who exchanged these 2 oxgongs for other nearby lands in about the 1190s. This Richard may have also succeeded the next Henry, and was therefore either his son or grandson. Henry (d.c.1216) Lord Cary, probably younger son of Henry, he succeeded his brother Ralph, who died in 1207. In 1197 he was assessed for fees for the Norman army. In the period 1198–1202 he was appointed as attorney in a case by Ralph de Trubleville. In 1207 he settled a case brought by Matilda, his brother Ralph’s widow, over lands she claimed she had been given in dower; this included 1/3 of the family’s barony in Scotland (presumably Hawick), but she settled for the manor of ‘Hunewic’ (i.e. Honeywick near Castle Cary), together with money and livestock. In 1208 he paid 300 marks for the livery of his lands, and still held some Somerset lands jointly with his mother Alice and sister-in-law Maud (the same as Matilda). In 1210 he paid King John to avoid going on the expedition to Ireland. He married Christiania and was succeeded by his brother (although some accounts say son) Richard. However this genealogy may be confused, and there may be another extra generation of Henrys and/or Richards. He may be the Henry who was among witnesses to a charter for Gilmerston in the Glasgow chartulary in the reign of William. His widow ‘Cristina’ secondly married Richard Cotel; in about 1222 she complained that Richard ‘Luvel’ (probably her brother-in-law, or possibly her son) had dispossessed her of some of her dower lands. In 1248 she complained again about being removed from her dower lands, and there was a complicated agreement over several lands, including ‘Honeywyk’ (i.e. Honeywick near Castle Cary). Henry (d.1262/3) of Castle Cary and Hawick, 2nd son of Richard, his elder brother William dying before their father. He married Eve (or Eva), who died in 1294. They had sons Richard and Hugh, who both succeeded. They also had daughters Alicia (the elder) and Cristiana (d.bef. 1264), who were both unmarried. Little else is known about him and it is unclear whether he played any direct role in the Hawick area. He may be the ‘Sir H.’ who witnessed an agreement in Somerset in 1256. In 1263 his son and heir Richard did homage to the English King and received his father’s lands. However in 1264 there was an inquest into the age of Richard’s brother Hugh, and whether he should be heir of ‘Kari Lovel’; his widow ‘Lady Eva Lovel’ is also mentioned. Also in 1264 his daughter Alicia brought a case against Hugh, complaining that he had tried to dispossess her from the lands that she and her deceased sister Cristiana had been granted. His widow Eva is further referred to in 1294 when her lands and her son Hugh’s lands were given to the custody of John de Soulis. Hugh (d.c.1290) of Castle Cary and Hawick, brother of Richard and 2nd son of Henry. In 1264 there was an inquiry into his age, since his brother Richard had died, and so he succeeded to the barony of ‘Kari Lovel’ (i.e. Cary). Also in 1264 his sister Alicia accused him of dispossessing her of a manor in Sussex, given to her and her deceased sister Cristiana; he was charged to allow his sister to keep her farm. He was recorded as Baron of Hawick in 1268. A 1268 plea against him for restoring a watercourse at Castle Cary mentions that his grandfather was Richard. A further case in 1268 involves his sister-in-law Cecilia and the land of ‘Wynkanton’. He was recorded as lord of ‘karycastel’ in the 1270s, in 1274 was ‘Sir Hugh’ of Cary when he made an agreement with the Prior of Bruton, and was ‘Hugone Luvel’ when he witnessed a grant for Bruton Priory. He married Eleanor (or ‘Alianors’) and their children were: Sir Richard, who succeeded in 1303 when still a minor, becoming Lord of Castle Cary and Baron of Hawick; and Olivia, who married John de Gournay. He was recorded in 1291 when his widow was directed not to re-marry without the King’s permission and John de Soulis was given custody of 2/3 of his lands until his heir reached majority. Additional lands and privileges of his (including the church of ‘Stoketone’) were granted to John de Soulis in 1292/3, and also in his lands were confirmed to John de Soulis, along with the lands which Eva Lovel (his mother) had held until his majority. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English record of 1306 as a supporter of Robert the Bruce who had been sent to a prison. It is unclear how he was related to the other Lovels of the time. Sir James (c.1316–42) only son of Richard the first Lord of Castle Cary. He married Elizabeth or Isabel around 1328, but died before his father. Their children were Richard (who died young) and Muriel (who inherited the titles and married Nicholas Seymour). Sir William of Douglas had a crown charter of 1341 for all his forfeited lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1342 his widow is recorded having liferent of 2 manors in Somerset, which had been given to him by his father in 1328/9. Sir John (13th C.) recorded ‘as magistro Johanne Lovel’ on an assize in Cumberland in 1292, then in a court case in Newcastle in 1293, relating to affairs in Scotland. He was also recorded in the same way in 1296, in a document relating to equipping Edward I’s expedition into Scotland. He was certainly English, but it is unclear where he came from. He was also recorded as ‘the marshal’ who had come to pacify the dispute between the Welsh and English in Edinburgh. Lawrence (13th C.) recorded (probably early) in the period 1259–86 in a document relating to King Alexander at Lanark. He served as some kind of soldier. It is unclear how he was related to other Scottish Lovels. Margaret (d.bef. 1164) wife of Ralph. It is unknown what her maiden name was, but not impossible she was also a Lovel. She may have held the lands of Hawick after her husband’s death. Her son and heir was Henry. She secondly married Thomas of London (who also married Escina of Mow); with the consent of her sons Henry and Thomas she granted ‘Ughtredshagh’ (probably Outsides) to Jedburgh Abbey at its foundation, as confirmed in about 1170. Maurice (13th C.) probably son of Henry. Along with Richard he exchanged these 2 ogresses for other nearby lands in about the 1190s. He may be the Maurice who witnessed an undated grant by Richard, Lord of Cary, to the Priory of Bruton, with another witness being Henry, son of Richard. Maurice (13th C.) recorded as ‘Morice Louel, persone del Eglise de Petyt Cares, del counte de Rokesburgh’ (i.e. ‘parson of Little Cavers’) in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. In a list drawn up in 1777 he is transcribed as ‘Mauricius Lunel, Parsona ecclesi de Parva Caures’. The ‘Agneys Louel’, widow of Henry, who also appears on the Ragman Rolls may have been his mother. Note that there was another Maurice a generation or 2 earlier, probably brother of the Richard who died in 1253. Muriel (b.1331/2) daughter of James, who died in 1342, she succeeded her grandfather Sir Richard in 1351, probably becoming Baroness Lovel. It is unclear if she inherited the Barony of Hawick, although control of the lands was certainly no longer in Lovel hands by her time. She married Nicholas, Lord St. Maur. Ralph (d.c.1121) one of the earliest known Lovels. He held Castle Cary in 1107. He was probably the son of Walter de Douai, Baron Bampton, who held the Castle at the time of the Domesday Book. However, these early generations are very uncertain, and it is unclear how he may have been related to the other contemporary Lovels. He may have been succeeded by Baldwin. Ralph (d.c.1159) of Tintenhuil and Castle Cary, son of William (although possibly related to the near contemporary Baldwin, since accounts of these generations are very uncertain). He may have been the first family member to adopt the surname ‘Lovel’, based on the family nickname ‘Lupellus’, meaning ‘Little Wolf’ (which was also applied to his brothers Henry and William). He appears to have also had the nickname ‘Simelt’. Along with his father he was part of the rebellion against King Stephen of England, and defended Castle Cary in a siege in 1152. He is said to have married a daughter of Henry de Novo Mercatu, from whom he received Dunkerton in Somerset. This wife could have been Margaret, who appears to have been the heiress of Hawick (and so possible the barony was part of her dower lands), and died before 1164; it is not impossible that she was the Margaret who secondly married Thomas de London. He was succeeded by Henry, who was probably his brother (or possibly his son). He may be the Ralph who restored the grant of lands to the Priory of Bruton that his father had taken away; this was witnessed by ‘Thoma Lupell’, who was surely a close relative. Ralph (d.c.1207) eldest son of Henry, from whom he succeeded, before in turn becoming succeeded in the Baronies of Castle Cary and Hawick by his brother Henry. His name is also recorded as ‘Rodolph’. He married Maud (or Matilda), daughter of Henry de Newmarche. In 1207, after he had died without issue, ‘Matillidis’ claimed her dower lands and made a settlement with her brother-in-law Henry over rights to the manor of ‘Hunewic’ (probably ‘Honeywick’). In about 1222 his widow was now married to Ralph Lebutiler, when she and Christina (widow of Henry) complained that Richard had dispossessed them of their inheritance, including some lands in Scotland. Richard (12th C.) of Castle Cary and Hawick, possibly son of Henry. He married Alice and their sons were William (who died young) and Henry. He is probably also the ‘Ricardi Lupelli domini de Hawic’ recorded in the Register of the Priory of St. Andrews in about the 1190s. There he exchanged 2 ‘bovates’ (i.e. ogresses) of land between Whames and Whithope to the canons of St. Andrews, in exchange for lands in ‘Brancheshelm’ (i.e. Brancxholm) which had been conferred by his father Henry. The boundaries of these lands are given, and are interesting in preserving several lost place names, namely ‘anesotd terre’, ‘chestris’, ‘farmop’, ‘langesideburne’ and ‘quikenne’. He may also be the ‘Richard Luvell, lord of Cary’ who confirmed a gift to the Priory of Bruton, and whose confirmation was witnessed by his son Henry, as well as Maurice (who could have been his brother).
Note that there are several Richards, Henrys and Ralphs at about this time, and so the details of the family tree are hard to disentangle. Richard (d.1253) probably son of Henry, and brother of Ralph and Henry. However, given the length of time that elapsed, it is also possible he was son of an additional Richard, and hence grandson of Henry. He was probably the Richard ‘Luvel’ who was involved in a land transaction relating to Biddesham near Cary in 1203/4. He succeeded Henry in 1218, paying £100 for the livery of Cary and the other Somerset estates. In about 1222 he was described as tenant when there was a claim against him by Christina, widow of Henry. She had remarried to Richard Cotel, and claimed that he had dispossessed her of her dower lands of ‘Kary, Wreketon and Pidecumbe’, as well as other lands and rights. Also mentioned was Matilda, formerly wife of Ralph ‘Luvel’, and now wife of Ralph Lebutiler, who also held lands in inheritance. These disagreements included ‘the land which Richard Luvel held in Scotland’. In 1231 he had a charter for demesne lands of Cary and also witnessed another charter. He is further recorded in the 1230s and 40s regarding knights service. In about 1237 he gave agreement that the Priory of Bath should hold the rights to the church of Castle Cary, as granted by his father Henry. In 1248 Christina ‘Luvel’ (stated to have been the wife of his brother) complained again that he owes her money and dower lands, ‘as well in England as in Scotland’. A court case against him in 1255 was adjourned because he was deceased by then. He married Alice, whose surname is unknown. After she was widowed, her marriage was granted to William Berkeley, but he married someone else and so she then married Nicholas de Haversham. Their children included: William, who died before him; and Henry, who succeeded. Richard (d.1263/4) of Castle Cary and Hawick, eldest son of Henry. He succeeded his father, but died only a year or two later, and was in turn succeeded by his brother Hugh. He married Cecily (or Cecilia), whose surname is unknown; she was involved in a plea regarding her dower lands of ‘Wynkanton’ in 1268. He is recorded as ‘Richard Lupell’ in the Scottish Exchequer Rolls in the period 1264–66 as late owner of the Barony of Hawick. Richard (13th C.). His lands are referred to in 1278 by the Sheriff of Somerset and Dorset, and again in 1283. It is unclear who he was. Sir Richard (c.1283–1351) Lord Lovel, son of Hugh. He was born at Castle Cary and was custodian of the castles of Corfe and Purbeck. He succeeded his father in about 1291, while still a minor, his guardian being John de Soulis. In 1297 he swore to Edward I that he would serve him against France. He is listed in rolls of knights in 1298 and 1301 and found 2 men to serve Edward I in 1302. In about 1303 he achieved majority and took up his estates. In 1306 he received 10 marks for helping Edward against Robert the Bruce. He probably left Scotland soon afterwards, since Branxholme (in the Barony of Hawick) was granted to Sir Henry Baliol in 1307, with a confirming charter in about 1321. Furthermore the Barony of Hawick was granted to the Earl of Strathearn (perhaps before 1329). In 1310 he received the Manor of ‘Wynfirthegle’ in exchange for his wife’s manor of Old Roxburgh. In 1318/9 he was ‘lord of Caricastel’ when he gave up his rights to some lands in favour of Montacute Priory, with his wife Muriel also being mentioned. He was also holder of the Barony of Hawick in one of the oldest existing records, when it was regranted by Edward III in 1347 (although at a similar time it was also granted to Maurice Murray by David II of Scotland). Sometime before 1310/1 he married Muriel (or Muriella), daughter and heir of John Soulis (his guardian) of Old Roxburgh. However, in 1316 he was given a charter of Sir John Soulis’ lands in Dumfries, as well as Old Roxburgh, but then Old Roxburgh was kept for the safety of Roxburgh Castle, and he was granted the Manor of Bradenach in Devon in exchange. In 1335 he had the castles of Corfe and Purbeck committed to him and his wife (Muriel Soulis). He was summoned to English Parliament in 1348 and 1350 as Lord Lovel. His children were: Joan, who married Sir John de Moels; James, who died before him and whose daughter Muriel succeeded, followed by her son Richard Seymour; and Eleanor, who married Roger Rouhaut of Aston Rowant. He is probably the Richard whose seal bore a lion rampant on a background of crosses. The failure of the male line here ended the direct succession of more than 2 centuries. Robert (d.1121) son of Ascelin Goue de Percival and brother of William (at least in some accounts of the early Lovels). He probably inherited Castle Cary from his father in about 1119, but died soon afterwards. In 1119 he took up arms against Henry I, but negotiations, involving Radulfus Rufus (his brother-in-law) led him to switch allegiance to the King. He may be the ‘Robertus Luvelius’ who witnessed a gift to the canons of Bruton. He left no issue and was succeeded by his brother William. Roger (13th C.) son of Roger. In 1242 he and Richard de Dreydcole confirmed a grant of lands to the Canons of Bruton; `Domino Ricardo Lupello' was the first witness and hence probably a close relative. He is recorded as `Rogero Lupello' when he witnessed an agreement with the Priory of Bruton in 1253. Probably the same Roger was also recorded in some other Somerset documents at about the same time. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among men for whose murder William Clerk `apud ecclesiam foreste' (i.e. at the Kirk of the Forest) had remission a the Justiceaire in Selkirk. He may have been one of the last men of this surname in the region. William (d.c.1155) of Castle Cary, also described as Earl of Yvery and ‘Lupellus’, his surname may have been ‘Gouel de Perceval’, with ‘Lovell’ being first adopted by his son from the ‘Lupellus’ nickname. It is said that his nickname was the diminutive form of ‘Lupus’, which had been attached to his father. In some accounts of the early Lovels he is the son of Ascelin Gouel de Perceval and younger brother of Robert, from whom he succeeded; however, these early generation are very uncertain, and there is dispute among authorities. He held estates of Yvery in Normandy and Cary, Weston, Stawell, etc. in England. Spending more time in England than his father and grandfather, he may have built the first stone castle at Castle Cary. He fought for Waleran in a rebellion against Henry I about 1123, escaping imprisonment in 1124 and returning home in disguise, barefoot, having given the Seine ferryman his shoes. He supported Matilda against Stephen in the English civil war, resulting in Stephen besieging Castle Cary, taking it in 1138, but returning it on the promise not to support Matilda. The castle was again besieged in 1153, when William and his son Ralph reneged on this promise, but was saved by the arrival of the Earl of Gloucester’s force. He is probably the ‘Willelmus, qui cognominatur Lupellus’ who had a charter with the Abbey of St. Peter of Chartres in the early 12th century. He also confirmed a gift to the Priory of Bruton. It is unclear if he was also Baron of Hawick, or if the barony was first held by his son, or even if it was held by another family member during his lifetime. He married Auberie, sister of Waleran de Bellemonte, Earl of Mellent (and related to the Kings of France). Their children may have included: Waleran, Baron de Yvery, whose descendants retained that Barony until the 15th century; Ralph, who succeeded to Castle Cary; Henry, who later succeeded; William of Titchmarsh and Minster Lovel, although this is disputed by some accounts; and Richard Perceval, ancestor of the Earls of Egmont. William (14th C.) said to have forfeited lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale in the reign of David II. These lands were granted to William, Lord Douglas, younger. He is probably the Sir William who was at ‘Hayednebrugge’ in 1327. However, it is unclear how he was related to James, who forfeited the same lands in 1341; it may be that the names were in error (also written ‘Lovell’, ‘Lowel’, ‘Lupellus’, ‘Lovel’, ‘Luvel’, ‘Luvellus’, etc.).

Lovel Court (lu-vul-kör) n. street name for the courtyard developed behind Drumlanrig’s Tower when the area was renovated in the early 1990s. It had once been the stabling area for the Tower Inn and a large building housing the Tower Garage (originally misspelled ‘Lovell’ on the street sign).

Lovell see Lovel

the Lovels (thu-lu-vulz) n. family name of Norman nobility who were given lands around Hawick by David I in the 1120s or 30s. The family held the lands of Yvery in Normandy. They may have settled in Teviotdale in the previous reign of Alexander I. Their lands included Brauxholme, which they held until 1307. They built their castle, the Moat (or Motte), a wooden palisaded tower on a mound of earth, as a symbol of their lordship of the lands around Hawick. They later built a more substantial tower where Drumlanrig’s Tower now stands, as well as rebuilding St. Mary’s in stone. The Lovels held the patronage of the church in Hawick until 1355. The family also held lands elsewhere, particularly Castle Cary in Somersershire (south of Bristol). Castle Cary was a Norman fortification, built at the foot of Lodge Hill, and held by the Lovels from perhaps 1107 until it was destroyed about 1155. The fortifications can still be seen above the town, including a mound where the castle stood (reminiscent of Hawick’s Moat). During the Wars of Independence their loyalties lay with the English and the family returned to Somerset. Their Hawick lands were forfeited by David II and given to Maurice Murray, later being passed to Archibald Douglas in the 15th century. The Lovels continued to hold lands in Somerset long after the castle there had been destroyed, and the town there is still called Castle Cary. The family name probably derives from an early member nicknamed ‘Lupellus’ (Little Wolf) which became ‘Lupel’ and then ‘Lovel’. Their arms were a gold background strewn with crosses, and with a blue lion rampant. The identification of Lovel of Hawick and Brauxholme with Lovel of Castle Cary was only made in about the 1870s by historian Joseph Bain. Note that there were other prominent branches of the family, e.g. the Lovels of Titchmarsh (or ‘Tichnersh, in Northamptonshire), the Lovels of Minster Love (in Oxfordshire) and the Lovels of Bal-lumbie (in Angus), but they may not all have been directly connected. There is a Lovel mentioned in the Scottish ballad ‘The Battle of Otterburn’ and a ballad called ‘Lord Lovel’ (about a knight who dies of sorrow after returning to hear of the death of his love) – ‘What shameful deed besmirched with guilt Attached to the Lovels’ name? What untold sin? – no mortal knows Except the monk who shrived the same’ [JCG],

Low (lə) n. Rev. Alexander (19th/20th C.)
minister of the Park Church in Newcastleton.
This was the former Free Church, and now the village hall. He resigned in 1934, after which the charge of this church was merged with that of the South Church in the village. In 1906 he sued the Council for leaving a mud-heap in the road, which he fell over in the dark. The village hall was later named in his honour.
Lower Calaburn (lə-ur-kaw-la-burn) n. for-

Lowis (lowz) n. Patrick of Manor (d.bef. 1459) from the family which held half of the Barony of Manor (the other being held by the Inglis family, with a small part also connected with the glocal Gledstains). He acted as Baron Bailie for the Scotts of Buccleuch, and is recorded as witness to documents at least from 1427–57. In 1446
he witnessed the charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. In 1447 he was one of the witnesses to the feu charter between Simon of Routledge and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for lands of Birkwood just outside Hawick. In 1449
he was Patricio Lowis de Mener’ when he witnessed the renunciation of the lands of Lochurd and Kirkurd by Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1451 he witnessed a document for Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd in Edinburgh. He was succeeded by Thomas, probably his son. William (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumnlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484.
Lowlands (lə-lənds) n. the lowlands of Scotland, generally in contradistinction with the Highlands,
but often meaning the central region of Scotland.
However, locals would never call the Borders the Lowlands.

Ludne (lu-den) n. former name for a former area in Liddesdale. In a rental roll of c.1376 the ‘Quar-terium de Ludne’ is listed as one of the 4 main sections, including 29 farms, with total value of 18 pounds 11 shillings and 8 pence. Among the farms was Greenshiels, Oldshiels, Carryshiels, Hartsgarth, Langhaugh and Tofts, and the holders of lands were ‘Fethyng’, ‘Loumane’, ‘Willelmi filii Alanii’, ‘ Ricardi de Roule’ and ‘Willelmi del Syde’. It seems to have coincided with the west side of the Hermitage Water. However, the precise extent of the area, as well as the pronunciation and any connection with modern lands, is unknown.
Luff

Luff (luft) n. John George (1845/6–1918) local hotel proprietor. Born in Sussex, he came to Hawick about 1877 as a waiter in the Tower Hotel, where he developed a novel shorthand slate attached to his waiter's tray. It is said that he spoke fluent French and Italian, having spent time on the Continent. He went into business on his own, later having the Central Hotel built, which he ran originally as a temperance hotel. He later offered to demolish the 'Coffin End' at his own expense if the Town would grant him a liquor licence; this request was denied, but after improving his hotel and being granted a licence, he did in fact have the wooden eye-sores removed and gifted the land to the Town. He was a vocal opponent of the Clubs of the Town and in general, claiming they were merely unlicensed drinking establishments; he published some pamphlets on this topic. He was a Councillor for Wilton Ward in the period 1901–04, being fond of novel schemes and for quoting aphorisms, and famous for speeches he gave from the Central Hotel balcony. On one such famous occasion he proposed a scheme to turn the Park into a pleasure park, with a huge artificial lake. He published 'A system of mastering Pitman's manual' (1877), 'Thoughts on clubs by a country cook' (1899) and 'The Income Tax Corrector (c.1910). His engraved shorthand tray is in the Museum, and he is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery – 'When the moon is made of clay. When Councillor Luff is Provost, Oh! are the most unlikely birds That ever went into the sky. When Councillor Luff is Provost, Oh! won't the pork be high!' [T], 'He's a scrumptious sort of man is John George Luff, He's a bump-won't the pork be high!' [T], `He's a scrumptious sort of man is John Georg Luff' [JCG].

Lunn (lun) n. Derek local photographer, longtime member of Hawick Camera Club and Associate Member of the Royal Photographic Society. He was named Scottish Portrait Photographer of the Year in 2002. With Ian Landles he mounted exhibitions with accompanying books: ‘Honest Men and Bright-eyed Daughters’ (1990); ‘Mair Honest Men ...’ (1993); and ‘Son of Honest Men’ (2000). He also plays guitar and sings, being for several years in the band ‘3D’. Donald (1931–2008) born on the Loan, he was an apprentice butcher with Scott & Telfer’s and started his own business on the Howegate, famous for his tripe and haggis. He also played rugby for the Trades and served in the R.A.F. for 2 years. He was Cornet in 1957 and was President of the Callants’, Mosstroopers’ and 1514 Clubs. He married Eileen and had a daughter Vivienne.

James (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. His son, also James, was a witness in 1666 to a case involving a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk between William Turnbull and James Chisholme. He could have been the James, married to Marion Brown, whose children, baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1644); James (b.1646); and Margaret (again, b.1648). Alternatively he could have been the James, married to Janet Hobkirk, whose son Walter was baptised in 1639. James (17th C.) weaver in Hawick listed among those who contributed funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He seems likely to be son of the earlier weaver James. He may be the James, married to Marion Wilson, whose children born in Hawick included: Thomas (b.1671); Marion (b.1672); James (b.1680); Jane (b.1683), Thomas (again, b.1686); and Bessie (b.1689). Marion who married William Murray in Yarrow in 1701 may be his daughter. James (b.c.1705) resident of Hawick. He married Helen Rae (b.c.1711) and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Katherine (b.1738); and Walter (b.1740). He may be the James, son of John, born in Hawick in 1705, or the son of James born in Cavers in 1708. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Earlsdie. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (1769–1839) son of Walter and Betty Turnbull. He was born at Colterscleuch. Based on the births of his children he lived at Rough-hope, and elsewhere in the Borthwick and upper Teviot valleys. He married Elizabeth Telford (c.1773–1845), who is buried at Teviot-head. Their children included: Elizabeth (1796–1880), who married James Lough at Ropelaw-shiel; Mina (c.1799–1888), who married Henry Scott and died at Milston; Joan (c.1801–80), who married William Scott; Walter (1803–73), who married Janet Grieve and died at Meadshaw; Janet (1806–79), who married William Beattie; and Grace, who married Robert Armstrong. John (18th C.) married Isobel Young in Robertson in 1687. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick who gave evidence in 1710 about a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk between 2 other weavers. He married Marion Wight in Hawick in 1701. Their daughter Marie was born that same year, with James Scott (‘Laird’) and weaver Mungo Swan as witnesses. Janet (b.1703) and James (b.1705) may also have been his children. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Lodgkno (in Cavers Parish), recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1777–1861) son of Walter and Betty Turnbull. He was a labourer living in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 6 South Liddle Street, and in 1851 was with his son Robert at Eskdalemuir. He married Isabella Eckford, who came from Crailing. Their children included: Walter (1806–79), who was born in Hobkirk Parish, married Margaret Dalgelish and live in Selkirk; Agnes (1807–90), who married Francis Govenlock; George (b.1809); Elizabeth (1817–93), born in Kirkton Parish, married Archibald Hall and died in Langholm; and Robert (1817–56), who married Isabella Armstrong. He secondly married Nelly (d.1870), daughter of John Hotson. John (b.1802) son of James and Janet Reid. He was a woollen and linen draper in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was listed as a merchant in Lilliesleaf in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was recorded on the south side of Main Street. He lived with his mother Janet and sisters Margaret and Jean. He was probably unmarried when he died. His drapery business was carried on by James Hood, and in 1872 (after his death) was renamed John Lunn & Co. John (1812–71) from Lilliesleaf, he wrote occasional pieces for the local press. He could be the same man as the draper in Lilliesleaf. He chaired the Lilliesleaf centenary Burns Night. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1689 he was fined by the Magistrates for the ‘exhorbitant’ wedding of his daughter to William Douglas. He was listed as a merchant among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same Thomas ‘Lune’ was listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the ‘T. Lun’ who was fined by the Bailies in 1675 ‘in not coming to the night watch when he was charged to do so’. He may be the Thomas, married to Margaret Armstrong, whose children baptised in Hawick included Marion (b.1672) and Alison (or perhaps ‘A son’, b.1675); the witnesses in 1675 were James Newbie and William Swan. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1724 he appeared before the Session to apologise for defaming his fellow weaver William Scott. He was probably the Thomas born in Hawick in 1686 to James and Marion Wilson. Thomas ‘Tom’ (18th/19th C.) weaver at Shuttlehaa near Teviothead. It is unclear how he was related to other local Lunns.

William (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1774 when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish (formerly written ‘Lun’, ‘Lum’, etc.).

Lunon (lu-nin) n. London, capital of England, once connected to Hawick by train – ‘I wonder how the King an’ the fouk o Lunin allow sic things’ [RW] (spelled several ways).

Lunt (lun, lunt) n., arch., poet. a light, ember, match, piece of inflammable material – ‘Lunt … The flame of a smothered fire which suddenly bursts into a blaze, Teviotd.’ [JoJ], ‘A wheen folk oot picnickin at a deike-fit on Duniosseid hed kinnelt a lunt … ’ [ECS], ‘Salome flang like a wan-ton, free, A lunt, the flash o’ her witchin’ ee’ [WL], v., arch. to become alight – ‘Thae rositty sticks’ll lunt grand’ [GW], to set on fire, to light – ‘A luntin’ match’ [GW], to smoke a pipe, especially to make it give off a lot of smoke.

Luntin (lun'-in) adj., arch. sprightly – ‘She’s a luntin’ hizzy’ [GW].

Luppen (lu-pin) pp., adj., arch. leapt – ‘The flae’s luppen away’ [ECS], ‘That stirk’s luppen owre the yett’ [ECS], burst, split open – ‘A luppen cabbitch’ [GW], ‘Thae’s graand meely taatils; thay’re aa luppen’ [ECS], ‘His beelin finger’s luppen’ [ECS] (this is the past participle form of lowp, with the past tense being lap or lowpit).

Luppen-oot (lu-pin-oo) adj., arch. flushed through blushing, broken out in a red rash – ‘A luppen-oot face (cf. flown-oot)’ [ECS].

Lurden (lur-din) n. farm in the former Has-sendean Parish, just to the north of Knowetownhead (this is an old Scots word for ‘mean fellow, sluggard’).
Lurden Burn

Lurden Burn (lur-din-burn) n. small stream that rises near Clarilaw, passes Hassendeaburn farm and joins the Hassendeaburn Burn at Lurden. A footbridge over the burn gives access to the farm.

Lurden Entry (lur-din-en-tree) n. former name for a track leading from Lurden and Knovetownhead to the B6359 just east of Horsleyhill. There was a railway bridge over the track here, and another bridge over the railway to the south.

Lurgies Burn (lur-gee-z-burn) n. stream that runs into the Harwood Lake in the upper Rule valley. It is formed from Black Cleuch and the Freestone Cleuch.

Lurgiescleuch (lur-gee-z-clooch) n. farm on the track above Harwood, lying on the Lurgie Burn. It was the former home of Hawick historian Robert Wilson’s family (probably his grandfather), hence his nickname ‘Lurgie’. It once formed the eastern quarter of the lands of Fairnielees and was sold by William, Earl of Lothian in 1647 (along with Stanedge) to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers. There was a railway bridge over the track here, and a second bridge over the railway to the south. A footbridge over the burn gives access to the farm and surrounding area in Southdean, just south of the main road between Chesters and Southdean. Robert Oliver was tenant there about 1502. The Olivers farmed there for many generations, this being the same family as the Olivers of Dinlabyre, and said to have been descended from the Strynds branch. It has also been stated that around the 17th century the family made a fortune from driving Scottish cattle to markets in England, when that was illegal. It was described being 2 steadings valued at 50 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In 1541 the tenants listed on the rental roll were William (“the Lawyer”), Marion (his mother), John (Blackhead), another John, Katherine, Marion, Janet and Robert Oliver; it was split into 4 parts, with total value 50s. A tower near here was burned by Dacre’s men (led by Sir John Radcliff) in late 1513 and by the English again in 1544; there is now no sign of the tower house, and the modern farmhouse bears the date 1777. William Oliver, Hob Oliver and John Oliver, younger, were all of Lustruther when they were among Olivers swearing allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. It is said that around the 17th century the Olivers of Lustruther made a fortune engaged in (illegally) driving cattle across the Border. David Turnbull, tenant there, was exiled for perjury in 1622. The tenants of the farm in 1699 were Agnes Shiel and William Oliver. Christian Oliver was recorded there in 1684. George Riddell was there in 1688, John Oliver in 1694, William Slatter in 1797 and James Fair around the 1820s. Above the plantation known as Lustruther Strip is a short linear earthwork, and in the same area there is a quarry, field boundaries and rig and furrow lines (the origin is probably Old English ‘hlose’ and Middle English ‘struther’, meaning ‘the pig-sty by the marsh; the name is first recorded in 1502 as ‘Lustruther’; it is ‘Lurchestrother’ in 1513, ‘Lustrother’ in 1538, ‘Lustrudir’ in 1539, ‘Lustruder’ and ‘Lustroder’ in 1544, ‘Lustruther’ in 1562, ‘Lustrother’ in 1583, ‘Lustruir’ in 1622 and ‘Lusteruther’ in 1694; it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Lustruther’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Listruther’).

Lut *(lu’, lut) v., poet. to let – ‘An’ he lut it fa’ in the middle o’ thair camp roun’ aboot thair bydin’-pieces [HSR], ‘The king sendet an’ lowe-set him; een the ruulir o’ the peple, an’ lut him gae free’ [HSR] (cf. luit and lut).

Luderdale (loo-thur-dal) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Areanda Luderali’ when he witnessed the baronial sasine for Hawick in 1511/2. This was along with Robert (Chaplain) and James, who were presumably related. He also witnessed the sasine of 1514 for James Douglas of Drumlanrig. Note that this is essentially the same name as Andrew ‘Lirrerdale’, who was Abbot of Dryburgh 1482–1508, suggesting a possible link. He seems likely to be related. to the Lairds of St. Mary’s Isle in Kirkudbrightshire, who appear to have moved there from the Roxburghshire and Berwickshire area in the mid-16th century. David (d.bef. 1486) recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale 1474–75. His is probably the ‘Duncan archd. of Glasgow’ mentioned in 1474. He appears as Archdeacon of Dunkeld 1475–79. He was also Canon of Dunblane and Rector of St. Ternan in Arbruthnott. He served as Comptroller (i.e. responsible for accounts) under James IV. James (15th/16th C.) probably related to Andrew and Robert, who also witnessed the 1511/2 sasine for the Baron of Hawick, the ceremony taking place at the Mote. It is possible he is the ‘James Liderdale, chaplainm native of Scotland’ recorded in Greenwich in the 1516 ‘Patent Rolls’ of Henry VIII. John (15th C.) notary in Edinburgh who witnessed a document relating to the lands of Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1475/6. He is recorded as ‘Jhoanne Luderdale’. Robert (15th/16th C.) first witness to the 1511/2 sasine for giving the Baron of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is recorded as ‘domino Roberto Luderdale, capellano’, so he was Chaplain, presumably of Hawick, and held a Masters degree. Andrew and James were also witnesses, and so probably brothers or sons. He also witnessed the sasine for the Baron in 1514, listed after Alexander Newton, ‘vicario de Hawik’. This suggests he had a subsidiary function to Newton, or was in charge of one of the smaller chapels within the Barony. Probably the same ‘domino Roberto Luthirdale’ was listed in a Glasgow Diocese document in 1510. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1432 to the sasine giving the Baron of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; there his name is recorded as ‘Thoma Luderydall’, and he is listed as a Burgess (presumably of Hawick) along with Simon Routledge. He was also ‘Thoma de Luderdale’ in 1452 when he was among 4 Burgess of Hawick on the list of witnesses to the sasine granting the Baron of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is recorded in an early Hawick sasine of 1453, where his name was written ‘Thomas of Luderdale’. In 1455 he was ‘Thomas de Luthirdale’ when he witnessed a document at St. Mary’s relating to the lands of Whitchesters. And in 1456 he was one of the witnesses for another Whitchesters document, where he is listed as ‘Thoma de Luderdale’ and one of the burgesses (of Hawick presumably) (also spelled ‘Luderdale’, ‘Luderdaill’, ‘Luderdale’, ‘Luthirdale’, etc.; this may be a variant of ‘Lauderdale’; cf. Liddersdale, which may be based on ‘Liddesdale’, but may in some cases be the same surname).

Lyall (L-il) n. Joseph C. (19th C.) registrar for Eves Parish in at least the 1860s to 1880s. He also served as Session Clerk and Clerk to the School Board.

Lynd (L-und) pres. part., arch. lying – ‘...with the pertinentis, liand within the baronie of Brax拆除me ...’ [SB1569], ‘...for the compositioum of hir teindis of Trowis, liand within the parrochien of Cauers’ [SB1574], ‘...of the said lands of Flex heritable pertaining to him liand contiguous with and to our Common of Havicke ...’ [BR1692], ‘...upon ane tenement of land of his in Hawick, liand betwixt the land of James Brown on the north part ...’ [JW] (also written ‘liand’).

Lydgate (Lid-ga) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Lydgate’ in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Several of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where he was from.

Lyon money (L-in-umn-ne) n., arch. unused money – ‘Lyon money or eidl (idle) money = unused capital, or money not invested in any business or enterprise, etc.’ [ECS].

Lyik see like

Lyle (Lil) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1567 as ‘man and servand’ to David Turnbull of Wauchope. Turnbull was ordered to present him to answer charges of raiding into England.

Agnes McDonald nee Robson, ‘Nan’ (1929–2010), M.B.E. Born and lived in Hawick all her life, she had several jobs, including librarian at Newmill. She was associated with many local clubs and charitable organisations, in particular with the Scouting movement along with husband Rob, for which she received an M.B.E. in 1988. She received many honours from the Scouts, including the Silver Wolf, serving as a leader for about 60 years. She gave a talk to the Archaeological Society on the history of Scouting in Hawick. She was also awarded the Paul Harris Fellowship by the Rotary Club and had a village school named after her in Kenya, following her work with the Borders Exploration Group.

A memorial cairn was erected on Whitchesters Hill in 2011, with an associated walk. The top of the cairn is inscribed ‘Baden-Powell Do your best. Try and leave this world a little better than you found it’. Her children were Ruth, Joyce and Andrew. John (17th C.) possible name for resident near Leaugh in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. His name appears
Lyle an Scott’s

John (18th/19th C.) John recorded as ‘John Lisle in Denholm’ in 1818 when his marriage to was Jean Turnbull was announced in Melrose Parish. Fr. John Stevenson (1850–c.1920) born in Derry, he served in the army, but becoming a convert to Catholicism, he abandoned a military career to train for the priesthood. He was ordained in 1889, became assistant at Falkirk and then served as Hawick’s priest 1892–1912. He was known as a quiet man, but always at the beck and call of his congregation. He personally taught the older pupils in the mornings and held a boy’s club after school. He oversaw the widening of the seatings within the chapel. In failing health, he was transferred to Peebles. Robert 2nd Lord Lyle (d.1497) son of Robert, 1st Lord. He was based in Renfrewshire. He served as ambassador to England from 1472. In 1482 he was charged with treasonable communication with James, 9th Earl of Douglas, but was acquitted. He gained some of the Earl of Angus’ lands in 1485. In 1488 he was assigned the lease of Sundhope in the Yarrow valley and gave up the lease on ‘Garlachleuch et Blakhous’. He was one of the Justiciars at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh in 1493 and in Jedburgh and Selkirk in 1494. He was involved with negotiations with James III before the Battle of Sauchieburn (where he was probably present) and afterwards when James IV was crowned, for whom he served as Royal Justiciar. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Robert S. ‘Rob’ (1921/2–91) brought up in Hawick, he worked with Hawick Hosiery Co., but then became an apprentice with Inglis the joiners. He served in the R.A.F. in WWII and later became a cabinet maker with Temples House Finishers. He then trained at Moray House and became a High School woodwork teacher for the next 30 years. While there he started the High School Pipe Band and was also a guidance teacher. He was also a founder member of the Trades rugby team. He was a piper with the Home Guard, Ex-Servicemen’s and Scout Pipe Bands (which he restarted in 1972). He was heavily involved with the Scout movement for most of his life, becoming Group Scout Leader for Hawick, Assistant District Commissioner for Roxburgh and Border Scout Mountain Adviser. He was awarded the Medal of Merit in 1972 and the Silver Acorn by the Chief Scout in 1980. In 1954 he married Nan Robson. Walter (16th C.) ‘exhorter’ of Southdean Parish in 1567. Perhaps the same Walter (although recorded as ‘Pyle’) was exhortor at Foulden in 1563; it is possible that ‘Foulden’ is an error for ‘Souden’. William (b.1796/7) from Melrose, he was a farm steward in the Hawick area. In 1851 he was living at ‘Pitt Cottage’, near Branxholme Braes. His wife was Helen, and they had children, John, Thomas, William, Margaret and Alexander. William (1833–1904) co-founder of Lyle & Scott’s. Born in Hawick, he initially travelled for William Laidlaw & Sons, then managed Wilson & Armstrong’s. Along with Walter Scott he founded Lyle & Scott as a hosiery manufacturers in 1874/5, running the company alone after Scott died in 1892. Not prominent in public life, nevertheless he was a manager of the Cottage Hospital and benefactor of the Jubilee Nursing Scheme, as well as being Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was an elder at St. Andrew’s Free Church and a staunch Liberal. A keen outdoor sportsman, he tenanted the Pilmuir shootings for many years. He was also a keen gardener, as attested by the grounds at his home, Kildowan. He married Agnes, daughter of weaver Charles Scott; she died in 1899, aged 68 and was a cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray (formerly written ‘Lisle’ and variants).

Lyle an Scott’s (hil-in-skots) n. knitwear company with main factory on Liddesdale Road. It was established by William Lyle and Walter Scott as a hosiery manufacturers in 1874, the pair having previously worked as managers in other factories. The firm once had premises on Lothian Street (certainly in the early 1900s), and this was probably the original factory, built for them by Marchall & Son, with designs and joinery by A. Inglis & SOn. The firm became a limited company in 1897. The company bought the Liddesdale Road property around 1939, but it was taken over by the War Department and used as a munitions factory until after the War. Like other companies, it moved into twin-sets and other fashion knitwear by the mid-20th century. In 1938 they made an agreement with Cooper’s in the United States to be the sole British manufacturer of Jockey Y-front underwear. There were boom years in the 1950s with the production of Y-fronts, and in the 1960s with highly patterned golfwear. Since 1975 the company has had a Royal Warrant by appointment to HRH the Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh. The company merged with Wolsey Ltd. in 1964 and became part of the Courtauld’s Group in 1967. The company trademark is a golden eagle. The company’s additional premises at Burnfoot were vacated in the 1990s and destroyed in a fire in 2005.

Lymeicleuch (li-mee-klooch) n. farm on the side road south-west of Teviothead. In 1670 it was purchased from William Elliott, younger of Stobs, by Simon Elliot of the Binks and Swinside, William Elliot of Unthank, and William's son Adam. At that time it included the lands of Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch. In 1678 it was valued at £1000 and part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs. The precise ownership in the late 17th century is complicated. Sir William Elliott of Stobs and William Elliott paid the land tax in 1678 for their halves of the lands, each valued at £500. Adam Elliott of Mosspeeble gained a charter of the lands in 1673, but lost them in 1687. In that year Sir William Elliott of Stobs issued a charter to his brother John for these lands, but John did not gain possession until 1695. About 1695 William and Robert Elliot of Lymeicleuch and Penchrise were charged with theft by John Riddell of Haining; failing to appear, their surety, Gilbert Elliott of Stobs paid the fine, and after a further payment acquired both farms. Adam of Lymeicleuch was involved in a legal action with Anna Duches of Bucleuch in the period 1698-1703. In 1688 it was valued at £1000 and owned by Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs. £1633 6s 8d Thomas Telfer and William Nixon were farmers there in 1797. James Elliott was farmer there in 1841 and John Clerk in 1868. It was used as a shooting lodge in the late 19th century. The hill above is called Limie Hill, and the Limie Sike joins the Lymeicleuch Burn there (also spelled ‘Limeicleuch’ ‘Lymecleuch’ and ‘Lymiecleugh’; it is ‘Limey-cleugh’ ‘and ‘Lymiecleugh’ in 1678, ‘Lymycleuch’ in 1695 and ‘Lymecleuch’ about 1700, ‘Limiecleuch’ in 1797 and ‘Lymeicleuch’ in 1821; note there is a place of essentially the same name near Canonbie, with which it can be easily confused).

Lymeicleuch Burn (li-mee-klooch-burn) n. stream that is formed from the streams of Merrypath Sike, Wrangway Burn and Lang Hope near the farm of Wisp and runs roughly northwards to join the Teviot near Teviothead. Its source is around Pikethaw Hill on the border of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire (it is ‘Lymycleuch Burn’ in 1839).

Lynché’s (lin-cheez) n. toy shop on the north side of the High Street, at No. 19, in the latter part of the 20th century. Also known as ‘J. Lynch’ (pronounced jI), ‘Miss Lynch’s’ and ‘Pairky Anthing’s’. It closed in 1989 – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for oor tools, Jess McVeetie’s for rock books, Lynch’s hed a’ kinds o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies . . . ’ [IWL].

Lyne (lin) n. farm marked on Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650 and Adair’s c. 1688 manuscript map of the Sherifdom of Ettrick Forest, between Milsington and Hoscote, on the north side of the Borthwick. This corresponds roughly to the position of Deanburnhaugh. It is probably the same place referred to in several charters and other documents along with Girdwood as ‘Girdwood and Lyne’. In 1488 the lands were leased by Robert Scott from Thomas Turnbull, later leased by the Lords of Home, and sold to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1532/3. The lands were ratified to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1693. It seems likely this was associated with the waterfall at Girdwood Linn, to the west of the farm of Girdwood (it is ‘Lyne’ in 1488).

Lyne (lin) n. William (17th C.) tenant of Goldielands in 1642 when he is recorded as part of an accusation (probably unfounded) of theft in Hawick magistrates court. His wife was Margaret McDougall.

Lyneside (lin-siid) n. former station on the Waverley Line, shortly before Carlisle.

Lynn see inn

Lynn (lin) n. Richard (19th/20th C.) served as Burgh Foreman for Hawick. In that capacity he lived at 10 Slitrig Crescent. He is probably the ‘Dick’ whose son ran Swinton the builders in Hawick. It is said that just after the Boer War he came across another Hawick man in South Africa, while leaning out of a train window, and although they recognised each other, the train passed before they could talk.
Lynnlie (li-nee) n., ins. name sometimes used for someone from Lynnwood housing estate, usually used derogatorily.

Lynnwood see Lynnwud

Lynnwud (lin-wud) n. Lynnwood, an area in the south-west of Hawick, off the Newcastleton Road, on a flat piece of ground in a loop of the Slitrig. It became a council housing estate on the outskirts of town, built in 1933 and comprising Lynnwood Road and Lynnwood Crescent. Originally a pleasant enough residential area, it grew to be infamous, becoming synonymous with the least desirable elements within the town, the area being renamed Liddesdale in an attempt to reinvent the area. It fell into a state of disrepair and was largely demolished in 1980–81, being completely levelled in 1991 to make way for new housing. After a public vote the area was renamed Lynnwood again – ‘The plaintive sound is wafted on the gale, And Lynnwood’s sighs are heard to join the wail’ [WNK], ‘Oh Lynnwood guards the South approach, Drumlanrig holds the West …’ [NM], ‘Since Stephehnson’s infernal din Came screamin’ doon frae Linwood Linn …’ [WP] (named for the ‘linn’, i.e. stream in a ravine, and wood that stood there; sometimes spelled with one ‘n’, and sometimes with an ‘i’).

Lynnwud Brig (lin-wud-brig) n. Lynnwood Bridge, name sometimes used for the bridge across the Slitrig to Lynnwood House. It may also refer to the bridge behind Lyle & Scott’s factory, connecting Liddesdale Road with the ‘Back Braes’. A footbridge near there, sometimes called ‘Nixon’s Brig’, was washed away in the 1846 flood.

Lynnwud Cauld (lin-wud-kawld) n. Lynnwood Cauld, the weir built upstream from Lynnwood, by Slitrig Viaduct, which once helped supply the water power for Lynnwood Mill. It was sometimes known as ‘Nixon’s Cauld’. It was partly swept away in the flood of 1846.

Lynnwud Crescent (lin-wud-kres-in) n. Lynnwood Crescent, street at the south-east end of town, named after the nearby stream and wood, with the houses built in 1933. It was renamed Liddesdale Road in 1971 and by 1991 the houses has been demolished and the site cleared, with new housing appearing from 2001.

Lynnwud Hoose (lin-wud-hoos) n. Lynnwood House, built for William Nixon on the western bank of the Slitrig north of the ‘Scaur’. It is a large white house on the right-hand side of the road driving out of Hawick, and is now split into flats. It was certainly built before 1841 and William Nixon was still recorded there in 1868. Originally the house was reached via a drive that crossed a ford over the Slitrig, but in 1878 a bridge was erected and the gate lodge built, along with landscaping of the gardens. During WWII it was used as a hostel for women war workers.

Lynnwud Ludge (lin-wud-luj) n. gate house for Lynnwood House at 10 Liddesdale Road. It was probably built in 1878 at the same time as the bridge over the Slitrig to the main house. It is a single-storey house with a rectangular plan, but with overhanging eaves and an attic gable.

Lynnwud Mill (lin-wud-mil) n. Lynnwood Mill, hosiery mill at Lynnwood, built by John Nixon & Sons, with the first construction perhaps being as early as 1803. Before it was built the spun wool was sent to Galashiels for carding; but the new factory enabled the spinning and carding to be carried out in one place. The factory was probably extended during the days of William Nixon, and the 1858 Ordnance Survey map clearly shows the associated gasometer and ‘tenter fields’. The mill was sold to Laidlaws in 1864. There was a serious fire there in 1869, with rebuilding afterwards. It was a prominent factory throughout the 19th century, but closed at the beginning of the 20th. Water power was provided by a short lade, fed from Lynnwood Cauld. It was demolished in 1933 to make way for the Lynnwood housing scheme – ‘While fashion’d fair and warldly gear May charm whae’er they will, Gi’e me my ain, my bonnie Jean, – The lass o’ Lynnwood Mill’ [JT] (also sometimes ‘Lynnwud Mills’).

Lynnwud Road (lin-wud-roed) n. Lynnwood Road, name given for the continuation of Slitrig Crescent, being the beginning of the B6399 leading to Newcastleton. The mill lade used to pass along the east side of the road, in front of all the houses there. The name was given when new houses were built in 1933, and came from the nearby stream and wood. It was renamed Liddesdale Road in 1971, had new houses built in 1973, and the houses at the southern end were demolished in 1982.

Lynnwud Wud (lin-wud-wud) n. name sometimes used for the wood above Lynnwood, or possibly for the wood that was formerly at Lynnwood before development.

Mable (ma-bul) n. James ‘Jamie’ (b.1805/6) born at Falside, he was a carrier, living at Smithfieldhaugh in Kirkton Parish. He carted over to the North Tyne every fortnight. He ran a cart between Hawick and Liddesdale before the railway. He was still recorded at Smithfieldhaugh in 1868. He married Agnes Moffat and their children included James, David and Mary. He was said to be a man of large proportions and of austere countenance, invariably dressed in a square-crowned hat, corduroy trousers, and a huge double-breasted waistcoat with sleeves and flap pockets’. John (d.1951) married Elspeth, daughter of Barton Oliver. His children included Maggie Oliver (b.1903) who married and Anderson (also written ‘Mabel’).

Mabonlaw (ma-bin-law) n. farm above Harden, once part of the estate of the Scotts of Harden, it had more recently been available as a rental cottage. It stands near the Marchelyton Burn, and the hill above, presumably Mabon Law, reaches a height of 256 m and contains a fort, about 55 m by 25 m, with a single rampart and external ditches. It was part of the Harden estate from the 16th to 19th centuries, being valued in 1811 (along with ‘Highchesters Whinny Park’) at £312. In 1576 it was ‘infefted’ to Marion Scott (‘the Flower of Yarrow’) as part of the marriage agreement with Walter Scott (later ‘Auld Wat’) of Harden. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. John Thomson, was tenant there in 1684, when he was declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. The area was part of Wilton Parish until transferred to Robertson in 1690. It was included among lands inherited by Gideon Scott of Hightchester from his father Walter, Earl of Tarra in 1694. There were 8 separate households listed there in 1694, including 3 Riddells. Walter Riddell was there in 1717. It may have been sold by Walter Scott of Harden about 1754. The headlands with Todshaw were divided in 1757. Robert Turnbull was living there in 1763 and William Laidlaw in 1764. David Laidlaw was there in 1772, John Watson in 1773 and William Lunn in 1774. In 1779 it was among lands whose lieren was sold by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Woll. James Laidlaw was farmer here in 1794–97. It was valued (along with Highchesters Mill and ‘Dunsbush’) at £463 9s in the late 18th century. William Rutherford ad Walter Clerk were there with their families in 1841 and 1851. Walter Rutherford was shepherd there in 1861. In about 1874 it was listed among the properties of Lord Polwarth. The cottage there has latterly been let as a holiday property (formerly ‘Mabinlaw’ etc., it is ‘Mabenlaw’ in 1643, ‘Maybenlaw’ in 1648, ‘Mabinlaw’ and ‘Maybenlaw’ in 1694, ‘Mebonlaw’ in 1764 and 1772 and ‘Mebonlaw’ in 1774 and ‘Mawbonlaw’ in 1780; it is ‘Mebinlaw’ on a 1650 parish map, Blaeu’s 1654 map marks ‘Mabinlaw’, while it is ‘Mabenlaw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Mabonlaw Moss (ma-bin-law-mos) n. boggy area to the north of Mabonlaw.

Macbeth (muk-beth) n. (c.1005–57) King of Scotland from 1040. He was the grandson of Malcolm II and claimed the throne over Duncan I (another grandson), who died in battle against him. However, Duncan’s son Malcolm Canmore then fought for the throne, with the assistance of Siward, the Earl of Northumbria, and they captured the south of Scotland. He was then killed by Malcolm and the throne passed to his step-son Lulach.

MacCalman (muk-kaw-l-min) n. Rev. Ian B. minister of Minto Parish 1956–67. He had been an army Chaplain and his wife was from South Africa. During his time as minister a new manse was built on the Hassendean road.

Maccoll see McColl

MacDiarmid (muk-der-mi’) n. Hugh (1837–1901) real name Christopher Murray Grieve, born in Langholm, he was probably the most famous 20th century Scottish poet. With Hawick’s Francis George Scott and William Johnstone, he formed part of what was sometimes called a Scottish Renaissance in the 1930s. He wrote the poem ‘The Sauchs in the Reuch Heuch Hauch’ (i.e. the Roughheugh Haugh) inspired by a line of James Murray’s, with the poem being set to music by Francis George Scott. Scott was one of his close friends, and set many of his verses to music, as well as helping him to compile various writings into ‘A Drunk Man Looks at the Thistle’. A modern monument to him was erected on Whita Hill in 1988.

MacDonald (muk-do-nuld) n. Archibald J.F. ‘Archie’ (1904–83) Liberal M.P. for Roxburgh & Selkirkshire 1950–51. He won with a large majority over Lord William Scott in a by-election, but the next year was defeated by C.E.M. Donaldson by only 829 votes. His name is often spelled ‘Macdonald’. James Ronald (1858–1937) born in St. Andrews, son of James and Catherine. He was educated at Madras College, St. Andrews University and Edinburgh University, where he graduated M.A. in 1880 and was licensed to preach in 1892. He became licentiate at Saughtree Kirk in 1892 and left in 1902 to become assistant and then minister at Eskdalemuir. He married Emily Sophia Nichols. Jessie Stoddart M. (d.2004) wrote ‘The Place-names of Roxburghshire’ (1991) which was started as a thesis project when she was a student and completed for a Transactions article and this book. It mainly focuses on names for which there is evidence before 1600 (and an addendum is lodged with the Borders Archive). She also wrote ‘Bowden Kirk, 1128–1978’ (1978 and 1994). She was a Headmistress at James Gillespie’s in Edinburgh, and retired to Bowden. John (b.1851/2) from Urry in Ross-shire, he was Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh Police force from about 1878 until 1902. He also acted as Sanitary Inspector, Public Prosecutor and Fire Master. In addition he was Captain of the Golf Club.

He can be seen with the Fire Brigade in a photo of 1889. He used to ride at the head of the Common Riding Procession, and can be seen in the Gaylorn film clip of 1899. Mr. ?? Police Super-intendent in Hawick in the 1970s/80s. Robert (b.1817/8) from Muckhart in Perthshire, he was a grocer and wine merchant at about 6 Howegate in 1851. He was already a widower, with daughters Janet W. and Jane M. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howe-gate, as well as seedsman, ‘agent for Bigg’s sheep dipping compound’ and ‘tallow chandler’. Col. William of Powderhall and Ormiston (19th C.), J.P., officer of the Scots Greys who were used to control riots surrounding elections in Roxburgh-shire in the 1830s. It is said that in 1836, when he was in Hawick to attend a dinner given for Lord Minto, the open carriage in which he was leaving with his family was followed for about a mile out of town, with a crowd pelting it with mud. He led the troop who were in Hawick to keep the peace at the election of 1837. He attacked the mob along with several special constables, losing his hat and being struck by a stone on the forehead in the doorway of 3 Sandbed. He also attended the 1839 banquet held at Branxholme to honour the Duke of Buccleuch. He subscribed to 4 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, when he was already ‘of Ormiston’. He is listed on the 1837 electoral roll, having acquired Ormiston through marriage. He also held lands in Cavers Parish. He served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. He was also a Vice-President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He owned Ormiston House just outside Hawick, and occupied it in the Autumn months (for hunting), with Provost Wilson occupying it for the rest of the year. His children included Alexander and John James, also listed as joint life-renters in 1835. His wife ‘Mrs. Margaret F. McDonald or Muir’ was listed as owner of Ormiston in about 1874.

Macdowall see McDougall

MacDougall (muk-dow-ul) n. Fergus (15th C.) held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1465. He was a direct appointee by the Pope, and not by the monks of Melrose that had made some previous appointments. He is probably the Fergus who witnessed a few charters in 1463 and perhaps the same ‘Fergusio Macdowell’ recorded on a charters for lands in Wigtown in 1508. Perhaps 2 men are conflated here: one Fergus, Lord Macfee (muk-fee) n. William G. (19th/20th C.) from Dennistoun, Glasgow. He preached for several months in the ‘Ern Kirk’ in Wilton in 1889. The congregation were keen for him to become their minister, but he was ordained at Pendle Church in Manchester, went to Partick in 1895 and then moved to a better climate for his health in 1900.

MacGill (mu-gil) n. Rev. John White (1867–1937) born in Musselburgh, son of a minister, he graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1889 and was licensed by Dalkeith Presbytery in 1892. He was assistant at Alexandria, North Berwick and St. Margaret’s (Edinburgh), before being ordained at St. Catherine’s, British Guiana in 1897. In 1924 he was translated to Inverlochloy and then became minister of Saughtree kirk in 1925. However, he remained only 2 years before moving to Caerlaverock. He married Edith Sarah Luxton Wexford, and they had 2 children (also McGill).

MacGregor (mu-gre-gur) n. Alexander (19th C.) teacher at Saughtree school in the mid-1860s. He took over from James Telfer, who had been teacher there for almost 30 years. He is probably the same as Rev. Alexander, who graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1861, was ordained as minister of Haggis in 1865 and was at Inverkeithing and Rosyth from 1866. Augustus Wallace, W.S. (1866/7–1937) son of John and grandson of the Rev. J.A. Wallace. He was for employed by Purdom’s in Hawick for 16 years and later a partner of Auld & MacDonald, W.S. He was a member of the Scottish Zoological Society and the Hawick Archaeological Society, also known as a stamp collector (jointly editing a catalogue on the Malay States). He also edited the book ‘Fifty Years of Lawn Tennis in Scotland’ (1927). It is said that he was more interested in tennis than employment, and was a notable player in his youth. He served as a Captain in WWI, although he was never posted abroad. He also helped execute Hawick’s WWI Roll of Honour. Donald (b.1856) from Inverness, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1878, M.B. from Edinburgh in 1884 and M.D. in 1886. He was at Chester-Le-Street and Ketteringham, before coming to the Hawick area. He lived in Denholm in the 1880s and 1890s. In 1887 he married Jessie, daughter of J.H. Mundell of Mundeville Park, Bournemouth. Their children included Donald Hamilton (d.1918, who fought with the Gordon Highlanders) and Marjorie S. John (18th C.) listed as footman at Borthwickbrae in 1792 and 1793, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. Rev. John (d.1873) minister of Hawick Free Kirk (i.e. St. George’s) 1865–73, having been called in 1864. He came from Golspie in Sutherland, was licensed in 1845, assisted at Rothesay and the Free New North Church in Edinburgh and was also minister at Kirkurd before he moved to Hawick. He was apparently a great biblical scholar. He married Rev. Wallace’s eldest daughter, Wilhelmina Hepburn, although she died of small-pox not many years later. He became ill in 1879 and was given 6 months leave, but died within a couple of months, leaving his only child Augustus Wallace an orphan. Mr. ?? mack-like (mawk-lik) adj., arch. neat, tidy.

Macksid (ma-awk-sid) n. farm a little to the east of Hobkirk and Wolfelee, once part of the Barony of Abbotrule. Peter Turnbull is recorded there in 1502. It was acquired by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey on 1569. The superiority was still with the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. David Turnbull was there in 1611, Patrick Turnbull in 1618 and Lawrence Turnbull in Denholm, which sold ‘taffy’, scones, etc. William (16th C.) listed as ‘William Mak’, along with 15 other people who occupied Newton in Bedrule in 1531 (it is unclear precisely what his surname was).
in 1622. It is probably the ‘Laird of Toft’s Turnbush’s . . . side’ recorded in the 1643 county valuation, valued at £100; Gavin Turnbull was also there (with land valued at £24) and Janet Home was liferenter (with land valued at £50). It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Archibald Shiel was a tenant there in 1684 when listed as a fugitive for attending conventicles. John Turnbull and James Oliver were tenant there in 1694, with William Shiel, Margaret Dickson, William Scott and Thomas Turnbull all listed as cottars. It was sold by William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751, becoming part of the Wolfelee estate for the next century and a half. It was listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1788 (in also 1811), with a value (along with Blackcleuchmouth) of £166 15s 4d. It was briefly lived in by James, the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee, while the main house was being built in the 1820s, and again by Mrs. Elliot of Wolfelee during renovations in 1862. There were Turnbuls there in early 17th century and the tenant was John Mair in the mid-17th century, John Sharp in the mid-18th century and Turnbuls again in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. The farm was quite extensive and for a fraction of the 19th century was let out as grassland. Robert Allan was farmer in 1868. Tenants in the late 19th and early 20th centuries were Mr. Clark and then Mr. Logan. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. There was also once a toll-bar on the road near here (also spelled ‘Maxsyde’ and variants, it was ‘maxsyd’ in 1502, ‘Maxsyde’ in 1569, ‘Maxsyde’ in 1588, ‘M’syd’ in 1618, ‘Maksyde’ in 1626, ‘Machsyde’ in 1653, ‘Macksyid’ in 1670, ‘Mac-side’ in 1684, ‘Macksyde’ and ‘maxside’ in 1694 and ‘Maxside’ in 1797; it occurs on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Maxsyd’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Maxsyde’, although is marked too far north; the origin of the name is probably ‘the slope belonging to Maccus’, from a variant of the personname Magnus, cf. ‘Maxpoffle’ and ‘Maxwell-keugh’ near Kelso).

Mackside Moss (mawk-sid-mos) n. former common near Mackside. Part of the land there was used for the manse of Wolfelee Free Kirk.

Macksideshaw (mawk-sid-shaw) n. former steadings near Mackside. Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs had a charter of the lands (along with Wells) in 1659. It was later part of the estate of Wolfelee (recorded in 1659 and 1730).

Katherine Jane nee Roberts (d.1913) daughter of Capt. Browne Roberts of the East India Company, who was Sheriff of Calcutta. In 1844 she married the Laird of Wauchope, Thomas. She painted a sketch of Wauchope House in 1848. She had 3 sons and 3 daughters. Her name is also written 'Catherine'. She lived at Wauchope after her husband's death, and is recorded as proprietor there in a directory of 1868. She later moved to Pinnaclechill, near Kelso. Thomas, J.P. (1816-62) of Wauchope and Pinnaclehill, eldest son of Walter the 4th Laird. He was educated at Loretto, trained as a lawyer, apprenticed to Lawrence Davidson and Thomas Syme, and became Writer to the Signet in 1838. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1841. In 1844 he married Katherine Jane, daughter of Capt. Browne Roberts from Kent (who had been High Sheriff of Calcutta); his sister-in-law Margaret Amelia Roberts later married his brother Charles of Langlee. They lived in Edinburgh and then at Harwood House, where most of his family was born. Quiet in manner, it is said that the secluded country life suited him. He succeeded to Wauchope after the death of his father in 1857 and moved there. He also held part of Weensland that had previously belonged to Archibald Dickson. He assumed the Macmillan surname after inheriting his maternal grandfather's estate of Shorthope. His children were: Walter, who died in infancy; another Walter, who succeeded; Arthur Francis; Edith Marion, who married Maj.-Gen. Frederick Edward Sotheby from Northamptonshire; Marion Maude, who died unmarried; and Katherine Margaret, died young after joining a sisterhood in England. Thomas Alexander Frederick (1881-c.1952) 7th Laird of Wauchope and Pinnaclehill, son of Walter. He was educated at Eton and trained as an English lawyer. He let Wauchope out for shooting. He sold it about 1936. He married Karen Anna Erichsen in 1912 and secondly in 1918 married Enid Cynthia Paine. His son was Walter Theodore Robin. Walter (1848-1901) 6th Laird of Wauchope and also of Pinnaclehill, son of Thomas. He was born in Edinburgh and educated at Harrow and Cambridge University. He became Lieutenant in the 6th Dragoons Guards and later served as Captain of the Scottish Borderers Militia, based in Dumfries. He had a new house built at Wauchope about 1875. Regarded as reserved like his father, he was fond of reading and also rode with the Blackmoorvale hounds. He was Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire and Chairman of the Hobkirk School Board. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1869. In about 1874 he is recorded as owner of the estate of Wauchope. In 1888 he was the first County Councillor elected for Hobkirk Parish. He left Wauchope for Bournemouth due to failing health, and died there. In 1876 he married Antoinetta, eldest daughter of Theodore Henry Dury of Bonsall, Derbyshire. His children were: Thomas Arthur Frederick; and Cecile Margaret, who married Cmdr. James Tancred of the Royal Navy.

Macmorland (muk-nör-lind) n. John Peter (1839-93) son of Peterm minister of North Berwick, he was educated in Edinburgh, graduating with his B.D. in 1865. He was licensed by Dunbar Presbytery and became minister of Minto Kirk in 1865. He married Elizabeth Macdonald (who died in 1917), daughter of Eaglesfield Bradshaw Smith of Blackwood House and their only child was Elizabeth Philadelphia Macdonald Lockhart, who married William Higgin of Belfast. Alexander Galloway became his assistant and successor in 1878, and he died in Switzerland (also written 'McMorland').

Macmorrin (muk-mo-rin) n. William (d.c.1408) cleric of Glasgow Diocese, whose name has variant spellings, such as 'McMoy'. He held the position of Archdeacon of Teviotdale sometime shortly before 1408. He may also have been Archdeacon of Glasgow in about 1403.

MacNee (muk-ne) n. Daniel (d.c.1860) preacher at Teviothead from 1847, probably until it became a new Parish in 1850. He then emigrated to Hamilton, Ontario, but later returned to Scotland and died in Edinburgh. George Fraser (1863-1905) born in Wilton, son of Robert and Jemima Fraser. He was a student teacher at Buccleuch School, before moving to Edinburgh where he became Secretary to the Church of Scotland Committee on Education. He was also Vice-President of the Edinburgh Borders Union, organising their Hawick nights. He may have written the article on Hawick Common Riding for the Edinburgh Despatch in 1891. He presented the Cornet with a new Sash in 1898 (on behalf of Teries in Edinburgh), and was a member of the Callants' and Archaeological Clubs. A keen walker of Border hills, he once walked from Hawick to Newcastle in a single day. He also walked Hadrian’s Wall extensively and gave illustrated lectures on it. He was also a keen Volunteer, becoming Captain of College Company 4th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots. He was said to be of a happy and generous disposition and have a boyish enthusiasm for his native town. He died in a shooting accident (his trigger apparently caught on a twig when he was shooting rabbits at Corstorphine) and was buried with military honours in the Wellogate. The MacNee Fountain was erected in his memory by public subscription.

the MacNee Fountain (thu-muk-nee-fown’- in) n. ornate grey granite drinking fountain in Wilton Lodge Park, near Langlands Bridge. It was erected by public subscription in 1906 in memory of George Fraser MacNee.

MacNeill (muk-need) n. Jessie (1853–1922) younger daughter of Bedrule Schoolmaster William. From 1882 she assisted her father as sewing mistress. After his death in 1893 she stayed on for a short time, but then became sick-nurse for a farmer in Southdean called Riddell. Late in life she married Denholm postman Hugh Rigby.

William (1814–1893) from Tranent in East Lothian, son of David and Frances Fraser. He became teacher at Longniddry in 1844 and then was teacher at Cogsmill from 1849. A few years later he moved to Bedrule School, where he was schoolmaster for 38 years. He also served as Registrar for the Parish, as well as Session Clerk, Inspector of the Poor and Clerk of the School Board. In 1843 he married Helen Imrie (who died in 1878). Their children included: Mary (b.1844); David (b.1845); Frances (b.1847), who married Archibald Stewart; Alexander (b.1849); Helen (b.1851), who married William Cairns Robson; Jessie (b.1853), who married Hugh J. Rigby of Denholm; and William (b.1857), who died in his teens. His wife worked as an assistant at Bedrule School, but after her death he was denied a request for an assistant. After he resigned and was reinstated, he was able to hire his daughter Jessie as a sewing mistress from 1882. He complained about the state of the schoolhouse in 1892 and retired later that year. The family are buried in Bedrule churchyard (also written ‘MacNeil’ and ‘McNeil’).

MacQueen (mu-kween) n. Robert (1722–99) advocate of Edinburgh who acted as official council for Hawick in the action regarding the Division of the Common raised in 1767. In 1768 he gave his opinion that the case was unclear, stating that ‘on the one hand, that the town hath considered themselves as proprietors of the Commony … but, on the other hand, the Duke has brought a pretty strong proof that his tenants for time immemorial have been in use to pasture, and to cast peats, &c’. He was consulted again in 1774, by which time he was of the opinion that the neighbouring land owners had a claim and suggested that the Town should offer to concede 1/3 of the Common to save expense. He was known as a brilliant lawyer, who was coarse, heavy-drinking and extremely popular. He was afterwards Lord Braxfield, becoming infamous as a judge who was fond of savage punishments, e.g. sentencing reformer Thomas Muir to transportation. He was the original of R.L. Stevenson’s ‘Weir of Hermiston’ and the ‘Jolly Judge’ pub in Edinburgh was named after him. Rev. R.R. (19th C.) missionary involved with the Free Kirk. He became the first ordained minister of the West Port Free Church in 1869, staying for only a few years. He married the widow of brewer George Henry King and they left Hawick in 1872 (also spelled ‘McQueen’).

MacQuoid (mu-kwoid) n. Peter Craik (b.1895) born on the Isle of Wight and licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1921. Probably his first charge was as assistant in Hawick. He moved to become minister at Bothkennar in 1924 and went to Turriff in 1927.

MacRae (mu-rä) n. Rev. Dr. John (1815–92) native of Glasgow (born on Burns birthday), he was the son of James, a Glasgow shoemaker. He was educated at Glasgow University and licensed by that Presbytery. He succeeded Wallace as Minister of Hawick Parish at the Disruption of 1843 and remained for almost 50 years. He lived in the Manse on Buccleuch Road. He moved from St. Mary’s to the new Old Parish Church in 1844. His time as minister also saw the creation of the separate congregations of St. Mary’s and St. John’s. He was the instigator for the founding of the Industrial School (later Drumlanrig) and also served as an Orrock Trustee. He was one of the most scholarly preachers of his age, receiving an honorary Doctor of Divinity from Glasgow University in 1864. He also founded the Blantyre Mission in British Central Africa (now Malawi). A disagreement with his assistant (J.A. Birrell) in 1881 resulted in part of the congregation leaving to form Wellington Church. He was a highly respected figure in Hawick, projecting an air of old-time dignity (and argued against instrumental music as late as 1882). He laboured under a lameness of foot, and was supposed to have said

‘if it had not been for this I would have been a soldier’. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald MacLachlan of Helensburgh (and she died childless in 1882). A memorial ward at the Cottage Hospital was erected in his memory, along with a tombstone in the Wellogate Cemetery, a memorial brass plaque in the Church, and communion cups from his congregation. His publications include ‘Sermons’ (published in Hawick, 1851), ‘Sermon for the National Fast’ (1854), ‘The Scripture Law of Marriage’ (Hawick, 1861 and 1862), ‘Sermon on the Completion of the Fortieth Year of his Ministry (Hawick, 1883), ‘Sermon on the Death of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry’ (Hawick, 1884), ‘Sermon on the Death of H.R.H. Prince Leopold’ (Hawick, 1884), ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of General Gordon’ (Hawick, 1885), ‘Sermon on the Disestablishment and Religious Equality’ (Hawick, 1885), ‘Funeral Sermon on the Life and Character of the Rev. James Stewart, Minister of Wilton’ (Hawick, 1886) and ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen’ (Hawick, 1887) (also written ‘Macrae’).

MacRae’s Band (muk-rāz-bawnd) n. popular name for a choir that started in the Parish Church in the mid-19th century when Rev. MacRae was Minister. They practised every Saturday night in the old Parish School in Orrock Place, and were later disbanded.

Mactaggart (muk-taw-gur’) n. Bruce see W. Bruce. Ian C. (1900/1–1965) son of Robert and Mary Aikman, he was Cornet in 1928. Events at his year as Common Riding were recorded on a silent black and white film. He won the Medway Cup outright at the Common Riding Races of 1933, winning on Rufus for the third time (after victories in 1929 and 1932, and coming second in 1930 and 1931). In 1934 it was replaced by the Rufus Trophy and won by him on Rufus! In 1966 the Medway trophy was returned by his wife for competition. He was Callants’ Club President in 1955. He was Managing Director of Mactaggart Brothers, wool merchants, seeing the firm in 1964. He served as chief executive officer for wool control in Scotland during WWII. He married Jessie S. Borland and they are both buried in Denholm. They had 2 daughters, Fiona and Ann. Robert Lamb Watson (1870–1949) son of Robert Lamb Watson and Mary Jane Alexander Main, and brother of William Alexander Main. He was born in Duddingston, Midlothian and became a manager at Pringle’s in Hawick. He married Mary Helen (‘Nellie’) Aikman. Their children were: James (d.1956); Ian (1900/1–65); and Mamie. He secondly married Hyndiner Hewatt, and their children included Arthur Crosbie (1918–42), who died at El Alamein. William Alexander Main (b.1868) born in Glasgow, son of Robert Lamb Watson (also the name of his brother) and Mary Jane Alexander Main. He was a businessman who established the skinworks Mactaggart Brothers. In 1903 he married Mary Jane Cooper, and their children included William Alexander and Mary Bryson. William Alexander, C.B.E., J.P. ‘Wullie’ or ‘Wullie Mac’ (1906–2002) born at Braeside, Weensland Road, son of William Alexander Main and Margaret Jane Cooper. He was educated in Melrose and at Sedbergh School. He took up rugby and first played for Hawick R.F.C. at 17. He was part of the team that won all the ‘sevens’ in 1927. Instead of following in the family business he joined Pringle’s in 1925 as a trainee manager, becoming Director in 1932 and joint Managing Director (with Arthur Oddy) in 1933 at the age of only 27. In 1936 he convinced the other directors to change the name from ‘Robert Pringle & Sons’ to just ‘Pringles’ and to diversify into fashion knitwear. He served with the K.O.S.B. territorial battalion 1926–33 and was put in charge of the Hawick Air Training Corps in 1939, later serving with the R.A.M.C. in Europe. He became sole Managing Director in 1945, following the resignation of Oddy. He then led the company to enormous post-war success, becoming Chairman of the Board in 1960. He resigned as Managing Director in 1968, following the take-over by Dawson International, but he remained as Chairman until 1969. During his time in charge the workforce increased from 200 to 2,000 and the firm essentially cornered the worldwide market in fashion knitwear for golfers. He is said to have a very ‘hands-on’ approach to management, regularly walking on the shop-floor and talking individually to the workers. He received the C.B.E. in 1964 for services to industry. He was Cornet in 1930. He was also briefly on the Town Council, and involved with the Callants’ Club, Vertish Hill Sports and Buccleuch Hunt. He contributed funds to establish the Hawick Youth Centre, and he and his wife donated stained glass windows to Lilliesleaf Church. He was President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1972, its centenary year. He married his Cornet’s Lass Marjorie Laing Innes, and she died in 1998. The family settled at Bewlie. Their children were: Bruce; Alan; and Claire. W. Bruce (1933– ) son of Wullie. He joined Pringle’s as a Mactaggart’s trainee in 1951, becoming a Director in 1964 and Managing Director in 1969. He was Cornet in 1954 and Acting Father in 1971 (to the son of his own Acting Father, John P. Martin). He married Sheila Tait and had 2 sons and 2 daughters.

Mactaggart’s (muk-taw-gurtz) n. skinworks, built on land off Albert Road, which had previously been the site of Albert Mills. The skinworks had also previously been off St. George’s Lane. It closed in the early 1970s, and was demolished to make way for a supermarket and housing built in 1977 – … Built where McTaggart’s men, Worked wi’ skins wi’ weary fingers, When the wund blaws the right way, The smell still lingers’ [IWL].

Magistrate

19th century, essentially a forerunner of the cinema. There are records of large turnouts for such shows in Hawick, and many slides from around 1900 survive in the Museum, most made by D. Gayler.

Magistrate (maw-jis-trâ’) n. formerly one of two officers, the Senior Magistrate and the Junior Magistrate, elected annually by the Burgess of Hawick to enforce laws with the town. The word was synonymous with ‘Bailie’ for most of Hawick’s recorded history. Typically each Magistrate would serve for 2 years (with the election in early October), first as Junior and then as Senior Magistrate, although there were exceptions to this. Because of the specific wording of Hawick’s Charter, the Magistrates exercise a jurisdiction similar to that of Magistrates in a Royal Burgh, and in former times they had a great amount of lee-way in administering justice. In the 17th and 18th centuries there were often disputes over jurisdiction, with Hawick residents being forbidden from appealing to any other courts (i.e. the Baron Bailie or the Sheriff) than the Hawick Magistrates Court. During the 18th century it was common for the magistrates also to keep an inn where local disputes would be settled and much of the business of the Town carried out; there was criticism that they profited from the Town’s business. Before there was a Provost, the Senior Magistrate was the highest elected official in town. After the reconstitution of the council in 1861 there were 4 magistrates. The Magistrates would sit on the bench to deal with local legal matters, although they were also Justices of the Peace only in fairly recent times. Their legal jurisdiction only extended to the Burgh boundaries (formerly synonymous with Bailie).

magistracie (maw-jis-tri-see) n., arch. the office of a magistrate, the magistrates collectively – ‘...conform to the ancient pratique of this burgh since the first ryse and beginning of magistracy within the same’ [BR1673], ‘...even to the comitting of some ryott, abusing of Magistracie and almost to the effusione of blood’ [BR1706], ‘...that whosoever has a mind to set up for the Magistracy, and peuther for it, shall be put in the Bailies’ Leet without any objection’ [BR1756] (also written ‘magistracy’).

de the Maiden Paps (thu-mâ-din-pawps) n. another name for the Maidens – ‘...conform to the ancient pratique of this burgh since the first ryse and beginning of magistracy within the same’ [BR1673], ‘...even to the comitting of some ryott, abusing of Magistracie and almost to the effusione of blood’ [BR1706], ‘...that whosoever has a mind to set up for the Magistracy, and peuther for it, shall be put in the Bailies’ Leet without any objection’ [BR1756] (also written ‘magistracy’).

the Maiden Way (thu-mâ-din-wâ) n. ancient road passing nearby to Hawick, believed to pre-date the Romans. There may be more than one road given this name. The local one passes through the head of Liddesdale and across the hills to the west of Dodburn, being used as a drove road until relatively recent times. This has been suggested as the northern extension of the road of the same name, which crosses the Penines (being part of the Penine Way near Alston), passing near Newcastle and on through the South Tyne valley. The ‘Thief’s Road’ may have followed a similar path (the origin is probably Old Welsh for ‘elevated’ rather than being related to the English word).

maidicine (mâ-dee-sîn, -di-seen) n. medicine – ‘...Jimmy Black, the Nobel Prize for Maidicine wunner’ [IWL].

the Maids o Honour (thu-mîd-ô-on-ur) n. a group of single women selected by the Cornet’s Lass to assist at the Colour Bussing (and Overseas Night the evening before). They follow her in with the Flag, and pin ribbons on the Cornet’s supporters. Their role in the Colour Bussing and in decorating the Principals’ coats with ribbons goes back at least to the beginning of the 19th century. The number is fixed at 22, 10 selected by the Cornet and his Lass, 5 each by the Right-and Left-Hand Men and Lasses and 2 by the Acting Mother.

Mains (mānz) n. the farm attached to the house on an estate, cultivated for the use of the landowner, the ‘home farm’ (related to the ‘demesne’; the word occurs in several local place names).

Mains (māns) n. farm near old Castleton. There are enclosures, field boundaries and earthworks nearby, close to the old railway line. It is recorded in the ballad ‘Hobbie Noble’ that ‘Sim o’ the Mains’ was the betrayer of Hobbie. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is ‘Manys’, with value 10 shillings and 8 pence, and tenanted by Thomas Armstrong. A later Thomas Armstrong ‘of Maynes’ was recorded in 1590. ‘Gilbert Elliot of the Maynis’ is recorded in 1599. James Murray was there in 1682. Adam Murray and Quintin Crozier were there in 1694. George Irvine was farmer there in 1797, William Irving in 1821 and William Snowden in the 1860s - ‘At Kershope foot the tryste was set, Kershope of the liyye lee; And there was traitor Sim o’ the Mains, And with him a private companie’ [T] (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map; it was presumabably once the ‘home farm’ for the local baron).

That mak’s him smile the mair’ [WL].

mair (mār) n., arch. a moor, broad area of open land, often high and containing boggy regions – ‘Where we roam o’er the hill, or tread heather mairs Or walk in the valley among scenes so rare’ [JCa] (the spelling and pronunciation are problematic, since muir is often written down although mār is meant; see also moor in place names).

the Mair (thu-mār) n. Hawick Moor, part of the Common, usually referring explicitly to the area containing St. Leonard’s race course. This is the location of the main social event of the Common Riding on the Friday and Saturday afternoons (since 1855 and 1868, respectively). Stalls, entertainments, beer tents etc. are in abundance. On Common Riding Friday the Cornet and his followers arrive at the back gate (towards Pilmuir) at about noon. The Cornet then rides round the course with the Flag, followed by the Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father and then the other riders. The ‘Big Fower’ ride their horses back round the course to the Paddock and the Cornet climbs to the roof of the Committee Room, waving the Flag towards the hillside and then towards the Paddock side, before setting it there for the duration of the races. When he climbs down the Cornet, together with the Acting Father, are presented with riding crops by the Chief Guest. The race meeting then starts in earnest, with both the more serious ‘fallping’ races and the Cornet’s Races (which are only for supporters who have ridden that day). The betting is fiercest on the ‘Tradesmen’s Handicap’. Before the Cornet has even arrived there has in modern times been a relay race run between children from the primary schools in Hawick. The Cornet leaves the Mair on the Friday at about 4 p.m., exiting by the top gate. Most people usually stay there for much longer, however, and the ‘picnics’ go on until well into the night if the weather is good. The race meeting starts later on the Saturday. Admission was first charged in 1883 – ‘We’ll a’ hie to the mair a-riding: Drumlanrig gave it for providing’ [AB], ‘But while the Common-Riding’s on there’s never yin’ll care O’ joining Bonnie Chairlie’s flag They’ll a’ be at the Mair’ [T] (also known as ‘the Muir’, ‘the Moor’ or more formally ‘St. Leonard’s Park’).

Mair (mār) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) weaver in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households in 1835. He was surely related to Andrew. Alexander (1776–1842) carrier of Hawick, operating from Backdamgate. In the early 19th century his firm ran a service between Hawick and Galashiels every Tuesday, continuing on to Edinburgh and Leith, amongst other places. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory leaving for Edinburgh on Tuesdays and Fridays and returning on Wednesdays and Saturdays, as well as going to Glasgow on Wednesdays. In 1837 he is listed going to Galashiels and Edinburgh every Tuesday. At the 1837 election one of the Tory voters escaped the mob by hiding in his house, which was stated to be ‘by the Towerdyke-side’. He is recorded as a carrier near the Crescent (possibly the Mill Path) in 1841. He was heavily involved with the Relief Kirk. He married Elizabeth, daughter of carrier William Wilson, who died in 1847 aged 67. Their children included: William (1809/10–47), innkeeper at Gala Bank; Ann (1812/13–46); John; Janet; and Elizabeth (b.1821/2), who died young. One of his daughters became Mrs. Drummond. Andrew (18th C.) wright in Town-o-Rule. Andrew (b.1794/5) from Newcastleton, he was listed as a weaver among heads of households in 1835. By 1841 he was a hand-loom weaver in Hawick, living at Lockiesedge, then 5 Bourtree Place in 1851 and 5 O’Connell Street in 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Andrew Jr., Adam, Jane and Isabella. Gilbert (b.1785/6) born in Castleton Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Silverbuthall in 1841 and Wilton Roadhead in 1851. His wife was Margaret, and their children included William, Andrew, Walter, Francis, Thomas and Mary. James (d.1812) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife died in 1811 and he followed a year later. He could be the James, son of Andrew born in Hobkirk in 1743. James (b.c.1793) weaver in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841 at Lockiesedge. He was also recorded at Lockiesedge on the 1841 census. His children included David, Catherine, Jane, Agnes, Mary and Margaret. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Heath Tax rolls. His name was listed as ‘John Maire Elder’, and the ‘younger’ John who was also there was probably his son. John (17th/18th C.) probably son of John, he was tenant farmer at Mackside. He may be the John ‘younger’ who was listed along with John ‘Elder’ at Stonedge in 1694. In 1704 (or perhaps a confirmation of the purchase of 1666) he purchased half the lands of Kirknowe from John Shiel. His son Richard married Janet, only daughter of John Shiel (and probably granddaughter of the man he bought the land from). John (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785–91. Rev. John (1822–1902) born in Paisley, 3rd son of John. He was educated in Paisley and at Glasgow University and was licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1845. Then in 1847 he was ordained as assistant and successor at Southdean, and remained there for well over half a century. In 1887 he obtained a doctorate from Glasgow University. He married Agnes (who died in 1900), daughter of George Grant of Glasgow, who founded a bursary in her father’s name. His publications include ‘Memorial Sermon preached in the Old Parish Church of Southdean’ (1876), ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of Jane Grant’ (published in Hawick, 1883), ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of James Stewart, Min. of Wilton’ (Hawick, 1886), and ‘Pulpit Memorail of the Life and Character of the late Rev. John MacRae, D.D., Min. of Hawick (Hawick, 1892). There is a bronze plaque to his memory in Southdean Kirk. Richard (18th C.) significant parishioner of Hobkirk in the early 1700s, described as a ‘portioner’. He was son of John, who had purchased half of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded as possessor of part of Kirknowe and Kirkstile in 1745. With the permission of his wife Janet Shiel he sold the lands to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. His daughters Jane and Magdalen later possessed a cottage at Kirkstile.

Dr. Robert (1864–1902) born in Tarbolton, Ayrshire, son of Archibald and Anne Vass. He graduated M.B. and C.M. from Glasgow University in 1886. He came to Hawick in 1890 to assist Dr. Bannerman, later becoming a partner. He first followed the Cornet in 1891, along with several of the town’s other doctors. As well as being a popular doctor, he became a Councillor for North High Street Ward in 1894, serving on the Sanitary Committee and Lunacy Board. This led to him being Cornet in 1896, the only known non-Teri to hold that office. The explanation is that when a last minute Cornet needed to be found he was the only unmarried man on the Council, and was talked into accepting the position. Provost Barrie served as his Acting Father, and it appears that he did not serve as Right- or Left-Hand Man afterwards. He was a keen sportsman, being Captain of the Golf Club, and he was also involved with the Border Rifles and the Masons. He died at age 37 and is buried at Tarbolton.

W. (18th/19th C.) teacher in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (b.1823/4) blacksmith living on Ladylaw Place in 1851. His wife was Ann.

In modern times the favourite day for weddings has been Saturday, but formerly the normal day was the Friday following the 3 proclamations made in church. The ceremony was often preceded by a feet-washing tradition before the hen party, which usually took place on the Tuesday before. Prior to about the mid-19th century marriages in Hawick took place at the Manse, rather than in the Kirk. ‘Irregular’ marriages were performed in front of witnesses and not by the parish minister; they were common in the 17th and 18th century among the religiously disenfranchised.

mairriaged (mār-rejed) adj., arch. married – ‘...and purposed to cohabit together as mairried persones, if not questioned by the magistrate of ye sd. toune’ [BR1689].

Makerstoun  (ma-kur-stin-hoos) n. small parish on the north side of the Tweed, between Dryburgh and Kelso. It contains the village of Mekerstoun, as well as Makerstoun House (the origin of the name is probably ‘Mælcarf’t’s fram’; it first appears in 1159 as ‘Malcarvaston’ and in a list from St. Andrews Priory about the same time as ‘Malkaruistun’; the ‘l’ disappeared in the 15th century; it is also written ‘Makerston’, ‘Makeairstoun’, ‘Makkayrstoun’, ‘McCairston’, ‘M’Caristoun’ and other variants; it is ‘Machanstoun’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Maccarston’ on Roy’s 1750 map).

Makerstoun House  (mawk-ur-stin-hoos) n. house in the parish of Makerstoun, standing on extensive grounds above the Tweed between St. Boswells and Kelso. Originally a tower of the Corbetts was there, it was home to the McDougalls (or Makdougalls) of Makerstoun from 1374. A new house was built on the ruins of a tower destroyed by Hertford’s men in 1545, constructed in 1590, with extensive later renovations. It was rebuilt in 1714 to designs by William Adam (father of Robert) and enlarged into a Victorian mansion in 1812, to plans of Archibald Elliot. The estate passed to Hay-McDougall, then to General Sir Thomas Brisbane, and then the Scotts of Gala, all through marriage. Sir Thomas Brisbane built an observatory in the grounds, where he carried out pioneering observations on magnetism. Although the house burned down in 1970, it was rebuilt to the original design by 1973. On the opposite side of the Teviot stands ‘The Law’, also known as ‘The Pleahill’, probably a Norman motte, where local courts were held.

make up  (māk-up) v., arch. to ascend – ‘On the tother hand – the richt – the road wunds about the Green an makes up the brae’ [ECS], to plan, arrange, especially in the phrase ‘made it up’ – ‘...two young men, more resolute than their neighbours, made it up’ to go and look in at the old woman’s window’ [EM1820], ‘...but wey made it up that aw was to come ower an’ see her efter a while, an’ whan there was a munelicht nicht’ [BCM1880].

Malanoth  (ma-la-noth) n. Adam (15th C.) received 2 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. It is unclear if his surname is a variant of something else.

Malcolm  (mawl-kum) n. name of 4 Scottish Kings. Malcolm I (c.1031–93) eldest son of Duncan I, he was King from 1058. He was also known as Malcolm Canmore (‘of the large head’). After his father died he took refuge in England, later invading with the help of the noblemen of Southern Scotland and killed Lulach I. He made an alliance with England, and married St. Margaret. It is thought that during this time Middle English became the dominant language in the Scottish Lowlands. In 1072 he was forced to swear allegiance to William I of England, but in 1091 invaded Northumbria and besieged Durham. This attempt to control Northumbria failed when William II of England sent an army north. But he tried again in 1093, besieging Alnwick. However, he was killed there, along with his son Edward. He was succeeded by his younger brother Donald III. Malcolm IV (c.1141–65) grandson of David I, he succeeded to the throne in 1153. Sometimes referred to as ‘the Maiden’, he died unmarried in Jedburgh and was succeeded by William I. He founded Soutra Hospital in 1164. He also granted additional lands and rights to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey.

Malcolm  (mawl-kum) n. George (1722–1803) son of Rev. Robert, minister of Ewes. His father was granted the farm of Burnfoot-in-Ewes and he helped his father to run it and succeeded to the farm. He also merged it with the neighbouring lands of Douglas. He married Margaret Paisley of Craig and had a family of 17. Among these were the ‘4 knights of Eskdale’, namely Col. Sir James, Adm. Sir Pulteney, Vice-Adm. Sir Charles and Gen. Sir John. Sir John (1769–1833) soldier and diplomat from a prominent family based at Burnfoot near Langholm, he and his 3 brothers being called the ‘Four Knights of Eskdale’. He entered the military at the age of 12. He served as Governor of Bombay, is buried in Westminster, and had a 100 ft obelisk built in his memory on Whita Hill above Langholm in 1835. In about 1805 he helped the ailing Dr. John Leyden to recover from illness in his home at Seringapatam. He inscribed some complementary lines of verse in Leyden’s ‘Scenes of Infancy’, to which Leyden reciprocated. John (19th C.) from Samuelston, he was schoolmaster at Hobkirk from 1857. He had a stove and a porch fitted to the schoolhouse. He taught through the transition from Parish to Board School. He was said to be an excellent teacher, although perhaps pedantic and with a hasty temper. He was keen on teaching his pupils about Border history. He was Secretary of the Border Association of Teachers. He married the sister of Daniel Henderson of the Bonchester Bridge Inn and they had children. He died at about age 50 and is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. Rev. Robert (1687/8–1761) son of David from the Lochore family. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1707, became tutor to Lord President Dalrymple and was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1716. He was called Ewes Kirk in 1717 and remained there until his death. He failed to inherit the family estate near Cupar on account of his relative being an Episcopalian and leaving it to someone else. However, he was given the estate of Burnfoot (in Eskdale) by the Earl of Dalkeith, and this would remain in his family for several generations. He established a Poor House in the Parish. In 1722 he married Agnes, daughter of Rev. George Campbell, and she died in 1767. Their children were: George (1722–1803), farmer at Burnfoot, father of the ‘4 Knights of Eskdale’; Wilhelmina (b.1729); David; and Marion. William Elphinstone (1816–1907) from the family of Burnfoot in Dumfriesshire, he was son of Adm. Sir Pulteney. He served in the Royal Navy from the age of 14, but left 2 years later on account of weak health. After graduating from Cambridge he travelled extensively and then settled at Burnfoot farm in 1843. He was a Justice of the Peace, Commissioner of Supply and Deputy-Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire and commanded the Langholm Company of Volunteers. In 1857 he married Mary (d.1859) daughter of James of Cavers. When his wife’s brother James died in 1878, the Cavers estate was inherited by his daughter Mary. After his first wife’s death he secondly married Charlotte Leslie Melville (1826–92). William (19th/20th C.) from Norham-on-Tweed, he was Police Constable in Rulewater, being based at the Forkins. He married Jessie Johnstone.

Malcolm’s Moss (mawl-kumz-mos) n. name for an area near Minto, roughly half-way between Minto Crags and Toney Hill, and now situated within woods (referred to by Sir James Murray in 1863).

Maldsonstead (mald-sin-steed) n. lands in Liddesdale, formerly attached to the estate of Mangerton. It is listed as ‘Maldsonsted’ in a c.1376 rental roll, with a value of 12 shillings.

Maleatthop (māł-at-hōp) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed in the c.1376 rental roll, under the section ‘Forest’, with a value of 10 merks. It was possibly in the Hermitage valley, and may possibly be a transcription error for Mosspatrickhope.

ma-leddy (maw-le-dee) adj., arch. in high spirits, elated – ‘Jock was duist maleddy! Hei had gotten a gless or twae’ [GW] (also ‘ma-laddy’).

Malie (mā-lee) n. former female Christian name, possibly a diminutive of Mary.

mallicks (maw-likes) n., pl. capers, antics.

Mallinson (maw-lin-sin) n. John (19th/20th C.) Hawick native who became a prominent Edinburgh Councillor. He became the second Labour Councillor there in 1893, serving on many committees, as well as being appointed a J.P. and being Senior Bailie of Edinburgh. He became Chief Compulsory Officer of the Edinburgh School Board. He was the Edinburgh Trades Council Leader and helped establish the Scottish Trades Union Congress.

Malveisin (mal-vā-sin) n. William (d.1238) probably from France, he was a royal clerk in Scotland in the 1180s, becoming Archdeacon of Lothian in 1193, Chancellor of Scotland in 1199 and Bishop of Glasgow in the same year. He thus held authority over the Hawick area, although it is unclear if his influence was ever significant. In 1202 he was translated to the bishopric of St. Andrews. It has also been suggested that he was author of an Arthurian romance. He is buried at St. Andrews and may have had a son called Arthur.

mangel (mawng-ul) v., n. mangle (note no hard g sound).

Mangerton (mawng-jer-, mang-ger-tin) n. former tower house of the chief of the Armstrongs, between Newcastleton and Kershopefoot, on the banks of the Liddel. It was the seat of 10 successive Armstrong chiefs, from the late 13th century to the early 17th. ‘Alyxandir Armystrand’ is listed as owner of the lands in a rental roll of c.1376. The remains of the tower are now just ruins of the lower storey, measuring about 10.4 m by 7.7 m. There is an armorial stone, which appears to bear the date 1563 and the initials ‘SA’ and ‘EF,’ for Simon Armstrong and Elizabeth Foster. The tower was partly blown up by a force led by the Regent Moray in 1569, when the Armstrongs refused to submit. The tower is now cared for by the Armstrong Clan Trust, and is situated about 300 m south of the modern farmhouse. To the west of the farmhouse is Mangerton Mill, which lies on a lade built off the Liddel Water. The lands associated with the estate are listed on a rental roll of around 1376 in the charters of the Douglasses of Morton: Ragarth; Speteltoun; Mangerton;
Mangerton Mill

Mangertonholme; Grenys; Qwhythawlgh; Westburneflat; Pouterlampert; Dominium inferius; Haldyksis; Poudercroft; Swyne Acre; Terra cissors; Dominium superius; Hardenaulk; Tyoesonted; Maldsonsted; Millmore; Hungyrfiat; Mylnotics; Pratum aule; Flygh superior; Kelloley cun Mylnholme; Lanorowftanyes; Terra Philippi de Fausyde cun Holdoun; Strypschelden; Ricarden; Halyfyrsted; Hetryes; and Redehugh. Lands there were resigned by Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482, granted to David Scott of Buccleuch the same year (presumably as superior), and confirmed to Walter Scott of Branc-holme in 1484/5. There was a further gift of non-entry of the lands to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1550/1; they would pass fully to the Scots of Buccleuch in 1629, when Francis Scott was granted ‘the castle, tower and fortalice thereof’. The lands of William Scott of Mangerton were valued at £1800 in 1643. ‘Lady Mangerstowne’ was responsible for the land tax in 1663, including £852 for ‘towresfeld’, £100 for the ‘teind of the towre’ and £800 for her rents in Castleton. The ‘Laird of Mangerstain’ paid tax on a value of £1280 in 1678. John Armstrong, James Little and Francis Little were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. The farm was still valued at £1280 in 1707. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scots of Buccleuch, when it extended to 349 acres, bounded by Sorbietrees, Liddel Water and Tweeden Burn. At that time it contained the farmstead of Black-sidelees, there was also a common off to the northeast and the map shows the old tower and a farmhouse just to its west, as well as the current farmhouse and mill. James Renwick was tenant in the mid-1700s. In 1788 the lands were still valued at £1280 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. Robert Hogg was farmer there in 1797 and Thomas Elliot in 1851 and 1861. The name ‘Meriantoun’ (recorded in the 16th century) may be an alternative version of Mangerton – ‘I have Mangerton, Ogilvie, Raeburn, and Netherbie; Old Sim, of Whitram, and all his array. Come all Northumberland, Teesdale and Cumberland, Here at the Breeker Tower end shall the fray’ [ES], ‘Now fare thee weel, sweet Mangerton! For I think again I’ll ne’er thee see: I wad hae betrayed nae lad alive, For a’ the gowd o’ Christentie’ [T] (the name occurs at least as early as 1376 as ‘Mangertoune’ and is ‘Mangertone’ in 1482, ‘Maynger-toun’ in 1530, ‘Mengertoun’ in 1578/9, ‘Manger-toun’ in 1581, ‘Manjertoune’ in 1584, ‘Mangertoun’ in 1632, ‘Maingertoun’ in 1635 and 1644 and ‘Mengertoun’ in 1644 and 1694; it appears clearly on Sandison’s c.1590 map, is ‘Mangertone’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Mangertoun’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; its origin is probably the Old English ‘mangera tun’, meaning ‘farm of the merchants’).

Mangerton Mill (mān-jer-tin-mil) n. former mill near the farm of Mangerton. It is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, and still clearly on the modern Ordnance Survey map, beside the mill lade at the curve in the Liddel there. James Armstrong was tenant there in 1611. James ‘Littlemilne’ was tenant in 1683. Andrew Turnbull was miller there in the mid-18th century. Thomas Elliot was miller there in 1852 (it is ‘Mangertoun Myhn’ in 1611; it is ‘Mangertonmill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Mangertonholm (mān-jer-tin-hōm) n. lands formerly attached to the estate of Mangerton. It is listed in a rental roll c.1376 as ‘Mangertounholm’ and with a value of 13 shillings.

Mang Howes and Knowes (mawng-howz-in-nowz) n. prose piece written by Elliot Cowan Smith in 1914, around the time of his 23rd birthday. Its full title is ‘Mang Howes an Knowes, A Day’s Dander Throwe Border Waeter-Gates’, and it describes a journey from St. Boswells to Hawick. It was originally circulated among a few friends, but published in 1925, following Smith’s untimely death. It is a staggering piece of work, so replete with vernacular vocabulary that it is hard to read without the help of Smith’s article on the local dialect ‘Braid Haack’.

manish (maw-nish, maw-neshi) v., arch. to manage – ‘Hoo did ye mannish?’ [HAST1868], ‘A canna manish that bairn ava’’ [GW].

Mann

Manse (manse) n. Henry 2nd Earl of Rutland (c.1526–63) son of Thomas, the 1st Earl. He was Warden of the English Middle and East Marches in 1549 and was in charge of the sack of Haddington. He was later made President of the North. He married Margaret Neville, daughter of the 1st Earl of Westmorland, and remarried to Bridget Morrison. He was succeeded by his sons Edward and John. He is buried in Bottesford Church in Leicestershire, beneath an alabaster efigy.

Mannie (maw-nee) n., poet. diminutive form of ‘man’ – ‘...A lean auld mannie, and shrewd As a Heiland body can be’ [WL].

Manor (ma-nur) n. parish in Peeblesshire, south-west of the town of Peebles, extending along the valley of the Manor Water from the Tweed towards Megget. It is also sometimes called Kirkton Manor. The barony was granted by Robert III to Sir William Inglis in 1396, as a reward for killing the English knight Thomas de Struthers at Rulehaugh. This was the same Inglis family who were barons of Branxholme. Sir William’s son John had a charter of the barony from Archibald, Earl of Douglas, who was already superior of the family’s lands in Roxburghshire. John Inglis of Manor swapped half of Branxholme for Murdiestoun with Robert Scotts of Buccleuch in 1420. And in 1446 his son, Thomas Inglis of Manor, swapped the other half of Branxholme with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The Inglis family sold their half to David Pringle of Smalholm in 1522. The other half of the barony belonged to the Lowis family, with Patrick ‘of the Lowis of Meaner’ being bailie to Sir Walter Scott in 1434. A small part of the barony once also belonged to the Gledstains of that Ilk (also written ‘Maner’, ‘Manner’, etc.; it is ‘Menar’ in 1431).

Manorhills (ma-nur-hil) n. farm on the north of the Tweed near Makerstoun (the origin of the name is simply ‘hill of the manor house’ and occurs at least as early as 1616).

Manrent (mawn-ren’) n., arch. agreement as part of the feudal system, where someone swears to be a faithful supporter, usually of a superior, and most often occurring in the phrase ‘band of manrent’.

Manse (mawns, mans) n. the house of a minister, generally owned by the Church (from Medieval Latin).

the Manse (thu-mawns) n. usually referring to Hawick Parish Manse, situated on Old Manse Road, and later to the new Manse built on Buccleuch Road in 1844 (renamed Parkview and more recently Dunira). A new manse was built on Old Manse Road in 1763, at a cost of £200. This was for a while the only house beyond the Old Parish Church along the New Road. The phrase is also used sometimes to refer to the homes of other local ministers (see also the Auld Manse).

Manse Brae (mans-brā) n. former popular name for the road at Denholm Townhead, where the Church manse was located (now Beechlands), i.e. part of the road from Hawick into Denholm. Also the name for the road (north) up to the Manse in Robertson, at the top of which the older church stood.

the Mansefield (thu-mans-feeld) n. popular name for the field on the left just before entering Denholm from Hawick, adjacent to the old Denholm Manse.

Mansefield Cottage (mans-feeld-ko’-eej) n. cottage in Cavers Parish, lying just to the south-east of the modern church.

Manse Lane (mans-lān) n. name used for Old Manse Lane before about 1860.

Mansfield (manz-, mans-feeld) n. area of town down-river from the North Bridge, generally referring to the part on the north side of the Teviot, lying along Mansfield Road. It consists of housing, factories, sports grounds, and an industrial area. It was named after Wilton Parish Church Manse, which was once the only property in the area (now in Mansfield Square), the Minister of Wilton owning a large tract of land there from at least the mid-17th century. The Mansfield Glebe land here was purchased by the Town Council in the late 1870s, with factories, housing and the sewage works built soon after. Eastfield Mills dominated the area in the late 19th century, with Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. building most of the tenement blocks to provide convenient housing for their workers.

Mansfield (manz-feeld) n. Ralph (1556–1633) from Yorshire, he was appointed as a deputy warden by Ralph Evers, Lord Eure. He served as Captain of Harbottle and Keeper of Tynedale. There were complaints against him by other Englishmen in 1597, including his ‘extortions of 15 score head of cattle and 400 sheep – conveyance of Cesford to Toplif to buy a horse – caused 2 Englishmen to fight before Buccleuch at Hawick – till one was slain’. It is separately referred to as an incident of ‘carrying Englishmen into Scotland to combat before Bawcleugh, where the one murdered the other’. His response to the last accusation is that he took no men to Hawick, ‘but 2 English fugitives, some time of Redesdale, one accusing the other of crimes, did combat before Bucclleuch’, and when he got there he tried to stop the fight. The true details of these events, and where exactly this fight may have taken place, are not known.

the Mansfield Bar (thu-manz-feeld-bawr) n. public house at 16 Mansfield Road.

Mansfield Brig (manz-feeld-brig) n. Mansfield Bridge, or Footbridge, across the Teviot connecting Mansfield Road with the end of Noble Place. It was suggested by a petition of 308 names in 1886 and funded by subscription. The original wooden footbridge was opened by provost Milligan in 1888, but washed away in 1938, being replaced in 1939. A completely new bridge was erected in 1986.

Mansfield Crescent (manz-feeld-krè-sìn’) n. street built in 1887 on land that was formerly part of Wilton Manse Glebe.

Mansfield Gairdens (manz-feeld-gàr-dinz) n. street in Mansfield, being a continuation of Mansfield Park, built around 1925, with additional houses added in 1972.

Mansfield Hoose (manz-feeld-hoos) n. originally Thornwood House, built in 1870/1 for auctioneer James Oliver. It was designed in a Greek Revival style by J.T. Rochead, with italianate decor and splendid gardens. It retains much of the original ceiling plasterwork. Sold by the Oliver family in 1936, it was owned by Lt.-Col. Mudue and by 1956 had become a hotel and night club, having several owners over the subsequent decades. In 1973 it was taken over by the Hawkines, who changed the name to Mansfield Park Hotel. Later the McMannuses changed the name to Mansfield House Hotel. It was taken over by Ian and Sheila McKinnon in 1985 and renovated into Hawick’s premier hotel, with 12 unique bedrooms and set in 10 acres of land. In 2009 it was purchased by the Midgee Company. It has been a very popular premier hotel, with 12 unique bedrooms and set in 10 acres of land. In 2009 it was purchased by the Midgee Company. It has been a very popular Mansfield Industrial Estate (manz-feeld-in-dus-tree-ul-ee-stà’) n. area developed for knitwear and engineering businesses in 1976 on and around the site of the old Blenkhorn, Richardson tweed mill.

Mansfield Mills (manz-feeld-milz) n. name for knitwear mills on Mansfield road, which were built 1880–1929. Samuel Fingland, hosiery and glove manufacturer was there from around 1882. It may also have been associated with James Richmond & Co. From 1891 it house Turn & Rutherford’s, which closed around 1950. There was a fire there in 1955. Braemar moved in around 1969, replaced by Jaeger in the early 1970s. The building was partly converted into flats in the 1990s, with Clan Douglas moving into part of it in 1999.

Mansfield Mission Hut (manz-feeld-mišhin-hu’) n. independent evangelical organisation established for women in the Mansfield area in 1937. It was separate from the Hawick Home Mission.

Mansfield Park (manz-feeld-pawrk) n. home of Hawick R.F.C. since 1888, times each season. A new pavilion was opened in 1919 and the new stand in 1955. ‘As I view life’s looking glass Where can any joy surpass The callants doon at Mansfield When they hold the final pass?’ [RMc].

Mansfield Reach (manz-feeld-reech) n. name sometimes used to describe the roughly straight part of the Teviot in the Mansfield area.

Mansfield Road (manz-feeld-rôd) n. main road through the Mansfield area. The original houses were built in 1882.

Mansfield Square (manz-feeld-skwàr) n. street named after Wilton Manse, which was the only building in the area when the Town Council bought the land in 1875. The buildings were erected in 1888, and the original manse was later made into private housing, surviving the demolitions of 1974.

Mansholme Mills (manz-hööm-milz) n. 19th century woollen manufacturing mill off Mansfield Road behind Waverley Mills. The factory was associated with yarn spinning for a number of smaller firms, specifically James Taylor, Robert Grierson & Co., Dunsmore, Johnston & Co., and Tant & Anderson.

man-swn (man-sworn) adj., arch. forsworn, lying deliberately, used as an insulting phrase —
manteen

‘...Thomas Olipher, cordiner, ... for giving of unreverent language to the bailies in face of court, and calling William Ruecastell man-sworn in face of court’ [BR1642].

manteen (man-teen) v., poet. to maintain – ‘I ken that the Lord wull mainteen the caus o’ the affliccket, and the richt o’ the puir’ [HSR].

Mantel Waas (mawn-tul-wawz) n. name use for a former ruin near Ancrum, around Nether Ancrum, to the east of the village. It was sometimes referred to as ‘Malton Walls’ (most likely in error, leading to a supposed association with the Knights of Malta), but ‘Mantel’ is how the locals referred to it, which means simply parapet walls. It was perhaps a palace of the Bishops of Glasgow, who held lands there, or otherwise remains of former fortifications at Ancrum. It was described at the end of the 18th century (by Dr.
Somerville of Jedburgh) as being a parallelogram in plan, built of stone and lime, and having vaults under it. A high gable with a beautiful window as said to have stood until the mid-18th century and the last portion of the walls fell in about the mid-19th century. It was said that human bones were regularly unearthed there and in 1956 the remains of a statue were dug up nearby. A gravestone inscribed ‘1607’ is built into a house in the area. Nothing can now be seen of this former construction today. There is a fanciful tradition that an underground passage led from this place to Timpendean Castle (also written ‘Mantle’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

manty (man-tee) n., arch. a mantle, woman’s gown, dress-making material.

manuale (ma-new-al) adj., arch. written with the hand – “…be the hand of our lout familiar clerke, Maister Richard Lawson, clerk of our Justiciary, wnder his subscriptioun manuale

Manuel (mawn-wel) n. George (17th C.) resident at Barnes in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Mannall’.
George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish.
He married Isobel Hall and their children included Robert (b.1683). John (b.1806) master blacksmith in Lilliesleaf, son of William. His smithy was on the north side of Main Street.
He may never have married, being listed living with his sister as housekeeper in 1851. He was also recorded in Slater’s 1852 directory. John (1837/8–1900) Burgh Surveyor and Master of Works from 1874–1900. Born in Perth, son of Peter, the Clerk of Works in Edinburgh, and Agnes Wilson. He came to Hawick in 1874. He designed his own house Elmbank in Fenwick Park in 1884, with the access road called ‘Manuel’s Brae’ long afterwards. He also worked as an architect for Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Company, and designed several other buildings, including Howlands Mill. He was one of the founders of Hawick Golf Club, and also keen on bowling, curling and fishing. In addition he was a Mason and manager at East Bank Kirk, as well as being known as a fine bass singer. One of his regular duties was to oversee the erection of the ring and platforms at the Common Riding Games. He married music teacher Isabella (or Catherine) Hunter of North Berwick and their children were: Margaret Agnes (b.1877), who became an artist in New York: John (b.1879); Catherine Hunter (1881–1969), who died in Vancouver; Francis Eric (b.1886), who went to India, worked as a banker, and retired to the south coast of England; and Florence Wilson (1888–1971), who died in Kelowna, British Columbia. John and the 3 daughters all eventually emigrated to North America. There is a possibility that another son may have been Robert, who emigrated to America and named the Hawick in Minnesota (although there is no evidence to support this, and the timing does not work very well). His wife died on Christmas day in 1896 and was buried in Wilton Cemetery (the lay-out of which he must have been closely involved in). He became ill in 1900, with his son John taking over his duties temporarily. He died suddenly of a heart-attack and was also buried at Wilton. John (1879–1933) son of John, born at 25 North Bridge Street. He trained in Hawick under J.P. Alison as well as in Edinburgh, and worked in London. When his facther became ill in 1900, he returned to Hawick to serve as interim Burgh Surveyor. But by 1904 he moved to Liverpool, then London, then Colwyn Bay in Wales. He exhibited designs and drawings at the R.S.A. in 1900 and 1901. He married Madeline, daughter of hardware merchant Will-im Brown in 1908. After 1912 he emigrated to Canada (his 3 sisters following him there), where he contributed to the design of the Provincial Legislature in Winnipeg and the Labor Temple in Calgary. He was also resident architect at the Banff Springs Hotel. He died after falling from a 10th floor window at the Palliser Hotel in Calgary, and is buried there in the Burnslund Cemetery.
Robert (17th/18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish in 1705 for smith John Dryden. He could be the son of George and Isobel Hall born in Hawick in 1683. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His son William was born in 1755. Robert (19th/20th C.) said to be son of John (although there is no evidence to support this). He became a railway manager in the U.S.A., and was responsible for the naming of Hawick, Minnesota (mis-typed ‘R. Manvel’ in the 1905 history of Kandiyohi County; also notice a possible conflation with Santa Fe Railroad President Allen Manvel). There is clearly some confusion in the story of how the Hawick in Minnesota got its name and any connection with the Manuel family remains unproven. Samuel (19th C.) blacksmith on the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He does not appear in the 1841 census. Simon (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His wife was Margaret Smail. Their children included: Janet (b.1764); Jean (b.1769); Jean (b.1771); and William (b.1775). William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He had children: Isabella (b.1737); Jean (b.1737), apparently twin of Isabella; Gilbert (b.1739); James (b.1742); Margaret (b.1744); and Jean (b.1747). William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf whose children included: Robert (b.1755); John (b.1757); Margaret (b.1762); and George (b.1764). William (18th C.) married Margaret Fairlie. Their children included: Jean (b.1768); Jean (again, b.1769); Jean (again, b.1771); and Riddell (b.1772). William (b.1770), with no mother’s name given, may also be his son. William (18th C.) recorded as owner of land in Lilliesleaf in 1788, valued at £6 13s 4d. His surname was given as ‘Manwell’ and he was still recorded as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may be the son of Simon and Margaret Smail born in Lilliesleaf in 1775. He married Jean Swanson. Their children included: Margaret (1802); Simon (b.1803); Agnes (b.1804); John (b.1806); William (b.1808), blacksmith in Melrose; Jessy (b.1810); Mary (b.1811); and Agnes (b.1814). Simon (b.1798) and Jean (b.1800) may also have been his children (also spelled ‘Manual’ and earlier ‘Manwell’). Manuel’s Brae (maw[en]-welz-bra) n. former name for the road leading to the large houses that were built at Fenwick Park, off Weensland Road. It is the lower part of the street now known as Fenwick Park. The name came from John Manuel, who built ‘Elm Bank’. manufacturin (ma-new-fak-choo-rin) n. manufacturing. Hawick’s production of goods grew slowly, until the rapid expansion of woollens in the early 19th century. In the earliest records there are examples of various tradesmen in the town, making items from wood, metal, leather, etc. There was also small-scale, largely domestic, production of linen and woollen garments. The trades were governed through 7 ‘incorporations’, namely weavers, shoemakers (or cordiners), skinners (or gloves), hammermen, fleshers (i.e. butchers), tailors and bakers (or baxters). A small factory making carpets appeared in Hawick in the 1750s, stocking frames were introduced in the 1770s, linen tape manufacturing started in the 1780s and yarn spinning commenced in the early 1800s. In 1839 the Minister described people being employed in the manufacture of thongs, gloves, candles, machinery, and in the tanning of leather and dressing of sheep skins, although woollen manufacturing by far dominated. Manvel see Manuel Manvers (man-vurz) n. Robert de (13th/14th C.), given part of the estate of Chisholme by the English King Edward in 1317 (along with Ranulphus de Home), although it was restored to John ‘de Chesholme’ 3 years later. the Maori flag (thu-mow-ree-flawg) n. artefact donated to Hawick Museum in 1921 by artist Tom Scott. It had been captured by Crown forces in 1865 at the Battle of Omaruhaakeke. In 2015 there was a request to return the flag to New Zealand. Mar (mawr) n. Margaret (d.c.1391) daughter of Donald, 8th Earl of Mar, and sister of Thomas, 9th Earl. She married William, 1st Earl of Douglas. Her husband died in 1384 and she secondly married Sir John Swinton of Swinton. Her son James inherited the titles of both Douglas and Mar. However, she also seems to have been regarded as Countess of Mar in her own right, with that title going to her daughter Isabel. Thomas 9th (or 10th) Earl of Mar (c.1332–c.74) son of Donald, 8th Earl of Mar and Isabel Stewart, last of a line of ‘Mormaers’ of Mar (in Aberdeenshire), with no clear surname. Both Thomas Baliol and the Earl of Douglas are referred to as his brothers, but it seems this was likely to have meant step-brothers or brothers-in-law. He was apparently raised in England. He witnessed charters during the reigns of David II and Robert II and became High Chamberlain of Scotland. He also held many titles, particularly in northern Scotland, but also including the Barony of Cavers. He was certainly Lord of Cavers by 1357. In 1358 he witnessed the charter for the Barony of Hawick, granted to Sir Thomas Murray. He granted the lands of Denholm, Denholm Dean and ‘Balleolhage’ to Thomas Cranston in an undated charter (confirmed decades later in 1441). The grant excepted his domain lands within the Barony of Cavers and his lands of Stobs. He granted Cavers to Thomas Baliol, in fee. In 1368 he granted the patronage and advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey. Also in 1368 he gave his consent to a grant by Thomas Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas, of Earlside in the Barony of Cavers. It is unclear exactly when he died, and it seems there was some confusion after his death about the inheritance of the Cavers lands and titles immediately afterwards; however, in an investigation into the status of the Kirk of Cavers in 1406 he is still referred to as the former Baron, with his confirming gift of the Kirk to Melrose Abbey cited. He married Margaret Graham, Countess of Menteith (and widow of John Murray) and later Margaret Stewart, Countess of Angus, elder daughter of Thomas, Earl of Angus. He had no heirs and his titles fell to his sister Margaret, Countess of Mar, who married William, 1st Earl of Douglas and Earl of Mar. The titles then passed to their daughter Isabella, Countess of Mar, and eventually to the Douglases directly.

the March (thu-mawrch) n. the Marches, or a particular March (West, Middle or East) – ‘The March must feed her ravens …’[WHO].

Marchmount (mawrch-mown) n. alternative name for Roxburgh Castle.

Marcus (mar-kis) n. Walter ‘Mr. Walter’ (20th C.) from Westphalia in Germany, he had to leave because of Nazi persecution and founded a fashion house in London. He lived in Hawick during the 1940s and 50s, being manager of the W. & O. Marcus factory on Commercial Road. He stayed with his wife Anne and daughter Helen at Wellogate Villa.

Marcus’s (mar-ki-seez) n. W. & O. Marcus, former dress-making factory on Commercial Road. The firm was founded by Walter and Otto Marcus (friends of Otto Weisz), and became one of the top 10 fashion houses in London. The Hawick factory operated from 1940 until 1965, managed by Frederica Rosenberger. During the London Blitz workers were brought up to work in Hawick. At the height of production it employed 180 workers. One of the reasons cited for closure was rising rail costs for transporting materials and finished goods to and from London. After the factory closed the building was used as the Scout Headquarters. The ladies garment tradition was carried on by ‘Alison Russell’ at Loch Park for about 20 years after Marcus’ closed. Another company, Simon Marcus, skirt manufacturers, was based at Loch Park 1979–93. The original building at 22 Commercial Road, also called ‘Wilglen Mill’ was demolished in the late 1990s.

Mare Sike (mar-sik) n. small stream that rises on the Horn and flows roughly south-west to join Frostlie Burn near the farm of Linhope.

Marfaux (mawr-faks) n. house on Wilton Path, named after WWI to commemorate the area in France where a family member had been killed. The Inglis and Scott families lived there around that time.

Margaret (mawr-gri) n. (1283–90) Queen of Scotland from 1286, she was known as ‘the Maid of Norway’. She was the great-grand-daughter of Alexander III and his only surviving descendant, being daughter of Eric II of Norway. Following the Treaty of Birgham (near Kelso), in which she was betrothed to Edward I’s son in return for assurance of Scottish independence, but with Edward as her ward, she was brought by ship from Norway, but died en route. This left Scotland with at least a dozen claimants to the throne, including Sir Nicholas de Soulis. Michael Scot is said to have helped bring her back to Scotland.

Margaret Scott (mawr-gri-sko) n. fictional daughter of the Laird of Branxholme in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’. In the story she is in love with Henry of Cranston, who belongs to a family who are enemies of the Scotts, but through various twists they get married in the end. She is based upon a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, although it was Janet, not Margaret, who married a Cranston.

the Marina (thu-maw-rec-ri) n. picture house, bingo hall, pub and entertainment centre on Towerdykeside, previously known by many other names, including the Empire, the Kings, and the Odeon, having originally been the Exchange Hall. It was the last commercial cinema in Hawick, and stopped showing films in June 1985, when it became a bingo hall and then a night club. The last film showing was a double bill of ‘Revenge of the Nerds’ and ‘Bachelor Party’. The building burned down in 1992 and was largely demolished in 1998.

Marion’s Hob (maw-rec-inz-hob) n. nickname for Robert Scott Bailie in 1612 and in the 1620s.
Marion’s Rab

Marion’s Rab (maw-ree-inz-rawb) n. another nickname for Robert Scott.

Mark (mawrk) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1724 he married Jean Good fellow ‘att Crumbaugh’, the wedding being proclaimed in both Roberton and Hawick. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to Robert, who was also listed there.

George (19th C.) farmer at Hassendeanburn in the 1860s. Robert (17th C.) resident at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. Simon (17th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is listed as ‘Simon Mack, carrier’ among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Simon, married to Isobel Young, whose children born in Hawick included: Isobel (b.1701), Robert (b.1702) and Agnes (b.1713) (also written ‘Merk’).

the Marklair (thu-mawr-klär) n. former farmstead in the upper reaches of the Borthwick valley. It is recorded in a document of 1650, about a mile further out than Howpasley and with 2 ‘communicants’ recorded. The lands were sold by the Scotts of Crumhaugh to the Duke of Buccleuch along with Howpasley about 1760. It is still shown as ‘Mark Lair’ near Mark Sike on the Ordnance Survey map, high above Howpasley, although there is now no sign of former habitation there (transcribed ‘Maichlair’ in about 1760; it is ‘The marke Laire’ on a parish map of 1650 and there (transcribed ‘Maichlair’ in about 1760; it is though there is now no sign of former habitation or ordnance survey map on the Ordnance Survey map, high above Howpasley, although there is now no sign of former habitation there (transcribed ‘Maichlair’ in about 1760; it is ‘The marke Laire’ on a parish map of 1650 and the farm of ‘Mirk Lair’ is on Roy’s c.1750 map; ‘lair’ is either a boggy area or an area of shelter for sheep).

marl (maw-rul) n. lime-rich clay, used to neutralize acid soil. In the late 18th century opening up marl pits became a central element of agricultural improvement. Pits were developed on the Minto, Buccleuch and Harden estates, starting with Sir Gilbert Elliot opening a pit at Crow’s Moss in 1755 and marling 200 acres. Groundstone and Blackcleuch (presumably at Teviothead) were also used. Broadlee Loch and Branzholme Loch were both drained to get at the marl on their bottoms, and not restored again until the mid-19th century – ‘There is also marle in different parts of the parish, which is used successfully on land in pasture, as well as in tillage’ [RRG] (also written ‘marle’).

marled (maw-ruld) adj., poet. mottled, woven with 2 colours – ‘O, gif I kenned but where ye baide, I’d send to you a marled plaid’ [BS] (also marlt).

the Marl Loch (thu-mawr-ruł-loch) n. name used in the 19th century for Broadlee Loch, when it was drained to provide marl.

Marlside (ma-rul-sid) n. former name for lands in Hassendean Parish. It was included along with Hassendean in the 1718 survey of properties belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch, presumably corresponding to the part to the north, around Marlside Hill.

marri (ma-ri) n. marrow – ‘hearing about the move ti Gala chilled is ti the marri’, ‘My saul sail be satisfet as wi’ marra an’ fatniss . . . ’ [HSR] (also written ‘marra’).

Marriot (maw-ree-i) n. Daniel ‘Rueben Watts’ or ‘Reuben Watt’ (1817–92) English stocking-maker, born in Ashover, Derbyshire, he came to Hawick in 1851. He worked diligently to promote improved public sanitation, conducting a voluminous correspondence with the newspapers, Town Council, and officials all the way up to the Home Secretary and even the Prince of Wales. He was considered a nuisance by many, complaining regularly about policing, municipal works etc. He married Mary Randle (nee Orr). After his son was killed during the Chase in 1868 he became staunchly opposed to the Common Riding. He also had sons Daniel and David. In 1861 he lived at 13 Back Row. He adopted the name ‘Reuben Watts’ in Hawick, particularly in his correspondence, and is buried at the Wellogate – ‘...While listening to its pleasing ripple Discuss great matters municipal. And sanitary measures pat To satisfy even Reuben Watt’ [VW]. George (1859–68) son of Daniel, was killed by a horse at the end of Drumlanrig Place after rushing onto the road during the Wednesday morning Chase of 1868. This led the Council to ban galloping in the streets the following year – ‘Loan chase when a’ Hawick was grievin’, Wee George Marriot killed when leavin’ The Chennel quick, an’ horses hewed, The chase wad hev tae be reviewed’ [MB] (also written ‘Marriott’).

marrless (mar-lis) adj., arch. unmatched, having no pair – ‘The dishes on the table war marrless (morrowless); the verril cups an saucers warna neebers’ [ECS] (also written ‘mar′less’; cf. marrowless).

marrow (ma-ro, -ri) n., arch., poet. a companion, match, partner, mate – ‘He raise, and rax′d him whar he stude And bade him match wi his marrows’ [CPM], v., arch., poet. to match, marry – ‘...Among them a there was none to marrow Auld Harden′s leddy, the ‘Floorer o′ Yarrow’’[WL].

morrowless (ma-ro′-, -ri-les) adj., arch. odd, unmatched – ‘Marrowless buits an’ stock′in′s’ [GW], widowed (in [JL]; also marrless).

Mars (maurz) n. Peter (b.1832/3) probably son of James and Elizabeth Birnie, he was a gardener at Dickson′s nurseries. His wife Margaret Murray (d.1864) is buried in Wellogate Cemetery, along with 2 children who died in infancy. He may have been related to an S. Mars, who had ground in St. Mary′s. It is also possible that ‘Tidy Mars′ was a relative. James (b.c.1800) agricultural labourer who lived on the Back Row. His wife was Elizabeth Birnie and their children included Margaret, Peter, Mary, John and James.

Marsden (maurz-din) n. Philip ‘Phil’ (1931–2010) born in Yorkshire, he was a semi-professional football player with Wolverhampton Wanderers. He married Jean in Hawick in 1955, and the couple settled permanently in Hawick in 1963, where he worked in the construction industry, at the Hawick Community Workshop and lastly as custodian of Hermitage Castle. He was the first S.N.P. councillor in Hawick and became a Bailie and Justice of the Peace, as well as being involved in many of the Town′s clubs.

Martini (mar′-tee-nee) n. John (15th/16th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale, succeeding William Elphinstone (senior). He resigned his rights some time before 1510, and may have served 1486–91.

Martinlee Sike (mer′-in-lee-si) n. stream in Southdean Parish, crossed by the A6088 shortly before the turn-off for Lethem. On the north side of the road there, between Steele Knowe and Crink Law, are the remains of a settlement, consisting of an oval enclosure about 30 m across. A little further east, also on the north side of the road are further archaeological remains, comprising a roughly circular enclosure 14 m across and a hut circle 7 m in diameter. And further to the west of the stream are more field boundaries, a homestead, 2 disused quarries and rig and furrow lines seen on aerial photographs. On the south side of the road there are the remains of 2 farmsteads, rig lines, cultivation terraces, small cairns and pens, surrounded by 2 large enclosures. Also on the south side of the road, but the other side of the stream is the remains of yet another homestead and hut platform. The age of all of these farmsteads is unknown, and there are no corresponding settlements on any old maps of the area. The forest there is known as Martinlee Plantation.

Martinmas (mar′-, mer-tin-mus) n. one of the Scottish quarter days, falling on 11th November. It was a Christian feast in commemoration of the death of St. Martin of Tours. It was formerly one of the main days used for the payment of annual rents. The land-holders of Hawick formerly had to pay the token rent to the Baron by this date, as well as on Whitsunday. The first Thursday after Martinmas was called ‘Term Thursd’ and was once an important fair day in Hawick. In country areas the ‘mairt’ was killed about this day to be salted and stored for the winter – ‘...account promised be the said Adam Scott to him for his shonne fra Martinmas last to Whitsunday next’ [BR], ‘Yon gowd o′ Martinmas Cleeds timely daith. I mind o′ braw Whitsunday next’ [BR], ‘Yon gowd o′ Martinmas Cleeds timely daith. I mind o′ braw Whutson Whitsunday next’ [BR], `Yon gowd o′ Martinmas Cleeds timely daith. I mind o′ braw Whutson Whitsunday next’ [BR], `Yon gowd o′ Martinmas Cleeds timely daith. I mind o′ braw Whutson Whitsunday next’ [BR].
Martin o Heuchhoose

Martin o Heuchhoose  (mer'-in-o-hewch-hoose) n. nickname of Martin Elliot, one of 10 Liddesdale outlaws captured at Hawick market in October 1567.

Mart Street (mar'-stree') n. road created in 1976–78 when the railway embankment was removed. It was laid out following part of the old line, and adjacent car parking was developed. The street was named after the nearby Auction Mart.

Mary o Guise (mä-ree-ö-geeze) n. (1515–60) daughter of Claude de Lorraine, duc de Guise, who married Louis d’Orléans, 2nd duc de Longueville, who died in 1537. She then married James V of Scotland and became Regent after his death in 1542. She stopped her daughter Mary (later Queen of Scots) being arranged into a marriage with Prince Edward of England, thereby initiating the ‘Rough Wooing’. In 1548 there is a letter in which she undertakes to support Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in recognition of his ‘hand of manrent’ to her. She later prosecuted Protestants in Scotland, with the aid of Archbishop Beaton, which helped accelerate the Scottish Reformation. Her death effectively brought an end to the Auld Alliance.

Mary Queen o Scots (mä-ree-kween-o-skots) n. (1542–87) Mary Stuart (or Stewart) daughter of James V and Mary of Guise, born at Linlithgow, she became Queen of Scotland 6 days later. She was sent to France at age 6, and married Francis, which later made her Queen of France. She returned to Scotland in 1561, and after much political intrigue was forced to abdicate in favour of her son James in 1567. She went to England for support, but never met Elizabeth, instead being imprisoned for 19 years, becoming implicated in various Catholic plots, and finally being beheaded at Fotheringay. In Hawick she was significant for confirming (as required by law) Douglas’ Charter to Hawick in 1545, when she was just 2½! Attempts to have her wed Henry VIII’s son Edward led to the ‘Rough Wooing’ and the burning of Hawick along with much of the rest of the Borders. She stayed temporarily in Jedburgh, and famously rode from there to visit the wounded Earl of Bothwell at Hermitage Castle in 1566, returning the same night, possibly causing an illness that incapacitated her for weeks. It has been suggested that her route proceeded via Jedburgh Castle, the Dunion, Swinnie Moor, Earlside, Coliforthill, Whitlaw, Flex, Priesthaugh and the Braidlie Burn (the headwaters of which are still called the Queen’s Mire). Memorabilia can be seen at ‘Mary Queen of Scots House’ in Jedburgh and in Abbotsford.

Mary’s Well (mä-reez-wel) n. former spring by the side of the road near Deneside, on the left-hand side while ascending the hill towards Hawthornside. It was described by Oliver of Langraw in 1870 as being ‘on the lower side of the turnpike road below Hawthornside’ and suggests a possible association with Mary Queen of Scots’ ride to Hermitage. Adam Turnbull of Deneside (said to be a Jacobite supporter in 1715) convinced Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs to preserve the Well as a roadside watering-place when he took over the lands. It disappeared some time before the mid-19th century, probably as a result of farm improvements (also called ‘Queen Mary’s Well’; the origin of the name is uncertain, and there may be confusion about the position, cf. St. Mary’s Well).

Maryswud (mä-reez-wud) n. Maryswood, area south of the Hoscoite Burn, north-east of Flack Hill. It is now within Craik Forest.

Mary the Bishop (mä-reë-thu-bi-shup) n. nickname of Mary Clerk.

masel (maw-sel) pron. myself – ‘A was in masel aa night’, ‘Aa hed to sei for masel’. And it was shundert …’ [DH], ‘…An’ aw said tae masel’, ‘By jings, but he’s richt’’ [IJ] (mysel is less common).

masher (maw-shur) n., poet. a smashier, dandy – ‘The dressmaker mashier wi’ scarcely a flaw …’ [WAP] (not a common word).

mash (mawsh) v. to brew or steep (less common than mask).

mask (mawk) v. to brew or steep, particularly tea – ‘did ee mask the tei yet?’, ‘…hed kinnelt a lunt an war thrang poatchin aboot an maskins o’ peppermint leaves sweetened wi’ trycle …’ [V&M].

maskis (mas-kis) n., poet. a mastiff – ‘The maskis will not move his tongue, But wag his tail, if she pass by’ [JoHo], ‘He turned himself to a maskys hounde, And the kerylins to beagles keen …’ [JTe] (suggested to be an error for Old Scots ‘mastis’).

mason (mä-sin) n. a mason (note the usual pronunciation with the second vowel swallowed).

Mason (mä-sin) n. John (b.c.1813/4) from Selkirk, he was a farm worker in Roberton the Masonic

Parish. In 1841 he was living at Roberton Woodfoot and in 1851 at Borthwickbrae Haugh. He married Margaret Shakleton in 1833 and their children included: Janet (b.1833); Thomas Hogg (b.1835); George (b.1837); James (b.1839); Christian (b.1841); John (b.1843); Elizabeth (b.1845); Margaret (b.1847); and William (b.1850). Thomas (1824/5–94) formerly at Blackburn in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he is recorded as farmer of 800 acres, employing 2 shepherds. He was still at Blackburn in 1868. He married Janet Inglis (1827–1909), who was born and died at Blackburn. Their children included: James Inglis (1854–1904); Helen (1856–1933); Elizabeth Janet (1860–1932); Margaret (1864–1927); Thomas (1868–1911), ‘after 30 years of limitation, and suffering the prison of his body’. His wife also had children Jane and Alexander (Ingles) from a previous marriage. The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. William (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is written ‘Measone’.

the Masonic (θu-maw-so-neek) n. popular name for the Masonic Hall, referring to the former building at Myreslawgreen or the one on Union Street. There were dances organised at the Union Street hall during the 1930s, continuing during and after the War years for the benefit of troops stationed at Stobs, and often organised by Jocky Thomson.

the Masonic Hall (θu-maw-so-neck-hawl) n. former Freemason’s building at Myreslawgreen until 1922, after which No. 111 moved to Commercial Road. The other Lodge, No. 424, has been on Union Street since 1893, and often held functions in its adjoining hall. The hall at Myreslawgreen had previously been the ‘Green Kirk’, and was later used for dances, when it was referred to as ‘the Rabble’.

the Masons (θu-ma-sinz) n. the Masonic Lodge, associated with the Free and Accepted Masons, an international fraternal and charitable organisation, founded on Christianity, with its own set of rituals, acting as a meeting place for men, for social enjoyment and mutual assistance. In Hawick there have been Masons since at least 1768 and there are two separate clubs: Lodge St. John, No. 111 on Commercial Road; and Lodge St. James, B.U.R.A. No. 424 on Union Street. The second was set up after a dispute arising in the first in 1863 connected with the Volunteers. These lodges have typically had a number of the town’s most prominent men as members. There was also in the late 19th century another chapter, ‘Border Union Royal Arch Chapter No. 89’ in Hawick. The Lodge of Melrose St. John claims to be the oldest in Scotland and celebrates with a torchlight procession each 27th December. In the 19th century the local Freemasons were conspicuous at opening ceremonies and processions, e.g. for laying the foundation stone for the Subscription Rooms in 1821 and the Exchange Buildings in 1865 and at the opening ceremony for the Dod Burn water supply in 1882 – ‘These only, through their power o’er thee, Are valueless or fraught with good; There’s but one upward path for me, That path through deeds of Brotherhood’ [JEDM].

mass (maws) n., arch. conceit, self-importance, bravado, assumed cleverness (noted by E.C. Smith).

massie (maw-see) adj., arch. haughty, bumptious, overly proud – ‘Never devaaldin ti crack prood an massy about its bonnie bits an its history’ [ECS], ‘…lang or monie a massy jumpet-up toon was buggen or thocht o’ [ECS], ‘…Elect a trader ca’d John Kyle, Massy, in iz merchant style’ [MB], adv. haughtily, proudly – ‘…never devaaldin ti crack prood an massy about its bonnie bits an its history’ [ECS], ‘But I’ll up throwe thir divots Afore him, massy, his lane, Ablow thon lee’in’ hunderwechts O’ marble stane!’ [DH] (also spelled ‘massy’).

Master Grain (maw-stur-grän) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Skelfhill Burn, rising between Millstone Edge and Langtack Hill. It is marked on a 1718 survey of Skelfhill farm.

Masterton (maw-stur-tin) n. Thomas (b.1828/9) from Edinburgh. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Sandbed, along with William Richmond. The pair are listed in the 1851 census and as ‘Richmond & Masterton’ in Slater’s 1852 directory.

Mathane (maw-thän) n. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Mathane’ when he was Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1394. He is described as ‘teacher and schoolmaster’ of David, Earl of Carrick, eldest son of the King of Scotland, who petitioned for a benefice for him. It is unclear where he was from. Nothing else appears to be known about him.

Mather (ma-dur) n. Andrew of Lanton (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English raid Goldielands and neighbouring farms. His name is recorded as ‘Andro Mader of Langtoun’. In 1553/4 he was ‘Andream Mader de Langtoun’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Walter Scott of Branxholme. He could be the ‘Andrew Meyther’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was closely related to James, John and Margaret, who are listed separately. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as ‘cottar’ at Rutherfordfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

Daniel (1716/7–99) tenant farmer at Ashybank. He paid tax for having a saddle horse at Ashybank in the years 1789–97. He was recorded as owner of 10 farm horses and 1 saddle horse there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Chisholme, who died in 1795, aged 72. Their son James succeeded as tenant of Ashybank. Daniel (1808–69) son of James, he was born at Ashybank. He took over from his father as tenant of Hallrule when he reached majority. Sometime during his tenancy of Hallrule a large cairn was removed, inside which was discovered an ‘urn’ (which has not survived). He was said to be a big, powerful-looking man, with a slow, deep voice and possessed of an abundance of common sense. He lived in Rule Water for more than 50 years. He was responsible for ploughing Ruberslaw almost up to the crags (although this resulted in the removal of an ancient cairn). He was a keen horseman and rode with the Buccleuch Hunt. He also purchased land in Ireland and improved the farms there, although in 1855 he was shot in the back there, taking several months to recover, despite attempting to follow his assailant on horseback. He also had some pellets embedded in his forehead until his death. As a result of this purchase in Ireland he was referred to as ‘of Falty Park, Ballinasloe’. He was still recorded as farmer at Hallrule in 1868. He died unmarried and left his property to his sister’s son John Arres (who added his surname). John and James Arres erected a memorial to his memory (and including other family members) in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. George (17th C.) tenant in ‘Langtoune’ (i.e. Lanton). The will of his wife Helen Brown is recorded in 1686. George (18th C.) dyker in Lanton. His wife ‘Isble Madder’ died in 1762, aged 39, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Helen (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598 as schoolmaster at Longnewton. He is also recorded in deeds of 1608 and 1609 as schoolmaster at Bedrule. Probably the same James was schoolmaster at Jedburgh and Hundalee in 1610.

James (17th C.) recorded as owner of lands at Lanton in the 1643 valuation rolls. He also held ‘the lands called Turnbull’s lands’ in Jedburgh Parish. He was probably son or brother of John of Lanton, who is also listed in 1643. Probably the same James is recorded at Lanton in 1663. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was probably closely related to Andrew, John and Margaret. He may be the James recorded as owner of lands in Lanton valued at £580 in 1678 (and also lands in Ulston): at the same time William of Lanton held the bulk of the lands there, and so was probably his father or elder brother. James (1761/2–1826) farmer, who was tenant at Ashybank in the first quarter of the 19th century. He was son of Daniel, who farmed there before him. In 1813 made an offer to be tenant of Langburnshields, his success being announced after the Laird, James Elliot of Harwood, dined with all the prospective tenants in the Tower Inn in Hawick. A few years later he leased Hallrule farm. He married Rachel Ogilvie, who died in 1837, aged 71. Their son Daniel took over the farm, and they also had a daughter, Jessie. James (18th/19th C.) lived at Mosshouses, Dykeraw and Southdean. He married Janet Synton and their children included: John (b.1804); Peter (b.1805); Janet (b.1808); Agnes (b.1811); James (b.1812); Margaret; Ann, who married Matthew Henderson in Oxnam; and Cecilia, who married William Telfer in Jedburgh. James (c.1810–bef. 1857) gardener, grocer and spirit dealer in Wilton. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory in Wilton, as grocer and spirit dealer. He is recorded among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840, when he was a gardener at Damside. He was a gardener and spirit dealer at Damside on the 1841 census. By 1851 his widow was a vintner on Wilton Path and she was listed as grocer on Wilton Path in Slater’s 1852 directory, suggesting that he was already deceased by then. He was also a master gardener. He married Janet Lillico. Their children included: Andrew (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); Agnes (b.1835), who married Robert Weir and secondly Robert Cavers (in 1857, by which time he was deceased); and James (b.1839). His father may be the ‘Mr. Mather’ whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map along what became Baker Street. This may thus be the family that gave its name to Mather’s Close. Janet (b.1800/1) grocer listed... on Wilton Path in 1851 and in Slater’s 1852 directory, as well as in 1861. She was married to James, who appears to have died at least by 1857. In 1861 she was living with her daughter Agnes Cavers (also a widow) and granddaughter Robina Cavers. Rev. John (d. bef. 1642) son of William of Lanton, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1598. He became minister at Minto in 1601 and was translated to Hassendean in 1602. He was deposed in 1609 for ‘divers slanders (keeping licentious company, &c.)’. His widow is described as being destitute in 1642. Robert Collace was recorded as being Reader at Hassendean in 1606, so it may be that Collace was the actual preacher, while Mader simply held the living. John of Lanton (17th C.) recorded as owner of lands in Jedburgh Parish in 1643. It is possible he is the same man as Rev. John. Andrew and the recently deceased John, recorded as owners of lands in Lanton in 1788, were probably his descendants. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was related to Andrew, James and Margaret. John (18th C.) Town Piper in Hawick, probably around 1732–41. His surname is recorded as ‘Meader’. In 1732 he was recorded being paid for playing at the King’s Rantin. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. She was probably widow of a farmer near Newton. Thomas (16th C.) listed among the occupiers of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at Little Whithaugh in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (18th/19th C.) son of Daniel and probably father of James. He farmed at Ashybank for 12 years up until 1802, which may have been when he died. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmus Mader of Langtoun’ in 1569 when he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He is probably the William of Lanton whose son was Rev. John, minister of Minto. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘William Mader of Langtoun’ in 1610 when he was listed on an inquest for lands in Rulewater. William of Lanton (17th C.) leased the lands of ‘Kaimes and the Hills’ from Walter Riddell of Minto in 1683. He paid the land tax in Jedburgh Parish in 1678, his lands of Lanton being valued at about £680; at the same time James (probably his son) had land valued at about £580. He was described as ‘in Longtoun’ in 1686/7 when Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras took him to court for non-payment of duties for the lands of ‘Kaimes and Minto hills’. But he sub-leased the same lands to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth in 1687. He is probably the William of Lanton recorded in 1707 with lands valued at about £650; at that time ‘J. and W. Maders portioners there’ had land valued at about £520. William (b.1806/7) tailor in Minto. He is recorded there in 1852. His children included Helen and Isabella. William (b.1857) son of Rachel Tait, born at Wauchope Waas. He took over the local carrier’s business from his grandfather William Tait in the mid-1880s. In 1884 he married Elspeth Scott from Twislehope and they had a daughter Margaret Jane. His wife became the local post-mistress (also formerly spelled ‘Mader’, ‘Madder’ and ‘Meader’).

Mather’s Close (maw-thurz-klös) n. former passageway off the High Street situated where Baker Street is now. It was once an area of severely over-crowded housing, with shops at the top, and only a narrow passageway connecting to the High Street. There was also a smithy near the top. The 1858 Ordnance Survey map shows a bridge over the mill lade at the bottom. The close was opened up into a street about 1868 when No. 75 High Street was rebuilt.

Matheson (maw-thee-sin) n. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as blacksmith in Ashkirk in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His name is recorded as ‘Matthewson’. His wife may have been Mary, who was living with children John, Ann and Robert at Ashkirk Mill in 1841. John (b.c.1815) veterinary surgeon and blacksmith at Ashkirk Mill in 1841. He may be son of James, who was blacksmith earlier in Ashkirk. Peter (b.1816/7) gardener living at Borthwickshiel Cottage in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was gardener at Wolfelee. He married Agnes Gledstanes in Peebles in 1838 and their children included: Helen; Louisa; Jane; Euphemia; Andrew (b.1844); Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’, b.1844); Thomas (b.1847); Margaret E. (b.1849); James; and Robert (b.1857). Rev. William (1849–1913) training at Edinburgh Theological Hall, he was the last minister of the old Congregational Kirk in Hawick, replacing Rev. W.L. Walker, but only staying for part of 1877. The congregation had already dwindled, and probably those remaining joined the Evangelical Kirk, which later changed its name to become today’s Congregational Kirk. He was later minister at Stuartfield, Aberdeenshire and Cumnock, Ayrshire.
Matheson’s

Matheson’s (maw-thee-sinz) n. bakers and confectioners on the west side of North Bridge Street through much of the 20th century.

Mathieson (maw-thee-sin) n. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (19th C.) brother of James. He was gardener at Weens, and together with his brother and John Halliday (‘the Rustic Bard’) founded the Hobkirk Flower Show. In 1851 he and his nephew saw ‘a man walking in the sky’, i.e. a ‘Brocken spectre’ or mirage illusion of a man’s shadow, as reported by John Halliday. He could be the Alexander living at Borthwickshiel Cottage with gardener Peter in 1841. James (19th C.) brother of Sandy, he was gardener at Wauchope, and one of the founders of the Hobkirk Flower Show. James (1825/6–1900) grandson of Sir Walter Scott’s coachman. He was a foreman at Weensland Mills. He married Charlotte Sinclair, who died in 1889, aged 62. Their children included Charlotte, Alison and Thomas (all of whom died young), as well as another Charlotte and William Sinclair (who was a confectioner and tobacconist). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John (17th/18th C.) tenant of lands at Bewlie along with James Shiel. They leased the Kirklands of Bewlie from Walter Scott of Whitfield in 1720. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1770 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Cowan at Borthaugh, and another for James Turnbull at Courthill. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for George Turnbull at Appletreehall and another for Thomas Turnbull at Damside. Robert (18th C.) resident of Castleton. He is said to have married Elizabeth, daughter of William, who was a cooper and farmer at Dinlabyre. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas, married to Margaret Pledgerith whose children included Helen (b.1792), Isabel (b.1795), John (b.1797) and William (b.1798), baptised at Pathhead. W. (18th/19th C.) carter in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William Sinclair (1867–1932) son of James. For almost 40 years he was a confectioner and tobacconist at 16 Bridge Street. He married Annie Yule, who died in 1935, aged 64 (also Matheson).

Maurice (maw-ris) n. (13th C.) described as Parson of Hawick when he witnessed a letter of dedication for St. Peter’s churchyard in 1235. He is thus one of the earliest Hawick ministers on record. His surname is unknown, although he may have been a Lovel, since another Maurice from that family was Parson at ‘Little Cavers’ later the same century.

maut (maw, mawt) n., arch. malt, sprouted barley mainly used for brewing, ale brewed from malt – ‘I’d rather be ca’d Hobie Noble, In Carlisle where he suffers for his faut, Before I were ca’d traitor Mains, That eats and drinks of meal and maaut. Fala, &c.’ [CPM], ‘Some toil’d for meal, an’ some for maaut, While some were justiffin’’ [JR], ‘...might partake of pot-luck with him, taste his maaut and mountain dew ...’ [RW], ‘...His last drop o’ maaut licker – But gin he’d hained The odd hauf-croon Hei wad hae drucken quicker!’ [DH].

mautened (maw'-ind) adj., pp., arch. improperly baked, doughy – ‘Mauten’t scones, breed, etc.’ [GW].

the Mauthaugh (thu-maw'-hawch) n. former name for an area in Hawick near the Slitrig, named after the malt kiln that was once there. It may be the same place that was later called ‘the Deid Haugh’ or ‘the Brewery Haugh’ (recorded in a sasine of 1728).

mautman (maw’-mawn) n., arch. a maltman, someone who makes malt, a brewer. Hawick had 3 of these recorded in the late 17th century – ‘The bailies adjudge Robert Inglis, maltman, to pay £30 to the town’s use, because he was not burdened with quartering the English army . . . ’ [BR1651].

Mautsteep see the Maut Steep

Maut Steep (thu-maw’-steep) n. the ‘Malt Steep’, an area noted on old maps, north of Lockieshedge, which contained premises used for steeping barley and other grains in preparation for brewing. John Laing’s field there was one of the earliest to be divided into allotments in the mid 19th century. It was an address used in the 1841 census, with 2 families separate from those at Lockieshedge (also written as one word).

mavis (ma’vis) n., poet. song thrush, Turdus phylomelos – ‘Nor yet because the mavis sings his mellow morning glee Sue sweetly frae the branches o’ the auld aik tree [JoHa], ‘A mavis might pik at yer nose for a cherry ony day, ya guid for naething vagabond’ [JEDM], ‘... every blackbird, mavis and starling Jock saw . . . ’ [RM], ‘The mavis, linlie and laverock lilt Their lovelays in cadence sweet’ [TK], ‘Nor mavis on thy topmost twigs Pour forth his ardent evening sang . . . ’ [WP], ‘The mavis wales an up-stage brainch The first act aria begins . . . ’ [DH], ‘... when a mavis cam and lichtit on the top o’ yin pole and syne a blackie on top o another’ [DH], ‘For her the mavis sings a sweeter note . . . ’ [WL] (from Old French; note that the name is not applied to the mew of a cat { ‘Muirmen were mawin’ hay far doun The hill-side, lowne an’ braid . . . ’ [ECB] (the past tense is mawd and the past participle mawn).

Maxpoffle (mawks-po-ful) n. Victorian red sandstone house near Bowden. It was built in the 1860s to replace a house constructed c.1810. The lands also contain the remains of a cylindricall dovecote, probably from the 17th century. ‘Adam de Maxpoffel’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 and was ‘Adam Makepoffel’ that same year when he had his lands in Roxburghshire restored to him. Rev. Andrew Duncanson of Maxton paid the land tax there in 1678 (the name derives from Old English ‘small piece of land belonging to Maccus, where Maccus is an Irish or Scandinavian form of Magnus, cf. Mackside; it is ‘Maxpople’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

maxter (maks-tur) n., arch. a mixture – ‘Humour and faith weil blent thegither To match the maxter o’ the days’ [WL] (cf. the more common mixtur).

Maxton (maks-tin) n. village on the A699 between St. Boswells and Kelso, a former station on the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway, and a Parish bordering on St. Boswells and Roxburgh. Destroyed by Hertford’s men in 1545, it was made a Burgh of Barony in 1587, with the Ker’s the original landowners. The parish church is mid-18th century, with portions of an earlier building, and the Maxton Cross is on the former village green. A history of the Parish was published by Charles Deneon in 2000 (the origin is probably ‘the farm belonging to Maccus’ and first appears as ‘Mackestum’ in 1116).

Maxton Court (mawks-tin-kör’) n. part of Stiches, adjacent to Oxnam Court, built in 1976 and named after the village.

Maxwell (maks-wul, -wel) n. Agnes (c.1534–94) 4th Lady of Herries. She was the only daughter and heir of William, 3rd Lord Herries. Her maiden name should probably be considered as ‘Herries’. She married John Maxwell, son of the 5th Lord Maxwell (after Maxwell had sought agreement from her guardian, the Earl of Arran, using 2,000 horsemen!; Maxwell eventually became Lord Herries himself, but later suffered for his support of Mary Queen of Scots). They had 4 sons and 7 daughters, including William, who succeeded. She was the superior of part of the Barony of Feu-Rule (essentially Hobkirk Parish), inherited from her father. There was a major dispute with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1561 and 1562 over the Barony, resulting in her lands being fixed at 1/3 of half of the Barony. Alex see Mowdie Maxwell. Alexander Harley of Portrack (1782–1853) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale and Liddesdale in the period 1833–51. He married Sarah Telfer Hyslop. Alexander (b.1895/6) originally from Lanarkshire, he was an itinerant peddler in the Borders, specialising in small hardware items. He was a regular visitor to Newcastle and elsewhere. He carried a brass-bound wooden box on his back from which he sold cheap jewellery, pocket knives, shaving necessities, etc. He was said to resemble Father Christmas and wear a very tall hat. He was living at 5 High Street on the 1861 census, along with his son William, daughter Ellen and 2 grandchildren. His occupation was given as ‘Travelling Toy & Jewelery Mcht.’ Archibald of Liddelbank and Liverpool (19th C.) along with Thomas (probably his son) he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. Sir Aymer (d.1266) son of John, who was Chamberlain of Scotland. He was also Chamberlain, as well as Justiciar. His name was written ‘Eymer’ and other variants. Along with his father, he witnessed a charter for Melrose Abbey’s lands in Ettrick in 1235/6. He granted the lands of Todrig to Alexander de Synton in about 1260. He may be the same as the ‘Elmero de Maxwell’ who was ‘vicecomite’ (i.e. Sheriff) of Roxburghshire in about 1250 when he witnessed a deed of Lempitlaw to Soutra. He was removed by King Alexander from his Council, because of offences against England, in a document drawn up at Sprouston in 1255. Lands in Tynedale were delivered to him in 1260/1. He was recorded as the King’s Sheriff in 1262. He married Mary (or Maria) McGauchen of Mearns and was succeeded by his son Sir Herbert. Charles (b.c.1765) surgeon recorded at Riccarton in 1835. He was also there in 1841, along with 2 Janes, probably his wife and daughter. He probably married Jean Jardine and they had a daughter Mary in 1800. He may be the ‘Mr. C. Maxwell, surgeon’ in Jedburgh in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He is probably the Dr. Maxwell who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library in 1832. George (16th C.) Hawick merchant mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He is listed as being owed money for ‘merchandice and furnaising of the Lairdis servandis’, however, it is unclear what sort of merchant he was. Perhaps the same George was listed in 1571 as one of 4 inhabitants of Hawick who entered themselves to remain in ward in Leith, with Sir William Ker of Caverton as cautioner. In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as cautioner. Gilbert (13th/14th C.) received the eastern half of the Barony of Wilton (with Henry Wardlaw being granted the other part) in 1306, presumably for helping Robert the Bruce in his struggle to achieve independence for Scotland. However, in 1342 he pledged the estate to the monks of Melrose Abbey for the payment of one silver penny at the festival of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, while holding the right for himself or his heirs to redeem the land for the payment of £40 sterling. It appears that the land was indeed redeemed, and was later forfeited and returned to the Crown. His seal bore a lion rampant with a saltire on top and the words ‘S’ GILBERTI DE MAXWILE’. Sir Herbert de (d.c.1206) Sheriff of Teviotdale as well as Dumfries. He is only the 2nd or 3rd recorded generation of Maxwells, but little is known about him. He witnessed the confirmation of the church of Hassendean to Paisley Abbey in the 1180s. He is recorded in a document related to lands in Yorkshire in 1190/1. He had 3 sons: John, who was Sheriff of Roxburgh and Chamberlain of Scotland; Aymer; and Robert. The later Baron of Wilton, Gilbert, was probably a descendant of his. James (16th/17th C.) member of the court of James VI, who was rewarded in 1605, along with Robert Douglas, with the former Debatable Lands. These were erected into the Barony of Tarfass. However, in 1607 the two men brought a case against many Armstrongs and others who had tried to prevent them from possessing the lands. In a second Act of 1609 the lands were granted to him alone. James (b.1808/9) from Kirkcaldy, he was a tinsmith in Hawick. He was on the Kirk Wynd in 1841 and on the Roond Close in 1851. His wife was Janet and they had children Robert, Isabella, Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), Agnes, Jane, Hannah and Mary Ann. John (d.1241) Chamberlain to King Alexander II, he also served as Sheriff of Berwick and Sheriff of Roxburgh. He was son of Herbert and brother of Aymer. He witnessed a charter to Gervase Avenel and Melrose Abbey in 1214. He is recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh when he witnessed grants involving Kelso Abbey from at least 1214 and also and another in the period 1213–19 for Patrick of Whitton to Melrose Abbey. In 1215 he was among a few men sent by the King to the English court to attend to his affairs. In 1220 he witnessed a pledge by King Alexander to marry King Henry of England’s sister Joan, and in 1221 he witnessed the dowry charter for Joan of England, which included Jedburgh and Hassendean. He was also recorded as Sheriff in 1225 and 1226. As Chamberlain he is also named in many other documents in the 1220s and 1230s. He witnessed the charter granting lands in Ettrick to Melrose Abbey in 1235/6. He was succeeded by his son Aymer. John (d.1513) 4th Lord, son of John. He succeeded his father in 1486 and also then became Warden of the West Marches. He was recorded at the Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh in 1502, when he was fined for non-appearence for his Roxburghshire lands of Maxwellfield. In 1508 he, along with William Douglas of Drumlanrig and their men attacked the Crichtons and others in Dumfries. He married Agnes, daughter of James Stewart, 1st Earl of Buchan. They had at least 8 children, including Robert, who succeeded. He was killed at Flodden. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Sir John 4th Lord Herries of Terregles (c.1512–82/3) younger brother of Robert, 5th Lord of Maxwell. He served as Warden of the West Marches in 1552 and was reappointed in 1561. He was said to be a great supporter of Mary, Queen of Scots. He was listed (on the side of Sir Walter of Buccleuch) on the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. The situation was sufficiently lawless in the West Marches that in 1565 the Privy Council laid out what would happen to his wife and children in the event that he should die performing his duties as Warden. In 1579 he made pledges to bring certain Armstrongs before the Privy Council, and also had a disagreement about ownership of lands with Christie Armstrong of ‘Barnagleis’. He married Agnes Herries (daughter and heiress of William, 3rd Lord Herries), from whom he inherited his titles. He was succeeded by his son William, the 5th Lord. John 7th Lord Maxwell (1553–93) posthumously born 2nd son of Robert, the 5th Lord. He succeeded after his older brother Robert died aged 4. He and other Maxwells were sureties in 1569 for 5 Scotts of Ewesdale. In 1572 he was among the men who signed the return for James Douglas to the Barony of Hawick. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He was made Warden of the West Marches in the 1570s, although for a while the title was given to his rivals the Johnstones. He was recorded in the register of the Privy Council several times in the 1570s. He and Robert of Cowhill served as sureties for several Armstrongs and others who were being held in ward. He temporarily received the Earldom of Morton, after the Regent Morton was executed in 1581. He was denounced as a rebel in 1581 for failing to present Armstrongs and Beatties to answer their rieving crimes. He was a strong supporter of the old Catholic religion and was involved with other Lords in struggles for power in Scotland. In 1585, for his good service to the King, he and his followers (a huge number named explicitly) had relief for all their crimes committed since 1569. However, in 1587 he was again out of favour with the King, and was plotting to help the Spanish Armada invade England. He was captured and imprisoned in Edinburgh, but released in 1589. He was again Warden of the West Marches 1590–92. He gathered allies in order to attack the Johnstones, the conflict taking place at Dryfe Sands near Lockerbie in December 1593. These allies included Drumlanrig, who, however, left the battle early with his men. On the Johnstone side were many Scotts, Elliots, Armstrongs, Chisholmes and others from the Hawick area. His force suffered a complete rout and he himself was killed, after being cornered and having his right hand cut off. A letter of ‘respite’ by James VI in 1594 lists about 160 men implicated in his slaughter, including many from Teviotdale and Liddesdale. 2 thorn trees ‘Maxwell’s Thorns’ were said to have been planted where he fell. He married Elizabeth, daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. He was succeeded by his son John. John 6th Lord Herries (1583–c.1627) son of William, 5th Lord of Herries. In 1604 he was served heir to his father William in the Barony of Feu-Rule, which was erected with other lands into the Barony of Herries. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John, 8th Lord Maxwell and was succeeded by his son John, 7th Lord Herries. John 8th Lord Maxwell (c.1585–1613) son of John, who was killed at Dryfe Sands. He was served heir to his father’s extensive properties in 1604, including farms in Ewesdale. He was a Catholic, like his father, and was imprisoned in 1601 for ‘favouring Popery’. He escaped Edinburgh Castle in 1602 and had 2 of the Johnstones killed, although there was supposedly a reconciliation in 1605. He challenged William Douglas of Lochleven to a duel over the Morton title, and was again imprisoned in Edinburgh in 1607. However, he once more escaped (although his fellow prisoner Sir James Macdonald was found hiding in a dung hill). Another meeting was arranged to attempted reconciliation with the Johnstones, at which he shot Sir James Johnstone in the back. Tried in his absence in 1609 he fled to France, returned to Scotland in 1612, was captured and executed. The lands and titles he forfeited included the Lordship of the lower part of Ewesdale. He married the only sister of James, 2nd Marquis of Hamilton. His titles and lands were forfeited, but eventually reacquired by his brother Robert. His tale is told in the ballad ‘Lord Maxwell’s Good Night’. John 3rd Earl of Nithsdale, 7th Lord Herries (d.1677) son of John, 6th Lord Herries of Terregles, his mother being Elizabeth Maxwell, sister of Robert, 1st Earl of Nithsdale. He succeeded his great-grandfather’s brother Robert in 1670, as Lord of Maxwell, Eskdale and Carlisle. He was also superior of lands in Arkleton, Melkledale, Ewesdale, including Flask, Howgill, Gleddivan, Burngrains, Wolfhope, Park, Terrona and Whitshiels. He married Elizabeth Gordon and was succeeded by his son, Robert, 4th Earl of Nithsdale. John of Broomholm (d.1806) son of William of Broomholm and Agnes Scott of Woll. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He married Wilhelmina Malcolm and was succeeded in turn by his sons George and David. John (b.1802/3) stockmaker who was noted as one of those who helped during the cholera outbreak of 1849. He was the father of John. John (19th/20th C.) plumber and conductor of the Saxhorn Band. Mina (b.1798/9) recorded as ‘Ind.’ at the farm of Wrae in Ewesdale in the 1841 census. Mysie see Mysie Maxwell.

Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Edinburgh. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence presumably had a local connection. Robert 4th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1546) son of John, who was killed at Flodden. He was part of James V’s Royal Council, also serving as Extraordinary Lord of Session and High Admiral. In addition he was Warden of the West Marches and in 1526 was appointed as Justiciar. He was one of the Border chiefs imprisoned briefly in 1530 for failing to keep control of thieves. He was said to have been terrified of the power of Johnnie Armstrong and when James V had Armstrong hanged, he received a charter for his lands, signed by the King at Priesthaugh. In 1530/1 he was a surety for the entry of John, son of Walter Scott of Synton and William, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh. He served as interim Keeper of Hermitage in the 1530s while the Earl of Bothwell was imprisoned or exiled; in 1534 their is an entry in the Lord High Treasurer’s accounts to him ‘for keeping the House of Armytage and Rewl- ling of the inhabitants of Liddesdale for ye space of seven months’ and another entry in 1540 for repairing the castle. He resigned the lands of Park in Ewesdale, for which David Armstrong had a charter in 1535. In 1537 he was granted the lands and possessions in Ewesdale previously belonging to Simon Armstrong of Whitehaugh. In 1540 Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch offered to take over the rule of Eskdale, Ewesdale and Wauchopedale if he would not take it. In 1541 an English letter claims he had met at Langholm with 2 Armstrongs, 2 El- liots and 2 Croziers, to encourage them to carry out raids on England. He was captured by the English at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and secondly married Agnes, daughter of James Stewart, 1st Earl of Buchan. His children included: Margaret, who married Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Douglas; Robert, who succeeded; and Sir John, Lord Herries of Terre- gles. Robert 5th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1552) son of Robert. He succeeded his father in the Barony of Caerlaverock and other lands in 1550. He also held several farms in Ewesdale and Esk- dale. In 1545 he was ‘Master of Maxwell’ when listed among Border lairds who gave assurance to ‘have na intelligence with Ingland’. He married Beatrix, daughter of James Douglas, 3rd Earl of Morton. He was Warden of the West Marches from 1550 (but perhaps replacing his father as early as 1542) until his death. He was succeeded by his sons Robert and John. Robert 6th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1554) son of Robert and Beat- rix Douglas. He succeeded his father as an infant and died when still just 4, being in turn succeeded by his brother John. Robert 4th Earl of Nithsd- dale (1628–96) succeeded his father John in his many titles and lands. This included superiority of the farms of Nether Ewesdale. He married Lucy Douglas, daughter of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas. He was succeeded by his son William. Robert G. (1877/8–1916) elder brother of William, founder and head of the woollen manu- facturers Robert G. Maxwell & Co., based in Maxwellheugh

Dovecote Street. He lived at the Limes on Raes- son Park. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He enlisted into the Seaforth Highlanders in 1914, became Captain and died during an advance on Kut, Mesopotamia. Stewart (b.c.1795) woollen hosier, living at ‘Wilton Lodge Park cottage’ in 1841. This was probably somewhere near the end of Langlands Road. William (14th C.) holder of the (eastern) half barony of Wilton, and hence probably the heir of Gilbert. He appears to have redeemed the estate from the monks of Melrose Abbey and then forfeited it to the Crown, sometime around 1340. It was then granted to John, son of Margaret (surname not given). He is possibly the William, who along with his wife, was granted the lands of ‘Apiltrie’ by King Robert, after being forfeited by Thomas Carnoto (probably Charteris); this is likely to be Appletreehall, although there are other possibilities. William (1555–1604) 5th Lord Herries, son of Agnes Herries and Sir John Maxwell. He held part of the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1587 he served as Warden of the Western Marches. In 1597 he complained against Englishmen for stealing large amounts of livestock from his farms, as well as ransoming 4 of his servants. In 1602 he granted the wardship of Appotside and Tythehouse to James Hamilton and also the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside to him during the minority of Hector Lorraine. In 1603 he granted a marriage contract between Turnbulls and Glasheries for stealing large amounts of livestock from his farms, as well as ransoming 4 of his servants. In 1602 he granted the wardship of Appotside and Tythehouse to James Hamilton and also the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside to him during the minority of Hector Lorraine. In 1603 he granted a marriage contract between Turnbulls and Glasheries for stealing large amounts of livestock from his farms, as well as ransoming 4 of his servants. In 1602 he granted the wardship of Appotside and Tythehouse to James Hamilton and also the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside to him during the minority of Hector Lorraine. In 1603 he granted a marriage contract between Turnbulls and Glasheries. He married Catherine, daughter of Commendator Mark Kerr and was succeeded by his son John, 6th Lord Herries. Rev. William (1600–51) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1620, he was presented to Minto Parish at the end of 1624 and admitted there in 1625. He was the minister of Minto who signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638 (although his name was transcribed ‘Mr Wm. Murray (?)’). He preached at Bedrule in 1640, during the ceremony to admit Henry Elliot as the new minister there. He was presented to St. Mary’s Kirk of the Lowes in 1641, but the move did not happen, instead he remained at Minto until his death. He married Anna Inglis and was survived by his wife and 4 children. William 5th Earl of Nithsdale (1676–1744) succeeded his father Robert in his many titles and lands in 1696. In 1698 he was also served heir (perhaps just to reconfirm his rights) to the lands and titles of his ancestor Robert (great-grandfather of his father and older brother of John, Lord Herriesi, who was grandfather of John, Earl of Nithsdale, also his grandfather). This included superiority of the farms of Nether Ewesdale. His mother was Lucie Douglas, daughter of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas. He took part in the Jacobite rising of 1715, was captured and imprisoned in the Tower of London, but escaped by changing clothes with his wife’s maid. He fled to Rome, but lost all his titles and properties. William (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of the lands in Lilliesleaf valued at £10. May Hirin Fair (mā-hi-řin-fair) n. formerly the main fair in Hawick for the hiring of farm workers etc., up until the latter part of the 19th century. The date was generally the 17th of May, but for many years it extended over 2 days, with the first day considered to be for the country people and the second for the townspeople. It was held at the Sandbed until 1815, with gypsies’ carts etc. filling the area and other ‘krames’ spilling up into the High Street. The North side of the street typically had gingerbread, nuts and other edible wares, while the South side was generally for shoes, wooden vessels, china, crystal, etc. These stalls were closely packed together all the way to the Town Hall. As well as being a festive fair there was also hiring of farm workers and servants and a cattle market. It was also the occasion for a parade around town by the Cornet and his supporters, headed by the drums and fifes, which was followed by a dance, without female partners. This tradition ended in the 1880s, by which time the Fair had also died out. It was effectively replaced with the modern stalls at the Mair and Shows on the Haugh during the Common Riding.

May o Gorrenberry (mā-o-go-řin-bu-ree) n. probably fictional beauty in John Leyden’s poem ‘Lord Soulis’. She was supposedly betrothed to the young heir to Branxholme – ‘O May she came, and May she gaed, By Goranberry green; And May she was the fairest maid That ever yet was seen’ [JL].

His wife was Jane and their children included William and Ann (see also MacDonald).

McDonald’s (mu-kə-də-nilzd) n. former restaurant at the Station Buildings, run by Robert McDonald. It did a roaring business in the heyday of the railway, serving breakfasts, teas and dinners. McDonald and staff can be seen outside the business premises in a photograph of the 1920s. The location was later the Station Launderette and the Shugonda Balti House.

the McDonald Shelter (θu-mu-kə-do-nil-shel-tər) n. public shelter constructed on the Station side of the North Bridge in 1959, constructed of concrete slabs, with public toilets attached. Construction was made possible through a bequest of the McDonald family (related to Swintons). It was demolished around 2000 during construction of the Waverley Bridge.
McDougall  (muk-doo-gul)  n.  Andrew
(15th/16th C.)  son  of  Dungal.  He  was  listed  as  son  and  heir  of  his  father  in  1477/8,  in  the  lands  of  Makerstoun  and  Yetholm.  He  is  ‘And.  Makdowell  de  Makearstou’  in  1490/1  when  he  witnessed  a  charter  for  Patrick  Hepburn,  Earl  of  Bothwell.  He  witnessed  a  confirming  charter  for  the  Barony  of  Wilton  (for  John  Scott)  in  1494.  He  had  a  confirming  charter  for  the  Barony  of  Yetholm  in  1495.  He  witnessed  a  charter  for  Adam  Hepburne  of  Craigs  in  1505  and  another  for  Patrick  Hepburn,  Earl  of  Bothwell,  in  1506/7.  In  1510  he  and  about  20  of  his  associates  were  charged  with  robbing  and  harassing  Katherine  Hoppringle  (perhaps  the  widow  of  his  father),  depriving  her  of  the  land  to  which  she  was  legally  entitled.  He  married  Elizabeth  daughter  of  Patrick  Hepburn,  1st  Lord  of  Hailles.  He  was  probably  father  of  William  (who  succeeded)  and  Elizabeth  (who  married  Andrew  and  brother  of  Barbara,  who  married  Gilbert  Haig  of  Bemersyde).  George  (16th/17th  C.)  probably  son  of  Thomas  and  Margaret  Home.  He  signed  the  ‘Confessions  of  Faith’  in  Hawick  in  1641.  He  was  part  of  the  panel  of  1464/5  which  ruled  on  the  dispute  between  William  Douglas  of  Drumlanrig  and  Alexander  Gledstain  over  the  lands  of  Kirkton  Mains  and  the  Flex.  He  had  a  confirming  charter  for  the  lands  of  Makerstoun  and  Yetholm  in  1477/8.  He  witnessed  a  charter  for  Robert  Ramsay  of  Cockpen  in  1485/6.  He  was  probably  son  of  Duncan,  father  of  Andrew  and  brother  of  Barbara,  who  married  Gilbert  Haig  of  Bemersyde.  Henry  (17th  C.)  probably  son  of  Sir  William  of  Makerstoun.  In  1658  he  was  among  20  ‘gentlemen  and  heritors’  of  Roxburghshire  who  signed  a  commission  to  oppose  payment  requested  from  the  county.  He  was  one  of  the  Commissioners  for  Roxburghshire  (i.e.  an  M.P.),  appointed  in  1665,  1678  and  1681.  He  was  a  Commissioner  of  Supply  for  Roxburghshire  in  1685.  He  was  probably  son  of  Sir  William  of  Makerstoun.  His  wife  was  Barbara  and  there  was  a  ratification  of  Thomas  as  his  heir  in  1670.  John  (19th  C.)  law  clerk  in  Hawick  in  the  1860s.  Robert  (17th  C.)  listed  among  the  ‘Deficiencies  in  Hauick  Parich’  in  the  Hearth  Tax  rolls  of  1694. Along  with  William  Ormiston,  in  the  same  place,  he  was  absent  from  the  indictments  given  at  Jedburgh,  although  the  crimes  are  not  recorded.  His  name  is  given  as  Thomas  makdowell.  Thomas  of  Makerstoun  (16th  C.)  recorded  in  1537  among  Kers  and  others  who  were  accused  of  burning  Cunzierton  and  killing  2  men  called  Hall.  He  is  also  listed  in  1549  among  the  associates  of  Walter  Ker  of  Cessford  who  were  accused  of  helping  the  English  in  raids  upon  the  farms  of  Sir  Walter  Scott  of  Branxholme;  Alexander  of  ‘Stedrik’  is  also  listed  and  probably  closely  related.  In  1551  he  signed  the  ‘Auld  Band  of  Roxburgh’.  In  1560  he  was  named  (as  guarantor  on  the  Ker  side)  on  the  bond  to  settle  the  feud  between  the  Kers  and  the  Rutherfords.  He  is  probably  the  Thomas  listed  in  1569  among  the  lairds  who  signed  a  bond  to  keep  peace  on  the  Border.  Thomas  (d.1604)  son  of  William.  His  sister  Elizabeth  married  Andrew  Haig  of  Bemersyde.  He  is  probably  the  Laird  of  Makerstoun  who  served  in  Parliament  as  a  minor  baron  in  1597.  He  married  Margaret,  daughter  of  Sir  George  Home  of  Wedderburn.  He  was  succeeded  by  his  son  James,  who  was  in  turn  succeeded  by  his  grandson  Sir  William.  He  also  had  a  daughter  Eupheme  (or  Mary),  who  married  Richard  Lauder.  Sir  William  (17th  C.)  probably  grandson  of  Thomas,  with  the  name  of  his  father  perhaps  being  George.  He  or  his  father  represented  Roxburghshire  in  Parliament  in  1625.  About  1625  he  also  married  Margaret,  daughter  of  Walter  (‘Auld  Wat’)  Scott  of  Harden  with  Wat’s  2nd  wife  Margaret  Edgar.  His  children  included:  Henry,  who  succeeded;  and  Anne  Isabel,  who  married  Walter  Scott  of  Raeburn  (also  ‘MacDougall’,  ‘Makdowell’,  ‘Mckdougall’,  and  variants;  formerly  interchangeable  with  MacDowall,  Macedowall,  Makdowell,  McDowell,  etc.).

