home in 1605. Alexander and Robert Turnbull were residents there in 1493. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at £10. In 1528 the superior was the Crown, since the Earl of Angus had forfeited his lands, and they were then held ‘in blench’ for a silver penny. The lands were burned by the English in 1545. There were also Turnbull tenants there in the 16th century, e.g. James and Adam in 1516 and Hector in 1567. It was valued at £1000 along with other Southdean lands of Lord Cranston in 1643. The Cranstons in turn sold the estate to the Elliots of Stobs in 1651, who passed it to the Stonedge branch. Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge paid the land tax on £1000 in 1678. The Eliotts of Stonedge, being in serious debt, were ordered to sell it off in 1730, the purchaser being William Elliot, an Edinburgh lawyer. His descendants held it until 1912. Bonnie Prince Charlie and his men camped near here in 1745. Robert Shortreed was occupier for a short period, paying tax for 17 windows there in 1748 (when it was listed in Southdean Parish). William Oliver is recording paying the horse tax there in 1792–94. Thomas Scott was tenant in 1797. The lands were valued at £1000 in 1788 (when held by Cornelius Elliot). James Elliot changed the name from ‘Woollee’ when he had the main house built 1825–27, with architects and building work by Smith of Darnick. This incorporated part of an earlier building (specifically the lower, vaulted chamber, which was about all that was still standing), which had been itself rebuilt in 1698. This earlier house is mentioned as the location for a marriage contract in 1612. It was used as a dower-house by the Eliotts of Stobs and Stonedge in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. Tax was paid on 10 hearths at ‘The Place of oulie’ in 1694, suggesting it was already a large house; at the same time ‘The farmer at woolie’ paid tax on 2 hearths. A stone marked ‘D M N G E S 1698’ (for Dame Margaret Nicholson, Gilbert Elliott and Elizabeth Scott) from the old house was built into the later one. This new house was extensively renovated as a Scottish Baronial mansion in 1860–62. Its most famous resident was Sir Walter Elliot, the 4th Laird, who lived there 1860–87, and was well-known as a naturalist and collector. Sir Walter’s son Edward sold the estate in 1912 to Sir Robert Laidlaw and in 1930 to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. The house had several later uses, including as Beverley School around the years of WWII, and then as a hotel. It was destroyed by fire in 1977, and is now little more than a lawn, although the stable block has been converted into a house. Locals continued to call it by the earlier name well into the 20th century. The house was probably the original of Sir Walter Scott’s Wolfcraig castle in ‘Heart of Midlothian’ and ‘Guy Mannering’. The noted art critic John Ruskin, who visited, said that the view from his bedroom window was the most beautiful he had seen in the United Kingdom. The lands were split into the farms of Over and Nether Wolfelee according to a sasine of 1479 and again in the 17th and 18th centuries. The old farmhouse was close to the site of the mansion house and was demolished in 1824, some of the stone being used for Wolfelee House. The newer farm of Wolfelee was called Cleuchhead. There have been Tuesday Ride-outs to here. The beech hedges that enclosed the house survive, as do 2 lodges (also spelled ‘Wolfe’ and variants; it is probably first recorded as ‘Willey’s’ in about 1305 and is certainly ‘Wollee’ and ‘Wolle’ in 1436, ‘Wolle’ in 1469, ‘Wowlee’ in 1493, ‘Wollye’ and ‘Wolley’ in 1538, then ‘the Wollee’ in 1526, ‘Wolley’ in 1516, ‘Wolle and Wolfe in 1528, ‘Wolley’ in 1538, ‘Wowlee’ in 1539, ‘The Wolles’ in 1545, ‘Woulie’ in 1552/3, ‘Wolhoplee’ in 1550, ‘Wollie’ in 1557, ‘Wolley’ in 1567, ‘Wolley’ in 1574, ‘Wolleye’ in 1590 and 1616, ‘Wowly’ in 1616, ‘Woollee’ in 1626, ‘Woolyes’ and ‘Wolleyes’ in 1677, ‘Wooly’ in 1690, ‘Woolie’ in 1691, ‘Woelie’ in 1709, ‘woolie’ in 1748, ‘Woolie’ in 1761 and 1797 and ‘Wolley’ in 1811; it is ‘Oulie’ on Blaen’s 1654 map and is still ‘Woolie’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name is possibly Old English ‘wulf leah’, meaning ‘wood of the wolves’, however this may be confusion over the deliberately changed form of the name; it probably never contained the ‘f’ until the name was changed in the early 19th century, but this is confused because of the neighbouring ‘Wolfehopelee’ which does appear to have been related to the word ‘wolf’; it has also been suggested that the Wellogate in Hawick was named as the road to ‘Woollee’).

Wolfelee Free Kirk (woolf-lee-free-kirk) n. Free Church in the Rule valley. It was also sometimes known as Southdean Free Kirk. The congregation was first set up in 1846, following the Disruption, with a congregation formed from those who ‘came out’ in Hobkirk and Southdean. The meeting constituting it was held in Hawick in March 1849, with a list of 83 members drawn up as the initial congregation. The first minister was Rev. James Barbour Johnstone. James Elliot of Wolfelee gave some of the lands of Mack-side for the church and manse. The original kirk was in the Crown Plantation, to the south of the A6088, just to the east of the junction with the B6357. The Manse was built a little to the east, on the north side of the A6088. The church roof started to give way in 1867 and a new building was constructed on another nearby site in 1868. A roll of the ministry is: James B. Johnstone 1849–62; Robert Milligan 1863–71; William C. Russell 1872–90; William Smith 1891; Robert Leggat 1891–98; David Wilson Baird 1898–. Wolfelee Glen (woolf-lee-glen) n. former pair of cottages in the glen near Wolfelee, also known as ‘The Glen’. They were on the earlier site of Wolfelee Mill.
Wolfelee Hill (woolf-lee-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, lying just south-east of Wolfelee. It reaches a height of 393 m (1,288 ft) and contains a triangulation pillar. Burns apparently climbed this during his Border tour of 1787. On the north-west slopes are the remains of a settlement, measuring about 50 m by 40 m, consisting of a bank and ditch, and perhaps connecting with a hollow road to the north. A number of metal finds were uncovered at this location in the 1990s, including a Romano-British trumpet brooch and Roman-style iron axehead, now in the National Museum of Scotland. The slopes of the hill also show signs of old cultivation and plantation banks. The east side is crossed by a section of track, which is part of the Wheel Causeway.

Wolfelee Ludge (woolf-lee-luj, -loj) n. gatehouse for Wolfelee mansion, located by the B6357, at the north end of the former driveway.

Wolfelee Mill (woolf-lee-mil) n. mill on Wolfelee farm. Andrew Turnbull was tenant there in 1684 when his servant John Hall was among those declared as fugitives for attending conventicles. The location was later called ‘The Glen’, where 2 cottages were built.

Wolfelee Schuil (woolf-lee-skil) n. former school near Wolfelee.

Wolfelee Schuil Cottage (woolf-lee-skil-ko’-eej) n. name used for the house that was formerly the small school Wolfelee. The Waugh family lived there in the latter part of the 19th century.

Wolfhope (woolf-fup) n. former farm in the Ettrick valley on the Wolfhope Burn and above the farm of Tushielaw. It may be where Adam Scott ‘in wolfhop’ was from, recorded as surety in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 James Laidlaw of ‘Wynterburn’ had remission for the murder of his uncle’s son, John Laidlaw, who was from here, and John Cook from here had cows stolen by Robert Scott of Deloraine. Additionally in that year it is recorded that a group of men who were reset by Adam Scott in Annelshope, had pillaged the farm there. There was a ruined shepherd’s cottage near where the stream meets the Tushielaw Burn (it is ‘Wolfhop’ in 1494/5).

Wolfhope Burn (woolf-fup-burn) n. stream in the Ewes valley, which joins the Meikledale Burn at Rigfoot. It is said that this was where the last wild wolf in Scotland was shot. Also on a steep slope here is the monument for Lady Florence Cust’s wild ride down the steep bank during a fox hunt. The ‘landis of Wolfhope and pendicle theirof callit Belstanerig’ is listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. The lands of ‘Wolfhope’ are among those whose superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696 (this could be the ‘Wolfhope’ in Ettrick Forest granted to Melrose Abbey in the reign of Alexander II; ‘Wolflhoop’ is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Wolfhopefit (woolf-fup-fit) n. land at the foot of the Wolfhope Burn, on the farm of Bush in Ewesdale. Around 1900 ground there was brought under the plough and a large amount of stonework was unearthed, suggesting there had once been several buildings there. It is marked ‘Settlement’ on modern maps.

Wolffee see Wolfelee

wolfs (woolf) n., pl. wolves, once indigenous in Britain. They appear to have survived in the Borders into the 16th century. Scotland’s last wolf was killed either near Killiecrankie in 1680, Brora around 1700, Perthshire in 1743 or Morayshire also in 1743. The 12th century historian Reginald of Durham recounts a tale told him by Dolfinius, parson of Cavers; a poor widow, who could not afford a shepherd, had her flock protected from wolves by appealing to St. Cuthbert and seeking sanctuary in the churchyard of the chapel of St. Cuthbert (probably at Cogsmill). The only local legacy of their existence is in the name ‘Wolfcleuch’ near Craik and ‘Wolfehopelee’ near Watchope (with Wolfelee probably being unrelated, the ‘f’ being a relatively recent addition) – ‘Woods of dark oak, that once o’er Teviot hung, Ere on their swampy beds her mosses sprung. On these green banks the raving wolf-dogs prowls. And fitful to the hoarse night-thunder howl’ [JL], ‘Old Wat o’ Harden, tireless and keen, Rode first of the troop; he was lithe and lean As a Liddesdale wolf, and his glance was swift As the glance of the sun when the low clouds life’ [WHO].

Woll (wöl, wol) n. large house in Ashkirk, traditionally home of the Scotts of Woll. It is unclear what the lands here were called before the 17th century. One possibility is that the Scotts ‘in le walis’ (who derived their byname from lands called ‘Walls’ in Dryfesdale near Lockerbie) transferred their designation to this area. The first known owner of the lands was Walter Scott of Woll, recorded from at least 1606, and said to be descended from the Scotts of Haining. His grandson James sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden and William’s 5th son John, in about 1660. This established the more modern Lairdship. John Murray was a tenant there in 1638 and William Laidlaw in 1639. In 1643 the lands were valued at £533 and owned by Walter Scott of Woll; the teinds were valued (along with Leap Hill, Castleside and Broadlee), valued at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. The estate was valued at £533 6s 8d according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £595 in 1678 (when owned by John Scott). The house was taxed for having 8 hearths in 1694, and there were 4 other tenants listed on the estate. Tax was paid on 22 windows there in 1748 and 31 in 1753. William Scott is marked as proprietor on Ainslie’s 1773 map. It was valued at £533 in 1788, with the teinds valued at an additional £62, and the owner being Charles Scott of Woll. It had the same value and owner according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811. In 1839 it was inherited by Col. John Scott, the last Scott of Woll, who sold it to Mr. Ainslie in 1860 (probably the G.C. Ainslie stated to be there in a record of 1868). It was in turn sold to George William Bell in 1863, and then his son William Scott Bell became the owner. The estate is drawn on Roy’s c.1750 map, with some walled enclosures and a small plantation. The 1843 map by Crawford & Brooke shows both Woll and New Woll. It is also the name given to the general area just west of Ashkirk. Woll estate is home to a golf course (expanded recently to allow 9 to 18 holes). The buildings include a stable block (formerly spelled ‘Wall’ and other variants; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Well’, Adair’s c. 1688 map as ‘well’, is ‘Wool’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Wooll’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; it is ‘Wollis’ in 1617, ‘Well’ in 1636, ‘Wall’ in 1643, ‘Wooll’ in 1661, ‘Wooll’ in 1673, ‘waalls’ in 1678, ‘Woll’ in the 1680s and 1690s, ‘Woall’, ‘Wool’ and ‘Wooll’ in the 1690s, ‘Wall’ in 1690, ‘Wooll’ in 1692, ‘Well’ and ‘Wooll’ in 1704, ‘Waalls’ in 1715, ‘Wool’ in 1726, ‘Woall’ in 1737, ‘Walls’ in 1748, ‘Wool’ in 1753, ‘Wooll’ in 1761, ‘Wooll, or Wall’ in 1788, ‘Wool’ in 1805, ‘Wooll’ in 1811 and 1815 and ‘Wool or Wall’ in 1834; the origin is obscure, with possibilities including ‘wall’ for a spring, or a connection with either sheep or wolves!).

Woll Burn (wel-burn) n. stream that runs roughly south-east to join the Ale Water about half a mile south of Ashkirk. It is fed by the Wollrig Burn, Hutler Burn and Blindhaugh Burn.

the Woll Golf Course (theu-wol-gôlf-kôtrs) n. a 9-hole golf course on the Woll estate just outside Ashkirk, opened in 1993.

Wollie Miln (wo-lee-miln) n. former corn mill in Hobkirk parish, around the 17th and 18th centuries, on a site later occupied by ‘The Glen’ cottages. It may be the same as Woollee Mill.

Woll Rig (wel-rig) n. hilly area on the back road connecting Ashkirk with the Ettrick valley, which reaches a height of 337 m (1,095 ft). Robert Davidson is recorded as farmer there in 1797. Peter Clark was there in the 1860s. The Bishop’s Stone lies under the dyke near the cattle-grid here. The ridge offers an extensive panorama of the Borders and the Moffat Hills to the west. The farm of Wollrig contains a possible old enclosure as well as the turf base of a former shieling hut. There is also further cultivation remnants and a possible enclosure by the road between Wollrig farm and the Bishop’s Stone – ‘By high Woll Rig to Ettrick Or over Chapelhill The lure of upland places They bend me to their will’ [WL] (also spelled ‘Woll Rigg’ and ‘Wollrigg’).

Wollrig Burn (wel-rig-burn) n. small stream in Ashkirk Parish. It rises on Woll Rig and in Tocher Lodge Moss, and runs roughly south-east to join the Woll Burn. It is probably the ‘small rivulet on the east side of Humele’ recorded in a charter of about 1170, describing lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk.

won (won) v., arch. to reside, dwell – ‘...let us gae furth intil the feeld, let us won in the clauchant’ [HSR], ‘The richteous sall inheerit the lan’, an’ won therin forvir’ [HSR] (also written ‘wone’; cf. win and wum).

wonderfi (wun-dur-fi) adj. wonderful – ‘Colin and Danny here, whae next? This is wonderfu!’ Whae next?’ [JEDM] (also written ‘wonderfu’ etc.).

wondert (wun-dur-*) pp. wondered – ‘A wondert how ee got here’, ‘Is there a moral to be pykit here? Aa’ve whiles won’dert!’ [DH].

wonsome (won-sum) adj., poet. winsome, attractive – ‘...for thy voyce is sweit, an’ they coun- tinence is wonsome’ [HSR] (also wainsome).

wont (wont) pp., adj., arch. customary, usual – ‘...of the sayd James off Langlandis and hys harys, makand haucht and wont seruis for the sayd landys’ [SB1431].

woo (woo) n., arch. wool – ‘He gies snaw like woo’, he skatters the haar-frost like assis’ [HSR], ‘Sae let them get their taits o’ woo Wash’d in the purlin’ river Though they pollute it at the time It sune turns clear as ever’ [TCh], ‘Tarry woo’ is best of a ’’[T], ‘...And some brought dumplings o’ woo’ And some brought flichtes o’ bacon’ [ES], (see also ’oo).
the Woo Burn

the Woo Burn (θn-woo-burn) n. stream that rises near Woo Law, gathering water from Ashkirk Loch and Shielswood Loch to join the Ale Water near Burnfoot.

wooch (wooch) v., arch. to bark like a dog, n. a stifled bark.

Wood see Wud

Woodburn (wood-burn) n. William (13th C.) person from Roxburghshire who may have sworn fealty to Edward I in 1296, as stated in ‘Origines parochiales Scotiae’. Both James Robson and James Murray wrote that he was ‘William of Woodburn, parson of the Church of Mynetowe’. He is transcribed as ‘Willielmus Wodeburn, Parson ecclesi de Mynetowe’ in Borthwick’s 1775 list. However, he does not appear in later published versions of the Ragman Rolls.

Woodger (woo-jur) n. John (19th C.) coachman to Mark Sprot of Riddell for 58 years – ‘His cheerful greeting and his ready joke Will be remembered long by all who felt The influence of his individuality. Genial and robust. His kindliness Will always be recalled with kindliness’ [FL].

Wood’s Plan of Hawick (woodz-plawn-ow-hlk) n. map of 1824, surveyed by John Wood (c.1780–1847) of Edinburgh for his ‘Town Atlas of Scotland’ (1828). This is one of the earliest maps of Hawick showing any detail, and indicates buildings, plots of land (with owners names), wells and even trees.

Woo Law (woo-law) n. hill to the north-east of Whitfield farm, about 4 miles from Hawick, reaching a height of 322 m. Woolaw Loch and Woolaw Moss are nearby, as well as Woolaw Covert, and a spring called the Woolaw or Cheese Well. The Woo Burn also has its source near here, running near Ashkirk Loch to eventually join the Ale Water. There is an ancient rectangular enclosure on the east of the hill, about 900 m north-north-west of Whitfield farmhouse, and the remains of a farmstead and enclosures a little to the east. There is also a claim of evidence of a Roman road between here and Groundistone Hills.

Woolaw Moss (woo-law-mos) n. marshy area near Woo Law. A drain was constructed, probably in the 19th century to improve the land for agricultural use, draining the Moss into the Cala Burn. Aerial photography has shown an area of rig-and-furrow cultivation there about 450 m north-west of Whitfield.

Woolhope (oo-lok, woo-lup) n. farmstead in Liddesdale, situated on the Kih Sike, about a mile or so to the north-west of Newcastleton. There is an extensive ancient field system in the area, including ‘lazy beds’ to the north of the cottage. The area is probably the same as what is marked ‘Oulack’ on Blaen’s c.1654 map and first recorded as ‘Wlwyk’ in c.1376. Alexander Armstrong possessed the farm of ‘Willock’ in 1632, which was probably here. William Pringle was shepherd there in 1841 and 1851 and William Robson in 1861. The farmhouse is derelict (note the local pronunciation; it is ‘Woollock’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Woollegate (woo-lee-ga) n. another name for the Wellogate – ‘A party is fined for breaking of the marches betwixt the propertie of the Duchess of Buccleuch and the commonti at the Woolee gate’ [JW1715] (it is ‘Woolie Gate’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Woolie’s (woo-leez) n. branch of Woolworths P.L.C., situated at 46 High Street. The store opened in about 1930 (as store No. 413), with its original sign reading ‘F.W. Woolworth & Co. Ltd., 3d and 6d Stores’. It closed in 2009. The building was purpose-built as a Woolworth’s store, and has the typical 5 bays and central pediment to be found on ex-Woolworth’s shops elsewhere. During construction in 1930 there was an accident in which one worker died and several were injured.

Woollee (woo-lee) n. former name for Wolfelee, changed by James Elliot when he built the mansion there 1825–27. It is believed that the ‘Wellogate’ is derived from being the ‘gate’ to ‘Woollee’. The name is known from at least the early 15th century, and in 1605 is recorded as the separate ‘Over Woollee’ and ‘Nether Woollee’ (also spelled ‘Woollie’, ‘Wolle’, ‘Woelie’, ‘Woolie’, ‘Wowlie’, etc.; it is ‘Overwollee’ and ‘Neather Wolley’ in 1636).

Woollee Mill (woo-lee-mil) n. former corn mill attached to the lands of ‘Woollee’ (i.e. Wolfelee). It is recorded in 1659 along with other lands sold by William, Lord Cranstoun to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Turnbulls were tenants in the late 17th century (it is ‘Woolie-mill’ in 1684 and ‘Wollie MIl’ in 1691).

Woollee smiddy (woo-lee-smi-dee) n. former name for the blacksmiths at Forkins near Wolfelee.

Wooplaw

Wooplaw (woop-law) n. farm just north of the Carter Bar, in Southdean Parish. William Ainslie was there in 1623. Walter Thomson was tenant there in 1694. Douglas Davidson was tenant in the mid-19th century. There is another area of the same name north of Gala (it is ‘Wouplaw’ in 1623 and ‘ouplaw’ and ‘Wplau’ in 1694; there is a place of the same name in Melrose Parish).

wopen (wō-pin) adj., arch. wrapped, tied up – ‘The spelling is, in most cases phonetic, and shows that the local pronunciation has been then, as now, distinctive, … gritt beens, wheet, wopen cole plants …’ [DMW] (cf. waupit).

Worchart (wor-chur’) n. old name for Orchard farm and surrounding area.

Wordsworth (wurdz-wurth) n. Dorothy (1771-1855) sister of the poet William. In 1803 she accompanied her brother on a tour of the Borders, led for much of the way by Sir Walter Scott. Her diary records the party leaving Jedburgh on 22th Septmber, passing through Denholm, then stopping off at Hornshole (where Scott told them an imaginative story about the name deriving from an old school master who lived nearby), before arriving in Hawick, where they stayed at the Tower Inn. The next morning they ‘walked with Mr. Scott along a high road for about two miles, up a bare hill’ from where they had a great view to the south: this was probably the Vertish, although other places are possible. Scott left them after breakfast and they travelled on towards Langholm, stopping off at Branxholme, Caerlenrig and Mosspaul, where she described: ‘The scene, with this single dwelling, was melancholy and wild, but not dreary, though there was no tree nor shrub; the small streamlet glittered, the hills were populous with sheep; but the gentle bending of the valley, and the correspondent softness in the forms of the hills, were of themselves enough to delight the eye.’ William (1770–1850) English poet who visited Hawick in 1803 as part of a Border tour with his sister Dorothy, led by Sir Walter Scott. They spent the night in the Tower Inn and walked up the Wellogate (or perhaps the Vertish) to enjoy the view. There is a brief entry in his sister’s diary. A plaque commemorating the visit was placed on the Tower in 1921 by the Callants’ Club. Next day they travelled south and stopped at Mosspaul, spending the next night in Langholm.

Wordy (wur-dee) adj., poet. worthy – ‘Sae dinna vex a heart that is your ain, But end at anes a wordy woer’s pain’ [CPM], ‘It’s no wordie a dad of a bonnet,’ was a common phrase used when expressing contempt …’ [EM1820], ‘I wull ca’ upon the Lord, wha is wurdie til be prayet’ [HSR], ‘The keeper o’ that ale-hoose Is wordy nocht but scorn’ [WL] (also written ‘wordie’).

wore in (wör-in) pp., arch. herded into an area, hemmed in – ‘…and thereby wore in the sheep and nolt of Over Southfield so that they could not get to the Common for part of that day’ [C&L] (cf. weir).

workeet see workit

the Workhouse (thu-wurk-hoos) n. another name for the Pairhoose.

the Workin Men’s Buildin Society (thu-wurk-menz-bil-din-si-i’ee) n. also known as the Building Society or the Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company Limited, a name which it adopted in 1888. It formed in 1864, registered under the Friendly Societies’ Acts, after a previous failed attempt to start a local building society in 1851 (the Hawick Benefit Building Society). It offered a safe investment opportunity and cheap housing for the working classes, with the house being paid off over time by the purchaser. The society was instrumental in raising the quality of accommodation in Hawick in the latter part of the 19th century. Much of ‘the Terraces’ in the Wellogate were built by the society, starting with Waverley Terrace. In all it built 324 quarter-house units, 20 half-houses and 94 cottages in the Wellogate. In the early days houses were sold by auction and the street names often suggested by the successful bidders.

workit (wur-kee’, -ki’) pp. worked – ‘in they days the men aye workit ower Christmas’, ‘His faither workit at the mill Like mony a decent chap’ [DH] (also written ‘workeet’; alternative past tense to wrought and wroucht, which can also be the past participle).

worlin (wör-, wur-, lin) n., arch. a worldling, someone only concerned with worldly matters – ‘The worlin’ weil had lo’ed the ha’, Doun in yon bonne greenwud shaw’ [HSR].

world (wur-, wō-rul’, -rult) n., arch. world – ‘The native flo’rs the auld-worlt stories …’ [??], ‘Aa yow yins that’s ooreet an oold wui this neeger-wheeper ov a woarlt’ [ECS] (this is the older pronunciation, which once had the ō vowel, rather than u; also written ‘woarlt’; cf. warld).

Wormiecleuch (wur-mee-kloogh) n. farmstead between Meadshaw and Craik, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Whyrmycleuch’. The only feasible connection on modern maps is ‘Whinney Cleuch’, a stream that joins the Borthwick roughly opposite Eilig (marked on de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland as ‘Wirmyleuch’).

Worm Rig (wurm-rig) n. wooded ridge between the Rueycastle and Knowesouth Burns, in the northern part of Bedrule Parish, directly to the east of Newton. A series of earthworks was revealed in aerial photographs in 1946, covering an area about 140 m by about 60 m. It lies on the narrow ridge between the 2 streams and is formed of double ramparts and ditches, although partially obliterated by cultivation. Note there is another earthwork much higher up on the Knowesouth Burn, described in the New Statistical Survey in 1837.

Wormscleuch (wurm-klooch) n. farmstead to the north of the road linking Saughtree with Kielder, on the Wormscleuch Burn and close to the Wheel Causeway. An old road, possibly once a branch of the Wheel Causeway, passes south of here, crossing the Wormscleuch Burn and going south-west to the Holy Grain. It was probably the ‘Ermscleuch’ among lands granted to Scott of Harden by the Abbot of Jedburgh about the 1530s. It was ‘Ormescleuche’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. The lands of ‘Ormescleuch’ were inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden from his father Sir Walter in 1642. ‘Ormeschelche’ was listed (along with Wheelkirk, Wheellands, Abbotsike and Abbotshaw) among lands inherited by Mary Scott of Buccleuch in 1653. In 1663 it is still listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch. James Telfer was shepherd there in 1861 (the name probably derives from the Old Norse personal name ‘Orm’ and is recorded as early as 1606; it is ‘Ormscleuch’ in 1663).

Worms Cleuch (wurmz-klooch) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Teviot, joining Rams Cleuch at the steading of Ramsaycleuchburn. A steading there, ‘Ormscleuch’ was listed in a Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 along with Rashiegrain and Commonbrae, valued jointly ‘in stok 120 lb., in teynd 20 lb’.

Wormston (wurm-stin) n. old name for Ormiston farm.

Wormwud (wurm-wud) n. former name for lands in the Ettrick valley. In 1479 the eastern part was held by William Chisholme, with Alexander Murray, Rector of Hawick holding the ‘grassum’. In 1541 it is described that the western part was called Whitehaugh Brae and the eastern part was Hutlerburn. Hence the lands lay along the B7009 between Inner Huntly and Ettrickbridge. There were Scotts and Murrays there in the mid-15th century (it is ‘Warmwod’ in 1479 and 1541).

worset (wur-si) n., arch. worsted, twisted woollen yarn – ‘Hard-weerin worset threids for wairp …’[WL] (also written ‘worsit’ and ‘wurset’).

worship (wur-ship) n., arch. religious denomination – ‘Wey had been schuled thegither, an’ oor pawrents belonged to the same wurship’[BCM1880].

wot (wot) v., poet. first and third person singular present tense of wit, to know – ‘For weel I wot it wadna serve To make ye frae your purpose swerve’[AD], ‘For days lang syne, I wot ye weel, Her sons made English foemen feel …’[JLH], ‘… And I wot I will ne’er be puir’ [WL] (also written ‘wat’, ‘wait’, etc.; cf. wat and watin).

woundit (woon-dee’, -di’) adj., arch. wounded – ‘But God sall schuut at thame wi’ anne arra; suddanlie sall thaye be wuundet’[HSR].

Wowie (wow-ce) n. nickname for William Laidlaw Scott.

Wowlick (wow-lik) n. former lands in Liddesdale. They are recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Wllayk’ (valued at 5 shillings) and ‘Wl-layk maior’ (valued at 18 shillings), the section called ‘Ludne’. In a rental roll of 1541 they are ‘Wowlyk’, valued at 20 shillings and leased to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn). This is surely the same as ‘Oulack’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, which is situated near the modern farm of Woolhope, and hence probably the same place, i.e. north-west of Newcastleton.

Wt. (wal’-ur) n. formerly common abbreviation for ‘Walter’.

wrack (rak) n., arch. field weeds, especially long-rooted grasses when gathered up for burning, often referring to couch-grass, Triticum repens – ‘Rack (sb.) (variant of wrack) = garden refuse’[ECS].

wrack (rak) n., poet. a wreck, shipwreck – ‘My heart it said nay; – I look’d for Jamie back; But the wind it blew high; and the ship it was a wrack ...’ [CPM].

Wrae (râ) n. farm in the Ewes valley, between Sorbie and Langholm. There was formerly a mill there. Along with Park it was described as a 20-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604 and by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619. There were Armstrongs there in the 16th and 17th centuries. Easter, Waster and Middle ‘Wraes’ are listed as part of the lands of Ewesdale in about 1610, when the superiority was granted to the Earl of Home. It is listed as ‘Wray’ among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. The 12-merk lands of ‘Ovir et Nathir Wraithes’ in the Parish of ‘Nathir Yeues’ are listed among the lands whose superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. Middle and Over Wray were surveyed together along with other Scott of Buccleuch farms in 1718, when they covered 255 acres, bounded by Sorbie, Howgill and Flask, but with no farm house there at the time. Nether Wrae was surveyed separately, covering 265 acres, bounded by Flask, Terrona, Middle Wrae and Staplegordon, with the farmhouse roughly where the modern farmhouse is located. William Anderson was there in at least the period 1785–97. William Knox (the poet) farmed there for a few years. Mina Maxwell was there in 1841, as well as Bells. In 1851 there were Bells, Andersons and Littles there (sometimes formerly ‘Wra’ and occasionally ‘Wrea’; ‘O. Wrae’ and ‘N. Wrae’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, while ‘Midle and Over Wrae’ and ‘Nether Wrae’ are on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

wrangously (rawng-is-lee) adv., arch. wrongfully, incorrectly – ‘...wha lethina liftet up his saul untill vaitinit, nar swurn wrangouslie’ [HSR].

the Wrangway Burn (thu-rawng-wa-burn) n. stream that joins the Limiecleuch Burn in the headwaters of the Teviot. Its source is near Rashiegrain Height, and it runs near Ewes Doors and to the west of Wisp Hill. There is some evidence for a possible Roman road linking the valley of this burn with that of the Eweslees Burn. A large stone on its banks contains cup-shaped hollows, although it is unclear whether they are man-made or natural (it is marked on Blaeu’s wrassle

1654 map; the name is said to derive from when a group of Scottish rievers were being pursued up the burn by the English and slipped over to Eweslees via Ewes Doors, with the English continuing the wrong way; however, the meaning may be from the stream appearing to come from the pass at Ewes Doors, but in fact originating on Haggis Side.

Wreathlongshot (reeth-lawng-sho') n. former name for part of Salenside in Ashkirk Parish. In 1815 they are described as ‘the twenty shilling land of Salenside called Wreathlongshot and Broomshaugh’.

the Wreath Layin (thu-reeth-lä-in) n. ceremony held on the Saturday morning of the Common Riding, when the Cornet, Right- and Left-Hand Men lay wreaths at the War Memorial in the Park, while the Acting Father holds the Flag in a lowered position. The same phrase sometimes refers to the wreath-laying ceremony at Hornshole, carried out by the Cornet’s Lass on after the Kirking Ceremony. Before 1977 this ceremony took place after the Cornet’s Walk on the Thursday.

the Wreck (thu-rek) n. local nickname in use around the early 19th century.

wreckit (re-ki', -kee') adj., pp. wrecked – ‘...They’d ruined lives and wreckit toons, In mony a fray’ [JCG].

wreesle (ree-sul) v., arch. to wrestle – ‘Hoo memory wreesals at the sneck Whene’er the ‘slogan’’s sooned ...’ [RH] (also spelled ‘wressal’).

Wreth (reth) n. Alexander (16th C.) miller recorded in 1554 when he witnessed the grant of an acre of land on ‘Harparhill’ to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry by James Douglas of Cavers, and also witnessed the letter of reversion by Elliot to Douglas that followed. In fact two men of this name are listed, with one being ‘molen-dinario’ (i.e. miller) to distinguish him from the other. He may have been miller at Spittal-on-Rule or elsewhere in Cavers Parish (‘Wreth’ is otherwise unknown and may be a transcription error for some other name, e.g. ‘Veitch’).

the W.R.I. (thu-du-bul-yoo-awr-I) n. the Women’s Rural Institute, also sometimes called ‘the Rural’. The Scottish W.R.I. was founded in 1917, partly as an outgrowth of the suffrage movement, and partly following success of such institutes in Canada 20 years earlier. This quickly spread into a set of social clubs for women in sparsely populated rural areas, with an emphasis on preserving traditional handicrafts and cooking. Since their formation these groups have been important for organising community events in local rural areas, and also for having community halls built. The members of each Institute usually meets once a month. There have been active W.R.I. groups in Appletreehall, Bedrule, Burnfoot, Cogsmill, Hermitage, Minto, Newcastleton, Newmill & Teviothead, Robertson, Southdean, and Wilton Dean, as well as further afield.

wricht (riikt) n., arch. a wright, carpenter – ‘Isna this the wricht’s son? isna his mither ca’t Mary?’ [HSR], ‘‘Nae wricht’s son this’, cries oot The Captain to his men ...’ [WL] (also just wright).

wright (riit, riit) n., arch. a craftsman, particularly a carpenter (or joiner).

