Keelenlows (kee-lin-lows) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map on the west bank of the Liddel, roughly opposite Kirndean and south of Whitehaugh. It is unclear if it corresponds to some place with a slightly different name.

Keelin (kee-lin) n., arch. the process of stock-taking of sheep by marking each animal with dye or ‘keel’ – ‘...‘keel’ may be termed a sort of stock-taking, when the different classes of sheep are counted and marked with ‘keel’ (ruddle in England)’ [RB].

Keel raw (kee-lraw) n., arch. a game in which children facing each other with arms and legs locked together try to raise each other.

Keely-vine (kee-lee-vine) n., arch. a lead pencil – ‘...when so fortunate as to obtain...’ [RM].

Keen (keen) adj., arch. lively, spirited (noted by E.C. Smith).

Keenan (kee-nin) n. Fr. Stephen (19th C.) priest at Edinburgh, who started visiting Hawick every 3 months in 1837, until a more permanent arrangement was made a few years later. He was thus the first priest to celebrate Roman Catholic sacraments in Hawick since before the Reformation. He wrote several books, particularly ‘Controversial catechism; or Protestantism and Catholicism refuted, and Catholicism established, by an appeal to the Holy Scriptures’ (1846, 1849, 1854, 1875, 1896).

Keep (keep) v. to fare, get along, manage, ‘do’ – ‘how’re ye keepin’?’, ‘how’s yer mother been keepin since she got out o Peel?’, to mind, tend – ‘We keep a bairn where in English the expression is nurse (or ‘mind’) a child’ [ECS] (these usages are not common in standard English).

Keepit (kee-pee’, -pi’) pp., arch. kept – ‘But little wist he o the girdle o heaven That keepit her virtue fair’ [JTe], ‘...thou hest keepet me aleive, that I shudna gae doun til the pitt’ [HSR], ‘For I hae keepet the wayes o the Lord...’ [HSR]. The kei-stane (ki-stān) n., arch. a key-stone – ‘Yeh bit sate on the kei-stane o the brig; yeh deck at the gurlin Yill’ [ECS].

Keisterless (kīst-lis) adj., arch. lacking in substance, insipid, tasteless.

Kielder (kee-dur) n. common misspelling of Kielder.

Keir (keer) n. William of Whitehaugh (d.1818) possibly son of Thomas of Powisholm and Elizabeth Elliot, heiress of Whithaugh. He was Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale and Liddesdale from perhaps 1772 to 1818. He lived at Milnholm, near Langholm, where he is recorded in the Horse Tax Rolls in the 1780s and the dog tax in 1797. In 1787 he advised the Duke that some people in Liddesdale were petitioning for land to create a village, which would become Newcastleton. He was in charge of the plans for the town’s layout. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the William ‘of Raniston’ listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. His agricultural improvements were the focus of a 2004 Ph.D. thesis at Edinburgh University by Brian Bonnyman. He was succeeded as Chamberlain by James Davidson. Whithaugh seems to have been inherited by William, who was probably his nephew. However, it is unclear how many Williams there were. He died at Milnholm. William of Whithaugh (b.1810) son of Thomas and Eliza Elliot, he was born at Langholm. He probably inherited Whithaugh from his grandfather. He acted as estate improver for the Duke of Buccleuch. He resided at Potholm, near Langholm until 1848. In 1851 he is recorded at Whithaugh in Castleton Parish, as farmer of over 2,000 acres and employing 18 labourers. He was at Whitehaugh in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was still at Whithaugh, which is recorded as a house having 8 rooms with 1 or more windows. He was recorded as ‘Wm. Kerr’ at ‘Whitheugh’ in a directory of 1868. He was listed as owner of Whithaugh in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He was probably the ‘Kei [sic] of Whitehaugh [sic]’ listed among local ‘Hard-riding Dick’s’ in H.H. Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865). He served as Chairman of the Parochial Board for Castleton. He was President of the Liddesdale Curling Club. He was also a breeder of prize cattle. His wife was Janet. He died without issue and Whithaugh was inherited by his nephew William Little.

Keith (keeth) n. Alexander of Belses (18th/19th C.) accountant in Edinburgh. He was recorded as owner of parts of Belses (purchased from Bennet of Chesters) in Ancrum Parish in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He presumably held some of the lands of Belses, but this may only have been for the purpose of voting. Sir Edward (c.1280–1346) son of Robert, who was Great Marischal of Scotland. He is probably the Edward mentioned in a letter from Edward I in about 1300, granting him licence to take any of the goods from ‘Monsire Guilliam de Galeys’ (i.e. William Wallace). His brother Sir Robert succeeded their father as Great Marischal and commanded the cavalry at Bannockburn. He is referred to as ‘de Kethe’ when, along with his wife Isabella de Synton, he claimed the Sheriffdom of Selkirk from Edward I in about 1305. Isabella was the sister of the previous Sheriff, Andrew de Synton, and heiress to the Synton estate. He had a confirming charter for his lands and offices from David II. He secondly married Christina (or Christian), daughter of Sir John Monteith, Lord of Annan; she secondly married Sir Robert Erskine of that Ilk. His children included: Sir William; John of Inverugie, who married Mariot de Chen; Catherine; and Janet (or Joneta), who married Sir Thomas Erskine. Jean (presumably Janet) is recorded as his heir in a charter of 1368. It is unclear whether he or any of his children played any role locally. But Joneta married an Erskine, suggesting that the Synton estates passed through her to that family. His seal is attached to the Declaration of Arbroath. He died at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. His seal was divided into 6 vertical regions and decorated with lozenges, with a diagonal stripe on top. Janet or ‘Joneta’ (c.1345–1415) youngest daughter of Edward and Christina Monteith. She was also great-grand-daughter of the 11th Earl of Mar (resulting in a long-standing claim of the Erskines to the Earldom of Mar). She married David de Barclay (in Selkirk), then David Hamilton of Cadzow and finally Sir Thomas Erskine. In 1368 she is described as ‘Jean Berclay, daughter and heir of deceased Sir Edward Keth, lord of Syntoun’. One of her sons was Robert, 1st Lord Erskine, who probably inherited the Synton estates from her.

Kelly (ke-lee) n. Fr. Daniel (d.1943) priest at S.S. Mary & David 1938–42. He came from the neighbouring parish of Selkirk. He was responsible for significant redecoration of the interior of the church, and cleaning of the exterior. He resigned his charge in 1941 due to ill-health, remaining as assistant for another year before retiring fully. Elizabeth see Ruecastle. Frederick (19th C.) highwayman, whose accomplices held up carts of drink and other goods around Langbaurghshiel and Whitrope in the early 1860s. Fr. Thomas (1896–1963) born in County Leitrim, Ireland, he was ordained a priest in Glasgow in 1925 and served in Glasgow, Airdrie, Saltcoats, Glasgow (again), Newmains and Portobello before arriving in Hawick as Chaplain of St. Margaret’s Convent in 1961 (formerly spelled ‘Kellie’, etc.).

Kelly Cleuch (ke-lee-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Rain’s Hill and flowing roughly westwards to join the Liddel Water between Hewis Bridge and Dinlabyre. It is probably associated with the former farm of Killooley.

kelpie (kel-pee) n., arch. a young mischievous person – ‘Fierce drove the storm, with sleet and rain, The waters rose and raged amain, And oft we heard the kelpy’s cry Amid the tempest’s melody’[JTe].

the Kelpie (thu-kel-pee) n. nickname in use around the early 19th century.

Kelsae see Kelsi

Kelsi (kel-si) n. Kelso, 21 miles north-east of Hawick, built at the confluence of the Tweed and the Teviot. It was an abbey town from 1128 and traditionally a market town for farmers, artisans and particularly shoemakers. The lands of the village were granted to Kelso Abbey in 1343, and it became a Burgh of Barony in 1634. It was governed by the Baron Bailie (appointed by the Duke of Roxburgh) until well into the 19th century. The town was largely destroyed by fire in 1684, when it is said that 306 families lost their homes. It is renowned for its Georgian, Flemish-style Square, with a bull ring in the centre, plus the 1816 ionic-columned Town Hall, and 1761 Cross Keys. The first stone bridge of 1754 was an important crossing point for the Tweed (swept away 1797) and Rennie’s 1803 bridge was the model for the Waterloo Bridge. Kelso remains an agricultural centre, with tourism, fishing, a Race Course and light industry. Ednam House (built 1761), the Corn Exchange (1855) and the octagonal Parish Church (1771–73) are important historical buildings, and Floors Castle is just a mile to the west. The Turret House serves as a local museum. The route between Hawick...
Kelsi Abbey

and Kelso would have directly followed the Teviot for centuries; the improved road (essentially the A698) was completed in the late 18th century. Kelso Civic Week is in July and was inaugurated in 1937. It comprises the Kelso Laddie’s Reel, a ceremony at the Trysting Tree, commemorating the old Whipmen’s society, and ride-outs, including one to Yetholm. An older tradition is St. James Fair, formerly in August and now in September. ‘Guide to Kelso’ was published by J. & J.H. Rutherford in 1880. Population (1991) 5,989 – ‘Bosom’d in woods where mighty rivers run, Kelso’s fair vale expands before the sun; Its rising downs in vernal beauty swell, And fring’d with hazel winds each flowery dell’ [JL] (the name is from the Old English ‘calc hoh’, meaning ‘chalk hill’, or perhaps from Old Welsh ‘calch’ plus Old English, meaning ‘heel-shaped spur of land’; it first appears as ‘Calcho’, ‘Calcho’ and ‘Calkou’ in the 12th century; it is on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Cailso’; the local pronunciation ‘Kelsey’ appears in the 16th century; often also written ‘Kelsae’).

Kelsi Abbey (kel-si-aw-bee) n. Kelso Abbey, founded in 1128 by monks from Tiron, France, having been originally founded in Selkirk in 1113, with a charter by David I. The grants from David included lands in Lilliesleaf, as well as elsewhere around the Borders. It was dedicated to Mary and St. John in 1143 and the rights and lands of the monks were confirmed in a charter by Malcolm IV in 1159. It is the most ruined of the four Border abbeys, but was once the largest and wealthiest, having possessed the revenues of 33 parishes; it was not until about 1430 that its superiority was overtaken by St. Andrews. The founder was Prince Henry, son of David I, who is buried at Roxburgh. The infant James III was crowned at the Abbey in 1460 after his father was killed nearby. The last Abbot was James Stewart, illegitimate son of James V. It was burned in 1523 and then partly destroyed by a force of Spaniards in Hertford’s 1545 invasion, and burned again in 1547. Part of the Abbey was later used as a prison, and then as the parish church till 1771. Only the western section remains of a once much larger construction, with memorial additions for the Dukes of Roxburghe. The ruins are open to the public, although with minimal information no visitor centre and unlike the other Border abbeys no entrance fee either! (spelling varied over the years, with ‘Kelcho’ turning up in 1159, ‘monasterii de Kelcho’ in 1249 and ‘Calco’ still appearing in 1550).

Kelsi Brig (kel-si-brig) n. name generally used for the main road bridge across the Tweed at Kelso. The foundation stone was laid with great ceremony in 1754, but the central arch collapsed before it was completed, killing 7 workmen. The eventual cost was a staggering £3,000. It became the only substantial bridge between Peebles and Berwick, and was presumably heavily used for traffic going north from Hawick. The bridge fell into disrepair, however, and was swept away in a flood in 1797. The new John Rennie design was built 1800–03 at the huge cost of about £18,000, and it was said to be the prototype for the Waterloo Bridge in London. It has toll-houses at the northern end, this being the location of a riot by the townspeople in 1857, frustrated with paying the bridge toll for over 50 years.

the Kelsi Chronicle (thu-kel-si-kro-nee-kul) n. the Kelso Chronicle, founded in Kelso in 1783, it was the first newspaper published in the Borders. It was renamed the British Chronicle or Union Gazette in 1784, and was discontinued in 1803, but resumed again in 1832. Merging later with the Border Pioneer, Jedburgh Gazette, etc., it ran until 1932, eventually becoming part of the Southern Reporter. Because of its Liberal stance (in opposition to the Tory-backed Kelso Mail) it often covered newsworthy events in Hawick. It is also useful as a source of local death notices and obituaries, particularly before the first Hawick-based papers appeared.

Kelsi Junction (kel-si-jungk-shin) n. junction of the Waverley Line with the Kelso branch line, south of Newtown St. Boswells. This linked Hawick with Kelso and points towards Tweedmouth (1851–1948), as well as to Jedburgh via another branch (1851–1948).

the Kelsi Mail (thu-kel-si-mail) n. the Kelso Mail, or Roxburgh, Berwickshire and Northumberland Gazette, one of the earliest newspapers published in Roxburghshire. It started in 1797, and was one of only printed sources of local news for about 50 years, before the first Hawick newspapers started. It was founded by James Ballantyne (friend and later publisher of Sir Walter Scott) and was staunchly pro-Tory. The first Hawick agent was John Nixon. It ceased publication in 1945. The same company started publishing books (at the suggestion of Sir Walter Scott), moving to Edinburgh in 1802, and publishing many of Sir Walter’s novels.

Kelsi Wull (kel-si-wul) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Wullie Dunlap and Big Frank creep Past us, and Cashie’s near at hand; There’s Kelso Wull and Wat the Sweep, And Wullie Goudlands leadin’ the Band’ [HI] (presumably a William with a connection to Kelso).

kelter (kel-tur) v., poet. to fall, tumble, go head over heels – ‘Though soul an’ conscience baith should kelter, I’ll cleck a shillin’, When Meggy’s coy, ’twill help to melt her, An make her willin’’ [JR].

kemp (kemp) v., arch. to engage in a contest in the harvest field – ‘He was once kemping with a celebrated shearer …’ [RM], n., arch. a contest, particularly between bands of reapers – ‘The kirk day cann’, a kemp began, And hard and fast it grew …’ [JT], poet. a champion, great fighter – ‘Synce he’s ca’d on him Ringan Red; A sturdy kemp was he, From friend or foe in border feid Who never a foot would flee’ [JL].

kemp (kemp) n., arch. the plantain, Plantago major, particularly the stalk and seed-head (noted by J. Jamieson).

Kemp (kemp) n. James (b. 1822) son of William and Elizabeth Ketchin, he was an ironmonger in Galashiels. He is probably the Mr. Kemp of Gala who, in 1856, donated to the Hawick Archaeological Society a mastodon tooth and other fossils and rocks. John (19th C.) brewer of Hawick who was also an early member of Allars Kirk. It is possible he is the same man as the cooper. John (b.c. 1790) from Melrose, he was a cooper in Hawick. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and recorded at about 16 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was a widower around the Crown Close and in Slater’s 1852 directory he is a cooper on the High Street. In 1861 he was a widower at 4 Melgund Place (probably the modern No. 9). His wife was Margaret and their children included Helen, Catherine, Margaret and Jane. Rev. Joseph William (1872–1933) born in Hull, son of a policeman. His parents died when he was young, and he had minimal education. He attended night school, then the Bible Training Institute in Glasgow, where he was baptised. He became minister at Kelso Baptist Church in 1897 and moved to Hawick Baptist Church in 1898. During his brief ministry several new features were added to the congregation’s work, e.g. open air services on Sunday evenings, and services were sometimes also held in the Theatre on Croft Road. He remained until 1902, when he moved to Charlotte Baptist Chapel, Edinburgh. He vastly increased the congregation there, moved to New York in 1915, then Auckland in 1920. He established the New Zealand Bible Training Institute in 1922 and became President of the Baptist Union of New Zealand in 1929, but earlier illness returned and he died a few years later. He was said to be temperamental and difficult to work with. He was extremely conservative in his theological principles, fighting against what he saw as the evils of dancing, card-playing, the theatre and cinema. He wrote some short books, including ‘The Soul Winner and Soul Winning’ (1916). He married Winifred Binnie in 1897, and they had 2 children. He is buried at Auckland, and it is reported that 6,000 people attended his funeral.

Kemp’s Castle (kemps-kaw-sul) n. popular name for the remains of a settlement near Blawearie. The hill there is essentially the north-easterly spur of Borthwickshiel Horn, and reaches a height of 349 m. The main enclosure is an oval about 50 m by 40 m, defined by a bank with an outer quarry ditch. The entrance is on the east side and there are as many as 5 hut circles inside. Another fainter enclosure to the south-west measures about 90 m by 75 m and contains other hut circles. This may be an early iron age settlement. There are signs of cord rig on the eastern slopes (there are other Kemp’s Castles elsewhere).

Kemp’s Close (kemps-klos) n. occasional name used in the mid-19th century for a passageway at 7 High Street, named after the cooper’s there.

ken (ken) v. to know, recognise, be acquainted with – ‘A deh ken’, ‘div ee ken Mrs. Broon’s in the hospital?’; ‘ee deh ken the half o eet’, ‘Div ee ken Ken Dodd’s ded’s deed?’, ‘But in ae point ye’re fair to blame – Ye ken yonself, Ye neither did set down your name, Nor where ye dwell’ [JR], ‘Then I could ken – and man and woman Kenn’d weel as I did – what was comin’ …’ [AD], ‘I got your kindly letter. Kendall (ken-dul) n. Dr. Adrian (1946/7– ) originally from Broxburn, he was educated in Edinburgh and moved to London in 1964 to study at St. Thomas Hospital. He was a doctor in Torbay and Peterborough. In 2014 he was awarded the Queen’s Jubilee Medal for his services to mental health charity Park View. He first came to Hawick to visit his aunts at St Airches Convent. In 2015 he purchased Woodnorton and restored it.

Kenilworth Avenue (ken-ul-wurth-aw-vi-view) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1951 and named after the novel ‘Kenilworth’ by Sir Walter Scott. Neilson’s grocer’s shop was once there.

Kennaway (ke-nu-wa) n. Thomas (19th C.) Acting Father in 1876, charged with culpable homicide in the death of Edward Dearden, who was run down by his horse during the Thursday night Chase. Along with 7 other riders he was arrested on the Friday, with the others released on bail, but Kennaway being held until the following Monday. They were all fined £1 at their trial and Kennaway was found not guilty. He married Williamina Beattie in Wilton in 1870 – ‘...Barrin’ Tam Kennaway, whae was tried, On a chairge o’ culpable homicide’ [MB] (also referred to as ‘Luke’, his name may have been spelled ‘Kennoway’).

Kennedy (ke-nu-dee) n. Alexander (17th C.) resident at Langflat (near Southfield) in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Richdell according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficients’ of the Parish, but was charged tax for 2 hearths. Alexander Allan (19th/20th C.) manager of the Wells estate in Rulewater from 1885. He had previously been at the Earl of Seafield’s Strathspay estate. In 1877 he married Emma Groves from Gloucestershire. Andrew (b.1820/1) painter-decorator, who had a younger brother Robert. He was also known locally as an artist, painting ‘The Hawick Common-Riding of 1846’ which is in the Museum, along with portraits of some prominent Hawick men of his day, e.g. Tommy Robertson (which he donated to the Archaeological Society along with other items). He was also responsible for decorating the Victoria Bridge when it was first built. In 1841 he and his brother were recorded on the High Street (probably about No. 71). He lived near the Millport Steps, moved later to 12 Teviot Crescent (which became the Burns Club) and feued land at the foot of Baker Street. He is listed as a painter at Teviot Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was a Trustee of St. George’s Kirk. He married Elizabeth Morgan, and thier children included: Mary (b.1850); Elizabeth (b.1852); Robina (b.1854); Thomas; Margaret; and William H.G. The first 3 children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. David (1839–1907) born in Kilmarnock, he moved to Hawick in about 1861. He had a chemist’s shop on the High Street. In 1875 he found a large quantity of old coins while digging the foundations for a house on the High Street, these apparently having been deposited there in about 1555. In 1869 he married Helen Crichton, daughter of Gideon Ker. Their children were: Annie; Maggy; and Robert (b.1875), who took over the chemist’s shop. Esther (1820/1–1900) well-known resident of Ettrick Brigend. She ran a shop there for decades and knew everyone in the valley. She was noted for her ‘force of character, quick and keen discernment, ready expression and high descriptive power’. Gilbert (15th C.) Canon of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell and Prebendary of Hawick. In 1470 he swapped these benefits with James Lindsay for the Rectory of Benholm in St. Andrews Diocese. Rev. Hugh (1698–1764) born in Northern Ireland of Scottish parents, he graduated from Glasgow University in 1714 and became Chaplain to the Douglases of Cavers. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1720 and became minister of Torthorwald in 1721. He was presented to Cavers by Archibald Douglas in 1722 and became minister in 1723. In 1730 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Whutson. He served as Moderator of the Merse and Teviotdale Synod. An addition to Cavers Kirk, adjoining the Elliott Aisle bears the inscription ‘1721’. He remained at Cavers until moved to the Scots Kirk in Rotterdam in 1737. There he translated into Dutch the works of several of the best-known Scottish and English theologians. He obtained a D.D. from Aberdeen in 1762 and was described as ‘one of the best pulpit-men in the kingdom’. He was said to be tall, slender and with an open face and ruddy complexion. He married Margaret Scott (d.1746), a sister of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, and they had 13 children, including: Anne (b.1724), who married Alexander Livingstone, Provost of Aberdeen and merchant in Rotterdam; Archibald (b.1726); Hugh (b.1727); Charles (b.1729); Rachel (b.1730), who married William Fraser of Fraserfield; Walter (1732–77), who became a planter in Surinam; Robert (b.1735); William (1737–1782), who became Professor of Greek in Marischal College, Aberdeen; Beatrix, who married Capt. Bradshaw; and a son who died young. The 1726, 1729, 1732 and 1737 baptisms were carried out by John Douglas, minister at Kirkton. He published several sermons, some of them in Dutch, including ‘Sermon at opening of the Synod’ (1732), ‘Discourse concerning the Nature, Author, Means, and Manner of Conversion’ (1743), ‘Sermons in the Dutch Language’ (1748), ‘A short Account of the Rise and Progress of a remarkable Work of Grace in the United Netherlands’ (1752), as well as prefaces in other works. Several of his works were abridged in ‘Remains’ (1828) edited by John Brown of Whitburn. James (17th C.) smith living at Ashkirk Mill. In 1684 and 1685 he had a bond with Patrick Fletcher, Burgess of Selkirk. He was resident of Ashkirk Mill in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He may be the James who witnessed baptisms in 1690 for William Veitch (also in Ashkirk Mill) and for William Donald. James (18th C.) married Margaret Clark in Minto Parish in 1739. and their son William was baptised in 1789. James (18th C.) chaise-driver at Teviotbank in 1794, when he was working for David Simpson. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Peggy Kennedy and their son John was baptised in 1805. James (1771–1842) innkeeper of the Ordnance Arms and Quarter-Master-Sergeant in the Royal Horse Artillery. He was probably the James born in Cavers Parish to James. He was known locally as a veteran of Waterloo. He enlisted in 1790 and retired from the army in 1818, during which time he saw almost constant active duty, including in the Peninsular War; he was present at Badajoz, Torres Vedras, Salamanca, Cuidad Rodrigo and Vittoria. Based on the baptismal records for some of his children, he was in 1809 based at the army barracks in Christchurch on the south coast, part of the force defending Britain from the threat of invasion by Napoleon’s army. He was on the battlefield at Waterloo and was also part of the occupying army in Paris after Waterloo. From another birth record, he was probably in Ireland iin about 1818, shortly before retiring from the army. He attained the highest grade of a non-commissioned soldier and apparently turned down a commission. He was known as one of the best artillerists in his regiment. After retiring he was miller at Spittal-on-Rule briefly, but then became landlord of the Ordnance Arms (which he presumably named), which was also known as the Cannon Inn, at 12 High Street. He is recorded there in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and on the 1841 census. He also served as superintendent of the weigh-house in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, and served as ‘Preses’ of the Relief Kirk Session. It is said that his only child with his first wife was born in Ireland, probably while he was stationed there, but actually James D. was baptised in Hampshire, and this may instead have been the birth of Robert, with his 2nd wife. He may also have lived for a while in Kelso, since that is where his son William N. was born in 1821. He married twice, firstly to Sarah Damone (who died in 1812) and secondly to Lucille (or ‘Angelique Lucilla’) Hervieu. It is said that he met his second wife during the time he was in the occupying force in Paris, and that to begin with neither of them spoke a word of the other’s language. His children included: Priscilla (1804–91), christened in Chitschurch, Hampshire in 1809; Anne (1806–91), also christened in Hampshire in 1809; John, also christened in Hampshire in 1809; James Damone (b.1809), also in Hampshire; Robert (1818/9–82), perhaps born in Ireland; William Norman (b.1821), born in Kelso; Lucilla (b.c.1823), who married Thomas Kedie Pringle; and Frederick...
Kennedy

(b.1825), born in Hawick. Priscilla (d.1891) and Anne (d.1891), who were buried along with Robert in Grange Cemetery, Edinburgh (and said to be of Church Hill House) were additional children with his first wife, and appear to have lived as spinsters in Edinburgh. James (b.1803/4) frame-work knitter in Hawick. He was on the Kirk Wynd in 1841, the Back Row in 1851 and Drumlanrig Place in 1861. He married Janet Bower in Wilton in 1830. Their children included: Catherine (b.1831); John (b.1834); and Ann (b.1836). In 1836 he secondly married Isabella Stavert, and she died before 1861. Children by this second marriage included: Oliver (b.1839); Margaret (b.1841); Helen; James; Thomas; and Jane (b.1855). James Damone (1809–73) bookseller, bookbinder and printer of Sandbed and Teviot Square. He was son of James and Sarah Damone and brother of Robert and William Norman, and said to have been born in Athole Ireland when his father was stationed there; however, he was christened in 1809 in Christchurch, Hampshire (just 2 weeks after his birth) along with his brother John and sisters Priscilla and Ann. He was a bookbinder’s apprentice with Archibald Rutherford in Kelso, worked for a short time in Jedburgh and then in 1829 set up as a bookbinder, bookseller and stationer in Hawick. He also became a printer in 1836 and in 1842 he published ‘The Hawick Observer and Scottish Border Intelligencer’, the town’s first newspaper. He also operated ‘Kennedy’s Circulating Library’ in the 1830s to 1850s, being listed this way in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was listed as a bookseller, stationer and bookbinder, as well as a printer, at the Sandbed, in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was a bookseller, stationer and printer and also a bookbinder. Additionally he acted as life insurance agent for the Association of Scotland. Many local books were published by his firm, including ‘Upper Teviotdale and the Scots of Buccleuch’ (1887) and ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898). His first premises were on the other corner of the Sandbed, but he quickly moved over to No. 2. He was an elder of Hawick Parish for 25 years and a Town Councillor for 10 years. He also served as Burgh Treasurer. He married first Alison Rutherford and then Christian Lamb. He had at least 10 children, including: James (b.1828); Francis Rutherford (b.1830); Alison (b.1832); Sarah Damone (b.1834); Priscilla (1836–80), who is buried along with her cousin Robert in Edinburgh; Anne (b.1837); William Rutherford (b.1839); Charlotte Matilda (b.1843); Walter Phillips (b.1854), who ran the firm of W. & J. Kennedy, along with his brother; and John William (b.1857), who also ran the family business. He died suddenly at a Town Council meeting. At the time of his death he was the oldest shopkeeper and oldest member of the Kirk Session in Hawick. James (19th C.) listed as collector at the Town Steel-yard on the High Street, in Pigot’s 1837 directory. James (b.1808/9) frame-worker in Hawick, living at 77 High Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’) Pattison from Langholm. Their children included: John (b.1834); Matthew (b.1835); Mary (b.1836), who married James Elder; Ann Little (b.1839), who married James Grahan; James A. (b.1841); Elizabeth Pattison, who married Richard Edmondson; and Jane H. James (b.1809/10) from Selkirk, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 3 O’Connell Street (perhaps the modern 13). He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Elliot and Euphemia Laidlaw. Their children included Euphemia, James, Walter, Agnes, Janet, George, Margaret (b.1851), Elliot (b.1857) and Elizabeth (b.1861). James (b.1817/8) shepherd in Wilton Parish. In 1861 he was living with his wife Elizabeth Renwick and his mother-in-law at Lockiesedge. His children included Heriot S. and Elizabeth. He may be the same James living at Roadhead in 1851, with an earlier wife Mary, and working as a frame-work knitter. James Aitchison (19th C.) Hawick Bailie, father of Lieut.-Col. James. He was probably a butcher, living at Myreslaw Green. He appears to have married Isabella Ainslie in 1880, Mary Beattie in 1882 and Beatrice Robson in 1885. He may be the son of James and Elizabeth born around 1845. James D., M.B.E. (19th/20th C.) son of John William. He enlisted in WWI, becoming a sergeant in the K.O.S.B. He fought in Flanders, where his great-grandfather James had fought with Wellington. He later worked for the forestry service in West Africa. Lt. Col. James, D.S.O., M.C. (19th/20th C.), one of Hawick’s most illustrious soldiers. He enlisted in the Black Watch in 1904, serving in South Africa and India. He was sent to France in 1914, being awarded with the D.C.M. later that year, followed by the Military Cross in 1915. The next year saw him appointed as Lieutenant Colonel with the Welsh Regiment, and later received the D.S.O. In civilian life in Hawick he was associated with several service-men’s and sporting institutions. He was Acting Father in 1921 to Chap Landles. Rev. James...
A.T. (19th/20th C.) minister at St. Andrew’s Kirk 1915–21. James (20th C.) railway blacksmith who worked at Loch Park. He was known as a great singer. In 1950 he was the first person to sing ‘Auld Hawick, Where I Was Born’ in public. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Kennedy and their children included John (b.1780). John (18th C.) inn-keeper in Hawick. He married Ann Ward and their children included: George (b.1779); George (again, b.1784); and William (b.1786), born in 1785. The witnesses in 1779 were miller John Scott and Church Officer Walter Scott. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Minto. His name appears in 1797 and 1798 in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire; however, it is recorded that David Miller, labourer in Hawick, served as his substitute in the Militia. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. John (18th/19th C.) formerly Pipe Major of the 75th Highlanders, he was appointed town piper in 1802, but only for about 1 year. He would play the pipes through the town nightly at 7 p.m. He was the last of Hawick’s official pipers. John (b.c.1780) stocking-maker living at about 48 High Street in 1841. His wife was Mary and their children were George, Margaret and Mary. He could be the native of Hawick who died in Galt, Ontario in 1855, aged 76, with his wife dying there in 1857, aged 73. John (b.c.1807) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was in Kirkyard, in 1851 he was at about 12 Howegate and in 1861 was in the back house of 26 High Street. He married Mary Scott in 1831 and their children included Margaret (b.c.1832), John (b.c.1834), Robert (b.c.1836), Janet (b.c.1837), James (b.1838), George (b.1840), Mary (b.1844), Agnes (b.1848) and Thomas Turnbull (b.1850). The last 3 children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. John (19th C.) married Mary Stothart in Hawick Parish in 1842. John (b.1834) shoemaker journeyman living at 14 Howegate in 1861. He was born in Hawick, son of James and Janet Bower. He married Helen Rutherford in Hawick in 1855. Their children included: James (b.1856), who probably died young; Helen (b.1857); William (b.1859); Janet (b.1861); John Bower (b.1863); Jane (b.1865); James (b.1866); Oliver (b.1868), who donated the Medway Cup; Thomas (b.1871); Catherine (b.1873); and Agnes (b.1874). John William (1857–1934) son of James Damone and brother of Walter Phillips, with whom he ran the firm W. & J. Kennedy. He became an expert on the history of the Borders and was said to have had a quiet disposition. He suggested and organised the erection of the Johnnie Armstrong commemorative stone at Teviothead, unveiled in 1897. For the 1903 edition of ‘Hawick Common-Riding Songs’ his researches uncovered the names of the Cornets from 1713 to 1718. He also contributed to the Transactions of the Archaeological Society and was a member of the Society for 59 years; during the period 1907–33 he served as either President or Vice-President. He helped James Sinton compile his bibliography of Hawick-related works. He married Annie Scott Edie, who died in 1940, aged 71. James D., M.B.E., was their son. They also had 3 daughters, Lucille and Peggy being long-time workers in the family shop. John (d.1885) from the bookseller’s family. He rose to a prominent position within the Forestry Commission, which started awarding a trophy in his name to encourage multi-purpose woodlands. Oliver (19th C.) married Sarah Ann Henson. Their son Thomas Oliver was born in Hawick in 1874. He was probably the Oliver born to James and Isabella in Hawick in about 1839. Oliver (b.1868) son of John and Helen Rutherford, he was born in Hawick. He was a stocking-maker to trade, moving to Southend to set up his own company, and using ‘Medway’ as his trade name. He presented the Medway Cup in 1927, to be competed for at the Common Riding Races. A cousin on his mother’s side was Isla Coulton, nee Scott. He is probably the Oliver who either married Jane Beattie in Hawick in 1906, Isabella Hughes in 1911 or Euphemia Haldane Davies in 1916. Robert (1777/8–1860) blacksmith of Melgund Place. He was son of shepherd James and Janet Fulton and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1818/9–1882) son of James of the Ordnance Arms. He was older brother of William Norman and younger half-brother of James Damone. It is possible he was the Robert, born in Ireland, who was a weaver living on O’Connell Street in 1841, aged about 25; this would match with his father being based in Ireland for a while. However, he later became an engineer. He wrote some poetry, including ‘Plea for the Common Riding’, being a strong Common Riding supporter, despite being an exile. He also wrote an inauguration ode on the unveiling of Prince Albert’s Monument in Edinburgh and verses on the erection of the Bruce Statue in Stirling. He was a civil engineer who spent much of his life in India and retired to Edinburgh. However, he was said to be ‘a frequent visitor at Hawick, especially at the Common-riding time, when he liked to for-gather with Hawick worthies, and get his memory reflected with local reminiscences'. He donated a large collection of Indian artefacts to the Museum in 1863, as well as a number of coins and hunting and fishing trophies from India. He was described as 'one of the most munificent of the donors to whom the Museum has been indebted'. He would annually bring the old snuff horn of his brother's over to Hawick for the Snuffing. He married Sarah Eliza Ross (1829/30–1861) and their son Robert Ross (d.1861) died in infancy in Madras. He is buried in Grange Cemetery, Edinburgh. Robert (b.1824/5) born in Wilton, brother of Andrew. He was a painter, living with his brother Andrew in 1841. In 1851 he was living in Jedburgh and described as a Master Painter employing 1 man. Robert (b.1827/8) born in Hawick, he was a basket-maker. He is recorded in Jedburgh Jail in 1847, 1867 and 1869, Selkirk Jail in 1859 and 1865 and Dumfries Jail in 1871. In 1851 he was living with his mother and siblings in Jedburgh and in 1861 was in Melrose. His wife was Mary and their children included William, John and 2 daughters who died young. He returned to England in the 1940s. Thomas (17th/18th C.) smith in the Sandbed. In 1719 he is recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. He also had another discharge in 1727 and perhaps others in 1729, 1730, 1733 and 1736, as well as bringing a law suit against Alexander Scott for debt. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Hawick Kennedys. Thomas (18th C.) recorded as tenant of the land of Hutcher's Riverside in Minto Parish in 1780. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Armstrong and their children included: Thomas (b.1808); John (b.1811); Alexander (b.1813); James (b.1815); James (again, b.1817); Mary (b.1819); an unnamed child (b.1821); Robert (b.1823); Margaret (b.1825); and Catherine (b.1828). Most of his children were baptised in the East Bank Kirk. Thomas (b.1805/6) from Fife, he was a coach-builder. He lived on the Backdamgate in 1851, employing 5 men and was listed as a coach-maker there in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife Ann was from Midlothian and they had children Thomas D. and Montague. Sir Thomas Lawrie (b.1828–1913) son of James Damone and Christian Lamb. He learned about the book trade in Edinburgh, and ran the business W. & J. Kennedy with his brother John William. He was a teacher in the Science and Technology School in the late 19th century, who moved to be one of the teachers in the Buccleuch School. In 1874 he was one of two young men who raised a petition to get the School Board to support a mathematics class in the town. Eventually this led to a committee, independent of the School Board, which organised classes in science and art, which were later found a home in the Buccleuch Memorial. His contribution to technical and scientific education in the town was immense. He was also involved with the Archæological Society. In addition he was a Volunteer for over 30 years, retiring with the rank of Major. He married Jane Law and secondly Emma Landlees. Jean (later Mrs. Irvine, b.1876), first woman President of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society, was his daughter. Dr. W.P. (b.1899) was his son. After his death former pupils subscribed to the establishment of the Kennedy-Dechan Prize in science and mathematics. Walter Phillips (1899–1983) son of Walter Phillips. He was born in Hawick and educated at the Buccleuch Memorial Institute and George Heriot's. He graduated with a B.Sc. from Edinburgh University in 1920 and a Ph.D. in 1927. He became a doctor and for a while was Professor of Physiology at the Royal Medical College in Baghdad, then moving to the Ministry of Health in London. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. William (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The mance of Hauick’ and listed as ‘Win Kennitie in Park’ (although it is unclear where ‘Park’ might be). William (b.1790/1) born in Hawick, he was living at 7 O’Connell Street in 1841 and 1851. He was working as a woollen spinner. His wife was Margaret Leithead, but she died before 1851. Their children included William and Thomas. Probably the same William was living in Hawick when listed among heads of household in Wilton Kirk in 1835. William (b.1817/8) born in Wilton Parish, he was living at Allars Crescent in 1851 and on Dickson Street in 1861. His wife Jane was born ‘At Sea’. Their children included William, James, Catherine, Margaret, Barbara, Thomas and Jane. William Norman ‘Norman’ (1821–1865) son of veteran James and Lucille Hervieu, from France. He was christened in Kelso. He was younger brother of Robert and half-brother of James Damone. He trained as a book-binder, probably with his half-brother. He was Inspector of the Poor in Hawick for about 15 years, but succumbed to fever after visiting a sick pauper. He was a founder of the Archæological Society, being its first official member, acting as Secretary ‘pro tem’ in the first months, then being the first Treasurer (personally paying for the publication of the initial reports) and a regular contributor to the early Transactions. Despite his life being cut short, he contributed no less than 48 papers, on a wide range of subjects, as well as articles published in other places. Essentially an early folklorist, his descriptions of Hawick characters (mostly presented at the Archæological Society, but published after his death) formed the basis for Robert Murray’s ‘Hawick Characters’. They are an invaluable source of information about ordinary Hawick people in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, containing examples of local dialect and numerous funny stories! They formed part of what he referred to as ‘The Local Ethnology of Hawick and Neighbourhood’, suggesting that we might one day have seen the publication of a full-scale book. His writing shows a skill that stands out compared with most of his contemporaries, suffused with a strong empathy for his fellow humans, with liberal views that seem quite modern (e.g. in his comments about the African-born teacher Tom Jenkins). His liberal views seem sense of humanity. He was probably the Mr. Kennedy who donated to the Archæological Society in 1856 ‘some very interesting fossil remains from the greywracke quarry at St. Mary’s head of Slitrig Crescent’. He was also one of the first (in 1858) to suggest the Catrail was a boundary connecting between streams rather than a defensive ditch. In addition, he performed early examinations of local hill-forts, and was elected a member of the Society of Antiquarians of Scotland. He was the first to compile a list of the ministers of Hawick Parish. He wrote some poetry, including ‘Dialogue Anent the Auld Brig’, another poem on the same subject (intended for the Auld Brig competition, but never entered) and others that appeared in the local press. In 1863 he presented to the Museum some items he had found while St. Mary’s Kirk was being renovated. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, and personally reinstated the ‘Snuffing’ tradition. He wrote a short history of Common Riding traditions, published posthumously from notes of a book he was working on. He had also been working on the Burgh records to trace the Town’s history, and had extensive notes on the history of manufacturing in Hawick, all of which he was intending to compile into some kind of book. He became a friend of Rev. James Morton (author of ‘Monastic Annals of Teviotdale’ and editor of the John Leyden collection), and helped him with preparation of a supplement to Dr. Jamieson’s dictionary of the Scottish language. In 1851 he was living at Teviot Square with a servant, and in Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a shopkeeper at Teviot Square. He later lived at Stonefield Cottage, where he is listed in 1861. He married Matilda Cox, who was born in Ireland. Their children included: James Robert (b.1850); Charlotte Elizabeth (b.1851); Lucille Hervieu (b.1853); William Norman (b.1856); Robert (b.1857); John Ross (b.1861); and Matilda (b.1863). His portrait was painted by his brother Robert. He is also in another portrait (by John Guthrie) along with fellow Archæological Society founders Alexander and Robert Michie, and there is an early photograph of him. His death came unexpectedly after he attended to a feverish woman in the West-end, not being able to find anyone else to help. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William Norman ‘Willie’ (b.1856) son of William Norman. He dispensed the snuff at the Snuffing in the late 1800s and early 1900s. There is a photograph of him with the snuff mull in 1907. He may have been the proprietor of the Tower Hotel and married a daughter of Andrew Minto (formerly written ‘Kennet’, ‘Kenniday’, ‘Kennidie’, ‘Kenitter’, ‘Kennitie’ and variants).

the Kennedy-Dechan Prize (thu-ku-ni-dee-dee-kin-priz) n. science bursary prize fund at the High School, set up by in memory of Walter Phillips Kennedy and Martin Dechan about 1915. The initial fund was subscribed to by former pupils, raising over £1100, with later donations by the Callants’ Club. It was used to award gold medals to 3rd year High School pupils who excelled in science and mathematics. More recently the prize has been given to final year pupils.
Kennedy’s

University prizes in these subjects, available for 3 years, were also originally awarded.

Kennedy’s (ke-nu-deez) n. W. & J. Kennedy, booksellers, bookbinders and stationers shop at 2 Sandbed. It was founded by James Damone Kennedy, then continued by his sons Walter and James. They also ran a circulating library around the 1830s. They published many local books, and were the town’s pre-eminent bookshop for decades. The business left the Kennedy family in the early 1960s, being run by Frances and Allan Holbkirk, but retaining the old name. It closed in 1971 after 142 years, following a compulsory purchase order by the council as part of the Howegate redevelopment scheme; however, the planned realignment of the property never materialised.

Kennedy’s (ke-nu-deez) n. former chip shop (Tam Kennedy’s) on Drumlanrig Square.

Kenneth Sike (ke-nith-sik) n. stream in southern Liddesdale, which rises on Kirk Hill and runs roughly south to join Foulwood Sike.

Ken the Horse (ken-thu-hors) n. soubriquet for the Equestrain Monumnet or 1514 Memorial. The joke comes from the use of the statue as a landmark, particularly when giving directions, which invariably start with the question ‘ee ken the horse?’. The phrase was a focus of the speech given by Ian Landles when the monument was moved in 2003. A ‘Ken the Horse’ supporters group was started in 2009. In 2010 the Enterprise Group at Hawick High School used the ‘Ken the Horse’ brand to raise money through car stickers and other merchandise. In addition a song was written by Iain H. Scott, and some cartoons were produced.

Keown (kyoo-in) n. George (1941–2020) from New Zealand, he came to Scotland in 1967 and became teacher at Burnfoot School. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and gifted a trophy that has been competed for since 1968 by Hawick primary-school rugby teams. Returning to New Zealand he married Peggy Morgan, who was also a teacher (and the couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020). He was a Head Teacher for 29 years and retired in 1999. He played rugby until he was 40. Returning to the area in 2000, he and his wife became supply teachers. Their children are Barrie (who played rugby in Hawick and joined the police) and Raelene.

the Keown Trophy (thu-kyoo-in-trö-fe) n. rugby prize, competed for annually by primary schools in Hawick since 1968, gifted by George Keown.

Ker ker, kawr n. Adam (15th C.) Clerk of Glasgow Diocese who was the notary for the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1428/9, following the death of William’s father. It is unclear if he was attached to a particular local church. Adam (15th C.) appointed as one of the bailies to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to give sasine of Wolfelee to David Home of Wedderburn in 1479. Adam (d.bef. 1489) owner of the lands of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk, which were the eastern desmesne lands there. In 1489 his son Thomas was retoured as heir to the lands of ‘Sant Elen Shaw’, including ‘le Kyrk croft’, ‘Caponland’ and ‘Gersland’, by Ralph Ker, bailie to George Douglas, Master of Angus. He is probably ancestor of the later Kers of Shaws. Adam (d.bef. 1579) only son and heir of William of Shaws. In 1528 he gave sasine of lands in Selkirk to John Scott and in 1530 he was recorded receiving yearly rent for lands in Selkirk. In 1530/1, with the consent of his father William, he gave sasine of lands in Selkirk to George Chapman and other lands to John Morlaw. In 1533 he and his father sold a tenement to John Brydon. He was in ‘Sanct Helyne Schawe’ in 1534 when he resigned an annual rent. In that same year he is recorded as heir of William and husband of Janet Newton when James of Mersington gave a letter of obligation to them at ‘the tower of St Helyne Schaw’. In 1540 he and his father resigned a tenement in Selkirk and along with his wife (‘Janet Neutoun lady of Dalcoif’) had a transaction involving Little Newton in Lauderdale (with a further transaction for the same lands in 1552). He was recorded as a juror in 1541. He was involved in further transactions in Selkirk in 1543/4 and 1544. He married Janet Newton, who was heiress of the lands of Dalcoif in Berwickshire. He was deceased by 1579 when his son Thomas had sasine for his daughter Elizabeth’s lands of ‘Sancthelingschaw’ with tower and other lands in Selkirk. Adam (b.1808/9–79) from the Hawick area. In about 1832 he emigrated to Galt in Ontario. In 1850 he was elected as Clerk and Treasurer, serving until 1858. He was then Mayor of Galt in the period 1868–74. Alexander (16th/17th C.) servant to John Ker of Langnewton, recorded in 1621. He was listed as ‘Willis Elchie’, so that his father must have been called William. Along with some of his associates he was declared a rebel in 1621. Alexander (d.1817) 2nd son of John. He was employed in the naval service of the East India Company, but retired due to bad health. He was ‘Alexander Carre brother-german to John Carre of Cavers’ on the 1780 roll of electors in Roxburghshire. He was also listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788. He was taxed for having male servants in the 1780s. He succeeded to Cavers Carre and Hundlee on the death of his brother Capt. John in 1798. However, he was first listed on the Horse Tax Rolls at Cavers Carre in 1792. In 1800 he married Ann, eldest daughter of Robert Boswell, W.S. Immediately afterwards he had a new part of the house built at Cavers Carre. After getting into financial difficulties he sold Bedrule in 1801, part of this having been in the family since 1528. Belses was also sold about the same time. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 (and still listed in 1819). He died without issue and Hundlee went to the Marquess of Lothian (as nearest male heir to Lord Jedburgh), while he left Cavers Carre to his sister Elizabeth. Her son William Riddell Carre later succeeded. Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn (d.1444) 2nd son of Henry, he was the first Ker to be designated 'of Cessford'. In 1420 he was witness to the charter for Brauxholme, granted by William Inglis to Robert Scott. He may be the Andrew who was on a 'retour of inquest' made in Hawick in 1424 to decide on some lands in Hownam and another in 1427 to decide on inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. He was served heir to his brother Richard in 1428, although he is called 'of Altonburn' even before that. In 1429/30 he was on the 'retour' panel for the lands of Caverton. In 1430 he held the lands of Primsise for loaning a sum of money to Andrew Rule (with some suggestion the date is really much earlier). However, in 1432 these lands were resigned by Andrew Rule to his son George, who had married Margaret Ker (his own daughter). In 1433/4 he had a charter of the half the lands of Borthwickshiel from George Crichton of Blackness. He is probably the Andrew who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. Also in 1437 he had a charter from William Earl of Douglas for the lands of Primsise. He was probably the 'Andree Ker' who was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that Ilk in 1439, when Grahamslaw was infested in Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1439/40 he acquired Primsise outright from the daughters of Andrew Rule, and finally the lands of Plenderleith and Hindhope from the Rules in 1454/5 (although that was finalised by his son Andrew). In 1441 he and his son James had a 'letter of reversion' for the lands of Lempitlaw with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He had a grant of the Mains of Hownam in 1443. He married a daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers and was succeeded by his son Andrew. Other children included: James, who had a charter of Primsise in 1444 and may be the same man as James of Linton; Thomas, who also held lands in Primsise and probably Gate-shaw; and Margaret, who married George Rule of Primsise. He was still alive in August 1444, and died close to Christmas that year. Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn (d.bef. 1484) son of Andrew, who he succeeded in 1445. He was probably the originator of the left-handed family tradition. He became prominent as a supporter of the Earl of Angus and was given lands in Jedforest. He was 'younger' in 1441 when he witnessed a charter for the lands of Cessford. It was either him or his father who was 'Andro Ker lord of Awtounburne' in 1445 when Henry Wood leased his tenantry of Harden Wood (within Borthwickshiels) to him. In 1446 he was 'Andrea Ker de Awtounburne' when he witnessed a charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. He witnessed a document for Oswald Abernethy, made before the Earl of Douglas in 1446/7, relating to the lands of Teindsise and Harwood. Also in 1446/7 there was a retour at Newark to decide that he was his father’s heir in the lands of Primsise. In 1447 he was a witness to the charter of Margaret Cusing (wife of Simon Routledge, Hawick Burgess) to Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme. He was ‘Bailie in that part’ in a 1448 document whereby Stephen Scott gained the ‘Burrellands’ in Eckford. In 1450 he had a charter for lands in Stirlingshire. And he was Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s Bailie in Eckford (along with Stephen Scott) in 1454. In 1453 he had a mutual bond of manrent with Sir Robert Colville. In 1456 he was accused of bringing Englishmen to burn Eckford, Crauling, Grahamslaw and Jedburgh, but was acquitted. Also in 1456 he and his brother James were involved with collecting rents on the King’s lands in Ettrick Forest, for which he had the lease of the farms of Bowerhope and Ashiestiel. In 1457 he was made Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest by George, Earl of Angus; in place of his seal the agreement used the seal of David Pringle of Pilmuir, since he ‘had no seal of his own present’. In the early 1460s he sided with Robert, Lord Boyd, in seizing power from the young King James III. In 1464/5 he was on the inquest for the inheritance of the Baronie of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh (to Archibald Douglas) and also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex (between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains). In 1468 he and his son Walter were involved in an arrangement with Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk, when they acted as procurators for Henry Wardlaw of Torrie (and Wilton). In 1469/70 he witnessed the granting of the Governorship of Hermitage to the Scots of Buccleuch for the Earl of Angus. In 1470 he was a witness to another charter for the Douglasses of Cavers, and was one of the bailies appointed by the Earl of Angus to give sasine of these lands in 1472. In 1470/1 he was indicted for helping the English, bringing in the traitor James Douglas, involvement in the battle in which the Laird of Rutherford and others were captured, wounded or killed, helping Robert, Lord Boyd, in capturing the King for a period, and involvement in plotting to kill Andrew, Lord Avondale, Chancellor of Scotland; he appeared before a jury and was acquitted, with the decision witnessed by several Border Lairds. In 1471 his son and heir Walter took possession of the lands of Borthwickshields and Harden Wood. Also in 1471 he had a debt relating to Crown lands. In 1475/6 he was witness to a document relating to Kirkurd for the Scots of Buccleuch. In 1479 he received the ‘fermes’ (i.e. rental fees) of Jedburgh. He may be the Andrew who was infefted in the lands of Crailing and Hownam by Alexander Home in 1484. He was said to have married a daughter of William Douglas of Cavers (although this may have been his father), and secondly married Margaret Tweedie (or perhaps Herries). His children included: Andrew, younger of Cessford, mentioned in 1464/5, who died before his father, and married Margaret; Walter of Caverton and Cessford, who succeeded; Thomas, who became the 1st Laird of Ferniehirst and is usually spelled ‘Kerr’; Robert, Abbot of Kelso; William of Yair and Boithill; Ralph of Primside Loch, also called ‘Radulpho’; and Margaret, who married Sir James Sandilands of Calder. James of Linton and George of Samuelston may also have been his sons (but both of these are open to debate). Andrew (d.bef. 1479) eldest son of Andrew of Cessford, but he died before his father. He is mentioned in 1464/5. He may have married a Hepburne, and after his death his wife married a Haliburton, Laird of Dirleton (she was probably the ‘Mariota’ who was wife of George, 4th Lord Haliburton of Dirleton). His only child was Margaret, who in 1479 renounced all claim to the Barony of Cessford in favour of her uncle Walter. Andrew of Gateshaw (15th/16th C.) perhaps son of James. In 1498 he was in dispute with the Abbot of Melrose over the ‘herezeld’ of his tenants. In 1510 he and Thomas, brother of Philip Scott of Headshaw, were accused of murdering John Murray of Falahill. His sureties were his son Lancelot, along with James of Whitrig. Sir Andrew (d.1526) Laird of Cessford, son of Sir Robert (who died before he could succeed). In 1503 he had sasine for Cessford, ‘Huntleisland’, Auld Roxburgh, Altonburn, ‘Borderslandis’ and Castleside. In 1508/9 he had a charter for Auld Roxburgh and in 1511 a confirming charter for Cessford, Caverton (called ‘Rutherfordislands’), ‘Fetheringamyslandsis’, Hownam, ‘Penniside’ and Smailholm. He served as Warden of the Middle Marches (possibly along with his brother Ralph) about 1503 and again in 1515. He probably fought at Flodden. In 1519 he had a charter of half the lands of Hassendean from William Elphinstone, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1525 he was named on a bond for keeping peace on the Border. He was killed at the Battle of Skirmish Hill by James Elliot, a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch. This led to a feud between the Scots and the Kers that lasted decades, and led to the murder of Sir Walter of Buccleuch on Edinburgh High Street in 1552. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Patrick Crichton of Crichton Rid- dell, and was succeeded by his son Sir Walter. His other children included: Mark, Commandator of Newbattle; Andrew, who married Marion Pringle; Catherine, who married Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes and was granted lands in Smailholm in 1524; and Isobel, who married Sir William Sinclair of Roslin. In 1524 his wife ‘Ann Cre[...]’ (either the same as Agnes Crichton, or a 2nd wife) resigned her lands in Selkirk. Andrew of Primside and Greenhead (d.bef. 1537) son of Ralph. He is probably the ‘Andreas ker filius Radulph’ who was part of a bond in 1498 to act upon men who were already fugitives. In 1519 he witnessed a document in Selkirk and was involved in another document in 1520. In 1526 he was listed among the large number of Border- ers (led by Walter Scott of Branxholme) who had remission for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He was ‘of Greenhead’ in 1527/8 when he agreed to appear at a tribunal in Selkirk. In that same year he and his wife Marion Pringle had a sasine for the lands in Maxwell Fields. In 1529/30 he was still ‘of Greenhead’ when he witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton (who may have been a relative). In 1530/1 he was witness to Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose.
Ker

Abbey. Also in 1530/1 he had documents involving the lands of Softlaw. In 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In 1532 Robert Scott, tutor of Howpasley and George Scott of Blindhaugh agreed to pay him a fee for the marriage of Janet Scott of Howpasley to Thomas McDongall of Makerstoun. Also in 1532 he purchased the lands of Birksiside from Robert Scott of Howpasley. He witnessed a document in Selkirk between the Kers of Mersington and Shaws in 1534. In 1535 he was involved in a dispute with Thomas Ker in Yair; there he is ‘in Prumsydlocht at his dwelling place called Grenheid’, making it clear that Andrew of Primside and Andrew of Greenhead were the same person. In 1537 he ordered Walter Scott in Synton to leave certain of his lands. In 1538 he and his wife Marion Pringle were absolved from paying past fees on ‘Mabyllynflat’ to John Turnbull of Hassendean, with their son Gilbert to pay in future. He claimed tenancy of Broadmeadows in 1541. He also claimed tenancy of ‘Mydilisteid of Hartwood’, as well as ‘Blakmeidnes’, Bailielee and half of Phaup. He was said to be one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (although already deceased by then). He married Marion Pringle and was succeeded by his son Gilbert of Primside; in 1536/7 his wife refused to act as his executor ‘because of the great dangers it will incur’ and in 1539/40 his wife and son obtained the non-entries ‘because of the great dangers it will incur’ and in 1539/40 his wife and son obtained the non-entries from Janet Newton and Adam Ker. In 1544 his widow had an agreement with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme that Scott would pay her for rents on her lands of Broadmeadows. His daughter Janet appointed John Douglas, Burgess in Edinburgh, as her procurator in 1533. Andrew of Graden (d.bef. 1563) younger son of Ker of Cessford. In 1528 he had a charter for Water Hoelaw, formerly belonging to Mark of Dolphinston. He married Katherine, sister of Sir Andrew of Hirsel and Alexander, 5th Lord Home. In 1599 he and his son William gave a charter of lands in Duddingston to John, Burgess of Edinburgh. He was a juror on a retour in 1600. Probably the same Andrew signed the bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace in 1602. In 1603 he was among Scots and others, subordinates of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feus to his heir in 1599; and George, who is probably the George who succeeded to Linton. Sir Andrew of Faldonside (d.1599) son of George of Faldonside and nephew of Sir Andrew of Cessford. His estate was on the Tweed, south-west of Galashiels. His curators were Andrew of Hirsel and Alexander, 5th Lord Home. He complained against Robert Kerr of Woodhead in 1564, resulting in Robert being warded in Edinburgh Tolbooth. He and his children were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his son and heir George was to marry Janet, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, but the Kers did not fulfil this part. He was said to have held a pistol at the side of Mary, Queen of Scots in 1566, when she was forced to watch the murder of David Rizzio. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thirlieshope with the Regent Moray. He served as surety in 1569 for Lancel Armstrong of Whithaugh, as well as Hob Elliot (‘callit Sweit Mylk alias Greit Leggis’), and was also surety in 1571 and 1572 and then in 1573 for some Elliots. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieve and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1572/3 he was surety for James Langlands of that Ilk and for William Douglas of Cavers; they were swearing that they would not help the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Pringles in their feud with the Elliots. He is listed in Moninpenne’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. In 1580 he was recorded as superior of the lands in Darnick for which John Scott was hereditary feuair. In 1581 the same John Scott owed him for ‘unpaid fermes’. He acted as Deputy Keeper of Liddesdale in the early 1580s. His brother John was listed among Border criminals in 1586/7. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. In 1590/1 he was cautioner for William of Cessford not to reset Sir Robert (younger of Cessford), who was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of William of Ancrum. He is listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden. Roberton, Lord Seton was his surety in 1592. In 1594 his eldest son George and another son Walter had bonds for not harming Thomas Falseide of that Ilk and Patrick Livingstone of Saltcoats. In 1595 he was surety for Lancelot of Gate- shaw not to harm Elizabeth Cranston, widow of Lancelot of Little Newton. In 1596/7 he was a Border Commissioner for dealing with the English. In 1598 he and his son and heir George were involved in a bond. He firstly married Elizabeth Johnstone of Elphinstone and in 1573 secondly married married Margaret Stewart, who was the widow of reformer John Knox and sister of the Regent, the Earl of Arran. He had 4 sons and 3 daughters, including: George, who succeeded; John, whose daughter Mary married William Elliot, Parson of Bedrule; and Margaret, who married Andrew Ker of Yair. In 1632 Robert, son of Andrew of Faldonside (either him or a later generation) succeeded to lands in Feu-Rule. In 1599 his widow Margaret Stewart and son George had a bond for Robert Falseide of that Ilk not to harm them. Sir Andrew ‘Dand’ of the Hirsel and Littledean (d.1573) son of Mark of Dolphinston and Littledean, and descended from the Kerrs of Cessford. He is probably the Andrew of Littledean who in 1539 witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam Scott. He is probably also the ‘Dande Carr of Litelden’ who in 1541 was accused along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch of being responsible for the death of an Englishman. He was said to have been granted the lands of Hirsell (in Berwickshire) in 1542 after being the first man to report to the King about the Scottish victory at Hadden Rigg. Also in 1542 he made a raid into England, taking prisoner the Constable of Etal and others. In 1547 he and his son Walter of Dolphinston were listed in the summons for those accused of murdering Darnley. He was Provost of Edinburgh 1548–50 and was knighted in 1552. He is probably the ‘Dand Ker’ who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. He is ‘Andro Ker of Hirsell’ in 1552 when indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; his son Walter was also listed. In 1553/4 he was listed among Kerrs in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kerrs. He may be the same as Sir Andrew of Littledean who was to satisfy George Rutherford in 1560 as part of resolving the feud create by the murder of George’s father, George Rutherford of Longnewton; he was also to ask forgiveness from Sir William Cranston ‘for being upon the ground quhair Sir Walter Scot of Bukclewch Knycyt was slaine’, this being Cranston’s uncle. He was among those required by the Queen in 1561 to appear in Jedburgh to answer for their failure to apprehend fugitives. In 1562 he was among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kerrs and the Scotts. He is mentioned as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565, but helped by the notary. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thorlieshope with the Regent Moray. In 1568/9 he was one of the main Kerrs to sign a contract with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme relating to the slaying of Sir Walter’s father in Edinburgh. They had to appear at the church of Melrose ‘to make homage for the said slaughter’ and his grandson John Kerr was to marry Elizabeth Murray, sister of Sir Walter (and if not, then another son was to marry another relative of Scott of Buccleuch); however, this does not appear to have happened. He may also be the ‘Andro Ker of Litilden’ who signed the bond for suppressing Border thieve in 1569. Also in 1569 he was surety for Sir William Ainslie... and was ‘Sir Andro Ker of Hirsell Knycht’ when a bond was made with John Edmondson of that Ilk. He is probably the ‘Andro Ker of Litildene knycht’ who signed a bond to act against Borders thieves in 1571/2. He firstly married Margaret Cranston and secondly Euphane Wauchope of Niddrie Marshall, widow of John Edmondson of that Ilk. His children included; Walter of Littledean; and an illegitimate son James, who in 1604 held the teinds of Rutherford, Maxton and Littledean. His will from 1573 is recorded in Edinburgh. Sir Andrew of Caverton (d.bef. 1564) son of Sir Walter of Cessford. He was the heir to the Cessford titles and estates, but died before his father, and his brother William succeeded. He was one of the men named in 1552 for their involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1562 he and his father (on behalf of their whole band) promised not to enter Ancrum. Also in 1562 he was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Additionally he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1562. He may be the ‘Andro Ker of Hietoune’ (i.e. Heiton) who is mentioned as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kers. In 1556 he was contracted to marry Elizabeth, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, but the marriage does not appear to have happened. He had 2 daughters (perhaps illegitimately), Grisel and Bessie, to whom his mother, Dame Isobel, served as ‘tutrix’ after his death. Andrew of Graden (16th C.) perhaps son of the earlier Andrew of Graden. He was named in 1590 along with ‘Gib Elliot son to Robin’, 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall in the previous year. He is recorded as ‘Andrew Karr alias the tutor of Gradoun reset by Robine Elliot’ (suggesting he was already declared a fugitive). It is unclear how he was related to other Kers of Graden. He is probably the ‘Andrew Carr Robin Elliot’s man’ recorded in a separate case in 1590 when a group of Ellots and others were accused of stealing from the ‘Hewrde’ family, as well as maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’. Andrew of Newhall (16th/17th C.) probably son of Robert. His tutor was James Ormiston of that Ilk. He is recorded in 1591/2 when Sir Robert, younger of Cessford, was cautioner for a complaint against him by tenants in Langnewton. This seems to have been part of a long-running feud. In 1592 he was released from Blackness Castle, with Sir Robert promising to presented him to the court if requested; his brothers Robert and James are also mentioned being exiled. In 1595 Sir Robert was declared a rebel for failing to present him and the Earl of Morton continued to complain that there was no promise made to stop harassing his tenants in Longnewton. Andrew of Yair (16th/17th C.) son of William. He was succeeded by William and had other sons Andrew, Robert and Thomas. He was recorded in a transaction in Selkirk in 1582, involving James in Yair and others. Also in 1582 he warned James to accept redemption money from him for annual rents. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591/2 his cautioner was George Pringle of Blindlee that he would keep the peace. In 1602 there was a letter against him and his sons William (his heir), Andrew, Robert and Thomas telling him not to encroach on Selkirk Common. Also in 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1607 he was ‘bailie in that part’ when he gave sasine for Broadmeadows. He was involved in a dispute over lands with the Burgh of Selkirk according to documents of the period 1611–15. The 1611 ‘Letter of Lawburrows’ from James orders him and his ‘men of Yair’ (many of whom are listed) to stop molesting the inhabitants of Selkirk; his sons Robert, Mark and John are also named. In 1612 another letter with the King’s seal suggests that Selkirk should refrain from riding the marches and he should refrain from pasturing animals on Selkirk Common. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He married Margaret Ker of Faldonside and had at least 4 sons and 6 daughters. Sir Andrew of Greenhead and Primside (d.bef. 1617) possibly son of Gilbert and grandson of the earlier Andrew of Greenhead and Primside. He was ‘Dand’ in 1576 when he and his father Gilbert of Primsideloch signed a ‘bond of manrent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He is recorded in 1586 when he was surety for John Rutherford of Hunthill and vice versa, the penalty being the large sum of £10,000; he was also surety for William Kerr of Ancrum and he was later denounced as a rebel for not appearing. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council; his brother Walter of Lochtour was also listed. He is probably the Laird of Greenhead listed among Borderers who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1593 John of ‘Lumphoy’ was cautioner for him not to reset associates of the Earl of Bothwell. He was denounced in 1597, along with Walter Scott of Todrig and Robert Scott of Bowhill, for not restoring teind sheaves to Mr. James Durham. He was juror on a retour in 1600. He was knighted in 1602 and served as Deputy Warden of the Middle March 1597–1602. In 1602 he was appointed ‘warden and justice of the Middle March’ during the absence of Robert, Lord of Roxburgh. Also in 1602 he was surety for Archibald, Bailie to Lord Roxburgh, and his son George, to answer for a murder. He married Alison, daughter of Gilbert Wauchope of Niddrie Marshall and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Gilbert of Lochtour may have been his 2nd son and William of Greenhead may have been an illegitimate son who was naturalised in 1622. His daughter Alison married Ralph Ker of Dalcove. He was said to have had 7 sons, known as the ‘seven lads of Greenhead’. Andrew (16th/17th C.) brother of the ‘goodman of Qulytemure’ in 1618 when he was among men of the Selkirk area accused of illegally carrying guns. His brother was presumably tenant in Whitemuir. Andrew (16th/17th C.) served as Chamberlain to the Scots of Buccleuch in the period 1625–27. It is unclear whether he is one of the other contemporary Andrews. Andrew of Graden (17th C.) after the Battle of Philiphaugh in 1645 he spent 7 Sundays in sackcloth at his parish church as punishment for supporting the wrong side. In 1648 he in the army of the Engagement under Hamilton, with his sons Henry and Andrew. His sons included: Henry; and Andrew. Andrew of Linton (d.bef. 1688) son of Andrew of Linton, as recorded in a receipt of 1625. As a Kirk Elder, he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce the National Covenant in 1638. He was recorded in the Roxburghshire Valuation Roll for 1643; his valuation was £2043 6s 8d, and that of Lady Linton £1620. He was recorded as grantee in a deed of 1663 and as granter in another of 1673. He was probably succeeded by Henry (likely his son) who was recorded in the valuation of 1678. He married Elizabeth Home, recorded in a deed of 1673, who was a widow in her testament of 1688. Their children included: Henry, who succeeded; Jean, who married Sir James Cockburn of Ryslaw; William, ‘son of the Laird of Lintoum’, recorded in a deed of 1663; and George. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Oakwood. Along with Robert Nelson in the same place and Robert Harvey in Broadmeadows, he was fined for non-conformity and forced to flee. This was probably around the 1670s. Sir Andrew of Cavers (1630–76) eldest son of Sir Thomas. He was ‘fiar thairof’ listed after his father in 1648 among the local men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He was probably the Andrew, son of Sir Thomas, who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1649 and probably the Andrew ‘fiar of Caveris’ who witnessed a contract relating to Appotside in 1654. He succeeded to the lands of Bedrule, as well as others, having a deed under the Great Seal in 1649. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace in 1663. He was still ‘fiar of Cavers’ in a deed of 1663. His lands were confirmed by Parliament in 1672 and included the Barony of Bedrule, as well as Ruecastle, Manslaws and others. He allowed Thomas Turnbull, chief of the Bedrule Turnbulls to stay at Bedrule Mill and part of the Mains until he found another home. However, he himself died without a male heir and the lands and titles reverted back to his father in 1678, before he was succeeded by his cousin John of West Nisbet. In 1652 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie, and she died in 1661. The marriage contract gave his wife ‘ane annual rent of 3000 merks furthe of the barony of Bedroull, tennandrie of Caverse, Milrig, and Peilquarters, Belches, Woodenis, and Pendicle Hill’. They had 4 daughters: Agnes, who married her cousin John Ker of West Nisbet; Anna, who married Mr. Murray of Deuchar; Margaret, who married Matthew Sinclair of Hermandston; and Jean, who married Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. In 1689 his daughters were served as heirs to him, his father Thomas and his son Thomas. Andrew of Wells (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He was brother of Lord John of Locktour and owned lands in Rulewater, including Wells. He witnessed a baptism for Henry of Linton in 1671. He paid the land tax in 1678 for Huntknow in Bedrule Parish, valued at £66 13s 4d, as well as land valued at and £409 in Hobkir Parish; he may also be ‘The walls’ who paid tax on £214 10s in Cavers Parish in the same year. In 1698 his lands were inherited by his daughter Joan and her husband John Murray of Ashiestiel and later owned by Thomas Rutherford of Wells. Sir Andrew of Greenhead (d.1665) served heir to his father Sir Andrew of Greenhead in 1617, he was created a Baronet in 1637. In 1612, when ‘younger of Grenelheid’, he and his brother Thomas, were among a group of 60 or so men accused of aggressively coming to the lands of Hartwoodmyres. His lands in Selkirk are mentioned in 1629. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the ‘Confessions of Faith’. He defended Smallholm Tower against a band of English musketeers in 1640. In 1641 he was a Commissioner for maintaining peace on the Border and was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He owned land in Bowden, Kelso, Selkirk, Sprouston and Yetholm Parishes in 1643. In 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He was also an M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1645 and 1648/9. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Amandale. In 1649 he was on the Commission for the plantation of kirks. He supported the Covenant and was imprisoned in Edinburgh and fined in 1662 after the Restoration. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’: this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1658 he was one of 2 commissioners sent by 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire to oppose payment requested from the county. Also in 1658 he was recorded in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk over rent. In 1660 he was imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle with Pringle of Greenknowe, presumably for their religious views and he was heavily fined. In 1661 he sold the lands of Thirlestane, as well as Heiton Mains and Mill to James, brother of Sir William Scott of Harden. He owned a large amount of land in Kelso Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1664 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden and in 1664 he married Katherine, widow of David Carnegie of Craig, daughter of John, 1st Earl of Wemyss; in 1684 she was fined £16,000 for refusing to yield ot Episcopaliam. His children included: Sir Andrew, who succeeded; Sir William, who succeeded his brother; and Gilbert, recorded in a deed of 1673. Sir Andrew of Greenhead (d.bef. 1676) son of Sir Andrew of Greenhead. He was Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1658/9 and 1669–74. In about 1675 he took part in the funeral procession of Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburghe. He appears to have had a marriage contract with Mary, Countess of Buccleuch (while she was only about 12), but this did not go ahead. He married Jean, daughter of Sir Alexander Don, 1st Baronet of Newton, and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1669); Andrew (b.1673); Jean (b.1673); and Jean (again, b.1674). However, he died without a surviving heir and was succeeded by his brother Sir William. The witnesses in 1673 birth were William and Gilbert, probably his brothers. After his death his widow married Sir Roger Hogg of Harcarse. Andrew of Littledean (17th C.) son of John of Littledean. He married a daughter of Sir James Dundas of Arniston, Governor of Berwick. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded; John of Blackburn in Berwickshire; and Mark of Blackburn. Andrew (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Henry of Linton. His father sold off most of the family estates in 1699. However, he may have been left a small part of the off family lands by his father. He is probably who was meant by ‘Lintons interest younger’ in the Hearth Tax rolls of the 1690s, with 12 houses listed below that. He was a grenadier and married Mary Culpeper. Andrew of Littledean (17th/18th C.) son of Andrew. In 1666 he married Isabel, daughter of John Ruthereford of Edgerston. Around 1673 he registered arms. He was a Commissioner of Supply in 1704. He was succeeded by his son Walter. Andrew of Roughleeneuk (d.bef. 1731) recorded as deceased in 1731 when his son Robert signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. Andrew (18th C.) married Jane Clapperton in Hawick in 1771. Their children included Andrew (b.1773). Andrew (b.c.1775) joiner in Minto. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was recorded in a directory of 1852. His wife was ‘Effy’ according to the 1841 census. He was probably the Andrew who married Elspeth Turnbull and had children Thomas (b.1810), Mary (b.1810) and Elphine (b.1814). Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Chaise driver’ in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those ‘in the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. Andrew (18th/19th C.) wright at Bonchester Bridgend according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Laidlaw in Wilton in 1804. Their children included Margaret (b.1805), Jeany (b.1807) and Andrew (b.1811). Ann (b.1801/2) from Jedburgh, she was wife of grocer Gideon. She ran the grocer’s show on the Fore Row after her husband’s death. She is listed in the 1851 census as ‘mistress employing one woman’ (her niece Margaret Story) and in Slater’s 1852 directory as a grocer and spirit dealer on ‘Front Row’. Archibald of Gradan (17th/18th C.) perhaps son of Henry. He married Helenor, daughter of Sir James St. Clair of Roslin. His children include: Henry (b.1698). Catherine (16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford. She married Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, who died in about 1562. In 1564 she complained to the Privy Council that officers of the Queen had removed her teind sheaves from Over Crailing. She produced a document from Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh, granting her these teinds for 5 years. She also argued with her son Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst over her rights to these teinds. She is referred to as ‘Dame Kathrene Ker, Lady Pharnyhirst’ and signed ‘with my hand at the pen’. In 1566 her son Sir Thomas was ordered not to molest her or her other children and servants. George of Samuelston (15th C.) possibly son of Andrew of Cessford. In 1451 William, Earl of Douglas granted him a charter of Huttonhall, along with his 3 natural sons. He received a pension in 1477 for serving as Keeper of Berwick Castle. He firstly married Elizabeth Carmichael and secondly married Marion Sinclair, widow of George Home of Wedderburn. His children were: George, who married Mariona St. Clair and died without issue; and Nichola, who became his heiress and married Alexander, Lord Home. George (15th/16th C.) Rector of Auld Roxburgh. He was let the farm of Fairnilee in 1501, his name appearing as ‘Master George’. James, son of his late brother, was also joint tenant of Fairnilee. He is probably the ‘Maistir George Ker’ who was among the men to whom whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Buccleuch, had to give in his accounts in 1506/7 (the others including Ralph of Primside Loch). He could be the ‘Master George’ who was listed (along with Lawrence and his brother George) being indicted for oppressing the tenants of Handalee. He is probably the Rector of Morebattle and Prebendary of Glasgow who appointed Thomas Ker as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1514, and is recorded in many documents in the 1510s and 20s, preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. In 1523 he married Isabel, daughter of Lancelot Ker and his testament is recorded that same year. George of Linton (15th/16th C.) son of James of Linton. In 1509 he was son of the deceased James when he had sasine for lands in Linton. In 1514 he was son of the deceased James of Linton when he appointed Master Thomas, Canon of Glasgow (and perhaps a relative) as his procurator. In 1517 he had a deed with Robert of Sunderlandhall. His brother german Robert is recorded in 1524. Either the same or a later George of Linton is recorded several times in the Protocol Books of Selkirk in 1535–40; his son and heir James is also mentioned. He appears to be separate from the George who was Canon of Glasgow, Vicar of Morebattle and Rector of Auld Roxburgh. In 1525 he was recorded as tutor to the children of his deceased uncle, John Liddell (and John’s wife Margaret Whitehead). In 1529/30 a group of Elliots and Armstrongs pledged to bring Robert Elliot ‘alias Flaskvod’ into ward in Fairnilee to answer for raids and other crimes perpetrated against him. The witnesses to the pledge included Martin in Littledean, George in Falside and Andrew in Greenhead. In 1530/1 he was witness to Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. In 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In 1531 he witnessed a document for Thomas in Yair and another for David Pringle of Smallholm in 1532. In 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. He may be the same as George of Linton who was accused (along with Walter of Cessford and Mark of Littledean) by Sir Walter Scott of raiding his lands at Newark and in the Borthwick valley, and also of burning Cunzierton and killing two Halls in 1537. George of Linton’s son and heir James was granted lands in Primside by Walter of Cessford in 1537. In 1538/9 he infefted his brother Robert in the lands of Easter Blakelaw. In 1539 George, son of Robert in Crooked Shaw (perhaps his brother) served as his bailie. In 1539/40 he witnessed a transaction for the Kers of Primside and Shaws. In 1540 he witnessed William Brydon resigning the Vicarage of Auld Roxburgh in favour of Thomas, with with witnesses including Gilbert of Primside, Thomas in Sunderlandhall and Andrew in Auld Roxburgh. In 1541 he was tenant of Fairnilee in Ettrick. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Borthwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. He is probably the Laird of Linton who was among those locals giving their pledges to England in 1544. He was witness to a bond of assurance in 1545. In 1546 he gave to his son and heir James some lands in Linton. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He was one of the men indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of

Ker

Ker Ker was ‘George Ker of Gaitschaw’ when he signed to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1547/8. He in the burning of lands in Ale Water belonging (d.bef. 1566) son of Lancelot. He succeeded to his father’s lands in Selkirk in 1544 and then sold them. In 1544 he was ‘of Gaitschaw now living in Fastheucht’. Also in 1544 he was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English. In 1545 he was ‘of Gaitschaw (d.1560) 2nd son of Ralph of Primside. He was a nephew of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst and cousin of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was the 1st Ker of Cavers Carre, being granted the lands by the Commendator of Melrose and Kelso Abbeys in 1550 (probably his near relatives). He married Margaret Shaw of Sauchie. He was probably succeeded by his grandson Andrew of Linton. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married James Pringle of Whytbank. He had additional sons, including David (d.1582), who was killed by one of the Kers of Littledean. George of Nether Howden and Cavers (d.c.1560) 1st son of Ralph of Primside. He was a candidate for Professor of Philosophy in Edinburgh in 1611. George of Faldonside (d.1612) son of Andrew of Linton and brother of William (who may have died before their father). He may be the George of Linton village who was recorded as a main actor in a performance of the folkloric ‘Robin Hood’ in 1580/1 when he sold some land near Melrose. George (16th C.) servant to the Warden, Sir Walter of Cessford. In 1581/2 he responded when Walter Scott came to Hermitage, on the track of a band that had raided Harwood on Teviot. Along with another servant and tracking dog, they followed the trail, but found too large a group of Elliots, who would not let them search for the stolen goods. George of Linton (16th/17th C.) probably son of Andrew of Linton and brother of William (who may have died before their father). He may be the George of Linton who in 1610. He may be the George in Linton who in 1615 was sought for the murder of Robert, son of Thomas of Priorhall. His children included: William, who probably succeeded; and Jean, who married James Pringle of Galashiel. He may also be the Laird of Linton whose son James was a candidate for Professor of Philosophy in Edinburgh in 1611. George of Faldonside (d.1612) son of Andrew. He is recorded along with his father in 1598 in a bond not to harm certain neighbours. In the same year he was cautioner for Robert Haig of Bemersyde not to harm Ralph of Shaw and his brother Walter had a bond not to harm the Halliburtons, while the Halliburtons had a bond not to harm him or his 4 brothers. In 1599 there were assurances for him and his brother Walter not to harm James Stalker, writer in Edinburgh, and vice versa. He Branxholme in 1552. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was also listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He and ‘his bairnis, his oyis and bruder bairnis’ were listed in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He may be the George of Linton listed in 1575/6 and 1578/9 regarding the ‘mails’ on Fairnilee (but if this was the same George, he must have lived to be very old). His son Robert witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1580 and Andrew of Linton (probably his grandson) was also mentioned then. He was predeceased by his son James and probably succeeded by his grandson Andrew of Linton. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married James Pringle of Whytbank. He had additional sons, including David (d.1582), who was killed by one of the Kers of Littledean. George of Nether Howden and Cavers (d.c.1560) 2nd son of Ralph of Primside. He was a nephew of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst and cousin of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was the 1st Ker of Cavers Carre, being granted the lands by the Commendator of Melrose and Kelso Abbeys in 1550 (probably his near relatives). He married Margaret Shaw of Sauchie. He was probably succeeded by Thomas, then George, then Sir Thomas, although these generations are uncertain. It is also unclear how his surname should be spelled. He could be the ‘Master George’ who 1541 was offered (along with his brother William) by Sir Andrew (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. His brother John was recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1555. He may be the ‘master George Ker in Cavers’ recorded in a document for Sir Walter of Cessford in 1561. He is probably the George of Cavers who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. George of Gateshaw (d.bef. 1566) son of Lancelot. He succeeded to his father’s lands in Selkirk in 1544 and then sold them. In 1544 he was ‘of Gaitschaw now living in Fastheucht’. Also in 1544 he was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English. In 1545 he witnessed a sasine giving part of the lands of James Riddell (younger son of John of that Ilk) to his wife Janet Ker (who may have been related). He was one of the Kers who was involved in the burning of lands in Ale Water belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1547/8. He was ‘George Ker of Gaitschaw’ when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft (listed separately from George of Linton, showing that they were different men). In 1564 his brother Richard was one of the Kers who signed a bond with the Scotts, pledging not to attack each other. He was part of a contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1569. He married Janet Edmondson and was probably succeeded by Richard, his brother. George of Faldonside (d.1553) son of Sir Robert of Caverton. He is recorded as advisor to Sir Walter of Cessford, his nephew. He was already deceased in 1563 when his son John leased his lands of Herniston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Halliburton, co-heiress of Dirleton. His children included: Sir Andrew, who succeeded; Margaret, who married Robert Haig of Bemersyde; Richard; John, recorded in 1586/7 as brother of Andrew; and Isabel. George (16th C.) recorded as ‘sometime tutor of Gradane’ in 1580/1 when he sold some land near Melrose. George (16th C.) servant to the Warden, Sir Walter of Cessford. In 1581/2 he responded when Walter Scott came to Hermitage, on the track of a band that had raided Harwood on Teviot. Along with another servant and tracking dog, they followed the trail, but found too large a group of Elliots, who would not let them search for the stolen goods. George of Linton (16th/17th C.) probably son of Andrew of Linton and brother of William (who may have died before their father). He may be the George of Linton village who was recorded as a main actor in a performance of the folkloric ‘Robin Hood’ in 1610. He may be the George in Linton who in 1615 was sought for the murder of Robert, son of Thomas of Priorhall. may have been father of Sir Walter, last of Faldonside. George of Cavers (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Cavers. He was recorded as son and heir of Thomas when he was signatory to a caution for the good behaviour of James Scott of Whithope in 1592. He signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds as ‘appeirand of Caveris’ in 1602. He is probably the ‘son and apparent heir’ recorded in 1603 as surety in relief for Thomas of Cavers. He is recorded as ‘apparent of Cavers’ in 1618 when he became cautioner for William and Walter Middlemas, not to harm George Turnbull of Belses or his family or servants. Also in 1618 he was cautioner for his brother Robert not to harm John Ker of Langnewton. He was ‘fiar of Cavers’ in 1622 when he served as caution at the Justice Court and was ‘of Cavers’ when he served in the same capacity in 1623. In 1622 he was still heir apparent when appointed to assist Sir Andrew of Oxnam in keeping peace on the Border. He may not have lived long enough to succeed formally.

In any case, his son Sir Thomas was served heir to his grandfather Thomas. Other sons included: John, who acquired West Nisbet; and Robert, who acquired Middlemas Walls. His son John may be the ‘brother to Caivers’ who in 1628/9 acquired Middlemas Walls. His son John in 1564/5. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thorlshope with the Regent Moray. In 1569 he was one of the men to sign the bond to suppress thieves in the Border. Also in 1569, Sir Walter of Cessford was surety for him. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. He was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for a bond of the late William Douglas of Cavers; other sureties were his son and heir Andrew, as well as the deceased William Ker of Yair. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for Braidmeadows and Middleside. In 1576 he and his son ‘Dand’ had a ‘bond of manrent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. His son Robert was recorded in 1581, promising to pay the minister of Selkirk. He received money for lands in Selkirk in 1581/2. In 1582/3 there was caution for him not attacking the tenants of James, Commendator of Melrose and others, with James Veitch of North Synton and John, younger of Littledean as his cautioners. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4, along with his son Andrew. He is probably the Gilbert of Greenhead listed as a servitor of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch when he witnessed a document in Edinburgh in 1591. He may be the ‘George Karr of Prunyside myll’ who was accused in 1590 of resetting riever Peter Oliver. He married Elizabeth Edmondson of that Ilk and his children included: Sir Andrew, who succeeded; and Katherine, who married Andrew Ker of Linton. Other children may have included: Ralph of Broadmeadows; James of Middlemass Walls; Walter of Town Yetholm; and John of Raperlaw. A younger son of his was said to be Lancelot of Gateshaw and Crookedshaws (but this is disputed). Gilbert of Lochtour (d.c.1635) possibly 2nd son of Andrew Ker of Primsideloch and Greenhead. He presumably received Lochtour (part of the estate of Primsideloch) from his father. He was listed as juror on a return in 1600. He was appointed as one of the 2 executors to Gavin Elliott of Stobs, who died 1606/7. He married Gavin’s daughter Esther; his wife was one of the 3 heirs portioners to Stobs in 1607 and sold the lands to Gilbert Elliott (‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’), her half-brother. He sold Baillielee to the same Gilbert Elliott in 1609 and in 1628 he sold him ‘Moiddlestide and Blackmidding’ in Ettrick Forest, with the permission of his wife Esther Elliot and his son and heir John. In 1611 he and his son Robert had a charter of Town Yetholm. In 1612 Robert Scott of Hartwoodnyres complained that he and other Kers (including his brothers William and John) and others had ‘rave up and tillt over agane’ the fields and attacked the house at Hartwoodnyres; however, he was acquitted for lack of evidence. In 1622 he had a bond of caution with Robert Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was in a legal dispute with the Minister of Yetholm over teinds in 1623. Also in 1623 he was a curator for his grand-nephew James Kerr of Chatto. His children included: Robert, younger of Lochtour (d.1624); John, who succeeded; William, called ‘Mr.’ in 1616, suggesting he may have trained for the ministry; and Mark, recorded in 1616. Gilbert of Lochtour (d.1666) son of Sir John of Lochtour. He was heavily in debt when he succeeded. In 1651 he made an agreement to ell his estate to Sir John Wauchope (his mother’s 2nd husband), this being finalised in 1661. He married Jean, sister of Inglis of Elvieston and had children John and Rachel. Gilbert (17th C.) son of Sir Andrew of Greenhead and brother of Sir William. In Edinburgh in 1684 he married Sophia, daughter of Henry Ker of Linton. Henry (d.bef. 1399) son of John. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1349. In about 1358 he witnessed a grant of the lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch to Melrose Abbey, by William, Earl of Douglas. He was collector of the contributions from the Sheriffdom of Roxburgh in the Exchequer Rolls from 1360. He is probably the ‘Henrico Kerre’ who witnessed the confirmation of the grant of the advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey by William, Earl of Douglas, in about 1360. He had a document for safe passage into England in 1363. His wife was Elizabeth St. Michael; after his death she resigned her lands of Whitchester (in Hawick Parish) to be granted to her second husband, Sir John Maxwell of Pollock. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert of Altonburn. Henry ‘Harry’ (d.1642/3) only surviving son of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburgh. He is probably the ‘Henrie, Lord Ker’ named in 1642 to a commission to try a large number of Borders fugitives. Since he died before his father and had no sons, the succession went to his sister’s husband, William Drummond. He married Margaret, daughter of William Hay, 10th Earl of Erroll. His daughter Margaret married Sir James Innes and his great-great-grandson, Sir James Innes-Ker would later become 5th Duke of Roxburghie. Another daughter, Anna, married John, Lord Fleming. Col. Henry of Graden (17th C.) son of Andrew. He was ‘Captain Harrie’ in 1648, when he fought alongside his father.

and brother ‘Coronet Andrew’. He was a J.P. in Roxburghshire and persecuted Covenanters in the ‘Killing Times’, assisting Adam Urquhart, Laird of Meldrum. He is probably the man recorded as ‘Harrie, sir of Graden’ in 2 deeds of 1663. He captured the Covenanters Archibald Riddell and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe near Selkirk in 1680. In 1688 part of his estate was claimed by Pringle of Crichton through wadset. He resettled the family across the valley at Wester Hoselaw, which was renamed Place-Graden or New Graden (and which the family had owned since 1528). He married Lilias, daughter of John Rutherford of Hunthill and sister of Robert, Lord Rutherford. His children included: Archibald. Henry of Linton (17th C.) probably son of Andrew. In 1674 he sold parts of Linton (including the Park) to Robert Pringle of Clifton; he sold much of the rest of Linton to Andrew Pringle of Clifton in 1699 (although bequeathing a small part to his children). In about 1675 he carried the ‘great Mourning banner’ at the funeral of Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburghe. In 1678 he paid £1132 6s 8d on land tax in Linton Parish and is in the Roxburghshire Valuation records with the value £1431 6s 8d (which is considerably less than the value in 1643). His wife ‘The Ladie Lintoun’ was taxed for the teinds of Hadden in Sprouston Parish in 1678. He is probably the ‘Lintone Elder’ who paid the hearth tax on ‘his hous & offices houses & tuo kilnes’, for 8 hearths in all in the 1690s. He married Margaret, daughter and heiress of David Home of Harcarse. Their children included: Andrew, who succeeded and married Mary Culpeper; Christian, who married John Kerr of Froagden; Elizabeth, who married James Scott of Bowhill; Henry; James; Janet; Julian, who married Francis Armstrong of Whithaugh; Mary, who married Robert Scott, tenant in Park in Liddesdale; Sophia, who married Gilbert, brother to Sir William of Greenhead; and William (b.1671). The 1671 baptismal witnesses were William, Earl of Roxburghe, Andrew of Wells and Robert Pringle of Clifton. Henry of Graden (1698–1751) son of Archibald. He lost his father when he was young, was raised as a Catholic and was sent into the Spanish Service. In 1728 he moved to the Irish Regiment. He was part of the court proceedings for the succession of the Ruthfords in 1738 as ‘grand-nephew and heir of line to the last Lord Ruthferd’. He took up arms again in 1745 as one of the few Border Lairds who joined the Jacobite army. He acted as Aide-de-Camp to Prince Charlie. In Staffordshire he captured the spy Captain Weir. He was captured and spent 2 years in prison in London; although sentenced to death, he was eventually pardoned and spent his last years soldiers in Spain again. Isabella (16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, she married Sir William of Cessford. She was granted certain lands in her own right. She may be the ‘DEM ISBEL KER’ recorded in an inscribed door lintel at Holydean. In 1563 she complained that Thomas and John Young were occupying her quarter of Hassendeanbank without paying ‘mail ferme’. Her children included Sir Andrew (who succeeded to Cessford), William (who succeeded his brother), Thomas, Agnes, Isobel (who married John Rutherford of Hunthill) and Margaret (who married Alexander, 5th Lord Home). She also served as ‘tutrix’ for her grandchildren Grisel and Bessie. Isabella (d.1650) daughter of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburghe and brother of William, Master of Roxburghe. She married James Scrymgeour, 2nd Viscount of Dudhope. In 1634 she was served heir to one third of her brother William’s lands, including part of Alton near Hawick. Her sister Maria was served heir to a third part of the lands at the same time. James (15th C.) witness, along with several other local men, to the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1427; no designation is given, so it is unclear what family branch he belonged to, but he could have been related to Andrew, who was on the same panel. Probably the same James was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. He may be the same ‘Jacobum Ker’ who was on the ‘retour’ for the next Douglas of Drumlanrig to inherit the Barony of Hawick in 1450. James (15th C.) son of Andrew and brother of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. He had a charter of Primside in 1444 and a charter for Bonnington in Linlithgow county in 1452. In 1456 he and his brother Andrew were involved with collecting rents on the King’s lands in Ettrick Forest. He could be the James who gave consent to his son’s entry for a debt to the Ranger of Ettrick Ward in 1471. It is possible he is the same man as James of Linton. James of Gateshaw (15th C.) perhaps son of Thomas. In 1471/2 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Margaret and John Home of Ersiltoun, Whitrig and Crailling. He may have succeeded by Andrew. James of Linton (d.bef. 1509) 2nd son of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. His father was probably the Andrew of Altonburn who died before 1450, but it is possible he was son of the next Andrew (who died in about 1480). He was probably the first Ker of Linton, although it is unclear exactly when he gained the lands and from whom (although the lands were held by Thomas, Lord Somerville in 1426). In 1452 he appears to be recorded being brother of Andrew of Altonburn when the King granted him lands in Bonnington. He served as surety for some Border thieves in 1502, including the sons of William Elliot, known as ‘Hob the King’ and ‘Dand the Man’. He was also surety in 1502 for a man who had remission for a murder in Selkirk. He was succeeded by George, who is recorded as his son in 1509 and 1514. Robert of Crookedshaws may have been another son. His son George was tutor (in 1525) for George’s uncle John Liddell; this suggests his wife was a Liddell. James (16th C.) recorded in Whitmuir in 1531 when he witnessed an agreement between Scots and Veitches regarding Synton. William in Whitmuirhall was also recorded in 1531 and may have been related. In 1541 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Patrick Murray of Falahill. In 1542 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Robert, Vicar of Lindean. He was probably an ancestor of the later James in Whitmuir. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Borthwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. He may have been succeeded by a later James of Whitmuir. James of Mersington (16th C.) probably son of Thomas. He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1534 when he proclaimed a letter of obligation to the Kers in Shaw. His procurator, Thomas McDouglas went to ‘the tower of St Helyne Schaw’, pounded on the door and 3 times repeated the promises (which are not specified). In 1541 he was involved in a dispute over lands with Alexander Pringle of ‘Craglethe’. He is also listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Ironically the same James of Mersington was one of the cautioners for Sir Walter when he was in ward within Edinburgh Castle in 1540/1. He was a juror on retours in 1550 and 1551. He married Janet Wauchope and had at least 6 sons and 1 daughter. His son and heir Thomas is recorded in 1557 and 1561. James of Fairnilee (16th C.) recorded in 1534 when he was witness to a letter of obligation between James of Mersington and the Kers in Shaw. In 1535 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Ruthersfords and Homes. In 1540 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Linton and of Whitmuirhall and another for the Pringles of Whitton. James (16th C.) recorded in Greenhead in 1539 when he witnessed a document for William, Rector of Auld Roxburgh. He is probably related to the other Kers of Greenhead, e.g. Gilbert of Primside, who was also a witness. James (16th C.) presented to the Vicarage of Ashkirk in 1550. He may have been Vicar at Linton in 1569. James (16th C.) son and heir of George of Linton. He had a charter as heir apparent of his father in 1537. However, he appears to have predeceased his father and his son Andrew succeeded to the Lairdship. James of Whitmuir (16th C.) perhaps son of the earlier James. He is recorded in the 1560 bond between the Kers and the Ruthergords. He signed ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he could not write himself. His lands appear to have been in Sprouston and not those near Selkirk. Perhaps the same James in ‘Qhitmuir’ witnessed a transactions for other Kers in Selkirk in 1581 and 1582. He could be the ‘Goodman of Qhuitmuru’ who in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. His son Ralph inherited the lands of Whitmuir in Sprouston Parish from him in 1603. James (16th C.) son of Thomas in Yair. He is recorded being in Yair in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for the Turnbulls of Philiphaugh. In 1581 he received redemption money for an annual rent from Thomas of Sunderlandhall. Also in 1581 he had sasine for Catslack and Mountbenger. In 1582 he had a dispute with a messenger acting for Andrew of Yair. Also in 1582 he is recorded as lawful son of the deceased Thomas in Yair and brother of Robert when warned by Andrew of Yair to accept redemption money on his lands. He could be the James of Sunderlandhall recorded in a decree under the seal of Queen Mary, regarding a dispute over lands of Yair with the Burgh of Selkirk. James (16th C.) mentioned as Keeper of Hermitage Castle (under the Earl of Bothwell) in 1583. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (16th C.) accused of leading a group to the lands of James Sinclair in Ewingston, where oxen were killed and 4 horses stolen. In 1586/7 Sinclair complained that the horses had been reset by John Scott of the Palace, servant to George Scott of Synton, with Scott of Synton declared as a rebel for not appearing in court. James of Lintalee (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Ralph. He is recorded in 1586 when Dand Moscrop was his surety to appear before the Privy Council and was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He was listed in about 1590 among the landed men of the Borders. He was among Kers and others, dependents of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who in 1601 besieged and burned a house in Jedburgh, and were declared as rebels; his son William is also listed. He was juror in Oxnam in 1602. He was recorded as part of inquest into lands in Rulewater in 1610. In 1616 he was removed from Liutalee by William Douglas, Earl of Angus, with John Douglas made tenant there instead. His sons George and William and William’s son Thomas was recorded in the case heard by the Privy Council in 1617. Although he complained about unfair removal, it was found to be lawful. James of Bewlie (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622, along with his son Walter and his servants Andrew Turnbull, Thomas Leithead, John Wight and Robert Winthrope. There was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Rev. James of Grange (c.1601–1694) younger son of Sir John of Littledean and Margaret Whytlaw, Lady Innerwick. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1621 and was licensed to preach in 1623. He was presented to Abbotrule Parish in the middle of that year and ordained there in 1624. He was Laird of Grange in Abbotrule Parish, presumably being granted these lands by the Baron after becoming minister. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of land in Abbotrule Parish (presumably Grange) valued at £400. In 1646/7 he was one of the chaplains for Lord Lothian’s regiment. There was a complaint about his behaviour (along with John Scott of Hawick), at the admission of Andrew Rutherford as minister of Eccles. He was deprived in 1662 when Episcopacy was re-established, and confined to his Parish (rather than be ousted, like the younger ministers). In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 he paid tax on £433 6s 6d for lands in Abbotrule Parish. He was also offered Hownam Parish as his father. His wife (name not given) paid the land tax along with his father in Abbotrule Parish in 1678. He is probably the James of Grange who contributed £300 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1689 his eldest son John was served heir to his sisters Isobel and Elizabeth, in the lands of Grange. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as servant to the Laird of Whitslade in 1717. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Jean (b.1714), Andrew (b.1715) and Barbara (b.1717). James (1739/40–92) schoolmaster at Bedrule. He married Helen Turnbull, who died in Ancrum in 1812. Their daughter Jean died in in Lanton in 1803. They are buried in Bedrule cemetery. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Cairns (resident of Wiltonburn) in 1780. In 1777 he married Margaret (‘Peggy’) Cairns and their children included: Betty (b.1782); Walter (b.1785); Nelly (b.1789) and Betty (again, b.1792). An unnamed child (b.1779), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his. James (d.1794) gardener to Mr. Dickson, whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) cooper of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (b.1812/3) from Kelso, he was headmaster at Drumlanrig, the ‘Ragged Schuil’, from about 1860. He married Margaret Macgregor in Kelso in 1855. Their children included: Tom (b.1856), who became a great Hawick Common Riding supporter; Margaret Clark (b.1860); Agnes (b.1862); Mary (b.1864); Elizabeth (b.1866); William Macgregor (b.1868); and James (b.1870). Janet (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in 1502, along with James Elliot and John Lauder. The three had 7 cows stolen from them, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. Janet (b.c.1815) grocer and spirit dealer on the Kirkwynd. She is recorded there in 1841 with her infant children James and Alison. John ‘of the Forest of Selkirk’ (d.c.1630) the first known ancestor of the Kers of Cessford etc. He became the first Laird of Altonburn (or ‘Auldtonburn’), acquiring the lands from John ‘of Coupland’ in 1357/8, with witnesses including William of Gledstains, William ‘de Roule’ and Alexander of Flex, just 3 years after the lands had been passed from Adam of Rule. About the same time he witnessed a grant for lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. Robert Riddell of Riddell witnessed 2 charters to him in 1357 and 1358. He is probably the ‘John Kerre’ who was in 1363 granted custody of the Teviotdale lands of William Rutherford until William’s heir reached majority. He married Mariota (with unknown surname, but possibly daughter of John of Copeland) and was succeeded by her son Henry. John (15th C.) mentioned in the document of 1479 resigning the lands of Broadlee (in the Barony of Hawick) by Robert Turnbull to William Douglas of Drumlaurig. His name is recorded as ‘Johannem Ker’. Probably the same ‘Johanne Ker’ was witness to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick at the Mote in 1484. John (16th C.) son of George of Faldonside, and presumably therefore brother of Sir Andrew of Faldonside. In 1563 he leased his lands of Hermiston (in Lilliesleaf Parish) to 4 men. In 1586/7 he was ‘bruther to Andro Ker of Faudounsyde’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (16th C.) 2nd son of Thomas of Kippielaw. In 1581 he renounced his rights to lands in Bowden to his father and mother Elizabeth, while his father and mother assigned to him the Kirklands of Bewlie, with 2 acres at the east end of Lilliesleaf. John of Raperlaw (16th C.) younger son of Gilbert Ker of Primsideloch. He was servitor to Lord Glamis 1585–86. In 1586 he and his wife Janet Gib had a Crown charter for lands in Raperlaw and ‘West Bernis’ in Roxburghshire. John (16th/17th C.) younger son of George of Cavers and brother of Thomas of Cavers. He was a burgess of Edinburgh. In 1603 he and other burgesses of Edinburgh served as sureties that Thomas, after being freed from ward in Edinburgh Castle, would pay his fines or re-enter. John (16th/17th C.) servant to John Ker of Langnewton, recorded in 1621. He is listed as ‘Thomes Johnne’, so presumably his father was Thomas. Sir John of Littledean, the Hirsel and Jedburgh (d.bef. 1631) son of Walter of Littledean and grandson of Sir Andrew of the Hirsel. In the 1568/9 bond between the Kers and the Scotts he is named as the son and heir of Walter, and promised in marriage to Elizabeth Murray, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when ‘he beis of perfyte age, fourtene zeiris outrun”; however, the marriage does not appear to have taken place. He was still son and heir of Walter of Litledean in 1588 when he was cautioner for brothers of Cockburn of that Ilk. In 1589 he promised to appear before the Privy Council. In about 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1591 he and his brother Mark had a bond for not harming certain Homes. In 1593 there was a letter of ‘lawburrows’ against him, his father and brothers, brought by his ‘sometime spouse’ Juliane Home and members of her family, the Homes of Wedderburn, not to molest her in the liferent of Litledean. Also in 1593 there was an order for the Warden of the Marches and Sheriff of Roxburgh to apprehend him, since he was already excommunicated and denounced as a rebel, guilty of adultery and other crimes. A further complaint by the Homes of Wedderburn in 1593/4 accuses him of ‘double adultery’ for also enticing the wife of Hamilton of Innerwick to cohabit with him at Spylaw. In 1595 he was involved in a quarrel with Sir Robert of Cessford, who assaulted him in Edinburgh. He led a raid into England in 1597. In 1598 he had ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden declared a rebel for failure to pay him for profits coming from Borthwickshielis, ‘specified in a decree of removing’. In 1599 he tried to make Scott of Buccleuch answerable for Scott of Harden’s non-appearance, but this was unsupported by the courts, because it was a civil and not criminal matter. In 1600 Andrew of ‘Mylnerig’ was surety for him that he would keep the King’s peace. He may be the Sir John who signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. Also in 1602 he complained about Kers from the Morebattle area stealing livestock from his farms. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1605 and 1607. In 1608 he had a charter for the Baronies of Maxton, Linton and Town Yetholm. He was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire in 1610 and in 1618 was appointed by the King as one of the commissioners for keeping law and order in Ewesdale and the Debatable Land. In 1611 he exchanged the Hirsel for the lands of Jedburgh Abbey and in 1624 was granted all of the lands of the Lordship of Jedburgh that had been resigned by James, Earl of Home; he was thereafter known as Lord Jedburgh, although this was later disallowed on the basis that the title lay with the Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1619 he had charters for the Lordship of Jedburgh and the lands of Nisbet. In 1621 he complained about being banned from intercommuning with his son John of Langnewton and was given permission to meet with him as the parties tried to settle their differences. Also in 1621 there was an Act of Parliament forbidding him from using the Jedburgh title and in 1622 he lost it for good to Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1576 he married Juliane, 3rd daughter of David Home of Wedderburn, but she divorced him in 1589 and remarried James Hoppringle of Whitleaw. In 1589/90 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk (and divorced wife of Sir Alexander Hamilton of Innerwick); she died in torment in 1627 and was said to have practiced witchcraft. His relationship with the woman who became his 2nd wife was the reason for two divorces, and the legitimacy of progeny from this 2nd marriage would become part of the claim to the succession of the Dukes of Roxburgh made by Gen. Walter of Littledean more than 200 years later. His children with his first wife included: Sir Mark of Dolphin-} ton, who married Margaret, daughter of John Home of Cowdenknowes; Andrew (d.bef. 1618) whose 4 sisters of full blood were served as heirs portioner; Isobel, who married William Kerr of Linton; Agnes; and Christina. Children with his second wife were: John of Langnewton, who succeeded; William, who died without issue; Andrew of Morriston; James of Grange, who became minister at Abbotrule; possibly Robert, minister at Kelso and Linton; Alison, recorded in a discharge with Alexander, Earl of Home in 1611; and Esther, who married Sir Hugh Wallace of Craigie. John of Barnhill (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 as holder of the infeftment and sasine of Barnhill. He complained that ‘Dandie Davidson, pretended tenant of the said lands’ and a gang of Davidsions and Turnbulls harassed his tenants and pastured their animals there. He is probably the same as one of the other Johns. John of Lochtour (d.1644) son of Gilbert, he succeeded since his elder brother died before their father. In 1624 he was served heir to his brother in the lands of Town Yetholm, Cherrytrees and Hayhope. He married Janet, co-heiress of George Falside of Cothorpill. His children included: Sir John, who succeeded; Andrew, who had sasine of Town Yetholm in 1639; and Margaret, who married Rev. Robert Know of Kelso. John of Langnewton and Littledean (16th/17th C.) son of Sir John of Litteldean (16th/17th C.) possibly the same as one of the other Johns. John of Lochtour (17th C.) possibly a younger brother of Sir Andrew of Greenhead. He sat in Parliament for Selkirk 1617–30 and was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1649. Sir John of Lochtour (17th C.) son of John of Lochtour and grandson of Gilbert. He represented Roxburghshire in parliament in 1644 and his brother Sir Andrew was an M.P. in 1648. His sister Margaret married Robert Knox, minister of Kelso. Either he or his father signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of most of the lands in Yetholm Parish. In 1648 he was one of the men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He was knighted by Charles II in 1651, but died soon afterwards. He appears to have deeply in debt through most if his time as Laird of Lochtour. In 1640 he married Jean, daughter of Sir Thomas Kerr of Redden (and she later married Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie, who inherited most of his lands). His children included: Gilbert (who succeeded); Thomas of Hayhope (d.1673), killed at Crookham in Northumberland; William of Cherrytrees and Newton; Margaret, who married Richard Learmonth of Whytlawhoute; and Jean, who married William Bennet of Grubbet. John of Gateshaw (d.c.1654) 9th Laird. He was heir to his great-grandfather, Lancelot of Gateshaw. He was still a minor in 1635 when there was a marriage contract between him and ‘Cicill Ker, dochter naturall to ane noble erle, Robert, Erle of Roxburgh’. In 1644 he made a new indent of his lands to himself and his wife ‘in liferent’ and to his son Robert ‘in fee’. In 1645 he contributed supplies after the accidental burning of Kelso. He served as a Commissioner for War for Roxburghshire. His sons Robert, Andrew and Henry all featured in the funeral procession for the Countess of Roxburghe in 1675. John (17th C.) tenant in Middleknowes. He was witness to discharges for the teinds of Harwood and Appotside in 1655. For a further document of 1656, relating to the lands of Appotside, he was ‘baillie in that part’. John of West Nisbet (17th C.) son of George and brother of Sir Thomas of Cavers. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He married Jean, daughter of Sir James Kerr of Crailling, who became Lord Jedburgh. His son John married his cousin Agnes Ker of Cavers. John (17th C.) gardener in ‘Knows’ (probably Hassendean Knowe, since he is named right after men from Hassendean). He is on the huge list in 1684 of men declared fugitives for being Covenanters. John of Grange (17th/18th C.) son of James of Grange, and grandson of the minister of Abbotrule. In 1689 he was served heir to his father’s sisters Isobel and Elizabeth, in the annual rent totalling £88 (corresponding to 2200 merks) of the lands of Grange in Abbotrule Parish. It is unclear if the family continued its ties with Abbotrule after this. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for William Nixon in Hawick Parish in 1678. John of Cavers Carre (d.1737) eldest son of John of West Nisbet and Jane Kerr of Crailing. In 1684 he inherited the Cavers Carre lands and titles from his uncle Sir Thomas. This included the Barony of Bedrule and lands in the Rule valley as well as lands in Belses, Raperlaw, Rawflat, Pinnacle and Firth. He may have adopted the spelling ‘Carre’ after he succeeded. He is recorded in several local bonds in the late 1600s with the Elliots of Harwood, Stanedge and others. He was also served heir to his uncle Robert (through his mother’s side), Lord Jedburgh, in 1693. This included annual rents from Appletreehall, as well as many lands around Jedburgh. He married his cousin Agnes, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker. Their children included: Robert, whose son Thomas succeeded to Cavers Carre; John, who succeeded his nephew Thomas and probably married a daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of Riddell; James; and Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Don in 1705. He secondly married Miss Home, daughter of Lord Kinnerghame and their children included: George, who became Lord Nisbet. John of Gateshaw (17th/18th C.) son of Robert. He was 11th and last Laird, selling the estate to Sir William Scott of Ancrum in 1749. His eldest son Robert was also involved in the sale. John (c.1680–1741) 1st Duke of Roxburghe. He was a younger son of Robert, succeeding to the Earldom of Roxburghe on the death of his brother Robert in 1696. Among his possessions were those formerly held by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale, including the church lands of Lilliesleaf, the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk, plus the lands of Hassendeanbank, Capptirig and Alton near Hawick. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He became Secretary of State for Scotland in 1704. He helped bring about the union with England, and was created Duke in 1707 (the last Scottish peerage created) in relation to this. He was one of Scotland’s Representative Peers in Parliament 1707–10. He was also Keeper of the Privy Seal of Scotland and again Secretary of State for Scotland in the British Parliament. However, he opposed Walpole in Parliament and was dismissed from office. In 1727 he was one of the pall-bearers for Sir Isaac Newton’s coffin in 1727 and also served as Deputy High Constable of Scotland at the Coronation of George II. He had the teinds of Hassendeanbank from Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch in 1734, bought Cockerheugh from Walter Scott of Cockerheugh in 1737 and bought ‘Ladylands’ from Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1739. In 1745 he had the family valuables taken to Caverton Mill.

for safety while the army of Prince Charles passed through Kelso. He was succeeded by his only son Robert. John of Cavers Carre (d.1746) 2nd son of John of Cavers and Nisbet and Agnes Ker. He was an advocate. In 1742 he succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate after the death of his nephew Thomas. He paid the window tax in Bowden Parish in 1748. He may have used the spelling ‘Carre’ for his surname. He married Elizabeth Monteith, heiress of Fox Hall. His children were: John, who succeeded; Robert, Captain in the Navy; Stair Campell, army Captain; and Agnes. All of his children except John died unmarried. John Strother of Littledean (d.1779) son of Walter, who he succeeded in 1739. In 1746 he married Marion, daughter of James Pringle of Torwoodlee. He secondly married Jean, daughter of Harry Maule of Kelrie and widow of George, Lord Ramsay; she died in 1779. He thirdly married Frances, daughter of James Dean of Woodhouselee, widow of William Wishart (Principal of Edinburgh University) and of Dr. John Scott of Stewartfield. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Walter. John (d.1766) eldest son of John of Cavers, whom he succeeded to the estates of Cavers Carre and Hundalee. He paid the window tax in 1753. He and his son John were recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jane Reid and their children were: John, who succeeded; Alexander, in the East India Company’s naval service; Janet, who died young; and Elizabeth, who married William Riddell of Camiestown (and whose son Robert Riddell Carre would succeed to Cavers Carre). In 1763 he secondly married Jane, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell, 4th Baronet; she died in 1806. John (18th C.) smith at Hawicksheils. He married Margaret Henderson and their children included Isobel (b.1758) and Thomas (b.1760). Witnesses to the 1760 baptism were Walter Scott and James Laidlaw. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in Hawicksheils in 1766. John (1740–1804) 3rd Duke of Roxburghe, son of Robert, 2nd Duke, he was known as a great book collector. In 1797 he exchanged his lands at Hassendeanbank with those of George Douglas of Cavers at Denholm Haugh. It is said that he was attached to the eldest daughter of the Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, but was unable to marry her, since King George III married her younger sister. He remained unmarried. He was appointed Lord of the Bedchamber, Knight of the Thistle, Groom of the Stole and Knight of the Garter. He collected valuable and curious books, and the sale of his collection (of about 10,000 volumes) led to the establishment of the Roxburgh Club. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of large amounts of land in Roxburghshire, in Ancrum, Bowden, Eckford, Howman, Kelso, Lilliesleaf, Makerstoun, Maxton, Morebattle, Oxnam, Roxburgh, Selkirk and Sprouston Parishes. In 1797–8 he served as chair of the Lieutenancy Committee in Roxburghshire. He sold his lands of Hassendeanbank to the Elliots of Minto in 1799. Probably the same John was listed on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls for Hundalee Mill and other lands. He had no surviving children and after his death there was a dispute over succession; he was eventually succeeded by a distant cousin, John Bellenden-Ker. Capt. John of Cavers Carre (d.1798) eldest son of John and Jane Reid. He was a Captain in the army. He was still ‘of Cavers junior’ when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He succeeded after the death of his father in 1766, and retired from the army, living at Cavers Carre and at Hundalee. In 1777 he had much of the old house at Cavers Carre demolished, but did not manage to have it rebuilt. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1788 he was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire (and supporter of the Conservatives). Also in 1788 he was recorded as owner of Cavers Carre and other lands in Bowden Parish, as well as Bedrule Mains, Bedrule Mill, Corsecleuch and Fulton in Bedrule Parish, Belses Mill in Ancrum Parish and other lands in Jedburgh Parish. He was taxed for having male servants (both within Jedburgh and outside, presumably at Hundalee) from 1778–97, the number varying from 4 to 1. He was a bachelor in 1788–91 when taxed for having a female servant; in 1789 he was paying the tax at Hundalee. He was also taxed for having horses in the period 1785–97, in some years in Jedburgh as well as in Bowden Parish. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was Provost of Jedburgh and played a leading role in the politics of that burgh. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Alexander. However, a child called John ‘to John Carre Esqr. of Cavers’ was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1784, and was probably his child (perhaps illegitimate). John Strother of Littledean (1757–95) son of Walter, who he succeeded in 1789. He was a Major in the Scots Greys, died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Walter. John (1834/5–65) son of Gideon, who was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Fore Raw. He was born in Hawick and educated at Jedburgh Grammar School. He became an engineer with the Royal Navy. His ship H.M.S. Driver was wrecked off Bermuda in 1861, and then spent about a year on H.M.S. Racer off the coast of America during the Civil War. Partially deaf, he was invalided from the Navy, returning to 3 Bridge Street in 1863, but dying only 2 years later. An ‘ambrotype’ photograph exists of him in uniform and many letters from him to his family survive. Lancelot ‘Lance’ of Gateshaw (d.c.1543) son of Andrew. In 1510 he served as one of the sureties for his father, who was accused of murdering John Murray of Falahill. He was accused of 2 raids into England in 1515. In 1522 his tower at Gateshaw was burned by the English, perhaps in retaliation; he strengthened his pele and built ‘New Gateshaw’ nearby. He is recorded in documents of 1527, regarding tenements in Selkirk. Mark of Dolphinston (d.1551) 2nd son of Andrew. In 1510 he served heir to a third part of the lands at the same time. Maria (d.1650) daughter of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburghe and brother of William, Master of Roxburgh. She married James Haliburton of Pitcur and secondly married James Carnegie, 2nd Earl of Southesk. In 1634 she was served heir to her brother William in many lands around Kelso, Sprouston, Maxwell-leugh, Midlem, Whitmuirhall, etc. Included in the list is a third part of the lands of ‘Altoun prope villam de Hawick’. Her sister Isobella was served heir to a third part of the lands at the same time. Mark of Dolphinston (d.1551) 2nd son of Walter of Cessford, younger brother of Sir Robert of Caverton. He was also referred to as ‘of Maxton and Littledean’. His sister married Sir Walter Scott of Branholme. He owned Borthwickshiel in 1502 when it was burned by a group of Armstrongs from Liddesdale. Also in that year he was fined for failing to enter into court several men to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver: Andrew Turnbull in Bedrule; William Turnbull, brother of the Laird of Bedrule; John Turnbull, called ‘Blue John’; Andrew Turnbull; Alan Davidson, ‘Taboner’, John Turnbull in Jedburgh; John Turnbull in Wells; and Adam Turnbull in Wells. Furthermore, in 1502 he also served as surety for John Oliver (who had been involved in some raids around the Jedburgh and Rulewater areas), was also surety for Robert and Ingram Oliver (whose crimes were several raids and 2 murders), was fined for not entering several men (including an Ainslie and men from Auld Roxburgh and Caver- ton) into the court and was surety for Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton, as well as other men. In 1505 he had remission (along with 3 others) for crimes perpetrated upon John Rutherford and others. In 1507/8 he was witness to the document for Scott of Whitchesters relating to the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick. In 1515 he headed a band of Kers and others who stole 200 cattle, 30 horses and took 40 prisoners from Redewater. In 1525 he was among the Border Barons who had a bond to assist the Earl of Angus. In 1530 he was one of the Border chiefs imprisoned by James V for failing to keep the ‘broken men’ and thieves in check. In 1530/1 he was witness to Sir Walter Scott of Branholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He is probably the Mark in Littledean recorded in 1534 along with his son Andrew; goods were seized at ‘erin heuch’, which belonged to his son and not to him. He was warded in Dundee in 1535. In 1539 he is recorded as the founder of the altar of the Holy Rood in Selkirk. In the early 1540s he served as a kind of deputy to the Warden of the Middle Marches, his name showing up many times in English letters. In 1542 he was said to have gone with his brother Dand and son Davie to Kelso Abbey and taken all of the King’s sheep that were there. He witnessed an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme and William Cairncross of Colmslie in 1544. In 1545 he was ‘Mark Kar of Littleden’ among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. About 1547 he was among the Border Lairds who paid homage to the Duke of Somerset. He was among the Kerrs accused of supporting the English at the Battle of Pinkie. In 1549 he was one of the Kerrs (along with Walter of Cessford and George of Linton) accused by Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme of raiding his lands at Newark, as well as his lands in the lower Borthwick valley. In about 1501 he married Marjorie, daughter and heiress of John Ainslie of Dolphinston. His children included: Sir Andrew of the Hirsel; John; Mr. Thomas; William, recorded in 1550; Robert, a natural son, legitimised in 1558; and Janet, who married John Haitlie of Melrostain. His direct descendant Maj.-Gen. Walter of Littledean lost a legal battle in 1812 to be declared the rightful heir to the Roxburgh titles. Mark (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1531 he gave up all claims to the lands of Philiphaugh, in favour of Robert Turnbull, tutor of Philiphaugh. Also in 1531 he had a precept of sasine read out in which Patrick Murray of Falahill granted him lands in Selkirk. Additionally in 1531 he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. He was probably the Mark who in 1530 headed a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken men, horses, meal and other goods from travellers they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned all the goods. He was probably the Mark who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531. In 1531/2 and 1532 he was a Bailie in Selkirk. He was probably the son of Robert and Elizabeth Gledstains recorded in 1533, when his mother gave up her liferent of a tenement to the church. His heir Thomas witnessed a document in 1535 and he himself witnessed a further document in 1536. He may be the Mark who purchased a husbandland (occupied by Alexander Scott) from Patrick Murray in 1536 and a maltkin and yard from Peter Porteous. He may be the same man as Mark of Kippieplaw. Mark of Kippieplaw (16th C.) recorded ‘in Kippelaw’ when he witnessed a court case in Selkirk in 1534. In 1535 he bound himself to discharge George Mitchellhill and William Bennet of contracts, as well as acts made with Melrose Abbey through John Scott in Thirlestane. He also witnessed a document relating to John Rutherford of Hunthill in 1535. Also in 1535 he and Robert Turnbull agreed to each hold half of the lands of ‘Philhop’ (but Philiphaugh is probably meant) until John Turnbull (son and heir of the deceased Ralph) came into entry of the lands; they held the wardship of John Turnbull and it seems that he received Robert Turnbull’s half ‘by reason of an omission of his marriage contract’. In 1536/7 John Turnbull of Philiphaugh (then described as his nephew) came of age, and appointed him as curator for his lands. In 1537 he renounced his claims over a maltkiln in Selkirk, in favour of Peter Porteous. He is listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40. He was one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme on Edinburgh High Street, along with several Kerrs and others. His son and heir Thomas is recorded in an undated document from the 1550s resigning lands in Midlem to his younger son Andrew. He and his son Robert of Lochtour were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kerrs and the Scotts; his name appears as ‘Mark Ker of Kippeschaw’. It is possible he is the same man as the contemporary Burgess of Selkirk. Thomas in Kippieplaw, who is recorded in 1562/3, was his son and heir. An inventory of his ‘gudis and geiris’ was made in 1579, with his son Thomas and grandson Robert mentioned; he was at that time ‘seik in body and hail in mynd’. Mark ‘Markie’ (16th C.) brother of Lancelot of Gateshaw. In 1588 he and William of Hayhope were accused of wounding William Methven, minister of Langton. Sir Mark of Dolphinston (d.1607) son of Sir John of the Hirsel and Littledean. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. He died without issue and his widow secondly married Sir David Home of Wedderburn. Mark (16th/17th C.) younger son of Walter of Littledean. He was probably trained the the priesthood, since he was known as ‘Mr.’ In 1588 he was appointed Commissary of Coldstream Abbey. He was also Commissary of Lauder and owner of the lands of Brotherstanes. His son Andrew was the first Ker of Morriston in Berwickshire. Mark (17th/18th C.) gardener at ‘Newtoun Kerr’ in Bedrule Parish. In Edinburgh in 1712 he married Agnes, daughter of Edinburgh gardener John Weir. Matthew (15th/16th C.) agent appointed by George, son of Robert Scott of Whames in an action of 1505, where George claimed his father’s lands of Murihouse in the Barony of Crichton. Ralph of Primside Loch (15th/16th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Cessford. However, he may be confused with the son of Thomas of Kersheugh and Ferniehirst. He may be the ‘Radulpho Ker, fratri Wateri Ker de Cesfurd’ in 1484 when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in certain lands, the ‘Radulpho Ker’ who was a bailie appointed by Alexander, Lord Home, to infeft Andrew Ker (perhaps his father) in the lands of Craling and Hownam in 1484, and also the ‘Radulpho Ker de Primsye louch’ further directed in 1489. He is probably the ‘Radulfo Car’ who leased the lands of Broadmeadows in 1488. Also in 1488/9, he and his brother Walter were directed by the King to infeft George Douglas, Master of Angus, in lands in Berwickshire. In 1491 he was mentioned in a document relating to the lands of Ruecastle and he and his wife were mentioned in relation to the lands of Middlestead. He may be the ‘Radulpho Ker’ who acted as surety several times at the Justice-aires held in Jedburgh in 1493 and 1494/5, as well as at Selkirk in 1494/5. In 1494 he was ‘Radulphum Ker’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He who was part of a bond in 1498 to act upon men who were already fugitives (also agreed by his son Andrew and by William Turnbull of Minto, among others). In 1499 he was recorded as ‘Radulphus’ brother of Walter of Cessford in a document relating to George, Master of Cessford. Also in 1499 he was tenant in Broadmeadow, Bailelee and half of Phaup in Ettrick. In 1501 he served as pledge for Sir Thomas Turnbull. In 1501/2, along with his wife, he had the gift of the ward of ‘Hownum, Cesfurd, Caverton and Primsid’ through the decease of Walter of Cessford; he is recorded as being ‘of Prymsidloch’. In 1502 he was surety for several Olivers and a Waugh who had killed Robert Brig and Adam ‘Barnisfader’ at ‘Kelsop’. In the same year he was also involved in a respite with William Ker and James Elliot in ‘Quhitmere’ and Alexander and Patrick Gray in Greenhead, involving thefts by the Elliots. Also in 1502 he had a charter of appraisal for the lands of Falside in Jedforest after being yielded by George Douglas, Master of Angus for not delivering one of his tenants to court. Additionally he was also surety for the Douglasses of Swinside and for Lawrence Rutherford, as well as being fined for failing to produce a riever. He may be the Ralph ‘in le grenehed’ who was fined in 1502 for failing to enter Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. He held the lease of Broadmeadow, Ploro and Berrybush in 1502. And in that year both William Scott in Fenwick and James Scott in Ashkirk had remission for stealing livestock from his farm at Caudshielis. In 1503 he had a financial agreement with George Douglas, Master of Angus, done in Jedburgh, with the procurator being Gavin Douglas, Provost of St. Giles. In 1506 he had a charter for lands in Ettrick. In 1506/7 he was one of the men to whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Bucleuch, had to give in his accounts. In 1509 he and his wife Margaret Rutherford sold lands in Heiton. Also in 1509 he was ‘de Prymsidlowich’ in an agreement with George Douglas, Master of Angus, done at his house of ‘Grenheid’. In 1510 his son Andrew was declared a rebel and his goods forfeited after he failed to appear for killing John Brown, assisted by William in Whitmore and his brother James. Also in 1510 he was involved in an indenture, along with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, with the Erskines, over lands in Synton; for 400 merks they bought a 20 merk land in Synton Mains, as well as another 20 merk land within Synton, rights to take over the lands of Walter Scott of Synton later, plus lands in Nisbet. Another condition was that the Erskine’s would not sell any neighbouring lands to John Murray of Falahill (his brother-in-law), for reasons that are unspecified. He married Margaret, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill and secondly married Margaret Rutherford. His children included: Andrew of Greenhead and Primside; George of Cavers Carre, who was probably father of Thomas of Cavers Carre; William, Commendator of Kelso; and John, recorded in 1553. Ralph (15th/16th C.) brother of Thomas, Abbot of Kelso. He may be the same as Ralph of Primside (although it appears that 2 nearly contemporary men of the same name are sometimes confounded). In 1532 he was granted a tack of the lands of Cavers Carre by his brother Thomas. He married Marion Haliburton, and their armorial bearings were carved in stones saved from the old house and built into the new one in 1800. His eldest son was George. Ralph of Lintalee (16th C.) recorded having the tack of Lintalee in 1541. He is also recorded as juror on a return in 1560. He was probably succeeded by James of Lintalee. Ralph (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Rafe Ker’, but it is unclear where he was from. Ralph (16th C.) entered into ward in England ‘for the bill of Newton’, with a bond given by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, sometime during the time of the Regent Moray. In 1573 he broke his ward and was with Lord Hay of Yester, with Sir Walter’s bond forfeited. It is possible that he was the Ralph, son and heir of Thomas of Dalcove and Shaws, who in 1581 married Janet, daughter of Walter of Littledean; he was given most of Dalcove and Shaws, with his father keeping 2 husbandlands of Dalcove that were occupied by the Newton family. He could be the ‘Raulff Ker of Shaw’ who escaped from Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1590. In 1598 there were bonds to resolve a feud between him and Haig of Bemersyde. He was recorded as a juror in returns of 1600 and 1601. He is probably the ‘Raff Ker of Schawis’ who signed (‘with our hands at the pen’) a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He may also have married Alison Ker of Primsidecloth. Ralph (16th C.) servant of Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle. In 1597/8 he was ‘Raulff Ker’ when his master complained that he had been attacked and captured by Scotts from Gamescleuch, Glack and ‘Jedwartfeild’. Richard of Altonburn (d.1437/8) son of Robert and grandson of Henry (although these generations are confused). He had a charter for several lands from the Earl of Douglas in 1412. As well as Altonburn, he held ‘Watwywsleys’ and ‘Quitebankedene’, in the regality of Sprouston. He may be the Richard ‘Kere’ who witnessed an agreement between the Rules of Primside and the Kers of Altonburn in 1432. He appears to have died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn in 1438 (even although Andrew appears to have been known as ‘of Altonburn’ before that). Richard of Gateshaw (d.1577) brother of George and younger son of Lancelet. He was named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts, trying to end the family feud. In 1565 he was charged for disobeying the Warden of the Middle Marches. He had sasine for lands in Primside from Walter Ker of Cessford in 1566/7 and was infested as heir to his brother. In 1571 he entered into a contract with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. His children included: Lancelet; who succeeded; James; Adam; and a daughter, who married Elliot of Larriston. He made his will in 1576. Robert of Altonburn (14th/15th C.) probably son of Henry. In 1404 he had a charter for the lands of Smailholm and others from Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. He had 2 sons: Richard, who appears to have died without issue; and Andrew, who succeeded after the death of his brother. Sir Robert of Caverton (d.1500), younger of Cessford, eldest son of Walter. In 1490 he had the lease of Bowerhope in Ettrick Ward. In 1490/1 he had a charter for lands in the Barony of Haldane. He is probably the Sir Robert who was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the Branxholme and Buccleuch titles and lands in 1492. He acted as surety at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493 and was also fined for non-appearance. And he was probably the Sir Robert who acted as one of the sureties in 1494/5 for Robert Langlands after the murder of chaplain George Fairneylaw, paying £20 when Langlands failed to appear. He was Master of the King’s Artillery to James IV and Warden of the Middle Marches. In 1499 he was tenant of Singlie, Ernlceugh, Altrieve and Bowerhope, along with his father. He was murdered by 8 Northumbrians, who were imprisoned in Fast Castle until they died. He married Christian Rutherford of that Ilk. Since he died before his father the Cessford titles and estates were inherited by his son Sir Andrew. Another son was Thomas of ‘Marsingtoun’. Robert ‘in caverton’, recorded in 1502, may also have been related. Robert (15th/16th C.) 4th son of Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn. He was Abbot of Kelso 1468–1506. He and his brother Ralph had sheep stolen from their farm at Cauldshiels by William Scott in Fenwick. Robert (d.bef. 1526) tenant in Sunderlandhall. He purchased Ashybank from Sir William Douglas of Cavers and sold it back to him in 1498. Possibly the same Robert ‘de Sonderlandhall’ was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor. Probably the same deceased Robert of Sunderlandhall was recorded in 1526/7 when his son and heir Thomas is mentioned in a document in the Selkirk Protocol Books. In 1530 his widow Margaret Hunter assigned lands near Selkirk to her 2nd son, James. Robert (d.bef. 1533) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1533 his widow Elizabeth Gledstains resigned her tenement and orchard into the hands of her son Mark and Bailie James Scott, to donate them to the chapel in Selkirk. It is possible he was the ‘Robert Carre of Selkrigge’ listed among men who were to mediate between Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus and his wife, Margaret, Queen of Scotland, in an agreement of 1517. Robert of Crookedshaws (16th C.) probably son of James of Linton. He is probably the ‘brother german’ of George of Linton recorded in a record in Selkirk in 1524. He was a Burgess of Edinburgh, having that right through marrying Elizabeth, daughter of farrier John Harvey. They had a son George. Robert of Graden (16th C.) listed as ‘Robert Car of Greyden’ when he signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. He is listed as ‘Robin’ in 1547/8 among the Kers who burned lands in Ae Water belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, the raid led by supporters of the Lairds of Cessford and Ferniehirst. It is unclear how he was related to other Kers. He may be the ‘Robin Ker, brother to the Lord of Ferniehirst’ who was said to have sided with Sir Ralph Evers at ‘Lylzeartis Croce’ (i.e. Ancrum Moor) in 1545. He was ‘Robert Carr of Greyden’ in 1544/5 when said to have been put to the horn for the slaughter of the Rutherfords. He may also be the Robert, brother of Walter of Graden, who witnessed a charter other Kers involving Primside in 1537. He is probably the Laird of Graden named in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; in the same bond there were arrangements made for addressing a broken marriage contract involving him, together with Rutherford of Hunthill and Ker of Newhall. He may be the Robert of Graden who was one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scots and the Kers. Robert of Lochtour (16th C.) son of Mark of Kippielaw. He and his father were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. Robert of Newhall (16th C.) listed on the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. He had apparently been responsible for the murder of William Rutherford of Longnewton and was to come to Ancrum Kirk and offer his sword to George, son of William of Longnewton. He married Margaret Rutherford and had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: Andrew, who succeeded to Newhall; and James and Robert, mentioned in relation to harassment of the tenants of Longnewton in 1595.

Robert (16th C.) brother of the Laird of Greenhead. In 1552 he was one of the men indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He could be the ‘Robet Ker, elder, burges of Edinburcht’ named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He is probably the ‘Roberte Carr sone to the Lorde of Grenehede’ listed in 1541 among Kers, Scotts and others who were accused of leading a raid on Mindrum and Hethpool. Robert (16th C.) son of Thomas of Kippielaw. He is mentioned as executor for his grandfather Mark of Kippielaw in 1579. In 1581 he was involved with a transaction between his father and younger brother John, regarding lands in Bowden, Bewlie and Lilliesleaf. He was a servant to Sir Walter of Cessford in the period 1581–87. He is probably the Robert of Kippielaw who in 1594 was surety for Arthur Scott of Gamescluch to answer a complaint against him by William Cranston, younger of that Ilk. He married Agnes Pringle. Robert (16th C.) son of Gilbert of Primside Loch. In 1581 he represented his father and their tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. Robert (16th C.) local cleric. He was titular Archdeacon of Teviotdale after the Reformation and is so recorded in 1582. He was minister at Linton, Mow, Yetholm, Morebattle and Hownam. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as lawful son to the deceased Thomas of Yair. His brother James had a warning to accept redemption money from Andrew of Yair. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in Yair in 1617 when he was listed among the supporters of the Scotts of Yair in their feud with the Scotts of Bonnington. Robert (d.1622) recorded as being ‘in Bewlie’. He was executed in Edinburgh for perjury. He had apparently been bribed to lie by Andrew Turnbull in Belses in a case of stealing he brought against the Middlemasses. Robert (16th/17th C.) portioner of Fur'mington. In 1621 his son John was among a list of associates of John Ker of Langnewton who were accused of attacking John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw and others. Sir Robert ‘Habbie’ (1570–1650) of Cessford and 1st Earl of Roxburgh, son of Sir William of Cessford. He was committed to ward in 1587 for incursions on the Border. He was knighted at the coronation of Queen Anne in 1590. Also in 1590 he killed William Kerr of Ancrum, part of the feud between the Kers of Cessford and the Kers of Ferniehirst; however, in 1591 he obtained a remission for his involvement. He was Deputy Warden of the Scottish Middle March from about 1594 to 1603, and assisted his father as Deputy Warden before that. He served as Keeper of Liddesdale in 1591–92 and Deputy Keeper in 1593. In 1594 he, along with Alexander Lord Home and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, he had a commission to raise men to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. He was an extremely powerful Baron and carried on a great feud with the English Warden Robert Carey, although they apparently grew to respect one another after he was a prisoner of Carey’s at Berwick. In 1595 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to present Andrew of Newhall. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation between him and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst and Thomas of Cavers Carre over the murder of William of Ancrum. In 1596 his sureties were Robert, Lord Crichton and Andrew of Romano Grange. He was a Privy Counsellor in 1596 and 1599. He was Warden of the Middle March in 1600 when listed among leaders ordered to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. There is a document of about 1600 recording a challenge on him by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, with the combat to involve only short swords; it is unclear if either party was injured, but it could not have been very serious. He was created Lord Roxburghie in 1600, accompanied James VI when he ascended the English throne, and was made the Earl of Roxburghie in 1616. He was Bailie of Kelso Abbey in 1602 and appointed his son as Commendator. In 1605 and 1606 there were formal apologies to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst (for the death of William of Ancrum) and compensation of 10,000 merks, which effectively ended the family feud. In 1606 he was served heir to his father Sir William, and in 1610 inherited further lands, including Hassendeanebank, which he resigned to the Baron in 1643 (probably to be regranted). In 1618 he was listed among commissioners appointed by the King to keep law and order in Teviotdale and in 1619 was appointed with increased powers. He was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Cessford, in the lands of Cessford Mains in 1623. His Book of Family and Household expenses for the period 1619–30 shows much of what life was like for a wealthy Border Laird in this period. He was one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Walter Scott, 2nd Earl of Buccleuch, who died in 1633. He was Lord Privy Seal of Scotland in 1637. His properties are listed in the 1643 valuation roll for the county, including land in Hassendean (valued at £550), Lilliesleaf (valued at £1060), Ancrum (valued at £1970), Bowden, Eckford, Kelso, Lindean, Makerston, Maxton, Morebattle, Roxburgh, Smaillholm and Sprouston Parishes. He took part in the ‘Engagement’ of 1648 and was deprived of the office of Privy Seal. He married Margaret Maitland and then Jean Drummond. His children were: William, who died unmarried; Jean, who married her cousin John Drummond, 2nd Earl of Perth; Isabella, who married James Scrymgeour; Maria, who married Sir James Haliburton of Pitcur, and James Carnegie, 2nd Earl of Southesk; and Henry, who married Margaret Hay, but died before his father. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir William Drummond, who changed his name to Ker. He died at Floors and was the first of the family to be buried at Bowden Kirk. He was effectively the last of the male line of Ker of Cessford. His daughters Maria and Isabella were served heir to their brother William in several lands in 1634 (including Alton near Hawick). Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 along with ‘Lancie Airmestrang’ when they were claimed to be from his Majesty’s Guard when sent by the Scotts of Harden to remove Lady Bonnington from her house and lands at Newhouse on the Ettrick Water. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) son of Andrew of Faldonside. In 1632 he was served heir to his father in the Mains of Feu-Rule, also called Hallrule, with the mill there, plus Deanside and lands in Bowden. In 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Perhaps the same Robert ‘of Fadeanside’ was listed as owned of lands in Lindean Parish in 1678. Robert (d.1682) 3rd Earl of Roxburghie, son of William (who had been born Drummond). He was served heir to his father (as well as his mother) in 1675, inheriting a large amount of land in Roxburghshire and elsewhere, including Alton near Hawick and the office of Bailie of Ancrum; Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk. He paid the land tax for property in Ancrum Parish, Ashkirk Parish and several other parishes in 1678, as well as the teinds of Lilliesleaf Parish and the Kirklands of Bewlic. He married Margaret, daughter of John Hay, 1st Marquess of Tweeddale (her mother being Jane, daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch). His children included: Robert, who succeeded as 4th Earl; and John, who succeeded his brother. He may also have had another son, William, who was ‘brother-german to Roxburgh’ in the Darien Scheme list of 1695. He was lost at sea in the ship ‘Gloucester’ when it wrecked off Yarmouth Sands, while proceeding with the Duke of York from London to Leith. He is said to have cried out with an offer of money for a boat, and his butler tried to save him on his back, until grabbed by another drowning man. Robert of Gateshaw (17th C.) 10th Laird, he was son of John. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire 1661–86. He was recorded in a bond in 1663. He represented the Hays of Errol in the funeral procession of Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburgh, in about 1675. His son John succeeded him and sold the estate to Sir William Scott of Ancrum. Robert (d.1696) 4th Earl of Roxburghe, eldest son of Robert, 3rd Earl. He was succeeded to his father’s extensive lands and titles in 1684, including lands previously held by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale, the lands and advowson of Lilliesleaf Kirk, the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk, and Alton near Hawick. He also inherited his grandfather William’s lands of Hassendeanbank and Cappitrig. In 1695 he was appointed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He was succeeded by his younger brother John. Robert (d.bef. 1718) gardener in Hawick. In 1718 his daughter Janet married John, son of James Simpson and in 1721 his daughter Mary married cooper John Aitken. It is likely he had a son Robert, also a gardener, who married Jean Gledstains in 1721. He may also have been father of Margaret, who married a gardener James Dunn, and for whom he witnessed a baptism in 1713. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick, possibly son of Robert. In 1741 he witnessed a baptism for weaver James White. In 1721 he married Jean, daughter of William Gledstains of Kirklands. Their children included Isobel (b.1723), Patrick (b.1725), Margaret (b.1727), William (b.1729), Janet (b.1731), Robert (b.1735) and Adam (b.1742). In 1731 the witnesses were William Tudhope and Robert Boyd and in 1742 were ex-Bailie James Scott and junior mason Andrew Turnbull. He may be the Robert who (along with James Gledstains) witnessed a baptism for Adam Scott in 1726. He is probably the gardener of that name who witnessed a baptism in 1737 for wright James Winthrope. He may be the Robert who was given part of the responsibility for collecting subscriptions ‘east the water’ to help pay for the Teviot Bridge in 1740, and who served as a Bailie in the 1740s and 50s. Robert (c.1709–55) 2nd Duke of Roxburghe, only son of John, the 1st Duke. He married his half-cousin Essex, daughter of Sir Roger Mostyn. He was succeeded by his son John (b.1740). He also had a son known as ‘Lord Robert’ (b.1747) and 3 daughters (none of whom married). Lt.-Col. Robert of Cockertoun (1747–1781) younger son of Robert, 2nd Duke of Roxburghe and brother of John, 3rd Duke. He was known as ‘Lord Robert’. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He stood unsuccessfully as Roxburghshire M.P. in 1790, objecting to the addition of several people to the roll and the refusal of some of his supporters, claiming that he was ‘duly elected by a majority of legal voters. Thomas of Gateshaw (15th C.) 3rd son of Andrew of Altonburn, with his mother being a Douglas of Cavers. He was recorded as owner of Gateshaw in 1451, being the first Ker of those lands. He may also have owned part of Primside. He was probably ancestor of later Kers of Gateshaw, perhaps being father of James. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Adam of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. In 1489 he was restored as heir to his father’s lands of ‘Sant Elene Shaw’, including ‘le Kyrk croft’, ‘Caponland’ and ‘Gersland’, by Ralph Ker, bailie to George Douglas, Master of Angus. Thomas (d.bef. 1534) recorded in documents preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. It is possible that he was a son of Sir Andrew of Cessford. In 1514 George Ker, Vicar of Morebattle (and Canon of Glasgow) invested him in the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. About the same time he complained about his removal from the choir of Glasgow Cathedral. In 1516 he granted a dispensation to marry (within the usual bounds of consanguinity) to Ingram Elliot and Elizabeth Scott. He witnessed other documents in 1516 and 1520. He was recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale when he died, which was sometime before 1534. Thomas of Yair (16th C.) grandson of William. In 1523 he was granted his grandfather’s lands of Stevinston in Peeblesshire from James Douglas, Earl of Morton. Witnesses included James and Robert Ker. In 1530/1 he gave sasine of his lands in Lindean. In 1531 he was in dispute with Patrick Murray of Falahill over the lands of Cranton Riddell. Also in 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In about 1532 he witnessed a marriage agreement between Gavin Elliot and Margaret McDougall. He could be the Thomas in Selkirk who in 1530 was part of a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken men, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned all the goods. In 1532/3 he was witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John Scott of Roberton. In 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. In 1535 he promised to take down a dyke impinging on Selkirk’s North Common. In 1536 he delivered money to Andrew of Primsideloch for redemption.
of lands. In 1539 he complained that men from Selkirk had perambulated the boundaries of Yair (presumably while marking their Common). Also in 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam Scott and took sasine for lands in Sekirk. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Bothwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. He married Elizabeth Crichton and was succeeded by his son William. Thomas of Sunderlandhall (16th C.) recorded several times in the period 1531–37 as ‘Master Thomas’, suggesting he was a cleric of some sort. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquiry to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1533 he declared that he was lawfel tenant of Sunderlandhall. In 1535 he promised to remove part of a dyke impinging on Selkirk Common. Also in 1535 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Rutherfords and Homes. In 1536 he came to the market cross in Selkirk to represent his ‘brother german’ Walter Scott, requested the debt to be repaid by Andrew Shortreed on behalf of Adam Gledstains. His name appears to be scored out and ‘Thomas’ could be an error for ‘William’. In 1536/7 he witnessed a document for the Pringles of Whitton. In the same year he witnessed William Brydon resigning the Vicarage for the Pringles of Whitton. In 1536 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Rutherfords and Homes. In 1538 he was involved in a financial arrangement with Andrew Douglas of Friarshaw. Also in 1538 his 2nd son John renounced land in Bowden in favour of him, his wife Elizabeth and son Robert; in return he assigned the Kirklands of Bewlie and 2 acres in Lilliesleaf to his son John. He also had a daughter, Eilspeth, who married Thomas Pringle. Thomas (16th C.) presented as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1565, although these were very unclear times for such titles and benefices. He stayed in the office essentially until about 1572, when it pass to an unnamed person who was hostile to the Reformation. That was the end of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. Thomas of Dalcove and Shaws (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as son of the deceased Adam and brother of Elizabeth when he received sasine for his sister’s lands of St. Helen Shaw. Robert acted as bailie for the transaction and may have been related. He was a ward of Thomas of Mersington. He was mentioned in a transaction in Selkirk in 1580, involving the mill and lands of Shaws, and another involving a payment to him in Selkirk. He also witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1580. Also in 1580 he transferred ‘Schaw Milne’ from James Gowdie to Peter Sharp. He was recorded as Thomas of Dalcove in 1581, along with his son and heir Ralph, when they gave sasine of lands in Dalcove to Janet, daughter of Walter of Litteldean as part of a marriage contract.
of Ralph with Janet. Additionally his son Ralph assigned to him 2 husbandlands in Dalcover occupied by the Newton family and he gave Ralph his lands of Shaws, reserving for himself a tenement in lieu. He married Isabel Ker. David, ‘son of Thomas Ker of Schaws’ was recorded in a disturbance in Merton Kirk in 1598/9, along with ‘Thomas Ker of Dalcowie’ (suggesting this was a different Thomas). Thomas of Sunderlandhall (16th C.) perhaps son of an earlier Thomas. He is recorded in 1580, along with his wife Margaret Ker. He gave sasine of lands to Thomas of Maisondieu and his wife Isabel Ker, with his brother Robert mentioned too. Also in 1580 he was principle tenant of Sunderland when he admitted Patrick Gray as his tenant and also when he witnessed an instrument giving John, Lord Flemming, sasine of half of Sunderland. In 1581 he and his wife Margaret Ker warned Thomas of Maisondieu and his wife Isabel to appear at Lindean Kirk to receive redemption money, and they also gave sasine of a tenement in Selkirk to George Mitchellhill. Also in 1581 he paid redemption money to James of Yair and Thomas Elliot in Yair, and sold a house and yard in Selkirk. In 1582 he acted as cautioner for James in Yair. He may be the Laird of Sunderlandhall listed among Borderers who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Wardens of the Middle March. In 1600/1 he was cautioner for Gideon Murray of Elibank. He signed a bond to keep the peace in 1602. He may have been son of the earlier Thomas of Sunderlandhall. Thomas of Whithmuirhall (16th C.) perhaps son of John of Whithmuirhall and grandson of an earlier Thomas. He was recorded in 1561 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. In 1581 he purchased lands in Dingleton from John Mabon; his wife Marion Ker is also mentioned in the agreement. Additionally he loaned money to Adam Marshall based on other lands in Dingleton. He could be the ‘Goodman of Quhitmuirhall’ listed in 1590 among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1590 his cautioner was Robert, Burgess of Edinburgh. Thomas of Cavers (d.c.1628) son of George, he was the 2nd Ker of Cavers Carre. He succeeded since his older brother Andrew predeceased their father. He may be the ‘Thomas Ker sumtyme of Caveris’ who was listed as a traitor along with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1571/2. In 1579 he witnessed transactions done at Riddell between the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Todrig and between Andrew Riddell and the Scotts of Todrig. He may have been the Thomas of Cavers who was recorded in the ‘pacification’ given to Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and his followers in 1581 and who also witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581. In 1590 he was acquitted of the stealing cattle from Englishman Richard Fenwick, was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents, was accused of not keeping his bond to enter a Scottish prisoner and served as surety for Andrew of Linton. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders and in the same year Patrick Murray of Falahill was his surety. In 1592 he was cautioner for the good behaviour of James Scott of Whithope; one of the signatories was his son and heir George. In 1594 he was temporarily imprisoned for not helping fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his supporters. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation of him and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst with Sir Robert, younger of Cessford, over the murder of William of Ancrum. In 1596 he brought a case against Englishmen for raiding his lands. He is recorded in a discharge of 1597 and on Monipennie’s list of Border Lairds about the same year. In 1599 there was a complaint that the clerk of the Sheriff of Roxburgh-shire had refused to register letters of horning against him raised by a Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1600 he was on the ‘retour’ for Ker of Cessford. In 1601 Adam Scott ‘the Peck’ was hanged for stealing from him at Nether Whitlaw (as well as a long list of other crimes), and he also complained against other Englishmen who had stolen sheep from him. Also in 1601 he was mentioned having about 8 years earlier been attacked and hurt as part of the feud between the Kers and Turnbulls. Additionally in 1601 he served as cautioner for Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst to present certain Turnbulls of Bewlie and elsewhere at Edinburgh Tolbooth; he had to pay 2000 merks, which the Laird of Ferniehirst was ordered to repay. A letter from Turnbull to him in 1602 discusses possession of Fulton and mentions a number of tenants in that area of Bedrule. In 1603 he had a charter from James V for the lands of Cavers Carre and others. Also in 1603 his brother John and other burgesses of Edinburgh served as sureties that after being freed from ward in Edinburgh Castle, he would pay his fines or re-enter; additionally his sureties to re-enter when requested were James Pringle of Galashiel, William Laude of Whitslaid, Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk, and his brother John. In 1607 he was surety for James Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. In 1611 he and his son George, along with Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst had complaints against them by Hamilton of Innerwick. In 1620 he was involved in a dispute with the Cairncrosses of Colmslie, with his sons William, Andrew and Robert also mentioned. In 1623 he gained possession of much of the remaining lands of Bedrule from the Turnbulls, probably through defaulted loans, this included Fulton, Crosscleuch, Menslaws, Speirmanslands and Ruecastle. He was listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire in 1628. He was succeeded by his son George. In 1618 his son Robert complained about being attacked by the servant of John, son of John of Jedburgh. He married Isobel, daughter of Riddell of that Ilk. They had at least 5 sons and 2 daughters, including: Robert; Janet who married William Turnbull of Bedrule; Grisel, who married Robert Straiton of Straiton Mill; William, recorded in 1631, along with his own son, Walter; Mark; and John. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to George Haliburton in Pinnacle, he lived at Langnewton. In 1619 he was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. Sir Thomas of Cavers Carre (1593–1681) son of George. He was served heir to his grandfather Thomas in 1629. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the ‘Confessions of Faith’. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He is recorded as owner of part of Samieston in 1643 as well as lands in Bedrule Parish valued at £1565, consisting of the Town of Bedrule, Menslaws, Crosscleuch and Fulton, and also lands of Belses in Ancrum valued at £291, as well as lands in Bowden, Kelso and Roxburgh Parishes. In 1644 he was commended, along with Sir William Scott of Harden, for helping organise the tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch to repel the (Royalist) forces of the Earl of Montrose. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire and in 1643–44 and 1648–49 he represented Roxburghshire in Parliament. He also held the lands of Stanedge, Lurgiescleuch and others in Hobkirk Parish in the 1640s. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dunfries and Annandale. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He held lands in Abbotrule (as well as Kelso) according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He was recorded in a discharge of 1663. He became Baron and Laird of Bedrule in 1668, perhaps earlier. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenant supporter. In 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King. He paid the land tax in Ancrum, Bedrule, Bowden, Jedburgh, Kelso and Roxburgh Parishes in 1678. Also in 1678 he was served heir to his deceased son Andrew’s lands and baronies, including the Barony of Bedrule and lands in Belses, Raperlaw, Rawflat, Pinnacle and Firth; his Bedrule lands were valued at £1632 in 1678, and included land formerly belonging to Turnbull of Bedrule. These lands were later conveyed to John, son of his brother, John of West Nisbet. Also in 1678, 1679 and 1680 he had discharges for annual rents in Selkirk. He married Agnes, eldest daughter of Sir John Riddell of that Ilk, but she died in 1635. He may then have married another woman, whose name is not known. In 1638 he re-married to Grizel, daughter of Sir Robert Halket of Pitfirrane, and she died in 1682, aged 85. His children included: Sir Andrew, son of his 1st wife, who succeeded to Cavers Carre; Isabel, who married Hugh Scott of Gala; Grizel, who married Patrick Home, Lord Polwarth; Margaret, who married Alexander Haliburton of Newmains and secondly Alexander Wedderburn (and also possibly Matthew St. Clair of Herdmanstoun); and Elizabeth, who married James Erskine of Shielfield. Another daughter may have been Christian, who married Francis Scott of Mangerton. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Bessie Dryden in 1726. In 1736 he witnessed a baptism for William Lorraine, resident of Borthaugh. Thomas of Cavers (1724–40) son of Robert and grandson of John of Cavers. In 1738 he succeeded his grandfather. He went abroad for his health with a tutor, but died at Naples. His uncle John succeeded to Cavers. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1856–1932) writer of ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, ‘The Fairest Spot o’ A’, ‘Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet’, and many poems, such as ‘Roond Aboot Hawick Moat’ and ‘Under the Shadow of the Moat’. He was born in Kelso, but raised in the schoolhouse of Drumlanrig school in Hawick, where his father James was head teacher. He trained as a draper and then worked in the hosiery trade, with John Laing’s and then Pringle’s, where he was a traveller. He was a keen sportsman, particularly of cricket, rugby and cycling. He played in the first official rugby game in Hawick, a match with Langholm in 1874, and captained the Greens 1877/8 (being only the second Captain) and 1880/1, as well as acting as club secretary. He was a Town Councillor for North High Street Ward for 12 years from 1900. He was a great Common Riding supporter, being Secretary of the Committee 1908–23, as well as Treasurer for many years. He was also a founder member and first President of the Callants’ Club; he was additionally responsible for honouring the annual dinner guest with an acrostic verse. He was a member of Lodge 111, writing their history in 1898, and acting as their Bard. Enjoying singing, he was a member of Hawick Choral Union, and sung some of his own compositions at gathering of the Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club; ‘The Fairest Spot o’ A’’ would be later transcribed from memory by Adam R. Grant, and ‘Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet’ recovered from notes found after the death of Adam Grant (senior). He also wrote episode 7 of the 1914 Pageant, based on the story of ‘Hab o’ Hawick’. He was a regular contributor of verse to the local press and the Border Magazine, often using the pseudonym ‘Tee Kay’. In 1889 he married Isabella, daughter of James McDonald and Isabella Luke, who was from Melrose. Their children were: William, ‘Bill’ (1895–1917), who died in WWI; Edith, ‘Ede’ (b.1897), who married Jimmy Russell from Peebles, a motor engineer and great friend of Jimmy Guthrie; Ronald, ‘Ronnie’ (b.1898), who emigrated and never returned to Hawick; Ruby (b.1903), who married an Alexander and spent time in India; and James, Ralph and Thomas who died in infancy. His wife appears to have suffered from mental health problems and died in Dingleton. He had a second family with Janet McDonald in Edinburgh, consisting of Thomas McDonald (b.1912), a daughter who died at birth and another daughter who was given up for adoption. His poetry is collected in the book ‘Some Thoughts o’ Mine in Song and Verse’ (1924); it contains 66 poems and 26 acrostics. Late in life he moved to Edinburgh and then to Glasgow (to be near his daughter Edith), where he died. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery, with the epitaph ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’ on his gravestone. Walter of Caver-ton and Cessford (d.1501) 2nd son and successor to Andrew. In 1450 he had a ‘letter of reversion’ to William Douglas of Cavers for the lands of ‘Blackpule’ in the Barony of Cavers; he was there stated to be son of Andrew of Altonburn and grandson or nephew of Douglas of Cavers. He witnessed a charter for James, Earl of Dou-glars in 1454 and another for William Douglas nf Sunderland in 1465. In 1471 he was son and heir of Andrew when he took possession of the lands of Borthwickshiels and Harden Wood. In 1472 he was (along with Andrew of Cessford and David Scott of Buccleuch) appointed bailie for the Earl of Angus in order to give sasine of certain lands in Liddesdale to William Douglas of Cavers. In 1473 he had conferred upon him the Bailliary and Justiciary of the lands of Kelso Abbey. In 1474 he had a charter of the lands of Cessford, Auld Roxburgh, Altonburn, Primside and others, which had been resigned by his father, confirmed in 1481. In 1475 he founded a perpetual chaplainry in Kelso Abbey. In 1479 his niece Margaret resigned the Barony of Cessford to him, as well as the lands of Feu-Rule and others. In 1483 he was witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains. In 1484 his brother ‘Radulpho’ was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in some lands. In 1488 he had a charter for Auld Roxburgh. In 1489, along with James Riddell of that Ilk, he had a decree against him for not paying the teinds to Lilliesleaf Kirk. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1493. Also in 1493 he served as surety for several men at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. In 1494/5 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh and also served as surety for several people. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1498. In 1499 he was Sheriff of Dumfries when he witnessed the saisne for George Douglas, Master of Angus gaining his local titles. Also in 1499 he had a charter from James IV for the site of the ruined castle and town of Roxburg. In 1501 he and Henry Hailie of Mellerstain compounded the fines of 25 men (mainly Rutherfords), according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1502 Adam Scott had remission for several crimes, including burning and pillaging farms pertaining to him on the waters of Borthwick and Ale. His sons were Sir Robert and Mark of Dolphinston and Littledean. He was suc-ceded by his grandson Sir Andrew. A younger daughter, Elizabeth, married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch (and was previously married to Philip, eldest son of James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells). Sir Walter of Cessford, son of Sir Andrew. He is mentioned (along with several local Scotts) in the 1529 indenture to end the feud between the Kerrs/Kers and the Scotts. As part of the arrangement one of his daughters was supposed to marry a son of Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was among the Lairds of the Borders who submitted themselves to the King in 1530 to keep better order. In 1531 he was granted his father’s lands of Hassendeanbank by the superior, William Cunningham, the ceremony taking place at Hassendeanbank. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He was Warden of the West Marches in 1536 when he bound himself to keep Edgerston Castle and to apprehend Robert Rutherford. In 1538 he was convicted (along with James Douglas of Cavers and others) of assisting several men who were ‘at the horn’, thereby breaking an earlier ‘band’. In 1536 he resigned the lands of Hassendeanbank to the Baron, William, Earl of Glencairn, and then had a sasine for them (along with his wife) in 1545. In 1537 he granted the lands of Primsid to James, son and heir of George of Linton. In 1541 he was tenant of Windydoors in Tweed, as well as Bowerhope in Ettrick. In 1543 he signed the ‘Secret Bond’ with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English influence over the young Queen Mary. In about 1544 he was recorded as Bailie of the lands of Kelso Abbey. In 1544 he was removed from office as Warden of the West Marches, accused of plotting with the Earl of Angus, assisting the English, and using the office for his own ends. He was among the local Lairds listed as having given pledges to the English in 1544. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 250 of the 500 soldiers who were mustered in Teviotdale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the ‘lard of Cesfoorth’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Also in 1547 he was gifted the bailliary of Ashkirk by the King, but in the following year burnt much of the Ale valley in retaliation for Scott of Buccleuch’s force attacking Ferniehirst and Cessford. In 1547/8 he and other Kers supported the English at the Battle of Pinkie and in burning lands of the Scotts of Branxholme. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh for this, but released to sign a bond of loyalty along with the Scotts. In 1549 Walter Scott of Buccleuch petitioned the Lords of Council to be able to post summonses against him, John Kerr of Ferniehirst and others at market crosses of Hawick and other towns, following their assisting the English in carrying out destruction; this specifically included the raiding of farms in the lower Borthwick valley, ‘clois tyne of harvist, of the cornis, cattell, guidis, geir, insicht, barnis, byris, biggingis, peilles, places, stables, howss, and duellng places’ pertaining to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. There was a further complaint that he had stolen goods from Scott of Buccleuch at Newark. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1550 and was reappointed in 1559. He was implicated in the murder of the same Sir Walter Scott in 1552, along with several other Kers and accomplices; in 1552 he pleaded for mercy to the Privy Council on behalf of the Kerrs, saying that they had been put to the horn, had their goods seized and were being pursued by the Scotts. In 1553 it was decided not to mete out further punishment and in 1553/4 he led a group of Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers and was also part of another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kerrs. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. Also in 1561 he was reappointed as Warden of the Middle March. In 1562 he and his son (on behalf of their whole band) promised not to enter Ancrum. Also in 1562 he was the first man who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. A letter is preserved from 1563 in which, as Warden of the Middle Marches, he authorised a certain Englishman to travel without harm. In 1563/4 he had a marriage contract for his son William with Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1564 there was a list of Borders lairds who swore to support him, with proclamations being made at the mercat crosses of Jedburgh, Kelso, Hawick and Selkirk. In 1564/5 he led the signatories of the bond with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his supporters, to end the family feud (partly over the slaying of the previous Sir Walter of Branxholme), promising to go to St. Giles Kirk and ask forgiveness on his knees from God and from the Laird of Buccleuch for the murder of his grandfather. In 1565 his lands at ‘the Burnes’ were raided and burned, with 2 of his servants killed, by a group of men from Liddesdale; this embroiled him in the ongoing feud.
between the Elliots and the Scotts. He signed the 'Band of Teviotdale' in 1565. Also in 1565 he had 2 of his own servants warded in England for crimes committed by servants of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and John Rutherford of Hunthill, this included a servant called Thomas Ker. In 1567 his son Thomas had a marriage contract with Elizabeth, sister of Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was an opponent of Mary Queen of Scots and fought against her supporters at Langside in 1568. In 1569 he was surety for Gilbert of Primside Loch. Also in 1569 John Rutherford of Hunthill was directed to relieve him of a debt. In 1569 and 1571/2 he was one of the men to sign bonds to suppress the Border thieves. He supported the Regent Moray at Langside in 1568 and fought for the young King at Leith in 1571. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He served as cautioner for ‘Hekky’ Armstrong in 1573 and separately for a group of Elliots, as well as being surety for the Bishop of Dunkeld in 1576. In 1576 he had a ‘decret of transumpt’ for the lands of Hassendeanbank. In 1577 he wrote to the Regent Morton about the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and Kers. In about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there was a reminder at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop the feud between him and his son William, and the Rutherfords of Hundalee, Hunthill and Edgerston, plus the Bailies of Jedburgh, George Douglas of Bonjedward and Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1582 he was the main signatory of a bond to heal a feud among the Kers, instigated by the murder of David, brother of the Laird of Linton by Kers of Graden and Davidsons. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst; in 1560 she was ‘dame Ysabel Ker lady of Cesfurd’ when she purchased quarter of the timber from Melrose Abbey. He was succeeded by his sons Sir Andrew and then William. His other children included Thomas, Agnes, Isobel (who married John Rutherford of Hunthill) and Margaret (who married Alexander, 5th Lord Home). His wife, Dame Isobel, was ‘tutrix’ for their grandchildren Grisel and Bessie. Walter of Littledean and the Hirsel (d.c.1598) son of Sir Andrew of the Hirsel. He was a servitor of the Governor of Arran 1545–46. He was listed in 1552 among the men claimed to be involved in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was listed as son and heir of Andrew of Hirsel in 1553/4 as one of the Ker pledges to keep good rule against both Scotland and England. In 1561 he was Walter of Dolphinston (son to Sir Andrew of the Hirsel) when appearing before the Privy Council. He is the ‘Wat Ker of Dolphingstoun’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford, and who was also listed among Borderers to appear before the Queen to promise to keep peace on the Border. In 1567 he was ‘of Dolphingstoun’ among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle; his surety was Robert Ker, younger, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1568/9 he is listed as being ‘of Dolphingtoune’, son and heir apparent of Sir Andrew of the Hirsel, in the bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his eldest son John is also mentioned being contracted to marry Elizabeth Murray, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. He is probably the ‘Watt’ of Dolphinston who swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with Walter of Caverton as surety. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. He was served heir to his father in the lands of Borthwick Mains in 1575. In 1576 he was surety for William Ker, younger of Cessford and was also involved in a dispute with others, including the Bailie of Jedburgh. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. In 1580 he complained to the Privy Council about the Haitlies and others. In 1581 his daughter Janet received sasine of lands in Dalcove from Thomas of Dalcove (as part of a marriage contract with Ralph, heir to Dalcove) and he received payment in redemption for the annual rent of Dalcove. He signed the 1582 bond between various Kers, following the murder of David, brother of the Laird of Linton. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4, 1588 and 1591. He was mentioned in a case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainant. In 1590/1 he was subject of a case before the Privy Court for non-payment, his son Mark appearing for him. In 1596 his sureties were his son Andrew of ‘Mylnerig’ and James, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1551 he married Euphemia, daughter of John Edmondson of that Ilk. His children included: Sir John of Littledean, the Hirsel and Jedburgh; Mark, Prior and Commendator of Coldstream, and ancestor of the Kers of Morriston; Andrew; James; and Robert. They are mentioned in a case brought against them by Julian Home, divorced wife of John of the Hirsel, to not molest her in her agreed livery of the lands of Littledean. Walter of Lochtour (16th C.) son of Gilbert and brother of Andrew of Greenhead. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. Walter (16th C.) witness to a Hawick sasine in 1622 for Allan Deans. He is described as ‘ianitore’, i.e. a porter. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew and brother of George of Faldonside. In 1598 he had a bond not to harm the Halliburtons, while the Halliburtons had a bond not to harm him or his 4 brothers. In 1599 there were assurances for him and his brother George not to harm a writer in Edinburgh. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622, along with his father James of Bewlie and his father’s servants Andrew Turnbull, Thomas Leith, John Wight and Robert Winthrope. There was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Walter of Faldonside (d.1664) probably son of George of Faldonside. He is recorded in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1622. He died without issue and this line of Kers became extinct. Walter of Littledean (d.bef. 1739) son of Andrew. He married the heiress of the family of Strother of Fowberry in Northumberland. He may also be the Ker of Littledean who married Jean, daughter of William Elliot, merchant in London, and grand-daughter of Gilbert of Stobs. His children included: Andrew, who had an illegitimate child with his maid, but died before his father; John Strother, who succeeded; Barbara, who married Sir John Scott of Ancrum; and Katherine, who married John Blackadder of St. Leonard’s. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1758 he witnessed baptisms for Robert Cowan in Borthaugh and for William Telfer in Borthaugh. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1749); Thomas (b.1751); Jean (b.1753); James (b.1755); and Robert (b.1758). The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and George Lamb. Walter of Littledean (d.1788) son of John Strother, who he succeeded in 1779. In 1754 he married Dorothy, daughter of Alexander Collingwood of Unthank in Northumberland. His children were: a daughter who died young; John Strother, who succeeded; Alexander (b.1758), who also died young; and Walter, who succeeded his brother John Strother. He and his wife are buried in Maxton. Walter (18th C.) smith in Denholm in 1780 and 1782. His surname is recorded as ‘Carre’ in 1782. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Betty (b.1776); James (b.1780); Bellow (b.1782); Andrew (b.1785); Robert (b.1787); and Mary (b.1791). Maj.-Gen. Walter of Littledean (d.1833), son of Walter. He succeeded his brother John Strother, who died unmarried in 1795. He also owned Nenthorn and East Bolton in Northumberland. In 1805–12 he was one of the 4 people who claimed succession to the Dukedom of Roxburghe. He was descended from the heirs male of the 1st Earl of Roxburghe. He lost the legal battle and this is supposed to have ruined him. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1797 he married Jane, daughter and heir of Matthew Forster of East Bolton. His children were: Walter Forster, last of the male line; Matthew, who died young; Thomas Collingwood, who died without issue; Eleanor (d.1861), who married William Gray of East Bolton; and Essex, who married John Edward Gray, her brother-in-law, and is said to have been the original for ‘Di’ Vernon in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Rob Roy’. Walter Forster of Littledean (d.1841), son of Walter. He was a Brigade-Major in the 9th Regiment and died in Madras. Thus ended the male line of Kers of Littledean. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in 1494/5. In 1502, along with James Elliot (in the same place) and Alexander Gray in Greenbank, he had remission for the murder of John Ford in Selkirk. The same men also had remission for resetting the sons of William Elliot and stealing from Fairnington, with James Ker acting as surety. Additionally, in 1502 Walter, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw was accused of stealing a grey horse from him (but had remission for this and other thefts). William of Mertoun and Yair (d.bef. 1512) younger son of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. He was tenant in the King’s lands of Yair in 1469 and re-granted the lease in 1476. He was witness to a sasine in 1471 for the lands of Borthwickshiel and Harden Wood. He was also referred to as being ‘de Martoun’ (Mertoun, in Berwickshire). In the period 1486–1499 the lands of Yair were let to him and his son William, with his son to have both steadings if he visited the Roman court. In 1493 a man obtained remission for stealing sheep from him. In 1494/5 Lawrence Rutherford in Oakwood and Adam Cranston in Oakwood each had remission for stealing livestock from his farm at Yair.
Ker

In 1494/5 he served as surety for William Stable in Yair, as well as William Turnbull and James Hall in Selkirk. Also in the same year John Scott in Tushielaw was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing sheep and cattle from his farm and tenants at Yair. He was also tenant of Williamhope as recorded in 1477 and 1499. In 1503 he was ‘de Zare’ when he witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primsideloch. He continued to have the lease of Yair until at least 1504. He witnessed a bond between Turnbulls at Caerlennig in 1505. In 1506 he was recorded as Coroner and Serjeant of the county of Selkirk. He had a charter for the lands of Boithill in Peeblesshire in 1507. In 1511/2 he was ‘in Yare elder’ when he witnessed a document in Selkirk. His wife was Christian. His son and heir was probably also William, and may have died at Flodden.