His children were: Jane (1861–90); Thomas (1863–1937), who was born in Hawick; William; Sir John Blackwood (1868–1948), also born in Hawick; George Cavet (b.1871); Katherine; Marion Cavet (1875–1961); Jessie Seath (b.1877); Helen Melrose (b.1879); and Sydney Melrose (b.1881). He was described as ‘of thin, wiry make, nimble in mind and body, he seemed to be endowed with a tireless energy’. A photograph of him exist.

Sir John Blackwood (1868–1948) composer and college head. He was born in Hawick at the East Bank Manse, son of Rev. James and Jane Blackwood. At age 17 St. John’s Kirk appointed him as organist and choirmaster. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1888, then studied music, while being employed as choirmaster. Afterwards he attended the Royal Academy of Music in London, returning to Scotland in 1895, but being invited back to the Royal Academy 3 years later as a professor of harmony and composition. He was a prominent member of the Philharmonic Society, as well as a founder member and first Honorary Secretary of the Society of British Composers. He became Principal of the Royal Academy of Music in 1924, holding this position until 1936. He produced a significant body of music, particularly chamber music. The first public performance of his work was in 1894. Probably his best-known piece is the ‘Solway Symphony’, composed in 1911, first performed in 1922, and performed for the first time (at least the first movement) in Hawick in 2014. It was the first piece by a British composer to be recorded on the HMV label. His music is described as ‘post-Wagnerian’, with influences from Scottish folk traditions. He wrote a large amount of chamber music, including 17 string quartets and 7 violin sonatas. He also wrote orchestral music, including settings of 3 Border Ballads. In 1913 he suffered some sort of personal crisis, which led him to focus on chamber music thereafter. He received an honorary degree from Oxford in 1926 and Glasgow in 1933 and was knighted in 1931. He had left-wing political views, set out in pamphlets such as ‘Abolish Money’ and ‘Total Democracy’. In 1902 he married Hedwig Ethel, daughter of naval architect Henry Alwyn Bevan Cole; they had no children. The Provost of Hawick sent him a congratulatory note on his 80th birthday. He died at his home in London and left a large legacy for the promotion of new Scottish chamber music. Most of his manuscripts are held at Glasgow University. An exhibition and concert to celebrate his music were organised in Hawick in 2013 (also written ‘McEwan’).

McFarlane (muk-fawr-lin) n. James (b.1825/6) from St. Boswells, he was listed as blacksmith on Mather’s Close in 1851. His wife was Janet Thompson and they had a son, James. Robert (b.c.1840) shoemaker in Hawick, listed on the Howegate in 1837 and on the 1841 census. His wife was Janet and they had children William, Robert, Jane and Anne. Tib (18th/19th C.) probably Isabel or Elizabeth, she was a resident of Cavers Parish. In her old age she was quite bent, and reputed by local people to be a witch. One day she was caught by Thomas Turnbull stealing harvested oats from his farm at East Middle, and he turned her off his land. However, a deputation of reapers from Denholm came to complain to him that they would all be cursed.

McGarry (mu-ri’-ee) n. Rev. Robert Forsyth (1869–1933) born in Armadale in West Lothian, he was a minister at Carfin and then Burray (Orkney). He became minister at Saughtree Kirk in 1929 and remained until his death He married Jeanie Gloag and died in Edinburgh.

He has been awarded the Winston Churchill Award and the Honorary Provost’s Achievement Award. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bedrule, listed among a number of Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He is recorded as ‘William Makge in Buthroul’.
McGeorge’s

McGeorge’s (muk-jör-jeez) n. J. & D. McGeorge Ltd., Hawick knitwear manufacturers of the latter part of the 20th century. Records of the company covering the period 1960–96 exist. The original company was founded by James McGeorge in Dumfries in 1881.

McGibbon (mu-gi-bin) n. Fr. Charles Mungo (1905–90) born in Joppa, Edinburgh, his father died in WWI. He was ordained a priest in 1930 and served in Grenada, Tivoli and Victoria. He returned to Britain in 1950, serving in Edinburgh and Leicester, before returning to Barbados. In 1964 he was appointed Chaplain to the Dominican sisters in Hawick, remaining until St. Margaret’s Convent was closed in 1988. He spent his last years back in Edinburgh.

McGill (mu-gil) n. Anna see Lady Symington. Rev. Francis (1588/9–1664) licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1611, he obtained half the living of Borthwick from the minister of Wilton (William Clerk) in 1612. It is unclear for how long he may have preached there, but he became minister of Kirkmichael in 1620. He married Elizabeth McMoran, who died in 1670 at 93 years old. Their children were Margaret and Marion (who married William Herreis of Harthwaite). John (18th C.) tenant farmer at Hassendean Townhead. In 1725 the schoolmaster of Minto, Walter Turnbull, rasied ‘letters of horn and poinding’ against him, presumably to try to recover a debt. Rev. Walter (d.1651) possibly related to Sir James Douglas of Cavers, whose children with his 2nd wife (a daughter of Sir James McGill) are said to have taken the surname McGill. He was probably born too early to have been a son of Sir James Douglas, and so may have been his brother-in-law or similar. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1593. He is recorded as minister and vicar of Cavers in 1603 when he gave the ‘tack of the teinds’ to Sir Walter Scott of Bruxholme, and again in 1607. He held the parsonage and vicarage of Kirktown from 1606, as well as the parsonage of Cavers (although he was only presented to the vicarage in 1609). In a Scottish statute of 1622 he is recorded having the right of the vicarage of Cavers Parish. He was minister in 1627 when William Henderson (‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’) was excommunicated for the slaying of William Elliot. He witnessed a charter transferring Harwood from Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir of Hobkirk to Gilbert Elliott and another regarding Appotside and Tythelhouse in 1632. He gave £20 towards buiding the Library at Glasgow University in about 1636. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he was stated as being aged and infirm and requiring a helper. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £100 in 1643 (and were part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers by the 1678 valuation). He is recorded as minister of Cavers in a Hawick Burgh records entry of 1644. Also in 1644 he reported to the Presbytery about 2 men at Fastcastle (in Bedrule Parish) who refused to sign the Covenant. He remained Cavers minister minister until 1647, when succeeded by James Douglas. He preached to a visitation of Cavers in 1645 when there is a record that he was 100 years old (although this scarcely seems credible, given that he graduated in 1593). He married Lilias Bartane (or Bartoun, who died in 1671) and their children included James (who died before 1651), Walter (Minister of Wigton) and Samuel (Minister of Trailflat). His wife is recorded in a bond of 1651 with John Wynram of Libberton. A grave-stone in Cavers old Kirkyard, marked ‘Johanna Magel, 1630’ is probably his daughter (spelled ‘Makgill’ and variants; see also MacGill).

McGinn (mu-gin) n. Matthews ‘Matt’ (1928–1977) prolific song-writer from the east end of Glasgow. His children’s songs, such as ‘The Red Yo-yo’ and ‘The Kirkcudbright Centipede’ are well known to children, and some of his bawdier (such as ‘The Bee from The Old Town of Edinburgh’) or political ones (such as ‘The Man They Could Not Hang’) to adults. He wrote the song ‘The Rolling Hills o’ the Borders’ popularised by the John Wright Band and Scocha. Rev. Thomas minister of Bedrule Kirk from 1945 until it merged with Denholm in 1963.

McGivern (mu-gi-vurn) n. Alec owner of the Tower Hotel in the latter half of the 20th century. He had the bungalow Linden House built on the site of Linden Park.

McGowan (mu-gow-in) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Ade Mkgowan’ when he bequeathed 6 shillings in the will of Sir David Scott of Bruxholme in 1491/2. He is listed among servants of the Laird. George (?–?) Hawick born and bred, he worked for the Hawick Express and the Hawick News, mainly covering rugby and other sports. He was a rugby player and sprinter, and also on the Town Council. In 1974 he emigrated to New Zealand, and wrote the books ‘Memories From Afar’ (1992) and ‘The Way We Were’ (1997). William (16th C.) public notary from at least 1553, as recorded in Wigtown. He held the parsonage and vicarage of Minto from 1574. He was a member of the Assembly of 1575...

and was also Commissary of Wigton, probably residing there rather than in Minto. He was accused of non-residence, and appears to have been deprived in 1576, but may have continued until about 1585, or else that was the year he took up residence (formerly spelled ‘M’Gowen’, etc.).

McHenry’s (muk-hen-ree) n. former corner shop on Mansfield Road, visible in a photograph of 1905.

McInnes (mu-ki-nis) n. Rev. Æneas Ede (1861–1931) born in Bower, Caithness, he was son of schoolmaster Angus and Charlotte Brown. He received his M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1884 and was licensed to preach by Caithness Presbytery in 1887. He became assistant at Selkirk and then in 1894 was ordained assistant and successor (to Rev. Mercer Hall) at Roberton. In 1904 he married Kate, daughter of George Spackman. He retired around 1929 and died at Earlston.

McIntyre (maw-kin-tIr) n. Robert (20th C.) from Hawick, he became Rector of Kilmarnock Academy and authored or edited 19 school textbooks in English.

McKelvie (maw-kul-vee) n. William (d.1906) police Constable who was beaten while making an arrest in Hawick and died. Possibly the only police officer in modern times to be killed on duty in the town.

McKenzie (mu-ken-ze) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Catherine (19th C.) servant to pub proprietor Robert Newall. She was one of the people who contracted cholera in the 1832 outbreak, but recovered. Charles (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Edinburgh who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1779. Francis ‘Frank’ (1824–1900) hairdresser at 15 Howegate, having learned the trade from his grandfather Dick. His mother was Ann, who later married David Affleck. He was listed as a Howegate hairdresser in Slater’s 1852 directory, as well as a toy dealer. He was the 5th listed member of the Archaological Society and served as President in 1889. In 1856 he gave to the Museum 2 white bear skulls and an old lock from Harden, as well as a stone hammer in 1857. He also donated some coins and fossils to the Museum in the 1860s. He was Councillor for Slitrig Ward for 6 years. It is said that his shop was a focus for discussion of the Town’s affairs. He married Euphemia Notman, and their children were James (a painter, whose daughter Isobel was a High School teacher), Walter (an Edinburgh Town Councillor) and Margaret (who became Mrs. Douglas). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery.

Gilbert (18th/19th C.) listed at Limekilhedge in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. Sir James (17th/18th C.) son of George, who became Viscount Tarbet. He became a lawyer, and was a Senator with the title Lord Royston. He dealt with some of the business affairs of the Duchess of Buccleuch in her senior years, the Session of Hawick writing to him in 1725 to seek assistance with the parish’s poor.

His business premises were initially in the row of houses that stood in the middle of the Tower Knowe, moving to 14 Howegate when this row was demolished and then to No. 15. He is listed on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His business was taken over by his grandson Frank. Catherine, who contracted cholera in 1832 (but recovered), servant at Robert Newall’s public house, was his daughter. He himself also had a bout with the disease, but was cured. Walter (19th/20th C.) son of Frank. He worked as a railwayman and became a Town Councillor in Edinburgh. He married Jeanie, sister of the Provost of Haddington William Davidson, and daughter of Hawick manufacturer William (see also Mackenzie).

McKie (mu-kee) n. William (b.1821/2) from Dumfries, he went into partnership with William Nixon, forming Nixon & McKie around 1850. He led the hosiery part of the business, with Nixon in charge of the spinning. However, the firm folded in about 1866 and the premises were sold to Thomas Laidlaw and Robert Pringle & Son. He was one of the founder members of Hawick Bowling Club in 1854. In 1861 he was living at 17 Buccleuch Street and was unmarried; he employed 87 people at that time.

the McKinley Act (thu-mu-kin-lee-awk’t) n. U.S. act of 1890, imposing large tariffs on imported high quality woollen goods (among other items), which led to economic difficulties for many Hawick tweed manufacturers.

McKinnon (mu-ki-nin) n. Hugh (b.1782/3) from Dumfriesshire, he was a stockking-maker in Hawick. In 1841 and 1851 he was living at Roadhead in Witon. He married Isabella (‘Tibbie’) Aitken, maternal aunt of the writer Thomas Carlyle. His children were: Alexander; Angus; Mary Ann, who married James Jamieson; Sarah, who married George Turnbull; and Marion (d.1844), who died of consumption. There are mentions of some members of the family in the letters of Thomas Carlyle, with the name sometimes being spelled ‘McKinnow’. James ‘Jim’ (1931-2-) road sweeper for the Council and horse-racing enthusiast. He was Cornet’s groom for over 15 years.

McLagan (muk-law-gin) n. Thomas Burns (1875-1965) native of Ladybank in Fife, he came to Hawick in 1895 as a postal sorting clerk, eventually becoming overseer. He was a Town Councillor for North High Street Ward from 1938 until 1955, being appointed Dean of Guild in 1939, Junior Bailie in 1940 and serving as Provost 1940-45. Because of the War years, he is the only Provost to have never officiated at a Common Riding. He was Convenor of the County Health and Welfare Committee, a member of the Archaeological Society and an elder in St. John’s Church. As Provost he gave the V.J. Day address to the town from the balcony of the Council Chambers in 1945. Married to Elizabeth Grierson of Hawick, he had no family, and shunned publicity. Later he became Postmaster at Keith and Head Postmaster at Forfar, before retiring back to Hawick. McLagan Drive was named after him.

McLagan Drive (muk-law-driv) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1949, extended in 1963 and named after Provost Thomas B. McLagan. Several of the houses were redeveloped by Eildon Housing.

McLaren (muk-law-rin) n. William Pollock ‘Bill’ (1923-2010) born and brought up in Hawick, he attended Trinity and the High School, and was commissioned with the Royal Artillery in WWII. A bout of T.B. ended his rugby playing career early, but he taught rugby to primary school boys until 1987. He worked with the Hawick Express, later becoming known as a radio and TV commentator, and has also written or edited several books on rugby, for example ‘100 Years of Hawick Rugby’ (1972), and narrated TV programmes and videos on the Borders. He was awarded an M.B.E. for services to rugby in 1979, followed by an O.B.E. in 1995 and a C.B.E. in 2003. He finally retired from rugby commenting in 2002. His autobiography ‘The Voice of Rugby’ was published in 2004. McLaren Court is named after him. A memorial bust was unveiled in Wilton Lodge Park in 2012, sculpted by Rory Maciver, and inscribed ‘The Voice of Rugby’. He can be heard recounting rugby memories on on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012).

Meadsgrove Plantin (meedsgröv-plawn-tin) n. plantation on the former Wells estate, situated to the north of Blawearie cottage.

Meadshaw (meed-shaw) n. farm on the north side of the Borthwick valley just past Philip. It has sometimes been marked ‘Meadshaw’ on maps. There were 5 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. There was a skirmish between Royalist and Commonwealth forces near here in 1653 (perhaps the last military conflict near Hawick). It was part of Wilton Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties; at that time the farm covered 344, ‘but very inconvenient it being long and narrow’, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Craik, Henwoodie common and Outersiderig. It was rented from the Buccleuch estates by William Ogilvie James Douglas was shepherd there in the early 1800s. in 1723. It was valued along with Craik and Whinmecleuch in 1785 and 1803. Walter Lawson, Walter Lunn and their families were there in 1841. About 500 m to the west, near the northern bank of the Borthwick, are the remains of a settlement, roughly circular, about 45 m in diameter. To the north-east of this settlement is another circular enclosure, probably an old sheepfold (formerly also written ‘Midshaw’, ‘Meidshaw’, etc.; it appears to be ‘Meitshells’ in 1650, ‘Mitchshaw’ in 1690 and ‘Midshaw’ in 1785; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Meadshaw’, on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Milshaw’ and on Ainslie’s 1773 map as ‘Midshaw’).

Meadshaw Rig (meed-shaw-rig) n. ridge on the south side of the Borthwick valley, south of Eildrig farm, lying between Mid Hill and Rashy Hill. Note that it is a couple of kilometres from the farm of Meadshaw. There is a linear earthwork there.

meal (meel) n. any kind of ground grains, but particularly oatmeal – ‘Overhall sett the one half to James Scott for 18 bolls the othr half to Adam Scott for 18 bolls half meall half bear’ [Buc1692].

meal-ark (meel-awk) n., arch. a tub for holding meal – ‘…the woman in green returned with an equal quantity of meal, which Mrs Buckham put into the meal-ark’ [EM1820], ‘…by pressing both hands open into the meal-ark and pressing them firmly together, yet open …this was styled a “gowpen-fu”’ [V&M].

mebbies (me-, mi-beez) adv., arch. maybe – ‘Yince an ‘Yince an A’d wum there, A thocht, A mitt mebbies cood geet a hurl the lenth o Hawick’ [ECS] (cf. mebbe and meibbe and mibbies).

mechanics (me-ka-nics) n., pl., arch. manual workmen, craftsmen, artisans – ‘...it was found therein specified that ye loft bewst the church door was allocat to the Mechanicks in ye toun as is att more length set down in Anno 1683 ...’ [PR1717] (it is unclear whether the word was used to refer to all the incorporated trades in the Town, or only some of them, e.g. the hammermen).

the Mechanics’ Institute (thu-me-kaw-neeks-in-sti-choo) n. organisation active in Hawick in the mid-19th century, which ran lectures to promote general knowledge among the working class. There were many ‘Mechanics’ Institutes’ set up in other towns in this period. It ran a library on O’Connell Street. It may have been the same as the I.O.U.S. Mechanics Friendly Society.

Meda’s Song (mee-duz-sawng) n. song written for the play ‘The Gutterbludes’ in 1905, with words by J.E.D. Murray and music by Adam Grant. It is about an Indian scout (Meda) who is really an exiled Teri in disguise, with the role first performed by W.F. Crosby. It is also sometimes called ‘The Song of Meda’. It was first published in 1905 as part of the song sheet for ‘The Gutterbludes’, but the 3rd verse was not published until 1913 (in an edition by Adam Grant, published in memory of his daughter Nan), so it is unclear if this verse was included in the original. A version was recorded by Hamilton B. Little on a 78 r.p.m. record in the 1930s. Grant’s simple accompaniment was embellished by Adie Ingles for the 1957 song book. It was changed again by Ian Seeley for the 2001 edition of ‘The Hawick Songs’, making it again chordal, but more modern. It is a powerful song, and retains its popularity. Despite having no chorus, the audience typically join in gradually as the song progresses, until all are singing by the end.

Medlicott (med-leekoo) n. Capt. Walter Sandfield (1879–1970) son of Henry Edmondstone and Kate D’Oyley Gale. He was an officer in the Northumberland Hussars. He married Lavender Mary Pease. Later in life he lived at Old Fodderlee, where he died, aged 90.

the Medway Cup (thu-med-wa-kup) n. the Medway Challenge Cup, competed for at the Common Riding races, presented by Oliver Kennedy in 1927, when it replaced the Branxholm Stakes. Kennedy moved to Southend to set up his own knitwear company, using ‘Medway’ as his trade name (because the factory looked across the Thames Estuary to where it is joined by the River Medway). The cup was won by Marjorie Haddon on Rufus on Common Riding Saturday of 1927. Cornet Ian Mactaggart, also riding Rufus, won it in 1929, was second in 1930 and 1931 and won again in 1932 and 1933, getting it outright following his 3 victories. However, the cup was given back for competition again in 1966 by the widow of ex-Cornet Ian Mactaggart. The Kennedy family continues to provide sponsorship for the race.

meed (meed) n., poet. merit, reward – ‘O heaven and earth! but death is a meed, Which sorrow like her’s might desire . . .’ [JTe], ‘. . . Meek (neeck) n. Brian, J.P., O.B.E. (1939–2004) born in Leith, he spent time in Hawick during WWII, then attended the Royal High School in Edinburgh before embarking on a career in journalism. He worked largely as a feature and sports writer, with long involvement with the Scottish Daily Express and later the Herald. He was a Conservative politician on various levels of local government in Edinburgh. He was columnnist of the year 4 times and sports writer of the year twice.

meenint (nee-nil) n., arch. minute – ‘. . . an clappeth masel doon a meenint on ov a foggie bank’ [ECS], ‘It wad want a twae-threi meenints a twae i the efternin . . .’ [ECS] (of time; meenite is more common).

meenister (nee-nis-tur, mi-nee-stur) n. a minister – ‘The meenister said, When he gied us a ca’, ‘We ken some folk that weil, We dinna ken them ava’’ [IJ] (also sometimes ‘mineester’).

meenisters (nee-nis-turz) n., pl. ministers, being appointed to each parish in the post-Reformation Church of Scotland, as well as other related churches. They also served as Moderators for their parish Sessions. The Hawick minister lived in the Manse, which for centuries was on Old Manse Lane. In the 18th century the Hawick minister enjoyed the privilege of cutting peat and turf on the Common and of grazing on the Common any horses, cows or sheep that he possessed; he also received a ‘teind’ for any newborns to the Town’s livestock, 4d for a lamb, 1s for a calf and 1s 8d for a foal. Parish ministers of Hawick can be traced back for several centuries, although the early days are actual duties to the parish. The first Hawick clergymen on record are Henry, ‘person’ (i.e. Parson), and Algar and William, both ‘capellano’ (i.e. Chaplain) in about 1183. Then comes William (‘Willo Clerico de hauwic’), probably the same man 4 more times in the next decade or 2, followed by ‘Maurice, Parson of Hawick’ in 1235. Then there is Radolphus (or Ralph) in the 1260s and Richard de Witton in 1296. There then follows several Rectors who held the ‘benefice’ of the church of Hawick, although probably never visited the town, and may have had a curate performing the pastoral duties. The roll afterwards is: Robert de Ormesby in 1297; Richard de Clare for a few years up until perhaps 1311; an unnamed appointee of Edward II in 1319; Gerard Kereti, from about 1346–53; John of Hawick, from 1355/6; John Fleming (possibly the same as the previous Rector) until some time before 1363; John Leche, from before 1363 until at least 1378; John Cromdale, probably after 1378; William Turnbull, from before 1431; James Lindsay, from at least 1447; Thomas Falconer, Chaplain in 1452; Hugh de Douglas noted in 1460; Alexander Murray at least 1476–82; John Preston, Parson in 1481; James Merchiston in the years around 1504; Robert Luderdale, Chaplain in at least 1511/2–14; Alexander Newton, Vicar in 1514; William Cunningham, Parson in 1519/20; John Hardie, Chaplain in 1519/20; John Scott, Vicar in at least 1528–39/40; John Hepburn, Rector in 1532; Pate Witelow around 1532; and John Scott, Rector from 1536. John Young was burned in his tower in 1548. George Hepburn was Parson around 1559, probably the last before the Reformation. John Sandilands was recorded as Rector in 1554 and 1558, and after the Reformation was Parson, probably from 1563 until 1583. John Spottiswood was also recorded as a Rector in 1558 (so there were apparently 2 men sharing this benefice). William Fowler held the post of Parson from 1585 until 1601. However, Henry Scott was Reader in 1574–79, while William Auchmowtie was Minister for Hawick, Wilton, Kirkton, Hesdenean and Cavers (at the same time) from 1575 until at least 1591, i.e. he was the actual minister during the time of at least a couple of Parsons and Readers. The charge was vacant in 1599 (and possibly for several years around that time). We then have the post-Reformation bona fide parish Ministers: Thomas Abernethy, from 1601 until about
the Meenister’s Entry

1610; Adam Scott 1612–c.24; Robert Cunningham 1625–56; John Scott 1657–62; and Alexander Kinnear about 1663–67. John Langlands was the last Episcopalian, appointed in 1667 and deprived in 1689. There was then a vacancy for about 2 years in the confusing times after the Revolution. The following is a list thereafter: Alexander Orrock 1691–1711; Robert Cunningham 1712–22; Charles Telfer 1723–31; William Somerville 1732–57; James Laurie 1757–83; Thomas Sharp 1784–89; Robert Gillan 1789–1800; James Arkle 1800–23; John Cochrane 1823–32; John A. Wallace 1833–43; John MacRae 1843–92; David Cathels 1892–1925; John A.G. Thomson 1925–72; David L. Wright 1972–86.

the Meenister’s Entry (thu-mee-nis-turz-en-tree) n. Minister’s Entry, name used for Broughton Place before about 1840.

the Meenister’s Pool (thu-mee-nis-turz-pool) n. popular name around the 19th century for a fishing pool (in many parishes) frequented by the local minister.

meenite (mee-ni’) n. a minute – ‘this’ll only lest a few meenites’, ‘Jist gie’s a meenit and Aw’ll gaun wi’ a jug masel’ . . . ’ [JEDM], ‘Ah dinna ken what happened, yin meenit oo were on a bus tae Blackpool, and the next . . . ’ [JCo], ‘I stared at it for half a meenit, then howked a hole and pit him in it’ [TD], ‘. . . Meg (meg) n. Christian name, usually a familiar form of Margaret – ‘. . . Aw wunder what Meg’ll say?’ [RM] (also Mag and Maggy).

Meg an the Bairns (meg-in-thu-barnz) n. popular name for two small cairns on top of Needs Law in the north-eastern part of Castleton Parish. The ancient cairn there is about 17 m in diameter and has these 2 modern cairns on top, one smaller than the other.

Meggat’s Ade (meg-gits-a’d) n. nickname for Adam Crozier.

the Megget (thu-me-gi’) n. reservoir created in the 1983, when a valley to the west of St. Mary’s Loch was flooded, covering the ruined 16th century Cramalt Tower. It has the biggest earth dam in Scotland and supplies water to Edinburgh and the Lothians. The area was referred to as ‘Meggotland’ around the early 1500s when it was a favourite hunting centre for the King, and also used as a base for suppressing rievers. It is also the name of the river that rises near Broad Law, passes through the Reservoir and empties into St. Mary’s Loch – ‘Meggat Water and Tenna, They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout breasting their rills’ [WL] (also spelled ‘Meggat’; marked ‘Stanhouse or Meggat Riv.’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

meggins (mee-gins) interj., arch. exclamation of surprise, mercy – ‘Aih meggins, is that railly yow!’ [GW] (short form of megginstie).

megginstie (mee-gin-stie) interj., arch. exclamation of surprise, particularly in the phrase ‘Megginstie mei!’ (cf. merginstie and meggins).

Meg o Todrig (meg-o-tod-rik) n. nickname for Margaret Aitken.

Meg’s Hill (megz-hill) n. hill on the left-hand side of the A7 south of Teviothead, between Castleweary and Linhope. It reaches a height of 353 m.

meg sakes mei (meg-saks-mi) n. interj., expression of surprise or exasperation – ‘Bidden, meg sakes mei mother, bidden, how could Aw, an’ yow a’ eer lane on a Common Ridin’ night?’ [JEDM] (presumably a variant of Lod-sakes-mei).

Meg the Manty (meg-thu-mawn-tee) n. popular name for Margaret Watson (or possibly Walker). She is also referred to as ‘Meg the Mantua’ – ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddly aboot, And Gleska Jamie liits a sang Tae Shauchles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI] (probably derived from ‘Mantie',

mei (mī) pron. me – ‘mei an yow can dae eet’, ‘A deh ken, mei’, ‘so that was mei then’, ‘deh roll yer een it mei’, ‘And this she said tae mei …’ [JSB], ‘…an’ that didna care to speak to the like o’ mey’ [BCM1880], ‘…That some day they, Like mei will turn grey’ [JEDM], ‘…Mei! But A’ll ne’er forget ‘A’m a Hawick man mei’’ [GM], ‘…A canna rest mei when my Treasure’s oot o’ sicht’ [WFC], ‘Oh dinna speak to mei ma man, Oh dinna speak to mei …’ [JCG], ‘The Vertish means a lot ti mei …’ [WL], ‘Oo’re privileged ti be able and proud ti proclaim ‘A’m a Hawick man, mei’’ [WL], interj., my, used to express surprise, pleasure or dismay, a euphemism for ‘my God!’ – ‘mei, ee er mei’ [IWL], ‘I wull prayse thee amang meikle peeple’ [HSR], ‘…naither do I leazle mysel’, makin’ a-wark in meikle mattirs …’ [HR], adv. much – ‘…in ane unlaw o’ 6s. and as meikle that lies out of the nicht in his neighbour’s corn or haynet gers’ [BR1649], ‘Mair til be desiret ar thaye nor gowd, yis, nor meikle fyne gowd’ [HSR], ‘…ane michtie man isna delifferet bie meikle doucht’ [HSR], ‘They tell o’ meikle care and pain, They tell o’ mony waes; We neendna think to light again The love o’ early days’ [JT], ‘…Her hope o’ meikle fortune’s sma’ [WL] (also in some place names, e.g. Meikledale and Meikle Whitlaw).

the Meikle Brig (thu-mee-kul-brig) n. former name for Hawick’s main bridge, perhaps suggesting there was a second one, as also indicated by other records of the early 18th century. The Session books of 1722 state that 2 elders are to collect money ‘from ye west side of ye town to ye Bridge’ and the next ‘from ye Meeke bridge to Wm. Dickson’s house’. This is suggestive of 2 separate bridges across the Slitrig, this being the popular name for the larger one, but this is far from certain. It may be that the ‘Meikle Brig’ was the ‘Auld Brig’ (not perhaps so old back then), with the other being a bridge over the Slitrig mill lade.

Meikle Cavers (mee-kul-kā-vurz) n. former name for ‘Cavers Magna’, i.e. the main Parish of Cavers, recorded in an instrument of 1404/5 and a papal bull of 1419.

Meikledale (mee-kul-dāl) n. farm near where the Meikledale Burn joins the Ewes Water on the A7, about 5 miles south of Mosspaul. The lands there were long the seat of the Littles, from before 1426 when Simon Little had an earlier grant confirmed. They were described as a 20-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. They were then owned by the Elliots. The farm was valued at £900 in 1671 when Adam Elliot was owner. When inherited by Adam’s son William in 1682 the farm (together with Meikledalehope) was described as a 19-merk land of old extent. William Scott of Rowanburn (a descendant of the Scrots of Thirlestane) acquired it in 1733 and sold it to William Laing (Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1750). Thomas Beattie was then the tenant, and wrote a diary, which survives. He was still there until at least 1797. Mr. Laing sold it to William Elliot Lockhart of Borthwickbrae, his nephew. The tenant in 1841 and until at least the 1860s was John Common. An ancient standing stone, the ‘Grey Wether’ stood in front of the house. There are remains of an ancient settlement just to the north-east, and another further up the Burn at Riegfoot. There was also formerly a mill there (sometimes ‘Muckledale’); it is ‘Meikldale’ in 1426, ‘Mekildail’ in 1550, ‘Mekildaill’ in 1569 and ‘Muckledeall’ in 1785; it is ‘Meikldale’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Muckledeall’ on Crawford’s 1804 map.

Meikledale Burn (mee-kul-dāl-burn) n. major stream that rises at Faw Side and Rashiegrain Height (on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire) and joins the Ewes Water near the farm of Meikledale. There are signs of a rectangular platform near the head of the burn and signs of a settlement further down.

Meikledale Haugh (mee-kul-dāl-hawch) n. cottage near Meikledale. There were Jacksons and Douglases there in 1841.

Meikledalehope (mee-kul-dāl-hōp) n. former lands near Meikledale. This could be the ‘mekil-hop’ where Simon Scott was recorded in 1494/5.
The lands were inherited along with Meikledale by William Elliot in 1682 (it is ‘Meikledaillhope’ in 1682).

the Meikle Door (thu-mee-kul-dór) n., former name for the main, large entrance to St. Mary’s Kirk, situated at the west end. This is in the pre-1763 Kirk – ‘Farhaim, Bailies Rucastle and Graham to stand att the meikle kirk door’ [PR1718].

Meikle Whitlaw (mee-kul-whi’-law) n., former name for a farm at Whitlaw, to the north of the Flex road, opposite ‘Little Whitlaw’. The 2 former farms were separated by the Flex Burn.

The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, at that time covering 188 acres and being bounded by the Slitrig, Little Whitlaw and Hawick Common, with the farmhouse at the south end, on the Flex Burn. The old boundary of the Common came to a point there, with the boundary line running through one of the farm buildings; this was the house of Janet Martin at the time of the 1767 description of the Common. At the Riding of the Marches a cut sod was placed on the roof and the Flag passed over it also (presumably by the Cornet). The farm was formerly owned by the Gladstains, then became a tenanted farm belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch. There is a record of a band of English and Scottish thieves stealing cattle from John Gladstaines’ byre there in 1580 and being followed by a band of Gladstains and Scotts: on their return through Liddesdale they were ambushed by Armstrongs and others and Walter, brother of James Gladstains of Cocklaw was killed. In 1692 Francis Gladstains renewed his lease, which he held by right through ‘gentleman service’. In the 1750s there was a dispute over the apportionment of the ‘cess’ between these lands and the Flex. ‘Mickle and Little Whitlaws’ were valued together at £152 2s 7d in 1811, when owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farmer in the mid-19th century was William Knox; he was said to have succeeded 2 of his uncles, who became tenants in about 1746 (although it was probably later), succeeding John Gladstanes. The site of the former farm buildings is now the main part of Flex farm (also known as ‘Muckle Whitlaw’; it is ‘Mekle Quhitelaw’ in 1580 and ‘Meikle Whittlawes’ in 1718).

Mein (meen) n. James (b.c.1800) born in Stow, he was farmer at Weensland Farmhouse in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet and they had a son James. abbey founded around 1136. The town became a Burgh of Barony in 1609. The 15th century Comendator’s House, repaired 1645 Market Cross, and Priorwood Gardens are other attractions. At one time called Fordell, it was well known for producing linens until the late 18th century, and also known as the former home of ‘Coltart’s Candy’. Melrose was a station on the Waverley Line, but is now primarily a residential and retirement community. Considered ‘posh’ by other Borderers, it is rarely the best-loved among the other towns – ‘The dastards of Melrose and Galashiels weavers! They pulled out our badge, and became our deceivers’ [JH]. Melrose Festival Week was inaugurated in 1938, led by the Melrosian and the Festival Queen, and has some events in the grounds of Melrose Abbey. The local song has some great words – ‘It’s o’ar ain toon, It’s the best toon That ever there be: Here’s tae Melrose, gem o’ Scotland, The toon o’ t’free’. The town has also given rise to a surname. Population (1991) 2,270 (the origin is possibly the Old British ‘mael’ and Old Welsh ‘rhos’, meaning ‘bare or cropped moor’, although the Gaelic ‘ros’ for ‘promontory’ has also been suggested; the name was probably transferred from Old Melrose where the Abbey was first sited; certainly the name has nothing to do with the rose, despite its appearance on the town’s coat of arms; the name first appears as ‘Mailros’ about 700 and had varied spellings until the 17th century).

Melrose (mel-rōz) n. Adam (d.1222) referred to as ‘Adam of Melrose’, where he became Abbot in 1207. His origins are a mystery. In 1213 he became Bishop of Caithness, and was consecrated in May 1214. In the following month he dedicated the church of St. Mary in Hawick. This is presumably because he had previously been Abbot of Melrose, and would have been something he did before returning to Caithness. In 1218 he was one of the Bishops who visited the Pope to reverse the excommunication imposed upon the whole Kingdom of Scotland. He was burned to death in his kitchen at Halkirk by a mob of infuriated farmers after he had increased the tax. Adam (1817/8–74) another of the engineering family, of whom a portrait exists. He married Agnes, daughter of plumber and slater Walter Grieve, and she died in 1891, aged 75. Their children included: Janet, who married James Davidson, who worked for Patons, spinners in Alloa; Helen (b.1844); Agnes; another Agnes; Walter (b.1849); Maggie (b.1853); Lizzie; Isabella; and Jemima. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Helen (19th C.) listed as milliner or dressmaker in Slater’s 1852 directory. J. (d.1814) resident of Mackside. His death is recorded in Hobkirk Parish. James (b.1767/8) born in Rathi, Midlothian, he was an engineer who came to Hawick from Berwick in the 1810s and founded the local firm James Melrose & Sons in 1815. Their premises started in Broughton Place (shown on Wood’s 1824 map) and moved to Slitrig Crescent. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed as a millwright and machine maker at ‘Woodyard’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and was still there on the 1841 census. The firm produced much of the machinery for woollen mills in the South of Scotland. He is recorded as a joint proprietor with his son James in the 1837 electoral roll. In 1837 he was listed simply on the High Street. He is said to have invented the piecing machine (for joining the ‘rovings’ in preparation for spinning) in Hawick in 1844, which was adopted throughout Scotland, as well as in England, and as far afield as Russia. In 1851 he was at 1 High Street (although clearly the east end of the High Street was meant) and ‘Jas. Melrose & Son, millwrights, East end’ is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1808 he married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Hardie in Eccles, Berwickshire. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1810); and John (b.1815). He was still alive in 1851. James (d.1862) from Hawick, he became foreman of the Keysham Steam Factory in Devonport. He married Janet Easton, who died in Hawick in 1886. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as tenant in ‘quithalch’, when he was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing cows from the Frisells near Peebles. It is unclear which of the Whithaugh or Whiteaugh he lived at, but his surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. John (c.1815–89) son of James, he ran the family engineering firm. He was born in Berwick. He was a Town Councillor for Slitrig Ward until 1867. He was Chairman of Hawick Gas Light Co., and member of the Parochial Board. He was also on the original Hawick Bowling Club committee in 1854. In 1851 he was at 5 Brougham Place and at 14 Slitrig Crescent in 1861. He donated a communion cup from the Green Kirk to the Museum. He married Catherine Easton. Their children were: Eliza (b.1841); James (b.1843); Helen Hardie (b.1845); William (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); John (b.1853), who became Hawick Provost; and Catherine (b.c.1855). John, C.B.E. (b.1853) son of John and Catherine Easton. He grew up in Hawick, where he was taught
Melrose Abbey

Melrose Abbey (mel-roz-aw-bee) n. abbey in the town of Melrose, founded by David I around 1136, with Cistercian (also known as ‘white’) monks. This followed an earlier monastery built at Old Melrose, in a loop of the Tweed, about 2½ miles downriver. It was founded around 650 by St. Aidan, with St. Boisil and St. Cuthbert also Priors there. This building was burned in 839, slowly fell into decay and was abandoned by the 11th century. The new abbey was dedicated to St. Mary and was headed by an Abbot. The town of Melrose grew up around the Abbey. The ‘Chronicle of Melrose’ is a historical record compiled by the monks, covering the period 731–1264, and including the consecration of St. Mary’s in Hawick in 1214. The Abbey held the right of patronage of Hassendean Parish from the late 12th century until the Reformation. They also held extensive pieces of land throughout the Borders, including a large chunk of Ettrick (according to a charter of around 1235) and Ringwood, an area in southern Cavers Parish, as first recorded in 1360. Their lands were erected into a free regality in 1358. Around the same time there was confirmation of the Abbey’s right to the annual rents from the sheriff courts and justice courts of Roxburghshire. Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Bailie of their lands in 1519, confirmed in 1524/5; this included ‘Melrosland, Ettrikheid, Rodonaland, Eskdalmuir, Ringwoodfield, Est Tevidall and Vggynis’. The Abbey was frequently damaged during Border skirmishes, being burned in 1322, when Abbot Peebles was slain by Edward II’s men. Robert the Bruce gave a huge sum for its rebuilding. Lands gifted to the Abbey about that time included some in the Borthwick valley. Burned again in 1385, it was rebuilt in the 15th century, and burned again in 1545. Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme apparently dismantled much of it in 1569 (according to a court case of 1573), claiming he had carried off the materials to save them from the English. The abbey was finally destroyed in the Reformation, and the lands were administered by a Commendator. After many changes of hands the lands (including the Kirks of Hassendean and Cavers) were formally resigned in 1619, becoming part of the Lordship of Melrose. The parish kirk was constructed over the nave in 1618. Thomas Hamilton became Earl of Melrose and gained the lands of the Abbey in 1619, and later they passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch. Records of the Regality of Melrose, pertaining to the former Abbey’s lands preserve some important local information. The Abbey was built in red sandstone, including fine tracery, with much intricate carving surviving. It was extensively restored in 1822, at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch, under the supervision of Sir Walter Scott. Alexander II is buried here, as well as allegedly the heart of Robert the Bruce, after being carried back from the Crusades. More local connections include that St. Cuthbert is said to have started his career at Melrose Abbey, George Fairneylaw, a messenger from the Abbey is meant to have been killed by Roger Langlands at Stirches in 1493 (possibly true, although Fairneylaw was a cleric of the Diocese of Glasgow), and the monks are supposed to have first built the shelter at Mosspaul (although there is no evidence to support this, but they did own land in the neighbourhood). The abbey is now open to the public, as well as the adjacent Commendator’s House – ‘Deserted Melrose! oft with holy dread I trace thy ruins mouldering o’er the dead; While, as the fragments fall, wild fancy hears The solemn steps of old departed years” [JL].

Melrose Court (mel-roiz-kor’) n. part of Stirches, built in 1968 and named after Provost John Melrose.

Melroselands (mel-roizlawndz) n. lands held by Melrose Abbey in the 15th and 16th centuries. It is unclear exactly the extent of these lands, and whether they always meant the same thing. Along with Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdalemuir, Ringwoodfield and East Teviotdale, they formed a set of lands to which Sir David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert were appointed as bailies in 1484. Gilbert Leighton and Robert Cairncross were recorded as tenants in 1493. The appointment was hereditary, with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch appointed to the same office in 1519, Sir Walter succeeding his grandfather in 1564 and the next Sir Walter succeeding his father in 1574 (it is ‘Mellroslandis’ in 1519, ‘Melrosland’ in 1524 and ‘Melrosland’ in 1553/4).

Melrose’s (mel-roiz-seez) n. local engineering firm, founded in 1815 as James Melrose & Sons, starting in Brougham Place and moving to Slitrig Crescent. They supplied many of the local textile mills, e.g. the new pit wheel for Wilton Mills in 1829, the first steam engine built in Hawick, for Langlands Mill in 1831, and the first ‘piecing machine’ in Hawick in 1844. They furnished the mills at the Glebe, Riversdale and Teviotdale. They also occupied the Teviotside Foundry on the east side of Commercial Road from the late 19th century. At their height the company was supplying factories from the England Midlands to far north of Scotland. The National Archives of Scotland have papers dating from 1867, while the Scottish Borders Archive has some engineering plans from about 1863–1910.

Melrose’s (mel-roiz-seez) n. butcher’s shop also run as a hostelry by Mrs. Melrose in the early 19th century. It was located at the eastern side of the Tower.

Melrosian (nee-roo-zee-an) n. someone from Melrose, also the name of the principal of the Melrose festival.

melt (mel-tith) n., arch. the spawn of a male fish, milt.

meltith (mel’) n., arch. the milt, male reproductive gland of a fish, arch., poet. a meal, food, sustenance – ‘Thaye sall fa’ be the sword; thaye sall be ane melteth for the tods’ [HSR], ‘…an’ that was ay when ye gaed him a gude meltith – a nicht’s ludgin’ an’ a pickle meal away wi’ him in the mornin’’ [BCM1880].

Melville (mel-vil) n. David (1660–1728) 3rd son of George, Earl of Melville. He became 3rd Earl of Leven in 1681. He came over to Scotland with the army of William of Orange in 1688. Along with his father, he helped deal with the affairs in Scotland for Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch, who was half-sister of his mother. There are several letters in existence from her to him in the period 1696–1702. Holding several high offices, he was appointed a Commissioner for the Union in 1706, was a Representative Peer 1707–10, but dismissed from all offices in 1712. George (1636–1707) 4th Lord and 1st Earl of Melville. He was an advisor of the young Duchess of Buccleuch, taking care of her affairs in Scotland. Accused in the ‘Rye House Plot’ of 1683, he fled to Holland. He returned to Scotland after the Revolution and became Secretary of State for Scotland. He and his son continued to deal with the estates of the Duchess, but after her return to Scotland in 1701 she started to suspect that they had worked in their own interest, and the legal disputes took until 1711 to resolve. He is portrayed as Henry Morton in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Old Mortality’. He married Catherine, only daughter of Lady Margaret Leslie and her 1st husband, Lord Balgonie; she was a step-sister of the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son David, who was also Earl of Leven. James of Halhill (d.bef. 1714) son of Sir James of Halhill and Burntisland. His great-grandfather, also Sir James, was author of the ‘Memoirs of His Own Life’. In 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1696 John Scott of Synton and and Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane had a bond with him. Rev. John (17th C.) from the Mearns, he graduated from Aberdeen in 1667. He became minister at Ewes Kirk in about 1682.
However, he was deprived in 1689 for refusing to give up Episopalianism.

mem (mem) n., arch. ma’am, madam – ‘I dinna ken how much whisky they took, mem, but they’ve drucken sax gang o’ watter!’ [V&K], ‘Deed, then, mem’, said she, ‘I won’t hire with that condition; for I wadna gie the crack i’ the kirkyard after, for a’ the rest o’ the service’ [WiS].

Members of Parliament (mem-burz-ô-par-li-min’) n. Members of Parliament, elected by voters in a constituency to represent them in the House of Commons. This system grew out of conventions of the minor barons, which started about the 15th century, but without specifically representing a region. From the 16th century counties had representatives to the Scottish Parliament, called Commissioners; there were 2 of these at a time throughout the 17th century, with an additional 2 appointed in 1690, and the last term being 1702–07. The families of Douglas of Cavers, Pringle of Stichell, Elliot of Stobs, Elliot of Minto, McDougall of Makerstoun, Scott of Langshaw, Ker of Greenhead, Scott of Ancrum, Riddell of that Ilk, Bennet of Grubet, Scott of Woll, Scott of Gala and Elliot of Headshaw all represented the county. A surviving document of 1628 describes how the Sheriff was unable to get anyone to agree to be a Commissioner, even after 4 meetings! For the Parliament of 1621 the Commissioners were the Sheriff himself (Sir William Douglas of Cavers) and (Andrew) Riddell of that Ilk, while for the 1633 Parliament it was again the Sheriff and (perhaps Walter) Riddell of that Ilk. The appointment of Commissioners to the Parliament of Charles and William during the chaotic 17th centuries is hard to track, and it may be that men were appointed in place of others (hence the list below may not be accurate in this period). The first Westminster Member of Parliament for Roxburghshire was in 1708. Before 1832 there were very few local electors, for example the number in Hawick was only 2 or 3 out of the 143 voters in the county of Roxburghshire in 1812. Hawick people were extremely active in pushing for electoral reform and the extension of political franchise. After the 1868 Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, a new constituency, the Hawick (or Border) Burghs was set up, including the boundaries of Hawick, Galashiels and Selkirk. Hawick’s M.P. was thus separate from that of Roxburghshire until this seat was dissolved in 1918. The constituency was called ‘Roxburgh & Selkirk’ 1918–55, then merged into ‘Roxburgh, Selkirk & Peebles’ 1955–83, became ‘Roxburgh and Berwickshire’ 1983–2005 and is now Berwickshire, Roxburgh & Selkirk. A list of Hawick’s M.P.s: is: Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun 1597; Sir John Ker of Hirsel 1605, 1607; Sir William Cranston 1608; Sir William Douglas of Cavers 1612, 1617, 1621, 1628–33, 1639–40, 1644, 1645–46, 1650; Andrew Riddell of that Ilk 1617, 1621; John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw 1625; Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun 1625; Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk 1628–33, 1646–47, 1650; Sir James Kerr of Hundalee and Crailing 1630; John Rutherford of Hunthill 1630; Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk 1633; Robert Pringle of Stichill 1639–41; William Elliott of Stobs 1640–41, 1643, 1645–47, 1650–51; Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers 1643–44, 1648–49; Sir John Ker of Lochtour 1644; Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead 1645, 1648–49; William Kerr of Newton 1646–47, 1656–58; Gideon Scott of Highchester 1650; Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead 1658–59, 1669–74; Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers 1661–63; Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs 1661–63, 1667, 1669–74; John Scott of Langshaw 1665; Henry McDougall 1665, 1678, 1681; Robert Pringle of Stichill 1678, 1681–82; Sir William Ker of Greenhead 1685–86, 1702–07, 1707–08; Sir Patrick Scott of Longnewton and Ancrum 1685–93; Sir William Elliott of Stobs 1689–93; Sir William Douglas of Cavers 1690–98; Sir John Riddell of that Ilk 1690–1700; John Scott of Woll 1693–1702; William Bennet of Grubet 1693–1702, 1702–07, 1707–08; James Scott of Gala 1698–1702; Archibald Douglas of Cavers 1700–02, 1702–07; Sir Gilbert Elliott of Minto 1702–07; Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs 1708–15; William Douglas of Cavers 1715–22; Sir Gilbert Elliott of Minto 1722–26; Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs 1726–27; William Douglas of Cavers 1727–34; John Rutherford of Edgerston 1734–42; William Douglas of Cavers 1742–47; Walter Scott 1747–65; Sir Gilbert Elliott of Minto 1765–77; Sir Gilbert Elliot (later Earl of Minto) 1777–84; Sir George Douglas of Springwood Park 1784–1806; John Rutherford of Edgerston 1806–12; Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound (later Earl of Minto) 1812–14; Sir Alexander Don of Newton 1814–26; Henry Francis Hepburne-Scott (later Lord Polwarth) 1826–32; George Elliot (Captain R.N.) 1832–35; Lord John Douglas Montagu-Douglas-Scott 1835–37; John Edmund Elliot of Belses 1837–41; Francis Scott of Mertoun House 1841–47; John Edmund Elliot of Belses 1847–59; Sir William Scott of Ancrum 1859–68; George Otto Trevelyan 1868–86; Alexander Laing Brown 1886–92; Thomas Shaw memoral (me-nö-rul) n., poet. a memorial – ‘...an’ thy memorall, O Lord, throweowt a’ gangerations’ [HSR].

The Memory Bank (thu-me-mu-ree-bawneg) n. the Scottish Borders’ Memory Bank was set up as a Millennium project to collect and record memories of life in the Borders, started in 1998 and co-ordinated by Wendy Ball. Several Hawick citizens have been taped and transcribed.

menage (nu-nagi) n., arch. a benefit club of neighbours or workers, particularly a scheme, generally among women in the 19th and early 20th centuries, where those joining paid a fixed amount every week (plus perhaps a small commission going to the treasurer for managing the fund) for 20 weeks and a draw was made to distribute the total each week. In the late 1800s the contribution might be 1 shilling, with the £1 total given out randomly each week. The practice may still be carried out in mills today, with larger sums involved, and sometimes individuals arranging to be near the beginning or end of the draw – ‘...joining a ‘menage’ was as stupid a thing as to smell, stink, pong, arch. to fully recover from an illness or injury (different meaning from standard English; noted by E.C. Smith; see also mends).

mender (men-dur) n. a person who makes minor repairs to the stitching of garments in the knitwear industry after being found by a ‘looker’. Good practitioners of this art are ‘invisable menders’.

mendit (men-dee’, -di’) pp. mended – ‘The hurlie at ei menddeet the trams o’ [ECS].

mends (mendez) n., pl., arch. recovery, healing – ‘On the way o mends = to bosome; progressing towards recovery of health’ [ECS] (cf. mend).

meng (meng) v. to smell, stink, pong, arch. to mix among filth, n. a smell, stink, n., arch. human excrement (also ming).
Menslaws \(\text{mens-lawz, -les}\) n. farm just north of Spittal-on-Rule, near where the Rule Water joins the Teviot. There was once a quarry there, which supplied stone to Hawick, among other places. It may be the ‘menskes’ where Gilbert Law had grain stolen by Adam Grahamslaw, according to a case of 1502. It is probably the ‘Mensles’ listed among the lands of the Stobs estate purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. In 1623 the lands were granted to the Kers of Cavers-Carre and later the farm at ‘Menseless Pathhead’ was part of the Cavers estate. It was among lands owned by Sir Thomas Ker in 1643, valued at £357. It was among lands inherited by John, son of John Kerr of West Nisbet in 1684. William Brown was there in 1687. Also in 1687 5 acres of land there were listed among lands inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers and by his brother Archibald in 1698. Before 1786 the farm was owned by William Black, his lands being stated in 1788 to have been valued at £263 16s 3d, including the 2 husbandlands at the ‘waulk-mill’. The farm then passed to the Bells; William Bell had a new house built there about this time and was recorded as owner of 5 horses there in 1797. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was recorded being owned by Robert Bell, and valued at £264. Land steward Mark Turnbull was there in 1851. In 1860, a year after the death of George Bell, it was sold to Thomas Cockburn, then owned briefly by a Mr. Turnbull, before being bought by Robert Cunningham, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch. Thomas Riddell was there in the 1860s. The tenants of the house in the early 20th century were 2 sisters called Peter. There was once a quarry there, supplying stone for buildings in Hawick and Jedburgh. A burial cist was found there, north of the farm, at the edge of the Teviot flood plain; 2 boys discovered it in 1960, James Wallace and Michael Turnbull, and it was excavated by the Hawick Archaeological Society the following year, revealing an adult and juvenile skeleton and triangular flint point. The remains are in the Museum (sometimes ‘Mainslaws’, the name is probably from the Old English ‘gæmænes leah’, meaning ‘common property’, or possibly ‘menseless’, meaning untidy or uncleared land; it first appears transcribed as ‘menskes’ in 1502, then is ‘Mensles’ in 1516 and 1571, with ‘Menslawis’ soon after, although it is still ‘Mensles’ in 1623, ‘Menslis’ in 1643, ‘Meneslie’ and ‘Menseelse’ in 1678, ‘Menslie’ in 1687 and 1698, ‘Mensless’ in 1761 and 1797 and ‘Mainslaws or Mensless’ in 1811; Sir James Murray refers to it as ‘Menzie’s Laws’ in 1888; it is ‘Mensles’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and incorrectly appears as ‘Mansles’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Mercat (mer-ki’, mer-ka’) n. market, historically Hawick’s main markets were held on Thursdays – the mercat’s now on Seturdis’, ‘Item, that all flescheris present the hale flesh slaine by them at the mercat place ...’ [BR1640], ‘...and having caused proclaim her several tymes ... at the mercat crose of Hawicke in time of mercat day’ [BR1641]. ‘...rin the merket gairden and dairie at Cavers’ [IW], ‘...Better, daur-say, Brocht, factory-fresh (sei telly) til eer hame, twae hunder miles, than frae some mercat-krame ...’ [DH]. In the 18th century Hawick had a flesh-market, butter-market, meal-market, salt-market and horse-market. The Thursday market took... place in the lower part of the Town House, with all sorts of farm produce sold. In general the market area was around the Cross until the late 18th century, with 80–120 stalls extending along the High Street, selling everything from housewares and food to meat and coal. The sheep market was recorded being at the Sandbed in 1700. The general market moved to the Sandbed for a few decades, and shifted to the Tower Knowe in 1815 with the construction of the New Road. It was stated in 1839 that the number of carts coming to the town for a market day was about 170. The cattle market (and hiring fair), a right of the Duke of Buccleuch, took place in early November until the end of the 19th century. The Auction Mart, at what is now Mart Street, dominated the sale of livestock through the late 19th and much of the 20th centuries. In the 20th century the Saturday market was held near the Auction Mart and is now in the Big Haugh – ‘To fair or mercet she walked alone, At best, the lasie was unco plain’ [WL] (also spelled ‘merket’, etc.; cf. mairket, mairt and mert).

the Mercat Cross (ˈθu-mer-ki-ˈkros) n. Market Cross, denoting the place at which markets were held, formerly the site of Hawick’s cross. It was also sometimes referred to as the ‘flesh-market cross’. In Hawick this was near the Town Hall, at the junction of the roads to Edinburgh, Jedburgh, Newcastle and Carlisle. It is referred to in 1514 as ‘cruceim foralum’ when part of the ceremony for giving Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig the Barony of Hawick was carried out there. It was extant in 1542, when a proclamation was read from it, and presumably there earlier. In 1545 it is among the market crosses to which a proclamation about Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was to be attached. There is a record in 1715 (when it is referred to as the ‘common mercat cros’) that it was to be repaired and several other records of it being mended from about 1724 on. During the 18th century it is recorded that a proclamation was made there on the day of the Common Riding, describing what parts of the Common were to be used for cutting peats and for making ‘bakes’, etc. It was demolished in 1762 during road improvements, the shaft and capital apparently being sold off for 11/6. The removal took 2 labourers 2 full days. The base of the Cross was inverted, sunk into the pavement nearby, had an iron ring attached, and until about 1781 was used for bull-baiting and for displaying criminals as a public spectacle. It was then removed to near the Teviot, where it was used for tying skins to be washed in the river. The stone was rescued when Teviot Road was built in about 1860 and moved to the Museum at Orrock Place and later to the Buccleuch Memorial. William N. Kennedy wrote an article on the Cross in 1863, stating that the base was made of Whitrope Burn sandstone. In 1927 the Cross was reconstructed beside the Museum, using a modern shaft and a capital (perhaps 17th century, probably the one discovered at Abbey Sike in Castleton). However, the capital was moved inside after the Cross was vandalised in 1985. A plaque (placed around 1946) marks its original position near the bottom of the Cross Wynd, which was named for it. Here also the proclamation to the Burgess is made by the Burgh Officer, warning them all to attend the Riding of the Marches or pay a hefty fine. For centuries this advertisement for the Common Riding has been called out on the Thursday here. In former times the Burgess Roll was also called here on the Friday before the Riding of the Marches. Other notices would be fixed to the Cross in former times, e.g. lists of those accused of being Covenanters in the late 17th century, and the ‘Chevalier’ was proclaimed here in 1715. Thieves were sometimes made to stand at the cross on market day, with their crime written on a piece of paper stuck to their forehead. This punishment continued into the early 19th century. In addition the town stocks were once located next to the Cross – ‘…the said Adam Gowanlock brought the said meir to the mercat-crose of Hawick the said day to be apprised …’ [BR], ‘…in respect it was publicly done at the mercatt cross, in presence and in the hearing of divers famous witnessses’ [BR1685] (note that Market Crosses were rarely ‘cross-shaped’, usually consisting of a shaft crowned with a carved emblem as capital; it is unclear what was carved on the capital of Hawick’s original Cross).

Mercat Place (ˈmer-ki-ˈplis) n. Market Place, name used for a while in the 19th century for an area including Tower Knowe and Drumlanrig Bridge over the Slitrig, which was used as a market place. It is so labelled on Wood’s 1824 map and also used in Slater’s 1852 directory.

Mercer (ˈmer-sər) n. Janet nee Reid (b.1799/1800) from Hawick, she was a wool sorter living at about 7 Allars Bank in 1841. She listed as a coffee-house keeper on the Cross Wynd in 1851, living with her grandchild Mary E., as well as 5 lodgers and a female servant. She may be the Jane who had worked as a servant with the Halliburton family in the West End, contracting cholera in 1832, but recovering. Robert, W.S. (1797–1875) lawyer in Edinburgh. He was son of James of Scotsbank. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and so presumably had a local connection. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Scott-Moncrieff.

merch (merch) v., arch. to set a boundary, particularly by laying down markers – ‘The said day, Allane Deanes, travelour, being accusit for not being at the ryding and merching of the Commoun . . . ’ [BR1645].

merch (merch) n., v. march – ‘Oh the grand auld Duke o York, hei hed ten thousand men, he i merched thum ut ti the top o the hill, an ’ei merched them doon agin’ [T], ‘It depends on what direction they hev t’urn when they come oot the toon hall ti merch ti the new Cornet-Elect’s house’ [We], ‘Hogg was sid hev been pairt o the Hawick contingent thit merched ti Selkirk that fateth day in 1815 . . . ’ [HIS] (cf. march).

merchant (mer-chin-) n., arch. a merchant, shopkeeper, trader, itinerant salesman – ‘Item, that ilk merchand that buys cuntie gier with trone wecht, sall sell it again in small with the lyik wecht . . . ’ [BR1640], ‘The haill council having taken into their consideration the wrong and abuse committed by the merchands and others of the burgh of Hawick . . . ’ [BR1662], ‘. . . for cutting of William Elliot, merchand, with ane sword in ye head’ [BR1669], ‘. . . and voted Thomas Hardie, merchand, to be ensigne and to carry the colour’ [BR1706], ‘. . . John Young, merchand in the town for his disorderlie and irregular marriage . . . ’ [BR1706].

merchant (mer-chin-) n. formerly a shopkeeper and member of the merchants’ incorporation in the Town, now used as a suffix to denote someone who is overly fond of a particular activity – ‘hei’s a right patter-merchant that yin’.

Merchant (mer-chin-) n. nickname for William Oliver in the 16th century.

merchants (mer-chints) n. the shopkeepers and traders of Hawick collectively. They were not one of the 7 ‘incorporated trades’ in the Burgh, but must have had some kind of status as a body. In 1687 the ‘Incorporation of Merchants’ bought ‘ane Holland brasen trone’ (i.e. brass weight) to be used as a new standard in Hawick, and also arranged for ‘ane elwand’ (i.e. measuring rod) made of iron to be made the same length as the standard one in Jedburgh.

Merchiston Burn (merch-li-tin-burn) n. stream that rises on Harden Moss and flows roughly southwards past the farm of Mabonlaw to join the Harden Burn south of Harden Glen. Part of it is labelled White Cleugh on the Ordnance Survey maps (the name suggests it marked a boundary at one time; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Merchinburn (thu-mer-chin-burn) n. Merchingburn, former name for a stream in Liddesdale, where it is recorded that Walter de Bolbeck established a hermitage dedicated to St. Mary to pray for the souls of him and his wife Sybilla. This was probably the original Hermitage Chapel, which led to the stream being later known as the Hermitage Water. The hermit was called William ‘de Mercheleye’, and the date is unknown, but must have been before 1206. The second monk from Kelso was called Roger, and he was granted land beside ‘Heleychesters’ (probably in Temple Healey) some time before 1229 (the name suggests a boundary between properties, but it is unknown what these may have been; the name does not appear on any map, and was completely superseded by ‘Hermitage’).

Merchinlee (mer-chin-lee) n. former name for lands on the Hermitage Water. William ‘de Mercheleye’ was granted a hermitage there by Walter de Bolbeck some time before 1206, this probably being the original Hermitage Chapel. It was set up for 2 monks from Kelso Abbey, the other being ‘Roger monk of Merchingley’ who was later granted 26 acres of land beside Heleychesters (probably in Temple Healey) by Hugh de Baliol, some time before 1229. The lands are described as ‘from the Merchingburn on the one side, by a circuit from the Tile Ford on to the Ford where the Stanesden Burn (possibly the Roughley Burn) descends to the Merchingburn’ (also written ‘Merchelea’).

Merchiston (mer-chi-, -chum-stin) n. James (d.c.1527) recorded as Rector of Hawick in 1504. 2 years earlier he is recorded receiving payment from the court of James IV for a young horse brought by him from Flanders. He was listed as a Chaplain of Glasgow Diocese in 1505, although the parish is not named. He also appears to have received more senior appointments in the Diocese in 1511. In 1512 he was designated Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine and lived on Edinburgh High Street, so probably ceased to be associated with Hawick before then. Also in 1512 he was one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts. His name appears in various Edinburgh

Merrylaw (me-ree-law) n. farm along the road leading south-west from Teviothead, lying close to the source of the Teviot, on the south side. It was home of a branch of the Scotts and also Turnbuls, who were tenants at Falnash. The earliest known owners were Elliots, holding the lands of their feudal superiors the Douglases. It appears to have been joined with Carlenrig in the valuation of 1678, but was separated in 1788 when valued at £133 6s 8d. It was ‘Merrilaw’ owned by the Elliots of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687. It was among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. About 1694 ‘William Scott in Merrylaw’ was tenant of Elliott of Stobs. Walter Scott of Merrylaw was renting part of Whithope in 1698 and he was an elder of Roberton Kirk in the early 1700s. William Scott of Merrylaw was minister at Kirkpatrick-Juxta. Walter Scott of Merrylaw was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1809. He was probably the Scott of Merrylaw who was listed as owner in 1788 (and still listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). William Goodfellow was tenant there for about 50 years in the late 1700s and early 1800s. James Dryden (d.1820) was shepherd there. There were Hopes there in 1841. It was owned by Turnbulls in the mid-to-late 19th century and bought by the Strang-Steel family about 1920. The Martins farmed there in the early 1900s and the Fullies were there from 1935 until the mid-1960s. The farm lay within Cavers Parish until the formation of Teviothead Parish in 1850. The lands are now mainly planted with trees – ‘Maps ...skurled wi’ odd scales o’ troot Frae Merrylaw to Meggat ...’ [DH] (first occurring in 1380, it is transcribed ‘Murlaw’ in 1687, ‘Merrilaw’ in 1692 and 1694 and ‘Mirrielaw’ in 1698 and 1730; the origin of the first part of the name is obscure, but probably connected with Merry Naze and Merrypath Rig).

merry-meat (me-ree-mee’) n., arch. a meal to celebrate the birth of a child – ‘The merry-meat was right good cheer’ [JoHo].

Merry Naze (me-ree-naz) n. hill lying to the south of Lairhope farm, west of Falnash, and not far from Tanlaw Naze. It is probably the lands called ‘Murynese’ in the Barony of Hawick, which were explicitly listed among the lands held ‘in property’ by the Baron in 1511, and among the lands inherited along with the Barony in 1572. There was once a farm near here, home to the son of Elliot of Falnash in 1562. Archibald Elliot ‘of Mirrinenis’ was recorded in 1598. In 1627 the farm was estimated to ‘pay 40 lb. in stok, and 8 merk in teynd. The ‘maynes lands’ there are listed among the lands for which Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch was superior in 1686. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Falnash to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch around 1760 (marked ‘Mirrienise’ on Blaue’s 1654 map; it is probably ‘Murynese’ and ‘Murines’ in 1511, ‘Muryneis’ in 1514, ‘Merynes’ in 1562, ‘Muryneis’ in 1572, ‘Mirryinges’ in 1615, ‘Mrrinies’ in 1627, ‘Miryrinies’ in 1686 and ‘Merryne’ about 1760; the first element of the name could be Middle English ‘mirrie’ for merry, but may have another origin in common with Merrylaw and Merrypath Rig, while the second element is Middle English ‘nese’, being a projecting nose of land).

Merrypath Rig (me-ree-pawth-rig) n. ridge between Merrylaw and Ewes Doors, the summit reaching a height of 382 m. There is a linear earthwork, about 150 m long, which is crossed by the course of the old road from Eweslees to Caerlenrig (it is marked ‘Meddop petth’ in Blaue’s 1654 atlas).
the Merse (thu-mers) n. Eastern Border country, generally corresponding to Berwickshire, or a slightly larger area including the entire plain of the Tweed. It is usually synonymous with the Scottish East March – ‘A Merse mist alang the Tweed, In a harvest mournin’s guid indeed’ [T], ‘Roxburgh huddles her shattered shell In the folds of her mossy plaid; Gazing at ease o’er the meadowed Merse, Hume towers, in her green arrayed’ [WL].

marshal (mer-shul) n., v. marshal. At the Common Riding the Marshals are experienced riders appointed to check that the road is clear for the Chase, ensure the safety of the riders on Ride-outs, etc.

Mershalls’s (mer-shulz) n. John Marshall & Sons, a large local building firm, significant in the latter part of the 19th and early part of the 20th centuries. They were responsible for the Teviot Bridge (1865), Henry Scott Riddell Memorial (1874), Lyle & Scott’s factory (1874/5), Town Hall (1884–86), and the Brown Fountain (1910). Their yards were on the west side of Commercial Road and before that on Siltirig Crescent. They also had an interest in the Blaxter Quarry in Northumberland.

Mershalls’s Close (mer-shulz-klös) n. Marshall’s Close, a passageway at 20 High Street in the mid-19th century. It was located to the west of the Crown Hotel, between 2 small shops, and named after the tobacconist’s run by Katie Marshall.

mert (mer’) n., arch. a market (cf. mercat, mairket and mairt).

Merton see Mertin

Mertimes (mer-tee-mes) n. former version of Martinmas – ‘…for the Witsounday and Mertymes male of the landis of Lempetlaw …’ [SB1574] (also formerly Mertines).

Mertin (mer’in, mar-tin) n. (Marten or Martin) A. (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Adam (17th C.) one of 3 men fined in 1642 for their animals eating the oats of Gilbert Watt, the Town Clerk. He is probably the same ‘Adam Mairtene’ who was one of the men who appraised horses in Hawick for the Covenanter army in 1644. He could be the Adam, married to Margaret Gordon, whose son James was baptised in Hawick in 1634 or the Adam, married to Margaret Weens, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in 1648. Adam (17th C.) carrier in Hawick recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Mertin in 1772. Janet witnessed a baptism for Thomas Douglas at Clarilaw Lamb in 1752. He is probably the James who witnessed in Hawick Parish in 1677, and who may also have been father of Malie (b.1673). James married Janet, whose daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick in 1718. His son Thomas became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1738 and his daughter, Jane (possibly born in 1714) married David Gregor of Edinburgh in 1767 in the description of the perambulation of the Common, this being a house where the boundary passed over. Johan (19th/20th C.) granddaughter of tailor Robert. She was known as a poet and painter. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘John Martyn in Branxholme’ in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1504 when he received remission for his crimes. This seems to have been connected with the crimes of William Scott ‘in Hawick’ and John Scott ‘in Wilton’, who received pardons a few years earlier. He is probably an ancestor of the same local family after whom ‘Mertin’s Brig’ is named. John (16th C.) tenant at Branxholme Town in 1574, as described in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Johne Martene in Banxholme toun’. He is surely related to the John who was tenant in the same place half a century later. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Jon Mairtene in Branxholme toune’ in 1623 when he (and 3 other local men, from Chapelhill, Priesthaugh and Craik) were surety for ‘Hob Cowane in Ailmure’. John (17th C.) listed at Crumhaugh among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who was married to Margaret Elliot, and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Charles (b.1675), Helen (b.1682), Walter (b.1685) and Andrew (b.1688). John (19th C.) owner of the farm of Firth in about 1874, according to the Land Tax Rolls. John P., baker who was Cornet in 1938. He served as Acting Father to Bruce Mactaggart in 1954. Mactaggart was in turn Acting Father to his son Drew. Margaret (17th C.) resident of ‘Barnknow’. In 1680 she was found guilty of attempting to steal a pair of shoes from a Selkirk stall-owner at Hawick Market. She was sentenced to be ‘punished in her person and goods’. Mrs. ?? (18th/19th C.) recorded at Minto House on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. She was presumably a house-keeper or governess. Robert (16th/17th C.) surety for ‘Hob Cowane in Ailmure’ in the Circuit Court records of 1623, along with John Martin (presumably a relative), Simon Wilson (in Priesthaugh) and William Cowan (in Craik). Robert (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was a tailor who lived at Howdenburn. He was there in 1851, when he employed 1 man, and was also there in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Hunter, daughter of ‘Kittlin Soup’ and their children included Margaret, James, Mary and Thomas. They were grandparents of local poet and painter Johan Miller. of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in part of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish in 1619. He is recorded as ‘Thomas Martene in Fultoun’. Thomas (16th C.) witness to a 1622 sasine of Allan Deans in Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Thomas Mairteine in Hawick’. Rev. Thomas (1754/4–1812) licensed by Peebles Presbytery in 1789, he was presented to Castleton Parish in 1790 and ordained as minister there the following year. However, after less than 4 months he was translated to Langholm; there is no record of the reason for this. He died in Edinburgh where he was attending the General Assembly. He wrote a description of Langholm Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. Thomas (b.c.1813/4) born in Canonbie, he was a cooper in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1838. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He continued as a cooper until the 1850s. He lived at about 2 South Hermitage Street. He married Janet Udale and their children included: Anne (b.1836); Isabella (b.1837); William (b.1839); and Robert (b.1841). Rev. Walter (c.1631–76) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1651, he is recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 1657, his surname then spelled ‘Martaine’. In that year Robert Howitson was ordered to pay him ‘19 merkis Scots for byegane quarter wages due to him for teaching of his sons in the schole several quarters bygane’; this suggests that he had been a teacher in Hawick for at least a couple of years previously. He was again recorded in 1665, as ‘Mairteen’. Later that year Robert Howitson was ordered to pay him ‘19 merkis Scots for byegane quarter wages due to him for teaching of his sons in the schole several quarters bygane’. A ‘gift of his bastardy’ was given by the King to Jock Elliot (from Caverton) had remission for several crimes, including stealing 3 sheep from him. It seems likely that he was related to the later Martins of the area. William ‘Willie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Branxholme in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. William (17th/18th C.) recorded being in ‘Rige’, i.e. Winningtonrig when his son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. He is probably not the same man as William, resident of Over Southfield. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as servant to John Goodfellow in Over Southfield in 1712 when he married Helen Nichol from Hawick Parish. His wife may have been the daughter of William Nichol and Janet Gray baptised in Hawick in 1688. Their children included: John (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); Janet (b.1722); and Robert (b.1723). Walter (b.1713), Janet (b.1714) and William (b.1716) were probably also his children. Rev. William Stewart (1793/4–1857) from Crawford in Lanarkshire, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1823. He became minister of Kirkton in 1834, where he remained until his death. He wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account in 1838; it is the shortest of the local entries. He ould regularly ride over the hill to take services at Cogsmill Schoolhouse. He lived at the Parish Manse with a servant and never married (early spellings include ‘Mairteen’, ‘Mairtene’, ‘Marteine’, ‘Martene’, ‘Martyn’, ‘Mertyn’, ‘Mertine’, ‘Merton’, ‘Mertyn’, etc.). Mertin (mer'-in) n. Christian name, Scots form of Martin (also Mairtin).

Mertinmas (mer'-in-mis) n. another name for Martinmas – ‘Dedicat til a man (syne deid) wha spiered: ‘Hev ee been writin ony hairy poetry, lately?’ Mertinmas. 1969 [DH] (also formerly Mertimes).

Mertin’s Brig (mer'-inz-brig) n. Martin’s Bridge, over the Teviot just south of town, marking the beginning of the B711 road to the Borthwick, and named for its proximity to Martin’s House. It was built in 1826, providing a more direct route to the Borthwick valley from Hawick. It is a popular end-point for walks. In the field to the west of here, linear field markings have been seen in aerial photographs, probably old field boundaries or ditches – ‘Doon by mony a knowe...

Mertin’s Sym (mer'-inz-sim) n. nickname of Simon Elliot of Philhope, son of Martin of Braidlie.

Merton (mer-tou) n. John (13th/14th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1395. He exchanged this position with Gilbert Mousewall before 1404. He is referred to as ‘de Merton’.

Mertoun (mer-toon) n. parish in the south-west of Berwickshire, divided by the Tweed from Melrose, St. Boswells and Maxton. It contains Mertoun House, Bemersyde and Dryburgh Abbey. The Scotts of Harden formerly possessed the Barony of Mertoun.

Mertoun House (mer'-in-, mer-toon-hoos) n. mansion house on the Tweed near St. Boswells, built in the early 18th century by Sir William Bruce for the Scotts of Harden. Sir William Scott of Harden acquired Old Mertoun House (still existing) around 1649, and the second Sir William made it the main family seat (with his brother Sir Gideon of Highchester taking up residence at Harden itself). The family moved back to Harden in 1912. A former house was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. Mertoun Kirk, dating from 1658 stands on the estate, with the churchyard containing the burial vault of the Scotts of Harden. The gardens are open to the public, and contain a dovecote dating from 1576 (it was formerly ‘Merton’ and variants).

mervellous (mer-ve-lis) n., poet. marvellous – ‘Shaw thy mervellous loein-kindniss . . . ’[HSR], ‘Ca’ til mind his mervellous warks that he has dune . . . ’[HSR].

mervil (mer-vil) adj., arch. inactive in both body and mind (noted by J. Jamieson).

Mervinslaw (mer-vinz-law) n. farm in the north-east part of Southdean Parish, off the western side of the A68. The modern farm is to the west of Camptown, off the side road that leads to Roughlee and Falside. The older farm was probably further south, nearer to the ruined peel tower. Jedforest Deer and Farm Park is on Mervinslaw Estate. It may be the ‘Scherwinglen’ (with various spelling transcriptions) given in the founding charter of Jedburgh Abbey in the mid-12th century, when one third of the lands were gifted to the Abbey by Christina, wife of Gervase Riddell. The estate was once held as part of the fee by the office of Bailie of the Regality of Jedforest. Robert Waugh was tenant there around 1500. It was described as the 8 steadings, valued at £10 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. James Oliver, William Oliver, Margaret Oliver (his mother), Marion Craighill, James Craighill (her son), David Stobs, Elizabeth Hunter, John Wedderburn, William Oliver (alias ‘Merchant’) and James Waugh were listed as tenants there in 1541; it was split into 7 separate steadings, with total yearly payments of £1 6s 3d. It is possible that ‘William Ollyver of Myrleslawe’ and ‘Ranyon Ollyver of the same’, included in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII, may have been from here. The tenants in 1669 were John ‘Wach’, Thomas ‘Olipher’, Mrs. ‘McFeisoon’, James ‘fforsett’, John ‘Waderburn’, ‘Ritchart’ and John Curles and James ‘Olipher’. The will of John Aitken in Mervinslaw is recorded in 1683. Robert Oliver was there in 1685. In 1694 the residents were Thomas Miller, John Hill, Thomas Walker, Thomas Curle, Margaret Waugh and Margaret Young, as well as Jean Frisell listed among the poor of the Parish. Robert Davidson was there in 1790–92. In 1797 William Turnbull, Charles Scott and John Scott were there, with Thomas Thomson at ‘Marvenslaw Mains’. Adam Buckham was shepherd there in 1797. Thomas Scott was farmer there in the mid-19th century. The hill ‘Mervins Law’ reaches 255 m (836 ft) to the south of the farm. Near where the Peel Burn meets the Jed Water the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building and some enclosures. A medieval sword pommel found there is in the National Museum of Antiquities (it is probably the ‘Xernwingeslawe’ or ‘Hernwingeslawe’ listed in the 1165 charter of Jedburgh Abbey as being opposite the chapel at Old Jeddart; it is ‘mervynnis law in 1502, ‘Mervynyslaw’ in 1538, ‘Mervinslaw’ in 1539, ‘Mervennislaw’ and ‘Mervinslaw’ in 1541, ‘Mervinslaw’ in 1571/2, ‘Mervingislaw’ in 1582, ‘Mervingslaw’ in 1669 and ‘Marvinslaw’ and ‘Marvanslaw’ in 1797; Blaeu’s c.1654 map shows the tower at ‘Mervinslaw’, as well as farms at ‘Nuik’, ‘Banck’ and ‘Hauch’ to the south).

Mervins Law (mer-vinz-law) n. hill a couple of miles west of Hawick, between Whitehaugh and Calaburn farms, and formerly a farmstead that was part of the estates of the Scotts of Whitehaugh. There is a record of it being sold by Roger Langlands of Wilton to William Inglis of Langlandshill in 1512. It was to be held for one penny ‘blench-ferm’, payable yearly at Pentecost in Wilton Church. John Riddell was cottar there in 1694 (it is ‘Mervynnislaw’ in 1512 and marked ‘Marvin’s Law’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mervinslaw Toor (mer-vinz-law-toor) n. ruined, but well-preserved, 16th century peel tower, about 5 miles south of Jedburgh on the Peel Burn. It is quite far south of the modern Mervinslaw farm, on the southern slopes of Mervin’s Law. It still has 2 stories and a garret, and measures about 8 m by 6.5 m. Each storey is one unvaulted room, and the top level must have been reached by an internal ladder. Below is a D-shaped excavation of some sort and on the surrounding slopes are the remains of 3 separate buildings.

Mervinswud (mer-vinz-wud) n. former lands in Jedforest, listed in a rental roll of 1541, next to Mervinslaw. William Hunter was tenant and the lands paid 12s 6d yearly (‘Mervenmiswod’ in 1541).

mese (mees) v., arch. to mellow, mature fruit by forcing (noted by J. Jamieson; also written ‘meise’).

mess (mes) n., arch. a quantity of food set on the table, a portion of food given to a guest, food or meal served to a group of people together – ‘Fru gal temperance urged no cesses, Birthday rates nor bailies’ messes’ [JH].

messenger (me-su-jer) n., arch. a messenger, officer who delivers official letters – ‘...as ane messenger quha sall assure zoof the performance of quhatsumeuer was concludit ...’ [SB1584].

messages (me-su-jeez) n., pl. errands, shopping – ‘A’m away ti get the messages then’, ‘Wull ee gaun a message for iz hen, an I’ll gie a but tered scone’ [BB]. ‘When ee came back wi’ the messages It’s washed the dirtiest cloot ...’ [AX], ‘At first things went just fine. In fact they were quite jolly, Hawick folk got yaised throwe time Ti pittin’ their messages in a trolley’ [IWL], ‘Hawick women don’t go shopping, for the messages they gaun ...’ [IWL] (almost always plural).

Messer (me-sur) n. George (18th C.) house servant and groom at Woll in 1791, when he was working for Charles Scott. James (b.1820/1) from Crailing, he was a cooper in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at about 16 Buccleuch Street, and he was listed at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Jane and their children included Elizabeth and William. William (b.1794/5) from Neuthorn, he was a cooper and wheelwright in Denholm. He is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and was still working there in 1861. His premises were probably on Eastgate. His wife was Mary.

metaphesics (meta-fe-ziks) n., poet. metaphysics – ‘When the yin that’s listenin’ doesna ken what the yin that’s talkin’ means; and when the yin that’s talkin’ doesna ken what he means himself ... that’s metaphesics!’ [DH].

Metcalfe (met-lawf) n. John, M.B.E., from Hawick, he was Chairman of the Borders branch of the Multiple Sclerosis Society. He held the Borders position for 13 years, retiring in 2003, and was Scottish Chairman 1994–97. He received the M.B.E. for services to the Multiple Sclerosis Society in 2003.

methglin (me-th-glin) n., poet. a spicy mead – ‘Then drink the pure methglin of the bee, The heath’s brown juice, and live or perish free!’ [JL].

mettled (met-uld) adj., arch. high-spirited, ardent, mettlesome – ‘The Cornet and his merry men On mettled steeds are prancin’’ [JT], ‘The heroes are marshalled, the mettled steeds are bounding’ [JT], ‘...That glorious chase on mettled steeds By lads wha aye were free’ [WL], ‘His mettled wife, inured to strife ...’ [MG].

Mettlin Well (met-lin-wel) n. spring between the farms of Netherraw, Greenhouse and Raperlaw. There was an agreement for its use between the neighbouring farms in 1909.

Mey see Maye

Meyrle (mä-ruil) n. lost place name near Branh holme, mentioned in the 1420 description when half the lands of Branhholme were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. The description includes ‘the half of the lands of the Meyrle, and the two cottage lands on the west side of the said river of Branchsemell in the barony of Hawick’. The precise location is uncertain, since even the ‘river’ mentioned is ambiguous, although perhaps the stream running through Branxholme Glen is meant (note that the pronunciation is unclear).

mibbe (mi-bee) adv. maybe, perhaps – ‘there’s mibbe twae or thre better yins’, ‘A’ll mibbe gau’, ‘A said ‘mibbe’, and that’s final!’ (cf. the less common mebbe and older mebbies).

mibbies (mi-bee) adv. maybe, perhaps – ‘Mibees oo should look closer at Mother Nature’ [We] (also spelled ‘mibees’; cf. the older mebbies).

Michael (mi-kul) n. (11th/12th C.) probably of Cumbrian origin, he was nominated as Bishop of Glasgow by David, brother of King Alexander of Scotland. His consecration by Archbishop Thomas of York was sometime between 1109 and 1114. He filled a position that had been vacant for a long time. However, it is unclear if he ever played a significant role in the Diocese, or ever visited Teviotdale.

Michael Graham’s (mi-kul-gra-umz) n. cobbler’s shop on Silver Street through much of the 20th century – ‘...Pies and peas at Bruciana’s and tackets at Michael Graham’s ...’ [AY].

Michaelmas (mi-kul-mis) n. important date in the calendar of former centuries, being a feast day of the Archangel Michael, held on the 29th of September. Around the 16th century, this was one of the 3 times a year that the head courts would meet annually, specifically the 1st Tuesday after Michaelmas. It was once the date on which Hawick’s Bailies were annually selected – ‘...payable at Michellmess nixt, for the use and behoove of the said towne’ [BR1707].

Michie (mi-chee) n. Alastair (1921–2008) eldest son of Ann Redpath, he was born in France, but moved to Hawick with his family in 1934. He attended the High School and received a scholarship to study architecture at the Edinburgh College of Art. However, war intervened, and he became an R.A.F. pilot, later working as an illustrator and graphic designer. He became a self-taught painter and sculptor at the age of 40, after seeing an exhibition of American abstract expressionists. He lived in Dorset and married Hazel Greenham and secondly Sally Greasley. The Hawick Museum has at least one of his paintings. Alexander (b.1764) probably son of John, who was the first Michie of Old Northhouse. His eldest son was John. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Pott in 1797. He was probably father of Alexander and Robert of the Archæological Society. Alexander (18th/19th C.) slubber in Hawick. He could be the spinner of that name who went to America, and when he returned in the 1840s there was a big celebration in the Fleece Inn, hosted by the Hawick Instrumental Band in which he had formerly played. Alexander (b.1788/9) originally from Aberdeen, he was a gardener in Hawick. He is recorded at about 59 High Street in 1841 and 1851 (when he was a widower). Margaret, who was an unmarried seamstress in an adjacent house, was probably related. Alexander (b.c.1795) mason who lived at Branxholme Bridgend in 1841. He may have been brother of William and Robert. His wife was Jean and he probably had a daughter Jean, who married Robert Archibald. Alexander (1813–1886) brother of Robert, he was also a skinner in Hawick. He was living on the Cross Wynd in 1841, with the family of millwright Gideon Scott. In 1851 he was listed on Orrock Place as a master skinner, employing 3 men. He must have been partner with another Skinner, since ‘Scott & Michie’ is listed at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was at 4 Orrock Place as a master skinner employing 5 men. He may later have moved to Galashiels. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archæological Society, being the fourth official member. He acted as Museum Curator for the Archæological Society in the early 1860s. He also wrote some anonymous poetry, such as ‘Auld Moat’s Address’, before he left Hawick in 1864 to live in Galashiels. As a youth he was a great athlete, regularly appearing at the Innerleithen and Mangerton games, excelling at running, leaping, hammer-throwing and ‘hitch-and-kick’. He may have been the same Alexander who served as first Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk. Later in life he wrote regularly in the local press about reminiscences of the Common Riding and related themes. He also wrote the introduction for the 1886 edition of Common Riding songs. He is supposed to have only missed a single Common Riding in his life. Much of the credit for the revival of the Common Riding in the 1880s is due to his letter-writing and powers of persuasion. As a result, he was invited as a special guest to all the events of 1886. Some of his articles on Hawick characters, printed in the Transactions, later appeared in Robert Murray’s book. He is probably the Alex recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in about 1874. In 1845 he married Isabella Scott, who was a dressmaker. Their children included: James Cockburn (b.1846), who died young; Jessie Sibbald (b.1847); Elizabeth Pott (b.1851); Walter Francis Scott (b.1855); Susan Mary (b.1859); and Gideon Scott (b.1862), presumably named after the former millwright. A photograph of him exists. He also appears in a portrait (painted by John Guthrie) along with his brother Robert and William N. Kennedy. Bailie Alexander (b.1832) son of currier Robert. He was a Magistrate in Hawick, and should not be confused with the other contemporary Alexander, who was his uncle. He also served as Vice-President of the Archeological Society. He left for South Africa in 1879, with Frank Hogg first publicly singing ‘I Like Auld Hawick’ at his farewell dinner. He lived at Maraisburg, Transvaal. Andrew Rodgie (1806/7-54) builder in Hawick. He was one of the ‘Brigend Michies’, this family being raised in the Green Kirk, hence his middle name (and the fact that birth records are scarce for these Michies). It is said by James Haining that he had brothers Robert (a mason), John (building foreman in Edinburgh) and Hugh (of Laing, Michie & Graham), but Hugh seems more likely to have been his nephew: it is also unclear who their father might have been. He was listed on the Loan in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived 19 Loan, according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1851 he is recorded as a master mason, employing 20 men, 4 apprentices and 8 labourers. His firm constructed the Old Parish Church and several other important buildings of the mid-19th century. His wife was Mary, and they had a daughter, Betsey. His nephew Adam Laidlaw carried on the business after his death. Andrew Smith (1844–1936) son of skinner Robert, he was born in Hawick. He worked for the National Bank of Scotland in Hawick and was transferred to Edinburgh in 1862, then London in 1866. In 1874 he moved to the Royal Bank of Scotland, being recruited as Deputy Manager in London. In 1889 he became sub-cashier in the bank’s Glasgow office and a year later was Cashier there. He retired in 1910, returning to London. He is buried at Rowledge in Surrey. He married Jessie Fraser in 1872 and they had children Arthur, Charles and Agnes. He published many articles on banking and revised James William Gilbart’s work ‘The history, principles and practice of banking’. Bruce raised in Hawick, he played in the baritone horn section of the Saxhorn Band. He trained in medicine, but continued to perform as a multi-instrumentalist woodwind player, based in Perthshire. He has played with The Walktalls, Martin Stephenson and Delta Mainline. Christopher Young (b.1829) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Betty Young. It is said that as a child he was chased by the Devil in the form of a pig. He worked as a forester to the Countess of Seafield and contributed to the Transactions of the Highland and Agricultural Society. He was apparently offered the position of Factor at Balmoral, but declined. He wrote ‘The Larch: A Practical Treatise on Its Culture and General Management’ (1882 and 1885), as well as ‘Practice of Forestry’ (1888). David (b.1828) youngest son of James and Anne Redpath. He became an artist, like his brother Alastair. He was born in France, but moved to Hawick with his family in 1934, attending St. Mary’s and the High School. He studied at the Edinburgh College of Art, then after travelling to Italy started on an art career that has included one-man exhibitions and prizes. He was Head of the School of Drawing and Painting at Edinburgh College of Art. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1989 and had an exhibition at the Scott Gallery in 2009. He was awarded the O.B.E. in 1997 and is a member of the Royal Scottish Academy. David A. R. (b.1928) younger son of Ann Redpath. He was born in France, but moved to Hawick with his family in 1934. He was an instructor in the Royal Artillery Signals Training Regiment, then studied at the Edinburgh College of Art. He became a teacher there, rising to Head of Drawing and Painting and later Honorary Vice-President. He was Chief Guest at the 1989 Common Riding. In 1997 he was awarded the O.B.E. He is a well known oil and watercolour artist. George (18th/19th C.) agricultural worker, probably son of Alexander, from Slatehills. He married Margaret Turnbull and their daughter Jane married Thomas Rutherford, from Haysike. Hugh (b.c.1745) farmer at Slatehills. He may have had a brother called John, who was the first of the Michies of Old Northhouse. Hugh (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at ‘Goldielands Bridge End’ in 1797. He was part of the family that farmed in that area for many generations. He may be the Hugh who married Margaret Telfer in Hawick Parish in 1787. Hugh (1830–91) said to be brother of Andrew Rodgie, Robert and John. However, he seems more likely to be son of mason Robert. He was partner in tweed merchants’ Laing, Michie & Graham. Later he opened a newsagent’s shop at 2 High Street, with the help of his daughter Margaret. He married Christina Dobson, from the wood merchants of Leith; she died at the age of 85. Their children include: Robert (b.1863), emigrated to Australia; Margaret Allan (1865–1932);
George Dobson (b.1866); John Stewart (b.1869), tweed designer in Huddersfield, who retired to Folkestone; and Agnes Dobson (b.1873). John (18th C.) probably the first of the Michie’s of Northhouse. He may have been father of Alexander and brother of Hugh of Slatehills. John (18th C.) married Margaret Shiel in Roberton Parish in 1739. John (18th/19th C.) weaver of Old Northhouse. He may have been son of the earlier John and father of the later John. He could be the John who married Mary Douglas in Hawick Parish in 1790. He was one of the Volunteers who responded to the ‘False Alarm’ in 1804; when he went off with his gun his daughter is meant to have said ‘Shoot iz ’eersel’, faither; ye’ll dae it cannier than the Frainch’. He had at least 2 daughters: Janet, who married Adam Easton, farmer at Overhall; and Margaret (1805/6–87), who married warehouseman Thomas Anderson. John (1788/9–1861) weaver at Old Northhouse in 1841. In 1851 he is recorded there as an ex-weaver, along with his wife, both as paupers at that time. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Young, recorded in Cavers and Kirkton Parishes in 1821; she died in Denholm in 1864, aged 78. Their children included: Jessey (1821–46); Isabel (b.1824); William (b.1826); Christopher Young (b.1829); Robert (b.1832); and Mary Ann (b.1835). He could be the John Michie of Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. John (b.c.1800) spinner in Wilton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835 at Dovemount and in 1840 and 1841 at Kirk-style. He was also an Elder of Wilton Kirk. His wife was Jane and their children included Robert, Eliza and John. John (19th C.) probably brother of masons Andrew Rodgie and Robert. He became aforeman with builders Messeres. Colville of Edinburgh. John (1813–70) clerk in the Relief Kirk Session. John (19th C.) of the Victoria Tavern, Hobart, listed as a subscriber to the Common Riding in 1888 and 1889. Robert (b.c.1805) mason journeyman, living at Branxholme Bridgend in 1841. He was brother of William, who farmed there. He may also have been brother of Andrew Rodgie. He probably married Agnes Ann Smith and had children including Hugh (b.c.1831), Walter (b.c.1833), Elizabeth (b.c.1834) and John (b.c.1837). Robert (1807–1875) brother of Alexander (later of Galashiels), and probably son of Alexander and Betty Pott. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archaeological Society, being its second official member. He was a currier by trade, and was listed as such on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was also a currier on O’Connell Street in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, and appears in Slater’s 1852 directory, where he was a currier and leather cutter, as well as a tanner and skinner. In 1851 he was listed at 11 O’Connell Street (originally No. 6), as an employer of 1 journeyman and 2 apprentices. In 1861 he was at 6 O’Connell Street, master currier and tanner, employing 3 men and 1 boy. He gave a lecture on ‘Local Antiquities’ in 1856 (immediately after a lecture on Archaeology by George Webster), this being only the second lecture given at the Society’s meetings. He also gave a lecture on local hill forts in December of 1856 and one on Trimontium in February 1857. A great sportsman in his youth, he won the wrestling contest at the St. Ronan’s games at Innerleithen in 1831, as well as winning the ‘light ball’ event (probably throwing). At the Common Riding Games of 1834 he won the ‘ball throw’ event. He was also on the Town Council. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He was one of the first Deacons of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk, as well as one of the first Trustees. He was also one of the earliest members of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, and well known for giving speeches on this subject, always in local dialect. He married Agnes Elizabeth (or Ann) Smith in Wilton Parish in 1830. Their children included: Grace (b.1830); Alexander (b.1832); Elizabeth (b.1834); Joanna (b.1836) and Joana (b.1838), who both died young; Thomas (b.1842); Andrew Smith (b.1841); Andrew Smith (again, b.1844); and Robert (b.1848). He appeared in a portrait (painted by John Guthrie) along with his brother Alexander and William N. Kennedy. A portrait of him alone was presented to the Archaeological Society by his son A.S. Michie on the occasion of the 1906 jubilee – ‘Guid Robbie Michie, noble man, First o’ the speechifyin’ clan’ [RDW]. Robert (b.1810/1) born in Cavers Parish, he was a shepherd in the Hawick area. He may be the Robert who was an agricultural labourer at Whitchesters in 1841. He is listed at Minto Kaims in 1851 and Hayside (in Wilton Parish) in 1861. His wife was Helen (from Minto) and their children included John, James, Janet, Mary, Rachel, Robert, Helen and Thomas. Robert (b.1832/3) born in Wilton Parish, probably son of spinner John. He was miller at Newstead near Melrose. His wife was Agnes and their children included John, William and Isabella. Robert (19th C.) first Captain of Hawick R.F.C., from 1873 for 4 years. Walter (1753/4–1816) undertaker in Edinburgh. He died in Hawick. William (1792–1885) from Old Northhouse. He emigrated to Canada, settling in Esquensing, Otario, where he farmed and had a saw-mill. His wife was Margaret, and their children included: Thomas (1824–1901); Mary (1834–1902); Robert (b.1837); Alexander (1843–93); Ellen (1850–1901); George (1851–1918); Elizabeth (1853–1901); and William (b.1854). He died in Esquensing, aged 92 1/2. William (1797/8–1862) farmer at Branxholme Bridgend. In 1841 the family were living at `Branxholm bras', which may have been the same as Scatterpenny. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Branxholme Bridgend, farming 16 acres and employing one man. He married Isabella. They had 9 daughters, including: Margaret who became Mrs. Welsh; Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’), who married baker John Campbell; Isabella; Mary; Beat-rix, who married James Dewar; Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’); and Alexandrina. He is buried in old Wilton Cemetery.

Michie’s (mich-eez) n. Robert Michie & Son, tanner’s business in Hawick in the mid-to-late 19th century. They were situated on Buccleuch Street, by the River Teviot. In 1871 the firm estimated that it tanned 1,270 hides, producing over 21,000 pounds of leather.

Michie’s Brig (mich-eez-brig) n. another name for the Branxholme Bridge, across the Teviot at Branxholme Bridgend, named after the family which lived there for generations and who became builders in the early 19th century.

Michie’s Well (mich-eez-wel) n. a former public water supply about half-way up Drumlanrig Square, above the Mid Row, also known as ‘Porteous’ Well.

micht (micht) v., arch. might, may – ‘That thaye micht sete their howpe in God . . .’ [HSR], ‘Oo’ve a pair in Wulton Ludge That e’en Fairyland micht grudge’ [TK], ‘It micht herv been less – bit no’ muckle’ [RM], ‘Aa whiles think that life in this grey auld toon o’ Hawick Micht weel be compared to a river . . .’ [DH], ‘. . .Sealed, ye micht say, Wi’ a brass stud, forbye’ [DH], ‘How micht I come to the auld toon’ . . .’ [WL], ‘Her tongue micht no’ answer the cut o’ your shoe’ [DJ], also used as a double modal verb – ‘Yince an A’d wun there, A thocht, A micht mebbies cood geet a hurl the lenth o Hawick’ [ECS] (note the use of multiple modal verbs).

micht (micht) n., arch. might, power – ‘. . .an’ nane o’ the men o’ micht hae fuund thair han’s’ [HSR], ‘. . .Wad chase o’er the Nipknowes wi’ micht and wi’ main’ [JEDM], ‘. . .And she’s been auld Scotland’s micht’ [JEDM], ‘Eh whow! the glamourie an’ micht That ane sae dune, sae auld, Should, in a vesion o’ the nicht, Be young again, an’ yaud’ [ECS].

michtier (mich-tee-ur) adj., arch. mightier – ‘The Lord on he is michtier nor the noyse o’ monie waters . . .’ [HSR].

michtily (mich-ti-lee) adv., arch. mightily – ‘In a raid ’t the licht o’ the moon The Newcastle Coat sichted me, And swore he wad level my croon, And flaunted his sword michtilie’ [T].

michtni (micht-ni) contr., arch. mightn’t – ‘Thy wurd hae I hyddan in my hairt, that I michtna sin agayne thee’ [HSR], ‘An’ michtna be as thair faethers, ane stubborn an’ rebellous ganration . . .’ [HSR] (also written ‘michtna etc.).

michty (mich-tee) adj., arch. mighty – ‘that’s a michty mess e’ve made’, ‘His affspring sall be michtie apon the yirth . . .’ [HSR], ‘Wha is the King o’ glory? the Lord strang an’ michty, the Lord michtie in bartist!’ [HSR], ‘Tho’ aa the michtie oceans wad bei ro’ed i’ yin . . .’ [WFC], ‘. . .Your voice seems comin’ frae that tree. It’s michty queer.’ [WP], ‘Onway, there’s been Broons in the toon for a michty lang time . . .’ [BW1979], n., poet. the almighty – ‘Girth thy sword apon thy thie, O Maist Michtie . . .’ [HSR] (also spelled ‘michtie’).

michty me (mich-tee-mee) interj., arch. expression of mild surprise or exasperation, also used as a mild oath – ‘michty me, A’ve never seen sic a thing’.

mickle (mi-kul) adj., arch., poet. large, big, great, much, large amount – ‘For as mickle as wee have been with your lordschip . . .’ [CBP1597], ‘. . .as mickle as in a’ thesaures’ [HSR], ‘Afflictet I am verra mickle’ . . .’ [WFC], ‘. . .Your voice seems comin’ frae that tree. It’s michty queer.’ [WP], ‘Onway, there’s been Broons in the toon for a michty lang time . . .’ [BW1979], n., poet. the almighty – ‘Girth thy sword apon thy thie, O Maist Michtie . . .’ [HSR] (also spelled ‘michtie’).

Mickle (mi-kul) n. William Julius (1734–88) born in Langholm, 3rd son of the Parish minister, changing his name from ‘Meikle’. He was educated in Langholm and then at Edinburgh High School and went into the brewing trade followed by some of his family. In 1762 he published ‘Prov-idence and other poems’, then went to London to try for a literary career, eventually becoming a corrector for the Clarendon Press in Oxford. This he gave up to translate Camoens’ ‘Lusiad’ (from the Portuguese), taking 4 years and being published in 1775. His ballad ‘Cumnur Hall’ is supposed to have inspired Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Ke-nilworth’. He also travelled to Portugal with the Navy, returning fairly wealthy and married Mary Tomkinds. As a poet he was very versatile, writing both short and long pieces, including the Scottish patriotic song ‘There’s Nae Luck About the Hoose’.

Midburn (mid-burn) n. farm in Hobkirk Parish, between Hawthorne and Highend. It was also known as ‘Africa’. The L-shaped barns probably date from the mid-18th century. James Renwick was there in 1790 and John Common was tenant in 1797. It was farmed by the Turnbuls through the 19th century, from about 1823. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1868. There was also once a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond (it is ‘Middleburn’ in 1790 and marked ‘Midleburn’ on Stobie’s 1770 map.

midden (mi-din, -den, -deen) n. literally the house waste heap or dunghill, but applied to mean any dirty or untidy place – ‘yon house was a right midden’. Middens in Hawick were common at the front of every house, often under the forestairs. They were forbidden by Council rules in 1749, but mostly not removed until around 1800. The last to remain were those in the Sandbed, Kirk Wynd and Green Wynd (the owners paying a small rent to the Burgh to keep their middens), which were removed following a petition in 1810 – ‘He raises up in the pair owt o’ the dust, an’ lyfts up the needie owt o’ the midden’ [HSR], ‘A stinkin’ midden, a scartin’ hen – There’s sma’ choice there ’tween craws and men’ [DH], ‘...Like a struttin’ cock on the midden heap’ [WL] (also ‘middling’ and variants).

middest (mi-dist) n., arch. middle, midst, centre – ‘...in offering to beat up and break of the door of the dwelling house ...in the middest of the night’ [BR], middle (mi-dul) v., arch. to meddle, bother – ‘Dubon ...is buirdly billie ti Ruberslan, an there the perr stand ...leike as they war glun-shin an shuirrin doon at aabodie that wad middle thum’ [ECS].

Middle (mi-dul) n. former name for lands that were incorporated into the Wells estate near Bedrule. Along with ‘Holm’ they may have been part of the lands called Dykes. They are listed (along with Fowlerslands and Holm) in the 1511 charter of the Douglases of Cavers, along with the ‘corn mill and walk mill’ (that was later called Dovishauchmill). The lands were at one time partly in the Parish of Kirkton, but in the Barony of Cavers (on the west side of the Rule Water). In earlier times it may have been in the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1634 James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh was served heir to his father Robert Stewart in his lands of ‘Helme et Middill’, with grain mill and fuller’s mill called ‘Dowishauch’, comprising a 3 merk land in the Barony of Cavers. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and his brother Archibald in 1698, and still listed along with ‘Helme’ as having a corn mill and waulk mill attached. It is unclear whether these lands were associated with East Middle (it is ‘Middill’ and ‘Myddill’ in 1511 and ‘Midle’ in 1698; the origin of the name is probably from being the centre of the in-bye land of an estate).

Middle (mi-dul) n. lands in Cavers Parish, later divided into East Middle and West Middle. William Douglas was there in 1720 when he had a daughter baptised in Kirkton Parish (the origin probably comes from being farmlands central to the estate, as opposed to the out-bye land).

Middleburn (mi-dul-burn) n. former name for Midburn.

the Middle Loft (thu-mi-dul-loft) n. former balcony in St. Mary’s Kirk, built in 1684 by James Thorbrand. In 1685 William Laing and Walter Scott (presumably Bailies at the time) were paid back the 100 marks Scots that it had cost to construct. This balcony was lost when the church was rebuilt around 1763. It was also known as ‘the Steeple Loft’. The 2 front seats were formally assigned to the Bailies in 1707 (although this is a little confusing, since the ‘Bailies’ Loft’ was a separate balcony). The Council paid 200 merks Scots for the timber work to fix it in 1708, the money being raised by assessing the Burgesses. It was one of two balconies that were entered from the steeple side, the higher one being the ‘High Loft’ – ‘John Turnbull, mason, to collect ye Midle and Wester Lofts’ [PR1718].

Middle Mains (mi-dul-mänz) n. former name for part of the demesne lands of Hassendean (see Hassendean Mains).

Middle Mairches (mi-dul-mār-cheez) n. the Middle Marches, generally referring to an area running from the Cheviots to the Kershope Burn. The Scottish Middle March consisted essentially of Roxburghshire (including Liddesdale), Selkirkshire and Peebleshire, with judicial centre in Jedburgh, and the Wardens being the Kers or Kerrs for much of the time. The English Middle March consisted of Coquetdale, Redesdale and Tynedale.
Together they saw the worst of the lawlessness of rieving times.

Middlemas (mi-dul-mis) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) convicted in 1510 in Jedburgh Justice-aire, with secretly destroying the wood of Gateshaw. James (16th C.) recorded in 1561, when Thomas Scott of Haining was obliged to enter him before the Warden of the East Marches. Either he or ‘quhyte Will Young’, or his servant or some other person was to be warded to answer the charge of stealing from David Thomson in Berwick. He was presumably local. James (16th/17th C.) son of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel. In 1604 he and his father were declared rebels for failing to appear to answer to the charges of killing Thomas Ker of Crailing and his servant. This appears to have been part of an on-going feud between the Kers and the Turnbulls, with the power of the courts on the Ker side. James (d.bef. 1671) proprietor of Raperlaw. He was listed as owner of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf on the 1643 county valuation, his lands being valued at £416. His is recorded as owner of ‘Reaperhall’ (i.e. Raperlaw) in 1670 when he brought a court action. In 1671 (by which time he was deceased) he is transcribed as ‘portioner of Kaperhall’. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls he paid tax on £110 10s, as one of the heritors of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Emma (or Anna) married Walter Scott of Alton. He could be the same as the James as Raperlaw who married Anna Scott, and whose son William was involved with claims with her new husband Thomas Riddell in 1661. He is probably the James of ‘Reaperlaw’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. James (17th C.) paid the land tax on part of Raperlaw in 1678. These were the lands formerly held by Walter Turnbull and corresponded to Childkno (valued at £101 19s 4d) and ‘Part of the muir of Childkno’ (valued at £33 9s 2d). He is recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the earlier James, as well as to Walter, who is also recorded at Raperlaw in 1694. The same lands were owned by Hunter of Hunthill in the 18th century. James (b.1819/20) woollen manufacturer, son of John. In 1861 he was living at 10 Slitrig Crescent and employing 18 workmen. He was at that time living with his widowed mother Isabella and his brother William. He may be the Mr. Middlemas of Slitrig Bank who gave a talk on ‘Botany’ to the Archaeological Society in 1857. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf who was listed among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. John (d.1601) brother of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel. He was killed in Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601 as part of an ongoing feud between Turnbulls and Kers. About 30 Turnbulls from the Minto area entered Jedburgh to find Thomas Ker of Crailing (brother of the Provost), killing him and his servant and wounding several other Jedburgh men. On the Turnbull side he was killed, along with Robert Turnbull of Bewlie. Several men were later convicted and hanged for their part in this skirmish. Margaret Turnbull a relative (possibly sister) was one of the ‘persewaris’ of the case against the Kers for his murder. John of Alton (17th C.) mentioned in a 1666 list of landowners in Hassendean Parish. He may have been related to Walter Scott of Alton, who married Anna Middlemas at about that time. John (b.1791) son of Alexander, he was born in Ednam. He was a small-scale manufacturer in Hawick in the early-to-mid 1800s. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 as foreman at Pathead and was at Stellhouse in 1840. In 1841 he was recorded as a woollen factory foreman, living at Stellhouse. He married Isabella Broomfield, sister of Alexander, who was foreman at Cunledge Mills. Their children included: Alexander; James (b.1820), who carried on his father’s business; Elizabeth (Betsy), who married William Laidlaw (grocer and manufacturer); Isobella; Jane; William; and Margaret. Thomas (15th C.) recorded on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. Thomas (15th C.) early member of this family, based at Ploro. He was master ranger of Yarrow from at least 1468, and presumably related to William, who was Ranger before him. He is surely the Thomas, cousin of Robert Scott of Haining, to whom Scott granted the lands of ‘Greviston and Gillishanach’ in Peeblesshire in 1476. He is recorded ‘in Ploro’, in 1494/5 (probably related to the area of Plora near Innerleithen). That year there was remission to Alexander, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, for resetting the thefts of Adam Howiston and Robert Jackson. This included the slaughter of his wife and 2 sons, as well as 11 horses, 44 cows and a long list of items. This list is unique in its detailed specification of valuable goods belonging to a minor (but relatively wealthy laird) at the end of the 1400s. Also in 1494/5 John Scott of Erncleuch was allowed to ‘compone’ for his part in several crimes, including bringing in thieves and ‘traitors of Leven’ to slaughter his wife and two ‘offspring’, Ninian.
and John. He was probably the same as Thomas, chief of the Middlemas clan, who acquired Ploro in 1497. Thomas (16th C.) listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of being responsible for the deaths of Englishmen. He was said to have slain Quentin Watson. Thomas ‘Tammy Mid’ (20th C.) metal merchant of the mid-20th century, running the business at 55 High Street, which was very successful during the War years. He was also known for his large feet, which meant he wore excessively patched hand-made boots. Walter (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths and was probably related to James, who was also listed there. William (14th/15th C.) Vicar of Selkirk. In 1425 he was granted the office of Master of the Ward of Yarrow by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, confirmed by James I in the following year; his nephew George was also named in the charter as his successor in the office. In 1436 he was recorded in a charter related to St. Andrews Kirk in Peebles. William (15th C.) Master Ranger of Yarrow Ward from at least 1456 until 1460. He was succeeded in this office by Thomas, who was therefore probably his son. William (15th/16th C.) along with David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley and George Hepburn, he held the lands of Boonraw, which passed to Robert Scott of Stiches in 1504/5. Perhaps the same William is recorded in 1502 when Robert Scott in Synton and William Scott in Fenwick were fined for failing to enter him in the itinerant court at Jedburgh. William of Lilliesleaf (16th C.) recorded as ‘Middilmest in Lillisleif’ in 1563 when he ‘wadset’ his lands at the ‘Hungrie Hills’ and other lands near Lilliesleaf Kirk to Walter Riddell of that ilk. In the same year he was ‘William Myddilnest in Lislie Freirschaw’ when he rented some land to John Redford, this being ‘Coit acre’ and a rig of land lying in ‘Myddillis’ (perhaps suggesting a connection with his name). He is also recorded as ‘Middilnest of Leilsic’ in 1583/4 when he received half of the meadow of Belses. And in 1589 he was involved in an action with Walter Riddell over the ‘Treincersgait’. He may be the same William described in 1595/6 as ‘officiario baronie de Lillisleif’ (probably meaning the Baron Bailie) when he was granted the 5-pound land of Bewlie and 7 husbandlands and 2 cottage-lands within Lilliesleaf. William of Chapel (16th/17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, probably son of the earlier William. He was ‘William Middilnest of Lileslei Chapel’ when he was ordered captured along with Hector Turnbull of Bewlie, for the slaughter of Thomas Ker of Crailing in 1601. This was a result of a skirmish in Jedburgh, when about 30 Turnballs from the Minto area entered Jedburgh seeking Ker, this being part of on ongoing feud between the families. He had a brother John, who was killed in Jedburgh on that day in 1601. He was declared a rebel in 1604, along with his son James, for the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailing in that skirmish in Jedburgh in 1601. Thomas Turnbull of Minto acted as cautioner. He could be the Laird of ‘Chapel-Middelmiss’ whose wife was a daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade (according to Scott of Satchells). He is probably the William ‘Middlemest of the Chapel’ whose servant Willie Scott was apprehended as a fugitive in Dysart in 1610. William of Chapel (17th C.) son of William of Chapel. He was served heir to his father in 1622 in the lands of Raperlaw. He may be the ‘William Midlemaist of Lillisleif Chappell’ recorded as a juror in the 1622 and 1623 Commissioners’ Courts. William (17th C.) son of James of Raperlaw and Anna Scott. In 1661 his guardian John Middlemas was involved in a discharge of claims with his mother and her new husband Thomas Riddell William (b.1833/4) from Earlston, he was son of John, a woollen carder in Wilton. He was a shopkeeper on Wilton Place according to Slater’s 1852 directory and in the 1851 census (when only 17 years old). By 1861 he was working as a woollen spinner and living with his mother and other family members at 10 Slitrig Crescent (formerly spelled ‘Medelmeste’, ‘Middelmass’, ‘Middlemest’, ‘Middlemaste’, ‘Middlemast’, ‘Middlemess’, ‘Middlemest’, ‘Myddilmaist’, ‘Myddilmaist’, ‘Myddilmaist’, ‘Myddilmaste’, ‘Mydylmest’, etc.).

the Middle Shires (thu-mi-dul-shîr) n. name sometimes used for the Borders area (on both sides) after the Union of the Crowns in 1603.

Middlesteid (mi-dul-steeds) n. Middlesteid, farm in Selkirk Parish, east of Oakwood Mill. Lands of the farm bordered on the Parish of Ashkirk. It is probably the ‘Middlesteed of Fa-side’ granted to James Scott of Kirkurd in 1490. John Scott of Middlesteed was listed by Scott of Satchells among the men who were on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Archibald, son of...
Midgap

Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (‘Gibbie wi the Gowdens Gartins’), inherited the lands in 1637. There were Plummers there from about the mid-17th century and Scott-Plummers in the 19th century.

Midgap see Midgehope

Midgard (mid-gawrd) n. farm situated between Cavers and Cavers Mains. Mason Archibald Minto was there in 1767. The mother of the Laird of Cavers was recorded there in 1868.

Midgehope (mi-jup??) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, just south of Ettick village. It was owned by Melrose Abbey in 1415 when neighbouring lands were swapped with Scott of Rankilburn for the lands of Bellendean. Simon Scott was recorded there in 1494/5. It was part of the lands owned by Melrose Abbey until about the Reformation. Along with Thirlestane, it was raided by a large group of Armstrongs in 1543, taking 200 cows, 20 horses and 4 or 5 prisoners. There were Littles there in 1573. In the late 16th century William Scott of Midgehope was 2nd son of William of Tushielaw, and ancestor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill. Gilbert Elliott of Stobs held the reversion of half the lands, resigning this to Walter Scott of Tushielaw in 1620. The lands were still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. Charles Scott of Woll owned the lands in 1785. In the late 18th century John Scott of Midgehope was a son of William of Woll and father of William of Teviot Bank. Andrew Henderson was owner in 1803 – ‘Gae warn the lads of Thirlstone, Gemsleigh, and Newburgh fair, With Tushielaw, and Midgehope, in armour to appear’ [WSB] (called ‘Midgap’ by Scott of Satchells; it is ‘Mighope’ and ‘Migehope’ in 1544, ‘mygchop’ in 1494/5, ‘Migeilp’ in 1564 and ‘Megehope’ in 1573; ‘Midgehope’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

midgie (mi-jee) n. a midge – ‘A caa stop scratchin this midgie bite’.

Mid Grain (mid-grän) n. small stream that rises on Whitelaw Fell and flows north-east to join Singdean Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in the Slitrig Water, to the east of Stobs Woodfoot. On a shelf near the summit is a hill-fort, approximately 75 m by 40 m, but largely destroyed by later occupation by a settlement and quarrying. It consists of inner and outer ramparts, and contains several hut circles associated with the settlement. Just south-east of the fort are the remains of a linear earthwork, traceable about 140 m, but probably once longer.

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, just to the south-east of Eilrig farm, and reaching a height of 317 m.

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in the northern side of the Borthwick valley, near the head of Borthwickbrae Burn. It lies between Byrelee Hill and Easter Hill and reaches a height of 368 m.

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in upper Liddesdale, lying on the west side of Cliffhope Burn near Singdean. It reaches a height of 434 m (it appears to be marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Middle’).

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in the very upper part of the Hermitage valley, south-west of Twislehope Hope. It reaches a height of 436 m.

Midholm (mi-dum) n. former name for Midlem, particularly used to refer to its Secessionist congregation in the 18th century.

Midlem (mid-lum) n. hamlet north of Hawick and about 4½ miles east of Selkirk. It has an old rectangular lay-out, with the smithy in the middle of the village green. It was once a linen manufacturing centre, and a village of some importance. It lies on the Midlem Burn, which joins the Ale Water. The village is mentioned in 1119 in connection with Selkirk Abbey and remained in monastic hands for 450 years, with the Knights Templar apparently also having some land there. The village also had possibly the first Secession church in Scotland, built in 1746, and closed in 1938. The top end of the village offers a magnificent view of Ruberslaw. In 1535 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was tried (and found not guilty) of leading men from Liddesdale to there, stealing 100 cows and 20 horses. J. Walter Elliot wrote ‘The Story of Midlem and the Midlem Pail’ (the origin is Old English ‘middel ham’, meaning simply ‘middle homestead’; it first occurs as ‘Middelham’ about 1120, is ‘Mydlem’ in 1535 and only gains its modern spelling by the 17th century; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Midlummi’).

Midlem Mill (mid-lum-nil) n. farm with a mill, situated near the village of Midlem. John Lillie and James Lawson are recorded there in 1493. It was later a seat of a branch of the Elliots. The first Laird, in the mid-17th century, was Gavin Elliott, also of Grange (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters’ and ancestor of the Earls of Minto), followed by Robert, another Robert and finally Gavin. Robert Elliott paid tax on his lands there valued at about £400 in 1678. Lady Elliot paid tax on 19 windows in 1753. The estate was sold off to clear debts in about 1756. It was sold to Prof. George Stewart in 1773. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1797 and Thomas Weir in the 1860s. It is said that the house was rebuilt
Mid Liddle Street

Mid Liddle Street (mid-li-dul-stee’) n. street in Newcastleton, lying along the west side of the Liddel (or Liddle) Water, between North Liddle Street and South Liddle Street.

Midlothian (mid-ló-thee-in) n. county sharing a small common border with the north of Roxburghshire.

midnicht (mid-night) n. midnight – ‘... At dark midnicht, on passers-by, 'Twill through the hedgerows keek'[TCh], ‘There’s a silence in the cobbled wynds, and snell the midnicht air’[JYH], ‘For an A pot a warm pig i the bed, it was midnicht or A cam a-heat’[ECS].

Midquarter (mid-kwár’ur) n. former farm in Abbotrule Parish. It was advertised for lease in 1785, along with others on the Abbotrule estate. Doorpool, Midquarter, (including the Easter Park) and a small possession, part of the Farm occupied by George Minto was listed on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule and valued at about £210 (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Midraw see the Mid Raw

the Mid Raw (thu-mid-raw) n. row of pended, thatched tenements which stood in the centre of what is now Drumlanrig Square, between the Fore and Back Raws. The original construction may date back to around the 16th century. It exists in several photographs, including one during its demolition, showing the arched lower floor. A public well, originating at the Schidder Springs, stood at the bottom. The gable end at the top held a large notice board. It was the location for some of the densest and poorest housing conditions in Hawick, with no sanitation and some rooms still having clay floors. It is estimated that there were 110 people living in 10 separate houses. By the latter part of the 19th century they had become very dilapidated and the building was demolished in 1884, after being purchased by public subscription and gifted to the Town (since the Council had no powers to declare houses unfit for habitation). A Commemorative plaque was placed on a nearby house. In 1910 the site was turned into an ornamental garden with fountain and the Brown Clock in the centre of the Square, designed by J.P. Alison. Some of the stone was used to build the wall along the roadside at Pipleheugh (since rebuilt), and a wooden cup in the Museum was made by James Thomson from a salvaged beam. A few fragments of the former Pipleheugh wall were incorporated into the James Thomson statue base. A photograph was taken shortly before the demolition – ‘Though the Moat itseel’ may fa’, Like the famous and Mid Raw ... ’[JEDM], ‘...And we maun bid a last farewell To the Auld Mid Raw’[JT].

Midshiels (mid-rowch-lea) n. former farm near an extensive standing stone, just to the north-east of the cairn; this is about 2.3 m high, 4-sided and more than 2 m around at the base. Aerial photography has revealed signs of an enclosure in the field to the north of the house. Redemption money was paid for the lands (along with Appletreehall) by Alexander Scott of Howpasley and Abington in 1470. Superiority of the lands (along with Appletreehall and parts of Hassendean) were forfeited after the execution of Alexander, Lord Home in 1516, passing to James Lundie, but returning to George, Lord Home, probably in 1522. Robert Scott of Howpasley and his wife Isobel Murray had a charter of the lands in 1536, when they were part of the barony of Hassendean, with superior being Alexander, Lord Home. It was probably owned (along with Appletreehall) by Walter Scott of Howpasley before that. It passed to Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside in 1578/9 and then his son Walter Scott of Howpasley in 1588. In 1611 it was confirmed to Philip Scott of Dryhope.
by the superior Alexander Cranston of Mordiston. Walter Scott of Midshiels was recorded in 1628. It was a tenanted farm of the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the late 17th century. Some women from here were supposedly involved in the dispute over the removal of Hassendean Kirk’s roof to Roberton in the late 17th century. It was part of the lands of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton in 1678. The Laird of Newton (probably Francis Scott) was living there in 1694, when he paid tax for having 7 hearths. Rebecca Scott paid the window tax on 16 windows there in 1748. Capt. John Douglas of Cavers purchased the estate from the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the mid-1700s. After his death in 1786 it was inherited by the son of his cousin, who was Archibald Douglas of Adderstone. Archibald Douglas owned the farm by 1788 (and still recorded that way in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £235. It was later the home of miller John White. The Douglasses sold the land to William Turnbull of Fenwick in 1852, who sold it in 1896 to Rutherford Shiells. The level area in front of the house was used on several occasions for reviewing the Border Mounted Rifles. The road to Hawick passing near here was improved in 1775. The house is a grade B listed building.

Midsideshaw (mid-sid-shaw) n. former lands in the Rule valley, described a a ‘pendicle’ of ‘Woollie’ (i.e. Wolfelee) in 1659 (it is possible this is an error for ‘Macksideshaw’).

Mid Sike (mid-sik) n. small stream on the north side of the Borthwick valley. It joins the Hoscote Burn just below Black Sike.

Midsummer (mid-su-mur) n. formerly in Scotland this was June 24th, sometimes used as a term day – ‘...geifand a penny of the wsual mone of Scotland at the Fest of Nativet e of Sant Jhone the Baptist, callit Mydsomer ...’ [SB1500].

Midsummer Fair (mid-su-mur-fär) n. former fair taking place at various dates in the Summer in Hawick. In 1670 it happened on 24th June, actually close to the middle of Summer. However, it was on 5th July in the 18th century. It was moved to 17th July (the day before the St. Boswells Fair) in 1799. It was set up as a fair and market for cattle, wool and linen goods, and ceased around the middle of the 19th century.

Milbank (mil-angk) n. Sir Frederick Acclom (1820–98) of Well (near Ripon), M.P. and famous sportsman of his times. He holds one of the records for the most grouse shot in a single day (2,070 in a party with 6 guns in 1872). He took part in a celebrated early cricket match at Borthwickbrae in the 1840s, and at the return game on the Upper Haugh drove the ball from the Upper Haugh into the Under Haugh. He was recorded in a directory of 1852 living at Borthwickbrae. Along with his wife he presented a silver chalice, paten and wine flagon to St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

Milestone Peth (mil-stän-peth) n. former name for a path between Ashybank and Honeyburn. The path went to the south from the main Hawick-Denholm road (A698), crossing a small hill that was removed to straighten the road. It is now by-passed by the modern course of the main road. There was once a ford across the Teviot at the foot of the path. It is now marked on the Ordnance Survey map through the name of the wood alongside the A698 near there. The name derived from a milestone that was once on the road near there, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, showing 4 miles to Hawick and 16 miles to Kelso.

mile stanes (mil-stänz) n., pl. formerly, numbered markers by the side of a road, set out at intervals of 1 mile. Wood’s 1824 map show a mile stone near the present position of the Horse.

the Military Hospital (thu-mi-li’-u-reec-hos-pi’-ul) n. hospital in Hawick for treating wounded soldiers during WWI. It was also known as ‘Hawick War Hospital’, where?? Patients were banned from visiting licensed premises.

the Militia (thu-mi-li-sha) n. an army distinct from the professional army, being the forerunner of today’s Territorial Army. The history of the militia goes back for hundereds of years, although locally it is relevant only in the 17th to 19th centuries. In Hawick the term was applied to one of a number of partly voluntary forces, although technically distinct from the Volunteers and the Yeomanry. There are records of court cases involving ‘his Majesty’s Militia’ from the 1660s, when money was raised and men were selected to serve by ballot; in 1688 2 men were fined for fleeing the Town when they were recruiting and in 1694 2 men were admitted as Honorary Burgesses for serving ‘as militia hired men for the said town’. In 1796 a law was passed proscribing that each community should provide men or pay £25 each, which Hawick did for its quota of 3. Schoolmasters were meant to provide lists of all men between 18 and 35, those serving to be chosen by ballot (although there were many reasons for exceptions). Initially such forces were under the command of the Lord Lieutenants of each county. Men had to commit to a certain number of days of service (21 days annually) over 5 years, during which they could be called up in times of need. Militia units were very active in the late 18th century, with the threat of French invasion. Hawick was the rallying place for the upper troop of Roxburghshire Yeomanry, while the early 19th century saw the Roxburgh Militia active. The 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia was established in 1810 and based at Jedburgh, with the 2nd Regiment based at Kelso. The men in these units were drawn by ballot (between the ages of 18 and 30), served for 4 years, and were not allowed to find substitutes. The would only train within the county, unless invasion or rebellion broke out. The Dumfries Militia, which was more like a semi-professional unit, recruited in Hawick in the early part of the 19th century.

the Milk Drum (thu-milk-drum) n. former popular name for the hospitality offered to the Drums and Fifes on the Friday morning around 7 a.m. The tradition is said to have started when Mrs. Hardie, proprietor of the dairy, offered one of the ailing members of the band some fresh milk in 1871. It was continued by Hardie’s and then the Brown family (at what point rum may have been added is not known!).

milkit (mil-kee’, -ki’) pp. milked – ‘When bonnyJeanye Roole she milket the yowes I’ the buche aboon the lynne . . . ’ [JTe].
Milkswet Willie’s Thorn

Milkswet Willie’s Thorn (milk-swee’t-wi-leez-thörn) n. ancient thorn bush at Newmill, associated with the ballad ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’ (see also Sweet Milk).
milk-the-kye (milk-thuKI) n., arch. the dock weed in its seed-bearing stage.
mill (mil) n. a factory, building containing manufacturing machines, particularly referring to a knitwear factory. ‘The mill’ is a familiar name for one of the main town factories. The first factories in Hawick appeared in the late 18th century, for the manufacture of linen tapes and carpets. Spinning and weaving then moved from being domestic operations, to being organised in large factories. Through the 19th century these dominated employment in the Town. Working conditions were poor to start with; it is recorded in the 1830s that the standard working week was 6 a.m. to 7 p.m., Monday to Saturday, with night shifts coming in at about that time. Women were employed as well as men, but traditionally in different jobs, and with children working as ‘piecers’ from about the age of 9. In earlier times the word referred exclusively to a corn mill, which in older records would be ‘miln’ – ‘...Mind, aw’m gettin’ the hang o’ it And next year, for the mill aw’ll maybe no yearn’ [AY], ‘There’s a little town that’s nestling ’mid the glory of the hills, Where the smoke goes rising slowly from the busy, scattered mills’ [WFC].
Mill (mil) n. John (18th C.) butler at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas.

the Mill Acre (thy-mil-ā-kur) n. former name for a triangle of land north of Wellington Street, bounded by Wilton Path and Langlands Road (presumably once connected with Roughheugh Mill).
Mill Acre (mil-ā-kur) n. former name for lands associated with Belses Mill. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Kerr in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew (it is ‘Mylnhe aiker’ in 1678 and ‘Milnaiker’ in 1684).

Millbank (mil-bawngk) n. another name for the Mill Path. It may also have been the name of the hosiery factory built there for Robert Ewen and later part of Hogg’s Mill. Houses in this area were removed to make way for the railway to Carlisle in about 1860 (‘Mill Bank Street’ is recorded in the 1851 census).

Millbank Hoose (mil-bawngk) n. house on the Mill Path, once the residence of Provost and manufacturer Robert Ewen.

Millburn (mil-burn) n. former farm where the Whitrope Burn meets the Hermitage Water, at the modern location of Hermitage village. This was probably the farm of ‘Jame of Milbourne home’ (most likely an Elliot) recorded in 1587/8. William Henderson was tenant there in 1694. It was included along with Over Closs, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718.
The former farmhouse was visited by Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed in 1792, and was at that time the last of the old style cottages in the district. It was a single storey at one end, with an extra storey at the other end, and with tiny windows looking through the thatched roof. Willie Elliot was farmer there at that time, and still recorded in 1797. Robert Elliot was farmer there in 1821 and 1841. There is a linear earthwork there, running east from the B6399 at least to the next stream, possibly all the way to the Roughley Burn (it is ‘Mylburnholmie’ in 1694, ‘Milburnholm’ in 1718 and ‘Millburn Holm’ in 1821; it is ‘Milnburnhholmie’ and ‘Millburneholme’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is on Stobie’s 1770

Millburn Schuil see Hermitage Schuil Mill Cornet (mil-kör-nil) n. a mock Cornet selected in one of the local knitwear factories.
Usually it was the youngest apprentice, and in the larger mills there were also Cornet’s Lasses, as well as Right- and Left-Hand Men and their Lasses, with those selected being the youngest 3 male and female employees. They would wear the same jackets and hats each year, and the party would go round the various ‘flats’, entertaining the workforce. The practice took place from at least the 1920s, including Braemar, Hawick Cashmere, John Laing’s, Johnstone’s, Lyle & Scott’s, Pesco’s, Pringle’s, Turner & Ruther-ford’s and Woodcock’s. The tradition largely died out in the 1970s, but is still continued by a few companies.

Millcote (mil-ko’) n. lands in Liddesdale recorded on a rental roll from about 1376, and associated with the Mangerton estate. They are listed as ‘Mylnicotis’ and with a value of 10 shillings.

mill-door (mil-döör) n., arch. entrance to a mill

– ‘Saying ‘She has a mouth like (or as big as) a mill-door (= one very large and gaping)’ [GW].

the Millennium Nature Trail (thu-mi-len-ee-um-nä-chur-träl) n. nature trail laid out in Wilton Lodge Park around 2000. There is an accompanying leaflet that describes the trail, which starts from the Museum.

the Millennium Stane (thu-mi-len-ee-um-stän) n. commemorative standing stone placed on the Miller’s Knowes in 2000, inscribed ‘Look back on Bonnie Teviotside, and Hawick Among the Hills’. It was brought from a quarry near Jedburgh.

miller (mi-lur) n. person who runs a corn mill, having a special status within a barony – ‘Ee’ve the cheek o’ (or as muckle impetence as) the miller’s horse’ [GW], ‘ti droon the miller’ meant to add too much water to dough, liquor, etc. (see also millers).

Miller (mi-lur) n. Adam (b.c.1753) recorded as ‘independent’ on the 1841 census, somewhere on Buccleuch Street. He may be the ‘Mr. Miller’ marked on Buccleuch Street on Wood’s 1824 map. His wife was Rachel and their children included John, Elizabeth and Janet. Alexander (18th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £27. His son was probably William, who owned the same lands in 1678. Alexander (18th C.) shepherd at ‘...head’ in Wilton Parish, according to his headstone. He married Marion Smith, who died in 1769, aged 59, and is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gripeknowe in 1786. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Mary (b.1783); William (b.1786); and John (b.1787). Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at Teindside Bridge, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of North Shields. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had a local connection. Andrew ‘The Marquis’ (19th/20th C.) son of a coal agent in Hawick. There is a story told of him pulling Peter Laidlaw’s leg by recounting a dream in which he was in Hell and the Devil tells him to get off his seat, saying ‘Ee’ve nae richt there; it’s reserved for Peter Laidlaw’. Charles (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Thomas Black. In 1760 he witnessed baptisms for weaver David (who was surely related to him) and John Scott. He may be the Charles whose son David died in Hawick in 1808. He is probably the Charles, father-in-law to stocking-maker Thomas Scott, whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1816 (in which case Isabel was his daughter). Charles (18th C.) resident at Chapelhill in 1775 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson Parish. Christian (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house on Silver Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. She is probably the Christian at ‘Slitrige Bridge’ and described as ‘independent’ on the 1841 census. She could be the Christian, daughter of James and Christian Winthrope, who was born in Hawick in 1785. David (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick, recorded as witness to baptisms in 1702 and 1704. He may be the David whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1700. He is probably the David who was fined in 1716 for calling Isobel Anderson a liar in court. David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He may have been son of the earlier David. He married Margaret Armstrong and their children included: Margaret (b.1724); and David (b.1728). The witnesses in 1728 were William Tudhope and weaver John (probably his brother). David (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included: William (b.1733); and Helen (b.1736). David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick, perhaps related to the earlier David. He may be the David, son of David and Margaret Armstrong, baptised in Hawick in 1728. He married Helen Wright in 1756 and their children included: Jean (b.1757); John (b.1760); Helen (b.1761); and Robert (b.1763). Weaver Charles Miller witnessed the 1760 baptism and was surely related. He could be the weaver David whose death is recorded in 1810 when he ‘Drowned himself in Slitrigg’. David (18th/19th C.) tailor in Newcastle. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence must have had a local connection. David (b.1795) son of Thomas. He emigrated to America in 1817, settling in Bovina, New York. In 1817 he married Nancy, daughter of Scotsman John Thomson. His 2nd wife was Isabella, daughter of Bailie ‘Tammy’ Turnbull. Their daughter Isabella Wilson married John Robertson Hoy. Many letters survive, sent to him from his family members in the Borthwick valley. Elizabeth Miller (b.c.1695) recorded in 1695 when she was convicted of theft in Hawick. She was banished 'out of the Ports of the town', with the Burgh Officers announcing that no one should harbour or reset her. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (d.1720) recorded being in Wiltonburn when her funeral took place in Wilton Parish. She may have been related to Robert, who was blacksmith at Borthaugh. George (1777/8–1849) sawyer in Hawick, son of Janet Kedie, who died in 1832, aged 75. In 1841 he was resident at about 71 High Street and recorded as 'independent'. He was living with his sister Isabel (who died in 1841, aged 50), as well as a servant, Janet Hume. He could be the Miller who gave his name to the adjacent close. He is buried in St. Mary's. George (b.1829/30) born in Ancrum Parish. He was a four miller living on the Cross Wynd in 1851. In 1850 he married Jane, daughter of Archibald Hobkirk from Jedburgh and their children included Robert. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Redford in 1656 and their children included Isobel (b.1657), Robert (b.1659) and Thomas (b.1661). James (17th/18th C.) proprietor of the main inn in Denholm in 1745, when the Highlander army passed through. The officers apparently stayed at the inn. It is said that a servant stole the pay-bag of the army, but it was returned after there was a threat to burn down the village. James (b.c.1725) gardener, one of the 6 representative Burgesses appointed to perambulate and define the boundaries of the Burgh's land in 1767, during court proceedings for the division of the Common. He could be the James who married Jean Gledstains in Wilton in 1741 and had children in Wilton and Melrose. James (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick who subscribed to 2 copies of Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He is probably the James paid by the Council in 1771 for 'making poor's list'. He may be the James who married Christian Wintrop (probably sister of the writer James) in 1772, with children Andrew (b.1774), Jane (b.1775), James (b.1777), Andrew (b.1779), Margaret (b.1781) and Christian (b.1785). His son Thomas was also a writer and died in Hawick in 1819. James (1763/4–1835) resident of Dearnburnhaugh. He married Mary Stavert, who died in 1839, aged 77. Their children included: Thomas (b.1790); Mary (b.1791); William (b.1795); and Jane (b.1797). He and his wife are buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. James (18th/19th C.) grocer, spirit dealer, wine merchant and seedsman in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is recorded at Bridge End in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and on the Sandbed in 1837, but does not appear on the 1841 census. He is probably the James who married Margaret Turnbull, and whose children included: Alexander (b.1801), possibly the Alexander of Dundee who also subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'; Elizabeth (b.1803); Thomas (b.1805); Isabel (b.1807); Andrew (b.1808); James (b.1814); and William (b.1818). He may be the 'servant' of William Oliver ('Auld Cash') who witnessed his will in 1808. James (b.1795/6) from Wilton Parish, he was a joiner in Denholm. He was listed as a wright in directories of 1837 and 1852. In 1861 he was on Main Street. His wife was Margaret and they had a son, John. James (19th C.) Chief Magistrate in the early 1830s. Johan G.D. (20th C.) grand-daughter of Robert Martin and Mary Hunter. She published the local poetry collection 'Fallen Leaves' about 1950. John (17th C.) resident of Easter Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name was written 'Mullner'. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1728 he witnessed a baptism for weaver David, who may have been his brother. John (18th C.) resident at Howcleuch in 1743 when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1743. Margaret (b.1741), James (b.1746), William (b.1747) and Walter (b.1749) were probably also his children. John (b.c.1770) joiner in Robertson. He was listed at 'Robertson Woodfoot' in 1841, living with his daughters Helen and Ann. He was probably brother of Thomas and uncle of the later carpenter John, who moved to Traquair. He is probably the John, son of James, born in Robertson in 1768. John (1797–1874) born at Dearnburnhaugh, son of Thomas. He was a wright or carpenter, and later served as factor at Traquair. In his younger days he worked for David Murray and then for architect Archibald Elliot, who made designs for the Haining and other local houses. By 1841 he was living at Avenuehead, near Traquair House. He may have worked on the construction of the building at St. Ronan's Well. In 1822 he married Jean (or Jane, d.1879), daughter of Robert Aimers from Galashiels. His children included Jane, Robert, Agnes, John and Mary. He died at Traquair. Miller Street in Innerleithen was named after him. John (18th/19th C.) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. He appears to be absent from the 1841 census, but the apprentice tailors William and Walter, living on the Howeagate, may be his sons. John (b.c.1815) agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was living at Todshawhaugh Cottages. His wife was Mary and their children included Robert, Margaret, Jessie and Elizabeth. He may have been brother of Robert, who was also at Todshawhaugh. John (1822/3–1854) Hawick shoemaker. He married Mary Scott, and she died in 1892, aged 74. Their children were Susanah (who died in infancy), Agnes Scott, May and Mary (who married William Hills). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John ‘Blind Johnnie Miller’ (1832/3–1904) spent a while in Hawick Blind Asylum, but ran away back to Teviothead, where he spent the rest of his life. He was said to have known the countryside of Teviothead Parish extremely well, was gifted with a great memory, and also played the fiddle. Bailie John (19th/20th C.) councillor and Bailie in the latter part of the 19th century. He spoke at the 1899 Colour Bussing and was one of the first guests at the Callants’ Club dinner. Rev. John S. (20th C.) minister at St. Andrew’s Kirk 1954–59. He was the last minister. Robert (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as blacksmith at Borthaugh. He is probably the Robert who in 1698 was cautioned to Robert Scott, farmer at Wiltonburn. Bessie from Wiltonburn, who died in 1720, may have been related to him. Robert (d.bef. 1798) wright in Hawick. His son Robert was a carter and died in 1798. He could be the deceased Robert whose wife Betty Ekron died in Hawick in 1790. Robert (d.1798) son of wright Robert. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in the period 1785–91. He was a carrier in Hawick, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His descendant could be the ‘Mr. Miller’ whose property is shown on Buccleuch Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He is probably the carrier Robert who married Jean Conquerer in 1753 and whose children included Mary (b.1756), Margaret (b.1760) and Thomas (b.1763). Tailor Robert Paterson was witness to the 1760 baptism. Robert (18th C.) married Mary Elliot. Their daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1777. The witnesses to the baptism were Thomas Scott, Senior and Thomas Scott, Junior. Robert (b.c.1785) tenant at Belses Mill. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 census. His wife was Susan and their children included James, Robert, Thomas, George and Watson. Robert (d.1822) schoolmaster at Roberton. He is said to have died very suddenly. Robert (b.c.1790) hand-loom weaver who lived on the Loan, at about No. 24. He was recorded as a spinner in Hawick when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His wife was Catherine and their children included Margaret, Robert, Elizabeth and Harriet. Sir Ronald Andrew Baird (1937– ) born and educated in Edinburgh, he trained as a chartered accountant and worked in London and the Midlands before returning to Scotland in 1968 to join Dawson International. He became a Director in 1976 and from 1982–95 he was Chairman and Chief Executive, helping Dawson to become one of Scotland’s leading companies, with Pringle’s being one of its main assets. However, this period also saw the decline of Pringle’s and knitwear in Hawick generally. In 1995 he was effectively forced to resign after poor performance by Dawson, and his hefty compensation package caused some protest at the time. He was Chairman of the Scottish Textile Association 1992–5. He was Chief Guest at the 1993 Common Riding. He received the C.B.E. in 1975 and a knighthood in 1993. Mr. ?? stationmaster of Hawick Station in the early 20th century. Simon (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was joint tenant of Hawick Shiel (along with Walter Scott) in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He may be the Simon, married to a Murray, who had an unnamed child baptised in Hawick Parish in 1683. Thomas (17th C.) listed as tenant at Mervinslaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Marion Hobkirk in Cavers Parish in 1708. Thomas (17th C.) joint tenant along with John ‘Bue’ in Timbersidemill according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. They were recorded as having ‘an kiln betuixt thm’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–88. He was a carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1874). He was surely related to Robert, who was also a carrier. He may be the Thomas, married to Agnes Smith, whose children (baptised in Hawick) included: John (b.1775); Agnes (b.1777); James (b.1781); and James (again, b.1784). The witnesses in 1781 were shoemaker Charles Wilson and tailor Walter Pringle. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Robert Grieve in 1763 and another for Robert Lamb in 1781. Thomas (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1808. Thomas (d.1819) son of writer James. He is recorded as a writer when he died in Hawick. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of London. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence must have had a local connection. Thomas (d.bef. 1835) resident of Deanburnhaugh, probably a tenant farmer. His father was probably James and his brother John, joiner at Roberton. He was Beadle at Roberton Kirk. In 1791 he married Agnes Laidlaw in Hawick and in 1812 he secondly married Isabella Scott in Roberton. His children included: William (b.1791), who emigrated to Bovina, New York; David (b.1795), who also emigrated to Bovina; John (b.1797), who was factor at Traquair; Berry Shaw (b.1801, named after the local minister), who joined his brothers; and Christina (‘Cirsty’), moved to Bovina and married James Fletcher from Ettrick. He lost an eye to a cow’s horn in about 1822. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tailor at ‘Parkhouses’ (i.e. Packhooses) in Wilton Parish in 1841. His wife was Mary. Walter (17th C.) weaver at Lochburnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Walter (17th C.) listed as tenant at Outerside among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Walter (18th C.) resident at Parkhill in 1743 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. Other children born in Roberton who may have been his include William (b.1738), Isabel (b.1741), Margaret (b.1747), James (b.1749), Mary (b.1754) and Beatrix (b.1757). Walter (18th/19th C.) saddler recorded in Denholm in 1837. William (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. In 1663 and 1678 he is recorded paying the land tax on £27. He is probably son of Alexander, who owned the same lands in 1643. William (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, who, along with Adam Kerr, was rebuked in 1713 for riding on stilts on the Sabbath ‘thereby causing crowds of bairns to follow them’. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Hardenburnfoot in 1717 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a birth for tailor Robert Chisholme. William (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1774 when his son George was baptised in Roberton Parish. He could be the same as the William recorded at Wooburn in 1772 when his son Walter was baptised. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Shielwood, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bowunhill Roadside, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (b.c.1770) overseer at a woollen factory, living on Wilton Damside in 1841. He is probably the William living at Roughugh in 1835, when listed among heads of households on Wilton Parish. He could be the William, spinner, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (18th/19th C.) member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. This could be the same man as William the painter. William (b.1782/3) painter and glazier on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was on the short-list for Cornet in 1817. He could be the ‘Mr. Miller’ whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map at about 69 High Street, giving its name to Miller’s Close. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was a painter on the Howegate. In 1841 he was living at the Sandbed with wife Margaret and children James and William. He married Margaret, daughter of tailor Robert Elliot, and their children included: William (b.1836); Janet (b.1839); Jane (b.1841); Robert (b.1845); Margaret (b.1850); He may have been the William born to David and Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1782. William (d.bef. 1840) wright in Hawick. He married Helen (‘Nelly’) Buckham, and she died in 1840. They had a son James who died in 1808, another James (b.1810), as well as John (1805/6–23). William (1791–1870) eldest son of Thomas, he was probably born at Deanburnhaugh. He was a farm labourer at Milsington and lived at Easter Parkhill and Muselee (where he was tenant farmer for a while). In 1819 he married Elizabeth Scott, from Milsington. In 1825 he married Isabel (1802–82), daughter of Michael Dickson and Jane Jardine. The family emigrated to America in 1831, settling in Bovina, New York. Their first 3 children were born in Roberton Parish and the rest in America. Their children were: Thomas (1826–1911); Michael (1828–1915); William (1830–1912); David (b.1832), who died young: Walter (1835–1908); Berry Shaw (1837–1906); Janet (1839–70); and Gibert Dickson (1843–1931). Photographs of him and his wife exist. William (b.c.1810) blacksmith on the Sandbed. His wife was Helen and their children included Mary, Thomas, Janet, Margaret and Walter. William (b.1811/2) tailor on Orrock Place in 1851 and at 21 Howegate in 1861. He was listed as a tailor on ‘Teviot square’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret, Mary, Sarah, Elizabeth, John and Walter Alexander. William ‘Willie’ (19th C.) one of 3 men who instigated the Hawick Home Mission in 1872. He was the first President when the Mission was formally founded in the next year. Either he or a later William was leader of the Hawick Home Mission choir for 25 years in the early part of the 20th century. Rev. William Carrick (1858–1915) born in Glasgow, son of Andrew and Margaret Carrick. He was educated at the Church of Scotland Normal School and Glasgow University, and licensed to preach in 1881. He became assistant at St. George’s, Paisley and was ordained at Howood Chapel in 1883. He was first Minister of the new Wellington Church in 1886 and first minister of the newly created St. Margaret’s Parish in 1896. He was a guest at the 1890 Colour Bussing. He was translated to Yetholm in 1898. He married Margaret Walker, daughter of Thomas McQueen in 1887, and she died in 1894. He secondly married Johanna, daughter of John Bonthron in 1901. His children included William Bonthron Carrick and John Bonthron (formerly spelled ‘Millar’ and ‘Milner’). His children included William Bonthron Carrick and John Bonthron (formerly spelled ‘Millar’ and ‘Milner’). His children included William Bonthron Carrick and John Bonthron (formerly spelled ‘Millar’ and ‘Milner’) mills (mi-lurz) n. people in charge of corn mills. In Hawick the mill was at the Mill Port, moving to the Mill Path in the late 18th century, and the miller had grazing rights and grew corn at the Miller’s Knowes. Hawick’s millers have included: John Dempster in 1622; William Paterson 1800s; Walter Elliot 1670s; Robert Elliot 1720s; James Scott 1750s; Adam Scott in 1784; John Ainslie late 1700s; James Scott 1750s; Adam Scott in 1784; John Ainslie late 1700s; John Oliver 1820s to 1840s; and John Young Scott mid-1800s.

the Miller’s (thu-mi-lurz) n. the Miller’s Knowes, a hilly area between Weensland Road and the Orchard Road, much used by people walking in the Miller’s Knowes or Target Hills areas. It is named after the miller of the old Hawick corn mill, who for centuries grew corn and had grazing rights there. The area was made notorious after a man called John Webster committed suicide in the old quarry there in 1748. It has been a public park since 1892, part being purchased from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1920, and the rest gifted in 1930. It is now officially known as Miller’s Knowes Park, and offers spectacular views of the town, and is also used by children for sledding and sliding, as well as dog walkers and others. The Independent Broadcasting Authority leased part of the summit for 60 years for a microwave transmitter in 1962 (used as a relay for the Selkirk transmitter), and a BMX track was constructed in 1985 (but closed in the late 1990s due to continual bad weather). It is also home to a playground, the Millennium Stone and nearby memorial seat (to Frank T. Scott). It was once properly known as ‘Galalaw Knowes’ – ‘Sae lassies braw an’ callants a’ Where better mak’ your vows, Millholm (mil-höm) n. place marked as ‘Millholm’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. It appears to be near the modern Heritage village, and is probably the same place as Millburn. It may be the ‘mylnholme’ where Walter Turnbull is recorded as tenant in 1694 (but is hard to distinguish from Millholm, which is further to the south).

Millholm (mil-höm-kros) n. former lands in Liddesdale, located near the Millholm Cross, south of Newcastleton. In 1541 it was recorded as ‘Mylneholm’ and in the hands of the Laird of Mangerton. There was a Walter Scott there in about 1622. In 1632 the farm here, along with Ettleton, was possessed by David Goldie and James Mitchelson. Andrew Wilson was there in 1685. It is described in a survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 1553 acres, and was bounded by Gillfoot, the Liddel Water, Side, Tarraas, Copshaw Park and Blackburn. The farmhouse is in approximately the modern place, with cornland between it and the river, and adjacent small fields belonging to Greens and Mangerton farms. A symbol near the farmhouse could be meant to indicate the Millholm Cross, but there is no sign of Ettleton Cemetery on the 1718 map. The farmer there in the mid-18th century was Walter Scott. James Ingles was tenant in the early 19th century. The name may simply be the ‘home mill’ for the local laird (also called ‘Milnholm’; it is ‘Mylneholme’ in 1622, ‘Mylneholmes’ in 1632, ‘Mylne-holm’ in 1685 and ‘Milneholme’ in 1718; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Millholm Cross (thu-mil-hōm-kros) n. ancient carved cross just south of Newcastle, on the west side of the Canonbie road. It probably commemorates Alexander Armstrong, Laird of Mangerton, who was killed in 1320 and his body laid here while his clansmen rested on their way to Ettleton churchyard. The original part of the cross is about 10 feet high, including the base, and it has a modern top. The shaft has the letters ‘MA’ and ‘AA’, together with a carved sword. The Armstrong Clan Trust erected a nearby plaque. It is said to have been used as a local meeting place, where transactions were carried out, servants hitred and feuds settled. Probably the farm here is the ‘Mylneholme’, with a value of 15 shillings, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 – ‘The Cross at Millholm, which perpetuates the name Of gallant Lord Mangerton, peerless in fame’ [DA] (also called ‘Milnholm Cross’).

Millhoose (mil-hoos) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll c.1376. They are listed there as ‘Milnehouse’, with a value of 5 shillings and 9 pence. In a rental roll of 1541 they are worth 15 shillings and 9 pence. In a rental roll of c.1376 – ‘The Cross at Millholm, which perpetuates the name Of gallant Lord Mangerton, peerless in fame’ [DA] (also called ‘Milnholm Cross’).

Mill Hoose (mil-hoos) n. 2-storey house attached to the former Corn Mill on the Mill Path, also known as ‘Hawick Mill Hoose’ or ‘the Mill Hoose’. It was rebuilt 1862–3. It has a central plastered door-piece and a simple elegance of construction. It is a grade C listed building.

Milligan (mi-lee-gin) n. Charles (19th/20th C.) son of William, and nephew of Provost Robert. He married Jane Beattie, whose mother was a Nichol of Craik and also related to Provost Renwick’s grandmother. He learned the upholstery trade from his uncle and started his own business. This was carried on as Milligan Brothers by his sons Robert and John. Christopher ‘Kit’ (??–??) wrote ‘Riccarton Junction: memories of my life in this railway village’ (1994). He was born in the village and lived there until the railway closed, when he moved to Hawick. At the site of the Riccarton Junction North signal box an information panel has been erected in his memory.

George (1775–1855) from Wattens in Caithness, he was a joiner, cabinet-maker and undertaker in Hawick. He was father of Provost Robert, William (farmer in Denholm) and Sophia (who married Andrew Park and emigrated to America in 1857). He was an elder in the Relief Kirk. He was listed as a joiner and cabinet-maker on Montcrieff’s Close (an old name for Tannage Close) in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was living on Tannage Close in 1841 and in 1851 he was a lodger with clock-maker John Graham. He married Jane Paterson, sister of ‘Pawkie Paiterson’, who died in 1839, aged 54 (she had previously had a child with Frenchman M. Cabourne). He died suddenly stepping into a train carriage at Hawick station the morning after the Winter Fair. Together with his son Robert, the pair ran the family cabinet-maker’s for about 75 years. George Halberdier 1895–96. He worked for the Council and was officially a ‘District Officer’. He was thus the main Halberdier, who would organise the venues, etc., as well as reading the Proclamation and devilering the letter to the Cornet Elect. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1612 as ‘Johnne Amuliekyn, in Cruikis’. Along with Ninian Armstrong (son of Thomas) he was found guilty of helping John, Lord Maxwell, who was on the run for murder and treason. His farm was near Langholm, possibly the Crooks next to Westerkirk. He was sentenced to be hanged in Edinburgh. Rev. Robert (d.1888) son of a Dumfries hosiery manufacturer, he was ordained as 2nd minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1864. He was quite evangelical in style, had a large bible class and introduced hymn singing to Wolfelee. He and his family contributed significantly to the fund for the new church building. He left in 1871 for the Chalmers Territorial Church in Dundee. He married Mary Spiers from Glasgow in 1863, and she died in 1906. They had a son, William (who was a businessman in Teheran) and 3 daughters.
Milligan’s

He drowned while bathing at Montrose. Robert (1821–1892) born on Common Riding morning, his mother was a sister of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. He became a cabinet-maker and undertaker and was well-known for his repartee as an auctioneer. In 1851 he was listed as a joiner on Moncrieff’s Close. His later business premises were at 80 High Street, where the Liberal Club was later built. The house was set back and the yard in front was used for furniture sales. He was a Councillor for over 30 years, mainly for South High Street Ward, becoming a Magistrate (possibly for longer than anyone else), then acting- Provost in 1875, beating Edward Wilson by a single vote in the 1884 Council election and being Provost 1887–90. He was sometimes referred to as ‘the Bailyeh’. As a Councillor he was known to be blunt and outspoken. He had virtually no formal education and it is said that he rather gloried in this fact. Wilton Lodge Park was acquired during his Provostship. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, being Chairman of the Race Committee and he was the Provost referred to in J.E.D. Murray’s ‘Nacht Afore the Morn’. He was a School Board member, Parochial Board member, keen bowler (being on the founding committee of Hawick Bowling Club), Vice-President of the Curling Club, and a Conservative, although little involved in party politics. He was presented with a gold watch on his retirement as Provost. He married Margaret Hunter, daughter of the landlord of the Black Bull, and she died in 1856, aged 34. Their children were George and Robert, who died in infancy, Barbara Scott, Margaret, Mary (who married John Henderson) and Jane (who married John Little). He secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Smith, and she died in 1897, aged 70. Their children were Robert (also an auctioneer) and Janet. He is buried in the Wellogate, and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by Frank Wood in 1890, and said to have perhaps been damaged by a halberd!). Robert (1851/2–1931) son of William and nephew of Provost Robert. He became a cycle and motor mechanic and was known as a cheerful individual, who had great technical and creative skill, but less business acumen. He built a 1½ horse power motor quadrocycle, which was essentially an early motor car. He also built many other mechanical devices, and was a keen early promoter of pneumatic tyres. He went into partnership with William Laidlaw and later with Alexander Bell, the firm Milligan & Bell being successful through most of the 20th century. Robert (1865–1906) son of Provost Robert and Margaret Smith. He carried on the auctioneering business after his father’s death, but it gradually petered out. He married Grace Bilby and their son Robert fought in WWI in the Canadian forces. Sandy born and raised in Denholm, he worked in textile engineering design, but in 1993 became a full-time artist. He specialises in Border landscapes using pastels. William (16th C.) Vicar of Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1545 as ‘Amuligane’. Nothing else appears to be known about him. William (19th C.) brother of Provost Robert, he was a farmer near Denholm. He married a Scott of Milsington and his children included: Charles, who became an upholsterer; and Robert, a bicycle and motor engineer (also written ‘Millican’).

Milligan’s (mi-lee-ginz) n. former popular name for the business premises at 80 High Street. The Milligan family lived there, with their cabinet-maker’s shop below.

Milligan’s Peth (mi-lee-ginz-peth) n. name sometimes used in the late 19th century for Brougham Place, after the cabinet-making business of Robert Milligan, which was at the foot of the street.

Millingwud Fell (mi-lin-wud-fell) n. Millingwood Fell, also formerly known as Millenwood Fell, a high hill in the west of Castleton Parish, near the source of the Hermitage Water. It reaches a height of 517 m, with the somewhat higher Scawd Bank just to the south (it appears to be ‘Millin Wod Fell’ on the 1718 Bucelouch survey, is ‘Mellenwood Fell’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Millenwood-fell’ in the New Statistical Account).

millman (mil-mum) n. occupation in the knitwear industry, someone who mills (or washes) garments after they have been knitted and joined together. This was generally carried out by a highly experienced worker, who could tell by the feel whether a garment had been fully milled.

Millmoor (mil-moor) n. lands in Liddesdale once attached to the estate of Mangerton. In a c.1376 rental roll they are listed as ‘Milnmore’ with a value of 2 shillings.

Millpeth see the Mill Peth

the Mill Peth (thu-nil-peth) n. Mill Path, a short street running from Slitrig Crescent to Wellogate Brae, named after Hawick Corn Mill and formerly known as Kiln Path. The original houses were constructed in 1849 and the county police station was once on this street. The lower part, including the old Salvation Army Hall, was demolished in 1968 to make way for new housing for elderly people. The Song Singing ceremony takes place here on the Friday of the Common Riding. The Cornet and mounted supporters are led up the Cross Wynd by the Drums and Fifes and at the top of the Mill Path the Cornet dismounts, thanking the riders as they pass. Then the Principles, Provost and Baillies walk down to the foot of the street for the Proclamation and the Song Singing. This takes place on a specially constructed platform on the north side (corner with Allars Crescent), which replaced the former site, the roof of Tibbie the Fiddler's Cottage on the opposite side of the street. No 3 and the Corn Mill are listed buildings – ‘Owre the Mill Path swells the chorus, Flag and ribbons waving o’er us’ [RK].

Millport see Mill Port

Mill Pool (mil-pool) n. pool in the Teviot near Lantown Mill. The weir there was called ‘Lantown Cauld’.

Mill Port (mil-por’) n. short piece of road along the side of the Slitrig, entered by steps opposite the Tower. It was originally the site of a gateway near the old Corn Mill, which was partly washed away in the flood of 1767 and the remains demolished. The ‘undermost house of the Miln Port’ was also carried away in the flood. The steps down from the High Street date at least from the early 19th century. It once contained a number of poor lodging-houses, being the site of a murder (resulting in Hawick’s last hanging) in 1814. A thatched row of tenements, one with an outside staircase, was demolished in the 1860s.

Mill Shot (mil-sho’) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. It is listed as ‘Colver Field, or Mill Shot’.

Millport Toor (mil-por’-toor) n. former building on Mill Port. It may be the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ owned by the Scotts of Whitchesters in the early 16th century. This may be the same place once called the Lieutenant’s Tower and referred to as ‘the Peill’ in 1656. In a description of the great flood of 1767 it was said that the ‘old Milnport Tower is undermined and the walls rent’. It was probably demolished after that. There is a legend that it was connected by an underground passage to Drumlanrig’s Tower.

Millrig-quarter (mil-rig-kwar-tur) n. former name for lands in Belses. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Kerr in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew, and in 1684 when inherited by Sir Thomas' nephew John. In 1684 it was described as 7 husbandlands of land (it is listed as ‘Milnrigquarter’ in 1678 and ‘Milnerig quarter’ in 1684).

Millrig Sike (mil-rig-sik) n. former name for lands in Belses, described in 1684 as 3 husbandlands in Belses ‘cum rivola vocata the Milnerig Sike’. The lands were presumably by a small stream or perhaps the mill lade.

mills (milz) n., pl. corn mills, i.e. buildings used for grinding grains into flour or meal, formerly crucial parts of the feudal structure, with each barony having its own mill where the tenant farmers had to have their produce ground for a fee. These reached their peak probably in the 17th century, and then began to disappear, although 10 local ones are still listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Eventually some of them were converted into textile mills. They were almost always water powered, although in earlier times they would have been hand-mills, and animal-driven mills also existed. The following were probably all local mills: Hawick Mill; Allanhaugh Mill; Ancre Mill; Appotside Mill; Ashkirk Mill; Bedrule Mill; Belses Mill; Boosnall (on Ale); Borthaugh Mill; Bucleuch Mill; Burnfit Mill; Cauld Mill; Chisholme Mill; Cogsmill; Craik Mill; Crawhill Mill; Dean Mill; Denum Mill; Dodburn Mill; Dovehaugh Mill; Falnash Mill; Hallrule Mill; Hartshaugh Mill; Harwood Mill; Hassendean Mill; Heidshaw Mill; Highchesters Mill; Hobsburn Mill; Howcleuch Mill; Hummelknowe Mill; Larriston Mill; Lilliesleaf Mill; Midlem Mill; Minto Mill; Newmill on Teviot; Newmill on Slitrig; Newton Mill (Bedrule); Philiphope Mill; Raesknowe Mill; Riccarton Mill; Riddell Mill; Roughheugh/Langlands/Wulton Mill; Ruletownhead Mill; Scau Mill/Timberside Mill; Soothdean Mill; Spittal Mill; Synton Mill; Trow Mill; Weensland Mill; Whitehaugh Mill (Liddesdale); Whithope Mill (Borthwick); Winnington Mill; and Woollee Mill (Rule). There were also small mills on some farms, powered by water from ponds. In Rulewater, for example, these were at Abbotrule, Bedrule, Billerwell, Cleuchhead, Doorpool, Easter Fodderlee, Gatehousecote, Greenriver, Hallrule, Hawthornden, Mackside, Midburn, Ruletownhead, Townfoot, Tythegreen, Wester Fodderlee and Westerhaugh.

Mills (milz) n. George (b.1812/3) from Edinburgh, he was a coach painter living on the Back Row in 1851. His wife was Ann and their children included Jane, Margaret, James and David. Henry (18th C.) listed as postillion at Cavers in 1791, when he was working for George Douglas. He could be related to the butler John 'Mill', who was working at Cavers a few years earlier. James (19th C.) hind at Midshields. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840.

Millside (mil-sid) n. former name for a place near Hawick. John Cook was living there in 1767. It is unclear where this might have been, but perhaps an alternative name for the Mill Path.

Millstane Edge (mil-stän-ej) n. Millstone Edge, hill roughly between Linhope farm and Cauldcleuch Head, to the north of Tuduhope Hill. It reaches a height of 567 m.

Millstane Edge (mil-stän-ej) n. Millstone Edge, hill in southern Roxburghshire, lying on the border with Dumfriesshire, north-west of Newcastleton, just south of Roan Fell. It reaches a height of 561 m and has a triangulation pillar on another slight summit to the south. There are many cairns in the area. The hill got its name from the quarry on the eastern side, where blanks for millstones were cut, one good discarded example being visible there today (there is a well-known place of the same name in the Derbyhire Peak District).

Millstane Sike (mil-stän-sik) n. small stream in Southdean Parish on the right side of the A6088 just before Lethem. It flows into the Carter Burn. The reason for the name is unknown. But there are several quarry holes on both sides of the stream, which have been used to excavate the outcrops of sandstone found here.

mill-steep (mil-steep) n., arch. a lever fixed to the machinery of a corn-mill, by which the millstones may be moved relative to each other (noted by J. Jamieson).

mill-yins (mil-yinz) n., pl. factory workers – 'The mills war skailin an the mill-yins war toavin hyenn' [ECS].

Milma (mil-mä) n. alternative name of the lands held by William Scott in Lees in the 16th century, and later by the Scotts of Lees and Burnhead. The 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 lists 'Mowmaw, or Millmae, commonly called Lees', valued at £52 (the name is probably related to 'Wester and East Moor-maw', an old name for West and East Lees; see also Moormaw).

Milmoe (mil-mö) n. Hugh Joseph (1819/20–85) coming from Ireland, he was a pawn-broker at 2 Orrock Place. He was immortalized in the verse of the song 'Kinly Stick'. He was in Hawick at least as early as 1871, when he had an advertisement in the Hawick Advertiser. He died at 5 Baker Street, where his brother Patrick died and 1886 and his sister Bridget in 1899. There is a family with similar Christian names in County Sligo.

Milmoe's (mil-mö) n. former pawnshop in the Sandbed, remembered in the song 'Kinly Stick' – '... Streicht to the pawnshop that's kept by Milmoe' [WE].

miln (miln) n., arch. a mill, usually for grinding corn, and typically water-powered. As part of the feudal system every barony or estate would have at least one mill, with the tenants kept in a system of multure, i.e. they were obliged to have their corn and other grains ground there, and would pay part of the grains as a tax. Burghs and abbeys would have their own separate mills. Hawick is known to have had one since at least 1412 – Heir lies an honest man, John Deanis, qvha vas tenant kyndlie of Havik Miln' (from Old English, surviving longer in place names than in speech).

Milne (miln) n. Alexander 'Wat' (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpacle in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His surname is recorded as 'Mylne'. Henry 'Henry the Hadda Man' (19th C.) fishmonger at 5 High Street.

Milne-Home (miln-hewm) n. John Hepburn (1876–1963) factor for the Buccleuch estates from about 1920. He married Mary Elliot.

miln-steed (miln-steed) n., arch. a mill stead, piece of land suitable for a mill – 'It is two reason-able myle Between the miln-steed and the kirk-style'[BR1688].

mil-sie (mil-sie) n., arch. a mill-sieve – 'Sellin the milk throwe a milsie'[ECS] (also written 'milsie'; noted by E.C. Smith).

Milsingtonhaugh

Parish of Roberton in 1689/90. At that time, along with Girnwood, it was valued at about £1300. The lands belonged to John de Langlands in the 14th century. His widow Marion Comyn had a charter for these lands, along with the mill and the lands of Outerside in about 1363. The Langlands exchanged the lands for Hepe with Sir Walter Scott in 1451 (in a charter dated at Wilton Kirk). In this charter they are described as lying between the lands of Borthwick on the east, Chisholme on the south, ‘Dualyrig’ and Hoscote on the west and Bellendean on the north. Walter was to pay annually a red rose or six pennies Scots at the feast of St. John the Baptist. In 1453 there was a confirming charter of ‘excambion’ of James of Langlands ‘frank-tenement of the town of Milsaintoun’ for Sir Walter Scott’s frank-tenement of Wester Hepe. The sasine was signed at the ‘chief messuage’ of Milsington on the last day of December in 1453. In 1492 the lands were described as being then waste, but normally valued at 10 merks (and still worth £10 Scots in 1553/4). John Cockburn was recorded there in 1502. From the late 16th century the Milsington Scotts resided there, descended from Thomas, second son of Walter ‘the Hawke’ who accompanied the ‘Brave Buccheul’ on the rescue of Kinmont Willie. The Milsington line is continued in the Scotts of Girnwood and of Newton. There were 15 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. It was listed among properties of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1678. The farm was in Wilton Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90. William Scott paid the Hearth Tax for 3 hearths in 1694, with John Goodfellow as shepherd at that time. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccheul properties, when it covered 1259 acres and was bounded by Borthwickbrae, the Borthwick Water, Hoscote, Henwoodie common and Bellendean. Andrew Goodfellow was living there in 1764 and William Scott in 1797. In the 1788 county valuation the lands here, along with Girnwood, were valued at £1305 13s 4d. From 1831 Milsington was tenanted by Charles Scott, cousin of Sir Walter the writer. In 1841 there were about 20 people living around the farm estate, as well as those in the principal farmhouse. The main road through the Borthwick used to pass directly in front of the farmhouse. A side road leaves from near here to join the Teviot valley at Branhxolme Bridgend. A massive Roman bronze leg of a man on horseback was found there in 1820, possibly part of the loot from some southern town, and now in the Scottish National Museum; collected with it was a brass base (with an inscribed ‘L’) of what may have been a statue of Victory, perhaps also found at Milsington. There is a local tradition of buried treasure at Pot Syke, which may be where these items were found (first recorded as ‘Milsallistoun’ in 1363, it was ‘Mylsintoun’ in 1451, ‘Milsaintoun’ in 1453, ‘Mylsintone’ in 1492, ‘melsintoun’ in 1502, ‘Mil- syntoun’ in 1553/4, ‘Mynesintoun’ in 1574 and 1640, ‘Milsingtonwe’ in 1652, ‘Milsintone’ in 1718, ‘Milsington’ in 1764 and ‘Milsintoun’ in 1717; there are many other spelling variants, including ‘Milsontoune’, etc.; it is ‘Milsingtonwe’ on a 1650 parish map and Blaeu’s 1654 map shows it as ‘N. Milsintoun’ and ‘O. Milsintoun’, while Jenner & Hollar’s c. 1644 map and Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland have it as ‘Milsintoun’ and Adair’s c. 1688 manuscript appears to show ‘Wilsington’; the name probably derives from ‘Maelsuithan’s farm’, where ‘Maealsuithan’ or ‘Myslan’ is a personal name introduced by the Norwegians from Ireland).

Milsingtonhaugh (mil-sin-toon-hawch) n. former farmstead near Milsington. It is recorded in 1790 as ‘Milsington Haug’, when John Anderson paid the cart tax there and in 1797, when Robert Oliver was farmer there.

Milsington Hill (mil-sing-tin-hil, mul-sin-toon-hil) n. hill just to the west of Milsington farm in the Borthwick valley. It has two peaks, both reaching to 263 m. The western one contains the remains of an earthwork, about 85 m across; it consists of a bank and ditch, best preserved at the south corner.

Milsingtonshankfit (mil-sin-tin-shawngk-fi’) n. former cottage in the Borthwick valley, situated at the beginning of the road to Milsington farmhouse (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Milsingtonsheil (mil-sin-toon-sheel) n. former farmstead near Milsington. It may be the same place sometimes called ‘Whaupshaw’. It is recorded in 1717 when James Hinton had a son baptised and in 1762 and 1771 when Thomas Rae was there. Farm worker John Pringle and family were there in 1841 (it is ‘Milsingtonsheiel’ in 1771).

Milestone Path (mil-, mil-stan-pawth) n. hill between Ashybank and Honeyburn on the A698, and also the name for a field and wood there. This was presumably once part of the original route between Hawick and Denholm, before the lower route was built for coaches. The oak wood was partly removed when the course of the main road was changed in the late 20th century, but was replanted.

Milton (mil-tin) n. village in Dumfries & Galloway (actually one of several with this name) off the A74 south of Moffat, built on the site of a large Roman fort established around the year 80. There is a possible military road from there to the fort near Aikwood Tower.

mint (mint) pp., poet. set out, ventured – ‘Butte Lucky Scrace’s half worried steed, He never mint the road, Till a reid hette pyke the master gatte, And gave his loone a prodde’ [JTe].

