surnames). However, these early generations are somewhat uncertain, and so the exact connection between the Eliotts of Stobs and the Elliots of Minto may never be known. His eldest daughter was Margaret, who was the mother of Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk. Gavin (17th/18th) 2nd (or perhaps 3rd) son of William of Stobs. He had a will registered in 1684. He married Jean Nicolson (perhaps related to his sister-in-law, Magdelen Nicolson), receiving a dowry of £20,000 Scots. She transferred all her effect to him in a document of 1687 in which their son Gavin is mentioned. He may have earlier married Barbara Creighton. Along with his nephew Gilbert of Stonedge, he had a bond with John Turnbull in 1691. Gavin (b.1713) younger son of Sir William of Stobs. Like several of his brothers he served in the East India Company. He captained a large trading ship. He died in India before 1756. Gen. George Augustus (1717–90) later Lord Heathfield and Baron Gibraltar, he was 9th son of the 3rd Baronet of Stobs, Sir Gilbert. He was born at Wells House where the family were living after Stobs House burned down (although there is also a tradition that he was born while his parents were visiting their farm at Hallrule). He was educated by private tutor at Stobs, then in Leyden and at the École Royale du génie militaire in Picardy. He returned to Scotland at the age of 18 and obtained his warrant at Woolwich in 1739. He worked his way through the ranks in different regiments and was wounded at the Battle of Dettingen in Germany, serving with the Horse Grenadier Guards. In 1759 he left to raise a new regiment called the 15th or Light Regiment of Dragoons, commonly called ‘Elliot’s Horse’. He was well known for strict discipline among his troops. They fought in the War of Austrian Succession, the Seven Years’ War and the War of American Independence. He was involved in the capture of Havana in 1762, the spoils from which meant that he could purchase the estate of Bailey Park in Heathfield Parish, Eastbourne in 1766. He spent about a decade back in Britain during times of peace. However, he is probably best known for his stint as Commander of Gibraltar, successfully defending the rock against a 3½ year siege by the Spanish. After the victory he was made a Knight Bachelor by George III, and in 1787 was made Lord Heathfield, Baron Heathfield of Gibraltar. He retired to London, recovering from a stroke. However, he asked to be reappointed as Governor of Gibraltar, essentially desiring to end his days there, but died when visiting Aachen (now in Germany) on the way. He was said to have been extremely disciplined, setting an example for the men on Gibraltar, where he was ‘perhaps, the most abstemious man of the age. His food is vegetarian and he drinks water. He never sleeps more than four hours at a time . . . He has so inured himself to habits of hardness that the things that are difficult and painful to other men are to him daily practice’. Robert Burns was referring to him when he wrote ‘Yet let my country need me, with Elliot to head me, I’d clatter on my stumps at the sound of a drum’. He married Anne Pollexfen Drake, a distant relative of Sir Francis Drake, and she died in 1772. Their children were: Francis Augustus (1750–1813), 2nd and last Lord Heathfield; and Anne Pollexfen, who married John Trayton Fuller of Brightling, Sussex. He built a mansion on the Heathfield estate, called Ashdown House, designed by Benjamin Latrobe, which became a boys’ school. The Museum has one of his walking sticks, presented by Thomas Turnbull in 1856. There is a portrait of him by Joshua Reynolds in the National Gallery and he is depicted in the huge painting ‘The Defeat of the Floating Batteries at Gibraltar’, which is the centrepiece of the London Guildhall Gallery – ‘Brave Elliot, as you all well know, Gibraltar’s rock protected: And well he beat the Spanish foe, Tho’ by a Duke directed. A scene like this you soon will see In Roxburghshire repeated: And Dukes and Dons again will be By Elliot’s name defeated’ [T]. George Augustus (1799–1872) 5th son of Sir William of Stobs, he was born in Cavers Parish. He became an Admiral. He married Alice Anne, daughter of Thomas Jeffrey of Halifax, Nova Scotia. He secondly married Harriett Sophia West, daughter of the Admiral of the Fleet. His children were: George Augustus (1838–84), a Major, who married Helen Jane Gallen and Mary Anna Crampton; and Francis John Jeffrey (1844–1903), Naval Captain, who married Florence Caroline Schmidt. He had descendants in South Africa. Gideon (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Haliburton and their children baptised in Hawick were: Jean (b.1719); Barbara (b.1720); and Simon (b.1722). Gilbert of Stobs and of Horsleyhill, ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Gartins’ (d.1634). From his seal it seems clear he was directly related to the Elliots of Redheugh. His paternity is uncertain, some accounts (e.g. Scott of Satchells) saying he was the son of Elliot of Larriston and a Scott of Buccleuch, while a Liddesdale tradition states that he was an illegitimate child of William (or Robert) Elliot of Larriston (or Redheugh) with Maggie (or Helen) Kidd. However, it seems that he was a younger son of Robert, the 16th Chief and Jean Scott, and step-son of Gavin of Stobs (who was the 2nd husband of Jean Scott). He helped Gavin run his farms and shortly before his death in 1606/7 was appointed as one of his executors and trustees. There are many variants on his nickname (‘Gowden’, ‘Garties’, ‘Garters’, etc.), which presumably arose from his choice of colour of device for keeping his socks up! He may be the Gilbert who, along with several other Elliots, signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He is probably the ‘Gebbe Elliot his brother’, named after Robert, chief of the Elliots in a letter written by English Border officials in 1583. He is said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 and may have acted as a hostage for one of the Scotts after when they were captured after a raid on Gilsland in 1597. He is probably the ‘Gybb Elwood alias Robes Gibb’ who, along with Scott of Buccleuch and Scott of Harden, met with Englishmen a few days before to plan details of the raid; if this was him, then it would verify that he was a son of Robert. He may be the Gilbert of ‘Hardlisdale’ (possibly Horsleyhill) who was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England in 1599. In 1600 he gained the lands of ‘Elinburn, Schawis alias Middelsteid of Gield in Ettrick forest’ from William Cranston (as registered in 1608). He is probably the ‘Gilbert Elliot of Horsliehill’ coming after Gavin of Stobs in the list of local men served a ‘summons of removing’ by the Baron of Hassendeane in 1603: and he may be the Gilbert of ‘Horsliehill’ who was on the ‘retour’ panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He was clearly a man of local importance and wealth, since in 1607 he bought Stobs from the heirs of Gavin Elliot (probably his step-father), paying off the full amount of 15,000 merks and being formally infefted by the superior Sir John Cranston of that Ilk in 1614. In 1607 he purchased Baxtonlees from John Home, as well as ‘Carlinghall, Lailsell, Bronnishall, Brumesclewis and Roberthill’ from Hector Turnbull of Staneedge. In 1608 he purchased ‘Danzeiltoun’ from James MacDowgall of Makerstoun. In 1609 he purchased ‘Harwood in Fairnileyes and Stenletch’ from Hector Turnbull. In 1610 he was recorded as ‘of Horsliehill’ when he stood as cautioner for Walter Scott of Harden and his sons Walter, Francis and Hugh, that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, George his son, Thomas Scott, called of Ormiston, and his brother Alexander. Also in 1610 he complained to the Privy Council that Will Scott of Northhouse and his brother Hob ‘assaulted him in the town of Hawick with drawn swords, and would have slain him but for his own better defence and help of certain inhabitants of the said town’; this was presumably related to a dispute over land, with the same William Scott being accused in 1608 of attacking Stobs (just before he took over ownership), threatening to burn ‘all the evidents and writs of the said lands’ unless they got what they wanted. In 1611 he pursued lands in Ettrick from his son-in-law Gilbert Ker of Lochtour and bought further lands from him in 1628. In 1616 he bought the lands of Middle Mains of Hassendeane and Horsleyhill from the Earl of Home; in 1630, along with his eldest son William, he resigned the lands on receipt of the agreed 8,000 merks from James, Earl of Home. In 1617 he (and his son Gilbert) had a ‘wadset’ with John Turnbull of Barnhills and purchased Wester Barnhills from Turnbull in 1618. Also in 1617 he appeared before the Privy Council with a number of other Border lairds to renew the bond for the good behaviour of his supporters and tenants. In 1620 he resigned the reversion on half of Glenkerry and Midgehope to Walter Scott of Tushielaw. In 1622 he was fined for not being on a jury in Edinburgh. Also in 1620 he purchased Corriesike, Langbyre, Gidden-scleuch and part of Caerlenrig from Douglas of Cavers. In 1621 he had a charter for Hanging-side and he also purchased the lands of Winnington and Winningtonhall from Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He is recorded in the Commissioners’ Court of 1622 as having some sheep stolen from his land at Kershope in 1621 and again in 1623. And in 1623 William Wilson (of Carlisle) was hanged after being found guilty of stealing 6 sheep and 13 goats from his lands at Stobs and Teviothead, while Adam Turnbull, mille in Harts-garth, was acquitted of stealing cows from his lands of ‘Leisburne’. Also in 1623 he was on the commission (representing Roxburghshire) to discuss the export of Scottish wool to England. He is supposed to have been a great hunter of deer, and at one point angered King James by hunting on his land. He was probably the ‘Sir Gilbert’ mentioned in the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’, who captured William Henderson. In 1628 he is listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. In 1628 he received the lands of Middlestead and Blackmiddings (in Ettrick), in 1630 he gained the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Kirkton and in 1632 he received a charter of the lands of ‘Town o Rule’ and was involved in a ‘wadset’ for the lands of Harwood (although this may have been another Gilbert). Also in 1632, he is recorded as owner of the lands of ‘the Hill, Streuchehill alias Stitchelhill, Laidhop and Qhitshop’ (probably Laws Hill, Stitchel Hill, Laidlohope and Whitrope) in Liddesdale. He is sometimes referred to as the earliest ancestor of the Eliotts of Stobs, although the family history around this time is uncertain (and his relationship to the previous Gavin of Stobs is unclear). He married Margaret Scott (‘Maggy Fendy’), and had 11 children. His wife’s parents were ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden and Margaret Scott, ‘the Flower of Yarrow’. A story is told about how he stayed under his father-in-law’s roof after his marriage, with Auld Wat making the condition for his board being the plunder of the first harvest moon. His children were: William (d.1654), who succeeded him; Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh (d.1680); Archibald of Middlestead; Gavin of Grange and Midlem Mill, father of the 1st Lord Minto; John (d.1639), advocate in Edinburgh; James (d.bef. 1661), married Margaret Elliot of Redheugh, heiress of Larriston; Elizabeth, married John Turnbull of Minto; Jean, married Robert Pringle of Blindlee; Margaret, married Andrew Scott of Fawside; Esther, married Andrew Ker, ancestor of the Scott-Plummers of Sunderland Hall; and Anne, married Andrew Bell of Colross, Kelso. He is also said to have had an illegitimate daughter who married Simon Elliot of Binks. His wife was listed as liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish in 1643; she may also have been the ‘Mar. Scott, gudewife of Horsleyhill’ who was owner of lands in Horsleyhill Parish in 1643. Since he is said to have died in 1634, he is probably not the ‘G. Elliot of Stobbes’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638; this was probably his son Gavin, who signed it along with his brothers Gilbert of Craigend and Archibald of Middlestead. Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh (d.1680) 2nd son of ‘Gibby wi’ the Golden Gartins’. In earlier records he was Laird of Hartshaugh. He is mentioned in the 1623 Circuit Court records (along with ‘Archie Elliot of Bowholme’) as cautioner for ‘Will Elliot of Hiesches’. In 1630 he was witness to his father Gilbert and brother William redeeming the lands of Hassendean and Horsleyhill for payment from James, Earl of Home. A contract of 1632 (between Rev. William Weir, Francis Hamilton and Edward Lorraine) records that he was given certain lands of Harwood. He held a ‘wadset’ from Edward Lorraine in 1633 in exchange for the lands of Tythehouse. And in 1638 he had an agreement with William, son of Simon Elliot of the Binks over teinds of Harwood and Tythehouse. In 1637 he witnessed a deed of Robert of Redheugh to his daughter and son-in-law. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Both he and his wife were described as ‘zealous Presbyterians’. There is a crown charter of 1638 in the name of him and his wife for the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot, and where he is described as ‘of Hartshoeke’. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of land in Minto Parish (specifically Craigend and Deanfoot), valued at £660 and land in Abbotrule Parish, valued at £65 (this probably being part of Hartshaugh). In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and also the Committee of War for the county in 1643, 1644 and 1649. In 1649 he gave a discharge of 52 merks Scots to William Elliot of Harwood, as the part owed to him for the lands of Harwood, Tythehouse and Tythehousefield. He was recorded in a document relating to the lands of Appotside in 1656. He was fined £1200 in 1662, after the Restoration. He paid tax on £660 in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 and 1678 in Minto Parish. He may also be the Gilbert whose land of ‘Killnow’ in Hobkirk Parish was valued at £80 in 1678. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire to raise money for the King. He married Alison Ker, but died without issue. He was succeeded in the lands of Craigend by Archibald, 2nd son of his brother William. His wife, Lady Craigend leased the lands to Edinburg ‘writer’ Thomas Porteous in 1686; she is mentioned by Rev. John Livingstone of Ancrum as one of the Covenanters supporters in Teviotdale. Sir Gilbert of Stobs (d.c.1683) eldest son of William of Stobs and grandson of ‘Gibby wi’ the Gowden Gartins’. In 1648 he was ‘lair thairof’ listed after his father on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the Borders. In 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire along with his father. He was an ardent royalist and served in the army, commanding a troop in Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade’s regiment of horse. In 1650 he was named (along with his father and several Scotts) as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis. In 1651, along with his father, he bought
Eliott

Stonedge and Woollee (later Wolfelee) from Lord Cranstoun, his brother-in-law. However, due to Cranstoun’s imprisonment, he did not claim the properties until 1659. He was Sir Gilbert ‘fiar of Stobbis’ who witnessed contracts relating to Appotside in 1654 and 1656. He succeeded his father in 1654, and immediately had to contend with the fine of £1000 sterling imposed by Cromwell on royalist supporters. In 1655 he sold Kirkton to his uncle Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers. In 1656 he was the superior of the lands who confirmed the charters of William Elliot of Harwood for Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside.

In 1657 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Wimington and Wimingtonhall, as well as ‘Portheid’, ‘Horslie’, ‘Turie’, ‘Arkendkno’, Wimingtononrig, Over and Nether ‘Swynsteid’, Over and Nether Dodburn, Birkwood, Birkwoodhead, ‘Bromsydbrae’, ‘Bromsyke’, ‘Huntishill’, ‘Abbotsis-aiker’, Baxtonlees, ‘Ellinborne’, Shaws, Middletead, ‘Gildhous’ and Ballielees. He was one of the trustees for Mary Scott of Buccleuch during her minority. In 1658 he was among 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire who signed a commission to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1659 he sold Peel (or Baxtonlees) to William Elliot of Binks and Swinside and his son John. Also in 1659 he had a charter of Over and Nether Wells and Macksideshaw. In 1660, after the restoration of the monarchy, he was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.P.s.) for Roxburghshire, and reappointed in 1669, serving until 1674. In 1662 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers), an appointment that was renewed ten years later. He was involved in a libel action with Robert Scott of Harwood in 1663. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663, and was still one of her curators at that time. He was reappointed as a Justice of the Peace in 1663, and nominated as the convenor for Roxburghshire.

According to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 his rentals in amounted to £10226 13s 4d, including lands in Hobkirk, Cavers, Kirkton, Castleton and Abbotrule Parishes; this also included £666 13s 4d from his mother’s rentals. He was knighted by Charles II in 1651 on Largo sands, and was made 1st Baronet (of Nova Scotia) in 1666. In 1671 he had the lands of Stonedge separated from the Barony of Hallrule, so that he could give it to the eldest of his 2nd family. In 1673 he succeeded his cousin Robert the 17th of Redheugh as Chief of the Elliot. He is probably the Gilbert ‘of woolie’ recorded being taxed for £1000 in Southdean Parish in 1678. He married first Isabella (or Isobel) Cranstoun (daughter of James, Master of Cranstoun and Lady Elizabeth Stewart, who was daughter of the Earl of Bothwell) and secondly in 1661 Magdalen (or Magdaline), daughter of Sir John Nicolson of Lasswade. He had 10 children, including: Sir William, who succeeded him (and was the 2nd born son); James, recorded in 1679: John, excise collector, still alive in 1704; Elizabeth (d.1662), buried in Greyfriars Cemetery; Esther, who married William Douglas of Morton; Thomas (d.1671), who would have inherited Wolfelee and Stonedge, but died young; Gilbert (1669–1706), eldest surviving son of his 2nd marriage, to whom he gave the estate of Stonedge; another William (d.1699), merchant of Edinburgh and later of London, who married a daughter of Sir George Hume; Janet (d bef. 1694); and Magdalene (d.1739), who married John Pringle of Stichel. There seems to be some confusion over the year of his death, but he certainly signed a bond of provision for his wife and children in April 1677. And his son Sir William was served as his heir in 1692, perhaps a while after his death. His widow occupied old Wolfelee House, until that fell into disrepair, afterwards moving to Hobsburn. Gilbert of Craigend and Deanfoot (17th C.) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He was a grandson of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ and son of Archibald (and hence cousin of the 1st Baronet of Stobs). He may be partly confused with Gilbert of Craigend and Harsthaugh, who was probably his uncle, and he is also easy to confuse with the later Gilbert of Minto. In 1683 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Craigend, Deanfield and Minto, as well as ‘Grassland’, Ladyland, ‘Viccars land’ in Hobkirk Parish, Wester Swanshiel and Clerksbank. He inherited the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot from his father, but in 1687 sold the land to Lord Tarras. He was already deceased by 1696 when his brother John was married in Edinburgh. Gilbert of Stanedge (1669–1705) eldest surviving son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs with his 2nd wife, Magdalen Nicolson. He was served heir to his brother Thomas in 1671 and succeeded to the Stanedge lands in 1682, while still a minor. The lands had been separated from the Barony of Hallrule in 1671 and originally disposed to his brother Thomas, who died shortly afterwards. As part of the arrangements for his inheritance he had to provide the sum of 20,000 for his 3 younger siblings. During his minority Elliott of Grange (his uncle), Gavin Elliot in Dalkeith and John Elliot (brother of Sir William of Stobs, and his half-brother). In 1678 he is recorded as owner of lands in Hobbirk Parish: he was also ‘of Stenhouse-edge’ when listed as owner of Woollee in Southdean Parish. His ‘brother-german’ William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1691. He became first Laird of Stonedge and also of Woollee in 1671, the lands being given by his father after an older brother died. He witnessed the marriage contract of the daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692. A sasine of 1693 shows him in a bond with Sir John Pringle of Stichell over the lands of Fairnilees, Unthank, Howa, Hobsburn, Snipe and Little Gledstains. That year he also had a bond with Patrick Johnston, Edinburgh merchant and had an action raised against him and his curators by Archibald Douglas of ‘Garvat’ (Gervald perhaps) for non-payment. This was followed by a letter of horning against him and Walter Scott of Wauchope by Archibald Douglas of ‘Garvat’ in 1695. Henry Elliot of Harwood appears to have paid off several of his debts about 1694, so it is clear he was in financial difficulties. In 1694 he sold the 3 eastern quarters of Fairnilees (part of the Harwood estate) to Henry Elliot of Harwood. He contributed £100 to the Darien Company in 1695. From 1698 he started on extensive alterations to Woollee, to turn the tower into a home; however, this placed him further into debt. A stone formerly built into the house (but later destroyed) was inscribed ‘D.M.E. G.E. E.S.’. In 1704 he was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1693 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Scott of Harwood-on-Teviot. Their children were: Magdalen (b.1694), who married Robert Ainslie; Gilbert (b.1695), who succeeded; Walter (b.1696), unmarried; Christian (b.1697), who married a Mr. Dawson, a Kelso surgeon; Helen (b.1698), who married John Haswell, Provost of Jedburgh; Elizabeth (b.1699), who married a Mr. Ogilvie of Ayrshire; William (b.1701), unmarried; John, also unmarried; Robert (b.1704), who became an apprentice in 1721 and died unmarried; Isobel (b.1705), who married Alexander Jerdon of Newcastle; and Margaret (b.1706), who married John Angus, an Edinburgh lawyer. He died suddenly aged 37, leaving a large family of children. His widow stayed in Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) after his death and married James Campbell, minister at Legerwood. Sir Gilbert of Stobs (c.1680–1764) 3rd Baronet and Chief of the Elliots, eldest son of Sir William. He was served heir to his father in 1699. Soon after getting married he moved from London to Edinburgh, where his house was on the north side of the High Street at the top of Trunks Close (and was demolished in 1873); this was in the Canongate, where several other Roxburghshire families lived. In 1704 he was among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also lived at Stobs, but resided at Wells for a few years after Stobs House was burned down in 1712. He became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1713 by right of his father Sir William. Following the rebellion of 1715 he bought up the ‘wadsets’ of Adam Turnbull of Denesyde (who had been a Jacobite supporter) and forced him to leave, thereby gaining a local reputation as a high-handed Laird. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1708–15 and again 1726–27 (taking over from his distant cousin Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto) in a bye-election. In 1718 he drew up a bond of entail (at the insistence of his father-in-law), ensuring that none of the estate (except for Haddon) could be sold off; despite the best of intentions, this agreement led to financial trouble for later generations. After 1723 the family began to regularly spell their name with the double ‘t’ and single ‘l’. In 1722 a letter was sent to Winningtonrig, warning his tenants there not to pasture their animals on Hawick Common, and in 1723 one of the Hawick Bailies was paid for ‘taking instruments’ against him. In 1725 he gave the east side of Hallrule, valued at £414, to his son John, retaining the other £1939. In 1726, following a court meeting in Jedburgh, the drinking party he was with discussed the recent election (and particularly who did not vote for him) and he got into an argument with Col. Stewart of Stewartfield (now Hartrigge) in the Black Bull in Jedburgh and stabbed him to death with his sword. He apparently sobered up in Jedburgh Abbey churchyard, hid out in Wauchope Forest and fled by boat to to Holland. He was declared an outlaw, but was later pardoned and allowed to return, partly through the influence of Lord Minto and his father-in-law, William Elliot. The sword that he had used later came into the possession of the Marquess of Lothian. It is said that he led a sober and quiet life after his return. He added the farms of Lymiecleuch and Penchrise to the family estates. The Bailies and Council of Hawick complained about his tenants’ encroachment onto the Common in a notorial instrument of 1734. On the other hand, in 1736 he applied to the Board of Trade for Manufactures for a grant of £40 to purchase some looms for the manufacture of coarse tarred wool, which was probably a significant moment in the development of Hawick as a knitwear centre. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. He leased Peelbraehope from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. He paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748 and 1753. In 1750, after the death of Gilbert Elliot, son of Robert Elliot of Larriston, he arranged for the education at Stobs of Robert’s grandson, William (who would later buy back Larriston and become a Major-General). In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Tandlaw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Shortly before his death he changed his will to favour his grandson Francis over his eldest son John, stipulating that Francis should live constantly at Stobs. In London in 1702 he married Eleanor (or Eleanora), daughter of William Elliot, who was a tailor in London and later of Wells), and was a distant cousin from the Brugh branch of the family. She died in 1728 and it is unclear if he also married another Eleanor later. He had 11 children: William (1703–05), who died in infancy; Gilbert (1704–06), who also died in infancy; Sir John (b.1705), who succeeded him; another William (b.1706), who became a merchant with the East India Company; Gilbert (b.1707), also with the East India Company; Anne or Eleanor (b.1708), the only daughter, who probably died young; Charles (1709–56), who became Attorney General of North Carolina; Archibald (1710–59), who was born at Stobs and became a London merchant, being secretary to Ramsgate Harbour; Elliot (1712–45), who was born at Stobs and became a Captain in the Royal Navy; Gavin (b.1713), who was born at Wells and became Captain of a ship in the East India Company; and George Augustus (1717–90), who was born at Wells and became Lord Heathfield. His wife’s dowry was said to be £15,000, which was a fortune at the time. He bestowed on her the lands of Langside, Shankend and Hawthornside, and the rentals from Penchirse. Gilbert of Stanedge and Howa (1695–1727) son of Gilbert, he was the 2nd (and last) Eliott Laird of Stonedge and also owned Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) as well as several neighbouring farms, all of which were part of the Stonedge lands. He was said to have been a delicate child who was mainly kept at home. He succeeded at age 11, to an estate that was heavily in debt, and so the management was in the hands of his curators. In 1718 he sold Stonedge and Howa to Adam Scott, tenant of Wauchope, but retaining lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £676 14s 8d. In 1722 he succeeded to his uncle’s lands of Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee). He died while still in debt, but arranged a Deed of Provision for his younger children. In 1715 he married Cecily (or Cecilia), daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule, having known her for many years. Their children were: Elizabeth, who married William Kerr of Gateshaw, Town Clerk of Kelso; Gilbert, who married Margaret Ainslie and was designated ‘of Otterburn’; and Charles, who was a merchant Captain in the Lisbon trade. Gilbert (1707–bef. 56) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs. He was born at the family home at Trunk’s Close in Edinburgh. He served with the East India Company, serving for a while on the Heathcote. He died unmarried in India. Gilbert of Otterburn and Wells (1717–1801) eldest son of Gilbert of Stonedge. While a minor his ‘tutor’ was William Kerr of Abbotrule. He trained as a surgeon and in 1739 became surgeon to the regiment raised by his cousin Gen. George Augustus Eliott (later Lord Heathfield), who was born in the same Parish in the same year. He received money after the death of his uncle William and purchased Otterburn estate from Thomas Moir; however, he held Otterburn for only a few years, selling it in 1765. After retiring from the army he served as factor of Wells for his distant relative William Elliot, taking over from Archibald Jardan, probably in the late 1760s. Sometime before leaving the country for the last time Lord Heathfield entrusted him with the key of the main gate of Gibraltar, and it later passed to his nephew when he retired. A great admirer of James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’), he acquired the armchair the poet used when composing the ‘Castle of Indolence’, said to have been sent to him from London by the Liddesdale-born Dr. John Armstrong. In 1787 he invited Robert Burns to dine at Wells (described in Burns diary as breakfast) during the poet’s Border Tour; he insisted that Burns sit in the chair, making such a fuss over it that Burns grew confused, the situation became very awkward and the whole visit was not the great success that he had planned. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of ‘Otterburn’ in Morebattle Parish, valued at £224 13s 4d (and the teinds valued at £40). He was ‘in Walls’ in the period 1785–98 when taxed for having a carriage. He was also taxed for having 1 or 2 male servants in the period 1785–97, and a female servant in 1785–90. He was ‘in Walls’ on the
Elliott

1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 3 carriage horses; he is probably also the Gilbert recorded paying the horse tax at Stonedge in 1791. He is recorded in the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls as ‘Gilbert Elliot Esq. at Wells’, when he owned 2 farm horses and 2 carriage or saddle horses. He also paid tax on 2 dogs in 1797. In 1764 he married Margaret, daughter of Jedburgh Bailie and apothecary William Ainslie. He died without issue and the male line of Elliott of Stanedge therefore became extinct. Gilbert (b.1707) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs and Eleanor Elliot. He was born in his father’s house at Trunk’s Close in Edinburgh. He became a merchant with the East India Company, like his brother William. He died before 1756, unmarried. Gilbert (1796–1871) 3rd son of Sir William of Stobs and Mary Russell. He was baptised in Cavers Parish and schooled at Houghton-le-Spring. In 1812 he became a ‘gentleman-cadet’ in the Royal Corps of Artillery and served in the Peninsular War in 1815 just after Waterloo, leaving as 1st Lieutenant in 1821. He then returned to Scotland and stayed with his mother at Wells (which his elder brother William had inherited). He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1822, but resigned in 1834 along with other Whig supporters. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1830 he married Isabella Lucy, daughter of Rev. Robert Elliot of Wheldrake (son of Sir Gilbert Elliot, 3rd Baronet of Minto), after meeting her the year before when she was visiting Weens; the couple were married at Minto. In 1839, along with his brother-in-law Dr. Grant of Jedburgh, he emigrated to Australia. There he prospered, and was appointed Police Magistrate in Parramatta, then moved to Wide Bay (north of Brisbane), where he bought a sheep station called ‘Yenda’. He became Member of Parliament for Wide Bay and was appointed first Speaker of the Queensland Parliament (serving for 11 years). He apparently refused to be given a knighthood, but agreed to have his portrait painted (which hangs in Parliament House in Brisbane). His children were: Gilbert William (b.1831), who was a police magistrate and married Jane Penelope Thomson; Francis Willoughby, who married Sarah Jane Richards; Henry Alexander (b.1834); and 2 daughters. There are many descendants now living in Australia. Gilbert William (1831–93) son of Gilbert, 3rd son of Sir William of Stobs. He was born in Scotland and baptised in Jedburgh Parish. He moved to Australia with his father at the age of 8. He kept in touch with his family back in Scotland, and welcomed their kinsman Arthur (later 9th Baronet of Stobs) when he came to Australia in 1875. He married Jane Penelope Thomson and they had 2 sons and 4 daughters. Sir Gilbert Alexander Boswell of Stobs (1885–1958) 10th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was born in Massachusetts, only son of Sir Arthur and Lilla Burbank. He left school at 16, worked for a bank and started his own firm on Wall Street at the age of 20. On the outbreak of WWI he joined the McGill University Battery in Canada and after training served with the Royal Artillery in England. After the War he was an apple farmer in California for a while, then returned to Wall Street. When his father died in 1926 he remained in the U.S.A., but sent his 2 sons to be educated in England. In 1932 he retired from his partnership, bought Wolfelee and moved there himself. He also joined his cousin’s firm in London, later setting up under his own name. Before he died he was able to purchase Redheugh, the ancient seat of the Elliots. In 1912 he married Dora Flournoy, only child of Alexander Stephens Hopkins of Atlanta, Georgia; she carried out extensive research on the family. They had 4 children: Charlotte Elgitha Veronica Boswell, who married Mandon Thorn, secondly Capt. Andrew Burk and thirdly Stanley Maxted; Jean Cecilia Constance Boswell, who married Maj. Alwyn Nigel Parker and secondly Maj. Alan Edward Seton Jackson, K.O.S.B.; Arthur Francis Augustus Boswell (b.1915), who succeeded; and Fl.-Lieut. John Livingston Hopkins Boswell (1916–42), who was killed in action in WWII. James (d.bef. 1661) 6th and youngest son of ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Gairters’ and Margaret Scott of Harden. He was a lawyer based in Edinburgh. In 1620 his father gave him the half-lands of ‘Glencarie’ and Midgehope that were help in wadset from Robert Scott of Tushielaw. He witnessed the document whereby Edward Lorraine sold Harwood outright to William Elliot in 1537. In 1637 he married Margaret, daughter and heiress of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Larriston, and the lands of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston were given to them by his father; this included Hartsgarth, ‘Layfauld’, ‘Carriescheill’, Langhaugh, Over and Nether Larriston, Blackhope, ‘Greinhoillis’ and ‘Downmayholme’. The lands of Hartsgarth, Carrieshiels, Langhaugh and Bankhead were held in wadset, but he was able to pay the reversion of 3,800 merks by 1639. He may have been the ‘James Elliot appeirand of Redhaugh’ whose lands in Castleton were valued... at £600 in 1643. His wife died in 1697 (probably in Edinburgh) and is buried in the Henderson tomb in Greyfriars cemetery. Their children (whose surnames are usually spelled ‘Elliot’) were: Robert, of Larriston, who married Elizabeth Maxwell; and secondly married Janet Scott of Todrig; William, who ‘went away to be a horner’; and a daughter, who married William Scott of Milsington. Jean nee Scott (d.aft. 1608) sister of Scott of Buccleuch (although it is unclear which one). She married Gavin of Stobs, probably around 1550. She was still alive in 1608 when she complained (along with her daughters Dorothy and Esther, and grand-daughter Jean Rutherford) about William Scott of Northhouse and others coming to Stobs and taking ‘all the evidents and writs’, threatening to burn them if they did not have their demands met. Jean (d.bef. 1608) daughter of Gavin, the first Elliott owner of Stobs. She married Thomas Rutherford the Black Laird of Edgerston and died before her father. Her only child was Jean, who married William Elliot, brother of Robert of Redheugh; she inherited the Stobs estate, along with her aunts, after the death of her grandfather. Jessie Blanche Adelaide ‘Blanche’ (c.1830–98) daughter of Sir William Francis, 7th Baronet of Stobs. In 1868 she married Capt. James Wood, who was brother of her own brother’s wife, Charlotte Wood of Quebec. She was appointed by her father in 1863 as one of the trustees of the estates of Wells and Haddon (essentially to exclude her brother, Sir William, from his inheritance). She was said to be unhappy at how quickly her brother remarried after his first wife (her husband’s sister) died in 1878, and was then involved in about 20 years of legal battles with him over rights to the rents at Wells. John of Goodez (d.1639) 5th son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters’. He became an advocate in Edinburgh. In 1632 he was described as ‘bailie in that part’ for a charter where his brother Gilbert purchased the lands of Harwood from Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir, as well as for a sasine where Rev. Weir sold Appotside and Tythheue to Edward Lorraine. He married Marion, daughter and heiress of David McCulloch of Goodez (and whose wife was Margaret Elliot, a cousin). Their only child was Margaret, who married Sir Thomas Stewart of Coltness. After his death his wife remarried, to her daughter’s father-in-law. John (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert, 1st Baronet of Stobs and Isabella Cranston. He was brother of Sir William and uncle of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. In 1681 he was a witness for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Wauchope. In the 1680s he was one of the ‘curators’ for Gilbert of Stonedge (his half brother). He was made collector of excise for Roxburgh and Selkirk in 1686. In 1687 he had a charter from his brother William for the lands of Lymiecleuch (this being obtained by adjudication from Adam Elliot of Mosspeebles and his brothers when they were unable to repay their loan); however, owing to the Revolution, he only took possession of the farm in 1695. He was cautioner for a bond by Gilbert of Stonedge in 1691 and witnessed a disposition between Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1694. In 1702 he witnessed the marriage arrangement by his nephew Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs to Eleabor Elliot. In 1704 (along with shoemaker John Elliot) he witnessed a baptism for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield; he was recorded there as ‘Collector’. Sir John of Stobs (1705–1768) 4th Baronet and Chief of the Ellots. He was born in Edinburgh, son of Sir Gilbert, and said to be named after the Duke of Argyll. He was probably educated at home, like his brothers. He received liferent of ‘East-side’ when he reached 21. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Jedburgh in 1713 (when still a boy) and became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1748, ‘gratis’. In 1725 his father gave him lands in the east side of Hallrule, valued at £414. He was ‘of Stobs, junior’ when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. His father disinherited him as much as possible in favour of his son Francis (perhaps a result of his marriage and the fact that he moved to England), and in fact he was only Baronet for 3 years before he died and was succeeded by Francis. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. He married Mary Andrews of London (about whom nothing else appears to be known). His children were: Francis (d.1791), who became 5th Baronet; John (d.1769), who was Captain with the Inniskilling Dragoons; Anne (1735–1803), who died in Bath, unmarried; and Eleanor (d.bef. 1767). He died on New Year’s day in 1768 at his house in New Portugal Street in London. He left everything to his wife and daughter Anne. John (d.1769) son of Sir John of Stobs and brother of Sir Francis. He was a subaltern officer in the Inniskilling Dragoons for many years and died as a senior Lieutenant in the regiment. Capt. John (d.1795) younger son of Sir Francis of Stobs. He was a Captain in the 20th (or Jamaica) regiment of Light Dragoons. He died on the Princess Royal packet on his journey home from Jamaica. He was unmarried and his brother William was his executor.

Maj. John (1793–1837) 2nd son of Sir William, 6th Baronet of Stobs. Born at Stobs, in 1812 he was gazetted to the 8th Hussars as a Cornet. By 1824 he was a Captain in the 4th Dragoons and was later promoted to Major. He died unmarried.

Dame Magdelen nee Nicolson (d.1699) wife and later widow of Sir Gilbert, 1st baronet of Stobs. She was daughter of Sir John Nicolson of Lasswade. She is recorded borrowing ‘40 Punds Scots’ for her share in building the new Hobkirk church of 1690–92. She stayed at Wolfelee and kept an account book that survives.

Margaret Frances Boswell of Stobs (1948 –) heir of the Chieftanship of the Elliots, only child of Arthur Francis Augustus, 11th Baronet of Stobs. She published ‘The Elliots, The Story of a Border Clan’ (1974). Richard of Fallahill (17th C.) younger son of William of Stobs. He witnessed a sasine in 1669 and received a charter for Fallahill in 1677. He had sons Gilbert and William who were both witnesses to a bond of caution at Dumfries in 1684. Sir Robert of Stobs (17th/18th C.) recorded becoming a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1713 in right of his father Sir William. Adm. Russell (1802–81) christened at Cavers, younger son of Sir William of Stobs. He lived at Easter Langlee near Melrose. He became an Admiral in the Navy. In 1830 he married Bethia, daughter of Sir William Russell (by a coincidence the same surname as his first name), and she died in 1843. In 1852 he secondly married Henrietta, widow of John Ward and daughter of Sir John Kaye. His children were Capt. John Francis (b.1820), Capt. Charles Francis (b.1830), Sophia Mary (b.1832), George Gilbert (b.1834), Claud William (b.1836), Georgina Katherine Grisell Billie (b.1840), Gilbert Henry John of the Royal Navy (b.1842) and Bethia Russell (b.1843). It seems that all of them died without surviving children. Thomas (d.1671) younger son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs, with his 2nd wife, Magdelen Nicolson. It is said that his mother convinced his father to settle lands on his 2nd family. So proceedings were started to transfer Wolfelee and Stonedge to him, even although he was still just a boy; hence he is referred to as being ‘of Woollee’. However, he died before the charter was obtained in 1671, and so the lands went instead to his brother Gilbert, who was served as his heir in 1671. William of Stobs (d.1654) eldest son of ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Garties’. He was probably the first member of his family to spell his name ‘Eliott’ rather than ‘Ellot’ (as recorded in a letter of 1641). He was a strong supporter of the Covenant. He was a Commissioner to Parliament for Roxburghshire in 1641 (in place of Sir William Douglas of Cavers, who was absent in England), this being the Second Parliament of Charles I. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. Also in 1642 he had a charter of Borthwickshieis. He was also recorded as Convener of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1643. In 1643 his lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £160, those in Cavers Parish at more than £3400, Kirkton about £1200, Wilton at £260 and Hobkirk at £80. Also in 1643 his mother Margaret Scott was recorded as liferenter of lands in Kirkton valued at about £670. In 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire and for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1649. It appears that he switched from supporting Cromwell to supporting the King. In 1645 he was served heir to his father in the lands of ‘Hangansyde’ and Baxtonlees and he had a charter for Town o’ Rule in 1649. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1649 he wrote a description of Selkirkshire with Walter Scott of Arkleton. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testators’ for the will of Francis. He added Hallrule (it is said, through some underhand means) to the family possessions, adjoining the estate of ‘Toon-o-Rule’. He bought Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) from Lord Cranstoun in 1651. In 1621 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Cavers (and she appears to have been a supporter of the Covenantant, like the rest of her family). Their children were: Sir Gilbert, 1st Baronet; Archibald of Craigend and Deanfoot (dead by 1683); Gavin, who married Barbara Creighton and Jean Nicolson; William, probably of Grange, who had no male heir (and is sometimes confused with the Provost of Peebles who was son of Gavin Elliot of Brugh); Margaret, who married William Bennet, minister of Ancrum, and secondly James Scott of Bonnington (in Lothian); Richard of Fallahill; John, who witnessed a charter in 1657; Anna, who married John Maxwell of Cowhill in 1641; Marie, who married John Young of Gulyhill; Isobel, who married Francis Scott of Arkleton in 1664; and Elspeth, who is mentioned in 1658 when her mother assigned a bond to her. It is said that he was concerned about having his lands confiscated by his mortal enemies Lord Balmerino and Lord Colvin, this eventually leading to him hanging himself. His last testament is in the National Archives. William of Grange (17th C.) probably 4th son of William of Stobs. He witnessed a charter in 1659. In 1678 he was recorded as owner of part of Grange in Ancrum Parish, valued at about £350. In the 1680s and early 1690s he was one of the ‘curators’ for Gilbert Eliott of Stanedge during his minority. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He appears to have had no surviving male heir, since a pedigree of about 1704 states that the Eliott of Grange line was now extinct. Note that he is sometimes confused with the Provost of Peebles who was son of Gavin Elliot of Brugh. Sir William of Stobs (d.1699) 2nd Baronet and Chief of the Elliots, son of Sir Gilbert (by his first wife, Isabella Cranston). He was the 2nd but oldest surviving son and was served heir to his father in 1692. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers), along with his father and others. In 1676 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Laing. Also in 1676 he was one of the men charged with seizing 5 women who were accused of attacking the minister of Abbotrule. In 1677 he inherited the Barony of Winnington and was served heir to his father in the lands of Stobs in 1692 (which, for some reason, was probably several years after his father’s death). His estate included Stobs itself, as well as several lands in Cavers Parish. In 1678 he and his brother Gilbert paid the land tax on £4642 in Hobkirk Parish. He also paid for Stobs, Langside, Penrhirse, Stanishope, Singley, Harwoodburn and Williamrig, valued at £1633, for half of Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish, valued at £500, as well as £1846 13s 4d in Kirkton Parish (for Winnington, Winningtonhall, Winnington Mill, Winnington Rig, Horselee, Turn, Smithfieldhaugh, Acrekno, Hunthill, Abbot’s Acre, Birkwood, Dodburn, Newton, Whitehillbrae and Barnes). In 1684 he was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in right of his father-in-law Charles Murray of Haddon; he eventually took complete possession of the Haddon estate (near Kelso). He was appointed one of the tutors of the children of Sir William Douglas of Cavers. In 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King, and again in 1685. About 1685 he was made Lieutenant in a troop raised by the Earl of Lothian for the purpose of rounding up local Covenanters. In 1685 he was in Hawick to oversee 9 local farmers swearing against the Covenanters by repeating ‘the test’. In 1689 he was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.P.s.) for Roxburghshire. However, he was replaced in 1693 for not taking the oath of allegiance. He was also on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. In 1690 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He witnessed a disposition for Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge and Henry Eliott of Harwood in 1694. Also in 1694 he was served heir to his deceased sister Janet. He married Elizabeth Scott of Langshaw (d.1680, daughter of John Scott, 1st Baronet of Ancrum); he had no children with his first wife and secondly married Margaret, daughter and heirress of Charles Murray of Haddon. His 2nd wife survived him until 1739 and they had 8 children, including: Gilbert (d.1764), who succeeded his father; William, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1700; Margaret (perhaps the Margaret born in 1682 in Jedburgh Parish), who married John Paterson of Granton; later Baronet of Eccles; Magdalene, who married Alexander Scott of Synton; Janet, who married Capt. Alexander Corbet; Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Bonnington and possibly John Forrest of Edinburgh; Christian (d.1775), who married Rev. Thomas Blair of Edinburgh; and possibly John, who was in the Army. His testament is recorded in 1684. William (b.1670s) 2nd (perhaps originally 3rd) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs with his 2nd wife Magdelen Nicolson. He was apprenticed as a merchant to Patrick Johnstone in Edinburgh in 1691. He was a merchant in Edinburgh and then London. He was left half of his sister Janet’s share of the money left to his sister Janet when she died before 1694. He is said to have married a daughter of Sir G. Hume, Baronet (possibly Sir Gustavus Hume of Hume Castle, Ireland). Their children were: Jean, who married Mr. Ker of Littledean; Helen, who married Captain Wilkinson; Gilbert, Customs Officer at Gravesend and chief clerk at the War Office; and George, Deputy Searcher of the Customs at Gravesend, who married Mary Fortrey of Woombale Hall. He was probably the brother of Gilbert of Stanedge who became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1691 and who witnessed a bond of 1694. In 1694 he was also served ‘retour’ to the provision given to his deceased sister Janet by his father. William (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir William of Stobs and Margaret Murray. In 1700 he was apprenticed to merchant John Hepburn. William (b.1701) 3rd son of the 1st Gilbert of Stonedge and Margaret Scott. He witnessed a sasine in 1722, when he is described as ‘brother-german to Gilbert now of Stonedge’. He died unmarried. William (1706–79) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs and Eleanor Elliot. He was born in his father’s house at Trunk’s Close in Edinburgh. He became a merchant with the East India Company and died in London, unmarried. He had property in East Florida and on the Island of Barbados. He left a large amount of money to several family members, appointing his brother Lt.-Gen. George Augustus and nephew Capt. Francis Augustus as joint executors. His house in London was left to the Countess Dowager of Chioza.

Sir William of Stobs (1767–1812) eldest son of Sir Francis, he was 6th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was christened in Cavers and died at Stobs. He succeeded his father in 1791 and had the new mansion built at Stobs around 1793, to plans started by his father. The construction apparently strained his resources to the limits, already stretched by his father. This meant he had to re-lease some of his farms for a lump sum, rather than yearly rent. It is said that he also borrowed from Gideon Pott of Penchrise (his son breaking the deal he made with Pott). He also managed to make money by being allowed by the Court to sell off some of his land, but buying it himself and reselling (Hallrule, Hallrule Mill and Town-o-Rule) at a much higher price. This broke the entail made on the estate in 1725, giving his son legal problems later. In the 1790s he complained to the county Justices about the circuitous route taken by local mail and the cost according to actual distance travelled, thus helping introduce the local mail coaches. He paid tax for having 3 male servants in 1792, 4 in 1793 and 3 in 1794 and 1797. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1792–97, owning up to 6 carriage horses and 3 farm horses. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in the same year. He was additionally taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1792–95. He served as President of the Heritors of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He is listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of Billerwell, Hawthornside and the west part of Outer Hallrule; he was also listed as owner of several farms in Kirkton Parish.

In the early 19th century he sold 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule to John Wilson. In 1790 he married Mary, youngest daughter of John Russell of Roseburn, Clerk to the Signet; she died in 1850. They had 10 children: Bethia Mary (b.1791), who died unmarried; Sir William Francis (b.1792), who succeeded; John (1793–1838), who became a Major in the 4th Dragoons and died unmarried; Gilbert (1796–1871), who eventually emigrated to Australia; Sir Daniel (1798–1872) of the Madras Civil Service, who married Georgina, daughter of Gen. George Russell; George Augustus (b.1799), who became an Admiral; Charles (b.1800), who was killed in action at 19; Russell (b.1802), who became an Admiral and married Bethia, daughter of Sir William Russell; Alexander (1805–99), naval storekeeper at Devonport; and Euphemia Elizabeth Anne (1809–99), who married Rev. David Bagot. He died suddenly at Stobs aged 44. Sir William Francis of Stobs and Wells (1792–1864), son of Sir William, he was 7th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was christened at Cavers in 1793. He was gazetted to the Queen’s Bays at the age of 16 and left when his father died, with the rank of Lieutenant. It is said that during this time he once lost money to the Prince of Wales at cards. He succeeded on the death of his father in 1812, before he had reached majority, and was faced with an estate that was heavily in debt. Bored with rural life he joined the Roxburgh troop of Yeeomanry Cavalry as a Lieutenant, later becoming Captain. In 1817 he was appointed a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. His financial situation improved when he gained the estate of Wells in 1818 on the death of a cousin (William Elliot, M.P.), although there was further litigation involved there for many years. He embarked upon a costly lawsuit over his father’s sale of Hallrule, which lasted almost 20 years. His finances were in such dire straits that in 1828 he had to put them in the care of trustees. He also eventually gained back the estate of Haddon, near Kelso. He purchased East Fodderlee, and had plans for encouraging the railway to pass through his property. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He subscribed to 6 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He stood as a Liberal candidate in the 1831 Roxburghshire election, losing to Francis Scott of Harden, but as the populist candidate he was still being carried around the streets of Jedburgh shoulder-high. It was said that on election day a procession set out from Hawick at 5 a.m., roused by the drums and fifes and set out for Jedburgh, picking up his carriage at Spittal, and numbering about 2,000 when they reached the county town. He took part in the Reform Bill celebrations in Hawick in 1832. He was also made an Honorary Burgess in 1825. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. During a trip to the north he was made a Free Burgess and Guild Brother of Wick, Banff and Elgin. He was said to have taken a keen interest in the baa game in Bonchester. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory, and was a heritor in Kirkton Parish. Following his wife’s death he sent the children to live with their grandmother, the Dowager Lady Boswell, while he lived at Mortlake near London. However, he extended Wells House around 1862, and spent his last few summers there, as well as this being the residence of his mother. In 1826 he married Theresa Janet, eldest daughter of Sir Alexander Boswell of Auchinleck, and she died in 1836 during childbirth. His wife’s father had the distinction of being the last man killed in a duel in Scotland, and her grandfather was James Boswell, biographer of Johnson. They had 8 children: Eleanor Jane Ann Augusta (b.1825), who died in infancy; Sir William Francis Augustus (b.1827), who succeeded; Grace Theresa Emmeline (1828–52), who died unmarried; Alexander Boswell (b.1830), who married Katherine Craigie and Annabella Carmichael, and whose son Arthur Boswell succeeded to Stobs; Charles James John (1832–49), who died aged 16; Jessie Blanche Adelaide (d.1898), who married Capt. James Wood, and died at Hyde Park; George Augustus Leslie (1833–54), who married Mary Ratray; and Frances Elizabeth (d.1869), who married Edmund Forrest. He was said to be furious at his eldest son marrying without his consent, and effectively dispossessed him, assigning as trustees for Wells and Haddon his brothers Daniel and Alexander, as well as his brother-in-law Gen. Vassal, Allan Eliott-Lockhart of Borthwickbrae and his daughter Blanche. He died in London and was buried in the family vault in Cavers Old Kirk. On the day of his funeral a large beech tree fell across the road near the House, making it hard for the carriages to approach. The procession was well attended when it neared the old church. His funeral ‘hatchment’ is in the Museum. Sir William Francis Augustus Boswell of Stobs (1827–1910), 8th Baronet and Chief of the Eliots, eldest son of Sir William Francis, he was born at Stobs. At the age of 9 his mother Theresa Boswell died and he (along with his other siblings) was put into the care of his grandmother, Lady Boswell, at Ochiltree. He served for many years in the 93rd Highlanders, going with the regiment to Canada and reaching the rank of Lieutenant before he left at the age of 26. In Canada he married without the knowledge of his father, and this caused him to be dispossessed of much of his inheritance. He succeeded to the estates at the age of 37, but with much of it under the control of his sister Blanche and the other trustees appointed by his father. In fact he had a protracted legal battle with his sister over the rent on Wells (this was said to be due to her unhappiness at how quickly he had remarried after the death of his first wife, who was her own husband’s sister). He lived much of his life at Stobs, and also lived at Wells in the late 1800s, but had to sell off that estate in 1896 to clear debts on it. He had the family arms regranted to him in 1869. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as Deputy-Lieutenant for the county. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1869. He was known as a keen sportsman, being a good shot and fine horseman, and was elected Master of Foxhounds. He was the (honorary) President of Hawick Curling Club. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire from before his father’s death. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Halrule, as well as Billerwell, Hawthornside and the Stobs estate. He also owned a house in Crieff (Rubserlaw House), where his first wife died in 1878. Largely due to falling rents he was forced to sell off his lands, with Stobs itself going to the Military in 1903. He then moved to Crieff. In 1846 he firstly married Charlotte Maria, daughter of Robert Wood of Quebec, and she died in 1878 (although not an heiress, she was great-granddaughter of the Duke of Kent). In 1879 he secondly married Hannah Grizel, daughter of H.T. Birkett; she was the (rich) widow of Henry Kelsall. He only had one child, Theresa, who was brain-damaged from birth; it is said that this was owing to a fall down a flight of stairs that his wife had when seeing him carried in from a hunting trip on a gate and thinking the worst. He died at Crieff and was succeeded by his nephew Sir Arthur (note this spelling, and the common local pronunciation).

Eliott-Lockhart see Lockhart

the Eliotts (thu-e-lits, -e-lee-lts) n. normal spelling of the Stobs branch of the family, adopted formally after 1723 in preference to the previous form ‘Eliot’, probably to distinguish the leading branch of the clan from the others (see the Eliotts).
Elizabeth

Elizabeth (ee-liz-u-bith) n. name of 1 Queen of England and 1 Queen of the United Kingdom. Elizabeth I (1533–1603) last of the Tudors, she was known in Scotland for her treatment of her cousin Queen Mary and for the involvement of England in Scottish political and religious affairs during her reign. There was a period of greater unrest on the Borders immediately after her death. Elizabeth I: Elizabeth Alexandra Mary Windsor (1926–) reigning monarch, daughter of George VI. She visited Hawick, while still Princess in October 1945, inspecting troops at the cricket field and attending a rally of women’s organisations in the Pavilion Theatre. She also visited Hawick with her family in 1947. She came back as Queen in 1962, and returned to Hawick in her Silver Jubilee year, 1977, visiting the Katharine Elliot Centre amongst other places. And in her golden jubilee year, 2002, she bussed the Hawick Flag at a ceremony in Melrose.

Ellen’s Pool (e-linz-pool) n. name for a pool in the Liddel Water, near where the mill lade from Mangerton Mill used to come out (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Eller (e-lur) n., arch. the elder tree, Sambucus nigra (note that the elder tree is allar).

Eller ee (e-lur-ee) n., poet. enchanted eye, preternatural insight, a person with such ability. ‘Confound it by philosophy, I gove’t at him, he glowert at me, And, Ah, he had an eller ee!’ [DH] (also written ‘elleree’).

Ellice (el-isy) n. Edward (1781–1863) Liberal M.P. for Coventry, known as a reformer, he was also Secretary of War and Director of the Hudson’s Bay Company. His sister Helena Anne married Charles Chisholme of Chisholme. During a visit to Chisholme in 1823 he was made an Honorary Burgess. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825.

eellie (ee-lee) v., arch. to disappear, vanish gradually. ‘Now this is the fashion; they thus pass the day, Till night comes at last and they ellie away’ [DA] (also eellie and yillie; probably from French ‘aller’ and piked up from Napoleonic prisoners).

Elliot (e-li’, e-lee-i’, el-yi’) n. (see also Eliott) Adam ‘Adie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman ‘John Makrobyn’ was killed. His name is recorded as ‘Edy Elwald’, and his brother Ingram was also listed, as well as Aircie. Perhaps the same man was ‘Eddie Ellwald, son to Gaytspalldes’ listed in 1541 among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs, Croziers, Nixons and others accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton; it is unclear what his father’s nickname may have meant. Adam ‘Ade’ of Leyes (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants of ‘Streichelhope’. He is recorded as ‘Ade Elwald de Leyis’ and is probably related to ‘Jock o the Lies’ recorded in 1587 and ‘Hob o the Leyes’ recorded in the 1590s. Adam of the Shaws (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574. He was also recorded in 1578/9 when his sureties swore that they had previously presented him to the Privy Council. He is listed as ‘Adie Elliot, callit Adie of the Schawis’ and his sureties were Robert of Redheugh, Martin of Braidlie and Gavin ‘in Swinsteis’, then in Newbigging; since he was said to have not been entered, then his cautioners were fined. He was also listed in 1583 among the close kin of Robert of Redheugh in a Ellabank (e-la-bawngk) n. former house adjacent to St. George’s Kirk, which, along with its grounds was purchased by the church in 1913. The new church was built partly on this land, and part of the old house is now used as a kitchen for the church halls. There were Scotts living there in the 1880s and Bonsors in the early part of the 20th century.

Ellen Riddle’s (e-lin-ri-dulz) n. former confectioners at 24 High Street, selling home made sweets and chocolates from the mid-19th century until the mid-20th. This may also have been the same premises known as ‘Miss Riddle’s’ where several local societies held their meetings in the latter part of the 19th century – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for oor tools, Jess McVeetie’s for rock bools, Lynch’s hed a’ kinds o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies ... ’ [IWL].
letter from the English wardens. He was ‘Adie Ellott of the Shawes’ in 1587/8 when listed among Armstrongs and others accused of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. He may have been brother of Gib, who is also recorded in 1583, and perhaps son of Hob, who is recorded in 1566. Adam (16th C.) listed as ‘Ade Elliot callit Cawdais’ in 1569, when he was pledge for ‘himself and the hail branches of the Burnheidis and Wescaw’. Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule was his surety. He was also listed in 1569 among Borderers held in Blackness Castle. He was ‘Ade Ellot callit the Cowdais’ and was pledge for ‘Wilcokis Hob’ and Gavin’s Jock of Ramsiegill. He is also recorded as ‘Adie Ellot, called Cawdes’ in 1581 when he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1583 he was recorded as ‘Condus’ in a letter from Thomas Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor, where he is listed among the Elliots of Burnhead. He is ‘Ade Cowdais’ when recorded along with ‘Gawins Jok’ under the heading ‘Burnhead’ in Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. The other man was probably an Elliot, and the lands of Burnhead were probably those in Liddesdale. It is possible that ‘Cowdais’ is ‘Cowdhouse’, i.e. ‘Coldhouse’ (although not the one in Wilton). It is unclear what his nickname means, or even how it should be spelled. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (16th C.) recorded as ‘Eddie Elliott son to Davie the Carling’ among Borderers complained about for a raid on Woodburn in England in 1589. He is also recorded in 1590 as ‘Eddie Elliott sonne to Davye Calinge’ when he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of ‘Gersomfeeld’ and the tenants of ‘Dortres’. In 1590 he is recorded as ‘Edward Elliot son to Davye’ (but this could be an English error assuming that ‘Adie’ was short for ‘Edward’) when accused along with Robert Armstrong ‘the Tailor’ of stealing horses from John Heron of Chipchase. Adam (16th C.) son of Davie of Dinlees, who was accused in 1590 of being in a group who were accused by William ‘Loren’ of stealing from ‘Trewhit’ and taking Robert Storie prisoner. The other men named were all Armstrongs, ‘Robin the Tailor’, Ringan of Tweeden, Matthew and ‘Alexander’s Archie’. It is possible he is the same man as the son of Davie the Carlin. Adam of Philhope (17th C.) recorded as being of ‘Fillip’ (presumably Philhope) in 1643, when he became an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk, along with a number of Scotts. In 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He may have been succeeded by his son Andrew. It is unclear how he was related to the contemporary Archibald Elliot of Philhope. Adam of Meikledale (1598/9–1682) son of the 4th son of William of Falnash (whose name is unknown), who was probably of Unthank. He was recorded as tenant at Gorrenberry in 1565, when he witnessed a document relating to Harwood and was again so recorded in 1662. He was fined 1800 for backing the wrong side in the Civil War. He was also listed as indweller at Gorrenberry in 1567 when he purchased the lands of Isgill, Midgehow and Newbigging for his eldest son John, reserving the liferent for himself. He was described as ‘in Gorrinberrie’ about 1665, when he was listed (along with many other Elliots) as a creditor for William Elliot of Binks for the rent of ‘Wolfebeilder’ (and this was ‘in Woolfholder’ in 1662). He also was a witness to the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks in 1662. In 1669 received a charter of the lands of Meikledale, held in fee for his son Andrew. He is additionally said to have acquired Arkleton, but this may have been his son. He also held Burngrains and Carrot Rigs (i.e. Carewoodrig). He paid tax on 900 of land for Meikledale in 1671. He is said to have married a daughter of Glendinning of that Ilk, and secondly married Janet, daughter of John Scott of Renmaldburn. His children were: John of Thorlieshope (b.1621); Walter of Arkleton (b.1634); Andrew of Meikledale; William of Meikledale; and one daughter, said to have received a dowry of 8,000 merks. He was known as a very successful as a farmer, he left separate lands to 3 of his sons; Meikledale went to Andrew, eldest son from his 2nd marriage, but afterwards was inherited by William. He is buried in the Overkirk churchyard near Unthank, the stone being inscribed with the date of his death and also having an armorial carving of a man holding a tree in one hand (for Armstrong), with a shield in the other. He could be the basis for the tradition that the last Elliot of Gorrenberry, Adam, whose family for generations had known a friendly fairy called ‘the Cowie’, was said to have frozen to death by Hermitage Chapel after falling off his horse when fording the river, with the fairy giving loud lamentations at Gorrenberry, for the last time. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Girnwood. The will of his wife, Bessie Murray, is recorded in 1688. Adam of Lymiecleuch (17th/18th C.) probably 2nd son of William of Unthank. He received a lease of Mosspeeble in 1643. Along with his father and Simon of the Binks and Swinside, he purchased Lymiecleuch in 1670, from William Elliot, younger of Stobs. He had a charter for his share of Lymiecleuch in 1673, but lost everything in 1687. Along with his 2 brothers, they were guarantors for someone in 1681 (probably a tenant) who failed to appear and so they had to pay the 5000 merks fine. They could only do so by seeking an advance on Lymiecleuch from Sir William Elliott of Stobs, but were unable to repay the loan. Eventually, in 1687, Lymiecleuch was settled on John Eliott, brother of the Laird of Stobs. He was still called ‘of Lymiecleuch’ when involved in legal proceedings with Anna, Duches of Buccleuch, in the period 1698–1703. He is probably the Adam ‘in Lymiecleuch’ who witnessed a baptism for ‘Wester’ James Grieve in Commonside in 1705. His children were: John in Dinlees (1650–1728), who married Margaret Scott of Falnash; and Adam in Dykeraw. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Whitchesters in 1704. He married Margaret Halliday. Their children included: Thomas (b.1689); and Isobel (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were Thomas Falside and ‘student’ John Thorbrand. Adam of Beirhope (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Simon of the Binks and Swinside. In 1704 he purchased Beirhope in Hownam Parish, which he had partly owned before that. In 1702 he married Isabelle Ainslie in Jedburgh and their children were: Simon (b.1703), mentioned in his grandfather’s entail of 1714; Robert (b.1705); William (b.1707); Thomas (b.1711); Elspeth (b.1713); and John (b.1714). Adam of Teindside (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Walter of Arkleton. He was also recorded being ‘of Tyndside’, but the lands were clearly Teindside in upper Teviotdale. He was referred to as ‘younger of Arkleton’ when he and his cousin Walter Elliot gave a bond of 2,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest for Hawick Grammar School. This presumably means he was a heritor of Hawick Parish. He was ‘of Arclerton’ in 1698 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Scott in Hawick and for Gideon Scott of Falnash, and in 1700 for smith John Dryden and for James Laidlaw in Harwood. He was also ‘of Arclerton’ in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for James Grieve in Teindside. He witnessed further baptisms in Hawick in 1702 (when listed as ‘of Arclerton’ and along with his servant John Bell) for William Davidson in Holt, in 1706 for Hawick apothecary Walter Scott and in 1707 and 1708 for James Stevenson in Harwood. In 1708 Stevenson was described as ‘(in Harwood) tenant to arclerton’, making it clear that he was owner of Harwood at that time, as well as Teindside. Also in 1708 his ‘servitor’ John Laidlaw had a child baptised in Hawick, with him as a witness; he is described there as ‘of Arclerton In Harwood’. In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for James Grieve, tenant in Teindside. He also owned the land on which the Grammar School would be built from 1713, selling it to James Rodger of Cavers in 1722 (although whether this is a coincidence or connected with the Orrock Bequest is unclear). He is said to have fallen out with his father over wasting the price of a drove of cattle his father had given him to sell in England, and also because he brought back an English woman for a wife. He was left only £200 by his father, but he did not receive the money until 1714, following an extended legal battle. Arkleton went to his younger brother William, after he and his brother Arthur of Harwood were disinherited by their father. In 1700 in Hawick he married Ann Drury (with both being described as parishioners). 1700) and had 3 children who were christened in Hawick: Katherine (b.1701), who married Robert of Midlem Mill; Walter (1705–bef. 1721); and Anne (b.1707). He may also have been father of Isobell (b.1704) and Thomas (b.1717), also baptised in Hawick. In the 1707 baptism he is recorded as ‘of Arleton at Harwood-on-Teviot’ and the witnesses were Gideon Scott of Falnash and William of Arkleton (his brother). Adam in Dykeraw (17th/18th C.) younger son of Adam, who was associated with Mosspeeble and Lymiecleuch. His children included: Robert in Know, who married Helen Grieve; John in Harden; Adam in Tweedside, who married Isobel Glendinning; and William in Millburnholm. Adam (18th C.) tenant in Dykeraw. According to a family history he was younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorleshope. However, this might be confusion with Adam in Dykeraw son of Adam of Lymiecleuch. Adam of Arkleton (b.1702) eldest son of William and Anne Ainslie, he was baptised in Ewes Parish. In 1722 he was confirmed in his father’s testament as his oldest son. In 1725 he was forced by his father's cousin William of Thoreshope to sell Meikledale in order to pay debts. In 1744 he disposed of Arkleton to his eldest son William, reserving liferent for himself and 600 merks a year for his wife. In 1733 he married Christina, daughter of William Elliot of Thoreshope. Their children were: Arthur (1734–1742); William (1735–91), physician in Jedburgh; Anne (1736–42); Margaret (b.1737); Robert (1738–40); Walter (b.1740), died young; John (b.1742); and Christian (b.1744). Most of the family were baptised and buried at Ewes. He may have died in about 1744, when his son William of Arkleton had tutors appointed. Adam (17th/18th C.) descended from the Elliots of Thoreshope (although the details seem unclear). He married a daughter of Christopher Irving, 'Kick-ma-leerie'. His children were: Christopher, who became a smuggler; George, described as 'a great pugilist'; and several daughters. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Bowston in Ashkirk Parish in 1713. Their children included: William (b.1714); Thomas (b.1717); Isobell (b.1719); Sarah (b.1721); Sarah (again, b.1722); and Elizabeth (b.1723). Adam (18th C.) only known son of Robert and Elizabeth Scott from Doorpool. The name of his wife is unknown, but his marriage could be the one with Alison Hislop in Wilton in 1723 or the one with Isobel Hart in Wilton in 1729. His children all lived in Hawick and included: Walter; Robert, possibly a shoemaker; James in Goldielands (b.1769), schoolmaster at Wilton; and Helen. If James was his son, then it may be that he married twice and had children over several decades. It is also possible that shoemaker Adam was another son. Adam (1715/6–60) son of William of Meikledale. He died at Hartside and is buried at Castleton Cemetery. He is likely to be related to the Adam who married Mary Pott, but these families seem confused. Adam (18th C.) son of Walter in Brugh and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He was tenant in Hartside, and was surely related to the earlier Adam, who died there in 1760. He married Mary Pott. Their son Walter (b.1762) was born in Castleton Parish and was probably the farmer and cooper at Dinlabyre. Helen, born to Adam and Mary Pott in Castleton in 1772, may also have been their child. Adam (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. According to a family pedigree he was ‘in Tweedside’, but this could have mean Tweedensis. He married Isobel Glendinning and had a daughter Helen, who married James Elliot. Adam (18th C.) younger son of Henry of Lodgegill. He was tenant in Flatt. He married Elisabeth, daughter of Henry in Sorbie and Christian Scott of Falnash. Their children included Christian (b.1761); Jean (b.1762); and Henry in Canonbie, who married Helen Little. Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Kirndean in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he is related to other contemporary Elliots, or other Elliots connected with Kirndean. Adam (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His wife Peggy Scott died in 1797. His son Robert died in 1810. Theirs could be the 1760 marriage of Adam with Margaret Scott; children of that marriage included Robert (1761–1810), Walter (b.1766) and Helen (b.1773, whose christening was witnessed by John Elliot, Tanner). He is probably the shoemaker Adam who witnessed the birth of William Elliot, son of Wilton schoolmaster James, in 1801; this suggests he was closely related, perhaps brother of James (which would make him son of Adam). Adam (1740–1804) younger son of William, 1st Laird of Wolfhelee. He was a merchant in Danzig. He married Rose Leonard and they had a daughter Charlotte, who inherited the estate of Pinnaclehill from her uncle Robert. He died on the Isle of Wight. Adam (18th/19th C.) said to be a printer in Hawick. His wife was Margaret Wilson and they had a son Adam born in Hawick in 1812. Adam (18th/19th C.) member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Adams. Adam (1765–1852) son of shepherd Ninian. He was a carter in Newcastleton. He married Margaret Little (1763–1851). Their children included: Ninian (1786–1800); Margaret (1795–1816); Esther (b.1797), who married Robert of Powisholm; and Adam (b.1806), mason. Adam (1774–94) oldest son of William of Arkleton. He was a Lieutenant in the 72nd Regiment of Foot and was said to be present at the taking of San Domingo (presumably modern Haiti). He died of wounds in the West Indies and was unmarried. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was probably son of James and Helen Elliot. He married Margaret Oliver and lived at ‘Burntshields’ (although it is unclear where this is). Their children included: Lizzy (b.1800); James (b.1801); Daniel (b.1803); Helen (b.1805); Isabella (b.1808); Jean (b.1811); Margaret (1813–16); and Jane (1813–36). Adam (b.1797) eldest son of James of Goldielands, former schoolmaster of Wilton. He was born in Wilton Parish and became a surgeon with the East India Company. He is probably the Adam who was a medical student.

at Edinburgh University 1813–18, receiving an M.D. in 1819. He was recorded at Goldielands in the 1837 electoral roll, and was listed there on the 1841 census. He was described as ‘in Goldielands’ in about 1850 when he was one of the men charged with arranging the ‘Coutard Fund’ for the poor in Hobkirk Parish, bequeathed by John and William Dalgleish. In 1851 he was at Goldielands (listed as a former maritime surgeon with the H.E.I.C.), living with his sister Helen, cousin William, a shepherd and 3 servants. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Graduate of the University of Edinburgh, Not practising receive, compensation annually as Surgeon in the Ex Maritime Service of the Honl. E.I. Copany., Farmer of 200 acres Employing 5 men’. He was still at Goldielands in 1868. He donated many items to the Museum in the 1860s, and was consequently made an honorary member of the Archaeological Society. Adam (b.c.1800) listed as a tailor in Newcastleton in 1841. He was then at about 28 Langholm Street, with a younger tailor, Henry, as well as Jean (perhaps his siblings) and young baker John. Probably the same Adam is still recorded as a tailor in Newcastleton in the 1860s. Adam (1806–89) son of Newcastleton carter Adam. He was a mason in Newcastleton on the 1841 and 1851 census and listed as a ‘Feuar’ on South Hermitage Street in 1861. He married Elizabeth Murray (1818–1901). He was blind by the 1881 census. Adam Scott (1807/8–99) born in Hawick Parish, son of miller William and Margaret Scott. Along with his parents and siblings he emigrated to Canada in 1816. He worked in farming and milling and built a saw and grist mill in Sullivan township. In 1858 he moved to Bruce County, Ontario, where he is credited as the founder of the settlement of Chesley. He married Janet Halliday and had a family of 10 children. Adam (1827–80) son of Robert in Pow-lisholm, Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was living in Wilton Kirkstyle and working as a journeyman baker. He later was a bread and biscuit baker in Dumfries. He married Euphemia Oliver (b.1830) in Wilton in 1851. Their children included: Mary (b.1854), who probably died young; Esther (b.1856); Mary Oliver (b.1863); Euphemia Oliver (b.1866); and Margaret Law (b.1871). Adam (19th C.) resident of Slitrig Crescent. In 1861 he donated a heron to the Museum. Adam of Caverton (d.c.1900) brother of Col. William of Teviot Lodge and James of Mosstower. In 1901 his extensive natural history collection was presented to the Hawick Museum. This included mounted butterflies and moths, as well as stuffed mammals and birds. Adam (d.1938) said to be the last of the hand-frame knitters in Hawick when he died. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Brighe-sous’ in 1662 among people who owed money to the decease William Elliot of Harwood. Then she was ‘in Brighouce’, i.e. tenant farmer in the Liddel valley in 1665 in a record relating to William Elliot of Binks. Agnes (17th C.) recorded in the Town Book in June 1698, when she was said to be due £6 Scots. The reason is not given, but it was along with money due to the Burgh Officer for his Common Riding coat, and so it may be that this was a charge for providing refreshments or similar at the Common Riding that year. Agnes ‘Little Auld Nany’ (d.1776) resident of Hawick whose death is recorded. Alexander (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Alexander Elwald’ in 1533 when his son William was one of a large group of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for a raid on Craik. Alexander (16th C.) witness in 1550 to a lease granted by the curators of the young James Crichton to his mother, Janet Beaton, wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (where it was witnessed). Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 along with Will in Adderstoneshieil, Will ‘of the Burnmouthis’ and 2 Croziers. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. He was probably associated with lands owned by Gledstains of that Ilk. Alexander (16th C.) younger son of Gavin of Falnash. He is probably the Alexander ‘of Fallon’ (likely an error for ‘Falnash’) complained about by the English for a raid of 1589. Along with many of the same men he is ‘of Fallenesche’ later that same year for a raid on farms of the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’, when they are said to have slain 2 men and taken 2 prisoners. Alexander ‘Mill’ (16th C.) resident of Priesthaugh. He was recorded in 1574 as being ‘alias Myll thair’, listed after ‘Law’s Jock’ in Priesthaugh, among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheng. It is unclear what his nickname meant or how he was related to other Elliots. Alexander (18th C.) from Southdean Parish. He married Christian Scott in 1766, announced in South-dean and Ancrum Parishes. They had children Betty (b.1766) and Jean (b.1769). Alexander Kynynmound (1754–78) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet, and brother of Gilbert, the 1st Earl... of Minto. He served with the East India Company and died (unmarried) of fever while on a mission to Nagport. Alexander (b.1809) born in Hobbirk Parish, son of John. He was a shoemaker on the High Street. He was a shoemaker journeyman living at 48 High Street on the 1841 census and 23 High Street in 1851 and 1861. He married Mary Tait (b.1806) in Cavers Parish in 1833. Their children included: Rachel (b.1836); John (b.1838); William (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); Margaret (b.1847); Walter (b.1849); Mary (b.1854); and Agnes (b.1857). Alexander ‘Sandy’ (19th/20th C.) shoemaker of Wilton. He had a shop on Victoria Road, which for a long time was thatched, and later became the property of John Rae. He was connected with Allars Kirk and was also well-known for having a family of 17! He could be the same as the High Street shoemaker. Alexandra Pringle ‘Zandra’ nee Hogg (1940–2014) born in Hawick, she worked in the office of Pringle’s after leaving school, but quickly became a model for the company. She married builder Ian in 1962, and after his death ran the firm of J. & R. Elliot on Commercial Road. She was elected Chair of the Community Council in 1999. She was Honorary Provost 2003–05 and was voted Citizen of the Year in 2005. She became a Scottish Borders Councillor in 2007 and was voted in as Honorary Provost again, serving until early 2011. A new bandstand was erected in her memory in the Park in 2015. Alison (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Her name appears to be written ‘alisaun Ilwand’ and she was probably related to John and Margaret, who are also listed. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 to the sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh. Other witnesses were Ninian, Robert, William and John ‘Elwald’, as well as others. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew ‘Dand the Man’ (15th/16th C.) son of William, recorded in 1502, along with his brother ‘Hob the King’. Patrick Gray from Greenhead, James Elliot in ‘Quhitmere’ and Ralph Ker of Primside Loch had a respite for helping them, specifically in the theft of 180 sheep from Tweeddale and Lauderdale. Andrew (d.1531) recorded as ‘Elwald’ when he was hanged for theft along with Patrick ‘Dowglass’ and David ‘Blynskale’, as given in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’. It is unclear which area this involved, or how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andree Elwald’ when he and others held the lease on Braudile on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew ‘Dand’ (d.bef. 1564) third son of Gavin, 1st Laird of Horsleyhill. He was involved in the murder of Hugh Douglas in about 1547. His father gave him the lands of Bailielee in 1551. He was dead in 1563/4 when there was a case before the Privy Council involving his brothers William and Robert, and sheep that had been stolen from his lands by the Scotts of Tushielaw. He is referred to as ‘umquhile Andro, alias Dan Clot’ when his brother Robert in Horsleyhill appeared on his behalf and the Scotts of Tushielaw were ordered to replace the stolen sheep. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. His name is recorded as ‘Dande Ellot’ and he may have been related to Will, Jock and Hob, other Elliots also listed as tenants. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘callit of the Heuchhous’ in 1576/7 when he was convicted for theft, including stealing 80 sheep from the Laird of Cessford. He was surely related to the slightly earlier Martin of the same location and the slightly later Hob. His son John is mentioned in 1579/80. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andro Ellot, callit the Wowaris Andro’ in 1578/9, when it was stated to the Privy Council that he was supposed to have been presented to the King and his Regent, but had not been. This was along with John ‘callit of the Dewisleis’, with sureties John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk and William Scott of Montbenger. It is unclear what his nickname meant (perhaps his father was ‘the Wooer’). Andrew ‘Dandie’ (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braudile. He was recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. It is unclear who his father was, and whether he is the same as one of the contemporary Andrews. The ‘Dand Elliot of Braye’ complained about in 1590 (about a raid in 1588) is either him or his cousin Andrew (son of Martin of Braudile). In 1590 he was recorded as ‘Dande Elliot brother’s son to said Martinge’ on a list of Elliots (including Martin’s sons Airche and John), Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerwashe’. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) son of Clement’s Hob. He is listed in 1581 among many Elliots and Armstrongs complaining about the actions of the Scotts and their followers. It is possible that he is the same man as one of the contemporary Andrews. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) son of Martin of Braedlie. He is easily confused with his cousin, who was nephew of Martin, and sometimes also just called ‘of Braedlie’. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braedley’ listed along with Clement’s Hob when ‘Archie Kene’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braedley’ whose son Hob is recorded in 1574 when he was to remain in ward. Martin complained to the Privy Council in 1581 of an attack on him and his brother Hob while they were riding near Headshaw. The pair were attacked by Walter Scott of Headshaw and others, with one of them losing a hand and the other also being injured. His son Hob was warded in Edinburgh in 1580. He was probably ‘Dand Elliott of Braedley, fugitive’ listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whitaugh in 1580 (but his name occurs after 4 sons of Martin of Braedlie, so perhaps this was a brother or some different man). He was also listed among the Elliots of Braedlie in 1583, his name appearing as ‘Dand Elliot of the Brandley’, along with ‘John Elliot of the same’. He is probably the ‘Dand Ellot of Braydley’ recorded in 1590 when there was a complaint by Englishmen about a raid made on their livestock in 1588. He is probably the ‘Martin’s Dande’ listed in 1590 along with Will of the Steele and other Elliots and Armstrongs, accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. He is also ‘Martins Dande’ when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘the Garret sheills’. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braedley’ listed along with Clement’s Hob when ‘Archie Kene’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braedley’ whose son Hob is recorded in 1574 when he was to remain in ward.

Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586 as ‘in Borthuilmains’ when he was a fugitive from trial. Andrew of Blackhall (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was presumably from Blackhall in Ewesdale, since other Elliots of Ewes were also listed. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) brother of Hob of Bowholm. He was recorded in 1590 when he, his brother Robert and ‘Willie’s Airchie’ of Stitchillhill were accused of stealing from Englishman Richard Thurlwall. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew ‘Dand’, ‘Sweet Milk’ (16th C.) recorded in 1598 when there were complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. It seems likely he was related to the slight later William who was also called ‘Sweet Milk’ and whose death is supposed to have been the inspiration for the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Wower’s Andro’ in 1605. His son Jock was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Dandie of Bowholmes’. In 1611 his brother Will was listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh; however, he was acquitted of the charges. Andrew of Phillhope (17th C.) possibly son of Archibald. After the restoration of the monarchy in 1662 he was fined £1,000. Andrew of Meikledale (d.1682) eldest son of Adam of Meikledale with his 2nd wife, Janet Scott. He succeeded to Meikledale on the death of his father, but died himself later in the same year. The lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope then went to his ‘brother german’ William. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Craig. He married ‘Beatie’ Wilson and their children included Thomas (b.1684) and Helen (b.1689). Probably the same ‘Dand’ had a daughter Elizabeth baptised in Roberton in 1681, with no mother’s name given and witnesses John Hardie and Walter Elliot (who may have been related). Andrew (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Thomas in Oakwood Mill and grandson of Thomas of Bewlie. His brothers were Thomas of Oakwood Mill and William of Wolfelee. He firstly married Agnes Shortreed and their children were: Thomas (b.1727), probably died in infancy; James (b.1728); Margaret (b.1730); Jean (b.1732); Agnes (b.1734), probably died young; and Thomas (again, b.1736). All of his children were baptised in Selkirk Parish. He secondly married Mary Simpson and their children were: Agnes (b.1746); Margaret, who married David Hagie and also Thomas Hay, both from Kirkcaldy; and Charles (1748–bef. 90), who was a Burgess of Saelkirk and bookseller in Edinburgh. Andrew (1728–97) 3rd son of the 2nd Lord Minto. He was named after his grandfather, Sir Andrew Kerr of Cavers Carre. In 1746 he sailed for America, setting up as a merchant in Philadelphia. He returned to Scotland in 1761, but returned to America 2 years later when appointed Collector of Customs for New York. He was there during the American Revolution, although he fled when the city was taken, but returned as Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of New York when it was reoccupied by the British. After independence was declared he returned to Scotland and purchased Greenwells in Bowden Parish. He also had a house in George Square in Edinburgh. In America he married Eleanor McCall and later Elizabeth Plumstead (whom George Washington was enamoured with, according to family tradition) and had 9 children (including Capt. John, William and Andrew). He died at his brother John’s house at Monteviot and was buried at Minto.

Andrew (18th C.) groom and house servant at Woll in 1794, when he was working for Charles Scott. Andrew (b.1771/2) joiner in Newcastle. In 1841 he was at about 16 South Hermitage Street, living with Helen and Thomas (probably his children) and Thomas Simpson (probably a grandson). Andrew (1772–1850) blacksmith in Newcastle. He is recorded as such in the 1841 census, probably at about 8 Doncaster Street. He married Janet (or Jane) Wilson and she died in 1851, aged 74. They had a son, John (1834/5–1907), who married Elizabeth Scott. They are buried at Ettrick. Andrew (1787–1866) farmer at Twislehope, son of John, who also farmed there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He was farmer there in 1841 and in 1861 was farming 2300 acres and employed 3 people. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He married Eliza Armstrong and their children included: Agnes (b.1835); John (b.1836), who emigrated to New Zealand and Canada; Janet (b.1838); Walter (1840–99), whose family emigrated to Canada after his death; Eliza Murray (b.1843), who died unmarrried; Robert (1845–1918), who emigrated to New Zealand; Archibald (1847–1900), emigrated to Canada; Margaret (b.1847), twin of Archibald, who regularly corresponded with her nephews in New Zealand; Andrew (b.1849), emigrated to America; Mary (b.1849); and Thomas (1852–1906). Andrew (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish. He was listed at Mount in 1851 and was based at Stobs Linery in the 1850s. By 1861 he was farming 186 acres and employing 3 people at Boosmill in Liliesleaf Parish. He was still recorded at Boosmill in 1868. He married Janet Thomson in 1843 and they had a son James (b.1844). Andrew (1844/5–1930) born in Castleton Parish, son of Thomas and Hannah Storey. He firstly married Agnes Telfer, who died in 1880, aged 29. He secondly married Margaret (1851–1940), daughter of shepherd William Glendinning. Their children were: Thomas (b.1883); Helen (b.1885); Hannah (b.1886); John (b.1889); Mary Jane (b.1891); Maggie (b.1892); and Bessie (b.1895). He is buried at Ettrick along with his wives and 4 children. Andrew (d.1961) married Elizabeth Ekron. His wife Elizabeth (b.1876) was daughter of John Ekron and Agnes Carruthers. Their children included John Burns, who married Margaret Butler. Anna Mary (19th/20th C.) daughter of Thomas of Redheugh and sister of Robert. Her brother inherited Redheugh, but died in 1915. In 1918 she sold Redheugh to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. She was described as a widow at that time. Anthony of the Binks (16th/17th C.) eldest son of William of the Binks. He was ‘Anthony of the benks’ in 1590, when accused along with James of the Hill, James ‘Half Lug’, Hobbie ‘the Tailor’ and 60 others, of raiding ‘Windgates’, taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. He is mentioned in 1590/1 being ‘of the Binks’ and ‘brother son of Martin of Braidley’. He was ‘Anthony of the Benks’ in 1596 when there was a complaint that he and others (including Will Elliot of the Steele and Georgie Simpson) had raided lands in England at King Water. He was described as ‘Antone El- lott in Rouchlie’ in 1622 when he was on a Jedburgh jury with his brother Simon. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Newcastle in which Englishman ‘John Makrobyn’ was killed. He was listed along with brothers Adie and Ingram, who may have been related to him. He may be the same as Archibald of Gorrenberry. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as ‘Archibald Ail lat, vicar of Kassiltone’ in 1557 when he wrote a bond involving Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It is thus possible that he was a relative of the Elliot Chief. Archibald ‘Airchie’ 1st Laird of Falnash (d.bef. 1566) third son of Robert, 13th Chief (who was probably killed at Flodden). His brothers were Robert of Redheugh, perhaps Martin of Braidie and probably John of Copshaw. He was probably the Archibald, brother of Robert of Redhengh who served as surety for William, James and Simon ‘Elwald’ in 1537/8; he was also one of the Elliot sureties for several Crozier’s, that they would not harm John Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1541 he was designated ‘of Gorrenberrie’, and was probably the Archibald ‘Elwald’ who was tenant of ‘Gorrumbarry’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was probably the Archibald, uncle of ‘Robert Ellwand, sone to Robyne of the Redhwych’ who signed a bond to enter prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst in 1546 (and then had to have the notary help him sign). In bonds for re-entry of the same men he was recorded as of ‘Northows’ (i.e. Northhouse) in 1547 and of ‘Gorruberry’ in 1548. He is also probably the Archibald (along with Robert of Redheugh and William of Larriston) who had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner in 1548. In 1554 he was ‘in Gorinbery’ when he was granted an acre of arable land in Spittal-on-Rule (‘Harparhill’) and the advowson of the chapel at Caerlenrig; he there signed ‘with my hand at the pen’ led by the notary. In the following letter of reversion he agreed to hold the land and patronage of the chapel for 13 years for 86 pounds Scots. He was probably the ‘Arche Elwald’ who, along with ‘Robyn’ (probably of Thorliveshope) went ‘to lord Maxwell at Gedforth’ to seek pardon for the English rebels that they were resetting. He had a Crown charter for Falnash in 1556. In about 1557 he and Simon Scott of ‘Fernilil’ rented Bowanhill and ‘Grangia alias Stanyhetoun’ from Melrose Abbey; he was there listed as ‘Arche Elliot of Gorumberie’. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders and later that year appeared before a Justice Court to answer for his tenants. As ‘Arche Elliot of the Fawnyche’ he signed a bond in 1561/2 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst to enter Thomas Routledge as a prisoner (the other Elliots were his son and heir Gavin, John of Copshaw and ‘Elder Will’); he may thus have been serving as Captain of Hermitage Castle. In 1562 he had another bond, along with his son Gavin, to enter John, son of Mungo Routledge to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. His wife’s name is not known. He had 3 children: Gavin of Falnash, who succeeded by 1566; William, ‘Archie’s Will’, of Gorrenberry; and Robert, ‘Archie’s Hob’. In 1647 his great-great-grandson Archibald was served heir to his lands, thus confirming the succession over 5 generations. His descendants held Falnash until about 1675. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Dinlees. He may be the same as Archibald of Falnash. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Thorliveshope (16th C.) said in 1541 to be one of the main ringleaders of the Elliots of Liddesdale who were raiding into England. He was specifically believed to be responsible for the ‘burnyunge of William Carnabyes corne at Halton’; he was referred to as ‘brother and son to Robert Ellwald of Thorliveshope’. Sir John Heron led a party of men from Tynedale who burned ‘the saide Arche Elwodes house’ at ‘Thirlshope’. In 1557 the same man rented, along with Scott of Synton, the lands of Southdeanrig and Cauldcleuch, from Melrose Abbey; he is there recorded as ‘Arche El-lot of Thirlshoup’. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) younger son of Gavin of Horsleyhill and brother of the next Laird, William. He is recorded as ‘Arche’ in 1564, along with William of Horsleyhill, Robert and Gavin, and other Elliots and Scotts, tried for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He was acquitted, along with Gavin, partly because he was a ‘puer’ (i.e. a boy under 16 at the time). In 1596/7 he was witness to a sasine and was there described as brother of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He may be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald ‘Airchie Keen’ (16th C.) one of 10 Liddesdale rievers captured in Hawick in October 1567 and afterwards held in Edinburgh tolbooth. In 1569 he was pledge for himself ‘and the haill branche of Gorrumberry’. Also in 1569 he and ‘Clement’s Hob’ escaped from imprisonment in the Castle of Doune. Also in 1569 he is listed being held in Blackness Castle as pledge for Clement’s Hob and ‘Dand of Braidley’. In 1578/9 it was re-stated that Walter Scott, younger of Tushielaw had pledged to the Privy Council that he had entered into ward in Castle Doune (in Monteith); since this did not happen, then his cautioner was fined. He is probably the same as ‘Archie Keene’ in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs, published about 1594 (but prepared much earlier) under the heading ‘Gorumberie’. It is possible that he was a younger son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1561 renting the farm of Corrie Sike for 17 years from Gledstains of Cocklaw. The transcription of his surname is uncertain, but is given as ‘Willat’. He is recorded more clearly as ‘Arche Ellot in Corresik’ in the bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569 by several Elliots, Scotts and others; the Laird of Gledstains there served as surety for him for 1000 merks. In 1569 the Privy Council ruled that Gledstains was liable for the £1000 when he failed to appear and additionally Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme became surety for him. Archibald ‘Airchie’, ‘Possets’ (16th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘Archie Elliot callit Possettis in Quheittilbray’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. He is probably related to some of the other Elliots of the Priesthaugh area who are also named in 1574, particularly James ‘Dobson’, who was also in Whitehillbrae. It is unclear what his nickname meant (but perhaps the hot drink). He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 when it was stated to the Privy Council that Martin of Braidlie and Robert of Redheugh had already entered him in ward with George Ramsay of Dalhousie. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds (but not ‘Archie Kene’, who is listed separately). Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th C.) listed in 1578/9 as ‘sone to Ringanis Wil’ when John Carmichael, younger of that ilk was caution for him (and others) not to raid into England. He was also recorded in 1579 as ‘Archie Ellot, sone to Ringhanis Will the portar’, when he was among the ‘Armstrangis of the Gyngillis and thair complices’ who gave in to the demands of Lord Maxwell and agreed to end the feud between the Elliots of Ewesdale and the Armstrongs. His name was also given as ‘sone to Ringhanis Will Ellot the portar in Glenvore’. He appeared personally before the Lord’s of Secret Council later in 1579 and hence John Carmichael was relieved from his surety. From his name he was presumably son of Will and grandson of Ringan; this could be Ninian the same man as the ‘porter’ of Ewesdores. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Will’s Airchie’ recorded a little later. Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie. He was recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote. It is unclear who his father was. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald (d.bef. 1583) tenant in Dodrig. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged. He farmed at Dodrig from about 1547, and built a house there; ‘he lies peceablie bruikit and josit thir quarteris of the landis of Dodrig, pertening to the chaiplarie of the paroche kirk of Caveris, as kyndlie tenentis thairof’. In 1583 his son Robert complained that men sent by Robert Elliot of Redheugh had attacked the workers on the farm. Archibald (16th C.) listed as one of the brothers of Robert of Redheugh according to a 1583 letter from the English wardens. He is listed separately from Archie ‘Fyre the Braes’, but it is unclear if the was the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. He may be the same as Archibald, son of Robert, 15th of Reidheugh. Archibald ‘Fyre the Braes’ of the Shaws (16th C.) listed in 1569 along with his brother ‘Hob of the Schawis’, when John of Thorlieshope was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. It is possible that all 3 men were brothers. He is also recorded as ‘Arche Elliot’ in an 1583 letter from Musgrave to Burleigh, Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor. He was probably a close relative of Robert of Redheugh, since his name appears shortly after the Laird’s brothers. In 1584 he was listed among the Elliots of Thorlieshope, giving assurances to the English Wardens for the following year; there he is ‘Arche Elliot called Fyrebraies’. He was recorded as ‘Arche Elliott of the Shawes called ‘Fye the braes’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He is also recorded on Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs, where he is appears as Arthur and is listed beside Rob of Thorlieshope. He could be the brother of Robert of Redheugh listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He could also be the same as Archibald of Thorlieshope, recorded in 1557. Archibald of the Park (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. Others listed there are Hob of the Park and John of the Park. He was also listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes. His name appears after ‘James Rowe of the Park’, who was probably ‘Jamie’s Rowe’ and possibly his brother. He is probably the ‘Archie Elliot, called Symmis Arche’ listed as one of the cautioners for ‘Symmis Rowie’ and others in 1581 and 1582/3; this would make him son of Simon of the Park. His name comes first among those giving assurance for the Elliots of Park in the 1584 bond signed with the English Wardens at Hermitage. He is presumably not the same as ‘young Archie of the Park’ recorded in 1599. Archibald ‘Airchie o the Hill’ (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 when it was stated to the Privy Council that Martin of Braidlie and Robert of Redheugh had previously entered him in ward with George Ramsay of Dalhousie, but he escaped. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds (but not ‘Archie Kene’, who is listed separately in 1578/9). He was also listed as one of the Elliots accused in 1581 of stealing cattle and goods from James Foster of ‘Symwhaite’. In 1581 William Turnbull in Bonchester was declared a rebel after failing to appear to answer the charge of stealing a horse from him. He was further listed in 1583 as ‘Arche of Hill’, when listed among the Elliots of the Burnhead branch; Jock of the Hill is also listed. He was probably from Liddesdale, although it is unclear where his seat was. He signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with several Elliots of Ramsiegill, making it clear he was closely related to them. In 1587/8 he was accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond for ‘Willie’s Hob’ in 1587. There was a complaint by Leonard Corbet of the Orchard that (along with Archibald ‘Dog Pintle’ and Archie’s 2 brothers) he had stolen 12 cows, 2 horses and £100 of goods, and burned 4 houses. He is listed in 1590 among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott’s of Carrick; James of the Hill is also listed, as well as a Crozier, Douglas, Laidlaw and Henderson. Also in 1590 he, his brother James, Martin Crozier and others were accused of riving from ‘Borne’ in Redesdale. Furthermore, in 1590 he was accused, along with several Crozers, of riving from John Hall of Otterburn. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of riving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. In 1591 he was accused of leading a group of men to plunder from Jeffrey Tailor and stole livestock and goods from the tenants of Scaleby; others included his brother James and his nephew Jock. Probably the same man signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599, along with ‘Willie’s Archie’, ‘Cull with the Shaid’ and ‘Jock o the Hill’ (possibly his son). He was probably related to ‘Joanni de lie Hill’, who is recorded in 1541. He may be the ‘Archie Elliot of the Hill, callit Gleyit Archie’ who was acquitted of crimes in Jedburgh in 1611. Archibald ‘Will’s Archie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 among a large number of Elliots and others accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585. Others listed include Hob of Burnhead, Hob of Ramsiegill, Archie o the hill, Jamie’s Geordie and Reid Martin of Heuchhouse, which may be clues to his family connections. It is possible he is the same man as the Archie son of ‘Ringan’s Will’ recorded in the 1570s or the ‘Will’s Archie’ of Stitchillhill recorded in the 1590s. Archibald (16th C.) brother of Will, tenant in Dodburn. In 1586, along with his brother, he was accused of ‘a great strouge at the Eschelles in England’, with William of Falnash standing as surety for them. Archibald of Muselee (16th/17th C.) son of Gavin of Falnash and brother of William of Falnash. He was mentioned several times regarding raids on England. In 1587 he was named in relation to compensation for raids, the issue being raised with the Earl of Bothwell, Keeper of Liddesdale. His elder brother William, along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, was guarantor for his payment. In 1586/7 he was ‘in Mueslit’ under the Laird of Chisholme (and hence presumably Chisholme’s tenant) when he failed to find surety in relation to raids into England. In 1598 he is ‘Archie Elliot of Mouslie’ listed among the ‘brothers, tenants and servants of Will of Fallinesche’. Probably the same Archibald ‘of Mewslie’ is recorded in 1628 in proceedings of the Privy Council. He was stated to be a ‘notorious thief and fugitive’, who was ‘committed to waird within the pitt of Cavers’, but escaped and fled to England. However, he was recaptured and imprisoned in Jedburgh. He could be the same as the earlier Archibald of Muselee. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Ramsiegill (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) listed along with ‘Hob’s Davie’ of Ewesless and many other Elliots in 1590. They were accused by a group of Englishmen of taking 8 horses and well as prisoners that they ransomed. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is listed as ‘alias Ibells Arche’ (and separately as ‘Ibels Arche’), but it is unclear if this was ‘Abell’s’ or ‘Isobel’s’ or something else. Archibald ‘Willie’s Airchie’ of Stitchillhill (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he, Robert Elliot of Bowholm and his son Dand were accused of stealing from Englishman Richard Thurlwall. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) described as ‘young Archie of the Park’ in 1599 when he was one of a large number of Liddesdale Elliots to sign bonds with Scott of Buccleuch. He may have been a son of Jock of the Park or Robin. The Archibald of the Park recorded in 1581 is presumably too old to be the same man. Archibald (16th/17th C.) younger son of William of Falnash. He was mentioned in complaints about 2 raids into England in 1595, along with Wat Scott of Harden and several Elliots, including his brother Robert and uncle Gilbert. Archibald ‘Dog Pintle’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for 2 raids into England. There were also explicit complaints by John Hetheron of ‘the Cairts’ that he had stolen 20 cow, and by Leonard Corbet of the Orchard that (along with his 2 brothers and other Elliots) he had stolen 12 cows, 2 horses and £100 of goods, and burned 4 houses. He is recorded as ‘Arche Elliott called dogpyntle’ and ‘Arche Elliott alias doge pinte’, and he was brother of George ‘Buggerback’. Other Elliots named along with him include those of the Hill and of Bowholm. His nickname was clearly not complimentary. Archibald of Clintwood (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braillie. He is referred to as ‘Martin’s Arche of Clintwood’. He is listed in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Gavin and Hobbie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whittlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. He was also among those implicated in the ambush of Scots and Gledstains at Whitaugh in 1580. He is probably the ‘Arche Ellot’, brother of Gavin and Hobbie (and probably Simon) who was listed among the Elliots of Braillie in 1583. He may be the ‘Archie Ellot’ who, along with Gibbie (perhaps his brother) was accused of a raid into England in 1587. He was also ‘Arche Elliott of Clintwood called Martins Arche’ when accused of being on a raid on the tenants of Featherstonehau in 1587; William of Hartsgarth was also there, as well as 160 others, and it is claimed that they burned 23 houses and took 3 prisoners. In 1588 he was among several Elliots and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid. He is ‘Martin’s Arche’ in 1590 when, along with his brother Gib and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Also in 1590 he was ‘Martin’s Arche’ when, along with Will of Heuchhouse he was accused of rieving from ‘Halliden’. In the same year he may be the Martin’s Airchie accused of further rieving along with Hob of Bowhome and William ‘Rydlie’. He was probably the son of Martin recorded in 1590 along with his brother John, as well as ‘Martin’s Gib’ and Martin of Prickingham, when they were accused of stealing from Englishman Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall. Additionally he was accused in 1590 of taking cattle and goods from ‘Stealie’ and was ‘Martin’s Arche’, who, along with ‘Martin’s Dande’ and other Elliots and Armstronngs, was accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. Also in 1590 he was first on a list of men, including James (‘Martin’s man), the elder and younger Will of the Steele, Airchie ‘Cowfowle’ and 2 shiels, accused of stealing from ‘Dotland’. He was further accused in 1590 at the head of a list of Elliots and others said to have stolen from the ‘Hewrde’ family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’. He could be the ‘Arche Elliott’ further listed along with elder Will of the Steele, ‘Lang’ John and Martin’s Gib ‘the cousin’ in 1590, accused of rieving from the tenants of ‘Greinridge’. Also in 1590 he was explicitly recorded as son of Martin on a list of Elliots (including his brother John and cousin Dand), Crozier, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. He is ‘Arche Elliott of Clintwood’ listed in 1590 among Armstronngs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He is on a list of Elliots (including his father Martin and brother Hob) accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year. He may be the Archie who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He was referred to as ‘Archy Ellot called Martins Arche’ in 1597 in an English letter listing Scotsmen who had reset English fugitives. Also in 1597 he is ‘Arche Elliott son to Martin’ among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges and he was warded in Carlisle Castle. His son William is listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. In 1597 Lord Evers describes him as ‘Arche the son of Martin a great rider’. In 1611 he acted as cautioner in Jedburgh for ‘Andro Armeastrang, called the Lord’, as well as ‘Kirstie Ellot callit Hobis Kirstie’. He was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. In 1613 he was a witness to the infestinent of Robert of Redheugh in his lands. In 1615 he was banished from the Kingdoms of England and Scotland, and no more is known about him. He had at least one child, William, who was imprisoned in York Castle in 1598 at age 12, with Scott of Buccleu appealing for his release. Archibald ‘Burnt Hand’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 among defendants in cases brought by the English Warden involving raids by men of Liddesdale. His name is given as ‘Arche Elliott ‘brunt hand’’. Presumably he had an injured hand. Archibald of Merry Naze (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598 when there were complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who raise to the fray’. He was ‘of Mirrieneis’, and other Ellios listed were William of Falnash and Dandie ‘Sweet Milk’. It is possible he was the same man as Archibald of Muslee (given that the Elliots of Falnash also held Merry Naze). Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Tholrieshope (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Tholrieshope Elliots. Archibald ‘Airchie’, ‘Blackheid’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He may have been related to John and William, who had the same nickname. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Brugh (d. bef. 1621) eldest son of Gavin, the first Elliot of Brugh. He was possibly the Archie ‘of the Dobcleuch’ (i.e. Doecleuch) who signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch along with Gavin of Brugh in 1599. He is also mentioned in 1621 (after his death) having previously loaned money to Chisholme of that Ilk (probably the family of his mother). His brother Gilbert succeeded to the estate. Note that he is sometimes confused with a later Archibald (who died at the Battle of Dunbar in 1650). Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Foulshiels. In 1611 George Pringle in Newhall was cautioner for him in court in Jedburgh. In the same year John Ainslie, Burgess of Jedburgh was cautioner for his son John. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of Bowholme’ in 1623 when he and Gilbert Elliott of Craigend were cautioners for William ‘in Hisloes’. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Burnchughysde’ in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Archibald (17th C.) possessor of the farm of ‘Overraw’ (i.e. Upper Raw) in Castleton Parish in 1632. Archibald of Arkleton (17th C.) son of John and Ester Armstrong, he was grandson of William of Falnash. He is mentioned in 1623 and was served heir to his father in 1631. In 1626 he was described as ‘Archibald son of the late John Elliot of Arkleton’. Nothing else appears to be known about him. Archibald of Brugh (d.1650) eldest lawful son of Gilbert of Brugh. In 1648 he received a ‘precept lare constant’ from William Elliott of Stobs (as heir to his grandfather Gavin of Brugh) of the 10 merk lands of Over and Nether Dodburn and ‘Brandysde Bray’. He was Corporal in John Rutherford of Edgerston’s troop, fighting for the King in the Civil War. There is a record in 1642 from him ‘for a sufficient horseman and arms for the haill lands of Edgerston’. He died at the Battle of Dunbar, when Ruthford’s troop was essentially wiped out. His wife’s name is not recorded. His children were: John, who farmed at Southfield; Gavin, mentioned in 1665 as brother of John; and Gilbert in Carlips, also mentioned in 1665. Note that he is sometimes confused with his uncle Archibald. Archibald of Philhope (17th C.) made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1642. It is unclear what branch of the Elliots he was from. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1646 (although incorrectly written ‘Scott’ in the manuscript version), probably again in 1648 (when the place is transcribed ‘Phillone’) and in 1649. He appears to have married Elizabeth Chisholme, who was widow of Simon of Philhope. In 1644 he and his wife were granted half the lands of Philhope from his stepdaughter Grizell. There is some confusion over his wives, since later he was certainly married to Marion Nichol; in 1651 she was granted 8 bolls of grain yearly during her lifetime in the will of Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed first under the ‘communicants’ at Philhope in 1650, followed by ‘Maly Nicoll’ (presumably his wife), then Helen and Maly Elliot (probably his daughters) and 8 others (likely to be farm workers). He was also recorded in 1663 when his eldest son William married Margaret of the Binks. Andrew of Philhope, recorded in 1662, may have been another son. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Fisher in Melrose in 1649. Their children included: Gilbert (b.1650); William (b.1652); Gavin (b.1658); and George (b.1661). Archibald of Falnash (d. bef. 1675) succeeded his father Robert, since his elder brother William had died. He was ‘younger of Falnash’ at the time of his sister Jean’s sasine in 1637. He is probably the ‘young Falnash’ mentioned in the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’, who (along with Gilbert Elliott of Stobs) apprehended William Henderson for the murder of William Elliot. In 1647 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Falnash and his 10 merk lands of Hislop (in the Barony of Hawick and Regality of Druinanrig), as well as his 5 merk land of Langhaugh. In the same year he was separately served heir to his great-great-grandfather Archibald’s lands of Falnash, ‘Cawsya’ and ‘Tandilnes’ (probably Tanlaw Naze). James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry then exercised his right of reversion of Broadlee, Langhaugh and Hislop, paying 10,500 merks for them in 1650. In 1644, 1646 and 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Elliot of Falnash who paid the land tax in 1663; the lands redeemed by Queensberry from ‘Falnash’ were valued at £716, and he separately paid tax on £360. In 1667 he paid 9,000 merks to Francis Scott for what was effectively a mortgage on Falnash, and almost immediately sold the property to Gavin of Caerlerrig, his brother. Before 1645 he married Esther Scott (probably a daughter of ‘Auld Wat o Harden’) and by 1660 secondly married Isobel Scott (who died by 1668). His children probably included: Archibald, who succeeded and may have married a widow of Gledstains of that Ilk; Grizell (b.1642), born in Hawick Parish; and Robert (b.1645), also born in Hawick Parish. Archibald ‘Superior of Falnash’ (17th C.) elder son of Archibald. He succeeded to the estate in 1675, this including ‘Cawsya’ and Tanlaw Naze as well as Falnash itself. He probably married a widow of Gledstains (perhaps William of that Ilk), since Walter Gledstains is mentioned as his son in 1677. He probably had no male children, since the Lairdship went to his cousin Ninian. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Middlester, (Midlemmill)’ in the 1643 valuation for Castleton Parish. His lands were valued at £36. He was transcribed as ‘in Midlesteed’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He was recorded among local landowners of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. It is unclear how he might have been related to the later Elliots of Midlem Mill. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Bowanhill on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may have been father of the later tenant of Bowanhill. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he is recorded paying for use of the mortcloth. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1697 he married Helen ‘Broun’ (or perhaps ‘Burn’). Their children included: Robert (b.1704); and Francis (b.1706). Archibald (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is surely related to (or the same as) the slightly later Archibald in Minto. Archibald (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Brown and their children included: William (b.1704) and Francis (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were weavers James Wight and John Swan and in 1706 were Bailies Walter Graham and George Martin. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is probably the resident of Minto who married Helen Gray in Hawick in 1706. His children included: William (b.1707); Margaret (b.1710); James (b.1712); Archibald (b.1715); Archibald (again, b.1719); John (b.1721); Archibald (again, b.1723); Marion (b.1726); and Helen (b.1729). It is possible that these are children of more than one family, since no mother’s name is listed. Archibald (1679/80–1757) recorded in 1722 as farmer at Bowanhill (near Teviothead), renting from the Duke of Buccleuch. The following year he rented half of the farm, with James Elliot in the other half (probably a close relative). He re-leased the lands in 1744. He was surely related to the Archibald recorded at Bowanhill in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for Robert ‘Hutson’ at Blackcleugh in 1741. His wife was Christian Elliot (c.1692–1779). Their son Archibald (b.1717/8) succeeded as tenant of Bowanhill. Other sons were: Thomas (1722/3–1791), who died at Bowanhill; Walter (1726–1813), who died at Binks; John (b.1729); Isabel (b.1731). His grandson John died at Falnashburnfoot in 1832, aged 72. Archibald (1717/8–1812) son of Archibald, he succeeded to the tenancy of Bowanhill. He is listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 2 farm horses. He also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs there in 1797. He is probably the Archibald of Henderson’s whose son Walter was born in 1791. He lived to be 94 and was buried at Teviothead. Archibald (18th C.) cotter at Falnash. He married Margaret Scott and their son Robert was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1740. The witnesses were Walter Scott at Commonside and Walter Jackson at Falnash. Archibald ‘Archie’ (18th C.) dyker in the Hawick area. One year in the earlier part of the 18th century he was hired by the tenant of Fenwick to build a dyke that was inside the bounds of Hawick Common. At the Common Riding the riders accosted him and brought him in; he was arrested and had to give a bond for £100 Scots as a promise not to do so again. This was described by George Richardson in 1767. Archibald (18th C.) born in Roberton Parish, he lived at Boonraw. In 1759 he married Elizabeth Cunningham, who was also from Wilton Parish. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1759); Jean (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); John (b.1767); and Alexander (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Scott and Thomas Reid. Archibald (d.1803) weaver in Hawick, son of William. He married Janet Aitkin in 1760 and she died in 1805. Their children included: Mary (b.1761); Helen (b.1769); William (d.1805); and Robert (d.1775). He may be the son of William and Margaret Balmer born in Hawick in 1729. Archibald (1761–1823) son of Archibald, a carrier from Ancrum. He became an architect along with his younger brother James. They designed some of the most imposing late 18th century and early 19th century houses in Scotland. His designs included Stobo Castle, Calton Prison (Edinburgh), Midlothian County Hall (Edinburgh), Penielheugh monument, Jethart Castle Jail and renovations at Minto House and the Haining. He married Sarah Shiells, and they had a son Archibald, who was also an architect. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Wilson. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1782. The witnesses were Charles Scott at Commonside and Thomas Grieve. Archibald (b.1800) son of John, he was born at Bowanhill in Cavers Parish. In 1825 he married Isabel, daughter of Thomas Oliver and Christina Elliot. Their children included: John (b.1827); Thomas (b.1828); and Kitty (1830–1902). In about 1830 he emigrated with his family to Delaware County, New York. There 4 more children were born: Walter (1832–1907); Margaret (1835–1901); William (b.1837); and Elizabeth. Archibald (b.c.1795) stockmaking in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. In 1841 he was living on Brougham Place. His wife was Euphemia (or Euphan), and their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Margaret (b.c.1827); Mary (b.1829); Peter (b.c.1832); Isabel (b.c.1834); and Euphan (b.c.1837). Archibald (1847–1900) son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. He had a twin sister, Margaret, who lived in Newcastle. He married Margaret Scott and emigrated to Canada. Their children were Andrew, John, Helen (who married Wallace Hood), Eliza, Agnes (married a Dunlop), Isabella (who married Robert Laidlaw) and Mariannei (who married John Hobson). Arthur of Harwood (d.1698) son of Walter of Arkle ton and grandson of Adam of Meikledale. His lands were at Harwood-on-Teviot, for which he received a Crown Charter in 1698 (shortly before his death). He married Anne Disney and they had a daughter (his heiress), Margaret, who married William Elliot of Thorlshope. Arthur (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Walter of Arkelton. It is said that after his father had fallen out with his older brother Adam, he refused to accept the family estate, and so the lands went to his younger brother, William. Arthur (18th C.) first schoolmaster at Caerlenrig, being appointed in 1755 and resigning 2 years later. Bessie (16th/17th C.) wife of John in Redden, ‘callit Johnne of Rynsiegill’, a riever who was caught plundering from a Hawick Burgess in 1610, and imprisoned in the church steeple, where he apparently hanged himself, leaving her with ‘ffyve fatherless bairns’. Branch of the Burnhead (16th C.) recorded in the 1580s accusing Englishmen Thomas Carleton and ‘Riche of the Moat’ of stealing 200 cattle and 40 horses from Burnhead. It is unclear whether his name is a transcription error or a nickname of some sort. He must have been related to ‘Hobbie’ who was Laird of Burnhead only a few years earlier. Charles Edward (1693–1763) eldest son of Gilbert of Nethermill, who was a merchant in Hawick. It is likely that his grandfather was Robert of Larriston. Along with his (unnamed) brother, he is said to have taken part in the 1715 Jacobite rebellion and was wounded at Preston. He escaped to Holland, where he married a Dutch lady. He then worked for the Dutch East India Company, living for a while in Java (where his brother also lived) before settling in Essex (after he was no longer considered an outlaw in Britain). There he was appointed Searcher and Tidewaiter in H.M. Customs at Burnham-on-Crouch, where he also owned a mill. He had 12 children, although only 1 son (Charles, b.1752, who wrote his name ‘Elliott’ and became a wealthy cabinetmaker in London) and 2 daughters survived; the first 9 were born on Java and died young. Sir Charles Gilbert John Brydone (1810–95) 3rd son of Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto. He was Admiral of the Fleet 1870–73. He was recorded living at Bonjedward House in a directory of 1868. He firstly married Louisa, daughter of Sir Edward Blackett and secondly married Harriette Emily Liddell, daughter of the 1st Earl of Ravensworth. They had one surviving son, Bertram Charles. Rev. Charles D.D. (b.1815) son of shepherd John, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1818 the family emigrated to America. By about 1840 he had moved to Easton, Pennsylvania, where he became a Presbyterian minister. He was Professor of Hebrew Language and New Testament Exegesis in Chicago. There are other ministers of the same name with whom he is easily confused. A portrait of him exists. Col. Charles (1824–88) son of James, the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He was Colonel in the Royal Artillery and died in London. In 1859 he married Christina, daughter of Sir Alexander Ramsay of Balmain, and she died in 1873. In 1877 he secondly married Mary, daughter of Henry Davidson of Muirhouse. Hi children were Lieut. Walter, George Ramsay, Elizabeth Maule and Mabel. Charlotte ‘Black Charlotte’ (18th/19th C.) only daughter of Adam and grand-daughter of William, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. Her father was a merchant in Danzig, who married Rosa Leonardii there. She inherited the estate of Pinnaclehill near Kelso from her uncle Robert (who had tried to leave it to his nephew James, but the will was insufficiently stamped). Christopher ‘Kirstie’ (16th/17th C.) only known child of Robert, ‘Martin’s Hob of Prickenhaugh’. He is recorded in 1611 when he took part in a raid on Robsons in England. Later that year he was afterwards sentenced to banishment with his wife and children by the Jedburgh court. He is recorded as ‘Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie’ in 1611 when Robert of Redhough and several others were cautioners for him and his wife. In 1618 he is recorded as a fugitive. He had at least one child, Robert. This is probably the Robert ‘sone to Hobbeis Chrystie’ recorded as a fugitive in 1642. Cornelius ‘Auld Corrie’ (1732–1821), W.S., 2nd Laird of Wolfelee, eldest son of William, the 1st Elliot Laird. He succeeded to the Lairdship after his older brother Thomas had died. He also followed in his father’s legal business in Edinburgh’s Lawnmarket, becoming Writer to the Signet. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761, when ‘of Woollie junior’. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. He was also one of the trustees for Dr. Robert Langlands when he sold off his estate to satisfy creditors in about 1780. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. Also in 1780 he was the lawyer for the legal aspects of several new voters being added to the county roll after being granted liferent of lands by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto and others. He was himself on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is probably the Cornelius who purchased Barnhills from Matthew Stewart in 1780 (and appears to have sold it back). Also in 1780 he matriculated arms, proving descent from the Elliots of Horsleyhill. By 1788 his estate included Mackside, Broadhaugh, Blackcleughmouth, Catlee, Easter Swanshield, Hartshaugh, Hartshaugh Mill and Wolfelee, as well as parts of Stonedge and Kilnknowe. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, privately described as probably a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot and also as ‘Brother-in-law to Adam Ogilvie, factor to the Duke of Buccleuch’ (although that appears to be an error for another Elliot branch). He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in both 1805 and 1819, along with his son James. In 1811 he was listed as owner of ‘Woollee’, as well as Catlee, Catleeshaw, Easter Swanshield, ‘Shiel’s Lands’, part of Kirknowe, lands that were formerly part of Stonedge, Hartshaugh Mill, Broadhaugh, Mackside and Blackcleughmouth. In 1765 in Leith he married Margaret, daughter of James Rannie, and she died in 1796. They had at least 6 children: William (1766–1807), a Major who died in Vellore, Madras, and had his portrait painted by Raeburn; Mary (b.1767), who married Gen. Sir Thomas Dallas in Madrid, and in later life lived with her sister Margaret; Eleanor (or Eleanor), who married Robert Anderson, merchant in Leith; Magaret Jane, who was unmarried; James (1772–1855), who succeeded; and Janet Hyndford, who married Sir John Gibson-Carmichael of Castlecraig and later John, 12th Lord Elphinstone from Edinburgh. He lived in Queen Street, Edinburgh, but also held several country residences. His will is in the Peebles Commissary Court Records in 1823. David (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5 to answer for their crimes. It is unclear which William was his father, but William (also son of William) was probably his brother. David (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of the steadings of ‘Clerlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. William and David Elliot are also listed. David (d.bef. 1570) son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He was a tenant in his father’s lands of Caveling in Cavers Parish. In 1564 John Turnbull of Hassendeankirk accused him of stealing 80 sheep from his farm at Hassendeankirk. William of Horsleyhill and William Douglas of Cavers (proprietors of the lands of Caveling) were ordered to present him before the Privy Council. In 1567 he was given notice to remove himself as tenant from the 6 merk lands of Chamberlain Newton by George Turnbull of ‘Wowlie’. He was probably the ‘Dand Elliot of Cavilling’ for whom John Edmonson of that Ilk was cautioned in 1567/8 for him to remain in ward on this side of the Tweed. The Laird of Edmonson was also surety for him in 1569. A decree of removal was given against his widow Margaret Turnbull in 1570/1. In 1573 his widow was said to have encouraged her 2 sons, Walter and John Scott, to attack James Storie, who had been placed on the other half of the farm (sold by George Turnbull to Gavin Eliott of Bailielee and Stobs, who was coincidentally also from the Elliots of Horsleyhill). His wife must therefore have remarried to a Scott. David (16th C.) son of ‘Elder Will’. Along with his brother Martin he signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, on behalf of their whole part of the clan. It seems likely they were closely related to the Elliots of Heuchhouse, but a different Martin from there, along with his brother John of Heuchhouse, were listed separately in 1584. David (16th C.) recorded as ‘Davie Elliot of Bracle’ in 1584, when he was one of the signatories of the bond of assurance with the English Wardens. He was one of 3 men to give assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry, suggesting that ‘Bracle’ was an error for Braidlie. David (16th C.) listed as ‘Davie Elliot of Hongrise’ in 1584. Along with David of ‘Bracle’ (probably Braidlie) and Will of Mospatrickhope, he gave assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. His designation is probably a misunderstanding of some sort, but it is unclear where he was from. David ‘Davie’ of Dinlees (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when his son Adam was part of a group of Armstrungs and others accused of rieving. David ‘Davie, the Carling’ (d.1598) probably a son of ‘Elder Will’. He was listed in 1569 as ‘David Carling his brother’ along with Elder Will’s eldest son, when ‘Elder Will the Tod’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for their behaviour. He is listed in 1574 along with his son, among Scots rebels who were reset in England. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584, along with Croziers, Armstrongs and about 300 others, accused of stealing 800 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men; he is there recorded as ‘Davye Elliot called the Carlinge’. He was also recorded in 1588, when James Dalgleish and Nichol Brydon (from the Edinburgh area) were convicted of helping bring in him and his accomplices to steal cattle. This took place in 1588, the accomplices being ‘Hob Billie’ Elliot and 2 Armstrongs, suggesting they were from Liddesdale. He was ‘Davie the Carlinge’ among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England in 1589. His son ‘Eddie Elliott’ (probably Adam) was listed among Borderers complained about for another raid on a farm in England in 1589 and further recorded in 1590, among Elliots accused of a raid. He was ‘Davie the Carlinge’ listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Shells’. He may be the David who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1598 he was ‘Davyd Elliott alias Carlyne’ who killed William Ogle on a raid in Gilsland, and was in turn killed by a group of Ogles and Shaftoes. David ‘Hob’s Davie’ of Eveslees (16th C.) presumably son of Robert. He is listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. His name appears as ‘Hobs Davie of Dewes leases’. David (16th/17th C.) son of John of Bowholm. He was listed in 1605 among men of Liddesdale declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. David (18th/19th C.) gardener at Borthwickbrae in 1797, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. Dorothea Helen (d.1925) daughter of Sir Walter. In 1866 she married William Elliott-Lockhart, heir to the Lairdships of Borthwickbrae and Cleghorn. The marriage was held in Hobbirk Kirk, but officiated by her uncle, Rev. John Elliot-Bates, who was an English clergyman (this event causing much local consternation at the time). On the death of her brother Edward she became heir in line to the Elliots of Wolfelee, and also of Borthwickbrae, following her marriage to William Elliot Lockhart in 1866. She was succeeded by her daughter Mary Charlotte Elliot-Lockhart of Cleghorn. Edmund (13th C.) recorded as ‘Edmundus de Elaund’ in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. He complained about the actions of ‘Johanne de Cramlyne’ in the town of ‘Corburg’. He could be an early member of the Elliot family. Edmund (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name is given as ‘emmundi elwald’. Lt.-Col. Edmund James (1813–54) son of John Edmund. He was born in Calcutta and died at Varna, Bulgaria. He served with the 79th Regiment. He married Matilda Inglis. Their son Edmund Halbert was born posthumously and baptised in Wilton in 1854. Edward Hay Mackenzie 6th Laird of Wolfelee (1852–1920) 3rd son of Sir Walter. He was born in Vizagapatam, Madras and came to Britain at age 3, growing up mainly in Ayrshire and Wigtownshire. He attended Harrow, tried unsuccessfully for the Indian Civil Service and spent 3 months in a commission with the Scottish Borders Militia, then became a Lieutenant with the 82nd Regiment from 1874–88 before transferring to the 40th Regiment, the South Lancashire Regiment, where he became a Major. He also served as Private Secretary to Lord Glasgow, serving under him in New Zealand. He succeeded his eldest brother James T.S. in 1892, another elder brother Walter Blair having died.

in 1869. He retired early, in 1899, to attend to the family estates. He served again in the Boer War (going there at his own expense), but was invalided home, and lived for a while in London. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and a Vice-President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. In 1905 he married Edith Margaret, daughter of John Charles Crawford, minister of Canehill, Coulson, Surrey. On the couple’s home-coming to Wolfelee after the wedding a huge bonfire was lit on Wolfelee Hill. He made his home more permanently at Wolfelee about 1908, but sold the estate in 1912 (to Sir Robert Laidlaw) and died without issue. The heir of the line then became his sister, Dorothea Helen. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (d.1811) teacher in Hawick. Her death record states she was ‘Late Schoolmistress’, but it is unclear where her school was. Esmond (1895–1917) full name Gavin William Esmond. Son of the 4th Earl of Minto and elder brother of the 5th Earl, he was a Lieutenant in the Scots Guards in WWI. He was killed at Ypres and commemorated at Mendingham Military Cemetery. His sister, Lady Violet Astor gave money to establish a memorial ward at the Cottage Hospital, which was opened by the Prince of Wales in 1924. The face of the Minto War Memorial statue (by Thomas J. Clapperton) is supposed to have been modelled on his. Esther (d.1664) younger daughter of the last Robert of Redheugh. In 1653 she married Alexander Clerk, Minister of Letherston. Her father left her the lands of Leaugh, Greenholm and Gullyflat. She died in Inverness, where she was buried. Here gravestone was engraved ‘Here lies the bodie of ane pious and vertuous gentlewoman called Hester Eliot spouse to Master Alex. Clerk minister of Inverness and 2nd lawful daughter to the very honourable Robert Eliot of Larriston in Liddesdale and Lady Jane Stuart ...’. They had no children and her husband died in 1683. Frances Anna Maria ‘Lady Elliot’, ‘Countess Russell’, ‘Fanny’ (1815–98) 2nd daughter of Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto. She was born at Minto House, spent much of her youth there, then 2 years in Berlin with her family, before they moved to London in 1835. The leading Whig politician of the day, Lord John Russell proposed to her in 1840. He was a widower, 20 years older than her, and she refused. After persistence she changed her mind the following year and they were married, meaning she was stepmother to 6 children. She appears to have had a keen interest in political issues of the day. She is said to have disliked London life and missed her life in rural Scotland. Her husband was created Earl Russell in 1861 and finally retired from active politics in 1868. She had 4 children, including John (Lord Amberley) and Rollo, as well as several miscarriages. Lord Amberley died in 1876 and so her 2 grandsons, Frank and Bertrand (the philosopher) came to live with them; she probably had more influence on Bertrand than anyone else. Her husband died in 1878 and she survived him by 20 years, dying in their home at Pnbroke Lodge. Francis ‘Copshaw’ (16th/17th C.) accused of stealing 2 horses belonging to ‘Jock Storrie in Lewin’ and ‘Antone of the Scub’. He was tried by the Commissioners’ Court in 1622, cleared of the theft, but found guilty of reset and sentenced to be hanged. He was probably related to the John of Copshaw who was denounced as a rebel in 1607 and may be the brother of Robert of Copshaw who was listed among Elliots and Armstrongs declared as rebels in 1611 for illegally hunting and also failing to show up for a jury in 1612. He is probably also the Francis son of ‘Thom of Copshaw’ who was listed among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. Francis (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Rig and Jean Rutherford, heiress of Stobs. He was described as the eldest lawful son and heir of William ‘called of Hartisheugh’ in 1637 when he was served heir to his brother Robert. In 1642 he was served heir to his mother Jean in the Mill of Edgerston, the lands of ‘Rigg, Renshead, etc.’ However, Robert Rutherford of Edgerston purchased these lands from him a few years later. It is said that his line became extinct, but it is also claimed that he might be the ancestor of the Elliots of Dinlabyre. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Laing and their children included: Janet (b.1688); William (b.1707) could also be his child. Francis (17th C.) listed as resident at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. This was probably Tinnis Burnfoot. Francis (17th C.) resident at the farms of ‘Gulenfiatt & Greeholm’ in Castleton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Crackwool’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He is probably the Francis of Ashkirk Parish who married Bessie Stoddart and had children: Isobel (b.1689); Francis (b.1692); and Thomas (b.1698). Francis (17th/18th C.) listed as tenant at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. This was probably the same place as Tinnis Burnfoot. Francis (17th/18th C.) listed as being ‘in Hawick’ in 1701 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter, who was Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick. He may thus have been related to Walter. Also in 1701 he witnessed a baptism for smith George Scott. He was probably the innkeeper who witnessed baptisms in 1702 for Bailie Walter Graham and in 1704 for merchant Adam Turnbull (who was at the Westport, suggesting that he himself lived in that area). Probably the same Francis was ‘Vintner’ in Hawick when he witnessed baptisms in 1704 for James Leithead and in 1706 for carrier David Minto. He was ‘in Hawick’ when he witnessed a baptism for James Scott ‘Laird’ in 1708 (his step-son James Scott ‘Doctor’ was also witness to a baptism for the same man). In 1709 he was recorded as a merchant in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Jasper Richardson. He could be the Francis whose son William was born in Hawick in 1707. He may be the Francis who witnessed a baptism (along with Bailie Walter) for merchant Walter in 1713. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Wight in 1716. Perhaps the same Francis paid tax for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694 and was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the Francis who acted as a cautioner in 1706 to James Scott and John Graham, when they were imprisoned and fined for being the main instigators in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year. Francis (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Bewlie and Borthwickbrae. He was apprenticed to merchant John Turnbull in Edinburgh in 1710. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Mervinslaw in 1721. His wife was Helen Anderson. Their son Walter was baptised in 1721, with witnesses Walter Scott and James Irvine. Francis of Fenwick (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Gavin of Caerlenrig. He bought Outersiderig in 1719. He married Rachel Langlands (who was probably a cousin or other relative of his brother Robert of Caerlenrig’s wife Agnes Langlands). They had 2 sons: Robert, Burgess of Galagass, who married Jean Scott and Catherine Elliot from Arkleton; and William, about whom nothing is known. He may also have had a daughter Rachel who married Walter Scott of Howcleuch and Wauchope. Francis (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isobel Murray, and their children included: Helen (b.1741); Ann (b.1746); Isabel (b.1751); Jean (b.1754); and John (b.1756). Francis (18th C.) resident at Harwood on Teviot. In 1746 he and Thomas (also at Harwood) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Reid at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). He was presumably related to Thomas, but it is unclear how they are connected to other Elliots. Francis ‘Frank’ (1733–79) son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He was a skinner in Hawick. He is probably the Francis who in 1766, along with John (his brother), witnessed a baptism for merchant James Oliver and his wife Christian (their sister). He died unmarried. Francis (b.1758) resident of Robertson Parish, son of James and Margaret Scott. He was living at Elibrig in 1786 and Craikburn in 1788. In 1785 he married Mary Hislop (b.1754). Their children included: James (1786–1859); John (1788–1851); Margaret (c.1790–1859), who died on Albion Place; and William (1792–1861), who died in Hawick. Francis (b.c.1800) from England, he was a farm labourer living at Ryeleahead in southern Castleton Parish in 1841. His wife was Betty and their children included Matthew, Walter, John, Helen and Katherine. Francis (1819–94) son of John, labourer and dyker at Parkhill. In 1851 he was a labourer at Parkhillhaugh. He first married Christine Wintrup (1825–53) from Lilliesleaf in 1840; she died at Roberton Burnfoot. Their children were Andrew, James and Frank, who all died in infancy, as well as John (b.1841), Douglas (b.1843), Jane (b.1845) and Robert (b.1848). He secondly married Mary Burnet (1827–64) from Drumelzier, who died at Deanburnhaugh; they had Marion (1854–79), James Proctor (b.1857), born at Branxholme Town and perhaps Francis. He thirdly married Elizabeth Paterson (1832–98) in Hawick in 1870, and she died in Hawick. Their children were: William (b.1870); James (b.1871), blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge; and Francis (b.1874). He died at Damfoot and the family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Gabriel of the Park (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with John of the Park, as well as Elliots of the Steele, Thorlieshope and others, who were accused of raiding into England. Since ‘Gabriel’ is an unfamiliar first name, it may be that the English report confused the name. Gavin (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1526/7 as ‘Gavin Elwald’ the Earl of Bothwell’s Bailie in a document relating to the lands of Harden. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1543 in English documents as ‘Gawen Elwald Scotisman’. Along with a large group of other Elliots they attacked Over Howden in Landerdale, taking a prisoner, along with 30 oxen and cows. He also led a group of Elliots who took 27 head of cattle, 40 sheep and other goods from the Laird of Cessford's farm of Newton. He may be the same man as Gavin of Ramsiegill or Gavin of Horsleyhill. Gavin of Ramsiegill (d.c.1563) chief of a branch of the Elliots of Liddesdale, with the seat being near Riccarton. The connection between this branch and other branches is unknown. In 1563 he and others from Liddesdale entered into a bond with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in William Nixon ‘Grey Will of the Kyll Fuird’. Later in 1563 his son ‘Jock Elliot’ was subject of a bond by Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braedlie, to enter him before Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, in which he is described as deceased. The Gavin of Ramsiegill recorded soon afterwards was presumably another son. Gavin of Horsleyhill (d.bef. 1564) probably a grandson of William of Larriston, who married the daughter and heiress of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. However, the names of his mother and father are not known. In about 1547 he and his 3 sons, Robert, William and Andrew, were charged with killing Hugh Douglas; no details of this event are known. He was one of the signatories of the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551, when he was a tenant in Horsleyhill. Also in 1551 he purchased Bailielee (in Selkirkshire) and Caveling (in Cavers Parish) from Gilbert Ker of Primside. He was granted a Charter by Lord Home in 1555, making him 1st Laird of Horsleyhill, as well as other lands. He married twice, the name of his first wife being unknown and the second being a sister of McDougall of Makerston. Around the late 1550s there was a dispute over the lands of Newbigging (part of the Middle Mains of Hassendean) between his children by his first wife and those by his second wife. This was resolved through a panel consisting of Gilbert Ker of Primside, David Turnbull of Wauchope, William Elliot in Larriston (probably a relative) and Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He had 6 sons: Robert, 2nd Laird; William, who later became the 5th Laird; Andrew, also called ‘Dan’; David, tenant at Caveling; Gavin, who was the first of the family to own Stobs; and Archibald (possibly ‘Archie Keen’). Note that the family name was often spelled ‘Ellot’ at that time. He may be the same as ‘Gilbert of Horsliehill’ (perhaps an error in transcription) who witnessed the marriage contract between William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murray, ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’, in 1544. He may be the Gavin who in 1534 sold the 40-shilling lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott of Hassendean, with Thomas acting as his procurator. Gavin (16th C.) brother of Archie’s Will. He is listed in 1561 among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of thieves. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Gavins. Gavin (d.1565) 3rd Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert, who was executed only a year before he died. He was succeeded by his brother William. In 1564 he was ‘Gawine Elliot, sone to umquhile Robert Elliot of Horsliehill’ who was heritable owner of part of the lands of Caveling; his ‘fadir bruther’ (i.e. uncle) and tutor at that time was William in Horsleyhill. He may be the ‘Gawane’ who was listed along with William of Horsleyhill, Robert and Archibald (as well as other Elliots and Scotts) in the trial over the murder of David Scott of Hassendean in 1564, for which he was acquitted along with Archibald. He may be the ‘Guidman of Horsliehill’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he was listed along with William of Larriston and ‘Gavin’s Willie’ of Falnash in a follow-up of the same case of the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He may be the ‘Gawine Elliot of Hosliehill’ who was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as one of the men who owed him for the teinds for several years earlier; if so then he probably owned Skelfhill and Peelbrae. However, this could well be Gavin Elliott of Stobs, since it is hard to separate these nearly contemporary Gavins. Gavin in Skelfhill (see Gavin Eliott of Stobs). Gavin of Ramsiegill (16th C.) possibly son of the previous Gavin. He was one of the 10 Liddesdale thieves held in Edinburgh tolbooth after being captured in Hawick in 1567. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond for ‘Willie’s Hob’ in 1587. ‘Hob Elliot of the Ramsiggil’ is also listed, so they must have been either brothers or father and son. Also in the 1580s, along with John of Heuchhouse he accused a band of Englishmen from raiding his lands. His seat was probably somewhere near Riccarton. Gavin of Hoscoite (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1579/80 of committing raids into England. He was ‘Gawen Elliot of Hostcoite’, accused along with Robert of Redheugh and Walter Scott of Harden of a raid on Coquet Water. William of Hoscoite was also among those listed, and hence it is unclear which of the two was the Laird at the time, or whether they were the same men as other Elliots, with other designations. Gavin 2nd Laird of Falnash (d.c.1584) son of Archibald. He appears to have avoided being involved in many disputes, which is unusual for the time. He is listed in 1561 (as brother of Archie’s Will) among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of thieves. He is among Elliots who had a bond in 1561/2 with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, to enter Thomas Routledge into prison at Ferniehirst (the others were his father Archie of Falnash, John of Copshaw and ‘Elder Will’). In a bond of 1562 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst he is described as ‘of the Merynes’ (i.e. ‘Merry Naze’). He is first recorded as Laird of Falnash in 1566 in an altercation with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig concerning violent profits from certain lands. In 1569 he signed a bond of security in Hawick, with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch acting as surety for him; he is recorded as ‘Gawin Elliot in Fallinesche’ and 14 tenants of his are also listed. When he failed to appear in 1569, Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. He was to be sent to St. Andrews as a pledge, with Will of Gorrenberry, Gavin Eliott of Skelfhill (later of Stobs) and Sim of Dodburn designated as his relief pledges. Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He was entered into ward in St. Andrews in 1573. In 1575 he was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council to resolve the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. He was listed in 1576 among local Lairds who acted jointly as sureties for Hob Elliot, ‘Mirk Hob’ in Penchrise as well as ‘Vicar’s Hob’ Elliot,pledging that they would refrain from theft, but in default of the pledge by 1578/9. In 1583/4 he was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. He was dead by the end of 1584. He had at least 4 children: William, who succeeded; Archibald of Muselee; Gilbert; and Alexander of Fallon. Gavin ‘Scot’s Hob’s Gavin’ (16th C.) son of ‘Scottis Hob’, hence his father was clearly Robert, and he was related to the Elliots of Park. In 1578 there was a dispute between John Cunningham of Glengarnock, who had held him as a pledge for about three years, and John Hamilton of Stonehouse, who was supposed to receive him, but let him go. In 1580 he was among a number of Borderers held in Blackness Castle and presented to the Privy Council by their keeper, Malcolm Douglas of Mains. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for several crimes of theft, along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons.

In 1581 Martin of Braidlie and others were cautioned for his not appearing and fined in 1582/3; he is recorded there as ‘Scottis Hobbis Gawin’ and ‘Hobbis Jok’ was one of the cautioners, who may have been his brother. He is ‘Scotes Hobbe’ when recorded among the Elliots of Park in 1583. Gavin (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He is listed in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Hobbie and Archie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whithaw and Hosteute; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. They were also implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstanes at Whithaugh in 1580. He is probably the ‘Gowan Elliot called the clarke’ listed among the Elliots of Braeidlie in 1583. It is unclear why his nickname should be the ‘Clerk’ (perhaps jocularly for cleric, scholar or scribe). It is possible he was the ‘Gawine Elliott of [ ]’ (with the designation blank) listed first in 1590 among other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. Gavin of Swinestead (16th C.) recorded in Swinteis in 1576 when he was ‘surety found not to molest’ with the Privy Council. He was also recorded as ‘sometime in Newbigging, and now in Swinteis’ in 1578/9: presumably he was also the Gavin in Newbigging recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574. He was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. However, he was among the sureties who swore that they had earlier presented ‘Adie of the Schwais’. He was also listed similarly in 1581, among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was also listed in 1583/4 among Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council to discuss keeping peace on the Border, where he is recorded as ‘Gawin Elliot of Swinsteidis’. It is possible he was Gavin, son of Martin of Braidlie (who was also on the lists in 1581 and 1583/4) or Gavin of Brugh (brother of Robert of Redheugh, who held the lands of Swinstead) or perhaps Gavin Eliott of Stobs (who managed ‘Swintries’ and nearby properties for his step-son Robert of Redheugh). Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is given as ‘Wilcox’ Gawen Elliot; it is unclear what this means, but one possibility is that he was ‘Will Cock’s Gavin’, and perhaps son of Will who was related to ‘Cock’ Crozier. ‘Wilkoke Elwald’, recorded in 1541, could have been his father. Gavin ‘John’s Gavin’ of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 when he was accused of cutting off the nose of Thomas Tweedie ‘in Dunysyre’. A group of Armstrongs were separately charged. Robert Elliot, younger of Falnash, acted as cautioner for him. Given his nickname, his father was presumably John. He must have been related to Ninian, son of William of Fiddleton, who was executed in 1608. Gavin (d.1606/7) son of Gavin of Horsleyhill, see Gavin Elliot of Stobs. Gavin of Hillhouse (16th/17th C.) one of 3 men who were meant to have plotted the murder of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in a foiled plot of 1624, part of a feud between the Elliots and the Scotts. He was listed as ‘Gawane Elliott of Hilhouse’ and ‘Gawine Elliott in Halhouse’. Gavin of Braidlie (16th/17th C.) younger son of William of Dinalbye and Braidlie. He is probably the Gavin, brother of Robert ‘of Drumlybye’ who was denounced as a rebel in 1611, along with several other Elliots and Armstrongs, for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. Gavin (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of Coklek’ in 1611 when Robert of Falnash was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. Gavin of Brugh (d.bef. 1631) youngest son of Robert of Redheugh and Jean Scott, and brother of Robert the 16th chief. He was probably raised partly by his step-father, Gavin Elliot of Stobs. He may be the ‘Gawan Elliot his brother’ recorded along with Robert of Redheugh and other Elliots in 1583. He is ‘of Brugh’ when he witnessed a deed in 1597 and is recorded as ‘in the Burgh’ in 1599 when he had a bond with the Laird of Buccleuch. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. He was among Elliots who raided into England in 1603 and later had remission for this crime. In 1612 he complained to the Privy Council about being attacked by servants of Douglas of Cavers, specifically that William Douglas of Whitriggs and others confronted his family and servants on their way home from the Kirk, ‘threw thame af thair horssis, pullit thame in myris, struck them with horse wands about thair lugeis and upoun thair face’, and violently took his sons sword; however, the men were acquitted. He helped his nephew Robert of Redheugh in his dispute with Buccleuch, thus putting himself in debt. In 1621 Robert granted him Over and Nether Dodburn and Branxholmebrae, as well as discharging him from all previous bonds. In 1625 he was one of the men who broke out of Selkirk jail (the others being Robert Scott of Thirlestane, George Davidson of Kames, Thomas Little of Meikkledal and John ‘Skallis’). He married Margaret Chisholme (who may have been a daughter of Chisholme of that Ilk) and they had 4 children: Archibald, who died before him; Gilbert, who succeeded; Robert, mentioned in 1621; and William, who became Provost of Peebles. However, the first couple of generations of this family are quite uncertain, and it has been suggested that 2 of his sons were illegitimate. He was certainly the first of the Elliots of Brugh, a family that was well represented in the Hawick area for at least the next 200 years. In 1631 his widow sold Over and Nether Dodburn and Branxholmebrae to William Elliot, younger of Stobs. Gavin (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘of the Schawis’ in 1611 when William of Falnash was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. He was further ‘callit of ye Schawis’ in 1623; Rowie Foster stole sheep from ‘Callshiels’ owned by him and John Nixon in Lawshill. He was probably related to the earlier Elliots of Shawis. Gavin (17th C.) recorded as possessor of the lands of Burnmouth, Over Heuchhouse, Nether Hightrees, Dyke, Kilford and Byrestead in 1632. Given the lands he owned, he was probably of some significance among local Elliots. Perhaps the same Gavin is recorded in the same 1632 document as joint tenant, along with John Scott, of the lands of Over and Nether ‘Close alias Welschaw’ in Liddesdale. Gavin of Caerlenrig (17th C.), 4th son of Robert of Falnash. He was mentioned as early as 1635, when he witnessed the marriage of his brother William. He had a charter of Caerlenrig from Sir Gilbert of Stobs in 1668. In about 1668 he purchased Falnash from his brother Archibald, and settled it on his son Ninian. He was ‘in Carlenrick rige’ in 1678 when he paid the land tax in Cavers Parish. He was ancestor of the Elliots of Caerlenrig. He married Janet Elliot by 1655 and their children included: Ninian, who succeeded as Laird of Falnash; Robert ‘of Carlenrickrig’ (b.1655), baptised in Hawick Parish; Francis of Fenwick; and Mary. Rev. Gavin (d.bef. 1678) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1645, he became minister at Kirkton in 1652. However, he was deprived in 1662 (for refusing to conform to Episcopacy), and forced to leave not only his manse, but the bounds of the Presbytery. His sons were Robert and William both ‘in Borthwickbrae’. He was presumably related to the Elliots of Horsleyhill, Borthwickbrae, Borthwickshiels, etc., but the precise relationship is unclear. The name of his wife and date of his death are both unknown. Gavin of Outerside Rig (17th C.) recorded in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. Ninian of Eweslees was his grandfather, and appointed his guardian.
His brothers were William of Unthank and James in Harwood. In 1662 he was among a long list of men fined and given a pardon by the King after the Restoration. In 1678 he paid the land tax for lands in Wilton Parish valued at £360. Gavin (17th C.) described as ‘in Stob’ in 1668 when his son Gilbert became a baker’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This is unlikely to have been the same man as Gavin Elliott of Grange, since his son Gilbert was the 1st Lord Minto. Gavin 4th Laird of Midlem Mill (1727–86) eldest surviving son of Robert and Katherine Elliot. He was born in Old Langholm Castle. He left a sort of diary in the family bible. He was educated at Hawick Grammar School and then went to college in Edinburgh for 3 years, lived at Midlem Mill for 18 months and moved to London in 1743. There he joined the counting house of Alexander Coutts, before sailing to Virginia in 1745 where he opened a store. Returning to Britain in 1747, he lived in London and then in 1752 moved to Danzig as a clerk with Gibson & Hogg. He succeeded his father in 1753, but there was a large debt owed to Col. William of Wells, and the family estate was sold by the trustees in about 1756. He subsequently lived in London. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Anna Catharine Clemens in Danzig in 1758 (and he received a large dowry). They had 7 children, including Robert (who died aged 11), Catherine Elizabeth (who married Rev. William Lance), Helena Constantia (who died young), Clemens (also died young), Anna Renata (who married Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodymes, and received money in the will of her relative William, son of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), Gilbert (died aged 12) and William (the only surviving son, who became Rector of Simonburn). He died in London and was buried in Greenwich Church. Gavin of Fenwick (18th C.) last Elliot of Fenwick. He was son of Robert and Katherine, daughter of William of Arkleton. He may have also had a brother James, for whom he witnessed a baptism in 1758. In a pedigree of 1811 (by J.W. Henderson) he is said to have lived with ‘a loose woman’ and had a son (who went abroad in about 1796 and died), as well as several daughters. He eventually acknowledged her as his wife, in England, so his children could succeed to Arkleton. Gavin (b.c.1800) born in Channellkirk, Berwickshire, he was a stockingmaker in Denholm. In 1841 and 1851 he was probably on Sunnyside and in 1861 was on Westside. He married Isabella Best, from Cavers and their children included: Agnes (b.1824); Jane (or Jenny, b.1826); and Henry (b.1828), who was a mason. Gedwin (18th/19th C.) listed at Hagglehaugh in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. It is unclear if his forename was an error or how he could have been related to other Elliots. George (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as ‘Georgii Elwald’ when he had remission for associating with ‘Jacobi Elwald’. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Either he or a different George ‘Elwand’ was recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of ‘Lyndene’ in the Barony of Bowden, along with other Elliots. George (16th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. In 1563/4 he was listed along with Will ‘of the Burnmouthis’, Alexander and 2 Croziers who were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. George ‘the Cleg’ (16th C.) named in a pledge of 1576 by James Langlands of that Ilk, along with the ‘cobilman to the lard of Langlands’. In 1578/9 the pledge to the Privy Council for the same pair of men was considered broken with the joint cautioners being liable, namely Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. George ‘Jamie’s Geordie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is recorded as ‘George Elliot called James Geordie’, but it is unclear which James his father was. George ‘Bugerback’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid on ‘Haslegyll’, as well as separately for stealing 12 ewes and a ram. Others named included servants of William of Larriston, suggesting that he was from this part of Liddesdale. He was listed in another complaint in the same year, and said to be brother of Archie ‘called dogpyntle’. Rev. George (1676–1748) younger son of John of Brugh, who farmed at Southfield. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1701. Also in 1701 he and his father witnessed the baptism of the twin daughters of his brother Gilbert. In 1711 he was ordained as Minister of Hownam and remained there until his death. He paid the window tax for Hownam Manse in 1748. In 1710 he married Sarah, daughter of Hugh Lind, Bailie of Edinburgh. Their children were Arabella (baptised in Kirkton, b.1712), Margaret, John, George Augustus, Robert, Sara, Jane, Janet and James. All but the first child were baptised in Hownam Parish. George (18th C.) younger son of Walter in Brugh. He is said to have lived in Cuba, but nothing else is known about him. George (18th C.) farmer at Burnmouth in Liddesdale, recorded in 1748. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots in Burnmouth. George (1729/30–1805) tenant farmer at Doorpool in Rulewater. He was probably brother of William, tenant at Lanton Mains. He may be the George at Ruletownhead on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Doorpool on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Doorpool in the same year. He may also be the George who owned parts of Ruletownhead, ‘Bossiethill’ and Burnkinfeld that were among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule by 1811. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1807, aged 71. Their children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, included: William (b.1767), who died in infancy; Mabel (b.1768); Mary (b.1770); George (b.1770); and William (1772–1855), who farmed at Doorpool. The family are recorded on a tombstone at old Abbotrule Kirk. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1786); Gilbert (b.1789); Janet (b.1791); Mary (b.1793); James (b.1795); William (b.1797); and John (b.1800). George of Larriston (18th/19th C.) see George Fraser Scott-Elliot Adm. Sir George (1784–1863) 2nd son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He joined the Navy and at a young age took part in the capture of the Danish Fleet un Copenhagen Harbour, led by Lord Nelson. He accompanied his father (then Governor-General of Bengal) out to Java, and on the trip made one of the only known sketches of John Leyden. He captained H.M.S. Victory 1827–32, and was later promoted to Admiral, as well as Lord of the Admiralty. He was also General of the Mint in Scotland. A Whig in politics, he became the first M.P. for Roxburghshire after the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832, defeating Lord John Scott. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the passing of the Bill and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1833. In 1834 many of the Whig members of the Jedforest Club resigned when the Chairman refused to toast his health. He was defeated by Scott in the 1835 election. It is said that he helped get John Ewen appointed as minister at Hobkirk. In 1810 in Calcutta he married Eliza Cecilia, daughter of James Ness of Osgodly, Yorkshire and they had 9 children, one of whom, George, was also an Admiral and M.P. He may be the ‘Hon. Captain Elliot, Teviotbank’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. George Mackenzie (1822–56) 5th son of James, 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He went to Australia with his brother Thomas. A stone was erected to his memory, with an inscription describing that he died at Gracemore Fitzroy River. Gideon of Horsleyhill (16th/17th C.) along with ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden and Gideon Murray, he was responsible for burning West Burnflat (in Liddesdale) in 1599, for which they obtained remission in 1604. He (probably wrongly transcribed as ‘Gilbert’) was one of the landowners of Hassendean who the Baron, James Cunningham, tried to evict in 1603. He was also recorded in 1611 as witness to a marriage contract of William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murray. Dr. Gideon (d.bef. 1712) third son of Robert of Bowlie, tenant in Borthwickshiel. He became an apprentice surgeon in Edinburgh in 1681. He became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1689 and was Chair in 1693/4 and 1699/1700. In 1695 he and Thomas Burnet were employed by the Council of King William to visit the Earl of Home, then a prisoner in the Hirsel, and report whether his health would allow him to be transferred to Edinburgh Castle. In 1691 he married Margaret Cunningham, heiress of North Sinton and was then designated ‘of North Sinton’. In 1705 he secondly married Jean, daughter of James Loch of Drylaw. In 1695 and 1704 he was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. His children all died young. His portrait hangs in Surgeons’ Hall in Edinburgh. Gideon of Harwood-on-Teviot (d.1735), 3rd or 4th son of Simon of Swinside and grandson of William of the Binks. He was recorded as a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718 and became an elder in 1723. In 1724 he purchased Teindside from his brother Robert. He was probably the uncle of Rev. Simon Haliburton, minister of Castleton and Ashkirk. He married Mary Haliburton in 1715 and she died in 1735. Their children (all baptised in Hawick) included: Jean (b.1719); Barbara (b.1720); Simon (b.1722); Christian (b.1723), who married Rev. Isaac Davidson, minister at Sorbie, Wigtownshire; Elizabeth (b.1726), who married Andrew Oliver; and Mary (b.1728). Only Christian and Elizabeth survived their mother. The 1728 baptism was witnessed by Robert Scott of ‘F...’ (perhaps Falmarsh) and ‘Mr. Shiel in Todja...’. Gideon (b.c.1793) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. In 1835 and 1841 he was at Bellshiel. He married Agnes Anderson (b.1795) and their children were: Jean (b.1819);

Betty (b.1821); Gideon (b.1824); Helen (b.1827); Mary (b.1830); Agnes (b.1832); Anne (b.1835); and Janet (b.1840). He could be the Gideon, son of John and Betty Crozier, born in Castleton in 1791. Gideon (1833–1913) son of John and Jane Goodfellow. In 1861 he was a dyker living at Muselee. In Robertson Parish in 1853 he married Margaret Wilson. Their children included: Agnes E.; Jane (b.1856); John (b.1859); Thomas (b.1861); James (b.1864); Archibald Hoy (b.1866); William (b.1868); Francis (b.1870); and Thomas (b.1873). Gilbert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Gilbert Elwald’ in 1453 when he witnessed a ‘letter of reversion’ between Andrew Ker of Altonburn and Sir Robert Colville of Oxnam for the lands of Feu-rule. It is unclear how he is related to other Elliots, but he may have a connection to John who witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1436. Perhaps the same Gilbert is mentioned in 1493 when his son Robert produced a remission at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for the crime of stealing a grey horse from William Scott of Tushielaw. Gilbert (15th C.) son of Nicholas, listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Gilbert ‘Gib’ of the Shaws (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when he was held by Pater Hay of Megginch, with a pledge to the King for good behaviour. In 1580 he was held in ward in Falkland Castle when his keeper was ordered to present him to the Privy Council. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. He is probably the ‘Gib of the Schawis’ listed in 1580 when his procurator explained to the Privy Council that he had ‘departit hame to his awin custrie and sensyne wes slayne’. In 1583 he is ‘Gybbe Ellot of the Shaues’ in a letter from English wardens; he is listed among the close kin of Robert of Redheugh, and surely related to Adam of Hartsgarth and Archibald. He may be the Gib, ‘son to Robine Ellott’ who was among a number of Elliots (along with servants of Robert of Redheugh), Croziers and others accused in 1590 of stealing livestock from Middleton Hall in England in 1589; he is recorded as ‘Gib Ellott son to Robin’, and his servant John Noble and ‘his man’ ‘John Shevell’ were also listed. In 1591 he was described as ‘louit freind and seruitour’ of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme when he rented Commonside, Northcroft, Hillend and ‘Stoghill’ from him, being given this lease for service performed for the Laird of Branxholme. In 1595 he was also servitor of Sir Walter Scott Branxholme when he witnessed a charter. He is probably the Gybb Elwood allias Robes Gibb’ who, according to an English account, along with Scott of Buccleuch and Scott of Harden met with some Englishmen to get help in the plan to rescue Kimmont Willie. He is probably the ‘Gyb Ellot brother to Robert Ellot of Reidheuch’ who was held as a prisoner in England in 1597. In 1590 he had a remission, along with Gideon Murray of Elibank and Walter Scott of Harden, for burning Westburnflat in Liddesdale. In 1603 he was probably ‘my louit Gilbert Ellot of the Kirktoun’ to whom Sir Walter Scott leased the lands of Wester Commonside and Northcroft. He may have been an illegitimate son of Robert the 16th Chief, with his mother possibly being Helen Kidd (unless this story is complete fabrication); he would then be the ‘bastard brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh’ recorded in...
1603. It is not impossible that he is the same man as ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins’. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie. He may be the ‘Gibbie’ who, along with Archie and their accomplices, was accused of taking part in a raid into England in 1587. He is probably also the ‘Martins Gib’ in a group complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. He is recorded as brother of ‘Martin’s Arche’ in 1590 when, along with Gib, cousin of Martin, and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. He was probably the ‘Martin’s Gib’ who, along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse and ‘Adie’s John’ Crozier were accused of stealing from William Henderson of ‘Fallofield’ in 1590. Also in 1590 he was accused of stealing from Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall (in England), along with Martin’s sons (and so presumably his brothers) Airchie and John, as well as Martin of Prickinghaugh. He was probably the ‘Martin’s Gib’ accused in 1590 along with a list of Elliots and others said to have stolen from the ‘Hewrde’ family, as well as maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’. He was probably the ‘Martinges Gib’ listed in 1590 among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He was probably the Gib, son of Martin, who (along with his brother John) was part of a complaint about a raid into Gilsland in 1596, led by Sir Walter Scott of Harden. He is probably the ‘Martin’s Gibbe’ who Lord Evers described being killed by English raiders in 1597; the slayer was a Dodd, it is said in retaliation for an earlier raid. He was described as ‘brought up in the wars in Flanders and France, and has since been a leader to that wicked race’. Note that he may be confused with ‘Martin’s Gib the Cousin’, who is recorded at about the same time. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Gavin of Fahnash. In 1595 he was mentioned along with Wat Scott of Harden and 2 of his nephews (sons of William of Fahnash), Archie and Hob in a list of English complaints against Liddesdale men. His name is recorded as ‘Gibbe Elliott brother to Will E. of the Fawenesh’. Gilbert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598 as ‘Gib Elliot called Stottan Gib’, along with his brother John and other ‘brothers, tenats and servants’ of William of Fahnash. There were complaints against them by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knihtsrig, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn. Gilbert of the Mains (16th/17th C.) witnessed in 1599 to the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. His name is recorded as ‘Gilbert Elliot of the Maynis’; it is unclear where ‘the Mains’ might have been, but it seems likely he was a prominent Elliot of the time, and perhaps the same as one of the contemporary family members noted by another designation. Gilbert ‘Gib the Galyart’ (16th/17th C.) convicted in 1618 of stealing the purse of John Armstrong of Holm when they were in the house of Alexander Young of Selkirk. He was sentenced to be scourged through Edinburgh and then banished from the Kingdom. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged. His nickname referred to a lively dance, and was apparently a common nickname for someone who was smart in dress or lively in spirit. Gilbert ‘Gib the Tutor’ (17th C.) described as a servant of Robert of Redheugh. He was involved in stealing cattle from Englishmen at ‘Chipsies’ and ‘Ilsysyle’ in about 1623. He was one of the men who had planned to murder Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1624, as part of the feud between the Scotts and the Elliots. He is listed as ‘Gib Elliot, callit the Tutour’, along with Gavin of Hillhouse and ‘Will Elliot, callit Gibbis Will’, who may have been his son. They were meant to kill the Earl in Jedburgh at the time of a Justice Court, and then followed him to Edinburgh, but after failing they confessed. Robert of Redheugh stated that the idea for the murder originally came from him, but Gavin of Hillhouse said that ‘Gib wes bot a feible coutcher and wald never do the turne’. Gilbert (17th C.) married Janet Richardson in Kelso in 1635. They had a daughter Elizabeth in 1636. Janet (b.1639) and Margaret (b.1642), both baptised in Hawick Parish, were probably also his children. He may be the same as one of the other Gilberts. Gilbert (17th C.) signatory of the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. He is recorded as being ‘now in Quhitbauche’, which could be Whithaugh in Liddesdale. Gilbert of Brugh (d.bef. 1648) 2nd son of Gavin, he gained the Lairdship since his elder brother Archibald died before 1621. In 1621 he is recorded as witness to a contract for money due by the Chisholmes to his deceased brother. He is recorded in the Circuit Court of 1623 when he acted as caution (along with several others) for Mungo Scott in Castleside (who may have been his tenant). His wife’s name is unknown and his only son was Archibald (d.1650), who was served heir to his grandfather in 1648. However, details of these generations of the Elliots of Brugh seem quite uncertain. Gilbert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Falnash. In 1637 he was apprenticed to John Nichol, merchant in Edinburgh. Gilbert (17th C.) younger son of Archibald of Brugh. He was mentioned being ‘in Carlops’ and brother of John in Southfield (who succeeded to Brugh) in 1665. Nothing else is known about him. Sir Gilbert ‘Gibbie’ (1651–1718) of Headshaw and of Minto, 1st Baronet and Lord Minto. He was younger son of Gavin Elliot of Grange and Midlem Mill, and grandson of ‘Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins’ (although these early generations are somewhat uncertain). His sister Margaret was the mother of Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk. He may have purchased part of the land of Minto (perhaps Craigend and Deanfoot) from John Turnbull in about 1674. He may be the ‘Minto’ who acted as an agent for renting some of the Duchess of Buccleuch’s farms in 1675. He may be the Laird of Minto who paid the Land Tax on more than £2100 in 1678. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, and a zealous Presbyterian. In 1679 he acted to have the preacher William Veitch’s sentence commuted from execution to banishment, and it is said that this established him as a capable lawyer. In 1681 he is reported to have ridden from London, beating the King’s messenger, and allowing the Earl of Argyll to escape from Edinburgh Castle before the capital sentence was imposed. He later took part in Argyll’s disastrous expedition to Scotland from Holland (perhaps helping to raise funds, along with the Lairds of Torwoodlee and Polwarth). In 1685 he was among the rebels (under Sir Patrick Home and Sir John Cochrane) who engaged the Royalist force at Muirdykes in Renfrewshire, and afterwards fled to Holland. He was then convicted of high treason for plotting against the King, but pardoned in 1687 (it was stated this was because of the service to the Crown offered by his father). He became an advocate in 1687 and was fully back in favour when William of Orange acceded in 1689, when he was appointed Clerk to the Privy Council in 1689 (until 1692). He was knighted in 1692. In 1694 he was listed as one of the creditors of Gilbert Elliot of Stanedge. In 1696 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1698 for Selkirkshire. In 1696 he bought the Headshaw estate (from the female heiress Mary and her husband Patrick Porteous) and in 1697 purchased Langhope (probably the one near Ashkirk). He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia (for Headshaw) in 1700 and became a Judge. He was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1702 and hence was a member of the last Scottish Parliament, voting against the Union. In 1703 he purchased the Minto estate (which had been combined with Craigend and Deanfoot) from Gideon Scott of Highchester. In 1704 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. In 1705 he was appointed Deputy Keeper of the Signet and shortly afterwards was created a Lord of Session, taking the title of first Lord Minto. Also in 1705 he had a royal charter for the lands of Headshaw, Dryden, Crawknowe and ‘Clews’ in Ashkirk Parish, which included the erection of these lands into the Barony of Headshaw, as well as the patronage and teinds of Ashkirk Parish. In 1706 he combined the Barony of Headshaw and his lands of Langhope and Minto into the Barony of Minto and Craigend. In 1705 he was one of the members of the Scottish Parliament to vote against having a single Parliament for the whole of the United Kingdom. His portrait was painted in about 1715. On the frieze of the pulpit in Ashkirk Kirk are the initials ‘S / GE’ and ‘D / (I)C’ for ‘Sir Gilbert Elliot’ and ‘Dame Jean Carre’, his second wife. He married first Mary (or Helen) Stevenson, daughter of an Edinburgh Burgess, and they had one daughter, Mary, who married Sir John Elphinstone of Logie; his first wife died in 1689 after 9 years of marriage. In 1692 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Cavers Carre. Their children were: Sir Gilbert (b.1693), who succeeded; and Andrew, who drowned at age 16 on his way to Holland. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Robert of Larriston and grandson of James Elliot of Stobs. He was a merchant in Hawick, was said to be ‘of Nethermill’ (which was probably the place of that name in Dumfriesshire, adjacent to lands owned by his grandfather, John Maxwell of Cowhill), and is described in 1696 as ‘brother german to Robert Elliot of Larriston’. His son Charles Edward was born in 1693, and settled in Essex, while another (unnamed) son eventually emigrated to California, where he is said to have descendants. It is claimed that both sons fought in the 1715 Jacobite uprising and later lived in Java for a while (but like other family legends, this may be confusing generations and individuals). Gilbert (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlshoep. He was ‘at Mount’, which may have been the farmstead near Whitropefoot. He died without issue. Gilbert

(c.1670–aft. 1727) second son of John of Brugh, who farmed at Southfield, and younger brother of William ‘the Laceman’. He lived for many years at Nether Southfield and took over the tenancy at Winningtonrig in 1710. He was also factor for his cousin, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He is probably the Gilbert who leased the farm of Over Southfield (perhaps an error for Nether Southfield) from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1698. He was at Nether Southfield in 1698 when he witnessed a baptism for James ‘Colwort’ in Whitlaw. Both he and John (his father) witnessed Hawick baptisms in 1700 for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for William Scott (from wilton Parish). He witnessed a baptism for Glendinnings in 1702, and both he and John ‘in Nether Southfield’ witnessed a baptism in 1704. In 1705 he witnessed baptisms for James Stevenson in Harwood, for Southfield shoemaker John Elliot and for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, and in 1706 another for William Cowan, herd in Southfield. He was stated in 1767 to have been tenant in Nether Southfield like his father before him and in about 1710 he ‘broke Hawick Common by plowing a part of it’, for which he got no protection from the Duchess’ Chamberlain, ‘Auld Fahnash’; during the riding of the Common that year his flock was hounded more than those of the other neighbouring farmers and he was fined by the Hawick Bailies. In 1717 there was a complaint that one of his servants had encroached upon the Hawick Common at Winnington Moss. He witnessed the baptism of a child of Walter Scott in Newbigging in 1725. In 1727 his brother William of Wells left him money in his will. He is probably the Gilbert who witnessed the baptism of his grandson Gilbert in Hawick in 1734. He married Agnes Turnbull of Southfield in 1698; she was daughter of Walter Turnbull (from Jedburgh) and Helen Elliot (from Hawick). Their children were: Jean and Barbara, twins (b.1701); ‘Helenora’ (b.1702), who married James Grieve, farmer at Commonside; Jane (or ‘Jannet’, b.1704); John (b.1708), who became a Captain and married Jean, daughter of James Grieve in Todshawhaugh; Agnes (b.1710), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (Arabella, b.1712); James; and another Agnes (b.1718). They were all christened locally (in Hawick, Cavers and Kirkton Parishes). The 1701 baptism was witnessed by his father John and brother George, the 1702 baptism by Robert Thomson in Newmill and James Ogilvie in Branxholme and the 1704 baptism by John Elliott (uncle of Sir Gilbert of Stobs) and shoemaker John Elliot. He was referred to as ‘Mr. Elliot in Rig’ in the 1712 baptism and as being ‘in Rige’ in 1718. The year of his death is not known. Gilbert (d.bef. 1752) son of Robert of Larriston. It is unclear if he was the oldest son, but he appears to have been the only one who had issue. He settled in Newcastle and married Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. He had 2 children: Jane Stewart, who married John Williams of Kensington; and Maj.-Gen. William (b.1741), who bought back the family lands of Larriston, but died unmarried. Sir Gilbert (1693–1766) 2nd Baronet and Lord Minto, eldest son of ‘Gibbie’. He was educated in law at Utrecht University in the Netherlands, and became an advocate in 1715. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1722–26. He reached the bench as a Lord of Session in 1726, assuming the title of Lord Minto, later becoming a Judge and eventually Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland in 1763. It is said that it was partly through his influence that his relative Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs was eventually pardoned for the murder of Colonel Stewart. He purchased Raperlaw (which had once belonged to an Elliott of Stobs), followed by Fallahill in 1727, Newlands in 1734 and part of Langhaugh in 1743. He was responsible for the extensive alterations carried out at Minto House in 1744 and 1745, including the addition of 68 new windows, and building up a library. He also improved the grounds, with a pond-head being built across the glen in 1735, an avenue of larches added in about 1736, and most of the houses moved to Minto Green. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. An anti-Jacobite, he reputedly hid among the crags when part of the Jacobite force stopped at Minto House in 1745. He paid the window tax for Minto House in 1748. He was known as a music-lover and supposedly introduced the German flute into Scotland in 1726. When appointed Lord Justice Clerk, he had a house built in Edinburgh, on Argyll Square. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1718 he married Helen (d.1774), daughter of Sir Robert Stuart (or Stewart) of Allanbank and had 13 children: Eleanor (b.1719), who married John Rutherford of Edgerston; Jean (b.1720), who died in infancy; Sir Gilbert (1722–77), who succeeded; Mary (b.1724), who probably died young; Robert (1725–57), Captain in the Royals; Jean (or Jane, 1727–1805), who was author of ‘Flowers of the Forest’; Andrew (b.1728), who became Lieutenant-Governor of New York, married Elizabeth Plumstead and lived at Greenwells; Marianne (1730–1811), who died unmarried in Edinburgh; John (1732–1808), became an Admiral and died at Monteviot; twins Margaret (b.1734), who died in infancy and Ann (or Anne, b.1734), who married Charles Congleton of Congleton in Edinburgh in 1762; Grizzell (b.1737), who probably died young; and Archibald (1743–59), who died in Antigua, aged 16. He died suddenly at Minto. Sir Gilbert of Minto (1722–77) 3rd Baronet, son of Sir Gilbert. Born at Minto, he was educated for the Scottish bar, becoming an advocate in 1743. He went to Holland in 1744 and married 2 years later. He was said to be a great public speaker. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1753–65 and for Roxburghshire 1765–77 (when he died, but was succeeded as M.P. by his son). He was appointed one of the Lords of the Admiralty, as well as being Keeper of the Signet in Scotland. He was conspicuous as a parliamentary orator, being said to have almost single-handedly argued the successful case for making the office of Sheriffs in Scotland independent of the Crown. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761 (when still ‘junior’ of Minto). In 1761 he became Lord of the Treasury, in 1762 Treasurer of the House of Commons and from 1771 he was Treasurer of the Navy. He was also known as a man of philosophical interests and literary talent, with his song ‘Amynta’ being popular in its day; it begins ‘My sheep I neglected, I broke my sheep-crook, And all the gay haunts of my youth I forsook’ (or alternatively ‘My sheep I’ve forsaken, and left my sheep-hook, And all the gay haunts of my youth I’ve forsook’). He also had poems published on the death of Col. James Gardiner and the Earl and Countess of Sutherland. In addition he wrote a letter to David Hume, which was later published. Before inheriting Minto he lived in London and later Twickenham. In 1767 he started the first experimental postal service in Hawick. He is probably the Sir Gilbert who is recorded as owner of the lands of Dryden, Headshaw, Crawknowe and Clews in about 1788. In 1746 he married Agnes Murray-Kynynmound, only daughter of Hugh Dalrymple; she was heiress (from Sir Alexander Murray) of Melgund in Forfarshire and of Kynynmound in Fife, and died in 1778. He was succeeded by his son Sir Gilbert (b.1751), who became 1st Earl of Minto and adopted the Murray-Kynynmound extension to his surname when inheriting his mother’s lands. His other children were: Isabella (b.1749), who died unmarried; Hugh (1752–1830), Governor of Madras and the Leeward Islands; Alexander (1754–78) of the East India Company; Rev. Robert (1755–1824), Rector of Wheldrake; David (b.1757), who died aged 5; an unnamed son; Eleanor (1758–1818), who married William Eden, 1st Baron Auckland; and Marianne, who died in Edinburgh in 1811. He died when visiting Marseilles for his health and is buried at Minto. Gilbert (b.1725) born in Cavers Parish, son of Walter in Brugh. He became tenant farmer at Blackburnfoot in Castleton Parish. He married Betty Forbes and their children included: George, who lived in Castleton; Gilbert, tenant in Glenzier, who married a Miss Davidson; William; and Margaret, who married Adam Scott from Langhaugh. Gilbert (b.1731) younger son of the 2nd William of Borthwickbrae. He had one child, Thomas (probably illegitimate, by Sarah Growssmith), who purchased Wilton Lodge. He paid the Horse Tax at Langlands in 1785–86. He is recorded as ‘Gilbert Elliot of Longlands’ or Langlands when he was taxed for having a footman in 1785 and 1786 and a carriage in 1786 and 1787. He was also taxed for having 2 female servants in 1785 and 1786; his son Thomas is listed on the tax roll from 1787, suggesting he may have died or moved. Gilbert (1734–59) eldest son of Capt. John of the Elliots of Brugh. He was baptised in Hawick, the witnesses being his grandfathers Gilbert Elliot and James Grieve. He joined the Navy when no more than 10 years old, and served under Capt. Elliot Elliot (his distant cousin from the Stobs Elliotts) on the fireship Aetna. In 1759 he was on the Tygger, commanded by Capt. Brereton, ‘who deserted his post for a slight wound in the head and tied a white napkin on his face and went below’. Elliot took over command of the vessel ‘till a cannon shot carried away his bowels, and he dropped on the deck’. Apparently the Captain was court-martialled, and although acquitted was afterwards known in the Navy as the ‘white-faced Captain’ because of this incident. In his will, made a week before his death, he left most of his possessions to his shipmates, but his sword and belt to ‘William Elliot of the Honourable Company’s Military of Madras’ (whose identity is unclear). He died unmarried. Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound (1751–1814) 4th Baronet and 1st Earl of Minto. Son of Sir Gilbert and Agnes Murray Kynynmound, he was educated largely in England. He studied for the bar, but followed his father into politics. He became M.P. for Morpeth, Helston and Berwick in 1774 and was known for his debating skills. He was then M.P. for Roxburgh 1777–84 (following in his father’s footsteps), Berwick 1786–90 and Helston 1790–95. He was served heir to his father in 1778, in the Barony of Minto and Headshaw, and the lands of Shielswood. He paid the land tax for Langhope in Ettrick Parish in 1785. In 1780 he held Craigend, but had liferented much of the rest of Minto to 6 other gentlemen (surely for the sole purpose of allowing them to vote in Roxburghshire, where he was standing as a candidate), each of them having just a little more than the required £400 of land: Alexander Alison; David Dalrymple, Lord Westhall; Sir John Dalrymple, Baron Dalrymple; Rev. Robert Elliot, his brother; Sir John Stewart of Allanbank; and Robert Trotter of Bush. At the same time he disposed the liferent of Dryden to 3 other men: Dr. William Elliot; George Potts, younger of Toddrig; and Rev. Simon Haliburton. He was listed as a voter in Selkirkshire 1788. In 1788 he was listed as owner of most of the Parish of Minto, valued at £2108 13s 4d and Newlands (which had formerly been in Hassendean Parish), valued at £80, as well as Raperlaw (valued at £416) and Willie’s Peel (valued at £104) in Lilliesleaf Parish and the associated teinds (valued at £129 12s 4d), and Shielswood, Dryden, parts of Headshaw and associated teinds (valued at £1420 18s 4d) in Ashkirk Parish. He was taxed for having 4 servants (gardeners) in 1778 and 1779 and 3 gardeners in 1785 and 1786, with 5 (including butler, footman and groom) in 1787–92 and 6 in 1793, 1794 and 1797. He paid tax on 3 female servants in 1785 and 1786, 6 servants in 1787, 7 in 1788, 6 in 1789, 5 in 1790 and 4 in 1791. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–86, when he had 2 carriage horses, 4 in 1787–89 and 6 in 1790–94. In 1797 he was taxed for having 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at Minto. He was also taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1787–98. In 1791 he gave a speech in the House of Commons proposing the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts (a popular cause in Hawick at the time). He was appointed Commissioneer in Toulon in 1793, then went to Corsica as Viceroy. In 1796 the Duke of Buccleuch and others tried to convince him to remain in Corsica rather than contest the election. He was present at the Battle of St. Vincent in 1797, and a sword taken there from the Captain of the ‘San Josef’ was presented to him by Adm. Nelson. On his return in 1797 he was made Earl of Minto for his services attempting to secure Corsica against the French Republic. He was Lieut.-Col. of the 1st Battalion of Roxburghshire volunteers in about 1803. His estate added the lands of Barnhills in 1797 and Hassendeanbank about 1799. In 1806 he resigned the lands of Barnhills, Hassendeanbank, Standhill and Lantonhall in his own favour. He was appointed Governor General of Bengal (which effectively meant India at that time) in 1807, holding the post until 1813. There he annexed Amboyna and the Molucca Islands, took Bourbon and Mauritius from the French and subdued the pirates in Borneo. He also helped quell an army mutiny and personally led the expedition to take Java (where John Leyden died) from the Dutch. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808. Returning to Britain in 1814 where he was created Earl of Minto, and Viscount Melgund. Much of the improvements to the Minto estate were carried out under the supervision of his wife, since he spent so much time away; Minto House was extensively altered, with the work completed in 1814, and the plantations were added to; this included doubling the width, adding to both wings and covering the entrance hall with a cupola. Unfortunately he died on his way back to Scotland, the sad news being brought to people preparing to draw his carriage through the streets of Hawick and light bonfires in celebration. Many locals apparently refused to believe he was dead, and there grew a tradition that he lived in secret rooms in the House and wandered the Crags at night. A life-size portrait of him hangs in the Town Hall. In 1777 he married Anna Maria, daughter of Sir George Amyand and she died in 1829. They had 3 daughters and 4 sons: Gilbert Elliot (b.1782), who became the 2nd Earl; Adm. Sir George (b.1784); Anna Maria (1785–1855), who married Lt.-Gen. Sir Rufane Shawe Donkin; John Edmund (b.1788), M.P. for Roxburghshire; Harriet Mary Frances (1790–1825), who died unmarried; William (1792–1811), who died returning from Bengal; and Catherine Sarah (1797–1862), who married Sir John Peter Boileau. He is buried in Westminster Abbey. He adopted the addition of ‘Murray-Kynynmound’ to his surname by royal licence in 1797 (the surname becomes confusing at this point; see Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound). His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1815. His portrait, by George Chinnery, is in the Museum. His wife’s portrait was painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, but was stolen from Minto House in 1930. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) son of Gilbert in Blackburnoovt and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He was tenant in Glenzier, near Canonbie and married a Miss Davidson according to a family pedigree. He is probably the Gilbert, married to Isobel Davidson, whose children, baptised in Canonbie Parish, included Elizabeth (b.1786), Margaret (b.1790), John (b.1792), Margaret (again, b.1794) and Matthew (b.1797). Gilbert (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Gilbert (b.1807); Mary Elizabeth (b.1811); and Frederick William (b.1812). It is unclear how he is related to other Gilberts. Gilbert (b.1809) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of Jesse and Margaret Smith, he was a millwright in Hawick. He was listed as a journeyman millwright on Melgund Place in 1841, by 1851 was a millwright at the Coach House on Langlands Place in Wilton, but in 1851 was still listed as a journeyman millwright at Langlands Place. In 1832 he married Cecily (or Cecilia) Robson (b.c.1811) and their children included: Walter (b.1834); Helen (b.1837); George (b.c.1839); and Margaret (b.1841). Lt.-Col. Gilbert (1826-65) 5th and youngest son of Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmoung, 2nd Earl of Minto. He served with the Rifle Brigade. In 1858 he married Katherine Anne, daughter of Rev. Dr. Gilbert, Bishop of Chichester. Gilbert John of Brugh (1864-1945) 2nd son of Rev. William of Hereford, from whom he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh. He married Bessie Clark Davidson in 1895 and their children were Air Chief Marsh. Sir William and Brig. James. Grizel (17th C.) only child of Simon ‘in Philhope’. She was the heiress of the lands at Philhope (in the Borthwick). When her father died she was given as ward to Robert of Falnash, and later (some time before 1644) married his son John. In 1642 she was served heir to her great-grandfather Simon of Philhope in the 10-pound land of Philhope. In 1644, with the consent of her husband, she resigned half the lands of Philhope to her mother Elizabeth Chisholme and step-father Archibald in Philhope. Rev. Harold ‘Harry of Peebles’ (c.1611–53) recorded as ‘Hairie Ellot’ and also ‘Henry Elliott’. He was son of William of Peebles, and grandson of Gavin of Brugh (near Dodburn). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1631, taught for a while in Jedburgh, was presented to Bedrule Parish in late 1639 and ordained there in 1640. He replaced Henry Pearson, who was ousted for his connections to Episcopalianism. However, he was himself ousted from his position in 1649 for being on the side of the King. He may have remained in Bedrule until his death about 4 years later, and ‘lived in a most dejected and miserable and cast down tradition’. After that the church of Bedrule was vacant for another 5 years. He married Elizabeth Douglas and also earlier Helen MacGhie (daughter of John of Balmaghie) and had at least 3 children. In 1650 he had a discharge of a debt with Robert Pringle, ‘tutor’ to Will Bennet of Grubet. It is recorded in 1662 that Elizabeth Douglas and 7 fatherless children petitioned Parliament, claiming persecution (presumably for not supporting the Covenants) of her husband and family for publicly supporting his Majesty’s interests, for example during the expedition of 1648, and that he had been forced out of his charge, and they had lived from hand to mouth since then. They were allowed £100 out of vacant stipends (although 10 years later she had received none of it). His children include Christian, John (possibly son of his first wife, who married Elizabeth Fithie) and Adam (who may have been a minister in London). John’s elder son was Thomas, who was Solicitor to the Prince of Wales, and his elder son was Sir John of Peebles (d.1786), who lived in London and was a famous physician. Hector (16th/17th C.) appeared before the Judiciary Court in Dumfries in 1622. He was recorded being ‘in Rig’, so that he might have been related to the Elliots of Rig; however, it seems likely to be a different Rig. Hector (18th C.) lived at Southdean, where he married Christian Oliver in 1736. Their children included: Robert (b.1738); John (b.1740); and Mary (b.1741). Hector (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He is surely related to the earlier Hector, as well as Robert from the same parish, whose children were born about a decade later. His children included: William (b.1753); Susan (b.1754); and Christian (b.1756). Helen of Binks (b.1796) daughter of John, she was known as ‘the White Rose o Liddesdale’ and married Archibald Blake in Liverpool in 1820. Henry (16th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. He was probably related to some of the others Elliots who were listed. Henry (17th C.) recorded as ‘Harie Elliot, son-in-law’ when he was overseer of William Elliot of Binks in 1665. Assuming that the date is correct, it is unclear who he might have been. Henry (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Henry (d.bef. 1715) farmer at ‘Sorbe-trees’ (i.e. Sorbietrees) near Newcastle. In 1715 Henry Elliot of Bells in Northumberland and John Elliot of Larriston in Roxburghshire were appointed ‘tutors’ for his children Jane, Elizabeth, Margaret, Gilbert, Christine, Henry and Adam. Based on the names and the date, it seems this may be the same man as Henry of Lodgegill. Henry 'Harry' (17th/18th C.) 2nd (or 3rd) Laird of Harwood, son of William and grandson of Simon of the Binks. His father left him the lands of Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside. He built a new house at Harwood and also purchased Chapelknowe in 1675. He paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678. He was Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1690. He is recorded in 1676 as ‘Harie Elliott’ when he was cautioner to a ‘letter of horning’ against William Elliot of Philhope, brought by Walter Scott, called ‘Westport’. He witnessed Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs ‘bond of provision’ in 1677. In 1681 he was a witness for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Waunhope. He is recorded in a bond of 1683 with Robert, Lord Jedburgh, with Simon Elliot of Swinside as cautioner, and in 1688 he was a cautioner for Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. He also feued the lands of ‘Caephope and Calahope’ from Sir John Scott of Ancrum in 1692. He had a bond with William Elliot of Bewlie in 1692, another in 1694 with John Kerr of Cavers, and one in 1696 with Rev. John Goudie of Sprouston. He appears to have paid off some of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge’s debts in the mid-1690s. He was the Laird of Harwood in 1694 when the tax on 7 hearths was paid on ‘Harits hous and office houses’. In 1694 he purchased Fairmileeles for his eldest son William, reserving liferent for himself. However, in 1699 he gave up the liferent on the condition that William paid off some of his debts and provided for the 2 youngest sons, John and Henry. He married Mary, daughter of John Scott of Dryhope and had at least 6 children. He had 3 sons who married sisters, all of them daughters of the Laird of Todrig. Walter Scott: William (who succeeded) married Jean; John married Nelly; and Henry of Peel married Elizabeth. He had another son, Walter of Ormiston, who is said to have married the eldest daughter of Andrew Kerr of Lindean. He also had a daughter Elizabeth, who married Robert Elliot, 2nd Laird of Midlem Mill, and another daughter Anne (or Anna) who married William Currrer, tenant in Hyndhope. In 1699 he gave his eldest son William the lands of Harwood, Appotside and Tythehouse in agreement for paying his debts and granting him a yearly allowance (the implication is that he was infirm by this time, his son already being mentioned in all the documents relating to Harwood for several years previously). The dates of his birth and death are unknown, but he was certainly alive in 1701, and in 1707 his heir William was still described as ‘younger of Harwood’. Henry of Lodgegill (1672–1714) 2nd son of John of Thorlieshope, Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His brothers were John of the Binks and William of Thorlieshope. He succeeded his father in Hudshouse. In 1708 he had a Crown Charter of the lands of Lodgegill in Ewesdale particularly of what had been known as Black Tarras, this being settled on him by his brother William, after Simon of Lodgegill became bankrupt. He married Margaret (1680–1768), daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill; she survived him for more than 50 years. Their children were: William of Lodgegill, who married Jane, daughter of William Elliot of Harwood-on-Rule; John and Robert, who probably died young; Adam in Flatt, who married Elizabeth Elliot of Sorbietrees; Margaret, who married Charles, brother of Scott of Garrenberry; Catherine, who married Edmund Atchison in Mosspeeble; Elizabeth, who married Robert Scott in Single; Jean, who married John Armstrong in Sorbie; and Henry (1712–94), who farmed at Flatt and married Janet Little. Henry (17th/18th C.) son of William of Punchrise and Bessie Grieve, he was tenant in Riccarton. He married Isobel, daughter of John Elliot in Dinlees, and sister of John in Park (mentioned in 1730). Their children included: William, a baker in Hawick; Catherine, married Thomas Armstrong of Riccarton Mill; and Jean. Henry of Peel (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood and Mary Scott of Dryhope. His brother John Elliot in Dinlees, and sister of Jean in Park (mentioned in 1730). Their children included: William, a baker in Hawick; Catherine, married Thomas Armstrong of Riccarton Mill; and Jean. Henry of Peel (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood and Mary Scott of Dryhope. His brother John Elliot in Dinlees, and sister of Jean in Park (mentioned in 1730). Their children included: William, a baker in Hawick; Catherine, married Thomas Armstrong of Riccarton Mill; and Jean. Henry of Peel (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood and Mary Scott of Dryhope.

of Todrig (probably the sister of 2 of his brothers’ wives). He had many children, but only 3 are recorded: Henry of Peel, who married Jean, daughter of John Elliot of the Binks and sold Peel; Walter (d.1741), surgeon on H.M.S. Wa- ger, who died following a shipwreck off Patagonia; and William, who was a Captain and ten- ant in Rowanburnfoot. Henry (1700–84) Laird of Harwood, successor to William. In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood (this be- ing before he succeeded to Harwood). He did not get along with his father, particularly after much of Harwood was let for an extended period to the Pott brothers. He appealed to the Court of Session about his father’s behaviour and finally managed the estate for his father’s trustees. He was keen to improve the lands, in particular to enclose the fields, but he cared nothing for antiq- uities, and had all the old buildings pulled down (including the old town of Harwood). He did, however, build an edifice thatched with heather (‘Elliot’s Folly’) on a small hill, from which he could watch his workers. He paid the window tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was said to be a good-looking, broad-shouldered youth and stood over 6 feet tall. His normal dress was a three-cocked hat, a long coat, top-boots and a huge necktie, which was wrapped thrice round his neck. In his old age he became quite deaf and then blind, but kept up an interest in the estate; he was led about by an Elliot who was quite deaf and then blind, but kept up an interest the garden, aged 84, and was buried in Hobkirk churchyard. He never married and was succeeded by his nephew William; the succession was set out in a ‘deed of tailzie’ in 1769, and formalised in a disposition of 1783. Henry (18th C.) younger son of John, farmer in Cooms. He farmed at Sorbi- etrees. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Henry in Sorbiëtrees. He married Christian Scott, from Faulnash. Their children were: William in Sorbiëtrees; Catherine; and Elizabeth, who married Adam Elliot in Flatt. Henry (1712–91) younger son of Henry of Lodgegill, he was farmer at Flatt. He is probably the ‘Henry Eliot in Flatt’ who paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. He was recorded at Flatt on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. In 1786 he sub-scribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was a witness in 1788 at the court proceedings to establish Maj.-Gen. William Elliot as head of the clan. Also in 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, specifically under ‘Votes of Mr. Thomas Waugh’. He married Janet Lit- tle (c.1790–99). Their children were: Margaret (b.1760), who died young; Catherine (b.1762), who married Dr. Andrew Graham from Dalkeith, probably related to Dr. Walter Graham of Ha- wick; Henry (1763–93), who died unmarried; and John (1769–1823), who married Jean Scott and farmed at Flatt. Henry of Peel (d.1780) son of Henry of Peel and Elizabeth Scott from To- drig. He paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He sold Peel, and afterwards farmed at Rowanburnfoot in Dum- friesshire. He married Jean, daughter of John Elliot of Binks. Their children included: Jean, Will- iam and Thomas, who all died unmarried; Capt. John (d.1782) of the 28th Foot Regiment, died at St. Kitts; George (c.1753–1807), who had a lumber business in North Carolina; Col. Henry of the Royal Marines, who emigrated to Canada; and Catherine, who married Joseph Jackson in Har- law Mill. His executors were: his brother Capt. William; Henry in Flatt; John of Binks; advoca- te Adam Ogilvie; Cornelius Elliot, W.S.; Lieut. John; Robert, brother of Henry of Harwood; and John in Burmouith. Henry (1731–90) son of William of Tarras, he was tenant in Dinlees. He is recorded at Dinlees in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. Henry (b.c.1740) son of William of Bush and Binks. He was tenant farmer in Stanniswater, Westerkirk. He married Jean Laidlaw from Gorrrenberry and their children included: Henry, who died young; William in Stanniswater (b.1774), who moved to Fauldshope; Margaret (c.1776–1842), who mar- ried Walter Anderson of Broom; and Catherine, who married James Graham at Irving. Maj.- Gen. Henry of Rosebank, Kelso (1763–1841) younger son of Robert of Harwood. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He was served as heir of provision to his uncle Henry of Harwood in 1787. He married Jean (or Janet, 1780–1863), daughter of Rev. Dr. Thomas Somerville. He died without issue. Henry (c.1765–1860) tenant at West Fodderlee and Westerhouses. He could be the son of William, shepherd in Templehallshiel, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1764. He was at West Fodderlee in 1841. In 1851 he was a widower at Westerhouses, farming 200 arable acres and 870

Henry of Jedburgh. He died at Rosebank, Kelso, and married Janet, daughter of Rev. Dr. Somerville to most of the Whigs to leave the club. Robert and Eliz children included: Henry (b.1812); Betty (b.1815); an unnamed child (b.1817); and Robert (b.1819). Henry (1769–1841) son of Capt. Robert and Elizabeth Pringle. He became an ensign in the 70th Regiment, serving in Ireland and the West Indies. He was then an officer with the 60th and 96th Regiments, and ended up as Lieut.-Col. He retired from the Army and settle at Rosebank, near Kelso. He became a member of the Jed forest Club and was the chairman at the 1834 dinner when refusal to toast the sitting M.P. led to most of the Whigs to leave the club. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. He died at Rosebank, Kelso, and is buried in Jedburgh Kirkyard. Henry (1792–1874) son of William in Dinlees. He was a ten ant farmer in Colterscleuch and Dinlees. He leased Colterscleuch in 1816 and gave up the lease of Dinlees in 1842. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed at Colterscleuch in 1841 and in 1851 and 1861 was farmer of 1700 acres there, employing 5 labourers. He was still listed there in 1868. He married Janet (b.1793), daughter of Walter Elliot in Hermitage. Their children included: William (b.1813), tenant in Colterscleuch; Janet (b.1815); Helen (b.1815), twin of Janet; William (again, 1817–98) tenant in Colterscleuch; Agnes (b.1820); Agnes (again, b.1823); Margaret (1825–1905); Betsy (b.c.1829); Walter (1827–49); Esther (1833–56); Mary (b.c.1835) and Joanna (1837–1920), who married John Harrison, and had children who later farmed at Colterscleuch. He is buried at Castleton. Henry (1793–1818) eldest son of John, tenant in Flatt, he was born in Castleton Parish. He had a son William (b.1817) in Cumberland with Esther Glendinning of Newcastleton. He died in Jamaica Henry (1802–73) son of Henry, farmer at West Fodderlee and Westerhouses. He was born at Rawflat and baptised in Yarrow Parish. He was tenant of Greenriver (i.e. Hobsburn). In the 1830s he farmed at West Fodderlee, and at Gatehousecote in the 1840s. In 1851 he was at Gatehousecote, farming 1300 acres of pasture and employing 35 people. By 1861 he was at Greenriver, as farmer of 4300 acres, employing 30 labourers. He lived there for the rest of his life. He also ran the various farms of the Abbotrule estate for the 4 Henderson brothers. He also had the farms of Dalgleish, Westerhouses (where he was recorded in a directory of 1868) and Dykeraw. Additionally he ran the financial arrangements for Charles Scott, who farmed at Tythehouse and Dykeraw. He is said to have been a good judge of cattle and familiar at Newcastle market. He always carried a lucky half-crown in his pocket, which was worn down to a blank piece of silver by the time of this death. He married Agnes Taylor in 1833 and she died in 1878, aged 71. Their children included: John (1831–78), a surgeon in Calcutta; Janet (b.1833), who died in infancy; Janet (1835–48); Robina (1836–1907), who married Peter Pennycook of New Hall in 1855; Agnes (1837–1906), who married William Scott and died in Edinburgh; Henry (1839–91), who succeeded on the farms; Jane (1840–56); Margaret (b.1843), who died young; and Margaret (again, 1851–83). He is buried in Hobkirk churchyard. Sir Henry George (1817–1907) 2nd son of Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 2nd Earl of Minto. He had a career in the Diplomatic Service, holding posts in many capitals of Europe, ending as Ambassador in Vienna 1877–84. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Edmund Antrobus. Their children were Gertrude (who died unmarried) and Sir Francis Edmund Hugh. Henry (b.c.1819) son of James, farmer at Lymiecleuch. In 1851 he was listed as head of the family, with the 3700 acre farm of Lymiecleuch held in trust for his siblings Scott, William, Walter, Mary and Janet. Henry (b.1821–63) son of Thomas and Helen Scott. In 1851 he was farmer of ‘a large store farm’ employing 9 labourers at Kirndean. He lived with his sisters Ann and Christian. In 1861 he was farmer at Lanton in Jedburgh Parish, where he died. Henry (b.1823/4) from Canonbie, he was a baker in Newcastle. In 1861 he was at about 46 North Hermitage Street. His wife was Ann and their children included Robert, John, William and Helen. Henry Erskine (b.1829/30) joiner in Newcastle. In 1851 he was journeyman carpenter with James Douglas in Newcastle, and listed there as ‘Cousin’s Son’. He was living at about 6 Langholm Street in 1861, and employing 7 men. In 1859 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott and Isabel Grieve. Their children included: James Douglas (b.c.1860); Beatrix Cavers (b.1861); Isabella (b.1863); William

In the period 1814–20 he served as Governor of Madras. He secondly married Margaret Jones, after whom Lady Elliot Island in Queensland was named. His children were: Isabella (d.1826), who married George Payne; Theodore Henry (d.1842); Emma (d.1866), who married Sir Thomas Hyslop; Edward Francis (1796–1866); Caroline; Harriet Agnes; Gilbert (1800–91), Dean of Bristol; Adm. Sir Charles (1801–75), who was Governor of Bermuda, of Trinidad and of St. Helena; Hugh Maximillan (1802–26); and Sir Thomas Frederick (1808–80). He died in London and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Ingram (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was listed after Edmund and before Martin, who he may have been closely related to. Ingram (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman ‘John Makrobyn’ was killed. His brother Adie was also listed, as well as Aircie. Isabel (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish (probably at Yethouse) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John, who was listed before her must have been closely related. Isabella (19th C.) listed as grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Slater’s 1852 directory. She could be the Isabella from Nicol Forest in Cumberland, who was listed in 1851 at about 7 Douglas Square, with her daughters Agnes and Violet; she was wife of shepherd William. James (15th C.) listed along with Laurence, Simon and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they were said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles, in 1482/3. His name was listed first, and so he was presumably head of some Borders branch. For his service Dickson received a grant from the King for the following 19 years. He is probably the ‘Jacobi elwald’ recorded at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1498 when Thomas Midlemes had remission for resetting him after he and his accomplices had burned a ‘pele in bothil’. James (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. Thomas Brown in Minto and George Davidson in Raperlaw were given remission for several crimes, including helping him in thefts occurring before the date of their existing remission. Probably the same James was mentioned in 1494/5 when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including stealing livestock from Synton, with his help. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Elliiots. James (d.1526) recorded as ‘James Elwald’ when he was convicted and hanged in

Thomas (b.1866); and Jane (b.1868). Henry (1839–91) son of Henry, from whom he took over as farmer at Greenriver in Rulewater. Shortly after his mother’s death in 1878 he became ill himself, eventually becoming paralysed. He was looked after by his sister Robina Pennycook and the farm was run by his nephew James Lindsay Oliver. Herman F. (1854–95) 4th son of Sir Walter of Wolfelee. He was born in India, was educated at Harrow and joined the Black Watch, rising to the rank of Major. He was apparently very stout. He was decorated in Egypt and the Sudan and died in Mauritius. Hugh (17th C.) described as ‘Hugh Elliot, smith’ when he was a witness in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642. ‘John Elliot, wag’ was also a witness, so may have been his brother or other relation. He is probably the Hugh, married to Margaret Dickson, whose children born in Hawick included Helen (b.1640), William (b.1643) and Hugh (b.1644). Hugh (17th C.) recorded as ‘Hewgo Elliot, smith’ in 1685 when he was fined by the Hawick Magistrates for throwing off Adam Young’s bonnet in the church, to which Adam Young retaliated and was also fined; Adam was also a smith, so this may have been a professional rivalry. He is probably the Hugh, son of Hugh and Margaret Dickson, who was born in Hawick in 1644. He was listed as a smith in 1687 when he witnessed a baptism for James Davidson and may also be the Hugh who witnessed a baptism for James Atkinson in 1687. He is probably the ‘Hew Eliott, smythe in Newmylnes, in Slittrig’ in 1672 when he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick, gratis, ‘by the importunity of ane person of quality’. Hugh (1752–1830) 2nd son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Minto. He was brother of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was educated along with his elder brother and the pair were mentored by David Hume. He attended Oxford University and finished his military training at Metz. He fought with the Russian Army and then became a British diplomat in Bavaria before being appointed Ambassador to Prussia. In 1780 he married his first wife, Charlotte von Kraut and fought a duel with her lover (a scandal that, it is said, followed him for the rest of his life). After he moved to Copenhagen he abducted his daughter Isabella from his wife’s influence in Berlin, and the couple divorced. He then served in Dresden and Naples and was Governor of the Leeward Islands 1809–14. He was a strong abolitionist and was reported to be the force behind the conviction of a man for the murder of a slave in the British Virgin Islands.
Edinburgh for his part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. This was an event where Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, along with other Scotts, Elliots and their followers tried to wrest control of the young James V from the Earl of Angus, this being part of ongoing power struggles within Scotland. His crimes also included ‘common Theft and Reset of theft’. However, it seems clear that he was simply a scapegoat, being probably the most important Elliot that was captured (perhaps a son of Robert of Redheugh, for example). He could be the ‘Jacobi Elwald’ recorded in 1535 when ‘Georgii Elwald’ had a remission from the crime of associating with him. James (16th C.) entered in 1537/8 for crimes along with his brother Simon ‘Elwald’ and William in Lea- haugh, with sureties being Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald. They were accused of breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk. How he was related to other Elliots is unclear. James (16th C.) tenant in Skelfhill in 1569 when he was listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick. He may have been related to ‘Gawin Ellott in Skelshill’ (later of Stobs) who was the proprietor of the lands. His name is listed as ‘Jame Ellot in Skelshill’. James ‘Jamie’ (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding Harwood on Teviot in 1581/2. He was brother of ‘Rowans Hobbe’. They were declared rebels after not appearing to answer the charge. James ‘Jamie’ of the Park (16th C.) recorded having a pledge before the Privy Council in 1573. He was also recorded in 1583 in a list of Elliots compiled by the English wardens. He must have been related to Jock Elliot of the Park, and may also have been descended from Simon. He was surely related to ‘James Rowe of the Park’ recorded in 1581. He is probably the James of the Park for whom there was surety before the Privy Council in 1573. However, there may be 2 men here, since in 1573 James of the Park was deceased when his son Hob was interchanged with John of the Park as ward with Sir William Scott of Balwea- rie. James ‘Dobson’ (16th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘James El- lott alias Dobsonn thair’, after Archie in ‘Quhett- tilbray’, among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. He may have been related to other man of this area who were also listed, e.g. the Elliots in Priesthaugh and ‘Vicar’s Hob’. It is unclear what his nickname meant. James ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jeme Ellot called gray Wills Jeme’ in 1583, and listed among the El- liots of Park (separately from Jamie of the Park). He was presumably son of ‘Grey Willie’. James ‘Jamie’ of Millburnholm (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name was listed as ‘Jame of Milbourne home’, and seems highly likely to have been an Elliot, perhaps the same as one of the other Jameses. James ‘Airchie’s Jamie’ (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1590 of raiding Middleton Hall in England in the previous year. He was named as ‘Arches Jamey’ along with ‘Gib Ellott son to Robin’, 2 servants of Robert of Red- heugh and others who were accused of stealing horses. James of the Binks (16th C.) recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. On a later record of the same case he is ‘of the Byrks’, so there could be confusion over where he was from. In 1590 he was ‘of the Bynckes’ when accused of stealing a gelding and furniture from Englishmen John Heron and Henry Charlton. It is unclear how he might have been related to later Elliots of Binks. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Martin’s man’ in 1590 when he was on a list of men, including Martin’s Airchie, the elder and younger Will of the Steele, Airchie ‘Cowfowl’ and 2 Shiels, accused of stealing from ‘Dotland’ a couple of years earlier. He was presumably a servant of Martin of Braidlie, and could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James see James Ellott. James of the Hill (16th/17th C.) brother of Airchie of the Hill. He is listed among a large group of Elliots and others who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was ad- ditionally listed in 1590 along with Airchie of the Hill among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott’s of Carrick, and along with his brother Archie of the Hill among a group accused of rieving from ‘Borne’ in Redesdale. He was ‘James on the hill’, also in 1590, when named first along with Anthony of the Binks, James ‘Half Lug’, Hobbie ‘the Tailor’ and 60 others, accused of raiding ‘Windgates’, taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. He was also listed as brother of Airchie of the Hill among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Gar- ret Sheills’. In 1591 he was part of a group (along with his brother Airchie of the Hill) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Tailor and the tenants of

James of Binks in the mid-1660s. Lee, one of the executors or overseers for William in Stobicote. His son James was baptised in 1662. His children included: John (b.1715); Walter (b.1718); and an unnamed child (b.1719).

James Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths, since he was `in Castleton', (although it us unclear whether he was tenant in the farm of Castleton, or just lived in the Parish). He died without issue. James (17th C.) recorded being `in Harrotnow' (i.e. Harwoodknowe) in 1760 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He must have been related to John in the same place, who was brother of Gavin and another son of Robert of Fenwick. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Young. Their children included: John (b.1760); and Charles (b.1764). James (18th C.) son of James in Millholm and descended from the Elliots of Unthank. He was `in Castleton' (although it us unclear whether he was tenant in the farm of Castleton, or just lived in the Parish). He died without issue. James (18th C.) recorded being `in Harrotnow' (i.e. Harwoodknowe) in 1760 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He must have been related to John in the same place, who had children baptised in 1775 and 1780. James (b.1728) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Milsington in 1756. He married Margaret Scott in 1753 and their children included: John (1754-1817); Margaret (b.1756); William (b.1757); Francis (b.1758); Andrew (b.1760); James (1761-1850); and Betty (b.1768). James (1792/93) resident at Meikle Whitlaw, and then Little Whitlaw. He was at Sykefoot in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 farm horses and 2 non-working dogs. He married Christian Blyth, who died at Harwood-sike-foot in 1796, aged 61; she was daughter of John Blyth, Deacon of the shoemakers of Jedburgh, and his second wife, Janet Scott. Their children included: William (b.1764), who died in Jamaica; Janet (b.1766); John (b.1768); Isabella (b.1773), who married farmer John Angus; and Peggy (b.1776). The family are buried in St. Mary's Kirkyard. James (1733-94) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth (or Betty, 1729-1817) Goodfellow, and they both died in Newcastle. Their children included: James (1762-1851), who married Christian Fletcher; probably Eupham; Elizabeth...
Elliot (b.1766); and Elspeth (b.1770). He could be the James, son of James, shepherd at Stobice, born in Cavers Parish in 1733. James (18th C.) listed as innkeeper at ‘Harrot’ in 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Hawick Parish. He was probably based at Harwood-on-Teviot. James (c.1733–1816) son of John of Whithaugh and Margaret Scott. He was a shepherd in Twislehope. He married Elizabeth Jackson (c.1744–1806) Their children included: Rolland (c.1766–99), who married Katherine Little; Barbara (c.1774–92); and James (b.1783). James (1736–82) son of Walter of Ormiston. In 1778 he married Isabel Rule in in Hawick; she was presumably his 2nd wife and the couple were fined by Cavers Session in 1779 for their irregular marriage. An entry in the diary of James Sibbald states ‘Heard at the fair James Elliot of Ormiston was married to his own servant’. His children included: Simon (b.1770); James (b.1776); and Andrew (b.1777), who may have been shepherd at Cocklawfoot and emigrated. All 3 of these children were baptised in Cavers in 1778. It seems that his children were unable to inherit and hence Ormiston went to his sister Helen and her husband Thomas Currier. James (1748–1828) shepherd in Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen Elliot, who died in 1809 at Cleuchhead. They are easy to confuse with a contemporary Castleton couple with the same names. Their children probably included: William (b.1773); Isabel (b.1779); Jean (b.1781); James (b.1783); John (1785–1854), who married Helen Murray and emigrated to Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario; and Walter (b.1787), who may be the Walter who lived at Dinleyhaughfoot. He died at Burngrains and is buried in Castleton. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen Elliot. They are easy to confuse with a contemporary couple of the same names. He was recorded in Tweedside in at least the period 1774–79. His children included: Isabel (b.1774); Adam (b.1777); and Helen (b.1779). Other children probably included: Helen (b.1775); Mary (b.1780); and Thomas (b.1791). James (18th C.) resident of Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. He had sons Charles (b.1784) and George (b.1786). James (b.c.1765) joiner in Newcastle. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 he was at about 3 Walter Street. James (b.1765) son of shoemaker Robert. In 1798 he married Janet Renwick, announced in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. His wife died in 1835. James (1769–1824) youngest son of William of Whithaugh. He was born in Castleton Parish and became a merchant in Hawick. He worked as a clerk for William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’, who was the most prominent general merchant and banker in Hawick at the time. He was listed in Oliver’s 1808 will as ‘my clerk, brother of John Elliot Esq of Whithaugh’. He witnessed a baptism for Joseph Peacock in Hawick in 1799. He is probably the James, merchant in Hawick, who was declared bankrupt in 1815, and who was listed as ‘late Merchant in Hawick’ in 1824 when his outstanding debts were to be sold. James (1770–1855) son of Ninian. His mother’s name is not given on the baptism record, but it seems likely it was Janet Douglas. He was a shepherd in the Teviothead area; most of his children were born at Sundhope. In 1798 he married Janet (1774/5–1843), daughter of John Grieve and Elizabeth Paisley; she died at Broadhaugh. Their children included: Ninian (1799–1885), who died in Ontario; Elizabeth (b.1801); Janet (b.1803); John (b.1806), who died young; Jean (or Jane, b.1809), who married James Riddell, who lived at Lochburnfoot; John (again, b.1811), probably the carrier in Roberton; James (1814–80), who died at Northhouse; and William (b.1816). In 1851 he was a retired shepherd living with his daughter Jane. He died at Valesburn. James ‘Jamie’ (1772–1855) 3rd Laird of Wolfelee, younger son of Cornelius, the 2nd Laird, his brother William dying during their father’s lifetime. He became Writer to the Signet in 1798. Trained in his father’s Edinburgh law office, it is said he did not enjoy the sedentary job, but he did attend to much of his father’s country business. However, from the early 1800s he improved the Wolfelee estate by planting trees and hedges, repaired dykes, cottages, etc. He was still ‘junior of Wolfe’ listed along with his father as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1810 he became a Major in the 1st Roxburghshire Volunteers. He was also ‘younger of Woolee’ in 1811 when recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh. He succeeded to the estate in 1821, and for a few years lived at Mackside. He built the mansion there in 1825–27 (although probably retaining some of the previous house) and it was him who changed the name from ‘Woollie’ to ‘Wolfelee’. He was a Justice of the Peace and in 1823 fined some shepherds for playing Hobkirk Baa on the wrong day. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the Reform Bill in 1832. He was also a founder member of the Jedforest Club, but left after a political dispute in 1834. He was also one of the Magistrates of the county who were present in Hawick during the election troubles of 1837. He was living at Stewartfield in 1837. About 1849 he gave land for Wolfelee Free Kirk and Manse to be built. He had 12 children, many of whom were born at at Stewartfield (later called Hartrigge), near Jedburgh. Although personally attached to the Established Church, he gave land to establish a Free Church and manse. In 1799 he married Caroline, daughter of Walter Hunter of Polmood and Lady Caroline Mackenzie, and she died in 1824. In 1827 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Robert Davidson of Pinnaclehill, Kelso, his cousin, who died in 1856 (and is buried in Kensal Green, London). His children were: William (who died in infancy); Sir Walter (1803–87), who succeeded; James Forbes (1807–41), a Lieutenant with the 5th Madras Infantry, who died in Nellore; Robert (1807–96), twin of James, who reached the age of 89; John Elphinston (b.1810), Rector of Whalton, Morpeth, who married Georgina Bates of Milburn and changed his surname to Elliot-Bates; William Thomas (1812–90), who died in Australia; George Mackenzie (1822–56), who also died in Australia; Charles (1824–88), Royal Artillery Colonel, who married Christina Ramsay of Balmain and later Mary, daughter of Henry Davidson of Muirhouse and the Archbishop of Canterbury’s sister; Caroline (b.1805), who died at the age of 13; Elizabeth Margaret (d.1889), who died unmarried; Eleanor Mary (1815–1915), who married Herman Freyherr von Poellnitz and reached the age of 100; and another child (with his 2nd wife), who died young. He helped 2 of his sisters out of debt. He was known as a Liberal in politics. He was said to be still riding his horse into his eighties. James (18th/19th C.) Bailie in Hawick in the early 1800s, both before and after 1810. He is probably the same as the contemporary Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Young and their children included: John (b.1796); Isabell (b.1798); Daniel (b.1800); James (b.1802); and Elizabeth (b.1804). James of Goldielands (1769–1848), son of Adam and descended from the Elliots in Brugh, he became a teacher in Wilton. He wrote ‘A Scripture Catechism, with references instead of answers’, running to 4 editions (the last 3 being 1798, 1803, 1808). He retired as schoolmaster at Wilton in about 1810 and was replaced by James Turnbull. Around the same year he was put in charge of supervising the cutting that had to be done to create the Avenue leading to Wilton Lodge. He was overseer of works (or factor) for the Duke of Buccleuch, serving from about 1810 into at least the late 1830s, and living at Goldielands; he was there on the 1841 census. Baron Von Holbein lodged with him as a prisoner during the Napoleonic Wars. He was a prominent Hawick Tory, taking an active part in local politics in the early 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and may be the ‘J. Elliot, Hawick’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was also one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826. He provided the minister with details of the agricultural state of Hawick Parish for the 1839 entry in the New Statistical Account. He married Agnes Pirrie (d.1840) in Wilton in 1794; it is suggested that she was born in 1758, but that is surely too early. All their children were baptised in Wilton Parish: Margaret (b.1795), the eldest daughter, who married John Wilson, ‘the Dip’; Adam (b.1797), a medical doctor, who later lived at Goldielands; Agnes (1799–1863); William (b.1801), hosier manufacturer; Helen or Nelly (b.1803); James (b.1805), mathematics and physics professor in Liverpool; and Robert (1807–88) of Leighwood, Dunkeld. Letters of his for the period 1810–37 are in the National Archives. His will in Jedburgh Sheriff Court Records is dated 1849. His portrait is in the Museum, painted by an unknown artist. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is presumably the same as another James. He could be the James recorded as driver in Newcastleton in 1835 or the other James recorded as joiner. James (18th/19th C.) blacksmith, probably in Castleton Parish. He married Janet Robson and their children included James (b.1818/9), who was an agricultural labourer in Newcastleton. His wife secondly married William Cowan, who is recorded with in 1841. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Glendinning and their children included: William (b.1827); John (b.1829); Thomas (b.1832); Adam (b.1834); and Jane (b.1837). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Bella Armstrong and their children included: Betty (b.1826); George (b.1828); and Janet (b.1831). These 3 were all baptised in 1835. His widow, son George and daughter Janet (or ‘Jenny’) were living at about 11 South Liddle Street in 1841. James of Cooms (18th/19th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1822. James (18th/19th C.) listed as shepherd at ‘Waterside, James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Foulshielis in Castleton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–40. James (18th/19th C.) teacher at Hermitage School. He was listed among heads of households in the Parish in 1835–38 and recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 the schoolhouse there was occupied by labourer Robert (and family), who may have been his son. James (b.1783/4) from England, he served with the 2nd Dragoon Guards. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at about 54 High Street with his wife Mary. In 1851 he was a lodger with the Bells on Turk’s Close and recorded as a Chelsea Pensioner. In 1861 he was living with his daughter Agnes and her husband Thomas Crosbie. James (c.1785–1850) farmer at Lymiecleuch in 1841. He may have been son of James, shepherd in Twislehope. He was at Lymiecleuch in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He married Betty Scott (c.1789–1835). Their children included: Elizabeth (1810–35); James (1814–27); Rolland (b.1815), tenant in Mackside; Henry (b.c.1819); Scott (b.1824); Mary (b.c.1826); James (again, 1828–43); William (b.1830); Janet (b.1834) and Walter (b.1835). In 1851 the head of the family was Henry, with the 3700 acre farm held in trust for his siblings Scott, William, Walter, Mary and Janet. James (b.1787/8) agricultural labourer in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was at Roberton Woodfoot and in 1851 was farmer of 6 acres there. In 1861 his wife and 2 sons were living at Riddell Mill. His wife was Jane (b.1800/1) from Teviothead. Their children included: John (b.1797–1866) son of Robert and Wilhelmina Hislop, he was born in Castleton Parish, where most of his children were baptised. He became farmer at Middleholm, near Langholm. He married Helen (1804/5–80), daughter of joiner John Douglas. Their children included: Robert (1824–50), who died in Liverpool; Elizabeth Beattie (1825–94), who married Langholm clogger Thomas Hounam; John (1828–56), who worked as a joiner with his uncle James Douglas; Anne (1830–95); Christian Douglas (1833–89), who married shepherd William Elliot Pringle; Janet Douglas (1835–92), who married forester Adam Inglis; William Douglas (1837–87), who lived in Langholm; James Douglas (1840–1920), who also farmed at Middleholm and late lived in Ewesdale; Walter Douglas (1843–77), bank clerk, who moved to County Durham; and Douglas (1846–1919), bank cashier in Yorkshire. James (b.c.1800) from Newcastle, he was a shoemaker on Havelock Street in Wilton, listed in 1861. His children included Andrew, Elizabeth, Helen, James and William. His children were born in Teviothead and Langholm parishes. James (b.1800/1) from Teviothead Parish, he was shepherd at Wauchope Common. In 1851 he was living at Hawthornside Cottages and listed as a shepherd, and was listed as retired at Wauchope Common in 1861. He married Margaret Scott (from Ettrick), and their children included Adam, Isabella and Mary. James (b.1802/3) born in Minto Parish, probably son of William. He was a farmer and then a grocer, wine and spirit dealer at the Crown Inn in Denholm in the 1860s. He may also have been a joiner in Denholm. In 1837 he married Mary, daughter of farmer Robert Bulman. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his father-in-law, probably at Eastgatehall farm. By 1861 he was on Main Street as a grocer, etc. His children were: Alison (b.1838); Janet (b.1840), perhaps also known as Jessie; Elizabeth Simpson (‘Eliza’, b.1840), probably twin of Janet; William (b.1845); and Mary Ann (b.1850). James (b.1803/4-80) son of John and Jean Scott, he was tenant farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish and later at Westwater. By 1851 he was ‘Farmer not now tenant but residing’ at Flatt. He was succeeded in the tenancy of Flatt by his nephew John. He married Margaret Little (c.1818–83) in 1847 and their children included: John (1848–66); William (1849–97), also tenant in Westwater; Thomas Scott (1850–1906), who died at Salkend; Jane Scott (1851–1928); James Main (1855–1917); George Thompson (1855–1921), who died at Twickenham; and Henry (1864–1913), an engineer, who died in Barcelona. James (b.c.1805) labourer in Hobkirk Parish. In 1841 he was living at Langburnshiel. He married Margaret Scott in 1838. Their children included: Janet (b.1838); Isabella (b.1845); and Mary (b.1850), born in Kirkton Parish. James (b.1862) may also have been their son. James of Goldielands (b.1805) son of the earlier James, who was teacher at Wilton. Later in life he was also referred to as ‘Professor Elliot’, while his brother Adam was called ‘Dr. Elliot, Goldielands’. In 1841 he was listed as a teacher, living with his father at Goldielands. In 1851 he was a teacher of mathematics, lodging in Duke Street in Edinburgh. He contributed talks to the Archaeological Society (e.g. on local birds in 1876), and he described the geology of Upper Teviotdale for the Edinburgh Geological Society in 1870 and the Hawick district for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club in 1873. In 1880 he gave the land of the former bowling green off Bourtree Place to the Baptist congregation. He is probably the James who was Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy at Queen’s College in Liverpool. He wrote ‘An Elementary Course of Practical Mathematics’ (1850), which ran to several editions, ‘Moses and Modern Science’, as well as several other books. In 1857 he was described as ‘late of Edinburgh, now of Queen’s College, Liverpool’. In 1879 he wrote to the Spectator about the extraordinary mental arithmetic powers of his friend (and fellow student at Edinburgh) George Bidder. Adam who wrote to Charles Darwin from Liverpool in 1872 (about the possible offspring of a woman and an ape) may have been his son. James (1807–41) eldest son of James the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee and brother of Walter, 4th Laird. He was a Lieutenant in the 5th Madras Native Infantry and died in Nellore (south-eastern India). He had a twin, Robert, who died in 1896. James (b.1807/8) from England, he was a farmer in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living in North Hermitage Street and farming 4 acres. His wife was Helen and their children included William, Isabel, John, James, Mary, Esther, Jane and Rubina. James (b.1812/3) from Langholm, he was an agricultural labourer living in Castleton Parish. He could be the ‘driver’ at ‘Wheathaugh’ recorded as a head of household in Castleton for the first time in 1837. In 1851 he was residing at Whithaughburn and in 1861 at Whithaugh Cottages (probably the same place). He married Sophia Miller (b.c.1814) from Eskdalemuir. Their children included: George (b.c.1839); Archibald (b.c.1841); Thomas (b.c.1845); Andrew (b.c.1846); Euphemia (b.c.1848); Isabella (b.1849); John (b.1851); and William (b.1854). James (b.1812/3–90) born in Northumberland, son of Robert of Hermitage, who farmed at Moraylee and Haydon Bridge. His mother was Mary Scott from Skelhill. He farmed at Galalaw. In 1851 and 1861 he was farming 250 acres there, and employing 12 people. At the same time Robert Turnbull farmed the other part of Galalaw. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1853. James (1814–80) son of shepherd James and Janet Grieve. He was recorded as a shepherd at Broadhaugh in Teviothead Parish in 1851 and was a labourer living at Lochburnfoot in 1861. He married Mary Nichol (1818–901), who died in Hawick. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1841); Margaret (b.1845), who married John Young; and Eliza (b.1847), who married James Inglis. He died at Northhouse. James (b.1818/9) agricultural labourer in Newcastleton, son of blacksmith James and Janet Robson. In 1861 he was living at about 13 South Liddel Street. In Castleton in 1847 he married Ann (or Annie), daughter of Matthew Elliot and Dorothy Purdom. Their children (some of whom were born in Northumberland) included: Janet (b.1847); James (b.1849); Matthew (b.1849); Dorothy (b.1852); Isabella; Thomas; and William. He could be the labourer James who was visiting farmer Henry at Gatehousecote at the time of the 1851 census. James (b.1819/20) born at Wolfcleuchhead, he was a coal carter. In 1851 he was visiting William Mercer in Galashiels. James (b.1825/6) born at Hayeknowe, son of Thomas and Margaret Hume. He was a grocer at 2 Buccleuch Street. In 1861 he was listed as a grocer at 7 Sandbed, with his brother Thomas and George also in his house. He married Jane Peddie Ewen in 1861. Their children included: Thomas; Jane Ewen; and James Oliver. James (1830–77) son of John. He was inn-keeper of the Grapes Hotel in Liddesdale in the 1860s and 1870s and died there. James Thomas Spencer 5th Laird of Wolfelee (1845–92) eldest son of Sir Walter. He was born in Madras and educated at Harrow. Poor eyesight hampered some of his career prospects (and he also apparently became quite hefty in later life). He spent about 7 years in Argentina, returning in 1872, and living at Wolfelee. He became involved in local and national politics and stood as Conservative candidate for the Hawick Burghs in 1880, and was defeated by Sir George Trevelyan. He then bought some land in Manitoba, but did not live there for long. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1880. He also acted as Convenor of West Teviotdale for the Highland and Agricultural Society and was invited to be a wool judge when the Agricultural Show came to Hawick in 1914. In 1895 he gained the farms of Meikle and Little Whitlaw from the Scotts of Borthwicke, exchanging them for Fenwick. He was still alive in 1919 when there was a gathering of the Flex photographed. In 1892 he married Isabella Douglas Amos (d.1945), daughter of James Amos. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. He left a sum of £500, the interest to be run for as prize money in the Flex Stakes each year at the Common Riding. James (b.1873) son of Francis, he was born at Parkhill-haugh in Robertson Parish, where his father was a stone dyker. He was educated at Robert School and was an apprentice blacksmith with William Pow at Borthwickbraeburnfoot. He came to Bonchester Bridge as a journeyman blacksmith with Thomas Rutherford, then went to Edinburgh and worked with Mackenzie Brothers there for 8 years. He joined the 4th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots in Edinburgh in 1896. He returned to Bonchester Bridge to take over as blacksmith from the Rutherford in about 1902. He was Superintendent of Range for Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905 and then Secretary. In 1899 he was married in Edinburgh. Jane see Jean. Jane (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Miss Jane, Burgrains’ in 1821 when subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. She could be the Jean (b.1781), daughter of James, who died at Burgrains. Janet (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. Janet (19th C.) listed as grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Slater’s 1852 directory. She could be the ‘Jeannie’ listed in the 1851 census as mother of grocer James Edgar, probably at 28 Langholm Street. Jean nee Rutherford (d. bef. 1621) daughter of Jean and granddaughter of Gavin of Stobs. She inherited Stobs in 1607, along with her aunts Dorothy and Esther. She married William, brother of Robert Elliot, 17th of Redheugh, and they had 3 children: Robert; Francis; and James. Her husband was successively called ‘of Hartsgarth’, ‘of Rig’ and ‘of Hartshaugh’. Jean (17th C.) listed as resident of Redheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. There were John Eliots listed before and after her, and so she was presumably related to at least one of them. Jean (1709/10–74) daughter of William, Laird of Harwood. In 1731 she married William Elliot of Black Tarras, also called ‘of Ludgell’. The marriage contract is signed by Thomas Scott of Todrig, Charles Scott (brother of the Laird of Gorrenberry), Thomas Scott of Stonedge, George Scott (brother of the Laird of Newton), John Scott of Weens, Henry Elliot (both elder and younger, in Deadwater), Robert and William Elliot (sons of John Elliot in Larriston), Henry Elliot (son of William of Harwood) and Robert Kerr (son of the deceased Andrew Kerr in Roughleenoook). Many of these men were her close or distant relatives. Their oldest son was William, tenant of ‘Dinlie’ (presumably Dinlees), Jean (1727–1805) born at Minto, 3rd daughter of Sir Gilbert, 1st Earl of Minto. In her teens she entertained a group of Jacobites under John Goodwillie at Minto House, while her father (a staunch anti-Jacobite) hid among the crags. She is also known as the writer of a popular version of ‘Flowers of the Forest’. This was published anonymously in 1776. It was written in response to a bet by her brother Gilbert (later 3rd Baronet) that she would be unable to produce a good ballad on the subject of Flodden. She must have based her version on parts of a traditional ballad, but nevertheless her interpretation quickly became popular. And although she declined to claim credit for it, she was locally referred to as ‘the Flower’. Some of her other verse is published in ‘The Border Eliots and the Family of Minto’ (1897). She played a strong role in sorting out her father’s affairs after his death in 1766. She later moved to Edinburgh, where she was described as ‘a prodigious fund of Scottish anecdote’, but also that she ‘did not appear to have ever been handsome’. She was said to be elegant, fashionable and intelligent, with a liking for French literature. However, she was also said to be the last lady in Edinburgh to use a sedan chair. Returning to Teviotdale in her last year, she died, unmarried, at her brother’s house at Monteviot. A portrait of her as an elderly woman was painted by an unknown artist (also sometimes ‘Jane’). Jean ‘Lucie Lass’ or ‘Jeanie Luce’ (b. 1788/9) postmistress in Newcastleton. She was described as ‘a crazy female who could neither read nor write’, and it later seemed unthinkable that she would ever be entrusted with the mail. She would be dressed in ‘a drudden petticoat reaching a little below the knee, a man’s coat and shepherd’s plaid, with her feet and legs encased in a pair of Wellington boots’ and in later years had a weather-beaten face, piercing eyes, shaggy eyebrows and an uncovered head. She was said to be treated well by residents of Lid-desdale because she was related to some of the better families in the area, and also because she was such a gossip. She was succeeded as postmaster by Jamie Nichol. She may be the pauper living with carrier Thomas Turnbull’s family at about 1 Whitchester Street in 1841. In 1851 she was listed as ‘Parish Relief once District Post’ on Douglas Square. She could be the pauper living with the Beattie family in 1861. It is unclear what her nickname meant. Jean (b.c.1910) originally from Jedburgh, she also lived in Hawick and later in Stirling. In 1984 she published ‘Musings of a Border Grandmother’. Jesse (b.c.1775) from Midlem, he was educated in Ancrum, Jedburgh and Berwick. He was schoolmaster in Ashkirk from 1799 until the 1840s. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He married Margaret Smith. In the 1841 census he is listed at Ashkirk Schoolhouse with his wife Margaret, along with Robert and John, who were probably grandchildren. His children included: James (b.1799); Andrew (b.1800); Charles (b.1803); Margaret (b.1805); John MacKenzie (b.1807); Gilbert (b.1809), a millwright in Hawick; and Robert (b.1815). Jean (18th C.) recorded at Unthank in Ewesdale on the 1787 and 1788 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how she was related to other Eliots. Jean (1792–1864) known popularly as ‘Jean Luce’, she acted as postal carrier in Newcastleton, particularly to Hermitage Water. In 1851 she is recorded as a receiver of Parish Relief, living on Douglas Square.

She could be the grocer Janet recorded in Newcastle in 1852. She was said to have been reminiscent of Madge Wildfire from Walter Scott’s ‘Heart of Midlothian’. A local charcter, she never wore headgear or stockings, kept her hair cropped short, used a shepherd’s plaid for warmth and liked her whisky. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johannes de Elauand’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He complained that one of his neighbours tried to strangle him. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannis Elwald’ in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots, and it is even possible he was the clan leader at the time. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannis Elwald in the Exchequer Rolls of 1459 for the Lincluden area when his fine was compounded. Probably a different ‘Johannis Elwald de Daunduran’ is also listed. John (15th C.) listed along with James, Laurence and Simon Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles, in 1482/3. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as ‘Jak elwald’, he lived at Newton of Caverton. He had remission for several thefts: cattle from John Waddell from ‘diburn’; sheep from John Lamb in Wilton; a horse from Wilton; and sheep from William Martin in Whitchester. He also committed common theft before the time of his previous remission. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. John (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1488 sasine in which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh leased the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne. He is recorded there as ‘John Elwalde of Thorleshope’ and his brother Patrick is also mentioned as a witness. In 1494/5 he was listed being ‘in thornlawiship’ among a list of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. Presumably the same man is recorded as ‘John Elwald in Thorleshope’ in 1498 in a document listing many Liddesdale men who pledged themselves to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell for good behaviour. He must have been a close ancestor of Roland, Robert (or ‘Hob’ or ‘Robin’) and the later John of Thorleshope. He may be the John who was one of the Elliots who witnessed a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh in 1497. John (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who did not appear before the court in Jedburgh in 1494/5. His name was given as ‘Johannis elwald lawson’, with the last part presumably being a nickname. It is possible he is the ‘Law’s John’ recorded 40 years later. John (15th C.) listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was son of ‘wrycrag’, but it is unclear how to interpret this nickname, or who his father may have been. John (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Johne Elwald in Sondhope’ in a respite of the Register of the Privy Seal of 1510 given to Robert of Redheugh and several others in Liddesdale. Since only a few Elliots are mentioned, it seems likely that he was a close relative of the chief. He is also listed along with William of Larriston and a number of other Liddesdale Elliots in another respite of 1516. He is recorded there as ‘John Elwald in Sandop’. He was probably tenant of the lands of Sandhope, near Whitrope. John ‘Gret Johnnie’ (16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. In about 1510 he and Patrick were entered by Robert of Redheugh at a Justice Court in Jedburgh. John ‘Law’s John’ (16th C.) listed as one of the band of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on the farm at Craik. His name is given as ‘John Elwald, called Lawis-John’e; it is possible that his father was a Lawrence. He may have been a servant of Thomas of Mangerton, along with William, son of Alexander ‘Elwald’, who is also listed. It is possible he is the same man as (or otherwise related to) ‘Law’s Jock’ mentioned in the 1570s. He could alternatively be the ‘lawson’ recorded in 1494/5. John ‘Jock Unhappy’ (d.1536) recorded as ‘John Elwald, alias Jok Unhappy’ when he was convicted of theft etc., and hanged. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Joanni Elwald’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He and his brothers were the tenants of ‘Catlie’ (probably ‘Gatliehill’). John of the Hill (16th C.) recorded as ‘Joanni de lie Hill’ in 1541 on the rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants of ‘Streichelhope’. He may be related to Archie of the Hill, recorded around the 1580s and others with the same designation. John (16th C.) tenant of Ramsiegill in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. Other men recorded as being ‘in Ramsiegill’ (but tenants of other farms) were Robert and William. He may also be the John who was a tenant in Stirkshielhope (along with other Elliots associated with Ramsiegill); his son ‘Jacobo Elwald’ called ‘Nelis Jok’ was also named (but may be a confusion). He was perhaps related to the earlier Hob and later Gavin of Ramsiegill. John of Thorleshope (16th C.) son of Robert (or ‘Robin’). Along with others he was entered in a bond to John Kerr of Ferniehirst by James Douglas of Cavers in 1546. He was there recorded as ‘John Elwand’. There are other similar bonds involving Robert of Redheugh and him in 1547 and 1548. It is unclear what crimes he was accused of. He may be son of the ‘Rolland Elwald in Thorsleshop’ recorded in 1516 and may be related to the John of Thorlshipeshe recorded in 1583. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of ‘Lyndene’ in the Barony of Bowden, along with other ‘Elwalds’. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. His name appears as ‘Johnne Ilwand’ and he was probably related to Alison and Margaret, who are also listed. John (16th C.) recorded as son to ‘Hob Quhytserk’ in 1546 when he was one of the men to be entered as prisoners with John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was recorded as son of ‘Quyhtsork’ in 1548 when there was a further a bond of Robert of Redheugh with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst for him and John of Thorlshipeshe to be ‘entered’. He was probably another Liddesdale Elliot. John ‘Nelly’s John’ (16th C.) recorded in 1548 when, along with Robert of Redheugh and Richard of the Park, he had a bond to enter 2 prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst. He is recorded as ‘Jhone Elliott, callit Nelleis Jhone’. He is probably the same man as ‘Neillis Jok’ (although listed as ‘Jacobo Elwald’, i.e. James rather than John) recorded in 1541 among the tenants in Stirkshielpeshe; he appears to have been son of another John, with his mother presumably being Helen. John ‘Jock o the Park’ or ‘Little Jock Elliot’ (d.bef. 1578) son of Simon of the Park. He was a notorious riever, and subject of a traditional ballad. His tower may have been located where Newcastleton railway station was later built. He is recorded purchasing (or perhaps leasing) Hangingside (i.e. the land later known as Hawthorn-side) in 1562, confirmed in 1572/3. In October 1566 he was pursued by the Earl of Bothwell, after failing to appear at Hermitage along with the other Elliot leaders. Since he refused to stop, Bothwell shot him and they then fought at close quarters. He apparently struck Bothwell 3 times, while himself being stabbed twice in the chest, and collapsed about a mile away. It is said that he died of his wounds (although this is not clear, since it seems that the same man is documented later) and traditionally this is said to have happened on the Billhope Burn. Meanwhile Bothwell was taken back to Hermitage where he eventually recovered, after being visited by Mary Queen of Scots. In 1569 he was pledge for ‘the hail branche of the Park’, with William Ker of Cessford, younger, as his surety. In 1569 he was held in Balwareie Castle, as pledge for ‘Gray Will Elliot’ and ‘Hob Mirk Elliot’, who were surely close relatives. In 1570 he signed a bond along with other Elliots, giving pledges for Hob, son of Elder Will and John of Heuchhouse. There was surety for him in 1573, before the Privy Council. He may be the same ‘Johnne of the Park’ listed among Monipennie’s Border chiefs, published about 1594 (but probably compiled earlier). He was ‘unquhile Johnne Elliot of the Park’ when it was reported that he had previously acted as joint surety for Simmie Elliot of the Park; he also served as surety for 2 other Elliots. Unless he lived to be quite old he is unlikely to be the same John of the Park recorded in the 1580s – ‘They leave not spindle, spune nor spitt, Bed, bolster, blanket, sark nor silet, John o’ the Park, Rypes kist and ark, For a’ sic wark, He is richt meet’ [SRM], ‘Wha daur meddle i’ me? Wha daur meddle wi’ me? Oh, ma name it’s we Jock Elliot, An’ wha daur meddle i’ me?’ [T]. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Jok Elliot’. John (16th C.) tenant of Fiddleton. He is recorded in 1569, along with Hob ‘the Lady’ and Hob of Unthank, when ‘Will Elliot callit the Lord’ when held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for them. He may be related to the later John in Fiddleton. John ‘Law’s Jock’ (16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. He is recorded in 1574 as ‘Jok Elliot callit Lawis Jok in Priesthauch’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. ‘Lawis Thome’ and ‘Lawis Richie’ were also named and presumably brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Probably the same ‘Jokke Elliot in Priesthauch’ is listed in 1569 among the tenants that Gavin Elliott in Skellhill was surety for. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Lawis-Johne’ recorded in 1535. John (16th C.) described as John ‘Elwood’, brother of Will of the Steel in 1576 when the English Wardens complained to the Deputy Warden for West Teviotdale that he had stolen 100 sheep from Hexhamshire. He could be the same as John ‘of the Steill’ who was taken prisoner by Johnstone of that Ilk in 1572, with Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braudlie entering into a bond with Johnstone for his return to Johnstone after they had ‘borrowit’ him. He could be the recorded John of the Steele (unless this was an error for Will of the Steele) recorded in 1590 as first in a list of Elliots of the Park and Binks, and others, accused of a raid into England. John ‘Scot’s Hob’s Jock’, ‘Rob’s John’ (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given ‘Jok Elliott, callit Scottis Hobbis Jok’, and hence he was presumably son of ‘Scot’s Hob’. In 1581 he was part of a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale; ‘Scot’s Hob’s Gavin’ was also listed and presumably his brother. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the ‘haille gang of Park’. He was listed in 1582/3 as one of the cautioners for Sim’s Rowie of the Park. He is recorded as ‘Johne Elliot, called Robeis Johnne’, and his name appears with Sim’s Archie, Jamie’s Hob and others. His name comes second (after Airchie of the Park) among those giving assurance for the Elliots of Park in the 1584 bond signed with the English Wardens at Hermitage; there he is ‘Scotts Hobbs Jock of the Parke’. He was recorded as ‘Scots Hobs’ Jocke’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His father was presumably Robert and his grandfather either a Scott or nicknamed ‘Scot’; However, it is otherwise unclear who he was and how he may have been related to the earlier Jock o the Park.

John of Bowholm (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne Elliot of Bewholmis’ among cautioners for men accused of crimes against Englishmen in 1579/80. He was recorded as ‘John Elliott of Bohomes’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His father was presumably Robert and his grandfather either a Scott or nicknamed ‘Scot’; However, it is otherwise unclear who he was and how he may have been related to the earlier Jock o the Park. in Hawick to give surety for his tenants, and he may have been related to Will, Dand and Hob, other Elliots who were also listed as tenants. He is recorded in 1574 among Scotsmen who were reset in England, where he was ‘Gawynnis Jok’ (making it clear that his father was Gavin); his brother ‘Hobbe’ was also mentioned. In 1576 there was a complaint that Neil Montgomery of Langshaw had allowed him to break from ward. In 1581 he was listed along with Martin of Braiddlie and Robert Kerr of Ancrum when they were cautioned for the non-appearance of Jock’s Willie and ‘Ill Hob’, both from Ramsiegill, who were possibly his sons; they were fined in 1582/3. In 1581 the notary signed for him because he could not write himself. He was listed in 1583 as ‘Joke of Ramsgill’ in a letter from the English wardens, where he was the first man listed under the Elliots of Burnhead. He was probably related to the Jock of Ramsiegill recorded in 1612, as well as to other Elliots of Ramsiegill and Burnhead. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Gawins Jok’ under the heading ‘Burnhead’ in Monipen’s list of Border chiefs (published around 1594, but probably compiled earlier). John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johnne Ellot, callit of the Dewisleis’ in 1578/9, when it was stated to the Privy Council that he was previously meant to have been placed into ward, but in fact had not been. This was along with Andrew ‘callit the Wowaris Andro’, with sureties John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk and William Scott of Montbenger. He was probably from Eweslees. Probably the same John was recorded as being ‘of the Dewhowses’ in Ewesdale, along with Ringan, when they signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. John ‘Jock’ of the Hill (16th C.) recorded in 1583 in a list of Elliots of the Burnhead branch. He was surely related to Archie of the Hill, who is also listed. Probably the same ‘Jocke Elwood’ was ‘brothers somne’ to Archie of the Hill in 1591 when they were accused of plundering from Jeffrey Tailor and the tenants of Scaleby. He is probably the Jock listed along with Mark and James of the Hill among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. Possibly the same ‘Johnne Ellot of the Hill’ acted as cautioner in 1611 for John of Heuchhouse to appear in court at Jedburgh. John of Burnhead (16th C.) named in 1590 along with ‘Gib Elliott, son to Robin’, 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall in the previous year. He was recorded as ‘called the lard of Burnheheades’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Elliots associated with Burnhead. John ‘Half Lug’ (16th C.) listed among the Elliots of Burnhead in 1583, where his name is given as ‘Joke Ellot called Halfe loges’. Probably the same John was ‘half lug’ in 1590, when accused with several other Elliots of leading a raid on ‘Windgates’ in England. He may be the ‘Wyll Ellotts John of Burnheads’ recorded in 1595 among Scotsmen accused of raiding into England. He was ‘Jok Elliott of Burneheid, called Halfe Lug’ when listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in 1605. John ‘Jock’ of Torlhisheope (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the Elliots of the Braiddlie branch, his name appearing as ‘John Elliott of Thornesope’. He may be the same as the John of Torlhisheope recorded 4 decades earlier, but is more likely to be his son. Probably the same John was recorded in 1569 when Martin of Braiddlie and Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton promised to enter him in ward if requested by the Lord Regent. Probably the same John was pledge in 1569 for ‘the haill branche of the Thorlishoip (except Hob of the Shaws and his brother Will of the Steele), with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule as his surety. He was also ‘of Torlhisheope’ when held in Wester Wemyss in 1569 as pledge for Hob of the Shaws and Archie ‘Fyre the Brais’. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Hobbis Jok’ in 1581 when he was among those cautioned for the non-appearance of ‘Symis Rowie’ of the Park. Others listed were Rob’s John (unless this was an error and the same man), Sim’s Archie and Jamie’s Hob, who may have been related to him; they were fined in 1582/3. He was also referred to as ‘Johnne Ellot, called Roweis Johnne’. John ‘Sim’s John’ of the Park (16th C.) presumably son of Simon, and probably related to ‘Jock o the Park’ from a couple of decades earlier. He is probably the John of the Park for whom surety was recorded in 1573. He was to be warded with Sir William Scott of Balwearie, but was interchanged with Hob, son of the deceased James of the Park; the cautioners were Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, Andrew Ker of Faldonside and Walter Riddell of that Ilk. He may be the ‘Johnne Ellot of the Park’ listed in 1580 among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. An English list of 1583 has him first among the Elliots of Park, giving his name as ‘Sims John Elliott of the Parke’; others named (to whom he was probably closely related) are ‘Grey Willie’, ‘Scots Hobbie’, Jamie of the Park, ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’ and ‘Hob’s Hobbie’. Also in 1583 he was ‘John Elwet of the

Park’ when the Halls of ‘Haveracres’ complained that he had led about 100 men in a raid that resulted in the deaths of 4 Halls. He may be the John of the Park, recorded in 1590 along with Gabriel, as well as Elliots of the Steele, Thoreshopes and others, who were accused of raiding into England. ‘He must have been related to ‘Rowie’ or ‘Robin’ of the Park, recorded in 1578 and 1581 and ‘young Archie of the Park’ who was one of the Elliots to sign a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599 John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire as being ‘Jok Ellat in Bowgranis’. This was probably somewhere near Langholm, but could be same as Burngrains. John of Copshaw (16th/17th C.) probably a son of Robert of Redheugh, his brothers being Robert, the 14th Chief, possibly Martin of Braidlie and Archibald of Falnash. In 1561/2 he was among Elliots who had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch, with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst to enter Thomas Routledge; the others were Archie of Falnash, Archie’s son Gavin and ‘Elder Will’. In 1568 he led a party of Elliots, Armstrongs and others, which burned the house at Torwoodlee, killing George Pringle there. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh; his brother Tom was also listed. Also in 1580 he said to have joined the group of Elliots and Armstrongs that raided the farm of Slaidhills, stealing cattle and leaving a servant for dead. He was also in the party that attacked some Elliots, Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in Liddesdale in 1580, killing Walter Gledstains. He was listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes, contrary to the bond between them. He may be the ‘Jock of Copshawe’ (surname not given) who was among a group of men accused in 1582 of taking part on a raid into England in which Martin Taylor and 3 others were killed. He is probably ‘Joke Ellot called Copshawe’ listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. In 1584 the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, lists him among the ‘principalis of the branchis of Liddisdall’. He is also mentioned in 1588 (although this could have been his son) when Nichol Cairncross was surety for his brother Hob, who was in the Tolbooth. He may be the ‘John of Copshawes’ whose tower, somewhere near Saughtree, was marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. He was named by an English informed as part of the group that raided Carlisle Castle to free ‘Kimmont Willie’ (although he is likely to have been too old to take part himself, and so this may have been a son). In 1594/5 he was named in an indenture between the Scottish and English Wardens. He is probably one of the 3 Johns who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In an English letter of 1596 it is stated that he had built a tower at ‘Blackstone lee’ (which was probably near Mangerton, or may simply have been a misunderstanding for Copshaw). He was one of the trustees for the young Robert (17th) of Redheugh appointed in about 1597. In that year he wrote (along with Robert of Redheugh and William of Hartsgarth) from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen. In 1599 he was ‘Jock Elliot of Copschaw’ among Elliots who signed a bond at Branhxolme with the Warden of the West March regarding the inhabitants of Liddesdale; he did this with his hand on the notary’s pen ‘because I can nocht wryte my selff’. In 1605 he was accused, along with his son Robert (and servant John Routledge and Adam ‘Rakese’), of attacking Wauchope (in Rulewater) with 100 men, stealing cows, sheep, etc., but was acquitted. He was found guilty of the murder of Pringle in 1607 and denounced as a rebel when he did not appear; if this is the same man, then he must have been quite old by then. John ‘Rowie’s John’ (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as part of a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale. Several other Elliots were listed, including Jock and Gavin, sons of ‘Scot’s Hob’. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the ‘haill gang of Park’. He was also listed among the Elliots of the Park who signed for their whole band in the 1584 assurance given to the English Wardens. His name is given there as ‘Roweis John of the Parke’. His father was presumably Roland. John ‘Jock o the Lies’ (16th C.) one of a group of Elliots who signed a bond for ‘Willie’s Hob’ in 1587. It is unclear where his seat was, but presumably in Liddesdale. He may have been closely related to the Elliots of Ramsiegill and of ‘the Hill’. He was probably related to ‘Ade Elwald de Leyis’ who is recorded in 1541. John (16th C.) brother of ‘Willie’s Hob’, he was part of the bond for his brother, made to William Douglas of Lochleven and his son James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose in 1587. His father was probably William. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johnne Elliot, sone to umquhile Ringane the Portar, or Blasteis Jok’ in 1578/9, when John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him (and others) not to raid into England. He was also ‘John the Portars sonne’ among Elliots of Ewesdale in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border chiefs. He may have been son of Ninian ‘the Porter’ from Ewes Doors. John ‘Lang Jock’ (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding 2 separate raids in 1588. He was also recorded in 1590 as ‘longe Jocke Elliot’ when, along with relatives of Martin of Braidlie and others was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Probably the same man was ‘longe John Elliot’, accused in 1590 along with elder Will of the Steele, Archie and Martin’s Gib ‘the cousin’ of stealing from the tenants of ‘Grenirridge’. He is also ‘longe John’ listed among Elliots and Armstronngs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh. He was also named in 1590 on a list of Elliots, Nixons and others who were accused of being on a raid into England in 1588. His nickname presumably means he was tall. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Cowshawes’ in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons when there was a complaint from the English side of the Border that in 1588 they had stolen in ‘playne dayelight, thir hirdes’ and 24 head of cattle. He may be related to Will ‘called Cowsauche’, who was a fugitive in 1605. John ‘Cull the Spade’ (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons who were accused of going on a raid into England in 1588. He is listed separately from John ‘Cowshawes’, along with Gavin’s Hob, who may have been close relatives. John ‘the Child’ (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransomning them. It is unclear what his nickname referred to, or whether he is the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) listed among Elliots and others who were accused in 1590 of taking horses and prisoners on a raid into England. He is recorded being ‘of the Hillend, but separately from Mark of the Hill (making it seem that he was not directly related to that branch), and just before Elliots of Ewesdale. John ‘Jock’ of Burngrains (d.bef. 1608) probably from the lands near Meikledale, in Ewesdale. In 1606 his sons Hob and Will were listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘vngle Johnne Ellote of Burnegranes’ and also ‘Jok of Burgranes’ in 1608 when his son William (or possibly Ninian, since the records are confusing) was sentenced to hanging for resisting the King’s Guard. He may have been related to Adam of Meikledale, who also held Burngrains later in the 17th century. John (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie, referred to as ‘Martin’s John of Burnmouth’. He was probably the son of Martin recorded in 1590 along with his brother Airchie, as well as ‘Martin’s Gib’ and Martin of Prickinghaugh, when they were accused of stealing from Englishman Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall. He was probably the John, son of Martin, recorded on a 1590 list of Elliots (including his brother Airchie and cousin Dand), Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. He is probably also the John listed among Elliots (including his brother Gib, as well as Airchie of Clintoode, who was also his brother) and Armstronngs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He was probably the John, son of Martin, who (along with his brother Gib) was part of a complaint about a raid into Gilsland in 1596, led by Sir Walter Scott of Harden. He was denounced as a rebel in 1611 and his lands and goods forfeited to Thomas Cranston. It is possible that he was the ‘Johnne Elwode in Barmonth’ listed in 1612 among those who supported Sir William Cranston in his commission to keep peace on the Border. John (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was son of Will of Fiddleton and listed along with his father and brother Ringan. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) listed among fugitives who did not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was son of ‘Heidheid’, but it is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 as son of ‘Wower’s Andro’. He was listed as a fugitive among Liddesdale and Eskdale men not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Hawick. It is unclear who his father might have been. John ‘Jock’, ‘the Murt’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was also referred to in 1611 when ‘Robert Ellot, called Martenis Hob’ was cautioner for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. However, he was acquitted of the charges. It is unclear what his nickname meant, but he may have been related to Will in Burnhead, called ‘Murt’. John ‘Jock’, ‘Blackheid’ (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Jok Elliot, called Blakheid’. His nickname was presumably to distinguish him from other contemporary Johns. He was perhaps related to Archibald and William, who also had the same nickname. John ‘Reid Jock’ (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. John (16th/17th C.) son of Archie of Foulish. In 1611 John Ainslie, Burgess of Jedburgh was cautioner for him to appear in court at Jedburgh; however, he was acquitted of the charges. John of Heuchhouse (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611 when John of the Hill acted as cautioner for him to appear in court at Jedburgh. He was acquitted of the charges. He is surely related to the John of Heuchhouse recorded 30 years earlier. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) referred to in 1612 as ‘in Braidlie’. He was on the jury for the trial of Hawick Bailies and others over the death of John Elliot ‘in Redden’ while in custody. He may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John ‘Jock of Rynsiegill’ (16th/17th C.) from Ridden in Liddesdale, the designation is probably the same as ‘Ramsiegill’. He was a thief who was caught plundering from a Hawick Burgess in 1612, and imprisoned in the church steeple. He then apparently committed suicide, and his widow Bessie ‘with the ffyve fatherless bairns’ brought an action against the Bailies. However, it was proved by witnesses that ‘he was fund lyeing deid . . . hangit himself in his aune belt’. He was recorded in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’ as ‘Johme Ellote in Redden, callit Johme of Rynsiegill’. John of Arkleton (d.bef. 1622) 2nd son of William of Falnash and brother of Robert of Falnash (who was Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire). He was also referred to as ‘of Falnash’. In 1615 he witnessed a sasine of Kirkton by William of Falnash. In 1616 he was also a William Scott ‘the Gyde’); he is probably related to the earlier ‘Jok the Gyde’. John (17th C.) recorded in 1642 as ‘Jock Elliot called Jock a gods name’ on a long list of Borderers to be apprehended and tried for various crimes. It is unclear what his peculiar nickname meant. His lands were probably around Liddesdale. John (17th C.) 3rd son of Robert of Falnash. Before 1644 he married Grizel Elliot, heiress of Philhope, who had been ward of his father since her own father had died. In 1644 Philhope was sold to Archibald Elliot and Elizabeth Chisholme. He started as a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1636, but the entry is deleted 2 years later, presumably meaning that he had changes in his circumstances. This may have been the time of his marriage, when he took over running Philhope. He was probably the John, ‘Falnashes brother’, recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Hawick Parish in 1663, paying £216 for Broadlee. John (17th C.) described as a ‘wag’, i.e. soldier, in Hawick in 1642 when he is listed among a large number of people accused of theft (probably wrongly). His son James was also mentioned there. John (17th C.) described as ‘in Whitscheill’ in 1665 when he was named as a debtor of William Elliot of Binks, along with many other Elliots. John (17th C.) said to have been an illegitimate son of the first Gavin of Brugh, he was hanged for theft at Hexham. However, these generations are quite confused. John (d.1679) from Southdean Parish. He is recorded as one of the men banished to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and dying at Moul Head of Deerness, in Orkney, when their ship wrecked and they were ordered shut up beneath the hatches. John (d.c.1685) tenant in Hyndhope (although it is not clear which one). His will is recorded in 1685. John of Thorleshope (1621–98) son of Adam of Meikledale. In 1657 his father purchased for him the lands of ‘Is-gill’ (or Elfgill), ‘Midgehop’ (or Midgeholm) and Newgibbing, retaining the liferent for himself. In 1671 he was ‘indweller in Hudshouse’ and already possessed Thorleshope. He purchased Larriston

Rig and Hopehead and in 1675 he gave a ‘wadsett’ for Robert Elliot of Larriston’s lands of Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope and ‘Greenhollis’. He paid tax on £520 in Castleton Parish in 1678. He probably had the house at Thorlshope rebuilt in 1682 (since there is a stone there bearing that date). In 1690 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1697 he (along with his 3rd son John) purchased another wadsett on the lands of Larriston Rig and Hopehead. He was a Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire in 1690. It is said that he was conspicuous among the band of local minor Lairds who engaged in smuggling cattle across the Border during the time when such trade was illegal. He was a cautioner for a bond by Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692, and also witnessed the bond between Harwood and Bwisle in 1692. He was recorded at the Castleton Kirk Session in 1698. He married Jean Elliot of Dinlabyre before 1671. In 1677 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Thomas McDougall of Stodrig. He had 10 children: William of Thorlshope and Ove, who was also Commissioner of Supply and married Christian Ainslie; Henry of Lodgell (1672–1714), who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill; John of the Binks (1674–1751), who married Christian, daughter of Robert Elliot, factor to the Duke of Buccleuch; Andrew, who died unmarried; Margaret, who married Sim Elliot of Lodgell; Janet, who married William Elliot in Penchrise; Helen, who married John Elliot of Cooms (or perhaps William of Cooms); Jean, who married Thomas Armstrong of Sorbie; Christian, who married John, brother of Elliot of Dinlabyre; and Elizabeth, who married Edward Elliot. He is buried at the Nether Kirk of the Ewes. John (17th C.) described as ‘sometimes in Dinlbeir now in Hudshouse’ in 1665 and 1668, when he was named as a creditor for the estate of William Elliot of Binks, who was his father-in-law. In 1662 he was also one of the witnesses to the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks, described as his father-in-law. John of Brugh (1627–1705) eldest son of Archibald of Brugh. He farmed and lived at Nether Southfield. He was recorded as tenant there in at least the period 1690–98, however, he was already at Southfield when his daughter Beatrix was baptised in 1654. In 1665 he borrowed money, with his brothers Gavin and Gilbert as guarantors. In 1667 he was on the panel for William of Dinlabyre being served heir to his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. He is probably the John recorded at Nether Southfield in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths there. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat and both he and Gilbert (his son) witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for William Scott (from Wilton Parish). In 1701 he was witness to the birth of the twin daughters of his son Gilbert. In 1702 he helped arrange the settlement for his grand-daughter Eleanor when she married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1702 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Robert Scott in Goldielands, for merchant Thomas ‘Hotson’ and another along with his brother Gilbert. In 1704 he and his son Gilbert witnessed a baptism for William Hood in Newbigging. He married Margaret (1630–1706), daughter of Robert Johnstone, who was said to be Minister of Ancrum, although no man of that name held that particular office, and so he was possibly minister elsewhere. She died the year after him. They had at least 9 children: William, merchant in London, later of Brugh and Wells; Gilbert in Winntontonrig and Nether Southfield; Robert, mentioned in his brother William’s will; Thomas of Haydon Bridge or Canonbie Mill, who married a Miss Robinson; an unnamed son (b.1672); George (b.1676), Minister of Hownan; Beatrix (b.1654); a daughter who married Hobbie Scott; Jeannette (b.1672), who was left money in William’s will; and Joan (b.1675), also left money in her brother’s will. Most of their children were christened in Hawick Parish. The witnesses in 1654 were William Douglas (perhaps of Cavers) and Gilbert Elliott (perhaps of Stobs), in 1672 were James Liddell (probably Hawick Town Clerk) and James Scott and in 1675 were John Hardie and schoolmaster John Purdom. His wife died the year after he did and they were buried at St. Mary’s, the tombstone once reading ‘Here lies John Elliot in the Southfield descended from the renowned family of the Elliots of Lariston by his grandschir Gavin Elliot of the Brough ...’ and that his wife was ‘sister of the ancient family of the Halliburtons of Muirhouselaw’. John (c.1650–1728) son of Adam of Mosspeebale. He was described as being ‘in Dinley’ (i.e. Dinlees). He married Margaret Scott from Falnash (perhaps an older child of Gideon Scott). Their children were: probably Ninian (1697–1724); Adam (1702–24); John (b.1703), who died young; John in Park; William (c.1703–91), who married Helen Scott, from Blackhall; Isobel, who married Henry, 2nd son of William Elliot in Penchrise; Janet; Christian; and Anna. He died at Park. His will is registered in Edinburgh Commissary...
Court in 1730. John in Leaugh (17th C.) 3rd son of William of Penchrise and Mary Elliot, he was recorded in 1683. He had a son, Archibald, who was an Excise Officer. John (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Harwood’ in 1688 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Corporal James Campbell and Gideon Scott of Outerside. John (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish (probably at Yethouse) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Isobel, who was recorded after him, must have been closely related. John (17th C.) tenant in Saughtree in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) name of 2 separate men recorded paying the Hearth Tax in 1694 for households near Redheugh in Castleton Parish. John (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish, listed between Sorbietrees and Flatt, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th C.) recorded as a household at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. It is possible he was the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) resident at Monk’s Croft (in Hassendean Parish) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William who was also listed there. John in Harden (17th/18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He had a daughter, Marion, and a son, William in Hole. His lands were Harden in Liddesdale. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Tower’ in Cavers Parish in 1698 when his daughter Jane was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Langside in Cavers Parish in 1700 when his daughter Elspeth was baptised. He could be the tenant in Langside who is recorded paying tax on 3 hearths in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, where he had 2 children baptised. He married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish in 1701. Their children included: Walter (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1705). John (17th/18th C.) married Christian Grieve in Hawick Parish in 1702. John (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Southfield. In 1704 he witnessed the baptism of a daughter of Gilbert, farmer in Southfield and Winningtonrig, who was probably a relative of some sort; the other witness was John Elliott, ‘Collector’, who was uncle of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. He married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish in 1701 and their daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1705. The witnesses in 1705 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, where he married Helen Laidlaw in 1705. Their children included: Andrew (b.1705); William (b.1707); Margaret (b.1709); John (b.1711); and Walter (b.1713). In 1709 he was described as a tenant, but the location is missing, and in 1711 he was tenant in Lees. John (17th/18th C.) miller at Appotside Mill who was witness to a sasine for the Ellists of Harwood in 1704. His son James was also a witness. John of Castlehope and Billhope (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Mosspecable, he was descended from the Ellists of Falnash. Castlehope was an earlier name for Twislehope. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig. Their children were: William in Whithaugh and Braeclie (b.c.1678–1767); Robert of Castlehope and Billhope; and Walter in Brugh. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘in Rig’ 1711 when his son Francis was baptised in Cavers Parish. It is unclear if he was related to the other Ellists in Rig. John (17th/18th C.) said in some genealogies to be son of Robert of Lodgegill. In 1711 he married Helen, daughter of John of Thorlieshope. However, this information may be confused, and his name may be an error for William of Cooms. John of Larriston (17th/18th C.) appointed in 1715 as one of the legal guardians for the 7 children of Henry, farmer at Sorbietrees. ‘John’ could be an error, since Robert was the Laird of Larriston at this time. He could also be the John whose sons Robert and William signed the 1731 marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodggeill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. John (17th/18th C.) described as being in Stobicote in 1716 when his son Archibald was baptised in Cavers Parish. Probably the same John was also in Stobicote in 1728 when his son James was born. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1714. Their children (with no mother given) may include John (b.1715), Janet (b.1723) and Helen (b.1725). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Goldielands and Crumhaugh. He was already tenant in Goldielands according to a baptismal record of 1713. In 1721 2 of his servants (Walter Scott and Helen Turnbull) are recorded getting married in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘in Goldielands’ in 1723 when he was considered as an elder of Hawick Kirk. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1727. He was still tenant in Goldielands in the period 1730–5 when his shepherd, Robert Hobkirk, had a run-in with the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong (as recounted in 1767). And a few years later he had to speak with the Bailies to recover cattle owned by himself and other local tenants, which the Burgh Officers had driven to the West Port after they were found being pastured on the Common. He married Helen Laidlaw and their son Walter was baptised in 1713, with witnesses Walter Grieve in Branxholme Park and Andrew Riddell (who also lived at Goldielands). John (17th/18th C.) described as being in Earlside in 1724 when his daughter Katherine was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. John of Demainholm (17th/18th C.). Recorded in the period 1695–1726 in papers with the Scots of Buccleuch dealing with his debts. In 1727 he sold the lands of Demainholm to William of Thorsleighope and Overton. John of Peel (d.bef. 1721) youngest son of William of Harwood. His older brother Simon pre-deceased his father, while his brother Henry succeeded to the main estate of Harwood. He was given the lands of Baxton-lees (also called Peel) by his father. He paid the land tax on £160 in Castleton Parish in 1678, and was recorded then as being ‘in Backestonelyes alias peel’. He married Elizabeth Elliot (from an unknown branch of the family). He had a son John, to whom he conveyed the lands of Peel; however, on John’s death these lands went to his daughters. His children included: Robert of Binks and William of Bush. His children baptised there were: John (b.1701/2–88) from Castleton Parish. He married Hannah Grieve. Their children included: Robert (b.1761); William (1763–88), a surgeon who died at Cape Coast Castle in Africa; Janet (b.1765); John (b.1767); and John (again, b.1769). He and his wife are buried at Langholm, but mentioned on the family gravestone in Castleton (although the dates may not be correct, since he would be very old when he had his children). John (18th C.) recorded in Penchrise when his sons William (b.1728) and Thomas (b.1730) were baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the same as another contemporary John. John (18th C.) married Agnes Best in Bedrule Parish in 1726. Their children (with no mothers name listed) may be Thomas (b.1727), John (b.1728), Helen (b.1729), Agnes (b.1732), James (b.1734), John (b.1737) and Margaret (b.1740). John (18th C.) recorded as ‘in Sinhope’ (probably Sundhope), when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1733. He could be the same sa John ‘in Southdeanrigg’ whose daughter Katherine was baptised in 1741. John (17th/18th C.) from the Black Tarras branch of the family, he was eldest son of William of Cooms. In 1732 he was described as ‘now of Cumes’, having inherited Cooms from his father. In 1709 he married Agnes, the eldest daughter of Robert Mather of Greenhill. Their children (mostly baptised in Hawick and Kirkton Parishes, were: Helen (b.1731), who probably died young; Gilbert (1734–59); Mary (b.1735); Helen (again, b.1739); Anne (1740–1833), eldest surviving daughter, who married Thomas Hall; and William (d.1817). A portrait shows him on ‘Old Crop’, the charger that his cousin George Augustus Elliott had ridden at Dettingen and gave to him. John (1710–bef. 54) younger son of John of Binks. He was a Burgess of Jedburgh. He appears to have been given the farm of Binks by his father. In 1754, after his death, his older brother William of Bush was served as his heir. He died without issue. John of Adderstonehish (18th C.) son of Walter in Brugh, possibly the eldest son. He was at Fahnash in 1740. He married Helen Moffat from Gorvald and they had a son John, who was baptised in Hawick in 1740. John (18th C.) merchant in Castleton. There is a record of Robert, farmer in Braidsie, paying him for ‘merchant goods’ in 1749. John (1711–92) 3rd Laird of Borthwickbrae, being one of 14 children of William, the 2nd Laird. Probably the same John of Borthwickbrae was apprenticed to a goldsmith in Edinburgh in 1731. He was christened in Robertson and died at Orchard. In 1744, along with Walter Grieve (farmer at Branxholme Park), he leased the lands of Linhope from the Buccleuch Estates. In the period 1743–60 he had a dispute with Sir James Stuart of Coltness over the lands of Branxholme Muir. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1750. His wool manufacturers in Hawick is mentioned as early as 1754 (in records of the Board of Trustees for Manufacturers), although it is unclear precisely what the company made. However, this may well have been the early partnership with Thomas Turnbull and some local men. In 1761 he was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. In 1769 he formed a partnership with others in the main carpet factory in Hawick, receiving the money that was offered by the Government for encouraging initiatives in Scottish industry and agriculture. The partnership was renewed in 1779 and consisted of Walter of Ormiston (his brother-in-law), Thomas Turnbull of Minto and William Robertson from Dunfermline. He may be the Elliott of Borthwickbrae who purchased the livery of the superiority of the Barony of Stonedge and Howa before 1766, but had renounced this by 1788. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780. It is said that a ewe presented to him by Douglas of Cavers gave birth to a lamb in 1774 which lived until 1796 (a very old age for a sheep). He was taxed for 2 male servants in 1778, and 1 in 1779, 1785, 1787 and 1788 and 2 in 1790 and 1791. He was recorded at Borthwickbrae on the 1785 and 1788–91 Horse Tax Rolls and in 1792 at Orchard. He paid the land tax on part of Borthwickbrae and the west side of Howcleuch in 1785. He also paid tax on 2 female servants at Borthwickbrae in 1785, 3 in 1787 and 2
in 1788–91. He was taxed for owning a carriage at Borthwickbrae in the period 1785–92, and is probably the ‘John Elliot Esqr. in Orchard’ who was taxed in Cavers Parish in the year 1792/3. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788, and probably a supporter of the Duke of Buccleuch’s interests in the county; the privately-printed description is ‘family in good circumstances. The son has a good estate through his mother, and is at the Bar. Second son in the Army’. He was also listed in 1788 among the voters in Selkirkshire. In 1753 he married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Murray of Cringletie. In Edinburgh in 1764 he secondly married Margaret (who died in 1792), daughter of Walter Laing and heiress of the lands of Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot-on-Ale; she was probably the ‘Mrs. Elliot’ listed as owner of the Flex in 1788 and on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although deceased before them), as well as Wester Essenside, part of Leaphill and Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish (valued together at £952). His children were: twins Alexander and William (b.1754), who died young; William (b.1764), baptised in Robertson, who succeeded, but changed his surname to ‘Lockhart’ or ‘Elliott-Lockhart’ (see Lockhart); Walter of Old Melrose (1766–1809), baptised in Robertson; Margaret (b.1767), who married David Simpson of Teviotbank and Knowe (and was mother of Gen. Sir James Simpson), and may secondly have married Walter Grieve, tenant of Brauxholme Park; and Janet, who also died young. John (18th C.) tenant in Kershopeburnfoot. His wife Elizabeth died in 1752, aged 36. Their children David Matthew and Agnes died young. They are buried at Ettleton. John (18th C.) shepherd at Earlsidesheils. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Hobbirk Parish in 1758. He could be related to the earlier John in Earlside. John (18th C.) shepherd in Langburnsheils in Hobbirk Parish. His children included William (b.1764) and Margaret (b.1770). John (18th C.) owner of part of the lands of Grange near Chesters. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he was listed as former owner. John (1725–1801) son of Robert, from the Caerlenrig branch. He was born in Cavers Parish and was a tanner in Hawick. He was listed as a tanner in 1748 when he paid tax on 11 windows in Hawick. He is probably the tanner of that name recorded being paid in 1751 for lime for mending the East Port. He was appointed as Hawick’s first part-time postmaster in 1767; he was re-appointed, apparently against his better judgement, several years later. He lived down the Punch Bowl Close, which also acted as the post office. Probably the same John, tanner, was one of those appointed in 1763 to oversee the collection of money for a new bell for St. Mary’s. He is probably the John who in 1766, along with Francis (his brother), witnessed a baptism for merchant James Oliver and his wife Christian (their sister); he also witnessed another baptism for them in 1781. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1787–92 he was recorded as a tanner on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick. In 1778 he married Margaret Curle, who died in 1807, aged 67. Their children included: Isobel (b.1779), who probably died in infancy; Robert (1780–1851), farmer at Roan; James (b.c.1781), who died in infancy; Christian (1883–1855), who died at Roan; William (1785–1827), also died at Roan; and Isobel (again, 1784/5–1859), who died in Hawick. He was buried, along with most of his family, at Teviothead. In 1773 he witnessed the christening of Helen, daughter of shoemaker Adam Elliot (suggesting they were related). His will is registered with the Peebles Commissary Court in 1802. John (1725–1813) younger son of John of Whitaugh and Margaret Scott of Gordenberry. He farmed at Castlehope, which was a former name for Twislehope. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author; Thomas, also in ‘Tweslihope’ also subscribed (although it is unclear who this might have been). His wife is probably the ‘Mrs Elliot, Twislehope’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Janet Turnbull from Mangerberry. He farmed at Castlehope, which was a former name for Twislehope. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author; Thomas, also in ‘Tweslihope’ also subscribed (although it is unclear who this might have been). His wife is probably the ‘Mrs Elliot, Twislehope’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Janet Turnbull from Manger- ton. Their children were: John (b.1781), who died young; William (b.1783), also died young; Robert (b.1785), surgeon in Haltwhistle, married Jane Elliot from Cringledykes, daughter of John and grand-daughter of Robert in Hermitage; Andrew (b.1787), married Elizabeth Armstrong from Newcastleton; Walter (b.1789), who lived in Charleston, U.S.A.; and Margaret (b.1791). John (18th C.) Hawick bookseller of the late 18th century. A book by Samuel Charters was published by him in 1793. John (1731–1808) eldest son of William in Park. He was tenant in ‘Baggot’, i.e. Bygate in Liddesdale. He was farmer at ‘Bagget’ and elsewhere in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 9 horses. He is probably the ‘Mr. John Elliot, Park’, who subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author in 1786 and who is recorded Elliot and John were baptised in Hobkirk Parish, when his children Jean (b.1775) and John (b.1780) were baptised in Harrotknow. He could also be the same as one of the other Johns.

He was also listed on the Land Tax Rolls for 1793, 1795 and 1797, as well as for having a non-working dog in 1797. He himself farmed at Cleughhead and Foulsheils, while his brother (presumably Thomas) was given liferent of Redheugh. He is probably the farmer at 'Cleughead' or 'Cleughheads' in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797.

In 1793 he disposed of the stock and household furniture from Redheugh to his brother Thomas (who also lived at Redheugh and farmed Foulsheils). In 1799 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Rev. John Russell, minister of Canonbie. They had no children and he settled Redheugh on his nephew Robert in 1806. He died at Newlands and is buried in Castleton cemetery.

Dr. John (18th C.) surgeon living at Cleuchhead in Liddesdale towards the end of the 18th century. He could be the same as the farmer at Cleuchhead. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784, and it is possible he supplied material for it; indeed he may be the ‘Gentleman of taste, in Liddesdale’ to which Caw was indebted for providing a manuscript copy of ‘Dick o’ the Cow’ and other verses. He was also ‘J. Elliot, M.D. Cleughheads’ in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was visited in about 1792 by Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed, on their ‘raid’ into Liddesdale, to gather material for what would become ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. He apparently already had a manuscript copy of ballads that he had collected himself. He presented Scott with an old Border war horn, which still hangs in Abbotsford. And afterwards he sought out other ballads ‘among the darker recesses of the mountains’. Rev. John (1749/50–1817) licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1793, he became assistant to Thomas Elliot of Cavers (who was probably his uncle). He was presented to the Parish of Kirkton in late 1800 and ordained there early the next year, remaining as minister until his death. In 1786 he married Jean Armstrong, who died in 1828, aged 75. Their children were: Elizabeth: twins Adam and Mary (b.1794); and Isobel (1797–60), who died at Coliforthill. John (18th C.) Bailie in Hawick in the 1780s. He was one of the local people who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). His son James died in 1782. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (c.1750–1801) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Little (c.1757–1825). Their children included: Christian (b.1792); Robert (b.1794); and Thomas (b.1799). He and his wife died in Newcastle ton. John (c.1750–1821) eldest son of Robert, tenant of Hermitage. He farmed at Hermitage, Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater. In some family trees he is confused with an earlier John. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1783 he married Christian Grieve (b.1753), but she died less than a year later; she was probably daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. He secondly married Margaret Scott from Skelfhill. His children included: Jean (1790–1886); Robert, who married a Miss Maxwell from Langholm and had children who emigrated to the U.S.A.; Janet, who married Robert Elliot from Haltwhistle, son of John who farmed Twislehope; James, who emigrated to the U.S.A.: John (1796–1833) in Nether Hindhope; Thomas (1815/6–87), who married Elizabeth Turnbull and succeeded his brother as farmer at farmed at Nether Hindhope; Catherine, married Robert Webster; Mary, married Robert Hall of Doanham in 1846; Elizabeth, married Gideon Yule from Kelso; and Margaret, who married John Dagg from Kidderminster. He is buried at Et tleton Cemetery, the stone being inscribed ‘Here lies John Elliot in Burnmouth and Christian Grieve his spouse’. John of Binks (1754–1820) eldest son of Robert. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. He owned Binks from at least 1788 (when it was valued at £300) and was listed as owner of Binks in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. In 1790 he married Mary Robson (1767–1858) in 1790, who was from Boghall, daughter of Adam Rob- son and Helen Hume; her sister Janet also mar ried a John Elliot and she must have been re lated to his mother, who was also a Robson from Boghall. Their children were: Robert (b.1791), who died young; Jane or Jean (b.1792), who mar ried William Nixon of Lynnwood; another Robert (1794–1814); Helen (b.1796), ‘the White Rose of Liddesdale’, who married Archibald Blake from Liverpool; Elizabeth (d.1798), who died in infancy; John (b.1799), who married Mary, daugh ter of Thomas Smith of Darnick and farmed at Calaburn; and another Elizabeth, who married William Turnbull of Merrylaw in 1847. In 1851 his widow was listed as an ‘Annuitant, Gentle woman’, farming about 610 acres at Binks. He died at Burnmouth and is buried in Castleton Cemetery. He is probably the John who was recorded as farmer at Burnmouth on the 1785–97 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls, and who was of Binks’ when listed as a Commissioner for Rox burghshire in 1805 and 1819. His will was reg istered with Peebles Commissary Court in 1821. John (1753/4–1817) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded living at Borthwickbrae in 1794 and Woodburn in 1798. In 1787 in Cavers Parish he married Elizabeth or ‘Betsy’ Scott (1757/8–1842), who died in Hawick. Their children in cluded: Elizabeth (b.1792); James (1794–1884), long-time proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb in H awick; and Jean (b.1798). The marriage is prob ably the one recorded between James and Betty Scott in Cavers in 1787. He died at Branxholme and the family are buried at Borthwick Waas. John (18th/19th C.) lived at Bowanhill, near Teviothead. He is probably related to the ear lier Archibald who farmed there. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1793. Their children in cluded: Archibald (b.1800); Walter, married Jean Anderson and emigrated to Delaware County, New York; John; Margaret, who married Thomas Thompson and later George Stewart; and Betty, who married a Mr. Thompson. John of Cooms (1740/1–1809) married Margaret Helen (b.1776), daughter of Rev. John Russell, minister at Canon bie. He died at Newlands in Liddesdale. John (1760–1806) son of Ninian and Ester Crozier. He was born at Burnmouth in Liddesdale. A family pedigree describes him being ‘in Middlemoss’. He married Janet Robson (1761–1848), daughter of Adam Robson and Helen Hume; her sister Mary married another John Elliot. Their children included: Ninian (1789–1870), who died in Westminster Township, Canada; Adam (1791–1871), who died in Ontario; Helen (b.1794), who joined her brothers in Ontario; Ester (b.1797), who married Robert Elliot in Powisholm; Mary (1801–77), who died in Newcastle and; Janet (1805–81), who died at Teviothead. He died at Middlemoss, near Langholm. John of Whithaugh (1759–1847) eldest son of William of Whithaugh. He was served heir to his grandfather John in 1777. In 1788 his lands of Whithaugh (half of the former farm) were valued at £200 3s. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784, a theological book by a Carlisle author in 1786 and John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is recorded as farmer at Whithaugh on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, and also served as a Justice of the Peace. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is probably the John of Whithaugh listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories; Walter was also listed as a farmer there at about the same time. He was listed as head of his household at Whithaugh in 1835–41. He married Jean (1758–87), daughter of Elliot of Binks. They had 1 child, Elizabeth, who married Thomas Keir from Powisholm, and whose son William Keir inherited Whithaugh. He was still alive in 1841, when he was ‘Esquire of Whithaugh’ and in his 80s. His will is register in the Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1848. John (1769–1823) son of Henry, he was tenant farmer at Flatt in Liddesdale. He was already at Flatt in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. He is recorded as farmer at Flatt on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls; he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Scott, from Ladhope in Yarrow, who died in 1838, aged 63. Their children included: Henry (1793–1818), who died in Jamaica; Margaret (b.1794–1804); Janet (b.1795), who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh; William (1796–1838); Jean (b.1798), who died in infancy; Jean (again, b.1800); John (1801–40), engineer in Glasgow, who married Helen Elliot of Kirkdean; granddaughter of Elliot of Harwood; James (1803/4–80), who died at Westwater; and Margaret (again, b.1809). This Margaret may have been the ‘Miss M. Elliot, Flatt’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (b.1767) cooper in Castleton Parish, son of William and Anna Scott, descended from the Elliots of Falnash. Some of his children were born at Byreholm. He married Elizabeth Crozier and their children included: William (b.1790), probably shoemaker in Newcastle; Gideon (b.1791); Helen (b.1793); Anne (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1803); John (b.1804), who probably died young; and Margaret (b.1808). John (b.1768) labourer at Wauchope Gardens, Blackcleuchmouth and Templehallshiel. He was son of John in Wigg and surely related to William in Templehallshiel. He married Betsy Taylor and their children included: William (b.1798), who lived at Wauchope Cottages; Betty (b.1800); John (b.1802); Walter F. (b.1804); Robert (b.1807); Alexander (b.1809), probably the shoemaker in Hawick; Margaret (b.1813); and Agnes (b.1815). Most of the family emigrated to Otsego County, New York. John (18th/19th C.) resident in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. No occupation or other information is given. He could be the tenant in Denholm whose son John was born in 1804. John (18th/19th C.) lawyer who set up a partnership with John Oliver in Hawick around 1790. They became agents for the Commercial Bank around 1820 and are listed as writers in Hawick in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the ‘John Elliot, Hawick’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. However, he left for Jedburgh in 1829 to become Sheriff-Substitute, which office he held until 1835. The Hawick firm eventually became Geo. & Jas. Oliver’s. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. John (b.1769) son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton. He was born in Castleton Parish and became a merchant in London. He married Miss Robinson in London and they had 13 children, William, Robert, Margaret, John, Mary, Ann, Jane, Eliza, Mary, Thomas, Louisa, George and Walter. John of Reidheugh (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It is unclear who this is, since the owner at that time was Robert Elliot; perhaps this is an error. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He had several children baptised there, including John (b.1807), Brown (b.1820), Elizabeth (b.1822), Jane (b.1824) and an unnamed child (b.1826). John Edmund of New Belses (1788–1862), youngest son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was named after the statesman Edmund Burke. He had a successful career in the Bengal civil service. He accompanied his father...

back from India in 1814 and had to perform the sad duty of carrying the news of his death to the Borderers who were awaiting his triumphal return to Minto (including celebrations for drawing his carriage through Hawick). He is probably the ‘Hon. J.E. Elliot, Eildonhall’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was elected Liberal M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1837, when several people in Hawick were prosecuted for rioting. He spoke in the House of Commons in the following year, when Sir James Graham proposed a motion that Hawick be removed as a polling place; he supported the actions of the Bailies and townpeople, and claimed that the situation had been exaggerated by the other side (and perhaps fabricated in order to discredit the election). In 1841 he received a majority in Hawick, but lost to Francis Scott in the County. However, he was re-elected in 1847 and remained M.P. until 1859, being elected unopposed in 1852 and 1857. In a directory of 1852 he was listed as living at Wilton Lodge. He was donor of a silver-mounted hammer for the Chief Magistrate’s use in Council meetings (engraved with his initial electoral poll results). He was also made an Honorary Burgess in 1837. He was a keen hunter (despite his weight), keeping his own pack of hounds until 1844. He held lands at Belses, Ryeknow and Abbottsmeadow, which were sold to the Marquess of Lothian in 1872. In 1809 he married Amelia, 3rd daughter of James Henry Cassamajor of Madras and they had 6 children: Amelia Jane (d.1837), who married Thomas Campbell Robertson; Anna Maria Elizabeth, who married Pierce G.E. Taylor; Lt.-Col. Edmund James (1813–54), who married Matilda Inglis, and died in the Crimean War; William Brownrigg of Benrig (1820–93); Elizabeth (1822–45); Jane (1822–51); and Isabel (1826–91). The entire family emigrated to Howick, Quebec, where they died. John (c.1785–1854) son of James and Helen Elliot. He was born in Castleton Parish and worked as a shepherd. He married Helen Murray and in 1818 the family emigrated to America, settling in New Brunswick and then in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario. Their children included: James (b.1811); Elizabeth (b.1813), who died young; Rev. Charles, D.D. (b.1815); John (b.1817), who died on the passage to America; John (1819–99); and possibly Helen. John (1788–1878) son of Walter, who farmed at Bowanhill. He lived in Robertson Parish, but emigrated with his family to Bathurst Township, Ontario, then settled in Andes, Delaware County, New York State. In 1809 he married Margaret Oliver in Cavers Parish. Their children included: Janet or Jennie (1811–82); Isabel (b.1812); Walter (1814–91); George (b.1816); Margaret (1820–39), He died in Andes, New York. John (1788/9–1869) son of Andrew, shepherd at Halterburn. He was an agricultural labourer living at Shiplaw Corse in Cavers Parish from about 1830, but before that appears to have lived in Roxburgh, Ashkirk and Ettrick Parishes. In 1815 in Ancrum Parish he married Margaret Hart, who died before 1841, when the family are listed at ‘Sheeplawcross’. In 1851 he was shepherd at Wester Essenside. Their children included: Margaret (b.1816); Andrew (b.1817); Mary (b.1821), who probably married William Irvine, farmer at Cavers Mains; Christina (b.1823); Isabel (b.1827), who probably married Robert Elliot, gamekeeper at Cavers East Lodge; John (b.1832); Janet (b.1833); Elizabeth (b.1836); George (b.1837); and Agnes (b.1837). John (b.1790/1) agricultural labourer living in Parkhillhaugh in 1841 and Deanburnhaugh in 1851. He married Jane (or ’Jean’) Goodfellow (1795–1860) in Roberton Parish in 1818 and their children included: Francis (b.1818), whose wife was Christina; Elizabeth (b.1820); James (b.1822); William (b.1824); John (b.1827); and Gideon (1833–1913). John (b.1795/5) born in Canonbie, he was an agricultural labourer in Castleton and Southdean Parishes. In 1835–41 he was living at Clerkleap and in 1851 was at Westerhouses. He married Henrietta Carruthers and their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Gilbert (b.1831); Henry (b.1833); Mary (b.1836); Matthew (b.1838); and Elizabeth (b.1841). John (1795–1859) 2nd son of William ’of Carlenrickrig’ (who was an architect in Kelso) and grandson of the minister of Cavers. He was born in Kelso and became a solicitor in Hawick and Jedburgh. In 1841 and 1851 he was a banker in Jedburgh, where he lived at Boundary Bank. However, by 1851 he is described as blind. He married Janet Usher (daughter of Thomas of Courtthill). Their children included William (procurator in the Roxburghshire Sheriff Court), Thomas Usher, Isabella, John, Jane Robertson, Charles Scott, Elizabeth Pott and Esther. He should not be confused with the earlier lawyer John who had a partnership with John Oliver in Hawick before moving to Jedburgh. John (1795/6–1834) son of Walter and Helen Crozier. He was tenant in Templehall. John (1796–1833) son of John, who farmed at Highfield, Crinkledye and Deadwater, and grandson of Robert in Hermitage. He was tenant in Nether Hyndhope in Oxnam Parish. After his death he was succeeded as farmer by his brother Thomas. John (1796/7–1875) shepherd at Blinkbonny in Castleton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1835. In 1841 he was a labourer in Newcastle, living on North Hermitage Street. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Blinkbonny. He married Jean Armstrong (1809/10–85) from Kirkpatrick. Their children were: Janet (1828–52); Helen (1829–60); Jane (1833–97), who married James Beattie; William (b.1836), also died young; Robert (b.1837), also died young; William (1840/1–60). He must also have lived at Border Rigg, where some of his children died. The family are buried at Ettleton. John of Binks (1799–1875) eldest surviving son of John of Binks and Mary Robson. He purchased Calaburn in Wilton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ’Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as owner of Burnmouth. He is probably the farmer at Burnmouth listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He is listed at Upper Burnmouth in 1841, along with Janet, possibly a relative. In 1851 he was farming 2,000 acres there and employed 6 labourers. By 1861 he was farming 5,000 acres and employing 10 people. He was still at Burnmouth in 1868. In 1851 he married Mary, 2nd daughter of Thomas Smith, architect in Darnick. Their children were: John (1853–1909), who married Jane Pott Oliver; Jane (1855–1939); who married Rev. John C. Martin; and Mary (c.1858–1941). He died at Burnmouth and is probably buried in Castleton Cemetery. His portrait, by an unknown artist, is in the Museum. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and labourer in Newcastle. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–38. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He is listed among heads of households at Newhouses in England in 1836 and perhaps the same shepherd is at Sorbietrees in 1840 and 1841. John (b.1800/1) from Castleton, he was a tailor who lived at Quarrelhaa, near Harwood-on-Teviot. It seems possible he was related to Henry and Adam, who are recorded as tailors in Newcastle in 1841. In 1851 he was a tailor employing 2 men. He married Helen Scott (b.c.1806) from Galashiels. Their children included: Janet (b.1824); Robert (b.1826); John, Mungo (b.1828); William (b.1830); James Rutherford (b.1832); and Elizabeth (b.1844); and Thomas (b.1846). It seems possible they have moved from the area before the 1861 census. John (1801–40) son of John, tenant in Flatt in Castleton Parish, with his mother being Jean Scott from Ladhope. He was an engineer in Glasgow. He married Helen Elliot (1812/3–82), daughter of Thomas of Kirndean and grand-daughter of Elliot of Harwood. They had a son, John (1839–97), who was also tenant in Flatt. John (b.1801/2) from England, he was a shoemaker in Newcastle. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1840. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Pott (from Castleton Parish) and their children included: Betty; Andrew; James; John (b.1840); Isabel (b.1844), Esther (b.1844), twin of Isabel; and Margaret (b.1846). He lived at about 2 Whitchester Lane. John (1801/2–90) from Southdean Parish. In the 1830s he moved to Ross and Cromarty, where he was manager at Tarbot Mains farm, Poinicol, for about 50 years. He married Margaret Dagg from Castleton. Their children were: William (1825–94), who died at Poinicol; and Michael (1827–82), who died in Melbourne. John (1808–89) son of Matthew, who farmed at Netherraw, with his mother being Janet Scott. He worked as a labourer and roadman in Newcastleton. He was listed as labourer (and son of Matthew) among heads of households in 1841. In 1841 he was at about 21 North Hermitage Street. In 1861 he was on Douglas Square. Later he was tenant at Sandholm. He was said to be very knowledgeable about the area, and helped the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club on their tour of upper Liddesdale in 1889, shortly before he died. He married Frances (or ‘Fanny’) Broadfoot Wilson, and she died at the Grapes Inn, Newcastleton, in 1860, aged 62. He secondly married Mary Thomson. His children included: William (1826–47); Matthew (1828–65), who died in London; Margaret (1829–1904), who died in Newcastle; James (1830–77), who was innkeeper of the Grapes Inn; Janet (b.1833); Andrew (1835–1905), who died in Birmingham; John (b.1838), road surveyor; and Helen (1842–1908), who died at Brox. John (1809–81) younger son of William of Harwood and Helen Rutherford. He was born at Houndalee and farmed at Primrosehill. He married Jane, daughter of Archibald Jordan of Bonjedward and they had a son and 2 daughters. Rev. John Elphinstone (1810–90) son of James, 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He trained as a lawyer, apprenticing to William Bell and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1833. He was appointed as Rector of Whalton, Morpeth. In 1843 he married Georgina, daughter of Col. Ralph Bates of Milburn and changed his surname to Elliot-Bates. John (b.1810) son of Ninian and brother of Ninian and James. Like his brothers, he was a road contractor in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square with his son James (probably keeper of the Grapes Inn) and daughter Helen. He was recorded as proprietor of the Grapes Inn in the 1860s. His brother Ninian was also a road contractor. John (1811–88) from Newcastleton Parish, son of James and Janet Grieve. In 1841 he was a carrier, living at Scurnook in Robertson. He married Helen, daughter of shepherd William Murray; she died at Oliver Place in Hawick in 1909, aged 86. His children included Helen Grieve (d.1855), who died at the age of 4, and 2 sons who died in infancy. John (b.1816/7) carter in Newcastleton, on Doncaster Street. In 1851 he was living with his sister Helen and nephew George Aitchison. By 1861 he had a 2nd wife Betty, and step-children James Scott and David Scott. They also had children Janet and Margaret. John (19th C.) Inspector of Nuisances in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (b.1819/20) born in Castleton, he was an agricultural labourer in Cavers and Teviothead Parishes. In 1851 he was at Castleweary. In 1861 he was farm steward, living at Borthaugh Cottages. He married Jane Murray and their children were: William (b.1839); Matthew (b.1843); and Gideon (b.1845). John (b.1822/3) born in Castleton Parish, he was a labourer in Hobkirke. In 1851 he was at East Fodderlee Cottages and in 1861 was a ploughman at Bonchester Cottages. He later lived in Southdean Parish and in Denholm. In 1846 he married Christian (or Catherine) Scott Crozier (b.1825), from Ettrick. Their children were: William (b.1846); Jane (b.1848); Thomas (b.1852); Robert (b.c.1854); Patrick (b.c.1855); David (b.1856); Scott (b.1860); Margaret Murray (b.1862); and John (b.c.1863). John (b.1823/4) son of Matthew and Dorothy Purdon, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was a labouring living at Adderstoneshie Stable in 1841, with his family at Adderstoneshie in 1851 and a ploughman at Barnes in Kirkton Parish in 1861. He married Sibella Hunter (from Langholm) in Wilton in 1848 and their children included (b.c.1849): Elizabeth; Matthew (b.1851); John (b.1852); James (b.1855); Thomas (b.1858); William (b.1861); Margaret (b.1863); Dorothy (b.1865); and Georgina (b.1867). Some of the family may have emigrated to Huron County, Ontario. John ‘Jock’ (b.c.1825) son of George and Agnes Beattie. His grandfather drowned, perhaps when he was thrown into Whitehaugh pond near Newcastleton. He lived near Bonchester Bridge since about the 1870s and worked as a dyker. His biography is told by Tancred in ‘Rulewater’: if some information was incorrect, he could be the same as one of the Johns from Castleton. John (b.1825/6) shoemaker in Newcastleton, son of William, who was also a shoemaker. In 1851 he was living on North Hermitage Street and in 1861 on Douglas Square. In 1849 he married Jane McVittie.

(1826–1905) from Ewesdale. Their children included Jane (b.1850), Christian (b.1851), Janet (b.1853), Robert (b.1855), Mary (b.1857), William (b.1860), Helen (b.1863), Elizabeth (b.1866) and Isabella Anne (b.1869). John Scott (1829–1914) son of Robert and Janet Black. He was Cornet in 1851, when he was a joiner’s apprentice. In 1855 he married Mary Scott, from Southdean. They had a daughter Margaret (b.1855). By 1857 he had emigrated to Culross, Ontario, along with his wife and daughter, as well as his brother Thomas. John (1830/1–1915) tenant in West Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1904, aged 73. They had 2 sons called Robert who died young. They are buried at Etterston. John Davidson (1834–96) son of Robert and Eleanor Davidson, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1860 he married Mary, daughter of Christopher Foster. Their children were: Margaret (b.1863); Helen (b.1865); Jane (b.1868); Robert (b.1870); Isabella (b.1872); Christopher (b.1875); and Mary (b.1880). He died at Clerklea, killed by being knocked down by a goods train. John (b.1835) son of James, a spirit dealer at 3 Orrock Place. His mother was Helen Patterson. He worked as a railway clerk and bank clerk. He was Cornet in 1855 and can be seen as Left-hand Man in the first photograph of the Common Riding Principals. John (1836–58) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh. He was baptised in Castleton Parish and died at Cardona, Mexico, predeceasing his father. John (1836–1905) son of Ninian, he was a roadman like his father. In 1864 he married Jane Jackson (1840–1912). Their children were Jane (b.1865), James (b.1866), Eliza Jane (b.1868) and Marion (b.1871). John (1838–1913) son of John. He was District Road Surveyor in Newcastleton. He married Betsy, daughter of inkeeper John Scott; she died in 1889, aged 60. Their children included: Agnes (b.1865), who died in infancy; Archibald (b.1863/4–90); William (1861/2–1904); Frances Mary (1866/7–1907); and Jane (1872/3–1956) John (1839–97) born in Glasgow, son of John and Helen Elliot. He was farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish, succeeding his uncle James there. He was recorded at Flatt in 1861 and 1868. When another uncle, John Scott-Elliot died, he succeeded to the lterent of Peel, and also carried on the leases on Kirndean, Myredykes and Singdean. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. John Burns (19th C.) Councillor and cashier for the Gas Company. He married Margaret Butler, great-grand-daughter of Walter Grieve of Hawick. John (19th C.) partner in the builders firm Aitken & Elliot. He married Christina, daughter of James Wintrip. John (1853–1909) eldest son of John of Binks and Mary Smith. He may be the John ‘of Binks, Burnmouth’ who became a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland in 1880. He matriculated arms in 1897. He sold Calaburn, breaking his families direct ties with the Hawick area. He married Jane Pott Oliver and their children were: Maj. Edward John (1881–1918), who married Dorothy Allen Smith and was killed in action; Sina Gertrude Pott (1882–1965), who married Lieut.-Col. Edwyne Douglas-Jones; Lt.-Com. James Oliver (1883–1965), who married Margaret Hogben; Mary Smith Turnbull (1885–1967); John Stephen (1886–1972), Navy Captain and Surgeon, who married Magda Virginia Salvesen and became a lecturer at Newcastle University; Clement Nixon (1889–1969), who married Katherine Winifred Penney and moved to Rhodesia; Edward John, who married Dorothy Allen, daughter of Richard Sidney Smith of Clifford Chambers, and was killed in WWI; Lt.-Col. Henry Hawes (1891–1972), who became Surgeon to the Viceroy of India and retired to Springbank, Melrose; Robin Alexander (1891–1969), twin of Henry, he became abanker in Canada; and Jean Oliver (b.1892), who was an Almoner at the Royal Free Hospital, London. He died at Southsea, Hampshire. Katherine of Arkleton (b.c.1700) daughter of William of Arkleton and Anne Ainslie of Jedburgh. She was married 3 times. Firstly (about 1720) she married David Laing of Westerkirk. Secondly, in 1727, she married Rev. Charles Telfer, who was minister of Hawick Parish. Thirdly, she married Robert Elliot of Fenwick (son of Francis and Rachel Langlands). Her only child appears to have been Gavin, who succeeded to Arkleton (but is said to have lived with a loose woman who he had to acknowledge as his wife to qualify his daughters to succeed to the estate). Katherine (b.1701) elder daughter of Adam of Teindside, she was baptised in Hawick Parish. In Wilton Parish in 1719 she married Robert, son of Robert of Midlem Mill. When her bother Walter died in 1721 she was served as his heir. Barone Catherine ‘Kay’ (1903–1994) of Harwood, born Katharine Tennant in Peeblesshire, 7th daughter of Sir Charles Tennant. She died 171 years after her father was born, and her great-grandfather was a witness at Robert Burns’s christening in 1759. As a child she played at 10 Downing Street, where her half-sister Margot was married.
to Prime Minister Herbert Asquith. She studied politics at the London School of Economics, was an accomplished violinist, played the organ, spoke fluent French, rode until age 80 and boasted that she beat 2 Prime Ministers at golf. In 1934 she married Walter Elliot, Conservative M.P. for Glasgow Kelvingrove and they made their home at Harwood, near Bonchester. She was a leading public figure in her own right, being active in farming, council and social work. She was made C.B.E. in 1948, D.B.E. in 1952 and was raised to the peerage in 1958 after her husband’s death, becoming Baroness Elliot of Harwood. She became Chairman of the Conservative Party in 1957, serving on several government committees and being on Roxburghshire County Council for 29 years. She worked tirelessly for the Conservative Party, although never abandoned some of her Liberal roots, being strongly against the death penalty and involved with prison reform, for example. In 1973 the Katharine Elliot Centre was named in her honour. She was the first woman, other than the Queen, to speak in the House of Lords and the first woman to get a private bill through the Lords. The Tweedsdale Press Group voted her ‘Borders Man of the Year’. She became a Justice of the Peace in 1998. In 1993 she tripped over her parliamentary robes after the opening of Parliament and was rushed off to hospital, still in her robes, suffering a fractured hip. She died at Hawick Cottage Hospital shortly afterwards and was buried in Hobbirk Kirkyard (note her name is also spelled ‘Katherine’). Lawrence (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 along with James, Simon and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. Perhaps the same ‘laurenci elwald’ was recorded at Mosspaul in 1494/5 when fined for non-appearance at the Court of the Justiciary, the Earl of Bothwell seving as surety (but 3 other men of the same name were also listed in 1494/5). Lawrence (15th C.) listed among Elliots and other men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed separately from 2 other Laurences, but appears after William and David, sons of William, and before John in Thorlieshope. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed separately from 2 other Laurences, along with Ralph, William, Edmund, Ingram, Martin and Lawrence (son of Martin). Lawrence (15th C.) son of Martin, he is listed among many Liddesdale men who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined as a result. Martin, listed just before him, as presumably his father. Len (20th C.) starting as a message boy with Stothart’s in 1939, he eventually took over the firm when David Stothart retired in 1971. He ran Hawick’s well-known toy emporium until its final closure in 1989. He is also believed to be the last person in Hawick to go through the 6-year apprenticeship as a saddler. Leon (16th C.) recorded as ‘Leoni Elwald’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when he and his brothers were the tenants of Sundhope. He was also listed as one of the tenants of Whitrope, along with William in Ramsiegill, John, Robert and another ‘Leoni’. Madge Callaghan (1928–) wife of Bob, she received an M.B.E. in 1998 for services to lawn tennis. Also known as a campaigner for the Waverley Line, she had a carriage on the new line named after her in 2015. She recited David Hill’s poem ‘The Bleach’ on the ‘Hawick Speaks’ tape and on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’. She was recorded speaking in dialect as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project in 2004. Margaret nee Roger (16th C.) widow of Robert ‘Elwand’, who was a tenant of Mark Ker at Borthwickshiel. In 1540 she raised an action against 2 Murrays for stealing cattle from Borthwickshiel in 1528, apprehending her and burning her house. The Murrays defence was that their actions were part of a raid by the Earl of Angus (Lieutenant of the Borders) against thieves and traitors in Teviotdale and that she was harbouring such thieves, namely her sons David and Alexander, as well as helping her other sons John and Ringand (Ninian). Margaret (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. She was probably related to Alison and John, who are also listed. Margaret (d.1697) heiress of Reidheugh, elder daughter of Robert. She was recorded paying the land tax (of £500) in 1663. In 1637 she married James Elliott, 6th son of Gilbert of Stobs in 1637. The couple were granted many of the Elliot lands in Liddesdale, excepting 3 farms that were given to her sister Esther and some farms that were held in ‘liferent’ by their father Robert. Her son Robert succeeded to the Redheugh and Larriston lands, but she retained a dower right to rentals from Larriston. She later reduced her claims in order to help her son’s financial difficulties. She further reduced her claims on the family’s former lands on Hermitage Water, which helped enable her grandson, Robert of Larriston, to buy back Larriston in 1695. However, right after her death Larriston Rig was sold off, and the rest of the estate was bought by Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1719. Margaret (17th/18th C.) daughter of Arthur of Harwood, who died in 1698. She was recorded as proprietor of Harwood in a 1710 land evaluation of Hawick Parish, with her lands being valued at more than £800, the third highest in the Parish. She was served heir to her father in 1711, probably when she reached the age of majority. She married William Elliot of Thornloshope and they had 14 children. She is buried at Oxnam. Margaret nee Laing (d.1792) daughter of Walter Laing of Meikledale. She inherited Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot-on-Ale. In 1764 she became the second wife of William of Borthwickbrae. She was recorded as owner of the Flex (valued at £114 10s 9d) in 1788, and also in about 1811 (although she was deceased by then). She also owned Wester Essendie, Leaphill and Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish, which were valued together at £952 in 1788. Her children included William (who succeeded to Borthwickbrae and changed his surname to include ‘Lockhart’), Walter of Old Melrose, Margaret (who married David Simpson of Teviothead) and at least two children who died young. Margaret (1779–1816) daughter of William of Arkleton, she was born in Jedburgh. In 1807 she married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott, Minister at Southdean. In 1810 her brother Robert died, and she succeeded him as the only surviving child of their father. She then assumed the surname Scott-Elliott and her son William succeeded to Arkleton. Margaret (19th C.) recorded as proprietor of a shoemaker’s business on the Cross Wynd in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Mrs. Marjorie L. nee Laidlaw (19th C.) from Ancrum Mains, daughter of Adam, who had been a builder in Hawick. She is sometimes incorrectly named as ‘Margaret’ rather than ‘Marjorie’. She was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library 1878–94, and possibly only the second female chief librarian in Britain. She was said to be a forceful and dominating lady. She was married to a farmer, but later re-married to D. McBurnie Watson. Another Mrs. Elliot, librarian, is recorded as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, although this cannot be the same woman. Mark (d.1564) recorded as being ‘callit of the Hill’ when he was found guilty of sheep-stealing and reset and hanged. Those convicted along with him were Hob Scott ‘of Colyfurd’ and John Scott ‘the Clerk’. He may be related to later Elliots of the Hill. Mark of the Hill (d.1611) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was probably the Mark listed along with James and Jock of the Hill among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded being ‘in the Hill’ when he was convicted and executed at Jedburgh court in 1611. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Mark of the Hill. Mark (1776–1854) brother of Maj. William Elliot of Harwood and also Thomas. He served as a private soldier in the Royal Marines and was present at the mutiny of the Nore in 1797. He later served as a Captain in the Roxburghshire Yeomanry, and helped get the Liddesdale men to the muster in Hawick. A story is told of him at an inspection of the troops in Hawick, during which his horse made a bolt forward. When Capt. Elliot of Harwood asked ‘Where the devil are you going Mark?’; he replied ‘Ask my horse’. He was tenant farmer at Lanton, where he died unmarried. A portrait of him hung at Clifton Park. Martin (15th C.) mentioned in 1494/5 when he was listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. His son Lawrence was listed just after him. He may have been related to the later Martins. Martin ‘of Abye’ and of Braidlie (d.c.1590), possibly second son of Robert of Redheugh who died at Flodden (in which case he must have been born before 1513). However, he could instead have been son of the next Robert of Redheugh (b.c.1505, 14th Chief), and hence born somewhat later. He was first known as ‘of Abye’, these probably being the Abbey lands in north-eastern Liddesdale that were once owned by Jedburgh Abbey. He acted as the effective leader of the Elliots in roughly the period 1563–73, presumably during the minority of his nephew. He received a Crown Charter to the lands at Braidlie in 1549; it is unclear whether this was the lands on the Borthwick Water (which is claimed in the Dowager Elliot’s history) or on the Hermitage Water (which would make more sense). He is mentioned in 1556/7 as brother of Robert of Redheugh. He was recorded in 1561 as ‘Martine Elwald of Reideuch’ among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563 he had a bond with Robert of Redheugh to enter Jock, son of Gavin Elliot of Ramsiegill, to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was probably the Elliot of Braidlie who led the ‘Brodies’ in the burning of Hawick in 1565, as part of a feud with the Scotts.
of Bransholme and Buccleuch, perhaps sparked by the murder of David Scott of Hassindean in 1564. A raid by about 300 Elliots resulted in about 10 miles of Scott of Buccleuch’s land being burned, and the deaths of many men, women and children. Counter raids followed on Liddesdale and Teviotdale for the next few years. Also in 1565 he had offered to make a deal with Lord Scrope, handing over Hermitage in return for English protection; although the offer was not fully taken up, the Elliots did receive support from the English Wardens. He was probably involved in the ambush of Scotts by Elliots at Eves Doors in 1565. In 1566 the Elliots were again raiding into England, and the feud with the Scotts appears to have been resolved. His force to have defeated that of the Earl of Bothwell in 1566/7, sent to subdue the Elliots and others. In 1567 he received a pardon for his former crimes, and agreed to keep peace on the Border, being given money by both the English and Scottish authorities. He may have been among the roughly 300 men who raided Torwoodlee in 1568 (perhaps slaying several Pringles), and was one of the men summoned to settle the feud between the Pringles and Elliots in 1575. In 1569 he was said to have met the Black Laird of Ormiston in Liddesdale and forced him to stop giving refuge to the English Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland to return to England (from where they had fled after an uprising in support of Mary, Queen of Scots). He and Archibald Armstrong promised in 1569 to enter into ward John Elliot of Thorlleshope. In 1569 he also served as pledge for ‘the haill branche of the Reidheuch that dwellis within the Swyriss’, with Alexander Home of Manderston as his surety. He was also pledge for the Nixons in the same year. Additionally in 1569 he gave assurances, along with Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton and Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh, to ‘Rowie Forster’ (who was probably the deputy English Warden), ‘that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cunreally’. Also in 1569 he was recorded being held ‘with My Lord Regentis Grace’ as pledge for his eldest son Simon, as well as ‘Archeis Hob’. Furthermore, in 1569 he appeared in Edinburgh to request that he be released from ward to return temporarily to Liddesdale, to be replaced with his nephew Gib and offered to give service ‘in keping the hous of Armitage’; he signed ‘with his hand at the pen’. In 1570 he wrote to the English Warden, Sir John Forster, making a deal that avoided Liddesdale being ravaged by the English on their way to Teviotdale. Also in 1570 he headed a group of Elliots who signed a bond, giving pledges for Hob, son of Elder Will Elliot and John Elliot of Heuchhouse. In about 1572, Robert of Redheugh came of age, and he ceased to be the leader of the clan; later there would be strife between the two sets of the Elliots that they led. He was probably the ‘Martin of Brady’ who gave a pledge for the surname of Nixon in 1573. In 1574 he was given ‘liferent’ of the teinds of Castleton by Scott of Buccleuch. According to the register of the Privy Council he gave a pledge for the Nixons in 1573, was also surety in 1574, was moved from ward in Blackness to St. Andrews and had reentry in ward in 1577. In 1575 he was summoned to appear to answer for the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. He was said to have built himself a strong tower around 1576, described in an English letter being ‘strongly vawted, att the head of Liddell, with open ventes for traynes of powder’; this was distinct from Larriston, but it is unclear where it was situated. In 1578/9 William Ker of Cessford and Andrew Ker of Faldonside were cautioners for him, pledging that he would not raid into England. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned; he had been surety for several different sets of men (mainly Elliots), who had not been entered into ward as promised. His sons ‘Sym, Gawin, Arche and Hob’ are mentioned in 1580; they were implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh (and it may be that he was the instigator of the raid on Whitlaw that preceded it). In 1580 there was a complaint by the Countess of Bothwell, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Wat Scott of Harden that he was maintaining Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh and his family and followers, and that a group of Elliots of the Park and Gorrenberry had attacked Harwood, Whitlaw and Hoscote; this included his own sons Gavin, Hbbie and Archie, as well as his nephews Airchie, Gib and Dandie. In 1580/1 there was caution of £2000 for his entry to the Privy Council ‘when warned’. In 1581 he and John Turnbull of Minto were caution for the reentry of Hob Elliot of Braiddlie (who had been released from prison in Edinburgh), as pledge for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. Also in that year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their riving crimes. In 1581 he was allied with Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh when they made a set of complaints against Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh; he specifically complained about a group of Scotts attacking his farm of Northcroft, and of another group of Scotts attacking his sons Hob and Dand as they rode near Headshaw. All the leaders were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters; it is interesting that at that time he appeared to be on sided against Robert of Redheugh. And lastly, in 1581 he had a bond of caution with Lancel Armstrong of Whithaugh and a number of other Elliots, entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale. In 1581/2 he was declared a rebel for the non-appearance of his supporters who had been accused of raiding Eildrig, Bellendean and other farms. Along with Robert of Redheugh and 2 Armstrongs, he was also denounced in 1582/3 by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. The Elliots of Braidlie are listed in an English letter of 1583 as Martin, his son Simon, Gavin ‘the Clerk’, Hbbie, Archie (all 4 of these probably his sons), Jock ‘Copshaw’, John of Thorlieshope, Will of the Steele, Dand and John of Braidlie (probably also his sons) and Simon of Harden; they were probably all closely related to him. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 to give their advice regarding the quieting of the troubles in Liddesdale and Teviotdale, and it appears that the feud between factions within the Elliot clan were resolved at this time. In 1584 he was listed second among the Elliots when they gave a bond of assurance to the English Wardens at Hermitage Castle. In 1586 he and his eldest son Simon had a lease of lands from the Earl of Bothwell, including Kilford, ‘Hietrie Clewis’ and ‘Ricartoun Cleucht’. He was last definitively mentioned at a Wardens’ meeting at the Bell Kirk in April 1590. Also in 1590 he was on a list of Elliots accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year, stealing 60 cows, 2 horses, taking goods worth £100 and burning 5 houses; others listed include his sons Archie and Hob, as well as Robert of Redheugh (his nephew); of course he may not have been on this raid himself. In 1591 he had a charter of ‘liferent’ of ‘the ten pund land of auld extent of Philllop’ from James VI, confirmed by Parliament the following year; he must have been very old by this time, or this was the later Martin of Braidlie. He is mentioned in one version of the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer’, where he is referred to as being ‘of the Preakin Tower’, i.e. Prickinghaugh, which may have been his home for a while. He was among several Elliots who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6 (although, since he was probably deceased by then, this may have been his grandson, also called Martin of Braidlie). He may have married an Armstrong (supported by his first son being called Simon) and their children were: Simon, probably first Elliot of Philhope; William of Braidlie, who married Mary Scott of Bucleuch and was hanged in 1607: Robert of Braidlie, called ‘Martin’s Hob of Prickenaugh’, whose son and grandson were both declared fugitives; Andrew ‘Dand’; Archibald, called ‘Martin’s Archie of Clintwood’, banished from both Kingdoms; Gavin; Gilbert, ‘Gib’; John, called ‘Martin’s John of Burnmouth’, denounced a rebel; and a daughter who married Francis Foster of Kershopefoot. Martin ‘Martin o Heuchhouse’ (16th C.) one of the 10 thieves captured in Hawick in 1567 and held in Edinburgh tolbooth, unlike many of the others who were drowned. He was probably a descendant of the William ‘in Heuchous’ recorded in 1516. If he was not executed in 1567, then he could be the same man as ‘Reid Mertin’. Martin (16th C.) presented to the Parsonage and Vicarage of Castleton in 1574. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Martins (or closely related to them). The charge was vacant in the following year. Martin ‘Reid Mertin’ of Heuchhouse (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as ‘Rid Martaine Elliot of Heuchhous’ on a list of men accused of raiding into England. ‘Hob’ of Heuchhouse is also listed as his brother. In 1584 he was ‘Mar-tinge Elliot of the Hewghhehowse’ when, along with John of Heuchhouse, he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens at Hermitage. In 1587/8 he is recorded as ‘ ‘Reade’ Martyn El-lott of the Hewghouse’ when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots; John of Heuchhouse was also listed, and so presumably closely related. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1584 along with his brother David, as sons of ‘Elder Will’ on the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. They gave assurance on behalf of their whole part of the clan, but it is unclear where they were from; certainly Martin of Heuchhouse was listed separately. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as ‘Rytchis Martyn’, on a list of the Elliot chiefs of the time, said to be closely related to the leader of the clan. Presumably his father was Richard. Martin of Braidlie (d.1607) son of Simon of Philhope (‘Mertin’s Sym’) and grandson of the earlier Martin of Braidlie. He could be the ‘Martyne’ listed by Monipennie in about 1594 among the chiefs of the Border, along with the Laird of Redheugh (but this list was probably compiled earlier, and referred to his namesake, who was already deceased by then). He was also sometimes known as ‘of Prickenhaugh’ and so presumably inherited those lands from his relatives. He was probably the ‘Martine Elliott of the Prickinge hawghe’ accused in 1590, along with ‘Martin’s Gib’ and Airchie and John (sons of Martin, and hence probably his uncles) of stealing horses from Englishman Thomas Rutherford. In 1592 he had a charter of the lands of Philhope, along with his eldest son Simon. This charter also included rights of the Kirk of Castleton. In 1593 he was probably the ‘Martyn Elliott of Bradley’ who was part of the large raiding party of Elliotts and Armstrongs into Tynedale. In 1599 he and Robert of Redheugh made an agreement (on behalf of their relatives and friends) to settle their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Also in 1599 he was part of a bond with the Warden (Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) to be responsible for the behaviour of the inhabitants of Liddesdale. He must thus have been an important Liddesdale Elliot chieftain, and sometimes confused with his grandfather, the more powerful Martin of Braidlie, who died about 15 years earlier; he was described as good old Martin’s oye’ (i.e. grandson). He may have acquired Braidlie in only 1606, from Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, the cautioners for the payment of 4000 merks being Gilbert of Mains, William of Falnash and Robert Scott of Haining. He was captured in 1606 by the Earl of Dunbar (then Commissioner on the Border) and hanged at the court at Foulden (near Berwick), along with his uncle William as well as the Armstrongs of Mangerton and Whithaugh. After his death Braidlie (in the Barony of Hawick) went to William of Falnash, who had been one of his guarantors in an arrangement between him and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. The name of his wife is unrecorded, but their children included: Simon of Philhope; and a son, whose name is unknown, but whose son Robert was served heir to his grandfather’s great-grandfather, Martin Elliot of Bradly, in 1653. Martin (d.bef. 1618) holder of lands in Lilliesleaf. He married Agnes Lorraine and had a son and William. It has been suggested that he was the same man as Martin of Braidlie; although this seems unlikely, the similarity of names may indicate a relationship with that family. Martin (17th C.) servant of John Letham. In 1656 he was ordered to pay 30 shillings ‘for absence from his service for 5 weeks’, although he was let off the money claimed ‘for the Trooper coming to the said John Lethane’. Martin (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Margaret Stewart in 1821 and their children included: John (b.1723); Adam (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1729). Mary (18th C.) cook at Dinalaury in 1791, when she worked for William Oliver. Matthew (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Matthew (15th C.) listed as former tenant in ‘helmys’ among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His lands were possibly Helm in Cavers Parish (or potentially Whames in the Borthwick valley), and he is listed separately from another Matthew. Matthew (18th/19th C.) from Canoubie, he lived in Castleton Parish. He married Janet (also known as ‘Fanny’) Wilson. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1782); Andrew (b.1785); John (b.1787); Matthew (1788–1874); Henry (b.1791); and Janet (b.1796). Matthew (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Elliot and their children included Betty, Margaret and William. It is possible this is an earlier marriage of the Matthew who married Dorothy Purdom. Matthew (1788–1874) son of Matthew and Janet Wilson. He was a labourer in Newcastle on Tyne, living at about 9 Doncaster Street in 1841 and 26 South Hermitage Street in 1861. He is probably the labourer in Newcastle listed among male heads of households in 1835. He married Dorothy (‘Dolly’) Purdom and their children included: Annie (b.1821), who married farm-worker James; Matthew (b.1821); John (b.1823), a ploughman at Barnes, who may have emigrated to Huron County, Ontario; Isabel (b.1825); and Thomas (b.1827), who possibly emigrated to Canada with his brother. Matthew (1788/9–1877) tenant in Netherraw. He was listed as head of household at Netherraw in 1835–41. He was farmer of 20 acres at Netherraw in Castleton Parish in 1841 and 1851. He was the last farmer of Netherraw, with the buildings being demolished after his death, and much of the land planted. He married Janet Scott (c.1788–1875) and their children were: John (b.1808); Betty (b.1811); Matthew (b.1812); Robert (b.1814); Helen (b.1816); Ann (or Annie, 1819–84); William (1820–36); Andrew (b.1821); Isabel (b.1823), who married a Wilson; Margaret (b.1825); Janet (or Jane, b.1827); and Frances (or Fanny, 1829–1914). Matthew (b.1821) resident of Castleton Parish, son of Matthew and Dorothea Purdom. In 1851 he was a farm servant at Hadshouse. He married Cecilia Turnbull and their children included: Stavert Turnbull (b.1844); and Elizabeth (1850–96), who married James Duncan. In 1851 he was a farm servant at Hudston Parish, son of Matthew and Dorothy Purdom.

Children included: Stavert Turnbull (b.1844); and Elizabeth (1850–96), who married James Duncan.

Nicholas (17th C.) recorded as deceased in 1408 in a document relating to St. Giles’ lands in Edinburgh, where he is ‘Elwald’. Nicholas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when his son Gilbert was among Liddesdale men cited for non-appearance at the Justiciary. Ninian (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 to a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh. Other witnesses were Robert, William, John and Andrew ‘Elwald’ (presumably important men of the clan), as well as 2 Croziers, a Graham and a Forster. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as a tenant of the steadings of ‘Cleirlands, Robsteid, Thomsostead, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’. Another (or the same) Ninian is recorded, along with John, as tenant of Roughley in the same roll. Ninian ‘Ringan the Porter’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant at Ewes Doors about 1567. His nickname could be an epithet from the ‘Doors’. In 1569 he was ‘Nini-ane Ellot, callit the Portar of Ewis durris’ when order to enter as pledge for ‘haill Ellottis dwelland at Ewisdaill’. Possibly the same ‘Renyen’ was recorded as being ‘of the Dewhowses’ in Ewesdale, along with John, when they signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. ‘John the Portars son’, recorded in 1578/9 and also in about 1594, was his son; in 1578/9 he was ‘unquhile Ringane the Portar’ when his son John (or ‘Blasteis Jok’) was cited, and hence he was already deceased by then. ‘Archie Elliot, sone to Ringhais Will Ellot the portar in Glenvoren’ could be his grandson. Ninian and John, who were tenants of Roughley in 1541, may also be related. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in a huge list of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell in 1585, when they had remission for their previous crimes. He is the first named of ‘Nini-ane, Thome, George and Will Ellatiss’, suggesting they all resided in the same place. They are listed among Armstrong, Littles etc. of the area around Eskdale. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Dodburn (16th C.) recorded among a large number of Ellots and others complained about for a raid into England in 1589. His name is listed as ‘Rynion Elliot of Dodborne’ and ‘Renyon Elliot of Dodburne’. He is surely related to the slightly earlier Simon of Dodburn and Will in Dodburn. Ninian ‘Hob’s Ringan’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Rinyeane Elliott, called Hob’s Rinyeane’. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (d.c.1608) son of William of Fiddleton. He was listed (along with his father and brother John) among men declared... as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. In 1608 he was sentenced along with William, son of John Elliot of Burngrains with resisting the King’s Guard. They were also recorded as ‘Niniane Ellote, sone to umq the John’s Gavin’ of Fiddleton who was tried in then to be hanged. He must have been related to Castle Hill, to have their right hands cut off and They were sentenced to be taken to Edinburgh tured after the house they were in was set on fire. The Guard, killing William Bailie and being cap- and men of the King’s Guard, but they shot at the Guard, hiding in ‘the West cun- dre’ they were sought out by Sir Robert Hepburn and other crimes. Hiding in `the West cun- deltoun’, which is confusing. The pair had been declared rebels some years earlier for theft, murder and other crimes. Hiding in ‘the West cun- trie’ they were sought out by Sir Robert Hepburn and men of the King’s Guard, but they shot at the Guard, killing William Bailie and being captured after the house they were in was set on fire. They were sentenced to be taken to Edinburgh Castle Hill, to have their right hands cut off and then to be hanged. He must have been related to the ‘John’s Gavin’ of Fiddleton who was tried in 1606. Ninian (d.1660) 4th son of Elliot of Unthank (whose name is unknown), he was tenant in Eweslees. His brothers were probably Adam of Meikledale, William of Mosspeebie and William of Unthank. He received a lease of Eweslees from the Earl of Buccleuch in 1643. His eldest son appears to have predeceased him, and when he died he left 2 grandsons who were minors, with their appointed guardians being William of Unthank, Gavin of Outersiderig and James in Har- wood. He married Margaret ‘Acheson’ (probably Aitchison). His children included: a son, whose children were Ninian of Eweslees and Robert of Eweslees; Robert in Gorrenberry; and William in Lynmicleuch. However, this information is all quite uncertain. Ninian (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son Ninian was baptised in 1694. It is possible he is the same as Ninian of Falnash. Ninian of Falnash (d.bef. 1703) son of Gavin and grandson of Robert. He had a charter of Falnash dated 1667 from Archibald of Falnash, his cousin. He had a son, Walter. He may be the Ninian who leased Todshawhill, Whames and part of Branxholme Muir in 1672 and 1673. Ninian (b.c.1709) born at Shaws in Castleton, he may have been son or grandson of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve. He married Agnes Paterson and they had a son Ninian (b.1735) who lived at Riccarton. His wife’s gravestone is in Teviothead cemetery; she died at the age of 58. He could be the shepherd in Commonbrae marked on the same stone, who died at Slatehills in 1762. He may have been father of Adam (1734–60), also marked on the gravestone, who died at Common- brae. Ninian (18th C.) son of Robert in Know. He was tenant in Priesthill, which was probably the farmstead near Whithaugh. Ninian (1735–1816) son of Ninian and Agnes Paterson. He was a shepherd in Castleton, associated with Riccarton and Dod. He was at Riccarton in 1778. He was also recorded as shepherd at Riccarton on both the 1797 Horse and Dog Tax Rolls and also in the Castleton Parish section of the Roxburgh- shire Militia in 1797. He appears to have married 3 times, to Margaret Brydon (b.1731) at Riccar- ton in 1756, then Esther Crozier (1731–66) and lastly to Janet Douglas (1745–1834) at Upper- raw. His children probably included: Margaret (b.1756); John (b.1760) in Middlemoss; Margaret (again, b.1763); Adam (b.1765); Ester (b.1766), who married Robert Ballantyne from Pinglehole; Mary (b.1772); Robert (b.1774); Ninian (b.1776); Catherine (b.1777); Christian (b.1778); William (b.1784); and Walter (b.1789). He died at Shaws. Ninian (1776–1847) son of shepherd Ninian and Janet Douglas, he was born at Riccarton. In 1841 he was listed as ‘Lab. or Roadman’ and living at about 13 North Hermitage Street. He married Margaret (1779–1863) daughter of John Nichol and Elizabeth Riddell. Their children in- cluded: Ninian (1808–89); John (b.1810); Helen (b.1812); James (1814–98), road contractor; and Janet (1821–1901), who had a daughter to John Nichol (presumably a cousin of some sort). Ninian (1789–1865) eldest son of John and Janet Robson, he was born in Castleton Parish and may have lived at Blackburnfoot. He emigrated with his family to Middlesex County, Ontario, and all but their first child was born there. He married Agnes Turnbull (b.c.1790). Their children in- cluded: Janet (b.1815), born in Castle- ton; Mary (b.1821); Elizabeth (b.1823); Esther (b.1829); Francis (b.1829); and Agnes (1837–41). Ninian (1799–1885) born at Sundhope in Castle- ton Parish, son of shepherd James and Janet Grieve. He married Janet, daughter of Elliot Grieve, who was born at Blinkbonny. They emi- grated to Canada where their children were born, Janet, James, Elizabeth, Elliot Grieve, Gardner, John, William, James, Catherine, Thomas and Margaret. They lived in North Dorchester Township, Middlesex County, Ontario, where he was a farmer. Ninian (1808–89) son of Ninian and brother of John. He was a road contractor in Newcastleton, living on Douglas Square in 1851 and 1861. He married Jane (1812–65), daughter of John Nichol and Marion Murray. Their children included: John (1836–1905), also a road- man; Margaret (b.1838), who died young; Marion (1840–99). Patrick (15th C.) brother of John of Thorlieshope. He is recorded in 1488, when he was witness to a sasine for the lands of Girkwood. It is possible that the same Patrick was listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5.

Patrick (16th C.) entered at a Justice Court in Jedburgh in about 1510, by Robert of Redheugh, along with ‘Gret Johnnie in Priesthaugh.

Patrick ‘Pate’ of Ryleknow (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among men that Sir John Forster served as surety for. This makes it seem like he was from the English side. Phillip (18th/19th C.) saddler of Hawick (probably from the East-end). He was the Council’s elected Cornet in 1790, but after he drew up a narrow list of invitees some of the young men of the town (presumably mainly the West-enders) chose George Wilson as their own Cornet instead. The two cavalcades approached the West Port from different sides of the Raws and Bailie Hardie blocked the rebel cavalcade (felling the first man with an oak stick), allowing the elected Cornet’s party to proceed unmolested to the Moor (as described by Robert Wilson).

Ralph (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Two men listed as ‘radulphi elwald’ are there, although this forename is not otherwise common among the Elliots. One of them had a brother, William, who is also listed in 1494/5. Richard ‘Little’ (14th C.) recorded in Cumberland in 1389, appearing before the justices of gaol delivery. His nickname was recorded as ‘parvus’ and his surname as ‘Elwald’, the same as William ‘One-Eyed’, who was also recorded. Richard (16th C.) recorded in 1548 as ‘Ryche Elliott of the Park’. Along with Robert of Redheugh and ‘Nelly’s John’, he had a bond to enter 2 prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst. He was presumably related to other Elliots of Park.

Richard ‘Law’s Richie’ (16th C.) tenant in Swinstead. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘Richie Elliot callit Lawis Richie in Swintes’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. ‘Lawis Jok’ and ‘Lawis Thome’ in Priesthaugh were also named and presumably his brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Richard (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 as ‘Ritchie Elliott, callit Rowanes Willis Ritchie’ among Elliots accused of raiding the farm of Harwood on Teviot. He was presumably son of William and grandson of Roland. He is listed after ‘Rowans Hobbe’ and his brother Jamie, who may be related. He was declared a rebel after not appearing. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is written as ‘Riche Elliot, ‘Bessies wifes Riche’”, but it is unclear exactly what this means and who he was related to. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (d.1606) called ‘Richie Elliot of Heuchous’ when he was found guilty of stealing a sheep. The Border Commissioners wished to spare him, but he was nevertheless sentenced to death by the Privy Council. He could be the same man as ‘Ryche Elliott of the Lewlandes’, listed just before William, son of John of Heuchhouse in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid into England. He was also listed along with Will, also of ‘the Hewghhouse’ in relation to another 2 raids in 1595. Richard (17th C.) see Robert. Richard (1817–91) eldest son of William, farmer at Doorpool. Along with his brothers William (1819–91) and John (1823–1910) he was farmer at Hartwoodmyres for about 50 years. In 1861 they were farming 900 acres and were all unmarried. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Robertito Elwald’ in 1481 when he and his mother leased the lands of ‘Glenstokane’ in Galloway. Perhaps the same Robert had a sasine for the lands of ‘Rachane’ in Peeblesshire, also in 1481. It is unclear how this man (or men) may have been related to local Elliots. Robert of Redheugh (d.1497) first Elliot chief about whom we have documented information. Since it is said that he died as an old man, he may have been born in the 1420s. He is described as 10th Chief of the Elliots, even although the names of the first 9 chiefs are unknown (but it is a safe bet that some of them were Robert!). It is claimed the first chief was granted lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in about 1320; this earlier Robert was probably the first Elliot Laird of Redheugh and Larriston. A record found among papers at Ferniehirst was said to refer to an early Elliot of Redheugh, ‘Chieftan of the South’, who was killed in battle with 3 of his sons (possibly Holmdon Hill in 1402), and whose daughter Mary married Cuthbert Blackadder, whose eldest son was alive in 1447; this earlier Elliot may have been his grandfather. He was established at Redheugh from at least 1476, when he was granted lands of ‘Dalman’ (possibly Demainholm), ‘Bluntwood’ and ‘the Crouke’ by Archibald Douglas (‘Bell-the-cat’), Earl of Angus and Lord of Liddesdale; the charter describes him as ‘our vbeluhufy fameliar squiar, Robert Elwald of ye Redheuch for his guid and faithful servis to us don and for to be don’, and it is signed at Lintalee. In 1479 he was further granted ‘Layhalcht, Carolschelis, hartsgarth et le faulde’ (i.e. Leahaugh, Corrie’s Shiel and Harts-garth) in the lordship of ‘ledesdale’. In 1484 he was Robert ‘Elwald’ of the Redheuch when the Earl of Angus directed ‘Walter Scot de Edschau, Radulpho Ker, fratri Walteri Ker de Cesfurd et Willielmo Elwaldo de goranbery’ to infeft him in the lands of Over and Nether ‘Larrostane’. In 1489 there was a further precept for ‘redeluch’, ‘layhauch’, ‘hartsgarth’, ‘caraschele’, ‘dawmane’ and ‘larostanys superior et inferior’. In 1491 the Earl of Angus swapped Liddesdale for Bothwell, ending the association of the Elliots with their superiors the Douglases. Robert (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. His name is recorded as ‘roberti elwald comitis’, with his nickname perhaps being ‘the Count’ (to distinguish him from ‘the King’ and other contemporary men of the same name). Robert of Langhaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice- aire. He is recorded there as ‘Roberti elwald de langhalch’. He is also recorded in the document listing men who pledged themselves to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498 for good behaviour. He is there recorded as ‘Robert Elwald of the Langhalch’. This is probably the Longhaugh on the Hermitage Water. Robert ‘Young Rider’ (15th/16th C.) listed in a large number of men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. He is also listed among men who pledged their good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He is recorded as ‘Robert Elwald, callit zong ridar’. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c.1516) 12th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert and grandson of the previous Laird of Redheugh. In 1491 he is probably the Robert, son of ‘Robert Elwole, of the Hermitage’ who was delivered (along with the Master of Angus) as security by the Earl of Angus to King James. He was served heir to his grandfather in 1497/8 in the lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c.1516) 12th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert and grandson of the previous Laird of Redheugh. In 1491 he is probably the Robert, son of ‘Robert Elwole, of the Hermitage’ who was delivered (along with the Master of Angus) as security by the Earl of Angus to King James. He was served heir to his grandfather in 1497/8 in the lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch, according to a ‘retour’ in the Douglas of Cavers papers (where he is ‘Robert Elwald’). 2 other Robert Elliots, and 2 William Elliots were on the panel for this inquest. He had sasine for the Liddesdale estates in 1497 and in 1501 he had another retour (at Jedburgh) for his grandfather’s lands, held of the Earl of Bothwell. He additionally inherited Priesthaugh, with the Abbots of Melrose as superiors. In 1502 he was ‘Robertus elwald in redheuch' when he and George Turnbull in Hall-burn were fined for failing to present David Turnbull in Bunchester at court in Jedburgh. He was witness to a sasine at Hermitage (for Adam, 2nd Earl of Bothwell) in 1508, along with William Elliot and Robert in Dinlees. He may be the Robert ‘Elwald’ who was on the 1509 panel for deciding on the inheritance of Cavers by James Douglas. He was ‘Robert Elwald of Redheuch’ when summoned to come before the King to promise to keep good order in 1510. Following this he had a respite in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1510 for all crimes carried out by him and his associates (except for treason) to be unpunished for 19 years to come. Also listed explicitly were Robert of Dinlees and John in Sundhope, suggesting they might have been brothers or sons (other associates were 2 Nixons, 2 Croziers, 2 Hendersons and an Armstrong). His children were Robert (possibly killed at Flodden) and a daughter who may have married David Scott of Howpasley (or possibly Tushielaw), with William of Larriston perhaps being another son. In general it seems difficult to separate him from the next Robert (in deciding how many generations there really were, and who may have been killed at Flodden). It is unclear if he was the ‘Robert Elwald of Redheuch’ who had a respite for his crimes in 1515/6, along with his brother William of Larriston and some Nixons, Foresters and Croziers, numbering 40 men. If this was him, then he seems likely to have died in 1516 and was succeeded by his grandson Robert in 1526. Robert of Reidheugh (d.1513) referred to as 13th Chief of the Elliots, even although he appears to have died in his father’s lifetime. He was son of Robert, although the number of different Roberts in the preceding couple of decades seems quite uncertain. His sons were: Robert, who succeeded his grandfather in 1526; possibly Martin of Braedlie (although he seems more likely to have been his grandson); Archibald of Falnash and Gorrenberry; and probably John of Copshaw. He was probably the ‘Master Elliot’ said to have been killed at Flodden. However, this may be confusion with his father (since it seems hard to believe he was very old at Flodden), and there is no documentary evidence to separate the various Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Elwald of Dunle’ in a 1510 respite to Robert of Redheugh and many others in Liddesdale. It seems likely he was a close relative of the Elliot chief. He is also listed as ‘in Denly’ in a 1516 ‘respite’ to William of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots. He was presumably tenant farmer at Dinlees on the Hermitage Water. Robert (d.1530) referred to as a ‘common thief’ in 1530 when he and Adam Nixon were allowed to escape from the custody of John, Lord Hay of Yester, and for which Lord Hay’s brother (also John) was imprisoned in Linlithgow. Probably the same Robert ‘Elwald’ was hanged for theft in Linlithgow that same year, along with Matthew and William Nixon and Robert Noble. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. Robert (d.bef. 1539) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Book in 1539/40 when his widow, Janet Scott, purchased lands in Apple-treehall from Robert Scott of Howpasley. He is recorded as ‘Robert Elwand of Toungtis?’, but could possibly be a deceased Robert of Redheugh. Robert (d.bef. 1540) referred to as ‘Robert Elward’ in 1540 when his widow Margaret Roger raised an action against 2 Murrays for stealing cattle from Borthwickshielis (where he was a tenant) in 1526. His sons included David, Alexander, John and Ringand (Ninian), all of whom were wanted as thieves. Robert of Ramsiegill (16th C.) recorded as ‘Hobbe Elwald of Ramsegill’ in 1532 when the King charge a commission with his capture (along with Croziers and Foresters) for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull. In 1541 he was ‘antiquo Roberto Elwald de Ramysgill’ when listed among the tenants of Stirkshielhope; ‘Roberto Elwald in Ramsigall’ was also listed and presumably a different man (although it is unclear if they were related). Robert of Reidheugh (c.1505–bef. 1557) 14th Chief of the Elliots, served heir to his grandfather in 1526, with his father probably being killed at Flodden. His grand-uncle (or perhaps uncle) William of Larriston led the clan during his minority. In 1526 he inherited his grandfather’s Liddesdale lands of ‘Reidheuch, Layhauch, Hartsgarth, Careschel, Dalemane’ and ‘Over and Nether Larastanis’. In 1531 he was probably the Robert ‘Elowlde’ of the ‘Armytage’ who was one of 3 attendants who accompanied the Earl of Bothwell to a secret meeting with the Earl of Northumberland. He was further recorded as Captain of Hermitage in a document of 1532 and another in 1548/9 (when he had a bond to enter John ‘Cragill’ as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst). In 1537/8 he and his brother Archibald were sureties for William in Leaughall, plus brothers James and Simon, who had broken open a shop in Selkirk. He may be the ‘Robert Elwald serianndo’ (i.e. ‘sergeant’) who was recorded as tenant of Shaws in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale;
he may also be the Robert who was tenant of the lands of Copshaw. He may be the ‘Robert Ell-wald’ listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. In 1546 his son was described as ‘sone to Robyne of the Redhwych’. He was listed as ‘Rot. Elhund of Reideheuch’ in a 1550 bond signed by him and 10 Scots in which they promised the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1552/3 he and Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton were appointed by the Privy Council to meet the Governor at Dumfries and accept the charge of keeping the peace in Liddesdale. He was succeeded by his son, Robert. He seems likely to have also been father of Martin of Braidlie (who led the burning of Hawick in 1565), although genealogies often have this Martin as his brother. Jock of Copshaw may have been another son (since he appears to have been Martin of Braidlie’s brother).

Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘Roberto Elwald de Flaswod’ in 1535 in a trial in Jedburgh in 1535, where Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused of bringing him and William ‘Mend the caill’ from Liddesdale to plunder cattle at Midlem and elsewhere. His lands could be ‘Flass’ near Westruther, but seems more likely to be ‘Flask Wood’ north of Langholm. Robert (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Rammissgill’ in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants at Stirkshielhope. Old Robert ‘Elwald de Rammissgill’ was also listed among the tenants, and is hence presumably a different man. He is surely related to the William in Ramsiegill who is also mentioned in 1541, and is probably related to the Robert in Ramsiegill who is recorded in the 1580s. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Hobbe Elwode Clemyt [Crozier’s] syster sone’, when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. The Clement mentioned here, who was presumably his mother’s brother, was a prominent member of the Crozier family at that time, and possibly Clem Crozier of Stobs. It is not impossible that he was the same man as Robert of Horsleyhill (which also had a Stobs connection). It is also possible he was the same man as the ‘Clement’s Hob’ mentioned several times in the 1560s and 1570s. Robert ‘Gavin’s Hob’ (16th C.) witness to the bond in 1546 to enter 3 Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst. One of the other witnesses was a Bailie of Hawick, and hence he was probably fairly local, but it is unclear which Gavin was his father. Robert (d.1564) 2nd Laird of Horsleyhill, eldest son of Gavin, 1st Laird. His brothers were William (who later succeeded to Horsleyhill), Andrew, David, Gavin of Stobs, and Archibald. He was said to have been involved in the murder of Hugh Douglas in about 1547, along with his father Gavin, and brothers William and Andrew. In 1563/4 he is ‘in Horslehill’ when he appeared on behalf of his brother Dand, whose sheep had been stolen from Baililee by the Scotts of Tushielaw: their cautioner was John Preston, Burgess of Edinburgh. He is probably the Robert who was listed in 1564 along with William of Horsleyhill and Gavin and Archibald (as well as other Elliots and Scotts) in the trial of the murder of David Scott of Hassendean, for which he was said to be the instigator; however, it is confusing that he was not named as Laird at the time, perhaps because he had not formally succeeded his father by then. He had at least 2 children: Gavin (d.1565), who succeeded; and William (b.1547) who succeeded after his brother. He was executed for the murder of David Scott. His uncle Gavin (later of Stobs) was appointed as guardian to his children, although his half-brother William (later Burgess of Peebles) disputed this, but was deemed too young. Robert of Reidheugh (d.bef. 1564) 13th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert, whom he probably succeeded some time before 1557. He may have appeared along with his father at a Judiciary Court held by Lord Maxwell in 1537/8. In 1546/7 he was ‘sone to Robyn of the Redhwych’ when he was among several men entering Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst, and in 1548 (referred to as ‘younger of the Reidhewcht’) had a similar bon for entering John, son of Robin of Thorlnohope. His ‘eym’ (i.e. uncle) Archibald was also referred to there and he signed with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). He had a bond for entering Nixons in 1557 and in that year his brother Martin is also referred to (confusing, since Martin of Braidlie is sometimes placed in the family tree as his uncle). He was ‘of Reidhuche’ in about 1557 when he rented Priesthaugh and Penangushope from Melrose Abbey. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. In 1561 he was ‘of Reid- heuch’ when listed (along with his Gavin, brother of Archie’s Will) among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of those who were guilty of theft; he was called ‘of Redheuch’ when later listed (after Martin ‘of Reidech’) among men charged by the Privy Council to appear before Queen Mary.
regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563 he was appointed Deputy Keeper of Hermitage Castle, while the Earl of Bothwell was in exile, with William Douglas of Cavers acting as security for him. He had a bond of 1563, along with Martin of Braidlie (his brother) for entering Jock, son of Gavin Elliot to Sir Thomas Farniechirist. He married Jean Scott, sister of Buccleuch, around 1550 (and after his death she married Gavin Elliot of Stobs). His children were: Robert of Redheugh; William of Hartsgarth; Gilbert of Stobs, ‘Gibbie wi’ the Golden Garties’ (although this is not certain); Archibald; Gavin of Brugh; and a daughter, who was the 2nd wife of Will, 2nd son of Richard Graham of Netherby. A report on the West Marches compiled in the period 1563–66 states that ‘oulde Robyn Elliot and young Robyn, his son, are both dead’. Robert ‘Reid Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1569 among the tenants that Gavin Elliot in Skelhill was surety for. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert of the Shaws (16th C.) said to have been the Elliot who convinced those who had been rounded up in Hermitage Castle to allow the wounded Earl of Bothwell to enter in 1566, by agreeing to let all of them go. It is said that he was granted the rent of the lands of ‘Blackgrave’ as a reward. It is possible that ‘Shaw’ is the same as ‘Copshaw’, but is more likely to be the lands of that name on the Hermitage Water. In 1569 he and his brother Will of the Steele were excepted from the pledge that John of Thorlieshope had for the whole of that branch of the Elliots. Also in 1569 he was ‘Hob of the Schawis’, listed along with Airchie ‘Fyre the Brais his brother’, when John of Thorlieshope was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. In 1572 he was among the Elliots who signed a bond with John Johnstone of the Steel (who had been broken out of ward). He is also ‘Hobb Elliot of the Shaves’ when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘the Garret sheills’. In 1591 he was part of a group (along with Airchie of the Hill and others) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. Either he or his son was probably the ‘Hob of the Schawis’ who was one of the Liddesdale Elliots to sign bonds with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. He was probably also related to Adam and Gilbert of the Shaws who are recorded in 1583. Robert ‘Hob’, ‘the Lady’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among Elliots of Ewesdale. ‘Will Elliot callit the Lord’ was held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge him, as well as John of Fiddleton and Hob of Unthank. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded being ‘callit Hob of Unthank’ in 1569. This was along with Hob ‘the Lady’ and John of Fiddleton, when Will ‘the Lord’ was held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for them. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Fahnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. He may have been related to Will, Dand and Jock, other Elliots also listed as tenants. Robert ‘Hob’, ‘Sweet Milk’, ‘Great Legs’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when Andrew Ker of Faldonside had a bond with him. His name appears in the Register of the Privy Council as ‘Hob Elliot callit Sweit Mylk alias Greit Leggis’. It is possible that he was related to William ‘Sweet Milk’, whose death in a duel at Newmill is immortalised in the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. His second nickname presumably means that he was tall. However, there is no information about how he was related to other Elliots. Robert ‘Martin’s Hob of Prickenhaugh’ (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He was also sometimes called ‘Hob of Braidlie’. His lands were at Prickinghaugh in Liddesdale. He was one of the band of 300 or so Elliots, Armstrongs and others who plundered Torwoodlee in 1568. He is probably the Robert of Braidlie for whom there was surety before the Privy Council in 1573. He is listed as ‘Hobbie’ in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Gavin and Archie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charges. He was also implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He was ‘Hob’ of Braidlie when sentenced to imprisonment in 1580/1 for several crimes of theft, along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. He is probably the ‘Hob Elliot of Braidley’ for whose re-entry in 1581 Martin of Braidlie (presumably his father) and John Turnbull of Minto served as caution; he was pledge for the ‘gang of Gorrumberrie’, and was released from ward in the Castle and Tolbooth of Edinburgh. In 1581 his father complained about how he and his brother Dand had been attacked while riding near Headshaw; Walter Scott of Headshaw and 5 or 6 others attacked them and ‘struckin the hand from the ane and hurt the uther in perrell of his lyff’, although it is unclear whether he or his brother lost his hand. He is listed as ‘Hobbe Elliot’ among a 1583 list of Elliots of Braidlie and was probably also the ‘Robin Elliot of Braidley’ listed among the landed men of the Border in about 1590. He is on a list of Elliots (including his father Martin and brother Airchie) accused in 1590 of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year. He is probably the Hob listed among Elliots (including his brother Gib, as well as Airchie of Clintwood, who was also his brother) and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. Two of his sons were later denounced as rebels (‘Kirstie’ and one other). In 1611 he was ‘Robert Elliot, called Martenis Hob’ when he was cautioner for ‘Jok Elliot, called the Murt’, for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. He was also one of the cautioners in 1611 for ‘Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie’, along with Robert of Redheugh, William of Gorrenberry, Archie of Clintwood and William of Prickinghaugh. He may be the same as ‘Robert Elliot, called of Braidlie’ when witness to the document of 1613 infesting Robert of Redheugh in his lands. Robert ‘Hob’ of Heuchhouse (16th C.) listed among Elliots who signed a bond in 1570, promising to give pledges for the release of John of Heuchhouse (who was surely a brother or son) and Hob, son of Elder Will. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned; it was reported that he had previously been surety for John of the Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son to Elder Will. In 1579/80 he is recorded along with his brother ‘Reid Mertin’ on a list of men accused of raiding into England. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He is recorded in an 1583 letter from Musgrave to Burleigh, describing the leaders of the Elliots of Liddesdale. He is described as ‘Hobbe Elliot of the Hewghus’, and listed along with Robert of Redheugh and 3 of the chief’s brothers, so he was presumably closely related. His brother John is also mentioned, and he could be the John of Heuchhouse who is recorded about the same time. Robert ‘Scot’s Hob’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Scottis Hob’, along with his 2 unnamed sons, in a 1574 list of Scots rebels who were reset in England. In 1578/9 he is ‘Hob Elliot, callit Scottis Hob’ when it was declared by the Privy Council that he was meant to return to prison with William Cunningham of ‘Caprintoun’, with cautioner John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk. However, he had not re-entered ward with Cunningham, and hence his cautioner defaulted. He is recorded as ‘Scotes Hobbe’ in 1583 in a list of Elliots of Park. It is unclear whether his nickname meant ‘Scottish’ or that he was perhaps stepson of a Scott, or his father was nicknamed ‘Scott’. It is possible that ‘Hobbie’s Hob’, who is also listed, was his son. Gavin, who was convicted of theft in 1580/1, was probably also his son; he was ‘Scottis Hobbis Gawen’ in 1581. Another son, ‘Scottis Hobbis Jok’ is recorded in 1580, 1581 and 1584. Robert ‘Hob’ of the Park (16th C.) son of James of the Park. There is a pledge for him before the Privy Council in 1573; he was exchanged for John of the Park, who was to be warded with Sir William Scott of Balwearie, and although he had been freed, was ordered to present himself again to be warded. In 1576 there is a complaint that he had been freed from ward with William Porterfield. He is listed in 1578/9 in a re-statement of a promise made to the Privy Council as a ‘plege for the gerg thairof’, that he should stay in ward with William Porterfield of Duchall. His sureties were Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie. However, he was stated to have ‘not remanit bot eschaipit fra the said William Portarfeild’. He was listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. Also in 1580 he was held in ward by the Earl of Lennox in Dumbarton Castle. In 1581/2 he was declared a rebel after failing to appear to answer charges about farms near Hawick being raided. He was presumably important in the family of Elliots of the Park, and also related to the deceased John of the Park and ‘Symmy’ of the Park, who were also mentioned in the same 1578/9 document. Either the same or a different ‘Hob Elliot of the Park’ was declared a rebel of 1606. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) son of ‘Dand of Braidley’ and probably grandson of Martin of Braidley. In 1574 it is recorded that he was to remain in ward. In 1576 the man with whom he had been warded, George Maxwell of Newark, was ordered to appear before the Privy Council to explain why he had been freed. In 1580 he was warded with the Provost and Bailies of Edinburgh, along with John, son of ‘the Elder Tod’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given as ‘Hobbe Elliot, callit Kene’. The meaning of the nickname is unclear, but he may have been closely related with ‘Archie Kene’, and must have been a supporter of Lancel Armstrong of Whithaugh. Robert ‘Hob’ of

Glenvoran (16th C.) recorded as ‘Hobbe of Glenvore’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debateable Lands. His lands were in the upper Ewes valley. Probably the same man was ‘Robine Ellott the Bastarde of Glenvoren’ listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. Probably the same ‘Robene Ellott of Glenvorane’ was declared a fugitive in 1606. (‘Reid Hob Elliot’) suggests that he had red hair. He is probably also the Robert of Skelfhill who was one of those summoned by the Privy Council in 1575 to settle the feud between the Elliots and Pringles. Robert ‘Hob Billie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1588 when James Dalgleish and Nichol Bry-don were convicted of helping him, David Elliot, Armstrongs and others steal cattle from near Edinburgh. He is probably the ‘Hobbe Ellott ‘Hobbe bullie’’ listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbul, Laidlaws and Crozier, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; he is also ‘Hobb ‘Bullie’’ when accused of having been in another group who stole from the same farms earlier. Robert ‘Gavin’s Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons when there was a complaint from the English side of the Border that in 1588 they had stolen in ‘playne dayelight, thir hirdes’ and 24 head of cattle. He is recorded as ‘Gawens Hob Elliot’, but it is unclear who his father Gavin was. Robert (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Borthuikbra, servant to Wat Scott of Tushelaw’ in 1589 when he refused to restore 2 mares and a horse that had been stolen. He was presumably tenant at Borthwickbrae, but was not obviously related to the later Elliots of Borthwickbrae. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘Hob bullie’ in 1589, among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c. 1591) 16th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert. He was a minor when his father died sometime around 1563, and Martin of Braillie (probably his uncle or perhaps great-uncle) acted as clan chief, while his new stepfather was Gavin Elliott of Stobs and Skelfhill. In 1569 he was ‘Robert Ellott of the Skelfhill’ when he promised to enter as surety in place of his stepfather, if required. He became of age in about 1572 and took over as clan chief. He was recorded as Captain of Hermitage in 1573. Also in that year he was among a large group of Border lairds to sign a bond with the Regent Morton. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. Additionally in 1573 there was a decree by Douglas of Cavers for his removal from the lands of Langside (which he fought against, on the basis that his father and grandfather had held these lands). He was the Robert of Redheugh who signed a bond recognising Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst as Warden of the Middle Marches in the 1570s. He is probably the ‘Young Robin’ recorded ‘for the wrangus spoliaitoun and awaytaking of thair teindis’, along with Gaving of Horsleyhill and William Douglas of Crook, on the 1574 testament of Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1574 he witnessed a discharge between Douglas of Cavers and Cranston of that ilk. Additionally in 1574 he served as surety for a number of Borderers with the Privy Council, specifically for the lands of Priesthaugh, Peelbrae, Swinstead and Dodrig; he was found liable for 5000 merks for not removing the thieves and replacing them with ‘trew men’. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned, and was found liable for the fines, because the men he made pledges for had continued their rieving activities (in his case, ‘Joke the Gyde’ Elliot and Sim, son of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh). In 1579/80 he acted as surety for a group of Elliots and others accused of conducting raids into England; his brother Archie is also named there, and he himself was accused of being part of a raid on Coquet Water. In 1580 he, the Scotts of Buccleuch, Gledstains and others, followed a group of English and Scottish thieves who had raided Meikle Whitlaw; he was wounded in a fray with Armstrongs and Elliots on their return. In 1580/1 he was directed to give up his position as Captain of Hermitage. In 1581 he was allied with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Gledstains of Cocklaw when they made a set of complaints against Martin of Braillard, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; all were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters. Along with Martin of Braillard and 2 Armstrongs, he was also denounced in 1582/3 by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. He signed a bond of support for the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably in the early 1580s. He is ‘Robin Elliot, of the Redheugh’ when he complained of an English raid on his lands at the Steele in the 1580s. In a letter of 1583 from Musgrave to Burleigh he is ‘Robin Elliot of the Reddhughe, cheife of the Ellilotes’, along with his brothers William of Harts- garth, Gilbert, Archibald and Gavin, and many other Elliots, including Hob of the Heuchhouse and his brother John, Adam and Gilbert of the Shaws, Archibald ‘Fyre the Braes’ and ‘Richie’s Martin’, as well as Garth Simson, all of whom were said to be his ‘brethren, or his men that are daly at his commandement’. Also in 1583 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to an- swer the charge brought against him by Robert in Dodrig, that his men had repeatedly attacked the servants there, although he had no legal right to the lands. He was recorded in 1584 as ‘Robeine Elliot’ in a letter from the King and was temporarily imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle, along with Martin of Braiddie and Armstrong of Whithaugh. He was chief of the Elliots (named first, along with Martin of Braiddie and William of Falnash) in their assurance to the English Wardens to keep the peace in 1584, signed at Hermitage Castle. In 1583/4 and 1584/5 he was among the Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1590 he was named first on a list of Elliots accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year, stealing 60 cows, 2 horses, taking goods worth £100 and burning 5 houses. In August of 1590 he appeared before the King and Council to answer for some of his men, and this may be the last time he is recorded (he certainly died before June of the following year). He was probably the Laird of Redheugh listed by Monipennie (published around 1594, but compiled earlier) among Border chiefs, along with Robert (probably his son) and Martin (probably of Braiddie). He married Marion (or Marjorie), daughter of James Hamilton of Sprouston in 1572; through this marriage and its Bothwell connection, he became allied with the side of Mary, Queen of Scots. They had 5 children: Robert of Redheugh; William of the Rig and of Harts- garth, who married Jean Rutherford; a daughter, who married Hector Lorraine of Harwood; Nicola, who married Gerard, brother of Sir Thomas卡尔ton; and Gilbert, illegitimate (possibly by Helen Kidd). His sons were all minors at the time of his death. He may also be the Elliot of Red- heugh who is said to have married a daughter of Thomas Carlton of Carlton Hall. He could have been the ‘Robert Elliot callit Yhounge Robene’ who was recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme in 1574, along with William Douglas of Crook and Gavin Elliot of Hors- leyhill, as men who owed him for teinds several years earlier; if so, he probably owned (or leased) Penangushope. He may also be the ‘Robin Elliot’ who, along with his brother William, George Simpson and their accomplices were accused of raiding into England in 1582. Robert ‘Clement’s Hob’ (d.bef. 1578) one of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick in October 1567 by the Earl of Moray, in a surprise attack during the Mar- ket. He was one of the 10 who were afterwards held in Edinburgh tolbooth, unlike the 18 who were immediately drowned. His father was presum- ably Clement; although it is also possible that he was the same as the Robert who was nephew of Clement Crozier (and certainly Clement was a prominent name among Crozier and otherwise unknown among Elliots). In 1569 he and Archie Keen escaped from the Castle of Doune and then went on ‘a marauding expedition’; he is there listed as being ‘in Gorumberly’. Also in 1569 he is listed along with ‘Dand of Braidley’ when ‘Archie Kene’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. In 1570 he was one of several Elliots who signed a bond related to the release from ward of John of Heuchhouse and Hob, son of Elder Will. In 1574 he is ‘Hob Ellott callit Clemmettis Hob’ when listed among a list of mostly Crozier who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Douglas of Cavers; he is listed after Mirk Hob in Penchrise. In 1578/9 there was a reminder at the Privy Council that he had been one of the joint sureties for John of Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son of Elder Will; he is listed as ‘umquhile Hob Ellot, callit Clemmentis Hob’. His son Dand is recorded in 1581. Robert ‘Mirk Hob’ (16th C.) one of the 10 Liddesdale rievers held in Edinburgh tolbooth after being captured in Hawick in 1567. Surely the same man was ‘Hob Mirk Ellott’ in 1569 when John of the Park was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for him and ‘Gray Will Elliot’. He is prob- ably the same as ‘Mirk Hob in Penerys’ recorded in 1574 among a list of Croizers who Douglas of Cavers was supposed to have removed from his lands. His is also ‘Hob Elliot, callit Mirk Hob, in Penerys’ recorded in 1576 when several Border Lairds acted as joint sureties for him; they were Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert Elliot of Redheugh, Gavin Elliot of Falnash and Walter Scott of Goldielands. He was thus associated with the farm of Penchrise. By 1578/9 he was among many Borderers state to have ‘brokin and contra- venit the condition abonespecifit, having com- mittit diverse crymes of thift and resset of thift’; he was thus declared a fugitive.
C.) son to ‘Elder Will’, another of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick in 1567. In 1570 there was a charge brought against several Elliots involving him and John of Heuchhouse, complaining that they had been released from Blackness Castle, but their clan had failed to ‘enter the said pledges’ on eight days’ warning; among those who signed the bond was ‘the said Elder Will’, as well as Martin of Braudlie. There was a reminder of this pledge in 1578/9, where it was stated that he and John of Heuchhouse had not been imprisoned in the houses of John Cockburn of Ormiston and William Lauder of Haltoun, as pledged.