William (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of the Laird of Cessford. He was Archdeacon of Teviotdale, recorded in 1491 and again in 1510/1. However, it is unclear if he was ever confirmed in the office. William (15th/16th C.) son of William of Yair and Boithill and grandson of Andrew of Cessford. He leased the Crown lands of Yair along with his father from 1486. In 1499 he had a lease for Yair, along with his father. In 1509 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor; he was there described as ‘juniorem de Zare’. By 1512 his father was deceased when Yair was leased to him and his mother Christian. He was probably succeeded by his son Ralph. Thomas of Yair was recorded in 1528, and surely related, perhaps grandson. This is the family commemorated in Melrose Abbey by the description ‘Here lies the race of the House of Zair’. It is possible that he died at Flodden. He is probably the William in Yair who was deceased in 1532 when his daughter Margaret leased land from David Pringle in Yair. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Schaw’ in 1528. He claimed that James Murray had a false sasine for his lands of Shaws in Selkirk. His only son and heir Adam gave sasine to John Scott for lands in Selkirk. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1529/30 and was mentioned in another document in 1530, along with Adam of Shaws. In 1530/1 he and his son Adam sold their rigs in Selkirk to John Morlaw. In 1531 there is a document in which John Aitchison owed him money. In 1533 he and his son Adam sold a couple of tenements in Selkirk. In 1534 they were ‘of Sanct Helyne Schaw’ when they sold 2 separate halves of a tenement. Also in that same year he is recorded at ‘the tower of St Helyne Schaw’ when James of Mersington gave a letter of obligation to them. In 1535 he and his son sold a tenement to William Currier. In 1539 he resigned a tenement to Hector Newton and another in 1540 to James Dobie; Janet ‘in St. Helyne Schaw’ also gave her consent and may be his daughter. His son may be the Adam who, with his mother Marion Pringle, received non-entries in 1539/40; in that case his wife was Marion Pringle. William (16th C.) recorded in ‘Quhitmureha’ (i.e. Whitemuirhall) in 1531 when he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. James in Whitemuir was also listed and probably related to him. In 1533 he assigned part of ‘Quhitmuirhall’ to his ‘beloved cousin’ John; Bailie Mark and Robert, Vicar in Lindean, were the witnesses. He also witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1534. In 1535 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Rutherfords and Homes. He was probably deceased by 1540 when Janet Ker, widow of William of ‘Quhitmuirhall’ made an agreement along with her son William and George of Linton. William (d.1566) probably son of Ralph of Primside. He was Commandator of Kelso Abbey in the period 1559–66. In 1563 he witnessed a sasine for Spittal-on-Rule, sold by Douglas of Cavers to Gilbert Ker of ‘Primysidelock’ (probably his cousin). He could be the same as the ‘vmquhile William Ker of Zair’ recorded in 1574 as a surety for a bond between William Douglas of Cavers and Sir Walter Scott of Broadway. He could be the ‘William Karr brother to the said Master George’ who in 1541 was offered by Sir Andrew (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. He was murdered in 1566. William of Yair (d.1572) probably son of Thomas. He married Christian Pringle and had 2 sons and 6 daughters, including Andrew who succeeded. Sir William of Cessford (c.1543–99/1600) 2nd son of Sir Walter. He was ‘younger’ in 1569 when he served as surety for John Elliot of the Park. He may have been the Sir William of Caverton recorded in 1571, when he served as cautioner for 4 inhabitants of Hawick. He was ‘younger of Cesfurd’ in 1571/2, when he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was surety for William Douglas of Cavers, James Gledstains of Cocklaw, John Grahamslaw of Little Newton, Hector, son of David Turnbull of Wauchope, and several others, who were swearing allegiance to the Crown and not to help the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. He was still younger.
in 1573 when he was surety for presenting an Elliot. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1576 he was involved in a dispute with Turnbull of Bedrule over lands in Nether Ancrum. In 1577 he was involved with disputes with Davidsongs and Taits. In about 1578 he and his father were involved in a bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was younger of Cessford in 1581, and recorded as Warden of the Middle March and Keeper of Liddesdale, when he was bound for the re-entry of Armstrongs and Elliots. He was also Warden and Keeper in 1583 and again from 1585, assisted by his son Sir Robert. He was also Provost of Jedburgh and Keeper of Jed Forest. He inherited Sir Walter’s lands, including Hassendaleanburn and Cappitrig. In 1583/4 he was Warden when he headed a list of Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1585 he was among the noblemen listed as having their forfeitures lifted. In about 1588 he was appointed as one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He was listed as Bailie Principle of the Barones of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf in 1589. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. In 1590 the King ordered that he or his son Sir Robert would be Provost of Jedburgh for as long as they were Warden of the Marches. He was Warden of the Middle March in 1590/1 when a case was brought against the Scottish Wardens, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his cautioner. Also in 1590/1 his cautioners were Andrew of Faldonside and Andrew of Linton that he would not reset Sir Robert (younger of Cessford), who was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of William of Ancrum. He served as a Privy Councillor in 1592 and was a Commissioner for the King in actions involving Spain in 1588 and the Jesuits in 1589. He served in Parliament in 1597 and 1599. In 1562 he married Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, who was widow of James Tweedie of Drumnelzier. In about 1588 he secondly married Jean Johnstone, widow of Alexander, Lord Abernethy. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir Robert who became 1st Earl of Roxburgh. Other children included: Sir Mark of Ormiston; Margaret, who married Walter Scott 1st Lord of Buccleuch; and Elizabeth, who married James Bellenden of Broughton. William (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Newton’ in 1612, when the Lord Advocate listed a large number of men convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans. He may have been related to Robert Kerr of Newton, possibly even his son. Rev. William (16th/17th C.) son of George of Linton, his mother being Elizabeth Ker. His elder brother was James of Linton. He was minister at Lindean from 1569, deprived around 1599, but still mentioned as Vicar in 1606. He may also have been Bishop of Lismore in Ireland. In 1619 there was a complaint against him and his wife regarding a contract between them and Archibald Ker, Bailie of Bowden and his son George; he and his wife were ordered to be apprehended and have their goods seized for non-appearance. He married Marion Steill and their children included James, M.A. William of Linton (16th/17th C.) son of George of Linton. He was recorded in 1625 along with his son Andrew infefting Robert Pringle in lands in Clifton. His wife’s name is unknown and his children included: Andrew, who succeeded; William; Mark, portioner of Clifton; James; and Margaret, who married Sir William Scott of Harden (as his 2nd wife). William of Yair (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew. He is recorded in 1619 when he was still ‘younger’. There was a complaint before the Privy Council that he ‘ryding on ane little naig upon the head of the water of Reule’ when James Lorraine in Appotside threatened him with a hagbut, which misfired, and he only escaped being fired at again when some others intervened. He was still ‘appeirand of Yair’ when directed in 1621 to apprehend some rebels for the murder of his cousin James Dalma hoy. He is recorded along with his son Andrew in 1633. The Kers of Yair are buried at Melrose Abbey. William of Linton (17th C.) see William Kerr. Sir William Kerr. Sir William Kerr. Sir William Kerr. Sir William Kerr. Sir William Kerr. Sir William Kerr. was succeeded by his son Robert. Sir William of Greenhead (d.1721) succeeded his brother Andrew as the 3rd Baronet of Greenhead in 1676. He paid the land tax in several parishes in 1678. He was fined for supporting Covenanters in 1684, but was also in that year one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1686, and again in 1702 and 1706. He was thus a member of the last Scottish Parliament, and voted for the Union. He then served on the first Parliament of Great Britain 1707–08. He was also a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690 and 1704 and Colonel of the eastern regiment of militia (appointed in 1689). His brother Gilbert is recorded in sasines in 1710 and 1712. Following his death there was a legal challenge in 1726 between his grandson (also Sir William) and Walter Scott of Whitfield, William Scott of Thirlestane and Walter Scott of Woll.

William ‘Bill’ (1895–1917) eldest child of Hawick poet Tom. He became an apprentice at the Royal Bank of Scotland in Hawick at the age of 14. He enlisted in 1914 and became a Corporal in the Lothian and Border Horse. He was killed in action at Salonika in Greece. He is buried at Sarigol Military Cemetery and is listed on the Royal Bank’s War Memorial in Edinburgh (see also Kerr).

Kereti (ke-re-tee) n. Gerard (d.1363) canon of Amiens, and counsellor to the King, who also held the Rectorship of Hawick. In 1346 he obtained papal permission not to be ordained for 7 years, in order to enjoy the ‘living’ of several parishes. He was canon of Amiens and clerk and counsellor of King Philip VI of France (who lost the battle of Crécy that same year and died in 1350). It is unclear whether he was in France during this period. His brother Henry, Rector of Villers-en-bois in the Diocese of Amiens had the same petition in 1346. He may be the same ‘Guido Kieretti’ (or ‘Quiret’) who was Archdeacon of Glasgow over at least the period 1342–61 (also spelled ‘Kereti’).

Kerncross see Cairncross

Kerr (ker, kawr) n. Abraham W. (19th C.) clothier of Kerr & Mackenzie, 72 High Street. This could be the premises of the ‘Mr. Kerr’ recorded near there on Wood’s 1824 map. He married Charlotte, daughter of Hawick jailor Michael Anderson, and later re-married. Adam (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, who, along with William Miller, was rebuked in 1713 for riding on stilts on the Sabbath ‘thereby causing crowds of bairns to follow them’. Alexander Boyd (1810–67) younger son of Gen. Thomas William, his grandson Alexander Nairne would succeed to the Abbotrule Lairdship. He was born in London (when the family still owned Abbotrule). He had a military career with the 24th Madras Native Infantry, ending as an Honorary Colonel. He was involved with suppressing the rebellion at Coorg in 1837. In 1838 he married Jane Helen Campbell, daughter of Lt. Gen. Alexander Murray MacGregor and Lady Charlotte Sinclair. Their children were: John MacGregor, whose son would succeed to the Abbotrule title; Charlotte Sarah Fanny; Amelia Margaret, who died young; Helen Isabella Ramsay, who died unmarried; and Charlotte S.F., who married J. Pringle, surgeon of the East India Company; and another who died in infancy. He retired to Edinburgh and is buried in the Cannongate. Alexander Nairne ‘Alec’ (1882–1964) elder son of John MacGregor, born in India and educated at Marlborough. He joined the Army in India and retired as a Lieutenant Colonel; he also served in East Africa in WWI, for which he received the Military Cross. He was also a keen sportsman. He became the 10th Kerr of Abbotrule on the death of his cousin William in 1919. He married Eva Theresa Wayne and their only child John Kinloch became the 11th Kerr of Abbotrule. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.1405) son of Thomas. He was Cup-bearer to King Robert III. He married a daughter of Edmonson of that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.c.1450) son of Thomas. He accompanied the Earl of Douglas to Rome in 1450. He is mentioned by Thomas the Rhymer. He married Jean, daughter of Crichton of Crichton and was succeeded by his son Ralph. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.1488) son of Ralph. He married Mary, daughter of Herbert, Lord Herry. Their children included: Thomas, who succeeded to Kersheugh and may have been the first of Ferniehirst; and John, ancestor of the Kerrs of Greenhead, Chatto and Sunlaws. Sir Andrew ‘Dand’ of Ferniehirst (d.c.1545), son of Thomas of Smailholm and Margaret Kerr of Ferniehirst (although other accounts say he was the eldest son of Thomas of Ferniehirst and Catherine Ochiltree).
Kerr

He could be the ‘Andream Ker de Vuercrealing’ who was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands and titles of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. He served as surety for Simon Young in Roughlee in 1493, as well as Adam Kirkton. He was ‘Andream Ker de Farnyhryst’ in 1494 when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. In 1494/5 there was a ‘suit of peace’ against him, not to harm the Vicar of Oxnam. He was referred to being of ‘Vuir Craling’ (i.e. Over Crailing) when Sir William Colville resigned the half Barony of Feu-rule in 1499, and being ‘of Farnyhryst’ in 1501/2 when he held the half Barony; William ‘Elwald’ was there described as his follower (perhaps acting as his Bailie). In 1502 he was fined for failing to produce Patrick and Philip Turnbull in court. In 1502 he served as surety for David Oliver (‘Nae Guid Prieit’) in ‘Stryndis’ (probably ‘Strange’ in Rulewater) who had a remission for several raids around the Jedburgh area; he was also surety for another David, Robert, ‘Little John’, Matthew and Martin Oliver, all in the same place. He was also surety for Jedburgh men in 1502, as well as for his brother William. Additionally in 1502 he resigned lands in Oxnam to John Fawlaw of Softlaw. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh. In 1508 he was fined by the High Court of the Judiciary. In 1509 he resigned part of the Barony of Oxnam. In 1510 he was involved, along with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch, in an indenture with the Erskines, Barons of Synton. He witnessed the 1512/3 charter of Sir William Drumlanrig when he sold Broadlee. In 1513 he witnessed a charter for John Nesbit of Dalziel. He probably led some of the Borderers at the 1513 Sclaterford skirmish. On the night after the Battle of Flodden, he broke into Kelso Abbey and ousted the superior, installing his brother Thomas as the new Commendator. In 1525 he was among the Border Barons who signed a bond with the Earl of Angus for keeping the peace. Also in 1525 he was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill. In 1526 he was involved in the ‘Battle of Skirmish Field’, where he supported the Earl of Angus and others against the Scotts and Elliots, who tried unsuccessfully to capture the young James V. He was listed in 1526/7 among prominent men charged by James V not to attack the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme, John Crauston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton while those men were in ‘respite’ for the charge of treason. He was mentioned (along with several local representatives of the Scott family) in the 1529 indenture to end the feud between the Kerrs and the Scotts. In 1530 he was one of the Border chiefs who were briefly imprisoned for not keeping thieves in check. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1538. In 1541 he claimed to hold the lands of Ashiestiel in feu. He became Bailie of Jedburgh Forest in 1542. Documents of the early 1540s give him and his son Robert the rights to various lands, as well as the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. In 1544 he and his son John were taken prisoner by the English during a raid on Rulewater. He swore fealty to Henry in order to be released, and sided with the English army in 1545. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth and had at least 7 children, including: Thomas, who pre-deceased him; Sir John, who succeeded; Janet, who married George Turnbull of Bedrule, and secondly married Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; Isabel, married Sir Walter Ker of Cessford; Christian, married Sir James Douglas of Cavers; Margaret, who married James Menzies from Perth and secondly a Hay of Smithfield; and Robert of Ancrum, whose family carried on the Ferniehirst title after Sir John’s line died out. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andrew Karr man to Robine Elliott’ in 1590. He was accused of being in a group led by William of the Steele who stole livestock and prisoners from Catton in England. Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst (d.1631) 1st Lord Jedburgh, eldest son of Sir Thomas of Oxnam and Ferniehirst. He was ‘younger of Farnieherst’ in 1583/4 on a list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. His curators were William Douglas of Cavers and Robert Ker of Ancrum. He succeeded to Ferniehirst on the death of his father in 1585. In 1587 he served as surety for Rutherfords and Frasers, that they would appear before the Privy Council. In 1587/8 he had a charter confirming the bailiary of the lands belonging to Jedburgh Abbey (which had been held heritably by his father, grandfather and great-grandfather before him). In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. He was involved in an ongoing feud with the Scotts of Buccleuch. He is probably the Laird who was accused of being responsible for a group of 100 men raiding part of Tynedale in 1589. In 1590 his servants John Chalmers and John Kirkcaldy were killed, leading to bonds by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch not to molest him, and by 1595 he had a contract affirming he was satisfied that Scott had made amends. Also in 1590 he was accused by an Englishman of being responsible for his servant, who had stolen a horse. In 1590/1 he was cautioner for William Ker of Cessford, in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens; however, at about the same time he was among those who complained that William Ker of Cessford had reset his son Sir Robert Ker, who was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of his kinsman William of Ancrum. In 1591 he was a ‘gentleman of the King’s bedchamber’ to James VI. He was Keeper of Liddesdale in 1592, under the Duke of Lennox. He was temporarily denounced as a rebel in 1592 for helping the Earl of Bothwell. In 1593 he succeeded to the lands of Kirkaldy of Grange, through his mother. Also in 1593 he is recorded as Deputy Keeper of Liddesdale when ordered to enter ‘brokin men and utheris, inhabitants of Liddisdale’. In 1594 he and his brother Thomas were denounced as rebels for a bond they made with Sir Robert Ker, apparent of Cessford. In 1595 he inherited half the Barony of Feu-Rule from his father Sir Thomas. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation of him and Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre with Sir Robert Ker, younger of Cessford, over the murder of William Ker of Ancrum. In 1596 he had a bond for the good behaviour of several Kerrs and others; in 1602 he failed to appear to answer for many of them who were at the horn for murder and other crimes in Jedburgh. In 1597 he sat in Parliament as a minor baron. His initials, and those of his wife, were inscribed at Ferniehirst Castle in 1598. He was listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. He acted as Captain of the King’s Guard and Commissioner of the Middle Shires from around the time of the Union of the Crowns. He was also Provost of Jedburgh during the slaying of his brother Thomas by a band of Turnbulls in 1601; several Turnbulls were convicted in a protracted court case, including a counter case against him and several Kerrs and other supporters for killing and maiming some of the Turnbull party, in which it seems that the legal system was somewhat stacked in favour of the Kerrs (and he used his later elevated position to avoid trial). In 1601 he was found to have failed to produce ‘Eckie Turnebulle of Stanyleg’ and he and his cautioner Thomas Ker of Cavers were ordered to pay the penalty. Also about 1601 his servitor James Turnbull of Hobsburn is recorded disbursing money. He served as Warden of West Teviotdale 1600–03. He is probably the Andrew of Ferniehirst who held a ‘wadset’ in 1606 with Walter Scott of Todrig for the lands of ‘Harden-head’. In 1615 he had a remission for the murder of several Turnbulls and other crimes taking place while he was a Commissioner. In 1619 he was recorded as Captain of the Border garrison, with Sir William Scott of Harden as his Lieutenant. He was created Lord Jedburgh in 1622 and inherited served lands from his father in 1625. He served as an Extraordinary judge of Session and a Privy Councillor. In 1629 he is recorded gaining the Barony of Feu-Rule (as well as other lands) as heir to his deceased son, Sir Andrew, but died himself soon afterwards. In 1631 he granted a confirming charter for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. In 1584 he married Anne, eldest daughter of Andrew Stuart, Master of Ochiltree. He had a son who died before him, as well as 6 daughters, and was succeeded by his half-brother James of Crailing. His children were: Sir Andrew of Oxnam, Master of Jedburgh (d.1628); Margaret, who married Sir John Macdowall of Garthland; Jean, married Thomas Kennedy of Pinwhirrie; Alison, married John Rutherford of Hunthill; Anne; Mary; and Lilias, married a McCulloch. Sir Andrew of Oxnam (d.1628) Master of Jedburgh. He was son of Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh, but died before his father. As heir-apparent of his father, he was referred to as ‘Master of Jedburgh’. He held land in the Rule valley and specifically the Barony of Feu-Rule. He became owner of the lands of Appotside in 1610. He appears to have removed Robert Elliot ‘in Gledstains’ in 1610, not accepting him as a ‘kindly tenant’. He had a ‘contract of wadset’ for the lands of Templehall and Brewlands with George Turnbull in 1612. In 1615 he had remission for the slaughter of Hector, son of Walter of Bewlie at Lilliesleaf about Martinmas 1604, and of Hector Turnbull of Stenedge in 1611. It seems likely he was acting as an agent of the Commissioner for the Middle Shires, Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. However, there appears to have been an ongoing feud between the Kerrs and the Turnbulls. He was appointed Captain of the King’s Guards in 1618 and was appointed as a Commissioner for the Middle Shires in the same year. In 1619 appointed as a Commissioner for Teviotdale, in the absence of Robert, Earl of Roxburgh. In 1622 he still sat on the Commission for keeping peace on the Border. He was also one of the Senators of the College of Justice. He married Margaret Kerr, 3rd daughter of Mark, 1st Earl of Lothian; she was widow of Lord Hay of Yester, and usually called...
Kerr

‘the Lady Yester’. He had no issue, and in 1629 his lands of Ashiestiel were inherited by his father. His funeral procession was elaborate, with a great number of local lairds carrying banners and other regalia from Jedburgh Castle to the Kirk. Andrew of Sunlaws and Chatto (d.1661) son of the first James of Chatto, and uncle of John of Chatto and Sunlaws. He is easily confused with a nearly contemporary Andrew of Chatto. He purchased the lands of Chatto, Sunlaws, etc. from the Earl of Traquair after John of Chatto and Sunlaws had been forced to sell them. He was a supporter of the Commonwealth cause in Scotland, who was made Sheriff and Commissary Depute for Teviotdale. He was captured by Scottish Royalist forces in 1653 and brought to Borthwickbrae by a small force under Sir Arthur Forbes, who were pursued by an English Commonwealth force. There was a skirmish at Philip, where he was released, but run through the thigh by an English trooper in the struggle. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Wright of Gladswood. His children were: Joan; Christian, who married her cousin, John of Chatto; and William, said to be ‘a weakly boy’, who was served as his heir in 1678. Andrew of Chatto (1628–1705) son of Sir Thomas of Redden and Jean Ker, daughter of James of Chatto. He married Isabella, daughter of George Cranston of Bold, who died in 1675 aged 36. He secondly married Agnes (d.1718), daughter and coheir of John Abernethy, Bishop of Caithness. His children were: George (1657–88); Andrew of Chatto (1661–1702); James (1664–65); John (1665–95); Thomas (1657–1714), goldsmith in Edinburgh, whose son James of Bughtrig was M.P. for Edinburgh; James (again, 1669–1712); William (1673–1731), whose son William was a Bailie in Kelso; Jean (b.1659); Agnes (1671–1673); Isabella (1675–75); Robert (b.1678); Charles (1680–bef. 1759); and Henry (b.1682). He was ancestor of the Kerrs of Buchtrig and the Haie.

Andrew (17th/18th C.) son of Mary Kerr and John Kerr. He inherited half of the lands of Fodderlee through his mother. Andrew (18th C.) farmer at Hudhouse and Singdean. In 1755 all the stock from his farms was sold off and the Duke of Buccleuch advertised for a new tenant. It is unclear what happened to him afterwards.

Andrew (18th/19th C.) servant at Stobcote, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Andrew (b.1786/7) from Cavers Parish, he was a carter in Newcastle upon Tyne. In 1841 he was at about 9 South Liddell Street and in 1851 and 1861 at about 13 North Hermitage Street.

He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Turnbull and whose children included: William (b.1816); Isabel (b.1818); Walter (b.1820); John (b.1823); Andrew (b.1826); Robert (b.1829); Mary (b.1835); and Betty (b.1838). Anne (d.1667) daughter of Robert, Marquis of Lothian and brother of William, she was Countess of Lothian in her own right. In 1642 she and her sister Jean were served joint heirs to their father in many lands and rights, including the church of Hobkirk. She married Sir William of Ancrum, who became 3rd Earl of Lothian. Her sons included Robert, 1st Marquess of Lothian and Charles of Abbotrule. Charles (d.1690) 2nd Earl of Ancrum, son of Robert, the 1st Earl and his 2nd wife Anne Stanley. He sat in the Scottish Parliament as a Peer 1671–81 and was said to be a Parliamentary speaker of note. He sold Ancrum to Sir John Scott of Kirkstiel in about 1670. In 1678 and 1680 his lands in Abbotrule were valued at £572 and those in Hobkirk at £300. He married in 1662 and had a son who died before him. He is said to have ended his days in poor circumstances and broken-hearted. His titles eventually merged with those of his brother’s family, the Lords of Lothian. Charles of Abbotrule (1642–82) 3rd son of Sir William, 3rd Earl of Lothian and Ann, who was sister of Robert, Marquis of Lothian and Countess of Lothian in her own right. He is the ancestor of the Kerrs of Abbotrule, his father being the 1st Kerr Laird. He held a charter of the lands of Abbotrule in 1648 (or perhaps 1658), being given this Lairdship during his father’s lifetime. This was confirmed in 1664 and 1665, whereby he received full title to the estate. The land was created a barony in 1667. From 1667 until 1678 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1674 he was part of the dinner party at Swanside, after which James Douglas of Cavers was murdered by Andrew Rutherford (for which he was tried and executed). He is said to have spent much time in London and received a ring from King Charles for having the best manners at Court. In 1678 he paid land tax on £300 in Hobkirk Parish and £572 in Abbotrule Parish. He may also be the ‘Mr Charles Kerr’ who was listed holding the teinds of lands in Jedburgh Parish. In 1666 he married Cecily (or Cecil), daughter of Patrick Scott of Langshaw and Ancrum. His children were: William (b.1618); Walter (b.1620); John (b.1623); Andrew (b.1626); Robert (b.1629); Mary (b.1635); and Betty (b.1638). He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Turnbull and whose children included: William (b.1816); Isabel (b.1818); Walter (b.1820); John (b.1823); Andrew (b.1826); Robert (b.1829); Mary (b.1835); and Betty (b.1838). Anne (d.1667) daughter of Robert, Marquis of Lothian and brother of William, she was Countess of Lothian in her own right. He is said to have ended his days in poor circumstances and broken-hearted. His titles eventually merged with those of his brother’s family, the Lords of Lothian. Charles of Abbotrule (1642–82) 3rd son of Sir William, 3rd Earl of Lothian and Ann, who was sister of Robert, Marquis of Lothian and Countess of Lothian in her own right. He is the ancestor of the Kerrs of Abbotrule, his father being the 1st Kerr Laird. He held a charter of the lands of Abbotrule in 1648 (or perhaps 1658), being given this Lairdship during his father’s lifetime. This was confirmed in 1664 and 1665, whereby he received full title to the estate. The land was created a barony in 1667. From 1667 until 1678 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. His children were: William (b.1618); Walter (b.1620); John (b.1623); Andrew (b.1626); Robert (b.1629); Mary (b.1635); and Betty (b.1638).
his brother's entail; and Cecily (b.1670), who is probably his daughter who married John Scott of Gorrenberry. His son William was served as his heir in 1680 (which may have been while he was still alive). Little else is known about him. Charles (c.1734–56) 5th Laird of Abbotrule, eldest son of William. He succeeded to the Lairdship in 1752 when still quite young. He entered the service of the Honourable East India Company, probably being introduced through Col. Elliot of Wells. After receiving a commission in 1754, he died only 2 years later, it is said in the defence of Calcutta. Since he died without children, he was succeeded by his brother Patrick. Charles of Wells (18th C.) listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. It is unclear how he was related to other Kerrs. This was probably the ‘Wells’ near Jedburgh (where he paid the Land Tax in 1771). Charles (1767–1821) 7th Laird of Abbotrule, eldest son of Patrick. He was educated at the Royal High School in Edinburgh. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to David Erskine and became a Writer to the Signet in 1789. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott at school, and was to serve as the inspiration for ‘Darsie La-timer’ in Scott’s ‘Redgauntlet’; some of their correspondence was published in ‘Walter’s Postbag’ (1932). In 1792 he succeeded to the Abbotrule estate, which was probably already in debt. He is recorded in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of Abbotrule. He also paid the dog tax there in 1797. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808. In 1811 he was recorded as owner Gatehousecote, parts of Grange (formerly possessed by John Elliot) parts of Ruletownhead, ‘Bosstithill’ and Burnkinford (formerly possessed by George Dickson and George Elliot), Doorpool, Midquarter and ‘The Parks of Abbotrule’; together they were valued at about £1100. He married Mary Ann Thompson from Peel, Isle of Man, who was only 16 at the time; he was on the island to escape creditors. He was known for debts, gambling and duelling, and fled to Jamaica, where he worked as a clerk. In 1792 he returned to claim his inheritance following the death of his father. He immediately sold off Gatehousecote and Over Bonchester, but for some reason the sale was never completed, and he had them back again. In 1804 he also had a stable block built, bearing his initials. He purchased the neighbouring farm of East Fodderlee in 1806. He joined the Roxburghshire Cavalry and became recruiting officer. By 1800 he had fought 4 duels and purchased a commission as Paymaster of the 68th Regiment of Foot (the Durham Light Infantry). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In about 1814 he arranged to sell the unenclosed slope of Bonchester Hill to George Cleghorn of Weens, but desiring to change the deal at the last moment, it fell through; he blamed Cleghorn for this and is said to have had all the trees cut down on the hill to spoil the view from Weens. He then returned to the army and was Paymaster for the Royal Dragoons, perhaps serving at Waterloo. He sold East Fodderlee in 1815. In 1818 he was forced by his creditors to sell all of the Abbotrule estate (to Robert Henderson), ending his family’s connection with the area, although the Lairdship passed to son Patrick and still survives in name today. His children included: Margaret (b.1790), who married John Oliver, younger brother of William Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre; Mary Anne (b.1795); Patrick (b.1796), who succeeded; and William (1800–23), who died at Penrith. He may also have had an additional daughter. He died at Weymouth only 3 years after selling the estate. Charles (d.1835), M.D., younger son of William, who bought Gateshaw. He was Assistant Inspector of Hospitals for the Army Medical Department and was knighted for his services in 1822. In 1801 he purchased his brother’s estate from his creditors. After retirement he lived at Corbethouse, while he allowed his brother to live at Gateshaw. In 1835 he bequeathed his estate to his nephew William. Rev. Charles Alexander Gray (1933– ) educated at the Open University, Birmingham University and Edinburgh Theological College, he was ordained in 1967 and became Curate at St. Cuthbert’s in Hawick 1967–9. He went on to become a Priest in Birmingham and then Rector in Musselburgh, retiring in 1986. Christian of Chatto and Sunlaws (18th C.) eldest surviving daughter and heir of William. She was known as ‘Lady Chatto’. She extended the house at Sunlaws and had a new one built at Chatto. She married her cousin Charles Kerr, but they had no children. She left the estates to her distant relative William, son of Alexander Scott of Thirlestane and Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.1878/9) from Denholm, she was a grocer in Newcastleton. In 1852 she was listed as a shop-keeper in the village. She was also called ‘Hunter’, which was probably her married name. She lived at about 22 South Hermitage Street. In 1841 she was living with Betty Hutton or Waugh, and in 1851 and 1861 with her niece, also Betty Kerr. George of Corbethouse (16th C.) had a charter for the lands of Corbethouse in Morebattle Parish in 1526. He witnessed a charter in 1535. A transaction with George Ker of Linton in 1540 makes it clear that he probably the same man as George, son of Robert ‘in Cruikitschaws’ (i.e. Crooked Shaws). He made a pledge to serve the English King (along with many Kers and others) in 1544. He may be the ‘Johnne Ker of Corbethous’ listed in 1553/4 among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers. He was succeeded by his sons Andrew and then James. George of Lintalee (17th C.) recorded as ‘George Kerr of Lintly’ in 1628 when he was one of the pall-bearers at the funeral of Lady Isabel Kerr, wife of William, Viscount Drumlanrig, when she was buried in Edinburgh. In 1628/9 he was part of the funeral procession for Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh; there he is ‘of Lintilly’. George (17th C.) described as portioner of Fodderlee in 1631 when he had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose for lands in Lussden. He must have been related to the others Kers of Fodderlee. George (18th C.) servant to the Douglases of Cavers in 1755. He married Isabel nichol and their children included: Betty (b.1752); Margaret (b.1755); Nelly (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1759). George (d.1782) resident of the Kirkwynd. His death registration records him as ‘George Kerr Kirkwind’. He could be the George who married Betty Aitkin (also from Hawick Parish) in 1763. He seems likely to be the George who is recorded in 1811 as previous owner of the lands called ‘Allers Garden’ (then owned by John Scott), which seem likely to have been in the modern Allars Crescent. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1822 he married Helen Scott, who was also from Hawick. Their son James was baptised in 1824. Gilbert of Gateshaw (b.1749) son of William and Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. His father was Town Clerk of Kelso and Chamberlain to the Duke of Roxburgh, purchased Gateshaw from Sir William Scott of Auncrum in 1758, bringing it back into Ker hands. He was taxed for having a female servant in the 1780s. In 1780 he was ‘younger of Gaiteshaw’ when added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. Around 1800 he took over as factor of Wells estate from his uncle Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn. This also meant he was given the key of Gibraltar, a memento of his relative Lord Heathfield, which he took back to Gateshaw when he retired about 1818. He married Margaret, daughter of John Hood of Stoneridge, Berwickshire. They had 9 children: William, who succeeded his uncle, Sir Charles; Lieut. John of the 19th Regiment, who died in Ceylon; Gilbert of the Royal Navy; Thomas, merchant, who died in Jamaica; Jane; Eliza; Cecilia; Margaret, who married Francis Brodie; and Agnes. It is said that his large family resulted in financial problems, so that Gateshaw was purchased from his creditors by his brother Charles. James of Corbet (16th C.) son of George and brother of Andrew, who he succeeded. His estate was also called ‘Corbethouse’ and included the tower of Gateshaw. He was listed as being ‘of Corbithows’ in 1560 when he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. His father Andrew of Corbethouse, had been killed by John Rutherford of Hunthill and his friends as part of this feud. As part of the arrangements to resolve the feud his daughter ‘Haufie’ was to marry William, 2nd son of John Rutherford of Hunthill. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He was also listed as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scots and the Kers. However, he was one of the men involved in signing the further bond between the Kers and the Scotts in 1568/9; he is also listed there as being ‘of Corberthouse’. He may be the James in Corbet whose son John witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1582. In 1588 and 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is probably the ‘James Karr laird of Corbett’ recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with an Englishman. His sons John and Andrew were among men accused in 1590 of theft and reset from Woodend, with his sons John and James being accused in a separate case in 1590. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Kerr of Heiton. He was succeeded by his son John and also had a daughter Lillias (who married a grandson of the Earl of Bothwell). James (16th/17th C.) brother of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst, He was among Kers and others who in 1601 besieged and burned a house in Jedburgh, and were declared as rebels. James of Chatto (d.1615) 3rd son of Kerr of Greenhead. He may be the ‘James Carr of Greneheadd’ who was a deputy of the March Warden recorded in 1583; however, it is possible there are 2 generations of Jameses here. He is recorded as son to the Laird of Greenhead in 1586 when instructed to enter into court his servants George Middlemas.

Kerr

and Archie Elliot. He could be the James ‘sone to the Laird of Gernheid’ who was named in the complaint by the Homes of Wedderburn against the Kers of Littledean in 1593. He became the 1st Kerr Laird of Chatto after purchasing the lands there in 1595. In 1612 he was listed among local men accused by the Privy Council of charging too much interest on loans. He later bought other lands, including Sunlaws from William Rutherford in 1614 and Hangingshaw, Gartshawfield and Pennymuir near to Chatto. He married Christian, sister of Sir John Stewart, Earl of Traquair. His children included: James, the eldest son, who succeeded; Andrew, whose daughter Christian married her cousin John; Margaret, eldest daughter, who married Andrew Scott of Aikwood; and another daughter. His widow remarried to William, brother to Sir Robert of Ancrum. In 1622 some men were accused of stealing some of her cattle from ‘Hakkerstonne’. James of Chatto and Sunlaws (d.1631) eldest son of James of Chatto. He was said to be extravagant in habits and left debts for his successor. He married Joan, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philphaugh. He was succeeded by his son John and also had 3 daughters. Sir James of Oxnam and Crailing (d.1645) succeeded from his brother Thomas, being served heir in 1603. He was son of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and Janet, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was half-brother of Sir Andrew, Lord Jedburgh, and succeeded to the title of Lord Jedburgh, although he did not assume it (perhaps because there was a more valid heir, their distant cousin, James, grandson of William who was full brother of Andrew Lord Jedburgh). His family were in reduced circumstances compared with the times of his father. In 1611 he had a charter for some of the lands in Roxburghshire forfeited by Lord John Maxwell. In 1619 he complained that more than 100 men came to Oxnam Moor, breaking up most of the turfs that had been cut for him there and taking away the rest; this was presumably a dispute over the rights on common land. In 1620 he had a charter if lands of Belses, conferred on him by Nichol Rutherford of Hundalee (his father-in-law). In 1622 he was stated to be Captain of the Guard to the Privy Council for the Borders. He served on Parliament for Roxburghshire in 1630. He is probably the Lord Jedburgh who granted a deed to the lands of Barnhills in 1633 (hence had superiority over these lands). He was also known as ‘of Hundalie’ having inherited that estate from his wife Mary, daughter of James Rutherford of Hundalee. His children included: Robert of Crailing, 3rd Lord Jedburgh; and Jean, who married John Ker of West Nisbet. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1792 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Lizzie’) Oliver, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Janet (b.1793) and James (b.1796). James (b.c.1800) green grocer at about 73 High Street. His wife was Elspeth and their children included Elizabeth and James. James Alexander eldest son of John Kinloch, he is the 12th Kerr of Abbotrule. He married Alice Gibbs. James (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Goodfellow and their children included John (b.1840). Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. She married George Turnbull of Bedrule, who died shortly before 1528. In 1530/1 she married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (as his 2nd wife). She held a third of the lands of Bedrule from her first husband. She received the ‘liferent’ of the Lordship of Jedforest as part of the marriage contract with her 2nd husband. Because they were ‘secund and thrid of affinite, thriddis of consanguinite, and thrid and ferd of affinite’ they had to ask for special permission from the Pope. In 1546, as part of the marriage contract she was required to come to Lilliesleaf Kirk to received a sum of money; she protested that she was in dispute with Walter at that time (perhaps it was during the divorce) and would not accept the money. However, this marriage ended in divorce, with no children. Sir John (d.1562) of Ferniehirst, 2nd and succeeding son of Sir Andrew. In 1538 he was Chamberlain for the Crown’s lands of Jedforest, and was still Chamberlain in 1539, with the returns made by his brother Robert. He served as Depute to his father, who was Warden of the Middle Marches, being recorded in this role in 1541. In 1542/3 he had to appear to answer the charge of murdering Sir John Striveling of Keir. In 1544 he was taken prisoner by the English, along with his father, following a raid on Rutherford. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 125 of the 500 horsemen who were mustered in Teviotdale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He served as Bailie of Jedburgh Abbey’s lands in 1546 and was Bailie of Jedforest both under the Crown and the Earls of Angus. He was probably the ‘lard of Fernyherst’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1547 and 1548 there are records of several bonds (with Elliots, Armstrongs and others) for entering prisoners with him at Ferniehirst. In 1547/
he was one of the Kerrs who was accused of supporting the English at Pinkie, and of ravaging the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme later in 1548. This included the farms of Goldielands, Todshawhill, Whithope, Wiltonburn, Borthaugh, Todshawhaugh, Wilton Green and Whames. He was knighted in 1548. He led a force that recaptured Ferniehirst from the English in 1549, from which event the motto of the Kerr’s of Abbotrule derives, ‘J’Avance’. It is also sometimes suggested that this event is the origin of the ‘Jethart Baa’, the balls representing the heads of English soldiers. A chronicle of the time describes how they butchered the entire French garrison of Ferniehirst. He was part of the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs; in 1549 Walter Scott of Buccleuch petitioned the Lords of Council to post summonses against him and others at the market crosses of Hawick and other towns, following their assistance of the English in carrying out local destruction. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He was knighted in 1552. He was indicted for his part in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1552, along with several other Kerrs and his brother-in-law James Douglas of Cavers. In 1553/4 he was listed among Kerrs in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kerrs. Also in 1553/4 his estate was given to his sons Andrew and William, following his non-appearance to answer charges of murdering Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1557 he complained to the Regent about the behaviour of the Turnbulls of Bedrule and Hallrule raiding his lands. He purchased the lands of Ruecastle in 1558/9. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1561/2 he (and his son Sir Thomas) had a bond with several Elliots to enter a Routledge as a prisoner at Ferniehirst. There was a decree of 1562 at his instigation, against the ‘invaders’ of his lands of South Synton. In 1561 and 1562 he raised a court action regarding disputed lands in Feu-Rule, in which he claimed half the Barony and 2/3 of the other half, resulting in a ‘decreet of division’ with Agnes Herries. He appears to have acted as some kind of assis-tant Warden, since there are several bonds with him in the late 1550s and early 1560s for the capture of thieves. He married Catherine, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford. Their children were: Sir Thomas of Oxnam and later Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married John Hay, Lord Yester; Elizabeth, who married Andrew Lundin; Andrew of Nethergogar; William, Parson of Bedrule; and John. In 1562 it is recorded that the Barony of Feu-Rule (essentially the Parish of Hobkirk) was divided between him and Agnes Herries. John of Shaw (d.1688) brother of Andrew of Kipplaw, he lived at Hyndhaughhead in Southdean Parish. In 1665 at Smallholm he married Catherine, eldest daughter of Sir Robert Carr of Ettal. Their children included: Margaret (1666–90); Alison (1668–1725), who married Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee and was probably mother of Alison who wrote a version of ‘Flowers of the Forest; Thomas, Robert and Marie, who died young; William (b.1679); and Marie (again, b.1681). He died at Hyndhaughhead and is buried in Southdean Kirk. John of Chatto and Sunlaws (17th C.) son of James and Joan Murray. He was forced to sell his estates to his great-uncle the Earl of Traquair, although they were later bought by his uncle Andrew. He married his cousin Christian, youngest daughter of Andrew Kerr. His children included Henry, who married Miss Wauchope of Edmonstone, and whose daughter Barbara married Dr. Alexander Scott of Thirlestane and had a son who became William Scott-Kerr of Chatto. John of Gogar (17th C.) received the ‘ward and non-entry’ of the lands of Whitslade in the period 1663–72. John (1665–95) 3rd son of Andrew of Chatto and Isabella Cranston. He is said to have died at Fodderlie, so he must have been related to Robert of Fodderlee, presumably either his nephew or cousin. He was recorded being ‘off fotherlie’ in 1690 among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr (who may have been related to him). He is probably the ‘John Ker in Fotherlie’ recorded in Abbotrule Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the John ‘of Fodderlie’ whose will is recorded in 1695. John (17th/18th C.) servant of Walter Pringle, proprietor of Roughheugh Waulk Mill. In 1713 the Bailies heard a ‘process of riot and assassination’ against him, brought by Alexander Buchan, surveyor of ale in Hawick. John of Cavers Carre see John Ker. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Miller and their children included: William (b.1779), botanist; Andrew (b.1791); and Robert (b.1793). In 1816 he made a declaration (included in the Hawick Parish birth records), along with James Miller (labourer at Northhouse), stating that his son William had been born in Hawick in 1779. John William Robert (1794–1841) 7th Marquess of Lothian, son of William, 6th Marquess. He was styled Lord Newbottle until 1815 and Earl of Ancram 1815–24. He expanded his family estates, including acquiring Bonjedworth, Timpendean and other lands. He was a Conservative politician, serving as M.P. for Huntingdon and was Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard in the House of Lords. As Lord-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire he was charged with keeping the peace during some of the troubling elections of the early 19th century. In July 1841 he entered Hawick with a troop of dragoons who had been waiting at Hassendeanburn in order to quell the near riots. He married Cecil Chetwynd-Talbot and was succeeded by his sons William Schomberg Robert and then Schomberg Henry.

John MacGregor (1839–1915) born in India, only son of Alexander Boyd, his son was to become the 10th Kerr of Abbotrule. He joined the East India Company in 1856 and served with the 3rd Madras Light Cavalry, eventually becoming a Commandant in the Army. He retired as a Colonel after serving for 32 years. He married Janetta Margaret Nairne of Dunsinnan House, who reached the age of 100. Their children were Janet Frances, Alexander Nairne (who succeeded to the Lairdship), Ida Margaret, Lorraine MacGregor and Evan Sinclair. He was very keen on shooting, fishing and golf. A portrait exists of him as a child, as well as later photographs.

John Kinloch (1924–94) only son of Alexander Nairne, he became the 11th Kerr of Abbotrule on the death of his father, although the family had long ago sold the estate. He followed the family tradition into the Indian Army and was seconded to the Singapore Police after WWII. He married Janet Barbara Ferguson and their children James, Andrew and Rosemary were born in Singapore, with Georgina following after their return to Britain. Lorraine MacDowall (19th C.) eldest son of Gen. Thomas William Kerr of the Abbotrule family. He was born in Ceylon, served in India with the 65th Native Infantry, retired as a Lieutenant and became a merchant in Edinburgh. He married Mariane White and they had 4 children, with William Alexander succeeding to the Abbotrule Lairdship title. Margaret (c.1570–1645) daughter of Mark, Earl of Lothian. She first married James Hay, 7th Lord Yester and then remarried to Sir Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh. She was thus known as Dame Margaret, Lady Yester, and was founder of Lady Yester's Church in Edinburgh. She still owned land in Kelso and Sprouston Parishes in 1643. In her will she left money for the poor and schoolmasters of the parishes of Jedburgh, Sprouston, Hobkirk and Oxnam. In Hobkirk Parish the sum of £100 still yielded significant interest in the early 19th century. Mark (d.1584) 2nd son of Sir Andrew of Cessford. He became Abbot of Newbattle in 1546 and Commanderat at the Reformation in 1560. In 1547/8 he was among the Kers who burned lands in Ale Water that belonged to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was listed as brother of Sir Walter of Cessford in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He married Helen, daughter of George Leslie, 4th Earl of Rothes. He was succeeded by his son Mark, who became 1st Earl of Lothian. Other children included: Andrew of Fentoun and Romanno Grange, who married Isabella Whitlaw; George; William, who married Jean, daughter of James Johnstone; and Catherine, who married William Maxwell 5th Lord Herries of Terregles. Mark (1553–1609) son of Mark, Abbot of Newbattle. He became Master of Requests in 1577, Privy Counsellor in 1587 and Lord of Parliament in 1591. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1594 he was ‘lord of requests’ when appointed a deputy justice for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. In 1597/8 he was ‘Lord of Newbottle’ when he complained about Scotts from Gamescleuch, Glack and ‘Jedwartfield’ attacking and capturing his servant Ralph Ker. He was created 1st Earl of Lothian in 1606. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Maxwell, 4th Lord Herries of Terregles. He was succeeded by his son Robert. His other children included: Margaret, who became Lady Yester; Isabel, who married William Douglas, 1st Earl of Queensberry; and Lillas, who married John, 8th Lord Borthwick. Mary (17th/18th C.) only daughter of Robert of Fodderlee. She married John Kerr in 1686. In 1689 she was infested in half of the lands of Fodderlee, and in turn her son Andrew was infested in these lands in 1695. She was recorded as owner of Fodderlee in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. She was recorded as owner of ‘the east side of Fothergill’ in 1707, with a value of £80. Mary nee Scott (b.c.1813) keeper of a lodging house at 6 Cross Wynd. Her brother was James Scott, engineer and millwright. She married Thomas Kerr, who was a blacksmith on the Cross Wynd. However, she was already a widow by 1851. Her children included Margaret, Euphemia, Mary and Andrew. Ned (17th C.) merchant listed in Hawick among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. The forename given may be an error, since it is essentially unheard of locally at that time. Nichola (15th/16th C.) daughter of George of Samuelston and his first wife, Elizabeth Carmichael. She became her father’s heiress and married Alexander, Lord Home. The couple were granted the lands of Samuleston according to a charter of 1497. Her name is sometimes confusing written ‘Nicolas’. Patrick (17th/18th C.) younger son of Charles, 2nd Laird of Abbotsrule. He was described as ‘of Lustruther’. He married Agnes, daughter of Andrew Ker of Bloodlaws, and they had a son, William who is recorded in 1741. Patrick (18th C.) preacher at Teviothead from 1757 until about 1763 When James Erskine took over). His subsequent history is unknown. It is possible he was the Patrick who was ministered at Caerlaverock Castle and moved to Eskdamemuir about 1762. Patrick (d.1791) 6th Laird of Abbotsrule, a younger son of William. He inherited the estate from his brother Charles in 1756, but there was some complication over the confirmation of his succession (specifically, the establishment of the death of his brother), which did not occur until 1762. He was sometimes referred to as ‘the Abbot’. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Francis Pringle and Walter Scott. He became Writer to the Signet in 1766. He married Jean (or Jane), daughter of Andrew of Ferniehirst. In 1768 he was succeeded by his uncle’s grandson William Alexander. Ralph of Kersheugh (d.c.1350) early local ancestor of the Ferniehirst branch. About 1330 he was given lands near the Jed Water, with the Douglases as superiors, possibly being the first family member to settle in Teviotdale. The lands were previously known as ‘Scraesburgh’, known by him as ‘Kersheugh’ or ‘Kershaugh’ and were essentially the same as what was later called Ferniehirst. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. Ralph of Kersheugh (d.c.1460) son of Andrew. He married Mary, daughter of Towers of Innerleith. His sons included: Andrew, who succeeded; and Robert of Yair. Sir Robert (d.1511) Warden of the Middle March who was said to have been murdered by an English trio called Starhead, Lilburn and John ‘the bastard’ Heron. This was used an excuse for King James embarking on the invasion that led to Flodden. The date may be erroneous and confused with Sir Robert Ker of Caverton, who died c.1500. Robert of Woodhead and Ancrum (d.1588) 3rd son of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. In 1539 he made the returns for the Crown land’s of Jedforest, with his brother John as Chamberlain. He had a charter of the lands of Woodhead in the Lordship of Over Ancrum in 1542. He also had a charter for a third of the lands of Dirleton, and also Newton in the Barony of Bedrule. He may be the ‘Robyn Ker’ who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. In 1551 he served on the panel for David Home of Wedderburn inheriting lands in Ettrick Forest. He became quite wealthy, and was involved in dubious activity around Jedburgh, at one point taking several Burgesses prisoner. It appears that in 1548 he applied for an assurance from Somerset that he could travel to his own house in order to serve the English King. The house he built at Ancrum had an inscription ‘Robert Ker and Isobel Home Foundar and Compleitar 1558’. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He was in ward in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1564, as a result of accusations by Andrew of Faldonside. He is mentioned as one of those excepted in the bond between the Scotts and the Kers in 1564/5. He was in ward in Edinburgh in 1565, with Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst, Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and John Rutherford of Hunthill, younger, as sureties. He was released, but this was an error and he was ordered to present himself again to be warded in 1565/6, with a case brought against him by William Turnbull, Burgess of Edinburgh, resolved shortly thereafter. In 1567 he signed a bond to support the infant King James on the throne and was also among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1569 he was a surety for George Rutherford of the Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. He was in ward in 1571 and also ordered to pay for a cask of wine. There is an existing list of his ‘plenishing’ as removed by the Jedburgh authorities (led by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, along with other Turnbulls and Ruthefords) in 1571; in 1573 he complained about the raid on his house, but the authorities ruled that he had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, and had no right to complain. In 1571 and 1574 he was surety for his illegitimate sons Robert and William. In 1582/3 he was fined by the Privy Council along with Martin Elliot of Braildie and Gavin’s Jock Elliot for the non-appearance of 2 Elliots from Ramsigill. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He signed a marriage contract in 1586 between his son Robert and Helen Grahamslaw of Newton. Either he or his son was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace in 1617. He married Isabel, daughter of David Home of Wedderburn. He was succeeded by his son William, and was grandfather of Sir Robert, the 1st Earl of Ancrum. Other children were Robert of Newton, Thomas, Catherine (who married Henry Haliburton of Mertoun) and Isobel (who married George Douglas of Bonjedward). Robert of Newton (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Woodhead and Ancrum. In 1586 he purchased Newton, in Bedrule Parish from John Grahamslaw. Also in 1586 he served as surety for his brother William of Ancrum to appear before the Privy Council; he was also surety for William Kirkton at the same time. He was later in 1586 denounced as a rebel for not appearing. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1590/1 he was among those who complained that William Ker of Cessford had reset his son Sir Robert Ker, who was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of his brother William of Ancrum. In 1592 his surety was James Douglas, Commedator of Melrose. In 1594 he was denounced as a rebel for an assurance signed with Sir Robert Kerr, heir apparent of Cessford; along with his brother William he was warded in Dumbarton Castle. He married Helen, daughter of the same John Grahamslaw and was succeeded by his son Robert, who married Euphemia Douglas. He and his wife were declared rebels in 1601 for failing to make payment to Sir William Stewart of Traquair; Stewart complained in 1603 that although they had been in the Jedburgh Tolbooth, they were then freely living in their own house, and so they were to be denounced once more. In 1619 there was a dispute between his wife and her son-in-law John Scott of Huntly; so he must have had a daughter who married Scott of Huntly. Robert (d.1624) eldest son of Mark, he was 2nd Earl of Lothian. He married Annabella, daughter of Archibald Campbell, 7th Earl of Argyll. Without surviving male issue his elder daughter Anne became Countess of Lothian in her own right and married Sir William of Ancrum, who became 3rd Earl of Lothian. In 1641/2 his daughters Anne and Joanna were served heirs to many of his lands and rights, including the church of Hobkirk. Robert of Newton (d.c.1639) son of Robert and uncle of Robert, Earl of Ancrum. In 1622 he (or perhaps his father) gained lands resigned by his cousin Sir Robert Kerr of Ancrum. His lands included Newton in Bedrule Parish. In 1628 he was listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. He married Euphemia Douglas. He was succeeded by his son William. Sir Robert 1st Earl of Ancrum (1578–1654) son of William of Woodhead and Ancrum (who was killed in 1590) and descended from the Kers of Ferniehirst. His brother William is recorded in 1602. Also in 1602 he was cautions for some Ruthefords in Jedburgh and he signed the bond among Border lairds for keeping the peace, when he was

Provost of Jedburgh. He was made a Knight of the Bath in 1603. He was served heir to his father in 1603 and his grandfather in 1608. He followed King James to London and spent much time in Court; however, he was forced to flee the country, having become involved in the feud between the Maxwells and Johnstones, in which he slew Charles Maxwell in a duel. He then spent time on the Continent, where he collected art (later presenting them to Charles I). Restored to his post in the Royal Bed-chamber, he acted as Charles I’s advisor on Scottish affairs. He as Captain of the King’s bodyguard until 1613 and served as Keeper of the Privy Purse. He was created Earl in 1633 and had his portrait painted by John Eycks. He was known for his interest in the arts, and wrote poetry himself. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Murray of Blackbarony, and sister of the wife of Sir John Riddell of Riddell. He secondly married Anne Stanley, only daughter of the 6th Earl of Derby (whose portrait was painted by Cornelius Johnson), and widow of Sir Henry Portman. His children (all but the first by his 2nd marriage) were: William, who became the 3rd Earl of Lothian; Charles, who became 2nd Earl of An crum; Stanley, who died without issue; Vere, who married Dr. Wilkinson of Oxford; Anne, who married Col. Nathaniel Rich of Stondon; and Elizabeth. There is an interesting correspondence (sometimes called the An crum papers) still in existence between him and his son, covering about the last 30 years of his life, during some of which he was living in Holland to escape Cromwell’s England, as well as his creditors. He was a friend and supporter of the poet John Donne and was bequeathed one of the most recognisable portraits of him when he died; this is now in the National Portrait Gallery. He died in Holland, being reduced to poverty in late life. Robert (17th C.) son of George and brother of Sir Thomas of Cavers. He acquired the lands of Middlemas Walls (also called the Mains of Softlaw). He is probably the ‘Robet Ker of Cavers’ who complained to the Privy Council in 1628 about William Turnbull in Braidaugh obstructing the apprehension of his son James, and for ‘hurting and wounding him’. In 1643 he is ‘of Middlemistwalls’ when recorded owning lands on Sprouston Parish. He married Isobel, daughter of Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and was probably succeeded by his son Thomas of Middlemas Walls. Robert of Prieston (17th C.) owner of the north part of Prieston in 1678. He was listed in 1680 among Borderers convicted for being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’; however, he did not appear in court, and was presumably in hiding at that point. Robert of Fodderlee (17th C.) recorded in 1685. He must have been a son of one of the landed branches of the Kerrs; he was surely related to John, the 3rd son of Andrew of Chatto, who was born in 1665 and died at Fodderlee in 1695. In 1686 his only daughter Mary married John Kerr. Robert (d.1692) son of Sir James of Cralling and Marie Rutherford. He inherited Hundalee through his mother, who was daughter and heiress of Nichol Rutherford of Hundalee. He repurchased the Ferniehirst estate from the Earl of Lothian. He became 3rd Lord Jedburgh in 1670. He paid land tax for Ricclaton, Ferniehirst, Hundalee, Over Crailing and other lands in 1678. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Alexander Hamilton of Innerwick and widow of Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth. He had no children and was succeeded by his distant relative William, eldest son of the 1st Marquess of Lothian. However, the estates of Hundalee and others were inherited by his sister’s son, John Kerr of Cavers. He was effectively the last of the male line of Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His will is recorded in 1693. Robert (1636–1703) eldest son of Sir William, he was 4th Earl of Lothian from 1675, became 3rd Earl of Ancrum in 1690 and the 1st Marquess of Lothian in 1701. He was a volunteer in the Dutch War in 1673. He paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. About 1685 he raised a troop, with Sir William Elliott of Stobs as Lieutenant, to round up local Covenanters. He supported the Revolution of 1688 and served the government of William III. He married Jean, daughter if the Marquess of Argyll. He had 10 children, including: William, who was known as Lord Jedburgh before he succeeded; Charles; John, of the 31st Regiment; Mark, commander of the 11th Dragoons, who is mentioned in the song ‘Johnnie Cope’; and Mary, who married James, Marquess of Douglas, and was mother of the Duke of Douglas and Lady Jane, who had twins at the age of 52, with the succession argued in court. Robert of Cavers (17th/18th C.) son of John and Agnes Ker. His name is often written ‘Carre’. He succeeded to the patronage of Bedrule Kirk, as well as the Cavers Carre lands. In 1718 he married Jane, daughter of Robert Mine of Balnillo, and she died in the following year. He secondly married Helen, sister of Sir Walter Riddell, 1751 Baronet of Riddell. His son Thomas inherited the estate, but died in his youth. The lands then went to his brother John. However, patronage of Bedrule went to his daughter Agnes and her husband John Hume of Ninewells and Ferny Castle (brother of David Hume the philosopher). He also had another daughter, Margaret. Robert (b.c.1790) born in Cavers Parish, he was a tailor in Newcastleton. He is probably the Robert in Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 5 Montagu Street. His wife was Helen or Ellen and their children included Robert (carpenter), John, Francis and Walter. Robert (b.1822/3) son of tailor Robert. He was a joiner in Newcastleton. He married Margaret, daughter of John Cavers. Their children were Margaret, Robert, an unnamed daughter, John, Walter, John Cavers, Helen, Janet, and Francis Napier. The family emigrated to Manitoba, Canada. Robert (19th/20th C.) resident of Effledge. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Schomberg Henry (1833–1900) 9th Marquess of Lothian, son of John, the 7th Marquess and brother of William Schomberg, the 8th Marquess. He spent much of his life in the diplomatic service, in Lisbon, Tehran, and then several European cities. He was Colonel of the 3d Battalion Lothian Regiment. He contested Roxburgh county for the Conservatives in 1868, losing to Sir William Scott of Ancrum. He lived for a while at Monteviot. He gained the lands of Belses, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow from John Edmund Elliot of New Belses in 1872. He also served as Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire and was also Deputy-Lieutenant of the county from 1885. He was also Rector of Edinburgh University, Secretary of State for Scotland, Keeper of the Privy Seal, Captain-General of the Royal Company of Archers, Gold Stick of Scotland, etc. Lothian Street in Hawick was named after him. In 1865 he married Lady Victoria Alexandrina Montagu-Douglas-Scott and hence was son-in-law of Walter, 5th Duke of Buccleuch. His children were: Cecil Victoria Constance, who married John Walter Douglas-Montagu-Scott; Walter William Schomberg, who died from a gun accident in Australia; Margaret Isobel, who lived to 96; Schomberg Henry Mark, died in infancy; Mary, who married Henry Kidd; Helen Victoria Lilian, who married Col. Frederick Walter Kerr; Robert Schomberg, who succeeded, but had no sons; Victoria Alexandrina Alberta, who married Maj. William Gosling; and Isobel Alice Adelaide, who married James Cospatrick Hepburne-Scott. The Lothian titles were inherited by the families of his brothers Ralph and then Walter. Thomas of Kersheugh (d.1389) son of Ralph. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Somerville of Carnwarth. He was succeeded by his son Andrew. He may have had another son, John, who settled near Aberdeen. Thomas of Kersheugh (d.c.1430) son of Andrew. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Home of that Ilk. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, and had other sons Thomas and James. Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst (d.1499) son of Andrew of Kersheugh. He was the first of his family to be designated ‘of Ferniehirst’. He probably built the original tower there, sometime around 1490. He also had a new charter of his lands from Archibald, Earl of Angus. In 1474 he was summoned to Edinburgh by the King, probably relating to keeping peace on the Border. In 1476 he is listed among other Border Lairds in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville. He married Catherine, daughter of Robert Colville of Ochiltree (who died at Flodden). It is unclear if they had any sons, but they also had a daughter, Margaret, who married Sir Thomas of Smallholm (with whom he is easily confused, and indeed some genealogies have claimed they are the same man). Thomas of Smallholm (d.1484) son of Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn (whose name is usually spelled ‘ Ker’). He was probably the builder of the original Smallholm Tower in the 1470s. He may be the ‘ Thom Ker’ who was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. He married Margaret Kerr of Kersheugh, daughter of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst, through whom their son probably gained the lands of Ferniehirst. He was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. Other children include: Ralph of Primside, ancestor of the Cavers Carre branch; Thomas, Abbot of Kelso, d.1528; George; and William, who had a charter of Langlee and ‘ Gallastongis’. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness in 1501 to a notorial instrument relating to Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst’s lands of Feu-rule in the Barony of Cavers. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas of Lintalee (15th/16th C.) first man named on the panel of ‘ retour’ for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branxholme in 1517. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. He may be related to the later Ralph of Lintalee. Sir Thomas of Oxnam and Ferniehirst (d.1585) eldest son of Sir John and Catherine Ker of Cessford. He could be the ‘Thomas Kerr son to John Kerr’ who in 1541 was offered on behalf of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. In 1561/2 he (and his father Sir John) had a bond with several Elliots to enter a Routledge as a prisoner at Ferniehirst. He succeeded on the death of his father in 1562. Also in 1562 he was among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Later in 1562 he was ordered to appear before the Privy Council and to remain in ward, along with his brothers Andrew and William. He was a strong supporter of Queen Mary, accompanying her to Dumfries in 1565, and helping her escape from Lochleven in 1568. In 1564 he was listed as the ‘Lard of Pharnyhirst’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was involved in a feud with the Homes about 1564. Also in 1564 he was warded in Edinburgh Castle, at least partly for non-payment of teinds to the Commendator of Jedburgh; it is also reported that he and his brothers Andrew and William forcibly took the teind sheaves of Bedrule and Innerleithen. In 1564/5 he was specifically listed as an exclusion in the bond to end the feud with the Scotts, while his brothers Andrew, William and John were listed as part of the bond. In 1565 he was explicitly instructed (along with John Rutherford of Huntthill) to enter one of his servants at the next truce day, to answer accusations from Englishmen; later this was increased to 2 servants to relieve the Warden, with him himself being warded in Edinburgh Castle to redress the charges against his servants, and then was ordered to pay the expenses to Ker of Cessford. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. Additionally he was a surety for Robert Kerr of Woodhead in 1565 and was among those summoned before the Privy Council to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and the people of Jedburgh. In 1566 he was ordered not to molest his mother, Dame Katherine Ker, or her other children and servants. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He was also ordered to present a number of Turnbulls and others to answer charges of raiding into England. In 1568/9 he is still explicitly excluded from the bond signed between the Kers and Scotts. In 1569 he also signed the bond to suppress thieves on the Border. In 1569 he and some others were sureties for George Rutherford in the Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. In 1570, along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, he raided into England, with Sussex and Hunsdon retaliating by demolishing Ferniehirst the same year. He was Baron of Feu-Rule, as well as holding other local titles; however, he appears to have forfeited these temporarily. His mother brought a decreet of removal against him in about 1571. He was accused of treasonous acts in 1571 (and confirmed in 1574), probably meaning that he had not given up Catholic sympathies. In 1571/2 he fled from Edinburgh, meeting his supporters under Alexander Trotter and was reset at Ancrum Woodhead by Robert Kerr. He later fled to France, but returned several years later and was rehabilitated in 1581. In 1581 he gained the estates, baronies and lordships given up by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. This included the Barony of Feu-Rule and lands of Hall-rule and others. In 1581 he also had a ‘benefit of pacification’ from the King, for crimes committed by him and his followers in the period 1567–74. There was a dispute between him and Thomas Turnbull, Baron of Bedrule, as well as the parishioners of Bedrule, over the rights of the benefice, the teinds etc.; this must have been at least somewhat related to the Reformation and the ouster of the Catholic priests. He was also Provost of Jedburgh. He may have been temporarily Keeper of Hermitage in 1563 when some Elliots are recorded in a bond to enter Jock Elliot with him. He was Warden of the Middle Marches, appointed sometime in the 1570s and perhaps again in the last couple of years of his life. He certainly served as Warden of the Middle Marches and Keeper of Liddesdale Castle by 1583. In 1585 a fray took place following a meeting of the March Wardens, in which Sir Francis Russell was killed (the English first saying it was an accident, but later accusing him of deliberately plotting the murder). His Royal Commission for pursuing offenders in order to keep peace on the Border was revoked in 1585, since he was found to be using this power to pursue his enemies for his own purposes. As a result he was committed to ward in Aberdeen, where he died. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Kirkaldy of Grange and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh. Other children by his first marriage were: Julian (or Janet), who marred Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth, and Thomas Hamilton, 1st Earl of Haddington; Margaret, who married Robert, Baron Melville; Mary, who married James, son of William Douglas, 6th Lord Lord Morton; and William, who married Elizabeth Lyon and was also called Kirkaldy of Grange. Portraits exist of him and his wife. In 1569 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and sister of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buculech; this was part of the 1564/5 bond between the Kerrs and the Scotts, and he was still owed £1000 of dowry money according to the 1574 testament of Sir Walter Scott. In 1573/4 his wife was granted lands in Oxnam and Ashiestiel (while he was in exile), but there were complaints that Dame Catherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst (his mother) and Andrew Kerr (his brother) were harassing her farms. Their children included: Sir James of Crailing; Thomas of Oxnam; Ann, who married John Elphinstone, 2nd Lord Balmerinoch; and Robert, 1st (and last) Earl of Somerset, who took the surname ‘Carr’. In 1590 his son and wife were charged with not repaying a debt that he had incurred while in England. In 1592/3 his wife Jean Scott, ‘Lady Pharnyhirst’ was in dispute with Sir Robert Ker of Cessford over crops from Redden. Thomas of Oxnam and Over Crailing (d.1601) younger son of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and brother of Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh, who was Provost of that town. There was a serious feud between the Kerrs and the Turnbuls in the later years of the 16th century and early years of the 17th. He and his servants Andrew Hogg and George Gardner were declared as rebels in 1596 for the murder of Henry Oliver in ‘Hyndmureheid’; he claimed that they had a ‘relaxation’, and in 1599 the Sheriff of Roxburghshire was accused of failing to bring the men to justice. He was killed at Jedburgh Rood Day Fair in 1601 in a fight between the 2 families, when about 30 Turnbuls and allies from the Minto area came to specifically seek him out. He was slain along with his servant George ‘Glaidsher’ (or ‘Glaidner’), while on the other side Robert Turnbull of Bewlie and John Middlemas (brother of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel) were killed, and several men were seriously wounded. A number of Turnbuls were murdered in the following years by members of his family, including Hector Turnbull of Bewlie, who may have been one of those responsible in 1601. The case continued until 1604, with Hector Turnbull of Lilliesleaf declared a rebel for the murder of him and his servant. He had no children and his brother Sir James succeeded to the Oxnam and Crailing titles after his death. Sir Thomas of Redden (16th/17th C.) 3rd son of William of Ancrum and Woodhead. He is probably the Thomas of Ancrum who in 1628/9 was part of the funeral procession for Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh. He may be the Thomas ‘Ker of Ancrum’ whose lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale are recorded in 1632. He spent much time abroad in the army and after his return was knighted in 1633. In 1637 he objected his daughter Jean marrying Sir John Ker of Lochtour, but the marriage went ahead later anyway. In 1643 he appears in the county valuation records for Sprouston Parish as being ‘of Gateside, his lands in Reddin’. He married Jean, daughter of James of Chatto. Their children were: John (d.1645); James of Redden, whose successor was Capt. Charles of Redden; Andrew of Chatto; Jean, who married Sir John Kerr of Lochtour and secondly Sir John Wauchope of Nithsdale; Katherine; Christian; and Vair (b.1636). He secondly married Mary Douglas and they had daughters Margaret, Mary and Anne. He also had an illegitimate son, George (b.1639), with Agnes Wilson. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as being ‘of Ancrum’ when his extensive lands in Liddesdale were listed in a Privy Council document. It is unclear who he was, since Sir Robert was Laird of Ancrum at that time (and would become 1st Earl), but he may have been the same as Thomas of Redden, brother of Sir Robert. His Liddesdale lands included Catlee, Dinlees, Over and Nether Tinnisburn, ‘Civishill’, Staneygill, Foulwood, ‘Wilwhiols steid’, ‘Megie Tweedmes’, Whisgills, Raltonholm, Copshawholm, Gillfoot, Christie’s Hill, Pollock and Kirkhill. He was also part of a bond, recorded in 1637. Thomas William (1768–1825) 2nd son of Patrick, the 6th Laird of Abbotrule and brother to Charles, the 7th Laird. He was born in Southdean and entered military service as a Lieutenant in the 73rd Highlanders (Black Watch), eventually becoming a Major General. He may have served as Governor General of Ceylon and it is said that Raeburn painted his portrait. He married Sarah Anne, daughter of William Ker of Meadow House in Berwickshire, and she died in 1812, aged just 26. They had 5 children: Loraine McDowall, who was a Lieutenant in the 65th Native Infantry and later a merchant in Glasgow, and whose son William Alexander succeeded; Margaret Amelia, who married John, son of Francis Brodie; Alexander Boyd, whose grandson Alexander Nairne succeeded; Charles, who died young; and Sarah Anne, who married Alexander Maclean, minister of Carnwarth. The 3 oldest children were shown in a painting along with their mother. He is buried at Cannongate Cemetery, Edinburgh. Thomas (c.1810–bef. 1851) blacksmith on the Cross Wynd. He married Mary Scott in 1837; she was probably daughter of millwright Gideon Scott, who lived next door at 8 Cross Wynd. The 1841 census records him at No. 6, living with his wife Mary and children Margaret and Euphemia. There were further children, Mary and Andrew, but he died before 1851, when his wife was a widow running a boarding house at the same Cross Wynd address. His daughter Mary married Rev. Robert Fordyce, minister at West Port. William (16th C.) brother of Andrew of Ferniehirst. In 1529/30 he had a charter for the lands of Woodhead in the Lordship of Over Ancrum. He could be the ‘Willelmo Ker’ who witnessed the ‘precept’ by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme infesting his son David in his lands in 1528. He may be the William who was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill in 1525. It is possible that he was the William who had 101 sheep of his stolen by the Olivers of Strange according to a case at the 1502 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh; the Olivers had remission for these thefts, their surety being Andrew of Ferniehirst. He was also listed as brother of Andrew in a 1502 case where he was pledge for ‘gilbert chirdane’ in Jedburgh. William (d.c.1563) a younger son of John of Ferniehirst. He was presented to the Kirk of Bedrule in 1557. In 1562 he was recorded as sometime Parson of Bedrule (and spelled ‘Ker’). Also in 1562 he is probably the William, along with his brother Thomas of Ferniehirst, and their other brother Andrew, who were ordered to remain in ward, or be fined £1000; this was presumably related to accusations against his brother Thomas. In 1563 he is recorded along with Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and Sir John Allan in a ‘crown precept’ brought by Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and the parishioners of Bedrule, charging them to produce their writs proving that they are entitled to the benefices of the parish. This suggests some dispute over who was the minister in this time of the Reformation. Probably William held much of the benefice (like in pre-Reformation times), while John Allan was the actual minister. In 1564 he was accused along with his brothers Thomas of Ferniehirst and Andrew, were accused of forcibly taking the teind sheaves of Bedrule and Innerleithen parishes. William of Ancrum and Woodhead (d.1590) son of Robert of Ancrum and brother of Robert of Newton. In 1572 he was convicted for the murder of 2 Burgess of Jedburgh and in 1574 was obliged to appear before the Privy Council. In about 1578 he was excluded from a bond by the Kers and Rutherfords, since he had been declared a fugitive for the murder of John Rutherford and others in Jedburgh. He was still ‘younger’ of In about 1583 he obtained the gift of the ‘escheat of the liferent’ of the lands belonging to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, his son Walter and Mungo Bennet of Chesters. He was described as William of Ancrum in 1586, when he had an obligation to Hugh Nisbet of Reishill. He was son and heir apparent of Robert in 1585/6 when 6 he was involved in a court case with the Bailies of Jedburgh about whether lands granted to him were in their jurisdiction; they also blamed him for the murder of 3 local men and said he was in a feud with the Moscrops. In 1586 he insisted that the Sheriff of Teviotdale should enter him into possession of the lands of Bedrule, Chesters and Halden, but failed to appear personally. Also in 1586 Andrew Ker of Greenhead served as surety for him to appear before the Privy Council; at the same time he was surety for his brother Robert and they were both stated to be sons of Robert of Ancrum when reminded to appear ‘to answer touching the quietnes and gude ordour of the Middle March’. They were all later denounced as rebels for not appearing. He was also denounced in 1586 for not appearing to answer charges of stopping the Commendant of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is probably the Kerr of Ancrum listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. He married Margaret, daughter of Alexander (or Archibald) Dundas of Fingask, who was widow of Sir David Home of Fishwick. Their children were: Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Ancrum; Sir Thomas of Redden; Isabel, who married John Ker of Corbethouse; William of Overton, Sunlaws and Linton, Groom of the Bedchamber to James VI and Charles I; Andrew, who probably died abroad, unmarried; and George, probably Canon of Glasgow. He was killed by Robert Ker (younger of Cessford), who was later 1st Earl of Roxburgh; in 1590/1 there were cautioners appointed for other Kers not to reset Robert Ker and his accomplices, who were ‘at the horn’ for his murder. The feud between the 2 families was not resolved until letters and payments made in 1606. William (16th/17th C.) recorded ‘in Newton’ in 1755.

Kerr

1612 among men accused of charging too much interest on loans. This was probably the Newton in Bedrule Parish, and he was surely related to the other Kerrs of Newton. It is recorded that the appeared to answer the accusation and hence probably paid a fine and was released. William of Overton and Sunlaws (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Ancrum and brother of Sir Robert of Ancrum. He was sues for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Bewlie and others in Jedburgh in 1601, but was never convicted. He was among Kerrs and others, dependents of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who in 1601 besieged and burned a house in Jedburgh, and were declared as rebels. Probably the same William of Lintoun’ was in 1617 among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He was on an assize in 1622. Also in 1622 he was appointed to assist Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in keeping peace on the Border. In 1625 he had a charter of the lands of Overton from his father William of Ancrum, and was styled ‘of Linton’ in a confirming charter of 1629; this makes him easy to confuse with the Ker Lairds of Linton, to whom he was not closely related (however, it is not clear if it was the same Linton). In 1630 he was served heir to his brother George, Canon of Glasgow. He served as Groom of the Bedchamber to both James VI and Charles I. He married Isabel, daughter of Sir John Ker of Littledean and the Hirsel. Their children included: James; Janet (or Joneta), who married Lancelot Pringle; William, who married Anne, daughter of Philip, Lord Wharton; Henry; Letitia (or Lettice), who married Alexander Popham of Littlecote; and Anne, who first married a younger brother of her sister Letitia’s husband, and secondly married Philip Lord Wharton, father of her brother William’s wife! He was still alive in 1640. William (16th/17th C.) Sheriff-Clerk Depute of Roxburghshire, recorded in 1620 when he was witness to a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule. He may be the ‘William Ker’ who signed the Covenant in Hawick in 1638. William of Newton (17th C.) son of Robert, from whom he was served ‘heir special’ (perhaps meaning he was underage) in 1639. This was composed of Newton, including the newly built mill, and ‘lie Smiddielands’. He was confirmed in the lands of Newton (in Bedrule Parish) in 1642/3. He is probably the ‘W. Kerr of Newton’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1646–47 and 1656–58 he was one of the Roxburghshire representatives in Parliament. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was Lieut.-Col. of the regiment of horse raised in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined. He was probably the Laird of Newton who paid the Land tax on £853 in 1663 and 1678. He married Agnes, daughter and co-heir of John Abernethy, Bishop of Caithness. He may also have married Janet, daughter of Sir William Murray of Dumierre. He had 3 daughters, Euphemia (who may have been 2nd wife of William Kerr of Cherrytrees), Agnes and Margaret (who married Andrew Kerr of ‘Sowcoatt’, possibly Chatto). Another daughter may have been Christian, who married William Turnbull of Sharplaw. He could be the William of Newton whose will is recorded in 1691 (unless that was the next generation). Sir William (1605–75) Earl of Lothian, eldest son of Sir Robert, Earl of Ancrum by his 1st wife Elizabeth Murray. His 1631 marriage to Anne Kerr (daughter and heiress of Robert, 2nd Earl of Lothian), who was countess of Lothian in her own right, made him 3rd Earl of Ancrum. A series of letters between him and his father still exists. He married Anne Kerr, who was Countess of Lothian in her own right, and was elevated to the peerage as the 3rd (or 1st) Earl of Lothian. His marriage reunited the Ferniehirst and Cessford branches of the family. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. He raised the Teviotdale Regiment (also known as ‘Lothian’s Regiment’) in 1639 as part of the Covenanters. The Regiment crossed the Tweed with Montrose in 1640 and when Newcastle was captured Lothian was made Governor, with a garrison of 2,000 men. He resigned after the Battle of Fyvie, and the Regiment was disbanded in 1641, but reformed the next year. He had a confirmation of the Lordship and Barony of Jedburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was appointed as one of the Colonels of Foot for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. Also in 1643 he was recorded as holder of the teinds for much of Jedburgh and Linton Parishes, as well as the lands of Over Ancrum, Woodhead, Braidlaw, Palacehill and Belses, the teinds of Over Ancrum and lands in Longnewton Parish. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He acquired Ferniehirst and Riccalltoun in 1646 (from the creditors of Andrew, Lord Jedburgh), but in 1669 settled them on Robert Kerr of Crailing (later Lord Jedburgh). He became Scottish Secretary of State in 1649, and was one of the Commissioners negotiating with Charles II in 1650. He lived much of his life at Newbattle Abbey, but also held lands at Fernieclees and Templehall (part of Harwood on Rule), which he is recorded giving over for a loan from Walter Riddell in 1649 and 1652, and then transferring to Mark ‘Carre’ (presumably a relative) in 1658. He was also the 1st Kerr of Abbotrule, acquiring the land perhaps around 1642, and gained the Barony of Feur-Rule in 1649, later selling it to Elliott of Stobs. Like many others, he was fined in 1662. He is recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 in the parishes of Ancrum and Crailing, Hobkirk, Jedburgh, Longnewton and Oxnam. His children were: Robert, 1st Marquess of Lothian; Sir William of Halden; Charles of Abbotrule; John; Anne; Elizabeth; Mary; Margaret; Vere; Henrietta; Lilias, who probably married Thomas Lewin of Amble; and at least 4 other children who died young. A portrait exists of him. William of Chatto and Sunlaws (1653–1721) only son of Andrew. Although apparently expected not to survive to succeed, he lived to a reasonable age. He became entangled in litigation and sold Ormiston to William Elliot of Wells. In about 1675 he took part in the funeral procession for Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburghe. He paid the land tax in Kelso and Sprouston Parishes in 1678. In 1673 he married Christian, eldest daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden. They had 7 children: William (d.1705): John, who married Margaret, niece of Sir William Kerr of Greenhead, and was disinherited; Elizabeth (b.1683): Christian, who succeeded; Robert (b.1687), who died after being transported to Maryland; Margaret (b.1689); and Joan (b.1690). He secondly married Grizel Porvous. William of Newton (17th/18th C.) probably related to the earlier William of Newton. He is recorded related to Bedrule teinds in 1692. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when he paid tax for 6 hearths at ‘the place of Neuton’ in Bedrule Parish, and whose several tenants are also listed. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. Probably the same William sold Newton (although perhaps not permanently) to the Marquess of Lothian in 1707. Along with his wife, he was probably the ‘Newton Ker and his Ladie’ who gifted communion cups to Bedrule Kirk in 1716. William (1661–1722) 2nd Marquess of Lothian, eldest son of Robert. He inherited the title of Lord Jedburgh in 1692, and thus sat in the Scottish Parliament. He was Colonel of the 7th Regiment of Dragoons in 1696. He succeeded his father in 1703. He had command of the 3rd Regiment of Foot in 1707, but was removed in 1713 for political reasons. He married his cousin Jane, daughter of Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll. He was succeeded by his son William. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. William ‘Bitterbeard’ (1667–1747) 3rd Laird of Abbotrule, son of Charles, to whom he was served heir in 1680, when still a minor. His nickname derived from his long unkempt beard. In 1689 he was appointed as a Captain in the local Militia to guard against ‘the papists’. In 1690 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, and in 1700 was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. In 1700 and 1703 he witnessed baptisms for John Scott of Gurrernberry. He is recorded in 1707 as owner of land in Abbotrule Parish (including Braidhaugh), valued at £700 6s 8d. It is said that he was a Jacobite supporter in the 1715 rebellion, fighting in the army of the ‘Old Pretender’, and taking several Rulewater men along with him. He appears to have been a prisoner in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1716. In 1727 he was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He was involved (along with James, Lord Cranstoun) with the division of Templehall Common in 1734. In 1743 he had a ‘bond of tailzie’, resigning his lands in favour of his eldest son William. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of Alexander Nisbet of Craigentinny (an oil painting of her exists) and they had 2 children: William, who succeeded; and Cecily, who married Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. He later married Mary Henry, daughter of the Piper of Banff, and had a further 3 children: Mary, who married John Rutherford of Knowesouth in 1739, with an annulment in Edinburgh in 1750; Charles, who died young; and Charlotte, who married Dr. Thomas Elliott of Edinburgh. His second wife is supposed to have exerted strong influence on him, including convincing him to remove his beard. It is said that a portrait of him was painted, but its whereabouts are now unknown. He executed a deed of entail in 1737, where it is stated that his heirs would bear the name and arms of Kerr of Abbotrule. Also in 1737 he granted a provision of 60,000 merks for his daughters. The year of his death is 1757. said by Tancred to have been 1751, which is not consisent with an age of 81. In 1753 his wife was the ‘Lady Abbotrule’ who paid the window tax.

William (1690–1767) 3rd Marquess of Lothian, son of William. He was Lord Jedburgh before succeeding his father in 1722. He served many times as a Representative Peer. He was Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly 1732–38. He lived at Monteviot, where he paid the window tax in 1748. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Nicolson of Kenmey, and secondly married his cousin, Janet, daughter of Lord Charles Kerr of Cramond. His children were: William, who succeeded; Robert, who died at the Battle of Culloden; and a daughter. William (c.1695–1752) 4th Laird of Abbotrule, son of William. His year of birth is unknown, and he only became Laird 5 years before his death. He paid the window tax at Abbotrule in 1748. In 1751 he sold off part of the family estates (including Mackside, Broadhaugh, Templehall, Hartshaugh Mill, Kirknowe and Blackcleughmouth) by roup within John’s Coffee House in Edinburgh. He married Mary Brown of Cumberland and they had 7 children: Margaret, who died unmarried; Charles, who succeeded; Ann, who married Thomas Shortreed of Easter Essenside; Alexander; Patrick, who later succeeded his brother Charles; William, who died unmarried; and Cecily. William Henry (1713–1775) 4th Marquess of Lothian, son of William. He was the first to use the title Earl of Ancrum before succeeding. He was Captain in the 1st Regiment of Foot, then Lieut.-Col. of the 11th Dragoons, being wounded at Fontenoy in 1745 and seeing his brother Robert fall at Culloden in 1746. He was a Representative Peer in Parliament. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Caroline, only daughter of Robert D’Arcy, Earl of Holderness, great-granddaughter of Frederick, Duke of Schomberg (who was shot at the Battle of the Boyne by his own regiment). His children were: William John, who succeeded; Louisa Kerr, who married Lord George Lennox; and Wilhelmina Frances. William (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. In 1763 he was one of the men appointed by the Council to arrange for the collection of money to pay for the new bell for St. Mary’s. He may be the William whose garden wall formed part of the boundary of the Little Haugh in 1767. William of Gateshaw (1707–94) descendant of George Ker of Linton, and Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His father was Andrew, merchant in Kelso and his mother was Marie Cranstoun. In 1758 he purchased Gateshaw (previously a seat of a branch of the Kers) from Sir William Scott of Ancrum. In 1765 he also purchased Corbethouse. He became Town Clerk of Kelso and Chamberlain to John, Duke of Roxburghe. He was charged for having a male servant in 1778 and 1779. He was recorded as active among the freeholders of Roxburghshire in a meeting of 1780, acting on behalf of Walter of Littledean. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. At that time he was also listed as owner of lands in Morebattle Parish. He may be the Kerr who was mainly responsible for the rebuilding of Gateshaw. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge in 1739. Their children were: Andrew, who died young; Gilbert, who succeeded to Gate- shaw; John, died young; Sir Charles, who suc-ceeded his brother Gilbert; William, W.S. in Ed- inburgh; Robert, Lieut.-Col. in the East India Company; John, died young; Cecily, died young; Mary, died unmarried; Elizabeth, married Ellis Martin; and Essex, married Capt. John Turner. William (1779–1815) born in Hawick, son of John and Janet Miller. He grew up at the time that Dickson & Turnbull was established in Ha-wick as a prominent plant nursery, and it seems reasonable to imagine that this had an effect on his career choice. He became a gardener at Kew and a hunter of plants. He may have been the first professional full-time plant collector in the West. At Kew he was instructed by Sir Joseph Banks and was sent to China in 1804. There he discovered many species, including Euonymus japoni- cus, Lilium lancifolium, Pieris japonica, Nandina domestica, Begonia grandis and Rosa banksiae. He additionally collected plants in Java and the Philippines. He sent back to Kew Gardens some 238 plants that were new to European science, including the shrub named after him, Kerria japoni- ca. In 1812 he was sent to Colombo in Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) to oversee the gardens at King’s House and on Slave Island. He died there 2 years later, apparently as a result of opium addiction. Borders Distillery named a gin after him. William John (1737–1815) 5th Marquess of Lothian, son of William Henry. He was Colonel of the 1st Regiment of Life Guards and later Colonel of the 11th Dragoons. He was taxed for having male ser- vants in the 1770s. In 1788 his lands included Ferniehirst and Over Crawling in Jedburghn Parish and parts of several other parishes in Roxburgh-shire, namely Ancrum, Crawling, Hownam and Oxnam. He married Elizabeth, only daugh- ter of Chichester Fortescue of Dromiskin and cousin of the Duke of Wellington. His children were: Mary, who married Gen. Frederick St. John; William, who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married John Evelyn Pierrepoint Dornier; Charles Beauchamp, who married Elizabeth Crump; Vice-Adm. Mark Robert, who married Charlotte MacDonnell, Countess of Antrim; and Maj.-Gen. Robert, who married Mary Gilbert. William John (1763–1824) 6th Marquess of Lothian, son of William John, 5th Marquess. He was founder of the Jedforest Club in 1810 (when still Earl of Ancrum) and was Lord-Lieutenant for Midlothian and Roxburghshire. He firstly married Harriet Hobart-Hampden, daughter of the Earl of Buckinghamshire and secondly married Harriet Scott, daughter of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son John William Robert. He died when visiting the Duke of Buccleuch in Richmond on the Thames. William Schomberg Robert (1832–70) 8th Marquess of Lothian. He was eldest son of John, the 7th Marquess. He was said to be a promising scholar at Oxford, but died while still raptively young. He married Lady Constance Harriet Mahonesa Chetwynd-Talbot, his cousin. He was succeeded by his nephew Alexander Schomberg Henry. William Alexander (1831–1919) eldest son of Lorraine MacDowall. He served in the Army in India, being awarded the Victoria Cross for action during the 1857 mutiny. However, he apparently had to leave the military after striking his superior officer. He married Harriet Atty from Rugby. He published some books on riding and cavalry tactics. He became the 9th Laird of Abbotrule on the death of his cousin in 1864, although the family no longer owned any land locally. Having no children, he was succeeded by his nephew Alexander Nairne. William (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop on Drumlanrig Place in the mid-1900s. It also contained a sub-post office (occasionally spelled ‘Karr’; see also Ker).

Kerr Pool (ker-pool) n. name for a pool in the Liddel Water in the southern part of Roxburghshire, south of Kershopefoot.

the Kerrs (thu-kerz) n. important local family, being in the Borders since the 12th century, obtaining Jedforest in 1457 and building the original Ferniehirst Castle around 1470. Kerrs from the counties of Stirling, Edinburgh, Peebles and Ayr signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The Borders family had two main branches, the Kerrs of Ferniehirst and the Kerrs of Cessford, who intermarried and occasionally feuded. The spelling often (although not always) distinguished the 2 branches; additionally the Cavers Carre family preferentially used the ‘Carre’ spelling. They were Wardens of the Middle March for generations, dominating the history of the area around Kelso and Jedburgh. They were also associated with rieving, and received their motto ‘Sero Sed Serio’ (Late but in earnest) at Ancrum Moor. The family are traditionally left-handed, starting with Sir Andrew Kerr, who apparently found it to be a useful trait at Flodden. The name may derive from the Gaelic for left-handed, or from the Norse for ‘small wood’. The Dukes of Roxburgh and the Marquesses of Lothian are derived from Kerr ancestors. Closer to Hawick, a branch of the Kerrs were Lairds of Abbotrule in the late 17th to early 19th centuries, with a motto ‘J’avance’ – ‘The Douglass cam’ frae Liddisdale, Wi’ the young laird o’ Buccleuch: And there were Kerrs and Cockburns baith, All knights of honour true’ [JTe] (although a distinction is often made between the ‘Ker’ and ‘Kerr’ spellings, the difference is less clear in older texts, and ‘Kerr’ is almost unknown now; there are several different theories for the origin of the name).

Kerryrig Park (ke-ree-rii-pawrk) n. former name for lands that were part of Newton in Bedrule Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Kersel (ker-sul) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick. His daughter Bessie was born in 1692. Adam (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1717 he married Isobell (or Helen) Jackson. Their children were born in Hawick, including: John (b.1718), also a shoemaker: Marion (b.1720); Janet (b.1723); Agnes (b.1725); Bessie (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); and Adam (b.1731). The witnesses in 1720 were Thomas Tinlin and William Sinton, in 1729 were Benjamin Thomson and Patrick Angus and in 1731 were James Scott and Walter Purdom. He may be the Adam.
from whom 3s. 2d. was received by the Town Treasurer in 1755 ‘for Rowly-powly loft’; this was presumably for his right to sit there. Adam (18th C.) gardener at Abbotrule and Weens. In 1767 he is recorded as a gardener at Abbotrule. He was listed as ‘Adam Carsal’ gardener at Weens in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. His name is recorded as ‘Kerswall’ ‘Carswell’ and variants at Weens in the period 1785–88. In 1757 he married Betty, daughter of George Stevenson. He is probably the Adam whose children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: Jean (b.1761), possibly the Jean who married Adam Goodfellow in Wilton in 1788; Agnes (b.1764); John (b.1767), who married Ann Tinlin; and Betty (b.1769). He is probably also the Adam whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included: George (b.1772); Margaret (b.1774); Adam (b.1776); and James (b.1780). Adam (1745–1811) shoemaker in Hawick, son of John, and grandson of shoemaker Adam. In 1789 he (along with shoemaker Robert Oliver) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Turnbull. He married Ann Scott in 1769. Their children were: Ann (b.1770); John (b.1772); Adam; William (1775–76); and Agnes (1778–79). It was probably his (later) daughter Agnes who is recorded dying in 1810. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children, baptised there, include an unnamed child, who died in Hawick in 1802; Helen (1803–82), who married James Hardie; Elizabeth (1806–51), who married George Fiddes; Jean, who died in 1812; Jane (1816–56), married Walter Rae; Joan (c.1818–92), married Walter Graham Harley; and another unnamed child died in 1820. Helen may be the female servant, along with her sister Joan, living with John Hislop’s family at about 15 High Street in 1841; she was in Jedburgh by 1851. He was listed as a joiner on death certificates. Adam (1772/3–1853) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1805 he married Janet (1781–1851), daughter of James Hutton and Janet Black from Hawick. Their children included: James (c.1818–64); and Adam (c.1820–59). There were surely more children, but no baptismal records have been found, perhaps because they were members of a secession church. The family emigrated to the Galt area of Ontario in 1831, where he was a farmer and member of the First United Presbyterian Church in Galt. They are buried at Cedar Creek Cemetery, North Dumfries, Waterloo County. Adam (1796–1862) shoemaker on the Kirk Wynd, son of John and Anne Tinlin. In 1822 he married Margaret Dryden (1789–1861) from Galashiels. They probably had 9 children: John (b.1820), who died in infancy; an unnamed daughter (d.1821); Ann (1822–77), who married Andrew Wilson; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, c.1824–1900), who married Robert Waldie; Margaret (c.1826–96); Agnes (c.1828–1912), who married John Laidlaw; John (c.1830–92); Janet (c.1832–1904) married Thomas McCabe; Charlotte (1835–1925), married John Scott; and Esther (1837–83), married George Davidson in 1855 and emigrated to Galt, Ontario, secondly marrying Andrew Hewie (originally from Berwickshire) in 1872. His unnamed daughter died in Hawick in 1840. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 they were living on the Kirk Wynd. In 1861 he is described as ‘Shoemaker now Pauper’ and he died at 12 Kirk Wynd. Note that his name is sometimes transcribed ‘Harswell’. Adam (c.1820–59) probably son of Adam and brother of James. He most likely travelled to Canada with his family in 1831, settling in the Kitchener-Waterloo area of Ontario, where he was a farmer. He is buried in Cedar Creek Cemetery along with his family members. Adam (b.c.1851) son of John and Elizabeth Tait. He was probably born in Hawick. He married Isabella Waugh and their daughter Jean married M. Gordon from Hawick. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children, baptised there, include an unnamed son (b.1768), Agnes (b.1770), Adam (b.1773) and Betty (b.1766). James (c.1818–64) said to have been born in Hawick, probably of Adam and Janet Hutton. He emigrated to Canada along with his father and family and married Mary Jane Cranston, from Yetholm. Their children were Adam, Robert, James, Adam Cranston, Alexander, Andrew, Margaret and Jessie. He lived in North Dumfries Township near Waterloo in Ontario. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Heart Tax records of 1694. He is probably related to the Robert recorded in Minto a decade later. John (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son John was born in 1693. It is possible that he was also father of shoemaker Adam (whose first-born son was called John). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Alton in 1724, Borthaugh in 1727 and Drinkstone in 1729. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell, who was living at Alton. He married Agnes Oliver in Wilton in 1718; she was also from Wilton. Their children baptised in Wilton included: Margaret (b.1719); Jean (b.1721); Marion (b.1724); Adam (b.1727); Andrew (b.1729); and Marion (again, b.1732). Note that his surname is listed as ‘Carsel’ and ‘Carsell’. The witnesses in 1724 and 1727 were John and Walter Scott and in 1729 were William Scott and James Cavers. He may be related to the John recorded at Wester Heap in 1694. John (1718–88) son of Hawick shoemaker Adam. In 1745 he married Agnes Leithead in Hawick Parish. Their children included Adam (b.1746), who was also a shoemaker. John (b.1767) born in Southdean Parish, son of Adam. He was a shoemaker journeyman in Hawick. He may be the shoemaker in Hawick recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia (but if so, must have been born a little later than 1767). He is easily confused with the John who was born about 5 years later. He married Ann (b.1761), daughter of Robert Tinlin (‘Rob the Naig’). Their children included: Adam (1796–1862), the Hawick shoemaker; Ann (1805–73), who married Charles Hunter; Margaret (1809–70), who married Thomas Newall and George Didsbury; and John (b.c.1810), who emigrated to Australia. Agnes (b.c.1803) and Janet (b.c.1807) were probably also his children, and died young. The witnesses in 1796 (when his name is incorrectly given as ‘Adam’) were shoemaker Walter Scott and miller John Oliver. He may be the John whose daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1806 and the deceased shoemaker John whose daughter Janet died in 1811. In 1841 his wife, brother-in-law John and son John were living on the Fore Raw (suggesting he was already deceased). John (b.1772) son of Adam and Ann Scott, he was baptised in Hawick Parish. Family tradition says that they lived at the Mid Raw. He was probably the progenitor of ‘Karsells’ in the United States, Canada and Australia, with his children likely being: Robert (b.1800), who emigrated to the U.S. in 1832; Nancy, who married Charles Hunter and emigrated to the U.S. in 1852; Adam (b.1803), who emigrated to Canada; and John (b.c.1810), who emigrated to Australia in 1852. None of these baptisms are in the Parish records. He could be the shoemaker in Hawick recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia; however, he is hard to distinguish him from the John who was born about 5 years earlier. John (c.1810–90) son of John and Ann Tinlin, he was born in Hawick. In 1841 he was a ‘Woollen Stocking Maker Journeyman’ living on the Fore Raw with his mother and uncle John Tinlin; his age was given there as 26, but that was probably an underestimate. In 1851 he was a frame-worker, living next door to shoemaker Adam's family on the Kirk Wynd. In about 1847 he married Agnes (or perhaps Ann) Henderson and the family emigrated to Australia in 1852. Their children included Robert (b.c.1849–97), Margaret (1851/2–1935, also known as Agnes), John, Ann and James. The first 2 children were born in Hawick. He died at Moonambel, Victoria. John (b.1829/30–92) son of Adam and Margaret Dryden. He was a woollen spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at 4 Weensland and in 1861 at 3 Kirkwynd. In 1848 he married Elizabeth Tait, who was from Kelso and died in 1892. Their children were: Elizabeth (c.1849–1911), who married Edward Wilson; Adam (c.1851–1928), who married Isabella Waugh; Margaret (c.1853–1914), who died unmarried; William (b.1855) and William (again, b.1856), who both died in infancy; John (1858–1922), who emigrated to New Zealand; Robert (1860–1930), who married twice, but had no children; and two more Williams (b.1863 and b.1865), who also died in infancy. John (b.1858) son of John and Elizabeth Tait, he was born in Hawick. In 1881 he emigrated to New Zealand. His children were John Edward, Adam (‘Jim’), Robert (‘Roy’) Tait, Herbert, Kenneth Henry, Doris Guest, Norman, Jean Myrtle and Thelma Bettsworth. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children include: Jean, who married James, son of John Scott in 1726; Margaret (b.1704); and William (b.1706). He is probably related to the John recorded in Minto a decade earlier. Jean, who married James Scott in Minto in 1733, may have been his daughter, as well as Margaret, who married Thomas Thomson in Minto in 1736. Robert (1800–92) probably son of John, he was born in Hawick. He was a stocking weaver in Hawick and then in Edinburgh. He spent 12 years in the Navy, where he lost his sight in an accident. In 1832 he emigrated to Ohio, USA and later lived in Bloominton Indiana. He married Margaret Anderson and secondly Eleanor W. Finney. He lived to the age of 92. His descendants changed their surname to ‘Karsell’. Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife Helen Halliday is recorded being in Jedburgh Jail in 1839. She was a widow and

Kershaw (ker-shaw) n. James (b.1795/6) weaver from England. He was said to be among those who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living on O’Connell Street at the former No. 8. His wife was Betty and their children included John, Thomas, Janet, Samuel, Abraham, James, Mary and Edward.

Kersheugh (kers-hewch) n. farm on the Jed Water, just south of Glendouglas. It was a home of the Kers from early times. This is probably the place written as ‘cashhuoil’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when Andrew Douglas was there. John Douglas was there in 1797 (it is ‘Corysheuch’ on Pont’s c.1654 map, matching the former local pronunciation).

Kershope (ker-shup, -sup) n. area on the Border, immediately south of Newcastleton, alongside the Kershope Burn, with Kershope Forest stretching off into Cumbria. The farms of Scotch and English Kershope are across the Border from each other here. Lands here were granted by William de Rossedale to the hospital of St. Pe-

the east of Yarrow village, with Easter and Wester Kershope marked on modern maps. The lands were owned by the Crown from about 1456. In the late part of the 15th century the lands there were raided by Stephen Turnbull (brother of the Laird of Whithope), stealing 80 cattle belonging to John Murray of Falahill. The lands were leased by John Murray, then to brothers John and Ninian, then to John's widow and son in 1486, by Baldred Blackadder in 1488, then Ninian and John Murray in 1490. In 1499 the lands were let half to Thomas, son of John Murray, and half to Ninian Murray. Then on the death of Thomas Murray, half was let to James, son of Peter Murray. It remained Crown property until at least 1502 and in 1510 was feued half to John Murray and half to James, son of Peter Murray. Adam Scott was there in the early 16th century, with his son William complaining in 1533 that the Scotts of Howpasley and Dryhope raided the farm. In 1533 Isobel Murray (wife of Alexander Elliot) assigned her lands there to her ‘brother german’ Michael Scott. In 1541 the ‘Est Syde of Kershope’ was occupied by John Murray and the western side by Michael Scott. In 1555 Robert Scott of Bowhill was served heir to his brother Walter in half a steadings there, called ‘Westsyd de Kershop’. In 1610 Andrew Scott of Aikwood inherited his father’s half land of ‘Forrestae de Kerhoip’. Adam Scott was tenant there in 1731. Wester Kershope was held by Johnstone of Alva n 1802 (it is ‘Kershope’ in 1456, 1468 and 1486, ‘Carsope’ in 1499 and 1501; it is marked ‘Kersupp’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

the Kershope Burn (thu-ker-shup-burn) n. stream that forms part of the Scotland/England Border for about 8 miles near Newcastleton, and flows into the Liddel. The area was once more heavily populated and there are many signs of former cultivation and settlement along its banks, including settlements, cairnfields, hut circles, rig and furrow lines and sheepfolds. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrave described it thus: ‘Kyrsopp is a smale becke and desendes from the weste. The place is mentioned in the ballad ‘Hobie Noble’ – ‘At Kershope foot the tryst was set – Kershope of the lily lea; And there was traitor Sin o’ the Mains, With him a private companie. Fala, &c’T (it is ‘Kirsopfoote’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Kershopefoot’ in 1821).

Kershopefoot (ker-shup-fi’) n. Kershopefoot, hamlet on the south (i.e. English) side of the Kershope burn, just where it meets the Liddel Water. It is ‘Kyrsope fott’ in a letter of 1541 dealing with disputes on the Border. It is recorded as ‘Kyrsopfoote’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561, when there were Foresters there. It was formerly a station on the Waverley Line, marking the official crossing of the Scotland/England border on the route to Carlisle. Earthworks here are probably the site of the former tower. James Armstrong was farmer in the mid-1700s. Mr. Little was there in 1868 and Richard Armstrong in the latter part of the 19th century. There was also a mill just to the east. The place is mentioned in the ballad ‘Hobie Noble’ – ‘At Kershope foot the tryst was set – Kershope of the lily lea; And there was traitor Sin o’ the Mains, With him a private companie. Fala, &c’T (it is ‘Kirsopfoote’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Kershopefoot’ in 1821).

Kershopehead (ker-shup-head) n. Kershopehead, a farm on the English side of the upper Kershope Burn. It is ‘Kyrsop hed’ in a letter of 1541 dealing with disputes on the Border. It is ‘Kyrsophead’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. The stream itself is marked ‘Kirsopheade’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. The name also appears to have been used to describe the area around the head of the Kershope Burn, near Flight Moss. This is probably the area referred to as ‘Cahope head’ in about 1645, when a group of Armstrongs left stolen sheep there, when they went off to look for food, only to find that the English owners had followed them and recovered the booty.

Kersley (kers-lee) n. Leonard (1882–1918) son of William and Hannah Shackell of Winchester. He worked as a printer with Allan Watt’s and also at the Hawick News and opened a draper’s business at 8 Myreslawgreen. He was a Lieutenant in the Salvation Army and served as Vice-President of the Hawick Trades Council. He was Lance Corporal in the K.O.S.B. He was killed in WWI. In 1907 he married Margaret (‘Meg’) Young, daughter of Walter Nisbet; she continued to run the shop until 1936 died in 1970 and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. They had children Victor William (1909–2002) and Margaret (b.1916) and lived at 2 Morrison Place. Kidd (kid) n. name of a travelling dentist of the mid-19th century, who set up shop at Bunyan the Barbers, 29 High Street, charging sixpence for an extraction. He could be the Thomas D., retired dentist from Lilliesleaf, who is recorded at the Crown Inn in 1871.

Kidd (kid) n. David (d.1835) mason in North Greenholm. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835. Helen see Margaret. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at ‘Borthwickshiel’s Eskdal’ (although it is unclear what this means) in 1780 and at Borthwickshiers in 1785. He is probably the James who married Isabel Forsyth in Robertson in 1779. His children included: Kathrine (b.1780); Margaret (b.1782); and John (b.1785). He may be the James, son of John, born in Robertson in 1747. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1753. He married Margaret Watson in Robertson in 1746. His children included: James (b.1747); Jean (b.1750); Bell (b.1753); and John (b.1756). John (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–91, and was also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls at Lilliesleaf. In the 1788 cart tax roll he was listed as ‘Robert’. He could be the ‘old man from Alewarter’ of that name who is recorded dying in Hawick in 1805. Margaret ‘Maggie’ (16th C.) resident of the Saughtree area, also known as ‘Helen’ in a different version. She was said to have fathered several children to Robert (or perhaps William) Elliot of Larriston (or perhaps Redheugh), according to a Liddesdale tradition. According to different version, these offspring included Gilbert Elliott, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ or Gilbert, who was recorded as ‘bastard brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh’ in 1603. She is said to have lived at a place called ‘Kidd’s Wails’, but had to be moved by Elliot when his wife discovered her. She then lived in a small tower he had built at Hartsgarth, the ruins of which were used to build the house there, according to Thomas Elliot of Meikledale. A different version of the story (recounted by Jeffrey) has her being poisoned by the Elliot women and with her dying breath cursing the family to die single and despised. Note that about 200 years later Robert Elliot of Redheugh married a woman of the same name, suggesting that there may be some confusing of stories (also written ‘Kid’).

Kidd’s Linn (kidz-lin) n. waterfall on the Staneshiel Burn on the farm of Dinlabyre in upper Liddesdale. It is also known as ‘Kitty Linn’ or ‘Kitty Linns’. There was formerly a shepherd’s cottage there, where Ninian Hislop was in 1835. James Armstrong was shepherd in 1851. Meg, the wife of an earlier shepherd claimed to have had an encounter with the Devil, pushing him over the precipice near her house. This inspired some lines entitled ‘The Deil’s Dead’, to which Newcastle poet David Anderson composed the reply ‘The Deil’s no dead’ (it is ‘Kittylins’ in 1835).

Kidd’s Scar (kidz-skawr) n. clifftop region by Craikhope Burn in the upper Borthwick valley. An enclosure and some old ring enclosures are visible near there on aerial photographs.

Kidd’s Waas (kidz-wawz) n. supposed site of the former house of Helen (or Maggie) Kidd, who tradition says was a lover of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, tragically poisoned by his family to end the unsuitable match. In Jeffrey’s history of 1864 he identifies a site on the hillside on the opposite side of the valley from Saughtree schoolhouse. Shepherd Frank Turnbull identified a similar site according to a report of 1889. However, it is unclear whether there are any remains there now.

Kiddy (ki-dee) n. Rev. William (1818/9–49) from Coldstream, he became minister at Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk in 1843. However, he died suddenly of cholera only 6 years later; he visited a family with the first cholera case in Lilliesleaf village and was dead the next morning. He married Grace, daughter of Rev. Robert Cranston of Morebattle and left a young family.

Kid Sike (kid-sik) n. small stream that joins the north side of the Teviot near the farm of Commside.

Kielder (keel-dur) n. village over the Border into England, in the Cheviots, where the Kielder Burn meets the North Tyne. Also the name of the general area, including Kielder Forest Park and Kielder Water. An old barn there was used in the mid-19th century for ‘Tynehead Preaching’ in the summer, with services attended by people from both sides of the Border. Kielder Castle was originally a hunting lodge, built for the Duke of Northumberland in 1775. An old gun found near there is in Hawick Museum – ‘Whar Keelder meets wi’ the Tyne, Masel an’ ma kinsmen three, We tackled the Percies nine – They’l never mair meddle wi’ me’ [T], ‘The eiry blood-hound howl’d by night, The streamers flaunted red, Till broken streaks of flaky light O’er Keeldar’s mountains spread’ [JL] (note often misspelled ‘Keilder’).

Kielder Forest (keel-dur-fo-rist) n. Britain’s largest forest, and the largest man-made forest in Europe, covering over 230 square miles in Northumberland. Managed as a commercial forest, mainly planted with Sitka and Norway Spruce, it is also used as a recreational area.

the Kielder Stane (thu-keel-dur-stan) n. a boulder marking the border, since at least the time of the Rievers, about 3 miles east of Deadwater, now in the Kielder Forest. It is said to be unlucky to walk round the stone 3 times counter-clockwise.

Kielder Witter (keel-dur-wi’-ur) n. largest man-made lake in Europe, in the North Tyne valley of upland Northumberland. It is about 8 miles long, with 27 miles of coastline, covers some 2,684 acres, and is said to contain enough water to submerge all of England to a depth of 8 m. It supplies water to much of Northumbria, and is a recreational centre attracting a huge number of visitors (sometimes called ‘Kielder Lake’ or ‘Kielder Reservoir’).

Kildowan (kil-dow-in) n. villa occupied by manufacturer William Lyle in the latter part of the 19th century, on Wilton Hill, roughly opposite the Police Station.

Kilford (kil-furd) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, roughly on the opposite side of the valley to Riccarton in Liddesdale. It is near the Kih Burn, suggesting that the name is connected. However, the precise location of this tower house is not known. This is probably the ‘Kylsfurd’ listed on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, valued at 24 shillings, and with Henry and William Nixon as tenants. ‘Grey Will of the Kyll Fuird’ is recorded in 1563, when there was a bond for apprehending him. In 1586 it is referred to as ‘the twentie four shilling land’ when half of it was occupied by Martin Elliot of Braidlie and released to him by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. It was one of the farms possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632 (it is ‘Kilfurde’ in 1586 and 1632; it is labelled as ‘Kilfurde’, and probably not ‘Kilsurd’ on Blaeu’s map).

Kilgarth (kil-gawrth) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map between Todscleuch and Taillecleuch, on the opposite bank of the Liddel valley from Larriston. There is no evidence of a former house in the area. It is probably the ‘Culigrath’ recorded in the rental roll of 1351, valued at 12 shillings and tenant by Clement

Crozier. It may be the land referred to as Culgatis in a leased of 1586 (possibly the same as Kingarth).

the Killin Hoose (thu-ki-lin-hoos) n. former abattoir in Hawick, situated by the railway line on Eskdaill Bank, which became known as the Killin Hoose Brae. The building can be seen in an old photograph, with workers standing in the doorways.

the Killin Hoose Brae (thu-kiln-, ki-lin-, hoos-brá) n. familiar name for Eskdaill Bank, so-called because of the abattoir that used to stand there. It may have been rebuilt around 1907 to designs by Alexander Inglis.

the Killin Times (thu-ki-lin-tíunz) n., pl. popular name for the period of Scottish history roughly 1660–88 (and particularly the early 1680s) when Covenanters were persecuted for their beliefs.

killmowler (kil-mow-lur) n., arch. a hobgoblin that resides in a ‘killogie’, regarded as having a ‘bluidy mow’.

killogie (ki-ló-gee) n., arch. a kiln, the open space in front of a kiln fireplace – ‘A muckle . . . motor-laarie – a perfect killogie for reek – cam snorkin an dunnerin bye’ [ECS]. ‘The mill chimlih smuiks leike a killogie’ [ECS] (also kiln-logie and kil-oe).

Killoley (ki-ló-lee) n. former farm in Liddesdale, said to be near the site of the Chapel at Dinlayre (the existence of which is uncertain). It may also have been known as Killoley Chapel. The name could be related to Kelly Cleuch, which is about 1 km to the north. It is listed in the c.1376 rental list in the charters of the Douglases of Morton, recorded as ‘Kelloley cum Mylneholme’ and worth 5 merks. In 1541 it is valued at 5 merks and tenanted by Nixons. John and William Nixon were there in 1544. ‘Dand Nixoyn of Kewly’, recorded in 1581, could also have been a tenant, as well as ‘Hobb Nixon of Kelleley’ in 1590. In 1667 (and apparently again in 1691) it was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlayre, having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth (it is ‘Kellilee’ in 1541, ‘Kellel’ and ‘Kellele’ in 1544, ‘Calleley’ in 1590/1, ‘Kelelie’ in 1595, ‘Killillie’ in 1667, ‘Killillie’ in 1691 and ‘Kelly’ on Pont’s c.1608 map).

Killoley (ki-ló-lee) n. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as joint tenant of the lands of Heuchhousehill, along with John Nixon. His name is given as ‘Kellelee’, and is surely related to the nearby lands of Killoley.

killpatrick (kil-pa-trik) n. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Euphan Storie and their unnamed child was baptised in 1682. The witnesses were ‘students’ Robert Cunningham and William Gledstains.

Kilnbrae (kiln-brā) n. former name for the Mill Path, in use in the 17th century, named after the kiln that stood there. This may be the kiln that 2 men climbed onto to escape the Slitrig flood of 1767 (also written ‘Kiln Brae’ as well as ‘Kiln Peth’).

Kiln Brae (kiln-brā) n. region just south of the farm of Twislehope in the upper Hermitage valley. The farmstead of Kilnbraehead was once there.

Kiln Burn (kiln-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, which rises on Mervins Law and runs roughly north-east to join the Jed Water near Old Jeddart.

Kilncleuch (kiln-kloom) n. possible name of lands near Abbotrule. A court case involving John, son of Gilbert Oliver ‘in kilelewis’ is recorded in 1502. It is possible that it is the same place as Kilnsike.

Kiln Croft (kiln-kroft) n. area of land near Hawick Mill, part of which was taken over for the section of Wellogate Cemetery opened in 1849 (this may be an error for Kill Croft).

Kiln Green (kiln-green) n. public park land on the haugh in the north of Langholm, between the A7 and the Ewes Water. It was said to be the location where the rescue of Kinmont Willie was planned in 1596.

Kilnheugh (kiln-hewch) n., arch. the open space in front of a kiln, where the kiln-man could shelter, a ‘killogie’ (used by John Hogg).

Kilnhill (kiln-hil) n. former name for an area south of Weensland Road and west of Bramblehall, also known as ‘Trinity Kilnhill’, presumably named after a kiln that once stood there (perhaps associated with Bogliebarns).

Kiln Knowe (kiln-now) n. hill above Limekiln Edge, reaching a height of 430 m and containing a triangulation pillar.

Kilnknowe (kiln-now) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, lying to the north-west of the Kirk Mause. It was once part of the Barony of Abbotrule. It was ‘Killknow’ in Hobkirk Parish in 1678, when owned by Gilbert Elliott and valued at £10. Andrew Hood was tenant there in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George Henderson was a weaver living there in the 18th century. Along with other parts of Abbotrule estate, it was sold by William Kerr in 1750. James Notman was there in 1788. In 1788 it was valued at £50 and owned by William Elliot of Harwood. He was still owner according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811, when it was ‘Kill-know’ and valued at £47 5s. It was also written ‘Kilknowe’ (it should not be confused with Kirknowe, which lies directly to the north).

Kilnknowe Junction (kiln-now-jungk-shin) n. junction where the Peebles Railway Extension joined the Waverley Line, just north of Galashiels.

Kiln-logie (kiln-lo-gee) n., arch. a kiln, the fireplace of a kiln – ‘I found the decent old miller lighting in at the kiln-logie’ [BCM1880] (also killogie and kill-ee).

Kiln Path (kiln-peth) n. Kiln Path, former name for the Mill Path. It is so marked on Wood’s 1824 map.

Kiln Peth (kiln-peth) n. Kiln Path, a lane connecting Wilton Path and Underdamside, named after the kiln for drying oats at the Roughheugh Flour Mill. The name disappeared by the early 20th century. Also a former name for Mill Path (e.g. on Wood’s 1824 map) after the drying kiln there.

Kiln Pots (kiln-pots) n., pl. local name for a series of hollows on the hillsides of the upper part of the farms of Peel and Myredykes in Castleton Parish. They vary in size from about 4 to 12 feet, and occur naturally as a result of erosion of the rock there.

Kilnsike (kiln-sik) n. ruined fortified 16th century farm-house on the road between Jedburgh and Chesters, just to the east of Westerhouses. It measures 11.5 m by 7.5 m, with the ruin still having 3 walls to the first floor. The lands were valued at 25 shillings according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538. The tenant there in 1541 was Andrew Oliver. It is ‘kilsyke’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls when there were 2 hearths there (it is ‘Kilsyke’ in 1538 and ‘Kylsyke’ in 1539 and 1541).

Kiln Sike (kiln-sik) n. small stream that joins Ironcastle Sike to the east of Westerhouses in Southdean Parish. The remains of Kilnsike Tower are near the head of the stream and the Iron Castle settlement near the foot. There is also an area of rig lines there.

Kiln Sike (kiln-sik) n. small stream in Castleton Parish, running south to join the Black Burn to the north-west of Newcastleton. It rises on Kiln Rig and the farm of Woolhope is on its banks, with Kiln Knowe near its mouth. The area also

King (king) n. Christina (b.1827/8) daughter of James, she was a niece of Janet, who was housekeeper at Abbotrule. She also worked on the estate, being in charge of the poultry and milking. In 1888 she moved into Hawick. James (16th/17th C.) local man described as ‘in Clarelaw’ in a 1612 list of people convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans.
the King

James (18th C.) signatory of the document signed by 56 people at Raperlaw in 1732, protesting against acts of the General Assembly and being connected with the Secession. He was probably a resident of Lilliesleaf. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Marjory Park, who was also from Hawick. Probably the same James and ‘Mader’ Park had children Adam and William Elliot baptised in Minto Parish in 1807. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at North Synton, recorded on the 1791–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. James (b.1796/7) born in Cavers Parish, he was a farmer at Dimpleknowe near Ashkirk. In 1861 he was at Dimpleknowe, farming 200 acres and employing 6 people. In the 1860s he was recorded as a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. His wife was Sarah. By 1868 W. Douglas was recorded as farmer at Dimpleknowe, perhaps his son. James (1916–93) born in Hawick, brother of Harry and Thomas, with his mother being Elizabeth. He was a Sergeant Major in the 6th Battalion, Seaforth Highlanders, who received the Distinguished Conduct Medal in 1944. Janet (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £2 3s 11d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. Janet (b.1810/1) servant to the Henderson family at Abbotrule. She served as nurse and later as housekeeper. Her niece Christina also worked on the Abbotrule estate and later moved to Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) tenant in North Synton. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. He must have been related to James, who was farmer at North Synton at about the same time. John George (d.1860s) brewer of Hawick. He died at his brewery, aged 34, and is buried in Wellogate cemetery. His widow later married R.R. MacQueen of West Port Church. Mark (18th/19th C.) cooper who lived in a small thatched cottage in Abbotrule. He was a staunch Anti-Burgher, and was known locally as ‘Maister Clairk’s recruiting sergeant’ (Rev. James Clerk being the minister of the Townhead congregation in Jedburgh). His son Jamie followed his father’s beliefs and would alternate between attending the church in Jedburgh and Hawick West. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in 1580 when he and his wife Marion Turnbull gave a tack of land to Stephen Bulman. This was an acre of land called ‘Halhill’ between the ‘Mercat gait’, the street that passes to Langnewton Mill and ‘the Watter’. Richard (1685/6–1752) Kirk Officer in Ashkirk. He married Betty Holywell, who died in 1756, aged 65. They are buried in Ashkirk. Robert (b.1786/7) from Jedburgh, he served in the Artillery and later lived in Lilliesleaf. He was listed in the 1851 census as a Chelsea Pensioner, living with his wife Martha Riddell and children John, James and Robert, as well as his brother-in-law James Riddell. In 1861 he was on the north side of Main Street. He was a member of the Burgher Kirk in Lilliesleaf. In 1873 his article ‘Some Jedburgh Characters’ was published in the Transactions. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Redford and their children included: John (b.1775); Margaret (b.1778); Agnes (b.1784); and Mary (b.1786).

died in 1756, aged 65. They are buried in Ashkirk.

the Kings

the King (thu-king) n. nickname for members of the family which ran the King’s Head in Hawick, e.g. Andrew Scott.

the King (thu-king) n. nickname for one of 2 people (the other being ‘the Queen’) who lived on Sunnyside in Denholm in the late 19th century. Also a nickname for an early Robert Elliot, recorded in 1500.

the King (thu-king) n. nickname for Thomas Douglas in Hobkirk.

Kingarth (king-arth) n. former lands just to the south of Riccarton, perhaps associated with some of the remains of buildings in the area (possibly the same as Kilgarth).

King Nellie (king-ne-lee) n. nickname for Nellie Dickson.

the King o the Dean (thu-king-o-thu-deen) n. popular name for a large tree in Denholm Dean. It was adjacent to ‘the Queen o the Dean’, but closer to the bank. It was among the trees swept away in the Denholm Flood of 1806.

the King o the Wud (thu-king-o-thu-wud) n. large oak tree on the Ferniehirst estate, at the top of a small ravine, to the east of the Capon Tree. It once reached a height of about 78 feet, with a circumference of 14 feet.

the Kings (thu-kingz) n. theatre on Towerdyke-side, in the old Corn Exchange buildings, having live shows and theatrical productions, the name being current in the first half of the 20th century. There were films of the Common Riding made especially for showing in this theatre in at least 1929, 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934. It became part of the Odeon cinema chain and was also called the Odeon. It was later renamed the Classic and the Marina, and burned down in 1992. The name was also used to describe the Kings Hotel on North Bridge Street in the latter part of the 20th century – ‘…For the Kings tippence oo paid Or jookeet in doon the Arcade’ [IWL].
the King’s Airms (thu-kingz-ärniz) n. former inn in Newcastleton. It was located on Douglas Street and later became the Commercial Inn and then the Liddesdale Hotel. In 1837 the proprietor was Sussanah Rutherford and in 1852 was William Scott.

king’s claver (kingz-klä-vur) n., arch. melilot, a kind of clover, Melilotus officinalis.

the King’s Common Street (thu-kingz-ko-min-stree’) n. former name for the road that connected the Howegate with the Newcastleton Road, in use in the 17th century. The road ran through the Kirkwynd, over a ford at the foot of ‘Manse Lane’ and up the ‘Kilnbrae’. It is mentioned in the Town Book in 1710.

king’s covenanter (kingz-kuv-in-an’-er) n., arch. a children’s street game involving a child calling ‘King’s Covenanter, come if ye dare venture’ and trying to catch any who run over, with the captive replacing the captor.

king’s ellwand (kingz-el-wawnd) n., arch. the stars in the Belt of Orion, the foxglove, Digitalis purpurea.

the King’s Heid (thu-kingz-heed) n. the King’s Head Hotel, a former inn located at 13 High Street. James Dickson was probably proprietor in the latter part of the 18th century, with his wife Nellie running it after this death. William Scott (‘Wullie the King’) was proprietor in the early 19th century. It may also have been the name of ‘Lurgie’ Wilson’s inn at the Sandbed for a while.

the King’s High Street (thu-kingz-hi-stree’) n. common name for the High Street in old charters and sasines. Also known as the ‘King’s Highway’, the ‘King’s Street’ and similar terms. The name also applied to the continuation of the modern High Street as the main thoroughfare via Silver Street, the Howegate and the Loan and out of Hawick to the north and the south (it is ‘the kingis streit’ in 1579 and ‘the King’s heie streit’ in 1688).

the Kings Hotel (thu-kingz-hō-tel) n. hotel at 23 North Bridge Street in the latter part of the 20th century. It was built as Northville, a private house, in the late 1800s. It then became a temperance hotel, Gibson’s, and sometime after WWII it had become the Kings. It also expanded into the adjacent building. For a few years it was run as the Roxburgh Inn, but by the mid-1990s the building had fallen on hard times and was empty for about a decade. In 2005 the main building was converted into housing units.

Kingside Loch (king-sid-loch) n. body of water south-east of Buccleuch. Kingsideloch Sike flows into it from the east (possibly the bosy marked ‘Pott Loch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Kingsmoorloch’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

the King’s Rantin (thu-kingz-rawn-tin) n. former celebration (at public expense) by the local dignitaries on the King’s Birthday. Such a celebration was recorded being held for George I (whose birthdate was 28th May) in 1724 and the expenses are recorded in 1732. It moved to 30th October in 1733, the birthday of George II. In 1739 it is recorded that festivities began at 10 a.m. In 1747 (because of the debt over Teviot Brig) the Council ordain that the Town would not pay the expenses. The festivities grew in size, particularly during the reign of George III, celebrated on the 4th of June (shortly after the Common Riding). This was George III’s actually birthday, but the same day was also celebrated throughout Britain as George IV and William IV’s official birthdays. There was a function in the Council Chambers of the old Town Hall, with the alcohol traditionally being supplied by the Bailies. The excess of the celebration was denounced in James Hogg’s lines ‘Frugal temperance urged no cesses, Birthday rants, nor Bailie’s messes’. There were displays of home made fireworks in the town and rival ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ bonfires. In the 18th century this was a major focus of activity for the town’s youth, with material being collected for about a month before, and regular raids on the opposing gang’s store of fuel. The bonfires lit at each end of town were said to be a very old tradition, but ended about 1800. In the early years of the 19th century the King’s health was drunk outside the Town Hall by the Magistrates and their guests ‘Highland fashion’, with glasses thrown over the shoulders and women of the town catching them in their aprons. In later years there was also a parade through the town – ‘Payd that night ye likcor was got to Ranting 2 4 0’ [BR1732].

King’s Rig (kingz-rig) n. ridge on the northeast side of the Maidens, crossed by the Catrail. A stream there (which joins the Harwood Burn and ultimately the Slitrig) is called King’s Sike (the connection with any King is obscure).

kinly (kin-lee) adj. burning – ‘Let kinlie cools fa’ apon thame: let thame be thrawn intil the fire’ [HSR].

Kinly Stick (kin-lee-stik) n. song written around 1870 by William Easton. It follows a satirical story about two well-known contemporaries of Easton’s, George (also sometimes referred to as Dick) Whillans (‘Kinly Stick’) and John Mitchell (‘Heather Jock’), who pawn the very shirts on their backs in order to get more drink. A fifth verse was added later (by 1909, and probably not much earlier) about visiting Milmoe’s pawn shop. The song is clearly based on the song called ‘Ring the Bell Watchman’, with words and music written by Henry Clay Work in 1865 (he also wrote ‘My Grandfather Clock’, ‘Marching Through Georgia’ and ‘Father, Dear Father’). The song followed right after the American Civil War, and the chorus evoked images of the Liberty Bell; it was therefore extremely popular at the time in the U.S. The Hawick words can be seen as a direct parody of Work’s, being about ringing the bell at the bar, rather than in the church! Other parodies also exist, including ‘Strike the Bell, Second-mate’ and the more modern ‘Strike the Bell, Landlord’. Adie Ingles suggested that the Australian sheep-shearing version, ‘Click Go the Shears’, was brought back from there by Mitchell (Heather Jock) himself, but there is no evidence that he ever left Hawick (and the Australian version is clearly itself a parody of ‘Ring the Bell Watchman’, first published in 1891). Note that the words of the chorus are almost always slightly altered compared with the published version. The accompaniment was slightly changed for the 2001 edition of ‘The Hawick Songs’, with an attempt to restore some cheer to the music. It has been covered by some other artists, e.g. the Caern folk trio in 1969. Scocha recorded a ‘punkified’ version on their 2006 CD ‘Gie’ d Sum Wellie’ – ‘... Ring the bell, Kinly, Stick, ring the bell’ [WE], – ‘...And the Kinly Stick he’s mortal And he lies upon the flags’ [WE].

Kinmont Willie (kin-mon’-wi-lee) n. nickname for William Airmstrong who was rescued from Carlisle Castle in 1596 by the Bold Buccleuch, as immortalised in the ballad. He lived at Morton Tower (also called Sark Tower), west of Canonbie, and was the Armstrong chief in that area. According to a letter from Lord Scope, there were 500 (although this is clearly an exaggeration) horsemen, supporters of Buccleuch and Kinmont involved in the assault on Carlisle Castle, ‘appointed with gavlockes and crowes of iron, hand peckes, axes and skailinge lathers’, getting in at a corner of the outer door, undermining the postern door and carrying away Willie. English reports say that 2 watchmen were killed and a guard of the prisoner injured, the action being easy because the night watch were sheltering from the weather. It is also claimed that Johnstones and Irvings were lying in wait near the Border, in case the band of rescuers were pursued and needed help. Further details are available in (probably biased) English accounts of the subsequent investigation. It is said that there were meetings a few days before with certain Englishmen to plan the raid, and that some of the watchmen at the castle had been paid off. An exact roster of the rescuers is not known, but Scott of Satchells gives a list of 33 Scotts who rode with their chief, and we can assume that many Armstrongs also took part. An English informer claimed that the party included: the Laird of Buccleuch (Sir Walter Scott, later 1st Lord of Buccleuch); Walter Scott of Goldielands (probably son of the Laird); Walter Scott of Branxholme (probably an error for Buccleuch); Walter Scott of Harden (either ‘Auld Wat’ or a son of his); (Walter) Scott of Todrig: William Elliot of Gorrenberry (or perhaps a son): John Elliot, called of Copshaw (also perhaps a son); the Laird of Mangerton (Archibald Armstrong); the young Laird of Whithaugh (probably Simon) and his son (perhaps Lancelot); 3 men of ‘Calfhills’ (probably Armstrongs of Calfield); Sandy Armstrong, son to...
‘Hebbye’ (son of Abraham of Woodhouselee); 4 sons of Kinmont Willie, Jock, Francie, Gordie and Sandy; Willie Bell ‘Red Cloak’ (Laird of Blackethouse) and 2 of his brothers; Walter Bell of ‘Godesby’; 3 Armstrongs from Tweedden (perhaps Hector, Jock and Ringan); John Armstrong of Hollows and his brother; Christie Armstrong of Barglies and Robbie of Langholm (probably his brother); the Armstrongs of Chingills; and ‘Willie Kange and his brethren’ (the Irving’s) – ‘And when we cam to the lower prison, Where Willie o Kinmont he did lie, ’O sleep ye, wake ye, Kinmont Willie, Upon the morn that thou’s to die?’ [T] (also ‘Kynmont’, ‘Kynmonth’ and variants; ‘kimmonts tower’ is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

Kinnaird (ki-närd) n. James (17th C.) mentioned as a Burgh Officer (along with Walter Stewart) in 1638, this being one of the first records in the earliest existing Town Book. They were presumably the 2 Burgh Officers of the time, corresponding to the Halberdiers of today. He is also mentioned swearing on oath that Thomas Oliver drew his sword at one of the Bailies in a 1642 case. William (16th C.) listed as ‘Kynhard’ in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). William (18th C.) resident of Crook in 1730 when he married Margaret Miller in Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1737. His children included Janet (b.1732) and Hugh (b.1737).

Kinnear (ki-neer) n. Rev. Alexander (c.1627–67) Hawick minister. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1647, became Schoolmaster at Lesmahagow in 1653, and was then assistant at Roberton (in Lanarkshire), before being translated to Bathgate in 1656 and then to Hawick in 1663. This was to replace John Scott, who had refused to accept Episcopacy. His ‘friend’ (presumably a relative) James Kinnear was entered as a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1659. It is unclear whether he was locally popular, after replacing the ousted John Scott. He was a member of the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1666 and was still described as ‘minister at Hawick’ in an Edinburgh record of September 1666, when he married Margaret Cunningham. She survived him and later married Robert Richardson (W.S.) of Edinburgh. He died a few months before being replaced by John Langlands. A communion token from his time as minister has ‘hK’ (for Hawick Kirk) on one side and ‘M — AK’ on the other. Note that another man of the same name was minister at Whitsome Parish from 1608–54 and may of course have been related (also spelled ‘Kinnie’, ‘Kineir’ and ‘Kynnie’).

Kinned (ki-nul) pp. kinned – ‘...when his wrath is kinned onlie awée’ [HSR], ‘An’ ane fire was kinned in their clan ...’ [HSR], ‘...hed kinnelt a lunt an war thrang poatchin aboot an maskin tei’ [ECS], ‘...Scraped his buits aye at the door, Kinnelt the fire, an’ never swore’ [IJ] (also spelled ‘kinlet’ and variants).

Kinnen (ki-nin) n., poet. a rabbit – ‘Make kinnen and capon ready then, And venison in great plenty; We’ll welcome hame our royal king, I hope he’ll dine at Gilnockie’ [CPM].

the Kinnin Braes (thu-ki-nin-bräz) n. area in the Ale valley near Ancrum – ‘Before my tottering feet should fail In life’s late wintry days, Oh, let me hear the voice of Aill Amang the Kinnin Braes’ [WP].

Kinninghaa (ki-nin-haw) n. Kinninghall, farm between Cauldmill and Cavers. It is near the former farm of West Mains. Robert Scott was farming here and at Little Cote in the 1860s (also written ‘Kinning Hall’ and sometimes ‘Kinnigayll’; the name was introduced by an owner after the town in Norfolk, Kinninghall).

Kinninghaa Hill (ki-nin-haw-hil) n. Kinninghall Hill, hill in Cavers Parish, just to the east of Deanbrae, reaching a height of 217 m (718 ft). Its summit contains fragmentary remains of a hillfort, with 2 sets of ramparts and possible hut circles inside. To the south-west are the remains of a possible enclosure.

kinnle (ki-nul) v. to kindle – ‘And saw the sun o’ Easter Heeze up and lowe until It kinnelled till a burnin’ buss The thorns on Hardie’s Hill’ [DH].
kinsh (kinsh) n., arch. a lever used in quarrying, v., arch. to twist, tighten by twisting, to steal, pilfer, fish – ‘E’d better heide thae rockbocks, or the bairns ill kinsh thum’ [ECS], ‘That greedy gullmaw ov a callant ked kinshed the haaf o the fookie-meat A brocht hyimm’ [ECS], ‘Thae ill-deed callants kinsh’it a hash o’ aipples’ [GW] (this is ‘kinch’ elsewhere in Scotland).

Kinshel Haugh (ki-shul-hawch) n. area on the east side of the Wauchope Burn, between Wauchope Common and Henlaw Knowes, in Hobbirk Parish.

kinsh-pin (kinsh-pin) n., arch. a rod used for twisting ropes in order to tighten them.

kintra (kin-tru) n., poet. country – ‘The sough o’ her caithriaps had spread far an’ wide, Her pranks were the crack o’ the haill kintra side’ [BM1901].

kip (kip) n., arch. rush, hurry, haste – ‘Hei was in a teerin kip an’ wadna stoap a meenint’ [ECS], a fit of anger, outburst – ‘Wheiles she’s aa richt, bit she’s awfih kippy tempert, an’ oo’ve fund ir in yin o ir kips the nicht’ [ECS].

kip (kip) n., arch. a turned-up tip, especially of a nose (noted by E.C. Smith), the peak of a sharp-pointed hill – ‘Brave Bruce clomb, unskathed, Abyssinia’s dread kipps’ [HSR] (also written ‘kipp’); the word is used in several local hill names, e.g. Coldhouse Kipp, the Kipp and Newhouse Kip).

kip-nozd (kip-nozd) adj., arch. having a nose turned up at the point.

the Kipp (thu-kip) n. small hill to the south-east of Heip Hill, also known as Kippielaw, reaching a height of 218 m. The name may also have been formerly synonymous with Heip (or Heap) Hill itself (marked ‘The Kipp’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Kipp (thu-kip) n. eastern spur of Todshawhaugh Hill, lying just to the south of Todshawhaugh farm.

Kippielaw (ki-pie-law) n. former house to the west of Stirches Road, which disappeared in the late 19th century. John Ferguson was there in 1790. The nearby hill, above Greensidehall, reaches a height of 218 m, and is also known as ‘the Kipp’. There are several other places with the same (or similar) name around Scotland – ‘The tiny yellow tormentil Is peeping here and there, The hollows of the Kippilaw Are never dry or bare’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘Kipielaw’ and ‘Kippilaw’, it is marked ‘Kiplaw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is presumably the same as that of the place of the same name 10 miles to the north-east in Bowden Parish).

Kippielaw Moss (ki-pee-law-mos) n. boggy area with a small pond between Greensidehall and Heip Hill.

Kippilaw (ki-pee-law) n. farm in Bowden Parish, off the B6359 between Lilliesleaf and Bowden village. There were once Kers there (the origin is probably the Old English ‘coppede hlaw’, meaning ‘hill with the summit cut off’; it first occurs as ‘Kyppelaw’ in 1552, then ‘Cyppealw’ in 1567 and ‘Kyppylaw’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

kippit (ki-pee, -pi’) adj., arch. turned up (of the nose) – ‘She hes a kipeet nose, an’ A’ve harrd eet said that’s a sein (sign) o a short temper’ [ECS] (also written ‘kipeet’).

kipple (ki-pul) n., arch. a couple – ‘But some said she had in her han’ a kipple o’ bottles o’ branny’ [ES], the inclined rafter or beam of a roof – ‘My auld wife here And me, just quietly on steer Aneath the auld black kipple’ [ECS], ‘Wha lays the kipples o’ his chamners in the waters …’ [HSR].

kipple-yill (ki-pul-til) n., arch. the drink given to workmen after erecting the rafters of a house.

Kipps Plantin (kips-plawn-in) n. plantation to the north-east of the Minto Hills, adjacent to Lambslair Plantation and south of Standhill farm. It is probably associated with Kip’s Park.

kippy (ki pee) adj., arch. quick-tempered, hasty – ‘Wheiles she’s aa richt, bit she’s awfih kippy tempert, an’ oo’ve fund ir in yin o ir kips the nicht’ [ECS], having an upturned nose.

Kip’s Park (ki-pul) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. It was listed as part of the Minto estate in 1779 (and 1811), when valued at £102 7d. The rental for ‘Kipp’s park and inclosure’ was £28 in 1780. It was probably associated with the modern Kipps Plantin, but it is unclear who ‘Kip’ was.

kirk (kirk) n. a church – ‘the whole family we’rt ti kirk on Sundis’, ‘…But he must pass the lone kirk stile, Before he reach’d her dwelling’ [JR], ‘Though time has wrocht a change or twae On kirk and shop and mill’ [WL], ‘Where Teviot rins by kirk and tower …’ [IWS], ‘And A pick oot fer ablow iz Every weel kent kirk and mill’ [IWL], ‘ti make a kirk or a mill o’d’ means to do what you like with it, v. to pass through a formal church attendance, particularly applied to the Cornet during Kirking Sunday, often capitalised – ‘It is the day the Cornet is Kirked’ [BEL] (the origin of the word is the Old Norse ‘Kirkja’).

Kirk (kirk) n. Charles (b.1808/9) born in Dunfermline, he was a lawyer in Hawick. He was for a while in partnership with Walter Haddon. He Kirkandrews (kirk-awn-drooz) n. area in the north of Cumbria, just over the Border off the A7, with an 18th century church and a 16th century occupied peel tower nearby. This was an important part of the English West March, owned by the de Soulis family, then passing to the Douglasses and Grasmons. The associated parish was part of the Debateable Land (also written ‘Kirk Andrews’).

Kirkbank (kirk-bawngk) n. former station on the Jedburgh Railway, off the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway.

Kirk Borthwick (kirk-bor-theek) n. former site of the chapel that served parishioners in the western part of Wilton Parish (which may even have been a separate Parish of Borthwick in early times) and the name used for the surrounding area. It lay near Borthwickbrae and close to Borthwick Waas cemetery. The precise location is uncertain, but it was probably on the north side of the road on a level platform on the East bank of the Kirk Cleuch, which is a narrow ravine leading up through the lands of Borthwickbrae (however, some accounts place it on the south side of the road). It was probably founded in the late 1200s and was either originally part of the Diocese of Glasgow (like much of Teviotdale), or belonged to the monks of Melrose Abbey (who held lands and pasture rights in the area). It is said that it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It could be the church of Borthwick referred to in the charters of Glasgow in about 1150, consecrated by Robert, Bishop of St. Andrews. The land there was referred to as Kirk Borthwick by the time of Robert the Bruce, but only as Borthwick in the first half of the 13th century. A spring about 500 m to the north-west is known as ‘Lady’s Well’, and presumably connected with the church. If the chapel was once in a separate parish, it was certainly annexed to Wilton by the early 14th century. In 1612 it is recorded that half of the living was given to Francis McGill by the minister of Wilton, and as late as 1688 it was listed as part of the charge of the Wilton minister. It was used as the church of the new Borthwick Parish for a while, until Roberton Church was built in 1659, at the centre of the enlarged parish (which was suppressed soon afterwards before finally becoming Roberton in 1689). It was probably in use until the 1650s, but ruined soon afterwards. John Langlands of Wilton (and later Hawick) may have been the last minister to preach there. It is said that the foundations of the church could still be made out up the Kirk (thu-kirk) n. The Church of Scotland, which seceded from Rome Rome in 1560, led by John Knox, and now has the largest membership of any church in Scotland. It has a Calvinist doctrine and a Presbyterian structure, where each congregation elects its own governing elders.

Kirk Borthwick

had offices at the corner of the Sandbed and Buccleuch Street and was agent for Western Bank, which failed in 1857. He was an early Trustee for St. George’s Kirk. In 1852 he was listed in Slater’s directory as ‘writer’ on Buccleuch Street, as well as agent for the Edinburgh insurance company and for the West of England company. In 1851 he was living at about 20 Buccleuch Street, and was ‘Register of Sheriff Court of Roxburgh Shire & in practice’. In 1861 he was listed as a Solicitor, living at 3 Buccleuch Street. In the 1860s he is recorded as the Depute-Clerk for the court, which met every other month in Hawick. He was also the local collector for the Inland Revenue. His wife was Margaret B., and their children included Charles M., Mary, James H. and Margaret H. James (d.c.1820) Rector of Hawick Grammar School 1798–1818. He was previously schoolmaster at Haddington, and came to Hawick to replace Thomas Barrie. He also applied for the position of Hawick postmaster in 1802, but appears not to have been successful. He married Eleanora Whitehead in Haddington in 1794, and their children included John, Edmond, Marion, Maria, James and Isabella; all but the first were born in Hawick. He resigned in 1818 and was then teacher in Leith. In 1821 his daughter Elizabeth married Nicholas Whitehead in Leith, but which time he was deceased. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He probably had a local connection. Rev. John (19th C.) minister of the Bright Street Evangelical Union Church in Edinburgh. In the Spring of 1848 he came to Hawick to assist John Rutherford in leading a special ‘mission’ of prayer meetings and sermons. He joined at the end of the first week and stayed for the following 6. This led directly to the founding of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk in Hawick. He returned to Hawick about 1858 to conduct some revival meetings and again returned in 1864 as the Rev. Prof. Kirk to induct the new E.U. minister David Hislop. 3 of his sons became ministers, including Rev. Edward Bruce, who was also a noted amateur astronomer. William (18th C.) collator of Musselburgh who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1753. James Wilson suggests that he was probably a ‘coal viewer’ (but it is unclear what that means).

the Kirk (thu-kirk) n. The Church of Scotland, which seceded from Rome Rome in 1560, led by John Knox, and now has the largest membership of any church in Scotland. It has a Calvinist doctrine and a Presbyterian structure, where each congregation elects its own governing elders.
the Kirk Cleuch

to the north of the road roughly opposite Borthwick Waas Cemetery, and believed to have been the approximate location for Kirk Borthwick.

kirk-gaun (kirk-gawn) adj., arch. church-going – ‘Wullie being a ‘kirk-gaun’ man, and a hunter of new ministers, he had many a quaint remark to make about the various styles of preachers and preachings’ [RM], ‘Hech, sirs! The denty fowk! Primpin by, pair by pair, Kirkgaun . . . ’[DH].

Kirkhaugh (kirk-hawch) n. former name for lands that were part of the Hawick Common. They were mentioned in 1725. However, it is unclear where these lands were.

the Kirkhaugh (thu-kirk-hawch) n. lands adjacent to the Kirk of Hobkirk. In 1618 there was a ‘wadset’ for ‘the former two acres of land with a day’s wark meadow adjacent thereto lying in the Kirkhauch beside the Kirk of Hopkirk’.

Kirk Hill (kirk-hil) n. hill to the east of the old Buccleuch Kirk on the Rankle Burn, reaching a height of 397 m. The name presumably comes from the former church.