Wright (riit) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Dean Mill in 1729. He married Marion Riddell and their children included: Anna (b.1727); Robert (b.1727); William (b.1731); and Bessie (b.1733). The witnesses in 1729 were William Scott and Adam Easton.

Rev. David L. minister of Hawick Old Parish 1972–86, also with responsibility for Teviothead. He was the last minister of the ‘Auld Pairish’, which finally closed in 1987 and was demolished a few years later. George (d.1911) baker at 2 Al-lars Crescent. He married Helen Davidson, who was related to the Hawick plasterers, and died in 1915. They had a daughter Georgina, who was a shopkeeper in Irby, Cheshire, and other daughters Mary Jane and Isabella. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Hector (16th C.) smith of Hawick, mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He was owed money ‘for shone to the Lairdis horse’. James (17th C.) tenant of Harry Riddell, probably near Bewlie, recorded in 1665. James (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hawick Toun’, Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism for John Scott and Janet Jackson in Hawick in 1673. He could be the James recorded as ‘Cook’ in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for ‘drummer’ Thomas Boyd (who was also gardener at the Flex); it is unclear for whom he might have been a cook. He was also recorded as a cook in a baptismal record of 1712. He married Jean Robson and their children included Jean (b.1712) and James (b.1715). The witnesses in 1712 were Walter Ruecastle and George Oliver.

James Hunter (d.1765) killed falling from a steeple in Jedburgh, he is buried in Lilliesleaf kirk-yard. His tombstone reads ‘Stop, traveller, as you Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as Bailie in the 1680s. He was tried for abusing another Bailie in 1685, and a man is recorded being fined for calling him a ‘basse kniffe’ (i.e. ‘base knave’) in 1689. He owned 2 ‘tenements’ in the West End of Hawick, according to a sasine of 1687 (for a tenement between his). In 1688 James Turnbull was fined for assaulting him, when he tried to take him to the Tolbooth. He was probably the son of the deceased Robert of Hawick who became a locksmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1659. He may be the Robert who was born in Hawick in 1643, son of Robert and Margaret Deans. He was probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Halliday in 1675. He was probably the Robert who was fined in 1679 for destroying a load of peat belonging to Robert Thomson in Hawick Shiel, with the other man also fined for fighting with him. He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms for William Laing, Patrick Scoon and Robert Hogg in 1688. He is included among the contributors to Hawick’s new church bell in 1693/4. He was ‘late bailie Havek’ in 1696 when a child of his was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in Edinburgh. In 1697 he was one of 4 men who protested against the continuing of Robert Ruecastle as Bailie, through there being a vacancy and on account of an agreement made with the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch, until a new election for Bailie was held. He may be the Robert who married Helen Glendinning and whose children included Robert (b.1670) and Margaret (b.1671); the witnesses in 1671 were George Renwick and James Burn. Robert (17th C.) cordiner in Easter Burnfoot who was made a Burgess for free in 1690 ‘in respect it is the custom of all towns, that the Provost or other Magistrates have the liberty to create 2 or 3 Burgesses gratis’; he thus may be the first known Honorary Burgess. He was also resident of Easter Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is surely related to the earlier Bailie Robert (unless this is the same man and he married twice). He married Margaret Fraser and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1702, with witnesses Bailie James Deans and litster James Scott. Mary (b.1693), with no mother’s name listed, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1702 were Wright an Miller’s

Bailie James Deans and Bailie John Scott, litster. Samuel ‘Sam’ (20th C.) Burgh Chamberlain in the 1960s. Simon (17th C.) under-miller who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is also listed as under-miller at Roughheugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) one of the men who appraised horses in Hawick for the Covenanters army in 1644. He could be the William, married to Agnes Elliot, whose children baptised in Hawick included Robert (b.1636), Bessie (b.1639), Thomas (b.1641) and Francis (b.1643). The witnesses to the 1641 baptism were William Liddell and Andrew Lidderdale. Alternatively he could be the William, married to Bessie Huggan, whose children baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1647) and Maragret (b.1653). William (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassanden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (b.1679/80) tenant in Doveshaughbreach. His wife, Helen Turnbull, died in 1740, aged 60. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1696 he was served heir to the 5-merk land of Alton Croft, from his cousin Walter Scott of Alton Crofts. His mother was Marion Scott, sister of Robert, who was father of Walter. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1718 there was a dispute between him and Robert Wilson over the spaces their wives occupied in St. Mary’s Kirk. His claim was that his wife had the space for 3 years before he moved to ‘easter Burnfoot mylne’. He married Christian Renwick in 1712 and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); William (b.1721); and Robert (b.1723). The witnesses in 1721 were fashers Robert and George Renwick (who were surely related to his wife). He witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Robert Renwick in 1728 and 1733 and in Hawick for shepherd Andrew Brown in 1740. He could have been the William born in Hawick to Francis and Jane Graham in 1673 (formerly spelled ‘Wricht’ and variants).

Wright an Miller’s (ri’-an-mi-hurz) n. sewing materials shop near the south end of North Bridge Street in the mid-20th century.

writer ti the signet (ri’-ur-ti-thu-sig-ni’) n. Scots law term for a legal officer who prepares writs etc., often abbreviated WS. The Society of Writers to Her Majesty’s Signet was set up in 1594, and members originally had special privileges for drawing up documents.

wrocht (rocht) pp., arch. wrought, worked – ‘...Wark wrocht [ordinary labour probably] 4s., this is 4d per day’ [BR1638], ‘A’ve wroacht here threi-an-toonyt eer, an A’ve never been fauteet yet’ [ECS], ‘Kens how lang him an mei’s wroacht thegither’ [ECS], ‘...Though time has wroacht a change or twae On kirk and shop and mill’ [WL], ‘...That wroacht the jaw-banes, stilled the hungert voice, and swalled to giridt bliss the void below!’ [DH], ‘Ye wrocht gey sair, Tam: Was’t a’ in vain ...?’ [DH] (also written ‘wraocht’; used for the past tense and past participle; cf. the alternative wrought as well as ‘workit’).

wrought (rowcht) pp., arch. wrought, created, worked – ‘...quhil they first pay the webaster that rowcht to them of before, under the lyck penalty’ [BR1640], ‘...whilk thon hest wroucht for thame that trust in thee afore the sons o’ men’ [HSR], ‘...when I was made in seceret, an’ queerlie wroucht in the leachist pairts o’ the yirth’ [HSR], ‘An’ the white robes o’ the risen soul By the loyal life is wroucht; An’ Heaven is freely gi’en to a’ That Heaven have truly soucht’ [FL], ‘We wroucht weel on through the nicht to get her on’ [BCM1880] (varying spellings exist; cf. wrought).

Wad (wud) n. (Wood) Charles (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Gledstains in 1681 and another for John Henderson in 1682. David (16th C.)
tenant of one of the farms of Midshiels, Appletreehal, Broadlee, Cottlaw or ‘Burnside’ in 1562/3 when Lord Alexander Home tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. Francis Watson ‘Frank’ (1862–1953) born in Edinburgh, he worked in the Navy and then became a well known painter, specialising in water-colours, particularly landscapes and maritime scenes. He attended Berwick Art School, finished his training at South Kensington Art School and the Academie Julian in Paris and in 1883 was appointed 2nd master at the School of Art in Newcastle. In 1889 he moved to Hawick as Art Master at the Buccleuch School. In 1899 he gave up teaching to become a professional painter, specialising in marine landscapes. He lived at Southsea, Portsmouth, Berwick and Edinburgh. He painted many scenes around the Borders, including one of Wulliestruther Loch. He also painted a portrait of Robert Milligan in 1890 (hanging in the Town Hall), a portrait of Thomas Purdom (in the Museum) in 1891, one of Robert Murray in 1897 (in the Museum), and one of D. McNurnie Watson in 1898. In 1893 he painted a view of Wilton Dean, as well as a view showing the old red and blue Common Riding flag at the Town Hall, in 1895 he painted a view of Hawick based on the 1813 painting of French prisoner-of-war M. Prefort and in 1902 painted a view from Wester Braid Road. He was present at the surrender of the German fleet at Scapa Flow, making some sketches of some of the ships before they were scuttled. In 1939 he accompanied George VI and Queen Elizabeth on a royal tour of Canada. He died in Perthshire. Several of his descendants have also been artists. George (1763/4–1834) resident at Dovshaughmill. He married Jennet Wright, who died in 1846, aged 72. Andrew, who lived at Spittal and married Margaret Rule was probably his son. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. George Orniston ‘Ornie’ (1918–2003) born in St. Boswells, he moved to the Borthwick valley at 4, when his father took over the Roberton police station. He was educated at Roberton and Hawick and spent most of his life living at Thornbank in Denholm. He became a joiner in Hawick, enlisted in the K.O.S.B., being present at the Letzlingen Common Riding, and returned to Denholm in 1947. He married Maisie Scott of Overhall. He was a great lover of the Border hills, greeting each New Year from the summit of Ruberslaw, and helping rejuvenate the pine trees near the top. He worked as an insurance man and in Lyle & Scott’s and retired in 1982. He also regularly won Denholm’s best kept garden prize. He was an office bearer of the Archaeological Society for 30 years, being Field Secretary 1962–72 and 1982–88, and organising excavations at Crumhaugh Tower, Dod Burn peel tower and Heronhall, as well as the restoration of the Norman burial ground at Minto. He published ‘Roberton, the Making of a Parish’ in 1991. Due to infirmity he moved into Hawick and ended his days at Crumhaugh House. Just weeks before he died he was presented with the Dutch Liberation Medal. His photo album and scrapbook covering 1935–89 is in the Borders Archive. Hamish (1926–2009), C.B.E., born in Hawick, where he attended Trinity and the High School. His father was in charge of coal supplied for the town during WWII, and his mother was headmistress at Cogsmill. He was a keen member of the Scouts and the Scout Pipe Band. He obtained a B.Sc. in Chemistry from St. Andrews in 1947 and a Ph.D. in 1950. He joined the forming Australian National University staff in London in 1951, but then moved to Strathclyde in 1953, where he stayed until retirement in 1991. He was Vice-Principal there 1984–6. He also contributed to forming several colleges into Glasgow Caledonian University, where the Hamish Wood Building was named in his honour, and from where he received an honorary doctorate in 1994. He received the C.B.E. for services to higher education in 1993, and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh and the Royal College of Chemistry. His research focussed on inorganic and medicinal chemistry, particularly anti-bacterial drugs. He married Jean Mitchell, who was a Cub Scout leader in Hawick. Their children were Sheena (Mrs. Walker) and Colin. Helen (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She probably ran an innor shop of some sort. Henry (15th C.) Chaplain who in 1445 leased his tenandry of the lands of Harden Wood, lying within Borthwickshiels, to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. It seems likely that he was a local chaplain, e.g. for the nearby Kirk Borthwick or for Hassendean, in which Parish Borthwickshiels lay. His name is recorded as ‘Henry of Wod chaplaine’. The lease, which is written in the vernacular, is one of the earliest known local pieces of Scots writing (assuming it is genuinely local of course). James (18th C.) mason of Hawick, son-in-law of mason David Laing. He possibly worked on the Slitrig Bridge and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776 along with Gala mason John Haldane. James (19th C.) landlord of the Commercial Inn in the mid-1800s. A caricature of him
the Wud

appears in ‘Noctes Hawickianae’. Capt. James John (d.1911) of the 45th Regiment. In 1868 he married Blanche, who was daughter of Sir William Elliott of Stobs and Wells. Along with his wife he acted as trustee for the Wells estate in the latter part of the 19th century. Because of the debt on the estate, they had to cut down lots of the old trees to meet the trust payments (this being locally quite unpopular). He may be son of the
Mr. C. Wood who rented the ‘shooting’ at Stobs from 1861. Jean (18th C.) kitchen maid at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. John ‘Johnnie’ (16th/17th C.) of Whitfield, one of the local men accused in 1612 of charging too much interest on loans; his name is omitted from the list of those found guilty. It seems likely this is the Whitfield near Hawick, but it may be another one in Roxburghshire. John (1782–1847) surveyor and cartographer who produced town plans of around 150 places across Scotland, as well as in England and Wales. This includes his 1824 ‘Plan of the Town and Environof Hawick from actual survey’, which provides the first detailed map of the Town. It can be assumed that he spent some time in Hawick carrying out the survey himself. He lived in Morningside in Edinburgh from 1813 and was elected Permanent Director of the Land Surveyors’ Society in around 1833. Nicholas (1795–1865) colliery and locomotive enginner from Newcastle. He was President of the North of England Institute of Mining and Mechanical Engineers and is known for in-roducing several safety measures. In the early 1860s he occupied Stobs Castle as a summer residence. William (15th C.) witness to the 1469 sasine for Wolfelee. It seems likely that he was local to Rulewater. William (17th C.) tenant at Raperlaw in the 1630s. He had a charter of lands in Lessuden (St. Boswells) in 1635. There is a marriage contract of 1642 between his daughter Janet and John Scott. In 1650, namely Thomas Shiel, Jean Stuart, John Elliot. William Falside was 433 6s 8d. William Falside was founded Wood, Graham & Co. in about the late 1850s. Their business was at 6 Tower Knowe, where they are recorded in 1861, with 8 draper’s assistants. He may be the William whose trustees were recorded in about 1874 as owners of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Rev. William appointed in 1958 as the last minister of St. John’s in Hawick, for a term appointment. He had retired from Half Morton
in 1956 (formerly ‘Wod’, ‘Wode’ etc.).

the Wud (thu-wud) n. the Wood, former name for a farm in Abbotrule Parish. In 1643 ‘Bertie Rutherford of the Wood’ owned land valued at £20. Adam Scott ‘in Wood, in Abbotrule parish’ had his will recorded in 1693.

Wudbrae (wud-bræ) n. Woodbrae, cottage on the side road between Teviothead and Caerlenrig farm.

Wudburn (wud-burn) n. Woodburn, farm on the south side of the Northwick valley, near the end of the back road leading past the Branxholme Lochs. The lands were attached to the Chisholme estate at one time. In 1627 it was valued along with Muselee as paying ‘120 lb., vicarage 20 lb’. There were 10 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Thomas Shiel, Jean Stuart, John Elliot, Isobel Shiel, Mary Shiel, Robert Scott, Janet Nichol, John Scott, Bessie Scott and Margaret Scott. In 1678 it was valued along with Chisholme at £433 6s 8d. William Falside was living there in 1686. Like much of the area, it transferred from Hawick Parish to Roberton in 1690. John Noble lived there in 1712 and 1717, John Miller in 1716–21, Walter Scott in 1716–20, William Bell in 1723, William Heatley in 1722–
42, Thomas Heatley in 1727–37, Francis Coltart 1727–42, James Inglis in 1731, Thomas Heatley
in 1756, Henry Mitchellhill in 1757, Archibald Scott in 1761, Robert Elliot in 1763–67, Katherine Cowan in 1765, Alexander Heatley in 1767, Walter Scott in 1769, William Miller in 1772, James Scott in 1773 and John Hislop in 1774. Walter Hume was there in the period 1789–94 and John Elliot in 1798. In 1788 and 1811 it was valued along with Chisholme at £433 6s 8d. John Nichol was there in 1800. William Gorries died there in 1816. Andrew Anderson was farmer in 1841 and still in 1868. A perforated stone disc from there is in the Museum (formerly spelled ‘Woodburne’, etc.; it is ‘Wodburne’ in 1627, ‘woodburne’ in 1686 and ‘Widburne’ in 1694; it is ‘Wodeburne’

William (b.1831/3) from Wilton Parish, he was a draper. Along with the Graham brothers he esblished Wood, Graham & Co. in about the late 1850s. Their business was at 6 Tower Knowe, where they are recorded in 1861, with 8 draper’s assistants. He may be the William whose trustees were recorded in about 1874 as owners of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Rev. William appointed in 1958 as the last minister of St. John’s in Hawick, for a term
in 1956 (formerly ‘Wod’, ‘Wode’ etc.).
Wudend (wud-end) n. Woodend, former farm between Synton and Ashkirk (marked as such on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map). Wudfit (wud-fi’) n. Woodfoot, area in the Slitrig valley where the side road to Barnes leaves the B6399. Near Woodfoot Cottage there is a late 18th century archway with Doric columns, once the beginning of the drive to Stobs Castle. There is a small war memorial by the bridge. This area is sometimes called ‘Woodfoot-on-Slitrig’, since the name has also been used for Borthaugh Woodfoot. It was formerly also called ‘Birkwud Fit’. Just to the south the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building on the east side of the main road, which is no longer visible. Local ministers would sometimes preach at the blacksmith’s shop there in the 19th century. The former row of cottages near here once housed a blacksmith’s and joiners shop; as many as 9 units are shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, arranged in a north-south row, just to the west of Stobs Lodge. All but one of the cottages (the one belonging to the mason) were pulled down when the military purchased the whole estate in 1903. Walter Scott was recorded there in 1790 and J. Thomson in 1868. Wudfit (wud-fi’) n. Woodfoot, former farmstead near Robertson village, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map. In 1841 the residents were Elliots and Higgs. It may be the same place referred to as ‘Cleuchfoot’. Wudfit (wud-fi’) n. another name used for Borthaugh Wudfit. Wudfit Brig (wud-fi’-brig) n. Woodfoot Bridge, where the B6399 crosses the Slitrig for the first time after Crowbyres. It was built in 1815 and carries the name of Eliott of Stobs. Wudheid (wud-heed) n. Woodhead, lands on the north side of the Ale Water and west of Ancrum, also known as Ancrum Woodhead. The farm was an amalgamation of 3 previous farms, noted in the rhyme ‘The Randy Raw. The scabbit Scaw, The drucken wives o’ Gerseylaw’. It was formerly a seat of the Kers. In 1571 it was raided by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and a group of other Turnbulls plus Rutherfords and others, who claimed that Robert Ker had reset the fugitive Sir Thomas Kerr of Fernihurst there; the record in the Register of the Privy Council gives a detailed list of the goods in the house at that time. Alexander White was farmer there in 1797. The farm was also a location where the preparation of lint was carried out into the early 19th century. Wudhouse (wud-hoos) n. Woodhouse, farm on the western side of the Jed valley, off the A68.
Wudhooselees

near the Jedforest Hotel. George Oliver, ‘Zimian’ Oliver and John Chatto were there in 1694. John Scott was recorded as tenant there and elsewhere in 1797. John Goodfellow and family were there in 1861 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘woodhouse’ in 1694).

Wudhooselees (wud-hoo-leez) n. Woodhouselees, farm just south of Canonbie. The area may have previously been connected with Kinmont Willie. In the ‘Kinmont Willie’ ballad it is the place where Buccleuch and his men stopped on their way to Carlisle. There was a branch of the Armstrongs there in the 16th and 17th centuries. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The farm of Over Woodhouselees was farmed by George Bell for the 2nd half of the 18th century. George Scott-Elliot farmed at Nether Woodhouselees in 1803. James Pringle farmed at Nether Woodhouselees in 1812. George Scott was recorded as tenant there and elsewhere in 1861 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘woodhuslees’ in 1694). John Goodfellow and family were there in 1861 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘woodhuslees’ in 1694).

Wudnorton, a vi

Wudnorton (wud-nor’-in) n. Woodnorton, a villa in Sunnyhill, located up the private drive that is a continuation of Roadhead. It was built in 1881 as ‘Craigmore’ for Robert Pringle, head of Pringle’s at the time. The design was by local architect John Guthrie. It is a Scots Renaissance-style house with a prominent entrance tower, together with Gothic and Flemish details. The ballroom extension was added at the rear in 1908. The house was long the home of the Pringles and later the Scott-Nobles. It is a grade B listed building (also written as 2 words, ‘Wud Norton’).

Wulliestruther (wu-lee-stru-thur) n. Wullie-struther Loch, in the middle of Hawick Moor, near Pilmuir farm, covering about 17 acres and stocked for fishing. It is sometimes referred to simply as the Struther’. Its level was raised by damming in the early 19th century, in the interests of mills on the Slitrig (to raise the level of the river during dry spells). This allowed the mills on the Slitrig Water to survive through some of the summer of 1844, for example, when the local rivers dried up to a trickle. Previously it would have been little more than a bog, and possibly also contained the area once called Crawstruther. In 1767 the foot of the Struther was stated to mark the western boundary of the region of the Common where the Town Herd typically pastured the Hawick livestock. The loch has been the site of several drownings over the years. In 1939 it almost completely drained due to a fault with the outlet valve. The 1863 Oramance Survey map shows a building between the south-west end and Pilmuir (the origin is Old Scots ‘struther’, meaning marsh, with a prefix indicating either willows, oily or slimy, or wool or wolf, cf. Buckstruther, Crawstruthers, Holstruther and Lustruther; a personal name is also possible for the origin, although there is no reason to believe the story sometimes given of it being named after a person who drowned there, although a Willie Strathearn did in fact drown there in 1884: it is ‘Wullies Struther’ in 1767).

Wulson (wul-sin, wil-sin) n. (Wilson) Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Helm in 1756 and their children included: Christian (b.1758); and John (b.1761). The witnesses in 1758 were Francis Scott and Robert Dryden. Adam (18th/19th C.) son of flesher Robert and brother of Andrew, he was a shoemaker on the High Street. He is listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Adam who married Margaret Young in 1788, and whose children included: Robert (b.1789); Margaret (b.1791); Richard (b.1793), who was also a shoemaker; Sarah (b.1795); and Andrew (1805–08). Adam (b.c.1815) chemist recorded at about 3 High Street in 1841. His wife was Eliza and their children included Thomas and George. This is probably the same as the firm ‘A.R. Wilson & Co.’ recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. The company made ‘aerated waters’, as well as its own sheep dip and other products. It was also listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as ‘A.R. Wilson & Co.’, druggists and manufacturers of soda water; but the proprietor was deceased by then. The company was sold to Thomas Howie Hopper some time before 1856, when George (from Coldstream, perhaps his brother) ceased to have any business interest.

Adam (b.1825/6) farmer at Midshields. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was a Steward of the West Teviotdale Coursing Club in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farming 426 acres at Midshields, and employing 11 people. He was still recorded at Midshields in 1868. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Allars Garden, which had previously belonged to John Scott. Agnes (b.c.1795) daughter of shoemaker Peter. She was a milliner and straw hat maker at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory along with Jane (her sister). They were both recorded again in Pigot’s 1837 directory, but now on the Sandbed. In 1841 they were living at about 5 Buccleuch Street with their brother James, who was Hawick Town Clerk. They were also listed on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory.

Alan (17th C.) listed as ‘Allane Wilsoun’ in 1627 among men stated to be fit for the military. Later in the year he was the first named of 7 inhabitants of Hawick held in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh who complained that they were not ‘yde and mais-terless men’, but ‘honest, simple men attending that calling quhereunto it hes pleased God to call us’, and hence should not have been pressed into military service. Nevertheless the Privy Council ordered that they be transported by the Earl of Nithsdale to the wars in Germany. It is unclear if any of them returned to Hawick.

Alexander (17th C.) resident at Nether Whisgills in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Alexander (1766–1813) from Paisley, he is described as ‘the Father of American Ornithology’. He was apprenticed as a weaver and inspired by Burns tried his hand at verse. Imprisoned for a satirical verse against a mill-owner, he afterwards emigrated to America. Sometimes before he left in 1794 he is meant to have visited Denholm Dean with an itinerant packman by the name of Bertram; the old packman claimed to have later sent Leyden’s lines on Denholm over to him in America.

Alexander M. (b.1810/1) from Duns, he was a house painter listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 46 High Street in 1841, with his brother Thomas. In 1851 he was on Allars Crescent. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Elizabeth.

Dr. Alexander Christie (1845–1925) younger son of Walter of Orchard, he was born in Hawick. He was partly educated at Hawick Subscription Rooms, where he was taught by James A.H. Muray. He graduated M.D. from Edinburgh University in 1870 and moved to Doncaster in 1871, where he was a doctor for 55 years. There he lived at 21 South Parade and then 39 Hallgate. He was President of Doncaster Y.M.C.A. for 30 years and also warden at St. James’ Church there. In 1873 he married Emma Bewley. Their children were: Walter Reginald (1874/5–1965), who joined his father’s medical practice; Agnes Bewley, also... a doctor, who died in 1909 from blood poisoning after being bitten by a suicidal woman patient; Norman; and Eleanor (or Norah), who died unmarried in 1952. Rev. Alexander (1860–1917) son of Rev. James of Enzie and Charlotte Alardes. He was educated in Aberdeen, becoming assistant at Holburn, before moving to Slaughtree as ‘missionary’ in 1886, where he remained until 1889. He then moved to Blairidaff, before becoming a minister at Ythan Wells, Aberdeenshire. He married Margaret Isabella Anderson and their children were: Charlotte Mary; Margaret Anderson; and Alexander Gordon. Alfred Cruickshank (1843–69) 3rd son of Walter of Orchard. In 1866 he married Rebecca Fraser Scott, who died in 1870, aged 22. They had a daughter, Florence Margaret (b.1867). Allan (17th C.) named by the Hawick Baillie in 1627 on a list of men fit to be sent to the wars in Germany (and hence presumably undesirable to the town!). Andrew (17th C.) simpleton in the Branxholme area. He is described in a 1638–40 financial account of the Scotts of Buccleuch as ‘the fool at Branxholm’. Andrew (17th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1676 Samuel Newbie was found guilty of assaulting him and another mason, Andrew Turnbull. Andrew (d.c.1685) tenant in Millholm. His will is recorded in 1685. Andrew (d.c.1697) leased 1/5 of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1692. He may have been related to Janet, who also leased part of the farm in 1692, and by 1694 he appears to have taken over her 1/5. He was still leasing part of Branxholme Town in 1697, but in 1698 his widow (with her name not recorded) was leasing part of the farm, with Walter Wilson as her cautioner. Andrew (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for James Riddell (at Menslaws) in Hawick in 1745. He paid tax for 19 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be descended from the earlier mason Andrew. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Isobel (b.1741); James (b.1743); John (b.1744); and Betty (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were wright Walter Scott and writer James Weir. It is possible that his children included Dr. James, Bailie John and Betty who married George Hailburton (with the other 2 acting as baptismal witnesses for one of her children). Dr. Andrew (18th C.) paid tax on 16 windows at Newton in Bedrule Parish in 1753. It is unclear how he was related to other local Wilsons. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1749 he is recorded purchasing 75 stones of ewe’s milk cheese from Robert Elliot, farmer at Braidlie. And in the same year he sold whisky and malt to the same Robert Elliot. He may be the Andrew married to Isobel Scott, whose son James was born in 1743. Andrew (18th C.) fisher in Hawick, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Rev. Andrew (1798–1831) appointed assistant minister of the Presbyterian Church in Liverpool in 1824, in an attempt to resolve disputes between the minister, David Thom, and the congregation. He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825; his connection to Hawick is unclear. He was minister at the Rodney Street Kirk from 1825 until 1830. He married Sarah Murray. He was struck with a debilitating illness and died less than a year later. Andrew (d.1847) son of fisher Robert, he was also in the same line of business. He is probably the fisher who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797. He was listed as a fisher in Hawick in 1810 (in the inventory after the death of ‘Auld Cash’). His premises were on the High Street, where he is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a ‘fisher’ and ‘bacon dealer’. In 1815 his servant Henry Stockwell was found not guilty of an assault. He was among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was referred to in 1829 in a letter that farmer Adam Brydon wrote to the King, complaining about paying taxes; it ended with a request for the receipt to be directed ‘to the care of Andrew Wilson, butcher in Hawick’. Andrew (b.c.1810) baker at about 24 High Street. He is listed there on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is listed with his wife Martha and son Andrew. He could be the merchant who was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s. Andrew (b.1812/3–74) son of James, he was a road surveyor like his father. He was living at Ovenshank in Castleton parish in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He donated an old coin to the Museum in 1863. He was the architect for the Albert Bridge in 1865. He was listed as the Surveyor for the Liddesdale Turnpike Trust in 1866. He married Margaret Kyle, who died in 1889, aged 75. Their children included: James; William (1848/9–60); Margaret (1851/2–1904); Georgina (1856/7–60); James (d.1916); and Frances Helen (d.1927). He and his wife both died in Hawick and are buried at Ettleton. Andrew (b.1821/2) grocer in Hawick. He was listed on the ‘Middle Row’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at 11 Mid Row in 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he married Ann (c.1822–77), daughter of shoemaker Adam Kersal. Their children included William (b.1842), Isabella (b.1843),...
Adam Kersall (b.1845), George (b.1847), Janet Hannah (b.1851) and Margaret (b.c.1856). Andrew ‘Dan’ (b.c.1870) son of William and Betsy Robson. He carried on his father’s rag and waste business at 5 Teviot Road and later emigrated to Australia. Andrew (d.1945) married Mary Ekron in Hawick. His wife Mary (1875–1939) was daughter of John Ekron and Agnes Carruthers. Their children were: Agnes (d.1977), who married Joseph Farries; Isabella, who married John Stewart; Helen (d.1975), who married Andrew Aitken; and John, who married Elsa Farquharson. Basil Fritz Aubrey (1919–95) son of Fritz Aubrey and brother of Dennis. He studied English and History at Edinburgh University, became Assistant Headmaster at Wilton and then Headmaster at Drumlanrig School. He was one of the first teachers to introduce outdoor pursuits into his schools activities. He instigated the use of pre-recorded music in church. In the late 1980s he also oversaw the reconstruction of the organ at St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. He married Elizabeth M. Hogg and they had sons Michael and Johnny. Bruce son of George, who was Cornet in 1932. He was himself Cornet in 1969. He lost his Cornet’s Badge at the Monday morning Chase, but found it again on Wednesday! He married his Cornet’s Lass Valerie Franklin. They lived in Glasgow for 28 years before moving to North Berwick. Catherine (18th/19th C.) dressmaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She is listed along with Josiah, who was presumably her son. He is probably the man from England with that name listed as a handloom weaver on the Howegate in 1841. Catherine (b.c.1785) grocer at about 57 High Street in 1841. She is probably the same person as Christian. Charles (18th C.) father of Robert. He may also have been called ‘Lurgie’. He was a shoemaker and inn-keeper like his son, and may also have been son of a shoemaker. He appears to have had literary interests, like his son, since he was among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1781 he was one of the witnesses to a baptism for Thomas Miller. In 1771 he married Agnes Tinlin and their only surviving child was Robert, born about 5 months later. He was probably the Charles born in Hawick Parish in 1746, son of Robert and Bessie Lorraine (or possibly the Charles born in Cavers in 1743, son of James). It is said that he was named Charles because his father had been in the company of officer’s from Prince Charles’ army when they passed through Hawick in 1745. Charles (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Greenbank in 1779 (presumably the place in Robertson Parish). He married Mary Dryden and their children included: Betty (b.1771); James (b.1773); David (b.1779); William (b.1781); John (b.1784); and Samuel (b.1790). Charles M. (19th C.) solicitor in Hawick. He is recorded from at least 1866. He served as Depute for the Justices of the Peace for Hawick. He was a member of the Berwick Naturalists’ Club. He was half of the partnership of Wilson & Anderson, who were a firm of writers, conveyancers and bank agents, which dissolved in 1874. He may be the Charles who was recorded at Ormiston House in a directory of 1868. Charles John (1842–1923) son of Provost George. At the age of 14, after a year in boarding-school in London, he was brought into the family business, learning about every department in the factory. In 1860 he was made factory manager, when still a young man. In 1875, along with his father and brother George Murray Wilson, he went into partnership with James Glenny, purchasing the Ladylaw and Langlands Mills. He served as a local councillor in the late 1800s, and was on the School Board and Parish Council. He was one of the original members of the Hawick Science and Art Committee and was the founder of the Hawick Technical Classes. He was Chairman of the Hawick Working Men’s Building Society. He was a Director of the North British Railway, President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce and first President of the South of Scotland Woollen Trades Approved Society. An enthusiastic member of the British Association, he attended their meetings in South Africa in 1905 and in 1902 (partly to recover his health) he went on a round-the-world tour. He gifted the barometer outside the Town Hall in 1898 and jointly (with his brother and James Glenny) gave the Public Baths to the Town in 1912. He also offered to build a bridge at the Spetch, long before the Laurie Bridge was built. He wrote the article ‘Hawick and its people’ for the 1921 Transactions. He lived at Deanfield. In 1865 he married Mary Ann Glenny (sister of James Glenny), who was his cousin; she died after 52 years of marriage. They had 3 children: Katherine (b.1866); George Heron (b.1868), who was Provost; and Charles Glenny (died aged 14). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. He left money to establish the C.J. Wilson Educational Bequest and C.J. Wilson Medal Fund at Wilton School and the High School. Christian (b.1784/5) from Eskdalemuir, she was a grocer recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow and ‘Small Grocer’ at 3 High Street (corresponding to the modern No. 76). David (17th/18th C.) carrier recorded in the Town Book of 1703, when he and 2 other men were ordered to ‘pay into Bayleya Mertine sex pound per piece, ... for payt. of the officers, pyper, and drummers coats att the Common rydeing in annon 1702’. It is unclear why he was asked to contribute in this way, perhaps as a fine of some sort. Probably the same carrier married Janet Tait in Hawick in 1709 and their children included William (b.1710), David (b.1712), Jean (b.1715), Robert (b.1718), John (b.1721) and James (b.1724). Rachel (b.1703) may also have been his daughter. The witnesses in 1710 were merchant William Gardner and mason Peter Mitchell and in 1721 werewright John Pringle and carrier David Minto, and he was then recorded as ‘Tenent in Hawick’. David (b.c.1768/9) from Greenlaw, he was land steward at Cavers farm. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Jane, Margaret and Mungo (who was a shopkeeper). He was still at Cavers in 1861. David (19th C.) teacher of a school on Tannage Close. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may be the schoolmaster in Hawick who had an unnamed daughter who died in 1819. Dennis Elliot Aubrey (1916–64) son of Fritz Aubrey and brother of Basil. He was the last Wilson owner of the firm of Walter Wilson & Sons. He married Doris Stevens and had a son, Colin Aubrey, who moved to the U.S.A. Edward (1841–1920) tweed manufacturer, son of Walter of Orchard and nephew of Provost George. He entered the Council in 1869 for North High Street Ward, later becoming a Bailie. He was Provost for 8 months in 1875, having to resign after the Collie collapse. He later returned to politics, being beaten by 1 vote in 1884 and was re-elected to the Council in 1886. He helped open a school in Weensland, was a committee member of the Roxburghshire Liberal Association, a keen horseman and also involved with the Cottage Hospital, Savings Bank and Congregational Church (for which he served as 3rd Treasurer). He married Margaret, daughter of builder Robert Hobkirk, and they had 6 daughters: Ada Elizabeth (1883), who married a Mr. Rams, minister in South Africa; Bessie Elmira (b.1885); Constance Rebecca (b.c.1890); Freda M. (b.c.1893); Muriel (b.c.1896), who married a Mr. Davis; and Olive P. Edward (b.c.1900). He built Beechhurst in 1889, later moved to Switzerland for health reasons and died in London. Edward Joseph (1858–1917) born at Chatton, where he was a pupil teacher. He then became schoolmaster at Charlton, and was at Soughtree in the late 1880s. He helped describe the area of upper Liddesdale for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club in 1889. He later moved to Bolton (East Lothian) and finally Abbey St. Bathans, and died in Earlston. He contributed other articles to the Berwickshire Naturalists and wrote an account of the area around Wooler, where he grew up. Elizabeth (17th C.) recorded in 1688 along with Janet Leydon, when they were fined for insulting Bailie Scott when he was equipping the Royalist Militia. Francis (b.1791) son of hatter James and Isabella Newberry. He was listed as a grocer on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He presumably died before the 1841 census. He married Jean Knox, who had previously married William Thomson and later married John Eddie. Their children included: Jane, who married William Thorn in Australia; Elizabeth, who married Robert Turnbull and emigrated to Enfield, New South Wales; Isabella; Janet; and James. In 1841 his widow was running a boarding house on the Loan, and by 1851 was living there with frameworker John Eddie. Francis Elliot (1839–96) born in Hawick, son of Walter of Orchard and older brother of Edward. He became a hosiery manufacturer of the late 1800s and early 1900s. He lived at Broomlands, which he had built for him about 1880. He gave the toast to the Acting Father at the 1893 Common Riding. In 1873 he married Agnes, daughter of Adam Laing (and grand-daughter of the James Hogg of ‘Teribus’); she died in 1910, aged 54 (and there was a dispute over her will in 1913). Their children included: Walter (b.1874), who died in infancy; Walter Francis (b.1875); Agnes Edith (b.1877); Stanley (b.1879); Fritz-Aubrey (b.1881), who married Maud Johnson; and Jane Maud (b.1882). Francis ‘Frank’ (1845–88) son of manufacturer John and Margaret Scott. He married Violet Turnbull in Hawick in 1871 and their children included: John (b.1872); Agnes Amos (b.1873); George Turnbull (b.1874); Margaret (b.1876); Frank (1877–1916); John (b.1878); Violet Turnbull (1879–1973); William Richardson (1881–1916); Nellie Turnbull (1882–1931); Annie (b.1884); and Peter Turnbull (b.1886). He moved to Dumfries, where most of his children were born. One of his daughters was Cornet’s Lass in 1894, to her cousin William R. He died at Crudens, Dumfries. Francis D. (b.c.1854)