He was probably brother of John, who was convicted of theft in 1580/1. Robert ‘Vicar’s Hob’ (16th C.) one of the outlaws of Liddesdale apprehended in Hawick in 1567, where he is ‘Rob’. In 1574 he was listed among men who had been ordered removed from the lands of Priesthaugh and others by Robert Elliot of Redheugh; he is there ‘Robert Ellott callit the Vicaris Hob’. In 1576 there was a pledge to the Privy Council that he would refrain from thieving; he was recorded there as ‘Hob Elliot, callit the Vicaris Hob’, with cautioners being jointly Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert Elliot of Redheugh, Gavin Elliot of Falnash and Walter Scott of Goldielands. He is probably the same ‘Hobbie Elliot, called Vicar’s Hobb’ for whom Edward Lorraine of Harwood and John Turnbull of Minto were cautioners in 1589. Robert ‘Hob o Thorlieshope’ (16th C.) one of the Liddesdale thieves captured at Hawick market by the Earl of Moray in 1567; he is recorded as being ‘in Thorlinsope’. In 1569 he was entered before the Regent by Sir Andrew Ker of Hirsel, Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Ker of Falldonsie. Probably the same Robert of Thorlishope was appointed as one of the sergeants for the Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale in 1537/8. He is ‘Roberto Elwald officiario’ who was tenant of Thorlishope on the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale; ‘officiario’ suggests he had an official role in the area. He is ‘Robyn Elwald of Thorlishopp’ listed in 1541 by the English among Scotsmen who reset English rebels; ‘Wilckoks Elwald’ is listed along with him, and so possibly a relative, and he is also listed along with Clem Crozier, who may have been a neighbour. He was also mentioned in 1541 when Airchie, ‘brother and son to Robert Ellwald of Thorllyshop’ was listed among Scotsmen responsible for the burning of the corn of William Carnaby at Halton; this suggests that Airchie was his brother and perhaps that their father was also Robert.

is also probably the ‘Robin of Thorlyshop’ whose son John was entered in a bond by James Douglas of Cavers in 1546 and in other bonds with Robert of Redheugh in 1547. In 1546 he had to sign with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). He was probably related to (or possibly the same as) the ‘Rob of Thorlirishop’ recorded in about 1594. Robert ‘Will Cock’s Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1569 as ‘Robert Elliot callit Wilckokis Hob’. He and ‘Gawins Jok in Ramseygill’ were the pledges for whom ‘Ade Elliot callit the Cowdais’ was held in Blackness Castle. It is possible he was the same man as Hob of Thorlyship. His father was probably ‘Will Cock’. Robert ‘Airchie’s Hob’ (16th C.) third son of Archibald of Falnash, he seems to have been a regular supported of Martin of Braudlie on raids. He was mentioned in 1569 among a number of pledges to exchange for Martin of Braudlie when Martin was warded with the Regent Moray. He is probably the ‘Arches Hobbes’ whose 2 sons were among several Elliots and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding a raid in 1588. His name is recorded as ‘Hobbe Elliot of the Sheale’, but it is unclear where his lands were. He could be the same as Hob of the Staneshiel recorded in 1590 and 1595. Robert ‘Wille’s Hob’ (16th C.) presumably son of William. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with several Elliots of Ramseigill, but separately from ‘Hobb Elliot of Ramsegill’ (the leader of this branch). He was recorded in 1587 in a bond by several Elliots, including his brother John, when he was imprisoned, probably for rieving; he had to be entered ‘as hail man and feir’ at Melrose. He was released in 1598, with Adam Tweedie obliged to make good for this theft. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert ‘Hob’ of Bowholm (d.1595/6) listed as ‘Hob of Bowholmes’ in a list of Borderers made in about the 1580s. He was listed along with ‘Will Colithis Hob’ under the area of ‘Welshaw’. In 1584/5 he was listed as ‘Hobb Bowholmes dwellinge in Teviddle’ along with other Elliots of Heuchhouse; he was singled out as the only member of the Heuchhouse branch that the leaders would not vouch for. He was recorded as ‘Hob Elliott of Bohomes’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including John of Bowholm. In 1590
he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of ‘Gersomfeeld’, and also accused of another raid along with Archie (who was probably related). In the same year he is ‘Hob of Behomes’ who was accused of further rieving along with Martin’s Archie and William ‘Rydillie’. Also in 1590 he was accused along with his brother Dand, as well as ‘Willie’s Archie’ of Stewarthill of stealing from Englishman Richard Thorwall; he was recorded as ‘Robine Elliott Bohomes’. He is ‘Hobb Bohomes’ when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘the Garret sheills’. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. He was ‘Hobe Elliott of the Bowholmes’ listed among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. In 1595/6 he was ‘Hob of Bowholme Scotsman’, servant of William (possibly the William in Hoscote who was delivered as a prisoner to England about this time), when sentenced to death for several crimes in England and ‘taken with the bloody hand’ by the Captain of Harbottle. He was executed at Hexham. Robert ‘Ill Rob’ or ‘Hob’ of Ramsiegill (16th C.) recorded as ‘Yll Hob’ in 1580, when he was held in ward in Edinburgh Castle, with Alexander Erskine as his pledge. He was convicted for theft in 1580/1 along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. He was recorded there as ‘Hob Elliott, callit Ill Rob of Ramsigill’. In 1580 he was produced at the Privy Council to prove that he was in ward with Erskine of Gogar. In 1581 Martin of Braidlie, Gavin’s Jock and Robert Kerr of Ancrum were cautioned for his non-appearance, when he was stated at that time to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle; his brother ‘Gavin’s Jock’ of Ramsiegill was one of his cautioners. The same group were fined in 1582/3 for his non-appearance, as well as that of Jock’s Will, his brother; he is recorded there as ‘Ill Hob of Ramsygill’. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing first to speak for his branch, with Archie of the Hill, Rowie of Ramsigill and Will’s Hob also listed. In 1587/8 he is recorded as ‘Hob Elliott of the Ramsygill’ when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond in 1587 for ‘Willie’s Hob’. Several other Elliots are also mentioned there, in particular ‘Gavin Elliott of Ramsigill’, who must have been a son or brother. He was also ‘Hob Elliott of Ransgill’ who complained in the 1580s of an English raid upon his lands, stealing livestock and taking prisoners. Probably the same man is ‘yll Hob Elwood’ recorded in 1591 as part of a group of Elliott and others accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. He was presumably a son of Jock and probably related to the Robert recorded as ‘in Rammisgill’ in 1541. However, he was probably the ‘Hob Elliott, brother of Gawin’s Hob (probably a transcription error for Jock) of the Rampsygill’ who remained in prison in 1581 for the ‘haill gang of the Burneheidis’ after Jock’s Willie was released; this would make him son of Gavin of Ramsiegill. Robert ‘Jamie’s Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1581 and 1582/3 among the cautioners for Sim’s Rowie of the Park. His name was recorded as ‘Hobbe Elliott, called James Hobbe’, and he was listed along with Rob’s John, Sim’s Archie and others. His father was thus presumably James. He was also listed in 1581 along with other Elliots in a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael (who had been Keeper of Liddesdale), relating to the Elliots of Ramsiegill. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the ‘haill gang of Park’. Robert (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding Harwood on Teviot in 1581/2. His name is given as ‘Rowy Elliott, callit Rowans Hobbe’, which is confusing, although it is later ‘Hobbe Elliott, callit Rowans Hobbe’. His brother Jamie, as well as ‘Rowanes Willis Ritchie’ are listed after him; they were declared rebels after not appearing to answer the charge. Robert ‘Hbbie’ of Burnhead (16th C.) Laird of Burnhead in Liddesdale (and not the one just outside Hawick). In 1584 he was accused of being part of a foray into England. He is perhaps the earliest known resident of Burnhead, and may have had the tower built for him there. In 1587/8 he is recorded as ‘Hob Elliott of the Burneheads called ‘Fylders Hob’’ when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots; the reference to ‘Fylder’ may refer to the nickname of his father. He was ‘Robin Elliott the laird of Borneheades’ in 1589, among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England. He may have been ‘Hob Elliott called Hob the larde’ listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. Additionally in 1590 he was among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of ‘Allenton’ and ‘Linbriggs’, taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbells, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; there he is ‘Hobb Elliott of the Burneheads’. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. He was also ‘Hob Elliott called the laird of Burneheads’ when complained about for another 2 raids into England in 1595, this time along with Elliots of Falsash, as well as ‘Auld Wat’ Scott of Harden, Armstrongs and Hendersons. Additionally in 1596 he was ‘Hobb Elwood larde of Burnehead’, when it was said that along with Scott of Buccleuch he met secretly with Englishmen, presumably to discuss helping each other with raids. It is unclear how he is related to other local Elliots, such as ‘Bramche of the Burnhead’, also recorded in the 1580s and ‘Gawins Jok’ recorded in the 1590s. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Curst Hobbie’. Robert ‘Curst Hobbie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1583 (in a letter from the English wardens) among the Elliots of Burnhead. It is possible he is the same man as Hobbie of Burnhead, recorded a year later. He is probably related to other Elliots of Burnhead, as well as Elliots of Ramsieglill and of the Hill. Robert ‘Rob o Thoirlishop’ (16th C.) mentioned in Monipenbie’s list of Border chiefs, published around 1594 (put probably compiled earlier). ‘Arthur fyre the Brays’ is listed beside him. He must have been related to the earlier ‘Hob’ of the same place, Thorleshope. He could be the son of Robert of Unthank who is listed in a pedigree of the Elliots of Thorleshope (in the Berwickshire Naturals’ Club transactions of 1889); he was known as ‘Bonny Hob’, warded in Lochdun in 1569 and died unmarried (although that could be the earlier Hob of Thorleshope). In 1584 he, ‘Fire the Braes’ and one other ‘assure for the hole branch conmenge of the howse of Thorlosope’. He was recorded as ‘Hob of Thorsersopp’ in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when accused of raiding into England. Additionally, along with Martin’s Gib and ‘Adie’s John’ Crozier, he was accused of stealing from William Henderson of ‘Fallofeld’ in 1590. In another case in 1590 he was ‘Robin Elliott of Thorsesoppe’ when listed among Elliots, Nixons, Shiels and others accused of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall in England. He was listed in 1595 as ‘the officer alias the laird of Thorsesop’ among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid into England; the ‘officer’ designation suggests that he inherited the position of sergeant of Liddesdale from the earlier Robert of Thorleshope. In a complaint about another raid in 1595 ‘young Robyn Ellot of Thorlesop’ was probably his son. There was a complaint against him (along with a Nixon and 2 Armstrongs) by the English in 1597; but Scott of Buccleuch stated that he was already in Hexham Jail. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Dodrig, son of Archibald. In 1583 it was stated that he and his father were ‘kindlie tennentis’ of ‘thire quarteris of the landis of Dodrig, pertening to the chaiplanrie of the paroche kirk of Caveris’ for 36 years previously, and had built a house there. This may have been the pele-house whose remains are on the east side of Gray Coat. He complained to the Privy Council that his servants there were attacked by Robert of Redheugh’s men on several occasions, trying to dispossess him of the lands. Robert of Redheugh was denounced as a rebel for not appearing to answer the charge. Robert (d.1592) 6th Laird of Horsleyhill, eldest son of William, the 5th Laird. He is recorded in 1564 when he was granted all of his father’s property. In 1581 he is listed along with many Armstrongs and Elliots who complained to the Privy Council about the actions of the Scotts. In 1582 he took legal action against Dame Isobel Ker, Widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, for the delivery of his father’s charters, specifically for Horsleyhill, ‘Dowiswod’, Westerhouses (called Little Hassendean), Newgibbing (called the Middle Mains of Hassendean), Caveling, Monkscroft and Hassendean. However, the order to deliver these seems never to have been followed, since he died without formally being served heir to these lands. He also had a dispute with Robert Scott of Hassendean over a merk land in ‘Dowiswod’; his widow Agnes Scott was served with the letter of removal in late 1592. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts she belonged, but there may have been a connection with Haining (given that their son William was later a retainer of Robert Scott of Haining). He married Agnes Scott, and their children included: Robert, who pre-deceased him; William, who succeeded and sold Horsleyhill to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs; another Robert, who married an illegitimate daughter of Scott of Harden, and from whom the Elliots of Borthwickbrae are descended; and one more son, from whom the Elliots of Selkirk and Newhall probably derive (probably father of James, Burgess of Selkirk in 1635). The existence of these last 2 sons is suggested by Scott of Satchells, but no direct evidence has been uncovered. Robert ‘the Tailor’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1590 among a large number of Elliots and others who were accused by Ralph Hall of ‘Gersomiffeld’ and others for taking Ralph and other prisoners, then ransoming them. His name was recorded as ‘Robine Elliot called the Tailour’. Also in 1590 he was ‘Hobbie the taylor’ when accused along with James of the Hill, Anthony of the Binks, James ‘Half Lug’ and 60 others, of raiding ‘Windgates’, taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. There was an Armstrong of the same name at that time, and it is possible there was confusion and they are the same man (although whether an Armstrong or an Elliot would then be unclear). Robert ‘Hob of the Leyes’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1591 in a group of Elliots of the Hill and others accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. He is recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for 2 raids into England. He was also ‘alias the troche’, although it is unclear what this nickname may have referred to (perhaps a trough). He may have been related to some of the others named, in 1595 e.g. Robert of Thorlieshope, Rich ‘of the Lewlandes’ or William, son of John of Heuchhouse. Robert ‘Hob’ of Staneshiel (16th/17th C.) part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of ‘Gersomfield’ and the tenants of ‘Dortres’ in 1590. Hob Elliot of Staneshiel, John of Heuchhouse and Davie ‘the Carlin’ were also named in the same accusation. He was further accused in 1590 by William Hall of ‘Gersomfield’ of rieving at ‘Steward sheile’, along with Quentin’s Airchie Crozier and others. He was also recorded in 1595 among men complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is recorded as ‘Hob Elliott of the Stanesheale alias bane pryck’. He probably lived at Staneshiel in Liddesdale, and the meaning of his nickname is unclear (but probably not complimentary). Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1595 among Scotsmen accused of raiding into England. His name was recorded as ‘Hob Elliott alias kyll of the spade’, although it is unclear what his nickname meant. He was listed along with John of Burnhead, who may have been related. Robert (16th/17th C.) younger son of Robert, 6th Laird of Horsleyhill and Agnes Scott. According to Scott of Satchells (who confusingly refers to him as William) he became a servant to Scott of Harden (presumably ‘Auld Wat’) and married Scott’s illegitimate daughter (whose name is not recorded). He was recorded as a servant to Scott of Harden in a bond dated 1620. He is the progenitor of the Elliots of Bothwickbrae, Oakwood Mill and Wolfelee. His only known child was Robert, who was in Bothwickshields. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) son of Jock of Burngrains. He was listed (along with this brother Will) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Langraw’ in 1610 when he was part of an inquest for lands in Rulewater. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Gledstaines’ in 1610 when he renounced his possession of this part of Feu-Rule when he was not accepted as a ‘kindly tenant’ by his superior, Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam. This could have been the land later called ‘Little Gledstains’. Robert of Dinlabyre (b.c.1580) son of William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1600 he was said to be about 20 years old when there was a plan to substitute him for his father as a hostage in England. In 1611 he was denounced as a rebel, along with his brother Gavin and several other Elliots and Armstrongs, for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc.; his name is transcribed there as being ‘of Drumlybyre’. He is recorded as ‘Robene Ellote of Dunlabyre’ in 1612 when he failed to appear to serve on the jury for the case of Jock Elliot dying while in custody in Hawick. In 1613 the King granted him all the lands forfeited by his father in 1607. In 1623 he served as cautioner for Robbie Armstrong in ‘Greinay’ and his brother John. Probably the same ‘Robert Elliot of Dinlabyre’ is recorded in 1632 in a rental roll of Kelso Abbey when he possessed the lands of ‘Hoillis’ in Liddesdale, as well as Dinlabyre. His sons probably included William of Dinlabyre (d.bef. 1693) and John in Unthank. Robert of Copshaw (16th/17th C.) listed in 1612 among Elliots and Armstrongs denounced as rebels for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. His brother Francis was also listed. He was also recorded among those fined in 1612 for failing to appear to sit on the jury when the Hawick authorities were accused of the murder of a man who died in the steeple of St. Mary’s. His brother Francis was also listed. Robert (d.bef. 1637) eldest son of William of Rig and Jean Rutherford, heir of Stobs. He was served heir to his mother in 1621 and in turn succeeded by his brother Francis. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being called ‘Ladd, in Quhythauch’ in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Robert (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and a daughter of Scott of Harden, he was grandson of Robert, the 6th Laird of Horsleyhill and brother of William, the last Elliot Laird there. He is referred to as being ‘in Borthwickshielis’, and so must have been tenant of that farm. He married a Haitlie from Mellerstain and had 2 children: Thomas (d.1686), who succeeded him; and William (1617–85), who became minister in Yarrow. He is recorded in a list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley in 1650, with his wife being ‘Euphemia Hastie’ and their son Thomas also listed. Robert ‘Hab’ (17th C.) possessor of the lands of ‘Baggatt’ (i.e. Bygate) in Liddesdale in 1632. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Falnash (d.1645), J.P., son of William, he was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He was recorded along with his father (and more than 170 others) in a ‘respite’ of 1594 to Sir James Johnstone and his followers for the killing of Lord Maxwell at Drye Sands. In 1595 he was listed among Elliots and others accused by the Lord of Gildland for raids into England; he was explicitly listed with ‘Auld Wat’ Scott of Harden, as well as his brother Archibald and uncle Gilbert. In 1598 he was recorded as son of William of Falnash when he was witness to a document for the Regality of Melrose. He is probably the Robert ‘younger of Fallinesche’ who was cautioner for Gavin Elliot of Fiddleton in 1606. In 1610 he was cautioner for James Irving of Cleuchhead and in 1611 for Gavin ‘of Cokleik’. In 1618 his father is referred to as ‘William called of Falnash in Braidley’, suggesting Falnash had already been passed to him. He rebuilt the house at Falnash around 1620, probably replacing the tower with a farmhouse; a stone built into the present house carries the date 1620 and the initials ‘R.E.’ and ‘M.S.’. The family also owned land in Wilton Parish. In 1623 he sold Arkleton to Adam Cunningham, the reason not being known, but Scott of Satchells wrote ‘By Maxwell’s rage out of their hands it got, And was possess’d by Cunninghame and Scot’. In 1624 he purchased Hislop and Langhaugh in the Barony of Hawick. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He was listed in 1628 among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. Also in 1628 he had a crown charter for the lands of Philhope and the wardship of Grizell Elliot, heirress of Philhope (to whom he would marry his son John). He was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1634. He married Marion Scott (from an unknown branch of the Scotts, but perhaps the Scotts of Harden). They had 7 children: William, who married a Maxwell of Cowhill, but died before his father; Archibald, who succeeded; John, who married Grizel Elliot of Philhope and held the lands of Broadlee; Gavin of Caerlenrig, who married Janet Elliot and was father of Ninian; Gilbert, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1637; Robert, who also became a merchant’s apprentice in 1646; and Jean, who married Adam Carleill of Byrdkirk. Robert (d.1663) 4th son of William of the Binks and brother of Simon. He was called ‘of the Binks’. In 1630 he was charged as ‘ane commoun and notorious theefe’ and fled to Flanders. It is described in the Register of the Privy Seal that ‘he is returned again and hes begun his old accustomed trade of theft’, stealing 6 cattle from Englishman Sir Arthur Gray. He was convicted of theft and tried in Jedburgh, but the Provost there released him on a bond whereupon he fled. In 1631 he turned up in Carlisle jail, from where the Sheriff of Roxburghshire requested his transfer. He had a son called Simon, who was a minor when he died. Robert ‘Hob’ (17th C.) recorded as being ‘called of Thorbishops’ (presumably Thorlischehope) in a 1642 list of many Borderers who were to be captured and tried for theft and other crimes. In about 1648 he was recorded as Robert ‘of Thorlischopp’ on a list of ‘moostroopers’ (i.e. thieves). He may be the ‘young Robyn Ellott of Thorlieshope’ recorded in 1595. Robert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Falnash. In 1646 he was apprenticed to Edinburgh merchant Archibald Graham, apprenticed to John Nichol, merchant in Edinburgh. Robert (17th C.) listed as a fugitive in 1637. He was also recorded as ‘sone to Hobbeis Chrystie’ listed among fugitives of the Border in 1642. It may be that he was listed twice, since Robert ‘called Chrysteis Hob’ also appears. He was probably son of the Christopher who was son of Robert of Braidlie: he was thus a great-grandson of Martin of Braidlie. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Henderson and their children included: John (b.1646); William (b.1650); Bessie (b.1652); and Janet (b.1655). Robert of Black Tarras (d.bef. 1665) 2nd son of Simon of the Binks and younger brother of the William, Laird of Harwood. He was granted the lands of Black Tarras by his father. After the Restoration both he and his brother William were fined £1,200 for supporting the Commonwealth. In 1652 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Riddell ‘portioner’ of Bewlie. In his wedding contract he is described as ‘in Sauchetrie’ and was infested in the lands of Black Tarras. His children were: Simon of Black Tarras; Francis; and William of Cooms (d.1714), who married Helen Elliot of Thorlieshope. He was still alive in 1663, when referred to as ‘of Ludgegill indweller in Sauchtrees, Liddesdale’. By 1665 his wife was a widow. Robert of Reidheugh and Larriston (c.1583–c.1644) 17th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert. He was the last of the Elliots of Redheugh in the direct male line. He was still a minor when his father died, with his guardian being his uncle William of Hartsgarth and when he was 14 the additional trustees appointed were William of Falnash, John of Copshaw and his mother’s brothers, John and Andrew Hamilton of St. John’s Chapel. At the time when Francis, Earl of Bothwell forfeited his lands, he was in possession of Redheugh, Over and Nether Larriston, Hartsgarth, Leaufauld, Corrie’s Shiel, Langhaugh, Leahaugh and Demainholm. He is probably the Robert who was the first Elliot name signed on the bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1597 he (along with William of Hartsgarth and John of Copshaw) wrote from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen, and furthermore they offered security for the actions of their followers. In 1599 he, along with Martin Elliot (son of ‘Mertin’s Sym’), made an agreement to settle their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. They also promised to the Warden (Sir Walter Scott) to be responsible for the inhabitants of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. There was also a pledge made in his name (and others) in 1599 following the murder of several Englishmen (who had been waiting in hiding to ambush the Scots) near Bewcastle. In about 1600 he was ordered to pay £ for theft of horses by Will of Fiddleton. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss ‘the present disordouris of the Bourdours’. He escaped the convictions and executions that came down on the men of Liddesdale around 1606; it is said that this may have been due to the influence of his brother-in-law John Murray of Lochmaben. In 1607 he brought an action against George Henderson, tenant of Winnington, accusing him of cutting down trees on his land at Birkwood. In 1608 he (and 14 other lairds) were removed from their lands by the Privy Council for being ‘ringleaders suspected either of their bygone conversation or for their present disordered courses’; he was sent along with Walter Scott of Goldielands to Cupar in Fife. In 1608 he was charged by Scott of Buccleuch to remove from all lands in Liddesdale, but this was not followed through with; however, there was a decreet of removal in 1612, after the death of the old Laird of Buccleuch. He was then denounced as a rebel, but through the influence of his brother-in-law John Murray he obtained a new agreement with Buccleuch over these lands in 1613; this included Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope, ‘Greenholles’, Hartsgarth, Langhaugh, Leahaugh, ‘Carriescheill’ and ‘Dowmane’. In 1615 Buccleuch accused him of adding the names of 3 properties to the charter, and he went to London to plead with Scott of Buccleuch. A court case was started in 1617, and he was unable to produce the charter, which led to a further order of removal. However, Robert was served heir to his father in 1619, presumably part of the ongoing legal proceedings. His main dwelling around that time was at Demainholm. There were also attempts to remove his tenants; William Scott of Newark complained that his tenants at Founshiels were harried by a group of Elliotics. Over the next few years he failed to collect any rent on his lands, incurred debts and many of the old Elliot lands in Teviotdale were lost. In 1622 he and his brother William sold the lands of Winnington Rig to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1622 and 1623 he served as cautioner for Rovie Crozier from Hartsgarth. He was probably the ‘Robert Ellot of Reidheuch, in Larestoun’ who was removed as a tenant of Scott of Buccleuch in 1624. His brother-in-law John Murray (Earl of Annandale) apologised to Scott of of Buccleuch in 1624 for a dispute over lands with Buccleuch and for stealing from Englishmen. Also in 1624 he was accused of conspiring to murder the Earl of Buccleuch, the 3 would-be assassins (all Elliots) apparently confessing their part. He was at that time prisoner in Edinburgh Tolbooth related to debts. He was also accused of being involved in stealing cattle from Cuthbert Heron, an Englishman; he seems to have escaped punishment, although his servant Adam Usher was hung for that crime. Despite being induced to confess to the crimes, pleas by Francis Hamilton and the Earl of Annandale resulted in Scott of Buccleuch asking for the trial to be postponed. Within a short period of the King’s death in 1625 he received a pardon for the theft and other crimes, although it is unclear when he was released from confinement. His wife petitioned the Privy Council because of poverty during his imprisonment. It seems that when his daughter and heiress was married in 1637 he still held his Liddesdale lands, including the 3 farms that had been in dispute, namely ‘Blaihope’, ‘Greenholm’ and Langhaugh. He married first a sister of John Murray (later Earl of Annandale) and secondly (after 1618) Lady Jean Stewart, daughter of Francis, Earl of Bothwell and Lady Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He had no children with his first wife, and with his second had no sons, but 2 daughters: Margaret, (or Mary) his heir, who in 1637 married James Elliott (6th son of Gilbert of Stobs); and Esther (d.1664), who married Alexander Clerk, Minister of Letherton, and died in Inverness. He gave all his lands to his daughter Margaret and her husband James, except Leahaugh, Greenholm and Gullyflat, which were given to Esther and her husband, and he retained Larriston, Blakhope and Greenholm ‘in fiercen’ for himself. The year of his death is quite uncertain, but he probably died in the period 1666–73, with his estate heavily encumbered by debt. "Robert" (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet ‘Red’ (i.e. Reid). Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1651, with witnesses John Elliott (probably related to him) and Thomas Jackson. "Robert" of Braiddie (17th C.) nephew of Simon in Philhope. In 1653 he was served heir to Braiddie. "Robert" (b.c.1645) was apprenticed to a barber in 1699; and Janet, who married Robert of Redheugh in 1673, inheriting these lands through his mother. However, the Teviotdale lands had already been sold off and the Liddesdale lands were heavily encumbered by debt. Hence in 1675 he was forced to put Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope and Greenholm into ‘wadset’ with John Elliot of Tholrishesope and in 1677 sold outright the land of Demainholm to John Elliot ‘in Mainholm’. In 1678 he still paid the land tax on £1934 in Castleton Parish. In 1685 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1692 he had a ‘precept of clare constat’ from the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch as heir to all the lands of his grandfather, Robert of Redheugh. About 1688 he was forced to sell most of his lands after getting into financial difficulties, his creditors obtaining a ‘decree of adjudication’. He managed to hold onto Over and Nether Larriston only. In 1667 he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of John Maxwell of Cowhill, Dumfriesshire, and she had one son with him, but died before 1675. He later married Janet, 2nd daughter of Scott of Todrig (probably Thomsa). His children were: Robert, who succeeded to Larriston; Gilbert of Nethermill, who was a merchant in Hawick; William, who was apprenticed to a barber in 1699; and Janet, who married Robert Gledstains of that Ilk and secondly John Scott of Gorrenberry. His testament is recorded in 1688, but he may have died after that. "Robert" (17th C.) recorded in 1678 as owner of part of Raperlaw called ‘Wyliespeel’, or Willie’s Peel. This was valued at £104, and corresponded to William Turnbull’s lands in Raperlaw in 1643. In another version of the 1678 records he is transcribed as ‘Richard’ and ‘in williespeil’. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. "Robert" (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Blackhall’ in 1680 when he was indicted at the Justiciary Commission in Jedburgh for ‘reset of theft’. He probably lived in Ewesdale. "Robert" (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Stobs’ in 1684 when he was on a long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. "Robert" (17th C.) tenant in Giddenscleuch in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. "Robert" (17th C.) miller at Hummelknowe Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is surely related to the slightly later Robert. "Robert" (17th C.) tenant in Stitchellhill in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert of Caerlerrig (1655–98) 2nd son of Gavin. He was also known as Robert ‘of Rig’. He paid tax on 2 hearths at Caerlerrig in 1694, and ‘his herd’ is also listed. He firstly married Agnes, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton (as recorded in the will of Agnes’ brother George Langlands in 1690); she was related to his brother Francis of Fenwick’s wife Rachel Langlands. He secondly married Mary Elliot, who died in 1727, aged 80. His sons were Robert (b.1690s) of Caerlerrig and John. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married John Elliot of Castlheope and Bilhope. His testament is recorded in 1699, when he was ‘of Carllerrickrig’. He is buried at Teviothead.

Robert 2nd Laird of Midlem Mill (d.deb. 1725) elder son of Gavin Elliott of Midlem Mill and Grange, and probably grandson of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairsters’. His father settled the lands of Midlem Mill on him in 1653. He paid the land tax on £36 in Cavers Parish in 1678; it is unclear what lands these were, but they were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by the late 18th century and listed in Castleton Parish in 1788. Also in 1678 he also paid tax on about £400 for Midlem Mill and other lands in Bowden Parish. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690, and it appears that he acted as factor to Elliot of Minto. He is recorded in 1693 as witness to a bond between Elliot of Harwood and Henry Douglas, writer in Edinburgh. In 1694 he was cautioner to a bond between Henry Elliot of Harwood and John Kerr of Cavers. He also witnessed a disposition between Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood, as well as other bonds for the Elliots of Harwood about the same time. He was described as ‘sheriff in that part of the sheriffdom of Roxburgh’ in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1695 he acquired the lands of ‘Clarelaw, called Langsyde’ and North Prieston, which he bought from John Elliot of Langsyde. He added Whitmuir in 1702. He may have acted as factor for Gideon Scott of Highchester in the period 1695–99. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig in 1700. He also had a ‘tack’ for the lands of Stanedge the discharge of which is recorded in 1700. He was factor for his younger brother Sir Gilbert of Headshaw (and Minto) from 1706; it is said that when he was introduced as the brother of Sir Gilbert, he would say ‘na, na, Gibbie’s my brother’. He rented Easter and Wester Hassendean from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1720. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1678 and had 9 children: Gilbert (d.1709); Robert (d.1753), who succeeded to Midlem Mill; Margaret (c.1680–1768), who married Henry Elliot of Lodgegill; Marion, who married Andrew Haliburton of Newmains; Ann, who married Robert Paterson of Drygrange; Elizabeth, who married lawyer John Gibson and possibly another Paterson of Drygrange; Helen (or ‘Nelly’), who married William Elliot of Wolfelee; Magdalene (1694/4–1773), who married John Pasley of Craig; and a ‘natural daughter’ Elizabeth, who married Richard Paterson, portioner of Midlem. Robert of Penchrise (17th C.) involved in a court case in the 1690s. Along with William of Lynnecleuch he failed to pay a bond due to John Kiddell of Haining; when they failed to show up in court the farms went to their guarantor, Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was married to Marion Culbertson and in 1694 their son Robert was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Storie and Robert Halliwell and this was one of the earliest entries in the existing records for Wilton Parish. Perhaps the same Robert in Galahad had a son Alexander baptised in Wilton in 1704; William Henderson and James Jamieson were witnesses. Probably the same Robert was described as servant to Adam Scott of Galahad when his daughter Bessie was baptised in 1709. Esther (b.1706), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his child. Robert of Larriston (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Robert. His father had sold the family’s lands in 1688 after being declared bankrupt. In 1689 his grandfather, John Maxwell of Cowhill, gave him the lands of ‘Cullshangan’ in the Parish of Crossmichael and the half merkland of Kirkland of Kirkpatrick Irongray. His grandmother further reduced her dower rights, and with this help from his grandparents he was able to in 1695 to buy back (or perhaps redeem the ‘wadsett’ on) the lands of Over and Nether Larriston (including the mill, mill lands and Larriston Rig) from Christopher Irving of Binks. In 1696 he reinstated his grandmother’s 500 merks dower rights from the rents of Larriston. However, after his grandmother died in 1697 he gave a wadsett for the lands of Larriston Rig and Hopehead to John of Thorlieshope and his son John. He formally succeeded his father as heir of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston in 1712. However, he continued to have financial difficulties and in 1719 in Cavers Parish. He was living at Hummelknowes or Hummelknows Mill when his children were baptised. They were: James (b.1720); William (b.1732); Robert (b.1735); and Isabel (b.1737). He may be the Robert who married Jane Elliot in 1717 or the Robert who married Margaret Douglas in Cavers and Kirkton in 1719. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. His children included: John (b.1727); and Bessie (b.1729). Robert (d.1752) son of the last Robert of Larris- ton. His brother James farmed at Whitlaw, and his sister (or perhaps other near relative) Helen married Walter Amos, joiner in Rulewater. He went to London in 1712 was a clerk in the office of Sir John Bernard. He became a senior clerk in the Pay Office, Great Court Yard, St. James’s, London. He lived in the Parish of St. Peters, Cornhill, London. He loaned money to the Elliots of Stobs (his distant relations). He died unmarried. He left some silver plate, gold rings, snuff-boxes and a portrait of Lord Heathfield. Robert 3rd Laird of Midlem Mill (d.1753), oldest surviving son of Robert, 2nd Laird. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale from about 1723-27 (although complaints about his conduct are recorded in letters of the 1740s), with Robert Scott of Burnhead taking over in 1728. In 1728 he took over as Chamberlain for Teviotdalehead from Gideon Scott of Falnash, serving until 1741. During this period he lived at Langholm Castle, Broadhaugh and Branxholme. He must also have lived at Midlem Mill for some of that period and remodelled the house, since a stone built into the mill is inscribed ‘R.E. 1730 K.E.’ In 1734 there was a formal inquiry by the Bailies and Council ‘how he came to take down the Bailies’ seat in the kirk and by whose allowance’, suggesting some disagreement over the authority of the Patron versus the Burgh. In 1735 he rented part of the farm of Branxholme Mains. He was one of the local lairds asked to decide on the position of the new Teviot Bridge in Hawick in 1739. In 1740 a baptism in Hawick was witnessed by ‘Gardiner to Midlamiln at Branxome’, showing that he was living at Branxholme at that time. He leased the farms of Priesthaugh and Peelbrae from the Buccleuch Estates in 1741. He paid the window tax in Bowden Parish in 1748 (and his widow paid in 1753). In 1719 in Wilton Parish he married Katherine (b.c.1701), only child of Adam Elliot of ‘Tyndeside’ (i.e. Teindside) and granddaughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton. They had 14 children: Robert (b.1719), who must have died young; Elizabeth (b.1721), who married Simon Haliburton of Howcleuch, minister at Castleton and Ashkirk; Anny and Margaret (b.1722), who were unmarried and lived at Lichfield Street in London; Gilbert (b.1724), died in infancy and buried in Ewes Kirkyard; Gavin (b.1727), 4th and last Laird of Midlem Mill, selling the estate to Prof. George Stewart and moving to London; Henry (b.1729); Robert (b.1730), in the Royal Navy; Andrew (d.1779), a Major in the Marines, who died in Rhode Island, U.S.A.; Adam (d.1752) a baker who died in Lisbon; Maisy, who lived in Berwick with her mother; Helen (d.1798), who married James Wilkie, merchant in Marseilles; Jean (b.1738), who was christened in Hawick and lived with her mother in Berwick; and another child who died young. He is buried at Bowden. When he died the estate was in debt and was sold off 3 years later by his trustees. His widow and unmarried daughters then moved to Berwick.

Robert (17th/18th C.) miller of Hawick Mill. He was listed as ‘Tacksman of the Mill and Lands of Hawick’ in the baptism records of some of his children. He married Jean Scott and their children included: Rachel (b.1718); Jean (b.1722); Margaret (b.1724); Beatrix (b.1727); and Janet (b.1728). He was probably son of Walter, who was listed as miller in the 1710s. He was also described as ‘tacksman of mill and lands of Hawick’ in 1722 when he rented Ginglewells and Dinlees (on the Hermitage Water) from the Buccleuch estates. He was probably the Robert listed as ‘Tacksman’ in 1725 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Tudhope. Robert ‘of Carlenrickrig’ or ‘Rig’ (1694–1777), eldest son of Robert of Caerlenrig, his mother probably being Agnes Langlands. The dates of his birth and death are given elsewhere as (1697–1767), but those on the tombstone in Teviothead are probably correct. Due to ‘embarrassed circumstances’ he was forced to sell Caerlenrig and then farmed at Winningtonrig. He is among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752), being listed at ‘Winnington-bridge’. In 1721 in Roberton he married Christian (b.1697–1767), daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae; she was sister of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae at the time of their marriage. They had 6 sons: Robert (1722–1770), writer in Edinburgh, who died unmarried; William (1724–97), farmer at Winningtonrig, who married Margaret Anderson; John (1725–1801), who married Margaret Currie; Thomas (1731–1808), who became minister of Cavers; and Francis, ‘Frank’ (1733–79), skinner in Hawick, also died unmarried. Another son, Gideon, may have died young. They also had 4 daughters: Mary (b.1727), who married William Grieve, farmer at Southfield; Isobel (b.1729, twin of Agnes, who apparently did not survive), who married a Kerr; Margaret (b.1735), who married George Pott, the purchaser of Caerlenrig; and Christian (b.1738), who married James Oliver in 1765. He and his son William were witnesses for a baptism for William Grieve (farmer in Southfield) and his daughter Mary in 1764. He and his wife both died at Winningtonrig. Robert of Binks (1702–66) eldest surviving son of John of Binks. He was tenant farmer in Burnmouth. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth Robson (c.1722–93), who was from Boghall. Their children were: John (b.1754), who succeeded; Robert (b.1756), who died young; Jean (1758–87), who married John Elliot of Whitehaugh; Christian (1761–82); and Catherine, who died unmarried. His daughter Jean was probably the ‘Miss Jean Elliot, Burnmouth’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is buried in Castleton Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of upper Teviotdale. He married Bessie Nixon. Their children included: Robert (b.1740) in Falnash Mill; Janet (b.1743), who worked at Falnash; Thomas (b.1747) in Broadhaugh; and Beatrix (b.1750), also lived at Broadhaugh. Robert (1711–82) son of William and Margaret Mather, he was grandson of William of Cooms. He was born in Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Armstrong, from the Sorbie family and their children included: Jean, who married George Graham from Greenkow; Thomas in Harden; Margaret, who married James Davidson; and Robert in Crookham. Robert (1720/1–82) youngest son of William, Laird of Harwood. He joined the army as an Ensign in the 1st Regiment of Foot in 1738 and was a Lieutenant on half-pay in Sir William Pepperell’s Regiment of Foot by 1757. Although commonly referred to as ‘Captain’, he appears never to have held that rank. In 1763 he had a bond with his brother Henry for the lands of Fernielee and a sasine in 1763 from William Elliot of Tarras for Blakehope, Lodgell and other lands. He was also tenant at Stonedge in the late 1700s when it was owned by Robert Lisle. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. In 1766 he married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Robert Pringle of Clifton, and she died in 1820, aged 88. They had 8 children: the eldest son, William (b.1766), succeeded to Harwood after the death of his uncle Henry; Robert (b.1767), married Anne Hilly of Portsmouth and was a Vice-Admiral in the Royal Navy; Pringle (c.1768–88) was apprenticed to a surgeon; Henry (1769–1841) married Janet, 2nd daughter of Rev. Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh and attained the rank of Major-General in the Army; Thomas (b.1771) farmed at Kirndean and married Helen, daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel; Margaret (b.1773), the only daughter, married Peter Brown of Rawflat; Andrew (1775–1810), was a Captain in the 70th Regiment and died unmarried at St. Thomas, Virgin Islands; and Mark (1776–1854), who was a tenant farmer in Lanton. He died at Hobsburn.

Robert of Fenwick (18th C.) son of Francis and Rachel Langlands. He may be the Laird of Fenwick as recorded paying a year’s rent for the weighthouse in Hawick in 1729. Along with Walter Scott (farmer at Commonside) he leased Unthank and Fiddleton from the Buccleuch Estates in 1733. In 1737 he and Robert Harrison, William Ogilvie of Hoscote and lawyer Thomas Watson entered into a partnership to establish and stillhouse and brewhouse in Hawick. He is recorded in 1738 receiving the ‘tack’ from the Buccleuch Estates of a ‘stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slitridge, and of ground adjacent; also a malt kiln and barn yet to be built; all lying in parish of Hawick’. This may be the first record of brewing and distilling near Hawick; it may refer to the lands of ‘Whusky Hooses’ and/or the ‘Brewery Haugh’ on Slitrig Crescent. He became a Burgess of Glasgow in 1753. About 1756 he sold Easter Highchesters and Lairhope to Henry Scott, Duke of Buccleuch; he may have died shortly afterwards, since there are other documents between the Duke of Buccleuch and his trustees in 1756–8. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He firstly married Jean Scott (from an unknown branch of that family), this probably being the irregular marriage of Robert ‘eldest lawful son to Francis’ to Jean Scott in Carlisle in 1716 that was a matter brought before the Hawick Parish Session in 1717; he must have been fairly young at the time, suggesting this was an elopement or rushed marriage of some kind. He secondly married Katherine (b.1697), daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton; she had previously married David Laing of Westerkirk and Charles Telfer minister of Hawick. It is said that his only child was Gavin, who was the last Elliot of Fenwick; however, ‘James Elliot, Fenwick’, whose daughter Magdalene was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1758 was probably another son. Robert ‘Hobbie’ (18th C.) resident of a cottage called Hassely Cleugh on Stonedge farm. A story is told (recounted by Walter Deans) of how he went to the blacksmith’s at Unthank to get a ‘sling’ (perhaps for a sled), but the smith was busy, and by the time it was his turn he had forgotten what he came for. Eventually he decided ‘it was time for him ta gang hame, as he had a ferr road ta gang’ and the smith said ‘Ay Hobbie, it’s a lang sling’, to which he replied ‘a lang sling, that’s the verra thing a’ wanted made, a gude sling, darsay am donnert’. Robert (b.c.1700) son of Walter in Brugh. He married Elizabeth Scott, who came from Doorpool. He had one known child, Adam, who lived in Hawick and was father of James of Goldielands, schoolmaster at Wilton. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Sundhope farm in the middle of the 1700s. Robert (18th C.) resident of Eyewesdale. He married Janet Scott, who was also from there. Their children included: Thomas (b.1741); and Mary (b.1743). Jean (b.1737) and Robert (b.1739), born in Langholm Parish, may also have been their children. Robert of Reidheugh (1705–93) 2nd son of William in Braehead and Whithaugh. His father purchased Redheugh for him around 1730, thus regaining the home of his ancestors. He was tenant in Cleughhead in 1744 when he had a charter of confirmation for Redheugh in liferent for himself and in fee for his son William. In 1778 he was also tenant in Foulshiels, Kershope and Shaws. In 1786, for reasons unknown, he disinherited his eldest son William in favour of his 2nd son John. He was recorded as Robert of Redheugh on the 1786–92 Horse Tax Rolls. His lands of Reidheugh were valued at £96 11s in 1788. He married Margaret Beattie (d.1767). They had at least 3 children: William, tenant in Hillhouse, who married Margaret Haliburton from Roughley: John of Redheugh (1741–1809), farmer in Cleughhead and Foulshiels, who married Margaret Russell; and Thomas (1745–1800), who married Mary Thomson. Both he and his wife are buried in Castleton Cemetery. Robert (b.c.1715) eldest surviving son of William of Thorslighthouse and Overton. He succeeded his father in 1744 and immediately sold Thorslighthouse. He is probably the Robert who paid tax at Overton (in Oxnam Parish) in 1748 and also the Robert of Overton recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may then have moved to London. He married Mary Henderson, who died at the age of 25. He also married a second time. His children included: Cassandra, who was 2nd wife of Dr. William of Arkleton; Margaret (1751/2–1842), who died unmarried in Jedburgh; and Rebecca (b.1753), who died in infancy. Robert (1717/8–1816) resident of Roxburghshire, whose death is recorded at the age of 98. The report states that a short period previous to his death, he told Mr John Scott, merchant, Hawick, that about 70 years ago he was sent by his father to Hawick, with one shilling to purchase a stone of barley-meal, a capful of salt, a pound of butter, and a pennyworth of tobacco— all of which he got for the said shilling. Robert (1722–79) lived at Sorbie in Ewes Parish. He married Janet Wilson (1726–85) and their children included: William (1753–85), who married Jean Davidson; Jean (b.1756); Margaret (b.1758); Walter (b.1764); John (d.1792); and Mary (1778–88). He and his wife are buried at Ewes Churchyard. Robert (1722/3–70) eldest son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He was a writer in Edinburgh and died unmarried. He could be the Robert, writer in Edinburgh, who acted as Proctor for Hawick during the 1767 perambulation of the Common, undertaken as part of the case brought by the Duke of Buccleuch for its division. Robert (1724/5–70) 2nd son of John in Whithaugh. He was tenant farmer at Hermitage and elsewhere from about 1748, farming an area of perhaps 5,000 or 6,000 acres, on the eastern side of the Hermitage Water, including Braidlie, Gorrenberry, Hermitage and Millburnholm. It is said that he was a well organised farm manager, who had little help from the Buccleuch Estates. He married Janet Scott from Greenwood. Their children were: John (1750–1821), tenant in Hermitage, and also farmer at other farms, who married Christian Grieve and then Margaret Scott from Skelfhill; Walter (1754–97), who farmed Millburnholm and married Helen Crozier from Brighouse; William (1759–1829) in Millburnholm, who married Elizabeth Laidlaw from Fahnish; Jean (b.1760), who married William Sharp of Hartsgarth; Robert (b.1760) tenant in Moraylees and Haydon Bridge, who married Mary Scott from Skelfhill; and Philip (b.1862), merchant in America. There are meticulous farm records of his, which survive. Robert (d.bef. 1777) Hawick resident. The death of his wife Betty Scott is recorded in 1777. Robert (1725–57) 2nd son of the 2nd Sir Gilbert of Minto. He was a Captain in the Royals. He died suddenly at the home of his brother Sir Gilbert. Robert (b.1730) younger son to Robert of Midlem Mill, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. In 1744 he was apprenticed as a merchant to John Haliburton of Howcleuch (who was surely related to Rev. Simon Haliburton who married his sister Elizabeth). He later joined the Navy, being an ensign in the Marines. He is also said to have been a clerk on H.M.S. Royal George. He married, but nothing else is known about him. Robert (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He was described as being ‘in Know’, which is probably Priesthill Know in Liddesdale. He married Helen Grieve and their children included: Robert in Know, who married Marion Elliot; and Ninian in Priesthill. Robert (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Edinburgh, who was legal agent for the town, particularly during the protracted case involving the division of the Common. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1761. It is possible he is the same as the descendant of the Elliots of Caerlenrig. Robert (18th C.) resident at Howcleuch in 1757 when his son Andrew was baptised in Roberton Parish. Perhaps the same Robert was resident at Woodburn in Roberton Parish in 1763 and 1767 when his children Helen and John were baptised. He may be the Robert who married Janet Scott in Roberton in 1750 or the Robert who married Margaret Rieve in Robertson in 1754. Isobel (b.1760) may also have been his child. Robert (d.1799) shoemaker of the Cross Wynd. He was probably son of Adam, older brother of schoolmaster James (later of Goldielands), and may also have been brother of shoemaker Adam. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for John Nichol. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1761 in Hawick Parish he married Isobel Scott, who died in 1796. His children probably included: Walter (b.1762), who carried on his business; James (b.1765), whose wife may have died in 1835; Janet (b.1767); and John (b.1771). The witnesses in 1765 were carrier James Wilson and weaver John Wilson. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He could be the son of Hector born there in 1738. His children included: Hector (b.1765), probably father of Robert (b.1792); Isabel (b.1767); Jean (b.1768); and Margaret (b.1771). He is surely related to the Hector whose children were born in Southdean Parish in the 1750s. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Heap in Wilton Parish. His wife was Janet Russell and their children included: Isabel (b.1776); Robert (b.1777); Betty (b.1779); and Isabel (again, b.1785). Robert (18th C.) resident at Parkhill Wester in 1774 when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish. There are several other children born in Robertson around that time who could also be his. Robert (18th C.) son of
Robert in Know, this probably being Priesthill Know in Castleton Parish. He married Marion Elliot and died without issue. Robert (b.c.1745) son of William of Wolfelee with his 2nd wife Margaret Ogilvie. He was a merchant in Amsterdam. He purchased the estate of Pinnaclehill near Kelso. He died without issue and left Pinnaclehill to his niece Charlotte. Robert (1746–1817) tenant at Powisholm and other places in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was son of William in Southdeanrig. He married Wilhelmina Hislop (1763–1836). Their children included: Christian (b.1778); Margaret (c.1779–1804); John (b.1787), who was shepherd at Roan in Castleton Parish; and William (b.1802), who was a freeholder in the Michaelmas Headrolls of 1811. In 1788 he was listed under `Votes of Sir Gilbert Elliot' among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was still listed as liferenter of lands in Minto Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. In 1788 he married Mary, daughter of Rev. Edmund Garforth of Askham. They had 5 children: Eleanor Maria Anne, who married Dr. James Grant of Jedburgh; Isabella Lucy, who married Gilbert, 3rd son of Sir William Elliott, the 6th Baronet of Stobs; Agnes, who died unmarried; Robert, who was a Captain in the Royal Navy; and Edward Eden, Accountant General in Bombay. Robert (c.1759–1844) cattle dealer in Newcastle. He may be the son of William who was born in Hobkirk Parish in 1758. In 1841 he was living at about 10 Langholm Street, with Helen and Mary, who were probably his daughters. He is probably the Robert who married Mary Elliot (c.1768–1840) in Castleton and whose children included Isabell (1799–1804); Mary (1804–54); and Robina (1816–42). Robert (c.1760–1824) son of Robert, who farmed at Hermitage. He was tenant in Moraylees and Haydon Bridge. He married Mary Scott (c.1776–1843) from Skelfhill and their children were Robert (1809–44) and James (1813–90), who were both tenants at Galalaw. Capt. Robert (1761–1840) younger son of William of Whithaugh, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was in the Merchant Navy, serving as Captain of the ‘Hope’, which operated between Calcutta and Canton. He farmed at Glencairn, near Canobie. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Alison Grieg (c.1779–1856). Robert (b.1762) son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He emigrated to America, settling in Quebec, where he married Elizabeth Louise Josephine Savoie in 1788. Their children included: Andre (b.1788); Marie-Louise Allet (b.1790); Simon (1793–1865), who married Rebecca Armstrong and was great-grandfather of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau; Joseph (b.1795); Marie (b.1796); Charlotte (b.1798), who probably died young; Helene Allet (b.1802), also died young; Margaritte (b.1805); twins Helene and Charlotte (b.1807); and Sara-Marie (b.1810). Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Roan in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He died in Trois-Rivières, Quebec. Robert ‘Little Hobbie o the Castleton’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Byreholm in Castleton Parish. In the ‘Local Historians Table Book’ of 1841 it is described that he was ‘a dwarf’, ‘reputed to be a fairy changeling’, who had died less than 20 years previously. He was ‘a most irascible creature’ who would pull out a knife when insulted, but was too slow to catch people. He also had a run-in with his neighbour William Scott from Kirndean, threatening the big man to a duel for tarnishing his reputation, causing Scott to flee from his house. Robert (b.1767), W.S., son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a lawyer in Kirkcaldy and died unmarried. Robert (1767–1854) son of Capt. Robert, and grandson of William of Harwood. He was born at Hobsburn in Hobkirk Parish. He joined the Navy in 1781 and rose through the ranks, becoming Commander in 1801 and going on half-pay in 1814. In 1846 he was promoted to the rank of Vice-Admiral. In 1797 he married Ann, daughter of Andrew Hilley of Plymouth. His children were: Elizabeth Pringle (1801–47); Robert Hilley

(b.1803), Captain in the Navy, who married Elizabeth Carr; and Helen (or Ann), who married John Paton of Crailing, his 1st wife being her cousin Eleanor Elliot. He stayed at Hundalee and then at Glenbank and was a member of the Jedforest Club. For several years before his death he was completely blind. Robert (1768/9–1856) shepherd at Blinkbonny. He married Elspeth ‘Huitson’ or ‘Hotson’ (possibly Whitson), who died in 1815, aged 50; she was probably related to George ‘Hotson’ (d.1728), who is buried in the adjacent lair at Ettleton. Their children included: Margaret (b.1789); Helen (b.1791); William (b.1794); Christian (b.1799), who may have married shoemaker William Elliot; Elspeth (1803–59); Robert (b.1807); and John, who died in infancy. Robert (18th/19th C.) from Langburnshields. He was an apprentice baker with Thomas Kedie in Hawick. He produced a sketch entitled ‘Wilton Path and Damside, 1810’, which is one of the first representations of Wilton. It was reproduced in the Hawick News in 1910 and discussed in the Transactions in 2015. Robert (b.1769) farmer at Lanton Mains, taking over from his father, William. He married Margaret Hall (c.1778–1818) and their children included: Christian (c.1810–27); and Jane (c.1812–31). The family are buried at Abbotrule Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. Probably the same Robert was father of: Mary (b.1783), born at Tythehouse; William (b.1792), born at Harwood; and John (b.1794), born at Robert’s Linn. Robert (b.c.1770) born in Bedrule, he was a farmer. In 1841 he is ‘Independent’ and in 1851 recorded as ‘Pauper Formerly Farmer’. His wife was Jessy from Morebattle and their children included Margaret, Mary (who married David Turnbull), Christian and Janet. Robert of Cooms (18th/19th C.) subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was a surgeon in Haltwhistle. He married Jane Elliot from Cringledykes, daughter of John and grand-daughter of Robert in Hermitage. Their children were Margaret, Jane, John (surgeon in Bellingham), Robert (surgeon in Haltwhistle), William (lived in London), Janet, Jane, Alice, Georgina, Andrew (who married Helen from Hermitage), Kate and Margaret (who married James Hill, Controller General for Scotland). Robert (1790–1872) eldest son of William, and grandson of Robert of Caerlenrig, he was born in Kirkton Parish. He became tenant in Teindside and is recorded there in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert of Arkleton (1775–1810) son of William and Cassandra Elliot. He was a Captain in the 5th Bombay Native Infantry, and saw active service at the siege of Seringapatam. He returned home about 1803 to take possession of the family estate. He was then a Major in the 1st Battalion of the Roxburghshire Volunteers. He led some of the men of Liddesdale and the Slitrig valley to Hawick in response to the False Alarm of 1804. He returned to India where he was promoted to Major. He later accompanied the mission to the Isle of France, where he (and many others) were killed on the H.M.S. Africaine when attacked by 2 Franch frigates. Robert ‘Blind Robbie’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Deadwater who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. Robert (1780–1851) son of John, tanner in Hawick. He was farmer at Roan. He may be the ‘R. Elliot, Roon’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was a gamekeeper at Harden and in 1851 was a retired farmer at Scaurnook. His wife was Janet (from Canongbie). Robert (b.1785) son of John, farmer at Twislehope. He was a surgeon in Haltwhistle. He married Jane Elliot from Cringledykes, daughter of John and grand-daughter of Robert in Hermitage. Their children were Margaret, Jane, John (surgeon in Bellingham), Robert (surgeon in Haltwhistle), William (lived in London), Janet, Jane, Alice, Georgina, Andrew (who married Helen from Hermitage), Kate and Margaret (who married James Hill, Controller General for Scotland). Robert (1790–1872) eldest son of William, and grandson of Robert of Caerlenrig, he was born in Kirkton Parish. He became tenant in Teindside and is recorded there in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. Probably the same Robert ‘of Teindside’ was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He is recorded there as farmer in 1841, living with William (probably his brother) and Margaret (probably his mother). In 1851 he was recorded there as farmer of 440 acres, employing 6 labourers. He died unmarried. Robert (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Robert (c.1785–1849) son of William and Jean Davidson from Ewes. He was a slater in Hawick, recorded at Townhead in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was at about 2 Loan in 1841. He married Janet ‘Bleak’ (or Black, c.1789–1831). Their children included: Margaret (1811–79), who married William Miller; William (1814–67), who married Helen Smith; Jane (1816–74), who married John White; Janet (1818–83), who married Thomas Thomson; twins Martha (1822–92) and Robert (b.1822), who probably died young; Thomas (1825–64); and John Scott (1829–1914), who was Cornet in 1851. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1849. Robert (1791–1858) son of Walter and Helen Crozier. He farmed at Hermitage, like several members of his family before him. He is probably the Elliot from Kirndean who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. In 1851 he was farming 2,000 acres of moorland and employing 4 labourers. He married Mary (c.1804–35), daughter of Thomas Murray and Janet Inglis, from Whisgills. She was probably already dead in 1841, and he was certainly a widower by 1851. He was wealthy enough to be employing a governess in 1841. His children were: Janet (1826–73), who married Colin Hay; Walter (1828–93), who farmed Hermitage after his father died; Thomas (1830–54), who died on the Isle of Mull; Helen (1832–93); and Mary (b.1834). Robert (1793/4–1858) only son of William, tenant at Millburn. He also farmed at Millburnholm. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 he married Helen (or Eleanor), daughter of John Davidson from Bewcastle; she died in 1886, aged 82, and was buried at Ettleton. Their children included William (1828–91), who emigrated to New Zealand; Anne (b.1829); Elizabeth or Betty Laidlaw (b.1831); and John Davidson (b.1834–96). He died at Toftholm and is buried at Unthank. Robert of Redheugh (1794–1869) only son of Thomas and Mary Thomson. He inherited the lands of Redheugh from his uncle John. During his time the road to Hawick (B6399) was built adjacent to the farm. He also had the Rede Burn partially diverted and drained the marshy area behind the farm. In 1805 (although this date seems too early) he sold Cooms and Middlemoss to Humble Lamb of Ryton. He was listed for the first time as a head of household in Castleton Parish in 1837. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was also Vice-President of the Liddesdale Curling Club. He was listed at Redheugh in Slater’s 1852 directory and in the 1861 census was ‘Land Proprietor’ there. In 1851 he and his wife settled Redheugh jointly on their 2 sons, reserving the liferent for themselves. He was still at Redheugh in a directory of 1868. In 1820 he married Jessie (or Janet, c.1796–1871) Elliot from Flatt. Their children were: Thomas (1821–69), who married Elizabeth Kyle; Jane (b.1822/3–67); Mary (b.1824), who died young; John (1825–58), who died in Mexico; Mary (1827–53); Henry (b.1829), who also died young; and another daughter. He settled Redheugh jointly on his 2 sons in 1851. He and his wife are buried in Castleton cemetery. Robert (b.1794/5–1878) carrier in Newcastle. He may also have lived at Greens. He was a carrier in Newcastle, listed among heads of households in Newcastle in 1835–41. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as carrier to Carlisle once a week, and also to Hawick once a week. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was at about 33 North Hermitage Street. In 1861 he was listed as farmer of 26 acres. His wife was Agnes Murray Elliot (c.1794–1876) from Westerkirk. Their children included: Isabella (b.1819); Janet (b.1821); Agnes (b.1823); Agnes (again, 1824–97); Christian (b.1826); John (1828–57); Robert (b.1830); Barton (a daughter, 1831–20); Robert (again, b.1834); Jane (or Jean, b.1835); and James Douglas (1838–78), who died in London. Robert (b.1795/6) shepherd in Castleton Parish, where he was born. In 1861 he was living at about 1 Langholm Street in Newcastle. His wife was Isabella and their children included Robert and Violet. His wife was from England, and his children were born there. Robert (1796/7–1865) son of Robert, tenant in Powisholm in Castleton Parish. He farmed at Powisholm, like his father, and is recorded there in the 1840s to 1860s. He is probably the ‘R. Elliot, Powisholm’ subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Esther (1798–1889), daughter of carter Adam Elliott from Newcastle. Their children included: Robert (1821–1908), who live at Bankend and Powisholm; Margaret (1823–1900), who married Andrew Thompson; Wilhelmina (1825–93), married John Robson and died at Teviothead; Adam (1827–80), who worked for a while as a baker in Hawick; John (1829–48); Ann (1831–95); Mary (1833–1906); James Armstrong (1835–1903); Elizabeth (1837–85), married John Glendinning from Liverpool and died in California; Sibella (1839–1911); and William (1843–1921). He is probably related to the Robert who farmed at the same place earlier. Robert (19th C.) recorded as ‘Robert, esq. of Leehaugh’ on Pigot’s 1837 directory. He probably lived at Leehaugh near Newcastleton, and could be the same as Robert of Redheugh. Robert (1802–77) born in Castleton Parish, son of William and Jean Easton. He was an agricultural labourer and shepherd. He was listed among heads of households as labourer at Gillfoot in 1835 and Whitropeburn in 1836–38, and shepherd at Phaukknowe in 1840 and 1841. He is listed as labourer at Phaukknowe in 1841 and Upperraw in 1851. He married Betty Telfer (c.1805–75). Their children included: John (1822–26); Isabella (1827–46); William (b.1829); Jeanie (b.1832); Robert (b.1834); Sarah (b.1839); and John (b.1841). He died at Whitehillbrae. Robert Kerr 6th Laird of Harwood (1805–73) eldest son of William the 5th Laird. Before 1835 he lived at Greenriver on the Stonedge estate. He succeeded to the Harwood estates at the age of 30 and moved into the new house that his father had had built on the estate. He served in the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, reaching the rank of Lieutenant. He is said to have been a keen country sportsman, excelling at riding with the hounds. Along with some friends he started the ‘Jedforest Harriers’, meeting at Swinnie Toll-bar, Howahill, Chapel of Cross (presumably Shiplaw Corse), Ruletownhead and elsewhere. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1829. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as being Deputy-Lieutenant (from 1848), a Commissioner of Supply for the county, Tax Commissioner and member of the Police Board. In 1845, after a 2 year legal battle, he inherited the Clifton estates from his cousin Robert Pringle. He said ‘The name Clifton has been a lucky one with me. When staying at Clifton, near Bristol, I met my wife, a Miss Clifton, and I succeeded to the estate of Clifton’. On the announcement of the legal victory there was a great celebration at Harwood, with a bonfire lit on a nearby hill. He was said to be a keen supporter of the ‘uppies’ in Hobkirk Baa. In 1833 he married Mary Anne, daughter of Charles Claude Clifton of Twymaur, Brecon, and she died in 1871. His 13 children were: Mary-Anne Frances (1834–1917), said to be the prettiest, who married Sir Edward Clude Cockburn; William Claude (1835–1922), who succeeded; Charles John (1836/7–1863), who died aged 27, after returning from India; Robert Henry (b.1838) of Clifton Park, who married Anna Maria Louisa, daughter of Lord Trimleston, and whose son Robert would later succeed as Laird of Harwood; Ellen Eliza (b.1839), who married Chetwode Drummond Pringle; Adelaide Catherine (1840–1926), who married Sir Basil Francis Hall; Chandos Frederick (1842–62); Anna Maria Octavia (b.1844), who died young; Caroline Clifton (1845–1923), who married James Moffat of Edenhall; Edward Claude (1846–1913), married Eleanor, daughter of John Jones of Melbourne; Charlotte Elizabeth (1848–93), who married John Dalton of Sleningford Park, Yorkshire; Anna Maria (b.1849), who married Lieut.-Col. James Colquhoun; and Mark Pringle (1851–1924). The family used to spend the winter at Brighton, where he would go hunting. He died there following a hunting accident. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1873. He was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. Robert (b.1804/5) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was an agricultural labourer and gardener in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Slitrig Cottage with his wife and mother-in-law Margaret. By 1851 he was a widower, still at Slitrig Cottage and in 1861 he was a shepherd at Bucklands. He married Janet Crozier in Wilton in 1841. Their children included: Margaret (b.1842); and Robert (b.1844). He could be the son of John born in Hobkirk in 1807. Robert (1808–88) youngest son of James, schoolmaster of Wilton, who lived at Goldielands. He was a shepherd farmer in Roxburgh-shire, Selkirkshire and Dumfriesshire, before settling at Laighwood, near Dunkeld. He received prizes for his sheep from the Highland Agricultural Society in the 1850s and 60s. He corresponded with George Cupples, who was gathering data for Charles Darwin, on the subject of the proportions of sheep born of each sex. He was also on that Society’s Committee for Land Improvement. Robert (1808/9–44) elder son of Robert, farmer at Hermitage, Haydon Bridge, etc. His mother was Mary Scott from Skelfhill. He probably held the tenancy of Galalaw farm, but died in Madeira (or perhaps Madras, India). After his death his brother James became tenant at Galalaw. Robert (b.1808/9) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farm steward at Westerhouses in 1851 and 1861. He married Mary Rennick and their children included Elizabeth, Margaret, John, William, Francis, Marianne, Henry (b.1851) and Agnes (b.1854). Robert (c.1811–45) agricultural labourer who was living at Foderlee Cottage in 1841. He married Mary Elliot (b.c.1814) and their children included Elizabeth (b.c.1834), Margaret (b.c.1835) and John (b.c.1839). His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court. He could be the Robert, son of

John, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1807. Robert (1807–96) younger son of James of Wolfelee and brother of Sir Walter. He was a twin of James. He was an elder of Wolfelee Free Kirk and also took a keen interest in the Sclenty Schuil. He lived to the age of 89. Robert (b.1812/3) born in Castleton Parish, he was a shepherd and labourer. In 1861 he was at about 37 South Hermitage Street. He married Mary Armstrong in 1840. Their children included: Christian (b.1842); Robert (b.1845); Jane; and Archibald. Robert (b.1814/5) born in Newcastleton, he was an agricultural labourer living around Sunnyside in Denholm in 1841. The family was living in a cottage at Hundalee in 1851. In 1861 he was a ploughman in Oxnam Parish. In 1836 he married Hannah Whillans from Crailing. Their family included: John (b.c.1837); Archibald; and Walter. His elderly uncle Walter, formerly a mason from Cavers, was also living with them in 1851. The family may have emigrated to Bruce County, Ontario. Robert (b.c.1815) labourer who was living at Hermitage Schoolhouse in 1841. He married Agnes Milligan and their children included: Jessie (or Janet, b.1835); Margaret; and Jane (b.1839); and Matthew (b.1841). He may have been related to James, who was schoolmaster at Hermitage. Robert (b.1818/9) born in Hawick Parish, he was farm steward at Cavers estate in the 1860s. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at Cavers East Lodge (called ‘Cavers Garden’ in 1861). He was listed as ‘gamekeeper’ and his wife as ‘portress’. His wife was Isabella Elliot, probably daughter of John, who was shepherd at Shiplaw Corse. Their children included: Margaret (b.1850); William (b.1852); Mary (b.1854); Stuart Douglas (who became a Colonel in the Volunteers); Elizabeth (b.1858); John (b.1860); Isabella (b.1863); Janet (b.1869); Janet (again, b.1866); Agnes (b.1869); and Robert (b.1872). Robert (1821–1908) son of Robert, who farmed at Powisholm, and Esther Elliot. He was an agricultural labourer living at Bankend in Castleton Parish in 1861. In 1849 he married Christian Elliot (c.1826–1904) and their children included Agnes Murray (1850–1904); Robert (1851–1928); John (1853–1935); Esther; and Adam (1858–1903). He died at Powisholm. Robert Henry of Clifton Park (b.1837) 3rd son of Robert Henry. He inherited the lands of Clifton Park from his father. In about 1874 he also owned lands in Linton Parish. In 1868 he married Anna Maria Louisa Barnewall, only daughter of Thomas, Lord Trimleston. Their son Thomas became the next Laird of Harwood. Robert (1845–1918) younger son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. He emigrated to New Zealand in 1864 and married Elizabeth Fitt. Their children were Ettie, Eliza, Maud, Agnes and Andrew. Robert (b.1850/1) born in Kirkton Parish. In 1901 he was farm steward at Barnes Cottages. His wife was Annie and their children included Annie, Henry, Thomas, Jane, Edward and Robert. Robert of Redheugh (d.1915) only son of Thomas and Elizabeth Kyle. He inherited Redheugh, being served heir to his grandfather in 1887. He married Effie McGregor Corbett, but they had no children. In 1918 his sister Anna Mary sold Redheugh to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. Robert (1865–1937) son of Walter, farmer in Hermitage, and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He also farmed at Hermitage, but gave up the lease and retired to Newcastle-ton. He married Isobel, sister of J.G. Wilson, manufacturer in Hawick. He secondly married Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Paisley, ironmonger from Hawick. His only child was Isabella Jane Armstrong. Robert Young Scott ‘Bob’ (1920–2016) born on February 29th, so he celebrated his 21st birthday in 2004! A High School Maths teacher for 28 years, he coached tennis locally and received an M.B.E. in 1998 for services to lawn tennis. He married Madge, who coached tennis along with him, and they had sons Kim and Sean. Roland (15th C.) recorded as ‘Rollando Elwald’ in 1466 when he witnessed a charter at Kirkcudbright for Robert Herries. Roland (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Along with ‘Willot’ and some Armstrongs, Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for bringing them to the area to attack the tenants of Whitemuir. They are described as ‘traitors of Leven’, but are as likely to have been from Liddesdale as England. Roland (15th/16th C.) recorded in a 1516 ‘respite’ to William of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots. He is listed as ‘Rolland Elwald in Thorleshope’. He is surely related to the other Elliots of Thorleshope, perhaps the generation between the John of the 1480s and 90s and the Robert or Robin of the 1540s to 60s. Roland (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Riccarton, recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Listed after him are William Elliot, along with Martin and Patrick Crozier. He may be related to some of the other nearly contemporary Rolands. Roland of Thor-leshope (16th C.) recorded in 1546 when he was one of the men to be entered as prisoners to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. This was along with John, son of Robert of Thorlieshope (whose relationship to him is unclear), as well as John, son to ‘Hobe Quytskerk’. Roland ‘Rowie’ of the Park (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when he was held by Patrick Houston of that Ilk with a pledge of good behaviour to the King. He is probably the Robin of the Park who was accused (along with Simon and others) by the English in 1581 of stealing cattle and taking Thomas Routledge prisoner.

He could be the man transcribed as ‘James Rowe in the Park’, listed along with Sym of the Park and Archibald of the Park in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1581. It is thus possible that he was son of James of the Park. However, he is probably the ‘Rowie Elliot of the Park, called Symmis Rowie’ listed in 1581 as the leader of the gang of Elliots of the Park released from Edinburgh Castle; his father was thus Simon. In 1582/3 his name was transcribed as ‘Robbe’ when several other Elliots were charged for his non-appearance. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1594 as ‘Rowie Elliot of Ramsegill’ when he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Rowe Ellocht of the Hall’ in a huge 1585 remission of crimes for men whose superior was Lord Maxwell; his name appears near those of Ewesdale residents, and it seems likely he was ‘of the Hall’ (rather than ‘Hall’). ‘Hob and Will Elliotis, brether’ are listed after him, so possibly his brothers, or brothers to each other and more distantly related to him. Roland ‘Rollie’ (17th C.) described as ‘called Park’ in the 1660s when he was listed as a debtor of William Elliot of Binks, along with many other Elliots. He may have been a descendant of the earlier Elliots of Park. Roland (1815–41) son of James, tenant at Lynniecleuch. He was tenant farmer at Mackside in 1841. In 1837 he married Beatrice Pott (c.1799–1878), who died at Wilton Hill, Hawick. Samuel (18th C.) possibly a resident at Wells. He was recorded as a wright in Denholm in 1723.

Probably the same man was father of: James (b.1723) in Cavers Parish; Samuel (b.1725) in Cavers; Walter (b.1828) in Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes; Alison (b.1730) in Hobkirk; and William (b.1732) in Bedrule. Samuel (b.c.1750) son of William of Wolfelee with his 2nd wife Margaret Ogilvie. He was a merchant in Antigua. He has 2 daughters: Alicia, who married William Hay Carre and Sir M.A. Crosby; and Eliza, who married Lord Despenser. Simon (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 along with James, Lawrence and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. Simon (16th C.) entered in 1537/8 for crimes along with his brother James ‘Elwald’ and William in Leahaugh, with sureties being Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald. They were accused of breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk. How he was related to other Elliots is unclear. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as the tenant of Park in Liddesdale. Either the same or a different Simon was also tenant at ‘Coklaik’. He was probably an ancestor of the Simon of the Park recorded about 4 decades later. Simon (16th C.) recorded as ‘Sym Elwald’ in 1546 when he was witness to the bond entering some Elliots as prisoners with John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He signed with the help of the notary (suggesting that he could not write), ‘in absens of my brother young William’. He may be the same as one of the other Simons. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th C.) proprietor of lands at Dod Burn and adjacent farms. In 1567 Robert Scott of Thirlestane and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme as surety for him and Airchie’s Will in Gorrenberry. He is recorded in a bond of security of 1569 signed in Hawick, in which he is given as ‘Sym Elliot in Dodburne’, with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch serving as surety for him. 5 tenants are listed for whom he was surety himself. He may have been related to the other Elliots in the bond, e.g. Gavin in Skelfhill or Gavin of Fahash. When he failed to appear in 1569 (along with Gavin of Fahash and Willim of Gorrenberry), Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. Also in 1569 he was one of the relief pledges listed for Gavin in Fahash (the other 2 being William of Gorrenberry and Gavin Eliott of Skelfhill, who were probably close relatives). Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. In 1573 he was to be entered into ward in St. Andrews, according to the register of the Privy Council. Simon ‘Simmie’ of the Park (16th C.) probably related to the earlier Simon of the Park. In 1578/9 there was a restatement at the Privy Council of a pledge that he should be placed in ward with the Laird of Corstorphine; his sureties were Martin of Braidie and the deceased John of the Park, while Hob of the Park was also mentioned in the same document and so surely related. He was said to have escaped from ward, and hence his cautioners were fined. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Simons. He is listed as ‘Sym Elliot of the Park’ in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies. He was surely father of ‘Symmis Rowe’ of the Park, recorded in 1582/3, and possibly also father of ‘Symmis Arche’, who was one of the cautioners for ‘Symmis Rowe’. ‘Sims John Elliot of the Parke’, recorded in 1583, was probably also his son. He was likely related to the other Elliots of the Park who are listed in 1583, namely ‘Grey Willie’, ‘Scots Hobbie’, ‘Jamie of the Park’, ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’ and ‘Hob’s Hobbie’. Simon of Philhope, ‘Mertin’s Sym’ (d.bef. 1592) eldest son of Martin of Braidlie. He is first mentioned in 1569, when he was among a number of pledges in exchange for Martin of Braidlie with the Regent Moray. He is also mentioned in 1580 along with his brothers Gavin, Archibald and Robert; in that year they were all implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. He is ‘Sime Ellott’, son of Martin of ‘Bradley’ in a letter of 1583. In 1586 he was ‘Sym Elliot, sone to the said Martene’ when he occupied the farm of Riccarton Cleuch, which was released to him by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was ‘Syme Ellott Martin’s son’ in 1590 when accused of stealing 8 cows from ‘Medupp’ in England, along with ‘Ill-willed Will’ Crozier and ‘Quentin’s Archie’ Crozier. He received a Crown Charter of the lands of Philhope (in the Borthwick valley) in 1591, along with his father. It is unclear if he succeeded to the lands for long after his father’s death. There were Elliots at Philhope for several subsequent generations. His wife’s name is not recorded, but his children included: Martin of Braidley; William of the Binks; and James ‘in Hollis’ (Hollow). His son Martin, along with Robert of Redheugh, made an agreement to bury their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1599. Simon of Harden (16th C.) listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. His lands were presumably Harden in Liddesdale. It is possible he is the same man as Simon of Philhope. Simon ‘in Philhope’ (d.bef. 1628) eldest son of Martin of Braidlie and grandson of the earlier Simon of Philhope. He is recorded in the charter for the lands of Philhope in 1592. In 1615 his wardship, which had been in the hands of the Crown since his father’s execution in 1607, was granted to Thomas Armstrong of Craig. He married Elizabeth Chisholme (who was presumably from one of the local families), who survived him, and may later have married Archibald of Philhope. They had one child, Grizel, who was given as ward to Robert of Fahnash when Simon died; she later married Robert of Fahnash’s son John and was heiress of Philhope. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th C.) recorded with a tower in the Debateable Land on Sandison’s c.1590 map, to the north of Larriston. This could have been near Burnmouth perhaps. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as ‘Syme Elliott, callit Guyd, in Linsburne’ when he was accused of stealing 3 cows from Jock, ‘callit Dod’ from the lands of ‘Buceburne’. He was found guilty along with Abie Armstrong, although Archie Armstrong ‘Raccas’ and Francie Armstrong ‘Tueden’ were acquitted. He was ordered to be hanged for his crimes. Simon of the Binks (d.bef. 1656) 2nd son of William of the Binks, and great-grandson of Robert, 13th Chief. He is first mentioned in 1599 when accused of theft and then in a marriage suit with an illegitimate daughter of ‘Gibbie wi’ ye Gowden Garters’ of Stobs. It is said that he ‘hand-fasted’ with her on condition that he pay a considerable dowrie if was unsatisfied with her (which he was, since he married another woman). This led to him selling Binks to Gilbert Elliott (around 1601), although his son William bought it back. He was on the inquest at the Judiciary Court of 1622 and 1623, when listed as ‘Sime Elliott, Benkis in Thorlieshoip’ and ‘callit of Benkis’. He is also referred to as ‘Sym Elliot of Binkis in Tholrisheshope’. He was tenant at Thorlieshope (from at least 1622), Larriston (around 1627) and Huddishouse (around 1637). He is referred to as ‘Symione Elliot called of the Benekis in Huddishouse in Liddersdail’ in 1637 when his son William purchased Harwood; William may have ‘wadset’ the lands to him and hence he himself was listed as owner in 1643, when ‘Harriot’ was valued at £433 6s 8d. As a result he is occasionally referred to as the 1st Elliot Laird of Harwood. He purchased Lodggeill in 1647 and Cooms in 1650, and together these made up Black Tarras. He is recorded in a contract of 1648 involving the vicarage teinds for Hobkirk Parish, and in a discharge for the teinds in 1649. His sons were: William, more usually called 1st Laird of Harwood; and Robert of Black Tarras, who married Margaret Riddell from Bawlie. His brother Robert is noted in the Register of the Privy Seal as a thief. He also had a daughter who married a Scott, her sons John and William later witnessing a document relating to Harwood (and it is possible this was Rev. John of Hawick). His name is sometimes written ‘Simeon’ or ‘Syme’. In 1656 his charters of Lodggeill and Cooms were confirmed by Cromwell, by which time he was deceased. Simon of Black Tarras (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert of Black Tarras and Margaret Riddell. He inherited half of the lands of Lodgegill. He is mentioned in 1671 when he brought a case of assault and robbery of his lands of Tarra, Skelfhill and ‘Longkepysye’ against Henry in Harwood, Henry’s brother James, John in Dinley, Robert of Pingleholes, William of Philhope, John of Brugh and others; this suggests some dispute with his neighbours. He was declared bankrupt in 1690 and the lands of Lodgegill were adjudged to William of Thorlshope, who settled them on his brother Henry. Simon of Dinlabyre (17th C.) recorded in a letter of 1692 to the Earl of Tarra. He must have been related to William of Dinlabyre, who died around 1693. He may have been the last Elliot Laird of Dinlabyre, who sold the estate to John Oliver in about 1700. Simon of Swinside and the Binks (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William of the Binks and Harwood. In 1670, along with William of Unthank and his son Adam, he purchased Lymiecleuch (including Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch) from William Elliott, younger of Stobs. However, he sold his share to William Elliott of Stobs 3 years later. In 1672 he bought Middleknowes in Oxnam Parish and in 1674 he obtained a Crown Charter of the Barony of Swinside, designating his eldest son as heir, but retaining liferent for himself. In 1678 he is recorded as owner of the lands of Swinside and Middleknowes in Oxnam Parish, valued at more than £2000. He is ‘Symeon Elliott of Swinskyde’ when he signed the 1678 marriage contract between the Elliots of Midlem Mill and Harwood. He is recorded as ‘Simeon of Swinskyde’ in a bond of 1683. In 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was cautions for a bond between Henry Elliot of Harwood and William Elliot of Bawlie in 1692, witness to a bond for Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1696 and cautions for another in 1696. He registered his arms as Baron of Swinside in 1697. In 1699 he witnessed a disposition for Elliot of Harwood. In 1714 he settled various of his lands on his sons and he sold the lands of Binks to John of Thorlshope, sometime before 1718; however, it has also been suggested that he sold them to Christopher Irving some time before this. He married Jean Elliot (from an unknown branch of the family) before 1672. They had 7 children: William, Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, who succeeded to Swinside; Adam of Beirhope; Gideon of Harwood on Teviot; Simon, mentioned in 1688 (d.bef. 1714); James, also mentioned in 1688 (d.bef. 1714); Robert of ‘Tyneside’; and Christian, who married Dr. John Haliburton from Jedburgh and whose son Simon Haliburton married Elizabeth Elliot of Midlem Mill. Simon John of Brugh (1940– ) only son of Sir William (Air Chief Marshal). He was educated at Eton and McGill University. He is the present head of the Elliots of Brugh. He married Sonia Annabel Shand in 1972 and their children are Alice Rosalind, Benjamin William and Catherine Camilla. The family live in Dorset. Stuart Douglas (1856–c.1930) son of Cavers gamekeeper Robert and Isabella, he was born in Cavers Parish. He worked in Edinburgh as a Supreme Court Solicitor, and was also a City Councillor there. He was President of the Edinburgh Borderers’ Union for 23 years and Secretary of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association for 25 years. He was heavily involved with the volunteer movement, which he joined in 1876; he was an officer of the 4th Battalion of the Royal Scots (Lothian Regiment), rising through the rank to become Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1882 in Hawick he married Agnes, daughter of William Laidlaw. Their children were Agnes Laidlaw Douglas, Isabella, Edith, Constance R., Florence W., Robert A.D. and William Gilbert. Note that his name is also sometimes ‘Stewart’. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1534 as procurator to Gavin in a legal agreement carried out in Hassendean Kirk. Gavin made a letter of reversion to William Scott for the 40-shilling lands of ‘Neder Gallelaw’; this may have been Gavin of Horsleyhill, and it is possible they were closely related. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of ‘Lyndene’ in the Barony of Bowden, along with other ‘Elwalds’. Thomas ‘Law’s Tom’ (16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘Thome Elliot callit Lawis Thome’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. ‘Lawis Jok’ also in Priesthaugh and ‘Lawis Richie’ in Swinstead were also named and presumably his brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Thomas (16th C.) brother of Jock of Copshaw. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whitaugh. He is recorded as ‘Thom Elliot of Copshawe’ when accused along with William of Gorremberry, the Armstrongs of Whitaugh, and others of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England in 1587. He is probably the ‘Thom of Copshaw’ whose son Francis was listed among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. Thomas of Bonjedward (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when is son Will was found guilty of stealing a horse from Walter Scott of Burnfoot-on-Ale. Thomas (17th C.) servant of Gilbert of Craeng who witnessed a sasine for Appotside in 1632. Thomas of Bewlie (d.1686) tenant farmer at Borthwickshiels, son of Robert in Borthwickshiels and descended from the Elliots of Horsleyhill. He is recorded along with his parents in a list of communicants in the Borthwick valley in 1650. His only known sibling was William, minister at Yarrow, for whom he became executor (for his debts!) after his death. In 1672 he purchased Bewlie from Walter Turnbull of Bewlie and settled these lands on his eldest son William in 1675. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1682 in Roberton for Patrick Riddell of Muselee and Marie Elliot (his daughter). He is probably the Thomas who (along with William) witnessed a baptism for James Murray, herd at Borthwickshiels in 1683. He is recorded as Thomas ‘in Borthwickshiels’ in an undertaking of 1685 with Henry Elliot of Harwood. He married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Chamberlain Newton (and she died in 1672). They had 5 children: William, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae (b.1658); Thomas (c.1660–1723), progenitor of the Oakwood Mill Elliots; Dr. Gideon (d.bef. 1723), of North Sinton; Mary (or ‘Marie’), who married Patrick Riddell (incorrectly recorded sometimes as Nichol) of Muselee; and Susanna, who married William Scott of Stonedge (and whose daughter married William of Wolfelee). His will is recorded in 1686. Thomas of Haydon Bridge (d.c.1688) 4th son of John of Brugh. He may also have been described as ‘of Canonbie Mill’. He married a Robinson. Their children included: George, who was killed in battle; Walter, unmarried; Gilbert, killed at Dettingen; and William, born posthumously, who was a joiner at Haydon Bridge. Thomas (1659/60–1723) tenant of Oakwood Mill, 2nd son of Thomas and Margaret Scott of Chamberlain Newton, and brother of the 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae. In 1719, along with his son Andrew, he witnessed a sasine for Helen, 2nd daughter of James Elliot in Calrous. He married Jean (c.1660–1743), daughter of Cornelius Inglis of Newton (possibly from the same family who once owned Branxholme), and she died in Selkirk in 1743, aged 83. His children were: Thomas in Oakwood Mill, Bailie of Selkirk, who married Bessie Tudhope; William (b.c.1688), 1st Elliot of Wolfelee; Andrew, who married Agnes Shortreed and Mary Simpson; Bessie (b.1697), who died young; Isobel (b.1702); another Bessie (or ‘Elizabeth’, b.1704), who married Robert Shortreed of Essenside in 1725; and Agnes (d.1801), who married John Sibbald from Whitlelaw and Walter Cunningham from Hindhope, and had 20 children in total, with Col. Sibbald of Pinnacle being a grandson of hers. He may also have had a daughter Elizabeth who was the 2nd wife of William of Whithaugh. He is buried in Lindean churchyard, this location suggesting a connection with the family of ‘James Elliott of Bridgeheugh’ mentioned by Scott of Satchells. Thomas (b.c.1685) eldest son of Thomas in Oakwood Mill and related to the Elliots of Borthwickbrae. He was also tenant in Oakwood Mill, was described as a ‘malster’ (presumably a maker of malt) in Selkirk and was Bailie there from 1721. In 1708 he married Bessie, eldest daughter of John Tudhope (also a Bailie in Selkirk). Their children were John, John (again), William, Agnes, Jean, Agnes (again), Andrew, Jen (again), Robert, Elizabeth, Elizabeth (again) and Margaret. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident at Falnash Mill. His wife was Helen and their son John was baptised in Hawick Parish (probably at Caerlenrig) in 1720. His wife was probably Helen Allan, and their other children included Jean (b.1717). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Redfordgreen. He married Margaret Legerwood in Selkirk in 1736 and their son William was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1738. His wife may have secondly married James Scott in Wilton. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Harwood on Teviot. In 1740 he was ‘at Harwood’ when he witnessed a baptism for William Nichol, shepherd at Teindside. He was described as ‘in Harwood’ in 1744 when he leased Northhouse and Suddenrig from the Buccleuch Estates. He was recorded in the list of rental arrears for Northhouse in the period 1745–48. In 1745 he was ‘in Harwood’ when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Lawson (resident of Teindside). In 1746 he and Francis (also at Harwood) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Reid at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Thomas (1723–51) eldest son of William the 1st Laird of Wolfelee. He was a physician. In 1751 he married Helen, daughter of Sir John Elphinstone and whose mother was a daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. He died only about 6 weeks after the marriage. A story is told of his wife being accidentally shut in a secret lower vault of Megginch Castle after being instructed to locate some family valuables and papers there, and being rescued by her cousin through chance circumstances.
He pre-deceased his father, his death coming after catching fever in attending to a sick family. In grief, his wife spent a year living in the dark, but survived her husband by almost 56 years. Thomas (18th C.) purchaser of the Langlands estate (later called Wilton Lodge) in July 1783. His lands were valued at £ 278 12s 8d in 1788 (with much of the former Langlands estate having been sold off to others, but still including Calaburn). He sold it again in about 1790 to Lord Napier. He was the probably an illegitimate son of Gilbert, a younger son of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae and Sarah Growesmith. There is a record of a boundary dispute between him and the Duke of Buccleuch over the Pipewellheugh and Gardener’s Haugh. His father Gilbert is recorded at Langlands on the female servant tax roll for 1785 and 1786, and he himself in 1787 and 1788. He was also taxed for having a footman and 2 horses in 1787 and 1788. In the 1789–92 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick he was listed as ‘late of Langlands’. Thomas (1730–1807) son of John of Whithaugh. He was tenant in Twislehope, along with his elder brother John. He was a subscriber to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. In 1786 along with John (his brother), also in ‘Tweeslihope’, he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was listed at Twislehope on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797, and his wife was also taxed for 2 dogs. It is said that Sir Walter Scott visited him at Tweeslihope on his first trip through Liddesdale. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissary Court in 1809. Rev. Thomas (1731–1808) local minister, 6th son of Robert ‘of Carlenrickrig’ and Christian Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1757, presented to Kirkton on the last day of that year and ordained in mid-1758. Then he was translated to Cavers in 1763. He paid the Horse Tax in 1785–92. He was said to have gentle manners and great modesty, but also was talented as an astronomer and mathematician. The famous Dr. Thomas Chalmers had his first ministerial duty as his assistant 1799–1800. In 1760 he married Anne, daughter of William Elliot (2nd Laird) of Borthwickbrae (presumably his cousin). Although she died only a year later they did have a child, William (b.1761), who became an architect in Kelso (designer of the extension to the old Wilton Kirk), and probably the same William became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1775. He published a description of Cavers for Sinclair’s Statistical Account and a paper on practical astronomy, ‘New and improved Method of taking Observations at Sea’ in the Transactions of the Philosophical Society of Edinburgh. A miniature portrait of him exists. A communion token dated 1761 (the second oldest in existence from the Parish) dates from his ministry. He died in Kelso. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1769); James Thomas (b.1771); Thomas (b.1774); William (b.1777); and Isabel (b.1780). It is possible that he was the Thomas who married Ann Veitch in Southdean in 1762. Thomas (18th C.) mason at Newmill. He married Helen Douglas. Their children, born in Hawick Parish were: Betty Margaret (b.1771); Margaret (b.1772); Walter (b.1772); and James (b.1774). Thomas (b.1741) from the Ewes valley, son of Robert and Janet Scott. He married Elizabeth (born in Bowden), daughter of Robert Carruthers and Isobel Balmer. Their children included: William (1770–1824), who married Jean Easton; Robert (1781–1858); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1782–1843), who married farmer James Scott; Mary (b.1786); and Thomas (b.1791), who married Isabella Aitchison and may have died in the U.S.A. Thomas (1744/5–1800) 3rd son of Robert of Redheugh. His brother John farmed at Redheugh, but he also lived there and farmed Foulshiels. He is the Thomas who was recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Redheugh. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. In 1793 his brother John of Redheugh disposed of the stock and household furniture from Redheugh to him ‘in order that he may be enabled with more ease and convenience to live upon the lands of Redheugh’. He married Mary Thomson. Their children included: Jean (1794–1867), who married Thomas Jardine; Robert (b.1794), who married Jessie Elliot and inherited Redheugh from his uncle; and Margaret (1797–1823), who married William Nichol. He and his wife are buried in Castleton cemetery. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Wester Parkhill in 1781 and Parkhill in 1784. He married Margaret Elliot in Roberton in 1775 and their children included Margaret (b.1778), William (b.1779), Agnes (b.1781), Janet (b.1783) and Christian (b.1784). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is said to have married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, cooper in Castleton and farmer at Dinlabyre. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th Elliot (b.1791/2) born in Castleton Parish, he lived in Robertson Parish. He was a labourer living at Howcleuch in 1841. He was Land Steward at Borthwick Mains in 1851 and 1861, and still recorded there in 1868. He may have been related to Thomas who was at Borthwick Mains a few decades earlier. He married Mary Grieve and their children included: James (b.c.1815); Thomas (b.1818); Esther (b.1819); John (b.1821); Helen (b.c.1825); and William (b.c.1833). Thomas (b.c.1800) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He may be the Thomas, son of John and Janet Little born in 1799. In 1835 he was at Myredykes and in 1837–41 was listed as shepherd there. He married Anne Pott (b.c.1811) and their children included John (b.1829), Betty (b.1832) and Janet (b.1840).

Thomas (19th C.) owner of property on Slitrig Farm. At the 1851 census he was resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1783); Archibald (b.1788); and Thomas (b.1791). It is possible he was connected to the Thomas of Colterscruel who lived at roughly the same time. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Applethorpehall according to the 1797 Horse Tax register, when he owned 2 work horses.

Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Fenlehope' in Castleton Parish, recorded in 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Borthwick Mains, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Borthwick Mains in 1797. Thomas (1771–1850) son of 'Captain' Robert and brother of Capt. William of Harwood. He lived at Kirndean in Liddesdale. He was a Corporal in the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Volunteers), directing some of the Liddesdale part of the troop, along with his brother Mark. Together with Robert Kerr Elliot (his nephew) he is recorded loaning money in 1805, which was repaid by James Scott in 1845. He is probably the Elliot from Kirndean who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He was farmer at Kirndean listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He is still recorded at Kirndean in Slater's 1852 directory (even although he was deceased). In 1802 in Southdean Parish he married Helen (1776/7–1849), elder daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel. They had 5 sons and 6 daughters: Esther (c.1803–27); Robert (1805–24), Ensign in the 16th Madras Native Infantry, who died at Wallajabad in India; Thomas Scott (1806–32), who died at Lanton; Elizabeth Pringle (1808–18): Margaret (b.1809), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1810–39), who married William Boog of Sweethope; William (1811–71), the eldest surviving son, who inherited the lands of Peel from his uncle Thomas Scott (and the lands later descended to John, farmer at the Flatt in Liddesdale), taking the additional surname Scott; Helen (1813–82), who married John Elliot, tenant at Flatt; Ann Jane (1815–92), who died at Friars Mount, Jedburgh; Christian (1817–86); John (b.1819), 2nd surviving son, who inherited Riccalton from his uncle John Scott, and also took the additional surname of Scott; and Henry (b.1821–63), who farmed at Kirndean for a while. Thomas (b.1766) younger son of William of Whithaugh. He was a doctor in Carlisle. He subscribed to William Scott's ' Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Eliza, daughter of Robert Batey of Hightown near Haltwhistle and their children were William (doctor in Carlisle), Robert (b.1811), Elizabeth (b.1813), Margaret (b.1814), Sophia (b.1816), Thomas (b.1817, surgeon in Carlisle) and Jane Isabella (b.1819). Thomas (b.1771) son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton. He may have been tenant in Hillhouse for a while, like his father. He died unmarried. Thomas (c.1776–1838) son of Walter, from the Henderson's Knowe branch. He had brothers Archibald and William. He lived at Colterscruel and Bowanhill. He married Magdalene Thomson (1776–1861). The family emigrated to America, eventually settling in Andes, New York, where he died. His children were: Mary, who married shepherd Walter Scott in 1822; Walter (1798–1858), who lived at Niagara, Ontatio; Betty (b.1800); James (1802–28); William (1809–88), who settled in Bovina; and Robert (1812–18), who died at sea. Letters have survived to him from relatives in Scotland. Thomas (b.1791/2) born in Castleton Parish, he lived in Robertson Parish. He was a labourer living at Howcleuch in 1841. He was Land Steward at Borthwick Mains in 1851 and 1861, and still recorded there in 1868. He may have been related to Thomas who was at Borthwick Mains a few decades earlier. He married Mary Grieve and their children included: James (b.c.1815); Thomas (b.1818); Esther (b.1819); John (b.1821); Helen (b.c.1825); and William (b.c.1833). Thomas (b.c.1800) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He may be the Thomas, son of John and Janet Little born in 1799. In 1835 he was at Myredykes and in 1837–41 was listed as shepherd there. He married Anne Pott (b.c.1811) and their children included John (b.1829), Betty (b.1832) and Janet (b.1840). Thomas (19th C.) owner of property on Slitrig Farm. At the 1851 census he was resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1783); Archibald (b.1788); and Thomas (b.1791). It is possible he was connected to the Thomas of Colterscruel who lived at roughly the same time. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Applethorpehall according to the 1797 Horse Tax register, when he owned 2 work horses.
Elliot

Margaret Hume, from Cavers Parish. Their children included: James (b.1825), who was a merchant at the Sandbed; Elizabeth (b.1827); Mary (b.1829); Peter (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); Rev. William Hume (1837–1927), minister at Ramsbottom; John Little (1839–60); Thomas (b.1842); Michael (b.1844); George Lewis (b.1846); Michael (again, b.1849); and Betsy (1852–57). Thomas (1807–91) son of William and Jean Easton, he was farmer at Mangerton. He was recorded as shepherd at Mangerton among heads of households in 1835–41; his brother Robert was also listed as a shepherd. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at Mangerton. In 1851 he was farming 115 acres there, and employed 5 labourers. In 1852 he was listed as miller at Mangerton Mill and was listed at Mangerton in a directory of 1868. In 1858 he married Janet (1815–47), daughter of joiner John Douglas. Their children included: William (1839–1923), who died at Gattonside; Elizabeth Beatie (1841–91); Jean Easton (1842–1910), also died at Gattonside; Helen Douglas (1844–1917), also died at Gattonside; Janet Anne (1846–97); and John (1847–1904), who worked for a bank in London and married Margaret Eliza Middleton. Thomas (1811/2–76) grocer in Newcastleton, probably son of joiner Andrew. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 14 South Hermitage Street. In 1841 he married Hannah Storey, who died in 1882, aged 61. Their children included: Mary (b.1843); Andrew (1845–1930), who married Margaret Glendinning; Betty (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); Thomasina (b.1853); Arkle; Helen; Hannah Janet (b.1862), who died in infancy; and John James (1865/6–1944), who died in Longtown. The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (1815/6–87) son of John, who farmed at Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater, and grandson of Robert in Hermitage. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1852. In 1861 he was at Under Hindhope in Oxnam Parish. He succeeded his brother John as farmer at Nether Hindhope in Oxnam Parish. He married Elizabeth Turnbull from Redmoss. Their children included: John (1859–1918) in Hyndhope; Thomas of Attonburn, who married Jane Robson from Bellingham; James; Mary; Margaret, who married Dr. J.P. Elliot from Bellingham; Robert Turnbull of Chatto; Jean (d.1913); Elizabeth (d.1870); Susan, married A.O. Rutherford; William Scott (1876–1912); Walter of Toft (b.1878); Arthur of Hindhope (1880–1968); and George of Alnham Moor and Brockdam (1883–1933). Dr. Thomas (1817–59) son of a doctor who came from Whitehaugh in Liddesdale. He was probably born in Carlisle. He studied in Edinburgh and Paris and then took up a surgeon’s practice in Carlisle, in partnership with his brother William. He became known as a pioneering ophthalmologist, who had an early understanding of how to cure strabismus (squinting). He was on the Carlisle committee for the proposed railway between Hawick and Carlisle. He died of typhus at the age of 42 and has a plaque to his memory in Carlisle Cathedral. Thomas (19th C.) wright recorded in Newcastleton in Slater’s 1852 directory. It is possible he is also the Thomas listed as grocer in the same directory. Thomas (1821–69) elder son of Robert of Redheugh and Jessie Elliot. He was born in Castleton and inherited Redheugh jointly with his brother John. In 1851 (while living at Redheugh with his father) he was already listed as farmer of 90 arable plus 1200 moorland acres, and employer of 4 labourers. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He married Elizabeth Kyle and their children included: Robert, who inherited Redheugh and married Effie McGregor Corbett; and Anna Mary, who sold Redheugh in 1918. He died at Knockton, just a few days after his father. He is buried in Castleton cemetery along with his wife. Arthur (1864/5–93), who died in India and is marked on the same gravestone, was probably another son. Thomas (1825–64) younger son of Robert and Janet Black. He was a grocer in Hawick. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed on the Fore Row as a grocer and spirit dealer, and in 1851 he was also listed as a blacksmith. In 1847 he married Helen Welsh and their children included: Helen Broad (b.1848); Robert (b.1850); Janet Blake (b.1853); and an unnamed child (b.1855). He was buried in the Wellogate (although the inscription is illegible). Thomas (c.1827–89) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong (c.1819–1919), who died at Glendivian. Their children included Mary (b.1851) and probably Maggie (1866–86). He died in Langholm. Thomas Robert Barnewall 8th Laird of Harwood (1871–1924), only child of Robert Henry of Clifton Park. He succeeded his father to Clifton Park and his uncle William (7th Laird) in Harwood. He was also referred to as ‘of Clifton’. He sold Harwood to William Elliot of Muir Glen in 1924. He married 3 times: firstly in 1892 to Rose, 3rd daughter and co-heir of Col. John Joicey of Newton Hall, Northumberland, and she died in 1912; secondly in 1915 Dagmar, daughter of C.E. Ahlbom of Landekrona, Sweden, and she died in 1937; and lastly in 1942 to Mrs. Helen Campbell. He had 7 children: Robert Barnewall of Clifton Park, who lived in Carmarthenshire; Liet.-Comdr. James Kerr; Thomas William Henry; Rose Adelaide Maud; Frances Eva; Lieut. Charles Edward of the K.O.S.B.; and Diana Catherine. Walter (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls as William ‘Alicht’ or ‘d’Alyth’ (in Perthshire) when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It seems likely that he was a direct ancestor of the Elliots of Roxburghshire. He was imprisoned at Tanbridge Castle and his younger brother Thomas was taken to Kenilworth Castle. The family lands at that time were ‘Alyth’ or ‘Elliot’ in Perthshire, although they were probably given Redheugh and associated lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in the early 1300s. He further paid homage to Edward in 1304. In 1306 he is listed among the adherents of Bruce who forfeited lands, and it was probably in the few years following that he was granted Redheugh. There are no recorded links between him and the later Roberts of Redheugh; however, it may be that his descendants were called Robert in honour of his patron. His son Thomas is recorded as a witness to a Perthshire charter in 1304. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wilson and their children included Elizabeth (b.1635); Janet (b.1644); John (b.1648); James (b.1651); and Marion (b.1655). Walter of Arkleton (1634–1702) second son of Adam Elliot of Meikledale, his mother being a daughter of Glendinning of that Ilk. In 1669 he bought back the lands of Arkleton (from Francis Scott), which had previously belonged to the Elliots; he was described as ‘indweller in Arkleton’, showing that he already lived there. In 1671 he paid tax on £700 of land for Arkleton. He probably had the old tower rebuilt as a farmhouse, which contains a stone bearing the date 1676 and initials ‘W.E.’ and ‘K.F’ (for him and his wife). He registered arms in 1676 and in 1694 documented how the estate was to be inherited after his death (excluding his eldest 2 sons). He contributed £100 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1670 he married Katherine, daughter of Arthur Foster of Stanegarthside. Their children were: Adam of ‘Tyneside’, who married Ann Drury; Arthur of Harwood, who married Anne Disney; William of Arkleton (d.1721), who married Anne Ainslie of Jedburgh; Nichol in Unthank, who married Jane Lithgow; James, who married Miss Chambers; Walter, who died unmarried; Henry, Robert and Gilbert, who all died young; Jeanette, who married Gideon Scott (later of Falnash), brother of Walter of Harwood; Helen, who married Andrew Murray of Tundergarth by contract of 1679; and Mary, who married Robert Graham of Slipperfield. He is buried in Ewes churchyard, along with his wife and several children. Walter (17th C.) 4th son of William of Unthank. He was described being ‘of Carotrig’, which was Carewoodrig. He died unmarried. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was at Commonbrae in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Blackcleugh and in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Telfer, workman in Blackcleuch. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller of Hawick Mill. He was recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. He was ‘tacksman of ye mill’ in 1709 when he witnessed a baptism for undermiller Walter Riddell (along with the other undermiller, James Pater son). He was also ‘tacksman if ye mille of Hawick’ in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Aitkin, undermiller in Hawick (with Walter Riddell as the other undermiller). He was called ‘tacksman of ye milne and customer of Hawick’ in 1712 when he asked the Session to find him and his family specific seats in the Church ‘seeing he was burdensome to others’. It thus appears that he was tenant at Hawick Mill and also a weaver of some sort. Robert, who was ‘Tacksman of the Mill and Lands of Hawick’ around 1720 was probably his son. Walter of Ormiston (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood. He witnessed his brother’s marriage in 1700 and a bond by his brother in 1703. The connection with Ormiston is confusing, since it was probably his son Walter who acquired Ormiston from the Gledstains of Cocklaw. He is said to have married the 1st daughter of Andrew Kerr of Lindean (whose first name is not recorded); however, this may be confusion with later family connections with Cur rers descendants of Kerr of Lindean and Whitmuir. They are said to have had 4 sons, all of whom died without a male successor. However, it seems likely that he was succeeded by another Walter, who was one of the founders of carpet-making in Hawick. Walter (17th/18th C.) Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick. He is recorded as ‘Bailie, substitute of Gideon Scott of Falnash’ in 1700/1 when he presided over a criminal court in Hawick, banishing an offender (who had been in irons for 10 days) from the town. He is recorded as ‘bailie’ when he witnessed a baptism for Bailie Robert Ruecastle in 1705 and for glover John Scott in 1708 and for shoemaker John Scott in 1708. In 1709 he was ‘bailie deput of the regalitie’ when he witnessed a baptism for schoolmaster John Purdom and also ‘bailiff’ when he witnessed baptisms for wigmaker John Scott, for Henry Orrock and for tailor John Scott. He was also ‘Bailie’ when he witnessed baptisms in 1709 for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for John Scott ‘Whitegate’, in 1711 for Walter Stoddart (herd in Harwood), in 1713 for his namesake the merchant Walter Elliot and in 1714 for candlemaker John Scott and for Bailie George Martin. He is described as ‘bailie-deput of the regality of Hawick’ in 1718, when his servant John Turnbull was rebuked by the Hawick Parish Session. By 1721 he was ‘late Baillie Deput of the Regalitie’ (probably meaning he had given up the office, rather than being deceased) when he was recorded having provided ‘as much oak as was ane axtree to the great church bell in the year 1718’ (i.e. the axle for the bell). He may be the same as one of the other Walters. He married Marie Lindsay, and their son Francis was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1701; he was there described as ‘bailie’, with the witnesses being Francis Elliot ‘in Hawick’ and James Ogilvie. He may also be the merchant in Hawick whose son Gideon was baptised in 1700, with witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash (after whom the child may have been named) and Bailie Walter Graham. Walter (d.1741) son of Henry of Peel. He was a naval surgeon on H.M.S Wager, which shipwrecked off Patagonia. This event became infamous because of what followed, with the survivors marooned on an island in the southern winter. There was a mutiny and the crew split into groups. Walter was among officers who were set adrift before regrouping with some of the men and trying to row up the coast of Chile. After suffering several mishaps and enduring horrendous weather Walter became ill and was ashore with 4 officers when the 6 other men rowed off in the boat, never to be seen again. He died of starvation, while the others traded their last possession, a musket, and were taken in a canoe and were imprisoned by the Spanish, eventually to return to Britain. John Byron (later Vive-Admiral and grandfather of the poet Lord Byron) wrote ‘he died the death many others had done before him, being quite starved. We scraped a hole for him in the sand and buried him in the best manner we could’. Walter (17th/18th C.) farmer in Brugh. He was 3rd son of William in Whitehaugh and Braidlie (who repurchased Redheugh) and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. It is unclear whether he farmed at Brugh or if the appellation was just to distinguish him from other Walters. The name of his wife is not recorded. He had 7 children (the order of births being unknown): John, farmer at Adderstoneshie, who married Helen Moffat from Garvall; Robert (b.c.1700), who married Elizabeth Scott from Doorpool, and whose children lived in Hawick; Adam in Harts, who married Mary Pott; George, who lived in Cuba; Helen, who in 1727 in Hawick Parish married James Gray, tenant in Whiltlaw; William (b.1710) who was a cooper and married Hannah Scott; and Gilbert (b.1725) who was tenant in Blackburnfoot and married Betty Forbes. William was baptised in Kirkton Parish and Gilbert in Cavers. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Bessie Scott in 1712. Their children included: Janet (b.1713); Archibald (b.1715); John (b.1717); Margaret (b.1719); Jean (b.1724); Marie (b.1726); Bessie (b.1728); and Agnes (b.1730). The witnesses in 1713 were Bailie Walter Elliot (who was therefore clearly a different man, but perhaps related to him) and Francis Elliot. Walter (1702–bef. 21) only son of Adam of Teindside and grandson of Walter of Arkleton. He was baptised in Hawick Parish. He died before marrying and was succeeded by his sister Katherine. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1726 when his son James was baptised. There are several other children baptised in the parish who could be his. Walter of Ormiston (d.1777) probably son of Walter, he was one of the founders of carpet manufacturing in Hawick. He (or perhaps his father) obtained Ormiston after 1734, when the last of the Gledstains of Cocklaw died, and he proceeded to build a mansion house there in 1747. Before that he was tenant in Bellendean and Braidhaugh. He was in Bellendean in 1736 and 1741 when two of his children was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably the Walter, tenant in Bellendean, who was recorded as brother of Isobel, when she married Walter Turnbull of Firth in 1738. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1766 he wrote to the Duke of Buccleuch, in response to a suggestion that a woollen factory be developed on one of the Duke’s estates, proposing that Hawick would be the perfect place. He formed a partnership with others in 1769 (perhaps earlier), constituting the main Hawick carpet factory. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. In 1735 in Roberton he married Margaret (b.1716), daughter of George Currer of Hartwoodburn. Their children (mostly baptised in Roberton) included: James (1736–1782), who inherited Clerklands; Andrew (b.1739); Simon (b.1741); Walter (1744–80), who died at Bellendean; and Helen (b.1747), who married Thomas Currer (perhaps a cousin), Bailie of Selkirk. The first 3 children were baptised at Bellendean and the last 2 at Braidhaugh (in Cavers Parish). He secondly married Isobel or ‘Tibbie’, (probably youngest, b.1708) daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae, and she died in 1797 (being referred to as ‘Mrs. Elliot of Ormston or Isobel Elliot of Borthbrae’. ‘Mrs Elliot of Ormston in Hawick’, who paid the female servant tax in 1789 and 1791, was probably his wife.

Walter (18th C.) married Isobel Hogg in 1750, both being from Wilton Parish. Walter (b.1731) son of William from Roberton and Bessie Scott from Wilton. He was a resident of Wilton Parish. His children were born at Alton, ‘Moortown’ (probably Moorfarm or Muirfield) and Wester Groundistone. In 1758 he married Helen (or Elior or Nelly) Robertson (or perhaps Robison) in Ashkirk Parish. Their children include: Elizabeth (b.1759); Elspeth (b.1761); Janet (b.1765); Violet (b.1773); Nelly (b.1776) and Mary (b.1779). John (b.1771), baptised in Roberton, son to Walter in Mabonlaw, may also have been his child. He may also be father of William (b.1767), also baptised in Roberton, son of Walter at Whithope. Walter (18th C.) farmer at Henderson’s, near Teviothead. He married Isabel Grieve and their children included: Thomas (b.1776), farmer at Colterscleuch and Bowenhill; Christian (b.1778); William (b.1780), miller; Margaret (b.1783); John (b.1788), who emigrated to New York State; and Archibald. Walter (18th/19th C.) cooper at Dinnalbry. He is probably the farmer at Dinnalbry, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John is recorded separately as farmer there (and with more horses), and so presumably a near relative. He married Isabel Douglas and their children included: Christian (b.1777); Adam (b.1779); John (b.1781); Adam (b.1790); and probably Catherine, Margaret, Henry, Elizabeth and Walter. He may be the son of Adam in Hartside born in 1762 (but that would make him too young to have married by 1777). Walter (1753/4–97) younger son of Robert in Hermitage and brother of John. He was probably tenant at Hermitage and also at Millburnholm. He was at Millburnholm in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is probably the Walter listed as a farmer at Hermitage on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; he owned 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Helen Crozier (c.1767–1851) from Brighouse. Their children were: Robert (1791–1858), who married Mary Murray from Whisgills and farmed at Hermitage; Jean (1792/3–1872), who married Henry Elliot from Colterscleuch; John (1795/6–1834) in Templehall; and Helen (b.1797/8), who married Walter Scott, from Newton near Hawick. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1783 he married Janet Blaikie, who was from Wilton Parish. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1785. Walter (1762–1827) shoemaker of the Cross Wynd, son of Robert and Isobel Scott. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Oliver in Kirkton Parish in 1802. Their daughters were Margaret (b.1803) and Isobel (b.1805), of whom Adam Brown painted miniature portraits, as well as Janet (b.1807). He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His wife Margaret carried on the business and is listed in the 1837 directory. Lt.-Col. Walter of Old Melrose (1766–1809) christened in Roberton, he was a younger son of John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He became Lieutenant Colonel in the 22nd Regiment of Foot (the same rank reached by his elder brother William, who changed his surname to Lockhart). He was recorded among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. In 1788 he was already listed as owner of Old Melrose. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (when already deceased). He was still listed in 1811 as owner of Old Melrose. He died unmarried. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Jane Haig. Their children included: Christian (b.1793); Robert (b.1795); Mary (b.1797); Adam (b.1800); Margaret (b.1802); Walter (b.1804); William (b.1806); and Christian (again, b.1811). Some of these baptisms did not include the wife’s name, but seem likely to be the same family. It is possible that Jean, born to Walter and Jean ‘Harg’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1789 was also their child. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1818 he married Euphemia, daughter of James Laidlaw and Margaret Scott from Hobkirk.
Elliot

Parish. They had 3 daughters and 1 son: Anne; James; Janet; and Margaret, who married James Kennedy and had 11 children. He was deceased by 1841, when his wife is listed as a seamstress at Mill Bank along with his daughter Janet. Walter (b.1787) probably son of James and Helen Elliot. In 1851 he was living at ‘Dinlehaugh’ (i.e. Dinleyhaughfoot). He married Janet Dinwoodie (b.1801), from Dumfriesshire. Their children (some of whom were born in Langholm Parish) included: Walter (b.1833); William (b.1835); James (b.1836); and John (b.1838). Walter (18th/19th C.) toll-keeper in Newcastle-on-Tyne among heads of households in 1835. He may be (18th/19th C.) recorded as a shepherd at Castleton Tounfoot in 1836 and 1837, farmer at Greenholm and the same as the shepherd at Castleton Townfoot in 1836 and 1840, and labourer in Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1841. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded his wife Janet’s occupations up to the age of 52, and appointed as a Justice of the Peace, Commissioner of Supply and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire, as well as Deputy-Lieutenant for the county. He was heavily involved with the construction of the new Hobkirk Kirk in 1863, and was said to have an ‘unwavering belief in the truths of Christianity’. In 1867 he contributed a sketch of the history of ‘Denholm and its Vicinity’ to the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club. In 1868 he also gave land for the erection of a new Wolfelee Free Kirk. In 1871 he published a call for cooperation among regional societies of naturalists. He was listed as owner of Wolfelee on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. By 1875 he also owned part of Kirknowe, Wester Swanshiel and half of Langraw. He was also on the committee for the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He was knighted (as a Knight Commander of the Star of India) in 1866, was a Fellow of the Royal Society, as well as several other learned societies and was awarded an Honorary Doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1878. In 1885 he published a final volume of ‘Coins of Southern India’, revising the proofs by ear, since he was quite blind by then. In 1839 (in Malta) he married Maria Dorothea (1816–90), daughter of Sir David Hunter-Blair of Blairquhan (grand-daughter of Sir James Hunter-Blair, Provost of Edinburgh). They had 6 children: James Thomas Spencer (1845–92), who succeeded; Walter Blair (1847–1869), Navy Lieutenant, who died at sea; Edward Hay Mackenzie (1852–1920), who succeeded his brother; Dorothea Helen, who in 1866 married William Elliott-Lockhart, 6th Laird of Borthwickbrae; Herman F., who served with the Black Watch and died childless in Mauritius; and Caroline Elizabeth, who married her cousin Arthur von Poelnitz. Lady Elliot was known as an outspoken woman, who shared in some of her husband’s interests and made Wolfelee an open... house for visitors to the district. Sir Walter became blind in old age, but retained his memory to the end, which came suddenly. He is buried in the kirkyard at Chesters. His collection of the coins of Southern India was gifted to the British Museum. A limited-edition book ‘Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee: A Sketch of his Life and a few Extracts from his Notebooks’ was written by Robert Sewell in 1896. Walter F. (1804–74) son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish and was a joiner in Chesters. In 1841 he is recorded as farmer at Abbotrule and in 1851 as joiner at ‘Abbotrule (penticle)’. In 1827 in Hobkirk Parish he married Margaret (1803–80), daughter of George Minto. Their children included: Helen (1828–1915); John (1830–1910); George (b.1831); William (b.1835); James (b.1837); Walter Henry (b.1841); Robert Henderson (b.1843); and Margaret (b.1849). He emigrated to the U.S.A. with his family in 1852, joining his brother John, who had gone out about a decade earlier. They settled in Otsego County, New York. Walter (b.1811) son of John and Margaret Forrest, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was a quarryman at Stitchelhill Quarry. In 1861 he was listed as a blind quarryman, living with his mother on South Hermitage Street. Walter (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Lairhope in Teviothead Parish in 1851 and 1861. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’) Elliot and their children included: William (b.1843); Jane (b.1845); Thomas (b.1847); Walter (b.1850); James (b.1853); Margaret (b.1856); Jane (b.1858); and Elizabeth Turnbull (b.1862). Walter (1828–93) son of Robert and Mary Murray. He was farmer at Hermitage in 1861, having taken over from his father. In 1861 he was living there with his sister Mary, a domestic servant and 3 farm workers. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1866. In 1864 he married Agnes, daughter of John Armstrong and Janet Glendinning. Their children were: Robert (b.1865), who also farmed at Hermitage; Mary Murray (b.1867), who married John G. Wilson, manufacturer in Hawick; Janet Glendinning (b.1869), who died aged 14; and Ellen (b.1873), who married Archibald R. Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre. Walter (1840–99) son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. He was recorded as farmer at Twislehope in 1868. He married Anne Brown and their children were: Andrew (b.1874); James (b.1876); Eliza (b.1878), who married Thomas Potts; Elizabeth Jane (b.1880), who married Christopher Hether and Archibald Bridges; John (b.1881), married Anne Gwilliam; Anne (b.1883), married William Broatch; Sarah (b.1885), married Edmund Harvey Thompson and lived in Galt, Ontario; Walter (b.1887), married Gertrude Gwilliam; Agnes (b.1889), married Dennis Rivers Le Deau; Janet, died in infancy; and David (1898–1918), killed in action in France. In 1905, after his death, most of his family emigrated to Canada. Walter Nichol (1846–82) son of William and Christian Crozier, he was born in Liddesdale Parish. He married Mary Cowan, who died at the Golf House, Hawick in 1933, aged 85. Their daughter Jane Tait died in Hawick in 1892, aged 21. He himself died at Millburn. Walter Blair (1847–69) 2nd son of Sir Walter of Wolfelee. He was born in Madras, served in the Royal Navy, became a Lieutenant and died of yellow fever on H.M.S. Racoone. Walter (b.1851) eldest son of Thomas in Blackhaugh and descended from the Elliots of Newhall. He worked as a factor in Argyll, but in 1896 purchased Kirndean in Liddesdale. Later he also bought Walterhead of Dryfe in Dumfriesshire and was tenant at Clenries. His children were Mary, William (who became tenant of Middletown, Stow), Thomas and Walter. Walter of Harwood (1888–1958) son of auctioneer and farmer, William, he was born in Lanark. He was descended from the Elliots of Newhall, and hence Horsleyhill. His father purchased the estate of Harwood. He studied medicine at Glasgow University, and served with the Scots Greys during WWI, being decorated with the Military Cross and Bar. Early on he developed a centrist stance in politics, as well as an interest in science. He became a Conservative M.P. for Lanark, Kelvingrove, Scottish Universities and Kelvinside again, being Secretary of State for Scotland, Minister of Health, Minister of Agriculture, Financial Secretary to the Treasury and Privy Councillor. He was Rector of Aberdeen and Glasgow Universities, Lord High Commissioner to the Assembly of the Church of Scotland, elected a Fellow of the Royal Society and made a Companion of Honour. He was also made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1933 and also made a Freeman of Edinburgh and Lanark. Late in life he settled in the estate at Harwood that his father had purchased. He suffered a terrible accident at Hawick Station in 1943, trying to catch a moving train on an icy morning, when he fell between the platform and the carriage, breaking his pelvis and other bones. It took him most of the year to recover from his injuries. In 1956 he was appointed Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church.

of Scotland. He was described as ‘a big man physically and he was a big man in his mental range and in scholarship and courage . . . a Borderer to the very marrow of his bones’. In 1919 he married Helen, daughter of Lt.-Col. Hamilton, but this ended with a tragic accident on the Isle of Skye during their honeymoon. In 1934 he remarried, to Katherine, daughter of Sir Charles Tennant of Peeblesshire, who became Baroness Elliot of Harwood in 1958. He died suddenly and is buried in Hobkirk churchyard. Walter (1934–) Selkirk-based poet and historian. He spent his early life in the Ettrick valley, served in the K.O.S.B., then worked as a fencer and woodcutter, before a fractured skull led him to change career to being a museum assistant, performer and writer. His books include Clash-ma-clavers chap book’ (1985), ‘Song for Yarrow’ (1991) and the series of guide-books ‘Ballads Trail’ (2000), ‘James Hogg Trail’ (2000) and ‘Sir Walter Scott Trail’ (2000), as well as in ‘Jorum: six poets in Border Scots’ (2000). William (13th/14th C.) Burgess of Perth who signed the Ragman’s Rolls in 1296. His name is recorded as ‘William Alight’. Since there is a strong suggestion that the Border Elliots came via the Perth and Angus areas, it seems possible that he was the direct ancestor of the first Laird of Redheugh, perhaps given lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in the early 14th century. William ‘One-Eyed’ (14th C.) recorded in Cumberland in 1389, appearing before the justices of gaol delivery. His nickname was recorded as ‘monoculus’ and his surname as ‘Elwald’, the same as Richard ‘parvus’. William of Gorrenberry (15th C.) recorded as ‘Williemel Elwald’ in 1484 when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infest Robert of Redheugh in the lands of Larriston. In 1489 he was one of the men further directed to infest Robert of Redheugh in other lands, there recorded as ‘Williemel elwald de gounbery’. He may also be the William who was witness (along with Ninian, Robert, John and Andrew ‘Elwald’ and others) to a saisine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh in 1497. He was probably closely related to the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston, as were the later Elliots of Gorrenberry. However, it has also been suggested that this branch of the family was one of the ‘twelve great families’ of Elliots who came to Liddesdale in the 14th century. William (15th C.) recorded in the records of the Justice- aire held at Jedburgh in 1493. Hector Lauder was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including associating with him and ‘alias fures de branxhame’ (i.e. other thieves of Branxholme). In 1494/5 John and Thomas Liddersdale in Hawick were allowed to ‘compone’ for aiding the ‘elwaldis de branx- ame’ in their crimes. It thus appears that there was a branch of the Elliots living near Branxholme at that time, although it is unclear how they might have been related to other Elliots. Perhaps the same William ‘elwald’ was recorded at the Justice- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 when John Hervey in Fairnilee had remission for crimes that included resetting him and Robert Heiton. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmi elwald’ in 1494/5 when he failed to appear along with 85 other Elliots, Armstrongs, Wighholms, Croziers and others. This resulted in fines for the Lord of Liddesdale (Patrick, Earl of Bothwell) and the Captain of Hermitage (George Turnbull of Hallrule). His name was given first, suggesting he may have been an important member of the clan. Ralph, listed as brother of William in 1494/5 may have been his brother. Perhaps the same William was also described as ‘Wilzam Elwald’, son-in-law of George Armstrong in a document of 1500, listing pledges of good behaviour made to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. Several other men of the same name are mentioned in that document, e.g. William and David, sons of William (who may have been his sons, but without further designation it is impossible to say). William (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5 to answer for their crimes. It is unclear which William was his father, but David (also son of William) was probably his brother. William ‘Siders’ (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. He is listed as ‘Willelmi elwald syders’. He is also recorded in the 1498 pledge to Patrick Earl of Bothwell, along with many other Elliots, Armstrongs and others. He is listed there as ‘Wilzam Elwald, Siders’; the designation is possibly the same as ‘Side’. William (15th/16th C.) listed in 1501/2 as ‘William Elwah his follower’ when Andrew Kerr of Fer- nihirst received the lands of Feu-Rule from their superior, Sir William Douglas of Cavers. He may have been acting as Kerr’s Bailie. He may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Ramsigill’ in a list of Elliots and others given respite for their crimes in 1510. Since Robert of Redheugh is listed with only a small number of other Elliots, this might suggests he was closely related to the chief, as well as to Robert of Dinlees and John in Sundhope. He may be the same William ‘in Rammillgill’ recorded as a tenant of Whitrone in 1541; the other tenants were Leon, John and Robert. He must have been related to Robert who was also ‘in Rammissgill’ in 1541.

William of Larriston (15th/16th C.) second son of Robert of Redheugh, 11th Chief, recorded in 1511. He is listed as brother of Robert of Redheugh in a ‘respite’ given in 1515/6. In 1516 he had a further respite in the Register of the Privy Seal, where he is ‘William Elwald of Larestanis’.

A number of other Elliots are also listed, specifically those at Mosspatrick, Dinlees, Thorlakeshope, Sundhope and Heuchhouse and ‘Bagget’, and others bound to them, including men by the name of Forester, Thomson, Gledstains, Turner, ‘Leche’, Atkinson, Caverhill, Rowill (presumably Rule), Lawson, Wilson, White, Telfer, Nixon, Henderson, Simpson, Hunter, Davidson, ‘Billop’ (i.e. Billhope), Warwick, Dickson, Noble, Burn and ‘Purdoun’ (Purdom). He was probably serving as chief of the Elliots in 1516, since Robert of Redheugh (his nephew perhaps) had been killed at Flodden, and the next in line Robert was probably still a minor. He probably led the clan during the minority of the next Robert of Redheugh (probably his grand-nephew). He may be the William of Larriston who is recorded in 1547, along with William ‘younger’ (so presumably his son). He is said to have married the heiress of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and to have had one son, whose son was Gavin, the first Elliot of Horsleyhill (if this was not William, then perhaps he had another son). He may be the Elliot of Larriston whose daughter married Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘William Elwald in M’Patrick in a ‘respite’ of 1516 to William of Larriston and a large number of neighbouring Elliots and others. He may be related to the William in Mosspatrick recorded in 1514. William (15th/16th C.) listed in a 1516 ‘respite’ to William of Larriston and several other Elliots of Liddlesdale. He appears as being ‘in Heuchous’, this probably being Heuchhouse near Dinlabyre. The later Martin of Heuchouse is surely his descendant. William (16th C.) son of Alexander. He was a servant to the Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton, listed along with a large number of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on Craik. ‘Law’s John’ was also listed, and so possibly a relative. William ‘Mend the caill’ (16th C.) named along with Robert ‘de Flaswod’ in a trial in Jedburgh in 1535. Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused of assisting them in stealing 5 cows from ‘Corsle’ (probably Corslie on the Gala Water) from John Veitch. They were probably among the thieves of Liddesdale who it is claimed that Scott brought to attack Midlem and other places. His nickname may refer to the vegetable ‘kale’.

William (16th C.) recorded in 1537/8 as being ‘in Layheuch’ (i.e. Leaheugh) along with brothers James and Simon. They were entered by Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald for breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk and stealing 100 merks worth of cloth, hides, etc. They were also bound not to harm Thomas Graham or his friends and servants in the future. He was presumably related somehow to the Redheugh branch. William (16th C.) referred to as ‘William Elliot callit Bruk’ in 1540/1 when he had respite for treasonable acts, including not being at the Solway raid and associating with the Douglases. One possibility is that his name is associated with ‘Brugh’. William (16th C.) tenant of Mosspatrick recorded in the rental roll of Liddesdale in 1541. Williams with no designation are also listed as tenants of several other farms, including ‘Pantodene’, Singleean, Heuchhouse and the small steadings of Clearlands, etc. It is unclear if some of these were the same men. He was probably related to the William recorded in Mosspatrick in 1516. William ‘Cock’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Willie ‘White Sark’ and Clement Crozier, accused of having killed Englishman Robert Hall at ‘Tredermayn’. His name is listed as ‘Wilkoke Elwald’, which seems likely to be a combination of his forename and nickname. The same ‘Wilcokis Elwald’ was listed along with Clem Crozier and Robin of Thorlakeshope, accused in 1541 of resetting English fugitive Robsons. He may have been related to ‘Cock’ Crozier and it seems likely he was father of ‘Wilcokeis Hob’ recorded in 1569, as well as ‘Wilcox’ Gawen Elloit’ recorded in 1587/8. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William ‘White Sark’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with ‘Wilkoke’ and Clement Crozier. They were accused of having raided ‘Tredermayn’ and killed Englishman Robert Hall. His name is given as ‘Willy Elwald called ‘whitsarke’.

William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of ‘Lyndene’ in the Barony of Bowden, along with other ‘Elwalds’. William (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘William Elwode John Crossier sister sone’, when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. The John mentioned here, who was presumably his mother's brother, was a prominent member of the Crozier family at that time, possibly the son of 'Cock Crozier', who seemed to be chief of the Slitrig valley branch of the family a generation earlier. William (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. William of Larriston (16th C.) recorded as 'Ellot of Larestanis' in 1556 when he had a bond for entering William Nixon to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He may have been the son of the previous William of Larriston, and the 'younger' mentioned along with William of Larriston in 1547. He is probably the 'yowng Wylliam Elwand' involved with a bond to enter some Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst in 1546; however, his brother Simon was witness on his behalf. He also (along with Robert of Redheugh and Archibald) had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner in 1548; he signed with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He may be the 'Williame Ellot, callit young Williame' listed (after Robert of Redheugh) in 1561 among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He is surely the 'William Ellot of Lamestone' recorded in part of the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean in 1565, along with Gavin of Horsleyhill and William of Falnash. For his non-appearance John Douglas of Cavers and William Douglas of the Crook were fined and he was denounced as a rebel. However, he may be confused with William of Braidlie, who was also described as being 'of Larriston'. William 'Elder Will', 'the Tod' (d.bef. 1586) recorded in 1561/2 in a bond between Elliots and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst to enter a Routledge. The other Elliots were Archie in Falnash, Archie's son Gavin, and John of Copshaw (all of whom may have been relatives). He is also recorded in 1567 when his son John was captured in Hawick for being a Liddesdale thief. In 1569 he was 'elder Will Ellot' when he was pledge 'for himself and his hail branche', with Alexander Home of Manderston as his surety. Also in 1569 he was 'Elder Will the Tod' when held in Blackness Castle as pledge for his eldest son and also 'David Curling his brother'. In 1570 he was among a group of Elliots who signed a bond related to the release from ward of his son Hob, as well as John of Heuchhouse. There was surety for one of his sons (name not given) in 1577, according to the register of the Privy Council. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He had been among the sureties for an earlier assurance for his son Hobbie, as well as John of the Heuchhouse. He is also recorded in 1580/1 when his son John was convicted of rieving. In 1581 he was 'Will Ellott, called Elder Will', among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. His sons David and Martin signed the bond of assurance to the English Wardens, taking 'the burden upon us for ourselves, brethren, and brethren bairnes and servants. He is probably the 'Willi the Tod' from Liddesdale who was already deceased in 1586 when his son William was granted a lease of the lands of 'Culgatis'. He may be the Will of Heuchhouse accused along with Martin's Archie in 1590, of stealing from 'Hailiden' and additionally he was named among Elliots, Nixons, Shiels and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them; however, these are probably his son William. The Will of Heuchhouse accused (along with Rich and others) accused of raiding into England in 1595 may have been his son William. William 'Wedder-Neck' (d.1561) hanged in 1561 for the crimes of theft and reset, along with Peter Turnbull ('the Monk') and Henry Black in Softlaw. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. His name is recorded as 'Will Ellot, callit Woddir-nek'. William 'Will' (16th C.) listed in 1563/4 along with George in Adderstoneshiel, Alexander and 2 Croizers. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. His name is recorded as 'Will Ellot of the Burrmouthis', which seems likely to have been Burnmouth near Saughtree (although perhaps there was another place of the same name in the Slitrig valley, where the Gledstains' lands were). William (16th C.) listed as 'bastard sone to vmqle Robert Elliot' in the 1564 trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean, along with Elliots of Horsleyhill and others. His father may have been Robert, 15th of Redheugh. He may be the 'William Ellot of the Redhughe' who was among several Elliots accused by the English in 1581 of stealing cattle and goods from 'Symwhaite'. He may also be the William, brother of 'Robin Elliot' accused of raiding Englishman Andrew Taylor's livestock and goods in 1582. William (d.1580) 5th Laird of Horsleyhill, he was the 2nd son of Gavin, the 1st Laird. He is presumably the William, along with his father Gavin and brothers Andrew and Robert, accused of murdering Hugh Douglas in about 1547. In the late 1550s he was involved in the family dispute over the lands of Newbigging in Hassendean and in 1563 was arguing with John Scott in Catslack. He is probably the William of Horsleyhill who witnessed a bond in 1561/2 between several Elliots and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. He is probably the William of Horsleyhill recorded in the Register of the Privy Council in 1563/4, along with his brother Robert, in a case involving the Scotts of Tushielaw stealing cattle from Bailelee; their cautioner was John Preston, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1564 he was listed as ‘fadir bruther and tutour’ to Gavin, son of the deceased Robert of Horsleyhill; this was in connection to the complaint by John Turnbull of Hassendean against Dand (who was iso his brother). In 1564 it was presumably he (although the Lairdship around this time seems hard to follow) who was found guilty of involvement in the murder of David Scott of Hassendean; also involved were Robert, Gavin and Archibald, who were probably his brothers. He was banished after this, but was pardoned in 1565 by Queen Mary (perhaps because of his marriage to a Kerr). He purchased the lands of Horsleyhill from his nephew William, initially in 1568 for a period of 15 years, finally buying them outright from William’s wife Margaret Turnbull in 1570/1. In 1569 he also bought the Middle Mains of Hassendean from his nephew. In 1572/3 he promised the Regent that his family, servants and tenants would continue to be obedient subjects, with Thomas Weir of Kirkton as cautioner (it is unclear what events this was in response to). In 1574/5 he was involved in a court case where Scott of Buccleuch claimed some lands; he was able to prove that he was infested in Westerhouses, Clarilaw and Hassendeanburn, but his superior, William Douglas of Cavers, was instructed to remove him from the lands of Catslack. In 1575 he was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council to settle the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles; his brother Gavin was also summoned. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for his steading of Easter Montbenger. He may be the William ‘of Torslyhill’ (if this is an error for ‘Horsleyhill’) on Monipennie’s c.1597 (but drawn up earlier) list of Border Lairds. He married Elizabeth Kerr sometime before 1556, and secondly in 1569 married Elizabeth, daughter of James Douglas of Cavers. He had at least 2 children: Robert, who succeeded; and William of Caveling, (b.1572), Burgess of Peebles, who married Christian Chisholme. James in Peebles may have been another son. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. His name is recorded as ‘Wille Elliot’ and he may have been related to Dand, Jock and Hob, other Elliots also listed as tenants. William ‘Ringanis Will’ (16th C.) mentioned in 1579 when his son ‘Archie Elliot, sone to Ringhanis Will the portar’ was among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell. He is separately recorded in 1579 as ‘Ringanis Will Elliot the portar in Glenvoran’. He may have been related to Ninian, tenant in Ewesdoors and Glenvoran (with Will, son of Ringan the Porter also named in the same citation). Possibly the same ‘Ringanis Wille Elliot’ was listed in 1611 for not appearing at court in Jedburgh. William ‘Grey Will’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when John of the Park was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for him and ‘Hob Mirk Elliot’. He was listed in 1574 among Scotsmen who were reset in England. His name there is given as ‘Will Elliott, called Gray Will’. He is also listed in 1583 among the Elliots of the Park branch. His name is given as ‘Will Elliot, gray Wille’. He is probably father of ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’, who is also listed. He is ‘Gray Will’ when listed along with Jock of the Park in a list of Borderers in the 1580s. William ‘Jock’s Willie’ (16th C.) warded with George Ramsay of Dalhousie in 1580, when ordered to be presented to the Privy Council. He was recorded in 1581 when he was released from being warded as pledge for the ‘gang’ of Elliots of Burnhead. Hob, brother of Gavin’s Hob (this may be an error for Gavin’s Jock) of Ramsiegill remained as pledge for these Elliots. Also in 1581 he was ‘Will Elliott, called Jokkis Willie, pledge for the haill gang of Rampsygill’. He was also recorded in 1582/3, when Martin of Braiddie, Gavin’s Jock and Robert Kerr of Ancrum were fined by the Privy Council for his non-appearance, along with ‘Ill Hob’. He was ‘plege for the haill gang of Ramsygill, quha wer ressavit be thame out of ward of the tolbuith of Edinburgh’. ‘Ill Hob’ of Ramsiegill was his brother, and presumably they were both sons of Jock. His son may be the ‘Wyll Ellotts John of Burnheads’ recorded in 1595. William ‘Will the Lord’ (16th C.) recorded in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs of c.1594. He is listed under Ewesdale along with ‘John the Portars Son’ and ‘Will of the Devisleyes’. In 1569 he is ‘Will Ellot calit the Lord’ when held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for John of Fiddleton, Hob ‘the Lady’ and Hob of Unthank, all Elliots of Ewesdale. In 1578/9 he is ‘Will Ellot, calit the Lord’, when John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him (and other Elliots of Ewesdale) not to raid into England. It is possible he is the same man as Will of Fiddleton. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘Will of Devisleyes’ in Monipennie’s list published about 1594 (although probably compiled earlier). He is listed among the Elliots of Ewesdale. It is possible that the place is a misreading of ‘Eweslees’. William (16th C.) son of ‘Jock’s Willie’, although it is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for theft, along with several other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons of Liddesdale. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant in Mosspatrickhope in 1581 when he appeared on a list of Armstrong, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of various crimes. He and 2 others gave assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry to the English Wardens in 1584. He is recorded as being ‘of Morspatrikshors’ in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs (published around 1594) along with ‘Archie Keene’ under the heading ‘Gorumerie’. He is probably related to the William who was tenant in Mosspatrick in 1541. William ‘Airchie’s Will’ (16th C.) second son of Archibald of Falnash and Gorrenberry. He is first mentioned around 1556 and probably still alive in 1596. In about 1556 he is ‘Vil Ellot calit Arche Wille’ when, along with Walter Scott, he rented ‘Westcoit’ in Ringwoodfield from the monks of Melrose. He is probably the William ‘callit Archeis Will’ listed in 1561 among men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. His brother ‘Gawin Ellot’ also appeared before the Queen in 1561, promising to provide the names of thieves. He was of Gorrimumbery when witnessing a bond of his father’s in 1561/2, and hence must have acquired Gorrimumbery by then. In 1567 Robert Scott of Thirlstane and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branhomle as surety for him and Sim Elliot in Dodburn. He is recorded in 1569 acting as surety for his tenants in a bond of security signed at Hawick (but not listing any tenants explicitly); he is there recorded as ‘Will Ellot alias Archeis Will’. When he failed to appear in 1569 (along with Gavin of Falnash and Sim of Dodburn), Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. He was also one of the designated relief pledges for Gavin of Falnash in 1569. Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He is probably the William ‘of Gorrumbery’ who was to be entered into ward in St. Andrews in 1573. In 1574 he was involved in a dispute with William Douglas of Cavers over the lands of Caerlenrig (which had been held on wadset by his father from Douglas’ father). Douglas tried to have him removed from the lands, and in 1576 the case was still not settled, with his sisters having to confirm that he was still alive. He may be the William in Gorrenberry who was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council in 1575 to resolve the feud between the Elliots and the Kerrs and also summoned with other Border Lairds (including Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braiddie) to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He is recorded as ‘William Elliott of Goddamburie’ when accused along with Tom of Copshaw, the Armstrongs of Whitauhgh, and others of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England in 1587. He was said to have been part of the group who raided Carlisle Castle to free ‘Kinmont Willie’, being named by an English informer as ‘Will Elliott goodman of Gorrombye’ (although he is likely to have been too old to take part himself). In 1590 he and Simon Armstrong of Whitauhgh were accused of rieving from the Lord Warden’s tenants. He is probably the William ‘of Gorrumberrie’ in 1599 (unless this was a son) among Elliots who signed a bond at Branhomle with the Warden of the West March regarding the inhabitants of Liddesdale; along with Robert of Redheugh, Martin of Braiddle and Jock of Copshaw he was listed as one of the ‘principalis of oure brench’. His son may have been the ‘Willie’s Archie’ who, along with many other Elliots, signed bonds with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599: he did this with his hand on the notary’s pen ‘because I can nocht wryte my self’. He is the ‘doughty Willie o’ Gorrenberry’ in some versions of the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer in the Fair Dodhead’. William ‘Will o the Steele’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when he and his brother Hob of the Shaws were excepted from the pledge that John of Tholishope had for the whole of that branch of the Elliots. A letter from Sir John Forster in 1576 complains that his brother John ‘Elwood’ had stolen 100 sheep from his lands in Hexhamshire. In 1581/2 his son Will was listed among men accused of raiding Harwood-on-Teviot. He was listed among the Elliots of the Braiddie branch in 1583. In 1584 he was among the Elliots of the Tholishope branch.
who gave assurances to the English Wardens at Hermitage. In 1590 there is a complaint by the tenant of Birdoswald about a raid into England made by both old and young ‘Will Ellot of the Steile’ in 1588, and in 1590 there was a further complaint against ‘Will of the Steile the elder, and his son Will’. The younger William is also recorded on his own in a further accusation in 1590, while he was accused in 2 separate cases, where he is ‘elder Will of the Steile’ (and ‘Steill’) and in a further complaint of 1590 (for stealing from Englishman John Armstrong 2 years earlier) where his is just ‘Will of the Steill’. Both he and his son were among men accused in 1590 of having raided the farm of Dotland a couple of years earlier. Both he and his son are on a 1590 list of Elliots (including from Redheugh and Braidlie) accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Wynnatlie’ in the previous year. Also in 1590 he is ‘old Will Ellot of the Steile’ listed among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh. Hence it seems likely that all mentions of Will of the Steele after that date are probably for his son. William ‘Will’ of Hartsagarth (16th/17th C.) probably 2nd son of Robert (15th) of Redheugh. He was hence brother of Robert (16th) of Redheugh, as well as ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairties’, Archibald and Gavin of Brugh. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Robyn’s Will’ and was recorded as early as 1581. He was said to have ridden with his brother on raids into England and the pair were involved in a dispute with Scott of Buccleuch. In a letter from Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor he is ‘Wille Ellot of Harskarth’, brother of the chief. He was accused of leading a group of Liddesdale and Teviotdale men on an attack into Mindrum in England in 1583/4, in which several men were killed and a number taken prisoner; these being freed by the King and the Warden had orders to get him to repay what was stolen, but that had still not been done by 1590/1. In a letter from the King in 1584 he is described as ‘Will Ellot of Hartstarth bry’ to Robene of Reidlewec’. He was ‘of Harkescarthe, called Robyns Will’ when accused of being on a raid on the tenants of Featherstonehaugh in 1587; Martin’s Airchie was also there, as well as 160 others, and it is claimed that they burned 23 houses and took 3 prisoners. He served as a guardian for his nephew Robert (17th) of Redheugh; in about 1590 he was listed as ‘Well Ellot of Harthscarth, tutour of Reidlewec’ among the landed men of the Borders. In 1593 he was ‘of Lariston’ when accused of being involved in the death of Charltons in England, along with Scott of Buccleuch. He was also ‘William Ellot of Lawreston’ when accused in 1593 (along with Martin of Braidlie and Kimmont Willie Armstrong) of leading about 1000 men in a raid on Redesdale, taking 1005 head of cattle, 1000 sheep and 24 horses, as well as burning a mill and stealing £300 worth of goods. In 1593 he was ‘of Hartsarthur’ when accused of killing 2 Tynedale men called Dods. In 1594 there was a complaint against him by Englishman Gilbert Park of ‘Warton’. In 1595/6 he complained about men of Tynedale who was stolen cattle from him, and was himself involved on a retaliatory raid into England; he was there ‘Will Elliot of Larrestone alias Harskarth’. He was ‘of Larestone’ in 1594/5 when there was an attempt to deliver Jock Graham as prisoner in his stead. He is probably one of the 2 Williams who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He appears to have held Hartsagarth through wadset until 1595/6, when it was gained by William of Larriston (son of Martin of Braidlie). In 1597 he (along with his nephew Robert of Redheugh and John of Copshaw) wrote from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen. He was also known as William ‘of Rigg’ until 1622, when Winningtourig was sold by his brother, and he received 2500 merks for his share. In 1605 he represented his mother, Marion Hamilton, in a complaint against the Douglases. Some time before 1608 he married his half-cousin Jean, daughter of Robert Rutherford of Edgerston, with her mother being a daughter of Gavin Eliott of Stobs; this may be garbled into him being the ‘William called Neck of Steel’, a son of Robert Elliot of Laciston, who is said to have married Joan, daughter of Thomas Rutherford, the ‘Black Laird’ of Edgerston. He may have married a second time, since in 1642 the deceased Jean Rutherford is described as his 1st wife. He probably had children, but this branch of the Elliots was extinct by 1634 (as stated in the matriculation of arms for Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1673). Note that some genealogies suggested he had 3 sons, including William of Roan, but this may be confusion with another William, perhaps the son of Martin of Braidlie. His children probably included: Robert (d.bef. 1637), who succeeded; Francis, who succeeded his brother; and James, who was ‘second lawful son’ in 1639. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) son of William, ‘callit the Tod’. He is probably the eldest son (name not given) of ‘Elder Will the Tod’, who, along with his brother ‘David Carling’, were the pledges for whom their father was held in Blackness Castle in 1569. In 1586 he was granted a lease of the lands of ‘Culgis’ in Liddesdale by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. It is unclear where exactly these lands were. Given a connection with ‘Tod’, it is probable he was son of ‘Elder Will’. William (16th C.) tenant in Dodburn. In 1586, along with his brother Archie, he was accused of ‘a great strough at the Eschelles in England’. William of Falnash (probably their laird) was surety for them at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. He may have been related to other Elliots associated with Dodburn. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Scottish and English Wardens. His name is written as ‘Wille Elliott, called Cowfaughes’ when he was delivered as a pledge for the crimes of Hob (who may have been related). Probably the same man was ‘Will Elliott, called Cowsauche’ listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. He may be related to John ‘Cowshawes’ who is recorded in 1590. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) recorded along with ‘Riche Elliott of the Hewghhouse’ in 1595, as well as another Elliot called Hob. They were accused of stealing horses from a farm in England. William of Braidlie (d.1606/7) 2nd son of Martin, who was probably responsible for the burning of Hawick in 1565. He was known as ‘Will o the Dale’, as well as being ‘of Larriston’, ‘of Hartsgarth’ (although this may be confusion with a different man, brother of Robert of Redheugh) and later ‘of Dinlabyre’. He may be the ‘Will Ellett of Brandlie’ who entered the bond of 1557 to bring ‘Robene Pet’ to the Warden, John Kerr of Ferniehirst (although that seems too early, and hence may be a different William). Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Deputy Warden in 1572. In 1574 he was one of the hostages taken by the Regent Morton to ensure the good behaviour of the clan and was held by James Scrimgeour, Constable of Dundee. In 1578, there was a pledge to the King after he was released by Scrimgeour; he was there referred to as William, son of Martin. However, within a few months he headed 200 men on a raid into Tynedale. He may have spent time in the wars in Flanders and France, since he is not recorded for more than a decade. He was ‘of Larriston’ in 1593 and 1594 (making him possibly confused with another family branch). He led the Elliots and Armstrongs in a massive raid on Tynedale in 1593, with as many as 1,000 men taking part; they drove more than 2,000 head of livestock back to Scotland, as well as taking £300 in goods. In 1595 he was ‘of Lareston’ when his servants John and Clement Nixon were complained about for a raid into England. In 1595/6 he may be the same man as ‘William Elliott of Harscat a principal actor in the attempt of Tyndale’ delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to Sir John Forster (this is presumably Hoscote, but it is not entirely clear if this is the same or a different William). In 1596 he was ‘Wille Elliott of Lairston’ when (along with Walter Scott of Harden and the young Laird of Whithaugh) accused of stealing a large number of cattle and horses from ‘the Leabecke at Wilkin-karre’. He was ‘Will Elliott of Larestane’ in 1597 among a list of men the English Warden demanded pledges for. He is probably the ‘William Ellwald of Dunelabyre’ listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597 as hostages for the general peace on the Border. He remained a prisoner for more than 2 years, despite pleas by several Elliots for his release. In 1598/9 he was ‘William Elwood, elder’, (to distinguish him from a youngster of the same name) among a group of Scotsmen who tried to escape from their English prison. In 1600 there was an offer to substitute his son Robert, which was rejected; however, he and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh escaped soon afterwards. He may also be the William ‘of Eskez’ listed in 1600 (along with William of Clintwood and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh) as the men delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to the English Warden as pledges for Liddesdale; after his escape from York he is described as ‘Will of Hescottes an Elwood’, suggesting he is the same William who was tenant in Hoscote (but then the designations become hopelessly confused!). In 1606/7 he was one of the leaders in Liddesdale who were rounded up and executed by the Earl of Dunbar, then Commissioner on the Border. He married Mary, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and their children were: Robert of Dinlabyre; Gavin of Braidlie; and William of Braidlie. He was hanged at Foulden Justice Court along with his nephew Martin and other Elliot and Armstrong leaders. William (1546/7–aft. 1616) 4th Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert, he succeeded from his brother Gavin when he was 19. In 1566 he was served as heir to Gavin in a Precept of Clare Constat of the Middle Mains of Hassendean and of Horsleyhill, from the superior, Alexander, Lord Home. He then settled the ‘4 merk land’ of Horsleyhill on his wife, Margaert Turnbull. There is no record of children for the couple. In 1569 he gave a charter of the lands to his uncle William and in 1570/1 his wife sold Horsleyhill to his uncle William. However, it appears he also sold Horsleyhill and the Mains of Hassendean to his uncle Gavin in 1572, with his uncle William taking the case to court, with Gavin’s infraction being annulled in 1574/5. In 1573 he also sold Caveling to his uncle William. He may be the William of Horsleyhill who is recorded in a bond of 1594/5, when James Gladstones of Cocklaw pledged that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm him or Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1616 he is recorded acknowledging the redemption of the reversion of the Mains of Hassendean, granted by his grandfather Gavin of Horsleyhill to Lord Home in 1555. He may be the William of Horsleyhill whose son Robert ‘Ellet’ is among those listed in the King’s 1594 ‘respite’ for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands; if so, then he had at least one child. William ‘Will of the Steele’ (16th/17th C.) son of the elder William. In 1588 both old and young ‘Will Elliot of the Steill’ were complained about for a raid. In 1590 he is recorded as ‘William Elliott of the Steile the younger’ among a group of Elliots and others who took livestock and goods from Over Water in England. Also in 1590 both he and his father were accused of leading a raid on Catton, where they took livestock and prisoners. He was further accused in 1590 (along with Shiels and Nixons) of stealing from Roland Walker. Both he and his father were accused in 1590 of being in a group of Elliots and others who raided Dotland about 2 years earlier. He is listed along with Elliots and others accused in 1590 of stealing from the ‘Hewrde’ family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’. Both he and his father are on a list of Elliots (including from Redheugh and Braidlie) accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year. In 1596 there was a complaint that he and others (including Anthony Elliot of Binks and Geordie Simpson) had raided lands in England at King Water. In 1597 he is listed among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges. In 1597 he was ‘William Ellwald of Steale’ when he was among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch to the English Deputy Warden. However, he was recorded as ‘Will Ellwood alias Will of the Stile’ when released on a bond to return to Scotland; however, he soon led a raid into Tynedale, taking 200 head of cattle and 30 horses in broad daylight, so that the English Wardens called for his execution. He may have escaped punishment, since he is recorded in 1599 as ‘Will of the Steill’ when, along with many other Elliots, he signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch. William of Braidlie (16th/17th C.) son of William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of the Binks (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Simon of Philhope and grandson of Martin of Braidlie. This line of Elliots of Binks is easy to confuse with the slightly later line that came from the Elliots of Falnash. His wife’s name is not recorded. Their children were: Anthony ‘in Rouchlie’; Simon of the Binks (d.bef. 1656); James; and Robert (d.1663). William ‘Will’ of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded occupying Fiddleton in 1567. In 1578/9 John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him, that he would not raid into England. He was complained about for a raid into England in 1589. He is probably the ‘Will of Fyttington’ listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and other prisoners and ransoming them. Also in 1590 he was listed first in a group of Elliots and about 80 others accused of stealing from ‘Trowhen’ and killing 2 Englishmen in 1589, with the complaint repeated in 1590; he was there ‘Will Elliott of Fydderton’. Additionally in 1590 he was the first in a list of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of ‘Allenton’ and ‘Linbriggs’, taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; he was also among a group accused of having earlier stolen livestock and goods from the same people. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. In about 1600 Sir James Sandilands complained about the theft of 2 horses by him. He was probably the Will of Fiddleton listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; his sons John and Ringan were also listed as fugitives. He was apparently still alive in 1608 when his son Ninian was sentenced to be executed for killing one of the King’s Guards while trying to escape arrest. William, son of John of Burngrains, was also convicted (and the records confusingly also switch the 2 men's fathers in one part, so it is possible that his son was William and not Ninian. He must have been related to the Gavin and John recorded in 1606. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Will Elliott, sone to Will Elliot of the Steill’ in 1581/2, when he was among men accused of raiding the farm of Harwood-on-Teviot. He was declared a rebel after not appearing. William ‘Will’ of Thorlieshope (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with William of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedly of ‘the Garret sheells’. His name is given as ‘Will Elliott of Thorleshoppe ‘Renyon Will’’, suggesting that his father was Ninian. William 3rd Laird of Falnash (d.bef. 1620) son of Gavin. He is first recorded in 1564, when he was ‘Gawenis Willie, of Fallinesche’ at the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean; he was denounced as rebel for not appearing, but must have been rehabilitated later. In 1566 he was among a group of Elliots cited for attacking the Pringles and killing George Pringle of Torwoodlee; this was part of a feud between the 2 families. He also purchased ‘Hoscoit’ (i.e. Hoscote). In 1575 he was listed as son of Gavin of Falnash among those summoned to answer for the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. In 1579/80 he was charged by John Carmichael, Keeper of Liddesdale, with raids into England. He is probably the William of Falnash who signed the Assurance of Liddesdale with the English Warden Sir John Forster in 1584; this was along with Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidle, making it clear that he was an important Elliot chief at that time. In 1586 he was cited along with 15 other Border lairds for failing to bring their followers to justice. He was also surety for 2 of his tenants in 1586, Will in Dodburn and his brother Archie; however, the fines were not paid and by 1590 he was ‘put to the horn’ (although he must have somehow been reprieved). He is named in 1590/1 in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. He is probably the ‘William Ellet in Fellinesche’ listed (along with his son Robert and many others) in the King’s ‘respite’ of 1594 for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands. In about 1590 he is listed among the landed men of the Borders. He is mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Wardens, his case (whatever it was) being delayed. He may be one of the 2 Williams who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He was one of the trustees for the young Robert (17th) of Redheugh appointed in about 1597. In 1598 there were complaints by the widow of James Douglas of Knightsrig against several of his ‘brother’s, tenants and servants’. Also in 1598 there were complaints to the Privy Council by Sir James of Sandilands about raids on his property in which his name is listed. Along with his son Robert, he signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. Also in 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss ‘the present disordouris of the Bourdours’. In 1602 he signed the ‘New General Band’ along with other Border landlords. He received 500 merks for redemption on the lands of Outersiderig with Walter Scott of Synton. He then purchased the farms of upper Ewesdale from the Earl of Home, specifically Mosspeebeles, Over and Nether Woodend, Unthank, Fiddleton, Blackhall and Mosspaul; he forced out the former tenants. After Martin of Braidle and Prickenhaugh was executed in 1607, he paid the 4000 reversion money to Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig and acquired the lands of Braidle in the Barony of Hawick. In 1607 he was cautious for John Elliot of Copshaw, who was found guilty of the murder of George Pringle of Torwoodlee; he had to pay the fine of 500 marks on the non-appearance of John of Copshaw. He had a charter of the lands of Arkleton (presumably purchased from the Armstrongs) in 1611. Also in 1611 he served as cautioner in Jedburgh for Gavin ‘of the Schaws’ and for the Laird of Foulishiels. Additionally he was part of an assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. He signed a bond in 1612 (along with several Scotts) for keeping the peace in the Borders. In 1618 he is referred to as ‘William called of Falnash in Braidley’, suggesting he had already passed Falnash to his eldest son. He had 4 sons: Robert of Falnash, J.P. in Roxburghshire who married Marion Scott; John of Arkleton, also called ‘of Falnash’, who married Ester Armstrong; Archibald, who is mentioned in 1595; and probably one other, who owned Unthank, and whose children were the Elliots of Meikledale, Mosspeeble, Unthank and Eweslees. William (16th C.) tenant in Falnash Mill in 1589. He was listed among the ‘brothers, tenants and servants’ of William of Falnash who were complained about by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsrig, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn. William (d.c.1608) son of John of Burngrains. Listed (along with his brother Hob) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Along with Ninian, son of William of Fiddleton (although they are also confusingly listed the other way round, with his father being Will of Fiddleton) he was sentenced to execution in 1608 for killing one of the King’s Guards while resisting arrest. The pair had been declared rebels some years earlier for crimes including theft and murder. William of Caveling (b.1572) 2nd son of William, 5th Laird of Horsleyhill. His mother was Elizabeth Douglas of Cavers. In 1592 he was passed over (in favour of Gavin Elliott of Stobs) as tutor to his nephew William of Horsleyhill because he was still too young. In 1599 he was described as indweller and Burgess of Peebles; his connection was through his uncle, Archibald Douglas, who was Parson in Peebles. He was served heir to his father in some lands in 1603, when he was described as a Burgess of Peebles. About this time he sold Caveling to Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1604 he bought (under wadset and reversion) the lands of Cruxton from Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He was listed in 1607 among Douglases and others who swore not to harm the Horsburghs. He may be the William ‘called of Horsliehill’ who was among the group of Scotts and others who attacked Selkirk Mill in 1608. Also in 1608 he rescued a man who was chased into his house in Peebles by a gang of his enemies. He was still living in 1610. He married Christian Chisholme. William of Gorrenberry (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611 when he was one of the cautioners for ‘Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie’. Other cautioners included Robert of Redheugh, Archie of Clintwood, Martin’s Hob and William of Princkinghaugh, some of whom were probably relatives. He was also witness in 1613 to the infeftment of the lands of Robert of Redheugh. It is unclear how he was related to the other Elliots of Gorrenberry or of Redheugh. William (16th/17th C.) son of Archie of Clintwood. He is listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. His name is repeated in 1600, when the list of pledges for Liddesdale, delivered to the English Warden by Buccleuch consisted of him, William ‘of Eskez’ (possibly ‘Hoscote’, and probably his uncle, William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre) and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh. He was described as ‘young Elwood’, also called ‘the boye’ when listed in 1598/9 as one of the Liddesdale prisoners in England. In 1600 (after the other 2 Liddesdale pledges had escaped from prison in York) he is described as son of ‘an Ellwood called Martins Archie’, making it clear that he was a grandson of Martin of Braidlie. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Will Elliott in Burnheim, called Murth’. He was presumably related to other Elliots of Burnhead and may also have been related to Jock ‘the Murt’. William ‘Gled Will’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men those who were fugitives for not appearing in a Borders Commissioners’ court in Hawick in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Glyed Will’. William (16th/17th C.) son of Martin and Agnes Lorraine. In 1618 his mother granted him her half husbandland of lands in Lilliesleaf. He later deponed this land to Andrew Riddell, as confirmed in a service of heirs to Walter Riddell in 1702. William of Prickinghaugh (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to the 1613 infeftment for Robert of Redheugh in his lands. It is unclear how he was related to Christie (son of ‘Martin’s Hob’ of Prickinghaugh) who was declared a rebel in 1611. Also in 1611 he was one of the cautioners for ‘Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie’, with others including Robert of Redheugh, William of Gorrenberry, Archie of Clintwood and Martin’s Hob, some of whom were probably relatives. William of Rig (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh, 16th Chief and brother of Robert. He may have been raised partly by his step-father Gavin Elliott of Stobs. He was probably the brother of Robert of Redheugh who had a bond to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was witness to the infeftment of Robert of Redheugh in his lands in 1613. He may also have been known as ‘of Hartsgarth’. He married Jean, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston and Jean Elliott, co-heiress of Stobs. Their children were: Robert (d.bef. 1637), who succeeded; Francis (d.bef. 1699), related to the Elliots of Dinlabyre; and James (d.bef. 1699). He may be the William of Hartsgarth who died in 1613 and whose great-grandson William of Dinlabyre was ‘Kene’. He was acquitted of charges at court in Jedburgh. He may have been related to Archie and Hob, both called ‘Kene’, recorded a few decades earlier. William ‘Black-keid’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611. 2 Hendersons were accused in Jedburgh of several crimes, including the theft of 4 cows of his from the lands of Flatt. He may have been related to Archie and Jock, who had the same nickname. William ‘Sweet Milk’ (d.1627) from the Rule valley, said to be a minstrel. He is cited for immorality as ‘William Sweet Milk’ in the Cavers Parish records in 1623 and along with Robert Scott and Helen Langlands in 1624. He was killed at Newmill in a duel by William Henderson from Priesthaugh, as immortalised in the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. Although the basis of the story was traditional, the Jedburgh Presbytery records describe his ‘fearful and cruel slaughter’ and the excommunication of his assailant. A thorn bush near the spot was called ‘Milksweet Willie’s Thorn’, and was still pointed out in the early 1800s. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged, however, his murderer is said to have been rooted out by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs and young Eliott of Falnash (either of whom may have been a distant relative). It is possible he was related to ‘Dandie Ellot called Sweet Milk’ whose name is recorded in association with complaints about raids into England in 1598. William (16th/17th C.) 7th and last Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert and Agnes Scott. He was a minor when his father died in 1592, with his grand-uncle Gavin of Stobs appointed as his tutor. In 1606 curators were appointed to manage his affairs and in 1607 they requested from the Chancery the writs and charters of Horsleyhill so that he could be served heir to his grandfather William. However, he sold Horsleyhill shortly afterwards to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs and was thereafter ‘called of Horsleyhill’, rather than being the Laird. He became a retainer of Robert Scott of Haining, who may have been related to his mother. In 1617 he was accused of attacking William Mitchell, a Burgess of Selkirk, apparently trying to rip his ears off, as well as half his beard; however, he was acquitted on assurance of ‘his great oath’. In 1619 he was found guilty of attacking and stabbing William Turnbull in Philphaugh, who had loaned a plough to Sarah Lough in Selkirk to till a piece of land that he had tried to get for himself. He was fined £40 and ordered to remain in Edinburgh until he found caution for 500 merks. He is probably also the ‘Wm. Elliott, sometimes in Horslaw’ who in 1623 was acquitted of the charge of stealing sheep from Clinhill. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. His nickname was given as ‘Cauldfute’. William ‘Laurie’s Jock’s Willie’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Teviotdale declared as fugitives for not appearing before a court in Jedburgh in 1606. His name is recorded as ‘Willie Elliott in Carlaverok, called Lowrey’s Jok’s Willie’. His father was therefore John and his grandfather ‘Laurie’ (or Lawrence). However, the designation ‘Carlaverok’ is confusing, since this is not in Teviotdale. William (16th/17th C.) brother of ‘Dandie of Bowholmes’. In 1611 he was listed among Liddesdale men who did not appear at court in Jedburgh. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622 and 1623 being in ‘Huntlaw’. John Nichol in Craikhope was caution for him at the Judiciary Court in Jedburgh. William ‘Gib’s Will’ (17th C.) one of 3 men who were meant to carry out the murder of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1624, as part of the ongoing feud between the 2 families. The other men were Gavin of Hillhouse and ‘Gib Elliott, callit the Tutour’, who may have been his father. All 3 later confessed. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jean Murray and their children included: Robert (b.1634); Jean (b.1636); Marie (b.1640); and William (b.1643). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Stoddart and their children included: High (b.1635); Gavin (b.1640); Robert (b.1642); and Bessie (b.1645). William (d.1637) eldest son of Robert, he is described as ‘Younger of Falnash’. In 1635 he married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Maxwell of Cowhill. Their daughter Margaret was christened in Hawick 2 years later. His wife was granted the liferent of Outerside and an annual rent of 200 merks from ‘Falnesche, Caulschaw and Tandilneir’. He was dead within a few months of the baptism of his daughter. His wife may have remarried a Haswell, since Margaret Haswell held the liferent of Outerside in 1643. Falnash was inherited by his brother Archibald. William (d.1638) youngest son of Gavin of Brugh. He was probably born locally, but became Provost of Peebles, and founded the Peebles branch of the family. He was served heir to his father in 1603. He was Provost of Peebles in 1622 when he served on an assize at the Court of Judiciary in Dumfries. He married Mary, daughter of John Ker of Faldonside and their children were: Lillian (d.1638); Gavin, who witnessed a tack for his brother in 1643; and Harry, who was Parson at Bedrule. He is sometimes suggested (e.g. by Tancred) to have instead been son of William Eliott of Stobs. His great-grandson, Sir John was physician to the Prince of Wales and was created a baronet in 1778. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘callit of Peill’ in 1622 when 2 men were accused of stealing sheep from his lands at Elliot of Burnmouth. He may be the William ‘in his father Simon. He later sold Binks to John Harwood, this may really have technically been sometimes referred to as the 1st Elliot Laird of listed as owner in 1643. Thus, although he is the lands in wadset). However, his father was (with the permission of Gilbert Eliott, who had Tythehouse and Appotside from Edward Lorraine 1637 he bought the lands of Harwood, including (d.1662) eldest son of Simon of the Binks. In other Williams. William Eckford. He is probably the same as one of the often been another son, who died about 1666. He was ‘indweller in Burnmouth’, although described as ‘of Harwood’, when he died. His testament and inventory of goods are in the National Archives. In 1665 ‘Harie Elliot, son-in-law’ is recorded as ‘of Apitsyde’. His children were: Simon of the Binks and Swinside (although there is some confusion between him and his son William); Henry (or ‘Harry’), who succeeded to Harwood; Jean, the eldest daughter; Margaret, who married William Elliot of Phillhope; Jean (also called ‘Jennet’), the youngest daughter); and John of the Binks and later of Baxtonlees or Peel. George may have been another son, who died about 1666. He was ‘indweller in Burnmouth’, although described as ‘of Harwood’, when he died. His testament and inventory of goods are in the National Archives. In 1665 ‘Harie Elliot, son-in-law’ is recorded as an overseer of William of Binks, who may have been him (if the date is correct). William of Unthank (d.1670s) probably 3rd son of the 4th son (whose first name is unrecorded) of William of Falnash, his brothers being Adam of Meikledale, William of Mosspeeble and Ninian of Eweslees. He ‘fitted from Eweshead’ in 1642’ and probably moved to Gorrenberry. He is recorded in 1660 when he was guardian to the 2 grandsons of his brother Ninian in Eweslees. He is referred to as ‘called Unthank’ in a list of debtors in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks in 1662. He was also among the men fined (£1800) after the Restoration in 1662, presumably meaning that he acted against the King in the Civil War. In 1670, along with Simon of the Binks and Swinside, and his own son Adam, he Brighousecleuchhead. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Heisches’ in 1623, when he was entered at the Judicial Court. His cautioners were Gilbert Eliott of Craigend and Archie of Bowholm. However, it is unclear where ‘Heisches’ may have been. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 being ‘callit of ye Mylne, in Cassiltoune’, presumably meaning he was tenant in Castleton Mill. A man was found guilty of stealing a clock from him. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Bonjedward. In 1623 along with George Johnstone in Essenside he was found guilty of stealing a horse from Walter Scott of Burnfoot-on-Ale. He was probably executed as a result (and may have also been referred to as son of ‘Thome of Fawsyde’). William (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Hermitage in 1632. He may have been ancestor of the later Elliots of Hermitage. William (17th C.) recorded as being ‘called of the Boulex’ when he was listed among a large number of Borderers who were declared fugitives in 1642. It is unclear where the place name might have been, but many of the men he is listed with were from the Liddesdale area. William (17th C.) described as ‘William Elliot, tailor in Cavers’ in a Hawick magistrates case of 1642, when Douglas of Cavers’ servant accused him and several other people of stealing his wallet in Hawick. William (17th C.) from Ashkirk, he married Mary Taylor. Their children included James (b.1651). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Agnes Elliot and their son Francis was born in 1653. William of Mosspeeble (17th C.) 2nd son of an unknown Elliot, probably owner of Unthank. His grandfather was William of Falnash. He married Mary, daughter of John Carmichael, Laird of CASTLEHOPE. They had 2 sons: Robert of Mosspeeble, who died unmarried; and John of Castlehope and Billhope. William (17th C.) recorded in 1662/3 as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Canonbie and Morton, and in 1663–70 for Hawick, Hassendean and Eckford. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Binks and Harwood (d.1662) eldest son of Simon of the Binks. In 1637 he bought the lands of Harwood, including Tythehouse and Appotside from Edward Lorraine (with the permission of Gilbert Eliott, who had the lands in wadset). However, his father was listed as owner in 1643. Thus, although he is sometimes referred to as the 1st Elliot Laird of Harwood, this may really have technically been his father Simon. He later sold Binks to John Elliot of Burnmouth. He may be the William ‘in Harret’ who acted as surety for Janet Scott (wife of John Glendinning, ‘Sowtail’) in 1644, when she promised to appear before the Justice-General on a charge of witchcraft. He is listed in a contract for the vicarage teinds of Hobkirk Parish in 1648 and discharge of 1649. He was also the William ‘of the Burnmouth, indweller in Liddesdale’ who had a loan discharged in 1653. In 1654 he purchased a wadset of Appotside from Edward Lorraine and his son Walter; his signature was written by the notary because he could not write himself. He purchased Appotside outright in 1656 and was confirmed in his charters of Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside by his superior, Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He (along with his son John) purchased lands at Baxtonlees near Peel in 1659 from Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. After the Restoration both he and his brother Robert were fined £1,200 for supporting the Commonwealth. He was recorded paying £433 6s 8d on the Land Tax Rolls in about 1663. He married Christian Greenlaw in 1627 and in 1659 gave her a sasine of ‘liferent’ of Appotside (presumably as part of the marriage contract); he was then described as ‘of Apitsyde’. His children were: Simon of the Binks and Swinside (although there is some confusion between him and his son William); Henry (or ‘Harry’), who succeeded to Harwood; Jean, the eldest daughter; Margaret, who married William Elliot of Phillhope; Jean (also called ‘Jennet’), the youngest daughter); and John of the Binks and later of Baxtonlees or Peel. George may have been another son, who died about 1666. He was ‘indweller in Burnmouth’, although described as ‘of Harwood’, when he died. His testament and inventory of goods are in the National Archives. In 1665 ‘Harie Elliot, son-in-law’ is recorded as an overseer of William of Binks, who may have been him (if the date is correct). William of Unthank (d.1670s) probably 3rd son of the 4th son (whose first name is unrecorded) of William of Falnash, his brothers being Adam of Meikledale, William of Mosspeeble and Ninian of Eweslees. He ‘fitted from Eweshead’ in 1642’ and probably moved to Gorrenberry. He is recorded in 1660 when he was guardian to the 2 grandsons of his brother Ninian in Eweslees. He is referred to as ‘called Unthank’ in a list of debtors in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks in 1662. He was also among the men fined (£1800) after the Restoration in 1662, presumably meaning that he acted against the King in the Civil War. In 1670, along with Simon of the Binks and Swinside, and his own son Adam, he purchased Lymiecleuch (including He is probably the William who paid the land tax for half of Lymiecleuch in 1678 (the other half being paid by Sir William Eliott of Stobs). Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch) from William Eliott, younger of Stobs. His children included: Robert, who died unmarried; Adam of Mosspieble and Lymiecleuch; William of Penchrise; and Walter of Carewoodrig. Rev. William (c.1617–85) from Borthwickshiels, son of Robert. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1637 and became minister at Yarrow in 1641. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He was confined to his parish in 1662 for refusing to conform to Episcopacy. However, he was ‘indulged’ (i.e. allowed to resume his duties) in 1679 for about a year. In 1664 he had a bond with Sir William Scott of Harden (his father and grandfather having had close connections with the Scotts of Harden). When he died he had debts amounting to £8,333 13s 4d (Scots probably), with his brother Thomas in Borthwickshiels becoming his executor. His will is recorded in 1686. William of Lymiecleuch (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He may have been a son of Ninian of Eweslees, or else was son of William of Unthank and the same as William of Penchrise (or perhaps was William of Unthank himself). William of Grange (17th C.) paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He was probably related to other Elliots of Grange. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1685. In 1788 he was listed as a former owner of lands in Nether Ancrum, valued at £20. William of Penchrise (17th C.) son of William of Unthank, he was the first Elliot at Penchrise. He may have been the same William (along with Robert) of Lymiecleuch and Penchrise who was involved in a court case in 1695 over not paying a bond due to John Riddell of Haining; not appearing, their lands were yielded to their guarantor, Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He married Bessie Grieve, who died in 1683 (her will being recorded in 1684). Their children included: William of Penchrise, who married Janet Elliot of Thorlieshope; Henry in Riccarton, who married Isobel, daughter of John Elliot in Dingles; John in Leaahugh, who married Mary Elliot; Ninian in Ruecastle, who married Agnes Pater- son; Adam in Catlowdie, who married Mary Irving; Jean, who married Robert Grieve in Teinds- side; and Eupham, mentioned in 1683. William of Straghan (17th C.) said to be a direct descen- dant of the Eliotts of Stobs, he was the progenitor of County Fermanagh branch. He was a Lieu- tenant in the army, who defended Ballyshannon and fought under William III at the Battle of the Boyne. He married his cousin, Mary, daughter of William Cairnes of Killyfaddy. William of Bewlie, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae (b.1658), eldest son of Thomas of Bewlie, who was tenant in Borthwickshiels. His mother was Margaret Scott from Chamberlain Newton. He could be the Will- ian who (along with Thomas) witnessed a baptism for James Murray, herd at Borthwickshiels in 1683. He is probably also the William who witnessed baptisms for Patrick Riddell of Muselee and Marie Elliot (his sister) in 1682 and 1686. He may be the William who was taxed for 4 hearths at Borthwickshiels in 1694 (assuming he kept his father’s tenancy of the farm there). It is said that he wanted to buy Horsleyhill, but since it was not for sale, he instead purchased Borthwick- brae. He received a Crown Charter for Borth- wickbrae in 1698. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, 1695 and 1704. He was involved in a bonds with Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692 and with Sir William Scott of Harden in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Company in 1695. He was one of the ‘curators’ for Alexander Scott of Synton. Scott of Satchells describes him as a good farmer (`kept the sheep upon the Down’) and a generous sup- porter of the poor `was the Poors relief, for he fed and clad them both with Flesh and Fleece’, in contrast to his cousin James of Bridgehaugh. In 1686 he married Isobel, daughter of William Scott of Synton and sister of John Scott of Syn- ton. He may also have married a second time, but her name is unknown. He had 16 children, 9 of whom survived: William (1689–1756), who succeeded to the Borthwickbrae Lairdship; Francis, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edin- burgh in 1710; Thomas (b.1687); Jean (b.1688), who in 1705 married Gideon Scott of Newhouse, brother of the Laird of Woll; Mary, who in 1715 married Gideon Burnet in Whitehope; Christian (b.1697), who married Robert Elliot of Rig (probably Caerlenrig) in 1721; Anne (b.1704), who married Thomas Elliot, minister of Kirk- ton and Cavers; Susanna (b.1704); and Margaret, who married William Borthwick in Glenningin. Isobel (or ‘Tibby’, b.1708) may have been his youngest daughter and married Walter Elliot of Ormiston. William of Philhope (17th C.) eldest son of Archibald of Philhope. He married Margaret Elliot of the Binks and Harwood in 1663. He is recorded in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls as ‘William Elliot of philip for braidlie’, paying the tax for land valued at £216 in Hawick Parish. He was also listed paying tax on land valued at £400 in Selkirkshire in 1678; he was recorded being ‘of philip’ and ‘hes bene thretic [although hard to read] yeires bypass residenter in the land’. He was ‘Wm Elliott of Phillip’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. In 1700 his wife assigned to him the remainder of the money bequeathed to her by her mother. His son William was a witness to this document of 1700. He was probably succeeded by William, although father and son are hard to separate in records. He may have been the Elliot of Philhope who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. William (17th C.) listed as son of deceased William of Philhope, son-in-law of William of Binks, when he was in the testament for the deceased George, son of William of Binks. He was recorded in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He was one of the heritors in support of the suppression of Hassendean Parish in favour of Roberton. There is a ‘letter of horning’ against him (and Henry Elliot of Harwood) by Walter Scott, called Westport in 1676. His son Arthur became an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1694. And possibly the same Arthur married Mary Douglas in Edinburgh in 1721, by which time William is recorded as deceased. Another son James became a tanner’s apprentice in Edinburgh, also in 1694. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1669 fellow merchant Samuel Newbie was convicted of striking him in the head with his sword and wounding him in the face with a bridle. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick recorded in 1693. The Bailie of Regality, William Scott, was in his house sorting out some financial business between John Hardie and Walter Ruecastle, when he was assaulted by Walter Ruecastle. He must have been an innkeeper, or some prominent townman. He could be the William of the Sandbed listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the William recorded in the Sandbed in 1702 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for shoemaker George Allan and for Alexander Ogilvie in 1708 and again for shoemaker George Allan in 1709. William of Dinlabyre (d.1693) son of William of Braidlie and Mary Scott, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. However, he seems to have lived rather late in the century for a man whose grandfather is meant to have died in 1607, suggesting that there may be some confusion here. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, and appears to have been the most prominent Elliot in Liddesdale in the latter half of the 17th century (after the death of the last Robert of Redheugh). He may be the William ‘of Dunliebyre’ whose lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £400 in 1643; if this was not him it must have been an earlier relative. In 1667 he was ‘now of Dinlabyre’ when served heir to his great-grandfather William (who died in 1613), in the lands of Killoley, Bighouse, Heuch-housebrae, Dinlabyre, Easter Flicht, ‘Hie-Eshies’ and Burnfoot in Liddesdale; in 1691 he appears to have been served again as heir to his great-grandfather William of Hartshaugh in 4 quarters of the lands of Killoley, Brighouse and Heuch-housebrae (called the lands of Dinlabyre), as well as Easter Flicht, ‘Hydashes’ and Burnfoot. He is probably the William (transcribed as ‘of Dinlileries’) who paid tax on £400 of land in Castleton Parish in 1663. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers). He signed the bond of provision for fulfillment of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs marriage contract in 1677. He paid the land tax on £400 in Castleton Parish in 1678. He was made a Justice of the Peace in 1680. A carved stone lintel bearing his initials and the date 1682 is built into a rockery at Dinlabyre and an earlier one dated 1668 might suggest when he had the house rebuilt. In 1691 he was served heir to his grandfather. He firstly married a sister of Archibald, Lord Rutherford and secondly in 1686 married Margaret Scott. His children included: Robert of Dinlabyre, who probably sold Dinlabyre; Thomas; Henry; Gilbert, apprentices to a periwig-maker in 1692; and Christian. His testament is recorded in 1693. William of Caerlenrig (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. William (17th C.) tenant in Carewoodrig. He is recorded being ‘in Carritridge’ in 1685 among local men who were accused of frequenting conventicles. William of Meikledale (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Adam of Meikledale. He succeeded on the death of his brother Andrew (who was eldest son of Adam with his 2nd wife, Janet Scott) in 1682. He was served ‘heir of tailzie’ to his ‘brother german’ (meaning that they had the same mother as well as father) Andrew’s lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope. In 1696 he sold (by ‘wadsett and reversion') Meikledale to his nephew William, 3rd son of Walter of Arkleton. He married Barbara Forrester and also possibly a Scott of Merrylaw. His children included Adam (who died at Hartsdie in 1760) and Lucy. He is said to have died in reduced circumstances, leaving his children unprovided for. He was still alive in 1698. William (17th C.) recorded as resident at Pinglehole in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) tenant in Striphielden in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) tenant in Powisholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Gillfoot in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Westburnflat in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He could be the merchant who witnessed a baptism (along with merchant Robert Brown) for weaver Adam Brown in 1700. William (17th C.) tenant in 'outer slaidhills' according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident at Monk's Croft (in Hassendean Parish) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John who was also listed there. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Allan and their children included: Margaret (b.1685); and William (b.1687). He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Arkleton (1665–1721) 3rd son of Walter of Arkleton, he succeeded to the estate after his father disinherited his older brothers. In 1700 he had a Crown Charter for the lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope, which he purchased from his uncle William of Meikledale. In 1707 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for his brother Adam ‘of arcleton att harwood’. In 1692 he married Anne, youngest daughter of Robert (or perhaps Andrew) Ainslie of Jedburgh and she died in 1733; her dowry involved Meikledale. His children included: Katherine (b.1697), who married David Luing of Westerkirk, secondly later Charles Telfer minister of Hawick and thirdly Robert Elliot of Fenwick; William (b.1700), who died unmarried; Adam (b.1702), who succeeded and married Christian of Thorlieshope; and Christian (1704–23). He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard. William of Cooms (d.1714) younger son of Robert of Black Tarras (or perhaps the eldest son, it is not clear). He inherited Cooms (half of Black Tarras) from his father. He was declared bankrupt in 1690, but receive a Crown charter of Cooms in 1708 (perhaps being enabled to keep Cooms because his brother-in-law purchased Lodgegill from his brother Simon). He married Helen, sister of William of Thorlieshope. Their children included: John (b.1709), who married Agnes, daughter of Robert Mader of Greenhill; a second son, whose name is unknown; Henry in Sorbietrees, who married Christian Scott of Falnash; and Simon. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in ‘Adderstown’ (probably Adderstoneshiel) in Cavers Parish. His children included: an unnamed child (b.1698); Jean (b.1701); Frances (b.1704); and Margaret (b.1705). In 1708 he was listed being in ‘Etherstoneshile’s’ when his daughter Betty was baptised. William of Wells, ‘the Lace-man’ (c.1670–1728) descendant of the Elliots of Brugh, he was eldest son of John and Margaret Johnstone, who lived at Southfield and are both buried in Hawick. It is also speculated that he derived from an illegitimate son of Gavin of Brugh, but these generations are quite uncertain. He was an apprentice to merchant Patrick Johnstone, but it is unclear where this was (since there is no record of it in Edinburgh). Johnstone seems likely to have been a relative of his mother and was a Bailie in Edinburgh (perhaps the Patrick who was later Provost of Edinburgh). In 1692 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh and was by that time already a merchant in London. He was a successful dealer in gold and silver lace, hence his nickname ‘the Lace-man’, and was also described as the King’s tailor in London (but this could be local hyperbole). He owned an estate in Reigate in Surrey. He is referred to as ‘of Brugh and Wells’, having purchased the estate of Wells in 1706 from Thomas Rutherford; this was on the advice of his son-in-law (Gilbert Elliott), who owned neighbouring farms. He had Wells erected into a barony in 1707 and registered his arms in 1711. He is surely the same Mr. Elliot, born and educated at Nether Southfield, who is recorded as supplying Hawick Parish with a new mort-cloth in 1720. About 1720 he also purchased the estate of Haddon (near Kelso) from Sir Gilbert Elliott (it is said, to help him financially). Further Borders purchases included Ormiston, Hunthill and Scrabrough. Despite his local lands and importance, he lived mainly in London, visiting the Borders seldom and briefly. He is said to have lost money in the South Sea Bubble around 1720. He worked to have his son-in-law pardoned after he had to flee following the death of Col. Stewart of Stewartfield in 1726. He spent £1000 setting up his son in business in London, and also left ‘many thousands of pounds’ for the grandchildren of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, his son-in-law. He married Eleanor, whose last name is not known, and she died in 1745; she may be the ‘Ellenor Tankard’ who married William Elliott in London in 1682. Their children included: William, who succeeded and became a Colonel; John, whose son inherited Wells; Eleanor (d.1728), who married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs; Charlotte (d.1753), who married Maj.-Gen. Roger Elliott (of the St. Germain family), Governor of Gibraltar, and secondly married a Mr. Burroughs; Arabella, who married John Bishop and had a son Elliot Bishop; and Margaret, who married Jonathan Waggaman. He left a sizeable fortune when he died. When he witnessed his daughter Eleanor’s marriage contract in 1702 it was also signed by John Elliott, tailor of London, who must have been a relative, possibly his son. Portraits of him and his wife, and of his daughter Lady Elliott, once hung in Wells House. His will was made at St. Martin in the Fields, and describes his surviving family, as well as mentioning a miniature portrait of his painted by Mr. Harle. He was buried in the Dissenter Burial ground at Bunhill Fields. An inventory of Wells House, drawn up for his son in the second quarter of the 18th century, includes portraits of him and his wife, as well as his daughter, Eleanor. William of Swinside (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Simon and grandson of William of the Binks and Harwood. He received a charter of Swinside during his father’s lifetime in 1674. He was witness to the marriage contract of a daughter of Henry Elliott of Harwood in 1692. He was ‘younger of Swinside’ in 1698 when he was on the Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, but just ‘of Swinside’ when listed as one of the heritors of Roxburghshire who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He was also a Commissioner of Supply in 1704. Sometime before 1702 he married Barbara, eldest daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Wells. She died by 1722 and he remarried, probably to Elizabeth McClean. In 1730 he purchased Sharpitlaw in Kelso Parish, which he conveyed to his son Robert, retaining a life rent for himself. He had 9 children: William of Swinside (b.1701); Thomas (b.1703); Sussana (b.1705); John (b.1706); Adam (b.1709); Elizabeth; Walter; George; and Robert of Sharpitlaw. Note that Tancred’s history places him as the son of William of the Binks and Harwood, rather than the grandson. A document of 1707 lists William ‘younger of Swinsyde’, so it is also possible that there was an additional generation. William (1661/2–1731) tenant in Whitaugh and Braeoddie. He was eldest son of John of Castleton and Billhope and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. Around 1730 he bought Whitaugh for his 1st son and Redheugh for his 2nd son. He married Isabella (c.1680–1769), daughter of Scott of Falnash (perhaps Gideon Scott, who would be the right generation, or his brother Robert). Their children included: John of Whitaugh (c.1702–78), who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Gorrenberry; Robert of Redheugh (1709–93), who married Margaret Beattie; and William in Braeoddie (1711–71), who died unmarried. Note that the dates of his birth and death are very uncertain, with some sources suggesting he died in 1767, aged 89. He and his wife were buried at Hermitage Chapel. William (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of James of Redheugh and brother of Robert of Larriston. He was grandson of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’. He will was proved in 1694. According to a family pedigree of about 1704 he ‘went away to be a horner’. William of Penchrise (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchris and Bessie Grieve. His siblings included Henry in Riccarton, John in Leahaugh, Ninian in Ruecastle, Adam in Catlowdie and Jean (wife of Robert Grieve in Teindsdie). He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of John Elliot of Thorlshope. Their children included: Gilbert of Mount; John; Walter; James in Millholm; William in Selkirk, who married Marion Elliot; and Adam in Dykeraw. He may also be father of Thomas, who was born in Cavers Parish in 1699. Note that information about this family seems uncertain. William (17th/18th C.) younger son of Adam in Dykeraw, he was tenant farmer in Millburnholm. He is said to have firstly married a Miss Henderson and secondly married Marion Nixon, with whom he had a son William in Dykeraw. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: Beatrix (b.1707); Agnes (b.1710); and Dand (b.1714). William 1st Laird of Wolfelee (1688–1768) second son of Thomas of Oakwood Mill and grandson of Thomas of Borthwickshiel, with his mother being Jean Inglis. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, being sent there by his father, and it is said he did not really settle down to a serious business life until his marriage. He was apprenticed to Andrew Haliburton, W.S. and his own law office was in the Lawnmarket, although later he also had an office in Selkirk. He dealt with legal business for Scott of Harden for several decades. He purchased the estate of Wolfelee in 1730 (from his distant relatives, the Eliotts of Stobs), although it is said that he seldom stayed there, except when his legal business took him to the area. He sold off the Stonedodge part to his future father-in-law. In 1751 he bought several neighbouring properties from William Kerr of Abbotrule, as well as half of Kirknowe from Richard Mair. And in 1757 he and his son Cornelius bought ‘Forkings of Unthank’, ‘Eyelee’, the ‘old Glebe of Hobkirk’ and the ‘Cleugh or back brae of Unthank’ from Thomas Scott of Stonedodge. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1722 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and Elizabeth Elliot of Harwood. In 1727 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Stonedodge, and she died only 3 years later. In 1732 he lastly married Margaret, daughter of Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, and she died in 1796; there was a portrait painted of her. His children were: Thomas (b.1723, by his 1st marriage), a doctor who pre-deceased his father; Elizabeth (also by his 1st marriage), who married William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, her father’s brother-in-law; Cornelius (1733–1821), who succeeded to Wolfelee; Adam (1740–1804), who married Rose Leonard, worked in Danzig, and died on the Isle of Wight; Thomas, who died in infancy; Robert, merchant in Amsterdam, who bought Pinnaclehill, Kelso; Samuel, merchant in Antigua; Janet (or Jean), married Maj. Henry Balfour of Pilrig, Leith; and Helen, married Capt. Robert Davidson of Pinnaclehill. Not known as a great land improver, he nevertheless purchased several Border estates, becoming quite wealthy in later life. He was a friend of the Grieves of Branxholme Park, often staying there. He is said to have been tall and handsome. He was healthy and working up until the day he died. William (17th/18th C.) son of John in Harden and grandson of Adam in Dykeraw. He was tenant in ‘Hole’, which is probably the same as ‘Hollows’. His children included William, John and Isabel. William of Harwood (d.c.1736) 3rd Laird (although some say he was 4th), eldest son and successor to his father Henry. He is recorded in bonds of 1693 and 1694 as the eldest lawful son of Henry and in 1697 as ‘younger of Harret’. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as ‘younger of Harrow’. His father assigned the lands of Harrow, Appotside and Tythehouse to him, suggesting he took over financial control of the family estates, although his father appears to have lived for several years afterwards. He was just ‘of Harwood’ in 1700 when he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He is listed in 1704 as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Jean (or Jane), eldest daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig by post-nuptial contract in 1700. The witnesses (probably all relatives) were Robert of Midlem Mill, Henry in Hudshouse and his own brothers Walter, John and Henry. They had 10 children: Henry (1700–84), who succeeded; Thomas and John, who died young; Robert, ‘Captain’, whose son William became Laird of Harwood; Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Milsington; Jean (1709/10–74), who married William Elliot of Lodgegill and Taras; Marion (or ‘Mary’), who married John Scott of Weens; and Margaret, Christian and Janet, who all died unmarried (Janet in her 90th year). It is unclear when he succeeded to his father, but certainly by late 1707, when he was involved in the discharge of a bond along with Walter Scott of Todrig (his father-in-law). He had a bond of provision for his children in 1720, updated in 1726. He had a reputation for being eccentric (or perhaps ‘of weak intellect’) and for not seeing eye to eye with his son and heir, Henry. In 1731 they both ran horses in the annual race held near Hartshaugh, and he tricked his son by buying an old racehorse from Newcastle, which won at a canter; it is said that the cheers could be heard across the Rule valley. He let much of the Harwood estate to James Pott and his brothers, provoking his son into appealing to the Court of Session, and having him placed under trust, with only a small annuity. This ‘Bond of Interdiction’ was in 1731 and to last 21 years. The appointed trustees were Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill, Thomas Scott of Todrig (his brother-in-law), Henry (his son) and Sir Gilbert Elliott of Minto. He was essentially forced to resign his lands to his son in 1733. His wife had a contract in 1736 restricting her ‘liferent’ and handing over the mansion house of Harwood to her son Henry. William of Thorliveshope and Overton (17th/18th C.) eldest son of John of Thorliveshope. His father settled on him several lands, including ‘Isgilil’. In 1690 Simon of Lodgegill and his brother William of Cooms were declared bankrupt, and he was awarded Lodgegill, which he settled on his own brother Henry. In 1698 he acquired Blackhall and Overton from his father-in-law (Andrew Ainslie), and had a crown charter for these lands. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was appointed Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire in 1704. He could be the Laird of Thorlieshope whose Chaplain, Mr. Tait, was recorded preaching in Hawick in 1721. He forced his cousin’s son Adam to sell Meikledale in 1725 to pay off debts. In 1729 he entailed all his lands on his eldest son William. In 1682 he married Christian, eldest daughter of Andrew Ainslie of Blackhall (who had been Provost of Jedburgh). They had at least 10 children, including: William of Thorlieshope and Overton (b.1694), whose 2nd wife was Margaret, daughter and heiress of Arthur Elliot of Harwood; John; Robert; Walter (b.1701); Elizabeth (b.1702); James (b.1704); Walter (again), described as 5th son; Helen, who married William Mather of Greenhill; Christian, who married Adam of Arkleton; Cecile (b.1706), who married William Hall, tenant in Hyndhope; and Andrew (b.1707), tenant in Edgerston Tofts. He moved to Oxnam Parish and is buried there. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1719 he married ‘Jesobel’ Wilson, who was also from Roberton. Perhaps the same William is recorded at Mabonlaw in 1721 when his son Walter was baptised and in 1726 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be the William at Whitecleughside whose son Walter was baptised in 1727. Either he or a different William was recorded at Alemoor in 1721 when his son James was baptised. William (1689–1756) 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae, eldest son of William and Isobel Scott. In 1721 he leased the west end of Branxholme Muir from the Scotts of Buccleuch for 21 years. Little else is known about him. In 1706 he married Margaret (probably his cousin), daughter of John Scott of Synton, and they had 14 children (mostly baptised in Roberton): William (b.1706), christened at Roberton, but died at sea; Margaret (b.1707), who married Thomas Scott of Wauchope, who later purchased part of the Borthwickbrae estate; John (1711–92), who succeeded to Borthwickbrae; Magdalene (b.1713), who married Walter Grieve of Branxholme Park; Elizabeth (b.1716), who died unmarried in 1809, aged 92 (90 in the Parish Register); Jean (b.1718), who married Thomas Borthwick in Shaws; Alexander (b.1720); Mary (b.1722); Christian (b.1724); Thomas (b.1726); Gilbert (b.1728), who probably died young; Ann (b.1729), who married Thomas Elliot, minister of Kirkton and Cavers in 1760; Gilbert (b.1731), whose son Thomas purchased the Langlands estate; and Isobel (b.1731), who married Walter Elliot of Ormiston, one of the founders of Hawick’s carpet-making trade. He must have been quite young when he married. A Roberton Parish record of 1707 relates to Isabel Riddel, who acted as midwife to his wife, the baby being delivered ‘before the time’. William of Thorlieshope and Overton (1694–1744) eldest son of William of Thorlieshope. He lived in Oxnam Parish. His father settled on him the lands of Blackhall in 1698, Thorlieshope in 1711 and the remainder were entailed to him in 1729. In 1727 he acquired Demainholm from John of Demainholm and in 1731 he sold Meikledale to William Scott in Meikledale. In 1707 he had an illegitimate child with Isobel Minto, Charles. In 1711 he married his 2nd cousin Margaret, daughter and heiress of Arthur Elliot of Harwood. His wife was recorded as having the third most highly valued lands in Hawick Parish in 1710. They had 8 sons and 6 daughters, including: Robert, who succeeded; James (b.1726); Walter (b.1729); and Andrew (b.1737). Col. William of Brugh and Wells (1696–1764) eldest son of William of Brugh and Wells, ‘the Lace-man’. He was guardian for his nephew Granville Elliott (son of his sister Charlotte and the deceased Roger Elliott) around 1720. He joined the Army in 1722 as Coronet in the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards and was then Captain in Churchill’s Regiment of Dragoons. He was served as heir to his father in 1730. However, he spent most of his time at his estate near London, with Archibald Jerdan acting as his factor at Wells (and whose surviving rental book from 1728–60 gives a glimpse into the conditions of a Border laird at that time). At Wells he was keen on developing the gardens, had a bowling green, kept dogs and also had fishing and hunting gear. His Border estates included Ormiston (in Eckford Parish) as well as Haddin (near Kelso). In 1737 he became a Major in the Grenadier Guards and was Lieutenant-Colonel by 1741. In 1743 he was at the Battle of Dettingen, where he served as A.D.C. and equerry to King George II. His nephew George Augustus Eliott (later Lord Heathfield) and his cousin Capt. John Elliot (son of Gilbert of Winningtonrig) were officers under him. He resigned his army commission in 1746. He paid the window tax for ‘Walls’ in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He was elected M.P. for Caine, Wiltshire in 1741 and held the seat until 1754. He went through a long legal battle with Lady Rutherford of Chatto over his father’s purchase of Ormiston, this ending in 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is said that he took a keen interest in the well-being of his Elliot relatives. In 1737 he married Lady Frances Nassau d’Auverquerque (apparently against her father’s wishes), daughter of Henry, Earl of Grantham, and she died in 1772. They had one child, Henry (b.1741), who died in infancy. The family are buried at St. James’, Westminster. He was succeeded by his nephew William Nassau. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick. He married Margaret Balmer (or Bulmer) in Hawick Parish in 1725. Their children included: Helen (b.1728); and Archibald (b.1729), who may be the weaver who married Janet Aitken. William in Peelbraehope (18th C.) recorded at the baptism of his children: Janet (b.1727); William (b.1729); and Helen (b.1731). William in Crumhaugh (18th C.). In 1726 he married Margaret Scott and their children included John (b.1727) and Christian (b.1729). William (1703–91) son of John in Dinlees, he was tenant at Park in Liddesdale. He is mentioned in 1730 as brother of John in Park. He married Miss Scott from Blackhall, probably Helen Scott (1702–74). Their children included: John in Bygate (1731–1808); Margaret (1736–1827), who married Archibald Armstrong in Sorbietrees; and Violet, who married George Dalgleish in Castleton. ‘Miss Vilette Elliot, Park’ subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. William of Bush (1705–79) 2nd surviving son of John. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Aitcheson, farmer at Eweslees. He inherited Binks from his brother Robert in 1754. He farmed at Arkelton for 20 years, as well as farming Bush and Binks. His children were: John; Henry, who married Jean Laidlaw from Gorrenberry; Christian (b.1738); Jean (b.1740); Robert (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1745). William (18th C.) younger son of William of Penchris and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlshope. He lived in Selkirk. He married Marion Elliot from Linslaw and their children included William, Robert and Mary (who married A. Muir in Whithaugh). William (18th C.) from Robertson Parish. He married Bessie Scott from Wilton in 1727. Their children included: Walter (b.1731), born at Whitfield, who is probably the Walter whose children were born at Alton and Wester Groundstone; and Agnes (b.1733), born at Groundstone. William (b.1706) eldest son of William of Borthwickbrae and Isobel Scott. He died at sea, but the details are not recorded. The farm was inherited by his brother John. William (1707/8–41) son of Robert and Jane ‘Ruan’, he was a merchant in Castleton. He died aged 33 and is buried at Teviothead. John, who married Hannah Grieve, may have been his brother. William (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He was tenant in ‘Hole’ (although it is unclear where this was). His children included William, John and Isobel. William of Tarras (1708/9–79) son of Henry of Lodgegill and Margaret Elliot of Midlem Mill. His father died in 1714 and his uncle John of Binks was appointed one of his curators. He succeeded to Lodgegill (or Black Tarras) in 1732. He rented Ginglenwells from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. He was involved in bonds with Capt. Robert Elliot for Fairnielees in 1761 and Blakeshope and Lodgegill in 1763. He was a great breeder of race-horses, and once raced an unknown horse in Newcastle, but was virtually ruined by betting debts when it fell near the post after he had backed it heavily. The financial problems during the American War meant he had to sell Blakeshope and Tarras to the Duke of Buccleuch, but he was allowed to lease Dinlees for a modest rent. In 1731 he married Jean Elliot (1709/10–74), daughter of William, Laird of Hardwood. Their children included: Henry (1731–90), tenant in Dinlees; Margaret, who married Mr. Haig; Janet, who died unmarried; John (1741–54); Jane (1742–61); William (b.1745), also tenant in Dinlees; and Jean, who married Mr. Crichton. He and his wife are buried at Castleton. William (1711–71) tenant in Braidlie on Hermitage. He was 3rd son of William in Whithaugh and Isobel Scott. He died unmarried and was buried at Unthank, where the stone stated that he died aged 50. However, a family pedigree also suggests he was born in 1694. William (b.1710) son of Walter in Brugh. He was a cooper (in London according to some sources, but that is surely a transcription error, since his entire family were born and lived locally). He married Hahah (or Anna) Scott and their children, born in Castleton Parish, were: Elizabeth (b.1755), who married Robert Mathieson from Castleton; Helen (b.1757); Agnes (b.1759), who married William Elliot from Selkirk; Ann (b.1760); James (b.1762); William (b.1764); and John (b.1767), also a cooper. Margaret, who married Thomas Elliot from Hawick, was probably also his daughter. William of Whithaugh (c.1723–76) eldest son of John of Whithaugh. He is probably the William ‘of Whitehaugh’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761, with William ‘junior’ perhaps being his son. He firstly married Margaret Shortreed (c.1735–88) from Essenside (perhaps daughter of Robert) and secondly married Elizabeth Elliot, probably sister of the Laird of Wolfelee; she may be the ‘Betty Elliot of Whithaugh’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1798. His children were: Elizabeth (1754–1815), who married Robert Weir from near Canonbie; Margaret (c.1755–1837), who lived in Kirkcaldy and made a family pedigree in about 1790; Jean (c.1757–1839), who married James Bogle from Kirkcaldy; John (1759–1847), who married Jean Elliot of Binks; Robert (1761–1840), Captain of ‘the Hope’, who married Alison Gregg; William, (1762–1843), W.S., J.P., lived in Hawick; Isobel (1765–1808); Thomas (b.1766) doctor in Carlisle; and James (1769–1824), who was a merchant in Hawick. He is said to have died aged 59, but this seems unlikely given the ages of his parents and siblings. William (18th C.) farmer at Whithaugh in Wilton Parish. In 1756 he married Isabel Jackson and their children included Agnes (b.1757), ‘Ketty’ (b.1759), Helen (b.1761), John (b.1763) and William (b.1766). William (18th C.) shepherd at Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. His children included Henry (b.1741), Jean (b.1743) and William (b.1751). Probably the same William was shepherd at ‘Hawkcleughlongels’ (which seems likely to be Hawklawtongues) in Hobkirk Parish, having children Jean (b.1745), William (b.1747), Walter (b.1752) and Janet (b.1755). William (18th C.) resident at Southdeanrig in Cavers Parish. His children included: William (b.1743); Robert (b.1746), possibly the tenant farmer in Powisholm; William (again, b.1748); Janet (b.1750); and Helen (b.1753). William (18th C.) shepherd at the Flex. His wife was Janet Gledstains and their son James was born in 1743. William (18th C.) in Toon-o-Rule. He had a daughter Isobel born in 1748. William (1722/3–1806) described as ‘porterion in Lanton Mains’ on a tombstone at old Abbotsrule Kirk. He must have had a close connection with the Abbotsrule area. He may also have been tenant at Knowesouth, recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He married Jean Henderson in Bedrule Parish in 1759, and she died in 1807, aged 79. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Mabel (b.1762); Janet (b.1764); Jean (b.1768); Robert (b.1769), also farmer at Lanton Mains; and William (b.1772). 3 of his children died in infancy. He was probably brother of George, tenant in Doorpool. William Nassau of Brugh (1736–75) only son of John, who was 2nd son of William of Brugh and Wells (‘the Laceman’). In 1764 he was served heir to his uncle Col. William of Wells, and took the additional name of his aunt’s family, Nassau. Also in 1764 he married Martha Tryphena Louisa, daughter of Sir Nathaniel Meade; she died in 1796. Her name was given to a wood on the Wells estate, ‘Mead’s Grove Plantation’. Their only son William, who succeeded, was an M.P. He may have earlier married Mary Scawen of Reigate. In 1775 he purchased West Lees, extending the Wells estate. But he died a few months later at his lodgings in Bath. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Marion or Mary Laidlaw and their children included Adam (b.1750), Henry (b.1753) and Mary (b.1761). Dr. William (18th C.) physician in Jedburgh. He is recorded as licenancer of Dryden and part of Headshaw in 1788. Dryden was then valued at £290 and his part of Headshaw at £116 19s 6d. He was among a group of men to whom Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto granted lifierent of part of his lands in order to add them to the Roxburghshire voters’ roll. He may have been related to the Elliots of Minto, William (18th C.) farmer at Nether Stanegarthside, probably son of Thomas. He married Mary (or Marion) Pattison, who died in 1794. Their children included: John (b.1761); Robert (1784–1813); Margaret (1769–1846); an unnamed child (b.1772); and Mary (b.1780). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Dolly, who married Andrew Pattison in Nether Stanegarthside, and died in 1763, aged 64, was probably related to him. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. Probably the same William was father of Gideon (b.1767) and John (b.1777). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, perhaps tenant in ‘Sandridgeshiells’. In 1746 he married Margaret Elliot and they had a daughter Margaret in 1755. William (18th C.) recorded at Cavers in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. William (1723–97) son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He farmed at Winnington Rig and neighbouring farms. He and his father Robert were witnesses for a baptism for William Grieve (farmer in Southfield) and his sister Mary in 1764. He may be the William who was joint possessor (along with Robert Potts) of the farm of Turn in 1779. He was recorded as farmer at ‘Winnington’ on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls and ‘Winningtonridge’ in 1786, continuing there until 1797 when he farmed at ‘Winningtonrigg & c.’ and owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for having 4 non-working dogs at Winningtonrig in 1797. He married Margaret Anderson and she died in 1845, aged 90. Their children were all baptised in Kirkton Parish. Their sons were:

Robert (1790–1872), tenant at Teindside; James (b.1791), who died in infancy; and William (1796–1842), tenant at Mangerton. Their daughters probably included: Christian (1786–1880), who married Walter John Grieve, farmer in Southfield; Margaret (b.1788), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1793–1809); and Mary (1795–1837). His will is registered with Peebles Commissary Court in 1798. William (18th C.) tenant farmer at Templehall in Rulewater, recorded in 1751 when the lands were sold. His son William, younger, was also mentioned. His daughter Elizabeth was born in 1750. William (18th C.) Hawick baker, son of Henry in Riccarton and Isobel Elliot. He is probably the William listed as Bailie during the 1760s to 1780s. He is recorded as ‘baxter’ in 1763. He is probably the baker who witnessed a baptism for James Buckham in 1756 and they had a son John (b.1760). It also seems likely that he was father of John, (b.1762); Henry (b.1764); and Margaret (b.1770). Their children included: Robert (b.1758), possibly the cattle dealer in Newcastle; Thomas (b.1761); George (b.1762); Henry (b.1764); and Margaret (b.1770). It also seems likely that he was father of John, labourer around Wauchope. He died in Newcastle and his wife died at Roan. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Betty Wilson in 1756 and they had a son John (b.1760). He witnessed a baptism for James Buckham in 1764. William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: John (b.1760); and Helen (b.1761). He is probably the William who married Christian Oliver in Southdean in 1758.

William of Arkleton (1735–91) eldest surviving son of Adam and Christina Elliot, he was baptised in Ewes Parish. He succeeded when quite young, and in 1744 had tutors appointed, including Andrew, younger son of William of Thorsliehope. However, the estate was probably heavily encumbered when he succeeded. He became a doctor in Jedburgh, where his children were born. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He paid tax in Jedburgh for having a male servant in the period 1778–85 and a female servant in 1785, as well as the Horse Tax in Jedburgh from 1785. He is probably the Dr. William of Jedburgh who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He may also be the William of Arkleton who was as a voter in Dumfrieshire in the same year. He inherited Thorsliehope through his wife, but sold it to James Jardine, tenant of Arkleton. He firstly married Marie, a sister of Dr. Lindsay, then secondly married Cassandra, daughter of Robert Elliot of Overton, co-heiress of Thorsliehope. His children were: Adam (1774–97), Lieutenant in the 72nd Regiment of Foot, who died unmarried; Robert (1775–1810), Major with the 5th Bombay Native Infantry, who died at sea; William (b.1777), army surgeon, who died unmarried while serving in the West Indies; Margaret (‘Peggy’, 1779–1816), who married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott of Southdean; John (b.1781); and Gilbert (b.1784). His son Robert succeeded when he returned home in 1803 and his daughter Margaret succeeded in 1810. William (18th C.) farmer at Burnhead and Appletreethall. His wife was Helen Hume and their children included Janet (b.1770), Margaret (b.1773) and Jean (b.1775). William (18th C.) resident of Chisholme in the Borthwick valley. His daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1773. Other children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Alexander (b.1754), William (b.1754), Janet (b.1758), William (b.1764), Walter (b.1766) and Margaret (b.1767). William (18th C.) son of Robert of Redheugh. In 1744 his father had a confirming charter for Redheugh, in which he was assigned the farm in fee. He was later tenant in Hillhouse. He was disinherited by his father in 1786, for reasons that are not recorded. He married Margaret Haliburton from Roughley in 1764. Their children included: William (b.1765), who was a doctor in Newcastle; Robert (b.1767), who was a lawyer in Kirkcaldy; John (b.1769), a merchant in London; Thomas (b.1771) in Hillhouse; and Margaret (b.1774), who married Castleton Schoolmaster Mr. Forsyth. William (c.1745–95) buried in Castleton Kirkyard. His wife was Elizabeth Oliver (c.1759–85) and they had a son James. He was probably related to Walter (1755–77), who died at Tweedenside. He himself died at ‘Dedburn’. William (d.bef. 1809) farmer at Myredykes. He was recorded as farmer at Myredykes and other farms on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. His only daughter, Helen, married James Oliver (farmer at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot) in 1797. His wife’s death is recorded in Hawick Parish in 1809. Bailie William (d.1795) merchant in Hawick, whose death is recorded. He was Bailie during the 1770s and 80s. It is unclear if he was the same as the baker who was also Magistrate around the same time. He witnessed a baptism for George Turnbull and Isobel Hardie in 1777. William (c.1740–96) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Crozier (c.1740–82). Their children included: Marion (b.1761); Janet (1765–1838); James (b.1770); and James (again, b.1772). He died at ‘Pigeonhole’ and is buried in Castleton Kirkyard. William of Brugh (c.1740–1817) eldest son of Capt. John and Jean Grieve. He was a grandson of Gilbert, who farmed at Winnenthingrig, and was descended from the Elliots of Brugh. He is said to have been born in Belgium (presumably where his father was serving), although his siblings were all christened locally. He was given a commission in the Army in 1758, was appointed Cornet in the Inniskilling Dragoons in 1761 and was appointed A.D.C. to Gen. Johnstone (who commanded the forces in Ireland) in 1766, holding that post until 1780, but being transferred to the 11th Dragoons in 1779. He was also Commissary General of Stores for the Army in Ireland. Shortly after being married in 1780 he left the Army and entered the Church. He became Rector of Trim, as well as being Chaplain to Bishop Ossory and also a regimental chaplain. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Nicolas FitzGerald, from Turlough, County Mayo. Their children were John (who died as a young man), Eliza (who married John Mockler from County Meath), Harriet (who married Capt. Elliott Seward, godson of Lord Heathfield), Lt. Col. William (d.1845) and Gilbert (who served in the Army and was Governor of the Island of Paxos). He died in Cheltenham and was buried in St. Mary’s Churchyard there. Maj.-Gen. William (1741–1803) only son of Gilbert of Larriston, who was the direct heir of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston. His mother was Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. His father died when he was quite young. He is said to have worked for a while as a tailor’s apprentice at Bowanhill (Teviothead), perhaps spent a year at Skelfhill, then entered the service of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs as a stable boy. Being recognised as the head of the clan, Sir Gilbert had him educated and arranged for him to go out as a cadet in the East India Company Artillery in 1761. By 1763 (or perhaps 1764) he obtained a commission and was rapidly promoted, becoming a Lieut.-Col. in 1782. It is said that he distinguished himself in the Carnatic, where he commanded artillery under Sir Eyre Coote. He made a small fortune in the East India Company and was able to resign in 1785, to return home. He repurchased the lands of Larriston (including Nether and Over Larriston and Blackhope) from William Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1786, and added Larriston Rig and (also called Haggiehaugh) in 1790. His lands of Larriston were valued at £834 in 1788. He is recorded at Haggiehaugh on the both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls (when he was a Colonel) and in the same year when taxed for having a male servant. He was also a Deputy-Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire. He tried to establish his claim to be head of the clan through court proceedings in Jedburgh (presided over by the Sheriff, the same Oliver of Dinlabyre), being formally served heir to his grandfather Robert of Larriston in 1788, and matriculating arms in 1793. Perhaps country life was too quiet for him, because he resumed his commission with the East India Company by 1788. However, it seems unlikely that he returned to India, and may have worked for the company in England, rising to the rank of Major General. He died unmarried and named George Fraser Scott (a son of his cousin) as his heir. A memorial to him in Littleham Church, Exmouth misspells his appellation ‘of Larrinton’. He is probably the William from Castleton whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1803. William (1744/5–93) farm worker who lived at Deeburn in the Hermitage valley. His children included Elizabeth (b.c.1770). William (1745–1807) son of William, who farmed at Tarraus and Lodgegill. He was tenant in Dinlees on Hermitage Water. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is recorded at Dinlees on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–89 and 1794. He was taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Agnes Amos (c.1753–1842) from Langholm. Their children included: Margaret (b.1781); William (b.1790), who also farmed at Dinlees; and Henry (b.1792) in Colterscleuch. William (1753–1821) son of Robert and Janet Wilson. He was born in Eves Parish. He married Jean Davidson (1751–1827) from Canonbie and their children were born in New Langholm. He could be the William listed at New Langholm on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Their children included: Margaret (b.1783); Robert (1785–1849); John (1785–1847), who became a minister in Peebles and married Janet Scott; William (1789–1822), who lived in England; Matthew (b.1791), who died young; Janet (b.1793); and Jane Beattie (b.1797), who died young. William ‘Willie’ (c.1750–1827) son of Robert in Hermitage and Janet Scott from Greenwood. He was tenant in Miliburnholm. He was the farmer there when Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed visited on their tour around Liddesdale; it seems likely that Scott took some of the qualities of ‘Dandie Dinmont’ from him. The meeting is described in detail by Scott. He is probably the farmer at Millburnholm who is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1786–1797 and also on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. In 1787 in Hawick he married Elizabeth Laidlaw from Falnash, who died in 1822, aged 72. Their children were: Jean (b.1792); and Robert (1793–1858), who married Mary Scott from Skelfhill and died in Toftholm. One source states he was born in 1759. William (1761–c.1835) son of Rev. Thomas of Kirkton and Cavers. He was an architect in Kelso and may have been the William who became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1775. He built the Teviot Bridge near Kelso 1794–95 (probably to designs by Alexander Stevens). He also designed the extension to the old Wilton Kirk, which was built in 1801. Langholm Town Hall and the houses at Chesters and Crailing were his work, as were renovations at Yair and Drumlanrig Castle. He married Jean Robertson in 1791 and their children included: Esther (b.1792), who married Charles Scott of Knowesouth; Thomas (b.1793), who died in infancy; John (b.1795), W.S. in Hawick and Jedburgh, who married Janet Usher; William (b.1797), surgeon in London; Ann (b.1799) who married Kelso ironmonger Thomas Sibbald; Jean (b.1799); another Thomas (b.1802); Alexander (b.1804); Robert (b.1807); and Walter (b.1810), who carried on the architect’s business in Kelso. William Nassau of Brugh and Wells (1766–1818) only son of William Nassau of Brugh and Wells, whom he succeeded in 1775. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having ‘a good estate’ and supporting Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1778 and 1779 in Hobkirk Parish he was taxed for having 3 male servants. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of the lands of Wells and West Lees (in Hobkirk Parish) and Huntknow (listed in Bedrule Parish), as well as Ormiston (in Eckford Parish) and Hadden (in Sprouston Parish). He was also taxed for having a male servant at Wells in 1794 and 1797 (along with Gilbert Elliott, who was serving as his factor there). Already owner of the Wells estate (which had been erected into a barony by his grandfather), in 1801 he purchased the adjacent Barony of Bedrule from the Kerrs of Cavers Carre. This included the lands of Bedrule, Fulton, Dunhill, Dunionshank, Bedrule Mill, Gourlaybog and Poinderhaugh. He became an M.P., for Portarlington 1801–02 and for Peterborough in 1802–18. He was Chief Secretary for Ireland and was a member of the Privy Council. In Westminster he was called ‘the Spectre of the Castle’, because he was so thin; however, he was said to be well regarded by his contemporaries. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (when already deceased). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was also recorded as owner of Wells and West Lees, as well as the Barony of Hadden, on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He died unmarried at Minto House. He had named his relative Lord Heathfield (or his son) as his successor to the Wells estate, but outlived them both, so succession fell to Sir William Elliott of Stobs as heir of the line. He left his portrait, plate and library to Lord Minto. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1818. William (1762–88) son of John and Hannah Grieve. He was a surgeon, who died at Cape Coast Castle in Africa. He is mentioned on the family’s gravestone in Castleton cemetery. William (1762–1843), W.S., J.P., younger son of William of Whithaugh (descended from Elliot of Mosspecble) and Elizabeth Elliot (probably sister to the Laird of Wolfelee). He was a writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick, where he was also a Justice of the Peace, and he lived in Newcastle on in later life (probably from about 1820). It is also possible he was the writer in Edinburgh who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was ‘Writer in Hawick’ in 1789 when he paid tax for having a female servant. He also paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1791–94. He drew up a pedigree of the Eliotts in about 1790 (and made a formal deposition of the document in 1841, when he was living in Newcastle); this was said to be quite accurate back to the time of his great-grandfather's generation, but incorrect before that. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the writer in Castleton who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and may be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is described as ‘Writer Ind.’ living in the house of joiner John Cavers in Newcastleton at the time of the 1841 census. He seems to have died without issue. William in Orchard see William Elliot Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1797 he married Janet Gordon from Hawick Parish. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: William (b.1796); and Frear (b.1798). William (1765–1851) eldest son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton, he was born in Castleton Parish. He may be the William of Liddesdale who studied at Edinburgh University 1784/5. He received a surgeon mate’s diploma from the Royal College of Surgeons in Edinburgh in 1794. He was a doctor in Newcastle. In 1808 he received an M.D. from St. Andrews University. He married Jane Grieve, from Newburn. Maj. William (1766–1802) eldest son of Cornelius the 2nd Laird of Wolfelee. He was a Major in the 1st Madras Cavalry and died in Vellore (southern India). His portrait (in a red hunting coat) was painted by Raeburn. Wolfelee was inherited by his younger brother James. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dykecroft, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (d.1816) Town Herd of Hawick. He is ‘late Town Herd Hawick’ in the record of his death. It is possible he was the man recorded at Whitchesters in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitchesters in 1797, when he paid tax on 2 non-working dogs. William 5th Laird of Harwood (1766–1835) son of ‘Captain’ Robert and Elizabeth Pringle of Clifton. He succeeded his uncle Henry, who had considerably improved the estate. Gideon Pott, farmer at Penchrise, was appointed to clear his debts before he succeeded to the estate. Shortly afterwards he joined the recently formed Roxburgh Fencible Dragoons. He was promoted to Major and served under his distant relation Lt.-Col. William Elliot (later Elliot-Lockhart) of Borthwickbrae, repelling the French from Killala Bay in Ireland in 1798. It was claimed that his men were guilty of killing a group of Irishmen who were hiding in a straw barn (this apparently told by a man from an Irish Cavalry regiment who visited Hawick a few years later, whose father and brothers were said to be among the dead). In 1788 his estate consisted of Harwood, Appotside, Fairnielees, Templehall and Kilnknowe, valued at £2143 2s. Also in 1788 he was mentioned as being about to be added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax in Wells in 1791 and Hundalee in 1792. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses at Borthwickbrae. In 1802 he was made Captain commandant of the western troop of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Volunteers). Every man of the troop assembled (in Jedburgh) at the False Alarm. He was commonly called ‘The Major’ locally. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1812. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1811 he was recorded on the Land Tax Rolls as owner of Harwood and Appotside, as well as Fairnielees, Templehall and Kilnknowe. In 1819, after troubles over the proposed Reform Act, he suggested forming his own troop of yeomanry to quell the riots, but the offer was declined. He lived for many years at Hundalee (where he paid tax for having a male servant in 1792–94 and the dog tax in 1797), where several of his children were born, and was also tenant at Stonedge. He then leased Weens from 1819 or 1820 for a few years, moving to Greenriver (Stonedge again in 1824) and then Mossburnford. He also had a house in Jedburgh. In 1834/5 he had a new house built at Harwood, but he died before moving into it. In 1804 he married Helen (or Eleanor, c.1783–1846), 2nd daughter of Maj. John Rutherford of Mossburnford. His children were: Robert Kerr (b.1805), who succeeded to Harwood; Eleanor (or ‘Ellen’, b.1806), who married John Paton of Crailing; and John (b.1809), who married Jane Jerdan of Bonjedward and farmed at Primrosehill. He was buried in Hobkir Kirkyard. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1838. William of Borthwickbrae, see William Elliot Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Wilson in 1791 and their children included Archibald (b.1792), Isabel (b.1794), Janet (b.1796) and Walter (b.1798). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Thorlieshope. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots connected with Thorlieshope. William (18th/19th C.) drover in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roan. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Isabel Jackson and their children included William (b.1801) and John (b.1803). They could be the William (aged 65) and Isabela (aged 70) living at Langhaugh in 1841 and recorded as labourer at Langhaugh in 1838-41. William (1770–1824) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Carruthers. He lived at Foulshiel and later Harts Autre in Castleton Parish. He was probably the ‘W. Elliot, Hartsgarth’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Jane Easton and their children included: James (b.1800); Robert (b.1802); George (b.1805); Thomas (b.1807); Ann (1810–92), who married Walter Armstrong; William (b.1812); Betty (b.1815); Walter (1818–99), died a bachelor; Walter (again, b.1819); and Jane (b.1822). He drowned in the Kershope Burn and is buried at Unthank. William (1771/2–1855) son of George, like his father he was tenant farmer at Doorpool in the Rule valley. He was a prominent member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. In 1812 he married Isabella Stephenson, who died in 1850, aged 65. Their children included: George (b.1813); Janet (b.1815); Richard (1817–91); William (1819–91); and John (1823–1910), who married Agnes Stevenson Rutherford. His sons Richard, William and John were tenants in Hartwoodmyres for about 50 years. He died at Hartwoodmyres. The family were recorded on a memorial stone at old Abbotrule Kirk. William (c.1778–1843) from Hawick. He married Agnes ‘Bone’ and they had a son William (c.1800–78), who married Jane Oliver. In about 1833 he emigrated to Canada, settling in Halton, Ontario. William (c.1780–1824) from Castleton Parish, he lived at Gillside. His wife was Mary Murray and their children included: Mary (b.1803); Nelly (b.1811); Betty (b.1815); Christian (b.1818); Eppy (b.1821); and Isabel (b.1824). William (b.1780) son of Walter, who farmed at Henderson’s Knowe, he was a miller in Hawick Parish. In 1816 he emigrated with his family to Smith’s Falls, Lanark County, Ontario. In 1802 he married Margaret Scott. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1802); Janet (b.1804); William (b.1806); Adam Scott (1807/8–99), who died in Ontario: Walter; James; Margaret; Janet; John; and Ellen. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1800); James (b.1802), probably the grocer in Denholm; Nelly (b.1804); and Betty (b.1806). William (b.1790) son of William, tenant at Dinlees. He was farmer at Dinlees on Hermitage Water, like his father. His children included William, Jessie, Helen and Margaret. He is probably the ‘W. Elliot, Dinlee’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (c.1790–1853) labourer in Castleton. In 1841 he was at Little Whithaugh with his wife’s mother, Jenny Crozier also living with them. In 1851 he was a widower and farm servant at Whithaughburn. He is listed as a farm servant at Whithaughburn in 1835. William (18th/19th C.) labourer listed at ‘North Gunholm’ (perhaps meant for Greenholm) among male heads of households in 1835. He married Jean Oliver (c.1792–1847). Their children included: Agnes (b.1813); Betty (b.1815); John (b.1817); Jean (b.1819); James (b.1822); George (b.1825); Gideon (b.1828); William Keir (b.1830); and Helen (b.1832). He died at Whithaughburn. William (1789/90–1869) boot and shoe maker in Newcastleton. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He probably lived at 6 Whitchester Stret. In the 1841 census he is listed with his wife Christian and children Betty, John (also a shoemaker), Ann, Christian and James. His cousin Robert Murray (‘Formerly Teacher’) was living with him in 1851. He married Christian Elliot (1797/8–1846) and their children included: Betty (b.1819); William (b.1821); Helen (b.1823); John (b.1825); Isabel (b.1827); and Anne (b.1829). He may have been son of cooper John and Betty Crozier, who was born in 1790. William of Brugh (1789/90–1845) eldest surviving son of William, Rector of Trim, and descended from the Eliotts of Brugh and farmers of Southfield. In 1818 he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh on the death of William of Wells. He became a Lt.-Col. in the Royal Canadian Rifles. He served in the Peninsula Wars and commanded the Niagara frontier, where he died, and where there is a memorial to him in St. Mark’s Church. In 1829 he married Mary Ann Charlotte Moore, daughter of Capt. Moore of the Royal Marines. Their children were: Rev. William, Prebendary of Hereford; and Capt. Henry Sheridan (d.1867). William (1792–1811) youngest son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was 3rd Lieutenant on the H.M.S Fox and died returning from Bengal. William (1794/5–1866) shepherd in Castleton. In 1861

he was on Langholm Street. He married Isabella Armstrong, from Nichol Forest, Cumberland, and she died in 1870, aged 75. Their children included: Walter (1820/1-40); Robert (1825/6-74); Violet; and Agnes (1836/7-90). William (b.1794/5) mason in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was living at Whitecleuchside and in 1851 was at Woodfoot (probably Cleuchfoot). His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Isabella, Francis and William. Perhaps the same William was a widowed dyke builder living at Myrselawgreen with his daughter Jane in 1861. William (b.1795/6) from Selkirk, he was ‘Tacksman, Toll-bar’ at Mackside Toll in 1861. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included James, George and William. William (1796–1842) younger son of William, farmer at Winningtonrig. He farmed at Mangerton and died unmarried. William (1796–1838) son of John and Jean Scott. He was farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish, like his father before him. He was one of the Tory supporters who became a victim during the ‘Tully’s Mill’ mobbings at the 1837 election. William (1797–1869) younger son of William, architect in Kelso and grandson of Rev. Thomas of Cavers. His brother John was a lawyer in Hawick. He was born in Kelso and became a surgeon in London. He married Sarah Georgina Miller and they had 14 children. William (b.c.1800) son of John, labourer at Wauchope Gardens. His children were born at Sauthtree in Castleton Parish, although he was living at Wauchope Cottages in 1841 and Tythehouse in 1851 and 1861. He was Farm Steward at Tythehouse in 1861. He married Margaret Murray (who died before 1851) and their children included: Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1822); John (b.1823); Margaret (b.1824); Thomas (b.1826); James (b.1828); Scott (b.1830); Anne (b.1832); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Peter Cairns. William (1801–64) hosiery manufacturer who founded William Elliot & Sons in 1823. He was son of James of Goldielands and brother of Dr. Adam and of Margaret, who married John Wilson, ‘the Dip’. He served his time as a stockie-maker, then built up his own business in Slitrig Crescent (around No. 6). His business is listed as a hosiery manufacturers on the Crescent in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1851, essentially as an extension of his nearby factory he built Tower Mill over the Slitrig and paid for a new bridge (now part of the Kirkstile) to be built in place of the Auld Brig (which was demolished, with the approval of the Town Council and Roads Trustees). As a result he obtained possession of the stone from the demolition of the Auld Brig, some of which found its way into other buildings. He was one of the Orrock Trustees. He was also a Town Councillor from 1861, and his portrait hangs in the Museum. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He lived on the Crescent. It was said that the citizens of Hawick, keen to hear about the future fortunes of the hosiery industry, looked forward more to his speech at the New Year’s factory festival than they did to the throne speech! He is also supposed to have said that he preferred hosiery because ‘though it was not so profitable, it gave most employment in proportion to the capital invested’. He was probably the William whose heirs are recorded in about 1874 owning part of the ‘particrate lands’ once owned by shoemaker Robert Oliver. He married Isabella Scott (b.c.1806) in 1836. Their children included: Jane Carfin (b.1836); Agnes (b.1838); James (b.1840); William Scott (b.1843); and Adam (b.1844). His 2 sons carried on the firm of Elliot’s. He died at the old family home of Goldielands. William (b.c.1802) son of Robert, tenant in Powisholm. He farmed at Harden in Castleton Parish. He married Jean Pattison (b.c.1811). Their children included: Robert (b.1839); and William (b.1843). William (19th C.) blacksmith and leader of the Jedburgh drum and fife band. He walked to Hawick in 1832 after the Reform Bill was defeated in the House of Lords, calling on Hawick men to follow him to London to overthrow the Lords, a threat he was talked out of. He later left Jedburgh, then emigrated to America, where he set up the Elliot Frog and Switch Company in St. Louis, which helped build the U.S. railroads. William (19th C.) from Hawick, he is recorded as winner of the ‘standing high leap’ at the 1834 Common Riding Games. He may be the same as one of the contemporay Williams. William Scott see William Scott-Elliot. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1861 he was farming more than 6000 acres. He lived with his sisters Ann Jane and Christian. William (1812–c.78) raised by William and Jane Easton, he appears to have actually been the illegitimate son of William’s younger brother Thomas (i.e. the man whom he would have called uncle) with Isobel Aitchison (who may have died in childbirth). He was shepherd at Scotch Kershope in at least 1841–1861. In 1841 he married Christian Crozier (1806–77). Their children included: John (1842–79), died at Whithaugh Mill; William (b.1844); Walter Nichol Elliot (1846–82), died at Millburn; and James (1848–1928), farmer. William (1814–67) son of Robert and Janet Black. He was a joiner on the Loan. He was listed as a joiner at about 2 Loan in 1851 and as ‘House Proprietor’ at 2 Loan on the 1861 census. He married Helen Smith, and their children included: Robert (1851–1930), who married Isabella Mitchell; Helen T. (b.1852), who lived in Liverpool; Peter Smith (1854–1915), who married Jane Drinnan; Janet B. (1855–1933), who married Alfred Hannah; Elizabeth (1857–1934); William R. (1859–1934), who was a teacher; and Martha (1863–1945), also lived in Liverpool. His younger brother John Scott Elliot was Cornet.

William (1817–98) son of Henry in Colterscleuch and Dinlees. He was tenant in Colterscleuch. He was helping his father with the farm according to the 1851 and 1861 censuses. William (b.1817/8) son of Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Arkleton in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Jane, Esther and Henry. William (b.c.1819) agricultural labourer, born in Castleton. In 1851 he was a cattle-feeder at Ruletownhead in Southdean Parish and in 1861 was a ploughman at Broadhaugh in Teviothead Parish. He married Jemima Elliot and their children included Elizabeth (b.1852), Isabella (b.1854), John, Margaret and Matthew.

William (1819–91) son of William, tenant at Hartwoodmyres. He farmed at Hartwoodmyres along with his brothers Richard and John. He was recorded at Hartwoodmyres in 1868. William (1820–97) shepherd of the Ewes valley and elsewhere. He married Helen McVittie who was from Fiddleton, and secondly married Elizabeth Little. He died at Peelbraehope and was buried at Ewes Kirkyard. William (19th C.) recorded at ‘Road End’ near Newcastle on in 1868. This could perhaps be the same as Steeleroad-end. William (1828–91) son of Robert and Eleanor Davidson. His father was farmer at Millburn in Castleton Parish. In 1861 at Lochburnfoot near Teviothead he married Helen (1839–1920), daughter of James Miller and Euphemia Winthrop. At that time he was living at Fahnsh. In 1862 they emigrated to New Zealand, and he died at Nevis, Central Otago. Their children were Euphemia Winthrop, Helen Davidson, Jane, Isabella Douglas and Ann Jemima. Rev. William Hume ‘Hume’ (1837–1927) from Hawick, son of Thomas and Margaret Hume. He was brother of James, merchant in the Sandbed. He trained as a writer’s apprentice in Hawick. He went to Edinburgh University in 1859, and was minister at Haltwhistle in Northumberland. In 1874 he became minister of the St. Andrews Presbyterian (Dundee) Church in Ramsbottom, and served until his retirement in 1907. He wrote ‘The Country and Church of the Cheeryble Brothers’ (1893), and ‘Story of the Cheeryble’ Grants: from the Spey to the Irwell’ (1906), describing the real life counterparts of the Scotsmen used as inspiration for characters in Charles Dickens ‘Nicholas Nickleby’. He also wrote verse, for example ‘God and our Country’, about the Covenanters, as well as verse in both Scots and Lancashire dialects. He was a keen member of the Bury and District Burns Club as well as the Manchester Branch of the Dickens Club. He was said to have a ‘remarkable command of the Scotch language and Scotch dialect, and also of the Lancashire dialect’. He married a daughter of P.L. MacTaggart of Liverpool. He is buried in Wandsworth Cemetery, London.

William (19th C.) Hawick’s first cabman. His daughter Jessie married Alexander Kyle. William ‘Wullie o Gowdlands’ (or Goldielands) (19th C.) simple-minded soul who lived at Goldielands, and liked to dress up for special occasions, marching in front of the Saxhorn Band, the Volunteer Band, with the Cornet, etc. He was long remembered for one occasion when he arrived the night before a band event so as not to sleep in. William Claude 7th Laird of Harwood (1835–1922) eldest son of Robert Kerr. He succeeded to Harwood in 1873, with Clifton going to his brother Robert. He was born at Greenriver and baptised at Mossburnford. Educated at Cheltenham College, he entered the army in 1854 and soon became a Lieutenant in the 9th (Norfolk) Regiment. He was decorated in the Crimean War, but had retired from the army after only about 2 years. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was a keen hunter and also proficient in boxing. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of the farms of Harwood, Appotside and others. In 1876 he married Bertha Eliza, daughter of William Charles Blackman of Southsea, and she died in 1895. After his marriage in 1876 he lived mainly in Wales, seldom visiting Harwood, which was let out for the hunting season. He had no children and was succeeded by his nephew Thomas. William (b.1838/9) born in Castleton Parish, he was a cattleman, living at Adderstone Shiel Cottages in 1901. His wife was Christina and their children included ploughman James. Col. William Scott (1841–aft. 1919) son of William Scott, with whom he is easily confused, his mother being Isabella Scott. He had brothers Adam of Caverton and James of Mosstower. He ran the factory at Tower Mill and lived at Teviot Lodge. Some time before 1900 he installed electric lighting at his house at Teviot Lodge, using wires running from his factory at Tower Mill. In 1859 he (or perhaps his father) instigated setting up a company of Hawick Volunteers, and he eventually became Colonel of the Battalion. In 1874 he won a shooting competition between Volunteers from around Scotland. He was later Major and Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel of the Battalion’s successors, the Border Rifles, serving until 1891. He was also a keen meteorologist, and regularly sent his readings to G.J. Symons who published British Rainfall readings. He donated fossil shells to the Museum. In 1919 he retired from the firm of William Elliot & Sons, and passed ownership to his son, who was also William Scott. He married Margaret Cadenhead, daughter of Dr. George William Thompson. He secondly married Elizabeth MacNee. His second daughter was Isabella. His youngest daughter Margaret (b.1879) married manufacturer William Boyd Sime. Teviot Lodge was gifted to the High School by his daughters in 1933. William (1830/1–1903) eldest son of Lt.-Col. William, he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh in 1845. He was educated at Cambridge and trained as a minister, becoming Prebendary of Hereford Cathedral and Rural Dean of Hereford. He married Anne Louise Bennett in 1829 and their children were Col. William (who wrote ‘The Elliots of Brugh and Wells’) and Gilbert John. He wrote a study of Ecclesiastical Dilapidations. Lt.-Col. William Fitzwilliam Elliot (1849–1928) 4th son of the 3rd Earl of Minto. He served with Princess Louise’s Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. In 1880 he married Elizabeth Fanny, daughter of John Rutherford of Teviot Lodge. He wrote a study of Ecclesiastical Dilapidations. Lt.-Col. William, he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh and Wells’. In 1890 he married Mary Frances (d.1919), daughter and co-heiress of Arthur B. Warre of Westfield House, Ramsgate. Their only child was Allison Mary, who married her cousin Lt.-Col. George Augustus Elliot of the Royal Irish Regiment. Sir William of Brugh (1896–1971) born in Wormit, Fife, elder son of Gilbert John of Brugh, he became head of the Elliots of Brugh. He joined the army in 1915, becoming a pilot in 1918 and was shot down and rescued in Russia in 1919. He rose to become Air Chief Marshal and Chief Staff Officer to the Minister of Defence, also receiving a knighthood. He married Elizabeth Rosemary Alice Chancellor and their children were Louise Elizabeth Rosemary and Simon John. Willot (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Along with Roland and some Armstrongs, Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for bringing them to the area to attack the tenants of Whitemuir. They are described as ‘traitors of Leven’, but are as likely to have been from Liddesdale as England. Lauder’s crimes also included resetting Elliots, Armstrongs, Fos- ters and others who were traitors; this makes it seem likely he and Roland were already declared as rebels before this time. His name is recorded as ‘Willot elwald’, but this is odd, since ‘Willot’ was sometimes a variant of ‘Elliot’. Zandra see Alexandra (also formerly spelled ‘Elot’ and per- mutations including ‘Ellat’, ‘Ellet’, ‘Ellott’, ‘El- liott’, ‘Ellot’, ‘Ellotte’, ‘Ellott’, ‘Elliot’, etc., as well as variants such as ‘Ellwald’, ‘Ellwand’, ‘Eluan’, ‘Elwalde’, ‘Elwode’, ‘Elwole’, ‘Elwood’, ‘Eluat’, ‘Ilwand’ and even ‘Willat’; see also Elliot and Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound). Ellioti (e-lee-o-tee) n. specific name for several species found on or around the Indian subconti- nent, which were first described by Sir Walter Ell- iot of Wolfelee. Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound (e-lee-i'-mu-ri-kin-in-mund) n. Arthur Ralph Douglas (1846–1923) son of William Hugh and brother of Gilbert John, the 4th Earl of Minto. He was editor of the Edinburgh Review and Liberal M.P. for Roxburghshire 1880–92. In 1880 he defeated Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas by only 10 votes. He also defeated Charles Barrington Balfour of Newton-Don in 1885 and Mark Francis Napier in 1886, when he had become a Unionist. However, he lost in the rematch of 1892, although he returned as an M.P. for Durham 1898–1906. He was Financial Secretary to the Treasury 1903–06. In 1888 he married Harriet Dagmar Ryan and they had 2 children, Robert Douglas (who died young) and Capt. Hubert William Arthur (of the Wiltshire Regiment). Emma Eleanor Elizabeth nee Hislop (1824–82) daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Hislop and wife of the 3rd Earl of Minto. She wrote several works relating to family history, including ‘A Memoir of the Right Hon. Hugh Elliot’ (1868), ‘Life and Letters of Sir Gilbert Elliot, first Earl of Minto’ (1874), ‘Lord Minto in India’ (1880) and ‘Border Sketches’ (1870). George Francis Stewart (1822–1901) son of Gilbert, the 2nd Earl of Minto. He wrote ‘The Border Elliots and the Family of Minto’ (1897) as well as some other works. He was a local M.P., and was given a celebratory dinner in the Exchange Hall in 1868. He died unmarried. Gilbert (1782–1859) 5th Baronet and 2nd Earl of Minto, born in Lyons. He was son of Gilbert the 1st Earl, who had adopted the extra surname after inheriting titles through marriage. Educated at Edinburgh University and Cambridge. He was Captain of the Roxburgh Militia 1802–05, and later (from about 1808) Lt.-Col. Commandant of the 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia. He became M.P. for Ashburton in Devonshire, and then for Roxburghshire from 1812 (following a long family tradition), defeating Alexander Don by 6 (or perhaps 7) votes. He was only M.P. until 1814, when he succeeded as Earl, taking up his seat in the House of Lords. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was an early member of the Jedforest Club, but resigned in 1834 following a dispute over politics. It was suggested that he intervened during the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ of 1822/3. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1825 and subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in that year. He was ambassador to Berlin 1832–34, First Lord of the Admiralty 1835–41, and Lord Privy Seal 1846–52. It is said that while he was in charge of the Admiralty there was a complaint raised about the number of Elliots who held positions in the Navy. He was also Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and a member of the Royal Society. He retired to Minto House in 1852. In 1860 he married Mary, daughter of Patrick Brydone (traveller and author) of Lennel House near Coldstream, and she died in 1853. They had 10 children: Mary Elizabeth (d.1874), who married Baron Dunfermline; Francis Anna Maria (d.1898), who married Lord John Russell; Elisabeth Amelia Jane (d.1892), who married Frederick Romily; Charlotte Mary (d.1890), who married Melville Portal; Harriet Anne Gertrude (d.1855); William Hugh (1814–91), who became 3rd Earl; Adm. Sir Charles Gilbert John Brydone (1810–95), who married Louisa Blackett and Henrietta Emily Liddell; George Francis Stewart, who was also Roxburghshire M.P.; Lt.-Col. Gilbert, who married Katherine Anne Gilbert; and Sir Henry George (1817–1907), who married Anne Antrobus. Gilbert John (1845–1914) 4th Earl of Minto, eldest son of William Hugh. He was educated at Eton and Cambridge. He was known as an allround sportsman in his youth, excelling on horseback, at rowing, shooting and angling. He rode in the Grand National 5 times (breaking his neck in 1876) and won the Streeplechase de Paris in 1874. He was newspaper correspondent in a number of wars and an officer in others (serving in the Scots Guards), this taking him to various parts of Europe, Asia and Africa. He was Commandant of the Border mounted volunteers. He first went out to Canada in 1883 as military secretary to the Governor-General, and there helped suppress the rebellion led by Louis Riel, being present at the battle of Fish Creek. Back in Scotland, in 1889 he became Brigadier-General of the Scottish Border Volunteer Brigade. In 1891 he succeeded to the Earldom of Minto, before which he had the title of Viscount Melgund. He became Governor-General of Canada in 1898, serving until 1904 and then was Viceroy of India (1905–1910), being jointly responsible for the Morley-Minto reforms of 1909. He returned to Scotland in 1910, but did not long enjoy his retirement. In Hawick he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1898, following his appointment as Governor-General of Canada, and Minto Place was named after him. In 1883 he grooves-toothed mouse; Leopardus, leopard; Per-nis, honey buzzard; Platydoris, sea slug; Symr-mus, pheasant; and Tupaia or Anathana, tree-shrew (also spelled ‘Elliotti’ and ‘Elliottii’). married Mary Caroline, daughter of Gen. Charles Grey. They had 5 children: Eileen Nina Evelyn Sibell (1884–1938), who married Lord Francis George Montagu-Douglas-Scott, 6th son of the Duke of Buccleuch; Ruby Florence Mary (1886–1961), who married the 2nd Earl Cromer; Violet Mary (1889–1965) who firstly married Lord Charles George Francis Mercer Nairne and secondly became Lady Astor; Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet (1891–1975), who succeeded; and Gavin William Esmond (1895–1917), who was killed at Flanders. Photographs of him show a fine handle-bar moustache. He died at Minto House and was buried there. Many streets, schools, parks and towns (particularly in Canada and India) were named after him. Sir Gilbert Edward George Lariston, O.B.E., J.P. (1928–2005) 6th Earl of Minto, succeeding his father in 1975. He was baptised in S.S. Mary & David in Hawick. Educated at Eton and Sandhurst, he was commissioned into the Scots Guards and served as aide-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief in the Far East and then Cyprus. He returned to run the farm at Minto, and played an active part in local affairs. He was elected to the Borders Regional Council, serving 1974–80 and 1980–96, being Convenor for the period 1990–96. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire from 1961 and was Depute Lieutenant for Roxburgh, Ettrick and Lauderdale. He was called ‘Gibbie’ by his friends, the same nickname used generations earlier in his family. He was a Brigadier in the Royal Company of Archers, the Queen’s bodyguard in Scotland. He served on several national committees, including being President of the South Scotland Chamber of Commerce, and was awarded the O.B.E. in 1986. In 1952 he married Lady Caroline Child-Villiers, and after a divorce married Miss Ballantine of New Jersey, and had 2 children: Gilbert Timothy George Lariston (b.1953), who succeeded; and Laura (b.1956). Gilbert Timothy George Lariston of Minto (1953–) son of Gilbert Edward George Lariston, he became 7th Earl of Minto in 2005. Hugh Frederick Hislop (1848–1932) 3rd son of the 3rd Earl of Minto. Like several members of his immediate family he served as an M.P., for the North Division of Ayr, 1885–92. In 1879 he married Mary Euphemia, daughter of Col. Samuel Long. His children were Nina Emily (who married Sir Charles Lennox Somerville Russell), Mabel Victoria (who married Hugh Munro and secondly married William Stewart McGeorge and Lieut. Hugh Samuel Roger of the Coldstream Guards. Sir Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet (1891–1975) 5th Earl of Minto, son of Gilbert John. He was known as Viscount Melgund until he succeeded his father in 1914. He was educated at Eton, being then commissioned into the Lothian and Border Horse before entering the Scots Guards in 1913, becoming a Captain and serving through WWI. After the war he read the Roll of Honour for the fallen in WWI in St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. He then went to Canada as A.D.C. to the Governor-General. Returning to Scotland, he ran his estate and played an active role in local work, becoming a Justice of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1924. In 1930 a portrait of the 1st Countess Minto by Joshua Reynolds was stolen from his private collection at Minto House and has never been recovered. In 1921 he married Marion, daughter of George William Cook of Westmount, Montreal. They had 4 children: Bridget Elliot (1921–2005), who married Lt.-Col. James Averell Clark and Maj. Henry Claude Lyon Garnett; Willa (b.1924), who married Maj. George David Chetwode; Gilbert Edward George Lariston (b.1928), who succeeded; and Lieut. George Esmond Dominic (b.1931), who married Countess Marie-Anna Esterhazy, ‘Bunny’. William Hugh (1814–91) 3rd Earl of Minto, eldest son of Gilbert. He was Liberal M.P. for Hythe 1837–41, Greenock 1847–52 and Clackmannanshire 1857–59. In 1859 he succeeded to the Minto titles. In 1860 he had a writ for the lands and Barony of Headshaw, part of Hassendean Common and Langhope. He was a member of the Highland Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, served on the Lunacy Board for the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick and chaired the Board of Lunacy Commissioners for Scotland. He was also a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as on the county Prison Board. He was a staunch supporter of the Established Church. He gave the main speech at the inauguration of the Leyden Monument in Denholm in 1861. He was also Patron of Hawick and Wilton Football Club In 1844 he married his cousin Emma Eleanor Elizabeth, daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Hyslop (or Hislop). They had 4 children: Gilbert John, who succeeded; Arthur Ralph Douglas, barrister, who married Madeleine Harriet Dagmar Ryan; Hugh Frederick Hislop, M.P., who married Mary Euphemia Long; and Lt.-Col. William Fitzwilliam, who married Elisabeth Fanny Rutherford. He died in London. William Brownrigg (1820–1900) eldest son of John Esmond Elliot, M.P. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire and a Commissioner of Supply for the county. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He resided at Benrig, near St. Boswells. In 1858 he married Mary Geraldine, daughter of Justin McCartie of Carrig-navar, County Cork. Their children were William Gerald and Cyril Herbert, both of whom died unmarried (whether the extra names are included in the Elliot surname or as middle names is confusing in these generations, with the triple-barrelled surname typically being only adopted by the Earl of Minto; note that ‘Kynnymound’ is also spelled ‘Kynnmond’ etc.).

The Elliot family (thu-e-lee-it, e-litz) n. important local family since at least the 15th century, thought to have been granted land in Liddesdale sometime in the 12th to 14th centuries, perhaps originally as vasals of the Douglases. There are theories and legends of how they came originally from Angus or from Elliot (now called Arbirlot) in Forfarshire, or were descended from a Norman soldier named ‘Aliot’. This might be consistent with ‘William Alight, burgois de Seint Johan de Perth’ (who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296) being a direct ancestor of Elliots who were granted land in Liddesdale, perhaps in the time of Robert the Bruce. Another version of the origin of the name is that it derives from the old English personal name Elwold; this is consistent with some of the earliest local recordings of the name as ‘Elwald’, ‘Ellwand’ and variants (although it is possible that this was simply a scribal affectation). Probably the most likely early history has a Breton origin, perhaps ‘Halegoût’ (or Huel-goat), with land (later called ‘Alyth’) being given in Perthshire around the late 12th century, then moving to Liddesdale when given the lands of Redheugh around the early 14th century. There were people of that name close to the Borders from at least the 13th century (e.g. ‘Elewald’ and ‘Helewald’ in England in 1230, and Reginald son of Eliot in Dumfriesshire in the period 1242–95); the close geographic connection makes these people seem like likely ancestors for the Border Elliots, although other branches may have a different origin entirely. The first recorded example in the Borders may date from 1425/6 and there is certainly a ‘Johannis Elwald’ in 1436 and Gilbert in 1453. They grew more powerful and numerous through the 15th century and in the 16th century effective took over control of Liddesdale from the Armstrongs. In 1494/5, among a list of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justiciary there were listed 27 Elliots. They then had a reputation as notorious rievers, e.g. the Master of Hailes brought in ‘the Elwands’ in 1515/6. The clan submitted to England in 1547, with 74 men giving their pledges to Lord Wharton. Under Martin of Braidie they were particularly powerful in the 1560s, but this led to a deadly feud with the Scotts, which included burning Hawick in 1565! A letter of 1583 lists the leaders of the family in Liddesdale. The clan suffered after the Union of the Crowns and attempts at ‘pacification’ of the Borders. The Elliots of Minto are derived from a grandson of the Elliots of Stobs (who spelled their name differently), who in turn come from the earlier Chiefs at Redheugh in Liddesdale. The family moved their seat to Stobs for some time, although the chief once more sits at Redheugh. The Elliots of Brugh were also once well represented in Hawick, with other branches such as the Elliots of Horsleyhill and Wolfelee also being locally important. Elliots have been famous as soldiers, administrators and landowners. A pedigree of the family, dated about 1704, was discovered among the papers at Minto. The clan motto is ‘Fortiter et recte’ (boldly and rightly) – ‘The double L and double T Descend from Minto and Wolfelee, The single T Mark the old race in Stobs’, ‘Land of Elliots and of fame, Of every bold and Border name, The Scottish pulse still beats the same Through kindly-hearted Liddesdale’ [DA], Elliot’s (e-litz, e-lee-it) n. stockmakers of the mid-19th century, William Elliot & Sons, with their factory in Slitrig Crescent (probably No. 6), as well as at Tower Mill. The firm began around 1820, growing out of Waldie, Elliot & Co. (the Crescent), with Wilson & Elliot (Tower Knowe Mill), being formed in 1823. Elliot went on his own from 1830, later giving up spinning and focussing on hosiery. The firm was still listed at the Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. It acquired Stonefield Mill and the old Waulk Mill in 1850 and had the new Tower Mill built (also on the site of the Auld Brig) in about 1852. The same firm later built Buccleuch Mills on Green Lane in 1862 (more recently Glenhowe). It had separate factories for spinning and knitting. In 1869 it is recorded that the firm employed 490 people between them, spinning 70 tons of wool and manufacturing 70 tons of...

Elliot's Folly (e-litz-fo-lee) n. popular name used for a building constructed by Henry Elliot, Laird of Harwood in the mid-1700s. It was built on a small hill near an ancient camp, was thatched with heather and used by the Laird to watch his workers.

Elliot's Mill (e-litz-mil) n. former name for Toor Mill.

Elliot (e-lee-i') n. Nichol (b.1835–1904/5) born in Cornhill, Northumberland, near Coldstream, where his father was schoolmaster. He became a joiner, working around the Borders. In the late 1850s he worked at Wilton Lodge, which was then being renovated for David Pringle. His ‘Literary Hours of a Working Man’ (1862) consists of prose and verse pieces, many from around this time, some having been previously published in the Hawick Advertiser. He also had poetry and prose printed in the Border Treasury (in the 1870s), as well as a longer story ‘Nellie Macpherson’. Later he worked as Clerk to Sunderland Police Court and published essays and poems in papers from Sunderland and Newcastle (see also Elliot).

Ellit see Elliot

Elliot (e-li') n. older spelling of ‘Elliot’ or ‘Eliott’, common into the mid-17th century. This spelling reflects the common local pronunciation (also written ‘Elot’ and other variants).

Ellwand (el-wawnd) n., arch. a measuring rod one ell (about 37 inches) long, a yardstick – ‘... the ellwand or yard-stick used in the course of his business by his great-grandfather, who was known by the sobriquet of ‘Handless Wat’’ [WAPJ] (also written ‘elwand’).

elm (e-lum) n. elm (note normally pronounced as 2 syllables).

Eln Bank (e-lum-bawngk) n. original name of villa-type house at 6 Fenwick Park. It was built for Burgh Surveyor John Manuel in 1884, to designs by Manuel himself. The access road became known as ‘Manuel’s Brae’. The house was bought by Robert Scott-Noble about 1900 and renamed ‘the Elms’. It was used as Wilton Manse in the period 1945–90 and then renamed ‘Ellistrin’ when purchased by Ron and Eileen Smith.

Elmbank (e-lum-bawngk) n. small house in Denholm that used to be the preacher’s house attached to the Cameronian Chapel.

Elm Cottage (e-lum-kö’cej) n. former cottage to the north of Elm House, off the Green in Denholm.

Elm Court (e-lum-kör’) n. housing developed by Eildon Housing in 2000, in the renovated Store Dairy off Orchard Terrace, also incorporating the former Provost’s House. It consists of 30 flats.

Elm Grove (e-lum-gröv) n. street in the Wellogate, built off Orchard Terrace in 1897 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company. It was named after the elm trees that used to grow there. The Hawick Co-operative Society had extensive premises in the street, including stables for the Store horses. One of the last town gas lamps from this street is preserved in the Museum. Nos. 1–7 are grade C listed buildings.

Elm House (e-lum-hoos) n. villa-style house at 17 North Bridge Street, converted into a hotel. It was built as the residence of Dr. John R. Hamilton in about 1880. After conversion to a hotel the dining room became one of the town’s restaurants. It is grade C listed.

Elm House (e-lum-hoos) n. house in Denholm near the eastern corner of the Green. It held a baker’s shop in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and housed the Co-op store from 1951–85 (not to be confused with the hotel in Hawick).

Elm House Hotel (e-lum-hoos-hötel) n. name used for Elm House after it was converted into a hotel.

eln (ehn) n., arch. A unit of length approximately equal to 37 inches, a yard – ‘...ten pennies for weaving of the elne of cloth against their will ...’ [BR1660], ‘...that none who shall cast peats for this year in Whitchesters Moss shall take above twelve yards of measure alongst the Moss side for spreading of the said peats, and that conform to the said twelve elns there must be a bridge left’ [BR1735], ‘...to take no more ground to spread peets next the moss side than the breadth of eight elns ...’ [BR1743] (also ell).

Elphinstone (el-fin-stin) n. Alexander (17th C.) witness in 1652 to the marriage contract between Robert Elliott (2nd son of Simon of the Binks) and Margaret Riddell (eldest daughter of William, portioner of Bewlie), where he is described as ‘in Hopsburne’. In 1653 he is recorded in a sasine as ‘indweller in Hobisburne, baillie in that part to William, Earl of Lothian’. He was presumably related to the later Alexander. Alexander (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William and Margaret Langlands. In 1713 he sold the lands of Hartshaugh and Kirklands of Hob Kirk to William Kerr of Abbotrule. John of Henders Stoun (16th/17th C.) brother of George, Janet and Agnes. William Turnbull of Rulewood had a ‘letter of apprising’ against him in 1622 for non-payment of several bonds. He then had to yield up the Barony of Henders Stoun (in Peeblesshire) and other lands to Turnbull. His son and heir was William. John (d.1649) 2nd Lord Balmerino, son of James, who was tried for supporting catholicism. He was imprisoned for opposition to Charles I, but eventually pardoned. He remained a staunch Covenanter, presiding over the Parliament which met in Edinburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded in the valuation rolls as owner of Over Craeling and the Wester Mains of Hundalee. He also held lands in Hob Kirk Parish, valued at £4844 16s 8d. It is said he was a mortal enemy of William Elliott of Stobs. Some of his lands in Rulewater were sold to John Stewart, Earl of Traquair and combined into the Wells estate. However, the bulk of his Rulewater property eventually became part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs. He was succeeded by his son John, and the titles became extinct in 1746 when Arthur, 6th Lord Balmerino was beheaded for supporting the Jacobite cause. Thomas (d.c.1519) received a gift of rights of the lands of Hassendeanbank, along with William (probably his son) in 1510. In 1512 he is also recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal along with his wife Elizabeth (an error for Janet?) Turnbull in a deed for Hassendeanbank. In 1512 he had a charter from Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn for half of the lands of Hassendeanbank, along with his wife Janet Turnbull (daughter and co-heiress of Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock). William had a ‘precept of clare constat’ in 1519, suggesting he was deceased by then. William (d.c.1486) younger son of Sir William of Pittendreich. He took up an ecclesiastical career. He became a Prebendary Canon of Glasgow and was Rector of Ashkirk by 1437. In 1479 he was stated to be holder of the Prebendary of Ancrum. He probably succeeded to his sons rights as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1481. He may have held the office until he died. He partnered a son, William, with an unknown woman of baronial family. It has been suggested that his was Margaret, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Their (illegitimate) son William became Bishop of Aberdeen and founded the university there. William (1431–1514) Bishop of Aberdeen and Chancellor of Scotland, son of William, Archdeacon of Teviotdale and grandson of Sir William of that Ilk. His mother may have been Margaret, daughter of Sir William Douglas, 1st Baron of Drumlanrig and also Baron of Hawick. He was an official at Glasgow University in the 1470s and became a Lord of Council in Parliament by 1478. He appears to have held some of the rights as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in the period 1479–81, with his father taking over from him. He was on the Privy Council in 1508/9 when John Muir of Rowallan was directed to give ‘warrantice’ to George Scott for Dryden, Commside and Over Hardwood. He was probably the William who (along with Thomas) received a gift of the rights of the lands of Hassendeanbank through ‘non-entry’ in 1510. William (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1519 he had a ‘precept of clare constat’ for half of the lands of Hassendeanbank. This suggests he was son of Thomas, who held the lands in 1512. Almost immediately he gave a charter of the same lands to Andrew Ker of Cessford and Agnes Crichton. William (17th C.) acquired the lands of Hartshaugh in the Rule valley, along with his heir Alexander. The lands were probably bought from Gilbert Elliott of Craigend in the mid-1600s and remained in the family until 1713. It is unclear to which branch of the Elphinstones he belonged. In 1637 he was ‘William Elphingstoun in Blackleymouth, alias Steythveyage’ (presumably ‘stay the voyage’) when he witnessed a Hobkirk sasine. He married Margaret, daughter of John Langlands, the minister of Wilton. William (17th C.) listed as tenant of Hartshaughmill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely a descendent of the earlier William of Hartshaugh. He was recorded as owner of Hartshaugh (including the mill and mill lands) in 1707, when they were valued at £60 (formerly written ‘Elphinston’, ‘Elphingston’ and variants).

Elrickhill (el-rik-hil) n. lands near Denholm, recorded in the Douglas of Cavers deeds around the 16th century. In 1511 it is ‘Elrichhill’ when listed (along with ‘Drieth’, ‘Murelaw’ and ‘Dennummains’) as part of the Barony of Cavers. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687, when written ‘Ellrichhill’, and by his brother Archibald in 1698, when transcribed ‘Elvighill’. It is unclear exactly where these lands were located, but presumably near Denholm.

else (els) adv., arch. already, ere now – ‘Forbye, A was i the hert’s hyimm, els!’ [ECS], ‘...for it was weel-on o haaf-past five, els!’ [ECS], ‘Have ee come back else!’ [GW] (also written ‘els’).

elsin (el-shin) n., arch. a shoemaker’s awl – ‘...or pinglin’ wi’ an elshin like the souters o’ Selkirk’ [JMW] (also written ‘elsin’).

Elwald (el-wawl’) n. early form of Elliot, e.g. recorded in a in 1497 when several men of that name witnessed a sasine for Redhungh. It is unclear if the Gilbert son of ‘Elewald’, ‘Walter son of Helewald’ and ‘Helewald’ son of Herbert, listed in an assize in Newcastle in 1230, were connected. Perhaps the earliest record is for ‘Johannis Elwald’, who witnessed a sasine for Woleece and Wolfehopelee in 1436. Gilbert Elwald is mentioned in 1453, on a document relating to lands in Feu-rule. ‘John Elvalde’ of Thorlshope is recorded in 1488 and 1498. ‘Robert Elwalde, of the Hermitage’ is recorded in 1491. A letter of remission for Patrick Earl of Bothwell in 1500 names 14 men of that surname in Liddesdale and surrounding areas. The same spelling is used in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1510 and 1516, for families of Redhungh, Larriston, etc., so this is clearly an alternative early spelling (although Pitcairn in his ‘Criminal Trials’ states ‘The Elwalds, notorious Border Thieves. The name is now extinct’). It is unclear whether this spelling was related to the pronunciation of the time, but it seems likely it was only used by scribes as an anglicised version of the name. In 1526/7 we have Gavin recorded, and in 1535 George and James. William and Robert Elwald are recorded as Liddesdale thieves in 1535. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale the name is recorded consistently as Elwald. Letters from English Wardens to their superiors from around this time also consistently use the form ‘Elwald’ (with spelling variants; although one letter of 1542/3 uses the perhaps more phonetic spelling ‘Eylwittes’). James Elwald in Dalkeith is recorded as witness to a document relating to the lands of Pettie in 1555. In a list of Borderers charged to appear before Queen Mary in 1561 we find the names ‘Elwald’ and ‘Ellot’ used interchangeably. By the end of the 16th century the forms ‘Elot’, ‘Ellat’, etc. are certainly more common. It is also possible that some of the earlier references were to an entirely different family, e.g. there were Elwolds in Ellingham Parish, Northumberland in the 12th century, in Newcastle in 1230 and throughout the Border counties of England in the 13th and 14th centuries. A man called ‘Eleward’ was killed in 1278/9 when accidentally struck in the head by a mallet near Alston in Cumbria. There were also people of the designation ‘de Elaund’ recorded in Northumberland in the 1260s and 1270s, which may be the same family (also written ‘Ellwalde’, ‘Ellwald’, ‘Elwalde’ and occasionally ‘Elwand’ and ‘Elwood’; the ‘-wald’ ending suggests a Saxon origin, and there is an ‘Elwoldus’ mentioned as early as 964 in the Melrose Chronicle; the use of this form for members of the Border Elliot family has caused some confusion in accounts of the origins and history of the Elliot family, but was probably mostly an affected form used in formal documents).

Elwood see Elwald
Elygrain see Alliegrain
Ely Grain (e-lee-grain) n. small stream that joins Linhope Burn at the shepherd’s cottage of Elygrain (see also Alliegrain).

emigration (e-mee-grä-shin) n. moving overseas, expatriation. This was common for local people, particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries, with the usual destinations being America, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. Most boats would leave from the western ports, Hawick folk often being ferried from Annan to the ships that left Liverpool. In the early part of the 19th century it was common to see carts leaving along the New Road towards Langholm, loaded with woman and children and modest luggage, with the men walking, and friends following them a mile or so out of town.

He had previously been responsible for Bath Street Independent Church in Glasgow (now called Renfield St. Stephen’s and also referred to as Blythswood), which has the tallest spire in that city. He also designed Sandyford Church, Glasgow. It is said that he was influenced by Gothic revivalist August Welby Pugin, and that his designs (being quite Gothic and Anglican in appearance) heavily influenced later Presbyterian and Episcopal church designs in Scotland.

Emmetshiels (e-mi’-sheelz) n. former name for lands probably near Harwood-on-Teviot, in the Barony of Hawick. They were held ‘in tenantry’ by the Baron of Hawick from at least 1511, mentioned again in 1572, 1594 and 1615, and recorded again in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. They were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the latter part of the 17th century. Precisely where they were is uncertain, but in 1686 they are ‘the lands of Harwoodhill and Emmetshiels, somtymes called Lant and Emmetsheells’ (it is ‘Emetschelis’ in 1511, ‘Emetschelis’ and ‘Emetscheilis’ in 1572, ‘Emeschellis’ in 1594 and ‘Emetscheilissi’ in 1615).

emm’t (em-in’, am-in’, um-in’) contr. am not – ‘A’m the wunner, emn’t A’?, ‘emn’t A the daftest glaik ee’ve ever seen?’ (also inm’t; usually precedes the first person singular pronoun; cf. emni; emmen is a shortened form).

Emond (e-mind) n. Robert (19th C.) probably son of James and Thomasina Montgomery. He was Cornet in 1876 and flesher to trade. He was arrested along with 7 others after Edward Dearden was fatally injured at the Thursday Night Chase, but later released. Probably the same Robert was listed as a butcher in Selkirk in 1897. He may be the power-loom tuner who died in Selkirk in 1913, aged 79.

enfeoffment (en-fee-min') n., arch. the act of legally giving possession of land (Scots Law term).

engage (en-gāj) v., arch. to pledge, undertake - '...burgesses and Counsellors of the sd. burgh, faithfully engage and promitt for themselves ... jointly to concur for the defence of the true liberties and provileges of the sd. burgh ...'[BR1706].

the Engineer (thu-in-ji-ner) n. name of one of the stagecoaches which regularly ran between Carlisle and Hawick before the railway, the other being 'the Favourite'. The route started at the Tower and finished at the Grey Goat Hotel (on English Street) in Carlisle. The coach ran from 1825 until 1862. Robert Govenlock was one of the original guards. According to Pigot's 1825 directory the 2 coaches were called 'the Mail' and 'the Sir Walter Scott', but it may be that these names were never used locally.

England (ing-glund, -glin'd) n. country to the south of Hawick, usually entered across the Carter Bar or near Canonbie. The 19th century saw a large immigration to Hawick of people from English hosiery centres around Derby, Leicester and Nottingham - 'Ours was a land - a free fair land - Ere England had a name; And minstrel's harp and warrior's brand Have aye upheld her fame'[JT], 'Mong the beauty spots of England I have rambled far and near ... But I like auld Hawick the best'[TK], 'Dive ee leike ti beide up Ingland?'[ECS], 'Here were the white road from England Drops to the Rule and the Jed, Leaps the proud pulse of the exile, Back to the mother-land sped'[WL] (sometimes written 'Inglund'; note the pronunciation is always i-, never e-).

Englandshire (ing-glund-shIr) n. humorous name for England - 'Here, hevin contemplated the 'glorious river Tweed - clear and majestic' Burns, for the first time in his life crossed ower inti Englandshire ...'[IWL] (a Landleisim).
English (ing-gleesh) adj. coming from south of the Border, n. the people living south of the Border – ‘in refusing to go as ane gyd to the Inglis to Langholm’ [BR1651], ‘The English love to sip through a stiffened upper lip. They believe they are a race of self-made men; thus relieving the Almighty of the blame for making Blighty, and relieving Him of blame for making them’ [TD], v., arch. to translate into English – ‘And startled up auld liart carlins may be Englished, and transformed themselves into old grey headed witches’ [EM1820].

English (ing-gleesh) n. Adam (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Margaret Thorbrand. Their children included: John (b.1642); Janet (b.1644); William (b.1646); and Janet (again, b.1649). Probably the same Adam is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 (it is possible that this is a variant of ‘Inglis’).

the English Cricket Field (thu-ing-gleesh-kri-ki’-feeld) n. former field near St. Cuthbert’s, used for cricket, P.S.A. rugby matches etc., situated where Lyle & Scott’s offices now stand.

the English Grammar Schuil (thu-ing-gleesh-graw-mur-skil) n. another name for Hawick Grammar School, once in Orrock Place. The name possibly came from a combination of the formerly separate ‘English’ and ‘Grammar’ schools, and may only have been used once they were merged (otherwise the name is too confusing!).

the English Kirk (thu-ing-gleesh-kirk) n. informal name for the Episcopal Church, because of its ties with the Anglican Church. In Hawick this was the name given (with no obvious sense of disparagement) to St. Cuthbert’s Church, partly also because of the number of southern incomers who joined its congregation.

the English Schuil (thu-ing-gleesh-skil) n. name formerly used to refer to the ‘Parish’ as opposed to ‘Grammar’ school, i.e. the elementary school, which was taught in English rather than Latin. In the 17th century the school-house was St. Mary’s Kirk, and it is unclear what building was used in the early 18th century. In 1683 there was a plea made for the school to be house elsewhere than the Kirk, partly because ‘the pews had suffered a considerable loss by the scholars breaking the same’. In 1715 it is recorded that 5 merks were appropriated by the Council for the rent of a house for the school, with the other half to be paid by the Kirk Session. In 1722 the master was given 40 merks by the Council for renting a school-house for 4 years ‘when he had not the liberty to teach in the kirk’ and in 1737 he was allowed £8 annually for the rent of a schoolhouse. In 1739 the first purpose-built school was erected, being 30 feet by 16 feet (inside the walls). The school once had its own flag that was carried in the Common Riding procession, behind the Grammar School flag and in front of the apprentices flag, according to the 1747 Council decree. Pupils attended this school for 2 years, learning reading, writing and arithmetic. It united with the Grammar School in 1824/5. The same name was later informally used for St. Cuthbert’s School, which was attached to ‘the English Kirk’ and opened about 1848, with a purpose-built school constructed 1849/50. An Episcopal school was also opened in Wilton in 1851, and there appears to have been a third one in the town at about the same time.

the English side (thu-ing-gleesh-sd) n. the other side of the Border into England – ‘Here Johnie Armstrong, take thou my sword, That is made o’ the metal sae fine; And when thou comest tae the English side, Remember the death of Hughie the Graeme’ [T], ‘…James Olifer, toon piper, seeing several immoralities, revellings, drunkenness, frequent cursing, blaspheming ye name of God, …beside his irregular marriage on the English side …’ [PR1720], ‘The long line of the Carter, Teviotdale flung wide, And a slight stir in the heather – a wind from the English side’ [WHO].

enshair (en-shair) adj. to ensure – ‘Enshair for sunshine! That’s what they want tae dace tae make the Common-Riding pay’ [HE1939].
Ensign

Ensign (en-sin) n., arch. a standard-bearer in an army unit. This word was used in the 1706 Burgh Records to refer to the Cornet, but does not appear again after that – ‘...and voted Thomas Hardie, merchand, to be ensigne and to carry the colour’ [BR1706].

enter (en-tur) v., arch. to present oneself or someone else in court, to assume possession of lands or property – ‘...to haue enterit, ressauit and rentallit, and be the tennour heirof enteris, ressauis and retallis the said Gilbert and his airis ...’ [SB1591].

entry (en-tree) n., arch. presentation to a court – ‘...and thair to remane quhill lawfull entre be takin of him be Sir Jhone of Farnehirst, Knycht’ [RBA1561].

epsicopy (ee-pis-kō-pi-see) n. the government of a church by bishops, also known as ‘prelacy’ in Scottish history. This form of church organisation was thrown out in Scotland during the Reformation, about 1560. However, Episcopalianism was also favoured by the Stewart kings, as well as by most of England, and Charles I tried to forcibly reimpose this form of worship and governance on Scotland in 1637. This led to the signing of the National Covenant in 1638 and the Solemn League and Covenant in 1643, and the resultant complications over Scotland’s role in the English Civil War. Later Episcopacy was forceably re-introduced in Scotland following the restoration of Charles II in 1660. All ministers appointed since 1649 were ordered to resign and ask for reinstatement. Although most accepted, the strongest Covenanters refused, particularly in the south-west of Scotland, where there was a growing rebellion as more bishops were appointed. There then followed 2 decades of persecution of the Covenanters until Presbyterianism was again introduced in the Revolution of 1688–89. Episcopalian ministers were ejected soon after William arrived in Britain, and for the next few years ministers continued to be removed for refusing to ‘pray for William and Mary’. The last Episcopal incumbent of Hawick Parish was John Langlands, ousted in 1689 during the Revolution. Episcopal services apparently continued for a while in a private house. The ideals became mixed with those of the Jacobites through the 18th century. Thomas Somerville, minister at Cavers, apparently refused to take the oath for William and Mary, moving to Hawick to preach to a group of episcopaliains including members of the Gledstains and Chisholme families. Along with Francis Scott (ex-minister of Hassendean) they set up a meeting house at the Playlaw (i.e. near the Auld Mid Raw and Kirk Wynd) in 1712, following the passing of the Act of Toleration. A small groups continued to met in a house in the Kirk Wynd until about 1777, with Rev. Findlay McLennan leading the last services. With a lapse of almost 70 years a mission station was started by Rev. W.S. White of Jedburgh in 1846. Rev. Robert Campbell continued in the following year, the first baptism was 1847, the Church Schools were built in 1850 and the new Church itself opened in 1858.

Episcopalian (ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in) adj. belonging to the Episcopalian Church, pertaining to the government of a church by bishops.

Episcopalianism (ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in-i-zum) n. the doctrine of governing a church through bishops, prelacy. In Scotland’s history this has tended to mean the opposite of Presbyterianism.

the Episcopalian Kirk (tu-ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in-kirk) n. the Scottish Episcopalian (or Episcopal) Church is essentially a vestige of the Disestablishment of the Church of Scotland in 1689. It is run by bishops, and has much in common with the Church of England. Like the rest of Scotland, Hawick’s parish church was Episcopalian in the period 1662–89. Thereafter local Episcopalians probably met in secret. There is an entry (in the Parish Kirk records of the 1770s) of a baptism performed by Rev. Findlay McLennan ‘Minister of the Episcopal Congregation of Hawick’) in 1753. The church met publicly again in a Kirk Wynd house in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. This building was situated at the western end, opposite the churchyard. A new church was opened in Jedburgh in 1844 and a mission was started in Hawick by the Jedburgh minister in 1846, meeting in the Orrock Place Grammar School, with the school (and possibly the congregation itself) meeting in Inglis’ Ballroom from 1847. The Church Schools were built about 1850 on Slitrig Crescent, with services held there for several years. The purpose-built St. Cuthbert’s Church was erected in 1857/58, with the site and governance on Scotland in 1637. This led to the passing of the Act of Toleration. A small groups continued to met in a house in the Kirk Wynd until about 1777, with Rev. Findlay McLennan leading the last services. With a lapse of almost 70 years a mission station was started by Rev. W.S. White of Jedburgh in 1846. Rev. Robert Campbell continued in the following year, the first baptism was 1847, the Church Schools were built in 1850 and the new Church itself opened in 1858.

the Episcopal Schuil (tu-ee-e-pis-pō-pal-skil) n. another name for St. Cuthbert’s Schuil. There was also a private school taught under Episcopal supervision in about 1846 by Thomas Marchbanks in a pended apartment in the Mid
Eppy

Raw: probably the same school operated in the ballroom of the Half-Moon Hotel around a year later. An Episcopalian school opened on Wilton Crescent in 1851, and in 1852 it is recorded that there were 3 such schools operating within Hawick and Wilton, with 180 children registered.

Eppy (e-pee) n. Christian name, a pet form of Euphemia, Elspeth or Elizabeth (also spelled ‘Eppie’).

Eppy Sutty (e-pee-si’-ee, -soo’) n. local nickname, probably from the late 18th or 19th centuries. Her real name was probably Euphemia Stevenson, and her name came with the darkness (or dirtiness) of her attire. She is described in an Edinburgh Magazine article of 1820 as a modern witch, who wore a mantle that was ‘black as soot (whence probably she derived her title), and of a most aromatic perfume’ and also wore a large hood. Her personal appearance was also said to be striking, with 3 prominent teeth and a long ‘whiskin’ beard’. She was said to be demanding of food and money, promising good luck to those who complied and cursing those who refused. She told fortunes, especially relating to affairs of the heart, and it is said that she was so well connected with the common people, that she could use the information gathered previously to yield apparently impressive readings. Her death is said to have come a few days after convincing her own sister to sever her foot, after the apendage had been giving her so much trouble that she wanted it to be amputated. She may have been married to William Scott, with the death of their daughter Helen recorded in 1805. She was dead by 1820 and was said to have lived into the 90s – ‘the far-famed Euphemia Stevenson, alias Black Eppy, alias Eppy the Witch, alias Eppy Sooty’ [EM1820], ‘...bar yeh haaflang chaap as black as Eppie Soottie’ [ECS], ‘Black as the yiss o spades; black as Eppie Suttie’. – Expressions signifying exceeding blackness [ECS], ‘Eppy Sootie and Wullie Pairk, Geordie the Buck and Higgins Phill, Janrie Nichol the Hawick band clairk, The Duddy Laird and Shallow Bill’ [HI] (also written ‘Eppie Suttie’ and variants; the name may have been in more widespread use as a dark-faced 18th century witch).

the Equestrian Monument (thu-ee-kwes-tree-in-mon-ew-min’) n. formal name for the Horse.

er (er, ur, ir) v. are, specifically the plural and 2nd person singular form of ‘to be’ – ‘er ee shuir about that?’; ‘er they ony guid?’, ‘oo er the Borders’, ‘...and gaun among oor ain folk without them jaloosin whae oo er’ [IWL], ‘Ma breeks er a’ splattedter wi’ glaur’ [RM], ‘...sin maist o’ thum er hidden ahint street fronteeges’ [BW1978], also used for 1st person singular – ‘am er so’, ‘eem might no be fri Hawick, bit am er’, ‘You’ll never hear the words ‘I am’ For Hawick folks say ‘A’m er’” [IWL] (note the pronunciation varies depending on context, stress, etc., this form often used emphatically).

‘er (ur, er, ir) pron. her – ‘her mother sin sorted ‘er oot’, ‘...Naiter’s buskeet in er bonniest braws’ [ECS], ‘Nocht’s ill stoap ir if she’s taen the maggot inti er heed’ [ECS] (also written just ‘er’; note that ‘her’ is probably used more frequently, depending on the preceeding word; E.C. Smith notes that the pronunciation is between er and ir).

Ercildoune (er-sil-doon) n. former name for Earlston, particularly in relation to Thomas the Rhymer.

erd an stane (erd-an-stän) n., arch. earth and stone, used as a symbol for the legal transfer of land – ‘...with the pertinent as said is, be erd and stane, to the said James Scot and his aeries ...’ [JW1558].

‘ere (eer) adv. here – ‘come ‘ere, wull ee?’ (the h is omitted at times, particularly before some vowel sounds, as in colloquial English).

erect (ee-rekt) pp., arch. erected, raised in position – ‘The said day Walter Scott of neather Boonchester ... was admitt and erect Burgess and gave his burgess oath’ [BR1699].

Ern Cleuch (ern-klooch) n. stream that joins the Ettrick Water between Singile and Ettrick-bridge. The lands there were owned by the Crown from at least 1456. They were associated with a branch of the Turnbulls in the 15th century, perhaps the same branch who were also at Whithope and Harden in the Borthwick valley. John Turnbull was Laird there in 1464/5. It is probably the Crown property of ‘Ernheugh’, which was let along with Singile to Walter Turnbull of Gurnnock in 1484, Thomas Home of Langshaw in 1490, Patrick Home of Fastcastle in 1492 and Sir Robert Ker in 1499. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. The Laird of Whithope ‘in ernheuch’ was recorded in 1494/5 and Robert Scott was recorded there in the same year. The Laird of Cessford was tenant in 1541, paying £28. It passed to Sir William Scott of Harden about 1605 and was later owned by the Scotts of Bonnington (it is ‘Ernhuech’ in 1456, ‘Ernhuych’ in 1464/5, ‘Ernleuch’ in 1468, ‘Ernheuch’ in 1490 and in 1494/5, ‘Erneheuch’ in 1502, ‘Ernheuch’ in 1541, ‘Ernescleuch’ in 1593, ‘Erneheuch’e about 1605 and ‘Ernesheugh’ in 20124).

Ernside Craigs (ern-sid-kræg) n. craggy outcrop in southern Castleton, situated between Blinkbonny Height and the Kershope Burn. Nearby are the remains of a settlement, about 70 m by 40 m in size.

Ernest Augustus (er-nist-aw-gus-tis) n. (1771–1851) King of Hannover. He was 5th son of George III, being made to serve with the Hanoverian husars in 1790, returning to England in 1776. In 1799 he was created Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. Very unpopular in Britain at the time, he was variously accused of murder and incest. Because of the rules of succession he became King of Hanover in 1837 on the death of his brother William IV, and was apparently much more popular there than back home. He marred Friederike Caroline Sophia Alexandrina of Solms-Braunfels. He outlived his 8 brothers and was succeeded by his son George V of Hannover.

Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick (1845–1923) only son of George V of Hanover and grandson of Ernest Augustus. After the death of his father the assumed the title of Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale in the British peerage. However, he was an officer in the Austrian army, and since he fought against Britain in WWI he had his titles stripped in 1919. He was thus the 3rd and last Duke.

erni (er-ni) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘they erni likely ti help’, ‘looks erni everyhin ee ken’, also used to negate ‘am’ – ‘am erni gaun oot the night’, ‘The prud hae howket pitts for me whilk arna after thy law’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants; cf. erren, ern’t).

Ernilton (er-nil-in) n. former house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, located in the hills approximately north of Steele Road. The area to the north is marked ‘Erniltoun b. fell’, corresponding probably to the modern Arnton Fell, suggesting that one of the streams there was the Ernilton Burn. The rental roll for Liddesdale from about 1376 lists 42 separate pieces of land under ‘Quarterium de Ermyldoune’, which is probably the same place. The name was thus formerly of much greater significance. Owners of land there around 1376 include ‘Johannis Rufson’, ‘Ricardi Broum’, ‘Thome Gilson’, ‘Ade de Syde’, ‘Elie Nobill’, ‘Dauid Stodhirde’, ‘Emmie de Lawys’, ‘Ricardi de Lawis’, ‘Roberti de Lawis’, ‘Matthei Meryng’ and ‘Willelmi Nycson’.

ernit (er-ni) n., arch. an earth-nut, the edible tuber of certain wild plants, particularly Bunium bulbocastanum and Bunium exuosum (also ernit).

the Ern Kirk (thu-ern-kirk) n. iron sheeting structure that existed at the site of Wilton South Church from 1888–1894, having been given to the local United Presbyterian Church by worshippers in Rothesay.

ern-mail (ern-mäl) n., arch. a red stain on cloth caused by rust – ‘Ern-mail = iron mould; an iron or sodium stain on cloth’ [ECS].

ern-nit (ern-ni) n., arch. an earth-nut, particularly Bunium bulbocastanum and Bunium flexuosum – ‘... we used to go to the wood ... and howk ‘ern-nits’’ [JTu] (also ernit).

Ernpistols (ern-pis-tulz) n. popular name for the Nichol family, who were bakers in Hawick in the 18th century. One of the family, William, became a naval officer.
Erskine (ers-linz-kowp) n., arch. a fall onto the buttocks – ‘Arselins coup. The act of falling backward on the hams’ [JoJ].

erselins cowp (ers-linz-kowp) n., arch. a fall onto the buttocks – ‘Arselins coup. The act of falling backward on the hams’ [JoJ].

Erskine (ers-kin) n. Adam (15th C.) left 3 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of branxholme. He is listed as ‘Ade Erksyn’. Alexander (d.bef. 1509) served heir to his father Thomas in 1494, when he became 3rd Lord. He thereby also inherited the estates of Synton and Dalgleish and the office of Sheriff of Selkirk (as well as many other lands and titles), for which he already held a crown charter of 1489. He witnessed a document relating to ‘Langhassendean’ in 1480/1. He had a sasine for Synton on 1493. He held the lands on formal presentation to the King of a pair of girt spurs at Whitsunday, if asked. He may be the Laird of Whitslade who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. In 1502 his son and heir Robert had a charter of the lands of Nisbet from him. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar. Their children included Robert (4th Lord), Walter, Christian and Agnes. He later married Ellen, daughter of Alexander, 1st Lord Home. Charles of Shielfield (1771–1825) 2nd son of Rev. James, he succeeded on the death of his brother Lieut.-Col. Henry. He was a lawyer, who was Sheriff-Substitute for Selkirkshire, as well as being Baron Bailie of Melrose, and stayed at the Priory there. He was a good friend of Sir Walter Scott, under whom he worked. He was a founding member of the Jedforest Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1806 at Borthwickshiels he married Barbara, only daughter of George Pott of Todrig. Their children included: James, who succeeded, and married his cousin Barbara Pott; and Col. George Pott, who married Jane, daughter of Rev. G. Coventry. David Stuart (1742–1829) 11th Earl of Buchan. Interested in history and the arts in Scotland, he was a founder member of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland and also founded the Ednam Club to maintain interest in the poetry of James Thomson. He was also instrumental in having the Encyclopaedia Britannica published. In 1786 he purchased the Dryburgh estate, saving the abbey from further destruction. He used it as the centrepiece for his planned ‘Caledonian Temple of Fame’. The main parts of this vision that were completed were the obelisk in the Abbey grounds, the Wallace statue and the Temple of the Muses. He had Dryburgh House substantially rebuilt and lived there until his death. Sir David (1772–1837) historian and dramatist. His father, the 11th Earl of Buchan, had bought Dryburgh Abbey, saving it for posterity, and he inherited the estate in 1810. He wrote historical plays, among them ‘James V; or, The warlike days o’ Hab of Hawick: an historical drama’ in 1829, published by John Anderson, Edinburgh, 1830 (this being a fanciful version of the old story). He is also described as ‘Captain Erskine of Dryburgh’. He died without issue and the Dryburgh estate passed to Henry David, 12th Earl of Buchan. Rev. Henry ‘Harry’ (1692/3–1773) son of James of Shielfield in Berwickshire and Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott of Ancrum. He was licensed to preach by Kelso Presbytery in 1722, was presented to Robertson Parish at the end of 1727 and became minister there early the next year. He married Janet Cunningham (who died aged 64 in 1766), daughter of the minister of Hawick. Their children included James (b.1731), Marjory (b.1734) and Robert (b.1740), baptised in Roberton. He was succeeded in the Roberton ministry by his son James. Note that the slightly earlier minister of Chirnside of the same name (whose wife Margaret Halcro is famous for being roused from the family mausoleum when the sexton tried to cut the ring from her finger, thereby recovering and living for another 51 years!) and his son Ebenezer, founder of the secession church, who were related to him. The memorial tablet to Rev. Robert Scott of Roberton had some lines added to it in his memory also. James of Grange (1680–1754) 2nd son of Charles, 5th Earl of Mar. He served as Lord of Session. He held the superiority of the lands of Whitslade and Dalgliesh, which he sold to James Adam in 1723. He married Rachel, daughter of John Chiesly of Dalry. Rev. James (1731–88) son of Harry, the minister of Roberton, was licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1757 and became preacher at Caerlenrig ‘chapel-of-ease’ (i.e. Teviothead) in 1763, remaining for only about a year. He was presented to Kirkton at the end of 1763 and became minister there in 1764. He was then translated to Roberton Parish in 1774, replacing his father. A new Manse was built for him soon afterwards. He was one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. In 1777 he succeeded his cousin Patrick as 7th Erskine of Shiefield. In 1779 he was listed as ‘Rev. James Askin of Drybrugh’ in Roberton Parish when he was taxed for having a male servant. He wanted to transfer to Wilton (according to a letter of 1784 to Hugh Scott of Harden). He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Roberton Parish in 1785. In 1786 he was translated to St. Boswells, but died only about 2 years later. He married Henrietta Scott, daughter of Charles of Goldielands, and she died in 1818 at the age of 79. Their children included: Henry, who was in the army and succeeded, but had no offspring; Charles, who became a lawyer in Melrose, married Barbara, daughter of George Pott of Todrig and succeeded his brother; and William, who was a preacher and tax surveyor in Haddington. James of Shiefield (1809/10–75) son of Charles. In the 1850s he was said to hold the female representation of the female line of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. He married his cousin Barbara Pott and she died in 1886, aged 76. He was succeeded by his son Charles. He and his wife are buried at Dryburgh Abbey. Sir John (d.1552) 5th Lord Erskine, 2nd son of Robert, who died at Flodden. He was also referred to as ‘of Nisbet’. He was named along with his father in an indenture of 1510 involving lands within their Barony of Synton, with Kers. He inherited the lands of Synton from his father in 1513 and they passed to his son and heir John in 1557. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll. His 2 eldest sons, Robert and Thomas, died before him. His daughter Margaret was a mistress of James V, and mother of James, Earl of Mar (and later Regent of Scotland). John (d.1572) 6th Lord Erskine and 1st (or 22nd) Earl of Mar. He was a member of the Council of Mary, Queen of Scots, guardian of James V and served as Regent of Scotland in 1571. In 1557 he inherited his father’s lands of Synton. He was among the prominent men of the nation who signed the document declaring James as Monarch (in place of Mary) in 1567. He married Annabella, daughter of William Murray of Tullibardine, and was succeeded by his son John, 2nd Earl of Mar. His daughter Mary married Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. John (c.1562–1634) 2nd (or 23rd) Earl of Mar and 1st Lord of Cardross, son of the 6th Lord Erskine. He served as Treasurer of Scotland. He inherited his father’s lands of Synton in 1573, but sold them to the Earl of Buccleuch in 1619. He is recorded gaining the lands of Synton and Synton Mill from Sir John Edmondston in 1593. He resigned his lands in 1620, so they could be re-granted to his heir. This included superiority over the local lands of Synton, Whitslade and Dalgliesh. He married Anna, daughter of David, Lord Drummond and was succeeded by his son John and had several other children. John (d.1653/4) 3rd or 24th Earl of Mar, descended from the family who formerly held lands at Synton. In 1635 he was served heir to his father’s Earldom of Mar, which included superiority over Whitslade and Dalgliesh (which was one third of Synton). The Scotts of Whitslade held the main estate at this time, and Synton was held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He married Jean Hay (daughter of the Earl of Erroll) and was succeeded by his son John, who was Chancellor and married Mary (or Margaret), daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. Sir Robert (d.1452) 1st Lord Erskine, son of Sir Thomas of that Ilk and his 2nd wife, Janet Keith of Synton. Through his mother he probably inherited the Synton estates and possibly the hereditary sheriffdom of Selkirk. He witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. He was captured at Homildon Hill in 1402, but released by 1405 and was again in English captivity in 1427. He claimed the Earldom of Mar in right of his mother in 1435. He passed on his estates (retaining the ‘liferent’) to his son Thomas in 1448, this including Synton and Dalgliesh. He married a Stewart and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of David Lindsay of Glenesk. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, 2nd Lord. Robert (d.1513) son of Alexander, 4th Earl of Mar. He had a charter for the lands of Nisbet, Synton and lands within Selkirk in 1499/1500. He and his heirs had a charter for Nisbet in 1502.
He obtained a charter of the lands of Synton and associated lands of Whitslade and Dalgleish in 1507/8 (when he was heir apparent to his father). Part of the deal was that he could infeft Whitslade to John Cockburn of Ormiston and John Glendinning the lands of Dalgleish. He was Baron of Synton, rather than owner of specific lands within it, since Scott of Synton is mentioned as early as 1509, about the time he became 4th Lord. In 1510 there is an indenture of him and his son, with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst involving lands in Synton, as well as Nisbet; this was witnessed by John of Dun, as well as Alexander and Robert, who were probably all closely related. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir George Campbell of London. Their eldest son, Robert, died before him and he was succeeded by his second son Sir John, the 5th Lord. The youngest of his 3 sons was James, who married Christian Stirling, and who was progenitor of the Erskines of Sheffield. He was killed at Flodden.

Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Katherine Gledstains and their daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick in 1775. She is probably the ‘Kate Gladstains Mother to Molly Eskine’ whose death is recorded in 1816. Thomas of that Ilk (d.c.1404) son of Sir Robert, Chamberlain of Scotland. He witnessed charters during the reign of Robert III. He was witness to the confirmation of the lands and titles of George Douglas, Earl of Angus. He held many other titles and positions, including Keeper of Edinburgh Castle in 1371. He was recorded as Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1373. In 1383 he is recorded when Peter ‘of Koesburn’, Lord of Henryland renounced to him the rights to the rentals from the lands of Dalgleish in Selkirkshire. In 1389 he witnessed the charter of Walter Scott to the superiority of Kirkurd; he is there referred to as ‘consanguineo nostro’, suggesting he was related to King Robert II. He obtained a crown charter in 1448 for the lands of Erskine, Sherifffdom of Aberdeen, etc., as well as the lands of Dalgleish and Synton; these had been resigned by his father, while retaining ‘different’. He was ‘Thoma, domino Erskin’ when witnessing charters for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1451/2 and 1455 and another for the Douglases in 1456. He is recorded as Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1469. He also served as Justiciar for Lothian in 1474. Along with Alexander, he witnessed an ‘instrument’ relating to lands in Haseendeal in 1480/1. He resigned his lands in the King’s hands in 1489, and they were re-granted to his heir, Alexander. He married Janet Douglas, possibly a daughter of the 1st Earl of Morton. His children included Alexander, 3rd Lord; Helen; Isobel; Elizabeth; and Mariotta or Muriella. He may also have been father of Margaret, who married James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells. He died 3 months before his son Alexander succeeded in April 1494. William (16th C.) Parson of Campsie and Commendator of Paisley. He was appointed as titular Archbishop of Glasgow in 1585, but deprived in 1587, when the General Assembly dissolved the archbishopric. He may have continued to be referred to as Archbishop until 1594, but unlike his predecessors, played no important role in affairs in Teviotdale. His seal was rather crude compared to those of earlier bishops, showing St. Kentigern and the words ‘SIGILLUM GUILIELMI ERSKENE ARCHIEPISCOPI GLASGOW.’ (formerly written ‘Erskyn’, ‘Erskin’ and variants).

es (ez) v. is (third person singular, present tense) – ‘she es so’, ‘... how grand a privilege it hez been and still ez ti bide in the West End’ [IWL], ‘If we are inquiring about a sick friend we might say, ‘Is he biddit?’ We would not, however, hear the word ‘is’ so sounded in the answer. ‘Hei ez that, puir fella’’ [WL] (often used emphatically, in response to a statement, even if it contained ‘is’; note is is also frequently used, depending on context, and eez is sometimes used for emphasis; also spelled ‘ez’).

Esaa (ee-sa) n. (b.c.457) possibly first chief of Bernicia, the Anglian kingdom of north-eastern England and south-eastern Scotland, which included Hawick. He was succeeded by his son Eoppa and grandson Ida who became the first genuine King of Bernicia.

E-scape (ee-skäp) n. Hawick-based electronic band of the late 1980s and early 1990s, mainly Iain Scott on vocals and posing, supported by Keith Middlemas and sometimes others. They were the last band to play at Humphrey’s (ex-Marina) before it burned down.

Eschetho (es-he-tô) n. lost place-name in Lilliesleaf Parish, probably replaced with Lintobank or perhaps being the same as the lands later referred to as ‘Riddell’ (the name is recorded from about 1150 and likely comes from the Old English ‘esc sceat hoh’, meaning ‘the corner height with the ash tree’).

Esdale Law (es-däl-law) n. hill to the west of Hawick, just north of Blawearie, reaching a height of 357 m. It has been suggested that the line of a Roman road passed here, connecting Craik Cross with Dere Street, via Groundestone Heights and Harelaw.

Esdale Sike (es-däl-sik) n. stream that rises near Blawearie and flows in a north-western direction to reach the Ale Water.

esh (esh) n., arch. ash (the tree or wood) – ‘Aa mind yince o’ sei-in a wise-like esh-plant that was grow’in on a steep cley bankin’ . . . ’ [DH].

Eshiebank see Ashybank

esk (esk) n., arch. the eft or newt – ‘The pert little eskis they curlit their tails, And danced a myrthesome reele’ [JTe] (also ask).

the Ēsk (thu-esk) n. popular name for the River Esk. It is formed of the Black and White Esk, which merge near Castle O’er Forest. It then runs through Langholm, merges with the Liddel and the Eden and empties into the Solway Firth. Historically it was an important part of the West Marches. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrave described it thus: ‘Eske is a fayre ryver, and cometh through the Esdall, and is Scottishe, inhabited with Battesons of Esdell, until it come neare a placed called the Langhalme castill and meteth with the water called Use, which waters and dales are bothe my Lorde Maxwellis until it come to Canonby kyrke, and then the Armestronges and Scottishe Graymes have it untill it meete the ryver of Lydall at the Mote skore, where Fargus Grayme his howse stands. Then it taketh the devysyon of the realmes untill it come to a place called Morton rigge where Will of Kimmont dwelleth; then there is a mere dyke that goeth to a ryver called Sarke, then is Eske Englishis on bothe sydes, and Sarke ryver devydes, and there are Graymes on both sydes, the one English, the other Scottishe untill it come to Gretnay, where it meteth Eske and both rune to Bowmus, and soe take the sea’ – ‘. . . Till saddening memory all our haunts restore, The wild-wood walks by Esks’s romantic shore’ [JL], ‘From rocks and glens, and lofty peaks, In many purling rills; The Esk rolls on through spangled meads, Adorn’d with verdant hills’ [WSB], ‘ ‘Twist Esk and Till there were maidens fair But none with the sheen of her nut-brown hair . . . ’ [WHO], ‘But though the men who rode are gone, A ghostly spirit marches on, Frae Langholm’s Esk tae Teviotside, A troupe of phantom Rievers ride’ [Sco] (note there are several other rivers of the same name, including the one running past Dalkeith and Musselburgh, the one in Cumbria, another in Angus, and a fifth in North Yorkshire).

Eskdaill (esk-däl) n. courtesy title of the heir to the heir to the Dukedom of Buccleuch (i.e. first son of the Earl of Dalkeith), which keeps the older spelling. It was written this way in 1619 when Walter Scott was created Lord of Whitchester and Eskdaill, as well as Earl of Buccleuch.

Eskdaill Bank (esk-däl-bawngk) n. street rising steeply uphill across the roundabout from Mart Street, better known as the ‘Killin Hoose Brae’. It was developed in 1897 and named after a title of the Scotts of Buccleuch.

Eskdaill Terrace (esk-däl-te-ris) n. street named in 1883, developed in 1885, and incorporated into the west end of Weensland Road in 1955. Since the land was originally purchased from the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, it was named after one of the titles given to Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch in 1619 and more recently borne by heirs to the Earldom of Dalkeith. The main road to Denholm used to pass through this location (i.e. above the present Weensland Road) until rejoining near Bogliebarns (i.e. near the present Little Shop).

Esksdale (esk-däl) n. valley of the River Esk, running from roughly Canonbie to Esksdalemuir. It was once a Lordship, held by the Avenel family from the late 12th century until it passed to the Grahams through marriage in 1243. In 1309 Robert the Bruce confirmed a charter to Melrose Abbey of lands there (held of Graham) and the superiority was granted to Sir James Douglas. It remained with the Earls of Douglas until they forfeited their lands and it was granted to George, Earl of Angus in 1458/9. Melrose Abbey still held lands there in the 15th century – ‘March! march! Ettrick and Teviot-dale! Why my lads dinna ye march forward in order? March! march! Esksdale and Liddesdale! All the blue bonnets are over the border!’ [T] (it is ‘Eschedale’ in about 1185 and ‘Esckedal’ in 1235/6).
Eskdale an Liddesdale Fermers’ Association

Eskdale an Liddesdale Fermers’ Association (esk-dal-in-li-diz-dal-fer-murz-aw-só-see-ā-shin) n. farmers club existing from at least the 1830s. It met alternately in Langholm and Newcastle, with prizes given for the best livestock.

Eskdalemuir (esk-dal-mewr, -mär) n. town in Eskdale, with the Meteorological Observatory and Seismological Station above, as well as the Girdle Stanes and Loupin Stanes and the Samey Ling Temple nearby. The lands there were long owned by Melrose Abbey, for which the Scotts of Buccleuch held the office of Bailie from around 1484, and it still belonged to the Abbey in 1553/4. The area used to be a centre for sheep farming, but is now heavily forested. An old drove road used to pass by the north of Hawick to the Borthwick valley and then go from Hoppasley over towards Eskdalemuir. The parish of Eskdalemuir was created in 1702 from part of Westerkirk – ‘The stag-hounds, weary with the chase, Lay stretched upon the rushy floor, And, urged, in dreams, the forest race, From Teviot-chase, Lay stretched upon the rushy noor, And thus, ten miles thrae onywhere, We had arrived at Eskdale-moor’ [SWS], ‘But ere they had won where the teinds of the Laird were valued at £60 and held by Robert Scott of Heap. In 1678 John Scott of Synton is recorded as owner of these lands, valued at £365. The ‘Laird of Todrick younger’ was listed there in 1694. William (probably Scott) was a tenant there in 1702, and William Redford also lived there – ‘Out beyond the Langhope Burn and over Essenside …’ [WHO] (it is marked as ‘Essinsyd’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘W. Essinsyd’ and ‘E. Essinsyd’ and it is ‘Eastenside’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is ‘eshinsydyd’ in 1494/5, ‘Eschinsyd’ in 1622 and ‘Essinsyde’ in 1623).

Essenside Heid (e-sin-síd-heed) n. hill above Wester Essenside, reaching a height of 314 m, and now being in a wooded area. The higher hill to the west (which appears to be unnamed) contains the remains of a fort and settlement. The hill-fort is oval, about 75 m by 50 m, with 3 ramparts, and containing 9 hut-circles, some perhaps being from a later settlement. Another hill to the north (also unnamed) contains traces of cord rig.

Essenside Loch (e-sin-síd-loch) n. body of water lying just above Easter Essenside in the Ale valley. A plan of the Loch was made by John Ainslie in 1774. In 1815 there was a dispute between Archibald Cochrane of Ashkirk and Gilbert Elliot, Earl of Minto, over rights to the marle in the Loch. There are rigid lines visible to the south of the Loch – ‘But ere they had won where the wandering moon Lit Essenside Loch with her diamond shoon Red Rowan was galloping free on the heath With his neck outstretched and the bit in his teeth’ [WHO] (marked as ‘Essinsyde L.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Essenside (e-sin-síd) n. hamlet to the west of Ashkirk, consisting of Wester and Easter Essenside, with Essenside Head above the former and Essenside Loch above the latter. Old Essenside was a former farmstead between Western Essenside and Essenside Loch. An ancient fort and settlement are in the hills to the west. The lands were owned by branches of the Scotts from the 16th century, and Easter Essenside was later farmed by the Shotlands for several generations. Bernard Shortreed was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5. In about 1616 a group of Scotts murdered Walter Scott ‘in Essenside’ (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) while he was fishing on the Ettrick. Geordie Johnstone was there in 1623. In 1643 the teinds of the Laird were valued at £60 and held by Robert Scott of Heap. In 1678 John Scott of Synton is recorded as owner of these lands, valued at £365. The ‘Laird of Todrick younger’ was listed there in 1694. William (probably Scott) was a tenant there in 1702, and William Redford also lived there – ‘Out beyond the Langhope Burn and over Essenside …’ [WHO] (it is marked as ‘Essinsyd’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘W. Essinsyd’ and ‘E. Essinsyd’ and it is ‘Eastenside’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is ‘eshinsydyd’ in 1494/5, ‘Eschinsyd’ in 1622 and ‘Essinsyde’ in 1623).
Etal Castle

‘...bit A bocht an ett twae cookies an a whank o cheese’ [ECS] (also written ‘ett’: this is the past tense form, while etten is the common past participle).

Etal Castle (e-tul-kaw-sul) n. ruin dating from the 14th century, near the River Till in Northumberland. Built by the English Manners family to guard the Tweed it was overwhelmed and destroyed by the Scots in 1497.

the Eternal Council (thu-ee-ter-nul-koon-sul) n. popular name for the Town Council before the reorganisation of 1861, named because of the Council members’ habit of re-electing each other. The ability of the old council to largely choose the new one goes back to a 1469 Act of the Scottish Parliament and was ratified in a decision by the Court of Session in 1781. There it was stated that the existing Councillors and new Bailies should elect 15 councillors ‘who shall continue in their office during life’ (also written ‘Eternal Coonsul’).

ether (e-thur) n., arch. an adder, any species of snake — ‘An ether wi a rattlin’ tail’ [JoHa], ‘If Maich comes in wi an ether’s heid, it gangs oot wi a peacock’s tail’ [GW] (cf. adderstane).

etten (e-in, e-tin) pp. eaten — ‘Decerns Thomas Oliver to content and pay to James Scott, lorimer, 3 half firlots of aitts eitten by his guids and geir ...’ [BR1642], ‘... no a beite o meat hed a etten threch ma brekfist ti the now’ [ECS], ‘It’s no’ sae much juist bein’ ett’n, Tho’ sic a trial I’m no forgettin’...’ [DH] (also written ‘et’iú’; this is the past participle, while et is the usual past tense).

ettyery (e-tu-, e’-u-ree) adj., arch. dead, destroyed, ruined.

ettle (v., arch., poet. to intend, purpose, attempt, endeavour, reckon — ‘That thaye may schuut wi’ hidden ettle at the perfellite ...’ [HSR], ‘He etted that he was a great freend o’ the father’s and that the bairn wadnae want ...’ [JEDM], ‘An’ I thought I was ettted to dee an auld maiden ...’ [JT]. ‘Ye see that naked, shameless hizzie, Ettlin’ ti make the sodger dizzy ...’ [WP], ‘... And ettted hae’ in a hertie try To prove they were true o’ ee’ [WL], ‘Blithe was he as he ettted roamin’ Yester een at the faa o’ gloamin’ ...’ [WL], ‘Hawick men yince maiched to Jethart, Ettlin to be free ...’ [DH], to aim, count on doing something — ‘...an A ettted at findin’ some machine tae serr ma ends’ [ECS], ‘Ettle at a silk goon an’ ee’ll yiblins get a sleeve’ [GW].

Etleton (e-tul-tin) n. former parish near Newcastleton, with a churchyard that still contains mediavel gravestones. It is reached from a short dead-end road leaving the main road south of Newcastleton by the Milnholm Cross. Some of the oldest stones have been incorporated into a wall, which is dedicated to the memory of the Armstrongs, and others are behind a railing. The church was in the patronage of the Lords of Liddesdale, but there is no record of any minister serving there. There is now no sign of the church that served the parish until 1604, when it was merged with Castleton; it was located on a terrace to the north and west of the graveyard. There are the remains of a settlement to the north (said to have been a village once), where ancient coins were found in the early 19th century. A more extensive farm and field system is located to the west, possibly being the lands of Side. There was also probably another chapel at Chapelknowe, at the edge of the old parish towards Canonbie. It appears on Bagomond’s Roll of 1275 as ‘Rectoria cum vicaria de Edulltoun’. In the Exchequer Rolls for 1540 the teind lambs were paid to the rector there, amounting to £29 12s. The farm there along with Millholm, was possessed by David Goldie and James Mitchelson. The patronage and teinds of the kirk are still mentioned along with Castleton in the 1653 service of heirs for Mary Scott of Buccleuch and in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch, when it is described as a ‘pendicle’ of Castleton (the name probably derives from the Old English personal name ‘Edla’ or ‘Eadhild’); it first appears as ‘Edliltoun’ and ‘Eddilstoun’ in the 13th century; it is ‘Edllistoun’ in 1540, ‘Eddiltoun’ in 1575, ‘Eddilston’ in 1632 and ‘Edington’ in 1653, ‘Edilston’ and ‘Eddiletone’ in 1663; it is ‘Ettleton’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; note the potential confusion with the Eddleston near Peebles).

Etletonside (e-tul-tin-sid) n. former farmstead near Etleton. It is listed in 1632 along with...
Ettleton Sike

Potterlampert, as a possession of Sandy Armstrong (it is ‘Eddiltounside’ in 1632 and ‘Edington-toune’ in 1653).

Ettleton Sike (e-tul-tin-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Kirk Hill and flows past Ettleton cemetery to join the Liddel opposite Mangerton. To the south there is a small terrace with the remains of a rectangular building, and there are field-banks and rig lines in the area, visible on aerial photographs. On a hillside to the north are the remains of another rectangular hut, together with a field system.

Ettrick (e’-reek, et-reek) n. village on the Ettrick Water, well away from main roads. James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd was born near here and is buried in the parish church graveyard, along with Tibbie Shiel and Thomas Boston. There has been a church there for about 800 years, and the village was once ‘Ettrick Kirkton’. The name is also used for a former parish, and in general for the valley. Lands there that were granted by Alexander II to Melrose Abbey and are described in detail in the charter. The present church was built in 1824. There is also the Boston Memorial Hall. The lands of ‘Ethrik’, Rodono and ‘Carrick’ were erected into a free regality by James I in 1436 (origin uncertain; sometimes formerly spelled ‘Etterick’, it is ‘Ethryc’ and ‘Ethric’ in c.1236, ‘Ettricke’ in 1415 and ‘Etrryk’ in 1519).

the Ettrick (thu-e’-reek) n. popular name for Ettrick Witter – ‘The border lass sings it in strains sweet tho’ sad, On the banks o’ the Ettrick or Yarrow’ [WS], ‘Fareweel, my Ettrick! fare-ye-weel! I own I’m unco laith to leave ye; Nane kens the half o’ what I feel, Nor half the cause I ha’e to grieve me!’ [ES].

Ettrickbank (e’-reek-bawngk) n. cottage in Ettrickbridge, once the home of the Ettrick Shepherd and of the Scott family in the mid-19th century.

Ettrickbridge (e’-reek-brig, et-reek-brig) n. Ettrickbridge, also called ‘Ettrickbridge-end’, a village set out by the 3rd Duke of Buccleuch in the late 18th century in the Ettrick valley, west of Selkirk. The lands there had been held by the Scotts of Harden until about 1746. The original bridge there was built of freestone in 1628 by Auld Wat of Harden and had 3 arches. The romantic version of the story is that the old riever had accidentally killed a child in a cross-Border raid, and at the request of the Abbot of Melrose erected this bridge at a point where several lives had been lost crossing the river, so that in future many lives would be saved. The bridge was ruined by 1715 and rebuilt in 1739, but washed away in 1777. The replacement came in 1780 about half a mile further up-river, and this had the old stone displaying the Harden coat of arms built into it. It was widened in 1858. The Cross Keys Inn was once a coaching inn and survives as a hotel.

Ettrickbridge (e-reek-brig-end) n. the village of Ettrickbridgend, also known as ‘Ettrickbrig’.

Ettrick Forest (e’-reek-for-ist, et-reek-for-ist) n. name formerly used for a large tract of land generally lying to the west of Selkirk, and also sometimes called ‘Selkirk Forest’ or just ‘the Forest’. It formed the last large part of the great Caledonian Forest situated around the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, and now almost entirely gone. It consisted of Scots pine, oak, birch and hazel. However, it should be noted that the word ‘forest’ could also refer to an area of bare, high land, rather than necessarily implying that it was full of trees. It became a royal hunting forest, with royal parties being based at Selkirk and Galashiels. Lands there were granted to Sir James Douglas by Robert the Bruce in 1321, and they remained in the superiority of the Douglasses until forfeited to the Crown in the middle of the 15th century. Rents were paid to the Crown, with a few specific farms where the King or Queen kept their own flocks of sheep. Margaret Tudor received lands there in 1503, which later passed to the Scotts. There was often a Keeper of the Forest, with the Earl of Gloucester being one of the first appointed, by Edward I. It was also used as a sanctuary for fugitives, with Wallace and Bruce hiding there, for example, and known as a lawless place in rieving days. In early times there were special Forest Courts, with jurisdiction over the residents, and the Forest was divided into 3 Wards, known as Ettrick, Tweed and Yarrow. Each Ward was under the charge of 2 rangers, one of whom was referred to as the Master Ranger. The Wards were divided into steadings: in the 15th century there were 45 in Ettrick, 23½ in Yarrow and 17 in Tweed, each paying £6 in rent, as well as payment in livestock – ‘…May hang upon a soor ploom tree, And sleep in Ettrick Forest’[JT] (it is ‘Etrrik-Forest’ in 1525).

Ettrickhead (et-reek-heed) n. area around the head of the Ettrick Water. The lands there were part of the holdings of Melrose Abbey, for which the Scotts of Buccleuch had the office of Bailie from the late 15th century (it is ‘Ettrikheid’ in 1524 and 1525 and ‘Etrikheid’ in 1553/4).
Ettrickhill

Ettrickhill (et-reek-hil) n. village, being the western extension of Ettrick. Here is the monument to the Ettrick Shepherd, marking the site of the cottage he was born in.

Ettrickhouse (et-reek-hoos) n. Ettrickhouse, former farm in the Ettrick valley. In 1557 Scott in Thirlestane paid rent to Melrose Abbey for these lands. The tenants there in 1609 were John Scott, James Amos and Archibald Stewart. Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter for these and other lands in about 1620 and granted them to Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade in about 1622. They were inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade in 1655 (it is ‘Ettrikhouse’ in 1557, ‘Atrikhouse’ in 1654 and ‘Ettrikhous’ in about 1622).

Ettrick Pairish (e'-reek-pa'-reesh) n. parish in Selkirkshire, containing the upper reaches of the Ettrick valley, extending to St. Mary’s Loch. It is bounded by Roberton to the south-east. It incorporated the ancient parish of Rankilburn or Buccleuch from 1650. There was a ‘New Kirk’ there from the early 16th century, with the present building dating from 1824 (it is ‘Atrik’ in 1539).

Ettrick Pen (et-reek-pen) n. summit that is the highest point in the headwaters of the Ettrick, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway, reaching a height of 692 m (2270 ft). It was long referred to as ‘Eskdalemuir Pen’ by those living in Eskdale — ‘...For, swift as the deer on Ettrick Pen Sweep at the sound from scaur to glen, And swift as the towering kestrel stoops When a field mouse moves in the bracken hoops’ [WHO], ‘Away ower i’ the wast, Ettrick Pen, raxin abune his neebors. And the muckle roond shooers o’ the Moffat Hills ...’[DH] (the name is probably another example of the p-Celtic ‘pen’).

the Ettrick Shepherd (thu-et-reek-she-purd) n. popular name for the other James Hogg.

Ettrickside (et-reek-sid) n. the side of the Ettrick Water — ‘There are brase on Ettrickside Where the broom and bracken bide; But the’re charmin’ spots that hide Roond anld Hacock’ [TK].

Ettrickside (et-reek-sid) n. former name for a farm in the Ettrick valley, owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane in the early 17th century, with tenants in 1609 being William ‘Houp’ and Thomas Brydon. It was once part of the parish of Rankilburn. In 1621 it was described as an ‘outset’ of Gamescleuch (it is ‘Etrikksyd’ in 1609 and ‘Etriksyd’ in 1621; it is marked ‘Ettricksyd’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Ettrick Terrace (e'-reek-te-ris, et-reek-te-ris) n. street in ‘the Terraces’ of the Wellowate, built around 1892 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company, and named after the river.

Ettrick Witter (e'-reek-wi'-ur, et-reek-wi'-ur) n. river that rises at Ettrick Head, east of Moffat, and joins the Tweed near Abbotsford. The first bridge across it was built for Alexander II in 1234 and connected Kelso Abbey with a cell of monks at Lesmahagow in Lanarkshire, although it is unclear how long it lasted. The next bridge was built by Auld Wat of Harden at Ettrickbridge in 1628 and replaced in 1780. There was also a ford near here from at least 1647 – ‘...I hear the lintie in the whins Where Ettrick rins’ [JBS], ‘So Ettrick flowed by an elf-heart led With an elf-song sung the while, And the crystal tear that a fairy shed Made a wasted moorland smile’ [WHO] (the river was formerly known as ‘Ethric’, ‘Etryk’, ‘Hetterich’, ‘Etreyich’, ‘Atric’, etc., and may be related to the Old Welsh ‘Atre’ meaning ‘playful’).

Eunson (yoon-sin) n. Paul educated at Hawick High School, he is a pediatric neurologist at the Royal Hospital for Sick Children in Edinburgh. He has worked to train pediatricians in developing countries.

Eure see Evers

the Evangelical Union (thu-ce-vawn-je-lee-kul-yoon-yin) n. evangelical church group in Hawick, formed in 1848 and later renamed the Congregational Kirk (although there were separate, but related, groups with that name at about the same time, the early history being complicated). They met on O’Connell Street, with Rev. Alexander Duff being the first minister. The church was formed on E.U. principles, but only joined the Scottish Evangelical Union in 1859. The building was constructed on O’Connell Street in 1848–9 and finally sold about 1892 when the new church was erected on Bourtree Place. Also called the ‘Evangelistic Union’ and later the ‘E.U. Congregational Church’ when there was a union between the Evangelical and Congregational churches in Scotland. It was finally renamed simply the ‘Congregational Church’, and moved to new premises on Bourtree Place in 1894.

Evans (e-vinz) n. Dr. Rufus Easson (d.1945) general practitioner in Newcastle. He lived at Northfield, North Hermitage Stree. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Rose Alice Vassie. Their daughter Helen Christina drove ambulances in the London Blitz and wrote fiction under the name ‘Jane Oliver’.

A’ things are changed for evermair …’ [FL], ‘…I’d cherish her, my faultless dove For evermair’ [WP], ‘Till in His hame I dwell for evermair …’ [WL].

Evers (ee-vurz) n. Sir Ralph (1508–1545) officer of Henry VIII, born in Witton Castle, Yorkshire, son of William the 1st Lord Eure (or Evers). He was married to Margery Bowes (grand-daughter of Sir Richard Bowes, who had been Warden of the English Middle Marches). He was deputy at Berwick and Governor of Scarborough Castle in the siege of 1536. About 1545 he became English Warden of the West Marches, at the same time as his father was Warden of the East March. In 1544 he led a raid on west Teviotdale, when Bruxholme tower was burned, 8 Scots slain, 30 taken prisoner and a large amount of livestock carried off. His force met Hertford’s force at Edinburgh, after razing Haddington and Hawick on the way from England (although this may be an error, since the two places are hardly on the same route). He was certainly in charge of the force that looted and burned Jedburgh in 1544. He later led an English invasion that devastated the Borders in 1545, being promised lands that he conquered in Teviotdale and the Merse. This invasion followed the raid of Lord Hertford as part of the ‘Rough Wooing’, in which the Border Abbeys were attacked and tombs were destroyed. It probably included Hawick, although there are no explicit records of this. He was supported by several Kers and other locals, at the siege of Conlingham and the burning of Selkirk. His forces were routed at Ancrum Moor, where he was killed along with his fellow commander Sir Brian Latoun. He was ironically buried at Melrose Abbey, which his own forces had desecrated earlier. Apparently his body was skinned and the skin used to make purses for Scottish officers. An English ballad, ‘Lord Ewie’, is about him – ‘Lord Ewie was as brave a man As ever stood in his degree; The King has sent him a broad letter, All for his courage and loyalty’ [T]. Ralph 3rd Lord Eure (1558–1617) son of William. He succeeded Sir John Forster as Warden of the English Middle March in 1595. In February of that year he wrote to Burghley ‘Sir Robert Kerr rode to Edinburgh with a number of Kers who are reconciled to him and Fernieherset. It is thought in revenge of the quarrel of the Trumbils which the laird of Buccleuch undetaketh. And so Buccleuch is strengthening the Armitage which lies too near is here – has also drawn most of the Elliots to his house.
at Hawick, and keeps an extraordinary number in the house there.’ He apparently resigned after complaints were made against him. Note that he was the 4th generation of his family to have been a March Warden. He married Mary Dawney of Sassay and was succeeded by his son William.

Sir William 1st Lord Eure (c.1483–1547/8) son of Sir Ralph Eure (or Evers) and Muriel Hastings. He was appointed by the Earl of Surrey to be one of the Marshalls of the English army that attacked Jedburgh in 1523. He was Sheriff of Durham and Northumberland and Warden of the English East March in the 1530s and 1540s. In 1541 he complained about the large flocks of Scottish sheep and other animals that were being pastured on the English side of the Merse. He married Elizabeth Willoughby of Parham. Since his son Sir Ralph died before him, he was succeeded by his grandson William, the 2nd Lord.

William 2nd Lord Eure (1529–93/4) son of Sir Ralph and grandson of William, 1st Lord. He was Warden of the English Middle March about 1553–57. He married Margaret Dymoke of Scrivelsby and was succeeded by his son Ralph (also written ‘Eure’, ‘Evre’, ‘Ewrie’, etc.).

every (ev-ru-ree) adj., arch. hungry (noted by J. Jamieson; also aiverie and eevenoo).

everyday (iv-reedā) n., arch. a week-day, as opposed to Sunday, a working-day, adj. worn on weekdays – ‘Everyday claes’ [GW] (cf. ilka-day).

everyhin (iv-reed-hin) pron. everything – ‘everyhin happens for a reason’ (can be spelled ‘ivryhin’; see also aathing and aahing).

everyin (iv-reed-yin) pron. everyone – ‘It’s no everyin that can blaw about a menshion in the Charter!’ [BW1979].

evict (evikt) v., arch. to obtain or recover by legal right – ‘Monks meadow evicted by the ministe[r] for his glybe’ [Buc1692].

Evil-willit Sandy (ee-vil-wi-lee'-sawn-dee) n. nickname for Alexander Airmstrong.

evite (e-vee’) v., arch. avoid, evade – ‘The Treasurer could not attend this day the Session in the Manse by reason of some emergenie he was trysted with and could not evite’ [PR1724].

the Ewe an Lamb (thu-yoo-an-lawn-in) n. public house on the Sandbed at 3 Orrock Place, previously known as St. Leonard’s Vaults, and popularly called ‘the Monkeys’. It was built around 1860, presumably replacing an earlier building. James Elliot was proprietor from at least 1841. The pub closed in 2005, becoming the Y.M. clubrooms (sometimes referred to as the ‘Ewe & Lamb Inn’).
Henry (b.1804) son of Andrew and Jane Peddie. He was also a skinner in Hawick. In the 1837 Commons inquiry into 'fictitious voters' he was mentioned as exchanging property with John Haldane in Selkirk, apparently for the purpose of voting. He is recorded as such in the electoral roll of 1837 and on the 1841 census is living with his elderly father and sister Helen on the Crescent. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer on Slitrig Crescent and in 1861 was at 3 Bridge Street (probably corresponding to the modern No. 20), still unmarried with his mother and sister. In 1857 he donated the skull of an ancient ox to the Museum, found at Synton Moss. Rev. John (1800–75) son of the Hawick skinner Andrew and Jane Peddie, he was born in Hawick. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed to preach in 1822. He became assistant to Rev. James Arkle in Hawick soon afterwards, apparently refusing to accept remuneration for this position. He was then tutor to several notable Roxburghshire families, including travelling in Europe, and also worked as preceptor to the only son of a gentleman in Yorkshire. He was presented as minister of Hobkirk in late 1833 and ordained there in 1834. This was said to be due to the influence of Capt. Elliot (brother to Lord Minto) who his father had supported in the election the year before. There was much dissent among the heritors and some even laid an accusation of simony against him, so it was a year before he was finally ordained. He also acted as Persbytery Clerk. His was appointed by the Crown amidst some controversy, the heritors being unable to agree. He remained there until his death. He wrote a statistical account of Hobkirk Parish in 1834. The oldest known communion token from Hobkirk is from 1837 and bears his initials; it is crudely made and probably formed from the material of older tokens. In 1841 he is recorded living at the Manse with Jane and Margaret (presumably his sisters). He married Isabella Yeaman (who died in 1898), daughter of James Fitchie, manufacturer of Deanfield, Melgie. Their children were: Anna Jane, who married George Watson, minister of Hownam; Rosanadra, ‘Rose’ (1849–1912), who married Col. John Joicey of Newton Hall, Northumberland; John Sangster, stockmaker (1851–1913); and Charles Henry, engineer (1855–1909). Robert (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. His name is recorded as ‘Ewans’. Robert (1823–1900) native of Hawick, son of Jedburgh manufacturer Andrew and grandson of Hawick skinner Andrew. He was educated at Peebles, then briefly worked in the Hawick Town Clerk’s office before working with his father in the hosiery trade in Jedburgh. For many years he worked for William Watson & Sons, then about 1860 opened his own tweed and hosiery firm at Millbank, apparently the first firm to make tartan stockings; he sold the firm in the early 1880s and it became Currie’s and then Hogg’s. He was part of the old ‘eternal council’, and after reconstitution became a Councillor and Magistrate for 9 years before being Provost 1875–78. His Provostship saw the new sewage works developed, and the purchase of Wilton Manse and Glebe. He was a Liberal who worked locally for the Reform Bill. Although not a Common Riding supporter, he was a member of the Parochial Board, member of the South of Scotland chamber of Commerce, one of the founders of Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, and a deacon in the Hawick Free Church. In 1841 he was living with his father in Jedburgh, but by 1851 was living on Hawick High Street with his widowed mother Elizabeth and sisters Elizabeth and Jane. In 1861 he was recorded as a hosier, employing 40 people. His wife was Blanche, from Edinburgh, and their children included Andrew and Eliza. He wrote the booklet ‘Through Canada in 1878’. Long involved in banking, he left Hawick about 1880 to promote the ‘People’s Bank of Scotland Ltd.’ in Glasgow, died in Edinburgh and is buried in the Wellogate (also sometimes ‘Ewin’).

Ewen’s Court (yoo-winz-kör) n. former name for Tannage Close, after Andrew Ewen, skinner, who ran a tannage business there. It marked the southern end of the Little Haugh on Woods 1824 plan.

Ewen’s Loch (yoo-winz-loch) n. small pond in the ‘Ewen’s Moss’ area, to the west of Kaimend.

Ewen’s Moss (yoo-winz-mos) n. former name for an area in the hills to the south-east of Hawick, corresponding to the area now centred on Ewen’s Loch, west of Kaimend. This is south of the once much larger Hilliesland Loch.

Ewes (yooz) n. settlement on the River Ewes, a few miles north of Langholm, or more generically the name for the valley. The surrounding parishes of ‘Over Ewes’ and ‘Nether Ewes’ were here. The church by the roadside at Ewes, built 1866/7, is famous for its ancient bell hanging in the fork of a tree. It is built on the site of the 13th century Nether Kirk of Ewes, dedicated to St. Cuthbert. There was formerly a school here and a blacksmith’s and post office to the north at Brieryshaw – ‘Sequestered vale! my loved, my native Ewes,
Ewesdale

Thy beauty’s worthy of a nobler song, Nor can these broken notes express the strong Unuttered thoughts that thrill my rustic muse’ [MW].

Ewesdale (yooz-dål) n. valley of the River Ewes, running north of Langholm. It is familiar to Terries who drive much of the valley between Fiddleton and Lanholm along the A7. Historically it appears never to have been a barony, and to have been separate from the Regality of Eskdale to the south. In the 15th century it was a Lordship, held by the Douglases. The upper part (with the ‘Ower’ Kirk) was once a Lordship of the Homes, while the lower part of the valley belonged to the Lindsays, then the Maxwells; the 2 parts were united in the hands of Alexander, Earl of Home in about 1610. However, the superiority of the lands in the lower part (along with patronage of Nether Ewes Kirk) continued to be held by the Maxwells into at least the 18th century. The valley was burned by the English in 1514, when it was described as ‘8 myles of Lienth in the said Marchies, wherupon was 27 pleughes’. George, Lord Home, granted lands in ‘the vuyr parrochin of Ewisdale’ to Ninian and David Armstrong in 1528. Throughout the 16th century it was listed among those places near the Border whose inhabitants were responsible for ‘dalie slauchteris, birning, fyre raising, open reffis, thiftis and depredations’. In 1579 there is a record of a feud between the Elliots of Ewesdale and the Armstrongs of ‘the Gygillis’. Much of the land fell into possession of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1643. The ‘lordship of Ewisdaill’ was listed among the possessions of the family in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The region was for a time part of Roxburghshire (on account of being part of contiguous lands held by the Duchess of Buccleuch), from at least 1672, and was last restored to Dumfriesshire in 1747. The name formerly applied to parts of Eskdale as well. There were once mills at Meikledale, Sorbie, Arkleton, Bliss, Glenvorane, and Wrae. The main families of the area were the Littles, Armstrongs, Elliots, Scotts (of Ewesdale) and Beatties. An ancient turf dyke ran along the hills on the western side of the valley, and old roads of various vintages can be traced up the hillsides and across the pass at Ewes Doors. There are many signs of ancient habitation in the area, with more than a dozen locations marked as settlements, along with a couple of hill forts.

A book ‘The Ewes Valley: An Historical Miscellany’ was written by Brenda I. Morrison and R. Bruce McCartney in 2000, with a historical article by John Elliot (spelled ‘Euesdaill’, ‘Euisdaill’, ‘Enisdaill’, ‘Ewisdale’, ‘Ewisdaill’, ‘Ewisdale’ and variants; it is ‘le Vale de Ewithe’ in 1296; some sources suggest the origin of the name is ‘efts dale’ or ‘newts dale’, but it seems more likely that like other local rivers, the origin of ‘Ewes’ is obscure).

Ewes Doors (yooz-dorz) n. pass at the source of the Eweslees Burn, about a mile up the burn from Eweslees farm, off the A7 south of Moss-paul. There is a mound here that may have been a Roman watch tower. The land may also have been known as Glenvorane and was owned by a branch of the Elliots in the 16th century. It was the location for a fight between the Elliots and the Scotts in August 1565, part of the feud between the Lairds of Braidlie and Branxholme, in which several Scotts were killed. It was said that the Elliots raided into Scott territory, then about 400 of them waited in ambush at the pass, killing 6 of the Scott party (2 Scotts, 2 Dalgleishes, a Short and one ‘Theffinmis’) and capturing 60. Another story tells of how Walter Scott of Branxholme and his men laid in wait here for a gang of Cumbrian raiders, scaring them off and recapturing their booty. There was once a chapel near here (presumably closer to the river), dedicated to St. Paul and connected with Melrose Abbey. The last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme records a debt owed ‘to the porter of Ewisdy’ for the rest of the price of one horse’; this suggests that there may have been a change-house located at the pass here, with the proprietor known as the ‘porter’. There are also several linear earthworks here, crossed by the terrace-way that forms part of the old road from Eweslees to Caerlenrig (which may have been originally Roman). The Parish of Ewes was disjoined from Dumfriesshire to the south. In the 15th century it was a Lordship, held by the Douglases. There is a mound here that may have been a Roman watch tower. Ewesdown Sike (yooz-down-, yowz-doon-sik) n. stream in the headwaters of the Teviot. It joins Worms Cleuch at the standing of Ramsaycleuchburn, becoming Rams Cleuch.

Ewes Fit (yooz-fi’) n. Ewes Foot, former name for an area near the foot of the Ewes Water, or more specifically for the ford near the confluence with the River Esk (just north of Langholm) which was once part of the main route towards Hawick.

Ewe Sike (yoo-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Ewe Knowe and running north to become part of Boghall Burn.

Ewes Kirk (yooz-kirk) n. name of one of 2 churches in the Ewes valley, formerly referred to as the Ower Kirk and the Nether Kirk. The upper one was abandoned after the Reformation and the congregation merged with that of the lower one. The present building was constructed in 1867, with designs by James Burnet of Langholm. A roll of ministers is: Roger Kirkpatrick in 1556; William Graham, from 1627; Mr. Chisholme in about 1642; John Lithgow 1646–64; John Home c.1664–81; John Melville early c.1682–89; John Lithgow 1689–94; Robert Darling 1694–1717; Robert Malcolm 1717–61; Richard Scott 1761–90; John Clunie 1790–91; John Laurie 1791–1817; Robert Shaw 1816–53; Thomas Smith 1853–1901; David Preston 1901–.

Eweslees (yooz-lez) n. farm off the A7 near where the Moss paul Burn meets the Eweslees Burn. John Elliot ‘callit of the Dewisleis’ is recorded in 1578/9. Edward Aitchison was tenant there in 1711. Hugh and David Scott were there in the period 1788–97. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1841 until at least the 1860s. Eweslees Knowe is about 7 km to the north-west. Remains of rig-and-furrow cultivation can be seen near the head of the Eweslees Burn, as well as signs of several enclosures. In 1942 an RAF Hurricane aircraft (JS346) crashed into the hillside in poor visibility, narrowly avoiding the farmhouse, and killing the pilot, Prince Supeabat Chirosakti of Siam (it is ‘Dewislyis’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Ewss Riuer’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map).

Eweslees Hope (yooz-lez-hop) n. farmstead up the Ewesless Burn from the farm of Eweslees. It was occupied in 1841 by Armstrong Scott and Mary Scott (probably his mother).

Ewes Witter (yooz-wi’-ur) n. Ewes Water, small river that rises in the Blackhall and Moss paul Burns and joins the Esk at Langholm, with a length of about 8 miles (13 km). The A7 road follows the valley of Ewesdale after crossing down into Dumfriesshire near Moss paul (it is ‘Euss fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Ewss Riner’ on Blaue’s 1654 map).

examination (eks-aw-mi-nä-shin) n., arch. the act of examining a parishioner or candidate for schoolmaster – ‘...to nominat and condescend upon fit and qualified persons for examination of Mr Robert Chisholm schoolmaster of Selkirk ...’ [PR1718].

examinator (eks-aw-mi-nä-tur) n., arch. an examiner – ‘...Mr Robert Bell, Mr John Richie, Mr John Douglass, and Mr William Crawford be the Examinators, or anie thrie of them ...’ [PR1718].

excambion (eks-kaum-bee-in) n., arch. a contract describing the swapping of lands between 2 parties.

the Exchange Bar (thu-eks-chänj-bawr) n. public house at 9 Kirkstyle or 1 Silver Street, opposite the former Exchange Buildings, and popularly known as ‘Dalton’s’ after an early proprietor, John Dalton. It has been there since the mid-19th century, the building previously being the Chartist Store. It is a grade C listed building.

the Exchange Buildings (thu-eks-chänj-bildinz) n. built over the Slitrig beside Towerdyke-side, the foundation stone was laid in 1865 by the Duke of Buccleuch. A photograph of 1860 shows the site before construction commenced. The buildings consisted of a large hall, accommodating about 1500 people (and thus the largest in town), smaller halls, an arcade of shops and a house. It had a dual role as agricultural hall and entertainment centre, but soon came to be used mainly for concerts, shows, etc. It was later used as a dance hall and cinema, with various names, the Empire, the King’s, the Odeon, the Classic and finally the Marina. In later years it was a bingo hall, with attached bars, most of which burned down in 1992. The northern section and the Arcade doorway survive, the rest being converted into a car park in 1998. The remaining three level building is designated to house the Border Archives.

the Exchange Hall Congregation (thu-eks-chänj-hawl-kông-greé-gä-shin) n. name used for the Free Church congregation established in 1866, which met in the Exchange Hall for a few years until St. Andrew’s Kirk was built. The name continued in popular use for some years afterwards.

the Ex-Club (thu-eks-klub) n. popular name for Hawick Ex-Servicemen’s Club, with premises

at 12 Teviot Crescent. They have had an annual dinner since 1928.

excommunication (eks-ko-new-nee-kā-shin) n. official exclusion from the Church, being the ultimate punishment in former times. Imposition of this order meant that public proclamations were read at all nearby churches ordering all parishioners to shun the offender, and to refuse to offer them food or shelter. Civil rights were also affected, until an Act of 1690. But in general excommunication meant being a social outcast and losing one’s livelihood. The Pope excommunicated the whole of Scotland for Robert the Bruce’s involvement in the murder of John ‘Red’ Comyn (who was Baron of Bedrule, among other places). This led to the Declaration of Arbroath, and the eventual lifting of the National excommunication. There are no records of individual Teris suffering this fate. In 1724 2 people from Stow had their Act of Excommunication read at Hawick Kirk and all the churches of the Presbytery of Merse and Teviotdale.

the Ex-Cornets’ an Actin Fithers’ Association (thu-eks-kör-nits-an-awk-tin-fitθurz-aw-sō-see-ä-shin) n. organisation of past Cornets and Acting Fathers, ?? They keep a book of duties to pass on to the new Cornet and Acting Father each year.

excrecence (eks-kre-sins) n., arch. surplus, excess – ‘The Council resolve that the excrecence of the town’s yearly stent, is to be applied in all time coming for paying the debt contracted by the town in relation to the new bridge, until said debt be paid’ [JW1747].

exculpat (eks-kul-pa’) pp., arch. exculpated, declared not guilty – ‘…who having exculpat him ye best way he could, by averring he did it onlie through sport …’ [PR1718].

Hawick Parish resident who was rebuked in 1714 for his property. This being 5 years earlier, performed by a deceased Mr. Barclay in ‘Badderston’s Close’ (probably Edinburgh), the Session requested testaments from witnesses before he would be allowed to settle in the Parish. Not producing these within about the next year he was ordered ‘put out of ye town lest the place should be reputed as harbouring of vagabonds and rogues’. This suggests he may have been a member of the gypsy family. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Paterson and their children included: James (b.1656); and Marie (b.1671). The witnesses in 1671 were Robert Elliot and Robert Paterson (perhaps his brother-in-law). His wife could be the Margaret born to James Paterson and Marion Runciman in 1636. William (1794–1847) King of the Yetholm gypsies, he was a large and powerful man, who was also known locally as a smuggler – ‘There’s canny Wull Fa a’ Kirk Yetholm. He lives i’ the sign o’ the Queen. Fairbairn (fār-bārn) n. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleside, in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (b.1806/7) born in Westruther Parish, he was farmer at Easter Fodderlee around the 1860s. In 1851 he was living in Jedburgh, but by 1861 he was farming 212 acres and employing 7 labourers. His wife was Helen Rutherford, and they also lived with his mother-in-law, who was a farmer’s widow. By 1868 his wife was recorded as farmer at East Fodderlee, and so he was presumably deceased. John (1858–1943) son of the Maxton blacksmith Charles, with his mother being Elizabeth Elliot, he came to Hawick in the early 1900s. He eventually became manager of the King’s Theatre (in the Exchange Buildings). He retired in 1928. He was known as a writer of poetry, several of which were published in the Hawick Express. His output includes ‘Alec, Oor Bellman’, ‘On Seeing A Tramp Passing’, ‘Look On The Bright’, ‘The Cornet’s Chase’ and ‘Wilton Park’. He also published the poem ‘To the most glorious ... Memory of ... Sir Walter Scott’ in 1932. However, he is best remembered as writer of ‘The Exile’s Dream’, which was put to music by John Huggan. He died at his home, 25 Wilton Crescent, and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Peter (1807/8–69) from Edinburgh, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. The Fairest Spot o’a’ (tha-fair-rist-spò'-ò-aw) n. song with words and music by Tom Ker, written about 1890. It was often performed at social nights for the Teviotdale Bicycle Club and first sung at the Common Riding at the 1909 Colour Bussing by T. Caldwell. It fell into obscurity after WWI, but was revived after WWII, with music arranged by Adam Rutherford Grant (from his own memory and some notes left by Tom Ker and Adam Grant). In its new form it was first sung by George L. MacDonald at the Callants’ Club Smoker in 1948. It has the same rhythm and meter as Ker’s ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, and like his other songs, each ‘chorus’ has different words. Again falling out of fashion for decades, the song was revived for the 2005 Colour Bussing by Joyce Tinlin and is included in the CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006) sung by Joyce Tinlin.

Fairfoul (far-fowl) n. Andrew (c.1606–63) son of a minister from Anstruther, he studied at St. Andrews and became minister of North Leith and then Duns. Fairgrieve (far-greev) n. David (b.1791/2) born at Ledgerwood in Berwickshire, he was a tailor on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and in Slater’s 1852 directory on ‘Middle row’. In 1841 and 1851 he was on the Mid Row. His wife was Janet and they had a son Robert. George (b.1781/2) from Jedburgh, he was a tin-plate worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was a tinsmith on O’Connell Street and in 1851 he was listed as a white-smith at about 6 High Street. Slater’s 1852 directory lists ‘George Fairgrieve & Son’ on the High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included William, Thomas, Helen and Margaret. George D. (19th/20th C.) 5th man to serve as Secretary of the Congregational Kirk. Helen (b.1830/1) daughter of tinsmith George. She was listed as a milliner on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. James (18th/19th C.) tin-plate worker on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was listed as an ironmonger as well as tin-plate worker at the Tower Knowe. In 1841 he was living at Tower Knowe (probably No. 3) with his wife Isabella. Janet (17th C.) listed among the poor householders in Abbotrule who could not pay the Hearth Tax in 1694. John (b.1789/90) from Galashiels, he was a carrier in Lilliesleaf. He is probably the John from Galashiels who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawik’ in 1825. His daughter Jessie married road labourer James Goodfellow. In 1852 he is listed running his cart from Hawick to Lilliesleaf, leaving from the Plough on Thursdays; his name is given in Slater’s directory as ‘Job’ (also written ‘Fairgreave’, ‘Fairgreve’, ‘Feirgrive’ and ‘Fergrieve’).

Fairhurst Drive (far-hurst-driv) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1950 and extended around 1966. The name derived from the fact that the first houses were of the early concrete ‘Whitson Fairhurst’ style. Later houses built to fill gaps were of a different style.

fairies (far-rezz) n., pl. imaginary mischievous spirits. The exact nature and appearance are ill-defined, this being part of their mystique. However, the picture of small, winged creatures is largely a Victorian English invention, having little in common with the Scottish concept. Local stories often had them as small creatures, sometimes dressed in green. There was great local superstition about fairies until well into the 19th century. People claimed to have seen them cawing at the Miller’s Knowes and the Wellogate. 2 green circular mounds, or ‘fairy rings’ (now known to be generally caused by a fungus) were once situated on the north bank of the Teviot, but were obliterated when Laidlaw’s Cauld was built. Similar rings once existing at Carterhaugh were supposedly related to the fairies in ‘Tamlane’. Windburgh Hill was supposed to be a domain of the ‘guid folk’, and a shepherd disturbing them by throwing a stone into the (non-existent) bottomless loch there is said to have caused the great flood of the Slitrig in 1767. An area in the Borthwick Water was called the Fairy Knowe, apparently where a shepherd was thrown in the flooded burn by the fairies. An article on local fairies, written by ‘A.M., Hawick’ appeared in the Edinburgh Magazine in 1820. A child of a woman at Minto Craigfoot was said to have been swapped for a changeling and only saved when fairkishin

Rev. Borland of Bedrule administered a concoction made from the foxglove. Another tale is of a changeling baby who became ‘an ugly emaciated creature’, who demonstrically played the fiddle and was thrown in the fire by a tailor, when the original baby reappeared. James Ruickbie told a story of a girl in Innerleithen who was taken by the fairies, but returned after prayers. The farm of Winningtonrig was said to have 2 fairies, which often performed favours on the farm, but once were interrupted while piping and dancing, and in retaliation made all the animals call out loudly for the next day. A fairy at Bedrule was said to have been given the farmer’s wife’s last barley, and in return filled her meal chest. Objects that were meant to offer protection from these spirits include a husband’s ‘blue bonnet’, a hank of red thread, a natural stone with a hole in it, and branches of the rowan tree. Related supernatural phenomena of local lore include ‘bogles’ and ‘spunkies’. Prehistoric tools and other artefacts turned up by the plough were formerly associated with fairies or elves.

fairkishin (fir-ki-shin) n., arch. A good quantity, sometimes implying untidiness – ‘Thae scones ir weel heirt; A pat a guid fairkeesheen o butter inti thum’ [ECS] (cf. ferkishin.

He wrote poetry, being a prize-winner in the Verter Well competition, where he used the pseudonym ‘Birkinshaw’. He published ‘Poems and Songs’ (1881) and a second edition called ‘Teviotside Musings’ (1892) (also sometime spelled ‘Fairlie’).

Fairloans (far-loonz) n. farm in Liddesdale, located to the east of Saughtree, near to Myredykes and very close to the Border. Robert Armstrong was tenant there in 1694. Walter Jardine was farmer there in 1794–97, with James Beatte as shepherd. David Jackson was shepherd in the early 19th century. Nearby limestone quarries were developed, this being the ‘Thorlîeshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries’ (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Fairloans (far-loonz) n. farm near the head of the Kale Water, north of the Border at Catcleuch Hill. It should not be confused with a place of the same name in Liddesdale. Around 1800 an old woman lived there called Kitty Hall, a native of Northumberland, who recited for James Telfer a version of the ballad ‘The Death of Parcy Reed’, this being published in 1844.

fairm (färn) n. A farm – ‘Holstered pistols cairried For gairdin’ o’ the fairms, Less militant in eichty fower The year thae laid doon airms’ [MB] (cf. the more common ferm).

fain (färn) n., arch. A fern – ‘A’ll sort ee, yih little bleckie, for poww-in aa ma fairns (ferns)’ [ECS], ‘Ilk day, I’ll gather soft green fairns For beddin’ for oorsels an’ bairns’ [WP].

Fairneylaw (führ-nee-law) n. George (d.c.1493) priest of the Diocese of Glasgow who is recorded as notary relating to Hawick in 1490. He is separately recorded as ‘Sir’, usually indicating that he was a cleric without a Masters degree. He was notary to a sasine of 1484/5 relating to Mangerton, where he is called ‘Priest’ and another sasine for a ‘tenement’ in Hawick in 1484, where he is referred to as ‘Chaplain, Glasgow Diocese’. According to tradition he was a chaplain sent from Melrose Abbey to collect the tithe from Roger (or sometimes Robert) Langlands. When he persisted Langlands supposedly drew his broadsword and cut off Fairneylaw’s head at Wester Hepe. The story further relates how Langlands escaped punishment from the King by apologising for removing the chaplain’s hat, but omitting to add that his head was inside it! How much of the story is true remains unclear, although it is clear that Fairneylaw did have a local connection, and there is a record of Roger Langlands being denounced a rebel in 1494/5 for failure to appear to answer for the slaughter of ‘Sir George Farnylaw, chaplain’. It is also unclear whether there is a connection with the Heap Cross, which probably once existed at Stirches, and which was traditionally said to mark the site of the murder (however, it seems likely its existence as a marker long preceded these events). Fairneylaw Place in Stirches is named after him. Janet (16th C.) listed in the 1552 last testament of William Scott, younger of Branholme. She is recorded as ‘Jonete Farnielaw’, but it is unclear whether she was from the Hawick area or not. John (16th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. His name is written ‘Farnielaw’. It is conceivable that he was related to the earlier priest. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘William Farnlie’ when witness to a charter between Henry Wardlaw of Wilton and John Scott of Thirlestane in 1483. It is not impossible that he was related to George (the name is also spelled ‘Farnylaw’, ‘Farnelaw’ and other variants).
Fairneylaw Place

Fairneylaw Place (fær-nee-law-plis) n. part of Stirches, off Stirches Road, along with Oxnam Court and Maxton Court, built in 1978 and named after Sir George Fairneylaw — 'Then thinking it time to finish off The story of the bonnet, He said, wi' a twinkle in his een, 'The Abbot's heid was in it' ['FL].

Fairnyside (fær-nee-sid) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as 'Fairnyside' in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Fairnielees (fær-nee-leez) n. Fernielees, part of the former estate of Harwood in the Barony of Feu-Rule. It belonged to Hector Turnbull of Stonedge in 1609, when he sold it to Gibbie Elliott of Stobs by wadset and reversion. It may be the 'Fairnilyes' where in 1623 Michael Birnie stole sheep belonging to Walter Scott of Todrig and Simon Nichol. It is recorded in a contract of 'wadset' in 1647 (discharged in 1649) involving Walter Riddell and William, Earl of Lothian. Different quarters of the lands were owned by Sir Walter Riddell, Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers and James Laidlaw. 'Tithous with 4th part of the lands of Fernillie' were listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. In 1694 the 3 east quarters are recorded being sold by Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge to Henry Elliott of Harwood. There were Ogilvies there in 1758. By 1788 it had been disjoined from the estate of Elliott of Stobs and was valued at £1200 (meaning it was a large farm at that time), forming part of the estate of Elliott of Harwood. In 1811 it was listed among those lands owned by William Elliott of Harwood and with the same value. These lands were still being referred to in documents of the late 19th century. The precise extent is uncertain, but Lurgiescleuch was the eastern quarter of the lands. Fernielees Sike rises between Berryfell Hill and Pike Fell and joins Lurgies Burn just north of Lurgiescleuch (it is 'Phairnilies' in 1501, 'Farnylee' in 1501 and 'Farnylees' in 1811).

Fairnilee (fær-nee-lee) n. mansion house in the Tweed valley, near Yair, built 1904-06 by John James Burnett. It was a Crown property from at least the 1460s, leased to Thomas and James Ker in 1480 and by 1501 let to George Ker. John Hervey was recorded there in 1494/5, when he had remission for rieving crimes. In 1541 it was tenanted by George Ker of Linton. The farm remained a property of the Kers until at least the late 17th century and there were Rutherford's of Fairnilee in the 18th century. The grounds contain the ruins of 'Old Fairnilee', a 16th century house, where Alison Rutherford wrote her version of 'The Flowers of the Forest'. It was also the setting for Andrew Lang's story 'The Gold of Fairnilee'. Until 1818 the main road from Selkirk to Edinburgh passed here, avoiding Gala. This is probably the 'Fernleigh' mentioned in the 1837 inquiry into 'fictitious voters', 10 men having been denied their claim to the life-rent there, including John Goodfellow, William Goodfellow, John Hislop, Andrew Ewen, Peter Wilson and Walter Wilson, all of Hawick (also spelled 'Farnile', 'Fairnilee', 'Ferniela', etc.; it is 'Farnylee' in 1501 and 'Fairnalie' in 1780; the origin is probably Old English for 'ferny pasture').

Fairnington (fær-nin-tin) n. hamlet just to the north of Peniel Heugh monument. There was formerly a hospital associated with the place. There is said to have been a stone circle in the nearby Harlaw Plantation, but there is now no sign of it. There were once Maitlands there. In 1494/5 Ninian Rutherford in Ancrum was allowed to 'compone' for stealing cattle and grain from several tenants there and Walter Rutherford for similar crimes, the victims including men by the name of Hogg, Ormiston, Stenhouse, Purves and Wyat. The Earl of Bothwell was recorded as owner in 1502. The lands (including the hospital) were listed among those possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1634. The estate was sold by Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch to George Rutherford in about 1647, and was afterwards a seat of a branch of the Rutherfords. The mansion house dates mainly to the end of the 17th century, but incorporates part of an earlier structure. It is said that there was once a stone circle in a field to the east (the origin of the name is Old English 'ferning dun', meaning 'the ferny hill', and first occurs around 1200 as 'Faringdun'; it is 'farnynton' in 1502, 'Farnyntoum' in 1505 and 'Pharnyngtoune' in 1568/9; it is 'Fernitoun' on Blaeu's c.1654 map).

Fairnyside (fær-nee-sid) n. former farmstead in the upper part of the Allan Water. It was described as a 'pendicle' of Brugh in 1660. It is shown on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands, attached to Skelfill and Langcleuchside. It was leased from Buccleuch Estates in 1744 by Elizabeth Mason, widow of Robert Scott of Harwood, along with the farm of Skelfill (marked 'Fairnysydle' on Blaeu's 1654 map, perhaps on the western side of the Skelfhill Burn; it is ‘Fairneside’ in 1718 and ‘Ferniside’ in 1744.

fairs (fä́rz) n., pl. fairs and markets were once important focal events for towns, involving buying and selling, as well as hiring and entertainment. In Hawick there were several regular fairs, which petered out by the end of the 19th century. The horse- and cattle-related tryst was on the third Tuesday in October, starting in 1785. The main hiring (of servants) and cattle fair was on the 17th of May, with another on the 8th of November (also called the Winter Fair). For a while the May Fair lasted over 2 days, and was one of the most important events in Hawick’s annual calendar. In 1669 there was a request by William Douglas of Drumlanrig for the town to be allowed to hold 2 other fairs and this was allowed by the Crown, these being on the 6th of May and 10th of September, ‘for buying and selling of horse, nolt, shep, flesh, meill, malt and all sort of grain, cloth, lining and wollen, and all maner of merchant wair’. St. Jude’s Fair was mentioned in 1673, and this may have been another name for the Winter Fair. In 1700 it is recorded that 27th June was a fair day (but it is unclear which one). Herds were hired on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Thursdays in April starting in 1780 and moving to the 1st of March by the late 19th century. A sheep market (also called the Tup Fair) was on the 20th and 21st of September, and a wool fair was held on the first Thursday after the St. Boswells Fair in July (or sometimes the day before, i.e. 17th). Fair days were extremely busy in town, with the High Street, Tower Knowe and Sandbed thronging with people. Into the late 18th century they were also commonly scenes of fighting and riots – ‘The rural Fair! in boy-hood’s days serene, How sweet to fancy was the novel scene, The merry bustle, and mix’d uproar, While every face a jovial aspect wore’ [JL].

Fairside (fä́r-süd) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, probably close to Steeleroad-end. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, along with Todscleuch, Tailside and Cleuchside.

fairy (fä́-ree) n. an imaginary being with mischievous magical powers – ‘Survey yon ring, of lively green, Where fairies, dancing, erst were seen’ [JTe] (see also fairies).

fairyfauld (fä́-ree-fawld) n., arch. a fairy ring, nearly circular ring of dark grass (or sometimes mushrooms), said to be where fairies held their meetings, but naturally explained by the outward growth of the mycelium of a fungus as it exhausts the soil nutrients.

the Fairy Faulds (thu-fä́-ree-fawldz) n. former name for an area on the Wilton side of the Teviot, next to the ford that was at the foot of Walter’s Wynd (so where Victoria Laundry was later built). The name presumably relates to the 2 ‘fairy rings’ that could once be seen there (due to the growth pattern of a fungus), but were eradicated when Laidlaw’s Cauld was built. A ‘claystone axe’ was found there, and once in the Museum collection.

the Fairyfauld’s Stream (thu-fä́-ree-fawldz-streem) n. former name for a stream that entered the Teviot near the ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd, on the opposite bank. It may also have been used as a fanciful name for the Teviot itself before industrialisation – ‘…before Laidlaw’s Cauld was built, the river was a fine stream, which auld folks called the ‘Fairyfauld’s Stream’ …’ [JTu] (also written ‘Fairy Fauld’s; the name derived from the ‘fairy rings’ which once existed beside the stream).

the Fairy Knowe (thu-fä́-ree-now) n. former name given to a hill somewhere in the upper Borthwick valley. It is said that a shepherd was thrown into a flooded burn by the fairies there.

faisible (fä́-zi-bal) adj., arch. neat, tidily done, fair, satisfactory, of pleasing appearance, respectable – ‘…A made a faisable mael oot o pei-soop …wui twae rake o curny-dumpleen owre-an-abuin’ [ECS], ‘She’d mony a hatter, puir craitir, bit she wuddlt an brocht thae bairns up owre-an-abuin’ [ECS], ‘I dinnae want buriet a wull’s funeral was the best Attendit that he’d ever seen And the maist faisible dressd’ [DH], ‘And drucken Airchie swore, life-lang, Wull’s funeral was the best Attendit that he’d ever seen And the maist faisible dressd’ [DH] (also spelled ‘faisable’).

faithfi (fáth-ë́, -fe) adj., n. faithful – ‘Colin will just say what he thinks, that his Mysie was a guid brave hearted lassie tae stand sae faithful’ tae sic a blackguard’ [JEDM], ‘There was aye a lot o’ religious tolerasion in Haaick an naebody cared how their neebirs worshipped so the door was aye open teh the faithfeh’ [BW] (also written ‘faithfu’ etc.).

faitur (fa’-ur) n., arch. a feature.

faix see faiks

faizen (fa-zin) v., arch. to unravel, fray at the ends – ‘It’s beginnin’ to faizen oot’ [GW].

faizent (faizin’) adj., arch. frayed, unravelled – ‘...a shauchlin, husslin-shoodert keibult wui ...story claes na targets an spatches an faizent-ends’ [ECS], ‘It’s a’ faizen’t oot’ [GW] (also ‘faizent’).

faizenins (fa-zin-inz) n., pl., arch. frayed edges or ends.

fake (fák) n., arch. a trick, performance – ‘Thus a clever fake describes a smart act or ‘turn’ at a theatre or elsewhere’ [ECS].

Fake Graham (fák-grá-im) n. nickname for several male members of the local Graham family.

Fala (faw-la) n. town on the A68 just into Midlothian. Fala Moor stands on the high ground between Fala (on the A68) and Falahill (on the A7). It was there in 1542 that James V tried to organise an attack into England, but the collected nobility refused to follow him.

Falahill (faw-la-hil) n. former farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, just to the north of Greenhouse farm. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. James Riddell was farmer there in 1789–91.