Kirk Hill (kirk-hil) n. hill to the west of Ettleton churchyard in Liddesdale. It reaches a height of 282 m and is topped by a triangulation pillar. There is a hill-fort on the summit, and the extensive remains of a farmstead and field-system on the eastern slopes, possibly the lands of Side where ‘Jock o the Side’ lived. There are terraces, with rig lines and other signs of cultivation to the north-east. On the western side is an enclosure and associated building and ‘lazy-beds’. To the west is also the remains of an old farm at Greenburni on a spur of land called The Tongue.

Kirkhoose (kirk-hoos) n. Kirkhouse, former name for a freeholding near the boundaries of Wilton Glebe, Easter Howlands and the southern part of Roughheugh. Presumably named for its proximity to lands related to Wilton Church.

Kirkhooses (kirk-hoo-seez) n. Kirkhouses, former seat of a branch of the Scott family near Ashkirk. The land was presumably attached to the Kirk, either historically or geographically.

the Kirkhope (tho-kirk-klooch) n. stream

Kirkhope (kir-kup) n. settlement in the Ettrick valley just west of Ettrickbridge. ‘Old Kirkhope’ lie in the hills above and has a ruined tower. The farm was owned by the Crown from about 1456. It was leased by Sir Thomas Cranston from at least 1471, for his feal as Bailie of Ettrick Forest, passing to John Cranston until about 1490 and then to Alexander, Lord Home. In 1502 it is reported that John Scott in Walls had remission for stealing 3 of Lord Cranston’s horses from here. It remained Crown property until at least 1502 and was feued to Sir William Cranston in 1510. Alexander Scott was tenant in 1536. Lord Cranston still claimed the lands in 1541. There were Turnbull tenants there in the early 16th century. Thomas Johnstone paid rent to Melrose Abbey for the lands in 1557. The lands were owned by the Cranstons of that Ilk in the late 16th century, passing to the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1594. The lands remained part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. The Scotts of Harden sold them to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the early 18th century. James Matthewson was there in 1702 and Gideon Scott in 1785. It is also the name of an ancient parish of Selkirkshire, which was reconstituted in 1852 out of... part of Yarrow Parish – ‘Ho! for the blades of Harden! Ho! for the ring of steel!’ The stolen steers of a hundred years Come home for a Kirkhope meal!’ [WHO], ‘The kye are weary o’ more and fern And ‘tis many a mile to the Kirkhope Burn’ [WHO] (it is ‘Hirkhop’ in 1471, ‘Kirkhoup’ in 1557 and ‘Kirkhope’ in 1564; it is marked on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland as ‘Kirkhoop’; it is ‘Kirkhoope’ and ‘Kirkhoope wood’, but too far away on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Kirkhope Toor (kir-kup-toor) n. 17th century peel tower located about 7 miles west of Selkirk, near Kirkhope, built on the site of an earlier tower burned by the Armstrongs in 1543, and restored in the 1990s. It was a stronghold of the eldest sons of the Scotts of Harden. In his youth ‘Auld Wat’ brought Mary Scott of Dryhope ‘the Flower of Yarrow’ here and allegedly later ‘Young Wat’ brought ‘Muckle Mou’ed Meg’ – ‘In the mystic hush of the morning hour Came the clatter of hoofs from Kirkhope Tower …’ [WHO], ‘…To Yarrow where the Swire climbs Around grey Kirkhope Tower’ [WL].

kirkin (kir-kin) n. a ceremonial attendance at church, especially by councillors after an election. The term was also used in the 19th century (and earlier) to refer to the attendance at church of the bride and groom, usually on the Sunday following their Friday marriage ceremony.

the Kirkin (thu-kir-kin) n. ceremonial church service that takes place in the Cornet’s church on the Sunday morning beginning the week of the Common Riding. Traditionally lily of the valley is worn, and it is the first time for sporting the Cornet’s tie. The Principals, in formal dress (morning suits and tile hats), walking behind the Halberdiers, lead the ‘Cornet’s Kirk Parade’ from the Council Chambers to the church. Behind the Principals come the ex-Cornets in order of year, then the ex-Acting Fathers and finally the rest of the supporters, all walking in pairs. At the church the parade meets the Provost and Bailies and the service is also attended by the Lasses. There the Cornet and his Lass is presented with a bible, and afterwards the party goes for the Cornet’s Lass’s Lunch. The ceremony was initiated in 1887, when Rev. John Thomson (of St. John’s Kirk) invited the Common Riding supporters to his church on the following Sunday, after he had accepted an invitation to the Cornet’s breakfast. For many years it took place on the Sunday immediately after the Common Riding, rather than before. The officiating minister is sometimes referred to as the ‘Cornet’s Chaplain’. The 1914 ceremony was part of the Quater-centenary celebrations and also the 700th anniversary of the consperation of St. Mary’s, being attended by an estimated 4,000 people in the churchyard. In 1891 there were both Episcopalian and Evangelical services in a tent on the Haugh on the Sunday after the Common Riding.

Kirkin Sundi (kir-kin-sin-di) n. Sunday preceding the Common Riding weekend, when the Cornet is ‘Kirked’. After the Cornet’s Kirk Parade and church service, there is the Cornet’s Lass’s Lunch, and then the Principals go to the Mair to inspect the course before the events of the following week. The day is also referred to as Exhibition Sundi. Note that before the Common Riding was revamped in the 1880s, there had been an ‘old custom of visiting the race course’ on the Sunday before, as a sort of practice for the racing that was to come.

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf adjacent to Bewlie. This was ‘Kirklands of Bewlie’, which were part of the Earl of Roxburghe’s lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1643, valued at £90 and subsequently sold to Riddell of Camieston. In 1678 the Earl of Roxburgh paid land tax ‘for the kirklands of and tye ndes of the paroch’. Walter Scott of Whitfield (later Harden) owned these lands in 1720 when they were leased to James Shiel and John Mathieson. ‘Kirklands of Bewlie’ were still valued at £90 in 1788 when owned by Duke of Roxburgh. In the mid-19th century the lands were purchased by Riddell of Museele (also ‘Kirklands’; marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541, and said to pertain to the Vicar. Presumably these lands were near the original site of Castleton Parish Kirk.

Kirkland (kirk-lind) Rev. Robert (1906/7–85) born in Glasgow, he became minister of Orrock Church in 1932 and moved to Edinburgh in 1939. During the War he served with the Royal Marines and was awarded the M.B.E.

the Kirkland (thu-kirk-lind) n. former name for farm lands owned by Scott of Buccleuch, and presumably once attached to the Kirk of Hawick. It is possible they were related to the ‘Kirkton’ and ‘Kirkton Tofts’ recorded in early documents. They are mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when the land produced ‘aittis’, ‘corne’ and ‘peis’, and ‘Willie of Allanhauch’ was given ‘the Kirkland, his awne rowme’. Probably the same land is described as ‘ye Kirkland’ in a 1627 valuation of the Parish of Hawick; it is listed among the lands closest to the Town, consisted of 32 acres, was owned by the Lord of Buccleuch and ‘payand presentlie 32 bolls in stock, estomat in stok to 12, and 3 bolls of teynd’ yearly. In 1692 the lands were described as consisting of 34 acres, and were leased by the Duchess of Buccleuch to John Scott, ‘Sodger’, Thomas Scott, ‘Laird’, Andrew Clerk, Robert Ruecastle and Walter Ruecastle (also written ‘the kirk land’, etc.).

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. alternative name for the lands of Wilton Glebe, originally belonging to Wilton Parish Church. This could be the ‘kirkland de Wiltoun’ where Thomas Williamson was farmer in 1493. The name survives in Kirklands Hotel on West Stewart Place. It is also the name of a house in Denholm, behind the Church.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. name sometimes former used to describe the lands attached to Hobkirk Kirk, somewhat more extensive than those later called the Glebe of Hobkirk, and originally being in the Barony of Abbotrule. Hector Turnbull of Hartshaugh possessed these lands in 1580 and had a charter in 1604 which described them as ‘the kirk lands called Vicar’s Lands of the kirk of Hobkirk’, with the Manse and Glebe being explicitly excluded. His grandson Adam inherited these lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ in 1622, along with ‘Viccarishall’.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. former name for land attached to Bedrule Kirk. In 1557 a complaint was made by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst that Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others had invaded his lands there, beating his servants; this may have been part of a dispute over ownership. In the 16th century (as confirmed in 1581) it was ruled that this ‘half merk land of Kirklandis of Bedrowill’ belonged to Sir John Stewart of Traquair rather than Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. house and small estate on the south of the Ale Water, to the west of Ancrum and adjacent to the graveyard. The house dates from about 1830, and there is an enclosed parkland with large lime trees. John Richardson (lawyer, occasional poet and friend of Sir Walter Scott) lived there in the 19th century, purchasing the estate in 1830, spending the autumn months in residence until his retirement, and dying there in 1864.

Kirklands Hotel (kirk-lindz-hotel) n. long-time hotel in Hawick, situated in West Stewart Place. It was built as Viewforth for hatter George Porteous in 1878. It was designed with a mixture of Dutch, French Renaissance and Gothic elements, and had a later extension to the east corner. I. Washington Wallis lived in it for a while, and John Farrar Blenkhorn rented it for a few years. Prior to WWII it became a temperance hotel and after the War was run as a regular hotel. It ceased to be a hotel in 2007. It is a grade C listed building.

Kirklea (kirk-lee) n. house built in 1859 as manse for Ashkirk Free Kirk. That church closed in 1909. In 1917 the poet W.H. Ogilvie leased the house and later purchased it.

kirkless (kirk-lis) adj. without a church – ‘Sae try to make yoursel content, Though kirkless aye, ye’se never want’ [RDW].

kirk-mense (kirk-mens) n., arch. a first appearance at church – ‘Gaein (an article of dress) kirk-mense or Sunday-mense, respectively, is to let the first occasion on which it is worn be a church service, or fall on a Sunday. According to an auld frait this must invoke some kind of blessing on the article and on its wearer’ [ECS] (also Sundi-mense).

Kirknowe (kirk-now) n. former farm near Hobkirk Church, once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. It was described as lying between Langraw and the Church, and is described in older deeds as being in the territory of Langraw in the Parish of Abbotrule. The farmhouse stood on a high bank above Kirkstile. The farm lies to the west of the Parish Kirk and the place is still shown on the modern Ordnance Survey map. It was owned (or perhaps tenanted hereditarily) by the Shiel family from before the Reformation, with half being sold in 1666. It was valued at £78 in 1643 when owned by Walter Shiel and also in about 1663 when Walter Scott was tenant. Thomas Boston paid tax on £78 there in 1678. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1694, with Jean Bennet and Isobel Turnbull also residents. John Mair purchased the farm in 1704 and his son Richard sold it to William Elliot of Wolfleee in 1751. Peter Smith was tenant in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Half of the land was owned by James Riddell in 1788, with the other half being owned by William Turnbull of Langraw (and a small part of that half by Cornelius Elliot of Wolfleee). ‘Boston’s half of Kirknow’ was recorded among the lands owned by the Kirk Road (thu-kirk-röld) n. former name for what is now Princes Street and Langlands Road, often referred to in old documents as ‘the Kirk road from Langlands to Wilton’.

Kirk (kirk) n., pl. churches. There were once many more of these in Hawick than at the present day, the proliferation of Church of Scotland churches being a result of the factions that developed within Presbyterianism in the 18th and 19th centuries. Many of the churches have gone by several different names at different times. A list of the various names that have been used for different church buildings in Hawick (ignoring smaller organisations that may not have had a permanent meeting place) includes: Alars Kirk/the Relief Chapel/the Relief Kirk/the Cross Wynd Kirk/the Cross Wynd United Presbyterian Kirk; the Anti-Burgher Kirk/the First Secession Kirk/the Green Kirk/the West End Kirk/the West End Meetin Hoose/the West End United Presbyterian Kirk; the Baptist Kirk; the Burgher Kirk/the Second Secession Kirk/the Associate Kirk/the East End Meetin Hoose/the East Bank Kirk/the East End Kirk/East Bank United Free Kirk/East Bank United Presbyterian Kirk; Burnt Kirk; the Congregational Kirk/the Evangelical Union Kirk/the E.U. The Kirk Session (kirk-se-shin) n. a body consisting of minister and elected elders in the Presbyterian church, dealing with matters of religion, membership, discipline etc. in a particular parish, being the lowest court of that church – ‘The kirk-session, in compliance with recommendations from the superior courts, were in the frequent practice of setting apart days for public fasting and thanksgiving’ [RJAW].

The Kirk Session (thu-kirk-se-shin) n. body of elders and the Minister of Hawick Parish Kirk, also referred to as simply ‘the Session’. They were appointed to oversee the good conduct of the congregation, and formerly would meet each week, directly after the church service. Two elders were appointed to supervise each of the districts of the Parish, 4 in the Burgh itself and 3 in the country part. The duties they carried out in the 17th and 18th centuries were later mainly taken over by the School board, police and Parish Council. It appears that the main heritors of the Parish also served as part of the Kirk Session, at least for the enactment of some of the business. The minute books of the Session meetings are an invaluable record of civil as well as ecclesiastical matters in the 18th and 19th centuries. The first existing Session Book covers 1711–25 (and is quite comprehensive), the second 1751–68 and the third 1785–1826 (these 2 recording only minutes of the more important meetings). There are also Kirk Treasurer’s books from 1723. A Session Book covering 1700–04 still existed in 1857 (and some extracts are given in James Wilson’s ‘Memories . . . ’ book), but disappeared before the end of the 19th century. All previous books, like earlier communion plate etc., probably went with the former ministers, like they did elsewhere in Scotland around the time of the Revolution.

Kirkside (kirk-sid) n. street in Denholm, running along the north-east side of the Green and running past the church.

Kirksteed (kirk-steed) n. recorded in 1541 as ‘Kirkstead’ on the rental roll of Liddesdale, when it was listed as having no tenant. It is uncertain where exactly these lands were.

Kirk Steps (kirk-steps) n. another name for the Kirkstile, in use in the mid-19th century.

The Kirkstile (thu-kirk-stil) n. short street leading to St. Mary’s Church, formerly known as Easter Kirkstile, and also formally the address of the Church. This is where the Snuffing takes place on the Friday morning of the Common Riding. The street consists partly of a bridge over the Slitrig, which was built to replace the ‘Auld Brig’ in 1852, paid for by William Elliot (who had Tower Mill built). This bridge is about 13 1/2 feet wide and about 5 1/2 feet lower than the Auld Brig, and with no central pier (i.e. less obstructive during floods). There was once a building of some sort here (perhaps a storage building for the church), referred to in 1686 as ‘the church stile building’ when someone was fined for stealing lime from it. When the old church was demolished in 1763, a large part of the steepel fell here, and the material had to be carried back up for making the new building – ‘... There’s peace owre the Kirkstile wa’’ [JEDM] (also written ‘Kirkstyle’, ‘Kirk Stile’ etc.; the word originally meant the opening in the wall around a church, or the steps in the wall of a churchyard).

Kirkstile (kirk-stil) n. former farm in Hobkir Parish, adjacent to the parish kirk, and once forming half of the lands of Kirknowe. It was held by the Shiel’s since before the Reformation. It passed from John Shiel to his grandson John Stevenson in an agreement ratified in 1759. In 1779 it was sold to a Riddell, then passed to Alexander Anderson and then Peter Smith. A part of the lands held a cottage and blacksmith’s shop (also called ‘Hobkirkstile’ or ‘Hobkirkstyle’; sometimes spelled ‘Kirkstyle’).

Kirkstyle see the Kirkstile

Kirkstyle (kirk-stil) n. former cottage near the church in Ewesdale. It was occupied by 5 separate households in 1841.

Kirkstyle Place (kirk-stil-plis) n. name occasionally used for the Kirkstile.

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. hamlet on the A6088, about half-way to Bonchester, roughly 4 miles from Hawick. This has been the main route from Hawick to Newcastle since about the 1830s (when it replaced the Wellogate Birneyknowe and Forkins road). It has a church, the present one dating from 1841, and once contained a school. It is also the name of the surrounding small parish, which is probably the same as ‘Cavers Parva’ recorded in Mediaeval times. Kirkton farm was formerly part of the Cavers estate. Arthur and William Douglas in Kirkton are recorded in 1569. In 1574 it was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty ‘for the cryme of thift in tyme bigan’; this included ‘Barty Crosar’. The ‘4 and 2 merk lands’ of Kirkton were sold by Sir Gilbert Elliott to his uncle Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1655. There was a blacksmith’s there, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James Douglas was at the farm there in 1718. The lands were part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. George Heatley was living there in 1797. A small ball of gneiss with projecting knobs was found there and is now in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow. A stone axe was also found there. Note that there are many other Kirktons throughout Scotland, and also an old name of lands near Branxholme (also spelled ‘Kirktoon’, ‘Kirktoone’, ‘Kirktoun’, ‘Kirkton’, etc.; the name is first recorded in 1458 as ‘Kirketoune’; it is ‘Kirktoon’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is simply ‘the farm by the church’, combining the Old Norse ‘kirkja’ with the Old English ‘tun’).
Kirkton

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. former lands somewhere near Branxholme, referred to also separately as Kirkton Mains and Kirkton Tofts in the 15th and 16th centuries and still recorded in the 17th century. It could be the same lands referred to as ‘terra ecclesiastica’ in the 1420 charter, when half of the lands of Branxholme were granted to Robert Scott of Rankiburn. In 1446, when the other half of Branxholme and neighbouring lands were granted to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme by Thomas Inglis of Manor, the deal included superiority over ‘certain lands of Kirktoon’, lying in the Barony of Hawick. In 1484 these were lands (along with East Mains) which James Douglas of Drumlanrig and his wife already held when James inherited the Barony of Hawick. Later the lands passed to the Douglasses of Cavers, with ‘Kirktoon and Kirktoon Mains’ still being mentioned in Douglas deed of 1662. It seems reasonable to suppose that these lands were connected with the former chapel near Chapel Hill. However, it is also possible that these were in fact the same lands as those in Kirkton Parish, if they were a detached part of the Barony of Hawick (it is ‘terrarum de Kirktoon’ and ‘Kyrktoune’ in 1446).

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. lands adjacent to the Kirk of Ewes, near Sorbie, near where the Kirkton Burn meets the river. This was ‘Kirktoon’, confirmed to Simon Little in 1426. Hector Armstrong of Hillhouse was ‘in the Kirktoun of Ewiscale’ in 1590/1. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 583 acres of pasture and 83 acres of corn land, both shared with Brieryshaw farm, which was owned by the Laird of Byreleck. It was bounded by Glendivian, Bush, Sorbie, the lands of Sir William Johnstone and Burngrains. The Byers family were there in 1841 and William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1861 (it is ‘Kirktoun of Sorbi’ in 1426, ‘Kirktoon’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Kirktoune’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).}

Adam (15th C.) tenant in Crailing Mill in 1493, when he had remission for several crimes. He was specifically said to have been involved with theft, reset and intercommuning with the English, as well as for being with the Duke of Albany during the rebellion and for kidnapping off a shoemaker from Jedburgh for ransom. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him. Probably the same Adam ‘in Oxnam Mains’ was recorded in the Justice-aire in 1494/5 when he ‘came in the King’s will’ for unspecified crimes, with Andrew Kerr again the surety. Probably the same Adam in Crailing had remission in 1502 for bringing in Englishmen to steal livestock from Mellerstain. Adam of Stewartfield (d.bef. 1571) perhaps son of William. He was Steward of Jedburgh Abbey in 1543. He was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme at Goldielands and elsewhere. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1557 as tenant of the farm of Swinnie under Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Kerr complained to the Queen that a group of men ‘boddin in feir of weir’ came to his farm and dug up peats and terrorised him. He may be the same ‘Adam Kyrkton’ who witnessed a bond of 1557 in which Turnbulls, Elliots and others promised to bring in William Nixon. Possibly the same Adam is listed in 1561 among men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. The line ‘Wi’ Kirktoon, Newtoun, noblemen’ in the ballad ‘The Battle of Red-Swire’ may refer to him. He may be the same man as Adam of Stewartfield. Adam of
the Kirkton Burn

Stewartfield (16th/17th C.) succeeded his grandfather William of Stewartfield in 1606 and inherited lands in Bonjedward from his father in 1611. He married Grizel, eldest daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Hunthill. The marriage contract was witnessed at Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) House in 1612, with Cranston of that Ilk and 2 other Cranstons (who owned the estate at the time) on the record. His son William was served as his heir in 1642. Alexander (17th C.) Provost of Jedburgh, elected in 1620. He represented Jedburgh in Parliament in 1617 and 1630. Along with John Moscrop, younger (Burgess of Jedburgh) he was joint owner of Nether Bonchester until selling it to Walter Scott in 1653. Andrew (16th/17th C.) graduated from Edinburgh University in 1617 and became minister of Oxnam Parish. Probably the same Andrew, ‘M.A.’ was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1619 and 1623. He married Elizabeth Knox and had sons John and Thomas. George (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He may have been related to Robert, who was also involved, and was listed along with other men from the Jedburgh area and Berwickshire. John (d.1538) associated with the Kirk of Bedrule. After he died, in 1539, Bernard Baillie was presented, but refused by the Archbishop. John (16th C.) officer of the Warden of the Middle March, William Ker of Cessford. In 1583 he appeared at a day of truce with the English Warden, in place of 2 sons of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Robert (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was said to have been on Edinburgh High Street with John Peacock, servant of the Laird of Cowdenknowes, and Lance Ainslie, when they stabbed the wounded Scott several times and took his cloak and bonnets. Perhaps the same Robert was listed in an actin against a Frenchman in Edinburgh in 1550. Robert (17th C.) resident of Jedburgh Parish. His son William was baptised in 1666, with witnesses Andrew and William. Thomas (17th C.) servant of Andrew Kerr, Lord Jedburgh. He was a witness to a document relating to Harwood and Hawthornside in 1631. William (15th C.) listed as ‘Wyll of Kyrktoun’ in 1454 when he was witness to a document for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He is also recorded as ‘William of Kirkton’ when he was witness to a ‘tack’ of David Scott, younger of Branxholme in 1478. Since several of the other witnesses were connected with Jedburgh Abbey, this seems likely to be the local Kirkton. He may be the same William ‘Kirktone’ listed among Border lairds in an action registered with Parliament in 1476. He could be the William who had a saisine for Bonjedward in 1483. Perhaps the same William ‘kirkton in kirkton’ was recorded in the Justice- aire held in 1494/5 when he ‘came in the King’s will’ for crimes against Ingram Oliver in Jedburgh. Either the same William, or a later one, was fined in 1502 for failing to ‘give suit’ at the Justice- aire for his lands of Bonjedward; in 1503 he presented John Smith as suitor at the Justice- aire for these same lands, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his procurator. A probably related ‘William Kirkton’ was one of the men who signed the pledge to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace in Edinburgh in 1524/5. William of Faimington (16th C.) recorded in 1581, along with his sons Mungo and John. In a transaction involving Haliburtons, there was mention of a 1580 decree from the Lords of Council in which Walter Haliburton in Ancrum evicting them from his lands in Ancrum Spittal. William of Stewartfield (16th C.) son of Adam, who he succeeded as Steward of Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed along with Olivers of Southdean in 1572/3, when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston were their cautioners. His surety was for £1000, twice that of the other men; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He was separately listed in 1572/3, with George Douglas of Bonjedward as surety. He could be the ‘Williamie Kirkton, officer of the Middle March’ recorded in 1586 when William Ker was his surety to appear before the Privy Council; he was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for not appearing (and was then described a a Bailie of Jedburgh). He is listed on the list of ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590 and is probably the Kirkton of Stewartfield listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. There may be 2 generations of Williams here. William (17th C.) son of Adam of Stewartfield. In 1642 he was served heir to his father’s 3 husbandlands in Bonjedburgh, as well as the lands of Stewartfield. Probably the same William is recorded as owner of lands in Ulston in 1643 (spelled ‘Kirkton’, ‘Kirtoume’, ‘Kyrktoun’ and variants).

the Kirkton Burn (thu-kirk-tin-burn) n. stream that rises near Earlsdie, runs through Kirkton Hill

Kirkton and alongside the A6088 till past Cauldmill, joining the Teviot near Hornshole. Alongside the stream to the south of Birneyknowe is the start of a linear earthwork, which runs about 800 m to end near the road connecting Stobs with Bonchester. There are some signs of enclosures at both ends, suggesting that this was a boundary related to grazing rights. On the upper section, an exposed part of the basaltic dyke which runs across Roxburghshire was used by geologist David Milne-Home in 1842 to illustrate his theory of a crack being filled by lava.

Kirkton Hill (kirk-tin-hil) n. hill behind the Kaimends, south-east of Hawick, and south of the village of Kirkton, reaching 275 m (897 ft). It is the site of a hill-fort and there is evidence of settlements there from the Iron Age to mediaeval times. The fort was oval, measuring roughly 190 ft by 170 ft, with double or triple ramparts, probably with an entrance on the south-west. The interior of the fort appears to have been later converted into a settlement, with at least 9 huts. An even later enclosure, about 60 ft by 50 ft, containing 2 scooped courts, may date from the 15th or 16th centuries.

Kirkton Hoose (kirk-tin-hoos) n. former home of John Turnbull of Slitrig Dyeworks, situated in Kirkton.

Kirkton Kirk (kirk-tin-kirk) n. church in Kirkton. Before the Reformation it was a Rectory, and it is known from at least the time of the Ragman Rolls. However, it does not seem to have had its own minister (separate from that of Cavers) until about the time of the Reformation. The former church was described in 1838 as ‘in a very bad state of repair’. The location is close to the eastern boundary of the Parish, which was inconvenient for those living further west, but meant that some families from Cavers Parish would attend Kirkton. The present church dates from 1841, and contains some panels from the previous building. A stone slab that had formed the ‘stool of repentance’ was discovered during the demolition of the previous church building and in 1861 it was presented to the Archaeological Society (but seems to have subsequently disappeared). The church was remodelled in 1906, with J.P. Alison as architect (replacing the more ambitious plans that were deemed too expensive by the Session). During remodelling 2 inscribed stones were installed in the walls, one having a crudely carved sword from about the 16th century and the other reading ‘HOW SHORT IS TIME HOW LONG ETERNITY 1688’. The Manse was taxed for having 2 hearths in 1694 and 12 windows in 1748. It was rebuilt in about 1760 and around 1840 converted into use as a byre and stables, before eventually becoming the church halls in 1933. A new Manse was built near the church in 1866. A Liszt organ was installed in 1893, presented by R. Ballantyne in memory of his parents. Due to falling rolls, the church was linked with Cavers (being served by a single minister) in 1955 and united with it in 1976. Cavers and Kirkton were linked with St. Mary’s 1976–88, with Hobkirk and Southdean 1988–96 and with St. Mary’s and ‘Auld Pairish’ in 1996. Since 1955 the church has only been used for occasional special services. 2 pewter cups are still held by the Kirk, but other communion plate appears to have disappeared. The oldest surviving communion token is from 1734, is made of lead, heart-shaped and bears the initials ‘K.K.’; another similar token is from 1761. A roll of the ministry is: Maurice Lovel in 1296; Patrick ‘of Albania’ in 1453; William ‘Amuligane’ (probably Milligan) in 1545; Archibald Heriot, until 1550; William Cranston (Vicar and Parson), 1550–67/8; George Douglas (Vicar and Parson), 1567/8–c.97; William Auchmowtie (Minister, along with several neighbouring parishes), from 1574; John Watson in 1588; John Douglas (Parson and Vicar), from 1597; Walter McGill (Parson and Vicar, along with Cavers), from 1606; James Scott 1616–c.19; Robert Brownlie 1620–c.45; Andrew Pringle 1646–50; Gavin Elliot 1652–62; Alexander Forrest 1664–83; Alexander Burnet 1684–85; Patrick Cunningham 1687–c.1706; John Douglas 1707–50; Alexander Glen 1751–57; Thomas Elliot 1758–63; James Erskine 1764–74; Alexander Gordon 1775–85; James Hay 1785–86; Benjamin Dickson 1787–1800; John Elliot 1801–17; Adam Laidlaw 1818–34; William Stewart Martin 1834–57; George Hunter 1857–81; David Cathels 1882–92; John Stuart 1892–1930; William Robertson 1931–40; George E. Cowe 1940–51; James B. Primrose 1951–55; William Welsh 1955–75; Duncan Clark 1976–84; Alexander C. MacCartney 1985–87; Adam McC. Bowie 1988–96; David W.G. Burt 1996–98; William P. Taylor 1998– .

Kirkton Mains (kirk-tin-mänz) n. lands near Hawick, probably adjacent (or perhaps identical to) ‘Kirkton Tofts’ near Branxholme. They are mentioned in 1464/5 along with the Flex in a dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig (Baron of Hawick) and Alexander Gledstains. Douglas had a sasine for these lands and the Flex, along with the associated mill, the sasine being delivered at the ‘capitale messuagium’, i.e. principal dwelling house. There was also a mill there. The lands of ‘Est Manis of the Kirkton, with their pertinentis, lyand in the barony of Hawic’ were among those to be infefted to James, heir to Drumlanrig, as part of his marriage contract in 1470; this is probably the same as (or part of) Kirkton Mains. The lands are mentioned alongside Crumhaugh in Hawick’s 1511 Charter, as part of the Barony of Hawick held ‘in property’ by the Baron. This suggests a location perhaps near Martin’s House or Branxholme Bridgend; however, there is still a possibility that these lands were in the Parish of Kirkton, but somehow associated with lands nearer to Hawick. In 1545 these lands were specifically mentioned in the inheritance of James Douglas of Cavers, as lands he possessed in the Barony of Hawick, and again when infefted to his son William in 1558. In that year the ‘liferent’ was granted to the mother of the new Laird, Christian Kerr, the value being 40 shillings and held ‘in blech ferm for one penny of asked’ from the Baron of Hawick. The lands are mentioned (again coupled with those of Crumhaugh) in the retour of James Douglas for the Barony of Hawick in 1572. In 1594 the lands of ‘Cruhauch and Kirkton of Manys’ are ratiﬁed to the Baron Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with many others in the Barony and it is still listed among the Baron’s lands in 1615 (it is ‘Kyrktounemansys’ and ‘Kyrktoone Maynis’ in 1464/5, ‘Kirkton Manys’ in 1511, ‘Kyrktoun Manys’ in 1511/2, ‘Kirkton Manys’ and ‘Kyrkton Manys’ in 1514, ‘Kyrktoun Manys’ in 1545, ‘Kirkton Mannis’ in 1559, Kirkton Manis’ in 1572, ‘Kirtoun of Manys’ in 1594, ‘Kirktoonmaynis’ in 1615 and ‘Kirkton Maynes’ in 1686; see also Kirkton Tofts).
Kirkton Manse

Kirkton Manse (kirk-tin-mawns) n. former minister’s house in Kirkton Parish. It was taxed for having 2 hearths in 1694 and 12 windows in 1748. A new house was constructed in about 1760. Around 1840 this was converted into use as a barn and stables, before eventually becoming the church halls in 1933. A new Manse was built in 1866 and is now a private house.

Kirkton Parish (kirk-tin-pá-reesh) n. small parish a few miles to the east and south of Hawick. It is narrow, being about 8 miles long by 2 miles wide, running north-east to south-west, and bounded by Cavers, Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes. It corresponded to the mediæval ‘Cavers Parva’ and had the status of a Rectors before the Reformation. It formally became a separate parish in the 16th century, and was part of the Diocese of Glasgow. A church existed there at least from the time of Edward I. The Parish is bounded mostly by Cavers, but also by Hawick and Teviothead. The boundary with Cavers used to pass straight through the farm of Cavers Mains. The extent of the Parish formerly included farms as distant from Kirkton village as Winningtonrig and Acreknowe. The lands of Middle were partly in the parish, but included in the Barony of Cavers. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £4200 and the total value was £4526 13s 4d in 1678. In the early 19th century there were 4 heritors, namely, Elliott of Stobs, Douglas of Cavers, Douglas of Adderstone and Dickson of Tofts. In 1838 it was stated that there were no villages, no toll-bars and no public houses in the Parish. Parish records exist from 1707, although not all births were registered, and only a small fraction of marriages and deaths; there are gaps in baptisms 1710–15 and 1738–42, as well as several gaps in the marriage records. There was a proposal in 1766/7 to suppress the Parish in favour of a new parish in the western parts of Cavers and Hawick (which became Teviothead).

Kirkton Schuil (kirk-tin-skil) n. former school in the Parish of Kirkton. It existed since at least 1669, when it was recorded that the position of schoolmaster was vacant. The building was situated on the left hand-side of the A6088 a few hundred yards before reaching the main settlement of Kirkton, where Clints Cottage was later built. There were about 50 pupils there in the 1830s. The school later moved to the building later known as Athole Cottage until a new building was constructed in 1887. The school closed in 1963. The Borders Archive has school registers for 1890–1939 and log books for 1873–1963. It was once run by the joint Cavers and Kirkton School Board. Thomas Wilson was schoolmaster until the mid-1780s, Walter Scott taking over for a few years (including 1787) and then being succeeded by Andrew Scott. The schoolmaster from 1834 to the 1860s was Thomas Little. John Turnbull was recorded as schoolmaster in at least 1903–06. The ridge overlooking the school has the remains of a hill-fort, consisting of a summit area and a plateau slightly below it, with triple ramparts, but no existing evidence of internal structures; it is about 115 m long by about 40 m, but tapering to the north-east.
Kirkton Tofts

Kirkton Tofts (kirk-tin-tofts) n. lands mentioned as an Inglis possession in a 1435 charter, along with Branxholme, Goldielands, Whitlaw, Whitrig, Todshawhills and Harwood, but all in the barony of Hawick (transcribed as ‘Kalkistoftis’). This might appear to refer to the farms of Tofts in Cavers Parish, near to Kirkton, but it is hard to see how this could have been in the barony of Hawick. An undated charter some time before this (and probably before 1426, since Robert Scott was a witness) has John Inglis of Manor and Branxholme granting the lands of ‘Kyrktoune and Toftis’ in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon Inglis. In 1461 the lands of ‘Kirktone and Toftis’ in the Lordship of Branxholme were confirmed to Katherine, daughter and heir of Alexander Inglis, along with her husband ‘Arnou Gourlau’. And in 1521 ‘6 merkland of Kyrktoun’ in the Barony of Branxholme were given to John Gourlay, as heir to his deceased father, John Gourlay of Rulewood; since the lands appear to have been close to Branxholme, perhaps they were associated with Chapellhill Kirk. This may be the place (or places) transcribed as ‘Toftis, Kirkwod’ in the 1594 and 1615 lists of lands for which the Baron of Hawick was superior (see also Kirkton Mains).

Kirkton Mains

Kirkwood

Kirkwood (kirk-wood, -wud) n. Alexander (19th C.) first pastor of Hawick Baptist Kirk. He served the new church, perhaps intermittently 1846–52. He probably preached in Allars Crescent. W.M. Anderson took over from him. Lord Archibald Johnstone ‘Archy’ (1946— ) politician, born in Glasgow. He obtained a degree in Pharmacy at Herriot-Watt University, became the first sabbatical student President there, retrained as a solicitor, and was a partner in Hawick with Andrew Haddon for a while. He was elected M.P. for Roxburgh and Berwickshire in 1983, is a member of the Liberal Democrats, has been party Chief Whip and also spokesman on welfare issues. He holds the record for the longest period as Hawick’s Parliamentary representative. He has taken part in some Common Riding Ride-outs. He was knighted in 2003 and became Lord Kirkwood of Kirkhope in 2005 after stepping down as M.P. Rev. James (c.1650–1709) born in Dunbar Parish, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1670, was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1676 and became Chaplain to the family of Sir John Campbell, Earl of Caithness (and later Breadalbane). He was then assistant at Wemyss and was presented to Minto Parish by Walter Riddell of Minto in early 1679, becoming minister later that year. However, he was deprived in late 1681 for not taking ‘the Test’, i.e. refusing to accept Episcopalianism. He went to Comonell Parish around 1682 or 1683. Then in 1684, through the influence of Dr. Gilbert Burnet (Bishop of Salisbury) he was given the modest living of Astwick in Bedfordshire. He is said to have been ‘outed’ with his consent in 1702, and moved to Ireland. He worked hard to circulate Gaelic copies of the Bible, and to promote libraries in every parish. He left some papers to the Presbytery of Dunbar detailing his efforts to circulate the Bible throughout the Highlands in Gaelic. His books were later transferred to the collection of the General Assembly. He wrote ‘A Discourse of the right way of improving our Time’ (1692), ‘An Overture for Founding and Maintaining Bibliothecks in every Paroch throughout the Kingdom’ (1699, 1889, based on which he is sometimes given the title ‘Father of the Free Libraries’), ‘A Copy of a Letter anent a Project for erecting a Library in every Presbytery, or at least every County in the Highlands’ (1702) and ‘A New Family Book, or the True Interest of Families (1690, 1693). He appears to have died unmarried.

Kirkwud (kirk-wud) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded c.1376 as ‘Kyrcwd’, with a value of 40 pence. It was in the section called ‘Forest’, but the precise location is unclear (perhaps near ‘Kirk Hill’ or near the old Castleton Kirk).

Kirkwud (kirk-wud) n. former name for lands listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511 and 1572. It is possible that this is an error for ‘Birkwood’ (it is ‘Kirkwood’ in 1511 and 1572).

Kirkwudheid (kirk-wud-heed) n. former name for lands near Wintrington Rig. They were listed as ‘lie Over et Nether Winndowheid’ as part of the Lordship of Wintrington in 1610. ‘Kirkwoodheid’ was listed among lands in the Barony of Wintrington in the late 17th century.

the Kirkwynd see the Kirk Wynd

the Kirk Wynd (thu-kirk-wünd) n. old road from Drumlanrig Square to the Slitrig, named for its proximity to St. Mary’s Church. It was referred to as a ‘vennel’ in a 1610 sasine. By the 19th century it had become a very over-crowded street. Most of the older buildings were demolished in 1973/74, with a car park by St. Mary’s church and a road through to Slitrig Bank being constructed. Some houses were restored and inhabited in 1984. It is the site where the Drums & Fifes assemble to begin the main day of the Common Riding at 6 a.m. on the Friday.

Kirndeane (kîrn-deen) n. farm just south of Dinlabyre, on the Liddel Water, to the east of the road, about 4½ miles north of Newcastleton. In 1541 it is valued at 1 merk on the rental roll of Liddesdale, with tenant George Armstrong. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 1589 acres, bounded by Dinlabyre on the east, Sorbietrees and the Border on the south, Dykeraw and lands of the Laird of Whitaugh on the west and Whitehaugh on the north; a house is shown near the modern farmhouse and another far to the south-east. It was one a home of the Armstrongs and then by the Elliots from the early 17th century until about 1950. ‘Fightin Charlie o Liddesdale’ is described in the notes to Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’, and is meant to have been an Armstrong or Elliot from here. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1681 and 1682. Andrew Murray was tenant there in 1694. Adam Elliot was farmer there in 1797, Thomas Elliot in 1841, Henry Elliot in 1851, William Scott Elliot in 1861 and Thomas Murray in 1868. It is said that William Scott was farmer there in the early 19th century, and had an interaction with his neighbour ‘Little Robbie o the Castleton’. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. In an area of open moorland to the east lies the remains of a homestead, about 100 ft across, which is labelled on the Ordnance Survey map as ‘Homestead Moat’ (and may correspond to the position of the other house marked in 1718), although there is no indication that the ditch was ever water-filled. 3 flints found near here are in Hawick Museum. It is also the name of a farm in Zimbabwe, although whether this is connected is uncertain (the origin is possibly Old Norse ‘kjarn’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘valley of rich pasture’; it first occurs as ‘Kyrndene’ in 1541, is ‘Kirnden’ in 1694, ‘Kirnton’ in 1797 and written ‘Cairndean’ in 1837 and 1852; it is ‘Kirntown’ on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland, ‘Kirn-doly’ on Stobie’s 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Kirn-milk Kitchen’ on the Ordnance Survey map (also written ‘Kit at the Bar’; the meaning is uncertain, but note chist o drawers, and note chist = the human chest) [ECS] (cf. chist).

n. the making of garments using needles and yarn, applied either to hand-made or machine made articles. Home knitting used to be much more common, taking up much of the spare time of local women in the 18th and 19th centuries. Straw or quill needles were once used, along with stocking wires.

n., arch. a white braid-like tape – ‘A bowt o’ knitteen = a length of tape, folded skeinwise, as sold’ [ECS].

n., arch. a knitting needle (noted by E.C. Smith).

n. generic name for knitted clothing, particularly machine-knitted garments. Weavers were certainly a prominent class of workers in Hawick from the earliest records in about 1640. The knitting of stockings is said to have been introduced into Scotland during the time of the Protectorate of Cromwell, i.e. the 1650s.
perhaps being developed through the sheep farming of the local monks. The availability of sheep, and the abundance of sources of water-power were the natural seeds for development. Spinning a weaving were originally a domestic business, but people employed specifically as weavers were already a reasonably large fraction of the population of Hawick when the Burgh records begin about 1640. In 1728 the Council encourage the manufacturing of ‘tarred wool’ by helping with the rent of workhouse and ‘to pay £20 yearly to the dresser of coarse wool’. In 1736 it is recorded that ‘at Kirkcudbright, Hawick, Mony-gaff, and other Places near the Wool Countries, several Packs of tarred Wool have been washed and cleaned, and some of it sorted and combed, spun, and wrought up into Blankets, and other coarse Goods, by private Hands, for their own Use’; the names of Hawick’s first encouragers of local industry are not known. There is early reference to a fulling mill, and wool was spun for manufacture in other towns. By the mid-1700s there was a small factory making linen checks, and from the 1750s Hawick had small factories manufacturing carpets and linen tapes. John Hardie introduced stocking frames in 1771, initially making hosiery from linen and worsted, but gradually giving way to lambswool. In about 1776 there were 65 looms in Hawick, making linens and woolens (including carpets) and just 6 stocking frames. By 1791 there were 14 men and 51 women employed in connection with the manufacture of woollen goods, making about 3500 pairs of lambswool hose and 600 pairs of cotton hose annually. In 1816 there were 7 carding mills with 44 ‘scribbling’ machines and 100 spinning jennies; the Town spun 12,000 stones of wool annually, and manufactured 328,000 pairs of stockings on 510 frames. Hawick grew as a hosiery (stocking) manufacturing centre from the later 18th century into a producer of a wide range of knitwear in the late 19th century. There were over a million stockings made in 1838, with over 100,000 stones of wool consumed in the factories, where there were more than 1200 stocking frames and more than 200 weaving looms, making more than a million pairs of stockings annually, as well as other items. In 1839 it was stated that items being manufactured included ‘yarns, under clothing, flannels, plaquing, shawls, tartans, druggets, cloths of various descriptions, lamb’s wool hosiery of the finest texture, and blankets’. Attention switched from hosiery to tweeds through the 19th century. By 1850 there were 268 weaving looms and 3465 people were employed in the industry. In 1869 it was estimated that there were 64 set of machines, 52,864 spinning spindles, 270 power-looms and 100–150 hand looms, with 1.8 million pounds of wool being carded annually. In 1875 there were 653 power-looms for tweed, as well as 1017 hand frames and 86 power frames for hosiery. Around 1900 there were 18 hosiery and 14 tweed manufacturers in Hawick. It took many decades for the word ‘knitwear’ to popularly replace ‘hosiery’ as the description of Hawick’s main industry; there are conflicting claims about which company used it first, but it seems likely this portmanteau word was coined in Hawick. Innes, Henderson & Co. used ‘knit wear’ in 1924, with a brochure in 1929 having it as one word, while the minutes of the Board of Pringle’s first used it in 1945 – ‘Though I’m forever roving My heart is interwoven With the fabric of this old mill town’ [DF].

knock (k-nok) n., arch. a clock – ‘For taking doume & mending of the knoik’ [BR1701], ‘…and now for mending of the knocke and putting her to chap again’ [BR1701], v., arch. to strike – ‘…he shall keep the Town’s knocke in the steeple in ane good going order and sufficient case and condition, without cracke or flaw for knocking and choping hourly night and day’ [BR1702], ‘…lykewise that oyl be furnished yearlie for the knoike, and towes for the bell …’ [BR1704] (there were many spelling variants).

knockin-ower-bit (no-kin-ow-ur-bi’) n. knocking over bit, a mechanical device on a knitting frame for pushing the previously knitted loops to make way for the new set in order to continue the chain.

knockit (no-kee’, -ki’) pp. knocked – ‘I couldna thole his priestly greed; His threatening made me scoff: I gied my airm ane angry swing An’ knockit his bonnet off’ [FL].

knoll (nól) n., arch. a chunk, lump, large piece of anything – ‘…an ahint hit, Ruberslaw’s michty noal, wui plewed rigs an planteens’ [ECS], ‘Sic a muckle noall!’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘knole’, ‘noal’, etc.; cf. knowe).

knoop (noop) n., arch. the cloudberry, Rubus chamæmorus – ‘On the very summits of the Teviothead, Liddesdale, and Cheviot Hills … we find the Cloudberry (R. Chamæmorus), showing in June its white star-like flower, and in September its delicious orange fruit, known to the shepherds as knoops’ [JAHM], ‘Knots’ or Knoops’ (the Cloudberry) are abundant on Peel Fell; parts of the hill-top are even red with them; also on Hartshorn Pike and Deadwater head. The berris are gathered and jame of them' [BNC1889].

knot (nəʊ) n., arch. a lump, chunk, figuratively applied to the head – ‘Knot o uimor = suppurative swelling' [ECS] (this may be the meaning of ‘Note' in ‘Note o the Gate').

knottit (noʊ-eeɪ, -iɪ) pp., arch. knotted – ‘...Wi' sash an' buckle, sword, star, knottit gaiter' [JoHa].

Know see Knowe

knowe (now) n. a small rounded hill, hillock, knoll – ‘hei'll be owre the knowe the now', ‘mibbe
there was a saicoud shooter on the gressy knowe?', ‘...We saw come marching ower the knows, Five hunder Fennicks in a flock'[CPM], ‘The glowgaiter' [JoHa]. ‘Gi'e me the bonnie broomy knowe, The burn that roond it rins
...' [JEDM], ‘Fareweel! ye balmy haughs an' knowes ...' [JS], ‘Here Hardie's Hills in rugged beauty rise, With knowes and hollows interspersed between ...' [JCG], ‘In throwe the knowes
o’ bracken That huddle roun' Winnimgton Rig: Or slowly alang the ribboned road That said-dles Crawbyres Brig?’ ...' [WL] (sometimes written 'know'; it is essentially a variant of the English ‘knoll', although used more frequently; it exists in many local place names, particularly small hills).

Knowe (now) n. hamlet to the east of Has-sendeanburn, on the opposite side of the Teviot from Ashybank. It was nearer to the river, with ‘Knowetoonheid' being a little to the north. It was at one time referred to as the East Mains of Hassendean. Thomas Turnbull was owner in 1643, when it was valued at £279 10s. John Turnbull paid tax on £227 8s for land there in 1663 and Thomas Turnbull in 1678. The lands became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. The Turnbuls of Knowe, related to the Minto branch of the family, held land here for many generations, before it passed to the Horsburghs of that Ilk through marriage. Tax was paid in 1694 for 6 hearths for ‘Know and his servants'; in fact Thomas Turnbull of Knowe acted as a collector of the Hearth Tax for Roxburghshire.
Anthony Turnbull paid tax for 22 windows there in 1748. Thomas Scott and John Gray were living there in 1799. The lands were listed as owned by David Simpson of Knowe on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when valued at £227. Edward Heron-Maxwell of Teviotbank was owner in about 1874.
A glass stirrup-cup used by this family is in the

Knowesouth

Museum. Their arms showed an ear of rye between 3 bulls' heads. Andrew Reid farmed there in 1797 (also formerly spelled 'Knou').

Knowe (now) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It is marked ‘Know' on Stobie's 1770 map, to the south of Castleton village and just to the east of Bellshields.

the Knowe (θu-noon) n. occasional short form for the Toor Knowe – ‘Fornenst the Knowe was Jimmie Tamson’s place, The queerest store your een micht see ...’[WL].

the Knowe (θu-noon) n. former name for the
‘Henderson’s Knowe'.

Knowebog Hill (now-bog-hil) n. hill in Craik Forest, near the head of the Borthwick valley, north-east of Wolfcleuchhead. It reaches a height of 377 m.

Knowe Brig (now-brig) n. former bridge over the Hermitage Water near Toftholm and Shaw's farms, which once carried the main road. A farm by this bridge was known as ‘White Know'.

Knowe Burn (now-burn) n. alternative name for the Toftholm Sike, which joins the Hermitage Water between Toftholm and Netherraw. The road bridge across the stream was formerly known as the Knowe Brig, and a cottage by the roadside was Whiteknowe.

knowe-en’ (now-en) n., poet. the end of a hill – ‘Snaws join the squal, wi’ pu'lin', pirlin’, An’ drifts, as 'round knowe-en’s a-whirlin’' [JoHa].

Knoweheid (now-heed) n. knowehead, former farmstead to the west of Newcastleaton, on the south-west side of Park Hill. It was still occupied by shepherd John Hislop in 1858 and by his son John in 1861. The remains of several buildings and enclosure walls can still be seen.

Knowesouth (now-sowth, noo-sooth) n. mansion on the A698 road to Jedburgh, now a private nursing home. The estate was held by a branch of the Rutherford family (descended from the main Edgerston stem) from about the mid-17th century, who sometimes spelled their name ‘Rutherfoord'. The lands were valued at £484 in 1678. The farms of the estate featured promi-nently in the Hearth Tax list for Bedrule Parish at the end of the 17th century, with 4 hearths in the house and 19 tenants listed. Robert Bonnar was there in 1690. John Rutherford paid tax for 26 windows there in 1748 and 1753. The residents in 1799 included labourer James Young and gardener James Oliver. When Thomas Rutherford died in 1796 and his brother Capt. John Rutherdford died unmarried in the early 19th century the

the husbands of different daughters. It eventually went to Thomas’ nephew Charles Scott. He sold it to William Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre, who had a mansion built there in about 1835. However, in 1838 Rutherford sold it to George Pott (who had already purchased the neighbouring Ruecastle). Robert Oliver and John Rutherford are recorded as farmers there in 1797 and James Young was a servant. George and Gideon Pott of Dod lived there in the 1840s to 60s. There is an oil painting of the old house, probably from the mid-19th century. The house was re-built around 1870 for William Oliver Rutherford on the site of the earlier house. It has a spectacular 18th century lectern-type ‘doocot’ (although largely hidden by trees). About 500 m to the south-east are the possible remains of a settlement (also spelled ‘Knowsouth’, it was ‘Knowsooth’ in 1694; it may be marked on Pont’s 1590s manuscript map as ‘Cowsmnewth’, but is not on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Knowesouth Burn (now-sowth-burn) n. stream that rises on the north-west slopes of Black Law in Bedrule Parish and runs roughly northwards, past the farm of Knowesouth to join the Teviot. On the west side of the stream are the remains of a settlement. It consists of a roughly circular enclosure, about 43 m in diameter, with another bank outside, lying between 2 gullies. This is probably the ‘encampment’ described in the 1837 parish summary in the New Statistical Account.

Knowetoonheid (now-toon-heed) n. Knowetownhead, hamlet about 4 miles north-east of Hawick, between Hassendeanburn and Teviot Bank. It is on the east bank of Hassendean Burn and a little to the north of the old farm of Knowe. It was locally also known as simply ‘Toonheid’ (or ‘Townhead’) and was formerly known as ‘East Mains’ of Hassendean. It became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. William Turnbull held it in the late 15th century. It appears to have been part of the lands owned by Robert Scott of Alton in 1643 and owned by Thomas Gray in 1678, when it was ‘Now called Know Townhead’ and valued at £214. It was owned by the Turnbuls of Knowe in the 17th and 18th centuries, although their house was probably nearer to the river than the modern farmhouse. It was farmed by William Little around 1700. In 1797 Adam Trotter and James Hilson were listed as joiners there and John Armstrong was a servant. The farmhouse contains a carved wedding plaque, showing ‘1628 TT HT’, probably the marriage of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, with his wife perhaps being Helen Turnbull; it was presumably taken from the old house of Knowe. In the county valuation of 1788 it is recorded as ‘Thomas Gray of Alton’s Lands, now called Know Townhead’ and valued at £214. There is another carved stone built into the wall, showing 2 dragons (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Knox (noks) n. Adam (b.1826) son of Walter and Elizabeth Hart. He was the first Cornet from Wilton, being elected at a public meeting in 1856 after the first nominee had declined and then the Council had refused to be further involved. He is shown as Right-hand Man in the first photograph of the Common Riding Principals. He worked as a ‘flesher’ (i.e. butcher). Agnes (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. She was probably related to George, John and Thomas, who were also listed there. Andrew ‘Dandie’ (17th C.) married Marion Redford in Ashkirk Parish in 1634. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism in 1690 for Thomas in Ashkirk Parish. Andrew (1690/1–1768) tenant at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Kirkwood, who died in 1768, aged 74. Andrew (1756/7–1830), tenant of Mainhill, who is recorded on the same headstone, is probably his grandson. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1789. A.O. (18th/19th C.) residing at Wilton Mill, he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Dan fictional character from ‘The Gutterbhuides’, described as ‘Son of a Duke’s farmer’, one of 3 Teri schoolmates who emigrated as settlers to Canada. David (18th/19th C.) resident at Whitlaw, along with James, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. The pair were probably the uncles of William, who was later farmer at Meikle Whitlaw; they were said to have succeeded as tenants to John Gledstains. David (b.1821) son of Walter and Elizabeth Hart. He was farmer at lands off Langlands Road, before it was developed. In 1851 he was living at Howlands House on Wilton Path, farmer of 34 acres, employing 2 men. In 1861 he was assistant farmer at Meikle Whitlaw. His wife was Ann, from Newcastleton. Their children included Agnes, William and John. David (b.1820/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Martinshouse. In 1861 he was farming 116 acres and employing 4 people. He was also recorded there in 1868. His wife was Agnes. George (17th C.) resident at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. George (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Agnes, John and Thomas, who were also listed there. He may be the George, married to Janet Robson, whose children baptised in Robertson Parish (when it still contained Hassendean) included Agnes (b.1684), Thomas (b.1687) and Andrew (b.1689). The witnesses in 1684 were John Knox (who was surely related) and John Brown. George (b.c.1805) stockmaker of Howdenburn, and early member of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. He was son of George, who was a private in the 16th Regiment of Foot, and Agnes Gordon. He lived with his sister Janet. A sketch of him exists. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with James, as residents of ‘Cordlane’. It is unclear where this was, but James Davidson in Raperlaw was accused of stealing 40 sheep from there. James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Henry at ‘Cordlane’. James (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitlaw along with David on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably ancestor of James who farmed at Little Whitlaw a few decades later and possibly uncle of William, who farmed at Meikle Whitlaw. James (18th/19th C.) gardener at Damside who was also a volunteer. He is probably the James recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh in 1788, valued at £15 3s. He spotted the beacon on Crumhaughhill at the False Alarm of 1804 (although confusingly sometimes this is said to have been ‘Walter’); he ran down the Loan and the Howegate waving his gun, with a crowd running after him, reached the Tower Knowe and fired his gun as a signal, gaining the prize of 20 shillings. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for George in 1586. John (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1761 for William Nichol and Janet Blaikie. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Belses Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (1763/4–1832) son of William, tenant at Newhouse. He farmed at Faldonside. He married Janet Scott, who died in 1836, aged 58. Their children included William and Jean, who died in infancy. He is buried in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (b.1828) son of William. He was a baker in Melrose. He took over his father’s tenancy of Meikle and Little Whitlaw. However, he gave them up in 1895. He died without issue. Rev. Robert (1606–59) eldest son of Robert, who was probably the grand-nephew of the reformer John. He became minister at Kelso in 1633. He signed the National Covenant, probably in Hawick, in 1638. He used some vaults in the old abbey as his manse, adding to the chambers used by his father. He firstly married Margaret, sister of John Ker of Locktour and secondly Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. Rev. Robert (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1668, he was recorded living at Cavers in 1677. Hence he may have been private chaplain or tutor for Douglas of Cavers. He wrote to Rev. Wylie (the former tutor at Cavers) about the apparently supernatural case of Sir George Maxwell of Pollock, and also about the ‘ethart’ spirit, which accompanied a lady who lived ‘in the West marches’ of Scotland. He is recorded in Cavers in 1683 and 1684 in discharges to the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. He became assistant minister at St. Mungo’s in Glasgow in 1688, but was forced to give up on account of being an Episcopalian. He was presented to Peebles in 1690, and although he was not settled, he ‘continued to possess the Kirk by violence’, eventually being forced to withdraw. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton. He married Jean Turnbull in 1682. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Graham.
and Margaret Knox (perhaps his sister) in 1681. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Shiel and their son Andrew was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were James Johnstone and Andrew Knox (who was surely related). Thomas (17th C.) resident at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to George, who was also listed there, and seems likely to have been an ancestor of the later Thomas who farmed at Firth. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Agnes, George and John, who were also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Marion (b.1740); and Thomas (b.1747). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1759 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Waugh at Groundistone. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Firth, recorded on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Firth in 1797. He married Barbara Turnbull (who had been married to George Pott and Henrietta (b.1798). His were probably Jessie (b.1790), Dorothea (b.1794), Margaret (b.1803/4–16); and Thomas (b.1813); Jane (b.1815); Adam (b.1821), who took over the farm in Wilton: John (b.1824); Adam (b.1826), first Cornet from Wilton; and Mary. All of their children were born in Wilton Parish. His widow was living at Howlands House in 1841 and 1851. Walter (b.1813) son of Walter. He farmed at Stirches Mains. He was listed there among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He was married to Elizabeth and their children included: James (b.1809); Helen (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); Jane (b.1815); Adam (b.1821); and Helen (again, b.1819); David (b.1821), who took over the farm in Wilton: John (b.1824); Adam (b.1826), first Cornet from Wilton; and Mary. All of their children were born in Wilton Parish. His widow was living at Howlands House in 1841 and 1851. Walter (b.1813) son of Walter. He farmed at Stirches Mains. He was listed there among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He was married to Elizabeth and their children included: James and Walter. William (1721/2–96) tenant at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was recorded there on the 1788–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Janet Small, who died in 1791, aged 60. Their son John (b.1763/4) was tenant at Fal- donside. They also had 2 children who died in infancy. William (1732/3–77) tenant farmer at Dunstane Moor in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Cairns, who died in 1772, aged 34. His brother James (1726/7–1805) is recorded on the same headstone. William (1762/3–1825) tenant at Belses farm. He married Margaret Hume, who died in 1859, aged 91. Their children included: Robert (1799/1800–16); Margaret (1803/4–16); Barbara (1801/2–08); and 3 children who died in infancy. William (1789–1825) local poet, born at Firth, near Lilliesleaf, he lived for a while at The Cottage, near Orchard. He was the eldest son of Thomas, a Lilliesleaf farmer, and Barbara Turnbull (who had been married to George Pott of Todrig). He was educated at Lilliesleaf Parish School until aged 12 or 13 and then spent a few years at Musselburgh Grammar School. He was a good friend of Rev. John Cochrane of Hawick, the husband of his sister Jessie Elizabeth. His family farmed at Todrig, where Henry Scott Riddell was a herds in his youth, and later farmed at Langhope. He himself tried unsuccessfully as a farmer at Wrae near Langholm when he was 23, lasting about 5 years. His family moved to Edinburgh in 1820, where he worked as a journalist, wrote sacred poetry, and became a friend of Sir Walter Scott. His publications include 'The Lonely Hearth and other poems' (1818), ‘Songs of Israel’ (1824) and ‘The Harp of Zion’ (1825). The ‘Harp of Zion’ was supposedly recalled entirely from memory after the printer lost the manuscript copy. His poem ‘Mortality’ (also known as ‘Oh! Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?’, published in ‘Songs of Israel’) was a favourite of Abraham Lincoln and it was also said that the Emperor of Russia had it printed in gold and hung on the palace walls. He was described as short, but handsome, with a fair complexion and light hair, and was said to recite his compositions enthusiastically. Stories are told of him taking shelter at Stainton’s Smiddy on Melgund Place and also at Cauldmill Smiddy, when the smith quoted one of his own lines of poetry to him, obliging him to confess that he was the author of those lines, leading to an invitation to hospitality and a long night of conversation (it seems likely that the stories are both inspired by one event). He died at Leith after suffering a stroke, aged only 36, and is buried in New Calton Cemetery in Edinburgh. The Museum has an original letter of his. There is a tablet to his memory in Lilliesleaf Kirk. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Meikle Whitlaw and in 1861 was tenant at Little Whitlaw. He emigrated to Canada, settling in Waterloo County, Ontario, where he called his farm Langside, after the place he left in Lilliesleaf. He emigrated with his sister Jessie (who married Robert Leithead), and their farm was next to that of his cousin Charles Scott, who was also from Lilliesleaf. He later moved to Toronto. William (b.1796/7) farmer at Meikle Whitlaw and later at Little Whitlaw. His brother James was tenant at Little Whitlaw. He was said to have succeeded 2 of his uncles, who became tenants in about 1746 (although it was probably later than this); they could have been the David and James recorded at Whitlaw in 1797. His wife was Nancy Scott (listed as ‘Mina’ in the birth records of her children). In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 64 acres at Meikle Whitlaw and in 1861 was farmer of 150 acres, employing 5 people. He was still recorded there in 1868. His children included: Williamina (‘Mina’, b.1819), who lived at 11 Glebe View; Isabel (b.1820); David (b.1822), who went to Canada, but returned to Scotland to farm at New Hope, Kirkpatrick Fleming; William (b.1824); James (b.1826); John (b.1828), baker in Melrose, who succeeded to the farms; Margaret (b.1831); Agnes and Jessie (b.1833); and Mary (b.1836). One of his daughters became Mrs. Rutherford from Moffat (sometimes written ‘Knocks’ and ‘Nox’ in early records).

the K.O.S.B.  (thu-kā-ō-es-bē) n. the King’s Own Scottish Borderers, local infantry Regiment, covering the Borders and nearby areas. The Regiment was raised in March 1869 in Abbey Close at Holyrood by David Leslie, 3rd Earl of Leven. About 800 men were gathered in about 2 hours as a ‘loyalist’ force to protect Edinburgh against the Highlanders and other supporters of William of Orange. This force was eventually renamed the Kings Own Borderers in 1805 and the K.O.S.B. in 1887, and formally adopted the Leslie tartan of Orange. This force was eventually renamed the Kings Own Borderers in 1805 and the K.O.S.B. in 1887, and formally adopted the Leslie tartan in 1898. The K.O.S.B. has fought in almost every campaign involving the British Army in the last 300 years. There is a record of them celebrating the Hawick Common Riding in Egypt in 1889. The 1/4th Battalion (Territorial Force, pronounced ‘first fourth’, i.e. the first part of the 4th Battalion) grew out of the Border Rifles and included many local volunteers who signed up in the years leading up to WWI. In 1915, because of the losses suffered by the regular army units, the 1/4th were sent to Gallipoli, where they took place in that ill-conceived campaign against Turkey. They later served in Egypt, Palestine and on the Western Front. Later the 7th/8th presented the town with their Colours when they were disbanded after WWI. The entire Regiment was given the last freedom of the town in 1974. The Regiment paraded through Hawick in 2006 before merging with the Royal Scots to become the Royal Scots Borderers, 1st Battalion of the Royal Regiment of Scotland. In 2009 a plaque was placed outside the Town Hall to honour all the men who served with the regiment. ‘For king and country and the Scottish Borderers the story of the 1/4th (Border) Battalion, the King’s Own Scottish Borders on the Gallipoli Peninsula 1915’

Kossuth (ko-sooth) n. Louis (1802–94) Hungarian revolutionary, who worked for Hungarian independence, becoming President in 1849. However, the republic was short-lived, with Russia intervening to help Austria. He toured Britain and the U.S. and received ovations as a champion of liberty, including being made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1856 after delivering a lecture ‘in the cause of European Freedom’. One of the welcoming banners in Hawick had been made by James ‘Dictionary’ Murray and said ‘Thy Kingdom Come’ in Hungarian. In Glasgow he stayed at the observatory with John Pringle Nichol, who had been a teacher in Hawick. His first name is also written ‘Lajos’.

Kowe (kow) n. Thomas (15th C.) notary for the Diocese of Glasgow. It is unclear if there would be a more modern spelling of his surname.

Krame see kram

Kram (krām) n., arch. a temporary merchant’s booth, stall at a fair – ‘Assoilizes George Kush-Mush fra the claim persewit be John Scott, pethar, for a half dozen of butes, mae or fewer, allegit taken away fra his craine in Hawick’ [BR1655], ‘...for the stealing and theftously taken out of his craine in open market ane pair of single soled shoes’ [BR1680], ‘Sally Machusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI], ‘Gibbie the Gowk’s no’ sic a gowk but he’ll pack up the krame a’ right enough’ [JEDM], ‘Rows of ‘krames’ laden with toothsome dainties ... ’ [BM1907], ‘A raw o treis; a raw o krames; a raw o hooses’ [ECS], ‘...Better, daur-say, Brocht, factory-fresh (sei telly) til eer hame, twae hunger miles, than frae some mercat-krame ... ’ [DH] (also spelled ‘krain’, ‘crame’ and ‘crame’; still in use to refer to stalls up the Moor at the Common Riding, although it is now obscure elsewhere in Scotland; from Mediaeval German or Dutch).

Kram-wife (krām-wif) n., arch. a female stall-holder at a fair etc. – ‘...and on Hopekirk Ba’ morning the kraim-wives regularly took up their station in the kirkyard and exposed their wares of gingerbread, tam trott, and clagram on the old through stones’ [WaD] (also written ‘krame-wife’).

Krucrewch (krook-rooch) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed among tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. It is unclear what the modern form of this name would be, perhaps just an error for ‘Crook’ or ‘Crooch’.

KS (kā-ess) n. for a long time the 2-letter car licence plate code indicating Roxburghshire.

Kumfy Mill (ku-mfy-mil) n. popular name for the Braemar factory on Commercial Road. It was earlier the business of A. Brodie & Co.

Kurnel (kur-nil) n., arch. a kernel (also kirnel).

Kush-Mush (kush-mush) n. nickname in use in the 19th century – ‘Here’s Soapy Ballantyne and Wull Slush, Here’s Todd Lowrie and Peggy Neill; Davie A’-things and auld Kush-Mush, And Jenny A’-things is here as weel’ [HI].

Kyle (kil) n., arch. a pin used in a kind of game of skittles (see also kyles).

Kyle (kil) n., arch. a small hayrick, a ‘coil’, v., arch. to gather hay into ‘coils’.
Kyle

Kyle (kil) n. Alexander (b.c.1795) dyer living on the Howgate, at about No. 12. His wife was Jane, and their children included John, Anne, Mary, William, Archibald and Thomas. Alexander (19th/20th C.) son of John, he worked in the tweed trade and then was tobacconist at 3 Tower Knowe. He was Cornet in 1872. He married Jessie S. Elliot, who was daughter of Hawick’s first cabinet, and died in 1885, aged 29. His son William was Cornet in 1905. Their other children included Thomas, Lizzie H. and William, none of whom reached adulthood. Andrew (1729/30–1833) born at Heughhead farm in Castleton Parish. He was tenant farmer at Braidlie on the Hermitage Water. He was farmer at Demainholm on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls, and Braidlie in 1794 and 1797. He was also taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean, daughter of David Murray, and she died in 1834, aged 83. He died in his 94th year and is buried at Etterton. Their children included: David (1776/7–1861) and William (1777/8–1855). His daughters could be the ‘Miss Kyles’ recorded at Braidlie in the 1830s. Andrew (1805/6–91) farmer at Dinlabyre and Mildotheills near Carlisle. He was farmer at Dinlabyre in 1851, when he is recorded farming 140 acres ‘arabl, of Moor N. Known’ and employing 5 labourers. His wife was Elizabeth, who died in 1908, aged 90. Their children included: Margaret (1841/2–1908); William (1842/3–1903); Mary Anne (1844/5–1922); James; Jane (1850–96); and Elizabeth (1853/4–1924). He died in Inverness-shire and the family are buried at Etterton. Arthur (18th/19th C.) farmer at Braidlie in Castleton Parish. He was listed at ‘Broadlee’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was also listed as head of household there in 1835–38. He was probably son of Andrew, who was farmer at Braidlie in 1797. He was brother of David, who also farmed at Braidlie. He could be the same Arthur who was farmer at South Greenholm in Castleton Parish in 1841. David (18th C.) resident of Melrose. In 1776 he married Betty Kedie, daughter of Hawick baker John, the marriage being proclaimed in both parishes. They had several children in Melrose. In 1782 his daughter Betty died in Hawick. David ‘Auld Kyle’ (1777–1861) farmer at Braidlie (or Broadlee) in Castleton Parish. He was son of Andrew and Jean Murray, and brother of Arthur. He was listed as a shepherd at Braidlie in 1797 on the list of Castleton Parish men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1851 he was listed as farme of 2000 acres of moorland, employing 4 labourers. He married Betty Milligan. Their children included: Mina Crozier (b.1821); Elliot (b.1823); Jane; Andrew; and Anne (b.1833), Anne married shepherd William Glendinning. He is probably the ‘Davie Kyle’, breeder of Dandie Dinmonts, of whom a poem was written by ‘Halbert Noble’ in 1861. He was described in H.H Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865) as a keen hunter, once competing against Routledge, Laird of the Flatt. He hunted hare in his youth, switching later to foxes, hunting with Dandie Dinmonts. As a famer, he had a peculiarity of having all his tups horned. He fathered a child with Jean Armstrong of Canonbie in 1832. David (b.c.1785) recorded as a ‘broker’ on the Fore Raw in 1841. His wife was Margaret. Francis ‘Frank’ (1818–c.1900) son of James and Janet. He was farmer at Hillsieand, taking over from his father as the Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant there in 1843. He was Cornet in 1845 and owned 74 High Street. His son John was also Cornet and farmed at the Wellogate. In 1851 he was listed at ‘4 High Street – F. Kyle’s’ (although 74 High Street is clearly meant), a farmer of 30 acres, employing 1 person. He was listed as a farmer on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was one of the townspeople who recovered from cholera during the 1849 outbreak. He lived into his 80s and was the oldest living Cornet in the late 19th century. He turned out for the Friday at least as late as 1881. There is a photograph of him with the 1846 and 1897 Cornets; this makes him the earliest Cornet of whom we have a photograph. In 1847 he married Isabella Cairns and their children included: Agnes (‘Nancy’, b.1848); Janet (b.1850); Isabella (b.1853); James (b.1855); John (b.1857), who was Cornet in 1885; Beatrice (b.1861); Helen (b.1864); Elizabeth (b.1867); and Frances (b.1869). George (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Headshaw, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same George was cottar in Castleside in 1762; he married Margaret Laidlaw and had several children baptised in Ashkirk Parish, including Thomas (b.1762), Agnes (b.1763), Mary (b.1765), Janet (b.1767), Isabel (b.1771), and Margaret (b.1775). James (1733/4–1813) weaver in Castleton Parish. He lived at Heughhead, where his wife and some children died. However, he moved to Newcastle, where he himself died. His wife was Agnes Armstrong, who died in 1803, aged 61. Their children included Margaret (1779/80–93). James John (d.bef. 1797) gardener in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains.
in 1761. He married Agnes Mitchellhill in 1751 and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: William (b.1757); John (b.1759); John (again, b.1760); Adam (b.1762); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1762 were Walter Cook and Thomas Cowan. Note that his forename is sometimes given as just ‘John’ and his wife’s surname sometimes as ‘Mitchel’. James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He married Esther Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1787); Esther (b.1789); John (b.1791); William (b.1794); Robert (b.1796); Beatrice (b.1798); and Adam (b.1802). The witnesses in 1791 were William (surely a close relative) and Thomas Brown. The death of his daughter Beatrix is recorded in Hawick in 1815. James (1752–98) flesher in Hawick. He paid the Horse Tax in 1792 and 1797. He married Mary Porteous (1753–1824). Their children included: Mary (b.1778), who died young; Helen (b.1780), who died young; John (b.1781) manufacturer in Hawick; Andrew (b.1784), who died aged 10; and Mary (again, b.1786), also died young. He is buried in old Wilton Cemetery. He may be the gardener James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Brown and Beatrice Kyle in 1793. James (c.1780–c.1843) joiner and wood-turner of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is likely the Kyle recorded around 74 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map (but could be the other Kyle listed at No. 33), and at about the same place in the 1841 census. He probably also farmed at Hilliesland. His wife was Janet and their children included: Nancy; Francis, who became Cornet; and Janet. He may be the James recorded in about 1874 as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick (even if he was deceased by then). Jane (b.1783/4) proprietor of an inn in Newcastleton in 1825/6, and explicitly of the Grapes Inn in 1837. This was situated at 16 Douglas Square. In 1851 she was recorded as a widow. She was living with her children William and Mary in 1841 and Mary in 1851. She was also at the Grapes Inn in 1852, although incorrectly listed as ‘Kyle’. She was probably Jean Foster, who married George and had children Betty (b.1806), William (b.1808), Fanny (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813), Mary (b.1815) and Georgina (b.1819). John (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Helen Beattie and their children included: Janet (b.1756); Robert (b.1759), also a mason; and Sarah (b.1762). The witnesses in 1759 were smiths James and Robert, who were probably related to his wife. He was deceased before his son Robert died in 1801. He could be the John who witnessed baptisms in 1772 for Thomas Lookup and in 1779 for wright James Hogg. John see James John. John (c.1744–1800) farmer at Heughhead, son of William and Betty Wilson. He was recorded at Heughhead in the Castleton Horse Tax Rolls in 1789–90. He and his father were probably the ‘Messrs Kyles, Heughheads’ who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Agnes Murray, who died in 1806, aged 46. They had a daughter Isabel (d.1869). He was buried at Ettrick. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1797, when he was working for George Douglas. On the 1799 ballot for the Militia he was recorded as a gardener at Cavers. He was also recorded as gardener at Cavers in 1800. His children included: Mark (b.1798); Alexander (b.1800); and Thomas (b.1801). John (18th/19th C.) merchant of Hawick, who was the ‘royalist’ Cornet of the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809, selected by the Council, but opposed by the ‘Wesla Lads’. This was in objection to new rules imposed by the Council, restricting the Common Riding participants to a limited circle of invited guests. The ‘Wesla Lads’ instead appointed their own ‘rebel’ Cornet, John Tullie. Kyle had about 45 supporters, half of whom were said to be strangers, and they were hissed and cursed at by the crowds. He may be the John born to James and Mary Porteous in Hawick in 1781. He may also be the same John who was a member of the Curling Club in 1812. It is possible he is the grocer and spirit dealer of the High Street who was recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory or the stocking manufacturer of the High Street – ‘... Elect a trader ca’d John Kyle, Massy in iz merchant style’ [MB]. John (1781–1851) son of butcher James, he was hosiery manufacturer of the early 1800s, with firm John Kyle & Co. operating on the High Street. He may be the same John who was appointed as Cornet during the disputed year of 1809. ‘John & James Kyle’ was listed on the High Street among hosiery manufacturers in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1841 census he is living with James and Mary, probably both younger siblings. Mary Ann, who is listed as house proprietor and hosier on the High Street on the 1851 census, is probably the same sister; she was on Bridge Street in 1861. He may have been son of James and Mary Porteous. John (1791–1866) gardener at Wilton Lodge for 50 years, he was also a Trustee and elder of the Relief Kirk. In 1851 his address was recorded as...
Kyle

‘Wilton Lodge Garden House’. His wife was Margaret, and children included Helen and James. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John ‘the Nether Wulton Youth’ (1827–1900) son of Alexander and Jane (or Janet) Reid, he was born at Netherwitton, Northumberland, and his father was originally from Kelso. His family moved to Hawick when he was about 10. He was known as a great runner in his younger days, hence his nickname. His brothers were William, Thomas and Richard (who was a foreman skinner in Galashiels). He worked all his life with John Laing & Sons, becoming a hosiery manager. He held many positions associated with the Common Riding organisation, and was Acting Father in 1872 for his own son. He attended his 59th Common Riding dinner in 1899, this being said to be a record. He was also a keen Mason, being Master of Lodge 111. On Old Year’s Night 1847 he married Margaret Hall from Eskdalemuir, and she died in 1904, aged 76. Their children were: Alexander, Cornet in 1872; James Hall, framesmith, who married Jane Little; John, engineer in Bloemfontein, South Africa; Mary, who married Robert Millar; and William, who died in infancy. John (1829–1909) son of William and Robina Cavers. He was a carter, agricultural labourer and ploughman in Castleton. In 1860 he married Mary (1836–1931), daughter of John Armstrong and Janet Glendinning. Their children were: Janet (1860–1908); William (b.1836); Robina (1865–1952); Agnes (1868–82); and John Armstrong (1871–81). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery, next to Andrew (d.1891). John (b.1857) son of Francis. He was a farmer who was Cornet in 1885. It is said that his year saw the beginning of the resurgence of interest in the ceremonial side of the Common Riding, with the Council resolving to officially support the events. His Cornet’s Lass was probably either Miss Murray or Miss Fraser, who were recording in the local press at the Colour Bussing ceremony in 1887. He may be the farmer John whose property at 74 High Street was demolished to make way for the Pavilion Theatre. John (1871–1958) born in Hawick, son of a fine art dealer Andrew, and Agnes Waugh. He left the High School in 1885, having won the Queen’s Prize for drawing. He worked for 8 years as a watchmaker and jeweller, then got an assistant teaching position in Lancashire, and finally won a scholarship to the Royal College of Art in London. After 3 year’s of study, he travelled in Europe, taught at Huddersfield technical College and in Alloa and emigrated to Canada in 1905, becoming the Art Supervisor for City Schools in Vancouver. He was later described as ‘an outstanding educationalist and one of the most influential men in the history of British Columbia Arts and Crafts’. He was one of the founders of the British Columbia Society of Fine Arts, started the first art night classes in Vancouver and was also instrumental in starting correspondence courses. He was Director of Technical Education for the Province of British Columbia 1913–38. He is also credited with being the first to sponsor an exhibition by Emily Carr. He wrote and illustrated 3 books on teaching woodwork, lettering, and metalwork, ‘Design for Industrial Arts’ (1931). He married Nellie Hadfield, an English-born school teacher in 1920 and they had at least 2 daughters and a son. He established an educational trust for the High School, the Andrew, Agnes and John Kyle Bequest Fund. Robert (d.1801) mason in Hawick. He was son of John, who was also a mason. His wife Betty Turnbull died in Hawick in 1815. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. It is unclear how he was related to other Kyles. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Hummelknowes in 1729 and 1731. His children included: Mark (b.1729); and John (b.1731). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1737. His name is written ‘Cayle’ in 1737 when he witnessed baptisms for Walter Scott and William Lunn in Wilton. He married Marion Sliman and their children included: George (b.1737); and Isobel (b.1739). The witnesses in 1737 were Robert and William Scott. Thomas (19th C.) brother of John, William and Richard. He was a commercial traveller for John Laing & Sons, and his son was also Thomas. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1830s–1921) son of Thomas, he worked for John Laing & Sons for about 60 years, mainly as a commercial traveller. He was secretary of the Trades Committee for several years, Clerk of the Course at the Moor for 11 years and member of the Race Committee and Ceremonial Committee. He was known as a good cricketer and was a keen supporter of Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club. He celebrated his golden wedding anniversary with his wife Jane Ferguson, daughter of Mrs. Burns of the Crown Hotel. William (c.1709–98) born at Burnmouth in Castleton Parish, son of William and Isobell Moffet. He was tenant at Heughhead. He and his son were probably the ‘Messrs Kyles, Heughheads’ who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Betty Wilson, who died in 1786, aged 74. Their children included: John (1743/4–1800); George (1756/7–1819); and 2 sons who died in infancy. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same William was farmer at Braidlee in 1797 when he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia in Castleton Parish. He may be the ‘William, senior, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. William (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘William, junior, Castleton’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ along with ‘William, senior’. He may be the same William as the flesher listed in Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same William was farmer at Braidlee in 1797 when he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia in Castleton Parish. He may be the ‘William, senior, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 along with ‘William, junior’ (presumably his son). William (18th/19th C.) baker in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. William (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘William, junior, Castleton’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ along with ‘William, senior’. He may be the same William as the flesher listed in Newcastleton in Pigot’s 1837 directory. William (b.1794) son of James and Esther Scott. He was a gardener living on the Sandbed (actually at 6 Buccleuch Street) in at least 1841–61. In 1852 he was listed as a greengrocer on Buccleuch Street. He lived with his sisters Mary and Agnes, and nieces and nephews Helen, James, John and Margaret. In 1861 he was recorded as a market gardener. William (19th C.) recorded at Greanholt among the gentry living near Newcastleton in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the same William of Greenholt recorded dissolving the drapers John Armstrong and Company in Glasgow in 1839. William (1796–1890) carter and farmer at Leaahuagh in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he is recorded as ‘Farmer of about 300 acres more or less’. He married Robina, daughter of joiner John Cavers and Jane Douglas; she died in 1877, aged 71. Their children included: Agnes (1827–82), who married Andrew Mitchellhill; John (1829–1909); James (1830–46); William (1833–1909), farmer; Thomas (1835–1914); Jane (b.1837), who married Matthew Murray; Betty (b.1839); Henry (b.1843) and another Henry (b.1845), who both died young; James (b.1847), a shepherd; George (1850–1908), a builder; and Mary (b.1853), who died at Netherraw. The family are buried at Ettleton Cemetery. William (1829/30–1904) brother of John, Thomas and Richard. He was a commission agent. William (1833–1909) eldest son of William. He farmed at Leaahuagh, like his father before him. He and his brother Thomas were subscribers to David Anderson’s book of verse in 1868. He died at Leaahuagh and is buried at Ettleton. William Elliot ‘Willie’ (19th/20th C.) son of Alexander, he worked as a joiner and then coal merchant, and was probably the most famous Hawick rugby player of his day. He played forward for Hawick R.F.C. for many years, retiring after being concussed in the final of the 1913 Hawick Sevens. He came out of retirement during and after WWI and also played for Scotland. In his first international match he was the only forward not educated at a Public School. He was Cornet in 1905 (formerly ‘Cayle’, ‘Kyel’, ‘Kyll’ and variants).

kyles (kīlz) n., pl., arch. the game played with small skittles (James Murray wrote that this was played in Hawick ‘in the early part of the 19th c.; possibly from Old French ‘quille’).

Kyle’s Close (kīlz-kłōs) n. passageway off the High Street in the mid-19th century, position uncertain. There are Kyles labelled on Wood’s 1824 map at about Nos. 33 and 74; the one opposite the Cross Wynd is clearly marked as a passageway.

Kylie (kī-lee) n., poet. a small Highland cow – ‘All the grass he had on Closses would not maintain a caley cow …’ [C&L1767]. ‘And they keep, when they can, out by Frei the onset o’ him and his men, Sae it’s rare that kylies or kye Are harried frae Harden Glen’ [TK] (there are spelling variants; more usually kyloe).

kyloe (klö-łö) n., arch. a small Highland cow – ‘A blackie, as I watched it grew twa horns as big’s a Kyloe coo’ [TD]. ‘He coungers our kyloes, and causes our kebs, And a fearfu’ auld carl is Johnie Nip-nebs’ [HSR], ‘Of late years a considerable number of Kyloes, bought at the Falkirk trysts, have been wintered in the parish’ [RAN] (also written with a capital ‘Kyloe’; sometimes kylie).

the Labour Club \( \text{thu-lä-bur-klab} \) n. the Hawick branch of the Labour Party has never had a very large membership. Many consider that the Burns Club has replaced it, at least in a social capacity. The club used to meet in rooms above the Queen’s Head. Minute books exist from 1918–55 and for the Women’s Section 1924–53.

labourers \( \text{lä-bo-rurz} \) n., pl. manual workers, particular those working on farms. Formerly this was the occupation of a large fraction of the local population. Farm-servants were usually hired by the year if they were married, and by the half-year if single. Day labourers were hired for shorter periods. Tradesmen, such as masons and carpenters were paid more.

Labour Exchange \( \text{lä-bur-iks-chañ} \) n. until 1940 this was located at 32 Commercial Road (more recently the Y.M. clubrooms). For the latter half of the 20th century it was located in the purpose-built building at the corner of the Little Haugh by the river, which is now a nightclub.

Ladder Law \( \text{law-dur-law} \) n. hill in the headwaters of the Borthwick, just south of Craikhope, reaching a height of 445 m.

laddie \( \text{la-dee} \) n. a boy, young man – ‘hei was hardly mair than a laddie when hei went off ti the War’, ‘The laddie that’s over the sea, Mary, The laddie that’s over the sea’ [JTE], ‘O dinna leave me, my laddie, O dinna, O dinna gang freae me owre the saut sea’ [JoHa], ‘Oh! my bonnie laddie’s gone, oh! my bonnie laddie’s gone ...’ [JoHa], ‘Will the mornin’ bring the ladis back in triumph o’er the foe?’ [JYH], ‘...To be a laddie rac-ing roond The auld Mid Raw’ [JT], ‘...Like my laddie on the lea For his ain countree’ [JEDM], ‘...But aa’ve a little laddie now, As like um as a pei!’ [DH], ‘Hawick’s a grand place ti be a laddie in! Oot on a simmer morn wi the airly sun in eer een’ [DH].

lade \( \text{läd} \) n. a watercourse, especially one that carries water to a mill, also called a dam – ‘they decided ti fill in the auld mill lade’ (sometimes called a ‘mill lead’).

lades \( \text{lädz} \) n., pl. watercourses built to supply power to mills. Those in Hawick at times diverted more water than was flowing through the rivers, while at other times had a reputation for being filthy. Over time large sections of some were covered over, but some parts remained open. Signs still remain of the several that were built in Hawick. They include: the first lade off the Slitrig (the ‘Dam’ of the Backdamgate etc.), which ran the water wheel for Hawick Mill; the later lade in Lynnwood; the old lade in Wilton called Wilton Dam or Roughheugh Dam (with the water diverted by the Caudl) and its extension through Wilton Glebe lands in 1827–28; the lade along Teviot Road; and the lade used by Weendland Mill. A survey was carried out of the complex of lades off Commercial Road in 1999/2000, with 2 of them being bricked up afterwards. A section of the lade in Weensland is still visible near Oliver Park. There were also lades constructed for most of the mills in the countryside around Hawick. These include a channel from Wilton Burn passing the farm of Netherhall, the one at Wilton Dean.

Ladhope \( \text{law-dúp} \) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, between Whithope and Sundhope. It was a Crown property from about 1456, being assigned to Patrick Crichton of Cranston in 1488 and Walter Scott (probably of Howpalsy) in 1490 and 1492. Dicksons were recorded there in 1494/5, accused of rieving crimes. In 1541 the lands were occupied by Robert of Howpasley, paying £24 yearly. Walter Scott ‘of Landhoip’ is recorded in 1599. Walter Scott in Ladhope was recorded as deceased in 1671 (it is ‘Ladhop’ in 1456, 1488 and the Ladies’ Circle (thu-lää-deez-sir-kul) n. a charitable and social organisation, started in 1930, the sister organisation of the Round Table. The Hawick organisation??.

the Ladies’ Clothin Society (thu-lää-deez-klo-thin-su-sl-l’-ee) n. local charitable organisation, providing clothing for the poor, active in Hawick in the late 19th century. It was run by Mrs. Palmer Douglas and Mrs. Turnbull of Ormiston.

ladies’ gairtens (lä-deez-gär-tinz) n., pl., arch. the striped ribbon grass, Phalaris arundinacea picta.

the Ladies’ Pool (thu-lää-deez-pool) n. former name for a shallow pool below the Caud, on the north side of the Teviot (with the ‘Cat’s Pool’ being on the other side), used for swimming in summer. The name was in use in the mid-20th century when the river course almost split in two below the Caud. Boys who went in that side were called ‘jessies’ (also sometimes ‘Lady’s Pool’).

ladies’ purse (lä-deez-purs) n., arch. the shepherd’s purse, Capsella bursa-pastoris, also used for flowers of the calceolaria.

the Ladies’ Purse (thu-lää-deez-purs) n. race held at the Common Riding from at least 1834 to the 1860s. For example in 1861 it was one of only 3 named races, with the others being races for riding gear etc.

ladies’ purses (lä-deez-pur-seez) n., pl. arch. flowers of the calceolaria.

Ladies’ Sate (lä-deez-sä’) n. Ladies’ Seat, southern part of Todshawhaugh Hill, on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Todshawhaugh farm. It reaches a height of 264 m.

Ladies’ Slack (lä-deez-slawk) n. pass between Heip Hill and Welsh’s Hill, just to the north-east of Whitehaugh farm (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Ladies’ Well (lä-deez-wel) n. spring just to the east of Knowesouth. It may be the ‘Lady’s well, or Our Lady’s Well’ described in 1837, and suggested perhaps to be associated with Jedburgh Abbey. The Land Tax Rolls of 1811 includes mention of ‘Lady’s Well Meadow’ being part of Newton, adjacent to Lanton.

Ladies’ Edge (lä-deez-øj) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed ‘as Lady’s-edge’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

new house in the 1960s (it is ‘Lady K’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Ladyland (lä-dee-lawnd) n. former name for lands in the eastern part of Hawick. They are referred to in a charter of ‘Soltracrost’ (i.e. the Trinitylands) in 1557, which is described as having Ladyland to the east. This means the lands were somewhere east of Trinity, perhaps around what was later called Weensland. They are again mentioned in 1565/6 as being adjacent to the Trinitylands. A 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish states that ‘there is a land, called Ladyland, possessed by Sir Walter Scott of Goudilands, ther are sick lands as are pretendit to belong to the kirk’, suggesting a connection with St. Mary’s Kirk; the lands are valued at ‘4 bolls in stok, ane boll in teynd’. In a 1696 sasine of Charles Scott of Crumhau and Goldielands we find ‘Trinity lands’ included, and it seems likely this was the same piece of land, taking on the more generic name of the larger adjacent lands.

Ladyland (lä-dee-lawnd) n. former piece of land in the Barony of Minto. It was formerly called ‘Hassendean Ladylands’ and owned by Douglas of Cavers; part valued at £18 was sold to the Duke of Roxburgh before 1743 and incorporated into Minto Parish, while another 6-acre part valued at £16 was sold to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1745 and also incorporated into Minto. It is described in 1683 as being 4 acres commonly called Ladyland, inherited by Gilbert Elliott along with Craigend and Deanfoot. In 1811 it was ‘Hassendean Lady Lands’; the 2 separate parts were still then owned by the Duke of Roxburgh and by the Duke of Buccleuch. The name suggests that the lands (like Lanton Ladylands) were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was once parson (see also Oor Lady Land).

Ladylands see Oor Lady Land

Ladylands (lä-dee-lawndz) n. former name for land near Lanton. They were valued at £10 in the 18th century and ‘formerly stated in Cavers parish’. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describes how these lands had been in the Barony of Cavers, and were ‘Langtoun Lady Lands, now in the parish of Jedburgh’. The lands were probably connected with ‘Ladies’ Well’ and ‘Lady’s Edge’, which were once part of the lands of Newton. Like ‘Hassendean Ladyland’ in Minto Parish, these lands were probably once associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was patron, both formerly being contained in the Barony of Cavers (see also Lanton Lady Lands).

Ladylaw (lä-dee-law) n. another name for Ladylaw Hoose and the area of eastern Sunnyhill around it.

the Ladylaw Centre (thu-lä-dee-law-sen’-ur) n. multi-purpose commercial building converted from part of the former Wilson and Glenny’s factory on Wilton Path after it closed in 1980. The complex included a furniture and carpet warehouse, small companies, offices and a bistro, which opened in 1983. It was never fully used and closed about 10 years later, being then demolished, and is now the site of a supermarket. Only foundations are left, along with the Bath Street Centre (part of Borders College).

Ladylaw Hoose (lä-dee-law-hoos) n. house constructed above Langlands Road on Rosaclea Brae for manufacturer John Wilson sometime before 1846, perhaps as early as 1830. It was the first house built in Sunnyhill, in an area of the old Langlands estate formerly known as Roughheugh, and to which it later gave its name. The name itself was probably invented by John Wilson. The house can be seen as the only one in the Sunnyhill area on the painting of Hawick from the Mote in about 1850. It was built in an Italianate style and had a north wing added in 1902, probably by J.P. Alison. Alison lived in the house himself and installed a fireplace in the central hallway, with an inscription commemorating how he survived a gas explosion at the house in 1910. In 1953 the house was split into 2 dwellings. It is a grade B listed building.

Ladylaw Mills (lä-dee-law-milz) n. textile mill in the Langlands or Roughheugh area, for a long time in the Wilson family. It was built for Wilson & Watson’s, then taken over by William Wilson in 1819. In 1851 it passed to John Wilson & Sons and in 1876 to Wilson & Glenny’s, with whom it remained for a century. A water wheel was installed by Melrose’s in 1885 and repaired in 1920, when it was used along with steam engines. Following a major fire in 1959, the mill was substantially rebuilt in 1961, but closed in 1980, to be converted into the Ladylaw Centre and later replaced by Lidl supermarket (also sometimes singular ‘Mill’).

Ladylaw Place (lä-dee-law-plis) n. row of houses built from 1841 on the north side of the western end of what is now Princes Street, named after the nearby Ladylaw House. The Wilton branch of the Co-op was here in the mid-1900s. The name vanished when the area was reconstructed around 1971 and renamed part of Princes Street. North of Ladylaw Place there were allotments in the mid-to-late 19th century, and before that the first open field was called ‘the Pedlar’s Field’.

the Lady Riders (th-lä-dee-rí-durz) n. Hawick Lady Rider’s Association, set up shortly after the 1996 Common Riding, amid the furor over whether women should be allowed to ride during the Ride-outs and the Common Riding itself.

lady’s gairtens (lä-gär-tinz) n., pl., arch. ribbon grass, Phalaris arundinacea (also gairtens).

Lady’s Knowe (lä-deez-now) n. small hill to the west of Hermitage Castle, reaching a height of 223m. There is a settlement enclosure on the east side, including the remains of a later farmstead and with a trackway leading downhill from it. The slopes of the hill are covered with evidence of early field systems, including cultivation terraces and rig lines.

the Lady’s Pool (thu-lä-deez-pool) n. former name for a pool in the Slitrig near Lynnwood. It is mentioned as part of a story about ‘Yedie Broon’ recounted in 1863 (descending to there from Haggishaa to clean off the sticky treacle toffee).

the Lady’s Pool see the Ladies’ Pool

Lady’s Scar (lä-deez-skawr) n. steep bank on the west side of the Liddel just north of Leahaugh Cottage.

Lady’s Sike (lä-deez-sik) n. stream that effectively forms the western part of the defences of Hermitage Castle, although it was diverted to join the Castle Sike and flow to the east. On the slope between this stream and Castle Sike there is a series of small cairns (the name presumably derives from the nearby chapel being dedicated to St. Mary).

Lady Stirches (lä-dee-stir-cheez) n. name used formerly to refer to Mrs. Chisholme of Stirches.

Lady Symington (lä-dee-si-ming-tin) n. listed among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century by James Wilson. Her name is written ‘Symington’. Her lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £200 in 1643, and in one transcription of the valuation rolls she is entered as ‘Anna McGill, Lady Summington’. Her name appears to be wrongly transcribed as ‘Lady Farnington’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Since her name appears alongside that of Rev. Walter McGill, then she was surely related to the minister. Rev. The children of Sir James Douglas of Cavers with his 2nd wife (a daughter of Sir James McGill) were said to have taken the surname McGill in order to claim inheritance from their maternal grandfather. It is hence possible that she and Rev. Walter were brother and sister, or alternatively (and perhaps more likely, given the timing) they were brother-in-law and sister-in-law of Douglas of Cavers. She presumably married the Laird of Symington, but which one is not clear. By 1678 her lands in Cavers Parish were back in the hands of the Douglasses of Cavers. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls her name is mis-transcribed as ‘Farnington’.

Lady’s Well (lä-deez-wel) n. spring on the lands of Borthwickbrae. The 1859 Ordnance Survey Name Book describes it as ‘a well of excellent water’. It lies only about 500m from the former chapel of Kirkborthwick, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

Lady’s Well (lä-deez-wel) n. spring near Abbotrule church, presumably named after an association with ‘Our Lady’.

Lady’s Well (lä-deez-wel) n. spring lying between Wauchope and Templehall farms, close to the Wauchope Burn, in Hobkirks Parish.

Lady Synton (lä-dee-sin-in) n. name used for the wife of the Laird of Synton, particularly the widow Isobel Scott.

Lady Todrig (lä-dee-tód-rig) n. former name used for the wife of the Laird of Todrig, i.e. Mrs. Scott.

Lady Whitehaugh (lä-dee-whi’uf) n. title used to refer to the wife of the Laird of Whitehaugh.

Lady Whitslade (lä-dee-whi’släd) n. title used to refer to the wife of the Laird of Whitslade (e.g. in 1707).

laich (laid) n., arch. a load – ‘And with this lade I’ve sprai’d and foughten Hail ten lang mile’[JoHa], ‘...as ane hivie lade thae ar over hivie for me’[HSR], ‘So on I gaed, wi’ love a lade My heart played loup and flutter ...’[WaD], overindulgence in strong drink, as much liquor as one can hold, v. to load – ‘Blisset be the Lord, wha daye efter daye lades us wi’ gouid things ...’[HSR] (also written ‘lade’).

laid (låd) pp., adj., arch. smeared with butter, tar or other substance, to protect from the weather or vermin (said of a sheep’s fleece, or the wool produced from it) – ‘Cheviot wool laid with tar and butter, per stone of 24 lbs. English, 10s. 7d.; ditto laid with turpentine, 14s. 2d. . . .’[RGJH].

laidman (laid-men) n., arch. a carter who works for a miller, delivering corn – ‘Aw mind . . . the first barley mill in Ashkirk Mill, when Aw was a young chap and the miller’s laidman there’[BCM1880].

laidner (laid-nur) n., arch. a larder, hence winter’s provisions, particularly referring to an animal slaughtered and cured for winter food – ‘The lands of meikle whitlaw sett by rentall right To Francis Gledstanes of Whitlaw during his lifetime for gentleman Srvice with ane fat mart at ladner tyme or price throf’ [Buc1692].

laid-treis (laid-triz) n., arch. a large frame to fix to a farm cart to allow it to take an increased load.

Laidlaw (laid-law, -lu, -lee, -li) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name was given as ‘Eddie Ladlay’ from Whiteside in Jedforest, and the only other Laidlaw named among a set of mostly Olivers was John of ‘Breerbushe’. Adam ‘Great Legs’ (16th C.) named along with Douglasses, Turnbulls, Shiels and others who were accused in 1590 of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton. He may have been from Rulewater like some of the other men named. His name is recorded as ‘Eddie Ladelie Greteleges’. He was also ‘Eddie Ladley ‘greatt leges’’ in 1590 when accused, with David of ‘Antreahawghe’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull, of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman. Additionally in 1590 he was accused along with David of Roughlee of stealing cattle from ‘Hefferlawe’. Presumably his nickname meant he had long legs, rather than good-looking legs! Adam ‘Adie’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden’s tenants, along with Thomas of the Haugh, as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshill and others. He is also ‘Eddie’ when accused in 1590, along with Thomas of Haugh, of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Great Legs’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1656 his son James with Bessie Grieve was baptised in Hawick. This child was born illegitimately, with witnesses John (surely a relative) and James Grieve (probably related to Bessie Grieve). Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Veitch and their children included an unnamed son (b.1660). Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included Walter (b.1669) and Margaret (b.1673). Adam (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Little Cavers’ in 1684 when he was listed among a huge number of people declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel ‘Andison’ (presumably ‘Anderson’) and their children included: Alexander (b.1689). Adam (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Leadon’ (probably Leyden) and their children included Robert (b.1701). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Southfield in 1711. He married Janet Fletcher and their children included: David (b.1711); and Adam (b.1715). The witnesses in 1711 were Walter Scott in Newbigging and James Scott in Nether Southfield. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at the Marklair in 1716 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Bell and their children included: Violet (b.1729); Simon (b.1730); and William (b.1734). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1731. Adam Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Wester Burnfoot in 1736 and Galalaw in 1747. He married Violet Bonar and their children included: Thomas (b.1736); William (b.1738); Helen (b.1741); Margaret (b.1743); and Violet (b.1747). The witnesses in 1736 were Archibald and John Scott and in 1747 were John and Thomas Scott. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Veitch and their children included: Adam (b.1754). Adam (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1787–90. Rev. Adam (1753/4–1834) licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1778, he was ordained as minister at South Shields in 1782, and promoted to St. James’, Silver Street, Newcastle in 1784. He was presented to Southdean Parish in 1809 in competition with John Richmond, who was preferred. However, he became minister at Kirkton in 1818 (although it is unclear what he did in the interim), where he remained until his death. In 1820 he performed a baptism in Cavers (probably at Caerlenrig). In 1786 he married Mary Laidlaw, who died in 1849. Their children included William, Adam, Thomas, John Whitfield, Robert and David. He could be the Adam, student of divinity who witnessed a lease for Simon in Boos Mill in 1773 (suggesting a relationship). Adam (b.1814/5) mason who worked with his uncle Andrew Rodgie Michie. He was disabled in an accident, and had to give up being a builder, becoming a coal agent instead. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a coal agent at the Station for Edmonston Colliery. After his uncle’s death in 1854 he ran his own builders firm. They built Heronhill and several other local villas and started work on the Exchange Buildings, although the first arch caved in and the firm was replaced. He is probably the builder of this name who was a Hawick Town Councillor for Wilton Ward, retiring in 1869. He married Margaret Cathræs in Wilton in 1838. In 1841 he was living at the North Toll Bar. He later lived at Kirkhouse in Wilton Parish and then farmed at Anerum Craigs. His children included: Adam, who was a clerk; Thomas C., who carried on the farm; John Michie; James, who farmed at Trowmill; and Marjorie (or Margaret Michie), who married a farmer named Elliot, later married D. McBurnie Watson, and was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library. One of his children died in 1838. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in Edgerston in 1502. He was convicted for communicating with Rutherfords and Grahamslaws who were fugitives and for the murder of Patrick Hepburn, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as surety. Alexander (16th C.) part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably local, like all the other men on the panel. Alexander (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Robert, who was also tenant there. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Laidlaw in 1765 and their children included: David (b.1767); Violet (b.1769); and Margaret (b.1773); and Margaret (again, b.1777). Alexander (18th C.) married Isobel Thomson in Wilton Parish in 1768. Alexander (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Hobkirk in Roberton in 1805. Alexander (d.1842) tenant farmer at Bowerhope in the Yarrow valley. He survived being buried for 14 hours following an avalanche when he was a shepherd. He was a good friend of the Ettrick Shepherd, contributed to ‘The Scots Magazine’ and wrote essays for the Highland Society. He was related to William Laidlaw, who wrote ‘Lucy’s Flittin’’. Alexander (b.c.1807) farm worker for Ebenezer Beatie at Oakwood. In 1825 Sir Walter Scott writes of an incident in which he came across some little people dressed in strange clothes, sitting under some trees near the Ettrick. Convinced that he was seeing the ‘fairy court’, he summoned neighbours, who also beheld the same sight. However, it turned out that these were puppets which had been stolen from the belongings of a man who had just given a puppet show at a fair in Selkirk, and had been abandoned in the countryside by the thieves. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in Wadeshill in Jedforest in 1541, paying 22 shillings yearly. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (c.1725–81) tenant farmer at Gair, in Ettrick Parish. He previously lived at Glenkerry and perhaps also at Ropelawshiel, where one of his children was born. In 1746 in Westerkirk he married Agnes Glendinning, who died in 1792, aged 67; she was daughter of Archibald Glendinning and Jane Beatty. Their children were: Walter (b.1747); Robert (b.1749); Archibald (b.1751); Jean (b.1753); John (1755–69); William (1758–62); James (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1762); William (again, b.1765); John (again, 1769–99), buried at Roberton; and Andrew (b.1774). He is buried at Teviothead. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Askir Parish. His wife was Isabel and their children included: Charles (b.1767). Andrew (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Jean Elliot and their children included Barbara (b.1797). Perhaps the same Andrew was recorded in a legal case in 1814, involving Hawick lawyer Gilbert Amos. Barrie (1921/2–2004) international rugby referee from Hawick. He played for Hawick Harlequins. Bennet (16th C.) listed as tenant in Northbank in 1541 along with ‘Belle’ and Thomas, paying 22 shillings yearly. His first name is recorded as ‘Bennete’. Charles Gray (1804/5–73) youngest son of William, he was named after the evangelist preacher of the Tabernacle. He lived on the Loan (at about No. 14 in 1841). In 1851 he was a widower lodging at 5 Mid Raw with 3 of his children and in 1861 was still there (with his brother-in-law James Harkness). He married Hannah Harkness (who died in 1849), niece of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. Their children included Margaret, William, Ellen (or Helen, who died in infancy), Thomas, George, a second Ellen (whose son was Walter Laidlaw) and Charles. Daniel McGowan (1826–64) younger son of William and Jane Fisher. He was a commercial traveller and partner in the family hosiery business. He built Hopehill, intending to be married, but died aged 39. There is a portrait of him. David (16th C.) tenant at ‘Anterhauch’ (i.e. Antroch) according to a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably an ancestor of the later David there. David (16th C.) resident at Roughlee when he was among men accused in 1590 of raiding into England 2 years earlier. He is ‘Davie Ladley of the Roughley’, and he is listed along with Adie ‘Great Legs’. Additionally he was accused in 1590 of stealing horses from John Salkeld, along with ‘Rennye’, Thomas of Haugh and Steven of the Bank. David ‘Cuddy’s Davie’ (16th C.) listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls and Croziers, accused in 1590 of riving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. His name is recorded as ‘Davie Laidlea Cuddis Davie’, but it is unclear who his father was. David (16th C.) described as ‘Davie Ladley of Antreahawghe’ in 1590. He was accused of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman, along with ‘Adie Great Legs’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull. It seems likely that ‘Antreahawghe’ is Antroch in the Jed valley. David of Sunnyside (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he was accused (along with Rutherfords, Croziers, Elliots and Armstrongs) of riving from Woodburn in the previous year. His name is written ‘Davie Ladley of the Sonnye syde’. He probably lived around the Jed valley. David (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Brydon and their son David was baptised in 1686. David (17th C.) tenant in Jedhead in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. David (18th C.) farmer at Highchesters. He was related to John Leyden’s father, his sister Margaret probably being Leyden’s paternal grandmother. He married Isabella Armstrong, who claimed descent from the Armstrongs of Gilnockie; she died in Hawick in 1808, when he was already deceased. Their children included: Robert (b.1753); and Isabella (b.1764), who married Robert Grieve. David (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1772 when his son David was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children who may be his included Margaret (b.1759), James (b.1761), Agnes (b.1768) and John (b.1770). David (18th/19th C.) agricultural labourer. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Whithope in Robertson Parish. He married Helen Hart in 1825 and their children included: Robert (b.1826); George (b.1827); Isabella (b.1831); Helen (b.1834); Margaret (b.1836); and Davina (b.1838). David (b.c.1810) educated at New Mill and Edinburgh, he was Schoolmaster at Newmill from 1837. He is probably the teacher David, living with Thomas and his family at Branxholme Loch in 1841. He may be the David, son of John, born in Minto Parish in 1808. David (1907–2003) born near Hawick, and educated at the High School and then Nottingham University, he worked in accountancy, manufacturing and other jobs. He founded the first Scout troop in Hawick, and travelled to Switzerland for the very first Scout Jamboree. He moved to Cornwall, where he spent most of his life, where he was an enthusiastic Rotarian. He married Elsie in 1936. Douglas (b.1810–77) son of William and Helen Douglas, he was from the Rulewater Laidlaws. He was a licensed grocer in Hawick in the early 1800s and apparently known for selling good whisky. He is listed on the Tower Knowe in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is recorded at about 3 Tower Knowe in the 1841 census, living with Joan and Jessie, probably his sisters. Probably before 1851 he emigrated to the Toronto area, where he married Elizabeth Ross and had a daughter Mary Douglas. He had a general store in Holland Landing and in about 1853 went to Lefroy, where he traded in grain. George (1797–1844) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America. They lived in Delaware County, New York, then moved to Niagara Township in Canada, and from about 1843 set up a farm at Caistor in Lincoln County. In 1817 he married Margaret Rae (d.1846). Their children were: William (1818–53), born in Hawick; Jenny (b.1819), who died in infancy; Jane (1821–63), born in the U.S.A.; Maria (1823–1913); Margaret (b.1824), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1825–95); and James (b.1826). Gideon (1802/3–1900) born near Tushielaw. He knew the Ettrick Shepherd in his younger days, met Sir Walter Scott and Professor Wilson and was present at the Carterhaugh Baa. He died at Singlie Inch and was then the oldest resident of the Ettrick valley. Helen see Nelly. Helen (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isabel ‘Belle’ (16th C.) tenant in Northbank in 1541, along with Thomas and Bennet. Isabella (b.1865) daughter of William, farmer at Weensmoor, and Agnes Purdom. She was recorded as a pupil teacher in Hawick in 1881 and in 1891 was in Midlothian working as a G.P.O. Clerk. She worked for the Post Office in London. Jackie (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 as ‘Jaquie Laidlaw’ whe he was part of the raid on the Kers in Jedburgh by a group of Turnbulls and their associates. Jacob (17th C.) recorded at Antroch on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Laidlo’. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Jacobi Laidlaw’ listed... as a debtor in the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501, along with David Scott ‘de Francsciuni’ and Adam Scott, with Walter Scott of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. James (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, along with Lawrence, probably his father or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Thomas renting another part of the farm. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included Malie (b.1651). James (b.1648), with no mother’s name given, may also be his son. The witnesses in 1651 appear to be William and Walter Laidlaw. James (17th C.) owner of quarter of the lands of Fairnilee in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ of 1647. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hislop and their children included William (b.1651). The witnesses were William Elliot and William Dickson. James (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert was also listed there, and so probably a relative. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Wadsholm’ (probably near Wadeshill) in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James (17th C.) tenant in Kirkton. He is listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenantant. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. He was recorded there in 1700. In 1699 in Hawick he married Margaret Hislop from Castleton Parish. Their children included: James (b.1700), baptised in Hawick. He is probably the James in Branxholme Town whose son Andrew was baptised in 1702. The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and William Clerk in Colters cleugh and in 1702 were James Ogilvie (gardener at Branxholme), Henry Orrock and Alexander Hislop (probably related to his wife). Perhaps the same James married ‘Mary Hiselip’ in Kirkton Parish in 1716. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Hislop in 1698. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as a herd in Ashkirk itself in 1715. He married Margaret Hislop and their son James was baptised in 1715. It is possible he is the same James from Hawick who married Margaret Hislop. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His son Adam was baptised in Roberton parish in 1703. Walter (b.1705) may also have been his son. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. She was christened ‘Nelly’ rather than this being short for something (although the 1841 census lists her as ‘Helen’). She worked on farms and took up residence at the Sclent. She was mainly self-educated and was a keen reader. At the age of 49 she became the teacher at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’, which Mrs. Cleghorn set up in Hobkirk Parish. She was always known as ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’ although she was never married. She was known as a strict disciplinarian, but very fond of teaching. She is listed as a teacher at Sclent Hall in 1841. She is buried in Hobkirk cemetery. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) probably name of ‘Rennye Ladley’ recorded in 1590 when accused of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. This was along with Thomas of Haugh, Steven of the Bank and David of Roughlee. He was probably from somewhere in the Jed valley. It seems likely that the same ‘Ninian Laidlo’ was listed along with Olivers of Southdean and William Kirkton of Stewartfield in 1572/3, when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston were their cautioners; this was probably related to Kerr of Fernielhirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. Patrick (16th C.) tenant in part of Harelawcleuch in 1541, along with John Oliver and Richard Oliver. He was probably related to John, who was tenants in the other part. Peter Fisher (1830/1–1917) 2nd surviving son of William, and brother of Thomas and William, he was named after his maternal grandfather. He planned to enter the ministry, but instead joined his father’s manufacturing business, then set up on his own as a hosiery manufacturer in Melgund Place. He later moved to Appletreehall, although that factory burned down. He then lived at Wilton Grove, where he ran a small frame shop, which was later taken over by Robert Murray, then Mr. Routledge and eventually by Peter Scott. He moved to Jedburgh at one point, to work at Allars Mill (run by other family members), but spent most of his long life in Hawick. He later lived at Galabrae and became a coal merchant, auctioneer and newspaper correspondent. He was the last surviving member of the first ‘reformed’ Council, and one of the last two surviving Hawick Burgesses. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He joined the Free Church at the Disruption, and the first meeting to set up a Free Church in Wilton took place in his warehouse in 1866. He was described as 'unconventional in manners and address'. In 1857 he married Catherine Gray in Rothbury. Their children were: William, who died young; George (b.1861), also died young; Jessie Lindsay (b.1862); Jane Fisher (b.1864), who married W.F. Duncan; another William (b.1866), who spent many years in Australia and later farmed in California; George Gray, a fruit grower in California; Mary, who married G.A. Hillman of Chino, California; Thomas; Daniel, a chemist in Basingstoke; and Catherine, who married chemist W.B. Rawlinson. He was healthy to the end, walking from his house at Galabrae into town until about a year before his death. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery.

Peter (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Rachel Scott in 1862 and their children included: Helen (b.1863); Hannah (b.1865); Sarah (b.1867); Thomas (b.1869); Robert (b.1871); and Sarah (again, b.1874). Richard (19th/20th C.) served as a Bailie and also as Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He also wrote articles for the Archaeological Society Transactions. In 1939 he was living at Wilton Lodge. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded being 'in knawis edzartoun' in 1502. He was presumably tenant in part of Edgerton. He served as surety for his brother Walter (alias 'Rutherford'), as well as for himself, and was fined for non-appearance. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Alexander, who was also tenant there. Robert (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Whiteside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He was probably related to James, who was also listed as a tenant there. Robert (17th C.) recorded in a rental roll of 1669 along with Adam Oliver. It is unclear where they were tenants, but perhaps Northbank or Slack. Robert (17th C.) listed in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is ambiguous where he was a tenant, but he is listed right after John in Wadeshill and before Robert in Southdean Law. He could be the tenant of Wadeshill who is recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (17th C.) listed as tenant in Southdean Law in the 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Roughlee according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is probably the same Robert recorded at Southdean Parish on the crossed out part of the rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Northbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in Haregrain in 1709 when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Walter Grieve in Park and Walter Scott in Merrylaw. Perhaps the same Robert was herd in Commonside in 1714 when his unnamed child was baptised, with witnesses Thomas Hume 'preacher' and Walter Purdom. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Falnash in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Redfordgreen in 1711 and 1724. His children included Janet (b.1711) and Bessie (b.1724). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Eilrig in 1711. His children included Andrew (b.1711). He must be distinct from the Robert in Redfordgreen, since the baptisms are just a month apart. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Thornyhaugh in 1741 when his son Thomas was baptised. Robert (b.1743), Walter (b.1745) and John (b.1747) were probably also his children. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee in Hockpark Parish in 1785–88, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He was surely related to Thomas who was farmer there immediately afterwards. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Falnash from about the 1760s. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Nichol. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–97. In 1797 he was recorded having 3 work horses as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for 5 dogs in the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. Around 1799 he was one of the local men who contributed money to help in the war against France. He may have been father of Elizabeth, who married William Elliot in Millburnholm. He may also have been father of Thomas, who moved from Falnash to take over the farm of Todshawhill in Eskdalemuir after the ‘Gonial Blast’ of 1795. He married Jane Shortreed and had children born in Cavers and Hawick Parishes: Elizabeth (b.1750); Mary (b.1752); Margaret (b.1753); Robert (b.1755); Jane (b.1759), who may have married Rev. William Hardie Moncrieff and died in 1821 at Falnash; Janet (b.1762); Thomas (b.1764); Janet (again, b.1765); William (b.1766); John (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Cornelius (b.1772). The witnesses to the 1764 baptism were John Pott and George Pott of ‘Ridge’, while in 1766 they were Walter Scott senior (Commonside) and Robert Scott (Skelfhill). Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gorrenberry, recorded on both the Horse Tax Rolls in 1792–97. He also paid the dog tax in
Laidlaw

1797. He may be the Laidlaw at Gorrenberry whose daughter Jean married Henry Elliot of Bush. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Janet Scott, who was from Cavers Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Falnash. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may have been son of Thomas and grandson of the earlier Robert, tenant at Falnash. Robert (d.bef. 1809) wright at West Port. He was already deceased in 1809 when his wife Margaret Scott died. He married Margaret Scott in 1790. He was probably the Hawick mason who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at Harden in 1786 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. He could be the Robert who married Margaret Grieve in Robertson in 1786. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1796 as ‘Residenter in Denholm’. He married Margaret Blyth and their children included Betty (b.1796) and Andrew (b.1798). Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant in Kingledoors in Drumelzier Parish. In 1788 (and also in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he is recorded as owner of the parts of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish that had previously been owned by Ralph Davidson and Andrew Davidson, valued together at £210 5s 6d. He married Dorothea Turnbull, who was probably daughter of Walter Turnbull of Firth, a previous occupant of Greenhouse. Their children were Robert (b.1782), Walter (b.1783), Dorothea (b.1785), Elizabeth (b.1786), Barbara (b.1788), Robert (again, b.1790), Alexander (b.1792), William (b.1795), Agnes (b.1797), Mary (b.1799), Robert (once more, b.1800), Elizabeth (again, b.1802) and Mary (again, b.1803). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Sibbald in Wilton Parish in 1803. Robert (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. His son James died in 1819. He also had a child who died in 1838. He may be the Robert who married Anne Walker in Wilton in 1837. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Beatrix Michie and their children included: William (b.1815). Robert ‘Auld London’ or ‘London Laidlaw’ (1792–1787) son of William, the first of the family to come to Hawick, with his mother being Margaret Aitken. He rented the Moat and other fields and sold milk etc., at his house at 17 Loan. He acted as one of the witnesses called to London to give evidence about the conduct of some Hawick men at the election of 1837, and was given his nickname as a result. He is said to have told his friends on his return that during the boat trip there had ‘only been a fir deal between him and eternity’. His nickname was also pronounced ‘Auld Lunan’. He married Rachel Rae, who died in 1866, aged 71. Their children were: William (b.1815); Margaret (b.1820), who married Andrew Blyth; Rachel (b.1822); Janet (b.1825); Jane (b.1827); and Robert (b.1832), who was Cornet in 1852 and married Jessie Gow. He is probably the stockingmaker Robert whose infant son’s death is recorded in 1822 – ‘Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’ [HI]. Robert (b.1799) only son of Thomas, he was farmer at Nether Cassock, like his father. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jean Beattie and his children included Mary and John. Robert (19th C.) married Ann Walker in Wilton in 1837. Robert (b.1820s) 4th son of Thomas. He became a small hosiery manufacturer in Glasgow, then in 1886 emigrated to New Zealand (although this may have been a generation later). Robert ‘Robbie’ (19th C.) appointed choir-master of Hawick Parish Church in the mid-19th century, being one of the first to hold such a position in Hawick. Robert (b.1825/6) butcher in Denholm. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a butcher and shopkeeper. In 1861 he was living with his mother Mary and sister Margaret, probably on Main Street. He may be the Robert who chaired the centenary Burns night in Denholm in 1859. Robert (1832/3–1908) son of Robert, he was a mason to trade, but later took over his father’s fields up the Loan. He was Cornet in 1852. He married Jessie Gow from Perthshire, who died in 1910, aged 48. Their children included James (who died aged 25 at Burnflat Cottage), John (who died in infancy), Robert (who died aged 17), Stewart (who died in infancy), another Robert (who died in infancy), Rachel, Eliza (who married Robert Oliver Pott, from Duns, woollen manufacturer in Honley, near Huddersfield), Walter and Agnes (who lived at Thongsbridge, near Huddersfield). Robert (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Murray and their children included James (b.1863) and Janet (b.1866). Robert Grierson (1856/7–1933) son of Thomas, he helped run the family tweed manufacturing business along with his brother William. He was for a while President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He was also Captain of the Golf Club. He lived at Hazelwood in the late 1800s. After the firm folded around 1908 he carried on as a commission agent, finally retiring only a few years before his death, and passing on that business to George Wilson & Sons. Sir Robert (1856–1915) 2nd son of William and Agnes Purdom, he was born at Bonchester. He was educated at Kirkton and Denholm schools, and served his apprenticeship with Wood, Graham & Co., drapers in Hawick. He then moved to work as a draper in London, leaving in 1875 for Cape Colony (i.e. South Africa), where he carried out business in Kimberley. In 1877 he sailed for Japan, but broke his journey in India. He moved to Calcutta, where he worked for 5 years. In 1881, along with Edward Whiteaway, he set up Whiteaway, Laidlaw & Co., which operated on a strictly cash basis (unusual for businesses in India in those days), with the first premises in Chowringhi. The firm expanded from drapery into general goods, and soon there were department stores in about 20 major cities throughout India. In 1898 he became sole partner and the firm expanded into other Asian cities (including Shanghai and Singapore); it was often referred to as ‘the Selfridge’s of India’, at its height employed 2400 people, and remained in business until 1962. He also owned tea plantations in Darjeeling and rubber estates in the Federated Malay States, and was senior partner in a shipping firm. He joined the American Methodist Church in India and became involved in missionary work and Christian schools. In particular he supported the Calcutta Boy’s School, which opened in 1877, with a girls’ school following 9 years later. He spent 20 years in India before returning to Britain, settling in Chislehurst. He bought a new house there by Camden Park and named it ‘Bonchester’; the street that it is on was later called Bonchester Close. A Liberal, he became more interested in politics on his return to Britain, and was M.P. for West Renfrewshire 1906–10, with Winston Churchill being one of his political supporters. He was knighted in 1909, and became British Commissioner to the International Opium Commission in Shanghai. In 1909 he moved to ‘The Warren’ at Coney Hall, Hayes, and grew rhododendrons and azaleas there. A keen traveller, he was a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. He was also President of the World’s Sunday School Association and an Executive of the National Temperance League. In 1912 he purchased the estate of Wolfelee from Edward Elliot, 6th Laird; in later life he was referred to as being ‘of Wolfelee’. In 1879 he married Mary, daughter of Capt. W. Blow Collins and widow of W.L. Francis of the India Office. He became step-father to the several children of his wife, and together they had children: William, who died in infancy; Ethel; Mildred (or Margaret); Dorothy; and 2 daughters who also died in infancy. He had the William Laidlaw Memorial Hall erected at Bonchester Bridge in memory of his son William, as well as his father, who was also William. He left some money in his will to support a school for poor children in South India, which is still known as the Laidlaw Memorial School, Ketti Nilgiris. He privately published ‘By the Way’, about a trip he took around the world. Robert Henderson (1872–1953) writer of the words for ‘Auld Hawick My Dreams’ and ‘Teviotdale’, among other songs. He was son of stockmaker Thomas and Robina Henderson and born at 6 Slitrig Bank. He apprenticed as a printer in Hawick, but emigrated to America, working in Boston. On returning to Hawick he joined the Hawick Express and became foreman printer there. He contributed poems to the newspaper and also wrote the Betty Whutson’s Letter column for many years. He wrote an article on the Verter Well and associated poetry competition for the Archaeological Society. He was long connected with West Port Church, being Session Clerk there for 22 years, as well as Sunday School Superintendent. He was also a lay preacher himself and was a member of Lodge St. James 424. He married Agnes Anderson. He lived at 22 Beaconsfield Terrace, where he died, and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Note that an older brother of the same name was born in 1863 and died in infancy, leading to some confusion over his own year of birth. Simon (15th C.) listed as a witness on the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. His name is recorded as ‘Symone Laidlaw’ and he may have been a ‘presbyter’, along with Thomas Falconer. Simon (18th C.) tenant at Birkwod in Ashkirk Parish in 1762. He was later farmer at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish, according to a tack of 1773, with the Riddells of that Ilk. He was also tenant there according to the 1789–94 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isobel Anderson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Thomas (b.1758); Helen (b.1760); and Adam (b.1762). The witnesses in 1762 were William (perhaps his brother) and William Anderson (surely related to his wife). He is probably the Simon, son of Adam and Helen Bell born in Ashkirk in 1730. Steven of Bank (16th C.) recorded in 1590 of stealing horses from Englishman John Salkeld.
His name is recorded as ‘Steven Ladley of the Banke’ and others named are ‘Renny’, Thomas of Haugh and David of Roughlee. He is surely related to Ninian, who was recorded as tenant ‘in the Bank’ in 1572/3. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Northbank in 1541, along with ‘Belle’ and Bennet. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, paying 22 shillings yearly. Lawrence and James were tenants in another part of Letham and probably related. Thomas (d.1543) tenant of the Earl of Angus. John Musgrave led a party of Englishmen on a raid into Scotland in July 1543 in which he was killed trying to recover the spoils from his farm. It is unclear where his farm was, but since the Douglases held much of Southdean, it could be that he was the tenant of Letham. Thomas (16th C.) son of Lyle. He was listed as ‘Lyalles Thome’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The other men were local Scotts, Oliviers and others. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Haugh in the Jed valley. In 1590 he was accused by John Forster of having reset Clement Crozier (son of Martin) and William Oliver of Lustruther. He was recorded as ‘Thomas Ladeley of the Hawghe’ in 1590 when he was among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott’s of Carrick; others listed included William of the Hill, Martin’s Clein Crozier, James Douglas of Earlside and John Henderson of Planderleith. He was also listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden’s tenants, along with ‘Eddie’, as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshill. Additionally he and ‘Eddie’ were accused in 1590 of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld and along with ‘Renny’, Steven of the Bank and David of Roughlee he was accused of stealing horses by John Salkeld. He was further recorded along with Lionel in 1590, accused of stealing from the Reeds of ‘the Old towne’ in England. Thomas (17th C.) paid the land tax in Southdean Parish on behalf of the Marquess of Douglas in 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Rouchhirst according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. ‘Martin Laidlae, yr.’ was also listed, and presumably his son or brother. Probably the same Thomas was listed at Rouchhirst in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, along with John. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Antwoch’ (i.e. ‘Antroch’) in a rental roll of 1669 for Jedburgh Forest. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at the farm of Haugh in the Jed valley according to a 1669 rental roll. Probably the same Thomas was still tenant in Haugh on the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. There were Laidlaws at Haugh at the end of the 16th century. Thomas (17th C.) married to ‘Euphan Bellinden’. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1676, with witnesses Thomas Borthwick and Robert Grieve. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Loraine and their children included: Helen (b.1686); and Isobel (b.1689). He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Roberton in 1686 for John ‘Bleak’ and Katherine (who may have been his sister, or other relative). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Stichers in 1747. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Smith (also living in the Stichers area) in 1747. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1744 and their children included: James (b.1745); Thomas (b.1747); Margaret (b.1750); and Robert (b.1752). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He married Margaret Anderson and their children included: Janet (b.1765) and James (b.1767), baptised in Hawick; and Janet (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771), Betty (b.1773), Agnes (b.1775), Adam (b.1778), and Adam (again, b.1780), baptised in Wilton. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1767 for herd John Scott and in 1771 for Thomas Elliot in Newmill. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee according to the 1789–91 Horse Tax Rolls. He succeeded Robert as farmer, and was presumably his son or brother. Thomas (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick. He was on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. In 1792 (along with fellow weaver William) he witnessed a baptism for Walter. He was thus probably closely related (perhaps brother) to the the carpenter-making Laidlaws. In 1795 and 1797 he witnessed baptisms for William. He married Margaret Stewart and their children included William (b.1796). The witnesses in 1796 were Walter (perhaps his brother) and Walter Tinlin. He could be the son of William and Isobel Birnie baptised in Hawick in 1772. Thomas (18th/19th C.) ‘gauger’, i.e. exciseman in Hawick. The death is recorded in 1811 of ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’, spouse to his father. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newlands in Minto Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. Thomas (b.1823) farmer at Falnash. He was probably son of Robert, who also farmed at Falnash. He was listed at Falnash on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1786. He took on the additional farm of Nether Cassock in 1800. He was probably the ‘Mr Laidlaw of Falnash, a gentleman of great responsibility and intelligence’ who took the young Tom Jenkins into his household, and later encouraged his education. He married Margaret Beattie and had one son, Robert. He was listed at Nether Cassock when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He could be the Thomas of Cavers Parish whose son Robert was baptised in 1771. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Agnes Glendinning and their children included Thomas (b.1814). Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker who moved to London. In 1815 the death of his mother, Anne Hogg, is recorded in Hawick. Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker at Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the resident of Cavers Parish who married Amanda Wood and whose children included Anne (b.1817), Thomas (b.1820), Helen (b.1823) and John Young (b.1826). Thomas (1801/2–28) son of William. He emigrated to America and died in a canal there aged 26. His children included William (grocer in Hawick and manufacturer at Cumledge Mills), Thomas (also grocer for a while), Walter (who moved to Australia), Robert (hosiery manufacturer of Glasgow, who moved to New Zealand) and Catherine (who married Alexander Mercer and moved to Australia). Thomas (b.1810/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was a farmer at Longbaulk. In 1841 he was living at Easter Branxholme Loch (with a teacher, David, who was probably his brother). He was still there in 1851. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 20 acres there. His wife was Hannah and their children included John, David, Peter, Thomas, Sarah, Helen, Hannah and Mary. Thomas (b.1820s) 2nd son of Thomas. He carried on his brother William’s grocer’s business at 4 High Street, then moved to Bolton. His children included William, Thomas, James and Catherine. Thomas ‘Chinnie’, ‘Secky’ (1829–1907) hosiery manufacturer who ran William Laidlaw & Sons from 1855, and built the mansion house he called ‘Sillerbuthall’ (completed in 1866). His name is entered onto the Land Tax records in about 1874 as owner of Dovemount and Silverbuthall (acquired in 2 parts from James Scott) and also for owning ‘Souter’s Acre’ that was formerly part of the Whitaugh estate. He was recorded at Silverbuthall in 1868. He was the third son of William, and continued to develop the family business. He acquired Lynnwood Mills from William Nixon in 1864, carrying out more a reputation locally as an artist, particularly in black and white. He illustrated Robert Murray’s ‘Hawick Characters’, Goodfellow’s ‘Guide to Hawick’, Mrs. Oliver’s ‘Upper Teviotdale’ and Tancred’s ‘Rulewater and its People’. He also painted a back view of the old Town House. He additionally designed Christmas cards for a London firm. At a lecture in Hawick, entitled ‘The Teviot from its Source to the Sea’, while Mr. Domingo read the lecture he painted in watercolour several illustrative pictures. He joined the Town Council in 1883, immediately becoming a Bailie, retiring after 3 years, but returning later to serve for many more years. He was the ex-Bailie Laidlaw who was on the initial Common Riding Ceremonial Committee of 1887 and served as a Race Steward. He was a keen bowler, serving as President, Secretary and Treasurer of the Buccleuch Club and was President of the Border Bowling Association. He was President of the Border Counties’ Master Painters’ Association, a Fellow of the Incorporated Institute of British Decorators and on the committee of the Association of Master Painters in Scotland. In 1868 he married Jane Scott, daughter of Gavin Pow and sister of John Pow. Their children included: Mary Bell (1870–1944); Bessie (b.1872); John (b.1874); Hannah H. (b.c.1877); Guy (b.c.1878); James C. (b.c.1880), who was also an artist; Thomas Hill (b.1881); Andrew S. (b.c.1889); and William Poole (b.1891).

Thomas A. Kenneth ‘Ken’ (1936– ) son of Jean and Arthur of 6 Northcote Street. He started cycling at age 15, and became extremely successful. He won the Scottish Daily Express 3-day road race in 1957, later winning the Scottish 100 mile championship in record time. He was the only Scot in the 1960 Olympic Games team and in 1961 was the first Scot to complete the Tour de France, leading during the 16th stage. He emigrated to New York in 1964, where he worked as a carpenter, and later moved to Savannah, Georgia. He married Theresa and emigrated to Savannah, Georgia. In 2005 he was made an Honorary Life Member of the Hawick Cycling Club at a special dinner. An annual event in Hawick, the ‘Ken Laidlaw Sportive’, was named in his honour. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded is 1502 as brother of Robert ‘in knawis edzartoun’ and also in the same place. He was ‘alias Ruthirfurd’, although it is unclear hy he would have had this nickname. His brother was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter (17th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Laidley in Ormiston’ on the 1684 list of men declared rebels for refusing to take ‘the Test’. This is probably the Ormiston near Hawick. He is probably related to William in Little Cavers, who was also on the list of fugitives, and John, who was at Ormiston in 1694. Walter (17th C.) resident of Deanbrae according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same Walter had children baptised in Cavers Parish, including: Isabel (b.1696); Bessie (b.1701); and Janet (b.1713). Walter (1659/60–1712) tenant in West Deloraine. He is buried in Borthwick Waas, along with 6 of his children. He could be the Walter whose children baptised in Ettrick Parish included: an unnamed son (b.1695); William (b.1696); Helen (b.1696); Jean (b.1697); William (again, b.1697); an unnamed son (b.1699); and Margaret (b.1706). Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1721 when he was paid by the Council ‘for a sled fut when ye robbish was taken away at he crosse’. He was presumably a tradesman of some sort in Hawick. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in Hawickshiel in 1766. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Spinny and their children included: Isobel (b.1718); and James (b.1720). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Anderson and their children included: Isobel (b.1737); and Margaret (b.1742). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Smail and their children included Margaret (b.1741). Walter (18th C.) shepherd in Roberton and Hawick Parishes. He was at Eilrig in 1733, 1735 and 1736 and was recorded as ‘herd’ in 1742. He married Janet Chisholme in Roberton in 1731. Their children included: Margaret (b.1732), Janet (b.1733) and Margaret (again, b.1736); baptised in Roberton; and Walter (b.1742), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1742 were Walter Hogg and John Elliot (both servants). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Wilson and their son William was baptised in 1745. Walter (18th/19th C.) probably brother of William, with whom he came to Hawick to work in the carpent factory. In 1796 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas (perhaps another brother) and in 1797 he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for William. He married Mary Miller in Hawick in 1780 and their children included: William (b.1781); Beatrix (b.1784); Isabel (b.1785); William (again, b.1788); Margaret (b.1792); and Robert (b.1796). The witnesses in 1792 were weavers William and Thomas Laidlaw, who were probably his brother and another relative. The names of his children suggest that he could also have been a son of William and Isabel Birnie, but his baptism is not recorded in Hawick Parish. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1787 as ‘Sauglaw’, when his daughter Margaret died and again in 1795 when his unnamed child died in Hawick Parish. Presumably the designation was the place where he lived, but this is unclear. He was probably related to James ‘sauglaw’, recorded in 1810. He may be the Walter whose son James died in Hawick in 1781. Walter (b.1780) son of James and Margaret Scott. He was born at Weensmoor in Holskirk Parish. He became head gardener at Raby Castle, home of the Duke of Cleveland. He had daughters Mary and Anne. Walter (b.c.1780) born at Meadow, son of James and Isabella Sooon. He became a butcher in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 19 High Street. In 1801 he married Margaret Oliver (b.1777) in Kirkton. Their children included: Robert (b.1802); Mary (1806–81) married James Little; Isabella (b.1812) married Mr. Temple; and Walter (b.1816). Walter (b.1811/2) from Jedburgh, he was a blacksmith in Wilton. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a blacksmith on Wilton Place. In 1851 he was on Wilton Place, at about the modern 34 Princes Street, and in 1861 on the east side of Dickson Street. His wife was Janet and their children included Thomas and Elizabeth. Walter (1838–1911) poet and local historian in Jedburgh. He wrote several articles about Jedburgh and its history and for 20 years acted as custodian for Jedburgh Abbey. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He wrote ‘Poems: chiefly on Jedburgh and vicinity’ (1901) and ‘Poetry and prose’ (1900, 1904, 1908) — ‘...a geyan yibble poyeter an a leal Bor- der Scot ti buit, Walter Laidlaw maun be a sair miss ti the Waeter-gate o Jed’ [ECS]. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as one of the tenants of the lands of Deloraine and ‘Wardshope’ in Ettrick. William (17th C.) recorded as a tenant in Woll in 1639. He was called as a witness in a dispute between Francis Scott of Casteisde and his mother-in-law, Margaret Scott. Perhaps the same William had the following children baptised in Ashkirk Parish: William (b.1631); Margaret (b.1632); James (b.1636); Janet (b.1639); Robert (b.1639); Thomas (b.1641); an unnamed daughter (b.1643); Agnes (b.1645); and William (again, b.1647). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1651 for John Stewart and perhaps one for James. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Griewe and their children included John (b.1648). William (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Bank according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John Oliver was tenant there at the same time. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Brewbuse’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear exactly where this farm was. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Willans and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1681. William (17th C.) tenant in Little Cavers recorded in 1684 on a list of men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. He is probably related to Walter in Ormiston, who was also on the list of fugitives William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Laidlaw and their children included: Agnes (b.1688). William (1656/7–1717) tailor in Dodburn. He is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (17th/18th C.) herd in Wester Essendse. He married Mary Elliot in 1697. Perhaps the same Laidlaw (with no forename given) was herd in Huntly in 1715 when his son John was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Anderson in 1700. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Jean (b.1701); and Janet and Catherine (b.1705). William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Anderson in Cavers in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1712) and Robert (b.1715). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Sharp in 1721. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Jackson and their children included: James (b.1706); and Robert (b.1708). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1707 he married Margaret Scott. William (18th C.) married Margaret Davidson in Bedrule in 1726. William (18th C.) married Margaret Graham in Hawick in 1728. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1728 he was at Broadlesheil when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Howcleuch in 1742 when his son James was baptised in Roberton. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1727, 1730 and 1737. He is probably the William who married Margaret Reid in 1725 and had children John (b.1727), Thomas (b.1730), Janet (b.1732), Betty (b.1735) and Bessie (b.1737). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott in 1725 and their son John was baptised in 1726. William (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Bell in

Roberton in 1739. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Grizel Scott in 1744. William (18th C.) son of shepherd James, he was a wright in Town-o’-Rule. It was said that the family were related to the Laidlaws of Weensmoor, and their burial grounds were adjacent in Hobkirk Kirkyards. In 1762 he married Margaret Best of Kirkton Parish, the marriage recorded in both Hobkirk and Kirkton Parishes; they were members of the Associate Kirk in Jedburgh. Their children included: Agnes (b.1763), who married an Oliver; Bettie (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); Thomas (b.1773); Mary (b.1775), who married a Thomson; and Nelly (b.1777), who became teacher at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’. He could be the William who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1811. William (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1764 and 1767. His children (baptised in Robertson) included James (b.1764) and Alexander (b.1767). He may be the William who married Bett Matheson in Robertson in 1762, his wife being from Yarrow Parish. William (18th C.) married Helen Grieve in Wilton Parish in 1764. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Brown in 1764 and their children included: Adam (b.1765); and Helen (b.1768). William (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Robertson in 1769. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Birnie (or Burnet) in 1754 and their children included: William (b.1759); Isabel (b.1762); Margaret (b.1765); and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. Given the names, it is possible that he was father of William of the carpet factory, as well as father of Walter and Thomas. William (18th C.) married Margaret Moffat in Roberton in 1770. William (18th C.) married Jean ‘Bleekie’ in Southdean in 1772. William (18th C.) married Janet Hood in Hawick in 1774. William (1759–1823) along with his brother (perhaps Walter) he came to Hawick from Leith to work in the Orrock Place carpet factory. However, it seems that he may be the son of William and Isabel Birnie born in Hawick (so perhaps the bothers returned to Hawick rather than coming as complete outsiders). His property on the Cross Wynd was sold in 1811 to form part of the site of Allars Kirks. He was also one of the founder members of the Independent Kirk in Hawick, being an elder in that church and calling his youngest son after one of the evangelist preachers, Charles Gray (the ‘Tabernacle’ was built next door to his wife’s family home on the Kirk Wynd). He may be the William who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785. He was progenitor of the most prominent local branch of the family. He is probably the weaver William who in 1792 (along with fellow weaver Thomas) witnessed a baptism for Walter. In 1794 he witnessed a baptism for manufacturer Walter Richardson. In the early part of the 19th century he set up his own hosiery business with his son William, starting out with just 4 frames. They later expanded to both tweed and hosiery, building the main mill in 1834, and later focusing just on tweeds. He married Margaret Aitken (1765–1842), daughter of Robert and Janet Scott. They lived in the Mid Raw and their children were: Janet (b.1784), who married spinner Robert Wilson; William (b.1786), ‘Shaffles’; Robert (b.1792), ‘Auld London’, who lived at 17 Loan; James (b.1795), who married Ann Affleck and died leaving a young family; Thomas (b.1797), who emigrated to America and drowned in a canal; Walter (b.1797), who probably died in 1819; George (b.1797); Charles Gray; Isabella, who married William Wilson, spinner of Lynwood; Grace, who married draper George Borrowman; and 3 other sons, including one who farmed in Yarrow. The witnesses in 1795 were James Rae and Thomas (who was surely related) and in 1797 were Thomas and Walter (perhaps both his brothers). William (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (b.1768) son of James and Margaret Scott. He was born at Hartshaugh near Bonchester (although Tancred states he was born at Wester Swanshiel). He was farmer at Weensmoor in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded there in 1841. His wife was Helen, daughter of James Douglas from Castleton; she was said to be a favourite of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Their children included: James (b.1797), who farmed at Hallrule Mill and Hartshaugh Mill; Douglas (b.1799), born at Kirknowe, but died young; Christian (b.1801), who married William Gowanlock; Margaret (b.1803), who married William Sibbald; Mary (b.1806), married William Smith; Helen, married John Turnbull and went to Canada; Douglas (again, b.1810), who emigrated to Toronto; Joanna (b.1812), who later went to Canada and married storekeeper David Davidson; John (d.1814); William (b.1815), who later farmed at Weensmoor; and Jennet or Jessie (b.1817), who married Hawick shoemaker Charles Scott. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greatlaws in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Liliesleaf Parish, when he owned 4 farm horses and

1 saddle horse. He was also recorded as farmer at Greatlaws in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799; a note says ‘Selkirk Y’, suggesting perhaps that he was a volunteer with the Selkirkshire Yeomanry. William (1780–1845) born at Blackhouse in Selkirkshire, the Ettrick Shepherd worked for his family for 10 years. Together they helped Sir Walter Scott to gather Border ballads. He first encountered Scott when he travelled to Yarrow with John Leyden in 1802. He was a farmer, then an exciseman and later worked as Scott’s factor and secretary. He wrote several poems of his own, including ‘Lucy’s Flittin’ (which appeared in ‘The Banquet of Euphrosyne’, published in Hawick in 1811). He also wrote a description of Selkirkshire for the Edinburgh Encyclopaedia.

William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nelly Waldie and their children included Mary Jane (b.1813). William (18th/19th C.) road contractor, who was one of the first residents of Bonchester Brigend in the early 1800s. William (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Glendinning in Cavers in 1819. William ‘Auld Laidlaw’, ‘Shaffles’ or ‘The Auld Laird’ (1786–1861) eldest son of the first William, along with whom he founded the hosiery firm William Laidlaw & Sons in 1811, succeeding to the business of Mr. Purdom. To begin with he was the traveller for the firm, spending much time in the Newcastle area (where he often stayed at the ‘Robin Hood’ on Pilgrim Street) and further afield, sometimes in the company of Robert Leishman. One story is told of how he returned to Hawick on foot during a snowstorm, losing his way, but bumping into Willie Winter’s post, thereby recovering his bearings. It is said that he loved to bargain, and could not take a trip, even once retired, without some goods to sell. He lived for a while in a house at 14 Howegate, with his stocking-shop behind; this is probably the place marked ‘Laidlaw’ on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1834 he built Teviot Crescent Mills, expanding into the much larger premises there and moving into tweeds. He built up a huge manufacturing business from humble beginnings. In his day he was apparently the only person to openly sing ‘Teribus’ out of season, at the Bailies’ dinner, and he would sing the ‘Auld Sang’ at the married men’s Common Riding dinner. He was an ardent Conservative in politics, losing his coat tails during the election troubles of 1837, and objections to ‘Radicals’ seeking the vote were often made in his name afterwards. In 1814 he married Jane Fisher (daughter of a Glasgow merchant), who died in 1844, aged 50. His sons were: William (1817–59); Daniel McGowan (1826–54), who built Hopehill; Thomas (b.1829); and Peter Fisher (b.1830). They also had daughters: Margaret (b.1820), who married Rev. John Gilchrist Dyer in 1846; Jane (b.1826); Jessie (1833–41); one who became Mrs. McGinly; and 4 others who died in infancy, probably including Grace (b.1816) and Jane (b.1822). He later married Jane Rutherford (nee Waldie) at Edinburgh in 1845, the marriage also being recorded in Hawick. Her daughter Agnes Rutherford married William, her step-brother. Although most of his family left for the Free Kirk at the Disruption, he stayed with the ‘Auld Kirk’, despite repeatedly being cited for not keeping fast days. He lived beside his factory of Teviot Crescent, and is buried in St. Mary’s Cemetery. A portrait of him is in the Museum, by an unknown artist.

William (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Wilson and their children included: William (b.1807); James (b.1809); and John (b.1811). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included: Margaret (b.1803); Janet (b.1805); and Agnes (b.1807). William (b.1788) son of the first Hawick William’s brother (possibly Walter), and hence cousin of ‘Shaffles’. He was a weaver and later a grocer. Along with his brother Walter he owned property at 8 Loan. He is listed as a grocer in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Agnes Lamb. Their children included: Mary (b.1819), who married Thomas Stevenson; Agnes (b.1821), who married Hugh Douglas; and Walter (b.1823), an engineer with the government in India. He is buried at St. Mary’s. He could be the ‘Wm. Laidlaw, Loan’ who arranged for a musician from Jedburgh to play for the ‘rebel’ Cornet of 1809. William (b.1792/3) porter in Hawick, living at about 20 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was described as an ‘Out door Labourer’ and living around the Crown Close. His wife was Isabella and their children included John, Margaret, Elizabeth, William, Catherine, Sophia and Isabella. He could be the William listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a coal agent (for Arniston Colliery) at the Station. William (19th C.) married Margaret Jamieson in Cavers in 1836. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Middlemans in Wilton in 1844. William (19th C.) married Sarah Ormiston in Hwick.
in 1854. William (19th C.) tinsmith in Hawick. He married Helen Elliot Amos (from the Hobkirk family) in 1866. William (b.1814/5) shoemaker in Denholm. In 1851 he was living with his wife Margaret Jamieson and their children Janet, Ann, Catherine, Thomas, Margaret, Joan and Jane. William (1815–80) son of Robert, ‘Auld London’. He was a frameworker living on the Loan, at about No. 9. He married Christian Affleck Scott (1815–75). Their children were: Robert (b.1838); George (b.1840); Margaret (b.1846), who married Joseph Hogg; Rachel (b.1852); and Daniel (b.1855). He took in 3 sons of his uncle James when he died about 1838: Thomas (b.c.1824); Robert (b.c.1826); and Walter (b.c.1833). William (1815–84) son of William, who farmed at Weensmoor. He is recorded as farmer of Weensmoor in 1851, farming 52 acres and employing 1 labourer. He lived with his niece Mary and nephew James. By 1861 he was farmer at Bonchester, farming 152 acres and employing 3 people. He farmed at Bonchester for 19 years. He was listed on the first congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849, was a trustee and was Treasurer for 37 years. He also helped with building the first church there. In Hobkirk in 1853 he married Agnes Purdom (from Newcastleton), aunt of the Agnes Purdom who married mason Andrew Waugh. His children included: William (b.1854), farmer at East Fodderty; Robert (b.1856), Indian businessman and M.P. for East Renfrewshire; Agnes (b.1858), who married Stewart Douglas Elliot, a Councillor in Edinburgh; Helen (b.1859), who married James Phimister; James (b.1861), who emigrated to Canada and died unmarried; Isabella (b.1865), who worked for the Post Office in London; Arthur (b.1867), who emigrated to San Francisco and married Hattie Turner; John (b.1868), who emigrated to Australia; Margaret (b.1870), who married James Armour, a tea manager in India; Douglas (b.1874), a market gardener in Congleton; and Walter Scott (1877–1919), who trained as a doctor and managed a rubber plantation in the Straits Settlements. The William Laidlaw Memorial Hall was built partly in his memory. William (1817–59) son of William, he took over the firm of William Laidlaw & Sons in partnership with his brothers in 1845. The firm purchased Lynnwood Spinning Mill from Nixon’s. He was Cornet in 1838. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. In 1851 he married Agnes, daughter of builder Robert Rutherford, and his step-sister. Their children were: William (b.1851) of Grieve & Laidlaw; and Jeannie Waldie Fisher (b.1858), who married John G. Wilson. He later married Christina F. Scott (who died in 1875, aged 59). In 1861 his widow was an ‘Annuitant’ at 3 Teviot Crescent. William (b.1818/9) originally from Melrose, he was a farmer at Clari-law in Wilton Parish. He is listed there in 1841, when he farmed 150 acres and employed 8 men. His wife was Isabel and their children included William and Mary. William (b.1821) from Hawick. He married Betsy Elliot and became a sheep farmer in Fodderty, Ross and Cromarty. William (1821–1908) manufacturer, born in Hawick, son of James and grandson of hosiery manufacturer William. His mother was Ann Affleck, from Peebles. At the age of 17 he was left with no parents, and entered the warehouse of his uncle William on Teviot Crescent, but after a few years became a grocer. His premises were on the High Street (No. 12), where the Cannon Inn had been and the Royal Bank would be built later. In the 1841 census he was there (near the top of the Millport), but in 1851 he was at No. 4 High Street, formerly Andrew Borthwick’s property. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was ‘William Laidlaw, jun.’ on the High Street. He left Hawick in 1854, turning over the grocer’s business to his brother and taking a lease of Cumledge Mills near Duns. He started in yarn weaving, but moved into blanket manufacturing. From 1875 he was also involved (along with other family members) with Allars Mill in Jedburgh. The overall business was called Laidlaw Brothers, and later Laidlaw’s Blanket and Tweed Mills, Ltd. He purchased Cumledge Mills outright in 1888. He managed the Cumledge Mill side of the business along with his sons William and Alexander, with the older brothers, James and John managing Allars Mill. In the 1930s the company directors included 3 William Laidlaws, all cousins! In 1844 he married Elizabeth Middlelasmus, from Ednam. Their children included: James, J.P., who was Provost of Jedburgh; John, J.P.; William; Alexander; Isabella Broomfield (who married Robert Huggan); and Ann, who was unmarried. He and his wife held their diamond wedding anniversary in 1904. He remained strongly a Teri at heart and was known for his stories of Hawick in olden times, one of his earliest memories being the celebration for the coming of age of the future Duke of Buccleuch in 1827. He died at Cumledge Mills and is buried in Preston Cemetery, Berwickshire. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Sanderson in Hawick in 1852.
Laidlawhope

William (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Elizabeth Bell and their children included: Mary (b.1861). William (1835/6–1917) son of Thomas. Along with his brother Robert Grierson he was a partner in Thomas Laidlaw & Sons, but wrapped up the business in 1908. He died at Broadstairs and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (1854–1911) son of William and Agnes Purdom. He farmed at East Fodderlee. In 1880 he married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’, 1854–1925) Hall, 2nd daughter of baker Robert Young. They had 4 sons and 1 daughter, including Douglas (b.1888), Agnes Lamb and Alexander (b.1892). In 1901 his family were living in Minto. William (b.1845/6) son of William and Jane Newell. His marriage certificate states that he was born in Dumfriesshire, although family tradition says that he came from Hawick. He emigrated to Australia and in 1870 in Melbourne married Agnes Ferguson (daughter of a Denholm mason). They had 2 sons. William (1852/3–91) son of William. He was a manufacturer of Grieve & Laidlaw, Stonefield Mills. He married Mary Reid Clark, who died in 1929, aged 76. Their children included William Rutherford Clark, who died aged 16. William (1857/8–1912) cycle agent in Hawick. He was Captain of St. Cuthbert’s (rugby) Football Club for its first two seasons, from when it formed in 1877. He was also known as a keen cyclist in his early years. He worked for 38 years with Geo. & Jas. Oliver, providing valuable assistance to John Oliver in his work as Clerk to the School Board. He was in partnership with Robert Milligan for a while, and was succeeded by George Wilson & Sons. The main mills were later demolished, although some photographs still exist to show how extensive they were. The Museum has company ledgers from 1926–32. William Laidlaw & Sons, manufacturers of hosiery and tweeds, founded in 1811 as a hosiery manufacturers in the ‘Mid Raw’. The business moved after a few years to 14 Howegate, with a second stocking-shop in the Backdamgate. Their main factory was next to the Little Haugh (Teviot Crescent Mills), erected in 1834, with extensions built to produce tweed in 1841. A weir was built in the Teviot to channel water along beside Teviot Crescent to power the mill; this was Laidlaw’s Cauld. The firm then introduced piecing machines made by Melrose’s. They also made blankets in the 1840s. They were listed at Teviot Crescent Mills in 1852. From 1864 they purchased Lynnwood Mills and concentrated on yarn spinning and tweed manufacture, selling off their hosiery equipment in 1865. They also operated the Weensland spinning mill for several years after 1864. The family retired from business in 1908 although the company name carried on for a while, and was succeeded by George Wilson & Sons. The main mills were later demolished, although some photographs still exist to show how extensive they were. The Museum has company ledgers from 1926–32.

Laidlaw’s Cauld (laid-lawz-kawld) n. weir once stretching over the Teviot near the old Victoria Laundry, named after Laidlaw’s Mill nearby. It was built in about 1834 by Gideon Scott & Sons, and obliterated the piece of ground known as the Fairy Faulds. Traces of it in the form of undressed stones between wooden supports, can still be easily seen when the river is low. It was used to divert water through a mill lade, which ran alongside Teviot Crescent and through Teviot Crescent Mills, coming out opposite Dickson’s & Laing’s Mill; the open lade was filled in in 1914. A second branch ran to the foot of Croft Road and came out near the Henderson College (now Dovecote Mews). The rubble-built Cauld itself was largely removed after WWII. In earlier times there had been a ford near here, just upriver from the main Laidlawhope (laid-hup) n. former farm in Liddesdale, probably on the Laidlehope Burn. It is listed as ‘Ladlawhope’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 4 merks. On the 1541 rental roll it is ‘Ladilhope’ and still worth 4 merks, but vacant at that time. It is possible that this is the ‘Ladhope, of the laird of Howpaslettes lands called Scott’ which were burned by the Armstrongs in 1544 (although ‘Lairhope’ could be meant). It is probably the ‘Ladhop’ listed in 1632 among the lands in Liddesdale owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). In 1718 it was combined with Whitrope in the farm of Stitchilhill (it is ‘Ladhope’ in 1718).

Laidlaw Place (laid-law-plis) n. street marked incorrectly for Ladylaw Place on the 1897 Ordnance Survey map.

Laidlaw’s (laid-lawz) n. William Laidlaw & Sons, manufacturers of hosiery and tweeds, founded in 1811 as a hosiery manufacturers in the ‘Mid Raw’. The business moved after a few years to 14 Howegate, with a second stocking-shop in the Backdamgate. Their main factory was next to the Little Haugh (Teviot Crescent Mills), erected in 1834, with extensions built to produce tweed in 1841. A weir was built in the Teviot to channel water along beside Teviot Crescent to power the mill; this was Laidlaw’s Cauld. The firm then introduced piecing machines made by Melrose’s. They also made blankets in the 1840s. They were listed at Teviot Crescent Mills in 1852. From 1864 they purchased Lynnwood Mills and concentrated on yarn spinning and tweed manufacture, selling off their hosiery equipment in 1865. They also operated the Weensland spinning mill for several years after 1864. The family retired from business in 1908 although the company name carried on for a while, and was succeeded by George Wilson & Sons. The main mills were later demolished, although some photographs still exist to show how extensive they were. The Museum has company ledgers from 1926–32.
ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd. In the 19th century, when the river was frozen, there were sometimes curling matches played there. The Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men are shown crossing the Teviot near the Cauld in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding. It also features in the song ‘The Anvil Crew’ – ‘But when we came to Laidlaw’s Cauld, There a horde of pirates lay’ [WE].

Laidlaw Terrace (läd-law-te-ris) n. street constructed in 1888 along the south bank of the Teviot, off North Bridge Street. This involved building up the river-side, with the library being added at the top in 1904 (now Nos. 1 and 2). It was named after William Laidlaw & Sons, yarn spinners and tweed manufacturers, with the street essentially being built to provide accommodation for workers at Teviot Crescent Mills. The bottom of the street long had an undeveloped area used as a sawmill yard and later a builder’s yard, with an adjacent footpath along the riverside.