Minti (min-i, min-ti) n. Minto, a village, former estate and parish about 6 miles north-east of Hawick and 1 1/2 miles north of Denholm. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle. The village was burned in a raid about 1490. It was burned again by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545, including ‘Mynto Crag, Mynto town, Mynto place, Weast Mynto, the Crag End’. Some of the old village can still be made out, but the present one was laid out by William Playfair for the 2nd Earl of Minto in the early 19th century. The move was arranged so that the village could not be directly seen from Minto House. It contains the William Playfair 1830/1 gothic-style church, renovated in 1934, as well as the Thomas Clapperton War Memorial. Nearby is the demolished Minto House, with grounds containing the remains of an old Norman Church with an ancient burial ground, as well as an 18-hole golf course. The estate was owned by the Turnbulls from at least 1329, although at least part of the barony was granted to the Stewarts of Jedworth in 1390, and then disputed in the next century. James Langlands appears to have held half the rights to the markets there in 1476. In 1501 William Turnbull had a sasine for 2/3 of the lands, with Alexander Stewart having a sasine for the other 1/3. The half baronies were held by the Turnbulls and Stewarts until the early 17th century. John Turnbull of Minto was a significant leader of the Turnbulls in the late 17th century. In 1643 the lands owned by Turnbull of Minto were valued at £2006 13s 4d and consisted of ‘Minto, town, mains, mill, kains, with teinds and pertinents’; there was also £102 of land owned by Turnbull of Tofts and the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot, owned by Gilbert Elliott and valued at £660. In 1678 the estate of the Laird of Minto was valued at £2008 13s 4d. Craigend and Deanfoot were sold to Gilbert Elliot of Craigend in about 1640 and later combined with part of Minto, which continued to pass to Eliotts until sold by Gilbert Elliott in 1687. The rest of the lands passed to the Scotts of Harwood in 1673, then Walter Riddell from Edinburgh in 1676, briefly Thomas Rutherford and eventually the Scotts of Hard-en in 1691, with Gideon Scott of Highchester having a confirming charter for the Barony in 1695. At this time the village became a Burgh of Barony, and the existing Common is also mentioned. Markets were to be held on Wednesdays and fairs on 14th June and 14th November. The lands were sold to the Eliotts in 1703. In 1707 the whole Barony was valued at £2768 13s 4d. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls the residents listed were Robert Brown, John Dickson, William Turnbull (smith), James Oliver and (another) William Turnbull. In 1811 the ‘Barony (being the whole of the old Parish) of Minto’ was valued at about £2800; the full Parish at that time was valued at £5163. An ancient bronze axe was found nearby about 1888 and is now in the National Museum of Scotland. A spindle whorl from here is in Hawick Museum. Note that there are now several Mintos elsewhere in the world, all ultimately deriving from this small area (but many via the Earls of Minto). The village also gave rise to a surname – ‘In lines of crystal shine the wandering rills Down the green slopes of Minto’s sun-bright hills’ [JL] (the name probably derives from the Old Welsh for a hill, plus ‘how’ for a hollow, or Old English ‘hoh’, also meaning hill; it is recorded from very early times, with the ‘d’ changing to a ‘t’ by 1150, when it is ‘Munetov’ and 1166, when it is ‘Munethov’; it is thereafter ‘Mintov’, etc., with the middle ‘b’ disappearing by the end of the 14th century; it was formerly often written ‘Mynvo’; it is ‘Mynetowe’ in 1296, ‘Myntehowe’ in 1380, ‘Mentov’ in 1383, ‘Myntou’ and ‘Myntov’ in 1390, ‘Mintow’ in c.1400, ‘Myntow’ in 1461, ‘Myntto’ in 1491/2, ‘mynto’ in 1493, ‘Myneto’ in 1501 and ‘Mynto’ in 1508, 1511, 1516, 1528, 1535, 1548, 1553/4 and 1576; ‘Mintotour’, ‘Mintocraig’ and ‘Minto K.’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Minti (min’i, min-ti) n. (Minto) Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is recorded as ‘Dande Mynto’. He may have been an ancestor of later local Mintos. Andrew (b.1734) 2nd son of George and Agnes Forrest. He was a resident of Southdean Parish, perhaps a mason like his father and brother Archibald. He firstly married Janet Oliver in 1758 and secondly married (in an irregular marriage of some sort) Betty ‘Boal’ (probably Bowie) in 1776. His children included: George (b.1759); John (b.1779); Nelly (b.1781); Nanny (b.1783); Betty (b.1785); William (b.1788); Betty (b.1790); and Archibald (b.1794), who was baptised in Hobkirke. All except the last were baptised in Southdean Parish. Andrew (b.1785) born in Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Betty ‘Boal’; he was a farmer at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was ‘Fundholder & Retired Farmer’, living in Lilliesleaf village. In 1817 he married Janet Dalgelish, and she died in 1852. Their children included: Alexander (b.1818); Andrew (b.1820), born in Hawick, who was a cattle dealer; Elizabeth (b.c.1823); and John (b.c.1826). Andrew (1817–1903) son of William, he was born in Hobkirke Parish. He worked for a while as a servant at Weens. In 1861 he was a ploughman, living at Cleughhead Cottages. He was part of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. His wife was Catherine and their children included Janet, Jean, Ann and Margaret. One of his daughters married Mr. Kennedy of the Tower Hotel in Hawick. Archibald (b.1732) son of George and Agnes Forrest, was baptised in Minto Parish and was a mason in Abbotrule. In 1766 he married Margaret (or Mary) Turnbull. Their children included: Margaret (b.1767); Agnes (b.1769); Nelly (b.1774); George (1776–1860); and Robert (b.1781). In 1767 he was living at Midguard. David (17th C.) resident at Doecleuch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. David (18th C.) responsible for dealing with (i.e. moving on) crippled beggars for the Hawick Kirk Session in the early-to-mid 1700s. He could be the David, married to Janet Glendinning, whose son Walter was born in 1701. David (18th C.) recorded as ‘Dauied Mintoe’ in the Hawick Town Book of 1731. He was paid ‘for 3 lod of claye for the well, 5s. 6d. Scots’. This suggests he was either a builder or had a farm where clay could be dug. Gavin (b.1841) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Rebecca Pow. He was a blacksmith in Ashkirk, later moving to the Carlisle area. In 1861 he was at Blacklee, Hobkirk, working with blacksmith William Pow. In 1866 he married Elizabeth Telfer in Ashkirk Parish. Their children included Margaret (b.1867), William (b.1869), James Simpson (b.1872), Andrew (b.1874), Rebecca (b.c.1880), Elizabeth (b.c.1885) and Charlotte (b.c.1885). George (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He paid tax for a kiln, as well as a hearth, suggesting he was a tradesman of some sort. Although unclear, he may have been at Burnfoot in Wilton. He could be the George who married Isobel Lorraine in Ashkirk in 1688, and who had a son Thomas (b.1689) baptised in Ashkirk; the witnesses to the baptism were William Minto and Andrew Fletcher. It seems likely he was an ancestor of the George recorded in 1731. George (18th C.) mason in Hassendean, probably a descendant of the earlier George who lived in Hassendean. He was a direct ancestor of the later minister at Lilliesleaf of the same name and also of more than half of the Minto living in Roxburghshire in the 19th century. In Minto Parish in 1731 he married Agnes (b.1712), daughter of Archibald Forrest of Huntlaw. Their children included: Archibald (b.1732), who was baptised in Minto Parish and was also a mason; Andrew (b.1734), baptised in Ancrum Parish; John (b.1737), who married Margaret Scott in 1764 and may have moved away from the Borders; and twins George and William (b.1740), who may have died in infancy. Their 4 younger children were baptised in Ancrum Parish. George (18th C.) tenant farmer at Langside. In 1752 he married Barbara, daughter of Mark Chisholme and Barbara Bennet. He later lived at Rulletonhead, which had been owned by his in-laws. His children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: Markie (b.1755), named after her grandfather, who married William Bell of Menslaws; and William (b.1756), who was an officer in the Royal Marines. George (18th C.) married Isabel Sharp in Bedrule Parish in 1782. He is probably different from the George who had children in Southdean Parish (although this is unclear). William (b.1794) and Margaret (b.1796), baptised in Bedrule Parish, were probably his children. George (b.1759) son of Andrew and Janet Oliver. He is probably the George who got married in Southdean Parish in 1787 (perhaps to Mary Moscrop). Probably the same George had the following children baptised in Southdean Parish: Betty (b.1788); Janet (b.1790); and Isabella (b.1792). George (1776–1860) son of mason Archibald. He is said to have farmed Abbotrule Glebe. He may be the George, part of whose farm in Southdean Parish was owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He was great-grandfather of Rev. George of Lilliesleaf. In 1803 he married Helen Murray and their children included: Margaret (b.1803); Archibald (b.1806); Agnes (b.1807); James (b.1811); Ellison (b.c.1811); Robert (b.c.1818); Thomas (b.c.1820); and George (b.c.1827). Archibald (b.1806), baptised in Southdean Parish, may have been his son. Rev. George (1864–1947) from Greenock, he was ordained as minister of Lilliesleaf United Free Kirk in 1897 and remained until 1908. He came from a long line of local Minto’s, going back at least to his great-great-great grandfather George, who was a mason in Hassendean. 2 months after arriving in Lilliesleaf he married Eliza, daughter of Ewen Sutherland. Their children were: Marjorie (b.1898); George Walker (b.1899); Ewen Sutherland (b.1902); Archibald Herbert (b.1905); Robert Macfee (b.1908); and Kenneth Ross (b.1910). Helen (b.1793) dealer in small wares on Orrock Place. She was recorded there in 1841 and 1851, when she was a ‘Calanderer’ (i.e. presser of fabrics). Her daughter Betsy Grieve assisted her. By 1861 she was ‘Keeper of a Mangle’ on Factory Close. Henry (15th C.) had a sasine for a half merk land in Selkirk in 1454. James (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (15th C.) resident of Minto. In 1493 Walter and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole were able to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including the theft of 16 sheep from him. He was probably related to William who was also ‘in mynto’ at the same time. John (d.bef. 1502) recorded at the 1502 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Richard Davidson in Primside was convicted of commuting with his son John, who was ‘at the horn’ for his murder. His name is recorded as ‘Johannis Mynto’; it is not stated where he was from, but he could be the same as the resident of Minto. John (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He is probably the John, married to Isobel Sword, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Ashkirk in 1687. John (b.c.1816) farmworker in Castleton. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at about 29 South Hermitage Street, but by 1851 was shepherd at Broadlie Burnfoot. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Little and their children included Jean (b.c.1835), Elspeth (‘Eppy’, b.c.1837), William (b.c.1839), Margaret (b.c.1843) and Helen (b.c.1851). John (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick. The death of his infant son is recorded in 1823.

John Dalgleish (1826–1908) son of Andrew and Jane (or Janet) Dalgleish. In the 1850s he was one of 2 executors (along with Dr. Adam Elliot of Goldielands) for arranging the ‘Coutard Fund’, bequeathed by John and William Dalgleish to help the poor of Hobkirk Parish. Mrs. ?? (19th C.) of the East End Toll Bar, an early member of Allars Kirk. Robert (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigen and who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (b.1781) baptised in Southdean Parish, younger son of Archibald and Margaret Turnbull. He married Isabella Bicket and they had 3 children baptised in Bowden Parish: Janet (b.1805); Archibald (b.1806); and William Bicket (b.1812). Robert (19th C.) son of the farmer of Abbotsrule Glebe. He became a ship’s steward, voyaging across the Atlantic, but he returned to help on the farm. He married Mary Telfer (daughter of the tenant of Roundabouts), and they lived at Kelso, Whittlee Toll, Dykeraw and Wolfelee Glen. He was a handyman on Wolfelee estate before being appointed gamekeeper and moving into the new lodge there. He retired after he moved to Mackside old Toll Bar. He lived to the age of about 80, as did his wife. Their children were George, Euphemia, Ellen, Mary and Jessie (who married Robert Tinlin). Roger (12th C.) witness to a charter of Ranulph de Soulis about 1150. He is recorded as ‘of Munetov’, along with Simon his brother. In 1166 he was ‘Roger de Munethov’ when he was witness to a grant by King William to Robert de Brus. Thomas (15th C.) tenant of Minto Common. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including stealing a black ox from him. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Janet (b.1726), William (b.1730), Agnes (b.1732), John (b.1734) and Thomas (b.1738). Thomas (19th C.) coach driver who was an early member of Allars Kirk. He is described as a ‘chaise driver’ in 1829, when one of his children died. Walter (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He may be related to James, who is also listed. Walter (17th C.) listed at Highchests on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He paid tax for 3 hearths, suggesting he was either a significant tenant or a tradesman of some sort. William of Minto (15th C.) notary in 1431 for the ‘instrument’ transferring the lands of Heap between the Langlands and the Scotts. He is recorded as ‘Willelmus de Myntow presbyter Glasguensis diocesis’.

William (15th C.) resident of Minto. In 1493 Walter and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole were able to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including the theft of a cow from him. He was probably related to John who was also ‘in mynto’ at the same time. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Agnes Scott in 1726 and his son William was baptised in 1727. Lt.-Col. William (1756–1827) born at Ruletownhead, son of George and Barbara Chisholme, he was christened in Southdean Parish. He served in the Royal Marine Artillery. Joining as a Lieutenant in 1779, he became Captain in 1796 and Major in 1801. He was wounded 3 separate times, once in 1783 while fighting the French frigate Sybille on board the British Magicienne, and another time in 1801 when in a battalion attached to the Army at Aboukir in Egypt. He later served in the Royal Marines Artillery and retired in 1826. In 1812 he married Grace Little, but they had no children. William (b.1788) born in Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Betty ‘Boal’. He was a mason living at Forkins in the 1841 to 1861 censuses. In 1815 he married Janet Oliver (from Castleton) and their children included: George (b.1819); Betty (b.1822); Jessy (b.1824); John (b.1827); Helen (b.1829); Archibald (b.1831); Robert (b.1833); Margaret...

(b.1835); Peter (b.1837); Agnes (b.1840); and James (b.1840). Andrew (b.1817), who worked at Weens and was ploughman at Cleughhead Cottages, was probably also his son. William (b.c.1801) born in Southdean Parish, he was a labourer living at Doorpool in 1841, Birneyknowe in 1851 and Cleughhead Cottages in 1861. He was surely related to the mason of the same name, who was his near neighbour, as well as Andrew, who also lived at Cleughhead. His wife was Mary and their children included Margaret, Agnes, Archibald, James, Robert Robina and Janet. He was already widowed by 1861. He may be the William, son of Agnes (or Nanny), baptised in Southdean Parish in 1802. William (b.1812) born in Castleton, son of William and Margaret Elliot. In 1841 and 1851 he was a labourer living at Borthaugh Cottages. In 1861 he was ‘General Servant Ploughman’, living at Highchester Cottage in Roberton Parish. He married Rebecca Pow and their children included: William (b.1835); Andrew (b.1838); Gavin (b.1841); Mary (b.1843); William Bruce (b.c.1845); George (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); and James O. (b.1853). William (b.c.1815) born in Southdean Parish, he was a farm labourer. In 1851 he was visiting William Scott, farm servant at Silverbuthall. William (b.1834/5) from Langholm, he was blacksmith at Hewbridge in Castleton Parish in 1861. He was recorded as resident at Steele Road in 1868. His wife was Jessie. William (19th C.) elder of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk in the latter part of the 19th century. William (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a cab business on Oliver Crescent around 1900. He married Ellen, daughter of James Grieve, tailor at Bonchester Bridge.

Minti Bank (min’i-bangk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish that were part of Deanfoot. It probably corresponds to the place labelled ‘Deanfoot Bank’ on modern maps (it is ‘Mintobank’ in 1780).

Minti Brae (min’i-brā) n. name sometimes used for the road north of Denholm leading to Minto, particularly the part across the river. There was a saw mill here in the 19th century.

Minti Cleuchheid (min’i-kloozech heed) n. Minto Cleuchhead, farmstead recorded in the early 18th century when it was farmed by the Turnbuls. The house there was a home of the Earl of Minto’s family in the 20th century (also written ‘Cleughhead’ etc.).

Minti Cragfit (min’i-krawg-fi’) n. Minto Cragfoot, former name for an area at the foot of the Crags. A story is told (in the 1820 Edinburgh Magazine and repeated in 1914 in ‘Highways and Byways in the Border’) of a mother from here having her infant swapped for a changeling by the fairies. The minister of Bedrule (Rev. Borland) was called and administered a brew of boiled foxgloves (i.e. digitalis!) to the infant, and locked it in a barn for the night, after which it apparently returned to be ‘as healthy and cheerful as it formerly was’.

Minti Crags (min’i-krawgz) n. Minto Crags, a prominent rocky outcrop overlooking the Teviot valley, just north-east of Minto village. The crags can be seen in a sketch of 1790, before the plantations of the 1st Earl of Minto covered them. They reach 224 m (729 ft) and have Fatlips Castle perched on the steep side, and Barnhills Bed below. Additionally there is some evidence for a fort in the region to the north and north-west of Fatlips; the ramparts were probably built to take advantage of the natural rock outcrops, and have been partly obliterated by quarrying and planting – ‘On Minto-crags the moonbeams glint, Where Barnhill hew’d his bed of flint’ [SWS], ‘...aith the fer seide o Teiot’s floory vale, Mintih Craigs (haapeet an roved in their leafy maud) brent raise ther skerrs’ [ECS] (also sometimes ‘Craigs’).

Minti Craig see min’i-krāg n. former fortified house at Minto. ‘Mynto Crag’ was burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. In 1550 it is listed as the limit of the half of the Middle Marches to which Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Warden. The farm there was known by the same name and owned by the Turnbuls in the 17th century. It may be the same as the place called ‘Minti Craigend’ and was formerly part of the farm of Minto Mill (it is labelled to the east of Minto Kirk, on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Mynto Crage’ in 1550 and ‘the Crage of Mynto’ in 1656)

Minti Craigend see min’i-krāg-end n. former name for a farmstead near Minto Crags, and also called simply Craigend. Note that the lands called ‘Minti Craig’ were probably adjacent, but distinct. Gilbert and William Johnstone, Simon Leitch, Margaret Ord and Thomas Young were there in 1502. Thomas Porteous leased the lands in 1686. Patrick Bowie, Thomas Brown, William Cunningham, John Haliburton, Robert Minto, Walter Renwick, John Stavert, Thomas Wilkie and Robert Young were there in 1694

Minti East Ludge

Minti East Ludge (min’i-eest-huj) n. former lodge house for Minto estate, situated to the south of Minto Crags.

Minti Gaerdens (min’i-gärd-dinz) n. road in Denholm off the Canongate, with private housing built in the 1970s.

Minti Glen (min’i-glen) n. narrow valley around a stream passing from Minto to the Teviot, and also the name of a farm there. The glen was once laid out with walks, as part of the Minto estate and contained many planted trees, including some of the first larches to be imported into Scotland. The small lake near its head was artificially created in 1735 as part of the landscaping for Minto House.

Minti Golf Club (min’i-gölf-klub) n. golf club that runs a course near Minto village, established in 1928. It is the closest course other than the Ritz and is 5,393 yards, par 69.

Minti Hills (min’i-hilz) n. Minto Hills, better known as the the Mintis, which are easily seen from points around Hawick. The southern peak reaches a height of 276 m (905 ft), with a triangulation pillar on top, while the northern hill is 253 m (837 ft) and topped by a cairn. This was also the name of a farm, which is recorded in 1779 being valued at £365 2d. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 it was owned by Lord Minto and liferented by the late Lord Westhall – ‘While the Minto Hills in their verdure seen Seem reflecting the light frae their mantle green’ [TC], ‘Now, the ‘ern-horse’ rins roond ahint the Mintih Hills …’[ECS] (the word ‘Minto’ probably derives from the Old Welsh for hill, ‘mynydd’ together with the Old English for hill, ‘hoh’, and hence ‘Minto Hills’ means the same thing thrice!).

Minti Hoose (min’i-hoos) n. Minto House, former seat of the Elliots of Minto for 2 centuries. Existing from the 16th century, the house was charged for having 8 hearths in 1694, and 46 windows in 1748. It was substantially remodelled 1738–43 to a V-plan by William Adam, and essentially completed in 1809–14 by Archibald Elliot (from Anerum). The ‘Lands round Minto House’ were valued at £72 17s 6d in 1788 and in 1811 (with the garden and nursery, and several other pieces of land listed separately). The house was altered again in 1837 by William Playfair and terraced gardens were landscaped by Sir Robert Lorimer in the period 1894–1906. In the early 19th century the village was moved so that it could not be seen from the windows of the mansion; the exact choice of location for the house has been considered puzzling, and may have been related to this. It was 4 storeys in height and the top floor contained a sort of museum, showing artefacts related to the family. A watercolour sketch of the house exists from 1792. After being abandoned by the Elliot family, the house was used in the War effort, then rented to serve as the location of a private girl’s school, Craigmount School from 1952 until 1962. The school then purchased the house, but went into liquidation in 1966 and the house became derelict. In 1972 Viscount Melgund (later Earl of Minto) outbid another purchaser and immediately applied for permission to demolish this listed building, which was finally given by the County Council. It was partially demolished in 1973, becoming a roofless shell, and there followed lengthy debate about its fate. There was a plan in 1991 to dismantle the remaining walls and ship them to Japan, stone by stone, although costs proved prohibitive. Demolition re-started in 1992, including burning of internal timbers, despite being relisted category ‘A’, and there is now little left. This episode is sometimes referred to as the ‘Minto Debacle’, and influenced subsequent policies on preserving historical buildings in Scotland. The grounds contain the remains of a Norman church and burial enclosure, as well as the golf course. There were other buildings associated with the mansion and school, including a residential building, stable (later gymnasium), cottage (used for laundry) and dairy.

Minti Kames (min’i-känz) n. Minto Kames, farm just north of the Minto Hills, adjacent to the old railway line. It is probably the ‘Place of Camys’ referred to in 1502, when Peter Turnbull and other Turnbull outlaws were accused of stealing oxen, cows, horses and mares from John Grahamslaw there. John Young ‘in the Cames’ in Minto Parish was hanged for murder in 1580. David Davidson ‘of the Kaims’ was recorded in 1601 when he was maimed in Jedburgh in a fight than was part of the feud between the Turnbuls of the Minto area and the Kers. ‘Kaimes and Minto hills’ were owned by Scott of Harden and farmed by William Mather in the late 17th century. In 1779 the lands were part of the Minto estate, valued at £219 2d and liferented by Sir John Dalrymple. The farm was owned by Lord Minto according to the 1811 Land Tax Roll. John Thorburn was farmer there in 1797 when he had 12 horses. John Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and David Brockie in 1861. Crop marks visible from the air in a field to the north-west may be old boundaries and rig lines. There is a bridge to the farm, over the former railway line, another over the line near Kames North Loch, and one more for a track to the south. To the north-west of Kames South Loch is a field with signs of an ancient enclosure (it is 'Kamys' in 1576, 'the Kamis' in 1601 and 'Kaimis' in 1811; probably the same place is marked 'Keems' and 'Kenmer' on Blaeu's 1654 maps, and although not exactly in the right location this appears to be a transcription error from Blaeu's 1590s manuscript that shows 'M. Keams.'; it is written 'Kaines' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; see also Kames Moss).

Minti Kirk (min'-i-kirk) n. Minto Parish Church, the present one replacing a much earlier building, dating back to at least 1275. This is when the Rectory is listed on Bagimont's Roll, with a value of 4 s. 4 d. The remains of this Norman Church, on the grounds of the Minto estate, contain a burial enclosure with some ancient stones and a set of iron neck-rings set in the doorway. There are many gravestones from the 17th and 18th centuries, and part of a child's stone coffin, probably from the 13th or 14th century. ‘Serlo’ was parson there when he witnessed a grant by daughter of the Baron of Minto in about the period 1230–60. William Woodburn may have been a Parson there who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The church was mentioned in ratifications of other churches being connected to Melrose Abbey in 1315. There is a curious charter of Edward III in 1374, which states that the church was then in the diocese of Lincoln. The old church was demolished in 1831, and it is said that at that time a collection of about 400 small silver coins (from the 13th and 14th century) were discovered. The current Gothic-style church was constructed 1830–31 by William Playfair, and built on the road through the village. When built, there was a private gallery for the family of the Earl of Minto. It has a square tower, contains an organ presented by the Countess of Minto in 1889–92. Minti Kirk (min'-i-kirk) n. Minti Mill (min'-i-mil) n. former farm near Minto, site of the local corn mill. William Brown was tenant there in 1684. This was an earlier name for lands that were included in 1779 along with Craigend in the part of Minto liferented to Sir John Stewart of Allanshaws. It is possible that this was essentially the same location as the earlier farm of Minto Mill. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists ‘Mill Banks’, ‘Mill Haugh’ and related lands lying near to Craigenhead.

Minti Muir Parks (min’i-newr-pawrks) n. former name for a set of lands in Minto Parish. In 1779 they were lferented to Sir John Dalrymple when valued at £127 15s 1d. They were listed separately from Minto Muir and described as ‘four inclosures’ bounded by the farm of Minto Hills, the road from Hassendean to Troweyhill, the road from Lilliesleaf to Jedburgh, the lands of Crowsmoss and Walrigpark, the road from Hawick to St. Boswell’s, the farm of Newlands and the lands of Hassendean. In 1811 the lands were owned by Lord Minto.

Minti North Lodge (min’i-north-luj) n. former lodge house for Minto estate, situated at a turn in the road, between Hillend and Standhill. The adjacent plantation is called the North Lodge Strip. One roofed building, an unroofed building and an enclosure are marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Minti Pairish (min’i-pa-reesh) n. small parish of Minto, consisting of the villages of Minto and Hassendean and adjacent areas, being bordered by Lilliesleaf, Ancrum, Bedrule, Cavers and Wilton Parishes and part of Selkirkshire. It once coincided with the boundaries of the Barony of Minto, but later included a large part of the suppressed parish of Hassendean. The topography is dominated by the Minto Hills and Minto Crags. In 1643 the lands were valued at £2768 13s 4d and there were only 5 owners: John Turnbull, William Turnbull and Elizabeth Elliot for Minto; Turnbull of Tofts; and Gilbert Elliot for Craigenhead and Deanfoot. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £2400. In 1663 the land tax on more than £2100 was paid by the Laird of Minto (probably still John Turnbull) and £660 by Gilbert Elliot. The value was the same in 1688, when the entire Parish was owned by 2 Gilbert Elliots, one being the Laird of Minto and the other the Laird of Craigenhead. In the mid-19th century the parish had a reputation for having no paupers, no toll-bars and no public houses. In 1838 the minister wrote that education was eroding the local language and that ‘it is not improbable, that, ere long, the ancient dialect of the district, which has several interesting peculiarities, may become, in a great measure, extinct.’ The existing parish registers begin in 1703, and are fairly complete for births. However, no register of deaths was kept until more recent times, and marriages were only recorded through the reading of the banns.

Minti Place (min’i-plis) n. Minto Place, a street in the Wellogate on the opposite side of the street from Glebe View. It was built in 1875 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company and named after Gilbert John Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 4th Earl of Minto. The upper houses were originally named Glebe Terrace until 1882.

the Minti Road (th-min’i-rød) n. street in Denholm leading out of the village towards Minto, being part of the B6405.

the Mintis (thu-min’i-is, min-tiz) n. the Minto Hills, twin hills near Minto, a distinctive feature of the landscape north-east of Hawick. The hills are formed of igneous rocks, like many of the higher peaks in the area; it is believed that they are the eroded remains of a paired volcanic vent. The southern hill has a triangulation marker and reaches 276 m, the other reaches 253 m and is topped by a cairn. The summit of the southern hill has the faint remains of a former fort, about 120 m by 75 m in size, with an entrance on the west side. The cairn on the summit of the north hill is about 10 m in diameter, flat-topped, and has some large kerb-stones around it. Around the lower slopes of the hills are extensive remains of rig, terraces and other signs of earlier cultivation – ‘The scenes round Denholm, they are rich indeed; With Minto hills and crags what can compare? And Ruberslaw, whose high majestic head Towers upward, like the lark, till lost in air’ [TCh] (see also Minti Hills).

Minti Schuil (min’i-skil) n. schoolhouse in Minto, serving the surrounding area. It was probably established in the early 17th century. John Davidson was recorded as schoolmaster there in 1616 and James Larmouth in 1624 and 1625. Walter Elliot was schoolmaster there in the 1720s and early 1730s. A Mr. Watson was master until about 1784 and George Scott from around then until the 1820s. They were followed by William Grant, who gave the school a strong reputation, with several students boarding there from outside the Parish. Mr. Wylie took over as schoolmaster about 1840 and John R. Hamilton was teacher in the 1850s and 60s. The teacher normally served as Clerk to the Heritors and Session Clerk for the Parish. In the early 19th century there was also a small school teaching younger children and instructing girls in sewing. The Borders Archive has School Board documents for 1873–1916, registers for 1915–63 and log books for 1874–1963.
the Minti Stakes (th-min’-i-stāks) n. former Friday Common Riding race, started at least as early as the 1880s.

the Minti Stane (th-min’-i-stān) n. inscribed stone on the Minto estate, coming near from the town of Melang in East Java, also called the Sanguuran Stone. It was carved in the year 982, and carries a long inscription to the Javanese King Sri Maharaja Rakai Pangkaja Dyah Wawa Sri Wijayalokanamottungga. It was collected in 1812 by Sir Stamford Raffles and given as a gift to Lord Minto, who had it sent to his home in Scotland.

Minti Toon (min’-i-toon) n. former name for an area in Minto Parish, presumably around the old home farm of the Baron. It is listed among the lands of ‘Minto Townhead’ that were liferented by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779.

Minti Toonheid (min’-i-toon-heed) n. farm at the northern end of Minto village. In the early 19th century it was farmed by the Turnbulls, with William Turnbull there in the 1860s. Robert Watson was farmer in the early 20th century. In 1779 Rev. William Elliot (brother of the Laird of Minto) was granted liferent of these lands. They are described as consisting of South Croft, North Croft, Quicksands Park, Notman’s Shot, Langlands, Templecrofts, Howden, Whitfield, West South Croft, Minto Town and the green of Minto, ‘which pieces of ground were some time ago known by the name of Minto Townhead’.

The lands were valued at £461 1s 10d. The boundaries of the lands were the Minto-to-Hawick road, Minto Glebe, the march ‘which runs through Howden syke’, the foot of Minto Hill, Hildens Park, Towledge Park, Cow Park and the lawn around Minto House.

Minti Toor (min’-i-toor, -tow-ur) n. another name for Fatlips Castle.

Minti West Ludge (min’-i-west-luj) n. former lodge house for the Minto estate, situated south of the village, by the modern entrance to the golf club.

Miss Riddle’s (mis-reedz) n. popular name for a room on the High Street used by several local societies (e.g. the Eclectic Club and the Juvenile Total Abstinence Society) in the latter part of the 19th century. This may have been the same as Ellen Riddle’s at 24 High Street.

Miss Yersel (mis-yur-sel) v. to miss partaking in some pleasure by not being present – ‘ee really missed yersel last night, oo hed the grandest sing-song efter ee left’.

Mist (mist) contr., arch. miss it, missed it, failed – ‘. . . We’s fiddle their faggins’ spirits fir’d, Or e’er they wist; Gi’ every taste what they desir’d, He never mist’ [CPM].

Mistaen (mis-täen) pp., arch. mistaken (see taen).

Mistaken (mis-tä-kin) pp., arch. overcome, under the influence – ‘The said John at first refused that he was in Drink but afterwards confessed (as he expressed it) he was mistaken with Drink’ [PR1724] (also mistaen).

Mistle (mist-le) adj., arch. alone, missing a companion, bewildered on a road, dreary (noted by J. Jamieson).

Mistress (mis-tris) n., arch. Mrs., respectful term for an older woman – ‘is the mistresse o the hoose hyin?’ (note the full pronunciation was once common, unlike in the English mi-sus).

Mistryst (mis-trist) v., arch. to fail to keep an appointment.

Mitchel (mi-chul) n. Hugh (18th/19th C.) wood merchant of Fisherrow (Musselburgh), who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1813. He was probably the ‘Hugh Mitchell, Burntisland’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Liddel Bank in 1797, when he was working for William Oliver. Robert 'Bob' (b.1780/1) Hawick's first milkman, operating from Southfield, formerly ostler of the Tower Hotel. On one famous occasion, in a snowstorm in 1831, he brought back the Carlisle mail on foot after abandoning his horse at Teviothead (also Mitchell).

Mitchell (mi-chul) n. Alexander (b.1828/9) born in Selkirk, he was a butcher on Silver Street. He is listed on Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 4 Silver Street and in 1861 he was on the Round Close. Probably the same Alexander was President of the Common Riding (Race) Committee in 1856, when the Cornet elected by the Council refused to accept the offer. He married Margaret Laidlaw. Their children included: Isabella (b.c.1851); Violet (b.c.1853); William (b.1856); Agnes (b.1859); Margaret Anderson (b.1860); Alexander (b.1862); and Janet Laidlaw (b.1864). Andrew (19th C.) tailor on the Howegate, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. Charles (19th C.) listed as miller at New Mill on Slitrig in Slater's 1852 directory. George (d.1957) Director of Pringle's of Scotland from 1937. Henry (b.1825/6) son of tailor James, he himself was a tailor at 8 Howegate. He was at 8 Howegate in 1861 until at least 1881. He married Anne Millington and their children included Anne, Margaret, James, Thomas, Henry (b.1856), Robert (b.1858), Mary (b.1860), David (b.1864), Agnes (b.1863), George (b.1867), Agnes (again, b.1870) and George (again, b.1872). James (c.1785–1850) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. He married Ann Murray (b.1788) in Wilton in 1805. In 1841 he was living on the High Street (about No. 12) with his wife and 3 children. He must have been deceased by 1851, when his wife was living with his son. His children were: Ann (b.c.1820); Henry (b.1825/6), a tailor on the Howegate; and James (b.1830), who emigrated to Canada. He could be the James, son of William, born in Cavers Parish in 1785. James (18th/19th C.) listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory as running an eating house on the Howegate. James (1830–1914) born in Hawick, son of High Street tailor James. He was employed as a weaver, and still living with his brother and mother on the Howegate in 1851. He emigrated to Canada in 1854, arriving in Galt, then moving to Guelph before moving to Manitoba, settling in Arrow River in 1882. He homesteaded, also serving as ferryman across the Assiniboine River. He invented a new kind of lifeboat, patented in 1898 and exhibited in Europe in 1909 (when he also returned for a visit to Hawick). He married Janet Bell Waugh (1836–1920), who came from Moffat and they had several children. John (1810/11–81) real name of the man who inspired 'Heather Jock' in the song 'Kinly Stick'. He was a native of Hexham, who came to Hawick at age 16; it is said that he walked all the way in order to find work. He was well known in Town for the next 50 years. He was a wrestler and runner in his youth. He worked in the hosiery industry, but mainly made a living at poaching, as well as by gathering cresses, labouring, etc. He was also in the Grenadier Guards for a while, but deserted. In 1841 he was living at 4 Silver Street, then around Punch Bowl Close in 1851, and is listed as a railway labourer on Dickson Street. He was living at 9 Kirk Wynd in 1871. It seems that he became a wanderer, collecting moss and sleeping rough (hence his nickname). Adie Ingle suggests that he may have spent some time in Australia, and returned whistling the tune of 'Click Go the Shears', but there is no evidence to support this. In 1874 he was rescued from the Teviot 'having been inbibing of his favourite beverage rather freely. In 1841 he married Elizabeth Lamb in Hawick. Their children included Adam, Janet, Benjamin, John and James. He died of tetanus in Jethart Jail – 'Crane-like he watched the purling streams, And for a crust would gather bones; Of statute laws he's broken more Than ere he broke of hard whin stones' [TCh]. Peter (17th/18th C.) mason in Hawick. He witnessed a birth in 1705 and in the same year married Agnes Guild. Their children included Adam, Janet, Benjamin, John and James. He died of tetanus in Jethart Jail – 'Crane-like he watched the purling streams, And for a crust would gather bones; Of statute laws he's broken more Than ere he broke of hard whin stones' [TCh]. Robert (1826–93) from Auchterarder, he came to Hawick as a guest preacher at the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Church towards the end of 1849, a few weeks later accepted the 'call' to the church, and was inducted early in 1850. He preached 3 sermons every Sunday, as well as in the open air on street corners and around the countryside. He also carried out a vigorous correspondence about evangelism in the Hawick Advertiser. He turned down one call to another church, but left suddenly in 1864 to become assistant to Dr. Morrison at Dundas Street Church, Glasgow. He was later minister at Queen’s Park, Manchester, St. John’s Wood Terrace, Middlesex, Chorton-cum-Hardy, Lancashire, Elgin Brook, Hertfordshire and Nelson Street, Greenock. Robert (1848–1928) born in Kinross, Perthshire, he spent his early years in Gala, ran away from home at age 14 and was a glazier's apprentice in Edinburgh. He began a glaziers business in Hawick in about 1873, and certainly by 1875: this would become the longest established glazing business in Scotland. He was a Councillor for North High Street Ward from 1884, was a Magistrate for 9 years, Provost 1896–1902, and returned to the Council 1919–23. He was also appointed Honorary Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire. His Provostship saw the erection of the Public Library, re-laying of the pavements and the letting of the Haugh as a show-ground at the Common Riding. He was an early advocate for electric lighting, Chairman of the Hawick School Board and a Common Riding supporter. Liberal in politics, he was a Mason and an Orrock Church elder. His business on Oliver Crescent can be seen in a photograph from the early 1900s. The glazing business was continued by his son Alexander. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery (also Mitchel).

Mitchellhill (mi-chul-hil) n. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Nancy Harkness. Their son Thomas was baptised in 1747. He may be the Alexander recorded as owner of 2 work horses, along with George, in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the deceased Alexander whose son George died in 1822, aged 76. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (b.1771) son of George and Margaret Noble. He was a local character of the early 1800s, described as ‘the smuggler’, possibly the local labourer who died in 1850. A story is told about him and his father (or possibly an Alexander Mitchell, rather than Mitchellhill), resting in a hay-loft near the Carter Bar Toll. They hid their smuggled gin when they saw the excisemen coming, but then in the dark fought with each other, his father biting his leg, saying ‘A’ve left the marks o’ ma teeth on yin o’ their legs at ony rate!’ and him replying ‘It was me ye hate, faither! Was aw no guigame no te squeel?’ He is recorded on the Fore Raw in 1841, along with wife Agnes. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: George (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax roll in Hawick in 1791. He was listed in Hawick along with Alexander as owners of 2 work horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the George who married Margaret Noble (who died in 1808) and whose children included: Alexander (b.1771); James (b.1773); and Mary (b.1777). He is probably the George, son of the deceased Alexander, who died in 1822, aged 76. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably closely related to Robert, who also subscribed. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. 2 unnamed children of his died in 1810. James (b.1809) son of Thomas and Janet Thomson. He was innkeeper of the Black Bull on North Hermitage Street in Newcastleton in 1851, living with his sister Jane and brother Andrew. He was also listed there in 1852. Jane (b.1815) daughter of Thomas and Janet Thomson and brother of James. She married William Nichol, but was already a widow by 1851. She had children Mary Anne, Thomas and Betty. She was living with her innkeeper brother on North Hermitage Street in Newcastleton in 1951, but by 1861 was innkeeper herself. Her inn was at about 45 North Hermitage Street, and called the Black Bull. Jenny (18th/19th C.) recorded in the story of the disputed Common Riding of 1809. A bucketful of material from her byre was used to pelt Captain Campbell and others of the ‘royalist’ party as they rode up the Loan. She was presumably the wife of a man with fields up the Loan. John (16th C.) notary in 1528 to an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, signed at Selkirk. Other witnesses included the Vicars of Selkirk and Hawick. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (18th C.) resident at Bothwickbrae Burnfoot in 1764 when his son James was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children were Isobel (b.1755), William (b.1757), Robert (b.1759), Thomas (b.1761) and John (b.1766). Robert (1782/3–1858) from Selkirk, he was a farmer and carter in Newcastleton. He was probably the Mitchellhill listed as ‘R., Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a carter in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Douglas Square. He emigrated to Galt, Ontario, where he died. He married Margaret Murray, who died in 1882, aged
Mitchell’s Ford

Mary (b.1831); Isabel (b.1834/5); Robert (b.c.1836); William (b.1837/8); and Agnes (b.1840/1). Thomas (d.bef. 1841) proprietor of the Black Bull in Newcastleton in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was also listed as an innkeeper in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835. He married Janet Thomson and their children included: James (b.1809); Mary (b.1811); William (b.c.1812), a farm labourer; Jane (b.1815), who married William Nichol and later ran the inn; and Andrew (b.c.1820), who was running the inn in 1841.

William (18th/19th C.) working man from the Newmill area, who set up a Sunday School there along with James Ruickbie. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish to Wilton in 1690.

Mitchell’s Hole see Mitchell’s Slack

Mitchell’s Slack (mi-chulz-slawk) n. former name of a hollow near Southfield, said to be a place where Covenanters held secret sermons in the 17th century. It is also known as ‘Mitchell’s Hole’. The name is said to have been given to commemorate Covenanters James Mitchell (even although there was no direct connection to him), who tried to assassinate Archbishop Sharp in 1668, and was executed in 1678.

Mitchels (mi-chulz) n. former farm, possibly near Briery-yards. It is recorded (as ‘Mitchels’) among the lands transferred from Hassendean Parish to Wilton in 1690.

Mitchell’s (mi-chulz) n. former carrier’s business. In the early 19th century they travelled twice a week, both ways, between Hawick and Carlisle.

Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Andrew Michelson’, when David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirlings had a remission for a raid on lands at Blackhall (or Blackhaugh) tenanted by him and John ‘Spedane’. It is unclear whether this was in Rulewater or Ewesdale or elsewhere. George (17th C.) tenant at Sorbietrees in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records.

Rev. James (d.1625) brother of John of Middleton, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1605 and became minister at Hassendean in 1611. He was translated to Bathans (Yester) in 1613 and was a member of the Assembly in 1618. He married Euphiam Borthwick (who died in 1627) and their children were John, Margaret, William and James. James (17th C.) joint tenant with David Goldie of the farms of Ettleton and Millholm in Liddesdale in 1632. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as resident of the lands of Castleton. Thomas (d.bef. 1696) probably farmer in the lower Borthwick valley. In 1696 his widow, a Riddell whose first name is not given, was renting half of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch. Her cautioner was Robert Scott (also farmer at Wiltonburn), suggesting a close relationship. Note that in 1694 1/3 of Wiltonburn was being rented by Bessie Scott, widow of James Riddell, who seems likely to have been related to his wife. William (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694 (also spelled ‘Michelson’, ‘Mitchelson’ and ‘Mitchelosome’).

Modrell (mod-rell) n. Mungo (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Hassendeanbank. His surname could be a transcription error for some more familiar name.

Moffat (mo-fī) n. town about 40 miles to the west of Hawick, in the south-eastern part of Dumfries & Galloway. Receiving Burgh of Barony status only in 1648, it developed as a market town on the main west-coast routes to Glasgow and Edinburgh. Centrepiece of the town is the magnificent Moffat Ram statue. The nearby sulphurous spring was popular for its purported health benefits in the 18th and 19th centuries. Population 2,342 (1991) – ‘Tweed Moffat hills and lofty Cheviot’ [JH].

Moffat (mo-fi) n. Adam (17th C.) piper who was rebuked by Ashkirk Session in 1638 for ‘pyping at bridals’. He was ordered to appear at the Kirk door wrapped in sheets, with bare feet and legs, and ‘efer the pepil wes in, to go to the place of repentance, and so to continue Sabbathlie in-during their wills’. Arthur (b.1803/4) from Tundergarth, he was farmer at Leilhaugh Cottage in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he is recorded there as farmer of 6 acres. His wife was Janet and their children included Jane, Walter, Janet, Margaret,
Moffat Well

James and Helen Agnes. George (18th C.) listed as footman at Synton in 1792, when he was working for Charles Riddell. James (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when the Coroner, William Cranston, was fined for failing to arrest him. His name is given as ‘Jacobo mossett’ in Holydean or Nisbet. James (17th C.) leased part of the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1693. James (1720/1–1779) son of James, from whom he took over as tenant of Howpasley farm. In 1744 he moved to Garwald in Dumfriesshire, rented from the Duke of Buccleuch. He also farmed at Meikleholm for a while. He married Margaret Borthwick (1732/3–1806). His children included: John (1772–1823), who took over as farmer at Garwald; William (1773–1847), who farmed at Mosspeeble and Craik; and Margaret (1762/3–1855), who married Rev. Dr. William Brown of Eskdalemuir, and died in Hawick. James (1811–76) elder son of William. He and his brother James helped their father farm at Craik, as well as Garwald over in Dumfriesshire. John (1677/8–1728) tenant at Howpasley. He was said to be descended from Thomas, who received a grant of lands in Meggat in the 14th century. He married Helen Borthwick (1677/8–1754). He was succeeded at Howpasley by his son James (1720/1–79) and had 7 other children, including Janet, Mary and Euphemia (1708/9–97). He was buried at Watcarwick Churchyard. John (1813–82) son of William. He helped his father and brother James farm at Craik and Garwald. He was still tenant farmer at Craik in the 1870s. He married Anne Laidlaw (d.1915) and their children included: William (1864–1932); James (d.1941), who married Janet Robina Brydon; and Anne (d.1953). John (1859) born at Old Hopsrig, Westerkirk, in 1859 he married Elizabeth McInnes. Their children included: John (b.1883), born in Canonbie; Mary (b.1889), born in Hawick; Peter (1890–1968), born at Branhholme Park; Janet (b.1892), born at Branhholme Park; and Margaret (b.1894), born in Hawick. His wife may be the Elizabeth McInnes who wrote the poem ‘A Legend of Hawick’. Nicholas (d.1270) Archdeacon of Teviotdale in the period 1245–70, referred to as being ‘de Moffat’. He witnessed a charter for Soutra Hospital in 1255. He was bishop-elect of Glasgow twice, the first time (1259) travelling to Rome, but failing to be consecrated (probably because of political infighting among his travelling companions) and the second time (1268–70) because he died before consecration. He was buried at Tyningham, East Lothian. Robert of Hermiston (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear where he came from, or how long he owned these local lands. William (1773–1847) son of James, tenant farmer at Garwald in Dumfriesshire, and formerly at Howpasley. He became tenant at Mosspeebble in 1800 and then Craik in 1817. He was joint tenant there with his sons John and James from 1833. In addition he ran the farm at Garwald after the death of his older brother John in 1823. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jane Grieve. His sons James (1811–76) and John (1813–82) continued to farm after him. He also had 1 other son and 6 daughters. William (1864–1932) born at Craik farm, he took over Garwald when he reached the age of 21. He became known as a sheep judge, as well as a pursuer of country sports. In 1911 he bought the farm of Georgefield and Glendinning, and later purchased the farm of Garwald, which the family had long tenanted. He married Alison Gray and their children included: John (b.1892), who sold Georgefield and Glendinning in 1947; Mary; Anne; and Alexander Gray (b.1905), who sold Garwald in 1950.

Moffat Well (mo-fi’-wel) n. sulphurous spring near Moffat, once believed to have healing powers. There are notices in Hawick’s 18th century parish records of disbursements to help sick people travel there. It was discovered in 1633 and access improved in 1758. It was a draw for visitors until the 1920s.

moggans (mo-ginz) n., pl., arch. the legs (noted by J. Jamieson).

Moinnet (moi-net) n. James (15th C.) witness to the charter of 1494 in which James of Kirkurd granted the lands of Galalaw to his son David. It is unclear whether his surname has a modern equivalent.

moistify (moi-sti-fl) v., poet. to moisten – ‘A whisky soss To moistify your middle’ [JR].

mole-catcher (möl-kaw-chur) n., arch. someone earning their living from catching moles. From mediaval times until the mid-20th century this was a common occupation in rural areas. There were at least a couple employed in Denholm alone around 1900.

mole-heid (möl-heed) n., arch. a mole-head, doit, stupid person – ‘Dogsrabbit it, what’s keepit ye, ye lazy moleheid?’ [WNK], ‘Hae dune, ye molehead, Wilton Kirk’s comin’ over Teiot Brig’ [RM].

Molle (mol) n. horse owned by William Nixon, and rode by him when he was Cornet in 1813. It was also known as ‘Molly’. In later years it was often seen with Nixon’s groom, Willie Bulloch, who doted over it. The pair were painted together by Adam Brown.

Molle (mol, mow) n. former parish, forming what is now the southernmost part of Morebattle, which was united with Morebattle in the 17th century. It was owned by Eschina de Londonis (or de Molle) in the mid-12th century, and part of it was gifted to Kelso Abbey around 1190. Some of the lands there were also held by the Lovel family. The lands were also briefly owned by Adam of Rule, through his wife Johanna. They later passed to the Kers. Liulf, son of Uchtred, Lord of Mow, was a witness to the charter of about 1120 founding Selkirk Abbey. The Molle family married into the families of Avenel, Maleverer, de Lincoln, de Vesci, Scott and others, and tracing their lineage is difficult. The names Mow Hope, Mow Kirk (granted before 1152 to Kelso Abbey by Uchtred son of Liulf) and Mow Stell are lost, but it survives in Mowhaugh on the Bowmont Water. Members of the eponymous family crop up in local documents, e.g. ‘William Mow in Mowmaynis’ was part of inquest for lands in Rulewater in 1610 (also spelled ‘Mow’ and variants); the name probably comes from the Old Welsh ‘mael’ for ‘bare hill’, and is first recorded in the mid-12th century.

Molle (mol) n. Anselm (12th C.) formerly of Whitton, he gained part of the lands at Molle, granted in a charter during the reign of William I (probably 1170–90), which was witnessed by Roger, son of ‘John de Hawic’, as well as Robert of Wilton and Adam of Ashkirk; this was one of the first mentions of anyone who came from Hawick. His son Richard was also a witness. In about 1193 he granted lands of Molle (or Mow) to Kelso Abbey and later had a dispute with Kelso Abbey over teinds at Molle. His relationship with Eschina is unclear (it may be that they held different parts of the lands of Molle and were unrelated). His name may also have been written ‘Ansoil’. His wife was Agnes. His daughter Isolda married Alexander and had a part of Molle in the early 1200s, while his main heiress was Matilda, who married Richard de Lincoln. He was ancestor of the family of Mow of that Ilk. Eschina also ‘Eschyne’ (12th/13 th C.) daughter of Thomas de Londonis (who held the office of Doorward under William the Lion, and his ancestors took the name of Dorward) and Eschelyn (daughter of Uchtred de Molle), she was also known as ‘Eschina de Londonis’. In some accounts her father is given as Uchtred, son of Liulf. She was born in Roxburghshire and held lands at Huntlaw and Molle on the Bowmont Water. She may have first married Robert ‘de Croc’. She married Walter Fitz Alan, 1st High Steward of Scotland, who held ‘Mow’ about 1160, as well as lands at Hassendean and at Renfrew; he died in 1177. She had a charter of Molle in 1186. Around 1190 she gifted part of Molle to Kelso Abbey. She lastly married Henry ‘de Mow’, the 2 settling a dispute with Kelso Abbey about 1200 and still later is described as a widow. Alan, her son with Walter, succeeded to most of his father’s lands, as well as the office of Steward of Scotland. With Henry she had 4 daughters: Margaret (buried at Paisley Abbey, where she had given land); Eschina; Avicia (or Alicia), who probably married Richard Scott, ancestor of the Scotts of Buccleuch; and Cecilia, who married Simon Mauleverer and had a charter of Molle in about 1250. Isolda (13th C.) daughter of Anselm and younger sister of Matilda. She married Alexander (son of William, son of Edgar) and they had a daughter, Christina, who married Almer Scott of Mow, who may have been related to Richard Scott of Mow. Uchtred (12th C.) son of Liulf. He granted the Church of Molle (present day Morebattle) to Kelso Abbey in the mid-1100s. He perambulated the boundaries himself, along with Aldred, the Dean of Teviotdale. He may have been the father of Eschina (earlier written ‘de Melle’ and variants).

Monaghan (mo-nu-hin) n. Fr. James (1814/5–52) born in County Monaghan, Ireland, he served as Hawick’s first Catholic clergyman since before the Reformation, being the priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1846–47. He held morning services every other Sunday, as well as lectures in the evening. He also preached in alternate weeks at a temporary chapel in St. Boswells, as well as ministering to Catholics in in Jedburgh and Kelso. This being a strain on his health, he was transferred to Dunfries and then Edinburgh, where he died suddenly.

Monanday (mu-nin-dā, mō-nin-dā) n., arch. Monday – ‘...Yeh Monanday at morn’ [JSB] (cf. the more modern Mondi; derived from the Anglo-Saxon).

Moncrieff (mon-kreef) n. David (1771–1834) youngest son of Annan minister William and Ann Hardie. His brother William Hardie was minister at Annan after their father. He was proprietor of properties in Moncrieff’s Close from 1812, and made an Honorary Burgess in 1818 for benevolence to the poor. His property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map at about No. 63 High Street. It is unclear what the family’s original connection was to Hawick, but it could possibly be through his mother Ann Hardie (who died in 1821, aged 86). It is said that he was a great benefactor of the poor and unfortunate, and gave many contributions anonymously. He also befriended and helped Tom Jenkins, offering money so he could continue bidding on a Greek dictionary in an auction in Hawick, and later writing him a letter of reference. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His brother married Jean Laidlaw, who died at Fahnash, and was probably daughter of Robert Laidlaw, farmer there; their daughter (his niece) Mary married Rev. Robert Shaw of Ewes (and earlier preacher at Teviotdale). He was described as having a round face, which was ruddy and cheerful, stout on person, always clad in black, with matching breeches and silk stockings, and carried a gold-headed cane. He appears to have married Helen Webster, and they had a daughter, Margaret. His curling stone (inscribed with his name) is in the Museum.

John (d.1697), W.S. acted as agent to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696, for the rentals around Bramsholme. Margaret (b.1800) daughter of David, grand-daughter of Rev. William of Annan, and niece of Marion. She presented a cloth for the communion table at Hawick Free Kirk. She lived with her aunt at 63 High Street. Marion (1768–1862) daughter of Rev. William of Annan, and brother of David. She lived at 63 High Street. She was known as a charitable contributor to many causes in Hawick. One story is told of how she was asked to donate to some particular scheme, the organisation of which had taken 4 years, during which time she saved a pound note in her bible, so that she would be sure to have it on hand when the minister called. She was listed as ‘Miss Moncrieff’ among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She presented a communion token mold to the new Hawick Free Kirk in the early 1840s. Her niece Margaret is also recorded presenting a cloth for the communion table. She is probably the ‘Miss Marion’ involved in a bond with Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood in 1845. In later age she and her niece were referred to as the ‘Misses Moncrieff’ (e.g. in Slater’s 1852 directory, when they are listed among the local gentry). She also lived for a while with her grand-nieces Anne Janet and Marion Shaw. She died in Hawick at the age of 94 – ‘There’s Bailie Nixon, merchant, The Miss Moncrieffs and a’, And if yegang some farther east, Ye’ll come to Willie Ha’’ [DJG].

Moncrieff’s Close (mon-kreefs-klōs) n. name in use for Tannage Close in the early 19th century, from a family who used to live at the top on the east side, at No. 63 High Street (to confuse matters, the 1858 Ordnance Survey map marks only the top of the street as Moncrieff’s Close, with the bottom labelled as Tannage Close).

monimental (mo-nee-men’-al) adj., arch. monumental, drunk – ‘He was fair monimental’ [GW] (see monumental).

Monipennie (mu-nee-pe-ne) n. John (16th/17th C.) Scottish chronicler and compiler. His ‘Certeine matters concerning the realme of Scotland, composed together’ (c.1594, 1603) contained ‘The names of the principall clannes, and surnames of the borderers not landed’ (although both ‘landed’ and ‘not landed’ are included). This represents a valuable listing of the important men in each family at the end of the 16th century, and includes Olivers, Armstrongs, Elliotts, Nixons, Croziers, Scotts, etc. He also lists ‘The names of the barons, lairds, and chiefe gentlemen in euerie sherifldome’. Although first published about 1594, the list appears to have been compiled somewhat earlier.

the Monkey (thu-mung-kee) n. nickname in use in the 19th century. It was used for the proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb, and perhaps for others before him.

the Monkeyman’s (thu-mung-kee-munz) n. former popular name for the hill where Weensgate Drive and Marmion Road are now located, once used by Hawick’s youth for sledding in the winter.

the Monkeys (thu-mungk-keez) n. popular name for the Ewe and Lamb bar in Orrock Place. This apparently arose from a former proprietor, Mr. Carruthers, father of the 1933 Cornet’s Lass, who was nicknamed ‘Monkey Carruthers’, and hence regulars spoke about ‘gaun ti the Monkey’s’.

Monkland (mungk-lind) n. former name for the Monk’s Croft.

the Monk’s Croft (thu-mungks-kroft) n. former farm adjacent to the farmhouse at Hassendenbank. The rents belonged to Melrose Abbey, as part of the agreement going back to the 12th century. In the time of William the Lion it was restricted to the pastureage of 200 ewes, 16 oxen and 4 cows. It was listed in 1582 among lands for which Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill demanded the charters of his father from the widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford It was referred to as ‘a half merk land in Clarelaw called Monkland’ in about 1620 when Walter Scott had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose. The land became part of Minto Parish when Hassenden was suppressed in 1690. The lands were referred to as ‘Monks meadow’ in the 1692 rental lists of the Duchess of Buccleuch in Hassenden, when they were ‘evicted by the minister for his glebe’. William Elliot and John Elliot were there in 1694. It was farmed by the Dicksons of Hassendenburn in the 18th century. The name presumably derives from an association with the monks of Melrose Abbey and the former tower nearby (also written ‘Monkscroft’; it was ‘Munkscroft’ in 1694; it is presumably the farm adjacent to Knowetownhead, labelled ‘Mountcroft’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Monk’s Flats (mungks-flaws) n. former name for lands in Hassenden Parish, recorded as ‘Monokesflattes’ in a charter around the late 1220s. It is likely to be the same as the Monk’s Croft.

Monk’s Meadow (mungks-me-do) n. another name for Monk’s Croft, mentioned in 1692.

the Monk’s Toor (thu-mungk-toor, -towur) n. the Monk’s Tower, former name for the tower at Hassenden, so called because of the local connection with Melrose Abbey. It was set up as a ‘hospital’ for pilgrims journeying to Melrose Abbey, perhaps as early as the reign of William I. The land was granted by Melrose Abbey to Sir Walter Scott of branxholme and his wife Janet Beaton, as confirmed by royal charter in 1574. It is referred to at that time as ‘the tower called Hassindenour or Monkstour’. A branch of Scotts lived there for at least the next several decades.
Scott of Satchells lists ‘John Scot of Monks-tower, brother to old William Scott of Altoun’ as one of the supporters of Buccleuch around the late 16th century. The 1634 service of heirs for Scott of Buccleuch lists the fortalice called ‘Hassendentour alias Monkis-tour’ among their possessions and it is so recorded in the service of heirs for Mary of Buccleuch in 1653 and for Anne in 1661. The ‘touer and fortalice called Hassendane tower, alias Monkstower’ is recorded in 1693 in the ratification of the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith, as heir to his mother. Its site is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, by the road to the south of Hassendean farm.

Monk’s Pond (mungks-pond) n. name for area between Bedrule and Ruecaastle. Presumably there was once a pond there, perhaps with a connection to Jedburgh Abbey.

Monmouth (mon-moom-th, -mowth) n. familiar name for the Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch, James Scott nee Crofts.

Monograptus riccartonensis (mo-nô-grap-tus-ri-kar-tin-en-sis) n. species of graptolite fossil, identified by Charles Lapworth in 1876 in rocks from the ‘Riccarton Beds’ at Ellistead. It is named for the locality of Riccarton.

monster (mon-stur) n., arch. an abnormally large child – ‘An overgrown or unnaturally large child is so called in Hawick. The word carries with it the impression of stupidity as well as hugeness’ [ECS].

Montagu-Douglas-Scott (mon-ta-gew-dug-lis-skö) n. George William (1866–1947) 3rd son of William Henry, 6th Duke of Buccleuch and younger brother of John Charles, the 7th Duke. He was Captain in the 10th Hussars and fought in the Boer War. He was Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire and J.P. in Roxburghshire. In WWI he was Lieut.-Col. in the Border Horse Yeomanry. He received the O.B.E. in 1919. In 1903 he married Elizabeth Emily Manners, daughter of the 5th Duke of Rutland. Their children were: Phylis Emily Elizabeth Emily Manners, daughter of the 1st Baron Montagu of Beaulieu. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1861–68 and for South Hampshire 1868–84. He was also Captain of the Midlothian Yeomanry and served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He was also Patron of the Liddesdale Curling Club. In 1865 he married Cecily Susan, 2nd daughter of John Stuart-Wortley-Mackenzie, 2nd Lord Wharncliffe. Their children were: John Walter Edward (b.1866), who married Cecil Victoria Constance Kerr, daughter of 9th Marquess of Lothian, and secondly Alice Pearl Crake; Robert Henry (b.1867), who married Alice Fisher; Rachel Cecily (b.1868), who married Henry William, Lord Forster; and James Francis (b.1873), who died young. John Douglas (1809–60) Lord Scott, son of Charles, 4th Duke and younger brother of Walter the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. He inherited the estate of Dunchurch near Rugby. He entered the Grenadier Guards in 1827, becoming Lieutenant and Captain in 1831 and retiring in 1833. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. A Tory in politics, he was said to be dashing in appearance and having a great command of language. He stood as a candidate in the 1832 post-Reform Act election in Roxburghshire, but was defeated by Capt. George Elliot. After voting himself in Hawick in 1832 he claimed he was attacked by a mob, who tried to pull him from his horse and was struck on the cheek by a rock; those on the other side of the story claimed that the incident started when his servant struck at the people around him on leaving the Tower Inn. He was also in Hawick for the 1835 election, when there were near riots around the Tower Knowe; in this election he defeated Capt. Elliot of Minto by 76 votes (and there was much accusation of ‘faggot’ voters at the time). He remained M.P. until 1837, but thereafter was never induced to stand again. He was also known as a keen sportsman, yachtsman, angler and hunter. In 1836 he married Alicina Anne, elder daughter of John Spottiswoode; she composed the tune for ‘Annie Laurie’ as well as other songs, and died in 1900. He had no children. He is buried at Dunchurch, Warwickshire, where his wife designed a sun-dial in his memory. Verses were written about him standing in the 1832 election – ‘... And shall we then give the dear freedom we’ve won To vapourising bullies like booby Lord John?’ John Charles (1864–1935) 2nd son of William, the 6th Duke, He trained for the Navy, passing his entrance examination at the age of 12, and served for several years at sea, reaching the rank of Lieutenant. However, his naval career was cut short by the accidental death of his elder brother Walter Henry in 1886, when he became Earl of Dalkeith. He became the 7th Duke of Buccleuch on the death of his father in 1914. He was Conservative M.P. for Roxburghshire 1895–1906 while Earl of...

Dalkeith. He was Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburgh 1915–35 and also served as a J.P. for Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire. He was also Captain General of the Royal Company of Archers and Honorary Colonel in the Royal Artillery (Territorial Army). He was Lord Clerk Register for Scotland 1926–35. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1889. He was also Honorary President of the Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club and of Hawick R.F.C. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1904 when the Library was opened, and was present at the unveiling of the Horse Monument in 1914. He also gave the Playing Fields to the Town in 1933. In 1893 he married Margaret Alice Bridgeman, 2nd daughter of Viscount Newport. Their children were: Margaret Ida, who married Adm. Sir Geoffrey Alan brooke Hawkins; Walter John, who succeeded; Lt.-Col. William Walter, who married Rachel Douglas-Home, daughter of the 13th Earl of Home; Sybil Anne, who married Charles Bathurst Hele Phipps; Alice Christabel, who married Henry William Frederick Albert Windsor, 1st Duke of Gloucester (and son of George VI) and lived to be 102; Mary Theresa, who married David George Brownlow Cecil, Marquis of Exeter; Angela Christine Rose, who married Vice-Adm. Sir Peter Dawnay; and George Francis John, who married Mary Wina Mannin Bishop. He died at Bowhill and was buried at Dalkeith. Richard Walter John (1954– ) 10th Duke of Buccleuch, succeeding on the death of his father in 2007. He long managed the Buccleuch estates as the Earl of Dalkeith. He was also Regimental Trustee of the K.O.S.B., and has been involved in several television and arts bodies. He married Lady Elizabeth Kerr (daughter of the Marquess of Lothian) and their children are: Walter; Lord Charles; and Lady Amabel. Walter Francis (1806–1884) 5th Duke of Buccleuch and 7th Duke of Queensberry, son of Charles Montagu-Scott. He was born at Dalkeith House and succeeded when he was 13. He was the Honorable Walter Francis Montagu until the death of his elder brother, then had the title of Lord Whitchester until his father became Duke after which he was the Earl of Dalkeith. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire (as the Earl of Dalkeith) in 1819. He succeeded to the Buccleuch titles on the death of his father in 1819. His guardian was his uncle, Lord Montagu, and he was sent to Eton to be educated, but had to leave due to ill-health. He later attended St. John’s College, Cambridge. He was made an Honorary Burgess when passing through Hawick for the first time in 1821. In 1822 he was host to George IV at Dalkeith House for a fortnight (and repeated this for Queen Victoria in 1842). Celebrations for his coming of age (in 1827) were somewhat tempered by the recent death of his grandmother, Duchess Elizabeth. He subscribed to 3 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 there was a great celebration in Hawick, with an ox roasted at the Tower Knowe, distributed to all comers, along with 500 loaves and a hogshead of ale, with the Town illuminated along with fireworks and a beacon at Crumhaugh-hill. He was made Lord Lieutenant of Midlothian in 1828 and Roxburghshire in 1841. In 1829 he took his seat in the House of Lords as the Earl of Doncaster, and was a staunch Conservative in politics. However, in later years he changed his position and became a supporter of the repeal of the Corn Laws. He had Granton Harbour built in 1835. In 1838 he became Captain-General of the Royal Company of Archers. In 1839 there was a banquet held at Branxholme to celebrate his return from a long trip to Europe. A pavilion in the style of a baronial hall was erected on the Castle green (by Smith of Darnick), able to seat about 1,000 people; the chairman of the event was James Grieve of Branxholme Braes and above the chair was a buck’s head with the word ‘Bellen-den’ in gold lettering. Sometimes referred to as ‘the Good Duke Walter’, among his gifts to the town were Hawick Old Parish Church, the repair of St. Mary’s, St. Cuthbert’s Episcopal Church, parsonage and school, Buccleuch School, school-house and grounds, St. Mary’s School, the sites for the Corn Exchange, Cottage Hospital and the Industrial (Drumlanrig) School, and facilities for the Allan and Dod water works. He performed the turning on ceremonies for both the Allan and Dod supplies. He also remitted customs that were traditionally levied by the Baron, cancelled a debt owed to him by the Road Trust, feued land to the Hawick Working Men’s Building Society, and gave fields to the Bowling and Cricket Clubs at minimal rent. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He became a Privy Councillor in 1842 and Lord Privy Seal in 1842–46 in Sir Robert Peel’s administration, and was also President of the Council, as well as being ‘Gold Stick’ in 2 coronations. He regularly attended the House of Lords, but seldom spoke. He was Colonel of the Edinburgh Militia, the ‘Duke’s Canaries’. He was also President of the Highland Agricultural Society, the Society of Antiquaries, the Architectural Society of Scotland and the British Association as well as Chancellor of Glasgow University, Vice-President of the Royal Institution for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts and leading member of the Board of Trustees for Manufactures. He was heavily involved in agricultural improvements, and headed the subscription list for enlarging Edinburgh university. He received honorary degrees from Glasgow, Edinburgh and Cambridge Universities. As a member of the Bannatyne Club he funded the publication of the ‘Chartulary of Melrose’ in 1837. In the 1850s he wrote to the tenants of his farms, urging them to preserve any monuments of antiquity. A dinner was held in his honour in Edinburgh in 1878 on the occasion of his jubilee as landlord, with an illuminated address being signed by 700 tenants. His statue stands in front of St. Giles Kirk in Edinburgh, with a decorated pedestal showing scenes from the history of his family. The Buccleuch Memorial was erected in his honour, Duke Street was named after him, and a portrait of him by Knighton Warren (commissioned by the Council) hangs in the Town Hall. In 1829 he married Lady Charlotte Anne Thynne, youngest daughter of Thomas, 2nd Marquis of Bath, who was Mistress of the Robes to Queen Victoria; she died in 1895, aged 84. Their children were: William Henry Walter (b.1831), who succeeded as 6th Duke; Henry John (b.1832); Walter Charles (b.1834), Captain of the 15th Hussars, who married Anna Maria, daughter of Sir William Edmund Cradock Hartopp; Francis Robert (b.1837), who died aged 2; Charles Thomas (b.1839), Admiral in the Royal Navy; Victoria Alexandrina (b.1844), who married the Marquess of Lothian and secondly married Bertram Talbot; Margaret Elizabeth (b.1846), who married Donald Cameron of Lochiel; and Mary Charlotte (b.1851), who married Walter Rodolph Trefusis. He died at Bowhill after being Duke for an unprecedented 65 years, and was buried at Dalkeith.

Walter Francis John ‘Johnnie’ (1923–2007) 9th Duke of Buccleuch, son of Walter John, he attended Eton and served in the Navy during WWII. He then studied agriculture and forestry at Oxford and became Director of the Buccleuch Estates in 1949. He served as a Roxburghshire County Councillor 1958–60. He was Conservative M.P. for Edinburgh North, 1960–73, as Earl of Dalkeith. He was also Captain in the Royal Company of Archers, Lord Lieutenant of Roxburgh, Ettrick & Lauderdale, President of the Royal Highland and Agricultural Society for Scotland and served on committees for many benevolent organisations, including advocating for those with disabilities. In 1971 he injured his spine in a hunting accident, and was then confined to a wheelchair. In 1973 he succeeded to the Buccleuch titles on the death of his father. He was then in the House of Lords until the removal of hereditary peers in 1999. He was made a Knight of the Thistle in 1978, and changed his surname back to simply ‘Scott’. He married Jane McNeill of Colonsay in 1953 (she had been a famous model) and they had 4 children: Richard, who succeeded; Lord William, who married Hafize Berrin Torolsan; Lady Charlotte-Anne, who married Count Bernard de Castellane; and Lord Damian, who married Elizabeth Powis. He was the biggest landowner in the U.K. (about 400 square miles), and owned many great art treasures (including da Vinci’s ‘Madonna and the Yarnwinder’, stolen from Drumlanrig Castle in 2003). He died at Bowhill and his funeral was held at Melrose Abbey. Walter Henry (1861–1886) eldest son of William Henry, 6th Duke of Buccleuch. He had the tile Lord Eskdale. He died from a gun accident when stalking deer near Achnacarry, and so the Dukedom was eventually inherited by his younger brother John Charles. Walter John (1894–1973) son of John Charles, he became the 8th Duke of Buccleuch in 1935. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church College, Oxford. He was a soldier, politician, farmer and banker, as well as Lord Steward of Her Majesty’s Household and Chancellor of the Order of the Thistle. He was Commanding Officer of the 4th Battalion K.O.S.B. 1923–30. He was M.P. for Roxburgh and Selkirk Counties 1929–35 (while Lord Dalkeith) and was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1933. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire 1932–73 and Captain General of the Royal Company of Archers, as well as being a J.P. for Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire and Deputy-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He served as Aide-de-Camp to the Governor-General of Canada. He received honorary degrees from Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities. In 1921 he married Vreda Esther Mary, daughter of Maj. William Frank Lascelles. Their children were: Elizabeth Diana, who married Hugh Algernon Percy, 10th Duke of Northumberland; Walter Francis John, who succeeded; and Caroline Margaret, who married Sir Ian Hedworth John Little Gilmour, Baron of CRAIGMILLAR. William Henry Walter (1831–1914) son of Walter, he had been Earl of Dalkeith, and became the 6th Duke of Buccleuch and 8th of Queensberry in 1884. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church College, Oxford. He was M.P. for Mid-Lothian 1853–68 and 1874–80 and stood unsuccessfully against Gladstone in the 1880 election. He was also Lord Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire from 1858 and Lieut.-Gen. of the Royal Company of Archers. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justic of the Peace in Roxburghshire. In 1885 he was made an Honorary Burgess when the foundation stone of the new Town Hall was laid and the Cottage Hospital opened. He was President of the Hawick Fine Art Association, the Cottage Hospital and the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association and Patron of the Archaeological Society and the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society. He presented a prize bat for the best batsman of the Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club in the late 1800s. In 1901 he was made a Privy Councillor. He also opened the Museum in Wilton Lodge in 1910 and was presented with a golden key in commemoration of his recent golden wedding. In 1859 he married Louisa Jane Hamilton, 3rd daughter of James, Duke of Abercorn; she was Mistress of the Robes to Queen Victoria and Queen Alexandria. Their children were: Walter Henry, Lord Eskdale, who died in a shooting accident aged 25; John Charles, who succeeded; George William, Captain in the 10th Hussars, who married Elizabeth Emily Manners, youngest daughter of the Duke of Rutland; Henry Francis, Major in the Royal Scots, who died unmarried; Herbert Andrew, Captain in the Irish Guards, who planted the British flag at Pretoria, and married Marie Josephine, daughter of James Edwards; Francis George, Aide-de-Camp to the Viceroy of India and married Eileen Nina Sibell Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, daughter of the 4th Earl of Minto; Katherine Mary, married Major Thomas Brand, eldest son of Viscount Hampden; and Constance Anne, who married Douglas Halyburton, son of the 1st Earl Cairns. Lord William Walter (1896–1958) son of John Charles, the 7th Duke of Buccleuch and brother of Walter John, the 8th Duke. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst. He was Captain in the 10th Hussars, received the Military Cross in 1919 and was Aide-de-Camp to the Governor-General of Canada 1925–26. He was also admitted to the Royal Company of Archers. He was Conservative M.P. for Roxburghshire & Selkirkshire 1935–1950, losing to Liberal A.J.F. MacDonald. In the 1930s he was connected with Sir Oswald Mosley’s ‘January Club’ and British Union of Fascists. He is also referred to as Lt. Col. Scott.

He married Lady Rachel Douglas-Home, daughter of the 13th Earl of Home and they had 5 children: Margaret Elizabeth; Frances Henrietta; Rosemary Alice; Jean Louise; and Walter William. He lived at Eildon Hall, St. Boswells. (the name is also sometimes un-hyphenated and occasionally spelled ‘Montague’).

Montagu-Scott (mon-ta-gew-sko’) n. Charles William Henry (1772–1819) eldest son of Henry Scott of Buccleuch and Lady Elizabeth Montagu. He was called the Earl of Dalkeith during his father’s lifetime. Educated at Eton, he was an English M.P. for Marlborough, Ludgershall, St. Michaels and Marlborough (again) in the years 1793–1807. He was called to the House of Lords as Baron Tynedale in 1807 and became the 4th Duke of Buccleuch and 6th of Queensberry in 1812. He was Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire 1794–1819 and Dumfriesshire 1810–19, as well as Colonel Commandant of the Dumfries Militia. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was also President of the Pitt Club of Scotland, Governor of the Royal Bank and President of the Highland Society. He provided assistance to both Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd (to whom he gave free tenancy of the farm of Altrieve), and had the ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ dedicated to him. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808. He was present at the ‘Carterhaugh Ban’ in 1815. He repaired Drumlanrig Castle and generally improved the Queensberry estates. However, Robert Wilson describes how he was reluctant to grant feus for woollen mill development on his property around Hawick. It is said that he led a relatively quiet and religious life, managing his estates rather than spending time in London. In 1795 he married Harriet Katherine Townshend, 4th daughter of Thomas, Viscount Sydney; she died in 1814. He was succeeded by his eldest son Walter Francis (1806–84), when the surname Montagu-Douglas-Scott began to be used. His other children were: Anne Elizabeth (1796–1844), who died unmarried, aged 47; George Henry (1798–1808), Lord Scott, who died of measles while a schoolboy at Eton; Charlotte Albinia (1799–1828), who married James Thomas, 4th Earl of Courtown, and died in Rome; Isabella Mary (1800–29), who married Peregrine Francis Cost; Katherine Frances (1803–14), who died aged 10; John Douglas (1809–60), who was M.P. for Roxburghshire; Margaret Harriet (1811–46), who married Charles Viscount Marsham, who was later Earl of Romney; and Harriet Janet Sarah (1814–70), who married Rev. Edward Monteviot Hoose (mon-teev-yi-hoose) n. stately home about 2 miles south of Jedburgh. The lands there were held by the Earl of Lothian in 1678. The mansion was created from a farmhouse around 1740, with much later alteration. The lands were described in 1788 as ‘Spittal, now called Mount Teviot’. The house was lived in by Adm. John Elliot, then the Kerrs, and is now the seat of the Marquess of Lothian. The landscaping of the estate is on a grand scale compared with the modest size of the house (the name first appears as ‘Teviotmount’ in 1665, although the area was formerly known as ‘Ancrum Spittal’).

Montgomery (mont-gu-mu-ree) n. George (b.1824/5) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was a boarder with Walter Ballantyne at 7 Back Row, and was employing 3 men. His wife was Elizabeth, and their children included George, Elizabeth, John and Walter. George (d.1835) cooper of the Kirk Wynd, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (1721–1803) born in Peeblesshire, he was appointed Sheriff there at age 27, then served as M.P. for Dumfriesshire and for Peeblesshire before becoming Solicitor General and then Lord Advocate. He was often called upon as a legal arbitrator, and in that role he was asked for his opinion on Hawick’s rights to the Common in 1765, driven by the Town’s intention to put the land to better use. His opinion at that time was that the Common belonged jointly to the successors to the particates named in the Charter of 1537 and ‘neither the Duke of Buccleuch as superior, nor the Burgess who have neither houses nor lands, are entitled to any share in the division’. After the Council decided to let parts of the Common adjacent to the neighbouring lands, he was again asked his opinion in 1766. This time his opinion had changed somewhat and he suggested that the Duke’s tenants may have a right of pasturage on the Common, and he recommended formal arbitration to resolve the issue. He appears to have given no weight at all to the annual marking of the boundaries of the Common by the Burgess of Hawick. He was in fact later the issuer of the decision to give 30% of the Common Moor to Buccleuch and other neighbouring landowners; this despite the fact that he was a close friend of the Duke of Buccleuch (working in Parliament to pass the Bank of Ayr bill, which directly affected both the Buccleuch and Queensberry estates), and hence could hardly be considered to be impartial. In 1777 he was appointed Chief Baron of the Exchequer. In 1778 the Magistrates of Hawick presented him with a carpet, stating that he ‘did not know that any carpets of such size, without a seam, had been made in this country’. He purchased Stanhope in Peeblesshire and was said to be enthusiastic about agricultural improvement. He retired in 1801 as Baronet of Stobo. James (b.c.1805) recorded as a horse-keeper on the Fore Row in 1841. His wife was Sarah, and their children included Mary, James, Moodie (moo-dee) n. George (b.1823/4) son of Robert. He was a millwright on Sunnyside in Denholm. He also served as the Registrar and Inspector of Poor for Cavers Parish. In the 1860s he and his father Robert are recorded together as millwrights. He married Elizabeth Turnbull, and their children included: Jane; Robert; and Elizabeth O. James (b.1879) millwright in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.1789) from Lilliesleaf Parish, son of James, he was millwright in Denholm. He is recorded in 1837 and in 1841 was probably on Leyden Road. His wife was Elizabeth Oliver, and their children included: James; Elizabeth; George; Jenny; Alison; Margaret; Robert; and Mary. He was still alive in 1861, and recorded around Leyden Road. Thomas (b.1790) son of James, he was a millwright on Main Street in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a millwright and wright in Lilliesleaf. In 1831 he married Agnes Burn. Their children included: William; Jessie; Jane; Agnes; George; Thomas; Helen; Robert; and John. He died before 1861, when his widow was recorded as head of the household (also spelled ‘Mudie’).

Moormaw (moo-raw) n. former farm in Hassendean Parish, later called ‘Lees’, with ‘West Lees’ still existing. Charters for the Easter and Wester parts was granted by John Scott of Burnhead to John Scott, Vicar of Hawick in 1535 and 1539. And in 1544 East Moormaw was sold by John Scott, Vicar of Hawick back to John Scott of Burnhead. However, in 1606 William Scott in Catslack was served heir to these lands of his great-grand-uncle, John Scott, Vicar of Hawick; at that point Easter Moormaw was a ‘40 shilling land’. It is recorded being occupied by a branch of the Scott family in 1666. It is probably the place where Walter Scott of Catslack paid the land tax on £52 in 1663 and John Scott of Catslack in 1678. It seems possible it is the ‘milmuae’ in Hassendean Parish, where Andrew Donald and Thomas Sanderson were located at the time of the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is the ‘Mowmaw, or Millmac, commonly called Lees’ owned by William Scott of Burnhead and valued at £52 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (also written ‘Muremaw’; it is ‘Murmac’ in 1544 and

Moray see Murray

Morebattle (mör-baw-ul) n. village in the eastern Borders, on the Kale Water. There are several ancient encampments near here, as well as the reconstructed 16th century Corbet Tower. A fire in the Manse there destroyed the pre-1708 records of the entire Synod of Merse and Teviotdale (the origin is probably Old English for ‘building by the lake’, since a lake near there was only drained in the 19th century; the name first appears in about 1120 as ‘Mereboda’).

Morlaw (mor-law, -lō) n. Duncan (15th C.) witness to Hawick’s earliest known sasine in 1453. His name is written ’Morlay’. It is reasonable to think that he was an ancestor of the later Morlaws in Hawick. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1641. She was ordered to pay money that she owed Helen Deans as her fee for a period in the previous year, ‘but asoillezd fra her hois and schone’. Presumably Deans was a servant of hers. Janet (17th C.) resident of Dean Mill recorded in a 1650 list of communicants (recorded as ‘Jannet Morling’). She may have been one of the last descendants of John to have the family name. James (16th C.) recorded as witness to a Hawick sasine of 1558, where his name is recorded as ‘Morlaw’. It is easy to imagine that he was son of John from the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books of 1532 when he purchased from William Walker a croft and a tenement in Hawick. He was recorded as being ‘John Morlawe of Todschawe’, suggesting that he owned the lands of Todshaw in the Borthwick valley. His tenement was at the Tower Knowe, described as being ‘on the north side of the king’s street between the tenement of Alexander Paslaw on the east, the Slytryk water on the west and north and the said king’s street on the south’, while the croft ‘lies on the east side of the Slytryk water with the Teviot water on the north and the tenement of James Blair on the west’. The croft is surely what became known as Morlaw’s Croft (and so the ‘east’ in the Selkirk record must be an error for ‘west’). He is also mentioned in the 1537 charter as being the holder of 3 particates on the north side of the main street, with his name written ‘Morlo’ (also spelled ‘Morlaw’, ‘Morlawe’, ‘Morlo’, etc.; this may be the same surname as the modern ‘Morland’/‘Moreland’ or Morley).

Morlaw’s Croft (mor-laz-kroft) n. area of around 2 acres lying to the west of what became Orrrock Place. The name was in use in the 18th century, but by the 19th century became referred to as ‘the Back o the Yairds’. An item in the Selkirk Protocol Books records how the croft was sold to John ‘Morlawe’ of Todshaw by William Walker, nephew and heir of John Walker. It is described as being ‘on the east [which must be an error for ‘west’] side of the Slytryk water with the Teviot water on the north and the tenement of James Blair on the west’.

Morlo see Morlaw

Morlows (mor-minz) n., pl. members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, founded in the U.S.A. in the 1820s. Among their activities are sending young men (and now occasionally women) on two year missions, isolated from friends and family, to try to make converts. There was apparently a mormon from Salt Lake City living off Denholm Main Street in the years around 1900. Missionaries have been showing up in Hawick since ??.

morn (mœrn) n. tomorrow is generally referred to as the morn – ‘let’s gaun oot the morn night’, ‘It’s duist an off-pit o teime hevin ti gaun there the morn’ [ECS].

mornen see mornin

mornin (mor-nee, -nin) n. morning – ‘how er ce this mornin?’, ‘she’s still in mornin this mornin’, ‘A’ll cry in as A gaun bye the morn’s mornen’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘mournen’ and most commonly pronounced with een; the time after this but before noon is often called the forenin).

Morpeth (mor-peth) n. town in Northumberland on the Wansbeck River, an important market centre, with a bridge built by Thomas Telford, and an interesting old clock tower. Morpeth Castle was once the seat of the Lords Dacre, Wardens of the Marches. It was also the site of a Covenanters’ siege of 1644. It has celebrated the Morpeth Gathering in April since 1968, with the ‘Border Cavalcade’ commemorating Lord Greystoke’s return from Otterburn in 1388. Population 14,400.

Morren (mo-rin) n. John (1863–1950) born in Auchindoir in Aberdeenshire, in 1902 he moved from Aberdeen City Police to be Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh force. He lived at Glenvie on Orhcrad Terrace. He remained as Chief Constable until 1909, taking over as Chief Constable of the Berwickshire, Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire Constabularies. He retired in 1933 and moved back to Aberdeen. He was awarded the King George V Coronation (Scottish Police) Medal, as well as the O.B.E. He can be seen in a photographic portrait in full uniform, with remarkable moustache.

Morrishaa (mo-ris-haw) n. Morrishall, former farmstead in Wilton Parish, between Wilton Dean and Whitehaugh, near Brieryhill, lying beside the modern Whitehaugh Road. John Morton and family were there in at least 1835–1851. It was probably deserted in the 1850s and derelict soon after. It was also known as ‘Murrayshall’ (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Morrison (mo-rezin) n. Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of Robert, baker in Edinburgh, his mother being a Home. In 1693 he was served heir portioner, along with James Dickson and John Shoreswood, in the Barony of Home, inherited from Jean, daughter of John Home. This included superiority over lands in Hassendean, and explicitly Appletreeshall, as well as the lands of Redfordgreen, Drycleuchlea, Huntly and Hartwoodburn. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as a fugitive in 1502, this being for the murder of John and James Jackson. William Douglas of Morrison Cottage mort-cloth

Cavers dealt with his escheated goods. James (1816–93) evangelical preacher who was one of the founders of the Evangelical Union, after being ousted from the Synod of the United Secession Church in 1841. His first visit to the Borders was to preach in Hawick and Denholm in a December of the mid-1840s. On one Sunday he preached at the old Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, then in the open air at the Tower Knowe to a crowd of 700–800, and finally in the Subscription Rooms (with the seats removed) to perhaps 1,000. This was part of the impetus for forming Hawick Congregational Kirk in 1848. He returned in early 1849 to formally induct Alexander Duff as the first E.U. minister in Hawick and later to open the new church. James (b.1829/30) from Lanark, he was head gardener at Wauchope in the 1860s. His wife was Helen and their children included John, Anne H. and Elizabeth. John (b.1822/3) head gardener at Weens in the 1860s. From Lanark, he was probably younger brother of James, gardener at Wauchope. His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Mary J.D. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was described as late Bailie in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. William (16th C.) tailor who was owed money according to the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. It is unclear if he was from the Hawick area or Edinburgh. William (19th C.) earthenware and glass dealer on Needle Street, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He could be the William listed in the 1851 census as a boot closer from Edinburgh, living as a lodger on the Round Close. William, J.P. (1839–92) born in Craig Madderty, Perthshire, he became a detective with the Leith Constabulary, then came to Hawick around 1865. He acted as Super-intendent of Police and Procurator-Fiscal for the Burgh for 11 years, as well as being Firemaster and managing the Hawick Advertiser from 1876–90. His company was printer, publisher, book-seller and stationer at 3 High Street. He was on the Town Council for at least a dozen years, serving as a Bailie for most of that time, and being a candidate for Provost. For several years he provided the refreshments for the riders at Myrselawgreen on the Friday of the Common Riding. He was the first Bailie to carry the Flag at the Chase in 1887 when that practice was revived (and the Provost of the day could not ride). However, in 1890 he galloped round the course with the Flag, to the cheers of the crowd, but the derision of the Common Riding organisers, since it was against all tradition. He was also Chairman of the Parochial Board, as well as being involved with the School Board, the Gas Company board, the Hawick Bowling Club, the Masons and the Common Riding. He was a Liberal in politics and was a candidate for Provost in 1890. He left Hawick suddenly in 1890 and died accidentally near Seattle (U.S.A.) a year and a half later. His wife was Margaret Gregg, who wrote some poetry under the pseudonym ‘M.G.M.’ He lived at Morrison Cottage, which gave its name to Morrison Place. Mrs. William nee Gregg (1834–98) wife of Bailie Morrison, whom she married in Leith in 1862. They had 6 children in Hawick. She wrote poetry in the local papers and in ‘Modern Scottish Poets’ using the initials M.G.M. She died at 3 Morrison Place. William (1863–1911) only child of Bailie William to reach adulthood. He grew up in Hawick, became a printer with his father, emigrated to Australia in 1883 and became the New South Wales Government Printer.

Morrison Cottage (mo-ree-sinz) n. house built by William Morrison on what became known as Morrison Place, and still exists there.

Morrison Place (mo-ree-sin-plis) n. originally part of the ‘Green Wynd’ it was named in 1883 after Morrison Cottage, built by William Morrison there. The street was popularly known in the 19th century as Hospital Brae. It is likely that it runs along part of what was known as the ‘Com Vennel at Myreslawgreen’ at the time of the 1537 Charter.

Morrison’s (mo-ree-sin) n. W. Morrison & Co., printers, publishers, stationers, booksellers and bookbinders at 3 High Street in the latter part of the 19th century. It was run by William Morrison, joined by his son, also William. The company’s ‘Business Directory’ came out in at least the year 1890.

Morris Clyde (mo-iris-kild) n. pen-name for the writer of the poem ‘The Hawick Gathering Cry’.

mort (mor) n., arch. the skin of a sheep that has died a natural death – ‘Mort-woo, Wool of such skins’[JoJ] (also ‘murt’).

mort-cloth (mor-kloth) n., arch. a black velvet pall placed over coffins on their way to the cemetery. The Hawick Parish one was hired out by the kirk session, the money used to help the poor of the Parish. Deaths were often recorded in the ledgers as ‘mort-cloth’ hires. The Hawick Parish ‘mort-cloth’ was used from at least 1712, and in 1720 a new one was provided by William Elliot of 1824
London (who was born at Southfield); this being of Genoan velvet and much finer than the Dutch velvet it replaced. The new cloth was kept by one of the elders (Bailie Ruecastle in 1721). There are also records of a 2nd (presumably the older velvet one, sometimes called ‘the little cloth’) and even 3rd cloth (possibly just of cheap black material) being rented for lesser fees. Its use was widely debated in the mid-19th century, it fell into disfavour by the 1860s and is said to have been last used for Tibbie Leithead in 1870. The fee was 18 shillings Scots for those in the town and 20 shillings for the country part of the parish. There was also one in use in Wilton Parish. Other mortcloths owned by incorporated trades were in use until 1721, with a ‘memorial’ against the use of private mort-cloths issued in 1726 – ‘Wm Dickson gave in account of ye profites of ye 2 mortcloths …’ [PR1724], ‘O, have ye heard the news of late, That things have come to sic a state, The fouk o’ Hawick are talking great Against our bonnie mortcloth, Some say it is a gross abuse, Some say they’ll it nae langer use, And some they will not pay the dues O’ hiring out our mortcloth’ [TP] (also spelled as one word ‘mortcloth’).

mortify (mor-ti-ll) v., arch. to bequeath in perpetuity, particularly when given to a public body – ‘I hereby mortifie and dispone to the said Paroch of Hawick all and haill the Soume of Nine thousand Merks Scots money to ly as ane mortifie fund’ [PR], ‘...who are to bestow the money mortified by the late Mr Alexander Orrok, our minister here ...’ [PR1714] (Scots Law term).

mortification (mor-ti-f-k-a-shin) n., arch. property or money bequeathed to charity – ‘And by the said mortification her Grace is patron of both for presenting the schoolmaster when vacant ...’ [PR1714].

mortifier (mor-ti-f-ur) n., arch. one who mortifies, person who bequeaths something to a public pody – ‘They in the highlands gote the best part thereof according to the desire of the mortifier’ [PR715].

Mortimer (mor-i-mur, -ee-) n. Rev. Cyrus M. minister of Roberton from 1930–54. He started the first troop of Boy Scouts in Roberton Parish.

Morton (mor-in) n. Adam (15th C.) bequeathed 6 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Ade Mortoun’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Briery Yards according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably the Adam, married to Anna Henderson, whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included Helen (b.1695), Anna (b.1702) and Jean (b.1709) George ‘Geordie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Harrett’ (presumably Harmood) in the 1622 Commissioners’ Court in 1622 when he was cleared, along with Walter Turnbull (tenant of Skelfhill) of stealing 2 sheep from ‘Laird Swarley’ (an Englishman). Rev. James (1783–1865) said to be a cousin of Dr. John Leyden, he was Prebendary of Lincoln and Vicar of Holbeach in Lincolnshire. He wrote ‘The Poetical Remains of the late Dr. John Leyden’ (1819) and ‘Monastic Annals of Teviotdale’ (1832). He became acquainted with William Norman Kennedy after a visit to Hawick, in which he was given a tour of local archaeological sites, along with Robert White of Newcastle. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Johannes de Mortoune’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably local. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in ‘le craik’ (presumably Craik) in 1502 at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was fined for non-appearance, and acted as his own surety. John (d.c.1683) recorded at Appletreehall in 1683 when his will is registered. John (d.c.1683) at Appletreehall in 1683 when his will is recorded. His surname is written ‘Mortoune’. John (b.c.1840) agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. He was listed at Murrayhall, among heads of households, 1835–41. His wife was Agnes and their children included Jeannie, Isabella, Katherine, Agnes, Betty and Mary. Robert (b.1778/9) from Dalkeith, he was a farmer and gardener living at Damhead in 1841. In 1851 he was at Upper Damside. He is listed as a gardener in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Catherinne and their children included William, Catherine and John. Rev. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1919–2013) born in Kilmarnock, he studied Arts at Glasgow University and trained for the ministry there. He was ordained as minister of West Port Kirk in 1945 and remained until 1951. He then moved to St. Nicholas’ Church in Cardonald, and in 1947 was translated to Stonelaw, Rutherglen, where he was minister until he retired in 1986. In 1978–79 he was Moderator of the Glasgow Presbytery. His wife was Netta. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter (in earlier times this is easily confused with Mertin).
mort-safe (mor'-sāf) n., arch. a device for preventing a coffin from being stolen, often an iron cage that could be locked over a grave. They were prevalent in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. A padlock from a device used at Cavers up until about 1830 is in the Museum.

Moscrop (mos-krop, -krip) n. Adam (16th C.) 2 men with the same name, one ‘Mr.’ and one ‘Sir’, were chaplains and notaries to an instrument following an inquest over disputed land in Jedburgh in 1533. They could easily have been descended from the earlier Patrick and/or James. One of them was probably the Adam who was notary for a sasine of lands in Feu-Rule in 1560 and for a document for Lady Catherine Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1564. Clement (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘in Southfield’ in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. It is unclear if this was the local Southfield or perhaps the one near Kelso. James (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1490 sasine in which Robert Scott purchased land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. His wife may be the ‘uxori Jacobi Moscrop’ who received 40 shillings in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. James (16th/17th C.) one of several local men accused in a 1612 document of charging more than the allowed interest rate on loans. He is described as ‘in Flexis’ (presumably Flex) and was one of the men who appeared to answer the charges. Perhaps the same James is witness to a sasine of 1610 involving the Scotts and the Turnbulls and land on the Kirkwyd. John (17th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh. Along with Alexander Kirkton (Provost of Jedburgh) he was joint owner of Nether Bombie. He was referred to as ‘younger’, suggesting his father was also John. Patrick (15th C.) notary for Hawick’s earliest known sasine in 1453, where he is described as ‘bachelor in decrees, priest, Glasgow diocese’. He was also the notary for the 1452 sasine in which William Douglas of Drumlanrig was regranted the Barony of Hawick: he is there ‘Patricius Moscrop, presbyter Glasgnensis dioecesis, bacallarius in decretis’. He was notary for the sasine carried out at Milnsington in 1453. He was also notary for a legal instrument (relating to lands in Eckford) which was witnessed in the house of John Walche (presumably Waugh) in Hawick in 1454. He was notary for a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, signed at St. Mary’s Kirk in 1455, and the associated notorial instrument made at Branxholme the following year. He could be the Patrick who had a sasine for ‘Glennysland’ in Roxburghshire in 1461. Probably the same man was witness in 1478 to a document granting rights in Selkirk to David Scott, younger of Branxholme. Robert (17th C.) resident of ‘Dodburne in Kirkton Parioch’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Bucceleuch. He is recorded as ‘Ville Moscrope in Jedburgh’. William (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, his children were baptised in Hawick Parish. He probably lived in the country area towards Teviothead. He married Marion Rae and their children included: Margaret (b.1670); Isobel (b.1672); Janet (b.1676); and an unnamed son (b.1686). The witnesses in 1676 were schoolmaster John Purdon and James Elliot (also formerly ‘Moscrip’ and ‘Moscrope’).

Moses (mō-zēz) n. nickname in use in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

moss (mos) n. marshy land, bog, morass, moorland, usually high up and sometimes applied to an area used for cutting peats and turfs – ‘He’s guided them o’er moss and muir, O’er hill and houp, and mony ae down’[T], ‘How swift they flew! no eye could view Their track on heath or hill; Yet swift across both moor and moss, St. Clair did follow still’[JL], ‘...Of the snort of the nags as they toil at the steep; Of the suck of the hoofs when the moss rides deep’[WHO], rough grass that grows on moorland, especially Eriophorum vaginatum, the haretail cotton grass, and related species – ‘The plant, called the moss, rises before any other in the spring, affords excellent nourishment, and is carefully sought after by the flocks’[RAB] (the word occurs locally in place names, such as Adderstonelee Moss, Barnes Moss, Berry Moss, Bitchlaw Moss, Blackg Shoulder Moss, Blind Moss, Boghall Moss, Broadlee Moss, Buckstone Moss, Burnside Moss, Cartshaw Moss, Caver’s Moss, Craw’s Moss, Crookedge Moss, Dinley Moss, Dunlodge Moss, Ewen’s Moss, Fluther Moss, Gillfit Moss, Greenside Moss, Hallmoss, Harden Moss, Hare moss, Hawick Moss, Hilliesland Moss, Kames Moss, Kippielaw Moss, Lineart Moss, Lionfield Moss, Long Moss, Mabonlaw Moss, Mackside Moss, Malcolm’s Moss, Mossbrae, Mossburnford, Mossills Loch, Mosshouses, Moss Knowe, Mosspark Rig, Mosspatrick, Moss paul, Mosspeeble, Mossy Knowe, Picmaw Moss, Red moss, Riddelshiel Moss, Roberton Moss, Rotten Moss, Ruis Moss, Slatehillmoss, Staney ford Moss, St. Leonard’s Moss, Swarf Moss, Syn ton Moss, Tandlaw Moss, Tarras Moss, Tocher

Lodge Moss, Weaver’s Moss, Whitchesters Moss, Whithope Moss, Winninton Moss, Woolaw Moss and Wulliestruther Moss; see also mosses.

Moss (mos) n. John (17th/18th C.) maltman in Hawick. He married Bessie Richardson and their children included Helen (b.1725) and Janet (b.1738). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Robert Ruecastle and Henry Orrack. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Thomas Porteous and in 1743 he witnessed a baptism for James Oliver, tenant in Earlside.

mossbluiter (mos-bl’-ur) n., arch. the bittern, Botaurus stellaris, the common snipe, Capella gallinago – ‘...cultivating wastes, where the whaup and mossbluiter are heard, or where the wild fowls of heaven are destined to reside’ [RW] (also bog-bluter and sometimes heather-bleat, from the noise made by the snipe’s tail feathers during courtship, or the booming call of the male bittern).

Mossbrae (mos-brā) n. placename in Robertson Parish. In 1717 Robert Scott from there had a child baptised. It is unclear where exactly this might be.

Mossburnford (mos-burn-ford) n. hamlet about 3 miles south of Jedburgh. Mossburnford House dates from the early 19th century, but is on the site of a much earlier house. This was once home of a branch of the Rutherford families and was visited by Burns in 1787.

mosscheeper (mos-chee-pur) n., arch. the meadow pipit, Anthus pratensis (also muircheeper and titlin).

mosses (mo-seez) n., pl., arch. areas of moorland, particularly those from which peats are cut – ‘...and that they must not spread peats or set any bings within the said mosses for the space of fifteen days ...’ [BR1743], ‘...generally got his peats and turf for the use of his family from the mosses and muir in the Common’ [C&L1767].

moss-haggs (mos-hawgz) n., pl. boggy moorland, particularly pits where peats have previously been cut – ‘The breadth of the Border, parched and dried, Went sore from the swords of the sun, The wild flowers drooped and the moorfowl died In the moss hags one by one’ [WHO], ‘...a few acres of broken ground, termed in pastoral phrase ‘moss-hags’, lending a darker feature, and heightening the effect by contrast’ [RJS] (also spelled ‘moss-hags’; cf. hagg).

Mosshills Loch (mos-hilz-loch) n. small body of water in the Target Hills, lying between the Braid Road and Ormiston, also known as the Target Pond (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mossills Road (mos-hilz-rōd) n. former name for part of the road above the Wellogate, probably the narrow road towards Ormiston that goes past Mossills Loch. The name is used in Robert Murray’s ‘Hawick Songs and Song Writers’, when it is suggested that Sir Walter Scott may have conducted the Wordsworths here in 1803.

Mosshooses (mos-hoos-eez) n. Mosshouses, former cottages on the farm of Mackside that were lived in during the 18th and early 19th centuries, but were already gone by the beginning of the 20th.

Moss Knowe (mos-now) n. hill to the southeast of Shielswood Loch, being a shallow hill reaching a height of 299 m.

Mossman (mos-mun) n. Alan (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh, recorded in a charter of 1531/2 receiving the lands of Borthaugh and its mill from Roger Langlands. His acquisition of the land was involved in an agreement with Lawson of Highriggs, perhaps settling a debt of John Scott of Borthaugh. Later that year, however, he sold Borthaugh, Commonside and Dryden to Walter Scott of Branxholme and his wife Janet Kerr.

James (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In about 1678 he was fined 1000 merks for attending conventicles, this being a larger sum than the other 6 or 7 people who were fined at the same time. He was probably imprisoned on the Bass Rock, and after his fine was unpaid he was probably transported. However, it is possible was among the men who escaped from their ship in London. James (18th C.) early hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. There is a record of 1791 (from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of him receiving £10 towards purchasing a frame for making ribbed stockings, and a few years later he received money for a twisting mill. He is probably the stockmaker whose unnamed child is recorded dying in 1805 and whose unnamed child and grandchild are recorded dying in 1808. He is probably the merchant James whose son James died in Hawick in 1816. He may be the James who married Janet Renwick in 1783, and whose children (baptised in Hawick) included Elizabeth (b.1784) and Adam (b.1785).

James (18th/19th C.) fishing tackle maker of the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory.
Mosspark Rig

Margaret (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1785, when she was working for Adam Ogilvie.

Mosspark Rig (mos-pawrk-rig) n. area of moorland on the west side of the Hermitage Water near Leabaugh. There is an ancient enclosure near the river there, and another close to the influence with the Thie Sike.

Mosspatrick (mos-paw-trik) n. former name for an area roughly between the heads of the Allan Water and the Braehead Burn off Hermitage. This may correspond to the ‘Queen’s Mire’ on modern maps (it is recorded in Douglas of Cavers papers in the 15th century and is ‘McPatrick’ in 1516; ‘Mosspatrickhope swire’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Mosspatrickhope (mos-paw-trik-hop) n. former house at Mosspatrick, once a home of the Elliots. It is probably the ‘Mal Patrikhope’ which was granted by William Douglas, Earl of Angus, to Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1428, along with Braidie and ‘Le Schewis’, and granted to a William Douglas of Cavers in 1470, with sasine given in 1472. It was transcribed as ‘Makpatrikhope’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when it was valued at 10 merks and had William Elliot as tenant. Later in the 16th century it was still tenanted by men called William Elliot. It was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1632 (it is ‘Mal Patrikhope’ in 1428, ‘Mawpatrichop’ in 1470, ‘Mawpatrikhope’ in 1472, ‘Mospatrikhoip’ in 1581 and ranscribed ‘Makpatrikhope’ in 1632; ‘Moss park hope’ and ‘Mosspatrick hop-swyr’ appear on separate sheets of Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Mosspaul (mos-pawl) n. hotel on the A7 near the highest (853 ft) point of the road, on the watershed on the way to Langholm, and very close to the boundary of the Scottish Borders with Dumfries and Galloway. A shelter has existed here for hundreds of years; it has been suggested that this was perhaps established by the monks of Melrose Abbey, and although there is no evidence for this suggestion, they did own the neighbouring lands of Penangushope and others (in Ringwoodfield to the north). Lawrence Elliot was there in 1494/5. It was listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10. In 1525 the lands were among those in Ewesdale resigned by Simon Armstrong to his superior George, Lord Home; this was carried out at Kelso Abbey (suggesting this Abbey held control over Ewesdale Parish). This transfer of the superiority back to the Homes was confirmed in 1535 when the King revoked the preceding charter. It is probably the ‘Mossauld’ listed in 1663 among the lands owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. The inn is first definitively recorded in 1767 (by Dr. Carlyle of Inveresk), but could be much older. It became an important stopping point for mail coaches and carters when the road was improved in the mid-18th century. In the early days it is said to have been occasionally used by debtors trying to nip over the county border to escape either the Roxburghshire or Dumfriesshire authorities. James Ruickbie wrote a poem after seeing the improvements made to the buildings in the early years of the 19th century. Robert Govenlock was landlord for 45 years until 1861. The hotel was much improved, with a large stable area to the west, consisting of as many as 42 stalls, where the coaches horses were exchanged. It was a very busy place for several decades. However, with the building of the Hawick-Carlisle railway the hotel fell into disuse, its licence lapsing in 1865, and the building becoming derelict in the latter part of the 19th century. There were tall poles lining the road at intervals, which were used to guide the coaches through snow drifts; some were still in place in the early 20th century. The inn was resuscitated in 1900 through a private company of local gentlemen, largely to cater for cycling enthusiasts, the land being feued on good terms for use as a wayside hostelry. The modern building was smaller than its predecessor. A bowling green was also added for a while on the western side and a 6-hole golf course was also opened. It is also the location of the Mosspaul ride out of 24 miles over rough moorland. This first took place in 1901, and is traditionally 2 weeks before Common Riding weekend. The Mosstroopers’ Club erected a memorial cairn there in 2000 – ‘Oot get yon spacial feelin as the Saxhorn Band leads the Mosstroopers safe in frae Mosspaul’ [IWL] (the name is probably derived from the boggy ground, with the roots being the old Celtic ‘megestu’ for ‘open land’ and ‘pol’ suggesting ‘boggy hollow’ or ‘upland stream’; the 2nd syllable has also been suggested to indicate that a pole here once marked the county boundary, but that seems less likely; there is an even more fanciful suggestion that it relates to a chapel to St. Paul that may have been on the site, but there is no evidence for this, and it may be a confusion with the chapel to St. Paul which was a few miles further south at Ewes Doors; the name perhaps first appears in 1494/5 as ‘mos paul’; it is ‘Mospall’ in 1506, ‘Mosspaul’ in 1509/10, ‘Mospall’ in 1525 and ‘Mospaule’ in 1535).
Mosspaul Hotel

Mosspaul Bothy (mos-pawl-bo-thee) n. house at Mosspaul, behind the hotel. It was rebuilt fairly recently, on the site of a former building, which local tradition says was itself on the site of the ancient wayside hostel dedicated to St. Paul (for which there is no evidence of course).

Mosspaul Burn (mos-pawl-burn) n. stream that flows to the west to join the Black Burn and Lang Grain near Mosspaul. The upper part rises on Carlin Tooth and flows through Penangus Hope, forming part of the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire. Note that the Black Burn is also called the Mosspaul Burn as it runs to the south to join the Ewes Water.

the Mosspaul Club (thu-mos-pawl-klub) n. former organization composed of the Directors of the committee that raised funds for the rebuilding of Mosspaul Hotel, plus some of their friends. It was in some loose sense a continuation of the earlier Wisp Club. It was formed in 1900 and held an annual outing and dinner at the hotel. Dr. McLeod was the first President. The dinners were interrupted by WWI, and although it met again after the war, it petered out a few years later.

Mosspaulgreen (mos-pawl-green) n. area near Mosspaul. It was one of the ‘Mosspaulgreen to Haremoss’ Turnpike road, improved about 1770, being the Roxburghshire part of what became the A7.

Mosspaul Hotel (mos-pawl-ho-tel) n. name sometimes used for the hotel at Mosspaul, formerly called the ‘Mosspaul Inn’.

Mosspesbile (mos-pee-bul) n. farm on the A7 between Mosspaul and Langholm, just south of Unthank. Like other parts of Ewesdale, the superiority was held by the Homes in the early 16th century. Adam Scott was a farmer there in 1585. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it was combined with ‘Byerceleghwater’, consisting of 1592 acres, bounded by Tarras, lands of the Laird of Arkleton and Unthank. Robert Aitchison was there in at least the period 1785–97. In 1800 it was leased by William Moffat. Alexander Borthwick was farmer in 1841 and Capt. Stewart in the 1860s. There are remains of an ancient settlement south-east of the farmhouse (it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 maps as ‘Mospeel’ and ‘Mospepill’ and Blanei’s 1654 map as ‘Mosspeels’; it is ‘Mospeule’ in 1506, ‘Mospeble’ in 1509/10, ‘Mospebill’ in 1525, ‘Mospeble’ in 1535, ‘Mospebil’ in 1585 and ‘Mosspeople’ in 1663; the name is probably of Cumbric origin, meaning ‘field of the tents’).

Mosspesble Cottage (mos-pee-bul-koe’eej) n. former cottage near Mosspesbile farm in the Ewes valley. John Murray and 3 others were living there in 1841.

Moss Place (mos-plis) n. small street in Newcastle-on-Tyne, off North Hermitage Street.

Moss Road (mos-rod) n. street in Newcastle-on-Tyne, off North Hermitage Street.

Moss Toor (mos-toor, -toor) n. ruined 15th century tower near Eckford, which could only be approached through the march from a causeway on the north side. It was destroyed in 1523, rebuilt and burned by Sir Ralph Evers men in 1544.

mosstroop (mos-troop) v., arch. to freeboot, rieve – ‘Whitslade is slumbering undisturbed and down in Harden Glen The tall trees murmur in their dreams of Wat’s mosstrooping men’ [WHO].

mosstrooper (mos-troo-pur) n. one of a band of raiders operating on the boggy moorland of the Borders around the 17th century, a marauder – ‘By moor and moss and river, To the swish of swathèd grass And burnside reeds aquiver, The dead mosstroopers pass’ [RSC].

Mosstrooper (mos-troo-pur) n. member of the Ancient Order of Mosstroopers. Membership consists of those who have ridden to Mosspaul and back on the annual ride-out.

the Mosstroopers’ Club (thu-mos-troo-purs-klub) n. club formed of members of the Ancient Order of Mosstroopers. It existed from probably 1901, when there was a ride-out to the newly opened Mosspaul Hotel, with the riders being entertained there by the directors. There was originally a ‘secret’ initiation ceremony, with new members smearing the sign of ‘the Hawick cross’ on their foreheads. It was ‘reconstituted’ following the suggestion of J.E.D. Murray at a meeting in 1920. One of the main aims was to encourage mounted supporters to follow the Cornet. The first club President was T.G. Winning in 1920 and there is a new President each year. The Club motto is ‘Aye Defend’, their song is ‘The Mosstrooper’s Song’, and the Club badge was designed by J.E.D. Murray, with his own favourite horse’s head making the main part of the design. Badges were presented to some women in the period 1920–31, with this ceasing after a female rider broke her leg, The Club holds an annual dinner, Burns night, race meetings and other events, and regularly contributes to causes that preserve the town’s traditions. A CD was released under the Club’s auspices in 2013.
The Mosstrooper’s Song

The Mosstrooper’s Song (Thu-mos-troopurs-sawng) n. song composed by Adam Colledge, with words by J.E.D. Murray, written in 1928 and published in 1931, with the subtitle ‘Four Hunder Horsemens’. It was officially adopted as the anthem of the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1937. The tune bears a similarity to Costa’s ‘March of the Israelites’. It has remained popular despite having a different chorus for each verse. Adam Inglis changed the accompaniment for the 1957 song book, which probably added to its popularity. It was slightly altered again by Ian Seeley for the 2001 song anthology.

Mossy Knowe (mo-see-now) n. standing on the south side of the Teviot, where the Northhouse Burn joins. William Murray was joiner there in the early 19th century. Widow Mary Murray and her family were there in 1841. This area is also known as ‘Change Hoose’. The name may derive from the enclosure about 500 yards further up the River. This is a low earthen bank, much eroded, covering an area about 300 ft by 200 ft with a gap in the north-east (it is Moozieknowe in 1841).

the Mote (Thu-mō) n. Norman built earthwork, once topped by a defensive wooden tower, 312 feet (95 m) round at its base (about 30 m diameter) and 25–30 feet (about 8 m) high. It is situated in Mote Park, roughly behind 23 Loan. In the 19th century it was conjectured to be associated with Druids, sun-worship and human sacrifice, and was also believed to be a burial mound. It was also traditionally said to have been a place of justice (as first stated by Robert Wilson). An archaeological investigation by Dr. Alexander O. Curle in 1912 revealed an ancient ditch and several artefacts (now in the Museum) of Norman date, clearing up any doubt about its origin; this included pottery shards, a bone needle and a coin of Henry II. It was probably a fairly standard ‘mote and bailey’ construction (as should always have been clear, given the name), with the bailey to the north-east, enclosed in a wooden palisade. This was the seat of the Lovels and possibly Douglasses until they moved to where Drumlanrig’s Tower is now. It is likely that the location had legal significance long after the wooden structure on the top was gone. In 1484 the sasine for the Barony of Hawick was granted ‘at the principal messuage of the barony of Hawick, called the Mote’, and the same phrase was repeated in 1514; this suggests that the site (whether or not there was still a building there) was at that point recognised as the Baron’s legal headquarters. Lands in that area were once held by a branch of the Scotts, with William ‘in the Mott’ being one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch mentioned by Scott of Satchells. The Mote is now in the centre of a park and has a staircase (38 steps) and seat on top. Each Common Riding the Cornet and other Principals sing ‘Teribus’ on the top of the Mote to greet the Saturday dawn (although in 1896 this visit was shifted to 1.30 a.m.; this tradition is shown in a photograph from 1911. It may be that the Mote once formed a more important part of the Common Riding events, since in about 1710 Rev. Robert Cunningham wrote in his poem that this ‘artful Mount’ was where the natives ‘acted all their games of May’ – ‘It first be torn not by the plough The ancient bonny green Moat-Knowe; For sair I fear it, too, maun fall, Though reared by hands Druidical’ [AD], ‘‘Is it natural or artificial?’ asked a stranger at a little boy. ‘It’s neither of the two; it’s just the moat’’ [RJT], ‘We’ve a Moat, which down the ages, Witnessed many a deed of fame’ [TC], ‘And the Moat’s there, and the Haugh’s there, And the auld soul-stirring songs’ [WL], ‘The green auld Mote stands sentinel The echo o’ St. Mary’s bell Still rings oot owre hill and dell In Hawick ma Border hame’ [IWL] (often locally spelled ‘Moat’, leading to some confusion about its origin, with people incorrectly envisioning a water-filled ditch, rather than a defensive mound; note also that hills where open air courts were held were often called ‘moot-hills’, and this may also be relevant to the origin, or simply another source of confusion; it is ‘le Mott de Hawik’ in 1511, ‘le Mott in Hawyk’ in 1511/2 and ‘the Mote’ in 1793 and 1821; other surviving examples of mottes include those at Riddell, the Haining and Phenzhopeaugh).

Mother Riley’s (mu-thur-rî-leez) n. former popular name of the Bourtree Place fish and chip shop, named for the older Mrs. Shiel, after the popular films of the 1930s and 40s – ‘Headin Weensland way, in Bourtree Place an auld freend Mountbenger (mown’-beng-gur) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, near the Gordon Arms, where the Mountbenger Burn meets the Yarrow Water. Mountbenger Law, to the north, reaches a height of 543 m. It was formerly Crown land, leased to the Crichtons in the late 15th century (‘Es-tir Munbergeris’ and ‘Westir Munbergeris’ are recorded in 1489 and ‘Montberger’ in 1492; ‘West Munbenger’ and ‘East Munbenger’ are on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Mount Common (mown’-ko-min) n. lands in the Ettrick valley, by the Tima Water. Mount-common Hill reaches a height of 462 m. The lands were owned by the Crown from about 1456. The lands were let at ‘half ferme’ to David Scott (probably of Buccleuch) in 1459. They were described as a land of 2 steadings in 1488, namely Deephope and Gamescleuch. They were let to Alexander Scott and David Scott in 1469. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1541 it was ‘Montcolmone, alias Deiphope’, when occupied by William Scott, paying £10 yearly. It was once part of the parish of Rankilburn. It has long been part of the Buccleuch estates (it is ‘Moncolmone’ in 1456, ‘Montcolman’ in 1459 and 1469, ‘Montcowmane’ in 1488, ‘Montcowman’ in 1492 and ‘Montcommone’ in 1502; ‘Mon Comon Hill’ is marked on Blaen’s 1654 map).

mounteback (mown’-ee-bawk, mun’-ee-bawk) n., arch. charlatan, trickster – ‘Aw wonder at youn mountebacks disna think shame at gan ging into Mr. Nixon’s seat’ [RM] (many spellings exist; see also muntybank).

Mount Hawick (mownt-ha-wik) n. hill in Western Australia, south-west of the town of Halls Creek. It was named on April 27th 1894 by David W. Carnegie (1871–1900, youngest son of the Earl of Southesk), as described in his book ‘Spinifex and Sand, A Narrative of Five Years’ Pioneering and Exploration in Western Australiaw’ (1898). Carnegie’s journey across Western Australia is described as one of the last great explorations of the Australian wilderness. He named it after his prospecting partner Lord Percy Douglas (who was also Lord Douglas of Hawick). Carnegie died in Nigeria as a result of being shot with a poisoned arrow. Mount Hawick is approximately at Latitude 18°54' South, Longitude 127°1' East (there is also a separate ‘Hawick Hill’ in Western Australia).

the Mountain Sang (thu-mown’-in-sawng) n. name sometimes used for the ‘Auld Sang’, particularly as sung at the Tower Knowe when the Cornet and supporters mount their horses for the marching of the Common on the Friday. The singing is led by the official ‘Sang Singer’. Until 1921 it was sung from a window of a room at the Tower, while from 1922 it has been performed on the steps outside.

mooster (mow-sturr) n., arch. moisture – ‘For daye an’ nght thy han’ was hivie apon me: my moustir is turnet intil the drouth o’ simmer’ [HSR].

Mouswald (mows-wawld) n. Gilbert (14th/15th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1404 when he exchanged for another benefice with John de Merton. He appears to have still held it in 1308, but this is somewhat confusing, since William Macmorrin also held the position in that year. He gifted a missal to Glasgow Cathedral in about 1400.

mout (mowt, mow) v., arch. to eat food with small bites, nibble (also moot and cf. mowp).

Muckle Knowe (mu-kul-now) n. hill between the Priesthaugh and Dod Burns, to the south of Gray Coat. It reaches a height of 396 m and has a cairn on a rocky outcrop a little south of the peak (it is ‘Meikle Knowe’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Muckle leet (thu-mu-kul-le’t) n. phrase used in the 18th and early 19th centuries for the list of acquaintances named by the friends listed by the Cornet. This formed the longer list of people formally invited to the Common Riding festivities – ‘There was the Cornet’s leets, enumerating his own circle of acquaintances, and there was the ‘muckle leet’, prepared by the Cornet in consultation with his immediate associates’[WSR].

Muckle Mou’d Meg (mu-kul-mood-meg) n. actually Agnes Murray, daughter of the Laird of Elibank, apparently hard to marry off because of her appearance, she eventually married Sir William Scott of Harden in a choice between her and the gallows. Details of the real marriage are preserved in 2 separate contracts, separated by a few months in 1611. The romanticised story is told in the ballad, one version of which is Hogg’s ‘The Fray at Elibank’. Wullie Landles also wrote a long poem based on the story – ‘In loan or steedin’ wher’er they saw her, Muckle Mou’d Meg was the name they’d caa her’[WL], ‘What Am A ti dae, mun, what Am A ti dae? Ave either got ti mairry Meg or face the hingin tree. Was ever man gien sic a choice, doon through a history? What Am A ti dae, mun, what Am a ti dae?’[IWL].

muckle wheel (mu-kul-wheel) n., arch. simple design for a spinning wheel popular in the 18th century. In the earliest form there was a large, wooden fly-wheel, which was propelled by a shove of the hand, with the operator walking backwards to draw out the yarn, the length of which was then wound on a spindle and the process repeated. Later a drive belt linked the small spindle to the large wheel, which was still typically driven by hand until foot treadles came in much later. This was the first machine to be widely used in the beginnings of the knitwear industry in Hawick, and was common in homes into the 19th century. It was effectively replaced by the ‘spinning Jenny’ – ‘…a small trade in yarns spun by women on the ‘muckle’ wheel …’ [WSR] (also known as the ‘meikle wheel’; cf. little wheel).

Muckle Whitlaw see Meikle Whitlaw

Muckle Wrae Cleuch (mu-kul-râ-klooach) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Windy Knowe and lying to the west of Little Wrae Cleuch. Both streams have steep gorges.

Yer haunts nae mair she will molest, On muir or mead’ [JH], ‘I met a man ootbye the muir; He watcht a rabbit in a snare’ [DH] (note that the word is now most often pronounced mär, while the older pronunciation was mür or a deep vowel combining i and a; it is not always clear which pronunciation is meant when it is written ‘muir’).

the Muir (thu-mür, mewr, moor, mär) n. Hawick Moor (see also the Mair).

the Mair (thu-mür, mewr) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘The Mure’ in the 1541 rental roll. The precise location is uncertain, but they are listed between Brighouse and Heuchhouse, with a value of 5 shillings and 4 pence.

Muir (mewr) n. Gordon (1959– ) son of Bob and Jean, he attended the High School and then trained as a graphic designer in London and New Mexico. He worked for a while as a woodblock artist in Tokyo and in 1984 was a founding partner of Border Image. Along with his old school friend Doug Veitch, he brought the Zimbabwean band the Bhundu Boys to Britain in 1986. He then managed them on a year long tour, which was pivotal in the World Music movement of the time. As a sculptor he has several pieces in public spaces, e.g. ‘Alex the Goose and Friend’ and ‘Leap of Faith’ in Belfast, a set of pieces in Coatbridge and memorials to the men who died building the Forth Bridge. James (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. His surname is written as ‘Muere’. Jean (1933–) schoolteacher and long-time Cavers resident, author of ‘Cavers: a keek in the window’ (2000). She married Acting Father Bob, and has been involved with the Archeological Society. She also wrote ‘Airchie Oliver’s a Hunder and a Half’ and co-wrote ‘Airchie Oliver’s Birthday Cairds’ with Jim Coltman. In 2015, she and her husband and son wrote an article about the leaders of the Scottish Renaissance, MacDiarmid and Johnstone being friends of the family. John of Rowallan (d.1513) grandson of Robert and son of John and Elizabeth Stewart. In 1508 he was directed by the Privy Council to grant ‘warrandice’ to George Scott of Whames (grandson of Stephen Scott of Muirhouse) in the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood. In 1510/1 George Scott wrote a letter of acquaintance, stating that he (John) had paid him (George) the £40 and 14 merks owed for these lands. He married Margaret, 3rd daughter of Archibald Boyd of Bonshaw; they had 4 sons (including Mungo, who succeeded) and 4 daughters. He was killed at Flodden. John (d.1579) Rector of Ashkirk from about the time of the Reformation. He is recorded as holding the parsonage of Ashkirk Parish until his demission in 1570, when it was presented to John Hamilton; he is there recorded as ‘John Murie’. He was deprived in 1573 for failing to subscribe to articles of religion. He is presumably the same ‘Sir John Muir’ who died in 1579 when the vicarage of Ashkirk was given to Thomas Cranstoun. John (17th C.) recorded as being in Weensland in 1687 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Blyth and the witnesses were James Gray and James Miller. He could be the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. John (17th C.) carrier listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He could be the same as the John who was in Weensland. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Esther Turnbull in 1784 and their children included: James (b.1785); Nelly (b.1785); and John (b.1788). He may be the 70-year old recorded at Deanburnhaugh in the 1841 census, living with Janet (probably his daughter), and Walter Nichol (who later married Janet). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert of Rowallan (d.1504) from near Kilmarnock in Ayrshire, he was nicknamed ‘the Rud’. He held the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood in 1462 as security for a loan to Stephen Scott of Muirhouse. He paid 200 merks for these lands, the document being signed in Edinburgh (presumably where he was from). His name is written ‘Robertus Mure de Rowallane’. It seems unlikely he ever lived in the area. In 1477 he gave a discharge to Robert Scott of ‘Dogehauch’ for the balance of the loan. He married Margaret Newton, daughter of the Laird of Mitchelhill. They had 4 sons (including John, who succeeded) and a daughter. In 1508 his grandson John was directed by the Privy Council to grant ‘warrandice’ to George Scott in the same lands.

Rev. Robert (1832/3–1882) from Ayr, he became minister at Holm of Balfron and then minister of Allars Church from 1864. He is said to have been of saintly character and with a very liberal outlook. He suffered from ill-health for several years and died in office, leaving a 9 month vacancy at Allars. He wrote ‘The Perpetuity of Christian Friendship’ in Logan’s ‘Words of Comfort’ and contributed articles to ‘Forward’. He married Susan, daughter of Dundee Merchant William Duncan. They had 4 daughters and 1 son: one daughter wrote short stories; one was a classical scholar; Anne Davidson, who became a well-known watercolour artist; and Sir Robert. Sir Robert, F.R.S. (1864–1959) son of Rev. Robert, he was born at Balfron, Stirlingshire, but his father became minister at Hawick shortly after he was born. He spent 16 years growing up in Hawick. He was educated at Hawick Grammar School and Teviot Grove Academy and then Edinburgh University. He chose to follow a career in pathology, first working in Edinburgh, then being offered the Chair of Pathology at St. Andrews and then he was Professor of Pathology at the University of Glasgow 1899–1936. He served on the Medical Research Council and many other bodies related with cancer and disease. During WWI he had a position overseeing hospitals in Scotland. He became a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1911, had a royal medal in 1929, was knighted in 1934 and received the Lister Medal in 1936. He was also a member of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He returned to Hawick in 1926 as the Callants’ Club guest. He was said to have a shy and aloof character, but delighted in deflating pompous colleagues. He never married, but in later life live with 2 of his sisters in Edinburgh. At the age of almost 90 he flew to Australia to visit his eldest sister. He died in Edinburgh. His ‘Manual of Bacteriology’ (1897) went through several editions, and his ‘Textbook of Pathology’ (1924) was extremely successful. Robert ‘Bob’ (1930–) local vet, who was Acting Father in 1975. He was the first Acting Father to accompany the ‘Big Threi’ to the Coble on the Saturday. He was President of the Callants’ Club. He is married to Jean and father of Gordon, John and Janet (formerly written ‘Mure’ and sometimes ‘Moor’).

muir-band (meuwr-bawnd) n., arch. a hard layer of sand and clay below the topsoil, impervious to water, and believed to hinder the full exploitation of the land – ‘...there exits, not much below the surface, a stiff, dense and sterile clay, which denies all passage to moisture, as well as to the roots of plants ...commonly denominated ‘muir-band’ ...’ [RJE] (also muir-bund).

muir-burn (meuwr-burn) n., arch. a controlled burning of moorland to encourage new growth – ‘...How grand the scene you russet down displays, While far the withering heaths with moorburn blaze!’ [JL].

The Muir Burn (thu-muir-, mār-burn) n. stream that joins the Liddel at the very southernmost point of Castleton Parish. It forms part of the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire. The area has many signs of ancient use, including rig and furrow field markings, enclosures, a former lime quarry and workings, and several burnt mounds. Additionally there is the site of a chapel, on the east bank of the stream, but over the Dumfriesshire line. The chapel remains measure about 12.5 m by 5 m, with a doorway on the south side. The hill there is still known as Chapel Knowe. This is probably the ‘landis of Mureburne’ listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch possessed in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch (it is ‘Mire burn’ in 1718, ‘Mare Burn’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘The Mareburn’ in 1821).

muir-cheeper (meuwr-chee-pur) n., arch. the meadow pipit, Anthus pratensis (also mocccheeper and titlin).

Muir Ferm (meuwr-ferm) n. former name for Pilmuir farm.

Muirferm (meuwr-ferm) n. former name for a farmstead in Wilton Parish. It is recorded as ‘Moorfarm’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with James Grieve the farmer there. It is unclear where this was, but presumably distinct from Muirfield.
Muirfield

Muirfield (mewr-feeld) n. area between Groundstone and Hassendean. The lands and farm were formerly part of Hassendean Common, which was divided in the late 18th century. William Douglas was recorded there in 1772. George Bell was farmer there in 1797. Andrew Little was shepherd there in 1835. Labourer Adam Brydon was there in 1841. A drove road used to pass over here, between Hassendean Common and Groundstone. To the north-east are signs of rig and furrow cultivation (also called ‘Moorfield’, so marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Muirfield (mewr-feeld) n. former name for lands in Abbotrule. It is recorded in the 1678 valuation roll as ‘Muirfield acres (Abbotrule)’ when Charles Kerr held the teinds.

muirfowl (mewr-fowl) n., arch. the red grouse, Lagopus scoticus – ‘The muirfowl a’ they kenn’d her weel, The maukin oft she gar’d them squeal’ [JH].

Muirheid (mewr-heed) n. (Muirhead) Andrew see Andrew de Durisdeer. George (15th/16th C.) son and heir of Robert of Windyhill in Dumfriesshire. He appears to have had a dispute with Douglas of Cavers over the £10 lands of Denholm Mains. He was recorded in 1490 as ‘Master George Murehede’ when he granted a charter of lands within Denholm and Cavers. He gave sasine of these lands to William Douglas of Cavers in 1491/2. He was said to be a ‘familiar servitor’ of the King and was probably related to Master Richard ‘Murehead’ who was Lord Clerk Register and Secretary. He married Anabelle Grierson, with whom he is recorded in a charter for Windyhills in 1506/7. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1479 when James Alemoor of that Ilk and John Turnbull ‘in the Fithe’ were ordered to pay rentals to him for his lands in Cavers Parish. Additionally William Douglas of Cavers did not appear when called to pay the £25 owed for the mails of these same lands. In 1490 his son and heir George had a charter from James IV for lands in ‘the dominical lands of Denhame, and ten-pound land lying in the town and territory of Cavers.’ He is recorded as being of ‘Windyhillis’, which is probably the village of Windyhills near Closeburn, Dumfriesshire. Witnesses to the document were Bishop Robert Muirhead of Glasgow and Dean Richard Muirhead of Glasgow, who were presumably relatives. Rev. Robert (1706/7–84) minister of Southdean Parish from 1756 until his death. He married Elizabeth Ainslie in 1779, and she died in 1800.

Muirhouse

Muirhouse (mewr-hoos) n. Muirhouse, former name for lands in the barony of Crichton and county of Roxburghshire. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 15th century. The name is lost, and the precise location is uncertain (but somewhere near Pathhead). Stephen Scott had a charter of Muirhouse in 1450 and a sasine in 1463; he appears to be the same man who was also ‘of Wilton’ as well as other lands, and was a son of Robert Scott of Rankleburn. Muirhouse was inherited by Stephen’s son Robert, who had a sasine in 1464, then there was a dispute over inheritance by Robert’s son George (also of Borthaugh), with a counter-claim by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. George Scott must have won this case, since his son John had a confirmation in these lands in 1526/7 (note that there are many other places of the same name, including one near Lilliardsedge, another near Dyfesdale in Dumfriesshire and at least 6 others in Midlothian; it is ‘Muirhaus’ in 1464 and ‘Mvrhous’ in 1505).

Muirhooselaw (mewr-hoos-law) n. Muirhooselaw, place name south of Maxton, being essentially the same place as Ancrum Moor and Lilliard’s Edge, and hence sometimes referred to as the site of the Battle of Ancrum Moor in 1545. A trial of 1502 describes how 4 Henrisons were taken from their farm there by rievers and ransomed to the English. It is recorded being leased from Thomas Hamilton to John Haliburton in the 17th century. Haliburton of Muirhouselaw gave evidence at the trial of George Turnbull of Belses in 1603. Many of the buildings of the estate are in a picturesque pink-red sandstone (the name ‘Muirhouse’, now lost, deriving from the Old English ‘mor hus’, meaning ‘house on the moor’, first appears about 1200, while this name first appears in 1529 as ‘Murrieslaw’ and is ‘Moreislaw’ in 1603; it is ‘Murrislaw’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Muirknowe (mewr-, mewr-, mür-now) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Riddell. According to the services of heirs in 1636 and 1669 they corresponded to part of the lands of West Lilliesleaf (it is ‘Murieknow’ in 1636 and ‘Muirieknow’ in 1669).

muirland (mooor-, mewr-, mür-lind) n. moorland – ‘I like to drink the muirland wells, For that was aye the hame for me’ [DA]. ‘...Ma mother’s muirland hame’ [JEDM], ‘Gin ye will leave your muirland hame, An’ kin o’ low degree, To wed wi’ ane o’ noble name, – Wi’ rank an’ wealth to gie!’ [JT], ‘...Bi the burns o’ the muirland where lanely whaups cry’ [DH], ‘When the snell wind Muirlaw (mewr-, mür-law) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers. It is listed as ‘Murelaw’ in a 1511 charter of the Douglasses of Cavers, along with ‘Drileth, Elrechill, and Dennummains’. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. The precise location is unknown, but presumably near Denholm (it is ‘Murlaw’ in 1687 and ‘Muirlaw’ in 1698).

muir-man (mür-, moor-man) n., poet. an inhabitant of the moors, outdoor worker, particularly on the Border – ‘It fell about the Lammas time, When the muir-men won their hay’ [T], ‘Muirmen were mawin’ hay far doun The hill-side, lowne an’ braid . . . ’[ECB].

Muir Park (mewr-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish, valued at £29 4s in 1779. It was listed separately from Minto Muir Park, and was mong lands dispossed to Sir John Dalrymple in liferent. In 1811 it was owned by Lord Minto.

Muir Plantin (mewr-plan-tin) n. plantation to the east of the A7 between Newton and Groundshie, stone Heights, lying to the south of Muirfield.

Muirshaugh (mewrz-hawch) n. former lands in the Barony of Hawick. The exact location is unknown. They are listed along with Kirkton in Wilton Parish. It may be the same as Muirside.

Muirside (mewr-sid) n. former name for a farm in Wilton Parish. It may be the same as Muirfield. James Nichol was there in 1791.

He opened the War Memorial in the Park at a special ceremony in 1920. Rev. William (1798/9–1883) rope-maker from Berwick who became Congregational Church minister for around 40 years. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory he was a rope and twine maker and flax dresser on the High Street. He appears to have first become minister of the newly (re-)formed congregation in 1836, which faltered for several years, with a 2nd splinter Church also forming in 1842. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was a rope-maker at the East Port and in the 1841 census he was at ‘Eastend’ and still a rope-maker. By 1851 he was at 1 Bourtree Place and minister of the ‘Cong. Union Chapel’. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was still listed as a roper-maker, and separately as minister of the Independent Chapel on Melgund Place.

Munro who is recorded in about 1874 as owner of the `Cong. Union Chapel'. In Slater's 1852 directory he was still listed as a roper-maker, and separately as minister of the Independent Chapel on Melgund Place. In 1847 he invited John Rutherford of Kelso to preach at a series of prayer meetings in Hawick, which took place in the Spring of 1848, ultimately lasting for 7 weeks, and led to the founding of the Evangelical Union Kirk in Hawick (the present Congregational Kirk). However, some dispute led to him to withdraw his support from this ‘mission’, hence the forming of the E.U. Kirk, separate from his own. He was Chairman of the Parochial Board for 20 years and active in public service. He was also first Vice-President of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society. He was noted for courageously visiting the sick and dying during the 1849 cholera epidemic, as a result of which he had a public funeral. He was succeeded as minister in 1873 by Rev. W.L. Walker, by which time the congregation must have been dwindling. He is probably the William Munro who is recorded in about 1874 as owner of the ‘particate lands’ that had earlier been owned by Robert Herkness. He married Alison, daughter of Yeddie Smail. Their children included: Alexander (b.1826); Eliza (b.1830), who was an infant teacher; Adam (b.1834), who continued the rope-making business; Agnes (b.c.1837); Alison (b.c.1839); Margaret (‘Maggie’, b.c.1842); William Alexander (b.1844); Charles (b.1847); Mary (b.c.1850); and an unnamed son who died in 1840. He may also have had a son John who, Ronald ‘Ronnie’ Hawick man who was a swimming internationalist. He was also the first official President of the 1514 Club in 1977.

Murray see Earl o Murray

Murray (mu-ri) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) resident of Muselee. In 1502 John Scott in Walls had remission for stealing a horse from him. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Gledstains and their children included Rachel (b.1672) and James (b.1689). Adam (17th C.) tenant in Templehall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Mains in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may have been son of James, recorded in Mains in 1682. Adam (b.1827/8) from Newcastleton, he was a baker at 41 High Street. His wife was Ann and their children included Thomas, Christina, Margaret and James. Agnes (b.1806/7) grocer on the Loan. She was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 she was living with her husband, a milliner, living with her sisters Margaret and Jane. Agnes (b.1822/3) straw hat maker in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1851 she was a widow, living at about 11 Loan with their children Thomas, Adam, William, Agnes and Robert. It is not known what her maiden name was. Agnes (17th C.) listed at Todshawhaugh among ‘The poor in Hauick Parich’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Agnes (b.1829{1916) daughter of Andrew of Spittal Tower. She married railway guard James Lambert and later kept a wash-house at 29 Wellogate Place. Her daughter Helen kept up the wash-house. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1428/9 when he gave a sasine at the command of Archibald, Earl of Douglas, of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He may have been an officer or bailie for the Baron or Earl, or possibly he held the rights of the Barony while the heir to Drumlanrig was a minor. He is probably the ‘Sandris of murray’ on an assize for lands in Bemersyde in 1425. He is also probably the ‘Alexandrum de Murrase’ who was on the inquest for the lands of Eilrig in 1426. Probably the same ‘Alexandro de Murray’ witnessed the 1431 document transferring Heap from the Langlands’ to the Scotts; in his attestation to the same transfer he is ‘Alysander off Murray off Cranstoun’. In 1443 he is ‘Alexander ‘de Moravia’ of Cranston when witness to a charter for William Cranston of Craling. Alexander (d.bef. 1485) Rector of Hawick. He was 2nd son of John of Philiphaugh, brother of Patrick of Falahill and uncle of John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’. As a cleric, he was sometimes referred to as ‘Master’. He was mentioned regularly in the Exchequer Rolls from at least 1460, being King’s Receiver and then Clerk of the Chancery from 1465. He was Clerk and Director of the Chancery of Scotland in 1477. He was also one of the Auditors of the Exchequer and a Canon of Moray from at least 1464. His name appears between 1476 and 1482 as Rector of Hawick. In 1476/7 he was listed as Rector of Hawick and Director of the Chancery when he has a charter for lands in Berwick. In 1479 he brought an action against David Scott of Buccleuch for the sum of 44 pounds of tax belonging to the church, but collected by Scott; there is no record of how this was resolved. Also in 1479 he was assigned the ‘grassum’ for part of the lands of ‘Warmwod’ in Ettrick Ward. He was listed as ‘rectore de Hawik’ when he witnessed a charter for James Hunter, Rector of Cranston. In 1482 he was also recorded as Rector of ‘Pettty and Brachly’ when witness to an Inverness-shire document (along with the Rector of Ettrick Forest and others). About 1484 he appears to have himself been ‘rector of The Forest’ (i.e. Yarrow Kirk), and was still Director of the Chancery. His brother William is mentioned in 1485, by which time he was deceased. In 1536/7 it is written that John Scott took over as Vicear of Hawick following the death of Alexander Murray; however, this must either be an error or a later man of the same name. Alexander of Orchard (16th C.) recorded in 1575/6 making a complaint regarding ‘mails’ for Elibank. It is unclear how he was related to other Murrays, but he was surely connected with the Murrays of Blackbranory. Alexander (d.1682) son and heir of Sir Robert of Priestfield. In 1672 he was served heir to his father’s lands in Hawick. This was explicitly the annual rent of 600 merks for the 20 husbandlands of lands in the east of the Town of Hawick and 8 husbandlands of land in the west of Hawick. It is unclear where these lands were, why they were owned by Murrays, and what happened to them. He married Janet, daughter of James Rocheid of Inverleith. He was succeeded by his son Sir Alexander of Melgum (1682–1713), who married Grizel, daughter of Patrick Kynymound of that Ilk. Alexander (b.c.1790) from Brownmuir in Selkirkshire, he was a cattle dealer in Lilliesleaf. He lived with his brothers William (a teacher) and Walter (an agricultural labourer) on the Loan in 1841 on the south side of Main Street in 1851 and on the south side of Main Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included Thomas, Jessie, Margaret and John W. He was still alive in 1861, although a widower. Alexander Davidson (1840–1907) son of Thomas, clothier in Denholm and Hawick, with his mother being Mary Scott, daughter of
Charles Scott, Hawick linen manufacturer. He was younger brother of Sir J.A.H. He was an apprentice at the Hawick Advertiser and was local correspondent for the Southern Reporter. He was a prominent member of the Hawick Mutual Improvement Society. He left Hawick in 1862 to become editor of the Peebleshire Advertiser. He later was editor of the Fife Journal and Dumfries Courier, before becoming editor of the Newcastle Daily Journal, a position he held for 37 years. He married Elizabeth Stuart Honeyman of Cuchar, and she died in 1926, aged 81. They had 7 children. He published a story ‘Charnwood; or, lost, found and faithful!’ in 1876, set in the Borders in the mid-19th century, and a novel ‘The Barringtons’ in 1908. Andrew of Blackbarony (16th C.) son of John, who was Burgess of Edinburgh, and died at Flodden. He was a great-grandson of John of Philhaugh. In 1541 he claimed the tenancy of the Crown lands of the wester side of ‘Warnwod’, ‘alias Qhitehauch Bra’ (in Ettrick), then occupied by Walter Scott in Synton; he also claimed Priesthope in Ettrick and Glenypet in Yarrow. He was one of the 4 ‘curators’ of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1564/5 he was listed (on the Buccleuch side) on the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, and his support was also mentioned in the 1568/9 bond. He firstly married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of William Lockhart, and had a daughter Marion, who married James Pringle of Whytbank. He secondly married Grizel Beaton, widow of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and was thus Sir Walter’s step-father. Their children were: Sir John of Blackbarony; Andrew; Sir Gideon of Elibank; William of Dunerne and Newton; Elizabeth, who married William Clerk; and John (b.1793), who was younger brother of Sir J.A.H. He was an apprentice at the Hawick Advertiser and was Sir J.A.H.’s grandfather; William (b.1789), stockmaker and merchant of Hawick; Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’), who married whip-maker Michael Ogilvy; Jane (b.1791), who married William Clerk; and John (b.1793), who died young. Several of his children were christened in Wilton Parish. Andrew (1781–1848) eldest child of Andrew of Spittal Tower. He was an agricultural labourer in Oxnam Parish. He married Isabella Cranston (whose sister was the grandmother of Cogsmill teacher Andrew Oliver); she died in 1832, aged 48 and is buried at Oxnam. After his wife’s death he emigrated with his family to Australia. Their children included: Robert (1811–92), who married Jane Blair and was buried at ‘Haning’ near Bendemeer, New South Wales; Margaret Ann (1813–39), who died on the voyage to Australia; Andrew (1815–46), who became ship’s master and was lost at sea; Isabella (1817–98); William (1819–76), who died at sea; Elizabeth (1821–77); and Jane (b.1824). He died near Melbourne. Andrew (b.c.1783) farmer at Old Castleton in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was also listed there in 1841. His wife was Janet and their children included George and John. Andrew (1819/20–1907) born in Kirkton...
Parish, he moved to Hobkirk Parish with his father, who was a hind at Ruletownhead. In 1851 he was an agricultural labourer at Hallrule Mill and in 1861 was a ploughman at Kirknowe. In 1857 he married Betsy, the eldest daughter of the miller at Hallrule, James Laidlaw; she died in 1906. Both he and his wife died at Forkins and are buried at Hobkirk. Their children were: Isabella (b.1857), who died aged 5; and William (b.1858). Andrew (b.1821/2) son of William and brother of William and John. In the 1840s he opened a school in a room at the top of Baker Street. He later left for college, and the school was continued by his brother John, moving to the old East Bank Kirk. He returned later to assist his brother William in running the much larger school, which moved to 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place). They were living at 7 Kirkgate in 1861, presumably next to the school. This eventually became St. Mary’s and ultimately Trinity. Andrew (1823–82) son of weaver and merchant William. He was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Nichol’s Close and in 1851 at 3 Back Row. He married Isabella Brown and their children included Jane, Helen, William and John. Anne (1694–1737) daughter of Bennet, Laird of Chesters, she married her cousin John Murray, who was the Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant at Unthank, and died in 1728. In 1734 she moved to Hawick, where she died. Her son James (b.1713) emigrated to North Carolina in 1735, and is an ancestor of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Sir Archibald of Blackbarony (d.bef. 1634) son of Sir John. He was knighted by James VI when he was young, and was made a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1628. He married Margaret Maule, a descendant of the house of Panmure. Their children were: Sir Alexander, 2nd Baronet; Walter of Halmire; Robert, ancestor of the Murays of Murray’s Hall; Margaret, who married Sir John Hope; Bethia, who married Sir William Forbes of Craigievor and secondly Sir Alexander Forbes of Tolquhon; Helen, who married Sir John Carstairs; and Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Mangerton. Archibald (18th/19th C.) tailor in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. He was probably related to James (grandfather of Sir James A.H.), a tailor in Hawick, who learned his trade in Denholm. Charles (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Dryden and their children included: Isobel (b.1770); Robert (b.1772); Charles (b.1776); and Daniel (b.1778). Charles Oliver (1842–1923) son of Thomas and Mary Scott, he was born in Denholm. Brother of Sir James, he was known as an engraver. He worked as a clerk in a woollen factory in Hawick until the age of 21. He then attended the Edinburgh School of Design, working by day as a lithographer. He was Gold and Silver Medalist at the Royal Scottish Academy School. He settled in London in 1868, being on the staff of ‘Punch and Judy’. In London he became an engraver and was a founder member of the Royal Society of Painter Etchers. He first exhibited his plates in the Royal Academy Exhibition in 1878. He also worked on some local projects, including the reproduction of Tom Scott’s ‘Return to Hawick’, and some original etchings of Hawick, for example images of the old Town Hall and St. Mary’s Kirk. There is also a well-known picture of Sir Walter Scott’s Tomb at Dryburgh Abbey. He married Elizabeth Wilson, daughter of Archibald Campbell from Glasgow and they had 7 children. He died in Croydon. Christina nee Winthrope (18th/19th C.) daughter of Hawick writer (i.e. lawyer) Thomas. She married a Mr. Stewart and became widowed. A story is told of how she met her new husband James Murray. Apparently she dreamt she was walking in her father’s garden at the Wheathole and there met a man she did not recognise, but later saw him in East Bank Kirk (built on the site of the garden), later was introduced to him and eventually they were married. David (b.1704) son of David, he was born in Ewes Parish. He lived at Whisgills farm in Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Murray (b.1716). Their children included: Elizabeth; Jean, who married Andrew Kyle; Agnes (b.1740); David (b.1743); John (b.1746); William Easton (b.1749); and Thomas (b.1754). David (1768–1841) son of James and Anne Dalrymple. He was a joiner at Teindside and perhaps in the Borthwick valley. His wife Mary Anderson died in 1819, aged 43. In 1820 he secondly married Mary Wilson, daughter of a Hawick blacksmith. The Murray family living at Mossyknowe in 1841 are probably his widow Mary and children James (a journeyman joiner), Henry, David and John. David (1791/2–1815) son of Thomas, tenant at Whisgills. He was described as ‘six feet six inches high; and to a majestic and well-proportioned person, he joined the mildest dispositions of mind’. He died aged 23. David (1832/3–83) son of James, he was tenant at Whisgills, like his father. He married Elizabeth Robinson, who died in 1896, aged 54. Their children included Jessie Temple (1877/8–1938) and probably James who also farmed at Whisgills. They are buried at Ettleton. David (1870/1–1911) youngest son of William, teacher at St. Mary’s School. He trained as a doctor at Edinburgh University and became assistant to Dr. James Brydon in the Sandbed. He later married Dr. Barrydon’s daughter Mary. He then worked in Dumfriesshire and Edinburgh, but returned to Hawick as partner to Dr. Brydon about 1901. He carried on for a few years after Brydon’s death in 1905, later taking on Dr. Samuel Davidson as a new partner, but dying himself not long after, aged only 40. He left 2 daughters. E. Judith local art teacher. In 2009, along with Lesley Fraser, she produced the booklet ‘Hawick Common Riding, An Illustrated Guide’, as well as the children’s version, distributed to senior primary pupils. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Elliot (18th/19th C.) married Violet Elliot in 1805 in Southdean, and she died at Bonchester. Their children included Charlotte (who married Adam Bell from Camptown), Charles (who worked at Wolfelee), Walter (farm servant, who died at Old Jethart) and John (servant at Wauchope and hedger for Minto estate). Elliot (b.c.1840) from Hobkirk Parish. He took over as blacksmith at Chesters from his uncle John Waugh in the early 1870s. He remained as blacksmith for more than 30 years, so that between him, his uncle and his uncle’s father (Robert), they had been blacksmiths at Chesters for about 95 years. Frank James (d.1943) younger brother of J.E.D. He was a plumber, like his father. He married Mary Dickie, and had 2 children, John Archibald Campbell (who worked in hosiery) and Mary Margaret. Gavin P. (19th/20th C.) 4th man to serve as Secretary for the Congregational Kirk. George (17th C.) weaver at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleton, recorded along with John on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John’s name came first and so was presumably his elder brother or father. George (b.1803/4) from Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Ruletownehead in 1861. He probably took over as shepherd there from his father, and was likely brother of Andrew. His wife was Jane and she had a son John Hume from a previous marriage. They had a daughter Jane. George (b.c.1810) grocer on the Howgate, probably at No. 16. He later worked as a mason’s labourer. He married Helen Tully and their children included Agnes, George, Janet and David. George (b.1806/7) from Castleton Parish, he was a shoemaker journeyman in Hawick. He was living at about 43 High Street in 1841 and on the Kirkwynd in 1851. His wife was Sarah and their children included Helen and Ann. George (19th C.) shepherd of Allanhaughmill. From about 1848 he was one of the first Trustees of Hawick Congregational (then Evangelical) Kirk. He could be the agricultural labourer listed at Haysike in 1841, with wife Margaret and children John, Thomas and Helen. George Oliver (b.1857) younger son of local historian Robert. In 1863 he presented to the Museum an amulet found in the Glebe allotments. He provided a horn mull (or perhaps the snuff) for the Snuffing in 1889. He became a doctor in Tunnel City, Wisconsin. He married Sarah Johnstone and their children were Robert Oliver and Agnes Ariska. George Malcolm, C.B.E. (1937/8– ) educated at Hawick High School, he qualified as a Fellow of the Faculty of Actuaries in 1961. He was a Director of the Scottish Life Assurance Company and President of the Faculty of Actuaries 1994–96. He was awarded a C.B.E. in 1995. He has been President of the Callants’ Club and Hawick R.F.C., as well as honorary secretary of Edinburgh Borderers R.F.C. and involved with the Scottish Sports Council, the General Teaching Council of Scotland and Craiglockhart College. Sir Gideon of Elibank (d.1621) 3rd son of Sir Andrew of Blackbarony. His mother was Grizel Beaton, widow of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and thus he was half-brother to Sir Walter Scott, 10th Laird of Buccleuch. Sir Walter owed him ‘males’ for the lands of Glenpyet in his last testament of 1574. He may have been educated for the church and was ‘chantour’ of Aberdeen. In 1590 along with John of Blackbarony, Patrick of Falahill and other Murrays he was put under caution not to harm Robert Scott of Haining and James Scott, ‘callit Mekle Jame Eister’. He is probably the ‘Mr. Gedioun Murray’ who witnessed a document in Edinburgh for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1591. In about 1591 he killed a man called Aitchison. In 1592, along with Walter Scott of Goldielands, he was given a commission to ‘demolish the houses and fort- alices of Harden and Dryhoip’, because of Walter Scott of Harden’s involvement in the Falkland Raid. He is probably the ‘Jedion Murray of Glen- pint’ listed among the supporters of Sir James Johnstone at Dryfe Sands in 1593 and about the same time he was ‘of Glenpoyte’ when he was surety for William Scott of Hartwoodmyres and Walter Scott of Stirkshaws. In 1594 he was ‘Mr.
Gideon Murray of Glenpoytte’ when he witnessed a document for the Duke of Lennox and also witnessed a bond of ‘manrent’ for the Beatties to Sir Walter Scott, signed in Hawick in 1595. In 1595 the King confirmed a charter granting him ‘Elebank, or Eleburne, in the forest and Lordship of Ettrick’. In 1596/7 Sir Walter of Buccleuch granted him the lands of Crichton, this being signed in Hawick. He was Provost of Crichton, this patronage later going to the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1598 he acted as commissioner to Sir Walter Scott in a contract with the Homes of Wedderburn regarding the lands of Whitsome, and witnessed a charter at Branhomle in 1599. In 1598/9 he resigned the lands of Easter and Wester Deloraine and Carterhaugh to Sir Walter Scott of Branhomle. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branhomle) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1602 he and his brother John were responsible for removing Scott of Hundleshope and others from lands belonging to Stewart of Traquair, and he was also surety for Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He was still witnessing documents for Scott of Buccleuch in 1603. In 1604 he and other Murrays had a caution not to harm the Stewarts of Traquair and elsewhere. He was knighted in 1605 and appointed as one of the 5 Scottish Commissioners given responsibility to ruthlessly carry out the pacification of the Borders. In 1606 he added lands of Langshaw (in Elwand Water) and Whytbank (in Selkirkshire) to his estates. In 1607 he was mentioned in a Melrose document relating to the lands of Langshaw (where he is ‘Jedeane’ and is referred to in relation to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch as ‘beand full sister and brother bairnes’). In 1608 he was appointed to ensure that the Presbytery of Jedburgh elected ‘a constant moderator’, against the wishes of the ministers. In 1608 (although the date may be suspect) he received the teinds of Hawick Kirk in a ‘tack’ by Rev. William Fowler, with the constant of Lord Scott of Buccleuch. This was to last for his lifetime and then 19 more years. In 1610 he became a Privy Councillor and Comptroller and was named to the Commission for keeping peace in Selkirkshire. He served on the Judiciary Court in Jedburgh in 1611. He represented Selkirkshire in Parliament in 1612. In 1613 he was appointed Treasurer Depute and created Lord Elibank. He was Depute-Treasurer for the Justices who prosecuted the Earl of Orkney in 1615. He made preparations for the Royal visit to Scotland in 1617. He appears to have been a willing instrument of the King in imposing Episcopacy on the Scottish people. In 1621 he was accused of abusing his office by Sir James Stewart of Orkney, and it is suggested that he may have poisoned himself over the disgrace. He married Margaret, daughter of Dionis Pentland. He was succeeded by his son Sir Patrick, 1st Lord Elibank of Ettrick Forest, while Walter was another son. A marriage contract of 1611 exists between his daughter Agnes (‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’) and William Scott of Harden – ‘The Laird o’ Elibank, ee to ee Wi’ Wat o’ Harden could never see’[WL].

Gideon (1772/3–1839) resident of Colterscleuch Toll. He married Margaret Oliver (1778/9–1843). They are buried at Teviothead. Gordon F. (20th C.) Town Hall Legal Assistant 1958–60 and Depute Town Clerk 1960–62. Graeme (d.2000) well known reciter, brother of Philip. Harold James Ruthven (1868–1955) son of Sir James A.H. He was known as an educationalist, inspector of schools, chess historian and champion of left-handedness. He wrote an article ‘The Family of Sir James Murray’ in the 1928 Archaeological Society Transactions and a biographical sketch of his father’s life in the 1934 Transactions. He also provided family-related notes to James Haining for his monumental inscriptions. Helen (b.c.1780) grocer in Newcastleton, listed in 1837. In 1841 she was at about 2 Langholm Street. Henry (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was married to Ann Bell and they had several children baptised at Netherraw and Upper Raw. Their children included Adam (b.1795), Robert (b.1797), Betty (b.1799), James (b.1802), Margaret (b.1806) and George (b.1806). James of Falahill (d.c.1529) elder son of John ‘the Outlaw’. His sisters Elizabeth, Isabel and Janet married Sir James Douglas of Cavers, Robert Scott of Howpjasley and Sir Robert Stewart of Minto, respectively. He held several lands in Selkirkshire and also Peeblesshire. In 1519/20 he resigned ‘Eldinghop’ (in Yarrow) to Walter Scott of Branhomle. He was on an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. In 1524/5 he was one of those who promised to help keep order with the newly appointed Warden and Lieutenant of the Borders, the Earl of Angus. In 1527 he had an agreement with Sir Walter Scott of Branhomle to end their feud; he agreed to forgive the Scotts and their allies for all former killings and spoliations in return for 500 merks Scots, and he also agreed to end his dispute over the lands of Kirkurd. In 1528 he agreed to deliver up all charters etc. relating to Kirkurd and give up any claim to the lands.
He married Margaret Home and/or a daughter of Sir John Cranston and was succeeded by his son Patrick in 1530. Sir James (17th C.) son of John of Falahill and Philiphbaugh. He was knighted by Charles I. In 1628–33 he represented Selkirkshire in Parliament. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Craig of Riccarton. He died before his father and his son Sir John succeeded to Philiphbaugh. His daughter Janet married James Scott of Gala. James (d.1658) 2nd Earl of Annandale, son of John, 1st Earl. In 1641 he was served heir to his father’s 5-pound Chapel lands of Caerlenrig, and also a huge number of other lands. He moved to England and lived quietly there during the Civil War. He married Jean Carnegie, Viscountess of Stormont. He died without issue. Sir James of Philiphbaugh (1655–1708) eldest son of Sir John and Anne Douglas of Cavers. He was served heir to his father in 1677. He was Senator of the College of Justice. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1678, 1681–82 and 1702–03. He was then Lord Clerk Register. He acted as a Commissioner for assessing the rents of the local farms of the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1694. He contributed £500 to the Darien Company in 1695. He married Anne Hepburn of Blackcastle and secondly married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Don of Newton. His children were: John, who succeeded; James, who died unmarried; Alexander, also died unmarried; Rachel, died unmarried; Anne, married Pringle of Haining; Elizabeth; Jane; and Margaret. He died at Inch. James (d.c.1682) recorded as tenant ‘in Mains of Liddesdail’ in 1682, when his will is listed. He was surely related to Adam who was at Mains in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Shielswood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. James (17th C.) herd at Broadhaugh on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) listed at Newbigging among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (1713–81) born at Unthank in the Eses valley, son of James and Ann Bennet. His father died in 1728 and in 1732 the lease of Unthank and Fiddleton were taken by Robert Elliot of Fenwick and Walter Scott (his cousin, farmer at Commonside and uncle of Sir Walter Scott the writer). He then became a merchant’s apprentice in London, and emigrated to North Carolina (it is said in 1735, although this is impossibly early, since his wife was only born in 1724), while his mother moved to Hawick in 1734 (where she died). He married his cousin Barbara, daughter of Andrew Bennet of Chesters; probably the same Barbara’s ‘bride money’ was paid in Ancrum Parish in 1744. Their children were Elizabeth Dorothy, Archibald, John, Jean and two children who died in infancy. Elizabeth married Edward Hutchinson Robbins, their daughter Annie Jean Robbins married Joseph Lyman, whose daughter Catherine Robbins Lyman married Warem Delano and had a daughter Sara (or Sallie) Delano, who was the mother of U.S. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt. James himself was exiled after the American Revolution, being loyal to King George, and dying in Halifax, Nova Scotia. Some of his correspondence (including a brief account of a visit to Hawick) was published in ‘Letters of James Murray, Loyalist’ (1901).

James (1716/7–92) resident of Teindside. He married Anne Dalrymple, who died at Teindside in 1809, aged 80. Their children included: William, James, Nelly, Betty and Anne, who probably all died young; David (1768/9–1841), joiner; and John, who also died at Teindside at the age of 70. James (18th C.) resident at Borthwickbrae in 1743 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1743. Robert (b.1745), Thomas (b.1747), Bessie (b.1749), Ann (b.1751), Walter (b.1753) and James (b.1755) were probably also his children. He is probably the wright in Mains (presumably Borthwick Mains) who died in 1775 and is buried in Robertson Cemetery, along with his wife Anne ‘Ricketloun’ (d.1797). James (b.1741) 2nd son of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He trained for the ministry and became minister at the Presbyterian Church in Harbottle. James’ Jamie (b.1755) probably from Ettrick, although possibly the James, son of James, born in Robertson Parish in 1755. His story of encountering a ghost at the Bishop’s Stone (on Woll Rig) in about 1775 was recounted to someone in 1831 who wrote about it in the Border Counties’ Magazine in 1880 (reprinted in 1904). He married Jean Rae In Yarrow in 1810; she had worked as a servant at Headshaw. Their children included: Jean (b.1811); and William (b.1815). James (1756/7–1827) joiner at Borthwickbrae, probably the son of James born in 1755. He is recorded as owner of a horse at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is buried in Robertson Cemetery. His children included: William (1802/3–27). James of Philiphbaugh (1769–1852) 3rd son of John. In 1809 he married Mary Dale, daughter of Henry Hughes. They had 3 sons and a daughter, and he was succeeded by the eldest son, John. James (b.c.1775) born in Yarrow Parish, perhaps son of John. He worked as a soldier, being listed as Private and then Corporal in the Dumfriesshire Militia. He married Mary Scott in Canongate, Edinburgh in 1803; his wife was daughter of miller Robert Scott (perhaps miller at Roughheugh) and born in Wilton Parish. His children (born and baptised in Musselburgh, Dalkeith and Wilton, but all registered in Wilton) were: John (b.1806); Robert (b.1808); and James (b.1810). There was also an earlier son, whose name is unknown. The baptism of James in 1810 was witnessed by John Thomline and George Wallace. He may have later had children: Christina (b.1824/5); Thomas (b.1812/3); Andrew (b.1826/7); Mary (b.1827/8); and Helen (b.1829/30). The family were living at 'Nixon’s Mill' (probably Lynnwood Cottages) in 1841, where he was a wool spinner. They were in Dumfries in 1851, where he had a local connection.

James (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. James (18th/19th C.) mason in Newcastleton, listed among heads of households in 1835. James (1785–1843) from the Spittal family, he was 3rd child of Andrew who farmed Westerhouses and Newton. He was paternal grandfather of ‘Dictionary’ James. In about 1806 he married (with a curious story of her seeing him in a dream before she knew him) Christina, daughter of Thomas Wintrope, who was a writer in Hawick. He became a tailor, learning his trade in Denholm and later having a shop at 67 High Street (which became the Co-op grocers). He was listed as a High Street tailor in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was long an elder of the East Bank Secession Church, having been one of the original subscribers, receiving money in exchange for bonds (which through some irregularity were all later taken by his grandson Andrew, leaving the rest of his grand-children with nothing). His children were: Isabella, who married Hawick shoemaker William Somerville; Andrew, tailor in Morebattle, who married Minnie Buglass; Thomas, father of Sir James A.H.; Elizabeth, who died young; Stewart, a roper with Munro’s, who married Isabella Anderson; James, a tailor in Hawick who married Isabella Mabon; and Elizabeth, who married stockingmaker Andrew Hood. In 1841 he was listed as a tailor on the High Street, living along with ‘Cathrine’ (possibly his wife Christian, otherwise a sister), and children James and Betty, as well as another James (probably a grandson). James (1789–1853) youngest child of John and Mary Cleuch and grandson of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He was father of Gen. Sir John Murray. He was educated at Denholm, Minto and Jedburgh schools and Edinburgh University. He studied to be a minister, but due to a speech defect he had to give up his ambition (which apparently was not an impediment to becoming a teacher!). He ran a private school in Hawick for several years before being appointed schoolmaster of Hawick Grammar School in 1821 (perhaps as assistant from 1818). He was appointed as Session Clerk in 1821, and as such was the last to carry on the practice of reading the scriptures in church between the morning and evening services. However, he kept only sporadic records in the Session books. He was the first teacher at the new United Schools, when the Parish and Grammar Schools merged in 1825. His favourite saying when punishing pupils was 'I'll trim ye!' He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He gave up as session clerk in 1850, but was headmaster right up until his death in the first few days of 1853. In a directory of 1852 he is listed as Porochial Schoolmaster on Teviot Square. He married Margaret (1790–1851), eldest daughter of Thomas Irvine, farmer at Wauknell, Eskdale; her brother was Maj.-Gen. Sir Archibald Irvine. They had at least 3 children: John Irvine (b.1826), who became a General; Elizabeth, who married Col. Ryall, but died of cholera and had no surviving children; and Thomas Irvine, who died in infancy. He is buried in St. Mary’s churchyard. James (1796/7–1871) son of Thomas and Janet Ingles, he was tenant farmer at Whisgills in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 700 acres, employing 3 men. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Scott, who died in 1874, aged 78. Their children included: Elizabeth; Thomas (1806/7–58), tenant in Burnmouth; Betty (1817–24); David (1832/3–83), also tenant at Whisgills; Agnes (1832/3–80); Jane; Janet, who married John Irving; John; and Mary, who married Adam Scott. They are mostly buried in Ettrick Cemetery. James (b.1810) son of James and Mary Scott. His father was a soldier, and he was born and baptised in Wilton. He worked as a handloom weaver. In 1841 he was living on Punchbowl Close, was at 5 Teviot Crescent in 1851 and was on Mather’s Close in 1861. He married Isabella Howison and their children included: David (b.1833/4); Robert (b.1835); William (b.1836/7); Isabella (b.1839/40), who must have died young; James (b.1846/7); Jane (or Ann,
Murray Murray

B.1848/9; Isabella (again, b.1850/1) and Helen (b.1853/4). James (b.1810/1) born in Wilton, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was on the Kirk Wynd in 1841 and at 25 Loan in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Catherine and their children were John, Robert, Helen, Walter, Andrew and Mary. He may be the James, son of John and Mary Scott, baptised in Wilton in 1810. James (1812–75) from Coldstream, he was a blacksmith with premises on Brougham Place. The location was afterwards used by Gould the framemaster. He married Christian, who died in 1896, aged 82. Their children included several who did not reach adulthood, plus Isabella and another daughter who married William Taylor of Ashybank. James (19th C.) founder of J. Murray & Sons, plumbers and slaters of Hawick. He was an elder in Allars Kirk. Sir James Augustus Henry ‘Dictionary Murray’ (1837–1915) born in Denholm, in the Crown Inn on Main Street. He was eldest son of Thomas Murray (clothier in Denholm and later Hawick, from the Spittal Tower family) and Mary Scott (also of Hawick, daughter of Charles Scott, linen manufacturer, and from the Boonraw family), and was a distant relative of the Hawick schoolmaster who was also James Murray. His middle names were added only after he went to Hawick and discovered that some people had more than one Christian name. He developed an early interest in botany, geology and astronomy, as well as languages. He was educated at Cavers, Denholm and Minto schools, attending school only between the ages of 6 and 14½. By the time he left school he had already studied Latin, French, German, Italian and classical Greek. He became a Junior Assistant Master at the United Schools of Hawick in 1854 at age 17. 3 years later he was made headmaster of a new private school in Hawick, the Subscription Academy. He was apparently keen on taking his pupils on excursions to study local botany, geology, etc. He was a founder member of the Archological Society in 1856 (when he was still only 19 years old), being the third official member and its first Secretary, as well as contributing many articles (51 in all) on a huge range of topics; he was also the last surviving founder member of the Society. In the early years of the Society, he talked at a large fraction of meetings, covering botany, geology, archaeological artefacts, local history, ‘Two Days’ Ramble up the Slitrig and down the Liddell’, etc. He made a 5-foot long map of ‘Scotland under the Romans’, which he talked about at one of the first meetings of 1856. He wrote a series of articles in the Hawick Advertiser in the 1850s, describing the botany of the area. He also presented the Museum with a cabinet of insects he had collected. In Hawick he was also involved with politics as well as the Total Abstinence Society. He had many talents, for example his sketch of Leyden’s birthplace was used as the frontispiece for the 1858 collection of Leyden’s works. In 1863 he made stencil copies of the stones describing Walter Scott of Goldielands, which were uncovered in St. Mary’s Kirk. He was a member of the Congregational Kirk in Denholm. In 1862 he married Maggie Isabella Sarah Scott (1834–65) in Belfast; she was an infant teacher and daughter of a Hawick clerk. They soon moved to London for his wife’s health, where nevertheless she died in 1865 (of consumption, aged 31), and their infant daughter Anne Marie Gretchen the year before (buried in the Wellogate Cemetery). There he worked for the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China in Threadneedle Street. He obtained a reader’s ticket for the British Museum and resumed his interest in languages, soon meeting several philologists who lived in the London area. In 1867 he married Ada Agnes Ruthven (1845–1936), with Alexander Graham Bell as the best man. In 1870 he was appointed schoolmaster at Mill Hill School, north-west of London and lived in a nearby house called ‘Sunnyside’; he regarded his time there as the happiest of his life (apart from when he was in Hawick of course). He completed ‘The Dialect of the Southern Counties of Scotland’ (1873), the first systematic study of any dialect, and gave papers at meetings of the Philological Society. Contributing more seriously to philological study, he produced editions of ‘The Minor Poems of Sir David Lindsay’ (1871), ‘The Complaynt of Scotland’ (1872) with an extensive introduction and glossary and ‘Romance and prophesies of Thomas of Erceldoune’ (1875), again with notes. He obtained a B.A. from London University in 1873 and an honorary LL.D. from Edinburgh University in 1874. He became President of the Philological Society in 1878 and around 1879 he took over as editor of the ‘New English Dictionary on Historical Principles’ (to become the Oxford English Dictionary). An undertaking of gargantuan proportions, he died before it was completed, although the work was finished under his organisation and inspiration. Much of the work was carried out in a glorified shed in his garden, referred to as the ‘Scriptorium’. After the second volume was published he moved with his family to Oxford to work full time on the dictionary in a new Scriptorium in the garden of 78 Banbury Road, renamed Sunnyhill. Apart from the occasional family holiday he worked tirelessly on the dictionary. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1906, when he was also at the presentation of the Provost’s Chain event, on the 50th anniversary of the Archeological Society. He had 10 surviving children, all of whom were given Anglo-Saxon first names and middle names given after relatives, including: Harold James Ruthven, who wrote an influential history of chess, as well as providing an article on him for the Archeological Transactions; and Sir Oswyn, who became Secretary to the Admiralty. He received a knighthood in 1908, as well as honorary degrees from 9 universities. He died of heart failure following a year of illness, in which he completed the volume ‘Trink to Turndown’ on schedule. He is buried at Wolvercote Cemetery near Oxford. A plaque marking his birthplace is in Denholm, and another in Hawick, where he lived on Bourtree Place. The definitive biography is ‘Caught in the Web of Words’ (1977) by his grand-daughter K.M. Elisabeth Murray, and he is also the ‘Professor’ (although he never held that title) in Simon Winchester’s ‘The Professor and the Madman’ (1998, British title ‘The Surgeon of Crowthorne’). His contribution to the systematization of language is immense. All major dictionary projects that came later have followed the principles he laid out. Words from the Hawick area are well represented in his original volumes (but unlike modern dictionaries, he left out all words considered obscene in his day). James (b.1860) son of Robert and Elizabeth Hunter, he was born in Hawick. He moved to Edinburgh, where he worked as a baker, and later the family lived in Kelso. He married Jane McMichan. James (1874/5–1965) farmer in Whisgills, descended from the earlier Murrays of Whisgills farm. His wife Mary Janet Elliot died in 1908, aged 32. His 2nd wife Margaret Brown died in 1956, aged 76. They are buried in Etterton Cemetery. Dr. James (1875/6–1920) doctor in Allendale, he died in Newcastle upon Tyne. His wife Elizabeth Jane Murray came from Whisgills, and died in 1963; she secondly married William B. Paterson of Rutherglen. They are buried at Etterton. Janet (b.1820/1) grocer on Wilton Place, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. She was wife of John, tailor at the Sandbed. In 1851 she was a widow at Wilton Place, with her children John, Elizabeth and William. In 1861 she was at Dovemount with John and William. Her maiden name may have been Wilson. Joan (14th C.) daughter of Sir Maurice, Earl of Strathearn, who was also Baron of Hawick. Through her father she inherited the Barony of Hawick, which then passed to her husband, Sir Thomas Bothwell. There is some confusion here over multiple Joannas, but it seems likely that it was not her, but her daughter, who married Archibald, 3rd Earl of Douglas. It seems that she was promised to Douglas, but may have died in the plague that ravaged Britain in 1362 (and probably also killed her husband a year or so earlier). Douglas seems to have instead married the daughter, also Joan. Joan or ‘Joanna’ (d.aft. 1401) probably daughter of Sir Thomas Murray of Bothwell. However, she is often confused with her mother, Joan, who was daughter of Sir Maurice, Earl of Strathearn (and in fact the evidence that there were 2 separate women is not clear). She appears to have been the heiress of the Bothwell titles (including the Barony of Hawick), and after the death of her mother she married Archibald Douglas, ‘the Grim’, 3rd Earl of Douglas; however, she would have been quite young when this happened. The Hawick Barony then passed to the Douglasses. John (15th C.) witness in 1431 to the transfer of the lands of Heap between the Langlands’ and the Scots. All of the other men who wrote special testaments were local lairds, including Alexander Murray, who must have been a near relation. He was recorded as ‘Jhone off Murray’ and could have been John of Falahill. John of Philiphaugh (d.1477) descendant of Roger de Moravia. He had a charter of the lands of Philiphaugh in 1461. This included the lands of Harehead, Hangingshaw and Lewishope. In 1462 he was appointed Herd-keeper to Queen Mary of Gueldres. He was also Keeper of Newark Castle in the 1460s. He had the lease of Lewenshawe and Hangingshaw from 1471 and in 1480 the lease was passed to his son Patrick. In 1475 he was keeper of the King’s property at Bowhill. His sons included: Patrick of Falahill, the eldest, who succeeded; William in Sundhope; and another, whose son John was Burgess in Edinburgh and progenitor of the Murrays of Blackbarony. John (d.c.1485) brother of Ninian. Along with his brother he leased the Crown lands of Kersehope on the Ettrick in 1485. In the following year the lease passed to his widow Elizabeth Sinclair, and son Thomas. He was stated to have been killed when his property was devastated by traitors and rebels. John (d.bef. 1494) resident of the Kershope area. In 1494/5 Steven Turnbull, brother of the Laird of Whithope, had remission for his slaughter. Turnbull was also cited for other crimes, including bringing in ‘traitors of Leven’ for the pillaging and burning of Kershope and the theft of 80 cows from the tenants there. John of Falahill (d.1510) eldest son of Patrick of Philiphaugh and Falahill. He was nephew of Alexander who was Rector of Hawick and was probably the closest historical person to ‘the Outlaw Murray’ of the ballad. In 1488 he was joint tenant with his father in the Crown lands of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw, and later with his son John. In 1489/90 he had a charter for lands in Peeblesshire. He was Ranger of Yarrow Ward until 1489, when he had the lease of Tinnis for his fee. In 1491 he was ‘procurator’ for Alexander Lord Home in an instrument granting Home tenancy in the lands of Harden. He is probably the John who acted as surety for several people at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. He is probably the John ‘de hangitschaw’ whose brother Thomas served as a surety at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5 and who himself served as surety for John Scott in Tushielaw. Also in 1494/5 it is recorded that he had livestock stolen from Newark by Robert Scott of Deloraine. He is also recorded being ‘de hangitschaw’ in the accounts for the Selkirk Justice-aire of 1494/5, when he was pledge for John Wilson in Hartwoodmyre. He was owner of Westerhouses in Hassendean Parish, receiving the lands ‘under reversion’ (i.e. on non-payment of a loan) from Alexander, Lord Home. In 1497 he had a charter for Cranston-Riddell. In 1499 he had a ‘tack’ of lands with David Hoppringle of ‘the Tynnes’. Also in 1499 he was assigned the lands of ‘Lewenshop’ and Hangingshaw in Yarrow, along with his son John (which may be an error). About the same time he gave his permission for Walter Scott to take the lease of Haining. In 1500 Walter Scott of Branhulme was recorded as assignee of him and Ninian (probably a brother or other close relative), when goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope were recovered as part of 19 score merks that he owed them; this was for the damage done to their lands of Kershope. He was Depute Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1501. In 1501/2 he was witness to another bond of reversion for the lands of Harden, also involving Alexander, Lord Home. In 1502–9 he had the lease of the Crown lands of Hangingshaw, Lewenshope and Harehead. In 1502 his farms at Fastheugh and Hangingshaw were raided by Philip Turnbull in Whithope and David Turnbull in Carlinpool. In 1502/3 at Galashiels he infested Queen Margaret in the lands of the Forest. In 1506/7 he was one of the men to whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Buccleuch, had to give in his accounts. In 1507/8 he had a letter of obligation with Robert Scott of Whithesters, involving a loan, with the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ as security. He was appointed as High Sheriff of Selkirkshire, which the King had to humiliatingly give him according to the ballad. He was Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1508 in a charter for lands in Selkirk and in 1509 in the document where Adam Hepburn inherited the lands of Alemoo. In 1508 he had a charter for Falahill and Whitlawsland and in 1509 had a charter for the lands of Peel Hill. In 1510/1 he and his wife had a charter for the lands of Cranston-Riddell. He married Janet Forester and later Margaret, daughter of Patrick Hepburn. His children were: James, who succeeded; William, ancestor of the Romanno, Stanhope and Clooney branches; John, who was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1507/8; Patrick, who had a charter for Broadmeadows in 1510; Elizabeth, who married Sir James Douglas, 5th Laird of Cavers; Isabel, who married Robert Scott of Howpasley; and Janet, who married Sir Robert Stewart of Minto. Tradition attributes his death to Scott of Buccleuch or perhaps Scott of Haining at a little mount below Newark Castle. However, he was actually killed by Andrew Ker of Gateshaw and Thomas, brother of Philip Scott of Headshaw, according to cases at Jedburgh Justice-aire in 1510. John (15th/16th C.) son of John of Falahill. In 1507/8 he leased the Crown lands of Hangingshaw, Lewenshope and Harehead. He was recorded as son and heir of John of Falahill in 1509 and still leasing Crown lands in 1513. He may have been the Sheriff in Selkirkshire recorded at the Justice-aire at Selkirk in 1510. At that court he was among men found guilty of burning some of the wood in Ettrick Forest. John of Blackbarony (d.1513) Burgess of Edinburgh, he was grandson of John of Philiphaugh, his father’s name being unknown. He may be the John of ‘blac barony et domino de hennerland’ who was surety at the Justice-aire held in Peebles in 1498. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of the early years of the 16th century as Chamberlain of Ballincrief and ‘custumar’ of Haddington. In 1505/6 he was an assignee of the executors of William in Sundhope, his uncle. He is probably the John junior who was allowed the ‘fermes’ of Winterburgh in 1506 and Carterhaugh in 1507. In 1507 he had a charter of the Barony of Blackbarony or Hatton. He is probably the ‘Master John Murray of Blackbarony’ who in 1510/1 was granted the lands of Briery Yards, in the Barony of Hassendean, which had been forfeited by Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn. In 1511 he had a charter for lands in Edinburgh and Haddington and in 1512 and 1513 other charters for lands in Selkirkshire and elsewhere. In 1503/4 he married Isobel, daughter of Richard Happr. They had 2 daughters, and a son, Andrew of Blackbarony. He died at Flodden. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falknash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent.