was probably also their child. George baptised in Hawick in 1722 and William (b.1715) he married Bessie Grieve. They had a son Gideon Parish. In 1708 he was recorded at Skelfhill when rolls. George the Earl of Arran. Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of 95). George Agnes (1910{39) and `Barbara' Constance (1913{). Sons. He married Maud Johnson and had Francis Elliot and Agnes Laing. Fritz Aubrey the Deacon’s Court from 1889. They could be the George, married William, with his mother Elizabeth Richardson dying 10 days after he was born. He was educated in Hawick and at Quaker schools, including one in Wigton, where he went from the age of 12 for 2 years (without returning). He finally came back to Hawick from schooling at the age of 17, and immediately learned the hosiery and cloth-making trades. His father died in 1832, and the firm was split, with him effectively taking his father’s share, and the other partners being his brothers Walter and John. In 1841 he lived at about 11 or 13 High Street. In about 1851 the brothers’ partnership was dissolved and he took the mill at Weensland, manufacturing tweeds. After a fire he took on Walter Armstrong as a partner, and as the firm grew they built workers’ housing in Weensland. He was a Councillor and Bailie 1846{50. Weensland. He was a Councillor and Bailie 1846{50. George (18th C.) currier in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in Wilton in 1752. Their children included: Isobel (b.1756); James (b.1758); Helen (b.1761); Jane (b.1766); twins George and Mary (b.1767); and George (again, b.1769). Their first 2 children were baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1766 were carrier William Aitkin and writer William Wilson and in 1767 were carrier James Wilson (surely a relative) and writer William Wilson. George (18th C.) currier, selected as Cornet in 1790 in opposition to the Council’s official selection. This was after the Council’s choice, Philip Elliot, made a narrow list of invitees to the Common Riding, leading many of the young men of the Town (and probably the Westenders in particular) to choose their own Cornet. His cavalcade was stopped at the West Port by Bailie Hardie, and therafter the two parties effectively held separate Common Riding celebrations. He probably married Agnes, daughter of Adam Laing. George (18th/19th C.) greengrocer and taxidermist at 8 Howegate. He was said to be the 5th of 8 George Wilsons. His premises appear to be marked ‘Wilson’ on Woods 1824 map. George (19th C.) weaver in Newcastle. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835, 1836 and 1838. George (d.c.1815) son of James. He was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers James and William. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. All 3 of the brothers were listed as carriers in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He had 2 horses at that time. He could be the George, married to Elizabeth Turnbull, whose twins George and Mary were baptised in 1767; the witnesses were carrier James (presumably his father or brother) and writer William. George (19th C.) son of George, with the name probably going back at least 5 others before him. He was a joiner and a janitor at the High School. George (19th C.) first official precentor appointed by Hawick Free Kirk, acting in the period 1844–50. George (1815–1898) first Provost of Hawick. Born in Hawick, he was the youngest child of mill-founder William, with his mother Elizabeth Richardson. He was a Liberal in politics, being Honorary President of the local Liberal Association and fighting against the Corn Laws (being Treasurer of the Anti-Corn Law League in 1844) and for the Reform Bill. He also played a role in the management of ‘The Economist’ after the death of his brother James. In 1861 he was recorded as a wool manufacturer, employing 85 men, 94 women, 28 boys and 6 girls. He was married twice, firstly in 1840 to Jane Law (who died in 1851), who was daughter of Rev. John Law of Newcastle (and said to be aunt of Andrew Bonar Law and great-aunt of politician Richard Kidston Law, although this is unclear); she died in 1851, aged 34. They had 4 surviving sons and 3 children who died young. Their children were: William Richardson; Charles John (b.1842), who married Mary Glenny; Jane Murray (b.1843/4), who married draper John Graham; William Milner; Elizabeth; George Murray (b.1846); and James Glenny (b.1849), who became a politician in New Zealand. In 1864 he secondly married Margaret Watson (aunt of the later Provost Robert Fraser Watson) and she died in 1873, aged 56. He lived at 13 High Street, then stayed at Ormiston House (while Col. MacDonald had it in the Autumn). About 1865 he built Heronhill House and then Kilmeny about 1879, where he died. There was a huge public funeral for him and he is buried in the Wellogate. His portrait is in the Town Hall, painted by James Tait. George Elliot (1833–75) son of Hawick shoemaker William. He worked for the City of Glasgow Bank. He married Margaret Wood (1832–1913), of the Wilton family, and their son William Elliot (1868–1950) became a chemist. George Murray (1846–1924) son of George, partner of Wilson & Glenny's, being a Director until he retired in 1896. He was taught for several years at the Subscription Rooms, for a while under James A.H. Murray. He describes Murray as 'a cold, conceited man of great ability and indefatigable perseverance, but very narrow in his views, and vain of success'; one story is described about how he was dared to put a 'cracker squib' in the stove, after which Murray went door to door to all the parents until he found out who did it. He jointly (along with his brother Charles John, and their partner James Glenny) gave the Public Baths to the Town in 1912. He was one of the early tennis enthusiasts in the town. He translated ‘Practical Perspective applied to Artistic and Industrial Design’ from the French in 1886. Later in life he lived at Dale End, Grassmere. He married late in life and had a daughter, Evelyn. George (1855–95) printer in Hawick, he was involved with local cricket from its earliest days, playing for Hawick and Wilton for several years, often as wicket-keeper, and being Honorary Secretary. He was also involved with other sporting clubs in the town. He was on the original Hawick R.F.C. committee, playing in the very first match, being a team regular for 9 years and Honorary Secretary for many years after that. He scored the winning try in the 1879 game against Melrose, probably the first to be played in Hawick under electric light. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery with a large monument erected over his grave by members of the Hawick Rugby Football Club. George of Langheugh (19th/20th C.) one of long line of Georges, son of the joiner and janitor. He was a yarn merchant of George Wilson & Sons (who were successors to William Laidlaw & Sons). His son George was Cornet in 1932 and his daughter Netta was Cornet’s Lass in 1936. George Heron, C.B.E. (1868–1959) grandson of Hawick’s first Provost, and elder son of Charles John. He was born at Ormiston, educated at Kirkton School, George Watson’s and in Switzerland and London. He played for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1885/6 season. He was a founder of the Harriers and the Tennis Club, and a keen golfer. He became a junior partner in Wilson & Glenny in 1885, and was Managing Director after it became a private limited company. He taught a French class for businessmen at his own expense, entered the Council in 1901, was elected a Magistrate and was also on many Council committees. He served as Deputy Controller of the Priority Department of the Ministry of Munitions. He became the first Provost when the Council reconstituted after WWI, serving 1919–22. His Provostship saw the War Memorial erected (he was Chairman of the War Memorial Committee), the sewage works extended and other improvements. He gifted the crimson robes, trimmed with ermine, for use of the 4 Burgh Magistrates. He was J.P. from 1912 and Chairman of the County National Health Insurance Committee, as well as member of various education committees, and he gifted Kilmeny to the Education Authority in 1929, for use as a hostel for girls from rural areas attending Hawick High School. He ran a French language course for young men in Hawick at his own expense. He helped the Common Riding Committee purchase the Volunteer Park, and gave money for tennis courts near the High School, as well as establishing the George Heron Wilson Bequest Fund. He entered the Ministry of Munitions in 1915, becoming Section Leader and then Deputy Controller, as well as being member of the Special Wages Arbitration Court, for which services he received the C.B.E. He married Julia Tod of Leith in 1902. He left Hawick in 1924 to live at Orchard near East Grinstead, where he became involved in the local council and educational committees. George Lithgow Wilson ‘Jinglin Geordie’ (d.1940) United Free Church minister at Cullen and then Cardenden in Fife. He came to Newcastle as minister of the South Church in 1930, taking on the combined charge (with the Park Kirk) in 1934. His nickname came from his enthusiasm for playing the piano. His daughter Margaret Fairley Callan was a teacher. He died on a train at Riccarton Junction. Gideon (19th/20th C.) Hawick tweed and hosiery manufacturer. He had the house Almonte built for him on Braid Road in 1893, but sold it to Thomas Elliot Rutherford in 1901. He is probably the Gideon who was involved with Wauchope Mills in Langholm. He took part in the inaugural competition for the 6-hole golf course that existed for a while at Mosspaul. Henry (b.c.1810) smith in Hawick, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory at the Sandbed. He was recorded at ‘Sandbed bridge end’ on the 1841 census. He helped James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’) to make some stocking frames. He married Helen Wintrope in Wilton in 1829. Their children included James, Thomas, Walter and Henry. Isabella (19th C.) milliner on the Howe-gate, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. She was daughter of baker Walter. In 1851 she was living with her widowed mother and several siblings at about 10 Howegate. James (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 in complaints made by the Lord of Gilsland about raids into England by Elliots, Nixons and others. His name is given as ‘Rytche James Wyelson’, which could mean he was James, son of Richard. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was also at Mabonlaw in 1710, 1713, 1715 and 1723 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1710); Marion (b.1713); Jean (b.1715); and James (b.1723). James (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. He is probably the carrier listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same James is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He married Marion Scott and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1701. Other children, baptised in Hawick, who could be theirs, include Margaret (b.1692) and James (b.1700). The same carrier appears to have secondly married Helen Murray and had a daughter Margaret (b.1712), as well as perhaps sons John (b.1710) and James (b.1715). The witnesses in 1701 were tailor Robert (who may therefore have been his brother or other close relative) and carrier Robert Robson and in 1712 were merchant Robert Robson and tailor Robert again. James (17th C.) resident at Huntlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded in 1708 as servitor at Horsleyhill when he witnessed a baptism for tailor Thomas Brigge. James (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Kirkton’ farm. His son Robert was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1719. James (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk. He married Elizabeth Douglas and their children included: Alexander (b.1719); Elizabeth (b.1724); and William (b.1727). James ‘the Baron’ (1687–1774) son of tailor John and Bessie Beattie. He was said to be one of 2 sons of an army sergeant in Queen Anne’s time, the other probably being William. He was born at Whitechesters, where the family may have resided for a long time. He was a farmer and carrier in Kirkton and later a carrier in Hawick. He is probably the Hawick carrier who witnessed a baptism for workman William Nichol in 1742. He married Isabella Blyth (1692–1747), daughter of James and they had 5 children: William (1713–91), ‘Whusky Willie’: Anne (b.1727); James (twin with Anne, but died young); James (b.1730); and Beatrice (b.1735). He is buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. In the 1791 death record of his son James, he is listed as ‘the old Baron’. James (18th C.) tanner in Hawick. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Robert (b.1739); Bessie (b.1740); Margaret (b.1744); Helen (b.1744); John (b.1745); Adam (b.1745); Janet (b.1747); and Robert (again, b.1757). He may have been related to the tanners and candle-makers of about the same time, John and Walter. He may be the ‘carrier’ (unless this is ‘carrier’) James who witnessed a baptism (along with weaver John) for shoemaker Robert Elliot in 1765. James (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1743 when his marriage to Catherine ‘Mabane’ was announced in Melrose Parish, with Thomas Vair as cautioner. James (b.1730) son of carrier James and Isobel Blyth. He had 3 sons, George, James and William, all of whom were car- riers. It is possible he was the carrier James who witnessed a baptism for carrier George in 1767 (if George was perhaps his brother). James ‘Craft’ (d.bef. 1811) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott in 1763 and their children included Walter (b.1764). He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine in 1764. His wife died in Hawick in 1811, when his nickname is recorded (but it is unclear what it meant). James (18th C.) recorded being in Hawick in 1781 when his daughter Emily was baptised in Robertson Parish. He may have been living at a farm in Hawick Parish close to the boundary with Robertson. His daughter’s name is uncommon for that time. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. Dr. James (d.c.1800) surgeon in Hawick, said to be from Otterburn. Originally, he probably lived on the south side of the High Street, since during the great flood of 1767 it is said that the Backdamgate flooded ‘as far as Doctor Wilson’s close-head’. Hawick printer, postmaster and Bailie, Robert Armstrong, was an apprentice with him. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for schoolmaster James Inglis. He was one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. In 1780 he (along with Bailie John) witnessed a baptism for George Haliburton and Betty Wilson (who might have been related to him). He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–94. He was a bachelor in Hawick in 1787 when he paid tax for having a female servant; he continued to pay in 1788–91, and paid the lower rate for a ‘bachelor servant’. In 1791 he witnessed the baptism of one of Lord Napier’s children at Wilton Lodge. About 1799 he is recorded contributing money to the war against France. His unnamed daughter is recorded dying in 1801 in the Parish records, by which time he was already deceased. He is recorded as an owner of ‘Part of Particott Lands of Hawick’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although probably dead long before then); by about 1874 the lands were recorded being owned by feuars. He may be the ‘Dr Wilson’ recorded on Wood’s 1824 map (even although deceased by then) as owner of lands where Melgund Place and the southern side of Brougham Place were built, and also of a plot of land on what would become Allars Bank, as well as the property at 22 High Street. James of Otterburn, listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 may have been related. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton and Hawick Parishes, recorded at Damside in 1780. He married Margaret Miller and their children included: George (b.1780), baptised in Wilton; and Isabel (b.1782), Robert (b.1784), George (b.1788) and Elizabeth (b.1790), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1780 were George and James Wilson (who were surely relatives, perhaps the carriers). James (18th C.) hat manufacturer of James Wilson & Co., Hawick. There is a record of a grant of £10 being awarded to the company by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures in 1785. By 1787 he was carrying on the business on his own, rather than in a partnership. He is recorded as a hatter in Hawick on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–92. He should not be confused with the later hat manufacturer (and economist) of the same name; it is unclear if he had any link to the manufacturing Wilsons. He may have married Isabella Newberry and had children Ann (b.1787), James (b.1789), Francis (b.1791) and Mary. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at West Highchesters in 1792. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in Robertson in 1792 and their son Thomas was baptised in that year. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Belses, recorded as owner of no fewer than 14 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) horse-dealer at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same John was blacksmith in Denholm on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James ‘the Bean’ (1747–1821) clock and watchmaker, son of William (‘Whusky Wullie’). He was known as the leader of Hawick fashion in the mid-to-late-18th century. He was Cornet in 1781 and was also Dean of Guild. In 1778 4 of his silver watches were reported as part of goods stolen from the coach office at the Bull and Mouth Inn, near Birmingham. He is recorded as ‘clockmaker’ when he (along with his father William) witnessed a baptism for his brother Peter in 1779. He is probably the James of Hawick described as a watchmaker when he took out fire insurance in London in 1781. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is said to have been standing at his new shop door when ‘Blind Wullie’ Craw passed, and asked him to make a poem about his new house, whereupon he replied: ‘A certain one has built a house, Whose fortune it was low, A wooden cornice he put on – I mean the charming Beau’. In 1783 he married Janet Gibson of Cardrona, Peeblesshire, and she died in 1839, aged 76. Their children were: Peggy (or Margaret, b.1784); Mary (b.1787); Nancy (or Agnes); and Hardie James (b.1797). James (18th/19th C.) son of skinner John. He was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was selected by ballot to serve on the local Militia in 1799, but later declared to be unfit. He could be the James, son of John and Margaret Waugh, born in Hawick in 1776. His son Thomas died in 1808 and Robert in 1810, with his wife Lizzy Reid also dying in 1810. James (b.1762/3–1843) originally from England, he was a road surveyor living at Ovenshank in Coldstream Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1835–41 and was there on the 1841 census. He married Margaret Foster, who died in 1853, aged 56. Their children included: Andrew (1812/3–74), also a road surveyor; Helen; and Jane. The family are buried at Etterton.

James (d.1831) son of James, he was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers George and William. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1789–91. He was recorded with his brothers as a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, having 2 horses. He also served as Town Clerk. He is probably the carrier James whose son William died in Hawick in 1840.

James (b.c.1790) farmer at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish. James (1797–1862) Hawick Town Clerk. He was the youngest son of a shoemaker Peter and his brothers included shoemaker William, candlemaker John (‘the Dip’) and manufacturers Peter and Thomas. He was a ‘writer’ (i.e. lawyer) and bank agent in Hawick. He was listed as a writer in Hawick on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). He is probably the James recorded as writer and notary on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His premises were probably one of those marked ‘Wilson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as writer, and agent for the National Bank of Scotland as well as agent for Caledonian fire insurance and Standard life insurance; he was at that time on Buccleuch Street. In 1852 he was agent for both Caledonian and Standard insurance companies. He served as Town Clerk of Hawick 1841–62 and may also have been a Councillor. He wrote ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850) and ‘Hawick and its old Memories’ (1858, also known as ‘Memories of Hawick’), which were compiled from Burgh and Parish records; these form an invaluable record of the early history of Hawick, with his detailed insight and interpretation being crucially important. However, he probably did a disservice to the Town by suggesting that the 1537 Charter may have represented the original granting of Hawick’s Common. Additionally, he sided very clearly with those who caused Hawick to lose part of the Common in the Division of 1777, and he was not a great fan of the Common Riding, describing it as ‘now a mere pageant for the enjoyment of youth’. Despite this, for many years until 1859 he headed the Procession to the Moor, and called the Burgess Roll. He also produced a very useful register of deaths for the period 1825–62. His legal office was at 5 Buccleuch Street. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living there with his unmarried sisters Agnes and Jane (or Janet). In 1851 he is listed as Procurator before the Sheriff Court of Roxburghshire. He may be the Liberal supporter who was mentioned in connection with the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’, specific because of buying property in Selkirkshire in order to vote there. He traced an extended family tree for the local Wilsons. He appears to have died unmarried. A portrait of him exists. James (b.1798/9) horse-keeper on the High Street, listed on the 1851 census. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer. He lived on Reid’s Close, which was at about 77 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Elizabeth, Archibald and Janet. He was a widower by 1861. James (b.c.1800) from Castle Douglas, he was a blacksmith on the High Street. In 1841 he was living at about No. 75 with his wife Janet and children Andrew, James (frameworker) and Adam. By 1861 he was a widower, living with his son James at 7 Kirkwynd. He is probably the same James who was blacksmith on Walter’s Wynd; was said that James (‘Teribus’) Hogg had a ‘double-decker’ frame made on his anvil. He may have been related to Henry, who was also a smith in Hawick. James (b.1800/1) born in Cavers Parish, he was shepherd at Lurgiescleuch in Hobkirk Parish in 1861. It is unclear if he was related to Robert ‘Lurgie’, who came from there. He married Isabel Elliot, and their children: included John (b.1847); Mary (b.1850); Janet (b.1852); Matthew (b.1855); Margaret (b.1858); Robert (b.1862); and Andrew (b.1866). Their children were born in Cavers, Kirkton and Teviothead Parishes. He may be the agricultural labourer living at Peelbraehope in 1841, with Margaret (probably his mother).

James (1805–1860) politician and economist, born in Hawick. Third son of manufacturer William (of a family of 15), he was educated in Quaker schools and apprenticed to a hat manufacturer in Hawick at 16 (apparently frustrated that Quaker beliefs prevented him from pursuing a legal career). With his brother William they took over the business (purchased for them by their father), which prospered in Hawick, and did even better when they moved it to London in 1824. The company was called Wilson, Erwin & Wilson, but in 1831 became James Wilson & Co. After some financial troubles he retired from business in 1844. He then speculated in indigo, and lost almost all... his money, but avoided bankruptcy and eventually recovered. Meanwhile he wrote against the Corn Laws, in favour of free trade and on fiscal policy, establishing a reputation as a political campaigner. He established ‘The Economist’ magazine in 1843, writing most of it himself for the first few years. It was established on the principle of stimulating ‘every man who has a stake in the country ... to investigate and learn for himself’ about public affairs. He became a Liberal M.P. first in 1847, and was financial secretary to the Treasury then turned down an appointment as Vice-President of the Board of Trade. He was also nominated as Governor of Victoria, Australia, but this was blocked by the Queen, because his ‘position and status’ were not deemed high enough. Thus snubbed he almost resigned from politics, but stayed on to become Vice-President of the Board of Trade. He later accepted a position as financial member of the Council of India (effectively India’s Chancellor of the Exchequer), which meant resigning his parliamentary seat. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1859. Later in 1859 he travelled to India, where he quickly adapted to life there, learning the ropes rapidly, and doing much to reform Indian finance. However, he died of dysentery there. He is buried in the Circular Road Cemetery, Calcutta. There is a bust of him in the National Gallery, Edinburgh, and a full-size marble statue inside 25 St. James’s Street in London. A copy of his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by J. Watson-Gordon) and in 2005 a plaque was placed at 11 High Street, his probable birth place. The Museum also has a bust of him. James (19th C.) farmer at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. James Anderson (1830–86) son of Hawick shoemaker William. He served with the Royal Navy and is listed as a chief engineer in 1870. He married Agnes Downie and their children were William Grant, Beatrice Mary, John Downie (who married Gertrude Potts), Agnes J.K., James A., George E. and Harry C. Dr. James P.A. (19th C.) sometimes preacher at the Home Mission in Hawick. He lodged with Mrs. Gowans in town and married her daughter Katie. He later worked in a government job in Jahore in Malaysia. Their son was Dr. William Brookie and his widow became Lady Ibrahim, Sultaness of Jahore, while their daughter Eleanore was on the London stage for a while. Sir James Glenny (1849–1929) born in Hawick, son of woollen manufacturer George and Jane Law. He was educated at the Parish School then in London and at college in Edinburgh. He is probably the James recorded at Heronhill in 1868. He floundered in a position back at Wilson’s mill, so was sent off to learn about farming, travelling to Australia. He moved to New Zealand in 1873, where he purchased a farm in the Rangitikei district. He called his house ‘Lethenty’, after the place where the Glennys had come from in Aberdeenshire. He was known as an innovative farmer, trying many new ideas, but taking about 20 years to be successful. He became a Member of the New Zealand Parliament in 1881, serving until 1896 (and was a Conservative, despite his family’s Liberal ties). He became first President of the New Zealand Farmers’ Union in 1902. He was also President of the Board of Agriculture and served on many committees and advisory boards. He is now best remembered for his early efforts as a conservationist, helping re-establish the State Forestry Service, and being a strong advocate of replanting native forests. He was knighted in 1915. A keen churchman, he played the organ in his local Presbyterian Church. He married Annie Adams, daughter of farmers in western Victoria. They had 3 sons (Hamish, Noel and Maj. Robert A., farmer and naturalist) and 2 daughters (Nancy, who was a leader in the Girl Guides and Jean). He is buried in the cemetery at Bulls. Jane (b.c.1800) keeper of a lodging house on the Loan. She is recorded there in 1841, along with children Jane, Elizabeth, Isabella, Janet and James. By 1851 she had married frameworker John Eddie and was running a boarding house on Walter’s Wynd. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1690 when she leased one fifth of the farm of Branxholme Town from Scott of Buccleuch. She was probably a widow of the previous farmer, but it is unclear if Wilson was her maiden or married name. She was also tenant in 1691 and 1692, and may have been related to Andrew Wilson who also leased part of Branxholme Town then. Her name does not appear again after that, and so either she died, or other family members took over farming. John (15th C.) recorded being ‘in hartwodmyris’ (i.e. Hartwoodmyres) in 1494/5. He contributed goods to the itinerant court held in Selkirk, his surety being John Murray of Hangingshaw. John (16th C.) recorded on a list of tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (17th C.) recorded in 1690 when he leased one fifth of the farm of Branxholme Town according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the later John at Whithope. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Flight in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the later John at Whithope. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. He is probably the tailor recorded at Allanhaugh Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. The later tailor (in Newbigging) of the same name was probably his son. He witnessed a baptism for his son John in 1713; he was then described as ‘taylor called old John’. His wife was Bessie ‘Betie’ (i.e. Beattie) and their children included: Agnes (b.1678); Bessie (b.1680), who married John Nichol in 1708; Janet (b.1682); John (b.1685), also a tailor at Newbigging and Whitchesters; and James (b.1687). Baptismal witnesses were Robert Scott, ‘Glack’ and Walter Henderson in 1678, Robert Scott in Barn Knowe and John Martin in 1680, Walter Scott and John Scott in 1682, and John Stewart and William Riddell in 1687. It is unclear whether or not he was the Army Sergeant during the reign of Queen Anne, who had 2 sons (possibly James and William), who were said to be progenitors of many of the local Wilsons. He could be the John Wilson who enlisted as an ensign in the Coldstream Guards in 1688/9. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Newbigging in Hawick Parish, probably related to the earlier tailor of the same name (perhaps his son). In 1708 he was tailor at Newbigging when he witnessed baptisms for John Dryden, smith at Newmill and for dyker William Pearson. In 1713 he was ‘younger and Taylor in Whitchesters’ when one of his children was baptised. He married Helen Paterson and their children included: James (b.1711); John (b.1716); Helen (b.1719); Bessie (b.1722); and Christian (b.1725). The witnesses in 1711 were Walter Scott and Robert Davidson in Newbigging and in 1713 were Alexander Thomson (tenant at Whitchesters) and John Wilson (‘taylor called old John’, his father). John (17th/18th C.) farmer at Branxholme Town. He could be the son of Walter, who was recorded at Branxholme Town in 1694. He was at Branxholme Town from at least 1702. He was recorded being in arrears at Branxholme Town in the period 1712–17. During that time he was renting 1/5 of the farm along with Walter Craw. In 1725 he was renting 2/5 along with Robert and Walter Scoon and 1/5 with Walter Craw. He was still recorded as farmer of part of Branxholme Town in 1735 and was in arrears for rent there in 1742. In 1699 he married Margaret Crow, who died around 1739. Their children included: Helen (b.1702); William (b.1705), who may have emigrated; and Walter (b.1712), ‘Haunless Wat’. He may be the carrier who witnessed a baptism at Branxholme in 1747. The baptism of Helen in 1702 was witnessed by merchant Walter, who was surely related, as well as merchant Walter Oliver. James (b.1711), baptised in Hawick Parish, may also have been his son. He is said to have had 2 of his horses requisitioned by Bonnie Prince Charlie’s army in 1745, to carry baggage as far as Carlisle. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at East Highchesters in 1714, Highchesters in 1716 and 1718 and East Highchesters in 1720. Perhaps the same John was at Whithope in 1722. His children probably included: Agnes (b.1714); Janet (b.1716); William (b.1718); James (b.1720); and Janet and Jean (b.1722). He is probably the John who married Janet Laidlaw in Roberton in 1713. Perhaps the same John also married Janet Scott in Robertson in 1707. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Dalglish and their children included Walter (b.1719); and John (b.1722), mother recorded as ‘Bessie Dalgless’. Adam (b.1727), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his son. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Irvine in langlands in 1722. John (‘Light Pack’ (18th C.) son of (probably) William, elder son of an army sergeant in Queen Anne’s time. He was a weaver and married Margaret Elliot. Their sons were John and Walter, both of whom worked as tanners and candlemakers. They also had daughters Janet (b.1756) and Margaret (b.1759). It is possible that his wife was the ‘Peggy Wilson, Hawick’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the weaver John who (along with currier James) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Elliot in 1765. Bailie John (18th C.) Hawick baker who was a Bailie in 1772. He could be the John who paid to have the Parish ‘mortcloth’ for a child’s burial in 1773. He may be the John who was one of the Bailies during the disturbances in Hawick involving clashes with the ‘Patriots’ in about 1778. He is recorded as Bailie John in 1780 when (along with Dr. James) witnessed a baptism for George Halliburton and Bessie Wilson (who may have been related). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk John Gedestains in 1781. He may be the John who leased Pilnmuir farm in 1787. He could be his son John who was a Bailie in 1781. He is probably the baker John whose unnamed child died in 1797 and whose daughter Anne died in Hawick in 1810. He witnessed a baptism for William Brown in 1801. John (18th C.) Hawick inn-keeper of the late 1700s. He was a second cousin of shoemaker Peter, and probably a descendant of the William who resided at Whitchesters. John (18th C.) resident of Lurgiescleuch in 1786 when his son John was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. It seems likely he was related (perhaps brother) of Charles, and hence potentially uncle of Robert ‘Lurgie’, the Hawick historian. Margaret (b.1783), also baptised in Hobkirk, was probably also his child. John (1752/3–1828) of Hallrule, local farmer. He purchased Hallrule in about 1803 and built the main house there. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1811 he was listed as owner of the east part of Outer Hallrule, as well as 5 of the 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule. He was stated by the local minister in 1836 as being one of those responsible for land improvements in Hobkirk Parish. He is buried in St. Cuthbert’s churchyard in Edinburgh along with his youngest daughter, Barbara. His lands were later owned by Sir William A.F. Elliot of Stobs. John (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for George Douglas. John (18th C.) stable servant and gamekeeper at Larriston in 1794, when he was working for William Oliver. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Skelfhill. He paid tax in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. He may have been related to Walter, who was shepherd at Priesthaugh. John (18th/19th C.) listed at Wilton Lodge in 1805 when his son George died. He may have been a gardener or other employee of the estate. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Minto Burnfoot on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same John was at Deanfoot in Minto Parish on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned no less than 13 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Wauchope in 1797 according to the Dog Tax Rolls. John (b.c.1778) born in Cluny Parish, Perthshire. He was a tailor by trade. He deserted from the Roxburgh and Selkirkshire Light Dragoons in Hawick in 1799, having probably had his name drawn by ballot. He could be the son of John born in Cluny in 1776. John (d.1828) son of John and Margaret Elliot. He was a candlemaker and Chief Magistrate in the 1820s. He is recorded as Bailie in 1828 when the Slitrig (Drumlanrig) Bridge was widened. He was also Cornet in 1812 and there is a portrait of him in Cornet’s dress; he is likely to be the first Cornet of whom we have an image. He is probably the candlemaker of that name who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetic Museum’ in 1784. Both brothers worked as tanners and later became candlemakers. His premises were on the Howegate (according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory). He may have been the John who was a founder member of the Wisp Club in 1826. Note that he is easily confused with another candlemaker of the same name (‘the Dip’), who lived in Hawick at the same time (although a little younger) and to whom he was related. John ‘Tufty’ (b.c.1780) Hawick Burgh Officer and drummer in the early part of the 19th century, being Halberdier along with William Turnbull (‘Wull the Bellman’) and for a while with Sandy Bryson. He may be the same John who is described as an auctioneer and Sheriff Officer in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is recorded as ‘sheriff officer’ on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. It is unclear which other Wilsons he was related to. He is probably the John who married Janet Armstrong in Wilton Parish in 1794 and whose children included: Margaret (b.1795); Ann (b.1801); James (b.1802); James (again, b.1803); Jean (b.1805); Elizabeth (b.1807); William (b.1809); and Janet (again, b.1812). The birth of Ann is crossed out in the Parish Records for 1802, with witnesses Robert Armstrong, printer (probably related to his wife), and Robert Tinlin, Church Officer. He is recorded as an ‘Officer’ on the Howegate in the 1841 census, living along with his wife Janet at about No. 18. He was known for being a law unto himself, and as a terroriser of evil-doers – ‘Auld Cash and Tufty blithely trip, Lean Yeddie Gibson’s creel is full, Jamie Tamson and John the Dip Gang hand in hand wi’ Cutler Wull’ [HI].