Laidlehope Burn (läd-lup-burn) n. stream that rises near Kilm Knowe, above the Slitrig’s headwaters, and flows south to join the Roughley Burn, not far from the Ninestane Rig. This is related to the farm of ‘Ladlawhope’ recorded in c.1376. Where the burn was crossed by the Waverley Line there was Laidlehope Culvert (it is written ‘Laidlerhope’ by Smail in 1880).

laif (läf) n., arch. a loaf – ‘A made a faissable mael oot o pie-soop, ... caalid flesh, picklit ingans, an nae skrimp o laif’ [ECS]. ‘Th’ breid in Glesca bein’ reduced a ha’penny th’ quarter laif’ [HEx1921], also used to distinguish bread from other baked goods – ‘Howt! A’m fair laif’ [HEx1921], also used to distinguish bread in Glesca bein’ reduced a ha’penny th’ quarter ingans, an nae skrimp o laif’ [ECS], ‘Th’ breid is written ‘Laidlerhope’ by Smail in 1880).

laif-breed (läf-breed) n., arch. loaf-bread, flour-based bread baked as loaves, as distinct from other baked goods such as oatcakes.

laigh (lä, lägh) adj., arch., poet. low – ‘... the said Francis Scott, his tenement of houses, high and laigh, back and fore, with the yeard and pertinent lying within the town and burg of Hawick’ [BR], ‘... set, let, or hire any of their houses, high or laigh, back or fore, to any families or person, strangers, whatsoever, without the first acquainting the present Magistrates ...’ [BR1699], ‘The first ae guide that they met wi’. It was high up in Hardhaughswire: The second guide that they met wi’. It was laigh down in Borthwick water’ [T], ‘Then Johnie let a spear fa’ laigh by his thigh, Fala, &c. laighest (lä-chist) adj., poet. lowest – ‘... an’ thou hest freet my saul frae the leich door-’ [HSR], ‘... an’ queerlie wroucht in the leachist pairts o’ the yirth’ [HSR].

laigishin (lä-gi-shin) n., arch. a large, cumbersome quantity (related to the local word for ‘legacy’).

laik (läk) adj., arch. lacking, wanting – ‘Thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scoir 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great teynd, 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scoir 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great teynd, laik ane firlot, and 20 libs of vicarage’ [PR1627].

Laik (läk) n. James (b.1740) son of Thomas, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. In 1785–91 he was listed as house servant at Wells, working for Gilbert Elliott. In 1785 his name was listed as ‘John’. In 1791 he was listed as a butler at Wells and in 1792, 1794 and 1797 as a house servant. His name was sometimes listed as ‘Luke’. He could be the James ‘Loch’ whose son Thomas was baptised in Southdean in 1774. Joshua (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was a gardener in Cavers. His children included Christian (b.1715) and Isobel (b.1717).

Rev. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in Billerwell in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Gledstains of Hillslesland. He was licensed as a minister by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1711 and presented to Southdean Parish in July 1716. However, the parishioners refused to sign the call in December and he ended up as minister at Longframlington, Northumberland. He was recorded in the Hawick Parish Session records of 1713 (presumably during a sermon) reminding parents to send their children to school, and also as a substitute in 1714 when Hawick’s minister was absent (also written ‘Laick’ and ‘Lake’ and probably the same as ‘Leck’).
Laing and Lailsell

Laing (lān, lān) n. Adam (1818/9–1900) Hawick stockmakerman apparently noted for his gentlemanly bearing. In 1851 he was at about 29 High Street and in 1861 was living at 5 Siltrig Bank. In 1844 he married Agnes (1824/5–1902), daughter of James Hogg, the writer of ‘Teribus’. They had 8 children: Jane (b.c.1845) or Jeanie, who married hosiery manufacturer James Renwick; James (1846/7–1909), grocer; Euphemia (1850/1–1918), who lived at Marlfield; Eliza (b.c.1853); Agnes (1855–1910) who married manufacturer Francis Elliot Wilson; Adam (b.1858), who died young; Christina Grey (b.1861), who married Alfred Warr, minister of Rosneath; and Jessie D. (b.1864), who married James White.

Lailsell (lāl-sel) n. former name for lands in the upper Siltrig valley. It is listed in 1607 along with ‘Carlinghall’ (probably Carlin Hole), ‘Brounshall’ (probably Broon’s Hill) and other lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. It may be a transcription error for somewhere more familiar.

Riding supporter and pushed for the resumption of the riding of the full marches at Pilmuir and the cutting of the sod ceremony. Sinton’s bibliography of Hawick-related works (which he helped to compile) states that he possessed a rare 3rd edition of James Hogg’s ‘Flodden Field and the Colour’, inserted inside of which was a manuscript of the tune as played by the town piper in 1777. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1786–1850) hosiery manufacturer. He was son of John and Agnes Donaldson, brother of David, father of Walter and grand-father of J.T. of Linden Park. He was in partnership with his brother in the early 19th century with premises where the Sandbed Store was later located. Originally they spun yarn on the hand jenny and operated a small hosiery business. However, they joined with the Dicksons in 1802 to form Dicksons & Laings. He is probably the ‘A. Laing’ whose property at Dovemount is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had the house Springbank built for him, above the main factory area. The family were Reform supporters of their day. In the 1834 electoral roll he and his brother David were listed as joint proprietors in the spinning mill. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as manufacturer at Wilton Mills. In the 1841 census he was living at Wilton Mills. His first wife was Ann (1789–1822), youngest daughter of Walter Wilson (and sister of skinner Thomas Wilson), who died in childbirth. Their surviving children were: and Ann (b.1811) who married John Elliot and moved to Massachusetts, U.S.A.; John (b.1812); and Walter (b.1820). He secondly married Janet, daughter of William Roger, who was his cousin (their mothers both Donaldsons being sisters). They had 2 surviving children: Margery Donaldson, who married William Brown from Galashiels and was mother of Alexander Laing Brown; and Alexander Brown (b.1829), who married Jane Dinwiddie. She was a widow living at Springbank in 1851 along with her son Alexander and 2 servants. Alexander (18th/19th C.) from Minto Parish. In 1826 he married Elizabeth Thomson from Jedburgh. Alexander ‘Allie’ (b.1829) son of manufacturer Alexander and his 2nd wife Janet Roger. He followed his father into woollen manufacturing. He was partner (with William Irving) in the firm Laing & Irving and lived at Ivybank. In the 1850s he was the Alexander (of Laing & Irvine) who was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He became a partner in Laing,
Laing

Michie & Graham and Laing & Gawn, which later merged to become Currie, Lee & Gawn. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianæ’. He is probably the Alex recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in about 1874. He married Jane Milligan (1844–1911), daughter of James Dinwiddie, who helped establish the hosiery industry in Dumfries. They had a large family, Alexander ‘Lal’ being the oldest son. Alexander James ‘Lal’ (b.1865) son of Alexander and Jane Milligan Dinwiddie. He was a prominent Hawick rugby forward from around 1883, being Captain of the Hawick team in 1888. He represented Roxburgh County and South of Scotland. He was known as a fast forward. He also played in the British team which first went to Australia in 1888. He emigrated to America shortly after this, married twice and had at least one daughter who visited Hawick a few times and died in Palm Springs. Andrew (b.1803/4) innkeeper of the Black Bull in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was gamekeeper at Ayton in Berwickshire. His wife was Isabella and their children included Jessy, Isabella, Thomas, Elizabeth, James, Helen, Robert and Margaret Ann. David of Westerkirk (d.bef. 1727). He married Katherine, eldest daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton in 1720. His widow later married Charles Telfer, Hawick’s minister and thirdly Robert Elliot of Fenwick. David (d.1781) mason in Hawick. He was probably the David, son of Walter, born in Hawick in 1710. In 1734 he and his men were paid for 6½ days’ work they did on the West Port. He was recorded as a mason in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness and as a wright in 1745 when he witnessed 2 baptisms. In 1752 he was paid ‘for pointing a hole on the steeple-head, and altering a crack’. He was among the men paid in 1755 ‘for the herd’s house building’. He witnessed a baptism for John Richardson in 1772. He is probably the mason David who (along with mason Walter, likely his son) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his other son). He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason John (possibly his son). He was deceased when his mason son Walter died in 1798. He married Helen Wallace and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Walter (b.1733); Ann (b.1735); Janet (b.1737); Helen (b.1739); Jean (b.1742); John (b.1744); and James (b.1746). It is possible he was also father of Robert (b.c.1748) and Hannah (b.c.1750), who married Andrew Hunter. The witnesses in 1742 were Robert Pringle, Excise Officer and wright Robert Pringle. He could be the David who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. His death is recorded in 1781 as ‘Auld David Laing Mason’. David (1782–1840) son of John, he was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He was originally in partnership with his brother Alexander and later as part of Dicksons & Laings of Wilton Mills. He was Cornet in 1805. He lived at No. 1 Wilton Bank, which was probably the same place as Springbank. He was one of the first members of Hawick Curling Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Janet, daughter of John Fiddes in Hobkirk Parish in 1811; she died in Glasgow in 1868, aged 79. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1812); John (b.1814), draper; Agnes (b.1816); Helen (b.1819); Jemima (b.1824); and James Robert (b.1827). 3 of their daughters moved to Workworth, Northumberland. His widow was living on Wilton Bank in 1841, along with Helen, Jemima, James and a servant. In 1851 Janet was living on the Howegate with Jemima and James. He died at Springbank and is buried at St. Mary’s. David (19th C.) Bailie of the 1820s and 1830s. He went to Jedburgh along with 70 special constables to help keep the peace in the election of 1831. He may have been the same man as manufacturer David. After the election of 1832 he released a prisoner in Hawick (by the name of Scott) who had been accused of disorderly conduct and assault. This led to complaints on behalf of the Duke of Buccleuch and others. He is probably the ‘D. Laing’ whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map, on the middle of the north side of the Sandbed. Donald McLeod (b.c.1898) son of Thomas Alexander and Agnes Brown. He enlisted in the army in 1914 when he was probably only about 16. After WWI he worked on rubber plantations in Malaya. He married his cousin, Margery Haddon. George (1883–1947) son of manufacturer John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was educated at home and in Eastbourne, along with his brothers Walter, Ivan and Maurice. He farmed at Nikuyu in Kenya. Gilbert (d.1777) son of Walter, he became a merchant in St. Petersburg. His brother was William of Meikledale and his sister Margaret married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He also had a nephew ‘Watty’ Scott, who spent some time in St. Petersburg, but returned to Scotland in ruin. He suffered strokes in the late 1770s and died in Russia. He married Elizabeth Catherine Gardner in 1765. Some of the witnesses in 1742 were Robert Pringel, Excise Officer and wright Robert Pringle. He could be the David who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. His death is recorded in 1781 as ‘Auld David Laing Mason’. David (1782–1840) son of John, he was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Catherine Gardner in 1765. Some of his correspondence is in the National Archives, labelled 'I desire my son William not to burn these letters till he has leisure to read them all over'.

Ivan (1885–1917) 3rd son of John Turnbull and Anna Drummond Thomson. Born at Springbank (before it was the Haig Maternity Hospital), he was educated at home by a governess and at New College, Eastbourne, as well as in Belgium. When he returned to Hawick he lived at Ashleigh in East Stewart Place. Well-known as an athlete, he excelled at swimming, played three-quarter (wing) for Hawick R.F.C. and also played for the Teviotdale (mixed) hockey team. By some lucky chance he ended up playing for Scotland (with the home nations having separate hockey teams) in the 1908 London Olympics. The story goes that he was spotted on the platform by the other members of the team when their train passed through Hawick and convinced by a sporting friend, Dr. Norman Stevenson, to join the team. How much truth there is in this version is unknown (since a team sheet published the week before the game shows his name), but it certainly makes for a dramatic story! He played in 2 games, scoring the first ever Olympic goal in hockey (against Germany, which is ironic, given the events of a few years later). The official match report reads ‘At the beginning of the game Scotland attacked, and from a pass by Stevenson, Laing quickly scored the first goal’. That first game took place at Shepherd’s Bush stadium, months after the rest of the Games had finished. In the second game they were defeated by England. The team refused to play Wales for the 3rd place play-off (all in the same day!), and he apparently returned to Hawick on the overnight train. However, he never again represented Scotland at hockey. He went into partnership with his father in 1908, their hosiery business being Drummond & Laings, Wilton Path. This was later taken over by Innes-Henderson’s, with whom he remained until enlisting in the War effort. In 1915 he joined the 28th Battalion of the London Regiment, the ‘Artists’ Rifles’, and was then gazetted into the Coldstream Guards. He was awarded the Military Cross at the Somme in 1916. But he was killed by machine gun fire when his unit were taking Gouzeacourt. Another tragic casualty of WWI, he is buried in Metz-en-Couture cemetery in France. In 2008, to commemorate the Olympic goal centenary, the Archeological Society commissioned Hamish Smith to make a trophy to be competed for annually by girls versus boys teams at the High School. Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate. His 1672 will is in the National Archives (but he appears to have died significantly later). He was related to the Laing family who were later Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch and owned land at the Flex, Burnfoot-on-Ale and elsewhere. He was a Bailie during the 1660s and 70s. He could be the James recorded as one of the owners of West Mains in 1663. He was Bailie in 1668 when the Council made a decree to support the breaking of illegal dykes on the Common. He may be the James who was Bailie in 1670/1, and whose brother William was farmer at Earlside. He is recorded as an ex-Bailie in a sasine of 1687 when his son Walter was witness to a sasine in Hawick. He could be the James, married to Helen Elliot, whose son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1653.

James (17th C.) tenant in Earlside. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He was probably son of William, who was tenant in Earlside and transported for being a Covenanter. James (18th C.) hedger in Abbotrule, recorded in 1785. James Robert (b.1827) son of David and Janet Fiddes. He was a draper on the Howegate. In the 1851 census he was at about 2 Howegate, living with his widowed mother and his sister Jemima, as well as George Webster and a servant. His draper’s partnership with Webster is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. It appears that he moved to London, where the business expanded, become a general warehousing firm. He later became partner in Paterson, Laing and Bruce, registered in London and Melbourne. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of Robert Fiddes of London. He had a son James Robert (d.1916), and a daughter Jane Tulloch Fiddes. He is probably the James Robert of 27 Earl’s Court Square, London, who died in 1898. James (b.c.1847) only surviving son of Adam Laing and Agnes Hogg. He was grandson of James Hogg of ‘Teribus’ fame, and erected the gravestone to the memory of his parents and grandparents in Old Wilton Cemetery in 1909, replacing an older stone. He was a grocer in Hawick, being foreman in the business of Mungo Wilson on Silver Street, and later taking over. After his death the shop was acquired by Oliver and Thomas Mason Hardie. John (d.1483) from the Laings of Redhouse near Edinburgh, he held minor benefices and acted as secretary to Mary of Gueldres in the JOHN (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Lane’ on a list of tenants at Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (17th C.) piper who was on a list of 16 local men named in 1627 by the Hawick Bailie as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. His surname is written ‘Leing’. John of Westerkirk (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696 when he was on the Commission of Supply for Dumfriesshire. His children included: Walter, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Selkirkshire; John, Chamberlain in Liddesdale, who held lands at the Flex; Helen, who married James Grieve, tenant at Toshawhaugh; and another daughter who married Ogilvie of Brieryards. John (d.c.1780) son of John of Westerkirk and brother of Walter. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Liddesdale in the period 1730–66. He also acted as ‘factor loco tutoris’, i.e. in place of one of the young Duke’s guardians for business in Teviotdale around 1756. In 1736 he rented ‘Stitchelhill and Leyes’ in Liddesdale from the Duke of Buccleuch. He lived at ‘The Roan’ and held lands at the Flex. He paid the window tax at Roan in Castleton Parish in 1748. He is recorded in 1774 writing from the Flex to his niece Meg (or Margaret) Elliot at Borthwickbrae, regarding the debts of Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He is also described as ‘of Burnfoot’ (probably in Ale Water); he was so recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761 and on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. The Elliots of Borthwickbrae eventually came to possess the lands of Flex and Old Melrose through this marriage to his niece. In 1777 he gained about 7 Scots acres of Hawick Common in the Division. John (18th C.) house servant at Wells in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Nassau Elliot. John (1744–1816) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. In 1781 he married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Donald (also listed as Donaldson), and she died in about 1824. They had 9 children, including: David (b.1782), manufacturer in Hawick; Agnes (b.1783); Alexander (b.1786), who married his cousin Janet Roger; Helen (b.1788); Walter (b.1790); John (b.1792); James (b.1799). The witnesses in 1790 were masons Walter and David (probably his brother and father) and in 1792 were wright William Roger (who also married a Donald) and mason David (probably his father). An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1798. He may be the John from Hawick recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. He may be the John who was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He conveyed all his property to his eldest son David, with the condition that he should pay £100 in rentals to his third son Walter a year after his death, or alternatively to give Walter half of the property of his ‘opposite to the West Pant-Well of Hawick’; because David ended up liable for his debts, but the other children renounced their claims, but still expected a share of money from this arrangement, it led to a dispute between the 2 brothers in court in 1829. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1799 his apprentice Thomas Thomson was on the ballot in Hawick for the Militia. He was a mason from Hawick who worked on Stobs Castle around 1800 and who helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. This may be the same mason who died at Doveshaughbraehead in 1824, aged 57 and whose wife Isabella Hunter died in Hawick in 1841, aged 69; this family are buried in Bedrule churchyard. He may be the Hawick mason whose unnamed child died in 1798. He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason David. John (1812–76) hosiery manufacturer of the mid-19th century. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson. He was partner along with his father in Dicksons & Laings from an early age. But after his father’s death he went into business for himself at 8 and 9 Slitrig Crescent, the firm being named John Laing & Sons; it survived until 2006. He is listed as a merchant in Hawick among heads of households in Wilton Parish for 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was living at 18 Buccleuch Street and listed as a manufacturer of woollen hosiery, employing 28 men and 14 women. He was the first to introduce power frames into Hawick in 1858, and was... also an early promoter of the use of merino wool. He was the first President of the Hawick Bowling Club. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Mary, 7th daughter of Thomas Anderson of Kirkcudbright, and she died in 1892, aged 68. Their children were: Alexander and Mary Marion (buried in Menton Cemetery, France), who did not reach adulthood; John Hugh Alexander, a doctor in Edinburgh; Janetta McNaught; Thomas Anderson, manufacturer; Patrick Anderson (b.1853), also manufacturer; and Samuel James Anderson (b.1861). He died at Slitrig House. A portrait of him exists. John (b.1814) son of David and Janet Fiddes, he worked as a draper and later was a hosier and coal merchant. He was cousin of John, the hosier manufacturer. His draper’s firm is recorded on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived at about 55 High Street in 1841 and 49 High Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet, and their children included James, Ellen, David and William. John (b.1817/8) from Bedrule, son of John, he was a boot-maker in Hawick. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the High Street. In 1851 he was at about 29 High Street. In 1861 he is recorded at 10 High Street, and employed 8 men. John Turnbull (1854–1913) local manufacturer, son of Walter and Euphemia Turnbull. He was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He was prominent in local politics in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and lived at Linden Park. He was also on the original committee of Hawick Bowling Club, and President in the 1860s. He married Anna Drummond (1855–1931), 2nd daughter of Dr. George Thomson. Their sons were Walter, George, Ivan and Maurice Wyville. For several years the family held an annual New Year’s day mixed hockey match against the Grieves of Braxholme Park. Kenneth Joseph Price (b.1890) son of manufacturer Patrick. He married his cousin Florence Laing. He rode motorbikes in WWI until he learned to fly, becoming a pilot with the RAF in 1918, where he is credited as an ace with 5 victories. He is said to have been the first person to fly over Hawick. He was wounded in a motorcycle accident while on leave in 1918. He later worked as an engineer with John Melrose & Sons and lived well into his 90s. Marjory (17th C.) said to have thrown stones at dragoons at a conventicle held on Ruberslaw and then taken to Edinburgh Castle. This is based on a story told by Andrew Haddon. She may have been from Earlside, like William, a Covenanter fugitive. However, it is unclear if she ever existed and may be a fiction based on a name given in a poem about the Killing Times by the Ettrick Shepherd. Marjory (17th C.) grandmother of Andrew Haddon of Honeyburn. She was said to have been named after an ancestor from Earlside who threw stones at dragoons at a conventicle. Maurice (1885–1955) son of John Turnbull and Anna Thompson. He was younger brother of Walter, George and Ivan. He was a successful district hockey player and later South selector. He served with the Royal Field Artillery in WWI and became Captain. He married Sheila Brown of Galashiel (unrelated to the other Browns who had married into this family). They had one son (who worked at the Cape Observatory) and several daughters. Norman Hugh Anderson (b.1888) son of manufacturer Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price, i.e. one of the ‘Balcary Laings’. He was a farmer at Cleuchhead. He married Cissy, daughter of Dr. George Gunn Bannerman. Their children included: George; Patrick, who received the Military Cross in WWII and set up the haulage firm P.A. Laing; and Drummond, who moved to Cape Town, South Africa. Patrick Anderson (1853–1921) son of John and Mary Anderson. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Thomas. He lived at Balcary. He married Florence ‘Fanny’ Elizabeth (who was born in Chicago), daughter of Joseph Price of Clapham Common. She was sister of Mrs. Robert Pringle of Wood Norton, and died in 1917, aged 54. Their children were Patrick Lindsay Price (Major with the K.O.S.B. in WWI), Norman Hugh Anderson (farmer at Cleuchhead), Kenneth Joseph Price (engineer with Melrose’s) and Margaret Frances Lindsay (married Isaac Grey Wallis). This branch of the family were known as the ‘Balcary Laings’. Patrick Lindsay Price (b.1886) eldest son of Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price. He was a Major in the K.O.S.B. and was awarded the Military Cross in WWI. He commanded ‘C’ Company in the Battle of Romani in 1916, securing the Suez Canal, and receiving the Order of the Nile from the Sultan of Egypt. Patrick Anderson (20th C.) from the Balcary Laings, son of Norman. He served with the 51st Highland Division at Dunkirk and later transferred to the Reconnaissance Corps. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1945. He set up the haulage firm P.A. Laing. in 1955. He married Shirley, daughter of Hawick lawyer Guy H. Armstrong. There children were Hugh and Lucinda Steen. Robert

Robert (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Bennet in Hawick in 1656. Robert (18th C.) footman at Minto House in 1788, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Thomas Anderson (1851–1920) son of manufacturer John and grandson of Alexander. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Patrick. He was Honorary Treasurer of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He lived at Netherwood and Langlee. He married Agnes Eliza Douglas Brown from Kirkcudbrightshire (who died in 1933); she was sister of Esther Brown who married M.P. Alexander Laing Brown. They had a family of 11, including a daughter (who married Charles W. Grieve of Branxholme Park), Donald McLeod (who married his cousin, Margery Haddon), and Florence (who married her cousin Kenneth). This branch were known as the ‘Netherwud Laings’. Walter (17th C.) son of Bailie James. He was witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1687. Probably the same Walter witnessed a baptism in 1687. He is likely to be the merchant and listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is possible he was a witness to a baptism for Andrew Angus in Hawick Parish in 1678. Walter (1649/50–1736) son of John of Westerkirk. He was a ‘writer’ in Edinburgh. From 1717 he was Chamberlain to Francis, Duke of Buccleuch, covering Eckford, Lempitlaw and Langton (as well as Ettrick Forest for part of this period) and being based at Newark. He served in this function until 1734, being succeeded by William, probably his son. In 1716 he is ‘clerk to ye Duchess of Buccleugh’ and ‘Tenent of Park’ when his ‘servitor’ Walter Little married Janet Soon. He married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Alexander Johnstone of Elshiesheills about 1713. His sons were probably William, Gilbert and James. His eldest daughter Violet married David Scott, tenant at Carterhaugh and his 2nd daughter Marion married John Laing, farmer at Westerkirk (and surely a relative) about 1750. Another daughter, Margaret, married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae (and through her the Elliots of Borthwickbrae would come into possession of her uncle John’s lands of Flex, Old Melrose, etc.). He died at Todshawhaugh, home of his brother-in-law James Grieve. Walter (b.1680) son of William and Jane Thorbrand. He is probably the Walter who married Janet Bruntfield, and had children Elspeth (b.1703) and David (b.1710). Only his wife witnessed the baptisms, since he was forbidden from attending because of the scandal he caused by getting his niece (Agnes Scott) pregnant, having the child over the Border and then pressuring her and others to swear that there was no bastard child. The witnesses in 1703 were weaver Robert Tinlin and glover James Burn. Walter (d.1764) probably son of Walter, he was also sometimes Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch at Newark. It is said that he was given the position after risking his life to save some papers for the Scotts of Buccleuch at Dalkeith House. His eldest daughter Margaret married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1764, and she later inherited the lands of Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot. He had a son Gilbert who became a merchant in St. Petersburg and another son, William of Meikledale. James may have been another son. His relationship with John (also a Chamberlain to Buccleuch) is unclear. Walter (d.1798) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. He is probably the son of David and Helen Wallace born in Hawick in 1733. He is probably the mason Walter who (along with mason David, likely his father) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his brother). Walter (b.c.1790) farmer at Denholmhill. He is probably also the builder in Denholm, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He acquired Denholmhill farm in about 1818 and expanded the quarrying, which had been started by the Fergusons and the Littles. He opened up the eastern (white) quarry and the western (red) one. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was still alive in 1851, but dead before 1861. His son Walter took over the farm and quarry. Walter (b.1819/9) son of Walter. He took over the farm of Denholmhill and the quarry there. In 1861 he was farming 520 acres, employing 26 people on the farm, and also tenant of the quarries, employing 37 masons and 26 labourers. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, Christina, Thomas, Adam and Helen. Walter (1820–1895) manufacturer of Laing & Irvine’s and later of Dicksons & Laings. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson and... brother of John. He carried on with the firm after his brother John split off to form John Laing & Sons. He lived at Springbank and later Linden Park. He was a member of the new Town Council who argued for continued Council involvement in the Common Riding in the 1860s. He was also one of the founders of the Working Men’s Building & Investment Co., and its Chairman from 1890–95. In addition he was on the School Board and became Chairman of the Science and Technical School in Hawick, as well as the School of Art. A Liberal in politics, he was President of the Hawick Advanced Liberal Association. He married Euphemia Turnbull, who died in 1895. They had a large family, but all except John Turnbull died before reaching adulthood. Walter (1882–1959) son of John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was brother of Maurice, Ivan and George. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and served in the Coldstream Guards. There is a letter from him to his brother Maurice, bringing the news of Ivan’s death on the front. He married Joan Gotto from Belfast and had 2 children. He died in County Down. William (17th C.) tenant in Earlside, brother of James, who was Bailie in Hawick. He was tried in 1678 for being a Covenanter supporter, the accusations including that he was ‘present at divers house and field conventicles, kepted at Lilsliemuir, Hassendeanmuir, Blackriddelhill, or about or near the said places, where he has heard John Welsh, Samuel Arnot, Mr. G. Semple, Mr. Riddell, Mr. Robert Traill, Mr. George Johnstone, Mr. John Blackater, Mr. David Williamson, and divers other declared rebels’, as well as being a local ringleader and resetting rebels. Refusing to give up any names, to pay the 500 mark fine or accept Episcopalianism, he was sentenced to be deported to the slavery plantations in Virginia. After 3 months in jail, he was sent on a prison ship from Leith to Gravesend. However, the person in charge of them could not find Ralph Williamson, who was to keep them in prison until the transport ship was available and so they were set free in London. Like many of the others (including Alexander Peden), he probably made it back to Scotland. He is listed among those declared fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’ in 1684; he was then recorded being ‘in Hawick’. Their crime was ‘rebellion and reset of rebels’, meaning religious non-conformity following the re-introduction of Episcopalianism. On this second occasion he did not escape, but was among 32 men who were transported to Carolina, subject to great hardship on the journey and then after arrival, so that only 6 returned after the Revolution. Local tradition says that he died on the journey and his body was thrown overboard. He may be the William ‘Lyng’ whose widow was recorded on the Hearth Tax lists, listed after the house of Earlside in 1694. He might be the William on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Hamilton in Hawick in 1673 and another for William Welch (or ‘Wetch’) in 1675. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Scott (who probably lived in the Borthwick valley) in 1676, as well as for Rev. Patrick Cunningham in 1680. It is said that he had a brother James in Hawick. The James who was tenant in Earlside in 1683 may have been his son. Bailie William (17th/18th C.) Hawick Councillor recorded in 1683 and 1684, who was Bailie in 1685 and in 1697. He may be the William in Hawick (married, aged 28) who gave evidence in 1681 in the trial of Covenanters who hd attacked Drumlanrig’s Tower. In 1685, along with Walter Scott, he had permission from the Council to be reimbursed for the costs of building the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s, suggesting that he was Bailie around the time of construction. In 1688 and 1700 he witnessed baptisms for merchant John Scott ‘Whiteyetts’ and he witnessed another for Robert Hogg in Weensland in 1688 He was ‘late balyeaa’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘Win Laing laite Bailyea’ who paid tax for 4 hearths on the west-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694; this suggests that he lived in a large house. He is probably the William who, along with ‘Mr James’ witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1700 for glover James Scott. He was ‘balyie’ when he witnessed a baptism in 1686 for schoolmaster John Purdom and ‘late Bailie’ in 1700 when witnessing a baptism for the same man. He also witnessed baptisms for shoemaker John Scott in 1708, for wigmaker John Scott, for glover James Scott and for tailor John Scott in 1709, for smith Thomas Huntly in 1714, and for miller Robert Elliot and for William Ogilvie (who married his daughter) in 1718. He could be the same ex-Bailie who in 1721 gave the excuse that he could not mount the ‘pillar’ of repentance in the Kirk because he was ‘valetudinarie and troubled with an uneasiness in his hough and feet’; the Session allowed him instead to pay a fine and be rebuked in his usual pew; it is unclear what his transgression was.
Laing an Irvine’s

In 1716, 1718 and 1721 he witnessed baptisms for John Ekron. He was probably the William born in Hawick in 1652/3, son of James and Helen Elliot. This William married Jane Thorbrand (probably daughter of Bailie James), and their children were: James (b.1676); Jane (b.1678); Walter (b.1680), who married Jane Brutfield; David (b.1681); Margaret (b.1684), who married James Gledstains; Helen (b.1686), married a Grieve; Anna (b.1688), who married John Watson, Clerk to the Regality and then John Scott in 1724; John (b.1689); and Martha (b.1690), who married William Ogilvie. The witnesses in 1676 were William Elliott of Stobs and Thomas Scott of Whitslade, suggesting that he had some standing in the Town at that time. The witnesses in 1689 were William Scott, grover and Mr John Purdom and in 1688 were James Scott and Robert Wright. In 1720 he was ‘late bailie of Hawick’ when he and Isobel Tait were recorded as ‘Fornicators’ when their daughter Mary was baptised. He is probably the William ‘Lang’ mentioned in 1735 when the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate, which was to the west of his, which by then belonged to James Scott. William (1715/6–74) Chamberlain to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He had a house on the Fore Row, referred to as ‘the Chamberlain’s Hoose’. He may also have been related to the William who, in the 1720s, owned a small corn farm and yard to the north (i.e. in Wilton Parish) of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed. He succeeded as Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest in 1735, taking over from Walter, probably his father; he served in this capacity until 1766. He was recorded in a Selkirk libel case in 1737. His brother was James, and he must also have been related to John, who was Chamberlain for Liddesdale (probably his uncle). Gilbert was probably another brother. Hudshouse (in Castleford Parish) was rented to him and his brother by the Buccleuch estates in 1742. In 1750 he purchased the lands of Meikledale from William Scott. He left these lands to his nephew, William Elliot Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) tenant of Sinton Mains. In 1813 he brought a case against John Smith, carter in Selkirk, claiming that Smith had taken his cart and harness when they were with an innkeeper in Edinburgh (also spelled ‘Lainge’, ‘Layng’, ‘Laynge’ and ‘Leing’ in earlier documents).

Laing an Irvine’s (lāŋ-an-in-vinz) n. wholesale tweed merchants of the 19th century, with their main factory built in 1856 at the corner of Commercial Road and Bath Street. They were effectively an offshoot of Dicksons & Laings, being tweed manufacturers and later tweed merchants. For a while they operated out of Stonefield Mill. They also had a mill in Peebles. At the 1867 Paris Exposition the firm gained a bronze medal as a manufacturer of cloth. They went bankrupt in 1868, and the building later had many uses. They also traded at 26 High Street, which was sometimes called ‘Irvine’s Close’. The partners were Alexander (‘Allie’) Laing and William Irvine. The company partially reformed as Irvine, Griersson & Stevenson. There were also later firms of Laing, Michelle & Graham and Laing & Gawn, which merged into Currie, Lee & Gawn.

Laing Terrace (lāŋ-te-ris) n. short street off Dovemount Place, built in 1872, and named after the Laings of Dicksons & Laings. It was essentially built to provide nearby housing for workers at Wilton Mills.

lains (lānz) n., pl., poet. loins – ‘For my lains ar fillet wi’ foulsome desese, an’ ther is nae sundness in my flesch’ [HSR], ‘Let thair eyne be derkenet that thaye seena, an’ let thair lains contivallie shak’’ [HSR].

laip (läp) v., arch. to lap – ‘A dog or cat licks or laps (= laps) milk, etc.’ [ECS], ‘...the cuill, silver Teiot, where it laippeet bye leafy Mon-teviot’ [ECS], ‘The dog’s laipin’ a’ the kitlin’s milk’ [GW] (also written ‘lape’).

laipie-luggit (lā-pee-li-gee’, -gi’) adj., arch. lop-eared, having prominent or protruding ears (also ‘laipy-luggiet’ etc.; noted by E.C. Smith).

lair (lār) n., arch. a place of shelter for livestock – ‘Three lambs I hae on Crawbrae lair Will no be worth a benty-strae’ [HSR], a final resting place, burial plot v., arch. to drive livestock to an enclosure – ‘That part of the Common called the west end of the little Bailie Hill, where Mungo Armstrong used to lair the black cattle under the charge in the middle of the day’ [C&L] (from Middle English; the word exists in several local place names, e.g. Cherry Lair, Dinnmont Lair, Ewelair Hill, Lairhope, Lairs, Lamb Blair Edge, Lamblair Hill, Lamblair Knowe, Lamblairs, Marklair and Nolt-lair).

lair (lār) n., arch. learning, education, lore – ‘...Left him scarce ane, nor durst he cock His trusty gennet; for girt fo’k Had now found out by college lair, That God had giv’n them ilka hare’ [JR], ‘As little can lair make a weak mind produce strong thoughts’ [JoHa], ‘Yet though I canna dive into the deeps, Not ‘natomise the joints o’ classic lair …’[JoHa], ‘…an’ yow that has schule lair an’ awquant wi’ sae muckle new licht o’ things they hae fund oot noo-a-days aboot the sterns an’ sae an’ sae’ [BCM1880] (also lear).

laird (lard) n. a landowner, landed proprietor, nobleman, lord – ‘For here’s the laird’s Jock, the laird’s Wat, And Hobie Noble, come to set thee free’ [CPM], ‘I envy not the laird his wealth, the lord o’ his degree …’ [JoHa], ‘My father was laird o’ a weel stockit maullin’’ [JT], ‘Says the auld laird ‘We’ll hae nae crap This drookit year’’ [WL], ‘There was no belly-crawling dedication to some laird who had promised to take a dozen copies’ [DH] (also sometimes capitalised; in Scotland the word was applied to the owner of a estate of any size and hence is closer to the English ‘squire’ than ‘lord’).

Laird (lard) n. nickname of James Scott, the first recorded Cornet. Thomas and Robert Scott are both recorded in 1693/4 with the same nickname, suggesting perhaps that they were all related, as well as an earlier James recorded in 1676. John Chisholme also had this same nickname in 1712. There are other similar nicknames, e.g. ‘the Blue Laird’, ‘the Black Laird’, ‘the Duddie Laird’ and ‘the Muckle Laird’. Many of these may have been Hilliesland ‘Lairds’, i.e. local men who kept fields up beyond the Vellowgate, or elsewhere around Hawick. When a landowner had a grown son they would often be the ‘Auld Laird’ and ‘Young Laird’. In earlier centuries it was common for the sons of a major landowner to be known as ‘the Laird’s Wat’, ‘the Laird’s Jock’, etc.

the Laird (thu-lard) n. nickname of the 18th and early 19th centuries, commonly given to men with some property, e.g. William Laidlaw, even small fields, e.g. the Hilliesland Lairds. It may also be that the name was used jocularly or ironically. A person called ‘John ye Laird’ was one of the poor of the Parish who is recorded receiving some of the collection in 1711 and ‘Wat the Laird’ was recorded around 1800.

lairdship (lard-ship) n. state of being a laird, territory and rights of a laird – ‘…and the said lairdship of Coklaw to cum to the airis famail of the said James …’ [SB1519].

Laird’s Knowe (lardz-now) n. small hill on Craik Moor, just to the north of the old Roman road. The stream to the north-east is Laird’s Cleuch Sike. It is unclear which Laird gave his name to these features.

the Laird’s Wat (thu-lardz-waw) n. popular name for Walter Scott of Goldielands – ‘…And the laird Watt, that worthy man, Brought in his surname, weil be’t seen’ [CPM].

lairge (lardj) adj. large – ‘…aw just went rum-maging aboot, an’ then aw saw a lairge fire, an’ made ma way towards it’ [JHH].

lairge (lardj) adv., arch. boastfully (this meaning peculiar to Roxburghshire), adj., arch. boastful, bombastic, copious, full – ‘…and obligt that the sd. persones shall give satisfactione to ye kirke as orthodox and largie’ [BR1689].

lairgeness (lardj) n. largeness, arch. generosity, largesse – ‘The discriptionyne of Valter Scot of Govdilandys his qualitities. . . . Heir lys brevte lair-genes & lavtie . . .’ [MI1596]. the side road from Teviothead at Bowanhill. The Lairhope Burn passes here

lairger (lar-jur) adj. larger – ‘Wee, neither tae hand not tae bin’ was the wife! She domned her best bonnet, an’ lairger than life . . .’ [BM1900].

Lairhope (lär-hop, lär-rup) n. former farm above Falnash on the Lairhope Burn, with a small loch nearby. The track here used to be (before about the mid-18th century) part of an alternative road from the south towards Hawick, crossing over to the upper Borthwick valley via Old Howpasley. The main lands were originally ‘Lairs’, with the ‘hope’ being attached, and later the base name being lost. It may be the ‘laris’ where Robert Turnbull was recorded in 1493 and ‘Robertus Scot in Laris’ is recorded in 1501. It seems likely to be the ‘towne callid Ladduppe in Tyvidaill, of the Larde of Howpesleis callid Scot’ which was burned by a band of Armstrongs in 1543/4. Matthew Little was tenant there in 1576. Hob Armstrong was there in 1586/7. Patrick Nichol was there in 1618 and Andrew Armstrong in 1623. It was valued in 1627, paying ‘50 lb., vicarage 10 lb.’, listed along with Chisholme and Parkhill. Walter Scott of Newton was owner in 1678, when it was valued at £266 13s 4d. It is listed along with ‘Lares’ in the list for the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. Janet Grieve was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. James Hislop was there in 1698. James Nichol was tenant there in 1705 and John Nichol was herd in 1711. The farm was purchased by the Buccleuch estates from the trustees of Elliot of Fenwick around 1756, when it was referred to as the ‘5 merkland of old extent of Lairhope Burn

Lairs alias Lairhope’. James Renwick was there in 1786. In 1788 and 1811 it is ‘Larehope’ when valued at £266 13s 4d as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. John Anderson was shepherd there in the mid-19th century, George Rutherford in 1841 and Walter Elliot in 1851 and 1861. On the south-east slope of Lairhope Braes are the foundations of several buildings and enclosures of unknown age, probably a township by the side of the former main road (it is probably the ‘Larishop’ of 1500, and is ‘Lairhowp’ in 1576, ‘Lairhoip’ in 1618 and 1623, ‘Laireshope’ in 1686, ‘Larehope’ in 1698 and ‘Lairhope’ in 1711; it is marked ‘Lairhoop’ on Blair’s 1654 map; ‘lair’ is Scots for a place where animals sheltered).

Lairhope Braes (lā-rupt-brāz) n. hilly slope just to the west of Lairhope, in the headwaters of the Teviot. The name presumably derives from being a slope on the old road that used to pass from here to the top of the Borthwick valley via Howpasley.

lairn (lārn) v. to learn – ‘she gien thum a bible verse ti lairn every night’, ‘A lairded eet fri ma fither’, ‘…gie me understan’in’, that I may leærn thy commandments’ [HSR], ‘‘Gin I hadna traivelled,’ the first ane said, ‘I had never lairned.’ ‘Gin I hadna my buiks,’ quo the second ane, ‘I had naething aired’’ [WL], to teach – ‘that skelpin lairned um aa right’, ‘This day Mr John Purdom gave in ane account of poor scholar’s quarter wages … and other three in the end of the account are set down, whom he learned gratis’ [PR1712], ‘Ye glowerin’ idiot. That’ll lairn ye tae glower at me’ [JEDM], ‘…Lairnin hunders o Hawick rugby boys The basics o the game’ [IWL].

lairnt (lārnt) pp. learned – ‘…And mony generations syne, Cauldrife, I should hae lairnt to care’ [DH], ‘…that’s where he Lairnt about the world’ [IWL], ‘And the thing that makes oo spacial Is oo speak in oor ain way. And now that oo hae lairnt ee. Ee can dae eet tae’ [IWL] (also written ‘lairned’).

Lairs (lārz) n. original name for lands that were later known as Lairhope. Robert Turnbull ‘in laris’ was recorded in 1493. It was owned by George Scott in 1501, with some dispute over whether it had been historically held ‘in blanch farm’ or ‘by ward and relief’, from the superior, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. Robert Scott was also recorded as tenant there in 1501. The lands of ‘Laires and Laireshope’ are listed among lands owned by Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686, so they were separate at one point (it is ‘Laris’ in 1501; see also Lairhope and Larristofts).

laishur (lā-shur) n. leisure (also formerly leasur).

lait (lāt) v., arch. to allure, entice (noted as an old Teviotdale word by J. Jamieson).

laith (lāth) adj. loath – ‘…An’, wi’ a look that seems to say, ‘I’m laith’, ‘Trys them with fire …’ [JoHa], ‘I’m sure I’m neither laith nor lazy, Though my auld banes be stiff and crazie’ [JoHa], ‘To hurt the creatures I’ll be laith, Gar but the owner pay the skaith’ [JR], ‘I was be laith to advise ye to aught that’s no for your wealfare’ [JTe], ‘To injure you I would be laith, So hide not thou thy horns frae me …’ [TCh], ‘Bit nae man can tether tieme nor teide,’ an, sweer drawn an laith the A was …’ [ECS], ‘…Ilk feathered songster’s laith to gang Frae the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA], ‘Sae, naething laith, hei drank it slowly doon …’ [DH], ‘Aw tell o’ the day that Scobie was laith …’ [MB].

laithly (lāth-lee) adj., poet. loathsome, horrible – ‘Aboon the aizles’ dying gleid, The laithly kerlyn playin away’ [IA] (common througout Scotland).

Laldie (lawl-dee) n. a thrashing, particularly in the phrase ‘gie it laldie’, which figuratively means to give it one’s all, perform a task with full energy – ‘…several of the band we’re givin it laldie, playin away’ [IA] (common througout Scotland).
Lamb (lawm) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish. He married Bessie Laidlaw and their twins James and Janet were baptised in Hawick in 1689. The witnesses were William Swan and Patrick Bridges. Adam (d.1808) weaver in Hawick, son of weaver John. Perhaps the same Adam married Janet Linton in Hawick in 1778 and had a daughter Isabel baptised in Hawick in 1779. He may also be the Adam who married Agnes Hogg (also from Hawick) in 1794. Adam (1826–1913) born in Hawick, son of John and Elizabeth. He trained as a thongmaker, but then emigrated to Galt, Ontario, later moving to MacGregor, Manitoba, where he was among the first settlers. He firstly married Janet Gibb, and secondly married Mary Queen. His children included Robert E. (1862–1932). Adam (b.1832/3) born in Hawick, he was a framework knitter. In 1861 he was living at 2 Kirk Wynd. His wife was Ann, from Wilton. Agnes ‘Bonnie Aggie’ (19th/20th C.) seller of confectionary in Hawick. She is believed to have been the originator of the recipe for Hawick Balls. She may have started in Needle Street and then moved to Commercial Road, where she was in business with Jessie McVittie. She certainly had a shop at 31 Drumlanrig Square for a while. She is probably the Agnes Lamb who married Robert Young, who was a baker at 75 High Street. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Newlands. In 1684 he was listed among local men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. He is probably also the Andrew ‘servant to Andrew Ogilvie’ (of Newlands, who was associated with Branzholme) on the same list; he was thus listed twice. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Cavers itself in 1741. His children included: Ann (b.1741); and Archibald (b.1743). Benjamin (b.1766) son of James, he was a weaver in Hawick. He married Mary Weens in 1790, and she died in 1806. Their children included: Benjamin (b.1829/30) stockingmaker in Hawick. He was in Jedburgh Jail in 1851 and 1852. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1799 when her illegitimate child was buried in Hawick. George (17th C.) recorded being ‘about Bonjedburgh-mill’ in 1684 on a list of Covenantant fugitives. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Wester Mill in 1751. Probably the same George witnessed baptisms in 1748 for Walter Telfer in Galalaw, Robert Easton in Wiltonburn and John Martin in Clarilaw, and in 1751 for Walter Ker in Borthaugh. He married Mary Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1743 and their children included David (b.1745) and Jean (b.1751). The witnesses in 1751 were Walter and Robert Scott. George (18th C.) gardener who married Janet Laidlaw in Hawick Parish in 1759. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Mary (b.1765); and George (b.1768). The witnesses in 1760 were John Laidlaw (probably related to his wife) and James Bridges. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Nelly Paisley and their children included: John (b.1779); George and Robert (b.1780); Margaret (b.1781); and George (again, b.1789). George (18th C.) Rector of the Grammar School James (b.1791); Agnes (b.1797); and Benjamin (b.1802). 1773–87. He may have been the first to use the title of ‘Rector’. He resigned from the position, presumably to take up another position elsewhere. It is not impossible that he could be the George Lamb described as a schoolmaster and formerly a dissenting minister, who performed ‘irregular marriages’ at Lamberton Toll near Berwick, dying in 1816, aged 68. He is recorded as ‘The Rev. Mr George Lamb’ in Hawick on the subscriber list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). George (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick who married Janet Laidlaw. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Mary (b.1765); George (b.1768); and Walter (b.1771). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were John Laidlaw and James Briggs. He is probably the George recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, and the George who died in 1802, father of cooper Walter. It is possible he is the George, son of John and Janet Scott, who was born in Wilton Parish in 1740. He may also be the gardener at Wilton Lodge listed in 1792–94, when he was working for Lord Napier. George (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1809. In 1797 in Hawick possibly the same George married Betty Turnbull from Wilton. Hugh (18th/19th C.) Hawick baker. His daughter Betty died in 1801 and his son Hugh in 1805. James (d.c.1683) tenant in ‘Whitrige’ in 1683 when his will was recorded. This could have been Whitriggs or perhaps somewhere else in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. James (17th C.) name of 2 separate residents of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Flight in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (d.bef. 1808) weaver in Hawick. He was already deceased in 1808 when his son Adam died. James (b.1765/6) weaver who was an old man living at Slaidhills with his daughter Elizabeth in 1841 and 1851.
James (b.c.1785) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about 59 High Street with his wife Elizabeth and son James. James (b.c.1795) from Teviothead, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was living at ‘Eildrige Shank’, i.e. Eilrig Burnfoot and in 1851 he was at Dodburn. In 1861 he was an agricultural labourer, living at the farmhouse on Hawick Moor (probably St. Leonard’s). His wife was Catherine (or Christina) from Melrose. Their children included James, John, Catherine, George, Jane and Walter. James (b.1817/8) woollen framework knitter in Hawick. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at about 48 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Isabella, James, Thomas and Elizabeth. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Stirches. Janet (19th/20th C.) shopkeeper of a baby linen and fancy goods shop at 59 High Street. She can be seen outside the shop in an early photograph. The shop sign read ‘John Lamb’, presumably her father, and they must have been from the Needle Street family. She retired in 1928 and the business was sold to Miss Rutherford and later continued by Mr. Stormont. John (15th C.) tenant in Wilton who is mentioned in 1493. Jock Elliot (from Caverston) had remission for several crimes, including stealing 16 sheep from him. John (1652/3–1725) weaver in Bedrule. He is buried in the Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably the John listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694, and likely related to the William who is listed after him. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in ‘Gurnford’ in 1703, when his son John was baptised. This happened at the same time as the baptism of a son of John Lorraine, with the witnesses being Adam Scott and Walter Scott. He had other children George (b.1704) and John (again, b.1706). He may be the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Boonraw in 1696. He may be the John whose son William married Jean Turnbull in 1726. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1724. He is probably the John who in 1733 and 1738 witnessed baptisms for Robert Ormiston, resident at Boonraw and in 1732 witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Netherhall. He married Bessie Collins in Wilton in 1711. Her surname is also recorded as ‘Colven’ and their children included: Janet (b.1718); and John (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were John Dryden and Thomas Dodds. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism in 1729 for William, who was living at Stirches. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1729 he married Janet Scott, who was also from Wilton. Their children included: Agnes (b.1730); John (b.1732): Margaret (b.1735); Robert (b.1738); George (b.1740); Jean (b.1743); an unnamed child (b.1745); and Janet (b.1753). John (d.1805) gardener on the Cross Wynd. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for William Turner and Agnes Lamb (perhaps his brother-in-law and sister). He married Janet Turner and their children included Agnes (b.1757), William (b.1760) and Andrew (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole of Wilton Congregation, in 1761 were Baille Robert Scott, merchant, and gardener Andrew (who was surely related to his wife). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Isabel Welsh, also from Hawick. Their daughter Joan was baptised in Hawick, probably in 1789. The witnesses were Andrew Elliot and Thomas Miller. John (b.1778/9) born in Wilton, he worked as a labourer and drainer. He was a widower living at Castleside in Ashkirk Parish in 1851. John (b.e.1790) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at ‘Nixons Mill’, which probably meant Lynnwood Cottages. In 1851 he was on Slitrig Crescent. He married Betty Scott and their children included Andrew, James, John, Adam, Robert, Agnes and Margaret. John (b.1793) son of James and Mary. He was a needle-maker at 10 Mid Raw. He is recorded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was listed as a needle-maker in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Janet and their children included Margaret, Mary, Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), Benjamin, Agnes, Isabelle, Janet and John. John (b.1793/4) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Sandbed with his wife Margaret and son John. Mary (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Burnhead in at least the period 1786–88, when she was working for William Scott. Matthew (15th C.) resident of Raperlaw. In 1494/5 he was convicted of common theft ‘of old and new’, but his case was suspended. Miss (18th/19th C.) seller of ‘rock bools’ from the end of Needle Street in the 1800s. This could be the same as the person mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortal’ – ‘Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as a ‘fisher’ in 1708. He married Bessie Wilson and their children included James (b.1708), with baptismal witnesses carriers John Hardie and James Aitken and Baille.
James Deans. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Ormiston in Wilton in 1764. Their children included: John (b.1765); Jean (b.1767); James (b.1769); Robert (b.1771); Janet (b.1772); and Robert (again, b.1781). The witnesses in 1769 were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid, in 1772 were Bailie Andrew Scott and Alexander Bunion (Kirk Officer) and in 1781 were weaver John Briggs and Thomas Miller. Robert (b.1784/5) born in Hawick, he was a farm worker and gardener in Roberton Parish. He was living at Hosocate Cottage in 1841 and Dearnburnhaugh in 1851. By 1861 he was a gardener in Kelso. He married Christian Noble and their children included: John (b.1808/9); Betty (b.1810/1), who married a Gibson; Robert (b.1812); Margaret (b.1814); Robert (b.1816); Christian (or ‘Christy’, b.1819); Miney (b.1821); Agnes (b.1826); Peter (b.1832/3); and Barbara (b.1830/1). The first 2 children were baptised in Minto Parish and the next 4 in Ashkirk Parish. Robert (b.c.1832) born at Wilton Pathhead, son of John and Betsy. He trained as a woollen hosiery dresser, like his father. He emigrated to Galt, Ontario, along with his older brother Adam. They later moved to MacGregor, Manitoba, where they were among the first settlers. He farmed there and gave 2 acres of his land to establish a school, which he called Path Head School, after his birthplace. There is a cairn marking the location of the former school. Stewart (b.c.1815) Hawick stocking-maker who was found guilty of mobbing and rioting against Tory supporters at the 1837 election in Hawick, along with 3 others (and one who was found not guilty). He was sentenced to 1 year in prison. In 1841 he was a ‘Woollen Shubber Journeyman’ living at about 62 High Street (with Benjamin, perhaps his brother). By 1851 he was living in Selkirk. He married Margaret Murray in 1840 and their children included Helen. His second wife was Isabella Young and their children included James, Mary, Isabella and Elizabeth, with step-children Margaret and Robert. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Woodhead (probably in Ewesdale). He was one of the founders of the Wisp Club in 1826. Thomas (1851–1939) slater in Hawick. He joined the Hawick Fire Brigade in 1872, eventually becoming Captain and retiring from the service in 1922. Also a keen bowler, he won the Buccleuch Bowling Club championship 11 times. Walter (1771–1846) son of George and Janet Laidlaw. He was listed as a cooper in Hawick on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He was a cooper of the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about No. 6. He married Christian, daughter of William Phillips and Mary Scott. Their children included: George (b.1809), who moved to Canada; Mary (b.1811); William (b.1812), who trained for the ministry; Janet (b.1814); and Christian (b.1817), who was the 2nd wife of James Dunone Kennedy. Walter (b.1814/5) frameworker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at about 23 High Street and in 1861 was at 5 Tannage Close. His wife was Jean and their children included Elizabeth, Agnes, James and Walter. William (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Cavers Parish in March of 1546/7. It is unknown how long he held this position or if he was ever in the parish. He was the sister’s son and heir of Patrick Panter, who was Abbot of Cambuskenneth and Secretary of State. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet ‘Badie’ and their son David was baptised in 1669. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘walker in Bonjedburgh’ in 1684 on a list of Covenant fugitives. He was presumably a waulker. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Penman and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1682. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (when Hassendean was still part of it). He is recorded at Newton in 1688. He married Isobel Leyden in 1686 and their children included: William (b.1687); James (b.1688); and George (b.1689). The witnesses in 1687 were William Leyden and James Smith and in 1688 were William and James Leyden, who were surely related to his wife. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1681 and another for William Scott in Newton in 1683. He may be the William who, along with John, witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Boonraw in 1696. William (17th C.) resident at Stirches according to the 1694 Hearth Tax roll for Hassendean Parish. William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Taylor in Cavers in 1707. Children baptised in Cavers who could be his include Archibald (b.1708), William (b.1710), George (b.1713), Ann (b.1716), Thomas (b.1718) and John (b.1719). William (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Renwick in Wilton in 1711. William (b.1712), baptised in Wilton, may have been his child. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1714 when his daughter Euphan was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Isabel Turnbull in 1721. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Chisholme and their children included: William (b.1719); Margaret (b.1721); Helen (b.1722); John (b.1723); and Robert (b.1725). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Boonraw in 1724 and Stirches in 1729. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1735 for William Scott, resident of Wester Burnfoot. He married Agnes Renwick in 1719 (and perhaps also proclaimed in 1718, although no wife’s name is listed). Their children included: John (b.1720); Helen (b.1722); Jean (b.1724); Euphan (b.1727); John (b.1729); William (b.1731); and William (again, b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were James and John Armstrong, in 1727 included William Lorraine and in 1729 were John Lamb (surely related) and John Scott. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine (resident of Stirches) in 1729 and another for John Lorraine in 1754. He may be the William who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He could be the William ‘Ballad Singer’ who was already deceased in 1797 when his daughter Jean died in Hawick. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Scott. Their daughter Mary was baptised in 1730. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Isobel Culbertson. Their son James was baptised in 1736. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Bessie Scott in 1736. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of John. He was recorded living at Wester Burnfoot in 1735. In 1726 he married Jean, daughter of Robert Turnbull, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included: Jean (b.1728); Euphan (b.1734); Johanna (b.1735); and Robert (b.1739). The witnesses in 1735 were Walter Riddell and William Sanderson. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Thorburn and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1738. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Anne Sinclair and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1754. William (18th C.) married Mary Noble in Hawick in 1761. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Sarah Hume in 1763. Their unnamed child was baptised in 1766. His wife was from Minto Parish. They had an unnamed child baptised in 1766. William (18th C.) recorded in a marriage in Hawick in 1787, with no wife’s name given. William (18th C.) married Helen Miller in Hawick in 1788. William (d.1815) recorded in the Hawick death register as ‘Betty Ingles’s Husband’. It is unclear why he would have been recorded in this way, but presumably by the time of his death his wife was more well-known in the Town than he was. The couple married in Hawick in 1791. William (18th/19th C.) tailor at Teindside Bridgend according to the Militia ballot for Cavers Parish in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included Janet (b.1799), Thomas (b.1801), Elizabeth (b.1804), Mary (b.1806) and Jemima (b.1813). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. the Lamp (thu-lawmp) n. the 1537 Charter stipulates that a lamp should be permanently burning before the High Altar of the Parish Church ‘... for the souls of the Barons of Hawick, founders of said lamp, and their successors’. According to the Charter it was the duty of the heirs of James Blair to provide this lamp, and they thus held some special status through paying one penny Scots each Pentecost in return for a half particate of land. Whether this lamp was part of the original foundation of St. Mary’s (and hence started by the Lovels) or began with Douglas of Drumlanrig, or at some point between, is unknown. It is also unclear when this arrangement ended, but certainly the burning of the lamp would have been abolished by the Reformation. The presence of Sir James Douglas at Parliament during the ratification of the Confessions of Faith in 1560 effectively exonerated the people of Hawick from their obligation to maintain the lamp. The lamp symbol appears on the Hawick coat of arms, and similar lamps were incorporated into the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light more impromptu songs set to well-known tunes (e.g. ‘Safeway’ and ‘Teelio’). His poems include ‘The Vertish Hill’, ‘The Man that oo Ca’ Bill’ and ‘Doon Oor Close And Up Oor Stair’. He is frequent accompanist at Common Riding and other functions, having taken over in ‘the Hut’ from Adie Inglis. He has also been star of the annual Panto and played ‘Gibbie the Gowk’ in ‘The Gutterbludes’. He is a public speaker extraordinaire, local dialect enthusiast and general all-round entertainer. He has made a large number of valuable tape recordings of elderly locals (an archive of 150 cassette tapes being digitised in 2015), and contributed to local history and culture in innumerable ways. He also has an unrivalled collection of photographic slides relating to Hawick and area. He wrote ‘Honest men and bright-eyed daughters’ (1991), ‘Mair honest men’ (1993) and ‘Son of Honest Men’ (2000) with Derek Lunn, ‘Walking in the Land of the Reivers’ (2011) with Alan Brydon, and has contributed many articles to the Archæological Society Transactions, as well as serving in most capacities on its committee. He wrote the musical plays ‘A Reiver’s Moon’ and ‘1514: The Musical’ with Alan Brydon. He was Hawick Citizen of the Year in 2000, Common Riding Chief Guest in 2004 and has been President of the 1514 and Callants’ Clubs. He also provides the acrostics for the Callants’ Club dinner guest. He was heavily involved in arranging the Adam Grant plaque, the James Thomson statue and the Bill McLaren bust. His ‘night cless’ has been popular for decades. He was recorded in a selection of photographic slides relating to Hawick – ‘Now as maist o ee ken ‘A few remarks’ and ‘Ian Landles’ irni words ee wad expect ti come across in the same sentence!’ [IWL].

John Chapman Gray, J.P., ‘Chap’ (1892–1980), son of Bailie Andrew and uncle of Wullie. He had his schooling at Buccleuch and Wilton. He served an apprenticeship with Barrie & Kersel and spent the rest of his life with Innes & Henderson. In WWI he served with Lothian and Border Horse. He played rugby, swim and was in the water polo team in the opening game at ‘the Baths’. He was Cornet in 1921, Councillor from 1931 for South High Street Ward and Bailie from 1935. He served as Provost 1938–40, and has been described as Hawick’s first ‘working man’ Provost. The ‘Provost Landles Spitfire Fund’ raised money for the purchase of the ‘Teribus Spitfire’ in WWII. He rode the Marches himself in 1940, and led a group each year during the rest of the war. He was the first enrolled member of the Hawick British Legion, President of the Callants’ Club and of Hawick R.F.C. He was a director on the Board of the Co-op Society, Convenor of the County Health Committee and an elder in St. Andrew’s Church. Landles Road is named after him. His son William was the local poet, father of Ian. William (14th C.) probably a descendant of John de Landales, who was great-grandson of Orm. He was granted the lands of Swinside and Renalston in about 1390, after they were forfeited by Robert Burrell. He was also granted a charter of lands in Oxnam. He was ‘William de Laundelis of Swynyshed’ in 1390 when he witnessed the charter of John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. He also received a charter of lands in Oxnam, forfeited by John Wylie. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Katharine, who married John Lauder. William ‘Wullie’, M.B.E. (1912–98) cousin of Bill and nephew of ‘Chap’, he was born at 7 Sandbed and educated at Buccleuch and Wilton Schools. He worked in the knitwear industry, first for Turner & Rutherford and then at Glebe Mills, where he was company secretary. He later spent time working for Roberts of Selkirk and Thorburn of Walkerburn before returning to a Hawick firm in John Laing’s, and finally retiring in 1977. After retirement he wrote court reports for the Hawick News. However, it is as a writer that he is remembered, particularly as a poet, publishing over 400 pieces. Among these were ‘Oor Border Hame’ and ‘Borthwick Water’, both set to music. Many of his poems have local flavour, including ‘The Exile’s Return’, ‘A Callant’s Games’, ‘Hawick Sang’, ‘Hame Toun’, ‘The Centre o’ them a’, ‘The Rowan Hills sae Green’ and ‘The Herd’s Psalm’. His poetry collections include ‘A Breath frae the Hills: verses Scots and English’ (1950), ‘Gooseberry Fair, and other verses, Scots and English’ (1952), ‘Penny Numbers: poems Scots and English’ (1969) and ‘Turn o’ the Year and other poems chiefly in Scots’ (1989). As ‘Quartus’ he was writer of the ‘Thought For The Week’ Christian commentary column in the Hawick News; these were collected in ‘I to the Hills’ (1979), ‘All Good Gifts Around Us’ (1982) and ‘Roving Commission’ (1992). He wrote a short book on Will H. Ogilvie in 1992.

Landlesism

He was awarded the M.B.E. for services to Border literature in 1996. In addition he was a lay preacher, involved with the local Brethren Fellowship. He was father of Ian W. He is buried in the Wellowgate Cemetery. William ‘Bill’ (1923–2016) cousin of Wullie and nephew of ‘Chap’. He was born in Langlands Bank and attended Hawick High School. He worked as a message boy for the Store, was then a grocer in their High Street branch and was sent as a manager to Riccarton Junction during the War. He was a largely self-taught sculptor, being mentored by Anne Redpath and attended stone-cutting night classes in Hawick given by Andrew Dodds (who had worked on the ‘Horse’ statue with William Beattie). He later went to Edinburgh College of Art, winning a scholarship there, and commuting daily on the train. Training as a teacher, he taught art at the High School for 23 years, retiring in 1980. He exhibited regularly at the Royal Scottish Academy, being known particularly for his figures and has work in galleries all over the world. He sculpted the Will H. Ogilvie memorial (with a replica in Australia), the Adam Grant plaque and the James Thomson statue. There was an exhibition of his work at the Scott Gallery in 2006. He moved to Tyne and Wear in his last years. He and his wife Joyce celebrated their 70th wedding anniversary and they had two children, Eric and Linda. He was described as being a ‘gentleman but also a very gentle man’.

Landlesism (lawn-dul-zium) n. a play on words, often involving idiosyncrasies of the Teri tongue when contrasted with standard English. Named after Ian Landles (or perhaps his uncle Andrea, to whom he credits his sense of humour), for his inability to speak for more than a couple of minutes without interjecting such a phrase. ‘Black secks’, ‘the atmosphere’s elestic’ and ‘Airchie Oliver Society’ are typical examples, while sentences like ‘Hawick folk canni dae sums, and calling him ane land loppon lowne’ [BR1673].

Lang (lawng) n. Andrew (1712–53) writer in Selkirk, son of John (Selkirk Deacon of Trades) and Isobel Murray (from Philiphaugh). He was recorded as the Procurator Fiscal in Selkirk in 1751. In 1741 he married Henrietta Chisholme, widow of Robert Mercer; she was daughter of William Chisholme of Broadlee and Ann Rutherford (daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth). Their children included: Isobel (b.1742); Henrietta (b.1743); John (b.1744); and Katherine (b.1752). He drowned in the Ettrick and left a son John and 4 daughters. In 1761 his widow had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk, on behalf of herself and her son John; she had several other discharges in the years until 1782. Andrew (1783–1842) son of John, who was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire. He was also Sheriff Clerk and served under Sir Walter Scott. His son John was also Sheriff-Clerk and his grandson was the author, also Andrew. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Several letters relating to his legal work are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in the period 1825–29. In 1809 he married Margaret Suter (1787–1874) who was from Ross-shire. Their children included: Elizabeth (1811–40); John (1812–69); Jean (1814–45); Andrew (b.1817); Gideon Scott (1819–80) a pastoralist and writer in Australia; Mary (1820–1904); Margaret Suter (1821–1875); William (b.1823); Mark Pringle (1824–25); Henrietta (1828–1901); and Diana Scott (1829–98). Andrew (1844–1912) author, born at Viewfield in Selkirk. His parents were John, who was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire and Jane Pledgerleath Sellar. He was descended from a family of trades deacons in Selkirk, and he also had Chisholmes of that Ilk and Murrays of Philiphaugh among his ancestors. He was educated in Edinburgh, St. Andrews, Glasgow and Oxford, and lived most of his life in London. He became a journalist, writing extensively for the Daily News and for Longman’s Magazine. He wrote such a varied selection of things that many people of the time believed he was a pseudo-nym for a whole group of writers! His collections of fairy tales and writings on angling are still widely read, but he was also a poet and essayist. For works of local interest, he edited Scott’s Waverley Novels, as well as his Poems and Ballads, wrote ‘Sir Walter Scott and the Border Minstrelsy’ (1910) and ‘Highways and Byways in the Border’ (1913, with his brother John). He is buried in Selkirk and the cottage hospital there was renamed the Andrew Lang unit. Janet (18th C.) laundrymaid at Minto in 1791, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Langbault (lun-bawk, lawng-bawk) n. farmhouse on the left hand-side of Buccleuch Road, just after the Dunk, being at the end of the ‘Lumback’ road. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester parts. John Henderson was farmer here in 1797 and still recorded there in 1841. John Langburnshiels (Lang Burn Shiels) n. more recently spelled Longbalk, but pronounced ‘Lumb-back’, this is the right fork at the top of the Loan. It was probably developed as a proper road in about 1762, as part of the coach road to Carlisle before the ‘New Road’ was opened in 1815. It is now often used for country walks. Part of the original road is a grass-grown right-of-way, which leaves the metalled road and passes the Longbalk farm steadings. It was named in 1965, with new private and council houses built here between 1970 and 1980. The part officially called ‘Longbalk Road’ is a dead end, with ‘the Lumb-back’ continuing as Crumhaughhill Road. After the ‘New Road’ was built there was for a long time a notice that read, ‘No road this way for the public. Trespassers will be prosecuted for evasion of the toll bar’ (the name either means ‘a long hard pull’ or refers to a long ‘baulk’ or strip of land left unploughed).

Langbalk Toll-Hoose (Lumb-balk-tōl-hoos) n. former toll-house on the New Road, being now the first house on Parkdail.

Langbits (Lawng-bits) n. lands in the Barony of Cavers. In 1519/20 they were promised from James Gledstains as part of the marriage contract for his son James, and a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear where exactly these lands were, but probably near Teviothead for his son James, and a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear where exactly these lands were, but probably near Teviothead.

Lang Burn (Lawng-burn) n. stream in the upper Siltrig valley (essentially being the upper part of the Slitrig itself) running alongside the B6399 from Shankend to Langburnshiels. It is essentially formed from the confluence of the Leap Burn, Flosk Burn and Rope Sike. The lands there may be the same as those lands recorded in a Baronial dispute of Feu-Rule in 1563 (it is probably the tributary of the Siltrig marked ‘Langburn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Langburnshiels (Lawng-burn-sheels) n. Longburnshiels, hamlet and farm near Shankend on the Newcastle Forest Road, once site of the ‘Turf Hotel’ used by railway labourers. It was contained within Hobkirk Parish and was once part of the estate of Elliot of Harwood, being listed as ‘Langburne’ among the Harwood farms on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. It could be the ‘Lanyburne’ where William Oliver was recorded in 1618. Robert Oliver was there from around 1680, John Elliot shepherd at about the same time. Robert Elliot was recorded there in 1785, Robert Oliver 1786–90, Alexander Lillico in 1790 and Thomas Oliver in 1791–94. There was a Robertson there in 1797 and in 1799 the residents included William Turnbull, Francis Armstrong and William Robson. The tenants were William Stephenson in the late 18th century till 1807, then James Mather from 1813, followed by Daniel Mather. The Carruthers and Elliot families were there in 1841, and the Carruthers and Scotts in 1851. Thomas Carruthers was manager of the farm there until the 1860s. The Hawick postman used to go as far as here by bicycle. Peculiar lines of stones have been noted on a nearby hill, examined by Alexander Michie and James Murray in 1863, as well as a possible hill-fort being described nearby (it is just ‘Langburn’ in 1790: this may be the place marked ‘Shells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langbyre (Lawng-bir) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, near the modern Lymiecleuch. It was among lands purchased by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. The lands were included among those of Lymiecleuch when sold by William Eliott of Stobs to a group of Elliots in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. It was among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott from his father in 1692 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Lang Cairn (Lawng-kärn) n. Long Cairn, near the Kershope Burn, situated on Long Knowe, directly north of Scotch Kershope, now in the middle of Newcastle Forest. It is the only known neolithic structure in Roxburghshire. It is a stone-built, barrow-like burial cairn, roughly pear-shaped, with maximum size about 53 m by 14 m, and with part of an exposed cist towards the north end. It was excavated around 1850 and investigated again in 1870 when it was said to contain ‘several stone coffins of various sizes standing exposed’. There is a nearby standing stone marking a boundary of the Debateable Lands.

lang cairt (Lawng-kär’t) n., arch. a long cart with spliced sides used at harvest time.

Lang Cleuch (Lawng-clooch) n. stream that rises on the northern side of Skelfhill and runs roughly north-eastwards to join the Skelfhill Burn.
Langcleuch

Langcleuch (lawng-clooŋ) n. former farmstead marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map in the upper part of the Allan valley, perhaps near Skelfhillhope. ‘Langcleuchside’ was listed as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in 1660. ‘Longcleuchside’ is shown on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands, attached to Skelfill and Fairnyside. The cleuch itself is labelled on the map, corresponding to the modern Pen Sike. John Armstrong was farmer there in the late 18th century. It could be the ‘langcluch’ recorded in 1502 when John Winthrope, James ‘aronyk’ and Robert Paterson had 60 sheep stolen from there by Patrick, son of Adam Scott in Harwoodhill.

the Lang Croft (thu-lawng-kroft) n. long field that once lay north and north-west of the present Crumhaughhill Road, and on part of which Longcroft Crescent and Road were built. It is now the name for the general area of these 2 streets – ‘For haddock, plaice and cod, They came frae Ramsay Road, Fri Myrselawgreen they came, Langcroft yins din the same’ [IWL].

Langcroft Crescent (lawng-kroft-kreu-sin’) n. Langcroft Crescent, loop off Longbaulk Road, built in 1938 and named after the ‘Long Croft’ which once stood there.

Langcroft Road (lawng-kroft-rőd) n. Longcroft Road, street connecting Longcroft Crescent with Longbaulk Road, built in 1938 and named after the ‘Long Croft’.

Langdale (lawng-däl) n. remote area in Cumbria that was a neolithic axe factory. The polished greenstone volcanic tuff found here is the source for a large fraction of the neolithic axe-heads discovered around Britain. An example found at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot (measuring 4.5 × 1.75 × 0.75 inches and now in the National Museum) came from here.

lang drink o witter (lawng-drungk-o-wi’-ur) n. colloquial expression for a tall, skinny person.

Lang Eild-rig (lawng-eeld-rig) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

langer (lawng-ur) adj., adv. longer – ‘Jimmy Rae’s no cuttin hair oye langer!’ ‘if ee stand there oye langer, ee’ll take ruit!’ ‘...and to remove from the town for ane yair and langer ...’ [BR1644], ‘He reas the text with haly anger, ’Till he could sit nor read nae langer’ [JR], ‘Where will ye get a whisky soss To moistify your middle, For now nae langer at Haremoss You’ll hear auld Ruickebie’s fiddle’ [JR], ‘Nae langer could he thole, She tore his vera soul’ [JT], ‘The langer the better: sae, love, dinna greet ...’ [JoHa], ‘Some say it is a gross abuse, Some say they’ll it nae langer use ...’ [TP], ‘...on account o hevin been there a sichter langer’ [DH] (note there is no hard g in the pronunciation).

langest (lawng-ist) adj. longest – ‘Aye’, he said, things lest langest after they’re dune’ [JHH] (note the lack of the hard g in the pronunciation).

Lang Flow (lawng-flö) n. Lang Flow, area between Redfordgreen and Bleak Law, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map (see flowe).

the Lang Field (thu-lawng-feeld) n. name for the field of the Common, to the east of the road between Pilmuir and Pilmuir Rig farms.

Langflat (lawng-fla’) n. former name for a farmstead bordering on the old Common, being the eastern part of Southfield farm, lying west of the road shortly before the Caa Knowe. Simon Learmouth and Alexander Kennedy were living there in 1694 when it is ‘Langflatte’ (mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common).

Langformacus (lawng-for-mā-kis) n. Longformacus, a village in Berwickshire, on the Dye Water, north-west of Duns, containing the 18th century Longformacus House and associated unusual dovecote (the origin is ‘church meadow of Maccus’ in Old Welsh).

Lang Gill (lawng-gil) n. Long Gill, stream in a narrow ravine in the hills to the west of Newcastleton, rising on Millstone Edge and running roughly south to join the Black Burn. There are a couple of ruined bothies and sheepfolds along its banks, as well as turf-banked enclosure to the south (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Lang Grain (lawng-grān) n. Long Grain, stream that joins the Whitrope Burn just south of Whitropefoot. There are grouse butts in the upper part and an old sheepfold part-way down. On the banks of the stream, just to the west of the main road are the remains of 2 shieling-huts. ‘Langgrainfit’ was a former farmstead on the drove road, once an important stopping point before the turnpike road (B6399) was opened. There are many other small streams with the same name, e.g. one in the headwaters of the Teviot, another at Mosspaul and a third near Altrie in the upper Etrick valley (‘Grain’ is Scots for a branch of a stream, derived from Old Norse).

Lang Grain (lawng-grān) n. stream that runs to the east to join the Black Burn near Mosspaul. It rises on Wisp Hill and forms part of the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire.
Lang Grain

Lang Grain (lawng-grän) n. small stream that rises on Lamb Blair Hill and flows north-east to join Singdean Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Langgrainfit (lawng-grän-fi') n. former farmstead on the drove road by Whitropefoot, near the foot of Long Grain.

Lang Hassendean (lawng-haw-sin-deen) n. lands in the Barony of Hassendean, recorded in a charter of 1457 when they passed from William Cunningham to his son Neil, excepting the part called ‘Camehill’. There was a dispute among the Cunninghams, with the land being confirmed to Elizabeth (daughter of George Cunningham of Belton) in 1483, and confirmed again in 1514. The 1514 sasine states that the lands include a tower, so it may be that ‘Langhassendean’ was simply the name used for the main town of Hassendean. The ‘precept of sasine’ of 1514 also refers to ‘Eister Hassindene’, so these may also be the same lands. A document of 1470 refers to the whole (half) barony as ‘Lang Hassindean’.

Langhauch see Langhaugh

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. former fortified house on the north side of the Teviot valley somewhere between Teviothead and Blackcleuch. The lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615. James Douglas of Drumlanrig had a ‘horning’ in 1607 for William Scott of Howpasley to remove from these and other lands. In 1624 the lands were purchased from the Earl of Douglas by Robert Elliot of Falnash (along with Hislop). In 1647 Archibald Elliott of Falnash was served heir to his father’s 5 merk land there. They were sold back to the superior, James, Earl of Queensberry in 1650. They were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh from 1674. The lands of ‘Langhaugh water’ were inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690, along with part of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze and Calfshaw. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. It is ‘Langhaugh-water’ in 1707 when valued at £166 13s 4d (and can be identified as part of the Hawick Parish lands of Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane in 1678). It is ‘Langhaugh-water’ in 1788 and ‘Langhaugh Water’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when valued at £166 13s 4d. (it is ‘Langhauch’ in 1511, ‘Langhauch’ in 1572, ‘Longhauch’ in 1610, ‘Langheuch’ in 1637 and ‘Langhauch’ in 1647; it is marked ‘Langhauch’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, between Netherraw and Hartsgarth. It is listed in a rental record of about 1376, valued at 10 shillings. It was held by the Elliots of Redheugh from the latter part of the 15th century to at least the early 17th. This is probably where Robert ‘Elwald’ was recorded as Laird there in 1494/5. Will Foster was recorded there in 1611. It was among the lands contested between the Elliots of Redheugh and the Scotts of Buccleuch in about 1612. Archibald Elliot from there was recorded in 1618. It was one of 3 farms that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. It was under a ‘wadsett’ until James Elliott (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’) paid it off in 1639. The lands were valued (along with Hartgarth) at £466 13s 4d in 1678. Christopher Irving of Binks purchased the farm (along with several others) in 1688, after Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt. There was a shepherd recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It was purchased by the Olivers of Dinlabyre about 1700 and sold in 1773 to William Sharp of Hartsgarth. Dyker William Thomson and family lived there in 1851. Before about 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. By the 18th century it appears that the farm had migrated down-hill. There is now a cottage marked there close to the road. On the eastern slopes of Thornside Hill above are 2 boundary dykes, probably defining the boundaries of the former farm, and area of about 50 hectares, including evidence of ancient field systems and rig lines. On a terrace on the hillside are the remains of a farmstead and hut (it is ‘Langalgh’ around 1376, ‘langalhel’ in 1494/5, ‘Langhauch’ in 1612, ‘Langhauch’ in 1618, and transcribed as ‘Lahauche’ in about 1624; it is marked ‘Langhauchon’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Longhaugh’ on Stoble’s 1770 map).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former farm in the upper Rule valley, just north of Wauchope. The lands specifically lay to the east of Templehall and Brewlands. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1502. It is mentioned in 1767 as ‘the Twenty pound land of Wauchope and Langhaugh’ (it is ‘le langhauch’ in 1502, ‘Langheuch’ in 1567, ‘Langhawght’ in 1604, ‘Langhauch’ in 1605, ‘Langhauch’ in 1637 and ‘Langhaugh’ in 1649; marked on Gordon’s c.1590 map, Blaeu’s 1654 map and on Stoble’s 1770 map as ‘Longhaugh’).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former name for part of the lands of Deanfoot in Minto Parish. In 1779 they were valued at £36 and part of the Minto estate, with the liferent being held by Robert Trotter of Bush. In 1780 the lands were referred as ‘Long-haugh parks’. It was still listed in 1811.

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish that were part of Dryden and Clews farms. ‘Longhaugh and Strawbrae’ is listed in 1780 among the lands whose liferent had been given to Dr. William Elliot.

Langhaugh Waas (lawng-hawch-wawz, -walz) n. former farmstead near Langhaugh on the Wauchope estate, also sometimes referred to as ‘Wauchope Waas’ and popularly known as ‘the Waas’. It consisted of small patches of land between the road and the Rule Water. There may have been a small shop there in the early 19th century. The residents in the mid-19th century were William and Rachel Tait (also written ‘Langhaughwalls’, etc.).

Langheugh Hoose (lawng-hew-hoos, -hewch-hoos) n. villa-style house off Buccleuch Road designed by J.P. Alison in 1905. Langheugh Road was originally its drive-way.

Langheugh Road (lawng-hew-röd) n. private street off Buccleuch Road, opposite the playing fields, containing several large houses. It was developed largely in the period 1965–70, and named after several houses had already been built. Many of the residents use Buccleuch Road as their address.

Langholm (lawng-um) n. town 24 miles south of Hawick, along the A7, where the River Esk is met by the Wauchope Water and the Ewes Water. In the heart of riever country, it has been prominent in the tweed industry, with the first major factory being built in 1832; before that there was extensive employment in cotton manufacturing, and later the town was known for the production of checked cloth. Whitla Hill (1163 ft) looms over the town, with the monument to Sir John Malcolm on the summit. It was actually 2 towns on opposite sides of the Esk, with the old town on the east side of the river being made a burgh of barony in 1610 (with other charters later that century), and the new or ‘Meikleholm’ being built on the west side of the river to a fairly regular pattern from 1778 by the Duke of Buccleuch after the construction of a bridge over the Esk in 1775. At the end of the 17th century the town was temporarily in the county of Roxburghshire. The library dates from 1875–78 and the Town Hall from 1811–12. The ruins of Langholm Castle lie just to the north, built around 1526 and abandoned in the early 18th century. Additionally James Playfair’s Langholm Lodge was built 1786–89 as a hunting lodge for the Duke of Buccleuch. Langholm Common Riding dates back to 1759, with the first Cornet elected in 1817; it involves the carrying of traditional emblems (the ‘banna’, ‘saut herring’, thistle and floral crown, as well as the flag) through the streets and the unique ‘Crying of the Fair’ (an example proclamation being published as early as 1731), while the colours are based on those of the Derby winner. John Hyslop’s ‘Echoes from the Border Hills’ (1912, revised in 1992) contains anecdotes from Eskdale in the 19th century. The book ‘Langholm as it was’ (1912) was also written by John Hyslop, with a new edition appearing in 2002. Population 2,538 (1991) – ‘The roads atween Hawick And Langholm Are the roads atween Heaven and hell . . . ’[DH], ‘. . . was a gaird on the mail coach afore he took ower the Croon Inn in the Langum’ [BW1979] (it is ‘ye Langhame’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map, while ‘Cast. of Langhoome’ is marked on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Langholm Castle (lawng-um-kaw-sul) n. ruined tower in Langholm, near the confluence of the Esk and Ewes Water, once home of the Armstrongs. It may have been built in the 1520s after Johnnie Armstrong of Gihockie was granted lands in Langholm. It seemed to be taken by the forces of the Scottish Regent in 1529 (before Armstrong and many of his followers were captured at Caerlenrig). The castle was largely demolished in 1725. All that now exists are the south wall and fragments of the adjoining walls, although it clearly once extended over a much larger area. It is also known as ‘Langholm Tower’.

Langholm lily (lawng-um-li-lee) n., arch. a sobriquet for the dandelion (recorded in the Hawick News in 1954).

Langholmite (lawng-um-i’) n. person from Lanholm. Famous Langholmites include Hugh MacDiarmid, Thomas Telford and William Julius Mickle.

Langholm Street (lawng-um-stree’) n. street in Newcastleton which is the beginning of the road over the hills to Langholm. The Parish Manse was at No. 23.

Langhope (lawng-up) n. former name for part of the farm at Crumhaughhill. There are several other places of the same name, including a height near the Wisp Hill, a stream that joins the Ale Water and a former property of the Scotts of Buccleuch near Melrose (it was mentioned in the court case for the division of the Common in 1767).

Langhope (lawng-hóp, -up) n. Langhope, farm on the Langhope Burn near Todrig, west of Ashkirk, which was once a Scott possession. It is recorded in a document from the reign of William I, relating to the Diocese of Glasgow’s lands in Ashkirk Parish. They were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, split into the ‘Eststeid de Langhop’, ‘Middillsteid’ and ‘Weststeid’. In the 1470s John Cranston of that Ilk had remission for the ‘grassum’ there. In the 1480s the middle steading was also called ‘How-

Alexander Scott, and the east steading to Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1669, and by 1677 Walter was ‘now of Langhope’. In 1688 it was sold to his son John Scott, then to Adam Scott of Bowhill in 1691. In 1691 the value was given as £18. Tax was paid for 5 hearths there in 1694. It was later owned by the Elliots of Minto (probably purchased along with Headshaw in 1696). Thomas Nivison was hered there in 1697. John Brydon was tenant there in 1784 and John Paterson in 1785. In 1785 and 1802 it was valued at £548 ‘of Stock’ and £33 for the teinds. Walter Todd lived there in the early 19th century and Thomas Scott in the 1860s. It is also mentioned in the ballad ‘The Fray of Elibank’ – ‘Though Andrew o’ Langhope had fa’n i’ the fight, He only lay still till the battle was by, Then ventured to rise an’ climb over the height, An’ there he set up a lamentable cry’ [ES] (the name occurs in the late 12th century; it is ‘langhop’ in 1502, ‘Lang Hoip’ in 1541 and ‘Langhop’ in 1661; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Langup’ and is ‘Long-hope’ by Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Langhope Burn (lawng-hóp-burn) n. stream that joins the Ale Water above Ashkirk. It is first noted as part of the boundary of the lands of Whitslade in a charter by William I and also as ‘the rivulet of Langhope’ as part of the boundary of lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk – ‘And now the dreary distance doth wear it like a bride, Out beyond Langhope Burn and over Es-senside’ [WHO] (it is ‘rivulus de Longhope’ about 1170; there is another stream of the same name in the headwaters of the Ettricc).

Langhope Drive (lawng-hóp-driv) n. Long-hope Drive, part of the private housing development at the top of Crumhaughhill, built in 1979. It is named after a former croft incorporated into Crumhaughhill farm, the name meaning a piece of enclosed land, usually a hollow.

Langhope Height (lawng-hóp-hí) n. hill south of Teviothead, being the western ridge of Comb Hill, with the stream called the Lang Hope nearby.

Langhope Rig (lawng-hóp-rig) n. ridge above the Langhope Burn, between Shaws Under Loch and Akermoor Loch. Since 2015 it has been the location for a wind farm, consisting of 10 turbines. A related community fund has supported small projects in the neighbouring district.

langin (lawng-in) n. longing, desire – ‘Lord, a’ my langin’ is afore thee; an’ my graenin’ isna hidden frae thee’ [HSR], ‘... an’ satisfieist the langin’ o’ ilka leivin’ thing’ [HSR], ‘... the thouchts, the langin’s, an’ the resolves o’ an exile thrae hame’ [BW1939].

langish (lawng-ésh) adj. longish, somewhat long – ‘Well, kindle the pipes chaps, and make your-

langit (lawng-éet’, -i) pp., poet. longed – ‘Behald, I hae langet efter thy preeeps ...’ [HSR], ‘... for I langet for thy commandements’ [HSR].

Lang Jaymie (lawng-já-mee) n. nickname for James Richardson.

lang kail (lawng-kál) n., arch. a form of borecole that is purplish and with less wrinkly leaves than the more common variety, soup made from this – ‘If it was het, the langkail gully Play’d smash amang’ t to end the tulzie’ [JR] (also written ‘langkail’; see also kail).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for a large part of western Wilton town. The more extensive estate was the eastern half barony of Wilton, being the estate of the Langlands family since at least 1451. Robert of that Ilk’s estate in Wilton Parish was valued at £953 16s 8d in 1643 and he paid tax on £992 of land for the estate in 1663. It was still valued at £992 16s 8d in 1678. The Laird of ‘Langlandis’ was listed among ‘Lan- dit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. On the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls the estate is recorded as being composed of Whitfield, Mervinshaw, Brieryhill, Dean Mill, Roughheugh and Heap. The Laird of Langlands is described as ceremoniously observing the marking of his land’s boundary with Hawick in the early 1700s. This happened at the Coble Pool and at Roughheugh Mill. The land remained in the family for 300 years, being diminished over time, particularly in the 18th century, and then sold off entirely in 1783 to Thomas Elliot. By that time the main estate was valued at £278 12s 8d and consisted of the half-Barony of Wilton, as well as Calaburn and ‘sundry inclosures in Rough-heugh, sold to other persons, but not yet disjoined’. It then passed to Lord Napier around 1790, to James Anderson about 1805 and finally descended to the Pringles. It was valued at £278 12s 8d in 1811, and some enclosures in Roughheugh were later sold to Rev. John Thomson, so that the value in about 1874 was about £262. By then the remaining property was known as Wilton Lodge and was purchased by the Town in 1889 as a public park. In older records there are people recorded living at ‘Langlands’, but it is not clear how extensive an area was covered by that designation. Note that there are several other places called ‘Langlands’, e.g. in Angus, Ayrshire, Devon, Essex, Falkirk, Kirkcudbrightshire, Lanarkshire, Somerset and Yorkshire (formerly spelled ‘Langlandis’, it is ‘Langlans’ in 1748).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. Victorian villa-style house in Sunnyhill, designed by John Guthrie about 1878. It was built for manufacturer Walter Pringle, and was one of the earliest villas in the Sunnyhill area. There were new stables, alterations and additions designed by Peddie & MacKay of Edinburgh in 1880. It was formerly the home of the Pringles and then Sir Thomas Henderson. Art deco style interior alterations were made in the 1920s or 30s. It is now split into ‘East’ and ‘West’ parts and is a grade C listed building.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale. They are recorded in 1541 along with Millholm, as pertaining to the Laird of Mangerton. The precise location is unknown. It could be the same as the lands ‘called Langland, within a hedge, worth 33s. 2d.’ listed in the English part of Liddesdale in 1276 (it is ‘Langlands’ in 1541; the existence of this name also in Liddesdale is confusing).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for land in Minto Parish. It is listed in the 1779 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) along with ‘Quarter of Whitefield’, valued at £73 3s 6d. It was among lands whose liferent was given to Rev. Robert Elliot (brother of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto) in 1779. In 1780 it is listed as part of the eastern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for lands lying within the Barony of Caverton in Roxburghshire. The name occurs as ‘Langislandis’ in the Exchequer Rolls for the 1450s and 1470s. There is presumably no direct connection with the lands in Wilton.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) listed among the men who accompanied Robert Scott, younger of Haining in an attack on Selkirk Mill in 1608. Possibly the same Adam (tenant of some lands that are not transcribed) accompanied the Scotts of Whitehaugh, Headshaw, Kirkhouses and Huntly when they forcibly took possession of the farm of Hartwoodburn in 1627. He may be the uncle of George of that Ilk recorded in 1610 when the family, along with several Scotts, petitioned for removal of a horning and reduction of penalties. George acted as cautioner for him and several others, promising they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhaugh) and associates. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded in ‘Spittell’ in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. This is probably Ancrum Spittal, but could be Spittal-on-Rule. Adam (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Wilton in 1721. Andrew (15th C.) monk of Newbattle, who was witness to a charter of the Barony of Cranston McGill in 1477/8. In 1488 he was Abbot of Newbattle when he witnessed another document, and was Abbot until at least 1492. He may have been related to the local family. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1610 as uncle of Langlands
Langlands

George of that Ilk when there a request to lift the ‘horning’ and modify the penalty on their ancestor. This was probably his father James, who was declared a rebel in 1581. It seems likely that he was brother of the previous Laird Robert. He may be the same Andrew who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Charles (16th C.) recorded in 1531 as ‘Karolo vicario de Dryvisdall’, i.e. Vicar of Dryfesdale near Lockerbie. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands.

Gavin (16th C.) recorded in the register of Cupar Abbey in 1550. George (16th/17th C.) of that Ilk, son of Robert. In about 1611 he was served heir to his father in the half lands and Barony of Wilton, including the alternating advowson of the Parish Kirk. In 1610, along with his brothers Robert and James and his uncle Andrew, as well as several Scotts, he asked for suspension of the ‘horning’ (possibly the one imposed on James in 1581), and reduction of the penalties imposed to find caution that they not harm the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. His cautioner in this dispute was William Scott, younger of Harden, while he himself acted as cautioner for the Scotts of Sinton, Whitehaugh and Burnfoot, as well as Robert, James and Adam Langlands, plus Roger in Hawick. He was confirmed in the half barony in 1614 and is recorded in a charter (related to Easter Heap) in 1615. In 1616 he was foreman of the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ guilty of multiple thefts. He may have been succeeded soon afterwards by John, who is recorded as ‘of that Ilk’ in 1617. However, he may be the same George who was recorded several times until 1638 (if John was not actually Baron). George (17th C.) of that Ilk. He possibly succeeded his father John (or is the same as the previous George). He is listed as Laird in 1628 among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. He signed the Confession of Faith in 1638. This document was also signed by Robert ‘fier of that Ilk’ (i.e. probably his son and heir), together with Andrew and Walter of Brieryhill (probably close relatives). He was probably the George who married Esther Scott, younger daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden (and widow of Elliot of Falnash). George (d.bef. 1681) of that Ilk. Probably son of Robert, the length of his tenure as Baron is uncertain. He is recorded as witness to a Gedstones christening in 1672. He was recorded in a deed of 1673, and is probably also the George ‘fier of that Ilk’ recorded in another deed that year. The land tax was paid by the ‘laird of Langlands’ in 1678 (for about £990), with the name not given, suggesting perhaps he was recently deceased and formal succession not yet established. His wife was Janet Douglas, whose will exists from 1681 (when she was ‘relict of George Langlands, of that Ilk’). Her ‘plenishing’ included ‘feather beds, bolsters and cobs, some of which were stuffed with worsted, blankets, sheets and table linen, servitors, board cloths, towels, spindles of worsted, and straiken yarn, round stoupit beds, kists, barrels, tubes, koags, and bickers, one and a half dozen trenchers, pair of clatts and (hand) cairds, heckles, reeds, dishes and ladles, baskets and creels, posset pig, pair of raxes and ane speit, broad pleats, two chandleis, salt fat, ane pot and flaggon, ane pyt stoup, crook, girdle and pot coffer’ [DMW]. George (d.1689) eldest son of John, minister of Wilton. His will exists, where he left a parcel of books and other goods, some money and bonds due to him. This is recorded at the commissariat of Peebles in 1690, where he is ‘Mr. George Langlands son to Mr. John Langlands late minister at Wiltoun’. It is unclear where he might have been a minister himself (or if he was instead a schoolmaster perhaps). He is probably the ‘Mr Geo: Langlands’ who witnessed a baptism in Hassendean in 1687 for Adam Scott and Esther Langlands (who was his sister). In his will, he is stated to have left ‘ane little parcell off books’, as well as £40 Scots of ‘lying money’ and £400 in cash. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included ‘Rocher’ (b.1724). George (d.1752) of that Ilk, son of Robert and Mary Scott, and brother of Rev. John. He was the second last Laird. He was probably the George ‘of that Ilk younger’ who witnessed a baptism in Wilton in 1709. He may be the George who was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh (as a surgeon) in 1715 and is further listed in Edinburgh records of 1718 and 1721. He is recorded as Laird in a disposition of 1725 and was ‘pres’ of Wilton Kirk Session meetings in 1741 and 1751. He paid the window tax for Langlands in 1748. There are existing papers relating to the sharing of the patronage of Wilton Kirk with the Duke of Buccleuch. He feued part of his estate, including Howlands, in the mid-18th century. He is recorded having an illegitimate child called ‘Rocher’ with Margaret Scott in 1724; the witnesses to the baptism were William ‘Steward’ and James Simpson (perhaps his servants). He married Anna Couper, and their children included: Marion (b.1725); Robert (1727–1803), who succeeded as last Laird; Margaret (1730–1819) last of the local Langlands; William (b.1732); and Isobel (b.1734). The witnesses in 1732 were his brothers William and Archibald ‘uncles to the said child’. George (d.1758) died in Hawick Parish. Henry (19th C.) married Janet Wilson in Wilton in 1826. James (d.aft. 1453) of that Ilk, son of John. He succeeded to the family lands and from then the family surname was ‘Langlands’. He is mentioned in charters from at least 1427, when he was witness to the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig; he is there recorded as ‘Jacobum de Langlandis’. He is probably also the James who was on an ‘inquest of retour’ in 1424 made in Hawick for lands in Hownam (although it is unclear if he was already Laird). In 1431 he granted the lands of Heap (which had been resigned by Robert of Hepe) to Walter Scott ‘Lord of Muirtothoun’ at St. Mary’s Kirk. It thus appears likely that he was already Baron of Wilton at that time. In 1432 he was witness at the old manor of Cavers to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. He is recorded as ‘Jacobus de Langlandis’ in 1437 when he was on the panel in Jedburgh to decide on the dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains, over the lands of the East Mains of Hawick. In 1447 he was ‘Jacobo Langlandis de eodem’ when he witnessed the charter from Margaret Cusing (wife of Simon Routledge, Burgess of Hawick) to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was the father of the John to whom he resigned the half Barony of Wilton in 1451, reserving a free tenement for himself and after his death to his wife Mary (or ‘Mariote’). He also swapped the lands of Milsington with those of Heap with Walter Scott at Wilton Kirk in 1451. And in 1453 he had an ‘excambion’ with Walter Scott of Kirkurd for the freehold of the lands of Wester Heap. This was signed by his son and heir John, as well as Robert of Langlands who must have been a close relative. James of Langlands (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to Richard Rutherford being served heir to his grandfather in 1499. He is recorded as ‘James Langgliens of that Ilk’. Probably the same man was ‘of Wilton’ in 1500 when listed as one of the valuators for Whithope. He was probably either the son or brother of Roger/Robert (who killed George Fairneylaw). He is also probably the ‘James Langlandis of Wiltoun’ listed among 24 Roxburghshire who had remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III, particularly on the field of battle at Stirling. James (d.c.1590) of that Ilk, probably son of John. He is recorded in a sasine of 1559 and in a bond between the Scotts and Kers in March 1564/5, where Walter Scott of Branxholme assumes the burden for ‘James Langlandis of that Ilk and his barnis’. So they were presumably related, perhaps through his wife or mother (and the suggestion is also that he had children by them). Also in that document he is listed (along with Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) as a special ‘umpire’ for the feud between Ker of Cessford and Ormiston of that Ilk. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He is mentioned numerous times in the Register of the Privy Seal. In 1569 he was one of the sureties for some Elliots, that they would enter into ward in St. Andrews. He was admitted as a messenger for Roxburgh by Sir David Lindsay, the Lyon King of Arms, in 1569 and mentioned in an inquest in Jedburgh the same year. He was entered before the Privy Council in 1571. He signed the Roxburgh band and ‘made faith’ to James IV and the Regent Morton in early 1572/3, with Andrew Ker of Falkdonside as his surety; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He was also surety for William, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw at the same time. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573 (‘with my hand at the pen’). He was also in 1573 surety for the non-appearance of William Robson, charged with the murder of William Hall of ‘Wollie’, and had to pay 20 merks to his daughter ‘Malie’ on Robson’s non-appearance. He was recorded as being ‘de Wiltounhill’ in 1574, when he was superior of the lands of Borthaugh (held by the Scotts of Buccleuch). In 1576 he gave a pledge for George Elliot, ‘the Cleg’ and John Stoddart, his ‘cobilman’. Also in 1576 he was a surety along with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Langlands of that Ilk for tenants in Lairhope and Broadlee. Also in 1576 it is mentioned in a charter for Stewart of Minto that he held half the market rights of Minto at that time. Furthermore, in 1576 he had an obligation to relieve sureties before the Privy Council. Also in 1576 he was ordered to pay 20 merks to Malie Hall for satisfaction for the murder of her father, James Hall in Woollie by Will Robson of ‘Rochthewchmylne’. Along with 21 other Border lairds, he was summoned to appear at Stirling as caution for his kinsmen and retainers in 1578/9, but failed to appear. He was stated to have ‘enterit the said Johnne Stodart, his cobillman, to the said lord lieutenant and Justice’, but nevertheless was found liable for the other fines. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he was on a long list of Scots and others summoned to appear before the Privy Council to answer several charges made by Elliot of Braidlie and the Armstrongs. He was denounced a rebel in 1581 (among a large number of Border Lairds accused of not presenting men to answer rieving charges), but must have been reinstated since he was among Lairds invited to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 to help quiet troubles in Teviotdale and Liddesdale. In 1581 he gave sasine to his son and heir Robert of his half Barony of Wilton, retaining lifrent for himself and after his death the payment of 20 bolls of grain annually to his wife Marion Scott for ‘upholding of hir and hir bairnes’; the precept of sasine was made in Selkirk (for unspecified reasons), the witnesses including Walter Riddell of that Ilk, George Scott of Synton, William Scott in Huntly and Walter Veitch of North Synton. The sasine was also recorded in Selkirk, with witnesses Rev.
William Auchmowtie, John (his son) and 2 servants of his son Robert. In 1588 he is recorded in a contract regarding teinds with his son John (Parson of Wilton) and Walter Scott of Harden.
In 1589 he was cauioner for Edward Lorraine of Harwood. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. The last record of him is in 1590 and he is probably the Laird of Langlands listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590 (although probably prepared earlier).
He may be the James Langlands denounced in 1598, along with John Turnbull in Minto, James Turnbull in Hassendean and Walter Scott ‘of Ordschaw’ for not paying Selkirkshire taxes to the Lord of Newbattle. He married Marion Scott and was succeeded by his son Robert. Other sons included Rev. John and probably Andrew. James ‘Jamie’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant of lands of Kelso Abbey in 1567. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being acquitted of crimes in Jedburgh in 1611. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands. He could be the brother of George of that Ilk who was mentioned in 1610 when they petitioned to have their horning and penalties reduced. James (d.c.1695) brother of Rev. John of Wilton. In 1695 his nephew James was served as his heir. He presumably died without issue. His existence may provide a clue to the identity of the father of Rev. John of Wilton.
James (17th C.) son of John, minister of Wilton and younger brother of George, from whom he inherited in 1691. He could be the James listed as resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. In 1695 he was served heir to his uncle James. James (17th/18th C.) Baron of Wilton, who is said to have ridden a black stallion named Nimrod and would turn out in his gaudy finery for a ceremonial marking of the boundaries at the Roughheugh Mill (the axe of its water wheel being on the boundary), with him making a show of defending his property. This was described by Robert Wilson, but it is unclear which period this took place in; the name seems likely to be confused with another Baron. James (18th C.) married Janet Mack in Bedrule in 1737. It is unclear how he was related to the other local Langlands. Janet nee Douglas (d.c.1683) wife of George of that Ilk. She was a widow in her will, which includes a detailed list of her possessions, giving an idea of the contents of a late 17th century mansion house. John (d.c.1363) possibly the first family member to use the name ‘de Langlandis’, he was probably the successor to Thomas de Longueville (or Charteris), inheriting the Peeblesshire estate in 1340. He also had lands at ‘Milsallystoun’ (Milsington) and ‘Ochterhyud’ (Outerside), along with a mill there, which were granted to his widow ‘Mariote Cumyne’ (i.e. Marion Comyn) by David II in 1363. It is possible he was the John, son of Margaret, who had a charter for the Barony of Wilton after it was forfeited by William Maxwell during the reign of David II.
John (15th C.) of that Ilk, son of James. In 1450
he was ‘Johannem de Langlandis’ on the ‘retour’ for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick by William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was granted the (eastern) half Barony of Wilton, along with Langlandshill (in Peeblesshire) in 1451 by James II, the lands having been resigned by his father.
His mother Mary is also mentioned in this charter. This is the first definitive record of a line of Langlands Lairds that would stretch over 300 years. However, it seems clear that the family (or the closely related ‘de Charteris’ family) held the lands for several generations before. He proba-ably moved the family seat from Peeblesshire into Wilton about this time. Also in 1451 he had a charter of ‘excambion’ with Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd (and Buccleuch), where he gave up Millsington for Heap. In 1453 he witnessed a charter of 'excambion' with Walter Scott of Kirkurd involving the freeholding of Wester Heap; Robert of Langlands was also a witness, so probably a brother or uncle. He is recorded attesting that John of St. Michael inherited his father's lands of Whitcheaters in a document of 1455 notarised in St. Mary's Kirkyard. In 1455 he is also recorded as 'Lord of Heip'. He is probably the Johannes Langlandis' listed among the men who received a reward from the King for the capture of James Douglas of Balverny in 1463/4. And presumably the same 'John Langlandis' was on the panel in 1464/5 to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh by Archibald Douglas. It is unclear who succeeded him, but there is probably an extra generation between him and Roger, who was responsible for the death of George Fairneylaw about 1493. John (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. James of Wilton was also listed, and so they may have been related. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. He may be the same 'John of Langlandis' listed among the men chosen by William Douglas of Cavers to value the lands of Whithope in 1500; James of Wilton was also listed there. It is possible he was the 'Joh. Langlandis' who witnessed charters in Edinburgh in 1471 and 1474. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the accounts of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland as an 'Officiar' in the period 1515–1523. The business sometimes involved delivery of letters and proclamations in the Borders, suggesting that he was from the local family, perhaps even the Laird of Langlands. Another James was recorded as 'messenger' to the Queen, delivering letters relating to the complaint between Sir John Kerr of Ferniechirst and the Turnbulls of Bedrule and Hallrule in 1557, and also witnessing the bond of 1557 in which Turnbulls and others swore to bring in William Nixon; it seems unlikely that this is the same man, but surely is related. John (16th C.) of that Ilk, possibly son of Roger. He was witness to a sasine in 1522. In 1528 he may be the John who was listed among the supporters of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, who were summoned to appear before the King and forfeited their lands. He was made a 'nuncio' under the Lyon King of Arms in 1540. However, this is confused by Roger being recorded also in 1531/2. In 1539 he witnessed a notorial instrument for Cranstones. He may also be the same Laird of Langlands mentioned as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1552. John (16th C.) recorded in Dunfermline in 1561. It is unclear how he is related to other Langlands. John (16th C.) recorded at Ancrum Spittal in 1586/7, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (d.c.1602) son of James of that Ilk. He is first recorded in 1575 as 'Johnne Langlandis, reidare at Wilton' (i.e. Reader, meaning he assisted the minister, who served several parishes). He received a stipend of 20 merks and the Kirk lands left vacant by Thomas Weston. Afterwards he was appointed Rector and is recorded as Reader for the period 1574–85. During that time it appears that William Auchmowtie was minister for Wilton and several neighbouring parishes. The division of responsibilities between the 2 men is unclear, and it is also merely a guess that while Auchmowtie was a Protestant minister, Langlands had been trained as a Catholic Priest. Both he and Auchmowtie were witnesses in 1581 to the sasine where his father resigned his half Barony of Wilton to his brother Robert. In 1588 he is recorded as Parson in a contract (in which his father is mentioned as James of that Ilk), with Walter Scott of Harden involving payment of teinds. He was deposed from Wilton some time before 1590, possibly indicating that he had formerly been a Catholic. However, it is also possible that he was reinstated and served until his death, which appears to have been in 1602, when William Clerk became the new minister. It is possible that he was the minister who received the gift of about 80 acres of the Mains of Wilton, but other versions of the story (which seem more likely) say it was the 17th century minister of the same name. However, he was son of the Laird and certainly held property in his own right in Heiton and Easter Heap (and possibly elsewhere), which his son William inherited in 1612. His children included William (who was served as heir about 10 years after his death, suggesting perhaps there was an older brother or otherwise legal complications) and Bessie (who married Adam, brother of William Scott of Burnhead). John (d.bef. 1628) of that Ilk. His name occurs in a bond of 1617, when Border Lairds renewed their promise to keep the peace. He therefore appears to have succeeded George. If he was Baron, then he was succeeded by another George. Alternatively he may have been brother (or other close relative) of George, and not actually Baron himself. Rev. John (d.bef. 1692) minister of Wilton, he was brother of the Laird of Langlands (probably Robert, but possibly George). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1634 and became one of the Masters of Edinburgh High School in 1638. He was also one of the signatories of the Confessions of Faith in Hawick in 1638. He was presented to Wilton by Francis, Earl of Buccleuch (incorrectly given as Bothwell in one account) in 1641. He is reputedly the minister who received the extensive (80 acre) lands of Wilton Glebe (or Mains). It is said that his brother granted him the extra land of Wilton Mains to increase his income to help with his family of 10 (this account was told by the last local Langlands). He baptised Walter Scott, son of Gideon of Highchesters in 1644. There is a record of 1648 involving Gideon Scott and Francis, Earl of Buccleuch over valuation of teinds. In 1649 there is a record of complaint against the Earl of Buccleuch, cravening a more stable stipend, which appears to have been resolved. He also preached occasionally at Borthwick Kirk, probably the last minister to do so; he certainly asked to be freed of his responsibilities in the Borthwick, or to be given a stipend out of it, in 1642. He is listed as proprietor of Wilton in a list of communicants of the area west of Hawick in 1650 (while the Baron, Robert, is listed at Dean Mill); from that document his wife may have been Agnes Douglas, although elsewhere she is named as Anna Douglas (and it is not clear which branch of the Douglas family she was from), and the other household residents (presumably servants) were John Scott, William Douglas, Adam ‘Roe’ (probably Rae), Janet Scott and Janet ‘Roe’. He is recorded in a sasine in 1664 having an annual rent of land at ‘Hayning’ (probably the Haining in Selkirk). In 1662 he was confined to his Parish for refusing to conform to Episcopacy (i.e. being a Covenanter; the younger ministers were removed from their parishes entirely), but possibly did conform, appears to have been reinstated in 1667 and is still recorded as minister in 1669. He continued as minister, but was removed some time after refusing to take the Test. There is a letter of 1683 from the Archbishop of Glasgow to the Persbytery to stop favouring him since he ‘has not preached for some Sundays’, and asking advice about John Stewart, who succeeded him that year; this suggests that he was probably removed because of religious dispute. In 1669 his son James became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh, and in 1692 his son Walter followed suit, by which time he was deceased. His children are listed (presumably in order) in the will of his son George. His daughters were: Anna, who married Henry Haswell in Crailing; Esther, who married Adam Scott in Galalaw; Elizabeth, who married William McKay or Mackie in Dunbar; Margaret, who married William Elphinstoun in Hartshaugh; Marion, who married Walter Leathead, portioner in Lilliesleaf; Agnes, who married Robert Elliot of Rig (i.e. Caerlenrig); and Rebecca and Jennifer, who both stayed in Hawick. His sons were: George, who died in 1689; the already mentioned James; Walter, who lived in Hawick; Robert, who died between 1665 and 1668; and probably John the minister of Hawick (although this is unconfirmed, it seems extremely likely). In 1695 his son James was served as heir to his brother James. It is possible his wife was the ‘Mrs Langlands’ who was taxed for 3 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694. Rev. John (1633–1707) minister of Hawick. Note that he is easily confused with the earlier minister of Wilton of the same name, who was probably his father. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1662, was licensed by the Bishop of Edinburgh in 1666 and was installed in Hawick in October 1667, replacing Presbyterian Alexander Kinnear. He is still recorded as minister in 1684 when the new ‘Steeple Loft’ was built. He was eventually deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not Praying for William and Mary (i.e. he refused to give up Episcopalianism after the Revolution). He was also accused of praying for the late King James. He was the last Episcopalian minister of Hawick Parish, before the Revolution. He is mentioned in an Edinburgh record as marrying ‘without proclamation’ William Murray, younger of Haddin to Margaret Gladstains (daughter of the late Gladstains of that Ilk) in 1693. After his removal he continued to minister in Hawick to a small congregation of Episcopalians (and presumably Jacobite supporters), in a private house at the top of the Kirk Wynd. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Robert Langlands (who was surely related and perhaps his son) renting 1/2 of the farm of Wiltonburn. He is mentioned in a disposition relating to the Alcorne family in 1695. He is recorded in the Gledstains bible baptising 4 of the children of Walter Gledstains in the period 1672–81. He is also said to have moved to the north of England, where his family settled near Alnwick (but this seems more likely to have been the family of one of his brothers). He married Margaret Rutherford in Jedburgh in 1671 and their children were: Robert (b.1675); John (b.1678), who became a doctor; Margaret (b.1681), who presumably died young; Alison (b.1682) who may have married Francis Scott in 1713, and was recorded being in Jedburgh Parish at that time; and Margaret (b.1687). John (b.1678) son of Hawick minister John, he became a doctor. He is mentioned in a disposition of 1708 (in the National Archives) when he assigned lands to William Ainslie of Blackhill. It is possible he was the John in Woodhouselee served as joint heir (along with Robert) of Walter, Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1694 and whose son Walter was served as his heir in 1700. He may be the John who in 1718 petitioned the Bailies of Selkirk to be recognised as the heir of his uncle Walter. John (18th C.) recorded in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for Will Turnbull in Hawick. John Charles (1800-74) direct descendant of the Langlands of Wilton. A son of the Rev. John of Wilton lived and died in Newcastle, his son Ranald was baptised in 1715 and the family continued in Northumberland, with John marrying in 1764, then his son John being baptised in 1773, marrying in 1794 and dying in 1804, and his son being John Charles. He married in 1830 and had 2 sons and 6 daughters. He was born in Newcastle and became tenant of Old Berwick in 1823. He made genealogical notes about the Langlands family. The church there contains memorial panels to several family members. Margaret (1730–1819) daughter of George of that Ilk and sister of Robert, the last Laird of Langlands. She is said (in Wilson’s ‘Memories of Hawick’) to have given the origin of her family as Norman, and described the motto as ‘Bon Esperance’. She died in Hawick, at 26 High Street in reduced circumstances, some accounts saying that this was in 1814 or 15, but the later date is correct, since it is in the Hawick Parish records. She was the last person to be buried in the family aisle in old Wilton Kirk. Since this was below the loft inside the church itself, there was some opposition to this, but it is said that Dr. Charters stated that he would not allow her to be separated from her forefathers. Some of the seats had to be lifted to allow the grave to be dug, and the graveside was lit by candles because of the lack of natural light under the loft. She left £20 ‘to be distributed among the industrious of the parishes of Hawick and Wilton’.

Mrs. ?? (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. She could be the wife of Rev. John or the wife of Robert of that Ilk. Peter (d.1549) Priest at Wilton Kirk. John Greenlaw replaced him after he died. He was presumably son of a former Laird of Langlands. It is probably the same Peter who in 1542 witnessed a procurator where George Rutherford of Hundalee resigned his lands in favour of his son Nicholas Rutherford. Rachel see Rachel Scott. Richard (14th/15th C.) master of the hospital at St. Germain. He witnessed a charter of Robert II in 1421. He was presumably related to the Langlands of that Ilk. Robert (15th C.) witness to the 1451 transfer of Heap for Milsington, between John Langlands of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably the brother of the Laird or younger brother to the heir. James. He also witnessed the related sasine at Milsington in 1453, where he is ‘Roberto de Langlandis’. Robert (15th/16th C.) of that Ilk, said to have been the Baron of Wilton who killed George Fairneylaw. However, it seems more likely that this was Roger, or that the names were used interchangeably. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness in 1512 to the charter where Roger of that Ilk granted his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was surely related to the Laird, probably brother or son. Robert (d.bef. 1610) of that Ilk, son of James. In 1580/1 his father resigned his hold Barony of Wilton in his favour, reserving a liferent for himself, and with a provision to provide for his mother (Marion Scott) and her children. He is recorded as witness to a bond of March 1594/5 (along with William Scott of Allanhaugh and Allan Deans in Hawick) made by James Gledstains, pledging that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. He was still head of the family in a record of 1599. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He was succeeded by George some time before 1610. George’s brothers were Robert and James, and so they were probably all his sons. Similarly, George’s uncle was Adam, so this was probably his brother. His son George was served as his heir in 1611. Robert (17th C.) named by the Hawick Bailie on a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ fit for sending to the army in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Robert (17th C.) of that Ilk. He appears to have succeeded George (probably his father) around 1640. In 1638 he signed the Confession of Faith and is recorded there as ‘fier of yt. ilke’. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and was also on the Committee of War for the county in 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1648. He was the second largest landowner in Wilton Parish (after the Earl of Buccleuch) in a 1643 valuation, with a value of £953 16s 8d. He was probably also the Robert whose land in Hawick was valued at £3 in 1643. He is also recorded as a heritor of Wilton in 1649. Probably the same Robert was proprietor of Dean Mill in a list of communicants of 1650, and from that document his wife may have been Margaret ‘Per’ and their (adult) children George, Adam and Margaret. In any case, he was probably succeeded by George. In 1659 another son Robert is recorded becoming a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was fined £1,800 (about 2 full years rental as valued on his estates) in 1662 for refusing to give up Episcopacy. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He was probably the brother of John, minister of Wilton (who was similarly fined). He must have been the Robert of that Ilk recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when he paid tax on £992, with part ‘pertaining to Margaret Donaldson’, who may have been his wife. Robert (17th C.) probably related to the Wilton family, although the connection is unclear. He was a tutor of a branch of the house of Cardross, being governor of the brothers of the Earl in the 1670s. In 1675 he was seized by guards under Sir Mungo Murray, but later released. He took refuge in Holland, returned after the Revolution and became a minister. Robert (17th C.) son of Robert of that Ilk. In 1659 he became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Perhaps the same Robert ‘Son of Robert of that Ilk’ was recorded in a deed in 1673. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhaugh. In the 1686 ratification of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is stated that he was sometimes occupier of Whames. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could be the Robert, married to Isobel Scott, whose daughter Isobel was born in Hawick in 1680. The witnesses to that baptism were Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and George Scott of Boonraw (who were probably related to his wife). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Scott in 1688. Robert (17th C.) rented 1/2 of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1694 and 1696. Rev. John acted as his cautioner; this makes it clear that he was not the same man as Robert of that Ilk, but it also suggests that he was probably related to the minister. It seems possible that he may be the Robert, son of Rev. John, born in 1675. His will is recorded in 1696, suggesting that this is when he died. However, he could be the Robert whose death is recorded in Wilton in 1709. Robert (d.bef. 1725) of that Ilk, probably the son of George and Janet Douglas. He was most likely the Laird who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and again in 1690. He was also probably the Laird of Langlands in 1694 when his interests in Wilton Parish are recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls; he paid tax for 6 hearths at his house. In 1687 he was granted a sasine for 2 tenements in Hawick, and is also recorded in another Hawick sasine in 1691. He also owned the piece of the Sandbed on which the Grammar School would be built, which he bought in 1701 and sold to Adam Elliot of Arkleton in 1713. In 1701 he obtained a lease of Wester Aleemoor from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for gardener Robert Roger in Hawick in 1701. In 1704 he was again listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Mary Scott and a sasine in her favour, recorded in 1690, may have been part of the marriage contract; it is unclear from which branch of the Scotts his wife came. His son George succeeded before 1725, when his widow was still alive. His eldest daughter was Isabella, who married Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk and died in 1740. He also had sons William and Archibald, who witnessed a baptism for their brother George in 1732. Dr. Robert (1727–1803) of that Ilk. Son of George, he was the last Laird of Langlands, being served heir of the half Barony of Wilton in 1758 (with Walter Irwin acting as factor in the interim). Born in Hawick, he studied medicine in Edinburgh and practised there as a surgeon, perhaps also serving with the family of the Duke of Argyll. He played an active part in the work of Wilton Parish in the period 1759–73, his name appearing regularly in the minute books. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. As a member of the Roads Trustees Committee, he was the principal proponent for the building of the New Road for many years before it was finally approved by the Roads Trustees. His first proposal was in around 1765, which was opposed by the Duke of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain, his only supporters then being Elliott of Stobs and Scott of Synton; the road was finally built 50 years later. He was also a local Justice of the Peace in the 1760s. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He appears to have sold off the patronage of Wilton Kirk to Henry,

Langlands

Duke of Buccleuch. The estate was already much reduced when he inherited it, but it further diminished under his Lairdship. The estate was handed over to trustees (Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs and writers Thomas Tod and Cornelius Elliot) in the 1770s, and the final part was sold off in 1783. However, he kept the superiority of Langlands and on that basis was kept on the voters roll for Roxburghshire in 1780. He returned to Edinburgh to practise as a doctor in the mid-1770s. He is recorded in 1780 obtaining 'liferent' of the lands of Broomhall and part of Mertoun from Walter Scott of Harden, with sasine following in 1792. In 1783 he donated 'a chicken, preserved in spirits, having two heads conjoined laterally at the back of the skull' to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He remained unmarried and died in Edinburgh in April 1803, being buried in Old Calton cemetery, in the burial place of the Boyds of Maxpoffile.

Roger (15th/16th C.) of that Ilk, Baron of Wilton. Based on dates he is probably a grandson of John of Langlands who is last recorded in 1455. He is said to have beheaded the messenger of Melrose Abbey, George Fairneylaw, around 1493 or 1494, in a dispute over tithes payable to the Abbey (although Fairneylaw was actually a cleric of the Diocese of Glasgow, and his own name is often incorrectly given as ‘Robert’). The tradition also states that the Heap Cross marked the spot of the murder, although this is long gone (and seems likely to have existed long before).

He is supposed to have immediately sought the King’s pardon, saying that he had knocked the bonnet off a dignitary of the church, and omitting to say that his head had been in it! The only historical record (from the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, described in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’) is of Sir Robert Ker and John Rutherford of Edgerston being sureties for his appearance to answer to the slaughter of ‘Sir George Farnylaw, chaplain’, and of him being denounced a rebel and being fined (then having all his goods forfeited to the King) in February 1494/5 for failure to appear. He appears to have had a sasine for Wilton in 1503. He was reconciled at least by 1506, when he was witness at an inquest held in Jedburgh. He was also witness to a ‘retour’ of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1508 and another of Adam Hepburne, Earl of Bothwell that same year. In 1512 there is a charter of transfer of his lands at Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill (the name connection with the lands perhaps suggesting he was perhaps a relative) for 1 penny ‘blench farm’ payable at Pentecost in Wilton Kirk. Robert was a witness, and so presumably a relative. There are no records of him after this (and John is mentioned in 1522), so perhaps he did not survive Flodden – ‘Oh, Langlands ye’re a graceless man An’ a graceless man are ye; If ye wunna pay the kirk its due The kirk’s curse ye maun dree’ [FL].

Roger (16th C.) recorded as ‘of Wiltonhull’ in 1531/2 in a charter of the lands of Borthaugh. This may indicate that there was another generation in the early 16th century, and he may have succeeded from John and been succeeded by another John. Roger (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Hawick in 1610. George of that Ilk acted as cautioner for him (and several other Langlands and Scotts) that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawaugh) and his associates. He was surely a relative of George of that Ilk (but probably not brother or uncle, since that would have been stated). Thomas (14th/15th C.) Abbot of Newbattle in 1422. He is recorded as ‘de Langlandis’ and so presumably directly related to the main family branch. Walter of Brieryhill (16th C.) signatory of the local Confession of Faith in 1638. He signed along with George of that Ilk, Robert (George’s son and heir) and Andrew, who were all surely close relatives. Walter (d.c.1694) Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1689 he is described as ‘chamberlain to Sir William Scot of harden elder and younger’ in a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk regarding annual rent. In 1694 his brothers Robert and John were served as his joint heirs. Robert was described as his immediately younger brother, and John was in ‘Woodhouselie’. His will is recorded in Lauder in 1698, where he is described as Chamberlain to Sir Walter Scott of Harden in the Parish of Merton. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands; however, given the earlier connections of the Langlands of Wilton to the Scotts of Harden, it is probable he was from the local family. Perhaps he was the eldest (and otherwise unrecorded) son of Rev. John of Hawick, who also had sons Robert and John. He may be the Walter whose nephew petitioned the Bailies of Selkirk in 1718 to be recognised as his heir. William (15th C.) served as surety in 1493, along with the Laird of Bedrule, for John Sinclair in Minto, as well as for John Aitkin and Thomas Bell. It seems likely that he was either Laird of Langlands, or closely related. William (16th/17th C.) son of John, Rector of Wilton. In 1612 he inherited land at ‘Heytoun’ (possibly Heiton) and an annual grant of grain from ‘Eister.

Heap'. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Haining recorded in 1618 among men accused of illegally carrying guns. He was ststed to be too poor to find caution and hence promised not to repeat the offence on pain of banishment and having his hand cut off if he returned. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their son William was baptised in 1719, with witnesses William Cunningham and Beadle John Scott. He is probably the William whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish in 1737. William (d.1785) died in Hawick Parish. William (18th/19th C.) married Janet Notman in Minto in 1794 (spelled 'Langlandes', 'Langlandis', 'Langlanis', etc. in earlier documents).

the Langlands ( thu-langw-lindz) n. important family in Wilton, from perhaps as early as 1290, and certainly 1451, until the family sold off the Langlands estate in 1783, with the last local family member dying in Hawick in 1819. Langlands Hill in Peebleshire may have been the original family seat. The family may have once been 'Longueville', while the 'de Charteris' family may also have been one and the same; however, these connections have been the subject of much debate. Local members were buried in the eastern end of old Wilton Church, in an aisle under the gallery. A branch of the local family moved to the Newcastle area and there are memorial panels to some of them in Old Berwick church. The seal of the local family (showing a lion rampant, without motto) is in the Museum. The family shield is silver with a red chevron and 3 mullets (stars), while the crest shows an anchor standing in the sea and the motto is 'Spero' ('I hope') or 'Bon Esperance'. The family seal was donated to the Museum in 1856 and an armorial panel in Wilton Kirk was apparently painted over in the middle of the 19th century – 'They saw bold Langlands proudly ride In armour burnished bright, With stately Wallace by his side, Fair freedom's fearless knight' [II], 'And Langlands ne'er meets the marchmen now, To see that his flag is planted fair, And peace prevails where once was feud, And Langlands o' Langlands is nae mair' [BCM1880].

Langlands Bank (lawng-lindz-bawnk) n. long row of working-class housing, built between 1850 and 1855, on a parallel street to the south of Langlands Road, and named after the Langlands family who once owned the area. A series of steps led down to the lower level flats. The block can be seen in an 1865 photograph, with little other housing around. The houses were demolished in 1971 and the site grassed over, with the rubble being used to raise the level of the Big Haugh.

Langlands Boathoose (lawng-lindz-bō-hoos) n. Langlands Boathouse, once in the grounds of what is now Deanfield, and the home of the Coble Pool ferryman. Walter Rutherford was living at 'Boathouse' in 1730 and William Allan was at 'boathouse' in 1732.

Langlands Brig (lawng-lindz-brig) n. Langlands Bridge, a footbridge across the Teviot in Wilton Lodge Park, off Buccleuch Road at the western end of the Playing Fields. It was erected in 1894 and marks the former boundary of the Burgh (named after the Langlands family).

Langlands Cauld (lawng-lindz-kawld) n. another name for the Coble Cauld (mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common).

Langlands Court (lawng-lindz-kōr) n. sheltered housing complex built in 1984 near the previous Langlands Bank, and on the site of the former St. Margaret’s Church.

Langlands Dean (lawng-lindz-deen) n. former name for Wilton Dean. It was in use in baptismal records from at least 1797, but had died out by the 1860s.

Langlands Mill (lawng-lindz-nil) n. another name for Ladylaw Mill (sometimes called 'Langlands and Ladylaw Mills' or 'Langlands Spinning Mill'), long the property of the Wilson family, and later the main factory of Wilson & Glennys. For a time the Langlands Mill part was separate, also sometimes known as the Roughheugh Waulk Mill. A new factory was built behind Dangerfield Mill, probably been 1810 and 1818 when the Wilson and Watson partnership ended; this is marked 'Langlands Spinning Mill' on Wood’s 1824 map. It was originally constructed for Wilson to supply yarn for his expanding stocking frame business. The mill was driven by water in the Wilton Dam. In 1831 it contained the first steam engine built in Hawick (by Melrose’s). A separate mill was built perhaps 1851 on a site adjacent to the Roughheugh Waulk Mill, and known at that time as 'Ladylaw', distinct from Roughheugh.

Langlands Park (lawng-lindz-pawrk) n. villa built possibly for James Oliver. It was designed in Scottish baronial style by Glasgow-based architect John Thomas Rochead in 1863. The house was renovated for Peter Scott in 1914, and so may have changed its name.
Langlands Place

Langlands Place (lawng-lindz-plis) n. street that was incorporated into Wilton Crescent in 1865 (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Langlands Raik (lawng-lindz-rák) n. area mentioned in an old description of the Common at Myreslawgreen, meaning an extent of land used for grazing sheep or cattle – ‘the highway from West Port to Langlands Raik on the east’ (i.e. the ‘Common Vennel’, so that ‘Langlands Raik’ must have been around the Playing Fields or Coble; this could be ‘Reach’, i.e. a stretch of the Teviot).

Langlands Road (lawng-lindz-röd) n. street stretching from the top of Roadhead to Wilton Path. It was once known as ‘the kirk road from Wilton to Langlands’, and was named around 1868. The street was once very narrow, but widened about 10 feet in 1904, with some demolition of houses at the Roadhead end. The street was extended when Langlands Bank was demolished in 1971.

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. house above Langlands Road, built in 1907 to designs by J.P. Alison. It may have originally been built for for manufacturer T.A. Laing and was later the home of George Scott, son of the founder of Pesco’s.

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. farm on the west side of the Jed Water, opposite Ferniehirst Castle. It was listed as ‘Langle’ in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at 25 shillings. It is probably the lands of ‘Langley’ listed among those held by the French family in 1588 (and formerly part of the holdings of Jedburgh Abbey). It was owned by the Bruce family from the early 1800s, then the Dalrymples. James Fair owned the lands in 1788 and through the early 19th century, passing them to his nephew James Elliot Shortreed-Fair. It was bought by Charles Scott of Howcleuch (son of Walter of Wuahepole) in the late 19th century. The house built about the 1790s was replaced with a design by David Bryce in the 1860s. There is planted parkland from an earlier period (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Langly’).

Langley Cleuch (lawng-lee-klooč) n. small stream in Liddesdale, that rises near Blinkbonnt and runs through Langleycleuch Wood to become part of the Tweedden Burn.

Langlie (lawng-II) n. the act of staying in bed longer than usual, a sleep in – ‘tall folk aye huv a lang lie’.

Lang-leggit (lawng-le-gee’-gi’) adj. having long legs – ‘Lang leggit Jess o’ Cruikishaws Regrets that she refused his offer . . .’ [TCh].

Lang-luggit (lawng-in-gee’-gi’) adj. having long ears.

the Lang Moss (thn-lawng-mos) n. area near the northern extent of the old Wilton Common, now on Drinkstone farm, just to the west of Drinkstone Hill (and marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). It was near here that the temporary grave of ‘Jenny Saut Haar’ was located. There is another ‘Long Moss’ near Cavers Knowes farm.

Langmoss Knowe (lawng-mos-now) n. small hill on the northern side of Drinkstone Hill, containing the remains of some ancient enclosures.

Lang-nebbit (lawng-ne-bee’, -bi’) adj., arch. long-nosed – ‘O ye lang-nebbit pryn’ race, Who kittle words an’ letters trace’[JR], astute, learned – ‘Lang-nebbit words he has in store, His brains were ne’er surpassed by ony; Kirk session law, he bang’d it a’, Did Cuillie Jock o’ auld Blinkbonny’[DA].

Langnewton (lawng-new’in) n. Longnewton, hamlet about 3 miles south of Newton St. Boswells. This was also a small, ancient parish, which was absorbed into Ancrum at the end of the 17th century. Hence it was once the western part of the later Parish of Ancrum. The church was described as a benefice of 8 merks in 1220; there is now no sign of it. The Rectory belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. John of ‘Longa Newton’ swore paid homage to Edward I in 1296. The barony was granted to Robert, Stewart of Scotland by Robert the Bruce around the 1320s, and by the late 14th century the barony was held by a branch of the Douglases. In 1377 there was an indenture between John of Kinghorn and William, son of William of Newbigging for lands there. There were Rutherfords there in the 15th century. Patrick and Arthur Crawford were at the mill there in 1493. Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, was infested in lands there in 1499/1500 and the lands were confirmed to Adam, Earl of Bothwell in 1511. There was a tower house here in the 16th century, which in 1513 was given to the custody of Adam, Master of the Anchorite Order, for protection, and in 1589 it was taken by Andrew Ker of Newhall, who was then denounced as a rebel. In addition the Kers of Newhall broke parts of Langnewton Mill in 1589. In the latter part of the 16th century lands there were Langowater

Was held by James Douglas of Lochleven as Com- mendator of Melrose; in 1586 he complained that an armed band of Kers, Rutherfords and others had prevented him ‘fra teinding and leiding his tynidis tairof’. The Barony was held by Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch when he inherited his father’s lands and rights in 1634. The whole Parish was valued at about £2500 in 1643 and 1663 and was held by the Earl of Lothian. It was among baronies and lands inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Patrick Scott, squire of Auncrum, paid the land tax on the whole parish there in 1678, when it was valued at about £2200. Langnewtown Moor was said to be a location for Covenantanter meetings around 1680. There was formerly a mill here, on the right bank of the Teviot, as well as a school. The area to the north of the village was formerly known as Longnewton Common – ‘The Craig for strength, Woodhead for length, Palacehill for beauty, Sandystones the most confused place In all Longnewton barony’ [T] (the name first appears as ‘Longa Neutun’ in 1220, and is thereafter often ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langneutone’, ‘Langnewtone’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtoune’, ‘Langnewtown’, ‘Langnewtowne’, ‘Longnewtoun’, or similar; it is ‘Lang new’ on Gordon’s map [of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas; the origin is simply Old English for ‘long new town’, which is descriptive of the village).

Langowater (lang-o-waw’-ur) n. former farmstead in upper Teviotdale. In the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed between Hislop and Blackcleugh, ‘estimat to 20 lb., 3 lb. in teynd’ with ‘no corne’. It is unclear precisely where it was located.

Lang Penman (lang-pen-min) n. nickname for a minor riever, captured by the Laird of Buccleuch in 1530. He was also recorded in 1535 as ‘servant of one called Dikkis Wille’ (possibly William Armstrong, son of Richard) among a list of men denounced as rebels for a raid on the farm at Craik. His surname was probably Penman and he was presumably tall.

Langraw (lang-raw) n. farm just south of Bonchester Bridge. The land there was apparently once owned by monks from Jedburgh Abbey, as part of the Barony of Abbotrule. David ‘Schewill’ (or Sheil) was tenant there in 1516 and another David recorded there in 1567. A tower there was burned by the English in 1545. In 1569 it was acquired (along with several other lands) by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and was still listed as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Archie Turnbull ‘of Langraw’ was recorded in 1579/80. Robert Elliot ‘in Langraw’ is recorded in 1610, a Shiel was tenant in 1626 and George Shiel in 1688. The lands were valued at £104 in 1643 and 1663, with Lyle Shiel in 1643 and George Shiel in 1663 owning an additional £52 there. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, William Turnbull ‘of Langraw’ was taxed for having 2 hearths, and James Shiel, ‘portioener’ there, was also taxed for 2 hearths. Alexander Turnbull was tenant there in 1738. Walter Barrie and Thomas Hope are recorded as tenants in 1797. It was owned by the Turnbulls through the 17th and 18th centuries, until sold off by the heir of the last Laird in 1801. It was purchased by William Oliver and held by that family through most of the 19th century. William Oliver was owner in 1811, when it was valued at £104. By about 1874 it was partly owned by George Tancred of Weens, the other part by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. From 1882 it was tenanted jointly by William Bell junior and senior. A collection of partly burned bones was discovered here in the 19th century, in a circular area about 18 feet in diameter, reported in the Statistical Account in 1836; this could be the same as the tumulus that is reported to have existed there in 1926. A socketed bronze axe found there was donated to the National Museum of Antiquities in 1833. A stone axe-head, whorls and an arrow-head were found there and in the collection of Walter Deans (it is ‘Langrav’ in 1516; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langraw Scaur (lang-raw-skawr) n. former name for cottages near Langraw (by Bonchester Bridge), presumably named for a ‘scaur’ there. It was also known as ‘Scaur Nook’. William Oliver, hind at Langraw, lived there in the mid-19th century.
Lang Sandy

Lang Sandy (lawng-sawn-dee) n. nickname for Alexander Scott.

Langshaw (lawng-shaw) n. ruined 16th century L-plan tower a few miles north of Galashiels, stronghold of the Borthwicks. It is very close to Colmslie and Hillslap towers. It was in the hands of Lord Home in the latter part of the 15th century and was once a seat of the Murrays. Part of it was rented from Melrose Abbey by the Pringles of Galashiels according to a document of 1529 (the name is probably simply Old English for ‘the long wood’ and is first recorded in 1586; it was spelled ‘Langschaw’ and variants and was later ‘Lainshaw’).

Langshawburn (lawng-shaw-burn) n. remote farmstead over into Dumfriesshire, just to the west of Craik Cross Hill. It was once split into Upper and Nether Langshawburn. Cowans and Murrays lived there in 1841 (it is marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch).

lang shears (lawng-sheerz) n., arch. period of work, labour – ‘By the ‘lang sheers o’ Gordon’ I’ll pay ye a’ off; Another day’s work ye shall ne’er hae frae me’ [JoHa], ‘She’s come throw the lang shears’ [GW].

Langside (lawng-sid) n. villa at 39 Weensland Road. It was built for manufacturer Adam Darling in the latter part of the 19th century. James Burnet was there in the 1930s (also written ‘Langsyde’).

Langside (lawng-sid) n. former name for the lands at Langsidebrae. It formed part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs in 1678. At about that time it was said that the Covenanter Alexander Peden arrived at the farm incognito, asking for work in exchange for accommodation, only for the family from there to recognise him when he preached at Ruberslaw on the next Sunday, and still recorded that way in 1811 and in about 1874. William Pott was living there in 1702, Walter Bowie in 1719, William Scott in 1757 and William Nichol in 1769 (it is ‘Langsyde’ in 1573, 1692 and 1698 and ‘Langside’ in 1678).

Langside (lawng-sid) n. farm near Bowden. A story is told of the Covenanter Alexander Peden working there in disguise and then being recognised by locals at a field preaching on the following Sunday. There were Elliots of Langside in the 17th century (easily confused with Lansidebrae near Shankend).

Langsidebrae (lawng-sid-bra) n. farmstead just to the west of the Langside Burn above Shankend in the upper Slitrig valley. This is probably the ‘Langside’ listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Bailol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. The lands here are referred to as just ‘Langside’ in a 1511 charter of Douglas of Cavers. In 1573 Douglas of Cavers had a decree to remove Robert Elliot of Redheugh from these lands, but Elliot argued that ‘his fader and guidsire wes in possessioun of the saidis landis thir mony yeres bigane’. It is probably the farm of that name, possessed by William, younger of Cavers in about 1614 when some livestock were stolen. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when that was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was ‘Langsye’ owned by the Elliots of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. inherited by Sir William Elliot in 1692. John Elliot was tenant in ‘Langside’ in 1694. Walter and James Armstrong were farmers there in 1797, with William Hobkirk as shepherd. Thomas Cairns was there in 1868. John Rae was shepherd here in the mid-19th century. Charles Anderson was there in the early 1900s.

Langside Burn (lawng-sid-burn) n. stream joining the Slitrig at Shankend and fed by smaller streams that rise on the slopes of the Maidens and Greatmoor, including Fore Burn, Mid Burn, Back Burn and Pap Sike. In its upper part is the waterfall of Hawkha Ha, with an adjacent earthwork. A little further down, near where it crosses the line of the Catrail are the remains of a farmstead, being a D-shaped enclosure about 55 m across, with signs of 2 sets of rectangular foundations, one inside and one outside. The stream runs through Langside Burn Wood, near where the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows some buildings. The steadings of Langsidebrae is to the west. There is a farm of the same name in Bowden Parish and several others across Scotland.

Langside Burn (lawng-sid-burn) n. former name for a stream near Whithope, perhaps Whames Sike. It is listed as ‘langsideburne’ in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands between Whithope and Whames.

Langslack Sike (lawng-slak-sik) n. Longslack Sike, stream that flows roughly north-east to join the Jed Water, to the east of Southdean Mill. The area is rich in archaeological remains. Hyndhaughhead Tower lay on its northern banks, and
Lang Sike

Slack’s Tower a little to the south. There was another tower house just 150 m east of Hyndhaughhead, on the south side of the stream. The foundations are still visible, about 6.6 m by 3.8 m, surrounded by banks, and with 2 larger farmstead buildings adjacent. There are also signs of rig lines, enclosures and other banks from the former farm. It is also possible that there are remains of a homestead here, buried in peat. This may correspond to ‘Watersythe’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map.

Lang Sike (lawng-sik) n. small stream joining the Leap Burn just to the west of Robert’s Linn bridge. The Catrail crosses just to the south and there are the remains of a settlement there, being about 110 m in diameter and enclosing 3 platforms. The area is now covered with forest.

Langsyne (lawng-sum) adj., arch. slow, tedious, weary, lengthy – ‘But I forget the langsyne years that o’er our head ha’ae fled, I dinna see the burning tears Thae een o’ blue ha’ae shed’ [JT].

the Lang Stand Oot (thu-lawng-stand-oo’) n. local industrial dispute of 1822–23, lasting 14 months. It was prompted by the Hawick hosiers employers trying to reduce wages so that they could price their goods more competitively. This was a combined effort of all the town’s manufacturers, except William Beck. Plays and other entertainments were put on in the ‘Town Hall and elsewhere to raise money for the strikers. Strike leaders were imprisoned in Jethart Jail, but were freed without trial. Eventually the employers conceded.

Langsyne (lawng-syn) adj., arch., poet. of long ago, old-time, ancient – ‘Lang syne, whan decent gude grey caith, Did hap the laird an’ tenant baith’ [JR], ‘A’ ye wha doat on langsyne things, Wha heap auld armour up in bings …’ [JoHa], ‘…Gin I be near, I’ll buy’t a flock, For auld langsyne’ [JoHa], ‘Jingo ring was mair i’ ma line i’ th’ langsyne days …’ [HEx1919], adv., arch., poet. long ago, literally ‘long since’ – ‘But aa mind a day, lang-syn, Aa met ee at The Vertish edge’ [DH], ‘And whiles I think that muckle o’ life’s fun, The satisfaction kent langsyne …’ [WL], n., arch., poet. the days of the past, old times, nostalgia – ‘…The perfect content o’ the games o’ lang syne’ [??], ‘Fra sister fonts o’ auld lang syne Sae flows your gutterblade wi’ mine’ [JEDM], ‘Gane, the auld petted ewie that fed on the lea – Naething left o’ langsyne but my grandfather’s tree’ [DA] (sometimes written as one word, ‘langsyne’).

Lang Synton (lawng-sin-tin) n. possible former name for lands, perhaps near Synton. In 1679 John Shortreed in ‘Longsintoune’ had a discharge for payment with the Burgh of Selkirk and he was in ‘Langseintein’ in 1681.

Lang Tae (lawng-tā) n. hill in Craik Forest, near the head of Wolfcleuch Burn. It reaches a height of 438 m.

Langtae Hill (lawng-tā-hil) n. hill just to the west of Wolfcleuch. It reaches a height of 554 m (1,786 feet) and is the source of the Skelfhill Burn.

Lang-tholance (lawng-thō-līns) adj., poet. long-suffering – ‘…fu’ o’ tendir pitie, an’ gra-cious, lang-tholance, an’ waynesum in mercie an’ trouth’ [HSR].

Langton (lawng-tin) n. William (b.1814/5) from England, he worked as a stocking frame-smith in Hawick. In 1841 he was at about 55 High Street, but by 1851 he had moved to O’Connell Street. His brothers John and James were living with him by then. The family moved to 15 Backdamgate, then back to O’Connell Street by 1871. In 1837 in Hawick he married Mehala Dow, from London. Their children included: William (b.1837), also a frame-smith; Rebecca (b.1840); Mehala (or Matilda, b.1844); Mary (b.1847); John (b.1854); Catherine (b.1851); John (b.1854); Eliza (b.1856); and Ann (b.1861).

Langtonheight (lawng-tīn-hī) n. farmstead in Ashkirk Parish, just to the east of Synton Parkhead. It is probably the ‘Langtoun’ where Thomas Hunter was tenant in 1697 and William Hislop was servant in 1698. Janet Robson was a widow living there in 1709 and Walter Veitch was tailor there in at least 1715–19. In 1716 Walter Dunlop was tenant there, Michael Anderson was herd and Thomas Scott was cottar. Francis Cumming was cottar in 1717 and John Dunlop was tenant in 1724. This is recorded as ‘Longtown’ where Michael Anderson and Walter Veitch were located in 1719. Walter Thomson was farmer there in 1797, with 4 work horses on the farm. Walter Scott was shepherd there in 1851 (it is ‘Longtonheight’ in 1797; ‘Longtown’ is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Langtoon (lawng-town) n. Longtown, town on the A7 towards Carlisle, about 3 miles south of the Border. It has a handsome bridge, is near to the site of the Battle of Solway Moss (1542), and was a former station on the Waverley Line. Population about 3,000 – ‘…the wunner was Dick Wricht thre th Langtoon whae got echt pound iz heis reward’ [BW1974].

Langview

Langview (lawng-vew) n. Longview, a Victorian villa-style house behind the ‘Auld Man’s Sate’.

lang-wundit (lawng-wun-dee) adj. long-winded – ‘Ilk ane believes the other ane A great lang-wundit blether, An’ like the man that couldna’ speak On anything but leather’ [FL], ‘That langwundeet title remains iz the offishial yin altho it’s seldom spoken at length’ [BW] (also written ‘langwundeet’, etc.).

Lanso (lawn-so) n. short form for ‘John Laing & Sons Ltd.’, but not nearly as commonly used as ‘Pesco’.

Lant (lawn‘in, lawn‘tin) n. former lands in the Barony of Hawick, probably the same as Harwudhill. The ratification of the Barony to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686 lists ‘the lands of Harwoodhill and Emmetshields, somtimes called Lant and Emmetshells’.

the Lantern Show (thu-lan-turn-shō) n. former name for a slide-show, particularly those associated with the Brethren Hall in Old Manse Lane in the early part of the 20th century.

Lanton (lawn‘in, lawn‘tin) n. village about 8 miles north-east of Hawick, half a mile off the A698. It contains several 18th century buildings and also a 16th century peel tower incorporated into Lanton House. There is also a garden having a plaque inscribed with Wullie Landles’ poem ‘Lanton’. The village used to be home of the Crowner (i.e. coroner) of Roxburgh and was also known as Cranstoun. Lands here were part of the original grant to Jedburgh Abbey in the early 12th century. Later the lands were split among several different owners, with a total value of more than £1700. Janet Turnbull had sasine for the lands in 1506, and Margaret and Elizabeth Turnbull in 1506. The area was burned by Dacre’s men, led by Sir Roger Fenwick in late 1513, and by Hertford’s men in 1545. A ‘6 pound land of Langtoune’ was owned by the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch from at least 1502; they were valued at £6 in 1574, when still held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634 and 1653, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The Mathers of Lanton were a prominent family in the Jedburgh area in the 17th century. A large part of the land passed to the Douglases sometime in the 17th century (with 2 acres there being included among possessions of the Douglases of Cavers in 1687 and 1698) and was sold to the Fergusons in 1694, then passed to the Youngs and the Browns. Rev. George Dickson held part of the lands from 1770, and they were sold by his trustees to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot in 1796. In the 1788 county valuation draft lands there were owned by George Black of Menslaws, the Duke of Buccleuch, George Dickson’s trustees, William Douglas of Timpendean, Walter Hunter of Polmood, Andrew Mather, John Mather’s heirs, Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters, James Porteous, Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth, Robert Scott, William Turnbull and Thomas Waugh of Hawkburn. There was once a school in the village (the origin is probably Old English ‘longa tun’, meaning ‘the long town’; it first occurs as ‘Langton’ in the mid-12th century, remaining that way for centuries, and still being ‘Langton’ and ‘Langtown’ into the late 18th century; it is ‘Langtoun’ on Blaeu’s map of 1654).

Lanton (lawn‘in, lawn‘too) n. William (15th C.) member of the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. He is recorded as being of ‘Langthoun’.

Lanton Hill (lawn‘in-hil) n. hill south of Lanton village and west of Jedburgh, containing a farm of the same name. There are 2 forts on its northern side. There is also a linear feature stretching from here to the south, towards the Dunion.

Lanton Lady Lands (lawn‘in-lā-dee-lawndz) n. lands near Lanton that were once owned by the Douglases of Cavers and valued at £10. The lands were incorporated into Jedburgh Parish before 1788. They are described as ‘formerly in Cavers Parish’ in the 1788 draft valuation, when they belonged to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. The name suggests that the lands were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers once held the patronage (along with Hassendean Lady Lands).

Lanton Mains (lawn‘in-mānْz) n. farm just past Knowesouth on the A698. In 1870 a Bronze Age cist was discovered there, containing skeletal remains, a beaker and flint flakes.

lantreen (lan-treen) n. arch. a lantern – ‘A’ll leh ti wire in, or thance A’ll no can wun doon in teime for the majeek-lantreen’ [ECS].
Larristofts (law-ris-tofts) n. lands listed in 1511 among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands continued to be listed in 1572 when James Douglas inherited the Barony of Hawick. In 1615 it is transcribed ‘Lairis, Tofts, Kirkwood’, which is probably ‘Larristofts and Kirkwood’. It seems likely that this is related to the lands of Lairis near Teviothead, and unrelated to Larriston, although of course there may be other possibilities (it is ‘Laristoftis’ in 1511 and ‘Lairis Tofts’ and ‘Lairris Toftis’ in 1572).

Larriston (law-ris-tin) n. farm on the Liddel Water, south of Saughtree. The Larriston Burn, draining from Larriston Fells, joins the Liddel just below here. A former tower there was an important seat of the Elliots from the early 16th century. It is suggested that the site of the tower was on the Larriston Burn near Upper Larriston, some distance from the main house today. However, there may have been a separate tower-house near the modern house. Jeffrey says that when the foundation were dug up in about 1800 a large oven and an 18 pound cannon-ball were found. It may be the ‘Lanorowstanes’ listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale.

Two separate farms there were formerly called Over and Nether Larriston; these were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh by the Earl of Angus in 1484. The farm was occupied by several Nixons in 1544. This was probably the site of the tower built by Martin Elliot of Braidlie in the 1570s and which was attacked by the English in 1584 (referred to in another English account as ‘Martins tower’). Probably a new tower was built by Robert Elliot of Redheugh in the late 1580s, since an English letter of 1596 describes that he ‘within these 12 years, has erected another called laristone’. The last Robert of Redheugh mostly resided there in the early 17th century. He had a daughter Margaret, who married James Eliott, son of ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Garters’, and their son Gilbert became the next Elliot of Larriston. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls the whole estate was valued at £1934, with Larriston itself valued at £834. Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt and the lands of Over and Nether Larriston were sold to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688. Tax was paid for 4 hearths at the house in 1694, and there was a shepherd and another house with a kiln recorded. Robert Elliot was able to buy back the lands in 1695, reinstating the dower rights from the rents to his grandmother (Margaret of Redheugh). Bonnie Prince Charlie is said to have spent the night here on his march south, and for a long time the bed he slept in was pointed out. When the farms of the Scotts of Buccleuch were surveyed in 1718 there were 3 small pieces of land belonging to the farm in loops of the Liddel Water adjacent to Riccarton farm. The Elliots of Larriston finally lost the lands through debt, selling Over and Nether Larriston and Larriston Rig to John Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1719 (for £1,808 6 shillings sterling). However, they were back in Elliot hands when purchased by Maj.-Gen. William Elliot (from William Oliver of Dinlabyre) in 1786. In 1788 the lands were recorded valued at £834. Maj.-Gen. Elliot left the lands to his cousin’s son, George Fraser Scott, who took the additional surname ‘Elliot’. This George Scott-Elliot was Laird in 1811 of ‘Lariston, comprehending Over and Nether Lariston, and mill and Mill Lands thereof’, valued at £627. George Turnbull was a resident there in 1821. Scott-Elliot sold the estate in 1843 to James Jardine for £29,000. It may be the ‘Lanorowstany’ listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was popularised in the Ettrick Shepherd’s ballad ‘Lock the Door Lariston’. A lintel above the cottage door there is inscribed ‘J.S.’ and ‘M.R.’ for James of Stobs and Margaret of Redheugh – ‘See how they wane, the proud files of the Windermere, Howard ah! woe to the hopes of the day; Hear the wild welkin rend, While the Scots shouts as-dead, Elliot for aye!’ [ES] (also spelled ‘Lauriston’ and ‘Lariston’); the origin is probably from the Middle English personal name ‘Lauri’ or ‘Larri’, a diminutive of ‘Lawrence’; it occurs as ‘Larrostane’ in 1484, ‘larostanys’ in 1489, ‘Lauerokstanis’ in 1515/6, ‘Larestanis’ in 1516 and 1556, ‘Larestanys’ in 1516, ‘Larastanis’ in 1526, ‘Larleston’ and ‘Lawrellstane’ in 1544, ‘Lauerokstanis’ in 1548, ‘Lauriestone’ in 1565, incorrectly transcribed ‘Lamestone’ in 1565, ‘Lareston’ in 1590, ‘Larestounis’ in 1613, ‘Laristoun’ in 1627 and ‘Lairiestounes’ in 1637, and although it attains its modern spelling at the end of the 17th century it is incorrectly written ‘Ladiesstourne’ in 1718, is still ‘Lairiston’ in 1797 and ‘Laristone’ in 1821; it appears on Sandison’s c.1590 map as ‘Ladiesstaine, Ro. Elliott’s’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Lairistoun’).

Larriston Burn (law-ris-tin-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on Foulmire Heights and Loch Knowe and flowing west and south-west to join the Liddel Water near Steeleroad-end. Among its tributaries are Hirst Sike, Holm Sikes, Pipe Sike, Bught Sike, Storff Sike, Little Warrington Sike, Great Warrington Sike and Westly Sike. It has several waterfalls along its length. It passes the farmstead of Upper Larriston, where the original tower-house may have been situated, as well as Larriston lime works. The farm of Larriston Burn was once separate from that of Larriston. Airchie Elliot was there in 1590, John Nixon in 1588 and 1590/1 and Geordie Nixon in 1590, all accused of rieving (it is ‘Lareston burne’ in 1588, ‘Larestone burne’ in 1590 and ‘Layrestenburne’ in 1590/1).

Larriston Fells (law-ris-ten-felz) n. centre of the Debateable Lands on the Scottish side, over the Border from Bewcastle Fells. The hills reach a height of 1,677 feet and feed the Larriston Burn to the west.

Larriston Knowe (law-ris-ten-now) n. hill that is part of Whitrope Edge, north of Whitrope-foot (it is unclear whether there is a connection to the Larriston further south).

Larriston Lime Works (law-ris-ten-lim-wurks) n. former lime manufacturory on the Larriston Burn, to the south-east of the main farm. This area has also been referred to as Upper Larriston. It started in 1811, and expanded in 1820 after demand from local farmers. It is labelled ‘Larriston Lime Works’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, with ‘Tile Works’ a little to the south. There are remains of lime kilns and old quarries scattered over a wide area.

Larriston Mill (law-ris-ten-nil) n. former mill at Larriston.

Larriston Rig (law-ris-ten-rig) n. farm in Liddesdale, to the east of Larriston farm, also called Haggiehaugh. John Elliot of Thorlleshope owned the lands (or perhaps just a ‘wadsett’ on the lands) from about the 1670s. They were among lands sold by Robert Elliot of Larriston to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688, after Elliot went bankrupt. However, they were bought back by Elliot in 1695. John Nixon and George Armstrong were there in 1694. George Scott-Elliot of Larriston was owner in 1811, when it was valued at £207 and ‘now called Haggiehaugh’. James Jardine was owner in about 1874 (also also written ‘Larriston Rig’ and ‘Larristonrig’; it is ‘Lariston ridge’ in 1694 and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

lash an lave (lash-in-lav) adv., poet. with profusion, in abundance – ‘Drinkin’, squabblin’, lash an’ lave o’ whorin’, An’ a’ sic things, he means to be right brave at’ [JoHa].

lass (las) n. a girl, young woman – ‘Delivered to Bailie Martin in name of Isa Anderson for teaching poor lassies £4 0 0’ [PR], ‘Push about the flowing glasses – Sing and dance and kiss the lasses’ [AB], ‘Whan bonny lasses blushi’d at kisin’, Nor took a bite afore the blessin’ ’ [JR], ‘...Like her lasses blithe and bonnie’ [??], ‘For the Lasses (thu-law-seez) n., pl. collective name for the partners of the Common Riding Principals and their supporters.

The Lasses Association Denner (thu-law-seez-aw-sô-see-ä-shin-de-nur) n. dinner organised for the new Cornet’s Lass and Acting Mother on Picking Night. The pair both make speeches and are presented with their Lasses Association badges, and the Cornet’s Lass is also presented with a Hawick song book.

lassie (law-, la-see) n. a girl, young woman – ‘what a bonnie wee lassie’, ‘Delivered to Bailie Martin in name of Isa Andersson for teaching poor lassies £4 0 0’ [PR1712], ‘O, lassie dear, O, lassie fair, My heart you’ve fixed in a snare’ [JoHa], ‘O the lassie’s dear to me’ [JoHa], ‘O the lassie’s young and bonny, dear, O, lassie fair, My heart you’ve fixed in a snare’ [JoHa], ‘what a bonnie wee lassie’, ‘Delivered to Bailie Martin in name of Isa Andersson for teaching poor lassies £4 0 0’ [PR1712], ‘O, lassie dear, O, lassie fair, My heart you’ve fixed in a snare’ [JoHa], ‘O the lassie’s dear to me’ [JoHa], ‘It canna bring back joy to me Since my sweet lassie’s gane’ [WE], ‘And it’s then that Ah whisper sweet words in the back joy to me Since my sweet lassie’s gane’ [WE], ‘O the lassie’s young and bonny, O the lassie’s dear to me’ [JoHa], ‘It canna bring back joy to me Since my sweet lassie’s gane’ [WE], ‘And it’s then that Ah whisper sweet words in the ear O the lassie that works in the mill’ [WAP], ‘I walked more quickly up the brae, The lassie smiled at me, The sun shone fair on Hawick town, I’d met my love, you see!’ [WFC], ‘...A wall of emotion, Like the swell of the sea My lassie in Canada’s waiting for me’ [ALB] (diminutive of ‘lass’, implying slightly younger).