Sir John of Blackbarony (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew. He was knighted by James VI at Stirling upon announcing to the King the birth of his eldest son, Henry, Prince of Wales. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for ‘Glenpoit and Preischoip’ (this being Glampyret in the Yarrow valley). In 1586 he is recorded as one of the ‘curators’ of the young Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He may be the John who witnessed a bond of ‘manrent’ in Hawick in 1595, between the Beatties and Sir Walter of Bruxholme (Gideon Murray, his brother, was also a witness). In 1610 he was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace in Peeblesshire. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Hamilton. Their children were: Andrew, who died before his father; Sir Archibald, who succeeded; Sir John of Raveling; Col. Walter of Pilmore; Alexander; Patrick; William; Margaret, who married Sir Robert Haklet of Pitfirrane; Agnes, who married Sir John Riddell of that Ilk; Elizabeth, who married Sir Robert Ker, 1st Earl of Ancrum; Grizel, who married Sir William Douglas of Casbogle; Christian, who married Sir William Veitch of Dawyck; Isabel, who married Patrick Scott of Thirlestane; and possibly another daughter who married William Scott of Mangerton. Sir John of Falahill and Philiphaugh (d.c.1640) son of Patrick of Falahill, he was the first of the family designated ‘of Philiphaugh’. He had a charter of 1584, as heir to his father and also held lands at Hangingshaw and Traquair. He was probably the ‘John Murray, sone to the Shereff of Selkirk’ who was among Borderers cited for non-appearance in 1578/9. He was served heir to his father in 1601 in the lands of Philiphaugh, as well as the office of Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He represented Selkirkshire (or ‘the Forest’) in the Parliament of 1612. In 1622 and 1623 he was on the Commission for keeping peace on the Border. In 1623 a man was found guilty of stealing an ox from his servitor, John Murray, from the lands of ‘Low, otherwise called the Catchuge’. He had a charter of 1624 involving lands in the Barony of Buccleuch. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Ardross (or perhaps Sir William of Harden) and secondly married Helen (or Isabel), daughter of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels. His children included: Sir James of Balncrief, who married Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Craig of Riccarton and whose son succeeded to Philiphaugh; Gideon, aide-de-camp to Charles I, who died in service; Joan, a daughter who married James Kerr of Chatto; Anne, who married John Shaw; Grezel; John of Ashiestiel; William, who died fighting for the King; David, who also died the same way; Helen, who married Scott of Broadmeadows; Elizabeth, who married Mr. Knox; and Isabel. He was succeeded by his grandson, Sir John. Sir John (d.1640) 1st Earl of Annandale, son of Sir Charles of Cockpool and Margaret Somerville. His siblings included: Sir James of Cockpool, who married Janet, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig, but died without an heir; Sir Richard, whom he eventually succeeded; Jean, who married John Maxwell of Kirkhouse; and another sister, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1616 and 1624 he sent a letter to Walter Scott, Lord of Buccleuch, expressing his support and essentially apologising for raids against Buccleuch and into England. He was a great favourite of Charles I and acquired a huge estate. Among his lands and rights were the 5-pound land of the Chapel lands of Caerlennig, which his son James inherited in 1641. He was created Earl of Annandale in 1624/5 and acquired vast estates. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig, but died without an heir; Sir Richard, whom he eventually succeeded; Jean, who married John Maxwell of Kirkhouse; and another sister, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh.

related to the earlier tenant in Woll. Sir John of Philiphaugh (d.1676) son of Sir James, he succeeded his grandfather Sir John. He was heritable Sheriff of Selkirkshire. In 1646 he was a judge for trying people in Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire. In 1643, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire and was Convenor in 1644. He joined with Graham's force in 1646 and claimed for damages he sustained against Montrose in 1649. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire from 1661. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers and secondly married Margaret, widow of John Trotter of Charterhall and daughter of Sir John Scott of Scotstarvet. His children were: Sir James, who succeeded; John of Bowhill; Col. William; Archibald, Thomas and Lewis, who died young; Anne, who married Alexander Pringle of Whytbank and later Robert Rutherford of Bowland; Janet; Rachel; Elizabeth; and Jean, who died young. In 1688 his wife was served heir to their daughter Jean. John (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John of Bowhill (c.1667–1714) younger son of Sir John of Philiphaugh and brother of Sir James. He was a Senator in the College of Justice. He served as representative to Parliament for Selkirk 1689–1702 and for Selkirkshire 1703–07. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. He was a great supporter of the Union, and was briefly part of the first Parliament of Great Britain until he became Lord Bowhill in 1707. He owned the estate of Bowhill (temporarily out of the hands of the Scotts) and built the house there in 1708. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and their children included John (farmer at Unthank). He was succeeded in the lands of Bowhill by his nephew Lieut-Col. James. There was an elegy written on his death. John (1669/70–1749) gardener at Spittal Tower who was a direct ancestor of 'Dictionary' Murray. He came from Hobkirk Parish, renting the garden haugh and enclosure at Spittal Tower in about 1712. His father may have been Andrew, but that is uncertain. In 1701 he married Isobel Turnbull (from Bedrule), who died in 1746, aged 67. They had 7 children: John (1709–72), the eldest son, with several later generations having the same name; Margaret, eldest daughter, married James Veitch, and her grand-daughter married Castleton Schoolmaster William Scott; Jean, who died in infancy; James, who also died in infancy; Agnes; Andrew; and Mary. They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. John (1677–1728) born at Unthank, son of John (from the Philiphaugh family) and Margaret Scott of Ancrum. He leased the farms of Unthank and Fiddleton from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1722. His son James resigned the lands to Robert Elliot of Fenwick and Walter Scott (farmer at Commonside) in 1733. He married his cousin Ann, daughter of Archibald Bennet of Cheseters (near Ancrum) in 1712 and their children were: James (b.1713); Archibald (b.1715); Barbara (b.1717); Anna (or Anna, b.1719); John (b.1721, who became a doctor in Norwich); Andrew (b.1723); William (b.1724); Elizabeth (b.1726); and Andrew (b.1728). John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Howcleuch. In 1712 in Hawick Parish, he married Marion Paterson, who was 'servitrix to Walter Grieve' in Braxholme Park. Their son William was baptised in Hawick in 1719. He is probably also the John whose children (baptised in Roberton Parish) included James (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) resident in Outerside in 1717 when his son William was born. John of Philiphaugh (d.1753) son of Sir James. He was heritable Sheriff of Selkirk. He was M.P. for Linlithgow 1725–34 and for Selkirkshire from 1734 until his death. In 1711 he married Eleanor, daughter of Lord Basil Hamilton, and she died in 1783. Their children were: Basil, who died young; John, who was also M.P. for the Linlithgow Burghs; Charles, who died unmarried; James, who succeeded his brother; Janet, who married Mr. Dennis of Jamaica; Eleanor, who married Sir James Nasmyth of Posso; Mary, who married John Macqueen of Jamaica and possibly also Sir Alexander Don, 4th Baronet of Newton; and Margaret, who married Capt. Baugh. John (1709–72) eldest son of John and brother of Andrew. He was the grandfather of the Hawick Reeve James Murray, and great-grandfather of Gen. Sir John Murray. He became tenant farmer at Spittal-on-Rule in 1730. He shared the tenancy with the Veitches and the Bunyans, his part including the orchard (hence he was referred to as 'Gardener in Toure'). He married Jean Henderson in 1734 at Newton in Bedrule, and she died in 1786, aged 72. Their children were: John (b.1735), who was also tenant at Spittal and married Mary Cleuch; James, who became Presbyterian minister at Harbottle; Archibald; Andrew, whose grandson was editor of the Kelso Mail; William, who had sons Veitch and John; Betty, married James Veitch; Margaret; Isabel, married Mr. Thomson, farmer at Netherraw; and Jean (or Jenny), lived at Harbottle, then at Hawick. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard along with most of his family. John of Philiphaugh (d.1800) 2nd son of John of Philiphaugh. He owned the lands of Toshdaw in 1757 when its head lands were divided from those of Mabonlaw. He was also involved in a dispute with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch over teinds for Toshdaw in the period 1745–70. He was M.P. for Linlithgow Burghs 1754–61. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He paid the land tax for his lands of Philiphaugh in 1785. He was also listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He sold a large part of the estate of Philiphaugh to John Johnstone of Alva (brother of William Johnstone Pulteney). He married a Thomson and was succeeded by his sons John and then James. John (1735–1809) eldest son of John, farmer at Spittal-on- Rule. On his gravestone he is referred to as ‘Gardiner at Spittal’. He farmed at Spittal in partnership with his mother until her death in 1786 and may have ceased farming there altogether when the holdings were merged in 1807. In 1782 he married Mary Cleuch, who died in Denholm in 1816, aged 65. Their children were: John, whose family emigrated to Australia; James, schoolmaster in Hawick; Mary, who married brewer Alexander Russell and secondly hosier Thomas Scott; and Jane (b.1787), the youngest. He died at Denholm-Townfoot and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. If he was 65 when he died, he was born in 1743/4. John (1745/6–1826) farmer at Whisgills in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there in the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–91. He is probably son of David and was succeeded as farmer by his brother Thomas. He appears not to have had any children and is buried along with his brother’s family at Ettleton. John (18th C.) listed as house servant and groom at Stirches in 1785 and 1786, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. John of Philiphaugh (d.1830) son of John. He was listed in 1805 and 1819 as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hunlyhill (in Bedrule Parish), recorded as owner of 3 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleton, recorded along with George on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) linen and woolen draper in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Newcastleton merchant of the same name who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (1777/8–1851) born in Castleton Parish, probably son of Robert and Marion Crozier. He was a feuar of Newcastleton, as well as being a farmer and blacksmith, probably on North Hermitage Street. He married Anne Jardine (1802/3–57), who came from Gretna and was significantly younger than him. Their children included: Robert, who was a carpenter, and emigrated to Ontario; Walter; Marion; John, a blacksmith, who also emigrated to Ontario; James (1834/5–1908); Jennie; and Matthew. He and his wife are buried at Ettleton cemetery. John (1780–1845) son of John and Mary Cleuch. He farmed at Denholm Townfoot and later at Camptown, where he died. He married Isabella Veitch. Their children were: John; Thomas; Robert; George; Agnes; Veitch; James; Walter; and Hugh. The children all emigrated to Australia, where they settled on the Murray River. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. John (1806–90) born in Wilton Parish, son of James and Mary Scott. He trained as a clothier and tailor. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. On the 1841 census he was listed at about No. 1 Sandbed, with wife Janet and children John, Elizabeth and a new-born (William). In Hawick he married Janet (b.1818), daughter of William Williamson and Elspeth Turnbull. Family history states that in about 1851 he emigrated to Canada with his wife and sons James, John Scott and Robert. His wife was said to have died on the voyage, and he settled down as a farmer, purchasing land in Euphrasias Township, Ontario, in 1855. By 1851 his widow was a grocer on Wilton Place. In 1861 she was at Dovemount (probably about No. 2 Princes Street) and the census says ‘surname Willison deleted’. It is possible there were 2 different Johns being confounded here, but more likely is that some of the information is incorrect, and that his wife returned to Hawick after they emigrated. John (b.1807/8) born in Castleton Parish, son of Thomas and Janet Ingles. He became farmer at Wolfelee. In 1851 he was farmer of 145 arable acres and 3000 acres of pasture, employing 5 people. He married Helen (or Ellen), daughter of Thomas Stavert; she died in 1852, aged 59. Their children included: Thomas (1845–61); John (d.1855); Archibald Stavert (b.1849), who emigrated to Australia; and Helen Stavert (b.1852), who died in infancy. The family are buried at Ettleton. John (1814/5–92) son of William (teacher in the Canonbie area) and Helen Bell. He himself became a teacher in Langholm. He came to Hawick in the late 1840s to run the school at the head of Baker Street, which had been started by his brother Andrew. The school grew, and moved to the old East Bank Kirk. He is listed as teacher at a school in the East End in 1852. He was assisted by his younger brother William, who eventually ran the school that would become St. Mary’s and ultimately Trinity. He himself left to become schoolmaster at Longnewton and eventually at Caverton Mill, near Kelso. He married Jane Richardson, who died in 1915, aged 84. Their children included Graham, who was a tobaccoconistant at 17 High Street, and Nellie, a milliner who retired to Denholm. John (1815/6–88) born in Hobkirk Parish, was 3rd son of Elliot. He worked as a servant at Wauchope for 19 years, then worked as a hedger at Minto and spent his last 15 years of employment as farm steward at Dimpleknowe. In 1849 he was among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. In 1861 he was Land Steward, living at Wauchope Cottages. He married Helen, daughter of Robert Waugh, Chesters blacksmith in 1839. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters, including: Robert, carpenter at Blacklee who married Margaret Jackson; John; William, who worked as a successful wool broker in Melbourne, then went to Japan; Violet; and a daughter, possibly Elizabeth, who married Hawick grocer Mr. Brydon. He died at St. Boswells. John (1815/6–83) father of J.E.D., he was a Slater and plumber in Hawick. He had a brother, James. His wife was Margaret Dodd (daughter of the chief drummer with the Drums and Fifes), who died in 1902, aged 78. In 1841 he was living with Margaret on O'Connell Street. The family later lived at 2 Union Street. Their other children were: Isabella A., who married teacher James Brand; Robert, who was a commercial traveller in London; Alison, who married Rev. John Gordon; and Frank James; along with Isabella, Robert, Alison, Margaret and Alison Scott, who all died young. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John of Philiphaugh (1817–82) eldest son of James. He was Deputy Lieutenant and J.P. in Selkirkshire. In 1840 he married Rose Mary, heiress of William Andrew Nesbitt. Their children were: John Forbes Pringle Nesbitt, who succeeded; James (b.1845), who married Mary Russell; and Jesse Rose Mary, who married Sir William Lewis Salisbury Trelawny. John (b.1829/30) farmer at Upper Burnmouth in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was farming 400 acres and employing 3 men. He lived with his sister Agnes. He could be the John who was on the Town Committee of Management in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He subscribed to David Anderson’s book of verse in 1868. John Scott (1835–1904) son of John and Janet Williamson. He was born in Hawick, and in about 1851 he sailed to Canada with his father and paternal grandfather, William Williamson. They settled in Euphrasia Township, Grey County, Ontario, where he farmed. He married Jane Quinton and they had 8 children. John, J.P. (1835/6–1911) from the Annan area, he became a draper in Hawick (at 31 High Street) and later actuary for Hawick Savings Bank. He also served as a Town Councillor and was Burgh Treasurer in the 1880s. He was Treasurer of the Working Men’s Building & Investment Society and possibly the same John Murray was an early committee member of Hawick R.F.C. His sister Janet married Hawick teacher William Murray (probably her second cousin). He married Elspeth ferguson, who died in 1929, aged 86. Their children included John (who died in Vancouver), Peter Wilson (of the bullion department in a London bank) and Elizabeth (who married Abraham P. Hindle). John Edward Dodd ‘Jed’ (1858–1936) son of Slater and Plumber John. He was writer of the words for many Hawick songs, particularly ‘The Mosstroopers’ Song’, ‘Clinty’s Song’, ‘The Wail of Flodden’, ‘Meda’s Song’ and the ‘Invocation’. He also wrote poems such as ‘Hornshole’ (published when he was 14), ‘Oor Gutterblude’, ‘The Reeky Howe’ (also known as ‘Naething New’, composed for the 1889 Dinner) and ‘Lest We Forget’. In addition there were several comedic plays, and musical plays written with Adam Grant, including ‘Turning Back the Clock’, ‘The Caddie’s Ghost’ (1894), ‘The Tramp’ (1896), ‘The Witch o’ the Wisp Hill’ (1901), ‘Kirsty o’ Cocklaw Castle’ (1904) and ‘The Gutterbludes’ (1905); only for the last 2 do scripts survive. Additionally he wrote many of the words for the ‘Quarter-Centenary Pageant’, acting as Pageant Master. Born at 57 High Street, he apprenticed with John Wield, druggist, but had his health damaged by chemicals. He then left Hawick to pursue work in the chemist’s, grocery and insurance trades, returning to Hawick in 1886 when he started his photographic business. His studio was first where the Post Office was later built (at the corner of Bridge Street and Croft Road), moving to 43 Bridge Street in 1902 (designed by J.P. Alison, who lived next door). This became one of Hawick’s foremost photography businesses, closing in 1972. An ardent supporter of the Common Riding, his return to Hawick coincided with the rejuvenation of the ceremonial aspects, and he quickly became involved. J.E.D. was Cornet in 1890 (when he recited a specially-composed poem) and Acting Father no less than 4 times (the last time at the age of 67). He helped inaugurate the annual Cornet’s dinner in 1895, ordered the Curds and Cream for almost half a century and acted as marshal for many years. He was a founder member of the Callants’ Club in 1903. During WWI he personally rode the marches each Common Riding day, against the wishes of the Council and the Callants’ Club. In 1920 he suggested the founding of the Mosstroopers’ Club, and his horse was the model for the badge. In addition he was involved with the local Amateur Operatic Society (doing their stage make-up until the year of his death) and succeeded James Thomson as Bard of Masonic Lodge 424. He became an honorary life member of the golf club after the success of ‘the Caddie’s Ghost’ at their 1894 fund-raiser. He was also a great walker and lover of the outdoors, publishing a book entitled ‘Over the Rolling Stones by One of Them’. He additionally wrote an introductory article for James Edgar’s ‘Hawick Songs and Recitations’ (1892). He was also known as painter, particularly of animals. He married Margaret ‘Daisy’ Young (daughter of a Sandbed baker), who had been his Lass, and they had one child, Melgund. The Museum mounted an exhibition devoted to his life in the late 1990s. A portrait of his favourite horse ‘Oakwood Daisy’ is in the Museum, along with an inkwell made from the foot of another, called ‘Ben’. There is also a painting of his, ‘Mrs. Reid, with Betsy the Cow, Pilムir’. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery in an unmarked grave, although a plaque was unveiled there in 1990. The J.E.D. Murray Memorial Challenge Trophy was first presented at the 1938 Common Riding race meeting. A plaque was unveiled at 57 High Street in 2006 and the Mosstroopers’ Club held a celebration in 2008 to mark the 150th anniversary of his birth. Gen. Sir John Irvine, K.C.B., V.C. (1826–1902) son of James, the Hawick schoolmaster, and Margaret Irvine from Eskdale. He was 3rd cousin of Sir James A.H. He was born in Hawick and must have grown up in the town. He joined the East India Company at the age of 16 and was sent out to Calcutta in 1842. He was appointed to the 71st Native Infantry later in 1842, and rose through the ranks of the Bengal army, eventually becoming commander of the Indian army. He received a medal during the Punjab Campaign of 1848/9, was mentioned in dispatches and wounded at the Battle of Alighur in 1857, commanded a brigade of horsemen at Kutchla Ghaut in 1858 and then on the Nepal frontier, receiving another medal. In 1865/6 he was on the Bhootan Expedition, for which he received another medal. He became Lieut.-Col. in 1866, Col. in 1868, Maj.-Gen. in 1882, Lieut.-Gen. in 1887 and Gen. in 1891. He received the K.C.B. on the Queen’s Golden Jubilee in 1897. He retired to Kensington. In 1854 he married Wilhelmina Stanley (d.1912), daughter of Col. Duncan Archibald Malcolm; he was son of Thomas Malcolm, who was brother of the 4 knights of Burnfoot. They had 6 children: Lieut. Archibald Ross, who served in Afghanistan, but died of cholera at the age of 24; Duncan, who died in childhood; Minnie, who married Maj. Wright; Caroline, who married T.W. Rawlings; Mary, who worked with the Salvation Army, being sent out to South Africa in the Boer War; and Agnes Meade, who married Capt. Woolscombe of the K.O.S.B. Katherine Maud Elisabeth (1909–98) grand-daughter of James A.H. In 1977 she published a biography of her grandfather entitled ‘Caught in the web of words: James A.H. Murray and the Oxford English dictionary’. Kevin police office from Hawick. He became a Superintendent of the Lothian and Borders force and had responsibility for security at the 2014 Commonwealth Games. Malcolm, C.B.E. (1938–) born in Hawick and raised at 12 Loan, he turned down the chance to study science at Edinburgh University, instead joining the Scottish Life Assurance Company. By the time he retired in 1999 he was Chief Executive and Director. He served as President of the Insurance Society of Edinburgh and the Faculty of Actuaries. Always a keen sports enthusiast, he playing for Hawick Trades and Edinburgh Borderers and was Hawick R.F.C. President in 2002–04. He has also been a longtime member of Hawick Golf Club. He was Chief Guest of the Common Riding in 2011 and has served as Callants’ Club President. Margaret (1629/30–1707) wife of William Craw. After her husband died in 1671 she took over his share of the tenancy of Braxholm, atenownforn. This she did until at least 1677, with her son James later taking over. She is buried in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. Margaret (b.1820/1) draper, grocer and post-mistress in.

Murray Murray

Newcastleton in the 1850s and 60s. She lived on South Hermitage Street with her twin sister Jane (who was a hat-maker), and another sister Agnes (also a milliner). Her business was listed as ‘Margaret Murray & Co.’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. She was probably related to the earlier draper, John. Mary (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Matthew (d.1840) son of John and Ann Jardine, he was born in Castleton. He worked as a farm servant, general labourer and stone quarrier. In 1866 he married Jane (b.1837) daughter of William Kyle and Robina Cavers. Their children were: John (b.1867); William (b.1868); Anna Jane (b.1870); and Thomas (b.1872). Sir Maurice ‘de Moravia’ (d.1346) Earl of Strathearn. Born in Drumsargard, Cambuslang, Lanarkshire, he was probably eldest son of Sir John of Drumsargard and an unknown mother. His step-mother was Mary, daughter of Malise, 7th Earl of Strathearn. He may have fought at Halidon Hill in 1333, and is recorded as Sheriff of Lanark in 1334. He was granted the Barony of Sprouston in an undated charter of David II. At about the same time he was also granted the ward of Walter Cumming of Rowallan in the Barony of Hawick (although it is unclear what exactly this means). He was granted Branxholme by David II after it was forfeited by John Baliol; this may have been around 1333, when he would still have been quite young. There is a suggestion that he was granted Branxholme (and perhaps Hawick) as early as 1329 (although this is unclear). He supported Andrew Murray (guardian for David II) in his rejection of English peace terms in the late 1330s and became a favourite of David II when he returned from France in 1341. He had custody of Stirling Castle in 1342. In that same year he had a grant from David II of the Barony of Hawick and Branxholme (possibly a regranting), as well as Sprouston and Strathaven in Lanarkshire. This was probably to try to curb the power of Robert the Steward in Clydesdale and William Douglas of Liddesdale (both out of favour with the Crown). He was granted the Earldom of Strathearn in 1343. In 1344 he was one of the cautioners for the followers of Alexander Ramsay, who had been murdered by William Douglas. He witnessed many royal charters in the early 1340s. He was created a Justiciar, and would undoubtedly have become more powerful still had he not been killed at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. Robert the Steward would later claim the Earldom of Strathearn for himself. In 1339 he married Joan (or Joanna) of Monteith, daughter of Wallace’s betrayer. She was widow of Malise Murray (his own step-grandfather) and of John Campbell, Earl of Atholl. After his death his widow married William, Earl of Sutherland. He may have had an illegitimate son Maurice and also appears to have had a son William. His daughter Joan (or Joanna, who might instead have been his granddaughter, or his wife’s daughter with the Earl of Sutherland) married Sir Thomas Murray of Bothwell, and later she (or more likely her daughter of the same name) married Archibald Douglas ‘the Grim’, passing on the Hawick Barony to the Douglases. Ninian (15th/16th C.) possessor of the lands of Kershope in Ettrick. He and his brother John leased the lands in the mid-1480s, but they were attacked and their property destroyed, with John being killed in about 1485. He and his son John were given the lease of these Crown lands in 1490. In 1494/5 Lawrence Rutherford in Oakwood had remission for stealing sheep from him at Kershope. He was still leasing half of Kershope in 1502. In 1500 Walter Scott of Branxholm was recorded as assignee of him and John of Falahill in recovering money that Philip Turnbull of Whithope owed them for the damage done to their lands. Probably the same Ninian was on the 1509 panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor. Thomas is listed after him, and possibly a relative. Sir Oswyn (1873– 1936) born at Mill Hill, London, he was a son of Sir James A.H. He went into the Civil Service and became Secretary to the Admiralty 1917–36. His wife Lady Mildred wrote a biography of him. Patrick of Falahill (d.c.1492) son of John. He acquired land near Philiphaugh in about 1477. He had a sasine for the lands of ‘Pringillisland’ and ‘Litsterland’ in Selkirkshire in 1477. From 1477 he was granted the lease of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw, which had been in the hands of his father. In 1479 he gave his seal to an obligation involving the Kers of Cessford. In 1484 and again in 1488 he and his son John had the lease of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw. Around 1485–90 he was also tenant of Bowhill along with his brother Peter. His children included: John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’; Thomas, mentioned as brother of John in 1494/5; and Margaret. Patrick of Falahill (d.1580) son of James of Falahill and grandson of ‘the Outlaw Murray’. He held the office of hereditary Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He also held the lands of Philiphaugh, according to a charter of 1528. In 1530 he was served heir to his father James in the customs and duties of Selkirk, as well as the Sheriffship. He was ‘of Hangerischaw’ in 1541 when recorded as owner of the lands of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw in Yarrow, as well as ‘Hairheid’ in Ettrick. In 1547/8 he was listed among the supporters of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in a bond along with the Kerrs. In 1564/5 he was one of the witnessed to the bond between the Kerrs and the Scotts. In 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. He married Margaret, daughter of John, Lord Fleming, secondly married a daughter of Lord Borthwick and thirdly married Elizabeth Ormiston, who was a widow. His eldest son was James, who married Margaret, daughter of William Stewart of Traquair, and whose son Patrick succeeded. His son Malcolm is recorded in 1573. He also had a daughter, Catherine, who married James Somervelle of Cambusnethan. Patrick of Falahill (d.1601) grandson of Patrick of Falahill. In about 1588 he was appointed as one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Selkirk and Peebles. He is listed on the 1590 ‘Roll of the Clans’. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, and secondly married Marian, daughter of Sir Lewis Bellendon. His children were: Sir John, who succeeded; Patrick, who held his father’s lands of Langshaw in Melrose Parish. He was involved in a feud with James of Skirling and grandson of Patrick of Falahill. He was brother of Sir Patrick of Deuchar and Sir James of Skirling. He was Lord Provost of Edinburgh and represented Edinburgh in Parliament. He acquired the lands of Cameron, Priestfield and Melgum in Forfarshire. He also held 2 tenements in Hawick, which were inherited by his son Alexander in 1672; it is not clear where these pieces of land were located. He firstly married Helen, daughter of Alexander Hay ofKenneth, and secondly married Jean, daughter of John Dickson of Hartree. His children included: James, who died young; Alexander, who succeeded him; John (b.1656); Robert; William (1662–1703); and James (again, b.1669). Robert (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Mains, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton, who lived at Pathead and then Toftsholm. He was probably the smith in Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He was one of the first feuars to commence building in Newcastleton. He married twice, his 2nd wife being Marion Crozier. Their children were: John (b.c.1777), who was a blacksmith; Marion (b.1781), who married mason John Nichol; Robert (1784–1859), who married Nellie Scott; Margaret (1788–1882), who married Robert Mitchellhill, and emigrated to Galt, Ontario; and Jane (b.1790), who probably died young. His first wife may have been Margaret Nichol, who died at Millholm in 1774, aged 31, and is buried at Ettleton. Robert (b.1780s) father of plumber John (who was father of J.E.D.) and James. He married Alison Erskine Scott. Robert (1784–1859) nail-maker in Newcastleston, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was at about 47 North Hermitage Street. He was probably son of Robert and Marion Crozier. He married Helen (or ‘Nellie’) Scott, who died in 1874, aged 83. Their children included: Robert (1813/4–56); Marion (b.1816); Archibald (1817–44); John; James; Thomas (1827/8–47); and Jean (1831/2–51). They are mostly buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Pott and their children included Richardson (b.1812). Robert (18th/19th C.) baker in Newcastleston. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is also listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He does not appear in the 1841 census. Robert (b.c.1810) foreman at Weensland Mills. He was living there in 1841, along with Jessie, probably his wife. Robert (b.1821/2) shepherd at Old Castleton in 1851 and 1861. He is still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Rachel, and their children included Janet, Marion and Jane. Robert (1831–1901) born in Hawick, son of weaver William and Helen Biggar, and cousin of Sir James A.H.’s father. He worked in the hosiery trade with William Watson & Sons, taking over Peter Laidlaw’s business at Wilton Grove for a few years in the 1870s. He was also President of the Temperance Burns Club. He emigrated to Canada in 1882, living mainly in Galt, and returned to Hawick in 1892. He became a contributor to the local press, where he sometimes wrote under the pen-name ‘B.O.B.’, giving us ‘The Reckoning’ for example. However, he was a strong advocate for total abstinence. He was a Councillor 1868/9, supporter of the allotments, the Working Men’s Building Society and the Co-operative Society. He was a founder member and President of the Archological Society (with only his distant cousin Sir James outliving him), major contributor to the Transactions and served as Museum Curator. He wrote several books of local interest, including ‘The Gypsies of the Borders’ (1875), ‘Hawick Songs and Song Writers’ (1881, 1889, 1897) and ‘Hawick Characters’ (1901), both of which ran to several editions (both were originally published in serial form in the local press, with ‘Hawick Characters’ collecting many articles originally written by others). His ‘History of Hawick, from Earliest Times to 1832’ (1901) is a treasure-trove of anecdotial information. It was followed by ‘History of Hawick, from 1832’ issued by the publisher in 1902 from notes that he left. He also wrote ‘The gypsies of the border’ (1875). He lived at Allars Crescent in the latter part of his life. In 1853 he married Agnes, daughter of George ‘Pie’ Olivers, who died in 1901, aged 72; when they married he was living in Brougham Place. Their sons were William (a merchant in Aberdeen) and George Oliver (a doctor in Wisconsin). A memorial stone was erected in the Wellogate Cemetery by his friends and members of the Archiological Society, containing the motto ‘Leal to the Border’. A portrait of him was painted by Frank Wood in 1897, in the Museum. Robert (19th C.) son of John. He was a carpenter at Blacklee in Hobkirk Parish. In 1868 he married Margaret Jackson, from Crookholm, Canonbie. Their children were John (chemist and druggist), James (also a carpenter, died age 27) and Margaret (who married Thomas Smith). Robert (b.1835) son of John and Isabella Howison. He was a frameworker in Hawick, living at 50 High Street in 1861. He married Elizabeth Hunter, who was from Earlston. His children included James (b.1860), who became a baker in Edinburgh. Robert (b.1856) elder brother of J.E.D. He was a commercial traveller in London and had eight children. Roger (d.1330) son of Archibald, he is one of the earliest known ancestors of the local Murrays. He was recorded as being ‘de Moravia’. In 1321 he was granted the lands of Fala by James, Lord Douglas. The Murrays of Falahill, Philiphaugh and Blackbarony are all descended from him. Roger (15th/16th C.) leased half the lands of Sundhope in the Yarrow valley in the period 1487–99. The other half went to William, who was his brother. The pair appear to have had their farm raided several times, e.g. by Robert Turnbull in Castlehill (near Branxholme), who was charged with stealing 15 score sheep from Sundhope. He leased half of Windydoors in 1502 as well as half of Sundhope with Thomas (who was surely another relative). Sarah (1744–1811) of Kensington, who wrote a travel guide ‘A companion, and useful guide to the beauties of Scotland …’ published in 1799. She visited Hawick in 1785, her short account including the following: ‘Some young lads passing through the churchyard at Hawick whilst

I was in it, with dogs and some strange looking things on their backs, I inquired what they were going to do with them, but their language to me was as Arabic. On my shaking my head as a token of not understanding them, they began screaming in the highest note of their voices, taking me, I suppose, for a deaf woman; and at last we separated, laughing at our inability of understanding each other. Sir Thomas of Bothwell (d.1361) son of Sir Andrew. The identity of his mother seems to be unknown. He succeeded to his father’s estates after the death of his elder brother John. In 1351 he was a hostage in England, in place of David II. He returned to Scotland in 1352 and was knighted by the following year. He was involved in negotiations for the release of David, and was involved with the Treaty of Berwick in 1357. He appears to have returned as a prisoner to England in 1358, and although he may have returned to Scotland again, he was back a prisoner in London in 1359. He married Joan (or Joanna) Moray, daughter of Sir Maurice of Strathearn, who had been Baron of Hawick. He was granted the Barony (along with that of Sprouston) in a 1358 charter of David II. However, this may have been a re-granting, since it seems likely he gained the Barony through marriage to the daughter of the previous Baron. He was described in 1358 as ‘panitario nostro Scocie’ (i.e. pantler of Scotland). He probably died of the plague in London. Although it is often stated that his widow later married Archibald, Earl of Douglas, it seems more likely that Douglas married his daughter (and heiress), who was also called Joan. Through her the Barony of Hawick passed to the Douglases. Thomas (1754–1834) son of David and Elizabeth. He was farmer at Whisgills in Castleton Parish, perhaps taking over from his brother John. He was recorded on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was still farmer there in the 1830s. He married Janet Inglis, who was from Millholm, with her maternal grandparents being Brydons from Ettrick; she died in 1852, aged 84. They had many children, including 7 daughters who grew to adulthood and all married: Jean (b.1783), married Rev. John Law of the Newcastleton Burgher Kirk; Agnes (b.1784), who married Walter Armstrong, ‘the auld merchant’ in Newcastleton; Elizabeth (b.1788), who died young; David (1791/2–1815), who was very tall; Elizabeth (again, 1794–1845), who married Peter Oliver; James (b.1792), who also farmed at Whisgills; Mary (b.1804), who married Robert Elliot in Hermitage; Thomas (b.1796); Julie (b.c.1799); John (b.1803), who died young; and John (again, b.1806), who also died young. One of his daughters agreed to marriage after dreaming about her dress being snagged by her husband-to-be as he was angling. Margaret (1799/1800–61), who married shepherd John Scott, may also have been his daughter. The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery (and the dates on the headstone do not all match the birth years from the parish records).

Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Borthwickbrae. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (b.1794/5) labourer in Robertson Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Robertson Glebefoot, described in 1851 as a ‘Road Contractor’. His wife was Margaret and their children included Beatrice, Jessie, Walter, William, Robert and Thomas. He was probably the son of William baptised in Robertson in 1794. Thomas (d.1842) labourer at Upperraw and Whiteknowe. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. Thomas, LL.D. (1792–1872) of Edinburgh, was made an Honorary Burgess in 1836 after delivering a series of lectures in the town on ‘the Science of Political Economy’. He wrote several books on varied subjects. Thomas (1806/7–58) son of James, who farmed at Whisgills. He was tenant farmer at Burnmouth. Thomas (1811–73) father of Sir James A.H. Born in Denholm, he had a clothiers business in Hawick. His father was James (descended from the Murrays of Spittal Tower), and his mother Christina Winthrope (whose father was a ‘writer’ in Hawick). He became a journeyman tailor, travelling the north of England and witnessing the opening of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway in 1829. He eventually returned in 1835 and settled in Denholm, since Hawick had too many tailors at the time. However, he moved into Hawick in 1858, his house and business being at 6 Bourtree Place. He was for a while a member of the old Town Council. In 1835 he married Mary (1803–88), 6th child of Hawick linen manufacturer Charles Scott. They had 5 children, all born in Denholm: James (1837–1915), lexicographer extraordinaire; Charles, who died young; Alexander Davidson, newspaper editor; Charles Oliver, engraver; and Margaret Scott, who married Alfred Marshall, and later lived with her mother at 10 Wellogate Place. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Kirndean in Castleton Parish in 1868. Walter (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor'. Walter (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (1693/4–1719) buried at Borthwick Waas. His gravestone is adjacent to that of James and others associated with Teindside. Walter (18th C.) farmer who was replaced by Abraham Armstrong as tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1796. This was probably the farm of Shankend. Walter (b.1795) stockmaker, giving his name, for a time, to Murray Place, although he only owned property in the area from 1814 for less than two years. He inherited 66 High Street (and the area behind 66 and 68, which became Murray Place) from a relative William Turnbull, tailor, in 1814, and sold it to Robert Leyden in 1816. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Margaret. Walter (b.c.1800) mason on the Kirk Wynd in 1841. His wife was Euphemia, and they also has a daughter called Euphemia. Walter (19th C.) Church Officer of Hawick Free Kirk 1874–87. William (15th C.) leased half the lands of Sundhope in the Yarrow valley from the Crown in the period 1487–99. His son John was also mentioned in 1492. His brother Roger leased the other half of Sundhope. In 1494/5 he had 30 oxen and cows, a horse and goods stolen by David Turnbull, son of the Laird of Whithope. There were still Murrays at Sundhope in the late-17th century. William of Romanno (d.c.1560) son of William of Shillinglaw. He was listed among the Borders men who followed the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran, for which they had re- mission in 1526. His brother Alexander was also listed. He married Joneta, heiress of John Romanno of that Ilk. His children included: William, who succeeded; John; James; Christian, who married William Cockburn of Henderland; and Marion, who married Thomas Dudingstoun of Southouse. William (d.c.1633) acted as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for part of the rents in Branxholme and Wilton in the period 1631–33. In the period 1633–37 his wife Isobel Wilson performed the duty in his place. William (17th C.) servitor to Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, recorded in 1646 when he witnessed a document relating to lands in Edinburgh. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Templehall’ when he witnessed a sasine relating to Harwood lands in 1664. William (b.1740s) younger son of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He had 2 sons: Veitch, who was a builder, working on Auncum Bridge; and John. William ‘Wullie on the Wundi Sole’ (d.bef. 1805) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Todd in Hawick in 1794. His nickname ‘Willie on the windowsole’ is recorded when his wife died in 1805. It is unclear where the name might have come from (although ‘sole’ is the old word for ‘sill’). William (1771/2–1833) schoolmaster in Canonbie, who died in Langholm. He married Helen Byers, who died in 1866, aged 70. Their sons Andrew, John and William were teachers in Hawick. Their other children were Fanny (who died aged 95), John (teacher at Caverton Mill, near Kelso), Thomas (who also married a Helen Byers), James and Janet. William (b.1787/8) from Brownmuir in Selkirkshire, he was teacher at a school in Lilliesleaf. He ran his own school (separate from the Parochial School), which was probably on the Loan in the village. His was probably the ‘adventure school’ described in the New Statistical Account (1840) as teaching ‘English reading, writing, and arithmetic, the latter only tolerably well, the former two in the most vulgar manner’. It went on to say that the ‘teacher has no education superior to a common labourer, and refuses to apply for further education’; if not strictly accurate, this suggests strong disagreement with the minister, who probably wrote the account. He was recorded as teacher at Lilliesleaf in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his brothers Alexander and Walter. In 1861 he was on Main Street with his brother Alexander and his family. William (1789–1872) 3rd son of Andrew of Spittal Tower. He was a stockmaker in Hawick and later a merchant. In 1841 he was living on Miller’s Close off the High Street, in 1851 was on Brougham Place and in 1861 he was a grocer and china merchant at 75 High Street. In 1822 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Biggar, and she died in 1871, aged 77. Their children were: Andrew (1823–82), who married Isabella Brown; Jane (b.c.1825), who married John Marchbank; Elizabeth (b.c.1827), who married Andrew Smith of Dalkeith; Agnes (b.c.1830); Robert (b.c.1832); Isabella (b.c.1834), who married James Lambert and kept a wash-house; Helen (b.c.1836), who married Andrew Lambert; and William (b.c.1839), who married Margaret Anderson and later Mary Ann Hope. William (b.1792/3) from Traquair, he was a famer at Haughhead in Ashkirk Parish. In 1851 he was farmer there of 8 acres and in 1861 he was at ‘Nook Haugh’ farming 10 acres. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Philia Oliver and their children included Mary and Philia. His sister-in-law Janet Oliver (from Ashkirk) was living with the family in 1861. William (1794–1875) son of William and Beatrice Scott, he was born in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was at Scawrnoon with his mother. In 1851 and 1861 he was a retired shepherd living with his daughter and son-in-law at Scawrnoon. His first wife (according to the gravestone) may have been Helen Grieve, who died in 1822, aged 20. He had sons William (d.1819), who died in infancy, and James (d.1841), who died in an accident at the age of 5. His daughter Helen married carrier John Elliot. He died at Scawrmond and was buried in Roberton Cemetery. William (b.1802/3) from Castleton, he was a joiner in Teviothead. He married Betty Young. Their children included: John (b.1829); Elizabeth (b.1831); Thomas (1835–68), who died in an accident in Manchester; Douglas (b.1839); and James (b.1843). He is buried at Teviothead. William (b.1812/3) shepherd at Blackcleugh, Teviothead Parish. He is recorded there in 1851 with his wife Janet and children Thomas, Andrew, George, William, Margaret, Walter and Elizabeth. Dr. William (1813/4–65) surgeon in Newcastleton, brother of Margaret, Jane and Agnes. He was listed as a surgeon on Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He collected antiquities from the district, having the last hand-cuffs used in the village, as well as the supposed key from Mangerton Tower and a brass mortar-gun from Hermitage. He presented Liddesdale fossils and other items to the Hawick Archæological Society. He was listed as a surgeon in Newcastleton in the 1850s when he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale. When it was decided that the Liddesdale route would be taken for the railway, he rode his gig to the head of the Liddel with flags flying, to announce the good news to the district. In 1861 he was at about 48 South Hermitage Street, and listed as a surgeon, but blind. In 1843 he married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Scott, a Newcastleton innkeeper. Their children included Isabel, Elizabeth Janet and Mary. Isabel and George emigrated to Elmira, Illinois. He is buried at Etleton Cemetery. William (b.1814/15) tailor on the High Street. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 6 High Street with his wife Margaret and daughter, also Margaret. In 1851 he was a widower in a lodging house on Walter’s Wynd. William (1831/2–1906) Hawick teacher for over 50 years. Son of William, he was born at Broomeknowe, Canonbie. He came to Hawick in 1850, to help run the school started by his brother Andrew at the top of Baker Street, and continued by his other brother John. The school had moved to the old East Bank Kirk, then to the foot of the close at 9 High Street and then to 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place). He was hired as a teacher at St. Mary’s School in 1864 and became the first Headmaster at Trinity in 1876. He was also on the Town Council for 5 years and served as Session Clerk for St. Mary’s. When he retired in 1903 he built Carradoyne in Fenwick Park, where he died. He married Janet Murray, eldest sister of J.P. John (and probably his second cousin). Their children included: William, who worked at the Commercial Bank in Hawick, moved to England and retired to Langholm; John, an architect in Liverpool; David (who was assistant to Dr. James Brydon in the Sandbed; and Elizabeth Carruthers, who married Rev. Stewart Burns. William (19th C.) married Jane Dodd Hobkirk in Hawick in 1858. William (1838/9–1916) youngest son of William and brother of poet and historian Robert. He married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Anderson and she died in 1877, aged 33. Their children were William (printer in Costa Rica), Isabella (who married August Louis Roye from Detroit), Andrew (a chemist in Costa Rica who married twice) and 3 children who died young. He later remarried to Mary Ann Hope. He was said to be a striking personality (in contrast to his brother Robert), with a tall stature and a long flowing beard in later years. In 1908 he was elected librarian of the St. Andrew’s Society of Detroit. Soon after he returned to Hawick and became an active member of the Archæological Society, being joint secretary in 1910 and 1911 and writing some articles. William (b.1855) eldest son of local historian Robert. He became a merchant in Aberdeen. He married Georgina Scott and later Catherine Hosie. His children were Margaret, Agnes Oliver, Jane Stewart, Helen Georgina, Janet Brown and Robert. William (19th/20th C.) gardener at Borthwickshiel. His grandmother was a sister of Walter Scott (‘Wat o the Knowe’). He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. William (d.1915) son of William and Margaret Anderson, he was descended from the Spittal Tower Murrays and was nephew of local historian Robert. He became a printer in Costa Rica and married Agnes MacNair. His younger brother Andrew was a chemist in Costa Rica and married his sister-in-law Margaret MacNair (in earliest times interchangeable with ‘Moray’, and became ‘Moravia’, ‘Moravie’.
Murray Bros

Murray Place (mu-ri-plis) n. lost street name, being the area behind 66 and 68 High Street, named after Walter Murray, stockmaker who was there for only about 2 years from 1814. The new houses there were built in the early 1860s and for a few years referred to as Albert Place, but Murray Place by the 1868/9 Valuation roll. The name was dropped altogether in 1968 as it became simply the lower part of O’Connell Street.

Murray Place (mu-ri-plis) n. street in Denholm, between Douglas Drive and the Ashloaning, where 10 new houses were built in the 1950s.

the Murrays (thun-mu-riz) n. Scottish family, probably all originating from an ancient line connected with the area of Moray or Moravia in the north-east of Scotland. The most important Lairdship locally was that of the Murrays of Falahill and Philiphaugh, descended from Archibald, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In the 16th century these Murrays were involved in many feuds, as well as in the struggles against the English. There were long Murrays in Rulewater and in Hawick there were several important families (most of which are directly related), which gave us lexicographer Sir James A.H. Murray, local historian Robert Murray, songwriter J.E.D. Murray and others.

Murray-Stavert (mu-ri-stä-vur’) n. Archibald Stavert (19th/20th C.) lived at Saughtree and later Stanegarthside. He served as a Justice for Roxburghshire.

Murray’s Temperance Hotel (mu-ri-tém-pu-rins-hôle-tel) n. teetotal establishment at 15 High Street in the late 19th century.

murt (mur) n., arch. the skin of a sheep that has died naturally – ‘Ane murt lamb skin [is stated to be hardly worth two shillings Scots]’ [BR1700], ‘Murt, A lamb-skin before castration-time, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (also ‘mort’).

murther (mu-thur) n., arch., poet. murder – ‘...but when he heard ane crying murther he straight way went up to make riddance and to allay tumult’ [PR1716], ‘Thaye sley the widaw an’ the fremet, an’ nurther the faetherliss’ [HSR] (older version of the word murder).

Muselee (mezw-, -maz-, muz-lee) n. farm across the Borthwick river from Deanburnhaugh, below Broadlee. It was in Hawick Parish until 1689/90 when Roberton was formed. The Muselee Burn joins the Borthwick here, and the 276 m Muselee Hill is above. A narrow lane between 2 dykes to the left of the house is part of an old drove road, with cattle passing from the west through here and over to Teviothead and on to English markets. Alexander Scott ‘in Mouslaw’, recorded in 1501, could have been tenant here. Adam Murray is recorded there in 1502. The lands were owned by a branch of the Riddells from at least 1618 and passed to the niece of Charles Riddell of Muselee in 1849 when he died unmarried. In 1627 it was valued along with Woodburn as paying ‘120 lb., vicarage 20 lb’. Archibald Elliot of Muselee, ‘a common a notorious thief and fugitive’ was tried in 1628. There were 4 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. John Riddell paid the land tax on £100 in Hawick Parish in 1663 and 1678 (probably for Muselee, which was in Hawick Parish at that time). By 1788 (and still continued in 1811) the owner was Charles Riddell and the value was unchanged. Thomas Grieve is recorded as farmer there in 1797. About the same time John Laidlaw was shepherd there. William Aitkin was farmer there in 1841. Robert Brown was farmer in the 1860s Capt. George Hutton Riddell was the owner in about 1874. (also formerly spelled ‘Mooslie’, ‘Muislie’, ‘Muselie’, ‘Muslie’, ‘Musla’ and variants; it is ‘muselee’ in 1502, ‘Mouslie’ in 1616, ‘Mewslie’ in 1628, ‘Museley’ in 1653, ‘Muslie’ in 1663, ‘Mooslie’ in 1690, ‘Muslie’ in 1678 and 1695, ‘Mewsie’ in 1761, ‘Mooselee’ in 1797 and ‘Muslie’ in 1841; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as ‘Mooselie’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Mussly’ and is absent from Stobie’s 1770 map and Ainslie’s 1821 map; the name may be from Old English ‘mos-leah’ meaning ‘fodder lea’).

Muselee Burn (mezw-lee-burn) n. stream that runs into the Borthwick Water roughly from the south-east, joining near Muselee. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail, with a section of the linear earthwork ending near the stream, about 300 m north of Broadlee Loch. It then runs in a south-easterly direction to connect with the headwaters of the Teindside Burn.

Muselee Hill (mezw-lee-hil) n. hill to the south-east of Muselee farm in the Borthwick valley, reaching a height of 276 m. A linear earthwork runs for about 500 m from Muselee Burn to the east, across the southern slopes of this hill, ending in the headwaters of the Wood Burn. It is presumably an old agricultural boundary.

Muselee Drive (mewz-lee-driv) n. street in Lilliesleaf, running to the north at the west side of the village.

Muselee Sike (mewz-lee-sik) n. small stream on the south side of the Borthwick valley, between Muselee and Woodburn. It is distinct from Muselee Burn, which lies to the west.

the Museum (thu-mew-zee-um) n. Hawick’s museum is located in Wilton Lodge, it houses a permanent display of knitwear and hosiery history, as well as other local artefacts, paintings, natural history and acheology. Many more items of local interest are in storage than can be displayed at one time. It grew out of the collection of the Archaeological Society, which first opened to the public in premises at the east end of the High Street in 1858. It can be seen upstairs in the property of Milligan’s (site of the Liberal Club) in an 1858 photo. A steady stream of artefacts were donated to the Society over its first few decades, and were on public display initially only for a few hours on Saturday evenings. There was a catalogue published for the 1866 exhibition given in connection with the Archaeological Society. The collection moved to the old Grammar School building and then the Buccleuch Memorial, where at least one photograph exists showing the collection packed into the available space. In 1906 it was offered to the Town Council, under the condition that Wilton Lodge be converted into use as a Museum. This followed in 1910, when it was opened by the Duke of Buccleuch (who was given an ornate golden key to mark the occasion, and was the first person to sign the visitor’s book). J.P. Alison drew up the original plans for converting the house into a museum. Extensive renovations were carried out in 1959 to showcase the local exhibits, and in 1975 the Scott Gallery extension was added. In 1984 the Museum became the headquarters for the Roxburgh District Museums Service. In early 2007 a new lift was added and other renovations carried out. In 2017 the trust ‘Live Borders’ took over the running of the Museum.

Musgrave (muz-gräv) n. Sir John (c.1450–c.1515) Englishman who was important on the Marches around 1500. In 1502 Adam Turnbull ‘in Hornishole, now in Chalmerlane-Newtoune’ had a remission for several crimes, including ‘the treasonable in-bringing’ of him to the ‘Burning of Selkirk and Hereschip, and Stouthreif of goods therein’. He was probably son of Sir Thomas and younger brother of Sir Richard. He was knighted after the Battle of Stoke Field. He was Sheriff of Cumberland from 1489 and Constable of Bewcastle (along with his son Thomas) from 1493. He married Joan, daughter of John Crackenthorpe and secondly Margaret (or Dorothy), sister of John Dudley. He may also be the same Sir John whose wife was an inspiration for some of William Dunbar’s poetry. Sir John of Bewcastle (16th C.) son of Sir William and an unknown mistress. He was also known as ‘Jack a Musgrave’ and was leader of English raiding parties, serving as Captain of Bewcastle. In 1541 he complained that his houses had been burned by Liddesdale men. In 1542 he and 40 men ‘brent a towne in Tevedall caulyd Rowle’, which was presumably on the Rule Water, perhaps Town-o’-Rule. He took part in the battle of Solway Moss at the end of 1542. He led a force that intercepted a raiding party of Liddesdale men near Hexham in 1542/3. However, he was accused of ransoming Scottish prisoners. He married Jane Chamber and Agnes Thirlwall and his children included Adam, Ingram, Thomas, Richard and Lancelot. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Simon, who was Captain of the English garrison at Bewcastle. He was younger brother of Christopher. In 1583 he sent a letter to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor in which he lists the chief Eliots and Armstrongs of Liddesdale. He acted as Captain of Bewcastle once his father was too old. In 1596 he attempted a retaliatory raid on the Armstrongs of Hollows, but was ambushed on the way home by John Armstrong of Langholm, Will Armstrong of Kimmont and others. They delivered him to Scott of Branxholme and he was returned after paying ransom. These events could have been inspiration for part of the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer o’ the Fair Dodheid’. In 1602 he fought a duel with Lancelot Carleton, after he had been accused of offering to give up Bewcastle to the King of Scotland. He married Ursula, daughter of Sir Richard Carnaby, and secondly married a Scottish woman. There were complaints from English Commissioners in 1606 that ‘he matched one of his base daughters with that bloodie and theevish clanne of the Armstrongs of Whithaughe in Liddesdale’ and that the sons of Sandie’s Ringan were known to frequent his house.

Mushet (mu-shi) n. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘of Holpaslat’ in 1499 when he was on the inquest for Richard Rutherford of that Musselburgh (mu-sul-bu-ru) n. town in the Lothians, about 6 miles east of Edinburgh. Created a burgh of barony in the early 14th century, it was originally called Eskmouth and nicknamed ‘the Honest Toun’, supposedly after the Regent, Lord Randolph, took shelter there and no one gave away his place of concealment to the English. It is well known to Hawick folk for having a Common Riding, held in late July. The principals are the Honest Lad and Lass, and are elected by open vote of the ‘Honest Toun’s Association’. The festival really began in 1936, building on the ancient riding of the marches ceremony and partly inspired by Hawick Common Riding. The main song is ‘Come all ye Honest Lads and Lasses’.

Myredykes (mi-r-dîks) n. former farm in Castleton Parish on the road to Kielder, at the head of the Liddel. It is ‘Myredyks’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. It was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1623. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it covered 306 acres and was bounded by Peel, the Border, Hudshouse and Thorsliehope: the farm-house appears to be shown on the east bank of the Peel Burn rather than the west. William Elliot farmed there in the late 18th century. Thomas Elliot, Archibald Scott and their families lived there in 1851 and Thomas Murray’s family in 1861. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. The property is now under forest. There was once a railway bridge over the road there. A flanged axe-head found there is in the National Museum of Antiquities (also written ‘Meerdykes’, it is ‘Meirdyks’ in 1623 and ‘Myerdykes’ in 1718).

Myre-quarter (miIr-kwar-tur) n. former name for lands in Belses. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Kerr in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew. In 1874 it was part of the estate of Belses owned by Sir George Douglas of Springwood Park (it is ‘Myre Quarter’ in 1678).

Myreslaw Court (miIrz-lu-kôr’} n. sheltered housing complex built at Myreslaw Green in 1973, adjacent to St. Margaret’s Home. It is on the site of the former ‘Green Kirk’ (later used for concerts, church events and as a warehouse) and also the house where the Cornet traditionally stopped for a stirrup cup on the way down from the Mair. It was the first purpose-built sheltered housing unit in Scotland, and used as a model by other local authorities (also written as one word).

Myreslawgreen see Myreslaw Green

Myreslaw Green (miIrz-lu-green, miIrz-lu-green) n. part of the town Common in the West End. In 1740 it was used to pasture animals employed on building the Teviot Brig, and the Council ordered that no turf should be cut from there. It was first feued in part in 1766, for the Anti-Burgher meeting house and manse, and not immediately affected by the Division of 1777. Originally a pasture with only one building (the Green Kirk built in 1767), it was developed over the subsequent few decades. The area once included what is now Drumlanrig Place to Myreslawgreen and formed the western boundary of the Burgh. The ‘common vennel at Myreslawgreen’ referred to in the 1537 charter probably ran from Morrison Place to Coble Pool Lane (now on the High School grounds). When this area is reached by the riders coming back from the Moor on the Friday of the Common Riding, they are served refreshments, or ‘a guid cauld caller’, a tradition possibly begun by ‘Rodgie o the Green’. This was continued for about 70 years in the 20th century by the Misses McCallum. ‘Myreslaw Green’ appeared as a street name from at least 1824, and is now mainly used to the single street, which was originally part of Green Wynd. But it is also used more generally to mean that broad area of the West End surrounding the former green, including many streets named after leading Liberal reformers of Victorian times. The street used to contain the West-end branch of the Co-op (the word itself is a mixture of Old English and Norse meaning 'green swamp' or 'marshy grassland'; there are many earlier spellings; it is marked 'Myres Law Green' on Wood's 1824 map).

the Myreslawgreen Mairches (thu-mi-rsl-gn-mrz-lh-ckz) n. name formerly used for the boundaries ridden by the Common Riding cavalcade around the Myreslawgreen area, on their return from the Moor.

Myreslaw Hoose (mrz-ls-hs) n. name used for the residence of William Morrison in the latter part of the 19th century, later becoming part of Morrison Place.

died young. Francis (1758–1823) of Thirlestane, 7th Baron Napier, 8th Lord Merchiston, often referred to as ‘Lord Francis Napier’. He was only son of William and grandson of Francis Scott. His family were descendants of the Scotts of Thirlestane (in Ettrick), who were in turn cadets of the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was an army officer who surrendered to Gen. Gates at Saratoga in 1777. Returning to Britain he continued in the Army, laid the foundation stone for Edinburgh University’s ‘Old College’ in 1789, was confirmed to the House of Lords in 1790, became Lord-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and was also Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. In 1784 he married Maria Margaret, eldest daughter of Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Clavering. Thirlestane House (in the Ettrick valley) being too small, around 1790 he moved his home to Langlands, renaming the house Wilton Lodge. He paid tax on 5 female servants at Wilton Lodge in 1789 and 1790 and 3 in 1791, as well as 5 male servants in 1790, 3 in 1791–94 and 4 in 1797. He was taxed for owning a carriage at Wilton Lodge in the period 1789–95 and horses in the period 1789–94. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He had some local involvement in politics, being the head of the group promoting war against France in those years, and chairing an influential anti-reform meeting in Hawick in 1792. In 1793 he headed the pro-war side of a public meeting held in Hawick to discuss the possibility of war with France. In 1797 he was recorded as owner of 2 work horses and 3 carriage or saddle horses at Wilton Lodge on the Horse Tax Rolls; he also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs in the same year. About 1799 he was among the local men who contributed money to support the war against France. He was noted locally for his dress style. He still owned Thirlestane and other lands in Ettrick and Yarrow Parishes in 1802. He sold Wilton Lodge again in 1805; however, in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is still listed as owner of the ‘Half Barony of Wilton, called Langlands’, excluding most of Roughheugh, Silverbuthall, Howlands and Dovemount, but including Calaburn. About 6 of his 9 children were born at Wilton Lodge. His children included: Maria Margaret (b.1785), who married Rev. Orfeur William Kilvington of Hatfield; William John (b.1786), who succeeded; Anne (b.1789) who married Sir Thomas Gibson-Carmichael; Sophia (b.1791), who died unmarried; Francis (b.1793), who must have died young; Charles (b.1794), whose descendants took the surname Napier-Clavering; Rev. Henry Alfred (b.1796); and Caroline (b.1798), who married Nevile Reid – ‘There is Lord Napier o’ the Lodge, And Gawin in the Hall, And Mr. Charters o’ Wilton Manse, Preaches lectures to us all’ [DJG]. John (17th/18th C.) mason in Hawick. His name is written ‘Neper’ in 1705 when he witnessed a birth. He married Mary Graham in Hawick in 1705 and their children included Anna, Walter, Janet, Andrew, Isobell, Agnes, Margaret, Katherine, James and John.

Mark Francis (1852–1919) 3rd son of Sir Francis, 10th Lord Baron Napier of Merchiston and 1st Baron of Ettrick (and Viceroy of India), and great-grandson of the Lord Napier who stayed at Wilton Lodge. He stood unsuccessfully against Unionist Arthur Ralph Douglas Elliot in the 1886 Roxburghshire election, but defeated him to become Liberal M.P. in 1892. He was defeated in the 1895 election by the Conservative Earl of Dalkeith. In 1878 he married Emily Jones. Their children were: Basil, killed in action in South Africa; Claude Inverness; and Philip Henry. William (d.1775) 7th Baron Napier, eldest son of Francis. He was a Lieut.-Col. in the Army and Deputy-Adjutant General of the forces in Scotland. He married Mainie, daughter of Charles, 8th Lord Cathcart and was succeeded by his only son Francis (also formerly spelled ‘Naper’).

nerrest-hand (ne-rist-hawnd) adj., arch. nearest to, closest to – ‘Tam was nerrest hand ‘im’ [GW], ‘...till there was nochts left o’ the nerrest-hand loch bit paddils, fishes stankin for braith, an gleit’ [ECS], nerr nicker (ner-ni-kur) n., arch. a narrow escape, close shave (noted by E.C. Smith).

nervish (ner-vish, -vessh) adj., arch. nervous, excitable – ‘...I’ll hae anither drink, now did the red devil come sae close? Ugh, I’m gettin’ nervish. Maxwell, hae a drink’ [JEDM] (cf. nairvous).

Ness (nes) n. Rev. David (1863–1935) born in East Wennyss, he graduated M.A. from St. Andrews University in 1885 and was licensed to preach by Kirkcaldy Presbytery in 1889. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk 1889–92 and then assisted at Thornwood, Bothwell. He was ordained as assistant and successor at Whiteinch in 1894 and moved to Savoch in 1898.

Nessie (ne-see) n. aquatic monster supposed to live in Loch Ness, although there has never been convincing evidence. However, its cousin Wullie really does live in Wulliestruther.

the Nest (thu-nest) n. former name for Gledsue.

Nether Bonchester

Nether Bonchester, Netherhall, Nether Kirk and Nether Tofts).

Nether Ancrum (ne-thur-awng-krum) n. former name for what is now the village of Ancrum, with ‘Over Ancrum’ being across the river. The lands were held by ‘David Ancrum’ and a set of feuars in 1643 and valued at £944. It was later owned by Ogilvie of Chesters. In 1788 it was split between 8 separate owners, as well as ‘Feuars of Nether Ancrum’ (it is ‘Nether Anckrum’ in 1548/9).

Nether Belses (ne-thur-bel-seex) n. Nether Belses, former name for part of Belses.

Nether Bordon (ne-thur-bon-ches-tur) n. former farm, just below where the modern Bordon farm is located, over the bridge at the base of Bordon Hill. John Turnbull (called ‘Case’) was tenant there in 1494/5. In 1569 it was among the lands purchased from Jedburgh Abbey by Adam French, and is listed ‘with the wodds of the samin’. In 1587 it was again ‘with woods’, along with Over Bordon, among the lands of the Lordship of Jedburgh. In 1606 the tenant is recorded as Mark Turnbull. It was purchased by Walter Scott in 1632 from Alexander Kirkton (Provost of Jedburgh) and John Moscrop (Burgess of Jedburgh). It was then owned by a branch of the Scotts until sold by his great-grandson in the mid-1700s. It was valued at £180 Scots in 1643, 1663 and 1678 (although there seem to be errors in some records). Thomas Scott, brother of Walter, became the 2nd Scott Laird in 1653. Thomas was succeeded by his son Walter Scott in 1680, and he was recorded as Laird there on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. In 1707 it was owned by William Scott and valued at £180. In 1733 Walter Scott was succeeded by his son, also Walter. He was in turn succeeded by his son Thomas who sold the farm to William Oliver of Weens and Dinlay by in 1779. Wright John Rule was there in 1788. In 1788 it was still valued at £180. The farm was sold along with Weens to Robert Nutter Campbell in 1793, and in 1796 he sold them to Adm. Thomas Pringle. Francis Renwick was tenant there in 1797. By 1811 the farm (or part of it) was owned by Thomas Cleghorn and valued at £31 4s 8d. The farm had a nursery garden that once supplied trees to other properties in the area. The old house was in a hollow below the present farmhouse’s garden. It was a simple 2-storey building, taken down in the 1870s and part of it still standing around the 1830s. The doors and parts of the flooring were re-used on a cottage at Bridge-end (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Nethir Bonechest’ in 1494/5, ‘nethir Bunchester’ in 1511, 1594 and ‘Nethair Harwoid’ in 1615). Among the lands held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, along with ‘Over Harwood’ (it is ‘Nethir Harwood’ in 1572, ‘Nethair Harwood’ in 1594 and ‘Nathir Harwood’ in 1615).

Nether Croft (ne-thur-kroft) n. former name for lands in the upper Teviot valley somewhere near Dryden, Teinside, etc. The name is recorded as ‘Neather Croft’ in 1686 among the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch then occupied by Robert Grieve in Commonside.

Nether Dykeraw (ne-thur-dik-raw) n. former farmstead near Dykeraw in Southdean Parish. James, Michael, John, Adam and Robert Oliver were tenants there in 1541, paying 25s yearly. David Oliver was there in 1694. James Hargrave was shepherd there in 1797 (it is ‘Nethir Dykraw’ in 1541 and ‘nether dykra’ in 1694).

Nether Ewes (ne-thur-yooz) n. former name for the lower part of Ewesdale, served by the Nether Kirk.

Nether Foulwud (ne-thur-fowl-wud) n. Nether Foulwood, former name for lands in Liddesdale, situated near where Foulwood Sike meets the Liddel Water, between Mangerton and D’mainholm. Over Foulwood was further up the stream. It is recorded as ‘Foulwod inferior’ on the rental roll of c.1376 and valued at 10 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 ‘Nethir Foulwod’ was leased to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn) and still valued at 10 shillings. It became the modern farm of Gillside.

Nether Galalaw (ne-thur-ga-lu-law) n. former name for lands near Galalaw. It is unclear if this was part of the main farm, or a name for an adjacent farm. In 1534 Gavin Elliot sold the 40-shilling lands there to William Scott, the sealing of the letter of reversion being done at Hesendean Kirk (it is ‘Neder Gallelaw’ in 1534).

Netherhaa (ne-thur-haw, -hal) n. Netherhall, former farmstead at the western end of Wilton Park, below ‘Overhaa’ (or ‘Everhaa’), and on the eastern side of where the Wilton Burn meets the Teviot. This was once the back entrance to Langlands estate, and presumably owned by the Laird of Langlands. However, there is now no sign of a house there and it seems likely it was demolished when the Town took over Wilton Park. It is possible this is the ‘Nethercroft, acquired from Langlands’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, with Mrs. Shortreed as owner. A small mill lade is shown off the Wilton Burn, running past the farm, on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. William Henderson was ‘Overseer of Parks’ there in 1851 (it is unclear whether the name is as old as ‘Overhaa’ or whether it was named later; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and still on the Ordnance Survey map of 1904).

Netherhaa Burn (ne-thur-haw-burn) n. another name for the Wilton Burn at the south end of the Park.

Nether Harden (ne-thur-hawr-din) n. former name for lands near Harden, and once part of the barony of Chamberlain Newton, which were resigned by Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden in 1540. The land seems to have been finally conveyed in 1556.

Nether Harden (ne-thur-haw-din) n. former farm in Liddesdale, part of Harden. It is shown on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties, covering 420 acres, bounded by Potterlamport, lands owned by the Laird of Whithaugh and the farms of Cocklaik and Dykeraw. The farmhouse was shown on the south side of the Harden Burn, where there is nothing on modern maps.

Nether Harwud (ne-thur-har-wud) n. former name for lands at Harwood on Teviot. It is listed among the lands held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, along with ‘Over Harwood’ (it is ‘Nether Harewod’ in 1511, ‘Nethir Harwod’ in 1572, ‘Nethair Harwoid’ in 1594 and ‘Nathir Harwold’ in 1615).

Nether Hawthornside (ne-thur-haw-thörnsid) n. former farm near Hawthornside, called ‘Denesyde’ in earlier times. It is described as being on the left-hand side going up Hawthornside Brae (which would confusingly place it on the other side of Hawthornside than the Dean Burn). It once contained some of the best land now incorporated into Hawthornside, and the Lairds were Turnbulls for several generations.

Nether Kirk (ne-thur-kirk) n. former common name for the church in the Ewes valley next to the A7 between Arkleton and Sorbie, in an area once called ‘Kirkton’. It is distinguished from the ‘Ower Kirk o Ewes’, which is a few miles further up the valley near Unthank, and served the lower part of the valley, referred to as ‘Nether Ewes’. The original church was dedicated to St. Cuthbert and attached to Melrose Abbey. There are many records relating to incumbents of the church from the end of the 13th century. ‘Robert z Rauf personne del Eglise de Seint Cuthbert de Ewytesdale’ signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. Roger Kirkpatrick was Rector there in 1556. The patronage of the Kirk was long held by the Maxwells. The position of the church, as well as the minister’s house and glebe, were shown on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was a relatively rudimentary structure, with a thatched roof; an entry in the session records describes how a young couple had to pay penance in the Kirk and also had to gather heather for the roof. A new church was built on the site of the old in 1866/7. The graveyard contains many old tombstones of the local families of Aitchison, Armstrong, Beattie, Borthwick, Jackson, Little, Rutherford and Scott. The family gravestone of the Malcolm of Burnfoot records the names of 3 of the 4 Knights of Eskdale, and the western side contains the burial place of the Scott-Elliots.

Nether Larriston (ne-thur-law-ree-stin) n. former tower-house at Larriston, situated near the modern farmhouse. It is unclear exactly where it was located. It is marked as ‘Nether Laristone’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (it is ‘Nather Lareistou’ in 1624).

Nether Mains of Hassendean see Hassendean Mains

Nether Newhalls (ne-thur-new-haw) n. Nether Newhall, an older name for Burnfoot, once part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. The name was used in the late 15th century for the Lairship held by a branch of the Scotts, later called Scott of Burnfoot. In 1484 the lands were granted to James Scott of Kirkurd by David Lindsay of the Byres, Baron of Chamberlain Newton and Newhall; it was held of the superior for the token fee of a silver penny at the Feast of Pentecost. In 1494 James Scott granted ‘le Nethir Manes de Newhall’ to his son David, along with Galalaw; this was explicitly the west part, above the common road, valued at 3 merks. ‘Over et Nether Newhalls’ are still referred to when the lands were inherited in 1585 and similarly in 1667. The lands were sold by Adam of Burnfoot and Gavin Plummer to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712, when they are described as ‘Nether Newhall, otherwise called Burnfoot, with the milne, milne lands, multures, sucken, knaveship and sequels thereof within the paroch of Hassandean, Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Sherifdom of Roxburgh’. Over Newhall was probably the same as Burnhead (it is ‘Nethir Newhall’ in 1494, ‘Nethir Newhall’ in 1532, ‘Nether Newhallis’ in 1609 and ‘Nether Newhales’ in 1667).

Netherraw (ne-thur-rav) n. farm and hamlet between Minto and Lilliesleaf. William Thomson was farmer there in 1797 when it is ‘Netherrow’. James Henderson was there in the 1860s. William Cranston was farmer there in the early 20th century.

Netherraw (ne-thur-rav) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, by the B6399, near the junction with the road from Steele Road. The house must have been there from at least the 16th century, and was distinguished from ‘Over’ or ‘Upper Raw’. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Neirland’ in 1632, when possessed by Francis Beattie. William Scott was tenant in 1694 and Adam Armstrong was also recorded there. George ‘Hotson’ was tenant in the early 1700s. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 141 acres, bounded by Toftholm, the Hermitage Water, lands of the Laird of Hoscoe and Over Raw. The farmhouse at that time was roughly in the same location as the modern building and the farm is described as ‘indifferent good land much damnified with the water’. David Jackson was farmer there in 1797, Walter Scott in 1835, Matthew Elliot in 1851 and Walter Scott in 1861. It was a home of the Elliots until the last farmer, Matthew Elliot died in 1877, when the old buildings were demolished. Some of the land was planted, becoming the Nether Raw Plantation, and the rest was attached to Hartsgarth farm. The current house is modern (‘Rha’ is marked near there on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Raa’ on Visscher’s 1689 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows both ‘N, Ra’ and ‘O, raa’ and Stobie’s 1770 map has ‘Upperra’ and ‘Netherraw’; it is Netherrow in 1797).
Netherraw Cottages

Netherraw Cottages (ne-thu-raw-ko’-ee-jeez) n. houses by the side of the road between Netherraw and Longhaugh. There was a blacksmith’s marked here on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map.

Nether Riccarton see Riccarton

Nether Soothfield (ne-thur-sooth-feeld) n. previously the lower farm at Southfield, now the site of the main farm. It lay just outside the old boundaries of the Common. The land was long owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and was contained within the Lordship of Whitchesters. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, consisting of 145 acres, bounded by Hawick Common, Hawickshiel, Stobicote and Over Southfield. It was mentioned in a Hawick Parish evaluation in 1627, and then said to be ‘of that same nature’ as ‘Upper Southfield’. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1628 and John Elliot was recorded as tenant in at least the period 1690–1704. In 1704 John and Gilbert Elliot were tenants there. James and Walter Scott were tenants in about 1710 (it was ‘Neathersouthfield’ in 1628, ‘Nether Southfield’ in 1690 and ‘nether southfield’ in 1694).

Nether Steele (ne-thur-steel) n. former name for part of the farm of the Steele.

Nether Tofts (ne-thur-tofts) n. farm near Kirkton, north-east of Upper Tofts. It was once part of the Cavers estate. Its lands are on the lower slopes of Ruberslaw. Adam Turnbull was there in 1682 and John Douglas in 1694, along with Andrew Blyth. The lands were inherited by William, son of Thomas Turnbull of Tofts in 1695. James Turnbull, Robert Scott and John Douglas were there in the early 1700s. Francis Scott of Gorrenberry was also there in the early 1700s. John Leyden (father of the poet and linguist) was there in the late 1770s and 80s. William Scott was there in 1787. Walter Blyth was farmer there in at least 1794–97 and Robert Bulman in the 1860s. It was referred to as ‘Low Tofts’ in 1868 when G. Bulman was farmer there. Robert Glendinning collected several artefacts that were ploughed up there, including flake scrapers and flakes, 3 spincles whorls, 4 stone axe-heads and a bronze axehead, some of which are in the Royal Museum of Scotland (it is ‘Netherfafts’ in 1694).

Nether Wheel (ne-thur-wheel) n. former lands near the Wheel Kirk in upper Liddesdale. It is listed as ‘Nether Wheill’, along with ‘Kirk Wheilland’ and other lands in Liddesdale owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663 (see the Wheel Kirk).

Nether Whisgills (ne-thur-whis-gilz) n. former name for part of the lands of Whisgills. William Oliver was there in 1694. The farm was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 528 acres. It was bounded by the Muir Burn, Upper Millstead, Reidmoss, Over Whisgills, Tinnis, Bankhead, Shipshields and Gilfoot.

Nether Whitlaw (ne-thur-whi’law) n. farm to the south of Lindean village, a couple of miles north-west of Selkirk, adjacent to Over Whitlaw. It should not be confused with the farm of Whitlaw just south of Hawick. It was owned by the Kers of Faldonside in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. There were Porteous there in the 19th century.

Nether Woollee (ne-thur-woo-lee) n. former name for part of the lands of ‘Woollee’ (or Wolfelee) in use from the 15th to 18th centuries (it is ‘Nether Wolee’ in 1479 and 1515, ‘Nether Woulee’ in 1522, ‘Nether Woulie’ in 1525 and ‘Natherwolley’ in 1627).

Netherwud (ne-thur-wul) n. Netherwood, large house on Sunnyhill, on the private drive that is a continuation of Roadhead. It was built in the 19th century for the Laings, being home to Thomas and his family. J.P. Alison was responsible for alterations in the early years of the 20th century. It may have been used as a boys’ home at the end of WWII and is now split into flats.

nettles-yirnest (ne’-ul-yir-nist) adj., arch. dead earnest – ‘. . . thae thochtis . . . gar iz bang up bliethe again an buckle tui in nettle-yirniste!’[ECS] (from ‘in ettle earnest’; cf. ettle-earnest).

Neville (ne-vul) n. Sir John (c.1341–88) 3rd Lord of Raby, son of Ralph. He was probably joint Warden of the English West and East Marches 1380–88, along with the Percys. He married Maud Percy and was succeeded by Henry, who became the 1st Earl of Westmorland. He Neville’s Cross

Died before his father, although his son Ralph became 2nd Earl of Westmorland. Sir John (1387-1420) son of Ralph, 1st Earl of Westmorland, and half-brother of Richard, 1st Earl of Salisbury. He was Warden of the English West Marches for a few years until his death. Ralph (c.1291-1367) 2nd Baron Neville de Raby, son of Ralph. He was Joint Warden General of the English Marches (along with Henry, 2nd Baron Percy) from 1334. He was probably the ‘Sir Randolph’ who was in possession of the Castle and manor of Hermitage shortly after the Battle of Durham in 1346, resigning them to Edward III about 1352. In 1354 he, along with Henry Percy, was appointed as a commissioner to deal with Elizabeth, widow of Sir William Douglas, former Keeper of Hermitage. He married Alice, daughter of Sir Hugh de Audley and was succeeded by his son Sir John. He also had a son who was Archbishop of York and daughters who married into the Clifford, Dacre, Percy and Scrope families. His youngest daughter Margaret married Henry Percy and was mother of ‘Hotspur’.

Ralph (c.1364-1425) 1st Earl of Westmorland, son of John and Maud Percy. He was probably Warden of the English West Marches along with Thomas de Clifford from about 1388. He married his cousin Margaret, daughter of Sir Hugh Stafford (with whom he had 9 children) and then Joan Beaufort, daughter of the 1st Duke of Lancaster (with whom he had another 14 children). He is the inspiration for the character ‘Westmorland’ in Shakespeare’s ‘Henry V’, and it has even been claimed that his great-great-grandson wrote Shakespeare’s plays. Richard (1400-60) 5th Earl of Salisbury, eldest son of Ralph, Earl of Westmorland. About 1420 he became Warden of the English West March (succeeding his eldest half-brother John). He remained Warden until 1424, when he was involved in negotiations for the release of James I. About 1433 he was again Warden of the West Marches, also took over the East Marches and Captains of Berwick in 1434, but resigned in the next year. His family had regular conflicts with the Percy’s and supported Richard, Duke of York (his brother-in-law). He married Alice Montacute, heiress of the Earl of Salisbury. He was succeeded by his son Richard, ‘the Kingmaker’. He was captured after the Battle of Wakefield and beheaded. Richard ‘the Kingmaker’ (1428-71) Earl of Warwick and Salisbury, eldest son of Richard, the 5th Earl. He was a great Yorkist supporter in the Wars of the Roses. He was Warden of the English East Marches from about 1453, perhaps along with his father initially (since he must only have been 15!). In 1464 his forces burned Jedburgh. He helped Edward IV to gain the English Crown, but later switched his allegiance to put Henry VI back on the throne. He was killed by Edward IV’s forces at the Battle of Barnet.

Neville’s Cross (ne-vulz-kros) n. battle of 1346, in which the Scottish army under King David were routed at Durham by a smaller English army under York, Percy and Neville. On their way south the Scottish army recaptured Liddel Castle. Durham was attacked as a diversionary tactic to help the French. A relic of St. Cuthbert’s is supposed to have helped the English victory and King David II was captured while fleeing. The Scots division under Sir William Douglas suffered particularly disasterously. Sir Michael Scott of Rankiburn and Maurice Murray (then Baron of Hawick) were killed there, while Robert Chisholme of Chisholme and Sir William Douglas (Knight of Liddesdale), as well as the King and about 50 other Barons, were taken prisoner. Afterwards the English army took possession of the Border territory and Hermitage and Roxburgh Castles surrendered, with several locals swearing (temporary) fealty to the English King. The name of the battle derives from the stone cross erected by Lord Neville in commemoration (destroyed in 1589). It is also known as the Battle of Durham.

nevvy (ne-vecy) n., arch. a nephew – ‘The uncle turned red, and the nevy turned blue, Then they looked at each other, these good men and true’ [JCG].

Nevysintonsteed (ne-vee-sin’in-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Nevtsintounsteid’. It is unclear where these lands were or what the name meant (although the ‘nevvy’ part may refer to a nephew).

new (new) adv. newly, recently, just – ‘The bairns new oot o the skuil for leave . . . [ECS] (more common than in standard English; see also i the new).

Newall (new-al) n. Broughton (b.1818/9) born in Hawick, he was a frame-worker. In 1851 he lived around the Crown Close and in 1861 on Factory Close. He married Mary Whillans (sister of ‘Kinly Stick’) and their children included Mary, Agnes, Margaret, Robert, Richard, Jane and James. He is probably the ‘Auld Broughton’ mentioned in the poem ‘Hawick Immortals’. Richard (1850-1918) son of Broughton and Mary Whillans. The family lived at Orrock
New Appletreehall

Place when he was young. He was ‘boatswain Newall, who was up aloft’ in William Easton’s song ‘The Anvil Crew’. Ironically he drowned in the Teviot, where he must have cavorted as a youth. Robert (b.1788/9) from St. Michael’s in Dumfriesshire, he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was at about 12 Howegate in 1841. His public house is mentioned as existing during the cholera outbreak of 1832. By 1851 he was a frame-worker living at the Village. His wife was Agnes and their children included: Robert; Thomas, who married Margaret Kersall; and Margaret, who married William Gemmell. Thomas (b.1813/4) from Dumfries, son of Robert. He was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 23 Loan. In 1852 he married Margaret Kersall (also written ‘Newell’).

New Appletreehall (new-aw-, -ä-pul-tree-haw, -hawl) n. New Appletreehall, name used for an area near to Appletreehall in the late 18th century. It is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when the residents there who owned work horses were John Reid, James Scott and James Crawford.

Newark Castle (new-urk-kaw-sul) n. ruin west of Selkirk, on a mound above the Yarrow, now within the estate of Bowhill. It was formerly called ‘Cathmurlie’ and had adjacent lands called ‘Old Wark’. The existing tower was built in 1423 by Archibald, Earl of Douglas and was used as a residence of the Earls until about 1446. It passed to the crown as the royal hunting seat of Ettrick Forest in 1455. John Murray was custodian in the late 15th century and Scott of Buccleuch was appointed Captain and Keeper in 1542. Several nearby farms were given by the Crown to the keeper of the castle. It was taken in a siege by Lord Grey (with the support of the Kers) in 1547, with 4 of Sir Walter Scotts servants and a woman being slain. Sir Walter Scott was appointed Captain and Keeper of the Castle in 1565/6. Over 100 of the Philiphaugh prisoners were slaughtered in its courtyard in 1645, and Cromwell’s troops occupied it in 1650 after the Battle of Dunbar. It was one of the places where dragoons were posted in about 1676, so that they could scour the local countryside for people attending illegal field conventicles. For a while it was the home of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch, and is in Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’. But it was unroofed during the minority of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, and preserved from decay during the time of Walter, the 5th Duke – ‘He pass’d where Newark’s stately tower Looks out from Yarrow’s birchen bower’ [SWS], ‘… And sudden he saw at his shoulder stand The walls of Newark, grey towered and grand’ [WHO] (it is ‘Newwerk’ in 1446/7 and ‘the Castell of Newwerk’ in 1547/8; it is marked ‘Cast. of Newwoork’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Newbattle Viaduct (new-baw’-ul-vl-a-dukt) n. longest viaduct on the Waverley Line, over the River South Esk, near the town of Newbattle, having 22 arches and being almost one third of a mile long (also known as ‘Lothianbridge’).

Newbie (new-bee) n. James (15th/16th C.) local clerk and priest. He held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1500. He was vicar there in 1501/2 when he was notary for a document relating to the lands of Feu-Rule. He is probably the same priest of Glasgow Diocese who was notary for the 1512 sasine transferring Harden from Walter Scott to his brother William. He also notarised the 1514 sasine of the Barony of Hawick, where he is recorded as ‘Jacobus Newbe, presbiter Glasguensis diocesis’. In 1523 he was notary for a document relating to the lands of the Trows. Either the same or a different ‘Jacob Newby’ was witness to a sasine for Douglas of Cavers in 1550. He may also be the ‘James Newby, messinger’, who was implicated in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1552 along with James Douglas of Cavers and several Kers; according to the indictment when the group were crossing the Rule he said to the people there ‘Hard ye ony tythenis of the Lard of Bukclucht; he is put in vard, and will never cumme furth’. James (17th/18th C.) Sheriff-Officer in a record of 1684, when he gave evidence at the trial of Alexander Home, portioner of Home, one of the Covenanters leaders who besieged Druimanrig’s Tower. He was also listed as ‘officer to the sheriff’ among contributers to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the James recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’; he was probably from the west side. Presumably the same James was described as ‘portioner of Hawick’ in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1719, when his daughter Helen married Alexander Thomson. He may be the James who was born in Hawick in 1655, with parents James and Agnes Turnbull. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Lunn.

in Hawick Parish in 1675. Samuel (17th C.) ordered by the Council in 1658 to pay 4 merks for ‘both-meall’ (i.e. booth rent) until Whitsunday. He was on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Probably the same Samuel was fined in 1676 for assaulting masons Andrew Turnbull and Andrew Wilson and ‘for casting downe the mason work at his own hand without any complaint first made to the bailies thereof’; presumably he did not approve of the building work they were doing for him! He could be the Samuel born in 1635 to James and Isobell Scott. He could also be the Samuel who married Bessie Wilson and had a son Samuel in 1676. Thomas (d.1602) Reader at Hassendean Kirk 1576–80. He was presented to the vicarage of the Parish on the demitting of Thomas Weston in October 1576 and is recorded demitting this in 1595. Hence it appears he held part of the benefice of the Parish for at least 15 years after he was Reader there. Another record states that John Madder (or Mather) was presented to Hassendean on his death in 1602, so he may have held some of the benefice even longer. In 1582, along with Sir Thomas Ker (of Roxburgh Parish), Archibald Simson (of Lilliesleaf), John Scott (of Southdean), James Scott (of Ashkirk) and John McClellan (of Kirkandrews) were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’. Then they were excommunicated in 1588 for continuing with the offence (which is unspecified, but may suggest that the men had been Catholic priests before the Reformation) and in 1590 ordered never to abuse the sacraments under pain of death. They were made to stand for 2 hours at the Market Cross of Edinburgh with a paper on their foreheads proclaiming their crime. Samuel (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1669 he was found guilty of assaulting merchant William Elliot, cutting him ‘with ane sword in ye head’ and for ‘strycking and wounding of him in his face with ane brydle’. He may be the Samuel who was born in Hawick in 1635, son of James and Isobell Scott. He is probably the Samuel who was married to Bessie Wilson, with son Samuel born in 1676. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1684 when he witnessed the financial document relating to the building of the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s. He is described there as ‘servant’, although it is unclear what this means (also formerly written ‘Neubie’, ‘Newby’ and ‘Newbe’).

Newbiggin (new-bi-gin) n. Newbigging, a farm that lay between Horsleyhill and Knowtownhead, once part of the Middle Mains of Hassendean. In the 1550s there was a dispute over these lands between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill by his first wife and those by his second wife. It was listed in 1582 among lands for which Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill demanded the charters of his father from the widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. It may be the Newbigging listed as part of the Stobs estate purchased by Gilbert Elliot from his half sisters in about 1608. Like much of the area, it became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. The disused quarry of that name is still marked on Ordnance Survey maps (the farm is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and may have been incorrectly transcribed ‘Howbigging’ in 1690).

Newbiggin (new-bi-gin) n. house at No. 9 Lockhart Place, which is a grade C listed building.

Newbiggin (new-bi-gin) n. Sir William (1782–1852) surgeon in Edinburgh, based at 18 St. Andrew’s Square. He gave evidence at the trial of Burke and Hare and became President of the Royal College of Surgeons. In 1825 he subscribed to 2 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, and so it is possible he had some connection with the town. William ‘Willie’, took over as landlord of the Mosspaul Inn in 1962.

Newbiggin Burn (new-bi-gin-burn) n. stream rising near the old Newbiggin farm and flowing roughly south-west to join the Allan Water (marked ‘Newbigging Hope’ and ‘North Burn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the New Brig (thu-new-brig) n. original name for the North Bridge, built in 1832. It was usually referred to as the ‘Station Brig’ after the railway was completed in 1849.

Newburgh (new-bu-ru) n. farm in the upper Ettrick valley, once home of the Scotts of Newburgh – ‘Gae warn the lads of Thirlstone, Gemscleugh, and Newburgh fair, With Tushielaw, and Midgehope, in armour to appear’ [WSB].

c new-calfit (new-kaw-fee’) adj., arch. having just calved – ‘…nyne new calfit ky, with thair followaris, price of the pece ourheid, five pundis’ [SB1574].

Newcastle (new-kaw-sul) n. city in the north-east of England, approximately 62 miles south-east of Hawick, reached via the Carter Bar and A68. The city was the site of the interchange between Douglas and Percy that led to the Battle of Otterburn in 1388. It was also captured in 1640 by Montrose’s Covenanter army, which included the Teviotdale Regiment under the Earl of Lothian. It was occupied for about a year, during which time there is a record in the Hawick Town Book of James Scott, former Bailie gathering contributions for the soldiers there. It was occupied again 1644–47, when Buccleuch was involved in the siege. Several Newcastle merchants (probably coal merchants) were made Honorary Burgessess of Hawick in the 18th century. The city was once connected to Hawick by rail via the Riccarton-Hexham line. The old road towards Newcastle was, until the 1830s, up the Cross Wynd and over the hills, part of which can still be traced through the open country. Until the early 1800s the road through Rulewater went from Hawthornside to Forkins, via Highend, and then up Blacklee Brae to join the modern road towards Chesters – ‘To Newcastell when that they came. The Douglas cry’d on hyght: ‘Harry Percy, an thou bidest within, Come to the field, and fight”’ [T] (note the accent on the first syllable).

Newcastleton (new-kaw-sul’-in) n. village 20 miles south-west of Hawick in the southern corner of Roxburghshire. It was effectively a replacement for the older settlement of Castleton, which lies further up the Liddel. The site was formerly the farms of Copshaw and the flat land was said to have been used for ‘Horse coursing’, with crowds from both sides of the Border coming to watch the races. This planned village was founded in 1793 by the 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, and laid out according to the design of Mr. Keir of Whitehaugh. The lay-out is a series of criss-crossed streets around 3 main squares. Its main purpose was as a handloom weaving centre, close to the Border and on the Liddel Water. The first settler was said to be from the Hermitage area and lived in a turf hut while the village was being built. Many early residents were weavers, other tradesmen and retired shepherds. Clog making was also prominent, and the wearing of clogs in the village was common for much longer than elsewhere. Leases of holdings were originally for 99 years, with each household responsible for erecting their own house. Each feuar also had 2 acres of land attached (later extended to 4 acres per 2 storey house and 2 acres for cottages), as well as a garden of 1/8 acre, and the right to graze a cow on the hill. The management was by 3 elected bailies, one retiring each year. The 99 year leases led to much dispute in 1892 and subsequent improvements to the village. Most householders chose to convert their holdings into feus for purchase and feu-duty. The church (later St. John’s) was built in 1782 (before the new village), with additions in 1891, but only became the parish church in the 1950s. There was a separate Free Kirk, built in 1853 on Langholm Street, a Secession (later United Presbyterian) Kirk built 1801–04 at the Townfoot (now the Heritage Centre) and an Evangelical Union Kirk built in 1850 on South Hermitage Street (and now a private dwelling). There was a subscription library already by 1839. There has always been a school here, but secondary school pupils have been bussed to Hawick since 1962 (and before that some of them took the train). A memorial statue of a K.O.S.B. soldier was erected after WWI. The Newcastleton Burgher Kirk

Newcastleton village has the Liddesdale Heritage Centre, a local history museum. There was a weekly market starting in about 1837 and 2 annual fairs for the selling of sheep. The village formerly hosted 3 hiring days, when servants were hired in the area, and much activity took place, these being in April, May, and November. The Holm Show is the annual fair in August, popularised in the song ‘Copshawholm Fair’, and has been running since 1893, while the Newcastleton Traditional Music Festival in July has been running since 1970. The Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 list the owners of horses in the village as James Oliver, James Aitchison, John Beattie, Robert Thomson, James Elliot, Thomas Mathieson, Thomas Dodgson, William Kyle, William Little, John Smith, Andrew Rutherford, Mary Murray, George Dalgleish, Robert Murray, William Beattie, George Scott, John Leyden, Charles Grieve, William Winlaw, James Fell and Thomas Hall. The official name of the village was originally just ‘Castleton’, but the modern name appeared by the early 1800s. The village is also known as ‘Copshaw’, ‘Copshawholm’ or ‘the Holm’. William Hall wrote ‘Newcastleton: A Border Village’ (1905). Population (1991) 813 – ‘Newcastleton was the last of the battles And the curtain began tae descend . . . ’[AY] (it is ‘New Castleton’ in 1797, with the first recorded appearance as one word being in the Kelso Mail of 1808).

Newcastleton Burgher Kirk (new-kaw-sul’-in-bur-gur-kirk) n. church established in Castleton Parish in the 1750s, originally called the Liddesdale Burgher Kirk or Copshawholm Kirk. Its origin lay in the secession movement of the time, which locally came to a head with the unpopular appointment of Simon Haliburton as Castleton Parish Minister. Their first meeting was under the ‘venerable oak’ near Snaberclee. The Edinburgh Anti-Burgher Presbytery was petitioned in 1751 and provided an occasional preacher, then the Edinburgh Burgher Presbytery was approached in 1753. Early preachers included John Brown (later at Haddington) and Archibald Hall (later Torphichen). A building was constructed on the banks of the Liddel at Geilbraehead about then. It was made of rubble with a thatched roof and earth floor. James Wylie was called, but declined. William Ronaldson also ended up elsewhere, and the apparently rebellious James Mitchell was also found wanting. So the first minister was James Fletcher, and not until 1762. Although a remarkable man, he was not a successful minister and the congregation was in decline by the 1790s. However, the name was changed to the Associate Kirk of Newcastleton in 1804, with a new building erected in the village there 1801–4. This was the first church built in the new village and usually referred to as the ‘Toonfit Kirk’, since the site was a former garden at the foot of the village. A Manse was also built at this time. A harmonium was donated to the church in the mid-1800s by Mrs. Tod, daughter of Rev. John Law. After the Secession churches merged it became known as Newcastleton United Presbyterian Kirk. However, further dissent led to the formation of the Free Church in Newcastleton, as well as the Congregational Church. It was renovated along with the Manse in 1875. With the merger of the secession churches with the Church of Scotland in 1929 the church became locally known as ‘the South Church’ (to distinguish it from ‘the Park Church’ and ‘Castle Church’). From 1930 the charge was combined with that of the Park Church. A roll of the ministry is: James Fletcher 1762–1801; William Smart, ‘probationer’ 1802; Walter Dunlop 1804–10; John Law 1812–28; John Black 1829–79; James Snadden 1880–c.1929; George Lithgow Wilson 1930–40.

Newcastleton Congregational Kirk (new-kaw-sul’-in-kong-ga-shu-naul-kirk) n. church established in Castleton Parish in 1849 by people seceding from the United Presbyterian congregation. In 1850 they erected a building on South Hermitage Street in Newcastleton. By 1870 they had joined the Evangelical Union and in 1929 merged with with the South Church (formerly the U.P. congregation), thereafter using the South Church building and manse. A partial roll of the ministry is: William Davidson Black 1850–51; Supply ministers 1851–66; Robert Steel 1866–75; A. Turnbull 1876–77; Supplies again 1877–82; Peter Andrew 1882–83; George Davies 1883–86; William Paterson 1888–90; John Whitson 1890–91; R. Hunter Craig 1891–95; Supplies 1895–99; James W. Gillies 1899–1905; George A.E. Walker 1908–12; Charles Derry 1916–23; James Anderson 1923–26; Alexander R. Sparke 1939–42; John H. Carlin from 1942; William Kitching 1953–58; Idris J. Vaughan 1965–71; . . .

Newcastleton Free Kirk (new-kaw-sul’-in-free-kirk) n. Free Church in Newcastleton, founded in 1850. Unlike other Free Churches, this was started following a dispute in the United Presbyterian Church, not the Church of Scotland. It started to meet in the ballroom of the Crown Inn. The first building was constructed in 1853 on Langholm Street. It burned down in 1891, but was rebuilt 2 years later. It was also sometimes called Newcastle North United Free Church. The Free Church Manse was at 13 Douglas Square. It was taken over by the Church of Scotland in 1909. After the merge of the United Presbyterian Church in 1929 it became locally known as ‘the Park Church’, to distinguish it from ‘the South Church’ and ‘Castleton Church’. Neil S. Ure was minister there 1861–75. Alexander Lowe retired as minister in 1934. After that the charge was merged with that of the South Church. In 1949 the building was turned into a village hall, with an extension built in 1956. It was named after Rev. Alexander Lowe, the last full-time minister of the church.

Newcastleon Golf Course (new-kaw-sul’in-gól-f-kör) n. golf course outside Newcastleon, on Holm Hill. It is known for its views over the Liddesdale valley, as well as for its small greens. The club was founded in 1894. There are the remains of a settlement on a terrace south of Charles Sike, in an area of rough ground.

Newcastleon Kirk (new-kaw-sul’in-kirk) n. parish church of Castleton on Montagu Street (see Castleton Kirk).

Newcastleon Schuil (new-kaw-sul’in-skil) n. school in the village of Newcastleon, on Montagu Street. Since 1962 senior pupils have been bussed to Hawick High School. The old schoolhouse adjoins the Parish Church, and has had a lintel inserted into the north gable, which bears the date 1621. Ebenezer Wells was schoolmaster there in the early 1800s, Alexander Fisher in at least the period 1825–52, John Brown in the 1860s and Andrew Hobkirk in the 1940s. School log books for 1875–1921 are in the Borders Archive.

Newcastleon Station (new-kaw-sul’in-stä-shin) n. former station on the Waverley Line in Newcastleon. It was situated on Langholm Street and included a signal box, footbridge, level-crossing and station-master’s house. All that survives is this last building, which has been converted into a private house.

the New Cut (thu-new-ku’) n. popular local name for the cutting made to improve the main road (which became the A7) at Newmill in the early 19th century.

New ‘Eer (new-er) n., arch. New Year – ‘...Weel – at least till the New ‘Eer!' [RM], ‘Dauvit’s been oot o’ woark thre new ‘Eer; lei was putten away thre the mill’ [ECS], adj. relating to the New Year – ‘Whiles risin’ in a freshet o’

New ‘Eer snaw...’ [DH] (often with the definite article; see also Hogmanany).

Newell see Newall

Newell Chemicals (new-ul-ke-neo-kulz) n. chemical factory supplying dyes and other products to the textile industry. It was based in a former hosiery factory at 7 Allars Bank, and also referred to as Newtrel Works.

new-fangelt (new-fawng-ul’) adj. new-fangled, novel – ‘is that yin o they new-fangelt hurdie-gurdies?’, ‘Whan bagpipes new-fangl’d lugs had tir’d. They’d sneer, then he, like ane inspr’...’ [CPM], ‘New fangled deevils never heed them. Folk never prize things till they need them’ [WNK], ‘He couldna fash new-fangled things Wi’ all their fall-di-doo’ [WFC] (note the lack of a hard g; also spelled ‘new-fangled’ as in English).

Newfield (new-feeld) n. name for an area to the south-east of Hummelknowes, containing Newfield Hill (which reaches a height of 237 m) and Newfield Plantation. There was formerly a farmstead there, which is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. Samuel Irvine was there in 1763 and is recorded as farmer there in 1797. Walter Irvine is recorded there in 1815.

Newhaa (new-haw) n. Newhall, farm on the north bank of the Ale Water, just east of Cavers Carre. John Scott was farmer there in the 1860s (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Newhaa (new-haw) n. Newhall, former farmstead in Hobkirck Parish, between Harwood and Lurgiescleugh. This could be the Newhall in the parish of ‘Boldoun’ (perhaps Soudon) that in 1609 was inherited by William, son of Rev. James Douglas, minister of Hobkirck (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Newhaa (new-haw) n. former name for an area in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, split into ‘Ower’ and ‘Nether’ lands, corresponding to the later Burnhead and Burnfoot (‘le newhalburnhed’ is recorded in 1502).

New Harwood (new-haw-ri’,-har-wud) n. former farm near Harwood in Hobkirck Parish. It is recorded as ‘New Harrot’ in 1788 when Thomas Hope was there and ‘Newharrot’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with John Ferguson as tenant and owner of 4 horses. It was also ‘Newharrot’ in 1821 when William Crozier was there.

New Heidshaw (new-heed-shaw) n. farm just outside Ashkirk village, on the Woll Rig road, and on the opposite side of the Headshaw Burn from Headshaw itself. George Kyle was farmer there in 1797 (it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

_the new hew_ (thr-new-hew) n., arch. the appearance of newness, fresh look – ‘...composed of ee plus oo – a combination twice noted in our expression ‘the new hew’ (= the appearance of newness)’ [ECS], ‘The new hew’s off that wax-claith aareddies; it’s aa raateet wui thae taackets on eer shuin’ [ECS] (note the pronunciation with the diphthongal ee-o).

Newhoose (new-hoose) n. Newhouse, former lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, once home of a branch of the Riddell family. Thomas Knox, George Knox and James Hill were there in 1694. Walter Riddell ‘of Neuhous’ is also recorded separately, paying tax on 4 hearths, as well as having a gardener there. Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse paid the land tax there in 1811, when it was valued at £486. It was sold by Chatto and his son John to Mark Sprot of Riddell. There is still a farm there (it is ‘Neuhous’ in 1694).

Newhoose (new-hoose) n. Newhouse, former farm on the north side of the Ettrick valley, just to the west of Ettrickbridge. The hill ‘Newhouse Kip’ is marked on the modern Ordnance Survey map (labelled as ‘Newhous’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Newhooses (new-hoo-seez, -how-seez) n. Newhouses, farm just east of Newton (‘the Nitten’). The modern farmhouse probably occupies the site of new houses built there in the 17th century, probably to replace Alton. The Taylor family were long farmers there. William Potts and his family lived there in 1841 and George Thomson farmed 156 acres there in 1851. There is an ancient earthwork about 200 m to the north-west of the farm. It lies on a ridge and consists of a bank and ditch enclosing an area about 30 m by 40 m, best preserved on the south-west and with a road through the middle (the name first appears in the 1690s).

Newland (new-lind) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll, with a value of 18 pence, and vacant at that time. The precise location if unknown, but judging by where it appears in the list, it must have been close to Copshaw (confusingly it is also listed near the end of the document, with no value). It is possible it is the same as Newlands on the Hermitage Water.

Newlands (new-lindz) n. farm and surrounding area on the road between Hassendean and Lilliesleaf, adjacent to Huntlaw. It was inherited by Ralph ‘de Neulandis’ from his deceased father William in 1440. It was formerly in Hassendean parish, but moved to Minto in 1690. Walter Davidson was tenant there in 1632 when he had a feu-contract with Thomas, Lord Binning. David Scott in Newlands is recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Belses. It was farmed by Davidsens in most of the 17th century. David Davidson of Newlands paid tax on £20 of land in 1663. The Marquess of Douglas paid the land tax on £80 there in 1678. Andrew Lamb was a tenant there in 1684 when he was listed among local men declared as fugitives for attending conventicles. William Halliwell was there in 1694. By 1788 it was owned by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. Thomas Laidlaw was farmer there in 1797 and William Nichol in the mid-19th century. It was valued at £80 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. A drove road used to pass near here. It may also have been referred to as ‘Howlands’.

Newlands (new-lindz) n. Thomas (15th C.) on the 1482 panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean.

Newlands Burn (new-lindz-burn) n. stream that rises near Hassendean Common, running past Huntlaw and Newlands farms to join the Huntlaw Burn.

New Licht (new-light) adj., arch. relating to the more liberal faction within the Scottish Presbyterian Church, particularly among the Secessionists, those from the Burgher and Anti-Burgher sides combining into the United Secession Church in 1820 – ‘They thocht to gie the Deil a fricht Wi’ handing up the torch ‘New Licht’ ...’ [DA].

New Mill (new-mill) n. farm a few miles south of Hawick on the Slitrig, once the site of a corn-mill on the river. It is sometimes called ‘Newmill on Slitrig’ to distinguish it from Newmill on Teviot. There is a ford here, which was once used as part of a drove road. William Turnbull was miller in 1666. Lancelot Aitchison was tenant in 1694.
Newmill

Hugh Elliot was smith there in 1672. William Whillans was there in 1729. Robert Thomson was there in the 1780s. Robert Thomson and Thomas Borthwick were there in 1797. Charles Mitchell was farmer in 1852. Thomas Turnbull in the 1850s and 60s, John Richardson in the late 19th century, Robert Turnbull around 1900, followed by his son Walter Turnbull. The Curds and Cream (meaning the Common Riding Friday ‘Hut’) was there in 1856. Cottages to the south are sometimes referred to as ‘Newmill Cottages’ or ‘Railway Cottages’ (it is ‘Newmylne of Slitrig’ in 1666, ‘Neumilne’ in 1694 and ‘Newmiln’ in 1797).

Newmill (new-nil) n. village about 4 miles south-west of Hawick on the A7. Sometimes called Newmill-on-Teviot to distinguish it from the ‘New Mill’ in the Slitrig valley. It was formerly a farm attached to the corn mill. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it comprised 6 acres, with the mill lade clearly shown. In 1694 those listed there with hearths in their homes were Robert Thomson (with 2 kilns), John Dryden (blacksmith) and Alexander Riddell (miller). Robert Thomson was tenant there in 1712. James Scott was there in 1791 and Thomas Borthwick is recorded as the farmer in 1797. The village grew up around the mill on the river, which was still in active use in 1825/6 (according to Pigot’s directory), when the miller was Alexander Borthwick. It was converted into a sawmill in the later 19th century. For a while it the village had its own school, which was established in 1804, also used as a community hall and contains a WW1 memorial plaque. The village also had its own library from at least the 1830s. In the 1840s the village consisted of a row of thatched houses (the end one being the school), together with the blacksmiths and a few other houses on the other side of the road. The 1841 census lists 13 households. A new building was constructed for the school later, converted into Newmill Country Inn. The Home Mission met regularly in the village from about the 1890s until 1926. The remains of Allanhaugh Tower can be reached via a footbridge and there are also older earthworks near the Teviot further upriver, although largely obliterated by cultivation. A significant cutting was made in the early 19th century to improve the main road, this being referred to as ‘the New Cut’ (the name presumably comes from this being the replacement corn mill, probably for Allanhaugh Mill; it is ‘neumilne’ in 1694, ‘Newmilne’ in 1712 and ‘Newmiln’ in 1797).

Newmill Burn (new-nil-burn) n. stream that flows from Branxholme Wester Loch to reach the Teviot near Newmill, with Vales Burn joining the Teviot just upriver.

Newmill Damfit see Damfit

Newmill Haa (new-nil-haw) n. village hall in Newmill-on-Teviot.

Newmill on Slitrig (new-nil-on-sli’-reeg) n. name sometimes used for New Mill to distinguish it from Newmill on Teviot.

Newmill Schuil (new-nil-skil) n. former small school in Newmill. It was established by the heritors of Hawick Parish in 1804. There were 40 pupils there in 1837. David Laidlaw was schoolmaster from 1837.

the New Road (thu-new-rôd) n. despite not being new for almost 200 hundred years, the name is still in use! It was built in 1815 and fully opened in 1816 as the new turnpike road from the Sandbed to Goldielands and on to Carlisle or the Borthwick, alongside the Teviot. It replaced the old road that went via the Loan, the Lumback and Martinshouse. The toll bar (Wester Toll) was situated outside the present High School. To provide access from the Sandbed, some houses between the Howegate and Orrock Place were demolished. The first part, along which houses were built, was named Buccleuch Street in 1815, while the remaining part within the town boundaries was named Buccleuch Road. 1905 – ‘How micht I come to the auld toon Sall I the New Road spurn, And glint the taps o’ the lang lums Frae the brow o’ Howdenburn?’ [WL].

the New Statistical Account (thu-new-sta-tis-tee-kul-a-kownt) n. the ‘New Statistical Account of Scotland’, published 1834–45 as a follow-up to the original (sometimes called ‘Old’) ‘Statistical Account of Scotland’ (1791–92). It was a description of each parish in the nation, largely written by the local ministers, but also drawing upon the knowledge of schoolmasters and doctors. Roxburghshire is covered in the 3rd volume, with the entries mostly written in 1834–7 and published in 1841. It represents a valuable snapshot at that period, as well as providing many anecdotal pieces of information that are not otherwise recorded.

Newstead (new-sted, -sted) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, just to the east of Newton. An old quarry and a well are marked just to the north on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. William Taylor was farmer there in 1841 and William Pringle in 1851.

Newstead

Newstead (new-steed, -sted) n. village about a mile east of Melrose, which is the site of a large Roman fort, also called Trimontium, and houses the Trimontium Museum. An iron meteorite was found here in 1827 (sometimes ‘Newsteads’; the origin of the name is probably just Old English for ‘the new place’ and is first recorded about 1540).

Newstead (new-steed, -sted) n. cottage to the south of the road near Old Castleton, near Byreholm.

Newton (newt-, ni-t-in) n. farm on the A7 on the Heights just to the north of Hawick, usually known as the Nitton. This is essentially the same place known as ‘Chamberlain Newton’ from early times. The ‘Chamberlain’ probably comes from Walter Berkeley, an owner in the late 12th century who was Chamberlain of Scotland to William the Lion. The ‘new’ part of the name thus comes from even earlier than this! The grant of the lands to Berkeley by William the Lion was sometime in the period 1173–82. The lands later passed to the Grundy family, who probably gave their name to Groundestone. Robert Grundy ‘de Neuton’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. There were Scotts of Newton recorded in the 16th to 18th centuries. Cottars living there in 1694 were Hector Shiel, John Taylor and Janet Brown. Walter of Newton is recorded in 1738. Robert Smith was farmer there in the 1760s. George Haliburton is recorded as farmer there in 1797. The owner recorded in 1811 was William Irvine, when it was valued at £238. John Oliver was a retired farmer there in 1841 and Janet Irvine farmed 383 acres there in 1851. Walter Scott was farmer in the 1860s (the name probably derives from Old English ‘niwa tun’, meaning ‘the new farm’; it was ‘Neuton’ in the 1170s, and was also sometimes ‘Neuton’, ‘Newtoun’ or ‘Newton’; see also Chamberlain Newton).

Newton (newt-, ni-t-in) n. former farm in the Slitrig valley just to the west of Stobs. Newton Cottage is still marked on the Ordnance Surveys map. Newton Hill to the south-west has some settlements on it. In 1622 the lands of Over and Nether Swinstead were among those sold by Robert Elliot of Redheugh to Gilbert Elliot of Stobs; they were described as ‘commonly called the lands of Hilend Barnes and Newtonoun’, suggesting that Newton was once part of Swinstead. James Best, John Hislop and Adam Hislop were there in 1694. William Scott and John Beattie and George Pott were there in the early 1700s. For a few years until 1779 it was farmed (along with Whitehillbrae) by James Sibbald, who later became a publisher in Edinburgh. In 1779 it was valued (along with Whitehillbrae) at £455 7s 4d, being an extensive farm on the Elliot of Stobs estate. John Riddell was farmer there in at least 1786–89 and George Riddell was also there in 1787. William Cochrane was there in 1791–94. Francis Aitkin is recorded as farmer there in 1797. Along with Whitehillbrae it was still valued at about £450 in 1813 (marked ‘Newtoun’ on Blaue’s 1654 map, it is ‘Neuton’ in 1694).

Newton (newt-in) n. hamlet and farm on the right bank of the Teviot, on the A698 about midway between Denholm and Cleikum Inn, part of the Parish of Bedrule. It was referred to as the ‘ten pound’ land in the 16th century when owned by Grahamslaw of Newton. Adam Grahamslaw had sasine for the lands in 1504. Adam Grahamslaw of Newton had a charter for the lands in 1531 and John Grahamslaw sold them to Robert Kerr of Ancrum and Woodhead (who married his daughter Helen) in 1586. The ‘procurator of resignation’ of 1531 records the names of the 16 tenants on the lands at that time. It was listed among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. There was a feud between the Grahamslaws of Little Newton and Turnbulls in Rulewater in the early years of the 17th century. This resulted in the 1601 death of 6 Grahamslaw brothers, probably all sons of John Grahamslaw of Newton. The farm at that time belonged to Robert Kerr and his wife Helen Grahamslaw, sister of the murdered men. The Kerrs of Newton held the lands through the 17th century. When inherited by William Kerr of Newton in 1639 the mill was described as recently built and the lands were valued at 12 pounds, 6 shillings and 40 pence. The Laird of Newton’s lands, including the mill, were valued at £853 6s 8d in 1643, 1663 and 1678. The farms of the Laird of Newton featured prominently in the Hearth Tax list for Bedrule Parish at the end of the 17th century. The neighbouring farm of Stirkigg was incorporated into it, around the end of the 18th century. John Borthwick was tenant there until about 1698. Mrs. Helen Chisholme is recorded paying the tax for 17 windows there in 1748 and Dr. Andrew Wilson was taxed for 16 windows in 1753. The farm was bought by Thomas Elliot Ogilvie in about the mid-1780s and sold by William Ogilvie of Chesters to Thomas Scott of Peel in 1833. Peter Brown was tenant there in the late 18th century. There were no signs of the former peel house by the end of the 18th century.
although ‘beautiful avenues of venerable trees’ remained. The farm once had a corn or threshing mill, which at the end of the 18th century was ‘scarcely discernible’ because of floods. There was later a saw mill there, powered through a mill pond to the south. The mansion house was demolished sometime before 1845. The Robson-Scott family lived here from the mid-19th century. The former tower house here is marked by a stony mound in a field between the main part of Newton farm and the A698. A ‘perforated stone macehead’ found here is in Hawick Museum, as well as 2 other worked stones, one hemispherical and one conical, and also a 13th century bronze skilet, which was ploughed up in 1964. The Laird of these lands (probably Kerr) is referred to in a version of the ballad ‘Raid of the Redeswire’ – ‘Gude Ederstane was not to lack, Wi’ Kirkton, Newton, noblemen’ (the name derives simply from the Old English for ‘new farm’; it is ‘Newtoun’ in 1531, ‘Nutone’ in 1548/9, ‘Newtoun de Baddralle’ in 1586, ‘Nuttoun’ in 1642 and ‘Newtoun’ in 1643; it is ‘Neutoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Newton (new’-in) n. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as ‘Alexandrum de Newtoune’ in 1426 when he was on the inquest for inheritance of the lands of Eilrig, along with many other local men. In 1429/30 he was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caerston. Probably the same man was among the witnesses for the transfer of Heap from the Langlands to the Scotts, carried out at St. Mary’s in Hawick in 1431. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Vicar of Hawick, listed as first witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Hawick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1514. He was recorded there as ‘Alexandro Newton vicario de Hawk’, immediately followed by ‘Roberto Luderdaill cappellano’. So he was clearly the ‘Vicar’ (presumably meaning he held the vicarge teinds), with ‘Luderdaill’ being an additional Chaplain of some sort. He was probably replaced by William Cunningham, recorded as Parson in 1519/20. Archibald of that Ilk (15th C.) on a ‘retour’ panel in 1446/7 for Ker of Altonburn. He was also a member of the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. He was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1455 in relation to the Barony of Cessford. He was also a member of the panel that decided on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5; he is recorded there as ‘Archibald Neuton of that Ilke’. Fenwick (19th C.) draper from Falstone in Northumberland, in business with his brother Robert. He sold his wares from a travelling cart, being a frequent visitor to Liddesdale before the era of the motor car. He can be seen as an old man with his horse and cart in a photograph from 1890. George (d.c.1500) probably tenant at Synton. He was killed along with George Cavers during a raid on Synton, when 180 cows, 20 horses and other goods were stolen by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, tenant in Stiches. Scott had a remission for these crimes in 1502. James (15th C.) Rector of Bedrule, recorded in 1468 in a document for the Homes of that Ilk. He is also recorded as Rector of ‘Bothrule’ (i.e. Bedrule) in 1479 in connection with an altar to St. Kentigern (or St. Mungo) dedicated in Jedburgh Kirk (i.e. the Abbey) to which he allowed ‘10 merks’ from annual rent of 2 tenements in Jedburgh. Presumably the same man was witness to a document in 1478 outlining rights of David Scott of Brancxholme within Selkirk; he is referred to there as ‘dean of Tevadale’. Probably the same man is also recorded as Dean of Teviotdale in 1488/9 in a document where the priest of Hassendean renounces fees to the Abbot of Melrose. He was still Rector of Bedrule and ‘commis-sario Thevidalie’ in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. James of Dalcoif (15th/16th C.) probably son of Archibald, who he succeeded in 1481. He is referred to as ‘of Dalcof’ in 1487 when he sold the lands of Boonraw to Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw. In 1494 he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton by Alexander Erskine; he was listed as ‘Jacobum Newton de Dawcofe’. In 1504/5 probably the same James ‘of Dalcof’ had a letter of ‘procuratory’ to his superi- or, Patrick Earl of Bothwell, to sell the lands of Boonraw from David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley, George Hepburn and William Mid-dlemas to Robert Scott of Stiches. In 1505 he was mentioned as former owner of Boonraw in a charter to Robert Scott of Stiches. He was probably succeeded by another James of Dalcove. The family also owned lands at Newton in Lauderdale. James (15th/16th C.) apparently tenant of Synto- ton when Adam Turnbull of Hornshole was ac-cused of stealing 200 cows and 80 horses there in 1502. He also acted as surety for Turnbull in his remission for several crimes. He could have been the same man as James of Dalcove. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘frater vicarius de Selkirk’, i.e. brother of the Vicar of Selkirk. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire (formerly spelled ‘Newtoun’, ‘Neutoune’, etc.).
Newton Don (new’-in-don) n. mansion near Nenthorn, north-west of Kelso, built 1817–20 by Robert Smirke in neo-classical style for Sir Alexander Don, 6th Baronet. The original landscaping and furnishings were quite elaborate. The estate was much diminished to pay off Sir Alexander’s debts and the rest sold in 1847 to Charles Balfour. The estate was connected with the Norman family of Morvile, then Newtons, Hepburns, Kers and others, before being acquired by Alexander Don in the mid-17th century, the name then changing to Newton Don.

Newtonrange (new’-in-gränj) n. coal-mining town on the A7 towards Edinburgh, and former station on the Waverley Line.

Newtonhaugh (new’-in-hawrh) n. former name for lands in Bedrule Parish, presumably a flat piece of land between Newton and the Teviot. It is recorded in 1666 that Thomas Rutherford was served heir to these lands, which had belonged to his father, John of Knowesouth.

Newton Hill (new’-in-hil) n. small hill between Stobs and Barnes Loch, being the north-eastern spur of White Knowe. There are the remains of two ancient settlements there. The western one measured about 100 m by 50 m and contains signs of at least 11 hut circles. However, it has been disturbed when the ground was used for military training. The eastern site is about 60 m by 40 m and is a fortified settlement, with some interior hut circles, and is still quite well preserved. There are also 2 linear earthworks crossing near the summit, from south-east to north-west. Alexander Michie first described these, suggesting a boundary connection with Gibby’s Cleuch; it is unclear how old they are, or whether they represent separate phases of construction over an extended period.

Newton Hill (new’-in-hil) n. small hill near the farm of Newton in Bedrule Parish. It was also the name for a piece of land that was part of Newton in Bedrule Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Newton Mains (new-tin-mänz) n. former farmstead adjacent to Newton farm in Wilton Parish. William Elliot and his family lived there in 1841, while the Lintons were there in 1851 (also written ‘Newtonmains’).

Newton Mill (new-tin-nil) n. former mill in Bedrule Parish, associated with the lands of Newton. This was once a corn mill, which at the end of the 18th century was ‘scarcely discernible’ because of floods. It was later the location for a saw mill, powered through a mill pond to the south. The mill was among the lands held by the Laird of Newton in 1643, valued at £133 6s 8d and was owned by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters in 1788.

Newton Moor (new-tin-moor) n. former name for the moor near Newton in Bedrule Parish. In about 1795 it is recorded that the minister of Bedrule had the right to cast 2 ‘darg of turf annually’ here.

Newton Muir (new-tin-newr) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, probably on Groundistone Heights. Agricultural labourer Thomas Hume and family were there in 1841, and it was abandoned in the 1850s.

Newton Pond (new-tin-pond) n. pond to the south of Newton farm in Bedrule Parish. It was formerly used to drive a threshing mill on the farm. Another pond to the southwest is labelled ‘Newton Pond’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and is now ‘Monks Pond’ on maps. There was once a tradition that it was originally built as a fish pond by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. The 1837 article in the New Statistical Account suggests it was fed by the Lady’s Well, but this seems to be confusing the pond with the Ladies’ Well much further down the Ruecastle Burn, near Knowesouth.

Newton Toor (new-in-toor) n. former tower near Ruecastle in Bedrule parish, burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. This is presumably an early version of the house at Newton.

Newton Wud (new-in-wud) n. name for wood near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Newtoon (new-toon) n. another name for Newtown St. Boswells.

Newtown Mill (new-town-nil) n. name for Newmill in the 16th century (also ‘Newtonne Milne’ and other variants; this may be the ‘Newtoun’ marked on de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland, although that geography is confused and the one above Stobs may also be meant).

Newtown St. Boswells (new-town-sin’-bozulz) n. town situated on the Bowden Burn, and dating from at least 1654 (so not so new!). It really developed as a railway town on the Waverley Line and as a market centre close to St. Boswells’ Green. The modern Roxburghshire County Council offices were built here in 1966–68. From 1975–1996 this was the administrative centre for the Borders Regional Council, and is now the centre for the Scottish Borders Council. Population (1991) 1,108.
New Westgate Haa

New Westgate Haa (new-west-gā’-law) n. house in Denholm, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map at the north end of the Canongate.

New Woll (new-wol) n. farm south-west of the original Woll. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map, and so has been ‘new’ for a while now. The house is part of the golf course, and is rentable as self-catering accommodation. John Sprot was there at the end of the 18th century.

the New Yairds (thu-new-yārdz) n. name used in Denholm for the plots of lands fenced around the Green after being augmented in 1836. These comprised the original 8½ acres of the ‘auld yairds’, plus the new approximately 6 acres, split among 60 people. Some feues were subdivided, and 2 were appropriated for the school and schoolmaster’s house and to the road to Has-sendean.

New Year (new-yer) n. a sum of money given to children at the New Year, or a drink offered to a visitor at the beginning of the year – ‘...But this time aw’ll shake ee quite rigid Aw wad like nae! [AY] (cf. the older the New Eer and also cf. common ridin).

nichbour (nich-bur) n., arch. neighbour, fellow townsman – ‘...either in his nichbour’s corn, meadow, or haynit gers, sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings ...’[BR1640], ‘...with power to his said nichbour that aught the ground whereupon it standis, to cast downe the said dtck, and tak it away’ [BR1640].

nichbourheid (nich-bur-heed) n., arch. neighbourhood – ‘Item, that ilk nichbour big his heid tak it away’ [BR1640].

Nichol (ni-kul, ni-kol) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was most likely the ‘Ade nichol in demnum’ who was cited again at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. He may have been closely related to James in Denholm, who was also recorded in 1493 and 1494/5. Probably the same Adam was one of the bailies appointed by James Douglas of Cavers in 1512 in order to give sasine of the lands of Denholm to William Cranston; his name appears to be given as ‘Ade Nichol’.

Adam (d.1626) resident of Cavers Parish. A headstone in the old kirkyard commemorates the death of him and his wife Margaret Smith on the same day. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same resident of Denholm married Janet Turnbull on the same day. Adam (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Greenbank in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls.

Adam (b.1769/70) farmer at Tandlaw in Wilton Parish. He was already a widower by 1841. In 1851 he was farming 200 acres, with the farm being run by his son John. Adam (b.1800/1) born in Newcastleton, he lived in Roberton Parish. He was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Deanburnhaugh in 1841 and a shepherd at Milsington Shankfoot in 1851 and 1861. He married Betty Graham (from Cumberland) and their children included: Helen; Walter; Thomas; Andrew; Jane; James; and Robert. Adam (1818/19-70) mason in Newcastleton, son of John. His wife was Jessie Rutherford, who died in 1891, aged 71. They are buried at Ettleton. Agnes (17th C.) tenant at Binks in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander (18th C.) resident at Threehead in 1775 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. Alexander (18th/19th C.) cooper who was listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. His son Walter died in 1801. He may be the Alexander who married Margaret Gledstains in 1788. Andrew (17th C.) tenant at Synton Mill, at the same time as Thomas. They are mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. Andrew (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 he was listed as holding part of Minto Hills farm ‘in tack’, the other part being held by Thomas Thomson. Andrew (18th C.) tenant in Blackhall. In 1758 he was among parishioners in Hobbirk Parish who were asked to provide broom for thatching the roof of the kirk. Andrew (19th C.) farmer at Trow Knowes. He had a house built at Myreslawgreen in about 1879. Charles (b.1818/9) from Perth, he was a plasterer in Wilton. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed on Wilton Path. In 1851 he is recorded as a master plasterer on Ladylaw Place, employing 8 men. His wife was Isabella and their children included Isabella and Christian. Christopher (19th/20th C.) grocery assistant in Hawick who was known for his efforts at poetry, much of it privately published in pamphlet form. He has been described as Hawick’s answer to William McGonagal. An example of his verse is: ‘We started off for Edinburgh By the twenty-past-ten train: When we got into the city It was pouring down with rain’. Elizabeth (18th C.) cook at Braucholme in 1785, when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Francis (18th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish in 1724 when he married Margaret Wilson in Roberton Parish. Isobel (b.1726), baptised in Hobbirk Parish, may have been their daughter. Francis (18th C.) resident of Harwood Mill. His son John was baptised in Hobbirk Parish in 1738. He could be the Francis who married Margaret Rae in 1732 and whose other children included Thomas (b.1740). He may be the same man as the Francis who earlier married Margaret Wilson. Francis (b.c.1775) labourer at Tweedbank. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. George (16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 as the King’s shepherd in Bellendean. He was paid £3 6s 8d for 5 bolls of grain. George (16th C.) recorded in the will of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, when he was tenant farmer at Bellendean. He could be related to Simon and William who farmed at Buccleuch. George (17th C.) resident at Sundhope in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the George, married to Bessie Elliot, whose children born in Hawick Parish included: James (b.1671); Bessie (b.1673); and William (b.1681). George (1765/6-1841) tenant farmer at Philhope, probably son of John, tenant in Craik. In 1841 he was recorded there with his wife, 4 children, a labourer and 2 female servants. In 1820 (late in life) he married Ann Burnet, who died in 1879, aged 79. Their children included: John (1820–70), who died at Philhope; Isabella (b.1822); James (b.1823); and William (1826–1902), also died at Philhope. He is buried in Borthwick Waas and may have been son of John (1717/8–92), who is in the adjacent burial plot. George ‘Geordie’ (d.1874) resident of the Rule valley. He carried the post from Bunchester to Chesters, but gave up in 1873 due to ill-health. He died at the Causeyfoot. Helen (17th/18th C.) resident of Greenholm in Castleton Parish. In 1699 she was reported to the Session for blasphemy, specifically saying ‘the Lord had broken His promise’ for giving them such a bad harvest; she had to ‘stand in sackcloth one day publicly upon the place of repentance’. Ian ‘Moose’, Cornet in 1984, he has also been 1514 Club President. His son Ross was Cornet in 2012. J. (18th/19th...
Nichol

C.) hosier in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘in dënû’, which probably meant Denholm. He may have been related to Adam, who was also listed in 1493. He was also cited at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He may have been closely related to Adam in Denholm, who was also recorded in 1493 and 1494/5. James (17th C.) leased the farm of Todshawhill in 1671. Perhaps the same James was resident of Brodlaugh on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Lairhope. His wife was Esther Armstrong and their daughter Janet was born in 1705. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Turn in Kirkton Parish. His son Adam was baptised in 1720. James (1715/6–76) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1776, aged 45. Their children included Elizabeth Mary (d.1776), Robert (d.1782) and Archibald (d.1779). He and his wife died at Shaws and are buried In castleton. James (18th C.) recorded at Highchesters in 1772 when his daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the same James recorded at Outerside in 1762 when his son John was baptised and Chapelhill in 1764 when another son John was baptised. He could be the James (d.1792) commemorated at Borthwick Waas. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1770 he is recorded living at Branholme Woodfoot. He married Helen Turnbull in 1760. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: Mary (b.1761); James (b.1763); and Helen (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Scott and Andrew Turner. Perhaps the same James was listed at Muirside in Wilton Parish in 1791 when he paid the Cart Tax. James (1791–1875) born in Lilliesleaf, son of John. He was an agricultural labourer in Roberton Parish.

In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his family at Borthwickshiel Lodge, and in 1861 they were living at 4 Orrock Place. He married Elizabeth (1794–1881), daughter of John Cavers and Elizabeth Hislop; she died at Craik. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1813); Janet (b.1815); Margaret (b.1817); Jane (1820–63), who married William Renwick and died in Hawick; Christian (b.1822); Joan (b.1824); John (b.1827); Barbara Pott (b.1829); Walter (b.1831); Williamina (or ‘Mina’, b.1833), who married George Nichol; and Jemima (b.1836). He died at ‘Wheathaugh’ and was buried at Borthwick Waas. James (18th/19th C.) baker of Hawick, recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. James (1787/8–1866) carter in Newcastleton. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 26 Langholm Street. He ran a cart to Langholm twice a week in the 1850s. His wife was Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Burnet from Hawick, who died in 1861, aged 73. Their children included: Mary; John (1809/10–16); William (1811/2–43), who married Janet Mitchellhill; and James (1814/5–83), who married Jane Murray. He could be the labourer in Newcastleton recorded as head of household in 1835. James (b.c.1790) farmer on the Loan. He is recorded on the 1841 census at about No. 53, living with no family and 2 servants. James (b.c.1795) shoemaker in Newcastleton recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was at about 12 South Hermitage Street in 1841. James (b.1815/6) postman in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He took over from Jean Elliot, ‘Lucie Lass’. He lived on South Hermitage Street. He made deliveries along the Liddel and Hermitage Waters on alternate days, going at least as far as Saughtree and Dinlees (with children attending the smaller schools being used to carry letters further afield). He was recorded as a labourer in 1851, living at about 3 Langholm Street. In 1861 he was ‘Post Messenger’ on South Hermitage Street. He married Jane Murray and their children included Mina (b.1843) and Mary Ann (b.1845). James (d.1860s) farmer in Hawick. He married firstly Jean Michie (d.1838) and secondly Margaret Scott (d.1870). He died at the age of 75 and was buried in St. Mary’s kirkyard. James ‘Jamie’ (d.1903) devoted supporter of the Saxhorn Band for almost 40 years. Although he had no musical ability himself he carried the music chest, which he described as playing the ‘Tin Box’. He worked for over 30 years in Elliot’s stocking-shop – ‘Eppy Sootie and Wullie Pairk, Geordie the Buck and Higgins Phill, Jamie Nichol the Hawick band clairk, The Duddy Laird and Shallow Bill’ [HI]. Janetus (19th C.) carter in Castleton. In 1832 he acknowledged that he was father of Betty Paisley’s child. His forename seems unusual. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Johne Nicoll in Craikhoip’ in 1622 and 1623 when he was cautious for Will Elliot in Huntlaw. John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Either he is listed twice or there were 2 men with the same name at that time. John (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1891.

1694. John (17th C.) listed as cottar at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He must surely related to Robert, who was also listed there. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Parkhill in 1717 when his daughter Janet was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Branxholme Town in 1717 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. His son William was created a Burgess of Hawick in 1737, suggesting that this may be when he reached the age of majority. He may be the John whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included William (b.1716) and Walter (b.1718). John (1717/8–92) tenant in Craik. He married Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1815, aged 88. Their children included: William (1759/60–1807) 2nd son; John (1762–87), 3rd son; twins Betty and Margaret (b.1764); George (b.1766), probably the farmer at Philhope; and Margaret (again, b.1768). John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Mary Dickson in 1761 and their son John was born in 1762. He may be the same man as the father of George (b.1764), who lived at Broadlee. John (18th C.) resident at Broadlee in 1764 when his son George was baptised in Robertson Parish. He was clearly separate from the contemporary John who lived at Craik. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1756 he married Mary Turnbull and their children included: Robert (b.1757); and Michael (b.1760). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by Bailie Robert Howison and tobacconist William (who was surely a relation). John (18th C.) baker in Hawick. It is said that when coming back to Hawick from Kelso with a neighbour, they decided to have a race to reach the toll-bar at Spittal-on-Rule. His horse could not take the bend and leaped over the parapet of the Rule Water bridge there. However, since the river was in flood they both escaped injury and he was rescued by the miller, to continue on his journey later the same day. An inscription ‘J.N. and his Horse’s leap’ was carved on the bridge. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1768 his child John with Elizabeth Noble was baptised, the couple being labelled as ‘Fornicators’ and the witnesses being shoemaker Robert Elliot and smith Robert Young. John (1746/7–1819) weaver in Newcastle ton. He married Mary Ogilvie, who died in 1795, aged 45. Their children included: Alexander, who died aged 12; John Little, who died in infancy; Walter (1798/9–1818); and John (1790/1–1817). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. John (1762–1839) son of John, he was baptised in Robertson Parish. He was shepherd at Broadmeadows, son of John. He married Janet Brydon, who died in 1798, aged 30. He died at Todshawhill and is buried at Borthwick Waas, along with his wife and mother Mary Dixon (1731/2–1807). He is probably the John, son of John, baptised in Robertson Parish in 1762. John (1764/5–1842) tenant at ‘Carretrigg’ (i.e. Carewoodrig). He married Jane Jardine, who died at Eweshopelee in 1851, aged 70. Their children included: Walter (1804/5–30); and Elizabeth (1812/3–28). They are buried at Ettleton. He was probably son of John and Margaret Ingles, who are buried alongside his family. John (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Woodburn Mill in Robertson Parish, when he owned 2 horses. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: James (1791–1875), farm worker in Robertson Parish; an unnamed daughter (b.1792); and Christian (b.1794). He is probably the John (1761/2–1828), tenant in Whinfield, who is buried at Borthwick Waas (adjacent to James, who was hence likely to be his son). He could be the John son of Walter and Betty Stodart baptised in Hawick in 1761. John (b.c.1765) from England, he was a boot and shoe maker in Newcastle ton. He was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1841 he was living with labourer Walter (probably his son) in the village. He may be the John who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (1775/6–1867) from Kirkandrews, he was a mason in Newcastle ton. He is recorded by Pigot in 1825/6 and 1837 as a Newcastle ton mason, as well as in Slater’s 1852 directory. He and William Crozier were the masons who worked on the Holm Bridge. In at least 1841–61 he was on North Hermitage Street. He married Marion Murray, who died in 1868, aged 87. Their children included: Robert; John (1814/5–78), who married Mary Dodd; James; Adam (1818/19–70) mason in Newcastle ton; Thomas; and Margaret. He is buried at Ettleton along with some of his family. John (18th/19th C.) carter in Castleton Parish. He was listed as ‘John, jun. carter, Castleton’ when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821; this suggests that his father was also John. He may be closely related to James, who was also a carter in Newcastle ton at about the same time. John (b.1792/3) born in Robertson Parish, he was shepherd at Billhope in Castleton Parish in 1841. In 1851 he was shepherd at Blackhall in Ewesdale and he was listed as a cadger and carrier at Raesknowe in 1861. He married Margaret Hobkirk, who was born in Ashkirk Parish. His children included: John (1818–83), baptised in Roberton; and Thomas (1826/7–46). His 2 sons are buried in Borthwick Waas. John (1801/2–89) feuar in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living at about 34 South Hermitage Street. He was probably the John who was on the Border Union Railway Committee for Newcastleton in the 1850s, and recorded as Newcastleton Town Clerk in the 1860s. He married Mary Elliot, who died in 1879, aged 71. Their children included: Helen; Elizabeth D.; Agnes; John (1845–1904), who died at Leeds; and Wilhelmina (‘Mina’, 1850/1–1926), who married a Tait and is buried at Ponteland. John Pringle (1804–59) born at Huntly Hill, near Brechin, eldest of 7 children of John, farmer from Northumberland, and Jane Forbes from Aberdeen. He studied Mathematics and Physics at King’s College, Aberdeen, trained as a minister at St. Mary’s College (St. Andrews), but then turned to education. His first teaching job was at Dun. He came to Hawick in the early 1820s to teach in a school for practical education. He was master of the English (i.e. Parish) School from 1821 until the end of 1823. Here he was apparently inspired to follow an interest in astronomy by millwright Gideon Scott, and they watched a transit of Mercury in a garden at Allars Bank (probably in 1832, so he returned to Hawick specially for the event). He left Hawick, becoming editor of the ‘Fife Herald’, Headmaster of Cupar Academy and Rector of Montrose Academy, before becoming Regius Professor of Astronomy at Glasgow University in 1836. He was listed in Cupar in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. In 1831 he married Jane Tullis (1809–50), daughter of a Cupar printer. Their eldest child John, became a Professor and writer and their youngest, Agnes, married William Jack, Professor of Mathematics at Glasgow. In 1853 he secondly married the prominent anti-slavery campaigner and reformer Elizabeth Pease, against the objections of her friends and Quaker family. He was a lifelong radical in politics, arguing for universal education. He was asked to stand as a Liberal candidate for Glasgow, and the Hungarian patriot Louis Kosuth stayed with him when he toured Britain. Although he published only 2 scientific papers (both on the Moon), he lectured extensively and published many popular books. He wrote the influential ‘Views of the architecture of the heavens: in a series of letters to a lady’ (1839) and ‘Cyclopaedia of the Physical Sciences’ (1857), among other works. He was an inspiring teacher and gave popular public lectures, even travelling to the U.S.A., where he apparently influenced Edgar Allen Poe. He also returned to Hawick to give a popular lecture on Astronomy and was effusive in his praise for his former friend and inspiration, Gideon Scott. He popularised the ‘nebular hypothesis’ for the formation of the Solar System in books such as ‘Phenomena and order of the solar system’ (1838), and was the first to suggest a photographic study of sunspots. He is buried in the Grange cemetery, Edinburgh. There is a commemorative window to him at Bute Hall in Glasgow. John (b.1805/6) born in Roberton Parish, son of Adam, he was farmer at Tandlaw. In 1841 and 1851 he was helping his father at Tandlaw. In 1861 he was tenant at Tandlaw, farming 200 acres and employing 5 people. He was unmarried, but living with a housekeeper and 2 servants. Perhaps the same John was farmer at Coldhouse, listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. John (b.1814/5) mason in Newcastleton, probably son of John. In 1861 he was on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Mary and their children included James, Margaret, John and Marion. John (b.1815/6) born in Ewesdale, he was shepherd at Ewesleeshope. His wife was Mary and their children included John. In 1851 he was also living with his mother Jane. John (1818–83) baptised in Roberton Parish, son of John who was shepherd at Billhope. In 1841 he was living with his parents at Billhope. In 1851 he was shepherd at Priesthaughshiel (and recorded being born in Ashkirk Parish). In 1861 he was shepherd at Braidhaugh south of Hawick. In 1841 he married Mary Stavert (the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Castleton Parishes), who died in Hawick in 1888, aged 67. Their children included Christina, Margaret, Marion, Thomas, Janet, Isabella, Thomas (again, b.1856), Eliza (b.1858) and Mina (b.1862). He and his wife are buried in Borthwick Waas. John (b.1819/20) born in Roberton Parish, son of George. In 1861 he was farmer at Philhope, farming about 1900 acres and employing 4 people. He was unmarried at that time, living with his mother Ann and 3 servants. John (b.1820/1) farmer in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on Montague Street. His wife was Ellen (from Hawick) and their children included Mark, James, John and Margaret. John (1827–81) born in Hawick, son of William. He started as a journeyman warehouseman, becoming a master skinner and tanner. He ran what was probably the town’s most successful tanning and wool merchants, succeeding to the business of Andrew Ewen in Slitrig Crescent. In 1851 he was living with his mother at 56 High Street; he may have been partner in what is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as ‘Nichael & Scott’, tanners and skinners of Punch Bowl Close. In 1861 he was at 1 Slitrig crescent and listed as a skinner employing 12 people. He was also a farmer. He entered the Council in 1867 for Slitrig Ward and was elected a Magistrate in 1869, then became Provost 1871–74. During his Provostship Commercial Road was developed and there was the stockingmaker’s strike of 1872/3. He was presented with some inscribed silver plate on his retirement, and returned to the Council in 1878/9. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, chairing the Race Committee, and being a Steward at the Races. He was also Chairman of the first School Board of Hawick, as well as being a local curler and bowler. He married Janet W. Scott (one of the ‘Whack’ Scotts), who died in 1855, aged 24. He later married Annie, daughter of butcher George Davies. Their children were William Scott (who became Provost), John, Margaret Scott (who married solicitor James Barrie), and 2 children who died in infancy. A portrait of him hangs in the Town Hall and he is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John Scott (19th/20th C.) son of Provost John and brother to Provost William Scott. He worked in the hosiery business in Leicester, joined London Scottish as a private, rose to commissioned rank and was awarded the Military Cross for leading his men in a bayonet charge at Mons. He probably married Florence Crane from Leicester. Margaret (b.1794/5) draper in Newcastleton, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 and 1861 she was on Stopford Street, already a widow. She had sons John and William. Mark (19th C.) third official Common Riding singer of Hogg’s ‘Teribus’. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1634 as schoolmaster at Lilliesleaf. He is the first teacher on record there. Patrick (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (15th C.) resident of Hartwood. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford in Phaup was allowed to compone for several crimes, including stealing sheep from him and John Fletcher. Robert (d.1699) resident of the Teviothead area whose gravestone is there. His wife Bessie died in 1701. The names of James Nichol and Marian Scott, also engraved on the same stone, are probably his parents (assuming that they survived him). Robert (17th C.) listed as resident at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John, who was also listed as a cottar there, was surely a relative. Robert (1774/5–1852) born in Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer in Deanburnhaugh. He married Catherine (or ‘Ketty’) Wilson (1811/2–1883). Their children included: Jane (b.1806); and Robert (b.1809). He and his wife were recorded at Deanburnhaugh in 1841 and 1851 (by which time he was a ‘Pauper’. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Phillhope according to the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 1 farm horse and 1 saddle horse at Phillhope in 1797. He also paid tax for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Ovenshank in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (b.c.1790) stocking maker in Denholm recorded on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living around the Canongate. He had children Andrew, Catherine, William, Jean, Nanny, Robert, Helen and Mary. Robert (1793/4–1854) from Castleton Parish, he was a shepherd at Dryden. He is recorded at Dryden in 1841 and 1851. He married Isabella Glendinning (1788/9–1852). Their children included Adam, Janet and George. His family are buried at Teviothead. Robert ‘Bobby the Drummer’ (1832/3–1920) son of Elliot, he was a weaver in Newcastleton, like his father. In early life he also worked as a drover, and knew the old roads well, from the Highlands to the Midlands. His nickname came from playing drums in the village band. In 1861 the family were living at about 23 South Hermitage Street. He was the last person in Newcastleton to work the handloom, which he had in the back of his house at 12 South Hermitage Street; he won his last plaid in 1913. Robert (b.1831/2) hosier in Denholm in the 1860s. In 1861 he was listed at about Sunnyside as a ‘wool frame knitter’. His wife was Christian and their children included Agnes and Betsy. Robert J. ‘Bert’ (??–??) founder of R.J. Nichol coach business in 1932. His children were: Bert, who continued the family business; Jessie; and Effie, who died young after an accident. Robert ‘Bert’ (1921–2008) son of Bert, he was born in Lothian Street. He was known as a swimmer in his youth and had a life-long love of rugby, particularly the Linden (which he captained); he also played a few games for Hawick R.F.C. He volunteered for the R.A.F. in

WWII, returning to run his father’s business until 1990, driving coaches to rural areas around Hawick, as well as trips further afield. For decades the firm brought schoolchildren from outlying villages to Hawick High School. He married Jean Douglas. In 1955 tragedy struck, when 2 of their children drowned in the Cauld. He also had children Douglas and Dorothy. Ronald Andrew ‘Ronnie’ (1960–2015) rugby player and leader of the Drums and Fifes. Son of Bill and Lydia and brother of Phil, Ian and Lindsay, he was educated at Wilton and Hawick High School and worked as a plasterer and builder. A keen rugby player at school, he went on to play prop forward over 200 times for the Linden and was a regular for the Greens in the 1980s and 1990s, playing 180 games. He also represented the South of Scotland and was capped for the Scotland ‘B’ team in 1985. A great supporter of the Common Riding, he was a member of the Drums and Fifes for 39 years, including being leader for 20 years. He also served as Chairman of the Common Riding Committee 2007–10, as well as President of the Callants’ Club and 1514 Club. He married Lynn Frost in 1981 and they had a son, also Ronnie. Known affectionately as ‘Big Ronnie’, the nickname applied to the size of his heart as much as to the stature of the man himself. A tree and ornamental tree-guard were unveiled in his memory on the Kirkwynd in 2016. Simon (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Buccleuch in 1574, recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. William was also listed as tenant there, and they were probably both related to George, who was tenant at Bellendean. Simon ‘Syne’ (16th/17th C.) tenant of ‘Fairnyleis’ recorded in 1623. Michael Birnie in the same place was found guilty of stealing 30 sheep from there, belonging to him and his son William, along with Walter Scott of Todrig and his son Walter Scott. It is unclear if these lands were Fernielees in Ruleholme, as well as George in Bellendean. William (17th C.) tenant in Synton Mill. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635, when Isobel Scott (also in Synton Mill) complained about Margaret Tullie calling her a witch and a thief. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Peelbraehope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Thomas (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) cooper in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton in 1826. Thomas (1820/1–98) grocer and merchant in Newcastleton. He was at about 16 Douglas Square in 1851 and on North Hermitage Street in 1861. He could be the same as the baker recorded on Douglas Square in the 1860s. He married Julia Mitchellhill, who died in 1888, aged 63. Their children included: Margaret; Robert; Mary (1855/6–97); William; and Thomas (1863/4–98), who died at Portobello. In later life he lived at Brieryhill Cottage, where he died. He is buried in Ettrick Cemetery. Thomas (b.1820/1) carter on North Hermitage Street in 1851. His wife was Jane and their children included Helen and Mary. Dr. Walter (1785–1858) son of William, he was born in Castleton Parish. His father was one of the first feuars to build in Newcastleton. He was the first mathematics teacher at Edinburgh High School. He is described by Thomas Carlyle, and in a letter from his sister Jane Carlyle. Walter (17th C.) resident at Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (18th C.) resident in Todrig Mill in 1763 when his son Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. His wife Betty Wilson died in 1819. Walter (1816/7–84) shepherd in Robertson Parish, born in Castleton. In 1871 he was shepherd at Broadlee. In 1840 he married Janet, daughter of John Muir (or Moore), who died at Branxholme Braes in 1888, aged 83. Their children included: Janet (1841/2–52), who died at Tushielaw; Robert (b.1843); John (1844/5–52), who also died at Tushielaw; and Walter (1847–1878), who died at Broadlee. In 1841 he was living at Deanburnhaugh with his wife and father-in-law and in 1851 and 1861 he was a shepherd at Crookwelcome in Ettrick Parish. The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. Walter (b.1830/1) carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 4 Orrock Place with his wife Mary and daughter Jessie. William (16th C.) tenant at Buccleuch, listed in the last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1574, along with Simon also in Buccleuch, as well as George in Bellendean. William (17th C.) tenant in ‘Carritridge’ (probably Carewoodrig). Along with William Elliot (also in ‘Carritridge’) and several other men from the upper Borthwick and Teviotdale, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. William (17th C.) leased part of the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1693. William (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. William (17th C.) resident of Easter Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) listed as tenant at Brighouse in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. William (17th C.) listed at ‘vaills’ (i.e. Valesburn) among ‘The poor in Hauick Parrioche’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1796 he married Janet Paterson in William (17th/18th C.) resident of Newton on Slitrig. In 1709 he married Janet Paterson in William (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Teinside in 1740. He married Janet Scott and their children included Helen (b.1740). He is probably the William who married Janet Scott in Wilton Parish in 1730. William (b.1741) may also have been his child. The witnesses in 1740 were Walter Scott at Commonside and Thomas Elliot at Harwood. William (18th C.) son of John, tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1737. He could be the William born in Hawick Parish in 1716. William (18th C.) merchant who purchased 23 High Street from Robert Scott in 1753, and is probably responsible for the ‘All Was Others ...’ plaque. He could be the William, tobacconist, who was Cornet in 1748. He is probably the tobacconist William who witnessed a baptism for John in 1757. He could be the William who married Janet Blaikie in Wilton Parish in 1756 and had children: William (b.1758); James (b.1761); and Janet (b.1764). The witnesses in 1764 were ‘Mr John Laurie student’ and Alex Bunyan, officer; this suggests he was strongly involved with the kirk. William ‘Sweet William’ (d.1798) Hawick man whose death is recorded in the Parish register. Note that a separate William, husband of Isabel Brown, was recorded dying in the same month. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at ‘Gibsnose’ (in Wilton) on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same William is listed at Pathhead when he paid the cart tax in 1790 and 1791. William (d.c.1795) part of a Hawick family popularly known as ‘Ernpistols’. Originally a baker (or perhaps a tailor), he became bankrupt at the end of the 18th century and moved to London as a journeyman. It is said that when delivering bread there, a wealthy lady was struck by him, started up conversation, and offered to pay for a commission for him in the Navy. He is also said to have returned to Hawick on one occasion, when people marveld at how he looked in uniform, and to have died later at the Nile. It is said that he was uncle of William Nichol, who was ‘Willie Brewed a Peck o’ Maut’ in the song by Burns. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was one of the first feuars to build in Newcastle. He married Mary Murray. Their children included: Jean (b.1782); Margaret (b.1784); Walter (b.1785), who became mathematics teacher at the Edinburgh High School; and Helen (b.1789). William (18th/19th C.) father of Provost John. He lived at 56 High Street. His premises are marked on Wood’s 1824 map. His wife Mary was listed as ‘Proprietor of houses’ in 1851. His other children included Elizabeth (who married printer James Dalgleish) and Wilhelmina (who married Bailie John Briggs). William (18th/19th C.) stocking manufacturer in Denholm recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was probably related to Robert, who was also listed as a stocking maker. William (1788/9–1838) weaver in Newcastleton. He married Margaret Nichol, who died in 1872, aged 78. Their children included: John (1832/3–1915), who married Margaret Beattie. They are buried in Ettingston Cemetery. William (b.1790/1) farm overseer at Thorlieshope in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Janet and their children included James and Mary. William (b.1791/2) from Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Newlands in Minto Parish. He was recorded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861, farming 200 acres. His wife was Beatrice and their children included William, Janet, Jane, Beatrix, Christian, Adam, James, John, Francis, Robert and George. William (b.c.1795) farmer at Newlands in Minto Parish. He was recorded there in 1841. His wife was Beatrice and their children included William, Janet, Jane, Beatrix, Christian, Adam, James, John, Francis and Robert. William (1795/6–1870) farmer in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was a cattle dealer on Langholm Street and was still there in 1861, farming 12 acres. His first wife was Margaret Elliot, who died at Middlemoss in 1823, aged 26 (probably daughter of Thomas Elliot of Redheugh). He secondly married Agnes Nichol, who died in Newcastleton in 1893, aged 85. Their children included: Helen (1828/9–34); John (1829/30–61); William (b.c.1833); Jane (b.c.1837); Helen (again, 1841/2–1922); Esther; James (1844/5–1923); Ann (1846/7–49); Agnes (1848/9–60); and Robert (1854/6–1923). William (b.1833/4) farmer in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on Langholm Street and recorded as farmer of 11 acres. His wife was Isabella and their children included Thomas and Agnes. William (b.1833/4) from Dunottar, Kincardine, he was recorded in 1861 as gamekeeper at Newlands.
Cottage in Castleton Parish. William (1837/8–1906) blacksmith in Newcastleton. He married Elizabeth ('Bessie') Davidson Nichol in 1873 and she died in 1898, aged 56. He secondly married Elizabeth Jane Scott, who died in 1955, aged 87. Their children included William (1874–8). They are buried at Ettleton. William Scott (1876–1932) oldest son of Provost John, he had early business training with Laing & Barrie, solicitors, then he worked in the offices of the Edinburgh Town Clerk. He also farmed at Acreknowe and Winnington Rig and later Girnwood in the Borthwick valley (which he inherited from his aunt Hannah Davies). He was secretary of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, involved in other agricultural activities and a Liberal in politics. He was councillor for Wilton Ward from 1923, and Provost 1928–31. He fought the changes brought about by the Local Government Bill of 1929, but then became Vice-Convener of Roxburghshire County Council. He was also a keen Common Riding supporter, being Chairman of the General and Ceremonial Committees. In 1923 he married Marie Morris of London. He resigned from public life for health reasons, and died in an Edinburgh nursing home, his ashes being buried at Girnwood (formerly spelled 'Nicall', 'Niccol', 'Niccoll', 'Nicholl', 'Nickel', 'Nickell', 'Nicol', 'Nycholl', 'Nicht', etc.).

Nichol's (ni-kulz, ni-kolz) n. former skinner and tanner, John Nichol. He succeeded to the business of Andrew Ewen in Slitrig Crescent. In 1871 he was employing 15 men.

Nichol's (ni-kulz, ni-kolz) n. former bus company, based in Hawick, run by Bert Nichol and his son (also Bert) from 1932–89, operating a regular country service around the Hawick area, as well as bussing pupils every school-day to Hawick from Newcastleton, Teviothead, Roberton and Bونchester. The company also ran tours and trips to Blackpool, Morecambe, Scarborough, Great Yarmouth and Bailleul. At its height in the early 1980s the business had 9 coaches and 7 full-time drivers. The company ceased operating in 1990.

There are several early Cornets with cognomens, including the first recorded name, ‘Laird’ in 1703. More recent examples include: ‘Wullie on the Wundi Sole’ and ‘Kill Drys’ in 1805; ‘Garlic Jock’ in 1806. Such names were once much more common than today, and a huge number of 19th century examples are collected in the poem ‘Hawick Immortals’. It is important to realise that nicknames were typically employed with no offence meant or taken, and that they would most often be used to refer to a person in conversation, rather than to their face. Nicknames appear to be more common for males, but many local females examples are known. Many such names are handed down in families, often through the oldest son. Some of the names still in use today go back for several generations, and some may be even older.

nickname (nik-stik) n., arch. a tally, specifically ‘ti loss yin’s nickname’ is to lose count or miscalculate something, especially the time of a birth – ‘Nickname bodie, one who proceeds exactly according to rule; as if he has had one to dine with him, he will not ask again without having a return in kind, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

the Ninestane Rig (thu-nin-stan-rig) n. hill off the Newcastleton road, near Whitropefoot, site of a circle of standing stones. The circle is about 290 yards south of the summit. There are nine stones, two of which are large (about 6 feet and 4 feet, respectively) while the others are broken into stumps. The layout is slightly oval, measuring 23 feet by 21 feet. It is believed to be early Bronze Age. It was possibly the location for the ballad ‘Barthram’s Dirge’ and is also by tradition where Lord Soulis was boiled alive in lead. On the south side of the ridge, half a mile from the stone circle, are the remains of a settlement, composed of 2 enclosures. Note there is also a ‘Nine Stane Rig’ in the Lammermuirs – ‘They shot him dead at the Nine-Stane Rig, Beside the Headless Cross, And they left him lying in his blood, Upon the moor and moss’ [T], ‘They bore him down with lances bright, But never a wound or scar had he; With hempen bands they bound him tight, Both hands and feet on the road near the top of the Nip Knowes. Springs near here were used as the source of the town’s first public water supply in the earlier part of the 19th century – ‘Wad chase o’er the Nip Knowes wi’ micht and wi’ main’ [JEDM], ‘Fit yet to face the Nipknowes or storm the Vertish high, For the drums and fifes are calling, and the Cornet’s riding by’ [JYH], ‘Blissfu’, sleepin’t a’ off, aneth the muckle trei That stude sae lang at the fitt o the Nipnowes’ [DH], ‘And A’ve galloped up the Nipknowes in mony a Cornet’s Chase’ [IW] (from Old English for ‘hillocks at the top of the hill’; also written as one word and erroneously as ‘Knipknowes’).

Nisbet (niz-bì’) n. small town off the A698 about 3 miles north-east of Jedburgh, and also a former station on the Jedburgh Railway of the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway. Here the Scots beat the English in a battle of 1355. Hertford’s men razed ‘Neyther Nesbett’ and ‘Over Nesbet’ in 1545 (also written ‘Nesbit’ and other variants; the origin of the name is probably from Middle English ‘nesebit’, meaning ‘the nose bit’, after the local topography; it first occurs about 1150 as ‘Nesbet’; note that Nisbet House is near Duns).

Nisbet (niz-bì’) n. James (1785–1854) religious publisher of London, who was father-in-law of Rev. W.A. Wallace. He was a native of Kelso, and one of the principal subscribers to the erection of Kelso North Church. His publishing company, James Nisbet & Co. published most of the books of R.M. Ballantyne, who was related to the Ballantynes of Kelso. He gave 2 flagons, 8 communion cups, 4 plates and a baptismal basin to the new Free Kirk in Hawick. The cups were in continual use until 1924 and the basin was later set in a carved font. John of Nisbetfield (17th/18th C.) lawyer, who was married to Agnes Riddell, and thus assumed the lands of Bewlie. He and John Riddell of Muselee were assigned a new loft and thus assumed the lands of Bewlie. He and his wife gave Bewlie (or perhaps half of it) to Walter Scott of Whitfield in 1713, since he had married their only daughter Agnes. Half of Bewlie was leased by him to Thomas Riddell in 1716. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cosmhill in Kirkton Parish. His children included Ann (b.1721), Robert (b.1723), Janet (b.1726) and James (b.1729). Walter (19th C.) picture framer at Myreslawgreen. In 1854 he married Margaret (or ‘Maggie’), daughter of George Dickson and Annie Affleck. Their children included: Robert, who worked at the Hawick Labour Exchange; and Margaret Young, who married Leonard Kersley, Hawick draper. Walter (1906/7–2010) born in Hawick, he served in the K.O.S.B. during WWII and then became a banker. He moved to Lanark in 1970, reorganising that town’s banks, and becoming a councillor after retirement. He was also involved in developing New Lanark. William (b.c.1795) one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left in 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. He could be the stocking-maker William who was living on Teviot Crescent in 1841 along with wife Catherine and a large family. He could be the same William who was one of the men in the vanguard of the Hawick band at the Earls Haugh Baa in 1815, and whose recollections formed part of Robert Murray’s 1863 article on James Hogg. William (1819–75) farmer from Sprouston, who moved to Hawick to become a butcher. He was one of the first Trustees of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirie, from 1848. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was a flesher on Teviot Square. In 1851 he was already at 1 Buccleuch Street, listed as a master butcher, employing 2 men. 1 Buccleuch Street was at that time was 2 separate shops. He moved to 2 Howe gate in 1864. He married Agnes Story (whose sister was mother of Walter Easton of the ‘Jedburgh Gazette’), who died in 1883, aged 57. They had 3 sons, including William (who succeeded to the butcher’s business) and Robert. They also had 4 daughters, including Isabella Douglas (who was the first wife of J.J. Vernon) and Margaret T. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. William (1850–1916) son of William, he followed his father into the butcher’s business at 2 Howe gate. He married Elizabeth, eldest child of farmer Walter Henderson. Their children were Margaret Henderson (a teacher at St. Mary’s Infant School) and William (a hosiery traveller in London).

Nitschiel Sike (ni’shel-sik) n. stream on the north side of the Borthwick valley, running past the cottage at Outerside in a roughly eastern direction. Outerside Rig is the hill between this stream and the Hoscote Burn. About half-way between Outerside and the Borthwick it has been suggested that a possible bridge mound could be related to the Roman road suggested to pass up the Borthwick valley.

the Niton (thu-ni-in) n. Newton, a farm at the Heights, just north of Hawick. It may have belonged to ‘Robert Grundi de Neuton’ in the late 13th century and was later referred to as ‘Chamberlain Newton’. The original name came from it being granted to Walter de Berkeley, Chamberlain to William the Lion in the late 12th century. The lands were part of Hassendean Parish until that was suppressed in 1690. It was still listed as ‘Newton, or Chamberlain Newton’ in 1788 and 1811. There have been Scots at the farm for many generations (sometimes spelled ‘Niton’ and other variants; the name first occurs as ‘Cham-birlayne neatone’ in 1259, as ‘Newton’ in the late 13th century, and commonly as ‘Chamber-lain Newton’ until the 17th century).

Nitto Muir (ni-in-newr) n. former farmstead near Newton, precise location uncertain. The Hume family were living there in 1841. It was abandoned around the 1850s.

Harriers, Camera Club and other local societies (also written ‘Evitt’).

Nivison (ni-vee-sin) n. Rev. Alexander (1786–1861) 3rd son of Abraham, minister of Middlebie, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1811. He became for a time a teacher of oriental languages, and had the opportunity to become a Chaplain in Calcutta, but preferred to stay at home, and so switched positions with James Brown. Thus he was presented to Robertson Parish in mid-1825 and ordained there in 1826. He was recorded at the Manse on the 1841 census, when his brothers Richard and William (both also ministers) were staying with him. He demitted in 1844, when he decided to give up being a minister, and he died in Edinburgh. He married Christina Thomson (d.1849) of Montrose and their children were: Elizabeth Broun (1826–1911), who married Dr. James Ogilvie, missionary in Calcutta, although another account suggests she married the same Rev. James Brown; Alexander (1828–61), who died in Melbourne; Abraham (1830–97) of Edinburgh; David Thomson (1834–67), who died in Calcutta; Christina (1835–51); and Euphemia Duncan (1838–1925), married William Stuart Sutherland of Edinburgh. He wrote a description of the Parish for the ‘New Statistical Account’ in 1834. John (18th C.) resident at Chapelhill in 1743 when his son Thomas was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1743. His name appears to be written ‘Nievieson’ (although it is hard to make out). Bessie (b.1746) and John (b.1752) were probably also his children (also written ‘Nivison’).

nivver (ni-vur) adv. never – ‘he’ll nivver change’, ‘it’s nivver ower late’, ‘...made report this day that they nivrer trysted with the like emergence before them tabled ...’[PR1714], ‘If ye tak it tae hert then ye’ll nivver gang wrang’[WAP], ‘This is nae place for a Border man to gau aboot. nixin (niks-in) n., arch. a game in which gingerbread cakes are arranged on pieces of wood and the player pays to throw a stick, keeping any cakes that he knocks down (noted by J. Jamieson).