John ‘the Dip’ (1783–1857) son of shoemaker Peter. His brothers included hosiery manufacturers Peter and Thomas, as well as Town Clerk James. He was also a distant relative of the other candlemaker John. He himself was a candlemaker and grocer. He was listed as a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was also listed as a seedsman in 1837, as well as a candlemaker on the Howegate. He is probably the grocer recorded on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. Probably the same man is additionally listed as a general and tar merchant on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is listed as a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate in 1841 (at about 6 Howegate) and by 1851 was a widower who was a ‘Proprietor of houses and land’ on Buccleuch Street. He is the Mr. John of Buccleuch Street listed among the gentry of Hawick in Slater’s 1852 directory. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1818 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of James Elliot of Goldielands. Their children included Adam, farmer at Midshiels, and Agnes. He died at Midshiels. His portrait, by an unknown artist, is in the Museum.

John (18th/19th C.) listed as baker in Carlisle on the list of subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). It seems likely he was related to Wilsons from Hawick. John (1785–1854) reviewer and essayist, born in Paisley, but settled in Edinburgh, where he became Professor of Moral Philosophy. He was a leader in the city’s literary society, where he also wrote bold articles under the pseudonym ‘Christopher North’. He supposedly once stayed in a lodging-house in Mill Port along with a band of travelling gypsies. His grand-daughter Mary married William Aitchison of Brieryhill. He was also a great help to Henry Scott Riddell when he was at Edinburgh University, giving him the run of his house, and apparently refusing the standard fee from Riddell. He was said to have visited Denholm Dean, where he read Leyden’s ‘Scenes of Infancy’. His portrait, by John Watson Gordon, is in Hawick Museum.

John (b.c.1790) tenant farmer at Lees in Wilton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. His wife was Isabella, and their children included Walter, Margaret and James. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shankend and then at Wauchope Common. He is recorded as shepherd at Wauchope on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be related to the John who was shepherd at Hawklaw several decades later. John Mackay (1804–35) Scottish writer, particularly of the 6 volume ‘Tales of the Borders’. Born in Duns, he was brought up in Tweedmouth and apprenticed with a printer in Berwick. He spent time in Edinburgh and London trying to secure employment, and was eventually hired to the staff of the Literary Journal in Edinburgh. He published poetry and other literary and dramatic work (including ‘The Gowrie Conspiracy’ and ‘Margaret of Anjou’), and travelled to give lectures. In 1832 he became editor of the Berwick Advertiser. He was an advocate for the abolition of slavery, for a national education system and for free trade. He began to publish his ‘Tales’ in the Advertiser, and they were successful enough that they were printed in weekly segments, circulation growing dramatically. However, within a year of the first volume being completed he was dead (perhaps as a result of alcoholism). Further volumes were printed in Edinburgh, on behalf of his widow, with many contemporary writers (including his brother) contributing chapters. In all, 6 volumes were published (with more added in later editions), covering a wide range of historical characters associated with both sides of the Border. The tales included many pieces of dialogue in dialect, which (even if imperfect) are a valuable record of vocabulary and modes of speech from the early 19th century. He is buried at Gib’s Nose. His wife was Elizabeth (from Tranent, East Lothian) and their children included Elizabeth and William (both born in Middlothian). John G. of Ladylaw (1806–86) son of manufacturer William and older brother of Provost George. He spent 3 years in a Quaker school at Ackworth in Yorkshire, which is said to have broken him of his Hawick vernacular. After returning to Hawick he worked for the family firm. In about 1835 he decided to start manufacturing flannel from Cheviot wool and so went to Rochdale to spend some time there working as a weaver, starting some looms back in Hawick. He also brought back to Hawick several weavers from the Rochdale area, including Robert Greenwood, James Kershaw, Edward Dearden, Bill Peacock and Bill Shaw, as well as finishers, such as Bill Whitehead and Jim Nuttal. After the firm of William Wilson & Sons was dissolved in 1851, he took over the Roughleigh
Wulson Wulson

Waulk Mill, and had Langlands Mill built adjacent to it. He carried on both hosiery and tweed manufacturing. He also built Ladylaw House, the first home in what is now Sunnyhill. He was listed on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s and served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1851 he was living at Ladylaw and listed as an employer of ‘205 hands’. In 1871 he is estimated to have employed 190 people. According to the Land Tax Rolls he owned a large fraction of the former lands of Roughheugh. He may be the Wilson recorded in about 1874 owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He is also listed as owner of half of the part of Roughheugh previously belonging to the Eastons, and the part once owned by William Robertson. He married at least twice, in 1838 to Margaret Scott (1810–51) and in 1863 to Elizabeth Thomson (sister of Rev. Adam Thomson). He may also have married Jeanie Laidlaw. His children included: William R. (b.1839), also a manufacturer; Annie (b.1840), who married Simon Graham; Frank (1845–88); Elizabeth; Maggie (b.1845), who married George Walker; and Mary (b.1851). A portrait of him exists as a young man. John (b.1811) son of Richard and Agnes Weir. He was church officer in Ashkirk in 1858, serving like several generations of his family before him. John Fiddes (b.1813) son of Thomas and Margaret Fiddes (whose sister Janet married David Laing). He became a wool merchant and lived at Leaburn. He acted as standard bearer for the 1832 celebratory procession for the passing of the Reform Bill. He was recorded along with skinner Walter (probably his brother) as joint proprietor of houses on the 1837 electoral roll. In 1841 he was recorded as a farmer living at 1 Teviot Crescent with his mother, as well as Thomas Fiddes, his cousin. In 1851 he was there with his mother, cousin and brother, Walter. In 1861 he was listed as a wool merchant, employing 12 men and 6 apprentices. In about 1874 he was recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He married Margaret Bell Underwood from Annan and their son was Walter Fiddes (b.1861). John (b.c.1815) tailor living on the Kirkwynd in 1841 and at about 29 High Street in 1851. He was married to Christian and their children included Walter. In 1861 he was listed as a wool manufacturer. He also built Ladylaw House, the first home in what is now Sunnyhill. He was listed on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s and served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1851 he was living at Ladylaw and listed as an employer of ‘205 hands’. In 1871 he is estimated to have employed 190 people. According to the Land Tax Rolls he owned a large fraction of the former lands of Roughheugh. He may be the Wilson recorded in about 1874 owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He is also listed as owner of half of the part of Roughheugh previously belonging to the Eastons, and the part once owned by William Robertson. He married at least twice, in 1838 to Margaret Scott (1810–51) and in 1863 to Elizabeth Thomson (sister of Rev. Adam Thomson). He may also have married Jeanie Laidlaw. His children included: William R. (b.1839), also a manufacturer; Annie (b.1840), who married Simon Graham; Frank (1845–88); Elizabeth; Maggie (b.1845), who married George Walker; and Mary (b.1851). A portrait of him exists as a young man. John (b.1811) son of Richard and Agnes Weir. He was church officer in Ashkirk in 1858, serving like several generations of his family before him. John Fiddes (b.1813) son of Thomas and Margaret Fiddes (whose sister Janet married David Laing). He became a wool merchant and lived at Leaburn. He acted as standard bearer for the 1832 celebratory procession for the passing of the Reform Bill. He was recorded along with skinner Walter (probably his brother) as joint proprietor of houses on the 1837 electoral roll. In 1841 he was recorded as a farmer living at 1 Teviot Crescent with his mother, as well as Thomas Fiddes, his cousin. In 1851 he was there with his mother, cousin and brother, Walter. In 1861 he was listed as a wool merchant, employing 12 men and 6 apprentices. In about 1874 he was recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He was married to Christian and their children included Helen, John and Mary. John (b.1818/9) from Annan, he was farm overseer at Larriston in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Isabella and their children included James, Robert, John and Francis. John (19th C.) shepherd at Hawklaw when listed among the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. He was still recorded at Hawklaw in 1868. He married Catherine, daughter of William Carruthers. Their daughter Agnes Robina died of consumption in 1874. John (b.1825/6) from Canonbie, he was employed as a lime-burner at Thorliveshope. In 1861 he was living at Lawston and was at Thorliveshope in 1868. His wife was Mary and they had daughters Helen and Margaret. Rev. John Rudge (c.1857–1930) son of Thomas of Glasgow and Catherine Mary Rulton. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1876 and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1878. He was assistant at Barony Parish, Glasgow, then ordained at Morton in 1879. He was translated to Greenside, Edinburgh in 1884 and then to Wilton in 1887. He preached the sermon at the inauguration of the 1st Hawick Company of the Boys’ Brigade in 1893. He was also Chairman of the School Board for Wilton Parish, first President of Wilton Bowling Club, and acting Chaplain in the Volunteers. He was the Chaplain for the 1890 Common Riding and was a fairly vocal supporter during a time when most of the local clergy were attacking the Common Riding. He also talked at the 1899 Colour Bussing. He was Chaplain to the forces in the South African War in 1900, and was mentioned in dispatches in 1901. In 1905 he took charge of St. Andrews Church, Simla (India). However, he was soon back at Wilton, and remained there until leaving the area in 1926. He was Chaplain of the K.O.S.B. from 1912 and received a doctorate from Glasgow University in 1913. His ministry saw the building of the church halls and the addition of a chancel and transepts to the church. He was apparently widely known as an eloquent preacher. In 1903 he married Georgina Underwood Fiddes (sister of Walter Fiddes Wilson), and she died at Wetheral, Cumberland in 1947. There are descendants of the Reltons, Rudges and Wilsons living in Tasmania. He published ‘Prophecy and Poetry: a Sermon on the Death of Lord Tennyson’ (Hawick, 1892), ‘Spirited Weapons of War’ (Hawick, 1895), ‘The Foundation Rock of the Church’ (Hawick, 1896), ‘Patriotism, a sermon’ (Hawick, 1897), ‘Not Peace, but a Sword, a sermon’ (Hawick, 1899), ‘Hardship and Character, a sermon’ (Hawick, 1904) and ‘The Soldiers of the Cross’ (Hawick, 1907). John Graham (1862–1928) son of William R. He was a tweed manufacturer in Hawick, like generations before him. In 1899 he married Mary Murray Elliot, daughter of Walter Elliot, tenant farmer in Hermitage. His sister Isabel married his brother-in-law Robert Elliot, also farmer in Hermitage. His children were: Agnes Armstrong (b.1890); William E.G. (b.1894); and Walter Elliot (b.1898). Rev. J.P. minister of St. Mary’s 1959–66. Katherine (1798–1863) eldest daughter of Hawick manufacturer William. She went to London with her brothers William and James about 1824 to keep house for them while they developed their hat manufacturing business. She married John Glenny of Aberdeenshire in 1834, and their son James became partner in Wilson & Glenny. Lucy Ann (1853–1944) daughter of Walter of Orchard. She was President of the Hawick Young Women’s Christian Association. She provided family information for James Haining in compiling his notes for the monumental inscriptions in Hawick. She died at Belmont, at the age of 92. Luke (16th C.) merchant who was owed money for an account, according to the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. It is unclear if he was from the Hawick area or perhaps Edinburgh. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. She was probably widow of a farmer on the Knowesouth estate. Margaret nee Fiddes (b.c.1785) listed as owner of a tanners and skinners business in Pigot’s directory of 1837. She was by that time the widow of Thomas. In 1841 she was at about 1 Teviot Crescent with her son John. In 1851 she was a widow working as a wool merchant and skinner, employing 6 men, with her sons Walter and John as partners. ‘Margaret Wilson & Sons, Teviot crescent’ are listed as tanners and skinners in Slater’s 1852 directory. Margaret Stavert worked as Head of the Training Department of Barrie’s. She received the B.E.M. in 1978 for services to export. Marion (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1695 when she was ordered by the Council to pay ‘for 10 ells of sheets woven in the Holland reid, 5 groats the ell’. Mina (18th/19th C.) listed as vintner on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It is unclear how she was related to any other Wilsons. Mungo (b.1821/2) son of land steward David, he was born at Cavers. In 1841 he was listed as a shopkeeper at Cavers, although less than 20 years old at the time. He became a licensed grocer at the foot of the Howeagate, where the Post Office had formerly been. In 1851 he was listed as a grocer on Silver Street, living with his sister Jane. He was recorded as a Silver Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a widower, living with his sister Jessie (probably the same as Jane). His business was taken over by his assistant, James Laing, grandson of James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’ fame). Nichol (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he and John White were accused of coming to Burgh-by-Sands and killing Englishman Thomas Bull. It is unclear what part of the Borderland he came from. Peter (1750–1836) shoemaker and Magistrate, who lived at Slitrig Bank. He was son of William (‘Whisky Wullie’) and Mary Hardie, and was christened ‘Patrick’. He was listed as Patrick in 1794–97 when he paid the Horse Tax in Hawick. He was listed as a shoemaker on the Howeagate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. In 1776 he married Joan (1756–1840), daughter of baker John Kedie and she died in 1840. Their children were: William, also a shoemaker (1779–1845); Betty, Mary (d.1781), and twins Betty and Mary, all of whom died in infancy; John (1783–1857), ‘The Dip’; Helen (b.1783); Peter (1784–1862), hosiery manufacturer; Betty (b.1785), who also died in infancy; Thomas (1787–1859), manufacturer; Joan (1788–1857); Archibald (b.1789), died in infancy; Agnes (1795–1866), dressmaker; James (1797–1862), Hawick Town Clerk; and Jane (1798–1885), also a dressmaker. The witnesses in 1779 were his father writer William and brother clockmaker James, and in 1788 were William Wilson and William Elliot. A portrait exists of him, by an unknown artist, as well as perhaps another with his wife and servants. He is probably the Peter who purchased barley from ‘Auld Cash’ sometimes before 1810. Peter (1784–1862) hosiery manufacturer and yarn spinner of Peter Wilson & Co., sometimes called ‘junior’, since his father was also Peter. His brothers included William (shoemaker), John (‘the Dip’), Thomas (also a manufacturer) and James (Town Clerk). He was in partnership with John Waldie and Robert Pringle at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent from 1815, but left the partnership in 1819. He is listed as a hosier among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. Around 1825 he ran a yarn spinning operation at Appletreehall Mills, as recorded in Pigot’s directory. He operated Tower Mills and Allars Mill (near Jedburgh) from 1823, and was still running the Waulk Mills (along with his brother Thomas) at the time of the flood of 1846. Around 1837 he was operating a mill on Slitrig Bank, at the foot of the Kirk Wynd; this same building is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed in 1835 as a manufacturer in Hawick among heads of households in Wilton Kirk. He was listed there in Pigot’s 1837 directory, as a manufacturer of both woollens and hosiery. He was a Bailie of the Town in the 1810s and again in 1837, during the so-called ‘election riots’. He was listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. Later in life he was a grocer in Old Manse Lane. He was Chief Magistrate in the 1830s. Later in life he also ran a shop, being listed in Slater’s 1852 directory on Silver Street. In 1861 he was a grocer and spirit dealer at 6 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place); he was by then a widower living with his housekeeper. In 1818 he married Mary, daughter of Robert Selby, who was factor at Minto, along with his son Ephraim. Their children were Helen Ritchie (wife of Rev. Adam Thomson), Elizabeth, Robert, Mary, another Mary, Peter, Mary Selby (who married her cousin Thomas Grant Wilson) and another Robert. A portrait of him and his wife exists. Peter (19th C.) said to have been from Cavers, he was at St. Andrews University 1822–6. Originally training to be a Secession minister, he became Professor of Mathematics at Andersonian University, Glasgow 1828–45 and was Rector of Inverness Academy 1845–7, then returned as Professor at Glasgow University. Richard (17th/18th C.) probably church officer in Ashkirk like other generations of his family. He married Bessie Halliwell and was succeeded as church officer by his son Robert. Richard (b.1756) son of Robert and Margaret Riddell. He was church officer in Ashkirk, like his father before him. He was succeeded in that office by his son John. He is probably the Richard who married Agnes Weir and whose children included: Robert (b.1792); William (b.1793); Alexander (b.1796); George (b.1800); Margaret (b.1802); James (b.1805); Agnes (again, b.1810); and John (b.1811). Richard (b.c.1793–1849) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was probably also the librarian of Hawick Trades Library listed in 1837. In 1841 he was at about 17 High Street with his wife Agnes and children Margaret, Agnes, Robert and Joseph. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘curate’ of Wilton in 1552 when he was listed as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch. There was a separate entry for the ‘rectori de Viltoun’ (but with no name given) suggesting that a different man was Rector at the time. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Martin and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1655. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Robertson and their children included: George (b.1690); and William (b.1693). The witnesses were James Scott and John Renwick. Robert (17th C.) carrier in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. Probably the same Robert was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be related to James, who was also a carrier at the same time. Robert (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He may be the same Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1687. He is recorded as a tailor in 1701 and 1712 when he witnessed baptisms for carrier James (who may therefore have been his brother). He is recorded in 1718 in a dispute with William Wright over the spaces occupied by their wives’ stools in St. Mary’s Kirk. He also witnessed a baptism for merchant James Simpson in 1721. He married Isobel Tait in 1700 and their children included: Margaret (b.1701); Robert (b.1704); Isobel (b.1706); and John (b.1708). The witnesses in 1704 were glover John Hart and flesher Thomas. 1706 included flesher Thomas (who may this have been related) Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded simply at ‘wiltoun’ and 1724 in the 1723 baptismal record for one of his children; the entries are more detailed than most, suggesting he was important in some way. In 1718 he married Elizabeth (or Elspeth), daughter of Walter Weens from Hawick; the marriage was proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: Walter (b.1719); Rachel (b.1721); William (b.1723); Bessie (b.1724); Robert (b.1726); Walter (b.1728); and Robert (again, b.1731). The witnesses in 1723 were John Blyth and Adam Easton and in 1724 were John and Walter Scott, ‘both in wiltoun’. He could be the Robert who witnessed a Wilton baptism for John Cairns in Timbersidemill in 1731. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was recorded as a shoemaker when one of his children was baptised in 1742. He witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker John Smail in Hawick in 1743. He married Bessy Lorraine (who may have been daughter of William Lorraine, b.1712). Their children included: John (b.1742); and Charles (b.1746). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant John Aitchison and baker John Kedie. He was already deceased in 1778 when the death of his wife Betty.

is recorded. It is possible that he was grandfather of ‘Lurgie’. Robert (18th C.) Schoolmaster in Wilton. He loaned the town £25 to help pay off the Teviot Bridge debt in the mid-1700s. It is possible he was the Wilton Parish Clerk who wrote the record in 1720 stating ‘Received for the mortcloth at the funeral of Walter Wilson my son’. He may be the Robert who married Elspeth, daughter of Walter Weens in 1718 (recorded in both Wilton and Hawick), and whose children included: Walter (b.1719); Rachel (b.1721); Bessie (b.1724); Robert (b.1726); Walter (again, b.1728); and Robert (again, b.1731). Robert (b.1723) son of Richard and Bessie Halliwell. He was church officer in Ashkirk. It is said that 9 or 10 generations of the same family held this office continuously. He married Margaret Riddell in 1753. Their children included: Betsy (b.1754); Richard (b.1756), who succeeded as church officer; Agnes (b.1759); and Isabel (b.1760). Robert of Bewlie (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear where he came from, or how long he owned these local lands. Robert (18th C.) butcher of Hawick, possibly related to the same old family who traced themselves back to the late 17th century in the Whitchesters area. He had at least 2 surviving sons: Andrew, who was also a flesher; and Adam, who was a shoemaker. He married Sarah Scott in 1760 and she died in 1781. Their children included: James (b.1760); Christian (b.1762); Adam (b.1764); Margaret (b.1765); Robert (b.1766); Margaret (again, 1766–91); Robert (again, b.1769); Janet (b.1771); and Andrew (b.1774). The witnesses in 1766 were James Waugh and Robert Turnbull. In Hawick’s death records he was recorded as ‘Drummer’ in 1781 and (twice) in 1791. He was therefore presumably in an early incarnation of the Drums and Fifes. He is probably the Robert whose son Robert died in Hawick in 1777. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Duncan in 1793. Robert ‘Lurgie’ (1772–1837) shoemaker, who was Cornet in 1799 and also a local historian and writer. He was son of Charles and Agnes Tinlin, with ‘Wull the Naig’ being one of his cousins. His nickname came from Lurgiescleuch, once a family home (said to be where his grandfather was from). His baptism is recorded in Hawick, but there is no record of the date of his birth (but probably the end of April or beginning of May). He was an only child and followed his father Charles into the combined trade of shoemaker and publican. He received only rudimentary and brief education in Hawick, and was largely self-taught. He was also known as a singer from an early age. His political views were strongly affected by the French Revolution, and it is said that his religious views were influenced by his friendship with Dr. Freeman. He is listed as a shoemaker at the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and as a vintner on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He inherited the publican’s business when his father died, the upstairs room at 2 Buccleuch Street being used as a public house, the Burns Inn. It was frequented by many of the most respectable local citizen’s and was often a meeting place for Hawick’s literati and local reformers. Since newspapers were scarce in those days, he would sometimes read important news from the window of his house, e.g. news of the victory at Waterloo. He used to set aside time every day for reading and from 1822 he started daily committing some of his thoughts to paper. At the encouragement of his friends he collected various pieces written on different scraps of paper and published them as ‘A Sketch of the History of Hawick’ (1825). The introduction for the second second edition, called ‘The History of Hawick’ (1841), was written only about a month before his death. This work represented the first serious history of the town, as well as being a discursive outline of the author’s Liberal political views. He argues vehemently for equality and for peace, using carefully thought out positions, and often utilising humour. He took a particular stance (in many cases surprisingly modern) against: the House of Lords; the length of the Civil List; too much power in the hands of the Clergy; religious education; out-dated educational methods; religious intolerance; the laws of entail and the legal system generally; simplistic attitudes to solving Ireland’s problems; and the state of the Carlisle-Edinburgh road near Hawick! He argued in favour of mediation in labour disputes, for religious toleration in Ireland, the support of the poor through taxation, for the Duke of Buccleuch to return the part of Hawick’s Common taken in 1777 and to encourage the development of mills on his property, and also to build housing on the Common Haugh to solve Hawick’s overcrowded housing problems! The editor of the Scotsman was so impressed he came to Hawick to find him, arriving on Common Riding Saturday and being told he was at the Haugh, his servant girl said ‘just look out for the longest, the leanest, and maist ill-faured man that ye can see. Ye’ll
Wulson

Wulson appears to bless fair Scotia’s happier day’. In addition he wrote ‘Disquisition on the corn-laws, with a few observations on pauperism, etc.’ (1826) and ‘Observations on the character and working of the Reform Bill’ (1834). A prominent Liberal in local politics, he took the part of the King of the Ancient Order of St. Crispin for the shoemakers in the 1832 Reform Bill celebratory procession and gave a speech at the banquet held in the Haugh. He is said to have helped in the selection of songs in ‘The Banquet of Euphrosyne’, published in Hawick by Robert Armstrong in 1811. He was also one of the founder members of the Hawick Curling Club. He was much respected in Town, and often consulted about the running of the trades Incorporations, the history of the Town, etc. He was Clerk for both Hawick’s friendly societies of the early 19th century, one being an annual benefit club (perhaps the Hawick Friendly Society) and the other the Hawick Medico-Relief Society. He was also distributor of the funds from the Association for the Purpose of Suppressing Public Begging in the Town of Hawick. He is probably the Robert recorded as Dean of Guild in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In his last few years, when his health was declining, he became Master of Works for Hawick. Under his supervision the plantations at the Vertish and on Hawick Moor were undertaken, and he enjoyed checking on the growth of the trees. Late in life he married Margaret Miller (who died in 1852), but they had no children. He is said to have walked the Common every day and caught a fever after falling asleep beside a damp spring (later referred to as ‘Lurgie’s Well’, near St. Leonard’s) and never recovered. Over 500 people attended his funeral. He is buried in St. Mary’s, although there was no headstone. A portrait of him exists (by an unknown artist, a friend of his), and he is described as being about 5 ft 10 in, with small, deep-set eyes, angular features, a protruding forehead and pale complexion. He is said to have had a temperament nature, but to be extremely perceptive, imaginative and excitable. He also wrote many letters on political matters, which appeared in newspapers. He was a great admirer of Burns, and would regularly give the addresses at meetings of the earliest incarnation of the Hawick Burns Club (e.g. in 1821 and 1823). The only example of poetry attributed to him are in supplement to Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Sweet Teviot’ lines: ‘All now is changed, and halcyon years Succeed the feudal baron’s sway; And trade, with arts and peace, appears To bless fair Scotia’s happier day’ [RW].

His Masonic insignia are in the Museum. A biography of him was written by Robert Murray in 1881. An anonymous contemporary wrote ‘Then hail to thee Rob! I am glad that our town, Can call such a blade as Rob Wilson our own. Oh, lang mayst thou flourish about in our parish Thy drab-coloured hat, Rob; and lang mayst thou nourish Thy Whiggisms, too, independent and true, And returns snap for snap when the Tories grow currish!’. Robert (c.1788–bef. 1851) spinner at Nixon’s Mill. In 1841 he was living at ‘Nixon’s Mill’, probably meaning Lynnwood Cottages. He married Janet, eldest daughter of William Laidlaw and Margaret Aitken. His children included: Margaret, who married Benjamin Hall; Isobel, who married John Biggar; James; and William. They also took in Catherine Laidlaw, a daughter of his brother-in-law James Laidlaw, who died around 1838. Robert ‘Rob the Clocker’ (19th C.) one of the men who attended social evenings in David Shiel’s public house on Baker Street in the mid-1800s, along with several Robert Scotts. Robert (19th C.) listed as a hosier on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Rev. Robert (b.c.1810) minister of Denholm Congregational Kirk 1835–42, taking over from itinerant preacher Francis Dick. He came from Glasgow Theological Academy, and was appointed as the first full-time independent minister in Denholm, there being preceived to be a strong need following the death of the Cameronian preacher James Duncan. During the period he served as minister he baptised Sir James A.H. Murray. In 1841 he was living at Deanburn Cottage with his wife Susan Gillies Smith. He moved to Cumbria in about 1843, where he was minister at Cockermouth Congregational Chapel and later was at Charlesworth Chapel, Derbyshire. Probably the same Robert emigrated to Nova Scotia in 1853 and was minister in Yarmouth Congregational Church there, as well as in Sheffield, New Brunswick. Robert (19th C.) one of the earliest deacons in the Hawick Congregational Kirk, from about 1848. Robert (b.1837/8) farmer at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish, originally from Channelkirk. In 1861 he was farming 1110 acres and employed 5 labourers. He was living with his brother William and sister Margaret. Robert Brodie (1840–1906) son of Margaret Brodie, with the father probably being cabinetmaker Walter Wilson. In 1861 he was living on Albion Place with his grandmother Helen Brodie. He worked as a wool sorter.
In 1862 he married Annie J. (1839–87), daughter of Andrew Ekron. They had 12 children, including Robert (b.1863), Elizabeth Scott (b.1864) and Margaret (b.1866). He secondly married Susan Stewart (who had formerly been married to a Waldie). He died in Dunedin, New Zealand.