Falahill Summit (faw-la-hil-sum-i’) n. highest point on the Waverley line between Hawick and Edinburgh at 880 feet above sea level. The summit itself was level and had extensive sidings. The lands of Falahill were once a seat of the Murphys and Edinburgh at 880 feet above sea level. The est point on the Waverley line between Hawick and Edinburgh at 880 feet above sea level. The raid was unsuccessful in capturing the King, James VI, but Bothwell did take him prisoner at Holyrood the following year. After the raid Walter Scott of Goldielands and Gideon Murray were instructed to destroy the houses of Harden and Dryhope belonging to Walter Scott of Harden (although it is unclear if this was done).

fall (fawl) n., arch. old Scots unit of length, also used for area. As a length unit it corresponded to 6 ells or about 18.6 English feet, with measurements traditionally being made using a rope of this length. A Scots furlong was 40 falls and a Falla

Scots mile 320 falls. After unification with England the fall became 6 English ells or 22.5 feet. As a unit of area it was one square fall, i.e. 36 square ells or about 346 square feet. 40 square falls (or just ‘40 falls’) were equivalent to 1 rood or 1/4 of a Scots acre.

Falla (faw-la) n. village in Oxnam Parish, to the east of Camptown off the A68 (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘fag hlaw’, meaning ‘speckled hill’ and first occurs as ‘Falaw’ in 1549).

Falla (faw-la) n. John (d.c.1743) writer living at Swanshie in Hob Kirk Parish. He made coffins for those on the poor roll, as recorded in 1725. However, He was also elder and treasurer to the Parish Session during the time of Rev. Riccarton, and so there may be 2 generations here. John (18th/19th C.) writer in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1808. Robert (19th C.) son of John, he was a mason who lived at Hassendean Common. In 1851 he is recorded there with Alison (possibly his mother) and Jane, probably a daughter. Letters from him exist dealing with the Smith family who moved to Manchester. William (b.1805/6) born in Wilton, he was a woolen slubber who lived on O’Connell Street in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jean, Margaret, George, Betty, Simon and William. By 1851 the family were in New Abbey, Kirkcudbrightshire, where he was a woolen machine keeper, and soon afterwards they emigrated to America. By 1870 they were in North Andover, Massachusetts and by 1880 their surname appears to have changed to ‘Falls’. The house he live in in O’Connell Street was known as ‘William Fala’s house’ on the 1851 census.

Falla Cleuch (faw-la-klooch) n. stream that rises on the northern slopes of Drinkstone Hill and drains into Synton Loch.

falli (fa-li, -lō) n., arch. a fellow { `Sall

a muckle big, bang fallih, braid-shoodert, rash an stumpy, that staapeet alang the Jethart road wui a taatih-steppin streide’ [ECS], ‘There are no ‘Yauld, bang followys’ or ‘Muckle leash fallows’ now-a-days’ [JTU], ‘. . . A dizen near, I’m sure they were, O followys in a raw’ [WaD], ‘. . . A bursedly auld falla wi’ muckle to sell, And muckle to gie wi’ his crack’ [WL] (also written ‘fathilh’: cf. the now more common felli).

falliship (fa-li-ship) n., poet. fellowship { ‘Sall

the throne o’ inequitie hae fallaschip wi’ thee . . . ?’ [HSR].

Falnash (fawl-nash, faw-nesh) n. farm and hamlet near Teviothead, reached by the side road across the Teviot at Bowanhill. It is described as a ‘20 merklands’ around 1390 when given to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk and may have been the residence of Dalgleishe in the mid-15th century. In 1456 William Dalgleish had a sasine for the lands, which had previously been in the hands of the King. Simon Dalgleish had a sasine in 1464. In 1511 it was confirmed to a later Simon Dalgleish, with the consent of his son Kentigern. The Elliots owned the lands from at least 1556. In 1569 a bond of security signed in Hawick lists the following tenants: ‘Wille Elliot, Johnne Turnair, Jame Caveris, Georde Armeastrang, Georde Turnbull, Andro Turnbull, Jame Billop, Jame Bichat, Dande Elliot, Jok Elliot, Hobbe Elliot, Jok Murray, Will Huntar, Johnne Nobill’. In 1627 its value was ‘estimat to 300 merks in stok; in teynd to 40 lb’. In 1643 the lands of Robert Scott of Falnash were valued at £1400. In 1667 Archibald Elliot paid 9,000 merks to Francis Scott to clear the ‘reversion’ on the lands, and then sold them to his brother Gavin Elliot of Caerlenrig. Walter Scott of Harwood and Falnash is recorded on the 1678 Land Tax Rolls; his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £1550 13s 4d. James Baptie was recorded as resident there in 1678. The lands held by the Laird of Falnash once extended much further than the modern farm; in the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch the lands of Falnash bordered on those of Commoueside. Gideon Scott, the Duchess of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain in the late 17th and early 18th centuries lived here and was called ‘Old Falnash’. He also acted as the Duke’s Bailie in Hawick, and others in his family were also nicknamed ‘Falnash’. The Scotts of Langshaw also held lands here along with the mill (so this may be Falnash Mill), inherited by Walter of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690. In 1703 James Stewart was smith there and Robert Riddell was miller. John Scott was recorded there in at least 1703–05 and William Scott was tenant in 1712. Walter Scott paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Falnash to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. By 1788 Falnash and Haregrain were valued together at £684. Robert Laidlaw was the farmer there in the 18th century, followed by Thomas Laidlaw. John Baptie was shepherd in 1797. In 1811 it was valued (along with Haregrain) at £684, part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. William Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and in 1851, when the farm covered 4500 acres and had 17 labourers. Robert L. Turnbull was farmer in the 1860s and 70s. The Falnash (fawl-nash) n. Richard (13th C.) de molendino [mill]’ inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690. Walter Davidson is recorded there, among the poor of Hawick Parish, in 1694. Robert Riddell was there in 1703 and Thomas Elliot in 1720. James Veitch, blacksmith, lived there in the early 18th century and Robert Elliot in the mid-18th century. Walter Hogg lived there in the early 19th century. Adam Beattie and his family were there on the 1841 census. In about the middle of the 18th century, near Falstone, a boy called Paterson was born without hands or feet, and shortly after his birth his family moved to here, where he was brought up, although not long afterwards the family moved again to the Carlisle area, where he died at the age of 7; at the time many claimed that this fulfilled a prophecy (sometimes ascribed to Alexander Peden, but probably older) which went ‘Atween Craig-cross and Eil don Tree A bonny bairn there is to be, That’ll be born in England, brought up in Scotland, And to gang hame to England again to dee’ (it is ‘fal neshmilne’ in 1694, ‘Fahnesh milne’ in 1720 and ‘Fahneshmiln’ in the 18th century).
Falnash

Falnash Parkheid (fawl-nash-park-heed) n. former farmstead near Falnash. The Andison family were there in 1841.

the False Alairm (thu-fawls-a-lärm, -a-lär- rum) n. perceived French Invasion on the evening of Tuesday 31st January 1804, when warning signals blazed all across the Borders, calling men to arms to repel Napoleon’s forces. At 9 p.m. in Hawick a beacon was lighted at the heights of Crumhaughhill, known then as Gotterson’s Knowes or the Watchknowe. James Knox spotted it and ran down the Howegate to the Tower Knowe, firing his gun to signal the lighted beacon, and gaining a prize of 20 shillings. Caleb Rutherford then went around town beating his drum. A trumpet was dispatched up the Slitrig valley to rouse the men as far as Liddesdale, where several men swam across the Liddel to muster. A piper mounted his donkey and played the rousing ‘I am little Jock Elliot and wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ Walter Scott of Wauchope was at the head of the company that came from Liddesdale to meet the company of Capt. Corse Scott of Synton at the Tower Knowe. All the local volunteer units were mobilised, and people bid farewell to their loved ones. The Liddesdale volunteers reached Hawick by 8 a.m., travelling on horse and foot. After the muster at Hawick, the mounted men proceeded down the Teviot valley, many reaching Duns before they heard of the mistake. The foot volunteers were arranged on parade at the Haugh by Lord Minto, awaiting marching orders, which fortunately never came. Capt. Pringle of Whytbank was visiting Lord Napier at Wilton Lodge at the time and the butler is supposed to have said ‘My Lord, supper is on the table, and the beacon’s blazing’; Pringle rode to Selkirk to assemble his troop there. The Selkirk men marched off and reached as far as Dalkeith. Meanwhile the Berwickshire Yeomanry mustered at Duns and marched to Dunbar. A tailor from Denholm, who marched off with the others, but would rather have remained at home was apparently heard to mutter ‘Aw wush aw was a wummie! aw wush aw was a wummie!’ The Alarm had been raised by a soldier at Home Castle at about 8.30 p.m., probably mistaking the fire from a charcoal burner at Shoreswood Colliery for a warning beacon. It spread via beacons on Cavernton Edge, Pennielheuch, the Dunion, Crumhaugh Hill, the Tradhope, the Wisp and Black Andrew. Although there were rumours on the following evening that the French were not really coming, the official word did not come until the morning of 2nd February. The readiness and speed with which the troops were mobilised was a source of great local pride, although some suggested it had been a ruse to test the Volunteers (but there is no evidence to support this). Sir Walter Scott describes some of the local events in his note ‘Alarm of invasion’ in ‘The Antiquary’ (he himself is said to have ridden from Gilsland to reach Dalkeith 24 hours later). The Hawick Provost lit a centenary beacon at Crumhaughhill in 1904, and there was a reenactment in 2004 – ‘One moment the watcher stood, robbed of his wit, Then he roared to the plains of Parnassus – ’

Falside (fawl-sid) n. farm in Southdean Parish, between Chesters and Roughlee. This could be the lands held by ‘William de Fausyde’, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It was mentioned in a document of 1502, when Ralph Ker of Primside Loch obtained a charter of apprais- ing of the lands after George Douglas, Master of Angus failed to present one of his tenants who had stolen from the English. 2 towers near here, ‘West Fawsyde and Est Fawsyde with a pele of lyme and stane in it’ were burned by Dacre’s men in late 1513. It was described as 8 steadings valued at £10 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539 (with William Douglas being allowed the ‘fermes’ from there in 1538 and Sir Andrew Kerr of Fernhill in 1539. Tenants in 1541 were Adam Cowman, Robert Oliver (alias ‘Laird’), Ninian Oliver, Walter Oliver, Roger Oliver (called ‘Little Roger’), Robert Laidlaw, Alexander Laidlaw, John Oliver, and Roger Oliver (called ‘Lang Roger’). The lands were split into 9 separate steadings with a total value of 175 shillings. Ringan, Dandy and Martin Oliver were recorded there in 1544. Jock Common was tenant there in 1571/2. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryards from his father John in 1606. In 1669 there were 5 Oliver tenants, namely Stephen, David, Thomas and 2 Patricks, as well as Commons. In 1694 the tenants recorded were Steven Oliver, David Common and John Oliver, Thomas Oliver and his sons, and (another) Steven and Dand Oliver. In the 17th century the lands were split into ‘East Fa’side’, ‘West Fa’side’ and ‘Fa’side’. The Olivers were tenant farmers there through the 17th century until 1747 and were the ancestors of the Olivers of Langraw. George White and John Armstrong are recorded there in 1797. William Pringle was shepherd there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. J. Ord was farmer in the 1860s. The farm also had a mill, with a mill pond. On the hill on the opposite side of the road there are signs of rig and furrow. There was also a place of the same name in Selkirkshire, owned by the Scotts in the 17th century. There is a restored 16th century L-plan mansion of the same name in East Lothian (also ‘Fawside’ etc.; the name dates in 1632, suggesting it was associated with Cleuchhead. It was marked as ‘Fasetsyde’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, near Saughtree, roughly between Pinglehole and Dawstonburn, perhaps near the modern Spout Sike. It is mentioned as ‘Fallset’ on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buc- cleuch, when it appears to be confused with Pinglehole.

Falset (faw-, fawl-si’) n.., arch. falsehood, fraudulent dealing – ‘...ploitit aganis the said Erle of Buccleughe ane manifest falsit, and caussit vitiat the dealing { `[WHO].

Falsed (fawl-si’d) n.., arch. falsehood, fraudulent dealing – ‘...ploitit aganis the said Erle of Buccleughe ane manifest falsit, and caussit vitiat the dealing { `[SB1624].

Falsed (faw-, fawl-si’) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, near Saughtree. It is probably the ‘Terra de Fawsyde’ in the Ermeldon area of upper Liddesdale, on the c.1376 rental roll and valued at 33 shillings. It is recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, value at 48 shillings and tenanted by Henrisons (possibly Hendersons). It is recorded as ‘Cleuchside otherways designed Falset’ among the possessions of Hab Henderson in 1632, suggesting it was associated with Cleuch- head. It was marked as ‘Fasetsyde’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, near Saughtree, roughly between Pinglehole and Dawstonburn, perhaps near the modern Spout Sike. It is mentioned as ‘Fallset’ on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buc- cleuch, when it appears to be confused with Pinglehole.

back to at least 1502/3 and the origin is probably Old English ‘fah side’, meaning ‘the speckled slope’; it is ‘Fawsyde’ in 1538, ‘Fawysid’ in 1539, ‘Fawsid’ and ‘Fawsidé’ in 1544, ‘the Fawside’ in 1571/2, ‘Fawyside’ in 1606, and ‘Fa’syd’ and ‘Fasyd’ in 1669; it is ‘Fasyde’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Fallside’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Falside (fawl-sid) n. former lands in the Ettrick valley in Selkirkshire, north of Foulshiels. They were once Crown lands from at least 1456 until 1502. James Scott (also of Kirkurd and Hasseendean) was recorded as possessor of the lands of ‘Myddilstede de Fausyde’ 1473–99, being granted the lease for life. James Scott is recorded in 1494/5 having sheep stolen from him there. In 1501 the rentals were assigned to his wife Margaret and son John, and he again had the lease in 1503. Margaret, received the lands ‘in liferent’ in 1510, with the heirs of the deceased John (probably James’ son) being granted heredity. Adam ‘in Falside’ is recorded in 1526. Adam Scott claimed the tenancy in 1541, paying £13 6s 8d yearly. This was probably the ‘Fawsyde’ where Janet Scott, widow of Robert ‘Elwand’ received instruments for lands at Appletreeshall that she bought from Robert Scott of Howpasley. It was recorded as a 40-merk land in 1653. The lands and stepping of Falsyde were listed among the Buccleuch estates in the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and in the marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. The lands were later in the hands of the Scotts of Hasseendean. And in 1693 they were still part of the estates of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch (it is ‘Falsyd’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Fauyside’ in 1456, ‘Fawsyde’ in 1473, ‘Fawsidé’ in 1480, ‘Fausyde’ in 1483 and 1491, ‘fawsyd’ in 1494/5 and ‘Fawyside’ in 1541).

Falsyde (fawl-sid) n. Helen (b.1787) recorded as ‘a very old woman’ in 1787 when she died in Hawick. Her surname is written ‘Falsyth’. James (14th/15th C.) parson of the church of ‘Ruiale’, probably ‘Rule’. He was a witness to the charter from Archibald, Earl of Douglas about 1406, granting the Baron of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Another James ‘of Fausyd’ of Glasgow Diocese was an imperial notary in the 1450s and may have been related. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. James (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for Walter Martin in Alton Croft, for glover James Scott and for schoolmaster John Purdom, in 1702 for James Robson’s illegitimate child, in 1704 for James Irvine, tenant in Hawick Shiel, and for John Rutherford, in 1705 for merchant William Oliver, in 1706 for shoemaker George Allan, in 1708 for gardener William Riddell (along with gardener James Dunn), for Dand Gray in Whittle, for glover James Burn, for Robert Tudhope (servant to Falnash), for David Young and for John Rae, in 1709 for merchant James Simpson, for William Scott, tenant in Whitchesters and for William Scott, son-in-law of John Scott, tenant in Branxholme, in 1711 for merchant William Black (whose wife Elizabeth Falsyde was probably related to him), and in 1712 for Walter Bryson and for William Turnbull (along with ‘Mr’ Thomas). He is probably the James recorded as an elder of Hawick Kirk in 1718 (but not mentioned as such in a list a year earlier). He married Isobel ‘Jerdon’ (or Jardine). Their children included: Marion (b.1692), who married Andrew Turnbull; Janet (b.1694); James (b.1701); and William and Bessie (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were glovers James Burn and James Scott. He may have been related with Thomas. John (16th/17th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. John Cuthbert Rutherford (d.1915) son of Rev. J.T., minister of Eskdalemuir. He was training as a lawyer when WWI broke out, and as a member of the 1/5th K.O.S.B., he served as a Lance Corporal. He was killed by a shrapnel shell in Gallipoli. His 2 older brothers were also killed in the war, and it appears that the surname may have died out with them. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when she paid tax for 2 hearths. It is possible that she is the Margaret who married William Scott, but was widowed and secondly married Robert Thomson in Newmill. Nicholas (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, where his name is given as ‘Nicol Fausy’ in the county of Roxburgh. He may well be an ancestor of the local Falsides. William (in Roxburghshire) and Robert (in Edinburgh) also signed in 1296. His seal was attached, showing a tree of four branches. In 1298 he is recorded in an English document as a ‘rebel with the Scots’, when he and his wife Loretta are recorded as former owners of lands at Doddington in Northumberland; his name is there ‘de Fauside’. In 1303/4
he is ‘de Fausside’ when his wife’s dower lands in England were restored to him. Philip (14th C.) owner of lands in Liddesdale, listed on a c.1376 rental document of the Douglasses of Morton. His lands are recorded as ‘Terra Philippo de Fausside cum Holdoun’, worth 35 shillings. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His name is written ‘Faside’ and he was probably related to the William who is also listed. He may be the Thomas who witnessed baptisms for William at Woodburn in Robertson Parish in 1686 and for Adam Elliot (resident of Whitchesters) in Hawick Parish in 1704. He may be the Thomas whose son Alexander was baptised in Wilton in 1699. Thomas (17th/18th C.) mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1712 as ‘doctor of the grammar school at Hawick’. He was also recorded in 1709 as schoolmaster at Hobkirk. So whether he was actually associated with Hawick school (perhaps temporarily), or whether this was an error, is uncertain. In 1712 he was designated ‘Mr’ when he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull in Hawick; the other witness was James, who was probably a relative. He married Anne, daughter of the late Alexander Robertson. William (13th C.) recorded as being ‘de Fausyde’ in Roxburghshire when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. He may have been related to ‘Nicol Fausy’, who also signed. He was also on a jury in 1304 at Dumfries (made up of men from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire) to decide on the privileges claimed by Robert Bruce, Earl of Carrick (later King); he was there ‘de Fausside’. His lands may have been the Falside in Southdean Parish. William (14th C.) recorded in 1335/6 when he was pardoned by Edward III for crimes in Scotland, along with Eustace Loraine and Richard of Craik. His name is listed as ‘Willo de Fawsede’ and it is possible he was a descendant of the earlier William. William (16th C.) factor (or similar) for Scott of Branxholme in the Parish of Eckford, recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. William (17th C.) resident of Woodburn in 1686 when his daughter was baptised in Robertson Parish. The witnesses were Thomas (who was surely a relative) and Robert Learmonth. He could be the same William who was later at Winningtonrig. William (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written ‘Faside’ and Thomas is also listed, and so presumably related. William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Fletcher in 1718, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Kirkton Parishes. John (b.1730) and William (b.1733), baptised in Cavers, may have been his children (also written ‘Faasyde’, ‘Faside’, ‘Fasyde’, ‘Fawsyde’, etc.).

famail (fa-mal) adj., arch. female – ‘...and the said landsirch of Coklaw to cum to the airis famail of the said James ...’ [SB1519].

famous (fa-mis) n. respectable, reputable – ‘...in respect it was publickly done at the mercatt cross, in presence and in the hearing of divers famous witnesses’ [BR1685], ‘William Gledstains conpearred, and was told by ye minister that he was credibly informed by famous persons of his neighbours ...’ [PR1717].

fancy (fan-se) interj. indicating surprise or indignation, ‘can you believe it’, ‘fancy that, imagine – ‘fancy, she’s hed a blue rinse’. ‘Oh, fancy!’ (used conversationally, note that the interjection without ‘that’ is relatively unknown in standard English).

fand (fand) v., poet., arch. found – ‘Alas for wae!’ quo’ William’s Wat, ‘Alack, for thee my heart is sair! I never cam bye the fair Doddhead, That ever I fand thy basket bare’ [T], ‘...They fand their tree three ells o’er laigh – They fand their stick baith short and sma’. With my fa ding, &c.’ [CPM], ‘...in sic a fear that he fand every hair on his head rise like the birses of a hurcheon’ [LHTB], ‘The wate-men that gaed aboot the citie fand me ...’ [HSR], ‘...the paines o’ hell gat haud on me; I fand truble an’ dool’ [HSR], ‘In freedom’s lap it fand a mother ...’ [JEDM], ‘A faand the caald fair awfh’ [ECS] ‘A faand the guid o that denner as suin as A’d gaen wui’d’ [ECS], ‘While mill sounds jar and grate, I’ve fand The secret o’ it a’ ’ [WL] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation; also written ‘faand’; this is the past tense form of finnd, while the past participle is more usually funnd).

fang (fawng) n., arch. plunder, burden, v., poet. to catch, acquire – ‘When guarded by this fourfold fence, Auld Nick can never fang us; Nor Bona parte e’er drive us hence, Nor villains mint to wrang us’ [JR], ‘But gif the warl’ be like to wrang ye, Its frows will fear, its smiles will fang ye’ [JR].

Fang (fawng) n. Douglas (?) son of Kenneth, one of the Fang Brothers who purchased Pringle of Scotland from Dawson International in 2000. He was Hong Kong Industrialist of the Year 2002. He was named C.E.O. of Pringle’s in 2005, replacing Kim Winser. In 2008 he announced that production would cease in Scotland. Kenneth he was living at about 39 High Street with his wife Elizabeth, children Margaret (a milliner), Isabella (a teacher) and Catherine (who married Thomas Scott), and (presumably) brother James. His wife was living with their 3 daughters on the Cross Wynd in 1851 and so he was presumably deceased. He married Elizabeth, who was probably a daughter of stockmaker William Beck. Their children included: Margaret (b.1810); Isobel (b.1812); Elizabeth (b.1814); Catherine (b.1816); and James (b.1823).

Faskenn (faw-kin) n. tower house marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map near the Whitrope Burn meets the Hermitage Water. It could be related to Flaske Sike, which is in the same area, or may be a transcription error.

Fasson (faw-sin) n. Lieut. Francis Anthony Blair ‘Anthony’ or ‘Tony’ (1913–42) born at Lan-ton in Bedrule Parish and educated at Jedburgh Grammar School, he joined the Royal Navy.
Along with Colin Grazier, he volunteered to swim out naked to a damaged U-Boat in the Mediterranean, after the crew had been captured. They recovered several documents and pieces of equipment, passing them to someone else in a small boat, before the submarine sank, drowning him and Grazier. The recovered items included the ‘M4 Enigma Machine’ and codebook, which were passed to Bletchley Park, where the cipher was cracked, and probably thousands of lives saved as a result. He was posthumously awarded the George Cross ‘for outstanding bravery and steadfast devotion to duty in the face of danger’. There is a plaque honouring his memory in Bedrule Kirk.

Fast (fawst) n. ancient fortification in Bedrule Parish, later indentified with the farm of ‘Fast-castle’.

Fast Castle (fawst-kaw-sul) n. stronghold dramatically perched on the coast between St. Abbs and Cockburnspath. It has existed since the 14th century, long possessed by the Homes, and notorious during the reign of Logan of Restalrig. An old lock from the Castle was presented to the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1856.

Fastcastle (fawst-kaw-sul) n. former farm in the Rule valley, on the west side of the river, near the bridge to Bedrule Mill. It became part of the extensive estate of Wells and was probably adjacent to Doveshaugh. In 1644 John and Thomas Young from there were cited by the minister for not signing the Covenant; at that time it was owned by the Earl of Traquair. Adam Craig was living there in 1717. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. An ancient fortification at ‘Fast’ was possibly an outwork of Bedrule Castle, which lay about 500 m to the south-east. It is just by the roadside, on a natural rise, built up into a motte-like structure, with a rampart on the summit enclosing an area about 35 m by 25 m. Just to the north-west there are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation in aerial photographs (it is written ‘Falsecastle’ in 1717; it is marked on

fast days (fawst-daz) n., pl., arch. an old church custom of fasting on particular Sundays, with preparatory services on the preceeding Saturday and thanksgiving services on the following Monday. This was particularly prevalent before the annual Communion service, before which there would be a Sacramental Fast Day, when all work was suspended and there were 2 (long) church serdices. This custom died out locally towards the end of the 19th century. Official fast days in Hawick were the 2 Wednesdays before the last Sunday of June and before the second Sunday of Deember. Earlier than the 19th century the June days were closer to harvest time. Other neighbouring areas had different days, but typically on Wednesdays or Thursdays (although in Castleton it was the Friday before the 2nd Sundays of June and November). There were also other days officially prescribed for fasting, sometimes by Act of the General Assembly, e.g. for prayers ‘for King George and his royal family’ in 1715, with several other examples yearly in the Parish records
– ‘. . . ye durst not crook ye’re mooth tae whustle on a Fast-day, but now ye may whustle or sing or anything ye like on a Sabbath day’ [WiS].

Fasteneven (fawst-ten-ee-vin) n. another name for Fastern’s E’en – ‘Of holidays throughout the year, There’s nane that raises sic a steer As Fast-eneven . . . ’ [JoHo].

Fastern’s E’en (faws-turnz-ee-in) n., arch. old name for Shrove Tuesday, or the day before fasting starts at Lent. Festivals of different sorts were held in many Scottish towns, including handball games, sometimes referred to as ‘Fastern’s E’en Baa’. In Hawick the Baa game was held on the previous day, in earlier years on the following Monday, and about 1780 on Fastern’s Eve itself. In the 2 or 3 weeks leading up to the event there would be fights between gangs of youths from the ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ sides of town – ‘. . . shall keep the same assurance till Fasternes
evne next to come . . . ’ [CBP1584], ‘At Fasten’s E’en, when ba’s are played, I’ll look for ane that is nae here . . . ’ [TCh].

Fastheugh (fawst-hewch) n. former lands on the southern side of the Yarrow valley, with Fastheugh Hill rising above. The lands were owned by the Crown in the latter part of the 15th century. William Donaldson was there in 1493 when he had 12 goats stolen by William, son of William Scott of Goldielands. In 1494/5 James Ker was tenant there when sheep were stolen by Adam Howison in Commonside. John Clerk was also living there at the same time when his goods were plundered. In 1502 John Murray of Falahill’s farm there was raidied by Turnbulls. And in 1535 a raid on these lands was among the crimes for which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused; at that time they were held by Lancelot Ker. Lands there were granted to James, son of James Pringle of Tymes in 1540. George Ker was tenant there in 1541, paying £30 yearly. The lands were part of the Buccleuch estates in 1663 and when surveyed in 1718 (it appears on Blaeu’s c.1654 map as ‘Fastheuch’; it is ‘Fastewech’ in 1456).

Fasthill Plantin (fawst-hil-plan-tin) n. plantation near Synton, just to the south of Synton Parkhead (it is already marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

fat (fawt) n., arch. a vat, wooden tub – ‘Two females are convicted of stealing great quantities of ale, sometimes turned, sometimes working in the fat . . . ’ [BR1697].

fatefi (fai’fi) adj. fateful – ‘. . . But then yin fatefi day, A retail giant came oor way, And it wasni long afore, They’d ta’en owre yon Presto store’ [IW] (also spelled ‘fatefi’).

Fathill Plantin (fawt-hil-plan’-in) n. plantation on the Chisholme estate, to the north-west of Parkhill and to the west of Churnton Burn. There is a possible old enclosure there.

Fatlips Castle (fa’lips-kaw-sul) n. tower built in the 16th century, perched on Minto Crags, and sometimes also called Minto Tower. It is 9 m, 3 stories high, with a vaulted basement and parapet walk. Built by the Turnbulls, it passed to the Elliots in 1705, and is now the property of the Minto estate. It was restored in 1857 and then renovated in 1897/8 (to designs by Sir Robert Lorimer) as a shooting lodge and private museum. The collection on display included an early, large breech-loading gun (possibly the one taken from Sebastopol by Col. Sir Gilbert Elliot), a muzzle-loading cannon (taken by Adm. Elliot from the French off the Isle of Man in 1760) and a third cannon (that belonged to the mutineers of the Bounty was recovered from deep water off Pitcairn Island by Capt. Russell Elliot). At that time there was a carriage drive approaching it from the west. Since the 1960s it was sadly neglected and became vandalised. However, a grass-roots campaign, supported by the Minto estate, resulted in funds being secured from public and private funds, and a renovation was completed in 2013. A fanciful tradition states that an underground passage led from here to Barnhills Castle. The origin of the name is uncertain, but one idea is that it derives from the look of Turnbull of Barnhills; there are other stories, including that of a goat on the Dunion, which warned of the approaching English, or that gentlemen were traditionally allowed to kiss one of the ladies on entering – ‘. . . an the gray waas o Fatlips keekOOT oth throh atween the treis that skugget Barnhill’s staney bed’ [ECS] (it is sometimes stated that it was also known as ‘Catslick’, but that may be an error; note that there is another Fatlips Castle near Synington in South Lanarkshire, and a couple of others elsewhere, marked on old maps).

Faughill (faw-hil) n. farm and hamlet just west of Bowden (the name may derive from Old English for ‘variegated hill’, is also spelled ‘Faughill’ and is recorded on Stobie’s 1770 map).

faughish (faw-gish) adj., arch. palish, having faded colours – ‘. . . just as it begoud to get faughish derk’ [LHTB].

fauhd (fawld) v. to fold – ‘did ee fauld up they claes yit?’ , ‘Paid James Wintrope for fauld’ [C&P]. ‘These taits o’ gowden hair, Aboon thy faulded eye’ [HSR], ‘Aside the sparkling jewels put, thy silken robes gae fauld’ [TCh], ‘The bonnie wee flowers fauld their leaves in the gloamin’ ’ [JT], ‘. . . And robin faulds his ragged pipes, Reckons his arles and airts awa’ [DH], ‘In owre the Firth a clean wind blaws And the fauldin’ plaid is gethert . . . ’ [WL], n. a fold (also written ‘fald’).

faul (fawd) n. an enclosure for livestock, sheepfold, pen – ‘When the sheep are in the fauld, and the ky at hame, And a’ thewarld to sleep are gane . . . ’ [CPM], ‘. . . one year there was a dyke on one side of a fauld, built within the edge of the Common’ [C&L1767], ‘. . . nar he-gaits owt o’ thy faulds’ [HSR], ‘I’ve suffered cauld in Auld Nick’s fauld. In nichts o’ drookin’ rain I’ve seen it . . . ’ [TD], ‘Yon are the hills that my hert kens weel, Hame for the weary, rest for the auld, Braid and high as the Aprile sky, Blue on the tops and green i’ the fauld’ [JHu], ‘The last sheep cryin’ thrace the fauld, The afterglow duist turnin’ cauld . . . ’ [DH], group of people bound together.
by common beliefs, congregation – ‘To where the Faither’s fauld at last . . .’ [WL].

faulder (fawl-dur) n. a folder, person in the kniwtwear industry who folds finished garments, usually attaching the hanging tag and placing the garment in its bag for presentation.

fauldit (fawl-dec’, -di’) pp., adj. folded – ‘They think if they’re only fauldit up In the empty husk o’ a creed . . .’ [FL].

Faulds Cottage (fawldz-ko’-eej) n. farmstead to the west of Buccleuch.

Fauldshope (fawldz-höp) n. farm south-west of Selkirk, over the Ettrick from Oakwood. A ruined keep here was once the home of the Hogs, including Will Hogg called ‘the Wild Boar o Fauldshope’ and several wives who were reputed to be witches. One ‘Lucky Hogg’ is supposed to have turned Michael Scot into a hare. The Hogs held Fauldshope under the Scotts of Harden for centuries and are commemorated in James Hogg’s ‘Fray at Elibank’. It was rented by the Earl of Traquair in 1022 and by the wild boar of Fauldshope he strides in and the Brydens have brought him to dare you, Wi’ mony a hardy an’ desperate man; The Hoggs ‘Young Wattie o’ Harden has crossed the Yarrow, 1633 and William Dalgleish was there in 1797 {Elibank’}. It was rented by the Earl of Traquair in the 19th century it was one of 2 coaches running between Hawick and Carlisle, the other main one being the Favourite (thu-faw-ri’) n. name of one of the regular stagecoaches operating in Hawick in the 19th century. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory it is listed leaving the Spread Eagle in Jedburgh for Hawick on Tuesdays and Fridays at 5 p.m. and leaving Hawick for Kelso via Jedburgh on Tuesdays and Fridays. In 1837 it is listed leaving from the Tower Inn on Tuesdays and Fridays at 8 a.m., bound for Jedburgh and Kelso. Later in the 19th century it was the main one being called ‘the Engineer’.

fault (fawl’) n., arch. a misdemeanour, offence – ‘. . . by yr night rambling commit divers and sundrie abominable irregularities, unlawful faults, and enormities and abuses by yr scandalous out-sundrie abominable irregularities, unlawful faults, . . .’ [BR1706] (cf. the more common fault).

fause (faws) adj., poet., arch. false – ‘Behold, the setting sun that gilds the skies! O! when I’m fause, may it nae mair arise!’ [CPM], ‘Itt wasne ane thing’ [WL].

fausehood (faws-hood) n., arch., poet. falsehood – ‘. . . an’ heth conceifet mischief, an’ brung furth fausehuud’ [HSR], ‘. . . an’ thair richt han’ is ane richt han’ o’ fausehuud’ [HSR].

faw (faw) adj., arch. multi-coloured, variegated (the word survives in several place names, e.g. Faw Hill, Fawhope, Falla and Falside).

Faw see Faa

Fawcett (faw-si’) n. Richard owner of Wolfelee when it was run as a hotel.

Faw Hill (faw-hill) n. hill in Southdean Parish, just to the north-east of Rueltownhead, reaching a height of 331 m (1,086 ft) and containing a triangulation pillar. On the eastern slopes, towards the farm of Ashtrees, there are the remains of an ancient settlement, perhaps of the Iron Age, but now almost levelled by cultivation (the name probably comes from the Scots ‘faw’, meaning variegated in colour).

Fawhope see Phaup

Fawhope Knowe (fawp-now) n. hill in Liddesdale, just to the south-east of Riccarton Junction, reaching a height of 294 m. Fawhopeknowe Sike rises to the north and passes there to join the Riccarton Burn. John Crozier is listed as shepherd at ‘Phaupknow’ in 1797. There were 4 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census (also sometimes ‘Phaup Knowe’; a farmstead there is marked ‘as Fapknow’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it could be related to the places listed as ‘Folepul’ and ‘Fopillus’ in earlier documents).

Fawhopeknowe Sike (fawp-now-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, which rises on the slopes of Saughtree Fell and runs southwards, to the east of Riccarton Junction, passing Fawhope Knowe and through Catscleuch Culvert, to join Riccarton Burn.

Fawlaw (faw-law) n. George (15th C.) recorded being ‘in hawic’ at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He had remission for stealing a ‘dacre’ of (i.e. 10) hides from James Braidfoot out of ‘le bog de Selkirk’. His surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. George of Wells (16th C.) surety for John in Littledean in 1502. He is also recorded in an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. He is also listed as ‘George Fawlo of Wallis’ in 1530 among the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He may have been Laird of Wells east of Jedburgh. James of Spittal (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘James Falay’ in 1700 among the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Littledean. He was recorded at the Justice-aire in 1502, as surety for his wife Janet Rutherford, and was fined for her non-appearance. Later in 1502 he had remission for being part of the slaughter of David Henrison in Maxton Kirk and for stealing from Muirhouselaw in the company of Thomas Grahamslaw; his surety was George of Wells. Additionally he had remission in 1502 for involvement in the seizing of 3 Henrisons from Muirhouselaw, delivering them to Englishmen, to be held for ransom, for stealing livestock from them and for associating with Herbert Pringle; his surety was Walter Haliburton. Perhaps the same John was granted a charter for ‘Ester Fawlaw’ in 1510, along with the office of the East Ward of Roxburghshire. In 1512 he had a charter for Softlaw. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Philip Faula’ when Alexander ‘Wyndis’ of that Ilk was convicted of the ‘foresought felony’ done to him on St. Mary’s Day while riding to Branhelome, with Robert Scott being fined for non-appearance. It is unclear what malice was done to him, and whether he was connected with the later local priest Thomas. He must be the same ‘Philip Faulo’ who had 4 horses stolen from him and his neighbours at ‘Quhitchester-holme’ by associates of John Dalgleish around 1510. Thomas (16th C.) priest mentioned in the Charter of 1537, with 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street. He is designated both ‘Sir’ and ‘Mr.’, making it unclear whether he held merely a Bachelor or a full Masters degree in the priesthood. Since several other clergymen are also mentioned, it is unclear what his status was within St. Mary’s Kirk of the time. A possibly related William Fawlaw also possessed a particate of land on the north side of the street. William of Kirkton (14th C.) member of the ‘retour of inquest’ if 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. He was certainly a Roxburghshire Laird, but it is unclear whether this was the Kirkton near Hawick. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. William (d.bef. 1560s) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. The land ‘callit William Fallawiscois’ to the east of Nether Billerwell is mentioned in 1562 (also spelled ‘Fawlaw’, ‘Faulo’, ‘Fawlo’, ‘Fowlaw’, etc.).

the Feast o the Assumption (thu-feest-o-thu-aw-sum-shin) n. Feast of the Assumption of Mary, a Catholic celebration of the assumption of the body of the mother of Christ into heaven, which supposedly happened several days after she was entombed. This is celebrated on 15th August, and prior to the Reformation would have been an important day in the Hawick calendar, particularly because of the Parish Church being dedicated to St. Mary. The ‘return’ for the Barony of Hawick in 1450 states that it is held of the superior, the Earl of Douglas, for the payment of an arrow at Hawick Kirk on the day of the Assumption. The Charter of 1511 indicates that the Barons of Hawick are to be paid an arrow ‘in blenche-ferme’ on this day. Similarly, in the 15th century, Scott was to pay a silver penny to Inglis at St. Mary’s on this day for the lands of Branxholme.

Fenwick (fen-eek) n. house and area on the Teviot opposite Brauxholme Park and just down from the Muir. Walter Scott of Fenwick was witness to a document for Whitchesters in 1456 and others in 1484/5 and 1488. William Scott of Fenwick was recorded in 1502, was on an inquest panel in 1509 and gave a pledge for another Scott in 1510. The ‘ditch of Fenwick’ formed part of the northern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter. It is listed as part of the Barony of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, among those lands held by the Baron ‘in tenandry’. Later it became part of the Lordship of Whitchesters. In 1627 it was described as a ‘neuer payit ferme’, i.e. a farm that had never been rented to a tenant, and ‘estimate to pay 8 bolls in stok, parsonage 2 bolls, and vicarage 3 lbs’. In 1643 these are probably the lands of Robert Scott of ‘Cloak’ valued at £100 and still held by him in 1678. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is shown that a small part of the farm lay on the northern side of the Teviot. There were Elliot lairds there in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. It was farmed by Scotts until the mid-18th century. Robert Scott of Fenwick was recorded in 1747. Bailie Thomas Turnbull purchased the estate in 1762. The farm was still valued at £100 in 1788 (and still in 1811) when owned by Thomas Turnbull; Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick is the largest owner of land within the Burgh of Hawick on Wood’s 1824 map. David Lees was farmer there in 1861, when it was composed of 140 acres. In 1893 he was born in Hawick. He was farm-er at Northhouse in 1868. He was listed as innkeeper at the Tower Hotel in Slater’s 1852 directory. His caricature from 1856 appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickiana’. He was on the original committee of Hawick Bowling Club, and probably first President. This is probably confusion with John. John (17th C.) son and heir of Randall. In 1652 he gave a lease of lands to his sister Catherine, including ‘Hawicke’ in the parish of Kirkharle (i.e. the one in Northumberland). John (b.c.1808) born at Auchtergaven in Perthshire. He was proprietor of the Tower Hotel in the mid-19th century, with William Crozier as his head hostler. He is recorded providing the dinner for the Magistrates’ party at the Common Riding of 1840. He was there in 1841, with his wife Helen (probably Stewart). He was listed as innkeeper at the Tower in Slater’s 1852 directory. His caricature from 1856 appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickiana’. He helped with the last ceremonial run of the coach from Hawick to the south in 1862. In 1849 he married Janet Crone or Bawden and was listed with her at the Tower Hotel in the middle part of the 19th century, with William Crozier as his head hostler. He is recorded providing the dinner for the Magistrates’ party at the Common Riding of 1840.

Fenwick Burn (fen-ek-burn) n. stream that flows to meet the Teviot near Fenwick.

Fenwick Loan (fen-ek-loin) n. former name for the road running from Haysike over to Whitchesters. The name was referred to in the description of the boundaries of the Common in 1767 – ‘The east down that Syke into Weatland Burn and the dykes of Alton Crofts, and so on to Fenwick Loan head, where the march turns south by hillocks up the west side of the head of the Loan…’ [C&L1767].

Fenwick Park (fen-ek-pawrk) n. name given in 1890 to an area of large houses, reached from Weensland Road up Manuel’s Brae. Some of the houses had been there perhaps a century before. This included St. John’s, which had been known as Ivybank, St. John’s Manse (previously ‘The Birks’) and Elmind, or ‘The Elms’. New building occurred in the few years after 1962 to make the modern housing development of Fenwick Park. The name derives from Fenwick on Teviot, specifically referring to Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick who owned land there.

Fenzlehope (fenz-lup) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, where Thomas Elliot is recorded as farmer in 1797. It could be related to the earlier records of ‘Folepul’ and ‘Fopillis’, but note that ‘Phaupknow’ is listed separately on the 1797 land records of ‘Folepul’ and ‘Fopillis’, but note far from the der.

feucht (fewcht) pp., arch. fought (the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ü and oo; cf. focht).

Feu-Rule (few-rool) n., arch. former barony within Rulewater, once stretching the entire breadth of Hobkirk. It was also sometimes referred to as the Barony of Hallrule. The lands were formerly part of the Barony of Cavers and later became a barony on its own. The existence of this barony probably explains why there was never any barony of ‘Hobkirk’. The entire barony was once ‘thirled’ to Hallrule Mill. In 1453 there was a letter of reversion of the lands from Andrew Kerr of Altonburn to Sir Robert Colville of Oxnam. In 1479 they were still held by the Kers of Cessford when Margaret Ker renounced all rights to her uncle Walter. In 1495 the superiority was granted by James IV to Janet, daughter of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. About that time the lands consisted of Town o’ Rule, Hallrule Mill, Deanside, Appotside and Tythethehouse in Hobkirk Parish, along with Holm, Middle and Hangingside in the Parishes of Cavers and Kirkton. In 1499 half the lands were re-sided by Sir William Colville in favour of Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing, but the ‘reversion’ of the lands was granted by Elizabeth, Lady Pedmont (Sir William Colville’s daughter) to her son-in-law Robert Colville of Cleish in 1541; however, the Colvilles appear not to have repaid the longstanding debt. In 1509/10 the lands were listed among the holdings of Douglas of Cavers, dating back to the time of King David; however, this may have explicitly meant Hallrule and it is called ‘Fewhawrroull’ in 1511, when the ‘mill thereof’ is also mentioned. It was owned by Lord Herries of Terregles and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst jointly, then in 1562 there was a ‘decret of division’ of the lands between Agnes (4th Lady Herries) and Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 it was in the hands of the King through forfeiture by Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, although de Fever Hospital (tu-fee-vur-hos-pl’-mul) n. hospital built at Burnfoot, off Burnfoot Road, as an isolation hospital for victims of infectious disease, particularly scarlet fever. Formally called the Hawick and District Joint Fever Hospital, or the Hawick and District Infectious Diseases Hospital. It was funded jointly by the Town and County, but saw little use. The hospital was designd by Alexander Inglis and built around 1902. It had 24 beds and also had an adjoining wooden smallpox hospital. The name ‘Fever Hospital’ was also sometimes used as an alternative name for the Anderson Sanatorium, built on the site of a former dilapidated building at Howdenburn in the last few years of the 19th century. The former Fever Hospital became an annex of Burnfoot Primary School in the 1960s and was converted into a Social Work Outreach Centre in the 1990s.

They were possessed by the Lindseys of Wauchope in the 15th century, with the Homes as superior, then was owned by Simon Armstrong (along with other lands in Ewesdale) in the early 16th century, and was later that century occupied by the Elliots. Gavin Elliot of Fiddleton was accused of murder in 1606. The superiority of the lands (and others in Ewesdale) was held by the Homes, forfeited about 1516, but recovered by George, Lord Home, certainly by 1535. John Elliot is recorded there in 1569. William Elliot 'of Fidilton' signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, along with several other Elliots of Ewesdale. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. For a while the lands were split into 'Nether Fiddleton' and 'Over Fiddleton'. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it was combined with Unthank and consisted of 1843 acres, bounded by Twislehope, Mosspeebles, Tarraw, Arkleton, Eweslees and Blackhall. The farmhouse shown in 1718 was further south that Unthank, near Fiddleton Brae. There are also two old settlements to the west of the A7 near Fiddleton Bankend Cottage. A cist was excavated at Camp Knowes near here and found to contain human bones, flints and stone artefacts (the name occurs as 'Fediltoun' in 1506, 'Fiddlinton' in 1509/10, 'Fiddaltoun' in 1525, 'Fidlitown' around 1610, 'Fiddeltoun' in 1606, 'Fiddleton' in 1608, 'Fiddletown' around 1610, 'Fiddeltoune' in 1622 and 'Fidletoune' in 1663; it is 'Fidditon' on Gordon's map of c. 1650, while 'O. Fiddleton' and 'N. Fiddleton' are on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Fiddleton Toll *(fi-dul-tin-tol)n. cottage on the A7 beyond Mosspeebaul, which was a former tollhouse. It is located at the road junction with the side-road to Hermitage Castle. The toll window, sticking out close to the road, can still be seen. Thomas Graham was recorded at 'Fiddletown bar' in 1783. Andrew Rodger was tollkeeper there in the 1860s.

The washing was done by a female friend of the bride-to-be, usually on the Tuesday before the wedding. A tub of warm water was prepared, containing a ring from a married woman present (the finding of which in the tub being considered lucky). All those present washed the bride's feet, and there were often pranks involving soot etc.

Fitz Alan (fitz-aw-lin) n. Edmund 9th Earl of Arundel (1285–1326) son of Richard, 8th Earl. He took part on the war against Scotland in 1306 and was appointed Warden of the English Marches in 1316. He organised an expedition against Scotland in 1317 and part of his force was ambushed by Sir James Douglas’ men at Lintalee. He went in and out of favour with the English King and was eventually executed. However, his estates were restored to his eldest son Richard. Hawise (13th C.) daughter of Alexander, 4th High Steward of Scotland and sister of Sir James, 5th High Steward, she was heiress of Old Roxburgh. She married John de Soulis, and so became Lady Liddesdale. Her daughter Muriel married Sir Richard Lovel. Walter (b.bef. 1115–77) first High Steward of Scotland under David I. He helped encourage Norman families to settle in Scotland. He owned large amounts of land in western Scotland, but also Birchenside on the Leader Water in Berwickshire and Hassendean in Teviotdale. He witnessed the renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. In the late 1160s he was witness to the confirmation of the gifts of lands to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1166 he witnessed a charter by King William to Robert de Brus. After his death there was a document confirming the lands he had given to the monks of Paisley Priory, including a ploughgate in Hassendean (called Huntlaw). He married Eschina de Molle, heiress of Molle (or Mow) and Huntlaw. Their son was Alan, 2nd High Steward. The Stewardship was thereafter hereditary and led to the Stewart Kings several generations later. His seal shows a knight on horseback, holding a sword and shield and with the words ‘SIGILL. Uchtred (12th C.) first known ancestor of the noble Scotts, with some indication that his family came from Galloway, and that they had held the barony of Scotstoun in Peeblesshire. Although, there is no definite information about his parentage or earlier ancestors, his designation as ‘son of Scot’ distinguished him from others of the same name. He lived during the reigns of Alexander I and David I. Around 1116 he witnessed an inquest made by David (then Prince of Cumbria) regarding the foundation of the church at Glasgow, and also witnessed the foundation charter for the monastery at Selkirk (where he was ‘Uchtred filio Scot’). He was among the courtiers of King David I. About 1145 he witnessed the charter of King David’s son Henry to the church of Melrose. His son was probably Richard. The Dukes of Buccleuch and many other local branches of the Scotts can trace themselves directly back to him (also written ‘Uchtred Filius Scot’, i.e. the son of Scot).

the Flag (thu-flawg) n. Hawick’s colour, standard, pennon, pennant, or pensil, also known as ‘the Banner Blue’. It is meant to be a copy of the original flag captured at Hornshole, which is believed to have originally belonged to a group of English soldiers attached to the Priory of Hexham. The oldest surviving flag dates from 1707, sometimes called ‘the Union Flag’, since it contains the date 1707 (but the connection with the Union of the Kingdoms is probably just a coincidence) and is in the Museum; it was ordered by Bailie Ruecastle at a cost of £10 14 shillings, and was ready for the end of May that year. It was a replacement for a much older flag, which was so decrepit in 1706 that the Cornet-Elect refused to carry it, causing near riots. The result was that the Bailies took the responsibility of carrying the Flag that year, while the young men of the town appointed their own unofficial Cornet (whose name is not recorded) to carry another Colour. The Hawick flag is ‘A Banner Azure with Saltire Or’ with the date 1514 also in gold, and should be pennon-shaped (with the date read correctly when held like a lance). The vertical line may have simply hidden a seam. The letters ‘HC’ (for ‘Hawick Colour’ or ‘Hawick Common’ or perhaps even ‘Hawick Callants’, no one is entirely sure) were probably added later, perhaps to the original after its capture. The 1707 flag, of much lighter material than later version, was probably not the first replacement (although some have suggested that it might have been). A flag from around the end of the 18th century still had the correct colours, but with ‘1514’ in red and the cross in yellow; this was repeated for the replacement of 1832. A new flag made in 1865, and carried by the Cornet in the procession for the opening of the Allan Water supply and the opening of the Carlisle railway, was mistakenly given a red (or crimson) cross, and was square-shaped (‘... They love the banner that leads them on – the banner of red and blue’ [JEDM]). New flags were purchased in 1865, 1877 and 1892, still with the wrong colours. The error was probably made around 1850 (or 1845 and again around 1855 if 2 flags were purchased between 1832 and 1865), presumably because of indifference by the Town Council and citizens to the details of the ceremonial side. At the end of the 19th century it was established (by Craig & Laing, although the yellow colour had been suggested a few years earlier by J.E.D. Murray) that the flag should be pennon-shaped and with a golden cross, and this was implemented for the new flag of 1903, with subsequent copies retaining this design. The old coloured Flag was last used at the Thursday morning Chase of 1903 (and can be seen outside the Town Hall in an 1893 painting by Frank Wood). A replica flag was made by the ladies at Pringle’s and sent to the K.O.S.B. troops in Germany during WWII, then returned with the names of places where local men had fallen embroidered on it. Flags of schools and guilds were also carried in earlier Common Ridings, but since the mid-18th century only the Town’s Colour has been allowed. In 1851 the Flag was stolen when flying at the Tower Hotel overnight, but recovered a week later in Silver Street. Until 1861 the flag used to fly from the Chief Magistrate’s (sometimes the Junior Magistrate’s) house until it was bussed on the Thursday evening. After that year this happened at an inn selected by the Cornet, until the Colour Bussing was moved to the Town Hall in 1887. Now the unbussed Flag first appears at the Thursday morning Chase and is bussed on the Thursday evening, after being displayed from the Town Hall balcony all day. After being bussed inside the Town Hall it is waved from the balcony and left on display there. On the Friday the Cornet carries it at the Chase, then the Acting Father takes it to St. Leonard’s, where it is displayed outside the farmhouse. It is then taken by the Cornet on the Ride around the Marches. After the Cutting of the Sod it is carried by the Acting Father, and handed again to the Cornet at the gate from pilmuir Field onto the Mair. The Cornet rides proudly round the course with the Flag and later it is displayed from the roof of the committee room. Leaving the Mair, it is dipped in the Teviot and is returned to the Council Chambers for the night. On the Saturday it again goes to the Mair, and is returned on the Saturday afternoon at the Handing Back ceremony. The Flag was loaned to Hexham Abbey for the procession for the consecration of a new nave in 1908, with a copy presented to the Abbey by the Callants’ Club in 1914 and a replacement presented by the Provost in 1972 (the one last carried by the Cornet in 1971); this now hangs in the abbey’s north nave, with the 1914 copy returned to Hawick. There was a new flag in 1972, which was used until 1991. The flag was bussed by the Queen at a special Golden Jubilee ceremony in Melrose in 2002. It is rarely brought out except at the Common Riding, but formerly was used in local processions, e.g. at the opening of the Allan Water supply in 1865 (when a new Flag was provided) and the Dod Burn water supply in 1882. The Flag is also draped over the coffins of ex-Cornets, the practice beginning with James Smith in 1894. A practice flag (green, with the words ‘Aye Defend’ in yellow, donated by the Mosstroopers’ Club) is used by the Cornet and the Acting Father at the Mair after the Wednesday morning Chase. A new flag was provided in 2014 – ‘Hail to the banner that proudly floats o’er us, Hail to the brave hearts that bear it along’ [JT], ‘Then rally around the good old flag – let the slogan ring out again!’ [JEDM], ‘…And blue as my wee lad’s wondering eye Watching the Flag go fluttering by’ [JYH], ‘The flag is oor emblem, an’ stands for a’ that we cherish an’ haud dear’ [BW1939], ‘The flag for which oor fithers died At Hornshole be Teviotside’ [IWl].

flaik (fläk) n., arch. a piece of frame-work, frame – ‘for ane ryott with each other, and the said Janet Holywell in ane provocation for taking of her stand, ane flaik being laid there before’ [BR1670], a hurdle used as a barricade or gate – ‘…my faither sprang ower the bucht to be near the lasses’ [LHTB].

flaip (fläp) n., arch. a flop, thud, a clean or unbroken fall – ‘I’ve gotten mony flaips an’ fa’s’ [JoHa], a dull, heavy sound caused by a fall.

flair (flär) n. floor – ‘hey, there’s nae coat hooks on a flair!’, ‘…teltt her no ti weer her best evenin dress ti the Ball because the Toon Hall flair wad be awfi dirty’ [IWl], ‘Ye scrubbed the flair until it shone’ [LI], ‘Ma auldest sisters washed the close, The other yin’s dune the flair’ [AY] (see fluir for the earlier pronunciation).

the Flake Gate (thu-fläk-gä) n. former entrance to a small field off the southern side of Eastgate in Denholm.

Flake Hill (fläk-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, opposite the farm of Eilrig. It reaches a height of 318 m.

flam (flam) n., arch. a flame, flare, glare – ‘Thon burnin’ Zeppelin made a grand flam i’ the lift’ [GW], ‘…een as the flam o the weather-gleam skails afore’d the clubs thre th the owrcrus-sen lift’ [ECS].

flaneerin (flawn-ee-rin) n., arch. fancy-work, embroidery, decorative trimming.

flang (flawng) pp., arch. flung, did fling – ‘Salome flang like a wanton, free, A lunt, the flash o’ her witchin’ ee’ [WL] kicked out the legs, danced – ‘…an laap an flang as yauld as a wuddie’ [ECS] (also written ‘flaung’; this is the past tense, while the past participle is usually ‘flung’).

flanker (flang-kur) n. one of the 2 wing forwards in rugby, playing at numbers 6 and 7, and forming part of the back row in scrums.

flannen (fla-uen, neen) n., adj., arch. flannel – ‘Ma flaaneen seerks’ aa up ma back an’ s hard as buckram’ [ECS], ‘A can mind when tredsman wore Flannen seerks wi a navy blue stripe’ [DH] (also written ‘flaaneen’ and variants).

flapper (flaw-pur) n. one who owns or trains horses for ‘flapping’ meetings, also a horse that races at such meetings.

flappin (flaw-pin) n. amateur horse-racing in the Borders, not under the Jockey Club or National Hunt rules. The word has been used elsewhere in Britain (and also for greyhound racing), but the Borderers have been the most enthusiastic supporters of unofficial racing. The main locations are at Hawick Moor, Langholm and Selkirk (at the Rig). Those at Hawick Moor that are not associated with the Common Riding are organised by ‘Hawick Horse’. There were also races on Flatt farm near Newcastle upon the early years of the 21st century. There were formerly meetings across much of Scotland, although support waned in most places, with the last meeting in the Aberdeen area around the 1990s. The only other place in Scotland to now have such race meetings is Irvine. Among places known to have meetings in the past are Insh (Aberdeenshire), the Black Isle, Bogside, Lanark, Canoonie, Dumfrieshire (near Newton Stewart) and Galashiels (once). Historically, flapping has a reputation as a hot-bed of swindlers and riffraff, and the exclusive Jockey Club still gives a ‘warning off’ penalty for participants. The Common Riding of 1946 was the first flapping meeting to be held in Scotland. The Tradesmen’s Handicap, run on Common Riding Friday is the flappers equivalent of the Derby – ‘... daein a pickle flappin tae on his Uncle Elec’s Nell’ [IW], ‘... Till hei got intae flappin’, racin’, no under orders’ [MB] (the origin and antiquity of the word is uncertain, but there is a claim it comes from an old slang word for a loose woman; however, it seems more likely it is related to ‘flap’, recorded as ‘a sudden happening’ in Aberdeen). Flatt flappit (flaw-pi’-pee’) pp. flapped – ‘He crawed and flappit over the dyke, An’ roosed the bees ayont the bike!’ [WFC].

Flask (flawsk) n. former lands on the east side of the Ewes valley, between Hoghill and Terrona. Flask Wood is still marked on the Ordnance Survey map. It was also formerly called ‘Flaskholme’, although in some periods the 2 names may have referred to distinct neighbouring lands. Along with Howgill and Glendivan it was described as a 10-merk land when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1550, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604 and by Robert Maxwell in 1619. Archibald Armstrong ‘in Flascholme’ is recorded in 1607. It may be the ‘Flocksteid alias Flasket’ possessed by John Scott ‘balie in Liddisaill’ recorded in 1632. Both Flask and Flaskholme are listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was ‘Flask alias Flaskholme’ when the superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. There were Armstongs there in the 17th century. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 540 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Cooms, Howgill, Nether Wrae and Terrona. It is also stated that ‘the water hath done it much damage by altering its course’. John Anderson was there in 1783. Robert Beattie, James Johnston and their families lived there in 1841 (it is ‘Flaskhoome’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Flasket Sike (flaws-k'-siik) n. small stream on the west side of Whitrope Burn in upper Liddesdale.

Flaskwud (flawsk-wud) n. Flaskwood, former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, listed as vacant at that time. It was probably the ‘Flasket’ included along with Over Closs, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. The farm was presumably on the Flasket Sike, off the Whitrope Burn in upper Liddesdale.

flat (fla’) n. a storey in a mill, or an area defined for specific factory production, e.g. ‘the Back Flat’ or ‘the Middle Flat’ – ‘... one day while going through one of the spinners’ flats there he noticed a piecer lounging about’ [JHH].

flate (fla’) pp., arch. scolded, chided (also ‘faet’; this is the past tense of flyte, noted by E.C. Smith; the past participle is flattened).

flatins (fla’-linz) adv., poet. flatly, at full length – ‘Ane other thro’ the breeks him bare, While flatins to the grund he fell ... ’ [CPM].

Flatt (flaw’, flat) n. farm just north of Kershopefoot, on the Scottish side of the Border. It is already ‘Flatt’ in 1541 when valued at 5 merks and tenanted by Simon Armstrong. ‘Young Sim’ was recorded as residing there in 1583. Will Elliot ‘called Blakheid’ had 4 cows stolen from the lands there in about 1610. Lancie Armstrong of Flat was recorded in 1611. It was possessed by Francis Robson in 1632. Elspeth Scott was tenant there in 1694, and paid tax on 3 hearths. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, extending to 442 acres, bounded by the Kershope Burn, Liddel Water and Sorbitrees; the map shows the house in the same place.
as today’s farmhouse and some old trees corresponding to the modern Sorbiholm Strip. Henry Elliot paid tax on 11 windows there in 1748. Ellliots were tenants in the later 18th and early 19th centuries. Henry Elliot was there in at least the period 1785–91. John Elliot was farmer there in 1797 and another John in the 1860s. There was a mill pond to the east. A mineral spring on the farm was once considered to have healing properties, and is marked ‘Stinking Well (Chalybeate)’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The farm was used for ‘flapping’ race meetings in the latter part of the 20th century. It is also a former name for lands to the east of Smallholm Crags (also ‘The Flatt’, it is the ‘Flates’ in 1583; it is ‘Flett’ on Blaue’s c.1654 map and ‘Flat’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

flauchter see flachter
flaught see flacht
flaw [faw] n., arch. a piece of ground used for drying peats – ‘A flaw o’ peats, the spot of ground occupied by an individual, on the edge of a moss, on which his peats are spread for being dried, in the summer season’ [JoJ], a quantity of peats (also flowe).

Fleck [fleek] n. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer in Holbkirk Parish. He paid the Horse Tax at ‘over Chesterhall’ in 1797; this was probably a temporary name for Over Bonchester. His children included: Betty (b.1789); and James (b.1791).

Flecks see the Flex
fleece [flees] n., arch. a supply of stock, a flock or company of people, humorous term for an outfit of clothes – ‘A’ve bocht a new fleece o warm claes for the winter months’ [ECS].

the Fleece see the Fleece Inn
Fleece Close [flees-kloes] n. passageway at 6 High Street, named after the Fleece Inn, the ballroom of which it led to. In the mid-19th century there was the sign of a golden fleece at the entrance.

the Fleece Inn [tha-flees-in] n. inn formerly at 6 High Steet, also known as ‘the Golden Fleece’. It was reached by the long passageway there, behind what was for a long time Davies the saddler’s. The attached ballroom was further up the close, with access from an outside staircase (seen in an old sketch). In the middle of the 19th century it was used for many purposes, including weddings, dances, theatrical performances and concerts in the winter, as well as ‘Blind Wull’s’ dance classes. At one point there were 3 separate dance instructors using the ballroom. It was a popular place for raffles to raise money for distressed workers. There were performances of all kinds there, including the exhibition of a supposed mermaid and performances by Borders clown Billy Purves. One of the last performances there was a recital of selections from Shakespeare by a father and daughter. It was also used for many years for the monthly business meetings of Allars Kirk, with the upper room (No. 5) used for this purpose known jokingly as ‘the Manse’. Thomas Easton ran a school here for a while and in 1838 it was the location for the meeting that organised the opening of the Chartist Store (i.e. the Co-op). George Hunter was the proprietor in 1825 and 1837, Margaret Best is listed there in 1852, then James Hay, followed by James Scott, with the last tenant being town bellman Samuel Lawrence. The licence was reduced from that of a hotel to a public house in 1871 and lost altogether in 1875 for a ‘breach of certificate’. There are 2 sketches made by T.H. Laidlaw in 1899. The ballroom was demolished in 1948 – ‘Jock Buckham to the Fleece is gane To sleep among his rags . . .’ [WE].

fleech [fleech] v., poet. to cajole, coax, beseech, flatter – ‘But what are a’ their fleecing tales to me? Colin I loo, but them I downa see’ [CPM], ‘I’ve fleech’d an’ foughten a’ in vain – Jock disna seem to care; I’ve thrashed him o’er and o’er again Until my airm was sair’ [JT].

fleet [flee] v., poet. to flourish, to flow, flood – ‘. . . blaw apon my gairden that its spices may fleet owt’ [HSR], ‘Where the weet comes frae the flowe, And fleets, ye mind, on yon bit lea’ [HSR], arch. to be awash with water – ‘. . . and boggy ground on the other which fleets water all the winter season’ [GT].

Fleety Wud [flee’-ee-wud] n. wood on the east side of the Slitrig, to the south of North Berryfell farm. The cottage there is Fleety Cottage or Fleety Haugh, formerly called Elliotfield (the name presumably relates to propensity for flooding in the area).

fleg [fleg] v., arch. to frighten, scare, drive away by scaring – ‘. . . But stuff my wame wi’ guid kail brose. To fleg the caul’ Syne strutting in guid plaidin’ hose, I look fu’ baul’’ [JR], ‘. . . Gude faith your cares will get a fleg, Though baith the deil an’ Merlin Ye meet that day’ [JR] ‘. . . She threw doon a guinea, and thought it weed waiered. For he, to her ailment, had given a fleg’ [TCh], to fleg (as a horse, from a fright).

fleggar [fe-gur] n., arch., poet. someone who flinches, one who frightens – ‘Even in the Tranties, wi’ their beggars. The spoilers had found fearfu’ flecgars[AD], a horse that is prone to flinging off its rider (the meaning of Agnes Douglas’ line may possibly instead be ‘an exaggerator, liar’ just be ‘scarer’).

flei (fli) n. a fly, any general flying insect – ‘is that flei a cleg or jist a hoose-flei?’; ‘shut yer mooth or the fleis’ll get in’, ‘Dirty white-wesh, deid-rot treis, Baked bean tins and mawky fleis … ’[DH], v. to fly – ‘she’s gliffed stiff ti flei’, ‘But lei took iz roond the Haugh – Oh, how the time did flei!’ [DH], ‘… it’s sixteen eer sin oor Queen an Prince Philip last veesiteet the toon. How time fleis’[BW1978] (also spelled ‘fley’; see also hoose-flei, mauky-flei and shairny-flei).

flei ceemetry (fli-see-mi’-ree) n. humorous term for fly paper – ‘They came to a horrib-le, fascinating end on revolting ‘fly ceemetry’s’ … ’[BB], humorous term for a fruit slice made of pastry and currants.

fleich (flich) v., poet. to cajole, another – ‘… wi’ fleichin’ lipps, an’ wi’ ane double haurt do thaye speik’[HSR].

flei-hauf (fli-hawf) n. fly-half in rugby, playing at no. 10, and being effectively the leader of the backs.

flei-hook (fli-hook) n. a fishing fly, especially in the phrase ‘dressed like a flei-hook’, meaning overdressed.

flei-in adder (fli-in-aw-dur) n., arch. the dragon-fly (also ‘flein’ adder’, ‘fleen ether’, etc.).

flei-in bent (fli-in-ben) n., arch. a rough grass, purple melic, Molinia caerulea.

flei-in oot (fli-in-oo) adj., arch. sticking-out – ‘Yet there was a Hawick wumman used to take a flyin’oot lip whenever the train got to Reston Junction … ’[DH].

flei in the air (fli-in-thu’-är) interj. used to express doubt – ‘that’s nae mair gold is flei in the air’.

Fleming (fle-min) n. Sir David of Biggar (d.1405/6) eldest son of Sir Malcolm. He distinguished himself at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388. Being in royal favour he gained several properties and titles, including being (briefly) given the Barony of Cavers and Sherifflom of Roxburgh by King Robert III on being forfeited by the Earl of Douglas in 1405. In 1404 he was a Commissioner for negotiating a truce with England. In 1405 he was one of those ensuring (un-successfully, for he was captured by the English) the safe passage of Prince James of Scotland by ship to France, to escape the plotings of the Douglases. However, the Royal force was met at Long Hermiston Moor and he was killed there by James Douglas of Balveny, son of Archibald Earl of Douglas. As a result Cavers (and the Sherifflom) re-turned to Douglas hands, and later Douglas of Balveny became the 7th Earl of Douglas. He married Jean, daughter of Sir David Barclay of Brechin and secondly married Isabel, heiress of Monycabow. He had a daughter Marrion (who married William Maule of Panmure) and 2 sons, Sir Malcolm and David. He was ancestor of the Earls of Wigtown. Hugh (12th C.) landowner at Malton in Yorkshire. He is recorded in Reginald of Durham’s collection of miracles of St. Cuthbert, probably written in the 1170s. He was said to have fled Malton due to the incursions of the army of William the Lion, and sought refuge in the chapel of St. Cuthbert in the Slitrig valley. A vision of the saint told him to take moss from the stone basin that was outside the chapel and place some under his hood. He was thereby able to pass his enemies undetected and return to Mal-ton. James (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. His surname appears to be ‘Fleeming’. He is probably the James ‘Fleemin’, married to Agnes ‘Putrie’, whose children born in Hawick included William (b.1685), Margaret (b.1687) and Isobel (b.1692). John (14th C.) chaplain at Hawick in the mid-1300s. He may be the same as ‘John de Hawick’ mentioned in 1356. All that is re-ally known about him is recorded in an action brought against him by John Leche, secretary of the Bishop of Glasgow in 1363, asking for con-firmation that he held the Hawick benefice ‘al-though John Fleming, a younger man than him-self and not a priest, held the Church and con-test ed it, saying the patronage belonged to him’. John (18th/19th C.) cabinet-maker in Castleton listed among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is listed as a joiner among heads of households in 1835. He was listed as a wright in Newcastle upon Pigot’s 1837 directory. He does not occur on the 1841 census. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Roan, near New-castle upon. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Ruecastle. He was taxed in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. Robert (b.c.1810) tailor who lived on Kiryard in 1841. He was there along with shoemaker Walter, probably his older brother, as well as Elizabeth, probably their mother, and children Janet and James. W. (18th/19th C.) recorded as a teacher on Melgund Place in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is probably the young schoolmaster called William who was residing in Kelso in 1841.

Flemington (flem-ing-tin) n. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cauldmill in 1720 and 1723. He married Ann Turnbull in 1720 and their children included: Margaret (b.1721); Thomas (b.1723); Robert (b.1726); Robert (again, b.1728); Archibald (b.1731); and Margaret (b.1738) His name appears to be written ‘Flemingtong’, but is rare in the area.

flenders (flen-durz) n., pl., poet. splinters, fragments – ‘...thou sallt basch thame inti flenders like ane patter’s vesshel’ [HSR], ‘Thou didist smatter the heds o’ leviathan intil endirs’ [HSR].

flesh (flesh) n., arch. a general term for butcher meat – ‘A made a faisable mael oot o pie-soop, caald flesh, picklt ingans ...’ [ECS], ‘...for aw’ve the pot on the day, an’ aw henna the flesh in yet’ [JTu].

flesher (fle-shur) n., arch. a butcher. There were formerly strict laws attached to the treatment of meat, which the Town Council enforced, e.g. in 1713 a flesher was fined for bringing a carcass into the Town that had already died in the country. In Hawick the ‘fleshers’ were one of the 7 incorporated trades, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They obtained their ‘Seal of Cause’ in 1720, when there were 7 of them, but had ceased to exist by the end of the 19th century. In Selkirk the ‘Fleshers’, a remnant of the former trade incorporation there, are still an active group with their own reception etc. during the Common Riding. The amount of business done locally was at a fairly low level until the latter part of the 18th century. Cutting the hamstrings of escaped cattle in the public street was one of the barbaric practices of the 18th century mentioned by Robert Wilson. An 1860 photograph (of George Davies’ shop) shows the once common sight (before being banned in 1862) of carcasses hanging up outside the shop – ‘Item, to Adam Lidderdale, fleschour in Hawik, for flesche to the place, tuentie pundis’ [SB1574]. ‘The said day, Bessie Henderson, spouse to Cuthbert Henderson, fleshour, being accused ...’ [BR1638], ‘Item, that all flescheris present the hale flesh slaine by them at the mercat place ...’ [BR1640], ‘The fleshers are ordained by the council not to sell skins until they shall first be exposed in the market place ...’ [BR1663], ‘The incorporations are 7, viz. weavers, tailors, hammermen, skinners, fleshers, shoemakers, and baxters’ [RRG], ‘...Past fletcher, webster, hind’ [DH] (also sometimes ‘fletcher’; several spelling variants exist, such as ‘fleshour’).

the Flesh Mercat (thu-flesh-mer-ki’) n., arch. former name for a market held in Hawick to sell meat. In 1755 it is recorded that ‘The Flesh Mercate’ was finished at the cost of £20, suggesting there was a building constructed especially for this purpose. It is specifically recorded that a ‘cross-tree’ was put up there in 1755 and there was a ‘roup’ for that year (presumably it was rented by butchers). However, in 1762 the Council resolved to ‘take down the Flesh Market and Cross’, and to dispose of the stones and timber; this suggests that it may have been located close to the foot of the Cross Wynd.

Fletcher (fel-chur) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Borthwickshiel in 1718, 1722 and 1724. He may have married Margaret Tait in 1715. His children included: Janet (b.1718); Margaret (b.1720); James (b.1722); and Adam (b.1724). He was surely related to William who was at Borthwickshiel about the same time. Alexander (b.1883/4) saddler in Newcastleton, listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 48 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Elizabeth (‘Betty’). Probably the same Alexander was listed as a tailor in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1689 he witnessed baptisms for John Turnbull and William Balmer. He married Margaret Smail and their children included Isobel (b.1692), William (b.1696), Janet (b.1698), Helen (b.1701) and Andrew (b.1704). Andrew (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Kedie. Their children included: Janet (b.1737); Mary (b.1740); and Walter (b.1741). He was probably related to Betty Fletcher, who was married to Thomas Kedie at about the same time. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitfield in 1759. He married Mary Henderson in 1756. Their son James was baptised in 1759, with witnesses William and Robert Scott. George (d.c.1558) son of Thomas, from whom he was given the lands of Ruecastle in 1519. His son was John. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son John was born in 1636. George (17th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish.
In 1643 his lands were valued at £12. He is probably related to the George who was recorded in Bedrule Parish in 1694. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate and is probably related to James and John, who are also listed. George (18th C.) tenant farmer at Turn near Stobs. He was there in the 1750s when his servant Robert Thomson got into a violent altercation with the Hawick Town Herd over his flock being hounded off the Common. He could be the George, son of James, born in Bedrule Parish in 1730. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Reid, whose surname is written ‘Red’. Their children included: William (b.1670); Thomas (b.1672); James (b.1675); and Helen (b.1676). James Haining states that ‘in some notes of James Wilson, Town Clerk, appears a famous Fletcher m. to Isobel Reid or Rae’, but it is unclear what was famous about him. He is probably the James, son of Thomas, born in Ashkirk in 1644. James (17th C.) tenant in Bellendean. Along with several other men from the upper Borthwick, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. His name is given as ‘Flesher’. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His name is recorded as ‘Flatcher’. His wife was Janet Scott and they had a son George (b.1662). James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, included William (b.1693) and George (b.1698). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He may have been son of the earlier James. His children included Mary (b.1726), Margaret (b.1728) and George (b.1730). Andrew (b.1732) and William (b.1735), baptised in Ashkirk Parish, may also have been his children. Rev. James (1725/6–1803) from Dalkeith, he became the first minister of the Newcastleton Burgher Kirk in 1762. He was one of 6 students who entered the divinity hall in 1758, only 2 of whom became ministers. His appointment to Castleton came after a long delay, caused by difficulty in finding a suitable man. He was said to be skilled at optics and keen on astronomy, and a friend of James Veitch of Inchbonny. He is also said to have built a ‘wooden horse’ which he used to get around the Parish; it is unclear whether or not this was an early predecessor of the bicycle. There were also stories of how he had second sight and predicted things about the next 3 ministers of the parish. He was said to be ‘a man of singularly primitive manners’ and was not a successful minister, being a strict disciplinarian and having an off-putting manner. A new Kirk was built around 1773, but it was said that the congregation was in decline by 1793. Around this time there was also the establishment of Newcastleton, dramatically altering the parish. A complaint was made to the Selkirk Presbytery in 1801 that he was preaching against accepted doctrine, which led to discussions of his dismissal, during which he announced his resignation; he had apparently come to a new but unorthodox understanding of the Trinity, and written of this in a preface to an edition of Dr. Watts on ‘The Sonship of Christ’. He moved back to Dalkeith and shortly before his death published ‘The orthodox scheme freed from the remains of Arianism . . .’, largely a commentary on the works of Rev. Isaac Watts. He married Christian Beattie in 1769 and had a daughter, also Christian (d.1835). The family are buried in Castleton churchyard John (15th C.) resident of Hartwood. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford from Phaup was allowed to compone for several crimes, including stealing sheep from him and Robert Nichol. His surname is recorded as ‘flegiar’. John (16th C.) son of George, he inherited the lands of Ruecastle in 1558/9. Then he sold the lands to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst immediately. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Brydon and their children included Janet (b.1680) and Isobel (b.1690). John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. He may be the John whose children baptised in Bedrule included: Helen (b.1693); Thomas (b.1696); Margaret (b.1698); Isabel (b.1701); Janet (b.1704); Jean (b.1708); John (b.1706); and possibly Jean (b.1718). John (18th C.) tenant in Bramholme. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included Margaret (b.1726). John (18th/19th C.) saddler in Hawick with Andrew Atcheson. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia. Peter (18th/19th C.) weaver in the West-end. Along with Robert Leithead, he walked to Selkirk to secure the services of the drummer and fifer there for the ‘rebel’ party during the 1809 Common Riding. He is probably the Peter who had a child John with Jane Paterson in Wilton in 1794. The death of his illegitimate grandchild was recorded in 1816. Robert (15th C.) owner of the lands of Ruecastle. He had a

sasine for the lands according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1471, with his name given as ‘Roberto Flesware’. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. Robert (d.c.1492) son of Thomas. He inherited the lands of Ruecastle (in Bedrule) in 1470/1. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1561 when Robert, son of Walter Scott of Synton, promised to produce him at the next truce day at Coldstream. This was to answer the charge that he stole 3 horses from Steven Simpson in Berwick. He is recorded as ‘Hob Flescheour’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Hosocate in 1710. He probably married Bessie Scott in Roberton in 1708. His children included: Isobel (b.1710); and Helen (b.1714). Thomas (d.c.1740) inherited the lands of Ruecastle from his father Robert in the 5th year of the King’s reign (i.e. either 1441 or 1464), 8 years after his father’s death. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Robert, from whom he inherited the lands of Ruecastle. In 1497 he retained Ruecastle after having them held ‘in wadset’ to Janet Moscrop. He gave the lands to his son George in 1519, except for ‘liferent’. Thomas (d.1680) from Bedrule parish, where he has one of the earliest surviving gravestones. William (15th C.) tenant in ‘le crug’, which could be ‘Crook’ near Hawick. His name is given as ‘William flegiar’ when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aiere in Jedburgh in 1493; he appears right after 4 Routledges who are connected with the lands of Trows near Crook. He was also called in 1494/5 and again failed to appear. William (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickshielis in 1721, 1723, 1725, 1727 and 1729. He may have married Isobel Smail in Roberton in 1722. His children included: Walter (b.1721); Margaret (b.1723); Mary (b.1725); Andrew (b.1727); William (b.1729); and Margaret (b.1731). He may have been brother of Adam who was at Borthwickshielis at the same time (formerly spelled ‘Flechar’, ‘Fleggear’, ‘Flegiar’, ‘Fleschar’, etc.).

the Fletcher (thu-fle-chur) n. reputedly the sole survivor of Selkirk’s men, who returned from Flodden with an English flag and cast it down. The ‘Casting of the Colours’ is the ceremonial re-enactment of this at Selkirk Common Riding every year. Whether there is any veracity to the story is unclear, and there is a contradictory version involving a Town Clerk called Brydon.

flown (floon) pp. flown – ‘she’s never been abroad or flown anywhere’, ‘It has flown away’ [GW], ‘The nest’s flown’ (= young ones have taken wing’ [GW] (cf. the older flew).

the Flex (thu-fleks) n. farm on the northern side of the road between St. Leonard’s and the Slitrig, and a name for that general area. The name is old, with a ‘Richard de Flex’ of Roxburghshire signing the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and Alexander of Flex witnessing a charter in 1357/8. Alexander Gledstains held the lands in the early 15th century, with a confirming charter in 1458, but had to yield them to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1464/5 following a case before the Justiciary South of the Forth. William Douglas had a sasine for these lands (along with Kirkton Mains) immediately following; this was done at the ‘principale messuagium’, i.e. main dwelling. In the charter for the Barony of Hawick in 1511 these lands were listed among those held by the Baron ‘in property’. James Scott of Flex is recorded in 1556. The lands were among those inherited by James Douglas in 1572 along with the Barony of Hawick and listed among the property of the Baron in 1594. In a land valuation of 1627 it is listed as ‘estimat to 100 merks in stok, parsonage 2 bolls, vicarage 5 lbs’. A charter for the land was given to John Gledstains in 1653, when it was described as ‘extending to five merks, old extent’, and it was probably the main residence for the Gledstains of Whitlaw. It was still valued at 5 merks (of old extent) when inherited by Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw in 1672. John Stoddart was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. William Lillico was herd there in 1700. Walter Martin was there in at least 1700-02. William Henderson was smith there in at least 1702-09 and Francis was also smith in at least 1702-04. James Reid and William Scott were there in 1743. Robert Boyd purchased the farm in 1751 and in 1753 march stones were laid out along the burnside to mark the boundary with the Common. John Laing lived there in the late 18th century, and William Eliott Lockhart in the late 19th. By 1788 the lands of Flex had been disjoined from those of Whitlaw, were valued at £144 10s 9d and were owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae; it had the same value and owner in 1811. William Scott ‘at Flex’ was also recorded in 1811. Henry Scott Riddell also lived here for several years, walking 9 miles to preach at Teviothead. In about 1874 it was recorded being owned by Allan Elliot Lockhart. The Cornet and followers come back to Hawick this way after the ‘Orderin o the Curds

the Flex Stakes (thu-fleks-stäks) n. race run at the Common Riding. An amount of £500 was left by James Elliot (d.1923), farmer of the Flex, with the interest to be run for yearly.

fley (fli, fil) v., poet. to scare, frighten, put to flight, make flee – ‘And whiles a wee bit prayer began, To fley away the ghasts and witches’ [JT], ‘He was fley’d oot o’ his wuts’ [GW] (cf. flei).

flicher (fli-chur) n., arch. a flake (also flicht and flichter).

flicht (flicht) n., arch. a flake (of soot or snow), a small speck (e.g. in porridge or other food), a mote of dust – ‘...where yin braiths God’s air clear an no suddit wui suitty flicht’ [ECS] (also flicher and flichter).

Flicht (flicht) n. former name for an area in Liddesdale, south-east of Castleton, close to the Border. It is now marked by ‘Flight’s Moss’ on the Ordnance Survey map, although the area around the farm ‘The Flatt’ near Kershopefoot may also be meant. It is recorded as ‘Flygh’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 20 shillings. The farm of ‘Hieflycht’ is listed in 1541, with a value of 3 pounds and tenanted by Martin Nixon. Matthew and John Nixon were there in 1544. The eastern part was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre in 1667 (and apparently again in 1691), having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. John Wilson was tenant there in 1694 and James Lamb also a resident. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands it appears to be combined with Kirndean and Clintwood. Robert Robertson was shepherd there in 1797. It is marked on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland as ‘Flightes cha.’ and on other roughly contemporary maps as ‘Flightes cast’, suggesting there was confusion over whether there was a chapel or a castle there. It is probably the ‘Flygh superior’ listed as a 36-shilling land. The remains of a farmstead are located near the head of the Boghall Burn. The New Statistical Account mentions 2 ‘camps’ on the farm, one round and the other square (it is ‘Flych’ in 1516, ‘Flegh’t in 1544 and ‘Flight’ in 1694; Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘East Flicht’ and ‘West Flicht’, with ‘Flicht’s Fell’ above, while it is still marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and is labelled as a ruin on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

an Cream’. A fanciful tradition states that an underground passage led from the farmhouse to Goldielands Tower. J.P. Alison designed a house (or alterations perhaps) in 1896. An oval-shaped hollowed stone found there is in the Museum – ‘To Flex and Wulliestruther, St. Leenards, Haggisha’, And Hawick there in the middle, The centre o’ them a’ [WL] (also spelled ‘Flecks’, ‘Flexis’ and other variants; it is ‘Flex’ in 1296, ‘Flexis’ in 1458, ‘Flekkis’ in 1464/5 and 1511, ‘Flex’ in 1514, ‘Flekis’ in 1559 and 1572, ‘Fleks’ in 1594 and 1615, ‘Flex’s’ in 1700 and 1709 and ‘Flexes’ in 1717; it is marked ‘Fleks’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Flax’ on the Buccleuch survey of in 1718; the origin of the name is obscure, but ‘fleck’ is a Scots word for a cattle pen made of hurdles).

Flex (fleks) n. Alexander (14th C.) witness to a charter granting the lands of Altonburn to the Kers in 1357/8. All of the other men were from Roxburghshire, and so presumably these were the lands near Hawick. He must have been related to the earlier Richard. ‘Alexander de Flex a Scotsman’ was ordered to be released from the Tower of London in 1356. Probably the same ‘Alexandro de fleckys’ witnessed a charter for lands in Lessu near Hawick. Flex Back Burn (fleks-bawk-burn) n. another name for Acreknowe Burn (it is so described in the 1767 description of the Common).

Flex Burn (fleks-burn) n. stream running from Wulliestruther down to the Sligrid.

Flex Lodge Park (fleks-loj-pawrk) n. name of the field on Hawick Common to the north-west of the Flex farm.

Flex Maarich East (fleks-märch-ecest) n. enclosure on Hawick Common to the north-west of the Flex farm.

Flex Maarich West (fleks-märch-west) n. field on Hawick Common to the east of Wulliestruther.
flichter (flich-tur) v., arch., poet. to flutter, to fly about lightly (as snow) – ‘He little ken’d my heart was flight’ring fain. My winsome lad! O gin ye war my ain!’ [CPM], ‘…an the flichterin burdies daibbelt an dooket’ [ECS], ‘The broun leaves flichtered crinklin’ Wi’ the first soft flecks o’ snaw’ [WL].

flichty (flich-tee) adj., arch. flighty – ‘…proving yet again that it’s no’ the weemen-folk that’s flichty!’ [DH].

flid (flid) n. a flood – ‘…And calm’st the raging, roaring fluid, When dashing wild’ [RDW], ‘The neist big fluide ‘ill show them fun’ [WNK], ‘…shurelie in the fluides o’ grit waters thaye salina cum nie untill him’ [HSR], ‘Oo’ve a hist’ry thrae the Fluid Oo’ve a Moat where Druids sallna cum nie untill him’ [HSR], ‘Oo’ve a hist’ry’ [TK]. ‘Through fire and fluid the real auld gutter bluid Aye circled round the auld green Moat’ [TK] (also spelled ‘fluid’ and ‘flude’ and probably formerly pronounced fluid).

fliddin (fil-din) n. a flooding – ‘The fluid’in’s gey bad aa the watergate lang, – I’ve a fine pair o’ towels, as cheap as they’re strang!’ [WL].

the Flid Merk (thu-flid-merk) n. name sometimes used for the plaque at Torderykeside, marking the level of the Slitrig flood of 1846. The level was marked annually by James Smith, Cornet that year, and a painter to trade. The plaque was placed there by him and his friends in 1902, with the inscription ‘Flood Mark July 1846’.

flids (fildz) n., pl. the Teviot floods every few years, with significant floods in 1796, 1806, 1846, 1926, 1938, 1948, 1953, 1955, 1963, 1977, 2005 (twice, the October one being the worst in living memory), 2015 (with 600 people being evacuated from their homes), 2020, etc. A record of 1782 notes damage to the bridges along the Mosspaul to Haremoss Turnpike (essentially the A7). Dramatic floods at Minto are reported in 1783 and 1789, and a torrential rain-storm in 1806. The flood of November 1938 swept away the Victoria Bridge and the Mansfield Bridge. The Slitrig can also rise rapidly, and perhaps even more dramatically. The most famous such event being the Great Flid of August 1767, when the river rapidly rose 22 feet (about 6.5 m) above its normal level, sweeping away many houses, as well as the old Corn Mill, and drowning 2 people. The Teviot flood of 1796 carried away part of the burial ground at Hassendean. Sir Walter Scott describes the flood of 1806, when the lower floor of Minto House was filled with water and trees and livestock sailed past his own house. This flood also devastated Rulewater, particularly at Bonchester Brigend. The 1806 flood was also bad around Denholm, sweeping away the bridge over the Dean Burn, and removing the remains of the burial ground at Hassendean. The flood of 29th July 1846 swept away Slitrig Crescent footbridge and its level is marked by a brass plaque in Torderykeside about 1.5 m (5 feet) above pavement level. This flood followed a tremendous thunder storm starting between 7 and 8 o’clock, with the water level rising steadily, the town bells being rung at midnight, and the level peaking at 14 feet above normal shortly afterwards. The Auld Brig was again blocked by debris and effectively dammed the Slitrig. Lynnwood Cauld and 2 bridges over the Slitrig were swept away. Walls, cauldls, carts, trees, cattle, etc. were carried off. Silver Street became part of the river, water ran over the Tower Knowe and down the Mill Port and water flowed down the High Street as far as the Round Close, forming streams to the Teviot down several closes. The Teviot also overflowed, causing great damage over a wider area, and sweeping away iron railings at the Haugh. There was similar damage in Teviotdale, Rulewater (where the river was said to be 10–12 feet higher than normal and Hobsburn bridge was lost) Liddesdale (where some cottages were washed away) and elsewhere, with a rider drowning while returning from Langholm Common Riding. A stone in Newcastleton commemorates the flood there, where water poured down the main street. In 1862 part of the Haugh flooded overnight on the Friday of the Common Riding, making conditions extremely wet for the Saturday races and games. The year 1948 also saw a major flood throughout the Borders, about which there is a book, ‘The Great Borders Flood of 1948’ by Lawson Wood. The Teviot’s highest flood rate (since recording began in 1963) was 142.4 m³/s on 17th February 1997. The floods of early 2020 washed away part of Bridge House and devastated Newcastleton – ‘On Hawick burst the flood’s resistless sway, Plough’d the paved streets, and tore the walls away, Floated high roofs, from whelming fabricks torn; While pillar’d arches down the wave were borne’ [JL].

Flintoff (flint-of) n. Butler (18th C.) dance-master, who must have travelled around the Borders towns. In 1785 he is ‘Mr Flintiff (teacher of dancing)’ who paid the Hawick Council for renting the Town House for 2 months. In 1769 in Oxnam Parish he married Ann Rutherford and they had children John, Walter, Mary, Archibald, Susanna and Thomas Winterup.

flird (fild) n., arch. a flimsy and poor piece of fancy dress, anything insubstantial – ‘A thin flir’d’ [JoJ], pl., poet. vanities, vain finery – ‘Let manly worth doff the flyrds of folly’ [HSR] (also written ‘flyrd’).

flird (fird) v., poet. to flirt, move about restlessly (use by James Ruickbie).

flisk (fillsk) v., arch., poet. to frolic, caper, frisk – ‘There, often seen in other days, The fairies did wairne him ... to flit and remove fra the haill foirsidis landis ...’ [SB1624], ‘Oo’ll beide i this hoose ti Whussey, an than oo’l’ll flit’ [ECS] ‘...But they cam’ and condemned it, and gared me flit’ [DH], ‘There’s flitting east, there’s flitting west, Their rents are raised anew’ [WH], ‘...And she shortly after flitted Frea the Vertish Hill’ [IWL].

flittin (fill-in) n. a house removal, formerly applied to the moving of farm workers at Whitsunday – ‘...the spinning wheel, ...was an indispensable top-piece to the bride’s home-going flittin’ [JAHM], ‘There’s flittings east, there’s flittings west, Their rents are rais’d anew ...’ [WH], ‘A sei there’s a flittin next door’, ‘At the fit o the brae a flitten was gaun on’ [ECS].

float-whey (flo’-wha) n., arch. a dish made by boiling whey, particularly from ewe’s milk – ‘Flot quhaye, a common dish in the pastoral districts of Scotland, formed by boiling the whey after it is expressed from the cheese curds, with a little meal and milk, when a species of very soft curd floats at the top’ [JL].

Flodden Field (flo-din-fool’d) n. site of the Battle of Flodden, west of the River Till, near Branxton (not Flodden), about 6 miles from Coldstream, in Northumberland. Many of those killed were buried at St. Paul’s church in Branxton. A large memorial cross was erected at the battle

Flodden 1513, the Scots being led by King James IV, and Henry VIII’s English by Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey. The motivation was to divert some of the English troops away from their French campaign. However, the battle was disastrous for the Scots, with Surrey bringing his forces in behind them, making retreat back to Scotland nearly impossible once things started to go badly. The battle commenced about 4 p.m. and went on into the night. Eventually James was dead, along with 1 archbishop, 4 abbots, 12 earls, 17 lairds, perhaps 400 knights and as many as 10,000 others. Borderers under Huntly and Hume played a significant role and suffered huge losses. Sir William Douglas and most of the Hawick men were also killed. One exception was John Chisholme, who returned with the family pennon, although his brother was killed. In the wake of Flodden the Borders was left with almost no defence against the ravages of Surrey and Dacre – ‘Sons of heroes slain at Flodden! Met to ride and trace our common’ [JH], ‘Scotia felt thine ire, O Oden! On the bloody field of Flodden ...’ [JH], ‘Green Flodden! on thy blood-stain’d head Descend no rain nor vernal dew; But still thou charnel of the dead, May whitening bones they surface strew!’ [JL], ‘...I knew I had stayed from Flodden, and I wish that I were dead’ [RSC], ‘When our life looks at its Floddens, where cherished dreams lie low, And big, brave hopes, like burghers dead, are smitten by the foe’ [JYH]. Among the noblemen and land-owners with local connections who were slain at the battle are: William, Lord Borthwick (possibly); Robert, son of Robert Chisholme of that Ilk; George Douglas, Master of Angus; Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig; Robert Elliot of Redheugh; Robert Erskine of Synton, Earl of Mar; John Hay, 2nd Lord Yester; Adam Hepburn, 2nd Earl of Bothwell; Sir David Home of Wedderburn; John Murray of Blackbarony; Sir Alexander Scott of Hassendean (possibly); John Scott of Haining; Sir Walter Scott of Howpwsley; James Stewart of Traquair; and John Stewart of Minto (perhaps).

site in 1910 – ‘At Flodden field our fathers fought it ...’ [AB], ‘With dauntless hearts, unknown to yield; In slow procession round the pile Of heaving corpses moves each shadowy file, And chaunts in solemn strain the dirge of Flodden field’ [JL], ‘O Flodden Field, O Flodden Field, Ma heart is wae for thee’ [JEDM], ‘To him whose patriot pride is stirred By memories of the past revealed, Though long resigned to fox and bird What spot so sad as Flodden Field!’ [WHO], ‘From those who fought on Flodden Field we shall not turn away’ [DJ].

Flodden Field (flo-din-field) n. verses written by James Hogg in 1819, along with the song ‘the Colour’, both having the identical ‘Teribus’ chorus. ‘Flodden Field’ consists of 15 verses about the Battle of Flodden, and it thus effectively forms the first part of the Hornshole-inspired song. However, it has been seldom sung, in comparison to the familiar ‘Teribus’. The first edition was published in Kelso, and the 2nd by Robert Armstrong in 1824, with several changes. The 3rd was also printed by Armstrong in 1829, but does not bear Hogg’s name, while the 4th was printed by John Elder in 1836, and another by Kennedy’s in 1837, the last before Hogg’s death. The first 3 editions are all quite rare, and there may be no existing copy of the 1st. The song was revived for the 2013 Flodden quincentenary, sung by Michael Aitken.

the Flodden Memorial (thu-flo-din-me-mo-ree-ul) n. memorial on Flodden Field, erected in 1910. The Flodden Memorial Committee, representing both sides of the Border, was chaired by Sir George Douglas. The monument consists of a celtic cross of grey Aberdeen granite, 12 feet 6 inches high on a rough-hewn granite and concrete cairn. The inscription reads simply ‘Flodden 1513. To the brave of both nations. Erected 1910’. It is located on Piper’s Hill near Branxton.

The Flooers o the Forest (thu-floor-airz-thu-fo-ris) -flow-) n. ancient song whose words exists in 3 separate versions, written by Mrs. Patrick Cockburn (Alison Rutherford), Jean Elliot (of Minto) and Mrs. John Hunter. The tune is recorded in the early 17th century and may not originally have had words. It is also unclear whether the song originally had a connection with the battle of Flodden. Jean Elliot’s version of the words made the song a lament for the death of James IV and other Scotsmen at Flodden. It was published anonymously, and only identified with Elliot later. In Selkirk this version is known as ‘the Liltin’, and the tune is played after the Casting of the Colours. Alison Cockburn’s lyrics appear to be about a financial crisis, and were probably written earlier than Elliot’s (although not published until 1765). The song was immensely popular in the 19th century, being regularly sung at Hawick Colour Bussing and similar events. The tune is played internationally at funerals and remembrance ceremonies, where it is often referred to simply as ‘the Lament’ – ‘I’ve heard the lilting, at the yowe-milking, Lasses a-lilting before dawn o’ day; But now they are moaning on ilka green loaning; ‘The Flowers of the Forest are a’ wede away’’ [T].

the Flooer o Yarrow (thu-floor-o-yaw-ro, -flow-) n. nickname for Mary Scott, popularised in a ballad of the same name. She was from Dryhope Tower and married Walter Scott of Harden about 1576. She was mother of 6 sons and at least 4 daughters. It is also said that she raised another boy who was found in the spoil from a Cumberland raid (like ‘Whaupe o the Rede), and grew to be a poet, composing some of the Border ballads – ‘Tis Yarrow’s fairest flower, who through the gloom Looks wistful for her lover’s dancing plume’ [JL], ‘...Amang them aa there was nane to marrow Auld Harden’s leddy, the ‘Flooer o Yarrow’’ [WL].

floery (floo-ree, floo-u-ree) adj. floery – ‘And yonder is the Lover’s Lane And Lynnwood’s flo’ry braes’ [GD], ‘Fornent iz, athort the fer seide o Teiot’s flooery vale ...’ [ECS], ‘Now a’m no yin for floory talk, Or prone ti airs n’ graces. Floors Castle (florz-kaw-sul) n. castle near Kelso, built by John, 1st Duke of Roxburghe, between 1718 and 1740. It was designed by William Adam, and extended around 1839 by William Playfair. It is the home of the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe, and the largest inhabited house in Scotland. It includes collections of art, porcelain, taxidermy and tapestries. James II was killed here when a cannon exploded in 1460, and it was ‘Greystoke’ in the Tarzan film of 1984. The entire estate is enclosed by a continuous high wall, with a few lodge houses, and contains terraced woodland and open parkland (also formerly ‘Fleurs’; the origin of the name is probably just Old English for ‘floor’ or ‘ground’ and first appears as ‘le fluris’ in 1516).

floopy docken (flo-ree-do-kin) n., arch. goosefoot, Chenopodium Bonus Henricus or Chenopodium album (named for the apparently powdery leaves).

Florence (flo-rins) n. (d.1210) nobleman and cleric, known as ‘Florentius’, he was son of the Count of Holland, and also nephew of both King Malcolm IV and William I. He became Bishop of Glasgow in 1202, but resigned in 1207 before he was consecrated. He was also Chancellor of Scotland. He died in Zeeland. His seal bore the figure of a young man seated at a lectern with a book, with a rod of office in one hand, and has the words ‘SIGIL. FLOREN[II GLAS]GUENSIS ELECTI’.

Florida (flo-ri-da) n. farm in Liddesdale, situated just before Old Castleton on the B6357. Between the house and the river lies an earthwork, possibly a homestead of medieval date, which lies partially in woods and has been partly eroded by the river. The old house of Dykeraw lay somewhere to the east in what is now forest. John Turnbull and family were there in at least 1841–68. William Hislop was there in 1841 and John Scott and his family in 1851.

Flosh Burn (flossh-burn) n. stream joining the Leap Burn to form the Lang Burn near Langburnshields, which then becomes the Slitrig. It is joined by Kiln Sike below Robert’s Linn and has several other waterfalls on burns that join it from the east. It marks the start (or end) of the Catrail (‘flossh’ is an old Scots word for boggy ground).

Fodderlee (fo-dur-lee) n. farms and general area on the east side of the Rule valley between Hallrule and Billerwell. David Shiel was tenant there in 1567. The lands there were acquired by Adam French from Jedburgh Abbey in 1569 and were split into the East and West farms in the 17th century. In 1643 Helen Turnbull held lands there valued at £80 and James Turnbull £180. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. In 1678 the land tax on £100 was paid by Mark Turnbull and on £80 by ‘the widow in fotherlie’. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Robert Kerr of Fodderlee was first recorded in 1685, and appears to have owned half of the lands. Mark Turnbull was tenant in the late 1600s. John Turnbull, John Kerr and George Scott were recorded as tenants there in 1694. The east lands passed to Robert Kerr’s daughter Mary (who also married a Kerr) and then grandson Andrew. In 1757 it passed to Robert Thomson, whose mother was Margaret Kerr. Andrew Oliver, ‘Fodderlee-birks’, is recorded in 1784. ‘Fodderlee, Fodderlee-bank head, and Fodderlee-birks’ are recorded in 1795 as parts of Hobkirk that are closer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk; these same lands were among those moved to Hobkirk when Abbotrule was suppressed. James Davidson was tenant there in 1797. The modern map shows Old Fodderlee, Easter Fodderlee and Wester Fodderlee, this last being closest to where the Fodderlee Burn joins the Rule Water. A report in 1836 describes how a cairn was removed near there ‘near to a place where tradition says a battle had been fought’ (it is ‘Fodderlie’ in 1567, ‘Foderly’ in 1569, ‘Fodderley’ in 1587 and 1588, ‘Fodderlie’ in 1643, ‘Fotherlie’ 1670, ‘fotherlie’ in 1678, transcribed ‘Foderlae’ in 1680, ‘Fotherlie’ in 1690, 1694 and 1707 and ‘Fatherlee’ in 1797; it is marked as just ‘Fodderlie’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaauw’s 1654 map; also written Fotherlie, see also Auld Fodderlee. Easter Fodderlee and Wester Fodderlee).

fold (fold) adj., arch. made of turf, earthen – ‘… there was a fold dyke built on the Common by the possessors of Fenwick, which dyke was levelled by order of the Magistrates and rendered use- less’ [C&L1767] (probably an anglicised version of fail).

Folepul (fö-pul) n. former lands in Liddesdale recorded on a rental roll from about 1376, and listed under the ‘Foresta’ section. They are valued at 40 pence. Their location is unknown (this could be a transcription error, although it is unclear for what). It could be the same place listed as ‘Fopillis’ in the 1541 roll, when it was valued at 2 shillings, but vacant. It was possibly related to Fawhope Knowe.

folk (fök) n. people, mankind, inhabitants, one’s family – ‘Some folk think a’ other folk gowks … ’ [FL], ‘Ee caanna pass keind – it belongs eer foak, man!’ [ECS], ‘… an gliffin auld folk an barns, baith’ [ECS]. The population in 1851 was about 9000. Hawick’s present population is around 16,000, and the recorded peak was in 1891, with a total of 19,204 people – ‘But I like auld Hawick, and her folks I like, Her men and maidens free’ [FH], ‘Hear me, ye Folk o’ Teviotdale, I’m here ti tell nae flatterin’ tale’ [WP] (sometimes written ‘foak’; cf. the older fouk).

Forbes (førbz) n. Archibald (19th/20th C.) son of John, he took over the running of the nurseries business in 1909 and was also President of the Hawick Horticultural Society. Sir Arthur (1623–95) 1st Earl of Granard, son of Sir Arthur of Castle Forbes in Ireland. He commanded a Royalist Scottish force in the 1650s. In December 1653 he came down from the north with 80–100 men and with Andrew Kerr of Sunlaws and Chatto as prisoner, and stopped at Borthwickbrae. Pursued by an English Commonwealth force, they were easy to follow in the snow and there was a skirmish at Philip in the upper Borthwick valley. The English were victorious, but Forbes managed to escape, apparently recuparating in a cottage near Glasgow. He later fought for the loyalist cause in the north in 1654, and was captured at Glenlyon. He returned to Ireland, was made Earl and joined the cause of William III. He is buried in Sligo. John (1841/2–1909) proprietor of the Buccleuch Nurseries on Slitrig Crescent. Born in Aberfeldy, Perthshire, he came to Hawick in 1867 as gardener at Wilton Lodge for David Pringle, later becoming tenant of the gardens. He started up his own business in 1870 at the Dovemount Nurseries, then after about ten years moved into larger premises on Slitrig Crescent, the land granted by the Duke of Buccleuch. Named the Buccleuch Nurseries, they became famous throughout Britain, and were a prominent sight from the railway. The gardens received a royal warrant and the name was changed to the Royal Nurseries in 1907. It then became a private limited company in 1908. He won many awards for his floral displays. He was Councillor for Slitrig Ward for 3 years, and long involved with the running of St. Andrew’s Church. Lillias Magdalene nee Scott (1918–2013) daughter of composer Francis George Scott, she was born in Glasgow. She was known as a singer, and published poetry over about a 75 year period, some of it in Scots. An autobiographical collection, ‘View from the Bench: My Life in Poetry’, appeared in 2011. She firstly married composer Erik Chisholm, and after his death married clarinettist John Forbes.

Forbes’ Nursery (förbz-nur-sur-ee, förb-zeez-nur-sur-ee) n. another name for the Buccleuch Nurseries.

Ford (förd) n. W. Inglis (20th C.) 6th Secretary of the Congregational Kirk.

Fordel (for-dul) n. ancient name of Melrose ('Acres of Little Fordell' is still recorded in the early 1600s).

forder (for-dur) adv., arch. furthermore, in addition – ‘...and forder, vnder the payne of perurie, diffamatioun, and never to haiff fayth nor credit in the law ...' [SB1585] (also the later forder).

fords (fördz) n. before the erection of the Teviot Bridge in 1741, the river had to be forded, or when unfordable it was crossed by ferry at the Coble Pool. The main fords were at the foot of Walter’s Wynd to enter town through the North Port or near Parkdaill (sometimes called the Howe Ford) connecting to a footpath which went uphill to join the main road at Longbault. There are still fords at the bottom of Burnfoot, Newmill, Priesthaugh and on many local farms, which can be used when the water is low.

fordweblit (for-dwe-blee', -bli') adj., poet. enfeebled, very weak – ‘I am fordwelbit an' sair brookin'; I ha' rairet bie reesen o' the wanrest o' my hairo' [HSR].

Fordyce (for-dis) n. Elizabeth Fordyce 'Lizzie' (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer's shop at the corner of Trinity Street and Earl Street in the mid-20th century. Rev. Robert (1836–93) born in Unst in the Shetland Isles. He studied at Edinburgh University, after working in business and saving so he could study. Licensed in 1868, he served as a probationer at several places before coming to Hawick in 1872, as second minister of West Port Free Church; he served until his death. He also helped fill the vacancy at St. George's 1879–80. In 1874 he married Mary, daughter of blacksmith Thomas Ker and she died in Edinburgh in 1901. Their children were: Mary Ker (b.1875); Bruce (1876–82); Margaret Suneva (1877–1896), who died in Worthing; Euphemia Ker (1882–1969), also died in Worthing; and Thomas Ker (b.1884).

forebree (for-bree) n., poet. forehead, temple – ‘...thy forebrees ar like ane piece o' ane pumgranate withyn thou loko' [HSR].

fore-breist (for-breest) n., arch. the front of anything, particularly the front row of the gallery in a church (noted by E.C. Smith; also front-breist).

fore-end (for-end) n., arch. first part, front portion, opposite of back-end – ‘...ane hundreth punds Scotts out of the fore-end of the eighteinpences gathered for the militia money in 1685 ...'[BR1685], ‘...and that of the forend of the stent imposed upon the toun for that and other ends' [BR1701] (also written 'fore end').

foremaist (för-mäst) adj., adv., arch. foremost, first, highest ranked, most importantly – ‘...But Paiterson's meir she came foremaist' [JP].

Foreman see Forman

forenamit (för-när-mit) pp., arch. forenamed, previously mentioned – ‘Witnesses to the subscription of ye fornamit persones valuers of the said lands ...' [PR1627], ‘...in exercing the said office to my vtheres fornamite freindes and overseeres ...' [SB1633] (there are spelling variants).

forenin (för-ninin) n. morning, forenoon, period between dawn and noon, or sometimes more specifically the late morning – ‘what er ee daein this forenin?', ‘...so he was in a bad tuin a' forenin' [DH] (also written 'foreniuin'; often distinguished from mornin, which is earlier).

forepairt (för-par't) n., arch. the earlier portion of a period of time (noted by E.C. Smith).

the Foreraw see the Fore Raw

the Fore Raw (thu-for-row) n. row of pended tenements that stood on the south-east side (i.e. left hand side on the way up the hill) of what is now Drumlunrig Square. The entrance to William Lockie's Mill was there. It also once held the Teribus Arms and the West-end Mission (it is 'Front row' in Pigot's 1837 directory; presumably it was 'Fore' relative to St. Mary's Kirk, with the Back Row being further away).

Fore Raw (för-row) n. Fore Row, name used for a row of houses in Wilton Dean on the 1841 census. By 1851 it was known as 'Front Row', and was numbered from 1 to 6. This referred to a block of houses on the north side of the Dean Road, where it meets the Overhall Road. The name distinguished it from Burn Row, which was lower down, and Upper Row, which was up the small track above the green. The names were probably never in general use and disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.

forest (fo-rist) n., arch. a preserve, a tract of land, often bare and hilly, upon which deer were traditionally hunted – ‘...‘Trees’, retorted the gillie; ‘wha ever heard o’ trees in a forest?’’ [RB] (note, the former use of this word did not imply trees!).

Forest (fo-rist) n. Jean (17th/18th C.) Hawick woman who ran an inn in the late 1600s and early 1700s. She was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. She was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1702 she was fined for allowing people to be drinking in her house after 10 o’clock at night. Her name is written ‘Jeane Forrest’ and ‘Jane Forrest’.

foreostair (for-stær) n., arch. an outside staircase at the front of a building – ‘A conspicuous feature of many of the dwellings was the ‘out’ or ‘forestairs’ projecting onto the streets’ [V&M]. Many of the examples on the High Street were removed around 1781 when the streets were paved, and more were removed by order of the road trustees, with the Council paying more than £50 to have the work done. One of last sets in Hawick was removed in 1884 when the old Town Hall was demolished. Perhaps the last example is in St. Mary’s Place – ‘Paid expense of fore stairs, taken away by order of trustees, 55 18 1’ [BR1792] (also oostair).

forestall (for-stawl) v., arch. to buy goods before they reach market in order to resell them at a higher price – ‘Thomas Howison, merchant, is fined for forestalling two boils of beir from the Lady Newtoune, and ane from Gladstanes’ [1699], ‘Four Hawick fleshers are fined £40 Scots each for forestalling the sheep market, by buying of sheep and lambs, and instantly, for gain, reselling them to the butchers of Jedburgh’ [BR1700].

forestaller (for-stawl-lur) n., arch. someone who profits by buying up goods before they get to market in order to increase the price and resell them – ‘Various persons are fined ‘for breach of the proclamation of His Majesty’s Privy Council, against regrating of victuals and forestallers’’ [JW1699].

the Forest Club (thu-fo-rist-klub) n. dining and coursing club, based around Selkirk, also sometimes known as the ‘Ettrick Forest Club’. It was established in 1788 by 13 lairds of the Ettrick Forest, modelled on similar clubs in Edinburgh. Members met once a month (outside winter) in the County Hotel, Selkirk. Coursing was introduced in 1794 and lasted for 60 years. Sir Walter Scott (of Abbotsford) was a member. Michaela Reid wrote a history of the club in 2000.

Forester (fo-rees-tur) n. Alan (16th C.) tenant of ‘Syskett’ in 1541. This was probably in the far south of Roxburghshire and he was probably related to the Foresters who possessed neighbouring lands. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as the tenant of Ryleknowe, near the southern tip of Roxburghshire. Probably the same Andrew was also tenant of ‘Avirholme’ along with Lancelot. He was probably related to Simon, who was tenant of the nearby Burnholm. Henry (18th C.) farmer at Langraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1788-94 Horse Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in a 1510 list of associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh who received respite for their crimes. His name appears as ‘Forestar’. In 1515/6 he was recorded in another remission to Robert Elliot of Redheugh and others, where he is listed as ‘in Greenhauche’. This could be Greenhaugh in Northumberland, but seems more likely to be Greena in Liddesdale. In 1516 he was also part of the remission given to William Elliot of Larriston and his associates. John (14th/15th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was Archdeacon of Glasgow 1409-14 and is recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1418. John (16th C.) recorded in 1532 as ‘Johny Forestar’. He is listed along with Sym (to whom he was surely related), Croizers and Elliotis, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John ‘Shake Buckler’ (16th C.) listed among the Liddesdale men denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on the farm at Craik. His name is given as ‘John Forrestare, called Schaik-buklar’. His servant Ninian Gray is also listed, so he must have been a man of fair substance. John (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Greenhaughshaw. It seems reasonable to assume he was related to James in Greenhaugh (his son perhaps), and that he was related to the tenants of nearby farms with the same surname, namely Alan, Andrew, Lancelot, Simon and William. John (17th C.) resident at Hudshouse in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John of Stanegarthside (17th/18th C.) nephew of Nicholas, from whom he inherited ‘Greina, Puviven and Burnemouth’ in Liddesdale in 1693. Lancelot (16th C.) joint tenant of ‘Avirholme’, along with Andrew, in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert of Stanegarthside (d.1598) buried at Staplegordon Church in Cumbria. He may be the Forster of Stanegarthside who killed William Armstrong near where the Kershope Burn meets the Liddel. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th C.) recorded in 1532 as ‘Symme Forestar’. He is listed along with Johnnie (to whom he was surely related), Croziers and Elliotis, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He may be the same as the tenant in Burnfoot in 1541. Simon (16th C.) tenant of Burnfoot (on the Tinnis Water) in southern Liddesdale, according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was probably related to Andrew and Lancelot, who possessed neighbouring farms. William (15th C.) held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1450. He could have been from the Torwood or perhaps Corstarphine branches of that family. He resigned Cavers in 1467, with the Pope issuing an edict for the appointment of the new priest, previous appointments (including presumably his) being made by the monks of Melrose. William (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Bennetholm. He was probably related to the other contemporary Foresters. William (17th C.) listed at Harwood among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (also written ‘Forrester’; once interchangeable with ‘Foster’). The Roll of Honour of local members who fell in the wars was formerly in Orrock Church halls and is now in the Museum.

the Foresters (thu-fro-rees-turz) n. a mutual aid society, once very active in Hawick. The Ancient Order of Foresters has its origins in the 18th century, and was established in its modern form in 1834. The Hawick Foresters’ court was once very important as a form of insurance for workers. The organisation used to turn out in local parades. The Roll of Honour of local members who fell in the wars was formerly in Orrock Church Halls and is now in the Museum.

the Foresters’ Hall (thu-fro-rees-turz-hal) n. hall on O’Connell Street, run by the Hawick branch of the Foresters, occupying the lower floor beneath the British Legion, formerly being part of Johnstone’s tea rooms. It was used for dance lessons, prayer meetings and other social functions, and closed around 1992.

fore-suppertime (för-su-pur-tim) n., arch. evening, literally meaning the period between teatime and suppertime (E.C. Smith describes this as ‘probably now obsolete’ and ‘one of the few Scottish instances of identifying a period of the day by reference to a meal’).

foresome (fo-ri-sum) adv., arch. forward, eager, bold, lacking restraint – ‘…the Ettrick Shepherd …was much rather blate than foresome …’ [HSR] (cf. forrit).

Forkins (for-kinz) n. farm south of Hobkirk, near where the Wauchope, Harwood and Catlee Burns meet to form the Rule Water, on the west side of the bridge. It was also formerly known as ‘Forkins of Unthank’. There was once a blacksmith’s there, and in the 17th century there was an inn at this location, in use until the early 19th century; its remains lie among trees on the east side of the bridge, near the entrance lodge to Wolfelee. It was formerly on the main route from Hawick to Newcastle, until the new road was built via Bonchester Bridge in about the 1820s; this was also part of a drove road. There was also a local police station there in the latter part of the 19th century. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Stonedge to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757. Walter Amos was wright there in the late 18th century (also called ‘the Forkins’ and sometimes written ‘Forkings’; it was ‘Forkens’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name is probably from the division in the river, rather than the road, but there are no early records of the name).

the Forkins (thu-for-kinz) n. name used for the area where the Hermitage Water meets the Liddel Water in Liddesdale.

Forkins (for-kinz) n. former farmstead in the upper Borthwick valley. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map, near where the Howparley Burn joins, close to where the modern turns towards Craik.

forlane (for-län) pp., poet. forgotten, set aside – ‘The Lord redeems the saul o’ his servants; an’ name o’ thame that trust in him sall be forlane’ [HSR].

Forman (for-min) n. Sir John of Davine (d.bef. 1516) son of Nicholas. His brother Andrew held the Archbishopric and Primacy of Scotland, and was said to be one of the instigators for the Battle of Flodden. In 1502 he and his brother were granted the ward of the lands of Rutherford by James IV and he was one of the ‘tutors’ appointed to Helen, heiress of Rutherford. He was Sergeant Porter to James IV, and was knighted in 1503. In fact he married Helen Rutherford, who inherited the lands of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston after the death of her brother Richard. Along with his wife, he was infefted in these lands by the King in 1505 and 1506. In 1504 he (when referred to as ‘of Rutherfurde’) was pardoned for being an accessory to the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. The lands of Rutherford, Wells and others were confirmed to him and his wife by James IV in 1511. He was one of the few Scots taken prisoner at the Battle of Flodden. He probably had a daughter who married William Gouraly of Kin-craig.

John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1699 and 1702 for tailor Walter Riddell (both along with baxter John ‘Weelands’). In 1705 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Michael Scot. In 1706 he married Margaret ‘Weelands’ and their son John was baptised in 1707. It is recorded in 1711 that the ‘half Ducatoon and twenty shillings Scots piece’ that he ‘pawned’ to guarantee his marriage had not been claimed and so was given to the poor fund. It is unclear whether this donation was simply the intent, or whether something happened to the couple in the intervening years. They had a son John in 1707. Nicholas (d.1478/9) succeeded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale on the death of Patrick Hume in 1478. However, he died within only a few months, before he could be confirmed. Patrick (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included: Patrick (b.1702); Agnes (b.1707); and Janet (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were gower John Scott and Patrick Angus. Robert (19th/20th C.). His wife funded the Forman Hall in Roberton, dedicated to his memory and that of her great-nephew, who was killed in WWI (also written ‘Foreman’).

Forman Hall (for-min-hal) n. community hall in Roberton, situated approximately opposite the church. It was designed by J.P. Alison and built in 1922/3. It was funded by Mrs. Forman of Borthwickshiel in memory of her husband Robert, and also her great-nephew, who was killed at Hassendean. It also contains a roll of honour for locals who fell in the Great War (sometimes incorrectly written ‘Foreman Hall’).

fornenst (for-nenst) adv. opposite, against, in front of – ‘Up yon cundy that opens fornenst tae the Pumh’[?], ‘Come wi me ti Hobkirk kirkyaird and juist fornenst – guid auld Hawick word meanin opposite or in front o – the kirk door ee’ll come on a heidstane ... ’[IWL], ‘The cadger whoa’d his powny cairt Fornenst the ‘Pig and Sty’’[WL] (also fornent).

fornent (for-nent, for-neu’) adv., arch. in front of, opposite to, over against – ‘Use in a singular sense, in relation to marriage. ‘Such a one is to be married’. ‘Ay! wha fornent?’ i.e. to whom’[JoJ], ‘...beeking fornent the sun’?[?], ‘...croinin the breaheeds lich abuin Tweed an fornent bielie Dryburgh’[ECS], ‘Come up – the Well o’ Verter seems the pump fornent the station’[VW], ‘An’ fornent a bonny laburnum I ken o’ a cosy fauld Where twae wee twin lambs trot oot an’ in, Weel bielded frae heat an’ cauld’[FL] (see also fornent).

foroutin (for-row-tin) prep., arch. without – ‘...the said landis of Quhitchester to be haldin of the said William ...foroutyn ony langer delay ...’ [SB1470].

Forrest (fo-rist) n. Rev. Alexander of Huntlaw (d.c.1658) minister at Hassendean. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1603 and was ordained at Kailzie in 1613, then translated to Hassendean later in the same year. He was rebuked by the Presbytery in 1615 for ‘receiving the gudwife of Sintoun to the communion, notwithstanding he understood she was ane contemner both of her awin min. (Mr Alex. Hog, Ashkirk) and of the Word out of his mouth’ (whether this was an indication of religious dissent or a purely personal matter is unclear). He was one of the 55 ministers who signed the ‘Liberties of the Kirk’ protest to Parliament in 1617 and gave £20 towards building the library at the University of Glasgow in 1636. In 1626 there is a ‘letter of deliverance’ against him in favour of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and Walter Scott of Ancrum, probably relating to a debt or disputed teinds. In 1633 he was owed £333 6s 8d for his stipend in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch, as well as £9 12s for the communion. In 1649 he was ‘invaded with a drawn sword’ by one of his parishioners, Robert Hislop. In 1655 (although this date may be an error) his son was served heir to his lands of Huntlaw. He appears to have continued as minister at Hassendean until 1658 and died before 1665, when the Presbytery met to decide what payment was due to his son. He was recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (although probably deceased by then), among owners of lands that were then in Hassendean Parish, when he paid for lands valued at £66 13s 4d; this was Huntlaw, which remained with his family for another couple of generations. He married Margaret Clerk and their children included William of Huntlaw, and Alexander, who became minister at Kirkton. In 1665 his son William was served heir to his lands of Huntlaw. Archibald of Huntlaw (who rented Huntlaw to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1703) was probably his grandson and Agnes, who married George Minto, was his great-granddaughter. Rev. Alexander (c.1622–83) son of Alexander, minister at Hassendean. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1642 and became minister at Kirkton in 1664. He remained minister there until his death, and sat on the local (Jedburgh Presbytery) at least in 1666. He is recorded in 1665 repaying the money owed by William Forrest (possibly his brother) to Walter Clerk. He paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d for Huntlaw in 1678. His ‘insicht and plenishing, with librarie, and abuziments of bodie’ were estimated to be about £200. He married Anna Douglas (d.1681), whose will is recorded in 1682. Their children were: Archibald; Richard; William (became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1691); Margaret (married James Mirriels in Edinburgh in 1702); and Anna. His will is recorded in 1683. James (17th C.) one of the tenants in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. His name was given as ‘forrit’ (which could feasiably be another surname, such as Forsyth). Julie (1968– ) lawn and indoor bowler from Hawick, who took up bowls from a young age, and won the Teviotdale Indoor Ladies Singles 10 times between 1990 and 2007. She won the Scottish Indoor Pairs in 1992 and 1994, the Triples in 1993 and the Singles in 2001 and 2004. She was also Scottish Masters champion 3 years in a row, 2001–2003, and British Isles Singles champion in 2004. She won the Mixed Pairs World Championship in 2002 and 2003 and the World Indoor Singles title in 2002. She was named Senior Sports Personality of the Year by Roxburgh Sports Council in 2002 and awarded the Military Cross, and was promoted to Major. He died leading his men in an attack during the Battle of Gaza. William of Huntlaw (17th C.) son of Rev. Alexander, minister at Hassendean. In 1665 he was served heir to his father’s 10-shilling land of Huntlaw in Hassendean Parish. He is recorded as ‘in Huntlaw’ in a record of 1666 listing landowners in Hassendean Parish (sometimes spelled ‘Fforrest’ in earlier records).

Forrester-Paton (fo-ri-tur-pai-in) n. Rev. Colin (1918–2004) born in Alloa, nephew of Ernest, an Indian missionary. He was educated in Moffat, Norfolk, Oxford University and London University. Ordained by the United Free Presbytery in 1944, he left for missionary work in Ghana. There he was involved with literature and translation, as well as ecumenical work. Both he and his wife became heavily involved in the Christian Council of Ghana. They returned to Britain in 1972 and the following year he became an associate minister in Hawick, connected with Wilton and Burnfoot. He retired in 1983, but was appointed Chaplain to the Queen in 1981 and Extra Chaplain to the Queen in Scotland in 1988. He married Jean Lorimer Crichton Miller in 1943 and they raised 3 children while in Ghana.

Forri (fo-re, -ri) adj., arch. farrow, descriptive of a cow that is not pregnant (also written ‘forrow’).

Forrít (for-i) adj., adv. forward – ‘can ee stand a wee bit further forrit?’, ‘he’s lookin’ forrit ti the Trades’, ‘…in kase the riteeous pit foret thair han’s untill iniquitie’ [HSR], ‘…and will Maister Melrose o’ Hopehill please come forrit at aince tae assist in gettin’ the damned horse oot o’ the dam’ [JEDM], ‘At yeh shop-door a motor stuid, an forrit A gaed ti finnd oot whae was ocht eet’ [ECS], ‘To kill or free I forrit ran – Whan on my shoorder was his han’’ [DH], ‘…and I steppit forrit to gie him the sad news’ [DH], ‘Burns was nae doobt lookin forrit ti meetin um but fund um ti be a bit o a disappointment’ [IWL], (of a clock) running fast, adj. lacking in restraint, overly eager – ‘oor awf backwards it bein forrit’, v., arch. to forward, aid, help – ‘I aided to forrit the fray’ [JoHa] (cf. foresome).

Forrit (for-i) n. a forward on a sports team, specifically nos. 1–8 in rugby – ‘he’i ay played in the forrits, bit sometimes prop an sometimes lock’, ‘…And sixteen forrits o’ thirteen stane Cam’ doon on the top o’ Dye’! [DH].

Forrit-owre (for-i-ow-ur) adv., arch. with a forward stoop – ‘Hei walks forrit-owre’ [GW].

Forritsome (for-i-sum) adj. forward, bold – ‘In fact,’ said he, ‘we’ve a wey o’ dealin’ Wi’ forritisome callants that come here stealin’’’ [WL].

Forsaid (for-sed) pp., arch. aforesaid, previously mentioned – ‘…with power to the said Robert Scott oy and air forsaid, his airis and assignais forsaidis …’ [SB1569], ‘The said day the bayleyes forsaid and ton counsell did approve of ane little hand Bell …’ [BR1694] (also written ‘foresaid’, ‘foirsaid’, etc.).

Forster (for-stur) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 among the men accused by the Countess of Bothwell of raiding her lands at Eilrig. He is described as ‘Andro Forster, callit Craikcrop, baneist Englishman’, and was an accomplice of the Armstrongs of Whithaugh. He was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. He could be related to the ‘Andro Forster’ who was recorded in 1541, accused of being involved in raids into England in which men were killed. George (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 for a document relating to the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Like the others, he was probably from Liddesdale. Sir John (d.1602) younger son of Thomas of Adderstone. He became Constable of Bamborough Castle and later held lands around Alnwick. He was part of an English force that sacked southern Scotland in 1557 and was Warden of the English Middle March by 1559/60. He was Deputy Governor of Berwick and also Deputy Warden of the East Marches in 1563. He escorted Mary Queen of Scots to Berwick. He was also Keeper of Tynedale and Redesdale. He and George Heron of Chipchase supported the Regent Moray on attacks on Liddesdale in 1569. He accompanied Sussex and Hunsdon on the raid into Teviotdale in 1570, when the Hawick folk burned the thatch themselves; he personally led the ‘horsmen too burne the townes and vyllages adjoyynge’ He was the Warden of the Middle March during the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575 (with his name being recorded as ‘Sir George Foster’ in the ballad), when he was taken prisoner and held for a few days in Dalkeith. There are several letters from him in 1576 to the Deputy Warden for West Teviotdale, William Douglas of Bonjedward. He was still English Warden in 1584 when he and Lord Scrope led a raiding force of 7,000 men that invaded Liddesdale, taking the tower at Larriston and capturing 18 prisoners. After harrying the valley, he received a bond of assurance from the chiefs of Liddesdale (who spoke for most of the Elliots, Armstrongs and others). In 1595/6 he got the heads of several families to sign a bond of assurance to try to end the feuds existing between 25 English families and ‘the Ellotes, Armstrongs, Crosers, Nixsons, Nobles, Larencees, Hendersons, Batysongs, Sympsongs and Lyttles’ in Scotland. It is said that he was challenged by a laird of Rulewater to a jousting match, which took place at the ‘Justin Haugh’; he was badly injured and laid under a bush to recover, this field being known as ‘Foster’s Bush’. He married Jane Radclyffe, heiress of Blanchland. He had several daughters and was succeeded by his (probably illegitimate) son Nicholas. Robert ‘Hob’s Robin’ (16th C.) English fugitive from Bewcastle who fled to the Scottish side. He was described in a letter from Thomas Wharton in 1541, along with Adam, as ‘grete offenders against Englishmen and Scotishmen’. In 1542 his men burned ‘the Cassihill, Reyhilles in West Tevedall’, stealing livestock and taking 2 prisoners; this may be one of the nearby Castlehills, although it is unclear where ‘Reyhilles’ may have been. A few days later his men burned ‘Cromokhilles’ in West Teviotdale, which is surely Crumhaughhill. Their father ‘Hob’ was warded in Cockermouth Castle in 1541, but the Captain of Carlisle Castle would not take him. Roland (16th C.) probably a brother of Sir John. He was one of the assistants to the English Warden and served as Captain of Wark Castle. In 1565 he wrote to Bedford, describing the ambush of the Scotts by the Elliots at Ewes Doors. He is probably the ‘Rowie Forester’ recorded in 1569, when Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton, Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh gave assurances to him ‘that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cuntre’ (see also Foster).

Forster’s Buss (for-sturz-bus) n. former name for a field between Bonchester Bridge and Bowchester Hill, a little above the flat ground once known as ‘Jeistins’-haugh’. The name is said to have been because this is where an Englishman, Forster, was killed in combat.

forsuth (for-sooth) adv., arch. truly, in truth – ‘... be twa ewynly porcionis, of the quhilk forsuth nyenetene yerris male I graunt me web content ...’ [DoR1445].

working for Sir Francis Elliot. John B. (20th C.) Burgh Chamberlain of Hawick in the 1940s. Mr., ?? (18th/19th C.) schoolmaster at Castleton in the early 1800s. He married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot in Hillhouse. Robert (b.1807/8) born in Denholm, he was a hosier manufacturer. He was living around Main Street in Denholm in 1841, with his wife and a young weaver called Thomas Turnbull. In 1851 he was in Galashiels as a hosier master, employing one man. His wife was Catherine. Walter (19th C.) flesher in Hawick, recorded in 1873 when he was a Commissioner for the estate of flesher James Rodger. His shop was at 40 High Street. William (18th C.) hind at Hassendeanbank. He married Margaret Gray and their children included: Thomas (b.1784); Peter (b.1785); Betty (b.1787), who married carrier William Tait; John (b.1790); and Peggy (b.1794). William W. (b.c.1870) born in Midlothian, he was Maths master at the Buccleuch School. He served as acting Headmaster during 1906-08 when the school was remodelled. He may be the same W.W. Forsyth who was made an Honorary Teri at the Tuesday morning ‘Hut’ of 1894 (also ‘Forsythe’).

for’it (for’, fort) contr. for it – ‘A’m no for’it at aa’, ‘…Resolved to clutch his ill-got store Though he should roast for’it evermore’ [RDW], ‘Ye’re in for’it now lad, ye’ll no can rin away sae Reidlie on the sea’ [WNK], ‘Ah’m over auld for’it’, ‘Aweel, maister sailor, if ee sweer tae that Aw’ll take eer word for’it…’ [JEDM], ‘I’d just get to some place afore there was ony need for’it’ [DH], ‘Ah weel, they were warried, they maun suffer for’it noo. The auld toon is fair doon the hole’ [WL].

for that (for-th-at) prep., arch. because, since – ‘For that yt ys neidfull and merytabelle to ber wytnes to the suthfastnes…’ [SB1431].

for ti (for-ti) prep. in order to – ‘And for tae keep him frae the cauld …’ [JSB], ‘Then the lasses began to the barn for to thrang’ [JoHa], ‘…Wad tempt o’o for tae jouk the schule and seek the flooery braes’ [VW], ‘The old farmer, ‘Tattie Willie’, wouldnae pay me for tae drive a pair so we had tae move’ [TH], ‘A body was need ti ken’d off leike as Wattie Laidlaw kennd eet, for tae tell owre, off-luif, aa its dambrod-checkeet story’ [ECS], ‘…an bocht a wheen piicter-postcairds for ti send away up Ingland’ [ECS] (this use of ‘for’ is redundant in standard English; also written ‘for tae’).

Fortun (for-tun) n., arch. Fortune, chance personified – ‘An so it is that A heh thae thochts ti faa back on gin Fortun takes a pick at iz …’ [ECS].

the Forty Fits (thu-for’-ee-fits) n. popular name for the track leading from Calaburn farm to Whitehaughmoor etc., off the road north of Whitehaugh. A continuation of this road leads towards Shielwood Loch. It is marked ‘drove road’ on the Ordnance Survey map, and may well have been such, although the nearby drove road of which we have a description passed more directly from Whitehaugh to the ‘Fower Road Ends’. The name probably derives from the dykes on either side being about 40 feet apart.

the Forty Thiefs Bus (thu-for’-ee-theefz-bus) n. humorous name sometimes used for the minibus used at the Common Riding to transport the Committee members from the Hut to the Moor.

foryeild (for-yeeld) v., poet. to repay, recompense – ‘The Lord rewairdet me akordin til my richteouniss; akordin til the cleenniss o’ my han’s he heth foryeildet me’ [HSR].

Foster (fos-tur) n. Abraham ‘Abie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Greena who was accused in 1623 along with Hob of stealing sheep belonging to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Kershope. He was ordered to be banished. He may be the same ‘Abraham Foster in Grenehall’ listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; Sim ‘in Grenehall’ was also listed and hence presumably related. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) housemaid at Branxholme in 1791, when she worked for Adam Ogilvie. Sir George see Sir John Forster. Gilbert ‘Gib’ of Foulshiels (16th C.) named in 1590 along John Elliot of Heuchhouse and Martin’s Clem Crozier. They were accused of stealing livestock and a detailed list of items from a servant of Sir John Forster. He was surely related to John of Foulshiels. Helen (19th C.) charged with the murder of her daughter Betsy at the Slitrig in 1867. They lived at Catherine Scott’s boarding house on the Loan. Henry (17th C.) recorded as ‘Harie forester’ when he paid the land tax on £420 for Greena in Castleton Parish in 1678. He was probably descended from earlier Fosters in Greena. Jean (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (16th C.) listed as ‘younger, of Fouleschelis’ in 1581, among Elliots and Arm-strongs complaining about crimes committed by the Scots and their allies. He could be related to the John ‘Forster’ recorded in 1541, accused of being involved with raids in which English-men were killed. John (16th C.) son of ‘Meikle Rowie’ of Greenaugh. He is recorded in 1583 among a large group of men led by William of Kynmont into Tynedale. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1647. John (b.1771/2) horse-trainer from England. He lived at Kirkgate and Kirk-yard (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Mary, and their children included John and Jean. Law (16th/17th C.) resident of Greena. In 1611 he is listed as ‘in Grenenha’ among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh. It is unclear what the forename ‘Law’ might be. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘callit Foulesheillis’ in 1623 when he and Abie Foster in Greena were accused of stealing sheep belonging to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Kershope. He was ordered to be banished. His lands were probably Foulshiels in Liddesdale. He was probably related to the earlier Gib and John of Foulshiels. Robert (17th/18th C.) miller in Synton Mill. He married Agnes Donaldson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Andrew (b.1701); and Margaret (b.1703). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Leaugh in 1836 when he was head of household in Castleton Parish for the first time. He was still there in 1837, but disappeared after that. He was perhaps son of the labourer recorded in Bygate and Upperraw 1835–41. Roland ‘Meikle Rowie’, (16th C.) tenant in Greenaugh. In 1583 his son John was listed as part of a large group under William of Kinmont who raided Tynedale. Roland ‘Rowie’, ‘Ower the Moss’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when he was found guilty of stealing from several farms. He stole 20 sheep from Myredykes, 20 sheep from ‘Callshiels’ and a horse from Chapelhill. He was ordered to be hanged for these crimes. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Sym Foster in Grenehall’ and listed along with men from Liddesdale and Eskdale. Abraham ‘in Grenehall’ was also listed. William of Greena (16th C.) recorded in 1583 when it was said he had a daughter who had married Englishman Hob Foster of Kershope. William of Foulshiels (16th C.) signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, on behalf of his ‘bairnes and servands’. His name is listed along with many Elliots of Liddesdale, and is recorded as ‘larde of Fowlesheils’. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in Langhaugh in 1611 when Roger Scott, Captain of Hermitage, was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. William (17th C.) recorded in 1642 as brother of the deceased James in Greena. This was on a long list of thieves of the Border who were to be tried. He may be the same man as ‘Weilliam Foster, called Rossis Will’ on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. William Air (1801–62) from Coldstream, he worked as a shoemaker, later moving to Glasgow. He is remembered for the verse that he published, especially those relating to angling contributed to ‘Whistle-Binkie’. He was a friend of the Ettrick Shepherd, and shared with him a love of country sports (see also Forster).

Foster’s Bush (fos-turz-bush) n. popular name for a field lying near the Justin Haugh, perhaps now part of Bonchester village. It is said that the English Warden Sir John Forster took part in a jousting challenge there and was unhorsed and wounded by one of the lairds of Rulewater. His supporters laid him under a bush to recover, hence the name of the field. Tancred states that it was still known by this name in the early 20th century.

fot (fo’) n., arch. a footless sock used in wet or snowy weather – ‘A chaamp that turns foties an cuittiekins soappin-wat’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘foat’; usually plural; cf. fottie).

fother (fo-thur) n., arch. fodder, food for live-stock, v., arch. to feed cattle or horses, humorously applied to feeding people, to cater – ‘...a richt toon an big eunech ti fother an fend for fremd folk an gangrels’ [ECS].

fottie (fo-tee, fo’-ee) n., arch. a child’s stock-ing or woollen boot, booties – ‘And ye’se get fosties for yer feet At the Big Bazaar’ [JT], someone whose trousers, stockings or boots are too wide (cf. fot).

fouched (fowch) pp., arch. fought – ‘Thaye cam roun’ aboot me alsua wi’ wurds o’ hætret; an’

focht agayne me wuthouten ane caus’ [HSR] (focht is more common).

foughten (focht-tin) pp., poet. fought – ‘I’ve fleech’d an’ foughten a’ in vain – Jock disna seem to care . . . ’ [JT] (cf. the more common feuchen).

fouk (fowk) n., pl., arch. people – ‘But ye are happy, and I’m sae, And may rejoice whan ither fouk are wae’ [CPM], ‘Ah, dear Sir, it’s no a’ goud that glitters, and at ony rate the rich fouk gie aye least away’ [RW], ‘For thow wult saufe the aaflicket fouk . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Thou sellist thy fowk for naucht . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Pretensic fowk gaed primpin’ by, Snirkin’ at sic a din . . . ’ [DH] (also written ‘fowk’; cf. the more modern folk).

Foulbrae (fowl-bra) n. former name for lands in Roberton Parish. Gavin Dryden was living there in 1723. The location is unknown.

Foulden (fowl-din) n. Matthew (18th C.) in-comer to Hawick around 1733, when he was asked by the Council to produce testimonials from his former residence, Jedburgh. Having failed to produce them by 1738 he was banished from Hawick along with his wife and family. A ‘Matthew Foulden’ was born at Stobo in Peeblesshire in 1674 and could be related (possibly the same as ‘Fulton’).

Fouledge (fowl-eej) n. farmstead to the west of Skelfhill farm (the name could refer to birds or dirty).

Fouledge Park (fowl-eej-pawrk) n. name for a piece of land on Minto estate. In 1779 (and 1811) ‘Fowledge Park, and one north of it’ was valued at £45 10s 11d.

Fouledge Sike (fowl-eej-sik) n. stream that rises near Fouledge runs past Alderybar and joins the Southdean Burn, to run into the Northhouse Burn and then the Teviot (G. Watson suggests that the name is ‘foul leche’, meaning ‘smelly ditch’).

Foulis see Fowls

Foulmire Heights (fowl-mir-hits) n. high ground on the Border, roughly between Saughtree and Kielder. It reaches a height of 396 m, is the site of a triangulation pillar, and is the source of the Larriston Burn.

Foul Mooth (fowl-mooth) n. nickname for Robert Robson.

the Foul Raid (thu-fowl-räd) n. popular name for the failed attempt by a Scots army under Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas, to take Roxburgh and Berwick from the English in 1416. Hearing of a large English force, the Scots retreated ignominiously. In retaliation the English army attacked Teviotdale and Liddesdale, including the burning of Hawick, Jedburgh and Selkirk.

Foulshiels (fowl-sheelz) n. former hamlet west of Selkirk along the Yarrow, opposite Newark Castle. It was once a seat of the Scotts, and now a farm. Mungo Park was born here in 1771. An ornamental piece of grate found in the ruins there was donated to the Museum in 1900 (it is ‘Foulsheels’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Foulshieills’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Foulshiels (fowl-sheelz) n. farm about 2 miles north of Newcastleton, to the right off the B6399, above Redheugh. A bridle path once connected this with the upper Hermitage valley, via Harstgarth Fell and Twislehope. It was formerly split into Nether and Over Foulshiels. South of the farmstead, on a terrace on the slopes of Foulshiels Rig are the remains of a settlement. And on a ridge just to the west is another ruined building, along with field-banks, and extensive boundary banks and signs of cultivation along the Well Sike. About 470 yards (420 m) north of the present farmstead is the probably site of the tower-house of Foulshiels (marked on the 1850 Ordnance Survey map), with 2 enclosures, remains of a farmstead, boundary dykes and ‘lazy-beds’. The tower is about 12 m by 8.5 m and has been robbed of stone. Its location is probably the ‘Foulshemoore’ in a rental record of 1541 and possibly the Nether Foulshiels mapped by Pont. In 1541 it was valued at 6 shillings and at that time the lease was vacant. ‘Johnne Forster, younger’ is recorded as proprietor in 1581, William Foster in 1584 and Gib Foster in 1590. Archibald Elliot was there in 1611. The farm was once owned by the Elliots of Redheugh, but was part of the ongoing dispute with Scott of Buccleuch in the early 17th century; William Scott of Newark’s tenants were settled there and complained in about 1620 that about 100 Elliots had raided the farm, removing all the hay and fodder. Hob Foster was associated with the farm there in 1623 when he was accused of stealing sheep from Kershope. The farm was owned by the Bishop of Caithness in 1632. Walter Turnbull was tenant there in 1694. Further to the west on the north side of Ews Knowes are the remains of 7 or 8 turf buildings, probably the township of Over Foulshiels. Along the track to the north of the modern farmstead are the remains of a turf sheepfold and closer to Foulshiels Wood there are 2 or 3 others. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 1729 acres and was bounded by Roan, Tarras, lands held by the Laird of Hoscoe and the Hermitage Water. James Elliot was shepherd there in 1835 (the origin is probably from Old English ‘fûl’ and Middle English ‘schele’, meaning ‘the dirty huts’; the name appears as ‘Fouleschesel’ in 1581, ‘Foulscheill’ in 1611, ‘Foulschellis’ in 1632 and ‘Foulsheills’ in 1694; it is on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Foulshheel’s’, on Blaue’s 1654 map as ‘O. Foul-sheels’ and ‘N. Foul-sheels’, on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Foullsheills’ and has its modern name on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Foulton see Fulton

the Foul Well (thu-fowl-wel) n. former spring on Braithaugh farm in Rulewater. It was located near the modern farmhouse, and said to have once been the cause of much sickness on the farm. It was eventually disused on account of its supposed harmful effects on the residents (mentioned by Tancred, it is also written ‘the Ffoul Well’).

Foulwud (fowl-wud) n. Foulwood, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376. ‘Foulwood superior’ and ‘Foulwood inferior’ were both valued at 10 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 ‘Ovir Foulwod’ was leased to Alexander Armstrong (probably son of ‘Ill Will’) and ‘Nethir Foulwod’ to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnishburn). The lands of ‘Fowlwoods’ are also listed separately, but with no additional information. ‘Foulwodles’ is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1632, and ‘Fawhead alias Foulwod’ among possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. Nether Foulwood became the modern Gillside. The stream to the west is Foulwood Sike (it is marked on Blaue’s 1654 map; ‘Ouerfoulwod’ and ‘Netherfoulwood’ are recorded in 1541).

Foulwud Sike (fowl-wud-sik) n. Foulwood Sike, stream in southern Liddesdale, rising on Sufficient Hill and running roughly eastwards to join the Liddel near Gillside.

foumart (fow-mar’) n., poet. the pole-cat, Mustela putorius – ‘The waizle dunne frae the auld grey cairn, The theiffe foulmart came forenoon ...’ [JTe], an offensive person or object – ‘...in case it had played the foumart wi him durin’ the forenoon ...’ [DH] (also written ‘foulmart’).

founert (foo-nurt’, foo-nurt) pp., arch. foundered, collapsed (usually with drunkenness) – ‘He stottit oot wi founert look, Syne at the sky he spiert ...’ [WL] (also spelled ‘foonert’; cf. foondert).

the Fountain (thu-fown’-in, -foon’-in) n. ornamental fountain in Wilton Lodge Park, in front of the Museum. It was installed as a result of money left to the town by Gilbert Davidson in 1896 and erected in the following year. Unlike the Brown Fountain and the MacNee Fountain, it does not usually have the name ‘Davidson’ attached to it, but is commonly referred to as simply ‘the Fountain’. The main cast-iron part of the fountain came from McDowell, Steven & Co., Milton Ironworks in Glasgow. It was painted silver through most of the 20th century and has decorations including dolphins and turtles. During renovations it was discovered that the original colour was probably blue and gold, and it was returned to this condition in 2018.

Fountainhall (fown’in-hal) n. village on the A7 towards Edinburgh and former station on the Waverley Line, at the junction with the Lauder Light Railway.

the Fountainheid (thu-fown’in-heed) n. former name for an area near the Vertish, perhaps related to the spring there.

foutsome (fowt-sum) adj., arch. forward, interfering, officious – ‘A foutsome little brat’ [GW] (noted by J. Jamieson).

Fouty Sike (fow-ti-sik) n. stream in southern Liddesdale, running westwards to join the Liddel near the cottage of Clerkleap. The wood near its foot is known as Foutysike Wood and is shown as old trees on both sides of the stream on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties.

fow (fow) adj., arch. full, sated – ‘And O, my friend! wi’ me he’ll share a heart, As fow o’ kindness, as its free o’ art’ [CPM], ‘...for it’s ill speakin atween a fow man and a fastin’ [ECS] (Scottish proverb), ‘An what A’d ti haud-sae, A Wasna boass, { if the truith be telld, A Wasna boass, – if the truth be told, A was riftin-fowe!’ [ECS], comfortable, well-off – ‘A fow body’ [JoJ], ‘The per had a guid fow life ...’ [GW].

fountainhead (thu-fown’-in-hal) n. village on the A7 towards Edinburgh and former station on the Waverley Line, at the junction with the Lauder Light Railway.

laid on the town’s foue’ [BR1732], ‘Paid John Elliot, tanner, for lime to the East Port Cross, being 6½ fous, . . . 0 2 0’ [BR1748] (also written ‘fou’ and ‘fowe’; cf. the now more common ful; elsewhere in Scotland this is ‘foo’ or fu; see also fow-hauden).

fower (fow-ur) n. four – ‘A was feerd A’d be owre lang, for it was better as a quarter after fowr be the toon’s clock’ [ECS], ‘When ee came back fower oors later Eer mother asked whair ‘hev ee been’’[AY], ‘And I saw a bull-doser Bashin at a fower-fit gable O’ whun . . . ’[DH], ‘They tell mei it’ll take about fower meenits tae read . . . ’ [JCo], ‘At fower o’clock we’d oot wi’ top or gird . . . ’ [WL], ‘. . . clumsily stringing twae, threi, Or fower . . . ’ [DH], ‘The built in bed where fowre baurns Slept The oothouse where the coal was kept . . . ’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘fowr’ and ‘fowre’; the double syllable pronunciation is much more distinct than in most other parts of Scotland).

fower-oors (fow-ur-oorz) n., arch. a meal taken at 4 o’clock or 4 hours before bedtime, particularly by farm-workers – ‘. . . an’ sae, efter gettin’ there, and gettin’ some four-o’ors an’ supper, they made family worshup . . . ’ [BCM1880].

the Fower Road Ends (thu-fow-ur-röd-endz) n. cross-roads at the top of Stirches Road, past the Convent, a popular area for country walks. The road ahead leads to Tandlaw and Drinkstone farms, to the left is Stouslie and to the right the Boonraws and the A7. A drove road used to come from Boghall to here, and then follow towards Stouslie on its way to the Borthwick valley. The name is also sometimes used to refer to the crossroads at the top of the Nipknowes – ‘Sirches Mains and the fower road ends Drinkstone, or Boonraw West Ma feet turn left gaun on tae Stouslie That’s the road aw like the best’ [AY].

fowerteen (fow-ur-teen) n. fourteen, arch. a fourteen-shilling piece – ‘There was left in a bagg within the box . . . , ane old fourteen, two seven shilling pieces, two old three shilling pieces . . . ’ [PR1712] (used only sparingly compared with ‘fourteen’: see also foarten).

fowie (fow-ee) adj., arch. comfortably independent – ‘Possessing a comfortable inpdendence, Roxb. It is never used like Bne, as a term of respect; but always in such connection as to sug-gest a different idea; as ‘He’s a fowie body’, expl. as equivalent to ‘an old hunks’. It is derived from Fow, full’ [JoJ].

Fowler (fow-lur) n. Auntie (d.1781) recorded in Hawick’s death records as ‘old Auntie Fowler’. It is unclear what her full name might have been. Isobel (17th C.) listed at Slacks among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Her surname is recorded as ‘fouller’. John (d.1795) tailor in Hawick, son of Robert. He died in Hawick. John, F.E.I.S. (b.1844) taught in Hawick for more than 40 years. Born in Ross-shire, he came to Hawick as Headmaster at the West Port Free Church School, transferring to Drumlanrig in 1872. Probably the same Fowler, of Longview, made a sketch of the ‘Chamberlain’s Hoose’ about 1870. He married Elizabeth Sinton in 1872 and she died in 1920. Their children included William, Elizabeth, Robert, Annie, John, Margaret (a teacher in Kerikeri, New Zealand), James and George (who may have married Margaret Hamilton and moved to Brooks, Alberta). John (19th C.) first Secretary of the Hawick Home Mission when it was founded in 1873. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘Fouller’ when he was paid to be Hawick’s Town Piper in 1721. He probably took over from James Oliver and continued until about 1732. His name may also have been written ‘Foulie’. Perhaps the same Robert ‘in Sea Croft’ married Margaret Elliot and had children Elizabeth (b.1743) and Isobel (b.1745); the witnesses in 1743 were merchant John Cavers and shoemaker John Scott. Robert (18th/19th C.) forester to the Duke of Buccleuch at least in the period 1798–1807. He worked at Hassendean Common and probably elsewhere. Walter (17th C.) named on a list of ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Walter (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hassendean (officially Roberton Parish) in 1683 for Robert Scott and Isobel Turnbull. Rev. William (c.1560–1612) poet and scholar who was Parson of Hawick in the reign of King James VI. He was son of William, a merchant of Edinburgh, with his mother possibly being Janet.
Fowlerawe

Fokart. His sister Anne married Sir John Drummond. He graduated from St. Leonard’s College, St. Andrews in 1573/4 and received his M.A. in 1578. He then studied in Europe, but apparently suffered at the hands of some Catholic Scotsmen and returned to Britain, acting as a spy to the Duke of Lennox in London 1583–84. He was appointed Rector of Hawick in 1585, being presented by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He apparently received 2/3 of the salary, while the Reader (and actual minister), William Auchmowtie received the other 1/3. In 1587/8 he assigned the ‘tack’ of Hawick Kirk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch for 5 years. He was still described as ‘Rector of Hawick’ when he was witness to a 1595 land document of Walter Scott of Branxholme. And later in 1595 when he witnessed another document of Sir Walter’s, he is described as ‘secretary to the Queen’. He accompanied Sir Peter Young to Denmark in 1589 to take part in the negotiations of the marriage of James VI with the Princess Anne. He became Master of Requests and Secretary-Depute to Queen Anne in 1589, and later her Secretary. He must have been at Holyroodhouse during much of this time; there is no reason to believe he ever visited Hawick, and he probably ceased to be Rector in 1601. However, there are papers of the period 1602–07 relating to an action with the feuars and others over payment of the Parish teinds. In 1606 he gave a feu charter to Walter, son of Walter Scott of Buccleuch, for the Kirklands of Hawick, except for the Manse and Glebe. And in 1608 he is still described as ‘parson of Hawick’ in a ‘tack’ whereby Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank received the teinds of Hawick Kirk. In 1603 he accompanied the Queen to London and never returned. He was apparently known as a great anagram maker. He wrote ‘An Answer to the Calumnious Letter and Erroneous Propositions of an Apostat named M. Jo. Hammiltoun’ (1581), dedicated to Francis, Earl of Bothwell, as well as a commendatory sonnet for James VI’s ‘Essayes of A Prentise’ (1584). His better known poetic works were published posthumously by his nephew, the poet William Drummond of Hawthornden, namely ‘The Tarantula of Love’ and a translation of Petrarch’s ‘Triumphs’. In perhaps his most famous work, the ‘The Triumphs of the most famous Poet, Mr. Francis Petrarke, translated out of Italian into English’ (published 1587), he refers to himself as ‘P. of Hauicke’. Several other pieces exist in manuscript form, including an almost complete translation of Machiavelli’s ‘Prince’, as well as some unfinished verses, anagrams and scrolls of official letters in French, Italian and Latin. Some of these manuscripts are still in Edinburgh University library. He married (although his wife’s name is unknown) and had 4 surviving children, with his eldest son, Ludovic being recorded as portioner of Restalrig. After his death he was succeeded as minister of Hawick by Thomas Abernethy (formerly spelled ‘Fiolar’, ‘Fouler’, ‘Fouller’, ‘Fowler’, etc.).

Fowlerawe (fow-lur-raw) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of the Laird of Gledstains, along with ‘Torne’ (probably Turn) and ‘Wenerton’. The exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Fowlerslands (fow-lurz-lawnds) n. former place name in Cavers, probably near Denholm. There was a confirming charter for these lands ‘in Denum’ to Thomas Cranston in about 1380. It was among the lands held by Thomas Cranston of that Ilk in 1458/9. It was referred to in 1483 when William Douglas of Cavers renounced these lands to John Cranston of that Ilk, as well as part of Denholm Mains. It was listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1511. It was regranted to Sir William Cranston in 1512 (where it is referred to as being ‘near the town of Dennom’), and listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1509/10. In 1636 it was referred to as ‘the land called the foul-leris lands’ when passed from John, Lord Crnston to his nephew William Cranston. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was then described as lands in Denholm (it is ‘Foullerysland’ in c.1380, ‘Fowlaris lande’ in 1458/9, ‘Fowlaris lands’ in 1509/10, ‘Foularis lands’ in 1511, ‘Fowlersland’ in 1512, ‘Foullars lands’ in 1574 and ‘Foullerlands’ in 1687 and ‘Foulerslands’ in 1698).

Fowlertoun (fow-lur-tu) n. Alexander (d.c.1423) cleric who was a servant of the captive James I. He held some rights of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, probably in succession to John Lyon. His surname is written ‘de Fouler-toum’.

Fowls (fowlz) n. Rev. David (17th C.) presented to Bedrule Parish by Lord Stewart of Traquair in 1633 and ordained there the same year. However, he was translated to Oxnam (probably a more valuable living) in 1634. He was deposed in 1639 for contempt of the Acts of the General Assembly. He thereafter lived in England, abandoning his 7 children. But in 1662 he petitioned Parliament along with his son John, claiming he had been deprived simply for refusing to sign the Covenant, and was then given a stipend. He appears to have spent much of the intervening time in England and was described being in Paddington, Middlesex in 1663. He married and had 7 children, including James (who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648) and John. James (18th C.) footman at Stobs in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Francis Eliott (also written ‘Foulis’ and other variants).

the Fox and Hounds (thu-foks-in-hovndz) n. public house on Main Street in Denholm, built as a coaching inn in 1741. It was run by William Leyden in the 1850s and 60s, Mr. Brodie in the late 19th century and Mr. Sanderson in the early 20th. It still has some guest rooms today, and also hosts occasional folk music events (it is incorrectly the ‘Hare & Hounds’ in 1852).

foxterleaves (foks-tur-levz) n., arch. the fox-glove.

foyer (foi) n. a farewell dinner or party, often before a wedding – ‘Did the deed-raap soon ... the nacht efter guid King Alisaunder’s waddeen-foy’ [ECS], ‘Oo’ll get ratten’s rest this nicht; the nicht efter guid King Alisaunder’s waddeen-glove.’

In freedom’s lap it fand a mother ... ’ [JEDM], ‘I am Clinty, Clinty, Clinty, fra ma hoose upon the rock’ [JEDM], from the time that – ‘Fra he entered English ground, the order was thus ... ’ [T] (rarer pronunciation, cf. fri and threh).

frame (fram) n. a knitting frame, formerly a hand-knitting machine built into a wooden frame, but in the modern era being a machine making many garment bodies or sleeves at once – ‘There’s a blithe kin’ o’ music In the whushin’ o’ the frames’ [WL].

frame flat (främ-flaw’) n. the floor in a mill on which the knitting frame were housed (see flat).

frame-worker (främ-wur-kur) n. a person who works the knitting frames in a mill, traditionally a male job – ‘Aw yon frame workers and knitters Shaded frae the sun bleezin’ doon . . . ’ [AY].

Framysden (fra-mis-din) n. John (d.1418) appointed as Bishop of Glasgow by Pope Boniface IX in 1391. This was as a result of a dispute in the church at the time, since Matthew de Glendowyn was already Bishop. He was never recognised within Scotland.

France (frawns) n. country in Europe, across the English channel from England. The Lovels and many other Norman families originated in northern France. The ‘Auld Alliance’ between France and Scotland started formally in 1295 and united the two countries against their common foe, England (although the details of the alliance over the centuries are extremely complex). A treaty of 1512 made all citizens of Scotland citizens of France and vice versa. The alliance effectively ended with the death of Mary of Guise, the wife of James V, in 1560. Britain formally declared war on France in 1756 (as part of the Seven Years War), the event being marked by drinking (as recorded in the Town books). The French Revolution had a dramatic polarising effect on Britain in the latter years of the 18th century. In Hawick there was a meeting of pro-war, anti-reform supporters in 1792, chaired by Lord Napier, leading to the following years being extremely politically charged, with animosity and suspicion between the 2 groups. The ‘loyalist’, pro-war group consisted mainly of wealthier men, while the ‘reformist’, anti-war group was mainly from the working classes. There were several specific incidents, such as 2 reformist publicans being denied licenses by the local J.Ps. Sympathisers of the Revolution were referred to as ‘black-nebs’. There were official illuminations in Hawick following the victory in the Battle of the Nile in 1798. There was a great enlisting into volunteer army units, prompted by a concern about French invasion, culminating locally in the ‘False Alarm’ of 1804. During the Napoleonic Wars there were French prisoners of war in Hawick. Huge numbers of local men fell in France during WWI and again during WWII, many still lying in unmarked graves. Hawick became twinned with the French town of Bailleul in 1973.

France (frawns) n. James (18th/19th C.) Supervisor of Excise in Hawick recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory.

the Franchise Agitation (thu-fran-chiz-aw-ji-tä-shin) n. name generally given to a series of political demonstrations during the summer and autumn of 1884, demanding equally voting rights for a much larger fraction of working men, particular in rural districts. In Hawick there was a march of approximately 6000 people along the High Street, the procession being 2½ miles long, with 10 bands, along with many flags and banners. Several banners are preserved in the Museum, particularly from Dicksons and Laings. The Representation of the People Act (also known as the Third Reform Act), introduced by William Gladstone, was passed at the end of 1884.

Francis Hole (fran-sis-hoöl) n. popular name for a pool in the Teviot, to the east of Denholm (mentioned by James Murray in 1863).

Francis’ Well (fran-si-seez-wel) n. spring at the left-hand side of the main A7 just after Newton, to the north of Hawick. The origin of the name is uncertain, but could be related to St. Francis if connected with the nearby ‘Hallywell Hill’, which has its own ‘Hally Well’. John Cavers was farmer at the steading there in 1797, when it is recorded as ‘Franciswell’.

Frankie’s (frawng-kee) n. Frankie’s the Inn Place, bar at 14 Bourtree Place.

Frankie o the Stobs (frawng-kee-ö-thu-stölbs) n. nickname for Sir Francis Eliott.

Frank Place (frangk-plis) n. street near Loch Park that had tenements constructed on it in 1881 and demolished in 1977. The location was the southern end of Lothian and Garfield Streets, directly opposite the top end of Allars Bank. It was named for Frank Hogg, who lived near there at the time of his death.

Frank Place Brig (frangk-plis-brig) n. occasional name for the road bridge over the railway at the top of Allars Bank and adjacent to the former Frank Place, also sometimes called the Welloagate Brig.

Frank Scott Court (frangk-sko’-kör’) n. sheltered housing development off Buccleuch Street, built 2001/2 and named after ex-Provost Frank Scott. The bell from the Old Parish Church is displayed at the front of the new building.

Fraser (frah-zor) n. Alexander of Ewesdale (14th/15th C.) resigned his lands in Ewesdale sometime before 1426, when they were granted to Simon Little. This included Meikledale, Kirkton,
Fraser Avenue

Sorbie, etc. George Hardie (1823–81) second son of Bailie Robert Fraser and great-grandson of Bailie John Hardie. He was a draper by trade, succeeding his father in ‘John Hislop & Co.’, 51 High Street. First elected to the Council in 1853, he was twice a Magistrate, as well as a J.P., and continued on the reconstituted Council, for North High Street Ward. He was made Provost in 1868, serving until 1871. He was a Whig Liberal in politics. He was a member of the first School Board and of the Parochial Board. He also led the resignations from the 4th Roxburghshire Volunteers and became Lieutenant in the 5th Roxburgh (Hawick Volunteer Corps), thereafter being involved in the argument between the two corps, which led to his dismissal and the disbanding of the 5th Roxburgh. The song ‘Hawick Volunteers’ was composed and first sung for him in 1860. He was a keen Common Riding supporter and said to have had a fine tenor voice. He was also a leading light in the Masons, and involved in the formation of the Lodge St. James. In addition he was an early Trustee of St. George’s Kirk. He was living at 7 Teviot Crescent in 1875. On his retiral he was presented with an inscribed tea set, later became landlord of the Imperial Hotel, and was buried in St. Mary’s (note, his name is also sometimes ‘Hardie’). George, J.P. (d.1962) came to Hawick as Excise Officer in 1936. He served for 18 years on the Town Council starting in 1940 and was Provost 1945–58. He gave his name to Fraser Avenue. He died at his home in Edinburgh. George Watson reporter who covered rugby for the Hawick Express. Ian Acting Father in 1994 and Common-Riding Committee Secretary since 2017. Jack (20th C.) well-known local ‘fixer-upper’. Brought up in Cavers, he worked as a joiner in Mansfield most of his life, and was famous for renovating old cars and bikes. He also rescued and restored the whistle from Blenkie’s mill and the Willie Leggat statue. He was an elder at Cavers Kirk. John (17th/18th C.) preacher at Hassendean Kirk the last 2 Sundays before it was demolished. He went on to become the minister at Glencorse in 1691, and was transferred to Alness in 1695. There is an assignation against him in 1692 from Thomas Shiels (minister at Roberton), claiming the stipend of Hassendean to which he believed he had the right. John (18th/19th C.) baker and flour dealer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Lesley daughter of Ian and Nancy. She is a local photographer who produced ‘Hawick Common Riding, An Illustrated Guide’ along with Judith Murray in 2009. Her imaging and photography company is ‘ILF Imaging’, known for its extensive coverage of the Common Riding, as well as providing general photographic services. She has been Treasurer of the Common Riding Committee since 2017. She proposed the toast to the Common Riding at the 2018 Dinner. Mrs. ?? (d.1840) midwife in Hawick. Her death is recorded in 1840. Bailie Robert (b.c.1795) father of Provost George Hardie and a draper by trade. His premises were at 7 Teviot Crescent. He is recorded as a merchant on Teviot Crescent on the electoral roll of 1832 and the censuses of 1841 and 1851 (when he was a widower). He was a good friend of William Laidlaw. Although his family joined the Free Kirk after the Disruption, he remained a staunch ‘Auld Kirker’. He was listed as a Steward at the 1836 Common Riding Races. He was mentioned in the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’; he swapped a liferent in Roxburghshire with one in Selkirkshire belonging to William Muir. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. His wife was Rebecca and their children included John H., Margaret, George and Rebecca. A portrait exists of him. Sir Simon of Oliver-ercastle (d.c.1291) from Peeblesshire, son of Sir Simon. He held extensive lands in Scotland, and was Keeper of Ettrick Forest, as well as Sheriff of Traquair and Peebles. In about the 1280s he was witness to a resignation of lands by Richard of Rule. In 1291 King Edward I ordered him to deliver harts to the Bishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow. His son, also Sir Simon, led the Scots to victory at the Battle of Roslin in 1303, refused to swear fealty to Edward, fought with Robert the Bruce, was captured by the English and was executed in London. Simon Lord Lovat (c.1667–1747) Chief of the Fraser Clan, he was famous for his belligerent nature and for changing allegiance, being a supporter of the House of Hanover in 1715 and of the Stuarts in 1745. He supposedly passed through Hawick along with the Jacobite army in 1745. There is a story told about a local man who acted as a guide and met him, later becoming a barber in Newcastle, and slitting the throat of one of the men who testified against Lovat. Defeated at Culloden, he was beheaded at the Tower of London, the last man to be executed in this way in Britain (also spelled ‘Frazer’).
freedom (free-dum) n., arch. liberty to engage in the rights of a member of a community, especially a burgh – ‘Item, whatsoever person committis the said theft ... sal be banyshit the town, and lose their freedom for ever’ [BR1640], the boundaries within which the laws of a burgh apply – ‘Impr. whatsoever person sal commit blud upon utheris within the freedom of Hawick ... ’ [BR1640].

the Free Kirk (thu-free-kirk) n. the Free Church, established after the Disruption in 1843, when hundreds of Church of Scotland ministers left to form the Free Protesting Church. In Hawick Rev. John Wallace left as minister of the Parish Church along with about 600 of the congregation of 800. They met originally in the East Bank Meeting House, then built their own church in 1844. The site was purchased from Mr. Anderson, with Mr. Nixon of Lynnwood laying the foundation stone. This became St. George’s Church, which was long afterwards known as the Free Church or Free Kirk, and is now renamed Teviot Church. A second congregation started meeting in the West-end in 1855, leading to the construction of the West Port Kirk in 1866. Another Free Church congregation, St. Andrew’s, was founded in 1866, with the church itself constructed in 1868, to serve the northern part of town. There was also a Free Kirk started about the same time in the Borthwick (the Snoot), another in Denholm in 1844 and one at Wolfelee about 1849.

Free Kirk Lane see Free Church Lane

the Free Kirk Manse (thu-free-kirk-mans) n. manse for St. George’s Church, built on Wilton path in 1846. The land had previously been a garden belonging to Francis Ballantyne. The house was designed by Smith of Darnick and can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races. It was occupied continuously by the Free Kirk minister until Rev. Johnman died in 1923, then sold the following year. The junior minister had lived at Broomieknowe, and this house was gifted by Sir Thomas Henderson in 1925 to become the new Manse. This house may have been the ‘U.P. Manse’ and ‘Wilton Manse’ recorded on Ordnance Survey maps, which was demolished about 1969.

Free Lance (free-lawns) n. pseudonym for Isabella Anderson Gray.

the Free Library (thu-free-II-bru-ree) n. an early name in use for the Library.

freeman (free-mon) n. another name for a Burgess – ‘Item, that ilk freeman’s eldest son and heir that is to be admitted freeman and burgess, his father being in life, sall pay forty shillings with the wyne and pertinents’ [BR1640].

Freeman (free-men) n. Patrick (17th/18th C.) charged in 1701 with going over the Border into England to get married. He is recorded giving evidence that the Burgh Officer was the first person to arrest him (i.e. that it was not done on the authority of any other court). Walter (18th C.) clockmaker in Hawick. He was engaged by the Council in 1747 to fix and upkeep the clock on St. Mary’s, with an annual salary of £1 5s. This included providing iron work for a dial-plate on the west side and alterations to the dial-plate on the east side. He is also recorded making 420 communion tokens and a stamp for Hawick Parish Kirk in 1751. In 1752 he was paid the remains of his salary for upkeep of the clock for a year. He may have been the same as the Walter who led the ‘Patriots’ (or was at least related to him). He married Margaret Falside and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1758; the witnesses were William Dyce and Walter Ruecastle. Walter (18th C.) leader of a secession movement in Hawick Kirk. He also led the ‘Patriots’, a group of 205 Burgesses and others who took the Town Council to court 1778–81, claiming they had improperly managed the Common on behalf of the Burgesses and questioning their authority. They particularly complained about the Bailies, stating that they were ‘generally a set of poor low men’ and that ‘he that drank most in the Baillies’ house had most interest in the decision’. In 1778 he and James Dryden were jailed in Hawick over the weekend and then taken off to Jedburgh Jail for another 2 days before being bailed (he is probably the one described as being ‘in bad health’ at the time). The Court of Session ruled in favour of the Magistrates and Council, but the outcome also led to the Council being fixed at 31 members. He was probably the same watchmaker Walter whose daughter Isobel married John Clark in Edinburgh in 1780. He may be the Walter, married to Margaret Falside, whose daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick in 1758. He is probably the Walter who was recorded renting the ‘mortcloth’ in Hawick in 1773 and also in 1774 for his ‘goalsister’. Dr. William (1751/2–1821) surgeon and liberal politics leader in Hawick in the latter part of the 18th century. He was said to be a ‘blackneb’ and had a portrait of Napoleon in his house. He was an early friend of Robert Wilson, apparently influencing his political and religious views; it was said that ‘Dr. Freeman had made Rob Wilson a’ but the soul’. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1789–97. He is probably the William who married Helen Scott in Hawick in 1788. He seems likely to be related to Walter, perhaps his son. He was buried at St. Mary’s, his gravestone reading ‘A man of sterling honour, integrity, and benevolence. A warm friend and affectionate Relation. His talents as a professional man were of the highest order and were ever at the service of the poor’ (also written ‘Freeman’).

French (french) n. Adam (d.c.1578) 8th Laird of Thornydykes in Berwickshire. He was son of Robert and Anne Home and grandson of Adam (who in 1502 was on the panel for Sir David Home of Wedderburn inheriting some of his father’s lands around Lauder). He was a minor at the death of his father and had a charter from Thornydykes in 1555/6. He was involved in a contract relating to lands in Gordon in 1563 and in 1567 he had an action involving lands at ‘Pet- cokkis’. In 1569 he acquired from Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh Abbey, the lands of Ulston, Nether Crailing, Auld Jedburgh, Ruc- castle, Abbotrule, Bowatsyde, Grange, Fodder- lee, Over Bonchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Belses, Ancrum and others. This was for the sum of 30 hundred merks. In 1574/5 he was involved in a dispute over teinds in the Parish of Gordon. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Hoppringle of Blindlee, and she died in 1582. His children were: Robert, who succeeded; James, executor of his mother’s will, who led an action against the Abbot of Jedburgh in 1583; and John, tu- tor of Thornydykes after his brother James died; Alexander, who was mixed up with the Earl of Bothwell; Thomas, who was in the King’s service; Margaret; Christine; Jonet; and Eupham.

Adam of Thornydykes (1599–1617) only son of Robert, he was 10th Laird of Thornydykes. He was also Laird of Abbotrule and other lands that had been purchased by his grandfather from Jed- burgh Abbey. His uncle John was appointed as his tutor in 1604. It is said that at the age of 14 he was attending school in Haddington when he was kidnapped from the care of his guardian Sir John Home, by William Home of Hardiesmill, John Cranston of Moriston and Sir Patrick Chirn- side of Nisbet, taken to Berwick and married to Sir Patrick’s daughter, Jane. This led to a trial before the Supreme Court of Scotland. However, the King finally allowed the marriage, but he died before there were any children. His 3 sisters, Jean, Alison and Margaret were served as his heirs in 1625. George (16th C.) 4th son of Adam, 6th Laird of Thornydykes. He is listed in 1549 among Friarshaw

James (d.c.1604) 2nd son of Adam and Margaret Hoppringle. He acted as executor for his mother. In 1583 he instituted proceedings against the Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1588 his brother-in-law John Baillie of St. John's Kirk had a letter of reversion to him for the annual rents of the former lands of Jedburgh Abbey, including Abbotrule, Nisbet, Rueycastle, Over Bonchester, Mackside, Belses, Over Ancrum, etc. He died soon after his older brother Robert and his younger brother John became his heir. Robert (d.1603) son of Adam and Margaret Pringle, he was 9th Laird of Thornodykes and 2nd of Abbotrule. In 1582/3 he and his mother had an action against a number of men for spoliation of their lands of Jordanhill and East Gordon. He was part of a feud that resulted in the death of Ninian Spottiswood in 1588. In 1589 he married Margaret, said to be only daughter and heiress of William Turnbull, younger of Bedrule and Lilliesleaf. It was the seat of a branch of the Scotts of Friarshaw, with a value of £209 6s 8d in 1592. In the 17th century it was owned by Rev. William Campbell. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls list the owner as William Scott of Friarshaw, with a value of £286 (plus £60 in teinds). There were Scott-Douglas owners in the 19th century, but by the 1870s it was part of the estate of the Sprots of Riddell. It was called frenfi (fren-fi) adj., poet. furious, wrathful – ‘...an’ let thy frenfu’ angir tak’ haud o’ thame’ [HSR].

Friarshaw (frí-ur-shaw) n. farm on the north side of the Ale Water, roughly between Riddell and Lilliesleaf. It was the seat of a branch of the Douglases, descended from the Cavers line. It was valued at £5 12s 6d in 1592. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. It was valued at £285 13s 4d in 1643, 1663 and 1678 (including feu-duty of £13 6s 8d to the Earl of Haddington). It was still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. In 1678 the feu duties were valued at £13 6s 8d, and held by the Earl of Haddington. Walter Riddell of Friarshaw is recorded in 1695. There were Turnbulls there in the late 18th century. In 1788 it was owned by Rev. William Campbell. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists the owner as William Scott of Friarshaw, with a value of £286 (plus £60 in teinds). There were Scott-Douglas owners in the 19th century, but by the 1870s it was part of the estate of the Sprots of Riddell. It was called ‘Jerusalem’ by the locals, and was once monastic property. Another farm to the north-west is called Friarshawmuir – ‘we’d cross the brig and thread the wood, and climb to Friarshaw. Where we can see the Minto Hills and rugged Ruberslaw’ [FL] (the name probably comes from Middle and Old English ‘frere sceagga’, meaning ‘friar’s wood’; it first appears in 1563 as ‘Freirschaw’ and continues with similar spelling for the next century, being ‘Friershawe’ and ‘friershaw’ in 1678 and ‘Frier-shaw’ in 1695; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Freershaw’).

fricht (fricht) n., arch. a fright – ‘...an’ ane fricht til mine acquantince; thame that did see me owtbye flede frae me’ [HSR], ‘I was ane reproch amang a’ mine enimies ... an’ ane fricht til mine acquantince’ [HSR], ‘Bairnies wi’ it get sic frichts, There’s no ane that sleeps soon’ ... ‘[TCh], ‘...Advisin’ Jimmie not ti dee Wi’ useless fricht’ [WP], v. to frighten ‘...euch to fricht the verra whaups frae their haunts’ [BM1907].

frichtfí (fricht-fi, -fu) adj., arch. frightful – ‘There’s whiles a wee thing that wags uncontrolled, And causes a frichtfu’ skalith ...’ [WFC] (spelled ‘frichtfu’ etc.).

fri’d (frid, fred) contr. from it – ‘the trouble wi Gala is, oo’re no fer enough fri’d’, ‘A was guy fer fri’d it the time’, ‘The water that cam’ frae’d was caller and clear ...’ [JCG] (see also thríh’d).

Fridi (fri-di) n. Friday (also spelled ‘Fridih’; note the pronunciation with i rather than I).

the Fridi (thu-frid) n. Common Riding Friday, being the Friday after the first Monday in June and the main day in the traditional celebrations, lasting almost a full 24 hours for the principals. The earliest it can be is 5th June and the latest is 11th June. It starts with the Drums & Fifes assembling at 6 a.m. in the Kirkwyn, traditionally playing ‘Teribus’ and ‘John Paitemson’s Mare Rides Foremaist’. It proceeds with the Snuffing and the Cornet’s Breakfast, with the Drums and Fifes continuing on a route round the old parts of the Town. The Cornet then gets the Flag and walks with it to the Tower, where the ‘Auld Sang’ is sung. The Procession of the officials’ motorcade plus riders then starts, going through Wilton then along the High Street and up the Loan for the Chase. The married riders go to the front as usual, this being the only time anyone rides past the Flag. After the Chase up the Nip Knowes the Acting Father takes the Flag to St. Leonard’s, where the main ‘Hut’ takes place. Here the curds and cream are served, which were ordered on the Thursday of the previous week. After the Hut, the mounted procession proceeds round part of the Common for the actual Riding of the Marches, with the Cornet performing the Cutting of the Sod. They then make their way to the Mair, with the Flag being placed on the roof of the committee room during the Races, and the Cornet being presented with a race-crop. After the events at the Moor, the riders proceed via Crumhaughhill and Myreslawgreen, where they receive refreshments. The Principals then go to the Coble Pool for the Dipping of the Flag, then the Song Singing, before returning the Flag to the Town Hall for the night. Then there is the Cornet’s Dinner and finally the Ball, ending with the climb to the summit of the Mote at dawn. Before 1752 it was fixed as the last Friday in May, but since then (largely because of the 11 day shift to the Gregorian calendar) it has been in June. In the early 19th century the Magistrates and retinue left town at 10 a.m. and then the cavalcade returned to town after the Races, 3 abreast, led by the Town Clerk and the band. They would then march the Burgh boundaries and adjourn to the Town Hall for dinner. The modern schedule was essentially set down in the 1880s.