Nixon (nik-sin) n. Adam (16th C.) probably name of ‘Eddy of Larestonburne’, who is listed along with John in 1590. The and other Nixons were named in a complaint them by the tenant of Birdoswald about a raid made on his livestock in 1588. Agnes (18th C.) recorded in a disposition given in 1767 as being one of the cottars of Hawick Shiel who were responsible for making ‘bakes’ on the Common, in violation of the orders of the Hawick Town Council. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed as being ‘in the Brighous’ in 1516 when a number of Nixons and other men of Liddesdale received remission for their crimes. He may have been related to Henry in Larriston, William in Flicht and William in Steel. Alexander (16th C.) recorded as one of the tenants of Brighouse, along with 2 Williams, on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He could be the same man as Alexander ‘of Stelle’ who is recorded (right after William, younger of Brighouse) on a 1544 list of Scotsmen who gave their support to the English King. Alexander (16th C.) recorded at Larriston in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed right after Quentin ‘of Lawrellstane’, and was probably also related to George, Jeffrey, John and Hector, who were also listed in the same place. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Ekkie Nixsoun in Dyk’ in 1611, among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) mentioned in an English letter of 1542 as ‘Donel Nyxson, Scottes man afore sent to Edynbourgh’ from whom news came of events in Scotland. It is unclear how he was related to other Nixons. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘Dand Niksoun of Kewly’. He is listed along with many Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale who complained to the Privy Council about crimes committed by the Scotts and their allies. His lands were probably those of Killoley, near Dinlabyre, and he was likely related to Hob, who was recorded being from there in 1590. Andrew ‘Dandy’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Dande Nixon’ at Brighouse, right after Ringan in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to William, William, younger and George, who were also listed at Brighouse in 1544. Archibald (15th C.) recorded in the proceedings for the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, has remission for several crimes, including bringing in him and Robert (suggesting they were closely related) to take part in raids, of the Privy Council in 1581. He was a servant and dependant of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, and had been taken prisoner by Lance Armstrong of Whitaugh, because Elliot had refused to make him answerable to the Warden for various crimes. In 1581/2 he was ‘Clemme Niksoun, callit of the Hye Asches’ when accused of leading a band who stole 6 cows from a farm at Huntly; his son John was also listed, and he is said to have sold one cow to a merchant from Jedburgh called Milligan, who confessed, and they were declared rebels. It is unclear where ‘the Asches’ was. Perhaps the same ‘Clemye’ was recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding a raid in 1588. Clement ‘the Clash’ (16th/17th C.) servant of William Elliot of Larriston. In 1590 he was named along with Archibald ‘Cowfowle’, as well as Elliots, Shiels and others, of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall; his nickname is recorded there as ‘Cleshe’. He was further accused in 1590 among Elliots and others said to have stolen from the ‘Hewrde’ family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’; he is there ‘Clemye Nixon the Clashe’. Also in 1590 he was ‘Clemmy Nixon the Clashe’ on a list of Elliots, Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Alleweshe’. In 1595 he was among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid on ‘Haslegyll’; he is there recorded as ‘Clemett Nyxxson alias the Clashe’. John, ‘Gleed Larriston’ was also listed as a servant of the Laird of Larriston, and so they may have been related. In 1595 he was also complained about for two other raids, along with Archie ‘alias Cowfowle’, John of Larristonburn, Jenkin and others. There is a further record of a complaint by the English against ‘Clemmy the clashe’ in 1597. His nickname may have referred to being a gossip. Clement ‘Clem the Croon’ (16th C.) listed among Border chiefs by Monipennie in his compilation published about 1594 (but compiled earlier). His name is given as ‘Clemm Nikson, called the Crune’ and in 1580 as ‘Clemme of the Crune’. His son Quentin is recorded in the 1570s and 1580s. Edward (16th C.) listed along with George as tenant of ‘the Dyke’ in Liddesdale in 1541. Both he and George are also recorded on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others, who gave their support to the English Crown in 1544. Edward of Dinlabyre (17th C.) listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He is recorded as ‘Eduarde Nicksoun, Laird of Dunlybyir’, with his caution being John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with Harry and Airchie of the Steele. Fergus (16th C.) recorded at the Dykes in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His name is given as ‘Fargathe Nixon’ (and ‘Fergus’ seems the most likely forename). ‘Fargais Willie of Kirkleheade’ is named among men accused of rieving in 1592 (with no surname listed); given the rareness of the name, this could be his son. Probably the same ‘Fergus Nykson’ was listed along with ‘Hob’ and others in 1541, when accused of raiding Gilsland and killing Englishman Dandy Wigholm. Gavin (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was also cited for not appearing at another court in Peebles later in 1605. He was ‘in Burnefute’, which was probably the place in Eskdale. Gavin (17th C.) tenant in Graystanehaugh in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Geoffrey (16th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name was listed as ‘gofredi nykson’, and John was right before him. George (16th C.) recorded first on a list of Nixon tenants of Killoley on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. The others were John, Clement and Andrew, who may have been related. He could be the same man as ‘Georg Nixon of Larestanys’ named in a respite of 1515/6 along with Edward as tenant of ‘the Dyke’ in Liddesdale in 1541. He may be the same as the tenant of the lands of Killoley. Both he and Edward are also recorded in 1544, swearing allegiance to Henry VIII. George (16th C.) recorded at Brighouse in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to William, William, younger and Ringan, who were also listed at Brighouse in 1544. George ‘Geordie’ (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots who were complained about by the English Warden in 1590 regarding a raid in 1588. His son Henry was also listed. He could be the ‘Geordie Nixon of the Larestoune burne’ listed along with ‘Hob’ of Killoley, Hob’s brother Jenkin, John (servant to Martin Elliot), as well as Croizers and Shiel’s accused in 1590 of stealing from the tenants of ‘Lynubrigges’. given this list, it seems unlikely he is the same man as ‘Ill-drooned Geordie’, father of Hob and Jenkin. George ‘Ill-drooned Geordie’ (16th C.) recorded at Killoley in 1588 when there was a complaint by Englishmen about a raid made on his livestock. His son ‘Jenkin’ is also listed; and since Jenkin was brother of ‘Hob’, then he was also father of Robert of Killoley. He is probably descended from the George associated with Killoley in the 1540s. He is recorded in 1590 among a group of Elliots and others accused of taking livestock and goods from Over Warden in England. He is the ‘yll drowned Georde’ and ‘halfe drowned Geord’ recorded in 1595 along with Jenkin and other Nixons, Elliots and others when there were complaints made about raids into England. He may be the George who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Hector (16th C.) listed as ‘Ec-tor’ of ‘Lawrellstane’ (probably Larriston) in 1544 when his son John swore allegiance to the English King. Several other men were also listed at Larriston, and so probably related, including George, Quentin and Jeffrey. Henry (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Henry Nicsoun in Larlishop’ in a document of 1500 listing men who gave pledges to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. This may have been Lairhope near Teviothead. Golfrid and Edward are also listed there, so they may be his brothers or sons. Perhaps the same Henry, son of John, is also recorded among a large list of men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Henry ‘Crackspear’ (15th/16th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. There he is listed as ‘henrici nykson craksper’. He is also listed among a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1500; he is recorded as ‘Henry Nicsoun, Crakspere’, separate from Henry ‘in Larlishop’. He may be the same ‘Henry Niscone’ and ‘Nixsone’ listed in 1510 in the Register of the Privy Seal among men associated with Robert Elliot of Redheugh, required to come before the King to promise to keep order, and then obtaining a respite for their crimes. William ‘Nixson’ is also listed there. Henry (15th/16th C.) named in a respite of 1515/6 along with Robert Elliot of Redheugh, William Elliot of Larriston, James Forester in Greenhaugh, Adam Crozier and others. He is also recorded as ‘in Larestanys’ in 1516 when he had a respite from the Privy Council for all of his crimes; also listed were several other men, including William ‘in Flycht’ and William ‘in Stele’, another Henry and Alexander ‘in the Brighous’. The respite applied to all other Nixons, except Robert and William, ‘brether sister sound to Johne Elwald’. It is likely that most of these men were closely related. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Henrys. Henry (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, along with William, as tenant of ‘Kylsfurd’ (i.e. Kilford). This William could be ‘Grey Will of the Kyll Fuiird’ who is recorded in 1563, suggesting that he might be William’s father. Another Henry (or the same one) is listed as tenant of Stripshelden, along with David. Henry ‘Harry’ of Howden (16th C.) recorded in the 1581 Register of the Privy Seal. His name appears with several Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale who were accusing the Scotts of various crimes. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Henrys. He is probably related to the earlier William of Howden. Henry (16th C.) recorded in 1584 as ‘Herrie Nixson’ who was ‘of the Steill’, along with Archie. The pair signed an assurance with the English Wardens, along with Edward of Dinalabyre, to whom they were presumably related. Henry ‘George’s Harry’ (16th C.) listed as one of three Nixons among the Border chiefs compiled by Monipennie sometime before 1594. He is recorded as ‘Georgis Harie Nikson’. Probably the same ‘Henrie Nickson sonne to Geordy’ was recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Wardens in 1595 regarding a raid in 1588; he is there ‘Henrie Nickson sonne to Geordy’. He may be the Henry who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. Henry (16th C.) recorded in 1597 when there was a complaint against him, along with Robert Elliot of Thorlshope, Hob Armstrong and Alexander Armstrong, for a raid on ‘Ellinghamerigge’ in England. He was referred to as being ‘of Killforde’, but Scott of Buccleuch argued ‘that there is not such a person’. He was listed in 1595 among Nixons, Elliots and others obeyed from William Robson of ‘Allerwesh’. Probably the same ‘Jenken Nyckson son to George’ was listed in 1595 among Nixsons, Elliots and others complained about for raids into England. In one raid he is listed along with George ‘yll drowned Georde’, who may have been related and in another he and John are both ‘of Lareston’. John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Perhaps the same John’s son Henry was also listed. John (16th C.) son of Matthew, ‘callid ‘no good clarke’’. He was listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) tenant of ‘Hesseldale’ according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Perhaps the same John was joint tenant of Heuchhousehill in 1541. John (16th C.) recorded at Killoley in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is listed as ‘John Nyxson of Kellet’, and was probably related to William, who is also recorded at the same place. He is probably the John recorded at Killoley in a rental roll of 1541. John (16th C.) recorded at Flicht in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to Matthew and ‘Perswill’, who were also there in 1544. John (16th C.) resident at ‘Stanesheldes’ (i.e. Staneshiel) recorded in 1544 on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others, who gave assurances to the English King. He was recorded as ‘Jenkyne Nixson of Stanesheld’ (i.e. Staneshiel) and was probably related to John, who was also listed in the same place. He may be the English fugitive Jenkin recorded being reset by ‘Reid’ Simon Armstrong. Jenkin (16th C.) son of George of Killoley and brother of Robert. He is mentioned in a complaint in 1590 about a raid into England made by Nixons and Elliots in 1588. Probably the same ‘Ginkyne’ was accused in 1590 (along with Elliots and Shiels) of stealing from Roland Walker. In 1590 he was listed along with his brother ‘Hob’ of Killoley along with other Nixons, Croziers and Shiels, accused of stealing from the Wilkinson of ‘Lynbriggles’. He is recorded being ‘of Kelleley’ and was presumably related to the earlier Nixons from there. The other Nixons named in 1590 were his brother Hob and Geordie of Larriston Burn. He is probably the Jenkin recorded in 1590 on a list of Elliots, Croziers, Nixons and others accused of raiding from William Robson of ‘Allerwesh’. Probably the same ‘Jenken Nyckson son to George’ was listed in 1595 among Nixsons, Elliots and others.

to Henry VIII. He was listed as being ‘of Coule- gayte’, which could have been Claygate. John (16th C.) listed in a 1544 bond of support for the English King, signed by Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others. His name is given as ‘John Nixon of Lawrellstanes, Ector sone’, and hence presumably Hector was his father. John (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given as ‘Johne Niksoun, callit Halyden’, although the meaning of the nickname is unclear. He must have been a supporter of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh John (16th C.) son of Clem ‘callit of the Hye Asches’. In 1581/2 the pair were among men accused of stealing cattle from a farm at Huntly; he was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. He is recorded as ‘laird of the High eshes’ and also ‘of the Higheshies’ in 1595, listed along with his brother (who is unnamed) among men of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England. He is probably the John ‘of Eshes’ who was demanded by the English Commissioners as one of the hostages to be taken as a pledge for other Liddesdale men in 1597. He was further ‘of the Eshes’ in 1597 among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges. John (16th C.) recorded being of Kilford in 1590 when there was a complaint that he and some Elliots had stolen ‘playne daye light, thir hirdes’ and 24 head of cattle from people on the English side in 1588. He may be the John ‘of the Esches’ in 1597 among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstais at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given as ‘Johne Niksoun, callit Halyden’, although the meaning of the nickname is unclear. He must have been a supporter of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh John (16th C.) son of Clem ‘callit of the Hye Asches’. In 1581/2 the pair were among men accused of stealing cattle from a farm at Huntly; he was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. He is recorded as ‘laird of the High eshes’ and also ‘of the Higheshies’ in 1595, listed along with his brother (who is unnamed) among men of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England. He is probably the John ‘of Eshes’ who was demanded by the English Commissioners as one of the hostages to be taken as a pledge for other Liddesdale men in 1597. He was further ‘of the Eshes’ in 1597 among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges. John (16th C.) recorded being of Kilford in 1590 when there was a complaint that he and some Elliots had stolen ‘playne daye light, thir hirdes’ and 24 head of cattle from people on the English side in 1588. He may be the John recorded in 1590 when there was a complaint that he and some Elliots had stolen ‘playne dayelit, thir hirdes’ and 24 head of cattle from people on the English side in 1588. He may be the John accused of 2 further raids in 1595, one with ‘yll drowned Georde’ and another with Jenkin of Larriston. His nickname presumably referred to a squint. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Riccarton. In 1611 John Moscrop, Burgess of Jedburgh, acted as cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court. John (16th/17th C.) tenant at Burnemouth. In 1624 Adie and Will Usher were convicted of stealing his sheep. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as tenant in Lawshill in 1623. Rowie Foster stole sheep from ‘Callshiel’s’ owned by him and Gavin Elliot ‘callit of ye Schawis’. John (17th C.) tenant at Larriston Rig in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Bailie John (c.1757–1812) Bailie and manufacturer. He came to Hawick in 1774, being an apprentice with William Irvine, linen draper. He was one of the first large-scale hosiery employers, taking over from John Hardie around 1780. The original partnership was with William Irvine, George Noble and Thomas Sanson, but Sanson left the same year, and a few years later he was the sole partner. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. In 1786 it is recorded that he was running 8 frames, and started manufacturing ribbed stockings, and in 1795 he already had 12 frames. The firm spun the yarn as well as knitting the hosiery. His premises were on the High Street, where the Victoria Hotel was later built; he lived on the top flat, with the spinning jennies and warehouse below. Around 1793, along with Bailie Simpson, he presented the bible that used to sit at the end of the Magistrates’ row in St. Mary’s Kirk (and moved to the Old Parish). He is probably the merchant of that name who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was recorded as a manufacturer in Hawick on the 1790–91 and 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He paid the dog tax in 1797. Around 1799 he was one of the locals contributing money for the war with France. He was involved in the years 1799–1803 with a court case against merchant Walter Lunn, who was declared bankrupt. He started the early construction phase of what became Lynnwood Mills around 1803 or 1804, and there carding and spinning were carried out. In 1811 he was an Ensign in the 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia. He married Mary, daughter of William
Nixon

Grieve tenant of Southfield, in Hawick in 1782. Their children included: John (b.1783); Mary (1784–88); William (1785–1871), who succeeded to the hosiery firm; Joseph (1790–1842); and an unnamed daughter. He is probably the John whose eldest daughter Agnes married Robert Jardine in Hawick in 1811. John (18th/19th C.) probably eldest son of manufacturer John. He was listed in London when he subscribed for 2 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Joseph (1790–1842) younger son of manufacturer John. He was a partner with his brother William. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1841 he was living on Walter’s Wynd with John (probably his son) and a female servant. When he died his brother was left as sole partner in the family firm. Rev. J.W. (19th/20th C.) Rector of Wetheral, Carlisle, who was appointed to help out with St. Cuthbert’s in Hawick during the vacancy in 1910–11. Martin (16th C.) possessor of ‘Hieflycht’ (i.e. High Flicht) in 1541. He was probably related to other local Nixons. Matthew ‘Nae Guid Clerk’ (16th C.) mentioned in 1541 when his son John was listed among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. His name is given as ‘Matho, called ‘no good clarke’’, but it is unclear exactly what this meant (however, compare ‘Nae Guid Priest’, which was a nickname for an earlier Oliver). He may be the same as one of the other Matthews. Matthew (16th C.) tenant of Hightrees Cleuch according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He may have been related to John, who leased the neighbouring lands of ‘Heseldale’. He is probably the ‘Mathewe Nixson of Hetherclewe’ listed in 1544, among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Matthew (16th C.) recorded at Flicht in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to John and ‘Perswill’ who were also there in 1544. ‘Pate Nixson Mathewe son’, also listed in 1544 may have been his son, as well as William, Pate’s brother. Mrs. ?? (19th C.) local lady who left a bequest called ‘Mrs. Nixon’s Bounty Fund’, to be distributed to poor women in Hawick and Wilton. It was administered by the ministers of Hawick and St. George’s and the Provost of Hawick, and still had a value of £2300 in 1939. She was presumably wife of one of the local manufacturers. Ninian ‘Riingan’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Renyon Nyxson of Brighows’ in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to William, William, younger, George and Dandy, who were also listed at Brighouse in 1544. Probably the same Ninian witnessed a bond in 1548 when some Elliots had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Pate Nixson Mathewe son’ and could have been son of Matthew of Hightrescleuch. His brother William is also listed in 1544. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th C.) son of Quentin, he is recorded at Larriston in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His name was given as ‘Patte Nixson of the same, Qwinten sone’. He was probably related to George, Alexander, Jeffrey, John and Hector, who were also listed in the same place. Patrick (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1702. Percival (16th C.) recorded in 1544 as ‘Perswill Nixon, Fleght’ on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others who gave their support to the English Crown. He was probably related to John and Matthew, who were also listed at Flight in 1544. Quentin (16th C.) recorded at Larriston in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His name was given as ‘Qwinten Nixson of Lawrellstone’. He was probably related to George, Alexander, Jeffrey, John and Hector, who were also listed in the same place. His son Pat is also listed. Quentin (16th C.) son of ‘Clemmie the Crwne’ or ‘Cleme the Crune’. In 1578 he was held by George Buchanan of the Ilk, on a pledge of good behaviour to the King. In 1580 he was held in ward by the Earl of Lennox in Dumbarton Castle and later that year stated to be warded in Edinburgh Castle. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for theft, along with several Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Christie son of Quentin was recorded in 1585 in a long list of men of Dumfriesshire receiving remission for past crimes. Robert (15th C.) recorded in the proceedings for the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, has remission for several crimes, including bringing in him and Archibald (suggesting they were closely related) to take part in raids. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed along with William as ‘brother, sister sons to John Elwald’ in 1516. They are given as exceptions to the Nixons who had remission for their crimes, suggesting that what ever they were accused of was more serious. It is unclear which John Elliot was their uncle. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Fergus and others accused of raiding Gilsland and killing Englishman Dandy Wigholm. It is unclear where he came from. Robert ‘Hob’ of Killoley (16th C.) brother of Jenkin and probably son of George, ‘Ill-drooned Geordie’. He was named in 1590 among several Nixons, Croziers, Shielis and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinson’s of ‘Lynbriggs’. He is recorded being ‘of Kelleley’ and was presumably related to the earlier Nixons from there. The other Nixons named in 1590 were his brother Jenkin and Geordie of Larriston Burn (who was therefore presumably distinct from his father). Robert ‘Scabbit Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when he was accused of stealing sheep from ‘Rosie’ and her tenants of Mangerton. He was acquitted of the first cited theft, but found guilty of the second and ordered to be hanged. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Brighouse cleuchhead in 1622 when he promised to appear before the Justice Court to answer charges against him. Thomas (16th C.) tenant of ‘Stellis’ in Liddesdale in 1541, along with Bartholomew and Jeffrey, who were presumably related. He is also listed in 1544, along with his brother Jeffrey, plus ‘Barte’ and ‘Arche’, among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Thomas (16th C.) recorded at the Dyke in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. ‘Fargate Nixson’ was also listed there, and so presumably a close relative. Walter (17th/18th C.) elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1717 he was appointed to collect monies from ‘Hawickshiels, the two Southfields, Allan Haugh milne, Newbigging, and Raesknowes’, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He was still an elder the following year. In 1725 he witnessed baptisms for John Scott in Allanhaugh Mill and blacksmith James Gledstains. William (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Arton Fell) in Liddesdale, according to a c.1376 rental roll. The list includes ‘Locus Willelmi Nycson’, valued at 21 shillings. William (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Flycht’ in 1516 when he received remission for his crimes from the Privy Council, along with several other Nixons and others. It seems likely he was related to Henry in Larriston, William in the Steel and Alexander in the Brighouse. William (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘in the Stele’ in 1516 among Nixons and other Liddesdale men who received remission for their crimes from the Privy Council. William (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert as ‘brother, sister souns to Johne Elwald’ in 1516 when several Nixons, except for them, were given respite for their crimes. It is unclear which John Elliot was their uncle. William (16th C.) name of 2 separate men who, along with Alexander, were tenants of Brighouse in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He is also ‘William Nixon of Brighows’ in 1544 when he was on a list of Scotsmen who gave their support to the English Crown; William, younger (presumably his son) was also listed, as well as George, Ringan and Dandy. William (16th C.) recorded at Howden in Liddesdale in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. William (16th C.) listed at Killoley in 1544, on a list of Scotsmen swearing allegiance to Henry VIII. He is recorded as ‘William Nixon of Kellele’. He was probably related to John, listed at the same place in 1544 and Hob recorded there in 1590. William (16th C.) son of William of Brighouse. He was recorded as ‘William Nixon younger of Brighows’ in 1544 along a list of Nixons, Croziers, Olivers and others who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His father William was also listed there. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Wille Nixon Barte son’ and could have been son of Bartholomew of the Steele. William (16th C.) listed in 1544 on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others who swore allegiance to the English Crown. He was listed as brother of ‘Pate’, who was son of Mathewe, possibly of Hightreescleuch. William ‘Clement’s Will’ (16th C.) presumably son of Clement, he was known as a thief. In 1557 a bond was signed between Thomas Turnbull of Hartshaugh, George Rutherford of Grange, Adam Turnbull of Woollee and Adam Turnbull of Billerwell to capture him and present him at the ‘airn yetts’ of Ferniehirst. There is another bond of 1557 (where he is ‘Clemattis Will’) among several Armstrongs to present him at Ferniehirst. And a third bond by Hector Armstrong and others (including Archibald of the Steel) to present him to John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1556 on the back of which is a bond by Hector Lorraine of Harwood to present ‘Will Nyksone, called Gymmerhom’, who could be the same man. William ‘Grey Will’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Grey Will of the Kyll Fuird’. In 1563 Gavin Elliot of Ramsiegill and others from Liddesdale entered into a bond with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring him in. He could be the William who was listed after Henry as being tenant of Kilford in 1541. Either he or a different William is also listed as tenant of Nixon’s

Howden. He could be the same ‘Gray Wil’ listed among Border chiefs (along with Johnne of the Park) in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation. William (16th C.) listed as ‘alias Kneates, of Highessches’ in 1597 among 5 Scotsmen delivered to the English Deputy Warden by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch at Copshawholm. It is unclear where ‘Highessches’ might have been. William (17th C.) farmer at Branxholme Town in 1691, when there were 5 tenants recorded there. He was recorded as tenant in Castlehill in 1692. He could be the William, married to Janet Scott, whose son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1678, and along with an unnamed son in 1673. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Lymiecleuch, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) clerk with manufacturer John; however, it is unclear if he was related. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia. William (1785–1871) hosiery manufacturer, son of John and Mary Grieve. Born in Hawick, he moved to Nottingham, from where he was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1806, after sending a new silk Cornet’s Sash (it is possible that up until then the Cornets simply wore their best clothes, with no formal uniform). Returning to Hawick he worked in Nixon’s and was himself elected as Cornet in 1813. He used to ride a white horse known popularly as ‘Nixon’s mare’. He also acted as paymaster for the prisoners of war who were in Hawick 1812–14. The main manufacturing premises were at 52 High Street (marked on Wood’s 1824 map), before Lynnwood Mill was built. The firm was still listed as ‘John Nixon & Sons’ in Pigot’s 1837 directory, even although his father had died in 1812; it manufactured woollen as well as hosiery. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He laid the foundation stone for the Free Church, was one of its first Trustees as well as serving as a deacon. He later built Lynnwood House (where he is recorded in 1841) and was generally active in public life. In 1851 he is recorded as master wool-spinner, employing 115 people. In the 1860s he served as Vice-President of the local division of the Evangelical Alliance. He was also a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Jane, daughter of John Elliot of Binks in 1814, and she died in 1877; the couple had no children. The marriage certificate of 1849 shows his wife’s name to be Jane Elliot Graham (so it is unclear if this was a 2nd wife). He was in partnership for a while with Joseph, his brother. Later he was the sole proprietor of the firm of Nixon’s and restricted himself to the preparation of yarn, with hosiery passing to the form of Nixon & McKie. A portrait of him exists. He donated 2 Adam Brown portraits to the Museum. He was involved in the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ and later with the development of a carrier on a broad frame, which led to a lowering of prices and wages. Hence, through the 1820s he was unpopular among the local stocking-makers, his effigy being carried through the town at one point, with an accompanying song – ‘O, but ye’re a loon, Willie! O, but ye’re a loon! Ye brought the Shirra in a chaise To pull our wages doon’[T] (formerly written ‘Nexsone’, ‘Nickson’, ‘Nickson’, ‘Nixson’, ‘Niksoun’, ‘Nixson’, ‘Nixson’, ‘Nixson’, ‘Nixson’, ‘Nixson’, ‘Nyckson’, ‘Nyksone’, ‘Nyksone’, ‘Nyksoun’, ‘Nyksoun’, ‘Nyksoun’, etc.).

Nixon’s (nik-sinz) n. Messrs. John Nixon & Sons, stocking-makers, with their main mill at Lynwood, built in the early 1800s. The weir built to divert water into the mill lade at Lynwood was usually referred to as ‘Nixon’s Cauld’. John Nixon started as a hosiery manufacturer in 1780, spinning as well as knitting. The firm introduced more advanced hosiery machinery to Hawick in 1805. John Nixon died in 1812 and the firm was then run by his sons William and Joseph. Improvements to production in the early 1820s led to a lowering of wages for workers, which was an important part of the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ strike of 1822/3. William and Joseph Nixon were the partners in 1829, when they were given a grant from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures for spinning machinery. In 1837 the firm was listed on the High Street, still as ‘John Nixon & Sons’; this was probably where the Victoria Hotel was later located. In 1842 Joseph Nixon died and his brother William was left as sole partner. He then went into partnership with William McKie, and the company was called Nixon & McKie; it was listed as such on Walter’s Wynd in Slater’s 1852 directory. The Lynnwood factory was sold to Thomas Laidlaw in 1864. They also built the factory on Walter’s Wynd that was bought by Pringle’s in 1869 and renamed Rodono.

Nixon’s Mare (nik-sinz-mär) n. white mare called Molly, which was owned by William Nixon, manufacturer, who was Cornet in 1813. The horse was loaned to a few subsequent Cornets, and is seen in a portrait by Adam Brown.

nixt (nikst) adj., adv. next – ‘The said day the Baylyees and Counsell appoynted the Com- mone to ryd upon Fryday nixt, the first day of June’ [BR1705], ‘...thereof they appointed thair meeting to be on Thursday nixt, the 3 day of May’ [PR1711], ‘...should be put out of ye toun and not to reside therein till Whitsunday nixt’ [PR1715] (note the pronunciation, even when spelled ‘next’; a colloquial difference with standard English is that, e.g. if this is Saturday, then ‘nixt Mundi’ is 9 days away, while ‘this Mundi’ is in 2 days; cf. the less common neext and older neist).

no (no) adv. not – ‘he’s no is smert is hei thinks hei is’, ‘it’s no fair’, ‘no a bit o’d’, ‘no bad, considerin’, ‘they’ll no be lang in comin’, ‘Because ye think that yer a gentleman and I think that yer no’ [RM], ‘Aw’m no’ in the tid for sermons …’ [RM], ‘It’s no’ in steeds, it’s no’ in speeds. It’s something in the heart abiding’ [RH], ‘...sic a bleezer as it was, wui no a whuff o wund’ [ECS], ‘A axt um if this was the Haakick Motor, an whther that it was gaun back ti Haack that nicht or no’ [ECS], ‘A job is valued for the time it takes, now. No’ the work that’s put intill’t’ [DH], ‘...Waxcloth, no carpet, on the flair, Doon oor close and up oor stair’ [IWL].

no bad (nö-bawd) adj. quite good, excellent – ‘yon taiblet’s no bad, issen eet?’, ‘...which is no bad, but a long way tae catch up on Andra Ballantyne’ [CT].

Noble (nö-bul) n. Alexander (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermilodon’ (i.e. somewhere around Anrton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. ‘Locus Ellie Nobill’ is listed there with a value of 6 shillings. Andrew (b.c.1810) hostler, recorded at about 21 High Street in 1841. By 1851 he was widowed and a frame-worker, living on Walter’s Wynd and in 1861 he was a railway labourer at 77 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Betty, Mary, John, Helen and Joan. Arthur (1864–95) son of Robert Noble, who gave his name to Arthur Street. George (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be the George, son of William and Margaret Pringle, born in Hawick in 1740. He married Jane Scott and their children included William (b.1771), Agnes (b.1775) and Walter (b.1777). James (17th C.) listed at Whithope among ‘The poor in Hawick Parish’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the James, married to Janet Murray, whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish included Walter (b.1682) and probably Helen (b.1684). James (17th C.) recorded as resident at Borthwickshiels in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is listed under the farms of the Earl of Tarras in Hassendean Parish. Rev. James (1836–1883) born in Perthshire, son of Rev. James and Margaret Crow. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed to preach by Perth Presbytery in 1859 and became assistant at St. Stephen’s in Edinburgh in 1861. However, later that year he was translated to be minister of Castleton Parish. He served as Chaplain to the Liddesdale Curling Club. In 1879 he attended the celebration for his colleague Rev. John Black of the Associate Kirk in Newcastle. He died unmarried. James (1851/2–81) son of Andrew, contractor in Coldsteam. He drowned in Hawick, and is buried in the family plot in Lenmel. John (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot. In 1590 he was named along with ‘Gib Ellott son to Robin’ and John Shiel (another servant of Robert), as well as Elliots and Croziers, when they were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall. He was father listed in 1590, along with Nixons, Croziers and Shiels, accused of stealing from the tenants of ‘Lynbrigges’; he is there ‘Martin Elliott’s man’, but it seems that the same person is meant. He may be the John who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. John (17th C.) resident at Horsleyhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who married Isobell Scott in Wilton Parish in 1702 and whose children included John (b.1702), born in Wilton and probably Janet (b.1703), William (b.1707), Janet (again, b.1710), Mary (b.1712) and John (b.1717), baptised in Robertson Parish. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Woodburn in 1717 when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish. Robert ‘Hobbie’ (16th C.) Borderer who is mentioned in the ballad ‘Jock o’ the Side’, as well as in the eponymous ballad. The character in the ballads is perhaps based on ‘Hobbe Noble’, who was living ‘h’rd by the howse of Beawcastell’ according to a 1583 letter of Thomas Musgrave. He could be the Robert Noble who died on his farm at Parkhead in 1620 (and hence was not hanged at Carlisle). Robert (17th C.) tailor in Effledge. In 1684 he was list... traveller for Dicksons & Laings. He became a junior partner in Richardson, Noble & Co. (established 1871), which built Glebe Mills in 1877. He founded Robert Noble & Co. in 1880 after Robert Richardson died. He was active in public life through being a J.P., President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce and being associated with the School Board, the Cottage Hospital, the Gas Company, the Teviotdale Dairy and the Constitutional Club. He bought Borthwickbrae from William Elliott Lockhart about 1884. About 1895 he gave land around Borthwick Waas Cemetery for a shrubbery, and kept it up at his expense (along with the Grieve sisters). He married Isabella Armstrong in 1860, and their children included Arthur. The Trinity area adjacent to Glebe Mills was developed largely through his efforts, and Noble Place is named after him. He also left money for the Hawick Technical College.

Walter (17th C.) among the men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was tenant in Effledge. However, it is possible this was confusion with Robert, tailor in Effledge. Walter (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere. William (18th C.) gardener at Burnhead in 1793, when he was working for William Scott. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for John in 1793. His annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere. William (18th C.) gardener at Burnhead in 1793, when he was working for William Scott. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for John in 1793.

Noble Place (nō-bal-plis) n. street in the Trinity area near the Glebe Mills, built around 1885 and named after Robert Noble. It was essentially built to provide convenient accommodation for workers at Glebe Mills.

Noble’s (nō-bal) n. knitwear firm of Robert Noble & Co., founded in 1872 and at Glebe Mills from 1877. The company dwindled after WWII, but survived until 1962, when it merged with other companies (Walter Thorburn of Peebles and George Roberts of Selkirk), with Glebe Mills being taken over by Pringle’s. However, even the new merged company only lasted a few years. Papers relating to the firm exist, covering the period 1879–1959.

Nolt-lawis (nolt-lair) n. former lands in Liddesdale, adjacent to Yethouse. It is written as ‘Noltlares’ in 1632, among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, and including Hightrees, Burnmouth, Dawstonburn and Prickinghaugh. It is probably the ‘Noltlawis’ recorded in 1611 when Hob, son to Jamie Henderson there, was listed for non-appearance in court at Jedburgh. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties, it was ‘Nouthlaires’ and combined with Yethouse to cover 70 acres.

Nolt-lair (nōl-lār) n. lands that were part of Lilliesleaf Common. Along with Stotfield, it was described in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls that it was feued by John Scott in Bewlie Mains.

nominat (no-mi-na', -ni') v., arch. to nominate, name – ‘...and nominat James Scott, called of Westport, to be Corrornett for that yeare’ [BR1705], pp. nominated, named – ‘...the elders after nominated were ordered to collect ye money for propagating Christian knowledge in ye High-lands and Northern Islands’ [PR1717], ‘And recommend it to those whom they shall nominat for that effect, to take advice in the first place of the Honourable Laird of Cavers’ [PR1724] (also spelled ‘nominate’).

Nook Haugh (nook-hawch) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish. It was listed in the 1861 census and was probably the same as Haughheid.

noomer (noo-nur) n., v., arch. number (also nummer).

noost (noost) n., arch. the action of a horse’s teeth in grinding its food, v. to chew food, particularly said of a horse (noted by J. Jamieson).

noozle (noo-zul) v., arch. to press, squeeze (noted by J. Jamieson; also nuizle).

Norbank see Northbank

Norham Castle (no-rum-kaw-sul) n. castle just over the Tweed in Northumberland, near the village of Norham. It began as a timber construction in 1121 by Bishop Flambard, and was developed as a stone keep in the late 12th century. However, it was involved in many national incidents, and was a garrison of the March War, although it was too strong to be affected by Border raids. The smaller ‘Ramgan Roll’ was signed there in 1291 and the Scots suffered a defeat nearby in 1348. It was ruined soon after the Reformation – ‘...And at Norham Castle he cried ‘I stand A Neville at last in Northumberland!’’ [WHO].

norie (no-ric) n., arch. a whim, fancy – ‘That might be deemed nae norie’ [HSR] (also written ‘norrie’).

Norland see Northumberland

nor (nor) conj., arch. nor (used in various forms where modern English would have ‘or’ or other words) – ‘I, myn aieris nor assignais, nor nane vthir in myn nor thair namis, sal nor may in any time ask, raise nor clame ony mair of the said nyne hundreth merkis ...’ [SB1470], than (usually after comparisons) – ‘...and gif it be mair nor £20, and within £40, thirteen shillings and four pennies ...’ [BR1640], ‘...that no personne sail bruk the office of baliliarie longer nor the space of twa years together ...’ [BR1648], ‘aw daursay John yer congregation’s better t’ye nor a hantel aw could name ...’ [WNK], ‘...howe mukle bet-tir is thy loeche nor wyne!’ [HSR], ‘Thou art fairer nor the childer o’ men ...’ [HSR], ‘Nae mair nor newspapers!’ [DH].

norlan (nor-lin) adj., arch. northland, originat-ing in the North – ‘But the norlan’ wind comes laden Wi’ bitin’ frost an’ snow! Oh weary, weary Winter, I wish ye were awa!’ [JT], ‘An’ that’s as true as I’m a Scot, A redshank, Norland haggis eater’ [JoHa], ‘Oh cease they mane, thou norlan wind, And o’ thy wailin’ let me be’ [TDa].

Norman (nor-min) n. James (20th C.) owner of the Station Hotel 1933–51. He sold Langbault to the Henderson brothers. His daughter Jean married James Aitkin Henderson, who became Provost.

Normand (nor-mund) n. John (13th/14th C.) first man listed on the inquisition of 1303/4 into the inheritance of William Charteris’ half barony
North Bank Street (or `Wawng-Stree') n., arch. Northbank – ‘A wild fanciful popular tale of enchantment, termed ‘The Black Bull of Noroway’’ [JL].

Northbank (nor-, north-bawngk) n. former farmstead and ruined 16th century peel tower in Southdean Parish. It is located between Steele Knowe and White Hill, to the east of the hamlets of Chambers and Southdean. The tower is about 5 m by 4 m and is ruined down to a single storey. Adjacent to the tower is an enclosure 23 m square, and there are signs of 2 other turf-walled buildings to the south-west. The earlier name for the farm may have been ‘the Banks’. There are modern sheep-shelters there. The surrounding area has old rig lines, covering at least 22 hectares, enclosed by boundary banks and ditches. The more recent farmstead is about 500 m west of the ruined peel tower. It was valued at 22 shillings in 1538 and 1539. ‘Belle’, Thomas and ‘Bennete’ Laidlaw were tenants there in 1541, paying 22s yearly. The tenant of the farm there in 1669 was ‘Lancelott Laidlie’. Robert Laidlaw and George Oliver, each with one hearth, are recorded there in 1694, as well as ‘Culbert whilands’ (it is already ‘Northbank’ in 1538, and is ‘Norbank’ in 1669 and ‘Norbanck’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Norbanck’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but it is not marked on Roy’s or Stobie’s 18th century maps).

North Berryfell (north-be-ree-fel) n. farmstead on the east side of the Slitrig and more than a kilometre from Berryfell farm (which is sometimes called ‘South Berryfell’ to distinguish it). William Oliver was there in 1841. James Brunton was farmer in the 1860s, A. Jackson in 1868 and then Drydens until at least the early 1900s. The farmer there in 1872, Mr. Dryden, uncovered an ancient cairn, where pieces of pottery were found, as well as the top stone of a quern nearby. The farmhouse is now a ruin.

North Bridge Street (north-brij-stree’) n. road leading to North Bridge, connecting the High Street (or Oliver Place) with Dovemount Place. Before the road was developed the general area had been in use as nurseries by Dickson’s. The name appeared around 1832, with the first house built in 1845. The southern end is just the opposite side of the street from Oliver Place.
Northcote Street

Newbigging and flows roughly south-west. It is also sometimes known as Newbiggin Burn.

Northcote Street (north-ko'-stree') n. street between Doecote Street and Laidlaw Terrace, built around 1884 and named after Sir Stafford Henry Northcote (1818–87), who was Chancellor of the Exchequer and Foreign Secretary (the fact that it is north of Doecote Street can’t be a coincidence though!). The former joinery sheds of Archie Aimers on the south side were replaced in the 1980s by a small grassy area for the use of parents and small children.

Northcroft (north-kroft) n. former name for a farm lying between Stirches House and the Heap Hills. It was once part of the Langlands estate, but sold off around 1780. In 1788 it was valued at £20 and owned by Mrs. Shortreed, and she was still listed as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. James Black was farmer there in 1841 and the owner by about 1874 was John James Scott Chisholme. It was sometimes referred to as ‘Nethercroft’ (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Northcroft (north-kroft) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, above Commonside on Blaen’s 1654 map. It may be the place of that name referred to in a 1581 complaint when Elliots there were molested by Scotts and others. It was part of the lands associated with Commonside that were already occupied by Gilbert Elliot (brother of Robert of Redheugh) in 1591 when leased to him by Sir Walter Scott of Bransholm. It was leased to Gilbert Elliot (now of Kirkton) again in 1603, when it was described as a 20-shilling land (it is ‘Nocroft’ in 1603).

North Croft Park (north-kroft-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. It is listed in 1779 when included among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot. They are still listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, along with ‘Quarter of Whitefield House’, valued at £52 2s 9d.

the North Crofts (thu-north-krofts) n. former name for an area of Denholm, corresponding to roughly the part later developed as Riverside Drive. It is said that in about 1860 Mr. Laidlaw was digging there when he came upon several stone cists containing human skeletons (also sometimes ‘North Croft’).

North Greenholm (north-green-hom) n. former farmstead to the north of the main farm of Greenholm in Liddesdale. It is marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map, just east of Leaugh Cottage.

North Hermitage Street (north-her-mi'-ej-stree’) n. part of the main B6357 through Newcastleton, lying to the north of Douglas Square. The British Legion Hall is at No. 3.

Northhouse (north-hoos) n. Northhouse, farm off the A7 between Newmill and Teviothead, near where the main road crosses the Teviot. The nearby side road goes up the Northhouse Burn to Old Northhouse (which is also referred to as just Northhouse). This was once part of the lands of Ringwoodfield. It was formerly home of a local branch of the Scotts and became part of the Buccleuch estates. John Scott was tenant there in 1498 and had 20 cows stolen by John Dalgleish and others in about 1510. In 1524, when Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme was regranted the office of Bailie of the lands of Melrose Abbey, he was given this farm and that of Thirlestane for his fee. In 1540 the King’s shepherd William Henderson is recorded being paid for oats there. Archibald Elliot of Falnash was recorded being there in 1547. In 1553/4 the lands were still held in fee (along with Thirlestane) for the office of bailiery; they were together valued at £20 Scots at that time. William Scott of Bowden rented lands there from Melrose Abbey in about 1557 for £5. The lands are listed among those inherited by Sir Walter Scott in 1574. Scott of Satchells lists Walter of Northhouse as the first of the 24 ‘pensioners of Buccleuch’, and says he was the first Scott of Northhouse. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1607. ‘Will’ Scott of Northhouse was declared a rebel in 1608 after failing to answer to charges that he had raided Stobs, stealing the wirts and charters for ransom. Another tenant, Archibald Scott is recorded in 1619. It was still listed as part of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. 5 people were listed there in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with 7 hearths being recorded. Archibald Gledstains was tenant there in 1696 and 1697. It was included in the survey of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it covered 1678 acres and was bounded by the River Teviot, Braidhaugh, Doecleuch, Skelfhill, Phaup and Southdeanrig. Thomas Elliot was renting the farm in the period 1745–48. Walter Irvine lived there around the 1760s. In at least the period 1791–97 the tenant was Thomas Scott. John Fenwick farmed there in the 1860s. In the early 20th century there were Amoses there. There was once a suggestion to divert the Hawick-Carlisle railway from there to Wilton Lodge. An ancient axe-head (perhaps bronze) found there was donated to the Museum in 1861, but subsequently disappeared (see also Auld Northhouse; the origin of the name is surely literal, and is also sometimes ‘Northhouses’; it appears from about 1500 as ‘Northhous’, is ‘Northhous’ in 1498 and 1660, ‘Northhous’ in 1524, ‘Northhsou’ in 1540, ‘Northhows’ in 1547, ‘Norththous’ in 1553, ‘Nouthous’ in 1557, 1564, 1619 and 1663 and ‘Northhous’ in 1661; it is already ‘Northhouse’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map.

Northhoose Brig (north-hoos-brig) n. road bridge over the Teviot on the A7, near where the Northhouse Burn joins the River.

Northhoose Burn (north-hoos-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from the south, near Northhouse. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail.

Northhoose Chaipel (north-hoos-châ-pul) n. former chapel at Old Northhouse. Its location is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, although there are no physical signs of it. It is said that there were burials in the attached graveyard until 1792, and several stones have been subsequently unearthed in the area. The graveyard is marked in 1863 on both side of the stream, which is called the Chapel Burn.

Northhoose Cottages (north-hoos-ko'-ee'jeez) n., pl. cottages at Northhouse, where the side road to the Allan Water (south from the A7) crosses the Northhouse Burn. A building that is no longer there is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Northhoosehaugh (north-hoos-hawch) n. former name for the flat ground by the Northhouse Burn, probably at ‘Auld Northhouse’, where the small church was built. There was once a farmstead here, where the Catrail crossed.

North Liddle Street (north-li-dul-stree') n. street in Newcastleton, running alongside the west bank of the Liddel (or Liddle) Water.

Northope Burn (nor-thup-burn) n. stream that rises north of Craik Cross Hill, in a set of sikes called March Sike, Corse Grain, Rashie Grain and Laird’s Cleuch Sike, and becomes one of the streams feeding the head of the Borthwick Water.

Northope Haugh (nor-thup-hawch) n. farmstead in flat ground by the Northope Burn, just to the west of Howpasley, in the upper Borthwick valley. About 250 m to the east are the remains of a large enclosure, with 2 smaller enclosures within it. And about 60 m to the south-west are another 2 small circular enclosures. The age of these features is not known. This was probably the farm of ‘Noirhop' listed along with Craikhope in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish; together they were estimated at ‘100 lb., vicarage 16 lb’. It was also listed along with Craikhope on a draft map of the Borthwick in 1650, having 8 ‘communicants' between them.

North Port (north-pôr) n. former entrance to the town at the top of Walter’s Wynd, between 47 and 49 High Street. This was the start of the road towards the North from the old town. A plaque was placed at 51 High Street by the Callants’ Club in 1964.

North Stewart Place (north-stew-ur'-plis) n. original name for the street joining East and West Stewart Places, which were all named after Rev. James Stewart and part of the area popularly known as Stewartfield. It is now part of East Stewart Place.

North Synton (north-sin'-in) n. farm to the east of Ashkirk, but on the north side of the Ale valley, distinct from the other Synton (or Sinton) farms on the south side. It may have been part of the same estate as South Synton in early times, but is separate from at least as early as 1407. In that year Archibald, Earl of Douglas, granted the lands to Barnaby Veitch of Dawyck. Alexander Veitch was recorded as owner in 1502. In 1601 it was described as having a ‘tower and fortalice’ and being an annexed part of the Barony of Dawyck. It was held by the Veitch family until 1641, when largely sold to Francis Scott of South Synton, except for Clerklands. In 1643 it was owned by Francis Scott of Synton, with the west side valued at £208 and the east side valued at £338. It was fully annexed to South Synton again in 1675. The ‘laird of North sintoun’ (who appears to have been Rev. Robert Cunningham) paid the land tax there on £600 in 1678; at the same time Francis Scott of Synton was the owner of Essenside, valued at £365. Francis Cunningham of North Synton is recorded in 1690 and his sister Maria was served as heir to his 50-shilling land there in 1691. The house was taxed for having 7 hearths in 1694, and there were 9 people further assessed for having a hearth, as well as 8 poor people. Dr. Gideon Elliot (son of the tenant in Borthwickshiel and descended from the Elliots of Horsleyhill) became Laird through marriage to Margaret Cunningham in 1691. Charles Scott lived there in the 1790s. James King was farmer there in 1797. The value was the same in 1707, £600 It was listed being owned by John Pringle of Clifton in 1788 (and still recorded this way in 1811), when valued along with Birkwood at £600. In the 1830s the lands were owned Northumbria (nor-thum-bree-a) n. ancient Kingdom of north-eastern England, also including parts of southern Scotland for centuries, and now the general name given to the English northeast. The kingdom was established around the year 600, including Bernicia (roughly from the Forth to the Tees) andDeira (roughly the Tees to the Humber). The name derived from being north of the Humber. Hawick would have been part of the Kingdom of Northumbria until the Battle of Carham in 1018.

Northumbrian (nor-thum-bree-in) adj. relating to present-day Northumberland or ancient Northumbria, n. the language spoken in Northumbria. This was originally one of Brythonic or ‘p-Celtic’ languages, most closely related to Old Welsh. In periods after about the 6th or 7th century the word is used to describe the early form of Anglian spoken throughout the Kingdom of Northumbria and that developed into Scots and in particular the Hawick dialect. Essentially the same form of p-Celtic is sometimes called ‘Cumbreic’.

nurseries (nu-su-rezz) n. Hawick was once famous for its plant nurseries, which supplied a range plants to a wide area. A record of 1675 mentions the ‘plant market’ in Hawick. The first large-scale nursery was established at Hassendean by the Dicksons in 1728 and moved to Hawick in 1766 (as well as having premises near Dunfries, Edinburgh and Perth), supplying trees and shrubs to roughly half of the plantations in Scotland. The nurseries were at the east end of town, including land stretching from Oliver Crescent to Dovecot Street and also around Union Street and later extending to near where the Buccleuch Hotel is now. Dickson’s also had nursery land around Dickson Street and Wellfield, which became Dowemount Nurseries in the latter part of the 19th century. The firm of Dickson & Turnbull also used the Wester Nurseries, where the Playing Fields are now, including land later occupied by the cricket field, Parish Church and bowling greens. Many of these areas are marked on Wood’s 1824 map. Forbes Nurseries (also known as the Buccleuch Nurseries) operated near Stonefield from 1879–1968 and were extremely well known in their day, being once a large employer in the town. When they closed it ended a long chapter of Hawick being prominent as a nursery centre, with perhaps the Walled Gardens and success in ‘Britain in Bloom’ being the remaining vestiges.

Nut Bank (nu’-bawng) n. former name for a small piece of land in Minto Parish. It was ‘Nutbank’ in 1779 and in 1780 when said to belong to Robert Scott of Nether Bonnie set aside for growing young trees. George Adamson lived there around 1800. The farm there was tenanted by the Turnbulls in the 19th century. Sometime in the latter part of the 19th century the cottage was pulled down to build an addition to the blacksmith’s house near the Bridge (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

oak leaves (ök-leevz) n., pl. symbolic adornment worn at certain times during the Common Riding, fancifully imagined to harken back to Druidic times. After the Cornet’s Breakfast on the Friday morning sprigs of oak leaves are given to the guests and worn for the remainder of the day. The Drums and Fifes wear them prominently in their hats. Before the mid-19th century, the Cornet and his guests used to march to the Haugh after the dinner to dance the Reel, each bearing an oak twig on his hat and breast. The wearing of ‘chaplets of oak . . . by the young men’ was reported to be an old custom by James Wilson in 1850. The practice of wearing oak leaves discontinued after 1855, but was revived in 1886, and has been a part of the Common Riding ever since. The origin is mysterious, and there are many theories, from pagan symbolism to a relationship with trees near Hornshole – ‘What means that youthful band so gay, With oaken boughs in trim array, With frequent shout, and loud hur-ray, Drum, fife, and fiddle?’ [WiS], ‘. . . An’ wear an oak leaf in ma coat, An’ join in the sang’ [IJ], ‘Ne’er picked a callant that was prooder Tae weer oaken leaf on shooder’ [MB].

the Oak Trei (thu-ök-tri) n. well-known former landmark on the New Road, near the entrance to the Volunteer Car par. Although it marked no boundary, nor had specific historical significance, it was a familiar sight for generations, and a popular turning point for walks along the New Road, particularly before the Park was acquired. It was said to have been the last of a long line of trees that ran over the hill in a southerly direction, perhaps starting near the Howeagate. The tree was cut down in 1984 following storm damage, and a replacement planted in the adjoining sports ground – ‘. . . Till the auld Oak Tree rocks to our glee, for I really believe – don’t you? – It would like to be the Cornet’ [JYH].

the Oak Trei (thu-ök-tri) n. the Oak Tree, a public house on the north side of Buccleuch Street, also referred to as ‘the Oak’ (e.g. on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map). This building was later the entrance to Elliot’s skinny.

occasion (ő-kā-shin) n. a circumstance, opportunity, pretext, cause, inducement – ‘… came appeared Mr Lithgo, officer of ye excise, and confessed that he was occasion of ane meeting in Thomas Hugan’s house’ [PR1716].

the Occasion (thu-ő-kā-shin) n. former popular name for the celebration of Holy Communion in local churches, an important event in the community calendar. In Hawick it took place about the harvest season until the beginning of the 19th century, when complaints by farmers had it moved to the last Sunday in June. The Wednesday before Communion was Sacramental Fast Day, when all work was suspended and there were 2 services. There was also a service on the Saturday, being the day of preparation, and often 2 more services on the following Monday. The Communion itself was on the Sunday and typically lasted from 8 a.m. until about 6 p.m., with a short break for rest and refreshments, and 4 or 5 different ministers officiating. The length of the services declined through the 19th century.

och (och) interj. expression of surprise, disgust, regret or resignation, sometimes preceded by ‘tut’ – ‘och, A’ve hed enough o this’, ‘tut, och yowe an yer stipeet ideas’, ‘och it’s juist a wee scratch’, also used as a general preface to any remark – ‘och, A suppose si’, ‘… och saufe me for thy mercie’s sak’ [HSR], ‘Och howe grit is thy guidniss …’ [HSR], ‘Och, d’ye think I’m an Irishman, D’ye think I’m an Irishman’ [JEDM], ‘Och, Robert, lad … juist days syne I was gi’en A pickle Smith’s fifteen-eer Glenlivet …’ [DH].

Ochiltree (ő-chil-tree) n. James (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobo Wchtiltre’ when he was witness to the 1452 sasine for William Douglas of Drumnandig being regranted the Barony of Hawick. This was signed in Hawick by a number of local men, the list also including Robert, who must have been related. Robert (15th C.) witness to the 1452 sasine for the Barony of Hawick, where he is ‘Roberto Wchtiltre’ and his name appears among a list of 4 Burgesses of Hawick. He must have been closely related to James who is also listed.

ocht (awcht) pron., adv., arch. anything, aught – ‘Hae ye seen ocht o’ auld Tam Dyce any gate’ [HAST1688], ‘[He] wad never hed ocht a-do wir’ [HAST1888], ‘A wireless and a bairless age Is no’ in touch wi’ ocht’ [JEDM], ‘Auld Brig ye’ve been a public gude For ocht I ken sin’ Noah’s flude’ [WNK], ‘… by crying aloud ‘As fact as ocht, that’s John Broon’ ’ [WNK], ‘It’s oot o sicht; oo canna sei ocht o’d’ [ECS] ‘Man … Ocht worth tippence guan on i’ the toon …’ [DH], ‘… that can hardly be ocht else than …’ [DH] (cf. owt and ochts).

ocht (ocht) v., arch. to own, pp. owned, possessed of (and usually following the verb ‘to be’) – ‘Quheae’ll bey awucht them (or aa them) a hurnder yeir aften thys?’ [JAHM], ’At yeh shop-door a motor stuid, an forrit A gaed to find oot whae was ocht eet’ [ECS], ‘Whae’s ocht this? = whose is this’ [ECS] (cf. aw, awnd, aucht, ownd; note the use of the past participle form to mean ‘is possessed of’ rather than ‘possesses’, switching the subject and object compared with English).

ochts (ochts) pron., arch. anything, aught – ‘Next A speeder if A cood geet ochts ti eat, { if there was a mael o meat ti be bocht’ [ECS], ‘Game for ochts, A snuived steevely on aboot therty yards ahint um’en’ [ECS], ‘Hei mae be deed for ochts A ken’ [ECS].

O’Connell Street (ő-ko-nul-stree’) n. built around 1837 and named after Irish statesman and reformer Donald O’Connell (1775–1847). A pended house known as ‘the Rambler’s’ was demolished to make the gap in the south side of the High Street. The street has always had a kink in the middle. The upper part of the south side was demolished after WWII, with further buildings being replaced by a garden and car park in 1972. In 1968 Murray Place was incorporated into the street. It is home to a medical centre, previously the Congregational Church, and a fitness centre, which was previously the local British Legion branch. The Drums and Fifes march up here and over to Brougham Place on ‘the Nicht Afore the Morn’.

the October Tryst (thu-ok-tó-bur-trist) n. former cattle and horse market, happening on the third Tuesday in October from 1780. It was well known as a market for Highland kyloes and held around the foot of the Vertish Hill or Thorterdykes. By the latter part of the 19th century it had become only a horse market.
o’d (ōd, od) contr. of it, often treated as a single word – ‘Ah’m seek o’d’, ‘A’ll hev nane o’d’, ‘there’s nae need o’d’, ‘the worst o’d aye es …’, ‘ee deh ken the hauf o’d’, ‘A’m gettin’ aboot sick o’d, this Canadian wunter’s a cusiness’ [JEDM], ‘The Borderers lang syne gee thersels an awfih leife o’d [ECS], ‘It’s oot o sicht; oo canna sei ocht o’d [ECS], …’ but his mother talked um oot o’d and insteud hei became a painter and decoraor’ [IWL], ‘… there’s a wee medicinal refreshment at the end o’d …’ [CT], ‘… Aw can kindeh mind o’d still’ [RM] (cf. the less common o’t).

the Oddfellis (θlu-od-fe-liz) n. the Scottish Order of Oddfellows Loyal Border League, a mutual aid society. A local branch, Lodge ‘Loyal Border’, No. 5 Waverley District existed in Hawick in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. They met in the Buccleuch Hotel for a while, and the insurance money would be collected weekly from the house of each member. Another lodge was started in Denholm in 1843 and named after John Leyden.

Oddfellis’ Haa (od-fe-liz-baw) n. Oddfellows’ Hall, also known as the Oddfellows Arms. It was a public house at the foot of O’Connell Street, on the east side (Murray Place for a while) in the mid-19th century. The proprietor in the earlier years was Thomas Scott. The building became the Central Tea Rooms and later the Legion.

odds (odz) n., arch. difference, disparity – ‘A didna ken a grain o odds o’r for aa A hedna seen’t threh kens-whan’ [ECS] (often followed by the preposition ‘o’ meaning ‘in’ here; see also what’s the odds).

Oddy (o-dee) n. Arthur taken on as trainee manager at Hawick knitwear manufacturers Pringle’s in 1924. Along with William Mactaggart, who joined a year later, the pair became Directors in 1932 and Managing Directors a year later, managing the firm through the mid-20th century. He resigned in 1945, leaving Mactaggart as sole Managing Director.

the Odeon (θlu-α-dee-in) n. name for the Exchange Buildings when it became part of the Odeon cinema chain in the mid-20th century.

Ode to Hawick (ōd-too-hlk) n. title of probably the first known example of a poem written to celebrate Hawick, penned by Rev. Robert Cunningham in 1710.

Odin (ōdin) n. supreme Norse deity, god of wisdom, art, culture and the dead, traditionally thought of as one of the gods in the Hawick battle cry ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ – ‘Scotia felt thine ire, O Odin! On the bloody field of Flodden’ [JH], ‘The Common-Riding is at hand, That festival sae great and grand, And ower Auld Hawick waves Odin’s wand The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS] (although the myth persists, there is no historical evidence to believe that Norse gods were ever worshipped in the Borders, and the connection between Hawick and Thor and Odin may well be traced to the Victorian attempts to decipher the ‘Teribus’ slogan, perhaps inspired by Hogg’s rhyming of ‘Odin’ with ‘Flodden’).

o’ee (oi) contr. of you – ‘wull the per o’ee carry this?’ (pronounced as a single diphthong and treated like one word).

of (of, ov) prep., arch. by, via – ‘… ilk ane that refuses under the pane of £4 Scots, to be paid to the Bailies of fine for their refusal’ [BR1657] (see also o).

off-pit (of-pi’) n., arch. an excuse, pretext for delay, diversion – ‘It was duist an offpit! A ken ’im owre weel!’ [GW], a makeshift, hasty meal – ‘... sei Ancrum, an geet a chack o something ti serrar as an off-pit’ [ECS], a procrastinator, v., arch. to put off, delay – ‘... A’d ti turn away for aa ma offpitteen an daidelleen’ [ECS], adj., arch. mocking, sneering, sharp-tongued, hurtful of feelings (noted by E.C. Smith).

Ogilvie (o-gul, -bee) n. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem Ogil’ when he witnessed the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. ‘Joh. Ogill’ witnessed charters for Adam Hepburne of Craigs in Edinburgh in 1501 and 1506 and could be the same man or related.

Ogilvie (o-gul-vee, -bee) n. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Branxholme. His wife Jean Chisholme’s will is recorded in 1684. The fact that he was at Branxholme suggests a connection between this family and the Scotts of Buccleuch a generation earlier than when there were Chamberlains. He may have been brother of William or perhaps even Gideon. He was also surely related to Andrew and James, who were tenants in Branxholme farms in the 1690s. He witnessed a baptism for Patrick Scoon in 1685. Adam of Hartwoodmyres (17th/18th C.) only son of William and Elizabeth Turnbull. He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was probably the ‘younger of Hartwoodmyres’ who was one of the original members of the ‘Honest Country Club’ in 1711. In 1708 he married Jean Erskine of Dryburgh, and she died at an advanced age.

age in 1761. Their children included: Margaret (b.1709), who married William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1732; Elizabeth (b.1711); William of Hartwoodmysres (b.1712); James (b.1714), who may have died young; Katherine (b.1718), born in Hawick Parish, who married Walter Grieve, tenant at Branxholme Park; and Isabel (b.1720). He may be the unnamed son of William and Elizabeth Turnbull born in Hawick Parish in 1684. Adam of Hartwoodmysres (1745/6–1809) son of William and Elizabeth Elliot. He may also have been referred to as ‘of Chesters’. He was an advocate and was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1775. He helped form the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. He served as an executor for Henry Elliot of Peel, who died in 1780. He paid the land tax on about £460 for Hartwoodmysres in 1785. He served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, taking over from William (his father) in 1787. He was living at Branxholme in 1785–88 when he paid a tax for 2 female servants, increasing to 3 in 1789 and 1790 and 2 again in 1791. He also paid tax on 2 male servants at Branxholme from at least 1785, and 1 in 1788–94. He was recorded at Branxholme on the Carriage Tax Rolls for 1794/5 and 1797/8, as well as farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and for having 4 carriage or saddle horses. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, where his vote is described as ‘partle a liferent vote from Cornelius Elliot, W.S., his brother-in-law’; if this is true then there has been confusion over the identity of his wife. He was also recorded as a voter in Selkirkshire in 1788. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax at Branxholme in 1785–97, when he had up to 4 horses. In around 1802 he paid about £460 in land tax on Hartwoodmysres. He was listed as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1805. He was a trustee for the estate of William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’. In 1806 he consulted with the Council over the appointment of Hawick’s next schoolmaster. He married Anne Renata, daughter of Gavin Elliot of Midlem Mill in 1787; they had a large family. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He appears to have served as Chamberlain until around 1808, after which his trustees are referred to, suggesting he died around then. He died at Branxholme. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Greens in Liddesdale. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, along with ‘L., ma- son’ (probably ‘Little’), to whom he was surely related. Alexander (1715/6–71) resident of the Greens in Castleton Parish. His wife was Elizabeth Little, who died in 1793, aged 56. Their children included William (1768/9–1818), who died at Greens. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 and 1697 he leased a third of the farm of Branxholme Mains. James, who also leased a third, must have been a close relative, and he was surely also related to Adam, recorded in Branxholme in 1684. How these Ogilvies were related to the later Chamberlains at Branxholme is unclear however. Andrew of Newlands (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1719 in a declaration regarding the commony between Wauchope and Templehall. He witnessed some of the births of the children of William Ogilvie in Hawick, suggesting he was William’s brother, and so son of James. It is unclear if his lands were those in Lilliesleaf or Castleton. Andrew (18th C.) recorded in 1754 when the Town Council paid for cords to bind him, as well as paying for him to be watched. He was presumably imprisoned for some crime. Rev. Andrew (1731–1805) son of William and Martha Laing, who were from Hawick. He was the 14th child, his father being tenant at Broadhaugh. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Langholm in 1758 and ordained by the Dissenting Church of Newcastle at the Groatmarker Meeting-house. He became minister at Linton in 1781. He married Agnes Lomax from Newcastle in 1767 and she died in 1808. Their children were: Eleanor; Jane; Margaret; William; Joseph; and John. He wrote about the Parish of Linton for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. David of Brieryyards (1726–c.83) probably son of William. He paid the window tax for Brieryyards in 1748. His daughter Martha married Thomas Turnbull in 1757. He was added to the voters’ roll for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was involved in a court case against Capt. John Douglas of Cavers. He was probably the Ogilvie of ‘Brieryyards’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. Brieryyards passed to the Turnbuls (through his daughter) in 1783, suggesting that he was deceased by then. George (d.1807) listed as ‘Messenger’ in Hawick on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His death is recorded in the Scots Magazine, where he is also ‘messenger’, presumably meaning he was some kind of agent, possibly a ‘messenger-at-arms’, a lawyer appointed to execute summonses. He was probably the George who was married to Margaret Learmonth and who had several children born in Hawick: Janet (b.1780); Thomas (b.1781); John (b.1783); Alexander (b.1785); Michael (b.1788); Mary (b.1790); Margaret (b.1792); and George (b.1794). Gideon (17th C.) one of the earliest known members of this Roxburghshire family. In 1656 he married Susannah Scott of Harden (probably son of Sir William Scott). Their son William was the first Laird of Hartwoodnyres. Henry (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as proprietor of Hartwoodnyres. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. James (d.1706) indweller in Branhelme. In 1694 he was recorded as a householder at Branhelme on the Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 and 1697 he leased a third of the farm of Branhelme Mains. Andrew, who also leased a third, must have been a close relative and he was surely also related to Adam, recorded in Branhelme in 1684. In 1700 James Scott in Stobicote was fined for ‘forestalling of the public market’ by buying a lamb from his servant and then selling it to a butcher. In 1704 he was ‘tenant in Branacholm’ when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson. He received the lands of Hoscote ‘in lierent’ in 1705 from William Scott of Harden. He married Jane Elliot and their son was William, possibly the William born in Hawick around 1670. He witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1701, including one for Bailie Walter Elliot. His daughter Jane died in 1701 (when he gave money to the Parish). Other children were Adam, Andrew and Alexander. He is probably the James who rented quarter of the farm of Borthaugh in at least the period 1690-98. James (18th C.) saddler in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). John (b.1794/5) born in Cavers Parish, he was farmer at Cooms in Eses Parish. He was there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Jane Common and their children included Janet, Margaret, William, John, Adam, Robert and Sibella. Rev. John H. (19th/20th C.) minister of Lilliesleaf Free Kirk 1926–28, probably its last years. Litle (1793/4–1862) stone mason at the Greens in Castleton Parish. He married Jane Little, who died in 1879, aged 81. Their children included: Margaret (1819/20–40); Jane or Janet (1825/6–46); Elizabeth (1826/7–47); Mary (b.c.1827); William (1828/9–1900); Rabina (b.c.1839); Margaret (again, 1842/3–81); and Joan Black (1845/6–1913). He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, and was probably son of Adam from there, who also subscribed. Michael (18th/19th C.) local whip-maker. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Andrew Murray. His sons were John and Andrew, who died in infancy. He could be the Michael ‘Guner’ whose child died in Hawick in 1815. Mr. ?? of Teindside (18th C.) recorded as ‘Mr Ogilbie of Teindsid’ in 1729 when he rented the Hawick ‘litter’ for a funeral. He may have been William or one of the other local Ogilvies. Robert (17th C.) witness in 1632 for the reversion document for Harwood by Edward Lorraine. Robert (18th C.) overseer for the early spinning company set up in Hawick by a group of local gentlemen. He was in this position for only a couple of years from about 1741. He could be the Robert who in 1720 married Jean, daughter of Robert Ruecastle. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Braidhaugh (and others), recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785–94. He was also owner of 5 farm horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Thomas (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Hartwood. In 1705 he acted as factor for the young Margaret, daughter of the deceased John Scott of Synton. He may have been son of the 1st Laird of Hartwoodnyres and younger brother of Adam. Thomas Elliot ‘Tom’ of Chesters (1751–1831) 2nd son of William of Hartwoodnyres and Elizabeth Elliot, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. He joined the Madras civil service at the age of 19, becoming paymaster at Vellore, which was under siege in the early 1780s. He retired in 1786 and bought Crailing, then sold it the next year so he could purchase Chesters from the Bennet family. There he had a mansion designed by local architect William Elliot, the construction being completed in 1790. While it was being built he lived at Gala House. In 1788 he owned Chesters and associated lands (valued at £965 2s 3d), Lanton Mill and associated lands (valued at £93 9s 5d), as well as the farm of Newton (valued at £853 6s 8d) on the opposite side of the Teviot from Chesters, plus associated teinds. In 1788 he was mentioned as about to be added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. He was at Chesters in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. He was taxed for owning a carriage in the 1780s and 90s and had 5 female and 4 male servants at Gala House in 1788 and 2 female servants in 1789. By 1790 he was at Chesters, and he had 7 or 8 servants there until at least 1797. He also paid tax for having 4 horses at Chesters in the period 1790–97. He was additionally taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in

1797. He paid the land tax at Chesters and Lant ton in 1811, as well as for lands around New ton in Bedrule Parish valued at about £850. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, both times along with his son William. He joined the Roxburghshire Gentle men and Yeomanry Cavalry and served as Deput Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. He is listed as proprietor of Chesters on Pigot’s 1825/6 direc tory. He was a friend of the writer Sir Walter Scott. In 1782 he married Hannah (1753–1833), 2nd daughter of Robert Dashwood and widow of Dr. Pasley. Their children were: Elizabeth
(b.1783); William (b.1785), Chamberlain to Buc cleuch; Adam (1792–1872), who married Letitia Keys Spence; George, who died young; Margaret (b.1795); and Jane, who married Donald Horne of Stirkoke. One of his daughters was probably the inspiration for the tune ‘Miss Ogilvie of Chesters Waltz’, published around 1810. Thomas Elliot of Chesters (1821–1896) eldest son of William and Alexina Falconer. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburgh shire. He married Hope, only daughter of Henry Erskine. In 1741 he was one of the witnesses to the baptism of a daughter of Town Clerk
James Weir in 1738. There is a document of 1739
regarding a dispute between him and Walter Scott
of Harden over the lands of Hoscole. William of Hartwoodmyres (b.1712) son of Adam and Jean Erskine. In 1741 he was one of the witnesses to the baptism of William Elliot (who bought Wolfelee). Their children were: Elizabeth (17th/18th C.) resident in Craik in 1717 when his son Alexander was baptised in Roberton Parish.
William (c.1670–1755) possibly son of James and Jane Elliot. He was tenant farmer at Broadhaugh.
He married Martha Laing in Hawick in 1715. His wife died in 1735. Most of their children were bap tised in Hawick. Their children included: James (b.1716); William (b.1718), probably father of the farmer at Broadhaugh and Whitrope; Jean (b.1720); Walter (b.1721); Janet (b.c.1722), who married John Potts in Castleton; Adam (b.1724); Edward (b.c.1725) died young; David (b.1726)
of Brieryyards; Robert (b.c.1727); Alexander (b.c.1728); Martha (1728/9–1825), who married
Thomas Turnbull in Hawick and died aged 96; Betsy (c.1730–52); Andrew (b.1731), minister at Linton; and Margaret (b.1735). William of Hoscole (18th C.) possibly son of James, he was one of the Commissioners appointed to oversee the construction of the Teviot Bridge in Hawick.
He is probably the William ‘in Branxholm of Hahope’ (this being indecipherable, and possible Hoscole is meant) recorded renting from the Duke of Buccleuch in Cavers Parish in 1723; he also rented Meadshaw that same year. In 1731 he ob ained the tenancy of Whitchesters from Robert Scott of Fahnash. In 1735 he leased Branxholme Park and part of Branxholme Mains from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He also rented Branxholme Park and other properties in 1737. He was one of 4 men to propose building a stillhouse and brew cery in 1738, for which Robert Elliot of Fenwick was leased land by the Duke of Buccleuch the fol owing year; this may have become Hawick’s first distillery and brewery on Slitrig Crescent. He wit nessed the baptism of a daughter of Town Clerk
James Weir in 1738. There is a document of 1739
regarding a dispute between him and Walter Scott
of Harden over the lands of Hoscole. William
of Hartwoodmyres (b.1712) son of Adam and Jean Erskine. In 1741 he was one of the witnesses to the baptism of Walter Scott, last of Crumhaugh.
He was Bailie to the Regality of Jedforest and attached baronies, i.e. appointed as factor to the Duke of Douglas for properties in the Southdean area, as well as elsewhere. In 1745 he was visited by members of Prince Charlie’s army on their way to England, and forced to pay a ‘tax’. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch from at least 1756 until about 1786, when he was replaced by Adam (probably his son). He acted as Cham berlain for Melrose, Ettrick Forest, Hassendean and Burnfoot. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for his brother-in-law Walter Grieve, tenant in Branxholme Park. He was recorded as a Com missioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He appears to have resided at Branxholme from about 1767, the first Chamberlain to do so. In 1778 and 1779
he paid tax for having a male servant at Branx holme. In 1745 he married Elizabeth, daughter of William Elliot (who bought Wolfelee). Their children were: Adam (d.1809), also Chamberlain, who died at Branxholme; Thomas Elliot (b.1751); William, who served with the Royal Navy and died in Antigua; and probably Jane (1758–1802), who married Maj. Gen. William Balfour. There are portraits of him and his wife. He (or an other William) may also have married a daughter of John Laing of Westerkirk. William (d.1777)
William Henry (b.1827) son of William and Janet Byers. He farmed at Broadhaugh and Whitrope. He was listed at Broadhaugh in 1866. On the 1851 census he employed 20 labourers, and they had 2 household servants. William Henry ‘Will’ (1869–1963) poet, who wrote many popular Border poems, including ‘The Road to Roberton’, ‘The Raiders’, ‘Ho! For the Blades of Harden’ and ‘The Barefoot Maid’. He was born at Holefarm near Kelso, where his father George was a reasonably well-off tenant farmer, 3 past generations of his family having served as Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch. He was the eldest boy in a family of 8 and was educated at Kelso Grammar School, and Fettes College. He worked at Broadhaugh in 1889–1901 in Australia working as a drover and breaker of wild horses, and there his poems of the outback life are well-known. He worked at Belalie Station in Queensland and Maroupe Station in South Australia and became a friend of Harry ‘Breaker’ Morant. He briefly lived in America (with an appointment to the Department of Agricultural Literature in State College, Iowa), and returned to Britain in 1905. He later became a journalist in Edinburgh and was Chair of Agricultural Journalism at Iowa University for 2 years. He returned to the Borders and married Madge Scott-Anderson of Ettrickshaw in 1908.

Agricultural Literature in State College, Iowa), with an appointment to the Department of Agricultural Literature in State College, Iowa, and returned to Britain in 1905. He later became a journalist in Edinburgh and was Chair of Agricultural Journalism at Iowa University for 2 years. He returned to the Borders and married Madge Scott-Anderson of Ettrickshaw in 1908. They raised their son and daughter at Bowden and then moved to Kirklea in Ashkirk, where he spent the rest of his life. He visited Hawick often, for example as Callants’ Club guest in 1910. He was also a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He wrote for various newspapers and magazines.
as well as publishing 16 books of verse and 4 volumes of prose, and was appointed official Bard to the Buccleuch Hunt. ‘My Life in the Open’ (1908) is an early autobiography, while ‘Whaup O’ the Rede’ (1909) is an epic poem of over 100 pages, and ‘The Land We Love’ (1910) is a collection. Many of his local poems collected in ‘The Border Poems of Will H. Ogilvie’ (1959, 1993). His ashes were scattered on the ‘Hill Road to Robertson’. Scocha set his poem ‘The Land We Love’ to music in 2004, and used it as the title for their second album. A cairn was erected in his honour in 1993 on the road between Ashkirk and Robertson, with a memorial plaque (sculpted by Bill Landles) and a replica at Bourke in Australia. After being vandalised, a replacement plaque will be placed at Harden. 2019 marked his 150th anniversary, with an exhibition in the Museum, publication of a reproduction version of ‘Whaup o’ the Rede’, the unveiling of the new cairn and a memorial service in Ashkirk Kirk – ‘Your cairn looks down on Ale Water’s vale and the bonny Linns to Hawk’s Nest, Whitslade and Blawearie where the hill road rins’ [GM] (formerly written ‘Ogilvy’, etc. and sometimes ‘Ogilbie’ or ‘Ogilby’).

The Ogilvie Cairn (θu-ó-gul-vee-kärn) n. Memorial cairn erected on the ‘Hill Road to Robertson’ in 1993, with the top sculpted by Bill Landles, depicting an opened book. In 2009 an adjacent stone seat was erected in memory of the founder members of the Will H. Ogilvie committee. The bronze was stolen in 2016.

O Grade (ō-grād) n. Ordinary Grade, the basic level of the Scottish Certificate of Education in one of a number of subjects, generally taken in the 4th year of High School, and effectively replaced in 1986 with the Standard Grade. Also used to denote a pass in a particular subject – ‘he had O Grade wudwork an techy drawin’.

Oily Tam (oi-lee-tawm) n. Nickname in use in the early 19th century.

Oith (oith) n., arch. An oath – ‘...the foresaid witnesses depones upon their conscience and the oith that they have made’ [Ash1635].

Old see Auld

Old (ōld) n. Rev. Thomas (1682/3–1737) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1705, he became Chaplain to Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1715 and was ordained at Legerwood in 1717. He married Margaret, daughter of John Fullarton of Auchenhay and their only child was Jane, who married Alexander Fall.

Old Mill Town (old-nil-town) n. Also sometimes known as ‘Auld Mill Toon’, a song about Hawick, written by David Finnie in 2001. It appeared on the 2002 CD of his band ‘3D’. It has been sung by Finnie and Debbie Lyons at Common Riding functions regularly since. Originally scored for guitar, it was arranged for piano by Ian Seeley. Although clearly about our Town, the word ‘Hawick’ does not appear in the lyrics. The words appear in the 2009 re-edition of the song book.

The Old Statistical Account (θu-öld-sta-tis-tee-kul-a-kownt) n. Published as ‘The Statistical Account of Scotland’ in 1791–92, it became known as the ‘Old’ or (sometimes ‘First’) ‘Statistical Account’ after the appearance of the ‘New Statistical Account’ in 1834–45. The work was the result of questionnaires sent by Sir John Sinclair of Ulbster to over 900 parish ministers, with 160 questions covering geography, population, agriculture, industry and other topics. The individual parish reports, written by the local ministers, offer an invaluable (although clearly biased) picture of Scotland before the changes wrought by the Industrial Revolution. A ‘Third Statistical Account’ was started in the 1950s, with Roxburghshire being the last volume, published in 1992.

Oldsteson (öld-ste-sin) n. Former farmstead, probably in the upper Jed valley near Roughlee. The tenants there in 1669 were Cuthbert, William and James Robson and David Hall.

Olifer see Oliver

Oliphant (o-lee-fun’) n. Adam (d.1746) he was ordained as minister of Glenbuchat in Aberdeenshire in 1718. In 1721 he was one of the preachers who filled in at St. Mary’s Kirk when the incumbent was ill; his name was recorded there as ‘Olifer’. In 1721 he married Margaret, daughter of Bailie Martin of Hawick and she died in 1755. Their children included James (merchant in Edinburgh), Samuel, John, Ann and Margaret. Lawrence (c.1434–98), eldest son of Sir John of Aberdalgie, he was 1st Lord Oliphant. He was one of the Justiciars at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh in 1493.

Olive Bank

Olive Bank (o-leev-bawngk) n. villa type house on Wilton Hill Terrace (roughly at the top of the road leading up from Wilton Hill) once the home of cabinet-maker John Hunter.

Oliver (o-lee-vur, -fur) n. Abraham (17th/18th C.) recorded at Smallcleughfoot on the 1696 Hearth Tax Rolls. He may thus have been related to the famous ‘Ringan’. Adam ‘Ade’ (15th C.) tenant at Nether Dykeraw in 1541, along with James, Michael, John and Robert. Adam ‘Ade’ (16th C.) listed as tenant at ‘Rowntrehil’ in 1541 along with Marion and John, paying 11 shillings. Several other Olivers (John, Robert and Robert ‘the schirreff’) were tenants in part of the farm and may be related. Adam (16th C.) listed at Hyndhaughhead among Scotsmen who pledged loyalty to the English Crown in 1544. His name comes after ‘Dande’, in the same place, and so he was probably the son or younger brother.

Adam ‘Ade’ (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Dand’ the Lover’. The pair were listed among Scotts and other local men who were accused in 1590 of a raid into England 3 years earlier. His name is recorded as ‘Eddie’, which was often an English transcription of ‘Adie’. Probably the same man was listed as ‘Ady Olipher called the Luther’ when he was declared a fugitive in 1605. Adam (17th C.) recorded in a rental roll of 1669 along with Robert Laidlaw. It is unclear where they were tenants, but perhaps Northbank or Slack.

Adam (d.1808) gardener in the ‘East end of the Town’. He died in Hawick. Adam (1774/5–1848) farmer at Chapel in Lilliesleaf. He married Mary Hall, who was from Bowden and died in 1856, aged 65. Their children included: Adam (b.1803); Andrew (c.1810–92); Anne (d.1899), who married Thomas Turnbull; Mary (b.1820); and Thomas (b.c.1822). His children were mostly born in Jedburgh Parish. His wife was a widow and was then a widower. He married Jane Scott and was then a widower. He married Jane Scott (from Selkirk) in Hobkirk Parish in 1831 and their children included: Agnes (b.c.1832); John (b.c.1834); Robert (b.c.1836); James (b.1838); Adam (b.1839); William (b.1843); Alexander (b.1845), who probably died in infancy; and Walter (b.1848). Rev. Alexander (b.1827) born at Jedhead, Southdean Parish, son of Thomas and Jane Baptie. He was educated at Mowhaugh School in Bowmont valley, at Yarrow School and at Edinburgh and Glasgow Universities, where he won multiple prizes. In 1854 he became assistant minister of the East U.P. Kirk in Galashiels, moving to Regent Place Church, Glasgow in 1865.
He was associated with the Temperance movement and the Liberation Society and published many articles and books. He received a D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1888 and was Moderator of the U.P. Synod in 1894. Andrew (16th C.) tenant at Kilnsyke according to a 1541 rental roll of Jedforest. Andrew (16th C.) tenant at Whiteside in 1541, along with Patrick, Gilbert and John. Perhaps the same ‘Dand’ in Whiteside was pledge for his son and brothers in 1571. He was also one of the leaders of the Olivers for whom the Turnbull and Rutherford chiefs served as pledges in the same year. He was surely related to David, who was recorded as tenant in Whiteside in 1571/2, along with his unnamed brother. His name appears again in 1572/3, along with Olivers and others from Southdean, with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston as cautioners. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is named as ‘Dande Ollyver of Hyndrawghthede’, which was presumably Hyndhaughhead. Andrew ‘Dandy’ (16th C.) listed at Falside among Scotsmen who pledged loyalty to the English Crown in 1544. His name is listed right after Ringan in the same place, and hence they are surely related. Andrew ‘Dand’, ‘the Lover’ (16th C.) listed among men complained about in 1590 by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The others mentioned were local Scotts, as well as a Laidlaw, a Sharp, a Rutherford and a Hall. His son ‘Eddie’ (which probable means ‘Adie’, i.e. Adam) was also on the list in 1590. It is unclear how they were related to other Olivers. Andrew ‘Lanandro’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611 along with Hob of ‘Heidfauldus’ when they refused to pay tithes to the Minister of Jedburgh. Andrew ‘Dan’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Clarilee in 1610 when Adam Robson was found guilty of stealing a cow from him. Andrew (16th/17th C.) called ‘of Thorterwood’ in Jedforest. He was deceased in 1657 when his grandson inherited his lands in Jedburgh. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th C.) lived with his son Thomas at West Falside in Southdean Parish about 1640. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Sneepdykes according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Andrew (17th C.) grandson of Andrew ‘called of Thorterwode’. He inherited his grandfather’s lands in Jedburgh in 1657, ratified by the Earl of Lothian in 1677. Andrew (17th C.) cordiner in Darnick near Melrose. He is recorded in the proceedings of the Melrose Regality Court in 1660. Given the shoemaking trade, there is a possible connection with the Olivers in Hawick. Andrew (17th C.) tenant of Bairnkine. In 1684 his son Andrew was among those listed as fugitives for being a Covenanter. Andrew (either him or his son), along with Richard and Robert, also in Bairnkine (and perhaps also his sons) were listed among those who refused to take the Oath of Allegiance in 1684. He could be the Andrew listed at Bairnkine on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Slacks in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, when he possessed 3 hearths. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th C.) resident at Roughlee according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Andrew (17th C.) ‘cottar’ at Hallrule who was listed among the poor in Hobkirk Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th C.) recorded along with Steven as a tenant at Falside on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, when they paid tax on 2 hearths. There was a separate Steven also listed, as well as John, plus Thomas and his sons; presumably some of these Oliverse were closely related. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident at Swinnie. His wife Janet Learmonth (1691/2–1736) was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard, along with Isabel (d.1756), possibly his daughter. Andrew ‘Dand’ (18th C.) tenant at Falside in Southdean Parish around 1740, along with Thomas and William. He may be the same Andrew who was tenant at Alton and Adderstoneshie with William (possibly his brother) in the 1760s. He may be the ‘Dand’ who had the following children christened in Southdean parish: Janet in 1739; unnamed in 1741; and Agnes in 1744. He may be related to the earlier Dand who was recorded at Falside. Andrew (18th C.) tenant in ‘Rigg’ in Cavers Parish when he paid the window tax in 1748. He was probably at Caerlenrig. However, it is unclear how he was related to other Olivers. Andrew (18th C.) tenant at Unthank in Hobkirk Parish. He farmed there after about 1757, when Unthank was sold by Thomas Scott to William Elliot of Wolfelee. Andrew (18th C.) listed at ‘Fodderleeberks’ in the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Andrews. Andrew (b.c.1765) farmer at Westerhouses in Southdean Parish. His wife was Elizabeth. He was an Elder in the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. He and his wife travelled there for services in a ‘noddy’. His children included Elizabeth and Janet. He may be the Andrew recorded at Doorpool in the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (b.c.1770) cooper at Kirk Style in Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Ann. Andrew (18th/19th
Their children included: Jane (b.1815); and Andrew (b.1808), a tobacconist at 42 High Street. He may be the ‘Oliver’ whose premises are shown at about No. 42 on Wood’s 1824 map. Andrew (18th/19th C.) eldest son of William of Langraw. As a boy he was taught by James Sanson (archetype for ‘Dominie Sampson’). He was a successful wool stapler and cloth manufacturer in Huddersfield. He inherited Langraw in 1812, having to pay off some debts. It is said that when the Hare Cairn was dismantled he sent the carved cist slab to Abbotsford. He was listed as Andrew of Langraw in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1863 he married Jean (or Jane), daughter of Thomas Scott, who farmed at Woollee; she was a first cousin of the writer Sir Walter Scott. He was succeeded by his son William. Andrew ‘Rolly’ (1793–1857) Auctioneer and lawyer, father of James, and founder of Andrew Oliver & Son when he came to Hawick in 1817. He was son of James and Isabel Elliot, born at Marlefield Hope, Eckford. He had a brother William, who was a grain-works manager in Berwick and another brother George, who was a baker in London. He was an apprentice solicitor in Kelso, then worked in Annan, before moving to Hawick. He characteristically always wore a tall, white, felt hat, with a broad, black band. He started the auction mart system in 1847, probably the first of its kind in Britain. He became a member of the Hawick Curling Club in 1819 and was Clerk of the club for many years. He was described as a ‘writer’ when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a writer and ‘messenger’ on the High Street. His premises at that time were probably one of the 3 places on the High Street marked ‘Oliver’ on Wood’s 1824 map. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was listed as an auctioneer on the Sandbed, as well as a ‘Messenger at Arms’ and writer. In 1852 he was listed at Bridge House as a messenger at arms and ‘Andrew Oliver & Son’ are listed as writers. He was at the Sandbed in 1841 (probably already in Bridge House) and listed as a writer and auctioneer. By 1851 he was explicitly at Bridge House. In 1852 his company is listed as coal agents at the Station for the Marquis of Lothian’s coal fields, as well as insurance agents for Sun. In Coldstream he married Catherine Brown, who died in 1867, aged 72. Their children included: Jane (b.1815); and James (b.1817), also a local lawyer, accountant and auctioneer. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Andrew (b.1806/7) from Kirkton, he was a mason at ‘Parkhouses’ (i.e. Burnhead Cottages) in Wilton Parish. He is listed among heads of households at Howdenburn in Wilton Parish in 1835 and at ‘Pityhouses’ in 1840. His wife was Isabella Glendinning and their children included Isabella, James, Margaret, William and Andrew. Andrew (b.1808) son of Andrew and Elizabeth Purdom. He was a tobacconist at 42 High Street. In 1841 he was living there with his mother and sister Margaret. His sister was his housekeeper in 1851, when he was employing 5 people. Andrew (b.1807/8) born in Jedburgh Parish, he was son of Adam and Mary Hall. Like his father he was farmer at Chapel in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farming 150 acres and employing 5 people. He and his brother Thomas were the ‘Messrs Oliver’ recorded at Chapel in 1868. They were unmarried and lived with their sister Mary. Andrew (19th C.) schoolmaster at Cogsmill and Denholm. His grandmother was a Cranston, sister of Andrew Murray’s wife. He was at Cogsmill around the 1880s. Andrew Rutherford (1855–1918) eldest son of James. He became partner in Andrew Oliver & Son, Auctioneers and Live Stock Salesmen in 1888. He was a respected figure in local agricultural circles, being Honorary Secretary of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society and of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club for many years. He was also a supporter of the Common Riding and patron of racing, hunting and other sports. He lived at Thornwood, died there and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. A memorial clock to him overlooked the principal ring in the Auction Mart. He became a director of Blenheim, Richardson & Co. in 1909. Oliver Park was named after him. Andrew (1856–1938) 2nd son of Robert and Violet Rodger, he was born at Dinlabyre in Castleton Parish. He became an apprentice blacksmith in Greenlaw, spent some time in Ireland and then was blacksmith at Alanton, Berwickshire for almost 50 years. Andrew (1885/6–1937) died at Falside and is buried in Southdean cemetery. Anne (b.1811/12) from Langholm, she was son of John, tailor in Newcastleton. In 1861 she was recorded as ‘feuar’ at about 15 Hermitage Street, living alone. She may be the Anne who was juvenile librarian in the Parish in the 1860s. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as tenant of half of the lands of ‘Gre-thill’ in Jedforest in 1541. Archibald of Bush (d.1843) 2nd son of William of Dinlabyre. He is probably the Archibald, son of William, who became a surgeon-apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1799. He joined the 4th Bengal Native Infantry. By 1815 he was made Captain, then became deputy paymaster at Benares and retired at the rank of Major. He possessed Bush (also called ‘Overton Bush’) near to Edgerston. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1826. He married Anne, daughter of Col. John Anderson. They had no children and Bush eventually went to his nephew William, son of his brother John. There are portraits of him and his wife by Sir John Watson Gordon. Archibald (b.c.1790) son of James, he was born in Bedrule Parish and was tenant farmer at Denholm Mill. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was tenant of Denholm Mill according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at Denholm Mill, but was deceased by 1851. He married Ann Laing and she died in 1857. Their children included: James (b.1820); Agnes (b.1821); Elizabeth (b.1823); Helen (b.1825); Ann (b.1827); Alison (b.1829); Margaret (‘Maggie’, b.1831); Joanne (b.1833); and John Laing (b.1836). Several of his daughters worked in Hawick as milliners and dressmakers. He was surely related to John, who was also at Denholm Mill in 1825. Arthur (1927/8–2006) worked at Craik Forest, then as a hand-knitter at Deanbrae Mill. He was a keen walker and angler, as well as Common Riding supporter. A stalwart of the Teviotdale Harriers, he joined in 1947, served as President, and in 200 received a trophy for 50 years as a running member. He was well known throughout the Town for his generous spirit. He married Lillian and had children John, Andrew, Margaret and Susan. Barton (b.1835) son of Castleton shepherd George. He may also have been called ‘Angus Barton’, after the local minister. In 1861 he was an agricultural labourer at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish and he later farmed at the Dodllins. He married Jessie Murray and their children included Catherine (b.1860), George (b.1862), William (b.1864), James (b.1866), Adam (b.1869), Betsy (b.1871, who married John Mable), Margaret (b.1873), Jessie (b.1876), Jane (b.1879) and David (b.1880). Charles (16th C.) tenant at Slacks in 1541, paying 11 shillings yearly. Thomas and John were tenants in the other part of Slacks. His name is recorded as ‘Carolo Olivere’. Charles son of Robert, he followed his father by working at Lyle & Scott’s, eventually becoming Managing Director. He arranged a partnership with Christian Dior in 1954. He was a Captain during WWI, being awarded the Military Cross. He married Maisie, daughter of baker Thomas Brydon. He lived at Bucklands. Christian (17th C.) listed in Lustruther among people declared to be rebels for refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance in 1684. It is unclear if this was a man or a woman. David (d.c.1170) recorded as ‘Olifard’, he was King David I’s godson. He was probably of Norman descent, and had brothers who remained in England. If related to other Olivers (and not the Oliphants), then he is probably the first known ancestor of that family. He served with King Stephen’s army at Winchester in 1141, against his godfather. But when King David escaped he helped him return to Scotland, for which he was granted lands at Smailholm and Crailing, as well as the Barony of Bothwell. Around 1150 he witnessed the grant of the Church of Moller to Kelso Abbey. He granted the tithe of Crailing Mill to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey about 1162, and he also made grants to Dryburgh and Soutra. In 1165 he was Justiciar of Lothian (perhaps the first on record), meaning he exerted authority from the Tweed to the Firth of Forth. He may have married a daughter of Bereung Engaine, who previously held Crailing. He had 5 sons, David (who succeeded), William, Walter, Philip and Fulco (or ‘Fulk’, Parson of Smailholm). David (d.c.1190s) succeeded his father David ‘Olifard’ (although these generations are confused). He had at least 2 sons: Walter, who married a daughter of the Earl of Strathearn and succeeded his father; and David, who married Johannah, heiress of Calder. Thus both sons moved further North, where the name was softened to ‘Oliphant’. David (13th C.) son of Walter, from whom he inherited lands in Roxburghshire at Crailing and Smailholm. He is recorded along with Walter in a charter of Soutra Hospital in 1273. He married Devorguille (whose surname is not given), but died without an heir. Their Border lands went to his sister, who had married Walter of Moray. His wife could be the ‘Dervorgulla Olyfart’ who was involved in a lawsuit with Dervorgulla de Balliol in 1289. David ‘Nae Guid Priest’ (d.c.1502) resident of Strynds, which was near Westerhouses in the Rule valley, later called Strange. In 1502 he had remission for being involved in a series of raids, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst serving as surety, this included: stealing 12 oxen and cows from Sir David Home at Lammiermuir; associating with rebels Thomas and Andrew Grahamslaw; stealing a horse from John Douglas in Jedburgh; stealing 3 horses from a farm at Nisbet; and stealing 20 sheep from George Douglas in Trows. He is recorded there as ‘Dauid oliver in le stryndis, vocatis david na gud preist’, but it is unclear how he got this odd nickname. Presumably he is the David (with no nickname given) also recorded the same year along with Robert ‘in stryndis’ producing a remission for stealing a total of 101 sheep from William Ker at ‘Dernewik-mure’. He was also allowed to pay a fine for his part in stealing sheep from ‘Jedworthe, Rowcastell, Langtoune, and Bethroull’; this was along with Robert and John (brother of Ingram). Also that year he was allowed to pay a fine for a further theft (of a long, detailed list of items) from Martin Wood in Whitfield, this being along with ‘Long John’ and ‘Little John’. Again Ker of Dophinston and Kerr of Ferniehirst were sureties. Additionally in 1502, along with John son of Gilbert ‘in kilclewis’, he was allowed to compone for stealing 19 sheep and a cow from Maton and six sheep from Muirhouselaw; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was his surety. Probably the same David, brother of John son of Gilbert, in Strange, was also recorded in 1502 when they were allowed to compone for stealing a horse and a pot from Ednam. He was recorded further in 1502 as ‘na gude clerk’ when he and John ‘in le stryndis’ were allowed to compone for crimes commited against Gilbert Lamb at Jedburgh, including seriously wounding him; Andrew Kerr was surety. Additionally in 1502 along with Ingram and John in Strange, he had remission for stealing oxen from Ancrum, as well as sheep, a cow and other items from Maxton; after failing to ‘fynde sufficient souerties’ he was sentenced to hanging, along with Robert, Martin and Matthew, all from Strynds (these were probably a mixture of brothers and nephews). All 4 were subsequently captured, and assuming the execution took place, this marks the end for this once powerful rieving branch of the Olivers. In 1505 Robert Oliver, ‘Rob with the Dog’ was given remission for previously intercommuning with him and John ‘Cadger’; his nickname is there recorded as ‘Na-gude-Preist’. David of ‘Hyndhewche’ (16th C.) recorded in 1557 as the ‘taker’ of John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was presumably an officer of the Warden, and based at Hyndhaugh in Southdean Parish. Probably the same man is listed as tenant of ‘Hynhanchheid’, i.e. Hindhaughhead in Monipennie’s list of the Border Clans published in about 1594 (but probably from earlier). In 1583 William Fenwick of Wallington (near Otterburn) complained that he and 200 others raided his farm, taking cattle, horses and 16 prisoners; this appears to have been a raid into England to recover cattle and other goods stolen from them earlier. David (16th C.) recorded in 1571/2 as tenant in Whiteside, when John Rutherford of Hunthill was surety for him and his brother. Although his brother’s name is not given, this may be ‘Dand’, who was also recorded in Whiteside at about the same time. David (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. David (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Southdean in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He was probably related to James and Thomas, who were also listed as tenants there. David (17th C.) resident of Nether Dykeraw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. David (17th/18th C.) one of the Olivers of Falside in Southdean Parish, who left there in 1747. He may be the same man as the David recorded at Falside in 1669, or alternatively was a descendant of his. He was tenant farmer at Abbotrule Townfoot. He may have been father of some of Thomas, Dand and William, who were tenants at Falside around 1740. David (b.1829–bef. 1909) labourer in Newcastleton, son of George and Elspeth Murray. He worked as a railway surfaceman. He was at 37 South Hermitage Street in 1861. In 1853 he married Margaret Pott (b.1833) in Hobkirk Parish; she was daughter of Robert Pott and Mary Armstrong. Their children, baptised in Castleton Parish, included: Mary (b.1853); George (b.1855); Robert (b.1857); James (b.1860); Andrew (b.1862); John (b.1864); James (b.1867); and Margaret (b.1873). David Councillor in Newcastleton, representing the village on the County Council in the mid-20th century. He lived on South Hermitage Street. He acted as first Chairman of the village hall committee. Douglas (b.1871) of Hassendeankbank, son of James Oliver and Jane Rutherford. He attended Mill Hill School (where James Murray had taught) and served in the Army during WWI. He entered the family Auctioneering business in 1887 and was sole proprietor by 1918. He was also Secretary of the Curling Club. He was Chairman of the Hawick Heritable Investment Bank and Chairman of the managers of the Cottage Hospital. He served in the Boer War. In 1904 he married Sybil Brown from Galashiels and their children were: Florence Murray (b.c.1905); Muriel Rutherford (b.c.1907); Elsie Margery (b.c.1910); and James Kenneth Murray (‘Ken’, 1914–99).
Ebenezer (b.1718) son of James, the Cavers schoolmaster, he was born in Cavers Parish. He was the 3rd generation of his family to be schoolmaster in Cavers. He was certainly there in the 1760s. He was married to Janet Brown, and their children included: John (b.1750); and James (b.1753). In 1762 he had a child born called James. Ebenezer (18th/19th C.) recorded as watch and clockmaker in Denholm, on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Ebenezer married to Betty Scott, whose children (born in Cavers Parish) included: John (b.1802), probably a weaver in Hawick with an eldest son also called Ebenezer: James (b.1804); Betty (b.1807); Margaret (b.1809); Thomas (b.1811); and Ebenezer (b.1814). He was surely descended from the earlier schoolmaster. Ebenezer (19th C.) Secretary of the Denholm Horticultural Society in the 1860s. Edward (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘in Jedforest’, although no more specific designation is given. At the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, the Coroner (William Cranston) was fined for failing to arrest him. Edward (16th C.) tenant at ‘Stryndis’ (i.e. Strange) in a rental roll of 1541. His name is listed as ‘Eduardo Olivere’. He was probably related to other Olivers of Strange. Edward (16th C.) recorded as being ‘of Lymkylwodd’ in 1544, in a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to England. His lands were somewhere in Jedforest, like the other Olivers listed. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed along with Robert in Bank, on a list of people who refused to take the Oath of Allegiance in 1684 and were declared rebels. Robert was probably her husband. She was among a relatively small number of women who were prosecuted for being Covenanters. Elliot (b.1854) eldest son of lawyer James. He became a partner in the family firm Geo & Jas. Oliver. However, he retired early because of problems with his eyesight. Francis (1749–1829) tenant farmer of Heap. He was one of the founders of the Relief Church in Hawick. He died in Hawick. Francis (19th C.) flesher in Newcastle. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835 and 1836 and as a Carter in 1837. Frederick Scott (1864–1934) born in Edinburgh, son of merchant John Scott Oliver. He became a prominent politician, particularly as a Unionist. In 1915 he purchased the estate of Edgerston from William Edward Oliver (who was not a relation). He married his cousin Katharine Augusta McLaren. Gavin (16th C.) tenant farmer at ‘West Houses’ (possibly Wester Houses in the Rule valley). He is recorded in a bond of 1562 along with William, tenant at Lustruther, who may have been a relative. The 2 of them had to enter Robert Robson, called ‘Foul Mouth’ to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Geoffrey (15th C.) father of Matthew. His son was recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance, along with other Olivers. George (16th C.) recorded as ‘Gorge Olyver of Whiteside’ in a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. ‘Jake’ and ‘Patte’ Oliver were also listed as being at Whiteside, and hence probably related. George (16th C.) tenant in ‘Clarely’ listed along with 2 other Oliver chiefs in Monipennie’s list published around 1594 (but probably from earlier). This was the farm of Clarilee, lying roughly between Hyndhaughhead and Roughlee. George (16th C.) recorded in Chesters in 1571, when he was one of the 3 main leaders of the Olivers for whom Sir Thomas Turnbull, John Turnbull of Minto, Richard Rutherford of Edgerston and John Rutherford, younger of Hunthill, served as pledges. He was listed again in 1572/3 along with other Olivers, as well as William Kirkton of Stewartfield, with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston as their cautioners; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. George (17th C.) recorded in 1669 as tenant in ‘Slacks’, along with William, who was surely a close relative. John was also listed as tenant there. He witnessed the baptism of a daughter of John Ker of Shaw at Southdean Kirk in 1681. George (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in ‘Townhead’ (near Chesters) in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. George (d.c.1685) tenant in Swinnie when his will was recorded in 1685. He was surely related to Thomas, who was at Swinnie at the same time. George (17th C.) brother of Thomas of Ashtrees. In 1691 he wounded Robert Rutherford, Minister of Ancrum, following an attempt to disrupt the service there. This was presumably still fall-out from the days of persecution of the Covenanters. George (17th C.) resident of Northbank according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. George (17th C.) resident of Strange in Southdean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He was surely related to John who was also listed there in 1694, as well as James recorded there in 1689. George (17th C.) recorded at Woodhouse on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. George (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Jean ‘Betie’ (presumably Beattie). Their children included: Janet

(b.1701); Isobel (b.1701); Grizel (b.1705); and Agnes (b.1708). The witnesses in 1705 were carrier John ‘Atkin’ and Henry Orrock. It is unclear how he was related to the later shoemaker George. George (18th C.) Hawick shoemaker, said to be from the Dykeraw Olivers, he may have been son of Robert and Agnes Atkins (or Aitkin). He is described as ‘senior’ in 1740, so he probably had a son George at that time. In 1721 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of John Aitkin. Their children included: Robert (b.1722); John (b.1724); Agnes (or Annie, b.1726), who married George Douglas, from the Timpendedean branch; George (b.1728); James (b.1729); Margaret (b.1731); William (b.1733); Isobel (b.1736); Walter (b.1738); and Bessy (b.1745). The witnesses in 1745 were weaver Andrew Jerdon and mason Adam Turnbull. The witnesses in 1728 were George and Walter (presumably near relatives). In 1725, along with cooper John Aitkin (perhaps his father in law), he witnessed a birth for miller John Henderson. He is probably the shoemaker George who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert in 1757, suggesting that this Robert (of Burnflat) was his son. He may be the George recorded as owner of Burnflat in 1788 (although that may indicate that he had purchased the land earlier, and may well have been deceased by then). George (c.1770–1837) son of William and Jean Nichol, he was born at Blinkbonny. He worked as a shepherd in Castleton Parish, but emigrated to the U.S.A. (with his whole family, except for the eldest son George) and died at Mishawaka, Indiana only a couple of years later. He married Elizabeth Irving and their children included: George (b.1803); John (b.1807); Andrew (b.1809); Jane Grey (b.1810); Dorothy Irwin (b.1815); Robert (b.1817); William Irving (b.1821); and James (b.1825), who became famous for improving the plough. George (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Dykeraw. He owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at that time. He also paid the dog tax at Dykeraw in the same year. George (18th/19th C.) flesher in Newcastle. He is listed among heads of households in 1835 and 1836. He was surely related to Francis, also a butcher in Newcastle. George (b.c.1795) mason in Hawick. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. In 1835 he was at Dovemount, at Stellhouse in 1840 (the address changed to ‘Toll Bar Hawick’) and at the Toll Bar in 1841. He was living at the Western Toll Bar on the 1841 census, with wife Mina and children William, Isabel, Margaret and James. George ‘Pie Oliver’ or ‘Pies’ (c.1800–47) baker on the Howegate, at about No. 19. He may have been son of William ‘Little Cash’. His wife made pies at 19 Howegate, which presumably gave the nickname for the family. He married Janet or ‘Nannie’ Brown (from Selkirk), who died in 1881, aged 87. Their children included: William (b.1822); Thomas (b.1824); Catherine; Agnes (c.1828–1901), who married Robert Murray; Janet; George; and Robert. The three brothers who were stockingmakers, George, ‘Jock the Hoist’ and William, may have been his sons. He may have been related to James, who was an earlier baker in Hawick. His wife was working as a washer-woman on the Back Row in 1851. It is also unclear whether he could be the George ‘of Burnflat’ who was recorded as a heritor in 1854 (after his death); he seems likely to be the George recorded as owner of Burnflat on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. George (1803–72) eldest surviving son of Town Clerk John. He was Cornet in 1824. He trained as a lawyer, and in 1831 went into partnership with his father as a ‘writer’ and bank agent. In 1837 he is listed along with his father as agent for the Commercial Bank. In 1841 he was living on Buccleuch Street and was there in 1851, recorded as ‘Procurator in Sheriff Court of Roxburgh Shire’. The firm was thus ‘John and George Oliver’, but became ‘Geo. & Jas. Oliver’ on the death of John in 1849, when his younger brother became a partner. He was local agent for the Duke of Buccleuch, as well as being political agent for the Conservative Party in Hawick and Liddesdale. He was mentioned as one of the local ‘fictitious voters’ in an investigation of 1837 (along with John and Robert Anderson they bought property in Selkirkshire, apparently in order to gain the ability to vote there). He had a prominent role in the Hawick to Carlisle railway extension. He was probably the George ‘of Burnflat’ who was recorded as a heritor in 1854; he seems likely to be the George recorded as owner of Burnflat on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (his son John inheriting these lands from him). He became tenant at Borthaugh in 1860. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also one of the Orrock Trustees and served as Chairman of the Parochial Board for Kirkton Parish. He married Margaret, daughter of John Lindsay of Almeriecloss (Forfarshire) at Arbroath in 1843. Their children were: Margaret Spink (b.1844); Jane (b.1846); Mary (b.1848), who married Surg.-Gen. Peter Stephenson Turn-bull, descendant of the Bedrule Turnbulls; John (b.1850), also a Hawick lawyer; Jane (b.1852); Christian (b.1854), who married David Turn-bull of Fenwick and Brieryards; George Lindsay (b.1857), farmer, who spent time in New Zealand; and James Lindsay (b.1860), who also spent time in New Zealand with his brother. A portrait of him exists. His wife's portrait, by Atkinson Horsburgh, is in the Museum, painted in 1883. George (b.1803) son of Liddesdale sheep-herd George and Elizabeth Irving. His brother James was the manufacturer of ‘Oliver’s Chilled Plough’ in South Bend, Indiana. He was the only one of his brothers not to emigrate to America. He was shepherd at Gatehousecote and elsewhere. He married Elspeth Murray. Their children included: William (b.1827), who became Steward at Gatehousecote; David (b.1829), who lived at the family home in Newcastle; Elizabeth (b.1831), who married Adam Crozier; James Binnie (b.1834), who probably died young; and Barton (b.1835), who farmed at ‘the Dodlins’ near Hawick. George (c.1820–1900) son of John and Agnes Rutherford. He was born in Scot-land, probably near Hawick. He moved to the Galt, Ontario area with his father and family. He married Elizabeth Turnbull (d.1868) and their children included John, James, Andrew, William, Thomas, Elizaebth, George, Agnes, Agnes (again) and Robert. Most of his family moved to Carberry, Manitoba, being among the first set-tlers there. George Lindsay (b.1857) son of Ha-wick lawyer George. He went to New Zealand and bought property there with his brother James. However, he returned to farm at Whitehaugh (near Newcastle) and later lived in Hawick. George Currie Stenhouse (1900–73) born in Glasgow, from a Borders branch of the Olivers. His family moved to Hawick and in the 1920s he decided to emigrate to Canada. He worked as a herd in New Liskeard, Ontario, but travelled extensively while looking for work. On a return trip to Hawick he met Anne Murray (1895–1977) and she followed him back to Canada where they were married in 1931. The couple returned to Ha-wick in 1936. Gilbert (15th C.) father of Robert, James and William. His sons were separately fined at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493, for non-appearance to answer for unspecified crimes. He could be the same Gilbert who (along with John ‘benkis’) had 2 cows stolen by Philip Waugh in Jedburgh, with Waugh having remission in 1494/5. Perhaps the same Gilbert is mentioned in 1502 when his son John in ‘stryndis’ had remis-sion for stealing a horse and a sword from Small-holm. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant at Whiteside in Jedforest in 1541, along with Patrick, Andrew and John. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant at Hind-haughhead in 1541 along with his mother Margaret. They paid 25 shillings yearly. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant at Over Dykeraw in 1541. He was probably related to other nearby Olivers, e.g. the tenants at Nether Dykeraw. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th C.) recorded in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is named as ‘Gybe Ollyver of the Dykis’. His lands may have been the Dykes in Bedrule, or perhaps more likely is Dykeraw in Southdean (given the family con-nection and forename). Gilbert (17th/18th C.) farmer at Dykeraw, recorded in a list of tenants in Jedforest in 1669. He was probably son of Robert, also listed there. He married a Douglas and their son was James, baptised in Southdean Parish in 1694. He was ancestor of George and James of the Hawick legal firm. Gilbert (18th C.) recorded as ‘farmer in Hawick’ who was deceased in 1754 when his daughter Ann married Andrew Ford in Edinburgh (or this may have been the Ann, daughter of Gilbert and Janet Turn-bull, born in Hawick in 1738). He may have been born in Jedburgh Parish in 1712. Gilbert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He mar-ried Janet Turnbull and their children included: Anne (b.1738); Janet (b.1741); Helen (b.1744); and Robert (b.1746). He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1768 for Walter Stevenson and Janet Oliver (probably his daughter). He is also prob-ably the carrier Gilbert who witnessed a baptism for Francis Aitkin and Anne Oliver (likely his daughter) in Hawick in 1766. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is listed right after Thomas, who may be a relation. Helen née Elliot (18th C.) only child of William Elliot of Myredykes. In 1797 she married ironmonger James Oliver in Hawick. Her first children were born in Hawick, and then the family moved to Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, where her husband be-came tenant farmer. A story is recounted of how when she was married she brought a collie dog from Myredykes, and every sheep clipping season the animal would disappear from Hawick for a few days, since it had set off to help round up the sheep. In 1851 she was recorded as an ‘An-nuitant’ living at Alemoor Cottage with her un-married daughters Rachel, Eliza and Isabella, as well as 2 servants. Helen (b.1825) from Cavers.
Oliver

Parish, son of Archibald. She was the eldest of 4 sisters who were living at about 61 High Street in 1851 and working as milliners and dressmakers. She was listed with her sister Ann in Slater’s 1852 directory. Henry (16th C.) recorded in 1601 as the deceased ‘Henrie Olypher’. He had been killed by Thomas Kerr and his servant George Gladner, who were denounced as rebels for the crime. This pair were later killed by a group of Turnbulls and others in Jedburgh. Henry (b.1806) agricultural labourer and shepherd in Southdean Parish, son of William, who was hind to the Laird of Langraw. In 1841 he was at Abbotrule farm and was farm steward at West Fodderlee in 1851 and 1861. In 1840 in Southdean he married Isabellla Renwick from Morebattle; she died at Burnflat in 1895, aged 87. Their children were: Isabella (b.1841), who married Thomas Welsh; Robert (b.1843), a marine engineer who was lost at sea; Helen (b.1846); and Helen (again, b.1851). Ingram (15th C.) recorded as ‘chairleis’ in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. His residence could be associated with Charlie’s Hill or Charlie’s Knowe in Southdean Parish. He may be the same Ingram against whom premeditated crimes were committed in Jedburgh by William Kirkton in Kirkton, according to the 1494/5 Justice-aire. He could be the Ingram for whom George Douglas Master of Angus was fined for failing to arrest (along with Thomas ‘Waitschod’ and Ingram). Ingram (15th/16th C.) son of Robert in Strange and brother of John. In 1494/5 he was listed among 8 Olivers and a Shiel when they had remission for commuting with the English. He could be the same man as Ingram in ‘chairleis’. In 1502, along with his brother John, and David ‘Nae Guid Preist’, he had remission for stealing oxen from Ancrum, as well as sheep, a cow and other items from Maxton; he was there recorded being ‘in le stryndis’ and his surety was Mark Ker of Dolphinston. Also in 1502 his brother John was allowed to compone for stealing 2 oxen from Jedburgh with him, as well as other thefts (without him). Ingram (16th C.) farmer at Harwoodtown. ‘Ingreem Olferis barne and zaird’ (i.e. ‘barn and yard’) are listed in the 1562 Baronial dispute over lands in Feu-Rule, being assigned to Agnes Herries as superior. Presumably the same ‘Ingra’ was listed as ‘man and servand’ of Thomas Turnbull of Harwoodtown (brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope) in 1567, when his master was ordered to present him to answer charges related to raids into England. Isabel (b.c.1800) grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 she was at about 30 High Street. Isobel (17th C.) listed at Dykeraw among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls James (15th C.) assigned the lease of the Crown lands of Garlawcleuch in the Yarrow valley in 1489 along with his son John. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Olivers. James (15th C.) son of Gilbert. He is recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. His brother Robert was also fined at the same time, as well as Matthew son of Geoffrey, Robert brother of Matthew and Martin brother of Robert. William, son of Gilbert, was also fined, and probably his brother too. He was also recorded in 1494/5 among 8 Olivers and a Shiel (connected with Strange) who had remission for commuting with the English; he was there stated to be brother of Robert, who was son of Gilbert, and also brother of William. He could be the James for whom George Douglas Master of Angus was fined for failing to arrest (along with Thomas ‘Waitschod’ and Ingram). James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘burgess’ (presumably of Jedburgh, or else a nickname) at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Along with Robert in Lustruther, Robert (nephew of David) and Robert Waugh in Mervinslaw, he had a remission for a raid on ‘Kelshop’, which resulted in the slaughter of Robert Brig and Adam ‘Barnisfader’; his surety was Ralph Ker of Primside Loch. It seems likely he was related to the Olivers of Strynds. James (15th/6th C.) son of Gilbert in ‘stryndis’. In 1502 he and his brother John had remission for a series of crimes: stealing an ox from Ancrum; stealing 2 cows from Jedburgh; and treason. His surety was Robert Douglas, uncle of the Laird of Bonjedward. Also in 1502, along with brothers Matthew and Martin, he was allowed to compone for stealing 200 sheep from the tenants of Jedburgh, Ruecastle, Lanton and Bedrule; his surety was again Robert Douglas. James the Prince (15th/6th C.) charged at the 1510 Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh. His crimes included theft of sheep from various people. James (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541, along with William, Margaret and William alias ‘Merchant’. His steading was valued at 25s. James (16th C.) tenant at Waterside in 1541, along with Marion Young and Robert Young. It seems likely that they were related somehow. They paid 22 shillings yearly. James (16th C.) tenant at Nether Dykeraw in 1541, along with Michael, John, Adam and Robert. His name was James Ottoman according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was recorded in 1573 as `a cottar at Ruletownfoot according to the James who were recorded at Strange in 1694. He was probably related to George and James James, a monk at Jedburgh Abbey in the period 1542–81. He held the title of Prior of Canonbie in the 1570s, but probably continued to reside in Jedburgh. He is recorded in 1573 as `Dene James Oliver Pryour of Cannaby' in a case before the Privy Council regarding some lands in Canonbie. It is unclear where he came from. James (17th C.) schoolmaster in Cavers Parish. He is said to have accompanied the `Guid Leddy Cavers' to conventicles on Ruberslaw and at Hagburn. His son James took over as schoolmaster at Cavers.
He is said to have kept a personal narrative of his experiences attending secret Covenanter sermons and escaping from the dragoons, stories that were passed down in his family for several generations. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant of `Souden' i.e. Southdean in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Hyndhaughhead in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James (17th C.) tenant in Ashtrees.
He is recorded in 1684 when his son Thomas was listed as a Covenanter fugitive. He himself refused to take the oath and was banished to Jamaica. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘of Stryndis' (i.e. Strange) in 1689 when he complained that the Parish Minister had not read out the Articles of Estate or prayed for William and Mary. He was probably related to George and James who were recorded at Strange in 1694.
James (17th C.) cottar at Ruletownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident of Over Dykeraw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Cavers Parish, son of James, who had been schoolmaster before him. It was said that he was a very strict and pious man. He would spend an hour each evening in the old church, reading scriptures by candle-light. He gave his sons names from the Bible: Ebenezer, who succeeded as schoolmaster; Samuel, who became schoolmaster in Hobkirk Parish; and Nathaniel. Douglas of Cavers ordered that he be buried in the church, ‘for a man who had haunted it so much when alive deserved to sleep his last slumber under its roof’. James ‘Jafra the Piper’ (17th/18th C.) formerly resident of Kirkton Parish, he was in Hawick in the early 1700s. His nickname was also given as ‘Jafray’. In 1717 he was summoned to Hawick Kirk Session for abusing William Riddell on the street, and asked to supply testimonials from his former parish. Later that year he was called to task again for ‘a relapse in drunkenness and rambling in ye streets occasioning the school boys to follow after him through the town’. And later that year, after not presenting the requested testimonials was given a final ultimatum, after which he would be handed to the Magistrates. It seems that they did not continue in ‘extruding him out of ye town’ at this time. He was probably the same James, ‘toun officer’ who was rebuked in 1718 for playing (presumably the pipes) in front of William Whaton, who rode through the town ‘in a military posture’ for some kind of bet; he stated he was ‘urged and pressed by the schollars to play before William’. In 1719 he was again rebuked ‘for his indecent carriage in his drunkenness’, specifically for ‘rambling in his drunkenness and troubling the minister in his chamber’, again being given a last chance to reform his behaviour. He married Agnes Telfer in England (presumably a quick wedding) in 1720. This ‘irregular marriage on the English side’ may have been the last straw, since the Session then went over the records of his past mis-deeds and sent a ‘memorial’ to the Magistrates adding that ‘if they concurred not with ye Session the minister would make address to another judge to extrude him and to divest him of his service through the town’. He appears to have been Hawick’s Town Piper for at least 1717–20 and was replaced by Robert Fowler about 1721. James (b.1694) son of Gilbert, and probably grandson of Robert, farmer at Dykeraw. He was born in Southdean Parish and became tenant farmer at Earlside. He married Bessie Douglas in 1722 and their children were: James (b.c.1723), who died in infancy; and Isabella (b.c.1725), who married James Learmonth in Bedrule. In 1729 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of James Douglas of the Trows, who owned (or had the tenancy of perhaps) the farm of Earlside. He was by then in Hawick Parish, where he was recorded as ‘workman’; by 1743 he was listed as a carrier in Hawick, and he presumably took over the farm at Earlside shortly afterwards. With Margaret Douglas he had 5 sons and 4 daughters, all baptised in Hawick Parish, including: Betsy (b.1730); James (b.1732), ironmonger in Hawick; Mary (b.1734); Agnes (b.1738); Christian (1738–1804);
John (b.1740); Robert (b.1743), who probably became a surgeon in North Berwick; and Gideon (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were shoemaker Robert (who may therefore have been a relative) and maltman John Moss. James (18th C.). Married to Agnes Telfer, their son Robert was born in Hawick in 1724. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was described as ‘Senior’ in 1771 when he witnessed the baptism of a child of merchant John Oliver. He was probably father of this John, as well as James, who was also a merchant. He may be the ‘James Oliver, sen. merchant’ in Hawick who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), along with his son James. It is possible that he is the James of Cavers Parish whose sons John and James were baptised in 1745 and 1748, respectively. He may be the James who paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. James (1732–1820) 2nd son of James of Earlside and Margaret Douglas. It is said that when Prince Charlie’s army passed through Hawick in 1745 his father sent him into the country with his horse for safety. He was Cornet in 1764. He had an ironmonger’s business near ‘the Cross’ in Hawick and became tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch’s farm at Crumhaugh Hill. He was Bailie several times in the period 1790–1810. He married Christian, daughter of Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: James (b.1766); Robert (b.c.1769); John (b.1770), who became a lawyer and Town Clerk; William (b.1772); Christian (b.c.1773), who may have married John Sibbald in Edinburgh in 1792; Thomas (b.1775); Margaret (b.1777); and Mary (b.1781), who probably married Bailie Thomas Turnbull. He is recorded as a merchant in 1781. For the 1766 baptism he was recorded as a merchant and the witnesses were John and Francis Elliot (his wife’s brothers). He is buried at St. Mary’s. Note that there is some confusion in that another James was born to his parents in 1740, which is assumed to be an error for John. James (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: John (b.1780); James (b.1784); Peggy (b.1786); Archibald (b.1789); George (b.1792); and Robert (b.1795). His death (in his 89th year) is recorded in the Edinburgh Magazine. James (18th C.) tanner who was Cornet in 1782. The Council banned the carrying of pistols at the Common Riding that year, but he would have none of it, and they were not finally dispensed with until 1784. He lived at 23 High Street, the ‘All Was Others’ house, which is shown belonging to ‘Oliver’ on Wood’s 1824 map. James (b.1766) son of ironmonger James, and descended from the Dykeraw family. He farmed at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He is probably the James who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), along with James ‘sen. merchant’, who was probably his father. It is possible he was the merchant called James who was listed in Hawick in the 1791–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 in Hawick he married Helen (b.1777), only child of William Elliot of Myredykes. Their children included: Rachel (b.1799); James (b.1801), who continued to farm Borthwickbrae Burnfoot; Christian (b.1803); Helen (b.1804); Margaret (b.1806); Mary (b.1809); Elizabeth (b.1815); Mary (b.1817); William Elliot (b.1819), who spent some time in Australia; and Isabel (b.1821). Other children may have been Jane and Mina. The first few children were born in Hawick Parish and the rest in Robertson. James (1754–1839) merchant in Newcastleton. He was recorded at Newcastleton on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. He married Jane Armstrong, who died in 1814, aged 53. Their children included: Peter (1789/90–1845), also a merchant; Adam (1798/9–1816); and 2 who died in infancy. They are buried in Etterton Cemetery. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Kirkton, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. Thomas is listed before him and so possibly related. He also paid the dog tax at Kirkton in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hermiston in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (1765–1840s) baker in Hawick, son of Robert and Isabel ‘Kenmur’. He was Cornet in 1784. It was said that he continued to carry pistols at the Common riding, although it had been decreed to discontinue the practice the previous year. However, when his brother-in-law William Wilson was Cornet in 1786, the pistols were finally abandoned. He is probably the baker (and Bailie) called Oliver who was one of the first members of the Curling Club in 1803. He helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He was listed in the 1808 will of William (‘Auld Cash’) as his second cousin. He was probably the James appointed Chief Magistrate of Hawick in 1818. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, when he is listed as being ‘of Burnflat’. In 1789 he married Ann, daughter of Walter Wilson, but they had no family, and she died in 1809. Probably the same baker James married Elizabeth Purdom.
Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1818); Isobel (b.1820), who became Mrs. McIntosh; Robert William (1822–49), also a baker; Agnes (b.1823), who married blacksmith James Bowie; and William James (b.1824), also a baker. The family were living at about 43 High Street in 1841, and his wife was a widow there in 1851 (and listed as ‘landed proprietor’). In 1809 he was recorded being ‘in Birsleton’. He is probably the James who was also referred to as being ‘of Burnflat’; this is how he is listed among the major landowners of Hawick Parish in 1839. According to James Wilson he described Burnflat as ‘ane nourice fee’ (i.e. the wages given to a wet-nurse, although it is unclear what that meant). James (18th/19th C.) from Westshields in Southdean Parish. He married Jane Bruce, who was from Jedburgh. Their son William was baptised in Byrness in 1812. James (18th/19th C.) Treasurer of the Burgh of Hawick recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the same James who was a member of the Curling Club in 1812. He may also be the James who is recorded on Wood’s 1824 map as owner of property at the east end of Langlands Road and also along the east side of Roadhead. James (1801–80) son of James, he also became tenant at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He was listed on the 1834 electoral roll as a joint proprietor. He was one of the Tory supporters who received ‘Tully’s Mill’ at the 1837 election. He apparently withstood the mob longer than anyone else, getting loose 3 times before finally being thrown into the Slitrig (4 men were later found guilty of rioting). However, he later wrote to Bailie Wilson, thanking him for the loan of some clothes, and stating that he ‘felt only a little stiff, and that he was a few slight bruises’. He was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1841 and in 1851 was listed as tenant there, farming about 1200 acres and employing 4 labourers. He farmed at Howpasley from 1858, farming 3800 acres there, and employed 9 people; he was still recorded there in 1868. In 1842 he married Dorothea (or Dorothy, d.1891), daughter of William Moffat, farmer at Garwald, Eskdalemuir. His children included: James (b.1844); William Moffat (1846–1910), the eldest surviving son; Jane (1848–1918); Helen Elliot (b.1850); John (b.1852); and Thomas (b.1854). His younger sons went abroad. James (b.1804/5) stockingmaker in Denholm, probably on Eastgate. In the 1860s he was listed as a stocking-maker in Denholm, suggesting he had his own business. His wife was ‘Barbary’ and their children included George and Barbara. There is an obelisk to their memory at Borthwick Waas. James (1814–1900) 4th surviving son of Hawick lawyer and Town Clerk John. He trained as a lawyer himself and was partner in the firm of George & James Oliver with his older brother. In 1841 he was living on Buccleuch Street with his father and siblings, and was described as a clerk. He could be the James who was ‘sub-distributor’ in the stamp office on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was living at Teviot Lodge in 1861. In the mid-1800s he was recorded as owner of parts of Roughhead that had previously belonged to John and William Thomline, Adam and George Easton and James Hart. He had Mayfield House built on land that he inherited from his father. He was a Town Councillor, serving as Chairman of Wilton Parochial Board, Wilton Landward School Board and Wilton Heritors’ Committee. In 1852 he married Thomasina Pott (1830–80), sister of Gideon Pott of Knowesouth and daughter of George and Jane Elliot. Their children were: Elliot (b.1854), who was a partner with Geo. & Jas. Oliver for a while, but retired and left the district; Jane Pott (b.1858), who married John Elliot of Binks; Christian Watson (b.1860), buried at Ainzahatta, Spain; James John (b.1864), partner in the legal firm; Elizabeth Murray (b.1866), also buried at Ainzahatta; as well as George (b.1860), Mary Georgina (b.1866) and Thomas (b.1868), who all died young. He retired about 1893 and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Papers from roughly 1895–1919 are in the Borders Archive. James Rutherford (1817–1905) Auctioneer and Livestock Salesman of Bridge House and later Thornwood, only son of Andrew. He trained as a lawyer, and then joined his father’s auctioneering business. He was a leading figure in the town in Victorian times, being a Town Councillor, Magistrate, J.P. (from 1888), Chairman of Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, Governor of Hawick Savings Bank (1890–94), Secretary and Treasurer of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society (1842–1905), founder member, Honorary Secretary and Treasurer of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club (1859–1905), President of the Border Burghs’ Conservative Association (1878–92), President of the Archeological Society (1883–88). He was also a member of the Curling Club from 1844, being Secretary for several years, and the first Secretary of the Hawick Bowling Club. He was also Senior Magistrate 1857–58, resigning during the dispute over the railway line. He offered a site on Bridge Street for the new Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Church, but the congregation declined the offer at the time. He is said to have formed the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club after being black-balled from joining the other one (presumably the Agricultural society, formed earlier by Douglas of Cavers). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1852. He had the splendid Thornwood House built and is believed to have been owner of the first car in Hawick (a photograph shows him with a chauffeur and another man-servant in the grounds of Thornwood). Oliver Crescent and Oliver Place are named after him; his monogram ‘JRO’ is above 2 of the dormer windows at No. 3 Oliver Place, and the carved head above the entrance may be his likeness. In about 1874 he is listed as owner of the parts of Weensland and the ‘particrate’ lands of Hawick that had previously been held by James Dickson, as well as part of Roughheugh (earlier owned by James Knox). In 1849 he married Jane Rutherford (1828–55), daughter of builder Robert, and she died of typhus fever (after having 3 children). He secondly married his first wife’s niece, also Jane Rutherford (‘Mrs. Oliver’, the local historian), and they had 7 further children. His family included: Jane (1850–1910), who married Robert Inch; Andrew (b.1853), who died in infancy; Andrew Rutherford (b.1855), auctioneer; Alice Mary (b.1861), eldest daughter by his 2nd wife, who married Dr. John R. Hamilton; James (b.1863), also died in infancy; Catherine Brown (1864–1930), who married manufacturer Robert Innes and secondly married teacher H.H. Llewellyn; Evalene (1866–1934), who married Spencer Waterfall from Sheffield; Blanche Ada (b.1868), who married Dr. Drummond from Liverpool; William (1869–1919), a solicitor; and Douglas (b.1871). At least one portrait of him exists. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. James (b.1819/20) farmer at Denholm Mill, son of Archibald. He is recorded there in 1851, and was miller on a directory of 1852. He married Mary Hall and their children included Archibald. James (1823–1908) born in Newcastleton, son of shepherd George and Elizabeth Irving. In 1835 he emigrated to New York with 2 other brothers, to join their brother John, while the last brother, George, stayed in Liddesdale. They moved to a farm in Lagrange County, Indiana, where his father died in 1837 (the ‘sick year’). The family moved to Mishawaka and he attended school, but had to leave to support his mother and siblings. He first worked as a ditch-digger, then a cooper, before starting in a grist mill then an iron company. He eventually went into business for himself, making ploughs. He hit upon a novel manufacturing process and patented a ‘chilled steel plough’ (where the cooling method made the cutting surface superior). The Oliver Chilled Plow Works became one of the largest in the U.S.A., and was a standard tool of pioneer farmers. At its height the company employed 2000 people and the factory covered 27 acres of covered space, making 200,000 ploughs a year. He was a great benefactor of the town of South Bend, building a hotel (called the Oliver Hotel) and an opera house. The town presented him with a gold cup inscribed with the word ‘Copshawholm’, which his son used as the name for his new house there in 1900. He married Susan Doty in 1844, and she died in 1902. They had 2 children, Joseph (who carried on the business) and Josephine (who married the secretary of the company). When he died his fortune was nearly £15,000,000, making him one of the richest ever Borderers at that time. James (b.1824) son of James, who was a baker in Hawick. He worked as a journeyman baker. He was recorded in Hawick in 1855, but may then have moved to Langholm. He married Mary Murray, who was from Langholm. Their children included: Alexander (c.1854–1934), born in Langholm, who emigrated to Tasmania and taught for 40 years at the Penguin State School; Agnes (b.1855), who was born in Hawick and married George King; Jack; Ralphp; and Frank. James Walter (b.1840) born in Wilton Parish, son of George and Williamina (or ‘Mina’) Telfer. The family emigrated to Canada in 1844 and he eventually became a surgeon in Niagara Falls. James (b.1844) son of James and Dorothy Moffat, he was born in Roberton Parish. He married Martha Pollard and their children included: Dorothy Moffat, who married William Baxter and another man named Gilbert; William James, who married Nora Estelle Brown; and Jana E., who married William Johnston. Members of the family lived later in Western Australia. Rev. James (1845–1918) born in Teviothead, son of John and Helen Sibbald. He was educated at Newmill and then at Hawick Grammar School. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1863 and spent 2 years as an assistant teacher to Anthony Dodds at Buccleuch School (being succeeded by J.A.H. Murray). He was assistant minister at Selkirk and Bedrule and then at Nelston before being ordained as minister at Tweedmouth in 1870 and moving to St. James’.
Oliver

Portobello in 1880. He was President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association and represented them at the 1906 Jubilee celebration for the Hawick Archæological Society. He was said to be a great orator. He married Elizabeth Young of Howford. James Lindsay (1860–93) youngest son of Hawick lawyer George. He bought some property in New Zealand with his brother George Lindsay. However, he suffered from ill-health and returned to Scotland. He married Agnes Ellen (‘Nellie’), daughter of Peter Pennycook of New Hall. He took over running the farm at Greenriver (i.e. Hobbsburn) for his ill mother-in-law’s brother Henry Elliot. He hunted regularly with the Jedforest Hunt, although he eventually lost the use of one arm. He had one son, Harry. He died at Greenriver and is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. His wife and mother-in-law moved to Scarborough after his death. James John (b.1864) younger son of lawyer James, he worked in the family firm of Geo. & Jas. Oliver. In 1914, on the death of his cousin John Oliver of Lynnwood, he became senior partner in the firm. He also lived at Mayfield after his father died. He was a keen member of the Teviotdale Cycling Club and the Hawick Golf Club (where he was Captain for 2 years and Treasurer for 10 years). He was a founder member of the Border Club, and the last surviving original member. He was also Chairman of the Hawick Constitutional Club. He served as a Lay Elector, Church Warden and Treasurer (for over 50 years) for St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. During WWI he was a Special Constable and became Sheriff-Substitute for St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. During WWI he was a Special Constable and became Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire in 1930. He retired at the age of 82, owing to failing eyesight. In 1894 he married Robina Pennycook Scott and their children were Edith Agnes Scott (‘Nancy’, who married Harry Usher of Courthill), Thomasina (who married Victor Henry Wells-Cole), James Scott (also W.S.) and Tommy Scott. He is buried at St. Cuthbert’s. James Scott, W.S. (20th C.) son of James John, he was also a partner in Geo. & Jas. Oliver. James Kenneth Murray, O.B.E., ‘Ken’ (1914–99) auctioneer and successful horse-trainer who lived at Hassendeanbank. He was the son of Douglas and great-grandson of Andrew. As an amateur jockey he won many races, including the Scottish Grand National of 1950 on ‘Sanvina’. As a trainer he had nearly 1,000 winners, including 5 Scottish Grand National winners, and in 3 separate seasons he had 56 winners. He is also the only trainer to have had a horse come second 3 times in the Grand National, ‘Wynburgh’. He was founding Chairman of the National Trainers Federation and was largely responsible for the renaissance of the Doncaster Bloodstock Horse Sales. He was also sometimes known as the ‘Benign Bishop’ after one of his horses (or perhaps the other way around). He gave a speech at the Friday Hut in 1992. He married Joan Innes and they had children Susan (who married William Forster) and Douglas Stuart. He secondly married Rhona Wilkinson. A biography ‘The Benign Bishop’ (1994) was written by Dan Buglass. Jane see Helen Christina Easson Rees. Janet (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Southdean Mill in a rental roll of 1541, along with Patrick and Marion. Janet (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with Robert. Together they were tenants of lands valued at 8s 4d. Her name is given first, suggesting she was mother or older sister of Robert. Several other Olivers were tenants of 3 other parts of Lustruther. Janet (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Wool’ on a list of people who refused to take the Oath of Allegiance in 1684 and were declared rebels. It is unclear whether ‘Wool’ was Woll, or Wells or somewhere else around Jedforest. Jean ‘Jeanie Ma Lord’ (d.1819) said to be a descendant of ‘Hab o’ Hawick’ and cousin of ‘Clinty’. Although married, it is said that she retained her maiden name through strength of character and that her married name was Riddell or Turnbull. She was also known as ‘Jane’. She was well educated and her kitchen on Silver Street was a meeting place for the local literati. She wrote an account of the flood of 1767. In the 1837 election a Tory-supporter named Robert Paterson took refuge under the bed of her house (or former house) and was dragged out by the mob. She was known as a strong-willed eccentric, and her nickname came from her word being law among her circle of acquaintances. Stories are also told about how she was ‘fond of Dress and used to give considerable orders to the Drapers of the town’. She had a son called ‘Daft Robbie’, Dr. Oliver of the Navy. Despite the story that her maiden name was Oliver, her death record records her as ‘Jeany Scott spouse to deceased Robert Oliver – Jeany my Lord’; hence she may have been the Jean Scott who married Shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1756. Jeremiah (b.1735) son of Thomas and Janet Middlemas. He was born in Southdean Parish, but lived most of his life in Crailing. He married Margaret Leadhouse and their children were: Stephen (1782–58), tailor; Robert (b.1784); Robert (again, b.1785); Andrew (b.1787); Richard (b.1788); and Agnes (b.1795). Some of his descendants emigrated.
to New Zealand. John (13th C.) merchant in Berwick, recorded in 1260. He is one of the earliest known Olivers in the Borders. John (15th C.) recorded as master of works for a bridge in Dumfries in 1460 and again in 1465. It is unclear how he was related to other Olivers. John (15th/16th C.) son of Robert in Strange and brother of Ingram. In 1494/5 he was listed among 8 Olivers and a Shiel when they had remission for comming with the English. He was also described in 1502 as brother of Ingram when he was allowed to pay a fine, along with Robert and David, ‘in Stryndis’, for being involved with several raids around Jedburgh, Rucastle, Lanton and Bedrule. He and Robert (perhaps the same Robert who was his father) specifically stole 6 oxen and cows from Philip Ormiston at Maxton; Mark Ker of Dolphinston was surety for him. Additionally in 1502, along with his brother Ingram and David ‘Nae Guid Preist’, he had remission for stealing oxen from Ancrum, as well as sheep, a cow and other items from Maxton; Mark Ker of Dolphinston served as his surety. He was probably ‘Long John Oliver’ (‘longus’ in Latin), who, along with ‘Little John Oliver’ and David in Stryndis was also allowed to pay a fine for stealing a list (long and detailed) of goods from Martin Wood in Whitafield in 1502, with Mark Ker of Dolphinston as his surety. Furthermore, in 1502 he was also charged with: stealing 2 oxen from Adam Moscrop in Jedburgh, along with his brother Ingram; stealing a horse and 4 oxen from Thomas Pringle in Smallholm; stealing a horse from John Cranston in Crailing; stealing 2 horses and some sheep from George Davidson in Raperlaw; and stealing a horse and goods from Bongate in Jedburgh. Once again Mark Ker was his surety. Finally in 1502, along with another John and John’s brother David, all from Strange, he was allowed to compone for stealing a horse from Ednam. Also in 1502 he Martin and Matthew componed for stealing 2 cows and more than 100 sheep from the Laird of Bedrule at Bedrule and Fulton; again Mark Ker was his surety. John (15th/16th C.) son of Gilbert in ‘stryndis’. In 1502 he and his brother James had remission for a series of crimes: stealing an ox from Ancrum; stealing 2 cows from Jedburgh; and treason. His surety was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. Also in 1502 he is recorded as son of Gilbert in ‘stryndis’ when he had remission for stealing a horse and a sword from Smallholm; his surety was again Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. Additionally, along with his brother David and another John, all from Strange, he was allowed to compone in 1502 for stealing a horse from Ednam. Furthermore, in 1502, he was recorded as son of Gilbert ‘in kiclewis’ when he was allowed to compone, along with David for stealing 19 sheep and a cow from Maton and six sheep from Muirhouse law; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was his surety. He was also recorded in 1502 as son of Gilbert when, along with Martin in Strange, he was allowed to compone for stealing a cow from Bedrule; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was again the surety. He was also recorded as son of Gilbert in 1502 when he was allowed to compone, along with his brother David, for stealing a horse and a pot from Ednam. He was recorded further in 1502 being ‘in le stryndis’ when, along with David, he was allowed to compone for crimes commited against Gilbert Lamb at Jedburgh, including seriously wounding him; Andrew Kerr was surety. He is probably the same man as ‘Little John’ (‘parva’ in Latin) who had remission in 1502, along with ‘Long John’ and David, for stealing goods from Martin Wood in Whitafield; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was his surety, suggesting he was the same John. John ‘Cadger’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1505 when ‘Rob with the Dog’ had remission for intercommuning with him and David ‘Nae Guid Priest’. He is there said to be called Cageare. John (16th C.) tenant at ‘Rontreih’ (probably Rowantreehill) in 1541 along with Robert, paying 11 shillings. Several other Olivers (John, Margaret, Adam and Robert ‘the schireff’) were tenants in the other parts of the farm and may be related. John (16th C.) listed as tenant at ‘Rowntreih’ along with Marion and Adam, paying 22 shillings yearly. This is separate from the John who was in ‘Rontreih’ with Robert. John ‘Blackheid’ (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, listed separately from another John and several other Olivers. He was tenant of part of Lustruther valued at 8s 4d. John (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with Katherine and Marion, who were probably his daughters or sisters. Together they were tenants of lands valued at 25s, while several other Olivers were tenants of 3 smaller parts of Lustruther. John (16th C.) tenant at Whiteside in 1541 in Jedforest, along with Patrick, Gilbert and Andrew. Probably the same man was recorded as ‘Jake Ollyver of Whitside’ in a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. George and ‘Patte’ Oliver were also listed as being at Whiteside, and hence probably related. John (16th C.) tenant in Harelawcleuch in 1541 along with Richard Oliver and Patrick Laidlaw.
John (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the lands was valued at 25s. Other tenants there included Ninian, Walter, 'Little' Roger, 'Lang' Roger and Robert, called 'Laird'. John 'Jock' (16th C.) recorded as 'Joke Ollyver of Lustrodder younger' in 1544, when he was among Olivers and others who gave assurance to the English Crown. William, Hob and Ringan were also listed at Lustruther and so were probably related. John (16th C.) tenant at Slacks in 1541, along with Thomas, who was probably his father or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Charles renting the other part of Slacks. He was also recorded as being 'of Slakis' in a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. John (16th C.) tenant at Nether Dykeraw in 1541, along with James, Michael, Adam and Robert. John 'Jock' (16th C.) listed among Scotsmen who pledged loyalty to the English Crown in 1544. He is recorded as 'Joke Ollyver of Cresters', which is probably a transcription error for Chesters. John 'Jock' (16th C.) recorded at 'Fowden' (probably 'Sowden', i.e. Southdean) in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. John (16th C.) recorded being from Bedrule when he was cited to appear before the Privy Council in 1566. He is probably the priest from Bedrule listed among several Borders clerics ordered to appear before the Lords of Secret Council in 1569; he was there recorded as 'Maister Johnne Oliver in Bedroule'. He was presumably a pre-Reformation priest who was cited for not giving up the old ways. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'John Oliphe in Tempilhall' when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Templehall and Brewlands in Rulewater in 1604. He was also one of the people who were directed by a court action to leave Templehall and Brewlands in 1605, this being brought by George Turnbull, acting as 'tutor' to Jean and Beatrix Turnbull. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as tenant in Lethem along with Simon Robson in 1623. 2 men were acquitted of stealing sheep from them. John (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Bank according to a 1609 rental roll of Jedforest. He is probably the John in Bank whose wife's will, Grizel Hall, was recorded in 1685. John (17th C.) recorded as smith near Chesters (Southdean) in a list of tenants of Jedforest in 1669. He is probably related to the Thomas who was recorded as smith at Chesters at 1694 and could be one of the 2 men called John who were also listed as residents at Chesters in 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant of 'Rodes' in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear where this was exactly, but it is listed right after Whiteside. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Highlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John (17th C.) tenant in 'Slacks', listed on the 1669 rental roll of Jedburgh Forest. George and William were also tenants at the same time. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Fowler and their children included: Agnes (b.1678); and Bessie (b.1680). John (d.1679) from Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded as one of the men banished to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and dying at Moul Head of Deerness, in Orkney, when their ship wrecked and they were ordered shut up beneath the hatches. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick who married 'Jenet Bo' (presumably Janet Boa). Their son William was born in Hawick in 1674. John (17th C.) tenant in Falside. In 1679 he served as surety for his brother Thomas, 'servitor of the Marquis of Douglas', who was a Covenanter supporter. Perhaps the same John was recorded as tenant on the 1694 Horse Tax Rolls along with Steven. John (17th C.) listed 'in Wadiespindles' among people declared rebels in 1684 for refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance. John (d.c.1685) tenant in Blackleemouth when his will was recorded in 1685. John (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. John (17th C.) appears to be recorded as 'Stand the Lan' (or perhaps 'Lau') in the Hearth Tax records for the area of Jedburgh in 1694. It is unclear if this was a nickname or a location of some sort. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Strange in 1689, when he headed a list of Southdean parishioners who complained that their minister had failed to pray for William and Mary. John (17th C.) resident of Strange in Southdean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He was surely related to George who was also recorded there. John (17th C.) resident of 'hoa cleughfit' according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. This entry comes just before Waterside, and so was presumably in the Jedforest area. John of Dinlabyre (17th/18th C.) 1st Oliver Laird, he was descended from the Oli vers of Lustruther. He may be the tenant recorded at Lustruther and Hyndlee in 1694, when he paid tax on 6 hearths (so he was an important farmer in the area at that time). He probably purchased the Dinlabyre estate from the Elliots in about 1698. He is described as 'elder' of Dinlabyre in 1719 when he purchased the lands of Larriston from Robert Elliot. His eldest son was William, who succeeded to Dinlabyre, and married Mary, daughter of William Chisholme of that Ilk. His 2nd daughter Mary married John, son of William Chisholme of that Ilk (and therefore he had a son-in-law and a brother-in-law who were brother and sister!). It is unclear how he was related to the Olivers of Southdean and neighbouring areas. John (d.1739) last of the Olivers of Ashtrees. The lands passed to his only child Helen, and her husband, John Scott. John (1684/5–1750) tenant farmer at Stonedge. He married Helen ‘Andrum’, who died in 1762, aged 71 (or possibly 76). Along with their daughter Euphen, they were recorded on a memorial stone at old Abbotside Kirk. John of Dinlabyre (d.bef. 1775) only son of William and Mary Chisholme. He may have been Sheriff of Roxburghshire, as well as Procurator-Fiscal. He also owned the lands of Over and Nether Larriston and others in Liddesdale. In 1748, along with his father, he gifted sacramental cups to Castleton Kirk. He is probably the ‘Jo. Olipher’ who paid the window tax in Castleton Parish for both Haggiehaugh and Dinlabyre House. In 1734 he married Violet, eldest daughter of Thomas Douglas, who was brother of Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was succeeded by his eldest son William (b.1738); he may have had other sons, but their names are not known. His daughter Jean married Samuel Mitchelson, W.S., in 1753. John (18th C.) referred to as ‘senior’ in an account of the 1767 flood. He and shoemaker Thomas Waugh ‘got to the top of the kiln’, but then needed people to throw ropes to save them. Rev. John (1707–1755) youngest son of Thomas, tenant in Southdean Mill. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1733, and became assistant minister at Southdean in 1736. In 1743 he took over as minister of Southdean on the death of his predecessor John Inglis. He paid the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Southdean Parish in 1748. His wife, Isobel Hall (daughter of Edward of Whitelee in Redesdale) died in London in 1774. Their children were Elizabethe, Thomas, Janet and Edward. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Susan Hope and their children included: George (b.1756); Susan (b.1760); and William (b.1761). It is unclear how he was related to other shoemaking Olivers, however the other shoemaker John was witness to a baptism for him in 1760, along with blacksmith Robert Telfer. Given the names, he may have been the son of shoemaker George, born in 1724, with the other John being his cousin. He may be the shoemaker John who witnessed a baptism for merchant William Veitch in 1757. John (18th C.) shoemaker of Hawick. He may be the son of Robert and Bessie Blackhall who was born in Hawick in 1734. He married Isabel Scott in 1756. Their children included: Agnes; Robert, tailor in Hawick, probably ‘Clinty’; Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (1764–1838), who died in Peebles; Agnes (again, b.1766); Alison; Andrew; and William. His son William was named as a second cousin in the 1808 will of William, ‘Auld Cash’; William’s brother was stated to be tailor Robert, who may have been ‘Clinty’. In fact he was probably a full cousin of ‘Auld Cash’. In 1760 he was witness to a baptism for another shoemaker of the same name, who may have been his cousin. Either he or the other shoemaker John was witness for shoemaker James Brown in 1766. John (b.1735) son of Walter and Margaret Turnbull, he was born in Hawick. He married Helen Currer in Hawick in 1763; she was from Bedrule Parish, daughter of James. Their children included: Helen (b.1764); Margaret (b.1766); Jane (b.1768), who married James, son of George and Agnes Douglas (who were related to the Timpedean Douglasses); and Agnes (b.1772). The witnesses in 1766 were James Currer (probably his father-in-law) and Robert Oliver (presumably a relative, but there were several contemporary men of this name). James Haining suggests that he secondly married Agnes Ekron, but that seems to be confusion with a different John (b.1740). John (b.1740) son of James, farmer at Earlside and Margaret Douglas, who came from the Trows family. He was a merchant in Hawick. In 1766 he married Agnes (1748–80), daughter of merchant James Ekron and Isobel Richardson. Their children included: Isabel (b.1767), who died young; Agnes (d.1775), who also died young; Elizabeth (1771–1844), who married linen merchant Charles Scott, and not George Hall from Duns, as some Hall of Philadelphia family histories have suggested; James (b.1773), died in infancy; James (again, b.1775), also died young; Isabel (again, b.1777); and William (b.1779), died in infancy. James Oliver Senior and ‘J. Oliver Jnr.’ were witnesses to the baptism of his first child, and seem likely to have been his father and brother. William Scott, merchant, and James Aitkin witnessed the the baptism of James in 1773, while J. Oliver, merchant and T. Aitkin were witnesses in 1777. His wife Agnes’ had a book of the catechism that survived as a family heirloom. John (b.c.1765)
recorded as ‘independent’ at Newton in Wilton Parish in 1841. He was probably a retired farmer there. He lived there with Helen, who was probably his wife. John (18th/19th C.) said to have been son of William and Isabella Stewart. He lived in Wilton Parish for at least the time when his children were baptised, and was later at Essendine. He married Margaret Douglas in Castleton Parish in 1770. Their children included: Helen (b.1775); John (b.1777); Francis (b.1779); Isabel (b.1782); William (b.1785); Robert (b.1787), who emigrated to Pictou County, Nova Scotia; Henry (b.1791), who emigrated with his brother Robert; and Margaret (b.1789). John (18th/19th C.) mason listed at Stobs Castle in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at Denholm Mill. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may have been father of Archibald, who was also at Denholm Mill in 1825. John (1770–1849) 2nd son of James, ironmonger and Cornet, he was grandfather of J.J. Oliver of Mayfield. He became a lawyer and set up in partnership with John Elliot about 1791. Oliver & Elliot were appointed agents for the Commercial Bank in 1820 (or shortly afterwards), and were listed in Pigott’s 1825/6 directory on Buccleuch Street. His house at 5 Buccleuch Street is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He is probably also the ‘John Oliver Esq.’ who is shown on Wood’s map as owner of land around where Mayfield Park was built. He served as Hawick’s Town Clerk 1810–41, being originally appointed jointly with James Inglis (he was recorded as already Town Clerk in 1808 when his son James died). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He arranged for the first Burgh Seal in 1817 (and in fact paid for the small version of the seal himself), which led to the design for the Town’s Coat of Arms. He was also one of the founding members of the Hawick Curling Club. In 1825 he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. For a while he was in partnership with his sons (at least William and Thomas) as woollen manufacturers; together with William Wilson & Sons they purchased Weensland Corn Mill in about 1836 and had Weendland Mill built there. In Pigott’s 1837 directory he is listed as agent of the Commercial Bank and also for North British Insurance, along with his son George; he is also listed as a writer on Buccleuch Street, with ‘John & George’ being listed separately as writers and ‘justice of peace clerks’. He was living on Buccleuch Street (at about No. 11) in 1841, with his children William, James, Thomas and Mary. On his retirement he was presented with a silver punch bowl by the Burgh. He married Jean (or Jane), daughter of George Fairley, merchant of Greenlaw. Their children were: James (1802–08), who died young; George (b.1803), also a lawyer; John (b.1805), farmer at Caerlenrig and Whitropefoot; Jane (b.1807), who married William Aitcheson of Linhope; Christian (b.1809), who married Liverpool merchant William Watson; Margaret (b.1810), who married Dr. Harrison of the East India Company; Mary (b.1812); William (b.1813), farmer at Hallrule and Barnes; James (b.1814) also a lawyer, who had Mayfield House built; and Thomas Fairley (b.1816), farmer at West Fortune, Haddington. He is buried at St. Mary’s. A portrait of him exists. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Anne Niel in Ashkirk Parish in 1800 (with his wife’s name given as ‘Agnes’). Their children included: Isabel (b.1801), who married John White of Midshiel; Janet (b.1802), who married Francis Napier Scott; Alexander (b.1804), miller and later keeper of Ashkirk Toll-bar; Jane (b.1806); and James (b.1809). His widow could be the 80 year old pauper of the same name (born in Minto Parish) living with Barbara Scott in Denholm in 1851 (and who had a son Alexander in Minto in 1800). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitfield in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 5 horses at that time. John (c.1786–1847) from the Hawick area. He emigrated to Canada. He married Agnes Rutherford and their children were: Janet (c.1817–47); George (c.1820–1900), who died in Carberry, Manitoba; and Andrew (c.1827–50), who died in New Orleans. He and his wife died in Galt, Ontario. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick man known locally as a musician, probably on the fiddle (noted as such by W.N. Kennedy in 1863, with no additional information given). John (1781–1857) born in Bedrule Parish, son of James. He was miller of Hawick Mill. He is recorded in Pigott’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and was farmer and miller on the Crescent in the 1841 census. He was also recorded as a nail-maker at Hawick Mill in the 1837 directory and a nail-maker on the Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at Hawick Mill House and recorded as farmer of 50 acres and nail-maker, employing 6 men. He was living with his sister-in-law Margaret Scott and nephew Robert Renwick. He was still listed as miller at Hawick Mill in Slater’s 1852 directory. John (b.c.1785) shoemaker at 4 Cross Wynd, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was recorded on the Cross Wynd with his wife Margaret. It is unclear how he might have been related to other shoemaking Olivers. John (1789/90—bef. 1861) tailor in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 15 North Hermitage Street. His daughter Anne was still living there in 1861. He could be the John who was recorded as subscription librarian in Newcastle in 1852. John (18th/19th C.) nailer at Teviothaugh. He was recorded in 1815 among Denholm men accused of ‘mobbing and defacing water bailifs’, but acquitted. John (b.c.1790) miller at Haughhead in Hawick Parish. He is listed there in 1841, along with his wife Alison; this could be Alison Turnbull, who married a John in Kirkton Parish in 1809. John (c.1800—bef. 51) framework knitter. He came from the same family as Mary, who married Walter Grieve. He was recorded on the Loan (around No. 6) in 1841. He married Margaret Purves, who was from Bedrue. Their children were: Margaret (b.c.1826); John (b.1828), who moved to Vancouver; Robert (1831—1906), who emigrated to South Australia; Helen (b.1834); Martha (b.1836); Isabella or Elizabeth (b.1838); and Janet (b.1840). By 1851 his wife was a widow at No. 6 Loan, and she was still there in 1861, working as a ‘Mangle Keeper’. John (b.1805) 2nd surviving son of Hawick Town Clerk John. He farmed at Caerlenrig and Whiteroepoooot. He was named in 1837 along with his brother George, and Robert Anderson (also a lawyer in Hawick) among Tories who had jointly purchased land in Selkirkshire for the purposes of voting there. He was recorded at Caerlenrig in 1861, farming 80 arables acres and 600 acres of pasture and employing 5 people. He was recorded as farmer at ‘Rigg’ in 1868. He married Helen Sibbald and they had 4 sons and 2 daughters, John (b.1843), James (b.1845), George (b.1847), Jane (b.1849), Agnes (b.1852) and John. John (1809/10—70) cattle dealer in Lilliesleaf. He married Jane Young, who died at Lilliesleaf. He married Jane Young, who died at Lilliesleaf. He farmed at Caerlenrig in 1861, farming 80 arables acres and 600 acres of pasture and employing 5 people. He was recorded as farmer at ‘Rigg’ in 1868. He married Helen Sibbald and they had 4 sons and 2 daughters, John (b.1843), James (b.1845), George (b.1847), Jane (b.1849), Agnes (b.1852) and John. John (1809/10—70) cattle dealer in Lilliesleaf. He married Jane Young, who died at Dryden in 1893, aged 74. They are buried in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (b.1843) son of farmer John and grandson of the Hawick Town Clerk of the same name who founded the family law firm. He resided at Lynnwood House. He became the senior partner in Geo. & Jas. Oliver. He married Euphemia, daughter of John Johnstone of Cralling Hall. Their daughters were Helen Sibbald, Mary Beatrice Simson and Elizabeth Rutherford. He was a prominent agriculturalist, being tenant of Whiterope and President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club. He was also Vice-President of the Sacred Harmonic Society in the 1880s. John (b.1850) eldest son of lawyer George. He succeeded his father as partner in the firm of ‘writers and bank agents’, ‘Geo. & Jas. Oliver’. He also became tenant in Borthaugh after his father’s death. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Burnflat, which had previously belonged to George. He represented Wilton Parish on the County Council for 9 years. He was an enthusiastic promoter of the Border Club. He is probably the John of Borthaugh who composed ‘March Militaire: The Border Mounted Volunteers’. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1880. He married Edith Mary, daughter of Thomas Cobb of Kent (a family that can trace its ancestry back to the time of Edward II). Their children were: Mary Lindsay, a musician, who moved to Moline, Illinois; George Lindsay, a Captain in the West India Regiment; John Lindsay, who served in the Boer War and moved to Salisbury, Rhodesia; Thomas Lindsay, an engineer with the Chicago and Rock Island Railway Company, who died of typhoid in Moline in 1905; James Lindsay, who followed his brother to the U.S.A. as an engineer; Faulconer Lindsay, who became a farmer in New Zealand; Gordon Lindsay, who also went to Chicago to work for the railway; and Edith Margaret Lindsay. The entire family had the middle name ‘Lindsay’, in memory of his mother and to distinguish this branch of the family. John (19th/20th C.) eldest son of hosiery manager Robert. He trained as an architect, working for Alex Inglis. In WWI he was with the R.A.M.C. and received the Military Medal. He was later an architect in South Africa. John A.L. partner in the firm of Geo. & Jas. Oliver, the 5th generation of Hawick lawyers. He started practising in about 1977. Katherine (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with John and Marion. Together they were tenants of lands valued at 25s, while several other Olivers were tenants of 3 smaller parts of Lustruther. Ken see James Kenneth Murray. Leo (13th C.) recorded as ‘Lionus Oliver de Thorndon’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was also listed in Coquetdale as a fugitive. His lands were in England, but, nevertheless, he is an early example of this surname. Richard, son of Thomas, is also listed in 1279 and possibly related. Lyle (16th C.) tenant in Roughlee in 1544, when he was among Olivers who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is listed as ‘Lyonell Ollyver of Rowgh- leis’. Lyle (17th C.) tenant in Rouchhirst according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed along with Thomas ‘minor’, who may have been related. Margaret (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541, along with her son William. Their steading was valued at 12s 6d. Other tenants at Mervinslaw included James and William alias ‘Merchant’. Margaret (16th C.) tenant at Hindhaughhead in 1541 along with her son Gilbert. They paid 25 shillings yearly. Margaret (16th C.) joint tenant in Wylie’s Hill in 1541, along with Margaret Wylie, paying 25s yearly. Another part of the farm was tenanted by (presumably a different) Margaret, paying 12s 6d yearly. Margaret (16th C.) joint tenant in the larger part of Westerhouses in 1541, along with Nicholas. Alexander was tenant of 1/3 of the farm. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1658 when she was fined by the Magistrates for calling Isabell Scott ‘witchesgaist’, and saying that she devoered her awine child’. Margaret (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Slack’ in 1684 on a list of people who refused to take the Oath of Allegiance and were declared rebels. She was among a relatively small number of women who were prosecuted for being Covenanters. Margaret (18th C.) servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791, when she was working for John Elliot. Margaret (18th/19th C.) recorded along with Mary in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. Margaret (b.1778/9) grocer at Chesters in 1841 and 1851. She was born in Crailing Parish and was widow, probably of one of the local Olivers. Marion (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Southdean Mill in a rental roll of 1541 along with Patrick and Janet. Her name is listed as ‘Marion Olivere’ (which is probably ‘Marion’, but could also be ‘Mary’). Marion (16th C.) listed as tenant at ‘Rowntrehill’ in 1541 along with John and Adam, paying 11 shillings yearly. Several other Olivers (John, Robert and Robert ‘the schireff’) were tenants in the other parts of the farm and may be related. Marion (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with her son William (‘the Lawyer’). Other tenants were 2 Johns (one called ‘Blackhead’), Janet Katherine and another Marion. Marion (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with John and Katherine. Together they were tenants of lands valued at 25s, while several other Olivers were tenants of 3 smaller parts of Lustruther. She is separate from the mother of ‘the Lawyer’. Martin (15th C.) brother of Robert. He is recorded in 1493 when he was fined at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for non-appearance. Other Olivers who were fined at the same time were Robert and James son of Gilbert, Matthew son of Geoffrey and Robert brother of Matthew. It is unclear how he might have been related to these other Olivers, or who his brother Robert was. However, probably the same Martin was recorded in 1494/5 as brother of Matthew (although it is possible that what is meant is brother of Robert in Strange), when a group of 8 Olivers and a Shiel had remission for communing with the English. In 1502, along with his brother Matthew and James son of Gilbert, he was allowed to compone for stealing 200 sheep from the tenants of Jedburgh, Ruecastle, Lanton and Bedrule; his surety was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. Probably the same Martin in Strange was allowed to compone in 1502, along with John son of Gilbert, for stealing a cow from Bedrule; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was again the surety. Further in 1502 he was allowed to compone, along with Matthew (both in Strange) for stealing 4 lambs and an ox from George Russell in Fulton. Also in 1502 he Matthew and John componed for stealing 200 sheep from the tenants of Jedburgh, Ruecastle, Lanton and Bedrule; his surety was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. Probably the same Martin in Strange was allowed to compone in 1502, along with John son of Gilbert, for stealing a cow from Bedrule; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was again the surety. He is probably the Martin who was one of the 4 Olivers in Strynds who were sentenced to execution in 1502 for their ‘diverse reiffis, hereschippis, slauchtaris, and stouthis’; the others were Robert, David and Matthew. Martin (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name was given as ‘Matyn Ollyver of Fawside’, with Ringan and Dandy Oliver also listed there. Martin (17th C.) resident of Slacks in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His name appears to be written ‘Marin’. Matthew (15th C.) son of Geoffrey. He is recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. His brother Robert was also fined at the same time, as well as James and Robert sons of Gilbert, and Martin brother of Robert. Probably the same Matthew was also recorded in 1493 when his brother Robert’s charges of common theft and delivery of stolen goods were suspended. Probably the same Matthew was recorded as brother of Martin (although the text is ambiguous) in 1494/5 among 8 Olivers and a Shiel who had remission for communing with the English. In 1502, along with his brother Martin and James son of Gilbert, he was allowed to compone for stealing 200 sheep from the tenants of Jedburgh, Ruecastle, Lanton.
and Bedrule; his surety was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is likely the same Matthew in ‘le stryndis’ who was allowed to compone in 1502 for bringing in 11 Nixons to steal a black horse from Corbet (in the company of Robert Oliver), 2 horses from Doplhinston and 10 sheep from the Laird of Bedrule; his surety was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. Further in 1502 he was allowed to compone, along with Martin (both in Strange) for stealing 4 lambs and an ox from George Russell in Fulton. Also in 1502 he Martin and John componed for stealing 2 cows and more than 100 sheep from the Laird of Bedrule at Bedrule and Fulton; Andrew Kerr was again his surety. He is likely to be the Matthew recorded in 1502 who was sentenced to hanging in Jedburgh, along with Robert, David and Martin, all residing at Strynds (near Abbotrule); the judgement was on account of failure to find sureties. A note in the records of the Justice-aiire adds that the men were delivered to the Sheriff, so presumably the sentence was carried out. Michael (16th C.) tenant at Nether Dykeraw in 1541, along with James, John, Adam and Robert. Michael (b.1820s) farmer at the Flex in 1841. His wife was Helen and they had a daughter Helen. Michael (b.1816/7) born at Whitlaw, he was Constable in Teviothead Parish. He lived at Teindside Slope in 1851, but by 1861 he had moved to Melrose. His wife was Mina and they had children Williamina and William. Mrs. James Rutherford (1839–1914), born Jane Rutherford, she was the second wife of James and step-mother of Andrew R. The couple had 7 children together. She had a strong interest in local history, writing ‘Upper Teviotdale and the Scots of Buccleuch’ (1887) and ‘Border Sketches’ (1904), as well as articles for the Transactions. She was usually referred to as simply ‘Mrs. Oliver of Thornwood’. She also had short stories published in Chambers Journal. She was involved in Conservative politics, being an active member of the Primrose League. She ceremoniously laid the foundation stone for the new Post Office with a silver trowel in 1892; her husband owned all of the neighbouring land, and she was involved in establishing the Post Office there. She gave a speech at the unveiling of the Hornshole Monument in 1901. She was Guest at the Common Riding of 1902. In 1903 she unveiled the plaque on the Sclaterford Bridge. She was an active member of the Primrose League. Her portrait is in the Museum, by an unknown artist. Murray (19th C.) elder of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk in the latter part of the 19th century. Nellie ‘Nell o the Bar’ (19th C.) wife of Kit Paterson (descendant of ‘Pawkie’). The ‘bar’ presumably refers to the Loan Toll-bar, near where they lived. Nicholas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502. He was the representative of John Rutherford of Dundale to give suit for Rutherford’s lands of Grubet at the Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh. Nicholas (16th C.) joint tenant in the larger part of Westerhouses in 1541, along with Margaret. Alexander was tenant of 1/3 of the farm. Ninian (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541, with his part of the lands valued at 25s. Tenants of the other parts included John, Walter, ‘Little’ Roger, ‘Lang’ Roger and Robert, called ‘Laird’. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Ranyon Ollyver’ in the same place as William of ‘Myrleslawe’ in 1544, when he was among a list of Scotsmen swearing allegiance to the English King. They may have been based at Mervinslaw. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) listed at Falside among Scotsmen who pledged loyalty to the English Crown in 1544. His name is listed as ‘Ranyon Ollyver of Fawsid’. ‘Dandy Ollyver of the same’ is also listed and hence surely related. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded at Lustruther among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. Other men at the same place were William, Hob and Jock, younger. Ninian (17th C.) resident of Woodhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (d.1736) farmer at Smallcleughfoot in Jedwater, near to Ferniehirst Mill. His name is also written ‘Ringam’. He was famed as one the most important of the local Olivers in his day, holding a position of trust by the Baron of Ferniehirst and being known for his great strength. Many stories of his feats were current in Jedforest into the 19th century. One tale involves the liberation for 2 friends from Newcastle Jail. Another involves him shooting the dogs of some hunters who rode through his corn (this being amplified in James Telfer’s poem ‘Auld Ringan’); they were said to have reported him to the King, leading to his arrest by royal warrant. A different version says that he was a Covenanter, who fought at Bothwell Bridge, then supposedly slew a Highlander champion in single combat and later came to blows in a dispute with the young Marquess of Lothian, ending up imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. After the Revolution he is said to have returned to his farm and attended the Cameronian Chapel at Denholm. His tale is described by Sir Walter Scott, in Lang’s ‘Stories of the Border Marches’ and in the ballad by James Telfer (published in 1824 and revised for the 1852 edition). The extent to which any of the details are true is completely unclear, although Abraham Oliver is recorded as resident at Smailcleughfoot in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, and could have been a close relative – ‘Auld Ringan sat i’ the Smailcleugh Tower, Even at his ain hearth-stane; And his mind did roam on youthful deeds, Of days that now were gane’ [JTE]. He is also said to have died in jail in Edinburgh and to be buried in Greyfriars Churchyard. His ‘Andrea Ferrara’ sword was kept by the inventor James Veitch, whose great-grandmother was his sister; it was later owned by the Veitches of Inchbonny. He had a son, Robert. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (d.1736) tailor in Falside. In 1698 his twin sons Stephen and Andrew were baptised in Southdean Parish, Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1538 being made ‘chamberlain’ responsible by the Crown for collecting the rentals in Jedforest. He was ‘Sir’ (or ‘domino’), probably meaning that he was a priest rather than a knight. He was allowed rents from 40 shillings worth of land. It is unclear how he was related to other Olivers. Patrick (16th C.) tenant at ‘Rouchchesteris’ in Jedforest according to a rental roll of 1541. It is unclear where this farm was, but probably near Strange and Southdean Mill, where he may have been related to other Olivers. Patrick (16th C.) tenant in Southdean Mill in 1541, along with Janet and Marion. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th C.) tenant at Whiteside in Jedforest in 1541, along with Gilbert, Andrew and John. His name was listed first and so he may have been the senior family member. He is also recorded as ‘Patte Ollyver of Whiteside’ in a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. ‘Jake’ and ‘Gorge’ Oliver were also listed as being at Whiteside in 1544, and hence probably related. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th C.) first man listed among the Olivers who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. He was listed as ‘Patte Ollyver of the Bushe’, his lands probably being Bush near Banchester. Patrick (17th C.) resident at Hassendean recorded in 1684 among the men declared as rebels for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Patrick (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. 2 men with this same name were listed along with other Olivers, and a Common and a Laidlaw. Patrick (1720/1–79) died at Bridgehouse in Castleton Parish. His wife Margaret Beattie died in 1793, aged 60. He is probably an ancestor of James and Peter, who were merchants in Newcastle. He and his wife are buried at Ettleton. Patrick (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Westshiels in Southdean Parish. He had 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax in the same year. He may also have been known as Peter. His children included: Patrick (b.1783); and James (b.1785). Other children may have been Mary (b.c.1779), Margaret (b.1785), Andrew (b.1786), Thomas (b.1786) and Isabel (b.1788). Peter (16th C.) described as ‘sontymes receipt with’ (i.e. reset with) George Ker of Primside Mill when he was accused by the English Warden of stealing sheep from him in 1589. Peter (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He lived for a while at Hyndlee and was shepherd to ‘Brockalaw’ (i.e. on nearby Brockie Law). A story is told by his son Robert, recounted in ‘The local historian’s table book’ (1844) of how he encountered one of the fairy folk. Peter (1783–1861) son of Patrick, tenant at Westshiels in Southdean Parish. He married Mary Fowler and their children John (1826–1917) and Robert (b.1827) were born in Edinburgh. He died at Cannonmills, Edinburgh. Peter (1789/90–1845) son of James and Jane Armstrong, he was born at Burnmouth in Castleton Parish. He was a merchant in Newcastle, but was declared bankrupt in 1817, with Walter Armstrong of Burnmouth appointed as trustee. He is ‘P. Oliver’, merchant in Castleton, in the subscriber list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 (ordering 2 copies). He married Elizabeth Murray, who died in 1864, aged 75; she was probably daughter of Thomas Murray and Janet Inglis. Their children included: James (1812/3–31); Jeannie (1813/4–35); David (1817–18); Janet (1819–28); Thomas (1820/1–41); David (again, b.1823); John (1825/6–33); Alexander (1830–31); Janet (again, 1833–34); and James (b.1837). Most of their children died young, in either Edinburgh or at Whisgills. Philip (16th C.) recorded among a list of the occupiers of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Richard (13th C.) listed in the 1279 assize roll for Northumberland. He appears there as ‘Ricardus fili Thomae Oliver’, and so his father was Thomas. He seems to have been connected with the lands of St. Paul, probably in Coquetdale. He may be related to the Leo who also appears in the same roll. Probably the same ‘Ricardum Oliver’ is listed on a panel deciding on the lands held by the Earl of Dunbar in Northumberland in 1290. Richard (16th C.) tenant in Harelawcleuch in 1541 along with John Oliver and Patrick Laidlaw. Richard (17th C.) listed as resident of Bairnkine along with Andrew and Robert in 1684 when they were declared fugitives for refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance. They were surely all related. If he managed to escape persecution then he may be the Richard who was given the rank of Lieutenant in the Roxburghshire Fencibles after the Revolution. Richard (17th C.) cottar at Fodderlee in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (13th C.) listed in a 1288 receipt for the fee of Alexander, son of the Earl of Dunbar, made at Berwick. He was recorded as ‘Robertus Oliuer’ Burgess of Berwick in 1291 as part of the Ragman Rolls. Also in 1291/2 he had 2 letters of safe-conduct, and was there described as a merchant of Berwick.

In a court case in 1293 (where a man stole money from Newcastle) he is referred to as Constable of Berwick Castle. Robert (14th C.) recorded as ‘Olyver’ in 1387 when he witnessed a document for Sir Thomas Strother in Newcastle. He is one of the earliest known Olivers who may have a local connection. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘le stryndis’ (i.e. Strange) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. His name headed a list of 8 Olivers and a Shiel who had remission in 1494/5 for the crime of communing with the English. The others listed were his sons Ingram and John, as well as Matthew, Martin (‘his brother’, although it is unclear if this means Martin’s brother or his), Robert son of Gilbert (who was therefore clearly a different man), James and William (‘his brothers’, probably meaning Robert’s brothers, i.e. other sons of Gilbert) and Gilbert Shiel in Bedrule. It is possible he is the same Robert as the son of Geoffrey. He was also recorded as ‘in Stryndis’ in 1502 when, along with David, he had a remission for stealing 101 sheep from William Ker at ‘Dernewik-mure’; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety. Also that same year he was allowed to ‘compound’ (i.e. pay a fine) for several other crimes, including stealing 200 sheep from the tenants of Jedburgh, Ruecastle, Lanton and Bedrule, stealing 7 oxen and cows from Philip Orriniston in Maxton, killing John Moffat, stealing 33 cows, 200 sheep, 4 horses and goods from ‘Robert Barnisfader’ at ‘Kelskop’, killing Robert Brig, and for ‘Treason of old and new’. Some of these crimes were carried out along with John (brother of Ingram) and David. He is probably the Robert who was allowed to compose in 1502 for stealing sheep from Jedburgh and cows from Selkirk; Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as his surety. Additionally he is probably the Robert who was mentioned as a colluder with Matthew in bringing in a gang of Nixons who stole a horse from Andrew Ker in Corbet. He is probably the Robert who was sentenced to be hanged later in 1502 (along with David, Martin and Matthew) for failure to ‘fynde sufficient souerties for satisfactioun of partes’. These 4 were either brothers or a mixture of 2 generations (more likely if this was the same David). Robert (15th C.) son of Gilbert. He is recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. His brother James was also fined at the same time, as well as Matthew son of Geoffrey, Robert brother of Matthew and Martin brother of Robert; William, son of Gilbert, was also fined, and was probably his brother too. In 1494/5 he was listed (again as son of Gilbert) among 8 Olivers (including Robert in ‘Stryndis’) and a Shiel who had remission for the crime of communing with the English. Robert (15th C.) brother of Matthew. He is recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Matthew son of Geoffrey (who may be the same Matthew who was his brother) was also fined at the same time, as well as James and Robert sons of Gilbert, and Martin brother of Robert. The same Robert, brother of Matthew, was also recorded in 1493 when his charges of common theft and delivery of stolen goods (after the date of his previous remission) were suspended. Robert (d.bef. 1502) murdered by a large group of Turnbulls and others. The perpetrators were all fined in 1502 for failure to appear to answer to the charge. The 23 named men were (in the order they appear in the records) George Turnbull in Weens, John Turnbull in Gatehousecote, Andrew Turnbull in Gatehousecote, William Turnbull in Gatehousecote, Lawrence son of William Turnbull in Bonchester, David and Andrew Shiel, Hugh Shiel, Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Andrew Turnbull in Bedrule, William Turnbull brother of the Laird of Bedrule, John Turnbull ‘Blew John’, Andrew Turnbull, Alan Davidson ‘Taburner’, John Turnbull in Ruecastle, John Turnbull in Jedburgh, John Turnbull in Wells, Adam Turnbull in Wells, Ninian Turnbull, David Turnbull in Bonchester, Patrick Turnbull, Philip Turnbull and William Turnbull in Bonchester. There is no information given about the circumstances of his death, e.g. why so many people could be held responsible for his murder (and it seems that many of them must have been pardoned later). It seems likely he was closely related to the Olivers of Strynds. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘brother’s son of David’ (although which brother is unclear), along with Robert in Lustruther, James ‘Burgess’ and Robert Waugh. They had remission for stealing cattle and goods from ‘kelshop’ and for killing Robert Brig and Adam Bairnsfather; Ralph Ker of Primside Loch was surety. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Lustruther. He was listed in 1502 along with Robert ‘brother’s son of David’, James Oliver ‘burgess’ and Robert Waugh in Mervinslaw, when they had a remission for their crimes. This included stealing 200 sheep, 29 cows, 4 horses and other goods from John and Adam ‘Barnisfader’ at ‘Kelshop’, as well as killing Robert Brig and Adam ‘Barnisfader’; his surety was Ralph Ker of Primside Loch. Robert ‘Rob wi the Dog’ (15th/16th C.) recorded receiving remission in 1505 for intercommuning with rebels David ‘Na-gude Preist’ and John ‘Cageare’. His nickname was given as ‘Rob with ye dog’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (16th C.) tenant at ‘Rontrehil’ (probably Rowantreehill) in 1541 along with John Oliver. Another Robert, nicknamed ‘the Sheriff’, was tenant in another part of the same lands. Robert ‘the Sheriff’ (16th C.) tenant at ‘Rontrehil’ in Jedforest in 1541, paying 11 shillings. His is recorded as ‘alias the schirreff’. Other Olivers (Richard, John, another John, Marion and Adam) rented the other parts of the farm of Rowantreehill. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with Janet. Together they were tenants of lands valued at 8s 4d. Several other Olivers were tenants of 3 other parts of Lustruther. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with William (‘the Lawyer’) along with Marion (his mother). Their part of the lands were valued at 8s 6d. Other tenants there were 3 Johns (one called ‘Blackhead’), Katherine and another Marion. Robert ‘Laird’ (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His lands were valued at 12s 6d. Other tenants there included Ninian, Walter, ‘Little’ Roger, Robert, Alexander, John and ‘Lang’ Roger. His name is given as ‘Roberto Oliver, alias Larde’. He may have been an ancestor of the Olivers in Hawick called ‘Lord’ in later generations. Robert (16th C.) tenant at Nether Dykeraw in 1541, along with James, Michael, John and Adam. Robert (16th C.) tenant in part of Wylie’s Hill in Jedforest in 1541. The other tenants were 2 Margaret Olivers and Margaret Wylie. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Hobe Ollyver of Lustrodder’ in 1544, when he was among Olivers and others who gave assurance to the English Crown. William, Jock, younger and Ringan, were also listed at Lustruther, and so were probably related. They were probably all descended from the earlier Robert in Lustruther. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. He was listed as ‘Hobr Ollyver of Eshetres’. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as being at the same place as ‘William Ollyver of Myrenslawe’, which was probably Mervinslaw. Robert ‘Hob o Hawick’ (15th/16th C.) supposed ancestor of Hawick’s Olivers, who lived at ‘the Garrison’. First mentioned in print in Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’, his story was dramatised in 1829 by Sir David Erskine as ‘James V; or, the Warlike Days of Hab o’ Hawick’. Apparently ‘Hab’ refused to walk from his house at the corner of the Howegate and Silver Street to Drumlanrig Tower when invited by the visiting King, stating ‘Tell your master that here sits Hab o’ Hawick at his ain fireside, and a fig for King James and a’ his kin’. This led to him being summoned to Edinburgh so the King could reciprocate at Holyrood. He was stated to be an old veteran at the time of the incident, which happened shortly before the death of James V. It is also said that he would visit ‘Auld Hawick’ (Hardie’s Hill) every Sunday. How much of this story is true is uncertain, but there seems no reason to doubt that he existed and had some interaction with the King. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in a Warden Court of 1559, involving representatives from the Scottish and English sides. He produced a ‘bill of y° Rotrohill’ (presumably a list of items that had been stolen from him) for livestock and goods with Englishman William Hall. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in a court case of 1605 as a tenant in Wauchope in Rulewater. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘called of Blanche’ in 1605 when he was declared as a fugitive at a court in Jedburgh. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Longnewton Mill. Along with George, stabler in Edinburgh, they complained to the Privy Council in 1612 that John Scott in Edinburgh had wounded them. Robert ‘Lord Olifer’ (17th C.) cordiner who was another of the Silver Street Olivers. He was probably son of the Walter who was mentioned in 1666. In 1651/2 he was fined £5 by the Bailies for refusing to act as guide for leading Cromwell’s troopers to Langholm. He may have been the same Robert (‘shoemaker, elder’) who contributed to the town bell in 1693/4. He and his son Robert were probably the 2 men of that name listed on the west-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His children probably included: Margaret (1667/8–1719), who married Bailie Robert Hardie; Robert, shoemaker who married Agnes Aitkin in about 1696; and William (b.1676), who married Christian Hart. Robert (17th C.) tenant farmer at Dykeraw and ancestor of the Hawick lawyers. He may have been born in Hawick Parish in 1643 (son of Walter and Agnes Paisley), but there are several contemporary men of the same name. He was recorded on a list of rents for the Jedforest area in 1669. Gilbert, also listed at Dykeraw, was probably his son. In 1670 he married Isabel Hair (b.1646 in Melrose) in Jedburgh. Their son Robert was also farmer at Dykeraw. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Helen Elliot and their children included: Walter (b.1672); and Bessie (b.1675). Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in Mervinslaw when his will was recorded in 1685. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Bank. In 1684 he and Bessie (probably his wife, but perhaps his sister) refused to take the Oath of Allegiance and were declared rebels. Robert (17th C.) listed as resident of Bairnkin along with Andrew and Richard in 1684 when they were declared fugitives for refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance. They were surely all related. Robert (17th C.) resident of Slacks in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded at Bank on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) probably son of shoemaker Robert, he is listed as ‘cordiner’ on the 1693/4 list of contributors to the town bell. He and his father are probably the 2 Roberts, residents of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the same Robert who married Agnes Atkins (or Aitkin) about 1696; their son William was born in 1701, witnessed by carrier William Aitkin, who was probably related to his wife. Another son was probably Robert (b.c.1699), who was also a shoemaker and married Bessie Blackhall. George, also a shoemaker, was probably also a son of his. He is probably the ‘Robert Olifer called Lord’ whose son John was baptised in 1704, with carrier John Aitkin (presumably related to his wife) one of the witnesses. He may also be the Robert who, along with his wife, purchased a tenement in Hawick in 1713. It is possible he was the ‘Lord Olifer’ whose son John was born in Hawick in 1704, and daughter Isobel in 1708. In 1723 there is mention in the Town Book of the Burgess money for ‘William Olifer, brother to Lord Olifer’, and this may have referred to his sons Robert and William. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Jedburgh Parish. In 1713 he married Agnes Bennet (probably from the Bennets of Chesters) in Ancrum Parish. Robert (c.1699–1764) shoemaker who was involved with the 1740 bond for the construction of the Teviot Bridge. He was feued the western part of Howlands by George Langlands in 1742. He was probably son of Robert and Agnes Atkins. It seems likely that he was the ‘Lord Olifer’ who in 1723 gave in the Burgess money for his brother William; if so then he was also nicknamed ‘Lord’. He married Bessie Blackhall in Hawick in 1728; she was daughter of John Blackhall (shoemaker in Selkirk) and Bessie Currier and born in Selkirk in 1703. If this is the case his children included: Catherine (b.1732), who married Walter Wilson, ‘Haunless Wat’; John (b.1734), shoemaker; William (b.1738); Agnes, who married Bailie Walter Purdom; and Thomas (b.1742). His son Robert carried on the family shoe-making business, and was probably born before the other children. He was related to merchant William, ‘Auld Cash’ (perhaps his uncle), and brother of William, father of ‘Auld Cash’. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for James Oliver, tenant in Earlside. Robert (18th C.) recorded being paid in 1751, along with Robert Easton and their workmen, for work on the new Teviot Brig. This was explicitly for ‘helping the far pillar of the bridgem and 12 drains’. He was presumably a mason or similar tradesman. Robert (1732/3–89) son of Thomas, tenant farmer at Chesters. He was farmer at Langburnshiel. He was one of the founding group of seceders, who met in Hawick in 1763, leading to the establishment of the Green Kirk. He was recorded at Langburnshiel on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1786–90, being succeeded by his son Thomas. He married Margaret Currie (1737/8–1823) and their children included: Isabella (1774/5–81); Agnes (1777/8–83); and Thomas, tenant in Lilliesleaf. Robert of Burnflatt (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was owner of the lands of Burnflatt in 1767 when the Duke of Buccleuch brought the first case proposing division of the Common. He was also listed as one of the neighbouring land-owners who gained from the Division of Hawick Common in 1777. He received a little over 10 Scots acres of what had previously been the Town’s land. He also appears to have held the land near Myreslawgreen called Birselton. He married Isabel Kemnure and their children included: William (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); Peter (b.1762); Agnes (b.1763); James (b.1765), baker in Hawick, who was also ‘of Burnflat’; and Isabel (b.1767). His son James was listed as a ‘second cousin’ in the 1808 will of William, ‘Auld Cash’; he may have himself been a full cousin of ‘Auld Cash’. It is unclear who his parents were, but one possibility is George and Margaret Aitken; shoemaker George was a witness to the 1757 baptism (along with tobacconist Francis Scott), supporting this idea. Robert (c.1730–1803) shoemaker of the Cross Wynd, son of Robert and Bessie Blackhall. He is easily confused with at least one other contemporary shoemaker of the same name. He married Jean (or Jane) Scott in 1756. Their children included: Robert (b.1757); William (b.1760); Agnes (b.1764); and Elizabeth (b.1766). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by shoemakers Robert Oliver (presumably his father) and William Scott (perhaps his father-in-law). William Scott also witnessed the 1766 baptism, along with John Oliver (perhaps his brother). His wife may have later been known as ‘Jeanie My Lord’. His son William may be the surgeon in Middleton, Teesdale, England who died in 1816, aged 56. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John in 1766. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1770 he is recorded at Brieryyards. He married Isabel ‘Brokie’ or ‘Brackie’ in 1760 and their children included: John (b.1762); Isabel (b.1764); Barbara (b.1766); Thomas (b.1768); Isabel (again, b.1770); Samuel (b.1772); Agnes (b.1774); and Margaret (b.1779). The witnesses in 1770 were Robert Easton and Walter Oliver.