The Lassie That Works in the Mill (thu-law-see-th’-wurkz-in-thu-mil) n. song written by Walter Peden, in a dialect that is only partly Hawick. It was performed regularly by his sons George and Jock, lost for a while, but recovered from a tape recording at the Gilded Chamber. The music was later adapted by Henry Douglas, adding 8 bars to the original 16. Ian Seeley wrote a piano accompaniment for the 2001 ‘Hawick Songs’ collection. It is included on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Henry Douglas.

latch (lawch, n., arch. v. to let, permit – ‘...’lat be, my lad, e’en lat it be; For sae sics a’ humanity’’ [DH] (it is unclear how common this has been in Hawick: cf. luit and lut).

latch needle (lawch-nee-dul) n. a needle with a small hook at the end which is closed with a hinged latch to hold the yarn in place while the loop is formed in a knitting machine, thus allowing loop formation and ‘knock-over’ to happen simultaneously. This was common on a ‘V-bed’ hand-knitting machine and is similar to a ‘bearded needle’. It was patented by a Leicester hosier in 1849.

the Latin Schuil (thu-law’in-skil) n. another name for the Grammar Schuil, used to distinguish it from the ‘English’ or Parish School (also Laitin).

Latoun (lät-in) n. Sir Brian (d.1545) English commander of Henry VIII, who was Governor of Norham Castle. Along with Sir Ralph Evers headed the invading forces that laid waste to the Borders in 1544/5, possibly including Hawick and Branxholme. Their ‘bloody ledger’ boasts of destroying 192 towns, towers, barkines, churches and houses, killing 403 Scots, capturing 816 prisoners, and taking 10,386 cattle, 12,492 sheep, 1296 horses, 200 goats and 850 bolls of corn, along with an incalculable amount of goods. He was killed at Ancrum Moor and probably buried at Jedburgh – ‘The ravag’d abbey rang the fu-rnal knell, When fierce Latoun and savage Evers headed the invading forces that laid waste to the Borders in 1544/5, possibly including Hawick and Branxholme. Its Common Riding is one of the oldest, with reference to it in 1686, although it was in abeyance for 80 years before being revived in 1910. It includes a mounted procession to the Watering Stane and on to the Burgess Cairn. ’Lauder and Lauderdale’ was published by Andrew Thomson in 1903. Population (1991) 1,064 (the origin of the name is probably a corruption of the Leader Water, however, it has also been suggested to be related to the Welsh ‘lavedroch’, meaning ‘heaped’).

Lauder (law-dur) n. Adam (b.c.1790) Slater in Newcastle-ton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about 41 South Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had children Adam, John, William, Agnes and Walter. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Alexander (16th C.) son and heir of William, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1540 he and his wife Marion Hay were given sasine of his father’s lands of Todrig by John Hay, Lord of Yester. These lands included the ‘manor and mansion thereto and pertinents’. Also in 1540 he and his wife was Marion Hay sold a tenement to Alexander Gledstains. In 1543 he was directed to pay a sum to Katherine Gray (widow of a former holder of lands at Todrig) for her ‘terse’, but protested. In 1544 there was an agreement between him and his wife Marion Hay over lands in Selkirk pertaining to Alexander Gledstains. In 1545 he and his wife sold a tenement in Selkirk to Patrick Kelso. He was recorded as Burgess of Edinburgh in 1557. Alexander (b.1794/5) born in Smailholm, he was miller at Riddell Mill. In 1861 he was there farming 65 acres and employing 4 people. He was still there in 1868 His wife was Margaret and their children included Alexander and Mary. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1731. He probably married Bessie Chisholme in 1728. His children included: Janet (b.1739); Walter (b.1731); James (b.1734); Adam (b.1738); and Margaret (b.1741). He may also be the Andrew who married Margaret Scott in Roberton in 1737. Cuthbert of Todrig (15th/16th C.) convicted in 1508 of several crimes. This included stealing 2 horses from Alexander Turnbull at Braidie, resetting and abetting with the thieves and rebels Alexander Cranston, William Oliver, Simon Turnbull

Lauder (law-dur) n. town on the Leader Water, in the former county of Berwickshire. It has preserved its original mediaeval form, with a single street widening into the Market Place, and the main road being divided by the central Mid Row, with its 18th century Town Hall. A bridge is recorded there as early as 1482. It was made a royal burgh in 1502, and was the site of the 1482 hanging of six favourites of James III by Archibald Douglas (Bell-the-Cat). Thistlestone Castle lies just outside the town. The town is on the main A68 road north from Hawick via Jedburgh, and Robert Turnbull. For these crimes he was drawn and hanged and all his possessions forfeited. His brother and heir Walter is recorded in a document in Selkirk in 1528. David (–) local mortgage advisor and runner who won the 2003 ‘New Year Sprint’ event at Musselburgh Racecourse. Edward (14th/15th C.) cleric who held some rights as Archdeacon of Teviotdale. He resigned these in favour of William Crozier in 1419. George of Whitslade (15th C.) granted the lease of Deloraine and Warleshope in 1488. His family lands were Whitslade in Berwickshire (not the place of the same name in Ashkirk Parish). George (16th C.) mentioned in 1538 along with Thomas, when Katherine Gray had their sheep legally removed from Todrig. Probably the same George was also mentioned in 1537 along with Richard when they were ordered to remove themselves and their servants from Todrig. Hector (15th C.) attorney for George, 4th Earl of Angus in 1456, when he accepted sasine of Ewesdale on behalf of Douglas. His name was written as ‘Hector of Lawdyr’. He was specially deputised as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1464/5 for an inquest giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to Archibald, son of the deceased William Douglas of Cavers. His name is recorded as ‘Hector of Lawdre’. He was also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5, where he is ‘of Lawdyr’. Hector (15th/16th C.) tenant in Clerklands recorded in 1493 as brother of Thomas. He was allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-aiere in Jedburgh for a series of crimes, including stealing from several farms, bringing in Nixons from England and associating with William Elliot ‘and other thieves of Branxholme’. His sureties were Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw, and the Laird of Branxholme. His brother was recorded in 1494 as brother of Thomas. In 1494 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he witnessed the charter for the lands of Galalaw by James Scott of Kirkurd in 1494. In 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he had a remission for several crimes, including: helping 2 Elliots and 5 Armstrongs, ‘traitors of Levyn’ in a raid on ‘Quhitmur’, involvement in a raid on the ‘Pot-Loche’ of Selkirk; resetting Armstrongs, Elliots and Fosters; ‘wickedness’ done to Adam Thomson in Selkirk; bringing in 2 Nixons; pilaging from Whitalawhouse; the theft of cattle, sheep and a horse from the Turnbuls from Langhope; and further thefts from Shilling Green and Harthern. Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw was surety for him in 1494/5. He is probably the Hector listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined (including Walter Scott in Headshaw and David Scott in Galalaw). In 1502 he is described as ‘in Clerklands’ when he had remission for several crimes: stealing 40 cows from John Scott of Hoddom House, along with a band of Armstrongs; burning Whitslade house with the Armstrongs; stealing 2 horses from Lauder woods; stealing several other horses from different people; stealing cows from William Wood out of Harthern and Whitalaw-house; stealing 16 cows and 2 horses from Whitslade; and stealing cows from Traquair. John Scott ‘in le walis’ acted as surety. He also had remission for stealing 60 sheep from John Thomson in Harthern and for wounding Adam Thomson in Selkirk, with Robert Scott of Stirches acting as surety. Additionally in 1502, he had remission for stealing 5 horses from several men in the Forest of Lauder, with James Scott of Ashkirk as his surety. James (15th/16th C.) younger brother of Cuthbert of Todrig. In 1582 his brother Walter (who was heir to Cuthbert) appointed him as his procurator to deal with matters related to their brother’s estate. James of Carolside, ‘Beau’ (d.1799) son of John and Agnes Adam. He was owner of the lands of Redfordgreen and Drycleughshiels in 1785. He paid the land tax on their value of £169 6s 8d. He also owned Whitslade and paid tax on its value of £266 13s 4d. His main estate of Carolside was near Earlston. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in 1502, along with James Elliot and Janet Ker. The three had 7 cows stolen from them, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. John (d.c.1551) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1534. He succeeded George Lockhart, who became Dean of Glasgow, possibly with some exchange between the pair. He resigned the office in favour of John Hepburn in 1544, but retained some of the benefices until his death. John of Carolside and Whitslade (d.c.1788) owner of the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen and Drycleughshiels. He married Agnes Adam, who inherited the lands from her brother John Adam of Whitslade. He was succeeded by his son James. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when her goods were listed as part of a transaction involving the lands of Todrig. She is probably the Katherine Gray, recorded in connection with Todrig in the same year. She may have been wife of William of Todrig. In 1543 she was ‘spouse of the deceased …’ when Alexander Lauder was directed to pay her 16 merks for the ‘terce’ on a husbandland (probably in Todrig). Richard (16th C.) mentioned along with George in 1537 when they were ordered to remove themselves and their servants from Todrig. Sir Robert of the Bass and Quarrelwood (d.1337) son of Sir Robert. He was referred to as ‘elder’ to distinguish him from his son, also Sir Robert. He served as Ambassador to England during the time of Robert the Bruce. He was also Keeper of Berwick Castle and for a while was Chamberlain of Scotland. From about 1319 he was Justiciar of Lothian, responsible for the justice aires south of the Forth, including those held in Roxburghshire. He was present at the Battle of Halidon in 1333. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant at ‘Merch-cluche’ whose lands were raided and goods stolen by Peter Turnbull of Bonchester and a group of Englishmen. He himself was taken to Bewcastel ‘until he redeemed himself’, i.e. he was held for ransom. In 1502 Turnbull had remission for these crimes. Robert of that Ilk (d.c.1526) son of Oliver. He held the estate of Muircleuch near Lauder and also the superiority of Sunderland near Selkirk. He firstly married Marion, daughter of James Pringle of Smailholm, secondly married Christine, daughter of Hugh Hamilton of Innerwick and thirdly married Janet Logan. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Robert of that Ilk (16th C.) son of Robert. He is recorded in 1528/9 when he was involved in a deal with John Cranston of that Ilk, for lands in Smailholm. These lands had belonged to Oliver. He was among Border lairds summoned by the King in 1530. He was also listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused among men of the Selkirk area of illegally carrying guns. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Priesthaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (18th C.) resident at ‘Todridge’. His son William was baptised in 1732. Walter (15th/16th C.) brother and heir of Cuthbert of Todrig. In 1528 he is recorded in a document in Auld Roxburgh (but preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books) in 1528 when he made his brother James his procurator. William (d.1425/6) son of Sir Robert of Edrington and The Bass, and Edinburgh, and nephew of Sir Alan of Hatton. His mother was Annabella, and his half-brother was Alexander, Bishop of Dunkeld. He was educated in France and became Archdeacon of Lothian by 1405. He appears to have dispossessed John de Hawick from his position as Precentor of Glasgow in the period 1403–6. In 1408 he was consecrated as Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding Matthew Laura Bennett’s corner shop in the Kirkstyle, on the corner with the Howegate, during the 1940s and 50s. It had a reputation for being open for long hours—‘...And if owt’s oo forgot A often would be sen-et Ti some wee corner shop Like Laura Bennett’s’ [IWL].

the Laurels (thu-law-rulez) n. Guest House at 8 Princes Street.

Laurie (law-ree) n. Christian name, usually a familiar form of Lawrence, also sometimes spelled ‘Lawrie’.

Laurie (law-ree, low-ree) n. George from Jedburgh Parish, in 1793 he married Margaret Lamb in Cavers. Their children Anne and Jean were born in Jedburgh. Rev. James (c.1704–83) Minister of Hawick Parish 1757–83. He attended university along with Dr. John Armstrong (of Liddesdale and later London). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1724, was licensed by Duns Presbytery in 1732 and was ordained at Langton (in Berwickshire) in 1734. There he married and had a family. He was presented to Hawick by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in mid-1757 and installed a few months later. In 1759 he acted as witness for a baptism forwright John Kay. He was known for being very pugnacious and was an acquaintance of the influential Dr. Alexander Carlyle (minister of Inveresk), who called him ‘a boundless liar’ in his diaries! He was also described thus: ‘as a companion he was very amusing by the relation of fictitious stories’; it is said that he recounted fantastic tales based on the time he and Dr. Armstrong had joined a band of gypsies while they were students and also the time he spent visiting the doctor in London, where he claimed he befriended the top politicians of the day. He accompanied Carlyle and his party through Langholm to Carlisle, where he got into a fight ‘with a drunken squire of the name of Dacres, who had insulted him with foul language’ (a descendant of Lord Dacres perhaps?). However, there is little independent information to support this general character assassination. He gathered some parishioners together in St. Mary’s churchyard to pray during the great flood of 1767, afterwards claiming to have helped abate the waters (although according to the miller the flood had already much receded by then!). Both the Burgher and Anti-Burgher secession churches were formed in Hawick during his ministry, presumably encouraged in part by his unpopularity. It was also said that he refused to allow the parishioners to use a well at the Manse, as they had done previously, and Council records show a wall was pulled down, which he had had built across a thoroughfare on Burgh property. In 1767 he was described as owner of property in the East End of Hawick. In 1743 he married Elizabeth Foggo, who died in 1792. Their children (all baptised in Langton) included: John (b.1744), who was minister.
at Teviothead, Eskdalemuir and Ewes; Cumberland Alex (b.1746); Mary (b.1748); and Elizabeth (b.1751). He could be the James born to John and Elizabeth Whitehead in Cockburnspath in 1707 – 'Lawrie, that honest man o’ God. Deeming it judgement sent abroad Frae heaven direct because o’sin, Collected folk the kirk within’ [AD].

John (16th C.) notary to a charter relating to Harden in the Barony of Wilton in 1559. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Girnwood in 1716 and 1718. His children included William (b.1714), Janet (b.1716) and Janet (again, b.1718). Rev. John (1702/3–62) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1722, he was licensed by Penpont Presbytery in 1731 and was the second of the regular preachers at the Teviothead chapel-of-ease from 1738 until about 1745. In that year he was translated to Middlebie. He witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1743 (for workmen John Rieve and John Armstrong, who may have had a connection to Teviothead); he is recorded there as ‘Mr John Lawrie preacher of the Gospel’. He married Anna Bell, who died in 1797, aged 85, and they had at least one son. Rev. John (1744–1817) son of James, minister of Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1761, 1762, 1763, 1764 and 1765, when he was still a student (perhaps being the stand-in when the parents did not have other witnesses available, or else being an assistant in the church). He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1767 and became the minister at Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) shortly after that. However, there is some potential confusion here with the earlier Teviothead minister of the same name. In 1772 he was recorded as ‘Preacher’ when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Lookup, who probably lived in the upper Teviot valley. He is probably the ‘Mr’ John who witnessed a baptism in 1776 for George Balmer. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was translated to Eskdalemuir in 1785 and to Ewes in 1791. He was taxed for having a female servant in the 1780s. He was recorded at Ewes on the 1790–1797 Horse Tax Rolls and the 1797 Clock Tax Rolls. In 1786 he married Anne, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield, and she died in 1834, aged 73. Their children included: James (1787–1851), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines; William (1788–1842), Captain in the Royal Marines; Mary (1789–94); John (1790–1861), who became a Major General; Elizabeth (b.1793), who married Lieut. David Maxwell, younger of Broomholm; Adam Ogilvie (1795–1814), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines, who died at sea; Robert (1797–1828), who died in Langholm; and Walter (1805–44), surgeon with the 4th Regiment Madras Light Cavalry, who died at Anantapur, India. John R. (19th/20th C.) wrote some lines in memory of his brother-in-law James Davidson. Walter (b.c.1833) baker at 39 High Street. His wife was Janet and their children included: David; Adam; Walter; and Euphemia. Walter (1858–1923) son of baker Walter. He was also a baker, based at 39 High Street, who became a licensed grocer at the foot of the Mid Row and wine and spirit merchant of 13 Teviot Crescent. Additionally, he produced and sold aerated waters. He was a well known speaker at social functions and a member of the Masons. He bequeathed money for the Laurie Brig and Laurie Shelter (formerly written ‘Lourie’ and ‘Lourrie’; see also Lawrie and Lowrie).

the Laurie Brig (lau-ree-brig) n. footbridge across the Teviot at the Spetch in Wilton Lodge Park, named after Walter Laurie, built in 1924 and opened by the Prince of Wales. It is near here that the riders stop to sing ‘Teribus’ on the Saturday morning of Common Riding week, the Principals standing in their stirrups. This tradition apparently began because it was once the site of a large gun, melted down like other sources of iron during WWII. The scissors used in the opening ceremony are in the Museum (sometimes erroneously written ‘Lawrie’).

Laurie’s Den (law-reez-den) n. area to the north of Faw Hill and west of the farm of Ashtrees. To the south-west there are the remains of an ancient enclosure, perhaps a medieval stock pen (note the place of essentially the same name in Hawick, Lawrie’s Denn).

the Laurie Shelter (lau-ree-shel’-ur) n. shelter in Wilton Lodge Park located near the Boer War Memorial, named after Walter Laurie who bequeathed money for its erection.

Law (law) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident at Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Archibald (b.1770/1) born in Bowden, he was a grocer and carrier in Lilliesleaf. In Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories he is recorded as carrier, leaving Lilliesleaf for Hawick once a week. In 1851 he was ‘Landed Proprietor & Ag. Lab.’ on the south side of Main Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed simply as a grocer. He had a daughter Ann. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) resident of Menslaws. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 5 firlots of grain stolen from him there by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton. Hugh (19th C.) farmer and coal agent, who was the last tenant of the fields between Havelock Street and Howdenbank, at that time part of Wilton Mains. He may have been the same Hugh described as an engineer of Wilton Place. James (c.1560–1632) born in Fife, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1581, and became minister of Kirkliston. As a young minister he is recorded being censured (along with John Spottiswood) for playing football on the Sabbath. He became a royal chaplain in 1601, and was titular Bishop of Orkney from 1605. He was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1608 and preached in favour of Episcopacy before the assembly in 1610. In 1615 he was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow, succeeding his friend Spottiswood. He must have temporarily held the superiority of local lands, since in 1624 he gave a sasine for Headshaw, Dryden and other lands to Andrew Hay, and in 1628 gave a charter of the lands of Barnhills to William Bennet. He married at least twice. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Horsleyhill. His will is recorded in 1682. He could be the James who witnessed baptism of Robert Scott and William Scott in Robertson Parish in 1681. Jean (19th C.) name (or possibly nickname) for a Hawick character of the mid-1800s – ‘Goold Ballantyne and auld Hawick Jock, Wattie Moudie, Jock Gray and a’; Jenny’s Penny wi’ plaid o’ check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law’ [HI]. John (d.c.1687) tenant in Hawick. His will is recorded in 1687. Probably the same James witnessed a baptism in 1682 for James Turnbull in Tushielaw, Woden Law, and formerly in Hawick Kaim Law, Kippielaw, Mervinslaw, Ruberslaw, Tushielaw, Woden Law, and in 1837 directories he is recorded as carrier, leaving Lilliesleaf for Hawick once a week. Lion of Liddesdale’. He started one of the first Sunday Schools in the district, and brought in 2 people from Carlisle to give singing instructions to the congregation. He visited London in 1824, and his wife would only let him go if he left a portrait of himself, so he got one done in Hawick in about 2 hours. In 1828 he was translated to St. Margaret’s, Dunfermline. He moved to Innerleithen in 1850 and had his jubilee as a minister in 1862. He married Jane Murray, who was from his congregation and one of 7 sisters; in 1841 she was living with her son-in-law George Wilson and she died in 1847. They had 4 daughters and 1 son: Agnes; Janie, who married manufacturer George Wilson in Hawick; Janet, who married John Tod from Dalkeith; Ellen, who married Thomas Bonnar, architect in Dunfermline; and William, who died in Trinidad. In 1859 he remarried, to Jessie Sanderson, but she died in 1860. It is said that he was related to Prime Minister Andrew Bonar Law. He died at Eskbank, Dalkeith and is buried at Dunfermline, alongside his wife Jean Murray of Whisgills. John (1906–59) schoolmaster at Denholm. He married Margaret Janet Robertson. They are buried in Denholm. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘in Kanes’ in 1632 when along with several others he feued Westbarns (near Belse) from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. Walter (19th C.) commission agent of 7 Slitrig Crescent. His daughter Margaret married Walter Scott (of Lyle & Scott), while Kate married John Rennie (of the British Linen Bank) and Jane married Walter Phillips Kennedy (bookseller). He may be the Walter, married to Janet Kedie, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Mary (b.1868); Walter (b.1872); and Thomas Kedie (b.1874). William (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Linton in Roberton in 1801.

the Law (thu-law) n. popular name used in the district of Denholm for Ruberslaw – ‘...an’ then for the Law – his ordin’ hunting grund’ [BCM1881] (e.g. used by James Murray in 1863).

law borrows (law-bo-röz) n., arch. legal security given by a person, that they will not harm another person – ‘...James Budie, dreading pres- onal and bodily harme of Adam Brown, weiver, and craved lawborrowses ... ’ [BR].

lawest (law-list) adj., poet. lowest – ‘Thou hest layde me in the lawist pitt, in mirk, in the deeps’ [HSR].

lawfi (law-fi) adj., arch. lawful, official, proper – ‘...told her that neither God nor man was her master, and that she was a ‘lawfi’ witch’ [EM1820], legitimate, offspring recognised by the law – ‘The Beddall was ordered to sum- mond Robert Eliot eldest lawful son to Francis Eliot ... ’ [PR1717] (also written ‘lawfu’); the last meaning common in older documents, sometimes contrasted with natural).

Lawgaps (law-gaps) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as part of the area called Ermildon. It was recorded as ‘Lagappis’ and listed as being valued at 20 shillings.

the ‘rebel’ Cornet, but was forbidden by his Captain. James (18th C.) owner of lands referred to as ‘Lawrie’s Denn’, located around Oliver Crescent and Oliver Place. He may have been the ‘John Lawrie’ referred to by Robert Wilson as one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. Peter (1828–1902) son of William, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Jane, daughter of Ebenezer Wemyss and Janet Laidlaw. In 1853 the family emigrated to Australia, settling in Tarnagulla, where gold had been found. There are many descendants in the area of Victoria today, using the spelling ‘Laurie’.

Thomas (18th C.) listed at ‘Danston Mill’ in Lilliesleaf Parish when he paid the cart tax in 1785. ‘Danston’ is presumably Dunstane. William (b.c.1797) stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Wilhelmina (‘Mina’) Pasley (or Paisley), who had previously been married to Frederick Diener. Their children were: Peter, a stockingmaker; Margaret, who married Robert Richardson; Thomas, who was a cabinet-maker’s apprentice; and an infant son who died in 1822. He may be the same as the William Lawrie who provided entertainment on the ‘slack rope’ as part of the efforts to raise money for strikers during the ‘Langstand Oot’ (see also Laurie and Lawrie).

Lawrie’s Denn (law-reez-den) n. former name for area at the east end of Hawick, in use before the houses were built there. It is marked on Wood’s 1824 map near where the Auction Mart was later built, and on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map the name appears near the beginning of Weensland Road. In 1824 the land was owned by Archibald Dickson. It is referred to as ‘Laurie’s Yard’ and ‘Laurie’s Den’ in the 1841 census. The name derives from James Lawrie who once owned the lands, together with the Old English for ‘wooded hollow’ (also written ‘Laurie’s Denn’).

Lawrie’s Flat (law-reez-flaw’) n. name marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map for the orchard area roughly where Trinity School was later built, a little further from the centre of town than ‘Lawrie’s Den’.

Laws (lawz) n. former lands occurring as ‘Laws’ on the 1594 list of those held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick. The name occurs between ‘Langhaugh’ and ‘Tofts’, suggesting a location in the upper Teviot valley. However, it is possible that the lands meant are those in Liddesdale.

Laws (lawz) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, between the B6357 and Riccarton Junction. They are recorded in the rental roll of c.1376 in the region then known as Ernaldon (probably around the modern Arnton Fell). ‘Lawis superior’ is valued at 12 shillings and ‘Lawis inferior’ as 7 shillings, as well as ‘Locus Ricardi de Lawis’ (8 shillings), ‘Locus Roberti de Lawis’ (8 shillings 4 pence) and ‘Locus Ennie de Lawis’ (3 shillings); it is unclear to which family these Lairds belonged. It seems likely this is the same place as Lawshill, which is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and associated with Law’s Hill on modern maps. It could also be the same place as ‘the Hill’, which was a seat of the Elliots in the 16th century. It is ‘Leys’ on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it extended to 546 acres, bounded by Dawstonburn, Sughtree, Riccarton, Roughlee and Stitchelhill; the farmhouse was shown on the map close to the place marked as the remains of Riccarton Tower on modern maps.

Lawshill (lawz-hil) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, roughly north of Riccarton farm. It is surely connected with the lands of ‘Lawys superior’ and ‘Lawys inferior’ listed on a c.1376 rental roll. Law’s Hill is essentially the southern spur of Shiel Knowe, with Palmer’s Hill Cutting passing through it. The farm was occupied by John Nixon in 1623 and by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47, along with Riccartonfoot and Prickinghaugh (it was ‘Lawishill’ in 1623 and ‘Laweshill’ in 1634).

the Laws of the Mairches (thu-lawz-uv-thu-mair-cheez) n. rules for governing the Border, set up by a commission of English and Scottish knights in 1249. This included the establishment of the Wardens and how they were supposed to deal with rievers etc.

Lawson (law-sin) n. Bailie Alexander Sutherland (1842–1916) watchmaker and jeweller of 1 Sandbed. He started his business in 1864, and also acted as an optician, silversmith and shipping agent. He was a member of the Town Council for 43 years, being Treasurer, becoming a Bailie and later a Judge. He was a Mason, associated with B.U.R.A. No. 424. He was also one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee in 1887, and acted as a Race Steward. He donated the Cornet’s Silver Challenge Cup. He supplied a 7-day clock (in a mahogany case) for Watson’s Watch House in about 1882. The Lawson Bridge was named after him, and he can be seen in a photograph of the older version of the bridge about 1900. His wife’s name was Catherine. His daughter Lilley unveiled the Hornshole Memorial in 1901. He was presented with a silver spade when he planted a tree in the Park to commemorate the Coronation in 1902 – ‘...There to answer Bailie Lawson Aboot every wound and scar’ [WE]. Isobel (18th/19th C.) living at Newmill in 1793 when her daughter Margaret (b.1774) was baptised in Roberton. She acted as ‘Sponcer for the child’. James of Cairnmuir (17th C.) had the teinds of the Parish of Bedrule ratified to him in 1639, confirmed by a Private Act of Parliament of 1641. It is unclear what his connection was, but the original grant appears to have been from Rev. Joseph Tennant in 1632. James (18th C.) waiter working for vintner Robert Armstrong in Hawick in 1794. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Guy and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1645. Robert (17th C.) listed at Whithope among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish whose son John was baptised in 1712. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Huntly and their daughter Betty was baptised in 1740. Robert (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish whose son Walter was baptised in 1743. Robert (18th C.) resident at Teindside. He married Margaret Scoon, in Roberton Parish in 1739; she may be the daughter of Walter Scoon and Isobel Miller born in 1720. Their children included: Robert (b.1745); Isobel (b.1747); Elizabeth (b.1750); John (b.1756); and George (b.1760); and Walter (b.1760). Their children were baptised in Hawick, Wilton and Roberton Parishes. He was probably also the workman whose son William (b.1742) was baptised in Hawick, with the mother’s name given as ‘Janet’ Scoon and witnesses John Elliot at Goldielands and Robert Scott at Crumhaugh. The witnesses in 1745 were the Thomas Elliot in Harwood and Baille Robert Boyd, and in 1750 were John and Robert Scott from Galalaw. Robert (18th C.) probably son of Robert. He is probably the Robert who married Agnes Grieve in roberston in 1772. He was resident at Chapelhill in 1774 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children were William (b.1775), Walter (b.1776), Margaret (b.1778), Margaret (again, b.1779) and Robert (b.1782). Robert (18th C.) married Esther Scott in 1780, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. Robert (b.c.1770s) labourer at Hummelknoves according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He could be the Robert, son of William, who was baptised in Roberton in 1775. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1835. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Curren in Hawick Parish in 1851. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant at Doorpool in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. Walter (b.1811/2) from Westerkirk, he was a farm worker in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was at Meadshaw Cottage and in 1851 at Craik. In 1840 in Ettrick Parish he married Janet Jackson (from Cavers Parish) and their children included: Janet (b.1841); Jane (b.1842); Thomas (b.1844); Jean (b.1849); and Susanna (b.1854). Walter (19th C.) Burgh Officer in the 1880s, acting as Keeper of the Town Hall among other duties. He was also the halberdier in 1887 when the custom was revived of having the Burgh Officer, accompanied by the Drums and Fifes, walk to the Cornet-elect’s house on Picking Night. Sir William (d.1632) son of Thomas of Little Usworth, County Durham. He was High Sheriff of Cumberland and in 1591 was made Converyor of the Commission of the Marches. Knighted in 1604, in 1605 he was Convenor to the English Commission to govern the Borders. His name occurs many times in relation to the pacification of the Borders (i.e. capturing men from various families and executing or exiling them). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Todshawhillsbied in 1716. His children included: Helen (b.1714); Robert (b.1716); and Walter (b.1719). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Burnfoot in 1743 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Robertson Parish. Margaret (b.1737) and Janet (b.1740) were probably also his daughters. William (18th C.) recorded at Eilrig when some of his children were baptised in the 1770s. He married Jean Elliot in Robertson Parish in 1771. His children included: Isobel (b.1772); and Robert (b.1775). William (19th/20th C.) of Edinburgh designer of Hawick’s WW1 Roll of Honour (formerly also spelled ‘Lason’, ‘Lasson’, ‘Lausone’, ‘Lawsonne’, etc.).

the Lawson Brig (thu-law-sin-brig) n. iron foot-bridge over the Teviot connecting Free Church Lane with the Haugh, originally constructed in 1904, and replaced in 1988. It was named after Judge Lawson and replaced an earlier wooden structure erected in 1886, with steps at either end. This was built by David Taylor, with building foreman J.P. Tait. There is a photograph showing the original opening in 1886. It was popularly known as the Shit Brig.

Lawston (law-stin) n. farm in the far south of Castleton Parish, between the B6357 and the Liddel Water, after Kershopefoot. There are rig lines to the south-east and to the south are 3 oval hollows, which are probably coal pits. There was a colliery here from a few decades startin about the end of the 18th century, the only one of consequence in Roxburghshire. The stream there is said to have once had a sulphurous spring. William Oliver was there in 1797. William Graham was farmer there in at least the period 1821–51 (it is ‘Lawstone’ in 1821 and ‘Lawstown’ in 1838 and 1851; it appears as ‘Lawstonn’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Lawyer (thu-law-yur) n. nickname for William Oliver in the 16th century.

Lawyhaugh (law-ee-lawch) n. possible place name in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll c.1376 as ‘Lawyhalch’, with a value of 3 pounds. This is distinct from ‘Langhalgh’, which is also listed, but the location, and pronunciation, are unknown. It is possible it corresponds to the small farmstead labelled on Stobie’s 1770-map as ‘Lawsholm’, on the Liddel to the southeast of Lawston farm.

lay (lä) n., arch. the movable frame of a loom, containing the reed, which oscillates to beat the yarn into place – ‘Now when sitting at work on his loom, He thought, as the shuttle flew From end to end of the moving lay, That he had had troubles enough’ [JCG].

layne (lān) v., poet. to conceal, keep secret – ‘I will layne my name frae thee! And I will loose out the captain’s kye. In scorn of a’ his men and he’ ’[T].

The Lay of the Last Minstrel (thu-lā-ov-thu-lawst-mins-trul) n. narrative poem by Sir Walter Scott, which is set partly at Branxholme. It was finished in 1804, published in 1805 and was immediately successful and hugely influential. This success contributed significantly to the romanticised view of Borders history and to local tourism. The poem is composed of 6 cantos and written in an irregular metre. The main story is told by an aging minstrel who receives hospitality from Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch at Newark Castle. He sings about the Lady of Branxholme Castle (Janet Beaton), who opposes the marriage of her daughter Margaret to Henry of Cranstoun, and enemy of the family. Her champion William of Deloraine is dispatched to get the mystic book of Michael Scott from Melrose Abbey, but Deloraine is injured by Cranstoun on his return and the book falls into the hands of Cranstoun’s dwarf retainer. The dwarf finds the book and learns a spell of illusion from it, which he uses to lure the young heir of Branxholme into the woods, where he is later captured by the Englishman Lord Dacre. Dacre comes with a force to Branxholme demanding Deloraine in exchange for the boy. But the Lady of Branxholme makes a deal whereby Deloraine will fight the English champion Sir Richard Musgrave, who has accused Deloraine of plundering his lands during a truce. The Goblin Page transforms Cranstoun into Deloraine to fight the duel, which he wins. The heir of Branxholme is released and finally Margaret and Henry are allowed to marry. But during the wedding celebrations the ghost of Michael Scott appears to reclaim the evil dwarf as his servant.

lay on (lä-on) v., arch. to impose, charge, levy, assess – ‘...did lay on ane stent by foru classes, viz., twenty-four shilling scotts, eighteen, twelve, and six, ...’ [BR1701], to fall thickly (said of snow or rain), to beat or work with vigour, to flatter, lay it on thick – ‘...as (yince an ei’d been suiten on) he laid on an ranted off yirrds o Border rheime an lore’ [ECS], to work hard, apply energy – ‘Hicher up, nerr the croon o the hill, men war layin on an chaappin ...’ [ECS].

lay ti (lä-ti) v., arch. to start on food, set about eating – ‘...had their beats pasturing on the Common, they lay to it, and had passage out and in’ [C&L1767].

lazy (lä-ze) n., arch. a fit of laziness – ‘Ach, na! A’m no verrih on wui’d – A’ve taen the laizy the day!’ [ECS] (also written ‘baizy’).

lea (lee) n. a piece of fallow land, untilled land, grassy field – ‘At Kershope-foot the tryst was set, Kershope of the lily lee’ [T], ‘And Crosier says he will do waur – He will do waur if waur can be; He’ll make the bairns a’ fatherless. And then, the land it may lie lee’ [T], ‘...my father chanced to look alang the lea at the head o’ the bucht’ [LHTB], ‘Fair May unto the window ran, To see what she could see; And there she saw the hunting band, Parading on the lea’ [JTe], adj. fallow, barren (also written ‘lee’); it is common as a Leadbetter (lead-be'-ur) n. Rev. Dennis (20th C.) missiner at Trinity Kirk in the 1960s.

Leadbetter (led-be'-ur) n. Alan Edmonstone Greenshields (1897/8–1917) son of Thomas. He was a Major in the Royal Horse Artillery who was mentioned in dispatches at Gallipoli, was wounded at Longueval and killed near Ypres. He is buried at Elverdinghe and there is a memorial plaque in Bedrule Kirk. Thomas Greenshields, J.P. (1859–1931) son of James Greenshields and Margaret MacPherson, he was born in Glasgow and was an architect with Leadbetter & Fairley. He started his own architect’s practice in Edinburgh in 1890, taking on James McLellan Fairley as a partner in 1895. In 1897 he inherited Stobieside from his father and in about 1912 became owner of Spittal Tower near Bedrule, which he had restored. He designed the renovations for Bedrule Kirk in 1914, and the War Memorial there, and was an elder at the church 1919–31. He also designed the new Wells House, as well as many other houses in southern Scotland. He married Mary Anne Usher (daughter of Sir John of Norton and Wells) in Ratho in 1890. There is a plaque to their memory inside Bedrule Kirk. Their children were James Greenshields (solicitor), John Usher and Maj. Alan Edmonstone (killed in WWI), Mary Balmer and Jean Gillespie.

leader (lee-dur) n., arch. a tendon, sinew, ligament – ‘A’ve streended the leaders o ma neck’[ECS].

Leaderfit (lee-dur-fi’) n. Leaderfoot, a village just east of Melrose, with a modern bridge over the Tweed for the A68, together with the elegant 1779–80 Drygrange Bridge and adjacent 1865 19-arch railway viaduct. The area is sometimes jokingly called ‘Tripontium’.

leadin (lee-din) n., arch. the grain or other crops carted in from the fields – ‘Fenwick had a happy knack of turning up on such occasions as clipings and hay leadings’[BM1907], ‘I finished ma schooling at Kirkton … an startit work on the farm drivin a one horse wi a cart … for feedin sheep an cartin leadin in for cattle turnips’[TH] (see lead).

Leafootd (lee-fawld) n. former lands in Liddesdale, near Leaugh, Langhaugh and Harts-garth. It is probably the land referred to as ‘et le faulde’ in 1479 among the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1637 it is ‘Leyfauld’ when part of the lands to be inherited by James Elliott and his wife Margaret, daughter of Robert of Redheugh (the name presumably comes from ‘le fauld’; it is ‘Liefauld’ in about 1624).

leafs (leefs) n., pl. leaves – ‘… The banes o’ murderers an’ thieves, An’ bandit leaders, Por-cupine quills, an’ withert leafs, Frae Leb’non’s cedars’[JoHa], ‘The fisslin leafs trimmelt an bevvert i the simmer breeze’[ECS], ‘… keekin throwe atween the leafs … ’[ECS] (an example of the use of a different plural in Hawick than in standard English).

Leafy Hoose (lee-fee-hoos) n. former name for a house in the Weensland area, recorded in the 1851 census. It is probably the same as ‘Ivybank’.

Leaburn Grove

Leaburn Drive
the Leagair

the Leagair (thu-lee-gär) n. rising ground on the south side of the Liddel Water, inside Cumberland, roughly opposite Liddelbank – ‘...Awake all the song birds adown in the valley, The day-dawn is breaking ayont the Leagair’ [DA].

the League o Pity (thu-lee-gö-pi’-ee) n. children’s wing of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, specifically the Scottish version. It was a prominent charitable association in the mid-20th century, organising many local fund-raising events. It was the forerunner of today’s N.S.P.C.C. Schools.

Leahaugh (lee-hawf) n. farmhouse on the Hermitage Water, just south of the Hartsgarth Bridge. Across the road there is the remains of what was once a public right of way and probably the main road through the valley until the 18th century. The name was once also ‘Leanach’. It is ‘Layhalch’ in 1479 when granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with ‘Carolschelis’ and ‘hartsgarth’. The Elliots held it, along with Hartsgarth, Langhaugh and Leaufald, through the 16th century and into the early 17th. It was one of 3 farms given by the last Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his daughter Esther in about the 1640s. It was possessed by William Armstrong in 1632. It was valued (along with Greenholm) in 1678 at about £137. John ‘Weily’ was there in 1694. It was owned by William Manderston according to the 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, and still valued along with Greenholm at £136 15s 8d. Robert Elliot and John Blacklock were both there in 1837. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in the 1840s. The farm was ravaged by the flood of 1846. Thomas and William Kyle were there in 1868. By 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farm at Leahaugh Holm was destroyed in the great flood of 1846 (it is ‘layhauch’ in 1489, ‘Layhauch’ in 1526, ‘Layheuch’ in 1537/8, ‘leyhauch’ in 1613, ‘Leyhauche’ in about 1624, ‘Lehaugh’ in 1632, ‘Layheuch’ in about 1640, ‘Leaugh’ in 1694 and ‘Leehead’ in 1797, 1811 and 1841; it is ‘Leehead’ on Stobie’s 1770 map of Roxburghshire).

Leahaugh Brig (lee-hawf-brig) n. bridge carrying the B6399 road over the Hermitage Water at Leahaugh. It is for some reason labelled ‘Leaugh Bridge’ on the Ordnance Survey map.

Leaugh Cottage (lee-hawf-ko’-eej) n. cottage in Castleton Parish, between the main road and the river, between Leahaugh and Redheugh farms. Arthur Moffat was farmer there in 1861.

Leaheid Loch (lee-heed-loch) n. Leaheid Loch, a small body of water out beyond Stirches, by the roadside roughly opposite Stintynkowe, also called Dykeneuk. There were adjacent farm buildings shown on the Ordnance Survey map of 1863.

Leaheads (lee-heedz) n. Leaheads, former farmstead by Leaheid Loch. Two orphans called Miller were there in 1703. William Goodfellow was there in 1708 and Walter Scott in 1709. There was an unnamed death there in 1734. Alexander Cunningham was there in 1747, John Miller in 1759 and James Riddell in 1797. William Douglas was shepherd there around 1840 and Thomas Lockie was ‘Game Guard’ in 1851 (it is ‘Leehead’ in 1734, ‘Leeheads’ in 1797, ‘Leehead’ in 1840 and ‘Leaheid’ in 1841; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map of Roxburghshire).

leal (leeel) adj., arch., poet. faithful, loyal, true – ‘...the leal an’ aefauld loe thee’ [HSR], ‘He’s weel an’ he’s leal, an’ he’s on his way home ...’ [JJ], ‘For lads leal and true, And lasses braw and fair ...’ [TC], ‘Here though art, and where to-morrow, Far from Hawick, leal and kind ...’ [TCh], ‘...At his leal auld chieftain’s word’ [JEDM], ‘...A laddie kind and leal’ [??], ‘...The leal hands haud oot a welcome, The sib herts still beat true’ [WL], ‘...Lang the Common Riding levee in the herds O’ every leal Teri ...’ [DH] (from Old English; sometimes spelled ‘leil’).

leally (leeel-lea) adv., arch. faithfully, loyally – ‘...and the faith in my body leedly and treudly bindis and oblisis me til a noble and honorabil man, William Douglas of Drumlangrig’ [SB1470], ‘...wee shall lelilie and trewlie keip this our bonde for all quarrells, bloods and goods ...’ [CBP1584].

the Leap (thu-leep) n. name often used for Leap Hill to the south of Hawick.

Leap Burn (leep-burn) n. stream that joins the Flosh Burn to create the Lang Burn near Langbursheils. It is hence one of the headwaters of the Slitrig.

Leap Hill ( leap-hil) n. hill along the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, on the north side, to the south of Western Essenside. It reaches 319 m high and contains various ancient earthworks. A probable hill-fort, just south-east of the summit has been largely destroyed by cultivation. The remains of 2 old sheepfolds lie on the south side. This was also the name of a farmstead there, part of the lands owned by George Scott of Blindhaugh in 1544. In that year George’s 3rd son William was assigned ‘all and haill the leip hill langhoup medo and por-"" 1726, 1729, 1731 and 1734. He is surely related to Thomas, who was there at about the same time. He is probably the John who married Isobel Tinlin in Roberton in 1716. His children included: James (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); John (b.1721); Agnes (b.1724); Isobel (b.1726); John (again, b.1729); William (b.1731); and Thomas (b.1734). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded living at ‘Mossalpgreen’ in 1755. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1755). Perhaps the couple with the same names were in Canonbie in 1766 when an unnamed child of theirs was baptised. John (d.bef. 1794) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Turnbull in 1756 and her death is recorded in 1794. They had a daughter Margaret (b.1757). John (18th/19th C.) servant at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenant Book for Roxburghshire. John (b.c.1770s) servant at ‘Stobsden’ according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; James was listed right before him and Thomas right after. They were all recorded again in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for their non-appeal. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Noble and their son John was baptised in 1686. Helen (b.1684) was probably also his child. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Falsyde in 1686 and another for James Noble in 1687. He may be the same Robert who was at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Borthwickshiel in 1711, when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Probably the same Robert was recorded at Howcleuch in early and late 1717 when his sons Robert and John were baptised. He may be the Robert who married Elspeth Little in Roberton in 1708. Thomas, who married Margaret Inglis in Roberton in 1726, may also be his son. Robert ‘Rob’ (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Janet Andison. In 1721 they were rebuked by the Hawick Session because they ‘did accommodat married men and young men, yea, even boyes, with Candle and Cards, they cursing, swearing and blaspheming the name of God in ye season of ye night’; this would appear to a gambling house (although possibly to do with Tarot cards). In 1724 he was the Learmonth Stakes

lease (lees) n., arch. division of the threads for weaving – In order to prevent two threads of different colours from coming together in the ‘lease’ at the end of each gan or course in warping … ’[BCM1881], v., arch. to wind off, separate threads before weaving – ‘Ti lease yarn’ [GW].

leasehold (lees-hawd) n. leasehold – ‘The trinule o’ pule and stream … the lost lease-haud o’ youth … ’[DH].

leases (lee-seez) n., pl. rentals of farms. These were traditionally made for periods of 15 or 19 years, but sometimes 9 years or shorter. The land-owner usually leased to the same farmer, sometimes extending over several generations of the same family. Rent was once paid in kind, but that eventually gave way to cash. There were several different kinds of lease, sometimes also called a ‘tack’.

leazle (lee-zul) v., poet. to exert – ‘…naither do I leazle mysel’, makin’ a-wark in meikle matters, or in things ower heich for me!’[HSR] (this word is only known once, and is suggested to be a misprint for ‘bizzle’, a variant of ‘baissle’).

Leche (lesh) n. John (d.1395) secretary to the Bishop of Glasgow. He obtained the living of Hawick Church sometime before 1363 and in that year asked for papal confirmation that he held it over the former incumbent John Fleming. It is said ‘he had the church of Haweik, near the English march, which on account of wars and pestilences brings no fruits’. He held the Hawick benefice until at least 1378. There is no reason to believe that he ever visited the town, however. In 1366 he is recorded paying the contribution of the See of Glasgow to the King’s Chamberlain (and there was a contemporary of the same name recorded in the Exchequer Rolls who was a Burgess of Linlithgow). In 1376 he is the John ‘Lethi’ or ‘Lechi’ who was ‘vicar-general in spirituals’ of Walter, Bishop of Glasgow, when he arranged the transfer of the living of Cavers to Matthew Glendonwyn. There is a Patrick, perhaps his son, who was Dean of Glasgow sometime after 1421 and before 1444, and Chancellor of Glasgow from around 1444-60 (also spelled ‘Liche’ and possibly equivalent to ‘Lethi’).

Leck (lek) n. Rev. Joseph of Rawflat (c.1698–1785) minister of Yetholm, 1731–85. He gained the lands of Rawflat in 1739 and they later passed to John Edmund Elliot. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. A story is told of how he was set upon by robbers, and when he and the leader (the local gypsy Will Faa) recognised each other, there were apologies made, and the pair agreed never to speak of it again. He married Ann Scott from Sprouston and their children included: Henry (1736–67); Susan (b.1742), who married Henry Ainslie, Sheriff-Clerk of Roxburghshire; Jean; William; and Thomas. Robert (b.1811/2) from Castleton Parish, he was a publican at about 31 High Street in 1841 and 1851. This was possibly the same as the White Hart Inn and was listed as the Bull & Butcher in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was listed as an agricultural labourer, living at 3 Slitrig Bank. He married Mary (1811–55) daughter of Robert Mitchellhill. Their children included Margaret, Jane, Mary, Robert, Julian, Helen, Thomas, James and William G.

lector (lek-tur) n., arch. a pupil of English (as opposed to Latin), someone who reads the scripture in church – ‘…those who learned humanity, and also the lectors, were all taught under one roof by the then incumbent … and when those who learned humanity, and others who were lectors, were disjoynd … ’[PR1713].

ledder (le-dur) n. a ladder – ‘…As he spiels up and doon his ledder o’ sang, Blithely I ken’ [DH], ‘Hei’s often swung frae scaffolds and faen frae ledders’ [IWL] (see also the older lether).

‘Then a’ the leddie-curl their brows, The cup smashed wi' a tune . . . ’ [WFC], ‘... Amang them aa there was none to marvel Auld Harden's leddy, the ‘Floer o’ Yarrow’ [WL] (also spelled ‘leddie’ and ‘ledy’, and sometimes capitalised).

led ferm (led-fern) n., arch. a small farm that is let along with a bigger one on which the tenant resides, the smaller farm having just one or more shepherds living on it – ‘It had been the custom for many years that Craikhope was let as a led farm along with Billholm . . . ’ [RB].

lee (lee) n., poet. a lie – ‘... As near's I can tell’t, without telling a lee’ [JoHa], ‘... But rather wud wait till oor back's oot o' sicht. To drap what they ken is a lee’ [WFC], v. to lie – ‘... An muckle mair, if I should mention, Ye'd swear I lee’ [JoHa], ‘Let the leen' lipps be putten til seelence, while speik sadlie . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Thou loeist ill mair nor guid, an' leen' raethir nor til speik richteouniss'’ [HSR] (cf. the locally more common lei).

Lee (lee) n. Agnes (16th C.) widow of Robert. In 1541 she was recorded as tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh. Her first name is written ‘Agnete’. George (b.1803/4) probably born in Hownam Parish, son of John ‘Lees’ and Isobel Paterson. He worked for several years as a jeweller in Hawick. He married Margaret Paris in Stow in 1826; she was daughter of the Stow schoolmaster. Their children included: Mary (b.1827); John (b.1829), who must have died young; James Paris (b.1831), firearms inventor; John (b.1833) Canadian foundry owner; Isabella (b.1835); Margaret Paris; Ann; George; and Jessie. The first 5 children were born in Hawick. He emigrated to Canada with his family in 1836, originally settling in Galt, Ontario. He was recorded there as a watchmaker in 1852. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably related to the Lees who held the other half of the lands. James (19th C.) recorded as teacher at a school in O’Connell Street on Pigot’s 1837 directory. James Paris (1831–1904) born in Hawick, son of George, a watchmaker and jeweller. His mother was Margaret Paris. The family emigrated to Galt, Canada when he was 5. There he became a watchmaker like his father, before moving to the U.S.A. and setting up the Lee Firearms Company during the U.S. Civil War, which led to the Remington-Lee rifle design of the 1880s. He later had a hand in developing the typewriter, and back in Britain developed the Lee-Metford rifle. Modifications to this design at the Enfield Royal Ordnance Factory led to the famous Lee-Enfield rifle in 1895, which was extensively used worldwide over the next 50 years. Variants of this rifle were used in every conflict from the Boer War to the Korean War, and the Lee-Enfield Mark III was the decisive British battle rifle of WWI. He married Caroline Chrysler (of the later automobile family) and had sons William and George. He died while on holiday in Newhaven, Connecticut. A commemorative plaque was placed on the stair from the Kirkw Wyn St. Mary’s in 1981, the 150th anniversary of his birth. There is a large plaque in Wallaceburg, Chatham-Kent, western Ontario, where he is said to have completed the design of the box magazine while visiting his brother John. John (1833–1907) born in Hawick, son of George and Margaret Paris. He was a younger brother of James. The family emigrated to Galt, Ontario when he was only about 2 years old. He later settled at Wallaceburg, near Chatham-Kent, in south-western Ontario. He owned a foundry there, and worked with his brother to invent the prototype bolt-action rifle, which led to the Lee-Metford and Lee-Enfield series. Oral tradition says that the first shots of the prototype were fired into an oak tree outside the foundry in Wallaceburg. The original gun is housed in a museum there. He married Louisa Cordelia Clifford and had children James Paris and Frank M. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Roberti de Lee’ in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. William is also listed, before him and so probably related. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Old Jedburgh farm. In 1541 his widow Agnes was recorded as tenant of the half farm, with Gilbert (surely a relative) in the other half. William (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby, including Robert, who was probably related. William (16th C.) tenant of the farm of ‘Auld Jedburghheid’ according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was surely related to the other Lees at Old Jedburgh.

leeur (lee-ur) n., poet a liar – ‘I said in my hæste, A’ men ar leers’ [HSR] (cf. leier).

leeberal (lee-bu-ru) adj. liberal – ‘The rantin’ sangs, the leeberald dramas, An’ lashins o’ bitter yill’ [RM], relating to the Liberal Party – ‘I’ve aye voted Leeberal, the Tories I ban; I’ll vote Leebenal again, Mr. Elliot’s my man’ [JCG].

the Leeberal Club (thu-lee-bu-ru-klub) n. Hawick Liberal Club, being a political and social club connected with the Liberal Party. The premises stood at the corner of the High Street and Brougham Place, and were built in 1894 on the site of Milligan's the cabinet-makers. The architect was J.P. Alison (with help by apprentice Alexander Inglis). It is a prominent L-shaped building with Renaissance detailing and a prominent 3-storey bay window. The club went through periods of financial difficulty, with parts of the building being let for other purposes. It closed in the late 1990s and re-opened as Hawick Sports and Social Club. However, the building has been involved in an ownership dispute, and its future remains uncertain. The building is marked with a plaque commemorating the laying of the foundation stone.

leed (lee-ed) adj., n. lead – ‘hei was hut ower the heid wi a pipe made o leed’, ‘But, oh! the herd that’s in the clay, And cauld as leed … ’[TCh], a needle on a knitting frame, v. to coat with lead paint – ‘Ee gaun ower the fireplace wi’ a duster But oor mothers hed a black leeded grate’[AY] (note the pronunciation; also spelled ‘lead’ and ‘leid’).

leefi (lee-fi) adj., arch. lawful – ‘…in all honest, gude and lefful querelis aganis all men … ’[SB1527], ‘And thairfor I, the said Walter Scot of Branhxelme … byndis and oblissis me to fortifie, manteine, and defend the said Robert Scot of Branxhelme …’ [SB1585], adj., poet. compassionate, kind-hearted – ‘Awa, then, wi’ yer leefu’ says – We’ll hug oor doxies as oor poet.

leelang (lee-lang) adj., arch. live-long, the whole – ‘There is a preacher in our chapel, Fala, &c. She showers her favours on his croon’[WP], ‘The dirdums o’ the wheelebings Chunter the lee-lang day … ’[DH], ‘Croochin wi scaly claws lockit ticht to the spalk. The lee-lang wunter nicht, Till sweir daylicht’[DH].

leemit (lee-mit) n. limit – ‘An if ee gi’e um a time leemit o’ five meenites hei’ll probably no speak for much mair as an hoor an’ a half’[IWL].

leemonade (lee-mi-näd) n., arch. lemonade, a carbonated drink – ‘…an ward eet afore ma lookin een on a leemeenade or sic-another fussie drink’[ECS].

leenge (leenj) v., arch. to lounge, slouch, walk slouchingly.

le-en hoor (lee-in-oor) n., arch. literally ‘eleven hour’, a mean taken at 11 a.m., usually by workers or children – ‘A guid le-en hoor’[JoHo] (see also eleven hoors).

Lees (leez) n. former name for the farm now called West Lees, near Appletreehall. The old names for the lands there were Easter and Wester Moormaw. There were Scots of Lees in the 17th and 18th centuries, connected with the Scotts of Catslack. William ‘in Lees’ was recorded in 1698. Robert Scott was there in 1705. John Elliot was tenant there in 1711, Adam Scott in 1721–35, David Renwick in 1725 and Robert Graham in 1729. Robert Scott in Lees died in 1738. George Graham was there in at least 1744–47, John Irvine in 1759 and John Scott in 1764. Alexander Somerville was tenant there in 1812. The lands were valued at £52 in 1811, when owned by William Scott of Burnhead. John Wilson was farmer there in 1841 and Thomas Turnbull in 1861 (also written ‘Lies’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Lees see Laws

Lees (leez) n. Alexander (b.1821/2) from Earlston, he was a blacksmith on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 79 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret and Isabella. David (1812/3–78) farmer at Fenwick. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 140 acres, employing 3 people. He married Isabella Tait, who died in 1871, aged 59. Their children included Janet, Isabella and James (who married Jane Little). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. David Crawford (19th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He donated a set of communion plate to the Relief (Allars) Kirk before emigrating to America about 1850. These sacrament vessels went to the elders on the closure of Allars. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1721. He married Margaret Graham and their children included: James (b.1719); and Francis (b.1721). The witnesses in 1721 were John Dryden and James Blyth. Bessie (b.1723), James (b.1726) and Helen (b.1729), baptised in Minto, could also be his children. John (18th/19th C.) servant in Longnewton Mill, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. William (15th/16th C.)

Legerwood (le-jur-wud) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) smith at the Forkins, also known as the ‘Woollee smiddy’. He was listed among the original congregation of Wolfcote Free Kirk in 1849. He married Mary Scott in 1814. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. His name was written ‘Ligertuood’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish when his daughter Margaret was baptised in 1719. He is probably the James who got married in Ashkirk in 1715 (with no wife’s name given). John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His name was written ‘Ligeruood’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Kedie in 1699 and their children included: Isobel (b.1702); Margaret (b.1707); and John (b.1709). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1720 he married Bessie Riddell, who was also from Robertson, the marriage taking place in Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Lidgertonwood’ (former spelling variants include ‘Lidgertonwood’, ‘Ligertwood’, ‘Litchardwood’ and even ‘Lizzarhide’).

Leggat (le-ga’) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Archibald (b.1716), William (b.1718) and Margaret (b.1720). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish whose son Gideon was baptised in 1722. Andrew (18th/19th C.) coachman and servant to Rev. Dr. Charters of Wilton for 42 years. He was recorded as ‘chaise driver’ for the minister in the tax records of 1797. He was a seceder, being a member of the ‘Burgher’ congregation and hence never entered the church to hear his employer preach. When his master preached at a neighbouring church, he would sleep in the carriage until the service was over. He once drove all the way to Ashkirk by mistake without the minister inside the carriage. He was said to be rather slow in his movements, and a story is told of how, when sent on an errand into Hawick, he would fetch a horse from the far end of the Glebe, so that a maidservant had already gone to Hawick and returned before he was ready to go. It is also said that frequent complaints were made by the maidservants about his old-world and disobliging ways, but the minister would always just say ‘As long as I have a house, Andrew shall have a chair’. Andrew (18th/19th C.) gardener and house servant at Woll in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Scott of Woll. By 1785 he was ‘Footman & House Servant’ for Charles Scott of Woll and continued there until at least 1788. By 1791 there was a different servant at Woll, and he was listed as ‘postillion’ at Burnhead. He was still coachman at Burnhead in 1793. It seems possible he was the same man as the coach-driver for Rev. Charters of Wilton. He is probably the Andrew who married Janet Scott in Ashkirk in 1775, and whose children included: John (b.1777); Andrew (b.1779); Margaret (b.1780), possibly the same as Peggy; Gideon (b.1785); and William (b.1790), born in Wilton, who became a merchant in New York. Andrew (18th/19th C.) whip-maker in Hawick. He is probably the apprentice to saddler
John Tudhope recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in Hawick in 1799. His son William died in Hawick in 1808 and his daughter Margaret in 1810; she could be the daughter of Andrew and Janet Scott born in Ashkirk in 1780. His son William died in 1808. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Andrew (b.1750); Walter (b.1752); John (b.1754); Bettie (b.1856); Gideon (b.1758); James (b.1763); and Robert (b.1767). He may be the Gideon in Unthank who (perhaps secondly) married Margaret Oliver from Abbotrule in 1762. He may be the Gideon, son of Andrew, born in Kirkton in 1722. Gideon (b.c.1770s) cooper in Denholm according to the list for the Militia ballot in Cavers Parish in 1799. John (18th C.) listed as house and stable servant at Woll in 1797, when he was working for Charles Scott. He was probably son of Andrew, who had earlier been the servant of the Scotts of Woll. Also in 1797 he was recorded as servant at Woll on the list of men of Ashkirk Parish who were balloted to serve in the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the John whose son Walter was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1791. Janet, described as ‘independent’ in Denholm in the 1841 census, may have been his widow; by 1851 she is a 76 year old pauper, recorded as born in Denholm. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (b.1780) probably daughter of Andrew and Janet Scott. She married Thomas Purdie in Wilton in 1802. Rev. Robert (b.1861) son of James and Jane Finlay, he was born at Coatbridge (or Old Monkland). He was educated in Glasgow and learned shorthand at an early age. He worked in an accounting office, then for a newspaper, but gave up journalism to train for the Church. He was licensed in 1889 and in 1891 was ordained as minister of Wolfefe Free Kirk. He remained there until 1898 when he left for Bankhill Church, Berwick, which he resigned in 1919. He set up a Literary Society in Rulewater and contributed to several newspapers and magazines. He did not marry. William ‘Willie’ or ‘Wullie’ (1718–1768) 2nd son of Andrew, blacksmith at Cauldmill, he grew up with his older brother Archibald and sister Margaret, who worked on Cavers estate. He was a simple-minded worker employed on Cavers estate to run errands, and is traditionally said to have been killed by the cook when he returned with the wrong vegetables. He was immortalised in stone through a crude statue, where he is posing with his dog, bonnet and basket. He lived with his sister Margaret at Cauld Mill; she was a servant, possibly working in the washing house there. Lady Cavers appears to have been kind to him, since there are several estate records of purchases of clothing and shoes on his behalf. The statue was probably an apprentice piece by a mason at Denholm Quarry. One story is that Wullie did not like it and kicked off the dog’s ear in anger. The statue originally stood in the walled garden at Cavers, later being moved to the sawmill and then to near the mansion house itself. There it was vandalised and the pieces fell into different hands and the statue was believed to be lost forever. However, the pieces were collected by W.B. Little and Jack Fraser and the statue reconstructed by Fraser and placed in the garden of old Wilton Manse. After Fraser’s death (and much negotiation) it was returned to Cavers around 2002, and is now situated outside the modern Cavers Kirk. William (b.1790) born in Wilton, son of Andrew and Janet Scott. In Hawick he was a friend of William Scott, later his business partner. He emigrated to New York in 1818, where he started a dry goods firm of Scott & Leggat, with a shop on Hudson Street. He married Mary Robertson and then Jane Ann Atwill (who was a niece of William Scott’s wife). His children were: Jennett (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); Richard (b.1833); Gertrude Roos (b.1834); William Scott (b.1839); Mary Jane (b.1840); Anna (b.1843); and Alexander (b.1845). It is said that he ‘cherished an ardent love for his native country and retained to the last in all its purity the Scottish accent’. leggeet (le-gee’, -gi’) pp., adj. legged – ‘…on the Vertish Hill Sports Committee since Moses and Aaron won the thre-leggeet race’ [IWl]. leggums (le-gum) n., pl., arch. leggings – ‘…the motor dreiver, trig in eis ticht leggums’ [ECS], ‘A per o’ leggums’ [GW] (also ‘leggims’). the Legion (thu-lee-jin) n. Hawick Royal British Legion Club, formed in 1938. The Club met originally in the Y.M.C.A. rooms on O’Connell Street, then on Commercial Road and after WWII moved to 3 O’Connell Street, which had been the ‘Central Rooms’ or Johnstone’s tea rooms. The Club existed to help ex-servicemen in difficulty and as a social centre for ex-servicemen, and was a branch of the national association founded by Earl Haig in 1921 (with the ‘Royal’ title being granted in 1971). Capt. B. Montgomery was the first Chairman and Provost Landles was the first enrolled member. The Club published

the ‘Hawick Pictorials’ 1939-59. It also helped found a football team in 1953, started by Ronnie Telfer. The Club closed in 1997, with the clubrooms later used as a fitness centre. There was also a branch in Newcastle, at 3 North Hermitage Street.

the Legion (the-lee-jin) n. Hawick British Legion Football Club, an amateur football team, originally sponsored by the Legion club, being founded with the aid of a donation in 1953. The club has had many premises and is now located in Princes Street.

Leigh (lee) n. Henry (c.1555–c.1606) of Rockcliffe Castle, Cumbria, son of Thomas. He was appointed Deputy Warden of the English West Marches in at least 1597. In that year there was an indenture signed at Copshawholm between him and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for the delivery of 5 Scotsmen. He appears to have suffered from lack of family wealth and was imprisoned, probably for meeting personally with James VI, among other things. He may be the same man who was Captain of Carlisle Castle in 1604 and a Border Commissioner in 1606.

lei-like (li-lihk) adj., arch. like a lie, fictional, untruthful (recorded in the Hawick news in 1954).

lein (lin) pp., arch. lain (noted by E.C. Smith).

Leishman’s

Leipzig (lip-zig) n. battle of 1813, where the coalition armies defeated the French under Napoleon, being the largest battle in Europe until WWI, and the first major defeat for Napoleon. Although no British troops were involved, the victory was a cause of huge celebrations throughout the country. It was celebrated in Hawick with illuminations, probably meaning extra lamps and candles in the mains treets, burning tar barrels and a torchlight procession.

leish (leesh) adj., arch. supple, athletic, active, nimble, sometimes suggesting tallness – ‘...my father was buchtin’ the Brocklaw yowes to twae young, lish, clever hizzies ae night after sunset’ [LHTB], ‘A pairteet thre th leesh, swank-leike fallih ’ (at ’Ad been followin eis lead) at the whusht road-end at Jedfit’ [ECS], ‘My fishin’-wand, it’s strang and leish ... ’ [DH], ‘The gress grew lang and leish ahint the schule’ [DH] (occasionally spelled ‘leesh’, ‘leesh’ or ‘lish’).

Leishman (leesh-min) n. James (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Edinburgh and the north, as well as to Newcastle, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may have married Catherine and had children including Robert. Robert (b.c.1812/3) Hawick hosier traveller from the West End. In 1837 he was running a cart from Buccleuch Street to Edinburgh and Galashiels twice a week, and once a week to Newcastle. In 1841 he was listed as a carrier on the Back Row. He often accompanied William Laidlaw on sales trips to the Newcastle area. It was said to have been ‘an open secret that Robert’s conscience did not trouble him with knotty questions of excise’ [JHH]. His wife was Margaret, and their children included James, Catherine, Agnes, Margaret, Jane and Thomas. His mother was probably Catherine (living with him in 1841). By 1871 he was living in Berwick and his name was spelled ‘Lishman’. Robert ‘Bert’ (1896/7–1961), well known local auctioneer, with a saleroom in the old ‘Green Kirk’ building at Myreslawgrem. He was writer of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column for many years. He was also a member of Hawick Town Council and Bailie from 1946 to 1961, when he died on a visit to Tasmnia.

Leishman Place (leesh-min-plis) n. part of Burnfoot, built in two phases, beginning in 1957. It is a dead-end street off Ruberslaw Road and was named after Bert Leishman.

Leishman’s (leesh-minz) n. carriers firm of the early 19th century which ran weekly between Hawick and Newcastle.
leisome

leisome *(li-sum) adj., arch. telling a lie, fibbing – ‘If it’s nae lee, it’s e’en unco leesium like’ [JoJ] (also written ‘lesome’, but not to be confused with leesome).

leisome-like *(li-sum-lik) adj., arch. like a lie – ‘A leisome-like story’ [GW].

leister *(lee-stur) n. a spear with three or more prongs used for fishing – ‘Wi’ their nets and their leisters, their bowats and jegs . . .’ [UB], ‘In my youth, when ‘leisters’ were not illegal, or at least when their use was winked at by the powers that were . . .’ [RB], v. to fish with a leister – ‘. . .when law allowed the leistering of salmon . . .’ [RM] (probably from Old Norse; some old examples exist in the Museum).

the Leisure Centre *(thu-lee-shur-sen’-ur) n. Teviotdale Leisure Centre, Mansfield Road, opened in 1982 on the site of the former railway station. It consists of a swimming pool and squash courts, with an indoor bowling hall opened in 1985. It was designed by Faulkener-Brown, Hendy & Stonor of Newcastle, with opinions differing as to its aesthetic qualities. The bowling extension was not designed to match the original part, and here opinions do not differ. The palm tree fell into the pool in 2008.

Leitch *(lee-ch) n. Andrew (b.1838) son of Andrew from Largo, he studied at St. Andrews University 1855–59. He became a teacher, working in Castletown, Caithness, Dollar Academy, Dalry, and also in Hawick. George (b.1795/6) from Galashiels, he was farmer at Barnes in 1851. He was then farming 730 acres and employing 6 people. His wife was Isabel (from Smallholm) and their children included James M., Alexander, Isabel and Richard W. Simon (15th/16th C.) tenant of Minto Craigen about 1502, along with Thomas Young and his son Thomas, and William Johnstone. Their farms had been raided by a group led by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshaws, for which Scott received remission. His name is recorded as ‘Symon Leich’.

Leith *(leeth) n. port situated where the Water of Leith joins the Firth of Forth, now essentially part of Edinburgh. It was an important port for local trade, particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries. Sometimes proclamations were read ‘at the peer of Leith’ in order to be widely broadcast, e.g. a record in the 1723 Session books relating to an attempt to ascertain whether a Hawick woman’s husband was alive or not.

Leithead *(leethe-heed, lut-heed) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) weaver in Crumhaugh. In 1722 he married Rachel Scott in Hawick Parish. They had a daughter Isobel in 1726, and another Isabel in 1732. The 1725 baptism was witnessed by William Elliot and John Scott. He could be the man of that name, ‘old Andrew Cross Wind’, who died in Hawick in 1778. He could be the Andrew who witnessed baptisms in 1772 for Robert and for Walter and in 1774 (along with Robert) for John. David (17th C.) resident of ‘Crackuooll’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. Probably the same David married Janet Shiel with their daughter Agnes baptised in 1690, and witnessed Robert Pringle and James (probably a relative). Gladstones (b.1744) local labourer, son of William. He married Helen Hall and their children, baptised in Kirkton Parish, included: Betty (b.1769); Helen (b.1774); Gilbert (b.1776); Janet (b.1777); and another Janet (b.1786/7), who married shepherd and carrier Adam Scott. Henry (b.1817/8) from Polwarth in Berwickshire, he was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He is recorded there in 1851 and 1861. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickiana’. He was said to have ‘a curious habit of putting his tongue out at the side of his mouth, and is here represented doing so.’ He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Hymers in Cavers Parish in 1856. Their children included James (b.1857), Margaret (b.1859) and Elizabeth Agnes (b.1860). Isabel ‘Tibbie o the Green’ (c.1795–1870) well-known West-endner of the mid-19th century. Daughter of market gardener Robert, the family had a garden at Myreslawgreen, the property of Mr. Turnbull of Briery-yards. She lived in a house near there, possibly corresponding to 4 Myreslawgreen, being there with her brother William until his death in the 1850s. She was known as an independent but warm-hearted person who kept old-fashioned dress. She is probably the woman of this name who was among West-enders to recover from cholera in 1832. In 1851 she was described as a ‘Gardener’ and in 1861 she was an ‘Out-door Worker’. She also had a niece Isabel Mein and a grand nephew Robert M. Laurie. Her bier is said to have been the last that used the Hawick ‘mort-cloth’. The family name locally goes back at least to William of Cavers Parish, whose daughter Margaret was married in Edinburgh in 1708. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from the Wright there. James (17th C.) wright of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Noloch and their children included: James (b.1704).
Leithead

The witnesses in 1704 were ‘vintner’ Francis Elliot and weaver Andrew Jardine. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ormiston who married Janet Laidlaw in Cavers Parish in 1708. Helen (b.1710), baptised in Cavers, was probably his child. Perhaps the same James was at Ormiston in 1705 when his son William was baptised in Cavers. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Milsington in 1717 and 1725. He may be the James who married Bessie Riddell in Roberton in 1725. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Jean (b.1717) and an unnamed child (b.1725). He is probably also the James recorded at Todshawhill in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised.

James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Boonraw in 1723. He married Janet Hill in Bowden in 1716. Their children included: Janet (b.1723) and James (b.1725), baptised in Wilton; and Agnes (b.1728) and Isobel (b.1732), baptised in Morebattle. The witnesses in 1723 were John Scott and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Blaikie and their son ‘Gledstines’ was baptised in 1775. He may have been a brother of Gladstains.

James (19th C.) married Helen Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1847. James ‘Jimmy’ (d.2003) Acting Father in 1960. In 1961 he carried the Flag again, since that year’s Acting Father, Tom Crosbie, had broken his leg. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1702 and 1716. His children probably included: Andrew (b.1696); William (b.1702); John (b.1713); and Robert (b.1716). Perhaps the same John was at Whitfield in 1698 when his son William was baptised in Wilton; the witnesses were John and Robert Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Katherine Thomson and their children included: Jane (b.1767); John (b.1770); Jane (b.1772); Margaret (b.1774); and Andrew (b.1777). The witnesses in 1774 were Andrew and Robert (who were surely close relatives). John (18th C.) recorded as owner of land in Lilliesleaf in 1788, valued at £6 13s 4d. He was still recorded as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who also owned lands in Lilliesleaf. John (18th/19th C.) carrier in the Denholm area. He was involved in the trip to the summit of Ruberslaw where the Lairds of Cavers and Wells met to resolve a boundary dispute over dinner. He allowed the cart to jolt, resulting in George Hunter (of the Fleece Inn) to come closest in his life to cursing! He may be the John of the Cross Wynd whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1811. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (1781–1843) born at Shankend, son of William and Janet Tait. He lived at Sandyhall (Ashkirk), Woll (Ashkirk), Birkwood (Ashkirk) and Langshaw (Melrose). In 1803 he married Jane Harvey. Their children included: William (1805–74); Robert (b.1807), who married Janet Jessie Knox and emigrated to Waterloo County, Ontario; Jane (b.1811), who married William Dodds; James (b.1816), who died in Wyoming; Thomas (b.1817); John (b.c.1820); and Janet or Jessie (b.c.1824), who married James Cousins. John (b.c.1810) carter in Hawick. In 1841 he was listed as a farmer, probably on the Cross Wynd, but by 1861 he was at Mather’s Close. His wife was Mary and their children included John, William, Janet, Henry, Thomas, Agnes, Mary and Margaret. He may have been son of the earlier Jhn of the Cross Wynd. Richard (b.c.1775) mason who lived on the Kirkwynd. He was listed in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. He married Elizabeth Aitkin and their children included Robert, David and Catherine.

Robert (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is probably the Robert who (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism in 1774 for John. He married Betty Laidlaw and their children included Andrew (b.1770) and Isabel (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were Andrew (perhaps his father) and Alexander Buncyan. He is probably the Robert whose wife was buried in Hawick in 1772. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hogg and their son Walter was baptised in 1777. The witness were John and Walter, who were surely his close relatives. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Tushope in 1767. Robert (18th/19th C.) one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in about 1798. Robert (18th/19th C.) described as ‘R. Leithead o’ the Green’. He may be the market gardener who was father to ‘Tibbie o the Green’. In 1809 he and weaver Peter Fletcher walked to Selkirk to secure the services of a drummer and a fifer for the ‘rebel’ party at the Common Riding. He could be the stocking-maker Robert who contracted cholera in 1832, but recovered; he lived in an upper flat of the house containing Henry Halliburton on the Back Row. He married Janet Anderson in 1782. Their children included: William (b.1783), who was a frame-worker; Robert (b.1785); Robert (b.1786); Jane (b.1787); Isobel (b.1790), ‘Tibbie o the Green’; Agnes (b.1792); and Mary (b.c.1800). His mother ‘at the green’ died in 1782. He is probably the stockmaker Robert whose unnamed child died in 1811. Robert (19th C.) stockmaker who lived on the Loan. In 1863 he presented the Archaeological Society with the flag from the ‘Wasla Water’ party of 1809. He was surely related to the earlier ‘R. Leithhead o’ the Green’ who had been involved on the ‘rebel’ side in 1809. He could be the Robert born to Richard and Elizabeth Aitkin in 1805. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to James Ker of Bewlie. He is recorded in 1622, along with Ker and other servants of his when there was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Walter (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed in Lilliesleaf. He may be the Walter, portioner of Lilliesleaf, who married Marion, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth (or Euphan) Henry and their children included: Andrew (b.1766); and George (b.1768). Witnesses to the 1766 baptism were Andrew and John, who were surely closely related to him. Probably the same Walter witnessed (along with John) a baptism for Robert in 1777. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marjory Thomson and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were Andrew (surely related to him) and Andrew Thomson (probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same William married Isobel Scott and had a son Walter baptised in Ashkirk in 1691. The baptismal witnesses were Robert and William Scott(probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He was probably related to Walter, who was a wright in Lilliesleaf at the same time. William (17th C.) farmer in Cavers Parish. He is recorded as deceased in 1708 when his daughter Margaret married Alexander Grib in Edinburgh. William (17th/18th C.) gardener at Fenwick. He married Bessie Stevenson in 1714, possibly at the house of William Whillans at the Flex. This was a ‘supernumerary marriage’, i.e. the celebration had more guests than the modest amount prescribed by the law of the time. Both he and Whillans probably lost the bond that they had lodged with the Session. William (b.1721/2) farm labourer in Hawick Parish, living at Meikle Whitlew and Flex from infancy. He worked mainly as a ploughman. In 1741 he was recorded as resident at Whitlewhaugh. In 1767 he gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common; he was described as married at that time. He married Bessy Gledstains, and their children, born in Hawick Parish, included: John (b.1737); Gledstains (or Gladstone, b.1741), an unusual forename, presumably from his mother’s maiden name; and Janet (b.1743). The witnesses in 1741 were carrier John Ruecas and Kirk Officer John Telfer. Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Whitlew in 1768. William (18th C.) recorded living at Orchard in 1749. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included John (b.1743), Richard (b.1745) and Robert (b.1749). William (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish that had formerly been owned by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. These lands were valued at £171 10s. He was also recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as former holder of lands in Lilliesleaf that had been acquired by Edgar Hunter and were at that time owned by William Riddell of Camieston. He was probably related to John, who also owned lands in Lilliesleaf (also spelled ‘Leathhead’, ‘Leithetheide’, ‘Leithhead’, ‘Liethhead’ and ‘Lithhead’).

Leitle see Little leize see leeze leman (le-man) n., poet. a sweetheart, concubine – ‘HE would have wooed the gentle may To be his light leman’ [JTe], ‘Ther ar thriescoore queens, and fourscoore lemanes, an’ mays wuthowten nummer’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

Lempitlaw (lem-pi-law) n. village in northeastern Roxburghshire, about 3 miles east of Kelso. It used also to be the name of a small parish, which was annexed to Sprouston. The church there was connected with Soutra. The site of the 13th century parish church can still be made out in the churchyard, which includes a well-preserved hog-back gravestone. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott of Rankilburn and his son Walter in the early 15th century. They were effectively annexed to the Barony of Branxholme, remaining that way through part of the 16th and 17th centuries. In 1517 they were described as being ‘waste’, but valued at 20 pounds in times of peace. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. In 1692 the ‘tacks’ of the lands were set to Sir Patrick Scott, along with those of the Barony of Eckford and the lands in Hawick owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties and still listed as a Buccleuch property in the Land Tax Rolls of the 19th century (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘lempedu hlaw’, meaning ‘limpet-shaped hill’; it first occurs as ‘Lempedelawe’ in 1190 and is ‘Lempatelaw’ in 1426, ‘Lempatlaw’ in 1463, ‘Lempetlaw’ in 1484, ‘Lempedelawe’ in 1190 and is ‘Lempatelaw’ in 1426, 'Lempetlaw' in 1517, and ‘Lempetlaw’ in 1528 and 1553/4).

len (len) n. a loan – ‘gie’s a len o a fiver’, ‘Wull ee gie’z a len o eer grape’ [ECS], ‘Gie’s a len’ o’ eer hurbarra’ [GW], ‘Howanever, insteed o’ comin for the len o’ mine for the denner tables ... ’[BW1978], v. to loan – ‘Sin’ I’ve to len’ a haun’ to raise the treasure, ‘Lang wi’ the toil, I’d like to share the pleasure’ [JoHa], ‘Ane guid man shaws faavor an’ len’s ... ’[HSR], ‘Can ye len’s half a croon?’ [RM], ‘He is evir misrecorde, an’ len’s: an’ his affspring ar blisset’ [HSR] (shortened form of lend; also written ‘len’; see also take a len o).

lenity (le-ni-tee) n., arch. mildness, lenience – ‘...and whereas the said Mr John of his own lenity, since the aforesaid year 1669, never quarrelled several persons in the town to educat children further than the said book ... ’[PR1713].

lenten kail (len-tin-käl) n., arch. a meatless vegetable soup, often made of boiled cabbage served in milk – ‘Dame Appetite, he thought to bang her. But flesh is fraill! That day – bad luck, (misfortune hang her), Brought lentrin kail’ [JR], ‘It [the food] consisted of milk and meal and what was called ‘Lenten Kail’, an expression now rarely heard in the parish [of Teviothead’] [HAST1902] (also ‘lentrin kail’; probably from being served in the Spring).

length (lenth) n. length, the extent of something – ‘look it the lenth o that hing!’; ‘...lyk as at mair lenth is contenit in the decret gewyn thairwpon ... ’[SB1500], ‘The paroche is 8 mylles in lenth, so there are some rowmes 8 mylles or thairby from the kirk ... ’[PR1627], ‘...of before she took them away she either made price with the pursuer, or askit his liberty to goe that lenth with them?’ [BR1680], ‘...as the said act ... in it selfe at mair lenth proports ... ’[BR1692], ‘The awfihest blatter o rain cam on, and A was amaist drookeet be A wan the lenth o the Sandbed’ [ECS], state of extreme agitation or anger, tantrum, fit – ‘she we’ an awfi lenth when she saw the mess’, ‘Hei’s gaun a bonne length’ [ECS], distance to someone’s abode – ‘If ee come ma lenth, gie’s a ca’’ [GW], the whole extent – ‘The day be the lenth’ [GW] (note the difference in pronunciation compared with standard English).

the length (thu-lenth) adv. the distance, as far as required – ‘But they told Bailie Purdom who went the length, that ... ’[PR1722].

the lenth o (thu-lenth-o) adv. as far as, the full extent of – ‘the bairn got the lenth o the street afore they fund ’er’, ‘Yince an A’d wun there, A thocht, A micht mebbies cood geet a hurl the lenth o Hawick’ [ECS], ‘A wun the lenth o the brig’ [GW].

leper squint (le-pur-skwun’) n., arch. a leper’s squint, a small, low window in a church through which lepers could hear and see the communion service without coming into contact with the congregation. There may be an example in Cavers Auld Kirk (also written ‘leper’s’ or ‘lepers’).

the Leper Well (thu-le-pur-wel) n. popular name for a spring near Spittal-on-Rule, still current in the mid-20th century. The spring was surrounded by dressed stones, and its name gives some credence to the idea that there was once a leper’s hospital there. It was also known as ‘the Kirkyaird Well’, and used to be thought to possess healing powers, particularly for skin diseases.

leprosy (lep-ru-see) n. chronic, mildly contagious disease caused by Mycobacterium leprae, characterised by inflamed nodules beneath the skin, loss of sensation and wasting of body parts. It now occurs only in tropical and sub-tropical regions, but was common in Mediaeval Europe, where it is seen as both holy and sinful. It was certainly rife throughout the British Isles by the 11th century. Robert the Bruce is suggested to have died of the disease in 1329, and John Turnbull of Minto may have died from it about 1425 (causing a dispute over his lands). The hospital at Spittal-on-Rule may have been founded to help lepers, perhaps related to the Laird of Bedrule.

A spring near there was known as a ‘leper well’. Cavers Auld Kirk may have a ‘leper squint’.

leprosies (le-ris) adj., arch. affected with pig ‘measles’ – ‘...[Fined] for publicly selling ... ane carcass of swyne which was leprosis and consequent dangerous to be made use of’ [BR1692].

Leslie (lez-lee) n., A.J. (19th/20th C.) London sculptor responsible for ‘Youth’, which was incorporated into the Hawick War Memorial.

the Lesser Toon Hall (thu-le-sur-toon-hal) n. smaller venue in the Town Hall, off the main auditorium, frequently used for lectures, coffee mornings etc.

Lessuden (le-su-din) n. alternative older name for St. Boswells, surviving in Lessuden House (the origin is Old English ‘laes side wynn’, meaning ‘the meadow by the slope with the pasture’; also spelled ‘Lessudden’).

Lessuden Hoose (le-su-din-hoos) n. family home of the Scots of Raeburn, in St. Boswells. It goes back to at least 1680, with remodelling in each of the following centuries. It has a tower-shaped dovecote dating from about 1800.

lest (lest) v. to last, endure – ‘A deh ken how long he’ll lust is the new R.E. teacher’, ‘She’s like a guid bit tweed hersel’, ‘Made tae lust forever’ [IJ], ‘...thinkin that here was a meenit o his life he wad like to lest for ever’ [DH], ‘...But how lang will it lest’ [WL], adj. last, final – ‘she’s the lest o her generation’.

lesteek (les-teek) n., adj. elastic – ‘My mither aince for lestic sent me roun’, ‘A yird o’ black to dae her need’ [WL], ‘Skinny’ or ‘grey’ – ee even got a choice: Succulent dauds o lestic-sided dough’ [DH], ‘Sailin roond in a sea o’ bliss wi a co’conut in yin hand And a ‘lestic ba’ in the tother ... ’ [DH] (cf. lestic and eelestic).

Letham (le-thum) n. James (1954– ) born in Airdrie, he was educated in Aberdeen at Madras College in St. Andrews and at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music in Glasgow. After training as a teacher he was appointed to Galashiels Academy, then became Head of Music at Jedburgh, before succeeding Ian Seeley as Head of Music at Hawick High School in 1997. He has been involved in a large number of musical enterprises in the Borders, including serving as musical director for Hawick Amateur Operatic Society, conductor of the Eildon Singers and the Borders Youth Orchestra and work with the Hawick community choir the Melody Makers. He has been a strong promoter of the work of Hawick-born composer Sir John Blackwood. He also wrote the music for ‘The Best O’ A’. He retired in 2011 (see also Lethem).

Lethem (le-thum) n. hamlet between the A6088 and A68, just before the Carter Bar, in the eastern part of Southdean Parish. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 3 stedings and valued at £3 6 shillings. In 1541 Thomas Laidlaw was tenant of part paying 22s yearly and Laurence Lawrence and James Laidlaw were tenants of another part paying 22s yearly. John Oliver and Simon Robinson were there in 1623. John Thomson was tenant there in 1694. Thomas Scott is recorded there on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls and his son was still there in 1841. Walter Renwick was shepherd there in 1797. James Tully and Thomas Tait were servants there in 1799. There was once a chapel here, but no signs of it remain, although the small hill to the west is known as Chapel Knowe; here there are the remains of a settlement, about 43 m by 33 m in size, overlain by a smaller, roughly triangular enclosure (note, however, that there could be confusion here with the ancient chapel which was once situated in the village of Leithold in Eccles Parish). A fort is on the hill just to the north. ‘Katey’s Cross’ was also just to the west, triangular enclosure (note, however, that there could be confusion here with the ancient chapel which was once situated in the village of Leitholm in Eccles Parish). A fort is on the hill just to the north. ‘Katey’s Cross’ was also just to the west, once used as a gathering point for a local market, and on the site of the former settlement of ‘Wattie’s Spinnels’ (also written ‘Letham’, as well as ‘Leatham’, ‘Lethame’, etc.; there are other places of the same name in Eccles Parish near Berwick, also called ‘Leitholm’, as well as elsewhere in Scotland).

Lethem (le-thum) n. Edmund (13th/14th C.) rector of ‘the church of Saint Marie of Farmainishop’ (i.e. St. Mary’s of the Lowes, Yarrow) from 1292. He is recorded as ‘Master Edmund de Letham’. In 1296 he swore fealty to Edward I, and later that year he received a writ from Edward to restore him to his lands and rights as ‘parson of the church of the forest’. Helen nee Turnbull (17th C.) wife of James. She kept an inn in Hawick after her husband’s death. Here in 1642 a large group was drinking with a servant of the Laird of Cavers, who accused his companions of stealing his wallet, with the case heard by the Hawick Magistrates. John and William, mentioned in the same case, were her sons.
Lethem

Henry (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. Isobell (b.1687) born in Hawick, daughter of James and Isobell ‘Gyrden’. She is recorded as ‘Lithen’ in the Parish records in 1713 when she returned to Hawick after working ‘in service’ in Edinburgh, and was asked to produce a ‘testificate’ since it was rumoured that she had been married and her husband Benjamin Taylor had deserted her. In 1715 she was described as ‘servitrix to ye Laird of Whithaugh’ (the one in Liddesdale) when summoned by Hawick Session from Castleton Parish ‘to come and satisfie here for her scandal of adulterie’. She stood several mornings at the church door in sackcloth, but because of the distance she had to travel was then leniently ‘to appear hereafter on the usual place of repentance in sackcloth two other days, before noon and after noon’. She appeared for the last time at the end of that year, and appears to have then fully satisfied the Session. It is possible she is the Isobel ‘Lithen’ recorded in 1716 when her son John, conceived in adultery with John Scott, was baptised in Hawick. By 1723 she appears to have settled into a relationship with William Hood, and again the Session became upset by ‘the scandal of adulterie’; she stood in sackcloth for 11 Sundays and her partner William for 6 Sundays. James (16th/17th C.) ‘messenger’ in Hawick. He was assualted by Walter Scott of Burnfoot and his wife Margaret with a large stone in St. Mary’s Kirk in 1616. The pair were also accused of later assaulting him and his wife Helen Turnbull on the High Street, along with 7 accomplices. The same James was probably an innkeeper, whose widow Helen Turnbull is recorded in 1642 as part of a court case when a group of people were accused of stealing a wallet in her establishment. Their sons are there recorded as John and William ‘Lethane’. He may also be the ‘James Lechen’ recorded in the 1616 trial over the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley; afterwards when ‘Marion’s Geordie’ was confronted in Hawick as a suspect by James Douglas, he and 2 other men (‘Bonnie Johnnie’ Scott and James Wemyss) took the pistol from Geordie before he could shoot. James (17th C.) probably son of John and Isobell Turnbull. He married Isobel Jardine (or ‘Gyrden’). Their children included: John (b.1783); Andrew (b.1686); Isobel (b.1687); and Andrew (again, b.1689). The witnesses in 1689 were Bailie James Deans and Andrew Porteous. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 (suggesting they were related).

James (17th C.) recorded as an officer of the Baron in Hawick in 1672, specifically ‘the ane of the Erles officers’, at the 1672 setting of the fair. In 1673 he was recorded as Procurator-fiscal of the Regality of Hawick. James (17th/18th C.) sheriff officer in Hawick. He was ‘officer’ in 1700 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Robert Paisley and for Robert Gledstains. In 1702 (or perhaps 1712) he was found guilty by the Session of drinking after 10 p.m., and for swearing. He is described as ‘James Leythen, shryeff-officer’, but it still seems unclear whether he was a Burgh Officer or an officer of the court. He was ‘officer’ in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter (who was surely related). He could be the same ‘James Leithan’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is possible he was the same John who was Procurator-fiscal of the Regality of Hawick in the 1670s, or otherwise was surely related to him. John (13th C.) witnessed to a charter for Melrose Abbey sometime in the period 1220 to 1243. John (17th C.) son of James and Helen Turnbull. He is described as ‘in Hawick’ in a 1642 Magistrates Court trial when he was one of several people accused of stealing the wallet of Samuel Rutherford (a servant of Douglas of Cavers) in his mother’s inn. He later accused Rutherford of violently demanding the whereabouts of his wallet. His brother William was also mentioned in the 1642 case. He could be the John ‘Lithen’, married to Isobel Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1648), James (again, b.1649), Helen (b.1652), William (b.1654), or alternatively the John, married to Janet Gledstains, whose son Francis was baptised in Hawick in 1643. Probably the same John ‘Lethane’ was mentioned in Hawick in 1656, when Martin Elliot was ordered to pay 30 shillings ‘for absence from his service for 5 weeks’, although let off the money claimed ‘for the Trooper coming to the said John Lethane’. John (17th C.) Bailie or officer of the Baron in Hawick in 1673. In that year the Earl of Queensberry complained that his representatives were attacked when trying to ‘ride the fair’ in Hawick ‘and particularly did assault and invade the said John Leathen with drawn sword, and masterfully pulled him off his horse, tore off his clothes, and struck him’. His surname is given as ‘Leathen’, and it is possible this may have been a variant of ‘Leyden’ rather than ‘Lethem’. However, he may have been related to the slightly later James ‘Leythen’ who was a ‘shyreff-officer’. Richard (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident recorded as ‘Leythen’ in 1707. William Sutter was rebuked for being in his house at the time of Sunday morning service. Walter (17th/18th C.) shoemaker listed among the young men fined for their part in the disturbances at the Common Riding of 1706; his surname is recorded in the Town Book as ‘Leythen’. The group seemed to be mostly from the West-end, suggesting he was also from there. He is probably the Walter, son of William ‘Lithen’ and Jane Morrison, born in Hawick in 1682. He was Walter ‘Lithen’ when he married Isobel Newbie in 1707: they had several children baptised in Hawick, including Marion (b.1708), James (b.1711), William (b.1713), Jane (b.1715), Walter (b.1717), Gavin (b.1719), Robert (b.1721) and Patrick (b.1723). The witnesses in 1711 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and James Lethem ‘officer’ and in 1721 were Bailies George Martin and Robert Ruecastle. William (17th C.) brother of John in Hawick. They were listed in 1642 among acquaintances of Samuel Rutherford, servant of the Laird of Cavers, who accused them of stealing his wallet in Hawick. William (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is probably father of shoemaker Walter, and hence likely to have been a shoemaker himself. He is likely the son of John and Isobel Turnbull, born in Hawick in 1654 and the husband of Jane Morrison, whose children baptised in Hawick included Walter (b.1682), Thomas (b.1684), Beatrix (b.1687) and Helen (b.1689). the witnesses in 1684 were Thomas Turnbull and James ‘Lithen’ (who was surely related). (spellings vary, such as ‘Leithan’, ‘Lethane’, ‘Latham’ and ‘Lithen’; the surname probably derives from the lands of Leitholm in Berwickshire, but some fraction may come from the more local area in Southdean Parish; it is possible that the name was once the same as or confused with Leyden).
Leven (leev) n., arch. permission, leave – ‘...for outyn the leve of ony juge of law, spirituale or temporale ...’ [SB1470].

the Level (thy-le-vul) n. popular name for the High Level pub.

Leven (lee-vin) n. old name for the ‘Line’ or ‘Lyne’ Water just over the Border in Cumbria. It was formerly one of the lawless valleys of the Border. It is probably the place referred to in the late 15th and early 16th centuries when many Scotsmen were charged by the Privy Council with ‘communing with the English of Levin’ and similar. For example, in 1493 Walter Scott of Headsaw paid a fine for ‘treasonably Intercommuning with the Thieves and Traitors of Levyn’ and Robert Scott in Todshawhaugh and John Turnbull in Hawick compounded for bringing in rebels ‘de levyn’. In 1494/5 Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for bringing in 5 Armstrong brothers, traitors ‘de levyn’. In a note to a legal case in 1502, Pitcairn gave a footnote to word ‘Levin’ as ‘A district of Lancashire, then infamous for its ‘Traitors’ and ‘lymmaris,’ who made numerous raids and forays every year on the least protected parts of the Scottish Borders’. However, it seems likely that the term was used to apply fairly generally to rivers from over the Border, rather than only for Englishmen from this valley. Thomas Musgrave in 1583 described it thus: ‘Black Leven water is a littell brooke, and so is Whyt Leven the lyke, and are not in anie place a myle and a halfe distant one from an other, and are inhabyted with the Nyxons, untill it come to a place called the Blackdobs, are then the Rutligis dwell on bothe the side of it, untill it come to a place called the Lukkins of Leven, then it descends Sowpert, wheare the Taylors have it, thens it descendes the boundes of Sopert, and is inhabyted with Graymes called the Graymes of Leven, and runeth into the ryver of Eske at Gorth Storys howse called the Lard. There is also a river of the same name in North Yorkshire, which drains Lake Windermere into Morecambe Bay, but it seems unlikely this is what is meant in the 15th and 16th century references (it is written ‘lewyny’ in 1493).

lew in (loo-in) v., arch. to involve, oblige to do something – ‘Ti lewe in = to involve; to ‘let in’ or ‘drag in’’ [ECS], ‘A was lew’d in ti pay his fine’ [GW] (also written ‘lewe in’; only used in the past participle).

Lewenlees (lew-in-leez) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded c.1376 on a rental roll as part of the area then known as Ermildon. It was recorded as ‘Lewyneleys’, and valued at 16 shillings and 2 pence. In 1541 it was ‘Lewinlowis’ and valued at 10 shillings, with Robert Elliot as tenant.

Lewenshope (lew-inz-höp) n. former farm on the north side of the Yarrow valley, south of Hangingshaw. These were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, leased to Sir George Douglas and to the Murrays, with the Murrays continuing as owners into the 16th century. James Murray of Falahill held the lands of the Queen in 1528 and assigned them to his wife, Margaret Home. Patrick Murray of Hangingshaw was recorded as owner in 1541, when the rental was £50. ‘Lewinshope & Scadarig’ were held by Johnstone of Alva in the 1802 Land Tax Rolls (it is marked both ‘Lewinshoope’ and ‘lewinshoop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Lewynnshop’ in 1456 and 1471, ‘Lewinishope’ in 1484, ‘Lewynshop’ in 1486, ‘lewynhop’ in 1494/5, ‘Lewinshop’ in 1502 and ‘Leynnymph’ in 1541).

lewer (loo-ur) n., arch. a lever, pole for leveraging – ‘The mouse proposes to join her in spinning; and inquires, ‘But where will I get a spindle, fair lady mine?’ when the frog desires it to take ‘the auld mill lewer’’ [JL].

Lewis (loo-is) n. Alexander (19th C.) listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a cole merchant for the Duke of Buccleuch, based at the Hawick Station. James (b.1828/9) born in Cavers Parish, son of Walter and Barbara. He was living with his parents at Howgill in Ewesdale in 1841. By 1851 he was teacher at Burnmouth School in Castleton Parish. He lived there with his younger sister. By 1861 he had been replaced by John Hardie, but it is unclear what happened to him.

Leyden (lä-, Il-din) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married ‘Issobell Lune’ and their son William was baptised in 1682. Adam (17th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Ledan in Little Cavers’ in 1684 when he was among those proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. Adam (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Andrew (b.1694), baptised in Cavers Parish, was probably his son. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish.
He was living at Spittal in 1721. He is probably the Adam who married Helen Turnbull in Cavers in 1709 and their children included: Helen (b.1710); Betty (b.1712); Jane (b.1714); Isabel (b.1717); William (b.1719); and James (b.1721).

Adam (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Pott. He married Elizabeth Richardson in 1752 and their children included: John (b.1757); Adam (b.1759); Elizabeth (b.1761); Peter (b.1762); Walter (b.1765); and Robert (b.1767). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation, in 1762 were weaver John Simpson and Kirk Officer Alexander Bunyan and in 1765 were Alex Nivison and James Brydon. He could be the Adam ‘Liddon’ who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. He is probably the Adam whose son Andrew died in 1778.

Adam (b.c.1770s) carrier in Hawick according to the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. Adam (b.1780/1) bookseller in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on Miller’s Close with farmer John (probably his brother) and Helen (John’s wife). In 1851 he was a lodger on O’Connell Street. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (1788–1876) son of Robert and Helen Clerk. He was a farmer living up the Loan. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer of 30 acres, and resided at about 66 High Street. His fields were probably up the Wellogate. In 1816 he married Margaret Laidlaw, and she died in 1856. Their children included: Robert (1819–77), who married Betty McAlpine; Betty (b.1819), who died young; John (1821–57); Matthew (b.1824), who died in Melbourne; Andrew (b.1830), coal agent and Cornet; and Helen (b.1834), who married Alexander Nivison Scott. Adam (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Stewart and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1833.

Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. He is probably the Andrew, married to Catherine Aitchison, whose children baptised in Hawick included Manie (b.1635) and Christian (b.1640). The witnesses in 1640 were William Lorraine and Simon Adamson. He himself witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Scott in 1640. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (probably actually the Hassendean area). He witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott and Isobel Turnbull in 1683 and another for Gavin Turnbull in 1684. He married Janet Fletcher and their children included: Isobel (b.1681); and Andrew (b.1683). The witnesses in 1681 were William Turnbull and William Redford and in 1683 were Robert Thomson and James Thomson. Andrew (18th/19th C.) youngest brother of Dr. John. He stated that, although young at the time, he remembers the farewell visit of his brother, and their mother singing the ballads ‘Young Benjie’, ‘Tamlane’ and ‘Bonora’. Andrew (b.1830) son of Yeddie, farmer at the Wellogate, who lived at 66 High Street. His mother was Margaret Laidlaw, from Melrose. He was Cornet in 1857, when the first known photograph of the Principals was taken (note that there is some confusion over whether the image might be flipped, with the sash over the wrong shoulder and hence the Ritgh- and Left-Hand Men switched). He worked as a coal agent. In 1859 he married Margaret Elliot (b.1829) from Castleton Parish, daughter of John Elliot and Fanny Wilson. He moved to 6 Cross Wynd and later moved to Newcastle where he ran a pub. Their children included: Frances (formerly surname Elliot, b.1856); William Elliot (b.1859); Margaret (b.1861), who died young; Adam (b.1862), cabinet maker; and John (b.1864). George (b.c.1775) baker who lived at about 49 High Street. He is recorded there in 1841 with his wife Janet and children Joan, George and Margaret. He married Janet Noble and their children included: Adam (b.1804); Helen (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); Jane (b.1813); Peter (b.1817); George (b.c.1820); and Margaret (b.c.1825). James (1637/8–88) tenant in Earlside. He was probably among the tenants of Douglas of Cavers who complained about punitive rental demands on them in 1684 (as punishment for supporting Lady Cavers and other Covenanters). His gravestone in Cavers kirkyard was written in verse, starting ‘Here lies the body of James Leydon, In this churchyard beneath this stone; And Margaret Scott, his spouse alone, Lyeth also here beneath this stone’. He married Margaret Scott, and their children inceled William, Adam and John. His will is recorded in 1688. He could be the James (with surname blank) recorded ‘in Earlesyde’ in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (partitioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. James (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys that killed about 200 men. Most of those who survived were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica or New Jersey. James (17th C.) tenant in Little Cavers. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He may be the James who was listed at Ashybank in 1694 or the James in ‘Estloidge’ (if this is East Lodge) whose will is recorded in 1698. James (17th C.) tenant in Adderstonesthiel. The will of his wife Margaret Greenshields is recorded in 1690. James (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1788–91. He was a carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and had 4 horses at that time. He is probably the James, James (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule. His children included: William (b.1693); Margaret (b.1694); Isabel (b.1696); and Margaret (again, b.1696). John (17th/18th C.) resident at Dodburn. In 1706 he married Janet Scott in Hawick Parish; he was recorded being from Kirkton Parish. His children baptised in Cavers and Kirkton Parishes included: James (b.1706); Samuel (b.1707); and James (again, b.1709). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Tower in 1727 when he married Bessie Murray. He may be the John who was in Denholm in 1730 when his son Samuel was baptised. He may also be the John who was in Birneyknow when his unnamed child was baptised. He may be the John who married Jane English in 1713. His other children may have included: Adam (b.1714); Bessie (b.1718); John (b.1722); Adam (b.1724); Isabel (b.1728); Walter (b.1728); John (b.1734); Margaret (b.1736); Euphan (b.1738); an unnamed child (b.1740); another unnamed child (b.1742); Margaret (b.1743); and James (b.1744). It seems likely that there are at least 2 families here. John (18th C.) tailor in Denholm, recorded in 1726. Probably the same John was also recorded in Denholm in 1730 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. His children included: Hugh (b.1726); and Bessie (b.1730). It is unclear which other children were his, and which were the other contemporary James in Cavers. John (18th C.) cooper at Dykes. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1730. He may be the John who married Bessie Murray in 1727. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Margaret Laidlaw. Their children included: Robert (b.1750). John (b.1764) and Margaret (b.1766) may also have been his children. John (18th C.) father of John Casper (b.1775). He was shepherd at Henlawshiel from the late 1770s and later took over the whole of Nether Tofts. He married Isabella Scott. They had 3 other sons, as well as 2 daughters. His children may include Betty (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771), Jean (b.1777) and Mary (b.1780), all born in Cavers Parish, but with no mother’s name given. Robert was one son and the youngest was Andrew (but there appear to be no records of their baptisms). He is probably the John, son of John, born in Cavers Parish in 1734. John (18th/19th C.) heckler at Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William was also recorded in Denholm, and so probably related. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (d.1808) from Cavers Parish, he was described as a lapidary (i.e. jeweller) in Edinburgh when his death was reported in the Scots Magazine. He left £50 to his native parish. Dr. John Casper (1775–1811) linguist and poet, born in Denholm, in the thatched cottage on the Green (which can be seen in an early photo of Denholm, and still exists today). His father John was manager at Nether-Tofts farm and his mother Isabella Scott was from Liddesdale. The family moved to Henlawshiel when he was four. He was taught to read by his grandmother and learned Border ballads from his mother. He went to Kirkton School at age 9, where his roughly 3 years of schooling was interrupted by one schoolmaster dying and another being removed. He was tutored by Rev. James Duncan of Denholm for another couple of years, where he developed his Latin and Greek abilities. It is said that his father wanted to purchase an ass to convey him the 3 or so miles to Denholm, and although put off by the ridicule he would get from his classmaters, he accepted the offer when the owner threw in a copy of old language dictionary (the ‘Calepini Dictionarium Octaligae’). At age 15 he went to Edinburgh University (apparently going half-way with his father on a horse, then walking the rest), where he qualified as a doctor and a minister. In Edinburgh he joined the Literary Society, where he made many friends and practised public speaking. He is said to have already known French, Spanish, Italian, German, ancient Icelandic, Arabic and Persian before he was 20! On trips back to Denholm he studied in a bower in Denholm Dean in the summers and in Cavers old kirk in the winters. He also spent one summer as an assistant teacher at Clovenfords (more specifically Caddonlee), where he met Nicol the poet. He was also allowed access to the library of Cavers House when back from university. He was said to be fond of practical jokes, e.g. playing to claims he was dabbling in the black arts by scaring people (with an accomplice draped in the mortcloth) in Cavers Kirk who had come to watch him summon spirits; when he was a guest preacher in Cavers Kirk (1798) he mischievously took as his text ‘Get thee behind me, Satan’. In the later 1790s he served as private tutor in the summers, and so spent less and less time in his beloved Borderland. With an interest in travel and other cultures, he wrote ‘Historical and Philosophical Sketch of the Discoveries and Settlements of the Europeans in Northern and Western Africa, at the Close of the Eighteenth Century’, published in 1799. Additionally he contributed poetry to the Edinburgh Magazine. However, he continued to be a regular attender at Hawick markets, and nearly came to grief there in 1799, when a troop of Volunteers, friends of Mungo Park’s, objected to Park’s treatment in his book on African discoveries. He was licensed to preach in St. Andrews in 1798, and gave occasional sermons around Edinburgh. At one point there was an arrangement for him to become assistant and successor to the minister of Cavers, but this fell through. He collaborated with Walter Scott in collecting ballads, wrote poetry and edited ‘the Scots Magazine’ for about 6 months. In 1800 he spent several months touring the Highlands (his manuscript travelogue being published much later). His poem ‘The Elfin-king’ was published in Lewis’ ‘Tales of Wonder’ in 1801. On having the prospect of an appointment with the East India Company as assistant surgeon, he quickly completed his medical training, receiving an M.D. from St. Andrews. He paid his last visit to his parents and Teviotdale in late 1802. He missed embarking on the intended ship through illness, that ship wrecking on Margate Sands. While waiting for the next ship he prepared the epic ‘Scenes of Infancy’ for publication. He then sailed for Madras, where he served as surgeon, then went as surgeon and naturalist on an expedition through Mysore, although he became ill and convalesced in the house of Sir John Malcolm (of Eskdale). His anthology ‘The Scottish Descriptive Poems with some illustrations of Scottish literary antiquities’ was published in 1803. In 1805 he went on a sea voyage to Pulo Penang (Prince of Wales Island) Malaysia, where he was the only European on-board, and they narrowly avoided being captuted by the French. He spent months there, where he met Stamford Raffles among other people, addressing his verses ‘The Dirge of the departed Year’ to Raffles’ wife Olivia. He returned to Calcutta and after writing a dissertation on asiatic languages was appointed Professor of the Hindostani language in Bengal College, which he later gave up to be a Judge in Calcutta (being appointed by Lord Minto). After 2 years he switched position again to be a Commissioner of the Court of Requests in Calcutta, which required knowledge of the local languages. In 1810 he became Assay Master at the Calcutta mint, with relatively high salary and light duties. But this new easy life was short-lived, for in 1811 he accompanied Lord Minto on an expedition to Java, where he helped translate and write letters between the British and local chiefs. He accompanied the conquering British troops to Batavia but there contracted a fever (it is said from the ‘pestilential air’ of a store room containing ancient objects in a Dutch government building, but probably either malaria or dengue). Three days later he was dead, at the age of 36. He was buried at Tanabang Cemetery, Batavia (now Jakarta)

He was said to be of medium stature, but strong and athletic in his youth. He also strictly abstained from vices. He talked loudly and a lot (Lord Minto wrote ‘I do not believe so great a reader was ever so great a talker) in a ‘shrill, piercing, and at the same time grating voice’. He was proudly independent, was said to be lacking in refined manners, and retained his Teviotdale accent throughout his life (which put off many Englishmen). Encouraged to lose his accent he replied ‘Learn English! no, never; it was trying to learn that language that spoilt my Scotch, and as to being silent, I will promise to hold my tongue, if you will make fools hold theirs’. It is said that the main defect of his personality was ‘his passion for display’ and hence ‘he was naturally enough judged by many, who measured him by an ordinary standard, to be more superficial than profound’. Nevertheless his drive to study, even through illness, was remarkable, and he said ‘I cannot be idle; and whether I die or live, the wheel must go round to the last’. He is supposed to have spoken 34 separate languages or dialects (the estimated numbers vary), and translated several texts in obscure dialects. He also translated some of the gospels of the New Testament into Pushtu, Maldivian, Beluchi, Macassar and Bugi. At the time of his death he was contemplating a comparative arrangement of languages. There are only 2 surviving likenesses of him, one being a sketch made by Capt. George Elliot on the voyage to Java. A monument to him was erected in 1861 in the middle of Denholm Green, designed by Hector H. Orrock. The cottage in which he spent his childhood. His first published poem was in the Edinburgh Literary Magazine in 1795, followed by many more, including ‘Ruberslaw’ that same year; these first contributions were signed ‘J.L., Banks of the Teviot’. As part of his long poem ‘Scenes of Infancy’ (1803), he wrote the oft-quoted lines: ‘Boast! Hawick, boast! thy structures rear’d in blood, Shall rise triumphant over flame and flood; Still doom’d to prosper, since on Flodden’s field Thy sons a hardy band, unwont to yield, Fell with their martial king, and (glorious boast!) Gain’d profound renown where Scotia’s fame was lost’. His 2 other poems with local flavour are ‘Lord Souls’ and ‘Cout of Kielder’. He contributed several pieces to Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’ (1801), including most of the essay on fairy superstitions. The glossary of his annotated ‘The Complaynt of Scotland’ (1801) is a useful early source of local words. He also edited ‘Scottish Descriptive Poems’ (1803). Much of his output was published in ‘The Poetical Remains of the Late Dr. John Leyden, with Memoirs of His Life’, edited by Rev. James Morton (1819). Although his poetry has largely gone out of fashion, the fantastic poems ‘The Mermaid’ and ‘The Elfin King’ have had a lasting popularity. Several of his translations and other largely completed projects, left with his friends Richard Heber and William Erskine, were published posthumously, but others were lost forever. 2 books, ‘Life of Dr. John Leyden, Poet and Linguist’ (1908) by John Reith, and ‘Leydeniana: or, Gleanings from some unpublished documents regarding Dr. Leyden’ (1912) by James Sinton, collected much of what had been learned about Leyden in subsequent years. A centenary celebration was held in Denholm in 1875 and there were also events in 2011 to mark the 200th anniversary of his death. A booklet ‘Dr. Leyden’s Punjabi Translations’ was published in 2011 – ‘The tongue that was spoken by Leyden and Scott …’[WS], ‘His bright and brief career is o’er, And mute his tuneful strains; Quenched is his lamp of words. He also edited ‘Scottish Descriptive Poems’ (1803). Much of his output was published in ‘The Poetical Remains of the Late Dr. John Leyden, with Memoirs of His Life’, edited by Rev. John (b.c.1785) farmer on the High Street. He was living on Miller’s Close in 1841. His wife was Helen and they also lived with Adam (probably his brother), a bookseller. Janet, who was probably related, was a widow on Miller’s Close in 1851, with daughter Jane and grand-daughter Margaret Hutton. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Denholm. He married Isabella, daughter of Rev. William Burn. Their children included: John (c.1805–50); Percy
Leyden

Georgina (b.c.1809), who married James Miller; and William (b.1811), proprietor of the Fox & Hounds; Isabella (1815–64); and Douglas (1817–18). John Lamb, O.B.E., C.B.E. (1904–88) descendant of John Casper, he was born locally and became a linguist and diplomat. A plaque to his memory was added to the Leyden memorial. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (18th C.) servant at Cavers in 1791, when she worked for George Douglas. Matthews (b.1794/5) stockinger in Wilton and Hawick. In 1835 he was listed among heads of households at Wilton, but in 1840 and 1841 was at Melgund Place. By 1851 he was a foreman in a woollen factory, living at 3 Weensland (which probably meant Weensland Mill Houses). In the 1841 census he was at about 7 Melgund Place. His wife was Helen (or Ellen) and their children included Robert, Helen, Margaret, John, Edward N. and George. Robert (c.1770–1840) carrier in Hawick. In 1816 he purchased 66 High Street, and the buildings behind 66 and 68, from stockmaking Walter Murray. His family owned these properties for almost 50 years. He may have been the Robert who was son of Adam and Eliza Richardson, born in Hawick in 1766. He is recorded as a carrier in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He married Helen Clerk in 1791 and she is probably the wife of his whose death is recorded in 1808. Their son Adam (‘Yeddie’) farmed up the Wellogate. He probably died in the cholera epidemic, his death being listed along with 9 others on the same day. Robert (18th/19th C.) son of John and brother of Dr. John. He studied medicine. It is said that he took an unfinished portrait of his brother John (perhaps the only accurate portrait) and had it altered to become a portrait of himself. Sir Walter Scott wrote to him on hearing the news of his brother’s death. Robert (1819–77) son of Adam and Margaret Laidlaw, he was baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Betty McAlpine. Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Beatrice Balmer in 1844 and their children included: George Lunn (b.1855); Robert (b.1857); and Helen (b.1862). Samuel (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was at Dodburn in 1730 when he married Helen Elliot. His children, baptised in Cavers, included John (b.1731), an unnamed child (b.1737), Hanna (b.1743), Jean (b.1745), Elizabeth (b.1748). William (17th C.) married Bessie Elliot in Roberton Parish in 1688. His wife was from Cavers Parish. He is probably the William who witnessed baptisms for Isobel and Helen (b.1862). Samuel (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was at Dodburn in 1730 when he married Helen Elliot. His children, baptised in Cavers, included John (b.1731), an unnamed child (b.1737), Hanna (b.1743), Jean (b.1745), Elizabeth (b.1748). William (17th C.) married Bessie Elliot in Roberton Parish in 1688. He was probably related to Adam, who was also listed in Denholm. He is probably the William who was living at Ashybank in 1702. He could be the William whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Andrew (b.1694); James (b.1696); John (b.1702); and Janet (b.1704). William (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Leadin’. He could be the ‘W. Leyden’ fined along with ‘J. Swan’ in 1702 for drunkenness. William (17th/18th C.) wright in Denholm in 1722 when his son Adam was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers Parish, who were probably his include William (b.1716), Helen (b.1717), William (again, b.1720), Bessie (b.1727) and William (again, b.1732). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included an unnamed son (b.1724), William (b.1726), John (b.1728), Euphan (b.1731) and James (b.1734). William (18th C.) married Helen Blyth in Cavers Parish in 1726. William (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably related to the William mentioned in 1735 when the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate, which was to the east of his. He had a son who died in Hawick in 1815. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1751. William (18th/19th C.) cooper in Denholm, recorded in 1769 and 1771. His children included James (b.1769) and Janet (b.1771). Probably the same William was the resident in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; he was probably related to James, who is also listed under Denholm. There appear to have been 2 contemporary Williams in Cavers, with other children of one or other family being Jane (b.1763), Betty (b.1765), John (b.1765), Isabel (b.1767), James (b.1767), Betty (b.1770), Jeany (b.1773) and Bellow (b.1773), William (b.1811) born in Denholm, son of John and Isabella Burn. In his youth he was a superb athlete, excelling at multiple sports at the St. Ronan’s Games in the period 1832–35. In 1833 he won both the running and standing versions of the ‘hop, step and leap’, as well as 2 races. In 1834 and 1835 he won just about every event he entered, including the long jump, high jump, wrestling and throwing. He was also said to have once ran from Denholm to Innerleithen, won the race there, and then ran home, all in one day! He was a stockmaking in Denholm and also proprietor of the Fox and.

Leyden Bank

Hounds. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as vintner at the 'Hare & Hounds'. His wife was Cecilia and their children included Elizabeth and Isabella (formerly written 'Leadin', 'Leadon', 'Ledan', 'Leidan', 'Leafden', 'Leiden', 'Leidon', 'Leydon', 'Lidden', 'Lithen', 'Lydan', 'Lydien', 'Lyon', etc.).

Leyden Bank (lä-din-bawngk) n. street in Weensland, developed in 1963 and named after John Leyden.

Leyden Cottage (lä-din-ko'-eej) n. house in Denholm that was the birthplace of John Leyden in 1775. It is a small thatched and harled cottage off the north corner of the Green, on Leyden Road. It bears a commemorative plaque, and is now designated a ‘Class B’ listed building. It was re-thatched in 1946 (also called ‘Leyden’s Cottage’).

Leyden Monument (lä-, II-din-mo-new-min’) n. memorial to John Leyden erected on Denholm Green in 1861. It was designed by Hector H. Orrock and sculpted by Handside Ritchie. It consists of a Swinton stone Gothic spire on top of two tiers of Aberdeen granite columns. It used to get an annual wash by the Denholm fire brigade. It was restored in 1982 with funds raised by a sponsored walk following the route Leyden took when he left to attend Edinburgh University.

Leyden’s Road (lä-, II-dinz-ro’d) n. street in Denholm, lying between Sunnyside and the Canongate (also called ‘Leyden Road’).

Leyden’s View (lä-dinz-vew) n. house on Main Street in Denholm.

Leyes (leez) n. former name of lands in Liddesdale, roughly between Stichell Hill and Riccarton. It is now marked by ‘Leys Burn’ and the farm of Leysburnfoot. Adam Elliot of the Leyes was recorded in 1541 and ‘Hob of the Leys’ in 1595. The lands there were rented by the Duke of Buccleuch to his Chamberlain John Laing in 1736. The farmhouse must have been quite close to what became Riccarton Junction (it is ‘Leysis’ in 1541; it is probably the place marked ‘Lires’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Leysburnfit (leez-burn-fi’) n. farm where the Leys Burn meets the Roughley Burn, to the east of Whitropefoot and just west of Riccarton Junction. It is probably the second farmhouse shown on the combined farm of Stitchihill, Laidlawhope and Whitrope in the 1718 Buccleuch survey. It is the same as ‘Fawhopeknowe’ steadings shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Leythen (II-thin) n. James (17th/18th C.) Sheriff-Officer in Hawick, recorded in 1702. Richard (17th/18th C.) probably an innkeeper in Hawick. In 1707 William ‘Sator’ was rebuked for coming to his house during the time of church service in the morning (this is probably a variant of Leyden).

the Public Libraries Act (which allowed the use of rate money). It started in rooms in the Exchange, with a temporary move to Bridge Street in 1883, before moving to an upstairs part of the new Town Hall in 1886. The earlier history is unclear, with some accounts suggesting that the first 'public' library was founded in 1760 or the first 'subscription library' in 1762, with other 'circulating libraries' started later; the 'Public Library of Hawick' published a catalogue in 1792. Dr. Charters of Wilton set up a free circulating library for members of his congregation in the early 1800s. The Trades' Library was started in 1802. The current library building on North Bridge Street, built with a gift of £10,000 from Andrew Carnegie, was opened in 1904 by Carnegie himself, with Mrs. Carnegie ceremonially unlocking the doors with a golden key. The opening day was a half holiday in the town, and the streets were decorated with flags etc. It was designed by John Nicholl Scott and Alexander Lorne Campbell of Edinburgh (who also designed the Boer War Memorial), following a design competition. The building has some stonework by William Birnie Rhind, with the exterior dominated by the corner entrance tower and the round-headed gables. There are 4 large windows with heraldic designs, with the arms of Dunfermline (Carnegie's home town), Hawick, Galashiels, Selkirk, Jedburgh, Kelso, Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Berwickshire and emblems of Scotland, England and Ireland, together with the arms and mottoes of the Ker, Scott, Douglas, Gladstains, Elliot, Armstrong and Turnbull families. Users were able to choose books directly (without use of a catalogue and staff request) from 1926. The building had a major extension in 1939, funded by Sir Thomas and Lady Henderson. In 1956 it became the first library in Scotland to offer a homebound service. The Library was taken over by Borders Regional Council in 1975 and is now integrated into the Scottish Borders Council Library Service. It still holds a valuable reference section of materials relating to Hawick. There were extensive internal refurbishments in 1987 and computerisation came in 1999. It is a grade B listed building, which celebrated its centenary in 2004, with several events, including a re-enactment of the opening ceremony. lick an a promise (lik-an-a-pro-mees) n., arch. housework that is hastily performed – ‘This feierseide ‘I’ll get a lick an a promises the day; A’ll duist soop eet in’ [ECS].
licker (li-kur) n. liquor, an alcoholc drink – ‘. . . His last drop o’ maut licker – But gin hei’d hained The odd hauf-croon Hei wad druckent quicker!’ [DH].
lickora-stick (li-ko-ra-stik) n., arch. the root of the rest harrow, ground furze, Ononis arvensis.
lckly (lik-lee‘) adj., arch. likely.
lckorish (li-kö-reesh) n. liquorice – ‘When L was for lckorish and P was for peels’ [??].
the Liddel (thu-li-dul) n. popular name for Liddel Witter – ‘Right owr the knowe where Liddel lyes, – Nae wonder that it catch’d his ee! A thing of huge and monstrous size Was steering that way hastilye’ [ES], ‘Sweet sand the Liddle at our feet, I never heard it flow so cheery; With bliss life’s moments seemed complete That night by Liddle wi’ my dearie’ [TCh] (sometimes written ‘Liddell’ or ‘Liddle’ and formerly ‘Liddal’).
Liddelbank (li-dul-bawngk) n. mansion on the Liddel Water, near the very southernmost point of Roxburghshire. It was built on what had been part of the farm of Greena in 1793 for William Oliver, the local Sheriff and enthusiastic promoter of road improvements. Oliver was recorded there as owner of no less than 10 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James Alexander Attwood was there in the early 19th century and Walter Armstrong around 1821. Robert Jardine, M.P., lived there in the mid-19th century, William Brackenridge around 1870 and Thomas Bell in the latter part of the 19th century. Coal was once mined (in limited quantities) on the estate. It is also sometimes called ‘Bellsbank’. The house has a walled garden, now derelict – ‘Liddelbank’, unrecorded in tale yet, or story. Neglected – forgotten in Border bards’ song: Fair gem of the Liddel, its pride and its glory, I will chant thee a stave as I journey along’ [DA] (it is ‘Liddel Bank’ in 1797 and ‘Liddell Bank’ in the 1860s).

Liddel Castle (li-dul-kaw-sul) n. former Castle in Liddesdale, between Newcastleton and Saughtree, near the confluence of the Liddel and the Esk. Nothing remains now of this Norman fortification, except some impressive earthworks between the road and the river, on a promontory, surrounded on 3 sides by the river and the Kirk Cleuch Burn. It was once surrounded by the Castle Town, which gave its name to the area, although little evidence of former habitation remains today. The castle was probably built by Ranulph de Soulis when he was granted the surrounding barony by David I in the 12th century. It was constructed on the usually motte and bailey pattern, covering about 200 m$^2$ in the north section and 160 m$^2$ in the southern, sloping section. The location of a well can also be identified as a square depression. The castle appears to have been abandoned around the early 14th century. Around the 18th century it was sometimes referred to as ‘the Roman Camp’, because the origin of the mounds were not understood.

Liddell (li-dul) n. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as ‘servant to Widow Layng’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Betty Hardie, who was also from Hawick. Their daughter Jane was baptised in 1788. George (15th C.) Rector of Ettrick Forest according to a charter of 1477. He was also recorded as Rector there in 1482 when he witnessed a charter for James Hunter, Rector of Crausand; the other minister who acted as witness was Alexander Murray, Rector of Hawick. He was probably a relative of Robert, who was Ranger of Yarrow Ward.

Sir James of Halkerston (d.c.1484) Ranger of the Ward of Yarrow in at least the period 1476–82. He was Steward to the Duke of Albany and as a result was tried for treason in 1484 an executed soon after. He was patron of Blind Harry, and it is said he was a major source of information for the poem ‘Wallace’. James (17th C.) Town Clerk 1658–59. Probably the same James was on the Council in 1668 and was Procurator Fiscal of Hawick in 1673. In 1673 Robert Scott of Horsleyhill was charged by the Bailies with stealing from his house ‘five firelocks with ane pair of bandeliers belonging to the town’. Presumably he had charge of some of the firearms used by the Burgh Officers, and the theft could be part of the events around disputes between the Hawick authorities and the Baron’s Bailie. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Stewart in 1651 and another for Thomas Scott in 1654. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for John Elliot, farmer at Southfield, in 1672. He may be the merchant of that name on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. In 1676 he checked the measures used by several Hawick traders, in presence of divers and sundry witnesses, upon complaint given in not only by the tacksman of the Duke’s measures for making use of other measures besides his, but also by ane great number of poor people; he thus effectively served as the surveyor of weights and measures for the Burgh, and is also referred to as a merchant. He may be the James, married to Isabella Watt, whose children included: Isobel (b.1650); and William (b.1653). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who He was at Burnfoot in 1736 and Clarilaw in 1742. He married Isabel Hoy and their children included: Isobel (b.1734); Thomas (b.1736); Mark (b.1739); Christian (b.1742); and James (b.1743). The witnesses in 1736 were James Scott and William Sanderson and in 1742 were John and William Anderson. Given that Thomas was married to Margaret Hoy at about the same time, it seems likely that the families were multiply connected. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Waugh and their children included: Margaret (b.1772) and ‘Bel’ (b.1774). Rev. John (17th C.) graduating from Glasgow University in 1674, he was licensed by that Presbytery in 1681. He was presented to Hobkirk Parish in late 1682 and ordained there in early 1683. He was unable to attend a trial of Covenanters in 1684 on account of having broken his leg, but sent a list of charges against his parishioners. However, he was deprived in 1689 for not praying for William and Mary (i.e. not giving up Episcopalianism), specifically saying that ‘he would never pray for them as long as his blood was warm’! He may have reformed, however, since he (or another man of the same name) was recorded as assistant at Monrose in 1696 and Brechin in 1698. John (19th C.) married Alison Davidson in Wilton Parish in 1831. Mark (18th C.) married Margaret Irwin.
Robert to George, who was Rector of the Forest in the Selkirk in 1502. It seems likely he was related to the Robert whose murder by James Davidson in Yarrow for his fee. Probably the same Robert was also Keeper of Dunbar Castle, as well as being involved with the leasing of Crown land in Gal-loway and March, and thus mentioned in the Ex-chequer Rolls through the 1440s and 50s. He may be the Robert whose murder by James Davidson ‘in Quhitmerhall’ is recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502. It seems likely he was related to George, who was Rector of the Forest in the 1470s and 1480s. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Cawfaulds in 1727. He married Bessie Scott (perhaps in 1714, although no wife’s name is given). Their children included: Robert (b.1717); Robert (again, b.1720); Janet (b.1723); and Isobel (b.1727). The witnesses in 1727 were Thomas Turnbull and William Douglas. He is probably the Robert who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Andrew Harkness, resident of Clarilaw. Robert (18th C.) resident of Burnfoot Mill. He married Agnes Douglas in 1748 in Wilton Parish and their children included: Robert (b.1751); James (b.1752); Agnes (b.1754); Thomas (b.1757); Archibald (b.1765); and Euphan (b.1770). The 1770 baptism was carried out by Rev. Young of the Associate Congregation in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) married Elizabeth Cunningham in Wilton Parish in 1768. Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was deceased by 1793 when his widow, Elizabeth Hardie married Alexander Shaw in Edinburgh. Thomas (17th C.) married Isobel Wright in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish (probably the part corresponding to Hassendean). Their son Robert was baptised in 1687, with witnesses George Scott and James Wright (who was probably related to his wife). In 1686 he witnessed a baptism for George Cockburn in Roberton Parish. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1703); and James (b.1707). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Briery Yards in 1722 and Clarilaw in 1724, 1727 and 1729 and Clarilaw in 1736. He married Isobel Cavers in 1720 and their children included: Thomas (b.1722); Isobel (b.1724); James (b.1726); Helen (b.1727); Helen (b.1729); James (again, b.1731); Robert (b.1734); and William (b.1736). The witnesses in 1722 were William and Robert Easton, in 1724 were James Cavers (probably related to his wife) and John Dryden, in 1727 and 1729 were James and John Dryden and in 1736 were James and Walter Scott. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Parkhouses in 1742 and 1751. He married Margaret Hoy in 1740 and their children included: Robert (b.1742); William (b.1745); Mark (b.1748); Thomas (b.1751); John (b.1753); and Elizabeth (b.1759). The witnesses in 1742 were John Noble and Walter Scott and in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Davidson and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1825); Isabella (b.1827); James (b.1829); Margaret (b.1831); Agnes (b.1832); and Jenima (b.1833). Walter (17th C.) see Walter Riddell. William (17th C.) referred to as ‘merchant, younger’ in Hawick in 1644 when he held the surplus of the money collected for the Covenanting army. He or his father may be the same as the procurator fiscal of the Burgh in the 1630s. He may also be the William who was elected to the Council in 1648. He could be the William, married to Jean Lidderdale, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included John (b.1637), Isobel (b.1639), Janet (b.1640), Marion (b.1644), Jean (b.1646) and James (b.1648). He witnessed baptisms in 1641 for William Wright and Thomas Oliver, both along with Andrew Liddersdale (who was presumably closely related to his wife). William (17th C.) listed among the poor of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was ‘in Burnfoott’. This was presumably Hassendean Burnfoot. He could be the William, married to Margaret Scott, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1683. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Scott in 1760 and their children included: Thomas (b.1762); William (b.1764); and Agnes (b.1766). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Bryson in Hawick in 1789 and their children included: Nelly (b.1790); and William (b.1795). William (19th C.) married Jean Dodds in Wilton Parish in 1824 (sometimes spelled ‘Liddel’ and formerly ‘Ledale’, ‘Liddale’, etc.; see also Liddle). Liddel Strength (li-dul-strenth) n. ruined fortress on the south bank of the Liddel Water, near the confluence with the Esk and the village.

of Moat in Cumbria. It has an impressive high motte and two baileys built on a cliff and dating to the 12th century with a later tower. Sir John Wake held the castle in the late 13th century, and then it passed to Sir Simon Lindsay, who also held Hermitage at the same time.

Liddel Viaduct (li-dul-vl-a-dukt) n. railway viaduct across the Liddel Water on the Waverley Line, just south of Newcastle. It has been demolished, but the approaches are still visible.

Liddel Witter (li-dul-wi'-ur) n. the Liddel Water, formed by the meeting of 3 burns near Saughtree in the Deadwater heights, it is about 27 miles long and joins the Esk near Canonbie. It was a central feature in the area of cross-border raids that went on for centuries. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrave described it thus: ‘The ryver is all Scottishe, untill it come to Kyrssopp foote, planted with Ellotes untill it come near Wheatoughe towre, then the Armostrongs inhabite it on both sydes, untill it come to Kyrssopp foote, where it takes the dyvysyon of the realmes from Kyrssopp – then the Armostrongs have the one syde, and the English Fosters the other syde, soe it desendes by the Harlowe on the one syde and the Haythawyt on the other, and runeth into the ryver called Eske. Its valley, Liddesdale, is now quite under-populated, with Newcastle the major town (also spelled ‘Liddle’ and older variants).

lidd (li-dur) adj., arch. lazy, tardy – ‘Now Liddesdale has lyan lang in, Fala, fala, fala, faliddle. There is nae riding there at a’: Their horses are grown sae lidd fat, They downa stir out o’ the sta’. Fala, &c’ [CPM], ‘I’ve been very liddier in writin’ [GW].

Lidderdale | Liddersdale

Liddersdale (li-durz-däl) n. Adam (16th C.) ‘flescheour’ (i.e. butcher) of Hawick listed in the testament of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He was owed money for supplying ‘flesche to the place and his name is recorded as ‘Adame Liddersdale’. Andrew (16th C.) holder of 5 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was probably related to others of the same surname who also owned lands at that time. He could be the same man as Andrew ‘Lutherdale’.

Andrew (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He is probably the currier from Hawick who witnessed a deed in 1630 for Thomas of St. Mary’s Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire), who was granted a fourth part of Easter Mains by Viscount Drumlanrig; John, currier in Hawick, and Andrew, currier in Selkirk, were also listed and so presumably related. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Wright and Thomas Oliver in 1641, for George Scott in 1651 and for John Leyden in 1654. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1651 when his daughter Janet, with Isobel Young, was baptised in Ashkirk. The record is labelled ‘for’, and witnesses were George Ormiston and George (who was surely related to him). George (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. He was son of Thomas, who was also a witness. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded in 1587 as being ‘of Liddesdale’ in 1278/9 when he was on a panel at Newcastle. His family presumably had lands in Liddesdale, and may have given risen to this surname. Hawise (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. The forename could have been ‘Hally’ or some other close variant. James (15th/6th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘in hawik’. He and Philip Fawlaw were sureties for each other and failed to appear at the Justice-aiire in Jedburgh, being fined at the next court. James (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as alias Blakstaneous in Hawik’. He was probably a Bailie in Hawick, since he gave sasine of the half Barony of Wilton from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert Langlands. It is unclear what his nickname refers to. Janet (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Presumably the same Janet was also joint owner (along with Stephen Scott and John Short) of another particate on the south, as well as a particate on the north side. She was probably related to Andrew, Hawise, Thomas and Nichol, and may have been a widow or heiress.

John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Johannis Lidderdale’ in Hawick in 1493 when George Waugh in Hawick was surety for him at the Justice-aiire in Jedburgh. In the next entry the same John in Hawick was himself surety for Thomas, who was fined for non-appearance. In 1494/5 the pair of men were allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of consorting with the Elliots of Branxholme. John ‘Jock the Deacon’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, with the events themselves happening 2 years earlier. He may have been a Burgh Officer of some sort, given his implication in the treatment of the prisoner in Hawick steeple. His nickname suggests he may have been Deacon in one of the Trades. It seems likely he was related to the earlier John in Hawick.
Liddesdale

John (17th C.) leather merchant in Hawick. In 1630 he acted for Thomas of the Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire) when he had a ‘clare constat’ for quarter of the lands of East Mains, from the Viscount Drumlanrig. He was presumably related to Thomas in some way, and probably closely related to Andrew (currier in Hawick) and William (currier and Burgess of Selkirk) who were witnesses.

John (17th C.) schoolmaster in Hawick, who was one of the witnesses to the signing of the ‘Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union’ (Covenant) in 1638. He is the first schoolmaster on record in Hawick, and although it is not known what sort of school he was in charge of, it was presumably the Parish School. Margaret (16th C.) holder of 1 1/2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter.

Nichol (16th C.) holder of half a particate of land on the south side of the main street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Philip (16th C.) recorded in 1552 when his wife (‘vxori Philippi Lidderdaill’) was listed as being owed money by William, younger of Braunxholme. He may be the same Philip listed as owning 2 particates of land on the north side of the main street in Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Robert ‘the Corbie’ (17th C.) one of a list of 16 local men named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. However, when produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Thomas (15th C.) fined in 1493 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John was his surety and he also acted for himself. Both men were ‘in hawic’. He was probably related to the later Thomas. In 1494/5 both he and John were allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh for the crime of consorting with the Elliots of Braunxholme. In the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 he is recorded having obtained remission from the King. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in the 1537 as holder of 2 particates of land on the south side of Hawick’s public street. He was presumably related to some of the other Liddersdales in the Charter. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His son George was also a witness and he was listed as ‘elder’ (suggesting there was another Thomas at the time). Thomas (17th C.) of St. Mary’s Isle (in Galloway), given quarter of a ‘merkland’ of Easter Mains by Viscount Drumlanrig in a deed of 1630. The deed also mentions John and Andrew, curriers of the same place, and William, Burgess of Selkirk (probably a variant of Liddesdale); also spelled ‘Lidderdaill’, ‘Lidderdell’, ‘Lidderdale’, ‘Lidderdale’, ‘Liddirdale’, ‘Liddirdale’, etc.; see also Lutherdale, which may be the same name in some cases).

Liddesdale (lì-dìs-dàl) n. valley of the Liddel Water, extending more than 20 miles from about Peel Fell to the Esk. In rieving days this was one of the most lawless areas in the land, with the Elliots and Armstrongs holding sway over the upper and lower parts of the valley, respectively. The name is sometimes used synonymously with Castleton Parish. A rental roll of around 1376, among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton, is invaluable for listing all the farms in the area in the late 14th century, including the names of many land-owners at that time (‘Willelmni Sturhes’, ‘Croyser’, ‘Fethyng’, ‘Lounane’, ‘Willelmi filii Alani’, ‘Willelmi del Syde’, ‘Johannis Rauffon’, ‘Ricardi Broun’, ‘Thome Gilson’, ‘Ade de Syde’, ‘Elie Nobill’, ‘Dauid Stodhirde’, ‘Ennie de Lawys’, ‘Ricardi de Lawis’, ‘Robert de Lawis’, ‘Mathei Meryng’, ‘Willelmi Nycson’ and ‘Philippi de Fausyde’); the lands are divided into 4 ‘quarterium’, the 1st unnamed, the others being ‘Ludne’, ‘Ermyldoune’ and ‘Manger-toume’, with an additional area being ‘Forest’, and a several other lands being listed as free ten- andries or church properties. The lands were a Lordship, held by the Douglasses in the 15th century (along with Ewesdale and Eskdale), with a Bailie appointed to administer the lands. In 1491 the Lordship was swapped by Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, for Kilmarnock and was then granted by the King to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. When the area was laid waste by the English in 1514 it was described as ‘12 miles of Lienth, within the Middill Marche of Scotland, whereupon was 100 pleughes’. Another rental roll of 1541 (transcribed in the Exchequer Rolls as well as the Buccleuch Muniments) lists more than 140 farms and their values and tenants at that time, mostly Elliots in the north and Armstrongs in the south, with a few Nixons, Croziers and others. An English record of 1592 describes that ‘the cheif surnames in Liddesdale standes upon Armstronges and Elwoodes’ and ‘is the most offensive countrie against both West and Middle Marches’. The area was long a Lordship, possessed by the Soullises and Douglasses, and later the Earls of Bothwell, forfeited by Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell and passing to the Earls of Buccleuch.
Liddesdale Burgher Kirk

and Roxburgh in 1632: the document describing this lists the owners of all the farms at that time. The Lordship is listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1663. The area was surveyed in 1718, when most of the farms were possessed by Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch. These maps form a valuable record of the farm boundaries at that time, as well as the location of farmhouses and woods 300 years ago. It is said that Sir Walter Scott’s carriage was the first wheeled vehicle seen in the area in 1798 – ‘The Aramstranges, that ay ne been A hardy house, but not a hail, The Eliots’ honours to maintaine, Brought down the lave o’ Liddesdale’ [T], ‘Of Liddesdale the common thieves Sae pertly steals now and reaves, That nane may keep Horse, nolt, or sheep, For their mischiefes’ [SRM], ‘The outlaws come frae Liddesdale, They herry Redesdale far and near; The rich man’s gelding it maun gang, They canna pass the puir man’s near’ [LHTB], ‘The Teviot lads are frank and free, The Ettrick chaps are fu’ o glee, But far aboon them a’ to me Are the merry lads o’ Liddesdale’ [DA], ‘Oh, Liddesdale, thou land of mist, I lo’e thy benty

Liddesdale drowe (li-diz-däl-drow) n., arch. a light rain shower, drizzle – ‘The climate is upon the whole damp, the heights swampy, and often overhung with moist fogs, vernacularly termed ‘drowes’ or ‘Liddesdale drowes’ [RJE], ‘… that’s up the Newcastleton way, you know, an there’s a lot o hills around an they get a lot o, ee ken, mist and rain there, and oo caa eet a Liddesdale drowe’ [ME] (see drowe).

the Liddesdale Heritage Centre (thu-li-diz-däl-he-ree’-eej-seen’-ur) n. Newcastleton area museum situated in the former Townfoot (Evangelical Union) Kirk on South Hermitage Street, which was built 1801–04. It contains displays relevent to the history of Liddesdale, as well as a unique bi-centenary tapestry and memorabilia relating to the Waverley Route.

the Liddesdale Hotel (thu-li-diz-däl-hotel) n. hotel in Newcastleton at 17 Douglas Square, formerly the Commercial Inn. In 1861 the innkeeper was John Scott.

the Liddesdale Hounds (thu-li-diz-däl-howndz) n. pack of fox hounds based in Liddesdale, also known as the ‘Liddesdale Hunt’. It is said to be the oldest in Roxburghshire, having existed since the early 18th century.

Liddesdale Road (li-diz-däl-rōd) n. new name given to Lynnwood Road in 1971, against the wishes of many of its residents. After the demolition of St. Cuthberts School, Stonefield Mill and Buccleuch Nurseries and the filling in of the dam, new houses were built in 1973.

the Liddesdale Stane (thu-li-diz-däl-stān) n. gravestone of the early Christian period, pernaps 6th century. It was found in 1933 in the Liddel Water near where the Ralston Burn meets it, being washed from a dry-stane dyke after a flood. It reads ‘HIC IACIT / CARANTI FIL(I) / CUPITIANI’ (‘here lies Carantus, son of Cupitianus’). It is now in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland.

the Liddesdale Temperance Brass Band (thu-li-diz-däl-tem-pu-rins-braws-bawnd) n. brass band based in Newcastleton.

Liddesdale Turnpike Trust (li-diz-däl-tun-pik-trust) n. former organisation responsible for the road development between Limekilenedge and the Note-o-the-Gate to Forge Bridge in Canonbie Parish. There were 26 miles of road in Roxburghshire, and a little over 5 miles in Dumfriesshire. The Trust was set up under an Act of Parliament in 1803. George & James Oliver of Hawick acted as Clerks in the mid-to-late 19th century. The initial subscriptions were paid off with the income from the 7 toll-bars.

Liddesdale (li-deez-dal) n., poet. alternative pronunciation of Liddesdale – ‘Shall Liddesdale be wanting, when the bravest take the field?’ [JoHa].

Liddin (li-din) n. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. His name could be an error for some similar surname.

Liddle see Liddell

Liddle (li-dul) n. Ebenezer (b.1791/2) gardener and farmer living on Wilton Damside in 1841. In 1851 he was at Upper Damside, farmer of 17 acres. He is listed as a gardener in Wilton in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Elizabeth Lillas in Wilton in 1812. John (17th C.) minister of Hobkirk Parish. He refused to pray for William and Mary and was removed, leading to the Parish being vacant for 1689–94. John (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Carlisle. In December 1808 he was held up at Branxholme by 2 men with pistols. They tied him to a tree and robbed him of over £100. This was the most famous local case of highway robbery. The thieves were never caught, despite a large reward being offered by the carriers of Hawick. Robert (18th/19th C.) overseer at Boghall. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. Thomas (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1775 and she died in 1794. He is probably the Thomas, who married ‘Mary’ Turnbull and whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Mary (b.1776); Thomas (b.1777); and Margaret (b.1779). Thomas (d.1835) grocer and corn dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s directory. He is probably the Thomas who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Maragret Davidson in 1822. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1825), who married baker George Paterson; Isabella (b.1827), who later also married George Paterson; James (b.1829); Margaret (b.1831); Agnes (b.1832); and Jemima (b.1833). His wife and children are recorded at about 8 High Street on the 1841 census (see also Liddell).

Oo’d a hae din the like’ [MB] (note singular, while informal English is usually ‘the likes’).

likeas (lik-az) conj., arch. likewise, also, used to introduce another item in a series – ‘...likes owr souerane Lordis lettres direkit thairwpoun ...’ [SB1500], ‘The said day the Baillies ...’ did ordain ...’Likas they hereby statute and ordain that ...’ [BR1729], in the same way as, as if – ‘...an A litteet a sang an wheed an yuooted, leike as A’d gane wuth’ [ECS], ‘...an there the perr stand, shooder ti shooder, leike as they war gluishin an shuirrin doon at aabodie’ [ECS] (also written as 2 words; cf. likeways).

likely-like (lik-lee-lik) adj., arch. probable, likely-looking, – ‘It’s a leikely-leike thing that bacca ulla turn dearer or ’d be lang’ [ECS], ‘There was a snod bit leikely-leike eateen-hoose, nerr bacca ull turn dearer or ’d be lang’ [ECS], ‘There likely-looking, – ‘It’s a leikely-leike thing that’ ...’[BR1684], ‘...and likeways whoever reseat ym shall be bound and oblige that the sd. persones shall give satisfacione to ye kirke ...’ [BR1689] (cf. likeas).

likit (li-kee, -ki’) pp. liked – ‘hei likit the schuil, bit no the belt si much’, ‘she’d hev likit the weather ti be better’, ‘The tade held up her auld dunne lufes. She lykit the sang sae weele’ [JTe], ‘Atweed he was counthie an’ kin’ly, An’ neebour folk likit him a ’’[JoHa], ‘Ye’ve liket me weel, and ye’ve liket me lang. As lang an’ weel I’ve liimet thee’ [JoHa], ‘Respec’it and liket by grit and by sma’ ...’ [JT], ‘Aw fand Jean likit them uncommon weel, an’ them her ...’ [BCM1880], ‘Maybe it is for every generation to feel The sma tragedy: to have oot-leeved What it had aye kenned, And likit weel’ [DH] (also spelled ‘licht’ and ‘likeet’).

lill (li-) n., arch. a hole in a wind instrument, particularly the bagpipes, chanter or flute – ‘A blyther lad ne’er buir a drone, Nor touched a lill; Nor pipe inspir’d wi’ sweeter tone Or better skill’ [CPM].

Lilliard (li-lee-ard) n. the Maidin Lilliard of Maxton who supposedly saw her lover killed at Anrum Moor and waded in to avenge him, being killed in the process – ‘...And when her legs were cuttit off She fought upon her stumps’. A small monument commemorates her supposed grave, about 400 yards east of the A68, near the line of Dere Street. Unfortunately it seems very unlikely that she ever existed, since the place name predates the battle, the monument is essentially a replacement for the earlier ‘Lilliard’s Cross’ and the lines appear to be cribbed from ‘Chevy Chase’, but it’s a good story nevertheless.

Lilliard’s Cross (li-lee-ardz-kros) n. former wayside marker at Lilliard’s Edge. The name dates back to at least the 12th century, and was still in use in the 16th (it is ‘Lillyat Cros’ in 1738 and ‘Lylzeartis Croce’ in 1547/8).

Lilliard’s Edge (li-lee-ardz-ej) n. farm by the A68, between Jedburgh and St. Boswells, with a nearby caravan park. Dere Street passes near here, and it is next to the site of the Battle of Anrum Moor, as well as of the monument to ‘Lilliard’. The name is generally applied to the high point on the A68 here, which reaches 172 m (565 ft). Just off the road to the west is the Monteath Mausoleum, and a little further south lies the Lilliardsedge Park caravan park (the origin of the name is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Lil’ plus ‘geat’, meaning ‘the gate belonging to Lil’; it appears as ‘Lylzeartis Croce’ in 1548 and ‘Lilliartis Crosse’ in 1632; it is also written as one word, ‘Lilliardsedge’).

Lilliardsedge see Lilliard’s Edge

Lilloco (li-lee-kô) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Templehall and neighbouring farms. In 1786 he was herd at Templehallshiel, in 1788 was ‘late Herd in Templehallshiel now in Harrot Park’ and in 1790 was in Langburn. He is recorded as shepherd on the Wauchope estate according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. His children included: James (b.1776), listed as his son in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799; Isobel (b.1778); Andrew (b.1780); William (b.1782), a shepherd; Alexander (b.1784); Mary (b.1786); Helen (b.1788); Hugh (b.1790); and Douglas (b.1794), also a shepherd. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish, probably son of Alexander. His children included: Betty (b.1808); Alexander (b.1810); John (b.1813); Andrew (b.1815); James (b.1817); and Walter (b.1819), who was a butcher in Lilliesleaf. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His wife was Isobella Scott. Their children included Alexander (b.1838). Alexander (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Isabel Grieve. Their children included: Christian (b.1842); John (b.1844); William (b.1845); Margaret (b.1848); and Alexander (b.1849). In 1851 and 1861 his widow was living at Dykecrofts. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as tenant farmer of lands near Bedrule, along with Thomas Turnbull, ‘in-dweller in Newtoun’. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Janet Turnbull in Kirkton in 1721. It seems likely that the same Andrew married Isobel Briggs in Kirkton in 1735. His children, baptised in Kirkton, probably included Isobel (b.1722), Thomas (b.1729), Janet (b.1745) and Andrew (b.1748). Perhaps the same Andrew was living at Stobs in 1736 and 1741 and had children baptised in Cavers Parish, including John (b.1736), Marion (b.1739) and Gilbert (b.1741). Douglas (b.1794) son of Alexander, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He became a shepherd at Wauchope and lived at Hawklaw. In 1820 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’), daughter of John Taylor, farmer at Unthank in Rulewater. Their children were: Alexander (b.1821); John (b.1822); James (b.1824); Douglas (b.1825); Isabel (b.1828); Robert (b.1831); Elizabeth (b.1834); and Mary (b.1837). George (1704/5–39) shoemaker at Blackburnfoot in Castleton Parish. His children Thomas and 2 others died in infancy. They are buried in Etterton Cemetery. Hugh (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Helen Telfer in 1817, the married being recorded in both Southdean and Hobkirk Parishes. His children included Alexander (b.1818). James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His daughter Isabell was baptised in 1693. James (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Marion Collier in 1733 and his children included William (b.1734) and Christian (b.1736). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1747. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Grieve in 1765. James (18th/19th C.) son of Alexander, shepherd at Wauchope. He was servant at Wauchope in Hobkirk Parish, as recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797 and son of Alexander in the 1799 Lieutenancy Book. James (1815/6–99) son of William and Margaret Nichol who lived in at least Cavers and Castleton Parishes. There appears to be no record of his baptism. He worked as a farm labourer at Riddletonhill near Maxton. In 1841, along with his brother Robert, he emigrated to Canada, settling in Gloucester Township, Ontario. He returned to Scotland, married Janet Bell in Crailing Parish in 1844 and emigrated permanently in 1845, bringing his mother and sister Janet. He purchased land along with his brother, this being called Century Farm (now part of the Industrial Park on Stevenage Drive in Ottawa. His children were Margaret, William, Andrew, Elizabeth, James, Robert, Isabella Duncan and Sarah Jane. He was for a long time Superintendent of the East Gloucester Presbyterian Church. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in Raperlaw in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntlehill. Since he appeared personally, he was not denounced as a rebel. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He is probably the John who married Janet Wright in Bedrule in 1691. James (b.1697) and John (b.1697), baptised in Bedrule, were probably his children. John (17th/18th C.) married Mary Young in 1705, the marriage being proclaimed in Bedrule and Minto Parishes. Probably the same John had several children baptised in Bedrule: Isabell (b.1706); Margaret (b.1708); Andrew (b.1711); Mary (b.1714); Robert (b.1716); and Isabell (again, b.1722). John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Mather in Bedrule in 1729. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1727), Janet (b.1730), Marion (b.1732), Thomas (b.1736), Margaret (b.1738) and Walter (b.1743). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1768) and Isabell (b.1771). John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1777. John (d.1808) Hawick resident. He married Helen Reid, who died one day after him. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott at Whitfield in Wilton Parish in 1772. John (19th C.) Hawick resident, member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Synington in Wilton in 1807 and their children included: Thomas (1807–62), who died in Kelso; and Andrew (1809–c.73), who died in Nenthorn. John (19th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Young and their son Robert was baptised in 1853. Robert (17th C.) married Agnes ‘Willieton’ in Hawick in 1791. Robert (1818–976) son of William and Margaret Nichol who lived in at least Cavers and Castleton Parishes. There appears to be no record of his baptism. He worked as a farm labourer at Riddletonhill near Maxton. In 1841, along with his brother James, he emigrated to Canada, other family members following later. He settled in Gloucester Township, Ontario, where he and his brother purchased a farm; he also worked as a stone mason. He married Margaret, Isabella, Elisabeth, William, John, Christina Kinmond and his children were Jane, he also worked as a stone mason. He married Margaret Nichol, the couple being rebuked for their first child being born in fornication. Their children included: Janet (1800–80), baptised in Castleton, Cavers and Bedrule Parishes. William Lillico born in Abbotrule in 1665. He was herd at the Flex in 1700 and in 1709. He married Isobel Rutherford in Bedrule in 1691. Their children included: Andrew (b.1691); Margaret (b.1700); William (b.1702); James (b.1703); Agnes (b.1705); and Isobel (b.1709). The witnesses in 1700 were William and Francis Henderson, smiths at the Flex and in 1709 were James Gray in Whitlaw and William Henderson, younger in Flex. William (18th C.) married Jean Ferguson in Bedrule in 1756. William (18th C.) married Elspeth Beattie in Castleton in 1763. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Marion (b.1766), Janet (b.1770), Sarah (b.1772), an unnamed child (b.1774) and William (b.1776). He is probably the William who married Jean Aitchison in Hobkirk Parish in 1770 (but then must have had an earlier wife also). William (d.c.1832) resident of Castleton, Cavers and Bedrule Parishes. He was living at Bedrule Mill in about 1829. His wife was Margaret Nichol, the couple being rebuked for their first child being born in fornication. Their children included: Janet (1800–80), baptised in Castleton, Cavers and Bedrule Parishes. William was herd at the Flex in 1700 and in 1709. He was already dead in 1841 when his wife, 3 children and 2 grandchildren emigrated to Canada. An entry in the Bedrule Parish records shows his widow being given some of the poor money. William (1782–1861) son of Alexander and brother of Douglas. He became shepherd at Gatehousecote and later Templehall. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer living with his family at South Berryfell and in 1851 was shepherd at Dodburn. By 1861 he and his wife were living at Burnflat in Hawick. In 1841 in Hobkirk Parish he married Christian (or perhaps Katherine) Telfer, who was from Newcastle; she died in 1873, aged 81. Their children included: Helen (b.1815); Alexander (b.1816), who was at Ladfield in Oxnam Parish in 1851; James (b.1818); Isabella (b.1820); Elizabeth (b.1823); Christian (b.1825); Helen; William (1827–95); Elspeth (1830–1903); and Andrew. The family are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. William (b.1827) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of William. He was a shepherd at Wormscleuch in 1861 (also spelled ‘Lilico’, ‘Lillyco’, ‘Lillicow’ and ‘Lillyco’).
Lillico

Lilloco’s (li-lee-köz) n. tobacconist’s shop at 3 High Street in the 20th century. The property was previously a bicycle shop. Note that there have been members of this family in the Hawick area for centuries. Helen Lilloco was wife of Walter Turnbull of Bedrule around 1600, and there were Lillocos farming in Bedrule Parish from at least the late 17th century.

Lillie (li-lee) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as Blakehope in Castleton Parish on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Chesters in Ancrum Parish. He is recorded in 1798 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia.

Lillielaw Park (li-lee-law-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was ‘Lillilaw park’ in 1779, when valued at £72 19s 8d and liferented by Robert Trotter of Bush. It lay to the north-west of the Minto-to-Jedburgh road, bounded by Craigend farm, Cleuchhead farm, Spout Burn Park, the Minto-to-Jedburgh road and Minto Glen garden. It was still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. A cottage called ‘Lillylaw’ is still marked there on modern maps.