Frissell (fri-sel) n. Andrew (16th C.) son of the Laird of Overton and brother of William. Along with his brother he was accused of being involved in 2 raids on English farms in 1589. David (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators of Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when Mangerton passed to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as ‘David Fresell’. Jean (17th C.) listed at Mervinslaw among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem Fresell de Vuer-tone’ (probably Overton) when he was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He may be the Laird of Overton fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. John of Overton (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of the lower Borthwick valley belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as ‘senior in Smallholm’ in 1494/5 when he was found to be infirm at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1509 as part of the inquest for ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburghshire by James Douglas. In 1517 he was ‘Robertum Fresal de Bun-toume’ when he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Thomas (16th C.) tenant at ‘Efflesche’, i.e. Effledge in Cavers Parish. In 1535 along with Arthur Douglas he had 13 cows and oxen stolen, with William Scott ‘in Layk’ being accused. They are described as ‘common thieves of Liddesdale. He is probably related to the previous Robert. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Fresal’ in 1424 when he was on a ‘retour of inquest’ in Hawick for settling claims to lands on Hownam. Most of the other men were Teviotdale Lairds. William of Overton (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he and his brother Andrew were named along with Rutherfords, accused of a raid into England. They were both also among a group of Teviotdale men accused of rieving from Woodburn in 1589, and were there said to be ‘sons to the Laird of Overton’ (formerly ‘Fresal’, ‘Fressel’, ‘Fressell’, etc.; note that the name may have been an early variant of Fraser).

the Frostyle Burn (thu-frost-lee-burn) n. stream that rises as the Linhope Burn and runs roughly north along the A7 to reach the Teviot near Teviothead, and name for the general area – ‘Where rising Teviot joins the Frostylee, Stands the huge trunk of many a leafless tree . . . Since that bold chief who Henry’s power deffed, True to his country, as a traitor died’ [JL] (it first appears as ‘Froserlie’ in 1604, then ‘Frostelie’ in 1610; it is ‘Frostanly B.’ and ‘Frostalie b.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 maps, but is actually the Mosspaul Burn labelled incorrectly on the Ewesdale map; the origin is probably ‘the forester’s clearing’ in Old English).

Frostylee (fros-tee-lee) n. an old name for the Frostyle Burn and for the standing there. This was part of the extensive lands of Ringwoodfield as part of the Buccleuch estates in 1660. It was listed in 1653 and 1663 among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch, being a 10 shilling land along with Linhope and Phaup; these were united with lands in Wilton and others into 'the teument of Blackgraine' – 'The gear was driven the Frostylee up, Frae the Frostylee unto the plain, Whan Willie has looked his men before, And saw the kye right fast driving'[T], 'Richt ower frae Frostylee To Kersop in Siccum Stour, We garr'd the Southrons fee Wi' mony a clash and clure'[TK] (also written 'Frostlie'; it is 'Frosterlie' in 1653 and 'Frostlie' and 'Frosterlie' in 1661 and 1663; 'Frostälie b.' is marked on Blaeu's 1654 atlas).

Fulton (ful-’, fool-in-) n. lands between Bedrule and Fodderlee, once the site of a small village. There is a ruined 15th century peel tower there. Adam Turnbull is recorded there in 1390. John Turnbull of ‘Foultoun’ took part in 1426 in the inquiry into the leprosy of John Turnbull of Minto. Thomas and Roland Turnbull were recorded there in 1493 and Cock Turnbull, William White and Robert White in 1494/5. Thomas Turnbull was tenant there in 1501 and George Russell in 1502. In 1502 some Olivers were allowed to compone for stealing 100 of the Laird of Bedrule’s sheep from there at different times. In 1516 James V granted remission to several Turnbulls, including Adam, George and Andrew in Fulton. The tower is recorded being burned the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. It was the home of Margaret Home of Cowdenknowes in the 1570s, before her marriage to William Turnbull of Bedrule, and then was a Turnbull stronghold. In the 1580s it was the seat of Walter, heir apparent of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. A letter of 1602 from William Turnbull to his father-in-law Thomas Ker of Cavers describes how he took possession of the lands and lists the tenants there at that time. In 1619 John Stewart of Traquair accused several Turnbulls of stealing wood from his lands at Huntliehill, and this included Walter in Fulton and his son Thomas. In 1623 Andrew Paterson, tenant there, was accused of stealing an ox and a cow, but found not guilty. The Kers were granted the lands in 1623, along with other Turnbull possessions (probably on default of loans). It was among lands owned by Sir Thomas Ker in 1643, valued at £440. William Turnbull was there in 1690 and George White was tenant in 1694. It was owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788. William Elliot of Wells bought the lands from the Cavers-Carre family in 1801. It was among lands owned by William Elliot of Bedrule in 1811. The minister of Bedrule formerly had the right to cut turf annually on the moor here. A Roman coin, specifically a denarius of Augustus, was found to the west of the tower. Further to the south-east is a possible ancient enclosure (the name occurs in 1296 as ‘Fougheltona’, is ‘Foultoun’ in 1390, ‘Foulton’ in about 1390, ‘Foultoun’ in 1426, ‘foulteone’ in 1493, ‘foulteoun’ in 1494/5, ‘Fowl- toum’ in 1501, ‘foultoyn’ in 1502, ‘Foultoyn’ in 1516, ‘Foltyn’ in 1545, ‘Foultoyn’ in 1583/4, ‘Foul- toun’ in 1643 and 1678, ‘Faltoune’ in 1684, ‘foul- toum’ in 1690 and ‘Foultein’ in 1694: it is still marked as ‘Foulton’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Foulteune’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is probably Old English ‘fugol tun’, meaning ‘bird farm’).

Fulton (foot-in) n. James (18th/19th C.) stocking needle maker on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (1794–1875) first (and possibly only) Governor of Hawick Jail. He was born in Jedburgh, son of John and Rachel Watson. He was wounded in Holland in the 1st (Foot) Regiment, being struck in the face and chest by a bullet, and being pensioned out of the army. He was then a roadman at Castleweary for about 25 years (where he is recorded in 1841), before becoming farmer at Mertin’s House (recorded in 1851). He is said to have been ruined as a farmer on account of his stackyard being burned down 2 or 3 years in a row, and was succeeded at Martin’s House by the Knoxes. He then became Governor of Hawick Jail (on Allars Bank), but it is said that his wife did not enjoy the situation and he instead became a forester at Eildon Hall, farmed at Mertoun House and moved to Denholm. He married Margaret, daughter of John Cairns and Elizabeth Louisa Thorburn, and she died at Martin’s House in 1859, aged 63. His children were: John (1815–1903), who emigrated to Ontario, Canada; Elizabeth (1818–1904), who died in Appleby; James (1820–86), born at Alton, died in Manitoba; Mary (b.1824), who married Walter Riddell and live in Hawick; Anne (1827–1909), who married John Scott and lived at Castleweary; William Scott (1831–91), a banker in Appleby. He died at 4 O’Connell Street and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery.

Fulton Toor (ful-, fool-in-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined peel tower dating from the 16th century, about 1½ miles south of the village of Bedrule, on the side road between Bedrule and Fodderlee. It was long a stronghold of the Turnbulls. The tower is recorded being burned the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. Tradition holds that the last occupant of the tower was a strong Turnbull who was overcome by the Kers of Ferniehirst, pouncing upon him while he was singing to his infant child on his knee: ‘Little wat ye wha’s coming, Jock and Tam and a’s coming’. The remains of the tower are one storey high and surrounded by turf covered foundations of out-buildings. The dimensions are about 7 m by 9 m, and oblong in plan, with a circular stair-tower on the east. The walls of the tower were repaired around 1880 to preserve the ruin.

Gairdener’s Haughs (gär-di-nurz-hawch) n. Gardener’s Haughs, a former name for the Playing Fields off Buccleuch Road. This is recorded in a boundary dispute of the late 18th century between Elliot of Langlands and the Duke of Buccleuch (also written ‘Gardenershaugh’).

gairdenin (gär-de-nin) n. gardening – ‘Hab says it’s a game played against the wather, the same as gairdeenin ...’ [DH].

Gairden Knowe Park (gär-di-now-pawrk) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Garden Know Park’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

gairden-rake (gär-din-, -deen-räk) n. a garden rake – ‘Examples of raik, rake, to raik, to rake, etc.: – Gairdeen-raik, muck-raik, beier-raik’ [ECS].

Gairdner (gärd-nur) n. (Gardner) George (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the George, son of James, baptised in Hawick in 1716. His wife was Mary ‘Partis’ (or Porteous) and their children included: Walter (b.1742); James (b.1743); Janet (b.1744); George (b.1746); Andrew (b.1756); Mary (b.1758); Isabel (b.1762); and Margaret (b.1765). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie William Tudhope and ma- son Andrew Turnbull. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Rae and Margaret Gardner (perhaps his sister) and another in 1760 for shoemaker James Porteous. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Charles Scott and his wife Janet Porteous (who may have been his sister-in-law). Gideon (d.1702) gardener in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1701 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Scott, along with miller James Paterson. He married Margaret Davidson and their children included: James (b.1686). Probably the same Gideon later married Margaret Paterson (unless there is an error in surnames and there was only one wife). Their children included Margaret (b.1700) and Isobel (b.1702). The witnesses in 1700 were merchant George Martin and glover John Harrt. The baptism in 1702 was posthumous, with James Paterson, the child’s uncle, making ‘faith for her education’; the witnesses included Robert Thomson in Newmill and James Scott ‘Ormiston’. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1713 he married Isobel Renwick. Their children included: John (b.1714); George (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); and Mary (b.1722). In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Johnston in Hawick. He may be the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1733 and 1736 (along with John) for Robert Renwick, who lived at the Sandbed. John (17th C.) resident of ‘oest the water’ (i.e. west of the Slitrig) on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is probably the gardener listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the gardener who witnessed baptisms for gardener Thomas Boyd in 1699, Robert (Lord) Oliver in 1704 and for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1706. He is probably the John who, along with William (perhaps his brother or son) witnessed a baptism in 1709 for carrier John Hardie. He may be the John who was fined £10 in 1691 because he tried to run away down the Tolbooth stairs when cited by the Bailies. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at the Sandbed in 1721. In 1736 (along with James) he witnessed a baptism for Robert Renwick, who lived at the Sandbed. He married Isobel Wilkie, probably in 1715 (although with no wife’s name listed).
Gairie Gill

Their children included: John (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1717), baptised in Hawick; and James (b.1719), Janet (b.1721) and Isobel (b.1723), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1721 were another John and William Gardener (who were surely relatives). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at the Sandbed in 1725. He appears to be distinct from the John who was married to Isobel Wilkie and lived at the Sandbed at the same time (and whose child’s baptism he witnessed in 1721). He married Mary Simpson in 1721, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: an unnamed child (b.1723); and Walter (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. John Waldie (19th/20th C.) farm steward for the Earl of Minto at Hassendeanbank. In 1892 he married Helen Dickson, daughter of William Elliot and Christina Pow. His son Andrew (born before their marriage) took over as farm steward after him. The other children emigrated and were William, Christina Elliot, John, Betsy Waldie, Mary Helen McCreadie and James (‘Jim’). Robert (17th C.) resident of the westside of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was recorded at the Sandbed in 1697. He married Agnes Scott and their children, born in Wilton, included: William (b.1697); and Agnes (b.1699), who married gardener Walter Scott in 1722. The witnesses in 1697 were John and Robert Scott. William (17th C.) resident of the westside of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as a gardener among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the William, married to Agnes Scott, whose son Robert was born in Wilton in 1697. He is probably the gardener who in 1711 witnessed a baptism for weaving Andrew Jardine, and younger, and another for the same man in 1713. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isobell Morton in Hawick in 1702. Their children included: Agnes (b.1705). Other children (baptised in Hawick Parish) who may be his are Margaret (b.1711), William (b.1713) and John (b.1716). The witnesses in 1705 were Michael Bridges and Adam Jerdan. He may be the William who, along with John (perhaps his brother) witnessed a baptism in 1709 for carrier John Hardie. William (b.1683) born in Hawick, son of Robert. He witnessed a baptism in 1705. He is probably the merchant who witnessed baptisms in 1710 for carrier David Wilson and in 1712 for carrier John Hardie. He is probably the merchant William who was elected as Cornet in 1710; if so he was unlikely to be the William who married Isobell Morton in Hawick in 1702 or Agnes Aitkin in 1710. However, he is probably the William whose children born in Hawick included William (b.1713) and John (b.1716). He is probably the William, merchant of Hawick recorded in 1721 when his servant Thomas Weddell was rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath (spelled ‘Gardiner’, ‘Gardner’, ‘Garner’ and variants).

Gairie Gill (gā-ree-gil) n. stream that rises fairly close to the Nine Stane Rig and runs south to join the Roughley Burn.

gaizlin (gāz-lin) n., arch. a gosling.

Gala (gaw-lu, gaw-la, gaw-li) n. Galashiels, the traditional rival town of Hawick. It is built in the narrow valley of the Gala Water near the confluence with the Tweed on the A7 and a former station on the Waverley Line. It was known as a producer of a kind of coarse grey (or sometimes blue) cloth in the 17th and 18th centuries, and there were early waulk mills there, used by weavers throughout the district. The town developed along with the textile industry, and the Scottish College of Textiles is here, part of Heriot-Watt University since 1998. The Braw Lad’s Gathering in June celebrates the town’s 1599 charter and was established as long ago as 1930. It includes a ride to the Raid Stane, where supposedly some English soldiers were killed while picking plums in 1337, an event also commemorated on the town’s coat of arms. The betrothal of Margaret Tudor to James IV occurred at the Market Cross in 1503. The lands were owned by the Crown in the early 16th century. If the town has a jewel it is Old Gala House, with parts dating from 1583. Now a museum, it was the former home of the Lairds of Galashiels, who were first Pringles and then Scotts. The Scotts of Gala burial aisle dates from 1636, although both the original church and the gothic replacement were demolished. New Gala House was home to ‘St. Trinian’s’ School during WWII, but was also demolished. The ‘Hunters’ Haa’ was an old peel tower that stood till the late 18th century, while the town’s Tolbooth was demolished in 1880. The Cornmill Fountain is a converted mill lade. The ‘Border Reiver’ equestrian statue is by Thomas Clapperton, a Gala native, outside the 1867 Burgh Chambers, which have an imposing clock tower by Robert Lorimer (added 1924–27). The main road from Hawick to Edinburgh only went through Gala from 1818, previously being via Fairnilee and Clovenfords. The town did not become a municipal burgh until 1843, although it had possessed burgh of barony status since 1599. The origin of the rivalry with Hawick is a mystery, but dates back at least to the time of the Carterhaugh Baa, when the Gala men switched sides. Population (1991) 13,753. It is said that if Gala didn’t exist, then Hawick and Selkirk folk would have invented it in order to have something to agree on – ‘Bout forest trees let Gala brag, We carena what belong them’ [JT], ‘...The Hawick team tae play fower games And oo’ve picked twae Gala reserves’ [AY] (note that the pronunciation of the final vowel sound can vary, and hence it is colloquially spelled ‘Gali’ etc.; the meaning of the name is ‘huts on the Gala Water’; Teries often talk about going ‘ower ti Gala’ rather than using another preposition; it is ‘Galowaschelis’ in 1456, ‘Galloschelis’ in 1512 1525 and 1549, ‘Galloschelis’ in 1574, ‘Galascheilles’ in 1633 and ‘Gallowschelis’ in 1651).

Galabrae (gaw-lu-brä) n. home of Peter Laidlaw in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This may either be ‘Galalaw Braefit’ or one of the houses at Howdenburn.

Gala Law (gaw-lu-law) n. hill on the northern outskirts of Hawick, 221 m high, with a white concrete triangulation point, and also he name for the surrounding area. Foxhounds used to meet there in the mid-19th century. The hillside was set on fire to commemorate victory in the Crimean war in 1856 and took decades to recover – ‘For I like auld Hawick Wi’ a’ her kindly folk Frae Galalaw tae Haggisha’’ [RMc], ‘Gala Law ablaze wi’ colour Wi’ golden broom and whins ... ’ [AY] (the origin is possibly from Old English for ‘gallows hill’, like the similar names near Biggar, Kelso and Gullane, and certainly having no connection with Galashiels; it seems an unlikely place for a public gallows to be situated, although it is possible that it served this purpose in the old Barony of Chamberlain Newton).

Galaw (gaw-lu-law) n. farm above Guthrie Drive, on the slopes of Gala Law. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts from at least 1494 until 1762. In 1494 James Scott of Kirkurd granted the lands to his son David (later of Hassendean); at that time it was valued at 6 merks annually, and was held for the annual payment of 3 silver pennies at the Feast of the Pentecost, if asked. David was further recorded in 1507/8 and 1510. John Scott of Hassendean owned the lands in 1528/9. In 1534 Gavin Elliot sold the 48-shilling lands of ‘Neder Gallelaw’ to William Scott, the sealing of the letter of reversion being done at Hassendean Kirk. James Renwick was tenant there in 1628. It is probably the land (valued at £156) owned by a Scott (first name not recorded) lifereater of Newton in 1643. William Scott of Galaw paid tax on £156 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1681. The land there was part of Hassendean Parish until being assigned to Wilton in 1690. Tax was paid on 5
Galalaw Braefit

Gala Witter (gaw-wi’-ur) n. Gala Water, a river that joins the Tweed from the north-west at Galashiels. The river is about 21 miles long. The Waverley Line crossed it no less than 15 times, with most of the bridges still existing – ‘Tho’ the Esk has pearly sprays, And the Gala windin’ ways; Th’e’re some bonnie banks and braes Aboot Hawick’ [TK] (it is ‘Galu’ in 1268).

Rev. Robert (1866-1937) educated at Glasgow University, he was licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1891. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk for a few months in 1892. He was then assistant at Linlithgow, ordained at Buckie in 1898 and was later minister of Fordoun. William (16th/17th C.) mentioned as minister of Bedrule in 1599, having previously been at Penicuik. He had a son called John.

gale (gäl) n., arch. collective noun for geese – ‘A gale of geese, a flock of geese, Teviotd. This is said to be a very ancient phrase’ [JoJ].

Galfrid (gal-frid) n. recorded as Vicar of Southdean in 1260. Galfrid or Galfridus was the latinised form of Jeffrey.

Gali see Gala

Gall (gawl) n. George (19th/20th C.) joiner in Hawick. He married Margaret, daughter of tailor John Riddle; she died in 1896, aged 39. Their son Robert was a collector with the Gas Company in Hawick.

Gallaslande (gaw-lis-lawnd) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of Clement Crozier, along with ‘Hoble Knowes’ (probably Hummelknowes). It seems likely that this is the same place as Hilliesland.

gallayniel (gaw-lä-neel) n., arch. a big, glutinous, ruthless man – ‘Wae be to them for a pack o’ greedy gallayniels – they haena the mence of a
Gallipoli (gaw-li-po-lee) n. Turkish peninsula that was the site of a disastrous military campaign of 1915. The 1st Battalion K.O.S.B. were there from the beginning, late April 1915, with the 1/4th K.O.S.B. (Territorials) arriving in June. Many local soldiers of the 1/4th K.O.S.B. were involved in a particular offensive on 12th July; with the benefit of hindsight it is clear that many strategic mistakes were made, in particular the instructions to take the 3rd Turkish trench led to confusion when the trench turned out not to exist, and the soldiers were caught in fire from all sides when they overshot and then tried to turn back. More than 80 men from Hawick and district lost their lives on that day, most remaining under the fields where they fell. The whole campaign was a disaster, with the peninsula with over 120 local men buried or lost there. The peninsula was evacuated by January 1916 after the futility of the whole military campaign became clear to the commanders. A memorial wreath has been laid annually at the Horse ‘In remembrance of the Hawick Territorials of the 1/4th Kings Own Scottish Borderers who fell bravely charging the Turkish trenches, Gallipoli, 12th July 1915. The ancient spirit of our fathers hath not gone.’ A commemoration at the War Memorial was later added to the events to mark that day. In 1926 several locals were able to travel to visit the place where their loved ones had fallen, and a marble plaque from the town was installed at the Helles Memorial. In 1933 the 1/4th K.O.S.B. Gallipoli Comrades Association was formed. The Callants’ Club raised money to send 6 veterans back for the 50th anniversary; a special memorial service was held in Trinity Church and 2 cypress trees, grown from Gallipoli seeds were planted at either side of the War Memorial (although they succumbed to the Scottish winter). To mark the centenary, a group of 20 Teries visited the peninsula, marking the resting places of all known local men there – ‘A tear dims my eye as I view the memorial, Head bowed, I remember how callants like me Laid down their lives to ensure us our freedom And lie now at Ypres and Gallipoli’ [IWL].

Gallipin Chairger (thu-gaw-lo-pin-chär-jur) n. nickname for James Hislop, also known as the ‘Gallipin’ Cadger’ – ‘Black Andra’ and the Birsin’ Badger, Tammy Robertson, Deevil Bell; The Blue Laird and the Gallipin’ Cadger, Baillie Birsleton and the Mell’ [HI].

Galloway (ga-ló-wai) n. Rev. Alexander (1847–1926) born in Tillicoultry, son of William and Isabella Dawson. He received his B.D. from Edinburgh University in 1872, was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery that year and became assistant at Bowden, Lasswade and St. Mary’s, Partick. In 1876 he became minister at Milton of Balgonie and was admitted as assistant and successor to Minto Kirk in 1878, taking over fully from Rev. J.P. Macmorland in 1893. He was Lecturer on Church Music to the Divinity Students of the Scottish Universities 1912–14. In 1885 he married Margaret Rankin, daughter of William Smith, minister of Douglas. Their children were: William G., merchant in Japan, died in New York 1936; Isabella Dawson; Elizabeth Eleanor; and Alexander, Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B., later Instructor at Camberley Staff College. He was one of the compilers of the ‘Scottish Hymnal’ (1885), ‘The Scottish Anthem Book’ (1892), ‘The Church Hymnary’ (1898) and the ‘Scottish Mission Hymnbook’ (1912), as well as helping with ‘Hymns, Ancient and Modern’ (1889). Sir Alexander (1895–1977) born at Minto manse, youngest child of Rev. Alexander. He was educated on the Isle of Man, and volunteered when war broke out in 1914, joining the Cameronians, then seeing active service with the K.O.S.B. at Gallipoli, being one of the last to leave the Peninsula. He received the M.C. in 1918. He remained in the army after WWI, eventually becoming an instructor at Camberley Staff College, then commanding the 1st Cameronians and the Staff College at Haifa. He served as chief staff officer for the 8th Army in Egypt. He then had a series of posts, including after WWII being Commander-in-Chief of British forces in Austria. He was knighted in 1949, retired in 1950 and died at Norham, Northumberland. He married Dorothy Hadden, daughter of Frank Hadden White from Northumberland, and they had 3 sons. William (19th/20th C.) manufacturer of William Galloway & Sons. He had a boiler-house and dyeworks built on Commercial Road in 1888. This lay opposite the Victoria Laundry and was later occupied by Renwick’s. His firm only occupied this building for about 5 years.

the Gallops (thu-gaw-lups) n. name for relatively new houses near Hassendeanbank. They were built on the pond for the former water wheel, which was filled in in the 1970s. The name comes from the popular name for some nearby fields.

galloway (ga-ló-wá) n. a small, study breed of horse, originally from Galloway, often used as a pack animal —... a party of Tynedale men passed the window in tattered clothes, driving lean gallows laden with coals [WSB].

the Galloway Road (thu-ga-ló-wá-ród) n. former name for the road used for carrying coal from the Kielder area to Hawick, i.e. the ‘Note o the Gate’ or B6357. The name came from the Galloway ponies that were used to make the trips.

Gall Sike (gawl-sík) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising to the south of Dykecrofts farm and running roughly north-west to join Whithaugh Burn. The original house on Hillhouse farm appears to be shown on this stream on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch lands.

gallus (ga-lus) adj., poet. bold, daring, self-confident, rash, reckless —... Ready to roar away in the gloaming Wi’ gallus young lads that think lightly o’ scaith [DH], ‘... Airchie o’ the Reuch Sike, gallus auld Airchie, The lang nicht afore him, now’ [DH].

galore (ga-lór) n., poet. plenty, superabundance —‘An’ he gafe thame galore for thair greed...’ [HSR].

Galoshins (ga-ló-shinz) n. traditional folk play, common in many parts of Scotland, a variant of the ‘resurrection’ drama found in many parts of Britain (e.g. in England, where it is an example of a ‘mummers play’). The words of the play were passed down orally, and involve a hero called ‘Galoshin’, sometimes St. George, a doctor, and other characters. The height of popularity may have been the mid-19th century. It was typically performed for money by groups of ‘guisers’, usually young boys, visiting inns or private houses. Its timing was connected with either Halloween or Hogmanay (like other ‘guising’). It may be that this is the longest surviving example of a richer tradition dating back to Mediaeval times. It is unclear how prevalent this play was in the Hawick area, but there are still some recollections in the early 21st century, from families connected to Bowden and Bonchester.

galt (gawlt) n., arch. a castrated boar (noted by J. Jamieson as a Roxburghshire word, but perhaps in error).

Galt (gawlt) n. former name for a town in Ontario, Canada, which was a common destination for Hawick emigrants in the 19th century. Settlement in an area along the Grand River was promoted by William Dickson, who sold lots to predominantly Scottish settlers. The town was originally called Shade’s Mill and was renamed Galt in 1825, after John Galt, Scottish novelist and Commissioner of the Canada Company. The town grew as an agricultural hub, with industry developing from the 1830s and the town becoming known as ‘the Manchester of Canada’. Originally the largest town in the area, it was eventually eclipsed by Berlin, which was later renamed Kitchener. The city of Galt continued to exist as a separate entity until 1973, when it became part of the new city of Cambridge, adjacent to Waterloo. Many street names in the area reveal the early Scottish influence. Local families with connections to this area include Aitkin, Amos, Cavers, Dryden, Kersel, Lamb, Lee (including James Paris Lee), Murray and Spalding.

game (gám) n., arch. sport, amusement —‘... none did resort to his house for game but such as were of a good age’ [PR1724].

game (gám) adj., arch. lame — ‘A game leg, a leg hurt by accident, so as to make the person lame, Roxb.; also Northumb.’ [JoJ] (compare the English ‘ganny’).

Gamel (ga-mél) n. clerk of the 12th century, during the reign of David I. With the permission of his sons Osulf and Ughtred, he granted the lands of ‘Caverum’ to Jedburgh Abbey probably around 1138. This gift was confirmed in charters by Earl Henry and by King William (in the period 1165-70), and reconfirmed in 1229. This was probably part of the Barony of Cavers (although Cavers Carre is a possibility).

the Games (thu-gá-mz) n. the Common Riding Games, held at Volunteer Park, also sometimes called ‘the Sports’. Amateur games, now long abandoned, were held on the Friday, with professional games on the Saturday, now moved to the Sunday. Until the early 19th century the Games were entirely amateur, with professional sportsmen only appearing later. In earlier times there was less of a distinction between the Games and the Races. In the 19th century there were Games on the Friday afternoon (after the Dinner) and on the Saturday morning, which were held at the Common Haugh, and included sprints and middle-distance running, hurdles, walking, jumping of several varieties, quoiting, shot-putt, wrestling, Highland dancing and costume contests. There were also special races for boys and for old men. Professional cycling races were a feature in the very late 1800s. They were held on the Saturday morning at the Haugh from about 1855–67 and moved to the afternoon in 1868. The ‘Shows’ would also accompany the Games on the Haugh, and this must have been true from early times. The Games were moved to the Volunteer in 1893. The Amateur and Professional Games were switched back and forth between the Friday and Saturday in the early 20th century. The Amateur Games ending up on the Saturday by 1913 and were discontinued in 1961. The Cornet stopped attending the Saturday Games from 1964. It became a tradition for the ‘Big Fower’ to engage in a pillow-fight balanced on a beam, and for this to take place at the Games. The Games were held on the Saturday before Common Riding week in 2005.

Gamescleuch
(gāmz-klooʃ) n. ruined 16th century tower near Ettrick village, on the opposite side of the valley to Thirlestane. It is said to have been built for Simon Scott (2nd son of Sir John of Thirlestane), who may have been poisoned by his step-mother on the eve of his wedding. The lands there were also referred to as Thornhill and Ettrickside and were formerly referred to as a steading of Mount Common. They were once Crown property, in the King’s hands in the 1480s, but granted to Adam Scott in 1490 ‘without grassum owing to its sterility’, and again in 1492. They were again assigned to Adam Scott of Tushielaw in 1510. William Scott in Sundhope was tenant in 1541, paying £14. They were held by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1573, but shortly afterwards passed to the Scotts of Tushielaw and then back again, following a ‘decret arbitral’ by Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1603. Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch was Laird in the 1590s. The dispute over these lands grew into a feud between the Thirlestane and Tushielaw branches. The murder of Walter Scott of Gamescleuch by John Scott of Tushielaw in 1609 may have been the inspiration for the ‘Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. The lands were also known as ‘Thornichill’, and in 1621 and 1667 were described having an ‘outset called Etriksyd’. James Easton was there in 1716 when he had a child baptised in Roberton. There is now a caravan site there — ‘Gae warn the lads of Thirlstone, Genscleugh, and Newburgh fair, With Tushielaw, and Midgelhope, in armour to appear’ [WSB], ‘When the magic wing of the midnight hour Stoops low to the worn old Gamescleuch walls …’ [WHO] (it is ‘Gammilliscleuch’ in 1479, ‘Gamliscleuch’ in 1486, ‘Gilmynscleuch’ in 1490, ‘Gammilliscleuch’ and ‘Gemmlyscleuch’ in 1492, ‘Gamilliscleuch’ in 1510, ‘Gammiscleuch’ in 1541, ‘Gemiillisheuch’ in 1573, ‘Gemmylliscleuch’ in 1581, ‘Gammisleuch’ in 1585, ‘Gammilshueche’ in 1592, ‘Gemilsicleuch’ in 1603, ‘Gammellscluch’ in 1605, ‘Gemmilliscleuch’ in 1608, ‘Gemmillsicleuch’ in 1621 and ‘Gemmeltscleuch’ in 1667; it is marked ‘Gemmillscleuch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; not to be confused with Gilmanscleuch, also on Ettrick Water).

Garfield Street (gawr-feeld-stree’) n. housing south-east of the High Street, built in 1882. The houses were demolished in 1977 to make way for a car park, with only part of a factory remaining.
Note that on the west side of the street the addresses of the bottom houses were Lothian Street, while the upstairs ones were Garfield Street.
Named after U.S. President James Garfield, assassinated in 1881.

Garland (gawr-lind) n. David (b.c.1815) Hawwick character of the mid-1800s. He married Mary Haig in Hawick in 1837. He worked as a stocking-maker, living at Kirkton in 1841 and apppears to be deceased 10 years later, when his family lived at the Loan. His children included David, Janet and Agnes – ‘Kinly Stick and Daavid Gar-

Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’ [HI].

Garlawcleuch (gawr-law-klooch) n. former name for lands near Blackhouse in the Yarrow valley. They were Crown lands leased along with Blackhouse from at least 1456 until 1502.
The lease was held by James Alemoor of that Ilk in 1479, James Oliver and his son in 1488, then Robert, Lord Lyle and then again the family of Alemoor of that Ilk. Patrick Alemoor was recorded there in 1494/5. The land was feued by David Pringle to James Stewart of Traquair in 1512. William Stewart was tenant in 1541 (spelled ‘Garlacleuch’, ‘Garlaceuchi’, ‘Gar-the headwaters of the Borthwick, joining the Craikhope Burn from the west, between Craikhope and Comb (probably from old Scots for a granary).

Garnet (gar-ni’) n. David (18th C.) groom at Minto in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot.

the Garrison (thu-gaw-re-sin) n. popular name for a former tenement at the corner of the Howegate and Silver Street. ‘Hab o’ Hawick’ was supposed to have lived there in the 16th century.
It was a 3 storey building, pended on the ground floor and with a corner turnpike stair. It was demolished in about 1799, and was apparently so well built that it had to be undermined and fell into a mass that blocked the street. The site was rebuilt in 1801 and was later the location for a printer’s, a post office, a library and a shop.

garron-nail (gaw-rin-nail) n., arch. a large nail and shingly part of a river (the word survives in place names, such as Garthside, Hartsgarth, Ra-garth).

Garthside (gawrth-sid) n. farm just to the east of Denholm. An ancient burial site was discovered near here in 1902 (perhaps just across the A698), consisting of several red freestone slabs containing a few pieces of bone.

gas (gas) n. Hawick’s gas lighting first appeared on the High Street in 1831, being the first among Border towns (and replacing the 60 oil lamps of 1813). The lighting ceremony was celebrated with a banquet. Electric lighting arrived in the early 20th century and one of the last lamps (from Elm Grove) is preserved in the Museum. Hawick Gaslight Company started in 1830 on part of the old Under Haugh (now Commercial Road), moving to Mansfield Road around 1882. In the early years the company was run by a manager with a single assistant. The manager's house was formerly at the other side of the ford at the foot of Walter's Wynd. The company also had a showroom at 66 High Street. Nationalised as part of Scottish Gas in 1948, the main works were dismantled in 1968 after conversion from coal gas to natural gas in 1964. The town was converted around 1970, with new pipes etc., to use the North Sea supply. However, the gasometers on Mansfield Road continued to be used as holders for the high pressure gas delivered from Granton in the Lothians.

Gascoin (gas-koin) n. George (18th C.) listed as footman at Wilton Lodge in 1791–93, when he was working for Lord Napier. In 1794 and 1797 he was listed as footman and gamekeeper at Wilton Lodge; in 1797 he was recorded as 'William'. Helen (18th C.) housekeeper at Wilton Lodge in 1791, when she was working for Lord Napier. She may have been wife of George (also written 'Gascoing').

Gaskin (gas-kin) n. Benjamin Thomas of Tushielaw (d.1818) son of Col. Gaskin of the Barbados. In 1818 he married Anne Verona Simmons, who succeeded to the estates of her mother, Barbara Anderson. This included Tushielaw and Hislop. He may have taken the surname Anderson when gaining the lands, but died shortly after the marriage. His posthumously born son Benjamin was listed as 'Benjamin T.G. Anderson, Esq. of Tushielaw' in 1838, among the major landowners in Hawick Parish. His widow secondly married Tushielaw in 1838, among the major landowners was listed as Benjamin T.G. Anderson, Esq. of Tushielaw' [BCM1881], ‘Oo’re prood o’ maim’ries o’ lang syne That gat your gutt- bardle and mine’ [JEDM], ‘Ilk ane his portion on his bannock, Gat handed by baith Jock an’ Sannock’ [JR].

Gate Burn (gä'-burn) n. stream running in the area just beyond the Caa Knowe. It rises in several streamlets and runs in a roughly south- western direction, joining the Thieveshole Sike and crossing the road at the Troutlawford before entering the North Sea supply. However, the gasometers on Mansfield Road continued to be used as holders for the high pressure gas delivered from Granton in the Lothians.

Gatehousecote (gā'-tees-, gā'-ees-kō’, gā’-hoos-ko’) n. Gatehousecote, farm between Abbotrule and Hallrule Mill on the Foderlee Burn. John Turnbull was recorded there in 1493. John Turnbull and Andrew Turnbull are recorded there in 1502. In 1516 the tenants were Andrew Turnbull, William his brother, Thomas, Patrick and David. The lands were acquired in 1569 (along with several others) by Adam French and were described as being ‘with woods’ in 1588. Jock Turnbull was tenant there in 1575. There were Lorraines there in the early 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670, when it was described as having a mill. This was probably a small threshing mill, powered by water from a pond. The lands (or their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. John Shiel was a tenant there in 1684 when he was listed as a fugitive who had attended conventicles. In 1694 there were 3 householders (probably tenants) listed, Margaret Lorraine, Thomas Pringle and William Turnbull, as well as 3 cottars. It was long part of the Abbotrule estate, although almost sold off in the 1790s after being combined with Over Boncéster. It was a major farm on Abbotrule, having its own entrance lodge. It was listed among the properties of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1811, and valued at £298. William Brodie was farmer in the early part of the 19th century. Henry Elliot was tenant in the 1840s, followed by David Henderson, John Usher, Peter Mackinnon and Donald Teacher into the 20th century. Around 1875 it was owned by David Henderson of Abbotrule and valued at about £300. Tom Douglas was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £223. It may also have been known as ‘Yetthouse’ (the origin of the name is probably the Old English ‘gat hus cote’, meaning ‘cottage beside the goat shed’; it is first recorded as ‘Gaithouscote’ in 1493 and 1494/5, is ‘gaithous coit’ in 1502. ‘Gaittuscott’ in 1550, ‘Gaithouscott’ in 1569, ‘Gaithous Cott’ in 1575, ‘Gaithouscott’ in 1588, ‘Gatascot’ in 1595, ‘Gaithhouslok’ in 1616, ‘Gattascot’ in 1619, ‘Gatascott’ in 1670, transcribed ‘Goatsorecoattis’ in 1680, ‘Gattsascot’ in 1684, ‘Gaithouscott’ in 1694 and ‘Gatehouse-Scott’ in 1811; it appears as ‘Gathouscot’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Gatehousecott’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Gatehaughscot’ on a 1788 gravestone).

gatelins (gā’-linz) adv., poet. directly, in the direction of – ‘Och that my wayes wer maed gatelins til keepe thy staatutes!’ [HSR], prep., poet. towards – ‘The towir o’ Lebanon, whilk huiks gaitlins Damascus’ [HSR] (also written ‘gaitlins’).

Gateshaw (gā’-shaw) n. hamlet south of Morebattle, on the Kale Water. It was formerly a seat of a branch of the Kers. The former tower there was also known as Corbethouse, this being a nearby estate, with the newer house referred to as ‘New Gateshaugh’ when burned in 1545 (the origin is probably from Old English for ‘goat’s wood’; it is first recorded in the mid-15th century as ‘Gaitschaw’).

gatewards (gā’-wurdz) adv., prep., poet. in the direction of, directly towards – ‘I wull cum intil thy hous in the multetud o’ thy mercie; an’ in thy fer wull I wurship gaitwards thy haly temple’ [HSR], ‘I am my beloefet’s, an’ his desyre is gaitwards me’ [HSR] (also written ‘gaitwards’ and sometimes ‘gaitward’).

Gatliehill (gawt-lee-hil) n. former house on the Hermitage Water, roughly opposite Braiddlie. It is probably the ‘Catle...’ listed on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale alongside Gorrenberry and Dinlees and the ‘Catle’ on the rental roll of 1541 between Braiddlie and Dinlees. The name seems to have disappeared (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Catle’ in 1376 and ‘Catlie’ in 1541).

 Gatton (ga’-in) n. Frances (18th C.) His Majesty’s Engineer for Scotland, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1740, probably while passing through during work on canals and tunnels near Pinkie and Inveresk.

Gattonside (ga’-in-sid, ga-tin-sid) n. village on the north bank of the Tweed across from Melrose, with a mediaeval plan and many old orchards. The village was burned by Hertford’s army in 1545. There are remains of a pre-Reformation chapel. Gattonside House is an 1826 Georgian mansion. The suspension bridge to Melrose was built about 1830. The area was formerly known for its orchards (it appears as ‘Galtunesside’ in the early 12 century; the origin of the first part of the name is unclear).

especially said of young women (noted by J.
Jamieson).

Gaulter (gawl-tur) n. Rev. William Henry (1832–1885) born in Perth, he was educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh New College. He was ordained in 1858 as assistant and successor to Rev. Wallace in Hawick Free Kirk. However, in 1864 he was translated to Trinity Church, Ab-berdeen. He moved to St. Mark’s Church, Glasgow in 1877 and was later selected as minister of the First Church, Dunedin in New Zealand; he was inducted there on the first day of 1885, but died only 5 months later. He married Helen Mather Burns in 1861 and they had 7 children, including William Henry (1862–1929), who was born in Wilton. He is buried in the Northern Cemetery, Dunedin.

Gaylor (gah-lurz) n. David (1846/7-1924) from the Dunbar area, he came to Hawick as a young man to learn the watchmaking trade with Mr. Gowans and Mr. Rutherford. He then went briefly to Bishop Auckland before returning to Hawick in 1875 to set up his own watchmaker’s and jeweller’s business. This was originally based at 14 Howegate, moving to 59 High Street about 1877, where he worked for 47 years. He was an early photographer around Hawick and would put on shows in the Exchange Hall and elsewhere, with his son William assisting, and his niece Dorothy providing piano accompaniment. The showing of local slideshows was continued by his son William and lasted until the 1950s; his early ‘magic lantern slides’ collection is still in the Museum. His Border Kinematograph business (with partner local manufacturer Sime) made films in the period 1899-1903 and they at one point considered buying the ‘Wee Thewa’, but wound up due to lack of financing. Their films represent the earliest moving images of Hawick Common Riding and other local events, and are only a few years later than the first known films in Scotland.

He was for a long time a Deacon in the Congregational Kirk and is said to have identified with the ‘Psychic Movement’ in later life. He married Jeannie (or Jane), daughter of blacksmith William Pow, and she died in 1919, aged 70. Their children were: David William, who became a Congregational minister at the East E.U. Church in Greenock; Elizabeth S., also known as ‘Bessie’; William Pow, who followed his father as an optician; and Margaret Jean, who married Andrew Dalglish and had 2 sons who were Galashiels builders. William Pow 'W.P.' (1880/1-1963) son of David, whose jewellers business he carried on. He was known locally as a sportsman, amateur actor and singer, who made Adam Grant’s ‘Three Humorous Songs’ his own in the first quarter of the 20th century. He served as the 5th Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk. He continued his father’s interest in photography, continuing ‘lantern slide’ shows until the 1950s. After WWI he also became an optician, giving up the jewellery side of the business. He married Helen Scott Clark, who died in 1964, aged 78. David William Pow was their son.

Geo. & Jas. Oliver (jörj-an-jämz-o-lee-vur) n. firm of solicitors of long standing in the town. It grew out of the partnership of John Oliver and John Elliot, set up around 1791. The firm was established as ‘John & George Oliver, writers and bank agents’ in 1829 after John Elliot moved to Jedburgh. It was a partnership between Hawick’s Town Clerk John Oliver and his eldest son. When John died in 1849 a younger son James came into the partnership. Their original offices were at 11 Buccleuch Street in part of what became Pesco’s. In 1852 the firm are listed as writers on Buccleuch Street, as well as insurance agents for the British Guarantee and for North British. From about 1852 (although there is some confusion over this date) they were then in the upstairs offices of the Commercial Building at 4 Tower Knowe, and remained there until moving to 13 High Street in 1986. Latterly the firm has also been an estate agents. Their register of sasines for 1779–1840 is in the National Archives.

George (jörj) n. name of 4 British Kings, George I (1660–1727) King from 1714, first of the house of Hanover. He was nominated as King by Queen Anne, under political pressure to bypass James Stewart. In 1714 the Council and Burgess of Hawick had to swear an oath of allegiance to the new King. In opposition to his rule the Jacobite rebellion occurred in 1715, although with little support in the Borders. The King spent much of his life in Hanover, and never learned to speak much English – ‘Your Geordie was a German laird, That used to delve his ain kail yard!’ [T]. George II (1683–1760) King from 1727, son of George I. George III (1738–1820) King from 1760, grandson of George II. He initially took an active role in government (losing America for example). However, he had a nervous breakdown, suffered from the hereditary disease porphyria, and was declared insane in 1810.
George Street

His domestic life was uncharacteristically tranquil, with his devoted wife Charlotte Sophia. It is recorded that a fiddler was paid for playing before the Bailies and Justices of the Peace in Hawick when he was proclaimed as King in 1760 and further money was paid for liquor at his accession to the throne in 1761. Hawick officials used to regularly celebrate his June 4th birthday with the ‘King’s Rantin’. Half-pennies of his reign were often counterfeit, merchants in Jedburgh refusing to accept them, leading to a legal battle in 1785, which went all the way to the Lords. George IV (1762–1830) King from 1820. He was appointed as Regent in 1811, with his father being unfit to rule. In Hawick there was a festive meeting to mark the occasion, with Bailie James Oliver proposing the toast ‘The Mucking o’ Geordie’s lyre’. In 1822 he became the first reigning monarch to visit Scotland since 1650. He stayed for 2 weeks at Dalketh House as a guest of the Duke of Buccleuch. In Edinburgh, George IV Bridge was named after him. Obsese and unpopular, it was hoped his visit would calm the rising Radical movement in Scotland. The event was partly organised by Sir Walter Scott, and led to an upsurge in the use of tartan for formal occasions. He has been portrayed by Rupert Everett, Peter Ustinov and Hugh Laurie. George V King of Hanover (1819–78) son of Ernest Augustus, born 3 days after his cousin, Queen Victoria. His full name was George Frederick Alexander Charles Ernest Augustus, and like other members of his family, was usually considered to have no surname. He became blind in a childhood accident. He acceded to the Hanoverian throne in 1851, when he also became the 2nd Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. He escaped to Austria when Hanover was annexed by Prussia in 1866. He married Princess Marie Alexandrina, daughter of Joseph, Duke of Saxe-Altenburg. He had one son, Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick, who became the 3rd and last Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. He spent most of his last years in Paris, where he died. George V (1865–1936) King from 1911. For his coronation celebrations in Hawick there was a procession from the Town Hall to the Old Parish Church, and then a parade up to the Mote for a ceremony in which the Duke of Buccleuch handed over that land to the town. George VI (1895–1952) King from 1936. He made a ‘secret’ visit to Hawick in 1943 to inspect the troops and returned in 1947 with Queen Elizabeth (the Queen Mother) and other members of the Royal Family, including the future Queen. His coronation in 1937 was marked in Hawick with a great parade of bands and floats, some of which exists on film. Trees were also planted in the Park, and a miniature silver spade used on this occasion (presented to Provost Fisher’s wife) is in the Museum.

Gibson (gi-bin) n. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (19th C.) Hawick man, famous for his angling skills, for whom the song ‘Lean Yeddie Gibson’ was written after his death while fishing the Teviot in the 1850s. He is buried in the old Kirkyard. John (1774-1814) born in Ayr. He was a soldier with the 94th Regiment of Foot. Posted to Hawick in 1795 (probably related to the French prisoners of war), he married Janet, daughter of Hawick butcher Gideon Renwick. Posted elsewhere, the couple returned to Hawick around 1802 and he worked as a nailer. He then re-enlisted, deserted, was press ganged into the navy, jumped ship, worked in Langholm and Kelso, and was acquitted for desertion. He was back in Hawick by 1810, and the family had 11 children. He is recorded as a nailer in 1810 when 2 of his unnamed children died. In late 1813 he murdered his wife at their home in the Mill Port, apparently accusing her 12th child of being fathered by a Frenchman, and of poisoning him. He was the last person to be hung in Hawick, the event taking place in the Haugh; this was unusual, and may in fact never have previously happened in the Town. He wrote ‘Some particulars of the life of John Gibson’ while awaiting execution. It is basically a screed on the evils of drink. Perhaps the only child to survive was Gideon, who was a witness to the murder, but at 10 years old too young to give evidence. John, W.S. (19th C.) solicitor who was an agent for the Buccleuch estates, in at least the period 1822-78. He was originally called ‘younger’. He was present at Brauxholme at the banquet held in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1839. Miss (19th C.) teacher at the girl’s school at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. She could be inspiration for the poem ‘The Flower of Rule’ by Robert Allan. Rev. Mungo (c.1660-1735/6) graduating from Glasgow University in the early 1690s, he was ordained as minister of Abbotrule Parish in 1698. He was translated to Sanquhar in 1713, and remained there until his death (brought on by a stroke suffered in the pulpit). He had 2 sons, George and William, and 1 daughter, Janet. Robert (d.1810) stocking-maker in Hawick, son of Walter. His unnamed child died in 1810. Walter (18th C.) mason in Hawick. His son William died in 1798. He may be the Walter who married Janet Miller in Wilton in 1755 or the Walter who married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton in 1766. He could be the Walter, son of mason William, born in Wilton in 1723. William (18th C.) mason in Wilton. He was at Tandlaw in 1708. He got married in 1707, his wife’s name not being recorded. However, his wife was later listed as Helen Roger. His children included: Robert (b.1708); Margaret (b.1713); Bessie (b.1715); Agnes (b.1719); Walter (b.1723); and William (b.1725). William (d.1798) mason in Hawick, son of Walter. He had an unnamed child who died in 1798. He is probably the William born to Walter and Janet Miller in Wilton in 1756 (also spelled ‘Gibson’ etc.).

Gid

Street. It became the Kings Hotel sometime after WWII.

Gid (gid) n. short form of Gideon.

Giddenscleuch (gi-dins-klooch) n. Gideonscleuch, farmstead near the of the side road from Teviothead, just before Merrylaw. The stream Giddens Cleuch joins the Teviot just there. 4 archaeologica features, perhaps hut bases, were found on a broad terrace about 600 m south-west of the farm. The lands were listed in the early 16th century as part of those held by John Gled-stains of Cocklaw and that Ilk. It was among lands purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. It was ‘Guidenscleuch’ among lands owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. However, it appears to have been in the Baron of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron (i.e. superior of these lands) in 1687 and when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. The lands were included among those of Lymiecleuch (along with Corriesike and Langbyre) when sold by William Elliott of Stobs to a group of Elliot in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. They were among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. John Thomson was there in 1724. There were Armstrongs there in 1841 (the name means ‘the ravine belonging to Gideon’; it first appeared as ‘Gidwyniscleuch’ in 1509/10, is ‘Guddiscluch’ in 1519/20, ‘Guidingscleuche’ in the early 17th century, and later is ‘Guidinscleugh’, transcribed ‘Gudduscleuch’ in 1620, ‘Gamindschleuch’ in 1687, ‘Giddenscleuch’ in 1692, ‘Gidinscleugh’ in 1694, ‘Giddinscleuch’ in 1698 and ‘giddens Cleugh’ in 1724; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Guidscleuch’; there is presumably a connection with a local family that used Gideon as a first name, e.g. the Scotts of Harden).

Gideon Scott & Sons (gi-dee-in-skoe-in-sonz) n. Hawick millwrights, set up by Gideon Scott in the latter part of the 18th century. The premises were on the Cross Wynd. Gideon’s sons Gilbert and James were also millwrights. The firm’s assets were sequestered in 1842.

Gigg (gig) n. Mary (18th C.) housemaid at Minto in 1791, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot.
gigot (ji-go’) n. one of the best cuts of meat, particularly a leg of mutton.
gigs (gigz) n., pl. modern term for musical bookings. Well known acts that have appeared in Hawick include: David Bowie (1966); Dr. Feelgood (1985); Fish (1992); 5ive (2017); Morrissey (2011); the Proclaimers (2003, 2012); Runrig (1989, 1996, 2000); Showaddywaddy (1988); and the Stranglers (1977).
Gigson’s Flat (gig-sinz-flaw’) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as being vacant in the 1541 rental roll, where it is ‘Gigsonis Flatt’ or perhaps ‘Gibsonisflatt’. The location is uncertain, but it is listed after Kilgarth.
Gilboa Wud (gil-bo-u-wud) n. name given to a large plantation to the north-east of Ruberslaw (the origin of the name is unclear, but it may not be very old; it is marked ‘Gilbo Wood’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).
Gilchrist (gil-krist, -kr st) n. Rev. John (d.1746) from Dumfriesshire, he was son of Mungo in Holm of Dalgarno. He was presented to Bedrule Parish in late 1713 and ordained there in early 1714, succeeding James Borland. He was a substitute preacher in Hawick in 1721, when the minister was ill. He dissented from the Act of Assembly of 1740 which deposed 8 seceding ministers. He remained at Bedrule until his death, and was succeeded by George Dickson. His only daughter married John Cranston the minister of Ancrum.
the Gilded Chamber (thu-gil-deed-cham-bur) n. a series of get togethers taking place initially in a golden decorated room at the Gretel bar in the 1960s, which grew into an annual event. It is a sing-song for men only, and traditionally accompanied by potted-meat sandwiches.
Gildhouse (gild-hows) n. former name for lands near the Ettrick valley, probably associated with the later farm of Gildiesgreen, between Hellmoor Loch and Upper Shaws Loch. They were formerly Crown lands, split into the Weststead, Middlestead and Eaststead. In 1479 Thomas Scott had remission for a fine for these lands. David, son of Walter Scott in Headshaw leased part of the lands in 1486. John Cranston of that Ilk leased part of the lands in 1492. Robert Scott of Stirches was leasing the Weststead in 1501, when that was referred to as ‘alias Dodbank’. In 1502 the eastern part was said to be known as Bailielee and was leased to Peter Turnbull in 1510. In 1510 the west steading was feued by Walter, son of Robert Scott.
Gildshaw (gild-shaw) n. lands in Liddesdale, precise location uncertain. They are recorded as of Jedburgh. He moved to Edinburgh, and then out to Currie for his health (and because ousted ministers were then banned from the city). However, one night in 1668 he was seized by a group of soldiers, who claimed to be searching for the person who had tried to assassinate Bishop Sharp (actually James Mitchell, after whom Mitchell’s Slack was named). They forced him to run back to Edinburgh at midnight and stand outside waiting for the West Port to open, after which he was imprisoned. The next day he was taken before the Privy Council, but dismissed by them when they realised the mistake. He died 2 days later, probably as a result of the harsh treatment he had received. His name was usually spelled ‘Gillon’. His sister Elizabeth married William Forrest of Norserk. It is unclear whether he was related to the later ministers of St. Boswells and Hawick, but he was unmarried. He may be buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh.

Rev. Robert (1761–1824) born in St. Boswells, son of Robert who was minister there. He was educated at St. Mary’s College and Edinburgh University, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and ordained at Ettrick in 1787. He was translated to Hawick in 1789, being presented by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. However, there is an existing letter from the Magistrates and Town Council to the Duke of Buccleuch, protesting the appointment, so he was presumably not a popular choice. Despite this, he remained until 1800, when he was accused of an irregularity of some sort and demitted his charge, moving to Edinburgh. Nevertheless, he remained one of the Orrock Trustees. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1790–97. About 1799 he contributed to the local subscription to support the war against France. In 1793 he wrote an account of the town for the Old Statistical Account of Scotland, which contains valuable tidbits of information (including details of the beginnings of manufacturing in the town). He also wrote several books, including ‘An abridgement of acts of General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland from the year 1638 to 1802 inclusive’ (1803) printed in Hawick, ‘A short view of modern astronomy, for the use of schools and private classes’ (1814) and ‘A compendium of ancient and modern geography’ (1823). He also edited ‘The Scottish pulpit, a collection of sermons’ (1823). In 1798 he married Mannie (or Marion), daughter of William Campbell, minister of Lilliesleaf, and she died in 1845 at the age of 63. Their son Robert was born in Hawick and became an eminent minister of Inchinnan, Glasgow. Their other children were William, Margaret, Joseph (possibly the ‘Joseph Gillon, Esq. Edinr.’ who subscribed to Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808), Alexander Murray, Cauvin and Agnes Farquharson. Rev. Dr. Robert (1799-1879) born in Hawick, son of minister Robert. He studied at Edinburgh High School and University, was licensed in Selkirk in 1829 and ordained in Stamfordham, Northumberland in 1830. He was then minister at South Shiel, Holytown (Lanarkshire), Wishaw, Abbotshall (Fife) and then St. John’s (Glasgow) for 14 years. When a thunderstorm broke out during a fiery sermon he preached at Hawick during his early days, it is said that one parishioner remarked ‘You was grand scenery for Dr Gillian’s sermon’. He was active in social and political movements in Glasgow and was conferred a doctorate of divinity by Glasgow University in 1853.

He moved to the small parish church of Inchinnan, Renfrewshire in 1861, but continued to lecture broadly. He was presented with his portrait in 1870 and was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1873. He published many of his sermons, including ‘A General Fast Sermon’ (1832) and ‘The Decalogue’ (1856). In 1833 he married Anne, daughter of George Green, minister at Carmunnock. She died in 1847 and he secondly married Laura, daughter of John Buttery of Woodville. His son George Green was chaplain in the East India Company. He died in Inchinnan Manse (also written ‘Gillon’).

Gillbeck (gil-bek) n. possible name for a farmstead in Liddesdale. It is transcribed as ‘Guilbeck’ in the 1718 survey of lands of the Scots of Buccleuch, when it was combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads. It might be associated with the nearby Gill Sike.

Gillbraeheid (gil-brā-heed) n. Gillbraehead, farmstead in Liddesdale, of the B6357 between Gillside and Demainholm. It was formerly ‘Geilbraheid’. This was where the minister of the Castleton Burgher Kirk lived in the 1760s to the end of the 18th century, and where their first meeting house was built. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1821 and James Armstrong in 1841. Thomas Chapman was caret there in 1861 and Richard Telfer was there in 1868 (it is marked as ‘Gillbraheid’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Geilbraheid’ in 1799).

Gillespie (gi-les-pie) n. Marion (17th C.) recorded in the Council records of 1665 when she confessed to pulling the hair out of the head of Walter Lorraine. She was also accused of harassing another man at about the same time. She may be the Marion, daughter of Robert, born in Hawick in Hawick in 1639. Robert (17th C.) smith in Hawick. He was a Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’ and was recorded being elected to the Council in 1648. He is probably the Robert who married Marion Stoddart and whose children born in Hawick included: John (b.1636); Marion (b.1639); Patrick (b.1641); and Stephen (b.1642). The witnesses to the 1640 baptism were William Wilson and James Paisley.

Gillfit (gil-fi’) n. Gillfoot, former farm in Castleton Parish near the modern Gillfoot Moss. The farm of ‘Guylefoot’ is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1632, and also ‘Gyuilfoot’ among the lands of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. James Scott was tenant there in 1694, with John Little and William Elliot also listed as householders. It is shown on a survey carried out for Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted os 266 acres and was bounded by the Liddel Water, Demainholm, Whisgills, Side and Millholm. William Stewart was farmer there in the mid-18th century. Robert Elliot and family were there in 1835. John Armstrong was shepherd at ‘Guilfoot Upper’ in 1851 and William Little a labourer at ‘Guilfoor Under’. William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1861 (it is ‘Guylefoot’ in 1632, ‘Gillfoot’ in 1694, ‘Gillfoot’ in 1718 and ‘Geilfoot’ in 1760; ‘Gillfoot’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; the name is surely just the foot of the gully).

Gillfit Moss (gil-fi’-mos) n. Gillfoot Moss, boggy area in Castleton Parish, on the west side of the Liddel valley, opposite Mangerton. There is the remains of a farmstead there, including foundations of 2 buildings, as well as enclosures and rig lines visible from aerial photography. This is surely the old farm of Gillfit.

Gillheed (gil-heed) n. farmstead in Liddesdale, situated on Foulwood Sike, south-west of Mangerston. The name presumably derives from being at the head of the gully (‘Guilheid’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Gillhoose (gil-hoos) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Gillhouse’ (after ‘Gillestede’) in a rental roll of c.1376. It was valued at 4 shillings.

gillie (gi-lee) n., poet. a male servant – ‘Wha sendet tokins an’ ferlies intil the middle o’ thee, O Egypt, apon Pharaoh an’ a’ his gillies’ [HSR].

gilliegawkie (gi-lee-gaw-kee) n., poet. a foolish or silly young man (used by John Hogg in 1806).

Gillies (gi-leez) n. Brian (1957-) son of George, he grew up in Burnfoot. At the age of 10 he joined the Hawick Legion Pipe Band. He was an apprentice knitter at Barrie & Kersel and then worked at Hogg’s. On the spur of the moment he signed up for the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards, where he spent 9 years as a gunner and joined the regimental band, eventually becoming Pipe Major. He returned to Hawick to be a knitter, but later served as Pipe Major with the Oman Army Pipe Band. On returning to Scotland again he joined the Annan Ex-Servicemen’s Pipe Band. He later worked at Johnstons of Elgin in Hawick. He has played pipe solos at many events, including the Edinburgh Tattoo in 1985. He scored ‘Highland Cathedral’ for pipes, based on a tune written by German musicians Ulrich Roever and Michael Korb in 1982 (originally intended for a military band, rather than pipe band). He wrote the song ‘Wauchope Cairn’ which the Burns Club sing on their annual visit to Wauchope, as well as ‘The James Thomson Bridge’ to commemorate that opening. Rev. James Wardrop (b.1862) trained at Glasgow Evangelical Union Hall, he was place in India with the London Missionary Society. In 1899 he became minister of Newcastle Congregational Church, remaining until 1905. He was then minister at Muirkirk, Ayrshire and at Manse Street, Fraserburgh. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Catherine Gillies and their son Thomas was baptised in 1687. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1736 he was a witness for a baptism for Robert Riddell, who lived at the Sandbed. His name is written ‘Gillas’.

Gilligan (gi-lee-gin) n. James (b.1805/6) born in Sicily, he was a clothes and furniture merchant in Hawick, at 8 Howegate. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a ‘broker’. In 1861 he was at 2 Howegate, listed as a clothier employing 11 men and 3 women. His wife was Elizabeth and they had children: Sarah; James; Robert; Charles; and John. In the 1841 census he is a pedlar at about No. 18 Howegate.

Gillis (gi-lis) n. David (19th/20th C.) schoolmaster at St. Cuthbert’s School from early 1894 until he retired in 1915. He was also heavily involved in local musical activities and the Volunteer movement. He moved to Greenlaw after he left Hawick.

gillore (gi-löö) n., arch. galore, plenty, wealth (noted by J. Jamieson).

gill-maw (gil-maw) n., arch. a gourmand of coarse manners, guzzler – ‘...as a greedy gillmaw’, one who is not nice in his taste, but devours by wholesale, Roxb.’ [Jo.] (also gill-maw and cf. gollimer).

Gillon (gi-bin) n. Fr. Thomas (19th/20th C.) priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1918–24. He was said to have been quiet, but well-respected in the Town. He moved to Linlithgow. His time as priest saw the introduction of the 1918 Education Act and the return of the survivors from the War (see also Gillan).

Gillshaw (gil-shaw) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Gilschaw et Burnhous’. It is unclear where these lands were, but possibly related to ‘Gillfoot’, ‘Gillhead’, etc.

Gillside (gil-sid) n. farm in Liddesdale, on the west bank of the river to the south of Mangerston. A carved stone found over the fireplace in the old cottage there is described in ‘Chronicle of the ArmstronGs’. The area was formerly known as Nether Foulwood, and the stream to the west is still called Foulwood Sike. William Dalgleish lived there in the 1830s and 40s. The name may also be related to the lands of ‘Side’, which are marked to the west on Stobie’s 1770 map (probably the ‘Geelside’ where William Elliot and family lived in the early 1800s).

Gill Sike (gil-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises near Snaberlee Rig and runs roughly westwards to join the Hermitage Water near Leaugh.

Gillsteed (gil-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Gillestede’, with a value of 2 shillings. This could be the same place as ‘Gillside’ or ‘Gillshaw’.

Gilmanscleuch (gil-munz-klooch) n. hamlet in the Ettrick valley, just north of the farms of Dolorraine, and near where the Gilmanscleuch Burn meets the Ettrick. The farm was once a Crown property, from at least the 1456. It was assigned to James and Roger Alemoor in 1484, Steven Lockhart in 1486, Patrick Home of Fastcastle and Robert Lyle in 1490, Alexander, Lord Home in 1492, George Home in 1501 and Adam Scott of Tushielaw in 1510. John Scott in Thirlestane claimed the tenancy there in 1541. A tower here was once home of a branch of the Scotts, with the land passing from the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch to Walter Scott of Harden in the late 16th century, when ‘Auld Wat’s’ youngest son (possibly John) was slain in a hunting match. He apparently said that the lands were worth a dead son. The lands (or perhaps the superiority) were later sold by John Scott of Harden to Anne, Duches of Buccleuch and passed to Francis, Duke of Buccleuch along with other lands in the Lordship of Ettrick Forest in 1735. The Scotts of Gilmanscleuch Gilnockie started with James in at least 1589, with William being the last in the early-to-mid 18th century. When Francis Scott inherited the lands from his father John in 1686 the lands were valued at £20 6s 8d (‘feudi-firmae’). James Scott was there in 1797. In 1802 it was valued at £67, when part of the Buccleuch estates. Adam and James Scott were joint tenants in the 1820s and 1830s. ‘Daft Jock Grey’ came from there; he was a singing beggar in the early 1800s. Henry Scott was farmer in the 1860s – ‘There’s Daft Jock Grey o’ Gilmanscleugh, And Davie o’ the Inch, And when ye come to Singley, They’ll help ye in a pinch’ [DJG], ‘Warn Wat o’ Harden, and his sons, Wi’ them will Borthwick water ride; Warn Gauldilands, and Allanhaugh, And Gilmanscleugh, And Commonside’ [T], ‘In Gilmanscleugh, beneath the heuch, My fathers lang did dwell; Ay formost, un-der bauld Buccleuch, A foreign fae to quell’ [ES] (the origin is probably from ‘Gillemon’s ravine’; also formerly written ‘Gilmerscleugh’ etc., it was ‘Gilmyniscleuch’ in 1456, ‘Gilmyniscleuch’ in 1467, ‘Gilmyniscleuch’ in 1477, ‘Gilmyniscleuch’ in 1484, 1488, 1501, 1502 and 1510, ‘Gilmyniscleuch’ in 1441, ‘Gilmyniscleuch’t in 1585, ‘Gilmynescleugh’ in 1609, ‘Gilmiscleuch’ in 1644, ‘Gilmiscleuch’ in 1647, ‘Gilmiscleugh’ in 1656 ‘Gilmiscleug’ in the late 1660s, ‘Gilmiscleugh’ in 1678, ‘Gilmiscleugh’ in 1690; it is ‘Gilmiscleuch’ on Blaue’s 1654 map).

Gilnockie (gil-no-kee) n. tower of the Armstrongs, near the confluence of the Liddel and the Esk, i.e. in the ‘debatable lands’. The original tower stood at the east end of Gilnockie Bridge (over the Esk), and now consists only of earthworks, the centre having been extensively quarried and later crossed by the A7. This is possibly the tower burned by the English in 1528. Another (or later) tower is on the west bank and further north, at Hollows. It was restored in 1978–80, and now houses the Clan Armstrong centre. This second tower is famous for being the home of Johnnie Armstrong (usually called ‘of Gilnockie’ to confuse things!), who was killed at Caerlenrig in 1530; it is also known as ‘Johnnie Armstrong’s Tower’ or ‘Hollows Tower’. This restored tower also contains an ancient stone, with carved spiral symbols, reused as a door sill. The name was also used for a nearby station on the Langholm branch of the railway – ‘The Elliots and Armstrangs did convene; They were a gallant company: We’ll ride and meet our lawful king, And bring him safe to Gilnockie’ [CPM], ‘But when Johnny went from Gilnock Hall, The wind it blew hard, and full fast it did rain; ‘Now fare thee well, thou Gilnock-Hall, I fear I shall never see thee again.’ [T].

Gilpin (gil-pin) n. Rev. William (1724–1804) from a well-known English family, he was educated at Oxford, where he trained as a minister. He set up his own school, became a biographer of religious reformers and published illustrated volumes of his British travels, which revolutionised travel writing and attitudes. He was later Prebendary at Salisbury. During one tour, he visited Hawick in 1776, making a sketch of the Auld Brig, made from below the bridge. This is the oldest known sketch of any part of the town of Hawick. It shows 2 arches and the wooden parapet erected to replace the stone one washed away in the 1767 flood. It also unfortunately omits any of the surrounding buildings.

Gilpin Horner (gil-pin-hör-nur) n. character of Scottish legend, said to be an evil goblin. He was the basis for the goblin page in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, and said to be the inspiration for the whole work, when the future Lady of Buccleuch urged Scott to write a poem based on him.

Ginger (jin-jur) n. a fizzy soft drink of any flavour – ‘When A was wee the kids would ask for ginger when they played For that’s the name they gave to every drink they ever made’ [Sco] (this usage common around Glasgow).

Ginger breed (jin-jur-breed) n. ginger bread – ‘Losh, Ah’ve forgotten the ginger breed men an’ the ha’penny whistles . . . ’ [JEDM].

Ginger wine (jin-jur-win) n. a dark, spicy cordial drink made with ‘ginger wine essence’, which derives from a secret recipe of Kennedy’s (now Crosby) the chemists. There were probably other variants of this, such as the ‘black betty’ sold in Denholm.

Gingills (ging-gilz) n. former lands in Ewesdale, a little north of Langholm, once a seat of the Armstrongs. The spelling is variable, and it is also possible it is sometimes confused with Chingills, near Mangerton in Liddesdale. In 1579 the Privy Council ordered that several of the principle ‘Armstrangis of the Gyngillis’ should give assurance about the behaviour of the others. In 1583 an English account of the number of men in various parts of the Middle Marches listed ‘Euesdale, Gingles, 300’. Thomas Armstrong ‘of the Gyngils’ signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. Ringan Armstrong ‘of the Gyngills’ is recorded in 1590. Towers of ‘Ecki gingles’ and ‘Tho. of ye Jingles’ are recorded on opposite sides of the Ewes valley on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debateable Land. It may be the place transcribed as ‘Creingills’ in the Lordship of Melrose, among lands inherited by Sir John Riddell of that Ilk in 1669 (also written ‘Ginges’ and variants; it is ‘Gyngeills’ in 1573).

Ginglenwells (ging-lin-welz) n. former house on the Hermitage Water, roughly opposite Gor- renberry. William Armstrong was tenant in 1694, with John Elliot also residing there. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buc- cleuch properties, when it was combined with Dinlees, consisting of 1067 acres and bounded by Greystonehaugh, the Lord of Hoscote’s lands, Twislehope, Rispylaw and Gorrenberry. The lands there were rented by William Elliot of Tarras from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. There is possibly an association with ‘Chingills’ or ‘Gingills’, although they were near Manger-town and in Ewesdale, respectively (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Ginglenwalls on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is ‘Ginglenwalls’ in 1694, ‘Ginglenwalls’ in 1722 and ‘Ginglenwalls’ in

Girnwud  * (girn-wud, -wood) n. Girnwood, a farm at the end of the road through Deanburnhaugh in the Borthwick valley. The estate here was formerly connected with ‘Lynë’, so that ‘Girnwood and the Lyne’ was its name in the earliest records. It was formerly included within the Parish of Hassendean, transferring to the new Robertson Parish in 1689/90. The lands passed from Walter Dalgleish ‘of Greenwood’ to Adam Turnbull in 1439. Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood and Lyne leased the lands to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh in 1488, but keeping 1 acre in the north parts of both Greenwood and Lyne for himself. Alexander, 2nd Lord Home was granted these lands in 1492/3, after being resigned by Sir Thomas Turnbull. Alexander, 3rd Lord Home succeeded to these and other lands in 1506. William, son of William Turnbull of Minto sold the lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1532/3. In 1535 George, Lord Home regained the lands through royal revocation of the previous charter. The lands were held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the late 16th century, and were stated in 1574 to be in the Barony of Minto; they were at that time valued at £10 and held of the King by service of ward and relief. The Scotts of Girnwood were tenants for about 200 years. The lands of ‘Grenwode et Lyne’ were inherited in 1634 by Francis Earl of Buccleuch from his father, then passed to his daughters Mary and Anne, and ‘Girnwood and the Lyne with thair pertinentis’ were listed among the possessions of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in her 1663 marriage contract. There were 9 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Andrew Clerk, John Govenlock, Marion Stoddart, Isobel Nivison, Bessie Renwick, Margaret Brown, Robert Hislop, Margaret Laidlaw and Janet Hislop. It was listed among properties of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1678. Adam Elliot was tenant in 1688. Adam Scott was tenant there in 1694, and James Aitchison was also a resident at that time. Francis Beattie and James Aitchison were there in 1703, Thomas Chisholme in at least 1710–16 and Robert Scott and John Laurie in at least 1716–18. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it covered 603 acres (with 100 acres of ‘corn land meadow and pasture’), bounded by Outersiderig, Henwoodie common and Hosocate. Walter Scott was there in 1726. John Tait was there in 1735 and Henry Paterson in 1742. The tenant reported flood damage to the crops there in 1745. Robert Mitchellhill was there in 1757 and Andrew Goodfellow in 1766. Walter Scott is recorded there in 1797 and was tenant until his death in 1818. James Glendinning was shepherd there in 1808. Another Walter Scott was farmer there in the 1860s. Provost William Scott Nichol farmed there for a time, and there are memorial cairns there for him and his brother. The western-most section of the Catrail is near here, with part to the north now planted over, and reaching towards a tributary of the Dean Burn, while a long shallow section is also visible to the south; however, there have been debates about precisely which sections might have been part of the Catrail, and which might have been later boundary ditches. There is also another similar linear earthwork above the farm to the west, on the southern slopes of Girnwood Hill. There is a waterfall to the west of the farm, on Girnwood Linn, this probably being the associated place referred to in old documents as ‘the Lyne’. Just to the north east is a small unnamed loch, with enclosures nearby, while Girnwood Loch lies much further, behind Girnwood Hill (formerly spelled ‘Girnewood’ and other variants, it first appeared as ‘Grenwode’ in 1315, becoming ‘Grenewod’ in 1439, ‘Grenwod’ in 1488, ‘Grenewod’ in 1493, ‘Grenewod’ in 1535, ‘Grenewoid et Lyn’ in 1574, ‘Girnwood’ in 1636, ‘Greinwood et Linn’ in 1661 and ‘Girnwood’ in 1710; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as ‘Girnewode’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Girnewoode’, is ‘Girnewood’ on the 1718 Bucleuch survey and is bizarrely shown twice on Roy’s c.1750 map; the origin is Old English ‘grenewuð’, meaning ‘the green wood’).

Girnwud Linn  * (girn-wud-lin) n. steep gorge on part of the Hosocate Burn to the west of the farm of Girnwood. It also contains a waterfall. It is probably the place referred to from early times as ‘the Lyne’. On the north side of the stream, near the bottom of the gorge is a roughly semi-circular earthwork, consisting of a ditch with a bank on each side. It measures about 75 m by 50 m, there is an entrance at the south-east end and it is best preserved at the north-west end. The interior has been ploughed and so there is no trace of any building foundations. There is a linear earthwork extending from here to more than half-way to Girnwood farm, the eastern end being the best preserved. The same earthwork may also have crossed the Linn, and extend towards Black Sike to the west. It has been suggested to have been related to the Catrail, but is clearly a less substantial boundary line.

linear earthwork, consisting of a bank and ditch, and stretching about 170 yards along a dyke to a point near the Ale Water; however, it has been destroyed by forestry plantation. This earthwork may have helped fuel the notion that the Catrail continued beyond Girnwood (it is marked, but not named, on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Girnwudshiel (girn-wud-sheel) n. Girnwood-shiel, former shepherd’s cottage above Girnwood. It is marked near Girnwood Linn on Ainslie’s 1773 map.

Gledsness (gledz-nest) n. farmstead adjacent to Colterscleuch, formerly in Cavers Parish, now in Teviothead. It was locally known as ‘the Nest’. John Grieve and family lived there from at least the 1820s to 40s. John Hume was farmer there in the 1860s. It is run as a bed and breakfast guest house (presumably related to gled, although also suggested to have obtained the name from being build by a Gledstains).

Gled’s Nest (gledz-nest) n. area at the head of March Sike, in the headwaters of Northope Burn. Now deep within Craik Forest, it is on the edge of Roxburghshire.

the Gledstain Porch (thu-gled-stin-pörch) n. burial aisle of the Gledstains family, forming the southern transept of Cavers Old Kirk. It is referred to in the Exchequer Rolls of 1524, and was probably even older. This once important family had lost almost all its estates and influence by the mid-18th century and the heritors had the aisle demolished.

Gledstains (gled-stänz, gled-stinz, glad-stänz) n. (Gladstone) Abraham of Hunthill (17th C.) possibly son of George of Dod. In 1676 he was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Dod in his lands of Hunthill. He was listed paying the land tax in 1678 for land in Cavers Parish valued at £180; this was a combination of Dod and Hunthill (then included within the valuations of Cavers Parish). By 1707 the 2 lands had been disjoined and were later owned by the Potts of Dod and the Duke of Buccleuch, respectively. He could also be the ‘Laird dod’ who paid tax for land valued at £14 in Eckford Parish in 1678. Agnes (b.1677) daughter of Town Clerk Walter.
Gledstains

She married a Col. Murray and went with him to Flanders. Alexander (15th C.) probably son of Thomas of Robertson and Flex. However, it is also possible he was son of James of that Ilk and father of John of Cocklaw, recorded in the 1480s. In 1458 he had a confirmation by James II of ‘terras dominicales de Kirktoone, et molendinum ejusden ac terras de Flexis in Baronia de Hawic’ (i.e. the lands and mill of Kirkton and the lands of Flex). In 1464/5 he was involved in a case of ‘mortancestry’, where William Douglas of Drumlanrig (and Baron of Hawick) had him removed from the lands of Flex and ‘Kirkton Mains’, which he claimed were wrongfully possessed. Neighbouring lands of East Mains had been removed for a similar reason from James of Cocklaw’s widow Janet Murray in 1437. In 1464/5 Douglas had a sasine for these lands, in which he is also mentioned. Probably the same Alexander is recorded as witness to a sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6, along with Matthew and Cuthbert; he is listed between the Chaplain and Notary, so perhaps he held some official role. Andrew (15th C.) listed as ‘And. de Gledstane’ in 1451 when he witnessed a charter relating to the Church of Brechin. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other early family members. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘And. de Gledstane’ in 1451 when he witnessed a charter relating to the Church of Brechin. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other early family members. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘And. de Gledstane’ in 1451 when he witnessed a charter relating to the Church of Brechin. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other early family members. Ann (c.1780–1850) daughter of John, the Town Clerk. Her and her sister Christian were served heir to their father in 1808 and sold 80 High Street in 1809. However, in 1811 she was probably the ‘Miss Gladstanes’ listed along with ‘Mrs. Richardson’ as owners of part of the particate lands of Hawick. With her sister, she later lodged with Wintrup the tailor in an old house where the Orrock Church was built. They were known locally as ‘the last of the Gledstanes’. Her sister was said to have died unmarried, although some accounts say she married Richardson (so perhaps there was another sister). She herself married John Scott, ‘Jock the Turk’. In about 1874 her family’s former lands (presumably on the High Street) were listed belonging to ‘Feuars of Mrs. Richardson and Miss Gladstanes’ Lands’. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Archibald of Gledstane’ in the 1500 appraisal of the lands of Whithope. It is unclear how he was related to the other Gledstains. Probably the same Archibald was on the panel of ‘retour’ in 1517 for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branxholme. He may be the son of John, who was nephew of John of that Ilk and Cocklaw, mentioned in connection with a raid on the lands of Cademuir and Hundeshope in 1518. Archibald of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.) resident of Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is recorded as ‘Mr Archibald Gedstaines’ (presumably an error for ‘Gledstaines’) and he was taxed on 3 hearths. The ‘Mr’ is probably just suggesting that he was a landowner, rather than being a preacher or teacher. He was again ‘Mr’ in 1696 and 1697 when he leased the farm of Northhouse from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He also contributed £100 to the Darien Company in 1695. He was also in Northhouse when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Scott in Hawick and for Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1698. Probably the same ‘Mr’ Archibald was witness to a baptism for Rev. Patrick Cunningham in 1671. He was still ‘Mr’ and ‘of whitla’ when he (along with James Gray in Whitlaw) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Anderson in 1706. Bartholomew (15th/16th C.) witness in 1500, along with George and William, to a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton. It is possible that they were connected with Kelso Abbey. Christian (d.1816) daughter of Town Clerk John. Her and her sister Ann were served heir to their father in 1808 (their brother James presumably dying before that). Some accounts say that she died unmarried, but she appears to have married manufacturer Walter Richardson. In 1811 she was probably the ‘Mrs. Richardson’ listed along with ‘Miss Glestanes’ as owners of part of the particate lands of Hawick. Cuthbert (15th C.) recorded as ‘of Gledstains’ when he was witness to a Cranston family sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6. David (15th C.) received 3 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He may be the same ‘Dauid Gledstanes’ who witnessed a document for Scott of Branxholme in 1500. Lieut. Francis (d.1645) father of Walter the Town Clerk, and brother of Capt. James. At age 21 (or perhaps 29) he was killed at the Battle of Aulderne, near Nairn, fighting for the Covenanter army alongside Douglas of Cavers and nine other local gentlemen. He married Margaret Stewart, and his son Walter Francis was born in Hawick in 1642. Francis of Whitlaw (17th C.) probably directly related to John of Whitlaw who died in about 1672. He may have been son of an earlier John. He is easy to confuse with the Francis of Whitlaw (son of John) who was born in 1643. He may be the ‘francis Gledstaines’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He managed the Cavers estates when ‘the Good Lady Cavers’ was in prison for her covenanting principles. He served as Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton in 1657–59, taking over from his father, who was certainly dead by 1660 (according to a document of the Scotts of Buccleuch). In 1661 it is recorded that he owed about £3500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Hassendean and elsewhere, where he and his late father had been Chamberlain. In 1671 he was Bailie of the Regality of Hawick for William Douglas of Drumlanrig when there was a court of Regality held in Hawick. Francis of Whitlaw (b.1643) son of John, with his mother possibly being Anna Scott. He was also referred to as being ‘of Flex’. It is unclear how he was related to the Francis who was recorded in the previous few decades. In 1672 he was served heir to his father John of Whitlaw in the lands of the Flex (perhaps suggesting that there is more than one generation here). He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1675. He paid the land tax in Hawick Parish in 1678 for £266 13s 4d. He may be the same Francis of Whitlaw who was recorded several times in the 1690s and until about 1704. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes ‘Wiggam’ and their daughter Isobel was born in 1670. It is possible he is the Francis ‘servitor to Falnesh’ who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson (younger in Castlehill) in 1709. Francis of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.) probably a descendant of the earlier Francis of Whitlaw. In 1692 he leased the farm of Meikle Whitlaw (which he held for service for his lifetime) as well as Little Whitlaw. He is recorded providing timber for repairing the town Tolbooth in 1692, as well as timber ‘for mounting of the steeple where the bell hings’; this was valued at £40, making him the first name among the subscribers of the new bell, listed on the enactment of the Council in 1694. Also in 1692 he made a proposal to the Town Council that he be allowed to enclose part of his land, but also including ‘a little brae upon our syd of the march betwixt him and us’; he would plant trees there, with the agreement that the Town receive half of the timber, when it was ready to chop down. He seems likely to be the local Gledstains who was taxed for 5 hearths at his house in 1694. His brother may have been Archibald, and although it is unclear if he had any children, it is possible that James and John may have been his sons. He witnessed baptisms for tenants at the Flex in 1700 and 1702, for apothecary Walter Scott in 1703 and for gardener (for Gideon Scott in Fenwick) Walter Paterson in 1704. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, on a list of Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and may be the Francis of Whitlaw who was still a Commissioner in 1704. It is possible he was the Francis in Braidhaugh, servant to the Laird of Falnash, who witnessed a baptisms in Hawick in 1707 (for James Stevenson, tenant in Harwood and for the tenant and shepherd in Slaidhills). Scott of Satchells dedicated a chapter of his history to him. A sundial belonging to him was saved from destruction by William Norman Kennedy and presented to the Museum collection; it bore the initials ‘F.G.’, the motto ‘Fide et Virtute’ and the date 1693. Francis (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1683 he was fined for attacking Bailie Thorbrand and for ‘violentlie taking 4 dukes [presumably ducks] on the street, which the balyeya had first caught’. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Andrew Angus. He was listed as a wright among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Francis on the east side of Hawick, who appears on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1702 (or perhaps 1712) he was fined by the Kirk Session for being found drinking in a public house after 10 o’clock; however, he ‘protested yt. he was not in drinke’. He could be the Francis in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1711 for carrier William Rae (along with smith John Scott). He witnessed further baptisms in 1712 for Bailie James Burn and for William Sanderson, and in 1716 for smith John Scott. He married Marion Scott and their children included William (b.1678), Christian (b.1680); Marion (b.1682), Margaret (b.1682), Helen (b.1684), John (b.1686) and James (b.1689). Witnesses to the 1680 baptism were 1682 Mr. John Purdom and tailor Walter Gledstains and in 1682 were ‘Mr Walter Gledstains’ (probably the Town Clerk, suggesting that they were related), shoemaker Thomas Turnbull and John Riddell. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1723 he married Helen Allan, whose surname is given as ‘Allan or Bridges’. Their children included: Margaret (b.1725); and John (b.1728). He could be the Francis, son of John and Margaret Harkness, born in 1685. He could be the Francis, innkeeper, who was a Bailie in the 1730s and 1740s. Francis (18th C.) merchant in Hawick who was Cornet in 1744. He may be the Francis, son of Thomas and Bessie Sanderson, born in Hawick in 1718.
Gledstains

It was stated in the Town Book that he was 'to go to the morn on Saturday yr. after', this being perhaps the first indication of events taking place on Common Riding Saturday. He is probably the merchant Francis who witnessed baptisms in 1741 for druggist Gideon Scott, in 1742 for gardener Alexander Donald and in 1745 for James Ridell (at Menslaws). He was listed as a merchant in the baptismal record for one of his children in 1746. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children baptised in Hawick included Thomas (b.1746) and Sarah (b.1747). The witnesses in 1746 were merchant Gideon Scott and ex-Bailie Robert Howison. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1580 when he sold the lands of Stobs to Gavin Elliott, who became the first Eliott Laird there. The cost was 400 merks. It is unclear how he was related to other Gledstains. George (15th C.) recorded in 1484/5 as a witness to Walter Ker of Cessford assigning Dolphinston to his son Mark. It is unclear how he was related to other members of the family. Probably the same George (along with William and Bartholomew) was witness to a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton in 1500. He could be related to the George who had sasines for Craig in Dumfriesshire in 1458 and 1459. He may be the ‘Gorgoni de Gledstanys’ who leased Hundleshope in Peeblesshire in 1471. George (15th/16th C.) obtained a sasine for the lands of Gladstanis in Roxburghshire in 1503, this being granted by Ninian Glendinning. It is unclear which lands are referred to here. In 1510 he witnessed a charter for this same Ninian Glendinning, for lands in the Barony of Scraesburgh. He may be the ‘George Gledstains’ listed in 1526 as a brother of Adam Scott in Clarilaw and William Scott, when a large number of Borderers had remission for attacking the Earl of Arran; this would suggest he was a step-brother or brother-in-law (i.e. he married a daughter of James of Kirkurd). George (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borderers men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed separately from another George, but right before Walter, who is probably related. George of Dod (17th C.) possibly son of Walter. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. In 1643 he is recorded paying tax for lands valued at £180 in Cavers Parish; these appear to have been Dod and Hunthill, which were disjoined before 1707. He may be the Laird of Dod whose lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £700, and whose mother was listed as liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish, valued at £200. He is recorded as heir to Walter of Dod in 1649 when he was infested in the lands of Hunthill (in Cavers Parish) by William, Earl of Lothian. He may have been father of Mary who married George Scott of Synton. He may have been father of Abraham of Hunthill, who was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Dod in 1676. Gorgon (d.1456) probably a son of the Laird of Gledstains. He was described as ‘Gorgon de Gledstannis of Hundleshope’, and must have held the family lands of Hundleshope in Peebleshire. After his death the property passed into the King’s ward. He was mentioned in relation to the lands in a later charter of 1471. Herbert ‘de Gledstani’ (13th/14th C.), the earliest recorded Gladstone, from the county of Lanark, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore an 8-leafed flower and the name ‘S’HERB D’GLEDSTAN’. He probably gained the family lands in the Parish of Liberton, about 4 miles north of Biggar. His exact descendants are uncertain, but were known to be in Roxburghshire in 1336. It is likely that he received his Lanarkshire lands from the Douglasses, because of the close connection between the families for many subsequent generations; this may also have been the origin of the move to lands in Roxburghshire. The name Herbert occurred many times later in the Dumfriesshire and Peeblesshire branches. Herbert (15th C.) rendered the accounts of Annandale in the Exchequer Rolls for 1455. He is referred to as ‘eodem’, i.e. ‘of that Ilk’ in 1456 when he witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell. He was probably the Baillie of Dumfries mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in 1460. Probably the same Herbert also witnessed a charter in Annandale in 1487. Herbert (15th/16th C.) Rector of Dornoch, he held lands in Over Kelwood in Dumfriesshire. He was recorded in several charters in the years 1504–08. Probably the same Herbert witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1525. He is probably the Herbert, Burgess of Dumfries, whose great-grandson Mark was served heir in 1610 (as well as to the lands of his son, also Mark). James (d.bef. 1437) 6th of that Ilk, son of William, and younger brother of John and Thomas (although this is uncertain). He was witness to a charter along with his brother Thomas in 1404 (regarding the rights of Melrose Abbey for the benefits of Cavers parish), and resided at Cocklaw in Cavers Parish. He was the owner of the tower during the famous siege of Cocklaw (i.e. Ormiston) by the Percys in 1403. Also in 1403 he was probably the ‘James of Gledstanes’ appointed as bailie of the regality of Sprouston for Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1413 he is recorded as holding the position of Bailie to the 4th Earl of Douglas, in the Regality of Sprouston, and possibly also in the Barony of Cavers (like his forefathers held for their Douglas superiors). In 1424 he was on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick for lands in Hownan. He married Janet Murray, who was involved in a law-suit against the Baron, Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1437 over ownership of East Mains. The next generation is uncertain, but his grandson was probably John of that Ilk and Cocklaw. He must also have been related to Alexander who lost the lands of Flex and ‘Kirkton Mains’ to the Baron in another court case of 1464/5. James of Cocklaw (15th/16th C.) son of John. In 1519 he entered into a marriage contract with Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch, to marry his son and heir John to one of Sir Walter’s daughters, or failing that any other woman Sir Walter selected; this involved a promise to give lands in Peeblesshire and Cavers to the couple, with Sir Walter promising to try to preserve the lands of Cocklaw intact in future. The Peeblesshire lands were in the barony of Hudleshope and the Cavers lands were ‘Guddisclucht, Unishop, Binkkis and Langbittis’. He was said to have been in possession of Cocklaw in 1534, when a fresh seal was added to the deed granting Hudleshope to John Turnbull, hence confirming him in those lands. Although the family no longer had the lands of Gledstanes in Lanarkshire, they were still called ‘of that Ilk’, and Arthurshiel, a neighbouring property was still owned by a branch of the family. He was succeeded by his son John. James of Cocklaw (1547–c.1615) son of John. He was 12th of that Ilk. In 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle; his surety was Sir William Douglas of Cavers. He was probably the James of Cocklaw who signed the bond uniting against the Liddesdale thieves in 1569. In 1569 he gave surety for Archibald Elliot of Corrieske (along with Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch, who was surety for other Elliots) and was found liable when he failed to appear, with his lands and goods to be held if he did not pay the £1000. Along with Walter Scott of Goldielands, he gave security for the appearance of a number of Hawick residents (Allan Deans, John Scott, son to Philip’s Jock, and Johnnie Cavers) in a court case in Edinburgh in 1571, possibly connected with a raid. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. According to the register of the Privy Council he was warded in 1571, had ‘surety in relief’ in 1571 and 1574 and served as surety in 1576. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and the Regent (and not to assist Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst), with his surety being William Ker of Caverton. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573, ‘with my hand at the pen’. Also in 1574 he served as surety for a large number of Borderers, specifically residents of Hummelknowes, Coliforthill and Adderstoneshie; he was found liable to pay 5000 for not removing the thieves (who were mostly Croziers). In 1574 he was on the return for Walter Scott of Brancholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his father Sir Walter Scott. He was the ‘little Gladstane, good in need’ who led the local contingent at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. The land near Bonchester known as ‘Little Gledstains’ may be connected with him in some way. He was a prominent Borderer of his time, his name being mentioned 32 times in the Register of the Privy Council, in connection with either Roxburghshire or Peeblesshire. He was probably the Laird of Gledstaines who was on the defence side in the trial of 2 sons of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule in 1577/8. In the 1570s he was one of the ‘curators’ of the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane. Also in 1576 he was a surety along with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Langlands of that Ilk for tenants in Lairhope and Broadlee, as well as George Elliot, ‘the Cleg’, and John Stoddart, ‘cobilman to the Lord of Langlands’. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned, and was declared liable for the fines associated with the pledges made in 1576. Also in 1578/9 he was cautioner for Robin Elliot of Redheuch, pledging that he would not raid into England. In 1580 he, Walter Scott of Goldielands and Robert Elliot of Redheugh complained to the Privy Council about Muckle Whitlaw being raided; they raised the fray, following the thieves to England. However, on their return through Liddesdale they were attacked by a band of Armstongs and Elliots near Whithaugh. He was probably in the party that rode off to follow the raiders, and his brother Walter was killed. One of his farms was raided by Elliots and Armstongs in 1580, as well as the farm tenanted by John Gledstaines at Whiltlaw. Also in 1580 he complained (along with the Countess of Bothwell and Wat Scott of Harden) of thefts and outrages committed by the Elliots on their farms. In 1581 he was allied with Walter
Scott of Goldielands and Robert Elliot of Redleigh when they had a set of complaints made against them by Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whitaugh; they were all charged to appear before the Privy Council with assurances for their supporters. He was a cautioner (although with Robert and Mungo, Burgess of Edinburgh) for Walter Scott of Goldielands being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581. Also in 1581 he witnessed a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. Also in 1583/4 he was involved in a caution for his tenant Thomas Burnet and others in his 3 husbandlands in Hundleshope, that John Scott there would not harm them. He was the Laird of Gledstains who gave assurances in 1584 for himself and other Gledstains, with the Elliot chiefs standing as assurance. He was probably the Laird of ‘Gledstanis’ listed on the 1590 ‘Roll of the Clans’ and is also probably the ‘James Gledstanis’ who was witness in 1595 to the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. In 1594/5 he made a bond that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill; this was signed at Hawick. In 1605 he was in court with the family of Thomas Peebles, Burgess of Peebles, who was murdered in 1561, with the family still seeking satisfaction; his sureties were John of Wintinningtonrig and John Rutherford, Bailie of Jedburgh. His name appears in the Register of the Privy Seal no less than 32 times, in connection with both Roxburghshire and Peebleshire. He was regularly fined (e.g. in 1608 along with Horsburgh of that Ilk and Halden of that Ilk, binding them to keep the peace), imprisoned and denounced as a troublemaker, although he lived to a reasonably old age. In 1610 he and William Scott of Howpasley had an action against them by James Douglas of Drumlanrig for not paying taxes on their lands of ‘Ramscelewis, Howpasley and Schawis’, and on his lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. He signed a bond in 1612 (along with several Scotts) for keeping peace in the Borders. In 1614 he resigned his lands of ‘Hundillishope, Acolmfeild, Wodegrevingtoun’ and land at the east end of Peebles to his son James, younger, and his wife; this suggests he was quite old by then. He was succeeded by his son James (who was succeeded after only a few years by Walter). His daughter Margaret married David, son of Hector Turnbull of Wauchope according to a marriage contract of 1593 (not 1567 as in one record). Another daughter Lilias married Richard Rutherford ‘Dickon Draw-the Sword’, who led the Jedburgh contingent at the Raid of the Reidswire. He may also be the James of Cocklaw whose daughter Barbara married John, younger son of John Rutherford of Hinthill. James of Cocklaw (c.1584–c.1620) son of James, he was the 13th of that Ilk. He led a similar life to that of his father, committing theft, murder, etc. However, he was Laird of Cocklaw for only a few years. In 1606 he was ‘appeirand of Coklaw’ when he served as cautioner for Thomas Turnbull (younger of Wauchope) who was accused of raiding and burning Apotside and Harwood. He was still ‘apparent of Cocklaw’ in 1608 when he appeared for Archibald Douglas and others, swearing not to harm anyone in Peebles. In 1614 he was granted the lands of ‘Hundillishope, Acolmfeild, Wodegrevingtoun’ which had been resigned by his father James, elder, together with his wife Beatrice Ker. In 1616 he (or perhaps his father) was on the jury for the trial of the ruffians hired by Jean Scott of Satchells and Lady Scott of Howpasley to mutilate the sheep and cattle belonging to Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1618 he was said to be son and heir of James, and former owner of the lands of Hundleshope and others in Peebleshire, when John Scott had a charter from James VI. He was probably the James who was a Hawick Bailie in the 1620s. He married Beatrix Ker in about 1607, and hence Beatrix, who married James Grieve of Commonside, may have been his daughter. He was succeeded by Walter of Cocklaw and may have also had sons Robert and James. In 1620 Beatrix Ker (presumably his widow by then) and her 3 sons William, Robert and James, led an assault on the old lands near Peebles that the family had disputed for generations. Bailie James (16th/17th C.) Magistrate of Hawick recorded in 1627, along with Robert Scott. They were the Town’s Bailies when 16 men from Hawick were listed as being ‘idle and masterless’ and appropriate for sending to the wars in Germany. When the men were not produced he said that ‘he had not power, force nor friendship within the town of Hawick to apprehend the persons abovenwritten or to exhibit the same’, it is unclear exactly what that meant (since it also states that the other Bailie did have ‘both power and friendship within the town’). He is probably the James who acted as witness to the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627.
Capt. James (d.1645) grandfather of Walter the Town Clerk, he must have been a near relative of the Lairds of Cocklaw. He was part of Sir William Douglas’ Covenanter force, and was killed at the Battle of Aulderne along with his brother Francis. James (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish. He married Marion Tudhope about 1668 and her will is recorded in 1682. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Forrest and their children included: Alexander (b.1670); and Gavin (b.1673). Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Councillor and Magistrate in the 1660s and Magistrate in the 1670s. He was on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the ‘Baylyea Gladstaines’ recorded in 1675 amonst the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He is probably the ‘late baylyea’ in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the ‘Bailieya Gladsitaines’ who paid tax on 2 hearths in the east-side of Hawick in 1694. He may be the James, married to Isobel ‘Whillance’ (i.e. Whullans), whose children baptised in Hawick included: William (b.1673); Isobell (b.1675); John (b.1677); James (b.1678); and Christian (b.1680). Probably Rachel (b.1683), with the mother’s name given as ‘Helen Whillance’ was also his daughter. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Scott. James (17th C.) of Hummelknowes. Recorded in a letter to Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1692. James (17th C.) listed as a resident of Effledge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Laing in 1700. James (b.1701), Janet (b.1703), Euphan (b.1706) and Bessie (b.1710) could have been his children. James (d.bef. 1734) 16th of that Ilk and Laird of Cocklaw, probably son of William, Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his Scott history to him in 1686. He registered arms in the period 1672-78. He was probably the Laird in 1678 who paid the land tax on £1240 in Cavers Parish. His brother John became a tailor’s apprentice in 1681. He may be the Gladstains of ‘Ormiston’ who was among the local lairds who were taken off to Edinburgh Castle as supporters of the Covenanters in 1683. He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for doctor William Scott in Hawick in 1687, along with Town Clerk Walter. He was of Cocklaw’ in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorumberry. He was certainly still living in 1707, when he is recorded as gaining permission to cart divots off the Common. However, a Robert ‘of that Ilk’ is recorded on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704, so the succession is unclear around this time. He supposedly died unmarried, perhaps shortly before 1734 when his property was divided among his heirs; however, it is possible he died earlier and was succeeded by Robert (perhaps a younger brother). Cocklaw passed to Janet Gladstains, who was either his daughter or perhaps the daughter of Robert. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Dodburn. His son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1718. William (b.1731), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, may also have been his son. It is possible he is the same man as the blacksmith in Hawick in the 1720s. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish. In 1735 he was paid by the Council ‘for making ye coulter’ (presumably for using on the Common). He married Janet Moscrop and their children included: Bessie (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); and Walter (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Nixon and John Scott ‘in Hawick’. He could be the James, son of Walter and Janet Scott, baptised in Hawick in 1688. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1715. His children were probably Margaret (b.1712), Marion (b.1715), Isabel (b.1718) and Margaret (b.1722). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was son of Walter and in 1718 married Marion Gladstains, daughter of another Walter. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hobkirk and had a daughter Margaret (b.1728). The witnesses appear to have been John Scott and John Paterson. James (18th C.) outdoor servant working on the Wells estate in about 1730. He is mentioned in the estate book of factor Archibald Jerdan, described as a sort of handy-man. James (18th C.) possibly brother of Bailie Gladstains, they were together given responsibility about 1740 for collecting subscriptions ‘west the water’ for paying for the Teviot Bridge. He could be the James described as a tailor in Hawick in 1735. He may be the James (along with another John) who witnessed an Episcopal baptism for John of Whitlaw in 1753. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in 1753. James (d.bef. 1808) only surviving son of Town Clerk John. He owned the property at 80 High Street that was later the Liberal Club. However, he did not long outlive his father, since his sisters Christian and Ann were served heirs to their father in 1808 and sold the property in 1809. He could be the James, son of John and Ann Weir baptised in Hawick in 1766. James (b.c.1795) farm labourer and gamekeeper who lived at Branholme Town and later at Stintyknowe. He was probably related to the earlier Gledstains who were at Chapelhill. His wife was Barbara and their children included Betty, Agnes and Margaret. In 1861 he was ‘Formerly Gamekeeper’ at ‘Stintyknows Far House’, Janet nee Murray (15th C.) wife of James of that Ilk. In 1437, after the death of her husband, she was involved in a dispute with the Baron of Hawick, Sir William Douglas, over the lands of the East Mains of Hawick; Douglas won the dispute. Janet (16th C.) owner of 1 1/2 partacies of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. She may have been widow of a local Gledstains. Janet (d.1737) probably the daughter of James, the 16th of that Ilk (although he is also said to have died unmarried, but perhaps this is confused and he merely died with no male heirs); however, she is also said to have been daughter of Robert of that Ilk. She died unmarried and in 1738 the lands of Dod were divided among her ‘heirs-portioners’, who were John of Whittlaw, Robert Rutherford and Robert’s wife Esther, sister of Robert of that Ilk (and hence presumably her aunt). Cocklaw was eventually sold in about 1741. John (d.1412) 5th Gledstains of that Ilk, eldest son of William and Margaret Turnbull. His mother transferred her properties to him when William died, some time in the reign of Robert III (probably the late 1390s). This included Hundlehope in Peeblesshire and Roberton in Selkirkshire (perhaps the first record of the name ‘Roberton’), as well as land in the town of Selkirk. It is also possible that the lands of Ormiston etc. near Hawick were acquired by the Gledstains through this Turnbull connection; Margaret’s father John was surely related to the Turnbulls of the Borthwick Water and Selkirkshire. This was the start of the family of Gledstains of that Ilk moving their centre of activity to Roxburghshire. He was probably succeeded by his brother James, or possibly by Thomas and then James. John (15th C.) possibly 7th of that Ilk. However, the information is uncertain, partly because of the decline of the Earls of Douglas, their overlords. He was referred to as ‘Johanni de Gledstanys de eisdem’ in 1456 in the Exchequer Rolls for Peeblesshire. On the fall of the House of Douglas, Gledstanes in Lanarkshire had been forfeited to the Crown, and was granted to the Earl of Angus in 1457. However, John also held Hundlehope (in Peeblesshire) in 1482. Around this time the Dumfriesshire branch of the family separated off. In 1463 he witnessed a return for the 5th Earl of Angus ‘Bell the Cat’. He is probably the John Gledstains who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infesting David Scott of Branholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. He was probably the John of Cocklaw who was witness to a 1483 document dealing with Denholm Mains. He may have been the ‘John Gestanis’ who witnessed a 1487 sasine for the lands of Boonraw and the ‘Johannem Gledstanis’ who was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the lands and titles of Branholme and Buccleuch. In 1484/5 there is a record of a dispute between the Burgh of Peebles and him (together with Thomas Lowes of Manor) over lands at Cademuir; the decree that he and Lowes refrain from encroaching on Peebles Common was ratified by James IV in 1505/6. However, there was a further complaint that he sent ‘he send his houshald men and servandis, and cruelly dang and hurt thair hirdis and servandis that were kepand thair corne and gudis within thair said propri landis, and left twa of thame liand on the feild for deid’, after which he sent his nephew and son, with 26 of their accomplices to drive the people off their own lands. In 1492 there was a decree from the Privy Council against him, as well as William and Archibald Douglas of Cavers, to pay to John Rutherford of Hundalec the 100 merks due to his grandfather, Nicholas Rutherford. He may be the Laird of Gledstains who was surety for John Young in Deanbrae in 1494/5. Either he or the next generation would have been the Laird of Gledstains who was fined at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502 for failure to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. John of Winningtonhall (15th C.) recorded as ‘of Wyndtournhall’ in 1463 when he acted as Sheriff of Roxburghshire for the sasine infesting David Scott in the Barony of Branholme. He is as ‘of Wnydtyournall’ when witness to a document of 1483 dealing with Denholm Mains. John of Cocklaw was also a signatory, so he was probably a relative, possibly even his son. In 1484/5 he was ‘Gledstanis of Wyndiltonhall’ when he was first witness to the transfer of the lands of Whitchesters to Robert (of Allanhaugh), son of Sir David

Gledstains

Scott of Branxholme. He was probably the John ‘Gledstaniis’ who was one of the witnesses for a sasine of lands in Denholm and Cavers in 1491/2. He may be the John ‘gledstanys’ who acted as surety for the sons of Matthew in Hassendean in 1494/5. In 1497/8 he was on the panel at Cavers to rule on the inheritance of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch by Robert Elliot; he is there ‘of Winditonhaw’. He may be the John recorded in 1502 when 40 geese were stolen from him from out of ‘aquam de teviot’ by Adam Grahamslaw. He was probably an ancestor of the later John of Winningtonhall. John (1482–1518) 8th of that Ill and Cocklaw, probably the grandson of James who suffered the famous Siege of Cocklaw. He still appears to have owned lands in Peeblesshire; in 1509 he leased lands at Cademuir to John Murray. In 1509 he was also on the ‘retour of inquest’ (listed first, in fact) for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas. He is named in a Douglas of Cavers document in 1509/10, verifying their lands and Barony, except for the lands held by him, as shown by a charter of David II (although it is unclear whether this also refers to the Gledstains lands). He allied himself with the Scotts of Braxholme and Buccleuch. In 1517 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his father’s barony of Braxholme. His lands at that time included Coliford, Ormiston, Dod and Giddenscleuch. He was apparently quite unscrupulous, trying to gain possession of part of the common lands of Cademuir (adjacent to Hundlehope), and being involved in a raid there in 1518. He was succeeded by his nephew John, who was mentioned in connection with the 1518 raid. John of Cocklaw (d.1519) nephew of John, the 8th Laird. He was the 9th Gledstains of that Ill, although only for a year. He was probably already an old man in 1518 when there was a raid, involving him and his son Archibald, on the common lands of Peebles. It is described that the Laird of Gledstains sent forth ‘John of Gledstanes his nevoy and apperand air, Archibald Gledstanes, his sone, and others to the number of twenty-six men’. He was succeeded by his son James, who contracted in 1519 to marry his son John to a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme. In 1517 his daughter Helen was infested in ‘liferent’ of the lands of ‘Langhawcht’ in the Barony of Manor in Peeblesshire. He may be the John of that Ill whose widow Margaret ‘Jardane’ is recorded in 1542 requesting from the Court of Session that Lord Somerville pay her the rents on the lands of Libberton (in Lanarkshire). John of Craigs and Over Kelwood (16th C.) probably son of Thomas, who held Over Kelwood in Dumfriesshire. He was confusingly referred to as being ‘of that Ill and Craigs’, even although there were others ‘of that Ill’ in Roxburghshire at the same time. He had a sasine of Over Kelwood in 1525, married Margaret Jardine and was still alive in 1537. He was probably succeeded by his brother Matthew. John (d.1574) probably a son of Gledstains of that Ill, but his parentage is not known. He held the lands of ‘Quothquan’, which extended to 26 acres of the former larger estate of Gledstains in Lanarkshire. He attended St. Andrews University 1505–8, then studied in France. In 1534 he became an advocate, appointed ‘Advocatus Pauperum’ and was a Lord of Sessions from 1542. He was also Procurator of Judges, Member of the Privy Council and became Doctor of Laws. He was recorded in Edinburgh in 1550, on a panel ruling for the Privy Council. His property was inherited by his nephew, also John, who was Ormond Pursuivant for Scotland. John (1519–64) 11th of that Ill, son of James. He probably married a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (Janet or Christian), to whom he had been betrothed by a marriage contract of 1519/20 (which must have been shortly after he was born). This demonstrates the close links between the Scott and Gledstains families at this time. In 1537/8 there was an assurance by several Croziers that they would not harm him, his friends or servants, with Elliots acting as cautioners. In 1542 he had a sasine for the lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshel. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains mentioned as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1552. He is mentioned in connection with exploits of the Scotts after 1553. In 1553/4 he was ‘de Coklaw’ when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme inheriting from his grandfather. He was charged with the murder of Thomas Peebles and William Bell at ‘Kaidmuir’ near Peebles in 1561, probably a continuation of the claim on those lands made by his family for generations; his name is given as ‘Jhone Gledstaniis of Coklaw’. Although the trial was deferred indefinitely, his son James was pursued for damages by the descendants of the victims. Also in 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563/4 he gave the tenancy of lands in Hundlehope (in Peebleshire) to 2 men after they renounced their former ‘kindenes’ agreement. Also in 1563/4 he promised to enter 3 Elliots and 2 Croziers for crimes against an Englishman, with Sir William Cranston as his surety. He is probably the ‘Lard of Coklaw’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he ‘and his barnis’ are described as supporters of Buccleuch in the bond signed between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He was succeeded by his son James, ‘little Gledstane’. His other sons were: William of Cocklaw; Walter, killed by raiders from Liddesdale; and (probably) John of Whitlaw. A document of 1561 (for the rental of Corrie Sike) states that his son and heir apparent was John, which appears to contradict other information (and is perhaps an error, unless there were 2 confounded generations here). John (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpastley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John of Whitlaw (16th C.) probably son of John, 11th of that Ilk. He was the founder of the Whitlaw and Flex branch of the family. He is mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as being left something unspecified. In 1580 he is recorded as ‘servand’ to the Countess of Bothwell, owner of Whitlaw, when the farm was raided by a group of Elliots and Armstrongs, who stole 100 sheep. He was in the party that followed the raiders, and one of his brothers was killed in a skirmish. John of Winningtonhall (16th/17th C.) probably the John ‘of Wydeton hall’ in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Wardens, his name appearing alongside other local Gledstains. Probably the same John ‘of Wundington Hall’ was witness to a marriage contract between the Gledstains of Cocklaw and the Turnbulls of Wauchope in 1593. He resigned his lands in 1605 (presumably for the purposes of a new infeftment), and is there styled ‘Joanni Gledstanis de Windintounhall’. He is named as surety for James of Cocklaw and that Ilk in a trial of 1605 (relating to reparations for John of Cocklaw’s murder of Thomas Peebles in 1561). His location is there recorded as ‘Wynnington-hauch’ and ‘Wyndington Haugh’. In 1607 he was chancellor of the ‘assyse’ which found George Henderson in Winnington to be not guilty of chopping down trees belonging to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It seems likely that he was a close relative of James of that Ilk and related to the John of the same place a century earlier. John of Whitlaw (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter. He stood in for his father as Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Hassendean and Wilton Parishes in the period 1641–47 and was Chamberlain in his own right by 1647–48. He remained Chamberlain until at least 1656, and in the last couple of years also acted for Eckford, Hawick and Clarilaw. He was the Chamberlain who gave an account of the personal property and debts of Earl Francis Scott of Buccleuch when he died in 1651. In 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He was granted the lands of Flex by James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry in 1653. He is probably the John of Whitlaw recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when £133 6s 8d was paid for Flex in Hawick Parish and £266 13s 4d paid for Whitlaw: he also paid the teind of Eckford on behalf of the Countess of Buccleuch. He married Anna Scott (probably daughter of Walter Scott of Synton) and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1639); Walter (b.1640); Francis (b.1643), who succeeded; an unnamed son (b.1645); and Helen (b.1646). His son Francis was served as his heir in the lands of Flex in 1672. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wilson and their children included: John (b.1670); James (b.1672); John (again, b.1678); and Jane (b.1679). John of Hilliesland (17th C.) recorded in 1678 when he paid the land tax on land valued at £66 13s 4d in Hawick Parish. He was surely related to Walter of Hilliesland, who paid the land tax in 1643 and 1663. He may have been father of the John admitted as a Burgess in 1692 and an ancestor of the Town Clerks who owned Hilliesland. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel (or Bessie) Liddell and their children included Jane (b.1682) and William (b.1685). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Harkness and their children included Walter (b.1676), James (b.1677), Thomas (b.1679); Archibald (b.1681), John (b.1683), Francis (b.1685) and Bessie (b.1687). John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was listed separately from the carier. It is possible he was the same as the Hilliesland Laird. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and paid tax on 2 hearths according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His son was William. In 1717 he and his son and daughter-in-law were all rebuked by the Session for fighting with one another on the street. He is probably the John ‘at the East Port’, who, along with his son William, were in 1700 ‘found guilty of stealing peats and strae, are sentenced to stand at the crosse for a season, and be banished the town’. They stole 3 loads of peat from Galalaw and oat straw from the stack yard of Rev. Cunningham; this was said to be ‘out of his extreme necessity’, probably related to the great famine that spread over the country at that time.

John of Hilliesland (17th/18th C.) admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1692. He may have been son of the earlier John of Hilliesland (if not the same man) and perhaps father of the later John of Hilliesland; he was surely related to the Town Clerks of Hawick. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobell Burn and their children included William (b.1707). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Jean, daughter of Adam Glendinning and their children included John (b.1718). John of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.) witnessed a baptism for William Henderson in the Flex in 1709. He was recorded as being a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718. His brother James became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1719. He is probably the same man as John of Flex who was recorded in a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, when his lands of ‘Flex and Meikle and Little Whitlaw’ were valued at 400 merks. He probably succeeded Francis of Whitlaw, but it is unclear if he was his son or brother. He was probably succeeded by the next (and last) John of Whitlaw. John (d.1754) tenant of ‘Hilliesland Walls’ and presumably related to the Town Clerks’ family. He witnessed a sasine made by Town Clerk Walter in 1728. He was described as being ‘of Hilliesland’ when admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1733 (and was presumably a descendant of the John of Hilliesland who became a Burgess in 1692). He may be the John who witnessed an Episcopal baptism for John of Whitlaw in 1753. He may have been the last Laird of Hilliesland to live there, and was probably the Laird who was described (in 1767) as having earlier driven his herd to Hawick Common, down the Iver Burn. John of Whitlaw (c.1710–bef. 83) one of the last of the family to own land locally. He may have been son of the previous John of Whitlaw. In 1738 he was one of ‘heirs-portioners’ of Janet, daughter of Robert of that Ilk and Cocklaw, when she died unmarried; he thus received part of the lands of Dod that Janet had still possessed. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He was stated to be tenant of Whitlaw in the 1750s when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd. He was interested in genealogy and prepared a pedigree of the Scotts of Synton (through whom he was related on his mother’s side), Whitslade, etc. in 1769; this was used as the basis for much of the booklet on the pedigree of the Scotts of Stokoe, Todrig, etc., which was printed privately in 1783 (by which time he was deceased). He was witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1764. He was said to have been an officer under Prince Charles and remained a Jacobite sympathiser (as described by Robert Wilson). He went about on crutches in later life, and blamed his rheumatism on the house of Hanover! He was also known for having a large feast every Christmas. His daughter Mira was baptised in 1753, by Episcopal Minister Rev. Findlay McLennan, making it clear that the family continued to follow that particular faith; the witnesses were Dr. Robert Scott of Whitslade, as well as John and James Gledstains from Hawick (who were probably his brothers, cousins, or other near relatives). The name of his wife is unknown, and it is not clear what happened to Mira, or whether he had other children. John (d.1781) has his death recorded in Hawick. He is listed as ‘Elder in the Grein’. It is not impossible he was the same man as John of Whitlaw, but alternatively he may have lived at Myreslawgreen. John (1724–83) son of the second Walter, writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick. He was Town Clerk from about 1763 until 1783, with a short gap in 1768–70 (precise dates uncertain), when he was deprived of office for being a Jacobite supporter and refusing to take the oath of government (although Robert Wilson’s account of this is confused). He was assisted by Thomas Wintrope for several years, perhaps until 1768. He was also tenant of Meikle and Little Whitlaws, and had the farms as aliment from the Duke of Buccleuch (although this could be confusion with his namesake, John of Whitlaw). He kept a public house in town (like his predecessors as Town Clerk), where it was said that most of Hawick’s civic business was carried out. He was apparently liked to avoid litigation and was fond of resolving disputes by inviting both parties to his house in the evening to discuss things amicably. He wrote a detailed account of the great flood of 1767. In 1767 he one of the representatives of Hawick at the perambulation of the Common made as part of the court case for its...
division. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He married Ann Weir, who died in 1805; she was probably the daughter of the earlier Town Clerk James Weir, born in 1738. Their children included: Walter (b.1765); James (b.1766), who owned 80 High Street; William (b.1768); Christian, who married manufacturer Walter Richardson Elizabeth (b.1776); and Ann (b.1781), who may have married John ‘the Turk’ Scott. The witnesses to the 1768 baptism were writer James Weir (probably his brother-in-law) and schoolmaster James Inglis. He appears to have been the last male of the direct family of Gledstains in Teviotdale. His 2 daughters were served as heiresses to him in 1808 and sold 80 High Street in 1809 (so his sons must have been deceased by then); they are probably the ‘Mrs. Richardson and Miss Gladstanes’ listed in 1811 as owners of part of the particate lands of Hawick. He was succeeded as Town Clerk by his nephew, John Inglis. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Margaret Beattie in 1770. They had a daughter Joanna baptised in Wilton in 1778. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Katherine Riddell in 1775. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Matthew (15th C.) witness to a sasine of the Cranstons of that Ilk for Denholm Mains in 1465/6. Matthew and Cuthbert were also witnesses. Perhaps the same ‘Matho Gledstaniis’ was witness to a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope, directed by William Douglas of Cavers, in 1500. Matthew of Over Kelwood (d.beft. 1541) probably son of Thomas and brother of John. He lived in Dumfriesshire and was referred to as being ‘of that Ilk’, even though the Roxburghshire branch were probably the superior line. He married Elizabeth Livingstone and their daughter Mirabella married a relative, Herbert of Dundee. He had a sasine of Over Kelwood in 1536 and was still alive in 1539. His grandson Walter was also referred to as being ‘of that Ilk’. Mira (b.1753) daughter of John of Whitalt. There is an entry in the Hawick Parish Kirk baptismal records that she was baptised by Episcopalian minister Rev. Findlay McLennan, with witnesses Robert Scott of Whitslade, and John and James Gledstains (who were probably uncles or other close relatives). This was one of the few pieces of evidence that there was a continuing Episcopal Kirk in Hawick through the 18th century. Patrick (14th C.) juror in Roxburghshire in 1336, who swore fealty to Edward III in 1346 following the Battle of Durham (Neville’s Cross). He may have been a son of Herbert. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice- aire held in Jedburgh. He was ‘Patricius gledstaniis in coklaw’; he must surely have been related to the Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk, although appears to have been a tenant rather than a laird. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for multiple thefts: 12 cows from John Anderson; 58 sheep from William Knight; 120 score sheep from James Sinclair and Robert Knight; 80 sheep from James Crays; 100 sheep and 50 cows from Hartshaw; plundering from the tenants of Glengelt; and stealing horses and other things from Robert Walderston, William Allan, John Hutchison and their neighbours. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. Patrick (15th C.) tenant in Hummelknowes, recorded in the 1494/5 Justice- aire held in Jedburgh. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for the theft of 4 sheep from Yairi, with James Pringle of Smallholm as his surety. It seems that he was a different man from Patrick in Cocklaw. Robert (15th C.) on the ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in How- nam. Probably the same Robert ‘de Gledstaniis’ was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that Ilk, when he infested Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in Grahamslaw in 1439. And he appeared as witness along with Crichton and others on a charter by Archibald, Earl of Douglas to the Kers of Al- tonburn in 1439. Probably the same Robert witnessed a charter for William Cranston of Cral- ing in 1443. Probably the same man is ‘Roberto Gledstaniys de le Crag’ in 1446 when he wit- nessed a charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch; his lairdship was probably Craigs in Dumfriesshire. He is probably the same ‘Roberto de Gledstaniis’ (an esquire) in 1452 when he is the first witness listed on the sasine for the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drum- lanrig. In 1454/5 he is ‘Robert of Gledstaniys’ when he witnessed a document for Ker of Alton- burn. And in 1463/4 he was ‘Roberto de Gled- staniys’ among the men who received a reward from the King for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Gledstaniys’ when he witnessed a charter of 1468 dealing with the Scots of Buccleuch and lands of Lempitlaw. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Robertum Gledstaniys’ in 1484 when he was on the inquest panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. Robert (15th/16th C.) de- scribed as being from Annan when he witnessed a charter at Caerlaverock in 1492/3. Probably the same Robert is described as ‘scutiferis’ (i.e. shield-bearer) when he witnessed a charter for John, Lord Maxwell, in 1505. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘pr Todschahauch’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was proprietor of Todshawhaugh in a 1650 list of communicants of the Borthwick valley. His wife may have been Agnes Rule, with their daughter Margaret baptised in Hawick in 1639. In 1648 he was listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire (along with Walter of Cocklaw and John of Whittlaw, who must have been closely related). Either he or a son of the same name was listed in 1686 as tenant of the lands of Whames in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident who was on a 1684 list of men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. Robert (17th C.) tailor in Raeknowe. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Margaret (b.1693) and Margaret (again, b.1700). In the 1700 record his wife’s forename is given as Janet and the witnesses are David Graham and John Armstrong, tenants in Raeknowe. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was listed as ‘ane hyred servant in hawick’ in 1700. He married Janet Brown and their children (although the mother’s name is not always given) probably included: Anna (b.1690); Walter (b.1693); Robert (b.1696); John (b.1700); and Janet (b.1703). The witnesses in 1693 were John Stuart and John Black and in 1700 were weaver Thomas Turnbull and ‘officer’ James Lethem. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he is recorded (twice) being given money from the Session poor box.

Robert (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘of that Ilk’ in 1704 as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. Also in 1704 he petitioned the Bailies of Hawick to let him ‘cast divots in the Common of Hawicke’, this was to thatch his stable at Hummelknowes. It is unclear who he was, since the Laird of Cocklaw at the time was James; but perhaps he was a brother of James, and hence son of William. Probably the same Robert of that Ilk married Janet, daughter of Robert Elliot of Larriston in 1706 (and she secondly married John Scott of Gorrenberry in 1716, so he was presumably dead by then). Robert (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick, as recorded in 1708. He married Janet Brown, and their children included: John (b.1700); Janet (b.1703); Robert (b.1705), who lived in Roberton Parish; Marion (b.1708); and Margaret (b.1709). The witnesses in 1705 were Bailie Patrick Richardson and weaver Andrew Brown (probably his wife’s father or brother) and in 1708 were merchant Robert Robson and flesher Walter Anderson. Robert (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Isobell Hobkirk in 1714. Robert (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. In 1721 he married Marion ‘Lun or Douglas’ (suggesting his wife had previously been married). Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1742 and Harden Burnfoot in 1753. His children (assuming these are all the same father Robert) included Magdalen (b.1742), Thomas (b.1747), Thomas (again, b.1747), Kathrine (b.1753) and Robert (b.1756). Robert (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident. He married Jean (or Jane) Scott in 1780 and she died in 1805. Robert (b.c.1763) perhaps son of William, resident of Chapelhill. He married Mary Scott in Wilton Parish in 1788. This means he was probably different from the Robert who married Jean Scott 8 years earlier. Their children included: Peggy (b.1789); William (b.1792); and James (b.1794). When Peggy was baptised the family were at Overhall. The 1792 and 1794 baptism records were recorded in Hawick with witnesses the ‘Special Congregation’. Perhaps the same Robert was a 78 year old agricultural labourer living with the Anderson family at Whitehaugh Cottages in 1841.

Robert (b.1812) eldest son of William. He married Mina Nichol. In 1840 he and his wife emigrated to Canada along with his parents and siblings. Thomas (14th/15th C.) son of Sir William and brother of John and James. He may have owned the lands of Flex. He acquired Roberton (in Selkirkshire) from his mother in 1412, confirmed by a charter of James I in 1430. It is possible he is the same Thomas ‘Gledstainis’ appointed (along with Stephen Scott and others) as a procurator by Ellen Rule of Primside when she resigned her lands to their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas. Probably the same Thomas had a charter from the Duke of Albany (around 1410) for the lands of ‘Withnyhope’ in Selkirkshire. He could be the same Thomas who witnessed a confirmation of the Church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1404. His wife was Margaret and he was succeeded by their son Alexander. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1511 when he witnessed a charter for Margaret Colville relating to lands in Oxnam. It is unclear how he was related to other Roxburghshire Gledstains. He could be the Thomas who had a charter for ‘Overkeldvod’ (in Dumfriesshire) in 1509, and hence was probably a son of Herbert, Rector of Dornoch. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1706 he married Bessie Sanderson and their children included Janet (b.1707), Bessie (b.1716) and Francis (b.1718). John (b.1710) and Janet (b.1712) were probably also his children (but with no mother’s name recorded). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailies Robert Ruecastle and George Martin. He could be the son of John and Margaret Harkness who was born in 1679. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm n 1723. His children, baptised in Cavers, included Bessie (b.1717), William (b.1721), Janet (b.1723) and Walter (b.1725). Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1816. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Miller and their son John was baptised in 1872. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Isabella Fox, daughter of Gilbert Amos, who was joiner at Chesters. He died in an accident at Southdean sawmill. Walter (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1470 relating to the lands of Grahamslaw and the Scotts of Buccleuch. The same Walter may have witnessed a Buccleuch document of 1464/5 relating to Ladyurd, and hence be from the Peebles area. Probably the same Walter also witnessed a document relating to Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1475/6. Walter (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. He comes right after George in the list, suggesting they were related. Walter (d.1580) probably son of John, 11th of that Ilk, he was brother of James of Cocklaw. He may be the same ‘Walter Gledstanes’ (location not given) who is recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being owed about £13 ‘for his fice’ (he may thus have acted as some kind of factor or chamberlain, as his descendants did). He was killed by men of Liddesdale, led by Lanie Armstrong, when a party of Scotts and Gladstains followed those who had raided Meikle Whitlaw, but were ambushed on their way back home through Liddesdale (probably the morning after the raid on Whitlaw). After complaints to the Privy Council none of those implicated in the ambush appeared, and hence they were declared rebels. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Haining’ in 1608 when he was part of a group of Scotts and others who attacked Selkirk Mill. James Gladstains was also listed. Walter of Dod (17th C.) recorded in 1627 as holding, along with Walter Scott of Buccleuch, the Trinitylands in Hawick. He may be the same Walter of Dod who was recorded in the 1640s. He (or perhaps his son) may have been Laird of Dod in 1643 when he held the lands of Adderstoneshiel, with his mother having the liferent of Adderstonelee. He may be the Walter of Dod whose daughter Ephiam married John Rutherford of Littleleugh. Walter of Whitlaw (d.c.1643) part of the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was also part of the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler’, of sheep stealing. He is recorded as a ‘personne of assyse’ in the local Circuit Court of 1622. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick; he was one of the men who refused to accept some of the items in the valuation, presumably because of a dispute over either the Kirland, Ladyland or Trinitylands. He was also recorded in a county valuation of lands in Hawick Parish in 1643, his lands being valued at £266 13s 4d. He also appears as Chamberlain (or Factor) to the Earl of Buccleuch in existing records of rents and teinds for the period 1631–40 for Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton Parishes, also including Denholm. He was probably ill by the next year when his son John stood in for him, and was deceased by the time of the 1642–43 accounts. In one document he is transcribed as ‘Walter Gledstones in Whitehall’, presumably an error. He may be the Walter of Whitlaw who is listed by Scott of Satchells as being one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch (the only one not called Scott), who was a close cousin to the Scotts and was given the lands of Whitlaw for this service; however, this may have been an earlier generation. He is probably the Walter of Whitlaw whose daughter Margaret married Walter Scott, Laird of Galalaw. Walter (17th C.) possessor of the farm of Blackburn in Liddesdale in 1632. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wood and their children included Marion (b.1640) and Agnes (b.1641). Walter of Cocklaw (17th C.) probably the son of James, as recorded in 1648. He may have had brothers William, Robert and James. He was likely the ‘Laird of Gladstains’ who witnessed a family baptism in 1642, and hence was 14th of that Ilk. He was probably the Laird of Gladstains whose lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £1240 in 1643; this consisted of the farms of Hummelknowes, Ormiston and Orchard. He was ‘of Coklaw’ in 1648 when listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. It is possible he was the Walter of Cocklaw who was recorded as superior of the lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire in 1620 when they were granted to Sir William Scott of Harden. He may have been succeeded by a son (or brother), William, who is recorded in 1663. Walter of Hilliesland (17th C.) recorded in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish (with the spelling ‘of Halysland’). His lands were worth £66 13s. 4d. per year. He is presumably different from Walter of Whitlaw, who was listed separately in 1643. However, it is unclear how he was related to other local Gledstains, but he may have been father of John of Hilliesland who paid the land tax in 1678. Walter of Dod (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when his son and heir George was infested in the lands of Hunthill (in Cavers Parish) by William Earl of Lothian. He is probably the same Walter of Dod who married Agnes Douglas of Cavers, and whose son Walter was minister at New Abbey. His grandson Abraham was served heir to his lands of Hunthill in 1676. Walter of Flex (17th C.). He married Esther, daughter of Richard Rutherford of Littleheugh and granddaughter of John Rutherford of Capehope. His wife’s mother may have been Euphemia, daughter of William Gledstains. It is unclear how he was related to other Gledstains of Flex. Rev. Walter (1624–60) son of Walter of Dod and Agnes Douglas of Cavers. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1645 and in 1650 became minister at New Abbey, Kirkcudbright. He married Margaret, 2nd daughter of John Crichton of Crawfordston, who was widow of William Lawrie in Ingliston. His children included James and Agnes. His widow married James Mair, minister of Troqueer. His gravestone had the following lines (in Latin): ‘Q. Wherefore lies the Gladstone Hidden by the dark stone? A. The bosom of the earth Conceals the gem of gold’. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Turnbull and their children included Marion (b.1639), John (b.1643) and Bessie (b.1649). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Laidlaw and their children included Helen (b.1646) and Jean (b.1649). Walter (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1676 he and James Liddell were involved in checking the weights used by other traders in Town. He could be the same man as the tailor who witnessed a baptism for Francis in 1680 (suggesting that they were related). He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter Francis of Hilliesland (1642–1718) son of Lieut. Francis and Margaret Stewart, he was born in Hawick, about 3 years before his father was killed. He was Town Clerk 1673–1696, and after a 1 year gap again in c.1696–1710, then sharing the position with his son Walter until his death in 1718. He was Town Clerk on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693. In 1680 he witnessed baptisms for George Young and Janet Purdom, and for John Stewart. He may be the Walter ‘in Hawicke’ who is listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He is probably the ‘Mr Walter Gladstains’ who witnessed baptisms for George Deans in 1673 and for wright Francis in 1682. He is probably one of the 2 men of his name who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Hawick in 1671. He may also be the Gledstains whose letter to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1683 told of the imprisonment of several local lairds for trumped up charges relating to supporting the Covenanters. In 1697 he was one of 4 men who protested against the continuing of Robert Ruecastle as Bailie, through there being a vacancy and on account of an agreement made with the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch, until a new election for Bailie was held. In 1701 he was cited at the Kirk Session for being drunk at a burial and ‘using expressions savouring of blasphemy in his drunkenness’; he acknowledged his guilt and being reported again in 1702 promised to endeavour to remain sober. He was ‘Mr’ when he witnessed a baptism for Patrick Angus in 1704 and for his son Walter in 1708. He also witnessed baptisms in 1709 for schoolmaster John Purdom and for Robert Porteous. Either he or his son was witness for a baptism in 1709 for George Johnston, tenant in Hilliesland. In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands were valued at 100 merks. He was also a heritor of Hawick Parish, recorded in 1711 and 1718. He was listed as ‘Mr Walter Gladstains’ when he witnessed a baptism in 1687; the other witness was James, who was probably a close relative, and may have been James of that Ilk. He was listed in the same way when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Stewart and another for tailor Walter (his namesake and probably relative) in 1688. He was also ‘Mr walter Gladstaines’ when he paid tax for 4 hearths in Hawick, ‘eis the water’, in 1694; this suggests he had quite a substantial house. In 1707 ‘the town clerk’s wyf’ (presumably his wife) was ordered by the Council to be paid back for expenses incurred at the Queen’s birthday in 1706. He translated

Rev. Cunningham's 'Lines written on the situation of the burgh and town of Hawick' (possibly the earliest verse about Hawick) from the Latin. The ancient family bible, now in the Museum, appears to have been largely inscribed by him. He may also have been the Town Clerk who entertained a party of Jacobite officers while their army was encamped in Hawick in 1715 (although Robert Wilson ascribes this to a later Town Clerk in 1745). In 1704 he also provided what was probably the first translation of the 1537 Charter, appearing in print in Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was married to Margaret Sinclair in Calder. Apart from Walter, their surviving children were William (b.1674) and Agnes (b.1677). Other children baptised in Hawick were Francis (b.1672), Gideon (b.1678) and Margaret (b.1681). Bailie Walter (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1690s. Probably the same wright is recorded as in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He may be one of the 2 men of this name who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Hawick in 1671. His wife was Janet Scott and their children probably included Agnes (b.1672), Margaret (b.1673), Janet (b.1676) and Marion (b.1678). However, a tailor of the same name was also married to a Janet Scott and had children about the same time. The witnesses in 1676 were John Aitkin and James Deans and in 1678 were William Haswell and James Gledstains (who was surely related). Probably the same Walter was recorded as Bailie in 1697. Perhaps the same wright is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694 and among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) recorded in the 1678 valuation roll as portioner of Samieston in Jedburgh Parish. This land was formerly owned by Moir of Otterburn, but sold to the Duke of Roxburgh. It was listed as 'Lands in Samieston, formerly Walter Gladstain's £233 6s 8d' in 1788. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other family members. Walter (17th C.) tailor in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright Robert Cowan in 1688. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was also listed as a tailor among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Note the possible confusion with 'William', who was a tailor in Hawick at about the same time and also the contemporary wright of the same name (whose wife also had the same name!). He also witnessed a baptism for John Davidson and Jean Gledstains in the Flex in the 1716. His wife was Janet Scott and their son James was baptised in Hawick in 1688. Helen (b.1684) was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1688 were 'Mr Walter' (presumably his namesake the Town Clerk) and Bailie James Deans. Walter (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, more specifically probably the Hassendean Part. He may be the Walter, married to Janet Scott, whose son James was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1681, with witnesses John Hope and Charles Wood. He is probably the Walter who witnessed Robertson (or Hassendean) baptisms for James Scott in 1680. Robert and Marion Scott in 1683 and Adam Sanderson in 1684. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included: John (b.1695). He may have secondly married Helen Sanderson. Walter 'Walter Alison' (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1709 he was recorded as 'distinctionis causa called Walt: Alison' (to distinguish him from the Town Clerk of the same name, among others); however, it is unclear what this name may have referred to. He may have been related to Thomas, who married Bessie Sanderson In 1703 he married Helen Sanderson. His children probably included most of: William (b.1703); John (b.1706); John (again, b.1708); Isobel (b.1709); John (again, b.1711); Robert (b.1713); and Walter (b.1716). The witnesses in 1706 were Bailie James Deans and carrier Robert Aitken and in 1709 were Bailies James Burn and Robert Ruecastle. Walter junior of Hilliesland (d.1739) son of Walter who was Town Clerk. He was recorded being 'of Hill housland' (i.e. Hilliesland) in 1708, even although his father was still alive at that point. He himself was Town Clerk from 1710 probably until his death. However, it appears that James Weir was also acting as Town Clerk for the last few years. It was said that he was a strong supporter of the Town Herd in stopping encroachment on the Common, but that 'since his death there was never one to support the Herd, and the Common had been ten times worse used than it was before'. He is probably the Walter of Hilliesland who was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1704. He may have had an inn (like other Town officials in those days); it is recorded in 1724 that £5 8s. Scots was 'spent in the clerk's, being the King's birth-day'. He married Agnes (or Anna) Elliott from Langholm in 1706. Their children included: Janet (b.1707); Bessie (b.1708); and John (b.1711). The witnesses in 1708 were 'Mr Walter' (presumably his father) and Bailie Robert Ruecastle. He secondly married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’ or ‘Bettie’), daughter of Hawick tailor John Scott, in an ‘irregular marriage’ of 1720 (his name being incorrectly given as ‘William Gladstains, toun clerk’ in the Session records); this marriage was carried out by ‘James Macubine’, possibly an Episcopalian minister. He also witnessed an irregular marriage himself in Hawick in 1724. He was succeeded as Town Clerk by his son John (1724–83). His other children included: Agnes (b.1721); Walter (b.1722); Joanna (b.1726), who married James Inglis; William (again, b.1728); and James. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1762 he married Betty Sinton, who was also from Robertson. Walter (1817–82) 2nd son of farm worker William. In 1840, along with his parents and siblings, he emigrated to Canada, settling on the banks of the Nith River in southern Ontario. He first made chairs at the Nithsvale Chair Factory, and was then responsible for the construction of the nearby Stanley Street Church and Knox Church. He ran a general store in Ayr Ontario for many years. In 1869 the family moved to a farm near Gentry, Missouri. In 1847 he married Jane, daughter of Alexander Easton and Jeannie Kyle, who had emigrated from Castleton; she died in 1914. Their children were Jane, William R., Eliza, Alexander, Jeannie Kyle, George E., Anna M., Walter and Mary. They are buried at Knox Cemetery, near Gentry. Walter (b.1817/8) frameworker who lived at 7 Kirk Wynd. His wife was Helen and their children included Helen, David, Thomas, Mary and Agnes. He is probably the Walter ‘Gledstains’ whose recollections of James Hogg informed Robert Murray’s 1863 article. William (14th C.) recorded in 1346 along with Patrick when they paid homage to King Edward after the Battle of Neville’s Cross. He was described as being of ‘Mintowe’, suggesting that he was associated with Minto in Teviotdale. It is possible that he was the same as Sir William of that Ilk. Sir William (d.c.1365) probably the grandson of Herbert, and hence 3rd of that Ilk. In 1354 he witnessed a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh; his name also appears on 4 confirming charters. He also witnessed a deed of 1357/8 for the lands of Altonburn. He became a follower of the Earl of Douglas. He accompanied the Earl to France in 1356 and was made a Knight at the Battle of Poitiers. He was later imprisoned in the Tower of London for 16 months, being released in 1358. In about 1358 he witnessed a grant of the lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch to Melrose Abbey, by William, Earl of Douglas. In 1359 he is ‘William of Gladstanys’ when he witnessed an Athole charter. There is a letter of protection of 1360 from William, 1st Earl of Douglas, referring to Sir William as his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers and charging him to protect the lands of the Abbot and Convent of Melrose within the Barony (specifically Ringwood). This is the first record of a connection between the Douglases and the Gledstains of that Ilk, which would last for several generations. At about the same time he witnessed a confirmation of the advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey. In about 1360 he witnessed a charter for lands in Lauderdale and was also recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as a watcher of wool on the marches. In 1363 he was one of a number of Scotsmen given safe conduct into England by King Edward (probably related to a ransom). His son was probably William, and their names appear frequently in local charters between 1357 and 1388. Sir William (d.c.1400) son of William according to a charter of 1365, when he was granted his father’s land of ‘Wodgrenyon, Wynkiston and Acolmfelde’ in Peeblesshire. He is probably the William who witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh in 1390. He obtained lands near Peebles from David II, and is referred to in 1396 as ‘of Gledstanes and Cocklaw’. This ‘Coklaw’ is believed to have been in Lanarkshire, and gave its name to the tower built later near Hawick. In 1396 Sir William Inglis was granted the Barony of Manor, except for the lands there that he possessed. He married Margaret Turnbull (said to be daughter and heiress of John Turnbull), acquiring other lands near Peebles (specifically Hundleshope), as well as in Selkirk and at Robertson. His sons were John, Thomas and James. In 1430 Margaret resigned her lands of Robertson to her son Thomas. William (15th C.) recorded in 1432 as a witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. Although no other designation is given for him, he must have been an important local laird at the time, probably connected with Cocklaw. William (15th C.) one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus in 1489 to infest Robert Elliot of Redheugh in certain lands. The others were William Ker of Mersington, Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and William Elliot of Gorrenberry. His relationship to other Gledstains is unclear. He may be the William who in 1500, along with Bartholomew and George, witnessed a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton. It is possible that they were connected with Kelso Abbey. William of Arthurshiel (d.bef. 1565) possibly a younger son of James of that Ilk and Cocklaw. He appears to have been the first Laird of Arthurshiel in Peeblesshire, and ancestor of Prime Minister W.E. Gladstone. William (16th C.) son of John of Cocklaw, who is recorded in a document of 1576. It is possible that he is the ‘William of Flecks’ who signed the 1584 bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Wardens, his name being listed along with other local Gledstains. William of Dod (16th C.). In 1627 his daughter Eupham married John Rutherford of Capehope. This could be an error for ‘Walter of Dod’. William (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter (or perhaps his younger brother), he was 15th of that Ilk. He is recorded as a baptismal witness in 1642 and as Laird in 1663, when he was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1663 he also had sheep stolen from his land by John and Walter Glendinning. He was further recorded as Laird of Gledstains in 1663 when he paid Land Tax for £1240 for property in Cavers Parish. Perhaps the same William owned teinds and lands (valued at £130) in Makerstoun Parish in 1643, 1663 and 1678. He was succeeded by James, presumably his son. He was probably also the ‘deceased Gladstains of that Ilk’ whose daughter Margaret married William Murray in Edinburgh in 1693, the ceremony being carried out by John Langlands, former minister at Hawick. He may have married Elizabeth Wishart or Margaret Riddell. It is possible that Robert (mentioned as being ‘of that Ilk’ in 1704) was a younger son, and that he was also father of Esther, who married Robert, son of James Rutherford, surgeon in Jedburgh. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Stewart and their son William was baptised in 1671. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Wishart and their children included: Isobell (b.1671); William (b.1673); and Margaret (b.1676). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (17th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1673). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Gledstains and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1685. William (1674–1703) son of Walter the Town Clerk. He left Hawick at 15, eventually working as overseer in a Barbados plantation, where he died. He may be the William, ‘student’, who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1682. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the William listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He witnessed bapisms for tailor James Turnbull in 1705 and 1709 and for merchant Michael Scott in 1709. In 1711 he (along with fellow tailor Alexander Hislop) witnessed a baptism for carrier William Rae. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Douglas in 1698. William (17th/18th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is separately listed from the tailor, and so presumably was a different man of the same name. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobell Porteous in 1700. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Henderson and their children included Margaret (b.1707) and Robert (b.1712). The witnesses in 1712 were Walter Elliot and Walter Graham (probably the Bailies). He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as ‘workman’ in 1708 and 1721 and ‘workman in whitla’ in 1709. He married Bessie Scott in 1703. Their children included: John (b.1706); William (b.1708); Walter and Janet (b.1709); Helen (b.1712); Helen (again, b.1714); and William (b.1721). Margaret (b.1707), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his child. The witnesses in 1708 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel, in 1709 were Dand and James Gray in Whitlaw and in 1721 were weavers David and John Miller. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included Jean (b.1709) and Robert (b.1712). He may be the same William whose wife was Mary Wilson and whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included: Agnes (b.1718); William (b.1720); and James (b.1722). William (17th/18th C.) son of Hawick carrier John. In 1713 he was cited in the Session book for excessive drunkenness, the minister having ‘found him vomiting in his drunkenness in ye Churchyard’. He apparently acknowledged his faults on his knees and promised to live temporarily thereafter. But the following year he was back before the Session ‘rebuked...

for his frequent drinking and wasting his father's substance by Ryoting and reveling' and was further threatened with imprisonment by the Magistrates. This is one of the earliest records of a habitual drunkard in Hawick! In 1717 he was rebuked for openly fighting in the street with his wife and father, and told that if he did not refrain from drunkenness he would be sent to the Bailie, who would then send him to the Circuit Court for harsher punishment. In 1714 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Purves. Their children included: John (b.1717); Jean (b.1718); Euphan (b.1721); and Helen (b.1724). Marion (b.1715) may also have been his daughter. William (17th/18th C.) described as being 'of Kirklands' in 1721 when his daughter Jean married gardener Robert Ker in Hawick. His lands could have been Kirklands in Wilton Parish, or one of the other local places of the same name. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as witness in Hawick in 1719 when his daughter Sara had a child with her husband James Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Brockie in 1726. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Mary Baldie and their children included: Robert (b.1738); Mary (b.1739); Helen (b.1741); and William (b.1743). The witness in 1743 was smith Thomas Huntly. William (18th C.) ploughman at Braidlie on Hermitage Water, recorded in 1750. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Nichol in 1754. William (18th C.) married Catherine Riddell in Hawick Parish in 1759. He was living at Chapelhill when his children were baptised in Robertson Parish in 1762 and 1763. His children included: Henrietta (b.1761); James (b.1762); Robert (b.1763), probably the Robert who married Mary Scott in 1788; and an unnamed daughter (b.1769). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Betty Riddell in 1773. William (18th/19th C.) listed as innkeeper in Hawick in 1791 when he paid the cart tax. It is unclear where his inn might have been. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Hoscotteshiel in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Harwood. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, having 3 working horses. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bowanhill Roadside (at Teviothead), listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area, son of Robert and Mary Scott. He married Elizabeth Davidson. Their children included: Robert (b.1812), married Mina Nichol; Mary (or Marion, b.1814), who married William Paterson; Walter (b.1817), married Jane Easton; James (b.1821), married Jennie Edgar; Margaret (b.1825), married Robert Hall; Catherine (b.1827), married a Mr. Rose; and William (b.1830), married Helen Pringle. The baptisms were in Roberton Parish, when he was at Vales for the first 2 and at Parkhillhaugh for the next 3. In 1840 the family emigrated to Canada, settling at Nithvale, across the River Nith from Ayr, Ontario (note that the spelling varies in older records, including 'Gladstain', 'Gladstaines', 'Gladstains', 'Gladstanes', 'Gladstanis', 'Gladston', 'Gladstones', 'Gladstons', 'Gladstoune', 'Gladstaanes', 'Gladstanes', 'Gladstanes', 'Gladstains', 'Gladstanes', 'Gladstens', 'Gladstaines', 'Gladstains', 'Gladstanes', 'Gladstanes', etc.).

the Gledstains (thu-gled-stänz) n. once prominent local family, being the most common former spelling of the name 'Gladstone'. The origin of the name is probably related to the Old Scots 'gled', meaning a kite. The family had its roots in Lanarkshire (the original lands being a few miles north of Biggar), acquired land in Peeblesshire and then moved its main centre to the Hawick area, with lands in Kirtkon and Cavers and principal residence at Cocklaw. Cocklaw Castle (at Ormiston, but never more than a minor tower house) was involved in the 1403 'Siege of Cocklaw'. In 1509/10 the lands of John Gledstains of that Ilk within the Barony of Cavers included Coliford, Ormiston, Dod and Giddenscleuch, and it was said that he had a charter of confirmation from King David (which must have been from the mid-14th century). 'Little Gladstain at need' led Hawick men at the 1575 Raid of the Redeswire. A member of the family sold Stobs estate to the Eliotts in 1580. A major branch, connected directly to the Gledstains of that Ilk and Cocklaw, was the Gledstains of Whitlaw and later Hilliesland. They provided Town Clerks to Hawick for about 110 years with only minor interruptions (1673–1783). The family also provided Cornets in 1714 and 1744. The Cocklaw estate included Orchard and Hummelknowes, and the family held it until 1734, when the last Gledstains of the Ilk died. The burial aisle of the Gledstains of Cocklaw was pulled down by the heritors sometime in the 18th century. Branches of the family also held lands at Dodd, Coliforthill and Adderstone Shiel. They farmed at the Flex and elsewhere, and had property at 80 High Street, as well as a town house in the Mid Raw. The local Gledstains lost much of their lands in the 18th century, and then the name died out, but descendants undoubtedly remain in Hawick. Another branch, of Craigs and Kelwood in Dumfriesshire, also died out in the male line. Meanwhile the Arthurshields branch flourished and produced William Ewart Gladstone, who became Prime Minister. The family aisle in old Cavers church was abandoned, but was located where a set of steps leading to the gallery was built. The family motto is ‘Fide et virtue’ (with faith and valour), which was engraved on a sundial belonging to Francis of Whitlaw, bearing the date 1693. The original arms feature a savage’s head dripping blood, with a bonnet of bay and holly leaves. The papers of the Douglasses of Cavers include many documents relating to the Gledstains of Cocklaw, beginning in the year 1530.

The Gledstane Bible (thu-gled-stin-bul) n. Old family bible in the Museum, once belonging to Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland, Town Clerk of Hawick. It is a ‘Beza’ Bible, Geneva edition, dated 1601. It contains many handwritten entries relating to this once important local family. The bible came into the hands of Catherine Cheyne, a servant of the family, then passed to her nephew, William Smith (cutlet in Hawick), then to Andrew Irvine (merchant in Hawick), who presented it to the Burgh. James Wilson described it in 1858 and J.A.H. Murray transcribed many of the entries in 1878.

Gledstane’s Lands (gled-stinz-lawnz) n. Former name for a small piece of land near Hunthill and Lanton. The lands appear to have been held by George Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1466. They formed the dowry of Lilias, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw, when she married Richard Rutherford in the latter part of the 16th century. It was ‘Gladstanis-part de Langtoun’ in 1510 when Ninian Glendinning had a charter for the Barony of Scraesburgh. In 1536/7 the ‘ten merkland of old extent lying in the town and territory of Langtoun called Gladstanislands’ when listed as the exception to the lands in the Barony of Scraesburgh infested to John Rutherford of Hunthill by Ninian Glendinning of that Ilk. In 1685 the succession to the Ruth-erfords of Hunthill estates included the Barony of ‘Scraisburgh alias Hunthill, exceptis 10 mercatis terrarum, antiqui extensus, vocatis Gledstanes Lands’. It seems likely that this was the same piece of land later called Hunthill and owned by the Gledstains of Dod.

Gledstone’s (gled-stinz) n. Gladstone’s mill at No. 10 Union Street, being adjacent to the corner of Union Street and North Bridge Street. The site had been James Brand’s ‘New Academy’ in the mid-19th century. The mill closed in the late 1970s and was converted to a warehouse, used by N.G. Thomson. It was then converted to Blonettes bar, but was demolished after the concrete house on the corner burned down.

Gledstone Street (gled-stin-stree) n. Gladstone Street in the West End, built in 1878, and named after Prime Minister William Ewart Gladstone. The first buildings were 2 large houses and 2 small cottages on the south side. In 1897 J.P. Alison designed a tenement at No. 20.

Glen (glen) n. Rev. Alexander (1726-1805) son of James, minister of Dirleton, he studied at Edinburgh University and was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1749. He became minister at Kirkton in 1751, but was translated to Galashieils in 1757. He then became minister of Dirleton (like his father) in 1769. He married Ann Blackadder (who died in 1830) and their children were James (who became a Church of England minister), Katherine, Elizabeth, Barbara (who married John Wilson in Edinburgh), John, Alexander (who became a solicitor), Nisbet (who became a naval commander), Ann and Walter. Jean (18th C.) last person to stand in the pillory at the Mercat Cross. She lived in Needle Street.

Glendinning see Glendonwyn
Glendinning (glen-di-nin) n. Adam Fitzhugh of Glendinning (13th/14th C.) probably the first of the family to use the designation ‘of Glendonwyn’ or Glendinning. He was an important man during the reign of Alexander III. He had a charter around 1286 from John Macgill for lands in Clifton and Morebattle. He may have married Agnews, daughter of Sir John Towers. He was succeeded by his son Adam. Adam of Glendonwyn (13th/14th C.) probably a descendant of the Fitzhugh family. He held many lands under the superiority of the house of Douglas. He had a discharge of 1313 from Archibald, Lord of Galloway, for all his past feu-duties. In 1320 he had a charter from King Robert for part of the duties from Roxburgh Castle. In 1325 he was confirmed in the lands of ‘Fallhope’ in Roxburghshire, these possibly being ‘Phaup’. He may have married a daughter of Wauchope of that Ilk and was succeeded by another Adam. Adam of that Ilk (d.1363). He held lands in Ewesdale and elsewhere, with the Earl of Douglas being his superior. These generations are confused, and it is unclear how many separate Adams there were. He may be the Sir Adam who married Margaret Douglas, daughter of Sir John of Lothian and sister of Sir James of Dalkeith (although accounts differ, and she may have been wife of a different Adam). He is probably the ‘Ade Glendon’ (also transcribed as ‘Glentoun’) who forfeited lands in the town of Roxburgh, which were granted to Henry Ashkirk in about 1362. His children included: Sir Adam, who succeeded; Sir Simon, who died at the Battle of Otterburn; Matthew, who became Bishop of Glasgow; Thomas; a daughter who married a de Mundaville; and another daughter who married Thomas de Moffat. Sir Adam (d.c.1397) son of Adam and Margaret Douglas, daughter of Sir John Douglas of Lothian. His grandfather was probably Adam FitzHugh of Glendowyn, who first adopted the ‘of Glendowyn’ appellation, and his brother Matthew was Bishop of Glasgow. However, these early generations are unclear. In a rental roll c.1376 (among the charters of the Douglases of Morton) he is ‘Domino Ade de Glendenwine’ and listed as holding the lands of ‘Eskdale Mur’ and ‘Le Baly’. About 1380 he witnessed a charter for Henry of Swinton. He is recorded as ‘de Glendonwin’ in 1389, in a charter confirming the lands of Wauchope to Alexander of Wauchope. He acted as general receiver for the Earl of Douglas’ rents. In 1385 he received a charter for the feu-duities of Scarborough. He was an envoy to the English court and also travelled to Picardy in France. He obtained charters for many lands, including ‘Easter Fawhope’ (probably ‘Phaup’, either in Ettrickdale or near Mossapaul) and Brecallow in Dumfriesshire. In 1390 he was a witness of the confirmation of the lands of Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. A 1391 charter of Archibald, Earl of Douglas, dated at Glendonwyn, describes how the Earl was mortifying certain lands in the Barony of Hawick in order to found a chapel in Westerkirk, and directing him to arrange this. He may have married Margaret Douglas, but this could be confusion with an earlier generation. He was married to Wauchope’s daughter Margaret and was to succeeded to the lands if there were no other heirs; this appears to have happened. His children probably included: John, who died at Homildon Hill; Sir Simon, who married Mary, daughter of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas; William; Adam; Matthew; and Robert, in Annandale. Adam (15th C.) received a cow in the will of Sir David Scott of Branhxolme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Ade Glendonwyn’. Mark and Margaret were also listed. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Turnbull and their children included William (b.1686).

Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hume and their children included John (b.1682). Adam (17th C.) listed at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls, although his name is crossed out and he is then listed among the ‘deficient’. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Blackburn in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Groundistone in 1698. He married Margaret Preacher in Ashkirk in 1696 and their children (baptised in Wilton) included: John (b.1698); and Margaret (b.1699). The witnesses in 1698 were George Scott and Thomas Preacher (surely related to his wife). He may be the Adam whose daughter Jean married John Gledstains in Hawick in 1717. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1718. His children included: Bessie (b.1704); John and William (b.1715); and Agnes (b.1718). Helen (b.1707), baptised in Hawick, may also be his child. Adam (18th C.) possibly the son of William, born in Roberton in 1734. In 1765 he is recorded as shepherd at Mains in Liddesdale. He married Agnes Crozier. He had 4 sons: the eldest, William (who married Mary Elliot), being a shepherd; and the youngest, Adam (b.1762, who married Elizabeth Crook), a soldier. Adam ‘Slow Adam’ (d.1808) carter in Hawick. He married Isabel Roger, who died just 3 weeks after him. They had a daughter, Margaret (1770–75), who is buried at Borthwick Waas. Probably the same Adam was recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same Glendinning shown as owner of lands on the south side of the west-end of the High Street on Wood’s 1824 map (even although deceased by then). Either, who married John Rieve in Howcleuch, may have been his son (since she is buried next to his daughter). Adam (1762–1851) son of Adam and Agnes Crozier, born in Castleton. He was a soldier, although it is not known which regiment he originally served in (but it may have been the Scots Greys). It is said that he served all over Europe, although family tradition also says that he never served abroad. In 1805 he was Cornet with the Royal Wagon Train, becoming Lieutenant to the 9th Royal Veterinary Battalion in 1806. He was in the party for Lord Nelson’s funeral. He retired on full pay to settle back in Newcastle on. In 1841 he was at about 5 Langholm Street and listed as ‘Lt. Army R. Vet. Bat. H.P.’ His wife was Elizabeth and their children included: Thomas, who served in Canada with the Royal Wagon Train; Mary (b.1804), who married John Grieve of Branxholme Braes; and Isobel (1805–92), who married James Inglis. It is possible that he was the servant at Harden and Myredykes in...
Glendinning

Glendinning, who predeceased his father and had descendants including the eldest, Adam, whose 4 sons were all shepherds in the Jed and Rule valleys. Their children included: Helen (1829–1915), who married Walter Kitchen; William (1831–1911), who married Anne Kyle and died at Gatehousecote; Peter (1833–1904), who emigrated to Canada, worked as a miner and is buried in Ross Bay Cemetery, Victoria; Adam (1836–1920), who emigrated to Victoria, Canada; Mary (b.1838), who had a daughter, Margaret; Margaret (b.1838), who lived at Shankend; Janet (1840–78), who married James Temple Robson; John (1842–1907), who died at Westshields; Ninian (c.1844–98), a shepherd in Northumberland; Agnes (1846–90), who died in Oregon, U.S.A.; Walter (1849–1928); Isabella (b.1851); and Elizabeth (b.1852), who married George Rutherford. He died at Tweedhead.

Adam (1806–1865) son of John and Margaret Hatlie, he was baptised in Castleton Parish. He moved to Liverpool, where he was a soap manufacturer. He married Agnes, daughter of William Glendinning and Mary Elliot. Their children were: Mary, John, William, Mary, Robert, Adam, James and Randle. Adam (1855–1935) son of William, he was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Colterscleuch and elsewhere. He married Eliza (1855–1941), daughter of James Scott and Janet Cavers. He is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. They had a daughter Janet (b.1879).

Alexander of that Ilk and Parton (d.1616) son of John. In 1562 he inherited the lands in Liddesdale that had belonged to his grandfather Ninian, according to a document from James, Earl of Bothwell. He was a witness to a bond of caution in 1585. He married Alison, daughter of Alexander Gordon of Troquhane and secondly Nicola, daughter of Robert Herries of Mabie. His children included: John, who pre-deceased him; Robert, who succeeded; Simon, who died young; and William, who predeceased his father and had descendants who went to Ireland. Andrew (b.1800) probably son of Walter and Elizabeth Park, he was born at Glendinning, Westerkirk. He became shepherd at Craikhope where he is recorded in 1851. In 1837 he married Jean, daughter of Andrew Anderson, who was for 50 years shepherd at Glendinning. Their children were: Andrew, who emigrated to New Zealand, where he called his farm ‘Glendearg’; Thomas, who was in the county police; and William, shepherd at Kiddle Hill, Eskdalemuir, whose son Andrew was shepherd at Ruletownhead. Andrew (b.c.1815) son of William, he lived at Ashkirk Mill and was a mason. In 1834 he won the foot race at the Common Riding Games. Andrew (19th/20th C.) son of William, who was shepherd at Kiddle Hill, Eskdalemuir, and grandson of Andrew, who was shepherd at Craikhope. He became shepherd at Ruletownhead, and had 3 brothers who were also shepherds. Archibald of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded in the Circuit Court of 1622 when he was cautioner for his brother Andrew. He also appeared, along with John Graham of ‘Thicksyd’, as caution for ‘Lancie Glendinning, now in Dryff’ (formerly tenant in Logan), as well as ‘Hob and Andro Glendonnings in Logane’ (also in Riddings and Hudshouse, respectively). Archibald (17th C.) resident at ‘Julian’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was surely related to John, who was also listed there. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He married Margaret Glendinning and their children included: George (b.1689), born in Ashkirk Parish; and John (b.1702), born in Hawick Parish. Archibald (19th C.) joiner in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households in 1838-41. Bartholomew (d.c.1503) eldest son of John of Glendonwyn and Parton. He was witness to Alexander Home becoming Bailie of the Lordship of Eskdale in 1495. He witnessed a charter for Gordon of Lochinvar in 1501. He and his brother Simon were killed by John Lindsay of Wauchope when he was discharging his duties as Sheriff by attempting to arrange for one third of the lands of Wauchope to go to the widow of Lindsay’s father. Lindsay was executed for this crime in 1505. He probably died about the same time as his father, and his brother Ninian succeeded. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar. David (1860–1942) son of William, he was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Hawthornside and elsewhere. In 1883 he married Margaret Martin (1863–1934) from Canonbie; she died at Lurgiescleuch. Their children were: Matthew Martin (1883–1967), who also worked as a shepherd and married Agnes Skilling; Annie (1885–1964), who married John Easton;

William (b.1886), who died in infancy; Elizabeth Agnes (1888–1983); William (again, 1891–1975), who married Mary Jane Easton; Robert (1893–1934); Adam (1896–1976); Margaret Jane (b.1899); and David Martin (b.1903). Ellen (17th/18th C.) said to be an elderly member of the Newcastleton Burgher congregation in about the 1810s. She was the last hold-out for the practice of reading each line before singing psalms in church. When the change arrived, she claimed she had gotten the better of the Session by not joining in, but reading and singing the lines later at home. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Turnbull and their son Robert was baptised in 1710, with witnesses Andrew Davidson in Newbigging and Thomas Davidson. George (18th/19th C.) carrier at Hummelknowes. He is recorded in a list of men volunteering in 1803 to fight against the French. He could be the George who was living at Lower Calaburn in 1841, aged about 65, and listed as ‘Independent’. Henry (18th C.) hired at Braidlie (on Hermitage) in 1750, probably as an assistant shepherd. James (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Burgh, in Cavers parish’ in 1684 when he was listed as a fugitive among many others for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was presumably tenant at Brugh and probably related to shepherd John, who was recorded at Brugh in 1694. He may be the ‘John in Brough’ whose will is recorded in 1684 (although the first name is incorrect, the match of the dates is probably not a coincidence). James (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in South-field’ in 1684 on a long list of men declared as rebels for refusing ‘the Test’. James (17th C.) tenant in Stobicote on the 1684 list of men declared rebels for being Covenanters. He was listed separately from James in Southfield and James in Brugh. James (17th C.) shepherd at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hareth Tax records of 1694. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Robert Stewart in Wilton in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as herd at Hawick Shiel in 1703. His children included Christian (b.1703), with baptismal witnesses Bailies George Martin and Robert Wright. Margaret (b.1701) was probably also his child. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Birneyknowe in 1716. He probably married Bessie Glendinning in Cavers in 1711 and had children Ann (b.1713), Isabel (b.1716), Thomas (b.1718) and James (b.1720). James (17th/18th C.) sheep- herd at Falmash. His son John was baptised in Hawick Parish (probably at Caerlenrig) in 1720. James (b.c.1704) farm worker, born at Whitchesters, probably son of John. He lived there for 41 years and later moved to Hawick. In 1761 he was one of 3 men chosen to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft in order to regularise it. He could be the James who married Bessie Rule in Hawick in 1721, both of them being described as ‘in whitchesters’; their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included Janet (b.1724), James (b.1727), John (b.1731), Robert (b.1735), Betty (b.1737) and Walter (b.1743). He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for James Dodds (in Whitchesters) and Jean Glendinning (perhaps his daughter) in 1758. James (18th C.) resident at Broadleeshiel in 1729 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Telfer and their son Robert was baptised in 1772. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Jardine and their son James was baptised in 1776. James (18th C.) resident at Outersideshiel in 1775 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Laidlaw and their children included: Betty (b.1757); Margaret (b.1761); and Adam (b.1766). The witnesses in 1766 were Charles Rutherford and John Richardson. Elizabeth (b.1760), with mother’s name given as ‘Margaret’ Laidlaw, was probably also his child. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier John Richardson in 1764. Adam is probably the son of wright James who died in Hawick in 1787. He could be the son of James and Bessie Rule baptised in Hawick in 1727. James (1749/50–1823) married Margaret Brydon, who died in 1839, aged 83. She may have been daughter of William Brydon, born in Et- trick in 1756. His wife died at Gair (probably the one on Tima Water) and he died at Glendinning, They are buried at Borthwick Waas. He could be the James, son of Thomas, baptised in Roberton in 1748. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1769 he married Jane Telfer and their children included: Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). He may be the James, junior whose unnamed child died in 1781. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Headshaw Mill, recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (b.1775/6) from Nichol Forest in Cumberland, he was a tailor in Newcastleton. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 10 South

Hermitage Street, He married Esther Kyle and they had children William (also a tailor), Margaret and Esther. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Girnwood. In 1808 his child was baptised at Deanburnhaugh. He married Margaret Scott and their children (mostly baptised in Robertson) included: John (b.1808); Mary (b.1810); Robert (b.1813); and James (b.1815), baptised in Lyne and Megget Parish. James (19th/20th C.) son of William, who was shepherd at Kiddem Hill, Eskdalemuir. His grandfather Andrew had been shepherd at Craikhope, where he also worked as shepherd. James (19th/20th C.) law clerk in Hawick who was Cornet in 1909 and Secretary of the Common Riding Committee in 1925. He served for many years as Master of Ceremonies for the Common Riding. He was also Callants’ Club President in 1934 and Club Treasurer for 20 years. John of Glendonwyn and Parton (d.1503) son of Sir Simon. He possessed large amounts of land, including Glendinning, Clifton, Scraesburgh, Brecallow, Wauchope, Westerkirk and Langholm. He is probably the Laird of Gledingin who was fined in 1494/5 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1495 he was superior of Scraesburgh when the west half of the town there was inherited by George Rutherford. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert, Lord Maxwell of Caerlaverock. He secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of William, Lord Sinclair. His children included: Bartholomew, the eldest, who was killed by John Lindsay of Wauchope; Ninian, who succeeded; Simon, also killed by Lindsay; Adam, father of John of Bishopton; and Janet, who married Gilbert Grierson, 2nd of Lag. He may be the same man as John of that Ilk if the year of his death is incorrect. John of Glendonwyn and Parton (c.1510–c.60) son of Ninian, from whom he inherited lands in Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbright and elsewhere. He may be the ‘Domino de Glendunwyn’ who heritably held the lands of Riddelton (15th/16th C.) described as Coroner of Eskdale in 1507/8 when he gave licence for Robert Erskine to be infefted in the lands of Dalgleish. He could be the same man as John of that Ilk if the year of his death is incorrect. John of Glendonwyn and Parton (15th/16th C.) described as Coroner of Eskdale in 1507/8 when he gave licence for Robert Erskine to be infefted in the lands of Dalgleish. He could be the same man as John of that Ilk if the year of his death is incorrect. John of Glendonwyn and Parton (15th/16th C.) tenant at Lodgegill in Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1755, aged 81. John (17th C.) shepherd in Brugh listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to James, who was declared a fugitive in 1684. John (17th C.) resident at Julian in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was surely related to Archibald, who was also listed there. John (17th C.) tenant at Westburnflat in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) cooper in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficiencys’ of the Parish. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living Whitchesters in 1704. He married Helen Scott in 1701 and their children included James (b.1704).
Glendinning

and Esther (b.1707). The witnesses in 1704 were William Bell in Whitchesters and Robert Rodger. John (17th/18th C.) elder of Hawick Kirk. He is recorded in 1717, along with Andrew (presumably also Glendinning) being charged with collecting monies from Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenc-wick, Alton Croft and Closses, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He is probably the John who was tenant in Whitchesters when he wit- nessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1723. John (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. His wife’s name was also Glendinning (although no fore- name is recorded for her) and they married in 1753. Their children included: William (b.1754); Margaret (b.1756); an unnamed son (b.1759); Helen (b.1765). Andrew (b.1759) was probably also his son. The witness in 1759 was John Laid- law. John (1747–1819) born in Cavers Parish, son of Robert. He was a shepherd, who died at Commonbrae and is buried at Teviothead. In 1786 he is recorded at Caerlenrig Righead. He married Isabel Miller and their children included: John (b.1783); and James (b.1786). John (18th C.) recorded at Todrig Mill in 1781. He married Beatrix (or ‘Beattie’) Scott in Robertson in 1780 and their children included: James (b.1781), bap- tised in Robertson; Katherine (b.1785), baptised in Bowden; and Janet (b.1788), baptised in Bow- den. John (b.c.1780) agricultural labourer at Appletreehall. He was listed among heads of house- holds in 1835–41. His wife was Agnes. John (18th/19th C.) carter in Newcastleton. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. He could be the resident of Castleton of that name who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (b.1810/1) son of William, he was a mason in Ashkirk. In 1851 he was living at Haughhead Cottage in Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Eliza (from Edinburgh) and their children included: William; John; Mary Ann; and Andrew. John (b.1858) son of William and Helen Jackson, he was born in Teviothead Parish. He worked as a shepherd at Wellhaugh in Northum- berland and in Robertson Parish. He married Margaret (1867–1909), daughter of Mary Glendinning (with the father’s name unknown), and grand- daughter of shepherd Adam. Their children were: Helen (b.1891); William (b.1895); Mary (b.1897); Margaret (b.1901); John (b.1902); and Walter (b.1905). Margaret (15th C.) bequeathed a cow in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. She is recorded as ‘Margarete Glendowyn’ and Adam and Mark are also listed. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as liferenter of Stouslie and another farm (probably Boonraw) in Hassendean Parish, valued at £291. She was probably the ‘Mary’ of Dod and Whitlegill (pos- sibly daughter of George of Dod) who married George of Synton and Boonraw. She was probably also the ‘Lyfrenter of Boonraw’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. It is unclear when she died, but her son George Scott of Boonraw was owner of the same lands in 1678. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Outerside, recorded among the poor of Wilton Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mark (15th C.) received a cow and 2 bulls of victuals in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Marco de Glendonwyn’ and Adam and Margaret are also named. Matthew (d.1408) 2nd son of Adam de Glendonwyn of Glendonwyn. His mother was grand-niece of Sir William Douglas, ‘the Flower of Chivalry’ and his brother Sir Simon was killed at Otterburn. He held the benefice of Cavers Parish from 1376, which was void by the death of John Ganon. At this time he was said to also hold a Canony of Glasgow, with the expecta- tion of a Prebend. He was appointed Bishop of Glasgow by Pope Clement VII in 1387, suc- ceeding Walter Wardlaw, and serving until his death. He also served as ambassador to Eng- land. In 1401 he introduced a new tax in the Diocese of Glasgow. He died at his manor of Lochwood near Glasgow. Note that there was dispute in the church at the time, with an alter- native Bishop (John de Framysden) appointed by Pope Boniface IX in 1391, but never recognised in Scotland. Matthew (14th/15th C.) recorded as ‘Matheo de Glendonwin’ when he witnessed the 1420 charter for the half barony of Branx- holme, passing from the Inglis’s to the Scotts. Ninian of Glendonwyn and Parton (d.1541) son of John of Parton. He succeeded after his broth- ers Bartholomew and Simon were murdered by John Lindsay of Wauchope. In 1503 he granted a precept of sasine for George Gledstains in the lands of Gladstanes in Roxburghshire. He was confirmed in the Barony of Scraesbourgh in 1510, and other lands in Dunfriesshire and Roxburgh- shire in the following years. In 1528 he resigned Clifton and Scraesbourgh to the King, in favour of himself and his wife. In 1530 he was superior of Scraesbourgh, when John Rutherford resigned his lands into his hands, and then he regranted them. He married Janet, daughter of Sir John Dunbar of Mochrum, and possibly also Kather- ine, daughter of John Maxwell, Lord of Caerlave- rock. He was succeeded by his son John. Ninian
Glendinning

(1806–84) son of William and Mary Elliot, he was born at Shaws in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd at Plashelets in Northumberland. In 1836–38 he was listed as shepherd at Willwbog, England, among heads of households in Castleton Parish. In 1840 and 1841 he was at Kidd’s Linn. In 1827 he married Margaret Little (1797–1841) in Westerkirk and their children were Helen (b.1827), William (b.1828), Mary (b.1830), John (b.1831), Janet (b.1833), Mina (b.1835), John (again, b.1837) and Agnes (b.1840). He secondly married Mina Turnbull (1810–93) and their children were Isabella (b.1847), Agnes (b.1847), Margaret (b.1848), Joan (b.1850), Adam (b.1853) and Robert (b.1856). He died in Bellingham.

Ninian (1855–1941) son of shepherd William, he was born in Teviothead Parish. He worked as a shepherd in Northumberland. In 1879 he married Hannah Robson, daughter of Richard Brown and their children were Richard Brown, William and Annie Brown.

Peter (1863–1956) son of William and Ann Kyle. He was a shepherd, like his father and brothers. He was at Wormsleuch in 1881. Richard (15th/16th C.) Sheriff in Edinburgh who confirmed in 1505/6 the summons served to George, Master of Angus for payment to Sir William Douglas of Cavers for breaking their marriage agreement. He is recorded as ‘Richard Glendunwyne’. It is unclear how he was related to the other Glendinnings.

Robert of that Ilk and Parton (b.1585) son of Alexander. He became heir in 1606 after his older half-brother died. He had extensive lands in Ewesdale and Eskdale. He married Margaret, daughter of William Maxwell, Lord of Terregles and was succeeded by his son John. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622 as tenant in ‘Logane’ and also Hudshouse. Archibald in Fiddleton and John Graham in Thickside acted as cautious for him, Lanie in Dryff and Andrew in Riddings.

Robert (19th C.) recorded as ‘residenter’ in Newcastleton in 1835, on a list of male heads of families. Scott (b.1806/7) born in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Boghall. He was listed among heads of households as a mason at Boghall in 1835 and then had his entry deleted in 1840, but was added as ‘Glendinning Scott’ in 1840 and 1841. His mother was Isabella Murray and his wife was Elizabeth. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 55 acres, employing 2 men. He was still recorded at Boghall in 1868.

Sir Simon (d.1388) son of Sir Adam of Glendowyn. He was younger brother of the next Sir Adam, and older brother of Matthew, who became Bishop of Glasgow. In 1368 he witnessed a charter at Cavers for lands being resigned by Thomas Baliol. He died at the Battle of Otterburn, fighting alongside his superior, the Earl of Douglas.

Sir Simon (c.1378–1437) of that Ilk, son of Sir Adam and nephew of Matthew, bishop of Glasgow. He succeeded after his elder brother John was killed at Homildon Hill. He held considerable lands, including those of Wauchope and parts of Ewesdale. He also held the hereditary office of Bailie of the Regality of Eskdale. He was said to be a strong ally of the house of Douglas, helping to keep peace on the Border in the Earl’s lands. He travelled to England several times in the early 1400s, and was a hostage for the Earl of Douglas in about 1408. In 1406 he had a charter of the lands of Wythyn, Glencross and others in Roxburghshire. In 1407 he was witness to the charter for the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was one of the witnesses to the charter of 1435 transferring lands within the Barony of Hawick from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He married Mary, daughter of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas and Margaret Stewart, daughter of King Robert III. He was succeeded by his son Sir Simon. Other children included: John, who settled in England; Bartholomew, who was Chaplain at Westerkirk, but deprived for non-residence; Janet, who married Gilbert Grierson, 1st of Lag; and Hawise.