Dr. Robert (1743–1823) son of James and Margaret Douglas. He was a surgeon in North Berwick. He married a Miss Russell and they had a family of 3 daughters (Margaret, Mary and Isabella) and 1 son (who was in the Navy and received a grant of land in Canada). Robert (18th/19th C.) perhaps from the Hawick shoe-making family. In 1776 he married Helen Scott in Hawick. Their children included: Margaret (b.1779); Mary (b.1782); John (b.1783); William (b.1785), hind at Langraw, who emigrated (b.1779); Janet (b.1786); and Jane (b.1787). Robert (18th/19th C.) another of the shoe-making family. In 1788 (and still listed in 1811) he is recorded owning part of Roughheugh (acquired from Langlands of that Ilk), valued at £16 11s 8d, as well as part of the ‘particulate lands’ in Hawick; his Hawick lands were later divided between Alex Graham of Berwick, the heirs of William Elliot and the West U.P. Congregation. He could be the Robert who is marked on Wood’s 1824 map as owner of land off Damside, and also to the north of Roadhead. His daughter Jean married James Edgar. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Knowesouth, recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bridgehouse in Castleton Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Milsingtonhaugh. Robert ‘Clinty’ or ‘Robbie Clinty’ (1772–1847) tailor and town councillor, getting this nickname from his old family house, Clinthead, which stood on a rock at the Auld Brig. He was a descendant of ‘Hab o Hawick’, several generations of Olivers having lived in that area. He was apprenticed to William Sanderson, tailor, later became the quartermaster of the tailors on the Council and was elected a Town Councillor in 1804. He was known to be emphatic in expressing his opinions. He is listed as a tailor on Silver Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, but must have retired before the 1837 directory. In his old age he moved from Clinthead. He is listed living on the Kirkwynd (in the same house as the Hardie family) in the 1841 census. He was immortalised in the words of the song by J.E.D. Murray. He may be the tailor Robert, who is mentioned as a second cousin in the 1808 will of William ‘Auld Cash’; if so he was son of shoemaker John. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had a local connection. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean. In ‘The local historian’s table book’ (1844) he is said to have lived at ‘Southdean in Jedburgh, and died about a dozen years ago’. He recounted a story of his father Peter encountering a fairy at Hyndlee. Dr. Robert ‘Daft Robbie’ (d.1828) of the Navy, son of Robert and ‘Jeannie My Lord’. He may have been the Robert born in 1757. He was said to have been educated in Edinburgh. He was ‘sun-struck’ in India and returned to Hawick to lead a retired life. It is said that he spent much of his time among the rocks of the Slitrig below their Silver Street home, playing with the children there – ‘The pebble stanes – Daft Robbie’s joy Was aye to aid them in sick ploy, And by the hand, stay feet sae sma’, Amang the rocks when like to fa’’ [AD].
Robert (b.1787–1871) son of John and Margaret Douglas. He lived for a while with his father at Essenside, where his son John was baptised. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Hardie and Elizabeth Hunter. Their children included: Isabel (b.1812), who must have died young: John (b.1813); Isabel (b.1814), who settled in California and married a man from Vermont; Margaret (b.1816); George Hardy (b.1818); James Douglas (b.1820), who also went to California, but returned to Westville; Agnes (b.1822); Helen (b.1824), who married John Archibald Hamilton in California; William (1826–61), who went out to California, was one of the first men to drive cattle through the Sierra Nevada and was killed by Indians at Shelter Cove; and Mary (b.1830). In 1813 he, his wife and infant child emigrated to Canada, along with his brother Henry. They settled in Pictou County, Nova Scotia. Robert (b.c.1790) farmer at Heap, recorded in 1841. He was born in Kirkton Parish. In 1851 he was a shepherd living on Wilton Place. His wife was Betty. Robert William (b.1822) son of James and Elizabeth Purdom, he became a baker on the High Street. He was one of the first Trustees of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from 1848. He was listed as a High Street baker in Slater’s 1852 directory and in 1851 was at 6 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Eliza, William and Margaret. Robert (b.1822/3) mason in Denholm. He may be the young apprentice who was recorded at the quarry at Bedrule in 1841. In 1851 he was probably living on Canongate and in 1861 probably on Sunnyside. He married Mary Mack and their children included: Mary (b.1847); Betsy (b.1849); Janet (b.1851); Robert (b.1854); John (b.1857); Margaret (b.1859); James (b.1862); and George (b.1865). Robert (1826–71) born at Bridgehouse, son of John, he was a shepherd in Castleton, Kirkton Parishes and Ashkirk Parishes. In 1851 he was an agricultural labourer at Dinlabyre, living with his parents and described as a widower. In 1861 he was a shepherd at Whitehillbrae. In 1856 in Castleton Parish, he secondly married Violet Rodger, who was born at Delorainburn. Their children included: John Rodger (b.1855), born at Boghall; Andrew (b.1856), born at Dinlabyre, who was blacksmith at Allanton; Jane (b.1858), born at ‘Howkshall’, Teviothead; Margaret (b.1860), born at Whitehillbrae; Robert Elliot (b.1864), born in Ashkirk; Violet (b.1866), born in Ashkirk; and Ann (b.1870). Robert (1827/8–1902) son of John and Ann Aitken. He worked with Lyle & Scott for about 38 years, being secretary and becoming a Director. He married Lizzie, daughter of James Davidson, and she died in 1942. Their children were John (architect in South Africa), Capt. Charles, James, George, William and Robert. He lived at Wellogate Villa and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1831–1906) son of John and Margaret. He grew up in Hawick, where he worked as a skinner in 1851. He married Jane Hobkirk in Hawick in 1853 and the following year they sailed for Australia with their infant daughter Margaret. They settled in Wasleys in South Australia and had many other children. His grandson Harry Gordon Oliver was an engineer in charge of several projects on the River Murray. Robert (1857/8–1910) grocer in Newcastleton. He married Elizabeth Jane Gordon, who died in 1935, aged 72. Their children included: Emily (1896/7–1910); and James (1893/4–1914). They are buried at Ettleton. He was probably son of David and born in Hobkirk Parish. Robert Don (1895–1980) son of Col. William James of Lochside, his ancestors came from Hownam. He served in the Royal Navy, retiring as Vice-Admiral. Afterwards he was appointed Deputy Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. Roger ‘Little Roger’ (16th C.) tenant in Falside in Southdean Parish in 1541. His part of the lands was valued at 8s 4d. Other tenants there included Robert (alias ‘Laird’), Ninian, John, Walter and another Roger (called ‘Lang Roger’). Roger ‘Lang Roger’ (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541, listed separately from ‘Little Roger’. His lands were valued at 25s. Samuel ‘Sam’ (b.1702) son of James, who was schoolmaster in Cavers. He became schoolmaster of Hobkirk Parish in 1726. He also served as Clerk for the Parish. In 1745 he was at Forkins smiddy watching the passage of the Jacobite army when they pressed him into service as their guide up the Rule valley and through Liddesdale. It is said that at their main camp he ran into the Laird of Gorrenley and through Liddesdale. It is said that at their main camp he ran into the Laird of Gorrenberry who escorted him past the Prince and they doffed their hats at each other; this tale was told in the Rule valley long afterwards. He resigned as schoolmaster in 1750. In 1726 he married Betsy, daughter of John Scott of Weens. Samuel (18th C.) born in Wilton Parish. He was a resident of Minto Parish in 1774 when he married Isabel Miller. His children included: Helen (b.1780), baptised in Wilton Parish; and Samuel (b.1789), who was a mason in Yarrow in 1841 and in Selkirk in 1851. He could also be the Samuel whose children baptised in Hobkirk Parish included James.
(b.1775) and John (b.1778). He could be the Samuel, son of James, born in Hob Kirk Parish in 1749 and may have been related to the Hob Kirk schoolmaster. Samuel (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Isobel Moscrop in 1805. Their children included: Agnes (b.1807); Robert (b.1807); and Isobel (b.1812). Samuel (b.1789) son of Samuel. He was a mason in Selkirkshire. In 1841 he was at Curcarwood in Yarrow and in 1851 was in Selkirk. He married Isabel Miller in Ettrick in 1814 (she seems to have had the same name as his mother). His children included: Samuel (b.1816), who was a mason like his father, married Margaret Rutherford in Melrose, emigrated to the U.S.A. and had 2 sons who fought in the American Civil War; William (b.1818); James (b.1820); Helen (b.1822); John (b.1824); Isabel (b.1826); Janet (b.1828); Robert (b.1830); and David (b.1833). Samuel (18th/19th C.) resident of Hob Kirk Parish. In 1829 he married Betty, daughter of John Scott. Samuel (18th/19th C.) younger son of William Dinlayre. He spent most of his life as a farmer, at Whitehill and elsewhere. He was described as ‘a clever, witty, well-read man, who could converse on most subjects’. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1830. He may be the Samuel who was at Mertoun near Dryburgh in 1841. Simon ‘Sym’ (16th C.) recorded in 1566 when the Lords of Secret Council made John Rutherford of Hunt hill act as surety for him. He probably held lands in Jedforest. Steven (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when his daughter was among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically her ‘quarter of ane pound wanted ta twa drop, and her twa unce wanted ane drop’. His daughter must have been a trader at the market in Hawick, but it is unclear where they were from. Steven (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. There were several other Olivers there, David, Thomas and 2 Patricks, to whom he may have been related, with his name appearing first. Probably he was the same as one of the 2 Stevens who were listed as tenants at Falside on the 1694 Horse Tax Rolls, one of them along with Dand; there was also a John and Thomas and his sons recorded there at the same time. Thomas (15th C.) witnessed in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. He is recorded as ‘Thome Olyver de Swyne’, which is probably Swinnie. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502. George Douglas, Master of Angus, was fined for failure to prove his arrest (as well as that of Ingram and James). He was ‘sandis sone’ (presumably ‘Sandy’s son’) and called ‘Waitschold’ (although it is unclear what this nickname meant, it may have been ‘Wet-shoed’ for example). Thomas (16th C.) stated to have been killed around 1540 at Abbotrule, along with ‘Will Kowman’. This was the result of a raid led by James Routledge of Todhills in Cumbria, which was complained about by the Laird of Ferniehirst and his tenants. Thomas (16th C.) tenant at Slacks in 1541, along with John, who was probably his brother or son. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Charles renting the other part of Slacks. Thomas (16th C.) recorded being of Lustruther in 1583/4 when William Fenwick of Wallington (near Otterburn) complained that he and around 200 others raided his farm, taking cattle, horses and 16 prisoners. This appears to have been a raid into England to recover cattle and other goods stolen from them earlier. It is clear that he was one of the main Oliver leaders at that time. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Olipher’ resident of Harwood when he was one of the witnesses to a Rulewater sasine of 1631. Thomas (17th C.) described as ‘Thomas Olipher, cordiner’ when he was fined in 1642 for using irreverent language to the Bailies. Probably a different Thomas, ‘traveller’ was in 1642 sentenced to 8 days in the stocks for drawing his sword at one of the Bailies. But he was possibly the Thomas who was recorded in 1642 being ordered to pay James Scott for the oats his livestock had eaten. He may also be the same Thomas who promised not to carry a ‘whinger’ in 1639 and the Thomas fined in 1649 for keeping his cattle on the ‘infield’ and for cattle eating his neighbour’s corn and hay. This may be the Thomas, married to Margaret Chisholme, who had these children in Hawick: Walter (b.1641); Margaret (b.1642); Sara (b.1645); John (b.1649); Beatrix (b.1652); and Helen (b.1655). The witnesses to the 1641 baptism were Andrew Liddersdale and William Liddell. He could have been son of Walter (who is mentioned in 1666, and brother of Robert. Thomas (17th C.) described as ‘traveller’ in 1642 when he was accused of drawing his sword at one of the Bailies and refusing to go to the Town prison. He was fined and sentenced to 8 days in the stocks. It seems likely he was a different man from Thomas, ‘cordiner’, who was also recorded in the Town Book in 1642. He was also ‘traveller’ in 1652 when he was found to be not liable for the claim made against him by merchant John Scott, for tobacco pipes, ‘hott waters’, 1958 powder, sugar and other goods that he ‘brak, drownet, and lossit’ on the way from Edinburgh to Hawick. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Hill (probably near Rouchhirst) according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at Mervinslaw, recorded in a rental roll of 1669. There were several other tenants there at the same time. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Whiteside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. William was also there and so presumably closely related. Perhaps the same Thomas was listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as tenant in Whiteside. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He was listed as ‘handie’, presumably meaning that he was a tradesman of some sort. There were several other Olivers there at the same time. He may be the Thomas, ‘servitor of the Marquis of Douglas’ who was a Covenanter supporter, with his brother John, tenant in Falside, standing as surety for him in 1679, that he would return to prison if so ordered. He could be the Thomas ‘in Jedforest’ who is on a list of men refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance in 1684. He could be the Thomas who was recorded at Falside with his sons in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Braehead in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Thomas (17th C.) listed as a tenant in ‘Pouhach’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest (i.e., Southdean Parish). Thomas (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Dykeraw in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Both Thomases ‘elder’ and ‘younger’ are listed there, as well as several other Olivers. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Southdean in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James and David were also listed there, and so probably close relatives. He could be the Thomas ‘called Burne, in Fuddon’ (assuming this is an error for ‘Suddon’) whose will is recorded in 1687. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Dyk’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Jedforest who was imprisoned in 1679 for being a Covenanter. He may have been taken prisoner after the Battle of Bothwell Brig. He gave a bond that he would not rise up in arms again and was released. It is possible that he was the Thomas of Southdean who complained that the Parish Minister had not read out the Articles of Estate or prayed for William and Mary in 1689. It is also possible that this was the Thomas, tenant at Southdean Mill, whose son John became minister at Southdean. Thomas (17th C.) described in 1679 as ‘servitor to the Marquis of Douglas’ when he was one of the Covenanters prisoners. His brother John, tenant in Falside, served as surety for him, that he would return to prison if so ordered. Thomas (17th C.) son of James in ‘Ash-trees’, i.e. the farm in the Jed valley. He was listed in 1684 among many people who were declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. However, he appears to have escaped persecution, since Thomas of Ashtrees was given the rank of Ensign in the Roxburghshire Fencibles after the Revolution. His brother George is recorded in 1691. Thomas (d.c.1685) tenant in Swinnie when his will was recorded in 1685. He is surely related to George, who was at Swinnie at the same time. Perhaps the same Thomas was listed at Swinnie among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1688 when he complained of being assaulted in Hawick High Street when ‘bringing in heather for use of the said towne’. This was presumably for fuel. He could have been one of the contemporary Olivers of Southdean. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Southdean Parish who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the same as one of the earlier Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Wadeshill in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Thomas (17th C.) name of 2 men who were resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. One was described as ‘kill’ (perhaps suggesting a kiln) and the other was ‘knou’. Thomas (17th C.) blacksmith at Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He is probably related to John who was smith there in 1669. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He is listed separately from the smith. Thomas (1688/9–1754) tenant at Chesters. He is probably related to some of the Olivers who were recorded at Chesters on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He married Jane Gillrie (1691/2–1768) and their children included Robert (1732/3–89), tenant at Langburnshielis. His family were buried in Oxnam. Thomas (18th C.) tenant at Falside in Southdean Parish around 1740, along with ‘Dand’ and William. Thomas (b.c.1715) born in Southdean Parish. In 1732 he moved to Crailing. He married Janet Middlemas in Crailing in 1739. Their children included: Jeremiah (b.1735), born in Southdean; Isabel (b.1740), baptised in Nisbet; Robert (b.1743), also born in Nisbet. Thomas (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Margaret Weir and they had a daughter, Anne (b.1743). Helen (b.1740) may also have been his child. The witnesses in 1743 were weaver William Turnbull and cooper James Scott. Thomas (18th C.) tenant at ‘Gledstains’ (i.e. Gledstains). In 1758 he was among parishioners in Hobkirk Parish who were asked to provide broom for thatching the roof of the kirk. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Weensmoor in 1774. He may be the Thomas whose daughter Helen was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1774. Other children may have been Barbara (b.1771), Nelly (b.1772) and Alison (b.1775). Thomas (18th C.) footman and gardener at Orchard in 1785, when he was working for William Dickson. Probably the same Thomas was coachman at Cavers in 1794. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Gilbert was listed after him and so possibly related. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Turnpikeside in Southdean Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was the Southdean rhymster of this name who penned these lines on the death of Rev. William Scott – ‘I saw him from the kirk descent, And in five hours his life did end’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Birneyknowe, on the 1794-97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was recorded as owner of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded as tenant at Shankend on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Byreholm. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is listed as a carter at Byreholm among heads of households in 1836 and 1838. He could be the same Thomas as the farmer at Castleton. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Kirkton, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. James is listed after him and so possibly related. He was also listed at Kirkton on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Jean, daughter of John Whillans and Mary Swan. Their children included: Mary (b.1806); and William (b.1815). Lieut. Thomas (18th/19th C.) of the Royal Navy, was made an Honorary Burgess in 1803. He is probably the ‘Captain Thomas Oliver of the Royal Navy my second cousin’ mentioned in the 1808 will of William, ‘Auld Cash’. He could be the Royal Navy Lieut. of that name who distinguished himself at Havana in 1805 during the Napoleonic Wars. He was probably grandson of shoemaker Robert, and perhaps son of Thomas (b.1742) or one of his brothers. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf, son of Robert, who was farmer at Langburnshiels. He was recorded in the Horse Tax Rolls of 1791-94 at Langburnshiels. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Thomas (18th/19th C.) ironmonger on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Thomas (b.1812/3) gamekeeper at Larris- ton Rigg in 1841. His wife was Jenny and their children included Turnbull, Bella and Francis. He may be the same Thomas as the gamekeeper in Bedrule Parish. Thomas S. (b.1812/3) gamekeeper at Woodend Cottage in Bedrule, and then stocking-maker in Denholm, probably on Sunny-side. His wife was Janet and they had children Ebenezer, Joseph, Isabella, William, Francis and Thomas. Thomas (b.1817/8) younger son of lawyer John. In the 1841 census he is listed as a woollen manufacturer, along with his brother William. He was probably part of the short-lived firm of John Oliver & Sons. He was later a farmer at West Fortune, Haddington. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.c.1870) born in Hawick, he worked as a shepherd with his father, later entering William Watson’s, where he learned about tweed manufacture and design. He became a teacher of power-loom weaving in Galashiels, Hawick and Selkirk. He received a D.Sc. from Edinburgh and was Principal and Professor of Textile Technology in the Scottish Woollen Technical College in Galashiels. Just before the War he toured Australasia and New Zealand. He published at least 3 books on textiles: ‘Weaving problems’ (1909); ‘Phase in the rise of Scotch tweed technique’ (1911); and ‘Wool technology and regional geography’ (1931). He was also an enthusiastic lay preacher in the Brethren, publishing and contributing to ‘Scripture Quarterly’ during WWII. Walter (d.1242) son of David ‘Olfard’, or perhaps an earlier Walter. He is probably the ‘Walt’o olifard’ who witnessed a charter between Gervase Avenel and Melrose Abbey in 1214. He was Justiciar of Lothian under Alexander II from 1220 until his death. He granted the church of Smailholm to Coldingham Abbey. In 1221 he was witness to the dowry charter for Joan of England, who married Alexander, King of Scotland (lands that included Hassendean). He was Justiciar in 1230 when he witnessed a charter for Margaret, the King’s sister and also in 1237 in a document from the English King. He was mentioned (as ‘Walterum Olifard iusticiarium Laudonie’) in a charter of lands to Soutra Hospital in about 1230. He also witnessed another charter relating to Inverness in the reign of King William. He married Christian, daughter of the Earl of Strathearn and inherited lands in Perthshire. He had a son David. The pair are mentioned in a charter of Soutra Hospital, granted by Walter Murray (‘de Moravia’) in 1273. He was succeeded by his grand-daughter Joanna, who married Walter of Moravia (or Murray). In this way the Barony of Bothwell came into possession of the Murrays, who would later also hold the Barony of Hawick. Walter (16th C.) tenant in Falside in Southdean Parish in 1541. His small piece of the farm was valued at 4s 2d. Other tenant there included with Robert (alias ‘Laird’), Ninian, Roger (called ‘Little Roger’), John and Roger (called ‘Lang Roger’). Walter (17th C.) another of the shoemaking family. He was involved in a church dispute in 1666 and was the father of Robert. This may be the same Walter who married Agnes Paisley (or ‘Paslay’) and whose children (born in Hawick Parish) included: James (b.1640); Robert (b.1643); Janet (b.1645); John (b.1649); and Helen (b.1652). However, if he was father of Robert ‘Lord Olifer’, then his children must have been born earlier. The witnesses to the 1640 baptism were Robert Oliver and James Paisley (probably fathers or brothers of the parents). Walter (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. In 1685 he was fined for refusing to ride with a prisoner to Jedburgh when asked by the Bailie to do so, and also ‘for his contumacious language given to the sd baylyea att yt time’. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Walter listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He may be the Walter who gave evidence against Turnbull of Standhill in a trial of Covenanters in 1680. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick who married Janet Simson. Their children included: James (b.1673); and William (b.1676). The witnesses in 1676 were John Deans and James Deans. He could be the same as the merchant of Hawick mentioned in the next couple of decades. Walter (b.1706) born in Hawick. His brother was John, who married Helen Currer. He himself married Margaret Turnbull in 1730. Their children included: Robert (b.1731); Margaret (b.1733); John (b.1735), shoemaker; and Helen (b.1738). Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1712 being asked to ‘perlustrate the town to see who were drinking in ale houses after 8 at night’. Walter (b.c.1809) cooper in Newcastle, listed among heads of households in 1835–41 and in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 27 Montague Street. His wife was Mary and their children included Walter, Janet, Jean and Betty. William (15th C.) son of Gilbert. At the 1493 Justice-aire he was fined for non-appearance. If his father was the same Gilbert, then he also had brothers James and Robert (also mentioned in 1493). He was also recorded in 1494/5 among 8 Olivers and a Shiel (connected with Strange) who had remission for commuting with the English; he was there stated to be brother of Robert, who was son of Gilbert, and also brother of John. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) listed in 1540 among Scottish rebels who had fled to England and were being sought by the English Wardens. He is recorded as being called ‘Fargus’, and his son ‘Jok’ is also listed. William (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541, along his mother Margaret. Their steadings was valued at 12s 6d. Other tenants at Mervinslaw included James and another William, nicknamed ‘Merchant’. William ‘Merchant’ (16th C.) tenant in Mervinslaw in 1541, whose steadings was valued at 12s 6d. Other tenants at Mervinslaw included William, Margaret and James. William (16th C.) tenant in Bank, recorded in a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He held half of the farm. William ‘the Lawyer’ (16th C.) tenant in Lustruther in 1541, along with his mother Marion, 2 Johns (one called ‘Blackhead’), Janet, Katherine and another Marion. His name is written as ‘Willelmo Olivere, alias the procurator’. Probably the same man was recorded as ‘William Ollyver of Lustrodder’ in 1544, when he was among Olivers and others who gave assurance to the English Crown. Hob, Jock, younger and Ringan were also listed at Lustruther and so were probably related. He may be the same as the William recorded as tenant there in 1562. And either he or perhaps his son was in Lustruther in 1571 when he was one of the 3 main leaders of the Olivers for whom Sir Thomas Turnbull, John Turnbull of Minto, Richard Rutherford of Edgerston and John Rutherford, younger of Hunthill, served as pledges. Additionally he gave his pledge at a court in Leith, for the Olivers in Dykeraw, Falside, Westerhouses, ‘the Burne’, Slacks, Mervinslaw and the Bank, as well as for other men of Southdean; his cautioners were William Douglas of Bonjedward and Richard Rutherford, Provost of Jedburgh. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘William Ollyver of Myrleslawe’ in 1544, when he was among a list of Scotsmen swearing allegiance to the English King. ‘Ranyon Ollyver of the same’ is also listed, and so presumably a brother or son. Their lands may have been Mervinslaw. William (16th C.) recorded on a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘William Ollyver of Myrenslawe’, which is probably ‘Mervinslaw’. This could be a repeated entry for William of ‘Myrleslawe’. ‘Robert Ollyver of the same’ is also listed. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant farmer at Lustruther, who along with Gavin, tenant at West Houses (probably a Southdean relative) had a bond of 1562 to enter Robert Robson ‘Foul Mouth’ to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is also recorded in 1571 giving bonds for Olivers and others in Dykeraw, Westerhouses, Falside, the Burn and Slacks. He is probably the William whose farmed was transcribed ‘Anstruder’ in 1572/3, when he was listed along with other Olivers and William Kirkton of Stewartfield, with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston as their cautioners; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He is probably the William in Lustruther who Thomas Laidlaw in Haugh was accused of resetting in 1589. Probably the same ‘Will in Lustruther’ is recorded in Monipennie’s List of Border Clans of about 1594. He was indicted for a raid in 1589. William (16th C.) recorded in 1583/4 being of Slacks when William Fenwick of Wallington (near Otterburn) complained that he and about 200 others raided his farm, taking cattle, horses and 16 prisoners. This appears to have been a raid into England to recover cattle and other goods stolen from them earlier. He was probably an important leader among the Olivers at that time. William of Bairnkine (d.1605) sentenced to execution in Jedburgh in 1605. Nothing else is known about him. William (17th C.) tenant at Lustruther (in Southdean Parish) in 1669. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Whiteside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed after Thomas, to whom he was surely related. William (17th C.) recorded as a tenant in Chesters in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. There were 2 men of the same name listed there. William (17th C.) recorded as tenants in Slacks along with George and John in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Probably one of them is the William listed as tenant in ‘Soudon’ and ‘Sudden’ (i.e. Southdean farm) in the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the William ‘in Shaks’ (if this is an error for ‘Slaks’) whose will is recorded in 1688. William (17th C.) tenant in Nether Whisgills in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (b.1674) born in Hawick, son of John and ‘Jenet Bo’. William (b.1676) son of Walter and ‘Jenet Symson’, he was born in Hawick. He could be the merchant recorded in the early years of the 18th century. William (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick, mentioned in 1702. His sister Margaret was married to Bailie Robert Hardie. In 1703 he married Christian Hart, with Hardie and his wife being rebuked for creating a disturbance; his father-in-law, John Hart was also rebuked by the session for their ‘penny-bridal’. It is possible he is the William born in Hawick in 1676, son of Robert. He is probably the William Oliver who was among men ordered to walk around the Town in 1712 to see who were drinking in ale-houses after 8 o’clock. Probably the same merchant William was rebuked by the Session in 1716 for being involved in late night drunkenness and a fight with Thomas Huggan. He acknowledged that ‘he was att the brawl and was sensible of his fault, and that he could not give an accomp who first began it’. He may have been grandfather of ‘Auld Cash’, and if so, then his son was also William; however, it seems more likely that shoemaker Robert was the grandfather of ‘Auld Cash’, and probably closely related to him, perhaps his brother. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills. He was married to Elspeth Hislop. Their son Andrew was born in 1701, with Andrew Waugh in Slaidhills being one of the witnesses. William of Dinlabryre (17th/18th C.) eldest son of John. He succeeded his father in the lands of ‘Dunliebyre, Easterflight, Hiashes, and Burnfoot; also Over and Nether Larriston, Heartsgarth, and Langhagh’. He and his son John donated silver communion cups to Castleton Kirk in 1748. In 1708 he married Mary, daughter of William Chisholme of that Ilk (while his sister Mary married his wife’s brother John!). His children were: John, who succeeded; and Mary, who married John Scott of Synton. William (18th C.) tailor in Over Southfield. In 1721 he married Margaret Cook, who was widow of John Goodfellow. Their children born in Hawick included: Bessie (b.1722); and Margaret (b.1724). William (b.1701) son of Robert, he was born in Hawick. His mother was Agnes Atkins. He could be the William who married Margaret Coltherd. He was probably the William, whose brother ‘Lord Olifer’ gave in his Burgess money in 1723. William (18th C.) Hawick resident, probably a merchant. In about 1740 he was given part of the responsibility for collecting subscriptions ‘east the water’ to help pay for the Teviot Bridge. It seems likely he was the William who was a merchant and father of ‘Auld Cash’; if so he could have been married to Margaret Coltherd (or ‘Corser’), with their children being Agnes (b.1731), Robert (b.1733), Margaret (b.1734), James (b.1739), John (b.1741) and Walter (b.1743). It seems likely that the William born in 1737, with mother Margaret ‘Corser’ was also his son; in that baptismal record (and another, when he was witness for Robert Miles) he is listed as ‘Merchant Junior’, suggesting he was son of William senior. On the other hand, he may have been the William born in 1701 to Robert and Agnes Atkins (which would fit with the naming of his children). The idea that he was father of ‘Auld Cash’ is supported by the 1808 death record, where it is stated that the father of ‘Auld Cash’ was also William, and probably a merchant. It is possible that he was also called ‘Auld Cash’. William (b.1732/3) workman, one of the 6 representative Burgesses appointed to perambulate and define the boundaries of the Burgh’s land in 1767, during court proceedings for the division of the Common. In 1782 his daughter Isabel died, and he is listed as ‘workman’; this could be the Isabel born to William and Barbara Binnie in 1761. William ‘Auld Soorhope’ (18th C.) one of the last people to be buried in the old churchyard at Southdean. It is said that his funeral was very well attended. William of Langraw (1731/2–1812) from the family who had farmed at Falside in Southdean Parish. He may be the son of William who was a tenant at Falside in the 1740s, along with ‘Dand’ and Thomas (possibly his uncles). He and Andrew farmed at Alton from 1762 and then Adderstoneshiel from 1765. He then had several short leases elsewhere, including Burnrange in Northumberland. In 1801 he purchased the farm of Langraw and settled down there, retaining several other leases. In 1803 he contributed to a local subscription for the defence of the country (from the French). He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805, and in 1819 (when he may have already been deceased) both he and his son Andrew were listed. He was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish. He is said to have been quite wealthy, but lost much of his fortune backing ‘bills for needy and unscrupulous persons’. In 1811 he was recorded as owner of Langraw and part of Shiel’s Lands and Kirknowe. In 1764 he married Margaret Stavert, said to be a descendant of the man who carried the Douglas banner at Otterburn; she died in 1820, aged 80. He was buried along with his wife in Southdean Kirkyard. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Andrew, while a younger son, William, rented Otterstonelee in North Tyne (unless this is confusion with Adderstonelee). He could have been father of some of these children baptised in Southdean Parish: William (b.1761); Andrew (b.1762); Andrew (again, b.1763); John (b.1764); Nelly (b.1766); Thomas (b.1768); and William (again, b.1770). William ‘Auld Cash’ (c.1738–1808) one of the foremost merchants in Hawick, and Cornet in 1758. He may be the William born in Hawick in 1737 to William and Margaret Croser. He traded in many different things in the district around Hawick, and was said to be the third William in a family line of merchants (although his precise relationship to earlier Olivers is unclear). He also acted as a private banker throughout the Borders, hence his nickname. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) as well as John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–94. In 1787–91 he paid tax for having a female servant and was probably the merchant recorded on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. From 1791 he acted as Hawick’s first bank agent, for the Bank of Scotland. His main premises were at the Tower Knowe, where the Office Bar is now located, and his warehouses were in Silver Street, where his family had owned property for generations. He also owned buildings on the High Street and in Wilton Parish. Additionally he owned land at Dovemount, Silverbuthall and Galalaw. He was known to be generous in local affairs, e.g. in helping fund the addition to Old Wilton Church. It has also been suggested that Silver Street got its name because he stayed there. He also had a wine cellar under the road by Drumlanrig Bridge. He is probably the William of Galalaw listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (many years after his death). He remained unmarried all his life, and his will lists his nearest relatives as: his niece Margaret Aitchison and her children Robert (surgeon), John (also surgeon), Agnes and Mary Douglas; his nephews Robert (or the Royal Navy) and Andrew (saddler) Aitchison; and his second cousins Thomas Oliver (of the Navy), William Oliver (surgeon in Middleton), James Oliver (baker), William Oliver (location unknown), Robert Oliver (tailor, possibly ‘Clinty’) and Walter Wilson (wright). When he died, it is said that everyone was surprised to find that his estate did not appear to meet his debts, even although the sale of his property raised over £19,000 (with £5,000 coming from goods, furniture and stock, without including property); suspicion fell upon his young assistant ‘Franky’ Ballantyne, and there was even a poem published about how his ghost haunted Ballantyne, called ‘The Twa Frien’s or the Ghost of Coffee-Ha’’. In his will he is described being ‘of Galalaw’ (suggesting he was living there, rather than at Silverbuthall in his later years). His will was witnessed by his ‘servants’ James Miller and Walter Scott (who are probably the men of those names who were later grocers in Hawick). The trustees named in his will were Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, James Grieve in Branxholme Park, James Grieve in Branxholme Braes and Thomas Usher. His home at Silverbuthall was sold to James Scott, retired teacher of Yarrow. His nieces Agnes and Catherine married Bailie Walter Purdom and ‘Haunless Wat’, respectively. His death is recorded in Hawick, where it was stated that his father was also William – ‘Wi’ banker Cash, a daintie earl, Wha was owre guid for sic a warl’ [RDW].

William (18th C.) Cornet in 1768, listed as being at the Kirkwynd. He may be the son of shoemaker Robert born in 1738. William of Dinlabyre (1738–1830) son of John, he became Sheriff of Roxburghshire. It is said that he needed to live closer to the court in Jedburgh, and hence swapped some of his Liddesdale lands for ones in Rulewater. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1773 he sold Hartsgarth and Langhaugh to William Sharp. At the same time he bought the lands of Weens from William Sharp and built the new house there in 1775. He also bought Nether Bonchester from Thomas Scott in 1779. In 1777 he had a ‘decreet arbitral’ between Henry Elliot of Harwood and George Rutherford. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780 and Selkirkshire in 1788. He sold Over and Nether Larriston and Blackhope to Col. William Elliot in 1786; it was said that in fact his wife made the sale when he was absent and he ‘expressed much surprise and no little displeasure at what had taken place’. Nevertheless he added the sale of Larriston Rig (or Haggiehaugh) to Elliot in 1790. He was apparently a good friend of the Hobkirk schoolmaster William Armstrong. In 1788 he was listed among the voters in Roxburghshire (and a supporter of the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch). In the county valuation of 1788 he was recorded as owner of Weens and Nether Bonchester, valued at £380, as well as Dinlabyre, Greena and Blackhope (although he had probably sold them by then) in Castleton Parish, valued at £1020. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid tax in Hobkirk Parish for having 3 male servants in the period 1778–92 and 2 in 1793, as well as for 1 female servant in 1785–87, 4 in 1788 and 1 in 1789–91. He was taxed for having 3–5 carriage horses in Hobkirk Parish (being recorded as of Dinlabyre at Weens’) in 1785–92. He is probably the William listed paying tax at Wolfelee in the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. He was of Dinlabyre at Larriston’ on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls for Castleton Parish. In 1794 he was taxed for 2 male servants at ‘Laurstoun’ in Castleton Parish and in 1797 was at Liddel Bank with 3 servants, 4 work horses and 4 carriage horses. He was also taxed for having a carriage in the period 1785–95, being of Dinlabyre until the year 1791/2, when he was ‘of Weens’, and then being at ‘Lawston’ in 1794/5 and Liddel Bank 1797/8. He was at Dawson in 1797 when taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. He made a report on the state of the roads in Castleton Parish for the Duke of Buccleuch in 1793. He was also said to have been responsible for most of the road improvements in Rulewater and Liddesdale in his time, including building Boucher Bridge and laying out the new route to Newcastle via the that bridge. In 1793 he sold Weens (and Nether Bonchester) to Robert Nutter Campbell of Kailzie and bought Liddel Bank, where he lived for a while. He is listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 10 horses. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 (and also in 1819, when he may have already deceased). He was owner of Dinlabyre and Greena according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He is probably the William who was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He is also the William, ‘esq. of Dinlabyre’ listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In his later years he was fond of writing doggerel verses, e.g. about his sheriff-substitute Robert Shortreed. He was said to have ‘spent a good estate foolishly, and died a poor man’. He married Jane, daughter of John Rutherford of Edgerston and Ellenor Elliot of Minto. Their children included: William (b.1781), eldest, who inherited Edgerston and took the name William Oliver Rutherford; Archibald, became a surgeon-apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh.
in 1799, but later joined the East India Company; Samuel, farmer at Whitehill; John, married Margaret, daughter of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, and succeeded to Overton Bush; Eleanor, eldest daughter, married Edinburgh surgeon James Russell; Violet, married David Richardson of the East India Company and drowned with her husband on the way to India; Elizabeth, married Dr. Henry Young; Jean, married Maj. Malcolm of the Royal Marines; and Agnes, married Archibald Little of London (on the same day as her sister Jean). The deaths of is sons John and William are both recorded in 1782. William (18th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. His children were baptised at Blinkbonny and Castleton Mains. He married Jean Nichol. Their children included: George (b.1771), who probably died young; Jean (b.1774); and George (1781–1837), who emigrated to America, and whose son became a well-known plough manufacturer. William (18th C.) farmer in Over Cassock and then Howpasley. He is recorded in 1769 in correspondence with John Scott in ‘Hopesrigg’. In 1772 he was at Howpasley when his son Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish. He was probably the William who married Janet Scott in 1771 and who also had a son William (b.1776). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Westerhouses in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax in the same year. William (d.1808) from Hawick, he was a baker in London. He returned to Hawick in his later years and lived at Kirkwyndfoot. He coincidentally died within a couple of months of ‘Auld Cash’, who was probably a distant cousin. It is possible he was the William born in Hawick in 1738, son of Robert and Bessie Blackhall. He is probably the baker William whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1809, with his address given as ‘Hawick, Northumberland’ (probably in error). William (1760–1818) surgeon in Middleton. He is mentioned in the 1808 will of William, ‘Auld Cash’ as his second cousin. It seems likely that he was actually son of one of the full cousins of ‘Auld Cash’. He could be the William born to Robert of Burnflat in 1757, but seems more likely to be the William son of shoemaker Robert born in 1760. He married Mary Hodgson in 1796 in Gainford, Durham and died in Middleton in 1816, aged 56. His children were Robert Hodgson, George (also a surgeon), William, Ralph and Jean. William (b.c.1770) son of shoemaker John and brother of tailor Robert. He was mentioned in the 1808 will of William, ‘Auld Cash’, as a second cousin; however, although he was left a small share of the estate, it was stated that it was not known if he was alive or dead, or whether he had any issue. William ‘Little Cash’ (1772/3–1840) merchant in Hawick. He may also have been an innkeeper. It is unclear how he was related to ‘Auld Cash’ (who died unmarried), but perhaps he was a nephew, or may not have been directly related at all (with the nickname given humourously perhaps). He was recorded as a merchant at his daughter’s baptism in 1797. It is possible he was the William ‘Jnr. Mercht.’ who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797; she died in 1809. In 1796 he married Catherine, daughter of draper George Turnbull and Betty Wilson. Their children included: Betty or Bess (1797–1848), who died in Eyemouth; Robert (1798/9–1825); and George ‘Pies’, baker in Hawick. Witnesses in 1797 were Thomas and Andrew Oliver, who were probably relatives. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, along with his wife Margaret (who died at the age of 72), a daughter who died in infancy, and his son Robert. He could be the William of Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is described as ‘little cash’ in 1806 when the death of his daughter Margaret is recorded. William (b.1785) son of Robert and Helen Scott, he was born in Hawick Parish. He was hind at Langraw in Hobkirk Parish and some of his family emigrated to the U.S. In 1841 he was agricultural labourer at Scaur Nook and in 1851 was farm steward at Langraw Scaur (the same place). His wife was Helen and she was already dead by 1851. Their children included: Henry (b.1806), who married Isabella Renwick; and Mary (b.1814); Margaret (b.c.1819), who married James Smail, farm steward at Timpendean; Agnes (or Nancy, b.c.1822), who married Oliver Lough; Andrew (b.c.1825); and Violet (b.c.1830). He could be the William, married to Helen Mason, who had children William (b.1815), Thomas (b.1817) and Agnes (b.1820) baptised in Cavers Parish. Later in life his sons William and Andrew, and son-in-law Oliver Lough, convinced him to accompany them to America. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Southdean Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull. Their daughter Jean (1812/3–55) married butcher John Wallace. William (18th/19th C.) mason at Bellshiel, probably in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William ‘Will o the Bents' (b.1800/1) son of ‘Tammy Clarilee’. In 1841 he was recorded as a mason at Bents near Chester and in 1851 was a ‘Stone-Dyke-Builder’ there. His wife was Mary and their children included: Isobel, who married Peter Smith of the Rule valley Smiths; Thomas (b.c.1833); Elizabeth (b.c.1835); James (b.c.1837); Helen (b.c.1840); and George (b.c.1842). He emigrated to Australia along with his wife and son-in-law, perhaps around the early 1850s. He had ‘Poems’ published in 1824. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Govenlock and their children included: John (b.1823); Beatrice (b.1824); William (b.1827); Walter (b.1828); Mary (b.1830); and Janet (b.1832). Since there is no trace of the family in the 1841 census, it is probably the William who emigrated to Galt, Ontario, buying a farm in Beverley in about 1834 (family history says that he came from Innerleithen, but perhaps that was incorrect or just a temporary stay). He may also have had a son Robert. William of Langraw (1804–78) eldest son of Andrew of Langraw in the Rule valley. His mother Jane Scott was a cousin of Sir Walter Scott. He was born in Huddersfield, but moved to Langraw as an infant, being educated in Jedburgh and Edinburgh University. After graduating, he worked in the office of the Hawick Town Clerk (John Oliver) for a while. It is said that he inherited a musical ear from his mother (Jean Scott, cousin of the writer Sir Walter) and to have a delicate constitution and retiring nature. He made a collection of Border tunes, working them out on a miniature violin as he travelled around the country (many coming from a shepherd called Hutton at Peel in Liddesdale). Some of this collection found its way into Wood’s ‘Songs of Scotland’, and the materials were deposited in the Antiquarian Museum in Newcastle. In 1837 he travelled to America, returning over a year later. He became a great authority on local geology, history and folklore. Friend of Sir Walter Elliot, he acted as factor to Wolfelee from 1855, when Sir Walter succeeded to the estate. He was also a keen hunter with the rifle, and took an active part in parish affairs. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He passed on the loy and tradition that the Cheviot sheep breed owed its origin to the ‘Thirteen Drifty Days’. In 1861 he is recorded at Langraw as landed proprietor and farmer of 150 acres, employing 5 labourers. He wrote ‘Eight Months in Illinois’ (1843), but was reticent to publish his poetic works, although the poems ‘The Lost Fairy’, ‘Angel Stairs’, ‘The Tushielaw Thorn’ and ‘The Capon Tree’ were all published anonymously. Tancred reports his story of meeting a ‘spunky’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’) and also how he gave some information regarding the Sclaterford. He was involved with the Hawick Archaeological Society. Late in life he married Mary Jane Mills from Ponteland in Northumberland. When his health began to fail he sold Langraw and moved into Edinburgh with his family of 2 sons and 2 daughters (including William A. and Dora M.). He is buried in the Grange Cemetery there. William (b.c.1790) farmer at North Berryfell in 1841. His wife was Helen and their children included: Helen (b.c.1820); Mary (b.c.1823); Francis (b.c.1825); and George (b.c.1830). He could be the William who married Helen Kedie in Wilton Parish in 1814, whose daughter Francis was born in 1815. William (b.1803) hind to the Laird of Langraw. He lived in one of the cottages at Langraw Scaur. His children included: Henry (b.1806), who was Steward at West Fodderlee; William, who went to America; Andrew, who went to America; Agnes, who married Oliver Lough; Mary (b.1814); Violet, who married John Dalgleish from Swanshiel and went to Australia; Margaret, married James Snail, Steward at Timpendale. He emigrated to America along with his son William and Andrew and his daughter Agnes and son-in-law Oliver Lough. William (b.1811/2) born in Yetholm Parish, he was a tailor in Denholm and was Treasurer of the Denholm Horticultural Society. He married Margaret Bell and their children included Jane, Janet, Thomas, William, Adam and Andrew. William (b.1812/3) from Jedburgh, he was shepherd at ‘Harwoodskefoot’ in 1851. His wife was Mary (from Hawick Parish) and their children included James, Robert, Jane and Janet. William (b.1814) son of Town Clerk John, brother of lawyers George and James. He was recorded on the 1841 census as a woollen manufacturer along with his brother Thomas. The pair are probably the William and Thomas recorded as proprietors of Dean Mill in Pigot’s 1837 directory, manufacturing both woollens and hosiery. In about 1836 the firm of John Oliver & Sons, along with William Wilson & Sons, purchased Weensland Corn Mill, and erected the new Weensland Mill. He was tenant farmer at Hallirule and later at Barnes (where he is recorded in the 1860s). In 1857 his wife gave 6 silver coins and a Roman coin to the Museum collection. In 1861 he was farmer of 750 acres at barnes, employing 5 people. He married Margaret Phillips.
Their children were John and Henrietta. William (b.1816/7) joiner at Cauldmill. His wife was Janet, and children included Barbara, William, Helen, Betsy and Agnes. In 1851 his mother Helen, from Ashkirk Parish, was living with him. William ‘Blind Wull’ (1818–71) noted local fiddler, born at Tandlaw, son of Adam and Agnes Anderson. He lost his sight to a game cock at the age of 5, and also lost his father early. He learned the violin from Johnnie Oliver, and played regularly at weddings and social functions. Tales were also told of his prowess as an angler and poacher and as a maker of nets. On one occasion he was caught poaching, but gave his captors the slip, escaping to Edinburgh, where he worked for a while. He also ran a dance class at the Fleece Inn ballroom. In 1841 he is recorded as an itinerant musician, residing at Damside with his mother Agnes and sisters May and Agnes, in 1851 he was a visitor on the Fore Row (with Mary Grieve, his sister) and in 1861 was ‘Musician; Blind’ at 11 Fore Raw. He firstly married Agnes Henderson in 1845 and shortly before his death secondly married Catherine Ballantyne. He died at 11 Fore Raw. He is sometimes regarded as the last of Hawick’s blind celebrities. William Elliot (b.1819) born in Roberton Parish, son of James, farmer at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He emigrated to Australia, settling at Nanango Station (which covered 195 square miles) in Queensland in about 1842. In fact he probably named the area Nanango, after the aboriginal word for the nearby waterhole. Fellow Borderer John Borthwick settled at the adjacent Tarong, and together the district became known as South Burnett. He probably stayed in Australia for less than a decade, but returned to Scotland. In 1851 he was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot living with his brother James, and listed as ‘Lately from Australia’. He later lived on Mull. He married Christina C. Campbell and their children were Mary Salmons, Helen Elliot, Donald C., Jane B. and William. William (19th C.) listed as a High Street baker in Slater’s 1852 directory. William ‘Will’ (b.1827) son of Castleton shepherd George, he was brother of David and Bar- ton. He was farm steward at Gatehousecote and later at Hyndlee farm. He was listed as farm steward at Langraw Scar in 1851 and Gatehousecote Cottages in 1861. He married Margaret Rutherford in 1853 and their children included: Margaret J. (b.c.1852); James (b.1855); Janet (1856–1923), who married James Crosbie and emigrated to New Zealand; Euphemia (b.1861) and George (b.1864). He died in Hawick, aged 88. William (b.1828/9) smith at Bedrule. He was married to Margaret and their children included Walter, Thomas and William. William Moffat (1846–91) eldest surviving son of James and Dorothea Moffat. He succeeded as tenant of Howpasley on the death of his father. He was one of the original members of the Border Rifles and having held the rank of sergeant for 10 years, was permitted to formally retain that rank when the troop disbanded. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1873. He was also President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club in the 1880s. After retiring he moved to Langraw House. Later he and his sister (probably Jane, both unmarried) stayed at Whitriggs House. William (1869–1919) son of James and Jane Rutherford. He was a solicitor and lived at Woodburgh near Cauldmill. He died in a freak accident, falling out of the door of the express train from London, near Nuneaton. He married Jessie, daughter of Luke Greenwood, but the couple had no children (formerly spelled ‘Olifer’, e.g. the usual spelling given for the 1717 Cornet, and ‘Olyphar’, as well as ‘Olever’, ‘Oliver’, ‘Oli- uere’, ‘Ollivere’, ‘Olivere’, ‘Ollifer’, ‘Ollifer’, ‘Olliver’, ‘Olliver’, ‘Olyfard’, ‘Olypheir’, ‘Olypher’, ‘Oliver’, etc.; ‘Oliphant’ may have broken away as a separate name in early times).

Oliver Crescent (o-lee-vur-kre-sin’) n. street built on the most easterly portion of the lands originally granted by Douglas, built in 1875 and named after James Oliver. The area was at one time known as ‘Lawrie’s Denn’. St. John’s Church was once here, converted to Arthur Armstrong’s Department Store in 1962. The composer Francis George Scott was born at No. 6. J.P. Alison designed the tenements at Nos. 20 and 22 in 1898.

Oliver Park (o-lee-vur-pawrk) n. council housing scheme developed off Weensland Road in 1922, the first of its kind in the town. It was named after Andrew Rutherford Oliver of Thornwood.

Oliver Place (o-lee-vur-plis) n. opposite side of the street from Bridge Street and Bourtree Place and off Oliver Crescent, the first part being a continuation of the High Street. In fact 83 and 85 High Street may have originally have been built as 1 and 2 Oliver Place. It was built around 1875–8 and named after James Oliver, who funded the construction. This area marked the eastern limit of the town lands granted in the Charter. No. 3 has a particularly ornate design, with the carved stone head above the entrance perhaps being the

Oliver-Rutherford

Oliver Place (o-lee-vur-plis) n. street in Newcastleton, off Henry Street.

Oliver-Rutherford (o-lee-vur-ru-thur-furrd) n. Archibald John of Dinlabyre (b.1821) 2nd surviving son of William Oliver of Edgerston and Dinlabyre. He joined the 93rd Highlanders, transferred to the 70th Regiment and retired as a Major. He succeeded to his father's lands of Dinlabyre. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He was succeeded by his son Archibald Rawlinson. Archibald Rawlinson (b.1866) succeeded his father to Dinlabyre. He was a mariner, who was retired by 1897. In that year he married Ellen Scott Elliot, daughter Walter Elliot, farmer at Hermitage. William see William Oliver Rutherford. William Alexander of Edgerston (1818–88) eldest surviving son of William Oliver of Dinlabyre and Agnes Chatto, he was born at Knowesouth. His father had inherited Edgerston from his grandmother and took the addition of Rutherford to his surname. He served for a few years in the Militia, reaching the rank of Major. He was a keen hunter, starting his own pack of harriers in 1845, but giving up after an accident meant he could not mount a horse. He served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He did not succeed his father to Edgerston until 1879, when he was 61. In 1862 he married his cousin Margaret Jane, daughter of Edward Young (whose father married a sister of William Oliver Rutherford, Sheriff of Roxburghshire) and Elizabeth, who was daughter of J. Browne Roberts; Elizabeth’s sisters Katherine Jane and Margaret Amelia married brothers Thomas Macmillan-Scott of Wauchope and Charles Scott of Langlee. His children were: William Edward (b.1863), who succeeded; Archibald Aymer (b.1867); and Neta Isabella. He secondly married Mary Anne, daughter of W.H. Brakespear from Oxfordshire. They had 2 children: Malcolm; and Agnes. William Edward of Edgerston (1863–1931) eldest son of William Alexander. He also served in the Militia for several years. He succeeded his father to Edgerston in 1888, but sold the estate in 1915 (to Frederick Scott Oliver, who was not related) and emigrated to Kenya. In 1891 he married Nancy, youngest daughter of Gideon Pott of Dod. At the same time Mr. Pott’s eldest daughter was also married in the same church (to Isaac Bayley).

the Olivers (thu-o-lee-vurz) n. local family, for centuries concentrated in a triangle formed by Hawick, Jedburgh and the Carter Bar. Tradition asserts that they were once connected closely with the Frasers, or alternatively that they were descended from a West Country family or came from Spain (there is no evidence for the reality of any of these stories however). The early history is also confused by the existence of the surname Oliphant in Scotland. It is unclear exactly when the surname appeared in the Borders. There were Olivers in Berwick in the late 13th century. Robert Oliver was Provost of Jedburgh in 1424 and Thomas Oliver was recorded at Swinnie in 1436. In 1493 a number of Olivers were separately fined for non-appearance to answer crimes at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh; they may be among the ancestors of local modern-day Olivers. There follows many records of the family in the Jedforest and Southdean areas in the 16th century. A farm called ‘the Strynds’ (probably meaning ‘the Springs’, near Abbotrule) was the residence of a prominent branch of the family in the late 15th century. In 1502 they were accused of being part of many different raids around the Borders and of them (either brothers, or from 2 generations) were sentenced to be hung at Jedburgh for failure to answer for their ‘diverse reiffis, herseschippis, slauchtaris, and stouthis’. The clan sometimes fought on the English side, e.g. during Ancrum Moor, when they switched allegiance to the Scots mid-battle; a letter of assurance to the English King in 1544 is valuable as a list of 24 of the most prominent Olivers at that time. Many of the clan were executed following the pacification of the Borders after the 1603 Union. Nevertheless, they continued to farm throughout the upper Rule valley and Southdean, 36 male tenants of that name being recorded in the Jedforest in 1669. In Hawick there were shoemakers of this name from early times, perhaps going back as far as ‘Hab o Hawick’ in the early 16th century. There have been at least 13 Cornets called Oliver – ‘For the Olivers stout, of Jed-forest, Lang counted him their stay, But now, he bow’d upon his staff, And his auld thin locks were gray’ [JTe].

Oman (o-min) n. George (b.1838/9–94) born in Wick, he trained as a photographer in Edinburgh, and came to Hawick in 1867 following his marriage. In 1868 he started to work with photographer William Scott. Their business, Scott & Oman, took over William Beattie’s photography business. For the Olivers stout, of Jed-forest, Lang counted him their stay, But now, he bow’d upon his staff, And his auld thin locks were gray’ [JTe].
business at 4 Mill Port (although Beattie had previously been at 11 Back Row). From 1875 he also ran a tobacconist’s shop at 3 High Street. However, he left Hawick soon afterwards and is listed on the 1881 and 1891 censuses as a photographer on Caledonian Crescent in Edinburgh. He married Mary Ann Rutherford, who had been a domestic servant in Rose Street, Edinburgh. Their children were: Agnes McMorran (b.c.1868), who died of burns, aged 2½; Isabella (b.c.1871), born in Hawick; Jennina (b.c.1873), also born in Hawick; Mary Ann (b.c.1875), also born in Hawick; Nathaniel (b.1877), who died in infancy; Margaret Miller (b.1879); Hannah Turner (b.1881); Georgina Francis (b.1884); Kate Andrewina Gibson (b.1887).

Oor Ain Auld Toon

Oor Ain Auld Toon (oor-ān-awld-toon) n. song written by Thomas Caldwell, with music by Adam Grant. It was first sung at the 1903 Colour Bussing by John Bell, and dedicated to all Hawick Callants in exile. Because of this, as well as the evocative words and rousing chorus, it is almost always sung at the Overseas Night.

oor ain yins (oor-ān-yinz) n. close members of one’s family – ‘Oor ain yins is sometimes used to distinguish one’s immediate family or one’s immediate household from those of one’s kindred less nearly related’[ECS].

Oor Bonnie Border Toon (oor-bo-nee-bör-dur-toon) n. song written by Robert Hunter with music by Francis George Scott. Scott was responding to a request of the Hawick News for a tune to fit the words that it published in 1897. However, it was not published until 1902, and first sung at the Colour Bussing of that year by James Sutherland. It was then not sung again at the Colour Bussing until after WWII, although it is now much more popular. Some people have noticed a resemblance of the tune to ‘The Maple Leaf Forever’, but any similarity is only passing. Certainly Scott’s music is original, and indeed the accompaniment is fairly challenging for the pianist. For the 1957 song book Scott agreed to drop the original 4-bar interlude between the verses and a coda at the end (but would allow no other changes). The introduction is now played between each verse, although the Saxhorn Band version still includes the original interlude.

oo’re (oor) contr. we’re, we are – ‘oo’re off then’, ‘Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum’ [T], ‘An’ shaw oo’re rale Hawick Callants tae the end o’ oo’re days’ [JEDM], ‘Oo’re gaan ti heh a pickl rain, A unk’ [ECS], ‘How typical o the great place oo’re privileged ti come frae that oo’re privileged ti come lang ago as 1914 { `So ti the tuine o: ‘Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum!’ oot A suitt towrt the Auld Jail, thonder’[ECS] (see also Sandy Fuzzy’s Cairt).

oorit (oo-ree’-ri’) pp., adj., arch. tired, wearied, miserable – ‘Aa yow yins that’s ooreet . . . an virus ti sid doon in ov a hymmly bit away threh aae the strowe an the catter-battereen – ee sood gang an stop at Ancrum!’[ECS].

oorit-lookin (oo-ree’-loo-kin) adj., arch. tired-looking, appearing worn or sick (also ‘oorit-like’).

Oor Lady Land (oor-łą-dee-lawnd) n. Our Lady Land, name of a piece of land in the former Hassendean Parish, referred to in a charter of about 1537. The Mains of ‘Capitrig’ was bounded by the Grinding Burn on the East and this place on the West. The land may have been associated with Hassendean Kirk or otherwise dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It may have been the same as the lands later called ‘Over Hassendean’. This was sold to Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch by Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1738; the disposition of 1739 to John, Duke of Roxburgh refers to it as ‘three acres of land called the Ladylands of Hassendeanbank’. This is the ‘Hassendean Lady Lands, now belonging to the Dukes of Buccleuch and Roxburgh’, which had once been part of the Barony of Cavers, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

oors (oors) pron. ours – ‘The land here is oors forever, We’ll defend it aye in their name’[??] ‘. . . Unite to mak’ oors a better auld toon’[TC], ‘. . . oo hev ti take eet ti thaim, speakin their language so they sing aboot oors!’[HIS].

oorsels (oor-selz) pron. ourselves – ‘oo’ve just got oorsels ti blame’, ‘Oo can land yonder in time for the Common Riding and disguise oorsels . . . ’[JEDM], ‘The street was a wee fairground A’ tae oorsels’[??], ‘. . . An’ though we were oorsels alane She showed nae fear’[WP], ‘Guid gie us mense when oicht against us tells, To hae a herty laugh whiles at oorsels!’[WL], ‘. . . employed to indicate the plural of particular persons or things, e.g., Yin o oorsels’[ECS] (also oorsel).

oor yin (oor-yin) pron. member of one’s family, relative, a husband in particular – ‘Oor Yin did his fift-yower [hours a week] on th’ frame a his days’[BW], ‘‘Oor yin was juist speakin about them nae feather gane than last nacht’, said Mrs. Brown, who always referred to her better half as ‘oor yin’’[HNe1914], ‘A former generation

oot (oot, oo’) adv., adj., prep. out – ‘er ee gaun oot the night’?, ‘it just fell oot the wundi’, visible ‘oot in their shape’ [BB], ‘Oot frae a’ the roar an’ rustle . . . ‘ [RH], ‘It’s oot o’ sicht; oo canna see ocht o’d’ [ECS], ‘. . . We cheered ye oot o’ sicht’ [WL], ‘. . . the matrons of Hawick would be suddenly visible ‘oot in their shape’’ [BB], sometimes the ‘o’ or ‘of’ is omitted where it would be there in English – ‘she came oot the hoose’, ‘hei got eet oot some-in hei read’, ‘. . . An’ at his voice the deid folk leapt Fраe oot their graves’ [WP], prep. by way of, along, away – ‘A’m gaun for a dander oot the Langbank road’ [ECS], ‘They were gaun oot the Jed road’ [GW], to an end, beyond the usual time – ‘Ti be (or hae) sleepit oot’ [GW], n. out – ‘. . . And mony oots and ins’ [JEDM], ‘Its whisperin’ eddies, ins an’ oots . . . ’ [JBS], v., arch. to blunt out, betray a confidence (see also oot at and several words beginning ‘oot-’).

Opens (ō-pinz) n. place name in Hob Kirk Parish, formerly known as ‘Wopens’ and before that ‘Hopends’. The cottage of that name was formerly on the Stonedge estate, near the bottom of Hawthornside Brae, close to Weens. James Deans lived there in about the 1840s and 50s, and it is where local historian Walter Deans was born. Robert Grierson, ploughman, lived there in 1861 (also called ‘The Opens’).

the Operatives (thu-o-pe-ra-tivz) n. one of a number of races at the Common Riding in the 19th century, perhaps the predecessors of the Tradesmen’s Handicap. It is probably the same as the ‘Trades’ Purse’ recorded being run on the Friday in at least the years 1834 and 1835. In 1836 there were ‘Operatives’ ‘Trades’ Purse’ races run at the Moor on the Friday morning, at the Haugh on the Friday evening and on the Saturday. In 1840 there were ‘Operative Trades’ Purse’ races at the Moor and then the Haugh on the Friday and also on Saturday. The ‘Operatives’ 3 Sovereigns’ race was run in 1843, with the ‘Operatives’ Purse’, ‘Operatives’ Trades Purse’, ‘Operatives’ Plate’ and ‘Operatives’ Sweepstakes’ in the 1850s. In 1861 there was the ‘Operatives’ Plate’ on the Saturday (this is ‘operative’ in the sense of ‘workman’; see the Tradesmen’s).

opposeetion (o-pō-zee-shin) n. opposition – ‘…amazin his team-mates even mair than the opposition’ [IWL].

opression (o-pre-shin) n., arch. the act of oppressing, molestation – ‘The bailies and council promise to assist the bailies in the matter of an oppression alleged committed by them on James Chisholm …’ [JW1677].

oppriproious (o-prō-pre-is) adj., arch. opprobrious – ‘…and with many intollerable, injurious, and opproprious words, speeches, and carriages, publicly abusing the then present Baylyees …’ [BR1706].

option (op-shin) n., arch. preferred choice, particularly in the phrase ‘in the option of’, meaning according to the decision of – ‘…and to stand thereupon with the pettis upon her shoulder, with ane paper upon her breast or forehead declaring the fault, and cam in the option of the said William Scott, bailie’ [BR1638].

or (or) prep., arch., poet. before, till, ere – ‘Likely he wad think he wad distance them or he gat there on the open muir’ [BCM1881], ‘I’ll caw the haill town for’t, or I want it’ [JAHM], ‘However, or oo got roond by Wultin and across the brig Aw hed masel’ the gither …’ [JEDM], ‘… A was dry again, lang or this!’ [ECS], ‘… an, forbye, it was lang or nicht!’ [ECS], ‘… And heard the ridin’ ballads ‘Or Scott ere wrote them doon’ [DH], ‘… Or ilka beast was bieldit, Or ilka flock made fauld’ [WL], ‘… But what will’t be or nicht?’ [WL].

orbelang (or-bee-lawng) adv., arch. ere long, before long – ‘Ee needna rack eersul about eet; ee’ll sei it’ll be aa better orbelang’ [ECS].

the Orchard (thu-or-churd) n. Orchard farm and mansion house, situated at the end of the Braid Road, just outside Hawick. The mansion is Georgian, dating from around 1800. It contains a sunken entrance and stepped entrance porch and the interior has much of the original plasterwork, although there were extensive alterations in the 19th century. The old stables bear an armorial panel with the symbols of the Scotts and the Douglases. Nearby ‘Old Orchard’ are restored early 19th century cottages. The earliest reference to the modern name of these lands is when ‘John Scot in Orchart, elder and younger’ witnessed a document for the nearby lands of Crook in 1529/30. In 1541 it was burned by the English along with Orniston, with the cattle taken and 3 men killed. The land was also known as ‘Gyislandis’ in 1511 and ‘Gayslands’ in 1675, so it must have once belonged to someone called Guy, perhaps Guy of Denholm. The land was part of the ‘Cocklaw’ estate, held by the Gedstains of that Ilk through the 16th and 17th centuries. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls there were 8 householders listed there. It is said that in about 1734 it passed to a Mr. Dickson, but that seems to be an error. In fact it went to Archibald Crombie, Sheriff Depute of Roxburghshire, who was a relative of the Gedstains of some sort. In 1744 he sold it to Robert Howison, Bailie in Hawick, and on his death it passed to his grandson, William Dickson. After Dickson’s death in 1788 it was probably inherited by his uncle, Robert Scott. He was recorded there in 1811, when it was valued as £310. Sometime after Scott died in 1813 it was purchased by the Douglases of Cavers. John Elliot of Borthwickbrae was living there in 1792. In 1797 the farmers there were Andrew Pringle, plus George and Walter Stavert, with the owner Robert Scott living at Orchard Cottage. In the 1860s it was owned by Douglas of Cavers, and occupied by manufacturer Walter Wilson. By the late 19th century it was possessed by William Scott, with the last connection with the Douglasses of Cavers severed in about 1925 (also sometimes just ‘Orchard’; once spelled and pronounced ‘Worchard’ and variants, and still ‘Orchyard’ in the mid-19th century; the name changed from ‘Gyislandis’, i.e. ‘the lands belonging to Guy’, possibly of Denum, to its present name in the 17th century; it is ‘Orchart’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Orchyard’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Orchard Road (or-churd-röd) n. name sometimes used for the back road from the Miller’s Knowes passing Orchard farm, a popular walking spot – ‘...there’s peace alang the Orchard way, an’ doon in Denholm’s bower’ [WFC].

Orchard Street (or-churd-stree’) n. short street off Orchard Terrace, named in 1899, previously being part of Glebe Place (from 1888) and then of Glebe View (from 1892).

Orchard Terrace (or-churd-te-ris) n. street at the back of the Terraces, opened as a public road around 1895, although the first house (No. 2) was erected in 1882. There are many villa-type residences on the higher side. The name derives from its proximity to the road to Orchard.

orchard (or-chur’, -churt) n. an orchard (also worchard).

ordain (or-dän) v., arch. to appoint to an office, nominate for duty – ‘[They did] ordaine John Hardie ...and John Tudhope ...two ordinary sworne burleymen’ [BR1688].

ordainit (or-dän-ee’, -i’) pp., arch. ordained, nominated, appointed – ‘...it was ordainit at the command of the General and company that three baggage horses were to go to the armie out of the town’ [BR1644].

ordely (or-der-lee) arch., arch. duly, properly, according to normal procedure – ‘...which day was ordierly kepeed by virtue of a proclamation emitted by ye General Assembly’ [PR1722].

ordinance (or-di-nins) n., arch. a prescribed religious observance, attendance at church – ‘John Armstrong and John Crozier subsequently appeared to answer a charge of ‘travelling upon the Lord’s day, and absenting themselves from ordinances’’ [JaT].

ordinar (or-di-nur) adj., arch. ordinary – ‘...are altogether frustrated and disappointed of the ordinar free and gratuitous contributions of their Christian and charitable neighbours ...’ [BT1699], ‘...was not proclaimed at the kirke of Hawick which is not only knowne to be his ordinar residence ...’ [BR1712], ‘...an’ then for the Law – his ordinar’ hunting grund’ [BCM1881], ‘Yeh gowsty nicht (wui a wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wandils) a turbleent woare as the ordinar dang doon the first Peinelheuch Monument’ [ECS], adv. ordinarily (often with ‘for’) – ‘At length a doubt wi’ some prevail’d, The ordinar’ ready payment faill’d’ [RDW], ‘The auld folk for ordinar’ gude to bed by ten, but on this nicht there was a coe like to calve ...’ [BCM1880] (also written ‘ordinar’).

ordinary (or-di-nu-ree) adj., arch. custom, usual practice, particularly in the phrase ‘for ordinary’, meaning habitually, according to custom – ‘...the Magistrates and Inhabitants of Hawick rode the marches of the Common yearly for ordinary on the last Friday of May, old stile’ [C&L1767].

Ord (örd) n. Alexander (15th C.) resident of Minto, whose surname is recorded as ‘Urde’. In 1493 Walter and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole were able to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including the theft of 2 cows and 13 sheep from him. He was probably related to Maragret, who is recorded in Minto in 1502. John (18th/19th C.) plasterer in Hawick, listed on Teviot Crescent in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Margaret (15th/16th C.) tenant at Minto Craigend, recorded in 1502, when David Scott (called ‘Lady’) in Stirkshaws had permission for leading a raid on the farms there. She had 2 cows stolen from her farm. Her surname is recorded as ‘Urde’.

Ord the Equestrian

Ord the Equestrian (ɔrd-thu-ee-kwe-stree-in) n. popular performer at local Common Ridings and fairs in the mid-19th century. He was also known as ‘Ord the Circusman’, putting on open-air performances in the Haugh. He was born in Longformacus Parish, where his father was minister, and although destined for the ministry himself, he instead became a showman. His speciality was tricks involving horses, including jumping over up to 16 of them, and riding half a dozen at once. He used to ride standing on a bare-backed steed and impersonate characters, financed by the sale of lottery tickets for prizes. He is buried in Biggar old churchyard.

Ordering the Curds an Cream (or-de-rin-thu-kurdz-an-kream) n. another name for the Thursday night Chase, when the Cornet formally orders curds and cream from a neighbouring farm (now St. Leonard’s) for the Friday morning of Common Riding week. This takes place on the Thursday preceding Common Riding week and is the first official ride of the ceremonies. It has happened since at least the 1840s, but only became officially part of the Common Riding ceremonies (i.e. under the ægis of the Ceremonial Committee) in 1888. Jed Murray performed the official ordering duties for almost 30 years, often with an original poem. The evening begins at 6 p.m. when the drums and fifes lead the Cornet and supporters around the Tower Knowe and up the Loan, finishing at the site of the Auld Brig. The riders proceed up to the Nipknowes, with the married men going first, headed by the Acting Father. This evening also has the first ‘Hut’, with the Cornet and Acting Father both giving speeches, and the Acting Father being presented with his badge. After the publican has agreed to supply the curds and cream the Hut winds up and there is the singing of all 14 verses of ‘Teribus’ at the farmhouse.

The ‘name book’ from this survey carries additional useful information about place names, including descriptions, spelling variations and the local authorities who were consulted.

oringer (ɔ-rin-jur) n., arch. an orange, orange tree – ‘Oringers and limons [costing £16/0. the 2 dozen in February 1681, and the former in May £1/10/0. a dozen’ [HAST1905].

Orm (ɔrm) n. (12th C.) son of Eilaf. He was named after Orm, son of Ketel, husband of Gunilda, his father’s aunt. He was probably the man who gave his name to Ormiston at the confluence of the Kale and Teviot. In about 1145 he witnessed the charter of David I to Melrose Abbey. Sometime before 1152 he was witness to a charter concerning a gift of the church of Moll to Kelso Abbey. In the 1150s he witnessed a transaction between Robert Avenel and Melrose Abbey. In about 1155 he and his son John (of Hownam) witnessed a charter granting the church of Old Roxburgh to the Diocese of Glasgow. In about 1158 he witnessed a gift of Sawtry (in Huntingdonshire) to Warden Abbey by King Malcolm. In 1159/60 he witnessed a confirmation of the rights of Kelso Abbey by King Malcolm. Sometime before 1165 he granted land in ‘the other Crailing’ to Jedburgh Abbey. He also probably possessed the lands of Hownam, which were later owned by his son. He was succeeded by his son John, who was Sheriff of Roxburgh. His great-grandson William was the first to be styled ‘of Ormiston’.

Ormiston (ɔr-mee-stin) n. farm and former estate about 2 miles east of Hawick, in the Parish of Cavers. This was the site of Cocklaw Castle, where the ‘Siege of Cocklaw’ took place in 1403. However, the name occurs separately from ‘Cocklaw’ even as early as the 16th century, and so it is unclear if the names were precisely synonymous. In 1541 it was burned by the English along with Orchard, with the cattle taken and 3 men killed. John Scott in Ormiston is recorded in 1589 and Adam Scott in 1592. There were other Scotts there in the 17th century. It was owned by the Gledstains of that Ilk in 1643. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls there were 8 separate householders listed there, while ‘Bailiea Scott ormston’ paid tax on 2 hearths in Hawick. The ruins of the tower were obliterated by the present farmhouse, which was built around 1747 by carpet manufacturer Walter Elliot. The Elliots lived here in the 18th century, but Thomas Currier ‘of Ormstone’ inherited it through marriage to Helen Elliot. Currer was owner in 1788, when it was valued at £675 15s 4d. He is recorded as farmer there in 1797 and in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811. The Wilson family had it in the 19th century. Hawick’s first Provost, George Wilson was born there, as well as Victoria Cross awardee John Daykins. James Black was miller there in 1841. William Gray and Andrew Black were farmers in the 1860s. Charles Wilson is recorded in the house in 1868. ‘Mrs. Margaret F. McDonald or Muir’ was listed as owner in about 1874. Until about 1830 the main route from Hawick to the Newcastle area used to pass here on the way to Birneyknowe. In 1878 an old jug (now in the Museum) was found in a garden there, containing some 15th century silver coins. A 3-legged bronze cauldron, possibly 14th century, was also found there and is in the Museum (formerly spelled and pronounced ‘Wormston’ and variants; the origin is probably ‘Orm’s farm’, from the Old Scandinavian personal name Ormr, but may have been transplanted from another place of the same name; the name first occurs as ‘Ormistoun’ in 1509/10, ‘Ormistoune’ in 1535, ‘Ormestoune’ in 1592, ‘Ormestowne’ in 1683, ‘Ormstone’ in 1694, ‘Ormistown’ in 1708 and ‘Ormstone’ in 1761; it is ‘Ormston’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; note there are several other places in Scotland of the same name, e.g. the place on Kale Water, in Berwickshire and in East Lothian).

Ormiston (or-mee-stin) n. farm and house in Eckford Parish, on the north bank of the Teviot, opposite where the Kale joins. The lands were probably those of ‘Creling villae Orme filii Gilasp’ mentioned in the c.1147 charter to Jedburgh Abbey. The lairdship was held byOrm’s descendants, who took ‘Ormistoon’ as their designation and held the lands, which became a barony, until the late 16th century when James, ‘Black Ormiston’, was executed. It then passed to the Kers of Cessford and then the Earls of Roxburgh. In 1654 it was sold by William, Earl of Roxburghe to John Scott of Langshaw, who sold it in 1658 to Kerr of Chatto. Some time before 1678 it was purchased from Kerr of Chatto by Elliot of Wells. In 1718 it was acquired by William Elliot of Wells and was still held by an Elliot in 1788. It then passed to William Mein and later the Marquess of Lothian. A tower and village here were burned by Hertford’s men in 1545 (the origin is probably ‘Orm’s farm’, from the Old Norse personal name ‘Ormr’ and the Old English ‘tun’; the name first appears as ‘Hormiston’ in the early 13th century and it is ‘Ormistoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Ormiston (or-mee-stin) n. Adam (b.1738) son of Robert and Helen Leyden. He was probably the Adam, farmer at Drinkstone, recorded in 1787–97 on the Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses, and on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. He is probably the Adam listed in 1788 as former owner of part of Weensland, valued at £41, and at that time belonging to William Dickson of Orchard. He was probably the Adam who witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1776. In 1766 he firstly married Agnes Turnbull, but she died shortly afterwards. In 1767 he secondly married Esther Douglas. Their children were: Robert (b.1769), tenant farmer at Drinkstone; Isabella (b.1770); Helen (b.1770), twin of Isabel, who died young; Janet (b.1773), William (b.1774) and George (b.1776), who all died in infancy; William (again, 1778–1859), a farm servant, who died unmarried, possibly the William living at Dykeneuk in 1841; and Adam (b.1780), who also died young. He also appears to have thirdly married Nelly Scott in 1787 and fourthly Isabel Scott in 1796. With his 4th wife he had 5 further children, including George (b.1799) and Janet (1803–76). It is possible that his widow was the Isabella who was listed as ‘Ind.’ in the 1841 census, and living at Greensidehall Cottage, aged about 55. Adam (1820–65) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Drinkstone, and Helen Hall. He worked as an agricultural labourer and then as a mason’s labourer. In 1843 he married Elizabeth Storrie (1823–84) and they had sons: Robert (1846–1919), who married Isabella Clyde; and Thomas (b.1850/1). He secondly married Betsy Douglas and they had a daughter, Betsy (b.1859). He was living with his mother and other extended family members in 1851 and was at 3 Round Close in 1861. He ended his life by hanging himself. Adam (1827–96) eldest son of George and Anne Lockie and grandson of Adam, tenant in Drinkstone. In 1861 he was miller and farmer at Rutherford Mill in Maxton Parish. In 1853 he married Margaret Henderson (1828–1915). They had 5 daughters (including Betsy and Anne) and 3 sons, George, Adam and William. Sir Alan (d.c.1289) probably descendant (and perhaps son) of William. He witnessed many charters in about the 1270s and 80s. For example he witnessed a resignation of lands to Melrose Abbey by Richard of Rule for lands in Hownan, where he is ‘Alano de Hormiston’. He held lands in Pencaitland in East Lothian, mentioned in the 1260s and 70s. His wife was Alice, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It is unclear who succeeded him, but there were several others of the same name at a similar time, e.g. Henry and John, who also swore fealty in 1296. It seems likely he was a direct ancestor of most of today’s Ormistons. Andrew of that Ilk (d.1495) eldest son of George. He gained the Barony of Ormiston in 1464, as well as the lands of ‘Symonstoun’ and ‘Grymslaw’. He was a member of the panel of 1464/5 ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Cavers, where he is ‘Andrew Ormestoune of that ilk’. Also in 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was witness to a saisine of the Cranstons for Denholm Mains in 1465/6, where he is described as ‘of Ormistoun’. He also witnessed several other charters in the 1460s to 1480s. In 1472 he resigned his lands of Ormiston so that they could be granted to his son Robert. In 1476 an action was brought against him and several others by John, Lord Somerville, relating to the lands of Blacklaw in Linton Parish, with the inquest including Ainslie; Kerrs; Douglases; Pringles; Mathers; Gorlays; Turnbulls and Dalgleishes. In 1481 his brother Nicholas had a charter for lands in the Barony of Bruxfield. In 1483/4 he was mentioned in a law-suit involving Thomas Oliphant and William of Abernethy, 2nd Lord Saltoun, relating to the lands of Blacklaw in Linton Parish, with the inquest including Ainslies; Kerrs; Douglases; Pringles; Mathers; Gorlays; Turnbulls and Dalgleishes. In 1481 his brother Nicholas had a charter for lands in the Barony of Bruxfield. In 1483/4 he was mentioned in a law-suit involving Thomas Oliphant and William of Abernethy, 2nd Lord Saltoun. In 1485/6 he witnessed a charter for Robert Ramsay of Cockpen. In 1486 he is recorded as a crown tenant in ‘Hairtherne’ in Yarrow. In 1490 he had to pay Thomas Stewart of Minto for the rental of Sunlaws. In 1492 he is mentioned as a creditor in the will of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch. He is probably the Laird of Ormiston fined for non-presence at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. He was mentioned again in a decree relating to Sunlaws in 1494. He married Joneta de Cranston and had children: Robert, who succeeded; George, who served as a gunner, and was tutor to his nephew George; and Margaret, who married John Falow of that Ilk. Andrew (b.1731) eldest son of Robert, grandson of Andrew, blacksmith at Bonjedward, and direct descendant of James of that Ilk, ‘Black Ormiston’. He married Jean Turnbull in Kelso in 1760. Their children, all but the first born in Hobkirk Parish, included: John (b.1769), who lived in Hobkirk; and 3 Williams (b.1763, 1773, 1775). Andrew (18th/19th C.) tenant at Hobkirk Manse lands, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He is probably the Andrew who married Marion Oliver in Hobkirk in 1768. Andrew (1747–1837) miller at Timbersidemill, he later moved to Sillerbuthall and Lockieshedge. He was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk in Hawick. Andrew (c.1794–1853) born in Cavers Parish, he was one of the last Hawick Town Herds. In 1841 he was at ‘Hawick Muir House’ and at ‘Herd’s House’ in 1851; these may have been names for St. Leonard’s. He married Sarah Wilson in Wilton Parish in 1816. Their children included Janet, Sarah, Agnes and Adam. Andrew (1820–96) youngest son of John and Elizabeth Oliver. In 1861 he was a labourer living at Bedrule Lodge. In 1848 he married Mary Hymers (perhaps Aimers). They had 2 daughters and 4 sons, including: John (d.1919), who died at Inveresk; Edward (d.1890), who moved to West Derby; Andrew; George (b.1860), who lived at Bedrule. Archibald (1746–1805) born in Wilton Parish, eldest son of John and Isobel Scott. He became a gardener and later moved to Melrose. He is probably the Archibald listed as owner of ‘Howlands Inclosure’ in 1788, and still recorded that way in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (when he was already deceased), with the same lands later being owned by Mrs. Elizabeth Graham and Mrs. Agnes Bowie. In Hawick in 1774 he married Betty Scott, who was from Goldielands. Their children included: John (b.1776); Betty (b.1778); John (again, b.1781), Sergeant in the Royal Marines; Walter (b.c.1785); Betty (again, b.1787); Archibald (b.1793), emigrated to America. Archibald (b.1793) youngest son of Archibald and Betty Scott. He was born in Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Hart from Eckford Parish, and they had one child, Archibald, who was a shoemaker. He emigrated to America, and it is unclear what happened to him. Archibald (b.1813–94) born in Melrose Parish, only son of Archibald and Isabel Hart. He was a shoemaker in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s directory in 1837 and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was on the south side of Main Street. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Turnbull in Lilliesleaf in 1836, and she died in 1882. Their children included: Agnes (b.1837); William (b.1838); John (b.1840), who married Mary Baptie; Isabella (b.1842); Robert (b.1846); Helen (b.1851); James Russell (b.1854); Archibald (b.1856); and Mary (b.1858). He died in Ancrum. Archibald (1861–1909) eldest son of John and Mary Baptie. He became a violin teacher in Edinburgh. David (b.1776) son of John and Betty Laidlaw, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a draper on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. ‘David & Son’ was listed as a Howegate draper in 1837, as well as a manufacturer of hosiery and tailor; the same firm was still...

listed on the Howegate in 1852. In 1841 he was at about No. 21 Howegate. He married Joan (or ‘Johanna’) Halliburton, who died in 1854. Their children were: an unnamed child (d.1808); John (b.1809), draper in Hawick; Elizabeth (b.1816); Joan (b.1820); and another child who died in infancy. George of that Ilk (15th C.) son of James. In 1439 he was a witness to the return of Douglas of Bonjedward and in 1437 he was on an inquest along with his father for the Kers of Altonburn. He purchased lands at Makerstoun in 1451 and was granted his father’s Barony of Ormiston in 1452. His recorded sons were: Andrew, who succeeded; James; Nicholas; and Bartholomew. George (15th/16th C.) younger son of Andrew of that Ilk and brother of Robert. He appears to have been in charge of the estate of Ormiston in 1497 when there was a legal case about ejecting tenants from Ormiston Mill. He served as tutor to his brother’s son George, who would succeed to Ormiston. He served as one of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell’s bailies appointed for giving Walter Scott of Branxholme the lands of Grahamslaw in 1500. Both he and his nephew George appeared on the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. He appears as a ‘gunner’ on H.M.S. Margaret in 1513 (the year of Flodden) and received payments as a gunner until 1544. In 1546 he was recorded receiving a pension. It is unclear if he had any family. George of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) son of Robert and Elizabeth Rutherford. His uncle George served as his tutor. He inherited Ormiston and Samieston in 1509, presumably meaning that he reached majority then. He was a member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. He obtained lands in Maxton Parish in 1510. In 1530 he was among Border Lairds who gave security for their behaviour. He and his son George were involved with the lands of Fairnington, through a process of legitimisation in 1515. His children included: Sir James, ‘the Black Laird’, who succeeded; George, who served as a quartermaster in the Scottish Court; and Andrew (d.1574), who was a Colonel of the Scots army in Holland and was killed in a duel. George (17th C.) probably younger son of Walter and grandson of James ‘the Black Laird’. He may have been referred as ‘in Heidschaw’. He witnessed events in Jedburgh Parish in 1644 and 1648 and a baptism in Ashkirk in 1650. In 1637 in Ashkirk Parish he married ‘Jonet Tennent’. They had 3 known children: a daughter (b.1639); Robert, tenant at Boonraw; and George, who married Isobel Brown. The family also lived in Roberton Parish. George (17th C.) younger son of George and Janet Tennant. His brother was tenant in Boonraw. He lived in Roberton Parish. He married ‘Isobell Broune’ in 1686 and their children included: Bessie (b.1686); Margaret (b.1688); and Janet (b.1808), twin of Margaret. George (1748–1815) born in Wilton Parish, son of Robert, tenant at Boonraw, with his mother being Bessie Scott. He became a miller in the parish of Stow. In 1774 in Hawick he married Agnes Fairbairn, but they had no children and she died in 1816. In 1779 in Stow he married Margaret Boyd and they had 4 sons and 6 daughters, including James (b.1794), who was a carter in Stow and then moved to Dalkeith. George (d.1815) baker in Hawick. He could be the local man who contributed £2 2s to the subscription to support the war with France around 1799. Probably the same George was recorded as owner of a horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. It is possible he was the same as George who was miller in Stow, if he moved back to Hawick. George (b.1799) youngest son of Adam, who was tenant in Drinkstone, his mother being Isabel Scott. In 1826 he married Anne Lockie in Roberton Parish. Their children (all baptised in Wilton) were: Adam (b.1827–96), a miller and farmer; William (b.1828), who died young; Margaret (1830–92), who married Alexander Logan; and Robert (1832–74), farm manager. Both he and his wife were probably deceased by 1841, when the 3 surviving children were living at Groundistone, with mole-catcher Robert Taylor and his wife. George (1801–74) eldest son of John and Elizabeth Oliver. He was born in Bedrule Parish (although the census claims Southdean or Chesters), and lived for a while in the Parish. He became a farm steward. In 1851 he was a labourer living at Dykesmuir in Cavers and in 1861 he was steward at Hallburn farm in Morebattle Parish. In 1823 he married Jessie King. Their children included: John (b.1825); Margaret (1827–78), who married Andrew McDougal; Elizabeth (b.1829); Agnes (1831–92), who married Robert Robertson; James (b.1833); Janet or Jessie (1835–1908), who married Andrew Fox; Isabella (b.1837), died in infancy; William (b.1839), also died in infancy; George (b.1841), also died young; and Robert. Their children were baptised in the Jedburgh Free Kirk. He died in Melrose.

George ‘Dodd’ (20th C.) son of Walter and Mary Begbie. He was a butcher in Hawick. He was the first post-war Acting Father in 1946. He married Catherine Whetlace and had children Helen, Mary, Walter and Kay. Hugh (b.1773) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Boonraw, and Jean Buckham. He was born in Wilton Parish. Like his 2 brothers, he emigrated to America, eventually settling in Canada. He married Sarah Carter in England.

Hugh (1816-79) 4th son of James and Mary Walker. He was born at Drinkstone. At about 2 years old he went with his family to ‘Scotch Settlement’ in New York state. After working on the family farm near Ox Bow, he became a blacksmith. He fought in the Civil War, participating in several battles in 1864 and 1865. He married Mamie Barnes and they had 9 children.

James of that Ilk (15th C.) probably succeeded Robert de Ormiston. He was likely to be descended from the firstOrm. He may be the James who took part in the demolition of Jedburgh Castle in 1409. He was on an assize in 1425 for Bemersyde and an inquest for Caverton in 1429/30, when he was James ‘of Ormystoun’. In 1432 he was witness to a charter involving Andrew Rule, Lord of Primside. Along with his son George he was on a ‘reter’ panel for Ker of Altonburn. He was described as ‘Bailie in that part’ in a document of 1448 where Stephen Scott of Castlelaw gained the ‘Burrellands’ in Eckford Parish; this is the first noted instance of the name ‘Ormiston of that Ilk’. In 1452 he resigned his lands to be created into the Barony of Ormiston and re-granted to his son George. James of that Ilk ‘the Black Laird’ (c.1522-73) son of George and grandson of Robert. He was referred to as ‘Black Ormiston’ on account of his dark complexion and to distinguish him from his contemporary, John Cockburn of Ormiston (in East Lothian). He held the Barony of Ormiston on Kale Water, as well as Govansland in Maxton. In 1547, after the Battle of Pinkie, he was among men who swore allegiance to the King of England, but renounced this in 1549. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford that Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained had helped the English in raiding and burning his farms in the lower Borthwick valley. He was on an assize in 1550 for lands granted to William Rutherford of Langnewton. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; he signed with his hand led by the notary and the pledge for him was his brother Andrew. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1554 he was surety for Rutherfords not to molest Walter Ker of Cessford; this was the first mention of what became a feud between him and the Kers. Also in 1554 he was on the inquest for Walter Scott of Branxholme succeeding as heir to his grandfather. He is listed in 1557 as part of the group of 200 local Scotts and others who rode to the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Craunston, as part of some feud. In 1559 he acted as a Bailie to Lord Bothwell. In 1560 he was involved in communications between Scotland, England and France, on behalf of the Regent, Earl of Arran. Also in 1560 he and John Rutherford of the Knowe were warded for a disturbance during the court held at Jedburgh. In 1561 he was accused of resetting some English cattle. In 1561 he and Scott of Headshaw communicated a letter assurance between Scotts and Kers. Also in 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft; and he later incurred a penalty for failing to deliver thieves to the Privy Council. In 1562 he was ordered to vacate the Earl of Bothwell’s lands at Ancrum. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he is recorded among the supporters of Scott of Buccleuch in the contract between the Scotts and the Kerrs. The same contract also mentions a ‘perticulare deidlie feid’ with Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, for which James Langlands of that Ilk and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee acted as his special ‘umpires’; this was over the lands of Nether Anrum and the murder of a servant of Cessford’s. Also in 1564 he was among 35 local men who were ordered to assist the Warden of the West Marches, who was Ker of Cessford. He and his uncle Robert of Old Melrose entered into an obligation with the Spottiswoods in 1565. In 1567 he was one of the men (along with his uncle ‘Hob’ Ormiston) accused of treason for helping James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell and was said to be involved in the murder of Darnley. He was knighted in 1567, around the time that Bothwell married Mary, Queen of Scots. However, later that year he was among supporters of Bothwell who were declared fugitives. He was ordered to vacate Ormiston and Nether Anrum, as well as his wife’s lands of Herdminstoun. He was said to be in a group of Liddesdale thieves who raided Alnwick and was present at the Battle of Langside. In 1568 he and his uncle Robert were said to be hiding with Elliot of Whithaugh in Liddesdale. In 1569 he gave refuge to the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland after they fled to Liddesdale following an unsuccessful rebellion in the north of England; he was said to have been met by Martin Elliot of Braidlie in Liddesdale and forced to stop shielding the English rebels. In 1571/2 he was listed as having been declared as a rebel, along with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and Thomas Ker of Cavars Carre. He seems to have been hiding out for the next 3 years and was finally captured by Sir John Carmichael at Halkwood, when the Earl of Morton was holding a Justice Court at Jedburgh. He was executed for treason in Edinburgh in 1573, and afterwards the Barony of Ormiston passed to the Kers of Cessford. He is recorded in 1684 when his son George (b.1719) (3rd son of James and Janet Turnbull. He also had a son, Andrew, with his 1st wife, and had no further children with his 2nd wife. Some of his descendants were tenants at Boonraw. He is already dead by 1576 when Andrew Commendant of Jedburgh was tried for associating with him after he was denounced as a rebel. James (1684-1746) son of Robert and Margaret Hill, and brother of John. He was born in Robertson Parish and his family were tenants at Boonraw. He was tenant farmer in Easter Burnfoot, Stiches and Boonraw. He married Barbara Scott in Wilton in 1713. Their children were: Jean (b.1714), who died unmarried, aged 21; Robert (b.1716), who moved to Yorkshire; John (b.1717); James (b.1719), who married Jean Dunlop and stayed in Wilton; George (b.1721); John (again, b.1724), also moved to Yorkshire; Walter (b.1727); and Samuel (b.1731), also went to Yorkshire. James (1719-54) 3rd son of James and Barbara Scott. He was born in Wilton, where he lived and died. In Ashkirk Parish in 1724 he married Jean Dunlap. Their children included: Jean (b.1743); Barbara (b.1746); Robert (b.1748); Barbara (again, b.1750); and Walter (b.1752). James (1775-1840) youngest child of Robert and Jean Buckingham. He lived for a while at the Rink, later at Drinkstone and then at Galashiels. He married Mary Walker in 1800. The family moved to America in 1819, settling in Rossie, New York. He and his wife were among the first members of the Presbyterian Church at Ox Bow. Their children were: Mary (1802-47), who married William Markwick; Robert (1803-54), farmer in Wilna; James (1805-65), lived in Gouverneur; Adam (1807-88), pioneer in Wilna; William (1809-72), blacksmith and soldier in the Civil War, who died at Carthage; George (b.1814), who died in infancy; Hugh (1816-79), blacksmith; Jennett (1819-55), who married Thomas MacRobie; George (1821-96), died at Ox Bow; and Thomas (1823-90), who went to California. James (b.1778) elder son of Walter and Betty Irwin, he was born in Wilton Parish. He farmed at Boonraw. In 1799 he married Janet Reid. Their children included: Walter (b.1800); Robert (b.1803), who was a son in Bedrule and later a builder in Dalkeith; Janet (1805-76), who married John Fox; William (b.1807), who married Jessie Burton; and Betty (b.1810). He emigrated to the U.S.A. with his eldest son Walter and his daughters. Janet (b.1802/3) recorded in 1861 as a ‘Land Proprietor’ at Dykenoek Cottage. She was unmarried. She could be the daughter of James and Janet Reid. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem Ormstoune’ in 1482 when he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. John (17th C.) tenant in Ormiston Mains (although it is unclear if this is the one near Hawick). He is recorded in 1684 when his son George was among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. John (1682-729) farmer at Boonraw, son of Robert and Margaret Hill. In 1712 in Wilton Parish he married Margaret Aitkin, who died in 1726. Their children included: Robert (b.1715), also tenant in Boonraw; John (b.1717); John (again, b.1719), who lived at Wester Howlands and Damside; James (b.1722); (b.1724); Margaret (b.1726); and another daughter. John (1719-75) 3rd son of John, tenant in Boonraw and Margaret Aitkin. He was described as being of Wester Howlands and Damside. He first married ‘Jean Eadem’ and they had a son John (b.1742), who died in infancy. In 1745 he secondly married Isobel Scott, who was from Ewes. Their children included: Archibald (b.1746), a gardener, who moved to Melrose; John (b.1748), tailor in Hawick; Walter (b.1750); Jean (b.1754); Walter (b.1756); and Margaret (b.1761). John (b.1748) 2nd surviving son of John and Isobel Scott. He Ormiston was born in Wilton Parish and became a tailor in Hawick. In 1767 he married Betty Laidlaw, from Cavers Parish. Their children were: Catherine (b.1774); David (b.1776), who was a tailor and merchant; and Betty (b.1779). John (1754–89) born in Wilton Parish, 2nd son of Robert, tenant in Boonraw, and Bessie Scott. In 1777 in Edinburgh he married Helen Russell and they had a son, Robert. He worked as a wright in Stow and died in Hawick. John (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). It is possible he was the same as the son of Robert, who was a wright in Stow.

John (b.1769) son of Andrew, he was born and lived in Hobkirk Parish. He had sons: Andrew (b.1797), who emigrated; and James (b.1798), who was a farmer in Surrey. John (b.1781) eldest surviving son of gardener Archibald. He was born in Wilton Parish. He became a Sergeant in the Royal Marines, serving in the 75th Foot Regiment and being discharged at age 30. He was served heir to his father in 1813. John (b.c.1770) eldest son of George and Margaret Yule or Laing. He was descended from the Gattonside branch and hence from William of Westerhouses. He lived in Bedrule. In 1841 he was a labourer at Billerwell Lodge, and in 1851 his widow and one of his daughters (Isabel, stated to be ‘Pauper (Imbecile)’ were still there. He married Elizabeth Oliver, who died in Bedrule in 1860, aged 81. Their children included: George (1801–74); Isabel (1805–1870); Margaret (1811–85), who married John Brunton; Elizabeth (1812–91), who married Thomas Cranston; Robert (1815–99); and Andrew (1820–96), labourer in Bedrule. John (b.1809) eldest son of tailor David and Joanna Haliburton. He was a draper in Hawick, taking over the business from his father at 21 Howeagate. He is recorded there in 1851. His wife was Janet from Newington. John (b.1836/7) born in Cavers Parish. He was Station Master at Belses. He is recorded there in 1861, with his aunt, Agnes Ormiston. John (b.1840) son of Archibald, shoemaker in Lilliesleaf. He married Mary Baptie in Cavers Parish. In 1861 he was listed as a shoemaker, living with his mother-in-law and family at Spittal-on-Rule. He later moved to Ancrum. They had children: Archibald (b.1861), music teacher in Edinburgh; Robert Baptie (b.1863); John (b.1865); Agnes (b.1870); Mary Thomasina (b.1872); and Thomas (b.1874). Robert of that Ilk (d.bef. 1505) elder son of Andrew and Janet Cranston. He succeeded to the estate according to a grant made by his father in 1471/2. He married Elizabeth Rutherford and had 3 sons: George, who succeeded; William of Westerhouses; and Robert of Old Melrose. His widow secondly married Alexander Haitlie of Muirdean. Robert of Old Melrose (d.c.1570) 3rd son of Robert of that Ilk and Elizabeth Rutherford. He served as a quatermaster for James V. He was described as ‘of New Hall’ in 1551 when he served as surety for his nephew James (‘Black Ormiston’) with Walter Scott of Sinton. He is said to have shown a 2-headed calf to the Queen Mother, Mary of Guise. In 1564 he resigned Old Melrose to his son John, reserving liferent for himself. He also held lands at Sauchtonhall and Blainslie. In 1567 he was convicted of complicity in the murder of Darnley, although it was unclear that he was really involved. He died soon afterwards and was succeeded by John. Robert (d.1719) tenant farmer at Boonraw, son of George and great-grandson of ‘the Black Laird’. He married Marion (or Margaret) Hill about 1681. Their children probably included: John (b.c.1682), who was tenant in Boonraw after him; and James (b.1684), who married Barbara Scott. Robert (1696–1740) 3rd son of Robert and Marion Hill. He was a farmer in Wilton Parish (although it is unclear where exactly). In 1732 he married Helen (or Ellen) Leyden and she died in 1743. Their children included: Helen (b.1733); John (b.1736), who died young; and Adam (b.1738). Robert (1714–76) son of John and Margaret Aitkin. He also farmed at Boonraw. In 1744 he married Bessie Scott, who died in 1757. Their children were: James (b.1746); George (b.1748), who lived in Edinburgh and died a bachelor, with his estate divided among his siblings; Elizabeth (b.1752), probably died young; John (b.1754); Anne (b.1756); and Elizabeth (b.1760). He appears (unless this is another Robert) to have secondly married Jean Buckham and had children: Janet (b.1765), who married Walter Scott and emigrated to America; Robert (b.1767), who emigrated to America; Elizabeth (b.1770), who married a Hobkirk and emigrated to Rossie, New York; Hugh (b.1773); and James (b.1775). The witnesses in 1770 were Archibald Elliot and Adam Ormiston (perhaps his brother). In 1770 he witnessed a baptism in Wilton for Robert Cowan and another for James Turnbull. He may be the Robert still recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Boonraw; Walter was listed after him and so presumably his brother or son. Robert (b.1716) eldest son of James and Barbara Scott. He was born in Ashkirk Parish. He moved to Yorkshire, Robert (b.1767) son of Robert and Jean Buckham, he was born in Wilton Parish. He lived at Mount Hookey, near Abbotsford and had children baptised in Minto and Jedburgh parishes. In 1793 he married Isabella Bell from Ancrum. Their children included: Margaret (b.1794); Jean (b.1796); Robert (b.1807); Thomas (b.1814); and Hugh (b.1814). At the age of about 50 he moved with his family to America, settling in the ‘Scotch Settlement’ in St. Lawrence County, New York. Robert (1769–bef. 1841) eldest son of Adam and Esther Douglas. He was tenant farmer at Drinkstone, probably taking over from his father. In 1817 he was part of a law-suit brought by John Allan over a bill that his father had been caution for in 1802. In 1819 he married Helen Hall in Wilton Parish. They had 4 sons: William (b.1818), a warehouseman; Adam (1820–65); Robert (b.1821); and Thomas (b.1823). In 1841 his widow was living at Dovemount along with their 4 sons and in 1851 on Wilton Place with Adam and Thomas.

Robert (1803–91) born in Wilton Parish, son of James and Janet Reid. He was a mason at Bedrule Manse Cottage in 1841. He had moved to Edinburgh by 1851 and later became a builder in Dalkeith. He married Janet Forsythe from Coldingham. and their children were: Ebenezer Forsyth (1828–96); Margaret (1830–11); James (b.1832); unnamed child (b.c.1834); Robert (1837–109); George (1838–77); Elizabeth (1841–58); Jessie (1843–19); John (1848–1916); and Andrew (1850–1911). His children were born in Coldingham, Wilton, Bedrule and Hobbirk.

Robert (1815–99) 2nd son of John and Elizabeth Oliver. He was probably born in Southdean. He became a hedger in Hobbirk Parish. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Billerwell Lodge. His married Elspeth or Euphemia Wood (1823–90). Their children included: Ann (1843–92), who married William Wylie; John (1845–11), who died at Hawick; George (1847–1910), who moved to Rothbury, Northumberland; James (1849–98); Elizabeth (b.1851), who married Andrew Weddell; William Andrew (b.1853), who died young; Janet Wood or Jessie (1855–1933); Thomas Shiel (1858–1931), who married Janet Weatherston and moved to Coldstream; Robert (1860–84), who married Betty H. Davidson and Isabella Dalgleish; and Helen Wood (1864–1934), who died in Hawick. Robert (b.1818/9) coal clerk at Under Damside in 1841. He was living with his wife Margaret (who was from Lilliesleaf), daughter Ann J. and cousin David Scott (from Traquair). Robert (1832–74) 3rd son of George and Anne Lockie. He was born at Drinkstone, where his family were tenants. In 1861 he is listed as groom at graden in Linton Parish and was later a farm manager. In 1860 he married Margaret Wood (1834–1903) and they had 4 sons: George (1861–1938), who emigrated to Vancouver; William (1863–1904), who married Margaret Pringle; Adam (b.1865), who worked for the South African Post Office in Transvaal; and John (1866–1948), who married Marion Laing Frazer and worked for the Buccleuch Estates. Samuel (b.1731) youngest son of James and Barbara Scott, he was born in Wilton Parish. Along with his brothers Robert and John, he moved to Yorkshire. In 1755 at Great Ayton he married Elizabeth Hoof. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters. The family name became spelled Ormston. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of James ‘the Black Laird’, with his mother probably being a Scott. His father was his tutor in 1564 when he was sued by the former tenants in Ancrum Mill. In 1603 he and his wife had a charter of the Templelands of Grahamslaw. He was still alive in 1628 and living then at Grahamslaw in Eckfor Parish. He married Grizel, daughter of John Rutherford, ‘Cock o Hunthill’, and secondly married Janet Turnbull. His children included: William, who mortgaged the Templelands and had at least 4 sons; Andrew, who is recorded in Jedburgh in the mid-17th century, with 4 sons; George, who married Janet Tennant and was ancestor of the tenants at Boonraw; and Robert, who was apprenticed in Edinburgh in 1628. Walter (1752–1818) son of James and Jean Dunlop. He farmed in Wilton Parish. He was listed as farmer at Boonraw in 1797, along with Robert, and also Walter Scott. He married Betty Irvine (or Irwin) in Wilton Parish in 1776. Their children included James (b.1778); and William (b.1779), who emigrated to the U.S.A. Walter (b.1783/4) 4th son (and 2nd surviving) of Archibald, gardener in Wilton and then Melrose, his mother being Betty Scott from Goldielands. In about 1804 he founded the firm of Ormiston and Renvick, seedsmen in Melrose. In about 1814 he married Agnes Brown, who died in 1846. They had 3 sons and a daughter, with the eldest son, Archibald (b.1815) carrying on the seed business. A grandson, Charles Walter, died in Melrose, bequeathing money to found the Ormiston Institute and a public park. William (13th C.) younger son of William of Hownam and Landles and brother of John of Landles. He was great-grandson of the first Orm, after whom Ormiston on Kale Water was named. In about 1240 he witnessed a gift of the Church of Dalmeny from Roger de Moubray to Jedburgh Abbey and another undated charter for the same Roger de Moubray. He served as a juror in 1245. He was probably under the command of Patrick, 5th Earl of Dunbar, and was listed under his name in the pledge made around 1244. He was probably succeeded by Alan. William (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Makerstoun in 1502. Along with Thomas McDougall, in the same place, he was absent from 2 indictments given at Jedburgh, although the crimes are not recorded. William (16th C.) 2nd son of Robert of that Ilk and Elizabeth Rutherford. He was the first of the Ormistons of Westhouses near Melrose, and the Gattonside branch of the family. He was brother of Robert of Old Melrose and uncle of James of that Ilk, ‘Black Ormiston’. He appears in many records from 1539 and is sometimes referred to as ‘William with the heid’. He was implicated in the machinations following the murder of Darnley and banishment of the Earl of Bothwell, but was ultimately pardoned. William Douglas of Bonjedward was security for him in 1569. He married Katherine Nesbit and their sons Robert and James had to be legitimised because of the parents were related. William (17th C.) recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls in Lilliesleaf. He paid tax on £104 for his part of Cringles. William (1779–1864) son of Walter and Betty Irwin and great-grandson of Robert. His elder brother James farmed at Boonraw. He married Jane Graham in 1801 and emigrated to America a year later, settling near Bovina, Delaware County, New York. He had 2 sons and 5 daughters. William (b.1807) 3rd son of James and Janet Reid. He may have been born in Southdean Parish. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1835, being then at Lawrie’s Den, and gardener at Hawick in 1840. In the 1841 census he was at Harwood as an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was listed as a gardener at West Nisbet farm in Crailing Parish. He married Jessie Burton. Their children included: John (b.1834); Walter (b.c.1836); Elizabeth (b.c.1838); Helen (b.c.1840); George Henry (b.1842); Isabella (b.1843); James (b.1845); Mary; and Jessie. His children were born in Wilton, Hawick, Hobkirk, Southdean, Ancrum and Crailing Parishes. William (1818–64) eldest son of Robert, farmer at Drinkstone, and Helen Hall. He worked as a warehouseman. He married Jane Watson (from Annan), and they appear to have had no children. They are listed and on Walter’s Wynd in 1851 and Melgund Place in 1861 (formerly written ‘Ormestoun’, ‘Ormestoun’, ‘Ormstone’, ‘Ormstone’, ‘Ormestoune’ and variants).

Ormiston Mains (or-mee-stin-manz) n. former name for a farm to the east of Ormiston, on the old Hawick to Newcastle road, now called Sunnyside. The farmer there in 1797 was Robert Murray (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Ormstownmains’ in 1797).

Ormiston Parkheid (or-mee-stin-pawrkheid) n. former farm a little to the north-west of the main Ormiston farm. There were Turnbulls there in the 1850s and Walter Scott was farmer in 1861. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and still appears on modern maps.

orpie-leaf (or-pee-leaf) n., arch. orpine, live-forever, a flowering plant of the genus Sedum, having fleshy leaves and often growing on old walls (also wurpie).

orpit (or-pee, -pu) pp., poet. discontented, peevish – ‘What ails the orpit doyterd stycke’, The kerlyn loudly said’ [JTe].

Orr (or, or) n. Dr. James (1844–1913) born in Glasgow, son of engineer Robert and Montgomery Hunter. He became an apprentice bookbinder before training for the ministry, earning an M.A. from Glasgow University in 1870 and a B.D. in 1872. He was a probationer in Irvine before becoming minister of East Bank Church in 1874. Known as a Liberal, he campaigned for reducing liquor licences. In 1879 he helped draft the United Presbyterian declaration statement against total endorsement of Calvinism. He obtained a Doctorate of Divinity (by examination) from Glasgow in 1885. He was particularly outspoken in opposition to the Common Riding in the 1880s and 1890s. He was Chairman of Hawick School Board. In 1891 he was then elected Chair of Church History in the United Presbyterian College, Edinburgh and later Chair of Systematic Theology and Apologetics in the United Free College, Glasgow. He lectured in America in 1895 and 1897. He was a joint convenor of the United Presbyterian union (with the Free Church) committee in 1896. In 1874 he married Hannah Fraser, daughter of James Gibb. He published many theological works, including ‘The Christian View of God and the World’ (1893), ‘The Ritschlian Theology and Evangelical Faith’ (1897), ‘Neglected Factors in the Study of the Early Progress of Christianity’ (1899), ‘The Progress of Dogma’ (1901), ‘The Problem of the Old Testament’ (1905) and ‘Revelation and Inspiration’ (1910). In his last years he was general editor of the ‘International Standard Bible Encyclopaedia’ (1915). He was a regular contributor to the London Quarterly Review and other magazines, and helped edit several magazines of the United Church. He died in Glasgow and is buried in Cathcart cemetery there. James (19th C.) became postmaster in Hawick in 1879. He married Euphemia Hamilton. His adopted daughter Ethel married Robert Richardson. Thomas (b.1827/8) from Airdrie, he was farmer at West Riddell. He was there in 1861, farming 230 acres and employing 2 people. He was still there in 1868. His wife was Mary.

Rev. Alexander (1652–1711) first minister of Hawick Parish after the Revolution of 1688, serving from 1691 until his death. He was the son of Alexander of Fife, and Elizabeth, sister of Sir John Wemyss of Bogie. He studied at St. Salvator’s College and St. Andrews University, where he graduated in 1668. How he spent the next 19 years is unknown, but he was licensed by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1687. In 1688, while he was minister in Dundee, he was removed for some statements (perhaps misinterpreted) he had made about the King, and imprisoned for a time. During that time he was known as a staunch opponent of Episcopacy, and along with his friend Alexander Hamilton of Kinkel, was imprisoned on more than one occasion. He was called to St. Andrews after the Revolution, in 1690, but rejected by the Synod there and so came to Hawick the following year. He was a member of the Assembly in 1692. In 1694 he was also called to Peebles, but after much discussion this was overruled by the Assembly. He also declined calls to Kelso (in 1701/2) and Muthill. In 1705, along with 2 local colleagues (Robert Cunningham of Wilton and Robert Bell of Cavers), he protested Acts passed by certain Synods, but not being a member of the Assembly they were removed, causing a major scene, with a reconciliation only affected after the King’s advisors intervened. He is said to have been both rigid in discipline and extensive in charity. An example of his strict discipline occurred when he made the Town Magistrates wait until they had asked pardon of the Kirk Session on their uncovered knees, for some perceived offence against decency. He called a meeting of the Parish heritors in 1710 to stent themselves to pay the salary of the schoolmaster, this being essentially the founding of the Grammar school. The ‘Orrock Bequest’ was signed by him shortly before his death in 1711. He left 9,000 merks for the school (paying the salary for the schoolmaster and to teach poor children for free), as well as 1600 merks for the needy poor, and his extensive library for the parishioners. Some of the volumes from this library were deposited with the National Library of Scotland in 1980. From his funds, the Orrock Bursary was competed for by local schoolchildren every 3 years until well into the 20th century. As a result of this benevolence the area around the Grammar School was named after him. He died unmarried. A memorial tablet was erected outside the church after his death, with a marble copy in the vestibule of the Old Parish Church (which incorrectly says he was a minister for 22 years and gives the date of his death 8 days late); it bears the likeness of his head, which is a very rare example of statuary from this period of Hawick’s history. The heritors of the Parish gave money for his tombstone to be replaced in 1766. He also gave 4 inscribed silver communion cups to the Church in the 1790s and a silver baptismal basin made from melting down his silver spoons after his death, all of which are inscribed ‘Ecclesie Hawicensi’ and the relevant date. In addition, a commemorative tablet was placed at the High School in 1932 by the Callants’ Club. His only published work is ‘Address to the General Assembly, 1705, against the Tyrannical Imposition of the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale’. Hector Heatley (d.1862) 2nd son of Edinburgh surgeon-dentist James, he trained as an architect. He designed the Leyden Monument, which was built in Denholm in 1861. His only other known structures are railway stations at Lartington, Appleby East and Kirkby East. He married Janet Reid and they had 1 son and 1 daughter. He died at the age of 31, before being able to establish himself. Henry (17th/18th C.) presumably a relative of Rev. Alexander, perhaps his son. He was recorded in 1694 owing 8 pounds for his Burgess fee. He witnessed a baptism for merchant Walter Weens in 1704 and another for shoemaker George Oliver in 1705. He may be the Henry who married Helen Scott in Hawick in 1706. He was ‘servitor to our late minister’ recorded in the Kirk Session records of 1711. He was also Treasurer for Hawick Parish Session in the 1720s and was made an elder of the Kink in 1723. In 1725 he witnessed baptisms for maltman John Moss and for Thomas Wilkie. In 1727 he was recorded as possessor of the weigh-house.

which was on the ground floor of the Tolbooth. Janet nee Ogilvie (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick, mentioned in a court case of 1815, when Henry Stockwell (servant to a Hawick butcher) was found not guilty of assaulting her ‘with intent to ravish’. Her name is given as ‘Janet Ogilvie, or Orrock’. She was probably daughter of George Ogilvie and Margaret Learmond, born in Hawick in 1780. She married Adam and had a daughter Jean in Kelso in 1811 (also sometimes spelled ‘Orrok’).

the Orrock Bequest  (thu-o-ruk-bee-kwest)  n. deed signed by Alexander Orrock in April 1711 and registered in Edinburgh in June after his death. As part of his will he thus gave bonds for the benefit of the schoolmaster, which essentially allowed for the continuing prosperity of the newly founded Grammar School. The 9,000 merks sum came initially from: Gideon Scott of Falnash (for Buccleuch), 5,000; Adam Elliot, younger of Arkleton and William Elliot together, 2,000; Walter Scott of Woll and Sir William Scott of Harden, 1,000; and Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk, 1,000. Conditions of the Bequest included: that the principal was never to be touched; that there was an obligation to teach for free poor children who ‘have a genius for learning’; and that the Scotts of Buccleuch were to formally have control over the appointment of the schoolmaster. It was witnessed by Robert Scott, minister of Robertson and Robert Cunningham, minister of Wilton. The Bequest was administered by appointed trustees for the next century and a half. They contributed to the rebuilding of St. Mary’s Kirk in 1763. The bequest was transferred to the School Board and turned into a bursary fund in 1886. It was then transferred to the County in 1908, but still used for Hawick High School bursaries. A separate part of the bequest was the use of his library of ancient theological books for each subsequent minister; this collection remained in a cupboard in the vestry until transferred to the National Library of Scotland in 1980.

Orrock Kirk  (o-ruk-kirk, o-reek-kirk)  n. church built in Orrock Place in 1874 as the new premises for the ‘Green Kirk’ First Seccession Church congregation. It was built right down to the riverside, which is unusual in Hawick. The masons were the local firm of George Tait. The site had formerly held a public wash-house. The church united with St. Mary’s in 1951. The building became renamed ‘Orrock Halls’ after the church closed, and continued to be used for church functions. However, from around 1990 it has been used as a knitwear factory showroom and adjacent tea-room.

Orrock Kirk Mutual Improvement Society  (o-ruk-kirk-new-choo-ul-im-proov-min’-su-sl-i’-ee)  n. former organisation associated with Orrock Church, operating around 1900.

Orrock Place  (o-ruk-plis, o-reek-plis)  n. street between the Sandbed and the Albert Bridge, known by that name since the end of the 17th century, after Rev. Alexander Orrock. It was the site of the old Grammar School, a carpet factory and later the Orrock Church. The street is essentially the western part of the Sandbed and was named around 1840. Originally the name was used for the western side, which was separated from the other side of the Sandbed by the central block of houses (later removed). The name ‘Teviot Brig Road’ was also used. This general area was a detached portion of Wilton Parish until moved by the Boundary Commission in 1890. A gap site was built up by the council in 1960 between the Ewe and Lamb and the old Grammar School.

Orrock Place Kirk  (o-ruk-plis-kirk)  n. another name for Orrock Kirk.

Osborne

Osborne (oz-born) n. Rev. James (d.1711) educated at Glasgow University, he was said to have been an ousted minister of Cavers Parish who held secret sermons during the Covenanting days. However, he was actually a private chaplain to the Douglas family, working as tutor to the children of Sir William Douglas. He was said to have given conventicles locally in the 1670s. Douglas was summoned in 1676 to answer the charge of illegally having a chaplain without a licence from the Bishop, and both men were 'put to the horn as outlaws'. He survived until the Revolution and was ordained as minister at Kilmarock in 1688. In 1697 he was appointed minister at Greyfriars in Aberdeen and also Professor of Divinity at Marischal College. His children included: William, also a minister; James; and Alexander.

Osburn (oz-burn) n. John (18th C.) baker in Hawick. In 1755 he married Isabel Turnbull. Their children included: John (b.1757); Elizabeth (b.1759); Christian (b.1760); Martha (b.1762); Elizabeth (again, b.1764); Joanna (b.1766); Martha (again, b.1771); John (again, b.1772). The witnesses in 1764 were Bailies Turnbull 'older and younger', and in 1766 were Bailie Turnbull Senior and Bailie Turnbull Junior. In 1762 and 1766 he himself witnessed baptisms for wright Walter Scott (this is presumably a variant of Osborne).

Osna (oz-na) n. poetic name for the Oxnam Witter – ‘Sweet Osn’a stream, by thin-leav’d birch o’erhung, No more should roll her modest waves unsung’ [JL].

Ossian (o-shee-in) n. legendary bard who lived in either Scotland or Ireland around the 3rd century, supposedly blind and the son of Fingal – ‘Give me the hills where Ossian lies And Coila’s Minstrel waves unsung’ [JL].

Oster (os-tur) n., arch. oyster – ‘For osters and winiker brandi and spis [£] 0. 6. 0.’ [BR1691].

Ostler (ost-lur) n., arch. an innkeeper – ‘Summoned Isobel Cranston, the ostler, for selling all after sunset . . .’ [Ash1642].

Oswald (oz-wald) n. (604–642) King of Bernicia from about 635, when he defeated Cadwalla, until he was killed at the battle of Maserfrith. He was son of Æthelfrith of Bernicia and Acha of Deira and would have been Hawick’s King. He was the first Bernician ruler to accept Christianity and is also known as ‘St. Oswald’. The Hawick area probably made the main conversion to Christianity during his reign. St. Cuthbert’s Church contains a statue of the Saint holding the head of Oswald in his left hand. His head is supposed to have been buried along with St. Cuthbert at Lindisfarne for safety, and thereafter it became a symbol of the Saint.

Oswulf (oz-wulf) n. (12th C.) son of Uchtred, he was listed as a witness to the grant of King David to Melrose Abbey in about 1145. He granted the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the reign of King Malcolm. This was probably sometime between 1153 and 1165. The grant was with the consent of his son, also Uchtred, and also Uchtred’s son Uchtred, with a confirmation in the period 1165–68. It is unclear to what family these men belonged or why they previously held these Teviothead lands; however, the family names are similar to relatives of Gospatick, Earl of Northumbria and also of Dunbar; a later Gospatick also witnessed the confirming charter in about 1166. He was mentioned in a charter of the 1360s confirming Ringwoodfield to Melrose Abbey, with his name there being ‘Osulfo de Rengwude’.

Otterburn

Otterburn \(o'\text{-}u'\text{-}r\text{-}b\text{-}\text{urn}\) \(n\). village in Redesdale, where the Otter Burn meets the River Rede, site of the 1388 Battle of Otterburn, the details of which were recorded in a 14th century Latin poem and later romanticised in a ballad. A group of Scots (specifically James Douglas, the Earl of Moray and the Earl of Buchan) met at Southdean Kirk to plan an unofficial invasion of England. They taunted Percy at Newcastle, taking his standard, but on the way back were surprised by the English force at Otterburn. They fought in the moonlight, the Scots winning, Douglas being mortally wounded. But because he hid his condition from his men it is said that ‘a dead man won the field’. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, were killed on both sides. The Scots also captured Henry Percy (‘Hotspur’) and Sir Ralph Percy. The Scots version is told in ‘the Ballad of Otterburn’ (sometimes called ‘The Lammas tide’) and the English version in ‘Chevy Chase’. The ruins of Southdean Church were dedicated as a memorial to the Battle in 1910. The battle site itself is marked by a monument in a small wooded area off the main road. Some relics, said to be from the battle, were long preserved at Cavers House. Tradition says that the Douglas banner was carried by a Stavert – ‘The deed was done at the Otterbourne About the breaking of the day; Earl Douglas was buried at the braken bush, And the Percy led captive away’ [T], ‘In vain! – his standard’s sink! – his squadrons yield; – His bowmen fly: – a dead man gains the field’ [JL].

Otterhole Sike \(o'\text{-}u'\text{-}r\text{-}h\text{-}\text{ol}-\text{sik}\) \(n\). stream in the upper Borthwick valley, to the north-east of Craik village. It flows southwards to join the Dirthope Burn, which then flows into the Borthwick Water. On the west side are the remains of an ancient earthwork, about 64 m by 43 m, formed by an earthen bank with an outer ditch. It has been mutilated by forestry trenches.

Otterhound \(o'\text{-}u'\text{-}r\text{-}h\text{oo}nd\) \(n\). otterhound, a large hound with a shaggy coat, bred for otter hunting in the early 19th century. The practice was justified to protect fishing, and involved men following the hounds on foot and horseback. The most famous local proponent of the sport was Hawick’s Dr. John Grant, who lived at the top of Walter’s Wynd. The Border Magazine of 1904 describes a particular hunt which he led in 1863, in which his dogs tracked an otter from Burnfoot down the Teviot as far as Spittal-on-Rule, where it was killed. The practice achieved its height of popularity in the early 20th century, and was declared illegal in the 1970s, when otters became protected.

Outerside \(o'\text{-}u'\text{-}t\text{-}r\text{-}s\text{-}d\text{i}d\) \(n\). farmstead in the Borthwick valley, roughly opposite Phillhope, and reached by a track on the right-hand side of the road after Hoskote. These may be the lands of ‘Ughtredshaghe’ which were granted by Margaret, mother of Henry Lovel, to Jedburgh Abbey at its foundation around 1140 (as confirmed in about 1170). It was probably the ‘Ochterhyud’ recorded as granted to Marion Comyn, widow of John de Langlands in 1363. The lands of Otterburn \(o'\text{-}u'\text{-h\text{-}o}\text{h}\text{-}\text{o}\text{n}\text{-d}\) \(n\). large hound with a shaggy coat, bred for otter hunting in the early 19th century. The practice was justified to protect fishing, and involved men following the hounds on foot and horseback. The most famous local proponent of the sport was Hawick’s Dr. John Grant, who lived at the top of Walter’s Wynd. The Border Magazine of 1904 describes a particular hunt which he led in 1863, in which his dogs tracked an otter from Burnfoot down the Teviot as far as Spittal-on-Rule, where it was killed. The practice achieved its height of popularity in the early 20th century, and was declared illegal in the 1970s, when otters became protected.

outcomit (owktu-mit) pp., arch. said of sheep that are mature or perhaps that have had lambs – ‘Item, vpoun the landis of Bellenden, in pasturage with George Nicholl, aochtene scoir an sixteene outcumit hoggis ... Item, fyftene scoir an tua outcumit hoggis ... ’ [SB1574] (also written ‘out-cumit’).

Outerside (ow-, oo-tu-r-sid) n. farmstead in the Borthwick valley, roughly opposite Phillhope, and reached by a track on the right-hand side of the road after Hoskote. These may be the lands of ‘Ughtredshaghe’ which were granted by Margaret, mother of Henry Lovel, to Jedburgh Abbey at its foundation around 1140 (as confirmed in about 1170). It was probably the ‘Ochterhyud’ recorded as granted to Marion Comyn, widow of John de Langlands in 1363. The lands of ‘Uchterseatmylne’ are listed among those granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400; this suggests that there was once a mill there. These were probably the lands of ‘Jacobo de Wchtersyde’ who witnessed a sasine at Milsington in 1453. The lands were owned by Walter Scott of Synton in the early 16th century and Sir Walter of Howpasley in the later 16th century. A bond of 1569, signed in Hawick, lists all of the tenants there, namely ‘Thomas Broum, Jokke Howatsone, Hobbe Broum, Dand Huntar, Alexander Armestrong, Will Pairman, Cristie Pairman, Hob Jaksoun, Watt Litill, Jok Hall, Watt Runseman, Jak Reid, Jokke Scot, Eling Dun, Will Greif, Thome Greif, Johe Gledstanis, George Stevin- sone, Pait Stevinsone, Pait Reid, Johne Glendonyng, Alexander Mylne, Will Turnbull’. Walter Scott of Synton redeemed 500 merks on these lands with William Elliot of Falnash in 1605. George Scott of Synton inherited the lands from his father Walter Scott of Synton in 1610. ‘Rowie’ Scott ‘in Vttersyde’ is recorded in 1616. Liferent was granted to Margaret Maxwell when she married William Elliot, younger of Falnash, in 1635. Margaret Haswell (perhaps the same Margaret), liferenter there, was one of the main landowners in Wilton Parish in 1643, her lands being valued at £360. There were 15 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1640. Gavin Elliot of Outersiderig paid land tax in Wilton Parish on lands valued at £360. Gideon Scott of Outerside witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1687. In 1689 Gideon of Outerside gained other lands, and became known thereafter as Gideon of Falnash. 10 separate households were listed there in 1694. It was part of Wilton Parish before Roberton was formed in 1689/90. The lands were leased by James Scott of Shielwood in 1692. In 1701 the Laird’s seats in Roberton Kirk are recorded being the 3 feet to the east of the little door. Adam Pott (probably the same as Adam of Hoscote) was recorded as Laird there among Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1761. James Nichole was there in 1762 and James Dalgleish in 1763. It belonged to George Stavert (incorrectly transcribed ‘Stewart’ in one record) in the valuation of Roberton Parish of 1788, when it is listed as ‘Outerside, or Outersiderig, formerly in Wilton’, with a value of £360. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, ‘Outerside, or Outerside-rig’ had the same value and was owned by Adam Stavert of Hoscote. Farm labourer Alexander Armstrong and his family were there in 1841. By about 1874 it was listed as owned by Archibald Stavert. Outerside Rig is the hill above, reaching 264 m and containing a fort and cairn (formerly spelled ‘Utterside’ etc., it is probably ‘Ughtredshaghe’ or ‘Ughtredxaghe’ in c.1140 and 1170, ‘Ochturhyud’ in 1363, ‘Uchterseatmylne’ in c.1400, ‘Wchtersyde’ in 1453, ‘Vttersyde’ in 1616, ‘outerside rige’ in 1678, ‘Outerside’ in 1692 and 1694, ‘Outersiderige’ in 1718, ‘Outerside’ in 1761 and ‘Uterside’ in 1762; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as ‘Uterside’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Outerside’; based on the earliest spellings the origin seems likely to be ‘Uchtred’s haugh’).

Outerside (oo-tur-siéd) n. James (15th C.) witness in 1453 to a sasine exchanging the lands of Milsington with those of Wester Heap, between the Langlands and Scott families. He is recorded as ‘Jacob de Wchtersyde’, and it seems likely his lands were those of Outerside, just up the Borthwick from Milsington.

Outerside Rig (ow-tur-siéd-rig) n. elongated hill above Outerside, reaching a height of 264 m and containing a fort. The name was also formerly used for the farm at Outerside. The hill contains the remains of a hill-fort at the east of the ridge, possibly dating from the early Iron Age. Much obliterated by cultivation, it consists of inner and outer ramparts and a ditch. In the inside may be signs of a hut circle, while just outside is a possible enclosure (spelled ‘Uttersydrigg’ and variants in early documents; it is ‘Outersidyrgg’ in 1528/9, ‘Outarsydrigge’ in 1610, ‘Uttersiderigg’ in 1643 and ‘Outersiderige’ in 1718).

Outersideshiel (ow-tur-siéd-sheel) n. former steadings high above Outerside. On Ainslie’s 1773 map it is marked on the south side of the Hoscote Burn near Girnwood Linn. Thomas Glendinning was there in 1763, James Glendinning in 1775 and Thomas Glendinning in 1797 (it is ‘Utter-sideshiel’ in 1763, ‘Uttersideshiel’ in 1775 and ‘Uttersideshiel’ in 1797).

the Outlaw Murray (thu-ow’-law-mu-ri, - oo’) n. fanciful story about a leader of the Mur- rays in Ettrick Forest, popularised in the ballad of the same name, and having some basis in historical fact. Murray refused to pay homage to the King, but eventually gave in after being ap- pointed Sheriff of Ettrick Forest. This probably referred to John Murray of Falahill (nephew of the Rector of Hawick), in the latter part of the 15th century.

ouwn (own) v., arch. to own, confess, admit – ‘...for A’ll ouwn A was dry again ...’ [ECS] (cf. own).
oux (owks) n., poet. an ox – ‘Thus thaye changet that their glorie intil the lykeniss o’ ane oux that ects gerse’ [HSR].

Ovens (o-vinzn) n. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘James Owen in Birk hill’ in 1684 when, along with many others, he was declared a rebel for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He may be an ancestor of the Hawick blacksmith. James (b.1818) from Selkirk, son of Thomas and Isabella Murdock. He was a blacksmith in Hawick in the 1800s, with an appropriate name. He lived at the Round Close in 1841, the Backdamgate in 1851 and 3 Silver Street in 1861. In 1840 he married Helen Pow, a daughter of William, blacksmith at Borthaugh Woodfoot. Their children included: Mary (b.c.1841); Elizabeth (b.c.1844); Helen (b.c.1847); John (b.1855), also a blacksmith; William Pow (b.1858) and James (b.1861). He was an elder with the Relief Kirk. John (b.1855) son of James and Helen Pow. He was a blacksmith in Hawick, like his father. He was at 5 Howeagate in 1881, 3 Buccleuch Street in 1891 and 11 Sandbed in 1901. He married Helen Wright, from Lockerbie, and they had a daughter Jane A. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records.

Ovenshank (o-vin-shawng) n. small farm in Liddesdale, just north of the Liddel, to the west of the site of Liddel Castle. It is probably the place recorded as ‘Vnsthank’ in the 1541 rental roll, listed between ‘Coklaik’ and ‘Powis’; it was vacant at that time. Robert Nichol was there in 1821. James Wilson lived there in 1841, with his son Andrew there in 1861 and there were also 3 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census (it is marked on Stobie’s c.1770 map; it has been suggested that the name has a similar origin to ‘Unthank’).

Overchester (o-vur-ches-tur) n. lands that were tenanted by Turnbulls in 1516 when several members of that family were identified as being there when they had remission for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. It appears that Mark Turnbull was the main tenant, along with his brother Archibald, and son Mark younger, as well as Richard, David, William, John, Andrew, Andrew’s son Thomas, and Ninian. It is unclear where this place was, perhaps part of Chesters in Southdean.

overgave (ō-vur-gāv) pp., arch. gave up, relinquished – ‘Compeared the haill Council, and voluntarily of their awin free will renuncit and overgave their quarterings of the soldiers to the town’s use’ [BR1644].

Overhaa (ō-vur-haw) n. Overhall, farm just behind Wilton Dean. The name dates back to at least the 16th century. In 1569 the superiority of the lands (along with Wilton Green and Wiltonburn) was inherited by Grizel Borthwick from her father Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1586 the lands are among those given in ‘liferent’ to Margaret Ker as part of the marriage contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1601 they were inherited by Walter Cairncross from his uncle Walter, brother of Robert of Colmslie. The farm was among the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. There were 10 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. James and Adam Scott each leased half the farm in 1690 and 1692 and were recorded as householders there in around 1694. In at least the period 1694–98 the farm was leased half by Walter Scott, ‘Chief’, and half by Adam Scott. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; it extended to 120 acres and was bounded by Langlands, the River Teviot, Borthaugh and Brieryhill. The farm house is shown near the foot of the Wilton Burn on the western side. Andrew and Thomas Easton were farmers there in 1797, with 2 work horses each. Joiner Adam Riddell lived there around 1840. Adam Easton was farmer in 1841 and in 1851, when the farm covered 62 acres. A doll’s house, originating here in about 1880, is in the Museum. A hill there was used as a track for motor-cycle events in the first half of the 20th century (also referred to as ‘Everhaa’; it is written ‘Vuerhall’ in 1569, ‘Ovrhall’ in 1586 and ‘Ovr hahall’ in 1690; it is marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Ovrhall’ and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘O. Hall’).

Overhaa Crescent (ō-vur-haw-kre-sin’) n. cul-de-sac in Wilton Dean, built in 1971 and named after the nearby farm.

Overhaa Road (ō-vur-haw-rōd) n. main road west through Wilton Dean, named after the nearby farm. New housing was built there in 1970. The wooded hill above this road contains an oval earthwork, about 90 m by 50 m, consisting of a single rampart. Its situation does not appear very defensive, so it has not been classified as a fort. The interior and parts of the rampart have been destroyed by quarrying. There are also remains of a probable homestead on a shelf below the summit. This measures 33 m by 27 m, with no internal features and an entrance in the north-east.

Overraw  (ō-vur-raw) n. former name for the farm of Upper Raw on Hermitage Water.

the Overseas Night  (thuō-vur-seez-u) n. properly called the Civic Reception for Returned Terries, an evening of entertainment for exiled Terries, taking place in the Town Hall on the Wednesday of Common Riding week. It was inaugurated in 1936. It is an event reserved for distant visitors and their guests. The Cornet, Cornet’s Lass, Acting Mother and Acting Father greet the visitors and the Honorary Provost gives a speech summarising the highlights of the year for the Town. There then follows a schedule of songs and recitations. The names of the ‘Exiles’ are read and each of them stand to be recognised. The Maids of Honour serve refreshments and the evening ends with ‘Teribus’ and ‘Cornet’s Up’ (also sometimes called ‘the Exile’s Night’).

Over Tofts  (ō-vur-tofts) n. name used for Upper Tofts in the 18th and 19th centuries.

Overton  (ō-vur-tin) n. late 16th century ruined tower near Camptown, about 5 miles south of Jedburgh, burnt by Hertford’s men in 1545. There were Elliots there in the 18th century. John Rutherford of Edgerston owned the lands in the late 18th century. The farm of ‘Overton Bush’ is recorded since at least the late 18th century and is still marked on the Ordnance Survey maps (the origin of the name is probably simply ‘the upper farm’ in Old English and first occurs in the late 16th century).

Ovid  (ō-vid) n. Adam (11th/12th C.) priest of the Diocese of Glasgow. He was brother of Laurence of Thornton, who was Archdeacon of St. Andrews, and his name occurs as a witness in St. Andrews documents from about 1203. His surname may be derived from his taste in reading.

He was ‘Master’, meaning he held a Masters degree. He was recorded as the parson of Hobkirk in 1220. His name is also given as ‘Ada Ondiuus’.

o’w  (ow) contr. of us – ‘the baith o’w’, ‘that’ll be the end o’w’ (note sometimes pronounced as the two syllable u-oo or o-oo, but other times shortened to ow).

Ower Bonchester

Ower Bonchester (ow-ur-bon-ches-tur) n. Over Bonchester, former farm near Bonchester, also referred to as ‘Upper Bonchester’. In 1569 it was one of a set of lands acquired by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and in 1587 still part of the Lordship of Jedburgh when Alexander Lord Home inherited the superiority. In 1588 it is listed as being ‘with woods’. It is possible that it corresponds to the remains of the farmstead on the north-west side of Bonchester Hill, near the head of Rob’s Cleuch, some of the stones from which are built into nearby dykes (it is ‘over Bonchester’ in 1569 and ‘Over Bunchester’ in 1588).

Ower Closs (ow-ur-kłös) n. part of the former farm of Closs (it is ‘Owercloss’ in the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Owercome (ow-ur-kum) v., poet. to overcome, overwhelm — ‘Turn awa thyne eyne frae me, for thay hae owercum me’ [HSR].

Owercomin (ow-ur-ku-nin) n., poet. a crossing, the refrain of a song — ‘But whan ye praey, usena vain ower-conemin’s, as the heathin do’ [HSR].

Owercuissen (ow-ur-ki-sin) pp., adj., arch. overcast — ‘...een as the fiaam o the waether-gleam skails afore’d the cluds threan owercuisen lift’ [ECS].

Ower Dykeraw (ow-ur-dik-raw) n. Over Dykeraw, former name for part of the farm of Dykeraw in Southdean Parish. Gilbert Oliver was tenant there in 1541, paying 25s yearly. James Oliver was tenant in 1694 (it is ‘Ovir Dykrav in 1541 and ‘over dykra’ in 1694).

Ower Harwud

Owerfoulwud (ow-ur-fowl-wud) n. Over Foulwood, former lands in Liddesdale, located somewhere along Foulwood Sike, while Nether Foulwood was near where it meets the Liddel Water, south of Mangerton. It is recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Foulwood superior’ and valued at 10 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 ‘Owerfoulwud’ was leased to Alexander Armstrong (probably son of ‘Ill Will’) and still valued at 10 shillings.

Owerhang (ow-ur-hawng) v., arch. to overhang — ‘As springs that gutter doon the hills, Atween the refrain of a song — ‘...And syne the sough her’ [JEDM] (also overhanging).

Owerhang (ow-ur-hawng) v., arch. to overhang — ‘Letna the water nude ower’ [HSR].

Owerfleete (ow-ur-flee) v., arch., poet. overflow — ‘Letna the waterfule owferleete me, neither let the deep swallie me up’ [HSR].

Owerket (ow-ur-flee) pp., poet. overflowed — ‘...but the se owferlet their enemies’ [HSR].

Owerfornent (ow-ur-for-nen) prep., arch. over against, facing — ‘Gang intill the clauhan owernemt yow, an’ strauchtwaye ye sall fi’ ance ass tiet, an’ ance covt wi’ her’ [HSR].

Ower Foole (ow-ur-for-fen) n. Over Foole, former name for the part of Foole where it meets the Liddel Water, south of Mangerton. It is recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Foulwood superior’ and valued at 10 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 ‘Overfoolewood’ was leased to Alexander Armstrong (probably son of ‘Ill Will’) and still valued at 10 shillings.

Owerhang (ow-ur-hawng) v., arch. to overhang — ‘As springs that gutter doon the hills, Atween the refrain of a song — ‘...And syne the sough her’ [JEDM] (also overhanging).

Owerhaw (ow-ur-hawng) v., arch. to overhang — ‘As springs that gutter doon the hills, Atween the refrain of a song — ‘...And syne the sough her’ [JEDM] (also overhanging).

Owerhaw (ow-ur-hawng) v., arch. to overhang — ‘As springs that gutter doon the hills, Atween the refrain of a song — ‘...And syne the sough her’ [JEDM] (also overhanging).

Ower Hallrule (ow-ur-haw-rool) n. Over Hallrule, former name for part of the farm of Hallrule, also called Outer Hallrule, in distinction to Inner Hallrule. It may also have been another name for Toon-o-Rule. In 1779 ‘Ower-Hallrule’ was valued at £832 12s 5d. On the 1811 Land Tax Rolls ‘part of Town-o’-Rule, or Over or Outer Hallrule’ is described.

Ower Harwood (ow-ur-har-wud) n. Over Harwood, former name for lands at Harwood on Teviot. It is unclear if the name referred to the whole of the later estate of Harwood, or just part of it. It was among the lands exchanged in 1446 with Lanarkshire lands between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch; one quarter of the lands were included in this swap, with the owner of the other 3 quarters being unknown. In 1462 it was given as part of security for a loan, along with Dryden and Commonside, by Stephen Scott of Muirhouse to Robert Muir of Rowallan. The loan was fully paid by Robert Scott of ‘Dogheauch’ in 1477. It is listed among the lands held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, along with ‘Nether Harwood’ (it is ‘Overharwode’ in 1446, ‘Vuer Harwod’ in 1462, ‘Vuer Herwod’ in 1508/9, ‘Vuir Harewod’ and ‘Uvire-Harwod’ in 1511, ‘Ovwr Harwod’ and ‘Ouir Harwod’ in 1572, ‘Owir Harwood’ in 1594 and just ‘Ower Harwood’ in 1615).

Ower Hassendean (ow-ur-haw-sin-deen) n. Ower Hassendean, former farm in Hassendean, also once called ‘Hassendean Lady Lands’. It is among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. Robert Scott owned the lands in 1574. Adam Turnbull, ‘Reid Adie’ was tenant there in 1576, when there was a promise that he would abstain from theft. 6 acres of land here were inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. In 1692 Adam Scott had a new feu agreement with the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands there, east and west syde thereof with the milne and maynes of the same’. In 1738 it consisted of 6 acres when it was purchased by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch, from Archibald Douglas of Cavers (see also Oor Lady Land: it is ‘Over-hessington’ in 1545, ‘Over Hassindane’ in 1574, ‘Ovwr Hassindane’ in 1576 and transcribed ‘Overbassenden’).

owerheid (ow-ur-heed) adv., arch. at an average rate per head, in total – ‘…nyne new calfit ky, with thair followaris, price of the pece owrheid, five pundis’ [SB1574], ‘Item, the number of tuo hundreth nolt, younger and elder, pryce of the piece theroof owrheid tuentie merkes, summa’ [SB1633].

owerheid (ow-ur-heed) adj., arch. overheard – ‘For aa that the sun, hoisin itsel i the lift owrheid …’ [ECS].

owerhing (ow-ur-hing) v., arch. to overhang – ‘A rock hangs nodding o’er its crystal spring, And flow’rs, Narcissus-like, its waves o’rehing’ [CPM] (overhang).

Ower Holm (ow-ur-hom) n. name for former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Avirholme’. It was valued at 40 shillings and tenant by Andrew and Lancelot Forester. From its position in the list it must have been in the southernmost part of Liddesdale, and possibly associated with Millholm, Demainholm, and ‘the Holm’.

owerins (ow-ur-inz) n., pl., arch. wages paid above the norm, overtime (also written ‘owrin’s’).

the Ower Kirk (thu-ow-ur-kirk) n. former church in the Ewes valley, near the farm of Unthank, and distinguished from the ‘Nether Kirk of the Ewes’ further down the valley. It was dedicated to St. Mark and originally attached to Melrose Abbey. It appears to have been older than the Nether Kirk, dating back to at least the reign of Alexander III. Patronage was held by the Earl of Home, although there were no priests recorded there in the 16th century. The rights of the church are still listed in 1663 among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was abandoned at the Reformation and merged with the Nether Kirk, although the graveyard continued in use long afterward. The church bell (made in 1654 by John Monteith of Edinburgh) has also continued to be used, hung from the cleft in a nearby tree. Foundations of the church can be seen in the old churchyard. The churchyard contains an 18th century burial enclosure for the Aitchisons, and several other gravestones of a similar epoch, including an ornately carved grave slab for William Hutton and Jean Scott. An early chapel also stood near Ewes Doors, and this may also have been referred to as the ‘Ower Kirk o Ewes’ (it is ‘over kirk of Ewiss’ in 1663; it is marked ‘O. Kirk of Euss’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Ower Kirkhope (ow-ur-kir-kup) n. Ower Kirkhope, site of older church in the Ettrick valley, abandoned in favour of the new site probably in the mid-15th century. An early Christian grave marker was found near the ruins of the chapel.

overlaid (ow-ur-laid) pp. overlaid – ‘…his waist is als bricht iviry owerlayde wi’ saphires’ [HSR], ‘Feerfuniss an’ trimmlin’ ar cum apon me, an’ horrar heth ower-layde me’ [HSR], v., arch. pastured unlawfully – ‘…the great in-convenience that follows by Burgesses who live not in the town, their putting horse, nolt and sheep to the Common whereby it is overlaid …’ [BR1720].

overlins (ow-ur-linz) adv., arch. over – ‘Ane wi’ his nibbie cleeks a lass, An’ makes her o’erlins tum’le’ [JoHa].

overloup (ow-ur-lowp) n., arch. an occasional trespass of cattle, the right of occasional grazing of one’s cattle on a neighbour’s land – ‘…did not disturb the Hawick horses, as they allowed start and oerloup’ [C&L] (see also start an o’er loup).

that a shepherd grazes as part of his ‘packs’.

Packhouses (pawk-hoo-seez) n. Packhouses, former farmstead between Burnhead and Apple-treehall, near the modern Burnhead Cottages. It is marked on the 1861 Ordnance Survey map
as ‘Parkhouses’ to the east of the Boonraw Burn, and hence appears to have been separate from Burnhead Cottages (also known as ‘Peatiehooses’), which were between the road and burn. James Black was living there in the 1770s and 1780s. Tailors Thomas Miller and William Turnbull lived there in 1841, and there were 9 other households (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Parkhouses’ in 1841 and 1851).

the Packies (thò-paw-keez) n. nickname in use

paddi-stuil (paw-di-, -du-sti<l>l</l>) n., arch. a toad-stool, particularly ‘Agaricus’ (also ‘paddi-stail’; E.C. Smith writes it ‘paddih-stuil’).

the Paddock (thu-pawd-duk) n. shallow pool for children’s play in the summer. In Hawick this referred to either the one where the former Bandstand was located in the centre of the park, in the late 1960s to early 1970s, or the one built at the southern end of the Spetch in the early 1970s, neither of which lasted very many years.

the Paddock Slack (thu-pawd-duk-slawk) n. hill-pass on the B709 road linking the Yarrow and Quair valleys, reaching a height of 357m (1,170 ft).

Paddy Barrat (paw-dee-baw-ri’) n. Hawick resident of the mid-1900s. This may have been labourer Patrick Barret (b.c.1799), who came to Hawick from Ireland and lived on the Back Row (in 1851) and on the Mill Path (in 1861) – ‘Poodge and Peedlum gang doon the toon, Sly Tammy and Kittlin’ Soup gang up; There’s Paddy Barratt and Jamie Broon, And there’s Dick Newall and Johnny Whup’ [HI].

paddy-whack (paw-dee-whawk) n., arch. a stroke, blow, whacking (noted by E.C. Smith; derived from an expression for an Irishman).

the Pageant (thu-pawd-jin’) n. Hawick Quater-Centenary Historical Pageant, held at the Volunteer Park on the evenings of Tuesday June 2nd and Wednesday June 3rd 1914. Provost Melrose was Chairman of the organising Committee, and J.E.D. Murray was Pageant-Master, writing and orchestrating much of the Pageant itself. Tom Ker, J.G. Winning and Mrs. Winning helped with some of the writing, and the music was provided by Adam Grant. The song ‘Invocation’ was written to close the ceremony, which also gave us ‘The Wail of Flodden’. The content consisted of 9 episodes and a final procession: Prelude; The Romans and the Druids; Visit of Sir William Wallace to Langlands; Old Hawick of 1513; The Wail of Flodden; Callants leave for Hornshole; Return from Hornshole; Hab o’ Hawick; and Mary Queen of Scots en route to Hermitage. The procession involved most of the historical characters and also the ‘Queen of the Borderland’.

Pagton Burn (pawg-tim-burn) n. stream that runs in a westerly direction to join the Slitrig Water between New Mill and Wudfit Brig. To the south of the stream is an enclosure, measuring about 40m by 30m, with an entrance on the north-east side, and the interior being heart-shaped. Its age and purpose are not known.

paide (põ-õ<e>il<e>) n. a paddle, hoe, long-handled tool of various sorts – ‘The lad that howes the Lum-Back neeps Richt cheerily he plies his paide’ [DH], ‘Hardie came oot wi’ a shairnny paide, Knocked the Cornet off his saidle’ [T], ‘...tied a piece of cord to a paide shank and gave chase’ [RM], v. to use a hoe or paddle – ‘...until a circle six feet in diameter was “paided” quite bare round the place where they lay’ [RB].

Painsioners o Bucleuch (pān-shā-nurz-ō-bu-kloo) n. list of ‘four-and-twenty gentlemen’ who were kept at the call of Scott of Bucleuch, according to Sir Walter Scott of Satchells, roughly. Each of these men received ‘rooms’ (i.e. small estates) for their service, some in earlier times, although the list probably relates to roughly the period 1580–1620. Some details may be incorrect, and some of the men are not otherwise recorded, but since they would have been known by Satchells’ father, then it is almost a first-hand account. The list is: Walter Scott of Northhouse; Robert Scott of Allanhaugh; David Scott of Stobcote; David Scott of Raeskno; Robert Scott of Glack; William Scott in Hawick, called ‘William in the Mott’; John Scott of Monk’s Tower; Robert Scott of Easter Groundistone; James Scott of Alton Croft; Thomas Scott in Wester Groundistone; John Scott in Drinkstone; William Scott in Lees, ‘alias Wilma’, called ‘of Catslac-know’; Robert Scott in Clarilaw; William Scott of Todshawhaugh; Andrew Scott of Todshawhill; John Scott of Stouslie; Scott of Whames; Scott of Castlehill; Walter Scott of Chapelhill; Robert Scott of Howford; Robert Scott of Satchells; Robert Scott of Langhope; William Scott, ‘called Cut-at-the-black’; and Walter Gledstains of Whittle (the only one not of the surname ‘Scott’).

pair (pār, per) adj. poor, pitiable – ‘puir wee lamb’, ‘Syne rich and puir maun seek the Muir’ [RH], ‘I may be auld, I may be puir ...’ [DH], ‘You puir wee thing! To think that high abuse us a’ You sit your lane ...’ [WFC], ‘Clubs an pubs for puir chielis That need the noise and bustle’ [WL] (also written puir, q.v., although this is no longer the local pronunciation).

the pair (thu-pār, -per) n. poor people. The Parish was responsible for its own poor people, but attitudes varied about providing assistance for beggars from elsewhere. The destitute tended to be naturally cared for during times of plenty, but struggled through leaner periods. Charges for hiring the ‘mort-cloth’ were used to help the poor, as well as fines imposed on transgressors in the Parish. An Act of the Justices of the Peace of Roxburghshire of 1725 required the poor to be listed, and those able to beg were issued with a special badge (which had to be returned when the needful period was deemed to be over). In the 18th century it was the custom in Hawick for the destitute to go begging on Saturdays. An ‘account of the poor’s account’ is mentioned in the Town Treasurer’s book for 1746. The first mention of ‘the poor’s stent’ on the inhabitants of Hawick was in 1749 (perhaps amounting to 1/4 of the total, the rest presumably raised by the Kirk Session). A list of the poor was drawn up in 1771. In 1784 it was resolved not to levy the poor rate according to means, but just according rental values. This arrangement lasted for 60 years, with these burghal fees latterly corresponding to 1/3 of the assessment for the whole Parish. In 1789 the assessment was 11 pence for each pound of rental value, increasing to 1s. 6d. in 1798, 2s. 4d. in 1801 (a year of famine) and then 21 d. by 1814. Before about 1790 (perhaps around 1770) all the poor of Hawick Parish were buried in the same coffin, which had a false bottom. The Hawick Parochial Board was set up to administer support.

for the poor in 1845. The Combination Poorhouse (covering 11 parishes) was built off what would become Drumlanrig Square in 1856 – ‘...But, oh! the rich can never ken The hardships o’ the puir’ [TCh].

pairer (pā-rur) adj. poorer – ‘oo’re the puirer for eet’.

the Pairhouse (thu-pār-hoo) n. the Combination Poorhouse, which became Drumlanrig Hospital. The old name was still used long after it had ceased to be a poor-house. Governors include: William Drysdale (1850s); John Smeaton (1860s); Adam Grierson (1870s and 80s); James Scott (late 19th C.); Richard Telford (until 1892); and James Fleming Boyd (early 20th C.).

pairish (pā-reesh) n. a parish. Parishes were originally developed as part of the feudal system, with nobles and knights who received grants of land in the 10th and 11th centuries setting up churches and tithing themselves and their tenants to support a minister. The boundaries were thus determined by the extent of these collective lands, explaining why they often had detached portions. The parish churches were deprived of much of their income during the age of the great monasteries. Parish boundaries were altered over the centuries, often in response to population changes, but they typically retain some vestige of their origins – ‘Rob Tinlin whae was the toon’s officer an the pairish beadle’ [HEX1965], ‘Weel, the pairish yird’s my kind Thegither, gey plain –’ [DH] (cf. the older parishin).

Pairish (pā-reesh) n. James (18th C.) gardener at Knowe in Minto Parish, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull.

the Pairish (thu-pā-reesh) n., arch. euphemism for the Poorhouse – ‘...it meant Jethart Jail for themselves and ‘the parish’ for their dependents’ [JTu].

the Pairish (thu-pā-reesh) n. popular name for Hawick Old Parish Church (when it wasn’t ‘old’).

the Pairish Council (thu-pā-reesh-koon-sul) n. former organisation dealing with health and social matters. It replaced the Parochial Board in 1894, and was in turn replaced by County Council responsibilities around 1929. Their meetings took place on the third floor of the Town Hall and they had offices at 12 Allars Crescent.

Pairish Halls (pā-reesh-halz) n. the Halls of the Old Parish Church, on the corner of Buccleuch Street and Buccleuch Place. Built in 1885, the land was previously used as a garden. It is a grade C listed building.

the Pairish Kirk (thu-pā-reesh-kirk) n. another name for the Auld Pairish Kirk or formerly for St. Mary’s – ‘The Parish Church of Hawick stands on a considerable eminence ... but alas! the fabric, with the old spire attached to it, is more like a farmer’s granary or barn, with a huge steam chimney stuck upon it, then a temple of devotion ...’ [RW], ‘... Pairish Kirk is hooses now Folk inri the same somehow’ [IWL].

pair (pārk) n. a park, enclosed field – ‘...telt the coorse o bonnie Teviot, wumplin bye pastur an pairk an bussy dean’ [ECS], ‘Vince upon a lang time ago, when wast end pairk was flatter ...’ [MB] (see park and cf. perk).

the Park (thu-pārk) n. popular name for Wilton Lodge Park – ‘...but for sic a monument as th’ committei hae decided on, aw’m thinkin’ th’ Pairk wad bei th’ place for it’ [BW].

Pairky-Aathing’s (pār-kee-aw-thingz) n. shop, which was also known as ‘J. Lynch’, or ‘Miss Lynch’s’, at 19 High Street, near the Round Close. It closed in 1989.

pairliment (pār-li-min) n. parliament.

pairlt (pār-ul) adj., arch. affected by palsy, paralysed, having uncontrolled tremors – ‘Ther chafts war ditherin an bevverin leike as thay war pairlt’ [ECS] (also written ‘pairlt’; cf. perk).

pairly (pār-ke) adj. poorly, not well – ‘she’s been awfi pairily, ee ken’, adv. in poverty, wretchedly, poet. feebly, softly – ‘Young Braxholm turn’d him, and oft looked back, And aye he passed from feebly, softly { `Young Branxholm turn’d poet.’ [JL].

Pairman (pār-mun) n. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was surely related to Christie, who was also listed. Christopher ‘Christie’ (16th C.) tenant in Outersideig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as ‘Cristie’ right after Will.

pairpul (pār-pul) n., arch. a thin wooden partition, especially to divide the back shop from the front – ‘...his maxim with every opponent being, after the fashion of the archer, his namesake, to the Pair Roll

the Pair Roll (ðu-pær-ról) n. list of people in a parish who are eligible for poor relief. The first mention of ‘the poor’s stent’ on the inhabitants of Hawick was in 1749. In 1772 the assessment for the poor amounted to £224 – The said Willaim Paterson . . . depones he . . . has been on the Poor Roll for several years past and gets a weekly sup- tain of tuppence’[BR1767] (see also the pair).

Pair’s Hooses (pærz-hoo-sees) n. Poor’s Houses, former cottages in Ewesdale, near to the Kirk and to Brieryshaw. They seem to be the same houses listed as ‘Kirkstyle’ on the 1841 and 1861 censuses. They are listed on the 1851 census, with 5 households living there.

pairt (pær’) n. a part – ‘what pairt o’ nut’ did ee no understand?’, ‘The rownies that follows are for ye most pairt far distant fra the kirk, some 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 mynles, the most pairt has either no corne, or very lilit . . .’[PR1627], ‘. . .the possessors of the lands of Flex hath hitherto reaped the greatest pairt of the the profit of the said peice of ground’[BR1692], ‘Behald, thou desyryst trough in the inward pairs . . .’[HSR], ‘. . .sall gang intil the lower pairts o’ the yirth’[HSR], ‘In the fore pairt of June, when the heather’s in bloom, They wad laik to be back in their ain Border toon’[WR], ‘In things o’ domestic she aye takes her pairt’[WAP], ‘. . .Though townsfolk play their mony pairts An’ sune grow auld’[WFC], ‘. . .And then oo hed races And even the Minister took pairt’[AY], ‘. . .In loyal herts oor lad o’ pairts Will lang be honoured yet’[WL], a parting in hair – ‘Nor can I thole their snack-bar wit, Their bowlers and their brillantine: Owre slow am I to bear a pairt’[DH], v. to part – ‘they were mairrit fower year ago, bit they’ve pairtit already’, ‘O Jeanie, wherefore did we pairt, Or why ha’e we grown year ago, bit they’ve pairtit already’, ‘O Jeanie, pairt’[DH], v. to share out (noted by E.C. Smith).

pairt-taker (pær’-tā-kur) n., arch. a partaker, supporter, taker of sides – ‘the said Walter Scot, knyect, and his freyndis, servandis, and pairt takaris . . .’[SB1527], ‘. . .accompanied by his mother Tibbie Donaldson, Turnbull was immediately surrounded by a company of ‘pairt-takers’ of one with whom he had formerly been at feud’[WaD].

pairty (pær’-ee) n. a party, social gathering – ‘daein Mick Jagger was aye his pairty-piece’, ‘The Queen’s gaun ti haud a pairty And the wife and yow’s tae gaun’[AY], political group – ‘. . .she was a main cog in the ‘Tory Pairty machine’[IWL], ‘A’ve seen politicians come and gaun frae aw pairties . . .’[IHS], a group of people on a trip – ‘His enjoyment was tempered somewhat be the fact that Mrs. Fair and Miss Lookup were among the walkin pairty’[IWL], a person – ‘. . .sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings . . .by the skaithe to the pairtie lesed’[BR1640].

Paisley (pærz-lee) n. Agnes (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. Alexander (16th C.) holder of a particiate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may have been related to William, who is also listed. He is mentioned in 1532 when the tenement to the east of his on the north side of the High Street was sold by William Walker to John Morlaw; this tenement bordered on the Slitrig, and hence was at the Tower Knowe. Charles (1794–1838) writer of Hawick, listed at Roadhead in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a Trustee of the Relief Kirk. He was probably the joiner in Wilton, who married Helen Michie; his widow Helen was living at Wilton Roadhead in 1841, along with children William, Jessie, Robert, Charles, John and James. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) wife of John Scott, ‘Wynheid’. In 1712, when she was a widow, she was rebuked by the Kirk Session for harassing her neighbours, and threatened with imprisonment if her behaviour continued. Francis (b.1790/1) joiner and cabinet-maker of the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was at about 23 High Street.
on the Crown Close in 1851 and at 16 High Street (probably the same address) in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Isabella, John, Francis, Margaret, Thomas and Alexander. Hector (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The Tour of Hauick’. He may be the Hector, married to Isobel Turnbull, who had an unnamed son baptised in Hawick in 1687. Helen (17th C.) probably the daughter of John and Helen Elson born in Hawick in 1650. In 1687 she had a sasine for the lower part of a house in the west end of Hawick. Her husband was Robert Turnbull, who was a weaver. Helen nee Michie (b.c.1790) widow of a joiner in Wilton. She married Charles in Wilton in 1818. In 1841 she is listed as running the joiners business at Roadhead (i.e. Langlands Road). Her children included Joan (b.1821), William (b.1823), Janet or Jessie (b.1825), Robert (b.1826), Charles (b.1830), John (b.1832) and James (b.1833). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parich, married to Agnes Deans. Their children included William (b.1638). He may be the James who in 1640 witnessed a baptism for Agnes Paisley and Walter Oliver (suggesting then that Agnes was his sister) and another for Robert Gillespie and Marion Stoddart. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parich, married to Janet Scott. Their children included: Alexander (b.1644); and John (b.1646). James (18th/19th C.) joiner and cabinet-maker on Damside, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was probably related to Francis, who was a joiner on the High Street at the same time. Janet (b.c.1790) listed as a schoolmistress on the 1841 census. She was living on the Round Close with Agnes, probably her daughter, a milliner. By 1851 she was listed as a woollen seamstress, still on the Round Close. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parich, married to Janet Routledge. Their children included: Bessie (b.1642); John (b.1644); Robert (b.1646); Walter (b.1647); and Janet (b.1650). He is probably the John recorded in 1665 when Bessie Douglas was accused of insulting the Bailie and saying that his yard ‘was not truelie marched’. Patrick (17th C.) listed at Mervinslaw among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when he was imprisoned in the Hawick Tolbooth ‘for abusing of the market and keeping of the honest men from selling of their shoes’. He was presumably a shoemaker and may be the same man as the cornder who contribted to the Hawick bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1706 he was one of the people (presumably living near St. Mary’s) who were disturbed at night by a group who were involved in drunken revelry. They asked for him to bring out the cripple who lodged at his house, pretending to be ‘faerie spiritts’. He could be the Robert, resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could also be the cornder listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the Robert whose children born in Hawick included: Anna (b.1700); and Robert (b.1703). Robert (18th C.) wright of Hawick. In 1734 he was tasked with rebuilding the Bailies’ seat in the balcony of St. Mary’s after it had been removed on the orders of the Chamberlain of Buccleuch. Thomas (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Thomas (19th C.) joiner in the Hawick area. In 1863 he presented some coins to the Museum. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Renwick and their son Walter was baptised in 1679. He was probably miller at Weensland Mill who along with his son Walter witnessed a baptism in 1705. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Weensland Mill, probably son of Walter. He married Jean Swan in 1703 and their children included: Agnes (b.1704); Walter (b.1705); Jean (b.1707); Francis (b.1710); and Elizabeth (b.1712). He and his father Walter were probably the ‘milers at Weensland milne’ who witnessed a baptism for Walter Armstrong in Weensland in 1705. Walter (b.c.1700) from Langholm, he lived in Castleton Parish. In 1722 he married Margaret Davison Dalgleish. Their children (born mainly in Langholm) included: Robert (b.1731); John (b.1733); Christian (b.1736); Christian (again, b.1737); Elizabeth (b.1741), who married John Grieve; and Euphan (b.1744). Walter (b.1825/6) ironmonger on the High Street. In 1861 he was living at No. 21, employing 1 man and 2 boys. He had the house at 43 High Street rebuilt (formerly occupied by ‘Robbie the Cow’). A ‘stone pig’ from his company is in the Museum, labelled ‘W. Paisley & Son, Ironmongers, Hawick’. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Jane Josephine and Mary Elizabeth (who married Robert Elliot, famer in Hermitage). Wilhelmmina (19th C.) listed as librarian of the Hawick Trades’ Library in Slater’s 1852 directory. William (16th C.) owner of quarter of a particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. William (d.c.1689) cordiner and Burgess of Hawick. He was recorded as Procurator-Fiscal of the Regality Court (i.e. public prosecutor for the Burgh) in 1668 and 1669. He is probably the William recorded in 1683 when fleshers John Briggs was fined of insulting him and Michael Turnbull, 'calling of them two drunken elders'. He was probably the William mentioned in the Burgh Records in 1686 when 2 new marchers of the boundaries within the town were appointed. He was stated to have been a former marcher, along with John Hardie and William Purdem. He was probably the shoemaker of Hawick whose will is recorded in 1689. William (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1719. William (b.c.1795) from Innerleithen. He was a dyer who lived on the Fore Raw in 1841 and 1851. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. His wife was Isabella and their children included James, Joan, John, Helen and Charles. William (b.1822/3) son of Charles. He was listed as a joiner at Roadhead in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living at Roadhead with his mother Helen and siblings Charles, John, James and Isabella. (sometimes written `Pasla', `Paslaw', `Paslay', `Pasley', `Payslay', etc.).

Paisley's (pāz-leez) n. ironmonger's shop opposite the Town Hall in the mid-20th century – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for oor tools, Jess McVeety’s for rock bools, Lynch’s hed a’ kinds o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies …’ [IWL].

pait (pāt) pp., arch. paid – ‘…to be pait to me be the saide Androu Kere or his facturis or subterandis at twa termez of the yere …’ [DoR1445], ‘…to be pait to the said William, his aieris, executouris or assignais in the parroche kirk of Hawic …’ [SB1470], ‘…and mak the saidis Jhon and Niniane to be fullie content and pait thairof …’ [SB1500], ‘…to be pait to me when the pattern it made wad bei the ineshail o oor man-teh-bei’ [BW1961].

Paiterson (pā'-, pā'-, paw'-ur-sin) n. (Pater- son) Adam (16th C.) holder of 2½ particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Rev. Adam McCaul (19th/20th C.) licentiate at Saughtrees Kirk from 1903. He retired to Edinburgh in 1910. Alexander (17th C.) tenant farmer at Castlehill and ‘Holme’ in 1671, leasing from theScotts of Buccleuch. Rev. Alexander (19th C.) from Glasgow, he graduated M.A. from the University there in 1869. He was nephew of Rev. Dr. Paterson of Kirkwall. He was ordained as minister of Lilliesleaf Burgher Kirk in 1875 and remained until 1896. His time saw a new church opened in 1891. He left for Edinburgh for family reasons, residing at Portobello. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Fulton in Bedrule Parish. In 1623 he was accused of stealing an ox and a cow from a woman in Newton, Glendale (Northumberland). He was recorded as ‘Andro Paterstone in Foultoone’ and found not guilty by the court at Jedburgh. Andrew (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1786, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Archibald (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who married Helen Allan. Their son Walter was baptised in 1656. Archibald (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. With no mother’s name given, children who are likely to be his include: William (b.1707), Francis (b.1710), Isobell (b.1712) and John (b.1716). Either Agnes (b.1714) or Walter (b.1715) could also be his children. He could be the Archibald who married Helen Pater- son in Hawick in 1706 and also had a daughter Helen in 1723. Archibald (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. In 1716 he married Mary, daughter of James Rutherford. Their children included: James (b.1716); Francis (b.1719); James (again, b.1719); Robert (b.1725); and Mary (b.1728). Given the family forenames, it is possible that he was ancestor of the ‘Pawkie’ Patersons. He may have earlier (in 1714) married Bessie Davidson. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Jean Shiel. Their son William was baptised in 1731. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Betty Irvine in 1735. Their son Thomas was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1738. Archibald ‘Pawkie’ (d.1815) Hawick man who farmed at Silverbuthall and lived at West Port. He was father of Robert ‘Pawkie Paterson’. In 1781 he was recorded as a merchant; however, it is possible he was the ‘cadger’ of that name who was Cornet in 1771. In 1775 he married Isabel Turnbull and she died in 1816. His children included: Helen (1775–1855), who married Tom Harkness; Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1777); James (b.1780), also nicknamed ‘Pawkie’; Robert (1781–1851), immortalised in the song; and Jane (c.1785–1839), who married M. Cabourne and secondly George Mil- ligan. He was said to have had 2 daughters who were involved with French prisoners of war. Ex-Bailie Walter Ruecastle was witness to the 1775 and 1777 baptisms, and also Walter Henderson in 1775 and merchant James Dickson in 1777. In 1777 he was a witness (along with Walter Ruecastle) for a baptism for James Dickson. The witnesses in 1780 were ex-Baillie Walter Ruecastle and merchant George Turnbull, while in 1781 they were ex-Baillie Walter Ruecastle and William Turnbull (probably a relative of his wife). He is probably the Hawick resident who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791 and who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His death is recorded in Hawick as 'west port pauky'. Archibald (b.1783) stockmaker of Kirtton Parish, son of Robert. He was recorded at Horselee in 1841 and Southfieldgate in 1851. He married Agnes Hall and their children included: Agnes (b.1833); George (b.1835); and James (b.c.1838). Agnes and George were baptised in Robertson Parish. Archibald (1800–1840) eldest son of James 'Pawkie'. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Agnes Donaldson in 1834; after his death she secondly married George Robson, and she died in 1887. Their children were: James (b.1835); George Renwick (b.1837); and William Oliver (b.1839). Christopher (1815/6–79) son of carrier James. He was a carter, like his father. In 1841 he was listed as a carrier at the West Port (corresponding to about 9 Loan), living adjacent to his parents. In 1851 he was at about 20 Howegate and in 1861 at 9 Loan again. He married Agnes Chalmers and secondly married Helen Oliver. His children included: Margaret (b.1839); James (b.1842); John (b.c.1847); Robert (b.c.1850); Betsy (b.c.1853); Archibald (b.c.1855); and Christopher (b.c.1858). He died at Weensland Cottages. David (b.1800) from Sanquhar, he was a fleisher on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He was at about No. 47 in 1841 and at No. 37 in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Mary and their children included John, David, Elizabeth and James. David 'Davie' (19th/20th C.) captain of the Hawick team that won the 1895–96 Scottish championship. He played at quarter (wing) and also represented Scotland. Edward (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He married Christian, daughter of John and Jane Douglas. Their children included: Jean (b.1821); and Joseph (b.1822), who die in infancy. He could be 'E. Paterson', the merchant of Castleton who subscribed to 2 copies of William Scott’s ' Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Elizabeth (1785–1879) daughter of William of Baltimore, and possibly grand-daughter of Robert ('Old Mortality'), she married Jerome Bonaparte (1784–1860). By a strange coincidence, one of the last works of Sir Walter Scott (who immortalised 'Old Mortality') was a monumental biography of Jerome's brother Napoleon. However, it seems more likely that he father was originally from Donegal, Ireland, and hence any connection with 'Old Mortality' seems unlikely. Francis (17th/18th C.) tenant in the Flex. His wife was Isobell Renwick and their children included: Isobell (b.1685); Janet (b.1687); Margaret (b.1691); and Anna (b.1695). Walter in Burnflat witnessed one of the baptisms and was probably his father or brother. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In both 1762 and 1766 he witnessed baptisms for wright Walter Scott. He could be the George who married Isobel Tudhope and whose children included: Henry (b.1759); George (b.1761); Robert (b.1763); and John (b.1767). George (b.1794/5) from Fogo in Berwickshire, he was farmer at Greenbank. In the 1841 census his wife (recorded being born in Nova Scotia) and children were there, but he was visiting Borthwickbrae House at the time. He was at Greenbank in 1851 as farmer of 600 acres, employing 3 people. His children included: Eliza (b.c.1828); George (b.c.1830); and John (b.c.1840). George (1801–73) native of Stichill, near Kelso, son of John and Isabel Tait. He was a shoemaker to trade. He learned to play the fife in the Berwickshire Militia. He played in the Drums and Fifes at 46 Common Ridings. He is recorded as a shoemaker journeyman at the Sandbed in 1841, a shoemaker on the Mid Row in 1851 and at 3 Back Row in 1861. He married Margaret Scott and they had children: Isabel (b.c.1830); John (b.c.1833); Jane (or Jeanie, b.1834); Margaret (b.1837); George (b.1839); Andrew (b.1841); Barbara (b.1841); Eliza (b.c.1848); and Thomas (b.c.1849). George (b.c.1815) baker of 53 (or perhaps 55) High Street, son of baker William. He was listed as a baker and confectioner of the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He married both Elizabeth and Isabella, daughters of grocer Thomas Liddell. His daughter Margaret Davidson carried on the baker's business until she married Andrew Graham (tweed traveller). Her cousin Thomas L. Brydon then took over, later succeeded by Thomas Scott. Helen (b.1775) daughter of Archibald and sister of Robert 'Pawkie'. She married labourer Tam Harkness. It is unclear if she was 'Nellie Harkness' or if that was her daughter. Henry (17th/18th C.) servant to the Laird of Falnash when he married Bessie Scott in Hawick in 1700. He was listed as a carrier in Hawick in 1702, when his son John was baptised. His children included: John (b.1702); Agnes (b.1707); George (b.1718); and Robert (b.1722). Other children (with no mother’s name given) could have included: John (b.1704); George (b.1709); Henry (b.1711); Walter (b.1714); and Mary (b.1716). He may have been related to William, whose father was gardener and shepherd for Scott of Falnash around the second decade of the 18th century. Henry (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Roberton Parish in 1799. Henry (b.c.1810) agricultural labourer at Pin in Castleton Parish. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835–41 and was also Precentor in Castleton Kirk from at least 1841. His wife was Mary and their children included Robert, Christian, Mary, John and Henry. Henry ‘Harry o Burnheid’ (d.1850s) a barman to trade, he used to spend time sitting near a well at Burnhead, popularly named ‘Harry’s Well’. Known as an odd character who used to collect bits of cord and liked to read difficult passages from the bible. A water-colour portrait of him by Adam Brown is in the Museum. It is possible he was the Henry who married Margaret Hobkirk (from Robertson) in 1799. Henry (1820/1–87) son of John, he was an auctioneer in Hawick. His premises were at 61 High Street. An attendee of the East Bank Kirk, he was apparently the only one to continue standing during prayers and sit during singing, long after the practice was reversed. He married Ann Armstrong, and their children were: John, ironmonger; Alexander, bookmaker; and Robert, also bookmaker. He is buried in the Wellogate. James (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘under miller’ in Hawick in 1694 when he still had to pay part of his Burgess money. In 1701 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Scott and Janet Paterson (probably his daughter or sister). Probably the same James ‘milner’ witnessed a baptism for fellow miller Robert Deans in Hawick in 1705. James (d.1782) resident of Hawick Parish. His death record is labelled ‘ilka Thursday’, which was presumably his nickname (sugestive he may have been a carrier, and hence related to the later carrier of the same name). It is possible he was the James, son of Archibald, born in Hawick in 1719. He may be the James, married to Helen Ruecastle (probably the same as Helen Paterson in some baptismal records), whose children included: Archibald (b.1744), possibly ‘Pawkie’; John (b.1747); Mary (b.1757); Christian (b.1759); William (b.1761), possibly the resident of Silverbuthall; and James (b.1766). He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for baker Walter Ruecastle in 1758. James ‘Pawkie’ (1780–1858) son of Archibald and Isabella Turnbull. He was brother of Robert, the subject of the song. In his younger days he was an agricultural servant, being at Adderstonelee in 1799 (when he got married). Later he was a carrier and small-scale farmer in Hawick. He is listed as ‘Pauky’ in the 1808 and 1810 death records of his infant sons, both called William. In 1837 he was running a cart service to Dumfries, Annan and Langholm every Monday. He may also be the grocer on the Loan listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 9 Loan with his wife and young joiner John Ingles (who was probably his grandson), with his son Christopher living at the same address. In 1851 he was listed on the Loan as farmer of 9 acres. In 1799 in Kirkton Parish he married Margaret (1777–1855), daughter of Archibald Tait and sister of carrier William Tait. Their children were: Archibald (1799–1840); Isabella (1800/1–52), who married John Ingles; Jean (1802/3–63), who married Thomas Sanderson in Melrose; William (d.1808) and William (again, d.1810), who died in infancy; James (b.1809/10); Robert (b.1811/2); and Christopher (b.1814/5). He died at 11 Loan. James (b.c.1785) shepherd at Cawfauls in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1840, with his address changed from Alton to ‘Calf-folds’. His wife was Violet and their children included Margaret and Elizabeth. He may be the widower living at Easter Lilliesleaf in 1851. James (b.c.1790) farmer at Terrona in the Ewes valley. His wife was Margaret and their children included Agnes, James, William, John and Alexander. James (b.1820/1) from Ewes, he was farmer at Chapelhill in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farming 950 acres and employing 7 people. He also had a governess and 5 domestic servants. His wife was Jessie and their children included Violet, George, John T., James, William and Margaret B. James (19th C.) cattle salesman in Hawick. He had a villa erected for him on Wilton Hill in about 1880. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1640 he was accused by the kirk Session of setting up stouks of corn on the Sabbath. John (d.c.1683) tenant in Parkhill when his will was recorded in 1683. It is unclear if this was the local Parkhill or another one in the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh and Selkirk. John (1632–1708) youngest son of John, Bishop of Ross, he studied in Aberdeen and St. Andrews and then taught at St. Leonard’s College. He succeeded his father at Ellon in 1660, then became minister at the Tron Kirk and later the High Kirk, before becoming Bishop of Galloway in 1674, and then Bishop of Edinburgh in 1679. In 1687 he was appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow, as successor to Alexander Cairncross. He was thus the last Archbishop of Glasgow, with Bishops being continued later by the Episcopalian and Roman Catholic Churches. He was disliked by many for his hard line on religious intolerance. At the Revolution he sided with James II and was deprived when episcopacy was abolished in 1691. Afterwards he spent several years in England, but returned to Edinburgh by 1702 and petitioned for allowances to be made for relief of poor clergymen (including apparently himself). He died in Edinburgh and was buried at Holyrood. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Marion Craw. Their unnamed son was baptised in 1673. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In 1709 he married Margaret Goodfellow in Kirkton Parish. John (b.c.1800) shoemaker who lived on the Kirkwynd in 1841. His wife was Isabel and their children included Walter and William. The death of his infant son is recorded in 1822. Bailie John (1803–1873) born where the Store was later located, son of a country weaver, he started in that trade himself, then became a warper with William Watson’s. He was apparently the first man in Hawick to warp tartans and shawls, and the first to send pieces of woven cloth to London in about 1830. He was a trustee of the firm, and managed it until his sons Robert F. and Thomas L. were old enough to take over in 1864. He was also on the Town Council and was a Magistrate during the 1850s. In the 1850s he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Hawick District. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as manager of W. Watson & Sons. He had the honour of presenting the harp to Henry Scott Riddell on behalf of the Town in 1859 and also chaired the dinner in the Tower Hotel at the centenary Burns night. He owned the building at 72 High Street, where he lived, later moving to Galashiels as a manufacturer. He is at 72 High Street on the 1841, 1851 and 1861 censuses. Probably his father was the Paterson shown at about 72 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. His wife was Mary, and children included: Mary; Henry; Alison, who married Andrew Turnbull; Robert; John; Agnes; Adam and Jemima. John (b.1820s) son of manufacturer John. He had an ironmonger’s shop at 60 High Street (which was later Sharp the tobacconist), and lived at 57 High Street. In 1863 he donated to the Museum the cast of a bronze spear-head he made himself. He married Mary Telfer, who died in 1862. Their children were: Agnes, who died age 23; Robert, moved to Melbourne; John, shopkeeper; and Henry, auctioneer. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. John (19th/20th C.) son of auctioneer Henry. He had an ironmonger’s shop at 21 High Street, taking over from a Mr. Buckham. He married Alison Waldie. It is possible that his family’s premises were those labelled ‘Paterson’ at 25 (not 21) High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. John (19th/20th C.) resident of Edinburgh. James Sinton, in his Hawick-related bibliography of 1908, thanks him for the use of ‘some of the rarer volumes in his library, which contains one of the finest collections of Hawick-printed books extant’. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (20th C.) actuary with the Hawick Savings Bank, he also acted as Treasurer for St. George’s Kirk from 1935. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Blacklemouth according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Michael (16th/17th C.) said to have owned the lands at ‘Haggishaa’ in the distant past (as recounted by Robert Wilson). If real, he was presumably an ancestor of Robert ‘Old Mortality’. He is said to have been a generous host and a great benefactor of St. Mary’s. On one occasion he apparently entertained those associated with Hawick Kirk, serving a 3 foot diameter haggis, the pin of which was used as a spoke to mend Hawick Mill and the skin used for the Town drum. This is connected with the name ‘Haggishaa’, and there is probably no truth to the story other than the family connection with the land there. It is suggested that a version of the story was told to Robert Burns by his friend Gavin Turnbull (whose family was from Hawick), inspiring the lines ‘Your pin wad help to mend a mill In time o’ need’. Mungo (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Birkhill when the will of his wife Margaret Turnbull was recorded in 1685. It is unclear if this was the Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on another one. Robert (17th C.) resident at Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert ‘Old Mortality’ (1715/6–1801) born at Burnfiat (although there are other claims that he was born at Closeburn, but his family were from Hawick and he was certainly christened and grew

She died in 1785 (aged 59), and a plaque in Balmaclellan marks where they lived. He met Walter Scott in 1793 in a graveyard in north-east Scotland. This meeting was fictionalised in the opening chapter of Scott’s `The Tale of Old Mortality' (1816), and helped inspire the novel. He died on the high road near Lockerbie, collapsing next to his pony at Bankend of Caerlaverock, and not recovering. The precise date of his death and place of his burial are un-certain. A memorial tombstone was erected by Robert junior, Margaret and Janet. He returned to his family at Gatelawbrig in 1768, and they moved to Balmaclellan in Kirkcudbright. His wife worked there as a teacher to support the family, while he travelled the country on his pony, erecting and cleaning stones. She died in 1785 (aged 59), and a plaque in Balmaclellan marks where they lived. He met Walter Scott in 1793 in a graveyard in north-east Scotland. This meeting was fictionalised in the opening chapter of Scott’s `The Tale of Old Mortality' (1816), and helped inspire the novel. He died on the high road near Lockerbie, collapsing next to his pony at Bankend of Caerlaverock, and not recovering. The precise date of his death and place of his burial are uncertain. A memorial tombstone was erected by Scott’s publisher in 1869 at Bankend of Caerlave-rock Churchyard. There are 3 copies of a statue of him by John Currie (two of which also include his pony), which are in Balmaclellan, at Dum-fries Observatory Museum and at Newton Stewart Museum. There is another statue of him in Laurel Hill Cemetery in Philadelphia. A plaque marked his birthplace in Hawick, erected in 1897, but the dilapidated cottage at `Hagishaa' was de-molished following a fire in 1991 (the plaques are now in storage). In addition the Museum holds a pair of his spectacles. Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1760 he witnessed a baptism for car-rier Robert Miller. Robert (18th C.) cooper in Hawick Parish. In 1760 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, with Walter Scott from New-bigging as the other witness. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Isobel Fairbairn and their children included: Robert (b.1777); William (b.1779); George (b.1780); Archibald (b.1783); Robert (again, b.1788); and James (b.1791). James appears to have died in 1820. Robert `Pawkie' (1781–1858) local man, immortalised in the words of the humorous song by ‘Soapy’ Ballantine. His father Archi-bald had farmed land at `Sillerbithaa' (and was also ‘Pawky'), with his mother being Isabel Turn-bull. He lived at 9 Loan and his descendants farmed fields near there. He had 4 sisters: Nellie, who married Tam Harkness, and whose daugh-ter Hannah married Charles Gray Laidlaw; Jane, who had a child to a prisoner called Cabourne, this daughter marrying toy merchant and grocer David S. Park, and secondly married George Mil-ligan and was the mother of Provost Milligan; and another who married a French prisoner of war, who is traditionally said to have been a Bona-parte (although this is hardly credible), returning to France where he obtained a divorce and remar-ried. He was recorded on the 1841 and 1851 cen-suses at about 9 Loan and farmed 16 acres. He was unmarried in 1851, but in 1855 married He-len Leithead (b.c.1825) in Hawick and they had children John (b.1853) and Archibald (b.1855). In 1861 his widow and 2 sons were still living at 9 Loan. He was buried in Wilton Kirkyard. Robert (b.1781/2) born in Wilton Parish, he was a soldier and agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was an Army Pensioner at Wauchope and in 1851 was listed as both Chelsea Pensioner and labourer. He married Mary Turnbull in Hobkirk Parish in 1821. His widow was still living at Wauchope Cottages in 1861. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was listed in 1835 as a gardener living at Roadside. Robert (19th C.) described being ‘in Broadlee’ in Castleton Parish in 1832 when he was charged with ‘the sin of for-nication’ with Helen Thomson. Robert (19th C.) Hawick resident who lived at West Port. He was one of the Tory supporters who was stripped almost naked and beaten up by the Radical mob near the Tower Knowe at the 1837 election. He escaped into the house of Walter Turnbull, but was found hiding under the bed. It was said that his unpopularity arose from his having switched his political allegiance. On his way down to the inquiry in London, he is supposed to have said on the ship ‘there’s naethin but a fir deal atween us an eternity’, and asked the Captain to sail close to the edge – ‘He’s been away this month an’ mair, At Lou’on Town, a witness there, Wi’ Tully, Paterson, and Kennedy, An scores of ithers that are ready . . .’[RDW]. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Pawkie’. Robert (b.1823/4) born in Wilton Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. He was living at Hassendeanbank in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Elizabeth, Christina, James and John.