Roland (16th C.) tenant at Catslack, as recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme in 1574. This seems most likely to be the ‘Catlochill’ (essentially the same as Branhholme Braes) which is mentioned in the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer’. S. C. (19th/20th C.) wrote the article ‘The Barony of Hawick and the Lovell Family’ for the 1932 Transactions. Simon (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Symeon Wilsoune in Priesthauch’ when he (along with 3 other local men, from the Branhholme area and Craik) were cautioners for ‘Hob Cowan in Ailmure’ in 1623. He may have been related to later local Wilsongs. Simon ‘Sim the Colt’ (17th C.) recorded on a long list of Borders men to be apprehended and tried for various crimes. He was probably from somewhere around Liddesdale. He could be the ‘Scymone Wilsone’ listed in about 1648 among ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves on the Border). Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of Over and Nether Whisgills and Redmoss in Liddesdale. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at £22 when provided for the Covenanting army ‘in case the horses come nocht back again or be lost’. He could be the Thomas, married to Margaret Henderson, whose children included Robert (b.1640) and Margaret (b.1644). Thomas (17th/18th C.) fleshier in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same Thomas was listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He was recorded as a fleshier in Hawick when he witnessed baptisms for tailor William Scott in 1701 and tailor Robert Wilson (possibly a relative) in 1704. He also witnessed a baptism in 1716 for Thomas Waugh (along with fellow fleshier John Tdhopie). He could be the Thomas, married to Esther Fowler, whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Robert (b.1687) and James (b.1689). Other children (as recorded in the baptismal entries) were Bessie (b.1700) and Thomas (b.1705). The witnesses in 1700 were ‘late Bailie’ James Deans and glover John Hart and in 1705 were carter John Aitken and fellow fleshier Walter Anderson. Thomas (18th C.) resident of the Borthwick valley. He was in Borthaugh in 1729 and ‘H…’ (perhaps Highchesters) in 1732. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Borthaugh. In 1723 he married Violet, daughter of George Turnbull, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. Their children included: Thomas (b.1726), Janet (b.1729) and Thomas (again, b.1733), baptised in Wilton; and William (b.1732), baptised in Roberton. James Scott and George Bell (both in Borthaugh) witnessed the 1729 baptism and John and James Dryden in 1733. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Elspeth Turnbull in 1743 and their children included George (b.1745); Betty (b.1750); and Janet (b.1759). Thomas (d.c.1786) second Schoolmaster at Caerlenrig, appointed in 1757, and staying until 1761 when he was appointed as Schoolmaster at Kirkton. There he was teacher to the class that included the young John Leyden, but he died after only teaching Leyden for a year or two. He was succeeded as shoolmaster by Walter Scott. Thomas (1785–bef. 1837) son of Walter (and probably not brother of Walter). He had a tanner’s business and lived at 1 Teviot Crescent. He is probably the ‘T. Wilson, skinner’, listed among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). His wife was Margaret (b.c.1785), daughter of John Fiddes, from Hobkirk. Their children included Walter (b.1811) and John Fiddes (b.1813), both wool merchants and skinners. He had a son who died in 1815 and another in 1819. He could be the tallow dealer and candlemaker listed on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. After his death his wife continued the tanning and skinning business, with their sons Walter and John becoming partners. Thomas (b.1787–1859) son of shoemaker Peter and brother of hosiery manufacturer Peter, as well as Town Clerk James. He ran a hosiery factory at 8 and 9 (or perhaps 7 and 8) Slitrig Crescent, where he is recorded on Wood’s 1824 map; the building there is shown straddling the mill lade. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory lists him in partnership with William Elliot. This partnership lasted only 7 years, ending in 1830, with William Elliot & Sons going their own way next door, and Wilson’s being eventually taken over by John Laing & Sons about 1851. He was also in partnership with his brother Peter and others in the Waulk Mill (Tower Knowe), under the name Waldie, Elliot & Co. He was among the local men implicated in the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’ on account of purchasing property in Selkirkshire. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory further lists a Thomas as Skinner and wool merchant on the High Street, and this is also probably him. The 1837 directory lists him as both a woollen and hosiery manufacturer on the Crescent. In 1819 he married Charlotte, only daughter of Edinburgh lawyer Charles Grant. Their children were: Peter Grant; Charles George (b.1823), who died young; Charles, who married Sarah Frisbie; Joan Kedie (d.1831), who died young; Charlotte Grant (1834–42); Eliza; Agnes Jane; George Grant, in the Civil Service in Somerset House, father of Sir Wemyss Grant-Wilson; and Thomas Grant, who married his cousin Mary Selby Wilson. Thomas (b.1812/3) shoemaker in the West-end. He was listed on the 1841 census on the Mid Row and in 1851 at 4 Kirk Wynd, where he was a Master Shoemaker in 1861. His wife was Agnes Ewen (from Selkirk) and their children included John, Margaret, William, Isabella, Janet (b.1837), Thomas, Robert, Eliza and Gideon (b.1855). He could be the shoemaker Thomas whose child’s death was recorded in 1838. Thomas Grant (19th C.) son of hosier manufacturer Thomas. He worked in the cotton business in Liverpool, then emigrated to Canada and the U.S.A. and died in Chicago. He married his cousin Mary Selby Wilson. Their children included Thomas Herbert Grant, who married Blanche Sanders. Thomas ‘Tom’ or ‘the Bottler’ (d.1918) prominent back in Hawick R.F.C. in the early 1900s, who was also capped for Scotland. He first appeared for Hawick in 1903, and could play in almost any position. He also excelled at Sevens, and played in nearly 50 tournaments. He was killed during WWI. Thomas (19th/20th C.) Schoolmaster at Roberton for over 50 years. He lived at the schoolhouse in Roberton and wrote an article about the area for the 1924 Transactions. In 1875 he firstly married Mary Scott Grieve. He secondly married Ellen Mary Douglas, son of John, farmer at Easter Essenside (and also descended from Charles Scott, ‘Chairlie o the Crescent’). His children were: James (‘Jim’); Margaret; Thomas (b.1888), who died in WWI; Christina (‘Chrisstie’), who was teacher at Ashkirk; and George, a doctor at Redditch. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1888–1917) second son of the Roberton Schoolmaster. He became a civil engineer, moving to Glasgow, Carlisle and then Singapore. He played rugby for several sides and was selected to go on tour with the English national side in 1907; however, a dispute with the Scottish Union led to him being de-selected by England. During WWI he was drafted to East Africa, where he was a Lieutenant with the King’s African Rifles. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1916 and transferred to the Royal Engineers. He was killed when his car was attacked by a sniper in German East Africa. Thomas Michael Aubrey ‘Michael’ (1951–), F.R.S.E., son of Basil, headmaster at Drumlanrig School. He attended Hawick Hawick School. He was Chief Executive Officer of Horticulture Research International and acted as Editor-in-Chief for the Journal of Horticultural Science & Biotechnology. He has been a spokesman on behalf of a scientific approach to genetically modified crops. Walter (d.c.1681) listed ‘in Hawick’ when his will was recorded in 1681. He may be the same as the later merchant of Hawick, if he registered a will significantly before his death. Walter (17th C.) resident at Wester Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He may be the Walter who married Isobel Lamb and whose son John was baptised in Ashkirk in 1690, with witnesses William Stewart and James Murray. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and is probably the Walter listed ‘est the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He is probably the Walter who (along with merchant Walter Oliver) witnessed baptism for John Scott, smith in Hawick in 1704 and for fellow merchant William Douglas and for wright William Brack in 1706. He also witnessed a baptism for smith John Scott in 1708. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He may be the Walter whose children, baptised in Hawick, included: Janet (b.1694); John (b.1695); Margaret (b.1699); Agnes (b.1702); Helen (b.1702); Marion (again, b.1704), who married John Riddell in 1720; Walter (b.1707); and William (b.1709). The witnesses in 1699 were John Scott and John ‘Woollands’. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Castlehill. He was renting part of Branxholme Town in 1693, rented the farm of Castlehill in 1698 and acted as cautioner for the widow of Andrew, tenant in part of the farm of Branxholme Town. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Marion (b.1686), who probably married John Riddell in Hawick in 1720. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Castlehill. He was recorded in 1700 as ‘younger in Castlehill’ (suggesting he was son of the previous Walter in Castlehill). He was at Castlehill in 1700, 1704, 1707 and 1709 (when still ‘younger’). He married

Isobel Riddell and they had children: Margaret (b.1698); Isobel (b.1700); Marion (b.1704); Bessie (b.1705), who may be the ‘Old Betty’, daughter to the deceased Walter, who died in 1795; Walter (b.1707); and William (b.1709). The witnesses in 1698 were James and John Aitken, in 1700 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and Henry Orrick, in 1704 were James Ogilvie in Branxholme and Robert Thomson in Newmill, in 1705 included Andrew Riddell in Goldielands, in 1707 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and William Nixon in Stobicote and in 1709 were Francis Gedstains (servitor to Scott of Falnash) and Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) listed as ‘Servant to Walter Scott at Commonside’ in 1737 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Jackson, hind at Falnash. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Haunless Wat’. Walter ‘Haunless Wat’ (1712–1795) son of John and Margaret Crow, he was born in Hawick Parish. His nickname came from the fact that he was born with only one hand. He was grand-father of William, and great-grandfather of Provost George. He worked as a travelling packman for William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’ (or perhaps more likely, the father of ‘Auld Cash’), taking goods back and forward across the Border using pack-horses. He set up as a merchant in 11 High Street, later buying No. 9 from Francis Scott and finally acquiring No. 13 through exchange of property on the Back Row. No. 11 High Street belonged to 3 generations of Walters, the last being Cornet in 1820. It is labelled as ‘Wa. Wilson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. After the death of Oliver, he set up in business on his own. He also tried running the Cross Keys Inn for a while, but returned to being a merchant. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. In 1752 (at a fairly advanced age) he married Catherine (or ‘Katharine’), daughter of Robert Oliver and Bessie Blackhall; she was a niece of the William Oliver he worked with (although cousin seems like the correct generation), as well as sister of the wife of Bailie Walter Purdom; she died in 1788, aged 56. Their children included: Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.1753), who married draper George Turnbull; Margaret ‘Peggy’, who died in infancy; John (b.1756), died young; Robert (b.1758), died young; Margaret or ‘Peggy’ (b.1759), who married William Beck; Agnes (b.1761), who married currier John Straiton; Ann (b.1763), who married Cornet James Oliver; William (1764–1832), manufacturer in Hawick; John (1767), also died young; Walter (b.1770), cabinet-maker in Hawick; and Katherine (1773–81). He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Gray in 1758. He was recorded as a merchant in 1758 when the baptismal witnesses were Robert Oliver (perhaps his father-in-law) and merchant William Oliver, and also in 1764 when the witnesses were Robert Oliver and Walter Purdom (his wife’s brother-in-law). He died at the ‘Old Cross Keys’ and is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. A wooden folding yardstick of his (from around 1734) is in the Museum. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1766. His children included Isobel (b.1761) and Ann (b.1766). Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Howcleuch in 1788 and Commonside in 1799. He married Jane Scott in Robertson in 1781 and their children included: Euphan (b.1784); Thomas (b.1788); Jane (b.1792); and Robert (b.1799). Walter (d.bef. 1809) resident of Newmill. His wife Isabel Renwick died in 1809. He may be the Walter who (along with John Martin) witnessed a baptism for William Elliot (or Gedstains) in 1777. Walter ‘Wat the Buck’ (18th/19th C.) not be confused with his namesake ‘the Laird’. He was a baker in Hawick, based at 10 Howeagate. He was among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was listed as a Howeagate baker in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a Bailie in Hawick, and was said by the Tories to have been engaged in intimidating Tory voters before the 1837 election. On the other side, he was said to have ensured that when the military were called out in 1835 (after all the trouble had quietened down in Hawick) they were received warmly by the townspeople, rather than reinstigating the riot. He married Margaret Donald, in Selkirk in 1772; she was daughter of Alexander Donald and Agnes Hardie. Their children included: Agnes (b.1775); Janet (b.1777); Margaret (b.1780), who married William Rathie; Jane (b.1782); Isobel (b.1784); Janet (b.1787); Alexander (b.1789); Walter (b.1794), who carried on the baker’s business; and Barbara (d.1794). He was probably still alive for his granddaughter’s baptism in 1812. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Priesthaugh. He is recorded in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. He may have been related to John, who was a shepherd at Skelfhill. He may be the Walter, resident of Cavers Parish, who married Nelly Scott in 1788. Walter ‘Wat the Laird’ (18th/19th C.) distinguished from ‘the Buck’ by his nickname. The ‘Laird’ suggests he farmed some fields, perhaps up the Loan or the Wellogate. Walter (18th/19th C.) Lieutenant in the Hawick Military Association (volunteers) around 1800. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Irvine in 1780 and their children included: Isabel (b.1782); Thomas (b.1785), probably the skinner; Margaret (b.1787); and Ann (b.1789), who married Alexander Laing. Walter ‘Watty’ (1770–1847) cabinet-maker of the High Street, 2nd son of ‘Haunless Wat’ and Catherine Oliver. His joiner’s and cabinet-maker’s business was down the close at 9 High Street. He inherited this property from his father, and it included land that went all the way down to the river, with stables at the foot. He lived above the property at the front, which was rented to a grocer; his parlour windows faced the street above the shop. This property is shown belonging to him on Wood’s 1824 map of Hawick. It was said that as a joiner he was known for some local specialties, including a kind of nut-cracker that he made with a circular ring of wood and wooden screw. He was also on the Town Council, and served as Master of Works. He was a keen fisherman, and told stories of sailing his ‘trows’ from Hawick to Berwick when the river was full. He is probably the Walter ‘wright in Hawick’ who was listed as a second cousin in the 1808 will of William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’. He is probably the wright who helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He is recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a joiner on the High Street and in 1837 as a joiner and undertaker. In the 1834 electoral roll Walter senior and Walter junior (both cabinet-makers) are mentioned, and they are still on the High Street (at about No. 9) on the 1841 census. He married Agnes Fletcher, who died in 1802, aged 27. They had 2 sons: Walter (b.1798); and Robert (b.1801), who died in infancy. The witnesses in 1798 were merchants William Wilson and George Turnbull. In older life he was known as ‘Uncle Wattie’. A portrait of him exists. The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. Bailie Walter (d.1840) tanner in Hawick. He was brother of John and son of John and Margaret Elliot. Both brothers were tanners and later candlemakers. He is easy to confuse with his nephew Walter, who was a skinner in Hawick. He is probably the Walter who was a Bailie in the 1790s and early 1800s and who was recorded as eldest Bailie in 1808. Walter (1794–1849) son of baker Walter and Margaret Donald. He was Cornet in 1814. He carried on his father’s baker’s business at 10 Howegate and was listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1830s he was among a list of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. He is listed as a baker in Hawick among the heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. He later became Burgh Treasurer. He married Isabella Richardson, daughter of James Richardson, Cornet in 1777, and Jane Scott from Milsington; she carried on the business after his death. Their children included: Jane (b.1822), who married baker George Armstrong; Walter (b.1824), the eldest son, who helped his mother with the baker’s; Margaret D. (b.1827); Isabella (b.1829); James Donaldson (b.1831), later worked in the family business; John (b.1833); Elizabeth (b.1836); Agnes, who married Thomas Dryden; and Jessie (d.1891), who married John Riddle Thompson. He died in the cholera epidemic, his death being listed along with 9 others on the same day. A portrait of him exists. Walter of Orchard (1796–1890) eldest son of William and Elizabeth Richardson, he was a manufacturer in Hawick. It is said that when the partnership between his father and William Watson dissolved in 1819 he began to travel on horseback, with commercial samples in his saddlebags, spending up to 6 weeks on the road. He may be the ‘Walter Wilson, hosier’ who is recorded on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). In 1841 he is recorded living at 13 High Street. He took over part of the family manufacturing business, forming Walter Wilson & Sons of Teviot Mills (Weensland) and Allars Crescent in 1851. He manufactured both hosiery and tweeds. Along with several other local manufacturers and Mr. Croall of Edinburgh he organised a cheaper (than the mail coach) stage-coach between Hawick and Edinburgh 1823–46. He was Secretary of the Board of Health set up to deal with the 1832 cholera outbreak. It was said that once William Grieve of Brunxholme Park challenged him to a fight, and as a Quaker he put his hands in his pockets and stated ‘That’s what I do when anyone asks me to fight’. He was leader of the group in the 1850s pushing for the Hawick-Carlisle railway to go via Liddesdale rather than Langholm. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire; he may have been the first J.P. from Hawick. He was living at Orchard from at least the 1860s. He was recorded there in 1861, listed as a Justice of the Peace and farmer of 270 acres, as well as a manufacturer in Wulson Wulson (b.1811) son of Thomas and brother of John Wältler. An early photograph of him exists.

He was very keen on fishing, and left his business largely to be run by John Rae, while he went on angling excursions. He was also said to be a great storyteller. An early photograph of him exists.

Walter (19th C.) hawker in Hawick. He was deceased in 1879 when his representatives were rebuilding his house at the top of the north side of the Howegate. Walter (1823–1903) son of Walter, with his mother being Wilhelmina Bell (from Riddings). His half-sister was Jessie, wife of George Hobkirk of Slitrig Villa. He lived with his father and grandfather, cabinet-makers at 9 High Street, but then became an apprentice baker in Selkirk. He spent about 5 years as a baker in London, returned to Selkirk in 1849 and then in 1852 emigrated to Australia, following the gold rush. He married Janet Brydon (who was from the Ettrick valley) and they had children Robert, Walter and William. Walter (b.1824) son of Walter and Isabella Richardson. After his father’s death, he helped his mother run the family bakery’s business on the Howegate. He was listed as baker in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was still at 10 Howegate, running the business with his mother and brother James, and sisters Elizabeth and Agnes also living there. Walter Francis (1875–1957) son of Francis Elliot and Agnes Laing. Like his forebears, he was a manufacturer in Hawick. He was married twice, firstly to Ann Brown Alexander and secondly to Delia Frances Tighe. He had a son Walter Elliot Francis (1907–59). Walter Stuart (1850–1926) younger son of Walter of Orchard, he was born at Orchard. He trained as an engineer and in the 1880s formed a partnership with Alexander Simpson. The firm specialised in tunnelling work for the North British Railway; 2 large brick round tunnels they designed, once gateways to tunnels across the Clyde, can still be seen in Glasgow. In 1880 he married Janet Cairns and they had a son, Arthur Hamilton (b.1881). He retired in 1922, moving to Lancashire, where he died. Walter Fiddes (1861–1925) son of John Fiddes and Margaret Bell Underwood. He abandoned the tweed manufacturing trade and studied music in Italy. He was a organist at St. John’s 1880–91 and then organist at Wilton Kirk (where his brother-in-law, Rev. John Rudge Wilson, was minister).
He was also a singing teacher, and great organiser of musical performances in Hawick at the end of the 19th century, including conducting the Sacred Harmonic Society, which mounted ambitious choral performances in the Exchange Hall. He was also founder of the Hawick Amateur Opera Company in 1897. He and his wife he gave a processional cross to St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1641 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Gillespie. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Riddell and their children included an unnamed son (b.1679), Margaret (b.1681), Jane (b.1683) and Agnes (b.1687). He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Thomson and Agnes Cook in 1680 and for Walter Lorraine and Bessie Riddell in 1682. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Mabonlaw, among the poor of Wilton Parish, in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) said to have been son of an army sergeant in the time of Queen Anne, and brother of James. He is one of the first known of an old Hawick family. Probably the same William, servitor to Alexander Thomson of Whitchesters was admonished for not observing the Sabbath in 1712. It also seems likely he was the tenant in Hawick Shiel who was found in 1717 to have ploughed a distance of 5 or 6 yards into the Common, east of the corner marker near Langflat. William ‘Whusky Wullie’ (1713–91) born in Kirkton, eldest son of carrier James. He was admitted a Burgess of Hawick in 1736 and worked as a ‘messenger and writer’. He also acted as Burgh Procurator Fiscal. He was recorded as ‘messenger’ in 1742. He was a ‘writer’ when he paid tax on 11 windows in Hawick in 1748. He is also a writer when he (along with his son James) witnessed a baptism for his son Peter in 1779. He is probably the ‘Mr William Wilson, there’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He married Mary Hardie (1717–96), who was related to Bailie John Hardie; the marriage took place in Edinburgh in 1737. Their children were: Isobel (b.1743), who married wright John Telfer of Jedburgh and emigrated to America; Agnes (b.1745), who married writer James Wintonope; James (1748–1821), clockmaker and Cornet; and Peter (1750–1836), shoemaker; as well as Patrick, Agnes, William and John, who died in infancy. The witnesses in 1743 were wright Walter Scott and writer James Weir and in 1745 were John Telfer and shoemaker John Scott. He himself witnessed baptism for carrier George in 1766 and 1767, and another for exciseman Robert Pringle in 1778. He died in Hawick in 1791, when he is recorded as a ‘writer’, son of James ‘the old Baron’. William (18th/19th C.) son of James, he was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers George and James. His premises were at the East End. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. All 3 brothers were listed as carriers on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; at that time he had 5 work horses. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for saddler Thomas Huggan in 1797. He had 3 sons, James, William and Robert, and a daughter, who became Mrs. A. Mair (and whose daughter was Mrs. Drummond). His wife may be the Ann Murray (marriage 1777), spouse of carrier William recorded in the Hawick Parish records in 1805 (but if so, he was already deceased). Either he or his son is probably the carrier William living with the Mair family on the Mill Path in 1841. William (18th C.) recorded at Addestonelee on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (1764–1832) eldest son of Walter and Catherine Oliver, he was a Hawick-born hosiery manufacturer, and well-known Quaker in the Town. He was said to have been a sickly child, but grew to be healthy (although afflicted with asthma, for which it is said he sought relief in trips to Glasgow in later life). After seeing the stocking-frames introduced to Hawick by Bailie Hardie, at the age of 24 he went to Glasgow, where he worked as a journeyman to make enough money to buy a stocking-frame, which he brought back to Hawick. Thus in 1788 he set up in the hosiery business on his own, with the frame originally in a room of his father’s house on the High Street at 9 or 11 High Street. He was also Cornet in 1786 and Town Treasurer for many years. He is probably the merchant William who witnessed baptisms in 1791 and 1795 for his sisters Betty and Agnes. He was recorded as ‘Hosier’ in 1796, when he witnessed a baptism for James Richardson. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Walter (likely his brother) in 1798. In 1797 (by which time he probably had 4 frames) he acquired a lease of part of the old Inkle Company’s property, off what would be Commercial Road, where he started carding and spinning. He met William Watson on sales trips to Glasgow and in 1804 formed the partnership Wilson & Watson, then building Dangerfield Mills. In 1819 he split with Watson to form William Wilson & Sons, Roughheugh (Langlands) Mill, and the family name passed to several subsequent hosiery firms through his sons, including George, who became Hawick’s first Provost. About 1800 he was one of the local men contributing to support the war against France. In 1825 he is recorded as a hosiery manufacturer, yarn spinner and blanket maker on the High Street. He lived in a house on the south side of Buccleuch Street (about No. 19), shown on Wood’s 1824 map. He may also be the William whose property on the left side of Drumlanrig Square and near Rosalen Brae is marked on the same map; additionally he was the William at about 11 High Street (with his brother Walter, adjacent at No. 9). He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was active in the Edinburgh Meeting of the Society of Friends and many of his family were educated at Quaker schools. In 1794 he married Elizabeth (b.1772), daughter of William Richardson, who built the Whiskyhouse Mill; she died in 1815, following the birth of their last child. The couple moved into 11 High Street, where Mrs. Wilson ran a shop in the front, and built out at the back was the stock- ing shop. They had a family of 15, including: Isabella (b.1794), who died young; Walter of Orchard (b.1796); Katherine (1798–1873), who married John Glenny; William (b.1799), who died in infancy; Isabella (1800–76), who married Andrew Galloway Hunter, Glasgow manufacturer, and was mother of Sir William Wilson Hunter, historian and Indian scholar; William (b.1801), hat manufacturer; Elizabeth (1802–72), who married cattle-breeder John Cruickshank; Margaret (1803–63), who married James Gibb from Edinburgh, who went to India to be secretary to James Wilson, but arrived on the day of his funeral, and was father of a Liberal M.P., also James Gibb; James (1805–60), founder of ‘the Economist’; John (1806–86), who married Margaret Scott, and lived at Ladylaw; Ann (1808–77), who married Anthony Cruickshank, brother of her brother-in-law; Agnes (1809–13); Deborah (1810–12); Jane (1812–13); and George (1815–98), Hawick’s first Provost. The witnesses in 1794 were merchant George Turnbull and currier John Straiton (both married to his sisters). He died from cholera when attending the annual Quakers’ Society meeting in London with his daughter Katherine. He is buried in Peckham. His business day-book from about 1790 is preserved in the Museum, which also has a portrait of him (by an unknown artist). William (1779–1845) eldest son of shoemaker Peter, he was a shoemaker himself. He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was listed as a shoemaker and leather cutter on the Howegate. On the 1841 census he is recorded at 2 Howegate. He served as a Town Councillor. In 1821 he married Judith Grant, housekeeper at Wilton Lodge, daughter of John Grant, who was overseer to George Cumming of Relugas, near Forres. Their children included: Patrick Hardie (1821–44); John Grant (1823–56); Harriet (b.1826); Joan (1827–1910); Agnes (1829–1905); William Henry Brougham (1831–56), sugar planter; James Anderson (b.1830), engineer in the Royal Navy; George Elliot (1833–75) of the City of Glasgow Bank; James; Beatrice; and Alexander. William (1801–57) second son of manufacturer William. He went to London with his brother James and sister Katherine around 1824, as a hat manufacturer, and became a successful businessman there. He is listed as ‘hat manufacturer, London’ among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He lived on Coburg Road in Peckham, originally with his brother James, their sisters Margaret and Elizabeth keeping house for them. The firm was called Wilson, Irwin & Wilson, with a hattery on the north side of London Bridge. They started by making beaver hats, but moved into silk when that became the fashion. It is said that he retired at a fairly young age, with a considerable fortune. He was called upon in 1851 to arbitrate in the splitting of the business of William Wilson & Sons between his brothers Walter, John and George. He married Margaret MacDonald and their children were: William (d.1868); Katharine; Helen (d.1857); James (d.1857); Alice (d.1857); Henry, who married a Henderson; John Treader, Isa Elder; George; and Annie. He died, along with 3 of his children (James, Helen and Alice), in a tragic bathing accident at Dunbar. William (1823/4–76) son of William and Isabella Laidlaw. He was a spinner at Lynnwood, like his father, becoming foreman there. He married Agnes Oliver (aunt of Robert, Lyle & Scott’s secretary), who died in 1908, aged 84. Their children were Janet Laidlaw (who married Adam Robson), Joseph (tweed manufacturer), Robert, James, John, William and Margaret, plus Margaret, Isabella and Benjamin, who died young. He is buried in the Wellogate. William (19th C.) mason, recorded at Spittal-on-Rule in 1858. William H. Brougham (b.1831) son of Hawick shoemaker William. He was a sugar planter in Wulson an Airmstrong’s the Wulson Cup

Mauritius. He married Emma Dick and their children Edith and Grace both died unmarried. He is probably the ‘son of Mr. Wilson’s, once shoemaker in Hawick’ who was said to have met 2 sons of Tom Jenkins (Teviothed’s African-born school-teacher), thus proving that Tom did not perish at sea, as most people in Hawick had believed. William (19th C.) rag and waste dealer in Hawick, with premises at 5 Teviot Road. He was associated with both the ‘Open’ and ‘Needed Truth’ sections of the Brethren. In 1866 he married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), daughter of Thomas Robson, blacksmith at Teviothead. His son Andrew (‘Dan’) continued his business for a few years, before emigrating to Australia. William Richardson (1839–96) son of John and grandson of the William, the original manufacturer of the family. He lived at Ladylaw, like his father before him and continued his father’s manufacturing business. He married Jane Macpherson (1839–1924) and their children included: John Graham (1862–1928); Isabella (b.1864), who married Robert Elliot, farmer in Hermitage; Margaret Scott (b.1866); William Richardson (1869–1902), Cornet in 1894; Elizabeth (b.1873); Thomas (b.c.1876); and perhaps James (b.c.1885). William Elliot (1868–1950) son of George Elliot and grandson of Hawick shoemaker William. He became a chemist and was associated with Hawick Archaeological Society. He was a friend of James Sinton, who was one of those who helped him compile his Hawick-related bibliography. He donated the painting of John Wilson (in Cornet’s dress) to the Museum. William A. (19th/20th C.) clerk and later cashier at Blenkhorn’s. He was long connected with Allars Kirk. William Richardson (1869–1902) eldest son of William Richardson and Jane Macpherson. He was Cornet of 1894 and descendant of the Cornet of 1786. His Lass was Miss Wilson of Dumfries, his cousin. He lived at Ladylaw, and worked in the hosiery business like his father. However, he emigrated to the U.S.A. and was employed at the Marston Worsted Mills in Maine, where he was a member of the Masons and the Milburn Club. He died of pneumonia at Skowhegan, Maine and was buried at Saugus, Massachusetts (formerly spelled ‘Wilsoun’, ‘Wilsoune’, ‘Wilsone’, ‘Wilsome’, etc.).

Wulson an Airmstrong’s (wul-sin-in-ärm-strongz) n. hosiery firm of Weensland Mills in the mid-19th century. It was a partnership between George Wilson (Provost of Hawick) and Walter Armstrong and was set up in 1851, after George Wilson received the Weensland Mill part of his father’s business of William Wilson & Sons. It focussed on the production of tweed, and was particularly known for its designs of ‘Scotch Tweeds and Mauds’. Armstrong went to live in London, where he represented the business at their warehouse at 69 Aldermanbury. The firm was employing about 400 people in 1871. The firm lasted until the Collie failure of 1875.

Wulson an Elliot’s (wul-sin-in-e-litz) n. hosiery firm and yarn spinners of the early 19th century, with factory in Slitrig Crescent. It was a partnership between Thomas Wilson and William Elliot and lasted between the years 1823 and 1830. Wilson then started on his own, and Elliot’s grew to be the most prominent hosiery firm in the country.

Wulson an Glenny’s (wul-sin-in-gle-neez) n. Wilson & Glenny’s tweed mill at Langlands and Ladylaw. It started in 1876 (following the Collie Disaster) from the former Wilson & Armstrong’s. The partnership was between George Wilson and James Glenny (his nephew), together with Wilson’s sons Charles John and George Murray. The name was originally ‘Wilsoun & Glenny’, but it became ‘Wilson & Glenny Ltd.’ in 1891. The firm became one of the largest tweed manufacturers in the South of Scotland. The families retained control of the company until around WWII. The main factory was decimated by fire in 1959, although rebuilt in 1961. It closed in 1980 and was converted into the Ladylaw Centre. That was later demolished and the site became the Lidl supermarket and car park. Company records exist covering the period 1902–75.

Wulson an Watson’s (wul-sin-in-wawt-sinz) n. hosiery firm of William Wilson & William Watson, established in 1804 in the old Inkle House on what would be Commercial Road. They then constructed Langlands Mill and Dangerfield Mill further along Wilton Dam. It is said that Wilson was the meticulous businessman and Watson the consummate salesman. The firm split in 1819, with the Wilsons taking Langlands Mill and the Watsons taking Dangerfield Mill. This was the beginning of several of the largest manufacturers in Hawick.

Wulson Burn (wul-sin-burn) n. Wilson Burn, stream that emerges from Hellmoor Loch and runs in a roughly southern direction to reach Alemoor Loch.

the Wulson Cup (thu-wul-sin-kup) n. bowling trophy, it was presented to the Town Council in 1925 to be competed for on the bowling green.
Wulton Auld Kirk

Wulton Drive

Wulton Auld Kirk (wul'-in-awld-kirk) n. popular name used in the latter part of the 19th century to refer to the former church of Wilton Parish, after it was replaced in 1861 with a new building across the street. This church stood in the middle of the old churchyard and was built... in 1762, replacing what was probably the pre-Reformation church. It was a square construction, with windows on either side, 2 entrances, the pulpit on the south wall, and a belfry on the west side. Since it was too small for the congregation, an extension was built to the north side in 1801, designed by William Elliot of Kelso. A new gallery was formed at that time, with the expense split between the Duke of Buccleuch, Rev. Dr. Charters, William Oliver and other subscribers; the lower part became a vault for the Charters family. The church was abandoned in 1861 when the new building was ready. At that time there was some remodelling done, including removal of the belfry. The ruins of the church can be seen in an early photograph. The churchyard was largely cleared of tombstones in 1957. David Hill wrote a poem about watching the demolition of the last gable of the church itself – ‘I watched the deliberate Last Destruction o Wultan Yin simmer Setterday afternoon. Wulton was biggit in comely stane Quarried frae native hills – Frei-stane and whun...’ [DH].

Wultonbank see Wulton Bank

Wulton Bank (wul’in-bawngk) n. house on the eastern side of Princes Street, built on the site of the stables of Old Wilton Bank. Also formerly the name used for ‘Old Wilton Bank’ the home of the Watson family, built above their main factory at Dangerfield. It was later the home of David Laing and then Robert Innes (sometimes written as one word).

Wulton Barony see Barony o Wulton

Wulton Boolin Club (wul’in-bó-lin-klob) n. organisation established in 1895, with green and clubhouse at 6 West Stewart Place. The first President was Rev. J.R. Wilson, with Provost Barrie as Vice-President.

Wulton Burn (wul’in-bawrn) n. stream that joins the Teviot at the far end of the Park, near Overhall. It is said that some windings in this stream were used as locations for secret sermons by Covenanter preachers around the 1660s and 70s. There was formerly a small mill lade going past Netherhall farm (not to be confused with the Wilton Dean or Cala Burn).

Wultonburn (wul’in-bawrn) n. farm on the Wilton Burn past Overhall, now rented out as holiday cottages and having a Cashmere shop. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. In 1549 the tenant was Philip Scott, and other residents included Matthew Hunter, George Scott and William Duncan. In 1569 the superiority of the lands (along with Wilton Green and Overhall) was inherited by Grizel Borthwick from her father Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1586 the lands are among those given in ‘liferent’ to Margaret Ker as part of the marriage contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1603 they were inherited by Walter Cairncross from his uncle Walter, brother of Robert of Colmslie. The land appears to have been part of the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1643. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely James Scott, Mary Scott, John Scott, Robert Scott, Margaret Scott, Bessie Rashie, James Scott, Philip Scott, Marion Miller, Robert Scott, Mary Scott, Walter Scott, Helen Scott, Robert Scott, Isobel Thomson, Robert Scott, Robert Scott and Isobel Scott. It was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century and the Turnbulls in the 19th. It was among the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch listed in 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1690 it was rented by James Riddell, James Hogg, John Scott and John Hunter. In 1694 it was rented to Robert Scott, Bessie Scott, John Scott and Robert Langlands. In 1694 there were 8 households listed there. John Scott was recorded there in 1696. In 1696 the widow of Thomas Mitchelson joined the farmers, and James Irving in 1698. William Scott was also there in 1698 and James Telfer and Janet Scott in 1705. James Irving was still there in 1708. William Scott and James Irvine were tenants there in 1711. Walter Scott was living there in at least 1713-27, another Walter Scott 1721-24 and William Scott in 1735. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it extended to 361 acres and was bounded by Whitehaugh, Brieryhill, Easter Highchesters, Todshaw, Whitfield and Mervinslaw; farmhouses are shown on both side of the Wilton Burn. James Riddell was there in 1718, James Scott in 1724 and Andrew Irvine in 1747. Adam Easton and James Robson were there in 1770, William Cook in 1772, Thomas Cairns in 1780 and William Miller in 1786-89. William Willison and William Amos were farmers there in 1797. Before 1826 the main road to the Borthwick passed by here. There is an enclosure marked in the corner of a field on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.
Wulton Cemetery
Wulton Camp

Wulton Epps (wul'-in-burn-eps) n. former small holding, now the name of a field on Wultonburn farm. It is ‘Wiltonburn Epps’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with John Gray recorded as the farmer there.