Sir Simon of that Ilk (15th C.) son of Sir Simon and Mary Douglas. He was said to be greatly esteemed by James II. He was hereditary Bailie of Dumfriesshire. In 1442 he witnessed a charter for lands in Ettrick held by Melrose Abbey. In 1443 he witnessed a confirming charter for William Cranston of Crailing. He witnessed a charter relating to lands in Ettrick in 1446. In 1449 he was one of the guarantors of the peace treaty with Henry VI of England, and he also guaranteed peace several times in the 1450s. He had a charter of income from Auld Roxburgh in 1450 and another charter of lands in Kirkudbright in 1458. He witnessed a charter for James II in 1451 and was on an assize for the Douglasses in Dumfries in 1451/2. In 1452 he witnessed the creation of the Barony of Kilmours for Alexander Cunningham, while on an expedition into England led by James II. In 1454/5 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn. In 1455 he was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls for Roxburghshire. In 1456 he witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell and in 1458/9 a charter for the Barony of Parton in Kirkudbrightshire. He also served as Bailie of Eskdale in the late 1450s. In 1459 he was one of the witnesses.
to the regranting of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig, made in Perth. By 1464 he was designated 'of Parton' when he was again a guarantor of a treaty with England. In 1465, as Lord of the Barony of Scraesburgh, he granted the west half of Scraesburgh and all of Hunthill to Robert Rutherford of Chatto and his wife Margaret. He married Agnes Hepburn and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Alexander Lindsay, Earl of Crawford. He may also have married Marjory Johnstone. His children included: Simon, who pre-deceased him; John, who succeeded; Alexander, probably progenitor of the Drumrask branch; Archibald; Matthew, who held the lands of Whitslade, Glenkirk, etc.; and Margaret, who married Robert Rutherford of Chatto. Simon (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. It is unclear how he was related to the other Glendinnings. He may be the same Simon who produced a remission (along with William Grahamslaw) at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Thomas (14th) recorded as witness to an instrument for the Hospital at Polmadie in about 1391. He was a ‘scutifero’ for Glasgow Diocese. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Glendynwyn’ when he witnessed a letter of acquittance for George Scott of Whames in 1510/1. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Glendyynyng in Harrot’ (i.e. Harwood) when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1631. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberston Parish. He was at Hoscostiesiel in 1756 and Outersideshiel in 1763 and 1766. He married Jean Heatlie in Robertson in 1747. Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded at Outersideshiel on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (1751/2–1831) shepherd at Blackcleuch. He is buried at Teviothead. In 1786 he married Mary Weir (d.1848). Their children included: Mary (b.1787); Robert (b.1789), who died aged 19; William (b.1795); Christian (1798–1881), who married Jessie Purdom; and Betty (b.1800). Thomas (b.1795) son of Adam, who came from near Newcastle. His father served in the Royal Wagon Train, and obtained for him a cornetcy in the same corps when he was 18. He fought at the Battle of Waterloo. He became Lieutenant, and was transferred to the American (or 60th) Regiment, serving in Canada. Thomas (b.1845) son of Andrew and Jane Anderson. His father was shepherd at Craikhope, where he was born. He became a member of the county police force. Thomas (b.1853) son of shepherd William, he was born at Redmoss in Castleton Parish. He worked as a shepherd at various farms in Northumberland. In 1877 in Ewes he married Nicholas (1858–1930), daughter of William Murray and Agnes Bell. Their children were Ellen, William, Thomas and John James. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their son James was baptised in 1609. Walter (17th C.) resident of Coliforthill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William was listed right after him and so surely related. Walter (18th C.) married Janet Irvine in Hawick Parish in 1707. Walter (18th C.) married Catherine Corbet in Hawick Parish in 1710. their daughter Jean was baptised in 1712. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Goldielands in 1712. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included Jean (b.1732). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Lunn and their children included: Helen (b.1772); and James (b.1773). Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hummelknowes Mill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter (b.c.1785) roadman and labourer living at Lees in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–1841. His wife was Elizabeth. Walter (1849–1928) son of Adam, he was born at Tweedenehead in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd like his father and several brothers. He lived in Northumberland, Langholm, Southdean, etc. In 1885 he married Jane (b.1859), daughter of James Turnbull and Margaret Ewart. He died at Hobkirk Manse Cottage. Their children were: Margaret (b.1885); Adam (1887–1917), who served with the K.O.S.B. and died in Israel; and James (b.1889), who died in infancy. William (14th/15th C.) Subdean of Glasgow in 1413/4. He was probably related to the noble Glendinnings. William (14th/15th C.) witness to a document for the Diocese of Glasgow in about 1465. He must have been associated with the Diocese, and was probably the William, Rector of Crawfordjohn, who witnessed other records about the same time. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded being ‘called Lord in the Cruikis’ among

He was recorded as a head of household for the first (and only) time in 1836. William (b.1809/10) son of William, he was a tailor in Newcastle, like his father. He was recorded in 1841 and 1851 at about 10 South Hermitage Street. He was absent from the 1861 census. William (1830–1911) eldest son of Adam and Margaret Robson, he was born at Boghall in Liddesdale. He worked as a shepherd, like his father and many other family members before him. He married Anne (1830–1918), daughter of David Kyle, farmer at Broadlee in the Borthwick. Their children, born at Boghall, Wormsley and elsewhere in the Parish were: Adam (1855–1935), shepherd at Colterscleuch; David (b.1857), who died in infancy; David (1860–1942), shepherd at Hawthornside; William (b.1862), shepherd at Hundalee in Jedwater; Peter (1864–1956), shepherd at Wormsley and Gatehousecote; and Margaret (1867–1939). He died at Gatehousecote and his wife at Cleughhead, Southdean, and they are buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (b.1862) son of William and Ann Kyle. Like many of his family members before him, he worked as a shepherd. He lived in Castleton, Morebattle and Southdean Parishes. In 1897 he married Agnes (b.1871), daughter of William Hardie. Their children were: Hardie Bain (1900–54); William (b.1902); Margaret (b.1905/6); and Ann Kyle (1909–32), who married Robert Cromarty (formerly ‘Glendonwyn’) and variants, such as ‘Glendennon’, ‘Glindenin’, ‘Glindenenn’, ‘Glendining’, ‘Glendinnyn’, ‘Glendinwin’, ‘Glendinwyn’, ‘Glendonewing’, ‘Glendoneway’, ‘Glendonyn’, ‘Glendonowyn’, ‘Glendonwyne’, ‘Glendonyng’, ‘Glendunning’, ‘Glendunwin’, ‘Glendun wyn’, ‘Glendynwyn’, and ‘Glendenwyn’.

Glendivan (glen-di-vin) n. former lands in Ewesdale, near where the Glendivan Burn meets the Ewes Water. Along with Flask and Howgill it was described as a 10-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It is probably the ‘Glendorane’ (likely a transcription error) and ‘Glendovan’ listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 368 acres, bounded by Howgill, Sorbie, Kirkton and lands of the Laird of Arkleton. The map shows farmhouses on both sides of the burn, some parts of the farm on the other side of the Ewes Water and a small area of the farm owned by the Laird of Arkleton. John Irving and Robert Armstrong were there in 1797. William Irvine was farmer there in 1841, his son John taking over later. There were also Eastons living there in 1841. A little further up the burn from the farmhouse are remains of 2 settlements (not to be confused with Glendonwyn in Meggatdale; also sometimes ‘Glendiven’; it is ‘Glendowane’ in 1550 and ‘Glendovan’ in about 1610; it is ‘Glendoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Glendowein’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, ‘Glendoven’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and confusingly ‘Glendonwyne’ on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Glendonwyn (glen-don-win) n. old form of Glendinning, the family name coming from lands in the upper Meggat valley. There was formerly a tower there, with remains still visible in the mid-19th century, on the south side of the Poldovick Burn, a few hundred metres south of the modern farmhouse. There was once an antimony mine here. There are several nearby earthworks and enclosures. In 1669 Walter, son of Robert Scott of Harwood, was served heir
Glendouglas Glenny

Glendouglas (glen-dug-lis) n. lands in the Jed valley, off the A68 south of Jedburgh, at the northern extremity of Southeimed Parish. The big house was once home of the factor for the Home family. There was formerly a private school there, which eventually became a state primary school and closed in 2005 (also written ‘Glen Douglas’).

Glenhowe (glen-how) n. knitwear manufacturers at Buccleuch Mills on Green Lane in the 20th century.

Glenkerry (glen-kee-ree) n. farm on the Tim Water, where it is joined by the Glenkerry Burn, on the B709 south of Ettrick village. In 1415 the lands were swapped for those of Bellendean, between Scott of Buccleuch and the monks of Melrose. The lands are specifically referred to as ‘Wynzehope called Glenkery, west of the water of Tenay’. Scott of Tushielaw paid rental to Melrose Abbey for these lands in 1557 and the half-land there was still held by Scott of Buccleuch and the monks of Melrose. The lands were part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. John Rutherford of Edgerston owned the lands in 1802 (it is ‘Glenkery’ in 1235/6 and 1415, ‘Glenkeyrie’ in 1564 and ‘Glencarie’ in 1620; ‘Glenkyrry’ and ‘Glenkirry’ are both marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Glenmac (glen-mak) n. knitwear company with a factory up the Cross Wynd and another part on Teviot Road, which had been Walter Wilson’s. The factories closed in the 1980s when taken over by Dawson International. A smaller cashmere-based factory remained at Burnfoot, associated with Barrie, but carrying on the Glenmac brand.

Glennie (gle-ne) n. George (19th C.) resident engineer of the Hawick branch of the North British Railway, living in Melrose. In 1849 he was charged, along with an Edinburgh contractor, with culpable homicide in the deaths of 8 railway workers who died when the Roxburgh viaduct collapsed.

Glenny (gle-ne) n. Charles James (1871–1961) second son of James. He was born at Deanfield in Hawick. He worked with the family firm of Wilson & Glenny, and for many years was Managing Director, retiring in 1936. He was known as a tennis player, recorded 1891–1908. He was Border Champion on more than one occasion, won the Scottish Northern Championship in 1894 and was runner-up in the Scottish Championship in 1904. He married Ilfra Showell and they had 4 children: Elsie Ilfra Muriel (b.1899); Arthur Philip (b.1904); James Esme (b.1905), who was Cornet; and Eileen Ilfra Wilson. He died on his 90th birthday. Elizabeth see Pringle (20th C.) daughter of John Douglas Pringle and Susan Roberts. She was Cornet’s Lass to Riddell Innes in 1931, married him the following year. They moved to London to work for Pringle’s, but her husband died in 1963 and she emigrated to New Zealand in the late 1960s, where she married Jim Glenny (who died in 1983) in 1970. George Crosfield (b.1878) youngest son of James and Georgina Waterhouse. He trained as a lawyer, and practiced for a while in Carlisle, in partnership with a Mr. Mawson. He later emigrated to New Zealand, where he became a successful sheep farmer. He married Catherine Anne (“Cathy”) Pringle, daughter of Walter. Their children were James Douglas, Mary Catherine and Margaret. James (1836–1914) partner in Wilson & Glenny’s, who gave the Town its Public Baths in 1912. He was born in Mill of Lethenty, Aberdeenshire, only son of John and Katherine Wilson. Like his parents he was a Quaker. He was the last private owner of the corn mill and farm of Lethenty in Aberdeenshire. In 1865 he moved to Blackburn in Lancashire, where he went into business as a cotton spinner, with his cousin, John William Cruickshank. Health problems forced him to sell his business and move abroad for the winter of 1873. He returned to England, to start a cement business in Chester. He was consequently briefly in a partnership with London concrete pioneer Charles Drake (who was responsible for the Congregational Manse), although the business, based at Thorlieshope, folded in 1875. But also in 1875 he was invited to become a partner in a tweed business with his uncle George Wilson and 2 cousins, Charles John and George Murray Wilson; thus was born Wilsons & Glenny. In 1891 it became a limited company under the name Wilson & Glenny, Ltd. In 1867 he married Georgina Waterhouse (1844–1923). They had 4 children: John (1868–1919), who worked for the family firm; Charles James (b.1871), who was for a long time Driector at Wilson & Glenny; Elizabeth (1875–90), who died while still at school; and George Crosfield (b.1878), who became a lawyer and moved to New Zealand. He had the house at Bucklands extended in the latter part of the 19th century and died there. James Esme (b.1905) son of Charles James. He was Cornet in 1927 and lived at Deanfield. His 1926 Delage car still exists.
Glenpyet

He also flew aeroplanes. John (1799–1844) from Kinnuck, Aberdeenshire, son of James and Elizabeth Wigham. The family can be traced back to John, who was born in 1641 at Mill of Colihill (also Aberdeenshire). In 1833 he married Katherine, daughter of William Wilson, Hawick manufacturer, and must have been a regular visitor to Hawick. Their children were: Elizabeth (1835–45); James (1836–1914), who became partner in Wilson & Glenny’s; and Mary Ann (1838–1917), who married John Charles Wilson. John (1868–1919) eldest son of James. After leaving school he entered the family firm of Wilson & Glenny. However, he retired from the business while still quite young. He married Helen Borthwick and their children were: Barbara (b.1899); Katherine (b.1903); Phyllis Mary (b.1905); and Evelyn Georgina Wilson. Mary Ann (1838–1917) sister of manufacturer James, and son of John and Katherine Wilson, she was born in Mill of Lethenty, Aberdeenshire. She married Charles John Wilson, partner of her brother. Her children included Hawick Provost George Heron Wilson. She died at Deanfield.

Glenpyet (glen-pl-i’) n. former name for lands in the Yarrow valley. They were Crown lands in the late 15th century, split into 3 steadings, the middle one being leased to Thomas Dickson of Ormiston in 1479. In the 1480s they were leased by Robert Lauder, William Inglis and Thomas Dickson. The Middlestead of Glenpyet was referred to as ‘Wallacehill’ in 1486. They were still Crown lands in 1502 when half was held by David Inglis. They were feued by the Murrays in the early and late 16th century. In 1541 they were valued at £24. They belonged to the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the 16th century. They were feued by the Murrays in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It may correspond to the modern Glenrief (it is ‘Glenrauchane’ in 1506 and 1509/10, ‘Glenrauchan’ in about 1610 and ‘Glenrichen’ in 1663; it is probably the ‘Glegachan’ marked near Eweslees on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Glenvoran (glen-vō-rin) n. former lands within Ewesdale, between Eweslees and Fiddleton. The lands held the special feudal status of ‘free tenandrie’ and may have been connected with the lands at ‘Ewes Doors’. There was once a fortified house there, with ‘Hobbie of Glenvore’ marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map and also marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map just north of Fiddleton. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10. It was among a set of lands in the Ewes valley that were transferred from Simon Armstrong to George, Lord Home in 1525. This was confirmed when the King revoked a set of charters relating to lands of the Homes in 1535, including this and several other parts of Ewesdale. ‘Hobbe of Glenvorane’, an Elliot, is also recorded. ‘Archie Elliot, sone to Ringanis Will Elliot the portar in Glenvoren’ is recorded in 1579. Probably the same Archie Elliot ‘of Glenworren’ signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens; his name was first among the Ellietts of Ewesdale, suggesting some prominence of Glenvoran at that time. Robert Elliot from there was declared a fugitive in 1606. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It may have been near the modern cottage of Fiddleton Bankend where sometime around 1900 a ‘piece of very substantial masonry’ was found while digging a little to the west. There was formerly a mill there (also written ‘Glenvorane’, ‘Glenvoren’, etc.; it is ‘Glenvoren’ in 1506 and 1535 and ‘Glenvorran’ about 1610; it is ‘Glenvorran’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Glesci (glez-kì) n. a variant of Glesgi – ‘Well, Aw got back ti the auld country right enough after a favourabe passage and landed in Glesgae’ [JEDM], ‘Some ministers in Glesca thocht it was a ‘subtle peril’. Hab can hardly wait’ [DH] (also spelled ‘Glesca’ and ‘Glescae’).

Glesgi (glez-gì) n. Glasgow, Scotland’s largest city, approximately 80 miles from Hawick. Population (1991) 662,954. Hawick, and the rest of Peebleshire, Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire belonged to the Episcopal Church Diocese of Glasgow from sometime around 1100 until transferred to Edinburgh in 1888. For a long time Teviotdale was one of the rural deaneries of the Diocese. In the 1960s Hawick (like many other towns) made an agreement to build housing for families from the Glasgow area, to solve a problem with the over-expansion of Glasgow, known as the ‘Overspill Programme’ – ‘Next hail thee, Glasgow! Three times hail! To flourish mays’t thou never fail, But ever nobly cock thy crest As the metropolis of the West’ [AS] (also spelled ‘Glesgi’; Teries often speak about going ‘throwe ti Glesgi’).

Glesgi (glez-gì) n. (Glasgow) John (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenantanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys, which killed about 200 men. William (17th C.) presumably related to John, he was also a banished Covenantanter who escaped from the 1679 shipwreck. However, most of those who survived were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica or New Jersey. William (17th C.) tenant in Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

Glesgi Jimmie (glez-gì-mìe) n. itinerant street performer of the mid-19th century. He used to sing Scottish songs in a tenor voice on the High Street, sometimes visiting for several weeks at a time. He is also referred to as ‘Gleska Jamie’ – ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie lits a sang Tae Shauchles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI].

(b.1832/3). Valentine ‘Val’ (1827–1911) English stockingmaker, born in St. Margaret’s, Leicestershire, son of Valentine. He was an experienced maker of needles for hand-frames, learning the trade from his father. He came to Hawick in the mid-1800s and was one of the main men who introduced cricket to the Town. He was listed as ‘Valentine, jun.’ as a needle-maker on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Hope in Hawick in 1847, and she died in 1913, aged 87. The couple celebrated a golden wedding anniversary. Their children included: Elspeth (b.c.1850); Thomas (b.c.1854); Allan (b.c.1856); and Sarah (1857–1941), who married Baillie Andrew Landles. 4 of their children died in infancy. He is buried in Welloagate Cemetery.

the Gododdin (thu-go-do-din) n. tribe who inhabited the south-eastern part of Scotland during the Roman and post-Roman period, with capital at Edinburgh, and who spoke Brythonic. They were previously known as the Votadini and the Romans also referred to them as the Gadeni. A commemoration of one of their battles (Caltraeth) exists in the epic poem ‘Y Gododdin’. Hawick was probably included in their area, although the boundaries are very uncertain.

the Gods (thu-gødź) n. upper circle seating in a picture-house or theatre, generally the cheaper seats. In Hawick this gallery level was particularly popular with youngsters in the hey-day of the cinema at the ‘Wee Thea’.

gog (gój) n., arch. the mark in a game of pitch and toss or quoits (noted by J. Jamieson).

gogar (gō-gar) n., arch. whey boiled with oatmeal (noted by J. Jamieson).

goldie (gól-dee) n. the goldfinch, Carduelis carduelis – ‘The cage-bird, auld Gowdie, Comes whurrin’ and friskin’, Lichts on my shooder And nibbles my lug’ [DH] (also gowdie).

Goldie (gól-dee) n. David (17th C.) joint tenant with James Mitchelson of the farms of Ettleton and Millholm in 1632. His name was spelled ‘Goudie’. Elliot singer born in Hawick. He studied at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama, and has sung with the Scottish Opera Chorus, as well as compereing several tatoos. He is the singer of ‘Songs of Teviotdale’ and ‘Callant’s Song’ on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Tviotdale in Song and Poetry’.

Goldielands (gól-dee-lindz) n. farm with tower, set in a prominent position overlooking the confluence of the Borthwick with the Teviot. The lands were possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch since 1446, when they exchanged half of Branxholme and neighbouring lands with Inglis of Manor for some in Lanarkshire. William, son of William Scott of Goldielands was recorded in 1493 and George Scott in Goldielands in 1510. The ‘ditch of Goldielands’ formed part of the northern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter. In late 1548 the ‘manis of the landis of Goldland’ are among those that were raided and burned by a group of Kers, Englishmen and others, complained about in a summons by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; 200 ‘thraves’ of barley, along with corn cattle and other goods were lost. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 254 acres, bounded by Crumhaugh, Hawick Common, Alton Croft, Fenwick and the River Teviot, and with a small part on the north side of the Teviot. The Scotts of Goldielands were an offshoot of the Scotts of Branxholme, who were important in the Hawick area for several generations. The tower was probably built mostly in the 16th century, and is now a ruin on the farm. Probably its most famous resident was the first Laird, Walter Scott ‘the Laird’s Wat’, who took part in the Raid of the Redeswire and whose son Walter was probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596; his tombstone is preserved in the Museum, and was part of a family vault located below the steeple in the northern aisle of the present St. Mary’s Kirk (later used as the furnace chamber). Tradition says that the last Laird was hanged from his own gateway for stealing cattle; however, there is no evidence of this. Walter Scott of Goldielands lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £566 13s 4d in 1643. The family history in the 17th century is murky, but we are helped through the existence of a complaint made in 1672, preserved in the Melrose Regality records. The Scotts of Goldielands eventually failed to have a male heir, and their lands were inherited by the Scotts of Crumhaugh, except for the estate of Goldielands itself, which returned to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1627 the farm is described as a ‘neuer payit ferme’ (i.e. never having been rented to a tenant), estimated to pay ‘100 lbs. in stok, parsonage 3 bolls, vicarage 7 lbs. 10 sh.’ It has been a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch since the mid-1600s. William Lyne was a tenant there in 1642. There were Elliots living there in the 18th and 19th centuries. Andrew Riddell was there in at least 1702-08. John Elliot was tenant there in 1713. In 1706 the title Baron of Goldielands was created (among others) for Henry, son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. A plantation to the west of the tower is probably quite old, and is shown clearly on the 1718 drawing. In 1788 the estate of Scott of Goldielands was recorded as having been valued at £400, and by then owned by the Duke of Buccleuch – ‘He pass’d the Peel of Goldiland, And cross’d old Borthwick’s roaring strand’ [SWS].

‘Does the blaze rise on Goldielands?’ Walter of Braxholme grasps his brand, and calls upon his gallant band – ‘For Hawick ride’ ... ’ [WiS]. ‘But to the story that’s afloat, I’ll tell it while ‘tis green: Near Goldielands, within the wood, A heidless man was seen’ [TCh], ‘O, I maun gang doon by Gowdlands To’er, Where the Teviot wails i’ the wintry rain ... ’ [FGS].

Goldielands Cottage (göldi-landz-ko’-ej) n. cottage on the farm of Goldielands. There were Armstrongs there in the latter part of the 19th century.

Goldielands Toor (göldi-landz-toor) n. tower on the farm of Goldielands. It is a typical 16th century peel tower, built in a useful location as a watch-tower to protect Braxholme. The tower is approximately 10 x 7 m, with 5 stories, and formerly had a parapet walkway. In lay-out and construction, it is similar to Burnhead Tower, and was the model for Westburnflat Tower in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Black Dwarf’. There is a view in Grose’s ‘Antiquities of Scotland’ from 1789, showing the tower in good condition and with an adjacent barmkin, although the details may not be factually accurate; it shows a walled enclosure with the large tower (along with a couple of small outbuildings) in the south-west corner, and another tower in the south-east corner. There is now no evidence of the wall, although a mound may indicate where the second tower stood. The towers may have once been called ‘Speed o fit’ and ‘Tranty fit’, who were also said to be 2 witches who lived there. The main tower is now a fairly well preserved ruin on the farm of the same name, attached to more modern farm buildings. Many original features survive, such as fireplaces, doorways, corbels and an aumbry. Tom Scott’s painting of the tower is in the Museum. It is a grade B listed building.

Goldielands see Goldielands

gol-dlocks (goil-docks) n. the wood crow-foot, Ranunculus auricomus – ‘... appears its sister species the Galdilocks (R. Auricomus) with tender stem, elegant leaves, and large golden blossoms’ [JAHM] (‘galdilocks’ is probably a misprint).

Golf Course Park (g/olf-k/=ors-pawrk) n. name for the field lying adjacent to the golf course, just to the east of St. Leonards farm. It is part of Hawick Common.
goller (go-lur) n., arch. a deep, loud growl, a stifled howl, suppressed yell, v., arch. to emit a gurgling noise, to speak passionately and inarticulately, (of a dog) to growl violently.

go’n (go-on) interj., contr. go on, used to express disbelief or encouragement – ‘G’on! = go on!’ [ECS] (also written ‘g’on’).
go’n see go’an
go’nal (go-ne-ul, go-n-yul) n., arch. a sheep that has died of disease, ‘braxy’ mutton – ‘I do not mean the best of you to want meat a week or twa, you have plenty of gonyell and green kail …’ [WSB], a dolt, a loud, empty-headed person (also spelled ‘gonyel’, ‘gonyell’ and variants).
the Gonial Blast (thu-go-ne-ul-blawst) n. severe snowstorm in southern Scotland in early 1794, described by the Ettrick Shepherd (although there is some confusion over whether this is 1794 or 1795). Thousands of sheep were killed, particularly in Eskdale, but also in many other areas. Around 20 shepherds also perished, including William Scott at Priesthaughshiel and one at Sorbietrees. There is also a detailed description by Rev. William Brown of Eskdalemuir, including the progression of the weather from 23rd January onwards, with the fatal day being the 25th; he lists shepherds who perished in neighbouring parishes, and tallies the dead sheep in Eskdalemuir to over 4,000 (the name derives from gonial; also spelled ‘goniel’).
gonterniblicks (gon-tu-ni-blik) interj., arch. an exclamation of gladness (noted by J. Jamieson, who also gives ‘gonternickles’).
gontrins (gon-trin) interj., arch. exclamation of joyous admiration – ‘My gontrins, lass, ye soon will fin’ A wiflu’ man maun hae his way’ [HSR] (also ‘gontrans’; specifically used in Lilliesleaf).
gonyell see gonial
Goodbrand (good-brawnd) n. Rev. Stephen (1921–97) graduated from Aberdeen University in 1949. He was minister at Southdean Kirk (linked with Hobkirk) 1966–72.
Goodfellow (good-fe-lo, -li) n. Adam (18th C.) married Janet Kersel in Wilton Parish in 1788. Adam (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His children included: Robert (b.1795) and Robert (again, b.1796). Alexander Scott (1807–51) son of Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He succeeded his father as tenant at Trow Mill and was later farmer at Headshaw. He was listed as miller at Trow Mills in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1835 he married Isabella, daughter of Alexander Forrest. Their children were: Margaret (b.1836); Hugh (b.1838), who died in Argentina; Alexander Forrest (b.1840), Mill Master at Trow Mill; John (b.1842), who emigrated to Canada and then Washington State; William Forrest (b.1844), perhaps also died in Argentina; Elspeth Scott (b.1846), who married Thomas Laidlaw; Archibald; and Andrew, who died in infancy. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Craik in 1721, 1723, 1725, 1728 and 1733. His children included: John (b.1719); George (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); Helen (b.1725); an unnamed son (b.1728); Bessie (b.1730); and an unnamed daughter (b.1733). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Millsington in 1764 and Girnwood in 1766. He married Ann Scott in Robertson in 1760. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1793. He married Euphan Cavers and their children included Janet (b.1793); and Andrew (b.1796). He may be the same Andrew who married Mary Hobkirk in 1799. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Greenbank in 1800. He married Mary Hobkirk in 1799 and their children included: Margaret (b.1800); William (b.1802); and John (b.1804). Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong and their children included James (b.1822). Andrew (c.1794–1852) probably son of Robert and Helen Lies. In 1818 he married Isobel Young. Their children born in Lilliesleaf include Robert (b.1819), William (b.1821) and Archibald (b.1823). He emigrated to Ontario, Canada. Andrew (1807–85) son of Thomas and Isabella Renwick. He started his working life making sheep drains for Mr. Pringle at Hyndlee. He then moved to the Bairirkine, farmed Swinnie Bar briefly, then worked under James Weaver, forester to the Marquis of Lothian. In 1841 he was recorded as a wood forester, living at Stewartfield Lodge. He became forester at Hartrigge in 1846, living at the Wildcategate.
In 1846 he married Jane Mitchell, from Lanton and she died in 1892. Their children included: Jean; John; Jane and Andrew, who became forester at Abbotrule. He was known for his collection of curiously shaped stones (which after his death were largely bought by Mr. Scott of Queen Mary’s House, Jedburgh). Andrew (b.1849) son of Andrew and Jane Mitchell. He was forester on the Abbotrule estate from 1878. He married Janet Smail from Morebattle in 1873. Archibald (17th C.) tenant in ‘Tuilshope’ (presumably Twislehope) in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Archibald (17th/18th C.) from Cumberland, he was probably son of Hector, the family home being at Redsyske farm in Newcastel Parish. He was a shepherd at Skelfhill. He may have married Mary Scott, daughter of the farmer at Falnash. His son was William, farmer at Adderstonelee. He may have returned to the Newcastel area as an old man to live with his eldest son Hector, whose family lived there for several more generations. He also had a daughter (probably Jean) who married a Scott and had sons William (mason at Falnash Mill) and Robert (shepherd at Merrylaw). Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Euphan Minto in Minto Parish in 1737. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: Janet (b.1737); William (b.1741); Elizabeth (b.1744); and Walter (b.1747). Archibald (b.1727) born in Hawick, son of William and Helen (or Isobel) Scott. He married Elizabeth ‘Betty’ Irvine. Their children included: baker Hugh; and William (b.1752), baptised in Cavers. He may be the Archibald who, along with John, witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas and Christian Goodfellow in 1762. George (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son William was baptised in 1743. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Dryden in 1759 and their children included: James (b.1760); Adam (b.1764); George (b.1766); Alison (b.1769); Robert (b.1772); William (b.1774); and Alexander (b.1779). George (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk Parishes. He married Christian Stoddart and their children included: Agnes (b.1800); Ann (b.1802); James (b.1812); and Robert (b.1816). The first 2 children were baptised in Lilliesleaf and the later 2 in Ashkirk. George (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Betty Marton and their children included: Catherine (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); and George (b.1836). Rev. George (19th C.) from Hawick, he became minister of Newarthill Church, in the Anti-burgher Presbytery of Hamilton, in 1891. George Lamont (1951– ) local songwriter and musician, great-grandson of John Cumming. Born in Hawick and brought up at the Prefabs, he works as a gas engineer. He is the front man for the ‘G.L.G. band’, and was previously in the bands ‘Nemesis’ and ‘Bogard’. An acoustic guitar player, he is also a member of the Tennessee Songwriter’s Association. He wrote the songs ‘Hawick Stands Alone’, and ‘We are the Heart of Hawick’. Gideon (18th/19th C.) originally from Roberton Parish, he is recorded living at Greenbank in 1793 and Whithope in 1795 and 1798. He married Betty Elliot in Roberton Parish in 1790. Their children included: Andrew (b.1792); Jane (b.1795), who married John Elliot; James (b.1798); and Gideon (b.1801). Hugh (1767–1847) prominent baker in Hawick. He was son of Archibald and Elizabeth Irvine. His baker’s shop was at the bottom corner of the Howegate (No. 1, on the Silver Street corner). He also milled flour for a while at Trow Mill and farmed at Greensidehall and Broomiebrae. He was said to be known for his intellect and conversation, and was a keen attendant of Wilton Kirk. He remarked about the new minister (Rev. Stevenson) ‘Oh, he has plenty o’ guid rough stuff in him, and when he comes to a difficulty he dashes in a trowelfu’ o’ lime, and goes on again’. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In Ashkirk Parish in 1793 he married Elizabeth (or Elspeth or Euphemia or ‘Epie’), daughter of John Scott. Their children were: John, Cornet, Bailie and grocer; William, baker; Alexander, miller at Trow Mill; Betty and Hugh (d.1805), who died in infancy; Archibald (d.1811); and Andrew (d.1811). Hugh (b.1838/9) born in Ashkirk Parish, eldest son of Alexander. He was farmer at Trow Mill. He is listed there in 1861 (at the age of 22) as mill master, farmer of 50 acres and employer of 7 people. He was living with his brothers Alexander, William and Archibald and his sister Elspeth. He was there later in the 1860s, but must have emigrated, since he died in Argentina, and his brother Alexander took over at Trow Mill. Isabel (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Wright and their children included: Margaret (b.1680). James (17th C.) resident of Dodburne in Kirkton Paroch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Efflidge in 1710. He was surely related to the earlier James from Dodburn. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Janet (b.1708) and James (b.1710). James (18th C.) servant in Goldilands when he married Janet Hogg in Wilton in 1728, the proclamations also being made in Hawick Parish. Their son George was born in Hawick in 1731. James (18th C.) farmer at Bedrule according to the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Christian Hobart and their children included Walter (b.1805) and Jess (a son, b.1808). Bailie James (18th/19th C.) son of Robert and brother of Robert and John. He was a joiner in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1810s and served as Senior Bailie in 1821; thereafter he was always known as ‘Bailie Goodfellow’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was chair of the meeting when Lord Brougham visited Hawick in 1833. His niece Agnes (daughter of Robert) married Walter Haddon. He married Magdalene (or Margaret) Scott. Their children included: Margaret (1792–1826), who married George Buckham; and Agnes (b.1796), who married Thomas Young, but died aged 20. James (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (18th/19th C.) wright on the Back Row, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map in about the middle of the right side of Drumlanrig Square. He could be the same man as the Bailie. James (19th C.) living at Muirhouselaw in 1841 and in Lilliesleaf in 1851 and 1861. In 1861 he was described as ‘Agricultural Labourer and Grocer’. He married Jessie, daughter of John Fairgrieve, carrier from Selkirk. Their children (baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish) included: George (b.1839); Elizabeth (b.1842); John (b.1845); Christina (b.1849); Helen (b.1851); Janet (b.1855); and James (b.c.1859). James (b.1834/5) born in Edinburgh, he was a ‘Woollen Cloth Finisher’ on Dickson Street in 1861. His wife was Isabella from Stow and their children included Elizabeth, Mary, Isabella and George. Janet (19th C.) listed as a milliner or dressmaker at Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. John (17th C.) shepherd at Milsington according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John whose daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1686. John (17th C.) resident of Briery Yards according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) tenant at Southfield. He was fined in 1677 for ‘abusseeing of the marches of Hawicke marching betuixt John Hardie and him’. He rented half the farm of Over Southfield from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–96. He was also tenant farmer at Over Southfield, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms in 1696 for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for James Story. He and his son William were joint tenants of Southfield around 1710 (as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767). He was listed as being at ‘Southisde’ [probably a transcription error] in 1713 when he witnessed a birth at Branhollomtown. Also in 1713 he and his son William ‘in over Southfield’ witnessed a baptism for William Martin (who was farm servant there). He married Margaret Cook in 1713; he was said to have taken a wife when he was 90 years old, and this may have been that time. He was deceased by 1721 when his widow married tailor William Oliver; they were both at ‘Over Southfield’. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for John Beattie and Helen Goodfellow (presumably a relative) in Hawick in 1673. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Thomas (b.1754); and Jean (b.1756). John (18th C.) married Christian Cavers in Wilton Parish in 1730. He may be the John whose daughter Christian was baptised in Kirkton in 1735. He may also be the John who along with Archibald, witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas and Christian Goodfellow in 1762. John (b.1756) wright in Hawick, probably son of Robert and Margaret Scott. In 1782 he married Janet Deans, daughter of flesher George Deans. Their children included: Agnes (1784–1872), who married Walter Had- don, father of Andrew Haddon of Honeyburn; and Robert (b.1786). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Jane Jardine and their children included: Helen (b.1809); and Andrew (b.1811). Bailie John (1798–1869) son of baker Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He was Cornet in 1822 and was also a Magistrate in Hawick. He had a grocer’s and candlemaker’s business at 1 Buccleuch Street. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is probably the merchant in Hawick listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory at the Sandbed, in 1837 on Buccleuch Street and in Slater’s 1852 directory (as a ‘tallow chandler’) on Teviot Square. He is probably the Mr. Goodfellow whose property is marked there on Wood’s 1824 map. He opened the first public baths and wash-house in Hawick, by the river-side, where Orrock Church... was later built. In 1837 he was involved in a dispute with the ‘Trades and Operatives’ over expenses for the celebration (i.e. the drinks bill) and parade for the proclamation of the new Queen. He was listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as proprietor of the Public Baths at Teviot Square and also listed there as insurance agent for Scottish Provident. He ran the grocer’s until 1857, when it had ceased to be successful and he emigrated to New Zealand. He married Margaret, daughter of John Mercer and Euphemia Scott, and she died in 1838. Their children were: Euphemia (b.1828), who emigrated to New Zealand with her father; Archibald (b.1830), who died young; Margaret (b.1832), who married Walter Hume and later emigrated to New Zealand; Jane (b.1835), who died young; and John (b.1838), who also emigrated with his father. A portrait of him exists.

John (b.1808/9) born in Jedburgh. In 1860 he was living at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish. His wife was Beatrix from Hawick. Their children included: Thomas, Oliver, James, Peter, Robert and William. John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Ann Swanstone and their children included Jean (b.1844). John (1825–1900) son of Robert and Elizabeth Kedzie. He emigrated to Canada, where he was a pioneer in Innisfil Township, Ontario. He married Margaret Cross and secondly Esther McCullough. John Cumming (1834–1917) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Helen Cumming. The family spent some time in Glasgow but moved to Hawick when he was young. He became a publisher at 63 High Street. He was an early member and regular contributor to the Archaeological Society, and a keen temperance supporter. He gave a speech at the 1891 Colour Bussing, including some Common Riding reminiscences. He wrote a memoir of his early life about 1901, which was published in the 1997 Transactions. He also wrote historical articles for the Border Magazine. He married Martha Hain in 1865 and Andrew Hain was their son. He wrote ‘Border Biography’ (1890, based on articles from the ‘Hawick News’), ‘Occasional Poems and Verses’ (1893) and ‘Hawick’s Annual Festival and Other Verses’ (1911), as well as producing the ‘Illustrated Guide to Hawick and Vicinity’ (1898) and the updated edition ‘Goodfellow’s Guide to Hawick’ (1914). He also wrote several short booklets on local history, specifically ‘Hawick myths: No. 1 Gawyn Douglas’ (1983), ‘Hawick and Gavin Douglas’ (1987), ‘Reminiscences of the Hawick Archaeological Society’ (1891), ‘Satchells (A Review) and the Riddell Monument’ (1894), ‘The Common Riding’ (1894), ‘The Bibliography of Hawick’ (1896) and ‘John Casper Leyden: An Historical Retrospective – Explanatory and Critical’ (1903).

In addition he published pamphlets on wider topics, namely ‘The Early History of Scotland, from an Archæological Point of View’ (1881), ‘The Archaeology of Books’ (1882), ‘The Egyptian Question’ (1882), ‘The Present Aspects and Position of the Radical Movement’ (1883) and ‘The Social Life of the People, Politically Considered’ (1892). John (1842–1912) son of Alexander Scott, tenant at Trow Mill. He was born in Hawick and emigrated to Victoria, Canada, then moved to Seattle. He married Florence Agassiz and they had 11 children. Robert (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Beattie and their children included William (b.1729). Other children (baptised in Hawick) who could be his include Bessie and an unnamed son (b.1719). Robert (1715–79) son of William. He married Margaret Scott (1721/2–87). Their children included: Agnes (1748/9–66); John (1756–86), who married Janet Deans in 1782; Robert (b.1759); and James, joiner and Bailie in Hawick. His wife is probably the ‘Widow Goodfellow spouse to Decd. Robert’ whose death is recorded in 1787. They are buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Kedzie in 1768. John (d.1809), son of the deceased Robert, whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish, may also have been his son. Robert (18th C.) farm-worker at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He could be the son of Robert and Margaret Scott baptised in Hawick in 1759; however, based on family names it seems likely his father was James, perhaps from the Bowden area. He married Helen Leis (or Lies) in Selkirk in 1782. Their offspring probably included these children baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish: James (b.1783); Thomas (b.1785); William (1787–1848), who died in North Monaghan, Upper Canada; John (b.1788); Robert (c.1791–1866), who emigrated to Quebec in about 1821; Andrew (c.1794–1852), who married Isobel Young and emigrated to Canada, along with his family and mother; Helen (b.1795), who married John Turnbull; and George (b.1800). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Jenny Biggar and their children included Elizabeth (b.1802).
Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Dodds and their children included Margaret (b.1807). Robert (1790–1880) born at Merrylaw, son of William and Rachel Easton. He farmed at Merrylaw, Gilliestongues and Croslie (near Stow). He later worked on estates in Devonshire, Argyllshire and Midlothian and was Land Steward at Inch Estates, Liberton. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kedie (or Kedzie) of Hawick. They had 6 children: Isabella, who married Andrew Forgie and lived at Newbattle Abbey; Rachel; William, who married Mary Whitaker and farmed in North Wales; Margaret Elliot; John, who emigrated to Innisfill, Canada in 1844; and Archibald, who died in infancy. Roberts (b.c.1805) joiner on Teviot Crescent. His wife was Grace, and their children included Adam C., Janet, Joshua, Robert, Jane and Elliot. Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Mary Dodds and their children included Helen (b.1842) and George (b.1845). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. Most of his children were born in Midlothian. He married Isabella Renwick, who was from Forkins in Rulewater. He was probably a gentleman’s servant, and spent the latter part of his life at Penrith. His son Andrew was forester around Jedburgh. This branch of the family is not directly connected with the Hawick family of J.C. Goodfellow etc. He is probably the Thomas, son of Robert, who was born in Robertson Parish in 1785. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Isobel Renwick (from Jedburgh) and their children included: Andrew (b.1807); Janes (b.1809); Helen (b.1811), who married Thomas Lunn; and Oliver (b.1813). He is probably the Thomas, son of Robert, born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785. Thomas (c.1790–1849) miller at Roughleugh Corn Mill. He was listed as miller there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He is also described as tacksman (i.e. tenant) there on the 1841 census. His wife was Mary and their children included: Mary; Robert; Jane; Janet; and Elizabeth. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Pott and their children included Marion (b.1636), Isabel (b.1639), Janet (b.1642), Janet (again, b.1646) and John (b.1650). William (17th C.) tenant for the Duchess of Buccleuch in Phaup on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th/18th C.) servant to Francis Scott, miller at Wester Burnfoot, he lived at Leaheads in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1707 (and having lately come to the area) when he was called to report to the Kirk Session. He was also there in 1708 and in 1711. His children, baptised in Wilton, probably included: John (b.1708); William (b.1711); and Archibald (b.1713). Perhaps the same William had a second marriage in Wilton in 1718 (with no wife’s name recorded). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Over Southfield along with his father John in about 1710. This was attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1713 he and his father John ‘in over Southfield’ witnessed a baptism for William Martin (who was their farm servant). He may be the William who married Helen (or Bessie) Gledstains in 1711, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Kirkton Parishes. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, probably included John (b.1714), Robert (b.1715), Marie (b.1716), James (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1719). He may have later married Agnes Wright. William (1692/3–1740) son of Archibald, who came from Cumberland to Teviothead, with his mother being a Scott. He was tenant farmer at Adderstonelee. He also had half the farm of Bowanhill, Teviothead, with Archibald Elliot having the other half. He married Isobel Scott (1697–1773) at Sherkhall (listed in Cavers Parish records); she is recorded re-leasing the lands of Bowanhill in 1744. Their children were: Archibald; Andrew, who died at sea; Isabelle; John, wine merchant in London and later Berwick; Robert, whose son William emigrated to Ontario; Hugh, who died young; and William, farmer at Merrylaw. He is buried with his wife in Teviothead cemetery. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Boghall in 1727 and Heap in 1733. He married Agnes Wight. Their children included: Agnes (b.1727); Bessie (b.1728); Esther (b.1731); Robert (b.1733); and William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1727 were Robert and Francis Scott and in 1733 were Robert Easton and Thomas Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: John (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); Janet (b.1766); William (b.1767); Christian (b.1769); and Betty (b.1771). William (1738–1821) son of William and Isobel Scott. He was tenant at Merrylaw for about 50 years. He is recorded there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1773 he married Rachel (1747–1809), daughter of John Easton, from the Damside family in Hawick. Their children were: Euphan, or ‘Euphy’, who went to London and married John Smith; Isabel (b.1778), who married Adam Scott in Westerkirk; Rachel the Good Samaritans (b.1780), who married Thomas Proudfoot, shepherd at Headshaw; William (b.1782), stocking-maker in Hawick; Margaret (b.1781), who married shepherd William Helm; John (b.1788), who died young; and Robert (b.1790), who married Elizabeth Kedzie. Elspeth (b.1776) and Jean (b.1778) were probably also his children. He is buried with his wife in Teviothead cemetery. William (1782–1849) son of William, farmer at Merrylaw and Rachel Easton. He was a stocking-maker in Wilton, listed at Damside among heads of households in 1840. He was on Lower Damside on the 1841 census. He married Helen Cumming in Jedburgh in 1830. Their children were: William, who married Isabella Amour Own and was Schoolmaster in Haddington; John Cumming, bookseller and local historian; Rachel Easton, who married John B. Miles; and Jessie, who died young. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Dodds and their children included Jessy (b.1808), John (b.1809) and Thomas (b.1811). William (b.1799/1800) born in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer, in 1851 was a ‘Roadmaker’ and in 1861 was farmer, all at Curcarwood in Yarrow. His wife was Isabella and their children included Mary, Janet, Andrew, John, James, George and William. William (1806–1890) son of Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He took over his father’s bakery business. He was listed as a baker at the Sandbed on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1837 he is recorded on the electoral roll as tenant of lands of James Douglas of Cavers. He was also listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. However, in 1839 he emigrated to New Zealand with his family. He married Ann, daughter of John Scott. Their children were: Helen (b.1836), who married Samuel C. Baird; Ann (b.1838), who married William Macky; Hugh; John; Euphemia, who married David Scott Robertson; Margaret, who died in infancy; Jane, also died in infancy; William, who died in Oakland, California; Thomas; and James Alexander. William (19th C.) lived at Kirkhope and Dodhead in Ettrick Parish. He was probably son of William and Isabel. He married Margaret Forest and their children included: John (1891–1917), who was killed in action in France; and 2 daughters who lived at 16 Wellogate Place, Hawick, one of them married to a Tucker (also written ‘Goodfalla’, ‘Goodfalo’, ‘Goodfalow’, ‘Goodfallow’, ‘Goodfelew’, ‘Goodfelu’ and variants; note never locally pronounced gid-fe-li).

the Good Samaritans (thu-gid-saw-na-ri’-inz) n. abstinence group which seceded from the Good Templars in Hawick, objecting to paying money into central coffers. They lasted for many years in the latter part of the 19th century.

the Good Templars see the I.O.G.T.

Goodyear (good-yeer) n. Hedley John (1886–1918) teacher and army officer, born in Newfoundland, Canada. He enlisted in 1916 and spent several months in Britain in 1917. He received the Military Cross for gallantry, survived the Battle of Amiens, but was killed by a sniper. When he died he was engaged to Betsy Turnbull who was from Hawick. He became well known for the poignant letter to his mother, which was published and much read in Artimistice and Memorial services.

Gordon (gor-din) n. town and parish on the western side of Berwickshire. There was once a branch line of the Berwickshire Railway here. The ‘de Gordon’ family took their name from the associated barony. It is also the name of the surrounding parish. Greenknoke Tower is nearby.

Gordon (gor-din) n. Alexander (d.1575) brother of George, 4th Earl of Huntly, and nephew of James IV. He was a servant of the Queen Dowager, Mary of Guise and spent some time in France. In 1549 he sent a detailed report of the capture of Ferniehirst Castle by the English from the French. He was Postulate of Caithness and then appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1550. But in the following year the see was resigned to the Pope, following a request from the Scottish Crown. Hence he was Hawick’s Archbishop for about a year. He was then pensioned and given the title of Archbishop of Athens, later becoming Archbishop of the Isles and then of Galloway. He became a Protestant. In 1566 he preached at the wedding of the Earl of Bothwell and his niece, Jean Gordon, and in 1567 he signed the bond agreeing to the marriage of Bothwell with Mary Queen of Scots. Rev. Alexander (d.1785) son of Alexander of Blairtoun, he was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen 1748–52. Licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1768, was presented to Kirkton Parish in late 1774 and ordained there the following year. In 1758 he married Joan Perrie (or Pirrie), who died in 1793. They had no surviving children. Rev. Charles (c.1656–1710) from Aberdeen, brother of John, the Provost of Aberdeen. He graduated from Aberdeen University in 1676 and became minister at Campvere in 1686. He returned to Scotland to land to and had twins to Dunfries and Dalmeny, the latter of which he took up in 1691. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish at the end of 1694 and became minister there the following year. He was offered the Chair of Divinity at Aberdeen University in 1697/8, and the Assembly suggested to translate him in 1698, but refused to accept it. He was described as ‘a learned and holy man of uncommon integrity’. In 1690 he married Rosina Campbell, daughter of the minister of Dunfries. They had 2 sons, George and James, and a daughter, Christian. Charles (18th C.) house servant at Cavers in 1791, when he was working for George Douglas. Eric (20th C.) assistant priest at S.S. Mary & David’s from 1942, having previously been at Portobello. Rev. James Drummond (1870–1944) son of Rev. William and Helen Drummond. He graduated M.A. from Aberdeen University in 1891, B.D. in 1894 and B.Sc. in 1895, when he was licensed to preach. He was assistant at St. Machar’s, Aberdeen, then at Errol. He became Acting-Chaplain to the forces at Aldershot in 1900 and was then Chaplain with His Majesty’s Indian Ecclesiastical Establishment, becoming Senior Chaplain in Bengal in 1921. He was translated to become minister at Bedrule in 1923 and remained until his death. He married Annie Sutherland Gunn (who died in 1955, aged 82), and their children were Nannie Drummond, William Lindsay Drummond, John Gunn Drummond and James Forrest Drummond. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. John (18th C.) house servant at Branxholme in 1794, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie. John (18th/19th C.) Sheriff-officer and constable of Hawick. He is mentioned in the murder case in 1814 which resulted in Hawick’s last hanging. He could be the Sergeant John who was living at Howdenburn in 1841, at about age 80, and described as ‘Army H.P.’ His wife is probably the ‘Mrs. Gordon spouse to Sergt. Gordon’ who died in Hawick in.

the Gordon Airms

1811. John (b.1806/7) sawyer who lived at Howdenburn. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1861 his occupation was listed as ‘Colporteur’. His wife was Ann and their children included Margaret, Thomas and John.

Rev. John (19th/20th C.) assistant to Rev. John MacRae at Hawick Parish Church towards the end of his ministry (around 1890). He was a guest at the 1888 Colour Bussing. He married Alison, sister of J.E.D. Murray. He became a minister in Aberdeen and retired to Edinburgh. Rev. John (b.1878) son of John, the minister of Glasserton and Margaret Bryce. He also had 2 maternal uncles who were ministers. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1902. He was licensed by Wigtown Presbytery in 1905, was assistant at Galston and then ordained as minister of Hobkirck in 1907. He demitted his charge in 1919, later becoming a teacher in North Berwick and obtaining a Ph.D. at Edinburgh University in 1928. He then became minister at Channelkirk in 1927, was translated to Kirkinner in 1931 and retired for a second time in 1943. He married Mary Jane Turnbull in 1923. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1549 as ‘Patricius Gordon’ when he was listed as a tenant, along with Hector and David Turnbull, of the lands of Appletreehall. Ross (1941–) born in Croft Road, he has long been a Common Riding supporter. He went to his first Ride-out in 1959, completing more than 400, including following 51 times consecutively to Mosspaul, as well as attending more than 150 huts. He was President of the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1985. He married Jean, daughter of ex-Cornet Bill Brydon and sister of ex-Cornet Rob Brydon. Their children are Ally and Kirsty. Rev. Thomas (1844–1917) son of the minister of Twynholm, he was educated at the University of Glasgow, graduating M.A. in 1864. He was assistant minister at Bothwell, Scone, Twynholm, Balmaghie and Fenwick. He served as minister at the ‘mission’ church at Saughtree 1877–86. Afterwards he was assistant at Edgerston, where he was minister from 1892. He married Adelaide Dobie. He wrote ‘The Scottish Reformation Movement in the Sixteenth Century’ (1883) and ‘Cred and Civilisation – their Alliance in the Experience of History’ (1905).

Walter (??–??) watchman at Innes-Henderson in the early part of the 20th century. He was well-known for his pieces of babble, e.g. ‘A liner burnt ti the grund in mid-ocean’, ‘A’m brikkin up ma iron bedstead for fire-wud’ and ‘When the man’s deid, he’ll be made for life’.

Gorrenberry

Gorrenberry (go-rin-bu-ree) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, home to a branch of the Elliot in the 15th and 16th century and the Scotts in the 17th and 18th. It is recorded as a 10 merk land in a rental list of c.1376 among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. It has been suggested that this branch was one of the ‘twelve great families’ of Elliots who moved to Liddesdale in the early 14th century. The earliest recorded Laird is ‘Willelmno Elwaldo de goranberry’ in 1484, and in 1489 he was ‘Wilelmo elwad de gounimbery’. The connection between this early Laird and other Elliots is not known. However, the lands appear to then passed to the Elliots of Redheugh. In 1541 Archibald Elliot, 3rd son of Robert of Redheugh was designated ‘of Gorrenberie’ (and was later Laird of Falnash), and the lands were then valued at 10 merks. Archibald’s son William was also Laird, and the last Elliot Laird on record was another William in 1613. The lands then passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch, with John, illegitimate son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch being given the lands in 1629. John Scott held the lands in 1643, when they were valued at £1600; they still had the same value in 1678 and 1707. A payment for the ringing of the bells of Hawick Kirk for ‘Gorenberie’s boril’ is recorded in 1722. The lands were sold by John Scott of Gorrenberry to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. In 1788 the lands were still valued at £1600 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. Robert Laidlaw was farmer there in 1792–97. Michael Anderson was farmer there in the 1820s to 40s, James Anderson was shepherd in 1835 and David Anderson farmer in 1851. William Hislop was farmer in 1868. The motto of the Gorrenberry Scotts was ‘Sperandum’. There was once a tower here, but its precise location is unknown. According to Jeffrey this earlier house was located to the west of the present farm, closer to Bught Shank; however, the rectangular mound there may have been a farmstead. Tradition connects the place with a brownie, called ‘the Cowie’, and John Leyden also invented the beauty ‘May of Goranberry’ – ‘O May she came, and May she gaed, By Goranberry tower; And who was it but cruel Lord Soulis That carried her from her bower?’ [JL] (also spelled ‘Gorranberry’).
Gorrenberry Cottage

Gotterson

Gospatric (gos-pat-rik) n. (11th/12th C.) first known Sheriff of Roxburghshire, and perhaps the first known person holding such an office anywhere in Scotland. He may have been son of Uhtred, who was son of Ulfkill. He owned the lands of Nether Crailing and his grant of the Chapel of Crailing was confirmed in about 1150 (probably after he was deceased). He was also listed as Sheriff when he gave a ploughgate of land in Crailing around the foundation of Jedburgh Abbey, as confirmed in later charters. He is mentioned in the charter for the foundation of Selkirk Abbey around 1120, when he was ‘Cospatrich vicecomite’. He also witnessed a grant to Durham Cathedral around 1126 and witnessed another grant to the church attached to Roxburgh Castle about the same time. There were several other contemporary men of the same forename, and it is not known to what later family he may have been related. One suggestion is that he is the same as Gospatric of Swinton, brother of Colban. Given that he was Sheriff of Roxburghshire, he was probably related to John, son of Orm, who held the same office later in the 12th century.

got (go’, gō’) pp. had, especially as a teacher or similar – ‘A got Ned for Maths’, got called, was named – ‘hei aye got ‘Faggy’ when hei was younger’.

gotten (go’-in, go-tin) pp. got – ‘... or thance A micht never heh gotten off the bit aa day’ [ECS] (this participle form is more common than in standard English).

Gotterson (go-tur-sin, go’-ur-sin) n. George (16th C.) listed among associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers in a court cse of 1541. There were also 2 Johns listed, who were probably related to him. John (16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. They were probably related to George, who was also listed. John (17th C.) listed at Old Jedburgh among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Matthew writer of ‘The Callant’, this probably being James Smail from.
Gotterson’s Innery

Gotterson’s Innery

Jedburgh, and not a pen-name for J.E.D. Murray as once suggested. Thomas (18th C.) resident of the Roberton and Ashkirk areas. He could be the Thomas, son of William, baptised in Robertson in 1713. He married Agnes Murray. Their children included: William (b.1746), baptised in Robertson; and Thomas (b.1748), baptised in Ashkirk. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area. He married Violet Laidlaw. Their son William was born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1800 and baptised in Maxton. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Chapelhill in 1710. His surname is recorded in 1710 and 1713 as ‘Guthrisone’. His children included: Agnes (b.1703); Helen (b.1705); James (b.1710); and Thomas (b.1713). William ‘Wullie’ (b.c.1770) well-known Hawick character of the early 19th century. He farmed near Crumhaughhill, the area sometimes known as Gotterson’s Knowes. He also kept an inn (or perhaps an ‘innerie’) in the ‘Back Raw’. This was a cluster of buildings with a cess pool in the middle that he referred to as the ‘silver lake’. Once when he refused to accept a new tenant on the grounds that there were bugs in his furniture, the Bailie asked him if them were no bugs already at his inn and he replied ‘Aw‘ve ower mony already, and aw dinna want ony mair!’ He was known for his skill at currying horses and cows and volunteered as a driver in the local Militia in 1803. He was mentioned in a story told about beggar John Brown, occurring about 1820. He was a farmer living alone on the Back Row on the 1841 census; Mary, who lived next door, was about the right age to be his daughter. He married Janet Irvine in 1794, the marriages being recorded in both Bedrule and Ancrum Parishes. Their children (baptised in Maxton) included: Mary (b.1795); and Thomas (b.1797). When asked why he turned up to his daughter’s funeral in blue, he replied ‘Aw got her in blue and aw’ll wear ony mair!’. He was a cattle breeder. He was heavily involved in the Parish Council and School Board in Innerleithen. He married and had a son and a daughter (see also Govenlock).

Gould (goold) n. John (1780/1–1857) Hawick framesmith and frameworker, originally from Glasgow. He was involved in an 1834 improvement of the broad stocking frame, whereby two stockings could be made at once. He moved into the basement of 7 Brougham Place when blacksmith Murray vacated his smithy. By 1837 he was listed as a framesmith on the Round Close and by 1851 he was employing 4 men and 2 boys there. He was listed as a framesmith on the Round Close in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Elizabeth Taylor. His children included: Alex, whose wife Isabella Smith, sister-in-law Janet Smith and child John all died of cholera at Allars Crescent; William, who also worked as a framesmith; and Elizabeth. He is buried in Welloagate Cemetery (also written ‘Gold’ and ‘Goold’).

Goupin see gowpen

Gourlay (goor-lee) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 paying homage to Edward I of England. His location is only given as Roxburghshire. However, he (along with Alan de Gourlay) served on a jury in 1303/4 to decide on the succession to Sir Thomas Chartres, Baron of Wilton. So it seems reasonable to suppose that he held lands fairly locally. Other men of the same surname who also paid homage to Edward I in 1296 were from Edinburgh, Berwickshire and Forfarshire. He could be the ‘Ede Gurlay’ whose lands of Rutherford and Maxton were granted by Robert the Bruce to John de Lindsay in 1321. Rev. Adam (1800–81) born at Chesters, near Ancrum, son of James and Margaret Redford. He graduated from Edinburgh University and was licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1825. He became assistant minister at Bedrule and at Lilliesleaf. In 1842 he was presented as minister of Lilliesleaf by James Henry Robert, Duke of Roxburgh. He was Clerk of the Presbytery in 1843 and Clerk of the Synod in 1853. In Slater’s 1852 directory his name appears as ‘Gourlay’. He married Margaret Campbell Baxter (1813–1900), daughter of his predecessor. Their children were: James (1836–99), insurance clerk; Anne Campbell (1837–85), married George Alexander, farmer; David Baxter (1839–1913), farmer; Margaret Redford (1846–1925); Maria Nicolina (1848–93); Adamina Harriet (1852–1924); Adam (1854–88), banker; and Jane Charles Russell Currie (b.1856), married Walter Robert Brodie. Alan (13th/14th C.) served along with Adam on the jury to decide on who inherited the Barony of Wilton in 1303/4. He is recorded as ‘Alain de Gourlay’ and was likely related to Adam. He is probably the man transcribed as ‘Aleyne Gurnay’ on the Ragman Rolls of 1296, where his seal shows a squirrel feeding within two interlaced squares, with the name ‘S’ALANI GORLEY’. Archibald (14th C.) father of John, who was served heir to the lands of Rulewood in 1387. Since John, son of Henry had been granted the lands in 1380, as confirmed in 1390, there may be confusion with dates. These charters are held by the Stewarts of Traquair. Arnulf (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Denholm Mains in 1465/6, when he is recorded as ‘Arnulf Gurlay’. He is probably the ‘Arnald Gorlay’ who was part of an action (along with several other Border lairds) registered with Parliament by John, Lord Somerville in 1476. He is probably the ‘Arnon’ who married Katherine, the daughter and heiress of Alexander Inglis, and hence inherited lands near Branxholme. John of Rulewood was probably his son or grandson. David B. (b.1838/9) farmer at Bewlie Hill. He was listed there in 1861, farming 184 acres and employing 8 people. He was there with his brother James. He was also recorded there in a directory of 1868. Henry (14th C.) granted the lands of Rulewood to his son John in 1380. In 1390 the grant was confirmed by Malcolm of Drummond, Lord of Mar and Garioch, who was Baron of Cavers. James (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobum Gurlau’ when he was on the inquest for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick in 1484. John was also on the panel. John (15th C.) recorded in 1432 as a witness to the instrument of sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. He was also on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. He must have been related to the later John of Rulewood and Arnulf. John (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. James was also on the panel. He may be the same as John of Rulewood. John of Rulewood (15th/16th C.) holder of the lands of ‘Kyrktoun’ in the Barony of Branxholme. He was named on an inquest in 1497/8 (as John Gourlay of Rowlwod’) and was probably also the John on the inquest for succession to the Home lands in 1506. He is probably the ‘Jhon Gourlay’ who was among the men chosen to value the lands of Whithope in 1500. In 1508 he was ‘Johannem Gourlay in Rowlwoide’ on the panel for Adam Hepburne inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was probably the John ‘Gourlaw’ who was on the panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1509. In 1509 he was granted the lands of Rulewood by William, Lord Herries of Terregles. He was already deceased in 1521 when the lands passed to his son John. He was probably son or grandson of Arnulf. John (16th C.) son of John of Rulewood. He is recorded in a sasine of 1521 granted by Walter Scott of Branxholme, for the ‘6 merkland of Kyrktoun’ in the Barony of Branxholme. These lands had passed to the family through ‘Arnou Gourlau’ who married Katherine, daughter and heiress of Alexander Inglis. In 1525 he was served heir to the lands of Rulewood. In 1528 he was probably the John listed among supporters of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus who were called to appear before the King. He is also ‘John Gourlaw of Rowlwood’ in 1533 when part of an inquest at Jedburgh. He may be the John of Rulewood who had a contract with William Turnbull in Hassendeanebank in 1540 (probably not 1640 as recorded in one source). Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. William (14th C.) granted ‘10 merks of lands’ in Chamberlain Newton (probably Groundistone) by William Lindsay of the Byres. The charter is undated, but probably around 1390 (formerly spelled ‘Gorlay’, ‘Gourlau’, ‘Gourlaw’, ‘Gurlaw’ and other variants).

Gourlay Bog (goor-lee-bôg) n. former name for lands in Bedrule. In the c.1795 Old Statistical Account it is recorded that there was ‘a small common near the church called Gourlay Bog, on which the minister of Bedrule was also in use to pasture’. The common was divided some time in the 18th century. It was ‘Gourlaybog’ in 1801, when listed as part of the estates (valued at £14) bought by William Elliot of Wells (presumably related to a former owner called Gourlay).
Goushill

Goushill  (gows-hil) n. area between Todrig Burn and Blindhaugh Burn, to the north of Todrig farm (it is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Govan  (go-vin) n. Joseph (d.bef. 1816) resident of Hawick. He married Elizabeth Laidlaw in 1771 and their daughter Christian was baptised in Hawick in 1772. His wife died in 1816, when his surname was given as 'Gibbons'. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Rae in 1778.

Lawrence of Cardrono (14th C.) Sheriff of Peeblesshire in 1358/9 and probably longer. He was recorded as Warden of Roxburgh in 1373, when King Robert II granted him 100 shillings for ward of the Castle of Roxburgh; the money came out of the rents of Whitchesters, Adderstone, Wilton, Chamberlain Newton and Minto. William of Hermiston (18th/19th C.) he was a glazier in Edinburgh, but was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788. He owned the lands of both Wester Hermiston and Easter Hermiston in 1788. He was further listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 he was listed as owner of Easter Hermiston (whose 2 parts had previously belonged to 'Sinton' and 'Johnson') as well as Wester Hermiston. He was still owner of Hermiston in 1817 (also written 'Govane' and 'Goven').

gove  (göv) v., arch. to wander aimlessly, to stare in a vacant manner – 'Confoondit by philosophy, I gove't at him, he glowert at me, And, Ah, he had an eller ee!' [DH] (also written 'goave'; see also gover).

Govenlock  (go-vin-lok, gow-in-lok) n. Adam (17th C.) local man, referred to as 'in Hoitt' in 1641 when he claimed a white mare that he had found on his lands. Probably the same Adam was witness in 1651 to a baptism for James Scott (b.1789) eldest son of Robert. He married Elizabeth Kidd. He emigrated to Canada (like his brother William), settling at Stratford, Ontario. Among his descendants are Jennie Kidd Trout (Canada's first licensed female medical practitioner) and John Gowanlock (of the Frog Lake Massacre). Andrew (19th C.) married Grace Scott in Wilton in 1846. Andrew (1788/9–1877) born in Yarrow Parish. In 1861 he was 'Retired Farmer Fundholder' at Birkwood on Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as farmer at Calaburn in 1868. He married Beanston Broomfield. Their children George, Robina (or Beanston, b.1837/8), Alice (b.1839/40, who married Robert Campbell) and Margaret (b.1841/2) were born in Poland. He died in Wilton in 1877, aged 89. David (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Elizabeth Stewart in 1867 and their children included Elizabeth (b.1868). Duncan William (19th C.) married Isabella Nichol in Wilton in 1880. Francis (b.1781) son of James and Isabel Cumming, he was born in Hawick Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Branhomelne Park in 1841. He married Sally Sharp in Robertson Parish in 1800. Their children (born in Robertson Parish) included: James (b.1801); John (b.1803–68), a mason; Elizabeth (b.1805), perhaps the servant to the Robertson schoomaster in 1841; Francis (b.1808), also a mason; Isabella (b.1810); William (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); and Walter (b.1825). Francis (1808–86) son of Francis. He was a mason living at Howcleuchshiel in 1841 and at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he married Agnes, daughter of John Lunn; she died in 1890, aged 83. Their children (born at Howcleuchshiel) were: Christian (b.1841/2) were born in Poland. In 1891 he was farmer at Whitehaugh Moor, living with his sister Robina and in 1911 he was at Gala Rigg with sisters Robina and Alice. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Alemoor in 1704. Andrew (18th C.) married to Isabel Porteous. His children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included Christian (b.1745), Adam (b.1747) and John (b.1750). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son James was baptised in 1754. Andrew (18th C.) married to Margaret Riddell. Their children baptised in Hawick Parish included Margaret (b.1763), Agnes (b.1765), Janet (b.1767) and Jane (b.1770). Andrew (b.1789) eldest son of Robert. He married Elizabeth Kidd. He emigrated to Canada (like his brother William), settling at Stratford, Ontario. Among his descendants are Jennie Kidd Trout (Canada's first licensed female medical practitioner) and John Gowanlock (of the Frog Lake Massacre). Andrew (19th C.) married Grace Scott in Wilton in 1846. Andrew (1788/9–1877) born in Yarrow Parish. In 1861 he was 'Retired Farmer Fundholder' at Birkwood on Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as farmer at Calaburn in 1868. He married Beanston Broomfield. Their children George, Robina (or Beanston, b.1837/8), Alice (b.1839/40, who married Robert Campbell) and Margaret (b.1841/2) were born in Poland. He died in Wilton in 1877, aged 89. David (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Elizabeth Stewart in 1867 and their children included Elizabeth (b.1868). Duncan William (19th C.) married Isabella Nichol in Wilton in 1880. Francis (b.1781) son of James and Isabel Cumming, he was born in Hawick Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Branhomelne Park in 1841. He married Sally Sharp in Robertson Parish in 1800. Their children (born in Robertson Parish) included: James (b.1801); John (b.1803–68), a mason; Elizabeth (b.1805), perhaps the servant to the Robertson schoomaster in 1841; Francis (b.1808), also a mason; Isabella (b.1810); William (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); and Walter (b.1825). Francis (1808–86) son of Francis. He was a mason living at Howcleuchshiel in 1841 and at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he married Agnes, daughter of John Lunn; she died in 1890, aged 83. Their children (born at Howcleuchshiel) were: Christian (b.1841/2) were born in Poland. In 1891 he was farmer at Whitehaugh Moor, living with his sister Robina and in 1911 he was at Gala Rigg with sisters Robina and Alice. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Alemoor in
in 1734 and 1742. His children, baptised in Robertson, included Andrew (b.1727), Margaret (b.1730), Jean (b.1732), John (b.1734), John (again, b.1738), Bessie (b.1740), Robert (b.1742) and Agnes (b.1744). Robert (18th C.) married Isabel Park in Robertson Parish in 1747. Robert (1762–1825) lived in Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. He is probably the Robert who was married in Southdean Parish in 1787 (no wife’s name given). He married Betty, daughter of John Oliver and Isabell Scott of Hawick. Their children were Andrew (b.1789), James (b.1791), Robert (b.1794), Jennet (b.1795), William (b.1798) and Walter (b.1802). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Janet Hogg in Kirkton and Hawick Parishes in 1800. Robert ‘Gloomy Wunter’ (1787/8–1861) son of John (a shepherd at Phaup and later innkeeper) and Isabella Scott. He was landlord of the Mosspaull Inn for about 45 years from 1816. His tenure there saw many improvements to the hotel, although the coming of the railway led to its later closure. He also worked as a guard on the Edinburgh to Carlisle mail coach. He was said to have a commanding appearance and distinctive personality. He was also one of the founder members of the Wisp Club, and the first Treasurer. In 1821 he subscribed for 6 copies to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ and in 1825 he did the same things for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He was listed at Mosspaull in the 1841 census. In 1811 he married Margaret, a daughter of James Ruickbie. They had several children, including: Margaret, who married Mark Turnbull; James, who married Minnie Beattie; Elizabeth, who married gamekeeper Alexander Robertson; Robert; John, who married Isabella Nichol, and was grandfather of Cornet William Douglas. Their children were: Robert (1825–1906), who married Jane Armstrong and lived at Brant; Helen (1827–1906), who married and had 1 daughter; Elizabeth Oliver (1829–1907), who married James Rowand, one of the first pioneer residents of Saugeen, Ontario and M.P. for West Bruce, Ontario; Christian (b.1849/50), Mary A. (b.1850/1), Jessie (b.1856) and Margaret Walteria (b.1857). In 1861 his widow was a ‘Farmeress’ of 600 acres at Greenhill, employing 8 people. William Paterson (1789/90–1856) born in Cavers Parish. He was a shepherd, and was recorded living with his brother Adam in Wilton Dean in 1851. William (1798/1799–1888) born at Chesters, son of Robert. He worked as a day labourer in Rule Water. In 1842 he emigrated with his family to Bruce County, Ontario, Canada. In 1824 he married Christian (1801–91), daughter of William Laidlaw and Helen Douglas. Their children were: Robert (1825–1906), who married Jane Armstrong and lived at Brant; Helen (1827–1906), who married and had 1 daughter; Elizabeth Oliver (1829–1907), who married James Rowand, one of the first pioneer residents of Saugeen, Ontario and M.P. for West Bruce, Ontario; Christian (b.1831) unmarried; William (b.1833), born at Yethouse, who married Jane Shanks; Andrew (b.1834), who married Betsy Laidlaw; James (b.1836), who married Mary Hendry; Janet (b.1838), who married Archibald Armstrong and had 6 children; Walter Douglas (b.1839), married Mary Rogan; and John, born in Canada, married Janet Stewart. All except the last child were born in Hobkirk Parish. The family emigrated to Ontario in 1842, where he purchased some land near Brampton, Ontario. They then moved to the Saugeen area in 1851, arriving there by crossing the Saugeen River on a raft, before there were any roads.

Gowans (gow-inz) n. James (1836–1917) lived in Hawick much of his life, but died in Glasgow. He married Isabella Scott Purvis, who died in 1898, aged 55. Their children were: James, who was a schoolmaster in the Outer Hebrides and then in Edinburgh, as well as a fruit grower in British Columbia; George, who had a school in South Africa; another son who was a plumber; Katie, who married Dr. James P.A. Wilson; and Bella. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is recorded as ‘Gouans’. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1720 he was at Roberton Burnfoot, in 1722 at Mains, in 1727 at Parkhill, in 1733 at Mains and in 1743 at Roberton Burnfoot. He married Rachel Main (also from Roberton) in 1719. The following children born in Roberton Parish are probably his (although some may be a separate family): Margaret (b.1720); Isobel (b.1722); Rachel (b.1724); John (b.1727); William (b.1730); Isobel (b.1733); Bettie (b.1735); Agnes (b.1741); John (again, b.1743); and Adam (b.1747). It seems likely he was descended from the earlier John. He is probably the John who married Rachel Main in Roberton Parish in 1719. Joseph (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (also written ‘Gouans’).

Gracie (grä-um) n. Bryce (b.1837) born in Troqueer, near Dumfries. He came to Hawick in the 1870s to work in the hosiery industry. He married Elizabeth Carter and their children were: Agnes (b.1857), who married John Scott; John (b.1859), who married Isabella Scott in Hawick; Isabella (b.1861), who was a midwife who married John Aitkin; Alexander (b.1863); Elizabeth (1865–1953), who married John Broctie Brown; Mary (b.1867), who married John Alfred Scarborough in Wilton; Bryce (b.1869), who married Rachel Cairns in Hawick; William James (b.1871); Janet (b.1873), who married Archibald Aimers; Jessie (b.1876), who married John Stanton; and Margaret (b.1880), who died in infancy. The youngest 3 children were born in Hawick.

Bryce (1892–1939) son of William and grandson of the earlier Bryce. He was a tailor in Hawick. He served during WWI. He later emigrated to California. William James (1871–1937) born in Maxwelhtown, just before his family moved to Hawick. He married Isabella Richardson (1872–1932). Their children were: Mary (b.1895), who died in infancy; William Paul (1897–1917); and Bryce (1892–1939), tailor.

Graham (grä-um) n. Alexander (19th C.) along with John, presumably his brother or son, he was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as an ironmonger on the High Street. Andrew (b.1784/5) born in Canobie, he was a draper at 3 Sandbed. He was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was a Junior Magistrate in the 1820s, recorded in 1828 when the Slitrig (Drumlanrig) Bridge was extended. In 1851 he was a retired draper on Teviot Square, and was listed among the local gentry on a directory of 1852. In Leith in 1821 he married Christian, youngest daughter of John Nixon. Their children included: George (b.1824); Mary (b.1826); Jane Elliot (b.1827); and John (b.1830). Charles (18th/19th C.) described as ‘Yeomanry Trumper’ in 1882 when the death of his infant son is recorded. He presumably played the trumpet for the local volunteers. David (17th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. He rented part of the farm of Raesknowe from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–98. He was also resident at Raesknowe according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Gledstains in Raesknowe. He could be the David, married to Marion Bell, whose children born in Hawick Parish included: twins Bessie and William (b.1671); Robert (b.1675); and Archibald (b.1678). The witnesses in 1671 were John Elliot and John Bell (probably related to his wife). In 1682 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Bell, who was also a tenant at Raesknow.

David (1677/8–1718) preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel of ease’ in 1715, when the church was started for people in the outlying parts of Cavers and Wilton Parishes. This is probably the same as the minister of Langholm from 1705, who was translated to Kirkmahoe in 1716 and died 2 years later. He may have simply travelled from Langholm to Teviothead periodically. He is already recorded in 1714 as ‘preacher in ye meeting house in Carlangridge Chapel’ when recorded as substitute for Hawick’s absent minister. David (b.1807/8) from Selkirk, he was a grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he is recorded on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Mary and their children included John and Mary. Mrs. Elizabeth (19th C.) recorded as owner of part of Howlands, along with Mrs. Agnes Bowie, in the mid-1800s. It is unclear who her husband might have been.

George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Lees in 1747. He married Elizabeth Noble and their children included Helen (b.1744) and Agnes (b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were James Dryden and Adam Armstrong. He may be the George who in 1737 witnessed a baptism for William Nichol, who lived at Stouslie. George (d.bef. 1790) resident of Hawick. His daughter Helen died in 1790. He could be the George who married Helen Fletcher in Wilton in 1754.

George Rome (b.1835) son of John, farmer at Hollows Mill, near Canobie. His older brother Simon trained as a draper in Hawick, with his younger brother John also in the same business, and their older sister Mary having married Hawick draper Walter Armstrong. In 1861 he was a draper’s assistant with Wood, Graham & Co., 6 Tower Knowe. From 1871 he moved to live with his mother’s family, the Dicksons. Hugh ‘Hughie the Graeme’ (16th C.) subject of a Border ballad, it is unclear if he was a historical figure or not. The story is that the Bishop of Carlisle seduced Graeme’s wife, and so he carried out a raid in which he stole the Bishop’s finest...
Graham

Graham, was then captured by Lord Scroope and hanged at Carlisle Castle. There are several different versions – ‘Here Johnie Armstrong, take thou my sword, That is made o’ the metal sae fine; And when thou comest tae the English side, Remember the death of Hughie the Graeme’ [T]. Hutchin ‘Richie’s Hutchin’ (16th/17th C.) Englishman who was declared an outlaw for the murder of Thomas Graham (son of ‘Richie’s Will’) and John ‘Orfeur’ around the end of the 16th century. He was also indicted in England for helping Scott of Buccleuch in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 from Carlisle Castle (being ‘the third man that entered the same’), as well as for theft and raiding (particularly during the ‘Ill Week’) and for speaking against the Queen and King. His brothers William (‘Mickle Will’), George (‘Richie’s Geordie’), William (alias ‘Carlisle’) and Richard (alias ‘Lenox’) were also convicted. In about 1605 he obtained remission for helping in the capture of ‘Sandy’s Ringan’ Armstrong. There are also mentions of ‘Young Hutchin’ around 1606, who may have been his son. He is probably the ‘Hutchon Grame’ listed in a letter from Captain Musgrave in 1583, listing his children as Andrew, Robbie, Arthur and Richie. James (17th C.) footman to Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. James (1612–50) Marquess of Montrose. He was a leader of the Covenanters forces after 1639, leading the army (including the Teviotdale Regiment) which invaded England and captured Newcastle in 1640. He opposed the Solemn League and Covenantant and became the main leader of Royalist forces in Scotland from 1644, including at the Battle of Auldearn, where several local Gladstains and Douglasses fell. However, his men were massacred at Philiphaugh in 1645. He fled to Norway, but was later made Captain-General of Scotland by Charles II. Landing in the Orkneys in 1650 he raised a small army, but was betrayed and handed over to the Covenanters. He was hanged in Edinburgh, his head fixed on a spike and his body quartered and distributed among the Scottish cities. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included: Helen (b.1677); an unnamed child (b.1683); Christian (b.1686). In 1687 a witnessed a baptism for Robert Cook. James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Scott in 1706. The marriage was proclaimed in Wilton in July and in Cavers in August. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1737. He married Bessie Lamb and their children included Walter (b.1737) and John (b.1739). The witnesses in 1737 were John and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Falnash. His wife was Jane Graham and their children included Mary (b.1757) and Betty (b.1758). Sir James R.G. of Netherby (1792–1861) eldest son of Sir James, the first Baronet of Netherby Hall in Cumberland. He served as 1st Lord of the Admiralty. He was M.P. for several different parts of England, including Carlisle 1826–29 and East Cumberland 1830–37. He switched from being a Whig to a Tory in 1835. In 1838 he proposed a motion in the House of Commons to disqualify Hawick from being a polling station for future elections after the Radicals had been harassing Tory supporters at elections. The motion was defeated by only 22 votes. He was present at the banquet held at Branxholme in 1839 in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch. James (1838–97) son of coal-agent William and Janet Turnbull. He was a frame-worker in Hawick. However, he also started his own small hosiery manufacturers ‘James Graham & Son’ (according to his obituary). In 1866 he married Ann Little, daughter of James Kennedy. Their children included: Elizabeth Patterson (b.1866); William (b.1868); James Kennedy (b.1870); Janet (b.1871); Walter Warwick (b.1872); and John (b.1874). James (19th C.) farmer at Braidlie on the Hermitage Water. He is recorded there in 1868. He won cattle prizes in agricultural shows. His daughter Ann Twentyman married Dr. David Somerville Doughty in 1891. James E. ‘Jimmie’ Cornet in 1933, worked as a dyer. He assisted Bill Brydon as Left-Hand Man again after WWII. Jane ‘Jean’ (b.c.1785) grocer on Broughton Place in 1841 and the Round Close in 1851. Her children included: John (b.1807/8), a frameworker, born in Hawick; Thomas (b.c.1815), a watchmaker, born in England; and Elizabeth (b.1816/7), also born in England. She could be the Jean listed as a grocer on Silver Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It is unclear who her husband was. Jean Cunningham (?– ) Lady Polwarth, who wrote ‘Sailor’s daughter: 1928–1946’ (1993). Sir John of Abercorn (d.c.1337) said to have been granted the Soulis family lands in Liddesdale around the time of Robert the Bruce. He had a son, also Sir John, who died without issue. His heiress (perhaps Mary, Margaret or Elizabeth) may have married Sir William Douglas, the Knight of Liddesdale, to whom Liddesdale passed. However, this is all unclear. John (15th/16th C.) probably from Liddesdale. In 1497 he was one of the witnesses for a document dealing with the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He could be he John, brother of Matthew who was listed in the Exchequer Rolls among men of the area around Hawick who were fined in 1501. That John was brother of Matthew in Howpasley, who was surety for himself at the Justice-aiire in 1502 and was fined for non-appearance. John (16th C.) witness in 1550 to a lease granted by the curators of the young James Cranston to his mother Janet Beaton, who was wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Johnne the Grahame’. Probably the same John witnessed a bond in 1548 when some Elliots had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) son of Rob. In 1594/5 he was offered as a pledge for William of Larriston, but was deemed to ‘not worth the sum’. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Whithaugh Mill in 1642 he is on a long list of Border ‘notorious criminals, thieves and ressetters of thift’ who were to be captured and tried. John of Claverhouse (1648–89) soldier, from a family who were staunchly loyal to the throne. He was ‘Bonnie Dundee’ to those who considered him a hero and ‘Bluidy Clavers’ to his detractors; his reputation has certainly been coloured by propaganda. The song ‘Bonnie Dundee’ was popularised by Sir Walter Scott. He served in France and Holland, returning to Scotland in 1677, where he rose through the ranks, eventually becoming a member of the Privy Council. He was employed by Charles II to enforce episcopacy upon Scotland, and to persecute the Covenanters, being given special powers as head of a military commission to seek out conventicles. One of the first such expeditions was to Galashiel in 1679, where a field meeting was held by Thomas Wilkie perhaps (although there are several men of similar name) deposed minister of Lilliesleaf. In 1681 he passed through Hawick, Selkirk, Buccleuch, Craik and Wolfcleuchhead with his dragoons, in search of conventicles. George Deans refused to take him to Galashiel, defying the Bailies. His troop mustered in Hawick in 1685 and he wrote a letter from Thorlleshope in the same year. Later he was made Viscount Dundee and became a Jacobite supporter, and raised the standard of James in the north. He married Jean Cochrane, from a Presbyterian family. He was killed at the Battle of Killiecrankie. John (17th/18th C.) son of merchant Walter. He was among the group of young men who were fined in 1706 for being involved in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year, including carrying their own flag and defying the Bailies. He and James Scott (‘of Westport’) were briefly imprisoned and then fined, with his father Walter, as well as Francis Elliot, acting as their cautioners. In 1709 he was recorded as a merchant when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Porteous. He is probably the John born to Walter and Janet Briggs in 1688. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. In 1704 he witnessed to a baptism for Robert Tudhope, who also lived at Raesknowe. He was there in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He could be the same John as the later tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. he was recorded as a merchant in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat. In 1720 after not appearing on 3 occasions at Hawick Kirk for some sin, he was threatened with excommunication. Eventually he ‘satisfied in sackcloth’ 11 times before he was ‘received into the society of the kirk as a lively member thereof’. It is possible he is the son of merchant Walter, who was part of the rebel party at the Common Riding of 1706. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He married Margaret Helm in 1724. Their children included: Christian (b.1725); and David (b.1728). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by John Scott in Over Southfield and Andrew Turnbull in Drydenburn; on the same day he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Philhope of 1774 and Broadlee in 1785 and 1793. He may be son of the Thomas recorded at Philhope a generation or so earlier. He married Jane Gray in Roberton in 1773 and their children included: Thomas (b.1774), perhaps the man recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1794; Janet (b.1783); John (b.1785); and an unnamed child (b.1793). John (18th/19th C.) brewer of Hawick who was one of the first members of the Curling Club (so recorded in 1812). He may have been related to (or feasibly the same as) the later proprietor of the Holland House. John (b.c.1770) innkeeper and spirit dealer at Dovemount. He is thus recorded in 1841, when he was living with Anne (probably his daughter) and another Anne (probably his grand-daughter). His inn was one of the earliest buildings in the Dovemount area. John (b.1785/6) from Langholm, he was a clockmaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was listed at about 17 High Street, and in 1851 and 1861 was at No. 29. In 1842 he was in jail in Dumfries. He was listed as a clockmaker on the High Street in Slater's Graham Graham came to the Continent for Wilsons & don. After 1875 (the Collie Failure) he befriend S. & J. Graham, silk merchants of London in about 1860/1 with his brother John he likely moved to Hawick to apprentice as a draper, the time of Mary Queen of Scots. He probably moved farmers and millers on the Esk and Liddel since Lowes Mill near Canonbie. The family had been tin (b.1873); and Jessie Isabella (b.1875).

John America; Mary Christie (b.1872); Agnes Margaret (1860{64); Thomas (b.1862), who married Isabella Haldane and joined the Black Watch; Margaret (b.1863); and John (b.1838). His sons Simon and John became drapers in Hawick (with George being a draper’s assistant there), establishing Wood; Graham & Co., at the Tower Knowe in the 1850s, and then forming S. & J. Graham, silk merchants, in London in 1860 or 1861. John (b.1792/3) from England, he was a grocer and meal-dealer in Newcastle-on-Tyne. In 1851 he was at about 46 North Hermitage Street, and he was recorded on a directory of 1852. He may be the same John who ran a weekly cart to Brampton and another to Hawick (returning from the Bull & Butcher in Hawick on Thursdays). His wife was Jane and their children included Richard and Jane. John (b.1831) proprietor of ‘Graham’s Hotel’ at 6 Back Row from 1869. He was son of coal agent William and Janet Turnbull. The family were at 8 Back Row in 1871 and 1881. In 1852 he married Helen Riddle (b.1831). Their children included: Isabella Richardson Riddle (b.1852); William Turnbull Riddle (b.1853), who married Margaret Govenlock; John (b.1855), who moved to Dublin as a coach painter; George Turnbull (b.1857), who died young; James Melrose (b.1868); Walter (1860–64); Thomas (b.1862), who married Isabella Haldane and joined the Black Watch; Martin (b.1864); Helen (or ‘Nellie’, b.1865), married John Murray; Agnes (b.1867), who died young; Walter (again, b.1868), who emigrated to America; George Turnbull (b.1869), also emigrated to America; Mary Christie (b.1872); Agnes Martin (b.1873); and Jessie Isabella (b.1875). John (b.1837/8) youngest son of John, farmer at Hol lows Mill near Canonbie. The family had been farmers and millers on the Esk and Liddel since the time of Mary Queen of Scots. He probably moved to Hawick to apprentice as a draper, and in about 1860/1 with his brother John he founded S. & J. Graham, silk merchants of London. After 1875 (the Collie Failure) he became traveller on the Continent for Wilsons & Glennys. Retiring in 1892, he lived at Hunt ingstile, Grasmere, and then in France, where he died at Mentone. He married Jane Murray Wilson, daughter of Hawick Provost George Wilson and his brother Simon married his wife’s cousin, Annie, daughter of John G. Wilson of Ladylaw. Their children were: Walter (b.1868); Elizabeth Richardson Dickson (b.1870); Katherine Glenny (b.1871); Madge (b.1875); Michael George (b.1879); and Jean (d.1936), who married artist Frank Bramley. John ‘Jock the Dog’ (??–) larger than life Hawick man, known for tales of his huge appetite. He has worked in the mills. Jonathan (b.1802/3) from Langholm, he was a master watch and clock-maker at about 32 High Street. Note that there was another clock-maker called ‘John’ in Hawick at the same time. They are both listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Jane and their children included Thomas and Jane. Joseph (b.c.1790) tailor living at Ryeleahead, at the southern end of Castle ton Parish, in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included John, Robert, Ann and Jane. Mandy (??–) one of two women who attempted to join Ride-outs in 1996. Matthew (15th/16th C.) tenant in Howpasley. His brother John was recorded at the Justice-aires in 1502, when he was fined for non-appearance. Probably the same John was listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined, with his brother John’s name appearing after his. Matthew (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aires in Jedburgh in 1502; he was stated to have once been in Branxholme and now in Hislop, was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. It seems unlikely that he was the same man as Matthew in Howpasley (whose brother was recorded at the Justice-aires shortly after him). Matthew (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Nelly Oliver and they had a son Matthew (b.1783). He may be the Matthew who was a subscriber to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Patrick (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Town’. He was probably from the west side. Robert (15th C.) witness to a charter of 1489, signed at the monastery of Paisley. Robert (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassanden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Roberton for James Thomson in 1680 and for both Robert Scott and Thomas Graham in 1681. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Raesknowe. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Craw...
in Branxholme Town. He may be the Robert, son of David, baptised in 1675. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Lees in 1729. In 1735 he witnessed a baptism for James Dryden, resident of Clarilaw. In 1726 he married Jean Henderson, the marriage being proclaimed in Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included William (b.1727), Agnes (b.1729), Robert (b.1737) and Alison (b.1743). The witnesses in 1729 were John Scott and John Dryden. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Simpson and their children included Margaret (b.1779) and Robert (b.1780). Robert (b.1780/9) son of John, he was a tailor. An accident in his youth prevented him from achieving his sporting ambitions, although he remained an enthusiastic supporter of sports, particularly rugby. Simon Dickson (b.1833) from Canonbie, son of farmer John and Elizabeth Dickson. He moved to Hawick to become an apprentice with draper Walter Armstrong at the Tower Knowe. Walter was his brother-in-law, having married Mary Graham in Hawick. Along with William Wood he formed the drapers firm Wood, Graham & Co., Tower Knowe. Then in 1860/1 he and his brother John founded S. & J. Graham, silk merchants, London. He married Annie, daughter of John G. Wilson of Ladylaw. She was a cousin of his brother John’s wife, Jane Murray Wilson. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianae’. Thomas (15th C.) witness to a charter signed at ‘Wester Torban’ in 1450, relating to lands in the Edinburgh area. Perhaps the same Thomas was a Bailie of Linlithgow in a charter of 1487. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Phillhopeshiel in 1743 and Phihope in 1762. He married Elspeth Reid in 1742. His children, baptised in Roberton, included Janet (b.1743), Thomas (b.1751), Andrew (b.1758) and Elspeth (b.1762). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Isabel Little and their children included: John (b.1771); Elizabeth (b.1773); Thomas (b.1780); and Robert (b.1783). His earlier children were baptised in Langholm, but in 1783 he was at Fiddleton Bar. The witnesses in 1783 were Gavin Elliot and Charles Aitchison. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Knox and their children included Margaret (b.1781). The witnesses were Thomas Knox and Robert Graham, who were probably related to him and his wife. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Broadlee in Roberton Parish on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas, son of John, who was baptised in 1774. Thomas (b.1779/80) son of Canonbie, he was farmer at Harden. He was recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 was there farming 500 acres and employing 7 people. He married Margaret Scott in 1829. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Borthwick Mains. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the Thomas, son of Thomas, baptised in Roberton Parish in 1751. He could be the Thomas recorded at Branxholme on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had a local connection. Thomas (b.1814/5) born in Maryport, England, son of John and Mary. He was a watchmaker on Brougham Place and then at 16 High Street. He was listed as a clock-maker and engraver on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he was living at Brougham Place with grocer Jane Graham, possibly his mother (if the name was wrong). He was at about 16 High Street in 1851 and appears on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Isabella Wilson in 1848 and they had a son John. He may be the ‘Tammy Graham’ mentioned in these lines – ‘Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lumb and her penny krame’ [HI]. A portrait of him exists. Thomas (1861/2–1935) son of John, he was proprietor of the Holland House, like his father. He served for 25 years in the Black Watch and was killed in a motorbike accident at Clarilaw. His wife was Isabella. His sons James Haldane (d.1918), John and Thomas all served in WWI in the Black Watch. Bailie Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant who was a Bailie in the 1690s, and also recorded as Bailie (or ex-Bailie) in 1701, 1702, 1703, 1706, 1708 and 1709. He appears to have served as some kind of treasurer in 1701, after already being a Bailie. He is probably the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and may be the Walter resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth

Tax rolls in 1694. He is probably the Bailie Graham who was charged by the Council to appear before the ‘commissioners of unfree traders’ to complain about the sum levied on Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1700 for carrier David Minto and for merchant William Elliot, in 1701 for fellow merchant and Bailie, George Martin, for others in 1702, for Bailie George Martin in 1706, for John Laidlaw (servant at Harwood) and Bailie George Martin in 1708 and for weaver William Hill in 1709. He is probably the Walter who in 1712 (along with Walter Elliot) witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains. In 1706 his son John was among the young men fined for the disturbances at the Common Riding that year; he was there described as a merchant and ex-Bailie and acted as cautioner for the accused men. This John was probably the son of Walter and Janet Briggs born in Hawick in 1688, meaning that his wife would have been Janet Briggs. Perhaps the same Walter, merchant, is recorded as becoming a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1706, by right of his father Archibald, merchant, being a Burgess there. He was still on the Town Council in 1707 (when a fine was imposed on the 2 acting Bailies). He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. Probably the same Walter is recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. He may also be the Bailie Graham whose daughter Elizabeth married Thomas Huggan of Hawick in an ‘irregular marriage’ in Longtown. He is likely to be the Bailie Graham who was an elder of the Kirk, appointed in 1717 for collecting monies ‘westward from the bridge to the foot of the play la’, suggesting that he lived around this area; he was similarly appointed in 1722. In the 1718 survey of the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch he is stated to be owner of a small piece of land within the East Mains of Hawick, extending to 2 acres and 12 perches. A great falling out with Bailie Ruecastle (one of the sitting Magistrates) in 1718 had to be resolved by the intervention of the Session and the Minister; he was at that time a councillor, and is said to have accused Ruecastle of ‘Sacriledge, Thift’ and other transgressions, the nature of which are unclear. He witnessed baptisms for thatcher Gideon Scott in 1740 and for carrier George Richardson in 1741. He married Janet Bridges (or Briggs) and their children included John, Margaret (b.1692), Janet (b.1695), Archibald (b.1701), Jean (b.1702), Anna (b.1705) and Walter (b.1707). His wife’s name is recorded in 1702 as ‘Bessie’. The witnesses in 1702 were Bailie George Martin and innkeeper Francis Elliot, and in 1705 were Bailie George Martin and baker John Whillans. Janet, who married Walter Tudhope in Hawick in 1722, may have been his daughter. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1716. He probably married Margaret Lockie in Cavers in 1708. His children included Helen (b.1708), Margaret (b.1710), William (b.1712), James (b.1714) and Walter (b.1716). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Effledge. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Malie (b.1718) and Mary (b.1720). Dr. Walter (1762–1829) Hawick Doctor of the early 1800s, born in Arthuret, Cumberland, son of Walter and Mary Johnson. He may have had a brother, Andrew, who was a doctor in Dalkeith. His premises were in Buccleuch Street. About 1799 he was one of the local men contributing to support the war against France. He was probably the Dr. Graham with whom Sir Andrew Smith served an apprenticeship. He was one of the doctors called in the trial for the murder case of 1814, resulting in Hawick’s last hanging. He is recorded as Walter ‘sen.’ at Buccleuch Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and his house is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. A portrait of him exists. He married Margaret Scott in Westerkirk in 1787, and their children (born in Arthuret, Cumberland) were: Mary (b.1790); Walter (b.1792), who was also a doctor in Hawick; and James (d.1799), who died in Hawick. Dr. Walter (c.1792–1858) son of Walter and Margaret Scott, he was born in Arthuret, Cumberland, and became a doctor in Hawick, like his father. His premises were on Buccleuch Street, probably at No. 10. He is recorded as Walter ‘jun. M.D.’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and his house is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was a physician on Buccleuch Street. In Slater’s 1852 ‘Graham & Thompson’ are listed as physicians on Buccleuch Street; he must therefore have been in partnership with George William Thomson. In 1857 he donated copper coins to the Museum. Later in life he lived at Borthaugh. In 1831 in Kelso he married Alison Brown, who was from Eskdalemuir. Their children included: Walter (b.1832); Margaret Moffat (b.1834); Mary Elizabeth (b.1842), who married William Rodgie; and William Brown (b.1843). By 1861 his widow was living at Borthaugh along with her sisters Janet Brown and Margaret Scott, as well as 3 of their children. He died at Borthaugh. An obituary was written by Dr. John Douglas. William ‘William of the Mote’ (16th C.) prominent member of the family who lived at ‘the Mote’, otherwise known as Liddel Strength, on the English side near where the Liddel joins the Esk. He should not be confused with William Scott of the Mote in Hawick. He is ‘William of the Mote’ in a letter by Lord Scrope in 1601, accusing him of resetting some of those responsible for killing Sir John Carmichael. William “Richie’s Will” (16th C.) 2nd son of Richard of Netherby. He is mentioned by Lord Scrope in 1595/6, when Scott of Buccleuch was said to have been on a raid with him. In 1596 he complained about a raid on his lands by the Lairds of Edgerton and Bedrule, with 20 men stealing 24 horses and £100 of goods. In 1594/5 it is written that ‘Hobie of the Belsies turned ‘man’ to Richies Will’ and was to be entered to trial by the Wardens. He was also said to have been among Englishmen who (along with several other Grahams) met with Scott of Buccleuch before the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He first married a daughter of Armstrong of Mangerton and secondly married a daughter of Robert Elliot, 15th of Redheugh. He had at least 9 sons. In 1605 Ritchie’s Hutchin’ was found guilty of hisiot, 15th of Redheugh. He had at least 9 sons. In 1605 `Richie’s Hutchin’ was found guilty of his

In 1605 ‘Ritchie’s Hutchin’ was found guilty of his son Thomas. Rev. William (d.aft. 1638) graduated from the University of St. Andrews in 1611. He is recorded as minister at Ewes Kirk from 1627. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Mervinslaw in 1705. His children probably included William (b.1704) and Thomas (b.1705). William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Nichol in Wilton Parish in 1720. William (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He is recorded as a ‘Day labourer’ in 1746. He married Isobel Nichol and their children included: Margaret (b.1741); and Margaret (again, b.1746). The witnesses in 1741 were Mr. Alexander Lithgow and writer Andrew Haliburton and in 1746 were merchant Robert Oliver and John Telfer. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Euphan Redford and their children included: Ann (b.1754); and Janet (b.1758). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Borthwickshields, recorded on the 1790-97 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Borthwickshields in 1797. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He could be the ‘Mr William Graham’ from Roberton Parish who in Roberton in 1791 married Agnes Turnbull, from Minto Parish. Agnes (b.1792), baptised in Roberton, was probably their daughter. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Rigfoot in Ewesdale. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (18th/19th C.) resident at ‘Holstaine’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Grahams. William (18th/19th C.) labourer at Harden in Castleton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835, when he had just left for America. William (b.1795/6) born from England, he was farmer at Lawston in southern Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was recorded as head of his household in 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was farming 500 acres and employing 8 labourers. His wife was Mary and their children included Mary, Thomas, Elizabeth, Robert, John, William, Christopher, James and Ann. William (b.1809) born at Fairnleyhaugh (or Fairnileehaugh) near Yair in Selkirkshire, he was a coal agent in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the Howgate working as an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was living at ‘Leafy House’ (probably Ivy House) on Weensland Road and working as a mason’s labourer. He was recorded as ‘Carman’ (i.e. coach-driver) in 1861, when he was living on Weensland Road. In 1829 in Stow he married Janet, daughter of Hawick shoemaker James Turnbull. Their children included: Margaret (b.1829), who married John Combe; John (b.1831), who was proprietor of ‘Graham’s Hotel’ in Hawick; Agnes (or Ann, b.1835), who married Robert Haliday; James (b.1838), who married Ann Little Kennedy; Janet Turnbull (b.1841), who married baker William McCallum; and Helen (b.1844), who married Robert Jardine. He could be the William, son of John and Ann Dixon, born in Selkirkshire in 1803. Sgt. William (19th C.) veteran soldier who served in the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny. He probably lived in Hawick. He can be seen in an early photograph, in the uniform of the 4th Roxburghshire Volunteers. William Turnbull Riddle (b.1853) eldest son of John and Helen Riddle. In 1875 he married Margaret Ruickbie Govenlock, descendant of James Ruickbie. Their son William Nichol was Cornet in 1902. The family lived at 14 Howe gate. William Nichol (b.1881) Cornet in 1902 and one of the founder members of the Callants’ Club. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and worked as the Grahams (θu-grāinz, grā-unz) n. family with origins in Midlothian, with a cadet branch moving to Eskdale in the late 14th century and becoming a large clan in northern Cumbria. They were a powerful force in that area, holding at least 13 towers, until the early 17th century when they were targeted by the Earl of Cumberland and others in an attempt to pacify the Borders. They were a scourge of the English wardens, with a reputation for riding with the Scots when it suited them. 150 of the family were rounded up in about 1605 and mostly executed or deported to Ireland or to fight in the wars in Holland. The clan motto is ‘Ne oublie’ (forget not) and the crest shows a falcon killing a stork – ‘For it’s hey the Graems! And Ho the Graems! The gallant Graems are a’ frien’s to me; And if I had them a’ here this nicht, Ane foot o’ ground I never wad flee!’ [T] (also spelled ‘Graeme’ and other variants).

Graham’s Close (grā-unz-klös) n. former name for a passageway near the foot of the Howe-gate. The name was used in the 18th century. Immediately below here is where a large hole opened up during the great flood of 1767.

Graham’s Hotel (grā-unz-hō-tel) n. hostelry run by John Graham from 1869 at 6 Back Row. It was where the inaugural meeting of the Hawick Burns Club took place in 1878. In 1885 it was renamed Holland House.

Grahamslaw (grā-unz-law) n. area to the north-east of Eckford, the hill there containing 9 caves. The lands were owned by the family of Grahamslaw of that Ilk, with ‘Johan de Grimmeslawe’ signing the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and Christian ‘Grymslaw’ resigning the lands into the hands of the King in 1429. The Barony was long held by the Crichtouns of that Ilk. The lands were granted by William Crichton of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1436/7, with a ‘precept’ in 1439, and are described as ‘8 husband-lands’ in 1528/9 when still owned by Walter Scott of Brauxholme. A separate ‘6 husband-lands’ called ‘Portariss Landis’ or ‘Porterlandis’ are also mentioned as a Scott possession in 1517, 1553/4, 1574, 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1454 an ‘instrument’ dealing with ‘Burrell lands’ in Eckford (witnessed in John Waugh’s tenement in Hawick) describes how Robert ‘of Grimslaw’ was the former laird. A precept of sasine in 1500 grants the lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme. The former estate there contains a beehive-shaped dovecote (the origin is probably ‘Grim’s hill’, combining the Old English ‘hlaw’ with Old Norse ‘Grimr’, where this was a nickname for Odin, perhaps relating to the caves; the name appears as ‘Grymislaw’ in 1429, ‘Grynyslaw’ in 1500, ‘Grimmislaw’ and ‘Grymmislaw’ in 1574 and ‘Greameslaw’ in 1663).

Grahamslaw (grā-unz-, grimz-law) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) had sasine for the lands of Newton in Bedrule Parish in 1504, with his name given as ‘Ade Grenislaw’. Probably the same Adam was a member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509; his surname is given there as ‘Grymislaw’. He may have been father of the later Adam of Newton. It is possible he is the Adam, brother of Thomas (heir of John of Newton) who came in the King’s will in 1494/5 for the theft of 60 sheep from Stouslie. Adam of Newton (16th C.) probably the Adam, son of the Laird of Little Newton, who had remission for crimes in 1502. This was for the theft of a cow from Craigend, sheep and geese from Rutherford of Longnewton, geese from John Gledstains, pigs from Spittal, sheaves of barley from George Rutherford, grain from Menslaws and for common theft before his previous 1488 remission. He was one of the Border Lairds who submitted to James V in 1530 to keep better order. He resigned his lands of Newton (in Bedrule Parish) to the King in 1531, then gained a crown charter to the lands, along with his wife in the same year. He married Janet Rutherford and was succeeded by his son John. He is also mentioned in a sasine of 1585 (by which time he was deceased). Andrew (15th/16th C.) probably related to Thomas, the 2 being named in a case involving David Oliver ‘in Stryndis’ in 1502. Oliver was charged with resetting them, as well as assisting them in raiding farms. His surname is given as ‘grymslaw’. Christian of that Ilk (14th/15th C.) resigned the lands of Grahamslaw in a letter of 1429, as recorded in an ‘instrument of transumpt’ requested by Stephen Scott of Castlelaw in 1445. Her name is written ‘Cristiane de Grimislaw’. Henry ‘Harry’ of Little Newton (d. bef. 1606) recorded in 1606 when his sons William and George were held by the Hawick Balies for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Hallrule. They were then transferred to Edinburgh Tolbooth at the direction of the Lords of the Privy Council, and there was a complaint that the family of the murdered man wanted to ruin them and keep them in prison forever, rather than prosecute them. John of Newton (15th/16th C.) witness to the ‘retour’ for the Kers in the lands of Borthwickshiel in 1471. He was also a member of the panel for Walter Scott inheriting Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. In 1493 he had remission for being with Alexander, former Duke of Albany. In 1494/5 Thomas, brother of Lord Cranston, had remission for the (unspecified) crime done to him at Denholm. He is recorded in 1498 along with Adam, when he had remission for comming with ‘the traitours if Levin, Ruthirfurdis, and Turnebullis’. In 1500 he was one of the men selected to value the lands of Whithope. In 1501 he was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to the administration of some fines in Roxburghshire. He may be the ‘Johannem Grimyslaw’ who in 1482 was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. His son Thomas was listed in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. John (15th/16th C.) tenant at ‘the Place of Camys’, probably Minto Kames. In 1502 Peter Turnbull in Bonchester had remission for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows and 5 horses from his farm, with the help of some rebel Turnbuls. John of Newton (16th/17th C.) son and heir of Adam. He could be the John who had a sasine for Newton in 1541/2. He could be the ‘Johnne Grimyslaw’ who signed the bond to act against Borders thieves in 1571/2. He also swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with William Ker of Caverton as his surety. In 1586 he sold Newton to Robert Kerr of Ancrum (later Newton), who married his daughter Helen. He is probably the ‘Johne Grimyslaw of Litill Newton’ who was among the men accused of helping the English raid lands belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1548. He could be the same ‘Johnne Grameslaw of Lyttill Newtoun’ whose 6 sons William, James, Robert, John, Andrew and Thomas were killed by a group of Turnbuls from Staneedge, Barhills and Minto, the trial being in 1604. John (d.c.1601) probably son of John of Newton. Along with his brothers William, James, Andrew, Robert and Thomas, all servants of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall, they were killed by a group of Turnbuls and Davisons from the Minto area. In 1610 a commission was appointed by the Privy Council to apprehend the accused, since they had stiull not found caution for the crimes. His sister, Helen Grahamslaw, Lady Newton (who had married Robert Kerr), was mentioned as one of the pursuers in the case, as well as Robert Kerr of Newton ‘as sister’s son’. Robert (14th/15th C.) laird of the ‘Burrell lands’ in Eckford Parish, as described in a document of 1454 signed in John Waugh’s tenement in Hawick. He was succeeded by his only daughter Helen, who married Simon Burrell and was succeeded by their only daughter Janet, whose John Burnell resigned the lands in 1448. He may be the ‘Roberto grynlaw’ listed in a document for lands in Morebattle in 1445. Thomas of Newton (15th C.) member of the 1464/5 panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas and also the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirktoun Mains and Flex. He was thus a prominent Roxburghshire landowner of the time and is listed as ‘Thomas Grimslaw of Newton’. Thomas (15th C.) son and heir of John of Newton. In 1492/3 he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. He is probably the Thomas of Newton, ‘Junior’, who was surety for William Falside in Ancrum at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 he was ‘Junior dominus de newtoun’ when and his brother Adam he came in the King’s will for stealing 60 sheep from Walter Scott of Howpasley and Walter Turnbull of Stousie, from the lands of Stousie; these sheep appeared to belong to the King. His goods were escheated and his sureties were John Rutherford of Edgerston and Ralph Ker. Thomas (15th/16th C.) accomplice of David Oliver ‘in Strydis’ (probably Strange in Rulewater), recorded in a remission Oliver had in 1502. Along with Andrew he was involved in ‘theftuous deeds’ and was already ‘at the horn’. Perhaps this same Thomas was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. He was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him and the Rutherfords, as well as when John Fawlaw in Littlelead had remission for associating with him. He was also listed along with Gilbert Rutherford and Thomas Scott as rebels who Robert Rutherford had remission for associating with. Walter (17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster at Tushielaw in a deed of 1629. William (15th C.) witness to the sasine for the Kers in the lands of Borthwickshiel and Harden Wood in 1471. In 1488/9 he witnessed an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. Probably the same William had remission (along with Simon Glendinning) in 1493 for common theft happening before the time of his current remission. He is recorded as being ‘at the kirk of Hassindene’ in 1493 when he had remission for helping some men of Tynedale to steal cattle, sheep, horses and goods from Minto: Walter Scott of Howpasley served as surety for him. In 1494 he was ‘William Grymyslaw’ when he was a witness for the transfer of lands in the Barony of Hassendean (formerly spelled ‘Greymslaw’, ‘Grimslay’, ‘Grymmslaw’, ‘Grinyslaw’, ‘Grymyslaw’, ‘Grymmyslaw’, etc.).

grain (grān) v., arch. to groan – ‘An’ a’ concerned May greet an’ grane An’ make their mane …’[FL], ‘Lord, a’ my langin’ is afore thee; an’ my graein’ isna hidden frae thee’[HSR], ‘Bie reesen o’ the voyce o’ my graein’ my banes cleefe til my skin’[HSR], ‘…Sae grains the world to gledness frae the deid’[WL], n. a groan – ‘But wi’ a deep and hollow grane. Grainfit (grān-fi) n. Grainfoot, former farmstead on the Tinnis Burn in Castleton Parish. Archibald Beattie was there in the 1770s. Walter Armstrong lived there in the late 1700s. On Stobie’s 1770 map it is marked to the east of Reidmoss. It may have been at the foot of Todhunter Grain.

Grain Hill (grān-hil) n. hill in the north part of Ashkirk Parish, on the right-hand side of the Wollrig road, with Wollrig Grain passing nearby. The farm of ‘Greenshill’ recorded in 1797 in Ashkirk Parish was probably near there.

Hawick Grammar School, founded in 1710, following a meeting of the Parish Heritors organised by Rev. Alexander Orrock, and bolstered through the Orrock Bequest of 1711 (hence the confusion about the date of its foundation). There was probably a school from about the time of the Reformation, but it may not have had a continuous existence. Andrew Sword was recorded as schoolmaster in c.1592 and in 1616, William Hay in 1606 and Adam Scott in 1622. In the Parish valuation of 1627 it is stated that there ‘is no provision for ane schole, bot thair is vere great necessitie for a schole’. James Carmure was recorded as schoolmaster in 1631. However, it is unclear how well supported education was in the town through the rest of the 17th century and before there had long been calls to establish such a school. The Burgesses were taxed in 1710 (probably for the first time), to support this school and its master. It existed alongside the Parish School (often called the English School), which was for elementary education, with lessons in English. The Grammar School was a secondary school for the wealthier classes, which to begin with would have charged fees and had lessons in Latin. The first schoolmaster was James Innes. It is unclear where the school started, since the land at Orrock Place was obtained (from Andrew Rodger) only about 1724. At that time it contained 2 ruinous houses, plus sheds and a yard. The school seems to have been rebuilt from these buildings soon after 1724. But a new building was completed on the site in 1732, constructed by John Turnbull, mason, and Walter Scott, wright. This building was damaged in the 1767 flood. The school used the Town Hall as overflow from 1821, and the schoolhouse in Orrock Place was abandoned in some years as being too small. By 1825 the school was run by a Rector with 2 assistants. The school was rebuilt in 1825–26, designed by Smith of Darnick, when it was merged (actually a joint master was appointed in 1824) with the Parish School to become the United Schools. In 1839 it was written that the subjects taught were reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, mathematics, Latin, Greek and French. A new room was added to the school in 1846, but then it still only contained 4 rooms. It was then in use until Buccleuch School (now Hawick High School) was built in 1860. The old building became the property of the Duke of Buccleuch, but was given to the Archaeological Society as a Museum from 1862–86. Thereafter it was sold as a joiners workshop (Walter Scott & Son), and then became Chisholme Antiques, etc. It still exists beside the old Orrock Church, with high-silled windows suggesting its earlier function. The head boy of the school used to carry its flag during the Common Riding, the practice ending in 1777; the 1744 flag is preserved in the Museum.

Grange (grawn, grawn) n. area just to the west of Chesters, south-east of Ancrum. ‘Chesters’ Grange’ and ‘Grange Banks’ are shown on today’s Ordnance Survey maps. Perhaps the lands were formerly separated into east and west; if so Adam Thomson was recorded at the east part in 1494/5. Lands there valued at about £1460 were owned by Rev. William Bennet in 1643, and another part owned by Gavin Elliot, valued at £260. In 1678 part was owned by William Elliot of Grange, valued at about £350. Mr. Hair paid tax for 13 windows there in 1753. The farm there was developed around 1790 by Thomas Ogilvie, who had purchased Chesters a few years before. Richard Hair was owner in 1788 and Henry Hair is recorded as farmer there in 1797. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls listed ‘Part of the Lands of Grange, formerly possessed by John Elliot’, valued at £108 (‘Gronge’/Grange are marked on Baleu’s 1654 map).

Grange (grawn) n. former name for lands in Ringwoodfield, somewhere near Northhouse or Teviothead. Around 1557 Simon Scott of ‘Fernili’ and Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry rented these lands, along with Bowanhill, from the monks of Melrose. The name is recorded as ‘Grangia alias Stanyhetoun’ and the value was £4. In 1564 it was recorded simply as ‘Grange’. It is possible that this was a grange of the Abbey, located perhaps near Stane Hill. This could be the Grange in Castleton Parish listed in 1797 when John Turnbull was there.

Grange (grawn) n. Robert (13th/14th C.) referred to as ‘de la Graunge’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His lands could have been the Grange near Ancrum, or possibly the one at Abbotrule. He was on a jury an inquest for the inheritance of Wilton and other lands of William de Chartres in 1303/4.

the Grange (thu-grawn) n. former farm in the Barony of Abbotrule, just to the north of the main house. The lands transferred to Southdean Parish and later to Hobkirk Parish. Thomas Rutherford was recorded there in 1494/5. It was among the lands purchased by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh in 1569 and later passed to the Kers. In 1629 Walter Scott, son of William, who was son of Walter of Todrig, was served heir to the lands; they were at that time described as ‘a 32 shilling land of old extent’. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by Bessie and Anna, daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670, when it was described as also having a mill. Rev. James Ker, minister of Abbotrule, was also Laird of Grange in the mid-to-late 17th century; he preached a field conventicle in the house in 1679, with about 500 people listening from the lawn outside. In 1680 it was listed among lands whose superiority was held by the Kerrs of Abbotrule. In 1707 ‘Grange’s lands’ were held by ‘Airs of R. Watson’ and valued at £396; it must have therefore been included in a large set of farms at that time. Grange afterwards formed part of the farm of Rueltownhead. In 1788 the farm was owned by Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule and valued at £396. Part was listed in 1811 being owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, formerly possessed by John Elliot, and valued at about £34. Alexander Wight was farmer there in 1797. Around 1875 it was owned by David Henderson of Abbotrule and valued at about £43 (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and was ‘Grange’ in 1670 and 1680).

Grant (grawn, grawn) n. Adam (1859–1938) composer of the music for several Hawick songs and compiler of others. Born in St. Andrews, he spent his early years in Edinburgh, and at the age of 12 was apprenticed as an organ builder and piano tuner. He came to Hawick at 19 to be organist at St. Cuthbert’s. He moved to St. John’s in 1991 and remained there until 1936, serving the same church for 45 years. He also set himself up as a piano tutor and tuner and in 1882 opened a shop (which he shared with 3 other businesses at No. 2 High Street), selling sheet music. He moved to larger premises at 10 North Bridge Street in 1885, and lived above the shop. This became the main musical business in Hawick, selling instruments as well as music (and later gramophone records), and acting as a booking agent, as well as publisher of local music. He was official Common-Riding accompanist for more than 40 years (at least 1896 until 1937), and Callants’ Club accompanist for over 30 years He also wrote non-Hawick music, sometimes under the name ‘Rosenberg’. He also helped James Sinton with the musical part of his Hawick-related bibliography. His music shop finally closed in 1933. He was also a keen Volunteer, served as Captain of the Teviotdale Amateur Cycling Club and was a member of the Archaeological Society and Golf Club. A member of Lodge St. John 111, he was...
Grand Organist to the Provincial Grand Chapter of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. His musical output included composition or significant arrangement of ‘Up wi’ Auld Hawick’, ‘Hawick’, ‘Oor Ain Auld Toon’, ‘The Anvil Crew’, ‘Clinty’s Song’, ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’, ‘Meda’s Song’, ‘Invocation’ and ‘The Wall of Flodden’. He also provided arrangement and acted as publisher for many others. His most serious piece of piano music was ‘The Braxholm Waltz’ and he also wrote music for plays in collaboration with J.E.D. Murray, specifically ‘The Witch o’ The Wisp Hill’, ‘The Caddie’s Ghost’, ‘Kirsty o’ Cocklaw Castle’, ‘Turning Back the Clock’ and ‘The Gutterbludes’, as well as the Quater-Centenary Pageant. He probably contributed more than anyone else to Hawick’s musical heritage, his publication of compilations of local songs perhaps being his lasting legacy, since this saved many songs and popularised others. He married Bessie Briggs Hall and their son Adam R. carried on the family business.

Adam Rutherford (1883–1952) son of Adam, he carried on the family music business. In 1948 he arranged the music for ‘The Fairest Spot o’ A’’; piecing together the music from his memory and some notes left by his father and Tom Ker. He also resurrected Ker’s song ‘Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet’ in 1949. He was organist at Southdean Kirk and then Bedrule Kirk. He also ran a dance orchestra. He married into the Wallace family who farmed at Roundabouts and they ran a dance orchestra. He married Agnes Wight Hall (‘Nan’) died in 1912, aged 25. There is a commemorative plaque for him at 2 High Street, the site of his first music shop, designed by Willie Landles, and unveiled in 1999. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, and since he lived to a good age and fell on hard times, there were apparently only 35 mourners at his funeral; however, traffic was stopped on the High Street at the unveiling of the plaque.

Thomas (18th C.) house servant at Teviotbank in 1793, when he was working for David Simpson. Rev. William (1811–53) born in Jedburgh, son of Lewis of the Auchernack family, and Isabella Veitch of Inchbonny. His father was a saddler in Jedburgh and his sister Isabella married James Guthrie, Hawick plumber and slater. He was educated at George Watson’s Hospital and Edinburgh University and became a schoolmaster at Minto, probably in the 1820s. Under his direction it is said that the school achieved a very high reputation, with several boarders coming there from outside the Parish. He was still recorded as master at Minto in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and ordained as assistant at Cavers in May 1840, taking over as minister from James Strachan only a month or so later. He was then minister of Cavers until his death. He remained with the establishment after the Disruption, although part of his congregation left to form the Denholm Free Kirk in the autumn of 1843. In his day the Sunday service started at noon (to allow the country folk to see to their animals before setting out), lasted for 2 hours, with a break and then another 2 hours. Like all ministers of the time, he was known for rebuking the congregation. In later life he had a long white beard.

In 1840 he married Jane, daughter of James Dickson of Mauricewood. Their son William (1849–1911) became a wealthy timber merchant in Leith (and was Master of the Merchant Company of Edinburgh 1905–07), and his this William’s son also became minister of Cavers. Their other children were: Isabella (1841–1904), who married the minister of Coltness; Lewis (b.1842), who died young; Lewis (1844–1916), Kirkcaldy engineer; Jane Dickson (1846–1924), who married Robert Michael Ballantyne, children’s author; and James (1849–1911), who became a doctor and died in Tasmania. His name is recorded on the family gravestone in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. Rev. William Kenneth ‘Ken’ (1883–1971) minister of Cavers 1924–54, before it merged with Kirkton. He was the son of William and Eliza Mary Usher of Edinburgh (daughter of brewer Thomas), and grandson of Rev. William Grant who had been minister of Cavers himself. He was educated at George Watson’s College and Edinburgh University, where he graduated M.A. in 1905. He was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1908 and became assistant at St. Bernard’s in Edinburgh. He was then minister at Edrom and of the ‘Second Charge’ of St. Andrew’s from 1916. In 1918 he was Chaplain to the Forces serving in Salonika. In 1924 he was translated to Cavers Parish. He married Evelyn Maud Mary Urquhart in 1914 and they had one son, Alan (1916–2010).

grap (grawp) pp., arch. gripped – ‘But she … roared and grat, an’ grat ma airms’ [HAST1868], ‘…She grab at it, muttering, I should hae had mair, But yet I will tak’ it at Copshawholm Fair’ [AD] (also written ‘graap’; this is the past tense form, while gruppen is the past participle).

grape (grāp) v., poet. to grope – ‘And belike they graped whaur they couldna see, And the nits were swir to faa’ [WL] (also spelled ‘graip’).

the Grapes (thu-grāps) n. the Grapes Inn, previously at 16 Buccleuch Street, which was the main centre in Hawick for the carrying trade, before the coming of the railway. It once had a private well, which others were sometimes allowed to use. The inn was erected by a carrier named John Hargreaves, after he acquired the property in 1820. John Beck was the proprietor in 1825, Robert Hobkirk in 1837 and Margaret Best in 1855. Most of the buildings have been greatly altered, but a turretted staircase and workshop survive.

Grapes Close (grāps-klōs) n. also known as Grapes Inn Close, the pend between 16 and 18 Buccleuch Street, named after the Grapes Inn, which once occupied that area. The name continued in use long after the inn itself closed. The Drums and Fifes march out to here on the Thursday night, since it is close to the site of one of the town’s tolls. It is also on the route of the Cornet’s Walk.

Grapes Hotel (grāps-hō-tel) n. hotel in Newcastle at 16 Douglas Square, also known as the Grapes Inn and just ‘the Grapes’. Jane Kyle was innkeeper there on Pigot’s 1825 directory and still in 1851 and in Slater’s 1852 directory. John Elliot was innkeeper in the 1860s.

gravat see gravit

the Gravely Haugh (thu-graw-vu-lee-hawch) n. former descriptive name for an area on the south side of the Slitrig near Lynnwood, where the old Common boundary briefly crossed to the other side of the river. This could be what was meant in an entry from the Parish Records of the early 18th century – ‘To a poor lad’s cofine yt dyed in the Gravell, £2’.

gravit (graw-vi) n., arch. a scarf, especially a warm woollen one – ‘pit yer gravit on’, ‘...Till they’ve a’ gotten gravats made oot o’ gude rope’ [UB] (also spelled ‘gravat’: accent on the 2nd syllable).

graw (graw) n. to grow – ‘Gala graws on ee efter a while, a bit like cancer’, ‘...for which yin year heid’d ti graw a beard...’ [IWL] (cf. the more common growe).

gray (grä) n., arch. an arithmetic book (so-called from the book written by James Gray, schoolmaster in Peebles, which was heavily used in schools in the 19th century).

Gray (grä) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Headshaw Mill in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’.

Andrew (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His is probably an ancestor of the later Andrew who owned lands in Lilliesleaf. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, specifically the Hasseendean part. In 1680 when he witnessed a baptism for Alexander Muir, along with Walter Paisley. He married Isobel Orniston in 1679 and their children included: Bessie (b.1685); and Isobel (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Robert and George Orniston (perhaps brothers to his wife). He may be the same man as the later Dand in Weensland, or else perhaps his father. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitlaw and later tenant in Weensland. Note that his forename is sometimes transcribed as ‘David’ rather than ‘Dand’. He must have been closely related to James, who was in Whitlaw at the same time. He was tenant in Whitlaw in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for James Colwort, also in Whitlaw. He was recorded in Whitlaw in 1706 along with James (presumably his father or brother) when they witnessed a baptism for Robert Cairns in Whitlaw. He was also in Whitlaw in 1708 when one of his children was baptised in Hawick, in 1709 when he witnessed baptisms for Adam Scott in Kirkton, for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, for Walter Scott in Nether Southfield and for William Gledstains at Whitlaw (both along with James), in 1711 for John Scott ‘Wyndhead’, and in 1713 for James Craw in Branxholme Town. He was listed as an Elder in 1713. He was recorded at Weensland in 1723 when he was considered as an elder of Hawick Kirk. He was also so labelled in 1725 when he witnessed baptisms for carrier Thomas Porteous and William Hislop. He was described as tenant in Weensland in 1728 when his daughter Margaret married Walter Scott from Hawickshiel. He married Janet Buchan (or ‘Buchan’, from Bedrule Parish) in Hawick in 1706 and their children included Margaret (b.1708) and Mary (b.1721). Other children, baptised in Hawick but with no mother’s name given, include James (b.1710), John (b.1712), Francis (b.1714) and Beatrice (b.1716). The witnesses in 1708 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and gardener James Falsyde and in 1721 were Bailies Walter Purdom and James Scott. He was in Weensland in 1720 when (along with merchant John Johnston) he witnessed a baptism for workman William Stoddart. He may be the Dand who witnessed a baptism for James in Whitlaw in 1728 and another (the same day) for John Anderson. He could be the Dand whose daughter Margaret married Walter Scott in 1728. Andrew (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1764 when he was paid for ‘the wind-pointer, fen, and hands, in church steeple’. He was presumably a clock-maker or other merchant. Perhaps the same Andrew in Cavers Parish married Helen Glendinning in Hawick Parish in 1762 and had a daughter Helen (b.1770). Andrew (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf (valued at £86 13s 4d). He could be the Andrew from whom the Riddells of that Ilk purchased the lands of Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In 1788 in Cavers he married Christian Hunter. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. Andrew (19th C.) noted local jumper from Hawick, also associated with the early years of Hawick Baa. He won the running hop-step-and-leap at the St. Ronan’s Games in 1830. At the Saturday Games of the 1834 Common Riding he won the ‘running high leap’ and the ‘hop, step and leap’, bringing to 23 his total of local prizes. He is probably the handloom weaver of that name living with the Crosier family at about 30 Loan in 1841. Andrew (b.1784/5) resident of Lilliesleaf. He was probably the Andrew who is recorded as owner of ‘Hungry-hills, Four Rigs and Tenement and Yard in Lilliesleaf’ according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was listed as an agricultural labourer in 1841 and as a ‘Landed Proprietor (of 7 acres)’ on Main Street in 1851. His wife was Jean from Gretna. Their children included: James; Catherine; and Isabella (b.1831), who wrote poetry under the pseudonym ‘Free Lance’. Charles (18th/19th C.) first (and only) minister of the Independent Kirk in Hawick. He arrived in November 1805, having previously been a stone mason, and being trained by the Haldane’s in Edinburgh. After only a few years he apparently became more of a convert to baptism views than much of his congregation, leading to the entire church folding by 1813. He left Hawick, since there were not enough baptist followers to support him at that time. David (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. David (17th C.) resident at Stoulie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Dand see Andrew Gray, ‘Dand’. Duncan (15th C.) witness to Hawick’s earliest known sasine in 1453, where he is described as an esquire. Presumably the same Duncan ‘Graye’ was also witness to a charter of William Douglas of Cavers in 1450, in which James was also a witness. Francis ‘Frank’ (1839–1922) from Yeadon in Yorkshire, where he was bandmaster from the age of 17. He came to Hawick in 1860 with his brother Barnabas, to work as a weaver. In 1861 they were lodging at 21 High Street. He was made bandmaster for the local detachment of the Border Rifles, and remained in this position for 43 years. Since the volunteers had no instruments, he travelled to Edinburgh with Capt. Chisholme of Stirches to purchase them. He can be seen in an early photograph and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. George (17th C.) recorded as being in ‘Rupertlaw’ (probably Raperlaw, but possibly Ruberslaw) in 1684 when his servvant George Young was listed as a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. George (18th C.) recorded being in ‘Wienland’ in 1764 when his son’s baptism was witnessed by gardener James Scott and Walter Scott (probably related to his wife). He was also listed being in Weensland in 1766 when baptismal witnesses were Adam Scott and William Elliot. He married Helen Scott in 1756 and their children included: Margaret (b.1758); David (b.1759); John (b.1762); James (b.1764); Esther (b.1766); George (b.1769); and Francis (b.1771). George (d.1808) merchant in Hawick, son of James, who was from Ashieburn. He was listed as a merchant on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He died in Hawick. George (19th C.) resident of ‘Peatihouses’, i.e. Burnhead Cottages, in 1857, when he donated coins to the Archaeological Society. He was surely related to William, who was listed as a lambswool stocking maker at ‘Parkhouses’ on the 1851 and 1861 censuses. George (1914/15–1991) born in Hawick, he started work with Walter Wilson’s and was a ‘Bevin Boy’ during WWII. He then worked on the railway before becoming a personnel officer with Turner & Rutherfords. He was a member of the Labour Party, was on the Town Council 1955–61 and served as a Bailie. He was also a keen amateur dramatist and singer. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick. The death of his daughter Janet is recorded in 1810. Cardinal Gordon Joseph (1910–93), born in Leith, son of mechanical engineer Francis William. He was ordained as a priest in Edinburgh in 1935, then assisted his uncle, who was priest at St. Andrews, while taking a degree there. In 1941 he was appointed priest of S.S. Mary & David’s in Hawick, and remained there until 1947. One of his tasks was to put together the centenary booklet. During the War years he also served nearby German and Italian prisoners of war. He also became Dean of the Borders and served on the Roxburgh education committee. He left to become Rector at St. Mary’s College, Blairs (near Aberdeen) and became Archbishop of St. Andrews and Edinburgh in 1951 (at only the age of 40). He founded St. Andrew’s College, Drygrange in 1953. He was made a Cardinal in 1969, the first Scottish Cardinal since the Reformation. He returned to Hawick to open St. Margaret’s School in 1965 and to be principal guest of the 1974 Common Riding. He retired in 1985 and died in Edinburgh. Helen (18th/19th C.) grocer at the Mid Row in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Isabella Anderson (1831–1909) resident of Lilliesleaf, daughter of Andrew and Jean Gray. She worked as a dressmaker. She wrote pseudonymously using the name ‘Free Lance’. Her volume ‘Border Rhymes’ was published in Hawick in 1899. It contains a mixture of English and local dialect poems, many with a religious flavour. James (15th C.) local man recorded in 1432 when he witnessed the sasine giving the Burony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. Also listed was John, who was surely related. He may be the same James who witnessed a charter for William Douglas of Cavers in 1450, along with Duncan, who may have been related. And he is probably the James listed as deputy to Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1455. James (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He could be the James, married to Bessie Dunlop, whose children included Agnes (b.1688), Eupham (b.1689), Robert (b.1691), William (b.1693), Janet (b.1696), Walter (b.1701), Janet (again, b.1703) and an unnamed son (b.1707). The witnesses in 1690 were William (probably his father or brother) and James Henderson. Probably the same James was listed among those collecting money for the Parish in 1724. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitlaw. He was an elder of Hawick Kirk. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism in 1687. He was recorded as tenant in Whitlaw in 1706 and 1709. He witnessed bapisms in 1704 for Robert Cairns (tailor in Whitlaw), in 1706 for James Irvine, tenant in Hawick Shiel, for Robert Cairns in Whitlaw (along with Dand, presumably his son or brother) and for weaver Thomas Anderson, in 1708 for Thomas Penman and James Borthwick, in 1709 for William Lillico (herd at the Fleck), for Walter Scott in Nether Southfield and for William Gledstains at Whitlaw (both along with Dand), and in 1713 for James Crow in Brinsholme Town (when he was listed as an Elder). Probably the same James was in Whitchesters in 1708 when he witnessed another baptism. In 1717 (along with John Scott, candle-maker) he was appointed to collect monies from ‘Whitla, Whitlahaugh, Flexes, and Burnflat’, and in 1718 he was described as ‘in Whitla’ and already quite aged. He must have been closely related to Dand, who was also in Whitlaw. James (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitlaw. In Hawick in 1727 he married Helen Elliott, daughter of Walter in Brugh. Their children included: James (b.1728); and an unnamed son (b.1730). It seems likely he was son (or grandson) of the earlier James, who was elder of Hawick Kirk and related to David who was in Whitlaw in 1702. The witnesses to the 1728 baptism were David Gray and John Scott. James (18th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Jean Lamb and their children included: Agnes (b.1745), baptised in Wilton; and John (b.1765), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1765 were Walter Scott and William Robertson. James (18th C.) resident of the Allars area. He was already deceased in 1805 when the death of his son James is recorded. James ‘Jamie’ (b.c.1793) Hawick man who was born crippled. He famously told a story about meeting the lame Sir Walter Scott at the head of the Loan as a boy. He could be the weaver ‘James Grey’ recorded at about 41 Loan on the 1841 census. James (d.bef. 1808) from Ashieburn. The death of his son, merchant George, is recorded in Hawick in 1808. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Horsleyhill. John (15th C.) recorded as one of the ‘nobles’ on the witness list for the 1432 sasine for William Douglas being given the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire. It took place at Cavers house and the other men were all local. He must have been related to James Gray, who is also listed. John ‘Wi Yin Ei’ (16th C.) servant to the young Laird of Mangerton. He was listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. His nickname is recorded as ‘with on e’, presumably meaning that he has an injury to one eye. He could be one of ‘John Gray thelder, John Gray yonger’, who were listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of the murder of Englishmen during several raids along with Armstrongs, Fosters and others. John (17th C.) described as ‘in Lilsle’ (i.e. Lilliesleaf) in 1632 when, along with 3 other men, he feued Westbarns from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. In 1642 his son, also John, married Janet, daughter of William Wood in Raperlaw. John (17th C.) son of John, tenant in Lilliesleaf. In 1642 he married Janet, daughter of William Wood in Raperlaw. The couple received lands belonging to Wood in Lessuden and near Barnhills. They sold the Lessuden lands to Walter Scott of Raeburn in 1671. John (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to the earlier Johns from Lilliesleaf. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Laidlaw and their children included: Thomas (b.1771). John (18th C.) listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in 1793, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. He could be the John who married Agnes Scott (from Hawick) in Roberton Parish in 1789 and was living at Harden in 1793. Their children included Thomas (b.1790), John (b.1792) and James (b.1793). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wiltonburn Epps, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ashkirk Bridgend, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Heuchhouse in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was the Mr. Gray of Castleton who he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. John ‘Daft Jock’, ‘Jock the Ladle’ (1776/7–1837) wandering beggar and simpleton, who travelled around Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Peeblesshire in the early-to-mid 1800s. A native of Ettrick, he later moved to Selkirk with his packman father, Johnnie. He was also referred to as ‘Daft Jock Gray of Gilman schleuch’. His nickname ‘the Ladle’ came from a version of ‘And he played upon a ladle …’ that he used to sing, along with a ladle as prop. He was also known for imitating ministers and for bawdy songs. He would make up his own songs by throwing together rhymes from elsewhere. He usually wore knee-breeches, bright red garters, enormous buttons and a tall hat. He is mentioned in William Chambers ‘Memoir of Robert Chambers’. One of his songs was a popular one with the chorus ‘Rob Rodger, he ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [RM], with a different version in the Chambers book, with chorus ‘And the laddie he’s but young. And the laddie he’s but young, And Robbie Scott ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [DJG]. He would mimic the older local preachers and was sometimes disruptive during services. He was also known for singing bawdy songs. He also sang rhyming couplets of Wullie Craw’s, and verses attributed to him refer to people and places around Wilton and Hassendean, as well as other places. He was said to be the inspiration for ‘Davie Gallatley’ in Sir Walter Scott’s novel ‘Waverley’. A portrait of him was painted by William Smellie Watson. He is said to have been very attached to his father, and took to bed after his father’s death, dying within a week. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Collier in 1796. Their children included: James (b.1796); Jane (b.1802); and Christian (b.1802). The witnesses in 1796 were the whole Associate Congregation. John (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. His son Andrew died in 1805. John (b.1790/1) born in Crailling, he was a carrier and grocer in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was living at ‘North Town O’ Rule’, which is the cottage known locally as ‘Drythropple’. His neighbour was the poet John Halliday. His wife was Isabella and their children included Andrew, Eliza and Agnes. John ‘Jock’ (1812–83) born in Wilton, he lived in the West-end and was known as a cheerful simpleton. He stayed at the Corner of the Green Wynd and the Loan with his sister Lizzie and her husband James Anderson, and helped his brother-in-law with his dairy. He was a common sight on the streets, driving a donkey cart and having a pet starling. He later became bald, apparently as the result of a hair tonic, and is buried in the Wellogate – ‘Jock, the cuddy’s tail’s off’ [RM]. John Y. (19th/20th C.) left money to establish the John Y. Gray Prize Fund at the High School. Margaret (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1720 being made to stand ‘upon the usual place of repentance in sackcloth’ in St. Mary’s Kirk for 7 Sundays. This was for ‘her sin of drunken-ness and baseness’. Peter (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the Peter from Wilton who married Jane Leithead in Robertson in 1790. Their daughter Agnes was baptised in Wilton in 1802. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Redford in 1722 and their children included Agnes (b.1723), James (b.1725) and Bessie (b.1729). It seems likely he and his wife were related to Helen Gray and William Redford, respectively, who had children a little earlier in Ashkirk Parish. Robert (19th/20th C.) baker at 10 High Street around the 1890s. Thomas (16th C.) probably from Liddesdale, he was listed in 1535 among a number of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for stealing cattle and taking prisoners from Craik. Ninian Gray, servant to John Forester ‘Shake Buckler’ is also listed, and so may have been a relative. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married Alison Riddell and their children included: Agnes (b.1680); Walter (b.1681); Christian (b.1684); Agnes (again, b.1688); and Agnes (again, b.1690). The witnesses in 1681 were Walter Riddell (probably related to his wife) and Alexander... (perhaps Riddell) and in 1688 were Walter Riddell and Robert Hume. He is probably the Thomas Gray who witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish for Robert Scott in 1681 and for Rev. Francis Scott in 1684 and 1688. Thomas of Townhead (17th C.) had an ‘instrument’ brought against him, along with Rev. Francis Scott in 1689, by 2 of the Hassendean heritors. This suggests that he was associated with Hassendean Kirk and also refused to give up Episcopalianism. He may be the same Thomas who has an ‘instrument’ in his favour in 1675 ‘on the appearance of his wife, Bessie Scott, within the parish Kirk of Hassindene’. He paid the land tax on £214 for lands previous held by Scott of Alton and ‘Now called Know Townhead’ in 1678. In 1692 he ‘peyed formerly for the viccorage of Hassindeane alias Tounhead’. He was recorded at Hassendean Townhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls there is a record of ‘Thomas Gray of Alton’s Lands, now called Know Townhead’; it is unclear where his lands of Alton were. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Crackuooll’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. Perhaps the same Thomas was listed in 1724 and 1727 among those collecting money for the Parish, suggesting he was a Kirk Elder. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1714 he witnessed (along with Thomas Huntly) a baptism for John Little. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isabel Scott and their children included: Thomas (b.1763); William (b.1765); and Isabel (b.1769). The witnesses in 1738 were James Dryden and William Anderson. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Scott in 1745 and their children included: Thomas (b.1763); Helen, Isabel and Margaret (b.1765); and Isabel (b.1769). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Harden in 1787. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Smith and their children included: Thomas (b.1779) and John (b.1781), baptised in Wilton; and William (b.1787) and James (b.1791), baptised in Roberton. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Craggs in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Craggs in 1797. William (b.1796/7) born in Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Ormiston in the 1860s, having previously lived in Channelkirk. In 1861 he was farmer of 210 acres at Ormiston and employing 7 people. His wife was Marion and their children included John, Janet, Violet, Christina and Marion (sometimes written ‘Grey’).
Gray Coat

Gray Coat (grā-kō’) n. hill south of Dodburn Filters and to the east of Priesthaugh. It contains the remains of several different homesteads and earthworks and its southern slopes are crossed by the Catrail. To the north-east of the summit is an ancient cairn, about 6 m in diameter, but surrounded by 3 grass-covered banks; it is said to resemble the Rounds of Tivla (in the Shetlands), and probably a Bronze Age burial mound. The homestead is on the northern slopes, measuring 47 m by 37 m, perhaps defined by a twin palisade and with a house about 50 m diameter house inside. There are signs of cord rig on the northern and southern sides of the summit, as well as the souther-eastern slopes. Close to the summit are the remains of a settlement surrounded by a wall about 105 m by 60 m, with entrances in the south-west and north-east. The interior contains evidence of at least 8 houses. On the south-eastern side, beside the grassy track, are the remains of a small pele-house, possibly Peelbrae or Dodrig. The pele-house was 8 m by 4 m, with some rybats discovered in an excavation. To the south-east

lus, a fish with a small mouth and large dorsal fin, introduced locally from the south of England to a

released after a flood.

Gray oats (grä-ôts) n., pl., arch. an inferior kind of oats.

Gray row (grä-row) n., arch. a bread roll made of rye or oats – ‘Something ti serr as an off-pit ... a

the Great Bell (thu-grä’-bel) n. term used to refer to the new bell of St. Mary’s, recast in 1694 after ‘it was rent, anno 1693, and was of new founded’. A subscription was taken around the Parish, and an Act of the Bailies and Council was passed stipulating that only the families of those who had contributed (at least 12 shillings) were entitled to use the bell to announce burials, with the same restriction applying to the hand or ‘Deed’ bell. These ‘Havers of the Bell’ still had to pay a small fee for its use, however. The list contains 180 names, including some identifying information (occupations, nicknames, etc.), and hence is an invaluable record of Hawick’s wealthi-cer citizens at the end of the 17th century. In 1718 the Bailie Depute contributed ‘as much oak as was ane axtree to the great church bell’, meaning it got a new ‘axle-tree’ to swing on. In 1723 it was ordained that anyone who contributed to the rebuilding of the bellhouse should have the same rights as those listed in 1694. The bell was taken down (and presumably replaced again) in 1747 when work was done on the steeple. Repairs to the old bell contributed to the Town’s debts mentioned in 1612. The bell was replaced by a new one in 1763, when the Kirk was rebuilt. The new bell weighed 560 pounds and the exchange was arranged through ex-Bailie Thomas Turnbull in London.

the Great Border Games (thu-grä’-bör-

the Great Flid (thu-grä’-flid) n. popular name for the flood of the Slitrig in 1767, also known as ‘Hawick Flood’. This occurred on 5th August 1767, beginning about 4 p.m., and lasting until after 6 p.m. There was no great rainfall in Hawick and the flood only affected the Slitrig, with the Teviot above Hawick being easily fordable that day. The Slitrig rose 22 feet (about 6.5 m) above its normal level, as many as 15 houses were swept away, along with the Corn Mill, the garden wall of the Manse and the Parish school room. The smaller arch (at the east end) and part of the northern parapet of the Auld Brig were also swept away, and from there 2 men, trapped by the rushing waters, were carried off and drowned. Mrs. Aitkin narrowly escaped by crawling over a ladder laid between upper windows across the waters rushing down Silver Street, before the house was carried away. Four people trying to save belongings from Eckron’s house were swept down to the Sandbed and rescued there. Two other men were rescued after climbing on top of the kiln. A servant girl waded into her master’s house to rescue the £300 in gold that he had there, only to be carried away, and she narrowly escaped drowning, being cast onto a green downriver, still clutching the bag of money. It is also said that the flood carried off most of the records of the Town’s incorporated trades. The waters poured up the Backdамgate and filled the closes along both sides of the High Street as far as the Cross Wynd. Part of the Tower was undermined and in danger of falling. The flood was probably exacterbed by the arches of the Auld Brig becoming blocked with debris. There is a tradition that it started when a shepherd threw a stone into a loch at Winburgh Hill, disturbing the fairy folk! It is also stated to have been started by ‘the fall of a Water-spout’ (whatever that means!). The Haw-

ioners together in the kirkyard to pray during the flood, afterwards claiming to have helped abate the waters; although apparently the flood had already much receded by then. Another incident later recounted is that a baby was carried off in its cradle, but rescued without injury; similarly, it is said that a bedstead was carried off with a cat on it, which landed safely on a sandbank in the Common Haugh. It is also said that a Hawick shoemaker, who was several miles further down the Teviot and, unaware of the flood, noticed a board on the river bank, and discovered it was his own shop sign and that James Aitkin, returning from Kelso, noticed some of his own merchandise washed up on the haugh at Menslaws. There are several accounts of the events in Hawick that day, the most detailed being by Town Clerk John Gledstains. The loss of property was estimated to be £4,000 (see also fids).

Greathill (grā-hill) n. former name for a farm in Jedforest. It was described as 2 steadings valued at 50 shillings according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In the rental roll of 1541 the tenant was Archibald Oliver, paying 25s (it is ‘Greithill’ in 1538 and ‘Greithil’ in 1541).

Greatlaws (grā-laws) n. place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, south of Clerklands and close to a hill-fort. William Riddell was there in 1595/6. It was part of the lands whose superiority was inherited by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk from his father in 1636. ‘Bessie Stoddart’ (widow of Greatlaws) was owner in 1643, when the lands were valued at £104. It passed from Riddells of Greatlaws to ministers of the name Duncanson through marriage. Andrew Duncanson paid £104 for the land tax there in 1663 and 1678. It was probably among lands inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1694. In 1788 it was owned by Sir John Riddell. William Laidlaw was farmer there in 1797. It was owned by Sir John Buchanan Riddell in 1813 and valued at £287. Hedger Peter Stoddart and his family were there in 1851 and 1861 (it is ‘Greitlaw’ in 1595/6, ‘Graitlawes’ in 1630, ‘Greitlawes’ in 1636 and 1669 and ‘Greatlawes’ in 1670; it is marked ‘Greetlawes’ on Blaen’s 1654 map, but with the modern spelling on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Greatmoor (grā-moor) n. hill about 10 miles south of Hawick, between the Maidens and Cauldcleuch and reaching 599 m (1,964 ft). It is marked on the Ordnance Survey maps as ‘Greatmoor Hill’. The summit contains a large man-made cairn as well as a triangulation pillar – ‘Was there never a maid on Ettrick side Who waved to her love on his last long ride? Came never a steed over Greatmoor moss With the corpse of his rider bound across?’ [WHO], ‘Penchrise and Gritmuir, Ruberslaw, dark wi waist-high heather, And the slant, green, edge o’ the Cairter Bar’ [DH]. Also the name of another hill just west of Skelfhill Pen, reaching a height of 481 m (formerly written ‘Gritmoor’; it is marked on Blaen’s c.1654 map as ‘Gritt moore’, a little further south of its real location and is ‘Greatmoor Hill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Great Riot (thu-grā-I-ī) n. popular name for a public disturbance at the Boswells Fair of 1849. A young shepherd was killed by a railway navvy, and the suspect escaped from the police. The dragoons were called in, finding someone (probably innocent) to hang for the murder.

great teind (grā-tind) n., arch. the tithe due from grain – ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scoir 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great teynd, laik ane firlot, and 20 libs of vicarage’ [PR1627].

the Great War (thu-grā-wawr) n. the First World War, WWI, in which there were almost 1,000,000 dead on the Allied side, with over 3,000,000 casualties. Around 1,000 local men lost their lives between 1914 and 1918, i.e. about one for each day of the war. The K.O.S.B. were involved in the Gallipoli campaign of 1915, and there more than 120 men of Hawick and district died (over half on a single day). For Hawick it was also a time when the Stobs army camp was a significant part of local life. Soldiers were billeted in Hawick, and trained in several open spaces around the town. Women were employed on knitting frames, a job previously reserved for men, and many tweed manufacturers turned to filling military orders. The Common Riding was cancelled for the years 1914-18, with the Council resolving to do nothing while the war continued. However, J.E.D. Murray rode the marches on his own, and the Common Riding of 1919 was a special occasion. In 1918 the Common Riding Weekend was used for Red Cross benefit events and the Vertish Hill Sports were held on the Saturday. 19th July 1919 was declared ‘Peace Day’ with bonfires lit around Britain. The Vertish Hill Sports were held on that day, with about 2,800 children each being given a bag of cakes. On 30th August that year there was a ‘Welcome Home’ parade in Hawick, starting at the Drill Hall and continuing to the Volunteer Park, where there was a fete and sports day. The Hawick War Memorial was erected in 1921 next to the Museum, and there are other memorials in many of the local villages. A book ‘Hawick and the Great War, Great Warrington Sike

A Pictorial Record' was published in 1919 and a history, 'All These Fine Fellows', was written by Derek Robertson in 1999.

Great Warrington Sike (grā'-waw-rin'-in-sik) n. stream in Castleton Parish, which rises on Larriston Fells and joins Stoff Sike and then runs into Larriston Burn. There is a boundary bank and old enclosures near where it joins Stoff Sike. Little Warrington Sike is to the north.

the lands were owned by Forrester of Stanegarthside and by Oliver of Dinlabyre by the 1780s. The farm was valued at £420 in 1788 and in 1811, when owned by William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Labourer George Turnbull and his family lived there in 1841. Robert Jardine of Liddelbank paid the land tax there in 1874, with his home being on part of the former lands there (it is ‘Greneancahe’ in 1515/6, ‘Greneancahschaw’ in 1541, ‘Grenay’ and ‘Greanay’ in 1623, ‘grinach’ in 1678 and ‘Grinna’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Grene-hag’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land, while ‘N. Grina’ and ‘O. Grina’ are marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and it is ‘Greena’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Greena Hill (green-u-hil) n. hill in the southern part of Castleside Parish, just west of Dinwoodie and the B6357. It reaches a height of 222 m and its summit has an 11 m diameter cairn, with a triangulation pillar on top. To the north-east is a quarry, as well as a disused lime kiln, and 2 further lime kilns by the Tinley Cleuch. To the south-west, by the Muir Burn, are the remains of a lime quarry, 2 lime kilns and another building. There are also several sheepfolds, as well as boundary banks and traces of rig lines all round the hill.

Greenbank (green-bawngk) n. another name for Greenbank Toll or the farmstead that was there before the tollhouse was built. John Ballantyne was living there in 1766, Walter Cavers in 1767–71, John Hume in 1773, Charles Wilson in 1779, Walter Stewart in 1780, George Turnbull in 1781, John Muir in 1785–88, John Thomson was living there in 1795 and Walter Murray and James Scott in 1798. Adam Nichol was farmer there in 1797. Andrew Goodfellow was there in 1800. George Paterson was farmer there in the 1840s and 1850s (also sometimes ‘Greenbanks’; it is on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Greenbankhaugh (green-bawngk-hawch) n. former name for a cottage to the south of the lower Borthwick road, next to the turn-off for the Snooth. Walter Scott and family were there in 1841, when it was ‘Greenbanks haugh’.

Greenbank Hill (green-bawngk-hil) n. hill to the north-west of Greenbank and east of Alemoor Loch. It reaches a height of 336 m and there are signs of cord rig on its slopes.

Greenbank Plantin (green-bawngk-plawn'-in) n. plantation just to the east of Greenbank Toll.

Greenbank Toll (green-bawngk-tōl) n. former toll house at the sharp bend in the B711 about a mile west of Roberton. It was built in 1826 as an annex to the existing farmhouse when the new B711 was developed as a toll road. The small hatch for operating the tollbar can still be seen. A pond behind (to the north of) the house fed a former threshing mill and sawmill there. It is marked on the map as ‘Greenbank’ and was known locally as ‘Greenbanks’. The farm was once part of the Borthwickbrae estate. With a plantation about 300 m to the west is a circular mound, about 22 m in diameter, which may be a burial cairn.

Greenbraeheadis (green-brā-heeddz) n. Greenbraeheads, a farm in the Slitrig valley just south of Hawick, reached over the Hummelknowes Bridge, or via a track off the top of Wellogate Brae. Robert Shiel and John Cairns were tenants there in 1797. James, John and Robert Shiel were farmers there in 1841 – ‘… While Greenbrahead (in older times Priestcrown) To meet Crowbyres send the signal down’ [WNK].

Greenbraeheadis Brig (green-brā-heeddz-brig) n. another name for Hummelknowes Brig.

Green Burn (green-burn) n. stream to the west of Newcastleton, behind Kirk Hill. It runs south, joining Black Grain and flowing into the Tinnis Burn. The old farmstead of Greenburn lies along its banks, as well as grous butts and old sheepfolds nearby. To the east are the remains of 2 huts.

the Green Cafe (thu-green-kaw-fee) n. cafe that stood at 80 High Street, at the bottom of Broughton Place, leading to the nickname for that street. It was established in 1838, and existed until around 1999. Latterly it has been painted red, and was for a while a confectioner’s shop.

the Green Cafe Brae (thu-green-kaw-fée-brā) n. popular name for Broughton Place, also known as ‘the Cafe Brae’.

the Green Cafe Brig (thu-green-kaw-fée-brig) n. occasional name for the road bridge across the former railway at the top of Broughton Place.

Green Cleuch (green-klooch) n. small stream on the south side of the Hermitage Water, between Gorrernberry and Twislehope.

green coat (green-kō’) n. the long-tailed dress jacket in deep green, traditionally worn by the Princpals during the Common Riding. The origin of this tradition is unknown. In the late 19th century it was stated that the form of the trousers had changed, but the green coat had long been used. The first record of a Cornet being fitted for a suit was in 1815, but it is unclear if this was green. Ex-Cornet’s traditionally don their

Greenend Sidin (green-end-si-din) n. siding on the Waverley Line by Greenend farm, between Belses and St. Boswells stations.

Greenfield (green-feild) n. Marion (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Her name appears as ‘old marion grenefeld’. She was probably related to Thomas and William, who were also listed. John (b.1834/5) from Berwick, he was a teacher at Cavers School in the 1860s. He also served as Kirk Treasurer and Session Clerk. In 1861 he was a boarder, living at 20 Buccleuch Street in Hawick. Thomas (16th C.) recorded on a list of associates of Douglas of Cavers in 1541. William (16th C.) recorded on a list of associates of Douglas of Cavers in 1541.

the Green Gairdens (thu-green-gar-dinz) n. popular name in the 19th century for the area near Myreslawgreen before it was developed for the Convent and other buildings.

the Green Gress (thu-green-gres) n. the Green Grass, being an old West End name for the Loaning or Tryst ground. This was 1 acre and 34 poles in area and extended to both sides of what is now Rosebank Road. It was much used as a leisure area by West Enders, and as a gathering place for youths, leading to its other popular name the Sweerin Green.

Greenhaugh (green-hawch) n. lands in southern Liddesdale, probably an older name for Greena.

the Greenheid (thu-green-heed) n. former name for the area at the top of Myreslawgreen.

Greenhill (green-hil) n. farm to the north of North Synton, now known as Dryden Greenhill. Mrs. Govenlock was recorded as farmer there in 1868.

Greenhollis (green-hilos) n. farm in Liddesdale, on the east side of the Hermitage valley near Snaberlee, opposite Redheugh. South Greenholm is marked on today’s Ordnance Survey map, with North Greenholm gone. Aerial photography has shown rig lines and an enclosure to the northeast. It should not be confused with the lands of ‘Grena’ further to the south (where the Tinnis Burn meets the Liddel Water). It may be the ‘Greenhowe’ recorded in 1395 when Edward III bestowed protection on John Thirlwall and his tenants there and in Roughley, and also the ‘Grenewh’, valued at 20 merks, in Liddesdale recorded in a rental list for Douglas of Morton in the 1370s. It was owned by Elliot of Redheugh in at least the late 15th and early 16th centuries. It was one of 3 farms that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. It was one of 3 farms given by the last Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his daughter Esther in about the 1640s. ‘Gulenflett & Greeholme’ is listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Francis Elliot, Arthur Beattie and Archibald Armstrong recorded there. It was owned by William Manderson according to the 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, and valued (along with Leahaugh) at £136 15s 8d. Walter Elliot was farmer there in 1840. William Dodd of Greenholm lived in Newcastleton in the 1860s and John Routledge was farmer there in 1868 (marked ‘Greenholmie’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and also on Stobie’s 1770 map; it may be ‘Greenholles’ in 1612, ‘greneholis’ in 1613, ‘Greinholles’ in 1624, ‘Greenhoillis’ in 1637 and ‘Greenhollis’ in 1675).

Greenhouse, farm between Hassendean and Belses. It was once in Minto Parish, being part of the Hassendeanburn estate. However, in most records it was in Lilliesleaf Parish and was part of the lands of Raperlaw in the 1643 Land Tax Rolls, owned by Turnbells and Davidsons. In 1678 it was partly owned by Ralph Davidson of Greenhouse (valued at £104) and part by Andrew Davidson (valued at £65). John Stewart and Walter Davidson were recorded there in 1694. Andrew Davidson paid tax for 13 windows there in 1748. In 1769 it was bought by Walter Turnbull of Firth from Andrew Davidson. In 1788 it was recorded as belonging to Robert Laidlaw in Kingledoers, valued at £210 5s 6d. In 1797 James Turnbull was farmer there, when it was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls for Liliesleaf Parish. In 1811 it is recorded that ‘Part of Davidson of Greathouse’s Lands in Liliesleaf’ had been acquired by Edgar Hunter and was then owned by William Riddell of Canieston: at the same time, Ralph Davidson’s part was valued at £104 and Andrew Davidson’s part at £65, both owned by Robert Laidlaw in Kingledoers, as well as part of Davidson’s lands valued at about £37. Alexander Horsburgh was there in the 1860s.

the Green Hut (thu-green-hu’n) n. name given to several small shops in Hawick over the years, particularly one near the top of the Loan on the right (once a chip shop, now closed), one built off Weensland Road near the top of Trinity Steps (also once a chip shop, and still flourishing as a convenience store), and one that sold ice-cream and other refreshments up the Park. Some of them have also been known as the ‘Wee Shop’.

green kail (green-käl) n. the curly variety of kail, Brassica oleracea acephala, kail generally – ‘Itm, whatsoever person that stellis any of their neighbours peittis, turffis, green-kail, corn . . ’ [BR1640], ‘. . . or steills their neighbours peats, green kail, or other goods, under the pain of fining . . ’ [BR1696], ‘There’s naething i’ Hielants but green kail and leeks, And lang-leggit Hielants men wantin’ the breeks; Wantin’ the breeks, and without hose or shoon, They’ll a’ get the breeks when Jamie comes hame’, ‘I do not mean the best of you to want meal a week ot twa, you have plenty of gonyell and green kail . . ’ [WSB].

the Green Kirk (thu-green-kirk) n. popular name for the Hawick secession church at Myreslawgreen, also known as the West End Meeting House. It was established by the Anti-Burgher congregation after they had feued a piece of ground in Myreslawgreen in 1765 or 1766. Its roots went back to 1741, from which time several secessionists from in and around Hawick had attended the congregation at Midlem, and the minister there preached every third Sunday at Hutleburn farm near Ettrickbridge. This continued until the Hawick congregation was established in 1763, led by James Scott, farmer at Boonraw. The manse was not built until 1768. The church later become the West United Secession Church, after the breach in the Associate Synod had been healed, and was also described as the United Presbyterian Chapel. The first building of 1763 was replaced in 1823 (and a stone plaque bearing that date still survives). It was plain and unassuming and ceased to be used as a church in the 1870s, becoming a Masonic Hall until about 1923. It was also used for dances in the 1930s and the War years, when it was affectionately known as the ‘Rabble’. Afterwards it became a saleroom run by Bert Leishman and was finally demolished in 1969 and is now the site of Myreslaw Court. The congregation meanwhile moved to Orrock Church, which was built 1872/4 (probably on ‘particate’ lands once owned by shoemaker Robert Oliver). The Museum has 2 old collection ladles from the church and a communion token exists from 1768, as well as a communion cup and flagon inscribed ‘United Associate Church, Hawick, 1769’. A roll of the ministry is: Dr. John Young 1767–1806; Andrew Rodgie 1807–60; James Parlane 1857–69; Thomas Cockburn 1869– (the name derives from Myreslawgreen rather than being any reference to colour).

Greenknowe Toor (green-now-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 16th tower just west of Gordon, between Earlston and Greenlaw. The area was originally home of the Gordons, with the L-shaped tower built in 1581 by the Setons and later sold to the Pringles. It has a famous clock-wise spiral staircase to give advantage to defenders.

Greenland Hill (green-lind-hill) n. site of a suicidal advance during the Battle of Arras in May 1917. 6th Battalion K.O.S.B. managed to advance, but were cut off. Few made it back alive and at least 14 local men are buried in unknown graves.

Green Lane (green-lân) n. street behind the old Parish Church location, above Buccleuch Street, named after the Green Wynd (Beaconsfield Terrace) which it leads off.

Greenlaw (green-law) n. town on the Blackadder Water, built in the 17th century and functioning as the county town of Berwickshire for 207 years until 1903. The Market Cross and Kirk are the oldest structures, with Hume Castle nearby.
Greenlaw

The last public hanging in Scotland took place here in 1834. The town contains the restored New Palace Theatre, home of the National Institute for Theatre Organ Studies, and the old Town Hall, built in a Greek Revivalist style in 1829. A polished jade axe-head found near here in about 1840 is a rare example of this type of neolithic artefact in Scotland. ‘An Old Berwickshire Town: History of the Town and Parish of Greenlaw, From the Earliest Times to the Present Day’ (1905) was written by Robert Gibson. Population (1991) 589 (the origin of the name is simply ‘green mound’).

Greenlaw (green-law) n. John (14th/15th C.) attendant of James Glesdstone of Cocklaw (Ormiston) who is said to have defied the Percys when they besieged the tower in 1403. He declared that he would give up the tower if not relieved by 1st August. But before then, the English army had already moved south towards Shrewsbury. He is depicted as the owner of the castle in Wilson’s ‘Tales of the Borders’. John (16th C.) presented to Wilton Kirk in 1549, following the death of Peter Langlands (also written ‘Girnelaw’, ‘Grenelaw’, etc.).

Green Law (green-law) n. hill in the southern part of Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 368 m. It is north of the much higher Carlin Tooth, and now lies within Wauchope Forest. The ridge to the north-east is called Tamshiel Rig, and has the remains of an Iron Age fort. To the north-west, near what was called Coblaw Plantation are the remains of a settlement, consisting of an enclosure and foundations of 2 buildings. The site has been mutilated by forestry activity. To the west of this settlement was an old cairn, about 10 m across, now destroyed by a forestry road. green-lintie (green-lintie) n., arch. the greenfinch, Chloris chloris (also greenie).

green meat (green-mee’) n., arch. vegetables in general, green ones in particular – ‘...in Scotland the tyranny of the kail-pot has so firm a hold on the national stomach, that our countrymen can scarcely understand any ‘green meat’ which will not submit to the all-receiving domestic crucible’ [JAHM].

Greenriver (gree-ri-vur) n. house and lands just west of Bonchester, formerly called Hobsburn and recently reverted to the original name. The 3-storey T-plan house was built about 1770, probably incorporating an older house of the early 1600s. The house was the main mansion of the Stonedge estate in the 18th century. It was renamed by James Chisholme after his Jamaican plantation in about 1793. He is recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797, when he owned 3 horses. The Elliot family lived there in the 19th century. Robert Kerr Elliot is said to have left in a hurry in 1835 (when his father died) after being told by a builder that the house was unsafe; it still stands to this day. After that it was let out as rooms, and tenanted by Henry Elliot in the mid-1800s. The farm was tenanted by James Armstrong around 1900 (it is ‘Green River’ in 1797).

Greens (greenz) n. farm just south of Newcastleton and north of Mangerton, on the same side of the Liddel. It is probably the ‘Grenys’ listed as a 3-shilling land in c.1376 rentals around Mangerton among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. In 1541 it was valued at 10 shillings, with tenant Thomas Armstrong, ‘the Bul’. ‘Abie’ Armstrong from there was hung for murdering a blind man on Ancrum Bridge in 1623. Andrew Crozier ‘Jeans Andro’ was also there in 1623. It was possessed by Jock and Ninian Armstrong in 1632. In 1667 Walter Lorraine was tenant there, and also Walter Lorraine (possibly son of the previous Walter) in 1682. Hugh Beattie was tenant in 1682. In 1694 William Armstrong was tenant, with Simon Armstrong also listed there. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 164 acres, bounded by a common to the east, Tweedden Burn to the south, the Liddel Water to the west and the lands of the Laird of Whithaugh to the north. The farm also had 22 acres of land on the other side of the Liddel Water, bounding on Millholm and it shared a common of 116 acres with the farms of Yethouse and Chingills. Robert Thomson was there in the early 18th century, followed by William Thomson. William Ogilvie was farmer there in 1797. William Scott was farmer in the first half of the 19th century. Little Ogilvie was stone mason there in 1851 (note that this is easily confused with Greens near Kershope; it was ‘Grenys’ in 1541, ‘Greinis’ in 1623, ‘Grenesse’ in 1632 and ‘Greins’ in 1667 and 1694; it is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Greens (thu-greenz) n. popular name for Hawick R.F.C. after the dark green jerseys they have worn since 1885. Also used to refer to Mansfield Park as a location or the team’s clubrooms – ‘...Lose your bonnet, and a’ that was left o’ your voice. As the Greens got the wunnin’ try’ [DH].

Greenshields (green-sheeldz) n. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Deans and their children included: Janet (b.1684); and James (b.1687). James (17th C.)
Greenshiels

Greenshiels

Green-sheelz n. former lands in Castleton Parish, south-west of Foulshiels and west of Redheugh. It was listed on a rental roll of c.1376 in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’. Thomas Armstrong was tenant there in 1535 when he was denounced as a rebel along with other Armstrongs. There are remains of a farmstead and related structures on both sides of the banks of Greenshiels Sike. There are old boundary dykes defining the lands, including a field system and some rig lines. The farmstead consisted of at least 4 separate buildings, plus turf huts. The farm appears to have been abandoned during the 17th century. Further up the burn, on the eastern Greenshiels tenant in Birneyknow. He was recorded in 1684 on a long list of people declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. His name is recorded as ‘Greenshiels’. He was probably related to the Covenanter John. James (17th C.) resident of Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is probably the James recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men (including Steven, to whom he was surely related), for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He may be the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose son James was baptised in Hawick in 1684. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Whithope in Roberton Parish. His children included: John (b.1717); an unnamed son (b.1719); and James (b.1721). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1677. John (d.1679) from Cavers Parish. He drowned on the ‘Crown of London’ when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys when carrying a cargo of Covenanters captured at Bothwell Bridge and bound for America. Robert (17th C.) resident in Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name is written as ‘Greensfielde’ and he is listed ‘with an kilne’, suggesting he was an artisan of some sort. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas Turnbull. Robert (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. In 1702 he married Margaret Henry. His children included Christian (b.1703). Steven (17th/18th C.) quartermaster of the weavers in Hawick in 1693. In that year John Hardie was fined for pushing him out of his seat in the balcony of St. Mary’s Kirk, as well as pulling at his bonnet. He witnessed a baptism for John Thomson in Hawick in 1687. He is probably the Steven recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men (including James, to whom he was surely related), for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He was listed as a weaver among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. In 1694 he was ‘Steivan Greenshiels’ among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He is probably the Steven, son of Thomas and Janet Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1647. He is probably the Steven, married to Bessie Bridges, whose son Thomas was born in 1683, and perhaps also the Steven, married to a Rule, whose daughter Janet was baptised in 1687. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Scott and their children included Robert (b.1643); Steven (b.1647); and George (b.1651). Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘Greenshells’ in 1714 when he (with John Swan as cautioner) pleaded with the Session to allow his weak child to be baptised, although he and his wife were ‘under scandal’. He is probably the son of Steven who was born in 1683. He married Janet Scott and their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included Robert (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were shoemakers John Scott and William Riddell. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Elliot and their children included Isobel (b.1646); and Robert (b.1649). William (b.1652) may also have been his son. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: John (b.1653); Bessie (b.1655); and Janet (b.1657). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1703 William (17th C.) resident of Ormiston (although it is unclear if this was the local one or not). His testament was recorded in 1687. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1710 he was fined for fighting with William Hill (another weaver) in St. Mary’s Kirk. They apparently scuffled before the service (probably over seating) then struck at each other during the sermon. He could be the William whose daughter Marion was baptised in Hawick in 1692 (also written ‘Greenshells’, ‘Greenshells’, ‘Greenshells’, ‘Greenshells’, ‘Greenshells’, ‘Greensheils’ and variants).

side there are 3 shieling-huts and an enclosure (it is ‘Greneschelis’ in c.1376 and 1535 and marked ‘Greensheels’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; note that it is easy to confused with Greens, south of Newcastleton).

Greenhill (greenz-hill) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Rolls, when James Johnstone was farmer. It is probably related to Grain Hill.

Greenside (green-sid) n. house on Main Street in Denholm, which held the Post Office in the 20th century, until 1966.

Greensidehaa (green-sid-haw, -hal) n. farm in the northern part of Wilton, reached along Greensidehall Road. Walter Cook was there in 1708 and Adam Easton was tenant in 1709. Robert Easton was there in 1725. Bessie Sanderson died there in 1750. John Cook was there in 1797. It was owned by the Scotts of Whitehaugh in the early 19th century. John Ferguson is recorded there in 1797 and James Davidson in 1841. Robert and David Campbell were farmers in the 1860s (it is ‘Greensydehall’ in 1725; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map of Roxburghshire).

Greensidehall Road (green-sid-hal-roed) n. road connecting Stirches Road with Greensidehall farm and the Heap Hills, the name being unofficial.

Greenside Moss (green-sid-mos) n. former name for a boggy area near the eastern edge of the Common, roughly corresponding to where Acreknowe Reservoir was later formed. In 1734 it was one of the parts of the Common where the Town complained that the tenants of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs were encroaching. It was largely drained in 1788 (also called ‘Greenside Bog’, a name that appears in the 1767 description of the Common, and ‘Girnside Bog’, which is recorded in the 1788 Council records).

Green Sike (green-sik) n. stream that joins the Hermitage Water to the east of the Castle. The White Dyke follows part of its course. There are also other boundary dykes, rig lines and remains of a mill-lade there.

Green Sike (green-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on the eastern slopes of Millstone Edge. Near where it joins the Hartsgarth Burn there are the remains of a shepherd’s bothy, 2 or 3 shieling huts, a couple of sheep shelters and an enclosure.

Green Terrace (green-te-ris) n. street in the West End, very steep at its higher part. It was built in 1866, and named after Myreslawgreen. It contains the High Level Bar, and once also had a fish and chip shop.

Greenview (green-vev) n. house on Westside in Denholm.

greenwud (green-wud) n., poet. greenwood, a wood in leaf — ‘For ilka beaest o’ the greenwud is mine . . .’ [HSR], ‘. . . wherein a’ the beastes o’ the greenwud do krawll furth’ [HSR].

Greenwud (green-wud) n. Greenwood, former name for Girnwood, described as the lands of ‘Greenwood and the Lyne’ in several documents from the 15th to 17th centuries.

the Greenwud (thu-green-wud) n. the Greenwood, former name for a wood on the Wells estate. As factor of the estate, Archibald Jerdan described how 206 ash trees from there were cut and the timber sold in the second quarter of the 18th century.

Greenwud (green-wud, -wood) n. (Greenwood)

C.J. (19th C.) made a drawing of the Tower Knowe and High Street around 1850. Luke (b.c.1844) manufacturer who resided at Howlands. He was Acting Father in 1891. He married Euphemia Cranston. Their eldest daughter Mary married Dr. George Bannerman. Another daughter, Jessie, married William Oliver of Thornwood. Robert (1811–86) born in England, probably son of Luke and Betty of Rochdale. He was a textile designer and manufacturer in Hawick, partner in Greenwood, Watt & Co., with factory at Howland Mills. He came to Hawick in about 1833 (perhaps after making the acquaintance of John Wilson, who went to the Rochdale area to learn the trade of flannel weaving), later setting up his own business at Weensland Mill. He was said to be one of the first people to introduce power-looms to the mills of Hawick. He was also the first to use looms with ‘rising boxes’ (it is said that he solved one of the mechanical difficulties through the inspiration of a dream). In 1841 and 1851 he was recorded on the census as a woollen power-loom weaver, living at Weensland Mill Houses. He married Mary McBurnie, who was born in Cavers Parish. They had 9 children, including: Ann; Janet, who was mother of composer Francis George Scott; Elizabeth; Mary, who married Andrew Hall; Luke, tweed manufacturer; Grace; Jane Maria, mother of painter William Johnstone; Isabella (b.1855); and Robert Thomas (b.1858), draper. Robert (19th/20th C.) commission agent in Hawick. He lived at Roach Villa. He married a Furness (whose brother Robert Furness married Margaret, daughter of George Scott, mill furnisher).
Greenwud, Watt & Co.

Greenwud, Watt & Co. (green-wud, waw'-in-ko) n. Messrs. Greenwood, Watt & Co., tweed manufacturers. This partnership built Teviotdale Mills (Commercial Road) in 1877 and extended to build Howlands Mill on Victoria Road in the early 1880s. They moved out of Teviotdale Mills in 1888, and suffered during the manufacturing decline in the 1910s, eventually selling Howlands Mill to Sime, Williamson & Co.

the Green Wynd (thu-green-wind) n. former name for the road that led from the Loan towards Myreslawgreen and turned through what is now Morrison Place to join the river at the Coble Entry. It was originally part of the boundary of the area known as ‘the Acre’. The land there was owned by Bailie Turnbull in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It is clearly drawn on Wood’s 1824 map. It was mistakenly labelled as what had been ‘Westport Road’ (Beaconsfield Terrace) on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map, and hence there is later confusion about whether Beaconsfield Terrace or Morrison Place is the ‘Green Wynd’ – ‘There’s just ae road to Heaven, and that’s up the Green Wynd’ [JD].

Greenwynd Heid (green-wind-heed) n. former name for the top of the Green Wynd, i.e. Morrison Place.

greet (gree’) v. to cry, weep, whinge, complain – ‘there’s nae need ti greet aboot eet’, ‘it’s better that ee laugh than that A greet’, ‘O fair did we greet, a meikle did we say; We took but a greeting, and friends. This partnership built Teviotdale Mills (Commercial Road) in 1877 and extended to build Howlands Mill on Victoria Road in the early 1880s. They moved out of Teviotdale Mills in 1888, and suffered during the manufacturing decline in the 1910s, eventually selling Howlands Mill to Sime, Williamson & Co.

Grey (grā) n. Charles (1764–1845) Earl Grey, he was called Viscount Howick in his younger days. He became Prime Minister. Heavily involved with electoral reform, a reception was given to him by his supporters in Edinburgh in 1834, including an address from the inhabitants of Hawick. He is also associated with Earl Grey tea. Henry (c.1515–54) 3rd Marquess of Dorset and 1st Duke of Suffolk, son of Thomas. He may have been involved in the English raids of 1547, in which lands around Hawick were burned. In 1550 he was appointed Lord Warden, General of the English Marches. His 2nd wife was the daughter of Mary Tudor and he was the father of Lady Jane Grey. He was beheaded for his involvement in the conspiracy to put Jane Grey on the throne. Henry George 3rd Earl Grey (1802–94), eldest son of Prime Minister Charles, he was known as Viscount Howick until the death of his father in 1845. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Howick, the suburb of Auckland in New Zealand, is named after him. Patrick (16th C.) Lord Grey, Lieutenant of the north part of England. He led a party in 1547, along with many Kers and others to burn Ale Water, then Yarrow and Ettrick, then Hawick, together with the valleys of the Teviot, Slitrig and Borthwick particularly the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Brantholme and his friends. It is unclear how he was related to other Greys. It is possible he was the 4th Lord Grey of Scotland (d.1584), Sheriff of Angus, who sided with England during the Rough Wooing; he was nephew of 3rd Lord Grey and married firstly Marion Ogilvie and secondly Margaret, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford. Thomas (1477–1530) 2nd Marquess of Dorset. He was 3rd son and heir of Thomas, 1st Marquess. He was a nephew of Elizabeth of York, Henry VII’s Queen. He was a royal courtier, and fell in and out of favour. He led an unsuccessful expedition to Aquitaine in France in 1512. In 1523 he was appointed Warden of the Eastern and Middle Marches and took part in raids into the Scottish Borders, his men being credited with burning several places, including the town of Hallrule. He was also appointed Lord Warden of the Marches. He married Eleanor St. John and Margaret Wotton. He was succeeded by his son Henry, 1st Duke of Suffolk. William 13th Lord Grey of Wilton (d.1562) head of the Somerset family holding the other ‘Wilton’ barony. He won fame in France, then was one of the English leaders at Pinkie in 1547. After that he was sent to quell resistance in the Scottish Borders. He had a garrison of soldiers in Hawick and neighbouring towns in 1549. His troops ravaged Teviotdale after they failed to take Hume Castle. He was Warden of the English East March from 1553. He was afterwards involved with trying to put Lady Jane Grey on the English throne. Pardoned, he later returned to the Scottish Border, and was then involved in an unsuccessful attempt to capture Leith in 1560 (see also Gray).