Robert Telfer ‘Moose’ (1866–1907) son of Henry and Ann Armstrong. He was a ‘turf commission agent’ (i.e. bookie) who moved to Leeds. His nickname came from a discoloured patch on his cheek. He was a member of St. Cuthbert’s choir while in Hawick, and was a well known singer, at Colour Bussings and other events. He was the first singer of the songs ‘Up wi’ the Banner’, ‘Hawk’ and ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’. He was in fact the first singer of ‘Up wi’ the Banner’ at the Colour Bussing of 1887, when it was sung to the tune of ‘Hail to the Chief’, and he also debuted the new tune at the 1888 Colour Bussing. He is buried in the Wellogate. Rev. Stuart Maxwell (1937– ) educated at Kelham College and Lichfield Theological College, he was ordained in 1960. He was with churches in Derbyshire before coming to Hawick as Priest-in-Charge in 1992. He was Rector from 1995. Thomas (15th C.) listed as ‘Thomas Patonsoun’ among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. Probably the same ‘Thome Patonson’ is listed among many Rutherfords and others who had their fines compounded in 1501 by Walter Ker of Cessford and Henry Haitley of Mellerstain. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was a Kedie and their children included: Janet (b.1723); and William (b.1726). Rev. Thomas W. (19th/20th C.) minister at Roberton Free Kirk (‘the Snoot Kirk’) 1889–1900. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included Helen (b.1689). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1719 his daughter Bessie married John Ruecastle, in 1726 his son Walter married Isabell Glendinning and in 1727 his son William married Isobel Sli-man. Walter (17th/18th C.) father of Robert, ‘Old Mortality’. He acquired Burnflat from his own father in 1688. He could be the Walter in Burnflat who witnessed a baptism for Francis in 1687. His lands in the Parish of Hawick were valued at £40 Scots in 1710. He was recorded as a heritor of Hawick Parish in 1711. In 1713 he made a request to the Bailies and Council that the boundary between his land at Burnflat and the Common be marked out; it is stated that there were ‘seventeen march stones set along the march’. He is probably the Walter, Laird of Burnflat, who is mentioned in 1767 among evidence given regarding the former use of the Common; he held ‘a quarter of land in Hawick’ and kept more than 100 sheep, supported by pasturing them on the Common. He married Margaret (also known as Helen) Scott and they had 5 children, with perhaps only Francis (b.1706) and Robert (b.1716) surviving to adulthood, with others including Helen (b.1700). Other children (with no mother’s name given) that may have been his include Walter (b.1701), John (b.1703), Gideon (b.1704), Walter (again, b.1708), John (b.1711), another Robert (b.1713) and Archibald (b.1715). He is probably the Walter ‘of Burnflat’ who witnessed a baptism in 1725 (for William Stoddart), along with ‘Robert Paterson there’ (who may have been a brother, since his son Robert would have been too young to be a witness). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: Marion (b.1703). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Marshall and their children included John (b.1707). Some of the other children born to a Walter in Hawick were probably his (rather than being siblings of ‘Old Mortality’). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Glendinning and their children included Walter (b.1728). Walter (18th C.) resi-dent of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Telford and their children included Margaret (b.1732) and William (b.1732). Walter (18th C.) resi-dent of Robertson Parish. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1735). Walter (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His wife was Janet Brown and their unnamed son was baptised in 1747. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Nelly Laidlaw and their children included Janet (b.1780). Walter (b.1817/8) born in Kirkton Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 10 acres at ‘Hankimshaugh’, which was another name for Hummelknowehaugh. He married Mary Amos and their children included Mary, William, Walter, Isabella, Ann and John. William (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Cruik’ when he witnessed a Melrose Abbey charter relating to the lands of Crook in 1569. William (17th C.) recorded in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. William (17th C.) referred to as ‘in Hawick’ in 1681 when he rented Hawick Mill from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was Hawick’s miller for at least 1682–87. He could be the William who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘exist the water’ in 1694 and the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the William recorded in 1692 when ‘in a process of marching’ it was decided by the Town Council that he ‘may have the better and mair free passage with packs of wool, and leading out of his mucke’ [BR1692]. William (17th C.) listed at Highchesters in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William (b.1694/5) Burgess of Hawick. His father was gardener to Gideon Scott of Falnash for 18 years, living at Fenwick, and also acting as shepherd for the farms of Fenwick and half of Goldielands and Alton Croft. He gave evidence in the court case regarding the Common in 1767, having himself acted as cattle herd for Scott of Falnash’s animals for 10 years; he was at that time described as married and on the poor roll of Hawick. William (17th/18th C.) said by James Wilson to have been nephew of Robert ‘Old Mortality’ and to have sold the family property of Burnflat in 1753. William (18th C.) son of Walter. In 1727 in Hawick he married Isobel, daughter of John Sliman. Their children included: Walter (b.1728); John (b.1739); and Archibald (b.1743). He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Scott in 1763. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Silverbuthall. His son William died in 1829. He was probably related to Archibald, who farmed at Silverbuthall (possibly his brother, and hence the William, son of James, born in 1761). William (1769/70–1837) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Armstrong in Hawick in 1798; she died in Hawick in 1856, aged 85. In 1841 and 1851 his widow was living with their son James at Raesknowe. His children included James (1805/6–54) and Margaret (1803/4–18). He died at Brancholme Braes and is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (1799/1800–1875), who is noticed on the reverse of the same gravestone, was probably also his son. William (b.c.1780) baker and Bailie in the 1820s and 30s. His shop was on the High Street, around No. 62, and he was also a tenant farmer of Winnington Rig. He was one of the 18 founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk in Hawick, and one of the first elders. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He presided at the 1832 Reform Bill celebrations and made the often quoted statement ‘It was luz and Mainchesther that carried the Reform Bill’ [T]. He was listed as a High Street baker on Pigot’s 1837 directory and was there on the 1841 and 1851 censuses. His wife was Agnes and their children included Helen, Isabella, George (also a baker) and Susan. William (1799/1800–1875) labourer living at Newmill Damfoot. He was probably son of William and Helen Armstrong. He married Ann Elliot, who died in 1855, aged 56. Their children included: Elizabeth; John; Adam; and Simon. He and his wife are buried in Borthwick Waas. William (b.1804/5) farm steward at Stouslie. In 1835 he was listed as a labourer at Leaheads, with the entry changed to be farm servant at Stouslie in 1840 and he was farm steward at Stouslie by 1841. His wife was Isabella and their children included Isabella, Agnes (who married Daniel Fisher) and Margaret. Rev. William (1846–1932) born in Glasgow, he was educated at Glasgow University and Glasgow Evangelical Union Hall. He became evangelical preacher at Hindpool Road, Barrow-in-Furness 1874–78. He was then at Adelphi Chapel, Hackney Road, Middlesex. In 1888 he moved to Newcastleleton Congregational Church, where he remained for about 2 years. He was then at Forfar. Rev. William (1840–1906) from Torrthorwald in Dumfriesshire, he was educated at the University of Edinburgh. He became licenti- ate at Saughtree Kirk 1866–70. He was the first person to minister to the congregation there. He is recorded residing at Ovenshank in 1868. He was minister at Ancrum and Longnewton 1870–1906. He married Susan Crow Noble and their children were William, Margaret Crow, Dr. Norman and James (formerly spelled ‘Patersone’, ‘Patersone’, ‘Patersoum’, ‘Patterson’, etc.).

Paiterson-Broon (pi’-ur-sin-broon, paw’-ur-sin-broon) n. (Paterson-Brown) Dr. June, C.B.E., nee Garden (1932–2009) born and bred in Edinburgh, her father was Wing Cmndr. Thomas Garden. She studied medicine at Edinburgh University, graduating in 1955. In 1957 she married Peter and the couple moved to Hawick. She worked as a medical officer in the Hawick Family Planning and Well Woman Clinics and did much to promote family planning in the Borders, at a time when the topic was an extremely sensitive one. She was long involved with the Girl Guide movement, becoming Hawick District Commissioner, Roxburghshire County Commissioner, Scottish Chief Commissioner and finally Chief Commissioner for the U.K. and Commonwealth. In 1989 she was given the highest award in Guiding, the Silver Fish, in recognition of her 30 years of service. She also chaired or served on many committees involving children, youth and education. She was made Lord-Lieutenant of Roxburgh, Ettrick and Lauderdale in 1988, the first woman appointed to such a position in Scotland. She was named as the Tweeddale Press Group’s ‘Man of the Year’ in the 1980s and in 1991 was awarded the C.B.E. Dr. Peter N. (??-??) from Edinburgh, his father was Consulting Surgeon at the Royal Infirmary. He was educated at Edinburgh University, graduating in 1955. He moved to Hawick in 1957 as a G.P., arriving in the midst of a flu epidemic. He continued in practice in Hawick until he retired in 1991. He became Medical Officer for the Roxburgh Branch of the Red Cross, Director of the Children’s Hospice, Vice-President of R.E.A.C.T., and Honorary Medical Advisor of the Red Cross in Scotland. His first aid booklet ‘A Matter of Life or Death’ (1975, 1980) sold hundreds of thousands of copies.

Paiterson Gairdens (pi’-ur-sin-gahr-din) n. Paterson Gardens, a street built at Burnflat near the Vertish Hill. The houses were erected in 2006 and named after ‘Old Mortality’ whose dilapidated birthplace was demolished to make room for the new buildings. Some stones from the old building were built into the pillars at the entrance to the new housing area.

Palace Waas (paw-lis-wawz) n. popular name for an area in Ashkirk Glebe, about 250 yards south of Ashkirk Kirk, now within the golf course. This was the site of ruins, which were still visible in the late 18th century and may have been the ancient palace of the Bishops of Glasgow. ‘Johnnie Scott of the Palice’, servitor of George Scott of Synton is recorded in 1587, suggesting the place name (but presumably no longer the palace) existed at that time. There is now no evidence of any structure in this location.

the Palais (tu-paw-la) n. popular name for the ‘Palais de Danse’, part of the Odeon theatre complex, off the arcade. It was a popular dance venue in the 1940s and 50s – ‘Ee’d Stan Reid’s and the Palais anaw . . .’ [AY].

Palmer-Douglas (paw-mur-dug-lis) n. Archibald (1880–1947) elder son of Mary and Edward. He was the heir of Cavers, but pre-deceased his mother. He unveiled the Deanbrae War Memorial in 1920. During his time the Cavers estate was reduced by about half, with farms at Denholm and Spittal being sold off. He lived at Lidgard. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1920 he married Mary Kuehn. His children were: James Malcolm, who succeeded; John Aidan (b.1929); and Angela Mary (b.1924). Capt. Edward, J.P., D.L. (1836–1933) originally from Sussex, was youngest son of Rev. George Palmer of Sullington in Sussex. He served with the Rifle Brigade. In 1879 he married Mary Malcolm who became heiress of Cavers and so he changed his surname. He devoted efforts to improving the Cavers estate, which had been neglected for several generations. This included partly rebuilding the mansion house. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1883, formed the Jedforest Hounds in 1884 and was involved with the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He served as Master of the Jedforest Hounds until 1885. He rode in the 1891 Common Riding. He also gave the small piece of ground for the Hornshole Monument. He served as J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as being Deputy Lieutenant and a County Councillor. He had a son, Archibald (b.1880) who pre-deceased his mother and another son, Malcolm (b.1882). James Malcolm (1922–2013) son of Archibald and grandson of Mary and Edward, the first Palmer-Douglasses. When he inherited the Cavers estate it consisted of about 5,000 acres. Not a good estate manager, the family moved into Midgard and removed the roof from Cavers House to save tax in the 1950s. The family then moved to the Eskdalemuir area. He sold off the last 90 acres of the Cavers estate in 1975. He then moved to Caithness, but later took up the cause to preserve Cavers Kirk. He has had 3 wives, having children Helen and Nigel to his first wife, Dorothy Margaret Campbell. He also had children Stephen and Frances to the second Dorothy Smith. He was buried in the family lair at Cavers Old Kirk. Mary Douglas nee Malcom (1858/9–1949) daughter of Mary Douglas and William Elphinstone Malcolm of Burnfoot in Eskdale. She succeeded as Laird of Cavers when her uncle James died without male issue in 1878. In 1879 she married Capt. Edward Palmer from Sussex and they adopted the double-barrelled name. The Cavers Lairdship was inherited by James Malcolm, who was son of her son Archibald. She had another son Malcolm, who died aged 19 in 1902. She had liferent of properties that had been owned by her father, after his death in 1907. Many documents relating to her financial and legal matters are in the archives of the National Library of Scotland. Stephen son of James, he still lives locally, and helped organise the first Hawick Chess Congress in 1992 (also written ‘Palmer Douglas’).

Forman’ [PR1711] (there are spelling variants; also pawnd).

pander (pawnd-dur) v., arch. to wander, drift purposelessly – ‘Than A pandert up an doon a bittie, hed a crack wui yin an another ...’ [ECS].

pandie (pawnd-dee) n., arch. a sharp stroke administered to the hand of a child as punishment (noted by E.C. Smith).

pan drop (pawnd-drop) n. hard, rounded, white mint sweet, sometimes called a mint imperial.

pang (pawng) v., arch. to cram full, pack, stuff – ‘...his wallets panged to an extraordinary...’
extent with provender’ [WNK], to force something on someone, to palm off on, adj., arch. crammed full, stuffed – ‘An’ when their bellies a’ were pang. The grace was said, to wark they sprang’ [JR]. ‘The house is pang’ [JR], ‘Here am I sittin’ doon to write, Red-wud wi’ spleen, pang fu’ o’ spite’ [JoHa].

pan loaf (pawn-lof) n. type of bread, distinguished from a ‘plain loaf’ by having crust all round, often referred to as a ‘pan’.

pan-loaf (pawn-lof) adj. having a posh accent, so called because ‘pan loafs’ were traditionally more expensive than ‘plain loaves’ – ‘Is ei gaun ti dae the speech in Hawick or wull ei be pan-loaf?’.

pant (pawn, pant) n., arch. a well, trough, public fountain (the ornamental well in Selkirk Market Place is still called the ‘Pant Well’).

Panter (pawn-tur) n. George (15th/16th C.) appears to have been appointed Rector of Minto in 1512. He was probably related to Alexander Panter, Vicar of Carstairs at about the same time.

the Pant Well (thu-pawn-wel) n., arch. former water supply at the baker’s shop (No. 25) corner of the south side of the Howegate, by the old entrance to St. Mary’s Church. It was constructed by piping spring water from further outside Town (perhaps the Schidder Springs), at the instigation of the Council in 1783. It was a freestone construction with a covering. It is probably the ‘West Pant-Well of Hawick’ mentioned in a court case of 1829 (‘pan’ suggests a roof or covering, as in the later ‘Pant Well’ of Selkirk’s Market Square).

pape (pap) n., arch. a pip, dried fruit stone, particularly from a cherry, formerly used in children’s games – ‘... the dyed yins was worth mair is the customary chant of all stall-holders and promoters of side-shows was ‘A pape a go! A pape a go! Every time you do it, a pape and another go!’ [Scotsman, 1955].

pape-a-go (pā-pu-gō) n., arch. a summer and autumn children’s game in which cherry stones were used as tokens in paying for turns at various funfair-type games – ‘oo’re playin pape-a-go’, ‘An’ the fee for a keek Was, of course, pape-a-go’[??], ‘Pape a Go, as I remember it, was a seasonal amusement like tops or books ...The standard unit was one pip (pronounced ‘pape’) ... and the customary chant of all stall-holders and promoters of side-shows was ‘A pape a go! A pape a go! Every time you do it, a pape and another go!’ [Scotsman, 1955].

the paper train (thu-pā-pur-trān) n. popular name for the express train from Edinburgh Waverley, carrying the evening sports editions of the Saturday newspapers (the ‘pink’ and ‘green’ papers). It typically left at 5.54 p.m. and reached Hawick around 7.20 p.m. – ‘At easter time oor eggs oo’d dye Oo heard the paper train gaun bye ...’ [IWL].

pap-o-the-hass (pawp-o-thu-haws) n., arch. the uvula – ‘... an ma paap-o-the-hass is yookin ti let oot some richt, guid, braid Haakick’ [ECS], erroneously applied to the Adam’s apple, a natural feature suggestive of a nipple, particularly in the place name in Southdean Parish (there are alternative spellings).

paraphrases (paw-ru-frā-zeez) n., pl., arch. collection of metrical versions of passages from the Bible adopted in 1781, intended to be sung, and usually printed at the end of the Scottish Bible – ‘A still stronger dislike was felt in some districts of the country to the introduction of the paraphrases in public worship’ [RJR].

parishin (paw-ri-shin) n., arch. a parish, body of parishioners – ‘Ane tryell and valuatioune of the lands within the parochine of Hawik ...’ [PR1627], ‘... and then to come down before the parochine and ask for her forgiveness for that slander’ [Ash1635], ‘The whilk day being appointed for the admission of Mr Henry Elliot to the function of the ministrie, at the parochin kirke of Bedroule ...’ [Bed1640], ‘The upper end of the parishion of Hassendean’ [BR1658], ‘The particular valuations of the particular rowmes of ye said parochine’ [BR] (there are many spelling variants, e.g. ‘parochin’; cf. the older paroche and the more recent parish).

Paris press (paw-ris-pres) n. a machine in the knitwear industry used to steam-blast and vacuum-dry garments on an adjustable metal body, replacing the use of the ‘boardin-oose’ – ‘A work on the Paris press’, ‘How interesting, do you commute weekly?’.

Park (pawrk) n. former tower on the east bank of the Hermitage Water, somewhere near Redheugh in Liddesdale, once a stronghold of the Elliots. The precise location is uncertain, but a recent claim (apparently through dowsing!) puts it just opposite Redheugh farm. It is probably the ‘Parkis de Casteltoun’ listed in the Liddesdale rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 4 merks. It was later distinguished from the more important lands of ‘Copshaw Park’ through the designation ‘Little Park’; it thus appears in the 1694 Hearth Tax records, with William Scott as tenant. The farm stead was combined with the farm of Possholm on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; there it is shown as an enclosed piece of land and house near the Hermitage Water, a bit to the south-east of Redheugh (it is marked on Gordon’s map c. 1650, as ‘Parck’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Little Park’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it must be related to a former hunting or agricultural enclosure; note that it is easily confused with the other ‘Park’ further south, close to the modern Newcastleton; see also Little Park).

Park (pawrk) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, close to the modern Newcastleton, also known as ‘Copshaw Park’. It is easily confused with lands of the same name, also called ‘Castleton Park’, which lay to the north, on the Hermitage Water. The original location has probably been obliterated by Newcastleton village, but on modern maps Park Hill, reaching a height of 258 m lies to the west of the village. In the rental roll of 1541 it is valued at 13 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Simon Elliot. ‘Ryche Elliot of the Park’ was recorded in 1548. ‘Jock o the Park’, also known as ‘Little Jock Elliot’, subject of a Border ballad, was said to be the man who wounded the Earl of Bothwell in 1566, causing Mary Queen of Scots to take her famous ride to Hermitage Castle. His tower may have stood where Newcastleton railway station was built. ‘Rowie’ or ‘Robin’ of the Park is recorded in 1578 and 1581. ‘Sym Elliott of the Park’, ‘James Rowe in the Park’ and ‘Archibald Elliott of the Park’ are further recorded in 1581. Airie, ‘Scot’s Hob’s Jock’ and ‘Rowie’s John’ of the Park are listed in 1584. ‘Young Archie of the Park’ occurs in 1599, James Scott possessed ‘Parke callit Copshaholme’ in 1632 and ‘Rollie, called Park’ is recorded in the 1660s. Walter Scott was tenant there in 1694, and John Scoon also had his blacksmith’s there at that time. This is probably the Park where John Elliot was recorded as farmer in 1786–92 – ‘Ma kinsmen are true, an’ brawlie, At glint o’ an enemie, Round Park’s auld Turrets they rally, An’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T] (also called ‘the Park’, it is ‘Park’ in 1541 and ‘Parke’ in 1583; it is recorded on Stobie’s 1770 map; see also Copshaw and Copshaw Park).

Park (pawrk, pärk) n. Andrew (b.1815) son of shepherd William, he was born in Inverness-shire, one of 13 children, and grew up in the Hawick area. In 1851 he was a ‘Wool Carder’, living at ‘Upper Lynnwood’ (probably Lynnwood Cottages). He was also said to have worked as a foreman in a large woollen mill, was a great reader, naturalist and inventor. In 1857 he presented to the Museum some buckles worn by Mungo Park on his first journey to Africa (suggesting he was a relative). The Archaeological Society also purchased from him a stuffed golden eagle. He became a factory superintendent in Hawick before emigrating to Andes, Delaware County, New York in 1857 with his wife and eight of their children. In 1849 he married Sophia Milligan (1819–79) and they had 11 children, 9 born in Hawick: George (b.1839); William R. (b.1841); Jane (b.1843), who married Charles Mallock; Rev. Thomas (b.1845), minister at Allegheny City, Pennsylvania; Janet (b.1847), who married Charles Wheeler; David Henry (b.1850); Andrew (1852–1910); Isabella David (18th C.) tenant farmer at East Buccleuch until about 1800. David Scott (b.1806/7) brother of Andrew and son of shepherd William and Janet Main from Inverness. He was born at Abertarff, near Inverness, but grew up in Hawick. The family were probably related to Mungo the explorer. He was a grocer and spirit dealer, as well as draper and toy merchant at 19 High Street. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a grocer, flint glass dealer, toy dealer and draper on the High Street. He was one of the first deacons at Hawick Free Kirk from 1844. His wife Isabella was a daughter of a French prisoner of war called Cabourne, and a sister of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson; she died in 1866. His children included: Helen (b.1831), who married Walter Scott; William (1833–97), who was unmarried and a draper’s assistant; Janet Georgina (1835–1905), who married Thomas Morton; John Scott Douglas (1837–1906) also a draper; Jane Maria Paterson Blake (1839–1904), who died in Hawick; Isabella (b.1842), probably died young; David Scott (1844–1924), who died in Devon; Agnes Isabella Jardine (b.1848), who married Draper John Forbes; and Robert Andrew Scott (1851–1903), who died in Sunderland. David Henry (1850–1910) born in Hawick, son of Andrew and Sophia Milligan (sister of Robert Milligan). The family emigrated to America in 1857, where he ran a farm implements business with his brother and then moved into real estate, finally becoming a prominent citizen in the community of Carroll in Iowa. He helped build the town there, and was instrumental in erecting the town’s Masonic temple. He married Edith C. Vette and had 3 daughters. Hercules (16th/17th C.) one of a number of men fined in 1609 for harassing and threatening Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He is referred to as ‘alias callit Will the Bastart’, and some of his accomplices included Armstrongs of Kinmont. James (b.1813/4) from Morebattle, he was a shoemaker in Denholm. His business was on Main Street. His wife was Margaret, from Bowden Parish. Their children included Agnes, Thomas, James and Mary. John E. (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was Cornet in 1825. Also in 1825 he was listed as a grocer on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. John (19th/20th C.) worker at Pesco’s and rugby player with Hawick R.F.C. He played as a forward for the Greens in 1904/5 and was Club President 1935–38. Joseph (b.1808/9) born at Clintmains in Berwickshire, he was a shoemaker in Lilliesleaf. In 1851 he was on the south side of Main Street and employed 2 men. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Thomas, Walter, Robert, James, Adam, David, Elizabeth and John. Mary (18th/19th C.) recorded along with Thomas Brydon as owner of 2 horses at Hoscoteshiel on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Mungo (1771–1806) famous African explorer, born at Foulshiels, near Selkirk, the 7th child of a tenant farmer, also Mungo. At one time he tried to set up as a medical practitioner in Hawick, but apparently found it more taxing than darkest Africa. He apprenticed to a surgeon in Selkirk, then went to Africa in 1795, returning again in 1805, when he drowned at Boussa on an ill-fated expedition to find the source of the the Niger. There is a statue of him in Selkirk, and the ruins of his cottage still exist. An ornament from the grate out of the house where he was born is in the Museum. And buckles worn by him on his first African journey were donated to the Museum in 1857. Thomas (19th C.) farmer at Little Cote, Cavers Parish. He was one of the Tory supporters victimised at the ‘Tully’s Mill’ election riot of 1837. Thomas (b.1845) son of Andrew, he was born in Hawick, moved to America at age 13 and worked on a farm, before becoming a minister at Walton, New York. Walter (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (d.1809) resident of Wolfcleuchhead. He married Ann Harkness in Robertson in 1762 and their children included Isobel (b.1763), Helen (b.1764), Isobel (again, b.1766), William (b.1767), John (b.1769), Helen (b.1764), Janet (b.1771), John (b.1773), and Mary (b.1775) and James (b.1779). In 1763 he is recorded as ‘younger’, suggesting he was son of another William. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish, where he was ‘fromolfcleuch head’. William (c.1780–1844) shepherd, born in Inverness, he came to Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1798 he married Janet Main. Their children included: John (b.c.1801); James (b.c.1803); David Scott (b.c.1805), merchant in Hawick; Andrew (b.1806), who must have died young; Thomas (b.1808); Robert (b.1811); Andrew (b.1815), who married Sophia Milligan and emigrated to the U.S.; William (b.c.1820); Jane.
or Janet (b.c.1826); and several other daughters. Most of the family returned to the Highlands, but David and Andrew remained. William (b.1788) born at Crooks in Westerkirk Parish, son of William, who was killed in Grenada. He worked from an early age as a cow-herd, later becoming ‘minister’s man’ to Rev. Dr. Brown of Eskdalemuir. He later rented the farm of Holmains in Dalton Parish, and spent more time contributing poetry to newspapers. He became editor of the Dumfries and Galloway Standard, but died shortly afterwards. He published ‘The Vale of the Esk and Other Poems’ (1833). William (19th C.) hairdresser who was one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremony Committee in 1887. He was also a Bailie, and acted as judge for the Cornet’s Races. He was first appointed to the Race Committee in 1879 and later became its Chairman. His father was toy merchant David S. William (1833-{97}) son of David S. and Isabella Cabourne. He was a draper who succeeded Anthony Dodds as Registrar for Hawick in the 1880s. His office was at 19 High Street. William (b.c.1837) son of James and Ann and brother of frame-worker Thomas. He is listed as ‘Disability: Imb cil’ at 26 Loan in the 1861 census, and is probably the ‘Wullie Pairk’ mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’. William (19th/20th C.) bank manager. He married Agnes, daughter of farmer James Henderson. William (?- ) O.B.E., son of John, who was a director at Peter Scott’s. He was educated at Hawick High School, before going to university and then joining the staff of the National Library of Scotland. He eventually became Keeper of Manuscripts there. He remained a keen Common Riding supporter, being a member of the Mosstroopers’ Club as well as serving as President of the Callants’ Club in 1956. In 1954 he wrote the book ‘The First Fifty Years of the Hawick Callants’ Club, A Short History’. He married May, 2nd daughter of Robert Wilson from Braemar Knitwear.

Park (pawrk) n. a field, agricultural enclosure, ‘inby’ land on a hill farm, a hunting enclosure – ‘The parks are ribbed wi’ meltin’ snaw And the hills are derrk wi’ rain’ [DH] (see also pairk and perk; the word is used in one of these older meanings in several local place names, e.g. Branxholme Park, Hermitage Park, Park, Cottage Park and specific fields).

the Park (thu-pawrk) n. Wilton Lodge Park, consisting of 107 acres (43 hectares) around the banks of the Teviot at the southern end of Hawick. The house and estate were caslled Langlands until 1790. The grounds contain walks, the Museum, the Walled Gardens, sports fields, and recreational facilities. The land was purchased for £14,000 by the Town Council in 1889, and was fortunately left as a park, to be enjoyed by generations of Teries. A map of the estate was drawn up in 1890. Several structures in the Park, including the gate lodge and war memorials are grade C listed buildings. A major regeneration project in 2015-18 (paid for by the Heritage Lottery Fund) saw a new bandstand erected, the Laurie and henderson Shelters renovated, the Walled Gardens renewed, a new gallery in the Museum opened, an additional footbridge constructed, the playground modernised, the fountain restored and the gates replaced – ‘A love ti walk be Teviotside And sei its ripplin witters glide Doon throwe the Park at eventide In Hawick ma Border hame’ [IWL].

Park, Hermitage Park, Park, Cottage Park and Parkhead are derk wi’ rain’ [DH] (see also the Park Dyke (thu-pawrk-dik) n. former name for a small stream or ditch forming part of the boundary of Templehall and Brewlands, described in a document of 1567 (written ‘the parkdyik’ in 1567 and ‘the park dike’ in 1604). Parker (pawr-kur) n. Jane (19th C.) one of the 4 operators of the first power looms to arrive in Hawick, at Dicksons & Laings in 1830. Roger (19th C.) gamekeeper at Stobs Castle about 1875, when he ‘winged’ a buzzard on the estate. He was also gamekeeper on the Branxholme estate. He married Margaret Beatson in Hawick in 1863. Their children included: Margaret (b.1867), who married James Aitkin Henderson; Mary (b.1869); and Elizabeth (b.1872).

Park Grove (pawrk-gröv) n. road of private houses near Wilton Dean, built in the 1990s on part of the former allotments. Parkhead (pawrk-beed) n. local name used for Synton Parkhead, as marked on Ainslie’s 1773...

map. Note that there are several other places of the same name.

Parkheid (pawrk-heed) n. area at the top of the Borthwickbrae estate, now marked by Parkhead Plantation. Andrew Davidson was living there in 1763. It is ‘Park Heads’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map (see also Borthwickbrae Parkheid).

Parkheid (pawrk-heed) n. name used locally for Ormiston Parkhead.

Parkheid (pawrk-heed) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Winnington. It was among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redleugh in 1622. The name was still recorded in the late 17th century.

Parkheid (pawrk-heed) n. former farmstead to the south of Todrig, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map.

Parkheid Burn (pawrk-heed-burn) n. stream in Ashkirk Parish, running past Synton parkhead and meeting the Ale Water near Synton Mill.

Park Hill (pawrk-hil) n. hill to the west of Newcastleton, reaching a height of 258m, and connecting with Bedda Hill to the north. The area is rich in archaeological evidence, with 4 groups of buildings within enclosures on the eastern side, an enclosure near the summit and boundary banks all around. However, some of this has been obliterated by the golf course landscaping.

Parkhill (pawrk-hil) n. farm between Chisholme and the Snoot. It is reached either via Chisholme House or by a grassy track leading up from near the Snoot Kirk. It was valued in 1627, paying ‘100 lb., vicarage 20 lb.’, listed along with Chisholme and Lairhope. It was valued at £200 in 1643, when owned by Walter Chisholme. There were 16 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. Along with much of neighbouring area it was transferred from Hawick Parish to Roberton in 1689/90. Around this time it was separately East and West Parkhill. The lands were held by the Chisholmes from at least the early 15th century until the 19th; presumably younger sons of the Laird of Chisholme were at one time given the lands, followed by their descendants. In 1649 Robert Chisholme in Chisholme Mill inherited the eastern lands from his father William, who is described as ‘portioner of Parkhill’. Walter Turnbull, John Turnbull and Walter Miller were living there in 1743. William Scott was there in 1762, George White in 1763, and William Scott in 1773 and 1775. Robert Elliot and Robert Scott were at ‘Parkhill westei’ in 1774. William Scott (who died about 1820) was also tenant there. The hill there reaches 233m, with Wester Park Hill (actually to the south-east) reaching 303m (it is on a parish map of 1650, and is marked ‘Parkhill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Parkhills’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Parkhillhaugh (pawrk-hil-hawf) n. flat land around the Borthwick north of Parkhill farm. William Gledstains was living there with his family in the 1820s. John Elliot and his family were living there in 1841 and 1851. The Snoot Kirk was built there in the 1840s.

the Parkhill Loft (thu-pawrk-hil-loft) n. former loft in the old St. Mary’s Kirk, erected by Chisholme of Parkhill when that estate was within Hawick Parish, i.e. before 1689. It is possible that this became known by a different name after Robertson Parish was created. This gallery was replaced in the new church, built around 1763.

Parkhooses see Packhooses

the Park Kirk (thu-pawrk-kirk) n. name used formerly for the church in Newcastle that had been the Free Kirk. The name distinguished it from the other Church of Scotland establishments in the village, called ‘the South Church’ and ‘Castleton Church’.

Park o Buss (pawrk-ö-bus) n. former name for Park in Ewesdale.

Park-quarter (pawrk-kwar-tur) n. former name for lands in Belses. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Kerr in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew and when inherited by John, nephew of Sir Thomas in 1684. It is listed separately from Peel-quarter, as well as Millrig-quarter and Myre-quarter).

Parks League Cricket (pawrks-leeg-kri-ki’) n. amateur cricketing league played in the summer at Wilton Lodge Park from about the early 1950s. There were matches between teams from various factories and trades.

Park Street (pawrk-stree’) n. street in the Terraces, between Loch Park Road and Twirlees Road, built around 1879 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company and named in 1880 after Loch Park.

It was built by Hawick Working Men’s Building Society and named in 1884 after Loch Park.

Parkview (pawrk-vew) n. Victorian villa on Buccleuch Road, built in 1844 as the new Manse for the Parish Kirk. It can be seen in the 1847 painting ‘Hawick From Wilton Lodge’. Recently it has been renamed ‘Dunira’.

Park View (pawrk-vew) n. street built on the site of the old allotments between the Park and the Dean in the 1990s?.

Parlance (pawr-làn) n. Rev. James (1806/7–1880) from Helensburgh, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1851. He was minister of the West U.P. (‘Green’) Church from 1857, having been translated from Greyfriars in Glasgow. He was ordained as colleague and successor to Andrew Rodgie and took over following his predecessors death in 1860. He remained as minister in Hawick until 1869, when he moved to Burntisland.

parlique (par-li-kyoo) n., arch. the peroration at the end of a discourse, the discourse itself (noted by J. Jamieson).

parroch (pa-rø-she) n., arch. a parish – ‘...executoris or assignais in the parroche kirk of Hawic ...’ [SB1470].

the Parochial Board (thu-pu-rø-ke-ul-börd) n. Hawick Parochial Board was in charge of affairs relating to the Poor Laws, welfare for the sick, aged and disabled, and maintenance of hospitals and cemeteries. It ran soup kitchens as well as the poor-house. Parochial Boards were set up in towns in 1845 following the Poor Law Amendment (Scotland) Act, and were partly replaced by Parish Councils in 1894.

parrit (pawr-ri) n., arch. a parrot (note the pronunciation).

parritch (pawr-rich, -reech) n., arch. porridge – ‘I canna thole extravangae even in pritch makin’, that I canna’ [JEDM] (now more often porritch).

parrock (pawr-rok) n., arch. a paddock, enclosed field, an enclosure used for trying to get a ewe to take another’s lamb, v. to enclose, confine, particularly said of a ewe and lamb (from Middle English).

parrockit (pawr-ro-kee’, -ki’) adj., pp., arch. enclosed, confined, especially said of a ewe placed with a lamb – ‘... parrockit in ov a ceetic, mang reekin lums an chowkin smuists’ [ECS].

particate (par-ti-ki’) n., arch. a parcel of land, specifically a lot in a burgh. The area was typically equal to $\frac{1}{4}$ acre or a Scots rood, corresponding to 13,690 square feet. However, in a town the lands were sometimes divided into lots that were around 20 feet across at the main street and extended back considerably; this was approximately the case in Hawick. According to the 1537 charter, holders of land in Hawick had to annually give 5 pennies to the Baron, in 2 installments at Whitsunday and Martinmas, for each particate. It was traditionally said that the owners had to perform this duty in person until the Baron grew tired of being bothered and so at some point relieved them of the need to make future payments. The Land Tax Rolls of 1663 list ‘The Particats of Hawick’ being valued at £97 10s 8d (and just £97 in 1678). It was stated (in a legal opinion regarding tenure in Hawick) that there were approximately 124 particates in 1667. The ‘particate men’ were explicitly excused from attending the Baron’s Michaelmas Head Court in 1670 because of the bad state of the crops. In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish it is recorded that apart from the major landowners, the Proprietors of Particats in Hawick’ had land valued at £97. At the time of the Division of the Common, there were approximately 170 proprietors of particates in the Town. Parts of the ‘Particat Lands of Hawick’ are still referred to in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

– ‘The said Pew was allocat to Robert Deanes, particat man of the lands of Hawick’ [PR1715], ‘If the particate men, mentioned in the Charter, had a right of property in the Common, and, as the suspenders allege, the whole property, it would have been most unjust to have authorised a lease of any part of it, without allowing them at least a share in the rents’ [JW] (the word corresponds to the Latin ‘particata’, related to ‘pertica’, meaning a measuring rod, a ‘perch’, or the area of land measured with it; the word appears to have been used more commonly in the Hawick area than elsewhere).

particuler (par-ti-ku-lur) adj. particular – ‘Aw ken the wee bit acknowledge ment was meant for mei in particular ca ise . . . ’ [BW1978] (note that the 3rd syllable has a u sound, rather than the English yoo).

Paschel (pawsh) n., arch. Easter. Passion. This was one of the 3 times a year that the head courts would meet around the 16th century, specifically the 2nd Tuesday after Easter (recorded in the Circuit Court of 1622).

Hawick were made aware By the tuck o’ Tufty’s drum’ [JCG].

Path Head School (path-hed-skool) n. former school in the town of MacGregor, on the Trans-Canada Highway, just west of Winnipeg, Manitoba. The school was named after the ‘Pethheid’ in Wilton, which was the birthplace of Robert Lamb, the farmer from Hawick who gave the land for the school. The school ran from 1892 until 1965 and a memorial cairn was erected on the site in 1987.

Pathheid see Pethheid

Pathheid (pawth-heed) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish, a little to the north of the modern Newcastleton. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, just south of Blackburnfoot. Thomas Mathison was there in the early 1800s.

Pathheid (pawth-heed) n. former farmstead in Ewesdale, near Sorbie. John Graham and family were there in 1841.

patience (pā-šins) n., pl. patience, treated as a plural – ‘Hei has mony patience’ [GW], ‘Owre few patience’ [GW].

Paton (pā-in) n. Charles (1752/3–1818) teacher of a school in Callander, he was licensed to preach by Deer Presbytery in 1779. The following year he became preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ and stayed until about 1785 (when James Sanson took over). He became minister at Ettrick in 1791 and remained there until he died (of a stroke). His native tongue was Gaelic, and it is said that he was never a very popular preacher, since he still had to translate his thoughts into English. Maj. James of Crailing (b.1831) son of John, his mother being an Elliot. He was educated in Edinburgh and rode on the last journey of the coach ‘Chevy Chase’ back to the Borders. He joined the Kings Own regiment in 1850 and retired from the army in 1871, having been decorated for service in the Crimean War and India. Back home he was a Major in the Border Rifle volunteers and later commander. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He succeeded his father to the Crailing estate in 1889. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, served on the county council and was also Deputy Lieutenant. In 1863 he married the eldest daughter of J.C. Lamb of Ryton and his eldest son was John. Walter (b.1817/8) from Crailing, he was a baker at 78 High Street. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Ann and they had a daughter Beatrix. He was probably deceased by 1861, when his wife and children were living with his wife’s cousin Jane Grieve at the Crown Inn. Walter (19th C.) innkeeper at 78 High Street in 1875.

Patonhaugh (pā-in-hawch) n. former farm in Southdean Parish, just over on the south side of the Jed Water to the south of Edgerston Rig (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Patrick (pa-reek) n. Alexander Bonthorn (1858/9–1937) manager at tweed manufacturers Robert Noble & Co. He married Margaret, daughter of commission agent James Hunter, and she died in 1933, aged 75. Their children were Alexander (minister), James (of New York), and Lieut. John Bonthorn (of the K.O.S.B., killed at Gallipoli). His wife was one of those from Hawick who travelled to visit Gallipoli in 1926. Alexander (1887/8–1941) eldest son of Alexander Bonthorn. He was educated at Durham University and spent almost 20 years as Chaplain to H.M. Forces in India. He was then Episcopalian minister at Newton Ferrers, Plymouth, where he died.

Patrick Cunningham’s Lands (pa-reek-ku-ning-lumz-lawndz) n. former name for lands within Hawick Parish. They were formerly held by the Parish Minister, but must have been given heritably, since they were later held by his descendants. The lands may have originally been given to Rev. Robert Cunningham by Scott of Buccleuch, and then passed to his son Patrick (1636–c.1706), who was a Burgess of Hawick, becoming minister at Kirkton; he was often referred to as ‘Mr.’, a designation which was also applied to the lands. Rev. Robert Cunningham (c.1668–1722) was probably a son of Patrick, and held the positions of minister in Wilton and then in Hawick. Another Patrick, recorded owning some of the same lands in Hawick, may have been his son. It was stated in 1767 that part of the lands were then partly in the hands of Bailie Turnbull. They were still referred to as ‘Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands in Hawick’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when several parts were valued at more than £75, including one piece called ‘Allers Garden’ (which was presumably near Allars Bank). The lands may not have been contiguous pieces, and at least some of them lay within the East Mains of Hawick. Based on who owned some of the lands later, it included part of what was developed as Buccleuch Street.

Patrick of Albania (pa-reek-ov-awl-hā-neea) n. Parson of Kirkton, recorded as witness to Hawick’s first known sasine in 1453. ‘Albania’ may be Albany perhaps. A ‘Patrick McNawany, parson of Kirkton’ was witness to a charter of Archibald Earl Douglas in 1438; it is possible this was the same man, although there are other Kirktons in Scotland.

the Patriotic Memorial \((\text{thu-p'\-ree-o'\-eek-mu-mo-ree-ul})\) \(n\). another name for the Boer War Memorial.

the Patriots \((\text{thu-p'\-ree-its})\) \(n\). name used by a group of townspeople, led by Walter Freeman, who objected to the way that the Common was managed by the Council and Bailies, and in particular the agreement made to give away one third of the land. The supporters of Freeman were 205 in number, mostly Burgesses without property. They organised themselves to oppose all actions regarding the Common in the late 1770s, including letting a small part (to clear the Town's legal debts); they appointed their own Town Herd, to pasture all of the Common, including the part recently let. At an organisational meeting Freeman declared himself to be Chief Magistrate, whereupon he was imprisoned. The group also threatened the Bailies and Councillors, as well as the party who came to actually divide the Common in 1777. In 1778 they took the Council and Bailies to court, claiming they had failed to properly manage affairs on behalf of the Burgesses, leading to the Division of the Common. They particularly complained about how the Bailies were elected and about the actions of the present Bailies, who, they claimed, managed the business of the Town for their own ends. The Council led a counter action, and it was ultimately found in 1781 that they had the right to let the Common. The decision of the Court of Session also fixed the number of members of the Council at 31.

patten \((\text{paw'-in, pa-ten})\) \(n\), arch. a wooden clog worn to raise the feet out of mud, particularly a wooden sole with an iron frame, which tied on to a shoe – ‘The ladies had in wet weather to walk with pattens, there being neither cabs nor carriages . . . ’ [RM]. The Museum has a pair from around 1800 which belonged to Mrs. Johnstone Reid of Wilton Lodge.

patter \((\text{paw'-ur})\) \(n\). words used in an attempt to impress, sell something etc., repartee, badinage – ‘deh gie’s yer patter’, ‘I was giving my patter in front of the lion’s cage, and . . . ’[RB].

pawkie (paw-kee) adj., arch. having a down-to-earth humorous outlook, roguish, waggish, wily, sly, crafty, resourceful, shrewd, knowing – ‘Many a pawky trick he played upon the men of the law by field and river’ [RM], ‘Syne wi’ cooitin’ and coasin’, sae paunky and slee...’ [JT], ‘Willie was shy, and Willie was pawky, Willie was tall, and Willie was gawky’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘pawky’ and ‘pauky’).

Pawkie Paiterson (paw-kee-pā-tur-sin, pi’-ur-sin) n. song with words generally attributed to John Ballantyne (although it has also been suggested that it was written by Dr. John Douglas). He basically adapted a traditional Northumberland song, ‘Robin Spraggon’s Old Grey Mare’, into Hawick dialect and with local characters. The original words related to the district of Felton in Northumberland, and in 1888 were said to have been written more than a century before. The antiquity of the tune is unknown, but it has much in common with Border (or Northumbrian) pipe music, although it bears little resemblance to the tune of ‘Robin Spraggon’s Old Grey Mare’ (or its antecedent ‘Hey! boys, up go we!’ published in 1646). This makes the Hawick song quite unique compared with its Northumbrian inspiration. It was recorded being sung at the first ceremonial Colour Bussing of 1887 (by William Wilson), but is certainly much older. The characters mentioned in the song place it around the 1830s or 1840s. The words were not formally written down until long after it had become a favourite, and so there are versions that differ in minor details. An early version appears in Frank Hogg’s Transactions article in 1873. The tune is one of those played by the Drums and Fifes during the Common Riding. It is one of the few Hawick songs in compound time. It has been popular at Colour Bussings since the end of the 19th century.

Pawkie Paiterson (paw-kee-pā-tur-sin) n. general nickname for male members of local Paterson families, presumably derived from the song. There was a real ‘Pawkie Paterson’, Robert Paterson, who lived in the late 18th and early 19th centuries (although he may not even have been the first family member with this nickname), about whom the words of the song were written. His descendants lived near the foot of the Loan and farmed at the Loanhead. It is unclear whether Nellie Harkness was his sister or his niece.

p-Celtic *(pee-kel-tik) n. ancient language spoken throughout Britain before Anglo-Saxon took over. It is distinguished from ‘q-Celtic’, which includes Scots Gaelic, which was never spoken in the Borders. There were probably 4 main dialects, Cornish, Welsh, Cumbric and Pictish, with Cumbric (also sometimes called Northumbrian) being the version spoken around Hawick and in the whole kingdom of Bernicia. Several local place names have probable p-Celtic roots, including names containing ‘pen’ or ‘caer’. Many river names may also be from this era, if not even earlier. There is a possibility that the Hawick slogan ‘Teribus’ comes from a Cumbric phrase.

peaceful *(pees-ful) adj. peaceful – ‘A peaceful an contented mind – The greatest gift that puir mankind ...’ [WP];

pedee (pe-dee) n., arch. a footboy, youth employed as a servant – ‘... taken by some of the pedees of my Lord Airlie’s troops’[BR1685].

Peden (pee-din) n. Rev. Alexander (1626– 86) born in Ayrshire, he became an outlawed Covenanter, preaching in secret for 10 years before being captured, imprisoned on the Bass Rock for 4 years, then sentenced to banishment. He was probably on a ship, bound for the plantations of Virginia in 1678, from which many escaped when berthed in London; there were several local men on the same ship. He then lived for a while in Ireland, but returned to Scotland in his final year. There are ‘Peden’s Pulpits’ all over the Scottish moorland, including on Ruberslaw. In addition Denholm Dean once had a ‘Peden’s Thorn’ and a ‘Peden’s Vale’ and there is a ‘Peden’s Cleuch’ south of Southdean and an old outhouse there was called ‘Peden’s Barn’. On the slopes of Ruberslaw during a conventicle he is supposed to have said ‘O Lord, lap the skirts of thy cloak ower puir auld Sandy’, bringing down a mist that allowed escape from the dragoons – ‘Still on her hillsides round the guarded word Cower noble Peden’s persecuted band: E’en yet, discerning eyes by Melrose see, Becowed, a faith- ful brother, sombre stand’[WL], ‘[WL].

George (1913–64) son of Walter A. He was a butcher in Hawick. He was a regular singer of his father’s song, ‘The Lassie That Works In the Mill’. He was Acting Father to Chuck Whullans in 1948.

George Mitchell (1944/5– ) son of George and Ella. He was educated at Hawick High School and worked for Barrie Knitwear, later becoming Chairman of Bannatynes and Chairman of the Scottish Cashmere Association. He was Cornet in 1967, and celebrated his Jubilee year in 2017, along with his Acting Father and Mother, Chuck and Nan Whullans (probably the first time this has been achieved). His daughter Laura-Jayne was Cornet’s Lass in 2009. John ‘Jock’ (1913– 84) son of Walter A. His recorded rendition of his father’s song ‘The Lassie That Works In the Mill’ saved it for posterity. Thomas (19th C.) President of the Hawick Co-operative Society in the 1870s. Thomas (19th C.) from Hawick, he was a missionary within Britain, being stationed in Cardiff. His son Michael was a member of the Hawick Home Mission. Walter Armstrong (1863–1954) born in Galashiels, but from a Haw- ick family, he worked as a butcher in Hawick. He was a keen horseman and cyclist. He was a member of Lodge St. James 424 and Buccleuch Bowling Club, as well as an elder of East Bank Church. He wrote ‘The Lassie That Works In the Mill’ and would sing it regularly. Exactly when it was written, and whether it was influenced by any other songs, remains unknown. He had sons George and Jock, both of whom also sang his song at local events.

Peden’s Barn (pee-dinz-bawn) n. former name for a barn in Southdean Parish. It is said that the Covenanter Alexander Peden came there in disguise, asking about work, and being set to threshing in the barn, only for the farmer to discover the same man preaching at a nearby conventicle on the Sunday.

Peden’s Pulpit (pee-dinz-pool-pi’) n. natural rocky chasm near the summit of Ruberslaw, used for clandestine sevices of the Covenanters, possibly including Peden. It is said that you can still see where he laid his bible, and a large flat boulder there was used as the communion table. It is a narrow cleft in the rocks, on the south-west side of the summit. A carved hollow in a nearby rock, of unknown original purpose, is said to have been used by the Covenanters for baptisms – ‘... Plewed rigs an planteens ... an Peden’s Poo- pit buin maist’[ECS], ‘Look back on majestic Ruberslaw The ghost o’ covenantin’ men Lookin’ doon frae Peden’s Pulpit That’s high above the fen’[AY].

Peden’s Stane (pee-dinz-stán) n. large stone in an area of moorland between the Hermitage Water and Roan Fell, near the head of one of the streams that makes up Ralton Burn. It is on land belonging to Foulshiels farm. The rock is about 2½ feet high and inscribed with ‘For Auld Lang Syne AD 1824’ to commemorate a place where it is said that Alexander Peden preached.

Peden’s Vale (pee-dinz-väl) n. former name for a deep glen in Denholm Dean Burn, said to be flower-clad in summer. It is about 400 yards below the ruined cottage. It was used for secret Covenanters’ sermons, and according to tradition Peden himself once hid there.

the Pedlar’s Field (thu-ped-lurz-feeld) n. cornfield situated where Ladylaw Place was built in the 1840s (in the middle of the north side of 2024 what is now Princes Street). The entrance gate was called ‘the Pether’s Yett’.

Peebles (pee-bulz) n. town built in the Tweed valley on the Eddleston Water. It is one of Scotland’s royal and ancient burghs, becoming a Royal Burgh in 1367. It was formerly the county town of Peeblesshire, and headquarters for Tweeddale District Council. There has been a bridge across the Tweed there since at least 1470. The town was destroyed by Hertford’s men in 1545 and again in 1547. It once had a defensive wall around the old town, on the right bank of the Eddleston. It was a major centre for brewing and wool production, but now focuses on tourism. St. Mungo’s Well there is supposed to be connected with a 6th century visit. Peebles Castle, built by David I, was long a royal residence, but a ruin by the end of the 17th century, and nothing of it now remains. However, the visible ruins of the Cross Kirk include part of a 13th century friary; this was the burial place of the chiefs of the Scotts until the end of the 15th century. Peebles Hotel Hydro, built 1878–81, and rebuilt 1905–07 after a fire, is a dominating feature. The Mercat Cross contains part of the 17th century original. The Town House dates from 1753, and Chambers’ Institution, built mainly in 1859, has long served as a cultural centre. Peebles Beltane Week at the end of June (focussed on the Saturday closest to Midsummer) was begun in 1897, reinstating the Riding of the Marches and linking it with the ancient Beltane Fair. It includes a ceremony at Neidpath Castle (with ceremonial Wardens of the Cross Kirk and of Neidpath Castle) and the dancing of the Cornet’s Reel in the High Street. The Cornet and Beltane Queen use accoutrements dating from the 1920s Population (1991) 7,056 (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh for ‘temporary huts’).

Peebles (pee-bulz) n. James of that Ilk (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobum de Paiblis’ in 1437 when he was one of 2 ‘procurators’ for Alexander of Weens when he resigned his lands of Weens (probably Weensland) into the hands of the Baron of Hawick.

Peedlum (peed-lum) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the late 19th century – ‘Poodge and Peedlum gang doon the toon, Sly Tammy and Kittlin’ Soup gung up; There’s Paddy Barratt and Jamie Broon, And there’s Dick Newall and Johnny Whup’ [HI].

1868 (it was ‘Peall’ in 1694, ‘Pill’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and also ‘Pill’ in the 1748 Window Tax Roll).

peel-an-eat (peel-an-cee’ n., arch. a potato boiled in its jacket, adj. said of potatoes boiled in their jackets, also applied to a delicate or sickly person (noted by E.C. Smith).)

Peel-an-Eat (peel-an-ce’) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

Peelbrae (peel-brä) n. former farm, presumably lying below Peelbraehope and near to the ‘Peel Brae’, which is south-east of Priesthaugh, and on the slopes of ‘Muckle Knowe’. The remains of a peel tower there explains the name. Before 1498 the lands were owned by the Elliot of Redheugh and referred to as ‘Tillieleeehope’ or ‘Tilloly’. They were probably owned (or leased) by Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill in the mid-16th century. Robert Elliot of Redheugh served as cautioner for the residents of the lands there in 1574. There were Wigholms there in the early 17th century. It formed part of the extensive Buccleuch lands of Ringwoodfield in a 1660 document, where it is also said to be called ‘Tillieleeehope’. William Scott, John Dalgleish and John Telfer were listed there in 1694. The farm was joined to that of Priesthaugh in 1707 and was rented from the Buccleuch Estates by Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill in 1741. The farm was surveyed in 1718 and a plan exists. At that time it consisted of 175 acres and was bounded by Dodburn, Priesthaugh and Brough (it is ‘Peilbra’ and ‘Peilbray’ in 1574, ‘Peilbraë’ in 1612 and 1660, ‘Pealbrea’ in 1694 and ‘Peilbrae’ in 1714; the element ‘peil’ could refer to a ditch, namely the Catrail).

Peel Brae (peel-brä) n. slope on the west side of Muckle Knowe, lying on the east side of the Priesthaugh Burn. The name is surely related to the former lands of Peelbrae, and perhaps to the pele-house, which is to the north-east. There is a cairn there.

Peelbraehope (peel-brä-höp) n. former farmstead up in the hills east of Priesthaugh, in the headwaters of the Penchrise Burn. There is now nothing left of the house, but a cairn marks the spot, with a plaque commemorating its long inhabitation by the Elliotics, and stating that it was once an important meeting point on the drove road from Teviotdale to Liddesdale. Thomas Nichol was tenant in ‘Peelbraehophead’ in 1694. There was a dispute between Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs and Ann, Duches of Buccleuch, resulting in the boundary with Penchrise being fixed in 1718.

This is described in the survey of Buccleuch estates carried out in that year, when it consisted of 965 acres and was bounded by Priesthaugh and Dod on the west and lands owned by Elliot of Stobs to the south, east and north. Sir Gilbert leased the lands from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. The Nichol family were there in the 19th century and J. Armstrong was recorded there in 1868. In the late 19th century it was home of a family of Elliotics, with 22 children born to 2 mothers; about 200 descendants recently gathered in New Zealand. The farmstead was vacated in 1943 when it became part of the firing range for Stobs Camp. The Tinlee Stone is just to the south and a section of the Catrail (the part nearest to Hawick) passes to the north – ‘The soft breeze blown owre Peelbraehope Seems murmuring ‘Amen!’’ [WL] (also written ‘Peelbrae Hope’, it is ‘Peilbraehope’ in 1718).

Peel Burn (peel-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, running roughly east, past the ruins of Mervinslaw Tower, to meet the Jed Water. There is an area of rig lines to the south.

Peel Fell (peel-fed) n. hill on the Border, south-east of Singdean, reaching a height of 602 m, the highest peak for many miles around.

Peel Hospital (peel-hos-pi’-nal) n. hospital near Galashields, serving the Borders for several decades, and being the main hospital for the Hawick area from after WWII to the 1980s. The estate was purchased by Lord Craigmyle in 1939 to build a hospital on, but it became a military one first, consisting of several Nissen huts. Always inadequate, and awkward to get to, eventually a new hospital (the B.G.H.) was constructed at Huntlyburn in the late 1980s.

pee-lee-waw-lee adj. sickly, pale – ‘bei looks gei pee-lee-wallie the day, div ee no hink?’, lacking in strength, lacklustre – ‘that was a pee-lee-wallie performance on the pitch the day’ (also written ‘peeely-wally’).

pen (pen) n., arch. a hill, particularly a pointed conical one – ‘He lorded it wide o’er the Pen o’ Skelfhill’ [HSR] (from the early Cumbric word, being the p-Celtic version of ‘ben’; it occurs in place names, e.g. Penchris Pen and Ettrick Pen, as well as sometimes Skelfhill Pen, the lost placename Penangushope and probably also in Penielheugh).

Penangushope (pen-awng-gis-hop) n. narrow valley through which the Mosspaul Burn flows, a surviving variant of the lost area name Pennango. The lands (along with Cauldcleuch) were granted by William, 1st Earl of Douglas, to the monks of Melrose Abbey about 1358, for masses to be said for Sir William Douglas of Lothian. Sir Alexander de Penangushope was witness to a charter of the lands of Lag, Dumfries in the period 1405–12. The lands of ‘Penangushop’ were included in some leased by Walter Scott of Branxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500, lying within the extensive Lairdship of Ringwoodfield. Robert Elliot (‘Young Robin’) probably held the lands in the mid-16th century. Robert Elliot of Redheugh rented them from Melrose Abbey around 1557; at that time they were valued at £5. They are still recorded as part of Ringwoodfield in 1621, 1634, 1653, 1660 and 1661, although referred to as ‘also called Skelshill (presumably ‘Skelhill’ is meant)’ in 1660. It was recorded as still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1663. The name may not have occurred after the end of the 17th century (it is ‘penangushop’ and ‘penangushope’ in about 1358, ‘Penangushoup’ in 1557, ‘Pennangushop’ in 1564, ‘Penangushope’ in 1574, ‘Pennangushope’ in 1621, ‘Pennangus’ in 1634, ‘Pennangwashop’ in 1653, ‘Pannangushope’ in 1663 and ‘Pannangushop’ in 1693; it is marked as ‘Pannagus hoop’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Penangushope (pen-awng-gis-hop) n. Sir Alexander (14th/15th C.) witness to a charter of the lands of Lag, Dumfries in the period 1405–12. William (14th C.) collector of contributions of the constabulary of Edinburgh according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1360 and 1369. His name is written ‘de Penangishop’. He may be related to the William ‘de Penango’ recorded in 1332 (this surname surely comes from the region in southern Roxburghshire; see also Pennango).

pencell (pen-sul) n., arch. a small flag, pennon, alternative spelling of ‘pensil’. This is the first recorded word for the Flag in the Burgh Records of 17th May 1703 – ‘The said day the Common ry- deing was ordained to be upon Fryday, the twenty eight of May, iiM, viJC. and three yeares, James Scott, called Laird, was voted to cary the pencel’ [BR1703], ‘… the person or persons that was statut and ordained to carry the towne pencil or Colour the day befor being Fryday, the last of May . . .’ [BR1706], ‘… and George Deanes, merchand, was the first that caried the new pencell, standard or colour . . .’ [BR1707] (also spelled ‘pencil’, etc.).

Penchrise (pen-kris) n. farm south of Hawick, reached from there by a rough track. Traditionally the lands are said to have held an ancient chapel, although there is no evidence to support this (and it probably comes from a confusion over the name). The name is also used for the prominent hill ‘Penchrise Pen’, which is nearby. It was part of the lands resigned by Thomas de Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas in 1368. In 1464/5 Thomas Turnbull of Penchrise was witness to a charter of the lands resigned by William Douglas of Cavers and his wife Elizabeth Murray had a charter for the lands in 1512, and there is another Douglas of Cavers deed in 1525. In 1754 it was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty ‘for the cryme of thift in tyme bigane’; this included ‘Mirk Hob’ Elliot. Robert Elliot, ‘Mirk Hob’ was also recorded as tenant in 1576. It was ‘Penchryst’ owned by the Elliots of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and also when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. It was included in the lands of the Elliots of Stobs according to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls. It appears to have been among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. William Elliot was tenant there in 1694. The lands were acquired by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot in the early 18th century and after a dispute with the Buccleuch estates the boundary with Peelbraehope was fixed in 1718. James Reid was there in 1709. Gideon Scott was farmer there in at least 1785–97. In 1841 Alexander Burnet, Henry Scott and their families were living there. A. Linton was recorded there in a directory of 1868. The area around the farm was used for military training between the world wars, with a rifle firing range just to the north-west of the farm buildings – ‘...But the auld gudewife of Penchrise Cam’ in wi’ a shoulder o’ mutton [ES] (a rare local survival of the old Brythonic or p-Celtic ‘pen’, the name may be ‘pen crys’, meaning ‘the hill with the girdle’, perhaps referring to the Iron Age fortifications, although this origin of ‘chrise’ is not at all certain; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Pencress’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Pencrest’; it is ‘penercryc’ in 1368, ‘Pencryse’ in 1464/5, ‘Pentrise’ and ‘Pencrise’ in 1511, ‘Pencrize’ in 1512, ‘Pencryse’ in 1574, ‘Pencryise’ in 1576, ‘Penchryst’ in 1687, transcribed ‘Penchoyst’ in 1692, ‘Pencrize’ in 1694, ‘Panchrist’ in 1695, ‘Penchrist’ in 1709, ‘Pencyrst’ in 1718 and ‘Pencrest’ in 1839).
Penchrise Burn

Penchrise Burn (pen-kri-s-burn) n. stream rising near the Pike and running to the east of Penchrise Pen to join the Slitrig. There is an earth and stone banked enclosure and other banks on a sloping shelf above the Burn, on the eastern side, near Burnt Craig Wood; this could be related to military operations at Stobs Camp. To the west, on the eastern slopes of Penchrise Pen are the remains of a settlement. Further south, also on the west side of the stream are the remains of a homestead, about 25 m in diameter, with a probably hut platform inside, with an entrance on the west and probable old trackway leading to it. Graptolites have been found in the rocks here.

Penchrise Peel (pen-kri-s-peel) n. small farm standing on the opposite side of the Slitrig from Shankend. A Scots baronial type house was built there to J.P. Alison’s design in 1908. The wood around the farm is called Peel Wood.

Penchrise Pen (pen-kri-s-pen) n. hill near Penchrise farm, reaching a height of 439 m (1,439 ft). It contains a triangulation pillar and former military observation post (which blew over in a storm in the 1970s), as well as the remains of several earthworks and the ramparts of a hill-fort. Like several other major peaks in the area, the hill is formed from igneous rocks. The bare cone of rock at the summit is enclosed within 3 ramparts, with entrances to the north-west and north-eat. Within the roughly 105 m by 80 m enclosure are banks and possible hut circles. There is a roughly triangular annex immediately to the west, containing 3 hut circles and another enclosure to the north-east. On the eastern slopes is another earthwork, probably a settlement, measuring about 50 m by 40 m; it has been partly eroded by cultivation, as well as quarrying and has a sheepfold partly on top. On the southern slopes of the hill lie the remains of a settlement, about 50 m by 45 m, as well as a small homestead. The Catrail also crosses to the south of the Pen. The conical shape of the hill makes it easily recognisable over a wide area of the Borders. The training grounds for Stobs Camp stretched all the way to here at one point, with WWI practice trenches being dug on the north-west slopes – ‘...And o’er high hill, and hollow glen, Round Liddle-head, and Penchrise-pen’ [AD], ‘Like a breeze upon the High Street singing down from Penchrise Pen, They waft our weariest worries clean beyond the haunts of men’ [JYH], ‘I’ve felt on top o’ Penchrise The warm sun beekin doun’ [WL] (a curious double use of the ancient p-Celtic root ‘pen’; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Pen hill’ and is ‘Pencrest pen’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the spelling varies, e.g. it is ‘Pencrestpen’ in 1839).

pend (pend) n. a vaulted or arched passageway, especially one leading from a street to a courtyard, an arched walkway – ‘oo bade in a pend off the Howegate’, ‘oo’ve got a lot o pendds bit nane o thum er actually caaed that officially’ [IWL], ‘A’m shair ilka corner and gairden and pend ...’ [??], ‘...A toff cam in wi’ bulging pack And dumped it in the pend’ [WL], ‘...oo’ve quite a lot o pens in Hawick, really’ [ME], an arched roof, the arch of a bridge – ‘...the bonnie Teviot, dooce an purpose-leike ...gleidin neth the pendds [ECS] (from Latin; see also pendit hoose).

pendit (pen-dee’, -di’) adj., arch. vaulted, arched – ‘...Aneath the pendit arches O’ the auld Mid Raw’ [JT].

pendit hoose (pen-dee’-hoos) n., arch. a 2 storey house with a vaulted lower floor. In former times ‘pered buildings’ were the common mode of defensive construction, with the upper floors being reached using a ladder via a hole in the ceiling of the arch below. This construction was partly for protection and partly so the animals could be housed on the bottom floor. The walls were originally several feet thick. Outside stairs projecting into the street were added to most of them in the 17th and 18th centuries. The back of 51 High Street is the last example of such a fortified house in Hawick, with No. 53 being the last one on the front of the street (rebuilt at the end of the 19th century). There were formerly a great number in Hawick, situated all along the High Street and Howegate, but most were replaced during the 18th and 19th centuries.

pen-fauld (pen-fawld) n., arch. the yard near a farmer’s house used for holding his cattle (noted by J. Jamieson).

Pennango (pen-fauld) n. town between Peebles and Edinburgh. It has a ‘Hunter and Lass’ celebration in late May, which began in 1936 and is modelled on the traditional Border Common Ridings. Population about 18,000.

Peniel Heugh (pi-nul-hew) n. officially called the Waterloo Monument, it is a striking local landmark, being the tallest man-made feature in the Borders. It is perched on 237 m (791 ft) Peniel Heugh Hill, north of Jedburgh, which also hosts an ancient British fort. It was built for the Marquess of Lothian to celebrate Wellington’s victory. It is a circular tower, 48 m (150 ft) high, which can be reached via a side road near Monteviot House, although there is currently no public access to the interior. The first architect was William Burn, but the original construction collapsed in 1816 when it was about 3/4 completed (this is sometimes ascribed to a small earthquake). The new design was by Archibald Elliot (also responsible for Jethart Castle Jail) and was completed 1817–24. It was popularly known as ‘Wellington’s Pillar’ around the time it was built. A wooden gallery at the top was added in 1867 to mark Queen Victoria’s visit to the Borders. The trees planted around the hill were reputedly supposed to represent the armies at Waterloo, but there is unfortunately no truth to this. There is a booklet by Garret O’Brien – ‘Duist a hip-step-an-a-lowp, an A cam on o another kenspeckle landmerk – Peinelheuch’ [ECS] (the origin of the name is possibly the Old Welsh ‘pen’ and Old English ‘hylh hoh’, meaning tautologically ‘hill hill height’; the biblical ‘Peniel’, pronounced entirely differently, may have influenced the spelling which appears on Stobie’s 1770 map; the name first appears as ‘Painchelhill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Penman (pen-mun) n. Dr. (19th C.) doctor in Hawick. He was surgeon to the Mechanics’ Friendly Society. His practice was taken over by Dr. Lorraine in about 1889. George (1921–2000) writer for the Hawick News, contributing the ‘Rambler’ column as well as covering sport. He worked in Pesco’s, finishing as Sales Director, played for Hawick both at rugby and cricket, was President of Hawick R.F.C. 1975–77, and was also Callants’ Club President and Chairman of the Community Council. John (d.c.1688) tenant in Winnington Rig in 1688 when his will was recorded. There was a notary in the Jedburgh area noted in 1631 (who also had a son called John), who might possibly be the same man. Rev. William (c.1602–68) educated at Edinburgh, he became minister of Morebattle in 1634. He signed the National Covenant, probably in Hawick, in 1638. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Andrew Sturgeon of Torror.

Penmanshaa (pen-munz-haw) n. Penmanshaa, former farmstead roughly between Harden and Borthwickshielis, lying on the Penmanshaa Burn. Michael Anderson lived at ‘penmans-hall’ in 1773 and 1775 (the origin of the name is unknown, but could relate to an early resident called Penman).

Penmanshaa Burn (pen-munz-haw-burn) n. stream rising north of Borthwickshielis and running into Harden Burn. The farm of Penmanshaa was located there in the 18th century.

Penmango (pen-awng-gō) n. former name for lands around Moss paul, surviving as ‘Penangus hope’ for the valley through which the Moss paul Burn flows. The name is included in a description of the boundaries of Ringwood when it was granted to Melrose Abbey in the 1160s. The land was gifted to the monks of Melrose by William Earl of Douglas in the 14th century. The name also appears as an occasional surname, e.g. in 1552 ‘Sym Pennango’ was paid by the Court to deliver letters to the Laird of Buccleuch, and in the 1577 Edinburgh Burgess roll ‘Andro Penango’ became a Burgess by right of being servant to the Lord Provost (also spelled ‘Penango’ etc. and cf. Penangushope; another example of the ancient p-Celtic root ‘pen’, this perhaps meaning ‘marshy hill’ or ‘uninhabited hill’; the name is mentioned around 1200, and a small valley ‘Penangushope’ occurs in many 14th–17th century documents; it was stated as being pronounced by shepherds as ‘Glinpineagle’ or ‘Glenpenanga’ in notes for the Ordnance Survey in the 1850s; it has recently been fancifully connected.

with ‘Agned’, the site of a purported battle involving King Arthur, but there is no evidence for this).

Pennango (pen-auŋ-gō) n. David ‘Davie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having led about 10 Scotsmen on a raid on ‘Brome’ in Gilsland, where the wife of Andrew Routledge was killed. Gyrie (d.bef. 1536) recorded in an account of events in Scotland in 1536. There was ‘ane singular fechting betuix the Johnstounis on the ane pairt, twa Moffettis and Gyrie Panago on the vther pairt’ in the presence of James V; this was perhaps a late case of judicial ordeal by battle. He was killed, along with a Moffat and a Johnstone. It is unclear if ‘Gyrie’ is short for something. Hugh (16th/17th C.) recorded in about 1600 in documents relating to a feud between the Earl of Cassillis and the Laird of Bargany. His name is recorded as ‘Hew Pennandgow’. Hugh (17th C.) witnessed a bond by Lord Mauchline in 1655. His name is written ‘Hughie Pennango’. In an inventory for John Muir of Park in Ayrshire (dated 1685, but probably referring to about 1652) he was ‘Hugh Pennango in Broadlay’. Perhaps the same Hugh was recorded in a case involving the Duchess of Lauderdale in 1685. James (16th C.) recorded in 1532 when he had the gift of all the goods of James Symontoun in ‘Lekclyok’. James (17th C.) son of Robert, who was tenant in Cockburnspath. In 1674 he became an apprentice, to saddler Robert Childers in Edinburgh. He may be one of the last of this surname on record. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘fermourer’ in Cockburnspath in 1674 when his son James became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was presumably tenant of the mill at Cockburnspath. Simon (16th C.) servant of the Earl of Angus and vassal of the Barony of Douglas. He was servant to the Earl of Angus when he defended Tantallon Castle when it was besieged by James V in 1528. In 1531 he was a member of the royal household and in 1533 received the gift of the ward and marriage of John Carmichael. He was given livery from the King in 1535 and had a gift of the non-entries of part of the lands of ‘Auchincors and Corsyncon’ in Ayrshire in 1535/6. In 1537 he was in ward and his goods were poinded by royal officers, so he had clearly fallen out of favour. In 1538 he was sent from Edinburgh Castle to Tantallon, and in 1540 was back in Edinburgh Castle. He returned to favour with the King later in 1540 and was granted lands in the Barony of Douglas. He may also be the ‘Symiune Pennango’ who was recorded as Captain of Coldingham in 1543. William (14th C.) recorded in 1332 as licenciate in arts and illegitimate son of a married man. He was given dispensation to be ordained and to hold a benefice; however, it is unclear if that happened. William (16th C.) tenant in Easter Whitfield. He witnessed as precept by the Commendator of Coldingham in 1557. He may be the same William who was granted the lands of Middle Blantagart (in the Barony of Douglas) in 1539, and was surely related to Simon, who held these lands earlier (this surname is surely related to the place in Roxburghshire and was prevalent in Ayrshire, although now extinct; see also Penangushope).

the Pennant (θu-pe-nîn) n. another name for the Flag – ‘Nor will their prowess be forgot while Pennant is on high, For Callants still are ready yet To serve it well – or die’ [WFC].

pennies each (pe-neez-eech) interj., arch. call of a hawkers for items that cost one penny each – ‘Where actually ‘a penny each’ was meant, vendors at Hawick Common-Riding games were to be heard calling: ‘Programmes for the games, pennies each!’ ’ [ECS].

pennil (pe-nil) n., arch. a pennon – ‘...carried the same along the haill common, and through the haill town, deriding, mocking, Scoffing and laughing at the old pennil and bearers and carriers thereof’ [BR1706]. ‘The new pennel, standard or colour ...’ [BR1707] (also written ‘pennel’; an alternative to pensil).

the Pennon Way (θu-pe-nîn-wä) n. public footpath stretching 270 miles from Kirk Yetholm in the Borders to Edale in the Peak District (or the other way round). Although called after the Pennines, it also traverses about half of the Cheviots. It is regarded as one of the most challenging long-distance walks in Britain. The closest part to Hawick is the stretch (on the wrong side of the Border) between Windy Gyle and Byrness.

the Pennon (θu-pe-nîn) n. a term used to refer to the Flag – ‘We’ll lift our spears of service, where’er our feet may roam, To the Vision of the Pennon on the dear old hills of home’ [JYH], ‘The Cornets, God bless them, all Gentlemen, true, They still guard the Pennon and new life imbue’ [WFC].

penny-bridal (pe-nee-bri-dul) n., arch. a wedding ceremony in which the guests contribute a small amount of money towards the entertainment, with any surplus going to the bride and groom – ‘John Hart being cited to compear before the session for making a pennybryddall at his daughter Christian’s marriage . . . ’ [BR1703].

Pennycook (pe-nee-kook) n. Alexander (b.c.1835) son of John and Jane, who were from Lanark. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was responsible for the murder of William Ainslie in Free Church Lane, with young William Moore also involved. Peter (b.c.1810) farmer at Highchesters Mill in 1841. He was living there with his siblings Barbara and Robert. He was probably from Dundee and in 1851 was living in Peebles with his sister Barbara, who had married Selkirk innkeeper Walter Bryden. Peter (b.1832) born at Rawflat. He farmed at Newhall in Bowden Parish. He is probably the Peter of Bewlie who served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In the 1860s he resided at Hallrule house. In about 1874 he is recorded being ‘of Be- wlie Hill’ when he was owner of lands in Bewlie that had formerly been owned by William Riddell of Camieston. He also held lands in Bowden Parish, including Midlem Mill. In 1855 he married Robina, daughter of Henry Elliot, farmer at Greenriver (i.e. Hobsburn). They had one daugh- ter, Agnes Ellen, who married James Lindsay, son of George Oliver, solicitor in Hawick. William, J.P. (19th/20th C.) one of the main people in- volved with the time capsule inserted into the Horse Monument in 1914 and uncovered in 2003. He was probably the same W.M. who was in the first pair to win the Pow Cup in 1905. He lived at 10 Beaconsfield Terrace.

the penny end (thu-pe-nee-end) n. popular name for primary 1 at some schools, or the part of the school where they were taught (such as Buccleuch School and Wilton School, where the name for primary 1 at some schools, or the part of the school where they were taught (such as Buccleuch School and Wilton School, where the first three years were separated).

Pennymuir (pe-nee-mewr) n. site of Roman marching camps on Dere Street, just a few miles from the Border, near the head of the Kale Water, about 15 miles east of Hawick. Dere Street can be followed from there to Whitton Edge (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh ‘pen y muir’, meaning ‘the hill of the wall’; the name oc- curs at least as early as 1637, and is often written ‘Pennymuor’).

penny-stane (pe-nec-stan) n., arch. a game, similar to quoits, played with a flat, round ‘penny- stone’ – ‘[One profanes the Lord’s day by] game- ing at the bob and penny stane’ [HAST1904] (recorded about 1695).

Pen Sike (pen-sik) n. small stream that rises to the south to join the Penchrise Pen and White Hill, running just to the north of Skelfhill Pen and runs in an easterly direction to join the Skelfhill Burn.

Penstemon (pen-sti-men) n. popular name for a Pentecostal congregation (whose members seek to be filled with the Holy Spirit, like the Apostles at Pentecost). They originally met in a Mission Hall on Beaconsfield Terrace before WW1, and in a wooden hut at the bottom of Laidlaw Terrace in the mid-20th century. It was also referred to as ‘the Apostolic’, and held big meetings for children during the War years. The site was where the Evergreen Hall was later built.

penter (pen-tur) n., poet. a painter – ‘Ay, pent- ter lad, thraw to the wund . . . ’ [JBS] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation).

Pentecost (pen-tu-kost) n. festival celebrating the descent of the Holy Spirit after the Ascension, seven weeks after Easter. It was formerly used as one of the days for paying rents and legal fees, and was later referred to as WhitSunday.

the Pentecostal (thu-pen-tu-kos-tul) n. popular name for a Pentecostal congregation (whose members seek to be filled with the Holy Spirit, like the Apostles at Pentecost). They originally met in a Mission Hall on Beaconsfield Terrace before WWI, and in a wooden hut at the bottom of Laidlaw Terrace in the mid-20th century. It was also referred to as ‘the Apostolic’, and held big meetings for children during the War years. The site was where the Evergreen Hall was later built.

Penton (pen-tōn) n. station on the Waverley Line just south of the Border. The nearby ‘Penton Linns’ are a picturesque series of waterfalls on the Liddel Water (which marks the Border here), and is also an area of special geological interest. The bridge there was built in 1812, with one of the contractors drowning when removing the wooden supports from the arch – ‘Go with me to Penton Grove, bonnie lassie O, Through its mazie walks we’ll rove, bonnie lassie O, Where the Liddel waters rin, With their wild resounding din, As they flow out o’er the Linn, bonnie lassie O’ [DA].

Penwen (pen-win) n. Robert (15th C.) received the Rectory of ‘Sowdon’, i.e. Southdean Parish in 1424, having been given Holy Trinity in Berwick upon Tweed, but obtaining Southdean ‘by collation’ first. He is recorded as Rector in 1443 when he was assigned the canony and prebend of ‘Capyt alias Balderen’ in Dunkeld. He also held the perpetual vicarage of Closeburn and some tithes from Morton. He was further recorded in as Rector in 1444 when he witnessed a charter for the Kers of Altonburn. He could be the same Robert ‘Penwen’, Clerk of the Diocese of Glasgow, who, in 1447, was granted a canonry of Glasgow, which was the gift of Thomas ‘Perawen’ (presumably a close relative); however, this was blocked when he was found to be the illegitimate son of a priest, a fact that was dismissed by the new Pope in 1461. This Robert at that time already held the perpetual vicarage of Calder. In 1455 he was master ‘Roberto pendven’ Rector of ‘sowdon’ as adjudicator for a dispute over teinds in Morebattle; ‘Master Thomas Pendven’, Rector of ‘Kerkmaqhu’ (probably Kirkmahoie) was mentioned in the same document and hence possibly his brother (and ‘John Pendwen’, Vicar of Sprouston recorded in 1475 was surely another relative). He was Robert ‘Rendven’ when recorded as still Rector of ‘Sowdon’ in 1455 (also spelled ‘Pendven’, ‘Penven’ and variants).

pepper-curns (pe-pur-kurnz) n., arch. a small device for grinding pepper – ‘Pepper-curns. A simple machine for grinding pepper, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

peppoch (pe-poch) n., arch. a collection of cherry stones – ‘Peppoch. The store of cherry-stones from which the castles of peas are supplied; called also Feedow, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also ‘paipoch’).

per (per) n. a pair – ‘...wui a face aa coa-loon, an a perr o reed-ribbon een glintin leike slaes’ [ECS], ‘Dunio ... is hurlid billie ti Ruberslaw, an there the perr stand, shooder ti shooder’ [ECS], ‘...and in this class is the common usage perr o horse (= pair of horses)’ [ECS], ‘When the Royal per aarrived Aw ge’id a wee bit wave teh the Duike’ [BW1978], ‘...the biggest per o feet in the band is size 11½...’ [CT], ‘...the per’s honeymoon destination wasni near si exotic’ [IW1], ‘...An a per o’ glaury breeks’ [RM], ‘And afore lang, the per o them were tirlin away...’ [DH] (sometimes written ‘perr’; see also the pair).

perceze (per-seez) adj., arch. precise (in [HNe1954]; also perceze).

Percehay (pers-hai) n. Walter (d.1289) described as ‘Walter Pershay’ in a charter of around 1283–85. This involved inspection of the earlier charter of 1260 in which Tarvit was granted by William Avenel (to whom John of Wilton was feudator) to Thomas Wallace. He was the son and heir of Joanna of Wilton, who was probably the heiress of Sir John de Wilton. According to Scottish accounts, he had a role in the murder of the young Earl Duncan of Fife, and was executed by Andrew of Moray of Petty. The Percehay family were from the area of Ryton in North Yorkshire, and after his death is only heard of in Yorkshire. However, in family histories his parents are given as Robert de Percehay and Joan de Vesey. That this is the same name as the Baronesse of Wilton recorded in the early years of the 14th century is surely not a coincidence. Perhaps Joan de Wilton was the same woman as Joan de Vesey (if she married twice), or perhaps there were 2 generations here. English records suggest Walter died in 1346, married Agnes and was succeeded by William; but that seems likely to be a son or even grandson, given the dates.

percise (per-sis) adj., arch. precise – ‘...He’d look percise, and smile and play as suited best: But Death has laid him in the clay, – Well may he rest’ [CPM] (perceze).

Percy (per-see) n. Henry (1300–52) 2nd Baron Percy, son of Henry de Percy, the 1st Baron Percy of Alnwick. In 1327 he was created Lord Warden General of the English Marches. From 1334 he was joint Warden with Ralph, 4th Lord Neville. That year he was given lands by Edward III which had formerly belonged to Douglas. This included the town and castle of Jedburgh, Jedforst and Hassendean; this may have led to the rivalry between Percy and Douglas generations later. These lands were recovered by Sir William Douglas about 1338, but retaken by the English in 1346 and his Jedburgh lands were confirmed to him in 1352. He married Idonia Cliffoord, daughter of Robert de Clifford, Earl of Surrrey, who had been the previous Warden. He was succeeded by his son Henry, 3rd Lord of Alnwick.

Henry (1320–68) 3rd Baron Percy, eldest son of Henry the 2nd Lord. He served as Lord Warden General of the English Marches from 1352. In 1354 he, along with Ralph Neville, was appointed as a commissioner to deal with Elizabeth, widow of Sir William Douglas, former Keeper of Hermitage. In 1356 he had the town and forest of Jedburgh conferred on him by Edward III, the grant included the town of Hassendean. He married Mary Plantagenet, and was succeeded by his son Henry. Henry (1342–1408) 4th Baron Percy and 1st Earl of Northumberland, son of Henry, the 3rd Lord of Alnwick. Like his father and grandfather he served as Lord Warden General of the English Marches, from about 1366/7, serving until at least 1375. He fought in the Hundred Years War and was Warden of the Marches. The entire territory of Teviotdale was bestowed upon him in 1403. He had been a supporter of Henry of Lancaster (later Henry IV), but revolted against him in 1403. These machinations included the siege of Cocklaw Tower (Ormiston) along with his son ‘Hotspur’ and their men in May of that year. After Hotspur’s death and his own capture at Shrewsbury he continued plotting against the English King, leading an attack from the North, which led to his death at Bramham Moor. He married Margaret, daughter of Ralph, Lord Neville of Raby. Sir Henry ‘Hotspur’ (1364–1403) son of Henry, 1st Earl of Northumberland. The Percys were a powerful family based at Alnwick, who laid claim to the throne of England in the early 15th century. He was English Warden of the West and East Marches along with his father, and then solely from 1384. His nickname is said to have been given to him by the Scots as a tribute to his readiness to attack. He was captured by the Scots at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, but later ransomed. In 1403 he besieged Cocklaw Tower, which has been identified with Ormiston. Henry IV refused to give help, and this was the excuse for the Percy’s to launch their direct attack on the English throne, leading to the death of Hotspur at the Battle of Shrewsbury. He features in Shakespeare’s ‘Henry IV’. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Edmund Mortimer, 3rd Earl of March. They had 2 children: Henry, who became Earl of Northumberland; and Elizabeth, who married John, Lord Clifford, and secondly Ralph Neville. – ‘Sir Harry Percy came to the walls The Scottish host for to see, Sayd, ‘An thou hast brent Northumberland, Full sore it rueht me’’ [T]. Henry (1421–61) 3rd Earl of Northumberland, son of the 2nd Earl, who was Constable of England and Warden of the East March. He was first cousin of Edward IV. He was made Lord Warden General of the Marches in 1439. He was killed leading the Lancastrian side at the Battle of Towton. He married Eleanor, daughter of Lord Poynings and was succeeded by his son Henry. Henry (1449–89) 4th Earl of Northumberland, son of the 3rd Earl. He was one of the few Percy’s to take the Yorkist side in the Wars of the Roses. John Neville was given the Northumberland title for a while, and it was only restored in 1473. He was later suspected of treason in the death of Richard III. In 1485 he was made Warden of the English Middle and East Marches. He was killed by rioters protesting high taxation. He married Maud Herbert, daughter of the Earl of Pembroke and was succeeded by his son Henry. Henry Algernon (1478–1527) 5th Earl of Northumberland. He was Warden of the East Marches from 1503, but apparently preferred the life of the court to that of Border warfare. He was in France during Flodden, although his two brothers fought there. In 1522 he was made a member of the Council of the North, and served as Lord Warden General of the Marches 1523–25. He married Catherine Spencer and was succeeded by yet another Henry. Henry Algernon (1502–37) 6th Earl of Northumberland, son of Henry Algernon and Catherine Spencer. He was a suitor of Anne Boleyn in their youth, but sat on the jury that convicted her of adultery in 1536. He served as Warden of the English East and Middle Marches 1527–37. In 1533 he led a force through the Borders that burned Branxholme, as well as Whitchesters, ‘Whitchesterholme’, Whitlaw and Newbigging, among other places. He was apparently quite profligate and eventually had to sell much of the family estates. He was forced to marry an older woman, Mary Talbot, who left him no direct heirs. Henry (1532–85) 8th Earl of Northumberland, brother of the 7th Earl. He was also engaged for many years in Border warfare. After being imprisoned for the third time he was found shot in the Tower of London. Thomas Earl of Worcester (c.1344–1403) younger brother of Henry, 1st Earl of Northumberland. He fought with distinction in France. He was granted Jedburgh town, castle and forest by his brother, Earl of Northumberland in 1397. He assisted his nephew Henry ‘Hotspur’ in the rebellion against Henry IV and was beheaded after the Battle of Shrewsbury. Sir Thomas (c.1504–85) 2nd son of Henry, 5th Earl and brother of the 6th Earl. In 1536 he was made Warden of the English Middle March, possibly along with his father. He was executed for his role in the ‘Pilgrimage of Grace’ (a Catholic uprising in the North of England). He married Eleanor Harbottle and their son Thomas was the 7th Earl of Northumberland. Thomas Percy’s Gauntlets

(1528-72) 7th Earl of Northumberland, nephew of the 6th Earl, he was Lord of Alnwick Castle. In 1557 he was appointed Warden of the English East and Middle Marches, and engaged in Scottish expeditions for many years, resigning in 1560. He was involved in a rising of Northern England in support of Mary Queen of Scots, and had to hide out in Liddesdale in 1569. He was said to have been betrayed by Hector Graham of Harlaw (a Border outlaw), captured by Martin Elliot’s men and handed over to the Regent Moray, spending the night in Hawick on their way north. He was sold back to Elizabeth I, handed over to Hunsdon at Berwick and later beheaded at York. He married Anne, daughter of Henry Somerset, 2nd Earl of Worcester. She was said to have been robbed by Liddesdale men while passing through the area to visit her husband in Scotland; a ring found at ‘Blakeburn’ (at least 2 centuries ago) was suggested to have been hers. She later went into exile in Europe, but maintained contact with other English Catholic exiles.

Percy’s Gauntlets (per-seez-gaunt-litz) n. trophy long held at Cavers House, captured from Percy Hotspur a few days before the battle of Otterburn. These are small gloves, richly embroidered with pearls and silver, and bearing a lion device. Clearly too small for Percy himself, they must have been a lady’s favour, presented to him before going to battle, and Percy’s desire to recover them may have contributed to the severity of the battle. These relics were previously sometimes referred to as ‘Percy’s Pennon’, under the mistaken belief that this was a banner, rather than gauntlets.

Pesco’s (pes-köz) n. Peter Scott’s, founded in 1878, with their main factory on Buccleuch Street, originally the partnership Adamson & Scott, between Peter Scott and his uncle Peter Adamson. The company started in part of Peter Laidlaw’s old factory at Wilton Grove, was based in the Tabernacle from 1881–93, and moved to Buccleuch Street in 1893, acquiring the former premises of the Commercial Bank. Scott split from Adamson in 1884, when the firm’s title was changed to Peter Scott & Co. The now familiar factory on Buccleuch Street was built in stages and largely completed by 1913, with the classical-style block to the west added in 1923 (designed by J.P. Alison). Behind the front section there are several other buildings, including knitting sheds and a boiler house. The factory retains its octagonal chimney (the only one in the Borders with its original top cornice). There was also another mill on Wilton Path (adjacent to the entrance to the ‘hunder steps’, specialising in sports coats) and one on Commercial Road (specialising in hosiery, opened in 1916) in the early 20th century. They were the first firm to guarantee against shrinkage of underwear at the turn of the 20th century. The Hawick factory was devoted to production for the troops during WWI, and supplied the ill-fated Shackleton expedition of 1914. In 1914 it was described as the biggest firm of its kind in Scotland, employing 800 people. Later it moved from hosiery into knitwear and sportswear. The Commercial Road buildings were used as a billet in 1939 and in 1945 the canteen was opened in the main factory. The Wilton Path factory closed in 1954. A nursery for employees ran until 1958. 16–18 Howegate was sold in 1956. A factory was built in Kelso in 1961 and another at Chirnside in 1974 (sold in 1981). The Queen and Prince Philip visit during the company’s centenary year in 1978. The ‘Peter Scott’ signature is the main company logo, along with the deer image. The official trademark was ‘Pesco’ from 1931 until relatively recently, and that has always been the popular name in Hawick. The firm won arbitrated arbitration in 2010, but was temporarily saved by English firm Gloverall. In 2016 the factory ceased production for good. The ‘Pesco Quotation Book’ (1916) was sold to raise money for the war effort, and after WWI ‘A Souvenir of Peace’ was published. The company has given several notable gifts to the town, including an early motor ambulance and fire-fighting equipment.

the Pesh (thu-pesh) n. headmaster at the High School – ‘Mr. Low was the Pesh it that time’ (derived from the nickname ‘le Pêche’ of Rector Watterson, so-called because of his complexion; see also Rectors).

pessably (pe-sa-bi-le) adv., arch. peaceably – ‘...of nyenetene yerris fully to be compleit, pessabill joyssande alhale and togeddir ...’ [DoR1445].

Peter Scott’s (pee’-ur-skots) n. Peter Scott & Co., better known as Pesco’s, which was its official trademark until relatively recently.

peth (peth) n., arch. a path, a steep road – ‘...an’ whataseever passes throwe the peths o’ the seis’ [HSR], ‘Haud up my gaeings in thy peths, that my fitsteps sklydena’ [HSR] (the usual local meaning has no implication of being a narrow footpath, as in the English word).

the Peth (thu-peth) n. Walton Path, the road leading up the hill, continuing on from Albert Road as part of the old road to Edinburgh. It was also known as ‘Roughheugh Path’ until the late 19th century. It was once very built-up, with a row of houses at the top known as the ‘Pathhead’, and a factory block next to the entrance to the ‘hunder steps’. In the mid-20th century it contained a chip shop, the Store bakers, a wine shop and ‘Foosty Broon’s’. Houses, shops and a knitwear factory were demolished in 1972/73, leaving essentially no houses on the street itself. The Manse for St. George’s Church is at the top on the left.

pether (pe-thur) n., arch. a peddler, packman, travelling merchant – ‘Assoildies George Makwetie fra the claim persewit be John Scott, pether, for a half dozen of butes, mac or fewer, al-legend taken awa fra his crame in Hawick’ [BR1655], ‘There’s pethers and potters, and gingerread stan’s, Peep-shows, puff-and-darts, and great caravans...’ [DA] (also written ‘pether’ and ‘pethir’; cf. pedder).

the Pether (thu-pe-thur) n. nickname for anyone who worked as a packman or peddler, particularly in the 18th century, e.g. William Scott from Deanburnhaugh.

Pether Hill (pe-thur-hil) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the 19th century, presumably a peddler called Hill – ‘Wullie the Paidle, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI].

the Pether’s Yett (thu-pe-thurz ye’) n. former name for a gate which gave entry to ‘the Pedlar’s Field’, a field in which corn grew in the summer, being the first of the open fields on the land north of what is now Princes Street, where Ladylaw Place was built in the 1840s (from ‘the Peddlar’s Gate’).

Pethheid (peth-heed) n. Pathhead, a former name for the area at the top of Wilton Path, particularly the row of houses that stood on the north side of what became Princes Street (near where the Balmoral Bar is located), as marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map. This block of houses is already marked on the 1810 sketch of Wilton. In 1841 the name appears also to have been used to the houses to the west, on Langlands Road. Note that the place gave its name to ‘Path Head School’, near Winnipeg, Manitoba (also sometimes ‘Pathhead’).

petit-taes (pe-tee-=t=az) n., pl., arch. the feet of pigs (noted by J. Jamieson).

peuchle (pew-chul) n., arch. to work ineffectively – ‘That peuchlin’ body never wuns off the bit’ [GW], to cough feebly, splutter wheezily (in Phantasy (fawn-tu-see) n. dog boarding kennels and associated property situated just after Hawthornside on the way to Ponchester.

Phaup (fawp) n. former steadings on the Phaup Burn above Castleweary, east of the A7. The Read Roads pass near here and the Mosspaul ride-out route usually comes near here also. It was listed along with Linhope and Frostylee as a 20-shilling land among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663; these were united with lands in Wilton and others into ‘the tenement of Blackgraine’. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when that superiority was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. In 1718 it was surveyed along with other Buccleuch proerpties, at that point covering 654 acres and bounded by Skelfhill, Linhope, Binks, Southdean-rig and Northhouse. William Grieve was shepherd there in 1797. The place name has many spellings and can also be confused with an area of the same name near the head of the Ettrick. This could be the ‘Fallhope’ which was owned by the Glendinnings of that Ilk from at least 1325. One of these 2 places probably gave rise to the somewhat rare surname Phaup, with ‘Adam de Fawhope’ being recorded as a juror in 1304, ‘Archibald Fawup’ being Chaplain at Linlithgow in the early 16th century and several people of the name recorded in the Melrose area in the 17th century (spelled ‘Phawhope’, ‘Fawhope’ and other variants; the origin might be from the Old English ‘fah hop’, meaning ‘variegated valley’; it occurs at least as early as 1604 as ‘Fawhop’, is ‘Fallhope’ in 1653 and 1660, ‘Fawhope’ in 1661, ‘Fahope’ in 1663, ‘Phallhope’ in 1687 and 1698 and ‘Phaip’ in 1694; it is ‘Fachope’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey maps; there are other places of similar name elsewhere, e.g. at the head of the Kale).

Phaup (fawp) n. area near the head of the Ettrick Water, also written ‘Phawhope’. Nether and Over Phaup are separate farmsteads, the latter being a ‘bothy’ on the Southern Upland Way. Earlier the lands were split into Easter and Wester ‘Fawlishope’. These were the lands of Sir John Turnbull ‘of Falshope’, whose daughter married George Scott of Synton about the early 15th century. Sir Thomas Turnbull held lands here in the latter part of the 15th century. They were Crown lands, assigned to John, son of Thomas Turnbull in 1483-87, then George Home of Ayton in 1488 and his son John in 1490, and then with John’s consent assigned to John Turnbull. In 1494/5 the farm is mentioned as a place that was pillaged for sheep and in turn the residents there were charged with rieving. In 1501 they were half let to Ralph Ker and the other half to the wife of Sir Thomas Turnbull and Ralph Ker still held half the lease in 1502. This is probably where William and George Scott are recorded in 1526. In 1541 half the lands were occupied by Andrew Ker of Greenhead and the other half by William Stewart. Will Scott of Midgehope paid rental for these lands to Melrose Abbey in 1557 and Robert Scott of Tushielaw in about 1620. It is said that the farm was without a tenant or any stock for 20 years after the terrible winter storm of 1674. Francis Scott ‘of ffahope’ paid the land tax in Selkirkshire in 1678. James Scott
Phawhope

Phaup

‘of Phaupe’ is recorded in records of Melrose in 1682. Will Laidlaw ‘of Phawhope’ gave the version of ‘Auld Maitland’ published in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy’. The Ballantynes were Lairds in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It is easily confused with the farm between Castleweary and Mosspaul of the same name, as well as Fauldshope further down the Ettrick near Aikwood (spelled ‘Phawhope’ and variants; ‘Fauhopscle et Fauhopgranys’ are recorded in 1456; it is ‘Fauldishope’ in 1468, ‘Fawlishope’ in 1471, ‘Faulishope’ in 1478 and 1488, ‘Fawlishoip’ in 1487, ‘Faulishope’ in 1490, ‘Fawlishop’ in 1494, ‘Faulishop’ and ‘Fawlishop’ in 1501, ‘Fawlishope’ in 1526, ‘Faldishope’ in 1541, ‘Fawlishop’ in 1589 and ‘Fauhope’ in 1620; ‘Faup’ is marked on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Phaup (fwp) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Fauhope’ when he was on a jury in 1304 to decide on the privileges of Robert the Bruce (when he was still just Earl of Carrick). The jurors were all from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire and hence it seems likely his lands were one of the local places of that name. Andrew (17th C.) notary in Melrose. He is recorded in many documents relating to the Regality of Melrose in the 1650s and 60s. His name presumably derives from the lands in Roxburghshire or Selkirkshire. Andrew (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassanden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name was written ‘Faup’.

Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her name is written ‘Faup’. She could be the ‘Bessie Phaup’, married to William Wright, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1685. Elizabeth (b.1815/6) from Gordon in Berwickshire, she was a toll-keeper in Hawick. In 1851 she was a widow, living at West-Toll Bar (on Buccleuch Road), with he children James, Isabel T. and William T., her nephew Toll Bar (on Buccleuch Road), with he children

Phaup Burn (fwp-burn) n. stream that joins the Frostlie Burn, roughly from the east, near Castleweary. The farmstead of Phaup is along its banks (marked ‘Faupp B.’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

pheesant (fee-zin’) n. a pheasant – ‘...There isna a walk mair pleasent Now oor on the White-haugh Road And in front o’ ee a pheasant’ [AY], ‘The feel o mushrooms; broilin a gumpit troot; Phelipe Phenzhopehaugh (fee-nup-hawf, -hawch) n. isolated farmstead situated about 2 km up the Rankle Burn from the farms of Buccleuch. This was probably the site of the original manor for the Barony of Ranklburn. Phenzhopehaugh Burn meets the Rankle Burn from the west there, and above to the south-west is Phenzhopehaugh Hill, which reaches 382 m. There is a motte on an area of level ground to the north of the confluence; it is about 40 m by 25 m and about 2.5 m high, surrounded by a ditch, which has a causeway across it on the south-west side. This may have been the first residence of the Scotts of Ranklburn (with Sir Richard Scott of Ranklburn, who swore fealty to Edward II in 1296, probably holding these lands), before they moved their headquarters to Buccleuch. About 60 m south of the motte is a large circular enclosure, probably much more recent in age (it is not marked on Blaen’s c.1654 map; the stream is ‘Finhopelake’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map and incorrectly a lake is labelled ‘Findhopelake’ near there on Mitchell’s 1851 map).

the Philadelphia Stakes (thn-filu-del-lee-a-staks) n. race run as part of the Cornet’s Races on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the later 19th century. The prize-money was presumably raised by exiles from the Philadelphia area.

Philhope (fi-up) n. farm along the Borthwick valley, and the name for the area around it, particularly the flat region by the river, which has long been a popular picnic spot. John Hope and John Hall were recorded as the King’s shepherd’s here and in Broadlee, being paid for grain in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540. There were Elliots there from at least the 16th century, Martin Elliot of Braudlie having a charter of 1591, at which time it lay within the Barony of Hawick and was annexed to Selkirkshire. This was afterwards to go to his son Simon and was ratified by Act of Parliament in 1592. In the early 1600s Simon’s only child Grizel inherited and married John, son of Robert Elliot of Fahnish. The lands were listed (along with Eilrig) as a ‘pendicle’ of Broadlee among lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands were estimated to pay ‘200 merks, vicarage 20 lb.’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. In 1631 John Turnbull of Howden was served as heir to his father Mark’s lands there. However, the main farm was in the hands of the Crown for 37 years, until granted to Robert Elliot of Fahnish in 1628; Robert’s son John would marry the heiress, Grizell Elliot. It remained with the Elliots through most of the 17th century. Adam Elliot of Philhope was made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1643. There were 12 'communicants' recorded there in 1650. It was owned by William Elliot of Philhope in 1678 when valued at £216. William and Robert Chisholme (of Stiches) purchased it in 1684. In 1694 tax was paid on 6 hearths for 'Phillipp & milne'. Thos also listed there were William Elliot (probably the Laird), John Renwick, Robert Chisholme, Robert Riddell and Adam 'Junct'. Robert Veitch was living there in the early 18th century. Thomas Graham was living there in 1762 and John Cavers in 1774. The teinds were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 when owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, and the stock was valued at £400, with the land tax paid by William Chisholme of Chisholme. In the 1788 county valuation (and still in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued along with Broadlee at £216. It became part of the Buccleuch estates around the early 19th century and in the latter part of the 19th century was purchased by Richardson-Dickson. The farmer recorded there on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls was Robert Nichol. In 1811 William Chisholme paid the land tax on £400 there, while the teinds were valued at £60 in 1802 and held by the Duke of Buccleuch. George Nichol was farmer there in 1841. John Nichol was there in the 1860s. It was part of Hawick Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90, and in earlier times was part of Selkirkshire. An area roughly opposite Meadowshaw was the site of a skirmish in December 1653, between (Scottish) Royalist forces and (English) Commonwealth forces. About 80–100 mean under Sir Arthur Forbes, and with Maj. Irvine as second-in-command, had captured Andrew Kerr of Sunlaws and Chatto. Coming down from the north, they stopped at Borthwickbrae, and intended to head over towards Eskdalemuir. An English force, part of Twisleton's Regiment under Capt. Hart, were in pursuit. The Scots were easy to follow in the snow and made a stand at Philhope, where 4 Royalists were slain and 16 taken prisoner, with only 1 Englishman slain and 17 wounded. The prisoner Kerr was freed, but wounded through the thigh by an English trooper. The English concentrated on rounding up the horses, allowing most of the Scots to escape, including Forbes. This was probably the last battle to take place near Hawick. There are remains of some enclosures near the farm, age uncertain (also formerly spelled 'Philip' and variants; it is 'Filop' in 1540, 'Phillop' in 1592, 'Phillip' in 1627 and 1631, 'Fillip' in 1643, 'Phillip' in 1646, 'Phillop' in 1649, 'Philip' in 1651, 'Philip' in 1678 and 1686, 'Philop' in 1717 and 'Philip' in 1785, 1788 and 1797; it is 'Phillope' on a parish map of 1650, 'Phillippe' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Philop' on Stobie's 1770 map; the origin is possibly Old English 'ful hop', meaning 'the dirty valley').

Philhope Brig (fi-lup-brig) n. bridge across the Borthwick near Philhope farm, leading to the former farm of Outerside. This site has often in recent times been chosen for Common Riding Ride-outs. The haugh there has been a favourite place for Hawick folk to come for picnics. The area was popularized in the Scocha song 'Dusty Road frae Philhope Brig ti Hame', released in 2017 with an accompanying video.

Philhope Burn (fi-lup-burn) n. stream that joins the Borthwick from the south-east near Philhope farm.

Philhope Loch (fi-lup-loch) n. man-made loch in the headwaters of the Philhope Burn. On the Roughhope Burn (rather than the Philhope Burn), the name was attached to it much later. Construction was constructed in 1844 following a drought which brought Hawick's woollen mills to a standstill. The work was arranged by the 3 main manufacturers at the time, William Wilson & Sons, William Watson & Sons and Dicksons & Laings. Construction was completed by 1846 on the dam here, as well as at the nearby Broadlea Loch. It is said that the sluice gate used to be opened in order to raise to Borthwick and then the Teviot, to help with the water-powered mills in Hawick. There was a suggestion around 1880 of using the Loch as a water supply for Hawick, but the decision was taken to develop the Allan Water works instead. Eventually the reservoir ceased to be used for its original purpose, and for a while it was used for fishing. When the embankment began to leak in the 1970s it was drained and abandoned.

Philhope Mill (fi-lup-mil) n. former farmstead near Philhope, presumably by the side of the Borthwick. It was part of Hawick Parish until 1690 (also written 'Philip Mill'; it is shown on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Philhopeshiel (fi-lup-sheel) n. former steading on the Philhopeshiel Burn, about half-way between Ellrig and Lairhope. Thomas Graham was there in 1743, John Jackson in 1763 and John Graham in 1774. It was still marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but has now disappeared, although there is still an adjacent sheepfold (it is ‘Philipshiel’ in 1774).

Philhopesiel Burn (fi-lup-sheel-burn) n. stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Rashy Hill, and runs in a roughly northerly direction to join the Eildrig Burn and hence the Borthwick Water.

Philip (fi-lip) n. Andrew (1782–1822) son of William and Mary Scott. He was a mason, like his father. He owned property on Slitrig Crescent, around No. 5, marked on Wood’s 1824 map. His surname was listed as ‘Phillips’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He died in Hawick. George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Walker and their children included: William (b.1746); Elizabeth (b.1748); Janet (b.1750); Jane (b.1753); John (b.1755); Isabel (b.1759); and Robert (b.1760). Perhaps the same George was previously married to Janet Lockie and had a son Patrick baptised in Ashkirk in 1744. William (d.bef. 1822) mason in Hawick. He was probably son of George and Janet Walker, born in Ashkirk. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘ Poetical Museum’ (1784). He married Mary Scott and had children: Alice (b.1770); George (b.1772); Walter (b.1777); Janet (b.1779); Andrew (b.1781); Christian (b.1782); Andrew (again, b.1782), also a mason; William (b.1785); Peter (b.1792); and Peter (again, b.1793). The witnesses in 1777 were merchant Andrew Scott and Andrew Turnbull. His unnamed child died in 1798 (also written ‘Philip’).

Philphauhag (fi-lip-hawf, -hawch) n. riverside plain just west of Selkirk, now the location for the town’s rugby and cricket fields. It was the site of the Battle of 1645 which ended the Earl of Montrose’s attempts to secure political control of Scotland, thereby ensuring the defeat of Charles I’s cause. Montrose’s men were surprised under cover of fog by the superior Covenant forces under David Leslie, to which the locals were sympathetic at the time; troops from Teviotdale must surely have fought in Leslie’s army. Montrose fled, but most of his troops and the 300 accompanying women and children were massacred by Covenanting zealots. Lands there were granted to William Turnbull in 1313 and there were still Turnbulls there until the early 16th century. However, the surrounding estate belonged to the Murrays from the 15th century. It was valued at almost £4000 in 1678. A Jacobean mansion stood here, remodelled in the 1870s and demolished to make way for a 1964 house. The Covenanters’ Monument is a stone pyramid on the grounds. A song about the battle was recorded by Scocha in 2004 – ‘On Philphauhag the fray began, At Harehead wood it ended; The Scots out o’er the Graemes they ran; Sae merrily they bended’ [T] (it is ‘Philophauche’ and ‘Philophauch’ in 1504, ‘Philophauche’ in 1509 and ‘Philophauch’ in 1558).

Philip’s Jok (fi-lipz-jok) n. nickname of Johnnie Scott in the 16th century (written ‘Philpis’ in the court documents).

Philogar (fi-lo-gur) n. hill and former lands in the Hownam Parish. The lands were connected with the Douglasses of Cavers in the 16th and 17th centuries.

picket see pickit

picker (pi-kur) n. occupation in the knitwear industry, someone who picks out ‘bobbles’ and foreign matter in garments (usually with tweezers), this being often carried out by older women.
Formerly the word was used for someone whose job was to cut loose threads from the web.

the Pickin (thu-pi-kin) n. official selection of the new Cornet, taking place on the Wednesday night after the first Tuesday in May (since Town Council meetings always used to be on Tuesdays). The ceremony used to take place on the Tuesday night immediately after the Council meeting to elect the Cornet, but at some point was shifted to the following night. The Provost’s Council, with recommendation of the two previous standard bearers, choose a young man to be the new Cornet. The Burgh Officer, accompanied by the Drums and Fifes, carries the official letter to the Cornet-Elect’s house, setting off at 7 p.m. When the band walk north they play ‘Dumbarton Drums’ and when they turn to the south they play ‘Rumble Brig’, then they play ‘Teribus’ as the letter is handed over. In the house are gathered the Cornet’s family and friends. The new Cornet goes outside to greet the crowd and there is a strive. The Halberdier is then given the acknowledgement and rewarded with a new shilling. The Officer and band return to the ‘Town Hall’, where ‘Teribus’ is again played as the reply is handed in. There is meanwhile a procession on foot by the Cornet’s party through the older parts of town, specifically visiting the site of the ‘Toll’ farthest from the Cornet’s house, and ending at the Town Hall, with a short sing-song. After the Procession there is the congratulatory Smoker and the Lasses Association dinner. Formerly the parade would have stopped at the houses of the Minister, the Senior Bailie and several inns. The new Cornet’s Tie is only revealed in a shop window after the Pickin. The practice of the Drums and Fifes escorting the Burgh Officer on Picking Night stopped for many years, but was revived in 1887.

the Pick Inn (thu-pi-kin) n. former hostelry at the Mid Row in the mid-19th century.

Pickin Night (pi-kin-ni') n. name used to refer to the night of the Pickin, being the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in May.

picklt (pi-kul, -kult) adj. pickled – ‘A made a faisable mael oot o pie-soop, . . . caal’d flesh, picklt ingans, an nae skrimp o laif’ [ECS].

pick-maw (pik-maw) n., arch. the black-headed gull, Larus ridibundus – ‘. . . ti gar yin that’s duist a peike at eis meat turn that ei can heck leike a pick-maw’ [ECS] (also ‘pick-sea-maw’ and variants; cf. maw; the name survives in ‘the Picmaw Moss’).

Pick Maw Hill (pik-maw-hil) n. former name for a field in Lilliesleaf Parish, probably to the south of the village. It is described (in the ‘New’ Statistical Account of Scotland) in about 1834 as an area formerly frequented by gulls, whose eggs ‘were then much sought after by the villagers’.

the Pickmaw Moss see the Picmaw Moss

the Picmaw Moss (thu-pik-maw-mos) n. boggy area near Kirkton Hill, formerly known as Buckstruther, and being essentially the same as the area now also called Adderstonelee Moss (also spelled ‘Pickmaw’).

picter see pictur

the Picts (thu-pits) n., pl. people of northern Scotland, of uncertain origin, who remained unconquered by the Romans. The chronicler
the Picts-work Ditch

Gildas says that in the 5th century they penetrated southwards as far as Hadrian’s wall. If so, they may have had some influence on the Hawick area, and may have spoken a Brythonic (‘p-Celtic’) language, in common with early Teries. However, there is no evidence to support connections that were once believed to exist with the Borthwick Mains stone, the Catrail and the Mote. In 685 the Bernician (including the Hawick area) King Egfrith was defeated at ‘Nech tansmere’ in Fife when attacking into Pictland. Exactly who the Picts were is unclear, but by about 900 they had disappeared as a separate people and become part of the ‘Scots’. It was said by Boece that they made a liquor from heather flowers, the process being lost with them. Leyden tells of a version of this story popular in Teviotdale, with the last Pictish warrior refusing to divulge the secret ‘...And frequent wake the wild inspired lay, On Teviot’s hills, beneath the Pictish sway’ [JL] (probably from the Latin for ‘painted’).

the Picts-work Ditch see the Pict’s Work Dyke

the Pict’s Work Dyke (thu-pikts-wurk-dik) n. an older popular name for the Catrail (also ‘the Picts-work Ditch’ and similar).

pictur (pik-tur) n. a picture – ‘go’ an hing that pictur up for is’, ‘...That pictur’s deed, and this is leevin’’ [JBS], ‘A mairecht eend ti the ‘Gazette’ Office, an bocht a wheen pictur-postcards’ [ECS], ‘...bye auld Hornshole, – a pictur o gray an green ...’ [ECS], v. to picture – ‘...Ma mind picters scenes galore’ [AY], ‘...O’ giff they could feel like us, When we pictur’d the getherin’ froons ...’ [WL], ‘...in an effort tae pictur tae theirel’s the toon in the hollow o’ the hills’ [BW1939] (also spelled ‘picter’).

pictur-hoose (pik-tur-hoos) n. a picture-house, cinema, especially the ‘Kings’, ‘Piv’ or ‘Wee Thea’ in the hey-day of the cinema in Hawick – ‘The attendances at the pictur-hoose hev proved that ...’ [BW1939].

the pictures (thu-pik-turz) n. the pictures, cinema – ‘oo aye went ti the pictures on Seturdi mornins’, ‘Skinny Malinky long legs, umbrella feet. Went to the pictures and couldni finnd a seat’, ‘Maist folk ken when the word ‘picters’ is mentioned that it refers tae the cinema’ [BW1938].

piddle (p-dul) v., arch. to walk with quick short steps (noted by J. Jamieson).

pie (pl) n. a pie, almost exclusively referring to a meat pie, often with minced mutton – ‘Ee got pies and tei at the muckle tent And eer chin was fair rinnin wi’ grease’ [AY].

piece (pees) n. a sandwich, often plural, and usually referring to something eaten as part of a packed lunch – ‘mind an bring pieces for yer denn’er’, ‘Mother, gie’s a piece, ir ee?’ [ECS], ‘How we used to set off in the morning with a ‘piece’ in our pocket’ [BM1905], ‘Ma, if ma tei’s no ready, Goan gie is a jeely piece’ [AY], ‘Noo busy wi’ a jelly piece, The schule forgot, he stole oot-bye ...’ [WFC], ‘A herbour for auld muillins O’ lang-forgotten pieces ...’ [DH].

piecer (pee-sur) n., arch. someone (often a child) formerly employed in the spinning industry to gather and reattach broken threads or specifically to join the ‘cardings’ by feeding them onto the ‘creeping cloth’ of the ‘shuffling’ frame. They usually joined the ‘rovings’ at the back of the ‘billy frame’, and the required repeated action would often make their fingers bleed. More recently the term meant someone who made their pay by piece work rather than by the hour – ‘...unconscious of his identity, he remarked to the foreman: ‘That’s the kind of piecer to keep’’ [JHH], ‘...as her son Rob and I were piecers together’ [JTu].

piecin machine (pee-sin-mu-sheen) n. a machine that replaced the work of ‘piecers’ and the ‘shuffling billy’, joining together the pieces coming off the carding machines. It was introduced in Hawick by Melrose’s about 1844, and probably invented by James Melrose.

Piehill (pl-hil) n. former name for a farm, perhaps in Cavers Parish. John Douglas, tenant in Cavers, but called ‘of Piehill’ is recorded in a ‘letter of reduction’ of 1630, brought by William Ben-net. Alexander Chisholme of Piehill is referred to in a ‘respite’ for the slaughter of Lord Maxwell in 1593 (but this could have been an error for ‘Parkhill’).

piel see peel (pill)

Pie Oliver (pl-o-lee-vur) n. nickname for members of a particular branch of the Oliver family. This could be the same as the ‘Pies Oliver’ recorded in the ‘Hawick Immortals’ poem – ‘Wullie the Paidle, Glead Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tacketts, Don Pedro, Fether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI].

piet see pyet

the Pietsnest  (thu-piêts-, pl-its-nest) n. former shepherd’s cottage on Hyndlee farm. William Turnbull lived there in the early-to-mid 19th century (referring to the magpie, ‘piet’ or pyet).

pig  (pig) n., arch. an earthenware vessel, a hot water bottle – ‘For aa A pat a warm pig i the bed, it was midnicht or A cam a-heat’ [ECS], ‘…their honey run into ‘pigs’ bought for the purpose, and covered with leather’ [AOC].

piggie-bank  (pi-gee-bawngk) n. an earthenware vessel in which coins are saved – ‘The boy admitted entering a house in Beaconsfield Terrace in March and stealing 13s from a piggy-bank’ [HEx1965] (cf. pig).

Pigot’s  (pi-gits) n. J. Pigot & Co., publishing company that produced useful directories in the early 19th century. The 1826/7 ‘New Commercial Directory of Scotland’ (compiled about a year earlier) and 1837 ‘National Commercial Directory of Scotland’ are particularly useful for tracking down people, businesses etc. in Hawick and neighbouring areas before the censuses began. These directories were continued by Slater’s Royal National Commercial Directory, which came out with local content in 1852, 1860, 1878, 1882 and 1893.

pike  (pik) n., arch. a pick, spike, prong – ‘…Till a reid hette pyke the master gate, And gave his loone a prodde’ [JTe] (also written ‘pyke’).

pike-nose  (pik-nose) n., arch. a peaked stack of hay, erected temporarily in a field, a haystack, a sharp pointed hill v., arch. to make a haystack (from Medieval English; essentially the same word is used locally in the names of some peaked hills).

the Pike  (thu-pik) n. hill about 10 km due south of Hawick, between Penchrise and the Maidens. It reaches 463 m. The Catrail crosses near the summit. Alexander Gordon refers to it as ‘Carriage Hill’ (the same name is used for a feature on the western side of Pike Fell in the Slitrig valley and for a hill on the south side of the Tima valley).

the Pike  (thu-pik) n. hill that is essentially the western side of Pike Fell in the Slitrig valley (note the confusion with the hill a couple of miles to the west).

Pike Fell  (pik-fel) n. hill on the eastern side of the upper Slitrig valley, near Shankend. It reaches a height of 400 m and has a triangulation pillar. Its south-eastern spur is called simply ‘The Pike’.

Pike Fell  (pik-fel) n. hill on the border of Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, at the head of the Routing Burn, and hence effectively the start of the Hermitage valley. It reaches a height of 499 m.

Pike Hill  (pîk-hiel) n. hill between the upper Borthwick and Teviot valleys, east of Howpasley Hope, reaching a height of 419 m.

Pikensteed  (pi-kin-steed) n. possible name for former lands in Liddesdale, transcribed as ‘Pikensteid’ on the 1541 rental roll, when it was valued at 14 shillings, and with no tenant. The location is uncertain. It is possible that it is the same as ‘Piperstede’ recorded in c.1376.

piker  (pi-kur) n., arch. a person who makes haystacks.

Pike Sike  (p=ik-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Thorlieshope Height and running roughly north-west to the Thorlieshope Burn.

Pikethaw Hill  (pîk-thaw-hil) n. high hill on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, just to the south of the pass at Ewes Doors. It reaches a height of 564 m and has a substantial cairn on its summit. It is essentially where the Lymiclesuch Burn rises. It has been suggested that a volcanic dyke stretches from here to Skelfhill Pen (also written ‘Pikethowe’, it appears as ‘Pikethon’ in a Transactions article of 1875).

pikit  see pykit

the pillar  (thu-pi-lur) n., arch. raised platform in a church on which penitents had to appear at prescribed times, equivalent in function to the repentance stool. In St. Mary’s this was probably located along the same wall as the pulpit, surrounded by a rail and reached by a small ladder. The one in Wilton also required a ladder – ‘…they had to appear on a small raised platform, sometimes termed ‘the pillar’, and at other times ‘the stool of repentance’, which occupied a conspicuous place in the church’ [JJV].

Pilmuir  (pɪl-mʊr) n. farm near Wulliestruther and Hawick Moor, also known as the Muir Farm. It is part of the Common feued to the farmer, being set up as a 250 acre farm and leased to John Wilson in 1787, with rent going to the Common Good. Part of the farm was used for Common Riding races before 1854. George Hart was farm steward there in 1861 and James Stein recorded as farmer there in 1868. ‘Mrs. Reid, with Betsy the Cow, Pilmuir’ was painted by J.E.D. Murray in 1889. The riding of the marches at Pilmuir resumed as part of the Thursday morning events from 1900, with the entire Common being encircled in the ride. It was also the location of the partaking of Curds and Cream (and hence ‘the Hut’) at the Chases in the years 1882 and 1901–11. A piece of worked flint found there is in the Museum (the origin is possibly from Old Welsh for ‘bog or pond’ plus ‘muir’ or Old English ‘pøel’ for a stockade, thus meaning an enclosed moor).
Pilmuir Rig

Pilmuir Rig (pil-nur-rig) n. hill above Pilmuir farm, also used as the name of the small farm to the south of the main farm of Pilmuir. This farm was first let to Thomas Scott in 1778, after the Division of the Common. The name is also applied to the surrounding part of Hawick Common. On maps it specifically applies to the high ground to the south-east of Pilmuir farm. The area was used for the morning race meetings of the Common Riding from 1822–53 – ‘... And round Pilmuir-rig we’ll canter, Down the Bailie-hill we’ll scamper’ [AB], ‘Pilmuir Rig and Everha’, Scawmill and Stirches Mains; Drinkstone, Tandlaw and Boonper’ [AB], ‘Pilmuir Rig we’ll canter, Down the Bailie-hill we’ll scamper: : : : ’ the Pilmuir Stakes (tu-thu-pil-nur-staaks) n. race during the Common Riding, at one time for the Cornet’s Father and his supporters. It was started at least as early as the 1880s.

Pilmuir Syke (pil-nur-sik) n. former ditch near the Flex, lying on the boundary of the old Common. It is not clear exactly where it was, even based on the 1767 description of the Common, and the map drawn up by J.P. Alison. James Wilson describes it as lying ‘at the head of Flex inclosures’.

Pilstown (pils-town) n. said to have been the commander of some English persecuting regiment that passed through Hawick in 1716; however, it is unclear who he was. The Council charged the Burgesses to help transport their baggage to Lauder, and townspeople were also meant to provide billets for the soldiers. Some citizens of Hawick refused to provide for the men or to help carry their baggage, being then fined or imprisoned – ‘A party is fined for disobeying the bailies anent the quartering and billets given for the said Pilstown’s Regiment last week’ [JW], ‘Or wi’ the serfs o’ Pilstown rin, For Hawick has had mae Habs than ane’ [AD].

pin (pin) n., arch. a wooden or bone knitting needle (also peen).

pin (pin) n., arch. amount of linen that will go through a mangle at one time – ‘The mangle-wife charged a penny for three pins’ [GW], a quantity of thread – ‘To find what ‘rule’ is wanted to beam any warp, multiply the porters on the yard by 40, and divide by the number of threads in the pin’ [BCM1881] (also peen).

pinch (pinch) n., poet. an iron bar with a pointed end, a crowbar – ‘With vengeance keen, and heavy oath, To burst the door they try’d; And gavelock, pinch, and sledge hammer, With might and main they plied’ [JTe].

pind (pind) v., arch. to impound – ‘I’ll pind them ... till I find out the boost or birn’ [JR].

pindin (pind-in) n., arch. constipation.

pindit (pin-dee’, -i’) pp., adj., arch. constipated.

Pines Burn (pinz-burn) n. small stream that rises on Pike Fell and runs roughly to the north-east to become part of the Harwood Burn.

pingle (pinz-ul) n., arch. a small pan – ‘... twa-three eggs ... Were boiling in the pingle’ [HSR].

pingle (pinz-ul) v., arch. to toil, struggle, work in a trifling way or work industriously and with difficulty – ‘... many an industrious housewife was able, by hard ‘pingling’ to augment a husband’s scanty wage’ [JTu], ‘Ti pingle = to labour with assiduity (cf. Wilson’s ‘Tales’): ; to strive; work hard (cf. Ramsay’s). Often applied to the toiling of a seamstress, pinglin an shew-win’ [ECS], applied specifically to snow whirling about, as if struggling to reach the ground, to tingle – ‘Far better had I em’d an’ miss’d. I only hurt my pingin’ fist ... ’ [WP].

Pinglehole (pinz-ul-hol) n. former farm just south of Saughtree off the B6357 by the Liddel Water, now being just a couple of cottages. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it extended to 339 acres, bounded by Saughtree, Burnmouth, Riccarton and ‘Leys’. It also shared a small strip of common land with Saughtree and the farmhouse was in roughly the location of the modern cottages. William Elliot was there in 1694. Pinglehole Sike joins the Liddel River near there. Robert Armstrong was shepherd there in 1797. There were Hislops and Grieves there in 1841 (shown on Pont’s 1609 map as a tower-house, ‘Pingillholls’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Pingilholls’, on de Wit’s c. 1680 map as ‘Pingilholls’ and is ‘Pingleholls’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is probably the place marked ‘Hole’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it was ‘Pingleholls’ in 1662, ‘Pingilholls’ in 1694 and appears to be ‘Pinglehole’ in 1797; the origin may be either ‘enclosure in the hollow’ or ‘valley of toil’).

Pinglehole Sike (ping-ul-hől-sík) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Shiel Knowe and running roughly southwards to join the Liddel Water downstream from Saughtree.

pinion (pin-yin) n., arch. a pivot.

Pinkie Cleuch (pi-ng-kwur-kluoch) n. small stream that passes the farm of Sunnyside and joins the Kirkton Burn (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

pinny (pin-kee) n. little finger – ‘A staved ma pinny on that hanlle’, any small thing (from Dutch; also spelled ‘pinky’).

Pinkie (ping-kee) n. battle site by the Esk near Musselburgh, also called Pinkie Cleugh. Here in 1547 the Scots under Hamilton Earl of Arran, were defeated by the English under Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset (who had been the Earl of Hertford). Somerset had come to seize the infant Mary, who was instead spirited away to France. The huge losses of the Scots led to this day being known as ‘Black Sunday’. It was the last engagement of the two national armies. Many local men must have been involved, and the dead included George Home, Laird of Wifiee. Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch led part of the Scots force, while the Kers switched sides and supported the English (it is written as ‘Pynkye Field’ in 1547/8).

Pinkie Burn (ping-kee-burn) n. stream that runs past Falside farm and joins the Jed Water.

pin-mitten (pin-mi-in) n., arch. a woollen glove made on a wooden knitting needle.

Pinnacle (pi-nkul) n. farm on the south bank of the Ale Water, just east of Belses, in Ancrum Parish. It is part of a charter, along with Broomlands, given by Robert Scott of Howpsley to Hector Turnbull in 1550. It was owned by the Kers of Cavers Kerr in the 17th century. In 1643 these lands in Ancrum Parish are recorded as ‘Morishall, his lands in Belses called Pinnacle’, valued at £766 13s 4d; however, it is unclear what ‘Morishall’ refers to. It was owned by George Wauchope in 1678 and valued at £500. A small part seemed to have also been included among the lands of Walter Scott of Burnhead and valued at £42, while the main part was valued at £500 and owned by William Sibbald. John Park was there in 1797, Roderick McKenzie in 1852 and William Thomas in 1868. There is a square-shaped dovecote there (it is ‘Pinnakill’ in 1608, ‘Pinacle’ and ‘Peickhill’ in 1678, ‘Penickle’ in 1684 and ‘Penickhill’ in 1788; this is probably the ‘Pendickle’ on Pont’s 1590s manuscript and ‘Pendickill’ marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Pinnacle (pi-nkul) n. former name for lands near Clarilaw, to the north of Hawick. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describe it as ‘Pennick-hill or Pinacle’, partly owned (along with Wester Clarilaw) by the trustees of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, with the other part owned by William Scott of Burnhead. It may be the same place as Pinnacle near Belses.

pinnin (pi-nin) n., arch. a beating, drolling (noted by E.C. Smith).

pinchers (pin-shurz) n., pl., arch. pinchers.

pipe (pi)p adj. relating to the bagpipes – ‘that was guid pipe music’, ‘hi was in the pipe band’.

pipe-an-dottle (pi-p-an-d-utu) n., arch. a large ripe acorn still on its stalk – ‘But for borrowed beauty oot o’ a bottle – I wadna gie ye a pipey dottle!’ [WL] (also written ‘pipey dottle’ etc.).

pipe-an-kivver (pi-p-an-kiv-ur) n., arch. an acorn still in its case, a variant of pipe-an-dottle.

Pipe Hill (pi-p-hil) n. hill above Pipewellheugh, the steep banking off Buccleuch Road on the way out of Hawick.

Pipeloch (pi-p-loch) n. fanciful name for the source of the Pipewell spring – ‘It minds me of those youthful days When we went hand in hand, To sport upon the Pipeloch braes, A blythe-some little band’ [VW], ‘And a’ my heart’s thirst slocken in the Pipeloch clear and cool’ [JYH].

piper (pi-pur) n. a person who plays the pipes, usually meaning the bagpipes, although possibly other instruments. In 1627, 2 of those were listed by the Bailies of Hawick as ‘idle and masterless’ men fit for military service were named as ‘pyppers’, John Tait and John Laiing. In 1632 the Lord of Buccleuch made a payment ‘to three English pyppers at Branxholm’. In 1672 the Bailies requested that the Baron of Regality only use the Town’s own drummer and piper to ‘set the fair’. William Turnbull was elected as Town Piper in 1674 ‘and directed at even and morn and other solemn occasions, to go through the town with the drum’. James Turnbull (d.1686) was piper to Abbotrule Parish. The ‘town’s officer, piper, and drummer’ were each allowed money for new coats in 1702, suggesting that at this time the piper was a separate position. In 1704 it is recorded that funds were needed for ‘pyppers shoes’. In 1747 (because of the debt over Teviot Brig) the Council ordain that the Town would not give an allowance to the piper, but ‘what people shall give him out of their own pockets’ (see also Toon Piper).

Piper Burn (pì-pur-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising in Harden Moss and flowing roughly westwards to join the Liddel approximately opposite Powisholm farm.

piper-faced (pì-pur-fàsèd) adj., arch. pale-faced (from the former belief that playing pipes was harmful for the lungs).

Piper’s Knowe (pì-pùrz-nòw) n. north-eastern spur of Greenbank Hill in the Borthwick valley.

Pipersteed (pì-pùr-stèd) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Piperstede’ in a rental roll of c.1376, and valued at 4 shillings. It was part of the area known as ‘Ludhe’, which made up part of the western side of the Liddel valley, so it was probably situated somewhere to the north-west of the present-day Newcastleton (it is possibly the same as ‘Piknesteid’ recorded in 1541).

the pipes (tù-pìps) n. the bagpipes or Border pipes. In Hawick it seems that the traditional instrument was the bagpipes in the 18th century, with the Town Piper being hired until about the turn of the 19th century, when he was effectively replaced with fifers. However, it is uncertain if there were fifers earlier than this, and it is also unclear when the town started to have a piper – ‘she raised ti play jist the chanter, bit now she’s moved on ti the pipes’ (see also Toon Piper).

pipe-stapple (pip-staw-pul) n., arch. a clay pipe stem, pipe shank – ‘I’ll go to such a place, though it should rain auld wives and pipe-stapples’ [JoJ], ‘We got dirty bletthers at the Killin’-house and blew them up wi’ pipe-stapples for fitbas’ [HAST1958], hence any small thing (also pipe-stopple and ‘pipe-stopplit’ or ‘peip-stopplet’; J. Jamieson notes that ‘stapplick’ was a synonym in Roxburghshire, see stapple).

pipe-stopple legs (pip-sto-pul-legz) n., pl. extremely thin legs on a person or animal.

the Pipe Well (tù-pìp-wèl) n. spring at Pipewellheugh, fitted with an iron pipe and trough, which supplied water for travellers along the New Road.

Pipewellheugh (pì-pùl-, pìp-wèl-hèw, hèwèh) n. steep wooded bank on the other side of the main road from Langlands Bridge, in the middle of which a stream supplied the Pipe Well. The name has also been used to describe the area around the well. Before the main highway was directed that way in 1815, it presumably just had a smaller-scale track. A dry-stone wall was built along the New Road there in the late 19th century, using stones from the Mid Row. The wall was entirely rebuilt in the mid-1990s. A strong garlic smell in the area is due to the abundance of Ramsons Allium ursinum, i.e. wild garlic. There were also lands in Jedburgh called by the same name in the 17th century. From a verse written around the time of the disputed 1809 Common Riding it seems clear that a senior member of the Town Council lived near here at that time – ‘Trace the source of all your troubles Where the Pipe’lheugh fountain bubbles; There a groggy club are lolling, While the Sabbath bells are tolling’ [JH]. ‘It is exceedingly abundant in woods and shady banks such as Pipe-well-heugh’ [JAHM].

Pipleheugh (pì-pùl-hèw, -hèwèh) n. shortened form of Pipewellheugh, also being a name used in the 19th century to refer to a piece of land west of Balcar, and somewhat distant from Pipewellheugh. More confusingly its name was later changed to Pipewillaugh, and now corresponds roughly to Langheugh Road.

Pipleheughfit (pì-pùl-hèw-fè) n. name used for the foot of the Pipewillaugh area. It is referred to in a boundary dispute of the 1780s, between Elliot of Langlands and Scott of Buccleuch.

the Pipleheugh Well (tù-pì-pùl-hèw-wèl) n. iron trough on the south side of Buccleuch Road near Langlands Bridge. Once a source of drinking water for horses or cattle entering the town from the south. A series of land slips in the 1980s resulted in the demise of the spring which fed the trough. The supporting wall along the roadside was rebuilt in the 1990s.

Pirnie (pir-nee) n. Alexander ‘Alex’ (1825–79) local stone-mason. He was born in Edinburgh, son of stone mason Alexander and Agnes. Apprentice to his father in Kilkliston, he then moved back to Edinburgh, where he worked for the architects firm Peddie & Kinnear in Edinburgh, and for James Harkness, builders in Hawick in 1859. His workmanship can be seen at 4 Tower Knowe in the ornamental cornices on what was the Commercial Bank and at the former Royal Bank of Scotland at 12 High Street. He also carved the bust of Burns that is at the Burns Club, as well as a head of Garibaldi and the lions on the Monteath Mausoleum. By 1861 he is living in Wilton, where he appears to have stayed for the rest of his life. He died intestate, and was then described as a ‘stone-hewer’. He married Isabella Dawson, and had at least 2 children, Janet and Alex. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery.

the Playin Fields (thu-plâ-in-feeldz) n. name sometimes given to the part of the Park on the south side of the river, off Buccleuch Road, used for playing various sports. Roughly the same area has also been known as Corseflat and the Gardener’s Haughs. It was at one time a nursery, then known as Wester Nurseries, and then was allotments. A petition of 1859 asked the Duke of Buccleuch to keep this trip of land for recreational use. It was gifted to the town in 1931

by later Duke, after he had passed through Hawick during the Vertish Hill children’s procession. It was hence also known as ‘the Buccleuch Playing Fields’, is about 5 acres, and effectively forms an addition to the Park. An all-weather sports ground was built there in 2005, adjacent to the Volunteer pitch, and also referred to as Volunteer Park.

the Playlaw (thu-pla-law) n. name for the area around the Mid Raw (now Drumanlag Square), in use in the 16th–18th centuries – ‘Bailie Graham and Thomas Bridges were ordered to collect westward from the bridge to the foot of the play la’ [PR1717] (origin possibly a form of ‘plea-law’ indicating a judicial use in the past; also spelled ‘Plalaw’, ‘Play-la’ and other variants).

Pleaknowe (plee-now) n. farmstead before Shankend on the Newcastleton Road, with the hill itself containing the remains of forts and settlements. It was once part of the farm of Langburnshiel. John Armstrong was shepherd there in the 1840s to 60s. It could be the ‘Placknowe’ near Hawick where W. Scott was recorded in a directory of 1868 (the etymology is possibly related to a quarrel).

pledge (plej) n., arch. a person standing as security for another, a hostage – ‘…Philipe Turnbull, as plegis and soueret for Stewyn Turnbull, his brother …’ [SB1500] (arbitrarily plural in older local documents).

the pledges (thu-ple-jeez) n., arch. a game popular with youths up until the latter part of the 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson). It involved 2 teams of roughly 12–20 a-side, and was played on open ground with a line drawn and with coats, hats etc. acting as the ‘pledges’, placed 20 or 30 yards from the line. The object of the game was to capture the ‘pledges’ of the opposing team without being caught. Captures occurred through either being touched in ‘enemy territory’ or dragged over the line. Such players then became ‘prisoners’ who could be freed by being touched by a member of their own team. The game often started with a mock taunt such as ‘Set your foot on Scotch ground, ye English, if ye dare!’ The teams often formed themselves into 2 lines, with the stronger boys in front and the faster ones behind. Wilson’s description sounds astonishingly like rugby, which would only be played in Hawick from 1872 – ‘…to enjoy on the Haugh …a game at ‘the pledges’, which sport was greatly in vogue among youths in those days …’ [RM].

pleesant (plee-zin’, plee-zint) adj., arch. pleasant – ‘…the pleesent herp wi’ the psaltrie’ [HSR], ‘…for it is pleesint, an’ prayse is bonnie’ [HSR] ‘…thoughts o sic bonnie bits ti pit by an huirred in eis posie o pleezant maineries’ [ECS], ‘Stinty Knowe then the Cala Burn There isna a walk mair pleesant …’ [AY], ‘Some pech wi beagles owre the leys, And think it pleasant …’ [DH].

Plummer (pu-mur) n. Andrew of Middleestead (17th/18th C.) farmer in Selkirkshire. In 1678 he paid the land tax on part of Lindean in Selkirk Parish, as well as lands in Midlem (in Bowden Parish). Also in 1678 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, in 1685 for Selkirkshire and in 1690 for Selkirkshire along with William, probably a son. In 1711 he was one of the founders of the ‘Honest Country Club’. His son Gavin became a Burgess of Edinburgh, and his grandson Andrew became one of the first Professors of Medicine at Edinburgh University in 1726, while a later Andrew of Middleestead was another enthusiast of the Border ballad whose death allowed Sir Walter Scott to become Sheriff-depute of Selkirkshire. He was succeeded by his son William, who married Jane, daughter of William Kerr of Sunderland Hall. Andrew of Middleestead (1748–99) Sheriff of Selkirkshire, preceding Sir Walter Scott in this office. He was also known as an antiquarian. He owned Sunderland and Sunderlandhall as well as Middleestead. He paid the land tax in Selkirk Parish in 1785. In 1788 he is listed among the voters of Selkirkshire. He had 4 horses according to the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Jane, sister of Gavin Elliot of Midlem. Their children were: William, who succeeded; Gavin, a merchant in Edinburgh; and Margaret, who married Andrew Waugh and whose grand-daughter married Charles Scott of Woll. He appears to have also married Mary, daughter of Pringle of Torwoodlee, and she died in 1839. Gavin (17th/18th C.) son of Andrew of Middleestead. He was a merchant in Edinburgh, also serving as Treasurer to the Town Council there. Along with Adam Scott of Burnfoot he sold the lands of Burnfoot to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712. The Plynine Coy. Ltd. (thu-pli-neen-kum-pi-nee-li-i’-ceed) n. chemical company in Hawick around 1900, manufacturing household ammonia and other products. The Museum has a stoneware ammonia bottle so labelled. The company was mainly based in Edinburgh and finally folded in 1959.

poach (poch) v., arch. to work aimlessly, poke about – ‘A wheen folk oot picnickin at a deike-fit on Duninionside … war thrang poatchin aboot an maskin tei’ [ECS] (also written ‘poatch’).

poachin (pochin) n. the act of taking fish or game illegally. This has a long history locally. ‘Kinly Stick’ (George Hunter) and ‘Heather Jock’ (John Mitchell) were well-known local poachers in the mid-19th century. A large gang of poachers operated in the Borthwick valley in the early 19th century, with a reputation for even roasting whole sheep on their days-long forays; the local lairds and authorities formed a ‘posse’ which rounded up 20 of these men in 1832. The appointment of a constable in Hawick in about 1832 led to a domination of the practice. Views on the legality of taking salmon from local rivers have historically differed between various segments of the population. Skills with the ‘cleek’ and ‘geg’ have been carefully passed on for generations in some families.

pock (pok) n., arch., poet. a sack, poke, bag, wallet – ‘And straight they went to the tything pocke, ’Twas heapit to the heade … ’ [JTe], ‘Riven breeks an’ barkint face, As black as a coal pock; Ye’ll ken the creater ony place … It’s our might pock’ [TCh].

The Poetical Museum (θu-pō-e-e-kulmew-zee-um) n. book published in Hawick in 1784 by George Caw, with full title ‘The Poetical Museum, Containing Songs and Poems on almost every subject, Mostly from Periodical Publications’. It was the first significant publication from Hawick. It contains a miscellany of pieces, including the first appearance in print of some of the Border ballads (‘Dick o the Cow’, ‘Jock o the Side’ and ‘Hobie Noble’), as well as other ballads that had already appeared elsewhere (‘Child Maurice’, ‘Adam o’ Gordon’, ‘The Battle of Red-swire’, ‘Johnie Armstrong’, ‘Hardyknotne’ and ‘The Wee Wee Man’). There is a piece of verse from Thomas Telford, and a few poems that appear to be genuinely of local production, such as ‘The Braes of Branxholm’ and ‘Lines on the Death of Robert Scott, Esq., of Whitlade’.

There are also many anonymous poems that may be by local writers. However, most of the selections are pastoral verse, such as by Ramsay, and other well known writers of the day included Fergusson, Snollet and Thomson. Several variants appear to have been published, including some substituting the poem ‘Modern Chastity’ for ‘Acrostic by a young girl in Hawick’. The subscription list is also interesting, since out of 158 names listed (including 9 women), most are from Hawick and district, and so it gives insight into the supporters of literature and local traditions in the 1780s.

poind (poind, pind) v. to impound, seize, dis-train, explicitly a term in Scots Law relating to the seizure of a debtor’s property for sale – ‘Mr Patrick Cunningham is fined for reproach-full language against the bailies, in saying that in spite of them, and they were hanged, they should not poind him upon their decreet . . . ’ [BR1676], ‘. . . outlawed in ane deforcement of yr. officer when he come to poyned for his fyne . . . ’ [BR1693], ‘. . . otherwise the cattle so found will be poinded for trespass toties quoties’ [BR1777] (also spelled ‘poynd’).

the Police Act (θu-po-lees-awk’t) n. usually referring to the Police and Improvement Act of 1861, which revised Hawick’s Town Council, did away with the Burgesses, and altered the boundaries of Hawick to include Wilton. It is also sometimes known as the Burgh Improvement Act. This was a Special Act brought to Parliament, following the general Police of Towns (Scotland) Act of 1850 and an 1857 Act of Parliament ordering all remaining Burgh and County areas in Scotland to establish proper police forces, as well as elected councils responsible for paving, lighting, cleansing, etc. The Police force itself was set up following a separate Act of 1846. The bounds of the Town for the purposes of policing were stated in about 1850 to be within 1000 yards of the Cross (see also the polis).

the Police Court (θu-po-lees-kōr’) n. former term for the Magistrate’s court held in Hawick – ‘It is the Police Court To which I say ye should resort. There go and mark each separate case, There go and watch the Bailie’s face . . . ’ [JCG] (also Bailie Court).

the Police Station (θu-po-lees-stā-shin) n. the station originally situated in the old Town
the Policeman’s Brae

House, with the Burgh police force occupying a space below the Council Chambers. It later moved to the Cross Wynd, and was then into the new Town Hall building. This had 4 cells and an exercise yard. The separate station for the county police force was once on the Mill Path, built (or perhaps renovated) in the 1890s to designs by J.P. Alison. A new Station was built in 1964 at Wilton Hill, the Roxburgh, Berwick and Selkirkshire force being amalgamated into the Lothian and Borders Police in 1976. The Police Station in Denholm was formerly located on the south side of Eastgate, and there was also once a station at ‘the Coppers’ outside Roberton (see also the polis).

the Policeman’s Brae (thu-po-leez-munz-brâ) n. old name still sometimes used for the Cross Wynd, from the Police Station that was there until about 1964.

policy (po-lee-see) n. an improvement or development of a town, park of an estate, ornamental ground – ‘Bye the policies o Ancrum House to find out if possible who did the damage to Pollock Plantation’ [RG], ‘Sent for by Col. Vassall desiring me to trudge, plod.

the polis (thu-po-leez, pô-leez) n. police, referring to the police force, or one or more policemen or policewomen – ‘if ee deh stop that racket A’ll get the polis on ee’, ‘At the Polis Coort on Monday They will stand before the bar … ’ [ECS], ‘The Polis brings his previous bell. He’s now like any rock … ’ [WP], ‘… They never cared a rush for bailies, polis, or kirk-bell’ [DH]. A properly organised force took a long time to organise, with each Burgh left to make its own arrangements. In 1805 the Privy Council recommended that Roxburghshire should have a force of 39 men, but the county force was not established until much later. The Town Council resolved to improve the system of policing in 1806 (probably meaning that they employed a constable for the first time). In the early 19th century the Hawick Burgh force consisted only of the Sheriff Officer (or constable), plus the 2 Burgh Officers, and this for a population of about 7,000. A proper town force was established in 1846. A constable’s baton from the 19th century is in the Museum. There were also rural police stations, the one in Newcastleton being at 15 Douglas Square (see also the Police Station).

poll (pôl) v. to steal, especially to obtain apples or other fruits from a tree belonging to someone else – ‘let’s gaun polin for yer neebur’s aipples’, ‘oo aye went polin up Rosalee Brae’, ‘Whae raigerly tae on the Bankie Rangers fre Langlands Bank at a’ kinds o sportin contests fre cockerossie ti pollin aipples’ [IWL] (also written ‘pole’; presumably related to the word for hair-cut and related to ‘pollard’, and nothing to do with the use of a pole).

Pollach (po-lach) n. former lands in Liddesdale, on the opposite side of the river from Mangerston. In a c.1376 rental roll ‘Pollok’ is valued at 2 shillings. In 1541 it is recorded as ‘Pollok’, valued at 5 shillings and leased to Christopher Armstrong (possibly of Langholm). ‘Pollok’ was listed among Liddesdale lands possessed by Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in 1632. It is not marked on older maps, but Pollach Plantation appears on the modern Ordnance Survey map.

Pollock (po-llok) n. Rev. John minister of Minto Parish 1936–56. During his time the old Manse became uninhabitable and he rented Deanside. Robert F. (??–??) the Ponderosa (thu-pon-de-rô-sa) n. popular name for a walking route up the Nipkowes, along the side of ‘the Mair’ and back along the shores of Wulliestruther Loch. The loop has been frequently walked by many Westenders, after being popularised by a group of men about the 1960s, who would meet nightly at Thorterdykes to start the loop. It was named after the ranch in the TV show ‘Bonanza’. The name is also applied jocularly to the housing scheme at Marmion Road.

Ponderosa Cottage (pon-de-rö-sa-ko’-eej) n. name sometimes used for the cottage once lived in by the Jolly family by the old curling pond at St. Leonards.

Pont (pont) n. Timothy (c.1560–c.1614) son of a Fife minister, the exact years of his birth and death are unknown. He was given church lands by his father, and was appointed minister of Dunnet in Caithness. However, his fame is as an early Scottish cartographer, his manuscript maps of the 1590s being used as the basis of the atlas of Scotland published by Joan Blaeu (of Amsterdam) in 1654. Only a fraction of the original maps survive, amounting to 77 maps on 38 separate sheets. His manuscript map, usually referred to as ‘Pont 35(2)’, shows Hawick, along with part of the Teviot, Teviot, and Rule valleys. This is drawn (upside-down) on the bottom of a sheet depicting Nithsdale and surrounding area.

pooch (pooch) n., arch. a pocket, particularly one containing money, a purse – ‘A was vext A hedin socht a piece i ma pooch for ti moote i the road’ [ECS], ‘An empty pooch, an’ a bashed-in hat . . .’ [RM], ‘Ee’ve enew o’ poockets if ee’d eneuch tè fill thumb’ [JAHM], ‘. . . and the van-man hotched And hotched at his leather pooch’ [DH], ‘. . . than bi slippin a little saw and a trowel into eer pooch and off to the wuds . . .’ [DH] (also spelled ‘pooch’; cf. pouch and pock).

Porteous (pör-shis) n. Agnes (17th C.) cot tar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her forename is written ‘Agneus’. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1643 being in Rule. His lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £10. Andrew (17th/18th C.) shoemaker listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the Andrew listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was reported to the Session in 1725 when he required assistance ‘in regard of his numerous years and want of sight’. It was said that his elder son George was in a good financial position to support him, while his other son was not. His wife was Helen Scott. His children included: Helen (b.1680), born in Roberton Parish; Thomas (b.1684); and George (b.1688). His sons were probably the Hawick carriers of the early 18th century. Andrew (18th C.) recorded with surname ‘Perros’ in 1751 when he paid the Hawick Town Council for renting the ‘leach [probably ‘low’] prison’. It is unclear what the purpose was, and therefore what his occupation was. Andrew (18th/19th C.) butcher in Hawick. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he was listed as owner.
of part of Weensland, which had been purchased from Robert Scott. Francis (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. George (d.c.1684) tenant in Abbotrule. His will is recorded in 1684. George (b.1688) son of Andrew and Helen Scott, he was a carrier in Hawick. He was probably brother of Thomas, who was a carrier in Hawick at the same time. In 1716 he married Janet, daughter of William Harkness. Their children included: Mary (b.1720); Andrew (b.1721); Ann (b.1727); Bessie (b.1725); and James (b.1732). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Andrew and William Ogilvie and the 1727 one by Bailie Martin and Francis Ruecastle. Isobel (17th/18th C.) wife of William Taylor. She was recorded in the Hawick Session records of 1721 being rebuked for her drunken behaviour in the Kirk. James (d.c.1681) tenant in ‘Mintochill’ when his will was recorded in 1681. Perhaps the same James was owner of a piece of land in Lanton, according to the 1678 valuation roll. James (17th C.) tenant in Abbotrule according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1758 he married Margaret Brown (who is also referred to as being ‘Or Scott’, suggesting she was married earlier). Their children included: Margaret (b.1759); George (b.1760); and Janet (b.1762). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were shoemaker George Gardner and Church Officer Alexander Bunyan. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Portuis’. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. Perhaps the same John was recorded in Lanton in 1663. Lawrence (18th C.) overseer of the Turnpike roads in Hawick, he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1677. Margaret (d.c.1687) tenant in Ruecastle when her will was recorded in 1687. Patrick of Hawkshaw (d.bef. 1738) eldest son of John and Mary Ramsay, and descendant of the riever of the same name. In 1678 he became a Burgess of Peebles. He contributed £1100 to the Darien Company in 1695. He held a bond with Henry and William Elliot of Harwood in 1696, and raised an action against them for non-payment in the following year. In 1681 he married Mary, daughter of William Scott of Headshaw. She became an heiress on the death of her brother John, and so he gained lands of the Headshaw family in 1691 (making her husband confusingly ‘of Headshaw’ as well as Hawkshaw). He was involved in several ‘wadsets’ and in 1707 transferred all his remaining lands to his daughter Henrietta and her husband Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. He had another daughter Elizabeth, who married Alexander Williamson of Chapeltown. He died without a male heir. Robert (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1715 he was fined ‘for swearing by the name of God extrajudicially in ane lawful court, when not required thereto. He could be the Robert who married Anna Porteous in Hawick in 1705, but is more likely to be the Robert who married Esther Turnbull in 1708, whose children included: Janet (b.1718), who married weaver Charles Scott; Esther (b.1720); and Robert (b.1722). Roland (17th C.) resident at Sorbietrees in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Thomas (17th C.) Edinburgh ‘writer’ who leased the lands of Minto Craigend in 1686. Thomas (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He was recorded in 1718 being rebuked for having a horse race with John Turnbull on the Common Haugh on a Sunday. He could have been the Thomas, son of Andrew and Helen Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1684. He married Agnes Gibson in Hawick in 1714. Their children included: Andrew (b.1717); Robert (b.1720); George (b.1722); Thomas (b.1724); Agnes (b.1725). He may have been brother of carrier George, who lived in Hawick at the same time. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Borthuikbra’ in 1573 when he was presented for trial in Edinburgh by ‘Wat Scott in Hartwoodmyres’, son of William Scott of Tushielaw. He was probably tenant of Borthwickbrae. William (d.c.1682) tenant in ‘Stennilodge, Abbotroul’ when his will was recorded in 1682. He was presumably farmer at Stonedge (formerly spelled ‘Partis’, ‘Porteus’, ‘Portous’, ‘Portuis’, ‘Portus’ and variants).

porter (pör-ur) n., arch. a part of the weave, consisting of 20 spaces through which the warp threads are passed, the number of these per unit length determining the density of the weave – ‘In order to find the number of slips to warp any length of web, multiply the number of porters in width by the ells in length, and divide by 72’ [BCM1881].

porter (pör'-ur) n., arch. someone in charge of a gate, particularly applied in former times to the resident of Ewes Doors, perhaps a soubriquet for the keeper of a changehouse at the pass there, with Ninian the Porter recorded as tenant of Ewes Doors in 1567 – ‘Item, to the porter of Ewisdyer for the rest of a price of ane horse, xij £ x s.’ [SB1574].

Porter (pör'-ur) n. Alexander (19th C.) Superintendent of Police and Chief Constable in Hawick from about 1863. He was later Chief Constable for the county, based in Jedburgh.

Porterfield (pör'-ur-field) n. John (d.1604) briefly served as Archbishop of Glasgow during troubled times. Son of John, 1st Laird of Duchal, he was minister of Dumbarton, then Kilmarnock and Ardrossan. He was nominated somewhat mysteriously in 1571, after the position was forfeited by James Beaton. He was the first post-Reformation appointee, who was Archbishop in name only. However, a commission immediately investigated his appropriateness and it is unclear that he was ever consecrated. He later served as minister at several parishes, settling in Ayr in 1580.

Portheid (pör'-heed) n. name for former lands on the Stobs estate. It is listed in 1657, between Winningtonhall and Horselee, although the location is unknown.

the Ports (thu-pärts) n. gates to Hawick, which could be closed to defend the Town. Hawick once consisted of basically a single street (the High Street, continued by Silver Street and the Howegate) and no bridge access across the Teviot. There were 4 roads leading out of town in different directions, with gates that would be locked at night. These were the North Port (on Walters Wynd, which led to the river ford), East Port (roughly opposite Baker Street), South Port (at the Cross Wynd), and West Port (at the foot of the Loan). Plaques to mark their former positions were placed by the Callants’ Club in 1964. As well as these major ports, there were also at least 3 minor gates, located at the Mill Port, the Round Close and the Howegate/Silver Street junction. It is unclear when these ports were first constructed, but possibly shortly after Hawick became a Burgh in the 15th century. The ports were removed following the Turnpike Road Act of 1750, which allowed for the improvement of roads using income from tolls.

Porty (pör'-ee) n., arch. short form for Portobello, once a popular seaside resort for Hawick folk to visit by train, with its promenade pier, artificial wave pool and other attractions – ‘Aw wis just a lad at Wulton skuil Juist a wee bit fella When ma mother broke the news ‘Oor gaun tae Portabella’’ [AY].

poseetion (po-zee-shin) n., v. position – ‘... an’ was enlightened on the poseetion as regards the Common-Ridin’’ [BW1939], ‘... the famous G.L. McDonald hed held the poseetion in the year Wullie was born’ [IWL].

postcaird (pöst-kär’d) n. a postcard – ‘A mairecht enid ti the ‘Gazette’ Office, an bocht a wheen picter-postcairds’ [ECS]. ‘A expeckeet a letter, bit an hei wrait iz was a bare postcaird’ [ECS], ‘Whae reads a’ the cotton-gress postcairds there, Sae fer frac the haunts o’ men?’ [DH].

postmaister (pös-mäs-tur) n. postmaster, someone in charge of a post office. Hawick’s first postmaster was John Elliot, a tanner, who gave his services freely in 1767. He was followed by Mr. Turnbull, the schoolmaster, appointed by the Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, but he was found unsuitable. Then Elliot was re-appointed against his will! He stated that he was often away from home as one excuse, but was told that he was the only suitable person and so the public would just have to wait if he was away. James Inglis (schoolmaster and later Town Clerk) was postmaster in 1772, and at some later point the office was taken by Miss Inglis (probably James’ sister), who must have been one of the country’s first post-mistresses. Robert Armstrong took over in 1809 and held the position till his death in 1852. The position was then held by Francis Deans, George Deans, James Orr, H. Little and James M. Sampson, taking us up to the early 20th century – ‘But ... whae’s postmaster on Post Office Knowe, Sae fer frae the haunts o’ men?’ [DH].
the Post Office

the Post Office (thu-pōst-o-fees) n. Hawick General Post Office was for a century on North Bridge Street, at the corner of Croft Road. It was built in 1892 on ground that had been J.E.D. Murray’s studio, and allotments before that. The architect was J.P. Alison, and the foundation stone was ceremoniously laid by Mrs. Oliver (her husband having owned the land). A 2-storey addition was also designed by Alison in 1904. It was much altered over the years, with the sorting office moving to St. George’s Lane in 1972 and the Post Office vacating the premises entirely in 1993. The building later contained ‘Stampers’ bar and an Indian restaurant, and then the Con Club. Meanwhile the main Post Office moved to Safeway, which itself closed in 2004, leaving the Sandbed branch as the main one in the town. The earliest mention of local mail is from about 1760 when letters would come once a month from Jedburgh and be laid out in an open stall for collection. In 1766 the Council records show them paying a man explicitly to take a letter to Edinburgh. The origin of the organised mail service lies with Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, who (in 1767) started an experimental post thrice a week to and from Berwick and Edinburgh, with John Elliot the first part-time postmaster (note that Walter Scott of Harden had also pushed for twice weekly service from Edinburgh to Peebles, Selkirk and Hawick in the 1750s). A post office was established shortly afterwards through the efforts of the Duke of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain Robert Scott. James Inglis was recorded as postmaster in 1772 when he and Bailie Hardie were paid by the Council ‘for post letters, &c’; postage from Edinburgh at that time appears to have been 2d. Before the establishment of a post office the letters were exposed at a stall on market days, or on the flat tombstones of the kirkyard after Sunday services. The route from London was to Edinburgh via Coldstream, and then via Dunbar and Berwick, and then by pony to Kelso and on to Hawick. there was a theft of mail bags near Kelso in 1800. Miss Inglis (Joanna) was postmistress until 1809, when Robert Armstrong took over. The first mail-coach (on the Carlisle-Hawick-Edinburgh route) started in 1807, so that not all mail had to come from Berwick and Kelso. The situation changed utterly with the coming of the penny post in 1840. The location marked on Wood’s 1824 map was the corner of Silver Street and the Howegate. The Post Office moved from the foot of the Howegate to the High Street in about 1860 and then to North Bridge Street in 1892. By the late 19th century there were also receiving stations on Wilton Path and Dovemount. Several sub-post offices later existed throughout the town, including at 7 Sandbed, Dovemount Place, Wilton Dean and Burnfoot, and at Safe-way (closed 2004). Now only the Burnfoot and Sandbed branches survive – ‘But they’ve ta’en oor Post Office away, That hez been there for mony a day, They didni care what Hawick folk felt, Doon the river oo’ve been sellt’ [IWL].

Post Office Knowe (pōst-o-fees-now) n. hill on the Border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, just to the north of Craik Cross Hill. The name is mysterious – ‘Whae named yon hill-top ‘Post Office Knowe’, Fer frae the haunts o’ men, Ootbye Craik Cross abune Borthwick-heid? I’d fairly like tae ken’ [DH].

the Postrel (thu-pos-trul) n. name sometimes given to the doggerel verse ‘A True History of the Right Honourable name of Scot’, written by Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells and first published in 1688.

post-seek (pōst-seek) a., arch. bedridden – ‘Post-sick, Expl. ‘bedrid’, Roxb. Often used; but whether the meaning be the same with that of the phrase, Postit with sickness, is doubtful’ [JoJ].

pot barley (po’-bawr-lee) n., arch. barley that has been milled to remove the husks, for use in soups etc. – ‘...sending him to Sandy Neil’s for washing soda and pot barley’ [JTu].

Potburn (po’-burn) n. former farm adjacent to the Southern Upland Way, between Ettrick Pen and Pot Law. It was purchased by James Pott, W.S., in 1831. He was son of Gideon Pott of Dod (also written ‘Pottburn’).

potch (poch) v., arch. to trample soft ground into mud – ‘...when the Magistrates and other persons at the Common-Riding potched the ground he had plowed’ [C&L1767].

pot-shakins (po'-shā-kinz) n. pot scrapings, the last to come out, last of a litter – ‘The pot-shakins o a big West End family Jock came efter his threi brothers and six sisters’ [IWL].

the Pot Syke (thu-po'-sik) n. small stream in the upper part of the farm of Milingston. It flows roughly southwards to join the Dean Burn. There is a local tradition that there may be buried treasure there, and hence a suggestion that this may have been where the bronze Roman leg was found in 1820 (also written ‘Pot Sike’; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Pott (po', pot) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Dickson and their children included Bessie (b.1645). Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included John (b.1669). Probably the same Adam, with wife Janet Riddell, was father of Janet (b.1679). Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded in Kirkton Parish where he was married in 1714 (with no wife’s name given). Probably the same Adam married Helen ‘Kinarie’ in Kirkton Parish in 1717. His children baptised there included Adam (b.1717). It seems that he was separate from his contemporary who farmed at Wolfelee and Shankend. Adam of Hoscote (1690/1–1770) probably eldest son of George. He was tenant farmer at Wolfelee around 1715, moving to Shankend by about 1730. He purchased the lands of Hoscote from the Homes in about 1723, starting his family’s association with that estate. He seems likely to be the Adam of ‘Outterside’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761 and was ‘of Hoscatt’ listed along with his son George among the Commissioners of Selkirkshire. He married Betty Elliot (1686/7–1752). His children included: George (1712–70), who succeeded; a daughter (1716/7–1774) who is only marked on the gravestone as ‘Mrs. Elliot’; Elizabeth (d.1783), who married Thomas Stavert, tenant at Coliforthill; William (b.1725); Jean (1727–77), who married Walter Grieve, farmer at Airswood, and whose son John Grieve co-inherited Hoscote with George Stavert; William (again, 1728/9–75); and Janet (1730/1–57). The marriages of his daughters Elizabeth and Jean were at the same time in 1744 in Roberton Parish. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Learmonth in Roberton Parish in 1754 (and recorded as ‘Helen Learmond’ in Kirkton Parish). Their children included James (b.1765) and Adam (b.1768). He is probably also the father of John (b.1757), baptised in Robertson Parish. Alexander of Borthwickshiel (d.1796), probably related to the Potts of Todrig, he was a surgeon in the West Indies. In 1788 he and Robert (possibly his son) are recorded as owners of Borthwickshiel, valued at £600. They were also recorded in 1788 as owners of land valued at £156, which had earlier been owned by William Scott of Galalaw (and was presumably Galalaw itself). His connection with Galalaw suggests that he was related to George of Todrig (possibly his father), who had married Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw earlier in the 18th century. He is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for Roberton Parish in 1789–92. Although he died one year earlier, he is still recorded as owner of 2 farm horses and 2 carriage or saddle horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid tax for having 3 non-working dogs at Borthwickshiel in 1797. He was still listed as owner of Borthwickshiel on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (with George of Todrig listed as owner later in the 19th century). His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1796, when he was recorded as a bachelor of Robertson, Selkirkshire. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1793/4–1859) younger son of Gideon of Dod, born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Burnfoot in the Ewes valley. He was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He was at Burnfoot in 1841 and in 1851 was farmer of 2600 acres, employing 10 people. In 1823 he married Appalina Hogarth (who was born in 1796 in Channelkirk). Their children included: Mary; Elizabeth; Apalina Christina Hogarth, who married Robert Laidlaw Turnbull, one of the Turnbuls of Merrylaw; and probably Gideon (d.1913), who emigrated to Queensland. Andrew (17th C.) weaver living at ‘Todscleughysye’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (1759/60–1844) son of Robert and Margaret. He was a resident of Castleton Parish and is probably the shepherd at Tweedenhead recorded on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He married Betty Armstrong (1758/9–1820) and they had a son Robert (1801–75). The family are buried in Castleton. Arthur David Ripley (1862–1901) eldest son of Gen. David of Todrig and Borthwickshiel. He served with the K.O.S.B., being appointed Lieutenant in 1886 and Captain in 1894. He volunteered for active service along with his battalion in 1900 and was Staff Officer to the Commandant of Schweizer Reneke. He died of an abscess of the liver and is buried at Kimberley, South Africa. A memorial stone was erected in Roberton Cemetery. Gen. David of Todrig (1812–81) son of George and Katherine Reid and younger brother of George. He served in India during a rebellion in 1833 and during the Sutlej campaign, where he commanded the 47th Bengal Native Infantry. He received commendation for his command in Pegu Burnah in 1854 and for commanding the 47th Regiment during the rebellion in China in 1858–59. He became a General in 1877 and was awarded the Companion of the Bath. He owned the lands of Whitlade and Borthwickshields, among other local holdings. He married Mary Anne, daughter of Col. Ripley, and she died in 1870. Their children were: Capt. Arthur David Ripley, who died in the Boer War in 1901; Emily Louisa, who married Capt. Sydenham L. Lambert; Anne Sophia, who married Lieut. Reginald C. Hadrow; Lucy Ada; Eliza Davidson; and Constantine (d.1875). In 1876 he secondly married Anna Frances, daughter of A. Boyle from Dublin, and she died in 1878. They had a son, Henry Percy, as well as daughters. He himself died at Borthwickshields. Edward Helme (1880–1968) son of Col. William of Knowesouth, he achieved the rank of Lt. Col. He married Louise Medora Hermione Vannbeck and had a daughter, Hermione. George (1650/1–1720) perhaps the oldest local Pott with known connections to the Todrig and Hoscote family. He has one of the earliest tombstones in Borthwick Waas, which appears to say that he was ‘of Whilhill brae’ (probably Whitehillbrae on the Dod Burn). He is said to have married an Elliot and had 14 children, probably including: Adam (1690/1–1770) of Hoscote; possibly John of Caerlenrig (1692/3–1772), but this could have been his nephew; Robert (c.1696–1711); George of Todrig (1699/1700–81); and James of Dod (1701/2–65). He was therefore the progenitor of the Potts of Caerlenrig, Dod, Hoscote and Todrig. He is surely the same man as the tenant in Whitehillbrae and Newton, whose children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Mungo (b.1708); John (b.1708); Janet (b.1710); and Thomas (b.1712). The name of his wife is not recorded. George of Todrig (1699/1700–81) son of George who died in 1720. He is recorded in 1762 when Christian, widow of Charles Scott of Cramhaugh, was involved with him in a court case to recover money owed to her husband. He was listed along with his son George among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw about 1754 (although possibly the George and Elizabeth Scott who were married in Roberton Parish in 1738); she died in 1755, aged 42. He purchased the lands of Caerlenrig from Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig and secondly married Robert’s daughter Margaret (however, this could be confusion with other Potts). Altogether he had 2 daughters and 6 sons. His eldest son George (1739/40–81) succeeded to Todrig, while his son John (by his first marriage) succeeded to Caerlenrig (but again this could be confusion with other family branches). It is also possible that Alexander of Borthwickshields was another son. He is probably the George of Todrig recorded as liferenter of lands in Headshaw in about 1788 (although deceased by then). George of Hoscote (1712–c.80) son of Adam of Hoscote. He inherited the Hoscote estate on the death of his father (perhaps in 1770). He was a witness to the will of Robert Grieve in Deanburnhaugh. He was ‘younger of Hoscott’ among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He died unmarried, probably around 1780, and bequeathed the estate to his nephews George Stavert (son of his sister Elizabeth) and John Grieve (son of his sister Jean). In 1783 there was a sasine in favour of his sisters, the only surviving children of Adam: Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Stavert in Coliforthill; and Jean, wife of Walter Grieve in Airwood. George (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included Adam (b.1743), Betty (b.1750) and George (b.1775). He is probably related to George of Whitehillbrae, who had children baptised in Kirkton. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1765); John (b.1766); Jane (b.1767); Mary (b.1768); and Betty (b.1770). He may be the same man as the George whose children were baptised in Kirkton Parish at about the same time. George (18th C.) married Betty Stavert in Robertson Parish in 1766. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Agnes Tait in 1782. George of Todrig (1739/40–81) son of George and Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw. He was listed as ‘younger of Todrige’ among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He was still ‘younger’ in 1779 when Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto gave him liferent of much of Headshaw; this was part of Elliot’s plan to stack the Roxburghshire voters’ roll with his supporters. He is recorded paying the land tax on Todrig in 1785 and 1802 (even although he may have been deceased by then). He was also recorded as owner of the lands in Firth in 1788. Note that he is easily confused with his contemporary George of ‘Rig’ was probably the George of Todrig (separately and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. He as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace Deputy Lieutenant in that county. He also served of Selkirkshire, as well as Justice of the Peace and George and Barbara Turnbull. He was Convenor in 1796.