Wulton Burnfit (wul'-in-burn-fi') n. former name for a steading in Wilton Parish, probably at the foot of the Wulton Burn. It is recorded as ‘W: burnfoot’ in 1727, when William Scott was there.

Wultonburn Hill (wul'-in-burn-hil) n. hill north of Wultonburn farm, height 282 m, with a white concrete triangulation point on top. A spur on the eastern side contains the remains of a homestead, approximately 45 m by 30 m, with probably 3 hut circles identifiable, as well as a ditch outside the structure – ‘And now life’s golden Sun gone doon Ahint Wulton Burn Hill Oo’re a’ fair prood That oo hev kent The man that oo ca’ Bill’ [IWL].

Wulton Camp (wul'-in-kwamp) n. army camp, at Howdenbank, where the Police and Fire Stations were later built. It was used during WWII for British troops, and also used for holding prisoners of war. There were around 200 German prisoners there in 1946. Aerial photographs show at least 44 Nissen huts. It may also have been known as Wilton Hill Camp.

Wulton Cemetery (wul'-in-see-mi'-ree) n. burial place of a large fraction of local residents, having two separate locations over the centuries. The Old Cemetery was begun with the construction of Wulton Old Church in 1762 and essentially closed along with the church in 1861. There must have been an earlier churchyard on more or less the same site, since there was a church there for many hundreds of years. The old cemetery was neglected for many years, with many headstones being replaced in 1957, the railings and wall being removed in 1961 and all but a few notable stones being removed to make way for public pathways and grassy areas. The new Wulton Cemetery lies between Wulton Hill and Burnfoot, and is one of the town’s two main cemeteries. It was opened in 1864 when the former churchyard had run out of space. It contains 17 graves maintained by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. By 2011 it contained no new burial plots.

Wulton Common (wul'-in-ko-min) n. the Common attached to the Parish of Wilton. It was divided in the period 1764–66, before which it was annually ‘stented’ at Stintyknowe. ‘State of the Process of Division of the Commonty of Wilton’ being Robert Langlands of that Ilk and others against Henry Duke of Buccleuch and others, was published in 1764, and contains a map showing owners’ names and acreages. The land was divided among the local landowners, including the minister (who received about 16 acres). The National Archives contains several related documents.

Wulton Cottage (wul'-in-ko'-eaj) n. small house off the south side of Langlands Road in the mid-19th century. It was home of Margaret Turnbull (nee Dalgleish) who probably ran it as the ‘Image Garden’ school around the 1840s (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Wulton Crescent (wul'-in-kre-sin') n. street named in 1864, incorporating Langlands Place in 1865 and Wulton Terrace and Hopepark in 1869. The house at the top was built using stone from the original Wilton Manse, around the 1840s. The east side was demolished in 1971/72 along with Dickson Street. New houses were then built at the south end in 1973, closing it to traffic.

Wulton Crescent Lane (wul'-in-kre-sin'-län) n. lane between Wulton Crescent and Dickson Street, described as ‘Wester Kirkstyle of Wilton’ in a 1726 charter and later as ‘Wilton Kirkstyle’. It disappeared with the reconstruction of the area in 1971–73.

Wulton Dam (wul'-in-dawm) n. Wilton Dam, mill lade beginning at the Cauld, running parallel to the Teviot behind Victoria Road, turning at roughly right angles (along the side of Mac fashion’s skinworks) and continuing alongside Commercial Road. It was also sometimes referred to as the Roughheugh Dam. The lade existed from at least the 18th century, but probably existed in a primitive state from much earlier, and was much expanded later. From its source down to the Mill the land lay within the boundaries of the Burgh of Hawick, and so in the 18th century it was ceremoniously possessed during the Common Riding, with stones and earth symbolically thrown into it. It was developed by the Wulton Dam Company in the early 19th century to provide water power for the factories of Wilton, specifically Ladylaw, Dangerfield and Wilton Mills. In 1815 it is recorded that the Hawick Council earne money from the rent of two wooden bridges over the dam. An extension was built from Wilton Mills through Wilton Glebe lands to come out at Mansfield in 1827–29. A flood carried some of the lower part away in 1835–36 and it was further extended in 1837, with a new outlet. Yet another outlet was built near the North Bridge in 1876, but never used. It was largely filled in after the Wilson & Glenny’s fire of 1959, with parts behind Victoria Road disappearing in the 1970s, and only a small section still visible behind Wilton Mills.

Wulton Dean (wul’-in-deen) n. Wilton Dean, an area to the west of Hawick, on the higher ground behind the Park, constituting a separate community in Wilton. It was mentioned as early as the 15th century, and was formerly part of the Langlands estate, being originally known as ‘Langlands Dean’, and more familiarly as ‘the Dean’. The name became officially ‘Wilton Dean’ in 1861. The centre of the village is around the Cala (sometimes Dean) Burn. Here was the site of the only trade that developed there, stocking-making in the Dean Spinning Mill, which thrived in the 19th century. Because of this factory the population was as high as 250 in 1850. However, the factory did not last into the 20th century, and the old mill pond was drained to form a drying green and play area by the stream. The village was once illuminated by gas lamps, with a lamp-lighter going round each evening and morning. There was also once someone appointed to wake up the villagers in the mornings. It has been suggested that the novel ‘The Cottagers of Glenburnie’ by Elizabeth Hamilton is based on the Dean, and written when she visited James Anderson in Wilton Lodge in 1808. The school closed in 1937, when the number of pupils enrolled had fallen to an unsustainable level. The building was refurbished in 2005 as a village hall. Log books for 1873–1936 are in the Borders Archive.

Wulton Dean Hall (wul’-in-deen-hawl) n. community hall at Wilton Dean. It was refurbished in 2005 with money from several different sources.

Wulton Dean Schuil (wul’-in-deen-skil) n. former school in Wilton Dean, run by the Wilton School Board. It was probably set up in the 1870s as a primary school. Its pupils famously went on strike in 1889 (perhaps inspired by an earlier strike in Gala), marching into town in an unsuccessful attempt to close the Trinity Board School, demanding ‘shorter hours, fewer and easier lessons and better teachers’. The one-day strike made the national press and led to other school strikes throughout Britain. The school closed in 1937, when the number of pupils enrolled had fallen to an unsustainable level. The building was refurbished in 2005 as a village hall. Log books for 1873–1936 are in the Borders Archive.

Wulton Glebe (wul’-in-gleebl) n. previously the name given to the area attached to the manse for Wilton Church, also known as ‘Wilton Mains’ and part of which later became known as Mansfield. Wood’s 1824 map marks as ‘Glebe’ the area between Wilton Mills and the old Manse, but the lands extended much further down Mansfield. It also included an area south of the Teviot, roughly from the Mansfield footbridge towards Salisbury Avenue, where Glebe Mills were erected. The land was originally about 80 acres, and is said to have been given to Wilton Church when the brother of the Laird of Langlands was minister. This could have been John Langlands in the late 16th century, but seems more likely to have been the minister of the same name about a century later. The story is that the Laird gave him the gift so that the extra income would help with his large family. The land passed to subsequent ministers and continued to be used for agricultural purposes until feued in the latter part of the 19th century. Several of the streets built on this land had to pay feu duty to the Church of Scotland for several decades afterwards. A small part (adjacent to Burnfoot Mill) was exchanged in 1748 for part of the Duke of Buccleuch’s ‘Trinity lands’ on the Wilton side.

Wulton Green (wul’-in-green) n. Wilton Green, former lands, probably near Wilton Burn, which are recorded along with in the 16th century. In 1549 they were among lands in the lower Borthwick valley whose residents complained about a raid by a group of Englishmen.
Wulton Grove

and Kers in the previous year; the tenant at that time was Patrick Hunter. In 1569 the superiority of lands (along with Wiltonburn and Overhall) was inherited by Grizel Borthwick from her father Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; they were held for payment of a silver penny at Pentecost. In 1586 the lands are among those promised in ‘liferent’ to Margaret Ker as part of the marriage contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1586 the lands were granted to William Cairncross of Colmslie and his wife Grizel Scott. In 1603 they were inherited by Walter Cairncross from his uncle Walter, brother of Robert of Colmslie. In 1604 they were resigned and granted to Walter Scott of Branhelme. There is a deed relating to them in the Douglas of Cavers papers in 1605. It was still listed among the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663 (it is ‘Wiltoune Greyne’ in 1549, ‘Wiltoun Greine’ in 1569, ‘Woltoun Grene’ in 1586, ‘Wultounrein’ in 1603, ‘Weltoungrein’ in 1653, ‘Woltoungrein’ in 1661 and ‘Waltounmegrein’ and ‘Waltongrein’ in 1663).

Wulton Grove (wul'-in-gröv) n. house built in the early 1800s for William Cathrae, merchant and banker, near the family land at Damside (‘Cathraes’s Haugh’). The land between Victoria Road and Albert Road was originally feuded to John Ormiston in 1764. There was a wooded region north and west of Wilton Grove, hence the name. The house was occupied by Peter Laidlaw in the mid-19th century. There was also a small stocking shop there, run by Laidlaw. When he moved to Jedburgh it was taken over by Robert Murray, then a Mr. Routledge, and eventually Peter Scott, being the antecedent of Pesco’s.

Wultonhaa (wul'-in-haw) n. former name sometimes used for the main house in Langlands, seat of the Baron of Wilton. It is unclear what farm was meant by the same name on 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when Thomas Darling and Dr. Gavin Turnbull are recorded there (‘Wiltonhaal’ in a charter of 1351/2).

Wultonhill (wul'-in-hiil) n. placename used for the location of James Langlands of that Ilk in 1574, when he was listed as superior of the lands of Borthaugh. The phrase ‘de Wiltounhill’ may simply be an error for the Barony of Wilton.

Wulton Hill (wul'-in-hiil) n. street being the continuation of Dovemount Place, running up and over the hill towards the Burnfoot junction. It was named in 1871, previously being called Stell Brae or ‘Stellhooise Brae’. It contains several large villas on the east side. The name is more generally applied to the high ground roughly between the Leisure Centre and the Police Station.

Wulton Hill Terrace (wul'-in-hil-te-ris) n. street above Wilton Hill, built in 1879, originally called ‘Hill Terrace’ and renamed in 1882.

Wulton Home (wul'-in-hööm) n. former children’s home located roughly where Melrose Place is today, in the former Wilton Manse building. The house was demolished before the area was developed in the 1960s.

Wultonian (wul-, wil-tö-nee-in) n., arch. a resident of Wilton, particularly before the town became part of Hawick in 1861 – ‘…and it was held incompetent for a Wiltonian to act as Cornet at the Common Riding’ [RM], ‘Viv Sharp was a Hawick man, he was a Wultonian and proud o’d’ [IWL].

Wulton Kirk (wul'-in-kirk) n. Wilton Church, the main church serving the Parish of Wilton, the present building dating from 1859. It was a Rectory from early times, associated with Glasgow Diocese (with the second highest value, after Hawick, in the Deaconry of Teviotdale in 1275). In about 1225 John of Wilton settled a dispute with the Bishop of Glasgow in which he granted 5 merks to the mother church, payable annually at the fairs of St. James of Roxburgh. The earliest clergyman that we have any record of is ‘Robert de Dene’ in 1296, although the first structure was probably built even earlier. The Old Church was built in 1762 in the middle of Wilton Old Churchyard, to the south of Princes Street. Earlier churches stood on the same site. There was an investigation into the state of the Kirk and Parish in 1627 and ‘stents’ for kirk repairs in 1659 and in 1673/4. There is a record of the church being neglected during the vacancy in the ministry in 1694, and including mention of a ‘quire’ (suggesting it may have been the pre-Reformation chapel). A corner-stone from that building is all that survives. This church also had a loft of Scott of Highchester, transferred to Roberton after 1690 (but the sittings there were still disputed in the early years of the 18th century). The roof was in a sorry state by 1761 and the building was replaced in 1762, along with a new schoolhouse. This church was a plain square building, with the pulpit on the south wall, a large window on either side, two entries on the same side, and a belfry on the west gable. This building was enlarged to the north in 1801, repaired in 1829 and closed in 1861 when it was replaced by the new church across the road. The building was for a while used as a mission hall, but later demolished. Photographs of the old church exist. The new building, started in 1859, was designed by John Thomas Emmett of London (after winning a competition), and built by George Tait, builders. It is in a Gothic revival style that went against the trend for Presbyterian churches of its time. Interior columns are in Caen stone (common in English churches, but unusual in Scotland), with some Bath stone arches and some exterior stone from Denholmhill. Construction was completed by 1862. However, it was extensively altered in 1907/8 to plans by J.P. Allison. The galleries were removed and a chancel and transepts added, with Caen stone and some Iona marble used in the interiors. The adjacent extensive church halls were built in 1897, also with J.P. Allison as architect, this time in a red brick Arts & Crafts style. War Memorial windows by Lilian J. Pocock were added in 1924. The building to the north, with its red brick spiralling Tudor chimneys and cupola-style bell tower, was designed as the Sunday School. The tower, was designed as the Sunday School. The Kirk Session records exist from 1694. The oldest existing communion token is from 1763; it is lead and square with the monogrammed letters `W.K'. Other tokens exist from 1861, oval in shape and made of mixed metal. The congregation was linked with Burnfoot and Teviothead in 2004. Famous ministers include William Crawford and Samuel Charters. The parish extends over 300 years. Unfortunately all the early charters relating to the property have been lost. It passed to Thomas Elliot in 1783, Wulton Lodge Academy

then to Lord Napier in 1790. James Anderson purchased it in 1805, and had the Avenue created around 1810. His daughter married David Pringle, and it was the Pringle family home until the Burgh purchased its 107 acres in 1889 for £14,000. The boundaries of the estate were first riddlen on the Saturday of the Common Riding in 1890 (this followed by refreshments and some speeches and singing outside the Lodge were the only official marking of the new public purchase of the estate). It was used as a private school from about 1892–98, then remained unoccupied for a few years while the Council contemplated many suggestions for its use. Finally it was converted into the town’s Museum in 1910, when the Archaeological Society’s extensive collection was moved there. A 25 foot captured German field gun was positioned there in 1920, but moved in WWII. A stone ball found on the grounds is now in the Museum. The nearby grounds contains several items of interest: the Wallace Thorn memorial; an old well; stonework from the Buccleuch Memorial; the Burgh coat-of-arms from the Corn Exchange; a carved stone verse from Linden Park Memorial; the waterfall; the Guthrie Memorial; etc. – ‘Aa’ll sing o’ bonnie Wilton Lodge And o’ the Wallace Thorn’ [GD].

Wulton Lodge Academy (wul’-in-loj-awka-du-mee) n. private school, run by Rev. and Mrs. B. Brodie, which moved to Wilton Lodge in 1892, changing its name from the West End Academy. It taught both sexes as day pupils and boarders, including some pupils from abroad. There were several assistant teachers, some of whom were foreign. The school closed in 1898, and whether it moved to another location is uncertain.

Wulton Lodge Gate Lodge (wul’-in-loj-ga’-loj, -luj-, -luj) n. gate lodge house for Wilton Lodge, at the entrance to the Avenue and the foot of Roadhead. It was built in the mid-19th century, with a west extension added in the early 20th century.

Wulton Lodge Park (wul’-in-loj-pawrk) n. proper name for the Park.

Wulton Lodge Stables (wul’-in-loj-stä-bulz) n. former building behind (i.e. to the north of) the Museum, part of the estate of Wilton Lodge. It was situated at the top of the access road, essentially on the site where the Park-keeper’s house was later built. Probably built in the 19th century, the building is already marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. It had an unusual design, consisting of 3 parts, with the central section having an ‘onion-shaped’ roof. It was used by a riding school, as stabling for the Mosstroopers’ Club and as finally as Parks Department storage. As well as stables, the building contained a house, which was last occupied in 1938, by the Cranston family. The entire construction was demolished in the 1950s. It can be seen in the background of several photographs of Wilton Lodge, but there are and no good images of the house itself. It was painted from memory by Walter Cranston and was the inspiration for an exhibition by local artist Andrew Cranston in 2013.

Wulton Lodge Witterfaa (wul’-in-loj-wi’-ur-faw) n. name sometimes used for the picturesque waterfall on the Cala Burn behind Wilton Lodge, also referred to by local residents as just ‘the Witterfaa’. It was partly created by quarrying activity (and hence is artificial), with some of the stone being used for the rebuilding of the Lodge itself.

Wulton Lodge (wul’-in-huj) n. alternative name for Wulton Lodge – ‘It’s a neice bit, Wultan Lodge’ [ECS], ‘O’we a pairk in Wultan Lodge That c’een Fairyland micht grudge’ [TK].

Wulton Mains (wul’-in-mânu) n. former name for the lands attached to the Manse of Wilton Church, also known as Wultan Glebe and sometimes ‘the Mains of Wilton’.

Wulton Manse (wul’-in-mâns) n. former Manse of Wilton Church, at 6 and 7 Mansfield Square. The original building was on the site of the Railway Station, specifically where the railway tank was later built, adjacent to the area known as ‘the Wilderness’, and with a small stream passing nearby. It was built around the 1780s, but probably replaced an earlier building on the same site; tax was paid on 18 windows in this earlier building in 1748. When it was demolished some of the stone was used to build the upper house in Wilton Crescent (nearest to Mayfield Lodge). The new manse was erected by the railway company in 1849 on ‘the Haugh’, i.e. the flatter land nearer the river. For several decades water was piped to it from the ‘Cadger’s Well’. Before the council bought the surrounding land in the 1870s it was the only house in the area. The house survives and has been split into flats. It is a grade C listed building. When this land was sold a new Manse was built at Wilton Hill in 1880, standing near where Melrose Court is now. This has long since been demolished. The house at Fenwick Park known as ‘The Elms’ was used as the Wilton Church Manse from 1945–89. The most recent Manse is on Wilton Hill Terrace.
Wulton Mill

Wulton Mill (wul-’in-mil*) n. flour mill in Wilton, marked on Wood’s 1824 map on the east side of the foot of Wilton Path, and just to the south-west of Roughheugh Mill. It should not be confused with ‘Wulton Mills’. It may also have been known as Roughheugh Mill at times.

Wulton Mill Cauld (wul-’in-mil-kawld*) n. name sometimes used for the weir at the bottom of Dovecote Street, feeding water to the mill lade that came out at Mansfield.

Wulton Mills (wul-’in-milz*) n. Dickson & Laings main mill in the middle of Commercial Road (Nos. 31 and 32), with its distinctive clock tower, which is listed. The buildings were began in 1810–15, with the original mill being 46 feet long and 36 feet wide. The first spinning jennies in Hawick driven by water were introduced here, as well as the first power-looms in 1830. A major new mill lade constructed in 1827–28. The mill was powered by 2 water wheels, supplemented by a steam engine in 1831. The mill can be seen on a sketch made around 1830. The factory was mostly destroyed by a fire in 1867, but rebuilt in 1869, and extensively altered over the years. In 1871 the workforce was estimated at 600 and the mill made 400,000 pounds of goods annually. The clock tower was constructed about 1877. The firm struggled, and by 1908 had closed, with the buildings put to other uses. Part was sold to the Scottish Tweed & Woollen Company, and other parts used by Mactaggart Bros., as a joiner’s yard, garage etc. There were local authority workshops and offices there, the buildings being upgraded in 1979–83. However, in more recent years the mill has been empty. Behind the main building can be seen part of the mill lade, which once marked the boundary of the Common Haugh, as well as a pit for the former mill wheel. It is a grade B listed building, but nevertheless part was demolished in 2014.

Wulton Pairish (wul-’in-pa-reesh, -paw-) n. Wilton Parish, which has always been separate from Hawick Parish, generally lying to the north side of the Teviot. Around the time of the Reformation the boundary on the east was the Howden Burn, while on the west it stretched almost to the head of the Borthwick valley, with a detached part of Hassendean Parish splitting it in two between the Roberton and Harden Burns. The southern boundary of the Parish was essentially the Borthwick and Teviot, with the Ale bounding it to the north. For centuries the western part of the parish was served by a small church at Kirk Borthwick. The unsatisfactory state of affairs resulting in the suggestion in 1650 of moving the main Kirk to the Borthwick. In 1678 the rents of the parish were valued at £5672 in Roxburghshire, with an additional £960 in Selkirkshire. In 1690 the parish was extended to the east to include some of the former Hassendean Parish, while it lost its western part to the newly formed Roberton Parish. In more recent times it has been about 5 miles long, running south-west to north-east, about 17½ square miles, and having borders with Ashkirk, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Cavers, Hawick and Roberton Parishes. The boundary with Hawick has always been peculiar, with the area towards the Sandbed for a long time being in Wilton, and the Common Haugh etc. being in Hawick. In 1891 a detached part of Hawick Parish (where Albert Mills were built) was transferred to Wilton Parish, while a 1 acre part of Wilton, detached by the Common Haugh, was transferred to Hawick Parish. Whether the Parish once had a single owner is unknown, but since at least the early 13th century the west and east half-Baronies had separate owners. The Langlands family long held the eastern part, and the Wardlaw family held the western part in the 14th and 15th centuries. The Scotts of Buccleuch were major landowners for centuries, and eventually became Barons. The Chisholmes, and other Scotts are also prominent in Parish history. The Bothwells also held half the Barony from 1494 for about a century. For a long time the patronage of the church (i.e. right to choose the minister) alternated between Langlands and the holders of the other half of the barony; this right was confirmed to Bothwell in 1585, but was held by Scott of Buccleuch by the early 17th century. Kirk Borthwick was a chapel that served the western outlying portion of the Parish from at least the early 1300s until the 1650s. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £5400 in Roxburghshire and £700 in Selkirkshire. In 1678 it was valued at £5672. In more modern times, for ecclesiastical purposes, part of the Parish was attached to St. Margaret’s quoad sacra church in 1896, another part to Wilton South in 1929 and a further part to Burnfoot in 1951. The ecclesiastical boundaries of Wilton Parish were set at a Presbytery meeting in 1930. The Parish had small schools at Clarilaw, the Dean and Stouslie. Wilton Path has long been the main thoroughfare through the heavily inhabited part of the Parish, as well as part of the road from Hawick to Edinburgh. Ecclesiastically the Parish was long in the Presbytery of Jedburgh, and synod of Merse and Teviotdale, and formerly in the Diocese of Glasgow from about 1100 (and earlier attached to Durham, and before that Lindisfarne). Heritors minutes books exist from November 1740 and Parochial Board minute books from 1853–95 are in the Borders Archive. The Session records start in 1694 and are fairly complete. However, the register of births is quite irregular (e.g. a gap 1699–1702 and spotty in the 1790s), there are no early death registers, and marriages are only recorded through the proclamation of banns. Minute books of the heritors start in 1723. Note there are also Wilton Parishes in Berwickshire, Norfolk, North Yorkshire, Somerset, Wiltshire, Connecticut and elsewhere.

Wulton Park (wul'-in-park) n. another name for Wilton Lodge Park or the Park.

Wulton Park Road (wul'-in-park-rôd) n. the road behind Wilton Lodge Park, which was only named in 1971 when private bungalows were built on some of the former allotments near the Walled Gardens. There has been more development in the subsequent years.

Wulton Peth (wul'-in-peth) n. Wilton Path, more commonly known as the Peth – ‘Now aw wad compare that, wi’ a shop in Hawick That was in Wulton Peth, at the fit ... ’ [AY].

Wulton Place (wul'-in-plis) n. lost street, named about 1850 and incorporated into Princes Street in 1971. It ran from Dickson Street to the foot of Havelock Street and once contained the Wilton branch shop of the Hawick Co-op, as well as the Railway Hotel. The name only applied to the block on the north side (e.g. on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map), with the block on the south side always known as Princes Street.

Wulton Place North Bar (wul'-in-plis-north-bawr) n. toll-bar situated at Wilton Place, probably another name for the Dovemount Toll (this name recorded in the 1841 census).

Wulton Roadheid (wul'-in-rôd-heed) n. alternative name for Roadheid.

Wulton Roadside (wul'-in-rôd-siôd) n. 18th and 19th century name for what became Princes Street. Also known as just ‘Roadside’.

Wulton Schuil (wul’-in-skil) n. school that has existed in Wilton since about the time of the Reformation. The old primary school was built in 1847–8 at what became No. 36 Princes Street, across from the Old Church. It has an open colonnade in the playground and an enormous external staircase. This was once the Parish School of Wilton, and was considerably enlarged when the new public school system was introduced. The original school had been between the old Kirk and Manse (roughly near the modern entrance to the Leisure Centre car park), with a small stream (now piped underground) passing by. There was a nearby willow tree there, which effectively served as the gymnasium for the children. The old schoolmaster’s house in the mid-19th century consisted of one room plus a kitchen; its site later became the railway booking office. These buildings were probably the ones erected in 1762 at the same time as the Kirk was rebuilt; the school there is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. There were more than 110 pupils there in the 1830s. In the mid-19th century the infant school part was located separately, off Wilton Crescent. The School Board took over running the school in 1872. Until well into the 20th century the school took pupils up to the statutory leaving age of 14. A new school was built on the grounds of old Wellfield House in 1974/5, incorporating a wing for children with special needs. At that time the old school became used for special and community education purposes, referred to as Wilton Centre, and is a grade C listed building. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1860–1955 are in the National Archives. Schoolmasters include: Robert Wilson, early-to-mid-1700s; Samuel Irvine, 1760s; Robert Stuart, 1780s; James Elliot, late 1700s until c.1810; James Turnbull from c.1810; Andrew Hogg, from 1833; and James Blain, from c.1846 – ‘Aw wis juist a lad at Wulton skuil Juist a wee bit fella When ma mother broke the news ‘Oor gaun tae Portabella’’ [AY].

Wulton Sooth (wul'-in-sooth) n. Wilton South Church, built on Commercial Road in 1894–95 to replace the ‘Ern Kirk’ which had been used by the United Presbyterian congregation of Wilton for the previous few years. The congregation was formed out of East Bank U.P. Church in 1886 (with other members from Orrock and Allars Kirks). They were gifted the pre-fabricated building by the congregation of Craigmore, Rothesay about 2 years later. The first men to preach were Dr. William Boyd and William G. Macfee, and the first ordained minister was Malcolm Smith, although he tragically died in his second year. The ‘Ern Kirk’ had to be abandoned in 1893 and for over a year the congregation met in the Temperance Hall. The new building was designed by J.P. Alison along with Glasgow architect James.
Wulton Terrace

Chalmers. It was an elegant red sandstone structure, constructed on a narrow and sloping site, using stone from Longtown Quarries. It became St. Margaret’s and Wilton South in 1940, after merging with St. Margaret’s. The church closed in 1987, was abandoned by the new owner and was demolished in 2001–02 after becoming unstable. A stained glass window, ornate chimney pots and weather vane were salvaged. The congregation merged with St. George’s West, now Teviot Church. A roll of the minstry is: Malcolm Smith 1890–91; James W. Shannon 1892–.

Wulton Terrace (wul’in-te-ris) n. lost street name, which contained the ‘Brick Houses’ and was incorporated into Wilton Crescent in 1869.

wunter (wu-tur) n. winter – ‘Auld Wunter’s drawn his horns in, Surrenderin’ his ice an’ snow ...’ [WP], ‘A guid-gaun lum for a wunter’s nicht ...’ [DH], ‘...His wunter began after Langholm Sports And his simmer on New ’Eer’s Day’ [DH], ‘But sma’ the comfort got in gowd Throwe wunters lang and cauld’ [WL], v., arch. to provide for animals over winter – ‘...discharge any Burgess of the Burgh to keep or pasture on the Comonnty of Hawick any number of sheep, &c, exceeding twenty, unless they design to winter them or keep them until Martinnas ...’ [BR1733].

Wunter (wu-tur) n. (Winter) Robert (19th C.) brewer in Hawick, who took over from John George King in the 1860s.

the Wunter Fair (thu-wun-tur-fár) n. Hawick’s winter fair in the 17th to 19th centuries, taking place in early November, often on the 8th. The holding of this market was a legal right of the Baron (latterly the Duke of Buccleuch). It was essentially a repeat of the May Hiring Fair (although not as extensive), with stalls etc. in the Sanbed and along the High Street. The market would run from 9 a.m. and finish at 2 p.m. It is recorded taking place on 28th October in 1675. It stopped happening in the late 19th century, although it was probably a continuation of the annual fair, which happened in late October from early times. It was during one such fair in the 1660s that the Regent Moray captured several thieves in Hawick. In the early 18th century there was also one year where there was a riot after the County officers tried to impose a tax during the fair, and a similar event later when the Officers of the Duke of Buccleuch tried to extract a tax and a riot broke out. In the mid-18th century there was a large fight at the event between the Lochmaben and Yetholm gypsies.

wunters (wu-turz) n., pl. winters. There are records and memories of several severe winters over the years. Sheep, cattle and horses suffered in great snowstorms in 1615, 1633 and 1665. The storm of early 1674 was particularly harsh (‘The Thirteen Drifty Days’), wiping out many flocks. Another storm of the 17th century was known as ‘The Blast o Maich’. The winters of 1709, 1740 and 1772 were also severe. Many thou-ousands of sheep and nearly 20 Border shepherds perished in a snowstorm of early 1794, ‘the Gonial Blast’, which began on January 23rd (described by the Ettrick Shepherd). A storm in 1795 never ceased for a week. Around this time the flocks were sometimes herded to lower farms in Annandale, which were largely free of snow.
The storm of 1803 claimed the lives of at least 2 shepherds. A great snowstorm of 1809 held up the mail coach between Hawick and Edinburgh for 10 days. 1813/4 was also a severe winter. The winter of 1822/23 was particularly harsh, with snow lasting from December 20th until February 9th, and snowbanks of 6–10 ft in town. The winters of 1831, 1836/7, 1854/5, 1859/60, 1860/1, 1878/9, 1885/6, 1880/1 and 1895 are also recorded as being severe in the Borders. The storm of late 1859 was quite devastating to sheep, because it came on so unexpectedly, and the winter of 1860 was particularly calamitous for sheep in the whole of the Ettrick Forest, where lambs were destroyed to save the strength of their mothers. Other harsh winters on record in Hawick include 1900 (when there was still snow lying until May), November 1901 (when there was a storm of rain, which turned into sleet and then snow, with huge gusts of wind, doing great damage about 1400 feet) , 1903 (when there is a photo of people playing ‘shinty’ on the Teviot), 1917/18, 1937 (spring), 1940 (January, with the Dean Burn waterfall frozen), 1941 (New Year, the quickest freeze-up

wutch (wuch) n. a witch – ‘Mossy haughs where ‘wutches’ flit Primrose glades where artists sit …’ [TK], ‘…It needs na a wutch to tell How the blessing wad come to oorsel’ [FL].
wutchcraft (wuch-krawft) n. witchcraft. There were bouts of frenzied panic among the public in the Middle Ages, where individuals were seized upon as being witches and put on trial or killed by superstitious mobs. The victimisation of eccentrics in this way did not end till well into the 18th century. Fortunately Hawick seems to have been among the more rational towns. Although there are many records of people being accused of witchcraft in Scotland in the 16th and 17th centuries, there is no evidence that anyone was locally found guilty of being a witch or killed as a result of such accusations. In 1641 one of the Bailies was found guilty of attacking a woman after accusing her of witchcraft upon a deceased child and on his wife. In 1644 the Burgh Records show that Janet Scott was accused of being a witch and had to promise to present her to the Justice-General. Suggesting someone was a witch was considered an extremely serious offence, and there are other cases of people being fined or sentenced to the stocks for such behaviour in the 17th century. ‘Tranty-fit’ and ‘Speed o fit’ are two sisters who are supposed to have lived near Goldielands and said to have been witches. Strong and independent women were often rumoured to be witches, e.g. Janet Beaton, wife of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, Jean the Ranter and Jean Hall in more recent times. The wife of Rev. James Ker, covenanter and former minister of Abbotrule, was accused of witchcraft (but ‘most unjustly’) in the 1680s. Nearby communities appear to have succumbed more easily to superstition, with the execution of witches said to have taken place last at Spittal-on-Rule. There are certainly records of 25 people being accused of being witches in Jedburgh, with the peak year being 1649. In 1628 ‘Issobell Howetsone’, in Riddell and ‘Katharine Leithame’ were tried in Selkirk. In 1629 the J.Ps. of Selkirkshire were given permission to try 9 people for witchcraft. The accounts of the Chamberlain of Scott of Buccleuch contain an entry for ‘a commissioun for burneing of witches in Eckfurd’ in 1650. A legend spoken of in the 19th century tells of the wife of the Schoolmaster called Brown drowning him with the help of her associates, who cavorted drunkenly in the grounds of the Abbey. There are records of a similar number of accusations and trials in Selkirk, including at least 2 women from Lilliesleaf, and the wife of the junior school teacher in Selkirk in 1662. Langholm used to drown its witches at a place called the ‘Grieve’, possibly at the confluence of the Ewes with the Esk. Local methods used to ward off the effects of witchcraft include affixing branches of the rowan or alderwood to stables, etc., tying scarlet thread to the horns of cattle and carrying around an ear of wheat. An article on tales of local witches, written by ‘A.M., Hawick’, appeared in the Edinburgh Magazine of 1820; it contains a story about the Devil cavorting with witches at Allanhaugh, among other anecdotes. A tale is told (in the 1914 ‘Highways and Byways of the Border’, repeated from the 1820 article) of an old woman in Teviotdale (no specific location given) who was believed to have appeared as a grey-hound trying to rescue the heart of a horse (which died as a result of witchcraft) from the fire, and was later herself burned in the same fire when she failed to recite the Lord’s Prayer.