He was probably the George born to William and Jean Manuel in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1801. George (b.1818/9) from Ettrick Parish, he was farmer at West Buccleuch. He was listed as a ‘Stock Farmer’ there in 1861. In 1868 he was recorded as farmer at Buccleuch and Ramseycleuch. George (1868–1960) son of James, farmer at West Buccleuch, where he himself was farmer later. He was born in Innerleithen and his mother was Christina Glendinning. He married Violet Glendinning, who died at Drinkstone farm in 1962, aged 76. They had daughters Williamena Mary Forster and Jean. He is buried in Ettrick. Gideon (18th C.) son of Walter in Colterscleuch. He married Isabel Laidlaw. Their children were: Walter (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1744). He may be the Gideon, son of Walter, who was one of 2 young men carried off from the Auld Brig during the great flood of 1767. Hugh (18th C.) ‘gauger’ or exciseman in Hawick. His son William died in Hawick in 1797. He is probably the Hugh who witnessed a baptism for Joseph Henderson in 1794. He could be the Hugh who married Helen Walker and whose children, mostly baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1779); Elizabeth (b.1780), baptised in Kelso; John (b.1787); Walter (b.1789); James (b.1791); and Helen (b.1796). Isabella nee Laidlaw (1764–1857) daughter of David Laidlaw from Highchesters. In 1785 she married Robert, shepherd at Harden, Heap, Todshaw, Greensidehall, etc. She had at least 7 children and died aged almost 93. James (16th C.) described about 1580 as factor to the Countess of Bothwell, i.e. Margaret Douglas, widow of Walter Scott of Branxholme. This may have been at Milsington. He is said to have been the ancestor of Walter, first known Grieve tenant of Branxholme Park, as well as the Grievess who farmed Commonside. It is unclear if he was an original ‘grieve’, however, a family tradition says that the local family was descended from the McGregor Clan. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Bowmanhill’, which may be ‘Bowanhill’ near Teviothead. He was foreman of the jury in 1612 which heard the case involving the death of Jock Elliot while imprisoned in the steeple of Hawick Kirk. His son William inherited his lands of Brotherton in 1619, when he was ‘in Bowin-hill’. James (17th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in 1648. Their son James was born the following year, and could have been James of Commonside. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Beatrice Gledstains and their son John was born in 1670. James (17th C.) tenant in Hyndhope (but it is unclear which one). The will of his wife Isobel Anderson is recorded in 1681. James (17th C.) tenant for the Duchess of Buccleuch at Linhope in the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (17th C.) shepherd at Priesthaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Ruletown in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 4 hearths there ‘for himself & cottars’. James (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Hassendean Mains. James ‘Wester James’ (17th/18th C.) tenant in Commonside. He was listed at Commonside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax for 2 hearths. He witnessed baptisms in 1699 for James Anderson in Ramsaycleuchbun and in 1704 for Robert Rodger in Whitchesters. He may also be the James in Commonside who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Dryden in 1706. Note there are (at least) 2 contemporary James Grievess associated with Commonside, making it difficult to distinguish him. They were ‘the two James Grievess tenants in Commonside’ who witnessed a baptism in 1711 for John Nichol, herd in Lairhope. He married Janet Elliot in Hawick Parish. Their children included: Helen (b.1700), who married John Anderson in 1723; Elspeth (b.1701), who in 1720 married William Grieve, probably a cousin, and had a daughter Joan, who married Dr. James Mounsey; James (b.1703), who became a doctor in Russia; and John (b.1705), who appears to have died young. The witnesses in 1700 were a different James (perhaps ‘Eastar’) and William Waugh. In the 1705 baptism record he is ‘distinctoris causa called Wester James’, and the witnesses were Adam Elliot in Lymiecleuch and Thomas Pringle in Cavers. He could be the same as the James in Commonside who died in 1712. James (1669–1712) younger son of William, farmer in Commonside. If he really died in 1712 (as appears on the gravestone in Borthwick Waas), then another James Grieve must have taken over from his son as tenant of Commonside. His son William was farmer at Colterscleuch and Southfield. He could be the James ‘easter in Commonside’ who in 1708 (along with Walter in Branxholme Park) witnessed a baptism for James Laidlaw, cottar in Branxholme Park; he was probably ‘Eastar’ to distinguish him from ‘Wester James’. They were ‘the two James Grievess tenants in Commonside’ who witnessed a baptism in 1711 for John Nichol, herd in Lairhope. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Armstrong and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Helen (b.1701), with witnesses smith John Scott and glover John Hart. He may be the James, tenant in Teindside, whose son James was baptised in Hawick in 1700, with witnesses Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Scott in Drinkstone. Margaret (b.1709), was also his daughter, baptised in Hawick, with witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash and Adam Elliot of Arkleton. Isobel (b.1710), baptised in Hawick, may also have been his child. He may be the tenant at Drinkstone in 1711 when his son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish, with witnesses Robert Scott in Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He may be the James who witnessed a Wilton baptism in 1721. James (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Commonside. His family had farmed there for many years. However, he appears to be different from the earlier James, who died in 1712. The rental records for ‘Teviotdale Head’ mention James senior and junior in Commonside in the period 1715–18. He is mentioned in a marriage record of 1720 for his servant at Commonside, Agnes Falside. He retired about 1724, after which the lease of Commonside was taken by Walter Scott, later of Wauchope. He became an
Grieve

In 1723 he also informed the Session about the ‘Fiftie merks, left in legacie by Margaret Grieve, his aunt’ (this may suggest that they were both children of Walter of Branxholme Park). Either he or perhaps his father was the James who ‘mortified’ 100 ‘merks’ for the poor of Hawick Parish, this being given out (mainly to those from the country parts) in 1715. He could be James who witnessed a baptism for William Hislop in 1721. He could have been the James who married Beatrice Gledstains in Hawick in about 1669. He could have been the James born to James and Margaret in Hawick in 1649 or the son of John and Beatrice Gledstains born in Hawick in 1646. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Todshawhaugh in 1716 and 1723. Perhaps the same James was at Outsides in 1718 and Eilrig in 1722. His children probably included (although there could be 2 families here): Walter (b.1710); William (b.1711); Robert (b.1713); Helen (b.1716); William (again, b.1718); Agnes (b.1719); Anna (b.1721); James (b.1722); Janet (b.1723); and James (again, b.1726). James of Easter Swanshiel (d.1733) probably brother of George, who was Laird before him. However, he only held the lands for a couple of years after his brother. He is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. After his death Easter Swanshiel was sold and annexed to Wolfelee. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in ‘Ridge’, i.e. Caerlenrig. He married Janet Wilson and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1720. He could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (1684–1781) son of Walter and Blanche Borthwick. Like his father, he was tenant farmer at Branxholme Park, as well as Todshawhaugh. He is probably the James who is recorded being in arrears for the rent of Todshawhaugh in the period 1712–18. The ‘servitrix’ to his children, Dorothy MacVittie, was married in 1721. In 1734 he is probably the James who witnessed the baptism of Gilbert Elliot (his grandson) in Hawick. He is recorded as tenant at Todshawhaugh in 1735. He re-leased Todshawhaugh from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744, but was recorded being in arrears shortly afterwards. He is recorded in a farming record of Robert Elliot (in Hermitage) in 1749. In 1751 he was renting ‘Whelmes’ as well as Todshawhaugh. There are letters of his to Scott of Harden in the 1760s in the National Archives. He was probably the James in ‘Branxholm-Park’ listed as a subscriber to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), presumably signing up years before it was published. He married Helen, daughter of John Laing of Westerkirk. His children included: Walter (1710–99), the eldest son, who succeeded as tenant in Branxholme Park; Robert (1725–83), who married Jean Curle; William (1726–86), tenant in Southfield; James (1737–73), who married Janet, daughter of William Scott of Woll; Jane, who married Capt. John Elliot of Southfield and Brugh; Anne (b.1721); Margaret; and Fanny. The James (b.1726), son of James in Todshawhaugh, baptised in Robertson Parish, also seems likely to be his child (even if the dates clash with those of other children). He and several of his family are buried at Borthwick Waas. James in Commonside (c.1694–1772) eldest son of Walter in Colterscleich. In 1722 he married Helen (1702–84), daughter of Gilbert Elliot of Brugh and Agnes Turnbull; she died at Broadlee in 1784, aged 84, and is buried at Borthwick Waas. As well as Commonside, he also farmed at Soudenrig and Over Huntly. In 1723 he was at Soudenrig and in 1724 was recorded being in Braidshead. The following children (baptised in Cavers Parish) are probably mostly his: Helen (b.1720); Janet, who died young; Isabel (b.1723); twins Robert (b.1724) and William (b.1724); Walter (again, b.1725); Agnes (b.1726); Gilbert (b.1728); James (b.1729); William (again, b.1729); Walter (b.1729); William (again, b.1731); Walter (again, b.1733); John (b.1735); Janet (again, 1737–1816), who married Walter Grieve, son of Robert in Deanburnhaugh; Thomas (b.1739); William (again, b.1741); Margaret (b.1743); and possibly an unnamed son (b.1743). He is buried in Borthwick Waas cemetery, where the headstone said he was 78 years old. His children James (d.1751, transcribed as 2 years old, but it would make more sense if this was 22) and Agnes are also commemorated on the same stone, as well as John and ‘brethren and 1 sister died while children’. Dr. James (1703–63) son of tenant farmer James (possibly called ‘Wester James’) and Jenet Elliot, he was born in Hawick Parish. He also had an older sister, Elspeth (b.1701), who married William Grieve, and whose daughter Joan married Dr. James Mounsey. It is unclear how he was related to other local branches of the Grieve family, but it is possible they were descended from Grieves in Commonside. Note that secondary sources describing his life are often contradictory. He studied medicine at Edinburgh University, graduating with an M.D. in 1733. His first position was in Russia, as a doctor at the Kazan and Siberian factories. By 1744 he was physician to the St. Petersburg land hospital, as well as to a guard’s hospital. In 1743 he married Elizabeth Tamesz (1725–58), said to be either Dutch or German. He then became St. Petersburg city physician, Deputy Director of the Russian Medical Chancery and physician to Empress Elizabeth, before transferring to Moscow as its city physician. In 1751 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in Edinburgh. He returned to Britain in 1757 to arrange the education of his son James Tamesz (1744–87), practised medicine in London, but returned to Russia in 1761. He then appears to have been working for John Hobart, Earl of Buckinghamshire, the British Ambassador. He is said to have received a snuff-box inscribed ‘Presented by the Empress Catherine to her body physician James Grieve’ in French. He translated ‘The History of Kamtschatka, and the Kurilski Islands’ (1764, facsimile editions 1963 and 1973). His only son, James Tamesz inherited his mother’s fortune, became a Moscow businessman, purchased property in Scotland and Surrey and is buried at Bath Abbey. He himself died in Moscow, although some sources suggest he was the physician at Charterhouse Square who died there in 1773. James (18th C.) resident of Southdeanrig. His son John was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1737. James (1713/14–1801) gardener at Newton. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1765 when his son Robert was baptised. He could be the James who married Jean Scott in Roberton in 1762. James (1737–73) son of James and brother of Walter, tenant at Branxholme Park. In 1771 he married Janet, daughter of William Scott of Woll. There is a James and Janet Scott to whom several children were born in Yarrow in the 1770s and 1780s; if this is him, then he died after 1790. He is probably the James ‘Junior’ who witnessed a baptism for William in Southfield (presumably his brother) in 1763. James (18th C.) recorded in Harden in 1772 when his son James was baptised. Probably the same man is described as ‘the now deceased Mr. James Grieve’ in 1773 when his son William was baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (1751–1838) son of Walter, from whom he succeeded as tenant of Branxholme Park. He is probably the ‘James Grieve, Hawick’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), with his grandfather James in Branxholme Park listed separately. He subscribed to John Learmonth’s book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the James recorded at Todshawhaugh on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as at Branxholme Park in 1788 and 1782–94. He is recorded in 1797 as tenant at Branxholme Park, with 11 farm horses. He farmed on a large scale, also being tenant of Riccarton, Braedlie and Sundhope (in Liddesdale), Todshawhaugh and Harden (on the Borthwick), Buccleuch (in Ettrick) and Sinale (in Northumberland). He was one of the trustees for the estate of William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’ (who died in 1808). Extracts from his diary were published in the Transactions in 1950. In 1821 he made some notes relating to the characters in the song ‘The Bonnie Lass o’ Branxholm’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In the 1832 electoral roll he was listed as a joint tenant (with William) of the Duke of Buccleuch’s lands at Branxholme Park. He is said to have told his son that in the past Branxholme was so heavily wooded that a man could ride on a white horse from Todshawhaugh to the Castle Hill without anyone being able to see the horse. He married Agnes Hall (and not Ann Sibbald, who married his cousin James), and she died in 1836. Their children were: William Oliver, tenant in Branxholme Park; and Thomas of Skelfhill. Note that he should not be confused with his cousin James, who farmed at Branxholme Braes at about the same time. James (18th C.) postilion (i.e. carriage driver) at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. James (18th C.) recorded at Howpasley in 1787 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Moorfarm’ (in Wilton Parish) according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. James (b.1763) son of William, farmer in Southfield. He was tenant at Roan in Castleton Parish, and was recorded on the 1788–97 Horse Tax Rolls, and in 1797 when he owned 4 farm horses. He was also taxed for having a greyhound in 1797. He was also said to be of ‘Roandead’. James (c.1771–1862) son of Walter, farmer at Easter Alemoor, Hangingshaw, etc. In 1803 he married Janet Brodie in Yarrow. Their children included Jessie, who married Dr. William Buchan Lorraine (who was born in Selkirk). James, J.P. (1773–1855) son of Robert, farmer at Stonedge, and Jean Curle. He was grandson of James, tenant in Todshawhaugh and Branxholme Park, and cousin of James who was contemporary tenant in Branxholme Park. He himself was farmer at Branxholme Braes. He is probably the James who was renting Branxholme Town and Castlehill farms in 1792 and who was renting...
Branxholme Town in the period 1834–43. He was recorded at Flex on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1792–94. In 1797 he is recorded in the Farm Horse Tax list as tenant of Branxholme Braes and Flex, with 7 horses for farm use. He also paid tax in 1797 on 3 non-working dogs. He was one of the trustees for the estate of William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’ (who died in 1808). He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1841 he is listed with 2 servants and in 1851 he was farmer of 2790 acres, with 10 farm labourers and 6 servants in his house. In 1797 he married Ann Sibbald (1779/80–1840); she may have been daughter of John Sibbald, younger of Pinnacle. Their children were: Ann (1798/9–1832); Jean (1801–22); Robert (1802–94); John (1803–92); William (1805–51), who worked in Liverpool; James (1807–62); Charlotte (1810–27); Margaret (c.1812–64), who died in Canada; Walter (b.1814/5); and Charles (1815/6–36). He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. James (b.1775/6) farmer at Wollrig. In 1861 he was there farming 480 acres and employing 4 labourers. His wife was Margaret and their children included James, Jane and Helen. James (d.1859) shepherd at Birneyknowe. He married Janet Renwick, who was sister of Benjie, a well-known molecatcher and poacher. Their children included: Thomas (b.1820); and James (b.1821), tailor at Bonchester Bridge. He and his wife later rented a cottage on Gatehousecote farm and both died in the same year at a farm at Hawthornside. James (1807–62) born in Hawick Parish, son of James, farmer in Branxholme Braes and Ann Sibbald. He became a doctor in Dumfries. He married Charlotte Sylvester Train. Their children were James and William (partners in Bullock Brothers in Rangoon), Henry Stewart and Arthur Sibbald. James (b.c.1817) born in Bowden. He was a farm worker at Midholm, then Howden, moving to Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, where 2 of his children were born. In 1861 he was farmer of 600 acres, employing 5 people, at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1873. He married Margaret Tullie, and their children were Mary Scott, James (who married Margaret Robb), Christian, George, John and Margaret Douglas. James (1821–1900) son of James, shepherd at Birneyknowe, he was born in Cavers Parish. He was an apprentice tailor in Hawick with Mr. Mitchell, working with him 1837–46. He was a journeyman tailor in Newcastle and elsewhere, settling down as a tailor at Bonchester Bridge about the time he got married. It is said that about this time he resolved to become a teetotaller and struggled to overcome his earlier craving for drink. He was appointed to the Hobkirk Parishes Council when it was first formed, and remained on it until his death. He also served as officer to the Hobkirk Heritors. He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Hall in Hobkirk in 1852; she was daughter of a shepherd at Gatehousecote. They had 7 daughters and 1 son: Helen (or ‘Ellen’, b.1852), who married W. Minto, cab proprietor in Hawick; Janet (b.1855), who married Walter Turnbull, carpenter in Bonchester Bridge; Isabella (b.1858), who married T. McGowan; Margaret (b.1860), a dressmaker, who worked for the Post Office; Mary Telfer (b.1863), who died young; Wilhelmina Elliot (b.1865), married Thomas Hogg from Selkirk; Agnes Rutherford (b.1868), married A. Bruce from Musselburgh; and James (b.1871), who was also a tailor. James (1833/4–1904) farmer at West Buccleuch. He married Christina Glendinning, daughter of Archibald and Violet Beattie. Their son Thomas died in the South African War in 1902. They also had daughters Agnes Margaret and Violet and sons William (who farmed at Stobswood, near Duns), George (who also farmed West Buccleuch) and Andrew (of Flass, Westruther). James (c.1843–80) only son of Robert and grandson of James, farmer in Branxholme Braes. He married Mary Turnbull (c.1846–90). Their children were: Thomas, who died young; Robert (1865–1920); and Mary Turnbull Pott (d.1903). James Wyndham Alleyne (1872–1939) eldest son of Charles John, farmer at Branxholme Park. He was born in Robertson Parish. He served with the Indian Forestry Service. In 1938 he was fined 10 shillings after his dog ‘arrested itself’ by walking into the police station, after being picked up 2 times earlier for not having a collar and tag. He lived at Beechwood Beech, Alton, Hants. He married Marjorie Patmore. Jane Little nee Hay (b.1825/6) daughter of Robert Hay and Ann Little. She married Robert Grieve (d.1853), who was a solicitor’s clerk. She took over the running of the Crown Inn in 1848 after the deaths of her father and then her mother. She continued there after the death of her husband, moving later to a smaller hotel at 8 Bridge Street, where she lived with her daughter Annie Little. In 1863 she presented the Museum with a toddy laddle that had been used at the Common Riding dinner for 130 years. She appears to have gone bankrupt in 1864, her assets being sequestrated. Janet (17th C.) resident of Colterscleuch on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Janet (17th C.) listed at Lairhope among ‘The poor in Hawick Parochi’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hascendale Parish in 1694, when she was at Horsleyhill. Joan (b.1738) daughter of William and sister of Dr. John, she was born in Hawick. She was also known as Joanna. She was sent to live with her uncle, Dr. James, in Russia (although some sources mistakenly suggest she was his daughter). In 1754 she married Dr. James Mounsey (1710–73), who was a surgeon in Russia, became known as a naturalist and was elected to the Royal Society. Her husband returned to Scotland in 1762, buying the estate of Rammerscales in Dumfriesshire (and being one of the first to raise crops of rhubarb there). He long believed that the agents of Empress Catherine were out to get him, and is said to have faked his own death. His last Russian descendant died during the siege of Leningrad in 1942 (although these may be from an earlier family of his). She remarried after his death. John (15th C.) recorded at Ferniehirst in 1494/5. John Hervey in Fairnilee had remission for several crimes, including stealing 30 sheep from him. His name is written ‘Johanne greiff’. John (17th C.) married ‘Jenet Inghill’ Their son James was born in Hawick in 1644. This could have been James of Commonside, although there are other possibilities. John (17th C.) tenant in Eilrig. He is recorded being ‘in Eleridge’ in the baptismal records of 1680, when the witnesses were James Hutton and Walter Grieve. His will is recorded in 1684. He was surely related to Robert, who was at Eilrig at the same time. He married Margaret Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Margaret (b.1680); and Walter (b.1682). John (17th/18th C.) tenant of Crurie near Eskdalemuir. He married Helen, daughter of Walter Grieve in Colterscleuch, who was said to be his cousin. He was thus presumably directly related to the Grieves of the Branxholme and Borthwick areas. His son Walter farmed at Airswood, and he had another son, John, from whom descended farmers at Deloraine and Bowhill. John (b.c.1741) son of Walter and Janet Anderson. He lived in Castleton Parish, specifically at Park, where most of his children were born. In 1767 he married Elizabeth Alexandra (b.1741), daughter of Walter Paisley and Margaret Dalgleish. Their children included: Margaret (b.1768), who may have married John Kyle; Mary (b.1769); Walter (b.1772), who married Eleanor Elliot and probably moved to Ontario; Janet (b.1774), who married James Elliot; James (b.1774); William (1777–1824), who married Mary Elliot; Jean (b.1779), who married James Beattie; John (1781–1850), who died in Westminster Township, Ontario; and Elliot (1784–1874), who emigrated to Ontario. Dr. John (1744–1805) probably born in Hawick, son of William Grieve and Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Grieve (who appear to have been married 24 years before he was born). His mother’s brother was Dr. James, physician in Russia and he was a good friend of Dr. James’ only son, James Tamesz (who would have been his cousin). His sister Joan (b.1738) married physician and naturalist James Mounsey (who served the Russian royal family, but returned to Scotland after Tsar Peter III’s death, and convinced that agents were out to get him, faked his own funeral). He studied at Edinburgh and Glasgow Universities and in the period 1778–83 served as a military doctor at Voronezh in Russia. He then returned to Britain because of his health. He had a broad interest in science, publishing a paper in the first volume of the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh on fermented mare’s milk. He practised medicine in London, and was elected to 15 separate medical, scientific and antiquarian societies, including the Royal Society. He returned to Russia with his family in 1798, acting as court physician to Emperor Paul I. He (and 2 other Scots) performed the autopsy on Paul’s body after his assassination in 1801. He was then physician to the family of Emperor Alexander I. In 1792 he married Rebecca Kinnersley (1771–1811). Their daughter Eliza Emma married Guy Lennox Prendergast and they had at least one other child, Maria Augusta. He died of a stroke in St. Petersburg and was buried there. John (d.bef. 1791) resident of Hawick who married Helen Thomson in 1769. Their children included: Walter (b.1770); Agnes (b.1773); and John (b.1784). His son Walter died in Hawick in 1791. John (18th C.) married Helen Cathrae. Their children Janet (b.1775) and Alexander (or perhaps Alexander, b.1778) were baptised in Hawick Parish. John (1754–95) from Westerkirk in Dumfriesshire, son of Walter and Jean Pott. His grandmother was from the Grieves of the Branxholme area. Sometime about 1780 he and his cousin George Stavert inherited the lands of Hoscote from their uncle George Pott, and he also inherited Craik. He lived at Craik and sold his share of Hoscoat to his cousin Adam Stavert in 1781. In the baptismal records for 1781 and 1785 he is described as 'Mr. Grieve of Hoscoat att Craik'. However, he appears to have still been tenant farmer at Hoscoat in 1785 and paid the land tax there in that year. He was again 'Mr. John Grieve in Craik' in 1787. He was farmer at Craik according to the 1787-94 Horse Tax Rolls. In Roberton in 1778 he married Isabella or 'Bell' (1757-1835), daughter of Walter Turnbull and Dorothea Chisholme; she was born at Firth and died at Meadshaw. Their children were: Margaret (b.1777); George (1779-1841), who was a schoolmaster; Walter J. (1781-1861); Dolly (1783-1806); Jane (1785-1835), who married William Moffat of Garwald; John (b.1787), who died in infancy; and Isabella (c.1789-c.1831), who married David Ballantyne. He died at Craik and is buried along with several family members, commemorated on the same gravestone as the Potts of Hoscoat. John (18th C.) married Isabel Pott in Hawick Parish in 1785. John (18th C.) farmer at Hartwoodmyres according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785-91. John (18th C.) wright in Hawick. His son William died in 1798 and an unnamed child in 1805. In 1809 his son John died in Hawick Parish; either he or his son was 'lang John'. John (18th/19th C.) from Stow, he married Janet Stavert in Roberton Parish in 1791. Their children included James (b.1795) and Mary (b.1796), baptised in Selkirk. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Blackburnfoot in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the John from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (b.c.1770) son of Robert, who farmed at Easter Alemoor and elsewhere. He had a twin brother Walter. He married Helen Watson in 1812 and Helen Grieve in 1822. He lived in Edinburgh. His children were: Jessie (b.1814); Walter (b.1816); John (b.1819); Helen; Thomas; and Robert. John (b.1775/6) corn dealer who lived at Gledsmeat. He was there from at least the 1820s. He was probably the John at Colterscleugh who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was recorded there on the 1841 census. He married Jean Hume and their children included: Robert (b.1819); Peter (b.1821); John (b.1823); Walter (b.1827), Betsy (b.1829); William; Isabella; Jean; and Mary. Most of his children were born in Cavers Parish. John (1800–80) wright of (Stobs) Woodfoot, son of shepherd Robert and brother of Walter. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Birkwood Foot (presumably Stobs Woodfoot) and was described in 1851 as a master carpenter. Along with his son Robert he started a coach-building business in Havelock Street. He was a member of Allars Kirk in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Glendinning in 1820 and after her death married Janet, daughter of James Cranston and Margaret Mitchellhill, in 1838. Together they had 14 children, many of whom lived long lives in the Hawick area. They were: Isabella, who married Kirkton joiner Andrew Scott; Agnes: Robert, who married Elizabeth Turnbull in Hobkirk; Helen; Elizabeth ('Betsy' or 'Betty'), who married John Lewis and later John Fleming, both joiners, and later in life had a grocer’s shop on the Howeagate; Margaret, who married James Christie in Hawick; John, who died of consumption; Catherine, who possibly married David Ballantyne in Hawick; James; Walter, emigrated to Victoria, Australia; married Elizabeth Miller and lived to the age of 91; Helen or ‘Ellen’, named after her recently deceased half-sister, married gamekeeper Thomas Simpson; and William, who was a joiner in Havelock Street, but died aged 23; David, also a joiner in Havelock Street, died aged 22; and Christina, who died in infancy. John (1803-92) 2nd son of James, farmer at Branxholme Braes. He was farm overseer at Howpasley. He married Mary (b.1804), daughter of Adam Glendinning. Their children were: Elizabeth (1827-96), who married William Beattie; James (b.1828), who married Mary Brown; Ann (b.1832); Robert (1833-1913), who emigrated to New Zealand; Margaret (b.1846/7); William (b.1839/40); John (b.1841); Adam (b.1845); Charlotte Mary Ann (b.1848); and Helen (b.1851). Katherine (1837-1916) daughter of Thomas and Marion Margaret Dickson. She helped plan the planting of shrubs at the Borthwick Waas cemetery, along with their sister Marion. She married David Ballantyne in Hawick in 1853. Margaret (b.1810/11) born in Galashiels, she was married to George, toll-keeper at the Eastern Toll in Hawick at the 1841 census. Her husband died in 1849 and by the 1851 census she was toll-keeper at Wilton Place North Bar. She lived there with her daughters Isabella and Jane and servant Betsy Wangh. She could have been the Margaret Lambert who married George Grieve in Lilliesleaf in 1828. Marion Fisher (1831-1921) daughter of Thomas, farmer at Skelfhill, and Marion Margaret Dickson. Along with her sister Katherine and Robert...
Noble of Borthwickbrae, she planned the shrubbery around Borthwick Waas Cemetery in 1895. She also left money in her will for the upkeep of the cemetery. She could be the Miss Grieve of Skelfhill who donated Roman artefacts from Cologne to the Museum in 1863, in addition to a shrike. Michael (b.1779/80) wool-spinner in Hawick. He married Rachel Scott, and she died in 1851, aged 64. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1814), who married shoemaker Peter Fairbairn; Elizabeth (c.1815–88), who died in Hawick Poorhouse; Walter (b.c.1816), who married Mary Oliver; John (b.c.1817), also a woollen spinner; Rachel (b.c.1822); Mary (b.c.1824–56), who died unmarried; Alexander (b.1826), mill foreman in Galashiels; Margaret (b.1829), who probably died young; and Christina (b.1830), who married tailor William Milner. Michael (c.1842–1912) son of Walter. He left Hawick in 1874 to work in hosiery manufacturing in Leicester and retired to Queensborough. He married Isabella Scott in Hawick in 1866. Their children were: Walter (b.1867); Maggie Scott (b.1869); Thomas Scott, who became senior partner of T. Grieve & Co., Ltd., hosiery latch needle manufacturers of Leicester, inventing the fashioning needle; Adam (b.1872); William Helm (b.1874); Mary (b.1875); Janet (b.1877); Herbert (b.1878); Isabella (b.1879); Agnes (b.1882); and John (b.1886). Michael Anderson (1858–1919) son of Adam and Jane Anderson, he was a joiner in Newcastle. In 1887 he married Margaret (1865–1930), daughter of Adam Nichol and Esther Hardie. Their children were Adam Nichol (b.1887) and Christina (b.1891). Norman William (1852–1936) youngest son of William Oliver, farmer at Branxholme Park, from his 2nd marriage with Sarah (or Elisa) Clarke (nee Wagstaff). He was ‘formerly of Eskdale and Liddesdale’, then was on the boards of several tea and rubber companies in what was then Ceylon, but was living in East Grinstead in 1891. He compiled some information about his family history in 1893. He married Charlotte Adelaide, daughter of George Hamilton Verity. Their children were William Robert, Christina Verite, Ruth Marion and Elsie Wagstaff. He died at West Heath in Surrey. He is commemorated at Borthwick Waas Cemetery. Norman W., (19th/20th C.) said to be a native of Hawick and rugby internationalist, who trained as a doctor and moved to New Zealand. In 1928 he gave £2,000 for a maternity home in Hawick, to be named after Earl Haig. It is possible this is confusion between Norman William Grieve and James Norman Grieve Davidson. Peter (18th C.) miller at Headshaw Mill. He married Margaret Thomson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Elizabeth (b.1740); William (b.1742); Margaret (b.1745); and Margaret (agin, b.1747). iMargaret (b.1745); Robert (16th/17th C.) farmer in 1609 when he was one of a large number of tenants of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane and others who were bound not to reset Walter Scott of Headshaw and others. It is unclear where he was farmer, or if he was the same as Robert in Commonsise. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘in Commonsise’ in 1632 when he and several others feued the lands of West barns from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He may have been father of Walter in Branxholme Park and William in Commonsise. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Commonsise. In the 1686 confirmation of lands to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, it is described how the lands of Wester Winds were ‘sometimes posses’ by him, and he also occupied Dryden, Easter Winds, Commonsise, Nether Croft and Hoghill. He was presumably related to the earlier Robert in Commonsise. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Eilrig. His will is recorded in 1686. He was surely related to John, who was there at the same time. He may be the Robert who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for John in Hawick Parish in 1682. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Teindside, whose testament was listed at Peebles Commissariot in 1686. He may be the Robert who (along with Thomas Borthwick, suggesting the countryside south of the Town) witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Hawick Parish in 1676. Robert (c.1690–1782) tenant in Deanburnhaugh. It is unclear how he was related to the other local Grieves. It is possible his father was James. His children were: James; Walter (d.1822) of Over Huntly; and Janet (b.1737). He died at Alemore. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1749 he married Jean Hutton, who was from Cavers. His children (baptised in Roberton, but with no mothers’ name given) probably included Jean (b.1751) and William (b.1758). Robert (1725–85) son of James, farmer in Todshawhaugh and Branxholme Park. He was tenant farmer at Stonedge. He married Jean Curle in Roberton Parish in 1772 and she died in 1814, aged 76. James (1773–1855), farmer in Branxholme Braes, was their son. They are buried in Borthwick Waas. It is unclear if they had any other children. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Scott and their son Walter was baptised in 1763.
The witnesses were Thomas Miller and George Kedie. Robert (18th C.) leather-dresser in Hawick. He was a subscriber to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (1741–1829) son of William. He succeeded his father as tenant in Southfield and also tenanted Hawick Shiel. He paid the Horse Tax at Southfield in 1794 and 1797 and the Dog Tax in 1797. He married Jane Huggan (1754/5–1830), who died in Lilliesleaf. Their children included: Mary (b.1765): James (b.1773); Agnes (b.1780), who married Thomas Oliver, farmer in Lilliesleaf; and Walter John (b.1787), tenant in Southfield and Hawick Shiel. Robert (18th C.) recorded as farmer at Harwood in Hobkirk Parish on the 1789–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He was succeeded at Harwood by Walter, who was probably his son or brother. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–89. Robert (b.1764) son of William, farmer in Southfield and Margaret Elliot. He was a merchant in Leith. Robert (d.1814) shepherd at Harden, Heap, Todshaw, Greensidehall and elsewhere. In 1785 he married Isabella, daughter of David Laidlaw from Highchesters; she died in 1857, aged 92. Their children were: Walter (b.1786), baptised in Robertson, who was a successful slater and plumber in Hawick; Robert (b.1790), also a shepherd; Margaret (b.1792), born at Heap; Isabel (b.1794), born at Todshaw, who married shepherd Robert Anderson; David (b.1788), born at Greensidehall; Agnes, who married slater William Scott; and John, who was a wright at Stobs Woodfoot. He died at Alton and was buried in Wilton Kirkyard. Robert (1790–1862) 2nd son of shepherd Robert. He also worked as a shepherd. He married Janet, daughter of Robert Glendinning and Isabella Murray in Yarrow in 1817 (although she had been born in Hob Kirk Parish). Their children included Robert, who married Margaret Allan and then Sarah Cunningham and died in Hawick Poorhouse. In 1861 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Old Belses, with wife Janet and children Jean, Margaret and David. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Leith who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had a local connection. Robert (19th C.) Clerk of the Course at the Common Riding Races in the 1840s. He may be the same as one of the other local Roberts. Robert (b.1801/2) shepherd at Slaidhills, above Teindside. He had earlier lived in Bedrule Parish. In 1861 he was a retired shepherd, living at Elliot'sfield. His wife was Elizabeth ('Betty') and their children included Margaret (b.1827), John (b.1832), Ann H., Esther, Walter, Archibald, Elizabeth and Margaret (again). By 1861 he was a retired shepherd living with his wife at Elliot'sfield. He could have been the Robert who married Elizabeth Cavars in 1822/3. Robert (1802–85) eldest son of James, farmer at Brazhorne Braes. He farmed at Whitchesters and later took over Brazhorne Braes. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is recorded at Whitchesters in 1841 and 1851 (when he farmed 1000 acres and employed 9 labourers) and at Brazhorne Braes in 1861 (when he farmed 1200 acres and employed 8 men) and 1868. In 1833 he married Mary Pott (1804–94). Their only child was James (c.1843–80), who married Mary Turnbull. Robert (1818/9–1853) of the Crown Inn in Hawick. Born at Teviothead. He trained as a solicitor’s clerk, but was recorded as keeper of the Crown Inn in 1851 and in Slaters’ 1852 directory. He married Janet Hay, daughter of the former proprietor of the Crown. Their children included: Robert Hay; and Ann Little, who was a governess. He died aged about 34 and his wife carried on at the Crown Hotel until 1866. Robert (1818–72) son of Walter John, farmer at Southfield. He spent about 12 years in Australia, returning to Scotland about 1851. He took over as tenant of Southfield when his father died in 1861. In 1863 he married Christina Gray (1844–80). Their children were: Walter John (1865–1948), who also farmed Southfield; William Gray (b.1866), who emigrated to Denver, Colorado; Robert Elliot (b.1868), who went to New Zealand; John Wright (b.1869), who also went to New Zealand; and James Christian (b.1872), also New Zealand. It appears there were no descendants of the 3 brothers who went to the southern hemisphere. The family are commemorated at Borthwick Waas. Robert (1826–1907) son of John, elder in Allars Kirk for 50 years, and grandson of Robert, who lived at several farms in Wilton. His mother was Elizabeth Glendinning, and he was born in Wilton. He worked for several years as an estate steward for Sir William Elliott of Stobs and Wells. He was recorded as land steward at Stobs Cottage in 1861. Along with his father he then started a coach-building business in Havelock Street in 1867. In 1853 he married Elizabeth ('Betty'), daughter of James Turnbull, who may have been farmer at Billerwell (and died in 1858, aged 85), and she died in 1861, aged 34. In 1865 he secondly married Isabella Ballantyne in Hawick. His children included: Margaret (b.1854/5); John (b.1859), who married Wilhelmina Balmer and secondly Mary Gavin; Henry; Robert Ballantyne; William Henry; Annie Mary Jane; Annie Mary Jane (again); and Elizabeth, ‘Lizzie’. He kept a diary (from 1857 to 1865, when he was working on the Stobs estate), which has been transcribed by one of his descendants. Robert (1825/6–1900) born in Bowden, he was farmer at Huntly in Kirkhope Parish (including land in Ashkirk Parish) from 1857. He took over the tenancy from Elliot Grieve, and married Elliot’s daughter Jessie (also known as Janet). He was at Over Huntly in the 1860s and 70s and recorded at ‘Outer Huntly’ in 1861. His children included James (eldest son, who died at Carbon, Alberta), Henry (died at Saltcoats, Saskatoon), Elliot (died at Tweedmouth), Walter (4th son, who died aged 12), John Robert (youngest son, who died young) and Christina (joint tenant in Over Huntly until 1921). The family are commemorated on a gravestone in Borthwick Waas. Robert (1865–1920) only surviving son of James, farmed at Whitchesters and Branxholme Braes. His children included: James; and Robert Archibald Vivian (1907–42), who was killed in action in the Middle East. Robert (1868–1945) younger son of Robert, tenant in Southfield. He married Isabella Lillies, and had no descendants. Robert (1901–77) son of Walter John, farmer at Southfield. He took over the tenancy when his father retired in 1937. His son Walter carried on with the farm until 1988, by which time the same family had held the tenancy for more than 230 years. Robert Archibald Vivian ‘Vivian’ (1907–42) son of Robert and grandson of James, farmer at Branxholme Braes. He played rugby for Hawick and was Cornet in 1929. He was a Lieutenant in the Gordon Highlanders and was killed in action at El Alamein. He married Nora, youngest daughter of Charles James Glenny. He is commemorated at Borthwick Waas. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name was recorded as ‘Thome Greif’ and he was probably related to Will, who was also listed. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wigg in Hobkirk Parish when his daughter Helen was baptised in 1788. He is probably the Thomas who married Helen Stevenson in Hawick in 1774. Their other children included: Thomas (b.1778), baptised in Hawick; Betty (b.1782), also baptised in Hawick; and John Stevenson (b.1790), baptised in Hobkirk. Thomas (1738/9–1828) farmer at Glendinning and at Muselee. He is recorded at Muselee on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and also paid the dog tax there in 1797. He is probably the Thomas who (along with Charles Scott at Commonside) witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot in 1782. He married Jane, daughter of James Stevenson and Jane Scott; she died at Muselee in 1797, aged 43. He himself died at Glendinning and they are commemorated on a gravestone in Borthwick Waas. He may be the James, son of James, baptised in 1739 in Cavers Parish, probably son of James in Commonside. John Stevenson Grieve, baptised in Hobkirk in 1790, may have been his son. Thomas (1797–1848) farmer at Branxholme Park and later tenant at Skelfhill. He was the younger son of James, farmer at Branxholme Park, and brother of William Oliver. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was wealthy enough to be employing a governess in 1841. In Hawick in 1822 he married Marion Margaret, youngest daughter of Archibald Dickson of Housebyres, and she died in 1860, aged 56. Their children were: James (1825–44); Archibald (1827–1921); William (1829–85), who farmed Skelfhill after his father died; Marion Fisher (1831–1921); Catherine (1833/4–35); Thomas (1834–79), who was a sailor and died at Valparaiso; Walter (1836–82); Katherine (1837–1916), who married David Ballantyne in Hawick; John Scott (1840–93); and Margaret (1843–1903). Thomas Gordon (b.1844) 3rd son of William Oliver, tenant of Branxholme Park. He was a Lieutenant in the 6th Dragoon Guards. He married Fanny Strickland and their children were Marion Alison and Lillian de Alvarada. He could be the Thomas who presented photographs of an Australian chief to the Museum in 1863. Thomas (1873–1902) born in Innerleithen, son of James. His father was later farmer at West Buccleuch. He was killed at Bloemfontein in the Boer War, and his name is commemorated on the Hawick Boer War Memorial. Walter (1646–1721) possibly son of Robert and descendant of the James recorded about 1580. He was also likely to have been brother of William, tenant in Commonside. He was tenant of Branxholme Park, signing the lease in 1691. He was recorded as a householder at Branxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. He was ‘in Park’ when he witnessed baptisms in 1705 for Robert Nixon in Dodburn, in 1708 for James Laidlaw, a cottar in Branxholme Park, in 1709 for Robert Laidlaw in Haregrain and in 1713 for Walter Scott of Merrylaw (whose wife Margaret Grieve may have been related to him) and for John Elliot in Goldielands. He married Blanche (or ‘Blench’, 1661–1716), daughter of William Borthwick of Reeshaw. Their children included: James (1684–1781), tenant of Branxholme Park and Todshawhaugh; Margaret (b.1671); Robert (b.1676); and 3 unnamed children christened in the 1670s. Walter in Colterscleuch may also have been a son. The witnesses in 1676 were William Grieve (perhaps his brother) and John Bell. He was buried at Borthwick Waas, along with his wife and descendants. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for John Blake in 1674 and another for John in Elrig (probably a relative) in 1680. Walter (d.1688) son of William in Commonside and brother of James, who was also tenant there. He died along with his son William and daughter Jean, all within a few months of each other, and are buried at Borthwick Waas. His will is recorded in 1688. Walter (c.1670–1710) farmer in Colterscleuch. He was said to be brother of James, tenant in Branxholme Park, and hence a son of Walter (they are commemorated together at Borthwick Waas). In 1708 he was described as ‘tenant in Colterschulch in Cavers parish’ when his son was baptised in Hawick. His wife was probably Katherine Ogilvie (d.1759). His children were: James (b.c.1694), tenant in Commonside and Over Huntly; Walter, who married Janet Anderson from Tushielaw; William (perhaps the William baptised in Hawick in 1698), who had at least 1 son; Hugh (b.1708), baptised in Hawick, who is said to have had a son; Gideon, who married Isabel Laidlaw; and at least one daughter, possibly Helen, who married John Grieve of Crurie, said to be a cousin. The witnesses in 1708 were Walter Scott in Crumhaugh and William Clerk in Southdeanrig. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded at Hoscote in 1721 when his son Robert was baptised. It is unclear how he is related to other Grieves. Walter (b.c.1700) son of Walter in Colterscleuch. In 1727 he married Janet Anderson from the Tushielaw family. Their children were: John (b.1728); Walter (b.1730); Michael (b.1732); Christian (b.1734); Margaret (b.1736); and James (b.1740). Walter (d.1781) recorded as ‘Kirk Officer’ when he died in Hawick Parish in 1781. Walter (1710–99) son of James. Like his father he was tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch at Branxholme Park. He was recorded renting Branxholme Park from at least 1745. Along with John Elliot (younger of Borthwickbrae) he leased the lands of Linhope from the Buccleuch estates in 1744. He paid the window tax for Branxholme Park in 1748. He was involved in loans with the Elliots of Harwood in the 1750s. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1777. He rented Todshawhaugh and Whames in 1792. He held the lease for Todshawhaugh, where he was recorded in 1796 when there was a bond between William Elliot of Harwood and others with him. He was also farmer at Todshawhaugh on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 1 saddle horse and 3 farm horses in 1797, as well as paying the dog tax in 1797. His first wife was Katherine (1718–59), daughter of Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, and the couple had children relatively late in life. He secondly married Magdaline, daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. His surviving children were: James (1751–1838), the only son; Helen (or Eleanor), who married Alexander Scott of Synton; Margaret (1755–86), who married John Balfour in Pilrig; Catherine (1757–86), who married William Sibbald of South Leith; and Jane (1762–87). The witnesses to the 1757 baptism were William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres (his brother-in-law) and Mr. Grieve of Todshawhaugh (probably his father James). He died at Todshawhaugh. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Murray, and their children included James (b.1744). Walter (c.1724–90) son of John, farmer in Crurie. He may have been born in Moffat and was farmer at Crooks and Airswood, also in Dumfriesshire. He also worked as an architect. In 1744 in Rober- ton Parish he married Jean (1727–77), daughter of Adam Pott and Betty Elliot. The marriage was in 1744, with his wife’s sister Betty marrying Thomas Stavert at the same time. Their children were: John and Elizabeth, who died in infancy; Adam (b.1748), who may also have died young; Helen (1750–63); Nathaniel (b.1751), also died in infancy; John (1754–95), who was Laird (or perhaps tenant) of Hoscote and Craik; Betty (b.1756); Helen (b.1764); and Nathaniel (again, b.1770). Walter (1736/7–1822) son of Robert in Deaneburnah. He farmed at Hungryhill, Easter Alemoor and Hangingshaw, and also spent time in Perthshire. In Robertson in 1762 he mar- ried Janet Grieve (1737–1816), daughter of James in Commonside. Their children were: Robert (1762/3–87), who died unmarried; twins Walter and John (b.c.1770); James (c.1771–1862); Archibald Campbell (b.c.1775); Elliot (c.1777–1858).

who married Harriet Turnbull and was tenant at Over Huntly; and Jannet (1779–1858), who married Andrew Aitchison. He died at Over Huntly and was buried at Borthwick Waas. Walter (b.1767) farmer at Southfield, son of William and Mary Elliot. He is easily confused with the slightly later Walter John of Southfield (and the marriages are very similar, so they may be confused in family histories). He is recorded on the 1790–91 Horse Tax Rolls at Southfield. He is probably the Walter recorded as tenant at Howpasley in 1794 and 1797, as owner of 3 horses, and who also paid the dog tax at Howpasley in 1797. He is probably also the Walter who died unmarried in 1801. Walter (c.1770–1851) son of Walter and Janet Grieve. He was thus descended from Grieves in Colterscleuch and Deanburnhaugh. He was born at Broadlee in the Borthwick and had a twin brother John. He farmed at Craiglands in Dumfriesshire. He married Janet Campbell Veitch (who was christened in Lilliesleaf) and had 9 children: Robert (b.1797), who married Janet Murray; Elizabeth (b.1798), who married John Hogg; Jannet (b.1800), who married Andrew Watherston; Helen (b.1803), who married Francis Scott; Margaret (b.1805), who married David Brydon; John (b.1808), who married Mary Burns; Jane (b.1811), who died young; Walter (b.1813), who was also born at Broadlee, emigrated to Queensland and married Ann Gordon; and James (b.1818), who was born at Hartwoodmyres. Walter (b.1781) son of John and Isabella Turnbull. He is sometimes referred to as ‘Walter J.’ and is easy to confuse with Walter John. His father farmed at Hoscote and Craik, and he was born at Hoscote. He is referred to as being of Langwell. He married Christian Brydon. His wife is recorded as ‘Annuitant’ at about 12 Buccleuch Street in 1851 and is listed among the local gentry in a directory of 1852. He may thus be the ‘Mr. Grieve’ whose property is shown on Wood’s 1824 map at about No. 12 Buccleuch Street. His children included: Isabella; and Helen. Walter (18th/19th C.) described as ‘late of Langwell’ on his gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. He married Christian Brydon, who died in Hawick in 1854, aged 70. Walter ‘Wat’ (1786–1856) Slater of 23 Buccleuch Street, son of Robert (a shepherd in Roberton) and Isabella Laidlaw. He learned his trade with Thomas Cathrae, and started his own plumbing and slating business about 1805. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory as a Slater and Glazier. He married Janet Scott in Wilton, and she died in 1821, aged 27. Their only surviving child was Agnes, who married engineer Adam Melrose. He later married Agnes Scott of Milston, who died in 1865, aged 80. On the 1841 census he was living on Buccleuch Street with wife Agnes and daughter Agnes. A portrait of him exists. Walter John (1787–1861) farmer at Southfield and Hawick Shiel. Born in Hobkirk Parish, he was son of Robert. However, he was surely related to the earlier Walter of Southfield. He was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826. In 1861 he was farming 650 acres at Southfield and employed 3 men. He married Christian (1786–1880), daughter of William Elliot and Margaret Anderson from Winningtonrig; this was in Cavers Parish in 1812. Their children were: Margaret (1813–19); Jean or Jane (1814–81), who married builder James Harkness; Mary Christian (1816–45), who died unmarried; Robert (1818–72), who also tenanted Southfield; Wilmina or Wilhelmina (1820–78), who married draper James Turnbull; Agnes (1822–47), who married Walter Purdom and died at Ormiston; William (1824–78), who emigrated to Keppel, Ontario, Canada; and Helen Margaret (1826–85), who died in Hawick, unmarried. He is buried at Borthwick Waas, along with several of his family. Walter (b.1805/6) agricultural labourer at Hallrule Porter Lodge according to the 1841 census. His wife was Jean and their children Robert, Helen, John, James and Isabella. Walter (1813–96) son of Walter, he was born at Broadlee in the Borthwick valley and christened in Ashkirk Parish. He emigrated to Queensland, Australia, where he married Ann Gordon and had 10 children. Walter (19th C.) plumber of W. Grieve & Son, 20 Buccleuch Street. Although he was no relation of the Walter Grieve of the plumbers and slaters business at 23 Buccleuch Street, he nevertheless worked for the older Walter and eventually took over the business. He may be the Walter recorded in about 1875 owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Walter (c.1816–48) probably son of Michael and Rachel Scott. He was a wool-spinner in Hawick. In 1841 he married Mary Oliver, who died in 1902, aged 82. His wife was sister of William Oliver, the blind fiddler. Their children were: Michael (b.c.1842), who worked in hosiery manufacturing in Leicester, and had a son Thomas who invented a fashioning needle; Adam (b.c.1845), who was a mason in Edinburgh; and Agnes (b.c.1847), who married Crimean War veteran Andrew Butler. Walter (b.1827) born in Teviothead Parish, son of John and Jean Hume.
He was a plumber, slater and glazier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 5 Slitrig Bank with his widowed mother (then called ‘Janet’), and he was then an employer of 8 men and 3 boys. He married Elizabeth Rogers and their children included: Mary (b.1862); John (b.1864); Walter Thomas (b.1865), who was Cornet in 1895; George Glen Rogers (b.1868); William Rogers (b.1871); and Jane Hume Rogers (b.1873). Walter (b.1838) son of James and Janet Inglis. He lived at Southfield, where most of his children were born. In 1864 he married Joanna Jardine (b.1846). Their children included: James (b.1867); Abraham (b.1868); Jane (b.1872); Janet (b.1874); Isabella (b.1878); Christina (b.1881); and Adam (b.1884). Walter John (1865–1948) son of Robert and Christina Gray. He took over the tenancy of Southfield while still a minor after the deaths of his father in 1872 and mother in 1880. He was known locally as a keen cyclist in the early days of that sport. He served as factor to the Duke of Buccleuch at Bowhill about 1902–12, living at Carterhaugh. He was a member of the Hawick Archæological Society and local farming organisations. He married Isabella Elizabeth (1873/4–1953), daughter of Andrew Easton of Todrig, and secondly married Jane Scott in 1900. Their children were: Robert Elliot (b.1901), who took over the tenancy of Southfield; Jane Scott (1903–77); and Christina Gray (1904–70). He retired in 1937 and died at 29 Orchard Terrace. Walter Thomas (b.1865) son of Walter and Elizabeth Rogers. He was a plumber and served as Cornet in 1895. He was the first Cornet to be presented with the Cornet’s Medal by the Provost. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed. William (1631/2–1701) tenant in Commonside. He was presumably related to other local Grieves. He was listed as tenant (along with James, as well as John Waugh) at Commonside on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may have been brother of Walter, tenant in Branhholme Park; he may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1676. His children included: Walter, who had 2 children William and Jean who died with him in 1688; and James, who succeeded as tenant in Commonside. He is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. William (17th C.) shepherd at Priesthaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) probably descended from the Grieves in Commonside. In 1720 in Hawick he married Elspeth (or Elizabeth), daughter of ‘Wester James’ Grieve; she may have been his cousin. Their children included: Robert (b.1728); William (b.1731); another William (b.1733); Joan (b.1738), who married Dr. James Mounsey; and John (b.1744). He may be the former tenant of Allanhaugh Mill described as being deceased in 1767. William (1707–1800) son of James, farmer at Commonside. He was tenant at Colterscleuch and Southfield. In 1744 he is recorded as tenant of Colterscleuch and Westcoterig, along with Gideon Grieve, leasing from the Buccleuch Estates. Shortly after that he moved to Southfield. He was probably the tenant in Nether Southfield for whom James Rutherford was shepherd. In 1757 he was tenant at Southfield, and was found (along with other neighbouring tenant farmers) to be making ‘bakes’ at Black Grain Moss, against the explicit orders of the Town Council. As a result a group led by Bailie Robert Scott mustered in Hawick at 4 a.m. and went up to the Common, to break up the peats. He paid the Horse Tax at Southfield in 1785–89. He married Betty Grieve (1708/9–85). Their children included: Walter (b.1733); Hugh (b.1738); Robert (b.1741), who also tenanted Southfield; Mary (1744–89), who married Alexander Baptie, tenant in Southdean; and James (b.1748). He was 93 when he died and is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (18th C.) recorded getting married in Wilton Parish in 1730, but with no wife’s name recorded. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1729 for Thomas Stoddart, resident of Stouslie and another in 1735 for William Nichol, also resident of Stouslie. William (1726–86) 2nd son of James, tenant of Branhholme Park and Todshawhaugh. He was involved in a bond with Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1759. He was himself tenant farmer at Southfield. It is also possible that he was one of the 2 William Grieves who tenanted Allanhaugh Mill in the early-to-mid 18th century. In 1751 he married Margaret Mary, daughter of Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig (who later farmed at Wintoning Rig). Their children were: Mary (1760–91), who married hosier John Nixon in Hawick in 1782; Ann (1761–1834), who married Rev. John Laurie in Hawick in 1786; James (b.1763), tenant in Roan; Christian or Catherine (1763–83), who may have married John Elliot farmer at Millburn, in Hawick in 1783; Robert (b.1764), who worked as a merchant in Leith; Helen; Jean (d.1810); Isobel (d.1805), who married John Kedie in Hawick in 1785; Tibbie, who married teacher Christopher Armstrong; Margaret (b.1765), who may also have married an Armstrong; Walter (1767–1801), who married Christina Elliot and continued to farm at Southfield as well as at HowPasley; Janet, who married William Robertson, carpet manufacturer in Hawick in 1789; and William. The witnesses in 1763 were Robert Elliot, ‘Ridge’ (his father-in-law) and James Grieve ‘Junior’ (probably his brother) and in 1764 were ‘Mr Robert Elliot’ (presumably his father-in-law) and William Elliot, ‘Winnington ridge’. He may be the ‘William Grieve, Hawick’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). William (d.bef. 1809) tailor in Hawick. He married Henrietta Scott in Hawick in 1784, and she died in 1809. His son Walter died in Hawick in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Linhope, recorded as owner of a horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other local Grieves. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Phaup, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is presumably not the same man as the shepherd at Linhope, who is listed separately. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs at ‘Phaap’ in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) tenant at Henwoodie in the 1820s and 30s. William Oliver (1796–1875) son of James and Agnes Hall. He succeeded his father as tenant farmer of Branxholme Park, East Buccleuch and Sundhope. He was President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club and was heavily involved in all local agricultural matters, being known as a great breeder of hill stock. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1839. He was a member of the Photographic Society of Scotland from 1855. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1840 in Elgin he married Eliza Ann (1821–46), daughter of Charles Gordon. They had 3 sons (twins James and Charles, plus Thomas) and 1 daughter. In 1851 he is listed as farmer of 4000 acres, employing 20 farm workers and with 5 servant in his house. He was still farmer at Branxholme Park in 1868. He was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 as owner of Dinlabyre and Greena. In 1851 he secondly married Sarah Clarke (nee Wagstaff), daughter of James of Bilby, and they had 1 son. He thirdly married Mary Gordon, from Heckington. His children included: twins James Alexander (1841–46) and Charles John (1841–1915); Christina Mary (b.1843), who married Wheateley Robertson of the Indian Army; Thomas Gordon (b.1844); and Norman William (1852–1936). William (b.1797/8) joiner and cartwright in Newcastleton. He was probably at about 2 Walter Street in 1861. His wife was Mary and their children included Elliot (a daughter), Charles, Walter and Robert. William (b.c.1804) married Margaret Dalgleish in 1837. His son Robert was born at Ettrick, moved to Queensland in 1883 and still has descendants there. William (1805–51) younger son of James, tenant in Branxholme Braes, and descended from the Grieves of Branxholme Park. He was born in Hawick and became a grocer on the High Street. He is probably the grocer and spirit dealer living on Silver Street in 1841. In 1851 he was living at about 6 High Street. He is listed as a High Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory, and may also be the corn dealer listed there, as well as the William recorded on the High Street serving as insurance agent for National and seedsman. Additionally he may have been the William serving as ‘sub-distributor of stamps’ at the Stamp and Tax Office on the High Street. In 1840 he married Christian (or Christina) Graham (1814–88). They had a son, James (b.1841). He and his wife are commemorated on the family gravestone in Borthwick Waas. William (1818–85) son of George and Minto Bell. He was probably born at Craik, where his father farmed. However, the family moved to Edinburgh and then emigrated to Canada in 1832. In 1846 he bought land in Richmond township in Ontario and operated a tavern at Grieve’s Corners, which still bears the family name. He married Eliza Fairbairn and their children were Esther, George, Robert, Minto, Georgina and William. William (1825–78) younger son of Walter John, farmer at Southfield. He emigrated to Canada in the early 1850s, married Agnes Fairbairn from Berwickshire and had a large family. William (1829–82) 3rd son of Thomas and Marion Dickson. He took over the farm of Skelfhill after his father’s death, also having tenancy of Stobicote. He was known for being a judge of Cheviot sheep and was President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club. He was at Skelfhill in 1861, farming 3084 acres and employing 12 people, with his brother Walter also farming 2000 acres and employing 3 people. His sisters Catherine and Margaret were also living there, as well as 6 domestic and farm servants. He died unmarried. William Gray (1866–1914) younger son of Robert, tenant in Southfield. He emigrated to Dever, Colorado. He married Lilliam Kirschbaum and they had 1 daughter and 3 sons. William Herbert (1874–1908) 2nd son of Charles John of Branxholme Park. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy. In 1893 he was on board the 'Nile' off Tripoli, when he witnessed the collision that caused the sinking of H.M.S. Victoria, with the loss of hundreds of lives, including his brother Arthur. Later he himself was killed in another naval disaster, this time involving an explosion in Queensferry. There is a memorial brass to him and his brother in St. Cuthbert’s Church (formerly written ‘Greave’, ‘Greaves’, ‘Greif’, ‘Greiff’, ‘Greive’, ‘Grive’ and variants).

Griffith (gri-fith) n. Sir Richard Waldie (1850–1933) officer in charge of the Border Rifles. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge and served with the 2nd Dragoon Guards, retiring with the rank of Captain. He succeeded to the baronetcy and family estates near Kelso on the death of his father in 1889. In 1891 he became Colonel of the local volunteer regiment, the Border Rifles. Under his command the Border Rifles became the 4th battalion of the K.O.S.B., with him as Honorary Colonel. He was Chairman of the Roxburghshire Unionist Association, Chairman of the Tweed Commission and a member of the Border Union Agricultural Society. He stood unsuccessfully in the 1906 general election for Roxburghshire. However he served as a member of Roxburghshire County Council and was also a J.P. He was Lord-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, as well as being a Brigadier in the Royal Company of Archers. A keen sportsman, he was known as a rower at university, later as a curler, yachtsman and particularly as a breeder of racehorses. He made his fortune through mines in Bohemia and lived for a while in Australia. He married 3 times, but had no children. He wrote the foreword to the book ‘With the Border Volunteers to Pretoria’.

Griffiths (gri-fiths) n. Nigel (1955–) politician. Son of a High School English teacher, he was educated there, as well as at Edinburgh University. He became Edinburgh councillor 1980–87 and Labour M.P. for South Edinburgh from 1987, being at one time Opposition Whip and spokesman on Trade and Industry.

Grime (gri-m) v., arch. to sprinkle, fleck – ‘The sun was na up, but the moon was down, It was the gryming of a new fa’ snaw, Jamie Telfer has run ten myles a-foot, Between the Doghead and the Stobs’s Ha’’ [T], n. a flake, particularly of soot (also written ‘gryme’, ‘greim’, etc.).

Grimin (gri-min, -meen) n., arch. a sprinkling – ‘Old people invariably talked of . . . a gryming o’ snaw’ [HAST1902], ‘The sunny blinks, keekin throwe atween the leafs, spurtelt the road wui gryimens o licht’ [ECS], ‘The mune she shines sae bricht, Till a’ the yirth is marlt wi’ The grymins o’ her licht’ [DH] (also written ‘grymins’).

Grindin Burn (thu-grin-din-burn) n. the Grinding Burn, a stream that follows the Minto to Denholm road and joins the Teviot just beyond Denholm. In 1780 ‘Grinden Burn’ is listed as part of the southern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘grene dun’, meaning ‘the stream running from the green hill’, named after the Mintos; it is clearly shown on Pont’s 1590s manuscript map, and may be labelled ‘Grindoun’, this being interpreted as the name given to the hills; Blaeu’s 1654 map intriguingly shows it linking to the Jordan Burn, hence linking the Ale and Teviot valleys directly!; it is ‘Grydone Burn’ in c.1537; James Murray calls it ‘Grindon Burn’ in 1863).

Grindin Hills (grin-din-burn) n. possible former name for the Minto Hills. Pont’s manuscript map from the 1590s indicates the word ‘Grindoun’ with ‘hills’ written below. This was transferred to Blaeu’s 1654 published map as ‘Grindoun h.’, hence leading to some speculation that the hills gave their name to the Grinding Burn running below them. However, this name for the hills is otherwise unknown, and it seems unlikely that the Mintos ever had this alternative name, with the origin simply being misinterpretation of what was written by Pont.

side of the Border, reaching a height of 468 m. It was near here in 1598 where one of the last skirmishes occurred between the Scottish and English. Accounts differ as to the numbers involved, with the group of Scotsmen being from 60 to 200 and the English group perhaps being as large as 400. The Scots claimed they were simply out hunting, going into England on 1st August and again the following day, after which they retired to dinner ‘Grindislane law in Scotland’). They were then chased by the larger English party (led by Woodrington and Fenwick), as far as Plederleith, with fighting occurring ‘neir ane pairt callit Knowpark’. Some Scotsmen were killed, including Andrew Rutherford, brother of the Laird of Hunthill and Greenhead, Robert Pringle, servant to the Laird of Bonjedward and James Robson, servant to the Laird of Greenhead. The Laird of Bonjedward was also injured and several prisoners were taken, including the younger men of Bonjedward, Hunthill and Greenhead, the Lairds of Tower and Billerwell, 2 Burgessess of Jedburgh and others, the total being as many as 12. The English also took about 50 horses. The prisoners were released, but had to appear to answer charges a few days later. The English claimed the Scots were out raiding, or at least cutting and stealing wood (which may well have been true), nevertheless the English pursuit of the Scots was ferocious (although common for the times).

grip to sieze ‘…with ane bute to carry the staff or standard in, and offered to gripe at and carie the said Colour’ [BR1706].

the Gripknowe (thu-gri-now) n. name for an area either in or bordering on Hawick Common Moor, the precise position being now uncertain. It was mentioned in 1766 in the description of 9 small pieces of land that were let in order to try to prevent encroachment on the Common by neighbouring tenants. John Scott was living there in 1784. Alexander Miller was recorded on a farm there when his son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1786.

grippit (gri-pi’, -pee’) pp. gripped ‘…and he fell off his seat where he was sitting, and grippit at James Chisholme’s fingers with his staffe …’ [BR1666], ‘And then he grippit the bedrel’s spade, Ane pye therewith to seeke …’ [JTe], ‘My hazel staff I gipit fast, My hat upon my head did tether …’ [JT].

Grundi see Grundy

Grundistone (grun-dee-stin) n. Groundistone, former farm to the west of the A7 at ‘the Heights’. The name probably relates to the ‘de Grundi’ family, who are recorded in the area in the early 1200s. An undated charter (probably around 1390) in which ‘the five merk lands in the town of Grundiston’ are granted by William Lindsay of the Byres to his son Andrew. Easter and Wester Grundiston were known as homes of the Scotts in the 16th century. In the 16th century it was part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. In 1535 the King revoked a former charter, and so the superiority passed from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to George, Lord Home. Later the lands became part of the Buccleuch estates. The farms of Easter and Wester Groundistone and Drinkstone (along with Drinkstone and perhaps other lands) were valued at £2440 in 1643. William Taylor was tenant there in 1635 and Hector Turnbull in 1683. ‘The two Grundistones’ were transferred from Hesanden Parish to Wilton in 1690. Adam Glendinning was there in 1698. There was a dispute over the boundaries with Symton and Ashkirk around 1707. George Scott was recorded there in 1724, Robert Scott in 1725–29, George Stewart in 1729, John Miller in 1751 and Robert Waugh in 1759. ‘Easter and Wester Groundistone and Drinkston’ were valued together at £2440 in 1778 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. There was a marl pit there around 1800. Janet Scott (probably a widow) was head of the household there in 1841, and William Potts was farmer in 1851. There is a tradition (described by James Wilson) that an ancient stone there bore the inscription ‘Remember to pray’, but this had not existed in living memory by the mid-1800s, if indeed it was ever more than a fantasy (the name is first recorded in 1380 as ‘Grundiestoun’; it is ‘Grundiston’ about 1390, ‘Grundistoun’ and ‘Grundiston’ in 1525, ‘Grundiston’ in 1526/7 and 1551, ‘Groundestoun’ in 1535, ‘Grundistone’ in 1635, ‘Grundiston’ in 1643, ‘Grundestoun’ in 1683, ‘Grundeston’ in 1698, ‘Easter and Wester Groundistounes’ in 1707, ‘Groundiston’ in 1725, ‘Grundiston’ in 1744, ‘Grundiston’ in 1759 and ‘Grundeston’ in 1841; the origin is possibly ‘Grundi’s farm’ with the Middle English personal name Grundi, and may refer to ‘Robert Grundi de Neuton’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and his ancestors).

Grundistone (grun-dee-stin) n. David (15th C.) Burgess of Cupar. He had a charter of the lands of ‘Bangall’ in Fife in 1458, with his surname written ‘Grundistoun’. He is recorded as deceased in 1481 when his son Thomas had a charter for lands in Fife. It is unclear whether his name relates to the farm near Hawick. David (15th/16th C.) listed as a witness to a charter in Edinburgh in 1511. He may have been son of Thomas. James (15th C.) tenant of Ferny in the Edinburgh area in 1481. In 1485 he was recorded as tenant of ‘Luthry’ along with his son John. John (d.bef. 1490) tenant of the lands of ‘Luthrei’ in Fife in 1490. His widow was also recorded, as well as his father James. Margaret (15th C.) recorded in 1470 as wife of Robert de Foret, when he had a charter for the lands of Foret in Fife. She was presumably related to David and Thomas.
Grundistone Heights

Thomas of Kingask (15th/16th C.) son of David, as recorded in a charter of 1481 when he was granted lands in Fife. He was Bailie in Cupar and also referred to as ‘custumar’. He is recorded in several charters in the period 1495–1513, signed in Edinburgh or Fife, with his name spelled ‘Grundestoun’, ‘Grundistoun’ and variants. His wife was Isobel Seton. Probably the same ‘Thoma Grundystoun’ was witness to the charters made by Lord Lindsay of the Byres to James Scott of Kirkurd in 1484 for the lands of Over and Nether Newhall in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton.

The charters were made in Edinburgh, so he may not have had a direct connection with the Hawick area; it may be a coincidence that his surname is the same as the neighbouring lands of Grundistone. Walter of Glasie (15th/16th C.) witnessed a charter in 1504/5 for Thomas of Kingask, to whom he was presumably related (also written ‘Grundiston’).

Grundistone Heights (grun-dee-stën-hîtz) n. Grundistone Heights, the area of high ground adjacent to the A7 north of Hawick, more commonly known as ‘the Heights’. The highest point on the road is 942 ft, and marks the boundary between Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. The view from here, particularly south to the Cheviot Hills is magnificent. A former drove road used to cross the main road near here (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map), passing over Bewlie Moor and Chapel Moor on its way to the Borthwick valley. It has been claimed that a similar route shows evidence of having been a Roman road, with traces between here and Woo Law, connecting Raeburnfoot with Newstead, via Craik Cross and Harelaw; however, this is not firmly established.

Grundy (grun-dee) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Grundy’ on the 1303/4 inquest for the half barony of Wilton. It seems likely that he was related to Robert and held lands near Grundistone. Benedict (12th/13th C.) father of Robert, who witnessed a charter in Hassendean guaird in about the 1220s. His name is given as ‘Benedicto Grundi’. He is the earliest known member of the family who gave their name to Grundistone. Robert (13th C.) son of Benedect. He witnessed a charter for Christina of Hassendean in the period 1214–49, probably the late 1220s. His name is given as ‘Roberto filius eius’ after that of his father Benedict. He was probably father or grandfather of the later Robert, Robert de Newton (13th C.) mentioned in 1291–96, he may have been the owner of what became ‘Grundistone’, with ‘Newton’ presumably being the neighbouring farm now called ‘the Nitton’. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and on the attached seal, which may bear a rose, his name is ‘S’ROBERTI GRVNDY’.

gruntlin (grunt-lin) n., arch. a piglet – ‘They caused all the swine, gruntlings, and asses about the town to exert their harmonious voices’ [EM1820].

Gubbislie (gu-biz-lee) n. former lands in Liddesdale. ‘Gubisley maior’ (valued at 22 shillings and 8 pence) and ‘Gubisley minor’ (valued at 8 shillings) are listed on a rental roll of c.1376. ‘Gopishalch’ was also listed (with a value of 4 merks) and possibly related. In a rental roll of 1541 the lands of ‘Ouergubbislie’ (valued at 16 shillings) were let to Thomas Armstrong of Merianton, along with Cuthbert (probably his brother), and the lands of ‘Nethergubbislie’ to William and Robert (possibly the same man as Cuthbert) Armstrong, brother of the Laird of Merianton (or Mangerton). From their position in this list it seems like the lands were close to Copshaw.

Gubbisteed (gu-bee-steed) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded in the c.1376 rental roll as ‘Gubacstede’ in the area known as Ermildon. It had a value of 10 shillings. It is possible it is related to the lands of Gubbislie recorded later.

This led to the adjacent Tannage Close sometimes being called Guthrie’s Close. He is listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Isabella (1803–71), daughter of Jedburgh saddler Lewis Grant and sister of Rev. William Grant of Cavers. Their children were: John (b.1832), builder and architect; James (b.1836), who was a slater in Newcastle; Lewis Veitch (b.1834); Isabella (b.1837), who died young; Isabella Ann (b.1839); Margaret Jane (b.1841); William Grant (b.1843), naturalist; and Janet (b.1845), also died young. His daughter Margaret is listed as being ‘2 hours’ old on the 1841 census! James (b.1835/6) born in Jedburgh, son of Hawick plumber James. He was a Slater, plumbmer and glazier in Newcastle. In 1861 he was on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Annie and their children included James and William Armstrong. He may be the ‘James Guthrie (junior)’ who presented several articles to the Archæological Society in 1857, including ‘a flesh fork given to Christian Jackson by Lady Johnstone of Westerhall in 1590’. James ‘Jimmie’ (d.1940) father of the other Jimmie, he was official bugler for the Teviotdale Cycling Club, and one of the first people in Hawick to have a motor-cycle, in 1909. He established Guthrie Motors by Tannage Close on the High Street, which closed around 1989. James ‘Jimmie’ (1897–1937) champion motor-cyclist from Hawick, born at 5
Guthrie Drive

Rosevale Cottage. He served an engineering apprenticeship with Wilson & Glenny, then joined the K.O.S.B., becoming a motorcycle dispatcher for the Royal Engineering Signals in WWI. After the war he entered a partnership with brother Archie in the family motor engineering firm. He started winning Scottish speed events from about 1926, and then began an astonishing run at the Isle of Man T.T. races, where for 10 years he only ever finished first or second. He rode for several companies, but became best known as a rider for Norton, which dominated the European circuits in the early to mid-1930s. He set many world records over 50 km to 100 mile distances. His final record included finishing first 30 times out of 50 placings. He died following a crash at the 1937 German Grand Prix at the Sachsenring in Hohenstein-Ernstthal. His body was given a military escort out of Germany and his funeral in Hawick was attended by thousands. Memorials were erected on the Isle of Man (at ‘the Cutting’) and in Saxony. He was buried at the Wellogate, and a bronze statue, by Thomas Clapperton was erected in Wilton Lodge Park in 1939. A book ‘Jimmie Guthrie (1897–1937): Hawick’s Racing Legend’ by John Rogerson and Gordon Small was published in 1997, and the Museum contains much memorabilia of his life and achievements. John (1832–1903) local businessman and architect. Born in Jedburgh, he came to Hawick when his father founded the slating and plumbing firm James Guthrie & Sons in the 1850s. He took over running this firm with his 2 brothers, but also trained as an architect. He supervised the feuing of Sunnyhill and designed Linden Park, the Buccleuch Memorial, houses for the Working Men’s Building & Investment Company, and many villas, including Deanfield, Hazelwood, Kilmeny, Lindestfarne, Langlands, Westwood and Woodnorton (originally Craigmore). He was heavily involved with the Archaeological Society, being a founding member and later President, and was also involved with the Buccleuch Memorial Institute. In 1861 he presented to the Museum part of a quern from Deanburnhaugh. He was also a painter and art lover, and contributed travel accounts to the local press. He painted a view of the High Street from the East End in 1858, another in 1893, one called ‘View of Rachel Anderson’s House, High Street’ and a view of the Auld Brig painted in 1869. He also painted a portrait of William Norman Kennedy, Alexander Michie and Robert Michie (3 of the founders of the Archaeological Society). Another example is a portrait of Thomas Brown. He designed the decorations and paintings for the centenary Burns night in the Commercial Inn and spoke there on ‘Burns the Pioneer’. He is also credited with bringing the ‘nosey wundis’ to Hawick, after he saw similar devices on a tour of the continent and built one for his house at 61 High Street. He married Elizabeth Purdon Borthwick, who died in 1908, aged 67. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William Grant (b.1843) son of plumber James. He was a local naturalist, who noted species of insects, mosses etc. in the area around Hawick. His name was usually written ‘W. Grant’ (also formerly ‘Gutrie’).

Guthrie Drive (guth-reh-drihv) n. road bracketing the north of Stirches, built in 1977 and named after Jimmie Guthrie.

the Guthrie Memorial (thuh-guth-ree-me-nee-ohl) n. bronze statue in Wilton Lodge Park, erected by public subscription in 1939 to commemorate Jimmie Guthrie. The statue was sculpted by Thomas Clapperton. There is film of the unveiling ceremony. There is also a memorial on an S-bend of the A18 on the Isle of Man, where he retired from his last TT Race, usually called ‘Guthrie’s Memorial’. A further memorial in Germany. at the site of his fatal crash, is called ‘Guthrie’s Stone’.

Guthrie’s Close (guh-reez-klohs) n. mid-19th century name for a passageway off the High Street, probably referring to Tannage Close, and named after the plumber and slater’s business of James Guthrie, which was at the west side (No. 61 High Street). This was later the site of A. & J. Guthrie Motor Engineers, the same family as motorbike champion Jimmy Guthrie.

The Gutterbludes (thuh-gi-er-blidz) n. musical play about local characters written by J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant, and subtitled ‘Hawick Callants Abroad and at Hame’. It was performed in the Town Hall on December 30th 1905, and January 1st–3rd 1906 and revived in 2000 and 2005 by the Two Rivers Theatre Company. The play is described as ‘A Drama of Hawick in 1835 in two acts and four scenes’, these being: ‘Teri Lodge’, a shanty (interior) in the Toronto forest; ‘The Haugh’ at Hawick Common-Riding; ‘Round the Ramparts’; and ‘The Auld Mid Raw’, Cow Jean’s lodging house. The play introduced the very well-loved ‘Meda’s Song’ and ‘Clinty’s Song’, and also included ‘The Buccaneers’ (the Old Sailor’s Song), ‘The Funny Old Fellow’ (Maxwell’s Song), ‘D’ye think I’m an Irishman’ (Danny’s Song), ‘Oor Gutterblude’ (Cow Jean’s Oration) and ‘Westward Ho!’ The script is one of only 2 of Jed Murray’s plays to survive. It was preserved by his son Melgund, given to Jim Peacock, and then a new production organised by Jean Wintrop in 2000, with incidental music and some new pieces arranged by Ian Seely (also spelled ‘The Gutterbluds’ etc.).

guttie (gu-ee) n. a paunchy person, adj. corpulent, pot-bellied – ‘The auldest was a gutty blade, A thriving Grocer to his trade’ [RDW] (also written ‘gutty’).

Guttriehaa (gu-tree-haw) n. near Hawick??.

Guy (gl) n. George (20th C.) bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band. In 1935 he arranged several Hawick songs for the band, including ‘The Border Queen’ and the polka from ‘The Witch o’ the Wisp Hill’. Many Hawick songs are included in his ‘Memoirs of Hawick’ brass arrangement, with the tunes being faithful to the versions published by Adam Grant, with some additional thematic material added.

Guyslands (glz-lundz) n. former name for Orchard. It occurs as ‘Gilisland’ (possibly in error) in a list of lands within the Barony of Cavers in 1509/10 (referring to charters from the time of King David) and is ‘Gyislandis’ in a charter for the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1511. Variants of the name occur until the late 17th century and it was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 (it is possible these lands were related to ‘Guy de Dennum’; it is transcribed ‘Graeslands’ in 1687 and wrongly as ‘Embslands’ in 1698).

g’way (gu-wä) contr., arch. go away – ‘G’way ee greet gogglin’ gowk, ee’r Mr. Spunk eersel’’ [JEDM], ‘Gae’-way! g’way = go away!’ [ECS] (see also gae-’way and ’way).

gypies (jip-seck) n., pl. people living a nomadic lifestyle, who originally came from northern India around the 14th century and are spread around the world in small groups, maintaining the Romany language and some elements of their traditional culture. Also called ‘travelling people’, ‘tinkers’, etc., although sometimes a distinction is made between genuine gypsies and travellers of more recent Irish origin. Local gypsy families include the Blyths, Douglases and Youngs, and they are recorded as settling in the Yetholm area since the 16th century. The Yetholm royal family was the Faas, with one of the earliest being Johnne Faa, then King Patrick Faa and Queen Jean Gordon being well known in the 17th century, and the last of the family being Queen Esther Faa Blyth who died in 1883. They also traditionally gathered at St. Boswells Fair and other local fairs. There has long been animosity against them, e.g. there was an order in 1573 that all ‘vagabound and counterfaitit people calland thame selffis Egyptianis’ were to be banished from the Borders. Ashkirk Session ordained in 1643 that ‘no person shall reset any Egyptians, and if they insist on staying, then to come and tell the Minister, and he, with the assistance of the gentlemen that he shall choose, shall go and out them out of the Parish’. In the years following the Act of Parliament of 1609 there were several groups (mostly of the name Faa) who were found guilty of being ‘Egyptianis’ and hanged in Edinburgh. In 1674 William Hall and his family were banished from Hawick for attacking the Bailie and for being ‘vagabond Egyptians’. In Jedburgh in 1704 11 men were found guilty of being ‘Egyptians’ and transported to America, while a woman was scourged through the town and then nailed to a post by her ear for half an hour. In Hawick they have been regular visitors for centuries, often setting up on the Haugh. Some of their words have entered into the Borders vocabulary. There was a large battle between groups from Lochmaben and Yetholm at Hawick Winter Fair in the early 18th century (as recounted by Robert Wilson). It apparently started over possession of a young lady, and was finally broken up by the Burgh officers. 2 of the combatants died of their wounds while several others were put in the stocks or sent to Jedburgh Jail – ‘…The Gypsies frae Yetholm then topped up the lot Bie chucken some Hindi words intae the pot’ [WaE] (the name derives from a romantic notion that they originated in Egypt).

gyte (gi’, git) adj., arch., poet. crazy, mad – ‘Deed it’s ma opeenion Tam Weens is gane clean gyte …’ [DMW], ‘Her throat it was a’ richt, but then, dae ye see, The cranium was saft, and her mind was a’ gyte’ [TCh], ‘…gin Fortun takes a pick at iz an things gang geite’ [ECS] (also written ‘geite’).

hadden see hauden

Hadden (haw-dun) n. village to the east of Sprouston and Kelso, in the extreme north-east of Roxburghshire. The Elliots of Wells held the Barony from at least 1729, and it was later part of the possessions of the Elliots of Stobs, then the Elliots of Wells. Hadden Rigg, the site of a 1542 battle of the Scots and the English is adjacent (also written ‘Haddon’, the origin of the name is probably the Old English ‘haga dun’, meaning ‘the hill with the fenced enclosure’, and hence it has something in common with Hawick; the name is first recorded as ‘Hawedane’) and again in 1227/8. In 1223/4 he is recorded being allowed to commute his responsibilities as ward of Roxburgh Castle, and John Maxwell was listed as Sheriff at that time. In 1246 a perambulation of knights from both sides possibilities as ward of Roxburgh Castle, and John Maxwell was listed as Sheriff at that time. In 1246 a perambulation of knights from both sides of the Border was arranged for the disputed lands between him and the canons of Carham. He had a son, also Bernard.

Hadden Rigg (haw-din-rig) n. site near Kelso of a battle in 1542, where the Scottish forces of the Earl of Huntly routed those of Sir Robert Bowes and the Earl of Angus (also spelled ‘Haddon’ and ‘Rig’).

haddo (haw-dō) n., arch. a haddock (also hadda).

Haddon (ha-din) n. Andrew (b.1742) from Selkirk, he came to Hawick in the late 1700s and married Christian, daughter of Bailie Walter Ruecastle. She was apparently due to marry Robert Howison, the banns having even been read. They appear to have lived in Selkirk, then Edinburgh and finally Paisley, where they had a daughter. Their son Walter returned to Hawick and married Agnes Goodfellow, niece of the Bailie. Andrew (1818–94) son of Walter and Agnes Goodfellow. He was a manufacturer and farmer of the 19th century. In 1841 he was recorded on the Back Row. He started with a stocking shop up the Loan, but moved his family to Honeyburn in 1848 (where several generations of the family subsequently stayed). In 1861 he was farmer of 205 acres there, and employed 9 labourers. He became a Councillor and Bailie in Hawick (being on the ‘Eternal Council’) and served on the first Roxburghshire County Council, where he was known for only speaking English when forced to! In later life he became a farmer at Honeyburn. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1857. He married Anne, daughter of John White the manufacturer. Their children included: Walter (b.1841); Isabella; John; Agnes G.; Ann (or Annie), who married Rev. Robert Borland; and Andrew (b.1863), who was Cornet in 1891. He may be the ‘John Hadden’ listed in 1852 as a farmer in Denholm. Andrew, O.B.E. (1863–1936) of Deanside, son of Andrew, brother of Walter and John He was a solicitor in Hawick and farmer at Honeyburn. He trained in Edinburgh and started in Hawick with the firm of Haddon & Turnbull. He was Cornet in 1891. He went to the Boer War with a group of Border Rifles (volunteers) largely from Denholm, and published some of his war diaries. On his return he set up as a solicitor at 7 Tower Knowe. He became Lieut.-Col. in the Volunteers, received an O.B.E. and served on the Hawick Military Tribunal during WWI. Along with his son Andrew he was heavily involved with setting up the Milk Marketing Board. He married May Laing Brown (1864–1954). He is buried at Denholm. Andrew Douglas ‘Douglas’ (1886–1952) son of Walter and brother of Ross, he was a partner in the family law firm. He became Cornet in 1910, and was heavily involved with the Callants’ Club, being President in 1928, and Treasurer and Secretary for about 40 years. He married Jane Martin and their children included Walter Andrew, Jean Douglas and Agnes. Andrew, O.B.E. (1904–93) son of Andrew and May Laing Brown. He was farmer at Honeyburn and also a solicitor. He moved his firm, Andrew Haddon to 3 Oliver Place and went into partnership with David Crowe as Andrew Haddon & Crowe, solicitors. He was Burgh Prosecutor for Hawick prior to Reorganisation in 1974, was a member of the first Borders Regional Council, was involved with local Liberal election campaigns and was awarded the O.B.E. for political and public service. He was also involved (with his father Andrew) in Teviotdale Dairy and the Milk Marketing Board and was an elder in Denholm Kirk. He married Dorothy Blanche Hall. Dr. David Alexander Ross ‘Ross’ (1890–1978) son of Walter and brother of Douglas, he was a long time doctor in Hawick at 19 Buccleuch Street. He was born in Hawick and educated at Fettes and Edinburgh University, graduating in 1913 and gaining his M.D. in 1919. In WWI he went to France with the 9th Royal Scots, being wounded and becoming Regimental Medical Officer. He later served with the 19th Field Ambulance and 14th General Hospital and was awarded the Military Cross. Back in Hawick, he went into partnership with Dr. Barrie and continued in that practice for 46 years. He travelled far and wide to visit his patients, in the early days by motorbike. He was involved with ex-servicemen’s associations and the Red Cross and served as police surgeon and doctor to local factories. He was a member of the Borders Hospital Board for 19 years and took a keen interest in the Hawick Cottage Hospital. He had a son and 3 daughters. Janet (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1706 she was one of the people (presumably living near St. Mary’s) who were disturbed at night by a group who were involved in drunken revelry. They delivered to her house a cripple that they had picked up from another house. John (19th C.) farmer in Cavers or Minto Parishes. He is recorded in a directory of 1852, with his surname given as ‘Hadden’. Dr. John (1845–1920s) doctor from Denholm, son of Andrew and brother of Walter and Andrew. He was born in the West End and educated at Minto school and Edinburgh University, where he was not allowed to graduate as an M.A. because he was too young, so he went on to win most of the prizes in medicine. He practised for many years as a dietician in Manchester. He also travelled the world, some of his journals being published in the Hawick News. He lived for a while in Canonbie (the house now being a hotel). He became known as an eccentric, with peculiar views on diet, such as suggesting that patients cut out their favourite foods and go on 24 hour fasts. He even suggested that a man could live on 2 gooseberries a day (but this may have been a joke)!

He had the Text House built for him on Main Street in Denholm. He also bought up some properties and left them to be let rent-free to elderly residents of the village. Marjorie (1905–95) daughter of Andrew and sister of Andrew. She won the Medway Challenge Cup (Cornet’s Race) riding ‘Rufus’ on Common Riding Saturday 1927, being possibly the first lady rider seen on Hawick racecourse. She was Cornet’s Lass in 1926 and married Donald Laing of Balcary. Walter (1780–1826) son of Andrew from Selkirk and father of Andrew. He was one of the early manufacturers in Hawick, his stocking-shop being where the Baptist Church was later located. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was also a skilled cabinet-maker and was apparently killed while felling a tree. He married Agnes (b.1784), daughter of wright John Goodfellow. It is said that her family did not approve of him and she was sent to Manchester for a couple of years, but married him on her return. They had one son, Andrew (b.1818), who carried on with a stocking-shop on the Fore Raw, but became tenant of Honeyburn in 1848. His wife Agnes gave up the stocking-shop in 1855, when the property became the West Port Mission; she also kept house for their grandson Walter. He was killed by a falling tree. Walter (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the Fore Row, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His house is marked on Wood’s 1824 map, near the top left side of Drumlanrig Square. Walter (1841–1907) solicitor and banker. Born in the West-End, his father was Andrew of Honeyburn and his brothers were John and Andrew. He attended Minto School along with J.A.H. Murray. He apprenticed with Thomas Purdom, received further legal training in Edinburgh and returned to Hawick in 1864. He worked for the partnership Kirk & Haddon, with the partnership of Haddon & Turnbull (with Thomas Turnbull) starting in 1880. In his early days, his grandmother Agnes (nee Goodfellow) kept house for him. He acted as Police Treasurer and Collector for the Burgh from 1864 until his death. He was also agent for the Royal Bank of Scotland and associated with Kirkton and Lilliesleaf School Boards. He was Secretary of Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Co. from 1878. In addition he acted as clerk or secretary for a large number of other local concerns, including the Exchange Buildings and the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association, and also as factor of Cavers estate. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1880. He was assessor for Hawick for a number of years, and Sheriff-Clerk Depute until about 1895. He was a member of the Hawick District Committee of Roxburgh County Council, and of Cavers Parish Council, a Director of Teviotdale Dairy Company and a member of the Border Mounted Rifles. He was an enthusiastic Common Riding supporter and Acting Father for J.E.D. Murray in 1890. In politics he was a Liberal Unionist. He married a daughter of Provost Ross of Dingwall. He built the house at Colislim and also acquired the estate of Firth near Lilliesleaf. His son Douglas continued the family legal tradition, while Ross was a long-time member of Provost Ross of Dingwall. He built the house at Colislim and also acquired the estate of Firth near Lilliesleaf. His son Douglas continued the family legal tradition, while Ross was a long-time doctor in Hawick (formerly also ‘Hadden’).

Haddon an Turnbull (ha-din-an-turn-bul) n. law partnership between Walter Haddon and Thomas Turnbull, established in Hawick in 1880. hade (hād) pp., arch. hid – ‘...atween the treis that skugget Barnhill’s staney bed an hade Mintih Hoose threh sicht’ [ECS] (also written ‘haed’).
Hadrian’s Waa

Hadrian’s Waa (hā-dree-inz-waw) n. Hadrian’s Wall, ordered to be built by Roman Emperor Hadrian in the year 122, taking 6 years to complete. It snakes its way across England from the Tyne to the Solway, with many forts, temples and now museums along the way. It is 73 miles long and was up to 5 metres high, although only a few good sections remain. Colloquially it is used as a way of referring to the Border, although in fact is far south of the modern boundary. Nevertheless, its existence probably had a lasting influence on Border history.

hae (hā, he) v., arch. have – ‘As we hae heard, sae hae we seen in the cite o’ the Lord o’ hosts’ [HSR], ‘The wicket hae pu’et owt the sword, an’ hae bendet than bowe’ [HSR], ‘Her sons hae fought on mony lands’ [GD], ‘You’ll aye hae plenty to your back, And plenty to your mouth’ [DA], ‘And I mind o’ the days that yince hae been’ [DH], ‘They ha’e nae Teri-Odin flag …’ [JT], ‘Teri Bus and Teri Odin! hagbut (hawg-but) n., arch. a harquebus, an early, long-barrelled hand-gun, with the but bent down to help in taking aim, also a soldier armed with such a weapon – ‘Gae fetch, gae fetch my hagbut five’, With flashing eye he said …’ [JTe], ‘…put a number of Hagbut’s (men armed with hand guns) into Hawick’ [RM].

hagg (hawg) n., arch. a ledge of turf or earth overhanging the side of a stream, a turf-clad projecting river bank – ‘‘Few could wend their way along the brae haggs of the Teviot as well as he (Blinnd Wull)’ [RM]. ‘Where the hounds run tromping is a tired fox stooping By the haggs at her water’s edge; When the dew lies soaking, there’s a brown toad croaking To her song in the marshy sedge’ [WL], ‘Thinks I, ‘The troots maun leeve on air, That haunt the hags up Eskdalemuir’ Fishers? – hech!’ [DH], a piece of soft bog, quagnire – ‘…and bogggy ground …’. The Hag is computed to be at least eight...rood in circumference...’ [GT], ‘On Cauldcleugh’s wild haggs roun’ the coome o’ the steep’ [HSR], ‘With staff on high, he waves an arch adieu. Clears a peat-hag, and gives a grand haloo!’ [HNo], ‘’Twas now my bride that made the hurry. Ower mony hags an’ braes we scurry...’ [WP], ‘The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o’ The Roan Scarrit in wi’ a pencil’ [DH] (also spelled ‘hag’; cf. haggie and brae-hag).

Haggawick (haw-gaw-wik) n. possible early Saxon name for Hawick, meaning ‘settlement hedged around with hills’ (see also Hagawic).

Haggie (haw-gee) n. William (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘Willelmus Hagy notarius publicus’ when he wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick. This was for Robert and James Scott, forgiving a group of other Scotts from Allanhaugh and Over Southfield in the murder of their brother George. He was probably a cleric of Glasgow, and may have been a minister at one of the local churches. It is possible that his surname was ‘Haig’ or ‘Haggie’.

Haggiehaugh (haw-gee-hawch) n. former farmstead in the Liddel valley, just north of the present Larriston farm. It was known in earlier times as Larriston Rig. Charles Edward Stewart’s marched this way in 1745, and he spent the night there. John Oliver paid tax on 38 windows there in 1748 (suggesting that at that time the name was used for the main farmhouse of Larriston). The lands were purchased in 1790 by Maj.-Gen. William Elliot from William Oliver of Dinlabyre for £1,900 sterling, and joined to those of Larriston. Elliot had 6 horses there according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James Rutherford was there in 1801. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists ‘Lariston-rig, now called Haggiehaugh’ among the properties of George Scott-Elliot of Larriston (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Haggishaa’; it is ‘Haggishaugh’ and ‘Haggyhaugh’ in 1797 and 1821; not to be confused with Haggishaa).

Haggishaa (haw-gees-haw) n. area around the foot of the Vertish Hill, also known as Burnflat, being the edge of the Common. The Common Riding cavalcade used to ride this way, up until 1803, when the Cornet was thrown from his horse and injured, recovering in a house there. Until 1991 there was a row of dilapidated cottages here, one being the birthplace of ‘Old Mortality’. They were demolished following a fire. The same area was fancifully said to be home of a Michael Paiterson, who entertained the local priests to dinner twice a year, on one occasion the haggis being so large that its skewer pin was used to mend the Corn Mill, inspiring Robert Burns lines ‘Your pin wad help ti mend a mill In time o’ need’ (R.E. Scott wrote about this in the Burns Chronicle of 1964). Walter Scott of Haggishaugh was recorded as owner of part of Burnflat in about 1874 – ‘At the Haggisha’ we rank up, Weaver Will’s auld bonnet clank up’ [AB] (there are several spellings, including ‘Hangmanshaa’; it appears to be ‘Haggishall’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the name probably derives from Old English or Old Scots for ‘a copse by the waterside’, although more fanciful origins, sometimes involving haggis, have also been suggested; note that ‘Haggiehaugh’ was an old name for Larriston in Liddesdale).

Haggishaa Brae (haw-gees-haw-brä) n. name formerly given to Burnflat Brae. In former times it was when the Procession reached here that the Riding of the Marches really began.

Haggis Haa see Haggishaa

haick (hīk, hāk) n. a garment worn in Morocco, consisting of a large piece of cotton, wool or silk cloth (a variant of ‘haik’, not to be confused with a town in the Borders).

Haick (hīk) n. another former spelling for Hawick (recorded as such in a Church of Scotland register of 1586, on Pont’s manuscript of the 1590s, Robert Gordon’s map of the Clyde and Tweed basins, c. 1636–52, Blaeu’s map of 1654 and Nicolaes Visscher’s map of 1689; following Pont it is often written ‘Haick’).

haif see hafe

haifin (hāf-lin) n., poet. a halfing, stripling, young lad – ‘When lowsed at een be it hairst or ploin’, The thought o’ the haifin turns to woon’’ [WL] (also haifinn).

Haig (hāg) n. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Belset. His wife was Isobel, heir of James Rid- dell, portioner of Lilliesleaf. Andrew (17th C.) listed as ‘cottar’ at Abbotrule Townhead in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Anthony (17th/18th C.) resident of Maxton Parish. In 1706 he was recorded as ‘sevitour to Mr Edgar minister of Maxton’ when he had a ‘bastard’ child baptised in Hawick. He married Margaret Hart earlier in 1706 in Maxton. Their only recorded child was Jean (b.1706), baptised in Hawick, with witnesses Bailie Patrick Richardson and merchant William Oliver. Anthony (d.1801) weaver from Hawick, son of David. He could be the stocking-maker Anthony whose son Thomas died in 1819. He is probably the resident of Hawick who married Margaret Gibson in 1759 and had children including: Janet (b.1761); David (b.1763); William (b.1765); Margaret (b.1766); Jane (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); David (again, b.1772); Janet (again, b.1774); and Margaret (b.1776). All these children were baptised in Hawick, but the 1770 one was also recorded in Wilton, with witnesses William Simpson and Gavin Wallace. Anthony (b.1812/3) provision merchant on the High Street, at about No. 17 in 1851. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He presented at least 3 papers to the Archeological Society in its first few years, on topics like ‘Medieval History’. His wife was Isabella and their children included Thomas, George, Anthony, Margaret, John, Charles and William. He moved to Philadelphia and in 1863 made a donation to the Museum, when he is described as ‘an old member of the Society’. Anthony (b.1823/4) weaver in Hawick. He was living at 52 Loan in 1861. His wife was Euphemia and they had a son John. David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Brown and their children included: Anthony (b.1736); Isobel (b.1738); Margaret (b.1741); and James (b.1744). The witnesses in 1741 were wright James Roger and baker John Kedie. Earl Douglas (1861–1928) soldier, born in Edinburgh. He worked his way through the ranks, seving in the Sudan, in the Boer War and in India. He was the youngest Major-General of his time and became Director of Military Training at the War Office in 1906. He established a general staff and a territorial army and organised the British Expeditionary Force. In WWI he commanded forces in France and Belgium, becoming Commander-in-Chief of the B.E.F. in December 1915. Although successful, his tactics at Somme and Passchendaele have been much debated. After his retirement in 1921 he devoted his efforts to the Royal British Legion. He was made Earl Haig in 1919 and given £100,000 by a ‘grateful nation’. He became Baron Haig in 1921. In Hawick he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1925 when he attended the Callants’ Club dinner. The Haig Maternity Hospital was named after him in 1930 and Douglas Haig Court in 1976. Bemersyde House near St. Boswells, was bought for him by the Government in 1921, and he was also given £100,000 by a ‘grateful public’. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘cottar’ at Hartshaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His name is listed as ‘Haigh’. James (19th/20th C.) local sportsman who played scrum-half for the Greens, hockey at international level, was Scottish 10-mile championship runner, bowling cup-winner, etc. Additionally he led the cycling team that challenged and beat the rest of Scotland in 1901, after being annoyed that no Borderers were selected to represent the nation against England. He was Scottish 10 mile champion 3 years in a row. James (20th C.) Hawick man who executed the 1939–45 Roll of Honour for local soldiers who fell in WWII, displayed in the Museum. The design was the same as for the WWI Roll. He may be the same man as the painter and decorator who was the bugler for the Boy Scouts, seen in photographs of the 1910 visit by Beden-Powell. John (18th C.) recorded in a Hawick sasine of 1764 as ‘John Haig, in Whitfield, bailie in that part’. He may have been acting as a bailiff for the deed, or was a Hawick Bailie. Patrick (15th C.) part of a ‘retour of inquest’ held in Hawick in 1424 to decide on the inheritance of part of the Barony of How-nam. His name is recorded as ‘Hage’, and most of the other men were local lairds (formerly ‘Hague’, ‘Haige’ and variants).

the Haig (thu-håg) n. Haig Maternity Home, attached to the Springbank Clinic on Princes Street, and built in 1930, through the generosity of Norman W. Grieve. It was developed by the Town Council and handed over to the County. The labour and public wards were on the ground floor, with the nursery on the first floor. It was officially renamed the Haig Maternity Hospital when taken over by the N.H.S. in 1948. It delivered about 12,000 babies in Hawick from 1931 until 1988 when the B.G.H. was opened. The last baby born there was Claire White. The buildings were sold off for private housing in the mid-1990s. A history of the Haig was written by Dr. Suttie in 1999 (also sometimes called ‘the Home’).

haigle (hå-gul) v., arch. to carry, haul, trudge, struggle forward — Everly, when A haigle on alang streets chowky wui chuds o shairny stoor . . .’ [ECS], ‘Now ee must hev luiten’t faa, nih!

the Hainin (θu-hān-in) n. the Haining, a house dating from about 1794, in a walled estate on the left on the way into Selkirk from Hawick. Some of the decoration is by Archibald Elliot and the statuary by Canova. It served as a military headquarters during WWII, and partly burned down in 1944. The lakeside setting is impressive, and the ground contains the site of Selkirk Castle on Peel Hill, as well as the stable block, former bear and wolf enclosures and the remains of a lectern-shaped dovecote. The estate was once granted to the Constable of Selkirk Castle. It was part of the Crown lands in Ettrick Forest from about 1456 until about 1507. It later became the home of a branch of the Scotts, said by Scott of Satchells to be descended from the Scotts of Has scaredean. They held the lands from at least 1477. Robert Scott of the Haining witnessed several local charters in the late 15th century. It appears to have been held by the Murrays of Philiphaugh (recorded in 1491), before passing back to the Scotts in 1492. Sheep were stolen from Robert Scott there in 1494/5. John Murray gave permission in about 1499 for John Scott (and his son John) to hold the lease. John Scott had a charter for the lands in 1507, when it was described as a land of 7 pounds and 2 shillings of old extent.
Haining

Thomas Scott of Haining held a sasine for the lands in 1538. Walter Scott was tenant there in 1541, paying £24 yearly. Andrew Riddell bought it from the Scotts in about 1625. John Langlands, minister of Wilton, had a sasine of lands there in 1664. In 1678 the lands were valued at almost £2000. Early in the 18th century the estate was bought by the Pringles of Clifton. In 1785 the lands were valued at about £1440. In 1842 it passed to John Pringle’s sister, Margaret Violet, and her husband Archibald Pringle Douglas of Adderstone and Midshielis. The grounds once held exotic animals, including a bear and a large monkey; the monkey shivered in cold weather, leading to the local phrase ‘Chitterin’ to death, like the Hainin’ Puggy’ { `Ca up young Hob, of the Hainin’ Puggy’ (cf. the more common ‘hainin’).}

Haining (hā-in)n. James (19th C.) proprietor of the Hawick Advertiser, taking over from James Dalgleish about 6 months after the newspaper started. He took Dalgleish back as a partner when he returned to Hawick in 1857, but bought him out in 1870 after disagreement about taking his son William Dalgleish into partnership. He then sold it to William Morrison in 1876. His premises were at 9 High Street. He married Agnes Robson, and James H. was their son. A portrait exists of him. James Halliday (1870–1946) son of James and Agnes Robson. He was long involved with the Archaological Society, he was Treasurer 1907–11, Assistant Secretary 1917–18, Joint Secretary 1920–25 and 1929, Secretary 1930–35 and Vice-President 1936. He wrote many articles for the Transactions. His series of monumental inscriptions in Hawick’s cemeteries, with extensive notes, are an extraordinary achievement, leaving a huge legacy of local family history. He married Isabella Christina, daughter of coal merchant Thomas Rutherford.

hainit (hā-ne’), -ni) pp., arch. preserved, set aside, protected by an enclosure, refrained – ‘...either in his nighbour’s corn, meadow, or haynit gers, sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings...’[BR1640], ‘Item, that na persone nor personis schair medowis, balkis, or haynit gers thist-ouselie...’[BR1640] ‘...lo, I haena hainet my lips, O Lord, thou kennist’[HSR] (also written ‘haynit’).

Hair (hār)n. Ralph (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as being ‘in Wodburne’, which may have been the lands in the Borthwick valley. He was accused of stealing 17 sheep from George Chisholme of Woodburn, but was acquitted.

Halberdiers (hal-bur-deer) n. the men who have carried the halberds during the Common Riding generally perform the duty for many years, and in former times also served as town criers and policemen. Tracking them over the centuries is complicated by their changing roles, being sometimes ‘Burgh Officer’, ‘bellman’ or just ‘officer’. A partial list includes: ‘Jok Scott, belman in Hawik’ in 1610; Walter Stewart and James Kinnaid in 1638; Wull ‘the Bellman’ Scott, late 1600s; John Stewart until about 1696; Alexander Scott from 1696; Alexander Young, at least 1696–1707; James Oliver, recorded in 1718; James Cowan, recorded in 1723; John Stewart, recorded in 1723 and around 1743; Francis Turnbull, from 1734 until at least 1767; ‘Wull Leppie’, early 1800s; Sandy Bryson, early 1800s; Caleb Rutherford, 1820s; John ‘Tufty’ Wilson, 1830s; William Turnbull, 1820s to 1840s; Tom Wells, 1850s; Thomas ‘Tam-a-Linkin’ Turnbull till about 1860; James Smith, 1860s; Michael Wintrope, from 1860s; Fraser...

Haldane (hawl-dän) n. James (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Helen Bryson in 1774. Their children included: Helen (b.1775); Ann (b.1778); and James (b.1781). An unnamed child of his died in 1776. He is probably the ‘James Halden’ who is stated to have had 2 stocking frames in Hawick in an account of local industry by David Loch in about 1777. James Alexander (1768–1851) younger brother of Robert, he had a naval career, but left to pursue an evangelical calling. Along with his brother and possibly John Aikman and Rowland Hill, he visited Hawick in 1798. It is said that they ‘preached from a heap of stones – the debris of the old ‘Tower of Hawick’, which could have been the demolished Garrison at the bottom of the Howegate. The men they inspired in Hawick became known as ‘Haldenites’ and within a few years had started the congregation that met in the Tabernacle. James (b.c.1790) born at Chanelkirk, he was miller at Riddell Mill. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 60 acres, employing 2 labourers. He was listed as miller at Riddell Mill in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife Helen was from Selkirk. His children included: William; James, corn merchant in Hawick; Helen; Euphemia; and Janet. James (1823/4–98) born at Standhill farm where his father worked before moving to Riddell Mill. He came to Hawick where he set up as a corn merchant at 4 Howegate, building up the business as the railway opened to Carlisle. He ran the farm at Sluton Parkhead for a while, while his nephew ran the business. Overall he ran his corn merchant’s for about 40 years. It is said he was a very strong man, who could carry a sack of oats under each arm, and once assisted the police by literally ‘lifting’ the culprit to the police station. He was an elder in Allars Kirk, a Liberal in politics and a keen bowler. In 1851 he married Isabella Aitken (who died in 1894, aged 60). Their children included James, Agnes (who married butcher John Davies), Isabella (who married Thomas Graham), Lizzie (who married Peter Rutherford, farmer of Clifton Hill), Jessie, Phemie, Ellen (who died aged 23), Annie Aitken (who died aged 22) and 2 Johns (who both died young). He was buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. James (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabella Laidlaw and their children included Agnes (b.1860) and William (b.1862). James (1857/8–1930) son of corn merchant James. He was a simpleton with a ‘palley’ arm, who assisted his father. He also used to regularly drop in on Robert Purdom, Town Clerk, until presented with a bill for his time! James (1840/1–1884) nephew of corn merchant James, he helped run the business. He married Elizabeth Jackson (who died in 1913, aged 75). Their children were Bella, Lizzie and Jane. John (16th C.) mentioned as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scots and the Kerrs. His name is recorded as ‘John Haldene of the Ilk’. In 1569 he was a surety along with Rutherfords, for Robert Ker of Lochtour. Also in 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. John (18th C.) mason of Galashiels, who possibly worked on the Slitrig Bridge and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776. John (b.1814/15) born in Bowden Parish. He was miller at Riddell Mill in 1841 and at Highchesters Mill in 1851. He was listed as miller at Highchesters Mill in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Isabella, and their children included James, Isabella, Robert and John. Robert (1764–1842) Scottish evangelical preacher, elder brother of James Alexander. He inherited the family estate of Airthey House (now part of Stirling University), but later sold it to fund his missionary work. The preaching meetings of him and his brother in Hawick in 1798 (and not 1789, as sometimes stated) led to the formation of the Independent Church and the later construction of the Tabernacle on the Kirk Wynd, this being effectively the seed for the later formation of the Congregational and Baptist Kirks. He helped fund the construction of the Tabernacle in Hawick and supported Mr. Paton, who was the first preacher of the new Hawick congregation. The first (and only) permanent minister of the Independent Kirk in Hawick, Charles Gray, was trained at the Haldane brothers’ academy in Edinburgh.

the Half Moon Hotel (tha-hawf-moon-hōtel) n. hotel and pub situated at 64 High Street, which held popular dances in its ballroom in the 19th century. Common Riding events were often held there. The ballroom was also regularly used for weddings and other events, and held the Episcopal school and church meetings from about 1847–50. In the early part of the century the hotel was known simply as ‘Mrs. Inglis’ and was a favoured place for factory workers to meet on Saturdays to have their pay distributed. It was taken over by Anthony Boiston, who changed the name. It is recorded as the Cornet’s headquarters, where the Flag was displayed from the Thursday night in 1875 and as the location for the more informal Colour Bussing of 1881. Although the inn is long gone, the adjacent passageway is still known as Half Moon Yard. Previous to the existence of the hotel there was a pended house on the site (also written ‘Hauf’).

Half Moon Yaird (hawf-moon-yārd) n. passageway off O’Connell Street, behind where the Half Moon Hotel used to be, off the south side of the street.

Haliburton (hā-lee-bur’-in) n. Agnes ‘Nanny’ (18th C.) housemaid at Stobs in 1789 when she was working for Sir Francis Elliott. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife was Helen Brown and they had an unnamed son in 1670. Andrew, W.S. (1673–1738) 3rd son of Thomas of Newmains, Berwickshire. He served as factor to Scott of Harden in at least the years 1711–24. He was probably the Andrew, ‘writer in Edinburgh’ who acted for William Elliot of Harwood in at least the period 1705–08. In 1700 he married Marion, 2nd daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill. Probably the same writer Andrew witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1741, suggesting that the death year of 1738 is incorrect. David of Mertoun (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, including Goldielands and others near Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to the other Haliburtons of Mertoun and Dryburgh; he may be the younger son of William of Mertoun, who married Euphane, daughter of the Laird of Gledstains, and whose marriage required permission from the Cardinal on account of them being too closely related. George of Pinncle (16th/17th C.) married Dorothy, who was probably a daughter of Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1608 his wife was one of the heirs of Stobs who complained about a raid by the Scotts of Northhouse and others. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Gledstains and their children included Janet (b.1635) and Henry (b.1640). Walter (b.1642), with the mother’s name given as ‘Manie Gledstains’, was probably also his son. George (17th/18th C.) Burgess of Hawick, recorded in 1694 when he had to pay his Burgess fee, suggesting that he had just become a full member of one of the Trades. Probably the same George was a wright who married Margaret Scott. Their children included: Walter (b.1703); Benjamin (b.1704); and probably Mary (b.1701), Bessie (b.1707) and Henry (b.1708). The witnesses in 1704 were carrier Andrew Clerk abd merchant Adam Turnbull. He may be the George who is recorded supplying liquor to Wells House in the second quarter of the 18th century. George (18th C.) local merchant who took possession of the lands of Dovemount in 1770 from Robert Langlands and subsequently sold off various parts. He is recorded at Dovemount in a baptismal record of 1780. He is listed as ‘George Hallyburton, Dovemount’ when he subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’, (1784). He could be the George whose house near Hawick Mill was severely damaged in the flood of 1767. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of ‘William Tudhope’s lands, purchased from Langlands’ in Wilton Parish, valued at £25; this is probably Dovemount. In the 1811 Land Tax records he is listed as owner of Dovemount (although he may have already been deceased), ‘acquired from Langlands’. Later in the 19th century the lands were owned by Thomas Laidlaw. He married Betty Wilson in in 1766 and their children included: Isobel (b.1767), baptised in Hawick; and Andrew (b.1771), James (b.1772), Robert (b.1774), Jean (b.1776), John (b.1778) and Thomas (b.1780), baptised in Wiltton. The witnesses in 1780 were Dr. James Wilson and Bailie John Wilson (who were surely related to his wife). He is probably the George whose daughter Jean died in Hawick in 1797. George (18th/19th C.) tenant in Littlefield Mill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Roll. It is possible he was the same as John clear who they were or why they were listed together. It may be the Henry who had a son Henry in Hawick in 1696. He may be the Henry who witnessed a baptism for John Beattie in Hawick Parish in 1676. Henry (17th C.) wright of Hawick, listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is listed as ‘Hendrie Hallaburtone’, living on the west-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Henry who had a son Henry in Hawick in 1696. He may be the Henry who witnessed a baptism for John Beattie in Hawick Parish in 1676. Henry (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Henderson and was at Roughley in 1778 when their son John was baptised. They may also be the parents of Malie (b.1792), baptised in Robertson Parish. John of Muirhouselaw (17th C.) possibly son of Adam of Muirhouselaw. He held lands in the Barony of Belses and Pinnacle according to the tax roll for the Abbey of Jedburgh in 1626. He was probably the Laird of ‘Morislaw’ who represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1625. He may be the same John who was on the ‘retour’ for Ker of Cessford in 1600, and who had a charter for Friarshaw in 1606. He was one of the minor barons of Roxburghshire convened to try to elect representatives to Parliament in 1628. He held lands in Maxton Parish in 1643. He may be the John of Muirhouselaw who married Margaret, daughter and heiress of David Boswell of Bowhill. His son John (b.1634) succeeded to Muirhouselaw, as well as to Bowhill. John (1634–1704) son of John and Margaret Boswell. He probably also held land at Belses. He married Jean (d.1703), daughter of Mark Pringle of Clifton and had sons John (who succeeded) and Patrick (who became Dean of Guild in Edinburgh). John (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is listed as owner of 4 hearths along with William Cunningham, but it is unclear who they were or why they were listed together. It is possible he was the same as John of Muirhouselaw. John (17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf Mill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John of Howcleuch (d.1750s) doctor from Jedburgh. In 1714 he married Christian, daughter of Simon Elliot of Swinside. He became Laird of Howcleuch and also owned Borthwick Mains, these perhaps being inherited through his wife. His son Simon became minister of Newcastleton. His daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1798. Rev. Simon (1720–1797) son of John, a doctor in Jedburgh, and Christian Elliot of Swinside. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1745. In 1749 he was presented to Castleton Parish by the Duke of Buccleuch and became minister there in 1751. The delay was because of an objection by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, one of the Lords of Session at the time, in part because he used notes while preaching. Regarding using notes, the Presbytery stated that ‘there was no law of the Church against that, and that it was practised by several ministers of the best character’. However, the objections appeared to run deeper than this, since he also had threatening letters sent to him and was insulted by a mob in Castleton, with 3 men and 1 woman imprisoned in Edinburgh for riotous conduct following the reading of his appointment; the congregation objected to having no say in the appointment of their minister and locked up the church and filled the lock with stones. Some of the members of his church left in 1751 to start a secession church (later to become the Newcastleton United Presbyterian Church). He employed a preacher to help him in 1759 and later an assistant minister, John Campbell. In 1762 he was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Sir Gilbert Elliot, and ordained there in 1763, apparently to the great delight of the Castleton parishioners. There is no record of whether he was as popular at Ashkirk! However, he did have the new church built for him there in 1791. He inherited the lands of Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains from his father, but in 1755 sold them to Walter Scott, farmer at Commonside. In 1779 he was granted liferent of Elliot of Minto’s lands of Shielswood (valued at £260) and the west and north-west parts of Headshaw (valued at £149 14s 2d). This grant of lands was just so that he could be added to the Roxburghshire voters’ roll; in 1788 he was listed under ‘Votes of Sir Gilbert Elliot’ among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was recorded at Ashkirk in the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. 1794/5 he was listed in the Carriage Tax Rolls. He held the superiority of part of Headshaw in life-rent. He was described as ‘simple-minded’ (by Rev. Russell of Ettrick). During his bachelor days his housekeeper was his sister Peggy. He became senile in his old age. He married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill (and probably widow of Charles Paterson of Drygrange) in 1749. Their children included: Katherine, John, who was a Captain with the East India Company, died in India and was the last male representative of the family of Newmains and Merton; and Robert and Thomas, who both died young. ‘Miss Halliburton sister to Mr. Halliburton Ashkirk’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1798, was his sister. He wrote a description of the Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account.

Thomas of Muirhouselaw (1692–1716) son of John and grandson of John and Jean Pringle. In 1708 he married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of George Rutherford of Fairington. He was killed by his brother-in-law George Rutherford in a fight which flared up over a boundary dispute. His cousin George (Lord Provost of Edinburgh) married his widow and succeeded to Muirhouselaw.

Thomas (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1791 he paid the cart tax in Hawick. He was owner of 2 work horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas, whose father-in-law James Deans died in 1794. Thomas (18th/19th C.) helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He could be the Thomas, farmer at Tushielaw, who, along with James (also farmer there) was listed in the 1835 electoral roll as joint proprietor of a house in Hawick, succeeding their father Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertton Parish. He is recorded at Borthwickbrae in 1714, Eilrig in 1718 and Phillhope in 1721. In 1703 he married ‘Maly Eliot’ from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Margaret (b.1709); Andrew (b.1712); Isobel (b.1714); Mary (b.1718); and Janet (b.1721) (see also Halliburton; formerly spelled ‘Haliburton’, ‘Haliburton’, ‘Haliburton’, ‘Haliburton’, ‘Haliburton’, ‘Haliburton’, ‘Hallyburton’, ‘Heliebourton’, ‘Hellyburton’, ‘Hellybourton’, etc.).

Halidon Hill (ha-li-din-hil) n. battle in 1333, the site being about 2 miles north-west of Berwick. It followed Edward III deciding to take back the port from the Scots. The siege of Berwick lasted months, with Edwards men ravaging the Scottish Borders while they waited. To relieve the siege Lord Archibald Douglas finally led his forces to engage the English at Halidon Hill, the Scots becoming bogged down and being slaughtered by English archers. Part of the English force was commanded by Edward Batiol. The other Scots commanders were Robert Stewart (the future king) and John Randolph, 3rd Earl of Moray. English casualties were light, but the Scots lost thousands of men, including the Guardian, at least 5 other Earls and perhaps 90 knights. Sir Michael Scott of Rankilburn was one of the few local men who survived. It is said that the battle was proceeded by hand to hand combat involving Turnbull of Rule and Sir Robert Benscale, with Turnbull being slain. A block of stone was placed there in 1933 by the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club.

Haliness (ha-lee-nis) n., poet. holiness – ‘...worship the Lord in the beutie o’ haliness’ [HSR], ‘Sing untill the Lord, O ye saunts o’ his, an’ gie thanks at the remembirence o’ his haliness’ [HSR] (also written ‘haliniss’).

Halifax (haw-lee-fawks) n. type of British bomber that crashed near Craik village in 1944, killing all 8 crew members. A memorial plaque in Craik commemorates the event.

Halket (hal-ki’) n. John (c.1780–1828) studied at St. Andrews University 1794–8 and Edinburgh University 1801/2. He spent some time as a tutor in the family of George Douglas of Cavers. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and was minister at Coupar from 1807 until he died.

Halkyn (hal-kin) n. alternative name of Ashkirk Manse, situated just beside the church.

Hall (hal, haw) n. Agnes (18th C.) chambermaid at Cavers in 1785, when she was working for Capt. John Douglas. Agnes (b.1799/1800) widow of Thomas. She was a draper in Newcastleton from at least 1837 until the 1860s. She had children George, Thomas and John. They lived at about 35 North Hermitage Street. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Heap on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He owned 8 horses, and so must have had a fair sized farm, and he also had a greyhound. He could be the Andrew, married to Betty Laidlaw, whose son Benjamin was baptised in Wilton in 1809. Andrew (b.1822/3) born in Edrom, he was a farmer at Horsleyhill. He is recorded there in 1861 as farmer of 395 acres, employing 10 people. His wife was Helen and their children included Anna and Margaret L. Andrew (19th/20th C.) son of Benjamin and Margaret Wilson, he was a tweed foreman. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Greenwood. Benjamin (b.1809/10) spinner at Nixon’s Mill. He was living at Lynnwood in 1841 and 1851. He married Margaret, daughter of...
spinner Robert Wilson. Their children included Jessie, Betsy, Andrew, Isabel, Robert and Benjamin. David (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Oldsteson’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear precisely where this farm was, but probably near Roughlee. David (1826/7–86) from Batley in Yorkshire, he settled in Hawick in 1849 to work in the woollen trade. He became the best local cricket batsman, inspiring the game within Hawick. He helped as instructor for the Hawick team when it formed in 1849. His brother Joseph came to Hawick later. He worked as a woollen waste merchant for about 30 years. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a partner with Joseph as an earthenware and glass dealer, as well as rag dealers, on Backdamgate (incorrectly listed as ‘Hill’). The brothers were lodgers on the Cross Wynd in 1851, working as wool dealers, employing 4 women and 2 boys. He was at 15 Backdamgate in 1861 and later lived at Hopehill. He may be the David listed as owner of ‘Part of Roughheugh in about 1874, acquired from Langlands’, which had been owned by Hector Blairie according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married Mary Day, who remarried George White of Dudley, and died in 1904, aged 72. Their children were Rowland Carr and Lucy (who married Dr. Adam Frederick Hunter Dryden and emigrated to the U.S.A.) as well as several children who did not survive past infancy. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. George (17th C.) Hawick resident. In 1679 he was convicted of ‘ane blood’ on Robert Scott, and ordered to pay him 5 shillings Scots per day on account that his arm was swollen and he could not reap. Rev. George (c.1680–1740) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1699, he became Chaplain to the Laird of Torsonce (near Stow), was licensed by the Presbytery of Earlston in 1706, and became Chaplain to Thomas, Earl of Haddington. He was ordained as minister of Abbotrule in 1714 and remained there until translated to Linton in 1728. He was also presented to Lochmaben in 1722, but appears not to have gone there. He preached in Hawick at least once, in 1721. He is recorded in 1726 along with Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk in a bond with Robert Pringle, writer in Edinburgh. And in 1733 part of a debt to Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk was repaid. But a court action by John Horsburgh of that Ilk followed in 1735, presumably to recover the rest of the loan. He married Emelia Duncan (d.1768) and their children were Patrick, Gilbert and Jean (who married Colin Campbell in Edinburgh). He published ‘Practical Sermons on several subjects’ (1732). George (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Oliver in Hawick in 1792. Their children included: Thomas (b.1793), said to have been a sailor in the American War of 1812; and Agnes (b.1800), who married Jacob Evans and died in Philadelphia in 1884. It is claimed in some genealogies that he was born in Duns in 1763, also had children John (b.1796) and George (b.1798), both born in Duns, and emigrated to Philadelphia, dying of yellow fever shortly afterwards; however, it seems possible that two completely different Georges are being conflated here. It seems reasonable to assume that his wife was daughter of John Oliver and Agnes Ekron (based on his daughter Agnes’ descendants in America having possession of Agnes Akron’s book of the catechism), but any connection to Halls from Duns is much less clear. George (b.1789/90) born in Northumberland, he was a sheep and cattle dealer in Newcastle. He was listed as a Castleton drover in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at about 19 Douglas Square. His first wife was Sarah and he secondly married Christina, daughter of joiner John Douglas; she worked as an assistant post-mistress in Newcastle. His children included Helen and John. George (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was shepherd at Rulestownhead in 1861. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Andrew, Arcilla, Helen and James. George (1822/3–90) fish monger, game and poultry dealer in Hawick. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at about 19 Douglas Square. His first wife was Sarah and he secondly married Christina, daughter of joiner John Douglas; she worked as an assistant post-mistress in Newcastle. His children included Helen and John. buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Isabella ‘Tibbie o Wigg’ (19th C.) married George Scott, shepherd at Hardlee and Hyn德尔。One of her sons was Overhall farmer James. James (d.1570s) described as ‘in Wollie’ (presumably Wolfelee) when Will Robson ‘in Rochthewchmyyne’ was charged with his murder. Robson failed to appear and so his surety, James Langlands of that Ilk, was ordered to pay 20 merks to his daughter Malie. James (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when accused by the English Warden of being part of a raid into England 3 years earlier. John Scott ‘the Tinchler’ led the group of what was claimed to be 500 men on a day-long foray. He had sons Jamie and Hob, who are listed with him in an accusation of 1590 for a raid on ‘Wartoun’. His son ‘Jamy Hall of Heaviside, younger’ is recorded in another complaints of 1590. They may have been descended from William and David, who were recorded as tenants in Heaviside in 1494/5. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Burnmouth. In 1699 he was sent by the Castleton Session to Leith to obtain ‘twelve flagons of claret wine, and bring it for the sacrament’. James (1719/20–88) ‘dweller at Gatehaughscot’ according to his gravestone in Bedrule kirkyard. He married Agnes Thomson, who died in 1786, aged 71. Their son was born in 1794, aged 32, and was married to Margaret McKenzie. James (b.1819/20) born in Morebattle Parish, he was a shepherd at Fairloans in Bedrule Parish in 1861. He married Helen Hobkirk and their children included Margaret, Helen and James. Janet (b.1774/5) listed as ‘Ind.’ in the 1841 census at Ewes Old Toll Bar. She was living with Mary, who was probably her daughter, and had other residents in the house, probably lodgers. In 1851 she was listed as a widow at the Old Tollbar. Jean (18th/19th C.) local character, brought up at Dodburn, she later lived at ‘the Yett’, near Hawick Moor. She had a reputation as a witch, with many stories told of her apparent powers. She was certainly an imposing woman, with masculine features, a hirple and a strong personality. John (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby, including Thomas, who was presumably related. John (16th C.) one of the King’s shepherds, who, along with John Hope, had sheep stolen from him by a group of Armstrongs and others in 1535. This was at ‘Braidlee in the Forest’, which was probably the farm in the Borthwick valley. The same 2 men were recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 in ‘Braidlie and Filop’ when they were paid £6 13s 4d for 10 bolls of grain. John (16th C.) tenant of ‘Newbegyne’ who was witness in 1557 to the bond in which Turnbulls and others promised to bring William Nixon to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. The others involved were from Rulaway and neighbouring areas, and so this was probably a local Newbigging, but perhaps the one near Oxnam. He may be the same John ‘of Newbiging thelder’ listed first in 1544 among Halls who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpresley in the lands of Outsideside in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John (17th C.) servant of Andrew Turnbull, who was tenant at Wolfelee Mill. In 1684 he appeared on a long list of men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. John (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (18th C.) shepherd at Carewoodrig. His wife Mary Elliot died in 1784 and is buried in Teviothead cemetery. He may have been son of Robert (d.1789), also buried there. John (18th C.) married Violet Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1773. Their children included Isabel (b.1775) and Violet (b.1777). John (b.1814/5) born in Hawick, he was a wool spinner. In 1861 he was living at 3 West Port (but he does not appear to have been in the Hawick area in 1841 or 1851). His cousin Annie Ekron was also living with him in 1861 (although the relationship between them is not clear). He married Henrietta (or ‘Henny’) Hume in 1840; she was from Selkirk. John (b.1817/1) born in Morebattle, he was a shepherd at Spittal-on-Rule in 1851. His wife was Alison and their children included James. John (19th C.) from Hawick, he is recorded winning 2 leaping events at the 1835 Common Riding Games. Joseph (b.1829/30) from England, he was younger brother of David, and came to Hawick later. The pair set themselves up as woollen and rag dealers on Backdargate. In 1851 they were employing 4 women and 2 boys and they were listed as rag dealers in Slater’s 1852 directory. Kitty (18th/19th C.) originally from Northumberland, she lived at Fairloans near the head of the Kale. She cited for James Telfer (the poetic schoolmaster of Saughtree) a version of the ballad ‘The Death of Parcy Reed’, which he transcribed and presented to Sir Walter Scott and was published in ‘Local Historian’s Table Book’ in 1844. She said that ‘she never liked to sing the verses, as she knew them to be perfectly true, and consequently could not bear to think there had been, of her own surname, such wretches as the betrayers of Parcy Reed'. Malie (16th C.) only lawful daughter of James in Woollie. She was given 20 merks in compensation by James Langlands of that Ilk, when William Robson failed to appear to answer to the charge of murdering her father. Rev. Mercer (1855–1927) born in Galashiels, 5th son of builder John and Isabella Matthew. He attended St. Andrews and Edinburgh Universities and was licensed by Selkirk Presbytery. He became assistant at St. Mark’s in Dundee and was ordained minister at Careston, Forfarshire in 1886. The next year he was translated to Roberton Parish where he was minister until his death, although he was assisted by Æneas McNmes from 1894. Peter (1847–1928) printer and reporter, he was brother of Anthony, who modelled for the ‘Golden Boy’ on the dome of Edinburgh University’s Old College, and was a great athlete in his youth. He worked for a while for the Hawick Advertiser and later had a florist’s shop in Edinburgh. Robert (15th C.) witness to the 1469 and 1479 sasines for Wolfelee. Gilbert was listed after him in 1469 and probably a close relative. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) tenant of the farms of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed on a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. Robert (1692/3–1789) probably shepherd at Carewoodrig, where he died. His wife Janet Scott died at Linhope in 1738. John, shepherd at Carewoodrig was probably his son. He lived to the age of 96. Robert (18th C.) recorded as ‘Robt. Ha, Dodburn’ in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common). Along with several other neighbouring farmers he paid a penny per 50 divots. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Mains (in Cavers Parish), recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of Benjamin and Margaret Wilson. He was foreman at William Laidlaw & Son’s. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as ‘Thome de Hall’ in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. John is also listed, and so probably related. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Haw’ when he was on the panel which met at Cavers to decide on inheritance of certain Elliot lands in 1497/8. Thomas of Thorlieshope (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear how long he held the lands of Thorlieshope or where he was from. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at High Tofts in Kirkton Parish according to the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Silverbuthall, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (d.1837) Newcastleton linen and woollen draper and spirit dealer listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He may be the same Thomas, resident of Newcastleton, who was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax rolls. He married Agnes Inglis, who died in 1865, aged 65. His widow was a draper on North Hermitage Street from at least 1841 until the 1860s. His children included George, Thomas and John. Thomas (b.1793) son of George and Elizabeth Oliver, he was born in Hawick. It is said that he emigrated to America, became a sailor, was captured by the British in the War of 1812 and died in Dartmoor Prison. Thomas (b.1799/1800) carter in Denholm from at least 1841. He was a carter In 1851 he was listed as a coal agent, living at Hassendean Station House, and in 1861 was a carter somewhere near Leyden Road in Denholm. His wife was Isabella, from Kirkton Parish. He had daughter Jane (or ‘Jeany’) and Helen. Walter (17th/18th C.) from Jedburgh, he married Agnes Easton in Wilton in 1713. His wife was from Heap, daughter of William Easton. Walter (1778–1863) warehouseman of Brougham Place who was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. In 1841 he was recorded at about 13 Brougham Place, living with his wife Agnes and children Mary and Ann. William (16th C.) recorded in 1549 as ‘William Haw’ when he was a resident of Whames and listed among the men complaining about their farms being ravaged in the previous year by a group of Englishmen, assisted by Kers and others. William (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1674 when he and his family were banished from the Town for running at the Bailie with a sword and threatening to shoot him, ‘and because they are vagabond Egyptians’. He could be the William who married Janet Aitchison and whose children baptised in Hawick included Bessie (b.1652), John (b.1654) and James (b.1657). William (17th/18th C.) married Helen Anderson in Kirkton Parish in 1709. William (b.1679/80) shepherd in lands adjacent to Hawick Common. He was shepherd at Winnington Rig for 24 years, then 2 years later moved to Langflat, where he worked for 8 years, until about 1751, thereafter living at Dodburn and Acreknowe. He gave evidence in 1767
Regarding the previous use of the Common, and was a widower at that time. He is probably the William whose children Anna (b.1719), Thomas (b.1721), Robert (b.1723), Walter (b.1724) and James (b.1732) were baptised in Kirkton Parish and Gilbert (b.1733) in Cavers Parish. In 1719 and 1721 he was recorded being ‘in Rige’. William (18th C.) tenant in Hyndhope in Oxnam Parish. He paid the window tax there in 1748. In 1730 he married Cecile, younger daughter of William Elliot of Thorlieshope and Ove. William (1733/4-1803) married Isabel Best in Wilton Parish in 1770. Their children included: Gilbert (b.1771); Agnes (b.1776); and Magdalen (b.1779). He died at Damhead and is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. William (18th C.) married Janet Ker. Their son Robert was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1778. The witnesses were John Ker (presumably a relative) and James Douglas. William (d.1854) student of divinity and assistant teacher at the Academy in the Subscription Rooms who drowned in the Borthwick on the Friday of the Common Riding. William, J.P. (19th/20th C.) foreman dyer in Hawick. He was a Director of the Working Men’s Building Society, Chairman of the School Board and later of the School Management Committee, as well as a prominent local Liberal politician. He was also President of the Hawick Co-op in the 1880s and involved with the I.O.U.S. Mechanics. He was Sunday School Superintendent at St. George’s Kirk 1895–1908. William, M.I.C.E. (19th/20th C.) writer of ‘Liddlesdale, Roxburghshire’ (1903), ‘Newcastleton, Roxburghshire: a border village’ (1905) and ‘Border village (Roxburghshire): a plea for the people: with some remarks on the Liddle and Solway fisheries’ (1907). Probably the same William left money to live on. By 1851 he was at Easter Langbaurulf (where John also lived for a while), with her grandson James, and in 1861 she was a pauper (formerly farm servant) at Myreslaw. It is said that her son inherited from her a love of Scottish ballads. Her husband’s name is unknown, but he was presumably a farm labour at Hawickshields. The one recorded marriage that could be hers is between James and Helen (b.1796/7) probably mother of the poet John. In 1841 she was recorded at Hawickshields with Barbara, probably a daughter. She was ‘independent’ at that time, suggesting that she was a widow, with enough money to live on. By 1851 she was at Easter Langbaurulf (where John also lived for a while), with her grandson James, and in 1861 she was a pauper (formerly farm servant) at Myreslaw-green. It is said that her son inherited from her a love of Scottish ballads. Her husband’s name is unknown, but he was presumably a farm labourer at Hawickshields. The one recorded marriage that could be hers is between James and...
Hallin

Helen Gladstones in Kirkton in 1817. James (17th C.) fisher in Hawick. He was recorded in 1692 ‘for publicly selling up and down the town ane carcass of swyne which was leprous, and consequently dangerous to be made use of’. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the James listed as a resident of Hawick ‘uest the water’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed a baptism for baker Adam Richardson in 1709. He may be the James who married Margaret Dickson, and whose children baptised in Hawick included: William (b.1669); Agnes (b.1671); Margaret (b.1675); and Isobel (b.1681). The witnesses in 1675 were Robert Wright and John Tintin. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope in 1716 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. John (1821–1902) born at Hawickshiels, a few miles south of Hawick, probably son of Helen, although his father’s name is unknown. He was writer of the song ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’ and many poems, sometimes under the name ‘The Rustic Bard’. He only had about 2 years of formal schooling and at the age of 10 was hired as an assistant shepherd by one of the local farmers. He was recorded as a labourer at Skelfhill stables in 1841. Sometime before 1845 he moved to the Longbaulk where he lived for a few years before moving to Hobkirk in 1849, where he worked as a hedger, ditcher, harvester, etc. He lived for a while at Drythroppple, and developed a reputation as a skilled horticulturalist. Along with Sandy and James Mathieson (gardeners at Weens and Wauchope, respectively), he founded the Hobkirk Flower Show. In 1851 he reported to a local newspaper a story of the appearance of a ‘Brocken spectre’ (i.e. mirage of a shadow); at that point he was living at ‘North Town of Rule’. In 1854 he moved to Bridge of Allan (a different one from where he grew up!), where he was a landscape gardener. He was also said to be an expert angler. He published ‘The Rustic Bard: or, A voice from the People’ (1847) when living at Longbaulk. This book of verse contains many pieces in local dialect, which are invaluable early published examples of the language. He also features in Dr. Rodgers’ ‘Scottish Minstrel’ (1856). In 1859 he donated a silver coin of Alexander II to the Archæological Society. It is unclear whether he had any local connections after this date, although the will always be remembered for ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’. He married Margaret Carruthers in Hobkirk Parish in 1847 and is recorded living with her at North Town o’ Rule in 1851. He may have been proprietor of the ‘Lady of the Lake’ in Bridge of Allan. His wife died in 1877 and he moved to Stirling in 1893, where he stayed with relatives in the Castle Hotel. He was said to have maintained a ‘vigorous and hearty old age, his interest in literature, especially poetry, being unabated’. He died in Stirling, and is buried at Logie. Robert (18th/19th C.) chaise-driver at Teviotbank in 1797, when he was working for David Simpson. William (b.c.1868) hemp roper maker on the Back Row, recorded in 1841. His wife was Janet, and their daughter Margaret was also there (also written ‘Halyday’, ‘Hellyday’, etc.).

Halliwel (haw-lee-wel) n. James (17th C.) gardener at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name is written ‘Helliwel’. He is probably the James ‘heliwall’ who witnessed a baptism for William Telfer in Stirches in 1683 and another for George Scott in 1687. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was fined along with Isabel Stuart for fighting over the placement of their market stalls. Her surname is given as ‘Holywell’. William (17th C.) resident at Newlands on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. His name is written ‘Halliwall’. He was probably related to James. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Mary Watson and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: George (b.1704); and Isobel (b.1708). The 1704 baptism was witnessed by fellow shoe-maker George Allan and weaver John Swan and the 1708 baptism by Robert and George Allan (also written ‘Halliwell’ and ‘Holywell’).

Hallmoss (hal-mos) n. boggy area between Drinkstone Hill and the main A7, just north of Groundistone farm. The nearby wood is called Hallmoss Plantation. There has been a claim that part of a Roman road was visible here, as well as an ancient enclosure of some sort.

hallow (ha-low) v., arch. to hallow, make a loud call of derision – ‘...by cryeing themselves and hounding others to cry publicly and loudly to hallow out at windows and too hout the baylyeaes when passing by...’ [BR1706].

Hallrule (haw-, hawl-rool) n. hamlet about 8 miles east of Hawick, between Bonchester and Bedrule. It was formerly a major estate of Hobkirk Parish. Much of the land of the farm there had been the Common of the barony of Feu-Rule and the farm may also have been known as the Mains of Feu-Rule. James White was a resident there in 1493. The lands are recorded being held by George Turnbull in 1493 and 1502, and in 1516 the tenants were Robert, William and Thomas Turnbull. The town there was burned by the Marquis of Dorset’s men in 1523 and the tower burned by the English in 1545. The lands passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. In the late 16th and early 17th centuries the Laird of half the lands was George Turnbull, and through his daughter Isobel they appear to have passed to the Turnbuls of Barnhills. It may be among the lands in Feu-Rule granted to Gilbert Elliott by Andrew Kerr, Lord Jedburgh in 1629. It is said that the Elliotts of Stobs gained the lands through some underhand method. The ‘town’ is mentioned in 1632 along with the Mains of Feu-Rule ‘alias Fewroule vocatis Halroule’ when the superiority was inherited by Robert, son of Andrew Ker of Faldonside. In 1649 parts of the Barony of Feu-Rule were erected into the Barony of Hallrule, and held by William Elliott of Stobs in the mid-17th century. By 1678 Elliott of Stobs owned lands there valued at £2142, and were merged with 2 pieces of land of Hawthornside valued at £211. The farms of ‘Over and Nether Hallrule with mill thereof’ are listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the late 17th century. The farm was still in the Barony of Cavers when that was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687, when transcribed ‘Dowallrowl’, and by his brother Archibald in 1698, when transcribed ‘Dewallroul’. William Buckham was there in 1694, paying for 4 hearths, while George Brown and Walter Brown were also householders on the lands (and 3 other poor householders were additionally listed). In 1709 the Barony of Hallrule was transcribed as consisting of ‘Helme, midle with mill, Hangingside, Burrel [probably Billerwell], Roulewees [perhaps Bedrule and Weens], Hathernsyde, Seawhewholhous, Pleulandhill, Bon-house, Appdsdyse with mill, Harrot with mill, Tithous with 4 parts of Riddmaburne’. In 1725 Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs gave the east side (valued at £414) to his son John. In 1779 the Barony had been broken down into parts, including: ‘Inner-Halrule, consisting of six inclosures’, valued at £493 17s 8d; ‘Over-Halrule’, valued at £832 12s 5d; ‘Mill and mill lands of Halrule’, valued at £136 9s 10d; Billerwell; and Hawthornside. Andrew Currie and then George Currie were tenants there in the 18th century, as well as Barries. William Scott was there in 1788. In the 1788 county valuation the farm (including Billerwell) was valued at £2144 16s 8d and owned by Sir Francis Eliott of Stobs. The farm was sold to John Wilson in about 1803, and he had the modern house built there. The farms of Inner and Outer Hallrule are described in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, with the part to the west belonging to Sir William Elliott (valued at £428 11s 6d) and the part to the east belonging to John Wilson of Hallrule (valued at £404 1ld). John Wilson’s part lay ‘on the north-side of the public road to Weens, bounded by Billerwell march on the east; by the top of Ruberslaw, where march stones are placed, on the nort; by the said public road on the south, and on the west, forty-four yards west from the west-side of the gate next Halrule, leading to Town-o’-Rule in a straight line to the top of Ruberslaw, passing close by the Clump of Firs, the east fence of which is the march’. Wilson also owned 5 of the 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule (valued at £427 4s 2d), purchasing them from Sir William Elliot and disposing the north-east one to Thomas Cleghorn of Weens. James and then Daniel Mather were tenants from the early 1800s; Daniel had a large cairn removed, inside of which was found an ‘urn’ with a herringbone-type pattern (now lost). The mansion there was occupied by Peter Pennycook in the 1860s and was a home of the Ushers of Norton and Wells. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The farm contains part of Ruberslaw, and 2 Roman coins were once found here. The former farmhouse had a couple of good rooms in it known as ‘the Laird’s Rooms’, where the Elliotts would stay sometimes when they visited the farm. There is a tradition that Lord Heathfield was born there during one such visit. The farm is fairly well-wooded and contains a walled garden, as well as Hallrule Common

Hallrule Common (hawl-rool-ko-min) n. former name for lands in the southern part of the farm of Hallrule. It is recorded in a charter of 1606 when Hobsburn and Weens were sold to John Scott. It marked the northern boundary of these lands, and is stated to be ‘the lands called the Common of Halroule’.

Hallrule Mill (hawl-rool-nail) n. former corn mill and farm at Hallrule, long tenanted by the Turnbulls. The mill lands (and 1/4th of the mtures) were assigned to Agnes Herries, following the Baronial dispute over Feu-Rule in 1562. In 1574 it was recorded that the whole of the Barony of Feu-Rule ‘is thirtith to the mylne’. The mill passed to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. The earliest named tenant on record is ‘Walter Ammous’ in 1685. ‘Walter Almes’ was still there in 1694, when he paid tax on 3 heatths ‘for himself and cottar’. In the following centuries it was often let along with the farm of Hallrule. It was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in the 18th and early 19th centuries. In 1779 it was valued at £136 9s 10d. Robert Turnbull was tenant there in 1797. It was purchased by Thomas Cleghorn in 1805 and added to his Weens estate. In 1811 it was valued at £136 9s 10d. It is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and Slater’s 1852 directories, when the miller was James Laidlaw. He remained until 1855 when William Bell purchased the farm from Eliott of Stobs (it recorded as ‘mylene of Habroule’ in 1574, ‘Ha roul Miln’ in a charter of 1649, ‘Harroulmyln’ in 1694 and ‘Harulemln’ in 1797; it is marked on Blaue’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hall’s (hawlz) n. fishmonger’s shop next to the Town Hall in the mid-20th century, which also used to have game hanging on hooks outside the windows.

Hally Well (hawl-lee-wel) n. former spring to the south-east of Hallywell Hill, between Newton and Groundstone Heights on the A7. Francis Well is right beside the road, further south (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hallywell Hill (hawl-lee-wel-hil) n. small hill just to the east of the A7 after the turn for Boonraw. The name comes from the nearby spring, although any connection to anything holy is unknown.

Halswelle (hals-wel) n. Keeley (1831–91) English artist. He was known for book illustrations and later as an oil painter. He lived in Edinburgh in about the period 1854–63. In 1856 he came to Hawick as part of a theatre troupe, designing the sets and also taking part as a performer for their 9-day engagement. Under the pseudonym Charles K. Tynte he prepared a series of sketches based on the troupe’s time in Hawick, which was published as ‘Notes Hawkianae’.

Haltwhistle (hawl-wi-sul) n. town in north-eastern Cumbria, important in rieving days, having several existing towers and strongholds. It was a seat of the Ridley family.

hamework (hām-wurk) n. homework – ‘. . . Henry finally gittin’ sent hame ti Howahill wi homework frae the teacher!’ [IHS].

Hamilton (hawm-ul-tin) n. Andrew (d.bef. 1637) probably son of Andrew of St. John’s Chapel and grandson of James of St. John’s Chapel and Sprouston. He was described as ‘in Harret’ (i.e. Harwood in the Rule valley) in 1609 when Margaret Turnbull brought a court action against him for intrusion onto the lands of Tythehouse. He was also witness to the succession of his Francis (probably his cousin) and served as his ‘curator’. Capt. Archibald C. (1881–1915) son of Dr. John R. and brother of Dr. James O. He worked in Burma and was killed at Gallipoli. Charles (c.1650–85) 5th Earl of Haddington, son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1670 in many lands, including those once belonging to Melrose Abbey. The local lands were Hassendeanbank, Brieryyards, Clerkcroft, Cresswell, Hornshole and Crook, as well as Rodono, Thirlestane and others in Ettrick. He also held the feu duties of Friarsshaw, as well as owning most of the lands in Melrose Parish and others in Maxton and Lessuden according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1678. Della nee Oliver (1938/9–2016) she was Cornet’s Lass to Billy Cavers in 1949 and was Diamond Jubilee Lass in 2009. She married Dr. Rory and they lived at Buckland. She had children Peter and Susan. Elizabeth (1758–1816) born in Belfast of Scottish parents, she became a writer, particularly of essays. She is best known for her novel ‘The Cottagers of Glenburnie’ (1808), which is seen as a forerunner of the ‘Kailyard’ style. It was supposedly based around Wilton Dean, and written during a visit with James Anderson in Wilton Lodge. Francis (16th/17th C.) son of James of St. John’s Chapel, from whom he succeeded to the lands of Appotside and Tythehouse in the Rule valley in 1610. In 1630 he granted a sasine of Appotside and Tythehouse to the minister William Weir, who was his brother-in-law. He is recorded as a witness to the 1632 sale of Harwood to Gilbert Elliott by Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir and gave his permission for the sale of Appotside and Tythehouse to Edward Lorraine. He could be the ‘Mr. Francis Hamilton’ who wrote to Sir Walter Scott of Bucceleuch in 1624 regarding the plot by Robert Elliot to murder Scott; he was clearly a friend of John Murray (the Earl of Annandale), Elliot’s brother-in-law, and stated that Elliot should be saved for the sake of Murray. He may have moved to Baillieborough in Ireland. Rev. Gavin James (1777–1837) son of Gavin from Blackwood, Douglas. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Lanark in 1799 and ordained as minister at Harbottle in Northumberland in 1809. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish in late 1810 (by Lady Minto and her son Gilbert Elliot, Commissioners of Lord Minto, who was in Bengal) and became the new minister there in 1811. He served as Presbytery Clerk. In 1809 he was preparing essays on agricultural topics, under the patronage of the Board of Agriculture, but this never appeared in publication. He compiled the entry on Ashkirk Parish for the ‘New Statistical Account of Scotland’; this was prepared for publication by Walter Todd, since he died before it was due to appear. He suffered from ill health and had an assistant for the last 5 years. In 1809 at Hawick Manse (suggesting a previous connection with the area) he married Mary, only daughter of James Walker of Antigua, and they had children. Their daughter Joanna married Thomas Thorburn. James (c.1415–79) son of James of Cadzow. He was closely connected with the Douglases. He became 1st Lord Hamilton in 1445. In 1471/2 he presented the marriage contract between Archibald, Earl of Angus, and Sir David Scott of Buccleuch. He leased the lands of Craig Douglas in 1459, Winterburgh, Altrieve and Berrybush in Yarrow in 1469 and Craig Douglas in 1478. He married Euphemia Graham, widow of Archibald, 5th Earl of Douglas. He was thus step-father of William, 6th Earl of Douglas and Margaret, the ‘Fair Maid of Galloway’. He secondly married Mary, daughter of King James II. He was succeeded by his son James, 1st Earl of Arran. James (c.1475–1529) Earl of Arran, son of James, 1st Lord Hamilton. He helped negotiate the marriage James IV with Margaret Tudor and was created Earl of Arran on their wedding day. He was appointed Lieutenant General of Scotland, and commanded the Scottish fleet in 1513. He opposed Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in the power struggles during the minority of King James V, and was defeated by Angus’ men in the ‘Cleanse the Causeway’ riot in Edinburgh in 1520. In 1522 he became Lieutenant of the South. Sometime before 1526 there was an attempt to capture him, made by a force headed by George, Lord Home, and David Home of Wedderburn. This force included about 160 Borderers, many of them Scotts, Turnbulls, Pringles, etc., and all of whom received remission for their crimes; the list is useful in containing family relationships among some local families. He eventually received the lands of Bothwell from the forfeited estates of the Earl of Angus. He was listed in 1526/7 among prominent men charged by James V not to attack the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton while those men were in ‘respite’ for the charge of treason. He firstly married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander, 2nd Lord Home; this wedding was annulled when it was discovered that his wife’s first husband had still been alive. He secondly married Janet, daughter of David Bethune of Creich. He was succeeded as 2nd Earl of Arran by his son James and also had many other children, including Joanna (who married Alexander Cunningham, 5th Earl of Glencairn) and at least 14 who were illegitimate. There were several called after him: Sir James of Finnart, Lord of Session: James, Bishop of Argyll and Lismore; and James of St. John’s Chapel and Sprouston, whose daughter Marion married Robert Elliot of Redheugh. James (c.1516–75) 2nd Earl of Arran, son of James, 1st Earl. He was next in line to the throne after James V’s only child, Mary Queen of Scots and was Regent of Scotland during Mary’s minority. He became a Catholic and consented to the marriage of Mary to the French Dauphin, this leading to the Rough Wooing. He may have been present at the Battle of Ancrum Moor in 1545. He remained involved in Scottish politics, until 1565 when he moved to France, but returned to imprisonment in Scotland in 1569. He married Margaret, daughter of James Douglas, 3rd Earl of Morton. He was succeeded by his son James, who he tried at one point to marry to Elizabeth I of England and to Queen Mary. James (d.1580) illegitimate son of James, 1st Earl of Arran and brother of John, Archbishop of St. Andrews. He was nominated as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1547, but rejected the following year, largely due to his illegitimacy. Hence he was almost Hawick’s Archbishop. However, he later received papal dispensation and was appointed Bishop of Argyll. He later became a Protestant. James of St. John’s Chapel and Sprouston (d.1585) younger illegitimate son of James, 1st Earl of Arran. He married Marie, daughter of Patrick Hepburn of Fairnington. His children included: John of St. John’s Chapel (d.1587), who married a Cairncross of Colmslie; Patrick (d.1598); James of Harwood (d.c.1610); Andrew of St. John’s Chapel; Thomas of Telsbane; and also probably Alexander, Marion, Margaret, Nicholas and Jane. James (d.c.1610) son of James of St. John’s Chapel and Sprouston. He was sometimes referred to as being ‘of Harwood’. A contract of 1598 with Hector Lorraine describes how he loaned money to the Loraines, with the reversion of Harwood and Appotside residing with him. The amount was increased to almost £1200 by 1600. By 1602 he had a feu charter of the lands of Tythehouse and Appotside, as well as having confirmation from the superior, William Maxwell, Lord Herries, that he held the right of marriage of Hector Lorraine, as well as the reversion of Harwood and Hawthorn-side. He probably arranged the marriage between Hector Lorraine and his niece, daughter of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and his sister Marion Hamilton. However, the Lorraines were unable to repay the ‘wadset’ to him, and the lands legally changed hands some time in the early 17th century, confirmed by a disposition of 1630 and ‘charter of alienation’ in 1632 (where he is referred to as the ‘deceased James Hamilton of Harwood’). His son Francis inherited Appotside and Tythehouse from him in 1610. In 1619 it is recorded that Edward Lorraine was required to marry Margaret Hamilton, sister to his heir Francis. He married Jean, sister of William Cairncross of Colmslie; she was sister of his brother John’s wife. His children included: Francis of Harwood; Andrew of Killenover, Donegal; Jean, who married James Chisholm of Gornewood and secondly Patrick Kincaid of Edinburgh; a daughter who married John Ballyboye of Mulenard; John; and William. James (17th C.) Hawick resident, mentioned in a court case of 1673. He was found guilty of cutting the ‘goune-tail’ of John Scott’s wife. He could be the James who was married to Bessie Scott, and whose son Robert was born in Hawick in 1673 (with witnesses William Paterson and William Laing). James (b.c.1800) stock-making of the West End. He may be the man of that name who was listed among people to have contracted cholera, but recovered, in 1832. In 1841 he was at about 17 Loan with his wife Jean and their children Robert, Charles, James, John, Ann, Margaret and Thomas. Dr. James Oliver ‘Oliver’ (1886–1938) son of John R. and father of Rory. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1908. In Hawick he went into partnership with his father and continued the practice after his death. He joined the R.A.M.C. Reserve of Officers in 1910 and served with them when war broke out. He was in charge of No. 4 Ambulance Train, B.E.F., France when he was discharged due to ill-health in 1917. He then became Commandant of the Hawick Military Hospital. He was a keen rugby supporter and was President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1914. In 1919 he moved to the South of England, performing bacteriological research in Bournemouth. He then took up a position in the Barbados and travelled extensively. In 1916 he married Sara Chisholm (who died in 1938). Their son Rory was also a doctor in Hawick. He died at his home in Edinburgh at the age of 52, effectively as a result of his war disability. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Jean (16th/17th C.) daughter of John of St. John’s Chapel and sister of Marion and Margaret, who jointly inherited the Lordship of Winnington in 1610. The lands consisted of Winningtonhall and mill there, Swin-stead, Over and Nether Kirkwoodhead, Brandside and Horselee, as well as some land in Jedburgh. She married Walter Bellenden, brother of the Laird of Auchmuill. John of St. John’s Chapel (d.1587) son of James of St. John’s Chapel and Sprouston. He married Margaret Cairncross, sister of the Laird of Colmslie, and secondly married Margaret Nichol. His daughters and co-heiresses were Margaret, Marion and Jean, who are mentioned in 1593, by which time he was deceased. In 1610 his 3 daughters inherited the lands of Winnington as heirs to their great-grandfather Patrick Hepburn. Their names were listed as ‘Maria’, ‘Jeanna’ and ‘Margareta’ and the lands consisted specifically of Winningtonhall and mill there, Swinestead, Over and Nether Kirkwoodhead, Brandside and Horselee. Rev. John (16th C.) minister at Ashkirk from 1570, being presented to the parsonage on the death of John Murie. He was thus the first parish minister after the Reformation. John Scott was recorded as Reader in 1574, but they may have overlapped. John (1626–69) 4th Earl of Haddington, younger brother of Thomas, 3rd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1645. He also had the titles of Lord Byres and Binningand succeeded to the superiority of lands previously held by Melrose Abbey, including Hassendeankbank, Brieryyards, Clerkcroft, Cresswell, etc. In 1655 he must have held the superiority of the Barony of Hassendean when he gave a ‘precept of clare constat’ to Thomas Turnbull for the lands of Cockerheugh. He is probably the Earl of Haddington recorded paying tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in about 1663. He married Christian, daughter of John Lindsay, 17th Earl of Crawford. He was succeeded by his son Charles. John Rankine (b.1822/3) born in Bathgate, he was teacher at Minto School in the 1850s and 1860s. One of his pupils was James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. He was listed there on Slater’s 1852 directory. He also served as Heritors’ Clerk, Session Clerk, Kirk Treasurer, Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish. In 1851 his sister Margaret was acting as housekeeper. In 1854 he married Jane Tait, eldest daughter of Alexander Robertson. Their children included Isabella, Robert and Alexander R. Dr. John Rogerson (d.1916) born in Dumfriesshire, he was grandfather of Rory. He was a local doctor who was the main instigator for the setting up of the Cottage Hospital. He lived at Elm House, which he had built for him.
He was also known for showing Irish Terriers, and was President of the Ornithological Society. He was Chairman of the Scottish Committee of the British Medical Association when war broke out in 1914, and helped coordinate medical services in Scotland during WWI. J.C. Goodfellow dedicated his 1911 collection of verses to him. He married Alice Mary, eldest daughter of the second marriage of James Oliver of Thornwood. Their sons were: Archibald (1881–1915), who died at Gallipoli; and Dr. James Oliver (b.1886), who continued his practice. Margaret (16th/17th C.) daughter of John of St. John’s Chapel and granddaughter of James. She was sister of Marion and Jean, who jointly inherited the Lordship of Winton in 1610. She married Robert Home of Carronsyde. Marion (d.1619) daughter of John of St. John’s Chapel and sister of Jean and Margaret. Her name is transcribed as ‘Mania Hambiltoune’ in 1610 when she and her sisters inherited their great-grandfather Patrick Hepburn’s Lordship of Winton. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in 1651 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Hawwood in Hawick. Richard (15th C.) listed as a witness to the sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. His name is recorded as ‘Ricardo Hambiltoune’.

Robert (16th C.) recorded as Reader at Minto in 1579. Dr. Roderick ‘Rory’ (1920–1999) born in Torquay, both his father and grandfather being Hawick doctors, he was a doctor himself in Hawick for 38 years. He served on the Town Council from 1966, the Regional Council from 1975 and the District Council from 1985–88. Sometimes referred to as ‘Rory the Tory’, he was known for his magnanimous gestures (e.g. opening a local swimming gala by jumping in fully clothed). He also wrote the ‘Golfer’s Guide to Wee Places’ (1980). He married Della Oliver. Sir Thomas ‘Tam o the Cowgate’ (1563–1637) son of Thomas of Priestfield, he was a lawyer in Edinburgh who served as an Advocate, Senator of the College of Justice, Lord President of the Court of Session, Lord Clerk Register, Principle Secretary of State and Lord Privy Seal. In 1612, as Lord Advocate, he obtained a decree before the Lords of Council and Session against people in the Hawick area who had charged more than 10 percent interest. Also in 1612, when he was Lord Clerk Register, he made an index of royal charters and other ancient Scottish documents. This was described in 1798 in a book edited by William Robertson and usually referred to as ‘Robertson’s Index’. Since many of these charters were lost, the index forms an invaluable record of early Scottish history. He became Lord of Session as Lord Duncairn, was raised to the peerage as Lord Binning in 1616, then created Earl of Melrose in 1619 and finally 1st Earl of Haddington in 1627. He gained the superiority of lands that had been held by Melrose Abbey (and latterly by John Ramsay, Earl of Holderness), including those in upper Teviotdale. He is recorded in a charter of 1619 granting the lands of ‘Horneshoill’ to Thomas, 2nd son of Thomas Turnbull of Minto. In 1621 the Earl of Buccleuch resigned the lands in Ringwoodfield to him. He also held lands in Belses that he leased in 1632 and that same year he feued Firth to Hector Turnbull and also feued lands in Rucastle and Raperlaw. He probably sold the superiority of Melrose to the Scots of Buccleuch. He married Margaret, daughter of James Borthwick of Newbyres and secondly Margaret Foulis and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas Lord Binning (1600–40) son of 1st Earl of Haddington, he became 2nd Earl. This included inheriting his father’s lands in Roxburghshire and elsewhere, including superiority of lands formerly held by Melrose Abbey. There is a charter of Charles I to him for lands in the Borders, including ‘Hassindenbank, Breiryairdis, Clerkcroft, Kerswell in Hassington, Hornishoill, Craighous’ and others. He signed the National Covenant in 1638 and served as a Major under Gen. Leslie. He was killed in a massive explosion in the powder magazine at Dunglass Castle only 3 years after succeeding. He married Catherine, daughter of John Erskine, 18th Earl of Mar. He was succeeded by his son, also Thomas. Thomas of Binning and the Byres (1626–45) son of Thomas, he became 3rd Earl of Haddington. In 1640 he was served heir to the extensive lands of his father, including the superiority of lands formerly held by Melrose Abbey. This included Hassendeanbank, Brieryards, Clerkcroft, Kerswell and Hornshole. He is listed as owner of most of the lands in Melrose Parish in 1643. He also held feu-duty for Riddell and Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. W.F. (20th C.) Burgh Surveyor in the 1940s.

1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were incorporated by an Act of the Town Council in 1686, giving them the right to test workmanship at fairs and markets, and fine and punish accordingly. They consisted of smiths, coopers, millwrights, engineers, joiners, masons, etc. In some processions they wore white trousers trimmed with a black stripe down the side. In 1715 there was a dispute between them and the weavers over precedence in seats in the gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk – ‘...the elders convened to take away ye debates and differences among ye hammermen and tradesmen, possessors of ye loft in ye church’ [PR1715].

hamp (hawp) v., poet. to stammer, stutter – ‘If ye ‘bout it hamp and hay My gontrans, lass, ye soon will fin’ A wiflin’ man maun lae his way’ [HSR].

Hampden (hawm-din) n., arch. a radical, defender of rights – ‘On reaching Denholm the company was greatly augmented by the village Hampdens’ [RM] (inspired by a quotation from Grey’s ‘Elegy in a Country Churchyard’, deriving from radical 17th century parliamentarian John Hampden).

hanch (hansh) v. arch. to snap, bite, particularly said of a dog when food is thrown at it, – ‘May ... ne’er ... ill health gie you a screed, Wi’ hanchin’ teeth’ [JoHa], to eat greedily, chomp – ‘...a stane-nappin injin gaed-on leike a tuim mill, – skrunshin – chaamin – haanshin’ [ECS], to show the teeth, snarl (also written ‘hanshi’).

Hand Sike (hawnd-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, adjacent to the farm of Mangerton.

Handside (hawn-dee-sid) n. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name, written ‘Handside’, is not common in the region.

hang (hawng) n. euphemism for ‘hell’ – ‘...A henni seen the forecast for the next ride-oots bit A hope ti hang hei gits nice weather’ [We] (note that this is never hing).

hang (hawng) pp., arch. hung – ‘...an, ferrer up ...hang another caal, leike a bruch roond a muin’ [ECS] (also written ‘haang’; this was once a past tense for hing, with the past participle being ‘hung’, as in English).

Hanganay (hawng-ga-na) n., arch. last day of the year, Hogmanany, also a gift given to children on this day – ‘As long as Allars House existed, the barns got their ‘hanganay’ every Old Year’s Day’ [JTu] (also written ‘Hanginay’; cf. Hogmanay and Hangmanay).

Hangerhope (hawng-ur-höp) n. former farmstead situated on the slopes of Whiteacres Hill, to the south-east of Kaimend. The ruin is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. Hangerhope Plantation is marked on current maps.

Hangingshaw (hawng-in-shaw) n. site of 15th century house in the Yarrow valley, near Yarrowford, stronghold of ‘the Outlaw Murray’. These were Crown lands in the late 15th century, leased by John and Patrick Murray. The lands remained with the Murray family for about 300 years. It was raided by Philip Turnbull in Whithope and David Turnbull in Carlinpool about 1500. John Murray held the lease until at least 1513. In 1527 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme paid 500 merks to James Murray of Falahill for slaughter and spoliation at these lands. And in 1535 the lands were named among those claimed to have been raided by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. In 1541 the lands were owned by Patrick Murray o Hanigingshaw (also of Falahill), with a rental of £50. The 18th century mansion built there burned down in about 1769, and the present house dates from 1846, after the estate was purchased by Sir James Johnstone of Westerhall. Tradition states that the custom of the Murrays was to make visitors drink an intoxicating amount of ale from the ‘Hangingshaw Ladle’ – ‘Auld Juden he strayed by the side of a river, When the watcher on Hanginshaw-law loud did cry, – ‘Ho, Juden, take care! or ye’re ruined for ever, The buggle of Ackwood has thrice sounded high’ [ES] (it is ‘Hangandschaw’ in 1456, 1468, 1484, 1494 and 1501, ‘Hangingschaw’ in 1502, ‘Hangandschau’ in 1507 and 1527 and, ‘Hangynschaw’ in 1535 and ‘Hangitschaw’ in 1541; it is ‘Hanginshaw’ on Blaen’s 1654 map; there are places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. opposite Heriot).

Hangingshaw Hill (hawng-in-shaw-hil) n. hill in the upper Ale valley, to the west of Borthwickshiels. It reaches a height of 319 m. There are signs of an unenclosed settlement on the southern slopes. There is an old enclosure on the western side. Gilbert ‘de Hanguydeschawe’ in the county of Roxburgh, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 may have been connected with these lands (there is a hill of the same name near Woden Law in Hownam Parish).
Hangingside

Hangingside (hawng-in-sid) n. former name for Hawthornside or perhaps adjacent or overlapping lands, in use in the 16th century. The lands were given to Richard of Hangingside after William Lorraine transferred his allegiance to the English King. ‘Jock o the Park’ Elliot held the lands in the late 16th century. The existence of a tower house there is suggested by the Peel Knowe just north-west of Hawthornside, and it is said that stone from the tower were used to build the new farmhouse. Gilbert Eliott of Stobs received a charter of the lands from the King in 1621 and his son William was served as his heir to the lands in 1645. In early times the farm may have been part of the Barony of Feu-Rule. It was incorporated into the Barony of Hallrule in 1649 (when both ‘Hangingside’ and ‘Hathernsyde’ were listed). Douglas of Cavers held the superiority until at least 1698. William Eliott of Stobs was served heir to his father in the lands of ‘Hanganside’ in 1645 and it was listed in the late 17th century among the Elliott of Stobs properties in the Barony of Feu-Rule. It must have been soon after that the modern name of ‘Hawthornside’ was adopted. The land appears to have given rise to a surname (or vice versa), since the land was owned by Hangingside of that Ilk, but only for about half a century. This surname may have later been conflated with Handyside. The naming situation is more complicated, however, since the Hanganside family existed earlier, owning lands at Newton Don from the late 14th century (it was ‘Hanganside’ in 1621 and ‘Hanginsyde’ in 1687 and 1698).

Hangingside (hawng-in-sid) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Hangaldside’ in 1426 when he was on an inquest for Walter Scott of Rankilburn inheriting his father’s lands of Eilrig. A man of the same name was recorded as a monk of Melrose Abbey in Scott of Buceleuch document of 1519 and 1524. Alexander of that Ilk (16th C.) son of Richard. There is a confirmation in 1563 of a charter from his father of a third of the lands of Little Newton in Lauderdale. In 1595 his heirs were Helen and Barbara, presumably his daughters. He may thus have been the last in the male line. Alexander (16th/17th C.) probably son of John. He was a skinner in Edinburgh. In 1617 he married Margaret Symington in Edinburgh. Helen (16th/17th C.) probably daughter of Alexander of that Ilk. She and her sister Barbara, were ‘heirs portioner’ of Alexander. In 1595 they resigned the lands of Little Newton in Lauderdale to her and her husband Alexander Weddell. And in a crown charter of 1598 the 2 sisters resigned the lands of Hangansyde (probably the same as Hawthornside) to Alexander ‘Woddel’. She still held Little Newton in 1615, along with her 2nd husband Alexander McDowall. She also had a son, Alexander. John (d.bef. 1604) referred to as ‘in Nydrie Marchell’ in 1596 when his son John became a baker’s apprentice in Edinburgh, and his son Alexander became a skinner’s apprentice in 1604. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine (of the lands of ‘Silwynislandis’) in 1436. He is referred to as ‘Patrick Hangatsyd’. Richard (14th C.) recorded in 1388 when he gave Kaimflat in the territory of Little Newton (in Lauderdale) to Kelso Abbey, for masses to be said for the soul of his superiors, William and James of Douglas. It seems that he held lands in the eastern part of what would be called Newton. Probably the same Richard was Bailie of the Earls of Douglas in the Barony of Dunbar, as recorded in 1407. Richard (15th/16th C.) granted the lands of ‘Hangetsyd’ (i.e. what would become Hawthornside) by James, Earl of Douglas. Since this was granted by James, Earl of Douglas, it was probably before 1488. The transfer may have been because William Lorraine had been the former owner and transferred his allegiance to England. There was a sasine confirming the lands to his son Richard in 1543. He is probably the ‘Ric. de Hangandside, scutifero’ who witnessed a charter in 1432. Richard of that Ilk (16th C.) son of Richard. There was a sasine in his name for the lands of Hangingside in 1543. He was recorded among Border Lairds paying homage to the Duke of Somerset in about 1547. It appears he may have sold the lands to Jock Elliot of the Park in 1562, except that they were still held by his descendants Helen and Barbara in 1598. He is recorded as ‘Richard Hangitsyde of Littilnewtoun’ when he was part of a panel of 1562, deciding on a dispute in the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1563 there is a confirmation of his charter to his son Alexander of a third part of the lands of Little Newton. Robert (17th C.) merchant in Edinburgh. George son of William (and presumably a relative) is recorded becoming his apprentice in 1643. Probably the same Robert married Agnes Garden in Edinburgh in 1642 and remarried in 1644 to Catherine Kinbl. Walter (16th/17th C.) cordiner in Edinburgh. In 1618 he married Alison Ewieson. William (15th C.) witness to a charter in 1432, along with several Wardlaws and others. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmus Hangitsyde’ in a Glasgow...

harden [(har-din)] n., arch. a coarse, grey cloth, sack-cloth, originally made from ‘hards’, adj., arch. made of course, grey, woollen cloth – ‘wi a bit harden seck roond um’, ‘You kitchen lass at Wulton Lodge Lirts bonny in her harden daidle’ [DH] (this is probably also confused with hodden and was formerly shortened to harn).

Harden [(har-din)] n. Harden House and the area surrounding it. This could be the Harden in Roxburghshire that was possessed by ‘Johan de Harden’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. The estate was owned by a branch of the Turnbulls in the 15th century, at least as early as 1431, and was resigned to the Baron of Wilton in 1468. In 1482 it was granted to John, son of Walter Turnbull of Harden, the symbolic payment being one silver penny at the principle manor of Wilton on the feast of the Nativity. By 1491 the ‘superiority’ of the lands lay with John Scott, Baron of the half Barony of Wilton, and the tenancy was given by the King to Alexander, Lord Home. This remained the case until 1501/2 when he had a ‘bond of reversion’ to Robert Scott of Stirches for £100 Scots for the lands of Harden. In 1506 it was part of the lands inherited by Alexander Home, but at that time was ‘held for ward and relief’. It was confirmed to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1516 when Home’s estates were forfeited, but George, Lord Home had most of these reinstated in 1522, with the charter from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme being revoked by the King in 1535. The Homes retained the superiority of the lands until well into the 16th century. In 1559 (perhaps 1550) Alexander Lord Home sold to William Scott of Todrig and his son Walter the lands of Harden, with tower, mains, etc., except for an acre of lands on the east side. The old house was destroyed around 1590, and the new one dates from the 17th century, with later additions. Tradition says that a child was brought here from England by mistake, wrapped among the plunder of a raid, and raised by a daughter of the Laird; he is claimed as the author of many of the Border ballads. There were 21 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Gideon Scott, Margaret Hamilton, William Fisher, William Riddell, Gilbert Gray, Thomas Gray, William Knox, James Scott, John Murray, Jean Shiel, Helen Scott, Margaret Wright, Alison Fairgrieve, Euphan Davidson, James, Scott, Thomas Govenlock, Chistian Govenlock, janet Currer, Bessie Rule, Helen Scott and William Govenlock. In the 17th century there were separate farms at West Harden and East Harden (also called ‘Easter’ and ‘Wester’). The area was part of Wilton Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90. In 1694 there were 4 separate households recorded there (as well as the main house itself). The farm was still occupied by several households in the early 18th century. John Ker, Walter Noble and William Stewart were recorded there in 1694, Thomas Hunter in 1716 and Andrew Chisholme in 1721. Part was sold to the Buccleuch estates in 1727.
Harden

James Hume was living there in 1752, James Cavers in the 1760s, James Watson in 1771, John Hobkirk in 1784, Robert Grieve and Robert Laidlaw in 1786, William Gray in 1787, John Turnbull in 1787–94, John Scott in 1788–89, James Miller in 1793, James Crow in 1798–1800 and Thomas Jackson in 1798. In 1788 it was valued along with West Highchesters at £486 6s 8d and in 1811 it was valued at £463 9s (along with Highhesters Mill and Dunbush). Thomas Graham was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. A spindle whorl from the area was in Tom Scott’s collection, and a flint arrow-head was also found there – ‘As I came over the Harden hill A whaup on the moor was whistling shrill . . . ’ [WHO] (formerly also ‘the Harden’; it is ‘Hardene’ in 1482, ‘Hardene’ in 1501/2, ‘Hardene’ in 1526, 1535 and 1557, ‘Hardenn’ in 1550, ‘Hardyn’ in 1568, ‘harden’ in 1713 and ‘Hardon’ in 1733; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Hardenn’ and Adair’s c. 1688 map in its modern form, and is also on Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650, where it is wrongly placed to the east of Hawick: the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘hara denu’, meaning ‘the valley frequented by hares’; there are several other Hardens in Scotland and Northern England, probably most with similar origins).

Harden (har-din) n. area to the east of Castleton, once with a tower house. ‘Hardenbank’ is listed on the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. ‘Seme Ellot of Hardin’ is listed among the Ellots of Braidlie in 1583. Sandy Armstrong was there in 1623 and ‘Neather Harden’ was possessed by Sandy Armstrong and ‘Will in the Mylne’ in 1632. David Stark was tenant there in 1694, with George Scott also listed as a resident. Abraham Watson was farmer there in 1797. James Knox was there in 1868. It was still indicated on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but is now marked only as Harden Moss, Harden Burn and Harden Hill (further to the south-east). The location suggested for the former house is at the edge of a plantation on the left-hand side of the B6357 between Florida and Old Castleton. Confusingly, it appears to be combined with Highhouse, Hightrees, Howden and Burnmouth on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, although these other farmsteads are not very close in location, and so this may be an error (the tower is indicated on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘O. Hardenn’ and ‘N. Hardenn’ and Stobie’s 1770 map shows simply ‘Harden’).

Harden (har-din) n. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johan de Harden’ in the county of Roxburgh when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. This seems likely to be the lands in the Borthwick valley, but his relationship to later owners is unknown.

Harden Anna (har-din-aw-na) n. former name for a farmstead near Harden in the Borthwick valley. James Hendry was living there in 1720 and 1723. John Storie in 1762, Ebenezer Clerk in 1781 and John Hobkirk in 1787 (the name presumably derives from the meaning of ‘anna’ or ‘ana’ as a ‘holm’; see also the Annai).

Hardenbank (har-din-bawngk) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll, and presumably part of Harden. At that time they were valued at 1 merk and tentanted by John Armstrong.

Harden Brig (har-din-brig) n. small stone road-bridge across the Harden Burn on the B711 Borthwick Road.

Harden Burn (har-din-burn) n. stream that joins the Borthwick just below Harden.

Harden Burn (har-din-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near the Border and running roughly westward to join the Liddel opposite the farm of Mains. It contains some waterfalls and was traditionally said to be the haunt of fairy folk.

Hardenburn (har-din-burn) n. place in Lilley, where?? – ‘We’ve wandered up by Hardenburn, And to the muckle tree, Or through the fairy-haunted glen And over the daised lea’ [FL].

Hardenburnfit (har-din-burnfi?) n. former farmstead near the foot of the Harden Burn in Roberton Parish. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map near where the Merchelyton burn joins the Harden Burn. It is ‘Hardon burn’ in 1710 when James Scott was there. William Miller lived there in at least 1717–27. Robert Gledstains was there in 1753, Michael Johnston and Walter Coltar in 1771 and Thomas Stavert in 1781–84. Peter Deans and family were there in 1841 (it was ‘Harden burnfoot’ in 1720 and ‘Harden burnfoot’ in 1781).

Harden Cottage (har-din-ko-eej) n. former cottage near Harden. Mason William Clerk and family were living there in 1841 and 1851.

Harden Gill (har-din-gil) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, on the south side of the valley, between old Castleton and Mains, and distinct from Harden Burn, which lies a little further north.

Harden Glen (har-din-glen) n. deep ravine in front of Harden House, where the rieving Scotts are said to have hidden stolen cattle, sometimes also called the ‘Beef Tub’. An early sketch was made by J.C. Schetky in 1808. Flakes of flint were found here in about 1938 – ‘And if your heart’s a Border heart, look down to Harden Glen, And hear the blue hills ringing with the restless hoofs again’ [WHO], ‘Can you see them in the moonlight as they ride thro’ Harden Glen, Spurred and booted, wild and fearless, to invade the English fen?’ [GHB], ‘High over Borthwick’s mountain flood; His wood embosomed mansion stood; In the dark glen, so deep below The herds of plundered England low’ [SWS].

Harden Glen Cottage (har-din-glen-ko’-eej) n. cottage near the cattle grid on the side road along the Harden Burn.

Harden Hill (har-din-hil) n. hill between Castleton village and Black Knowe in Liddesdale. It reaches a height of 288 m and has the Harden Burn to the north and Harden Moss to its north-west.

Hardenhoo (har-din-hoo) n. house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map in Liddesdale near the modern Hartsgarth. The notation on the map may indicate an abbreviation, perhaps for ‘Hardenholm’. It is probably the same as ‘Hardenkaul’ listed on a rental roll c.1376 as being a 15-shilling land attached to Mangerton estate.

Harden Hoose (har-din-hoos) n. ancient seat of the Scotts, about 3 miles west of Hawick, home of Lord and Lady Polwarth, and famous as the former home of Border rievers such as Auld Wat of Harden. It is set dramatically above a deep ravine of a stream which joins the Borthwick, ideal for hiding stolen cattle, and planted with a surrounding woodland. The Scotts gained Harden from Lord Home in 1501. The earliest residence there was further down at ‘Auld Harden’ (although it is unclear whether this was the tower destroyed near the end of the 16th century or another). The present house dates from about 1630, with extensions around 1680-90, but may incorporate parts of an earlier one that was destroyed about 1592 (possibly by Walter Scott of Goldielands, following a royal order, because of Walter Scott of Harden’s part in the Falkland Raid). There were also major renovations to the north side in the 19th century. The earliest house was oblong, with 2 storeys and an attic, extended to the south in the 1680s. The house has a steep roof with dormers and thick walls. In 1694 the house is listed as having 17 hearths. There is also a 17th century sundial from Dryburgh House just to the east, about 4 feet high and with a square dial-stone. To the west is a bowling green, which may date from the 17th century. The building became a farmhouse from the 18th century, while the seat of the Scotts of Harden was at Mertoun, and it fell into disrepair in the early 19th century, before being restored. However, the family returned in 1913, after major renovations and some alterations were made. It was the location of some Common Riding Ride-outs in the 1930s. Hawick Museum has the lock from the garret door of the house, as well as a door knocker. Other artefacts associated with the house include a powder flask engraved ‘Judean Scoot of Heychesters’, a set of spurs and a bugle horn scratched with many letters. A family tree of the Scotts, drawn up by Sir Walter Scott, is displayed in the house. The arms of Scott of Harden is a variant on that of Buccleuch, with 2 stars and a crescent, supported by 2 mermaids. Their motto is ‘Reparabit Cor...nu Phoebe’, usually translated as ‘There will be moonlight again’, referring to the habits of reiving days – ‘Ho! For the blades of Harden! Ho! For the driven kye’ [WHO], ‘Tell of danger, warn the ranger, Harden rides again’ [WL].

Harden Knowe (har-din-now) n. hill to the west and north of Harden House containing an ancient earthwork. It is the eastern spur of Mainshiel Head. The lands of Harden Knowes were in dispute in 1739 between Walter Scott of Harden and Pringle of Whitbank. The earthwork is situated on the high western side of the ravine, about 200 m from Harden House. It measures about 65 m by 50 m, and consists of 3 sides, with the ravine completing the rectangle. There are no traces of internal buildings, but the plan would suggest a medieval date. It has been obliterated to some extent by ploughing and is now partly covered by trees.

Hardenlees (har-din-leez) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the c.1376 rental roll as ‘Hardenlys’, with a value of 6 shillings and 8 pence. It is listed under the ‘Foresta’ section, which is to the north, and probably associated with Harden near Castleton (see Harden).

Harden Mains (har-din-mänz) n. farm just north of Oxnam (with no direct connection with the more local Harden). It was owned by the Rutherfords of Ruecastle and Knowesouth in the 17th century.

Harden Place

Harden Place (har-din-plis) n. part of the Howdenbank development, built in 1967 and named after Harden House.

Harden Wud (har-din-wud) n. former lands that were part of the estate of Borthwickshiel. In 1445 ‘Henry of Wod chaplane’ leased his tenantry of these lands to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. The lands were valued at 20 shillings per year. In 1471 these lands, along with Borthwickshiel were passed to Walter, heir of Andrew Ker of Cessford. It is unclear precisely where the lands were, but presumably near to Harden (it is ‘Hardenwod’ in 1445 and ‘Hardenwode’ in 1471).