Lilliesleaf (li-leez-leaf, lilz-lee) n. village about 8 miles north of Hawick, and also the name of the associated parish, part of Roxburghshire. The village was once known as ‘Easter Lilliesleaf’, to distinguish it from the Wester part, which was associated with the Barony of Riddell. The Riddells of that Ilk long held lands there, with an early 12 century until the Reformation. The village was once held several fortified houses, the largest being a 2-storey tower at the eastern end of the village, part of the walls of which still existed until about 1810. The moors around the village held ‘conventicles’ in the late 17th century, and was the scene of several skirmishes with the dragoons. John ‘sleich’ and Alexander Alemoor are recorded there in 1502. A charter of 1595/6 lists men granted land within the village being Walter Riddell of that Ilk, William Riddell of Bewlie, Archibald Douglas in Friarshaw, William Riddell in Greatlaws, Alexander Hogg, Thomas Young, William Smail. John Hogg, Thomas Bairnsfather, James Hill, James Henderson, Alexander Smail, Adam Smail, William Robson, William Middlemas, William Douglas and John Redford. The feuars lands were valued at £1283 15s (exclusive of Walter Scott of Chapel’s share) in the 1643 county valuation. Additionally in 1643 Walter Scott held lands valued at £200, Walter Riddell was portioner of ‘20 soums’ valued at £60 and 4 acres at £26, and Alexander Hood held £10. The feuars lands were valued at £800 in 1678. In 1694 the residents recorded there were Andrew Davidson, William Leithead, Andrew Riddell, Andrew Gray, Thomas Smail, David Gray, Alexander Smail, James Leithead, Thomas Marshal, William Mason, Robert Leithead, Walter Davidson, James Riddell, James Redford, James Hill, John Scott and William Henderson, along with merchant John Smail, smith John Wright, cooper John Glendinning and wrights Walter Leithead, John Smail and James Leithead. The 1797 Horse Tax Rolls records the horse owners there as John Cochrane, John Anderson, Andrew Redford, John Muir, Robert Stirling, Andrew Riddell, James Lunn, William Grieve, John Hislop, John Kid, James Stirling, Thomas Chisholme, John Scott, James Hogg and James Easton. In the 19th century there were weavers there working for Hawick manufacturers. The village consists largely of a single street, and has many 18th and 19th century buildings. The present church was built in 1771, with later additions, and the graveyard contains the remains of the Riddells of that Ilk. A war memorial, made of Doddington stone and designed by J.P. Alison, was erected after WWI. A schoolhouse was built in 1822 as well as the ‘Currie School’ for girls in 1860, and the village still has its own primary school. The Common of Lilliesleaf was divided among the feuars and heritors in 1701/2, and only a few acres remained by the early 19th century. There is a multi-purpose building, Currie Memorial Hall. The Plough Inn and the Cross Keys are the local pubs, although there were 4 public houses in 1834. The village was the very first destination for a Ride-out in 1891. It became a regular location for many years, ending in 1984, but revived again in 2004 and 2005. ‘Voices from Lilliesleaf: Life and Work in a Scottish Borders Village During the Twentieth Century’ (2015) was written by Ian MacDougall, based on interviews with locals – ‘And where around lang Lilliesleaf With lavish hand is flung A wealth of grace more dear to me Than aught that ere was sung’ [FL], ‘Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lillisleaf’ [WL] (the origin is probably ‘Lil’s cliff’ or ‘slope’, with the Old English personal name ‘Lil’ or ‘Lilla’; it is first recorded as ‘Lillescliva’ about 1120, ‘Lillisclive’ and ‘Lyllisclife’ in about 1150, ‘Lillesclive’ in 1156, ‘Lillesclive’ in 1170, then in forms such Lilliesleaf (li-leez-leef) n. farm in Rivonia on the outskirts of Johannesburg, presumably named after the local village. It hit the headlines in 1963 when it was raided by South African police and a number of ANC leaders were captured. The house had been the group’s hide-out for about 2 years. Nelson Mandela himself was captured separately (at Howick!) in the KwaZulu-Natal Midlands and the whole group were put on trial, leading to ‘Rivonia’ and ‘Lilliesleaf Farm’ becoming internationally synonymous with the suppression of black resistance in South Africa. In 1991, after his release from prison, Mandela spent some time scouring the suburbs for the farmhouse and finally located it. In 2001 the Lilliesleaf Trust was set up to turn the farmhouse to turn the site into a museum and conference centre.

Lilliesleaf (li-leez-leef) n. Adam (13th C.) witness to a grant of lands at Cresswell in Hassendean. This was probably in the late 1220s. His name is given as ‘Ada de Lillescline’. It is unclear how he might have been related to Stephen or other nearly contemporary men with the same designation. Alexander (12th/13th C.) son of Walthof. He witnessed a grant in the period 1185–1215 by Geoffrey the cook of Whitton to the hospital of Jerusalem at Torphichen. He also witnessed the confirmation of this grant by Patrick Riddell and another grant of lands in Whitton by Patrick (who was thus surely related). He further witnessed the grant of lands in Haddington by William of Lilliesleaf to Melrose Abbey, also in 1185–1215. Probably the same Alexander was the father of this same William, who was mentioned in other charters for Walter of Riddell and Adam of Durham in the early 1200s. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) son of Walthof and brother of Alexander. His name is also written ‘Gaufrid’. In about 1200 he granted 3 oxgangs of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey. This was confirmed by Patrick of Ryedale and then Eustace of Vescy in the early 13th century. There was also separate confirmations of grants to Melrose Abbey of 4 oxgangs of land in Whitton and then 13 acres and half a parcel of land in Whitton in the period 1195–1207. In the period 1185–1215 he witnessed a grant for William of Lilliesleaf. It seems likely that the designation ‘of Lilliesleaf’ (and the connection to Whitton) meant that he was directly related to the Riddells of that Ilk. John (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf in the late part of the 12th century and until at least 1204. He was recorded as ‘Master’ in the period 1201–05 when he witnessed a grant of lands in Clifton in Roxburghshire to Melrose Abbey. Sometime in the period 1182–96 he settled a dispute over the teinds of the lands in Roxburghshire previously belonging to Ulkill Wallace. He was also probably the ‘Master J., Rector of Lilliesleaf’, referred to in a papal letter of 1204. He could be the John, brother of Simon, Parson of Lilliesleaf, who witnessed the renewal of the gift of Hassendean Church in the period 1204–07. He may have effectively taken the surname of Lilliesleaf from his church. Stephen, who held the churches of Borthwick and Nenthorn, may have been his son. He may be the same as John of Huntingdon, who was Clerk of Bishop Jocelin of Glasgow. It is also possible he was son or other close relative of Walter of Lilliesleaf, recorded about 25 years earlier. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johan de Lillesclyif’ in the county of Roxburgh when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It seems reasonable to assume that he was related to the earlier John, Rector of Lilliesleaf. His seal showed an 8-rayed figure and the name ‘SIOHIS D’LELISCL’. He is probably the ‘Johanne, de Lilliscleif’ recorded in a charter of Sproutston in 1320/1. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johan de Lillesclyue’ in the county of Peebles when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It is possible that this was the same man as the John in Roxburghshire, if his name is entered twice. Richard (15th C.) recorded as ‘de Lyllisclue’ in 1436/7, when he resigned the lands of Lilliesleaf to his superior ‘Mungo de Redale’ (Riddell probably). Simon (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf. Sometime in the period 1204–07 he witnessed a charter establishing the Church of Hassendean. His brother John was also a witness, and it is possible he was the man who was formerly the Rector of Lilliesleaf. They may have been part of the Riddell family, who were the superiors of the lands of Lilliesleaf at that time.

(12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘master, clerk, persona’ in 1204 when he witnessed an agreement between the Bishop of St. Andrews, Durham Cathedral and Coldingham; he was there ‘Stephano de Liliesl’). He was also witness to a document relating to Soutra Hospital in around the 1220s. He is there recorded as ‘Stephano de Lilliscleve’. This may be the same man who held the churches of Borthwick (in Mid-Lothian) and Nenthorn, and who was possibly son of John of Lilliesleaf. He does not appear to have held the church of Lilliesleaf himself. His name occurs no fewer than 42 times in the early 13th century, but disappears by 1227. Stephen (13th/14th C.) mason, listed in an account of wages paid at Linlithgow Castle in 1302. It seems likely he was related to the earlier Stephen. Thomas (d.1222) Parson of Lilliesleaf, recorded in 1222. He succeeded as Archdeacon of Glasgow, but died the same year. Walter (12th C.) Chaplain and Clerk who witnessed the confirmation of the church of Loquharriot in Midlothian in the period 1147–51. In about 1162 he witnessed a grant of the Church of Linton, where he is ‘Galtero’. In a document of 1177/8 regarding a dispute involving Kelso Abbey it seems clear he was a clerk of Jocelin, Bishop of Glasgow. He was not Chaplain of Lilliesleaf, but surely took his designation from there. Waltheof (12th C.) father of Alexander and Geoffrey, also written ‘Waldeve’. He is mentioned in a charter of around 1200. ‘Waltheof’ could be the same as ‘Walter’, and it seems likely (given the connection with Lilliesleaf and Whitton) that he was part of the family of Riddell of that Ilk. William (12th/13th C.) recorded in the period 1185–1215 when he granted lands in Haddington to Melrose Abbey. His name is recorded as ‘Willelmus de Lillesclif’. Witnesses included Alexander and Geoffrey, sons of Waltheof of Lilliesleaf, who were presumably related to him. His seal bore a monk-like figure holding a crozier and the words ‘SIGILLUM WILLELMII’. William (13th C.) son of Alexander, recorded as witness to a charter for Walter of Riddell in the early 1200s. He is also mentioned in a document in the period 1214–49 when Matilda Corbet resigned her lands in Lilliesleaf ‘except the land of William son of Alexander’. He also witnessed the confirmation of the gift of lands in West Lilliesleaf to Melrose Abbey in about the same period.

Lilliesleaf Kirk (li-leez-lee-kirk) n. former church in Lilliesleaf. In 1804 some of the parishioners wanted William Campbell’s son to replace him as Lilliesleaf Parish minister, but the Duke of Roxburgh appointed James Stalker (who had been Chaplain to the Royal Forces at Fort George, and to whom the Duke owed an obligation). This led about 70 families to secede and form a Relief congregation. However, a dispute with the Relief Synod over the appointment of their first minister led to them seceding from that organisation and becoming a Burgher congregation. Their secession church was built in the village by 1809. There was also trouble over the appointment of the second minister, and hence a gap of several years. the congregation eventually became part of the United Free Presbyterian Church about 1900 (along with the other secession churches), and was united with Ashkirk Free Kirk in 1909. A roll of the ministers is: James Colquhoun 1808–14; Patrick Bradley 1817–41; William Kiddy 1843–49; John Ballantyne 1851–54; William Young 1857–74; Alexander Paterson 1875–96; George Minto 1897–1908; Peter Alison 1909–25; John H. Ogilvie 1926–28.

Lilliesleaf Kirk (li-leez-lee-kirk) n. church in Lilliesleaf, at the eastern side of the village, serving the surrounding parish. There are records of a church at least as early as 1116. Sometime between 1114 and 1147 there is a grant from there to Uchtred the priest, confirmed about 1160. In the 1170s and 1180s there were several documents from Popes confirming the church as a ‘mensal’ church of the Bishop of Glasgow. In 1190 the Parson is recorded claiming lands at Bowden, and about that time the parson is recorded as ‘J.’ when there was a dispute settled with the Abbots of Kelso. In 1220 the parson was ‘Master Stephen’, according to a document of the Priory of St. Andrews. The church belonged to Glasgow Diocese until the time of the Reformation, with the connection recorded at least as early as 1160. The earlier church was located in the middle of the modern graveyard, and was thatched. The church was described as ‘StMungo’s chapel of Lilleslef’ in 1546 and ‘S. Mungo Chapell’ in 1562; hence it was either dedicated to St. Mungo (or Kentigern) originally or rededicated to him later. The present church was rebuilt in 1771, during the ministry of William Campbell (whose daughter married the Hawick minister Robert Gillan). It was erected to the north of the former church. The choir of the older church was turned into the burial aisle of the Riddells of Riddell, along with the Riddells of Muselee and the Stewarts of Hermiton. A manse was built in 1821, with glebe lands of about 11 acres. Tax was paid on 17 windows at the former manse in 1748. The new Lilliesleaf Schuil (li-leez-leef-skil) n. school in Lilliesleaf, existing since at least the early 17th century. Patrick Nichol was recorded as schoolmaster there in 1634. There were more than 40 pupils in the 1830s. The master there over 1805–50 was George Scott, and in the 1860s was James McKenzie. There were more than 40 pupils in the 1830s. The master there in 1805–50 was George Scott, and in the 1860s was James Mackay. There was a school-house built in about 1820s. The present building was constructed in 1962 and extended in the 1990s. The pupils from the modern primary school attend Selkirk High School.

lilt (lilt, lil’) v., poet. to sing cheerfully, to trill a tune without singing the words, figuratively applied to birds, running water etc. – ‘As arm in arm we walk’d alang, The mavis liltet up his sang’ [JoHa], ‘…thaye crye owt for joy, thaye lilt alsua an’ sing’ [HSR], ‘The mavis, lintie and laverock lilt Their love lays in cadence sweet’ [TK], ‘May you ever, happy river, lilt your joyous song’ [WL], to trip, jog, skip, n. cheerful singing, lively song – ‘O blythe is the lilt o’ his ain mither tongue’ [WS], ‘Oh kindly is the Teviot tongue, Her lilt is aye sae bonny’ [RH].

liltit (lil-tee’, -ti’) pp., arch. celebrated in song – ‘Poor Sally Gray, and Geordie Gill, Are liltit here on ilka hill’ [JR], ‘The form -eet is employed for the ending of the preterite and past participle of weak verbs, e.g. liltet (= lilted), sterteet (= started), etc., etc.’ [ECS].

Lilyot’s Cross (li-leez-kros) n. place near Muirhouselaw in Maxton Parish, where March Days were held in the 14th century to sort out Border feuds. Its name is the origin of the ‘Maiden Lilliar’ legend.

lime (lim) n. a substance made by heating and then crushing limestone, used to improve soils for agricultural use. This practice became widespread in the 18th century, leading to the development of rural locations where limestone was quarried and burned on site, such as Limekilnedge and at Larriston. Lime was later used in the building trade.

Limekilnedge (lim-kiln-ej) n. area near the highest section of the road to Newcastleton, which was formerly part of the drove road to Liddesdale, important for the coal from Plashetts that was brought over by pony. The summit, with a triangulation pillar, reaches 430 m (1182 ft). The name derives from the former lime-workings there, sometimes called ‘Stobs Limery’, with quarries and some ruined kilns still visible. James Ashcroft was a lime burner there in 1841, Andrew Elliot was based there in the 1850s and William McDonald in 1861. In the early 1860s there were a large number of labourers (plus support people and family members) living in huts there, while working on the nearby tunnel; 71 people are listed on the 1861 census. It was described as a village in an 1868 directory – ‘Fae Limekilnedge to Teviot The rovin hills sae green . . . ’[WL], ‘. . . And lang or the birds leave the hedge, I’ll stride owre the Limekilnedge’[WL] (also sometimes ‘the Limekilnedge’; it is marked as ‘Lymkill hedge fells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Limekilnwud (lim-kiln-wud) n. former lands in Jedforest, probably near Limekilnsyke. It is listed as ‘Lyncekylwod’ along with Ferniehirst in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. ‘Edwarde Ollyver of Lynkylwodd’ is listed among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544.

the Limes (liu-linz) n. Victorian house formerly overlooking Wellfield, now on Raeson Park, also once known as ‘Viewfield’. It was the home of the Blenkhorns in the 1880s, and later of William Boyd Sime and Robert G. Maxwell. There is some confusion over whether this was also a former name for Sillerbuthall House.

lime-stane (lim-stan) n. lime-stone – ‘But when a farmer pits doon a load o lime-stane in a field, then I gie up a’ thegither . . . ’[DH].

Limey Sike (lii-mee-sik) n. small stream that rises near the Nine Stane Rig and flows to the south-east to join Roughley Burn.

Limiecleuch see Lymcleuch

Limie Sike (lii-mee-sik) n. small stream that joins the south side of the Borthwick Water to the west of Elrig farm.

lim (lim) n., arch. a lame person, cripple – ‘. . . A’d naether bumble, brizz, bate, nor blusht-bit ti play the limm an gar iz humple or turn lameter’[ECS], ‘Ti play the limm = to mar; destroy; spoil’[ECS] (also written ‘limm’).

limber (lim-bur) adj. lithe – ‘Nor was A tewd or mauchless, but limber an lither’[ECS], supple, pliant – ‘Often used when referring to boots, when it signifies pliable in the sense of yielding, giving comfort’[ECS], (the b is sounded; noted by E.C. Smith, suggesting it was more prevalent locally than in standard English).

limmer (li-mur) n., arch. a lowly fellow, rascal, scoundrel, rogue – ‘But what gar thou steal the laird’s Jock’s horse, Fala, &c. And limmer, what gar thou steal him, quoc he’[CPM], ‘. . . Till oot again the loupin’ limmer’[JBS], ‘Tam said, for aughts that he cou’d hear, She was a wanton limmer’[JoHa], ‘. . . Now, fye for shame, Alice’, cried the matron, betwixt jest and earnest, – ‘idle limmer that ye are’’[JTe], ‘Did ye ever see sic a limmer?’[WNK], ‘His een grew bricht, and his senses dimmer, And nought wad please till the saucy limmer . . . ’[WL] (from French).

Lindean (lin-deen) n. village to the north of Selkirk, being about the largest village between Selkirk and Melrose. It was a former station on the Selkirk branch line of the Waverley Line, which ran from 1856–64. The original church was set up there about 1119 by 7 monks from Tiron, who were later moved to found Kelso Abbey in 1128. This could be the ‘Lindene’ in the Barony of ‘Bolden’ (i.e. Bowden) recorded in 1541 when the tenants included George, William, John and Thomas ‘Elwand’.

the Linden (thu-lin-deen) n. Hawick Linden, a ‘junior’ rugby team, formed in 1921, and playing in the Borders District League. In 1963 they joined with the Trades in renting facilities at the Volunteer Park. Their strip consists of a royal blue shirt and socks. A history ‘Roots and Branches’ was written by B. Russell in 1997 (note the pronunciation).

Linden Crescent (lin-deen-cre-son, -din-) n. street built in 1893 and named after Linden Park. It is a road with a tight bend joining St. Ninian’s Road with the ‘Killin Hoose Brae’.

Linden Park (lin-din-pawrk, -deen-) n. house built as the residence of Walter Laing of Dicksons & Laings, off the Denholm road past Trow Mill. The site previously held an ancient burial cairn, dug out to prepare the foundations. It was built in 1885, designed by John Guthrie and named after the Linden or lime trees that grew there. There were additions to the house, designed by J.P. Allison in 1896. There was also a small lake on the grounds, with islands in it. The house was one of the first locally to be lighted by electricity. It also had an ornamental garden in a Chinese style, with pagodas and bridges crossing the pond. A folly built to resemble a ruined keep was also built on the grounds. The house was later home of Walter Laing’s son, manufacturer John Turnbull Laing. It is rumoured to have been the scene of a night-time visit by a King in a horse-drawn carriage from Hassendean Station to visit his paramour. It burned down in 1921, with the then owner Harry Smith convicted of arson. It was demolished in the 1950s and replaced by a development of bungalows including Linden House, Greenskares and the Archery). A stone bearing a verse from ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, carved for the house in 1885, was moved to behind the War Memorial near the Museum in 1978 – ‘. . . bye auld Hornshole, – a Linden Terrace (lin-deen-te-ris, -din-) n. street at the top of Linden Crescent, built in 1892 and named after Linden Park.

Lindisfarne (lin-diz-fawn) n. also known as Holy Island, the cradle of early Christianity in north-eastern England, established by St. Aidan, St. Cuthbert and St. Wilfred in the 7th century. It can be reached by foot at low tide, and contains building work dating from every century since at least the 11th. Wilton (‘Wiltuna’) is probably first mentioned about 843 in a deed of Eged, Bishop of Lindisfarne. The whole of Teviotdale appears to have been attached to the Priory’s see until transferred to Durham, perhaps in the middle of the 11th century.

Lindisfarne (lin-diz-fawn) n. large house on the left of Stirches Road, formerly a residence of the Innes family, now split into 2 flats. It was built in the latter part of the 19th century, with architect John Guthrie.

Lindsa (lindz-a) n. Gwladys stage name of Gladys Lindsay Watson.

Lindsay (lin-zee) n. Alexander of Dunrod (15th C.) held lands of Tofts in 1478, from the superior Archibald, Earl of Angus. This may have been the same as the lands in Kirkton Parish, although this is unclear. Andrew (14th/15th C.) son of William of the Byres and an unknown mother (he was probably illegitimate). He is probably the Andrew who was granted the lands of Stouslie and Groundistone by his father William in an undated charter, probably around 1390. David (d.1490) son of John, he was 2nd Lord of the Byres. In 1484 he was Baron of Chamberlain Newton when he granted Over and Nether Newhall (later called Burnhead and Burnfoot) to James Scott of Kirkurd. In 1488 he witnessed the charter for the Barony of Branxholme. He married Janet Ramsey, but died without issue. He was succeeded as Lord Lindsay by his brother John. His seal bore a horizontal stripe with 3 stars. David ‘Davie’ (20th C.) baker in Denholm. His baker’s shop at Townhead was owned by Alex Carruthers at the beginning of the 20th century, then Peter Scott and then Robert Martin, before he took over in 1934. The premises were later used as the village shop and post office. James (14th C.) granted the lands of Chamberlain Newton to William de Lindsay in about 1380. He was presumably Baron of these lands at that time, although it is unclear which James he might have been, and how he was related to William. Probably the same James witnessed the confirming charter of lands in Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in 1381 (when he was described as grandson of King Robert II, who granted the charter). It is possible he was the Lord of Crawford, who witnessed the grant of Drumlanrig to William Douglas in the period 1384–88. James (d.bef. 1488) Rector of Hawick, perhaps from 1447, when it was made a canony and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell (St. Mary’s was described as the ‘Church of Hauwyc’). He was appointed by William, Earl of Douglas and Avendale, and described as his kinsman (3 separate Lindsays of Crawford had married into the Douglas family in the previous century). In 1470 he held the Rectory of Benholm (in St. Andrews Diocese) and swapped it with Gilbert Kennedy for the Canony of Bothwell and Rectory of Hawick. There was also a dispute in 1470 over whether he really held an M.A. In 1476 it is stated that he was preparing to resign the benefices of Bothwell and Hawick and John Scott requested that he be given them by the Pope (although that does not appear to have happened). In 1480 he was Canon of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell and Prebendary of Hawick when he supplicated to the Pope to be allowed to hold 2 incompatible dignities. He was later Dean of Glasgow, taking over from Thomas Vaus in the mid-1460s. He may be the James of ‘Colbanton’, Rector of Douglas, secretary to the Earl of Douglas, who witnessed a charter granted by the Earl to William Cranston in 1443. He is probably the ‘James Lindissay, canon of Glasgow’ who witnessed a notorial instrument in 1446/7 made at Newark in which Oswald Abernethy proclaimed that his only superior was the Baron of Hawick. He is still recorded in 1487, and died shortly afterwards. James (18th C.) carpet-weaver in Hawick. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1774. Perhaps the same James, married to Elizabeth Lindsay, had children: John (b.1767), baptised in Hawick; and James (b.1769), John (again, b.1770) and James (again, b.1772). baptised in Ednam. John (d.c.1335) from the family of the Earldom of Crawford, son of Sir Philip of Staplegordon. He was a Canon of the Diocese of Glasgow who was elected as successor to Stephen de Dunnideer in 1317. This was done without the knowledge that Pope John XXII had already appointed Englishman John de Egglescliffe. However, Egglescliffe never took up the appointment, on account of Scotland being at war with England, and was translated to Ireland. He was then confirmed as Bishop in 1323. As Bishop of Glasgow, he had authority in the area around Haddington. He played an active role in national politics, supporting Robert the Bruce and Edward Baliol. He died when the Flemish ship he was on was attacked by English pirates. His seal showed a bishop beneath a canopy, with 2 shields, a fish and a bird, with the words 'S. Johis Dei Gra.'

John Baliol (13th C.) son of Sir James of Craige. He owned the Barony of Langnewton. In 1360 he granted the lands of Langnewton to William Cochrane of that Ilk. John (d.1482) Lord Lindsay of the Byres, son of Sir William of Abercorn and the Byres. In about 1415 (after the death of his father) he had a charter for the Barony of Byres and other lands, which included Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded as Baron of Chamberlain Newton in 1444 in a charter for Borthwickshiels and in 1468 he is recorded granting the lands of 'Stowisle' (i.e. Stouslie) to John Turnbull. In 1471 the Lords decreed that Thomas Turnbull 'of Faulush' should pay for 3 years of the 'male of the landis of Chaumerlane Newtoune'. Also in 1471 he had a precept of sasine for lands in Borthwickshiels. He was High Justiciar of Scotland North of the Forth. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Stewart, 1st Lord Lorn. He was succeeded in turn by his sons David, John and Patrick. His children included: David, 2nd Lord; John, 3rd Lord; Patrick, 4th Lord; Margaret, who married Walter Stewart, 1st Lord Innermeath and secondly married Henry Wardlaw (Baron of Wilton); Christian, who firstly married John, Master of Seton and secondly married Robert Cunningham, 2nd Earl of Glencairn (who was Baron of Haddo); and Mariot, who married John Hay, 1st Lord Hay of Yester. He must have lived to be quite old. John of Wauchope (d.1505) from the ancient Dumfriesshire family, probably the 12th Laird. He was witness to a sasine for George Douglas, Master of Angus in 1499. He held the lands of Fiddleton and others prior to them being sold about 1506. He was fined for not appearing at the Justice-aire held in Dumfries in 1504, to give suit for his lands of Hoddam, Langrics and Wauchope. In 1505 he was hanged at Dumfries for the murder of Bartholomew Glendinning and his brother Simon. Bartholomew was the local Sheriff on official business to 'poind' a third of the lands at the insistence of Margaret, widow of his father, John Lindsay. Thereafter his goods and lands were forfeited, although Wauchope was recovered by the family shortly afterwards. The lands in Ewesdale appear to have included Meikledale, Arkleton, Terrona, Flask, Howgill, Glen-divan, Sorbie, Burngrains, Bush, Bliss and Wrae. John (15th/16th C.) listed in a letter of remission of 1510 for assisting rebels. He is named along with David Scott of Galalaw, plus John and Walter Scott. John (17th C.) among the men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was a tenant in 'Spittal-lands'. Patrick (1566–1644) son of John, related to the Lindsay's of Edzell in Angus. He was minister of Guthrie near Arbroath, and then St. Vigeans. He attended several General Assemblies, and was a strong supporter of the episcopal views of James VI. He became Bishop of Ross in 1613 and then Archbishop of Glasgow in 1633. He must have temporarily held the superiority of lands in Minto, since in 1634 he gave a charter of confirmation for Barnhills to William Bennet. However, in 1638 he was disposed for urging his presbyters to use the 'New Service Book', and although ill he escaped to England and died in poverty in York. He was the last Bishop until the Restoration. Sir Simon of Arthuret (13th/14th C.) son of Sir John, Lord Chamberlain, who was the first of the Lindsay's to be granted lands in Wauchopedale. He is recorded in English documents of 1278/9 and 1281/2. He was appointed Captain of Eskdale by Edward I in 1298. His brother Sir Philip had fought with Edward against the Scots, but went over to Bruce's side at Bannockburn. He himself was powerful on the English side, being effectively Warden of the Western Marches. In 1300 he was appointed as Keeper of the late John Wake's lands of Liddel and Hermitage, separately referred to as 'the castles of Lydel and Ermitage-Soules' and 'the castle of Hermitage, the mote of Lydel, and the lands of the valley of Lydel both in England and Scotland belonging to the late John Wake; this probably refers to the early castles of Liddel Strength and Hermitage. But he must only have held this position for a few years. He became a prisoner after Bannockburn and forfeited all his lands etc. However, his son Sir John received a charter of Wauchope from the King in 1321. His descendants held the lands until the end of the 17th century, and claimed to be the oldest representatives of the Lindsay Clan. Sir William (14th C.) granted lands including those of Borthwickshiels in the 4th year of the reign of Robert II (i.e. c.1375), the lands having been resigned by Laurence Abernethy. It is unclear which William he was, possibly William of Abercorn and... the Byres, or William of Rosie and Logie. It is also unclear if the family ever had a direct connection with the Borthwick valley. In the 10th year of Robert II there was a confirming charter from James of Lindsay (presumably a relative) to him for the lands of Chamberlain Newton. Sir William of the Byres (d.1414) son of Sir William and Christiana Mure. He was granted lands in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, including Stouslie and Groundistone, by King David II ‘through forfeiture of certain lieges’. In an undated charter (probably around 1390, based on the witnesses) he granted Stouslie and part of Groundistone to his son Andrew, while part had previously been infested to William Gourlay. He was also recorded as superior of the lands of Borthwickshiel. He married Christiana, daughter of Sir William Keith. He was succeeded by his son John, who was 1st Lord Lindsay of the Byres. William of Garmilton (d.bef. 1468) resigned the lands of ‘Stowislee’ (i.e. Stouslie) in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton to John Turnbull. His relative John Lord of the Byres was Baron of Chamberlain Newton at the time. William (18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1724 he married Agnes Armstrong, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Adam (b.1728) and William (b.1732). Rev. William (b.1876) born in Coatbridge, he graduated in 1901 and became assistant minister at Shettleston and South Leith. He then became minister of St. John’s in Hawick and the ‘Dandie Dinmont’ (i.e. Davidson) family from Liddesdale. The teacher who made the school so well-known was Rev. James Russell). This included Christian Scott from Todshawhaugh and Clement, Tom Brown from the Tower Inn in Hawick and the ‘Dandie Dinmont’ family from Liddesdale. The teacher who made the school so well-known was James Scott, who served there 1784–1818. He took over from Alexander (‘Sandy’) Wilson.

Lindsay’s Corner (lin-zeez-kör-nur) n. blind corner in Denholm, on the way into the village from Hawick. A shop there was run by the Lindsay family for most of the 20th century, first as a bakers and then a grocers. The business also used to have a van, which drove around the rural areas, this being particularly during WWII. Although the shop was sold in the 1990s, the popular name is still used.

Lineart Moss (li-nur-mos) n. boggy area on Hawick Common near Pilmuir farm, also called ‘St. Leonard’s Moss’. It was mentioned in descriptions of the Common in the dispositions given in 1767, where it is also referred to as ‘the Lin- cart’ (one name is presumably a corruption of the other).

lineen (li-neen) n., arch. a lining, an inside cover, ‘A guid leineen = a satisfying meal’ [ECS].

linen (li-nin) n. a cloth made from thread obtained from the fibres of the flax plant. In the 18th century and before, it was common for everyone to have their own small plot of flax or ‘lint’, which they would ‘swingle’ and ‘heckle’ to produce linen thread to weave into clothing. Linen weaving was formerly known at Has- sendean, Northhouse, Newbigging, Hawick Shiel and Denholm, among other places. There was also some linen industry in Hawick itself, with a weaving shop manufacturing linen checks from about the middle of the 18th century. A little later there was a factory making ‘inkle’ (or linen tapes), before hosiery took over. The cloth came in either the rawer green form, or was bleached and sold particularly at St. Boswells Fair. The last weavers of linen in the Borders were still active up until about the 1830s in the St. Boswells area (see also lining).

Linfit (lin-fit) n. former school in Yarrow Water, situated near the church in the settlement of Yarrow. The school had a good reputation and had many boarders in the early 1800s, with as many as 100 pupils (as describe by Rev. James Russell). This included Christian Scott from Todshawhaugh and Clement, Tom Brown from the Tower Inn in Hawick and the ‘Dandie Dinmont’ family from Liddesdale. The teacher who made the school so well-known was James Scott, who served there 1784–1818. He took over from Alexander (‘Sandy’) Wilson.

ling (ling) n., poet. leather – ‘Ho! For the blades of Harden. Ho! for the pikes that cross. Ho! For the king of lance and ling – A Scott on the Et- trick moss!’ [WHO], ‘. . . He heard the whirr of the grous’s wing And the drone of a bee as it lit on the ling’ [WHO], ‘Whaur the mists on the black hills hing, And the broon burns that, oot o’ the ling, The scent o’ the peat moss bring’ [WL], another species of sedge, e.g. hare-tail cotton-grass or deer’s-hair moss – ‘Alas! my muse she scarce can sing, She’s sapless as winter ling’ [JoHa].

Linglie (ling-kee) n. former farm over the Ettrick to the north of Selkirk and the name of the road there, as well as a nearby hill containing a linear earthwork. It was long owned by the Burgh of Selkirk. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1708 (note that it may sometimes be confused with Singlie).

Linhope (li-nup, lin-hop) n. farm between Teviothead and Mosspaul, once owned by William Aitchison, who was long involved in local farmers groups. It was listed along with Frostylee and Phaup in the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and in the marriage contract of Anne Scott of Buccleuch in 1663; these were united with lands in Wilton and others into ‘the tenement of Blackgraine’. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when that superiourity was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. James Grieve was tenant of the Duchess of Buccleuch there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718 when it covered 2669 acres and was bounded by Phaup, Skelfhill, Gorrenberry, Billhope, Carewoodrig, Burnfoot in Ewes, Eweslees, Lymiecleuch and Binks. William Little was there in 1724. John Elliot was there in 1733. It was leased from the Buccleuch Estates to John Elliot (of Borthwickbrae) and Walter Grieve (of Bransholme Park) in 1744. James Dickson was there in 1786. William Aitchison was recorded as farmer there in at least 1792-97, with William Grieve as a herd at the same time. William Little was shepherd there in 1861. The ‘Horn Brig’ lies just to the north, and on the hillsides near here can be seen the hollowed-out tracks of the old ‘Read Roads’. It is also here that the route of the Mosspaul ride-out comes down the hill to meet the main road – ‘...braw, braw braes o’ Linhope and lofty Mosspaul’ [T], ‘Little know you of our moss troopers’ might; Linhope and Sorbie true, Tundhope and Milburn too, Gentle in manner, but lions in fight’ [ES], ‘The lasses o’ Lin’op are braw, An’ them o’ Mosspaul they are bonnie; There’s Haz’lop an’ Fa’dash an’ a’, Aul’ Commonside yields na to mony’ [JoHa], ‘The lark ascends from Linhope’s verdant sward ...’ [IWS] (the name derives from Old English ‘hlynn hop’, meaning ‘the valley with the waterfall’; the name appears in 1604 as ‘Lennop’, ‘Lindhope’ in 1653, ‘Lenhop’ in 1661 and 1663, ‘Linhopie’ in 1687, then ‘Linhoip’, achieving its modern form by the end of the 17th century, but being ‘Linehope’ in 1718).

Linhope Braeheid (li-nup-brä-heed) n. former farmstead just south of Linhope, to the east of the A7. George Scott was shepherd there in 1851 and John Cairns in 1861.

Linhope Grain (li-nup-grän) n. former name for the small streams east of Linhope, which form the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn.

lining (li-ning) n., arch. linen, formerly used to make shirts and undergarments – ‘...28s. Scots for 3½ ells of sarking lyning’ [BR1638] (many spelling variants exist; see also linen).

link (lingk) v., arch. to move with speed, skip, trip along, walk briskly – ‘A the day fu’ blithe and cheerie, I gaed linkin’ but and ben!’ [JT], ‘...And they a gang a’ linkin’ To seek their Hogmanay’ [JT], ‘In the bitter back end He will link doun the glen ...’ [WL].

Linlithgow (lin-lith-gō) n. town in West Lothian, between Edinburgh and Grangemouth, one of the 4 Scottish Burghs created by David I. They have been riding their marches since at least 1541. The festival is now held on the first Tuesday after the second Thursday in June, involves riding to Blackness, having a procession three times round the Cross, and has reciprocal ties with Lanark’s festival. Population (1991) 11,866.

Linlithgow (lin-lith-gō) n. James (16th C.) listed as a ‘grief’ (i.e. grieve) in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when he was owed for his fee. It is unclear whether or not he was local. William (15th/16th C.) listed in 1526 among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is given as ‘Linlithqw’.

Linlithgow measure (lin-lith-gō-me-shur) n., arch. standard for measuring the capacity of dry goods, based on a standard of the boll kept in Linlithgow. This was used in Scotland from 1661, with the standard being about 145 litres for wheat, beans and meal, but about 212 litres for barley, oats and malt.

linn (lin) n. a waterfall, pool at the foot of one – ‘And now young Keeldar reach’d the stream, Above the foamy lin; The Border lances round him gleam, And force the warrior in’ [JL], ‘The only tongue that they might hear Was the lyme’s deep murmuring fa’’ [JTe], ‘The rill is now a raging flood, And roars adown the craggie linn’ [JTe], ‘...But aye, as yet, escap’d that linn Owre whilk sae mony fa’s’ [JoHa], ‘The burnie loups, wi’ fitfu’ din, Adown the linn sae craggie’ [HSR], ‘The wee waterfa’ or the fifty-feet linn’ [HSR], ‘The brown trout lay at the leap o’ the linn Oaring the stream with a lazy fin’ [WHO], ‘...Doon their ain romantic linn Is the fairst spot o’ a’’ [TK], a steep ravine, narrow gorge – ‘Lyn, two opposite contiguous cliffs or heughs covered with brushwood’ [JaS], ‘...That forms the linn where hazels twine With woodbine and with thorn’ [JJW] (from Old English; also spelled ‘lin’, ‘lynn’ and ‘lyne’; the former meaning occurs in place names such as ‘Robert’s Linn’, ‘Hawkhass Linn’ and ‘Penton Linns’, while the latter occurs in e.g. the ‘Leap Linns’, ‘Lynnwood’).

lint (lin, lint) n., arch. flax, a small plant with blue flowers, Linum usitatissimum, formerly grown for its fibrous stems, which were prepared to make linen. Used either as animal fodder or for flax prepared for spinning. Formerly it was much grown around Hawick, with even each hind having his own plot. In the early 19th century a ploughman in Hobkirk Parish received a cupful of lint seed as part of his payment in kind. The cultivation of the plants and preparation of the lint was once a very labour intensive operation, with the stalks lying ‘nine nights’ in a pond or pit of water, then using a ‘break’ (or ‘break’) to split the fibres, followed by the ‘swinging’ – ‘...Two stones of lint £7’ [BR1639], ‘Item whatsoever person that steillis any of their neighbours peittis, turffis, green kail, corne, lint, hemp, ...’ [BR1640], ‘A party is fined for steeping lint in Teviot at the yard foots’ [JW1702] (from Mediaeval English, the word survives in Linthill near Lilliesleaf, Linthaughlee near Jedburgh, Linthaugha near Ashkirk, Lint Haughs near Denholm, and Lintdub Knowes near Harden).

Lintalee (lin-tu-lee) n. house about a mile south of Jedburgh on the banks of the Jed Water and formerly in the Jed Forest. It was residence of Sir James Douglas from around 1316 when he was Warden of the Marches. It is also the site of a battle where Douglas’ men defeated those of the Earl of Arundel in the Spring of 1317. Some were ambushed using intertwined birch branches in a narrow pass, perhaps at the Willowford Burn, where Sir Thomas of Richmont was killed. Another English group under a priest named Ellis was discovered feasting near Lintalee itself and also defeated. The Englishmen who escaped with tales of defeat convinced Arundel to turn his huge army South again. The manor house there continued to be used by the Lords of Jedforest into the 15th century. In 1457 it was given for the use of Andrew Ker of Cessford, Bailie of the Lordship. William Ker was recorded there in 1494/5. It was valued at 25 shillings in 1538 and also 1541, when the tenant was Ralph Ker. John Douglas was tenant of the Earl of Angus there in 1617, after the removal of James Ker. It was owned by the Marquis of Douglas in 1643 and 1678, when valued at £160. In 1694 it ‘Mr Thomas Sheill’ was taxed for having 10 heartls at the house there; this seems likely to have been the same man who was minister at Robertson Kirk. John Turner paid tax for 21 windows there in 1748. Archibald Douglas of Douglas was recorded as... owner in 1788 (also known as ‘Linthaughlee’, it is ‘Lintoshalchlie’ in 1439, ‘Lintole’ in 1457, ‘Linthaughlee’ in 1493, ‘Lintole’ in 1517, ‘Lintolee’ in 1539, ‘Lintole’ in 1541, ‘Lintillie’ in 1617, and ‘Linthaughlie’ and ‘linthaughlie’ in 1694; it is ‘Lynthalie’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the name is probably just ‘the clearing where flax grows’).

lint-brake (lin’-bræk) n., arch. a flax-breaking instrument – ‘Lint-brake. An instrument used for breaking or softening flax, in place of the fluted rollers of the flax-mill, previous to the operation of rubbing and swinging, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (cf. lint-breek).

Lintdub Knowes (lin’-dub-nowz) n. hilly area just to the north of Harden House (the name is presumably from a marshy area where flax once grew).

Lintdykes (lin’-díks) n. former place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded as ‘Lindedikes’ in the early 13th century when it was part of a grant from Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey. The lands had previously been held in dowry by Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey.

lint-fever (lin’-fee-var) n., arch. former name for a condition that people sometimes got when they were first involved in ‘swingling’ lint – ‘The first attempt at swingling was often accompanied by an illness called the Lint-fever, supposed tobe owing to the dust entering the nostrils and eyes’ [JAHM].

Linthaugh (lin’-hawf) n. former name for an area near the river in Denholm, where flax was steeped in the 18th century. It probably refers to the flat piece of land lying to the west of the mouth of the Dean Burn (also ‘Lint Haughs’).

Lintinhaa (lin-tin-haw) n. lintinhall, former farmstead in roughly the same location as Stintyknowe (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, and given the similarity of names, possibly an error).

Lintobank (lin’-u-bawngk) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, near Riddell. Robert Wilson was recorded there in 1581/2. The name appears as ‘Lintobank tune Riddell nuncupate’ in 1602 and appears to have replaced the earlier ‘Eschetho’. In 1636 it was a 4-pound land when inherited by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk and was still a 4-pound land when inherited by Sir John Riddell in 1669 (it was ‘Lynthopbank’ in 1581/2).

Linton (lin’-in, lin-tin) n. village and parish in east Roxburghshire on the Kale Water, north of Morebattle, famous for its Norman Church and legendary ‘worm’ (which, sadly only dates to the 17th century). The lands there were owned by the Somervilles in the early 15th century and by the Kers of Linton in the 16th and 17th centuries. An account of the parish was written by A.O. Mackie and M.J.H. Robson in 1960 – ‘The wode Laird of Laristone Slew the worm of Worne’s Glen, And

Lisle (li-ul) n. Robert (18th C.) from Acton in Northumberland. He purchased the Stonedge estate from William (or perhaps Thomas) Scott in the mid-1700s. However, he only paid the first installment, with the final settlement not taking place during the lifetime of the vendor. He sold it again to James Chisholme in 1793. Thomas Scott of Bonchester was factor for him for a while. In 1788 (and continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he is listed as owner of the ‘Easter Division of Stonedge and Howa’ (excluding the parts sold to Elliot of Woollee), as well as the Wester Division, his lands being valued at £1191 2s 10d in 1788 (and £1187 14s 5d in 1811). By 1875 Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee owned half of Langraw ‘in name of Robert Lisle’ (also written ‘Lyle’).

Lithgow (lith-gow) n. Alexander (18th C.) recorded as ‘Mr’ in 1741 when he witnessed a baptism for workman William Graham in Hawick in 1741. He may have been son of Rev. Robert. Andrew (17th/18th C.) excise officer in Hawick. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Session for being involved in late night drunkenness at Thomas Huggan’s house. He apparently went to break up the fight between Huggan and William Oliver. He was witness to the ‘irregular marriage’ of fellow excise officer Thomas Hume of Hawick in 1718. Helen (17th/18th C.) sister of Rev. Robert of Ashkirk and daughter of Alexander of Drygrange. She is said to have married James Anderson (although this could be confusion with a later James Henderson) and had 3 children: Thomas; John; and Jean, who married George Thorburn, smith in Ashkirk, whose grand-daughter married John Eckford, hosier in Hawick. Her nephew Hector Lithgow left a small fortune, which Eckford spent his life trying to prove a claim to. Rev. John (b.c.1620) son of Thomas, porterion at Redpath, Earlston and Isobel Haliburton. He moved from a charge in Ireland some time before 1646 to become minister at Ewes Kirk. In 1664 he refused to conform to Episcopacy and was deprived of his living. This happened ostentatiously, with the messenger delivering the Act of Suspension right after the Sunday sermon with the congregation still present. He moved to his property at Redpath near Leaderfoot (near where another ousted minister, Henry Erskine, lived). He continued to preach at conventicles and in 1682 was fined 5000 merks and sentenced to imprisonment on the Bass Rock. However, he escaped this harsh punishment, on the promise of leaving the country, probably residing in England. He returned to Ewes in 1689 after the Revolution, was restored by Act of Parliament in 1690 and was also a member of the Assembly. He retired to Redpath in 1694. He married firstly Isobel Weir and secondly Isobel Scott, widow of James Johnstone of Westerraw. His children included: Thomas, with whom he owned land at Bodisbeck; and Janet, who married Nichol Elliot of Unthank. Miss M. (19th C.) assistant teacher in Newcastle in the 1860s. Rev. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Westside. He married Helen Murray in 1840 and their children included William, Thomas, Euphemia, James, Agnes, Isabella, Robert, John and George. John (19th C.) married Jessie Jardine in Hawick Parish in 1852. John (19th C.) married Jane Fall in Hawick Parish in 1853. John (b.c.1834) from Langholm, he lived in Hawick. He was a frame worker and lived at 14 Loan. In 1866 he married Janet, daughter of James Ekron and Margaret Thomson. Their children included: Margaret (1866–1941), who married William Beattie; George (1869–1957), who married Margaret Deans; Helen Reid (b.1871), who married George Proudfoot; James Ekron (1873–1961); and Thomas (b.1878). Matthew (16th C.) tenant in Lairhope in 1576, when he and Adam Warwick in ‘Braidley’ were pledged to the Privy Council not to be involved in thieving. The sureties were Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. He was declared a fugitive in 1578/9 for continuing to commit crimes. Matthew (18th/19th C.) owner of De mainlyholm (along with Robert Pott) according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. Mr. (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 when he was in the Tolbooth in Hawick. Scott of Buccleuch, the Sheriff of Teviotdale and Riddell of that Ilk were appointed to a commission to try him. His crimes (and forename) are unspecified. Mrs. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Burnfoot in Ewesdale on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. She was taxed for 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. She also paid the dog and clock taxes at Burnfoot in 1797. She was widow of John, who was listed there in 1792. Robert (17th C.) local man who married Bessie Murray. Their children Margaret (b.1648) and James (b.1650) were baptised in Hawick and their daughter Malie in Ashkirk in 1652. The witnesses in 1648 were Thomas Shiel and William Grieve and in 1652 were James Hastie and John Armstrong. Robert (18th C.) farmer in Yethouse in Liddesdale, recorded in 1748. Robert (1751/2–1823) died at Timmisburn. He married Janet Murray, who died at ‘Rashill’ in 1830, aged 71. Their children included: Margaret (1792/3–1812); James (1795/6–1828), who died at Greens; and 2 children who died in infancy. Robert (1760/1–1802) died at Nether Larriston. His wife was Mary Scott and their children included: Isabella (1790/1–1808); and Thomas (1793/4–1820). They are buried in Etterton Cemetery. Simon of Meikledale (14th/15th C.) sometimes considered to be the first chief of his clan. In 1426 he had a charter confirmed by James I of an earlier grant by Robert, Duke of Albany. This was for the lands of ‘Senbigill’, ‘Meikladel’, ‘Kirkton’, ‘Sorbi’, ‘le Miharland’, and ‘le Pullis’ in the barony of ‘Allarynock’ which had been resigned by Alexander Fraser of Ewesdale. He is thus be one of the earliest known Lairds in Ewesdale. Simon of Meikledale (16th C.) descendant of the earlier Simon. In 1499 he witnessed the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1537 he had a charter of the lands of Meikledale in the valley of Eves, The charter was witnessed by William Little, Burgess of Edinburgh and the following sasine by Andrew and Edward Little; these may have been relatives. Simon of Meikledale (16th C.) presumably son or grandson of the previous Simon. He is recorded in the comprehensive remission of 1585 for men of Dumfriesshire whose superior was Lord Maxwell (perhaps related to the raid on Stirling). He is listed as ‘Sim Lilill, laird of Mekill, Daill’ and a large number of other Littles also appear on the list. Simon (b.1799/1800) from Westerkirk, son of Thomas, he was educated at Kirkton and Edinburgh. He was Schoolmaster at Teviothead from 1818 (effectively succeeding Tom Jenkins). He also acted as Registrar for the area. He was still recorded at Teviothead Schoolhouse in 1861. His wife was Helen and their children included Betsy, William and Isobella. He is buried in Teviothead cemetery, along with an infant child who died in 1832 (as well as Betty Little, 2nd wife of David Scott from Thornhill). He was probably related to the Kirkton Schoolmaster. He was still alive in 1871. Simon (b.1842) born at Kirkton, son of Thomas, schoolmaster at Kirkton, with. his mother being Margaret Turnbull. He was ordained minister of Ballantrae and died unmarried at Lanark Manse. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Langhope in 1579 when he was listed among the debtors to James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. Thomas of Meikledale (16th/17th C.) broke out of Selkirk jail in 1625, along with Robert Scott of Thistlestane, Gavin Elliot of Brugh and George Davidson of Kames. Thomas (d.1673) son of the Laird of Meikledale. His gravestone was once readable in Ewes Kirkyard. Thomas (18th C.) tenant in Rashiegrain. He married Isabel Beattie. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Helen (b.1740); and Betty (b.1743). He may be the Thomas who hired the Hawick mortcloth twice in 1758. Thomas (d.1799) weaver in Hawick whose death is recorded. Thomas (b.1802/3) probably son of Thomas, he was master of Kirktoun School from 1834. He was educated at Kirkton and in Edinburgh. He was recorded there in Pigot’s 1837 directory and remained schoolmaster until the 1860s. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish. In 1861 he presented the stone slab, which had been the stump of repentance from Kirkton Kirk, to the Museum. He may be the Thomas who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Thomas; William T.; Simon, who was minister of Ballantrae; and Isabella. Thomas (b.1812/3) from Middlebie, he was a shepherd at Hislop in 1861. His wife was Mary. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpsley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautions for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘servitor to Walter Laing clerk to ye Duchess of Buccleugh, (and servitor to ye sd Walter tenant of Park)’ in 1716 when he married Jenet Scoon (daughter to a deceased Scoon). He was recorded in (Branxholme) Park in 1719. His wife’s name was also recorded as ‘Mary’ and ‘Margaret’ (although this seems likely to all be the same couple), with children: Margaret (b.1717); Margaret (again, b.1719); Jean (b.1721); and an unnamed child (b.1725). The witnesses in 1719 were James Henry and Robert Scoon in Branxholme Town (who was probably related to his wife). Walter (18th C.) tenant in Denholm, recorded in 1745 and 1749. He married Janet Spinnie (or Spindie) and their children included: Ann (b.1743); Betty (b.1745); Agnes (b.1747); an unnamed child (b.1749); John (b.1752); and Isabel (b.1756). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of London. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence probably had a local connection. Walter (19th C.) carrier in Newcastleton. In 1852 he was recorded running a weekly service to Nether-Oakshaw, presumably transporting coals from the mine there. William (15th C.) recorded in Thornycleuch in 1494/5 when his son-in-law John Scott was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aine in Selkirk. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘of Tounhead’ when he leased half of ‘Tounhead’ to James Runcement, ‘now in Hassendean’. He is recorded in a bond of 1699 as ‘of Hassintounhead’ along with his wife Margaret Gray when he borrowed one thousand pounds from Henry Leck. In 1703 he sold the lands of Hassendean Townhead to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and also borrowed money from James Gray of Nether Auncrum (which he seems to have had difficulty repaying). Henry Leck (tenant in ‘Stodrige’) tried to recover his debt in 1701/2 and this may have been done by 1710, since he recovered his tenancy rights to Hassendean Townhead. In 1705 a bill was sent to him by Gideon Scott of Highchester, via Bailie Robert Hardie of Hawick, then passed on to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. Thomas of Knowe paid his teinds for Townhead in 1705, according to a discharge by Gideon Scott of Falnash (the Duchess’ Chamberlain). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Side. He was listed there in the 1694 Hearth Tax records. In 1707 he was called before the Castleton Kirk Session for making a ‘penny wedding’. He ‘promised that he should not be troublesome about any such thing in future’ and was dismissed to pay a fine to the civil magistrate! William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Gray and their children included: Janet (b.1709); Jean (b.1713); and John (b.1715). William (18th C.) resident at Linhope in 1725 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Bunyan and their children included Margaret (b.1749) and probably William (b.1746). William (18th C.) tenant in Denholm in 1761. He is probably the William who married Isabel Scott and whose children, baptised in Cavers, included James (b.1756), William (b.1761) and Archibald (b.1769). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a ‘farrier’ (or perhaps ‘farmer’) in 1789 when he witnessed a baptism for Mark Sutherland. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Clerk to Mr. Nixon Merchant’ in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed on the ballot in place of John Henderson, labourer, who was considered a deserter. In 1799 he was listed among those on the 1797 ballot who were now absent, being ‘Mercht. now in London’. William (18th/19th C.) mason in Denholm. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection, and may have been related to Charles, also of London. William (b.c.1790) born in Westerkirk, Dumfriesshire, when young he worked as a ploughman at a farm near Birneyknowe. In 1813 he assisted Capt. Walter Scott of Wauchope in catching a murderer (as recounted in Lang’s ‘Stories of the Border Marches’). Scott enlisted the ploughman’s help when he caught up with the 6-foot Irishman (called John Linnichan or Henry Macgraw) along this former high road from Hawick to Newcastle. He had attacked and robbed John Macdonald, a travelling merchant from Dumfriesshire who was apparently 101 years old. The chase ended on ‘High Tofts Hill’, the murderer was apprehended, walked back to Kirkton, then taken by cart to Hawick and on to Jedburgh for trial. William was apparently presented with a baton and excused from paying taxes for the rest of his life. He was later farmer for a while at Salenside. In 1841 he was living at Clerklands and in 1851 was a labourer at ‘Newtonmoor’ in Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Greig and their children included Archibald, John, James, Violet I. and Daniel C. He could be the William from Denholm who won 2 leaping events at the 1835 Common Riding Games. William (b.1833/4) from Ashkirk, he was a shepherd at Linhope in 1861. William (19th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton roughly from the 1840s to the 1860s. His wife was called Mary. William (19th/20th C.) son of James of Carls Gill and Janet Keir. His mother was sister of William Keir of Whithaugh. He inherited Whithaugh from his uncle and sold it in 1924 (former pronunciation as in ‘Leitle’; also spelled ‘Litle’, ‘Litil’, ‘Littel’, ‘Littill’, ‘Litil’, ‘Lytil’, ‘Lytill’, ‘Lytte’, ‘Lyttle’, etc. in older records).

Little Cavers (lì-ul-kā-vurz) n. small house on the side road between Honeyburn and Ashybank. It has long been coloured pink, and may have once had a small hamlet around it. The name may come from the former name for Kirkton Parish, or have simply developed as an epithet for a hamlet near the main village of Cavers. In 1684 Adam Leyden, William Laidlaw and Andrew Riddell, 3 tenants of the farm there, were listed as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It was the site for the parish school in the 19th century, ??.
18th century as Denholm grew, so that a location was required between Denholm and Cavers. However, the school moved to Denholm Green in about 1802 and the building became a residence (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the little cloth (thin-li'-ul-kloth) n. the second-best funerary cloth, in distinction to the main ‘mortcloth’ – ‘Pay’d for the Mortcloath and Little Cloath helping’ [PR].

Little Corbie Sike (li'-ul-kor-bee-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Aldery Sike and then Thorlieshope Burn. It runs parallel to Muckle Corbie Sike.

Little Cote (li'-ul-kot'o) n. name for former farm near Littlecote Hill in Cavers Parish. Adam Huntly was tenant in 1694 and William Blyth in 1776. John Johnstone was there in 1791, Thomas Scott was tenant in 1837 and Robert Scott was farmer in 1851. The Armstrong brothers farmed it in the mid-20th century. The name was essentially replaced with the late Eastcote, although the earlier farm may have been to the southwest of the moden Eastcote. The earlier farm of ‘Muckle Cote’ may have been closer to the modern West Cote. There is a possible old enclosure on Littlecote Hill, which could be associated with the former farmstead – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Wortchar, Wormston and Cavers Knowes’ [T] (it was ‘Littlecoatt’ in 1694 and ‘Lyttle cote’ in 1776).

Little Dan (li'-ul-dawm) n. nickname of the 19th century – ‘Kinyly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’ [HI].

Little Dean (li'-ul-deen) n. former farm near Little Cavers. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters’ sermons. It was situated near the plantation still known as Little Dean, which flanks the Honey Burn, just west of Denholm Dean.

Littledean (li'-ul-deen) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, located on the left-hand side of the road between Midshiels and Hassendenburn. The Mather, Brydon and Milne families lived there in 1841 (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, it is ‘Littleden’ in 1841).

Littledean (li'-ul-deen) n. ruined 15th century tower in Maxton Parish overlooking the banks of the Tweed, once the home of the Kers. Duns Scottus may have been born here about 1265. The lands were possessed by Rutherfords in the 17th century. There is much local folklore about unpleasant occupiers and ghosts. Gen. Ker of Littledean was ruined fighting a legal battle in the early years of the 19th century to establish his claim as heir to the Kers of Cessford and hence to the Dukedom of Roxburghe. The male line of Kers of Littledean ended with the death of Walter Ker in 1841. This family have a burial vault at Maxton and used the motto ‘Pro Patria Periclitor’. The lands were later part of the estates of Lord Polwarth (the origin of the name is probably just Old English for ‘the little valley’; it is first recorded as ‘litildene’ in 1502; it is ‘Little-dene’ in 1547, ‘Litildane’ in 1547/8, ‘Littilden’ in 1560, ‘Littill Dane’ in 1574, ‘Litilden’ in 1578/9, ‘Lytildene’ in 1582 and occurs as ‘Littildernn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

little-denner (li'-ul-de-nur) n., arch. breakfast – ‘Little-dinner, A morsel taken in the morning before going to work, Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

Little Drinkstone (li'-ul-drinjek-stin) n. former name for lands near Drinkstone. In 1550/1 Robert, son and heir of Adam Scott of ‘Nethirmannis of Hassenden’ was infefted by Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule in the ‘2½ merklands of Litill Dryngstoun’ in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. There followed a letter of reversion by John Scott of Drinkstone in favour of Robert Scott ‘in Hassendenburn’ of the same lands on payment of £70 Scots in 1566. In 1606 Walter Scott of Alton was served heir to his father Adam’s lands of ‘Litill Dombstoun’ in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, which is presumably a transcription error for Little Drinkstone.

the Little End (thin-li'-ul-end) n. informal name for part of the old school on Orrock Place, where the younger children were taught.

Little France (li'-ul-frans) n. name for an area between the Siltrig and the old railway line just north of Shankend farm. Aerial photography has identified the outlines of rig lines, a small enclosure and the foundations of former buildings (the origin is obscure; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Little Gledstane (li'-ul-gled-stân) n. nickname for one of the local Gledstains family of Cocklaw Castle, who took part in the Raid of the Redeswire. This was probably James of Cocklaw, 12th of that Ilk, the nickname presumably suggesting that he was short. There was also a field in Rulewater with the same name, but whether it was connected is uncertain – ‘The laird Watt did well indeed, His friends stude stoutly by himsell; With little Gledstade, gude in need, For Greitin kendna gude be ill’ [T].
Little Gledstains

Little Gledstains (li-ul-gled-stänz) n. former name for some lands which were part of the Barony of Feu-Rule in the Rule valley. There is presumably some connection with the Gledstains family and perhaps with the local hero of the Raid of the Redeswire in particular, but no details are known. The lands lay between those of Hobbsburn and Langraw (precisely where is uncertain, since these farms were once of considerable extent) and were said to have formerly been a Lairdiship. It is possible that Adam Scott of ‘Gledstanis’ recorded in 1581 was Laird there. Robert Elliot ‘in Gledstaines’ was removed from the lands by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in 1610. The lands were part of the Stobs estate in the late 17th century, and were included in the contract where rental income went to the widow of Sir Gilbert Elliott and her surviving children. This is probably the ‘Glestaines’ where Thomas Oliver was farmer in 1758. The old house was still in existence in 1775, having thick walls and iron bars on the small windows; part of the building materials were incorporated into the garden house at Hobbsburn (it is ‘Littilglaistaines’ in 1562, ‘Litle Gledstaines’ in 1677 and ‘Little Glaidstanes’ in 1693).

the Little Gover (thu-li*-ul-gu-vur) n. nickname, probably from the 19th century, and possibly related to Johnnie the Gover – ‘Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].

Little Harden Burn (li-ul-hawr-din-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Harden Hill and joins Harden Burn to the east of old Castleton.

Little Hassendean (li-ul-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for Westerhouses in the Parish of Hassendean, so-called in 1582.

Little Haugh (li-ul-hawf) n. another name for the Wee Haugh.

little-hoose (li-ul-hoos) n., arch. a toilet, water-closet.

little lee (li-ul-lee) n., poet. little peace – ‘Aft has he beat your slough-hounds back And set yourselves at little lee. Fala, &c.’ [CPM].

Little Rulewud

the Little Muir (thu-li*-ul-mewr) n. former name for a farmstead or area near Closses, at the edge of Hawick Moor. It was mentioned in 1766 in the description of 9 small pieces of land that were let in order to try to prevent encroachment on the Common by neighbouring tenants.

Little Newton (li-ul-new-in) n. probably part of the farm of Newton in Bedrule Parish. Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of ‘littill newtoun’ is recorded in 1502. The farm was burned by Simon Armstrong and Clement Crozier and their men, for which they were pardoned in 1531/2. John Grahamslaw of Littill Newtoun’ is recorded in 1572/3. William and George ‘Grimslay’, sons of the deceased Harry of ‘Little Newtoun’, were held for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Hallrule in 1606.

Little Park (li-ul-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, probably the farm of Castleton Park, with the ‘Little’ used to distinguish it from the larger holding of Park (or ‘Copshaw Park’) to the south. William Scott was tenant there in 1694, according to the Horse Tax rolls, with Archibald Nixon also listed as a resident (it is ‘Littill park’ in 1694 and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Little Rulewud (li-ul-rool-wud) n. former name for some lands near Denholm, possibly adjacent to those of Rulewud itself. It has also been suggested that it was an old name for Denholm Dean. In the reign of David I (1329–71) there is a Crown confirmation of these lands in the barony of Cavers to Thomas of Cranston. The lands probably once belonged to the family of Rule. This was confirmed again in about 1380, with the lands then being referred to as being ‘near Denum’. In 1458/9 the lands are among those for which Thomas Cranston of that Ilk had a discharge with Douglas of Cavers for rentals. The lands of ‘Litilrulwod, with tower thereof’ are listed among those in the Barony of Cavers in 1511 and granted to Sir William Cranston of that Ilk in the following year and still held by John Cranston according to a discharge of 1574. The ‘40 shilling land of Roulwoode parva alias tower’ was passed from John, Lord Cranston to his nephew William in 1636. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698; it is described as having a wood and tower, called the lands of ‘Tour’, near the town of Denholm. In modern times the name has been given to a cottage to the east of Denholm.
Little Saut Haa

Little Saut Haa (li’-ul-saw’-haw, -sawl’-hal) n. Little Salt Hall, house built above Langlands Road in 1937, near the former Salt Hall. It was designed by Kathleen Veitch and probably built for teacher William Redpath. It is a grade C listed building. The word ‘Little’ was later removed from the house’s name.

the Little Shop see the Wee Shop

Little Steil (li’-ul-steel) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1541 rental roll as ‘Littlesteil’. They were valued at 6 shillings and tenanted by Bartholomew Nixon (possibly related to Stells or the Steel).

Little Stiches (li’-ul-stir-cheez) n. former name for a place near Stiches. It is mentioned in the Wilton Session records for 1703.

Little Sundi (li’-ul-sum-di) n., arch. the day before Communion Sunday, being a fast day, a fast day in general.

Little Tudhope Hill (li’-ul-tu-dup-hil) n. hill just to the north-west of Tudhope Hill, on the boundary between Rosburghshire and Dumfriesshire. It reaches a height of 483 m.

Little Warrington Sike (li’-ul-waw-rin’-in-sik) n. stream in Castleton Parish, which rises on Larriston Fells and joins Storff Sike and then Great Warrington Sike before running into Larriston Burn.

little wheel (li’-ul-wheel) n., arch. smaller type of spinning wheel, used in Hawick through the 18th and early 19th centuries for flax or hemp spinning – ‘There was presented by Mrs. Hogg, Crumhaugh-hill, a spinning wheel, i.e. the ‘Little Wheel’, formerly used for spinning lint’ [HAST1863] (cf. muckle wheel).

Little Whithaugh (li’-ul-whi-tuf) n. small farm near Whithaugh, to the north-east of Newcastleton. Thomas Mather was tenant there in 1694.

Little Whitlaw (li’-ul-whi’-law) n. name of part of the farm at Whitlaw, lying south of the Flex road, bordering on the old Common. It was next to ‘Meikle Whitlaw’, from which it was separated by the Flex (or Whitlaw) Burn. It was long a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other Buccleuch properties, covering 60 acres and being bounded by the Slitrig, Flex and Hawick Common, with no farmhouse at that time. It was leased (along with Meikle Whitlaw) to Francis Gledstains of Whithlaw in 1692. The tenant at the beginning of the 19th century was James Elliot. The farmer there in 1841 and 1851 was James Knox, when the farm covered 97 acres, and in the 1860s the farmer was James Shiel. The area of this earlier farm is the site of farm buildings of Flex farm.

Livingstone

Livingstone (li-ving-stin) n. Rev. John (1603–72) born in Monyabroch, Stirlingshire, son of Rev. William of Kilsyth and Agnes. He attended Glasgow University from the age of 14 and after graduating had several temporary positions, but turned down presentations to various parishes on account of his religious principles. He preached in Ireland, but was excommunicated and joined a ship bound for America that was forced back in a storm. He signed the National Covenant in 1638 and was one of those charged with presenting it to the Court in London. He was minister at Stranraer for a decade, before being appointed minister of Ancrum in 1648. He was one of the Commissioners to Charles I in 1650, perhaps in the party that travelled to Breda to offer him the Crown. He was appointed by Cromwell in 1654 to recommend ministers to vacant parishes. He attested to the character of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch in 1654. After the Restoration he refused to accept Episcopacy, was banished in 1663 and died in Holland. He wrote an autobiography (not published until 1754), as well as notes on some of his contemporaries, and worked on a translation of the bible into several languages. He was friends with other local ministers, including Rev. James Kerr at Abbotrule, Rev. John Scott at Oxnam, Rev. John Scott at Hawick and Rev. William Elliot at Yarrow. He also associated with Sir William Scott of Harden, Sir Gideon Scott of Highchesters, Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk and several Pringle landowners, as well as Lady Stobs, Lady Newton and Mrs. Elliot of Craigend. He was said to have been the most popular preacher in the Borders. He married Janet Fleming and had at least 15 children, although most died in infancy. His daughter Marion was born in Stranraer in 1642 and married Rev. John Scott of Hawick. His youngest son James went to New York and had descendants who were involved with American Independence. His time at Ancrum is recorded on a stone built into the wall of the Manse garden there. Mary Ann (19th C.) owner of the lands of Coldlaw and Tandlaw according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. Her name is recorded as ‘Mrs. Mary Ann Livingstone or Finlay’. She was presumably the widow of someone called either Livingstone or Finlay, perhaps a descendant of Rev. Robert Scott of Coldhouse. William of Drumry (15th C.) son of Sir Robert, from the Clydebank family. He held the half (probably the eastern half) Barony of Hassendean, according to a sasine of 1467. This was also stated in a ‘letter of reversion’ of 1470, in which Alexander Scott of Howpasley and Abington gave redemption money for Midshields and Appletreehall; it is unclear when he first gained the barony. He was the Lord of Drumry fined in 1493 for non-presence (relating to his lands in Hassendean) at the Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh. He resigned the barony to the King in 1493/4 and it then passed to Alexander, Lord Home. Also in 1493/4 he assigned (with the consent of his son Robert) 3 ‘letters of reversion’ to Alexander, Lord Home, these being for Midshields, Appletreehall, East Mains and Clarilaw. He probably married Euphemia, daughter of David Wemyss of that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Sir Robert.

Lizzie Campbell’s Spring

Lizzie Campbell’s Spring the Loanheid

the Loan (thu-loun) n. once the lane out to the pastures on the Common, being part of the Burgh lands, sandwiched between West Mains and East Mains and connecting the Town with the Common. It was known as the ‘Common Lone’ or ‘Lone’ up until about 1860. It became the main road through the town towards Carlisle, this not changing until the New Road was built in 1815. Both sides were first feued in 1792, this being the first extension of the Town beyond its ports (hence before this time the Loan was technically outside the Burgh limits). It was slowly built up with houses from then on, with further development of the upper West End through the 19th century. J.P. Alison designed Nos. 2 and 7 in 1901. Some houses were removed in 1939. In the mid-20th century there was licensed grocer James Henderson at No. 5 and Allison’s green-grocery at the corner with Beaconsfield Terrace. There was much demolition and building work between 1957 and 1977, with reconstruction in 1974–77, allowing a clear view of the Moat and new access to Drumlanrig School – ‘Up the Loan we’ll drive like fire . . .’ [AB], ‘Down the Loan we come fu’ doucely . . .’ [AB], ‘. . . And doon the Loan like fire’ [JT], ‘As Aw was gaun up Hawick Loan . . .’ [JSB], ‘For now o’ the Loan I used to ken There’s hardly a stannin’ stane’ [DH].

the Loanheid (thu-loun-heid) n. Loanhead, the former name for the area at the top of the Loan. Up until the early 20th century the area had many fields rented by farmers who had their barns and stables in the town. Farmers of the 19th century included the Hendersons of the Back Row, the Blakes of the Back Row, the Elliotts of the Loan, the Waldies of the Green Wynd, the Andersons of the Green Wynd, the Patersons of the Loan, the Laidlaws of the Loan, the Thorburns of the Loan, the Richardsons of the Loan, the Nichols of the Loan and the Hunters of Drumlanrig Place. The last farmers in the area were probably Dick Scott, (who kept pigs at the top on the right-hand side) and the Cavers family (who were there well into the 20th century). The area also had the covered reservoir that supplied most of the town up until the 1960s; for many decades in the 19th century children would sit on its roof to watch the Chase – ‘... The Loanheid cockerel, noisy bird That early in the morn was heard’ [IWL].

Loanhill (lōn-hil) n. lost place name near Branxholme, listed in the description of the half lands of Branxholme in 1420 when they were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. The lands described include ‘half of the meadow of Lonnehill’, with precise location uncertain, but perhaps somewhere to the west of Branxholme.

loanin (lō-nin) n., arch. a loan, lane between fields – ‘The shepherd child, the healthy wild, The park and loaning green’ [JoHa], ‘A! well might there be heard a moaning, Throughout the land on ‘ilka loaning’’ [AD], ‘The loanin’ up the hill – ay, ay! Far as the laigh march-line; It was the road we took the kye, When we were boys lang-syne’ [ECB], ‘They met in the Kirkyard and loaning, Old burgesses loyal and true’ [RSC], ‘The lang road that rins doon throwe Newtoon an bye the Dryburgh loaneen’ [ECS] (also written ‘loaneen’).

the Loanin ( thu-lō-nin) n. the Loaning, a street in Denholm, being the road out of town towards the fields to the south of the Hawick to Jedburgh road.

the Loanin Burn ( thu-lō-nin-burn) n. stream in Denholm running alongside the Loaning.

the Loanside ( thu-lōn-sid) n. former name for lands lying adjacent to the Loan (also written ‘Loneside’).

Loan Toll (lōn-tōl) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses, the building still existing with a commemorative plaque, opposite 25 Loan (near the gates of Mote Park). The building sticks out further into the road than those nearby, indicating its former purpose; the Loan was formerly the main road out of Hawick to the south. This is the first place the drums and fifes march to on the Thursday of Common Riding week, and is also on the route of the Cornet’s Walk after the Colour Bussing. It was also referred to as the ‘Turnpike Bar’.

Local Government Bill (lō-kal-gu-ver-min’-bil) n. important bill of 1929 which took away powers from smaller burg councils (with a population under 20,000), yielding control to County Councils. Parish Councils and Education Authorities were dissolved, with education and welfare being controlled by the County. In Hawick there was much resistance to these changes, with the town losing control of its police force, public health and road maintenance. Roxburghshire County Council grew in power as a result.

Loch (loch) n. lake, the nearest big example near Hawick is St. Mary’s Loch. But plenty of smaller bodies of water just outside the town are also called lochs, e.g. Leahead Loch, Mosshills Loch and Branxholme Loch.

Loch (lōch) n. David of Overcarne (d.1780), General Inspector of Fisheries in Scotland and Inspector of the Woollen Manufacturers of Scotland. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1777, presumably when passing through Hawick on the tour he made for the Board of Manufactures. He wrote ‘A Tour through most of the Trading ‘Towns and Villages of Scotland’ in 1778. The book has 2 pages describing trade and industry in Hawick, with a summary of the state of the fledgling knitwear manufacturing. This included a statement that there were 65 looms in the Town (18 of them making carpets) and 6 stocking frames. He once said that children as young as 5 could be usefully employed in the woollen trade.

Loch Bog (loch-bōg) n. area to the north of Newmill Burn and south of Branxholme Easter Loch.

Loch Burn (loch-burn) n. stream running from Blackcleuch Loch north-east to the Allan Water, also known as the Low Burn.

Lochburnfit (low-, loch-burn-fi’) n. Lochburnfoot, a former farmstead where the Loch Burn meets the Allan Water, west of Southfield. The Mossopaul ride-out route often goes past here. There may once have been a weaving village here. Walter Miller was a weaver there in 1694. James and John Reid were living there in 1745 and John ‘Slacer’ in 1748. It is probably the ‘Lawburnfoot’ where Adam Anderson and William Grieve were in 1797. Agricultural worker Richard Byers and ‘game watcher’ James Miller lived here with their families in 1841 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Lochburnfoot’ in 1694 and ‘Loughburnfoot’ in 1745 and 1841).

Lochburn Plantin (loch-burn-plawn’-in) n. Lochburn Plantation, wooded area along the south side of the Allan Water, just to the southwest of Southfield farm.

Lochcarron (loch-kaw-rin) n. tartan and knitwear manufacturers, with factory at 76 Princes Street, as well as bases in other Border Lochend (lok-ko'-eej) n. cottage to the south of the road which passes Branxholme Easter Loch.

Loch Cottage (lok-ho'-eej) n. cottage to the south of the road which passes Branxholme Easter Loch.

Lochcrraig Heid (lok-kräg-heed) n. hill in the south-western part of the Borders, behind Loch Skeen. It reaches a height of 801 m, and can be seen in the distance from many local vantage points.

Lochdail (lok-däl) n. former name for lands near Hawick. They are mentioned among lost placenames by James Wilson in 1850, but their location is still unknown.

Lochgreen (lok-green) n. lands, formerly part of Essenside, bordering on Essenside Loch. This small area was annexed to Castleside in 1760 in order of Essenside, bordering on Essenside Loch. This led to a dispute between the Cochrans of Ashkirk and the Elliots of Minto over rights to the marle in the Loch in the early 1800s.

Lochend (lok-end) n. former name of farm near Kaimend, about a mile south-east of Hawick. It was just to the north of the small body of water opposite the road to the east of Kaimend, i.e. on the east side of the back road from Hummelknowes to Ormiston, and was also known as Ormiston Lochend. The farmer there in 1797 was John Clerk and William Clerk was also there in the same year. In 1861 it was ‘Loughend’ with James Cavers and Alexander Lang and their families as residents. In the 1860s the farm here was James Davidson (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, between ‘Roxmount’ and ‘Ormiston-mains’, and labelled ‘Ormiston Lochend’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Loch Hill (lok-hil) n. hill on the east side of the Ewes valley, between the farms of Glendivan and Hoghill. It reaches a height of 258 m and has a hill-fort at its summit, as well as a smaller enclosure to the west. The name presumably comes from the small body of water, which lies on high ground between the 2 archæological features.

Lochmaben (lok-ni-bin) n. town west of Lockerbie in Annandale. It was a major Bruce seat in the 12th and 13th centuries and became a royal burgh in 1440. Lochmaben Castle was once the strongest fortress in the Borders, and covered 16 acres. The lands passed to the Murrays and then the Johnstones. Population 2,024 (1991).

Loch o the Lowes (lok-ö-thu-lowz) n. body of water south of St. Mary’s Loch, originally part of it, but separated by deposits from the burns that flow into there. It is about 1½ miles in circumference. This may originally have been the name of the whole lake, with the larger portion later taking the name of the chapel there.

Loch Park (lok-pawrk) n. area to the east of the High Street, once a small pond, but largely drained in 1835 because of the smell, to rid the area of its ‘pestilential vapours’. A curling rink was opened there in 1854 and used until 1866, when another pond was opened near St. Leonard’s. It was also used as a place for public demonstrations, e.g. in 1884 around 10,000 people rallied there in support of the Franchise Act. The area was used as an auction ring by Andrew Oliver & Son until 1883, when it was purchased by James Scott and David Rutherford, who continued sales there until the early 1900s. The land was then used for other purposes, becoming a railway maintenance yard in 1921, before being converted to an industrial park for small businesses in 1968. Now the name tends to refer specifically to the industrial estate.

Loch Park Road (lok-pawrk-rööd) n. road running along the northern side of the Loch Park Industrial Estate, built in 1884, with the name deriving from the former pond. At the bottom of the street the road passed under a railway bridge, which was demolished in the early 1970s.

Loch Rig (lok-rig) n. ridge just to the south of Shielwood Loch.

Loch Sike (lok-sik) n. small stream that rises in Branxholme Easter Loch, running roughly south-east, through Loch Sike Plantation, to join the Newmill Burn and thence into the Teviot.

Loch Sike (lok-sik) n. small stream that rises on Woll Rig and flows eastwards to run into Heads-\-shaw Loch. There are also quarries nearby, which were used in the 18th and 19th centuries for dry-stane dykes.

Loch Skeen (lok-skeen) n. loch high above the Grey Mare’s Tail, reached via a track along the Tail Burn (also sometimes ‘Skene’).

lock (lok) n., arch. a small amount, particularly of hair, straw or similar, a pinch – ‘An’ yet a lock o’ saut joost right laid on, By an aul’ wife, prove an effectual cure’ [JoHa] (cf. weelock).

lock (lok) n. one of two positions in rugby, nos. 4 and 5, also known as the second row, who lock together the front row in the scrum. Such players are usually tall and have squashed ears.
Lock (lok) n. John (13th/14th C.) from somewhere in Roxburgshire. He swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, with his name being recorded as ‘Johan Lock’. His seal shows an 8-rayed figure and the words ‘S’JOH’IS LOG’. He was also ‘Lok’ on the jury for the inquest into the inheritance of the half-barony of Wilton in 1303/4.

Locke (lok) n. James (19th/20th C.) Selkirk manufacturer who lived for a while at Kilmeny. He was an early tennis enthusiast in Hawick. His son William Lindsay was a doctor. In 1870 he married Wilhelmina (1849–1924), daughter of manufacturer William Watson. They had at least 2 daughters, who lived in Cambridge and Edinburgh.

Lockerie (lo-kur-bee) n. town near the Border in Dumfries & Galloway region, where the Dryfe Water meets the Annan. It had a nearby Roman camp at Birrenswook Hill. The town was founded in the early 18th century by the Johnstones, became a burgh in 1863, and was known for its lamb sales. It gave its name to the Lockerie Lick, meaning a slashed face, during the times of feuding between the Johnstones and the Maxwells. Tragedy struck in 1988 when a terrorist bomb brought down a Pan-Am jet, killing all on-board and 11 people in the town. Population 3,982 (1991).

the Lockerbie lick (thu-lo-kur-bee-lik) n., arch. former term for the habit of the Johnstones of slashing their victims’ faces.

Lockhart (lok-har’) n. Allan Eliott (1803–78) 5th Laird of Borthwickbrae. Second (and oldest surviving) son of William Eliott, he was a lawyer and became Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and then Roxburghshire (in 1848). He was listed as a Commissioner in Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Borthwickbrae. He was called to the Bar in 1824. He was listed at Borthwickbrae among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory, and mentioned as a major landowner in Hawick Parish in 1838. He was Selkirkshire M.P. 1846–61, was also involved in local education and agriculture and served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. In 1841 he was absent from Borthwickbrae, but his sister and 4 children were there, along with a governess and 6 other servants. In 1861 he presented a jar of reptiles to the Archeological Society. In 1874 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls as owner of Flex, as well as Wester Essenside and Leap Hill. In 1830 he married Charlotte (1809–88), 5th daughter of Sir David Dundas of Beechwood, and succeeded to the estates on the death of his father-in-law 2 years later. He had 12 children, including 5 sons who survived to adulthood: William (b.1833), who succeeded and married an Elliot of Wolfelee; David (1834–1903), who married Fanny Wood of Hutton and had 3 sons: Capt. Allan (b.1837), who married twice and had a daughter; Col. Robert Dundas (b.1841), who had 2 daughters; and Charles Walter (1850–94), who married a daughter of Mark Neville and died without issue. His daughters included: Matilda (1832–98); Marianne (b.c.1836); and Robina (1840–1924). He retired in 1861 and after the Death of Lord Polwarth was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. George (d.1547) cleric who was Archdeacon of Teviotdale from about 1509 until 1533. The George ‘Herher’ referred to in 1509 is probably a transcription error for his name. He was elevated to Dean of Glasgow in 1533, and remained in that office until he died. Sir George (c.1630–89), Lord Carnwath, son of Sir James of Lee. He was a prominent Scottish advocate, who served as Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, Lord President of the Court of Session, Privy Counsellor and Commissioner to the Scottish Parliament for Lanarkshire. He married Philadelphia, daughter of Lord Wharton and was succeeded by his son George. He was murdered on Edinburgh High Street by the husband of a woman he had represented against him. In 1690 his son George was served heir to his lands around Jedhead in Southdean Parish. It is unclear how he acquired these in the first place. Sir George of Carnwath (1673–1731) son of Sir George. In 1690 he inherited his father’s annual rents of part of the Marquise of Douglas in Jedforest, specifically 3 half steadings in Jedhead and half of 2 steads in ‘Campsheill-haugh’. He was a member of Parliament for the county of Edinburgh and one of the commissioners for arranging the union with England. He was a spy who brought to light the extent of bribery before the vote for the 1707 Union, leading to Burns line ‘bought and sold for English gold’. He was a Jacobite supporter and later a spy for Charles Stewart, having to flee the country for a year and dying in a duel 3 years later. Gilbert Eliott (1808–24) younger son of William of Borthwickbrae. He joined the Royal Navy and died onboard H.M.S. Diamond, which was captured by Lord Napier. John (18th C.) married Isabel Lillico in bedrule in 1724. John Eliott of Borthwickbrae (1796–1815). eldest son of William, he was a Cornet in 1940.
the Dragoons and was killed at Waterloo. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (18th C.) chambermaid at Cavers in 1791, when she worked for George Douglas.

Mary Charlotte (1875–1965) daughter of Capt. William, 6th of Borthwickbrae and Dorothea Helen, daughter of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Her father sold Borthwickbrae in 1884. Her 3 brothers died before their father and in 1907 she became head of the lines of both Borthwickbrae and Wolfelee. In 1899 she married Maj. R.H. Adams, but took the surname Elliott-Lockhart in 1907. She had a son, called Sir Allan Robert (b.1905) and a daughter Dorothy Cecil Bertram. Capt. Robert Elliott (19th C.) of Borthwickbrae, he served in the Royal Artillery. Stephen (15th C.) leased the Crown lands of Gilmancescleuch in 1486.

Walter Elliott (b.1804) younger son of William. He worked for the East India Company. He married Mary, daughter of William Proctor and died in Madras without any children. Lt.-Col. William Elliott (1764–1832) 4th Laird of Borthwickbrae, eldest surviving son of John of Borthwickbrae and Margaret Laing. He appears to have lived at Orchard before succeeding to Borthwickbrae; he was described as ‘William Elliot Esq. in Orchard’ in the years 1790/1 and 1791/2 when he paid tax for having a female servant and 2 male servants, and also in 1790/1 and 1790/1 when he paid for owning a carriage. From 1792 he was ‘William Elliot of Borthwickbrae’ when he continued to pay the duty for 2 male servants and a carriage in Roberton Parish, with 3 servants in 1793 and 1794 and 1 in 1797. He was at Orchard on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1790–94, when he had up to 4 carriage horses, as well as being owner of 2 work horses in 1797. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. From 1795 he served as Colonel for the local troop of Yeomantry (volunteer cavalry, also known as the Roxburgh Fencible Dragoons), leading his men in repelling the French (who were supplying arms to Ireland) at Killala Bay in 1798. He was later appointed major commandant of the Roxburgh Gentlemen and Yeomantry Cavalry, and turned out with his regiment at the False Alarm of 1804. In 1821 he was appointed Lieut.-Col. of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. In 1802 he paid the Land Tax on Borthwickbrae, the west side of Howcleuch and Wester Alemoor. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1812. He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He was left the lands of Meikledale and Flex by his uncle, William Laing.

He also inherited lands of Old Melrose, where his family would sometimes reside. He became M.P. for Selkirkshire, serving 1806–30, and was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1823. There is a letter of 1824 where the Burgh of Selkirk asked him for funds for the races at the Common Riding there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 he complained about poachers, with Andrew Oliver as his lawyer. In 1792 he married Marianna (or Mariame), daughter and heiress of Allan Lockhart of Cleghorn, and changed his surname to ‘Elliott-Lockhart’. His children were: Jane (b.1795), baptised at Edinburgh, but recorded in Robertson; John (1796–1815), who was killed at Waterloo; Margaret, who was at Borthwickbrae in 1841; Allan (b.1803), who succeeded; Walter, who died in Madras; William (b.1808), who became a Major; and Gilbert (1808–24), who died on H.M.S. Diamond. He died at Cleghorn. Capt. William Elliott (1833–1907) 6th Laird of Borthwickbrae, and 14th of Cleghorn in Lanark, eldest son of Allan. He served in the Cameronians and 74th Highlanders, retiring from service in 1868. He was then assistant Chief Constable of Lancashire before becoming Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch at Brancheholme, with responsibility for Selkirkshire and Teviotdale. He held this position from 1876 until 1892. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1870. He was also Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as Selkirkshire and Lanarkshire. He was Chairman of the Managers of Hawick Cottage Hospital and President of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, as well as being on the committee for the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He became an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1881. In 1882 he was present (as Chamberlain) at the opening of the Dod Burn water works in Hawick.

He was also proprietor of the lands at the Flex in the 1880s. He sold Borthwickbrae to Robert Noble in 1884 and for a time lived at Brancheholme, but then moved to Cleghorn in Lanarkshire. He matriculated arms in 1893. In 1866 he married Dorothy Helen, eldest daughter of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Their children were: Capt. Allan Ashton (1867–98), who died in Malta; Walter Blair (1870–95), who died unmarried; Mary Charlotte (b.1875), who succeeded as heir of the line; and Norman (b.1871), who died in infancy. He wrote about the history of Brancheholme, including the associated Scotts of Buccleuch, for the...

Berwickshire Naturalists' Club (sometimes 'Lockhardt'), and often called 'Elliott-Lockhart', note also that it became 'Elliott' rather than 'Elliot').

Lockhart Place (lok-har'-plis) n. street in the Wellogate area, built in 1879 by Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Company, and named after the second William Elliott Lockhart. No. 9 is a grade C listed building.

Lockie (lo-kee) n. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Thomson in Wilton in 1768 and their children included Thomas (b.1769), Agnes (b.1772) and William (b.1777). The witnesses in 1772 were merchant John Oliver and wright James Aitkin. Alexander (18th/19th C.) servant to William Brown, Minister of Bedrule, according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. Probably the same Andrew married Isobel Harvie and had children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, including John (b.1691) and Bessie (b.1693). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1720. He married Bessie Storie in 1719. Their children included: John (b.1720); Marion (b.1731) James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Jean Scott. Their children included John (b.1768). James (18th C.) resident at Threehead in Roberton Parish. His name was written 'Locie' in 1771 when his twins James and William were baptised. Perhaps the same James was witness to a baptism in Wilton for Walter Scott at Whitfield in 1770. James (18th/19th C.) tailor in Denholm, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Janet (b.1798) daughter of mason William. She was still living at Borthwickbraehead in 1851, but described as a 'Carrier'. Her son Walter Thomson was also there, as well as her nephew William Turnbull. Janet (b.c.1800) grocer recorded on the 1841 census for Wilton. She lived on Damside, which was perhaps the lower part of Wilton Path. Her children included Mary Hall, Jessie, Betsy, John and William. By 1861 she appears to be on Dickson Street and with no occupation. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'John Lok' when he was on the inquisition of 1303/4 for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It seems reasonable to suppose that his named was Lockie and that he was a local man, like the others. John (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William was also listed there and so probably related. John (18th C.) recorded at Denholm in 1725 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (b.1722) and Christian (b.1727), baptised in Cavers, were probably also his children. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1736 he witnessed a baptism for John Smith (blacksmith at Stirches) and in 1737 others for George Wallace, resident at Rough-leugh and for Robert Graham, resident of Brieryyards. He married Elspeth Porteous in 1731 and their children included: James (b.1734); Anne (b.1736); and James (again, b.1740). It is possible he is the John who died in 1742, after whom the area of 'Lockieshedge' was named. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Nichol and their children included William (b.1749). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Violet Laidlaw and their children included: Mary (b.1752); Janet (b.1754); Isobel (b.1757); and Violet (b.1759). His wife was probably the daughter of Adam Laidlaw and Helen Bell born in 1729. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. John (b.1795), Margaret (b.1797) and Janet (b.1802). John (18th/19th C.) servant at Honeytown in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation 'Serving' suggests he served. His name appears again in 1798, recorded as substitute for Michael Anderson from Appletreehall. Later in 1798 he was sworn into the Militia. John (b.c.1773) resident of Sorbie in Ewesdale. In 1800 he married Jean, daughter of Thomas Dryden, blacksmith at St. Boswells. Their children were: Jean (b.1801); Catherine (b.1803), who married Robert Anderson from Langholm; Elizabeth (b.1805); Janet Church (b.1807); and James (b.1809). John (b.c.1800) gamekeeper living at Byreleehaugh in Roberton Parish in 1841. By 1851 he was working in a factory in Galashiels and in 1861 was a carter at Ladhope. His wife was Janet and their children included Alison, Margaret, Jessie, Marion, Isabella, Anne, Jane and Meriam. Patrick (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He is probably the 'Pat' who in 1691 witnessed a baptism for Andrew. He married Bessie Easton and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1689. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1687 he married Margaret Waugh, as recorded in Roberton Parish. However, the marriage took place at Hassendean Kirk (perhaps one of the last there). He witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish for George Collin in 1687 and for James Waugh in 1678. Probably the same Thomas was resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1715 he was a wright at Synton Parkhead. He married Helen Veitch and their children included Elizabeth (b.1715) and John (b.1717). Thomas (b.1814/5) born in Roberton Parish, he was a ‘game guard’ at Leahead on the 1851 census. In 1841 he had been visiting Hoscoteshiel, while his family were staying at Coldhouse. He could be the ‘Lockie o’ the Stinty Knowes’ mentioned in the poem ‘Hawick Immortals’. He married Margaret Hay and their children included William, Georgina, Catherine and James. William (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably closely related to John, who was also listed there. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at ‘Whithaw’ (presumably Whitehaugh) in 1764. He married Janet Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1764), Walter (b.1767) and Rachel (b.1769). The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Ormiston and Thomas Scott. William (b.1772/3) mason at Borthwickbrae. He was living at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1798. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1841 he was living at Borthwickbrae and there was a schoolmaster called Jane (b.1796) at Stouslie among male heads of households in 1841. He was also listed there. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at ‘Whithaw’ (presumably Whitehaugh) in 1764. He married Janet Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1764), Walter (b.1767) and Rachel (b.1769). The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Ormiston and Thomas Scott.

Lockiesedge (lo-kee-hej, lo-kee-zej) n. area between Stiches Road and Mayfield, around the house with the same name. It was the easternmost part of the area formerly known as ‘Rough-ueugh’ and the name applied to a large part of what is now Mayfield. It is first recorded as feuded by Robert Langlands in two parts to John Biggar and to Robert and Mark Liddel of Whitehaugh in 1773. This second part passed to the Hart family in 1776. Apparently a beech hedge bordering the old road to Selkirk (Stiches Road) grew until the 18th century, where there are now buildings. Walter Scott was recorded living there in 1797 and Adam Hart was a weaver there on the same year. The 18th century high wall was demolished in 1790 when the road was realigned (named after the hedge and an early resident, John Lockie, who died in 1742; also written, presumably in error, ‘Lockiesedge’ and ‘Lockie’s Edge’).

Lockieshedge Hoose (lo-kee-hej-, lo-kee-zej-hoos) n. house in the area known as Lockiesedge, off Stiches Road, opposite Wellfield Road. Also known just as ‘Lockieshedge’ or sometimes ‘Lockiesedge’.

Lockie’s Mill (lo-kee-mill) n. William Lockie & Co., knitwear manufacturers of Riversdale Mills, founded in 1874. The company also had a small factory off Drumlunrig Square (on the Fore Raw) in the latter part of the 19th century, being a 3-storey building reached from No. 28. This now houses ‘Westfield Works’ at Nos. 27 and 28. The building’s frontage has a combination of paired windows and oriel windows. The modern company focuses on luxury garments.

lockit (lo-kee’, -ki’) pp., arch. locked – ‘Caged up, within a glass-case lockit, He’ll shew the curse that Job invokit’ [JoHa], ‘I’ll hae him lockit up Lock the Door Lariston (lok-tha-dor-law-ri-stin) n. song written by James Hogg, the Et-trick Shepheard, in 1797. It was popular at the Colour Bussing and similar events in the 19th century. Scocha recorded a version in 2001 – ‘Lock the door, Lariston, Lion of Liddesdale; Lock of J.P. Alison. Before that the lodge met ever second Tuesday in Orrock Church Hall. It formed essentially out of disputes over the Volunteers, with mass resignations from the other Hawick Lodge in 1863, led by prominent townsmen such as George Hardie Fraser. The Lodge celebrates a Mid-Summer Festival of St. John. Lat-terly the club members have been meeting twice per month, from September to April. The lodge contains a frieze depicting scenes from the Bible.

A history, written by James Edgar, was published in 1932.

Lodgegill (loj-gill) n. former farm on the Tarras Water, east of the Eses valley. It was a seat of the Elliots in the 17th and 18th centuries. Descendants of Anderson of Tushielaw were shepherds there in the 18th and 19th centuries. Robert Scott and family were living there in 1841 – ‘Callants, ride! what ails your rotten naigs? He’s making straight for Lodgegill and the craigs!’ [HNo].

Lodgeknowe (loj-now) n. former farmstead in Cavers Parish, precise location uncertain. William Scott (servant at Colterscleuch) was householder there in 1796. It is recorded on the 1797
Horse Tax Rolls, when John Lunn was farmer
there. Patrick Hume was a labourer there in 1799
(it is ‘Lodgeknow’ in 1796 and 1797).

Longueville (long-vil) n. Thomas (d.c.1340) possible the earliest member of the Langlands family. One story is that he was a French Pirate, ‘the Red Rover’, who was captured attacking one of William Wallace’s ships, with the two becoming friends. A more likely story is that the family came across with William the Conqueror and settled in Scotland. It seems he was also known as ‘Thomas de Charteris’ after marrying the Charteris heiress and taking her name. It may have been that a branch of the family established themselves at Langlands and took that as their name.

This early history is unclear, and further confused through the influence of historical romances such as ‘The Scottish Chiefs’ (1809) by Jane Porter, popularising earlier tales by the mediæval balladdear Blind Harry. The family gained lands at Langlandshill in Peeblesshire, built the original Kinfauns Castle in Perthshire and also acquired local lands that would become the Langlands (i.e. Wilton) estate. Wallace is traditionally supposed to have visited the Langlands estate in 1297 and ‘tethered his charger to a thorn tree near the Castle Wall’.

the Longuevilles (thu-long-vilz, -long-gwu-vee) n. originally Norman family, taking their name from a small town in Normandy. The Longuevilles, Earls of Buckingham, were the ancient lords, and there are several places still bearing the name in England. The family held lands in the Barony of Wilton from the early 13th century. There has also been the suggestion that this was the same family as ‘Langlands’, who are recorded as Barons of Wilton in the 15th century; this connection would establish the same family as Barons for about 500 years.

Lookup (loo-kup) n. Andrew (18th C.) writer
(i.e. lawyer) and Provost of Jedburgh, who was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1776.
Probably the same Andrew paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. Thomas (1729/30–1811) forester for the Buccleuch estates in ‘Teviotdalehead’ in at least the period 1798–1807. He is probably the Thomas ‘Lukup’ recorded as ‘Groom and House Servant’ at Branxholme in 1778 and 1779 (working for William Ogilvie) and ‘House Servant’ in 1785 and 1786 (working for Adam Ogilvie). He may be the Thomas who married Alison Gill (or McGill) in 1771 and whose children included: Helen (b.1772); Christian (b.1775); and Robert (b.1783). The witnesses in 1772 were John Laurie (preacher at Caerlenrig) and John Kyle. He died at Branx-holme and was buried at St. Mary’s. William (17th C.) listed as wright and servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. His surname is transcribed ‘Linkvpe’, but it seems likely this was ‘Lookup’.
He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for work done at Branx-holme and Hawick.

loon (loon, lown) n., arch. a lad, youth, fel-
w, rascal – ‘…Robert Hardie being accusit

Lopdell-Bradshaw (lop-del-brad-shaw) n. Rev. Humphrey Maitland (1931/2–2004) from Angus, he was son of an officer in the Gordon Highlanders, and served as adjutant for that Regiment while they were stationed at Stobs in the 1930s. He was mentioned in dispatches for action in Cyprus in 1957. He became an Episcopalian minister in the early 1960s, serving at Holy Cross in Edinburgh, then in Gilmerton, Birmingham and Oxgangs, before moving to St. Cuthbert’s in Hawick in 1977. He left in 1988 for the Anglican Diocese in Cyprus and the Middle East. He was Canon of St. Andrew’s Cathedral, Inverness from 1991. He retired in 1997 and moved to Kirriemuir. He married Margaret and they had a daughter, Diane.

Lord Alemoor (lord-äl-moor) n. alternative title of the Earl of Tarras (Walter Scott of Highchester and Harden) in the latter part of the 17th century. It was also the title of Andrew Pringle, an 18th century judge.

Lord Balmerino see Elphinstone

Lord Goldielands (lord-gold-ee-lindz) n. subsidiary title used by the Scotts of Buccleuch, along with Earl of Deloraine and Viscount Hermitage. It was created in 1706 for Henry, 3rd son of James, 1st Duke of Buccleuch, and became extinct in 1807 when Henry Scott, 4th Earl of Deloraine, died.

Lord Heathfield see Gen. George Augustus Eliott

Lord Herries (lörd-ha-reez) n. hereditary title of the Herries and then Maxwell families, who owned the Barony of Feu-Rule until the mid-17th century (see Herries and Maxwell; written ‘Herris’ and variants).

Lord Harry’s Rant (lörd-ha-reez-rawn’) n. song appearing in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’, published in Hawick in 1784. It is said there to be about one of the Earls of Deloraine, and this may have been Henry Scott (1676–1730), 1st Earl of Deloraine, 2nd son of Ann, Duchess of Buccleuch. With the first lines being ‘Give ear to my frolicsome ditty, Of one that a wager did lay ... .’, it has been printed in several forms under different names, such as ‘The Rant’. It tells the story of a gentleman who made a bet that he could cross the city without saying anything to the night watchmen. He is arrested by one, and only freed by the intercession of the Lord Mayor’s daughter.

Lord Lieutenant (lörd-loo-te-nin’) n. official position in a county, originally set up in the late 18th century to be responsible for maintaining local law and order and calling out the militias in times of disturbance. It is a non-political position, the appointee being the Crown’s representative in the county, presenting medals on behalf of the Queen, organising royal visits, etc. They also have responsibility for the Territorial Army and Justices of the Peace. The position is typically held by a retired senior military officer, peer or business person. Lieutenants are among the few people allowed to fly the Lion Rampant. Due to local government reorganisation the regions covered are no longer counties, but referred to as ‘lieutenancy areas’, the local one being ‘Roxburgh, Ettrick and Lauderdale’.

Lord Montague (lörd-mo-on-tu-gew) n. title of Henry James Montagu Scott uncle and guardian to the young 5th Duke of Buccleuch, who was made an Honorary Burgess along with the Duke when they travelled through Hawick in 1821.

Lord o Buccleuch (lörd-ö-bu-kloo) n. title used by the head of the Scotts, also known as Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. The 1st Lord of Buccleuch was Walter, ‘the Bold Buccleuch’, who was raised to the peerage in 1606 and died in 1611. His son Walter was 2nd Lord until elevated to an Earldom in 1619. However, several of the earlier chiefs were called ‘Lord’, this being formerly synonymous with ‘Laird’. There were at least 10 Lairds before ‘the Bold Buccleuch’, with the first to sit in the Scottish Parliament as Lord of Buccleuch being Sir David Scott, 7th Laird, in 1481.

Lord o Hawick (lòrd-ô-hIk) n. title of the Barons of Hawick, particular used of the Douglases, responsible for law enforcement around Hawick in the early 16th century.

Lord Olifer (lòrd-ô-le-vur) n. nickname for Robert Oliver in the 17th century, and his son, also Robert in the early 18th century, as well as for an earlier Oliver in Falside in Southern Parish – ‘Lord Olifer embalmed in song, A stranger to fear, a foe to wrong; Like sturdy Hab, branched from your race, Your lineage royalty would grace’ [WNK].

Lord Pei Huill (lòrd-pî-hûl) n., arch. a snobbish person – ‘...the man with the airs and graces was inevitably ‘Lord Pei Huill’ ’ [WL].

Lord Polwarth (lòrd-pol-wurth) n. the present head of the Scotts of Harden is Henry Alexander Hepburne-Scott, 10th Lord Polwarth. The first local Lord Polwarth was Hugh Scott, 11th Baron of Harden.

the Lord’s Trei (thu-lòrdz-trî) n. former tree near the western side of the road shortly before coming to the Caa Knowe. Its position is indicated by a raised area in the field. This is probably an ancient burial cairn (about 33ft in diameter) with an enclosure around it. It may be related to the Caa Knowe cairn, which is nearby. The date that the tree grew in the centre is not known, but it was already an old tradition by the mid-19th century.

Lord Warden (lòrd-warden) n. official government position from the early 14th century until the Union of the Crowns in 1603, with responsibility for security of the lands around the Border. There were Lord Wardens of both Scotland and England, with the land split into West, Middle and East portions (sometimes just West and East), with Hawick lying in the Scottish Middle Marches. Sir James Douglas (‘The Black Douglas’) was the first recorded appointee on the Scottish side, in 1314. The Wardenship was hereditary with the Douglas family until forfeited in 1455. Afterwards there were usually 3 separate Scottish Wardens. The relevant Wardens for Hawick are approximately: Sir James Douglas, from 1314; Sir William Douglas, from 1343; Sir Archibald Douglas, 1364 and 1368–1400; Archibald 4th Earl of Douglas, from 1400; James 7th Earl of Douglas, sometime; William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, from 1433; William, 8th Earl of Douglas, from 1450; William Douglas of Cluny, from 1464; James, Earl of Buchan, from 1479; Walter Ker of Cessford, from 1502; Ralph and Andrew Ker, from 1503; Alexander, 3rd Lord Hume, from 1510; Sir Robert Ker, from 1514; Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford, from 1515; Anthony Darcy, from 1516; Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus, from 1525; Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, from 1536; Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, from 1538; Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, from 1550; James, Earl of Bothwell, from 1558; Sir Walter Ker of Cessford from 1560; Earl of Angus (Archibald Douglas), from 1574; William Ker of Cessford, from 1583; Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, from 1584; Earl of Arran (James Stewart), from 1584; William Ker of Cessford, from 1585; Duke of Lennox (Ludovic Stewart), from 1592; Sir Robert Ker c.1594–1603 (see also Warden).

Lorenz (lo-renz) n. Helen Ruth nee Palmer-Douglas, eldest daughter of James Malcolm Palmer-Douglas. She inherited the vestiges of the Cavers estate, including the small piece of land on which the Hornshole Monument was erected, which she gifted to the people of Hawick in 2019. She married Walter and had children Jason and Robert.

lorimer (lo-rimur, -ree-) n., arch. someone who makes metal parts for bridles and saddles, a saddler – ‘Decerns Thomas Oliver to content and pay to James Scott, lorimer, 3 half firlots of aitts eit by his guids and geir ... ’ [BR1642].

Lorimer (lo-rimur) n. Sir Robert Stodart, R.S.A. (1864–1929) born in Edinburgh, he became a noted architect and promoter of the Arts and Crafts movement in Scotland. He designed the National War Memorial at Edinburgh Castle. Locally he was responsible for the design of the 1908 wooden chancel screen in St. Cuthbert’s, the 1897/8 renovation of Fatlips Castle, the clock tower in Gala Burgh Chambers and the War Memorial in Kelso.

Lorraine (lö-ru:n) n. Agnes (16th/17th C.) suggested to have been a daughter of Hector of Harwood (although there is no evidence for this). She married Martin Elliot. In 1618 she held the liferent of half a husbandland in Lilliesleaf and gifted the lands to her son and heir William Elliot. In 1625 she and William Elliot had a sasine of lands... in Lilliesleaf. Agnes (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1745 she was charged by the Kirk Session of fornication with Thomas Barry, on the birth of her unnamed child. She had to appear before the congregation in sackcloth no less than 11 times. Probably the same Agnes appears to have married Thomas Barrie in Kirkton Parish in 1748. Alexander (14th C.) said to have been taken prisoner at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. It has been suggested that he was a son of Eustace, but there is no definite evidence of their relationship. In 1359 he was granted custody of the lands of Richard of Kirkbride by Edward III, presumably for supporting the English King. It may be that he was the progenitor of the Berwickshire Lorraines (several named Alexander), who were Sheriff-Clerks in Duns in the 17th and 18th centuries there. Alexander (16th/17th C.) resident of Kelso Parish. In 1602 he and his wife Marion Rutherford had a son James baptised. Among the witnesses was George Lorraine, who was surely a relative. It seems likely he was descended from the earlier Alexander. An Alexander recorded in Edinburgh in 1621 may have been his son, as well as John, who was a writer in Duns and married a daughter of Sir Alexander Don. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish and then gardener at Oakwood and Middleford. He was probably related to William and Robert, who were also in Ashkirk at the same time; they may all have been brothers and sons of George and Janet Fleming. His brother Robert (a gardener) witnessed the baptism in 1697 and probably the one in 1691 (which is hard to read) along with James . . . . He married Jean Ker and their children (several baptised in Selkirk) included: Jean (b.1691); Mary (b.1693); Margaret (b.1697); Lillias (b.1698); Elspeth (b.1700); and Margaret (again, b.1705). Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son James was baptised in Bedrule in 1698. His name is recorded as ‘Archibald Lorr’. He may have been a son of Walter and Janet Shortreed. Beatrice (17th C.) recorded in 1643 in Rueltownhead in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. Her lands were valued at £10. Edward (15th C.) Englishman who was the progenitor of the Barons of Kirkharle in Northumberland. It is unclear what connection there was to the Roxburghshire Lorraines; however, the forename Edward was also known in that branch. He was said to have lands in the Durham area. In 1425 he married Johanna, daughter and heiress of William de Strother. He thus became owner of Kirkharle, and neighbouring lands, including the Northumbrian farm of Hawick. He was probably succeeded by his son Edward. Edward (15th/16th C.) possibly son of James. He may have been the uncle of Hector of Harwood, for whom he witnessed a sasine in 1531. The witnesses after him were William and Patrick. Edward (16th C.) son of John who held lands in Blainslie near Melrose. His name appears to be written ‘Lorne’. In 1579 he had sasine for lands in Blainslie as well as the reversion for the lands. Edward (d.c.1598) Laird of Harwood in the late 1500s, son of Hector, who he succeeded in 1573. In 1573 he was summoned to appear before the Privy Council, along with Sir Thomas Turnbull and others for their raid on the house of Robert Kerr of Woodhead; however, they were acquitted because Kerr had been assisting the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He owned Hawthorsnside as well as Harwood, and also held the lands of Appotside (perhaps through marriage). In 1578/9 he was ‘guidsone’ (i.e. son-in-law) to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, when he was among men required to be presented to the Privy Council, with John Johnstone of that Ilk as cautioned, for the murder of Thomas Shiel. In 1580 he was ‘younger of Harwod’ when he was in a bond with the Turnbuls of Bedrule and Barnhills to keep peace with the Turnbuls of Minto and others; at that point the Lorraines of Harwood were united with the Turnbuls of Bedrule and Barnhills, and feuding with the Turnbuls of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobsburn. In 1583 William Douglas of Cavers was cautioned for him. He is probably the ‘Larde of Harret’ who signed a bond of assurance with the English Warden in 1584 (along with Gledstains, Elliots, Armstrongs and others). He was recorded in 1585 along with William Douglas of Cavers as cautioners for John Douglas of Whirriggs. He and John Turnbull of Minto were cautioners for ‘Hobbie Elliot, called Vicar’s Hob’ in 1588/9. Also in 1589 James Langlands of that Ilk as cautioned for him. About 1590 he was listed among landed men in the Borders. He is probably the Edward who (along with Gilbert) signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1580 he married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. He is said to have been an unassuming man, although his wife was the opposite. She apparently roused the ire of the Turnbull Clan, who laid waste to Harwood in the years 1598–1605. Hector and William, probably his sons or other close relatives, were slain, along with his wife’s servant. Flocks and herds were also carried off, as well as timber. The feud only ended when an appeal was made to the Earl of Angus. His son Hector succeeded him by 1599, while Edward and James were other surviving sons, and he may also have had sons William, Walter and Ferguson. In 1606 his son James was declared a fugitive.

Edward (16th/17th C.) younger son of Edward and Margaret Turnbull. He is mentioned several times as ‘Edward the younger of Harwood’. Edward of Harwood (b.c.1600) son of Hector, with his mother possibly being a daughter of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. His father was killed when he was quite young and his uncle James served as his tutor. He is recorded in an instrument of 1619 being required to marry Margaret Hamilton, sister to Francis Hamilton, who was heir of James Hamilton, formerly owner of lands in the Rule valley; this was under the instructions of his superior, Lord Herries. In fact Margaret married Rev. William Weir, who became minister at Hobkirk; it may be that not fulfilling the marriage contract meant that Edward had to pay a fine to Lord Herries. In 1630 he is recorded in a ‘contract of wadsett’ assigning the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside to William Weir, minister of Hobkirk; this followed the contract of 1598 when his father Hector had borrowed money from James Hamilton. In 1631 he granted sasine of Hartshaugh to Gilbert Elliot. Also in 1631 he had a precept of clare constat and sasine for Harwood and Hawthornside, granted by Andrew, Lord Jedburgh; this renewal confirms that he was great-grandson of Hector. In 1632 he and Rev. Weir were involved in another wadset of Harwood to Gilbert Elliot (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairtins’). In 1632 he had a sasine for Appotside, granted by Rev. William Weir, with the consent of Francis, son of James Hamilton, as well as for Tythehouse. In 1633 he had a wadset with Gilbert Elliot for the lands of Tythehouse. In 1637 he and Gilbert Elliot granted the lands of Harwood and Tythehouse to William, eldest son of Simon Elliot of the Binks. He had thus ended his family’s ownership of Harwood, but held onto the small farm of Appotside. In 1643 he is listed as owner of Appotside, valued at £290. He is probably the ‘Laird Loran’ who led a group of 20 or so men who captured Royalist leader William Murray after the Battle of Philiphaugh. He is recorded as ‘of Apotsyd’ as witness to a contract of 1648 and again in 1649. He witnessed a marriage contract in 1652 for Robert Elliot and Margaret Riddell. In 1654 he is described as the ‘heritable proprietor’ when he and his eldest son Walter had a contract of ‘wadset’ with William Elliot of Harwood and the Binks for the lands of Appotside. In 1656 he resigned his lands of Appotside and Tythehouse in favour of William Elliot of Harwood; this was with the agreement of his wife, Maisie Elliot, and also mentions his eldest son, Walter. An additional contract reserves for him the ‘mill, multures, sequels, suckin, kiln, houses, mill-lands lying beyond the water dam on the south side’ of Appotside, along with pasture for a few animals. He signed his surname as ‘Lorran’. In 1659 he appears to be the tenant of Appotside Mill, along with Walter Riddell (tenant at Appotside), when the ‘liferent’ of the lands was given to Christine Grahamslaw (new wife of William Elliot of Harwood). In 1662 he was listed among the debtors to the deceased William Elliot of Harwood; Walter ‘in Whyttchaugh’ was also listed, and probably his son. In about 1663 the Land Tax Rolls record that he paid tax on £300 at Appotside. He married Maisie Elliot, who may have been from the Eliotts of Stobs (his neighbours) or the Eliotts of Reidheugh (his mother’s family). His eldest son Walter was perhaps the Walter who married Janet Shortreed and lived in Hawick Parish. He may also have had a daughter Alison, married to Robert Scott, whose daughter Elspeth was born in Kelso in 1635. He may also have had a younger son George, who had a daughter baptised in Hawick the same day as a daughter of Walter. He probably remained at Appotside until his death, ending his family’s association of about 250 years with the lands around Harwood. Eustace (d.bef. 1374) probably ancestor of the Lorraines of Harwood, his surname is given as ‘de Lorreyne’ and similar variants, while his forename is also ‘Eustachius’ and ‘Tassyn’. He was involved in events on both sides of the Border and is recorded between 1323 and 1374 (which is long enough that it is possible there were 2 generations here). It is not known when he was born or who his parents were. Although sometimes referred to as a knight, it is unclear which side of the Border this came from. He held land in Roxburghshire, including ‘Heroude’ (which is surely Harwood in Rulewater), as well as in Dumfriesshire (including ‘Coschogill’) and in Ayrshire. In 1323 he was given safe passage to meet the Earl of Atholl in England, with the stipulation that he was not to go more than 10 leagues across the Border. In 1331 he was among men accused of illegally hunting on the Earl of Angus’ lands in Northumberland. In 1333 he was a Scotsman appointed by Edward III as one of the Commissioners to inquire into the valuation of Berwick. He was a Commissioner for the Treaty of Perth in 1335, having his Scottish lands restored at that time. About the same year he was among a few Scottish noblemen who swore fealty to Edward III and in 1336 was granted a pardon by the English King for crimes committed in Scotland. In 1340 he had remission (now from the Scottish King) for the killing of Robert Lauder, although no details of the incident are given. In 1343 he was given compensation by Edward III for lands lost in Scotland. He was also Warden of Roxburgh Castle (with Sir William Douglas as Governor at the same time) in 1346, when the Castle was surrendered to the English (specifically Henry Percy and Ralph Neville). He had a son (perhaps on the English side) captured at the Battle of Neville’s Cross (by Robert Bertram), for whom ransom was paid in 1347. He was ‘Eustacio Loreyn’ when he witnessed to a charter for Adam of Rule, for the lands of Altonburn, in about 1354. Around that time (and certainly by 1357) he forfeited his lands to Hugh Blair of that Ilk, presumably for acting against the Scottish King; the lands were confirmed to Hugh’s son James Blair in 1374. In 1357/8 he witnessed a charter of confirmation by John Copeland to John Ker for lands in Altonburn; at that point he was ‘of Chatto’. He was still ‘of Chatto’ in 1358 when he witnessed a charter for William of Blakedene, confirming lands of Molle and Altonburn to John Ker. He was probably related to James, recorded in the 1350s and 60s, including witnessing the 2 charters of 1357/8 and 1358 with him. It has been suggested that James (perhaps ancestor of the Harwood line), Alexander (perhaps ancestor of the Berwickshire line), Robert (perhaps ancestor of the Hummelknowes line) and William may all have been his sons, but there is no definitive evidence for any of these connections. Eustace (15th C.) recorded as a witness to a ratification of a gift of land in Edinburgh in 1457. He was surely a descendant of the earlier Eustace. Fergus (d.1616) murdered at ‘Gaithouslok’ (i.e. Gatehousecote) by Andrew and Cuthbert McDougal, tenants in Stonedge. They were apparently caught ‘with the bloody hand’ and committed to Jedburgh Tolbooth in 1618. He was surely related to Walter, tenant in Gatehousecote, and it has been suggested that he might have been a younger son of Edward of Harwood. It is unclear where his forename came from, but there is a Fergus Turnbull recorded a century earlier. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk. His daughter Elspeth was baptised there in 1641, with his surname being recorded as ‘Lorne’. George (17th C.) described as ‘in Cavers’, along with William, in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Samuel Rutherford, servant of the Laird of Cavers, accused a large group of his drinking friends of stealing his wallet. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anna (or perhaps Janet) Fleming and their children included John (b.1655). The baptism was witnessed by John Lister and Simon Adamson and was the same day as Walter’s daughter Isobel was baptised; this hints that he may have been Walter’s brother, and hence a younger son of Edward of Harwood. It has been suggested that he may also have had children Robert, William, Isobell and Alexander. George (17th C.) resident of Aboyne Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same George was recorded in 1691 when he and another man were paid for mowing in the account book of Dame Magdalene Nicholson, widow of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. George (d.1720) servant of George Scott in Easter Groundiston. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: John (b.1703); George (b.1706); Agnes (b.1709); and Janet (b.1714). The baptism in 1703 was done along with a son of John Lamb, with witnesses Adam Scott and Walter Scott. The 1706 baptism was done at Wilton Common, with witnesses James Irvine and Will Scott. The use of the Wilton ‘mortcloth’ for his funeral is recorded, and he was transcribed ‘in Coghall’ (probably ‘Boghall’). The death of ‘Agnes Lorran in Heap’ in 1734 was probably his daughter. It has been suggested that he may have been son of John and grandson of George and Janet Fleming. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Nichol in 1727 and their children included Helen (b.1731). He may have been the son of George born in 1706 and the later George may have been his own son. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Hart in 1752. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism for John in 1755. He may be the George whose funeral is recorded in Wilton in 1770. He may have been son of the earlier George from Wilton. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1763 and 1765 (and hence surely related to John, who was also there at about the same time) and at Hummelknowes in 1772. His children included: Margaret (b.1763); Helen (b.1765); an unnamed son (b.1767); and John (b.1772). Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th C.) probably son of Hector. He was listed in 1579 among Scotsmen accused by ‘the Laird of Pansoun, Englishman’ of raiding into England; he was stated there to be son of the Laird of Harwood. He was also on a list in 1579/80 of men charged to make recompense to Englishmen they had acted against; his cautioner then was the Laird of Bedrule. He is also recorded in 1583/4 when he was denounced along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others for not appearing before the Privy Council. He is probably the Gilbert who (along with Edward) signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He is probably the Gilbert, who along with Hector ‘Lorance’ (probably his brother) is recorded being fined for crimes against William Hall of Otterburn in 1596. He could be the ‘Gib Lorreyne’ listed along with ‘Archy Trumble’ in a complaint of a raid into England in 1597. In 1599 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope complained that he and Hector, ‘father-brothers of Hector Lorane of that Ilk’ were involved in the slaughter of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope; they were captured and presented to James Douglas of Cavers, as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, but Douglas refused to enter them in court. Also in 1601 he was ‘father-brother’ to Hector of Harwood when John Turnbull of Minto was cautioner in a bond to enter them. He could be the ‘Gilbert Lorreyne of Hawdon’ recorded in 1601 when Richard Fenwick of Stanton accused him of stealing livestock from him. He may also be the Gib ‘of Apputtsyde’ recorded in 1601 along with Hector and John, as well as several Turnbulls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman. He is probably the ‘Gib Lorayebe, called Auld Gib’ who was listed as a fugitive in 1605, along with ‘Jock’s John’ and many Armstrongs, Elliots, Turnbulls, etc. He was listed again as a fugitive for failing to attend another Border Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1606, along with his brother Hector; he was then ‘Gib Lorayne, called Old Gib’. This suggests that he may have had a son who was ‘Young Gib’. It has been suggested that he married a sister of William Scott of Tushielaw, but there is no evidence for this. Grizel (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote listed in 1684 among people who failed to appear in Jedburgh when cited. The others included Margaret (who may have been her sister) and Andrew Shiel. They were probably Covenanting objectors. She was also listed in 1684 along with Margaret and Beatrix, possibly her sisters. It has been suggested she might have been daughter of Walter (but there is no proof for this). Hector (16th C.) owner of the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside according to a charter granted by William Lord Herries in 1531 (incorrectly noted as in one source as 1561). He was the grandson (and heir) of James and son of John. He may have been a minor when he succeeded his grandfather (his father presumably predeceasing his grandfather). He seems to have been the first Hector in his family, so perhaps his mother was a Turnbull (where this forename was known at the time, and with 2 Turnbuls witnessing the 1531 charter). It was stated that the earlier charters for the lands had been accidentally burned, and hence a new charter was given in 1531. The sasine for his lands was witnessed by Edward, William and Patrick, who may have been his uncles, or other near relatives. He is probably the ‘Ecto’ Lord of Harwode’ who had a bond of 1557 along with Turnbuls, Elliots and others, to present ‘Will Nyksone, called Gymmerhom’. He is probably the ‘Lard of Harwod’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was succeeded by his son Edward and probably also had sons Hector and Gilbert, and perhaps daughters Agnes and Marion. He probably died before 1573. In 1583/4 he was probably the Hector of Harwood on a list of Borderers ordered by the Privy Council to render their houses for the King’s use (making it somewhat unclear when he died). He is probably the Hector recorded on Monipennie’s list of Border Lairds in the 1590s (even although he was deceased by then). His son Edward is recorded in 1578/9 as ‘guidsone’ to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, and hence his wife was probably sister of Turnbull of Bedrule. Hector (16th/17th C.) son of Hector of Harwood and brother of Edward and Gib. He is probably the Hector, who along with Gilbert ‘Lorance’ is recorded being fined for crimes against William Hall of Otterburn in 1596. In 1599 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope complained that he and Gilbert, ‘father-brothers of Hector Lorane of that Ilk’ were involved in the slaughter of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope; they were captured and presented to James Douglas of Cavers, as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, but Douglas refused to enter them in court. John Turnbull of Minto was cautioner for a bond to enter him and Gilbert, this being subscribed at Barnhills. He is probably the Hector ‘of Apputtsyde’ listed in 1601 along with Gib and John, along with several Turnbuls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman. He was listed in 1606, along with his brother ‘Auld Gib’, among men declared as fugitives for not attending a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh. Hector (c.1582–1604) son of Edward and grandson of Hector. He was Laird of Harwood and was succeeded by his grandson Hector, probably son of his own son Edward. A contract of 1598 with James Hamilton describes a loan (of £1000) from Hamilton, and how he will inherit the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside, but with Hamilton receiving the lands if he defaulted on the loan. This was confirmed in a contract of 1600, where he was to be infetted in the lands, with the loan from Hamilton now being almost £1200. In 1602 the wardship of his lands was granted to James Hamilton, as well as ‘the marriage of Hector Loreyn, now of Harwode’ and the marriage of any other male heirs who might succeed later; he was still a minor at this point, since he was described as ‘apparent of Harwood’. Hamilton also had a charter for the lands of Tythehouse and Apotside. It seems likely that in about 1602 he married a daughter of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Marion Hamilton, who was the sister of James Hamilton (who held the rights of his marriage). However, his wife’s first name is not recorded and it is not known if she remarried after his early death. He was killed ‘with schotis of hagbutis and pistolettis’ as part of the feud between Lady Appotside (his mother, daughter of the Laird of Bedrule) and other local Turnbulls. After his death the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside reverted to the superior, William, Lord Herries, until taken temporarily by wood and Hawthornside reverted to the superior, cal Turnbulls. After his death the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside; William and Patrick were witnesses to the associated sasine. He was the last Lorraine Laird of Harwood, selling the lands, along with Tythehouse and Appotside to Simon Elliot of the Binks in 1637. He married a daughter of Robert Elliot, 16th of Redheugh, whose brother was William Elliot of Hartshaughe.

Dr. Herbert James Bell (1852–1909) son of Rev. Joseph, minister of Tinwald and Caerlave-rock. He was great-great-grandson of William, servitor to John Scott of Gornberry, and hence was descended from the Lorraines of Harwood. He graduated from Edinburgh University, then spending 3 years in the U.S.A. before commencing in medical practice in England. He moved to Hawick in about 1889, taking over from Dr. Penman. He lived at 31 Bridge Street. He served as surgeon to the Mechanics’ Friendly Society and was medical officer to the Hawick Post Office. He was also a member of Hawick School Board, was an elder in Hawick Parish Church and served as President of Hawick R.F.C. He was a Unionist in politics and was President of the Hawick Constitutional Club. He once stood as a local councillor. He spent 1902 as a government medical officer on the Gold Coast in Africa. From 1903 he was medical officer for Stobs Camp. His wife was Janet Hewat (1861–1935), who communicated with George Tancred regarding the Lorraines of Harwood. Their children were: Joseph Currie (b.1886), who was also a doctor; Edith Dickson Bell (b.1887), who married David Bell and secondly H.S. Davidson; Janet Hewat (b.1889), born in Hawick, who married Charles MacLeod; Alice Mary Neilson (b.1891), also born in Hawick, who married Nicholas Vass; and Richard Hewat Bell (b.1894), also born in Hawick, who married Mary Gould. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Hugh (13th C.) recorded in about the period 1210–22 when he and his wife Ada, daughter and heiress of Simon Fraser, renewed a charter to Kelso Abbey. This was for the church of Keith-Humbie in East Lothian. His name is given as ‘Hugo Lorens’, which is presumably ‘Lorraine’. However, it is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. James (d.1346) said to have been a ‘Banneret’ who was killed at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. His name is given as ‘James Loreyn’. It is unclear if he was on the Scottish or English side, and how he might have been related to Eustace, who was Warden of Roxburgh Castle at that time. James (14th C.) witness in 1354 to a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. He was also witness to the charter granting the lands of Altonburn to the Kers in 1357/8 and another granting them further lands in Sprouston in 1358. In 1357/8 he was granted an annuity of £20 by Edward III, for having lost most of his Scottish lands on account of supporting England, and this was repeated the following year. In 1357/8 he witnessed a charter for John Copeland and another in 1358 for William of Blakedene, both relating to the lands of Altonburn (and both also witnessed by Eustace). Also in 1358 he was granted the Barony of Caverton in Roxburghshire, and in 1361 received custody of the lands of Old Roxburgh, formerly belonging to the deceased Nicholas de Seymour. In 1365 he witnessed a quitclaim by Joan, wife of John of Copeland. In 1954 about 1370 he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. He is recorded as being ‘de Lorreyne’, ‘Loreyne’, ‘Loreyn’ and ‘Lorreyn’. He was probably directly related to Eustace (perhaps his son or brother), who was recorded in the 1330s to 50s. One possibility is that he was son of Eustace and direct ancestor of the later Loraines of Harwood. James (15th C.) recorded in 1454/5 when he attempted to recover the lands of Coschogill in the Regality of Drumlanrig from John Blair of Adanton. These had been in the hands of the Blairs since forfeited by Eustace about a century earlier. Given the court case to recover some of the family lands in Dumfriesshire, it seems clear that he was a direct descendant of Eustace, and either was already Laird of Harwood, or succeeded in recovering these lands at about the same time. Probably the same James was on an inquest held in Dumfries in 1451/2 regarding the lands of Sir James Douglas, and he was likely also the Lorraine who witnessed a land transfer to a Bailie of Dumfries in 1453. Perhaps the same James was a member of an inquest at Jedburgh Forest in 1439, relating to succession of the lands of John Douglas of Bonjedward. He was surely related to the nearly contemporary John of Harwood, perhaps his brother. James (15th/16th C.) mentioned in a charter of 1531 to his grandson Hector, by which time he was deceased. His son (and father of Hector of Harwood) may have been John. It has been suggested that he was son of John of Harwood, recorded in 1464/5, and descended from Eustace. He is recorded as ‘Jacobi lorane’ in 1494/5 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Probably the same James ‘Lorein of Herwode’ was part of an assize in 1507. He may have had sons John, Edward, William and Patrick (the latter 3 being witnesses to the sasine in 1531 for Hector, listed in this order): however, there are no documents to confirm any of this. Nevertheless, there is evidence that John was father of Hector, and hence presumably John was his son. James (16th C.) listed in 1547 among residents of ‘Overtoune of Blainyslie’ near Melrose. His surname is given as ‘Lorne’, but it seems likely this was Lorraine. It is unclear how he would have been related to other Loraines, but it has been suggested that he could have been a son of John of Harwood. He married Agnes Lamb and his son Edward had a ‘precept of clare constat’ for his father’s lands in Blainyslie in about 1579. James of Appotside (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Edward of Harwood and Margaret Turnbull. In 1598 he was implicated in the slaughter of David Turnbull of Wauchope near his house. This was no doubt part of the ongoing feud between the Turnbulls and Loraines. Note that his younger brother William was killed by Turnbulls in 1600 and his older brother Hector in 1604. In 1605 he is recorded as ‘Jacobo Lorraine fratri Hectoris Lorane de Harwode’ when he had remission for being involved in the murder of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1606 he was denounced for resisting a messenger that came to apprehend the fugitive William Turnbull of Braidhaugh. In 1606/7 he was recorded as brother of the deceased Hector of Harwood and ‘propinquior agnatus’ (i.e. closer relative) to Hector, on his father Edward’s side; he was thus appointed as tutor to his young nephew Edward. In 1607 Thomas Home, Burgess of Musselburgh was cautioned for him to appear before the Privy Council to answer the charges brought against him by Thomas Turnbull of Wauchope and Hector Turnbull of Barnhills, namely ‘for presenting bended pistoles to their breasts for their slaughter’. Also in 1607 he was son of Edward of Harwood when he petitioned the Privy Council, claiming that he never received the charge and hence did not appear to be warded in Edinburgh Tolbooth. He paid a fine, but it is unclear if he was imprisoned afterwards. In 1618/9 he was witness to a bond between Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and Adam Turnbull of the Townhead of Abbotrule. In 1619 there was a complaint that he had threatened William Ker (younger of Yair) with a hagbut when he was riding near the headwaters of Rule. He was denounced a rebel for failing to appear, but it is unclear whether or not he escaped punishment. There is no information about whether he married or had children. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ancrum Parish. He had a marriage contract with Isobel Bairnfather in 1687, in which she has sasine of ‘ane nether hous and two rigs of arrable land in nether ancrum’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Stirches who was given 10 shillings by Wilton Parish in 1704. He may be the person transcribed as ‘Jannet Lorne’ (possibly at Easter Heap) who was given money the previous year. He was probably related to Patrick and William, who were recorded at Heap in 1650. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘sometime in Southdean Parish’. His daughter Bessie was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1708, with the child’s father engaging for the child in his absence. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton.
Lorraine

Parish. He was at ‘Coldfolds’ (probably Cawfualds) in 1750, Broadlee in 1753 and Clarilaw in 1758. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: Samuel (b.1750); James (b.1753); and Betty (b.1758). The witnesses in 1750 were Thomas Riddell and James Simpson, in 1753 were James Dryden and James Martin and in 1758 were James Dryden and Andrew Blyth. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for John Rutherford in 1779. He could be the James who died in Wilton in 1811, with Betty dying in 1812. James (18th/19th C.) married Betty Scott in Wilton Parish in 1809. Jean (d.1769) resident of Doorpool. She is buried in Hobkirk Cemetery, with the funeral of William being recorded the same day. Dr. Joseph Currie (1886–1945) son of Hawick doctor Herbert. He graduated from Edinburgh University and was admitted to the Royal College of Surgeons. It is said that in 1907 he moved to become medical officer for the Burmah Oil Company in Rangoon. During WWI he served in the R.A.M.C. as a Lieutenant and then Captain. Afterwards he was a surgeon in Edinburgh. He married 3 times, to Margaret Kennedy, Alice Wilson and Margaret Young. He had a son Herbert Derrick Bell (1913–82), who played rugby for Scotland. John of Harwood (15th C.) member of the panel in 1464/5 that ruled on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas. He is listed as ‘John Lorene of Harwood’. He was probably a descendant of Eustace. He was surely closely related to the James who was recorded in 1454/5, perhaps his brother. He may have been father of James of Harwood and hence direct ancestor of later Lorraines of Harwood. John of Lorraine (15th/16th C.) probably son of James and father of Hector. He is probably the John whose seal is recorded among Rutherford charters, showing a lion rampant and the words ‘S iohanes LORAN’. He is recorded in 1493 when the Sheriff, William Douglas of Cavers, was fined for failure to produce him at the Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh (unless this was a different generation); he was again recorded in 1494/5 for failing to appear. Given that Hector was served heir to his grandfather James in 1531, he must have already been deceased by then. He was explicitly stated to have been father of Hector in the ‘Acta Dominorum’ for 1535/6, relating to a claim made against his son by James Wallace of ‘Cornell’, son and heir of Adam Wallace of Craige. As well as a son Hector, he may have had children James (connected with Blainslie), John (perhaps father of ‘Jock’s John’) and Bessie (also in Blainslie, married to Michael Dickson). John (16th C.) recorded in 1574 as owner of property in Jedburgh. It has been suggested that he might have been a son of John and hence brother of Hector of Harwood. He may have been father of ‘Jok’s Johnne’. John of Appotside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 with Gib and Hector, along with several Turnbulls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman from Morpeth. Probably the same man was ‘Johne Lorayne, called ‘Jok’s Johnne’ in 1605, when listed as a fugitive, along with ‘Auld Gib’; he was recorded there as ‘Johne Lorayne, called Jok’s Johnne’. He was thus son of John, and surely descended from the Lorraines of Harwood (perhaps great-great-grandson of James of Harwood). John (17th C.) witness in Hawick in 1657 to the baptism of Beatrix, daughter of Walter and Janet Shortreed. He was presumably related to Walter. John (b.1655) son of George and Janet Fleming and probably descended from the Lorraines of Harwood. It has been suggested that he may have been father of many of the family members associated with Wilton, e.g. George, James and William. However, there is no documentary proof for this. John (17th C.) resident of Rulletonfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. John (17th/18th C.) servitor to John Scott of Ancrum. In 1712 he was attending the New North Kirk of Edinburgh when accused by the Ancrum Session of fornication with Agnes Cant; he was publicly rebuked in Ancrum in 1716. In 1714 he married Isabel Leithead in Lilliesleaf Parish and their son Thomas (b.1716) was baptised in Ancrum. It is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was in Upper Tofts in 1722, Berryfell in 1725 and Earlsdie in 1732. He married Margaret Glendinning in Kirkton Parish in 1722. Their children included: Jane (b.1725); and John (b.1732). He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter in Wilton Parish in 1729. He may also have been father of Agnes, who had a child with Thomas Barrie in 1745. John (18th C.) resident of Netherhall in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Easton in 1751; his wife was also from Wilton. Their children included: William (b.1752); Helen (b.1754); and John (b.1755). The witnesses in 1752 were Thomas Hay and Thomas Scott and in 1754 were William Lamb (suggesting that he may have been a son of Walter, who reciprocated in witnessing a baptism for William Lamb) and
Lorraine

William Noble. The witness in 1755 was George, who was surely a close relative. In 1752 he and Janet Scott in Wiltonburn were accused of fornication by the Wilton Session, and made to pay fines. Perhaps the same John married Bessie Scott (from Kirkton Parish) in 1758 in Wilton Parish. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Robert Stewart in 1775. However, he may also be the John for whom the Wilton ‘mortcloth’ fee was paid in 1774. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1748 he married Ann Mitchellhill from Cavers. Further children baptised in Cavers Parish were probably also his: Christian (b.1758); Anne (b.1760); and Margaret (b.1769). In at least 1758–69 he was living in Orchard (and hence was surely related to George, who was in Orchard in 1763). He could be the John, son of John, born in 1732. He is probably the John who received poor relief in Kirkton in 1796. John (18th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Kirkton Parish in 1760. His surname is written ‘Lorn’ and ‘Loran’. He was at Acreknowe in 1761 and 1764, and Newnill in 1764 and 1768. His children included: Janet (b.1761), who may have had a child Walter with Robert Ballantyne in 1796 Jean (b.1764); John (b.1766); and Margaret (b.1768), who may have married Robert Anderson. He could be the ‘John Loran’ recorded in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common); along with several other neighbouring farmers he paid a penny per 50 divots. He is probably the John who received poor relief in Kirkton in 1796. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Learmonth and the couple paid a fine to the Session for fornication. Their children included Benjamin (b.1769). The witnesses were Walter Irvine and John Murray. It seems likely he was related to Walter Irvine and Isobel Learmonth (probably related to his wife) in Wilton in 1765. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, possibly son of John and Helen Easton. He married Margaret Graham in 1778. He may be the John who died in Wilton Parish in 1806. Lady Margaret nee Turnbull (16th/17th C.) daughter of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and wife of Edward Lorraine, who was Laird of Harwood and Appotside. She may have been called ‘Lady Appotside’, and it is possible her husband gained these lands from her father through their marriage. She was said to be quite quarrelsome, particularly towards her own family, and suffered the wrath of Turnbull Clan, who laid waste to Harwood and Appotside, with matters coming to a head in 1598 and the years following. 200 cows were stolen, along with 600 sheep, 30 horses and ‘the haill insicht and plenissing’ of Harwood in 1598. The following year 30 cows and goods were taken from Appotside, which was also burned. And in the years 1599–1605 the woods at Appotside were cut down, including about 2200 trees. Her servant Lyall Brown was killed in 1598 along with William Lorraine in 1600 and Hector Lorraine of Harwood in 1604 (both probably her sons). Apparently she appealed to the Earl of Angus, who offered to repay her out of his own pocket. And although this never transpired, the feud came to an eventual end. She is probably the same Margaret who (along with her son James) brought a court action in 1609 against Andrew Hamilton for intruding on the lands of Tythehouse. Margaret (17th C.) listed as a midwife in 1676 among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for being ‘most active and guilty of ane insolent ryot latly committed upon the person of Mr. George Baptie, minister, in the churchyeard of Abbotrule’. This presumably means she objected to having an Episcopalian minister in her parish. The others listed included her daughter Anna Shiel, as well as Agnes and Bessie Shiel (probably related to her) and Elspeth Jackson. In 1684 she was listed at Gatehousecote among persons who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh; others included Andrew Shiel (surely related, and perhaps even her husband) and Grizel (perhaps her sister) there. She is further listed in 1684 along with Grizel and Beatrice (perhaps both her sisters). She may be the Margaret ‘in Graden Barronnie’ who refused to take ‘the oath of abjuratione’ in 1685. Her daughter Euphan was recorded in 1691 (as well as Jean, wife of William ‘Zeaman’, who could be another sister), when she was again referred to as a ‘mid-wyffe in Gettascot’. Probably the same Margaret was resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Marion (16th/7th C.) see Marion Turnbull Patrick (14th/15th C.) son and heir of Robert, who was Laird of ‘Homylknowle’ (i.e. Hummelknowes). In 1428/9 he resigned his lands into the hands of his overlord in favour of Janet Rutherford, ‘wyfe quhylem’ (probably ‘former wife’) of George Rutherford of Chattio, excepting his own liferent. He was described as her ‘eme’, meaning uncle (usually maternal); however, it has been suggested that she was a Rutherford of Edgerston. The reason was because she had helped him ‘wyn’ his lands of ‘Homylknole’ and the indenture was signed at ‘Lynthaulche’ (probably Lintalee). This document is the earliest record of Hummelknowe, and the earliest connection of the Lorraines with the Hawick area. He has a seal that was ‘a lion pas- sant, guardant crowned’. It has been suggested that his children included sons James (juror in 1439), Robert (juror in 1440) and John (Master of Coldstream Priory); however, there is no evidence for this and it seems more likely that James was from the Harwood branch and John from the Berwickshire line. Patrick (16th C.) mentioned in the records of St. Andrews University. He matriculated in 1525, graduated in 1527 and became a licentiate in 1529. It is possible he is the same Patrick who witnessed the charter for Hector of Harwood in 1531, making him perhaps son of James and Hector’s uncle. He could be the same man as the clerk of Glasgow Diocese. Patrick (16th C.) clerk of the Diocese of Glasgow who drew up the sasine for Wolfelee and other lands for David Home of Wedderburn in 1550. Probably the same notary of the Glasgow Diocese wrote a sasine of 1559 relating to lands in Wilton. He may also be the Patrick who witnessed a sasine in 1531 relating to Hector Lorraine; this suggests he was related to Hector, perhaps being his uncle and hence son of James. Probably the same Patrick also witnessed a bond signed in 1546, for entering Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst. Patrick (17th C.) listed along with William on a list of Communicants at Easter Heap in 1650. They were probably related to the later Lorraines of Wilton. Robert (14th C.) recorded in 1361 as a juror on an inquest held at Roxburgh regarding the possessions of Sir William Dacre. It seems likely he was closely related to Eustace, perhaps a brother or son. One possibility is that he was a son of Eustace and direct ancestor of the Lorraines of Hummelknowes. Robert of Hummelknowes (15th C.) recorded on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 (for deciding on the succession of lands in Hownam). He was also ‘Robyn Lorane, Lord of Homylknow’, whose son Patrick is recorded in an indenture of 1428/9. It seems likely that he was a descendant of Eustace, perhaps through his son Robert. It is possible that the same Robert was on a retour of inquest for the lands of Samuelston, held at Lauder in 1440. Bailie Robert (15th C.) along with Simon of Routledge, he was Bailie recorded in a sasine of 1453, and hence one of the first 2 known Bailies of Hawick. It is possible he was the same man as the Robert recorded in the 1420s. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Margaret Burn and their children included Beatrix (b.1688). The witnesses to the baptism were John Stuart and Robert Howden. It has been suggested that he was a son of George and Janet Fleming, but it seems more likely that he was closely related to the other Ashkirk Lorraines. He may be the gardener Robert, who witnessed a baptism for his brother Alexander in Ashkirk in 1695. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Story in Cavers Parish in 1707. He may have been ‘in Tour’. It is possible that he was a son of Robert and Margaret Burn. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Weens. His son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1728. Roger (13th C.) witness to a confirmation of a gift of Ralph Maule to Newbattle Abbey sometime before 1231. In 1234 he was witness for the settlement of a dispute between the Chapter of Moray and Alan Durward. He is also recorded as a juror for Earl Patrick of Dunbar and Earl Walter Comyn of Menteith in about 1245. His surname is written ‘Lorang’, ‘Lorang’ and ‘Loren’. It is possible he was an ancestor of the Scottish Lorraines, but there is no direct evidence of any connections. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote. In 1619 he had a bond with ‘his good friend’ Adam Turnbull, tenant of Bonchester Townhead. Given the timing, it is possible that he was a younger son of Edward of Harwood and Margaret Turnbull. It is suggested that he may have been father of Margaret (wife of a Shiel), who is recorded in Gatehousecote in the 1670s to 90s, and perhaps also father of Grizel and Beatrix (who are recorded along with Margaret in 1684), as well as Jean (recorded along with Margaret in 1691). Walter (17th C.) eldest son of Edward. In 1654 he and his father signed a contract with William Elliot of Harwood and the Binks, guaranteeing Elliot rentals from Appotside and its mill in return for a loan of 6,000 merks Scots. He signed his surname as ‘Lorane’. Probably the same Walter was recorded as ‘in Wytteteaugh’ (likely in Castleton Parish) as a debtor in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and the Binks in 1662. He may also be the Walter of Greins in the parochine of Castletoun’ who had a bond with his brother-in-law Robert Scott of ‘Cartertoune’ in 1667. In 1670 he was tenant in Riccartonfoot when there was a discharge recording that he was unable to pay £220. In 1671 he rented the farm of Powisholm for a year, rented Byreholm in 1673 and Byeagate in 1677. There is a tradition that he was killed at the Battle of Bothwell Brig in 1679, but there is no evidence to support this. It is possible he was the Walter ‘Lorane’ recorded in Hawick in the 1650s and 60s. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He may be the same man as the son of Edward, last Laird of Harwood. He is recorded in 1665 when he accused Marion Gillespie of ‘pulling the hair out of his head’. Probably the same Walter married Janet Shortreed and his children baptised in Hawick included: Isobell (b.1655), who could be the Isobel who married Thomas Laidlaw and lived in Roberton Parish or the Isobell who married George Minto and lived in Ashkirk Parish; and Beatrix (b.1657). Walter, who married Bessie Riddell, was probably also his son. It is also possible that another son was Archibald who was living in Hobbirk Parish when his son James was baptised in Bedrule. The witnesses to the 1655 baptism were John Scott (possibly of Gorrenberry) and Andrew Chisholme (possibly of Parkhill), while the witnesses in 1657 were John Scott and John Lorraine. Walter (17th C.) married Helen Scott in Ashkirk Parish in 1657. It is possible he was a son of Walter and grandson of Edward of Lorraine and Margaret Turnbull. It is possible that the Helen who married William Thomson in Selkirk in 1697 was his daughter. Walter (d.1679) resident of Abbotrule Parish. He was a Covenanter who was killed at Bothwell Bridge. Walter (17th C.) probably son of Walter and Janet Shortreed. He is recorded in 1681 as ‘in Hardine’ (probably Harden in Liddesdale) when he had a bond borrowing £3 from Walter Scott of Wauchope. He is recorded at Kirndean in 1681 and 1682 in the Buccleuch estates rental book, when it is clear that a lot of his livestock had died. He rented Greens in 1682, but it not recorded what happened to him after that. He married Bessie Riddell and their children son William was baptised in 1682, with witnesses. John Riddell (probably brother or father of Bessie) and William Wilson. If he was grandson of Edward of Harwood, then it is possible that his wife was related to the Riddells of Bewlie (who were associated with that family).

Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers. In 1714 he was in East Cavers and in at least 1717–24 in Denholm. His children included: Ann (b.1714); Thomas (b.1717); Margaret (b.1721); and George (b.1724). He may be the Walter who married Margaret Miller of Cauldmill in 1705. He may also be the ‘Walter Lorran in Kirktown’ whose son John (b.1706) was baptised in Cavers. It is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines.

Lorraine; in 1722 had bans proclaimed to Parish of Edinburgh and: in 1718 married Kath- burg. He was later a stabler in the South West ably died in childhood and are buried in Edin- Bessie (b.1712); and Anne (b.1714). Most prob- other children baptised in Edinburgh: Elizabeth 1721, was probably also his child. There were also Tofts. Margaret, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1709, when he was recorded being in Nether house. His son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish. He may have been related to George and Walter. William (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Borthaugh in most of the baptismal entires 1723–36. However, he may have been at Newton in 1733. He married Helen Ovens and their children included: Walter (b.1723); Margaret (b.1725); Bessie (b.1727), who may have married Robert Wilson and died in 1778; Elizabeth (b.1729); Francis (b.1731); Walter (again, b.1733); and Helen (b.1736). The witnesses in 1725 and 1729 were George Bell and Walter Riddell, in 1727 were Robert Cowan and James ‘Beasly’, in 1731 were George Bell and John Scott, in 1733 were Patrick Scott and John Hume and in 1736 were Walter Riddell and Thomas Kerr. He may be the William whose death is recorded in Wilton in 1777. William (c.1707–90) son of William, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. In 1740 he married Janet Clerk in Hawick; at that time he was still living at Nether Tofts. Soon afterwards he moved to Cadgillside farm at Chapelknowe near Canonbie, where his first son Walter (father of Dr. William) was born in 1742. Other children included: Janet (b.1744); Andrew (1746–1819); William (b.1749); John (1751–1829); James (1753–1822); and Margaret (1755–1833). His wife is recorded at Barnes when she had poor relief in 1889 and also several more times until her death in 1800. William (d.1769) resident of Doorpool. He is buried in Holbkirk Cemetery, with the funeral of Jean being recorded the same day. Dr. William (1772–1841) born at Chapelknowe near Canonbie, he was son of Walter and grandson of William, who was from Kirkton Parish. He was classics master at Selkirk Grammar School, then Rector of Jedburgh Grammar School and is described in the book ‘A Borders Schoolmaster’ (2000) by Audrey Mitchell. He was later Master at Glasgow High School. In 1803 he married Dorothea (or ‘Dora’), daughter of Thomas Scott of Bonchester. 3 of his sons were Doctors at Glasgow University (formerly spelled ‘Loran’, ‘Lorane’, ‘Lorain’, ‘Lo- raine’, ‘Lorayne’, ‘Loreen’, ‘Loreyn’, ‘Loreyne’, ‘Lorn’, ‘Lorain’, ‘Lorran’, ‘Lorrane’, ‘Lorren’, ‘Lorrence’, ‘Lorring’, ‘Lorrion’, ‘Lowrran’, etc.).
the Lorraines

The Lorraines (thu-lo-ränz) n. family that was once important in the Borders, particularly in Rulewater. The origin of the name is surely the region of Lorraine in north-eastern France, perhaps coming over to Britain at the time of William the Conqueror. The same French family from the Duchy of Lorraine provided a later connection with Scotland through Mary of Guise, who was daughter of Claude of Lorraine, becoming Queen Consort of James V and mother of Mary, Queen of Scots. It has also been claimed that the family is connected with the lands of Deloraine in the Ettrick valley. The early history is very unclear, as is the connection with the Barons of this name who inhabited part of Northumberland (including, confusingly, the farm of Hawick), specifically Kirkharle. Eustace, recorded in the 1330s to 50s, may have been an early ancestor of the Roxburghshire family. There were Lorraines at Hummelknowes near Hawick in the 15th century and Robert Lorraine was one of the earliest recorded Bailies of Hawick, in 1453. The Roxburghshire Lorraines held the lands of Harwood from at least the late 15th century until 1637. The name occurs several times among lists of men accused of mounting raids into England in the 16th century. The arms of Lorraine of Harwood are shown as 3 green laurel leaves on a silver background in 1542.

Lorraine Wud (lō-rän-wud) n. former name for a wood near Harwood or Appotside in the Rule valley, named after the family that once owned the land. It is recorded in 1606 that young William Lorraine was killed ‘within the wood of Lorane’ by a gang of Turnbuls, this being part of an ongoing feud with his mother Margaret, ‘Lady Appotside’, herself a Turnbull by birth.

Losh (losh) interj., arch. an exclamation of wonder, dismay or remonstration (perhaps a shortened form of ‘Lord save us’) – ‘His words they were sweeter than honey, but, losh! they were a’ he could gie’ [JoHa], ‘Losh man! hae done wi’ senseless clatter, Will siccan weeping mend the matter?’ [RDW], ‘Losh! hev ye no heard o’ the daein’s on the hill? Hoo for twae or three weeks o’ inspection an’ dreel ...’ [BM1900], ‘Whan losh! wi’ a yell Lizzie Nor’lan’ cam in, Her twae een glancin’ fire, an’ froe on her chin’ [BM1901], ‘Losh chaps, Aw mind yince ya a terrible frost and the Loan skyle was on ...’ [JEDM], ‘Losh mei, Aw dinna ken at a’, but ca’ him nae neebor o’ mine’ [JEDM], ‘Losh sakes mei! the thocht that come seipin, are fit ti gar an the tраuchles an the fashes gang leike the swan off the deike in a thowe’ [ECS], ‘Losh! The scene is fair entracin’, And draws a smile’ [RH], ‘... His head, losh me, is no’ that grey, Sae he may get a coutchie kimmer’ [TCh], ‘Losh he wammelt and tumm’led ower on to the fluir’ [UB], ‘My better half’s just come in wi a bang. And, losh man, her friends drove hame in a carriage’ [TCh], ‘But, losh me, what’s a’ this spread o’er And all the cause of gurgling mirth?’ [WFC] (local variants noted by G. Watson include ‘losh man!’, ‘losh mei!’ ‘losh sake!’ and ‘losh sakes mei!’; this is a euphemism for ‘Lord’, perhaps influenced by other exclamations, such as ‘gosh’).

Loss (los, lōs) v. to lose – ‘deh loss the heid’, ‘A hope it rains the whole weekend A hope ye loss yer fleg ...’ [T], ‘... Loss hauf their power the head to dyle, An’ haud the heart’ [JoHa], ‘Let them wha taste a social glass, Ne’er loss the time o’ rising’ [JoHa].

Loosit (lo-see’, -si’) pp., arch. lost – ‘... promeist be him to bring haill, saif and sound to Hawick, quilik he brak, drownet, and lossit be the way’ [BR1652].

Lot (lo’) n., arch. an assessed contribution for a common purpose – ‘... that each inhabitant who pays not stent nor lott shall be lyable for the same price ...’ [BR1722] (also written ‘lott’).

Lothian (lō-thee-in) n. general geographic name for the area around Edinburgh. Latterly it has included the counties of Linlithgow, Midlothian and Haddington, but it formerly applied to all the eastern part of the Lowlands, even including Roxburghshire.

Lothian (lō-thee-in) n. Joseph (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Joanna (b.1736); Peter (b.1738); and George (b.1742). The witnesses in 1738 were Walter Scott of Newton and Patrick Scott, younger of Alton, suggesting that his wife was related to these branches of the Scotts. The 1742 witnesses were merchant Charles Tudhope and mason James Harkness (formerly ‘Lowthian’).

Lothian an Border Horse (lō-thee-in-an-bōr-dur-hors) n. local Territorial Yeomanry Regiment. It was generally for the wealthier volunteers who had their own horse. It grew out of the Royal Edinburgh Volunteer Light Dragoons, set up in 1797 (with Sir Walter Scott as its first quartermaster) and the East Lothian Yeomanry Cavalry, set up at the same time by the Duke of Buccleuch. The 2 merged in 1800 to form the Royal Midlothian Yeomanry Cavalry. It disbanded in 1838, but the 2 units reformed in the 1840s, and amalgamated again in 1879, and were renamed the Lothian and Border Horse in 1908. C Squadron was based in Hawick, with detachments in the main towns of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. Many men volunteered for sevice in this regiment during WWII. In 1921 armoured cars replaced horses and from 1924 it was associated with the 4th Royal Tank Regiment. It became the 1st and 2nd Lothians and Border Horse in 1939, and saw action in North Africa, France and Italy during WWII. In 1956 it was amalgamated with other regiments to form the Queen’s Own Lowland Yeomanry and was again disbanded in 1967, although resurrected as the Scottish Yeomanry from 1992–99. ‘War Record of the 4th Battalion King’s Own Scottish Borderers and Lothian and Border Horse’ (1920) was written by W.S. Brown. Papers from the regiment are in the National Library of Scotland and some photos in the Museum.

Lothian Street (lō-thē-in-stree’) n. street on the high ground by Loch Park. The main buildings were erected in 1875, with several additional dwellings in the following few years. There was also part of the Lyle & Scott factory there. However, part of the east side was demolished in 1977 and made into a car park. It was named after Schomberg Henry Kerr, 9th Marquess of Lothian.

Lough (lowch) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535 when, along with several others, he was accused of taking grain from ‘le Schaw’ belonging to John Hall. In 1538 he had George Robson, John Robson, Walter Veitch, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott removed from his 20 merklands in Synton. Oliver (1826–1916) son of Walter, who was a carrier around Southdean. In 1848 he married Agnes, daughter of William Oliver (hind at Langraw). In 1851 they were living with his in-laws at Langraw Scaur. Around the late 1850s they emigrated to Nevada, U.S.A. His children included Walter (b.1848), William (b.1850), Betsey (b.1854) and Henry (b.1856). He died in Nebraska. Walter ‘Wattie’ (b.c.1785–1864) son of James and Christian Oliver, he was born in Jedburgh Parish. He was a carrier at Letham in Southdean Parish in 1841 and in 1851 was carrier and grocer at Gatehousecote. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Formerly Carrier’ at Old Gatehousecote. He ran a cart to Liddesdale in the days before the railway. He married Elizabeth (Betty) Storie in 1819. Their children were: James (b.1820), who married Euphemia Telfer; George (b.1821); Isabella (b.1823), who married George Telfer; Oliver (b.1826), who emigrated to the U.S.A.; Walter (b.1829), who married Isabella Rutherford; Thomas (b.1832), who was a labourer at Highend in 1851; and Mary (b.1834), who married Andrew Smith. Most of his children were born in Oxnam Parish and some were christened at the Free Kirk in Jedburgh. He died in Hobkirk (formerly written ‘Louche’).

loun see loon

lounder see loonder

loupered (low-purd, -pur’) adj., pp., arch. clootted, curdled – ‘...Sones on the girdle, made wi’ loupered milk, A jug o’ cream still warm frae the byre’ [WL] (also ‘lappert’ etc.; cf. lapper and loppert).

the Loupin Stane (th-lō-pin-stān) n. small-standing stone in an isolated area in Craik Forest, a little over a kilometer to the west-northwest from Wolfcleuchhead. The dimensions are 0.8 m long by 35 cm wide at the top, narrowing to a point, and just 5 cm thick. On one side are carved 2 heads and lettering, while on the other is inscribed ‘Wolfcleuchhead’. It is possible this is a mounting step from the steading of Wolfcleuchhead, moved to its present position at some point (see also lowpin-on stane).

the Loupin Stanes (th-lō-pin-stānz) n. small stone circle near Eskdalemuir, not far from ‘the Girdle Stanes’. There are 12 stones in an oval about 18 m across, including 2 larger ones that provide the ‘entrance’. The popular name comes the story that locals used to try to leap between these two stones until someone’s leg was broken (although they are probably too far apart for this to be feasible).

lourd (loord) adv., poet. rather, liked – ‘I wad lourd have had a winding-sheet, And helped to put it ower his head, Ere he had been disgraced for this to be feasible).

the Lousy Drain (thu-low-zee-drān) n. popular name for an open ditch in Hobkirk Parish in the 19th century. It ran down from Kirknew farm through the Parish school playground, and served as an open sewer, which older boys would try to jump over.

lout (lowt) v., poet. to bend, stoop – ‘...Laigh doun I louted on my knees, An’ preed the Lovel

Hunter’s pool’ [ECB], ‘The fairies wad hear, quo’ bonny Jeany Roole, And wi’ louting my back is sair’ [JTE], ‘Lang syne it was, Thon souchin simmer’s day, Wi’ cloths that sailed Lootin to their shaddas’ [DH] (see also loot).