Wutch Craigs (wuch-krägz) n. Witch Craigs, small craggy area to the west of Kirkton, lying roughly between Sunnyside farm and Kirkton Hill. It reaches a height of 254 m (the origin of the name is unknown).

Wutches Camp (wu-cheez-kawmp) n. former place name somewhere to the east of Crumhaugh Hill. A decorated spindle whorl found here is in Wyhenes (wheenz) n. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘John del Wyhenes’ on the inquest of 1303/4 for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It seems reasonable to suppose that he was a local man, like the others. Note that he is separate from John (or perhaps Henry) of Whames, who was also on the jury. It is possible that his lands were Weens, but there are probably other possibilities.

Wylie (wi’lee) n. Elizabeth (16th C.) holder of a particrate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Her name is given as ‘Bessie [or Besses] Weile’. John (17th C.) resident at Leahaugh in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. His surname appears to be written ‘weilij’. Margaret (16th C.) joint tenant, Wylie's Dub along with Margaret Oliver, in the part of the lands of Wylie's Hill in Jedforest, according to a rental roll of 1541. It may be that she was connected to the family who gave their name to this farm. Her name is recorded as 'Mergrete Wyle'.

Rev. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas, minister of Kirkcudbright. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1668, and became tutor to the Douglasses of Cavers. He was tutor at Ochiltree in 1676 and governor for Francis Lord Semple in 1678. In 1679 he was imprisoned for several weeks in Glasgow (presumably as part of the Revolution). He went overseas with some of his pupils, but returned to go on trial before the General meeting of Presbyterians of 1687. He was ordained at Wheathope in 1690 and became minister at Yarrow. That same year he was a member of the General Assembly and also the Commission for Visiting Schools. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish in 1690 and ordained there in 1691. There is a letter of 1691 from 'R. Wylle', Wooll, to Tarras' (i.e. to Scott of Harden) saying that he hopes the Rev. Shiel could be kept in the area by offering him Wilton Parish until Robertson is re-erected. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1692 and translated to Hamilton in that year. He was still alive in 1709. Mr. ?? (19th C.) Schoolmaster at Minto. He took over from William Grant, who had given the school a very strong reputation, and went on to become minister of Minto Parish in 1840.

Ninian 'Ringan' (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is listed as 'Ranyon Wille of Wylleshill', among Olivers of Jedforest and others, although it is unclear where his lands were. William (17th C.) tenant in Belses who was among the men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. William (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname appears to be written 'Willie'.

William (b.c.1800) from Fife, he was a tailor at Commonside Bankhead in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Agnes and their children included Janet, William, Helen, Nichola and Mary (also spelled 'Wyllie').

Wylie's Dub (wi-leez-dub) n. former name for the area immediately east of what is now Beaconsfield Terrace, forming part of the northern boundary of the Common at Myreslawgreen. It belonged to Bailie Turnbull at the time of the Division. Roughly the same piece of land may be recorded in Hawick's first existing sasine, when Alexander Scott sold it to James Scott. It is mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common (when it belonged to Bailie Turnbull) and is marked on Wood's 1824 map (variously referred to as 'Willies Dub' and 'Weylys Dub', or just 'the Dub', it is 'Weylys Dub' in 1767; it may be the same as 'Bridgehaugh'; it was presumably marshy at one time).

Wylie's Hill (wi-leez-hil) n. lands in Jedforest listed being valued at 25 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In 1541 part of the lands were tenanted by Margaret Oliver and Margaret Wylie, paying 25s yearly, another part by Margaret Oliver, paying 12s 6d yearly and a last part by Robert Oliver, paying 12s 6d yearly. It is possible that the farm was named shortly before this period and connected to the family of this same Margaret Wylie. 'Wille of Wyleshill' was recorded in 1544 along with many Olivers and others from Jedforest, but it is unclear exactly where his lands were (it is 'Wylleshill' in 1538 and 1539 and 'Wyleishill' in 1541).

Wyltoun (wil-toon) n. variant of Walton, recorded in a document of 1453 involving Milington and Wester Heap.

Wynd (wünd) n. a narrow, often twisting road leading off a main street – 'Auld Hawick my dreams are all of thee, Thy storied wynds and streets' [RHL], 'There's a silence in the cobbled wynds ...' [JYH], 'What though at times the moorland mist Creeps up by wynd and street' [RSC], 'The mirth o' the glen and the warmth o' the shieling Are broucht to the wynds o' the grey toum again' [WL].

the Wynd (thu-wünd) n. street in Denholm, leading off the west side of the Green towards Denholm Mill. The local fire brigade used to be based here.

Wyndburgh (wind-bu-ru) n. alternative spelling for Windburgh, a hill near the head of the Slitrig valley.

Wyndburgh (wind-bu-ru) n. racehorse, trained locally by Ken Oliver. The horse was well-known for coming in the top 4 in the Grand National on 4 separate occasions (2nd in 1957, 4th in 1958, 2nd again in 1959 and again in 1962). Most famously it managed to hold on to 2nd place in 1959, with jockey Tim Brookshaw effectively riding the end of the race bareback after his stirrup leather broke at Bechek. The horse was retired.

Yadd Linn (yawd-lin) n. small stream in the upper Slitrig valley, joining the Lang Burn between Shankend and Shankendshiel. There was formerly a footbridge there.

Yair (yār) n. house a few miles north of Selkirk, overlooking the Tweed. It was originally built around 1580 by the Kers, this branch holding the hereditary office of coroners of Selkirkshire. They are buried in Melrose Abbey with the inscription ‘Here lies the race of the House of Zair’. The lands were Crown lands from about 1456, assigned to William Ker from at least 1476 and passing to his son William in the 1490s. They were still Crown lands in 1502. In 1494/5 John Scott of Tushielaw was allowed to ‘compone’ for crimes including stealing 60 sheep, 3 oxen, 4 cows and another 20 sheep from there. In 1535 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was found not guilty of stealing 200 sheep from here (among other crimes). It was still Crown land in 1541, occupied by Thomas Ker, paying £40 yearly. The estate was acquired by the Ruthven family in 1736 and then went to the Pringles. The name is used for the estate and surrounding area, which once covered about 4 miles along the banks of the Tweed. The nearby bridge over the Tweed dates from 1760; it was built as part of the turnpike road from Selkirk to Edinburgh and would have been on the main route from Hawick to Edinburgh until about 50 years later. The lands were sold by Pringle of yaird

Whybank to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1758, but the house was reacquired by Alexander Pringle of Whybank in 1784 and rebuilt in 1788/9. Robert Horsburgh lived there in the 1790s – ‘From Yair which hills so closely bind, Scarce can the Tweed his passage find, Though much he fret, and chafe, and toil ’Till all his eddying currents boil’ [SW], ‘O, the vale o’ the Tweed is bonny Frae Yair to auld Elibank …’ [FL] (formerly written ‘le Yar’, ‘le Yare’, ‘Yaire’, ‘Yare’, ‘Yhaire’, ‘Yhare’, ‘Zar’, ‘Zare’, etc.).

yaird (yärδ) n. an enclosed piece of land, or a yard of enclosed ground attached to a building – ‘oo yaised ti play in the yaird ahint the Store’, ‘Item, gif any nieghbour mindes to big ane thorn hedge in his yaird’ [BR1640], ‘bour mindes to big ane thorn hedge in his yaird’ [DH], ‘the yaird …’ [PR1716], specifically a kirkyard { ‘Ye corn to ye farm yeards’ [PR1716], specifically a kirkyard { ‘Ye corn to ye farm yeards’ [PR1716], specifically a kirkyard}.“Yair Kid’ [JTe], ‘Like as ane lion that is in calling the occasion for a debauch shouldna bei laid at an look …’ [DH], ‘My boy’, said Jims, ‘I’m oot o’ that eennow, Wull yalla ribbon dae instead’? yap (yawp) n., arch. a shrill, sharp call, v. to make a shrill, sharp call, to talk in thin piping tones (not clearly distinct from English, but noted by E.C. Smith).
Yarrow Kirk (ya-rô-, ya-ri-kirk) n. church in the Yarrow valley, serving the parish, which was amalgamated with St. Mary’s and Deuchar. In early times the parish was referred to as ‘the Forest’. Administration along with neighbouring parishes changed over the centuries, and in 1650 the former parish of Rankilburn was disjoined from Yarrow and annexed to Ettrick. The earliest church in the parish was the kirk of St. Mary’s of the Lowes, near the north end of St. Mary’s Loch. The first church in Yarrow village stood to the east of the present one, on a small stream (and may have been called Deuchar Chapel). The present church was built in 1640, altered in 1772, and with major renovations in 1826. It was gutted by fire in 1926, but restored. A sun-dial dating from 1640 is inscribed ‘Watch & Pray, Time is short’. The parson in the 1290s was Edmund of Letham. Around 1484 the rector there was Alexander, brother of Patrick Murray of Falahill. James Scott was minister 1607–34, who was rebuked for drunkenness, ill-discipline, and non-residence. William Elliot (brother of Thomas in Bothwickshiels) was minister 1641–66 and 1679–80. John Rutherford (maternal great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott) was minister there 1691–1710. Robert Russell (who married Agnes Turnbull from Hawick) was minister 1791–1847 and his son James afterwards. The minister used to receive four bolls of oatmeal annually from Hassendean, the origin of the payment being lost in time.

Yarrow Knowe (ya-ri-now) n. small hill in Liddesdale, to the south of Saughtree (it is unclear if the origin of the name is related to that of the river).

Yarrow Schuil (ya-ri-skil) n. another name for the old school at Linfit on Yarrow Water.

the Yarrow Stane (thu-ya-ri-stân) n. ancient Christian burial stone inscribed ‘here lie buried the two sons of liberalis’, dating from the 5th or 6th century, standing within a small enclosure beside Whitehope farm near Yarrow village. It is the possible location for the ballads ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’ and ‘Willie’s Drowned in Yarrow’. 2 other unscribed stones lie only a few hundred yards away, called ‘the Glebe Stone’ and ‘the Warrior’s Rest’.

Yarrow Terrace (ya-ri-te-ris) n. street in the Terraces built around 1898 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company, and named in 1900 after the river Yarrow.

Yarrow Witter (ya-ri-wi’-ur) n. river that runs from St. Mary’s Loch to join the Ettrick about 2 miles west of Selkirk. It passes through the former Ettrick Forest, with a length of about 12 miles (20 km). The first bridge over the river (near the village of Yarrow) was built around 1653, replaced in 1722, swept away in a flood of 1734 and replaced in the 1740s. James Russel wrote ‘Reminiscences of Yarrow’ (1886). The Yarrow valley has been popularised in the ballads ‘Mary Scott, Flower of Yarrow’ and ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’ – ‘I dreimed a dreirie dreim last nicht; God keep us a’ frae sorrow! I dreimed I pu’d the birk sae green Wi’ my true love on Yarrow’[T], ‘Tis better by far to leave publican’s bar, And doon by the Yarrow to stray’[RF] (in the past the river was known as ‘Gierua’, ‘Gyrwa’, ‘Yarou’ and similar; in earlier times the name was sometimes written ‘Zarrow’; it derives either from the Gyruii tribe, of the Fens, who may have given their name to Jarrow in Tyneside, or more likely from the Gaelic for ‘rough stream’).

yate (ya’t) n., poet. a gate – ‘And when he cam to the fair tower yate, He shouted loud, and cried weel hie, Till out bespak auld Gibby Elliot – ‘Whae’s this that brings the fraye to me?’’ [T] (variant of yett).

yatter (ya’-ur, ya-tur) v. to chatter, talk incessantly – ‘what’s she yatterin on aboot now?’, ‘Their yatterin’, like the stream goes on forever’[HNe1972], n. an incessant talker (cf. yitter).

For the Corney’s lads are saddling their yauds To follow the banner blue’ [TK], ‘While every Teri lad, Striddlin’ his gallant yaud . . .’ [JEDM] (from Middle English; cf. the little-known English word ‘jade’ and also jaud).

Yaud Linns (yawld-linz) n. former name for a narrow pass and waterfall near Langbush-shiels, perhaps near where the road gets closest to the river between Shankend and Langbush-shiels. Graptolites have been found in the black shale here (the origin is ‘linn’ meaning a narrow gorge, and it said the ‘yaud’ comes from the resemblance to an old horse of a rock lying across the stream; it is ‘Yad Linn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

yauld (yawld) adj., arch. alert, nimble, strong, vigorous, sprightly – . . . As Fasteneven, for young and auld That day, seem mair than common yauld’ [JoHo], ‘And she lap sae yauld, and spanged sae hich, Her rigging banes did rattle’ [JTe], ‘She was a yauld and willint bitch As ever lap ower hedge and ditch’ [JH], ‘Auld Britain’s sons are yet fu’ yauld, We trow they weel could bide a whuther’ [JoHa], ‘These men, stout and young and yauld as they were . . .’ [HSR], ‘Masel an’ twae as yauld young fallows as ye wad hae seen . . .’ [BCM1881], ‘Oh how! the glamourie an’ mich That ane sae dune, sae auld, Should, in a vesion o’ the nicht, Be young again, an’ yauld’ [ECB], ‘There are no ‘Yauld, bang fallows’ now-a-days’ [JTu], ‘The air is frosty and the ground is cauld, But Davie’s heart is warm – his legs are yauld’ [HNo], ‘A wiry wee cratur and yauld. Yeoman (yo-mun) n. Janet (b.1805/6) from Tundergarth, she was housekeeper at Arkleton in 1851. She was a widow, staying at Arkleton Cottage with her daughter Mina.

the Yeomanry (thu-yo-mun-ree) n. one of a number of volunteer cavalry forces, particularly those set up following the Yeomanry Act of 1794. Members were most often farmers, with landowners acting as officers. Troops of volunteer were active during the period of perceived danger of French invasion. The local troop was variously called the ‘West Troop of Yeomanry’ or ‘Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry’. It was connected to the Lothian and Borders Horse, which was set up in 1797, with Sir Walter Scott as its first quartermaster. Such units were embodied several times during the Napoleonic Wars. They were cut back during the decades of peace, but occasionally used to deal with civil unrest. Lothian and Border Horse remained active through the late 19th century and many wealthier locals joined it on the outbreak of the First World War. Note that the Yeomanry was technically distinct from the Militia and the Volunteers, although all of their histories are intertwined and they were jointly the precursors of today’s Territorial army – ‘... Thus yeoman troops were raised to stand As bulwark to the Borderland’ [WHO].

Yetholm (ye-tum) n. parish and twin villages in south-eastern Roxburghshire. Town Yetholm and Kirk Yetholm are two parts of the settlement, across the Bowmont Water from each other, with Kirk Yetholm being slightly older. First mention of the village was around 1200. It was said that the Scottish noblemen killed at Flodden were buried in the churchyard here. The town was formerly known for its ‘baa’ and other games on ‘Eastern E’en’, like other Border towns. It was also once known as a centre for whisky smuggling. Kirk Yetholm was once the headquarters of the Faa gypsy royal family, from the 16th century until the last gypsy king died in 1902. There are several books about the local gypsies, including one by Hawick man Vic Tokely. Kirk Yetholm is the beginning (or end) of the Pennine Way – ‘Blithe April wandered through the glen, An’ ower the flank o’ Cheviot, An’ doon by Yetholm’s auld grey toon, An’ syne ti winplin’ Tievit’ [WP] (probably from Old English ‘village at the pass’, ‘geat ham’; the name first appears around 1200) as ‘Yetham’, is ‘Zhetam’ in 1436 and does not attain its modern form until the 16th century).

Yetholm (ye-tum) n. William (13th/14th C.) Archdeacon of Dunblane from around 1309. He was known as ‘de Yetholm’ and was presumably from that area. He became Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1320/1 and remained in this position until at least 1329.

Yethoose (yet-hooz) n. Yethouse, farm just to the east of Newcastle on the. It could be the ‘Zaird-hous’ in that area recorded being possessed by Archibald Tailor in 1632. It has long been owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1694 Thomas Robson (or Robison) paid the Hearth Tax there and is also recorded there in 1696 and 1697, when he was rebuked for working on a Sunday. Other residents recorded there in 1694 were John Elliot and Isobel Elliot. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it was combined with ‘Noutilaires’ and consisted of 70 acres, bounded by Chingills, ‘Baxtongill’, Hillhouse, Tweeden Burn and a common on the west. The farm also shared a common of 116 acres with the neighbouring farms of Greens and Chingills. Robert Little was there in 1748. Mungo Armstrong was farmer there in 1797; his sons James and Francis are recorded on the Militia Lists in 1797 and 1801. James Armstrong was tenant from at least 1835 to 1851. The tenancy passed from Armstong to Alexander Temple Robson in the 1880s and there were Rutherfords there in the 1930s (spelling varies; it is ‘Gethous’ in 1694 and ‘Yeathouse’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Y.M. (thū-wl-em) n. Young Men’s Rugby Club, a ‘junior’ rugby team, nicknamed ‘the Reidskins’. Their strip consists of a scarlet shirt with red socks. They play at Mansfield Haugh, next to the Hawick R.F.C. ground. In 1964 they took over part of 32 Commercial Road as clubrooms. For a long time they played in the Border District League, but joined Division 5 (East) National League in 2000. One of the club’s highlights was winning the National League Division 4 title in 2004 as well as reaching the B.T. Bowl Final at Murrayfield. ‘Once a Redskin’ is a booklet of the club’s history.

yokatola (yō-ku-tō-la) n. a train of sledgers or skaters, v. to slide as a yokatola – ‘... A’ve nither yokatolad Doon the Vertish Hill’ [IWL] (cf. yoke-a-tulie and other variants).

yoke-a-tulie (yō-ku-too-lee) n. a succession of skaters, each crouching down and holding on to the one in front, or a string of people with their sleds held together – ‘Yoke-a-tuille = the mode of sliding on ice as a team and in a chain; a winter pastime familiar to all youthful Teriess. Did ee ever hear the rummle o a yoke-a-tuille doon the Loan skly’ [ECS], ‘The yoke-a-tuille gaed full nail doon the brae’ [ECS], ‘The yoke-a-tuille rankit up, And doon the Loan like fire’ [JT], ‘... A yoka-tully we made up, And doon the Loan did fly’ [WLu] (the spelling varies; this is a peculiarly local phrase, perhaps restricted to Hawick alone, e.g. it is ‘tuckle’ or ‘tuckie’ in Selkirk; the meaning of the first part of the phrase is clear, while the second part is probably from ‘tulie’, meaning a squabble or struggle, although it has also been suggested that it comes from the days of the turnpike toll, where one could get away with paying less by yoking carts together; see also yokatola and yokotolo).

yoke on (yōk-ōn) v., arch. to tackle, attack – ‘Twae muckl hullies (lazy scamps) hiev yokeet on um whan ei was comin hyimm i the derkneen’ [ECS], ‘The dog yokit on the bit lassie’ [GW], ‘The rubber yokit on ‘im alang thon derk loan’ [GW], ‘There’s a twae-heidit mavis in Westmorland That sings at the brek o day; While the yin held yokes on the airy worm The tother chants its lay’ [DH] (also yoke on o).

yoke on o (yōk-ōn-o) v., arch. to meddle with, seek an explanation, attack – ‘Dinna yoke on o um eenow; ei’s eenuch adae’ [ECS], ‘Eh, bit, A’ll no pit up wui ir sayin that: A’ll yoke on o ir aabout eet the firstst teime A sei ir’ [ECS] (also yoke on).

yoke till (yōk-ti) v., arch. to begin some action, commence, tackle – ‘... oot A suitt towrt the Auld Jail, thonder, an yokeet till’t up the Caslegate’ [ECS] (also yoke ti).

youle see yowl

Young (yəng) n. Adam (17th C.) smith in Hawick. In 1685 he was fined by the Magistrates for fighting with fellow smith Hugh Elliot in the Kirk. They pulled each other’s bonnets off and threw them down. He may be the same Adam who was fined in his absence in 1685 for insulting the good name of Bailie Scott and his son John by claiming that they had reset the peas taken by some of the Royalist forces. He may be the Adam who in 1676, along with Alexander Hislop, was found guilty of using a ‘half-pecke ane inch short or thereby’.

Adam (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Adam (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Adam recorded as a witness to a baptism in Roberton in 1680 (although crossed out). He was recorded at Hassendeanbank in 1690 when listed as someone owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull and Bessie Kerr. Adam (b.1768/9) from Ashkirk Parish, he was farmer at Burnhead. He was already there in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He was listed as farmer at Burnhead among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was listed at Burnhead in 1841 and 1851, when he farmed 160 acres and employed 4 labourers. He lived there with his sister Margaret and was unmarried.

Rev. Adam (18th/19th C.) minister of Wilton in the early 1800s. It is unclear precisely who he was, perhaps an assistant minister. He was listed as ‘Rev. A. Young, Burnhead’ on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). Adam ‘Ad’ (d.1874) brother of Pim, son of Jamie and Jean Scott, left fatherless at an early age. He had a reputation for being saucy and sullen, was a skillful poacher and fisher, and also had a knowledge about herbal medicines. More cautious than his brother, he was nevertheless often in trouble with the law. He was found dead in the stables of the Victoria Hotel and is buried in the Wellogate – ‘Ad Young went to bed alive at night, and wakened a corpse next morning’ [T].

Adam (b.1814/5) from Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Dunstane in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was still recorded at Dunstane in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret, Jessie, William, James and Adam. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Stewart and their children included Helen (b.1682) and Jane (b.1686). The witnesses to the Young

1682 baptism were William Purdom and George Young (possibly his brother). He could be the Alexander, son of James and Helen born in Hawick in 1653. It is possible that he is the same man as the Town Officer. Alexander (17th/18th C.) Hawick Town Officer. In 1696 the 2 Bailies ‘hair buyer’ as he was. He was Burgh Officer at the same time as Alexander Scott, and witnessed the baptism of two of Scott’s children in 1702 and 1705. In 1698 he was found to be due £4 Scots ‘for his last yeirs Common rydeing coat’, which is the first explicit mention of the ceremonial aspects of the Common Riding in the Burgh Records. In 1704 he was listed as ‘officer’ when he witnessed a baptism for Wright Andrew Scott. In 1707 there was a new arrangement by which he should himself buy oil for the clock and bell-ropes, and in exchange ‘that he should pay nothing inward to the toune for tolling of the bell at landward burials’, i.e. he would keep those fees. He was ‘officer’ in 1714 when he witnessed a baptism for John Rae. Andrew (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Andro Young, sometime in Bernehillis’ Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Roughleeneuk in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. ‘Andrew younger’ who is also listed there seems like an error, perhaps meaning his son. He is surely related to John, Lyle and Ninian, who were at the same farm in 1669. Andrew (b.1818/9) from Oxnam, he was farm steward at Ashtrees in the 1850s. His wife was Mary, from Southdean Parish. Their children included John, Isabella, Margaret and Jane. Catherine (19th C.) milliner and dressmaker on the Howegate. She is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. David (16th C.) listed as ‘David Zong’ among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. David (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1707. He was fined for not appearing before the Magistrates to answer the charge that when he was before the Kirk Session ‘cited for immoralities’ he stated that ‘ther was some (as is alleged) in the said Sessione as guyltie as he was’. He is probably the merchant David who married Marion Newbie in Hawick in 1704 and whose children included John (b.1705), William (b.1707) and Marie (b.1708). In the 1708 baptismal record he was ‘hair buyer in Hawick’. The witnesses in 1705 were Robert and Francis Ruecastle and in 1708 were Bailie George Martin and gardener James Falsyde. David (19th C.) one of the first Deacons of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk from 1848. David ‘Dave’ (1922–) Hawick born Bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band 1963–75. He had played with the Salvation Army, and in the Navy during the War, being included on dance band recordings. He was also involved with other local bands, conducting Selkirk and Jedforest, being musical director for Hawick Amateur Operatic Society for 7 years and for a long time playing in local dance band the Dixie Seven. In addition to playing the cornet, he was an accomplished soloist on the flugel horn. Douglas ‘Doug’ (b.1961) from Jedburgh, he was a member of the boxing club in Hawick. He worked on a farm, and joined the Hawick Amateur Boxing Club at age 16. He won the Scottish Heavyweight Championship in 1983 and the ABA British title in 1984. He represented Britain in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles and in 1986 he represented Scotland in the Commonwealth Games in Edinburgh, gaining a silver medal in the Heavyweight class. He turned professional in 1987 and had 7 fights. However, he then suffered horrendous injuries when struck by a motorcycle while labouring on the roads, ending his boxing career. He later worked as a sales manager in Jedburgh. Elizabeth nee Scott (b.c.1763) known as ‘Widow Young’ or ‘Bet Young’, she was the wife of William Young, blacksmith. She is probably the Betty Scott who married William Young in Hawick in 1785, and may be the Elizabeth born to Walter Scott in Yarrow Parish in 1759. She was known for dabbling in politics and for composing poetry, publishing ‘Songs and poems, on various subjects’ (1823) in Hawick. This contains 30 poems, many of them commemorating contemporary events, such as Waterloo, deaths in the royal family, Lord Minto’s return, etc. There are occasional Scots words, but mainly the poems are in English. It must have been unusual in those times to have women poets, and she seems likely to have been Hawick’s first who published anything. She is probably the elderly ‘Betty Young’ living with Martha Young on Walter’s Wynd at the 1841 census. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) daughter of a Hawick blacksmith. She was recorded in 1818 claiming a ‘stolen child’, apparently taken at Hawick. She probably married someone called

Smith, and her daughter Peggy Smith (who apparently later worked as a nurse to the Duchess of Buccleuch) is reported to have stolen a child herself. George (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Georg Zoung’. Walter Scott of Buccleuch pledged to bring him before the next Justice-aire at Edinburgh. He had been captured by ‘Rinzeane of Rutherfurde, Hew of Douglace, and thare complices, furthe of Mynto toune’. Probably the same George in Minto was recorded in 1502 when he failed to appear at the Justice-aire, with William Turnbull of Minto as his surety; he was probably related to John and Robert, who were also recorded. It is probably also the same Thomas Young recorded in 1502 having had 14 geese stolen from him by Adam Grahamslaw. Probably the same George at ‘le crag de mynto’ was recorded in 1502 when Richard Rutherford in Littledean had remission for wounding him and stealing a series of items (including a horse, a waistcoat, a lance, a shield and a knife). George (16th C.) owner of a quarter particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. George (16th C.) resident of somewhere in Teviotdale. He was recorded in an English letter of 1542 as ‘one of the cheif setters forwardes of all spoyles and robberyes’. The other man listed was Will Davidson, ‘oon of the Pringles’. They robbed a village in England, but were intercepted on their return and 14 men captured. George (16th C.) farmer at Harwoodtown in the Rule valley. His barn and yard are listed in the 1562 document over disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule. George (17th C.) tenant in Bedrule. He is listed as a fugitive in 1684, along with his brothers Robert and James and many other men, for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. George (17th C.) servant of George Gray, who was tenant at ‘Rupertlaw’ in Roxburghshire. This seems likely to be Raperlaw (but could conceivably be Ruberslaw). He is listed in 1684 among men declared to be fugitives because of religious non-conformity. George (17th C.) dyer in Hawick who witnessed a sasine in 1687. Probably the same George witnessed a baptism for William Elliot in Hawick in 1687. He was listed as ‘litister’ in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Stuart. He could be the George listed among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax in 1694. He may be the George, married to Janet Purdom, whose children born in Hawick included: Jane (b.1680); William (b.1682); Walter (b.1683); John (b.1685); and Margaret (b.1686). The witness to the 1680 baptism were Walter Gledstains (the Town Clerk) and John Purdom (the schoolmaster). He may be the George, son of James and Helen Martin, who was born in Hawick in 1650. It seems likely he is the George who witnessed a baptism for Alexander (possibility his brother) in 1682, as well as a baptism for a Mr. Reid in 1680. George (17th/18th C.) wright in North Synton. He married Margaret Loraine and their children included Isobel (b.1703). George (d.c.1940) leader of the Hawick Home Mission choir. Helen (18th C.) listed as ‘Miss Nelly Young, Hawick’ in 1784 among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’. It is unclear how she was related to other Youngs. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) cook at Langlands in 1786, when she was working for Gilbert Elliot. Henry (1828/9–1907) gamekeeper at Harwood (on Rule) for many years, starting in 1855. He was responsible for much of the planting on the estate. He was born at Millhaugh, Oxnam Water, son of farm steward Robert and Maragret Riddell from the Lammermuirs. He worked for a while with Andrew Goodfellow, father of the Abbot-Temple. He married Isabella Hogg of Melrose and their children were Robert (who emigrated to Toronto in 1873), William (who went to Canada in 1871), Henry (an engineer in Minnesota), Andrew (worked in London), John Alexander (gamekeeper at Fyvie Castle) and James (gamekeeper at Tullimet, Perthshire). Isobel (17th C.) listed at Wadeshill among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) clerk of St. Andrews Dioces who was notary for the 1500 document for the Scotts of Branc-holmle, dealing with the lands of Whitchesters, and signed in Edinburgh. James (16th C.) canon who was recorded in a document for the Rout-ledges, witnessed in 1529/30 at Cavers Kirk. He is recorded as ‘Sir James Zung’. He was presumably attached to the Diocese of Glasgow and was possibly the same as the contemporary priest who owned land in Hawick. James (16th C.) priest, named as a land-holder in Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was possibly the same James Young who was burned to death in his tower, along with 10 others, by the English forces led by Sir Ralph Bulmer and Sir Oswald Westropp in 1547/8; the letter states ‘they burned a towar of a Prestes called Sir James Yonge who did resists, and shot ij. hackebuttes at the footmen which priest was burned in the tower and tenne others with hym’. He is given the designation ‘Sir’ in the Charter, indicating that he only had his bachelor's degree. His exact status and relationship to the other priests mentioned in the Charter is unknown. He may be the same James who was presented to the chaplainry of 'Carlangrig' (i.e. Caerlenrig) in 1533. James (d.1622) recorded as being 'in Belses'. He was executed for perjury, having apparently been bribed to lie in a case of theft that Andrew Turnbull in Belses brought against the Midlemasses. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Martin and their children included: George (b.1650); and Alexander (b.1653), who may be the Burgh Officer. James (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys that killed about 200 men. Most of the escapees were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica, but he was among a small number who were said to have managed to escape to Ulster. James (d.c.1687) tenant in Mervinslaw when his will was recorded in 1687. James (d.c.1695) servitor to Sir William Eliott of Stobs. His will is recorded in 1695.