George in Caerlenrig by his son John (1765/6{1830) and Margaret Elliot (1737/8{1821). He was succeeded secondly Jane Little (1736/7–1775); and thirdly Margaret Elliot (1737/8–1821). He was succeeded in Caerlenrig by his son John (1765/6–1830) and also had a son Robert who died in childhood. He appears to have lived to the age of 92. George (18th/19th C.) married Agnes White in Hawick in 1796. George of Todrig (1780–1862) son of George and Barbara Turnbull. He was Convenor of Selkirkshire, as well as Justice of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant in that county. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. He was probably the George of Todrig (separately listed from George of ‘Rig’) among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1811 he was listed as owner of land at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish, as well as Brieryhill in Wilton Parish. He was listed as owner of Borthwickshiel in about 1874 (after he was deceased). A carved panel on a farm building at Todrig probably relates to him; it has the initials ‘G P’ at the top, a lozenge in the centre, and the inscription ‘REBUILT 1833’ at the bottom. He was listed with another George (probably of Caerlenrig) his father, even as Commissioners of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1819. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1851 he was ‘Landed Proprietor’ at Borthwickshiel. In 1807 he married Katherine, daughter of David Reid, commissioner of customs she died in 1833. Their children were: Jane Stephen (1808–88); Barbara (b.1810), who married James Erskine of Shielfield, probably her cousin; Eliza Davidson (1815–64); George (b.1811), Major in the Bengal Army; David (b.1812), General in the Bengal Army; and Stephen (b.1813), with the Bengal Engineers. His adult daughters Jane, Barbara and Eliza were living at Borthwickshiel House in 1841. He died at Borthwickshiel and is buried in Robertson Cemetery. George of Dod (1790–1862) born at Penchris, son of Gideon and Elizabeth Pott. He was the 3rd Pott Laird of Dod. He was educated at Jedburgh, Yarrow and Edinburgh University (probably the George recorded in medicine there in 1809). He was Lieutenant in the Roxburghshire Militia from about 1811 and became a Captain of the Roxburgh yeomanry cavalry in 1817. He went through a protracted legal battle with Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs (also junior captain in his regiment) over the deal their fathers had made over the lease of Penchris. He eventually lost the case in the House of Lords. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. About 1828 he rented Crawhill farm (now Bucklands) and lived there until he bought Knowesouth (from William Oliver Rutherford) in 1838. He was listed as resident of Crawhill in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was ‘Proprietor’ at Knowesouth and in 1851 was ‘Landed Proprietor, Justice of the Peace’ at Knowesouth, farming 112 acres and employing 5 labourers. He also ran the farm of Rucastle. About 1854 he sold the farm of Riskenhope (by St. Mary’s Loch) to John Scott, W.S. From cousins at Skelfhill he obtained an old copper pot, 19 1/2 inches deep, said by tradition to be the cauldron in which Lord Soulis was boiled at the Nine Stane Rig! He gifted this relic to the Duke of Buccleuch. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1813. He often told the story about meeting an old man, James Bunyan, herding his cow, and on asking him who was the worst farmer in the county was told ‘Weel, sir I think it is just yersel’. Along with Mr. Selby (factor to the Earl of Minto) he had the idea to build a bridge and roads to connect Hassendean station with Denholm (this being later implemented). In 1823 he married Jean (or Jane), daughter of William Elliot, architect; she died in Edinburgh in 1864, aged 64. Their children were: Jane (b.c.1825); Elizabeth (b.c.1826); Esther (b.1829); Thomasina (b.1830), who married lawyer James Oliver; Gideon (1823/4–1905), who farmed at Knowesouth; William (b.1833), officer in the 89th Regiment; Janet (d.1912); and Ann. He died at Knowesouth and the family are commemorated at Borthwick Waas. George, J.P. of Todrig and Borthwickshiels (1811–77) son of George and Katherine Reid, and brother of Gen. David. He served with the Bengal Army, reaching at least the rank of Major (and was listed as Colonel on his memorial stone). He was recorded as ‘George Pott, Esq. of Borthwickshiels’ among landowners in Robertson Parish in 1841. He gave the land for the new Kirk at Robertson in 1862. In 1840 he married Julia, youngest daughter of Rev. Robert-Sparke Hutchings and she died in 1872. Their children included: George (1843–46); Constantine; George (again, 1847–54); Katherine (1850–55) and Robert Constantine (1851–75), his only surviving son, who was a Lieutenant in the 76th Regiment. He is buried at Robertson, along with other members of his family. George (18th/19th C.) name of 2 men listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. One was at Wilton Lodge and the other at Crawhill. Neither of them are listed by 1840. George (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1852 he married Jane Bell. George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1855 he married Isabella Foster. George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabella Murray and their children included George (b.1859), Jane (b.1866), William (b.1867), William (again, b.1868) and James (b.1870). George (1842–98) younger son of James of Potburn and Jane Brown, and brother of George. He was born in Edinburgh. He succeeded his brother to the lands of Potburn and for some years lived at Lintalee. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1870. He moved to 55 Albany Street Edinburgh, and died. He married and had a family, probably being succeeded by James Gideon. George (19th/20th C.) brother of James Gideon. He succeeded to Potburn, but lived in New Zealand. Gideon of Dod (1757–1812) son of James and Jean Scott. He was a successful tenant sheep-farmer at Penchrise, apparently being let the farm by Sir William Elliott of Stobs at a reduced rate because he had lent some money towards the building of Stobs Castle. He was brother of Isabella (who married Thomas Usher of Courthill). A document of 1784 shows him clearing the debts of William Elliott (son of Capt. Robert) before he succeeded to Harwood. He also bought the farm of Riskenhope (formerly part of Rodono) from Hay of Duns Castle. He was granted a 77 year lease of Penchrise and Langside in 1794 (this being challenged when the son of the granter brought a court case against his son George). He is probably the Pott of Penchrise who subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is recorded at Penchrise on the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls and in 1797, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He paid the land tax at Dod in 1811. In 1783 he married Elizabeth Pott of Todrig, and she died at ‘Warebank’ (probably Weirbank in Melrose) in 1840, aged 84. Their children included: James (1784–85), eldest son; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1785–1855), eldest daughter, who died at ‘Warebank’; Jean (1787–88); George (b.1790), who farmed Penchrise; James (again, b.1792), who became a lawyer; Alexander, who farmed at Burnfoot on Ewes; another daughter; and Thomasina (‘Tomy’, 1797–1866), youngest daughter, who also died at Warebank. He is buried along with other family members at Borthwick Waas. Gideon of Dod and Knowesouth (1823/4–1905) eldest son of George and Jane Elliot, born at Penchrise. He was educated at Canonbie, the Grange School in Sunderland and Edinburgh University. He acquired parts of Ruecastle from Thomas Rutherford and William Oliver Rutherford of Edgerston. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1847. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He also acted as collector of county rates in 1848 and for several years afterwards (still being so recorded in 1866). He turned down an offer to be agent of the British Linen Company in Jedburgh. Along with Edward Heron Maxwell he implemented the building of a bridge and road (by public subscription) to connect Hassendean station with Denholm. He also arranged a collection to give a gift to the Duke of Buccleuch for appreciation of locally keeping fox hounds at his own expense (this being 2 candelabra). He entered the new volunteer cavalry as a private and later became a Lieutenant. He was an expert shot, winning the officers’ challenge cup of the Border battalion outright after 3 victories in a row, and placing well in several national competitions. He was a successful sheep-farmer and took pupils at Knowesouth for agricultural training. He was recorded at Knowesouth in a directory of 1868 and paid the land tax there in 1874. His sister Thomasina married James Oliver, lawyer of Mayfield House. He married Janet Hunter (also known as Janet Lean Hunter Hunter, 1826/7–1912), from Crawford, Lanarkshire, who died in Jedburgh. Their children included: Gideon (1862–1904), an engineer, who predeceased him, dying in Glasgow; Grace Murray (b.1863); William (b.1865), the only surviving son; and Agnes (‘Nancy’, b.1871). In 1891 his younger daughter Agnes married William Edward Oliver-Rutherford, and at the same time his elder daughter Grace Jane married Isaac Fenton Bayley (of Halls, Dunbar). Henry Percy (19th/20th C.) son of Gen. David of Todrig. He served in the military, being with the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers and in 1904 became a Lieutenant with the 5th Light Infantry, advancing to Captain in 1908 and temporary Major in 1915. His daughter Ruth Barbara (1910–61) married Ernest Keatting and is buried in Robertson Cemetery. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as owner of Caverton when he was fined for failing to appear at the Justice-aire. He later presented Nicholas Brown to give suit for his lands in Caverton. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Marion (b.1705), Jane (b.1707) and Margaret (b.1709). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their son John was baptised in 1716. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Andrew (b.1721). Probably the same James, married to ‘Agnes’ Scott was father of Agnes (b.1724). James (18th C.) farmer who, along with 2 brothers, rented much of Harwood from William Elliot about 1730. He may have been the son of William born in Cavers Parish in 1702 or could have been the same man as James of Dod. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1738), Thomas (b.1741), Elizabeth (b.1744) and unnamed children in 1744 and 1750. It is possible he is the same as James of Dod. James of Dod (1701/2–65) farmer at Penchrise and Langside. He was one of 14 children and possibly youngest son of George (who died in 1720). He married Jean, daughter of Gideon Scott of Woll, and she died in 1767, aged 48. Their children included: Elizabeth; Isabell, who married Thomas Usher of Courthill; George (b.1744), their eldest son, who died aged 4; Elizabeth (1756/7–83), 3rd daughter; and Gideon (1757–1802), 2nd son, who succeeded to Dod and farmed at Penchrise. He may be the James who had unnamed sons baptised in Cavers Parish in 1744, 1750 and 1757. He died at Penchrise and was buried at Borthwick Waas. James (18th C.) married Bessie Palmer in Roberton and Wilton Parishes in 1744. Their children baptised in Wilton Parish included James (b.1746), William (b.1748) and Isobel (b.1751). Probably the same James was father of Ann (b.1755), who was baptised in Roberton (and may be the Ann who married shoemaker George Shiel). James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Scott in that parish in 1753. Perhaps the same James is recorded marrying another Agnes Scott in 1767 (that marriage also being recorded in Hawick). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Scott and their children included Betty (b.1762). It is possible he is the same man as James of Dod. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Nichol and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1761. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Paterson and their children included: Janet (b.1761); Agnes (b.1761), who married Robert Young; and James (b.1764). James of Potburn (1792–1852) from the Penchrise family, son of Gideon and Elizabeth Pott, he was born in Cavers Parish. He trained as a lawyer, becoming W.S. in 1818. He was one of the trustees for the late Adam Stavert of Hoscote in 1828, along with one of the Georges. He bought the lands of Potburn, Selkirkshire in 1831. In 1838 he was listed as a writer in Edinburgh when he witnessed a document in Hawick (relating to the Dicksons). He married Jane, 2nd daughter of Peter Brown of Rawflat in 1839. His children included James Gideon and George. James (b.1839/40) son of Martin. He married Agnes Lamb in 1860 and their children (baptised in Hawick or Wilton) included Mary (b.1860), Martin (b.1863), Walter (b.1865), Jane (b.1867), Martin (again, b.1867), Margaret (b.1869), and William (b.1874). In 1861 he was living with his father at Upper Hope Park. James Gideon of Potburn (1840–65) eldest son of James of Potburn and brother of George. He was born in Edinburgh. In 1859 he obtained a commission as Cornet in the 11th Hussars. He was described as a ‘delicate, handsome-looking man’, but of poor health. He had to retire from the army and died at the age of 25. His brother George succeeded to Potburn. James Gideon (d.1915) from the local family, probably son of George of Potburn. He died in Salonika on active service with the Lothian and Borders Light Horse. His brother George succeeded. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Wilson and their children included William (b.1639). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Huggan and their children included Bessie (b.1646). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Johnston and their children included William (b.1655). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son William was baptised in 1674. Perhaps the same John was father of Agnes (b.1692). John (17th C.) resident of Bowanhill on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident of ‘Dodburne in Kirkton Parioch’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Poott’. Perhaps the same John in Winningtonrig had a child John baptised in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Miller in 1712. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1713) and Isobell (b.1716). John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Marion (b.1726); and James (b.1728). John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included George (b.1724), Robert (b.1725) and Margaret (b.1726). He may be the John who got married in Kirkton Parish in 1721 (wife’s name not given). John (1692/3–1772) succeeded to the lands of Caerlenrig from his father George (however, it is also possible he was a nephew of George). He and George ‘of Ridge’ (probably his son) witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Falnash in 1764. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls ‘in Rigg’ in 1789–91 (even although deceased by then). He married Mary Scott, who died in 1730, aged 34. He secondly married Isabella Currie, and she died in 1763, aged 50. His children included: Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1721/2–43), his oldest daughter; and George (1722/3–1815), who succeeded to Caerlenrig. He could be the John whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included Marion (b.1758) and Margaret (b.1759). It is also possible that he is the same man as John from Kirkton Parish, whose son George was baptised in 1724. He is buried at Borthwick Waas along with several family members. John (18th C.) recorded as ‘Workman’, probably in the Teviothead area. He married Margaret (or Marion) Craw in Cavers Parish in 1730. Their son James was baptised in 1738, with Walter Scott at Commonside one of the witnesses. He could be the John who was also father of Mary (b.1732) and John (b.1734), baptised in Cavers. Their son James (b.1738) was baptised in Hawick Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Shiel in 1739 and their children included: James (b.1740); Robert (b.1741); Janet (b.1744); Ann (b.1747); and Isabel (b.1751). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret ‘Betty’ and their children included Helen (b.1743). John (b.1745) was probably also his child. John (18th C.) schoolmaster at Caerlenrig 1762–63. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Clerk in 1760 and their children included John (b.1761), Betty (b.1766), Betty (again, b.1773) and William (b.1776). The witnesses in 1766 were merchants John Hardie and Adam Leyden. Note that at about the same time John Clerk was married to Margaret Pott, and so the couples may have been related. John (18th C.) married Janet Ogilvie in Castleton Parish in 1769. John (18th C.) mason from Hawick, who carried out much of the repair work after the 1767 flood, rebuilding the small arch of the Auld Brig and the wall of the Manse. He died a few years later, following an accident that occurred on the completion of the Hornshole Bridge. He was maternal grandfather of Alexander and Robert Michie, and hence probably father of Betty, who married Alexander Michie in Hawick Parish in 1797. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son John was baptised in 1754. John (18th C.) erected possibly the first stocking-shop in Hawick, in the back of the house adjoining Oliver Place (sold to the Olivers around 1875 and demolished). His father owned the property and the house at the front, bearing the date 1769. He is probably the John whose wife Peggy Turnbull died in 1795, the couple being married (declared in Wilton and Hawick Parishes in 1786). He is probably also the stockingmaker in Hawick who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mabel Nichol and their children included Robert (b.1792), Mabel (b.1794), James (b.1796), John (b.1798), Betty (b.1800) and Jean...
Pott

(b.1802). John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Robson. Their children included Helen (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796) and Elliot (b.1811). John of Rig (1765–6–1830) son of George and Isabella Currie, he held the lands of Caerlenrig. He is probably the ‘& Son of Rigg’ recorded along with George on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the ‘Mr Pott, junior, Caerlenrig’ on the subscription list for John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the John ‘Pott’s’, ‘Esq. Caerlenrigg’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He became a member of the Wisp Club in about 1827. He married Christian Aitchison, who died at Mackside in 1842, aged 82. He is buried with his father, grandfather and other family members in Borthwick Waas. There are documents relating to his family, covering the period 1743–1845, in the Borders Archive. Martin (18th C.) groom at Stiches in 1778, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. He was surely related to Robert, who was a stable-boy at the nearby Burnhead. He is probably the Martin who married Betty Gray and whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included Martin (b.1779). Martin (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1804. He is probably the son of Martin and Betty Gray born in Wilton in 1779. Martin (b.1803) son of Martin, he was born in Wilton Parish, where he worked as a wool spinner. He was living at Malt Steep when listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. He was living at the Malt Steep in Wilton on the 1841 census and on Wilton Kirkstyle in 1851. In 1861 he was a widower at Upper Hope Park. He married Mary Little, who was from Langholm. Their children included: Mary (b.1828); William (b.1830); Martin (b.1832), who became power loom manager of the Cumledge Mill; Ann (b.1834), who married Alexander Baillie, and was grandmother of Isabella Baillie; Margaret (b.1837); James (b.1839); David; and Alexander. Martin (b.1832) son of Martin and Mary Little, he was born in Hawick. In 1858 he married Martha Oliver and moved to Duns, where he was power loom manager of the Cumledge Mill. They had 8 children: Margaret (b.1859), born in Wilton; Mary (b.1861), baptised in Hawick; Agnes Wilson (b.1874), baptised in Wilton; and 5 others. Martin (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Simpson in 1864. Robert (d.c.1684) tenant in Langhaugh whose will is recorded in 1684. It is unclear which ‘Langhaugh’ this was, although probably in Roxburghshire. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Murray and their children included Helen (b.1758) and Jean (b.1758). Robert (1705/6–81) tenant in Hudshouse. He died at Turn and is buried in Borthwick Waas (with no other family members listed). He is surely the Robert ‘Potts’ who is listed as joint possessor (with William Elliot) of the farm of Turn in 1779. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Cavers in Kirkton Parish in 1755. Their children, baptised in Castleton Parish, included Andrew (b.1762), William (b.1765) and Walter (b.1765). John (b.1756), baptised in Castleton Parish, may also have been his son. It is possible he was the Robert who owned Demainholm (along with Matthew Little) according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Betty Scott, and their children included Jane (b.1760) and John (b.1761). Robert (18th C.) house and stable boy at Burnhead in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Scott. He could be the Robert who married Margaret ‘Robison’ in Hawick Parish in 1787. Capt. Robert of Galalaw (d.1803) recorded in Robertson Parish on the Land Tax Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1802. Probably the same Robert is recorded in 1788 along with Alexander, as joint owner of land valued at £156, which was presumably Galalaw, as well as Borthwickshiel, valued at £600. He was also recorded as owner of Galalaw on the county valuation and on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although already deceased by then). It seems likely that he was son of Alexander of Borthwickshiel and grandson of George of Todrig. He died at Borthwickshiel. Robert (d.1816) recorded as ‘old Tailor and Packman Midraw’ when his death was registered in Hawick. He could be the pedlar Robert who was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. Robert (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was recorded as a carter among male heads of households in the Parish in 1835–41. He was an agricultural labourer and carter on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, living on North Hermitage Street. He was listed as a farmer in 1861. He married Mary Armstrong (b.1811), who was from Canonbie. Their children included: Betty (b.1832); Margaret (b.1833), who married David Oliver; Andrew (b.1836); John (b.1838); Christopher (b.1840); Jane (b.1842); William (b.1845); Walter (b.1847), who moved to Glasgow; James (b.1849); Euphemia (b.1852); and Robert (b.1855). The couple were rebuked

for ‘antenuptial Fornication’ in 1832. The 1841 record says ‘to America and dead’, but that must be an error. Col. Stephen (1813–85) son of George. He served with the Royal Bengal Engineers and retired in 1862 with the honorary rank of Major General. There is a pink granite memorial to him in Roberton Cemetery. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in HowPasley. Along with William Telfer (also in HowPasley) and several other men from the upper Borthwick, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included William (b.1699) and Margaret (b.1708). Thomas (1723–1829) son of William, he was farmer at Toftholm in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses, and on the Dog Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 dogs. He married in 1763, but his wife’s name is unrecorded. He was probably father of Mary, who married Adam Robson, and perhaps John who married Betty Robson. He probably also had a son Thomas who was ‘Mr. T. jun.’ in 1821. Thomas (b.c.1779) inn-keeper of the Buccleuch Arms in Newcastleton, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is listed as a carter among heads of households in Newcastleton in 1835–37 and then as an innkeeper. He was surely related to Robert, who was a carter at about the same time. In 1841 he was at about 48 North Hermitage Street, with his wife Betty and children Helen and Betty. He married Elizabeth Hogg and their children included: Helen (b.1806); Anne (b.1808); Helen (again, b.1808); Thomas (b.1810); William (b.1812); and Robert (b.1814). He could be the ‘Mr. T. jun. Toftholm’ listed in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821; he was presumably son of the older Thomas. Thomas (19th C.) married Anne Scott in Cavers Parish in 1828. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Young and their children included James (b.1799). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included Helen (b.1655). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married ‘Issobell Heutsone’ in 1685 and their children included John (b.1687). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included John (b.1702). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Buckham in 1699. His children included James (b.1702). Anna (b.1704), baptised in Hawick Parish, may also have been his child. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Isabel Bryden in 1709. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. Possibly the same William was father of Thomas (b.1724), John (b.1727), George (b.1738), John (again, b.1740) and Margaret (b.1743). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Janet Hislop in 1734. William (18th C.) tenant at Hoscoate, recorded in a court case of 1754 with John Armstrong, tenant of Fingland, Dumfriesshire. William (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabella Mather and their children included: Janet (b.1825); Jane (b.1827); and an unnamed son (b.1829). William (19th C.) married Ann Henderson in Wilton Parish in 1842. His children included Agnes (b.1842), baptised in Ashkirk Parish. William (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Currie in 1859 and their children included Margaret (b.1858) and Mary (b.1863). William (b.1834) 2nd son of George of Dod. He was an officer in the 89th Regiment. He married a daughter of Thomas Helme of Surrey. Col. William (20th C.) probably son of Gideon. He served with the 27th Inniskilling Fusiliers. He lived at Knowesouth. His son was Lt.-Col. Edward Helme (formerly sometimes ‘Pot’; see also Potts, with which it was sometimes synonymous).

potted meat (po-’eed-mee’, -ee’-) n. dish made from boiled meat and bones, which sets into a jelly when cooled – ‘We aa killed pigs aboot that time an made the potted meat. An you got the potted meat potted heid’ [TH] (also spelled ‘pot’it’ etc.).

Potterlamport (po-tur-lam-pör’) n. name of a former tower, recorded on Sandison’s c.1590 map, roughly near where the Hermitage Water joins the Liddel. It was recorded in a rental list in the charters of the Douglass of Morton in about 1376, being worth 34 shillings. It could be the ‘Porter-landes’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. It was listed in 1632 among the Liddesdale lands of Sandy Armstrong. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1694. In the 1718 Buccleuch survey it is shown as a farm of 550 acres, bounded by Nether Harden, lands of the Laird of Whitaugh and Hillhouse. It also shared a common of 37 acres with the farm of Hillhouse and another of 24 acres with the Laird of Whitaugh’s tenant. It could potentially be the same place as Puddinburn, or else was merely a smaller house nearby. A small stream on the east side of the Liddel Water, between Castleton... and Whithaugh is called Pouterlampert Sike and
area has also been named ‘Pouter Lampert’ (it is ‘Pouterlampert’ in about 1376, ‘Powterlapmpert’
in 1583, ‘Porterlampet’ in 1632, ‘Polterlampert’ in 1694 and ‘Porterlumpt’ and ‘Porterlampit’ in 1718; the origin could be Celtic ‘polter’ meaning an upland stream, ‘lann’ meaning open land and

pottinger (po-tiig-ur) n., arch. a porringer,
large bowl-shaped utensil, usually for soups etc.,
an apothecary, druggist – ‘Given to the Pottingar, 12s’ [PR].

on Blaeu’s 1654 map to the south of Clearburn Loch, and perhaps confused with what is now called Kingside Loch. ‘Pot Loch’, which is little more than a pond, sits to the west of Shaws Upper Loch, between the Ale and Etrick valleys.

Potts (pots) n. Adam (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Nichol and their children included Elliot (b.1872). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1732. Andrew Petrie
(b.1822) born in Eckford Parish, son of William Hunter and grandson of Thomas. He was a stationer in Edinburgh. George (1793–1851) born in Oxnam Parish, son of Thomas and Andrea Petrie. He was a ‘writer’ (i.e. lawyer) when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is also recorded as a ‘writer’ on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and also writer in Hawick in the 1828 Edinburgh Almanack. He lived on Buccleuch Street, and was also listed there on Pigot’s 1837 directory.
He served as solicitor with the Sheriff Court in Hawick. He is listed as a joint proprietor on the 1833 electoral roll of Hawick, acquiring a house in Hawick from Robert Heckford of Kelso; Thomas (writer in Edinburgh) and Andrew Petrie (stationer in Edinburgh) are also mentioned, possiably his brother and brother-in-law. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as agent for Scottish Union insurance. He was recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1838 (relating to the Dicksons), with James Pott, W.S. also a witness (even although he was presumably not related). In 1851 he is a solicitor of the Roxburghshire Sheriff Court, living on Buccleuch Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory (published just after his death) the firm of Potts & Carmichael is listed as writers and no-taries on Buccleuch Street; he must have briefly been in partnership with the much younger James Carmichael. He married Janet Anderson in 1837, and she died in 1898, aged 84. Their children included: George, who died in infancy; and Andrew (1838–95), who took over the farm of his uncle John Henderson at Lewenshope, in the Yarrow valley, and married Jessie Mitchell. There is an obelisk to his memory in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. James (1737/8–1817) Sheriff Clerk for Roxburghshire. He is so recorded in 1780 and in 1799 was recorded as Clerk to the Lieutenant of Roxburghshire. He may have been son of Thomas.
He lived in Jedburgh. He paid tax on a male servant in Jedburgh from 1778 through the 1780s. In 1785–91 he was a writer in Jedburgh when he paid tax for having a female servant. He was writer in Jedburgh in 1785–89 and Sheriff Clerk from 1790 when he paid the Horse Tax. He may have been the James recorded in Kelso in 1786. In 1813 he paid the land tax in Jedburgh. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Betty Campbell and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1817. John (19th C.) from England, he was a resident of Castleton Parish for a while. He mar-rried Elizabeth Murray and their daughter Esther was baptised in 1857. In 1861 he was a railway mason living at Wormsleuch. Joseph (19th C.)
resident of Lawston in Castleton Parish. In 1832
he acknowledged that he fathered a child with Janet Ogilvie, from Greens. Thomas (18th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire. He is probably the Thomas who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1751. He is probably the Thomas, writer living in Kelso, who taxed for having male and female servants and horses in the period 1785–94 (and Jedburgh in 1788). He is probably the Thomas, married to Agnes Hogarth, whose son James was born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1795 (with the baptism in Makerstoun). He may also have had a daughter Mary who married Thomas Ainslie and brother of Hawick lawyer George.
Thomas (18th/19th C.) member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. He may be the Thomas, resident of Hawick, who subscribed to Robert Wil-son’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may also be the Thomas from Lurgiesleuch who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Bedrule
Parish. His children included Nancy (b.1824), Thomas (b.1829), Andrina Petrie (b.1831) and Isabel (b.1834). He was probably son of Thomas.
And Andrea Petrie. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott in 1837; she was daughter of Robert Scott and Agnes Scott, born in Wilton in 1818. Their children include William (b.1838), Robert (b.1840), George (b.1843) and Agnes (b.1845). He was living at Newhouses in 1841 and his widow was there in 1851 and 1861. William Hunter (b.1784) born in Oxnam Parish, son of Thomas. He was probably brother of George, solicitor in Hawick. He lived in Ashkirk Parish, where several of his children were baptised. In 1841 he was a farm worker living at Newhouses in Wilton Parish, and in 1851 he was farmer of 100 acres at Cawfaulds, near Horsleyhill. He married Isabella Mather and their children included: Andrew Petrie (b.1822), baptised in Eckford; Thomas; Janet (b.1825); Jane (b.1827); an unnamed son (b.1829); James (b.c.1830); David (b.1833); and Walter (b.1836). William (b.1817/8) originally from Jedburgh, he was farmer at Groundistone. He was listed as steward at Groundistone among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1851 he was farmer at Groundiston. His wife was Ann and their children included Agnes, William, John, Isabella, Janet and George. William (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His wife was Isabella Hermiston and their children included Isabella (b.1863), Thomas (b.1865), George Hamilton (b.1866), William (b.1870) and John Webster (b.1872) (see also Pott, with which it was sometimes synonymous).

John (b.c.1839) born in Hobkirk, son of Gavin, he worked locally as a blacksmith and in 1862 at Hobkirk he married Agnes Tinline of Jedburgh. Soon afterwards he emigrated to New Zealand, along with his wife and son. He became a successful sheep farmer, taking over his father-in-law’s farm ‘Fernieherst’. In 1905 he presented the ‘Pow Challenge Cup’ to Hawick’s bowlers, in memory of his father. Thomas (b.c.1805) shoemaker at around 42 High Street. He was listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory. His wife was Janet and their children included James, George, Catherine and Andrew. Thomas (19th/20th C.) son of William, he was blacksmith at Blacklee. He was involved with Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. William (18th C.) recorded being ‘in Hoscoat’ in 1754 when he was involved in a court case with John Armstrong of Finnigal. William (b.c.1780–1856) first of the local blacksmith family, residing at Branxholme Woodfoot from 1804. Son of Gavin and Rebecca, he came from Yarrow, where his brother Robert had made an early bicycle. He was a Trustee of the Relief Kirk. He was recorded at ‘Borthaugh Smithy’ in 1841, this being another name for Branxholme Woodfoot. He married Mary Crozier in 1803 in Yarrow and their children were all christened at Wilton, including: Christian (b.1804), who married James Tennant; Gavin (b.1806), who became Teviothead blacksmith; Eauphan (b.1808), who married John Davidson; Jean (b.1810), married Robert Jack; Rebeca (b.1812), married William Minto; William (b.1815), who carried on as Branxholme Woodfoot blacksmith; Helen (b.1819), married James Ovens, blacksmith in Hawick; and Mary (b.1822), who married William Murray. William (b.1815) master blacksmith at Woodfoot, son of William. In 1842 he married Elizabeth (b.1818), daughter of shepherd David Scott. Their children were William, David Scott, Jane (or Jeanie, who married watchmaker David Gaylor) and Mary. Later members of the family continued as blacksmiths in the Borthwick valley, acting as surgeon, dentist, etc., and even running an occasional bus service to Hawick. William (b.c.1828) son of Gavin by his first wife Mary Scott. After his mother’s death he was raised by his grandmother at Branxholme Woodfoot. He served an apprenticeship with his father at Teviothead, then worked for Alexander Smith (a vet at Appletreehall), before becoming blacksmith at Blacklee, Rulewater for over 40 years. He married Mary, daughter of James Cranston and grand-daughter of millwright Gideon Scott. Their children were James (vet, who emigrated to Canada), Mary (who married William Beverley, butler at Wolfelee and Governor of the Jedburgh Poor House), William (married and lived at Causewayfoot), Thomas (who became a blacksmith and married E. Winchestor) and Robert (rural postman who married Anne Sinclair).

powart (pow-ur’) n., arch. a tadpole, the minute-hand of a clock – Roxb.; perhaps from a supposed resemblance in its form to a tadpole [JoJ] (cf. powheid).

the Pow Cup ( thu-pow-kup) n. challenge cup competed for among Hawick’s bowlers, presented in 1905 by John Pow in memory of his father Gavin Pow. It is solid silver, weighing about 100 ounces and supplied by Murray’s of the High Street. It is competed for annually by pairs from the town’s 3 bowling clubs. The first winners were W.M. Pennycook and F. Colman of the Buccleuch Bowling Club. Mr. J. Wright won it in 1971 when he was in his 80s.

power-loom (pow-ur-loom) n. a weaving loom that is driven by a non-human source of power. These were invented by Rev. Dr. Cartwright in the late 18th century, and became common in the early 19th century. The first such machines in Hawick were introduced at Dicksons & Laings in 1830, brought back by Thomas Wemyss, and with the first 4 operators being Agnes Ferguson, Jane Leyden, Jane Parker and Tibbie Waters. Soon others were installed at Weensland Mill by Robert Greenwood, and elsewhere. By the middle of the Pow Gill

Pow Gill (pow-gil) n. small stream in southern Liddesdale, near the boundary with Dumfriesshire. It joins Haw Gill and runs into Muir Burn to the west of Greena Hill (it is marked ‘Poo Gill’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Powgillcraig (pow-gil-kráig) n. former farmstead in southern Liddesdale, south of the farm of Whisgills. Powgill Rig is the hill lying just to the west of there. The farmstead is named for a rocky outcropping there.

powheid (pow-heed) n., arch. a tadpole — ‘...although it is walloping as thrang with paddocks and powheads, as ever Mr. Grieve’s muckle pot was with beans and barley’ [WSB] (cf. powart).

powie (pow-e) n., arch. a young turkey (noted by J. Jamieson, and probably from the French ‘poulet’).

Powisholm (powz-hóom) n. farm near where the Hermitage Water meets the Liddel (and where the B6357 meets the B6399). In 1541 it was valued at 13 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Christopher Armstrong. ‘Jon Armstrong, callit of Powsholme’ was recorded there in 1623. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1671. William Elliot was tenant in 1694, and Francis Armstrong also listed as a resident. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scots of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 158 acres, bounded by Cocklaik, the Liddel Water, the Hermitage Water and lands held by the Laird of Hoscote. The farmhouse was in the same place as the modern one, with woods shown around Hermitage Bridge. The farmstead of Park was also combined with the farm at this time, shown roughly opposite Redheugh. Robert Elliot was farmer there in 1797 and another Robert Elliot in the 1860s (it is ‘Powis’ in 1541, ‘Powsholme’ in 1623, ‘Powsholm’ in 1694, ‘Powsholm’ in 1797 and ‘Pouesholm’ in 1821 and in 1841; it is marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Powis’, Blaue’s c.1654 map as ‘Pouis’, the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Powisholme’ and Stobie’s c.1770 map as ‘Powsholm’; the name is probably related to ‘howm’, meaning low-lying land near a river).

powks (powks) n. arch. the short unfledged feathers of a fowl, particularly when first starting to grow after moultning (cf. pook and pooks; noted by J. Jamieson).

Poydres (poi-dras) n. Robert (12th/13th C.) recorded during the reign of Alexander II when Petronella, daughter of ‘Adam Harang’ granted lands in the Borthwick valley to Melrose Abbey. This included the 2 1/2 acres of land and meadow, which she had given to him for his homage and service, for an annual token fee of a pair of white gloves. The wording suggests that he was deceased by the time of this grant.

poyeter (poi-y-ur, -ye-tur) n., arch. a poet, meant jokingly — ‘Bring ben the loch!’ yince quo’ ‘Jamie the Poyeter’’ [ECS], ‘...a geyan yibble poyeter an a leal Border Scot’ [ECS].

poynd see poind

practick (prak-tik) n., arch. practice, custom, habit, precedent, established usage — ‘John Sympsone, merchand, was fyned conforme to the Acts of Parliatt and practique of this burgh ... ’ [BR1674], ‘...the hail forenamed persons were therefore onlawed, conform to the practic of said town’ [BR1676], ‘...he always being countable therfor conforme to former acts and practiques’ [BR1696] ‘...in carreing the ground of the Common and muckeing the arable land with the same contrair to all former practique in the said town’ [BR1698], (also written ‘practique’ and variants; cf. practick).

the Prefabs (thu-pree-fawbz) n. prefabricated houses, constructed because of a housing urgency and lack of building materials after WWII. The first 90 of them were erected at Silverbuthall in...
1945–47, with about 160 build over the following years. They were of the ‘Arcon’ and ‘Uni-Seco’ types. The last were demolished in the early 1960s. Other ‘prefabs’ were constructed at the top of the Loan, and one such house still stands on the left at the top of the Loan – ‘oo yist ti bide up it the prefabs’, ‘The toon will look geth changed an’ a’, Nae doot it’s the guid, Wi’ ‘Prefabs’ up at Sillerbut ha’, An ‘Permanents’ at Linwude’ [LJ].

Prefort (prä-fö:r) n. M. (18th/19th C.) French prisoner of war in Hawick. He painted a view of the town in 1813 from the Millers Knowes, which is a valuable early representation, including details such as the telegraph house on Crumhaugh-hill, where the beacon was. His view formed the basis of a painting by Frank Wood in 1895.

prejudge (pre-juj) v., arch. to harm, work to the prejudice of – ‘...and appoints Baylyea Burne ...to goe up upon Saturday first about eleven o’clock and sight that the marches of the said dyke to goe up upon Saturday first about eleven o’clock and sight that the marches of the said dyke are not prejudged’ [BR1675].

Ralph (17th C.) cottar at Abbotrule according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written ‘Ralf Plendergaist’ and he was taxed ‘for abatreull for himself and cottar’. He is probably the ‘Ralph Prenderjaist’ who was the last tacksman at Ruletownhead Mill. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in the Parish Records receiving a collection after his house near Stobs burned down in 1703. Mary ‘Plenderhest’, wife of Robert Stevenson in Hawick Shiel (recorded in 1702) was probably related to him. William (d.1333) Englishman who fought against the Scots in the later years if the 13th century and was in charge of Jedburgh Castle when the Scots tried to retake it after Bannockburn. He surrendered Jedburgh Castle to the Scots in about 1317, switched allegiance and was killed at the Battle of Halidon Hill fighting against the English. He held lands at Cornhill-on-Tweed (also written ‘Plendergaist’, ‘Plendergaist’, ‘Prendergaist’ and variants).

prent (pren’, prent) v., poet., arch. to print – ‘I hid behind a slab o’ granite, Wi’ God kens a’ what prentit on it’ [WP], n., arch. a print, a printed piece of cloth, n., pl., arch. old pieces or patterns of printed cloth.

prentice (pren-tis, pren-‘is) n., arch. an apprentice in a trade, the period of training typically being 6 years, although for some trades somewhat shorter or longer periods were the norm – ‘...the Grammar School Colour shall ride next the Town Standard, the English School Colour next, and the Prentice Colour last ...’ [BR1747], ‘...and that the said prentice shall be bound prentice for four yeirs tyme and space . . .’ [BR], ‘. . . that he would not allow boyes and prentices to resort to his house for gaming alt ye Cards’ [PR1724], ‘He cam’ to be the ‘prentice callant, (He’d got some schoolin’ an’ had talent’ [RDW] (see also apprennteece).

presbyterian (prez-bi-tur) n., arch. an elder in the early Episcopalian Church or later in the Presbyterian Church, a minister or elder who sits on the Presbytery.

the Presbyterian Kirk (thu-prez-bi-tee-ree-in-kirk) n. the established Church of Scotland, which is governed by local bodies of elders and not by bishops, and has a doctrine based on Calvinism. Its popularity rose through the mid-16th century, and it was effectively introduced by Parliament as the established church of Scotland in 1560.

presbytery (prez-bi-tu-ree) n. a body formed of ministers and one elder representative of each church, which governs an area within the Presbyterian Church – ‘Falnash and Walter Elliot attended the brethren of ye Presbyterie convened at Jedbro in order to see whereunto the call to Mr. Cunningham would tend . . .’ [PR1712] (from Ancient Greek).

presents (pre-zints’) v., arch. present, particularly in the legal phrase ‘thir presents’, meaning ‘the present document’ – ‘I Thomas Henderson, smyth in Flex, grants me thir presents . . .’ [BR1701], ‘We by thir presents binds and obelisses us and our successors in the office of baylyearie and toune counsell of the said bruige of Hawicke . . .’ [HAST1902].

present bailies (prez-in’-bah-leez) n., pl., arch. phrase occuring often in the Town’s records, meaning the sitting Bailies, as opposed to any ‘late bailies’.

press (pres) n. a cupboard, usually a large walk-in one – ‘hev a look in the kitchen press’, ‘. . . then going to the press, she brought out an apple and gave it to the minister, saying ‘Take that, my man, for the whiskey’s a’ done’’ [RM], ‘A lookeet aabits for’t, bit A fand eet i the hinder-end. presser (pre-sur) n. a term in the hosiery trade for part of a machine which closes the barbs of the needles so that the loops of yarn can pass over them.

Presto’s (pre-tóz) n. supermarket built on the site of the former Mactaggart’s skinworks at the corner of Albert Road and Victoria Road in 1977. It was the first large supermarket to be opened in Hawick, was a part of the Allied Suppliers business and was converted to a Safeway in the late 1980s – ‘Throwe time incomers came, Like Fizal Din and Gusto, And then ow’re at the Haugh, There came a bit ca’d Presto’ [IWL].

Preston (pre-tín) n. Rev. David (b.1875) born at Caldercruix in Lanarkshire, son of George and Janet Shanks. He graduated from Glasgow University and was licensed by Hamilton Presbytery in 1899. He became assistant minister at Greyfriars, Dumfries and then was ordained at Eves in 1901. In 1903 he married Ella Margaret, daughter of James McKillop from Stirlingshire. Their children included: Douglas George (b.1904); Jessie Eleanor Doris (b.1907); and Kathleen Angus (b.1910). Dr. ?? (16th C.) listed as ‘Doctour Prestoun’, when he was the forst man listed as witnes to the final ‘latterwill’ of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. This was witnessed in Hawick, so he may have been a local man. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Violet Laidlaw and their children included Margaret (b.1795). John (15th C.) Parson in Hawick in 1481, ‘John Prestoune of Hawye . . . bachelor in decrees and perpetual vicar of Dunlop’. Nothing else seems to be known about him. John (b.1814/5) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was farmer at Wester Middle in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farming 198 acres and employing 5 labourers. He was a widower by then, living with his mother Ann and son Robert. Rev. Thomas minister at Denholm, Minto and Bedrule 1989–1992. Rev. William (17th C.) possible minister at Hassendean in 1638 when the National Convenant was signed in Hawick. The name was apparently hard to transcribe, and the minister at that time was Alexander Forrest, so this may be an error.

pretensic (pree-ten-seek) adj., poet. pretentious – ‘Pretensic fowk gaed primpin’ by, Snirkin’ at sic a din . . . ’ [DH].

Pretoria Day (pre-tö-ree-a-dä) n. commemoration of the taking of Pretoria from the Boers on 5th June 1900. That day coincided with the Tuesday of the Common Riding, and there was a huge parade in the evening in Hawick.

prices (pri-seez) n., pl., arch. the average price, in phrases such as ‘tawe, three or mony prices’ – ‘A’ things is twae prices or dooble dear in thae times’ [GW], ‘The kye brought mony prices at the fair’ [JL] (see also monie prices).

pricker (pri-kur) n., arch., poet. a fast rider, one who spurs on a horse – ‘Jock Ridley ance gaily rode doon To lift my ain horse frae the lea – A riever o’ Tynedale renoun, A Ker-handed pricker was he’ [T], ‘The hunters scoured again the field, The red pricker did stay, And for to kill the poor auld man. His weapons did assay’ [JTe].

Priesthaugh (pree-tuf) n. farm in the upper Allan valley, at the southernmost point of the loop in the road from Southfield through to Northhouse. There was once a school here, and a ford was long an alternative to the bridge across the Allan Water nearby. This was the location for the charter signed by James V giving Armstrong’s lands to Maxwell after the hanging of Johnnie Armstrong at Caerlenrig (although it is possible this was another place of the same name, the proximity to Caerlenrig and the King’s recorded itinerary makes this likely). The lands here were formerly part of the Lairdship of Ringwoodfield and in 1501 Robert Elliot of Redheugh inherited them from his grandfather, with Melrose Abbey holding the superiority. ‘Gret Johnnie Elliot’ was there in about 1510. Robert Elliot of Redheugh rented the lands from Melrose Abbey around 1557; at that time it was valued at £5. In 1569 it was part of the lands of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill, with the tenant then being ‘Jokke Elliot’. In 1574 the tenants ‘Law’s Jock’ Elliot, Alexander ‘Mill’ Elliot and ‘Law’s Tom’ Elliot were among men who Robert Elliot of Redheugh had been ordered by the Privy Council to remove from his lands. Simon Wilson is recorded there in 1623. It was recorded as still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. Thomas Lauder, as well as shepherds James Priesthaugh

Grieve and William Grieve were recorded there in 1694. It is described in the 1718 survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 1864 acres and was bounded by Peilbrae, Dod, Peilbrae Bank, Braehead, Langside and Skelfhill. Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill leased it from the Buccleuch Estates in 1741. Walter Scott was farmer there in 1785–97 and there were Scotts there in 1821 and around 1860. There were also Hardies in the mid-19th century. A spring that lay to the south was once supposed to have healing powers (according to a Presbytery record of 1614). There has been a suggestion that there was once a chapel here (marked in a field to the north of the farm on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map), but there is no evidence for this. Between the farmhouse and Priesthaugh Cottages is an earthwork, on the east side of the burn, measuring about 70 m by 45 m, but washed away on the western side. A cache of gold coins was found on the farm in the late 1700s, later in the possession of Mr. Elliot of Redheugh, and a few years before that a box containing about 120 silver coins were found on the farm. The stuffed 2-headed lamb in the Museum was from here. In nearby remote glens there are several plantations, called Scar Plantation, Pyat Sike Plantation, Brae Plantation, Garden Plantation, Heather Wood and Craw Wood. There have been Ride-outs to this farm – ‘...Until I turn’d at Priesthaugh Scrogg, And shot their horses in the bog’ [SWS] (the origin is likely to be simply the Old English ‘preost halh’, meaning ‘the priest’s haugh’, although there is no obvious connection with church lands; the name first appears in 1500 as ‘Pristhauch’, is ‘Priestishauch’e in 1530, ‘Priestishauch’ in 1533, ‘Pristhauch’ in 1557, 1564, 1569, 1621, 1623, 1660, 1663 and 1693, ‘Priestishauch’e in 1634, ‘Pristhauch’ in 1661 and ‘Pristhauch’ in 1694; it is ‘Presthauch’ on Blaen’s 1654 map as well as de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland).

Priesthaugh (prees-tuf) n. Archibald ‘Airlie’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill who is listed in a bond of 1569 signed in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘Arche Preisthauch’, and ‘Jok’ is also listed. The tenant of Priesthaugh (‘Jokke Elliot’) is separately listed, but presumably the surname derived from that farm in earlier generations. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) listed as a tenant of the lands of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill in 1569, along with Archibald, who was surely a close relative. His name is given as ‘Jok Preisthauch’.

Priesthaugh Cottages (prees-tuf-ko’-jeez) n. cottages just south of Priesthaugh farm.

Priesthaugh-hill (prees-tuf-hill) n. steading where the Cauld Cleuch meets the main part of the Priesthaugh Burn, far to the south of Priesthaugh farm. It may be the same as Priesthaughshiel, which is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map.

Priesthaughshiel (prees-tuf-sheel) n. former steading in the upper part of the Priesthaugh Burn, possibly the same as Priesthaugh-hill. Shepherd William Scott died here in the ‘Gonial Blast’ of 1794. There were still Scotts there in the early part of the 19th century (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Priesthaugh Swire (prees-tuf-swIr) n. flat land at the head of the Priesthaugh Burn, probably similar to the Queen’s Mire – ‘Ride by the gate at Priesthaughswire. And warn the Currors o’ the Lee; As ye cum down the Hermitage Slack, Warn doughty Willie o’ Gorrinberry’ [T].

Priesthaugh Well (prees-tuf-wel) n. spring near Priesthaugh farm. It probably lay to the south of the present farmhouse, but its exact position cannot now be ascertained because the 2 springs on the western side of Gray Coat have been piped to provide water to Priesthaugh farm and Priesthaugh Cottages. It was said that this well possessed healing properties and a 1614 record of Jedburgh Presbytery said that people went there for relief ‘by charm of priest and miracle’. The name is surely connected with the ridge to the south of Priesthaugh, which is called ‘Holywell Rig’.

Priesthill (preest-hil) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish, to the east of Newcastleton and further up the Whithaugh Burn from Whithaugh. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map near the feature labelled ‘Priesthill Know’ on modern maps.

Priest Hill (preest-hil) n. hill in Liddesdale, north-east of Newcastleton, on the southern side of the valley. It reaches a height of 205 m and is topped with a triangulation pillar. On the north-east slopes is an ancient earthwork consisting of an enclosure about 240 ft by 170 ft, with a double bank and significant ditch. It is similar to the structure on nearby Kirk Hill.

Priesthill Burn (preest-hil-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale that rises on the northern slopes of Stell Knowe, running roughly westwards to become part of Whithaugh Burn.
Priesthill Knowe

Priesthill Knowe (preest-hil-burn) n. small hill in Liddesdale, just to the east of Little Whithaugh, to the east of Newcastle.

Prieston (prees-tin) n. farm just north of Midlem in Bowden Parish, the land having once been the property of Kelso Abbey. In 1678 the South part was owned by William Douglas and the North part by Robert Kerr. It later became property of the Scotts of Harden, sold in about 1912 (the origin of the name is the Old English ‘preest tun’, meaning ‘priest’s farm’; it first occurs as ‘Prestowne’ in 1567 and ‘Prestoune’ in 1586).

Priestrig (preest-rig) n. farmstead between Stouslie and Stintyknowe. This land was apparently set aside for the use of the minister of Wilton after Wilton Common was divided in 1764. The farmstead was also sometimes known as Wilton Common (e.g. in the 1861 census). Thomas Scott was farmer there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. The outlying parish school situated at Stouslie was also sometimes known as ‘Priestrig Schuil’ – ‘There’s Lockie o’ the Stinty Knowes, There’s Nicol o’ Dick-neuk, And Bryson o’ the Priestrig, And Hall into the Heap’ [DJG] (sometimes spelled ‘Priestrigg’, the ‘rig’ presumably refers to a strip of ploughland).

the Priest’s Grave (thu-preests-grav) n. popular name for an extremely old gravestone in Cavers Auld Kirkyard. It was peculiar for being arranged in a direction perpendicular to the other’s, had a flat top, and contained the date (believed to be spurious) 1517 in the bottom corner. It lay near the east gate, but it is unclear whether it still survives. Several stories were attached to it (as recounted by Sir James Murray), e.g. a connection with the Knights Templar, or someone who wanted to be first out of the churchyard at the resurrection.

prig (prig) v., poet. to haggle, bargain – ‘An’ after prigging doon its price, A bargain forthwith made: Bestrode its back, an’ homeward bound Wi’ conscious pride he rade’ [FL].

prignickitie (prig-ni-tee) adj., arch. fastidious (noted by J. Jamieson).

primp (primp) v. to act haughtily or conceitedly – ‘Pretensic fowk gaed primpin’ by, Snirkin’ at sic a din …’ [DH], ‘Hech, sirs! The denty fowk! Primpin by, pair by pair, Kirkgaun …’[DH], n., arch. a haughty or conceited woman.

primp-ma-dye (primp-mu-dil) n., arch. a haughty and affected woman (in [HNe1954]).

the Prince’s Knowe

Primrose Cottages (prim-röz-ko’-see-jeez) n. two isolated cottages, formerly for railway workers, to the west of the Waverley Line shortly after Stobs. The plantation just to the north is Primrose Wood.

Primside (prim-sid) n. farm between Morebattle and Yetholm, in Morebattle Parish. There is an adjacent loch (also called Yetholm Loch) and hill of the same name. The lands are also known as ‘Primsideloch’. They were owned by a branch of the Rule family until passed to the Kers around 1430, with the final charter of 1439 granting Andrew Ker of Altonburn the 4 parts resigned by the co-heiresses of the late Andrew Rule. Ralph Ker of ‘Prymsydloche’ was involved with an indenture for lands in the Barony of Synton in 1510. Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch purchased the Mains of Spittal-on-Rule from Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1563. It was among farms burned by the English in 1542 (the origin is probably from the p-Celtic ‘pren wynn’, meaning ‘white wood’ and the Old English ‘set’ for house; it is first recorded as ‘Prenwensete’ around 1200; it is ‘Promset’ in 1391, ‘Promside’ in 1429/30, ‘Prymside’ in 1526, ‘Primsidloch’ in 1552, ‘Primsydloch’ in 1560 and ‘Prymsydloch’ in 1564/5).

the Prince (thu-prins) n. nickname for George Robson from Denholm.

Prince Leopold (prins-lee-u-pold) n. of the Belgians (1790–1865), full name His Royal Highness Leopold George Frederick, Prince of Saxe-Coburg. He visited Britain in 1815 and the following year married Charlotte, daughter of George IV, was created Duke of Kendal and made a General in the British Army. He became King of Belgium in 1831, and also was made an Honorary Burgess as he passed through Hawick in 1819, his carriage being pulled through town by several Teries, and Bet Young composing a commemorative poem – ‘His Royal Highness landed here On the seventeenth of September; Our flags displayed, the bells did ring, As thousands will remember’ [BY].

prince’s feathers (prin-seez-fe-th urz) n., pl., arch. the common self-heal, Prunella vulgaris.

the Prince’s Knowe ( thu-prin-seez-now) n. former name for a rising piece of ground near Boucher Hill, where Prince Charlie is said to have

Princess Anne (prin-ses-awn) _n._ (1950– ) the Princess Royal, as President of the British Knitting and Clothing Export Council she has visited Hawick several times. She was at Glebe Mills in 1988. In 1993 she officially opened the major modernisations carried out at the High School.

Princess Christian (prin-ses-kris-tyin) _n._ (1846–1923) Helena, third daughter of Queen Victoria, who married Prince Christian of Schleswig Holstein Sonderburg Augustenburg in 1866. She came to Hawick to open the Hummelknowes Bridge in 1869.

Princes Street (prin-ses-stree’, -seez-) _n._ main street through Wilton. Originally it referred only to the row of houses on the south side of the eastern end, which was built in 1871. The street was significantly altered and renumbered in the early 1970s, with the incorporation of Wilton Place, Albion Place, Ladylaw Place and part of Wilton Crescent – ‘Somebody telt Wullie there wuz a big Hogmanay pairy in the gairdins at Princes St.’ [JCo] (named after members of the Royal family).

the Principals (thu-prin-pulz) _n._ the main participants during the Common Riding, usually referring to the Cornet and Right- and Left-Hand Men, with sometimes also the Acting Father included. The first known photograph of the Principals was taken in 1857. The stabling of their horses was first undertaken by the Council in 1929. More recently stables have been provided at the top of the Mill Path. Latterly the term has been used to include the main female principals.

Pringle (pring-ul) _n._ Adam (b.c.1800) shepherd at Howpasley. He was recorded at Old Howpasley in 1841 and 1851 and was at Over Dalglish in 1861. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Janet B. (b.1828/9); Elizabeth (b.1830, or ‘Betty’), who married John Nicholson; Robert (b.1833); Adam Scott (b.1834); Margaret (b.1836); William (b.1838); Helen (b.1840); John (b.1843); Thomas (b.1844); and Gideon (b.1846).

Adam (1818–84) toll-keeper at the Townfoot Toll-bar in Newcastleton in 1861. In 1851 he was a shepherd at Shankfoot, and he also worked as a labourer. In 1844 he married Mary, daughter of Newcastleton joiner John Cavers. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (15th C.) son of Robert of Smallholm. He served as a squire of the Douglases, along with his brother George, e.g. the pair witnessed a charter for Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. Along with George he was on an assize for lands in Bemersyde in 1425. In 1456 he was on the panel made by George Douglas, Earl of Angus, which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn, who had been accused of assisting the English. He may be the Alexander ‘Pringill’ who witnessed a document between Henry Wardlaw and the Kers of Cessford in 1468. Alexander of Torsonse (d.bef. 1530) early member of the family from the lands near Stow. In 1526 he was ‘Alexander Hoppringill, in Torsonse’ when he was cited for involvement in the ‘Battle of Skirmish Field’ and the death of Ker of Cessford. His sons John, James, George and Adam and his ‘sister-son’ James are also mentioned, along with George Chisholme of that Ilk and 8 others, who were probably all on the side of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It seems that he was not convicted of any wrongdoing. He could be the Alexander ‘Hoppringill’ who served as attorney for the Homes of Wedderburn in sasines of 1506 and 1510. Alexander of Whytbank (1632/3–89) only lawful son of James of Whytbank. He was served heir to his father in 1667. He and his wife were supporters of the Covenant. He was a Commissioner for raising money for Cromwell in Scotland in 1655 and became a J.P. for the counties of Edinburgh and Selkirk. In 1662 he was still ‘younger’ when he was fined £3,000 and given a pardon by the King. In 1683 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He married Anna, daughter of James of Torwoodlee, and she died in 1680. He secondly married Anne, sister of James Murray of Philiphaugh; after his death she married Robert Rutherford of Bowland. He had no children, and succession went to John, grandson of his uncle George of Balmungo. Alexander of Whytbank (1701–73) only son of John. In 1744 he was granted the teinds of lands in Stow (including Hoppringle) following the abolition of Episcopacy. However, he was forced to sell Yair. In 1761 he was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. In 1739 he married Susanna, daughter of Sir John Rutherford of that Ilk and Edgerston. His children were: John, who succeeded; Alexander, who succeeded his brother; Patrick, surgeon with the East India Company; William, who was in the navy; Elizabeth, Eleanor, Susanna and Cairncross-Mary, who all died unmarried; Christian, who married Robert Pasley; Joanna, who married Alexander Hay; and Charlotte, who married Thomas Payne. Alexander of Whytbank
Pringle

(1747–1827) born at Yair, 2nd son of Alexander and Susanna Rutherford of Edgerston. He entered the service of the East India Company in 1766, but retired before 1790, having succeeded his brother John and making his fortune. He paid the land tax for Whytbank and other lands in 1785. He bought back the Yair estate from the Duke of Buccleuch and built a new mansion there. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He was taxed for owning a carriage and horses in the 1780s and 90s, for having dogs in 1797, and for having a female servant in 1788, 2 in 1789, 1 in 1790 and 3 in 1791, as well as a male servant in 1788, 2 in 1790, 3 in 1791–94 and 4 in 1797. He was Captain of the Selkirkshire Yeomanry Cavalry (volunteers) for several years until they were disbanded in 1802 and was also Vice-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He was apparently visiting the Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire (Lord Napier) at Wilton Lodge on the day of the False Alarm, the 2 riding off together to Selkirk after the butler coolly announced ‘My lord, supper is on the table, and the beacon’s blazing’. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1802 he was recorded paying tax at ‘Whitebank, Bashawmill and Thornhole’, as well as Yair and Mill. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire from at least 1802. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1812 he became Chamberlain of Ettrick Forest. He was suspected of being involved in getting the Galashiels men to switch sides at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He and his son Alexander were listed as Commissioners of Selkirkshire in 1819. He was listed as proprietor of Yair in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1789 he married Mary, daughter of Sir Alexander Dick of Prestonfield. Their children were: Alexander (b.1791), who succeeded and was a friend of Sir Walter Scott; John Alexander (b.1792), lawyer with the Bengal Civil Service, whose poetic contributions were printed privately as ‘Remains of John Alexander Pringle, Esq.’ (1841); William Alexander (b.1793), also with the Bengal Civil Service; Mary Agnes (b.1794), unmarried; Susanna (b.1795), who married R.S. Moncrieff, younger of Fossaway; Jane (b.1797), unmarried; Elizabeth (b.1798), who married C.M. Christie of Durie; and Charlotte (b.1799): Margaret Janet (b.1801), who married barrister William Elmsley; Robert Keith (b.1802), with the East India Company; and David (b.1806), also with the Bengal Civil Service, who later purchased Wilton Lodge. He and his sons were well known to Sir Walter Scott, and are referred to in the introduction to Canto II of ‘Marmion’. Alexander ‘Sandy’ of Whytbank (1791–1857), J.P., eldest son of Alexander of Whytbank. He was present at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was Vice-Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and also Lord of the Treasury for Scotland. He was a Conservative in politics. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1830–32 and 1835–46, being defeated by Pringle of Clifton in 1832. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1835. He attended the 1839 banquet held at Branxholme to honour the Duke of Buccleuch. He was a friend of Sir Water Scott, accompanying him and Scott of Gala to the field of Waterloo not long after the battle. He married his cousin, Agnes Joanna, 2nd daughter of Sir William Dick of Prestonfield. He had one son, Alexander (b.1837), who succeeded to Whytbank and Yair. Rev. Alexander David (1828–1908) only son of David of Wilton Lodge. He was minister at Blakeney, Gloucestershire. He married Mary Louisa, daughter of Rev. Charles Mackenzie. Their children were: Charles David; Henry Arthur; John Archibald; Fanny Christina; Henrietta Louisa; Isabella Margaret; Amy Cecilia; and Katherine Helen. Alexander of Whytbank (1837–1898) only son of Alexander. In 1870 he married his cousin Mary-Arbuthnot, daughter of Robert Keith Pringle. He had no children, and the estates of Whytbank and Yair went to his widow’s brother William, who sold Yair. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1876–1962) Burns Club Treasurer for 37 years. He also held all other offices at the club and the Pringle Hall was named in his honour. Andrew ‘Dand’ of Galashiels and Smallholm (d.1585/6) son of John, he was 8th Laird of Smallholm. In 1566 he had a grant of the lands of Galashiels and Mossielee. He signed the General Band against thieves in 1571. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Braxholm as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. In 1575 he was the first of the Hoppringles listed to appear to answer the feud with the Elliots. In 1582 he was on a list of 37 Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. And in 1583/4 he was ‘Andro Hoppringle of Gallowsceillis’ when summoned to appear before the Council with other Border Lairds. He married Mariota, daughter of John, 5th Lord Borthwick. His children included: Sir James, who succeeded; Robert of Howlatstown; and Isabella, who married George Pringle of Blindlee. There is a life-size effigy of him over his tomb at Melrose Abbey. After his death his widow married Robert Pringle, tutor of Blindlee and thirdly married John Home.

Rev. Andrew (1616/7–89) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1635, he was ‘on the exercise’ (i.e. assistant) at Kirkcaldy in 1639, became Chaplain to the Earl of Angus, and may also have been an assistant in the Presbytery of Selkirk. He became minister at Kirkton in 1646. There was some dispute with the parishioners though, since the heritors had to be order to pay him his teinds soon afterwards. Then in 1649 he was presented to Castleton, being admitted there the following year. In 1662 he witnessed the testament of William Elliot of Harwood. He was one of the few conformist local ministers who were not ousted in the early 1660s. He married Janet Scott in 1648. Their children included Jean, who married John Buchanan of that Ilk, and Elizabeth, who married Colin Campbell of Carwhin.

Andrew (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Haining’. In 1685 he married Janet, daughter of John Rutherford of Edgerston and sister of Thomas Rutherford of Wells. In 1711 he was one of the founder members of the ‘Honest Country Club’ along with John of Haining, who was probably his brother. He is probably the Andrew who was Chamberlain for the Scots of Buccleuch for the Ettrick Forest parishes 1715–17. He may also be the Andrew to whom Andrew Riddell sold the Haining in 1701.

Andrew Lord Alemoor (d.1776) son of John of the Haining. He became an advocate in 1740, 10 years later becoming Sheriff of Wigtownshire and then Selkirkshire. He became Senator of the College of Justice, Solicitor-General for Scotland and Judge of the Court of Session. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He was raised to the bench as Lord Alemoor (d.1776) son of John of Haining, who was probably his brother.

Rev. Andrew (1616/7–89) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1635, he was ‘on the exercise’ (i.e. assistant) at Kirkcaldy in 1639, became Chaplain to the Earl of Angus, and may also have been an assistant in the Presbytery of Selkirk. He became minister at Kirkton in 1646. There was some dispute with the parishioners though, since the heritors had to be order to pay him his teinds soon afterwards. Then in 1649 he was presented to Castleton, being admitted there the following year. In 1662 he witnessed the testament of William Elliot of Harwood. He was one of the few conformist local ministers who were not ousted in the early 1660s. He married Janet Scott in 1648. Their children included Jean, who married John Buchanan of that Ilk, and Elizabeth, who married Colin Campbell of Carwhin.

Angelique Lucille (1846–1920) born in Hawick, daughter of Thomas Kedie and Lucille Kennedy. At age 17 she went to India as a hostess to her uncle, who was governor of Calcutta. She also apparently crossed the Sahara desert by camel. She was a nurse at St. Thomas’s, London, starting in 1868, moving to the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary in 1872 (where she became Matron) and returning to St. Thomas’s in 1887 as Matron. However, she resigned in 1890, when she converted to Catholicism. Afterwards she travelled the world advising on nursing issue. She was the founder of the Training School for Nurses at the Royal Infirmary, and sometimes credited with establishing the modern method of hospital nursing. She was a personal friend and devotee of Florence Nightingale, who called her ‘Pearl’ and ‘Little Sister’. Her letters are in the British Museum. There is a memorial brass tablet in the chapel of the Royal Infirmary.

Ann (18th/19th C.) grocer and draper on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. She could be the same shopkeeper listed at West Port on the 1841 census, probably married to Robert and with daughter Margaret. Archibald of Whytbank (17th/18th C.) became a Burgess of Hawick in 1724, presumably this being Honorary. This may be an error for Alexander.

David of Smailholm and Pilmuir (d.1480) son of Robert, he succeeded his brother Robert in the 1470s. However, he is recorded as being of Smailholm or of Pilmuir several times through the 1440s, 50s and 60s. Along with his brothers George and Alexander he accompanied William, Earl of Douglas to the Papal Jubilee in Rome in 1450. In 1457 he attached his seal to an indenture by George, Earl of Angus, appointing Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest, since Ker did not have a seal of his own. He served as Ranger of the Ward of Tweed in the 1460s. In 1464/5 he was one of the witnesses to the sasine granting Kirkton Mains and the Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1468 he had a charter for the lands of Pilmuir. In 1471 he was a witness at Borthwickshiel of the infeftment of Walter, son and heir of Andrew Ker of Cessford. In 1474 he was summoned to Edinburgh by the King, probably relating to keeping peace on the Border. In 1479 he gave his seal to an obligation involving the Kers of Cessford. He may be the David ‘junior’ who in 1478 had his fine remitted for killing deer at his wedding. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Dishington of Ardross. In their old house in Galashiels there was said to be this inscription – ‘Elspleth Dishington Built me. In syn lye not: The things thou canst not get, Desyre not’. His children included: James, who succeeded; Adam of St. John’s Chapel; and Thomas of Wrangholm (recorded as a witness in about the 1490s).

David of Smailholm, being sometimes called ‘senior’ in distinction. He was tenant of the lands of Tinnis or Tynnes in the Yarrow valley. He was Ranger of the Ward and later made Receiver of the whole Forest. He was witness in 1484/5 to a sasine for lands at Mangerton to Walter Scott of Branhomle; James Pringle was also a witness, along with several other local men. He leased the lands of Torwoodlee and Toftness in 1486, along with his wife Mariota. He may be the David who is recorded along with William on a document relating to Ruicastle in 1491. He may be the same ‘David Hoppringill in Tynnes’ who was one of the ‘Sheriffs of Roxburgh in that part’ in a charter of 1494 for lands in Hassendean and the same ‘in le Tynnes’ who was one of 4 men who held lands in Boonraw, which which passed to Robert Scott of Stirches in 1504/5. In 1494/5 he served as surety for men called Mark from Tinnis. He was also recorded in 1494/5 as Coroner for Tweeddale at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk; he was fined for not producing Archibald Ormiston. He was recorded several times around 1500 in the Exchequer Rolls in regard to lands in Yarrow and as ranger of the Ward of Tweed. In 1502 he leased the lands of Galashiels, Blindlee and Mossieleee. Also in 1502 he was fined at the Justice-aire for failing to Richard Davidson in Primside. In 1508 ‘Dauid Hoppringill in Teneis’ was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale, and is probably the same David who witnessed the associated sasine. He was re-assigned Tinnis in 1509. In 1509 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alemoor, witnessed charters for Colville of Ochiltree and was mentioned in a charter for William, son of James of Smailholm. And in 1510 David ‘of Tynnes’ is recorded having 5 horses stolen from him by Thomas Dalgleish in Braidhaugh. He also had oxen stolen from him at ‘Bochill’ (possibly ‘Bowhill’). In 1512 he gave his consent to a charter for lands in Ettrick Forest being granted to the Commendator of Kelso. He may have married Mariota Murray of Philiphaugh. David of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.c.1535) eldest son of James and brother of William of Torwoodlee. He was sometimes called ‘junior’, to distinguish him from David of Tinnis. In 1507–10 he leased the crown lands of Galashiels, Mossieleee and Blindlee. In 1510 he had a charter for lands in Ettrick Forest as well as for rentals in Lauderdale. Also in 1510 he was among Pringles and others convicted of cutting down part of Ettrick Forest. He lost brothers, a son and a brother-in-law at Flodden.

In 1519 he was among the large group of Borders who rode against the Earl of Arran and in 1526 in the group that tried to free the boy King from the Douglas near Melrose (at Pringle’s Bridge). He signed a bond in 1525 to support the Earl of Angus as Warden of the Marches. Also in 1525 he was on the panel of return for Gordon of Stichill, along with James and George. He is probably the David who witnessed a document for Melrose Abbey in 1534. Through marriage he gained Woodhouse in Peeblesshire and Whytbank and Redhead in Selkirkshire. He was married twice, his first wife being Marion and his second Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Lundie. His children were: David, who died at Flodden; John, who succeeded; James of Woodhouse and Whytbank; William; and Janet, who married George Brown of Coalston. In 1541 his widow Margaret Clinie and son James claimed tenancy of Reidhead farm in Tweeddale. David of Smailholm (d.1513) eldest son of David of Galashiels and Smailholm. His brothers included John of Galashiels and James of Whytbank. He was killed at Flodden.

David (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter of Branhomle. He was probably a factor or chamberlain or held some similar position. David of Torquhan (19th C.) owner of lands on Gala Water that had traditionally belonged to the Pringles. He was tenant farmer at Hyndlee for about 17 years in the later 1800s. One of his children was Col. Hall-Grant (b.1876). Maj. David of Carriber (1790–1876) eldest son of John of Carriber and Mary Walker. He was born at Cranston, Midlothian. He served with the 7th Regiment of Bengal Native Infantry and retired with the rank of Major in 1835. He was probably the Maj. Potts who was at Hawick in 1837 for the election (at which there was so much trouble from the crowd). He had one brother who died in India, and another who was Robert, farmer at Bairnkine, Southdean. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1830. He left Carriber to his nephew, John. David (1806–89) of Wilton Lodge, which he inherited through marrying James Anderson’s daughter, Mary. He was son of Alexander of Whytbank and Mary Dick, and younger brother of Alexander of Yair. He was born at Yair, youngest of 11 children, and educated in Selkirk and then in England, at Durham Grammar School and Haileyburgh College. He trained as a lawyer and in 1824 started service with the East India Company, surviving the fire on his ship ‘The Kent’, on which about 100 people perished. He worked as a magistrate.
in several locations. Returning to Britain for 3 years in 1839, he stayed at Friarshaugh near Melrose. He was then judge at Purneah and left India for the last time in 1851 with a pension and the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in the Bengal Infantry. He settled in Hawick after marrying the heiress of Wilton Lodge estate. He was responsible for the extensive remodelling of Wilton Lodge in 1859, including the monogrammed letters ‘DMP’ and biblical quotations; he was quite religious, being filled, it is said, with ‘the love of country, the love of letters, the love of God’. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was recorded at Wilton Lodge in a directory of 1868. A keen horseman, he can be seen on horseback at the stables of Wilton Lodge in a photo, probably in the 1880s. He became known locally as a philanthropist. He was Chairman or Governor of at least three Hawick savings banks, including Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Co., Ltd. (1864–89), Hawick Savings Bank (1865–89) and Hawick Heritage Investment Bank, Ltd. (1876–89). He was also Chairman of Wilton Parochial Board and of Hawick Combination Poorhouse. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, as well as being on the county Prison Board. He was a Vice-President of the local division of the Evangelical Alliance. After his death the Town purchased Wilton Lodge from his trustees, and the present house is much as it was when he lived there. In 1827 he married Frances, daughter of Alexander Tod of Alderston, and she died in 1856 at Pau. In 1858 he secondly married Mary, heiress of James Anderson of Wilton Lodge. His children were: Rev. Alexander David; Amy Elizabeth, who married Rev. H.C. Ripley; and Frances Jane, who married James Christie and secondly Theobold von Fischer. His boot jack is in the Museum. David (b.1839) younger son of James Hall and Jane Hogarth. He remarried in Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish. His wife was Jane and their children included: Hall G.; Frances E. and Dorothy M. Douglas see John Douglas Francis (18th C.) Sheriff-Depute for Roxburghshire. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. George (d.c.1459) son of Robert of Pilmuir and Smailholm. In 1427 he was part of the inquest for William being served heir to his father Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in the Barony of Hawick; there he is ‘Georgium de Hopprynglie’. Along with his brother Alexander he was a squire for the Earl of Douglas. He is recorded as ‘George Hopprynglie’, attorney to Archibald, Earl of Douglas (or possibly Alexander Murray, since the transcription is ambiguous) in 1428/9. The document was the ‘instrument of sasine’ for the Barony of Hawick being served to William, son of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1429/30 he is probably the George ‘Hopprynglie’ who was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. He witnessed (along with his brother Alexander) a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. In 1437 he was one of 2 ‘procurators’ for Alexander of Weens when he resigned his lands of Weens into the hands of the Baron of Hawick. He witnessed a document for Oswald Abernethy, made before the Earl of Douglas in 1446/7, relating to the lands of Teindside and Harwood. His name appears several times in connection with the Douglasses through to the 1450s. He was the first Master Ranger of the Ward of Tweed. He is probably the George of ‘Hoppryngill’ who was on the panel in 1456 which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of the charge of helping the English to burn lands around Jedburgh. Either he or an earlier George was ‘scutiferus’ in a document for Melrose Abbey in 1415. George (15th C.) witness to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick given to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1484 at the Mote. His name is recorded as ‘Georgio de Pringyle’. It is unclear which branch of the family he belonged to. Possibly the same ‘Georgio Pringyll’ witnessed another document for the Douglasses of Drumlanrig in 1501, relating to the lands of Lairs. George of Torwoodlee (1505–68) son of William, the first Laird, who was killed at Flodden. In 1526 he was among the large number of Borderers pardoned for their march (along with the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) against the Earl of Arran. In 1541 he was tenant of Caddonlee in Tweed, as well as claiming Torwoodlee. He is probably the ‘George Hoppringle’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1548 he was ‘found surety’ for the crime of helping ‘our ancient enemies of England’. He was implicated in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in Edinburgh in 1552, accused of providing 2 horses to aid the escape of the Laird of Cessford. He was himself murdered by Elliots and others, perhaps led by Martin Elliot of Braidlie. In 1564 he was ‘Guidman of Torwoodlie’ when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He is recorded in 1607 as ‘George Hoppring of

Torwoodlee’ at the trial for his murder. The action was brought by his grandsons George, James and David, against John Elliot of Copshaw; it is unclear why there was such a lengthy delay, but in 1570 a ‘day of law’ to decide the matter ended in a fight with many injuries and the Privy Council summoned representatives of the Pringles and Elliots in 1575 to settle the feud. The other men named, ‘Martin’s Hob’ and ‘the Laird’s Jock’, were presumably already dead by the time of the 1607 trial. The claim was that he was killed in a raid on Torwoodlee by about 300 men ‘of the haill Clannis of the Airmestrangis, Ellotes, Batiesones, Grahames and remanent Clannis’, who grabbed him out of his bed and took him to ‘Skaldeneise’ where they killed him, after ransacking his estate. He married Margaret Crichton of Cranston Ridvell and had 10 children, including William, who succeeded. George of Torwoodlee (d.1637) 4th Laird, son of William. In 1607 he and his brothers James and David brought an action against John Elliot of Copshaw and others for the murder of his grandfather. He inherited a quarter of the lands of Clifton in 1610. He was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. He was an M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1617 and 1621 and became Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1624. He is recorded in records of the Regality of Melrose in the 1620s. He married Margaret, daughter of James Pringle of Whytbank and secondly married Elizabeth Richardson of Smeaton. He was succeeded by his son James, who was also M.P. George of Torwoodlee (d.1689) 6th Laird, son of James. In 1654 he had sasine of lands in Lilliesleaf. In 1662 he was fined and pardoned by the King. He was an active Royalist and resister of Episcopalism. He owned lands in Maxton Parish in 1678. He helped the Earl of Argyll escape from Scotland in 1681; the Earl was accompanied from Edinburgh to Torwoodlee by Rev. John Scott, minister of Hawick. He then lived in concealment and in 1684 fled to Holland to escape capture (along with Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth), whereupon his 16 year old son was imprisoned and threatened with torture unless he divulged who had given the warning to him. He was involved in a disastrous uprising in 1685, but again managed to flee. His estates were then confiscated, but they were restored at the Revolution. He was made M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1689, but died a few months later (probably before receiving full reward for his efforts in the previous decade). In 1654 he married Janet Brodie of Lethen. His children were: James, who succeeded; Janet; Anna, who married Alexander Don of Rutherford; Sophia, who married her cousin James Pringle of Greenknowe; and Jean. George Turnbull (b.1810) youngest son of Robert and Ann Buckham. He was a gardener (and perhaps butler with a local family), but later became a licensed grocer at 12 Back Row (later Francis Henderson’s). In the 1834 electoral roll he was listed along with his brothers Robert and James, as joint proprietors in a house. He was listed as a grocer on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Wallace, from St. Boswells. Their children (baptised in Minto Parish) included: Robert (b.1836); Hannah Dickson (b.1837); Annabella Buckham (b.1839); Euphemia (b.1841); and George (b.1843). One of his daughters carried on his business, until she married Thomas Charters, after which the business was taken over by John Henderson. George (b.1829/30) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1851 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ekron. George (1843/4–81) son of Hawick merchant George Turnbull. He was apprenticed to a Selkirk engineer and in 1866 left to work for an oil merchant’s in Bradford. Later setting up business with a Mr. Cunningham, he settled in Manchester in 1874. However, he died after contracting diphtheria from one of his children, at the age of 37. He wrote some poetry and was a friend of J.C. Goodfellow, who wrote a verse on his death. His wife was Lydia Mary, who died in Middlesborough in 1930, aged 85. He was buried in the Wellogate. James (d.1495) eldest son of David of Pilmuir and Smallholm. Like his father he acted as Ranger of the Ward of Tweed. He held this office from at least 1447, with the lease of ‘Redehede’ and Blindlee as his fee. He was on the panel in 1484 where James Douglas was served heir to his father in the Barony of Hawick. He was also the first listed witness to a sasine of 1484/5 relating to Walter Scott of Branhomme and the lands of Mangerton. In 1488 he had a 19 year lease from the King for the lands of Blindlee, Galashiels and Mosslee. In 1493 George Turnbull of Bedrule, David Waugh from Bedrule and weaver William White had remission for stealing cattle from his farm at Pilmuir. He is probably the James of Smallholm who acted as surety for Patrick Gledstains in Hummelknowes in 1494/5. David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick had remission for stealing from his farm of Pilmuir in 1494/5. He married Elisabeth (also known as Isobel), daughter of Patrick Murray of Philiphaugh. His children were: David, who succeeded; William, 1st Laird of Torwoodlee, who died at Flodden; Alexander, 1st Laird of Trinly-knowe, who also died at Flodden; John, 1st Laird of Blindlee, also died at Flodden; Isabella, who married David Home of Wedderburn, who died at Flodden; and an illegitimate son David of Tynnes. James of Tynnis (d.1546) son of Alexander of that Ilk. He was probably the James who was among the men pardoned in 1527 for their role in the Battle of Skirmish Field. He is probably also the James who witnessed an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1528. In 1529 King James V granted him (and his wife, Sibilla Carmichael) the lands of Tynnis. In 1530 he was recorded as a witness in Selkirk to proceedings taken against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk. In 1541 he was recorded holding the lands of ‘Tynnes’ in feu, as well as being tenant in ‘Dricheuchschele’ in Ettrick. He was captured at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542, and not released for 3 years. In 1546 he was part of the bond of peace signed between the Scotts, Turnbulls, Cranstons, Kers, etc. He was succeeded by his son James, and also had a daughter, Margaret. James of Woodhouse and Whytbank (d.1563) son of David and Margaret Lundie. He succeeded to Whytbank in 1510, and the family’s Peeblesshire estates on the death of his father. He is said to have accompanied James V to Solway Moss in 1542 and was taken prisoner, but this may have been a different James (of Buckham). He married Margaret Ker of Linton; she later married Sir David Home of Wedderburn, died in 1580 and was buried at Melrose Abbey. Their children were: Robert, who predeceased him; James, who succeeded to Whytbank; George, tenant of Netherton; Alexander; William; John; David, possibly the ‘pothecary’ who witnessed a discharge in 1580; Marion, who married George of Blindlee and secondly married William Home of Bassendean. James of Whytbank (d.c.1625) son of James and Margaret Kerr. He was a strong Royalist supporter, as a result of which he lost his Peeblesshire estates. In 1571/2 he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. He could also be the ‘James Hoppiblings’ listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter, being owed ‘for his fie’. In 1575 he was ordered to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He was one of the Border Lairds summoned in 1583/4 to give assurances for keeping peace on the Border and in 1591 was one of the Lairds who had to promise to serve the Wardens and pursue the Earl of Bothwell. He was on the 1601 jury following the Kerr and Turnbull feud in Jedburgh. He married Marion, daughter of Andrew Murray of Blackbarony and secondly Juliane, daughter of Sir David Home of Wedderburn. His children included: James, who predeceased him (c.1616), but whose son James succeeded; Robert, who was probably the ‘Robert Hoppingle, son to the gude-man of Quhytebank’ who was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth for being part of the ‘Royal High School Riot’ of 1595; and Margaret, who married John Pringle of that Ilk. His son James succeeded to his lands of ‘Reidheid’ in 1607. Sir James of Galashiels (d.1635) son of James, who was the only son of Andrew Hoppingle of Smailholm and Galashiels (although some accounts have only one James). During his minority his ‘tutors’ were Walter Riddell of that Ilk and his son Andrew, Robert Pringle of Langshaw and John Pringle of Buckholm. He was imprisoned following firing of pistols in a feud with George of Blindlee in 1598. He became a Commissioner for Peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. He had a charter of ‘Sellarhauche’ from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1621 and 1630 and became Sheriff-Principal in 1622. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft. He may have married a daughter of Kerr of Linton (possibly William). His children were: David, who married Margaret, daughter of Walter Scott of Harden, and died before him; James, who married Jean, daughter of Sir John Scott of Scotstarvet; John, last of Smailholm, who died without issue; George, Sheriff-Depute of Selkirkshire, who also died before his father; Jean, who became heir and married Hugh Scott of Deuchar, son of ‘Auld Wat’, and who thereby became the first Scott of Gala; Isobel, who married Sir John Murray of Philiphauge; and 2 other daughters who married ministers. James of Whytbank (1593/4–1667) son of James and Christian, daughter of William Lundin of that Ilk. He succeeded his grandfather in 1622, his father having already died. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1628–33 and was a Commissioner of Defence for the county in 1643 and Commissioner of War in 1648. He was appointed a Commissioner of Supply in 1661 and a Justice of the peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He was known as a great loyalist and was fined by Parliament in 1646. He added

Yair to the family estates and also became the male representative of the Pringles of Galashiels and Smailholm (on the extinction of the male line of Pringle of Gala). He married Sophia Schoneir, who was a maid of honour to Anne of Denmark. His only son was Alexander, and he also had an illegitimate son, William. James of Torwoodlee (d.1657) son of George. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1641 and 1645 and was appointed Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1646. In 1654 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Corslie within Etrick Forest and ‘Cockslandis’ in the village of Lilliesleaf. In 1620 he married Jean, daughter of Sir Richard Cockburn of Clerkington. In 1628 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir Lewis Craig of Riccarton. His son George was also an M.P.

James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. James of Torwoodlee (1665–1735) son of George. He was imprisoned in 1684 and threatened with torture if he did not tell them who helped his father flee to Holland. In 1689 after the Revolution he was made an officer in the cavalry corps of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. His father died in 1689, in 1690 all of the family estates were restored to him and in 1694 he was served heir to his father. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1693–1702. He contributed the large sum of £1300 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1714 he was appointed Captain of a company of cavalry raised to organise defence against the forces of ‘the Pretender’. In 1690 he married Isabel, eldest daughter of Sir John Hall of Dunglas. His children were: George, who succeeded, but died unmarried; John, who died at sea; James of Bowland, who was a principal Clerk of Session, and whose son James succeeded his uncle; Katherine, who married Sir Robert Pringle of Stichill; Janet; Sophia, who married Adam Fairmont of Greenhill; Marion, who married John S. Ker of Littledean; Isabel; Margaret; and Ann. Sir James of Stichill (1726–1809) son of Sir Robert and Katherine Pringle. He was ‘junior’ when listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was M.P. for Berwickshire 1761–79 and succeeded as Baronet in 1779. In 1780 he was added to the voters’ roll for Roxburghshire. He was Commander of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. He was listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and selkirkshire in 1788, but it was said that ‘it is likely he will be averse to vote, as he will not like the oath’. He was taxed for owning carriages and horses, and for having several male and female servants in the 1780s and 1790s. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Norman MacLeod of that Ilk. His children included: Mary, who married George Baillie of Jerviswood; Robert, who married his cousin and pre-deceased his father; Eliza, who married Archibald Todd of Drygrange; Sir John, who also married a cousin, and succeeded to Stichill; and Sir Norman, who succeeded his brother. James of Bowland and Torwoodlee (1758/9–1840) only son of James and grandson of James of Torwoodlee, who was M.P. for Selkirkshire. He was educated in Cambridge and Leyden, and studied for the bar, but never practised. He succeeded to his uncle’s lands of Torwoodlee, sold his father’s lands of Bowland and also acquired Buckholm and Williamlaw from other Pringles. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as being ‘rich’ and probably siding with Rutherford of Edgerston in the election. He owned Buckham, Williamlaw and Ladhopemuir. He was also listed as a voter in Selkirkshire and brother-in-law of the Sheriff of Selkirkshire, Andrew Plummer. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire from at least 1802. He was additionally listed along with his son (James junior) as Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1819. He paid tax for having male and female servants in the period 1785–97, for owning a carriage in the period 1785–98 and for horses and dogs in 1797. He raised the Selkirkshire Corps of Border Yeomanry in 1797 and was their Captain at the time of the False Alarm in 1804. He was also present at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was Convener of Selkirkshire for more than 50 years. In 1782 he married Elizabeth, daughter and co-heiress of Charles Tod of Drygrange. Their children were: James, Vice-Admiral and successor; Charles, who died young; George, who married Ann Stewart; Alexander, who was lost in a wreck; and Frances, only daughter, who died in Edinburgh. James of Torwoodlee (1783–1859) son of James. He joined the Navy in 1797 and retired as a Rear-Admiral in 1846. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He became Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1820 and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He succeeded his father in 1840 and also succeeded to his brother’s lands of Trinlyknowe. He was succeeded by his son Commander James Thomas. His other children were: Capt. Charles; George; Elizabeth Mason; Frances; Mary; and Jane. James (b.1796) son of Robert and Ann Buckham. He was cousin to the founder of Robert Pringle & Sons, and had a brother who was also Robert. He was a stockmaker and houseman in Hawick. In 1841 the family were living at ‘Greenwind foot’, in 1851 at 12 O’Connell Street (probably the modern No. 4) and in 1861 at 7 O’Connel Street. He married Beatrix Scott, who was from Deanburnhaugh, daughter of old Peggy Anderson; she was said to be ‘great for simples (herbs)’. Their children included: Margaret, who must have died young; Helen (b.1836); Elizabeth Miller (b.1838), who married mill furnisher George Scott; Robert (b.1839); Isabella (b.1841); Thomas (b.1843); John (b.1845); and Margaret (again, b.1848).

James Hall (1801–74) born in Hawick Parish. He was tenant farmer at Hyndlee, recorded in the 1860s. He was also recorded as farmer at Cleithaugh in 1868. He married Jane Mary Hogarth (1803–50). Their children were: George Hogarth (1830–72), a surgeon in Sydney, Australia, who died at sea; Andrew; David, who farmed at Cleithaugh; Mary Miller; Margaret Preston; and Elizabeth Jane. James Thomas of Torwoodlee (1832–1902) son of Vice-Adm. James. He retired from the Royal Navy with the rank of Commander. He was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and J.P. for Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire. He also founded Torwoodlee Golf Club. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1862 he married Annie-Parminter, only daughter of Col. James Lewis Black, who was wounded at Waterloo. He was succeeded by James-Lewis.

Janet (b.c.1790) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street. She was at about No. 39 on the 1841 census, living with her sons Thomas and Robert. She is probably Janet Kedie, who married John, who was proprietor of a public house on the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Janet (b.c.1800) grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She was located at about 7 High Street in 1841. She could be the Janet who was an unmarried seamstress at about 25 High Street in 1851. J.B. see John Balfour Jean (18th/19th C.) member of the local family, perhaps a daughter of the Robert recorded in the family bible. Before 1798 she owned the bottom part of 8 Fore Row (now 22 Drumlanrig Square).

John of that Ilk and Torsonce (d.c.1555) son of Alexander of that Ilk. He may be the ‘Jok a Pringill’ accused by the English in 1543 of leading raids, along with the Laird of Mow. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme, including Goldielands and elsewhere. His children included: Thomas, who succeeded; Michael; James ‘in the Bow’; Archibald of Torquhan; Elizabeth, Prioress of Coldstream; and Margaret, who married Clement Mauchan of Pilton, Cramond. John of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.c.1566) son of David. He succeeded his father about 1535, his older brother David having died at Flodden. He may be the John ‘in Reidheid’ (essentially the same as Whytbank) who was one of the large number of Borderers listed along with Walter Scott of Branzholme for rising up against the Earl of Arran, for which they had remission in 1526; his brother Robert was also listed, along with 7 other Pringles. In 1541 he was recorded occupying the lands of ‘Galloschelis’. He was among the men accused in 1549 of helping the Kers and English attack the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme; the other Pringles on the list were John of Torsance and Robert of Overcleuch. He is probably the ‘Guid-man of Galloschelis’ listed in 1564 among Border Lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir James Gordon of Stichell and Lochinvar; after his death she remarried to John Hoppringle of Wrangholm. His children were: Andrew, who succeeded; David of Bardarroch; James; Isabella, who married William Gordon of Crauchlaw; Margaret, who married Andrew Rutherford of Hundeal; and other daughters who married Andrew Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, a Borthwick and an Inglis. John of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.1650) 3rd son of Sir James. He was the last in the male line of the Pringles of Smailholm, being served heir to his father’s lands in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of ‘Smailholm-craigs’. In 1645 the lands of Smailholm were granted to Sir William Scott of Harden, including the lands having been in Pringle hands since at least 1459. In 1645 he was probably the John ‘sometime of Smailholme’ who was part of an armed gang of about 100 men who attacked farms and harassed tenants in the Parish of Stow, belonging to Robert of Blindlee and John Haliburton, younger of Muirhouselaw. After his death the representative of that family became James Pringle of Whytbank. Sir John of Stichill (1662–1721) son of Sir Robert. He contributed £500 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1688 he married Magdelan, daughter of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. Their children included: Gilbert, in the Dragoons; Walter, who was an advocate and Sheriff of Roxburghshire; Margaret, who married Sir James Hall of Dunglass; Katherine, who married William Hamilton of Bangour; Sir Robert, who succeeded; and Sir John, who succeeded his brother, and was President of the Royal Society. His wife died in 1739 and is buried at Stichill. John of Whytbank (1678–1702) son of John, minister of Fogo, and grandson of George of Balmungo. In 1689 (while still a minor) he succeeded Alexander of Whytbank, who was his father's cousin; he was further served as heir in 1695. He was appointed a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1698. In 1699 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, and she died in 1770, aged 89, outliving him by 68 years. Their children were: Alexander, who succeeded; Margaret, who died young; and Joanna, who died unmarried. He died at Yair, aged just 24. John of Haining (1673/4–1754) 2nd son of Andrew of Clifton and Violet Rutherford. He became an advocate in 1698 and purchased the Haining in 1702. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire, i.e. an M.P. in the last Scottish Parliament. He then served that county as M.P. until 1729. In 1711 he was one of the founding members of the 'Honest Country Club'. He was a Keeper of the Signet for Scotland in 1711. He became Lord of Session in 1729, taking the title Lord Haining. He married Ann, eldest daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, and she died in 1770, aged 89, outliving him by 68 years. Their children were: Alexander, who succeeded; Margaret, who died young; and Joanna, who died unmarried. He died at Yair, aged just 24. John of Haining (1673/4–1754) 2nd son of Andrew of Clifton and Violet Rutherford. He became an advocate in 1698 and purchased the Haining in 1702. He was an M.P. in the last Scottish Parliament. He then served that county as M.P. until 1729. In 1711 he was one of the founding members of the 'Honest Country Club'. He was a Keeper of the Signet for Scotland in 1711. He became Lord of Session in 1729, taking the title Lord Haining. He married Ann, eldest daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, and she died in 1770, aged 89, outliving him by 68 years. Their children were: Alexander, who succeeded; Margaret, who died young; and Joanna, who died unmarried. He died at Yair, aged just 24.
some local reels, strathspeys and jigs in the early 1800s, some of which he wrote himself. These are collected in 2 volumes, and include parts suitable for violin with piano accompaniment. Those published in 1801 are dedicated to ‘Miss Elliot’ (presumably of Minto) and the second volume (probably 1802) dedicated to Lady Scott of Ancrum and available from his lodgings at 16 Rose Street, Edinburgh. He probably lived in the capital as a dancing master. Tunes attributed to him include ‘Lady Ann Hope’, ‘The Miller of Drone’ and ‘Miss Walker’s Strathspey’. There are well over 100 tunes in these 2 volumes, including ‘Fertish Hill’, ‘Hawick Lasses, a Reel’, ‘Hawick, a Strathspey’, ‘Ruberslaw’, ‘Minto House’, several named after members of the Minto Elliots or local Scotts, ‘The Ettrick Shepherd’, ‘Betty Howison’s Favourite’, ‘Teviot Banks’, ‘Wilton Lodge, a Strathspey’ and the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby’. He may be the same John ‘musician in Hawick’ who was selected by ballot in 1799 to serve on the local Militia, but was declared unfit to serve. John (18th C.) resident at Gair in 1775 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Robertson Parish. John (d.1805) tailor in Hawick. He was son of Thomas, who was a carter. He could be the John, son of Thomas and Betty Douglas born in Hawick in 1773. John of Carriber (d.1836) from Middlothian. About 1810 he arranged the tenancy of Bairnkine farm in Southdean parish. When he died the lease of the farm passed to his younger son Robert Baillie. He married Mary Walker, and their children were: Maj. David; Robert Baillie; another son, who died in India; Mary, who married Lieut. David Sheriff; Isabella, who married Dr. James Richmond, brother of the minister of Southdean; and 3 daughters who never married, Agnes, Janet and Ellen. John (b.1778) son of Walter and half-brother of Robert. He was the first member of the family known to be involved with the hosiery trade, being apprenticed to William Beck in 1794. He later became a merchant. He was recorded as a hosier in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He may be the same John recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as proprietor of a public house in the Sandbed. He may also be the grocer and spirit dealer listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may also be the meat dealer also listed on the High Street in 1837. He firstly married an Oliver and secondly Janet (d.1843), daughter of Thomas Kedie, baker. They had 6 children, including: Elizabeth (b.1820); Thomas Kedie (b.1822); Walter Oliver (b.1824); and Robert (b.1827). He is probably the John, married to Mary Oliver, whose son Walter Oliver was born in Hawick in 1813. He is also probably the hosier John whose twin’s deaths are recorded in Hawick in 1816. John (1795/6–1843) shepherd at Milsington. In 1841 he was living at Milsingtonshiel. He married Sarah Johnstone and their children (mostly baptised in Ettrick Parish) included William (b.c.1825); James (who died in 1841, aged 14); Francis (b.1829); Adam (b.1831); Margaret (b.1833); Jean (b.1835); John (b.1837); and Mary. His wife died at Broadlee in 1866, aged 74. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. John Balfour (1815–85) Dumfries man who travelled around painting portraits, signing them ‘J.B. Pringle’. He probably married Grace Ballantrae in Edinburgh in 1846. His wife was Grace Haswell when their son John Haswell (b.1848) and daughter Julia Mary (b.1853) were born in Hawick. He was the painter of ‘Hawick from Wilton Lodge 1850’, now in the Museum, painted from around the Violet Woods. He also painted a view of the Auld Brig from near the foot of the Mill Port in 1847, as well as a view of Hawick and Wilton from the Mote in about the same year. He later gained some fame as a painter of maritime portraits. John (b.1825/6) grocer at about 6 Doncaster Street in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He is listed as a shepherd there in 1861. His wife was Grace and their children included daughter Eliot and son Robert. John Douglas (1877–1939) born in Hawick, son of manufacturer Walter Pringle and Mary Douglas. He joined the family firm at an early age, becoming a partner in 1897 (along with his half-brother Robert). He retired from Pringle’s in 1918 (or 1919)9, moving to the south of England for his health. He married Muriel Martin in 1907 and their children were Elizabeth Douglas (who married Dr. F.Y. Henderson of London and John Martin Douglas (who married Celia Carroll and became a successful journalist). John Martin Douglas (1912–99) son of John Douglas and Muriel Martin, he was born in Hawick. He graduated from Lincoln College, Oxford in 1934 and started a career in journalism. He was sub-editor of the Guardian, served in WWII with the K.O.S.B., was Director of Foreign Affairs at the Times (1948–52), then became editor of the Sydney Morning Herald (1952–57), Deputy Editor of the Observer (1957–62), Editor of the Canberra Times (1964–65) and editor of the Sydney Morning Herald again (1965–70). He wrote the controversial best-selling book ‘Australian Accent’ (1958), as well as ‘Australian Painting Today’ (1963) and ‘On Second Thoughts’ (1971). He married Celia Carroll in 1936 and she died in 1997. Margaret Graham ‘Peggy’ nee Irvine (1908–2008) born in Carlisle and raised near Langholm. She married master butcher Robert and they had 4 children: Gladys; Margaret; Jean; and Robert. Long connected with the Hawick Common Riding, she was Acting-Mother in 1947, and had a son and grandson who were Cornet. She lived to see her telegram from the Queen and had 27 great-grandchildren. Mark of Fairmile and Clifton (1753/4–1812) son of John of Crichton and Anne, eldest daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairmile. He paid the Land Tax for Fairmile and Rink in 1785. He succeeded to Haining and Clifton on the death of his grand-uncle John in 1792 and paid the carriage and horse taxes in the years 1794 and 1797, and the dog tax in 1797, as well as being tazed for 4–6 male servants in Selkirk Parish 1793–97. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1786–1802. He was also listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788. He was appointed Chamberlain of Ettrick Forest for life. In 1802 he paid the land tax on Easter Alemoor, as well as Haining, Hartwoodburn and Howden. He was ‘of Clifftone’ when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 (when already deceased). In 1795 he married Anne Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Chalmers. Among his children were: Robert, M.P. for Selkirkshire; John, also M.P., and last Pringle of Haining; and Margaret Violet, who married Archibald Douglas of Adderstone. His wife may be the ‘Mrs. Anne Elizabeth Pringle or Pattison’ who paid the land tax on Adderstone and North Synton in about 1874. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1812. Mistress (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She may be the widow of some local Pringle. Paul Henry (1922–84) born in Hawick of Presbyterian parents, he approached Father Gordon Gray just before WWII, and was accepted into the Roman Catholic church while a prisoner of war in Italy. He returned to Hawick after the War, worked on the railways and entered Nunraw as a monk in 1954. Robert of Hoppringle (13th C.) earliest known ancestor of this family. He is recorded as a witness to a Soutra charter in the reign of Alexander III, probably around 1270. His name was written ‘de Hoppryngil’. Another man, ‘Elys de Obrinkel’ signed the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and could easily have been his son. Robert of Whit-sun and Pilmuir (d.1424) one of the earliest local Pringles. He acted as armour-bearr for James, Earl of Douglas at Otterburn in 1388. He then served the next 2 Earls of Douglas and was killed at the Battle of Verneuil in France. In 1408 he had a charter of Pilmuir in Lauderdale. About the same time he was also probably granted the lands of Smallholm and had a tower built there at Sandyknowe. About 1413 he witnessed a charter for the Homes of Wedderburn. He is probably the ‘Robt of hoppringyll’ who witnessed an inden- ture for Melrose Abbey in 1418. He may be the Robert ‘de Pringil’ who witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. His children included: Robert, who succeeded; George, Squire of Douglas; Alexander, also Squire of Douglas; and David, who succeeded his brother Robert. Robert of Smallholm and Pilmuir (d.bef. 1480) son of Robert. He is probably responsible for the bridge across the Teviot near Melrose (described by Sir Walter Scott in ‘The Monastery’) with the inscription ‘I, Robert Pringill of Pilmore steed, Gave a hundred nobles of goud sae reid, To big my brigg upon the Tweed’. He appears to have succeeded his brother George as Master Ranger of the Ward of Tweed from about 1460, and was suc- ceeded in that post by William Douglas de Cluny of Traquair in 1470. In 1459 he had a sasine for the lands of ‘Wrangham’ and Smallholm. He wit- nessed an instrument in 1474 (for the Homes of Wedderburn), but was succeeded by his brother David shortly afterwards. Robert (16th/17th C.) Bailie to the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1622 Si- mon Armstrong, called of Tweeden, appeared at the Justiciary Court as caution for him. It is un- clear what his crimes were or how he was related to other Pringles. Robert of Stichill (b.c.1581–1649) descendant of William of Whittin and son of George of Craigleith. He was 2nd son of George of Newhall and was progenitor of the Stichill branch and Laird of Bartingbush. He trained as a lawyer, becoming Writer to the Signet. He acquire Stichell in 1628. He was Commissioner of War for Roxburghshire and Berwickshire. He also served as Clerk to Gideon Murray of Elibank and Chamberlain to the Earl of Buccleuch (for the Debateable Land in the 1630s). A letter ex- ists from him to Earl Walter Scott, describing the flight and capture of several Armstrongs. He was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commiss- ioner for Roxburghshire in 1638, serving as effec- tively one of the Roxburghshire M.Ps. until 1641. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He could have been the servant to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank who had a bond in 1619 with Thomas Turnbull 'in Rowllspittle'. He purchased Stitchill in 1628, and also bought Dinlabyre, Larriston and Howden in Liddesdale in 1632, as well as Templehall in Berwickshire. He was recorded as possessor of the lands of Larriston, Howden and Stripshileden in the early 17th century. His lands in Castleton Parish (probably part of Dinlabyre) were valued at £60 in 1643 (but the same lands were owned by Scott of Buccleuch by 1678). He was also recorded as owner of lands in Stitchill Parish in 1643. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1644 and 1646 and was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire, still in 1649. He married Katherine Hamilton, who came from the Silverton family. Their children included: John, who married Margaret, illegitimate daughter of the 1st Earl of Buccleuch, but predeceased his father; Walter of Greenknowe; an unnamed daughter, who married a Ker of Graden; Anna, who married Sir James Home of Eccles; and Christina, who married William Wilson. He could be the 'Mr. Pringle' who was schoolmaster at the east-end of the Kirkyard and also master of excuse in Hawick. Robert (1750/1–1820) possibly son of Robert (recorded in the family bible). He was a nursery gardener in Hawick, probably with Dickson's. He married Ann Buckham (1771–1820) and their children were: William (b.1794), framesmith; James (b.1796), stockingmaker; Jean (or Jane, b.1799), married Francis Bell; Robert (b.1801), framework knitter, who married Elizabeth Foyer; and George Turnbull (b.1810), gardener and then licensed grocer at 12 Back Row. In the 1834 electoral roll his sons George T., Robert and James were listed as joint proprietors of the house he had left them. This is marked 'Ro. Pringle' on Wood's 1824 map. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as shepherd at Wolfcleuchhead. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Helen Lunn and their children included John (b.1798) and James (b.1799). Married Margaret Wilson and their children included John (b.1745) and John (again, b.1747). Robert (d.1793) served as Captain of the Royal Engineers and Lieutenant Colonel in the Army. In 1788 he was listed under 'Votes of John Pringle of Clifton' among the voters of Roxburghshire (suggesting that he was given freedom of some land in order to vote in the county). He supervised the construction of new defences around St. John's, Newfoundland in the 1770s and instigated the Newfoundland Volunteers in about 1778 and the Newfoundland Regiment in 1780. He returned to Europe in 1783 and was chief engineer at Gibraltar 1785–88. He was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in 1792 and died in Grenada. He married Miss Balneavis. His will is in the National Archives. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Thomson and their children included John (b.1778). In 1778 he is described as a Superintendent of Excise and the witnesses were Robert Pringle (perhaps his father) and writer William Wilson. He could be the 'Mr. Pringle' who was schoolmaster at the east-end of the Kirkyard and also master of excuse in Hawick. Robert (1750/1–1820) possibly son of Robert (recorded in the family bible). He was a nursery gardener in Hawick, probably with Dickson's. He married Ann Buckham (1771–1820) and their children were: William (b.1794), framesmith; James (b.1796), stockingmaker; Jean (or Jane, b.1799), married Francis Bell; Robert (b.1801), framework knitter, who married Elizabeth Foyer; and George Turnbull (b.1810), gardener and then licensed grocer at 12 Back Row. In the 1834 electoral roll his sons George T., Robert and James were listed as joint proprietors of the house he had left them. This is marked 'Ro. Pringle' on Wood's 1824 map. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as shepherd at Wolfcleuchhead. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Helen Lunn and their children included John (b.1803), Elizabeth (b.1805) and James (b.1807). Robert (d.1809) resident of Hawick. He was already deceased in 1809 when the death of his son Thomas is recorded. His nickname appears to be 'old Washman', but it is unclear what this meant. Robert of Clifton (d.1842) younger son of Mark. He served in the 7th Hussars. He succeeded his brother John to the Clifton titles in 1831 after John died in a carriage accident when returning from Headshaw.

Loch. He resided as the Haining (in Selkirk), where he died 11 years later, and was the last Pringle of Clifton. His lands included North Synton in Ashkirk Parish. He was also listed among the landowners in Roberton Parish in 1841. He was a Liberal in politics and reputedly well-liked in the local community. He defeated Alexander Pringle of Whytbank in the Selkirkshire election of 1832, by 9 votes. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1832–34 and was defeated again by Pringle of Whytbank in the 1835 election. Since he died unmarried, his distant cousin Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood succeeded to the Clifton estates, while Haining passed to his sister Margaret Violet, who had married Archibald Douglas of Adderstone and Midshiels. Robert (1795–1859) founder of the manufacturers, born in Hawick, son of Walter. He joined Dicksons & Laings in 1810 as an apprentice stockmaker. He entered into a partnership with John Waldie and Peter Wilson in 1815, which later separated, his part eventually becoming Pringle’s of Scotland. The firm was based at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent 1815–19. In 1819 he carried on the business on his own in new premises on the Cross Wynd, where the company remained for about 50 years. It was listed as a manufacturer of hosiery there in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. It was known as Robert Pringle & Son for many years, later becoming Pringle of Scotland and being run by the family until his grandson Robert retired in 1940. He was said to be a man of strong individuality and great energy in developing his business. He was on the old Town Council, as well as being a Police Commissioner and on the Parochial Board. He was a member of Hawick Kirk Session and was a Liberal in politics. He was living at 61 High Street in 1841 and had moved to Bridge Street by 1851, when he is listed as employer of 82 men and 8 women. In 1823 he married Charlotte Paterson, and she died in 1873, aged 69. They had 11 children including Walter, who carried on the business. Their other children were: Charlotte (b.1824), who became Mrs. Dykes; Walter (b.1826); Ann (b.1827), who married Peter Williamson; William (b.1829), who became a grocer; Catherine Elizabeth ‘Kate’ (b.1831), who married Mr. Hoy; Beatrice (b.1833), who became Mrs. Peters; Margaret (‘Etta’, b.1834), who married Dr. Robert Munro; Robert (b.1836), who became a doctor; Jessie (b.1839); Henry Turnbull (b.1840); Ann; and Esther Scott (b.1844). A portrait exists of him with his wife. He died at 18 Buccleuch Street and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (b.1801) son of Robert and Ann Buckham. He was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and by 1861 was listed at No. 13. He married Elizabeth Foyer and their children included: Anne, who married a Gad and then a Kerr; Elizabeth; James; Robert; and George. Robert Bailie (1806–78) son of John and Mary Walker, he was born at Cranston, Midlothian. He was farmer at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish. His brother was Maj. David of Carrière. In 1838 he married Margaret, youngest daughter of Peter Brown of Rawflat; she died in 1886. Their children included: Margaret; John, farmer at Nisbet, who succeeded to his uncle’s lands at Carrière; Robert Brown; David; Mary; and Elizabeth. He is buried in Southdean kirkyard. Robert (1837–1903) son of manufacturer Robert, he became a doctor. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1862–1953) grandson of manufacturer Robert and son of Walter. In 1878 he became an apprentice in the firm his grandfather had founded. He had the villa Woodnorton (originally Craigmore) built for him in Sunnyhill. By 1885 he was a partner, and after the death of his father in 1895 he ran the family knitwear business until he retired in 1940. In 1887 he married Edith Villiers Price (1866–1944), daughter of Joseph, a successful railway engineer (although also said to have been a soap and candlemaker from Clapham Common), and younger sister of Mrs. Patrick Anderson Laing of Balcar. Their children were Francis Mary Edith (who married James Chrysal Muir, son of a Glasgow minister) and Walter Gerald (who died in WWI). He lived at Wood Norton and died aged 91. Robert butcher in Hawick, son of Robert, who was Acting Father in 1947. He was Cornet in 1965, with his Lass being Catherine Peden (later Johnson). He married Anna Dickey (whose brother Norman was Cornet in 1961) and their son Robert was Cornet in 1994. He was Acting Father in 1989 and Jubilee Cornet in 2015. Robert ‘Robbie’ son of Robert, he was Cornet in 1994 (with his father being Cornet in 1965). He married his Lass, Lorna Szoneberg. His Picking Night unusually took place at Cavers. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he had a horse and 4 cows stolen from him at Smalholm by the Olivers of Strange. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Pringles associated with Smalholm. Thomas of Torsonce and that Ilk (d.1566) son of John of Hoppringle. In 1564/5 he was named (along with David Spotiswood of that Ilk) as one of the cautioners of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford in his feud with James Ormiston of that Ilk. He was succeeded by James. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecoate according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded as factor to the Crumhaugh estate in 1716. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1716 when his servant John Henderson had a child baptised in Kirkton Parish. It is unclear who he was or where he lived. Thomas (b.1720s) perhaps the earliest known Pringle of the knitwear family, he was grandfather of Robert and father of Walter, merchant in Hawick. It is unclear who his own parents were. He lived in the Sandbed area and was possibly a merchant. He was the owner of the family bible that was washed away in the great flood of 1767, but recovered near Kelso. He is believed to have died in a snowstorm. He may have had a half-brother Robert. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for gardener John Turnbull in 1766. His son Walter was born in 1748. Adm. Thomas (d.1804) of the Royal Navy. Son of Walter, who was a prosperous West Indian plantation owner, and grandson of Thomas, W.S. of the Stichill branch. He served during the American War of Independence, as well as in the Napoleonic Wars. He purchased the lands of Weens in 1796 from Robert Nutter Campbell and they were sold by his trustees (to Thomas Cleghorn) after his death. He was listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax in 1797 and was listed on the Carriage Tax Rolls at Weens in 1797/8. He also paid tax there in 1797 for having 4 male servants, when he was ‘Colonel Pringle’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. His son John, a tailor, died in 1805. He may be the Thomas who married Betty Douglas in 1767, and whose children included: Robert (b.1770); James (b.1771); John (b.1773); Robert (again, b.1775); Walter (b.1777); Janet (b.1779); and Thomas (b.1781). He is probably the ‘Newcastle carrier’ who was already deceased when his son Robert died in 1809. He may be the Thomas who is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick as owner of 3 work horses. Thomas (b.c.1790) dyer in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1841 he was listed as a ‘Dyer J. Wool’ on Dovemount. His wife was Beatrice and their children included Beatrix, William, Thomas, Peter and Janet. Thomas (1789–1834) poet and abolitionist, known as ‘the father of South African poetry’. Son of Teviotdale farmer Robert, he was born in Linton Parish about 4 miles south of Kelso, with his mother being Beatrice Scott from Langholm. He was crippled in infancy and suffered from lameness all his life. He was educated at Edinburgh University. He published his first poetry collection in 1817, with poems such as ‘The Scenes of Teviotdale’ popular locally. He was also the first editor of the ‘Edinburgh Monthly Magazine’, which would become Blackwood’s Magazine. He also edited ‘The Liberal Star’ and ‘Constable’s Monthly Magazine’ and worked at Register House. He befriended Sir Walter Scott, who helped him secure free passage in a resettlement programme to South Africa. In 1820 he emigrated to Grahamstown, moving to Cape Town, where he founded a school and a newspaper, but was forced to leave in 1826 because of his fight against slavery and his promotion of free speech. His sister Jessie married Hawick man William Ainslie, and he visited family in Hawick several times, after one occasion writing the poem ‘The Emigrant’s Farewell’. The Museum has (or at least had) an original letter of his. Back in London, he worked for the Committee of the Anti-Slavery Society for his last 7 years. He encouraged former slave Mary Prince to write her autobiography. He published ‘African Sketches’ and books of verse, such as ‘Ephemerides’. He died from tuberculosis at the age of 45. He was buried in Bunhill Fields, but in 1970 his remains were re-interred in South Africa. Thomas Kedie (b.1822) son of merchant John and Ann Kedie. He was listed as a grocer on Market Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1844 he married Lucille Kennedy, sister of William Norman Kennedy and half-sister of bookseller J.D. Kennedy. Their children were: Angelique Lucille (b.1846), who became a nurse; Janet Kedie (b.1848); Elizabeth Hamer (b.1850); John Douglas (b.1852); James Robert (b.1854); Douglas; Jessie, who married James Lindsay; Maggie; and Robert. Walter (17th/18th C.) proprietor of the Roughheugh Waulk Mill in the early 1700s. In 1713 the Bailies heard a case of assault brought against his servitor John Kerr. He is referred to in the Hawick Session records of 1723 as ‘Walker, Roughheugh’, when he was employer of William Hood, and paid his fine for adultery. Given the name, occupation and location, it is not inconceivable that he was an ancestor of the manufacturing Pringles. He is probably the Walter, who married Helen ‘Ourd’, and whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included: Elspeth (b.1714); William (b.1715); Margaret (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); and Henry.
Pringle

(b.1720). Walter (b.1748) son of Thomas and father of manufacturer Robert. He was a merchant in the Sandbed. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the tailor who was one of the witnesses to a baptism for Thomas Miller in 1781. He is probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms for merchant John Renwick in 1797 and 1799. In 1773 he married Betty Heiton (or Hutton), who came from an old Darnick family. Their wedding proclamation is recorded in Melrose, with Andrew Riddell as cauntyer. They had 7 children, including: Betty (b.1775); Robert (b.1776), who must have died young; John (b.1778), a merchant; Robert (1780–82); James (b.1783); Thomas (b.1785); and Walter (b.1787). In 1793 he secondly married Anny Scott (related to the Brieryyards Scotts) and had at least 5 more children: Beatrice (b.1794); Robert (b.1795), who founded Pringle of Scotland; Jennie or Janet (1797–1858); Andrew (b.1799); and James. Walter (1826–1895) eldest son of Robert. He began as an apprentice in his father’s Cross Wynd factory in 1842, and when he was finished in 1846, the firm was renamed ‘Robert Pringle & Son’. He eventually ran the family hosiery business, further developing it after the death of his father, the founder. In the 1850s he developed the ‘intarsia’ of producing Argyle-style sock patterns. In 1868 he moved the main premises to Walter’s Wynd. He was a Town Councillor for many years and also served as a Magistrate. In politics he was a staunch Liberal. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He gifted communion silverware to the Parish Church. In 1860 he married Mary Sutton and she died in 1870, aged 35. They had 3 children: John Clement, who died in infancy; Robert, who succeeded to the family business; and Mary Charlotte (b.1864), who married William Charles Johnston. He later married Mary, daughter of Dr. John Douglas, and she died in 1915, aged 72. The children by his second marriage were: Jane Aitchison, who married T.J. Finlay; Catherine Ann (‘Cathy’), who married George Crosfield Glenny; and John Douglas, who married Marie Anne Martin, and became a partner in the family firm. He lived at Langlands in Sunnyhill, which he had built for him, starting a trend for other manufacturers to build villas nearby. In about 1874 he was recorded owning part of the ‘particulate lands’ of Hawick, which had earlier been owned by William Scott ‘at Flex’. He is said to not have been of very strong constitution. Along with several other members of the family, he is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Walter Gerald (1893–1917) only son of Robert Pringle, the last member of the family to run the famous knitwear company. He started his apprenticeship in 1910, and was being groomed to eventually take over the firm before war broke out. Before WWI he was Captain of the Hawick Motor Cycling Club. He became 2nd Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B. and was killed at Passchendaele. There is a plaque to his memory in Wilton Church. William (15th C.) probably son of David. He was Constable of Cessford Castle and appointed the 1st Range of the Ward of Tweed. He could have been the ‘Wil Pringil’ who was on the 1464/5 panel for ruling on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was Constable of Cessford Castle when he witnessed a sasine for Cessford in 1467. He is probably the William who witnessed a document between Henry Wardlaw and the Kers of Cessford in 1468 and another for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk in 1468. It seems likely he is the William mentioned in an action brought by John, Lord Somervile in 1476. He was probably succeeded by his son Andrew. He may be the Willaim who was recorded along with David on a document relating to Rucastle in 1491. Also in 1491 he was ‘Wil. Hoppringle de Cesfurd’ when he had a charter for lands in Peeblesshire. William (d.1513) younger son of James of Smallholm. His father was Isabella Muray of Falahill. He had a racket for Caddonlee in 1488 and another along with his son George for Torwoodlee in 1509. In 1509 he also held one quarter of Clifton. He was a witness to the sasine of Queen Margaret of England for lands in Ettrick Forest. He had sons: George, who succeeded; and David, whose son George was a tutor of Torwoodlee in 1581. He was killed at Flodden. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholm and Buccleuch. It is unclear where he was from, although he is listed along with men from the Jedburgh area and Berwickshire. His name is recorded as ‘Ville Hopprinigil’. William of Torwoodlee (d.1581) son of George. In 1571 he subscribed to the General Band to rise against Kerr of Ferniehirst and the thieves of Liddesdale and Eskdale. In 1575 he was directed to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He married Agnes (or Alison), daughter of James Heriot of Trabrown in 1571 and was succeeded by his son George. William (18th C.) resident at Howpasley when his son William was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1761. He may have been brother to John, who was also living at Howpasley. William (d.1811) tenant farmer at Hislop. He had 2 sons by his first marriage, Adam and Robert. His second wife was Elizabeth Wilson. After his death, there was a court case involving a pre-nuptial contract, the argument hinging on whether it was legal for her to have had her hand led to sign something when should go neither write her name nor read the contents. William (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Bedrule and Fulton until 1826, being succeeded by Mr. Haliburton and then shortly afterwards by Robert Brodie. He is recorded at Bedrule in 1797, when he owned 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He opened a quarry on his farm at Bedrule, and started a lime-works, from which he also supplied some neighbouring farms. He could be the William, married to Hannah, whose son Robert was baptised in 1801 in Byrness. William (b.1790/1) born in Roberton Parish, he was an agricultural labourer at Phaup in Cavers Parish in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was listed as shepherd at Phaup. His wife was Jean (from Dumfriesshire) and their children included Janet, Adam, David, Andrew, James and Margaret. William (b.1791/2) shepherd at Woolhope in Castelton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was shepherd at ‘Stinchelburnfoot’. He married Janet Crozier and their children included Isabella, William, James and Adam. William (b.c.1793) frame-smith of the Back Row, listed there in 1841. His son was Alexander. He is listed along with labourer Robert as a joint-tenant in the 1837 electoral roll. Another household on the Back Row in 1841, consisting of Robert, William (also a frame-smith) and James, could be his father, son and grandson. William (b.1805/6) originally from Lilliesleaf, he was farmer at Newstead in Wilton Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 20 acres, employing 1 girl. In 1836 he married Janet, daughter of Thomas Cranston and Agnes Small. Their children included Jessie. William (b.c.1810) mason at Billingburn near Chesters in the 1841 census. In 1851 he was still living in his father’s house on Bridge Stree. His wife was Mary and their children included Robert, George, Margaret and Jane. William (b.1829) son of Robert and Charlotte Paterson. He set up a grocery business in Hawick. William Elliot (b.1833) son of William and Janet Crozier, he was born in Castleton Parish. His father was shepherd at Woolhope. He was a shepherd, being listed at Toftsholm in 1861. He married Christina Douglas Elliot (daughter of James Elliot and Helen Douglas), and she is listed as ‘Christopher’ on one census transcript. Their children were: William (b.1858), who moved to the Durham area; James Elliot (b.1859), also moved to Durham; Walter Douglas Elliot (b.1864), who died young; and Helen Douglas (b.1869), who married Thomas Hall and lived in Northumberland (formerly spelled ‘Pringil’, ‘Pringle’, ‘Pringill’, ‘Pringyll’, ‘Pringil’, ‘Pryngill’ and variants, and synonymously as ‘Hoppringle’, ‘Hoppringill’, etc. in earlier centuries).

the Pringle Bible

the Pringle Bible (thu-pring-ul-bi-bul) n. old family bible of the local Pringle family. It was apparently found on the banks of the Tweed near Kelso following the Hawick flood of 1767! The book was later returned to the family. It bears the inscription: ‘Who ought this book if ye would knowe I will show you by letters 2, the first is T, a letter bright, the 2 is P in all men’s sight, and if you chance should to read amiss look underneath and there it is – Thomas Pringle’.

the Pringle Hall

the Pringle Hall (thu-pring-ul-hal) n. extension added to the Burns Club in 1963, named after Alexander Pringle, club treasurer for 37 years.

Pringle’s (pring-ulz) n. Pringle of Scotland, founded as a hosiery firm by Robert Pringle in 1815, in partnership with John Waldie and Peter Wilson, at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent. Pringle went on his own from 1819, moving to the Cross Wynd (opposite Allars Kirk) and manufacturing underwear from 1827, with the introduction of the ‘broad frame’. The name was changed to ‘Robert Pringle & Son’, when Walter completed his apprenticeship in 1846. The ‘Intarsia’ method of producing Argyle-patterned socks was introduced in the 1850s. The firm purchased John Nixon & Sons mill on Walter’s Wynd in 1868 (or 1869), renaming it ‘Rodono’. Robert Pringle (grandson of the founder) was made a partner in 1885. The company then started to focus on retail as well as wholesale. The firm first made spun silk underwear (and in colour) in 1892, and introduced seamless gore for ladies underwear in 1895. About 1905 it became one of the first firms to introduce knitted outerwear. Douglas Pringle joined his brother Robert as a partner in 1897, and J. Boyd Sime became another partner in 1906. The knitted coat department was started in 1910. Herbert Benyon Johnstone joined in 1919. In 1922 it became incorporated as a private company, Robert Pringle & Son Ltd.
The Pringle’s Story

Pure silk stockings (‘Prinseta’) were started in 1927. Sime resigned in 1929, with John Turnbull becoming Managing Director. ‘Rodono splash-proof’ silk stockings and ‘Slimfit’ underwear were being made from 1931. Arthur Oddy and Wullie Mactaggart became joint Directors in 1932 and became Managing Directors following Turnbull’s resignation a year later. In 1933 cashmere was added, and designer Otto Weisz joined in 1934, becoming a Director in 1937. He was responsible for the name ‘twinset’ and for making the style the company’s own from the mid-1940s. A.G. Chaston was also made a Director in 1934 and George Mitchell in 1937. The lion rampant first appeared on garment labels in 1934. In 1940 the ladies’ blouse department started in Hawick, ‘Pringle Johnston Imports’ was formed to handle the U.S. market, and Robert Pringle retired that same year. The firm manufactured utility outerwear for the forces in WWII, and stopped making underwear in 1965. A 5 year lease was taken on Weensland Mill in 1946 and the Kelso factory opened, with the Berwick factory following 2 years later. The blouse department closed in 1950, but the Burnfoot factory opened and Rodono Mill was extended 3 times in the 1950s. Automatic rob transfer was introduced in 1955, with intarsia and men’s outerwear starting about the same time. It received the Royal Warrant from the Queen Mother in 1948, was appointed to the Queen in 1956 and received the Queen’s Award to Industry for Export Achievement in 1965 (further awards followed in 1970, 1979 and 1980). The company had lost its focus. Records relating to the firm, covering the period 1922–76 are listed on the National Register of Archives and a book ‘Pringle of Scotland and the Hawick Knitwear Story’ (2006) was written by Hugh Barty-King – ‘Hei’s a Pringle-ite since hei left schill an plenty o support hei’ll get frae the mill’ [GM].

The Pringle’s Story (thu-prin’-ulz-stō-ree) n. 1948 film, being a documentary about Pringle’s.

Pringle’s Temperance Hotel (pring-ulz-tem-prins-hō-tel) n. one of the last temperance hotels in Hawick, situated on Union Street in the early 20th century. This may be the same as the house on the corner at 32 North Bridge Street, later Gladstone’s factory.

prinkle (pring-kul) v., arch., poet. to prickle, tingle, have goosebumps – ‘...An’ mony bats flew silent roon’ My prinklin’ heid’ [WP], n., arch. a tingling sensation, prickles (usually plural).

the Printer’s Well (thu-prin’-urz-wel) n. former public water supply at the corner of the Hawege and Silver Street. It was originally on the opposite side of the street beside John Waldy’s House, and hence also sometimes known as ‘Waldy’s Well’. It was part of the town’s water supply, and tended to be used when the wells further up went dry (also written as ‘Printers’`).

prisoners o war (pri-zi-nurz-ō-wawr) n., pl. prisoners of various wars have been a common sight in and around Hawick. During the Napoleonic wars, 1812–14, about 120 French, German and Polish officers were sent to Hawick and allowed to move about freely with certain restrictions (the privates were largely kept in Penicuik, and there were also officers in Selkirk). William Nixon acted as paymaster for them and their headquarters was at Slitrig Bank, but they were boarded in private houses throughout Hawick. There was also a base across the river on Slitrig Crescent, in what was once the Red Cross building. Several officers stayed in the old house at 44 High Street, as seen in a painting of the time. They were allowed to walk within 1 mile of the tower knowe in any direction, and met every morning at the spetch for roll call. Some of them (including M. Prefort) painted local landscapes, which still exist, and some created other items that are now in the museum, such as a carved ivory guillotine, a carved snuff-box and a home-made pair of men’s body stays. In late 1813 Francois Senebien wrote (in French) to the Duke of Buccleuch, asking for help in being freed on compassionate and health grounds. In any case, all of these prisoners were released in June 1814 after the allied troops took Paris, with the men boarding ship at Leith. It is said that the presence of all the well-dressed French officers changed the sense of fashion in the town. One of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson’s sisters married a prisoner (traditionally said to be a Bonaparte!), while another sister (Jane) had a child to one, named Cabourne. Additionally, Ann Ekron lived with an ensign called Adam Bellom, having a daughter Adelina, and lieut. Frederick Diener had a son Frederick William Diener with Hawick woman Willhelmina Paisley. A century later there were as many as 6,000 German prisoners of war based at Stobs in WWI, living in 200 wooden huts below Winnington Rig farm. They were mainly civilian detainees in the first few months of the War, and it became purely a military camp at the end. Prisoners included the crews of the battleships ‘Gneise­ nau’, ‘Leipzig’, ‘Torpedo’ and ‘Blücher’. Conditions in the camp seem to have been among the best in Britain. Prisoners worked on local farms and built a sewage works for the camp. The last prisoners were released in early 1919. The museum has a model ship and a ship in a bottle from this period, and also copies of the newspaper produced by the Germans, ‘Stobsbiade’. 45 prisoners were buried in the Camp cemetery, with their remains transferred to Cannock Chase Cemetery in 1962. During WWII there were a small number of Polish and German prisoners located at Stobs. There were about 30 prisoners there towards the end of the War, staying until January 1947, although with minimum security in the last months. German and Italian prisoners were also located in Nissen huts where the Police Station and Katharine Elliot Centre were later built.

the Probus Club (ˈθəʊ-prə-ˈbɪs-klaʊb) n. local club for retired professional businessmen, which meets every second Thursday morning for a talk and refreshments. Local clubs are connected with the international Probus organisation (founded 1966), but run autonomously, while being supported by the local Rotary club. The Hawick Club was formed in 1976.

the Proclamation (ˈθəʊ-prə-ˈkla-mə-shən) n. the official announcement made on the Thursday by the Burgh Officer charging the Burgesses to ride the marches. Once this would have been made at the Mercat Cross, and later from the ‘Oyes door’ in the old Town House, but now it is done from the Town Hall Balcony immediately after the Colour Bussing. The Saxhorn Band provide the fanfare for the big fower and the Halberdier appearing outside the Town Hall, Proctor

Proctor (prok-tur) n. Rev. James (1826–60) probably born at Dalkeith. He started as an apprentice tailor, then switched to carpentry. He also became a strong advocate for Teetotalism, joining the British League of Junior Abstainers. He attended Edinburgh University and became a missionary under Rev. William Reid of Edinburgh. His health prevented him from completing the arduous course with the United Presbyterians, so he entered the Congregational Church. He was inducted to Hawick Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk in 1857, but resigned the following year due to ill-health (and perhaps partly because of disputes among the congregation about remaining out of the Congregational Union, with which he had been involved). He became minister at Hamilton Congregational Church, but again his health cut this appointment short. He married Janet Chisholm and they had 1 child, but she died giving birth to a second. He wrote ‘A Crack about the Drink; or, a Poetical Dialogue between a Total Abstainer and a Moderate Drinker’ (1949). He also wrote poetry and hymns.

procurator (pro-kew-ră’-ur) n. someone with the authority to act on behalf of another – ‘... and ilk ane of thame, coniunctlie or seuer-alie, my lauchfull procuratouris, commitand to thame full power ...’ [SB1569], a lawyer appearing in the lower courts – ‘Having heard parties’ procurators, and thereafter considered the whole case’ [HAd1868].

procurator fiscal (pro-kew-ră’-ur-fis-kul) n. in Scottish law a public officer, appointed by the Lord Advocate, who prosecutes in petty criminal cases and also conducts investigations into sudden or suspicious deaths. Also an officer appointed with similar responsibilities within a burgh – ‘... being accused at the instance of the Procurator-fiscal for bluiding aither of them uthers ...’ [BR1640], ‘... at ye instance of Wm. the Provost’s Breakfast (thu-pro-vists-brek-fist) n. ceremonial breakfast taking place traditionally in the Town Hall on the Friday morning of the Common Riding, and including the Magistrates, Councillors and other invited guests. The event was inaugurated by Provost Watson in 1885 at his home at Wilton Bank, and held in the Council Chambers from 1888. Unlike most other events, speeches are prohibited. The Cornet and his guests breakfast separately, formerly in the Tower Inn.

the Provost’s Chain (thu-pro-vists-chân) n. chain of office of the Hawick Provost, first worn by Provost Melrose in 1906 along with the ceremonial robe. It was purchased through public subscription, initiated by the Callants’ Club. The design is in the ‘renaissance’ style, in 15 carat gold, weighing about 30 ounces. It consists of 30 parts linked together, 14 of which are shields for the names of Provosts, 8 are thistles with the motto ‘Nemo me impune lacesset’ and the last 8 are circular wreaths of oak leaves bearing an ornamental ‘H’ and mural coronets with the sword and scales of justice. The monogram of the Provost forms the back link of the collar, while the badge of the Callant’s Club in enamel forms the front link. The badge that hangs from the chain measures 4 1/2 by 3 inches and is an enamel version of the Burgh Arms. The design and manufacture were by Brock & Son, goldsmiths of Edinburgh. The Chain was in regular use until 1974, when it disappeared during the Common Riding Ball. Worth an estimated £7,000 at the time, its disappearance was a great mystery. The Callants’ Club presented a replacement chain in 1979. However, the original was sent anonymously to the Provost in 2002.

the Provost’s Council (thu-pro-vists-koonsul) n. Hawick Honorary Provost’s Council, a group consisting of a number of local councillors with specific duties during the Common Riding. This body officially invite a young man to be Cornet each year, and its main objective is to fulfil Hawick’s civic functions and ceremonies. It was formerly a sub-committee of the Town Council, but after Reorganisation became an honorary body, consisting of the regional (8 members) and community councillors (4 members) from the Hawick wards, who elect the Honorary Provost and 4 Honorary Bailies from among themselves.

the Provost’s Lamp (thu-pro-vists-lawm) n. an ornamental lamp which used to be mounted outside the Provost’s house during his term of office, and at one time would be alight as a sign that he was at home. The first Provost who had the lamp was Robert Fraser Watson in 1882. Since Reorganisation it has been kept inside the Town Hall. Flags were also flown outside the Provost’s house since at least 1888.

provit (proo-vec’, -vi’) pp., poet. proved – ‘For thou, O God, hest pruvet us; thou hest tryet us as siller is tryet’ [HSR].

provook (pro-vook) v., poet. to provoke – ‘Howe aft did thaye provook him in the wuldirniss …’ [HSR], ‘Yet thaye tempet an’ provooket the maist his God …’ [HSR].

provost (pro-vist) n. Scottish version of mayor, being chief magistrate, chairman of the town council and civic head (from Old English).

the Provost (thu-pro-vist) n. Hawick’s first Provost was George Wilson in 1861 after the council was reconstituted following the Police and Improvement Act of that year. The normal term of office is 3 years. After Reorganisation in 1975, it was decided to continue to appoint a local Councillor to perform the ceremonial role. The title used was Ex-Provost, while the old Provost (Atkinson) continued, then the new incumbent was named Honorary Provost. The duties of the current Honorary Provost include chairing the Provost’s Council, acting as civic head during the Common Riding, selecting the Common Riding Chief Guest and representing Hawick as civic head at Common Ridings and similar ceremonies in neighbouring towns. The following is the full list: George Wilson 1861–68; George Hardie Fraser 1868–71; John Nichol 1871–74; Edward Wilson 1874–75; Robert Ewen 1875–78; Robert Fraser Watson 1878–87; Robert Milligan 1887–90; George Hogg 1890–93; Walter Scott Barrie 1893–96; Robert Mitchell 1896–1902; John Melrose 1902–19; George Heron Wilson 1919–22; James Renwick 1922–28; William Scott Nichol 1928–31; David Fraser 1931–38; J.A.C. the Provost’s Lamp
the Provost’s Room

the Provost’s Tent (thu-pro-vists-ten’) n. refreshment tent in the centre of the racecourse at the Mair, where the Provost and councillors entertain their guests, a tradition started by Provost Renwick in the 1920s.

Prowett (prow-i’) n. William (b.c.1790) from England, he was a framesmith in Hawick. He who was involved in 1830 with an improvement whereby old frames could be made wider for producing shirts and undergarments rather than just hosiery. He was listed as a framesmith on O’Connell Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living on O’Connell Street (labelled ‘Prowat’s backhouse’) with his wife Mary and children Mary, John and Ann. By 1851 his wife was a widow, listed as a lodging house keeper. William (b.1821/2) born in Traqueer, Kirkcudbright, he was son of William and continued his father’s framesmith business. In 1851 he was at 2 O’Connell Street (perhaps the modern No. 11). His wife was Sarah Anne and their children included Mary Jane, William Henry and John Dodd.

prowsie (prow-see) adj., arch. particular in dress or in work (also ‘prossie’; noted by J. Jamieson).

the Pru (thu-proo) n. popular short form for the Prudential Life Assurance Company, in Hawick referring to the building by the ‘coffin end’ at the Horse. Although the insurance company moved out in the 1970s, the balcony still contains the word ‘Prudential’ carved in stone.

the P.S.A. (thu-pee-es-ä) n. organisation formed locally in 1910 to provide activities for the male youth of Hawick. The idea started in the Midlands of England in 1875, to provide non-denominational Sunday afternoon meetings to encourage young men away from public houses, the ‘Pleasant Sunday Afternoon’ brotherhood. A P.S.A. club started in Hawick in the 1890s, but that floundered and it was more firmly established in 1910. This was partly instigated by Hawick’s Rev. William Ainslie, making inquiries about the Birmingham-based movement. Originally the Hawick club had a connection with the Congregational Kirk, but soon became an autonomous organisation. The club organised indoor games and other activities for young men. In particular it has a ‘semi-junior’ rugby team, for 16 to 18 year olds, founded in 1919 by D. Paterson, D. Stavert and Bailie A.J. Hislop. This makes them the oldest semi-junior rugby team in Scotland. The male voice choir was formed in 1932, with first conductor being William Elliot and first accompanist Robert Little. The clubrooms were on Teviot Crescent, providing indoor games facilities for boys from the age of 12. It was run by volunteers, basically providing a boys ‘youth club’, before local authorities thought about such things. The clubrooms had 7 billiard tables, carpet bowls and table tennis. The club also had a cricket team, a drama group and an orchestra at one time, and held an annual New Year’s bowling tournament. When the clubrooms closed in 1961 the building was acquired by Barrie’s knitwear and later demolished to make way for a supermarket. The rugby team and choir survive to this day (the choir being the only remaining P.S.A. choir in Britain). They were the first local junior rugby team to have their own pitch, acquiring some waste ground at Burnfoot in 1958, and building facilities there in 1960. The team is nicknamed the ‘Peeskees’, and plays in navy blue shirts with a gold hoop and navy socks with gold tops. Highlights include winning the Scottish Youth Championship in 1986/87 and again in 2003/04. In 2016 the rugby team effectively merged with the Wanderers, with the teams training together and swapping roles as ‘A’ and ‘B’ teams in alternating years. Minute books and team photographs exist from 1919, and a booklet ‘Memories of a Great Club’ was printed for the 75th anniversary in 1994.

the P.S.A. Choir (thu-pee-es-ä-kwFr) n. male-voice choir associated with the ‘Pleasant Sunday Afternoon’ club. The choir was set up in 1932. The first conductor was William Elliot and the first accompanist was Robert Little (both men being organists in the Congregational Kirk). Later conductors included Bert Hutchison, Albert Budge, Eric Whitehead, W.R. Smith, Jeff Panes, John Leishman, Basil Deane, Ian Seeley, Susan Booth, Isaac MacRae and Ann Witherington. Accompanists have included Robert Little, Adam Ingles, A. Whitelaw, Agnes Young, Peggy Hunter, Nan Ellis, Brian Bonsor, Betty Scott, George Duthie and Linden Warburton. The choir has performed over the years with the Hawick Drama Club, Hawick Orchestral Society and the Saxhorn Band. During the war they performed concerts to raise money for the Red Cross. They have sung with many special guests, including Dame Isobel Baillie. They hold an annual dinner in November.
pu (poo) v., arch. to pull – ‘Pu’ me, we pull rin etter thee . . . ’ [HSR], ‘When flowers o’ life ye fain wad pu’ . . . ’ [WP], ‘And pu’ed the sprigs o’ heather bloom Frae aff her braes sae green’ [JSE], n., arch. a pull (sometimes written ‘pu’); pul is more common locally).

Public hoose (pub-leek-hoos) n. a pub – ‘Even the Colour-Bussin’ was held in a public hoose!’ [BW1939].

publick (pub-leek) adv., arch. openly, publicly – ‘Robt. Tyne-line, weaver, fyned tenn pund, Scotts, for publick, in face of the whole incorporation of weivers . . . ’ [BR1697].

pubs (pubs) n., pl. public houses, establishments where alcoholic beverages are served. Hawick has had (at least) its fair share of these over the years, and they have formed a central part of the social and political life of the town. In earlier times there were many licensed establishments in some back room, known only by the name of the proprietor. In the year 1838/9 the number of licenses granted to inn-keepers, grocers and others in Hawick Parish was 53, with the vast majority undoubtedly in the Town itself. An incomplete list, including some popular names as well as official names, but excluding hotels and private clubs, is: the Albion Bar; the Athole Bar; the Balmoral; Barclay’s; the Black Bull; Blondette’s; the Blue Anchor; the Blue Bell; Bogart’s; the Bridge Bar; the Britannia Airms; the British Public Hoose; the Buck Inn; the Bull & Butcher; Burnfit Roadhouse; the Burns Inn; Callaghan’s; the Cannon Inn; Clinty’s; the Coach an Horses; the Commercial Inn; the Cross Keys; Dalton’s; Diesel’s; the Douglas Airms; the Drop Inn; the Drumlanrig Bar; the Ewe an Lamb; the Exchange; the Ex-Pat; the Fiddle Inn; the Fleece Inn; Frankie’s; Gentie’s; the Glencairn Bar; the Golden Fleece; the Grapes; the Gretel; the Half-Moon Hotel; the Hare an Hoonds; the Harrow Inn; the High Level; Holland Hoose; the Imperial; the Inn Place; the Irish Harp; Jock Reid’s; the Kazba, the King’s Heid; the Mansfield Bar; the Mayfield Bar; the Melgund; the Monkeys; the Nag’s Heid; the No. 10; the Oak Trei; the Office; the Ordnance Airms; the Pick Inn; the Plough Inn; the Punch Bowl; the Queen’s Heid; the Railway Hotel; Robbie’s; the Royal; the Royal Oak; the Salmon Inn; Scrumz; the Somewhere Else; the Stag’s Heid; Stampers; the Station; St. Leonard’s Vaults; the Swan Inn; the Terribus Airms; Thordykes; the Trinity Bar; the Trough Inn; the Union Inn; the Waverley; the West End Bar; the White Hart; the White Swan; the Wulton Bar – ‘The pubs are bad – but clubs are worse, the people all did cry. Suppress the clubs, they’re worse than pubs, they sell drink on the sly’ [JCG].

puddin (pu-din, pu-dn, poo-din) n. sausage meat pudding, e.g. ‘white puddin’ – ‘They’ll hae oor puddens oat by turns, We’ll get oor paiks! A’ owre-the-heid o’ Rabbie Burns, Yon king o’ raiks!’ [DH].

Puddinburn (pu-din-burn) n. Puddingburn, a former tower and settlement off the Hermitage Water in Castleton Parish, perhaps close to the modern Paddington Sike. It could be the earthwork near the confluence of Paddington Sike with the Hermitage Water. It may be the ‘Pantodene’ listed on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, valued at 8 shillings and with tenant William Elliot. An English letter of 1584 mentions ‘the Armstronges of Times alias Puddyborne’; this makes it clear that at that time the Armstrongs of Tinnis and of Puddinburn were one and the same; this may suggest that Puddinburn was close to (or another name for) the Tinnis Burn, and not near Paddington Sike at all, or else simply that the Armstrongs of Tinnis also had a seat at Puddinburn. ‘Sim of Puddinge burne’ is mentioned in an English letter of 1600. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Podotoum’ among the possessions of Francis Beattie in 1632. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch the former farmstead was combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads. This was once a stronghold of the Armstrongs and mentioned in the ballad ‘Dick o the Cow’. A note in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) records that the farm was then on the lands of Reidmoss (even though that lies far to the south), with the old farmhouse converted into a sheepfold – ‘Then Dickie’s come on for Pudding-burn, Fala, &c. E’en as fast as he might drie. – Now Dickie’s come on for Puddinburn, Where there were thirty Armstrongs and three. Fala, &c.’ [CPM]. The poem also contains a reference to a habit of the Armstrongs that you would get no dinner if you failed to come when first summoned – Then it was the use of Pudding-burn, Fala, &c. And the house of Mangerton, all haill, These that came na at the first ca’ They got nae mair meat t’ the neist meal’ [CPM] (labelled ‘Paddowdemi’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, it is possible it is the ‘Potterlamport’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map and it is ‘Paddiden’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; see also Paddington Sike).

puddle (pu-dul) v., arch. to muddle along, mess about, work ones feet up and down – ‘...How still the puddlin' feetie lie, the buffy hands at rest!' [JT].

Puffin Billy (pu-fin-bi-lee) n. nickname given to the first locomotive that was brought to Liddesdale in advance of the opening of the railway. It was said to be as big as a traction engine and with a 6-foot high chimney. It was an enormous struggle to bring it from Carlisle by road, with many mishaps along the way, including the death of the man in charge of the operation, Bill Smith, when it fell on top of him. It was brought to a location near Saughtree School where it was used as a sawmill for the railway works, and then taken by means of a temporary rail line from near the junction of the Caldron Burn and the Liddel to join the Border Counties Railway, where it was used in the construction project.

Purcell (\textit{pur-sel}) \textit{n.} Isobel (17th C.) recorded in 1643 being in Rule. Her lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £15. James (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He was on the short-list for candidates to be Cornet in 1712 and was Cornet in 1713. In 1713 he was described as a wright who was one of the tradesmen chosen by the minister and heritors of Hawick to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse. He may be the same James who was born in 1678 to John and Catherine Scott. He gave a house to James Richardson, son of his nephew George, who gave evidence regarding the Common in 1767. John (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as a wright among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the John, married to Catherine Scott, whose children born in Hawick included John (b.1670), Elspeth (b.1672) and James (b.1678). Patrick recorded in 1567, along with Hector Turnbull ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as other Turnbulls and Olivers from the same place. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. His name is given as ‘Part Pursell’ (spelled ‘Pursell’, ‘Pursell’ and ‘Pursil’).}

Purdie (\textit{pur-dee}) \textit{n.} Richard (1805–70) originally from England, he was baker in Hawick who was an elder in the Relief Kirk. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Pathhead and working as a weaver. But by 1851 he was a baker at No. 3 Loan. He was listed as a baker on the Loan in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of weaver Walter Scott, and sister of William Scott, who became a successful businessman in New York. They appear to have had no surviving children. William (18th C.) resident at Todshaw. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included James (b.1763), Walter (b.1765) and Mary (b.1767).

Purdom (pur-dum) n. Alexander (d.e.1788) son of Bailie Walter. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He married Meiron (or Marion) Scott of Boghall in 1725. Their children included: Christian (b.1726); Walter (b.1728); Richard (b.1731), probably the merchant in Hawick; John (b.1734); Margaret; and William (b.1741). Alexander (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the Alexander, son of William, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 and who was elected cornet in 1797. He is recorded as Bailie in 1824. He is probably the son of shoemaker William who was born in 1771. He was recorded as a shoemaker on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Probably the same man was the shoemaker who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is probably the ‘A. Purdom’ who owned property at about 48 High Street (and next to Robert’s property at 46) on Wood’s 1824 map. On of his children was buried in 1829. Alexander (19th C.) son of joiner Richard, he married Margaret (or Marion) Hunter in Hawick in 1850 and they emigrated to Canada. Their sons Thomas and Alexander established a legal firm of Purdom & Purdom in London, Ontario, and they had 2 other sons, Richard and John. Archibald (1762/3–1849) mason in Newcastleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is also listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories (as ‘Purdon’, which must be an error). He was recorded as a head of household in Newcastleton in 1849. He subscribed to Caw’s Register of the Privy Seal given to Robert of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots, together with a large number of other men bound to them. David (15th C.) landlord-in-tenant of the Liddesdale area, who held the lands of ‘Dalman’, ‘Bluntwood’ and ‘the Crouke’. In 1476 these lands were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He may have been ancestor of the local Purdoms. Findlay (19th/20th C.) son of Thomas. He farmed at Tushielaw and at Borthaugh. He died in Vancouver. George (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbeirst, along with Jamie, as well as 2 Waughs. His name was given as ‘Jamy Purdome’. He may have been related to the Hawick Purdoms. Henry Leman ‘Harry’ (b.1879) son of Town Clerk Robert. He attended classes at St. Andrews University in 1896/7. He became a traveller with William Watson & Sons. He served with the K.O.S.B. during WWI. James ‘Jamie’ (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbeirst, along with George, as well as 2 Waughs. His name was given as ‘Jamy Purdome’. He may have been related to the Hawick Purdoms. James (17th C.) proprietor of Milsington recorded in the 1650 list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley. He may have been married to Margaret Nichol and had sons Robert (b.1640) and James (b.1643). The baptism in 1640 was witnessed by Robert Scoon and Adam Laidlaw. In 1652 there is an account with the Buccleuch papers of the losses and damages he had sustained ‘by the English army since Martinmas 1650’; this was probably Cromwell’s army. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘John Purdoun’ in a ‘respite’ in the Register of the Privy Seal given to Robert of Larriston and a large number of his kin and associates. ‘Cristale Purdoun’ is also listed. John (17th C.) recorded as an appraiser for a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving livestock eating someone’s grain. He may well have been the father or grandfather of the schoolmaster. John (1642/3–c.1725) schoolmaster in Hawick in the latter part of the 17th century and early 18th. He took over in 1669, following Mr. Chisholme, who briefly held the position after Walter Martin; he was thus perhaps the third of Hawick’s schoolmasters. He remained in the position for 54 years and finally retired in 1723 at the age of 80. For most of this time he taught in St. Mary’s Kirk itself, with the graveyard as the school playground. He also served as reader in the kirk, as well as Session Clerk (writing the entries in the parish records in a beautiful hand). He was already referred to as ‘Mr’ in 1675 and 1676 when he witnessed baptisms for John Elliot of Brugh and William Moscrop. He was apparently injured during the siege of Drumlanrig Tower by the Covenanting army in 1679. He was ‘Mr John Purdom’ in 1682 when he witnessed a couple of baptisms (one along with Walter). In 1694 he was listed as ‘Mr John Purdim’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is possible that he had an influence (in the pro-Covenanter direction) on the young Robert Paterson (‘Old Mortality’). For about the last 12 years he taught in the Parish School at the same time as the Grammar School existed, although he had a diminished salary, and complained that he was ‘deprived both of learning humanity (i.e. Latin) and of ye ordinary salarie (having no salarie allocat to him for his reading the Scriptures upon the Lord’s day, forenoon and afternoon, and being clerk to ye session’). A further complaint was that even apart from the Grammar School, there were others teaching privately in the Town; this came to a head in 1713, when he had the Session proclaim that no one else ‘should in ye future teach farther than ye Psalm-Book’. There were regular entries in the Session Records of small payments to him for teaching poor children. In 1722 he was given 40 merks by the Council for renting a school-house for 4 years ‘when he had not the liberty to teach in the kirk’. He is probably the person referred to as ‘Jo Purdom’ in the 1723 Session records. In 1724 he was allowed £6 Scots for the rent of a house for the rest of his life (which proved not to be very long); the entry’s tone suggests that he was still serving as Session Clerk at that time. It may be that the last entry in the 1711–25 book marks the end of his time. He is likely the John (recorded in the baptismal register as ‘Mr’, suggesting a position of importance in the Town) who married Margaret Scott and had children: Walter (b.1678); Janet (b.1680); Margaret (b.1680); James (b.1683); Margaret (b.1685); and Elizabeth (b.1687). Margaret’s baptism was witnessed by Walter (probably the Bailie), suggesting he was a brother or other close relative. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included Walter (b.1700), Marion (b.1705) and Anna (b.1709), with no mother named. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Little and their children included John (b.1760). John (18th/19th C.) hosier at Wilton Damside along with William (possibly his brother). He was misted as manufacturer at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 (but not listed in 1840). The manufacturing business lasted until about 1837. He was listed along with William as a joint proprietor on the 1837 electoral roll. He may be the John who was married to Joan (or Jean) Douglas and had children Elizabeth, Euphemia, William, John, Agnes, Mary and Joan in the period 1816–32; Joan lived with her children at Damside in 1841. John (b.1821/2) son of John and Joan Douglas. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on Wilton Path, helped by his mother and his sister Euphemia. He was listed as a grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. He is listed on Wilton Path in 1851 and 1861, probably near the south end of the east side. In 1857 he donated to the Museum the skull of an ancient ox, found in Wulliestruther Moss. John Ritchie, O.B.E., J.P. (1862–1935) 4th son of Thomas, he was Depute Town Clerk in 1888, joint Town Clerk with his brother Robert from 1912, and then on his own 1924–36. He was honorary recruiting officer in WWI, Secretary of the War Memorial Committee, as well a Chairman of the War Pensions Committee, for which service he received the O.B.E. in 1920. He was also Honorary Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. In his younger days he was a keen member of the Volunteers and interested in sports, particularly golf and hiking. He married Annie Hume Turnbull (1865–1916), daughter of dyer Alexander Turnbull and Janet Armstrong Hume. Their only son was Capt. Thomas Laurence. Richard (b.1731) merchant in Hawick, son of Alexander and Marion Scott. He married Jane Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1761); Alexander (b.1762); Marion (b.1764); John (b.1766); Margaret (b.1767); an unnamed child (b.1768); Marion (again, b.1772); Thomas (b.1773); Marion (again, b.1774); and Richard (b.1775). The witnesses in 1764 were John Scott (presumably related to his wife) and William (probably his brother). He was deceased in 1805 when the deaths of his daughters Marion and Agnes are recorded. Richard (1776–1841) joiner of Kirkstiele. He was son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver. He was listed on Silver Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 his address was given as ‘Kirk Sylefoot’. His wife was Isabella Elliot (c.1790–1845). His children were: Richard, joiner and lay preacher; John, shoemaker; Alexander, who emigrated to Canada; Jane; and Agnes. One of his children was buried in Hawick in 1829. Richard (1817/8–77) joiner on Kirkstyle, like his father. He was also known as a lay preacher. He Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1851 he was listed as a joiner on Silver Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was an early member of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, who gave many teetotalism speeches around the area. He played an active part in the local Good Templar movement in the mid-19th century. He was one of the first Deacons in the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk from 1848, was one of the first Trustees and the 2nd Secretary and 2nd Treasurer, and was the leading elder in the 1860s. He married Margaret Elliot in 1848 and their children included: Isabella, who married George Wintrip; Richard; Elizabeth; and Mary. Some of his correspondence and diaries are in the Borders Archive. Robert (d.c.1686) tenant at ‘Car-

tarburnfoot’ when his will was recorded in 1686. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Grieve and their children were: Margaret (b.1670); and Janet (b.1674). Bailie Robert (1777–1862) son of Walter and Agnes Oliver, he was a farmer and resident at 46 High Street. He appears to have been selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia in 1799. He was Cornet in 1803, and later became a Magistrate. His father and paternal grandfather had both been Bailie Walter, inn-keepers in Hawick and ‘Hilliesland Lairds’, keeping cows in fields up past the Wellogate and selling milk in the town (and a pond beyond Hilliesland was popularly called ‘Purdom’s Pond’ until fairly recent times). When Cornet, he was said to have been thrown from his horse near Hagishaa and taken into a house there to recover. As a result the route out to the Moor was changed to go along the now familiar Nipknowed road. He was the last of the family to hold the orchards and lands near the foot of what became Croft Road. He is shown on Wood’s 1824 map as owner of fields and trees around Mart Street and North Bridge Street, as well as the property at 46 High Street. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed as a High Street farmer in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1851 he was listed as a retired farmer. In 1817 in Hobkirk Parish he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Smith and Mary Scott (‘the Flower of Rankleburn’). Their children included: Walter, farmer; Thomas, Town Clerk; Mary, who married Robert Scott, farmer of Kinninghall and later Falnash; Agnes; Alexander; Robert; and several children who did not long survive. A daughter of his died in Hawick in 1840. A portrait of him exists. At the time of his death was the oldest living Cornet, Burgess and Magistrate. Robert (1792–1861) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He was at Bygate in 1841 and Longhaugh in 1851 and 1861. He married Agnes (1792–1880), daughter of William Beattie; she died at Hillside, Hawick. Their children included: Robert, who died in infancy; John (b.1817); Arthur (1818/9–63), who was Quartermaster-sergeant in the 9th Lancers; Laidlaw; William (1821/2–99), who died at St. Leonard’s Cottage; Isabella (1823/4–36); Robert (again, b.1831); Agnes (b.1834), who married William Laidlaw; and perhaps a second Isabella. The family are mostly buried in Ettleton Kirkyard. Robert (1846–1924) eldest son of Thomas, he attended Wilton School and went on to become a local solicitor and banker. He was Depute Town Clerk in 1868 and served as Town Clerk 1886–1924. He turned down the chance of carrying the Flag at the Nipknowes in 1891, stating that he felt the official connection between the Town Clerk and the Common Riding had ceased about 50 years earlier. He gave a speech at the first public Colour-Bussing concert of 1894, thus being a predecessor of the Chief Guest. He was instrumental in founding the Golf Club in 1877, placing the notice asking for interested parties to meet in his office. He was the first Secretary and Treasurer of the club and also became Club Captain. In addition he was Secretary of the School of Art and of the Cottage Hospital. He was the main trustee for the estate of James Farrar Blenkhorn. In 1873 he married Helen Emma ‘Nellie’ Leman, daughter of a doctor in Ballarat, Victoria (and she died in 1924). Their children were: Thomas (b.c.1874), who moved to New Zealand; Henry Leman (b.1879), who was a traveller with William Watson & Sons; Robert Leman (1884/5–1917), also known as ‘Robin’, who died in WWI; Angus, who worked as a tea planter; Emma Mabel, who married Capt. Walter Francis Cochrane, Gala manufacturer, was mother of the epepidemiologist Archibald (‘Archie’) Leman Cochrane, and secondly married John Locke, Royal Navy engineer; and Elizabeth Neish, who married Rear-Adm. G. Pirie Thomson. He lived at Westwood, which was built for him about 1880. His portrait hangs in the Town Hall. Robert ‘Robin’ (1883/4–1917) younger son of Robert. He served in WWI with the 11th Battalion Royal Scots and was killed at Kemmel Hill. He is buried at Faubourg d’Amiens Cemetery, Arras. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Thome Purdoun in Brumesheilbrig’. He was listed among men of Es-

1605. Thomas (17th C.) ‘litster’ who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He was probably the Thomas listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He married Margaret Bell and their son Walter was born in 1689, with another John (with no mother given) born in 1693. Thomas (1820–86) 2nd son of Robert, he was an accountant and agent for the National Bank of Scotland, and head of a legal business. He was a Councillor from 1854. He served as the last Junior Magistrate of Hawick in 1861 on the old ‘eternal’ council, and was heavily involved in putting the ‘Police Act’ into operation. He was elected to the new council for South High Street Ward that same year and became Senior Magistrate. He was then Town Clerk from 1862 (succeeding from James Wilson) until his death in 1886. He was an Assessor for the county of Roxburghshire. He also acted as secretary for the Border Union Railway committee in their contest with the Caledonian Company for the Hawick to Carlisle line. He was known as a powerful public speaker and was also an occasional lay preacher. He served as one of the first Deacons and first Trustees of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational Kirk, from 1848. In 1845 he married Elizabeth Wilson Neish (daughter of a Dundee manufacturer), and she died in 1859, aged 38. Their children included: Robert, of Westwood, who succeeded as Town Clerk; Hannah (or Anna) Maria, who died in 1887; William Neish, who died aged 23; Thomas Edie; and Mary Smith, who married Algernon Fulden of Worksop. He secondly married Hannah (1827–98), daughter of Peter Findlay and brother of John Ritchie Findlay, proprietor of the Scotsman newspaper. Their children were: John Ritchie, also Town Clerk; Charles McLaren, banker; Walter Alexander, electrical engineer of Australia, who married his cousin Mary Smith Purdom; Edward, who died young; Findlay, farmer of Borthaugh, who died in Vancouver; Elizabeth Findlay, who married Dr. George Wade of Melrose and moved to Tasmania; and Arthur Muirhouse, who died in infancy. He died at Croydon and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall, painted by Frank Watson Wood. Thomas Edie (1853–1942) 3rd son of Town Clerk Thomas. He became a doctor and died in Croydon. His children were Robert Ramsden, Ethel Mary, Lillian Frances, William Percy, Elizabeth Winnifred, Arthur, Constance Hannah, Harold Neish, Elsie, Reginald, Gwendoline Mary and Irene Margaret. Capt. Thomas Laurence (1892–1927) only son of Town Clerk John Ritchie. He was a squadron leader in the Royal Air Force during WWI and was awarded the Military Cross for having ‘shown the most exceptional gallantry and daring in engaging enemy aircraft’. His only daughter Dorothy Hume married Percival Charles Edward Wilkinson of the Royal Scots Fusiliers. Walter (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Marr. Their children included: John (b.1648); William (b.1651); and Thomas (b.1654). He may be the Walter who was elected to the Council in 1648. He could also be the Walter who was one of Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). Bailie Walter (d.bef. 1708) recorded as Magistrate in 1668, 1674 and probably later. He was described as a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Earl of Queensberry in 1672. In 1674 he was Bailie when William Hall drew his sword at him and threatened to shoot him. Also in 1674 someone was fined for disobedience to the Magistrates for not giving him his horse to ride to Jedburgh to deal with the Town’s affairs. He was probably the ‘Baylyea Purdome’ (and likely an ex-Bailie at that point) recorded in 1675 among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He was ‘late baylyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/94. In 1694 he is listed as ‘Bailiyea Purdim’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’. He had lands at the eastern end of the town boundaries. This land had formerly belonged to the Laird of Horsleyhill and was on the eastern boundary of what became Dickson’s nursery-ground (i.e. just west of Oliver Place). He could have been the Walter who was married to Christian Tait and had children: Margaret (b.1671); Walter (b.1673); William (b.1674); Robert (b.1676); Bessie (b.1677); Jane (b.1679); and William (b.1681). The witnesses in 1676 were Robert Scott and Alexander Hislop. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Hardie in 1676. He could be the Walter who witnessed the baptism of one of schoolmaster John’s children in 1687 (suggesting they were brothers perhaps) and another couple in 1682 (one along with John). Bailie Walter R. (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, he was an inn-keeper in Hawick and also held the orchards and lands at the eastern end of Town. He may have been the Walter born to Walter and Christian Tait in 1673. In 1708 he was fined for causing a disturbance in St. Mary's by insisting on sitting in his father's former seat, although the Council had resolved that the right to sit there was held by the current Bailies; along with Robert Scott (son of another deceased Bailie) he spent 24 hours in the jail. He was also a Bailie himself, mentioned in the period 1722 to 1737. In 1715 he was given custody of one of the keys to the Charter Chest (and so was presumably on the Council). In 1717 he was already an elder, recorded as one of the people to collect money from the East part of the Town. In 1718 he was one of those appointed to resolve the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham, and also in that year was appointed to try to collect money for a new Kirk clock. In 1722 he was a senior elder involved in appointing the new minister. And in 1722 he was elected as Session Treasurer. In 1727 he was a witness to the baptism of a child of William Ekron and in 1728 witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Scott. He may be the Mr. Purdom of Hawick who married Margaret, 4th daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. His children included: Walter, who probably died unmarried; and Alexander, who married Meiron Scott of Boghall in 1725. He may also have been the Walter whose children Mary (b.1700), Janet (b.1704) and James (b.1719) were born in Hawick with no mother's name given. In 1728 he was 'late Bailie' and husband of Janet Scott, when their daughter Jean was baptized; the witnesses were William Oliver and Alexander '…' (possibly Purdom, i.e. his son). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isobel Scott in 1716 and their son William was born in 1724. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Elliot and their children included Walter (b.1724). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Scott and their children included Jean (b.1728). Bailie Walter (1728–1807) eldest son of Alexander. He was a Bailie several times in the period 1780–1800. He is probably the 'Bailie Purdom' recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, listed right after shoemaker William. He may be the Walter listed among local men who contributed generously to the war effort (with France) around 1799. In 1763 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Oliver and Bessie Blackhall; she was sister of 'Haunless Watt's wife, and niece of 'Auld Cash' (this probably being the father of the more familiar 'Auld Cash'). Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1763); Marion (b.1765); Alexander (b.1767); Robert (b.1770), who died young; Richard (b.1773), joiner; Elizabeth (again, b.1774), who married Andrew Oliver; Robert (b.1777), farmer; and Walter (b.1779), tobacconist. In 1764, along with Robert Oliver (probably his father-in-law), he was witness for a baptism for Walter Wilson and Catherine Oliver (his sister-in-law). Walter (18th C.) known as 'The Muckle Laird'. In 1758 he married Robina (or 'Rabini') Scott, who was related to the local family of millers. Their children included: Janet (b.1759); Walter (b.1760); James (b.1761); Thomas (b.1763); James (again, b.1765); Robert (b.1765, twin of James); Margaret (b.1767); Jane (b.1769); and Elizabeth (b.1771). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were miller James Scott (possibly his wife's father) and merchant Thomas Wilkie (whose wife was a Purdom). It is possible that he was the son of Walter and Janet Elliot born in Hawick in 1724. He may be the carrier of that name who witnessed a baptism for Richard Scott in 1757, with the other witness being Walter Scott of Boghall. Walter (b.1779) younger son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver. He was a tobacconist at 1 High Street and also became a Bailie himself. He is listed as a tobacconist on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living at 46 High Street in 1841 (with his brother Robert’s family). He died unmarried. Walter (b.1818) eldest son of Robert. He was a farmer at Easter Wooden, Eckford. In 1844 he married Agnes, daughter of Walter John Grieve; she died in 1847. In 1850 he secondly married Isabella Turnbull (b.1830) from Jedburgh. Their children were: Robert (b.1852), spectacle-maker; James; Agnes; Mary Smith, who married her cousin Walter Alexander; Walter, younger son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver. He was a tobacconist on the High Street and also became a Bailie himself. He is listed as a tobacconist on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living at 46 High Street in 1841 (with his brother Robert’s family). He died unmarried. Walter (b.1758) eldest son of Walter and Janet Elliot. He married Janet Stewart (probably a close relative) in 1682.
the other witness was George Young (married to Janet Purdom, who may thus have been his son-in-law), and probably another for Andrew Cook.

William (c.1746–1818) shoemaker recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the son of Alexander baptised in Hawick in 1741. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, 1746–1818), daughter of Alexander Donald. Their children included: Agnes (b.1769); Alexander (b.1771); James (b.1774); Walter (b.1776); Marion (b.1779); and Betty (b.1782). He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for Richard (probably his brother) in 1764. William (18th/19th C.) hosier at Wilton Damside, along with John. Their business lasted until about 1837, when it was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the elector called Purdom who was said to have died in consequence of the injuries he received when attacked at the 1835 election in Hawick. William (1821/2–99) son of Robert, who was a labourer in Castleton Parish. He married Kitty Elliot (1819–99) and they had a daughter, Mary Murray. He, his wife and daughter Mary all died at St. Leonard’s Cottage and are marked on a gravestone in Ettleton Kirkyard (formerly spelled ‘Purdem’, ‘Purdim’, ‘Purdome’, ‘Purdholm’, ‘Purdisome’ and other variants).

Purves (pur-vis) n. James (1798/9–1878) cabinet-maker of Hawick, born in Dalkeith. He was listed as a joiner on the Mid Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Cunningham, who died in 1875, aged 79. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and in 1851 at about No. 1 Loan (which could be the same location). His children included Eliza (who married William Elliot), Margaret, Jemima, James and Marion.

Johnstone (19th C.) shopkeeper on the Front Row, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. Ralph (16th C.) recorded as witness to the bond of assurance for the Turnbulls in 1595. He is referred to as ‘Rauff Purces in Minto’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Helen married William, son of carrier John Gledstains. William (16th C.) apothecary mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574. It is unclear if he was local or from Edinburgh. William ‘Blinnd Wullie’ (1752–1832) son of John and Margaret, he was born in Newcastle and was blind from birth. He became known as an itinerant singer and fiddler, his favourite song being ‘Buy Broom Busoms’, which he claimed to have written (but probably just adapted). His characteristic cry of thanks was ‘God blish the king – God blish the King; never sheed him – never sheed him; poor shoul – poor shoul!’ Although based in Newcastle he travelled widely, and was a regular visitor at the Fleece Inn in Hawick. He presented the landlord there, George Hunter, with a snuff box ‘in deep appreciation of his friendship’.
William ‘Billy’ (1784–1853) from Auchendinny in Midlothian, he grew up in Newcastle and was once the most famous clown and showman in the Borders. He regularly toured around the south of Scotland and north of England, putting on all kinds of shows, including conjuring, ventriloquism, freak-shows, small circuses and plays. He acted, sang local ballads, played the bagpipes, danced and told jokes. In Hawick he stayed at the Fleece Inn, where he performed in the ballroom for 3 nights and moved into the larger Town Hall for another 3 nights; the landlord of the Fleece Inn, George Hunter, waived his bill, and Purves purchased a silver-mounted snuff-box for him. On another occasion he performed in a theatre in Hawick where Albert Mills was later built. He was buried in Hartlepool. Dr. William Brown (1799–1852) from Edinburgh, he married Margaret (1798–1855), daughter of John Laidlaw, who was from Weens. He contracted a disease related to his work, which killed both him and his wife. Their children were: John, who died young; Alexander, W.S., who was a lawyer in Edinburgh and purchased an estate in Peeblesshire; and Dr. William Laidlaw (1842–1917), who was an ear surgeon and golfing pioneer. After his death, his 2 sons were raised by their maiden aunts Jane and Euphemia Laidlaw. William (1814/5–1902) born in Melrose, he was a whip-maker on the High Street. He was listed among heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1835, when he was at Damside; by 1840 he was listed living in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was recorded on the High Street in 1841 (perhaps near No. 5), and around 12–14 in 1851, when he was employing 4 men. In 1861 he was at 1 High Street, listed as a whipmaker, grocer and fruiterer. He was described as ‘of a simple, happy disposition naturally’. He is said to have given up most of his activities to pursue a spiritual calling, including singing religious songs. He married Christian Douglas, who died in 1875, aged 62. Their children included Isabella Scott, who married James Gowans and an unnamed son who died in 1840 (also ‘Purvis’).

Purvinen (pur-vi-nin) n. former name for lands in southern Liddesdale, perhaps where Heugh Head is marked on modern maps, on the south side of the Tinnis Burn. In the rental roll of 1541 it is ‘Purvenen’, when leased, along with Whisgills and ‘Vtnomound’, to Bartholomew and Ninian Armstrong. In 1634 the 40-shilling lands of ‘Purvenen’ were inherited by Margaret from her father Archibald Douglas of Greena. In 1642 John of Gervald (2nd son of Sir William of Cavers) was granted lands of Burnmouth, ‘Greina’ (Greena) and ‘Purvenen’ in Liddesdale ‘in fee’, with his father having the ‘liferent’. John Forester of Stanegarthside inherited the lands of ‘Greina, Purviven and Burnemouth’ from his uncle Nicholas in 1693 (it is ‘Purvieen’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map; the origin or meaning of the name are obscure).

Pyat Knowe (pI-i’-now) n. hill to the south-east of Dod, with the Pyatknowe Sike rising on it. A shelf on the north side contains the remains of a fairly well-defined settlement, about 75 m by 45 m. The interior contains 2 courts, as well as 2 circular depressions, although these are probably quarry pits. There is also a second probable settlement nearer to the summit, this being oval in shape, about 65 m by 40 m, with an entrance at the west side. The Catrail crosses to the south of the hill, connecting to Barry Sike.

Pyatknowe Sike (pI-i’-now-sik) n. small stream that joins the Dod Burn near the Pyat Sike Plantation, south-east of the farmstead of Dod. There are several linear earthworks in the area, crossing part of White Hill to the north-east. Although it has been suggested that some of these may be connected with the Catrail, or with the nearby fort and settlement, there is no evidence for these claims. The fort lies to the north of where the Sike meets the Dod Burn. It measures about 60 m by 45 m and is almost entirely covered by a later settlement. To the south of the Sike, on Pyat Knowe are the remains of 2 more settlements.

the Pyat’s Nest (thu-pl-its-nest) n. former name for Pyat Knowe, the hill south-west of

Quakers (kwä-curz) n. religious group, more properly known as the Society of Friends, which reached its peak of membership in the late 17th century. It was influential in Britain in the 18th and 19th centuries through the adherence of many manufacturing families. In Hawick interest began when William Wilson visited a meeting in Glasgow in August 1797, leading to his membership in 1802, followed by many in the Wilson and Watson families. There were also significant visits by prominent Friends, such as prison reformer Elizabeth Fry, with at least 20 Public Meetings being held in Hawick. The group met in William Wilson’s house from 1802 until a Meeting house was built on Buccleuch Street from 1821, with the first Meeting there in 1823. This was a plain building (a sketch of which exists), set back from the street, to the west of the Roman Catholic Chapel. Its location is shown on Wood’s 1824 map, and it is listed among places of worship in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1839 the meeting house was described as being attended by only 2 families. The building ceased to be used for this purpose in 1844, after which it was used as a temporary hospital for the 1849 cholera epidemic and as James Murray’s ‘Hawick Academy’. It was demolished in 1866. In an ecclesiastical survey of Scotland in 1815 there were only 5 meeting places in the country, Glasgow, Hawick, Edinburgh, Aberdeen and Kinnuck – ‘...Frae a man that is nae Quaker’ [AB].

Quaker’s Close (kwä-curz-kloès) n. mid-19th century popular name for the close at 13 High Street, once the residence of manufacturer William Wilson, who was a Quaker. Also known as Wilson’s Close, it was a private passageway that extended much of the way down to the river.

qualify (kwa-li-fl) v., arch. to authenticate, establish by evidence, testify – ‘Walter Scott, shoe-maker, counsellor, was degraded as such, ... after being convict ... of a riot. and arrested, and allows the bailies their charges, and to go down to Jedburgh and qualify' [BR1727].

quarrel

Scotland up until the 1960s (also spelled ‘quallie’ etc.).

quarrel (kwa-rul) v., arch. to dispute, challenge, complain, rebuke – ‘...and whereas ye sd Mr John of his own lenity, ... never quarrelled several persons in ye toun to educat children further than ye sd book ...’ [PR1713], ‘William Gladstanes came and quarrelled him for the badness of the shoes’ [BR] (this form omits the usual English ‘with’).

Quarrelhaa (kwa-rul-haw) n. name for 2 former cottages on the edge of the Harwood-on-Teviot lands, near the stream separating the farm from Chapelhill. They had already disappeared by the mid-19th century, although tailor John Elliot and family is still recorded there in 1841 and 1851. It is said that they were built to check on encroachments of livestock between the farms, and hence the name (although there is also a disused quarry nearby).