Lovel see Simon Fraser

Lovat Mill (lu-vul-mil) n. factory of Teviotex at 15 Commercial Road.

Love (luv) n. John (20th C.) Headmaster of St. Margaret’s School around the 1940s and 50s. His wife Winnie was a teacher in the same school and Margaret’s School around the 1940s and 50s. His wife Winnie was a teacher in the same school and they had daughters Anne and Mary. The family emigrated to the U.S.A. in the 1960s.

Lovat see Simon Fraser

Lovat Mill (lu-vi’-mil) n. factory of Teviotex at 15 Commercial Road.

Love (luv) n. John (20th C.) Headmaster of St. Margaret’s School around the 1940s and 50s. His wife Winnie was a teacher in the same school and Margaret’s School around the 1940s and 50s. His family emigrated to the U.S.A. in the 1960s.

Lovat (lu-vul) n. Agnes (13th/14th C.) listed in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘Agneis Louel qe fu la femme Henry del counte de Rokesburg’, so she was presumably the wife of an already deceased Henry. Maurice, Parson of ‘Little Cavers’, who also appears on the Roll, may be her son or other relative. It is possible she is the same as the Eva, widow of Henry, who is recorded in 1294. Asceline (d.1119) probably the ancestor of the Lovels. His father was likely to have been Robert de Breheval, who held the castle of Ivery (or Yvery) in Normandy and came to England with William the Conqueror. He was a vassal of William de Breteuil and his surname was ‘Goello’ or ‘Goel’ (which is probably a variant of ‘Guelph’ or ‘Whelp’, i.e. the wolf-cub’, which became ‘Luppellus’ in the Latinised version of French-Norman). He may have also been known as ‘Gouel de Perceval’ and ‘Gouel de Yvery’, with his nickname ‘Lupus’ coming from his violent demeanour. Although he spent much of his life in Normandy, he held several estates in Somerset, as well as Titmarsh in Northamptonshire. He commanded Norman forces at the siege of Mante in 1087. He also had a lengthy series of sieges involving his liege, the Earl of Breteuil, from whom he eventually gained Ivery. It is said that he tortured the Earl of Breteuil, until he yielded and gave his daughter Isabel, along with a large dowry. He is said to have had 7 sons, including: Richard, who died before him; Robert, who succeeded, but only for a couple of years; William, who succeeded after Robert; John of Harptree, ancestor of the Barons of Harptree Gournay; and Roger, called ‘Balbus’ or ‘the Stutterer’ who was Lord of Grandisilva in Normandy. He also had a daughter, who married Radulfus Rufus. Baldwin (11th/12th C.) of Tintenhull, one of the earliest recorded Lovels. However, these early generations are confused, and it is unclear how he was related to the Lovels of Yvery. He probably succeeded his father Ralph in 1121 and was father of Ralph and possibly also Margaret (although she may have been Ralph’s wife). Henry (12th C.) possibly the Henry Lovel who was said to have been first given the Barony of Hawick, perhaps in the 1130s, and who is among those who encouraged King David to invade England in 1138. However, these generations are quite confused, and it is unclear whether he even existed. Henry (d.c.1194) Lord Cary, son of Ralph and Margaret, or possibly 3rd son of William Gouel de Perceval, and hence brother of Ralph. He succeeded in about 1159. He may also have had a brother, Thomas. He was probably born at Castle Cary, but also held the Barony of Hawick, and is likely to have split his time between England and Scotland. He paid feudal fees in Somerset in 1162. During the time of Robert, Dean of Bath (i.e. before 1166) he had his gift to the Priory of Brunton confirmed. He also witnessed several other grants in Somerset in the latter part of the 12th century. He was ‘Henry Luvel’ in 1166 when he witnessed a charter by King William to Robert de Brus. He is recorded as Baron of Hawick when he was a witness in 1166 and 1190. He was probably also the ‘henrici lupelli’ (i.e. Henry, Little Wolf) who is recorded in a charter (confirmed by Pope Lucius III in 1183, Pope Gregory VIII in 1187 and Pope Clement III in 1188) giving 2 oxgates of land at ‘Brancheulla’ (i.e. Brauxholm) to the canons of St. Andrews. This was witnessed by the first 3 clergymen known to be connected with Hawick. This same grant of 2 oxgates of land in Brauxholm to St. Andrews Priory in about 1175 was mentioned in a list of gifts in 1206, 1216, 1246 and 1248. In 1190 he was recorded in the Pipe Rolls for Dorset and Somerset. He married Alice de Cary, and his sons were Ralph (who died without issue) and Henry (who succeeded to the Barony of Hawick). Other children may have included Maurice and Richard, who exchanged these 2 oxgates for other nearby lands in about the 1190s. This Richard may have also succeeded the next Henry, and was therefore either his son or grandson. Henry (d.c.1216) Lord Cary, probably younger son of Henry, he succeeded his brother Ralph, who died in 1207. In 1197 he was assessed for fees for the Norman army. In the period 1198–1202 he was appointed as attorney in a case by Ralph de Trubleville. In 1207 he settled a case brought by Matilda, his brother Ralph’s widow, over lands she claimed she had been given in dower; this included 1/3 of the family’s barony in Scotland (presumably Hawick), but she settled for the manor of ‘Hunewic’ (i.e. Honeywick near Castle Cary), together with money and livestock. In 1208 he paid 300 marks for the livery of his lands, and still held some Somerset lands jointly with his mother Alice and sister-in-law Maud (the same as Matilda). In 1210 he paid King John to avoid going on the expedition to Ireland. He married Christiana and was succeeded by his brother (although some accounts say son) Richard. However this genealogy may be confused, and there may be another extra generation of Henrys and/or Richards. He may be the Henry who was among witnesses to a charter for Gilmerston in the Glasgow chartulary in the reign of William. His widow ‘Cristina’ secondly married Richard Cotet; in about 1222 she complained that Richard ‘Luvel’ (probably her brother-in-law, or possibly her son) had dispossessed her of some of her dower lands. In 1248 she complained again about being removed from her dower lands, and there was a complicated agreement over several lands, including ‘Honeywyk’ (i.e. Honeywick near Castle Cary). Henry (d.1262/3) of Castle Cary and Hawick, 2nd son of Richard, his elder brother William dying before their father. He married Eve (or Eva), who died in 1294. They had sons Richard and Hugh, who both succeeded. They also had daughters Alicia (the elder) and Cristiana (d.bef. 1264), who were both unmarried. Little else is known about him and it is unclear whether he played any direct role in the Hawick area. He may be the ‘Sir H.’ who witnessed an agreement in Somerset in 1256. In 1263 his son and heir Richard did homage to the English King and received his father’s lands. However in 1264 there was an inquest into the age of Richard’s brother Hugh, and whether he should be heir of ‘Kari Lowel’; his widow ‘Lady Eva Lovel’ is also mentioned. Also in 1264 his daughter Alicia brought a case against Hugh, complaining that he had tried to dispossess her from the lands that she and her deceased sister Cristiana had been granted. His widow Eva is further referred to in 1294 when her lands and her son Hugh’s lands were given to the custody of John de Soulis. Hugh (d.c.1290) of Castle Cary and Hawick, brother of Richard and 2nd son of Henry. In 1264 there was an inquiry into his age, since his brother Richard had died, and so he succeeded to the barony of ‘Kari Lovel’ (i.e. Cary). Also in 1264 his sister Alicia accused him of dispossessing her of a manor in Sussex, given to her and her deceased sister Cristiana; he was charged to allow his sister to keep her farm. He was recorded as Baron of Hawick in 1268. A 1268 plea against him for restoring a watercourse at Castle Cary mentions that his grandfather was Richard. A further case in 1268 involves his sister-in-law Cecilia and the land of ‘Wynkanton’. He was recorded as lord of ‘karycastel’ in the 1270s, in 1274 was ‘Sir Hugh’ of Cary when he made an agreement with the Prior of Bruton, and was ‘Hugone Luvel’ when he witnessed a grant for Bruton Priory. He married Eleanor (or ‘Alianors’) and their children were: Sir Richard, who succeeded in 1303 when still a minor, becoming Lord of Castle Cary and Baron of Hawick; and Olivia, who married John de Gournay. He was recorded in 1291 when his widow was directed not to re-marry without the King’s permission and John de Soulis was given custody of 2/3 of his lands until his heir reached majority. Additional lands and privileges of his (including the church of ‘Stoketone’) were granted to John de Soulis in 1292/3, and also in his lands were confirmed to John de Soulis, along with the lands which Eva Lovel (his mother) had held until his majority. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English record of 1306 as a supporter of Robert the Bruce who had been sent to a prison. It is unclear how he was related to the other Lovels of the time. Sir James (c.1316–42) only son of Richard the first Lord of Castle Cary. He married Elizabeth or Isabel around 1328, but died before his father. Their children were Richard (who died young) and Muriel (who inherited the titles and married Nicholas Seymour). Sir William of Douglas had a crown charter of 1341 for all his forfeited lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1342 his widow is recorded having livery of 2 manors in Somerset, which had been given to him by his father in 1328/9. Sir John (13th C.) recorded ‘as magistro Johanne Lovel’ on an assize in Cumberland in 1292, then in a court case in Newcastle in 1293, relating to affairs in Scotland. He was also recorded in the same way in 1296, in a document relating to equipping Edward I’s expedition into Scotland. He was certainly English, but it is unclear where he came from. He was also recorded as ‘the marshal’ who had come to pacify the dispute between the Welsh and English in Edinburgh. Lawrence (13th C.) recorded (probably early) in the period 1259–86 in a document relating to King Alexander at Lanark. He served as some kind of soldier. It is unclear how he was related to other Scottish Lovels. Margaret (d.bef. 1164) wife of Ralph. It is unknown what her maiden name was, but not impossible she was also a Lovel. She may have held the lands of Hawick after her husband’s death. Her son and heir was Henry. She secondly married Thomas of London (who also married Escina of Mow); with the consent of her sons Henry and Thomas she granted ‘Ughtredshaghe’ (probably Outerside) to Jedburgh Abbey at its foundation, as confirmed in about 1170. Maurice (13th C.) probably son of Henry. Along with Richard he exchanged these 2 oxgangs for other nearby lands in about the 1190s. He may be the Maurice who witnessed an undated grant to Richard, Lord of Cary, to the Priory of Bruton, with another witness being Henry, son of Richard. Maurice (13th C.) recorded as ‘Morice Louel, persone del Eglise de Petyt Cares, del counte de Rokesburgh’ (i.e. ‘parson of Little Cavers’) in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. In a list drawn up in 1777 he is transcribed as ‘Mauricius Lunel, Parsona ecclesiæ de Parva Cau- res’. The ‘Agneys Louel’, widow of Henry, who also appears on the Ragman Rolls may have been his mother. Note that there was another Maurice a generation or 2 earlier, probably another brother of the Richard who died in 1253. Muriel (b.1331/2) daughter of James, who died in 1342, she succeeded her grandfather Sir Richard in 1351, probably becoming Baroness Lovel. It is unclear if she inherited the Barony of Hawick, although control of the lands was certainly no longer in Lovel hands by her time. She married Nicholas, Lord St. Maur. Ralph (d.c.1121) one of the earliest known Lovels. He held Castle Cary in 1107. He was probably the son of Walter de Douai, Baron Bampton, who held the Castle at the time of the Domesday Book. However, these early generations are very uncertain, and it is unclear how he may have been related to the other contemporary Lovels. He may have been succeeded by Baldwin. Ralph (d.c.1159) of Tintenhull and Castle Cary, son of William (although possibly related to the near contemporary Baldwin, since accounts of these generations are very uncertain). He may have been the first family member to adopt the surname ‘Lovel’, based on the family nickname ‘Lupellus’, meaning ‘Little Wolf’ (which was also applied to his brothers Henry and William). He appears to have also had the nickname ‘Simelt’. Along with his father he was part of the rebellion against King Stephen of England, and defended Castle Cary in a siege in 1152. He is said to have married a daughter of Henry de Novo Mercatu, from whom he received Dunkerton in Somerset. This wife could have been Margaret, who appears to have been the heiress of Hawick (and so possible the barony was part of her dower lands), and died before 1164; it is not impossible that she was the Margaret who secondly married Thomas de London. He was succeeded by Henry, who was probably his brother (or possibly his son). He may be the Ralph who restored the grant of lands to the Priory of Bruton that his father had taken away; this was witnessed by ‘Thoma Lupell’, who was surely a close relative. Ralph (d.c.1207) eldest son of Henry, from whom he succeeded, before in turn being suc-ceeded in the Baronies of Castle Cary and Hawick by his brother Henry. His name is also recorded as ‘Rodolph’. He married Maud (or Matilda), daughter of Henry de Newmarche. In 1207, after he had died without issue, ‘Matilidibus’ claimed her dower lands and made a settlement with her brother-in-law Henry over rights to the manor of ‘Hunewic’ (probably ‘Honeywick’). In about 1222 his widow was now married to Ralph Lebutiler, when she and Christina (widow of Henry) com-plained that Richard had dispossessed them of their inheritance, including some lands in Scot-land. Richard (12th C.) of Castle Cary and Hawick, possibly son of Henry. He married Alice and their sons were William (who died young) and Henry. He is probably also the ‘Ricardi Lupelli domini de Hawic’ recorded in the Register of the Priory of St. Andrews in about the 1190s. There he exchanged 2 ‘bovates’ (i.e. ox-gates) of land between Whames and Whithope to the canons of St. Andrews, in exchange for lands in ‘Brancheshelm’ (i.e. Branxholm) which had been conferred by his father Henry. The boundaries of these lands are given, and are interesting in preserving several lost place names, namely ‘anesotd terre’, ‘chestris’, ‘farnop’, ‘lan-gesideburne’ and ‘quikenne’. He may also be the ‘Ricardi Luvell, lord of Cary’ who confirmed a gift to the Priory of Bruton, and whose confirmation was witnessed by his son Henry, as well as Maurice (who could have been his brother). Note that there are several Richards, Henrys and Ralphs at about this time, and so the details of the family tree are hard to disentangle. Richard (d.1253) probably son of Henry, and brother of Ralph and Henry. However, given the length of time that elapsed, it is also possible he was son of an additional Richard, and hence grand-son of Henry. He was probably the Richard ‘Luvel’ who was involved in a land transaction relating to Biddesham near Cary in 1203/4. He suc-ceded Henry in 1218, paying £100 for the livery of Cary and the other Somerset estates. In about 1222 he was described as tenant when there was a claim against him by Christina, widow of Henry. She had remarried to Richard Cotol, and claimed that he had disposed of her of dower lands of ‘Kary, Wreketon and Pidecumbe’, as well as other lands and rights. Also mentioned was Matilda, formerly wife of Ralph ‘Luvel’, and now wife of Ralph Lebutter, who also held lands in inheritance. These disagreements included ‘the land which Richard Luvel held in Scotland’. In 1231 he had a charter for demesne lands of Cary and also witnessed another charter. He is further recorded in the 1230s and 40s regarding knights service. In about 1237 he gave agreement that the Priory of Bath should hold the rights to the church of Castle Cary, as granted by his father Henry. In 1248 Christina ‘Luvel’ (stated to have been the wife of his brother) complained again that he owes her money and dower lands, ‘as well in England as in Scotland’. A court case against him in 1255 was adjourned because he was deceased by then. He married Alice, whose surname is unknown. After she was widowed, her marriage was granted to William Berkeley, but he married someone else and so she then married Nicholas de Haversham. Their children included: William, who died before him; and Henry, who succeeded. Richard (d.1263/4) of Castle Cary and Hawick, eldest son of Henry. He succeeded his father, but died only a year or two later, and was in turn succeeded by his brother Hugh. He married Cecily (or Cecilia), whose surname is unknown; she was involved in a plea regarding her dower lands of ‘Wynkanton’ in 1268. He is recorded as ‘Richard Lupell’ in the Scottish Exchequer Rolls in the period 1264–66 as late owner of the Barony of Hawick. Richard (13th C.). His lands are referred to in 1278 by the Sheriff of Somerset and Dorset, and again in 1283. It is unclear who he was. Sir Richard (c.1283–1351) Lord Lovel, son of Hugh. He was born at Castle Cary and was custodian of the castles of Corfe and Purbeck. He succeeded his father in about 1291, while still a minor, his guardian being John de Soulis. In 1297 he swore to Edward I that he would serve him against France. He is listed in rolls of knights in 1298 and 1301 and found 2 men to serve Edward I in 1302. In about 1303 he achieved majority and took up his estates. In 1306 he received 10 marks for helping Edward against Robert the Bruce. He probably left Scotland soon afterwards, since Branxholme (in the Barony of Hawick) was granted to Sir Henry Baliol in 1307, with a confirming charter in about 1321. Furthermore the Barony of Hawick was granted to the Earl of Strathearn (perhaps before 1329). In 1310 he received the Manor of ‘Wynfirthegle’ in exchange for his wife’s manor of Old Roxburgh. In 1318/9 he was ‘lord of Caricastel’ when he gave up his rights to some lands in favour of Montacute Priory, with his wife Muriel also being mentioned. He was also holder of the Barony of Hawick in one of the oldest existing records, when it was regranted by Edward III in 1347 (although at a similar time it was also granted to Maurice Murray by David II of Scotland). Sometime before 1310/1 he married Muriel (or Muriella), daughter and heir of John Soulis (his guardian) of Old Roxburgh. However, in 1316 he was given a charter of Sir John Soulis’ lands in Dumfries, as well as Old Roxburgh, but then Old Roxburgh was kept for the safety of Roxburgh Castle, and he was granted the Manor of Bradenach in Devon in exchange. In 1335 he had the castles of Corfe and Purbeck committed to him and his wife (Muriel Soulis). He was summoned to English Parliament in 1348 and 1350 as Lord Lovel. His children were: Joan, who married Sir John de Moels; James, who died before him and whose daughter Muriel succeeded, followed by her son Richard Seymour; and Eleanor, who married Roger Rouhait of Aston Rowant. It is probably the Richard whose seal bore a lion rampant on a background of crosses. The failure of the male line here ended the direct succession of more than 2 centuries. Robert (d.1121) son of Ascelin Goule de Percival and brother of William (at least in some accounts of the early Lovels). He probably inherited Castle Cary from his father in about 1119, but died soon afterwards. In 1119 he took up arms against Henry I, but negotiations, involving Radulfus Rufus (his brother-in-law) led him to switch allegiance to the King. He may be the ‘Robertus Luvellus’ who witnessed a gift to the canons of Bruton. He left no issue and was succeeded by his brother William. Roger (13th C.) son of Roger. In 1242 he and Richard de Dreyvot confirmed a grant of lands to the Canons of Bruton; ‘Domino Ricardo Lupello’ was the first witness and hence probably a close relative. He is recorded as ‘Rogero Lupello’ when he witnessed an agreement with the Priory of Bruton in 1253. Probably the same Roger was also recorded in some other Somerset documents at about the same time. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among men for whose murder William Clerk ‘apud ecclesiam foreste’ (i.e. at the Kirk of the Forest) had remission a the Justice- aire in Selkirk. He may have been one of the Lovel Court

The Lovel family was a prominent English family, originating from Normandy. They were granted lands in Eskdale and Minster Lovel in the 13th century. The family name may have been 'Gouel de Perceval', with 'Lovel' being first adopted by his son from the 'Lupellus' nickname. It is said that his nickname was the diminutive form of 'Lupus', which had been attached to his father. In some accounts of the early Lovels, he is the son of Ascelin Gouel de Perceval and younger brother of Robert, from whom he succeeded; however, these early generation are very uncertain, and there is dispute among authorities. He held estates of Yvery in Normandy and Cary, Weston, Stawell, etc. in England. Spending more time in England than his father and grandfather, he may have built the first stone castle at Castle Cary. He fought for Walera in a rebellion against Henry I about 1123, escaping imprisonment in 1124 and returning home in disguise, barefoot, having given the Seine ferryman his shoes. He supported Matilda against Stephen in the English civil war, resulting in Stephen besieging Castle Cary, taking it in 1138, but returning it on the promise not to support Matilda. The castle was again besieged in 1153, when William and his son Ralph reneged on this promise, but was saved by the arrival of the Earl of Gloucester's force. He is probably the 'Willelmus, qui cognominatur Lupellus' who had a charter with the Abbey of St. Peter of Chartres in the early 12th century. He also confirmed a gift to the Priory of Bruton. It is unclear if he was also Baron of Hawick, or if the barony was first held by his son, or even if it was held by another family member during his lifetime. He married Auberie, sister of Walera de Bellemonte, Earl of Mellent (and related to the Kings of France). Their children may have included: Walera, Baron de Yvery, whose descendants retained that Barony until the 15th century; Ralph, who succeeded to Castle Cary; Henry, who later succeeded; William of Titchmarsh and Minster Lovel, although this is disputed by some accounts; and Richard Perceval, ancestor of the Earls of Egmont.

William (14th C.) said to have forfeited lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale in the reign of David II. These lands were granted to William, Lord Douglas, younger. He is probably the Sir William who was at 'Haydenebruge' in 1327. However, it is unclear how he was related to James, who forfeited the same lands in 1341; it may be that the names were in error (also written 'Lovell', 'Lowel', 'Lupellus', 'Luvel', 'Luvell', 'Luvelius', etc.).

Lovel Court (lu-val-kor') n. street name for the courtyard developed behind Drumlanrig's Tower when the area was renovated in the early 1990s. It had once been the stabling area for the Tower Inn and a large building housing the Tower Garage (originally misspelled 'Lovell' on the street sign).

Lovel see Lovel the Lovels (thu-lu-vulz) n. family name of Norman nobility who were given lands around Hawick by David I in the 1120s or 30s. The family held the lands of Yvery in Normandy. They may have settled in Teviotdale in the previous reign of Alexander I. Their lands included Brauxholme, which they held until 1307. They built their castle, the Moat (or Motte), a wooden palisaded tower on a mound of earth, as a symbol of their lordship of the lands around Hawick. They later built a more substantial tower where Drumlanrig's Tower now stands, as well as rebuilding St. Mary's in stone. The Lovels held the patronage of the church in Hawick until 1355. The family also held lands elsewhere, particularly Castle Cary in Somersetshire (south of Bristol). Castle Cary was a Norman fortification, built at the foot of Lodge Hill, and held by the Lovels from perhaps 1107 until it was destroyed about 1155. The fortifications can still be seen above the town, including a mound where the castle stood (reminiscent of Hawick's Moat). During the Wars of Independence their loyalties lay with the English and the family returned to Somerset. Their Hawick lands were forfeited by David II and given to Maurice Murray, later being passed to Archibald Douglas in the 15th century. The Lovels continued to hold lands in Somerset long after the castle there had been destroyed, and the town there is still called Castle Cary. The family name probably derives from an early member nicknamed 'Lupellus' (Little Wolf) which became 'Lupel' and then 'Lovel'. Their arms were a gold background strewn with crosses, and with a blue lion rampant. The identification of Lovel of Hawick and Brauxholme with Lovel of Castle Cary was only made in about the 1870s by historian Joseph Bain. Note that there were other prominent branches of the family, e.g. the Lovels of Titchmarsh (or 'Tichmarsh, in Northamptonshire), the Lovels of Minster Lovel (in Oxfordshire) and the Lovels of Ballumbie (in Angus), but they may not all have been directly connected. There is a Lovel mentioned in the Scottish ballad 'The Battle of Otterburn' and a ballad called 'Lord Lovel' (about a knight who dies of sorrow after returning to hear of the death of his love) – 'What shameful deed besmirched with guilt Attached to the Lovels' name? What untold sin? – no mortal knows Except the monk who shivered the same [JCG].

It seems to have coincided with the west side of the Hermitage Water. However, the precise extent of the area, as well as the pronunciation and any connection with modern lands, is unknown.

Luff (luf) n. John George (1845/6–1918) local hotel proprietor. Born in Sussex, he came to Hawick about 1877 as a waiter in the Tower Hotel, where he developed a novel shorthand slate attached to his waiter’s tray. It is said that he spoke fluent French and Italian, having spent time on the Continent. He went into business on his own, later having the Central Hotel built, which he ran originally as a temperance hotel. He later offered to demolish the ‘Coffin End’ at his own expense if the Town would grant him a liquor licence; this request was denied, but after improving his hotel and being granted a licence, he did in fact have the wooden eye-sores removed and gifted the land to the Town. He was a vocal opponent of the Clubs of the Town and in general, claiming they were merely unlicensed drinking establishments; he published some pamphlets on this topic. He was a Councillor for Wilton Ward in the period 1901–04, being fond of novel schemes and for quoting aphorisms, and famous for speeches he gave from the Central Hotel balcony. On one such famous occasion he proposed a scheme to turn the Park into a pleasure park, with a huge artificial lake. He published ‘A system of mastering Pitman’s manual’ (1877), ‘Thoughts on clubs by a country cook’ (1899) and ‘The Income Tax Corrector (c.1910). His engraved shorthand slate was in the Museum, and he is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery – ‘When the moon is made of green cheese, And pigs begin to fly, Though they are the most unlikely birds That ever went into the sky. When Councillor Luff is Provost, Oh! won’t the pork be high!’ [T]. ‘For, by mysel’, gin that he dreads yer puirish, An’ hasna wherewitha’ to creesh his yer puirish, An’ hasna wherewitha’ to creesh his, He’s a scrumptious sort of man like the deef eddart that stapps hir lug’ [HSR], ‘Fleis an midges an bummies war skiddlin an bizzin aboot ma lugs’ [ECS], ‘...when ma lugs are staaed o throaply blethers ...’ [ECS], ‘...gettin cluffs on the lug frae Dickie Chalmers like abody else’ [WFC], ‘...Listenin’ wi battered lugs to births and daiths’ [DH], ‘Scotland Sheet Five is a square o’ singing water, And names that are sangs, gin ye’v a lug to hear ...’[DH], ‘And if ye are tempted on aith to sweir, Just ponder this, if ye’v lugs to hear ...’ [WL], ‘Though they rattle ane’s lugs wi’ their bletherin’ noise ...’ [WFC], ‘...She bit twae inches off my lug, Whilk pained me sair’ [WP].

Lunardi \( (\text{loo-nar-dee}) \) n. Vincent \( (1759–1806) \) balloonist, who made the first substantial flight in Britain, and was a household name in the late 18th century. He made several flights in Britain in the 1780s, including from Edinburgh and from Kelso (to Northumberland, perhaps the world’s first international flight!). After launching from St. Andrews Churchyard, Glasgow on the 23rd November 1785 at 1.45 p.m. (with a crowd estimated at 100,000), he had an adventurous voyage, with the wind blowing him to the south-east. He tried to land on a hill near Dryhope (apparently thinking that St. Mary’s Loch might be an arm of the sea), where he lost his anchor, flag and some ropes, and was spotted by many local people. He eventually came down about 2 miles east of Alemoor at about 3.55, being fortuitously met by Mr. and Mrs. Chisholm of Stirches, who had shouted ‘Lunardi, come down’ at him. It was an official street name being Longbaulk Road, usually referring to the road out to the country, with its official street name being Longbaulk Road, continued as Crumhaughhill Road – ‘The lad that lowes the Lum-Back neeps Richt cheerly he plies the paiddle …’ [DH].

Lundie \( (\text{lun-dee}) \) n. Allan \( (16th/17th \text{C.}) \) studied at St. Salvador’s College and graduated from St. Andrews University in 1586. He became Vicar at Lessuden (St. Boswells) in 1596. He was rebuked by the Presbytery in 1608 and again in 1610 for negligence and being ‘ane player at cairdis’, among other complaints. He was translated to Hassendean in 1610, but only stayed about a year before moving on to Channelkirk in 1611 (basically he had a choice, and while he preferred Hassendean, the Presbytery advised Channelkirk). He went to Hutton and Fishwick in 1614, demitted sometime before 1636, but was recorded as still alive in 1639. His descendants held land at Spittal (near Berwick) for several generations. He married Agnes Trottar and their children were James (next minister of Hutton), William, John, Andrew and Elizabeth. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1517 being given the wardship of the lands of the deceased Walter Scott of Howpasley, as well as rights over the marriage of his daughter. These were the superiority of lands forfeited after the execution of Alexander, Lord Home. In 1535 there was a reversion of his charter for the lands of ‘Apiltrehall, Mydschelis, Crawlawhill’ plus their mills, ‘Cotlaw, Butrig and Our and Nethir Manys of Hassindene’; the lands returned to George, Lord Home. He was probably related to the family of Lundie of that Ilk, but it is unclear if he played any other role locally. William (18th C.) tailor in Ormiston, recorded in 1753 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. Jean ‘Blinnd Jean’ (d.1778) Hawick resident whose death is recorded along with her nickname. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Clerk and their unnamed child was baptised in 1671. It seems likely that he was father of weaver John, as well as Helen, who married James Scott ‘Laird’. John (17th C.) married Isobel Young in Roberton in 1687. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the weaver who in 1700 (along with James Scott, Laird’) witnessed a baptism for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan. He gave evidence in 1710 about a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk between 2 other weavers. He married Marion Wight in Hawick in 1701. Their children included: Marie (b.1701); Janet (b.1703); and James (b.1705). The witnesses in 1703 were James Scott ‘Laird’ and weaver Mungo Swan, and in 1705 were John Swan, James Scott ‘Westport’ and James Scott ‘Doctor’. It seems likely he was son of the earlier weaver John and the wife of James Scott ‘Laird’ was Helen Lunn, who may have been his sister. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Rule and their children included: Bessie (b.1719); Jean (b.1722); and Isobel (b.1725)., weaver in Hawick who gave evidence in 1710 about John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabella Eckford, who came from Crailing. Their children included: Walter (1806–79), who was born in Hobkirk Parish, married Margaret Dalgleish and live in Selkirk: Agnes (1807–90), who married Francis Govenlock; George (b.1809); Elizabeth (1817–93), born in Kirkton Parish, married Archibald Hall and died in Langholm; and Robert (1817–56), who married Isabella Armstrong. He secondly married Nelly (d.1870), daughter of John Hotson. John (18th/19th C.) married Elspeth Hall in Southdean Parish in 1803. His surname may have been ‘Lund’. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Isobel Eckford and their children included George (b.1810) and Elizabeth (b.1811). John (19th C.) married Helen Thomson in Cavers Parish in 1825. John (b.1802) son of James and Janet Reid. He was a woollen and linen draper in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was listed as a merchant in Lilliesleaf in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was recorded on the south side of Main Street. He lived with his mother Janet and sisters Margaret and Jean. He was probably unmarried when he died. His drapery business was carried on by James Hood, and in 1872 (after his death) was renamed John Lunn & Co. John (1812–71) from Lilliesleaf, he wrote occasional pieces for the local press. He could be the same man as the draper in Lilliesleaf. He chaired the Lilliesleaf centenary Burns Night. John (19th C.) married Mary Bruce in 1851 and their son Walter was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1851. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1689 he was fined by the Magistrates for the ‘exhorbitant’ wedding of his daughter to William Douglas. He was listed as a merchant among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same Thomas ‘Lune’ was listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the ‘T. Lun’ who was fined by the Bailies in 1675 ‘in not coming to the night watch when he was charged to do so’. He may be the Thomas, married to Margaret Armstrong, whose children baptised in Hawick included Marion (b.1672) and Alison (or perhaps ‘A son’, b.1675); the witnesses in 1675 were James Newbie and William Swan. He witnessed a baptism for Patrick Bridges in 1678, along with William Swan. Thomas (17th/18th

C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1724 he appeared before the Session to apologise for defaming his fellow weaver William Scott. He was probably the Thomas born in Hawick in 1686 to James and Marion Wilson. Thomas ‘Tom’ (18th/19th C.) weaver at Shuttlehaa near Teviothea. It is unclear how he was related to other local Lunns. He was married to the sister of James Swanson, who brought Tom Jenkins to the area; however, her name is not known. After Swanson died a few days after returning to Hawick, he looked after Jenkins, as well as Swanson’s illegitimate son James. Thomas (18th/19th C.) stocking manufacturer in Lilliesleaf, in partnership with James Sterling, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Walter (b.1740) baptised in Hawick Parish, son of James and Helen Rae. He lived at Colterscleuch. He married Betty Turnbull in Hawick in 1765. Their children included: Betty (b.1766), who married Archibald Scott; James (1769–1839), who married Elizabeth Telford; Walter (b.1773), who married Betty Hobkirk; John (1777–1861), who married Isabella Eckford and died in Newcastle; Robert (1782–1865), who married Euphemia Hope and died in Langholm; and Janet (1783–1862), who married John Sword and died at Easter Alemonor. Betty who was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1756 (unless this is an error) may also have been his child. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He paid the horse tax in 1792–94 and the cart tax in 1797. He became bankrupt in 1799. In 1801 he is described as ‘Merchant or Travelling Packman, laterly residing in Hawick’ whose estate was sequestered and he was the subject of a petition by his trustee Hawick merchant John Nixon (this being written by Sir Walter Scott). Nixon opposed his request to be declared ‘cessio bonorum’, on the basis that he had in fact misled his creditors in various ways. In 1803 he was in Edinburgh Tolbooth, presumably the result of being a debtor. His wife was Elizabeth Hay (formerly wife of William Borthwick), daughter of Alexander Hay and Janet Smith. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Berry Hobkirk in Cavers Parish in 1808. Walter (1803–73) son of James and Elizabeth Telford. He was born in Teviothead Parish and worked as a shepherd and agricultural labourer, living at Meadshaw in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1828 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Grieve and Margaret Glendinning; she died in 1883. Their children were: Isabella (1828–60), who married John Preston and died in Lilliesleaf; James (b.1830); Elizabeth (Betty, b.1834), who married John Murray; James (again, b.1836), who married Margaret Hunter; Agnes (1842–94); and Jane (1844–59). Walter (?–??) writer of the local poem ‘Thochts o Langsyne’. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Appletreehall in 1732 and Burnhead in 1737. He married Janet Hislop in 1731 and their children included: James (b.1732); Agnes (b.1734); John (b.1737); William (b.1739); and James (b.1742). The witnesses in 1732 were James and John Dryden and in 1737 were Walter Scott and Thomas Kyle. William (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1774 when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish. Adam (b.1776) was probably also his child (formerly written ‘Lun’, ‘Lune’, etc.).
that ye’re aa luppen’ [ECS], ‘His bedlin finger’s luppen’ [ECS] (this is the past participle form of lowp, with the past tense being lap or lowpit).

luppen-oot (lu-pin-oo’) adj., arch. flushed through blushing, broken out in a red rash – ‘A luppen-oot face’ (cf. flown-oot) [ECS].

Lurden (lu-dirn) n. farm in the former Hassendean Parish, just to the north of Knowetownhead (this is an old Scots word for ‘mean fellow, sluggard”).

Lurden Burn (lu-dirn-burn) n. small stream that rises near Clarilaw, passes Hassendeanburn farm and joins the Hassendean Burn at Lurden. A footbridge over the burn gives access to the farm.

Lurden Entry (lu-dirn-en-tree) n. former name for a track leading from Lurden and Knowetownhead to the B6359 just east of Horsleyhill. There was a railway bridge over the track here, and another bridge over the railway to the south.

Lurgie (lu-gi) n. nickname of Robert Wilson, deriving from the family home of Lurgiescleuch.

Lurgies Burn (lu-gi-burn) n. stream that runs into the Harwood Lake in the upper Rule valley. It is formed from Black Cleuch and the Freestone Cleuch.

Lurgiescleuch (lu-gi-cloo) n. farm on the track above Harwood, lying on the Lurgie Burn. It was the former home of Hawick historian Robert Wilson’s family (probably his grandfather), hence his nickname ‘Lurgie’. It once formed the eastern quarter of the lands of Fairnielee and was sold by William, Earl of Lothian in 1647 (along with Stanedge) to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers. There was 1 hearth listed on the tax rolls at the end of the 17th century. John Wilson was there in 1786. James Dryden and Thomas Potts were there in 1821. Shepherd James Wilson and his family were there in 1861 and G. Pringle in 1868. An old road crosses from here to Langburnshiel in the Slistrig valley (it is ‘Lurgiescleuch’ in 1647 and ‘Lurgiscleugh’ in 1694 and 1786; the farm is marked ‘Lurgiscleugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name is obscure).

Lurgie’s Well (lu-gi-wel) n. popular name for a spring beside St. Leonard’s, named after Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson, from it being a favourite rendezvous of his. It is said that he fell asleep there and caught the chill that led to his death.

luskee (lus-kee) n., poet. meaning uncertain – ‘In the upland way . . . the luskees there that busk the brae Are the bees that mak’ the honey’ [HSR].

Lustruther (lu-stru-thur) n. farm and surrounding area in Southdean, just south of the main road between Chesters and Southdean. Robert Oliver was tenant there about 1502. The Olivers farmed there for many generations, this being the same family as the Olivers of Dlinlabyre, and said to have been descended from the Strynds branch. It has also been stated that around the 17th century the family made a fortune from driving Scottish cattle to markets in England, when that was illegal. It was described being 2 steadings valued at 50 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In 1541 the tenants listed on the rental roll were William (‘the Lawyer’), Marion (his mother), John (‘Blackhead’), another John, Katherine, Marion, Janet and Robert Oliver: it was split into 4 parts, with total value 50s. A tower near here was burned by Dacre’s men (led by Sir John Radcliff) in late 1513 and by the English again in 1544; there is now no sign of the tower house, and the modern farmhouse bears the date 1777. William Oliver, Hob Oliver and John Oliver, younger, were all ‘of Lustruder’ when they were among Olivers swearing allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. It is said that around the 17th century the Olivers of Lustruther made a fortune engaged in (illegally) driving cattle across the Border. David Turnbull, tenant there, was exiled for perjury in 1622. The tenants of the farm in 1669 were Agnes Shiel and William Oliver. Christian Oliver was recorded there in 1684. George Riddell was there in 1688, John Oliver in 1694, William Slatter in 1797 and James Fair around the 1820s. Above the plantation known as Lustruther Strip is a short linear earthwork, and in the same area there is a quarry, field boundaries and rig and furrow lines (the origin is probably Old English ‘hlose’ and Middle English ‘struther’, meaning ‘the pig-sty by the marsh; the name is first recorded in 1502 as ‘Lustrurthir’, it is ‘Lurchestrother’ in 1513, ‘Lustrother’ in 1538, ‘Lustrudir’ in 1539, ‘Lustruder’ and ‘Lustrodder’ in 1544, ‘Lustruder’ in 1562, ‘Lstromther’ in 1583, it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Listrother’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Listrutherr’).

lut (lu’, lut) v., poet. to let – ‘An’ he lut it fa’ in the middle o’ thair camp roun’ about thair bydlin’-pieces’ [HSR]. ‘The king sendet an’ lowe-set him; een the ruulir o’ the peeples, an’ lut him gae free’ [HSR] (cf. luit and lut).
Lutherdale (loo-thur-däl) n. Andrew (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Abbotrule in 1476 when he supplicated to the Pope to be allowed to hold 2 benefices at once. His name appears as ‘Luderdel’. Probably the same Andrew was Abbot of Dryburgh 1482–1508. He seems likely to be related to the Lairds of St. Mary’s Isle in Kirkudbrightshire, who appear to have moved there from the Roxburghshire and Berwickshire area in the mid-16th century. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Andrea Ludderdaill’ when he witnessed the baronial sasine for Hawick in 1511/2. This was along with Robert (Chaplain) and James, who were presumably related. He also witnessed the sasine of 1514 for James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He may be the same as the earlier Andrew, or else was probably related to him. David (d.bef. 1486) recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale 1474–75. His is probably the ‘Duncan archd. of Glasgow’ mentioned in 1474. He appears as Archdeacon of Dunkeld 1475–79. He was also Canon of Dunblane and Rector of St. Ternan in Arbuthnott. He served as Comptroller (i.e. responsible for accounts) under James IV. James (15th/16th C.) probably related to Andrew and Robert, who also witnessed the 1511/2 sasine for the Barony of Hawick, the ceremony taking place at the Mote. It is possible he is the ‘James Liderdele, chapellan native to Holderness’ when he witnessed the baronial sasine for Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is recorded as ‘domino Roberto Ludderdaill, capellano’, so he was Chaplain, presumably of Hawick, and held a Masters degree. Andrew and James were also witnesses, and so probably brothers or sons. He also witnessed the sasine for the Barony in 1514, listed after Alexander Newton, ‘vicario de Hawik’. This suggests he had a subsidiary function to Newton, or was in charge of one of the smaller chapels within the Barony. Probably the same ‘domino Roberto Luthirdaill’ was listed in a Glasgow Diocese document in 1510. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1432 to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sherifffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; there his name is recorded as ‘Thoma Luderdail’, and he is listed as a Burgess (presumably of Hawick) along with Simon Routledge. He was also ‘Thoma de Lutherdale’ in 1452 when he was among 4 Burgess of Hawick on the list of witnesses to the sasine granting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is recorded in an early Hawick sasine of 1453, where his name was written ‘Thomas of Lutherdale’. In 1455 he was ‘Thomas de Luthirdaill’ when he witnessed a document at St. Mary’s relating to the lands of Whitchesters. And in 1456 he was one of the witnesses for another Whitchesters document, where he is listed as ‘Thoma de Lutherdale’ and one of the burgesses (of Hawick presumably) (also spelled ‘Luderdale’, ‘Ludderdaill’, ‘Luthirdaill’, ‘Luthirdaill’, ‘Luthirdaill’, etc.; this may be a variant of ‘Lauderdale’; cf. Liddersdale, which may be based on ‘Liddesdale’, but may in some cases be the same surname).

Lyall (II-ul) n. Joseph C. (19th C.) registrar for Ewes Parish in at least the 1860s to 1880s. He also served as Session Clerk and Clerk to the School Board. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1940–2020) born in the Haig, son of lorry driver Tom and Ina Scott, he attended Trinity and the High School. He was known as a successful rugby player in the back row and as centre for the Y.M. and also played for Hawick R.F.C. He worked Turner & Rutherfords, Braemar and John Laing, ending up as knitting manager. He married Georgie Collins and they had children Julie, Kirsty and Kendra.

Lyand (II-aud) pres. part., arch. lying – ‘... with the pertinentis, liand within the baronie of Branxhelme ... ’ [SB1569], ‘... for the composition of hir teindis of Trowis, liand within the parrochin of Cauers’ [SB1574], ‘... of the said lands of Flex heritable pertaining to him liand contiguous with and to our Common of Havicke ... ’ [BR1692], ‘... upon ane tenement of land of his in Hawick, lyand betwixt the land of James Brown on the north part ... ’ [JW] (also written ‘liand’).

Lydgate (lid-gā) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Lydgat’ in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Several of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where he was from.

Lyn money (II-in-nu-nee) n., arch. unused money – ‘Lyn money or eidl (idle) money = unused capital, or money not invested in any business or enterprise, etc.’ [ECS].

McDonald nee Robson, ‘Nan’, M.B.E. (1929–2010). Born and lived in Hawick all her life, she had several jobs, including librarian at Newmill. She was associated with many local clubs and charitable organisations, in particular with the Scouting movement along with husband Rob, for which she received an M.B.E. in 1988. She received many honours from the Scouts, including the Silver Wolf, serving as a leader for about 60 years. She gave a talk to the Archeological Society on the history of Scouting in Hawick. She was also awarded the Paul Harris Fellowship by the Rotary Club and had a village school named after her in Kenya, following her work with the Borders Exploration Group. A memorial cairn was erected on Whitchesters Hill in 2011, with an associated walk. The top of the cairn is inscribed ‘Baden-Powell Do your best. Try and leave this world a little better than you found it’. Her children were Ruth, Joyce and Andrew.

John (17th C.) possible name for resident near Leaugh in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. His name appears to be written ‘Leule’. John (18th/19th C.) John recorded as ‘John Lisle in Denholm’ in 1818 when his marriage to was Jean Turnbull was announced in Melrose Parish. Fr. John Stevenson (1850–c.1920) born in Derry, he served in the army, but becoming a convert to Catholicism, he abandoned a military career to train for the priesthood. He was ordained in 1889, became assistant at Falkirk and then served as Hawick’s priest 1892–1912. He was known as a quiet man, but always at the beck and call of his congregation. He personally taught the older pupils in the mornings and held a boy’s club after school. He oversaw the widening of the seatings within the chapel. In failing health, he was transferred to Peebles. Robert 2nd Lord Lyle (d.1497) son of Robert, 1st Lord. He was based in Renfrewshire. His name is ambassador to England from 1472. In 1482 he was charged with treasonable communication with James, 9th Earl of Douglas, but was acquitted. He gained some of the Earl of Angus’ lands in 1485. In 1488 he was assigned the lease of Sundhope in the Yarrow valley and gave up the lease on ‘Garlauchleuch et Blakhous’. He was one of the Justiciars at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh in 1493 and in Jedburgh and Selkirk in 1494. He was involved with negotiations with James III before the Battle of Sauchieburn (where he was probably present) and afterwards when James IV was crowned, for whom he served as Royal Justiciar. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Robert S. ‘Rob’ (1921/2–91) brought up in Hawick, he worked with Hawick Hosiery Co., but then became an apprentice with Ingles the joiners. He served in the R.A.F. in WWII and later became a cabinet maker with Temples House Finishers. He then trained at Moray House and became a High School woodwork teacher for the next 30 years. While there he started the High School Pipe Band and was also a guidance teacher. He was also a founder member of the Trades rugby team. He was a piper with the Home Guard, Ex-Servicemen’s and Scout Pipe Bands (which he restarted in 1972). He was heavily involved with the Scout movement for most of his life, becoming Group Scout Leader for Hawick, Assistant District Commissioner for Roxburgh and Border Scout Mountain Adviser. He was awarded the Medal of Merit in 1972 and the Silver Acorn by the Chief Scout in 1980. In 1954 he married Nan Robson. Walter (16th C.) ‘exhorter’ of Southdean Parish in 1567. Perhaps the same Walter (although recorded as ‘Pyle’) was exhorter at Foulden in 1563; it is possible that ‘Foulden’ is an error for ‘Souden’. William (b.1796/7) from Melrose, he was a farm steward in the Hawick area. In 1851 he was living at ‘Pitt Cottage’, near Branxholme Braes. His wife was Helen, and they had children, John, Thomas, William, Margaret and Alexander. William (1833–1904) co-founder of Lyle & Scott’s. Born in Hawick, he initially travelled for William Laidlaw & Sons, then managed Wilson & Armstrong’s. Along with Walter Scott he founded Lyle & Scott as a hosiery manufacturers in 1874/5, running the company alone after Scott died in 1892. Not prominent in public life, nevertheless he was a manager of the Cottage Hospital and benefactor of the Jubilee Nursing Scheme, as well as being Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was an elder at St. Andrew’s Free Church and a staunch Liberal. A keen outdoor sportsman, he tenanted the Pilmuir shootings for many years. He was also a keen gardener, as attested by the grounds at his home, Kildowan. He married Agnes, daughter of weaver Charles Scott; she died in 1899, aged 68 and was a cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray (formerly written ‘Lisle’ and variants).

Lyle an Scott’s (lil-in-skots) n. knitwear company with main factory on Liddesdale Road. It was established by William Lyle and Walter Scott as a hosiery manufacturers in 1874, the pair having previously worked as managers in other factories. The firm once had premises on Lothian Street (certainly in the early 1900s), and this was probably the original factory, built for them by Marchall & Son, with designs and joinery by A. Inglis & SOn. The firm became a limited company in 1897. The company bought the Liddesdale Road property around 1939, but it was taken over by the War Department and used as a munitions factory until after the War. Like other companies, it moved into twin-sets and other fashion knitwear by the mid-20th century. In 1938 they made an agreement with Cooper’s in the United States to be the sole British manufacturer of Jockey Y-front underwear. There were boom years in the 1950s with the production of Y-fronts, and in the 1960s with highly patterned garment. Since 1975 the company has had a Royal Warrant by appointment to HRH the Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh. The company merged with Wolsey Ltd. in 1964 and became part of the Courtauld’s Group in 1967. The company trademark is a golden eagle. The company’s additional premises at Burnfoot were vacated in the 1990s and destroyed in a fire in 2005.

Lyme an Scott’s Brig (lil-in-scots-brig) n. footbridge across the Slitrig connecting the Back Braes to a footpath behind the Lyme & Scott’s factory on Liddesdale Road. It was built in about 1957 by an engineering company from Monmouth, under the instruction of Adam Balmer, chief engineer of the factory. There had previously been flat stepping stones there, which were useful when the river was low. With the expansion into Y-fronts the company built the bridge to assist its workers from the West-end (also sometimes called ‘the Backbrae Fitbrig’).

Lyme (li-mee) n. former informal name for Limecleuch – ‘There is one at the Carlanrigg, Might sof’en the heart o’ auld Siney; But gin ye want lasses that’s trig, Gae up the burn fa’ther. Might sof’en the heart o’ auld Siney; But gin ye want lasses that’s trig, Gae up the burn fa’ther’ [JoHa] (also written ‘Limey’).

Lymecleuch (li-mee-klooch) n. farm on the side road south-west of Teviothead. Robert Grieve was there in 1618. In 1670 it was purchased from William Elliot, younger of Stobs, by Simon Elliot of the Binks and Swinside, William Elliot of U nthank, and William’s son Adam. At that time it included the lands of Corriesike, Langlyre and Giddenscleuch. In 1678 it was valued at £1000 and part of the estate of Elliot of Stobs. The precise ownership in the late 17th century is complicated. Sir William Elliot of Stobs and William Elliot paid the land tax in 1678 for their halves of the lands, each valued at £500.

Adam Elliot of Mosspeeble gained a charter of the lands in 1673, but lost them in 1687. In that year Sir William Elliot of Stobs, issued a charter to his brother John for these lands, but John did not gain possession until 1695. About 1695 William and Robert Elliot of Limecleuch and Penchrise were charged with theft by John Riddell of Haining; failing to appear, their surety, Gilbert Elliot of Stobs paid the fine, and after a further payment acquired both farms. Adam Elliot of Limecleuch was involved in a legal action with Anna Duches of Buccleuch in the period 1698–1703. Adam Elliot was there in 1705, Walter Scott in 1708, James Telfer in 1717 and James Jardine in 1719. William Pott was herd there in 1727, Thomas Davidson was there in 1730 and John Rae in 1731. In 1788 it was valued at £1000 and owned by Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs. Thomas Telfer and William Nixon were farmers there in 1797 and John Rutherford also lived there. In 1799 Robert Scott was a tenant there and James Scott and James Crozier were servants. James Elliot was farmer there in 1841 and John Clerk in 1868. It was used as a shooting lodge in the late 19th century. The hill above is called Limie Hill, and the Limie Sike joins the Limiecleuch Burn there. The hamlet there appears to have been locally known as ‘Limey’, as in John Halliday’s poem ‘The Lasses o’ Limey’ (also spelled ‘Limiecleuch’ ‘Lyme cleuch’ and ‘Lyme cleugh’), and it is transcribed ‘Lymmercleugh’ in 1618, is ‘Limey-cleugh’ ‘and ‘Limey-cleugh’ in 1678, ‘Lyme cleugh’ in 1695 and ‘Lyme cleuch’ about 1700, ‘Lymecleuch’ in 1717, ‘Limiecleuch’ and ‘Lyme cleugh’ in 1797 and ‘Limey cleuch’ in 1821; note there is a place of essentially the same name near Canonbie, with which it can be easily confused.

Lyme cleuch Burn (lil-mee-klooch-burn) n. stream that is formed from the streams of Merry-Sike, Wrangway Burn and Lang Hope near the farm of Wisp and runs roughly northwards to join the Teviot near Teviothead. Its source is around Pikethaw Hill on the border of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire (it is ‘Lyme cleuch Burn’ in 1839).

Lyme’s (lin-cheez) n. toy shop on the north side of the High Street, at No. 19, in the latter part of the 20th century. Also known as ‘J. Lynch’ (pronounced jI), ‘Miss Lynch’s’ and ‘Pairky Anthing’s’. It closed in 1989 – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for oor tools, Jess McVeetie’s for rock boos, Lynch’s hed a’ kinds o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies . . .’ [IWL].

Lyne

Lyne (lin) n. farm marked on Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650 and Adair’s c. 1688 manuscript map of the Sheriffdom of Ettrick Forest, between Milsington and Hoscastle, on the north side of the Borthwick. This corresponds roughly to the position of Deanburnhaugh. It is probably the same place referred to in several charters and other documents along with Ginwood as ‘Greenwood and Lyne’, also sometimes as ‘the Lyne’. In 1488 the lands were leased by Robert Scott from Thomas Turnbull, later leased by the Lords of Home, and sold to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1532/3. In 1506 ‘the lands of Lyne were valued at £2 Scots, in time of peace 1 merk, and were held of the king for ward and relief’. The lands were ratified to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1693. It seems likely this was associated with the waterfall at Ginwood Linn, to the west of the farm of Ginwood (it is ‘Lyne’ in 1488 and probably ‘Lyn’ in 1574 and 1589 and Linn in 1661).

Lyne (lin) n. parish to the west of Peebles, formerly part of ‘Lyne and Megget’ parish. The Lyne Water flows through the area to join the Tweed. The area contains the remains of an extensive Roman fort from the 2nd century, and a road probably connected it with Newsteads near Melrose.

Lynn (lin) n. Richard (19th/20th C.) served as Burgh Foreman for Hawick. In that capacity he lived at 10 Slitrig Crescent. He is probably the ‘Dick’ whose son ran Swinton the builders in Hawick. It is said that just after the Boer War he came across another Hawick man in South Africa, while leaning out of a train window, and although they recognised each other, the train passed before they could talk.

Lynnlie (li-nec) n., ins. name sometimes used for someone from Lynnwood housing estate, usually used derogatorily.

Lynnwood see Lynnwud

Lynnud (lin-wud) n. Lynnwood, an area in the south-west of Hawick, off the Newcastleton Road, on a flat piece of ground in a loop of the Slitrig. It became a council housing estate on the outskirts of town, built in 1933 and comprising Lynnwood Road and Lynnwood Crescent. Originally a pleasant enough residential area, it grew to be infamous, becoming synonymous with the least desirable elements within the town, the area being renamed Liddesdale in an attempt to reinvent the area. It fell into a state of disrepair and was largely demolished in 1980–81, being completely levelled in 1991 to make way for new housing. After a public vote the area was renamed Lynnwood again – ‘The plaintive sound is wafted on the gale, And Lynnwood’s sighs are heard to join the wail’ [WNK], ‘Oh Lynnwood guards the South approach, Drumlanrig holds the West . . . ’ [NM], ‘Since Stepehenson’s infernal din Came screamin’ doon frae Linwood Linn . . . ’ [WP] (named for the ‘linn’, i.e. stream in a ravine, and wood that stood there; sometimes spelled with one ‘n’, and sometimes with an ‘i’).

Lynnud Brig (lin-wud-brig) n. Lynnwood Bridge, name sometimes used for the bridge across the Slitrig to Lynnwood House. It may also refer to the bridge behind Lyle & Scott’s factory, connecting Liddesdale Road with the ‘Back Braes’. A footbridge near there, sometimes called ‘Nixon’s Brig’, was washed away in the 1846 flood.

Lynnud Cauld (lin-wud-kawld) n. Lynnwood Cauld, the weir built upstream from Lynnwood, by Slitrig Viaduct, which once helped supply the water power for Lynnwood Mill. It was sometimes known as ‘Nixon’s Cauld’. It was partly swept away in the flood of 1846.

Lynnud Crescent (lin-wud-kre-sin’) n. Lynnwood Crescent, street at the south east end of town, named after the nearby stream and wood, with the houses built in 1933. It was renamed Liddesdale Road in 1971 and by 1991 the houses has been demolished and the site cleared, with new housing appearing from 2001.

Lynnud Hoose (lin-wud-hoos) n. Lynnwood House, built for William Nixon on the western bank of the Slitrig north of the ‘Scaur’. It is a large white house on the right-hand side of the road driving out of Hawick, and is now split into flats. It was certainly built before 1841 and William Nixon was still recorded there in 1868. Originally the house was reached via a drive that crossed a ford over the Slitrig, but in 1878 a bridge was erected and the gate lodge built, along with landscaping of the gardens. During WWII it was used as a hostel for women war workers.

Lynnud Ludge (lin-wud-luj) n. gate house for Lynnwood House at 10 Liddesdale Road. It was probably built in 1878 at the same time as the bridge over the Slitrig to the main house. It is a single-storey house with a rectangular plan, but with overhanging eaves and an attic gable.

Lynnwud Mill (lin-wud-mil) n. Lynnwood Mill, hosiery mill at Lynnwood, built by John Nixon & Sons, with the first construction perhaps being as early as 1803. Before it was built the spun wool was sent to Galashiels for carding; but the new factory enabled the spinning and carding to be carried out in one place. The factory was probably extended during the days of William Nixon, and the 1858 Ordnance Survey map clearly shows the associated gasometer and 'tenter fields'. The mill was sold to Laidlaws in 1864. There was a serious fire there in 1869, with rebuilding afterwards. It was a prominent factory throughout the 19th century, but closed at the beginning of the 20th. Water power was provided by a short lade, fed from Lynnwood Cauld. It was demolished in 1933 to make way for the Lynnwood housing scheme – 'While fashion'd fair and warldly gear May charm whae'er they will, Gi'e me my ain, my bonnie Jean, – The lass o' Lynnwood Mill' [JT] (also sometimes 'Lynnwud Mills').

Lynnwud Road (lin-wud-röd) n. Lynnwood Road, name given for the continuation of Slitrig Crescent, being the beginning of the B6399 leading to Newcastleton. The mill lade used to pass along the east side of the road, in front of all the houses there. The name was given when new houses were built in 1933, and came from the nearby stream and wood. In the mid-20th century M. Campbell’s grocer’s shop was on the road, just before the housing estate. It was renamed Liddesdale Road in 1971, had new houses built in 1973, and the houses at the southern end were demolished in 1982.

Lynnwud Wud (lin-wud-wud) n. name sometimes used for the wood above Lynnwood, or possibly for the wood that was formerly at Lynnwood before development.

the railway. He was still recorded at Smithfieldhaugh in 1868. He married Agnes Moffat and their children included James, David and Mary. He was said to be 'a man of large proportions and of austere countenance, invariably dressed in a square-crowned hat, corduroy trousers, and a huge double-breasted waistcoat with sleeves and flap pockets'. John (d.1951) married Elspeth, daughter of Barton Oliver. His children included Maggie Oliver (b.1903) who married and Anderson (also written 'Mabel').

Mabonlaw (mə-bin-law) n. farm above Harden, once part of the estate of the Scotts of Harden, it had more recently been available as a rental cottage. It stands near the Marchelyton Burn, and the hill above, presumably Mabon Law, reaches a height of 256 m and contains a fort, about 55 m by 25 m, with a single rampart and external ditches. It was part of the Harden estate from the 16th to 19th centuries, being valued in 1811 (along with 'Highchesters Whinny Park') at £312. In 1576 it was 'infefted' to Marion Scott (‘the Flower of Yarrow’) as part of the marriage agreement with Walter Scott (later ‘Auld Wat’) of Harden. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Isobel Briggs, John Briggs, Helen Lunn, John White, Janet Turnbull, Besie White, Robert Rule, Besie Henderson, James Riddell, Janet Miller, John Wilson, Jean Scott, George Lawson, Margaret Wilson, James Telfer, Janet Easton, John Telfer and Jeanie Brand. John Thomson, was tenant there in 1684, when he was declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. The area was part of Wilton Parish until transferred to Roberton in 1690. It was included among lands inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester from his father Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1694. There were 8 separate households listed there in 1694, including 3 Riddells. John Leitch was recorded there in 1702. The tenancy in 1709 were Walter Scott, Robert Scott, William Henderson, William Turnbull and John Riddell. Thomas Anderson was there in 1710, James Wilson in 1710–23, Adam Hardie in at least 1711–1713, Walter Riddell and William Beattie in 1717, William Nichol in 1718–23, Janet Sweet in 1720, William Elliot in 1721–27, John Nichol in 1723, Thomas Turnbull in 1725 and Andrew Chisholme in 1728. It may have been sold by Walter Scott of Harden about 1754. The headlands with Todshaw were divided in 1757. James Hume was living there in 1757, Robert Turnbull in 1763–66, William Laidlaw in 1764–67 and Thomas Nichol in 1766, Walter Elliot in 1771, David Laidlaw in 1772, John Watson in 1773 and William Lunn in 1774. In 1779 it was among lands whose liferent was sold by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Woll. John Scott was living there in at least 1780–85, John Henderson in 1780, James Laidlaw was farmer here in 1794–97 and James Miller was also there in 1795. It was valued (along with Highchesters Mill and 'Dunsbush') at £463 9s in the late 18th century. Weaver James Miller was living there in 1800. William Rutherford and Walter Clerk were there with their families in 1841 and 1851. Walter Rutherford was shepherd there in 1861. In about 1874 it was listed among the properties of Lord Polwarth. The cottage there has latterly been let as a holiday property (note that older versions of the name are easy to confuse with Mervinslaw; formerly ‘Mabinlaw’ etc., it is ‘Mabonlaw’ in 1643, ‘Maybenlaw’ in 1648, ‘Mabinlaw’ and ‘Maybenlaw’ in 1694, ‘Mevinlaw’ in 1702, ‘Mabonlaw’ in 1710, ‘Mavin law’, and ‘Mavinla’ in 1713, ‘Mebinlaw’ in 1721, 1725 and 1728, ‘Mebonlaw’ in 1764 and 1772, ‘Mebonlay’ in 1774 and ‘Mawbonlaw’ and ‘Mebinlaw’ in 1780; it is ‘Mebinlaw’ on a 1650 parish map, Blaeu’s 1654 map marks ‘Mabinlaw’, while it is ‘Maibenlaw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Mabonlaw Moss (mə-bin-law-mos) n. boggy area to the north of Mabonlaw.

Macbeth (mək-beth) n. (c.1005–57) King of Scotland from 1040. He was the grandson of Malcolm II and claimed the throne over Duncan I (another grandson), who died in battle against him. However, Duncan’s son Malcolm Canmore then fought for the throne, with the assistance of Siward, the Earl of Northumbria, and they captured the south of Scotland. He was then killed by Malcolm and the throne passed to his step-son Lulach.

MacCalman (mu-kawl-min) n. Rev. Ian B. (d.1967) minister of Minto Parish 1956–67. He had been an army Chaplain and his wife was from South Africa. During his time as minister a new manse was built on the Hassendean road.

MacDiarmid see McColl

MacDiarmid (mu-der-mi’) n. Hugh (1837–1901) real name Christopher Murray Grieve, born in Langholm, he was probably the most famous 20th century Scottish poet. With Hawick’s Francis George Scott and William Johnstone, he formed part of what was sometimes called a Scottish Renaissance in the 1930s. He wrote the poem ‘The Sauchs in the Reuch Heuch Hauch’ (i.e. the Roughheugh Haugh) inspired by a line of James Murray’s, with the poem being set to music by Francis George Scott. Scott was one of his close friends, and set many of his verses to music, as well as helping him to compile various writings into ‘A Drunk Man Looks at the Thistle’. A modern monument to him was erected on Whita Hill in 1988.

MacDonald (muk-do-nuld) n. Archibald J.F. ‘Archie’ (1904–83) Liberal M.P. for Roxburgh & Selkirkshire 1950–51. He won with a large majority over Lord William Scott in a by-election, but the next year was defeated by C.E.M. Donaldson by only 829 votes. His name is often spelled ‘Macdonald’. James Ronald (1858–1937) born in St. Andrews, son of James and Catherine. He was educated at Madras College, St. Andrews University and Edinburgh University, where he graduated M.A. in 1880 and was licensed to preach in 1892. He became licentiate at Saughtree Kirk in 1892 and left in 1902 to become assistant and then minister at Eskdalemuir. He married Emily Sophia Nichols. Jessie Stoddart M. (d.2004) wrote ‘The Place-names of Roxburghshire’ (1991) which was started as a thesis project when she was a student and completed for a Transactions article and this book. It mainly focuses on names for which there is evidence before 1600 (and an addendum is lodged with the Borders Archive). She also wrote ‘Bowden Kirk, 1128–1978’ (1978 and 1994) and a paper for the Archaological Society in 1992 on James Oliver, inventor of the ‘chilled’ plow blade. She was a Headmistress at James Gillespie’s in Edinburgh, and retired to Bowden. J. Gordon Hawick knitwear engineer, who started as an apprentice at Woodcock’s. Known as a local historian, he has contributed articles to the Archaological Society Transactions, e.g. ‘Isobel Baillie’ in 2004, ‘William Watson & Sons’ in 2004 and 2005 and ‘Women’s Suffrage: A Border Perspective’ in 2012. John (b.1851/2) from Urry in Ross-shire, he was Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh Police force from about 1878 until 1902. He also acted as Sanitary Inspector, Public Prosecutor and Fire Master. In addition he was Captain of the Golf Club. He can be seen with the Fire Brigade in a photo of 1889. He used to ride at the head of the Common Riding Procession, and can be seen in the Gaylor film clip of 1899.

Mr. ?? Police Superintendent in Hawick in the 1970s/80s???. Robert (b.1817/8) from Muckhart in Perthshire, he was a grocer and wine merchant at about 6 Howegate in 1851. He was already a widower, with daughters Janet W. and Jane M. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate, as well as seedsman, ‘agent for Bigg’s sheep dipping compound’ and ‘tallow chandler’. Col. William of Powderhall and Ormiston (19th C.). J.P., officer of the Scots Greys who were used to control riots surrounding elections in Roxburghshire in the 1830s. It is said that in 1836, when he was in Hawick to attend a dinner given for Lord Minto, the open carriage in which he was leaving with his family was followed for about a mile out of town, with a crowd pelting it with mud. He led the troop who were in Hawick to keep the peace at the election of 1837. He attacked the mob along with several special constables, losing his hat and being struck by a stone on the forehead in the doorway of 3 Sandbed. He also attended the 1839 banquet held at Branxholme to honour the Duke of Buccleuch. He subscribed to 4 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, when he was already ‘of Ormiston’. He is listed on the 1837 electoral roll, having acquired Ormiston through marriage. He also held lands in Cavers Parish. He served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. He was also a Vice-President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He owned Ormiston House just outside Hawick, and occupied it in the Autumn months (for hunting), with Provost Wilson occupying it for the rest of the year. His children included Alexander and John James, also listed as joint life-renters in 1835. His wife ‘Mrs. Margaret F. McDonald or Muir’ was listed as owner of Ormiston in about 1874.

MacDowall see McDougall

MacDowall (muk-dow-ul) n. Fergus (15th C.) held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1465. He was directly appointed by the Pope, and not by the monks of Melrose that had made some previous appointments. The same name occurs within the MacDowalls of Galloway. He is probably the Fergus who witnessed a few charters in 1463 and perhaps the same ‘Fergusio Macdowell’ recorded on a charters for lands in Wigtown in 1508. Perhaps 2 men are conflated here: one Fergus, Lord Register and Rector of Wigtown, who was the 2nd son of Uchtred Macdowall, 7th of Garthland; and the other the son of Dungald, who is mentioned in a letter of marriage of 1465/6. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1619, probably at Raperlaw. He was among many Turnbuls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. His surname is written ‘McDowell’ (see also McDougall).
Macfee (muk-fee) n. William G. (19th/20th C.) from Dennistoun, Glasgow. He preached for several months in the ‘Ern Kirk’ in Wilton in 1889. The congregation were keen for him to become their minister, but he was ordained at Pendleton Church in Manchester, went to Partick in 1895 and then moved to a better climate for his health in 1900.

MacGill (mu-gil) n. Rev. John White (1867–1937) born in Musselburgh, son of a minister, he graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1889 and was licensed by Dalkeith Presbytery in 1892. He was assistant at Alexandria, North Berwick and St. Margaret’s (Edinburgh), before being ordained at St. Catherine’s, British Guiana in 1897. In 1924 he was translated to Inverallochy and then became minister of Saughtree kirk in 1925. However, he remained only 2 years before moving to Caerlaverock. He married Edith Sarah Luxton Wexford, and they had 2 children (also McGill).

MacGregor (mu-gre-gur) n. Alexander (19th C.) teacher at Saughtree school in the mid-1860s. He took over from James Telfer, who had been there for almost 30 years. He is probably the same as Rev. Alexander, who graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1861, was ordained as minister of Hagg’s in 1865 and was at Inverkeithing and Rosyth from 1866. Augustus Wallace, W.S. (1867–1937) son of Rev. John and grandson of the Rev. J.A. Wallace. He was employed by Purdom’s in Hawick for 16 years and was later a partner of Auld & MacDonald, W.S. He was a member of the Scottish Zoological Society and the Hawick Archaeological Society, and was also known as a stamp collector (jointly editing a catalogue on the Malay States). He also edited the book ‘Fifty Years of Lawn Tennis in Scotland’ (1927). It is said that he was more interested in tennis than employment, and was a notable player in his youth. He served as a Captain in the K.O.S.B. in WWI, although he was never posted abroad. He also helped execute Hawick’s WWI Roll of Honour. He died in Hawick. Donald (b.1856) from Inverness, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1878, M.B. from Edinburgh in 1884 and M.D. in 1886. Mackay (mu-kI) n. Daniel Neil ‘Neil’ (1928–96) born at 10 Slitrig Crescent, where his father was Burgh Foreman, he was son of draper William Gibson. He was educated at Hawick High School and the Royal High School in Edinburgh and served with the Royal Signals in Sri Lanka. On returning to Hawick he ran the family draper’s shop in Croft Road, and later moved it to North Bridge Street, near the Baptist Opening. He was elected Town Councillor in 1969 and served the Town as Dean of Guild. He was also a Justice of the Peace and later a county councillor, as well as Vice-Chairman of Roxburgh District Council until 1980. He was additionally Chairman of Hawick Chamber of Trade and was an instigator for the twinning of Hawick with Baillieu. He was also a member of Lodge St. John 111. He was a keen writer, originating the ‘Janus’ column in the Hawick News. He also played piano and wrote the song ‘Home By Burnfoot’. He was Town Councillor for Burnfoot Ward when he wrote the song, which won a contest set by Burnfoot Residents’ Association. He died at 5 Wilton Glebe and is buried in Wilton Cemetery. Rev. Mackenzie (mu-ken-zee) n. Rev. Alexander (18th C.) minister from Edinburgh. He married Margaret, daughter of Dr. William Rutherford of Barnhills. His wife inherited 1/3 of Barnhills, and he purchased the other 2/3 from his sisters-in-law, Helen and Jean in the late 1730s. He also held lands at Auldsmeeton. In 1749 Barnhills was sold to John Callender, W.S., then immediately to John Mackenzie (possibly a relative) of Devlin and then Rev. Walter Stewart, minister of Ashkirk. Elizabeth Toll-keeper and early member of Allars Kirk. Rev. George Omond (1893–1943) son of John and Janet Ormond, he was educated at George Watson’s and Edinburgh University. He was licensed in 1922, became assistant at Kirkintilloch and was translated from Methil to become minister of Minto Kirk in 1927. He demitted in 1935 and was admitted to Nicolson Street Church, Edinburgh, in 1939. He married Isabella Jopp Spence and their children were: Ian Gordon (1916–80); Thomas Spence Seaforth (1917–23); George Fingal (1920–45), killed when his ship was torpedoed; Gilbert Omand (1921–2003); Kenneth Macbeth (1923–1992); and Ella Jean Christine (b.1926). James (d.1744) son of George, Earl of Cromarty. He was known as Lord Royston. He was one of the Commissioners for letting the Duchess of Buccleuch’s lands in Scotland, serving in this capacity 1711–31. In 1725 the Hawick Kirk Session wrote to him asking for assistance with the many poor people in the Parish. There are many letters in existence from the Duchess to him, covering that time period. In about 1730 she wrote about several matters including thanking him ‘for buying that peece of ground in Hauick. ’Tis most convenient for me of anie thing belonging to that litll howse’ (presumably referring to land adjacent to Drumlanrig’s Tower). Rev. Laurence (1816–69) son of Andrew of Greenburn. He studied at St. Andrews University 1831–9, and was a Probationer within Perth Presbytery for many years before being ordained as a minister. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Gilbert, Earl of Minto in 1843 after John Edmondston walked out with much of the congregation at the Disruption. He was deprived in 1854 and died unmarried in Crieff (see also McKenzie).

Mackintosh (ma-kin-tosh) n. Angus (19th C.) factor to the Earl of Minto in the 1860s. He thus served as Chairman of the Parochial Board. He lived at Minto Cleuchhead, but must have taken over from Ephraim Selby after 1861. William (18th C.) house servant at Synton in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Alexander Scott of Synton (also spelled ‘McIntosh’ and variants).

Mackside (mawk-sid) n. farm a little to the east of Hobkirk and Wolfelee, once part of the Baronry of Abbotrule. Peter Turnbull is recorded there in 1502. It was acquired by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey in 1569. The superiority was still with the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. John Turnbull was there in 1603 and David Turnbull in 1611, Patrick Turnbull in 1618 and Lawrence Turnbull in 1622. It is probably the ‘Laird of Toft’s Turnbull’s . . . side’ recorded in the 1643 county valuation, valued at £100; Gavin Turnbull was also there (with land valued at £24) and Janet Home was liferenter (with land valued at £50). It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Archibald Shiel was a tenant there in 1684 when listed as a fugitive for attending conventicles. John Turnbull and James Oliver were tenant there in 1694, with William Shiel, Margaret Dickson, William Scott and Thomas Turnbull all listed as cottars. It was sold by William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751, becoming part of the Wolfelee estate for the next century and a half. It was listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1788 (in also 1811), with a value (along with Blackcleuchmouth) of £166 15s 4d. Francis Turnbull was servant there in 1797 and Robert Scott in 1797. It was briefly lived in by James, the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee, while the main house was being built in the 1820s, and again by Mrs. Elliot of Wolfelee during renovations in 1862. There were Turnbills there in early 17th century and the tenant was John Mair in the mid-17th century, John Sharp in the mid-18th century and Turnbul in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. The farm was quite extensive and for a fraction of the 19th century was let out as grassland. Robert Allan was farmer in 1868. Tenants in the late 19th and early 20th centuries were Mr. Clark and then Mr. Logan. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. There was also once a toll-bar on the road near here (also spelled ‘Maxside’ and variants, it was ‘maxsyd’ in 1502, ‘Maxsyde’ in 1569, ‘Maxsyde’ in 1588, ‘Maiksyde’ in 1603, ‘M’syd’ in 1618, ‘Maksyde’ in 1626, ‘Machsyde’ in 1653, ‘Macksyid’ in 1670, ‘Mac-side’ in 1684, ‘Macksyde’ and ‘maxside’ in 1694 and ‘Maxside’ in 1797; it occurs on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Maysyd’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Maxsyide’, although is marked too far north; the origin of the name is probably ‘the slope belonging to Maccus’, from a variant of the personal name Magnus, cf. ‘Maxpoffle’ and ‘Maxwell-heap’ near Kelso).

Mackside Moss (mawk-sid-mos) n. former common near Mackside. Part of the land there was used for the manse of Wolfelee Free Kirk.

Macksideshaw (mawk-sid-shaw) n. former steading near Mackside. Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs had a charter of the lands (along with Wells) in 1659. It was later part of the estate of Wolfelee (recorded in 1659 and 1730).

Mackside Toll Bar (mawk-sid-tol-bawr) n. former toll-house near Mackside, on the Wolfelee estate. There were Thomsons there in the late 1800s.

MacLean (mu-klan) n. Scott (1911–96) Scottish poet, born on Raasay. He wrote extensively in Gaelic as well as English, had sympathy with far-left politics and served in the Army in North Africa during WWII. He came to Hawick in October 1939 to teach evacuees, and stayed until about the following June. During this period he wrote most of his renowned ‘Dìun do Eimhir’ poems.

MacLeod (muk-lowd) n. Scott (1979–) born in Hawick and educated at the High School, he was a lock in rugby. He played basketball and golf at school, but joined the Trades at the age of 20. He then played for Hawick R.F.C. He joined the Border Reivers in 2002, but left to play for Welsh rugby team the Scarlets and then for Edinburgh Rugby, before moving to Japanese side Kobe Kobelco Steelers and then the Newcastle Falcons. He was first capped for Scotland in 2004 and has 24 caps, including 2 Calcutta Cup wins. He retired from playing in the 2015/6 season and started coaching (also McLeod).

MacLeven (mu-lee-vin) n. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) from Galloway, she settled at Gorenberry in Castleton Parish. She was rebuked by the Session for providing a false ‘testimonial’, and explained how she had had a child out of wedlock and had to move.

Macmaster (muk-maw-stur) n. Rev. Robert (19th C.) listed as ‘M’Master’, minister of the Hawick Baptist Chapel on Allars Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. This is probably Baptist minister Robert Paton Macmaster (1830–95), who was born in Ayrshire, became a Baptist and wandered around preaching for a few years, before obtaining his first formal charge at Walsall in about 1853; he married Annie Robertson miller in Edinburgh in 1852, and was later at Coventry, Bristol, Bradford and Darlington. It seems likely that he spent only a short time in Hawick.

Macmillan (mawk-mi-lin) n. Hugh (20th C.) head gardener at Branxholme in the mid-1900s.

Macmillan-Scott (mawk-mi-lin-sko’) n. Arthur Francis of Howcleuch and Langlee (1854–1935) 2nd surviving son of Thomas. He was probably born at Harwood in Rulewater. He was educated at Harrow and was Captain in the 2nd Battalion Rifle Brigade and 5th Lancers. He later became a member of the Scottish Bar and then farmed sheep in Australia for a while. He was then involved in Toynbee Hall (the original ‘settlement house’ for the middle class to live and provide direct aid in poor neighbourhoods) in East London. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1896. He inherited Howcleuch and Langlee from his uncle Charles Scott. In 1899 he married Louisa Leslie Florence, daughter of Henry Strickland Bryant of the Education Department. As a Reserve he was sent to fight in the Boer War in 1900, becoming Captain and receiving the South African Medal. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1869. In about 1876 he married Antoinetta, eldest daughter of Theodore Henry Dury of Bonsall, Derbyshire. His children were: Thomas Arthur Frederick; and Cecille Margaret, who married Cmdr. James Tancred of the Royal Navy.

previously belonged to Archibald Dickson. He assumed the Macmillan surname after inheriting his maternal grandfather’s estate of Shorthope. His children were: Walter, who died in infancy; another Walter, who succeeded; Arthur Francis; Edith Marion, who married Maj.-Gen. Frederick Edward Sotheby from Northamptonshire; Marion Maude, who died unmarried; and Katherine Margaret, died young after joining a sisterhood in England. Thomas Alexander Frederick (1881–c.1952) 7th Laird of Wauchope and Pinnaclehill, son of Walter. He was educated at Eton and trained as an English lawyer. He let Wauchope out for shooting. He sold it about 1936. He married Karen Anna Erichsen in 1912 and secondly in 1918 married Enid Cynthia Paine. His son was Walter Theodore Robin. Walter (1848–1901) 6th Laird of Wauchope and also of Pinnaclehill, son of Thomas. He was born in Edinburgh and educated at Harrow and Cambridge University. He became Lieutenant in the 6th Dragoon Guards and later served as Captain of the Scottish Borderers Militia, based in Dumfries. He had a new house built at Wauchope about 1875. Regarded as reserved like his father, he was fond of reading and also rode with the Blackmoorvale hounds. He was Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire and Chairman of the Hobkirk School Board. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1869. In about 1874 he is recorded as owner of the estate of Wauchope. In 1888 he was the first County Councillor elected for Hobkirk Parish. He left Wauchope for Bournemouth due to failing health, and died there. In 1876 he married Antoinetta, eldest daughter of Theodore Henry Dury of Bonsall, Derbyshire. His children were: Thomas Arthur Frederick; and Cecille Margaret, who married Cmndr. James Tancred of the Royal Navy.

Macmorland (muk-môr-lind) n. John Peter (1839–93) son of Peterm minister of North Berwick, he was educated in Edinburgh, graduating with his B.D. in 1865. He was licensed by Dunbar Presbytery and became minister of Minto Kirk in 1865. He married Elizabeth Macdonald (who died in 1917), daughter of Eaglesfield Bradshaw Smith of Blackwood House and their only child was Elizabeth Philadelphia Macdonald Lockhart, who married William Higgin of Belfast. Alexander Galloway became his assistant and successor in 1878, and he died in Switzerland (also written ‘McMorland’).

Macmorrin (muk-mo-rin) n. William (d.c.1408) cleric of Glasgow Diocese, whose name has variant spellings, such as ‘McMoyn’. He held the position of Archdeacon of Teviotdale sometime shortly before 1408. He may also have been Archdeacon of Glasgow in about 1403.

MacNee (muk-nee) n. Daniel (d.c.1860) preacher at Teviothead from 1847, probably until it became a new Parish in 1850. He then emigrated to Hamilton, Ontario, but later returned to Scotland and died in Edinburgh. George Fraser (1863–1905) born in Wilton, son of Robert and Jemima Fraser. He was a student teacher at Buccleuch School, before moving to Edinburgh where he became Secretary to the Church of Scotland Committee on Education. He was also Vice-President of the Edinburgh Borders Union, organising their Hawick nights. He may have written the article on Hawick Common Riding for the Edinburgh Despatch in 1891. He presented the Cornet with a new Sash in 1898 (on behalf of Teries in Edinburgh), and was a member of the Callants' and Archæological Clubs. A keen walker of Border hills, he once walked from Hawick to Newcastle in a single day. He also walked Hadrian's Wall extensively and gave illustrated lectures on it. He was also a keen Volunteer, becoming Captain of College Company 4th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots. He was said to be of a happy and generous disposition and have a boyish enthusiasm for his native town. He died in a shooting accident (his trigger apparently caught on a twig when he was shooting rabbits at Corstorphine) and was buried with military honours in the Wellogate. The MacNee Fountain was erected in his memory by public subscription. Robert (19th C.) married Jemima Fraser in Wilton in 1851. She was daughter of frameworker Peter Fraser.

the MacNee Fountain (thn-muk-nee-fown'-in) n. ornate grey granite drinking fountain in Wilton Lodge Park, near Langlands Bridge. It was erected by public subscription in 1906 in memory of George Fraser MacNee. It is inscribed with a quote from Charles Dickens: 'In Love of Home, the Love of Country takes its rise'.

MacNeill (muk-neel) n. Jessie (1853–1922) younger daughter of Bedrule Schoolmaster William. From 1882 she assisted her father as sewing mistress. After his death in 1893 she stayed on for a short time, but then became sick-nurse for a farmer in Southdean called Riddell. Later in life she married Denholm postman Hugh Rigby. William (1814–1893) from Tranent in East Lothian, son of David and Frances Fraser. He became teacher at Longniddry in 1844 and then was teacher at Cogsmill from 1849. A few years later he moved to Bedrule School, where he was schoolmaster for 38 years. He also served as Registrar for the Parish, as well as Session Clerk, Inspector of the Poor and Clerk of the School Board. In 1843 he married Helen Imrie (who died in 1878). Their children included: Mary (b.1844); David (b.1845); Frances (b.1847), who married Archibald Stewart; Alexander (b.1849); Helen (b.1851), who married William Cairns Robinson; Jessie (b.1853), who married Hugh J. Rigby of Denholm; and William (b.1857), who died in his teens. His wife worked as an assistant at Bedrule School, but after her death he was denied a request for an assistant. After he resigned and was reinstated, he was able to hire his daughter Jessie as a sewing mistress from 1882. He complained about the state of the schoolhouse in 1892 and retired later that year. The family are buried in Bedrule churchyard (also written 'MacNeil' and 'McNeil').

Macome (na-kö-ne) n. William (17th C.) resident of the former Hassendean Parish. He married Jean Burn in Roberton in 1685 and their children included: John (b.1685); Janet (b.1685); and James (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were John and James Martin. His surname could be a variant of 'McCombe'.

MacQueen (mu-kween) n. Robert (1722–99) advocate of Edinburgh who acted as official council for Hawick in the action regarding the Division of the Common raised in 1767. In 1768 he gave his opinion that the case was unclear, stating that 'on the one hand, that the town hath considered themselves as proprietors of the Commony ... but, on the other hand, the Duke has brought a pretty strong proof that his tenants for time immemorial have been in use to pasture, and to cast peats, &c'. He was consulted again in 1774, by which time he was of the opinion that the neighbouring land owners had a claim and suggested that the Town should offer to concede 1/3 of the Common to save expense. He was known as a brilliant lawyer, who was coarse, heavy-drinking and extremely popular. He was afterwards Lord Braxfield, becoming infamous as a judge who was fond of savage punishments, e.g. sentencing reformer Thomas Muir to transportation. He was the original of R.L. Stevenson's 'Weir of Hermiston' and the 'Jolly Judge' pub in Edinburgh was named after him. Rev. Richard Rose (b.1833) born at Braemar, he was a missionary involved with the Free Kirk in Hawick. He studied at Edinburgh University. He became the first ordained minister of the West Port Free Church in 1869, staying for only a few years. In 1870 he married Margaret Phillips, widow of brewer George Henry King. He left Hawick in 1872 to move to Dundee and then was translated to Knockando in 1875 (also spelled ‘McQueen’).

MacQuoid (muk-kwoid) n. Peter Craik (b.1895) born on the Isle of Wight and licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1921. Probably his first charge was as assistant in Hawick. He moved to become minister at Bothkennar in 1924 and went to Turriff in 1927.

MacRae (muk-rā) n. Rev. Dr. John (1815–92) native of Glasgow (born on Burns birthday), he was the son of James, a Glasgow shoemaker. He was educated at Glasgow University and licensed by that Presbytery. He succeeded Wallace as Minister of Hawick Parish at the Disruption of 1843 and remained for almost 50 years. He lived in the Manse on Buccleuch Road. He moved from St. Mary’s to the new Old Parish Church in 1844. His time as minister also saw the creation of the separate congregations of St. Mary’s and St. John’s. He was the instigator for the founding of the Industrial School (later Drumlanrig) and also served as an Orrock Trustee. He was one of the most scholarly preachers of his age, receiving an honorary Doctor of Divinity from Glasgow University in 1864. He also founded the Blantyre Mission in British Central Africa (now Malawi). A disagreement with his assistant (J.A. Birrell) in 1881 resulted in part of the congregation leaving to form Wellington Church. He was a highly respected figure in Hawick, projecting an air of old-time dignity (and argued against instrumental music as late as 1882). He laboured under a lameness of foot, and was supposed to have said ‘if it had not been for this I would have been a soldier’. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald MacLachlan of Helensburgh (and she died childless in 1882). A memorial ward at the Cottage Hospital was erected in his memory, along with a tombstone in the Welloge Cemetery, a memorial brass plaque in the Church, and communion cups from his congregation. His publications include ‘Sermons’ (published in Hawick, 1851), ‘Sermon for the National Fast’ (1854), ‘The Scripture Law of Marriage’ (Hawick, 1861 and 1862), ‘Sermon on the Completion of the Fortieth Year of his Ministry’ (Hawick, 1883), ‘Sermon on the Death of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry’ (Hawick, 1884), ‘Sermon on the Death of H.R.H. Prince Leopold’ (Hawick, 1884), ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of General Gordon’ (Hawick, 1885), ‘Sermon on the Disestablishment and Religious Equality’ (Hawick, 1885), ‘Funeral Sermon on the Life and Character of the Rev. James Stewart, Minister of Wilton’ (Hawick, 1886) and ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen’ (Hawick, 1887) (also written ‘Macrae’).

MacRae’s Band (muk-rūz-bawnd) n. popular name for a choir that started in the Parish Church in the mid-19th century when Rev. MacRae was Minister. They practised every Saturday night in the old Parish School in Orrock Place, and were later disbanded.

Mactaggart (muk-taw-gur’) n. Bruce see W. Bruce, Ian C. (1900/1–1965) son of Robert and Mary Aikman, he was Cornet in 1928. Events at his year as Common Riding were recorded on a silent black and white film. He won the Medway Cup outright at the Common Riding Races of 1933, winning on Rufus for the third time (after victories in 1929 and 1932, and coming second in 1930 and 1931). In 1934 it was replaced by the Rufus Trophy and won by him on Rufus! In 1966 the Medway trophy was returned by his wife for competition. He was Callants’ Club President in 1955. He was Managing Director of Mactaggart Brothers, wool merchants, seeing the firm in 1964. He served as chief executive officer for wool control in Scotland during WWII. He married Jessie S. Borland and they are both buried in Denholm. They had 2 daughters, Fiona and Ann. Robert Lamb Watson (1870–1949) son of Robert Lamb Watson and Mary Jane Alexander Main, and brother of William Alexander Main. He was born in Duddingston, Midlothian and became a manager at Pringle’s in Hawick. He married Mary Helen (‘Nellie’) Aikman. Their children were: James (d.1956); Ian (1900/1–65); and Mamie. He secondly married Hyndmer Hewatt, and their children included Arthur Crosbie (1918–42), who died at El Alamein. William Alexander Main (b.1868) born in Glasgow, son of Robert Lamb Watson (also the name of his brother) and Mary Jane Alexander Main. He was a businessman who established the skinworks Mactaggart Brothers. In 1903 he married Mary Jane Cooper, and their children included William Alexander and Mary Bryson. William Alexander, C.B.E., J.P. ‘Wullie’ or ‘Wullie Mac’ (1906–2002) born at Braeside, Weensland Road, son of William Alexander Main and Margaret Jane Cooper. He was educated in Melrose and at Sedbergh School. He took up rugby and first played for Hawick R.F.C. at 17. He was part of the team that won all the ‘sevens’ in 1927. Instead of following in the family business he joined Pringle’s in 1925 as a trainee manager, becoming Director in 1932 and joint Managing Director (with Arthur Oddy) in 1933 at the age of only 27. In 1936 he convinced the other directors to change the name from ‘Robert Pringle & Sons’ to just ‘Pringles’ and to diversify into fashion knitwear. He served with the K.O.S.B. territorial battalion 1926–33 and was put in charge of the Hawick Air Training Corps in 1939, later serving with the R.A.M.C. in Europe. He became sole Managing Director in 1945, following the resignation of Oddy. He then led the company to enormous post-war success, becoming Chairman of the Board in 1960. He resigned as Managing Director in 1968, following the take-over by Dawson International, but he reannounced as Chairman until 1969. During his time in charge the workforce increased from 200 to 2,000 and the firm essentially cornered the worldwide market in fashion knitwear for golfers. He is said to have a very ‘hands-on’ approach to management, regularly walking on the shop-floor and talking individually to the workers. He received the C.B.E. in 1964 for services to industry. He was Cornet in 1954 and Acting Father in 1964 and Managing Director in 1969. He was Cornet in 1954 and Acting Father in 1971 (to the son of his own Acting Father, John P. Martin). He married Sheila Tait and had 2 sons and 2 daughters. He was the Jubilee Cornet in 2004 and Jubilee Acting Father in 2021.

Mactaggart’s (muk-taw-gurtz) n. skinworks, built on land off Albert Road, which had previously been the site of Albert Mills. The skinworks had also previously been off St. George’s Lane. It closed in the early 1970s, and was demolished to make way for a supermarket and housing built in 1977 – . Built where McTaggart’s men, Worked wi’ skins wi’ weary fingers, When the wund blew the right way, The smell still lingers’ [IWL].

magic lantern (mawg-jeek-lan-turn) n. former name for a slide projector, particularly with mounted glass slides, which became popular in Victorian times. ‘Magic lantern shows’ caused a sensation when they first appeared in the late 19th century, essentially a forerunner of the cinema. There are records of large turnouts for such shows in Hawick, and many slides from around 1900 survive in the Museum, most made by D. Gaylor.

Magistrate (mawg-jis-trā’) n. formerly one of two officers, the Senior Magistrate and the Junior Magistrate, elected annually by the Burgesses to enforce laws with the town. The word was synonymous with ‘Bailie’ for most of Hawick’s recorded history. Typically each Magistrate would serve for 2 years (with the election in early October), first as Junior and then as Senior Magistrate, although there were exceptions to this. Because of the specific wording of Hawick’s Charter, the Magistrates exercise a jurisdiction similar to that of Magistrates in a Royal Burgh, and in former times they had a great amount of leeway in administering justice. In the 17th and 18th centuries there were often disputes over jurisdiction, with Hawick residents being forbidden from appealing to any other courts (i.e. the Baron Bailie or the Sheriff) than the Hawick Magistrates Court. During the 18th century it was common for the magistrates also to keep an inn where local disputes would be settled and much of the business of the Town carried out; there was criticism that they profitted from the Town’s business. Before there was a Provost, the Senior Magistrate was the highest elected official in town. After the reconstitution of the council in 1861 there were 4 magistrates. The Magistrates would sit on the bench to deal with local legal matters, although they were also Justices of the Peace only in fairly recent times. Their legal jurisdiction only extended to the Burgh boundaries (formerly synonymous with Bailie).

magistracie (mawg-jis-tri-see) n., arch. the office of a magistrate, the magistrates collectively – ‘. . . conform to the ancient pratique of this burgh since the first ryse and beginning of magistracy within the same’ [BR1673], ‘. . . even to the committing of some ryott, abusing of Magistracie and almost to the effusione of blood’ [BR1706], ‘. . . that whosoever has a mind to set up for the Magistracy, and peuther for it, shall be put in the Bailies’ Leet without any objection’ [BR1756] (also written ‘magistracy’).

the Magna Charta (tu-mawg-na-chawr-ta) n. name sometimes formerly used for the Charter of 1537 granted by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to the inhabitants of the Burgh of Hawick.

Mag Nichol’s Trough (mawg-ni-kulz-trof) n. popular name for a former public water supply near the head of the Loan. Also sometimes called ‘Jamie Nichol’s Trough’. There was also a private supply nearby that was used by the Nichols.

maidenhood (mă-din-heed) n., arch. maidenhood.

the Maidens (thu-mă-din) n. the Maiden Paps, south of Hawick and prominent along the Newcastleton Road. Like several of the higher peaks in the area, these hills are formed from igneous rocks. The heights of the 2 peaks are 510 m (1,677 ft) and 505 m (1,650 ft). Their double peaks are a distinctive feature of the skyline to the south (marked ‘Maiden papes hills’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

the Maiden Paps (thu-mă-din-pawps) n. another name for the Maidens – ‘It rows aboot, it trows about, Baith near and far awa’; Whileis it is on the Maiden’s Paps, And whiles on Ruberslaw’ [TCh] (it is ‘Maiden Paps’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Maiden Way (thu-mă-din-wă) n. ancient road passing nearby to Hawick, believed to pre-date the Romans. There may be more than one road given this name. The local one passes through the head of Liddesdale and across the hills to the west of Doddburn, being used as a drove road until relatively recent times. This has been suggested as the northern extension of the road of the same name, which crosses the Pennines (being part of the Penine Way near Alston), passing near Bewsacle and on through the South Tyne valley. The ‘Thief’s Road’ may have followed a similar path (the origin is probably Old Welsh for ‘elevated’ rather than being related to the English word).

the Maids o Honour (thu-măd-ŏ-on-ur) n. a group of single women selected by the Cornet’s Lass to assist at the Colour Bussing (and Overseas Night the evening before). They follow her in with the Flag, and pin ribbons on the Cornet’s supporters. Their role in the Colour Bussing and in decorating the Principals’ coats with ribbons goes back at least to the beginning of the 19th century. The number is fixed at 22, 10 selected by the Cornet and his Lass, 5 each by the Right-and Left-Hand Men and Lasses and 2 by the Acting Mother.

the Maid o Wudfit (thu-măd-ŏ-wud-fi) n. beauty of the Borthwick in the latter part of the 19th century, written of in 2 poems by Thomas Chapman, ‘Lizzie’ and ‘The Maid o’ Woodfit’ – ‘Out in the garden, with roses In blossom around her doth sit, The fair, matchless maiden o’ Teviot, Sweet Lizzie, the pride o’ Woodfit’ [TCh].

maig (măg) n., arch. a hand, particularly a large ungainly one – ‘Hand aff yer maigs, man’ [JoJ], ‘...Wi’ clenched megs and deep grey ferret een’ [JoHa], ‘Nor was there ony warden polis ti reid oat the bizz wui skeely maig’ [ECS], ‘He glaumed at it wi’ his muckle maigs’ [GW], ‘...rede thame owt the maig o’ the wicket’ [HSR], v. to mug something, paw, over-handle – (also ‘meg’).

maigmen (măg-mă-din) n., arch. a handmaid – ‘...gie thy strenth until thy servent, an’ saufe the son o’ thy maigmayden’ [HSR].

mail (măl) n., arch. a meal, repast, quantity of milk yielded by a cow at a single milking – ‘The cow’s mail’ [GW], ‘A guid mail’ [GW] (also written ‘mael’); Leyden has this meaning the rent of a cow’s walk or grass, but E.C. Smith notes that locally these are ‘cow’s gang’ or ‘cow’s gress’; see also mail o meat.

mail (măl) n., arch. rent, a levied contribution – ‘...for the male of twenty schillings in the yere and for ilk yere of the saide nyntene yerris of th vsuale mone of Scotlande ...’ [DoR1445], ‘Item, thair wes awing be the said vmquhile Walter to Gedion Murray his half-brother, for the males of Glenpoyt ...’ [SB1574], ‘...at twa termes in the zeir, Witsonday and Mertimes in winter, be equall portionis, of maill, gif it beis askit allanerlie ...’ [SB1591], ‘For a barne mail, £3 12s., all for a year’ [BR1638], ‘...the stable which he had taken, was in peaceable possession of, and paid mails for ...’ [BR1707], ‘The council appropriate 5 merks for the help of the mail of a house for an English school’ [BR1715], ‘...put his sheep to pasture with the tenants’ sheep, and paid them grass mail for the same’ [C&L1767] (from Old English; see also ‘mailin’).

the Mail (thu-măl) n. name for one of the 2 mail coaches operating between Carlisle and Edinburgh in the early-to-mid 1800s. This daily service commenced in about 1807, enhancing the previous stage coach, which only ran 2 or 3 times a week. It is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, along with the other, the Sir Walter Scott. At that time it was leaving daily for Carlisle at midnight and for Edinburgh at 4 p.m.

Mailieshope

Main (mān) n. Agnes (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope in 1722, Borthwickbrae in 1724 and Whithope in 1728. In 1720 he married ‘Manny Whitt’ (presumably Many White), who was also from Robertson. He may also have married Janet Scott in Robertson in 1727. His children included: Janet (b.1722); John (b.1724); Hugh (b.1728); and James (b.1730).

Andrew (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Muselee in 1741. He is probably the Andrew who married Margaret Easton in Robertson in 1736. His children included: Margaret (b.1741); and Helen (b.1745). He is surely related to the earlier Andrew. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727.

James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He was married in 1687, although his wife’s name is then blank. His wife was Isobel Martin and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1688, with witnesses John Dodds and Adam Craig. Probably the same James married Helen Pott in Robertson in 1689. He may also be the James whose son John was baptised in Robertson in 1702. He witnessed a baptism for Adam Craig and Isobel Main (surely a relative) in 1688.

John (18th C.) gardener in Ormiston. In 1728 in Cavers Parish he married Agnes Elliot. His children included Richard (b.1731) and Marion (b.1732).

Richard (17th/18th C.) resident of Earlsdie in 1708 when his son Thomas was baptised in Cavers Parish. Other children were: Agnes (b.1710) and James (b.1722).

Richard (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Kershope ‘Easter’ in 1768 and Sundhope in 1770. Probably the same Richard was shepherd at Whitropefoot, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Elizabeth Amos and their children included: William (b.1761); Helen (b.1763); Robert (b.1766); Mary (b.1768); and Jean (b.1770).

William (18th C.) resident of Southdalearring in 1724, 1726 and 1729. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: James (b.1724); Agnes (b.1726); Richard (b.1729); and Isabel (b.1732) (also written ‘Maine’; see also Mein).

Mainchester (mān-ches-tur) n. Manchester, a city in north-western England, a major manufacturing centre since the 18th century – ‘Huz and Mainchester carried the Reform Bill’ [T].

Mainetti’s (mi-ne’e-eez) n. plastics manufacturers, with a factory in Hawick since the mid-1990s. The original local factory was established in Jedburgh in 1979, followed by a small Hawick factory in 1992. A new Hawick factory was built in 1998/9 at Haughhead, on the site of the former.
Town Dump, and specializes in telecommunications ducting.

mains (māns) n. the farm attached to the house on an estate, cultivated for the use of the landowner, the ‘home farm’ (related to the ‘demesne’; the word occurs in several local place names).

Mains see Borthwick Mains
Mains see Cavers Mains
Mains (māns) n. farm near old Castleton. There are enclosures, field boundaries and earthworks nearby, close to the old railway line. It is recorded in the ballad ‘Hobbie Noble’ that ‘Sim o’ the Mains’ was the betrayer of Hobbie. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is ‘Manys’, with value 10 shillings and 8 pence, and tenanted by Thomas Armstrong. David Elliot ‘in the Main’s’ was recorded in 1586/7. A later Thomas Armstrong ‘of Maynes’ was recorded in 1590. ‘Gilbert Elliot of the Maynis’ is recorded in 1599. James Murray was there in 1682. Adam Murray and Quentin Crozier were there in 1694. George Irvine was farmer there in 1797, William Irving in 1821 and William Snowden in the 1860s – ‘At Kershope foot the tryste was set, Kershope of the lilye lee; And there was traitor Sim o’ the Mains, And with him a private companie’ [T] (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map; it was presumably once the ‘home farm’ for the local baron).

the Mains (thu-māns) n. former local name for Borthwick Mains.

Mains Haugh (māns-hawch) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was ‘Main’s-haugh’ in 1779, valued at £21 17s 11d and still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Mainshiel Heid (mān-shiel-heed) n. Mainshiel Head, hill on the north side of the Borthwick valley, to the west of Harden and south of Borthwickshiel. It reaches a height of 258 m, although an unnamed peak to the west rises to 274 m. Harden Knowe is essentially its eastern spur.

Mains o Feu-Rule (mānz-ō-feu-rool) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule, possibly the same as Hallrule. In 1632 Margaret and Isobella, sisters of Walter Turnbull of Rawflat were each served as ‘heirs portioner’ in a third part of the 10-pound land (of old extent) of ‘villae et Maynes de Feualroull’. Also in 1632 Robert, son of Andrew Ker of Faldonside, inherited part of the ‘Maynes de Fewardaill alias Fewroule vocatis Halroule cum molendino’.

the Mains o Wulton (thu-mānz-o-wul’-in) n. another name for Wulton Mains.

Main Street (mān-stree) n. street in Denholm that runs along the south side of the Green and is part of the A698. It is also called Eastgate. The houses were all white-washed until into the 20th century. It contains the Cross Keys Inn and the Fox and Hounds Inn and used to have several shops, including the Post Office and 2 butchers.

the Mair (thu-mār) n. Hawick Moor, part of the Common, usually referring explicitly to the area containing St. Leonard’s race course. This is the location of the main social event of the Common Riding on the Friday and Saturday afternoons (since 1855 and 1868, respectively). Stalls, entertainments, beer tents etc. are in abundance. On Common Riding Friday the Cornet and his followers arrive at the back gate (towards Pilmuir) at about noon. The Cornet then rides round the course with the Flag, followed by the Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father and then the other riders. The ‘Big Fower’ ride their horses back round the course to the Paddock and the Cornet climbs to the roof of the Committee Room, waving the Flag towards the hillside and then towards the Paddock side, before setting it there for the duration of the races. When he climbs down the Cornet, together with the Acting Father, are presented with riding crops by the Chief Guest. The race meeting then starts in earnest, with both the more serious ‘fallping’ races and the Cornet’s Races (which are only for supporters who have ridden that day). The betting is fiercest on the ‘Tradesmen’s Handicap’. Before the Cornet has even arrived there has in modern times been a relay race run between children from the primary schools in Hawick. The Cornet leaves the Mair on the Friday at about 4 p.m., exiting by the top gate. Most people usually stay there for much longer, however, and the ‘picnics’ go on until well into the night if the weather is good. The race meeting starts later on the Saturday. Admission was first charged in 1883. In 1919 no licensed tents were permitted – ‘We’ll a’ lie to the muir a-riding: Drumlanrig gave it for providing’ [AB], ‘But while the Common-Riding’s on there’s never yin’ll care O’ joining Bonnie Chairlie’s flag They’ll a’ be at the Mair’ [T] (also known as ‘the Muir’, ‘the Moor’ or more formally ‘St. Leonard’s Park’).

Mair (mä尔) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) weaver in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households in 1835. He was surely related to Andrew. Alexander (1776–1842) carrier of Hawwick, operating from Backdamgate. In the early 19th century his firm ran a service between Hawick and Galashiels every Tuesday, continuing on to Edinburgh and Leith, amongst other places. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory leaving for Edinburgh on Tuesdays and Fridays and returning on Wednesdays and Saturdays, as well as going to Glasgow on Wednesdays. In 1837 he is listed going to Galashiels and Edinburgh every Tuesday. At the 1837 election one of the Tory voters escaped the mob by hiding in his house, which was stated to be ‘by the Tower-dyke-side’. He is recorded as a carrier near the Crescent (possibly the Mill Path) in 1841. He was heavily involved with the Relief Kirk. He married Elizabeth, daughter of carrier William Wilson, who died in 1847 aged 67. Their children included: William (1809/10–47), innkeeper at Gala Bank; Ann (1812/13–46); John; Janet; and Elizabeth (b.1821/2), who died young. One of his daughters became Mrs. Drummond. Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Town-o-Rule. Andrew (b.1794/5) from Newcastleton, he was listed as a weaver among heads of a households in 1835. By 1841 he was a hand-loom weaver in Hawick, living at Lockiesedge, then 5 Bourtree Place in 1851 and 5 O’Connell Street in 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Andrew Jr., Adam, Jane and Isabella. Gilbert (b.1785/6) born in Castleton Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Silverbuthall in 1841 and Wilton Roadhead in 1851. His wife was Margaret, and their children included William, Andrew, Walter, Francis, Thomas and Mary. James (d.1812) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife died in 1811 and he followed a year later. He could be the James, son of Andrew born in Hobkirk in 1743. James (b.c.1793) weaver in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841 at Lockiesedge. He was also recorded at Lockiesedge on the 1841 census. His children included David, Catherine, Jane, Agnes, Mary and Margaret. John (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His wife was Margaret Scott and their son Thomas was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1673. The witnesses were Richard Elliot and Robert Scott. His name is written ‘Mayr’. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Hearn Tax rolls. His name was listed as ‘John Maire Elder’, and the younger’ John who was also there was probably his son. John (17th/18th C.) probably son of John, he was tenant farmer at Mackside. He may be the John younger’ who was listed along with John ‘Elder’ at Stonedge in 1694. In 1704 (or perhaps a confirmation of the purchase of 1666) he purchased half the lands of Kirknowe from John Shiel. His son Richard married Janet, only daughter of John Shiel (and probably grand-daughter of the man he bought the land from). John (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785–91. Rev. John (1822–1902) born in Paisley, 3rd son of John. He was educated in Paisley and at Glasgow University and was licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1845.
Then in 1847 he was ordained as assistant and successor at Southdean, and remained there for well over half a century. In 1887 he obtained a doctorate from Glasgow University. He married Agnes (who died in 1900), daughter of George Grant of Glasgow, who founded a bursary in her father’s name. His publications include ‘Memorial Sermon preached in the Old Parish Church of Southdean’ (1876), ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of Jane Grant’ (published in Hawick, 1883), ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of James Stewart, Min. of Wilton’ (Hawick, 1886), and ‘Pulpit Memorial of the Life and Character of the late Rev. John MacRae, D.D., Min. of Hawick (Hawick, 1886), and ‘Pulpit Sermon preached in the Old Parish Church of Kirknowe and Kirkstile in 1745. With the permission of his wife Janet Shiel he sold the lands to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. His daughters Jane and Magdalen later possessed a cottage at Kirkstile. Dr. Robert (1864–1902) born in Tarbolton, Ayrshire, son of Archibald and Anne Vass. He graduated M.B. and C.M. from Glasgow University in 1886. He came to Hawick in 1890 to assist Dr. Bannerman, later becoming a partner. He first followed the Cornet in 1891, along with several of the town’s other doctors. As well as being a popular doctor, he became a Councillor for North High Street Ward in 1894, serving on the Sanitary Committee and Lunacy Board. This led to him being Cornet in 1896, the only known non-Teri to hold that office. The explanation is that when a last minute Cornet needed to be found he was the only unmarried man on the Council, and was talked into accepting the position. Provost Barrie served as his Acting Father, and it appears that he did not serve as Right- or Left-Hand Man afterwards. He was a keen sportsman, being Captain of the Golf Club, and he was also involved with the Border Rifles and the Masons. He died at age 37 and is buried at Tarbolton. W., (18th/19th C.) teacher in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the March’ in 1821. In modern times the favourite day for weddings has been Saturday, but formerly the normal day was the Friday following the 3 proclamations made in church. The ceremony was often preceded by a feet-washing tradition before the hen party, which usually took place on the Tuesday before. Prior to about the mid-19th century marriages in Hawick took place at the Manse, rather than in the Kirk. ‘Irregular’ marriages were performed in front of witnesses and not by the parish minister; they were common in the 17th and 18th century among the religiously disenfranchised. In the Border Magazine of 1902 there is a description of the practice among local factory workers of stealing the jacket and bonnet of the prospective bride and groom and decorating them with colourful yarn, ribbon and trinkets, to be worn at the dance on the wedding day.

Makerstoun (ma-kurz-tin, -toon) n. small parish on the north side of the Tweed, between Dryburgh and Kelso. It contains the village of Mekerstoun, as well as Makerstoun House (the origin of the name is probably ‘Mælcærf’s fram’; it first appears in 1159 as ‘Malcarvaston’ and in a list from St. Andrews Priory about the same time as ‘Malkaruistun’; the ‘l’ disappeared in the 15th century; it is also written ‘Makerston’, ‘Makeairstoun’, ‘Maklayrstoun’, ‘McCairston’, ‘M’Caristoun’ and other variants; it is ‘Machanstoun’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Maccarstoun’ on Roy’s 1750 map).

Makerstoun House (mawk-ur-stin-hoos) n. house in the parish of Makerstoun, standing in extensive grounds above the Tweed between St. Boswells and Kelso. Originally a tower of the Corbetts was there, it was home to the McDougalls (or Makdougalls) of Makerstoun from 1374. A new house was built on the ruins of a tower destroyed by Hertford’s men in 1545, constructed in 1590, with extensive later renovations. It was rebuilt in 1714 to designs by William Adam (father of Robert) and enlarged into a Victorian mansion in 1812, to plans of Archibald Elliot. The estate passed to Hay-McDougall, then to General Sir Thomas Brisbane, and then the Scots of Gala, all through marriage. Sir Thomas Brisbane built an observatory in the grounds, where he carried out pioneering observations on magnetism. Although the house burned down in 1970, it was rebuilt to the original design by 1973. On the opposite side of the Teviot stands ‘The Law’, also known as ‘The Pleahill’, probably a Norman motte, where local courts were held.

Malcolm (mawl-kum) n. name of 4 Scottish Kings. Malcolm I (d.954) King of Alba (i.e. northern Scotland) from 943. He signed a treaty with Edward I of England, gaining Strathclyde and Cumbria. He was never the monarch in the Scottish Borders. Malcolm II (d.1034) son of Kenneth III. He fought at the Battle of Carham, the outcome of which merged Strathclyde with Alba, leading to the formation of modern Scotland. He was thus the first ‘Scottish’ monarch for the Hawick area. Malcolm III (c.1031–93) eldest son of Duncan I, he was King from 1058. He was also known as Malcolm Canmore (‘of the large head’). After his father died he took refuge in England, later invading with the help of the noblemen of Southern Scotland and killed Lulach I. He made an alliance with England, and married St. Margaret. It is thought that during this time Middle English became the dominant language in the Scottish Lowlands. In 1072 he was forced to swear allegiance to William I of England, but in 1091 invaded Northumbria and besieged Durham. This attempt to control Northumbria failed when William II of England sent an army north. But he tried again in 1093, besieging Alnwick. However, he was killed there, along with his son Edward. He was succeeded by his younger brother Donald III. Malcolm IV (c.1141–65) grandson of David I, he succeeded to the throne in 1153. Sometimes referred to as ‘the Maiden’, he died unmarried in Jedburgh and was succeeded by William I. He founded Soutra Hospital in 1164. He also granted additional lands and rights to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey.

Malcolm (mawl-kum) n. George (1722–1803) son of Rev. Robert, minister of Ewes. His father was granted the farm of Burnfoot-in-Ewes and he helped his father to run it and succeeded to the farm. He also merged it with the neighbouring lands of Douglas. He married Margaret Paisley of Craig and had a family of 17. Among these were the ‘4 knights of Eskdale’, namely Col. Sir James, Adm. Sir Pulteney, Vice-Adm. Sir Charles and Gen. Sir John. Sir John (1769–1833) soldier and diplomat from a prominent family based at Burnfoot near Langholm, he and his 3 brothers being called the ‘Four Knights of Eskdale’. He entered the military at the age of 12. He served as Governor of Bombay, is buried in Westminster, and had a 100 ft obelisk built in his memory on Whitaker Hill above Langholm in 1835. In about 1805 he helped the ailing Dr. John Leyden to recover from illness in his home at Seringapatam. He inscribed some complementary lines of verse in Leyden’s ‘Scenes of Infancy’, to which Leyden reciprocated. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1798 he acted as substitute for Alexander Fowler in the ballot for men serving in the Militia. John (19th C.) from Samuelston, he was schoolmaster at Hobbirk from 1857. He had a stove and a porch fitted to the schoolhouse. He taught through the transition from Parish to Board School. He was said to be an excellent teacher, although perhaps pedantic and with a hasty temper. He was keen on teaching his pupils about Border history. He was Secretary of the Border Association of Teachers. He married the sister of Daniel Henderson of the Bonchester Bridge Inn and they had children. He died at about age 50 and is buried in Hobbirk Kirkyard. Rev. Robert (1687/8–1761) son of David from the Lochore family. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1707, became tutor to Lord President Dalrymple and was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1716. He was called Ewes Kirk in 1717 and remained there until his death. He failed to inherit the family estate near Cupar on account of his relative being an Episcopalian and leaving it to someone else. However, he was given the estate of Burnfoot (in Eskdale) by the Earl of Dalkeith, and this would remain in his family for several generations. He established a Poor House in the Parish. In 1722 he married Agnes, daughter of Rev. George Campbell, and she died in 1767. Their children were: George (1722–1803), farmer at Burnfoot, father of the ‘4 Knights of Eskdale’; Wilhelmina (b.1729); David; and Marion. William Elphinstone (1816–1907) from the family of Burnfoot in Dumfriesshire, he was son of Adm. Sir Pulteney. He served in the Royal Navy from the age of 14, but left 2 years later on account of weak health. After graduating from Cambridge he travelled extensively and then settled at Burnfoot farm in 1843. He was a Justice of the Peace, Commissioner of Supply and Deputy-Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire and commanded the Langholm Company of Volunteers. In 1857 he married Mary (d.1859) daughter of James of Cavers. When his wife's brother James died in 1878, the Cavers estate was inherited by his daughter Mary. After his first wife's death he secondly married Charlotte Leslie Melville (1826–92). William (19th/20th C.) from Norham-on-Tweed, he was Police Constable in Rulewater, being based at the Forkins. He married Jessie Johnstone.

Malveisin (mal-vä-sin) n. William (d.1238) probably from France, he was a royal clerk in Scotland in the 1180s, becoming Archdeacon of Lothian in 1193, Chancellor of Scotland in 1199 and Bishop of Glasgow in the same year. He thus held authority over the Hawick area, although it is unclear if his influence was ever significant. In 1202 he was translated to the bishopric of St. Andrews. It has also been suggested that he was author of an Arthurian romance. He is buried at St. Andrews and may have had a son called Arthur.

malverse (mal-vers) n., arch. serious misconduct – ‘...and promised to carry soberly, through God’s grace, and not to fall in the like malvers’ [PR1716].

Man (mawn) n. Francis (19th C.) native of somewhere along the Malay Archipelago. He was given as a gift to Gilbert Elliot, Lord Minto by one of the Rajahs of the kingdoms there in about 1811, as part of negotiations for support against the Dutch and French. Lord Minto emancipated these slaves, but kept the two eldest boys as domestic servants; he chose the surnames ‘of Homo [man] and Amicus [friend], that I may always be put in mind to treat my humble property like men and friends instead of cattle’, based on a quotation from Seneca. Along with Edmund Friend he became part of the household staff at Minto, one of them being groom. However, it is unclear what became of them.

mangeege (maa-neeg) v. to manage – (note the 2nd vowel is ee rather than the English e).

mangeement (maa-neeg-min) n. management – ‘...got a spaishial gift o’ groceries an money thre the mangeeement teh merk the occassion’ [BW1978].

mang (mang) prep., arch. among – ‘Then ‘mang the lads there was searching for plails, ‘Mang the lasses, for bonnets an’ shawls, man’ [JoHa], ‘‘Mang ither toons she bears the gree, The Queen o’ a’ the Border’ [JT], ‘There’s no a test ‘mang a’ the thrang Like the testing o’ the Teri’ [RH], ‘In mony a lane moment his fancy shall dwell ‘Mang the scenes ushered in by the eicht o’clock bell’ [JJ] (often spelled ‘mang’).

Mangerton (mahn-jer-, mang-ger-tin) n. former tower house of the chief of the Armstrongs, between Newcastleton and Kershopefoot, on the banks of the Liddel. It was the seat of 10 successive Armstrong chiefs, from the late 13th century to the early 17th. ‘Alyxandir Armystrand’ is listed as owner of the lands in a rental roll of c.1376. The remains of the tower are now just ruins of the lower storey, measuring about 10.4 m by 7.7 m. There is an armorial stone, which appears to bear the date 1563 and the initials ‘SA’ and ‘EF,’ for Simon Armstrong and Elizabeth Foster. The tower was partly blown up by a force led by the Regent Moray in 1569, when the Armstrongs refused to submit. The tower is now cared for by the Armstrong Clan Trust, and is situated about 300 m south of the modern farmhouse. To the west of the farmhouse is Mangerton Mill, which lies on a lade built off the Liddel Water. The lands associated with the estate are listed on a rental roll of around 1376 in the charters of the Douglasses of Morton: Ragarth; Spetelitoun; Mangerton; Mangertonholme; Grenys; Qwivythawigh; Westburneflat; Pouterlampert; Dominium inferior; Haldykis; Poudercroft; Swyne Acre; Terra cisoris; Dominium superius; Hardenkaul; Tyosconsted; Maldsonsted; Milmohore; Hungyrflayf; Mynicotis; Pratum aule; Flygh superior; Kelloley cum Mylnhelome; Lanorowftanyes; Terra Philippi de Fausyde cum Holdoun; Stryschelden; Ricarden; Halyfyrsted; Hetyreys; and Redelahugh. Lands there were resigned by Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482, granted to David Scott of Buccleuch the same year (presumably as superior), and confirmed to Walter Scott of Branc holme in 1484/5. There was a further gift of non-entry of the lands to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1550/1; they would pass fully to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1629, when Francis Scott was granted ‘the castle, tower and fortalice thereof’. The Laird of ‘Mangertoun’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. The lands of William Scott of Mangerton were valued at £1800 in 1643. ‘Lady Mangerstowne’ was responsible for the land tax in 1663, including £852 for ‘towresfeild’, £100 for the ‘teind of the towre’ and £800 for her rents in Castleton. The ‘Laird of Mangerstain’ paid tax on a value of £1280 in 1678. John Armstrong, James Little and Francis Little were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. The farm was still valued at £1280 in 1707. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it extended to 349 acres, bounded by Sorbietrees, Liddel Water and Tweeden Burn. At that time it contained the farmstead of Blacksidelees, there was also a common off to the north-east and the map shows the old tower and a farmhouse just to its west, as well as the current farmhouse and mill. James Renwick was tenant in the mid-1700s. In 1788 the lands were still valued at £1280 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. Robert Hogg was farmer there in 1797 and Thomas Elliot in 1851 and 1861. The name ‘Meriantoun’ (recorded in the 16th century) may be an alternative version of Mangerton – ‘I have Mangerton, Ogilvie, Raeburn, and Netherbie, Old Sim, of Whitram, and all his array. Come all Northumberland, Teesdale and Cumberland, Here at the Breek Tower end shall the fray’ [ES], ‘Now fare thee weel, sweet Mangerton! For I think again I’ll ne’er thee see: I wad hae betrayed nae lad alive, For a’ the gowd o’ Christentic’ [T] (the name occurs at least as early as 1376 as ‘Mangertoune’ and is ‘Manger- tone’ in 1482, ‘Mayngertoun’ in 1530, ‘Menger- toune’ in 1578/9, ‘Manger- toune’ in 1581, ‘Manjer- toune’ in 1584, ‘Manderstoun’ in 1586, ‘Manger- toune’ in 1632, ‘Maingertoun’ in 1635 and 1644 and ‘Mengertoun’ in 1644 and 1694; it appears clearly on Sandison’s c.1590 map, is ‘Mangertoune’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Mangertoun’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; its origin is probably the Old English ‘mangera tun’, meaning ‘farm of the merchants‘).

Mangerton Mill (mahn-jer-tin-mill) n. former mill near the farm of Mangerton. It is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, and still clearly on the modern Ordnance Survey map, beside the mill late at the curve in the Liddel there. James Armstrong was tenant there in 1611. James ‘Littlelmu’ was tenant in 1683. Andrew Turnbull was miller there in the mid-18th century.

Thomas Elliot was miller there in 1852 (it is ‘Mangertown Myln’ in 1611; it is ‘Mangertonmill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Mangertonholm (män-jer-tin-hŏm) n. lands formerly attached to the estate of Mangerton. It is listed in a rental roll c.1376 as ‘Mangertounholme’ and with a value of 13 shillings.

Mang Howes and Knowes (mawng-howz-in-nowz) n. prose piece written by Elliot Cowan Smith in 1914, around the time of his 23rd birthday. Its full title is ‘Mang Howes an Knowes, A Day’s Dander Throwe Border Waeter-Gates’, and it describes a journey from St. Boswells to Hawick. It was originally circulated among a few friends, but published in 1925, following Smith’s untimely death. It is a staggering piece of work, so replete with vernacular vocabulary that it is hard to read without the help of Smith’s article on the local dialect ‘Braid Haick’.

manish (maw-nish, maw-neesh) v., arch. to manage – ‘To think e’er to manish a man when he’s drunk . . . ’ [JoHa], ‘Hoo did ye manish?’ [HAST1868], ‘A canna manish that bairn ava’ [GW].

man-keeper (mawn-kee-pur) n., arch. the newt, eft – ‘A designation given to the newt, or S. esk, by the inhabitants of Dumfr. and Roxb. because they believe that it waits on the adder to warn man of his danger’ [JoJ].

manky (mang-kee) adj. dirty, muddy, heavily soiled – ‘ee’re no weerin they manky troosers again, ir ee?’ (also colloquial English).

Manners (maw-nurz) n. Henry 2nd Earl of Rutland (c.1526–63) son of Thomas, the 1st Earl. He was Warden of the English Middle and East Marches in 1549 and was in charge of the sack of Haddington. He was later made President of the North. He married Margaret Neville, daughter of the 1st Earl of Westmorland, and remarried to Bridget Morrison. He was succeeded by his sons Edward and John. He is buried in Bottesford Church in Leicestershire, beneath an alabaster efigy.

mannie (maw-nee) n., poet. diminutive form of ‘man’ – ‘. . . A lean auld mannie, and shrewd As a Heiland body can be’ [WL].

Manor (ma-nur) n. parish in Peeblesshire, south-west of the town of Peebles, extending along the valley of the Manor Water from the Tweed towards Megget. It is also sometimes called Kirkton Manor. The barony was granted by Robert III to Sir William Inglis in 1396, as a reward for killing the English knight Thomas de Strutters at Rulehaugh. This was the same Inglis family who were barons of Braxholme. Sir William’s son John had a charter of the barony from Archibald, Earl of Douglas, who was already superior of the family’s lands in Roxburghshire.

John Inglis of Manor swapped half of Braxholme for Murdiestoun with Robert Scotts of Buccleuch in 1420. And in 1446 his son, Thomas Inglis of Manor, swapped the other half of Braxholme with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The Inglis family sold their half to David Pringle of Smallholm in 1522. The other half of the barony belonged to the Lowis family, with Patrick of the Lowis of Meaner’ being balie to Sir Walter Scott in 1434. A small part of the barony once also belonged to the Gledstains of that Ilk (also written ‘Maner’, ‘Manner’, etc.; it is ‘Menar’ in 1431).

Manorhill (ma-nur-hil) n. farm on the north of the Tweed near Makerstoun (the origin of the name is simply ‘hill of the manor house’ and occurs at least as early as 1616).

manrent (mawn-ren’) n., arch. agreement as part of the feudal system, where someone swears to be a faithful supporter, usually of a superior, and most often occurring in the phrase ‘band of manrent’.

manse (mawns, mans) n. the house of a minister, generally owned by the Church (from Mediæval Latin).

the Manse (thu-mawns) n. usually referring to Hawick Parish Manse, situated on Old Manse Road, and later to the new Manse built on Buccleuch Road in 1844 (renamed Parkview and more recently Dunira). A new manse was built on Old Manse Road in 1763, at a cost of £200. This was for a while the only house beyond the Old Parish Church along the New Road. The phrase is also used sometimes to refer to the homes of other local ministers (see also the Auld Manse).

Manse Brae (mans-brä) n. former popular name for the road at Denholm Townhead, where the Church manse was located (now Beechlands), i.e. part of the road from Hawick into Denholm. Also the name for the road (north) up to the Manse in Roberton, at the top of which the older church stood.

Mansfield Cottage (mans-feeld-ko'-eej) n. cottage in Cavers Parish, lying just to the southeast of the modern church.

Manse Lane (mans-län) n. name used for Old Manse Lane before about 1860.

Mansfield (manz-, mans-feeld) n. area of town down-river from the North Bridge, generally referring to the part on the north side of the Teviot, lying along Mansfield Road. It consists of housing, factories, sports grounds, and an industrial area. It was named after Wilton Parish Church Manse, which was once the only property in the area (now in Mansfield Square), the Minister of Wilton owning a large tract of land there from at least the mid-17th century. The Mansfield Glebe land here was purchased by the Town Council in the late 1870s, with factories, housing and the sewage works built soon after. Eastfield Mills dominated the area in the late 19th century, with Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. building most of the tenement blocks to provide convenient housing for their workers.

Mansfield (manz-feeld) n. Ralph (1556–1633) from Yorkshire, he was appointed as a deputy warden by Ralph Evers, Lord Eure. He served as Captain of Harbottle and Keeper of Tynedale. There were complaints against him by other Englishmen in 1597, including his ‘extortions of 15 score head of cattle and 400 sheep – conveyance of Cesford to Toplif to buy a horse – caused 2 Englishmen to fight before Buccleuch at Hawick – till one was slain’. It is separately referred to as an incident of ‘carrying Englishmen into Scotland to combat before Bawcleuch, where the one murdered the other’. His response to the last accusation is that he took no men to Hawick, ‘but 2 English fugitives, some time of Redesdale, one accusing the other of crimes, did combat before Buccleuch’, and when he got there he tried to stop the fight. The true details of these events, and where exactly this fight may have taken place, are not known.

Mansfield Brig (manz-feeld-brig) n. Mansfield Bridge, or Footbridge, across the Teviot connecting Mansfield Road with the end of Noble Place. It was suggested by a petition of 308 names in 1886 and funded by subscription. The original wooden footbridge was opened by Provost Miligan in 1888, but washed away in 1938, being replaced in 1939. A completely new bridge was erected in 1986.

Mansfield Crescent (manz-feeld-kre-sin’) n. street built in 1887 on land that was formerly part of Wilton Manse Glebe.

Mansfield Gairdens (manz-feeld-gär-dinz) n. street in Mansfield, being a continuation of Mansfield Park, built around 1925, with additional houses added in 1972.

Mansfield Hoose (manz-feeld-hoos) n. originally Thornwood House, built in 1870/1 for auctioneer James Oliver. It was designed in a Greek Revival style by J.T. Rochead, with italianate decor and splendid gardens. It retains much of the original ceiling plasterwork. Sold by the Olliers in 1936, it was owned by Lt.-Col. Mudue and by 1956 had become a hotel and night club, having several owners over the subsequent decades. In 1973 it was taken over by the Hawkinsees, who changed the name to Mansfield Park Hotel. Later the McManus changed the name to Mansfield House Hotel. It was taken over by Ian and Sheila McKimmon in 1985 and renovated into Hawick’s premier hotel, with 12 unique bedrooms and set in 10 acres of land. In 2009 it was purchased by the Midgey Company. It has been a very popular site for wedding receptions (see also Thornwud Hoose).

Mansfield Industrial Estate (manz-feeld-in-dus-tree-ul-ee-stä’) n. area developed for knitwear and engineering businesses in 1976 on and around the site of the old Blenkhorn, Richardson tweed mill.

Mansfield Mills (manz-feeld-milz) n. name for knitwear mills on Mansfield Road, which were built 1880–1929. Samuel Fineland, hosiery and glove manufacturer was there from around 1882. It may also have been associated with James Renwick & Co. From 1891 it house Turn & Rutherford’s, which closed around 1950. There was a fire there in 1955. Braemar moved in around 1969, replaced by Jaeger in the early 1970s. The building...

was partly converted into flats in 1996, by Northern Rock Holmes. Clan Douglas moved into part of it in 1999.

Mansfield Mission Hut (manz-feeld-mi-shin-hu') n. independent evangelical organisation established for women in the Mansfield area in 1937. It was separate from the Hawick Home Mission.

Mansfield Park (manz-feeld-pawrk) n. home of Hawick R.F.C. since 1888, times each season. A new pavilion was opened in 1919, a new stand in 1955 and floodlights in 1993 – ‘As I view life’s looking glass Where can any joy surpass The callants doon at Mansfield When they hold the final pass?’ [RMc].

Mansfield Park (manz-feeld-pawrk) n. street running parallel and to the north of Mansfield Road, becoming Mansfield Court at one end and Mansfield Gardens at the other. The original houses were built in 1890. The name was in use for the general area before it was feuded for factories and housing in the 1880s.

Mansfield Quoitin Club (manz-feeld-kwoi-in-klub) n. organisation for playing quoits, with ground in the Mansfield area. It existed in the late 19th century and first few years of the 20th.

Mansfield Reach (manz-feeld-reech) n. name sometimes used to describe the roughly straight part of the Teviot in the Mansfield area.

Mansfield Road (manz-feeld-röd) n. main road through the Mansfield area. The original houses were built in 1882. At the corner opposite the Mansfield Bar was Tucker’s grocer’s shop, with Mary Hume’s grocer’s shop at No. 3 (which was formerly ‘A. Smith’).

Mansfield Square (manz-feeld-skwær) n. street named after Wilton Manse, which was the only building in the area when the Town Council bought the land in 1875. The buildings were erected in 1888, and the original manse was later made into private housing, surviving the demolitions of 1974.

Mansholme Mills (mans-höm-nilz) n. 19th century woollen manufacturing mill off Mansfield Road behind Waverley Mills. The factory was associated with yarn spinning for a number of smaller firms, specifically James Taylor, Robert Grierson & Co., Dumsmore, Johnston & Co., and Tant & Anderson.

man-sworn (man-swörn) adj., arch. forsworn, lying deliberately, used as an insulting phrase – ‘... Thomas Olipher, cordiner, ... for giving of un-reverent language to the bailies in face of court, and calling William Ruecastell man-sworn in face of court’ [BR1642].

manteen (man-teen) v., poet. to maintain – ‘I ken that the Lord wull maintain the caus o’ the afflictied, and the richt o’ the puir’ [HSR].

Mantel Waas (mawn-tul-wawz) n. name use for a former ruin near Ancrum, around Nether Ancrum, to the east of the village. It was sometimes referred to as ‘Malton Walls’ (most likely in error, leading to a supposed association with the Knights of Malta), but ‘Mantel’ is how the locals referred to it, which means simply parapet walls. It was perhaps a palace of the Bishops of Glasgow, who held lands there, or otherwise remains of former fortifications at Ancrum. It was described at the end of the 18th century (by Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh) as being a parallelogram in plan, built of stone and lime, and having vaults under it. A high gable with a beautiful window as said to have stood until the mid-18th century and the last portion of the walls fell in about the mid-19th century. It was said that human bones were regularly unearthed there and in 1956 the remains of a statue were dug up nearby. A grave-stone inscribed ‘1607’ is built into a house in the area. Nothing can now be seen of this former construction today. There is a fanciful tradition that an underground passage led from this place to Timpendean Castle (also written ‘Mantle’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

manuale (ma-new-al) adj., arch. written with the hand – ‘...be the hand of our loutifamiliar clerk, Maister Richard Lawson, clerk of our Justiciary, wnder his subscriptioun manuale ...’ [SB1500].

Manuel (mawn-wel) n. George (17th C.) resident at Barnes in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Mannall’. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Hall and their children included Robert (b.1683). John (b.1806) master blacksmith in Lilliesleaf, son of William. His smithy was on the north side of Main Street. He may never have married, being listed living with his sister as housekeeper in 1851. He was also recorded in Slater’s 1852 directory. John (1838–1900) Burgh Surveyor and Master of Works from 1874–1900. Born in Perth, son of Peter, the Clerk of Works in Edinburgh, and Agnes Wilson. He was a journeyman joiner and became assistant to the Burgh Engineer of the City of Edinburgh. He came to Hawick in 1874, serving as Road Surveyor and Master of Works, following the death of Andrew Wilson. He supervised public works in Hawick in the period 1874–1900, which saw a huge amount of construction. His office was at 2 Wellington Street and later 28 High Street. He originally lived at 27 High Street, then 25 North Bridge Street, but designed his own house Elimbank in Fenwick Park in 1884, with the access road called ‘Manuel’s Brae’ long afterwards. He also worked as an architect for Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Company (on the Terraces). He designed several other buildings, including Howlands Mill and prepared plans for renovating several others, such as St. Leonard’s Farm, Drumlanrig School and Hawick Jail. He was responsible for the plans for the Mansfield Brig in 1888, for opening up O’Connell Street in 1889 and for the Fever Hospital at Burnfoot in 1900. He was one of the founders of Hawick Golf Club, and also keen on bowling, curling and fishing. In addition he was a Mason and manager at East Bank Kirk, as well as being known as a fine bass singer and Secretary of the Hawick Choral Society. One of his regular duties was to oversee the erection of the ring and platforms at the Common Riding Games. He married music teacher Isabella (or Catherine) Hunter of North Berwick (d.18986) and their children were: Margaret Agnes (b.1877), who became an artist in New York; John (b.1879); Catherine Hunter (1881–1969), who died in Vancouver; Francis Eric (b.1886), who went to India, worked as a banker, and retired to the south coast of England; and Florence Wilson (1888–1971), who died in Kelowna, British Columbia. John and the 3 daughters all eventually emigrated to North America. There is a possibility that another son may have been Robert, who emigrated to America and named the Hawick in Minnesota (although there is no evidence to support this). He became a railway manager in the U.S.A., and was responsible for the naming of Hawick, Minnesota (mis-typed ‘R. Manvel’ in the 1905 history of Kandiyohi County; also notice a possible conflation with Santa Fe Railroad President Allen Manvel). There is clearly some confusion in the story of how the Hawick in Minnesota got its name and any connection with the Manuel family remains unproven. Samuel (19th C.) blacksmith on the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He does not appear in the 1841 census. Simon (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His wife was Margaret Smail. Their children included: Janet (b.1764); Jean (b.1769); Jean (b.1771); and William (b.1775). William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He had children: Isabell (b.1737); Jean (b.1737), apparently twin of Isabell; Gilbert (b.1739); James (b.1742); Margaret (b.1744); and Jean (b.1747). William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf whose children included: Robert (b.1755); John (b.1757); Margaret (b.1762); and George (b.1764). William (18th C.) married Margaret Fairlie. Their children included: Jean (b.1768); Jean (again, b.1769); Jean (again, b.1771); and Riddell (b.1772). William (b.1770), with no mother’s name given, may also be his son. William (18th C.) recorded as owner of land in Lilliesleaf in 1788, valued at £6 13s 4d. His surname was given as ‘Manwell’ and he was still recorded as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in Lilliesleaf according to the Lieutenant Book for 1799. He is listed as blacksmith in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may be the son of Simon and Margaret Smail born in Lilliesleaf in 1775. He married Jean Swanstoun. Their children included: Margaret (b.1802); Simon (b.1803); Agnes (b.1804); John (b.1806); William (b.1808), blacksmith in Melrose; Jessy (b.1810); Mary (b.1811); and Agnes (b.1814). Simon (b.1798) and Jean (b.1800) may also have been his children (also spelled ‘Manual’ and earlier ‘Manwell’).

Manuel’s Brae (mawn-welz-brā) n. former name for the road leading to the large houses that were built at Fenwick Park, off Weensland Road. It is the lower part of the street now known as Fenwick Park. The name came from John Manuel, who built ‘Elm Bank’.

manufacturin (ma-new-fak-choor-in) n. manufacturing. Hawick’s production of goods grew slowly, until the rapid expansion of woollens in the early 19th century. In the earliest records there are examples of various tradesmen in the town, making items from wood, metal, leather, etc. There was also small-scale, largely domestic, production of linen and woollen garments. The trades were governed through 7 ‘incorporations’, namely weavers, shoemakers (or cordiners), skinners (and glovers), hammermen, fleshers (i.e. butchers), tailors and bakers (or baxters). A small factory making carpets appeared in Hawick in the 1750s, stocking frames were introduced in the 1770s, linen tape manufacturing started in the 1780s and yarn spinning commenced in the early 1800s. In 1839 the Minister described people being employed ‘in the manufacture of thongs, gloves, candles, machinery, and in the tanning of leather and dressing of sheep skins’, although woollen manufacturing by far dominated.

Manvers (man-vurz) n. Robert de (13th/14th C.), given part of the estate of Chisholm by the English King Edward in 1317 (along with Ranulph de Home), although it was restored to John ‘de Cheseholme’ 3 years later.

the Maori flag (thu-now-ree-flawg) n. artefact donated to Hawick Museum in 1921 by artist Tom Scott. It had been captured by Crown forces in 1865 at the Battle of Oamarahakeke. In 2015 there was a request to return the flag to New Zealand.

Mar (mawr) n. Margaret (d.c.1391) daughter of Donald, 8th Earl of Mar, and sister of Thomas, 9th Earl. She married William, 1st Earl of Douglas. Her husband died in 1384 and she secondly married Sir John Swinton of Swinton. Her son James inherited the titles of both Douglas and Mar. However, she also seems to have been regarded as Countess of Mar in her own right, with that title going to her daughter Isabel. Thomas 9th (or 10th) Earl of Mar (c.1332–c.74) son of Donald, 8th Earl of Mar and Isabel Stewart, last of a line of ‘Mormaers’ of Mar (in Aberdeenshire), with no clear surname. Both Thomas Baliol and the Earl of Douglas are referred to as his brothers, but it seems this was likely to have meant step-brothers or brothers-in-law. He was apparently raised in England. He witnessed charters during the reigns of David II and Robert II and became High Chamberlain of Scotland. He also held many titles, particularly in northern Scotland, but also including the Barony of Cavers. He was certainly Lord of Cavers by 1357. In 1358 he witnessed the charter for the Barony of Hawick, granted to Sir Thomas Murray. He granted the lands of Denholm, Denholm Dean and ‘Balleloch’ to Thomas Cranston in an undated charter (confirmed decades later in 1441). The grant excepted his domain lands within the Barony of Cavers and his lands of Stobs. He granted Cavers to Thomas Baliol, in fee. In 1368 he granted the patronage and advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey. Also in 1368 he gave his consent to a grant by Thomas Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas, of Earlside in the Barony of Cavers. It is unclear exactly when he died, and it seems there was some confusion after his death about the inheritance of the Cavers lands and titles immediately afterwards; however, in an investigation into the status of the Kirk of Cavers in 1406 he is still referred to as the former Baron, with his confirming gift of the Kirk to Melrose Abbey cited. He married Margaret Graham, Countess of Menteith (and widow of John Murray) and later Margaret Stewart, Countess of Angus, elder daughter of Thomas, Earl of Angus. He had no heirs and his titles fell to his sister Margaret, Countess of Mar, who married William, 1st Earl of Douglas and Earl of Mar. The titles then passed to their daughter Isabella, Countess of Mar, and eventually to the Douglases directly.

Marchmount (mawrch-mown’) n. alternative name for Roxburgh Castle.

Marcus (mar-kis) n. Walter ‘Mr. Walter’ (20th C.) from Westphalia in Germany, he had to leave because of Nazi persecution and founded a fashion house in London, along with his younger brother Otto. When they established a factory in Hawick in 1940, he came to live in the Town and stayed until the 1950s, being manager of the W. & O. Marcus factory on Commercial Road. He also organised regular fashion shows in the Tower Hotel. He joined the Home Guard during the War. He lived with his wife Anne and daughter Helen at Wellogate Villa. He had a reputation for being a strict, but fair employer. However, it was said that he was often bad-tempered during Jewish fast days, with his wife calling ahead to the factory to warn the workers. He moved to London in the mid-1950s after his brother became ill. But he continued to visit Hawick until the factory closed in 1964.

Marcus’s (mar-ki-sez) n. W. & O. Marcus, former dress-making factory on Commercial Road. The firm was founded by Jewish refugees Walter and Otto Marcus (friends of Otto Weisz) in 1939, and became one of the top 10 fashion houses in London. The Hawick factory was set up in 1940 in part of the Willglen Mill building. It operated until 1965, managed by Frederica Rosenberger. The connection to Hawick was probably established from the brothers knowing Otto Wiesz, head designer at Pringles (as well as the known availability of textile workers and the relative safety of the Borders in wartime). During the London Blitz workers were brought up to work in Hawick and many of them stayed. At the height of production it employed 180 workers. The dresses were known for their use of luxury materials. The firm supplied dresses to many London department stores, such as Harrods, Liberty, Fortnum & Mason, Bourne & Hollingsworth, Debenhams and Selfridges, as well as Greensmith Downes and Jenners in Edinburgh. One of the reasons cited for closure was rising rail costs for transporting materials and finished goods to and from London. After the factory closed the building was used as the Scout Headquarters. The ladies garment tradition was carried on by ‘Alison Russell’, run by ex-Marcus employee Ella Russell at Loch Park for about 20 years after Marcus’ closed. Another company, Simon Marcus, skirt manufacturers, was based at Loch Park 1979–93. The original building at 22 Commercial Road was demolished in the late 1990s. Herriot-Watt archives hold design books, loose patterns and an unpublished company history. There was a reunion of 52 former employees held in 2003.

Mare Sike (mär-sik) n. small stream that rises on the Horn and flows roughly south-west to join Frostlie Burn near the farm of Linhope.

Marfaux (mawr-faks) n. house on Wilton Path, named after WWI to commemorate the area in France where a family member had been killed. The Inglis and Scott families lived there around that time.

Margaret (mawr-gri’) n. (1283–90) Queen of Scotland from 1286, she was known as ‘the Maid of Norway’. She was the great-grand-daughter of Alexander III and his only surviving descendant, being daughter of Eric II of Norway. Following the Treaty of Birgham (near Kelso), in which she was betrothed to Edward I’s son in return for assurance of Scottish independence, but with Edward as her ward, she was brought by ship from Norway, but died en route. This left Scotland with at least a dozen claimants to the throne, including Sir Nicholas de Soulis. Michael Scot is said to have helped bring her back to Scotland.

Margaret Scott (mawr-gri’-sko’) n. fictional daughter of the Laird of Branxholme in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’. In the story she is in love with Henry of Cranstoun, who belongs to a family who are enemies of the Scotts, but through various twists they get married in the end. She is based upon a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, although it was Janet, not Margaret, who married a Cranston.

the Marina (tha-maw-rec-mu) n. picture house, bingo hall, pub and entertainment centre on Towerdysides, previously known by many other names, including the Empire, the Kings, and the Odeon, having originally been the Exchange Hall. It was the last commercial cinema in Hawick, and stopped showing films in June 1985, when it became a bingo hall and then a night club; the last film showing was a double bill of ‘Revenge of the Nerds’ and ‘Bachelor Party’. At the Snuffin, after the Tower Hotel closed, packets of snuff used to be thrown from a window here. The building burned down in 1992 and was largely demolished in 1998, although part was redeveloped as the Heritage Hub.

Marion’s Hob (maw-rec-inz-hob) n. nickname for Robert Scott Bailie in 1612 and in the 1620s.

Marion’s Rab (maw-rec-inz-rawb) n. another nickname for Robert Scott.
Marjoribanks

Marjoribanks (mawr-jô-rec-, mawrch-bawngks) n. George (c.1695–1740) said to have been born at Singdean, he was a Jacobite supporter who fought at the Battle of Preston in 1715 and was transported to Virginia. There he did well for himself as a tobacco and cotton plantation owner. He married Anne Echols in Virginia and they had at least 8 children. Many of their descendants later lived in the Carolinas. There is no local record of members of this family living at Singdean. John (16th C.) son of Philip, who was one of the first to use this surname. He was a younger brother of William (to whom he succeeded) and elder brother of Thomas (who represented Douglas of Cavers in 1541). He was a Guild Brother and Bailie in Edinburgh and served as Dean of Guild. He is probably the Burgess of Edinburgh of that name who in 1532 witnessed a sasine (recorded in Selkirk) for William Walker selling his tenement in Hawick to John Morlaw. Thomas of that Ilk (d.1557), son of Philip and brother of John. He was one of 10 advocates appointed as procurators nefore the Lords of Session. He served as Lord Provost of Edinburgh and later became Lord Clerk Register, with the title Lord Ratto. In 1541 he represented James Douglas of Cavers and his tenants in asking for reparations from Walter Scott of Branxholme for burning the farm of Whitriggs. Perhaps the same Thomas served as procurator for a case in Selkirk in 1533 regarding Sunderlandhall. Probably the same Thomas acted as agent in 1539 to receive a large number of sheep from Patrick Murray of Falahill and others, owed to the King and passed to Robert Scott of Howpasley and Nini Anderson (formerly ‘Mairriorbankis’ and variants).

Mark (mawrk) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Crumhaugh. In 1724 he married Jean Goodfellow, who was from Robertson Parish, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Robertson. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to Robert, who was also listed there. In 1690 he witnessed a baptism for John Hastie and in 1691 probably witnessed another for Robert. In 1694 he and Robert witnessed a baptism for James Deans. George (19th C.) farmer at Hassendeanburn in the 1860s. John (17th C.) resident the Hawick area. He witnessed a Robertson baptism for Andrew Fisher in 1681 and a Hawick baptism for William Haswell in 1688. Robert (17th C.) resident at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694.

In 1694 he and Andrew witnessed a baptism for James Deans. He married Janet Henderson and their children included Marion (b.1691) and Margaret (b.1698). The witnesses in 1691 were Andrew [probably Mark] and Alexander [probably Wilson]. Simon (17th/18th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is listed as ‘Simon Mack, carrier’ among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He married Isobel Young and their children, baptised in Hawick, included Isobel (b.1701), Robert (b.1702), Janet (b.1708) and Agnes (b.1713). Janet (b.1694) may also have been his child. The witnesses in 1708 were Bailie George Martin and smith James Scott. Simon (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. His name appears to be written ‘Merk’ in one records. He married Helen ‘Huison’ and their children included Anna (b.1719). The witnesses in 1719 were tailor James Turbull and ‘Mr’ John Purdom. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1651 he witnessed a baptism for James Elliot. Probably the same William married Janet ‘Bran’ and had children Marion (b.1657) and Bessie (b.1660). Agnes (b.1645) and Marion (b.1651), with no mother’s name given, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1651 were James Elliot and George ‘dinre’. He may also have witnessed a baptism in 1656 for Walter Scott ‘called of Huntlie’ (also written ‘Marke’ and ‘Merk’).

the Marklair (thu-mawr-klär) n. former farmstead in the upper reaches of the Borthwick valley. It is recorded in a document of 1650, about a mile further out than Howpasley and with 2 ‘communants’ recorded. Adam Laidlaw was living there in 1716 and James Laidlaw in 1722. The lands were sold by the Scotts of Cronmaugh to the Duke of Buccleuch along with Howpasley about 1760. It is still shown as ‘Mark Lair’ near Mark Sike on the Ordnance Survey map, high above Howpasley, although there is now no sign of former habitation there (it is ‘Marklear’ in 1716 and ‘Merklear’ in 1722 and transcribed ‘Maichlair’ in about 1760; it is ‘The marke Laire’ on a parish map of 1650 and the farm of ‘Mirk Lair’ is on Roy’s c.1750 map; ‘lair’ is either a boggy area or an area of shelter for sheep).

Mark Sike (mawr-sik) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley. It rises near Mark Lair and joins the Howpasley Burn.

marl (mawr-rl) n. lime-rich clay, used to neutralize acid soil. In the late 18th century opening up marl pits became a central element of agricultural improvement. Pits were developed on the Marled. Buccleuch and Harden estates, starting with Sir Gilbert Elliot opening a pit at Crow’s Moss in 1755 and marling 200 acres. Groundstone and Blackleuch (presumably at Teviothead) were also used. Broadlee Loch and Branxholme Loch were both drained to get at the marl on their bottoms, and not restored again until the mid-19th century – ‘There is also marle in different parts of the parish, which is used successfully on land in pasture, as well as in tillage’ [RRG] (also written ‘marle’).

Marled (maw-ruld) adj., poet. mottled, woven with 2 colours – ‘O, gif I kened but where ye haide, I’d send to you a marled plaid’ [BS] (also written ‘marle’).

The Marl Loch (thu-maw-rul-loch) n. name used in the 19th century for Broadlee Loch, when it was drained to provide marl.

Marlsid (ma-rul-sid) n. former name for lands in Hassendean Parish. It was included along with Hassendean in the 1718 survey of properties belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch, presumably corresponding to the part to the north, around Marlsid Hill.

Marlsid Hill (ma-rul-sid-hil) n. small hill in Minto Parish, between Hassendean farm and Newlands. It reaches a height of 180 m.

Marlt (maw-rlt, -rul) adj., poet. mottled – ‘The mune she shines sae bricht, Till a’ the yirth is marlt wi’ The gymins o’ her licht’ [DH] (also marled).

Marmion Road (maw-r-mee-in-rod) n. street between Weensland and the Orchard Road, reached by Fenwick Park and Weensgate Drive. The houses were built from 1966 and the street was named after the hero of Scott’s novel of the same name. It was a popular street for teachers for many years.

Maroon (maw-roon) n., adj. a very unpleasant colour, being a sort of muddy purple, and almost unknown within Hawick.

The Marquis (thu-mawr-kwis) n. nickname for Andrew Miller in the late 19th century.

Marr (mawr) n. Edward (b.1825/6) from Selkirk, he was a tailor in Wilton. He was at Ladylaw Place in 1851, employing one apprentice, and was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory on Ladylaw Place. James (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as having purchased part of Knowesouth, which were by then in the hands of Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters. These lands were valued at £39 18s 1d.

Marrae see marri

Marri (ma-ri) n. marrow – ‘hearing about the move ti Gala chilled is ti the marri’, ‘My saul sall be satisfiet as wi’ marra an’ fatsniss . . . ’ [HSR] (also written ‘marra’).

Marriot (maw-ree-i) n. Daniel ‘Rueben Watts’ or ‘Reuben Watt’ (1817–92) English stocking-maker, born in Ashover, Derbyshire, he came to Hawick in 1851. He worked diligently to promote improved public sanitation, conducting a voluminous correspondence with the newspapers, Town Council, and officials all the way up to the Home Secretary and even the Prince of Wales. He was considered a nuisance by many, complaining regularly about policing, municipal works etc. It was written that he ‘earned a lifelong notoriety by his ventilation of real and imaginary grievances’.

However, he claimed credit for improving sanitary conditions in various parts of the Town. He married Mary Randle (nee Orr). After his son was killed during the Chase in 1868 he became staunchly opposed to the Common Riding. He also had sons Daniel and David. In 1861 he lived at 13 Back Row. He adopted the name ‘Reuben Watts’ in Hawick, particularly in his correspondence, and is buried at the Wellogate – ‘. . . While listening to its pleasing ripple Discuss great matters municipal. And sanitary measures pat To satisfy even Reuben Watt’ [VW]. George (1859–68) son of Daniel, he was killed by a horse at the end of Drumlanrig Place after rushing onto the road during the Wednesday morning Chase of 1868. This led the Council to ban galloping in the streets the following year – ‘Loan chase when a’ Hawick was grievin’, Wee George Marriot killed when leavin’ The Chennel quick, an’ horses hewed, The chase wad hev tae be reviewed’ [MB] (also written ‘Marriott’).

Marrless (mar-lis) adj., arch. unmatched, having no pair – ‘The dishes on the table war marrless (marrowless); the verrih cups an saucers warna neebers’ [ECS] (also written ‘mar’less’; cf. marrowless).

Marrow (ma-ro, -ri) n., arch., poet. a companion, match, partner, mate – ‘He raise, and rax’d him whar he stude And bade him match him wi his marrows’ [CPM], ‘. . . I make nae wonder to his marrows’ [JTe], v., arch., poet. to match, marry – ‘. . . Amang them aa there was none to marrow Auld Harden’s leddy, the ‘Flooer o’ Yarrow’’ [WL].

Marrowless (ma-ro-, -ri-less) adj., arch. odd, unmatched – ‘Marrowless buits an’ stockin’s’ [GW], widowed (in [JL]; also marrless).
Mars

Mars (mawrz) n. Peter (b.1832/3) probably son of James and Elizabeth Birnie, he was a gardener at Dickson’s nurseries. His wife Margaret Murray (d.1864) is buried in Wellogate Cemetery, along with 2 children who died in infancy. He may have been related to an S. Mars, who had ground in St. Mary’s. It is also possible that ‘Tidy Mars’ was a relative. James (b.c.1800) agricultural labourer who lived on the Back Row. His wife was Elizabeth Birnie and their children included Margaret, Peter, Mary, John and James.

Marsden (mawrz-din) n. Philip ‘Phil’ (1931–2010) born in Yorkshire, he was a semi-professional football player with Wolverhampton Wanderers. He married Jean in Hawick in 1955, and the couple settled permanently in Hawick in 1963, where he worked in the construction industry, at the Hawick Community Workshop and lastly as custodian of Hermitage Castle. He was the first S.N.P. councillor in Hawick and became a Bailie and Justice of the Peace, as well as being involved in many of the Town’s clubs.

Martin (mer'-in-tee-nee) n. John (15th/16th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale, succeeding William Elphinstone (senior). He resigned his rights some time before 1510, and may have served 1486–91.

Mary Queen o Scots

Mary Queen o Scots (ma-ree-kween-oo-skots) n. (1542–87) Mary Stuart (or Stewart) daughter of Claude de Lorraine, duc de Guise, she married Louis d’Orl´eans, 2nd duc de Longueville, who died in 1537. She then married James V of Scotland and became Regent after his death in 1542. She stopped her daughter Mary (later Queen of Scots) being arranged into a marriage with Prince Edward of England, thereby initiating the ‘Rough Wooing’. In 1548 there is a letter in which she undertakes to support Sir Walter Scott of Brouxholme in recognition of his ‘band of manrent’ to her. She later prosecuted Protestants in Scotland, with the aid of Archbishop Beaton, which helped accelerate the Scottish Reformation. Her death effectively brought an end to the Auld Alliance.