James (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Easter Grundistone. James (18th C.) recorded at West Burnfoot in Wilton Parish in 1724. He married Janet Clerk in 1713, the proclamations being made in Ashkirk and Minto Parishes. Their daughter Janet was baptised in Wilton in 1724, with witnesses Thomas Irvine and William Easton. James (1774–1822) born in Bedrule Parish, son of Peter. He was licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1802 and became minister of Eckford in 1807. He married Marion, eldest daughter of James Hume, Schoolmaster of Lasswade, and she died in 1857, aged 75. His children were: Margaret Simpson; Euphemia; Peter, surgeon in Hong Kong; Marion, who married Rev. James Hope of Roxburgh; Beatrix Laing; James Hume, doctor at Amoy, China, who died at Musselburgh; and Janet. James (b.1794/5) mason and innkeeper in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. He is probably also the same man listed as a grocer in 1837. In 1841 and 1851 he was recorded at the Cross Keys Inn. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a mason and innkeeper at the Cross Keys. By 1861 he was at Dryden near Ashkirk, farming 400 acres and employing 3 labourers. He married Jean Manuel and their children included Jane, James, Elspeth and Simon. James (b.1815/6) from Oxnam, he was farmer at Teviothaugh. He is recorded there in 1851 and 1861, when he was farmer of 100 acres and employer of 2 labourers. He married Margaret Nurdie and their children included Janet, Alice (or Alison) and Robert. John (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. His name is transcribed as 'James Long in Denbrey', so he was probably a tenant in Deanbrae, and his surname was word likely to be Young; most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. He is also listed at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his name is there given as ‘Johan nem Zong scissorem in denebra’, suggesting he was a carver (or perhaps carpenter) at Deanbrae. His name was also recorded (as ‘Johis zoung scissors in’) in 1494/5, but scored out, and then entered again later when he had remission for stealing a cow from Simon Landle, with the Laird of Gledstains as his surety. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was a resident of Minto along with Thomas, when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was able to 'compone' for stealing from them, specifically 2 bolls of barley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools. Probably the same John in Craigend of Minto was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 14 ewes from him; he was probably related to Thomas, who is also recorded in 1494/5. Probably the same John in Minto was recorded in 1502 when he failed to appear at the Justice- aire, with William Turnbull of Minto as his surety; he was probably related to George and Robert, who were also recorded. He was indicted in 1502 (as well as Thomas, Richard and William, to whom he was probably also related), with William Turnbull of Minto again as his surety. John (15th C.) recorded as tenant at Roughlee in 1494/5. He had remission for bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder from Thomas 'Leipden' and Matthew Mitchelson, living at Hundalee, with his surety being the Master of Angus. He was probably related to Simon, who was recorded at Roughlee in 1493. John (16th C.) owner of a quarter particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. John (16th C.) tenant in Roughlee, along with 'Michaelly'. They are listed in 1571/2, among tenants in Southdean for whom William Oliver in Lustruther was pledge.
Young Young

John (d.1580) described as ‘in Cames’ (probably Kaims) under the Laird of Minto when he was convicted and hanged for the murder of and theft from John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’. His accomplice, Andrew Turnbull from Belses, was still a minor at the time. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Jok Young in Toune of Roull’ in the records of the Curcuit Court of 1622. He was accused of stealing sheep belonging to William Scott of ‘Weyms’, but cleared of the charges. John (17th C.) tenant in Fastcastle, recorded along with Thomas in 1644. The pair were cited in 1644 for not subscribing to the Covenant, saying that ‘they would ken no session nor minister, but follow the command of their master, my Lord Traquair’. Thomas was probably his son or brother, and they were probably related to other Youngs in Rulewater. John (17th C.) tenant in the farm of ‘Rouchneuck’ (i.e. Roughleeneuk) according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Ninian and Lyle are also listed and surely closely related.

John (17th C.) resident at Bygate in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He was fined in 1706 for ‘his disorderlie and irregular marriage with Margaret Clerk’. She was daughter of Andrew Clerk, also a merchant in Hawick. They were married by Thomas Blair at Cornhill in Northumberland, suggesting that at least one of the 2 families still proscribed to the Episcopalian Kirk, or that the couple simply eloped there because the wedding was against the wishes of the families. John (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1780 when his marriage to Janet Slaiter was announced in Melrose Parish, with James Slaiter as cautioner. Rev. Dr. John (1743–1806) first minister of the Hawick Anti-Burgher Kirk. He was born in Kinross-shire, probably son of John, a small farmer at Mihathort, and Janet Millar. When aged 5 it is said that a soldier who stopped off in his village, mortally wounded, had the bible read to by him, everyone else who could read being out at harvest. He took a course at the University of St. Andrews when he was just 10 and entered the Secession theological seminary 2 years later. He is said to have failed to qualify 2 years in a row, purely as a result of his age, and was 21 when he became a probationer of the Anti-Burgher Kirk. He then taught at a school in Perthshire. In 1766 he was licensed at Sanquhar, and in 1767 was appointed the first minister of the new secessionist Anti-Burgher congregation at the Green Church in Hawick (after a trial period of several weeks). His arrival in Hawick was on the day after the devastating Great Flood. He wrote what was possibly the first book published in Hawick, ‘The True State of the Unhappy Controversy about the Burgis-Oath, being a Discourse delivered at Kelso, the 8th of Oct., 1782’ (1783). He also wrote ‘A history of the commencement, progress, and termination of the late war between Great Britain and France’, published in 2 volumes in Edinburgh in 1802. This book apparently came to the notice of Mr. Pitt, who sent a complimentary letter and arranged a pension, which he declined, but it later went to his widow and two of his daughters. His ‘Essays on Government’ (1794, 1798) was well read in its day, and was a justification of the British government’s opposition to revolutionary France, probably written as a deliberate attempt to counter the perception that the Secession churches were full of radicals. Its contents led to a complaint to the Synod, although the matter was eventually allowed to drop. About 1799 he contributed to the local subscription to support the war against France. He was also an early member of the Hawick Curling Club. In politics he was a Tory, and had no patience for the ‘blacknebs’ who were well represented in Hawick in his day. He was an eminent scholar, but said to be perhaps too academic for some of his congregation. Services in his time were about 3½ hours in duration, with hour-long doctrinal prayers while the congregation stood. For many years he also led ‘evening exercises’ on Sunday nights (in addition to the 2 earlier sermons of the day), which were usually lectures on Old Testament history or political matters. It is said that about half of the seats in the Green Kirk were paid for by members of the Established Kirk, due to his popularity. He is said to have also been called on much more frequently than the parish ministers for public visits as well as funerals. He was said to be the most tolerant local minister in regard people of other denominations, but was unpopular with many of the others. He was twice called before the Session. In order to eke out his meagre stipend, he and his family farmed a garden at the Green, and for several years also farmed at Silverbuthall and some fields at Crumhaugh-hill. He refused a call to the Secession Church in Nicholson Street, Edinburgh, saying that only death would sever his connection with Hawick; the call was later accepted by Dr. John Jamieson, the lexicographer. He received a doctorate from King’s College Aberdeen in 1794, the first given to a secession clergyman. His other the Direction of Praying Societies, or Fellowship and distressed' (1795) and 'Sermons on various important subjects' (3 volumes, 1797). However, most of his manuscripts and correspondence were lost, as well as the diary he kept (except for a brief extract from 1777 and 1778). An original letter of his is in the Museum. He additionally helped Sir John Sinclair prepare the 'Statistical Survey of Scotland' for publication. In 1804 he suffered from what might now be called a stroke. As a result of this he required a colleague to preach for him in about his last year, since it was difficult for the congregation to make out what he said. For his last 5 months he could neither move nor speak, but recovered his speech one day, and gave a blessing to his family for 3 hours before again becoming insensible. A communion token from the church bears the inscription 'M.-I.Y.-

and 'A.C.-H.K.' (for 'Associate Church Hawick') on the other. He married Helen Gibb in Wilton in 1768; she was from Muckhart, where he had lodged before coming to Hawick, and she died in 1809 in her 60th year. They had 6 sons and 5 daughters, 9 children reaching maturity. His children included: James (b.1769), who presumably died in infancy; the eldest daughter, who married Rev. William Patrick of Lockerbie, and assisted Dr. Jamieson with his dictionary; Euphe-

Davidson, blind lecturer in chemistry, then secondly married Dr. Thomas Dick; John (b.1776);

1791 baptism was recorded in Hawick Parish and done 'in the presence of the Special Congregatained an army commission, and another became a merchant. There is no known portrait of him, although there is a water-colour of his daughter, Mrs. Janet Scott. He was long remembered in

John Young in 1871 at Greenriver, in the Rule valley. They set up their home at Oakwood on Buccleuch Road. She provided information about her family for Tancred’s ‘Rulewater and its People’. Her own children included J.E.D. Murray’s wife. Ninian (17th C.) tenant in ‘Rouchneuck’ (i.e. Roughleeneuk) according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John and Lyle are listed after him and so presumably younger brothers or sons. Patrick (17th C.) resident of the Hasse- senean part of Roberton Parish. In 1688 he ‘had a child baptized gotten in fornica[tio]ne wt Issobell ghram’ called Bessie. The witnesses were Robert Caldwell and William Graham (who was surely related to the mother of the child). Peter (18th/19th C.) dyer in Hawick. Unnamed children of his died in 1794 and 1810. He is probably the Peter who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Scott in 1792. Pim (19th C.) brother of Ad, son of Jamie and Jean Scott, left fatherless at an early age. A well known town character, he was big, burly and frank. Known as a poacher, he also once rushed into the Coble Pool to save a boy. On at least 2 occasions he was rescued from arrest by a mob of his friends, but in 1844 he was sentenced to transportation to Australia. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Minto in 1502. He was indicted and failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with his surety William Turnbull of Minto being fined. Thomas, John and William in Minto are also mentioned and probably related to him. Richard (d.1679) of Cavers Parish. He drowned on the ‘Crown of London’ when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys when carrying a cargo of Covenanters captured at Bothwell Bridge and bound for America. He may have been related to James who survived. Richard (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1761. Their children included: William (b.1762); Margaret (b.1764); James (b.1767); Robert (b.1771), probably ‘Rob Young o the Back Raw’: John (b.1774); Isabel (b.1777); Mary (b.1779); Richard (b.1783) and George (b.1786). He witnessed a baptism for smith Robert (surely a relative) in 1766. Richard (b.1786) son of William and Elizabeth (the poet), he was a blacksmith on the High Street. His premises around No. 54 are marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He is recorded as blacksmith on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He was one of the victims in the election ‘riot’ of 1837; he was said to have once been a leader of the Radicals, but switched allegiance when he received a grant of land from the Duke of Buccleuch. His wife was Elizabeth Blacklock (born in Kirkton Parish). Their children included William, Robert, Elizabeth, Agnes and Joan. He was still alive in 1851. Richard (1793–1849) son of Adam and Margaret Young. He was a shoemaker at about 17 High Street. He married Agnes (or ‘Nancy’) Henderson. Their children included: Isabel (b.1818); Adam (b.1820); Margaret (b.1822); Margaret (again, b.1824); Agnes (b.1829); Robert (b.1834); and Joseph Hume (b.1837). Robert, a weaver who lived with him in 1841, was probably his brother. By 1851 his wife was a midwife, living at 73 High Street. Richard (b.1801) son of John Young and Elizabeth Boa, he was born in Wilton Parish. He lived at Lilliesleaf with his parents in 1841 and was later farm steward at Todshawhaugh. He was unmarried and had 4 servants in 1851. Richard (b.c.1805) blacksmith on the Mid Raw. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Robert, Alexander, Joan, Thomas and Francis. He must have been related to the older man of the same name who was blacksmith on the High Street. Robert (15th C.) resident of Minto. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including stealing a young bull from him. Perhaps the same Robert is recorded in Selkirk in 1494/5 along with William Scoon. Lawrence Rutherford of Oakwood had remission for several crimes, including resetting the pair of them. Perhaps the same Robert in Minto, brother-in-law of John Turnbull, was recorded in 1502 when he failed to appear at the Justice-aire, with William Turnbull of Minto as his surety; he was probably related to George and John, who were also recorded. Robert (16th C.) tenant at Waterside in 1541, along with Marion, as well James Oliver. They paid 22 shillings yearly. Marion was possibly his mother. Perhaps the same ‘Hob Younge in the Watterside’ was recorded in 1571/2, when Richard Rutherford, Provost of Jedburgh, was surety for him. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He may served as factor or similar. His name is given as ‘Hobbe Yhoun’ (or ‘Young’). Robert (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot of Redhead. He went to Edinburgh with Elliot in 1624, apparently part of the plot to try to murder the Earl of Buccleuch, although it was not claimed that he was directly involved. Robert (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. C.) paid the cart tax at Clerklands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785–88. Robert (18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for carrier James Tudhope in 1765. He was married to Margaret Henderson and their children included: Isabel (b.1757); James (b.1762); Margaret (b.1766); and William (b.1771). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by carrier James Henderson (probably his brother-in-law), the 1760 baptism by carriers James Scott and William Hardie, and the 1766 baptism by James Henderson and Richard Young (surely a close relative). In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for William Richardson and Isobel Henderson (perhaps his sister-in-law), and in 1768 another for John Nichol. It is unclear if he was related to the later ‘Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’. Robert ‘Rob’ (b.1771) probably son of Richard and Margaret Scott. He was a blacksmith of the Back Raw, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories (when he was listed as being on the Howegate). His premises are marked ‘Young’ on Wood’s 1824 map, in the middle of the Back Row. In the 1841 census he lived with several other Youngs: Catherine (b.c.1890); Thomas (b.c.1809), also a blacksmith; Robert (b.c.1822), blacksmith’s apprentice; and Agnes (b.c.1825). He is mentioned in John Ballantyne’s song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’ – ‘And Rob Young o’ the Back Raw, Hei’s often shod ma clutes, Sae Aw wull leave him ma shank banes To bei a pair o’ butes’ [JSB]. He was still alive for the 1841 census. Robert (18th/19th C.) hedger at Larriston, listed among heads of households in 1835. Robert (19th C.) blacksmith on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is separate from the blacksmith Robert on the Howegate, and hence there must have been 2 men in the same trade with the same name at that time. He does not appear on the 1841 census, although there is a blacksmith of the same name in Oxnam Parish. Robert (1800–c.70) son of William, he was born at Ruecastle. He became a joiner, first working with Walter Amos at Blacklee. He later lived at Mackside and then Hobkirke, where he worked on the Wolfelee estate. After 10 years he moved to Edgerston, working on the estate of William Oliver Rutherford. His son William followed him into the joinery trade. Along with his sons William and James he emigrated in 1851, settling in Ontario, where he purchased 100 acres. Rev. Robert (d.1884) born in Covington, Lanarkshire, son of Schoolmaster James and Margaret Ferguson. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by Lanark Presbytery and became assistant at Selkirk before being ordained as minister of Teviothead in 1854. He died unmarried. He wrote ‘Dr. Bisset’s Address and Episcopal Tendencies’ (1864), ‘Henry Scott Riddell: Notes and Remembrances’ (published in Hawick, 1875), ‘On the History of Education in Scotland’ (1879) and ‘The Buccleuch Book, with Specific Reference to Allanhaugh’. Robert (19th C.) baker at 75 High Street. He married Agnes Lamb and their children included: Isabella Frank (b.1856); Helen (b.1858); Helen Jane (b.1860); Margaret (‘Maggie’, b.1862), who married Robert Riddle Thompson; Alexander (b.1865); Mary Lamb (b.1867); Janet Hall (b.1872); and Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), who married William Laidlaw. Robert (19th/20th C.) Hawick joiner, son of baker John. He married Margaret Barclay. Simon (15th C.) tenant in Roughlee. In 1493 he had remission for the crimes of bringing in Englishmen and plundering from Godalmed. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as his surety. He was surely related to John, who was recorded in Roughlee in 1494/5. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice- aird held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was a resident of Minto along with John, when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from them, specifically 2 bolls of barley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools. Probably the same Thomas was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 6 sheep of his ewes from Minto (with John also recorded). Probably the same man was recorded in 1502 as ‘Thomas Zoung’; he was a tenant in Cragend of Minto, along with his son Thomas, William Johnstone and Simon Leitch. His farm there was burned by a group consisting of David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshaws, Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and other ‘Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’. This raid included the burning of seven horses. He was also recorded in 1502 when a cow of his from ‘cragend’ was stolen by Adam Grahamlaw. Additionally William Turnbull of Minto was fined when he failed to appear in court; John, Richard and William in Minto were also recorded and hence probably related to him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Thomas, tenant in Minto Craigend. In 1502 it is recorded that their farm had been plundered by David Scott, ‘Lady’, from Stirches. Thomas (16th C.) ‘officiar of Lempetlaw’ for Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574. Thomas (16th/17th C.) granted a husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. Thomas (16th/17th C.) described as being ‘in Herrett’ (possibly Harwood) in a document of 1602. He was ‘bailie in that part’ to Lord Herries for a sasine in Rulewater. Thomas (16th/17th C.) Schoolmaster at Hobkirk, recorded in 1616. He was witness to a bond between William Scott of Todrig and Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh. Thomas (17th C.) recorded at Fastcastle in 1644, along with John. The pair were cited at the Presbytery for refusing to subscribe to the Covenant. They were surely related to each other and to other Youngs of Rulewater. Thomas (b.c.1810) son of blacksmith Rob. He was a blacksmith, like his father, being the eldest son, running the business on the Back Row in 1841. He does not appear on the 1851 census. Bailie Thomas ‘Farthin Tom’ (1815/6–91) from Duns, he was a draper at 45 High Street for more than 40 years, and owner of this building in the mid-19th century. His nickname came from his use of vulgar fractions in pricing. He was also one of the founders of the Hawick Billiard Club. He played an active role in public life, being a member of the old Town Council and made a Magistrate, although in later years he led a more private life. He was living on Buccleuch Street (about No. 1) in 1841 and at 45 High Street in 1851 and 1861. He married Agnes Grieve, who died in 1876, aged 62. Their children included Mary Stenhouse and Christina Brydon, neither of whom reached adulthood, as well as Robert, Mary S. and Agnes. Thomas (19th C.) precentor at Hawick Free Kirk 1850–53. Walter (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it still contained Hassendean. He married Margaret ‘creake’ (probably Craig) and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1687. The witnesses were William Scott and Patrick Dodds. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Turnbull and their children included: Isabel (b.1724); William (b.1727); Andrew (b.1728); Margaret (b.1728); Margaret (again, b.1730); and Walter (b.1735). The deceased Walter whose daughter Margaret died in 1791, could be him. William (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Minto in 1502. He was indicted and failed to appear at the Justice-aiire in Jedburgh, with his surety William Turnbull of Minto being fined. Thomas, John and Richard in Minto are also mentioned and probably related to him. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Wille Yong Cleynt Crossers servaunte’, when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. His brother ‘Jake Yong’ is also listed. It is unclear where they lived, or which Clement this was, although lands near the Slitrig are likely. William (16th C.) recorded in 1561, when Thomas Scott of Haining was obliged to enter him (or James Middlemas or a servant of James) before the Warden of the East Marches. He is recorded as ‘quhyte Will Young’, this probably being a nickname. This was to answer the charge of stealing from David Thomson in Berwick. William (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. William (17th C.) ploughman at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William who witnessed baptisms in Robertson Parish (but probably Hassendean) in 1684 and 1687 for Walter Turnbull, in 1687 for William Martin and in 1688 for Thomas Scott in Hassendean. William (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He married Janet Little and their children included: William (b.1725); and Isabel (b.1730). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by masons John and Andrew Turnbull. William (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He married Isobel Aitkin and their children included James (b.1740) and Isobel (b.1742). The witnesses in 1740 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and merchant James Sanderson and in 1742 were weaver David ‘Harg’ and workman Robert Boyd. He could be the same man as the William who earlier married Janet Little. William (18th C.) tradesman in Hawick, possibly a cooper. In 1754 he was paid ‘for clasp-ing the bell wheel’ of St. Mary’s Kirk. William (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in Hawick, probably son of Richard and Margaret Scott. He is probably the William recorded as blacksmith at the Midrow on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Betty Scott in Hawick in 1785. Their children included: Richard (b.1786), also a blacksmith; Walter (b.1788); Henry (b.1792); Margaret (b.1794); and Christian (b.1796), who married James Grieve in Midlem. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Burnhead, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 4 horses at that time. He was probably succeeded as farmer by Adam. William (b.c.1770) portioner at Ruecastle. He sold coals in Hawick which he drove from the English Border. He is recorded at Ruecastle on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. In 1832 he was one of the 13 voters in the Parish of Bedrule. He was recorded at Ruecastle in 1841. In 1795 he married Agnes Scott from Ancrum Parish. Their children were: Agnes, who died in infancy; Peggy; Robert, who became a joiner; Agnes (again); James; and William. He is buried at Bedrule. William (b.c.1803) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was Parochial Schoolmaster at Lasswade in 1851. His wife was Susan and they had a daughter Agnes. Rev. William (19th C.) from Kirriemuir, he was minister of Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk from 1857. In 1874 he moved to Parkhead, Glasgow where he was minister until 1907. William (1816/7–82) farmer at Rockvale. He married Margaret Fairbairn, who died in 1895, aged 80. Their children included: Catherine, who died in infancy; William, who farmed his father’s fields; and John, Sandbed baker. William (b.1816/7) from Jedburgh, he was a baker at the Sandbed. In 1851 he was listed at Teviot Square, probably around 12 Sandbed. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is also on Teviot Square and in 1861 he was at 12 Sandbed as baker, employing 9 bakers and 2 carters. His wife was Margaret and their children included John, Mary, Sarah and William. William (b.1819) son of Richard and Elizabeth Blacklock. He was a blacksmith on the High Street, at around No. 28. His wife Sarah was from Nottinghamshire. Their first child, Richard, was born at Newton in Northumberland, suggesting that he worked there for a while. William (19th C.) Judge at the Common Riding Games in the 1850s. He may be the same William who won the standing high leap at the 1840 Games. William (19th C.) farmer in Cavers or Minto Parish, listed in Slater’s directory of 1852. William (b.1831/2) recorded as miller at Spittal in 1861. He lived at ‘Spittal Cottars House’. His wife was Sarah, and they had a son Thomas. William (19th/20th C.) son of Rulewater joiner Robert. He was educated at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’ and Hobkirk School, then went with his father to work on the Edgerston farm. In 1851 he emigrated along with his father, settling in Ontario. There he purchased 500 acres, which he cleared and farmed. He married Janet Brown, daughter of an Edinburgh builder who settled in Lambton County, Ontario. Their children were: Robert, who married Sarah Walton; John, who also married; and Janet, who married W. Johnston. He returned to visit the Rule valley in 1905 (formerly spelled ‘Yong’, ‘Yonge’, ‘Yowng’, etc., as well as ‘Zong’, ‘Zoung’, ‘Zowng’, etc. in earlier documents).

Younger (yung-ur) adj. younger – ‘A’m the same age es ma pinkie, bit ma teeth er younger’ (note the lack of hard g in the pronunciation).

Younger (yung-ur) n. Archibald (15th C.) listed among local men as witness to the 1464/5 sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. His name is recorded as ‘Archibaldo Zungare’ John (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1511/2 sasine for the Barony of Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Johanne Zownger’. He was probably a prominent man in Hawick at the time. John (1785–1860) poet and writer from St. Boswells. Born in Longnewton, son of William and Jean Henderson, he was educated at Longnewton school. He grew up at Ellieston and followed his father as a shoemaker. His mother died when he was 10 and within a few years he had started to write verses. The family moved around, but settled in St. Boswells. His cottage there was called ‘Patmos’. He became an expert angler, as well as joining the Volunteers. In writing he was encouraged by Andrew Scott of Bowden and eventually published his first poetry in 1834, followed by others, as well as ‘River Angling for Salmon and Trouts’ (1840). He was heavily involved with the Burns centenary celebrations, giving lectures locally, as well as in Glasgow. An autobiography appeared in 1882, and contains an account of the ‘False Alarm’, amongst other local descriptions (formerly ‘Zownger’, etc.).

Youth (yooth) n. short title of the bronze statue, by A.J. Leslie, which is the centrepiece of the War Memorial in the Park, with full title ‘Spirit of Youth Triumphing over Evil’. It was exhibited at the Royal Academy and the Royal Scottish Academy, before being purchased by the Town on the advice of Dr. Pittendreigh Macgillivray, R.S.A.
the Youth Centre

the Youth Centre (thu-youth-sen’-ur) n. Hawick Youth Club, built at the top of Havelock Street in 1970 through the generosity of Miss S. Sime and Mr. W.A. Mactaggart, together with grants from the Council and other bodies.

yowe-brose (yow-bróz) n., arch. a dish made with oatmeal and mutton broth – ‘...it followed them hame even into Hyndlee kitchen, where the kitchen-woman offered it yowe brose’ [LHTB].

yowe-cheese (yow-cheez) n., arch. cheese made from sheep’s milk. This was once very common, the ewes being milked in ‘buchts’ towards the end of the summer and the rich product being mixed with cow’s milk to make the cheese – ‘She had brought the auld ewe-cheese’ [HSR], ‘Ewe cheese was quite a common article in shops in Hawick when I was a boy’ [HAST1910].

yowe see yow

yowf (yowf) n., arch. a blow, strike – ‘A yowf i’ the lug’ [ECS], v., arch. to strike, box the ears.

yowk (yowk) n., arch. yolk – ‘...An’ D., whose eggs have a’ twae yowks, Remarked, with malice prepense ...’[FL].

yowl (yow-ul) n., arch. a howl – ‘Then raised a youle, sae loud and lange – Sae yerlish and sae shrille, As dirled up throwe the twinkling holes The second lifte untillie’ [JTe], ‘The brocke upsterte with yerlish youle, And round the kyrk

ypothecar (ee p thee kur) n., arch. an apothecary – ‘Item, awand to William Purves, ypothecaur, threttene pundis, xj s.’ [SB1574] (also ‘apothecar’).

yr (thur, thair) pron., arch. abbreviation for ‘their’ or ‘there’, common in Burgh Records of the 17th and early 18th centuries – ‘…by virtue of an decret and arrestment following yr upon …’ [BR], ‘Item, that na persone nor personsse bring in, be themselfis, yr servandis …’ [BR1640] (along with similar spellings, this is probably an example of the disappearing ‘thorn’, i.e. derived from the penchant for substituting ‘v’ for the Old English letter ‘th’ in early printing).

yrf (ther for) adv., arch. therefore, abbreviated in older records – ‘…and yrfir the baillis, with consent of the council, ordained her to lie 48 hours in the stockis …’ [BR1638], ‘…prohibited and discharged by the forsd act of Parliat. and yrfor, they ilk ane, ought …to pay yr respective fynes and penalties’ [BR1702].

yrin (ther in) adv., arch. therein, abbreviated in written records – ‘…to go to the stockis immediately, and yrin to continue during the sd. regall baylyes his will and pleasure’ [BR1693], ‘…John Stewart. late towne officer, of the sd. towne (who was for many yeirs officer yrin) …’ [BR1696].

Yrostillotis (thros til kots) n. place name recorded in 1351 and suggested to be identified with Hoscote. It may be the same as the name recorded as ‘Thoftcotys’ in 1410, but whether these are simply early versions of ‘Hoscote’ or names for part of those lands is unclear (the name clearly derives from the Middle English for thrush, ‘throstel’).

ys (this) pron., arch. abbreviation for ‘this’, common in documents before the middle of the 18th century – ‘Intimation made ys day by the sd Mr Broun yt masters of families in ye parish may call for ye testimonials of ye servants …’ [PR1711], ‘…and was ordered to present his child either ys night or to-morrow to baptism’ [PR1713].

yt (tha) pron., arch. former abbreviation for ‘that’, common in older Burgh Records – ‘…for his contumacious language given to the sd baylyea att yt time’ [BR1685], ‘The sd day Mr Olifer did intimate yt these qo intended to go out of ye parish …may come and receive their respective testimonials. And likewise yt none receives servants or others without certificates …’ [PR1711] (see also at and that).

yuck (yuk) v. to chuck, throw, n. a throw, toss, a stone that is the right size for throwing – ‘The bigger the yuck and the greater the distance, the higher was the reputation of the thrower’ [HNe1972] (cf. chuckie and hyuck).

Yuil (yul) n., arch. Yule, midwinter festival – ‘Price of thirty-four sheep £102 Scots, or £3 a piece sold at Yuill’ [BR1638], ‘The drummer is allowed ten shillings yearly and his Yuill wages’ [BR1721] (note the former pronunciation, also written ‘Yuill’; cf. Yule).

Yule (yool) n. older name for the season or festival around Christmas. Before the reform of the calendar in 1752, this fell on 5th January. Around the 16th century it was one of the 3 times year that the Sheriff Court would meet (usually the first Tuesday after Epiphany). Note that it was once considered a superstitious festival in Scotland, observance being prohibited by an Act of the General Assembly in 1645 (formerly Yuil).

Yule (yool) n. Andrew (b.1788/9) from Samilholm Parish, he was a Sawyer in Wilton. He was recorded as a Sawyer on Wilton Path among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He was living on Under Damside according to the censuses of 1841 and 1851. His wife was Susan and their children included Andrew, William and Henry. Andrew (1935/6–97) born in Hawick, he was educated at St. Mary’s, Trinity and the High School. He worked at Waverley Mill on Mansfield Road then left Hawick to study textiles in Loughborough, eventually setting up his own knitwear business in the west of Scotland. But later he moved to America, where he became a full time writer in his late 40s. He wrote biographies of several actors and directors, including Sean Connery, Al Pacino, David Puttnam and Steven Spielberg. James (19th/20th C.) Common Riding Song Singer. He first took charge of the Snuffling in 1921, which has since been a traditional duty of the Song Singer. He was Song Singer in 1946. John (b.c.1810) Sawyer in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Pathhead. His wife was Agnes and their children included Agnes and Andrew. William D. (19th C.) Blacksmith at Smailcleugh in Southdean Parish, recorded there in the 1860s.

yule fee (yool-fee) n., arch. Fee levied on the community by the Burgh Officer around Christmas. The practice was discontinued in Hawick near the beginning of the 19th century — ‘Rob was the last functionary who levied yule fees from the community’ [JW] (also yule wages).

yule wages (yool-, yul-wa-jeez) n., pl., arch. Fees collected at Christmas — ‘The drummer is allowed ten shillings yearly and his Yuill wages’ [BR1721], ‘He had also the privilege of collecting ‘fra the honest men in the town’ what was termed ‘Yuill wadges’, now known as Christmas box’ [HAST1913] (also yule fee).

yuoot (yoo', yoot) v., arch. To whoop, yelp — ‘...an Al litte a sang an whomed an yuooted, leike as A’d gane wuth ...’ [ECS] (note that this was pronounced with a long, almost diphthongal oo-oo: cf. yowt).

Y.W.A.M. see Youth With A Mission

the Y.W.C.A. ([thu-wl-du-bu-lew-see-a]) n. the Young Women’s Christian Association, established in England in 1855, with an active group in Hawick by the 1880s, run by Mrs. Elliot Lockhart and Mrs. Glenny.

z (zi) n. Letter that sometimes stands for the ‘yogh’ symbol, since that was indistinguishable from a tallied cursive ‘z’. It was therefore sometimes printed as a ‘z’, although often the same words were alternatively spelled with a ‘y’. This led to pronunciations which voice the z (like the modern ‘Menzies’ and the usual pronunciation of the local name ‘Kedzie’), even although the correct pronunciation was originally more like yee. This confusion is particularly apparent in words containing ‘lz’, such as ‘asoolzie’, ‘balzie’, and ‘failzie’.

zebra crossin (ze-bru-kro-sin, zee-bru-kro-sin) n. These black and white striped crossings, accompanied by Belisha beacons, appeared experimentally in 1949 and were fully approved in 1951. The first one appeared in Hawick at least from 1952, on the High Street between Baker Street and O’Connell Street. Another 2 appeared near the Town Hall and across North Bridge Street near the Horse. These have been prominent landmarks ever since. The main one at the Town Hall was moved further north, denuded of stripes, and became a pedestrian-controlled crossing, but is still referred to as a ‘zebra crossing’. There are also pedestrian-controlled crossings at the top of Commercial Road and on Mart Street. The crossing over North Bridge Street/Oliver Place was removed following road changes at the Horse. There are still zebras with Belisha beacons over the Mart Street car park and across Mansfield Road near the Leisure Centre.

Zeppelins (zeb-linz) n., pl. German airships, which bombed targets in Britain during WWI, leading to the imposition of black-outs. 2 of them entered near Berwick in April 1916, killing 10 people on its way to Edinburgh. There was a local scare in August 1916, which turned out to be a British airship. A story that a Zeppelin bombed Robert’s Linn Bridge is unsubstantiated.

Zigzag Plantin (zig-zawg-pawn-in) n. Wooded area on the southern slopes of Ruberslaw, west of Town-o-rule farm, named for its shape. A ‘chipped and polished axe of grey-white volcanic tuff from the Langsdale axe factory’ was found just east of here and is now in the Museum.
Appendix A: Sources of quotations

The following is a list of abbreviations for authors from whom quotations have been taken, as credited in the text. Note that for some of the quotations (particularly older or anonymous ones) the reference given is to the author of the book or article in which the quote was found, and so in not all cases is the person listed the originator of the quote. In order to save space, specific publications and page numbers are not given, but in most cases the relevant body of work is modest enough that it would not be too difficult to find the relevant passage; however, for some historical examples the year is also given. Since older sources are scarce, some liberality is used in deciding whether the text represents local speech. The abbreviations used are:

Appendix E: Common Riding

Acting Fathers and Cornet’s Lasses are known only patchily in the 19th century. The earliest Acting Fathers were the Cornet’s own father. Long before the Cornet’s Lass was a formal position, there was a young lady chosen to buss the Flag. Brackets for the Chief Guest indicate a main guest at the Common Riding in the years before there was an official Chief Guest.