Mary o Guise (ma-ree-oo-giez) n. (1515–60) daughter of Claude de Lorraine, duc de Guise, she married Louis d’Orleans, 2nd duc de Longueville, who died in 1537. She then married James V of Scotland and became Regent after his death in 1542. She stopped her daughter Mary (later Queen of Scots) being arranged into a marriage with Prince Edward of England, thereby initiating the ‘Rough Wooing’. In 1548 there is a letter in which she undertakes to support Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme in recognition of his ‘band of manrent’ to her. She later prosecuted Protestants in Scotland, with the aid of Archbishop Beaton, which helped accelerate the Scottish Reformation. Her death effectively brought an end to the Auld Alliance.
Mary’s Well

of James V and Mary of Guise, born at Linlithgow, she became Queen of Scotland 6 days later. She was sent to France at age 6, and married Francis, which later made her Queen of France. She returned to Scotland in 1561, and after much political intrigue was forced to abdicate in favour of her son James in 1567. She went to England for support, but never met Elizabeth, instead being imprisoned for 19 years, becoming implicated in various Catholic plots, and finally being beheaded at Fotheringay. In Hawick she was significant for confirming (as required by law) Douglas’ Charter to Hawick in 1545, when she was just 2½! Attempts to have her wed Henry VIII’s son Edward led to the ‘Rough Wooing’ and the burning of Hawick along with much of the rest of the Borders. She stayed temporarily in Jedburgh, and famously rode from there to visit the wounded Earl of Bothwell at Hermitage Castle in 1566, returning the same night, possibly causing an illness that incapacitated her for weeks. It has been suggested that her route proceeded via Jedburgh Castle, the Dunion, Swinnie Moor, Earlsdie, Coliforthill, Whitlaw, Flex, Priesthaugh and the Braidlie Burn (the headwaters of which are still called the Queen’s Mire). Memorabilia can be seen at ‘Mary Queen of Scots House’ in Jedburgh and in Abbotsford.

Mary’s Well (mā-reez-wel) n. former spring by the side of the road near Denesyde, on the left-hand side while ascending the hill towards Hawthornside. It was described by Oliver of Langraw in 1870 as being ‘on the lower side of the turnpike road below Hawthornside’ and suggests a possible association with Mary Queen of Scots’ ride to Hermitage. Adam Turnbull of Denesyde (said to be a Jacobite supporter in 1715) convinced Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs to preserve the Well as a roadside watering-place when he took over the lands. It disappeared some time before the mid-19th century, probably as a result of farm improvements (also called ‘Queen Mary’s Well’; the origin of the name is uncertain, and there may be confusion about the position, cf. St. Mary’s Well).

Maryswud (mā-reez-wud) n. Maryswood, area south of the Hoscote Burn, north-east of Flake Hill. It is now within Craik Forest.

masel (maw-sel) pron. myself – ‘A was in masel an night’, ‘... masher (maw-shur) n., poet. a smasher, dandy – ‘The dressmaker masher wi’ scarcely a flaw ...’ [WAP] (not a common word).

mash (mawsh) v. to brew or steep (less common than mask).

mask (mask) v. to brew or steep, particularly tea – ‘did ee mask the tei yet?’, ‘...hed kimelt a lunt an war thrang poatchin about an maskin tei’ [ECS] (cf. the less common mash).

maskin (mas-kin) n., arch. a brewing – ‘...wi’ the maskins o’ peppermint leaves sweetened wi’ tryycle ...’ [V&M].

maskis (mas-kis) n., poet. a mastiff – ‘The maskis will not move his tongue, But wag his tail, if she pass by’ [JHo], ‘He turned himself to a maskys hounde, And the kerlyns to beagles keen ... ’ [JTe] (suggested to be an error for Old Scots ‘mastis’).

mason (mā-sin) n. a mason (note the usual pronunciation with the second vowel swallowed).

Mason (mā-sin) n. John (b.c.1813/4) from Selkirk, he was a farm worker in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was living at Robertson Woodfoot and in 1851 at Borthwickbrae Haugh. He married Margaret Shakleton in 1833 and their children included: Janet (b.1833); Thomas Hogg (b.1835); George (b.1837); James (b.1839); Christian (b.1841); John (b.1843); Elizabeth (b.1845); Margaret (b.1847); and William (b.1850). Patrick (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Minto Church in 1483. He made a request to the Pope that he be allowed to hold another benefice. Thomas (1824/5–94) farmer at Blackburn in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he is recorded as farmer of 800 acres, employing 2 shepherds. He was still at Blackburn in 1868. He married Janet Inglis (1827–1909), who was born and died at Blackburn. Their children included: James Inglis (1854–1904); Helen (1856–1933); Elizabeth Janet (1860–1932); Margaret (1864–1927); Thomas (1868–1911), ‘after 30 years of limitation, and suffering the prison of his body’. His wife also had children Jane and Alexander (Ingles) from a previous marriage. The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. William (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is written ‘Mason’ (see also Masson).

the Masonic (thu-maw-so-neek) n. popular name for the Masonic Hall, referring to the former building at Myreslawgreen or the one on Union the Masonic Hall  (thu-maw-so-neck-hawl)  n.  former Freemason’s building at Myreslawgreen until 1922, after which No. 111 moved to Commercial Road. The other Lodge, No. 424, has been on Union Street since 1893, and often held functions in its adjoining hall. The hall at Myreslawgreen had previously been the ‘Green Kirk’, and was later used for dances, when it was referred to as ‘the Rabbie’.

the Masons  (thu-ma-sinz)  n.  the Masonic Lodge, associated with the Free and Accepted Masons, an international fraternal and charitable organisation, founded on Christianity, with its own set of rituals, acting as a meeting place for men, for social enjoyment and mutual assistance. In Hawick there have been Masons since at least 1768 and there are two separate clubs: Lodge St. John, No. 111 on Commercial Road; and Lodge St. James, B.U.R.A, No. 424 on Union Street. The second was set up after a dispute arising in the first in 1863 connected with the Volunteers. These lodges have typically had a number of the town’s most prominent men as members. There was also in the late 19th century another chapter, ‘Border Union Royal Arch Chapter No. 89’ in Hawick. The Lodge of Melrose St. John claims to be the oldest in Scotland and celebrates with a torchlight procession each 27th December. In the 19th century the local Freemasons were conspicuous at opening ceremonies and processions, e.g. for laying the foundation stone for the Subscription Rooms in 1821 and the Exchange Buildings in 1865 and at the opening ceremony for the Dod Burn water supply in 1882 – ‘These only, through their power o’er thee, Are valueless or fraught with good; There’s but one upward path for me, That path through deeds of Brotherhood’ [JEDM].

Mather Mather Lanton. The will of his wife Helen Brown is recorded in 1686. George (18th C.) dyker in Lanton. His wife ‘Isble Madder’ died in 1762, aged 39, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Helen (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598 as schoolmaster at Longnewton. He is also recorded in deeds of 1608 and 1609 as schoolmaster at Bedrule. Probably the same James was schoolmaster at Jedburgh and Hundalee in 1610. James (17th C.) recorded as owner of lands at Lanton in the 1643 valuation rolls. He also held ‘the lands called Turnbull’s lands’ in Jedburgh Parish. He was probably son or brother of John of Lanton, who is also listed in 1643. Probably the same James is recorded at Lanton in 1663. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was probably closely related to Andrew, John and Margaret. He may be the James recorded as owner of lands in Lanton valued at £580 in 1678 (and also lands in Ulston): at the same time William of Lanton held the bulk of the lands there, and so was probably his father or elder brother. James (1761/2–1826) farmer, who was tenant at Ashybank in the first quarter of the 19th century. He was son of Daniel, who farmed there before him. In 1813 made an offer to be tenant of Langburnshields, his success being announced after the Laird, James Elliot of Harwood, dined with all the prospective tenants in the Tower Inn in Hawick. A few years later he leased Hallrule farm. He married Rachel Ogilvie, who died in 1837, aged 71. Their son Daniel took over the farm, and they also had a daughter, Jessie. James (18th/19th C.) lived at Mosshouses, Dykeraw and Southdean. He married Janet Synton and their children included: John (b.1804); Peter (b.1805); Janet (b.1808); Agnes (b.1811); James (b.1812); Margaret; Ann, who married Matthew Henderson in Oxnam; and Cecilia, who married William Telfer in Jedburgh. James (c.1810–bef. 1857) gardener, grocer and spirit dealer in Wilton. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory in Wilton, as grocer and spirit dealer. He is recorded among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840, when he was a gardener at Damside. He was a gardener and spirit dealer at Damside on the 1841 census. By 1851 his widow was a vintner on Wilton Path and she was listed as grocer on Wilton Path in Slater’s 1852 directory, suggesting that he was already deceased by then. He was also a master gardener. He married Janet Lillico. Their children included: Andrew (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); Agnes (b.1835), who married Robert Weir and secondly Robert Cavers (b.1839). His father may be the ‘Mr. Mather’ whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map along what became Baker Street. This may thus be the family that gave its name to Mather’s Close. Janet (b.1800/1) grocer listed on Wilton Path in 1851 and in Slater’s 1852 directory, as well as in 1861. She was married to James, who appears to have died at least by 1857. In 1861 she was living with her daughter Agnes Cavers (also a widow) and granddaughter Robina Cavers. Rev. John (d.bef. 1642) son of William of Lanton, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1598. He became minister at Minto in 1601 and was translated to Hassendean in 1602. He was deposed in 1609 for ‘divers slanders (keeping licentious company, &c.)’. His widow is described as being destitute in 1642. Robert Collace was recorded as being Reader at Hassendean in 1606, so it may be that Collace was the actual preacher, while Mader simply held the living. John of Lanton (17th C.) recorded as owner of lands in Jedburgh Parish in 1643. It is possible he is the same man as Rev. John. Andrew and the recently deceased John, recorded as owners of lands in Lanton in 1788, were probably his descendants. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was probably his son. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmus Mader of Langtoun’ in 1610 when he was listed on an inquest for lands in Rulewater. William of Lanton (17th C.) leased the lands of ‘Kaimes and the Hills’ from Walter Riddell of Minto in 1683. He paid the land tax in Jedburgh Parish in 1678, his lands of Lanton being valued at about £680; at the same time James (probably his son) had land valued at about £580. He was described as ‘in Longtoun’ in 1686/7 when Walter Scott, Earl of Tarra took him to court for non-payment of duties for the lands of ‘Kaimes and Minto hills’. But he sub-leased the same lands to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth in 1687. He is probably the William of Lanton recorded in 1707 with lands valued at about £650; at that time ‘J. and W. Maders portioners there’ had land valued at about £520. William (b.1806/7) tailor in Minto. He is recorded there in 1852. His children included Helen and Isabella. William (b.1857) son of Rachel Tait, born at Wauchope Waas. He took over the local carrier’s business from his grandfather William Tait in the mid-1880s. In 1884 he married Elspeth Scott from Twislehope and they had a daughter Margaret Jane. His wife became the local post-mistress (also formerly spelled ‘Mader’, ‘Madder’, ‘Maider’ and ‘Meader’).

Mather’s Close (maw-thurz-klos) n. former passageway off the High Street situated where Baker Street is now. It was once an area of severely over-crowded housing, with shops at the top, and only a narrow passageway connecting to the High Street. There was also a smithy near the top. The 1858 Ordnance Survey map shows a bridge over the mill lade at the bottom. The close was opened up into a street about 1868 when No. 75 High Street was rebuilt.

Matheson (maw-theesin) n. James (17th/18th C.) smith at Kirkhope in at least the period 1698–1702. He married Agnes Coltart and their children included: Jean (b.1695); Walter (b.1698); and an unnamed child (b.1702). James (18th/19th C.) recorded as blacksmith in Ashkirk in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His name is recorded as ‘Matthewson’. His wife may have been Mary, who was living with children John, Ann and Robert at Ashkirk Mill in 1841. John (b.1812/3) veterinary surgeon and blacksmith in Ashkirk. He may be son of James, who was blacksmith earlier in Ashkirk. He was at Ashkirk Mill in 1841 and was resident of the smithy also known as Crowknowe. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Landed Proprietor &

Mathieson (Matheson's mauchle (17th/18th C.) tenant of lands at Bewlie). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery.

William Sinclair (who was a confectioner and whom died young), as well as another Charlotte included Charlotte, Alison and Thomas (all of clair, who died in 1889, aged 62. Their children at Weensland Mills. He married Charlotte Sinclair (18th C.).

James; and Robert (b.1857). Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in 1722, the marriage being proclaimed in Bedrule and Minto Parishes.

Rev. William (1849–1913) training at Edinburgh Theological Hall, he was the last minister of the old Congregational Kirk in Hawick, replacing Rev. W.L. Walker, but only staying for part of 1877. The congregation had already dwindled, and probably those remaining joined the Evangelical Kirk, which later changed its name to become today’s Congregational Kirk. He was later minister at Stuartfield, Aberdeenshire and Cumnock, Ayrshire (sometimes written ‘Mathewson’ or ‘Mathieson’; see also Mathieson).

Matheson’s (maw-thee-sinz) n. bakers and confectioners on the west side of North Bridge Street through much of the 20th century.

Matheson (maw-thee-sin) n. ‘Sandy’ (19th C.) brother of James. He was gardener at Weens, and together with his brother and John Halliday (‘the Rustic Bard’) founded the Hobkirk Flower Show. In 1851 he and his nephew saw ‘a man walking in the sky’, i.e. a ‘Brocken spectre’ or mirage illusion of a man’s shadow, as reported by John Halliday. He could be the Alexander living at Borthwickshiel Cottage with gardener Peter in 1841. James (19th C.) brother of Sandy, he was gardener at Wauchope, and one of the founders of the Hobkirk Flower Show. James (1825/6–1900) grandson of Sir Walter Scott’s coachman, Peter. It was said that he could remember being bounced on the knee of the great author. He was a foreman at Weensland Mills. He married Charlotte Sinclair, who died in 1889, aged 62. Their children included Charlotte, Alison and Thomas (all of whom died young), as well as another Charlotte and William Sinclair (who was a confectioner and tobaccoanist). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John (17th/18th C.) tenant of lands at Bewlie along with James Shiel. They leased the Kirklands of Bewlie from Walter Scott of Whitfield in 1720. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1770 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Cowan at Borthaugh, and another for James Turnbull at Courthill. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for George Turnbull at Appletreehall and another for Thomas Turnbull at Damside. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashlunkirk Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1651 for James Elliot, in 1652 for Thomas Fletcher and in 1661 for James Rathie and Isabel (who was likely related). He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included James (b.1659) and William (b.1660). Robert (18th C.) resident of Castleton. He is said to have married Elizabeth, daughter of William, who was a cooper and farmer at Dinlabyre. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastle. Pet named used by James Smail.

Matthews (maw-thezw) n. Lee Cornet in 1995. His Lass was Angela Gray and his Acting Father was Phil Nichol. He was on crutches a week before the first Ride-out, having been a bone-marrow donor, and did the Monday morning Chase with an eye-patch after an accident with his riding crop. There was a record turn-out of 330 riders on the Friday in his year.

Mauley (maw-lee) n. Sir Robert (13th/14th C.) Constable and Sheriff of Roxburgh. He was thus recorded on several charters covering about the years 1305-07. However, there was also an English Sheriff at the same time, and so it is unclear who really had administrative authority in the county during this period. He was brother of Peter.

maun (mawn) n., arch. must – ‘Then up and spake the laird’s ain Jock: There’s naething for’t, the gates wi’ maun force …’ [CPM], ‘And ye maun gae to the Ferney Tower, The road ye maunna tarry …’ [JTe], ‘And I maun gae over the sea, Mary, And I maun gae over the sea’ [JTe], ‘E’en sae, the poet says, Amen, For he main drop the praying strain’ [JoHa], ‘Hame o’ my happy days, now I maun leave thee, Scenes o’ my joys and waes, O I maun leave thee’ [JoHa], ‘It maun be to you, for ’twas you that he socht …’ [JJ], ‘However, the Great Chief maun ken some English or he wadna be here’ [JEDM], ‘…thou, O Solomon, maun he ane thousan’’ [HSR], ‘…whase mooth maun be haidden in wi’ bitte an’ brydle’ [HSR], ‘…A maun hae their sneesh this morning’ [RH], ‘And my heart maun aye gang back To the fairest spot o’ a’’ [TK], ‘…A rover maun remain’ [JYH], ‘Nae tears maun stain the bonnie cheeks that watch the Callants pass’ [JYH], ‘And we maun bid a last farewell …’ [JYH], ‘O I am young, our bride-bed’s warm – I maun gang oot, I maun gang oot …’ [DH] (occasionally spelled ‘mann’; cf. mun; heh’i is used instead to express obligation).

Maurice (maw-ris) n. (13th C.) described as Parson of Hawick when he witnessed a letter of dedication for St. Peter’s churchyard in 1235. He is thus one of the earliest Hawick ministers on record. His surname is unknown, although he may have been a Lovel, since another Maurice from that family was Parson at ‘Little Cavers’ later the same century.

maut (mauv, maout) n., arch. malt, sprouted barley mainly used for brewing, ale brewed from malt – ‘I’d rather be ca’d Hobie Noble, In Carlisle where he suffers for his faut, Before I were ca’d traitor Mains, That eats and drinks of meal and maut. Maxpoffle (mawks-po-ful) n. Victorian red sandstone house near Bowden. It was built in the 1860s to replace a house constructed c.1810. The lands also contain the remains of a cylindrical dovecote, probably from the 17th century. ‘Adam de Maxpoffle’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 and was ‘Adam Makepoffel’ that same year when he had his lands in Roxburghshire restored to him. Rev. Andrew Duncanson of Maxton paid the land tax there in 1678 (the name derives from Old English ‘small piece of land belonging to Maccus, where Maccus is an Irish or Scandinavian form of Magnus, cf. Mackside; it is ‘Maxpople’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

maxter (maks-tur) n., arch. a mixture – ‘Humour and faith weil blegt thegither To match the maxter o’ the days’ [WL] (cf. the more common mixtur).

Maxton (maks-tin) n. village on the A699 between St. Boswells and Kelso, a former station on the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway, and a Parish bordering on St. Boswells and Roxburgh. Destroyed by Hertford’s men in 1545, it was made a Burgh of Barony in 1587, with the Ker’s the original landowners. The parish church is mid-18th century, with portions of an earlier building, and the Maxton Cross is on the former village green. A history of the Parish was published by Charles Denoon in 2000 (the origin is probably ‘the farm belonging to Maccus’ and first appears as ‘Mackestun’ in 1116).

Maxton Court (mawks-tin-kör) n. part of Stirches, adjacent to Oxnam Court, built in 1976 and named after the village.

Maxwell (maks-wul, -wel) n. Agnes (c.1534–94) 4th Lady of Herries. She was the only daughter and heir of William, 3rd Lord Herries. Her maiden name should probably be considered as ‘Herries’. She married John Maxwell, son of the 5th Lord Maxwell (after Maxwell had sought agreement from her guardian, the Earl of Arran, using 2,000 horsemen!; Maxwell eventually became Lord Herries himself, but later suffered for his support of Mary Queen of Scots). They had 4 sons and 7 daughters, including William, who succeeded. She was the superior of part of the Barony of Feu-Rule (essentially Hobkirk Parish), inherited from her father. There was a major dispute with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1561 and 1562 over the Barony, resulting in her lands being fixed at 1/3 of half of the Barony. Alex see Mowdie Maxwell. Alexander Harley of Portrack (1782–1853) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale and Liddesdale in the period 1833–51. He married Sarah Telfer Hyslop. Alexander (b.1895/6) originally from Lanarkshire, he was an itinerant pedlar in the Borders, specialising in small hardware items. He was a regular visitor to Newcastleton and elsewhere. He carried a brass-bound wooden box on his back from which he sold cheap jewellery, pocket knives, shaving necessities, etc. He was said to resemble Father Christmas and wear a very tall hat. He was living at 5 High Street on the 1861 census, along with his son William, daughter Ellen and 2 grandchildren. His occupation was given as ‘Travelling Toy & Jewellery Mcht.’ Archibald of Liddelbank and Liverpool (19th C.) along with Thomas (probably his son) he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. Sir Aymer (d.1266) son of John, who was Chamberlain of Scotland. He was also Chamberlain, as well as Justiciar. His name was written ‘Eymyer’ and other variants. Along with his father, he witnessed a charter for Melrose Abbey’s lands in Etreck in 1235/6. He granted the lands of Todrig to Alexander de Synton in about 1260. He may be the same as the ‘Elmero de Maxwell’ who was ‘vicecomite’ (i.e. Sheriff) of Roxburghshire in about 1250 when he witnessed a deed of Lempitlaw to Soutra. He was removed by King Alexander from his Council, because of offences against England, in a document drawn up at Sprouston in 1255. Lands in Tynedale were delivered to him in 1260/1. He was recorded as the King’s Sheriff in 1262. He married Mary (or Maria) McGeachen of Mearns and was succeeded by his son Sir Herbert. Charles (b.c.1765) surgeon recorded at Riccarton in 1835. He was also there in 1841, along with 2 Janes, probably his wife and daughter. He probably married Jean Jardine and they had a daughter Mary in 1800. He may be the ‘Mr. C. Maxwell, surgeon’ in Jedburgh in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He is probably the Dr. Maxwell who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library in 1832. George (16th C.) Hawick merchant mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He is listed as being owed money for ‘merchandise and furneising of the Lairdis seruandis’, however, it is unclear what sort of merchant he was. Perhaps the same George was listed in 1571 as one of 4 inhabitants of Hawick who entered themselves to remain in ward in Leith, with Sir William Ker of Caverton as cautioner. In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as cautioner. Gilbert (13th/14th C.) received the eastern half of the Barony of Wilton (with Henry Wardlaw being granted the other part) in 1306, presumably for helping Robert the Bruce in his struggle to achieve independence for Scotland. However, in 1342 he pledged the estate to the monks of Melrose Abbey for the payment of one silver penny at the festival of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, while holding the right for himself or his heirs to redeem the land for the payment of £40 sterling. It appears that the land was indeed redeemed, and was later forfeited and returned to the Crown. His seal bore a lion rampant with a saltire on top and the words ‘S’ GILBERTI DE MAXWELE’. Sir Herbert de (d.c.1206) Sheriff of Teviotdale as well as Dumfries. He is only the 2nd or 3rd recorded generation of Maxwells, but little is known about him. He witnessed the confirmation of the church of Hassendean to Paisley Abbey in the 1180s. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Yorkshire in 1190/1. He had 3 sons: John, who was Sheriff of Roxburgh and Chamberlain of Scotland; Aymer; and Robert. The later Baron of Wilton, Gilbert, was probably a descendant of his. James (16th/17th C.) member of the court of James VI, who was rewarded in 1605, along with Robert Douglas, with the former Debatable Lands. These were erected into the Barony of Tarras. However, in 1607 the two men brought a case against many Armstrongs and others who had tried to prevent them from possessing the lands. In a second Act of 1609 the lands were granted to him alone. James (b.1808/9) from Kirkcaldy, he was a tinsmith in Hawick. He was on the Kirk Wynd in 1841 and on the Roond Close in 1851. His wife was Janet and they had children Robert, Isabella, Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), Agnes, Jane, Hannah and Mary Ann. John (d.1241) Chamberlain to King Alexander II, he also served as Sheriff of Berwick and Sheriff of Roxburgh. He was son of Herbert and brother of Aymer. He witnessed a charter between Gervase Avenel and Melrose Abbey in 1214. He is recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh when he witnessed grants involving Kelso Abbey from at least 1214 and also and another in the period 1213–19 for Patrick of Whitton to Melrose Abbey. In 1215 he was among a few men sent by the King to the English court to attend to his affairs. In 1220 he witnessed a pledge by King Alexander to marry King Henry of England’s sister Joan, and in 1221 he witnessed the dowry charter for Joan of England, which included Jedburgh and Hassendean. He was also recorded as Sheriff in 1225 and 1226. As Chamberlain he is also named in many other documents in the 1220s and 1230s. He witnessed the charter granting lands in Ettrick to Melrose Abbey in 1235/6. He was succeeded by his son Aymer. John (d.1513) 4th Lord, son of John. He succeeded his father in 1486 and also then became Warden of the West Marches. He was recorded at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1502, when he was fined for non-appearance for his Roxburghshire lands of Maxwellfield. He was also fined for non-appearance at the court in Dumfries in 1504. In 1508 he, along with William Douglas of Drumlanrig and their men attacked the Crichtons and others in Dumfries. He married Agnes, daughter of James Stewart, 1st Earl of Buchan. They had at least 8 children, including Robert, who succeeded. He was killed at Flodden. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Sir John 4th Lord Herries of Terregles (c.1512–82/3) younger brother of Robert, 5th Lord of Maxwell. He served as Warden of the West Marches in 1552 and was reappointed in 1561. He was said to be a great supporter of Mary, Queen of Scots. He was listed (on the side of Sir Walter of Buccleuch) on the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. The situation was sufficiently lawless in the West Marches that in 1565 the Privy Council laid out what would happen to his wife and children in the event that he should die performing his duties as Warden. In 1579 he made pledges to bring certain Armstrongs before the Privy Council, and also had a disagreement about ownership of lands with Christie Armstrong of ‘Barogleis’. He married Agnes Herries (daughter and heiress of William, 3rd Lord Herries), from whom he inherited his titles. He was succeeded by his son William, the 5th Lord. John 7th Lord Maxwell (1553–93) posthumously born 2nd son of Robert, the 5th Lord. He succeeded after his older brother Robert died aged 4. He and other Maxwells were sureties in 1569 for 5 Scotts of Ewesdale. In 1572 he was among the men who signed the retour for James Douglas to the Barony of Hawick. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He was made Warden of the West Marches in the 1570s, although for a while the title was given to his rivals the Johnstones. He was recorded in the register of the Privy Council several times in the 1570s. He and Robert of Cowhill served as sureties for several Armstrongs and others who were being held in ward. He temporarily received the Earldom of Morton, after the Regent Morton was executed in 1581. He was denounced as a rebel in 1581 for failing to present Armstrongs and Beatties to answer their rieving crimes. He was a strong supporter of the old Catholic religion and was involved with other Lords in struggles for power in Scotland. In 1585, for his good service to the King, he and his followers (a huge number named explicitly) had relief for all their crimes committed since 1569. However, in 1587 he was again out of favour with the King, and was plotting to help the Spanish Armada invade England. He was captured and imprisoned in Edinburgh, but released in 1589. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He was again Warden of the West Marches 1590–92. He gathered allies in order to attack the Johnstones, the conflict taking place at Dryfe Sands near Lockerbie in December 1593. These allies included Drumlanrig, who, however, left the battle early with his men. On the Johnstone side were many Scots, Eliotts, Armstrongs, Chisholm and others from the Hawick area. His force suffered a complete rout and he himself was killed, after being cornered and having his right hand cut off. A letter of ‘respite’ by James VI in 1594 lists about 160 men implicated in his slaughter, including many from Teviotdale and Liddesdale. 2 thorn trees ‘Maxwell’s Thorns’ were said to have been planted where he fell. He married Elizabeth, daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. He was succeeded by his son John. John 6th Lord Herries (1583–c.1627) son of William, 5th Lord of Herries. In 1604 he was served heir to his father William in the Barony of Feu-Rule, which was erected with other lands into the Barony of Herries. He was recorded in 1614 when he failed to produce documents relating to the lands of Feu-Rule when requested by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam; in 1619 Ker complained that he remained ‘unrelaxed from a horning’. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John, 8th Lord Maxwell and was succeeded by his son John, 7th Lord Herries. John 8th Lord Maxwell (c.1585–1613) son of John, who was killed at Dryfe Sands. He was probably the John, Lord Maxwell, who was warded in Edinburgh Castle in 1599 for the obedience of the men of the West March. He was served heir to his father’s extensive properties in 1604, including farms in Ewesdale. In 1601 he found caution for the Maxwells in a feud with the Johnstones, with the assurances renewed in 1602. He was a Catholic, like his father, and was imprisoned in 1601 for ‘favouring Popery’. In 1602 he was ordered not to be released from Edinburgh Castle for refusing to sign a bond of assurance with Sir James Johnstone, Warden of the West Marches. He escaped Edinburgh Castle in 1602 and had 2 of the Johnstone killed, although there was supposedly a reconciliation in 1605. He challenged William Douglas of Lochleven to a duel over the Morton title, and was again imprisoned in Edinburgh in 1607. However, he once more escaped (although his fellow prisoner Sir James Macdonald was found hiding in a dung hill). Another meeting was arranged to attempted reconciliation with the Johnstones, at which he shot Sir James Johnstone in the back. Tried in his absence in 1609 he fled to France, returned to Scotland in 1612, was captured and executed. The lands and titles he forfeited included the Lordship of the lower part of Ewesdale. He married the only sister of James, 2nd Marquis of Hamilton. His titles and lands were forfeited, but eventually reacquired by his brother Robert. His tale is told in the ballad ‘Lord Maxwell’s Good Night’. John 3rd Earl of Nithsdale, 7th Lord Herries (d.1677) son of John, 6th Lord Herries of Terrregles, his mother being Elizabeth Maxwell, sister of Robert, 1st Earl of Nithsdale. He succeeded his great-grandfather’s brother Robert in 1670, as Lord of Maxwell, Eskdale and Carlisle. He was also superior of lands in Arkleton, Meikledale, Ewesdale, including Flask, Howgill, Glendivan, Burngrains, Wolfhope, Park, Terrona and Whitshiels. He married Elizabeth Gordon and was succeeded by his son, Robert, 4th Earl of Nithsdale. John of Broomholm (d.1806) son of William of Broomholm and Agnes Scott of Woll. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He married Wilhelmina Malcolm and was succeeded in turn by his sons George and David. John (1802/3–bef. 1851) stocking-maker who was noted as one of those who helped during the cholera outbreak of 1849. In 1841 he was living at Weensland Mill. He married Helen Nisbet and their children included: Margaret (b.1840); Charlotte (b.1844); John (b.1847), probably the plumber and bandleader; and William Nisbet (b.1850). 3 of the baptisms were also registered with Hwick Free Kirk. His widow and children were living at 4 Teviot Crescent in 1851 and in 1861 his widow, now known as ‘Helen Cook', aged 42, was a grocer and spirit dealer at 29 High Street. John (19th/20th C.) plumber and conductor of the Saxhorn Band. He was probably the son of stockmaking John born in Hawick in 1847. His plumber, Slater, gas-fitter and glazier business was based at 23 Wellington Street. He was known for arranging the hot-water system at Drumlanrig School and others in the town. He took over as Saxhorn Bandleader in 1871 and remained until 1877, after which the band briefly dissolved. The same John appears to have been leader of the Cockermouth Rifle Band in 1876. He was also known as a sportsman, competing in the 18-yard dash at the 1872 Common-Riding Games. In 1868 he married Grace Greenwood from Weensland and they had at least 1 son and 1 daughter. Mina (b.1798/9) recorded in the 1841 census. Mysie see Mysie Maxwell. Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Edinburgh. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence presumably had a local connection. Robert 4th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1546) son of John, who was killed at Flodden. He was part of James V’s Royal Council, also serving as Extraordinary Lord of Session and High Admiral. In addition he was Warden of the West Marches and in 1526 was appointed as Justiciar. He was one of the Border chiefs imprisoned briefly in 1530 for failing to keep control of thieves. He was said to have been terrified of the power of Johnnie Armstrong and when James V had Armstrong hanged, he received a charter for his lands, signed by the King at Priesthaugh. In 1530/1 he was a surety for the entry of John, son of Walter Scott of Synton and William, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh. He served as interim Keeper of Hermitage in the 1530s while the Earl of Bothwell was imprisoned or exiled; in 1534 their is an entry in the Lord High Treasurer’s accounts to him ‘for keping the House of Armytage and Rewling of the habitants of Liddesdale for ye space of seven months’ and another entry in 1540 for repairing the castle. He resigned the lands of Park in Ewesdale, for which David Armstrong had a charter in 1535. In 1537 he was granted the lands and possessions in Ewesdale previously belonging to Simon Armstrong of Whitehaugh. In 1540 Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch offered to take over the rule of Eskdale, Ewesdale and Wauchopedale if he would not take it. In 1541 an English letter claims he had met at Langholm with 2 Armstrongs, 2 Ellsot and 2 Crozier, to encourage them to carry out raids on England. He was captured by the English at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and secondly married Agnes, daughter of James Stewart, 1st Earl of Buchan. His children included: Margaret, who married Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Douglas; Robert, who succeeded; and Sir John, Lord Herries of Terregles. Robert 5th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1552) son of Robert. He succeeded his father in the Barony of Caerlaverock and other lands in 1550. He also held several farms in Ewesdale and Eskdale. In 1545 he was ‘Master of Maxwell’ when listed among Border lairds who gave assurance to ‘have na intelligence with Ingland’. He married Beatrix, daughter of James Douglas, 3rd Earl of Morton. He was Warden of the West Marches from 1550 (but perhaps replacing his father as early as 1542) until his death. He was succeeded by his sons Robert and John. Robert 6th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1554) son of Robert and Beatrix Douglas. He succeeded his father as an infant and died when still just 4, being in turn succeeded by his brother John. Robert 4th Earl of Nithsdale (1628–96) succeeded his father John in his many titles and lands. This included superiority of the farms of Nether Ewesdale. He married Lucy Douglas, daughter of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas. He was succeeded by his son William. Robert G. (1877/8–1916) elder brother of William, founder and head of the woollen manufacturers Robert G. Maxwell & Co., based in Dovezote Street. He lived at the Limes on Raesound Park. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He enlisted into the Seaforth Highlanders in 1914, became Captain and died during an advance on Kut, Mesopotamia. Stewart (b.c.1795) woollen hosier, living at ‘Wilton Lodge Park cottage’ in 1841. This was probably somewhere near the end of Langlands Road. William (14th C.) holder of the (eastern) half barony of Wilton, and hence probably the heir of Gilbert. He appears to have redeemed the estate from the monks of Melrose Abbey and then forfeited it to the Crown, sometime around 1340. It was then granted to John, son of Margaret (surname not given). He is possibly the William, who along with his wife, was granted the lands of ‘Apiltrie’ by King Robert, after being forfeited by Thomas Carnoto (probably Charteris); this is likely to be Appletreehall, although there are other possibilities. William (1555–1604) 5th Lord Herries, son of Agnes Herries and Sir John Maxwell. He held part of the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1587 he served...
Maxwellheugh

as Warden of the Western Marches and in 1587/8 he was instructed to enter a number of Elliots, Armstrongs and others to the Privy Council. In 1597 he complained against Englishmen for stealing large amounts of livestock from his farms, as well as ransoming 4 of his servants. He was Warden of the West March in 1600 when listed among leaders ordered to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. In 1602 he granted the wardship of Appotside and Tyethehouse to James Hamilton and also the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside to him during the minority of Hector Lorraine. In 1603 he granted a marriage contract between Turnbuls in Feu-Rule. He married Catherine, daughter of Commendator Mark Kerr and was succeeded by his son John, 6th Lord Herries. Rev. William (1600–51) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1620, he was presented to Minto Parish at the end of 1624 and admitted there in 1625. He was the minister of Minto who signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638 (although his name was transcribed ‘Mr Wm. Murray (?)’. He preached at Bedrule in 1640, during the ceremony to admit Henry Elliot as the new minister there. He was presented to St. Mary’s Kirk of the Lowes in 1641, but the move did not happen, instead he remained at Minto until his death. He married Anna Inglis and was survived by his wife and 4 children. William 5th Earl of Nithsdale (1676–1744) succeeded his father Robert in his many titles and lands in 1696. In 1698 he was also served heir (perhaps just to reconfirm his rights) to the lands and titles of his ancestor Robert (great-grandfather of his father and older brother of John, Lord Herriesi, who was grandson of John, Earl of Nithsdale, also his grandfather). This included superiority of the farms of Nether Ewesdale. His mother was Lucie Douglas, daughter of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas. He took part in the Jacobite rising of 1715, was captured and imprisoned in the Tower of London, but escaped by changing clothes with his wife’s maid. He fled to Rome, but lost all his titles and properties. William (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of the lands in Lilliesleaf valued at £10. William (d.1916) brother of Robert G., and partner in the Dovecote Street manufacturing business. He was killed at the Somme (formerly spelled ‘Mackuswell’, ‘Maxwell’ and variants).

Maxwellheugh (maks-wul-hechw) n. hamlet just south of Kelso (the origin of the name is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Maccus’, along with ‘wiella hoh’ meaning ‘height beside the pool’; the name is first recorded as ‘Mackus well’ about 1200).

Maxwell’s (maks-wulz, -welz) n. former woollen manufacturer and cloth merchants. R.G. Maxwell & Co., located in the building in Dovecote Street which was converted into Horne Court. He was Treasurer of the Liberal Club for many years and was heavily involved in the P.S.A. Choir. He always enjoyed music and played the mouth organ. He spent his later life in Buccleuch Rest Home, where he started writing local verse. He recorded his ‘A Song O’ Hawick’ on cassette tape, and it was transcribed by Ian Seeley in 1990. He died in the Cottage Hospital and was buried in the Wellogate.

McCaskie (mu-kaw-skee) n. Thomas (19th C.) owner of a hat factory in Under Damside in the early 1800s. This was probably formerly the business premises of William Wilson’s, with shop on the Howegate. William Wilson was his apprentice and son of the manufacturer of the same name, who purchased the business from him, so that he became the journeyman to his former apprentice. James Wilson (later of the Economist) joined in 1822, the business moving to Orrock Place and then the Kilnpath. When William and then James Wilson moved to London in 1824, the business in Hawick probably closed. In 1821 he married Elizabeth Taylor (aunt of another Elizabeth Taylor, mother of David Hardie of Blenheim, Richardson), and she died in 1863, aged 70. They had a son George, who died aged 20. Their daughters Charlotte and Margaret ran a girl’s school in Bourtree Place for a while, but later emigrated to Australia. His wife was living with his daughters at 4 Bridge Street (perhaps the modern No. 22) in 1861.

McClelland (mu-kle-lind) n. Thomas (19th C.) Precentor in Kirkton Kirk at the end of the 19th century. When a new organ was installed in 1893 the post or organist was combined with that of precentor and he was given a marble clock for his service.

McClymont (mu-kli-min’) n. Rev. James (1809–86) Denholm Minister, born at Dalmellington in Ayrshire. He was educated at Glasgow University and the Divinity Hall in Edinburgh, became minister at Birdhope Craig in Northumberland, then was assistant in Ayrshire and was ordained in 1837. However, he left the Established Church to join the Free Church, and was called to Carsphairn and Dalmellington, but was not settled there. He was translated to New Hampstead in London in 1846 and then became minister at Denholm Free Kirk 1847–86, one of the longest serving ministers there. For the last few years he was assisted by Thomas Pitt. He married three times, one wife being Mary Roxburgh, with whom he had a son, James Roxburgh. His last wife was Elizabeth Rutherford Turnbull. Their children were: Andrew Colville (b.1872); John Campbell (b.1874); William ‘Willie’ (b.1876); Anna Marion (b.1877); and Alexander Watson ‘Alec’ (b.1879), who was a United Free Church minister. His last child was born when he was 70 years old. He died in Edinburgh.

He was ordained at Mullingar in 1895 and translated to St. Margaret’s, Hawick, in 1905. He demitted his charge in 1935 and died in London. He married Marion (who died in 1934), daughter of Richard Jones, and their children were William Donald Hamilton (who worked for the B.B.C.) and Richard Denis Miller.

McDonald (mu-donuld) n. Alexander (b.1811/2) tailor on the Cross Wynd, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was still on the Cross Wynd in 1841, but by 1851 he was on the Howe- gate (at about No. 15). In 1851 and on Slater’s 1852 directory he is recorded as ‘Tailor & Pawnbroker’. He was a successful lawn bowler, starting in Northern Ireland, where he was part of the winning fours team in Irish national competition in 1971 and the British Isles fours championship in 1972. In Hawick she became a member of the Bucleuch Bowling Club. She first represented Scotland in 1981, paying as skip for most of the next 13 years, which included winning the silver medal in Singles at the 1986 Commonwealth Games. She won the Scottish Pairs in 1992, the Scottish Triples in 1993, as well as 3 World Championships. She married James (‘Jim’) and had sons Stewart and Alan.

McDonald (mu-kruk) n. Rev. Alexander Munn (1831–66) born in Liverpool, only son of Alexander, a sailor from Greenock, he was educated at Glasgow University. He was ordained as minister of Cavers in 1854 and remained there until his death. He married Jane Carfin, daughter of William Elliot of Hawick. She later married advocate David Duncan and died in 1893 (also written ‘Maccoll’ and ‘M’Coll’).

McCrorie (mu-krun) n. Charles W. ‘Charlie’ Cornet in 1975, often referred to as ‘the Sunshine Cornet’ because of how sunny it was at the Common Riding that year. He was also one of the founder members of the Border Horse Racin Association.

McCrorie (mu-krun) n. Senga (1933/4–2020) born in Kilmarnock, she grew up in Ayrshire and later lived in Northern Ireland before moving to Hawick. She worked in Bantel her entire working life. She was a successful lawn bowler, starting in Northern Ireland, where she was part of the winning fours team in Irish national competition in 1971 and the British Isles fours championship in 1972. In Hawick she became a member of the Bucleuch Bowling Club. She first represented Scotland in 1981, paying as skip for most of the next 13 years, which included winning the silver medal in Singles at the 1986 Commonwealth Games. She won the Scottish Pairs in 1992, the Scottish Triples in 1993, as well as 3 World Championships. She married James (‘Jim’) and had sons Stewart and Alan.
McDougall

He lived there with his wife Janet and son Peter. He could be the ‘Mr. MacDonald’ who operated the Turf Hotel at Shankend and some other sod-built pubs to serve the navvies working on the Hawick to Carlisle railway line. James (19th/20th C.) referred to as ‘Pastor’ and ‘the Kilwinning Martyr’, he was a fraudulent anti-Catholic preacher. He started a Protestant Guild in Hawick in about 1913, but was arrested for deserting his family in Hamilton. There were wild scenes in Hawick when he tried to return, caused by an antagonistic crowd, outnumbering his supporters. He was later fined for drunkenness in Hawick. Robert (b.c.1780) born in Wigtown, he was a nailer at the Sandbed, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row with wife Elizabeth and children Joan, Flora, Elizabeth, Jane and Margaret. In 1851 he was on the Kilnpath, with his daughters Flora, Jane and Ann. Robert (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a restaurant at the Station Buildings. A photograph taken in the 1920s shows him outside his business. William (b.1807/8) from Knockando in Invernesshire, he was a limeburner at Limekilnedge. He was recorded there in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included William and Ann (see also MacDonald).

McDonald’s (muk-do-nuldz) n. former restaurant at the Station Buildings, run by Robert McDonald. It did a roaring business in the heyday of the railway, serving breakfasts, teas and dinners. McDonald and staff can be seen outside the business premises in a photograph of the 1920s. The location was later the Station Launderette and the Shugonda Balti House.

the McDonald Shelter (thr-nuk-do-nuld-shel-tur) n. public shelter constructed on the Station side of the North Bridge in 1959, constructed of concrete slabs, with public toilets attached. Construction was made possible through a bequest of the McDonald family (related to Swintons). It was demolished around 2000 during construction of the Waverley Bridge.

McDougall (muk-doo-gul) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) son of Dungal. He was listed as son and heir of his father in 1477/8, in the lands of Makerstoun and Yetholm. He is ‘And. Makdowell de Makearston’ in 1490/1 when he witnessed a charter for Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. He witnessed a confirming charter for the Barony of Wilton (for John Scott) in 1494. He had a confirming charter for the Barony of Yetholm in 1495. He witnessed a charter for Adam Hepburne of Craigs in 1505 and another for Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, in 1506/7. In 1510 he and about 20 of his associates were charged with robbing and harassing Katherine Hoppringle (perhaps the widow of his father), depriving her of the lands to which she was legally entitled. He married Elizabeth daughter of Patrick Hepburn, 1st Lord of Hailles. He was probably father of Thomas (who married Janet Scott of Howpastles in about 1532), William (who is said to have succeeded, although this may be confused), Elizabeth (who married Andrew Haig of Benmerydse) and Maragret (who married Gavin Elliot). Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as tenant in Stonedge along with Cuthibert when they were caught ‘with the bloody hand’ for the murder of Fergus Lorraine in Gatehousecote. He is recorded as ‘Andro McDowall in Stainledge’. In 1618 Andrew Ker suggested that the men on the assize should be changed, since they were his tenants, but he had a feud with 2 of the commissioners (namely Thomas Turnbull of Minto and William Douglas of Bonjedwards). It seems likely he and Cuthibert (probably his brother) were hanged for the murder in 1618. Cuthbert (16th/17th C.) listed along with Andrew in 1616 when they were caught red-handed for the murder of Fergus Lorraine. The pair were committed to Jedburgh Tolbooth in 1618 and although the outcome is not recorded, they were probably hanged. David (18th/19th C.) wright at Weensland Mill. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. Dungal of Makerstoun (15th C.) had a sasine for an 80 merk land in 1461. He was part of the panel of 1464/5 which ruled on the dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Makerstoun and Yetholm in 1477/8. He witnessed a charter for Robert Ramsay of Cockpen in 1485/6. He was probably son of Duncan, father of Andrew and brother of Barbara, who married Gilbert Haig of Benmersyde. George (16th/17th C.) probably son of Thomas and Margaret Home. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638, his name being recorded as ‘G. Makdougall of Makrarstoun’. He may be the McDougall who represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1625. He appears to have been succeeded by Sir William, presumably his son. Henry ‘Harry’ (17th C.) probably son of Sir William of Makerstoun. In 1658 he was among 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire who signed a commission to oppose payment requested from the county. He was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire (i.e. an M.P.), appointed in 1665, 1678 and 1681. He was probably the ‘M'Doual of Mackerston’ who was listed in 1684 as one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. His wife was Barbara and there was a ratification of Thomas as his heir in 1670. Sir Henry Hay (d.1825) son of Sir George Hay and Barbara, only child of Henry McDougall of Mackerston. He served as a Deputy Lieutenant for Roxburghshire 1797–98. In 1782 he married Isabella, daughter of Admiral Sir James Douglas and they had 3 daughters: Anna Marie, who married Sir Thomas Brisbane; Henrietta; and Elizabeth. On his death he was succeeded by his cousin Sir Thomas Hay. John (19th C.) law clerk in Hawick in the 1860s. Robert (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (18th/19th C.) cart-wright on the Round Close, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Mackerston in 1502. Along with William Ormiston, in the same place, he was absent from the indictments given at Jedburgh, although the crimes are not recorded. His name is given as Thomas makdowell. Thomas of Mackerston (d.1571) recorded in a marriage contract of 1532 with Janet Scott of Howpasley. He is probably the Thomas ‘McDuell’ who witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1533. He witnessed a document in Selkirk between the Kers of Mersington and Shaws in 1534. He is recorded in 1537 among Kers and others who were accused of burning Cunzierton and killing 2 men called Hall. He is also listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; Alexander of ‘Stedrik’ is also listed and probably closely related. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1560 he was named (as guarantor on the Ker side) on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He is probably the Thomas listed in 1569 among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. He married Janet Scott of Howpasley and their children may have included: James, who succeeded; Euphemia, who married Robert Lauder of that Ilk; and Isobel, who married Andrew Haig of Bemersyde. These generations seem confused. Thomas of Mackerston (d.1604) son of William. His sister Elizabeth married Andrew Haig of Bemersyde. He is probably the ‘M'Dowell of M'carstoun’ listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1592 his was cautioner that Gavin Eliott of Stobs he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He is probably the Laird of Mackerston who served in Parliament as a minor baron in 1597. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir George Home of Wedderburn. He was succeeded by his son James, who was in turn succeeded by his grandson Sir William. He also had a daughter Eupheme (or Mary), who married Richard Lauder. Sir William (17th C.) probably grandson of Thomas, with the name of his father perhaps being George. He or his father represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1625. In about 1625 he married Margaret, daughter of Walter (‘Auld Wat’) Scott of Harden with Wat’s 2nd wife Margaret Edgor. His children included: Henry, who succeeded; and Anne Isabel, who married Walter Scott of Raeburn. William (18th C.) miller at Spittal. His son David was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1725 (also ‘Mac Dougall’, ‘Makdougal’, ‘Mckdougall’, and variants; formerly interchangeable with MacDowall, Macdowall, McDowell, etc.).

McEwen (muk-yoo-win) n. Rev. James (1831–1924) from Kirkcudbright, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1852. He was ordained as minister of Ford in 1856. In 1862 he was translated to become minister of the East Bank Church. He introduced hymn singing, as opposed to the traditional unaccompanied psalms, led by the precentor. He remained until 1873, when he moved to Sydney Place, Glasgow. In 1858 he married Jane Blackwood (1839–71), who died at East Back Manse, and is buried in the Wellogate. In 1873 he secondly married Margaret (b.1851), daughter of engineer John Melrose, and she died in 1937, aged 87. His children were: Jane (1861–90); Thomas (1863–1937), who was born in Hawick; William; Sir John Blackwood (1868–1948), also born in Hawick; George Cavet (b.1871); Katherine; Marion Cavet (1875–1961); Jessie Seath (b.1877); Helen Melrose (b.1879); and Sydney Melrose (b.1881). He was described as ‘of thin, wiry make, nimble in mind and body, he seemed to be endowed with a tireless energy’. A photograph of him exist. Sir John Blackwood (1868–1948) composer and college head. He was born in Hawick at the East Bank Manse, son of Rev. James and Jane Blackwood. At age 17 St. John’s Kirk appointed him as organist and choirmaster. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1888, then studied music, while being employed as choirmaster. Afterwards he attended the Royal Academy of Music in London, returning to Scotland in 1895, but being invited back to the Royal Academy 3 years later as a professor of harmony and composition. He was a prominent member of the Philharmonic Society, as well as a founder member and first Honorary Secretary of the Society of British Composers. He became Principal of the Royal Academy of Music in 1924, holding this position until 1936. He produced a significant body of music, particularly chamber music. The first public performance of his work was in 1894. Probably his best-known piece is the ‘Solway Symphony’, composed in 1911, first performed in 1922, and performed for the first time (at least the first movement) in Hawick in 2014. It was the first piece by a British composer to be recorded on the HMV label. His music is described as ‘post-Wagnerian’, with influences from Scottish folk traditions. He wrote a large amount of chamber music, including 17 string quartets and 7 violin sonatas. He also wrote orchestral music, including settings of 3 Border Ballads. In 1913 he suffered some sort of personal crisis, which led him to focus on chamber music thereafter. He received an honorary degree from Oxford in 1926 and Glasgow in 1933 and was knighted in 1931. He had left-wing political views, set out in pamphlets such as ‘Abolish Money’ and ‘Total Democracy’. In 1902 he married Hedwig Ethel, daughter of naval architect Henry Alwyn Bevan Cole; they had no children. The Provost of Hawick sent him a congratulatory note on his 80th birthday. He died at his home in London and left a large legacy for the promotion to Scotland in 1895, but being invited back to the Royal Academy 3 years later as a professor of harmony and composition. He was a prominent member of the Philharmonic Society, as well as a founder member and first Honorary Secretary of the Society of British Composers. He died at his home in London and left a large legacy for the promotion of new Scottish chamber music. Most of his manuscripts are held at Glasgow University. An exhibition and concert to celebrate his music were organised in Hawick in 2013 (also written ‘McEwan’).

McFarlane (muk-fawr-lin) n. James (b.1825/6) from St. Boswells, he was listed as blacksmith on Mather’s Close in 1851. His wife was Helen Thompson and they had a son, James.

McGibbons

John (18th C.) resident of Denholm. His son Peter was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1784. Robert (b.c.1840) shoemaker in Hawick, listed on the Howegate in 1837 and on the 1841 census. His wife was Janet and they had children William, Robert, Jane and Anne. Tib (18th/19th C.) probably Isabel or Elizabeth, she was a resident of Cavers Parish. In her old age she was quite bent, and reputed by local people to be a witch. One day she was caught by Thomas Turnbull stealing harvested oats from his farm at East Middle, and he turned her off his land. However, a deputation of reapers from Denholm came to complain to him that they would all be cursed.

McGarrity (mu-ga-ri’-ee) n. Rev. Robert Forsyth (1869–1933) born in Armadale in West Lothian, he was a minister at Carfin and then Burray (Orkney). He became minister at Saughtree Kirk in 1929 and remained until his death. He married Jeanie Gloag and died in Edinburgh.

McGaughey (mu-ga-kee) n. Sean (1961/2– ) attended St. Margaret’s and the High School. After leaving school he worked in the knitwear industry. He played rugby for the Y.M., then for Hawick R.F.C., firstly in the 1979/80 season; he became a regular in the back row in the team that won the title 3 years in a row, 1984/5, 1985/6 and 1986/7. In 1983/4 he toured with the Grand Slam-winning Scottish team, gaining a single cap in 1984. He also played for the South of Scotland and the Barbarians. He was forwards coach in Hawick 2001/2.

McGee (mu-gee) n. Allan Hawick paramedic who has long been involved with the Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue, Duke of Edinburgh’s Award Scheme and Borders Exploration Group. He has been awarded the Winston Churchill Award and the Honorary Provost’s Achievement Award. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bedrule, listed among a number of Turnbuls who had remission in 1516 for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He is recorded as ‘William Makge in Bethroule’.

McGeorge’s (muk-jor-jeez) n. J. & D. McGeorge Ltd., Hawick knitwear manufacturers of the latter part of the 20th century. Records of the company covering the period 1960–96 exist. The original company was founded by James McGeorge in Dumfries in 1881.

McGibbon (mu-gi-bin) n. Fr. Charles Mungo (1905–90) born in Joppa, Edinburgh, his father died in WWI. He was ordained a priest in 1930 and served in Grenada, Tivoli and Victoria. He returned to Britain in 1950, serving in Edinburgh and Leicester, before returning to Barbados. In 1964 he was appointed Chaplain to the Dominican sisters in Hawick, remaining until St. Margaret’s Convent was closed in 1988. He spent his last years back in Edinburgh.

McGill (mu-gil) n. Anna see Lady Symington. Rev. Francis (1588/9–1664) licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1611, he obtained half the living of Borthwick from the minister of Wilton (William Clerk) in 1612. It is unclear for how long he may have preached there, but he became minister of Kirkmichael in 1620. He married Elizabeth McMoran, who died in 1670 at 93 years old. Their children were Margaret and Marion (who married William Herreis of Hartwaite). John (18th C.) tenant farmer at Has sendean Townhead. In 1725 the schoolmaster of Minto, Walter Turnbull, raised ‘letters of horn and poinding’ against him, presumably to try to recover a debt. Rev. Walter *d.*1651 possibly related to Sir James Douglas of Cavers, whose children with his 2nd wife (a daughter of Sir James McGill) are said to have taken the surname McGill. He was probably born too early to have been a son of Sir James Douglas, and so may have been his brother-in-law or similar. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1593. He is recorded as minister and vicar of Cavers in 1603 when he gave the ‘tack of the teinds’ to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, and again in 1607. He held the parsonage and vicarage of Kirkton from 1606, as well as the parsonage of Cavers (although he was only presented to the vicarage in 1609). In a Scottish statute of 1622 he is recorded having the right of the vicarage of Cavers Parish. He was minister in 1627 when William Henderson (‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’) was excommunicated for the slaying of William Elliot. He witnessed a charter transferring Harwood from Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir of Hobkirk to Gilbert Elliott and another regarding Appotside and Tythehouse in 1632. He gave £20 towards building the Library at Glasgow University in about 1636. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he was stated as being aged and infirm and requiring an assistant. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £100 in 1643 (and were part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers by the 1678 valuation). He is recorded as minister of Cavers in a Hawick Burgh records entry of 1644. Also in 1644 he reported to the Presbytery about 2 men at Fastcastle (in Bedrule Parish) who refused to sign the Covenant. He remained Cavers minister minister until 1647, when succeeded by James Douglas. He preached to a visitation of Cavers in 1645 when there is a record that he was 100 years old (although this scarcely seems credible, given that he graduated in 1593). He was said to have died in his 107th year (which also seems unlikely). He married Lilias Bartane (or Bartoun, who died in 1671) and their children included: Jamesi, mentioned in 1642, who died before 1651; Walter *d.*1694, Minister of Leswalt, Wigton and Kilsyth, who was next of kin in 1651; and Samuel, Minister of Trailflat from 1627. His wife is recorded in a bond of 1651 with John Wynram of Libberton. A gravestone in Cavers old Kirkyard, marked ‘Johanna Magel, 1630’ is probably his daughter (spelled ‘Makgill’ and variants; see also MacGill).

McGinn (mu-gin) n. Matthews ‘Matt’ (1928–1977) prolific song-writer from the east end of Glasgow. His children’s songs, such as ‘The Red Yo- yo’ and ‘The Kirkcudbright Centipede’ are well known to children, and some of his bawdier ones (such as ‘The Bee from The Old Town of Eff en’) or political ones (such as ‘The Man They Could Not Hang’) to adults. He wrote the song ‘The Rolling Hills o’ the Borders’ popularised by the John Wright Band and Scocha. Rev. Thomas minister of Bedrule Kirk from 1945 until it merged with Denholm in 1963.

McGivern (mu-gi-vurn) n. Alec owner of the Tower Hotel in the latter half of the 20th century. He had the bungalow Linden House built on the site of Linden Park.

McGowan (mu-gow-in) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Ade Makgowan’ when he was bequeathed 6 shillings in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed among servants of the Laird. George (?– ) Hawick born and bred, he worked for the Hawick Express and the Hawick News, mainly covering rugby and other sports. He was a rugby player and sprinter, and also on the Town Council. In 1974 he emigrated to New Zealand, and wrote the books ‘Memories From Afar’ (1992) and ‘The Way We Were’ (1997). William (16th C.) public notary from at least 1553, as recorded in Wigtown. He held the parsonage and vicarage of Minto from 1574. He was a member of the Assembly of 1575 and was also Commissary of Wigtown, probably residing there rather than in Minto. He was accused of non-residence, and appears to have been deprived in 1576, but may have continued until about 1585, or else that was the year he took up residence (formerly spelled ‘M’Gowen’, etc.).
McHenry's

McHenry’s (muk-heen-reez) n. former corner shop on Mansfield Road, visible in a photograph of 1905.

McInnes (mu-ki-nis) n. Rev. Æneas Ede (1861–1931) born in Bower, Caithness, he was son of schoolmaster Angus and Charlotte Brown. He received his M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1884 and was licensed to preach by Caithness Presbytery in 1887. He became assistant at Selkirk and then in 1894 was ordained assistant and successor (to Rev. Mercer Hall) at Roberton. In 1904 he married Kate, daughter of George Spackman. He retired around 1929 and died at Earlston.

McIvor (muk-l-vur) n. Rhoda M. last Burgh Librarian in Hawick. She studied in Glasgow and London, before working as a librarian in Clydebank and Norfolk.

McKelvie (maw-kul-vee) n. William (d.1906) police Constable who was beaten while making an arrest in Hawick and died. Possibly the only police officer in modern times to be killed on duty in the town.

McKenzie (mu-ken-zee) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Catherine (19th C.) servant to pub proprietor Robert Newall. She was one of the people who contracted cholera in the 1832 outbreak, but recovered. Charles (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Edinburgh who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1779. Francis (18th C.) wigmaker in Hawick. In 1788 he witnessed a baptism for watchmaker John Stewart. Francis ‘Frank’ (1824–1900) hairdresser at 15 Howe gate, having learned the trade from his grandfather Dick. His mother was Ann, who later married David Affleck. He was listed as a Howegate hairdresser in Slater’s 1852 directory, as well as a toy dealer. He was the 5th listed member of the Archæological Society and served as President in 1889. In 1856 he gave to the Museum 2 white bear skulls and an old lock from Harden, as well as a stone hammer in 1857. He also donated some coins and fossils to the Museum in the 1860s. He was Councillor for Slitrig Ward for 6 years. It is said that his shop was a focus for discussion of the Town’s affairs. He married Euphemia Notman, and their children were James (a painter, whose daughter Isobel was a High School teacher), Walter (an Edinburgh Town Councillor) and Margaret (who became Mrs. Douglas). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) listed at Limekilnedge in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. Sir James (17th/18th C.) son of George, who became Viscount Tarbet. He became a lawyer, and was a Senator with the title Lord Royston. He dealt with some of the business affairs of the Duchess of Buccleuch in her senior years, the Session of Hawick writing to him in 1725 to seek assistance with the parish’s poor.

McKinnon (mu-ki-nin) n. Hugh (b.1782/3) from Dumfriesshire, he was a stocking-maker in Hawick. In 1841 and 1851 he was living at Roadhead in Wilton. He married Isabella (‘Tibbie’) McLagan, maternal aunt of the writer Thomas Carlyle. His children were: Alexander; Angus; Mary Ann, who married James Jamieson; Sarah, who married George Turnbull; and Marion (d.1844), who died of consumption. There are mentions of some members of the family in the letters of Thomas Carlyle, with the name sometimes being spelled ‘McKinnow’. James ‘Jim’ (1931/2– ) road sweeper for the Council and horse-racing enthusiast. He was Cornet’s groom for over 15 years.

McLagan (muk-law-gin) n. Thomas Burns (1875–1965) native of Ladybank in Fife, he came to Hawick in 1895 as a postal sorting clerk, eventually becoming overseer. He was a Town Councillor for North High Street Ward from 1938 until 1955, being appointed Dean of Guild in 1939. Junior Bailie in 1940 and serving as Provost 1940–45. Because of the War years, he is the only Provost to have never officiated at a Common Riding. He was Convenor of the County Health and Welfare Committee, a member of the Archæological Society and an elder in St. John’s Church. As Provost he gave the V.J. Day address to the town from the balcony of the Council Chambers in 1945. Married to Elizabeth Grierson of Hawick, he had no family, and shunned publicity. Later he became Postmaster at Keith and Head Postmaster at Forfar, before retiring back to Hawick. McLagan Drive was named after him.

McLagan Drive (muk-law-gin-driv) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1949, extended in 1963 and named after Provost Thomas B. McLagan. Several of the houses were redeveloped by Eildon Housing.

McLaren (muk-law-gin) n. Ebenezer (b.c.1770s) gardener in Hawick. He is listed on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. It is possible he is the man of that name, married to Janet Provn, whose son John was baptised in the Parish of Barony in 1819. Sandy (1945– ) born in Ballinluig, he worked on the family farm until a dust allergy forced him to find a new career. In 1972 he came to Hawick as a policeman, becoming a Sergeant in 1980. He spent several years in Edinburgh and other Border towns before returning to Hawick in 1998 as Inspector in the traffic department. He retired from the Police in 2004, but later had some part-time jobs in Hawick as well as volunteering as a drover with the Royal Voluntary Service. At age 60 he took up the pipes, joining the Hawick Scout Pipe Band. He also has the distinction of having been a member of the Atholl Highlanders, the only lawful private army in Europe. His wife Sheila came from Strath-tay and had several jobs in Hawick. The couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020. Their children are Shonagh (the first full-time female firefighter in the Borders) and Allison (Deputy Head in Earlston). William Pollock ‘Bill’, M.B.E. (1923–2010) born and brought up in Hawick, he attended Trinity and the High School, and was commissioned with the Royal Artillery in WWII. A bout of T.B. ended his rugby playing career early, but he taught rugby to primary school boys until 1987. He worked with the Hawick Express, later becoming well known as a radio and TV commentator, and has also written or edited several books on rugby, for example ‘100 Years of Hawick Rugby’ (1972), and narrated TV programmes and videos on the Borders. He was awarded an M.B.E. for services to rugby in 1979, followed by an O.B.E. in 1995 and a C.B.E. in 2003. He finally retired from rugby commenting in 2002. His autobiography ‘The Voice of Rugby’ was published in 2004. McLaren Court is named after him. A memorial bust was unveiled in Wilton Lodge Park in 2012, sculpted by Rory Maciver, and inscribed ‘The Voice of Rugby’. He can be heard recounting rugby memories on on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012).

He is listed at the Dean among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He married Mary Douglas, daughter of Hugh and Agnes Laidlaw of Hawick. She may be the Mrs. McMorran who had a cottage built for her on land at Loch Park about 1879. James (19th C.) spinner in Wilton and Hawick. He is listed among heads of households at the Dean in 1835 and in the Village in Hawick in 1840 and 1841. Peter (19th C.) married Anne Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1837 (there are various spellings, including ‘McMorren’).

McNairn (muk-nærn) n. George S. (19th C.) son of John of Edinburgh and brother of the editor of the Hawick News. He was appointed as second librarian in Hawick in 1894, serving until 1906. He modernised the library and produced a printed catalogue. He moved to Motherwell Public Library, where he remained for the rest of his life. John (19th C.) father of John, he lived in Edinburgh, but developed strong connections with Hawick. For Thomas Laidlaw of Sillerbuthall he painted a view of Hawick from the West Braid Road about 1870, useful as a record of the growth of the Town. The painting was acquired by the trustees of Sheriff Anderson and presented to the Magistrates and Council, and is now in the Museum collection. He was married twice, secondly to Christina, daughter of William Somerville. He had 8 children, including John (of the Hawick News), George S. (librarian) and Arthur Stuart (secretary of the Evangelical Union of South America). John (1856–1925) co-founder of the Hawick News, with James Vair, and co-publisher of ‘Pictures from the Past of Auld Hawick’ (1911) with J.J. Vernon, ‘Hawick and the Great War, 1914–1919’ (1920) with Vair and several other books. He was born in Edinburgh, son of a painter, and moved to Hawick in 1871, working on the Hawick Advertiser. He took sole control of the Hawick News in 1908, passing it on to his family when he died, and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery.

McNicol (muk-nil-kol) n. Rev. Donald (19th/20th C.) from Clydebank, he was minister at Hawick Baptist Kirk from 1903. He took over after a roughly 1 1/2 year long vacancy. He was said to be a powerful preacher, and attracted many new young people to the Church. During his time a balcony was added to the church and a new baptistry introduced. In 1907 he moved to Edinburgh to become the first minister of the Baptist Church in Gorgie. In 1910 he moved to South Australia. He returned to Hawick in 1916 as Chaplain for visiting Australian troops.

McPhail (muk-fail) n. Rev. Archibald Connell (1827–1907) born in Southend, Campbeltown, son of Dougal (or Dugald) and Margaret Connell, his grandfather being a tenant farmer on Mull and his middle name coming from a maternal uncle who made a fortune in Tobago. He was educated at Dalintobar and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Kintyre Presbytery and became a missionary at Crofthead in Whitburn Parish. He was ordained as minister at Quarter Chapel in Hamilton Parish 1862, translated to Beath, Fife in 1870 and then became minister of Hobkirk in 1876, where he remained until his death. He married Mary Georgina, daughter of Dr. George Welsh (a medical missionary in India), who was widow of Capt. Robert Roy. His wife died in 1900. Their only daughter Georgina Louisa married Walter Turnbull, farmer at Hartshaugh. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard.

McPherson (muk-fer-sin) n. Donald (1842–1907) born at Berriedale in Caithness, he learned gardening, moved to Oban and trained in forestry. He moved to Wolfelee in 1871 as gardener to Sir Walter Elliot. He became manager and helped James Elliot (younger of Wolfelee) run the estate. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1883. Gordon (1938–2020) born in Newcastle, son of Hugh and Elizabeth, he grew up in Newcastle and attended Hawick High School. He did National Service with the Engineer Regiment then worked on farms, as a fireman on the Waverley Line, in the mills and as a lorry driver. Although leaving the area for a while, he lived in Hawick for more than 50 years, first at Trevelyan Terrace and then Churchill Road. He played football, was involved in flapping (winning the Common Riding double in 1983), darts and bowls (being President of the Wilton club twice). He married Margaret and they had sons Alex and Scott. Mrs. ?? (17th C.) one of the tenants in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Her name is written 'M'Feisoon'. She was probably a widow of the former tenant.

McQuarrie (mu-kwa-re) n. Capt. (18th/19th C.) of the 42nd Royal Highland Regiment (Black Watch). Along with 2 other officers he was made an Honorary Burgess when they passed through Hawick in 1802 after defeating the French in Egypt. It is possible this is the same man as Lachlan MacQuarrie (1762–1824), who became governor of New South Wales.

Meadshaw (meed-shaw) n. farm on the north side of the Borthwick valley just past Philip. It has sometimes been marked ‘Meadshaw’ on maps. ‘Archie, hantand [habitually] in Meidshaw’ is recorded in 1586/7, but with no surname given. There were 5 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely James Todd, John Scott, Walter Beattie, James Chisholme and Janet Baptie. There was a skirmish between Royalist and Commonwealth forces near here in 1653 (perhaps the last military conflict near Hawick). It was part of Wilton Parish until Robertson was formed in 1689/90. Robert Scott was there in 1702 and Walter Stoddart in 1710. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties; at that time the farm covered 344, ‘but very inconvenient it being long and narrow’, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Craik, Henwoodie common and Outersiderig. It was rented from the Buccleuch estates by William Ogilvie in 1723. Cooper James Scott was living there in 1753. Robert Beattie was there in 1766, James Laiddlaw in 1780-86 and John Nichol in 1792. It was valued along with Craik and Whinneyleuch in 1785 and 1803. James Douglas was shepherd there in the early 1800s. Walter Lawson, Walter Lunn and their families were there in 1841. About 500 m to the west, near the northern bank of the Borthwick, are the remains of a settlement, probably an old sheepfold (formerly also written ‘Midshaw’, ‘Meidshaw’, etc.; it appears to be ‘Meitsheills’ in 1650, ‘Mitchshaw’ in 1690, ‘Mitcha’ in 1702, ‘meatshaw’ in 1710 and ‘Midshaw’ in 1785; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Meadshaw’, on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Milshaw’ and on Ainslie’s 1773 map as ‘Middshaw’).

Meadshaw Rig (meed-shaw-rig) n. ridge on the south side of the Borthwick valley, south of Eildrig farm, lying between Mid Hill and Rashy Hill. Note that it is a couple of kilometres from the farm of Meadshaw. There is a linear earthwork there.

the Mechanics’ Institute (thu-me-kaw-neeks-in-sti-choo’) n. organisation active in Hawick in the mid-19th century, which ran lectures to promote general knowledge among the working class. There were many ‘Mechanics’ Institutes’ set up in other towns in this period. It ran a library on O’Connell Street. It may have been the same as the I.O.U.S. Mechanics Friendly Society.

Meda (mee-da) n. the scout in the play ‘The Gutterbludes’, described as ‘A Veteran Canadian Pioneer, originally named ‘The Medicine Man’ by the Mohicans, of Scottish Descent’.

Meda’s Song (mee-duz-sawng) n. song written for the play ‘The Gutterbludes’ in 1905, with words by J.E.D. Murray and music by Adam Grant. It is about an Indian scout (Meda) who is really an exiled Teri in disguise, with the role first performed by W.F. Crosby. It is also sometimes called ‘The Song of Meda’. It was first published in 1905 as part of the song sheet for ‘The Gutterbludes’, but the 3rd verse was not published until 1913 (in an edition by Adam Grant, published in memory of his daughter Nan), so it is unclear if this verse was included in the original. A version was recorded by Hamilton B. Little on a 78 r.p.m. record in the 1930s. Grant’s simple accompaniment was embellished by Adie Ingles for the 1957 song book. It was changed again by Ian Seeley for the 2001 edition of ‘The Hawick Songs’, making it again chordal, but more modern. It is a powerful song, and retains its popularity. Despite having no chorus, the audience typically join in gradually as the song progresses, until all are singing by the end.

Medlicott (med-leek-o’) n. Capt. Walter Sandfield (1879–1970) son of Henry Edmondstone and Kate D’Oyley Gale. He was an officer in the Northumberland Hussars. He married Lavender Mary Pease. Later in life he lived at Old Fodderlee, where he died, aged 90.

the Medway Cup (thu-med-wa-kup) n. the Medway Challenge Cup, competed for at the Common Riding races, presented by Oliver Kennedy in 1927, when it replaced the Branxholm Stakes. Kennedy moved to Southend to set up his own knitwear company, using ‘Medway’ as his trade name (because the factory looked across the Thames Estuary to where it is joined by the River Medway). The cup was won by Marjorie Haddon on Rufus on Common Riding Saturday of 1927. Cornet Ian Mactaggart, also riding Rufus, won it in 1929, was second in 1930 and 1931 and won again in 1932 and 1933, getting it outright following his 3 victories. However, the cup was given back for competition again in 1966 by the widow of ex-Cornet Ian Mactaggart. The Kennedy family continues to provide sponsorship for the race.

meed (meed) n., poet. merit, reward – ‘O heaven and earth! but death is a meed. Which sorrow like her’s might desire ...’ [JTe], ‘... meenisters (nee-nis-turz) n., pl. ministers, being appointed to each parish in the post-Reformation Church of Scotland, as well as other related churches. They also served as Moderators for their parish Sessions. The Hawick minister lived in the Manse, which for centuries was on Old Manse Lane. In the 18th century the Hawick minister enjoyed the privilege of cutting peat and turf on the Common and of grazing on the Common any horses, cows or sheep that he possessed; he also received a ‘teind’ for any newborns to the Town’s livestock, 4d for a lamb, 1s for a calf and 1s 8d for a foal. Parish ministers of Hawick can be traced back for several centuries, although the early days are actual duties to the parish. The first Hawick clergymen on record are Henry, ‘persona’ (i.e. Parson), and Algar and William, both ‘capellano’ (i.e. Chaplain) in about 1183. Then comes William (‘Willo Clerico de hauwic’), probably the same man 2 more times in the next decade or 2, followed by ‘Maurice, Parson of Hawick’ in 1189/2. ‘It wad want a twae-threi meenints a twae i the eftermin ...’ [ECS] (of time; meenite is more common).

They also served as Moderators for their parish Sessions. The Hawick minister lived in the Manse, which for centuries was on Old Manse Lane. In the 18th century the Hawick minister enjoyed the privilege of cutting peat and turf on the Common and of grazing on the Common any horses, cows or sheep that he possessed; he also received a ‘teind’ for any newborns to the Town’s livestock, 4d for a lamb, 1s for a calf and 1s 8d for a foal. Parish ministers of Hawick can be traced back for several centuries, although the early days are actual duties to the parish. The first Hawick clergymen on record are Henry, ‘persona’ (i.e. Parson), and Algar and William, both ‘capellano’ (i.e. Chaplain) in about 1183. Then comes William (‘Willo Clerico de hauwic’), probably the same man 2 more times in the next decade or 2, followed by ‘Maurice, Parson of Hawick’ in 1189/2. ‘It wad want a twae-threi meenints a twae i the eftermin ...’ [ECS] (of time; meenite is more common).

John Leche, from before 1363 until at least 1378; John Cromdale, probably after 1378; William Turnbull, from before 1431; James Lindsay, Rector from 1447, Prebendary from 1470; Thomas Falconer, Chaplain in 1452; Hugh de Douglas noted in 1460; Gilbert Kennedy, Prebendary until 1470; Alexander Murray at least 1476–82; John Preston, Parson in 1481; James Merchiston in the years around 1504; Robert Luderdale, Chaplain in at least 1511–2–14; Alexander Newton, Vicar in 1514; William Cunningham, Parson in 1519/20; John Hardie, Chaplain in 1519/20; John Scott, Vicar in at least 1528–39/40; John Hepburn, Rector in 1532; Pate Witelow around 1532; and John Scott, Rector from 1536. John Young was burned in his tower in 1548. George Hepburn was Parson around 1559, probably the last before the Reformation. John Sandilands was recorded as Rector in 1554 and 1558, and after the Reformation was Parson, probably from 1563 until 1583. John Spottiswood was also recorded as a Rector in 1558 (so there were apparently 2 men sharing this benefice). William Fowler held the post of Parson from 1585 until 1601. However, Henry Scott was Reader in 1574–79, while William Auchmowtie was Minister for Hawick, Wilton, Kirkton, Hassendean and Cavers (at the same time) from 1575 until at least 1591, i.e. he was the actual minister during the time of at least a couple of Parsons and Readers. The charge was vacant in 1599 (and possibly for several years around that time). We then have the post-Reformation bona fide Hawick Parish Ministers: Thomas Abernethy, from 1601 until about 1610; Adam Scott 1612–c.24; Robert Cunningham 1625–56; John Scott 1657–62; and Alexander Kinnear about 1663–67. John Langlands was the last Episcopalian, appointed in 1667 and deprived in 1689. There was then a vacancy for about 2 years in the confusing times after the Revolution. The following is a list thereafter: Alexander Orrock 1691–1711; Robert Cunningham 1712–22; Charles Telfer 1723–31; William Somerville 1732–57; James Laurie 1757–83; Thomas Sharp 1784–89; Robert Gillan 1789–1800; James Arkle 1800–23; John Cochran 1823–32; John A. Wallace 1833–43; John MacRae 1843–92; David Cathels 1892–1925; John A.G. Thomson 1925–??; David L. Wright 1972–86.

for a fishing pool (in many parishes) frequented by the local minister.

Meikle (mee-kul) n. David Skene (1939– ) educated at Cambridge University, he was minister at Westcott House 1961–3, then in Edinburgh before moving to Hawick. He was Curate at St. Cuthebert’s 1963–7, before moving to St. Philip’s, Edinburgh.

meikle (mee-kul) adj., arch., poet. big, large (a variant of muckle) – ‘O! what’s this com’d o’ me now, quo’ Dickie, Fala, &c. What meikle wae’s this happen’d o’ me, quo’ he’ [CPM], ‘...Now tell me, thou sprite, who art meikle of might, The death that I must die!’ [JL], ‘I wull prayse thee amang meikle peeple’ [HSR], ‘...naither do I leazle mysel’, makin’ a-wark in meikle mattsirs ...’ [HSR], adv. much – ‘...in ane unlaw of 6s. ... and as meikle that lies out of the nicht in his neighbour’s corn or haynet gers’ [BR1649], ‘Mair til be desirret ar thaye nor gowd, yis, nor meikle fyne gowd’ [HSR], ‘...ane michtie man isna delifcret bie meikle doucht’ [HSR], ‘They tell o’ meikle care and pain, They tell o’ mony waes; We needna think to light again The love o’ early days’ [JT], ‘...Her hope o’ meikle fortune’s sma’ [WL] (also in some place names, e.g. Meikledale and Meikle Whittaw).

the Meikle Brig (thu-mee-kul-brig) n. former name for Hawick’s main bridge, perhaps suggesting there was a second one, as also indicated by other records of the early 18th century. The Session books of 1722 state that 2 elders are to collect money ‘from ye west side of ye town to ye Bridge’ and the next ‘from ye Meikle bridge to Wm. Dickson’s house’. This is suggestive of 2 separate bridges across the Slitrig, this being the popular name for the larger one, but this is far from certain. It may be that the ‘Meikle Brig’ was the ‘Auld Brig’ (not perhaps so old back then), with the other being a bridge over the Slitrig mill lade.

Meikle Cavers (mee-kul-kā-vurz) n. former name for ‘Cavers Magna’, i.e. the main Parish of Cavers, recorded in an instrument of 1404/5 and a papal bull of 1419.

Meikledale (mee-kul-dāl) n. farm near where the Meikledale Burn joins the Ewes Water on the A7, about 5 miles south of Mosspaul. The lands there were long the seat of the Littles, from before 1426 when Simon Little had an earlier grant confirmed. They were described as a 20-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. They were then owned by the Elliots. The farm was valued at £900 in 1671 when Adam Elliot was owner. When inherited by Adam’s son William in 1682 the farm (together with Meikledalehope) was described as a 19-merk land of old extent. It was said that Adam Elliot (perhaps son of William) was forced to sell it in 1725 to pay off his creditors, particularly his father’s cousin William of Thorlieshope. William Scott of Rowanburn (a descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane) acquired it in 1733 and sold it to William Laing (Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch) in 1750. Thomas Beattie was then the tenant, and wrote a diary, which survives; he was still there until at least 1797. Mr. Laing sold it to William Elliot Lockhart of Borthwickbrae, his nephew. The tenant in 1841 and until at least the 1860s was John Common. An ancient standing stone, the ‘Grey Wether’ stood in front of the house. There are remains of an ancient settlement just to the north-east, and another further up the Burn at Rigfoot. There was also formerly a mill there (sometimes ‘Muckledale’; it is ‘Meikildale’ in 1426, ‘Mekyl-dail’ in 1499, ‘Mekildail’ in 1500, ‘Mekildail’ in 1569 and ‘Muckledale’ in 1785; it is ‘Meikdale’ on Blaue’s 1654 map and ‘Muckledale’ on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Meikledale Burn (mee-kul-dāl-burn) n. major stream that rises at Faw Side and Rashiegrain Height (on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire) and joins the Ewes Water near the farm of Meikledale. There are signs of a rectangular platform near the head of the burn and signs of a settlement further down.

Meikledale Haugh (mee-kul-dāl-hau̇gh) n. cottage near Meikledale. There were Jacksons and Douglasses there in 1841.

Meikledalehope (mee-kul-dāl-hō̂p) n. former lands near Meikledale. This could be the ‘Meikl-hop’ where Simon Scott was recorded in 1494/5. The lands were inherited along with Meikledale by William Elliot in 1682 (it is ‘Meikledailhope’ in 1682).
the Meikle Door (thu-mee-kul-dör) n. former name for the main, large entrance to St. Mary’s Kirk, situated at the west end. This is in the pre-1763 Kirk – ‘Faiflash, Bailies Ruecastle and Graham to stand att the meikle kirk door’ [PR1718].

Meikle Whitlaw (nee-kul-whi’-law) n. former name for a farm at Whitlaw, to the north of the Flex road, opposite ‘Little Whitlaw’. The 2 former farms were separated by the Flex Burn. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Bucleuch, at that time covering 188 acres and being bounded by the Slitrig, Little Whitlaw and Hawick Common, with the farmhouse at the south end, on the Flex Burn. The old boundary of the Common came to a point there, with the boundary line running through one of the farm buildings; this was the house of Janet Martin at the time of the 1767 description of the Common. At the Riding of the Marches a cut sod was placed on the roof and the Flag passed over it also (presumably by the Cornet). The farm was formerly owned by the Gladstains, then became a tenanted farm belonging to the Duke of Bucleuch. There is a record of a band of English and Scottish thieves stealing cattle from John Gladstanes’ byre there in 1580 and being followed by a band of Gladstains and Scotts; on their return through Liddesdale they were ambushed by Armstrongs and others and Walter, brother of James Gladstains of Cocklaw was killed. In 1692 Francis Gladstains renewed his lease, which he held by right through ‘gentleman service’. In the 1750s there was a dispute over the apportionment of the ‘cess’ between these lands and the Flex. ‘Mickle and Little Whitlaws’ were valued together at £152 2s 7d in 1811, when owned by the Duke of Bucleuch. The farmer in the mid-19th century was William Knox; he was said to have succeeded 2 of his uncles, who became tenants in about 1746 (although it was probably later), succeeding John Gladstains. The site of the former farm buildings is now the main part of Flex farm (also known as ‘Muckle Whitlaw’; it is ‘Mekle Quhitelaw’ in 1580 and ‘Meikle Whitlawes’ in 1718).

mei’ll (mil) contr. . . . me will, or shall – ‘yow an mei’ll gaun thegither’.

Mein (meen) n. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Huntly and their son Andrew was baptised in 1797. The witnesses were Robert Tinlin and James Rae. He was recorded as servant to Mr. Dickson on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. James (b.c.1800) born in Stow, he was farmer at Weensland Farmhouse in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet and they had a son James. James (19th C.) boot and shoemaker in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His widow Isabella Mitchell, and daughters Williamson and Jane, are recorded on Mian Street in Lillieleaf in 1851. James (b.c.1810) framework knitter. He lived on the High Street in 1841 and at Kirkgate in 1851. His wife was Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), and they had children James, Eliza and Adam. He may be the ‘Mensie Mein’ who is mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’ – ‘Peggy Duncan and Jenny Din, Nellie Herkness and Mensie Mein; The Wilton Priest wi’ his coat o’ skin, Staney Stewart and Candy Jean’ [HI]. John (17th C.) tenant in Barnes in 1684, when his servant Thomas Yellowlees was declared a fugitive for being a Covenanter. Robert (17th C.) mason who worked at Branxholme, his surname being written ‘Mean’. He was listed in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Bucleuch in 1633 being owed £87 3s 4d for his work at Branxholme. Robert (17th/18th C.) mason originally from Melrose Parish. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism in hawick Parish for workman Adam Tudhope. In 1716 in Hawick he married Agnes, daughter of the deceased James Chisholme. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included: Agnes (b.1724); and Richard (b.1731). Thomas (b.1821/2) farmer at Broomhills in Southdean in the 1860s. He was living with his mother Elizabeth at Southdean Glebe in 1841 and was at Broom farm by 1851. In 1861 he was farmer of 220 acres at Broomhills, employing 7 people. He married Elizabeth or Betsy Smith in Hobkirk Parish in 1855. He must have been related to the Meins of Hunthill and Ormis-ton (formerly written ‘Mean’ and variants; see also Main).

Melchert (mel-shurt) n. Heinz (1925–2020) born on New Year’s Day in Pomerania, he was called up to serve the German army in 1943 and a year later was captured by the Americans in France. He spent time as a P.O.W. in the U.S.A. and Canada, before being shipped to Leith. After the War he decided to remain in Scotland, coming to Hawick in 1948 where he worked for Lipton’s and then the Store grocery department. He married Adelheid (d.1977) in 1960 and after she died he secondly married Ella Russell (d.2004) in 1986, whom he had met in his early days in Hawick. He was one of the people who founded Hawick Table Tennis Club in the Congregational Church Hall in the 1980s. Although he kept a strong German accent, he was described as being more of a Scotsman than a German.

melder (mel-dur) n., arch. a quantity of corn that is ground at one time, one customer’s load of corn – ‘...that he would send him a boll of meal out of a melder he had just got from the mill’ [WNK], also used figuratively – ‘Wi’ face (od! gin ye saw’t) as grave As e’er wore hypocritic elder, After a godly, gospel melder O’ young first-time communicants’ [JoHa].

meldrop (mel-drop) n., arch. a drop of mucus on the end of someone’s nose, the drop at the end of an icicle – ‘Dight the meldrop frae my nose, and I’l wear the midges frae yours’ = do me a favour, and I will repay it: a common phrase among the peasantry in Rxb.’ [JoJ].

The Melgund (thu-mel-gind) n. the Melgund Bar at 11 Melgund Place, taking its name from the spring that once stood near there. Also sometimes called the ‘Melgund Pump’. It closed in 2004, but reopened briefly in 2006, turning into a bar and Indian restaurant in 2008.

The Melgund Brig (thu-mel-gind-brig) n. popular name sometimes used for the road bridge over the railway at the corner of Melgund Place and Brougham Place.

Melgund Glen (mel-gind-glen) n. house near Denholm, belonging to the Earl of Minto. It lies between Haseendeon Bank and Minto village, on the Grinding Burn. It was probably designed by W.H. Playfair in 1827 and was used as the Manse for Minto Parish. Some old field boundaries are visible to the north-west.

Melgund Place (mel-gind-plis) n. street running between the tops of Brougham Place and O’Connell Street, with original houses built in 1837 (the street name is already used in Pigot’s 1837 directory). It was named after a title borne by the heir to the Earldom of Minto, being an area in Forfarshire. J.P. Alison deigned the tenement at No. 1.

The Melgund Pump (thu-mel-gind-pump) n. popular name for the Melgund Bar at 11 Melgund Place. Originally it was the name of a spring at the corner of Melgund Place and O’Connell Street, demolished in 1881. It was also known as ‘Stenton’s Pump’.

melld (meld) adj., arch. mild – ‘It’s a melld day’ [GW] (the same word occurs in Northumberland).

Melrose

The house was built in the 18th century by William and Robert Adam for the Bailie family, it was originally called Whiteside, and is now open to the public. Its landscape was laid out in the 1720s and 30s, further developed by Reginald Blomfield around 1900 into an outstanding example of a planned estate. The Hundy Mundy folly to the south, with a wooded area, is now used for natural burials.

mell-heid (mel-heed) n., arch. the head of a hammer, and large, hard head – ‘Dunion, wui its muckle mell heed, is biurly billie ti Ruberslaw’ [ECS], a dunderhead, numbskull – ‘A muckle mell-heed!’ [ECS].

Mellon (me-lin) n. Fr. Edward (?–??) priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1924–30. He was heavily involved with purchasing the adjoining property and converting it to the Halls, but had to leave before the work was completed.

Mellorshope (me-lurz-höp) n. house on the Hermitage Water, near Dinlees.

melly (me-lee) n., arch. cloth that is a mixture of colours – ‘...for art and part of theft and concealment ...six ells of melley, twenty-four ells of white cloth ...’ [RBA1537].

Melrose (mel-röz) n. town built at the foot of the Eildons in the Tweed valley, birthplace of rugby sevens. St. Aidan founded a monastery here in the 7th century, being succeeded by St. Boswell and St. Cuthbert, with the present abbey founded around 1136. The town became a Burgh of Barony in 1609. The 15th century Commissioner’s House, repaired 1645 Market Cross, and Priorwood Gardens are other attractions. At one time called Fordel, it was well known for producing linens until the late 18th century, and also known as the former home of ‘Coltart’s Candy’. Melrose Lammas Fair was for a long time the largest market for lambs in southern Scotland, and also a great meeting-place in the Borders. Melrose was a station on the Waverley Line, but is now primarily a residential and retirement community. Considered ‘posh’ by other Borderers, it is rarely the best-loved among the other towns – ‘The dastards of Melrose and Galashiels weavers! They pulled out our badge, and became our deceivers’ [JH]. Melrose Festival Week was inaugurated in 1938, led by the Melrosian and the Festival Queen, and has some events in the grounds of Melrose Abbey. The local song has some great words – ‘It’s oor ain toon, It’s the best toon That ever there be: Here’s tae Melrose, gem o’ Scotland, The toon o’ the free’. The town has also given rise to a surname. Population (1991) 2,270 (the origin is possibly the Old British ‘mael’ and Old Welsh ‘rhos’, meaning ‘bare or cropped moor’, although the Gaelic ‘ros’ for ‘promontory’ has also been suggested; the name was probably transferred from Old Melrose where the Abbey was first sited; certainly the name has nothing to do with the rose, despite its appearance on the town’s coat of arms; the name first appears as ‘Mailros’ about 700 and had varied spellings until the 17th century).

Melrose (mel-röz) n. Adam (d.1222) referred to as ‘Adam of Melrose’, where he became Abbot in 1207. His origins are a mystery. In 1213 he became Bishop of Caithness, and was consecrated in May 1214. In the following month he dedicated the church of St. Mary in Hawick. This is presumably because he had previously been Abbot of Melrose, and would have been something he did before returning to Caithness. In 1218 he was one of the Bishops who visited the Pope to reverse the excommunication imposed upon the whole Kingdom of Scotland. He was burned to death in his kitchen at Halkirk by a mob of infuriated farmers after he had increased the tax. Adam (1817/8–74) another of the engineering family, of whom a portrait exists. He married Agnes, daughter of plumber and slater Walter Grieve, and she died in 1891, aged 75. Their children included: Janet, who married James Davidson, who worked for Patons, spinners in Alloa; Helen (b.1844); Agnes; another Agnes; Walter (b.1849); Maggie (b.1853); Lizzie; Isabella; and Jemima. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. George (18th C.) married Janet Renwick in Southdean Parish in 1738. Helen (19th C.) listed as milliner or dressmaker in Slater’s 1852 directory. J. (d.1814) resident of Mackside. His death is recorded in Hobkirk Parish. James (b.1767/8) born in Ratho, Midlothian, he was an engineer who came to Hawick from Berwick in the 1810s and founded the local firm James Melrose & Sons in 1815. Their premises started in Brougham Place (shown on Wood’s 1824 map) and moved to Slitrig Crescent. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed as a millwright and machine maker at ‘Woodward’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and was still there on the 1841 census. The firm produced much of the machinery for woollen mills in the South of Scotland. He is recorded as a joint proprietor with his son James in the 1837 electoral roll. In 1837 he was listed simply on the High Street. He is said to have invented the piecing machine (for joining the ‘rovings’ in preparation for spinning) in Hawick in 1844, which was adopted throughout Scotland, as well as in England, and as far afield as Russia. In 1851 he was at 1 High Street (although clearly the east end of the High Street was meant) and ‘Jas. Melrose & Son, millwrights, East end’ is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1808 he married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Hardie in Eccles, Berwickshire. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1810); and John (b.1815). He was still alive in 1851. James (d.1862) from Hawick, he became foreman of the Keysham Steam Factory in Devonport. He married Janet Easton in 1839 and she died in Hawick in 1886. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as tenant in ‘quithalch’, when he was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing cows from the Frissells near Peebles. It is unclear which of the Whithaughs or Whitehaughs he lived at, but his surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. John (c.1815–89) son of James, he ran the family engineering firm. He was born in Berwick. He was a Town Councillor for Slitrig Ward until 1867. He was Chairman of Hawick Gas Light Co., and member of the Parochial Board. He was also on the original Hawick Bowling Club committee in 1854. In 1851 he was at 5 Brougham Place and at 14 Slitrig Crescent in 1861. He donated a communion cup from the Green Kirk to the Museum. He married Catherine Easton. Their children were: Eliza (b.1841); James (b.1843); Helen Hardie (b.1845); William (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); John (b.1853), who became Hawick Provost; and Catherine (b.c.1855). John, C.B.E. (b.1853) son of John and Cathering Easton. He grew up in Hawick, where he was taught for a while by James Murray. He ran the engineering company James Melrose & Sons. He was on Hawick Town Council for Teviot Ward from 1898 and was soon elected a Magistrate, then was Provost 1902–1919, being Hawick’s longest serving Provost. He was said to be a man of few words, but an untiring public servant. A large number of improvements were carried out during his Provostship, including the Boer War Memorial, the Quater-Centenary, the Corporation Swimming Baths, Anderson Sanatorium, the Fire Station, acquisition of Most Park and the move of the Museum to Wilton Lodge. In 1906 he was the first Provost to wear the robes, with chain and badge of office. He was Chairman of the Common Riding Committee and the Ceremonial Committee, Chairman of the Home-Coming and Pageant Committee, one of the original members of the Callants’ Club and an early President. He was also Chairman of the local Military Tribunal during WWI, for which service he received the C.B.E. He was Unionist in politics, Chairman of the Hawick Gas Company and Teviotdale Dairy Co., Governor of Hawick Savings Bank, member of the District Board of Control and a J.P. He married Grace Franch Taylor, who came from Lauder. On his retirement he was presented with a portrait by George Fiddes Watt, R.S.A., which is now in the Town Hall. He lived at Hopehill, is buried at Wilton Cemetery, and Melrose Court is named after him. He can be seen in a film clip of Baden-Powell’s visit to Hawick in 1910. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Rieve in Roberton in 1794. Their children included: Robert (b.1795), baptised in Roberton; and Janet (b.1805), baptised in Galashiels. The 1795 baptism was 1 by law in Kelso Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) servant at Deanfoot in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. William (15th C.) witness in 1454 to a charter in Wilton Parish. He is recorded as ‘Willelmo Melross’. Most of the other witnesses were local men. William (d.1908) brother of Provost John, he was a partner in Melrose’s engineering firm, having served as apprentice under his father and uncle. He was on the School Board, associated with the Archaeological Society, a Director of the Hawick Gas-Light Company and a member of the East-Bank Church. He had been taught by J.A.H. Murray and was one of the first people in Hawick to take up cycling. He installed the first electric generator in Hawick, which ran at Tower Mill, and provided electric lighting to William Elliot’s house at Teviot Lodge.

Melrose Abbey (mél-rôz-ā-bē) n. abbey in the town of Melrose, founded by David I around 1136, with Cistercian (also known as ‘white’) monks. This followed an earlier monastery built at Old Melrose, in a loop of the Tweed, about 2 1/2 miles downriver. It was founded around 650 by St. Aidan, with St. Boisil and St. Cuthbert also Priors there. This building was burned in 839, slowly fell into decay and was abandoned by the 11th century. The new abbey was dedicated to St. Mary and was headed by an Abbot. The town of Melrose grew up around the Abbey. The ‘Chronicle of Melrose’ is a historical record compiled by the monks, covering the period 731–1264, and including the consecration of St. Mary’s in Hawick in 1214. The Abbey held the right of patronage of Hassendean Parish from the late 12th century until the Reformation. They also held extensive pieces of land throughout the Borders, including a large chunk of Ettrick (according to a charter of around 1235) and Ringwood, an area in southern Cavers Parish, as first recorded in 1360. Their lands were erected into a free regality in 1358. Around the same time there was confirmation of the Abbey’s right to the annual rents from the sheriff courts and justice courts of Roxburghshire. Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Bailie of their lands in 1519, confirmed in 1524/5; this included ‘Melrosland, Ettrikheid, Rodonaland, Eskdalmuir, Ringwoodfield, Est Tevidall and Vggynis’. The Abbey was frequently damaged during Border skirmishes, being burned in 1322, when Abbot Peebles was slain by Edward II’s men. Robert the Bruce gave a huge sum for its rebuilding. Lands gifted to the Abbey about that time included some in the Borthwick valley. Burned again in 1385, it was rebuilt in the 15th century, and burned again in 1545. Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme apparently dismantled much of it in 1569 (according to a court case of 1573), claiming he had carried off the materials to save them from the English. The abbey was finally destroyed in the Reformation, and the lands were administered by a Commendator. After many changes of hands the lands (including the Kirks of Hassendean and Cavers) were formally resigned in 1609, becoming part of the Lordship of Melrose. The parish kirk was constructed over the nave of the Abbey in 1619, and later they passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch. Records of the Regality of Melrose, pertaining to the former Abbey’s lands preserve some important local information. The Abbey was built in red sandstone, including fine tracery, with much intricate carving surviving. It was extensively restored in 1822, at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch, under the supervision of Sir Walter Scott. Alexander II is buried here, as well as allegedly the heart of Robert the Bruce, after being carried back from the Crusades. More local connections include that St. Cuthbert is said to have started his career at Melrose Abbey, George Fairneylaw, a messenger from the Abbey is meant to have been killed by Roger Langlands at Stirches in 1493 (possibly true, although Fairneylaw was a cleric of the Diocese of Glasgow), and the monks are supposed to have first built the shelter at Mossopaul (although there is no evidence to support this, but they did own land in the neighbourhood). The abbey is now open to the public, as well as the adjacent Commendator’s House – ‘Deserted Melrose! oft with holy dread I trace thy ruins mouldering o’er the dead; While, as the fragments fall, wild fancy hears The solemn steps of old departed years’ [JL].

Melroselands (mel-rózlawndz) n. lands held by Melrose Abbey in the 15th and 16th centuries. It is unclear exactly the extent of these lands, and whether they always meant the same thing. Along with Ettrick, Rodonaland, Eskdalemuir, Ringwoodfield and East Teviotdale, they formed a set of lands to which Sir David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert were appointed as bailies in 1484. Gilbert Leighton and Robert Cairncross were recorded as tenants in 1493. The appointment was hereditary, with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch was appointed to the same office in 1519, Sir Walter succeeding his grandfather in 1564 and the next Sir Walter succeeding his father in 1574 (it is ‘Mellroselands’ in 1519, ‘Melrosland’ in 1524 and ‘Melrosland’ in 1553/4).

Melrose’s (mel-ró-zeez) n. local engineering firm, founded in 1815 as James Melrose & Sons, starting in Brougham Place and moving to Slitrig Crescent. They supplied many of the local textile mills, e.g. the new pit wheel for Wilton Mills in 1829, the first steam engine built in Hawick, for Langlands Mill in 1831, and the first ‘piecing machine’ in Hawick in 1844. They furnished the mills at the Glebe, Riversdale and Teviotdale. They also occupied the Teviotside Foundry on the east side of Commercial Road from the late 19th century. At their height the company was supplying factories from the England Midlands to far north of Scotland. The National Archives of Scotland have papers dating from 1867, while the Scottish Borders Archive has some engineering plans from about 1863–1910.

Melrose’s (mel-ró-zeez) n. butcher’s shop also run as a hostelry by Mrs. Melrose in the early 19th century. It was located at the eastern side of the Tower.

Melrosian (me-róz-ee-in) n. someone from Melrose, also the name of the principal of the Melrose festival.
Melt (mel-tith) n., arch. the spawn of a male fish, milt.

Melith (mel’)* n., arch.* the milt, male reproductive gland of a fish, arch., poet. a meal, food, sustenance – ‘Thaye sall fa’ bie the sword; thay sall be ane meltheth for the tods’ [HSR], ‘... an’ that was ay when ye gaed him a gude melth – a nicht’s ludgin’ an’ a pickle meal away wi’ him in the mornin’’ [BCM1880].

Melville (mel-vil) n. David (1660–1728) 3rd son of George, Earl of Melville. He became 3rd Earl of Leven in 1681. He came over to Scotland with the army of William of Orange in 1688. Along with his father, he helped deal with the affairs in Scotland for Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch, who was half-sister of his mother. There are several letters in existence from her to him in the period 1696–1702. Holding several high offices, he was appointed a Commissioner for the Union in 1706, was a Representative Peer 1707–10, but dismissed from all offices in 1712. George (1636–1707) 4th Lord and 1st Earl of Melville. He was an advisor of the young Duchess of Buccleuch, taking care of her affairs in Scotland. Accused in the ‘Rye House Plot’ of 1683, he fled to Holland. He returned to Scotland after the Revolution and became Secretary of State for Scotland. He and his son continued to deal with the estates of the Duchess, but after her return to Scotland in 1701 she started to suspect that they had worked in their own interest, and the legal disputes took until 1711 to resolve. He is portrayed as Henry Morton in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Old Mortality’. He married Catherine, only daughter of Lady Margaret Leslie and her 1st husband, Lord Balgonie; she was a step-sister of the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son David, who was also Earl of Leven. James of Halhill (d.bef. 1714) son of Sir James of Halhill and Burntisland. His great-grandfather, also Sir James, was author of the ‘Memoirs of His Own Life’. In 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. He succeeded by his son David, who was also Earl of Leven. John (17th C.) from the Mearns, he graduated from Aberdeen in 1667. He became minister at Ewes Kirk in about 1682. However, he was deprived in 1689 for refusing to give up Episcopalianism.

Mem (mem) n., arch. ma’am, madam – ‘I dinna ken how much whisky they took, mem, but they’ve drucken sax gang o’ watter!’ [V&M], ‘Deed, then, mem’, said she, ‘I wone hire with that condition; for I wadna gie the crack i’ the kirkyaird after, for a’ the rest o’ the service’ [Wis].

Members of Parliament (mem-burz-o-pair-li-min’) n. Members of Parliament, elected by voters in a constituency to represent them in the House of Commons. This system grew out of conventions of the minor barons, which started about the 15th century, but without specifically representing a region. From the 16th century counties had representatives to the Scottish Parliament, called Commissioners; there were 2 of these at a time throughout the 17th century, with an additional 2 appointed in 1690, and the last term being 1702–07. The families of Douglas of Cavers, Pringle of Stichell, Eliott of Stobs, Elliot of Minto, McDougall of Makerstoun, Scott of Langshaw, Ker of Greenhead, Scott of Ancrum, Riddell of that Ilk, Bennet of Grubet, Scott of Woll, Scott of Gala and Elliot of Headshaw all represented the county. A surviving document of 1628 describes how the Sheriff was unable to get anyone to agree to be a Commissioner, even after 4 meetings! For the Parliament of 1621 the Commissioners were the Sheriff himself (Sir William Douglas of Cavers) and (Andrew) Riddell of that Ilk, while for the 1633 Parliament it was again the Sheriff and (perhaps Walter) Riddell of that Ilk. The appointment of Commissioners to the Parliametns of Charles and William during the chaotic 17th centuries is hard to track, and it may be that men were appointed in place of others (hence the list below may not be accurate in this period). The first Westminster Member of Parliament for Roxburghshire was in 1708. Before 1832 there were very few local electors, for example the number in Hawick was only 2 or 3 out of the 143 voters in the county of Roxburghshire in 1812. Hawick people were extremely active in pushing for electoral reform and the extension of political franchise. After the 1868 Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, a new constituency, the Hawick (or Border) Burghs was set up, including the boundaries of Hawick, Galashiels and Selkirk. Hawick’s M.P. was thus separate from that of Roxburghshire until this seat was dissolved in 1918. The constituency was called ‘Roxburgh & Selkirk’ 1918–55, then merged into ‘Roxburgh, Selkirk & Peebles’ 1955–83, became ‘Roxburgh and Berwickshire’ 1983–2005 and is now Berwickshire, Roxburgh & Selkirk. A list of Hawick’s M.P.s. is: Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun 1597; Sir John Ker of Hirsel 1605, 1607; Sir William Cranston 1608; Sir William Douglas of Cavers 1612, 1617, 1621, 1628–33, 1639–40, 1644, 1645–46, 1650; Andrew Riddell of that Ilk 1617, memorial (me-mö-rul) n., poet. a memorial – ‘... an’ thy memorall, O Lord, throweowt a’ ganæratians’ [HSR].

The Memory Bank (thu-me-mu-re-bawngk) n. the Scottish Borders’ Memory Bank was set up as a Millennium project to collect and record memories of life in the Borders, started in 1998 and co-ordinated by Wendy Ball. Several Hawick citizens have been taped and transcribed.

menage (nu-naj) n., arch. a benefit club of neighbours or workers, particularly a scheme, generally among women in the 19th and early 20th centuries, where those joining paid a fixed amount every week (plus perhaps a small commission going to the treasurer for managing the fund) for 20 weeks and a draw was made to distribute the total each week. In the late 1800s the contribution might be 1 shilling, with the £1 total given out randomly each week. The practice may still be carried out in mills today, with larger sums involved, and sometimes individuals arranging to be near the beginning or end of the draw – ‘...joining a ‘menage’ was as stupid a thing as going to the pawnbroker ... ’ [JTu] (from French; noted by E.C. Smith, but already a thing of the past by then; cf. teedly).

mend (mend) v., arch. to fully recover from an illness or injury (different meaning from standard English; noted by E.C. Smith; see also mends).

mender (men-dur) n. a person who makes minor repairs to the stitching of garments in the knitwear industry after being found by a ‘looker’. Good practitioners of this art are ‘invisible menders’.

mendit (men-dee, -di’) pp. mended – ‘The hurlie at ei mendeet the trams o’ [ECS].

mends (mendz) n., pl., arch. recovery, healing – ‘On the way o mends = to be convalescent; progressing towards recovery of health’ [ECS] (cf. mend).

meng (meng) v. to smell, stink, pong, arch. to mix among filth, n. a smell, stink, n., arch. human excrement (also ming).

meng (meng) v., arch. to mix things among filth. Menie (me-nee) n. diminutive of the name ‘Williamina’ – ‘O where is tinye Hewe? O where is little Lenne? And where is bonny Lu? And Menie o’ the glenne?’ [JTe].

menna see menni
mennent (men-en) n., arch. a minnow – ‘Christopher North’ uses baggie-mennon, an approximate combination of two Hawick terms. Ramsay has mennis’ [ECS] (also written ‘mennant’ and ‘mennet’).

menni (me-ni, -na, -nu) contr. mustn’t, must not, may not – ‘ee menni dae’d’, ‘Yow yins that’s keinda perjink menna be uggeet at iz for aa this’ [ECS], ‘An’ wei menna forget that in the vast majority o’ the tenements in the toon the kitchen had tae ser’ as the bedroom as weel’ [BW1938] (also written ‘menna’; cf. mauni).

men’s baa (menz-baw) n., arch. handball game formerly played in Hawick on the Monday preceding the game in Jedburgh (held on ‘Eastern’s-E’en’, i.e. Shrove Tuesday, or the day before Lent). It was distinguished from the ‘callants’ baa’, which was played on the preceding Saturday.

mense (mens) n., arch., poet. manners, decorum, respectability, honour, dignity, hospitality – ‘You now will see an altered chield, Wi’ sense, and mense, and wisdom filled’ [JoHa], ‘That wumman hes naether sense nor mense’ [ECS], ‘Never heed! oo’ll heh baith oor meat an oor mense (said when a cordial invitation has been declined)’ [ECS], ‘For she had baked a crumpie cake And butter scones, for mense’s sake, To entertain her lodger’ [HSR], ‘Then, licking my chops, I thought that the Auld Testament had muckle mense mense to oor dull heids send’ [WL], credit, sense of pride – ‘For Bossels hes muckle mense o er Green’ [ECS], ‘Her family hae muckle mense o her’ [GW], someone who is a credit, respect – ‘She’s the mense o the family’ [GW], ‘Hei’s a gleg callant; ee heh muckle mense o um’ [ECS], recompense – ‘...And a’ the prayers the poor fool pray’d, I wish I had a mense for my ain three ky. Fala, &c.’ [CPM].

mensefi (mens-fi) adj., arch. mannerly, hospitable, generous, sensible – ‘We mourn the loss o’ mensefu’ John; Yet greet in vain since he is gone: A blyther lad ne’er buir a drone ...’ [CPM], ‘When we went to tea, we got something before to make us ‘menseful’ – i.e., moderate in what we partook of’ [RJR], ‘But mind ye, she maun be mensefu o’ the meal when she makes the parritch’ [JEDM], ‘A was verrih mensiefi at tci-time: A duist tuik yeh cup’ [ECS], ‘A’d lippent on o that wanchancy motor as the maist mensiefi way o wumin thre Jethart ti Haaick’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘mensefu’, etc.).

menseless (mens-lis) adj., arch. unman-nerly, ill-bred, boorish – ‘A duist hyit jaigrin things, an that menseless road-injin fair garrd mei girl!’ [ECS], indecent, improper.

Menslaws (mens-lawz, -les) n. farm just north of Spittal-on-Rule, near where the Rule Water joins the Teviot. There was once a quarry there, which supplied stone to Hawick, among other place. It may be the ‘menskles’ where Gilbert Law had grain stolen by Adam Grahamslaw, according to a case of 1502. It is probably the ‘Mensles’ listed among the lands of the Stobs estate purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. In 1623 the lands were granted to the Kers of Cavers-Carre and later the farm at ‘Menseless Pathhead’ was part of the Cavers estate. It was among lands owned by Sir Thomas Ker in 1643, valued at £357. It was among lands inherited by John, son of John Kerr of West Nisbet in 1684. William Brown was there in 1687. Also in 1687 5 acres of land there were listed among lands inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers and by his brother Archibald in 1698. James Riddell was recorded there in 1745. Before 1786 the farm was owned by William Black, his lands being stated in 1788 to have been valued at £263 16s 3d, including the 2 husbandlands at the ‘waulk-mill’. The farm then passed to the Bells; William Bell had a new house built there about this time and was recorded as owner of 5 horses there in 1797. William Bell and his son George were there in 1799. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was recorded being owned by Robert Bell, and valued at £264. Land steward Mark Turnbull was there in 1851. In 1860, a year after the death of George Bell, it was sold to Thomas Cockburn, then owned briefly by a Mr. Turnbull, before being bought by Robert Cunningham, Chamberlain to the Duke of Bucleuch. Thomas Riddell was there in the 1860s. The tenants of the house in the early 20th century were 2 sisters called Peter. There was once a quarry there, supplying stone for buildings in Hawick and Jedburgh. A burial cist was found there, north of the farm, at the edge of the Teviot flood plain; 2 Hawick boys discovered it in 1960, James Wallace and Michael Turnbull, and it was excavated by the Archaeological Society the following year, revealing an adult and juvenile skeleton and triangular flint point. The remains are in the Museum (sometimes ‘Mainslaws’, the name is probably from the Old English ‘gemanes leah’, meaning ‘common property’, or possibly ‘menseless’, meaning untidy or uncleared land; it first appears transcribed as ‘menskles’ in 1502, then is ‘Mensles’ in 1516 and 1571, with ‘Menslawis’ soon after, although it is still ‘Mensles’ in 1623, ‘Melsis’ in 1643, ‘Melsie’ and ‘Menseless’ in 1678, ‘Melsie’ in 1687 and 1698, ‘Mensless’ in 1761 and 1797 and ‘Mainslaws or Mensless’ in 1811; Sir James Murray refers to it as ‘Menzies Laws’ in 1811; Sir James Murray refers to it as ‘Menzies Laws’ in 1888; it is ‘Menssles’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and incorrectly appears as ‘Mansles’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

men-sworn (men-swörn) pp., adj., arch. forsworn, perjured – ‘...and calling the council’s officers men-sworn lowns, was fined £10 Scots’[BR1657].

mentionat (men-shin-a’) pp., arch. mentioned, referred to – ‘...as if ther wer ane particular paper granted by us and ilk ane of us to the effect above mentionat’[BR1692], ‘...to prove that the said Andrew came down the Bedell’s stair att the above mentionat silent hours of ye night’[PR1718], ‘...the said William Whaton, riding in ye manner above mentionat’[PR1718].

mer (mer) v., arch. to mar, injure, to stay the course of (a ball, hoop etc. that has gotten out of control), to stop or block the way (of sheep or cattle) – ‘Beide yow there an merr thir paips soomin doon the guitter’[ECS], ‘Eee sood heh merrd the bool; it’s rowld owre fer’[ECS], to steer a ‘yoke-a-tulie’ with the feet – ‘A gaird maun be gey skeely at merrin’[GW], ‘Sic a byordnar grand bit for a sledge-skly or a yoke-a-tullie! By!! The gaird wad need ti bei richt an skeely at the merrheen’[ECS] (also written ‘merr’; from Mediæval English).

mer-browed (mer-browd) adj., arch. having eye-brows that meet in the middle – ‘...he had only got as far as the old toll-house when he observed a mer-browed man coming in his direction’[RM].

merc (mer-ki’, mer-ka’) n. market, historically Hawick’s main markets were held on Thursdays – ‘the mercat’s now on Seturdis’, ‘Item, that all flescheris present the hale flesh slaine by them at the mercat place ’[BR1640], ‘...and having caused proclaim her several tymes ...at the mercat crosse of Hawicke in time of mercat day’[BR1641], ‘...rin the mercat gairden and dairy at Cavers’[IWL], ‘...Better, daur-say, Brocht, factory-fresh (sei telly) til eer hame, twae hunder miles, than frae some mercat-krame ...’ [DH]. In the 18th century Hawick had a flesh-market, butter-market, meal-market, salt-market and horse-market. The Thursday market took place in the lower part of the Town House, with all sorts of farm produce sold. In general the market area was around the Cross until the late 18th century, with 80–120 stalls extending along the High Street, selling everything from housewares and food to meat and coal. The sheep market was recorded being at the Sandbed in 1700. The general market moved to the Sandbed for a few decades, and shifted to the Tower Knowe in 1815 with the construction of the New Road. It was stated in 1839 that the number of carts coming to the town for a market day was about 170. The cattle market (and hiring fair), a right of the Duke of Buccleuch, took place in early November until the end of the 19th century. The Auction Mart, at what is now Mart Street, dominated the sale of livestock through the late 19th and much of the 20th centuries. In the 20th century the Saturday market was held near the Auction Mart and is now in the Big Haugh – ‘To fair or merket she walked alane, At best, the lasie was unco plain’[WL] (also spelled ‘merket’, etc.; cf. mairket, mairt and mert).

the Mercat Cross (thun-mer-ki’-kros) n. Market Cross, denoting the place at which markets were held, formerly the site of Hawick’s cross. It was also sometimes referred to as the ‘flesh-market cross’. In Hawick this was near the Town Hall, at the junction of the roads to Edinburgh, Jedburgh, Newcastle and Carlisle. It is referred to in 1514 as ‘crucem foralem’ when part of the ceremony for giving Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig the Barony of Hawick was carried out there. It was extant in 1542, when a proclamation was read from it, and presumably there earlier. In 1545 it is among the market crosses to which a proclamation about Sir Walter Scott of Branc holme was to be attached. There is a record in 1715 (when it is referred to as the ‘common mercat crosse’) that it was to be repaired and several other records of it being mended from about 1724 on. During the 18th century it is recorded that a proclamation was made there on the day of the Common Riding, describing what parts of the Common were to be used for cutting peats and for making ‘bakes’, etc. It was demolished in 1762 during road improvements, the shaft and capital apparently being sold off for 11/6. The removal took 2 labourers 2 full days. The base of the Cross was inverted, sunk into the pavement nearby, had an iron ring attached, and until about 1781 was used for bull-baiting and for displaying criminals as a public spectacle. It was then removed to near the Teviot, where it was used for tying skins to be washed in the river. The stone was rescued when Teviot Road was
the Mercat Gait

The Mercat Gait was built in about 1860 and moved to the Museum at Orrock Place and later to the Buccleuch Memorial. William N. Kennedy wrote an article on the Cross in 1863, stating that the base was made of Whitrope Burn sandstone. In 1927 the Cross was reconstructed beside the Museum, using a modern shaft and a capital (perhaps 17th century, probably the one discovered at Abbey Sike in Castleton). However, the capital was moved inside after the Cross was vandalised in 1985. A plaque (placed around 1946) marks its original position near the bottom of the Cross Wynd, which was named for it. Here also the proclamation to the Burgess is made by the Burgh Officer, warning them all to attend the Riding of the Marches or pay a hefty fine. For centuries this advertisement for the Common Riding has been called out on the Thursday here. In former times the Burgess Roll was also called here on the Friday before the Riding of the Marches. Other notices would be fixed to the Cross in former times, e.g. lists of those accused of being Covenanters in the late 17th century, and the ‘Chevalier’ was proclaimed here in 1715. Thieves were sometimes made to stand at the cross on market day, with their crime written on a piece of paper stuck to their forehead. This punishment continued into the early 19th century. In addition the town stocks were once located next to the Cross. Some Border towns still have market crosses, e.g. Cockburnspath, Coldham, Duns, Galashiels, Greenlaw, Jedburgh, Langholm, Melrose, Peebles and Selkirk, although many are relatively modern replacements of the original – ‘...ordainit her to lie 48 hours in the stockes, and thrafter to come to the mercat crosse of Hawick upon the mercat-day, and to stand thereupon with the peittis upon her shoulder, with an paper upon her breaste or forehead declaring the fault’ [BR1638], ‘...the said Adam Gowanlock broucht the said meir to the mercat-crose of Hawick the said day to be apprised ...’ [BR1641], ‘...in respect it was publickly done at the mercatt cross, in presence and in the hearing of divers famous witnesses’ [BR1685] (note that Market Crosses were rarely ‘cross-shaped’, usually consisting of a shaft crowned with a carved emblem as capital; it is unclear what was carved on the capital of Hawick’s original Cross).

The Mercat Gait (thu-mer-ki’-gā’) n. former name for a road in Ashkirk. It is recorded in 1580 that it was on the west and north sides of Wollhaugh.

Mercat Place (mer-ki’-plis) n. Market Place, name used for a while in the 19th century for an area including Tower Knowe and Drumlanrig Bridge over the Slitrig, which was used as a market place. It is so labelled on Wood’s 1824 map and also used in Slater’s 1852 directory.

Mercer (mer-sur) n. Janet nee Reid (b.1799/1800) from Hawick, she was a wool sorter living at about 7 Allars Bank in 1841. She listed as a coffee-house keeper on the Cross Wynd in 1851, living with her grandchild Mary E., as well as 5 lodgers and a female servant. She may be the Jane who had worked as a servant with the Halliburton family in the West End, contracting cholera in 1832, but recovering. Robert, W.S. (1797–1875) lawyer in Edinburgh. He was son of James of Scotsbank. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and so presumably had a local connection. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Scott-Moncrieff.

Merch (merch) v., arch. to set a boundary, particularly by laying down markers – ‘The said day, Allane Deanes, travellour, being accusit for not being at the ryding and merching of the Com-moune ...’ [BR1645].

Merch (merch) n., v. march – ‘Oh the grand auld Duke o York, hei hed ten thousand men, hei merched thum up ti the top o the hill, an ’ei merched them doon agin’ [T], ‘It depends on what direction they hev ti turn when they come oot the toon hali ti merch ti the new Cornet-Elect’s hoose’ [We], ‘Hogg was sid ti hev been paart o the Hawick contingent thi merchit selkirk that fatefi day in 1815 ...’ [IHS] (cf. mairch).

Merchiston see Merchiston

Merchand (mer-chiind) n., arch. a merchant, shopkeeper, trader, itinerant salesman – ‘Item, that ilk merchand that buys cuntrie gier with trone wecht, sall sell it agin in small with the lyik wecht ...’ [BR1640], ‘The haill council hav-ing taken into their consideration the wrong and abuse committed by the merchands and others of the burgh of Hawick ...’ [BR1662], ‘...for cut-ting of William Elliot, merchand, with ane sword in ye head’ [BR1669], ‘...and voted Thomas Hardie, merchand, to be ensigne and to carry the colour’ [BR1706], ‘...John Young, merchand in the town for his disorderlie and irregular mar-rriage ...’ [BR1706].

Merchant (mer-chin) n. formerly a shopkeeper and member of the merchants’ incorporation in the Town, now used as a suffix to denote someone who is overly fond of a particular activity – ‘hei’s a right patter-merchant that yin’.
Merchant (mer-chin’) n. nickname for William Oliver in the 16th century.

merchants (mer-chints) n. the shopkeepers and traders of Hawick collectively. They were not one of the 7 ‘incorporated trades’ in the Burgh, but must have had some kind of status as a body. In 1687 the ‘Incorporation of Merchants’ bought ‘ane Holland brasen trone’ (i.e. brass weight) to be used as a new standard in Hawick, and also arranged for ‘ane elwand’ (i.e. measuring rod) made of iron to be made the same length as the standard one in Jedburgh.

Merchelyton Burn ( merch-li-tin-burn) n. stream that rises on Harden Moss and flows roughly southwards past the farm of Mabonlaw to join the Harden Burn south of Harden Glen. Part of it is labelled White Cleugh on the Ordnance Survey maps (the name suggests it marked a boundary at one time; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Merchinburn ( thu-mer-chin-burn) n. Merchingburn, former name for a stream in Liddesdale, where it is recorded that Walter de Bolbeck established a hermitage dedicated to St. Mary to pray for the souls of him and his wife Sybilla. This was probably the original Hermitage Chapel, which led to the stream being later known as the Hermitage Water. The hermit was called William ‘de Mercheleye’, and the date is unknown, but must have been before 1206. The second monk from Kelso was called Roger, and he was granted land beside ‘Heleychesters’ (probably in Temple Healey) some time before 1229 (the name suggests a boundary between properties, but it is unknown what these may have been; the name does not appear on any map, and was completely superseded by ‘Hermitage’).

Merchinlee (mer-chin-lee) n. former name for lands on the Hermitage Water. William ‘de Mercheleye’ was granted a hermitage there by Walter de Bolbeck some time before 1206, probably being the original Hermitage Chapel. It was set up for 2 monks from Kelso Abbey, the other being ‘Roger monk of Merchingley’ who was later granted 26 acres of land beside Heleychesters (probably in Temple Healey) by Hugh de Baliol, some time before 1229. The lands are described as ‘from the Merchingburn on the one side, by a circuit from the Tile Ford on to the Ford where the Stanesden Burn (possibly the Roughley Burn) descends to the Merchingburn’ (also written ‘Merchelea’).

Merchiston (mer-chi-, -chum-stin) n. James (d.c.1527) recorded as Rector of Hawick in 1504. 2 years earlier he is recorded receiving payment from the court of James IV for a young horse brought by him from Flanders. He was listed as a Chaplain of Glasgow Diocese in 1505, although the parish is not named. He also appears to have received more senior appointments in the Diocese in 1511. In 1512 he was designated Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine and lived on Edinburgh High Street, so probably ceased to be associated with Hawick before then. Also in 1512 he was one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts. His name appears in various Edinburgh deeds in the period 1512–18 (also written ‘Merchantston’, ‘Merchainston’, etc.).

mercifi (mer-see-fi) adj., arch. merciful, temperate (of weather) – ‘The weather on the Friday had been mercifeh bit a damp Seterday hed cut the attendance at the Sports’ [BW1974] (also written ‘mercifeh’).

mercy (mer-see) interj. goodness, dear – ‘mercy mei’, ‘…Cried, ‘Mercy ends, the deevils i’ the folk’’ [JoHa], ‘O mercy! come doon, and ye’ll see it yersel’ – O but its an awesome-like bodie’ [JoHa], ‘The lasses, eh mercy, A’ cannae stert now …’[??], ‘Mercy, here’s a caperin’ Irishman. This is no’ the man for mei any-way’ [JEDM].

mere (meer) n., arch. a mare, female horse – ‘…either in his nichbour’s corn, meadow, or haynut gers, sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings …’ [BR1640], ‘Weel, sin’ that time the sheep has been to sheer, And he’s been east to buy the laird a meer’ [CPM], ‘The outlaws come frae Liddesdale, They herry Redesdale far and near; The rich man’s gelding it maun gang, They canna pass the puir man’s mear’’ [T], ‘Or how Rattlin’ Rab the Ranter And Deans mere … ’’[RH], ‘…Aw heard a puir auld grey meer Gi’e mony a heavy groan’’ [JSB], ‘John Paiterson’s meir, She canna be here’ [JP] (also spelled ‘mear’, ‘meer’ and ‘meir’).

merginstie (mer-gin-stee) interj., arch. exclamation of surprise, particularly in the expression ‘Merginst ie!’ (cf. megginstie).

Merianton (me-ree-in-tin) n. Lairdship held by the Armstrongs in the 16th century. It appears to be another name for Mangerton (it is ‘Meriantoun’ and ‘Merjantoun’ in 1541).

meridian (me-ri-dee-in) n., arch. former name for a social mid-day drink, especially among merchants.

meritable (me-ri-ta-bul) adj., arch. worthy of merit – ‘For that yt ys neidfull and merytabelle to ber wytnes to the suthfastnes … ’ [SB1431].

merk (merk) n., arch. an old Scottish silver coin worth thirteen shillings and four pence (two-thirds of a pound) Scots, or about 13 shillings and 1/3 pence sterling – ‘The plantins and pleughed rigs dinkin’ its merlie-merkit braes’ [ECS], ‘A merly sheep, hen, cat, etc.’ [GW] (also spelled ‘merlie’; cf. merit).

merr see mer

merrer (me-rur) n., arch. someone who steers the course of farm animals, the ‘gaird’ in a ‘yoke-a-tullie’ – ‘A guid (or skeely) merrer’ [GW] (cf. mer).

merry dancers (me-ree-dan-surz) n., pl., arch. heat haze, the effects of turbulence in the air on a hot day, described by J. Jamieson as ‘The exhalations from the earth in a warm day, as seen flickering in the atmosphere, Roxb.’.

Merry Knowes (me-ree-nowz) n. hilly area just to the north-east of Whitslade farm, to the south of Whitslade Hill. A local version of the ballad ‘Ewe-buchts’ (or ‘The Broom o’ Cowdenknowes’) states that they are part of Whitslade – ‘Come round about the Merry-Knowes, my Marion, For Whitslade is lying lee’ [T] (also written ‘Merry-Knowes’).

Merrylaw (me-ree-law) n. farm along the road leading south-west from Teviothead, lying close and later sources. He is the most important prototype for Merlin of the Arthurian legends. He is said to have been born at Cærwerthevin (perhaps Carnwarth) and was present at the Battle of Arderudd (probably Arthuret or possibly Ettrick) in 573, where he killed his own nephew, driving him mad and into seclusion in the forests of southern Scotland. He was said to have been buried at Drumelzier in Tweeddale. Geoffrey of Monmouth around 1150 wrote about his supposed life and prophecies. John Leyden included notes on him in ‘Scenes of Infancy’ – ‘Such strains the harp of haunted Merlin threw, When from his dreams the mountain-sprites withdrew’ [JL].

Merlin Dean (mer-lin-deen) n. wooded stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Black Law in Bedrule Parish, joining the Greypeel Burn and eventually flowing into the Jed Water.

Merlin’s Cleuch (mer-linz-klooch) n. probable name of a small stream on Penchrise farm (mentioned in Robert Grieve’s diary in 1861).

merl (me-ru’l, -rult) adj., arch. mottled, mixed up in colour (also merled and merly).

merly (mer-lee) adj., arch. mottled, parti-coloured – ‘The clouds in the atmosphere, seen flickering in the atmosphere, as seen by J. Jamieson as ‘The exhalations from the earth in a warm day, as seen flickering in the atmosphere, Roxb.’.

merket see mercat

merkit (mer-kkee’, -ki’) adj., pp. marked – ‘A cood wale oot Rule Waeter’s coorse feine, – merkeet wui raws o raws o treis’ [ECS], ‘Says I tae um was this man ony way merkeet so as tae be recognised’ [JEDM] (also written ‘merkeet’).

merkland (merk-lawnd) n., arch. a piece of land originally assessed at one mark value (common in pre-18th century land documents).

merle (me-ru’l) n., poet. the blackbird, Turdus merula – ‘Where the merle from his liquid throat Can melodize the dean’ [JTe], ‘And the merl is i’ the wud, And the lav’rock’s i’ the chul’ [JTe], ‘…And over future prospects talk, And hear the merle cry’ [JoHa], ‘I have seen the merle, when we robbed her nest, Haunting the hazel in hopeless quest …’ [WHO], ‘The soun’ o’ her mirth is the merle’s clear singin’, Bewitchin’, the saft smiles that dimple her mou’ [WL] (also written ‘merlit’).

merled (me-rul’d) adj., arch. mottled, parti-coloured (also merit).
The name is obscure, but probably connected with ‘Mirrilaw’ in 1749; the origin of the first part of the name could be Middle English ‘mirrie’ for merry, but may have another origin in common with Merrylaw and Merrypath Rig, while the second element is Middle English ‘nese’, being a projecting nose of land).

Merrypath Rig (mee-ree-pawth-rig) n. ridge between Merrylaw and Ewes Doors, the summit reaching a height of 382 m. There is a linear earthwork, about 150 m long, which is crossed by the course of the old road from Eweslees to Cavers (it is marked ‘Meddop petth’ in Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is probably ‘Murynese’ and ‘Murinese’). ‘Muryneis’ in 1511, ‘Murynes’ in 1514, ‘Merynes’ in 1562, ‘Muryneis’ in 1572, ‘Mirrienies’ in 1615, ‘Mirrinies’ in 1627, ‘Mirrienies’ in 1686 and ‘Merrynees’ about 1760; the first element of the name could be Middle English ‘mirrie’ for merry, but may have another origin in common with Merrylaw and Merrypath Rig.

the Merse (thu-mers) n. Eastern Border country, generally corresponding to Berwickshire, or a slightly larger area including the entire plain of the Tweed. It is usually synonymous with the Scottish East March – ‘A Merse mist alang the Tweed, In a harvest monrnin’s guid indeed’ [T], ‘Roxburgh huddles her shattered shell In the folds of her mossy plaid; Gazing at ease o’er the meadowed Merse, Hume towers, in her green arrayed’ [WL].

marshal (mer-shul) n., v. marshal. At the Common Riding the Marshals are experienced riders appointed to check that the road is clear for the Chase, ensure the safety of the riders on Ride-outs, etc.

Mershall (mer-shul) n. (Marshall) Alfred (19th C.) married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Murray and Mary Scott. His wife was younger sister of Sir James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. Their children included Mary Isa (d.1961), who died in Melrose. Alistair (?)-Common Riding Committee Secretary in the mid-1960s, who left town afterwards. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was mentioned in the Wilton Mershall’s

Session records in 1705. He was recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in Wilton in 1709 when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, tailor there. In 1725 he was living at ‘boathouse’, suggesting that he ran the coble ferry. He married Agnes Scott in 1703 and their children included: Janet (b.1718); Agnes (b.1720); Thomas (b.1722); and Anne (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were John Murray and John Scott. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Silverbuthall in 1711 when his son William was baptised, their surname being written ‘Mersil’. He was also ‘Mercel’ at Silverbuthall in 1710 when his daughter Helen was baptised. He was recorded as resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Silverbuthall in 1711 when his son William was baptised, their surname being written ‘Mersil’. He was also ‘Mercel’ at Silverbuthall in 1710 when his daughter Helen was baptised. He could be the same Andrew who was at Mervinslaw in 1709. Isobel (b.1704) and Bessy (b.1708) were probably also his children. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son Alexander died in Hawick in 1778. He could be the James who married Margaret Murray in 1774 and whose children included Katherine (b.1775), John (b.1782) and Alexander (b.1785). Jason (1707–) Hawick man who started working for the Hawick News in 1866, later working for the Tweeddale Press. He became Editor of the Hawick News in 2007. John (d.1815) recorded as father of Mary and Jean when his death is recorded in Hawick in 1815. John (b.1782/3) tobacco manufacturer in Hawick, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived at about 20 High Street in 1841 and 1851. He was unmarried and lived with his sister Catherine. John (1801–74) head of the local builders firm John Marshall & Sons, which was responsible for several prominent buildings. They built the new Teviot Bridge in 1865 and the factory for Lyle & Scott in 1874/5. John (19th/20th C.) assistant Burgh Surveyor in Hawick, working under John Manuel. In 1894 he was appointed District Surveyor for Norfolk District Council and presented with a gold watch-chain and cuff-links by the Town Council on his departure. Katie (19th C.) proprietor of a tobaccoist’s shop at 20 High Street in the mid-19th century, which gave its name to the adjacent close. She lived in the property along with her brother James. Mary Isabella G. ‘Isa’ (1880/1–1961) daughter of Alfred and Margaret Murray. Her mother was a sister of James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. She was a teacher at Drumlanrig School for about 25 years. She was also a keen member of the Hawick Liberal Association. She was the oldest member of the Archaeological Society at the time of her death. She lived at 6 Elm Grove. She died in hospital at Melrose. Robert (18th/19th C.) servant at Pinnacle recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (b.1826/7) from Scone in Perthshire, he was a builder in Hawick, with the firm Marshall & Ballantyne. They were responsible for the renovations to St. Mary’s Kirk in 1863. He donated an old coin he found there to the Museum. In 1861 he was living at Ladylaw Place with his wife Ann and children John, Robert, Frances Elizabeth Ann, James Young and Jessie Young. Stuart (1963/4–) born and bred in Hawick he became a local Councillor and was Honorary Provost 2013–17. He has also been involved with Escape Youth Cafe, the Hawick Flood Group and many other local organisations. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Rid dell. In 1621 James Scott, indweller in Selkirk, was summoned to appear before the Lords of Council and Session for stealing his horse. William (18th C.) from Wilton Parish, he was living at Boonraw in 1742 and 1744. In 1738 he married Jean Wright, who was also from Wilton. Their children included: Christian (b.1740); Andrew (b.1742); Agnes (b.1744); Christian (again, b.1746); George (b.1752); and Jean (b.1755). The witnesses in 1742 were Walter Scott and James Allan and in 1744 were James and Walter Scott. William (19th C.) partner with John in the local builders firm. He was probably John’s son. He made donations to the Museum in the 1860s (also formerly ‘Mersal’, ‘Mercel’, ‘Merchel’, ‘Mershall’, ‘Mersall’, ‘Mersel’, ‘Mersell’ and ‘Mershel’).

Mershall’s (mier-shulz) n. John Marshall & Sons, a large local building firm, significant in the latter part of the 19th and early part of the 20th centuries. They were responsible for the Teviot Bridge (1865), Henry Scott Riddell Memorial (1874), Lyle & Scott’s factory (1874/5), Town Hall (1884–86), and the Brown Fountain (1910). Their yards were on the west side of Commercial Road and before that on Slitrig Crescent. They also had an interest in the Blaxter Quarry in Northumberland.

Mershall’s Close (mier-shulz-klöös) n. Marshall’s Close, a passageway at 20 High Street in the mid-19th century. It was located to the west of the Crown Hotel, between 2 small shops, and named after the tobaccoist’s run by Katie Marshall.

Merten see Mertin
Mertimes (mer-te-nes) n. former version of Mertymas – ‘...for the Witsounday and Mertymes male of the landis of Lempetlaw ...’ [SB1574] (also formerly Mertinmes).

Mertin (mer'-in, mar-tin) n. (Marten or Martin) A. (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Adam (17th C.) one of 3 men fined in 1642 for their animals eating the oats of Gilbert Watt, the Town Clerk. He is probably the same ‘Adam Mairene’ who was one of the men who appraised horses in Hawick for the Coveneranter army in 1644. He could be the Adam who married Margaret Gordon, whose children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1634), Agnes (b.1642), Janet (b.1644) and Helen (b.1647), or the Adam, married to Margaret Weens, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in 1648. Perhaps he is the Adam who (along with Alexander) witnessed a baptism for James. He could be the Adam who witnessed a baptism in 1671 for Margaret (perhaps his daughter) and William Renwick. Adam (17th C.) carrier in Hawick recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Perhaps the same Adam married Anna Henderson in Robertson (actually Hasseendeal) in 1687 and had a daughter Margaret baptised in 1688; the baptismal witnesses were John Martin and Thomas Henderson (who were probably related to him and his wife). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1716 he married Margaret Martin, both being described as ‘servants in Goldielands’. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Clarilaw in 1724 and 1727. In 1737 he witnessed a baptism for James Dryden and for Robert Easton, who both lived at Clarilaw. He married Margaret Crozier and their children included: John (b.1717); Janet (b.1720); Marion (b.1722); James (b.1724); and James (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1724 were Thomas Irvine and William Easton and in 1727 were James Blyth and William Gledstains, merchant ‘Black Walter’ Scott, gardener James Dunn and William Gledstains, workman in Whitlaw, in 1708 for David Young and for John Rae, in 1709 for merchant William Dickson, for baker Adam Richardson and for weaver William Hill, in 1712 for John Chisholme ‘ Laird’, and in 1714 for weaver George Wight. Based on all of this, it seems likely he served as an Elder in the Kirk. The witnesses to his daughter’s baptism in 1704 were Glover John Hart and merchant Thomas Waugh. He was the person who purchased the new Flag in 1707 (now the oldest one in existence) in Edinburgh, at a cost of £10 14s. He was still on the Town Council in 1707 (when a fine was imposed on the 2 acting Bailies). He was an ex-Bailie on the Council when the bond was granted (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed further baptisms for John Ekron in 1715 and 1723, for workman William Inglis and for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1721, for carrier John Tait and for John Fairgrieve in 1726, for merchant Robert Houson in 1730, and for Robert Aitken in 1731. His first wife was Grizel Oliver and their children included: Christian (b.1701); George (b.1702); Bessie (b.1704); Anna (b.1706); Helen (b.1708); Janet (b.1709); Thomas (b.1712); and Jean (b.1714). The witnesses in 1701 were Glover John Hart and Bailie Walter Graham, in 1702 were Bailie Patrick Richardson and glover Hohn Hart, in 1704 were Glover John Hart and merchant Thomas Waugh, in 1706 were Bailies Walter Graham and Patrick Richardson, in 1708 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Graham, in 1712 were miller Walter Paisley and weaver David Miller, and in 1714 were Bailies...
Mertin Mertin

Walter Elliot and Robert Ruecastle. He married Elizabeth Ker (widow of James Wastoun) in ‘Haddock hole’ Edinburgh in 1719; he was then described as ‘late bailie of Hawick’. He was probably the Bailie Martin who was an elder charged with collecting money from ‘ye Cross upon both sides of ye toun even unto the bridge’ in 1717 (suggesting he lived in this area perhaps) and being one of the elders charged with resolving the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham in 1718. His son Thomas became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1738 and his daughter Jane (possibly born in 1714) married David Greg of Edinburgh in 1743. George (18th C.) teacher at the ‘English school’ in Selkirk in 1744. Helen (17th C.) resident of Midlem. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanters fugitives. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Cowan and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1648. The witnesses were Alexander and Adam. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Bessie White. Their son James was baptised in 1648. James (17th C.) farmer at Branxholme Town in 1671, when there were 7 tenants recorded there. His name does not appear in 1675. There were Jameses born in Hawick Parish in 1634, 1639 and 1647, any of which could be him. He may be the James, married to Rosie Richardson (a family who also farmed at Branxholme Town), whose daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1677, and who may also have been father of Malie, baptised in 1673 (with no mother’s name given, but witnesses John Richardson and Patrick Scoon). James (17th C.) recorded at Appletreehall in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Marion Liddersdale and their children included James (b.1682). The witnesses were Walter Scott and Walter Armstrong. He is probably the James who (along with John) witnessed a baptism for William Macomie in the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish in 1688 and who witnessed a baptism for Adam in 1688. John (17th C.) listed at Crumhaugh among ‘The poor in Hauick Paroch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who was married to Margaret Elliot, and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Charles (b.1675), Helen (b.1682), Walter (b.1685) and Andrew (b.1688). He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1680. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Clarilaw in 1748. He married Margaret Hope (although his name is transcribed ‘How’) in Wilton Parish in 1745. Their children included: Andrew (b.1746); Isabel (b.1748); David (b.1750); John (b.1754); and Janet (b.1756). The witnesses in 1748 were Walter Scott and George Lamb. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel ‘Robison’ and their children included Agnes (b.1791) and Jenny (b.1797). John (18th/19th C.) resident of ‘Burnhills’ recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was in ‘Broomhill’ among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. He was probably son of Walter, who was in Broomhill in 1797. John (19th C.) owner of the farm of Firth in about 1874, according to the Land Tax Rolls. John P. baker who was...
Cornet in 1938. He served as Acting Father to Bruce Mactaggart in 1954. Mactaggart was in turn Acting Father to his son Drew. Margaret (17th C.) resident of ‘Barnknow’. In 1680 she was found guilty of attempting to steal a pair of shoes from a Selkirk stall-owner at Hawick Market. She was sentenced to be ‘punished in her person and goods’. Mrs. ?? (18th/19th C.) recorded at Minto House on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. She was presumably a house-keeper or governess. Robert (16th/17th C.) surety for ‘Hob Cowane in Ailure’ in the Circuit Court records of 1623, along with John Martin (presumably a relative), Simon mure’ in the Circuit Court records of 1623, along (16th/17th C.) surety for ‘Hob Cowane in Ailure’. The witnesses in 1700 were gardener James Falsyde and William Henderson, also at the Flex. He is so recorded in 1700, although his name is listed as ‘Walleam’, which is likely an error. He is probably the Walter whose wife Margaret Scott’s will is recorded in 1687. Their children included Thomas (b.1673) and an unnamed son (b.1675). He may have been father of the later Walter in the Flex (or else he had a second marriage late in life). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in the Flex. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Stoddart (in Flex), along with William Henderson (also in Flex) in 1674. He is probably the Walter whose wife Margaret Scott’s will is recorded in 1687. Their children included Thomas (b.1673) and an unnamed son (b.1675). He may have been father of the later Walter in the Flex (or else he had a second marriage late in life). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in the Flex. He is so recorded in 1700, although his name is listed as ‘Wallean’, which is likely an error. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for wright John Dalgleish in 1700. He married Agnes Nixon and their children included: William (b.1700); Walter (b.1702); and Margaret (b.1705). The witnesses in 1700 were Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw and William Nixon and in 1705 were William and Francis Henderson, smiths at the Flex and Francis Paterson, also at the Flex. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Alton Croft in 1700. He was recorded there as tenant in 1702. His wife was Margaret Glendinning and their children included: Margaret (b.1700); John (b.1702); Esther (b.1704); Helen (b.1707); James (b.1710); and Janet (b.1714). The witnesses in 1700 were gardener James Falsyde and Walter Scott in Goldielands and in 1702 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Walter Riddell in Allanhaugh Mill. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Walter who was at the Flex at the same time (but they were clearly distinct, with their children being baptised on the same day in 1700). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Leyden and their children included: Euphan (b.1777); Samuel (b.1784); and Betty (b.1786). The witnesses were the Associate Congregation. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded at Broomhill in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (15th C.) tenant in Whitchester who is mentioned in 1493. Jock Elliot (from Caverton) had remission for several crimes, including stealing 3 sheep from him. It seems likely that he was related to the later Martins of the area. William ‘Willie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Branksholme in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, or probably the Hassendean parish. He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: Andrew (b.1680); James (b.1682); and Margaret (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were William Young and Thomas Caldwell. In 1683 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Craig. William (17th/18th C.) recorded being ‘servant in Winnimontoun ridge’ in 1719 when he married Margaret Douglas, daughter of a carrier in Hawick. He was in ‘Rige’, i.e. Winnitonrig when his son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. He is probably not the same man as William, resident of Over Southfield. William (17th/18th C.) farm servant at Over Southfield. He was ‘servitor in over Southfield’ in 1713 and recorded still living at Over Southfield in 1720. He was also recorded as servant to John Goodfellow in Over Southfield in 1712 when he married Helen Nichol from Hawick Parish. His wife may have been the daughter of William Nichol and Janet Gray baptised in Hawick in 1688. Their children (also baptised in Hawick) included: Walter (b.1713); John (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); Janet (b.1722); and Robert (b.1723). Janet (b.1714) and William (b.1716) were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1713 were John and William Goodfellow in Over Southfield and in 1720 were Walter Scott and William Goodfellow. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Parkhill in 1722 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish. It is possible this was somehow a second baptism for the daughter of William and Helen Nichol. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean ‘Clemison’. Their unnamed child died in Hawick in 1816 and their daughter Isabella was baptised in 1824. Rev. William Stewart (1793/4–1857) from Crawford in Lanarkshire, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1823. He became minister of Kirkton in 1834, where he remained until his death. He wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account in 1838; it is the shortest of the local entries. He could regularly ride over the hill to take services at Cogsmill Schoolhouse. He lived at the Parish Manse with a servant and never married (early spellings include ‘Maireten’, ‘Mairten’, ‘Mairteen’, ‘Marteine’, ‘Marten’, ‘Martene’, ‘Martine’, ‘Martyn’, ‘Mertin’, ‘Merten’, ‘Mertene’, ‘Merton’, ‘Mertyn’, etc.).

Mertinmas (mer'-in-mis) n. another name for Martinmas – ‘Dedicat til a man (syne deid) wha speired: ‘Hev ee been writin ony hairy poetry, lately?’’ Mertinmas. 1969 [DH] (also formerly Mertines).

Merton’s Brig (mer'-inz-brig) n. Martin’s Bridge, over the Teviot just south of town, marking the beginning of the B711 road to the Borthwick, and named for its proximity to Martin’s House. It was built in 1826, providing a more direct route to the Borthwick valley from Hawick. It is a popular end-point for walks. In the field to the west of here, linear field markings have been seen in aerial photographs, probably old field boundaries or ditches – ‘Doon by mony a knowe and knoll, Branksholme, Martin’s Brig, the Toll, …’ [TK].

Merton’s House (mer'-inz-hoos) n. Martin’s House, a farmhouse near Martin’s Bridge, marking the end of the Goldielands-Langbaulk section of the road south, before the New Road was built in 1815. The farmers recorded there in 1797 were William Scott and John Scott. John Scott was farmer there in 1841 and William Fulton in 1851. The front elevation of the house is towards the hill, since the main road used to pass there – ‘Martin-House’s hint side is now its fore side, and the real auld front is roond aboot at the back’ [V&M] (also written as one word, its origin is uncertain, since no ‘Martin’ is recorded there, so a connection with house-martins has been suggested).

Merton’s Sym (mer'-inz-sim) n. nickname of Simon Elliot of Philhope, son of Martin of Braidlie.

Merton (mer-ton) n. John (13th/14th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1395. He exchanged this position with Gilbert Mousewald before 1404. He is referred to as ‘de Merton’. 2060
Mertoun (mer-toon) n. parish in the south-west part of Berwickshire, divided by the Tweed from Melrose, St. Boswells and Maxton. It contains Mertoun House, Bemersyde and Dryburgh Abbey. The Scots of Harden formerly possessed the Barony of Mertoun.

Mertoun Hoose (mer-in-, mer-toon-hoos) n. mansion house on the Tweed near St. Boswells, built in the early 18th century by Sir William Bruce for the Scots of Harden. Sir William Scott of Harden acquired Old Mertoun House (still existing) around 1649, and the second Sir William made it the main family seat (with his brother Sir Gideon of Highchester taking up residence at Harden itself). The family moved back to Harden in 1912. A former house was burned by Hertford's men in 1545. Mertoun Kirk, dating from 1658 stands on the estate, with the churchyard containing the burial vault of the Scots of Harden. The gardens are open to the public, and contain a dovecote dating from 1576 (it was formerly ‘Merton’ and variants).

mervellous (mer-ve-lis) n., poet. marvellous – ‘Shaw thy mervellous loein-kindniss …’[HSR], ‘Ca’ til mind his mervellous warks that he has dune …’[HSR].

mervil (mer-vil) adj., arch. inactive in both body and mind (noted by J. Jamieson).

Mervinslaw (mer-vinz-law) n. farm in the north-east part of Southdean Parish, off the western side of the A68. The modern farm is to the west of Camptown, off the side road to Roughlee and Falside. The older farm was probably further south, nearer to the ruined peel tower. Jedforest Deer and Farm Park is on Mervinslaw Estate. It may be the ‘Scherrwinglen’ (with various spelling transcriptions) given in the founding charter of Jedburgh Abbey in the mid-12th century, when one third of the lands were gifted to the Abbey by Christina, wife of Gervase Riddell. The estate was once held as part of the fee by the office of Bailie of the Regality of Jedforest. Robert Waugh was tenant there around 1500. The ruins of the pele there have dimensions about 8 m x 4 m, within walls almost 2 m thick, and probably date to the late 16th century. It was described as the 8 steadings, valued at £100 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. James Oliver, William Oliver, Margaret Oliver (his mother), Marion Craighill, James Craighill (her son), David Stobs, Elizabeth Hunter, John Wedderburn, William Oliver (alias ‘Merchant’) and James Waugh were listed as tenants there in 1541; it was split into 7 separate steadings, with total yearly payments of £1 6s 3d. It is possible that ‘William Ollyver of Myrleslawe’ and ‘Ranyon Ollyver of the same’, included in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII, may have been from here. The tenants in 1669 were John ‘Wach’, Thomas ‘Olipher’, Mrs. ‘McFeisoon’, James ‘fforsett’, John ‘Waderburn’, ‘Ritchart’ and John Curle and James ‘Olipher’.

The will of John Aitken in Mervinslaw is recorded in 1683. Robert Oliver was there in 1685. In 1694 the residents were Thomas Miller, John Hill, Thomas Walker, Thomas Curle, Margaret Waugh and Margaret Young, as well as Jean Frissell listed among the poor of the Parish. Robert Scott was living there in at least 1743–44. Robert Davidson was there in 1790–92. In 1797 William Turnbull, Charles Scott and John Scott were there, with Thomas Thomson at ‘Marvenslaw Mains’. Adam Buckham was shepherd there in at least 1797–99 and Robert Scott was a servant. Thomas Scott was farmer there in the mid-19th century. The land was purchased by John Lang in 1923. Jack Waterstones was the occupier in the mid-20th century. The hill ‘Mervins Law’ reaches 255 m (836 ft) to the south of the farm. Near where the Peel Burn meets the Jed Water the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building and some enclosures. A mediæval sword pommel found there is in the National Museum of Antiquities (it is probably the place transcribed as ‘Xernwingeslawe’ or ‘Hernwingslawe’ in the 1165 charter of Jedburgh Abbey as being opposite the chapel at Old Jeddart; the suggested origin is from the Old Welsh personal name ‘Merefin’ plus ‘law’; it is ‘meryvnis law’ in 1502, ‘Mervynsaw’ in 1538, ‘Merwinyrslaw’ in 1539, ‘Mervennislaw’ and ‘Mervenisslaw’ in 1541, ‘Mervinslaw’ in 1571/2, ‘Mervingslaw’ in 1582, ‘Mervingslaw’ in 1669, ‘mervinsla’ in 1704, ‘marvinslaw’ in 1743 and ‘Marvenslaw’ and ‘Marvenslaw’ in 1797; Blaeu’s c.1654 map shows the tower at ‘Mervinslaw’, as well as farms at ‘Nuik’, ‘Banck’ and ‘Hauch’ to the south; note that there was once a farmstead of the same name in Wilton Parish).

Mervinslaw (mer-vinz-law) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, lying near the hill Mervins Law, once part of the estates of the Scots of Whitehaugh. There is a record of it being sold by Roger Langlands of Wilton to William Inglis of Langlandshill in 1512. It was to be held for one penny ‘blench-ferm’, payable yearly at Pentecost in Wilton Church. There were 7 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely William Miller, Marion Langlands, Helen Miller, Robert...
Mervins Law

Hogg, William Gotterson, Christian Morton and Margaret Gotterson. John Riddell was cottar there in 1694. Walter Cavers was there in 1697, Francis Scott in 1704, William Graham in 1705 and Helen Hislop in 1707. In 1709 Andrew Marshall was tenant, John Scott was tailor there and John Rule was shepherd. Francis Elliot was living there in 1721 and James Noble in 1751 (it may sometimes be confused with the farm of the same name in Southdean Parish, as well as Mabonlaw in Wilton Parish; the origin is presumably the same Old Welsh personal name ‘Merefin’; it is ‘Mervynnislaw’ in 1512, ‘Mavinslau’ in 1707 and ‘Marvinslaw’ in 1709; it is marked ‘Marvin’s Law’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mervins Law (mer-vinz-law) n. hill a couple of miles west of Hawick, between Whitehaugh and Calaburn farms. The farm of ‘Mervinslaw’ was once near there (it is marked ‘Marvin’s Law’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mervinslaw Toor (mer-vinz-law-toor) n. ruined, but well-preserved, 16th century peel tower, about 5 miles south of Jedburgh on the Peel Burn. It is quite far south of the modern Mervinslaw farm, on the southern slopes of Mervin’s Law. It still has 2 stories and a garret, and measures about 8 m by 6.5 m. Each storey is one unvaulted room, and the top level must have been reached by an internal ladder. Below is a D-shaped excavation of some sort and on the surrounding slopes are the remains of 3 separate buildings.

Mervinswud (mer-vinz-wud) n. former lands in Jedforest, listed in a rental roll of 1541, next to Mervinslaw. William Hunter was tenant and the lands paid 12s 6d yearly (‘Mervenniswod’ in 1541).

Messe (meeves) v., arch. to mellow, mature fruit by forcing (noted by J. Jamieson; also written ‘meise’).

Mess (mes) n., arch. a quantity of food set on the table, a portion of food given to a guest, food or meal served to a group of people together – ‘Frugal temperance urged no cesses, Birthday rates nor bailies’ messeis’ [JH].

Messager (me-su-jer) n., arch. a messenger, officer who delivers official letters – ‘...as ane messenger quhala sall assur zou of the performance of quhatsumeuer was concludit ...’ [SB1584].

Messages (me-su-jeez) n., pl. errands, shopping – ‘A’m away ti get the messages then’, ‘Wull ee gaun a message for iz hen, an I’ll gie a buttered scone’ [BB], ‘When ee came back wi’ the messages It’s washed the dirtiest clot ...’ [AY], ‘At first things went juist fine, In fact they were quite jolly, Hawick folk got yaised throwe time Ti pittin’ their messages in a trolley’ [IWL], ‘Hawick women don’t go shopping, for the messages they gaun ...’ [IWL] (almost always plural).

Mess (me-sur) n. George (18th C.) house servant and groom at Woll in 1791, when he was working for Charles Scott. James (b.1820/1) from Crailing, he was a cooper in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at about 16 Buccleuch Street, and he was listed at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Jane Moodie and their children included Elizabeth (b.1847), William (b.1850) and Mary (b.1854). William (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Alison Graden and their children included William (b.1842), Alison (b.1847) and Thomas (b.1850).

Mess John (mes-jon) n., poet. jocular name for a minister – ‘Mess John’s invited o’er to say the grace, And mirth and glee appears in ev’ry face’ [CPM].

Met (met) n., arch. measurement, standard unit – ‘...and twa firlots malt gud and sufficient stuf ...viz. of the met of the burcht of Jedburgh’ [SPB1579], v. to measure, ‘to met the belt’ referred to a supposed divining practice of witches – ‘...and that scho mett the belt for seeke persons affirming if the belt crape [crept] in thair is no danger of death if it crap not in thair is no danger’ [SPB1628].

Metaphysics (me-ta-fee-ziks) n., poet. metaphysics – ‘When the yin that’s listenin’ doesna ken what the yin that’s talkin’ means; and when the yin that’s talkin’ doesna ken what he means himsel’...that’s metaphysics!’ [DH].

Metcalfe (met-lawf) n. John, M.B.E., from Hawick, he was Chairman of the Borders branch of the Multiple Sclerosis Society. He held the Borders position for 13 years, retiring in 2003, and was Scottish Chairman 1994–97. He received the M.B.E. for sevices to the Multiple Sclerosis Society in 2003.

Metheglin (me-the-glin) n., poet. a spicy mead – ‘Then drink the pure metheglin of the bee, The heath’s brown juice, and live or perish free!’ [JL].

Metter (me-tur) n., arch. a measurer, particularly applied to the act of preparing to cast spells – ‘Compeired Issobell Howsetscn in Riddell ane being ... as a common chairmer and a metter of the ...’ [SPB1628].

mettled (met-tuld) adj., arch. high-spirited, ardent, mettlesome – ‘The Cornet and his merry men On mettled steeds are prancin’’ [JT], ‘The heroes are marshalled, the mettled steeds are bounding’ [JT], ‘...That glorious chase on mettled steeds By lads wha aye were free!’ [WLau], ‘His mettled wife, inured to strife ...’ [MG].

Mettlin Well (met-lin-wel) n. spring between the farms of Netherraw, Greenhouse and Raperlaw. There was an agreement for its use between the neighbouring farms in 1909.

Mey see Maye

Meyrle (mä-rul) n. lost place name near Branxholme, mentioned in the 1420 description when half the lands of Branxholme were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. The description includes ‘the half of the lands of the Meyrle, and the two cottage lands on the west side of the said river of Branchsemell in the barony of Hawick’. The precise location is uncertain, since even the ‘river’ mentioned is ambiguous, although perhaps the stream running through Branxholme Glen is meant (note that the pronunciation is unclear).

mibbe (mi-bee) adv. maybe, perhaps – ‘there’s mibbe twae or threi better yins’, ‘All mibbe gaun’, ‘A said ‘mibbe’, and that’s final!’ (cf. the less common mebbe and older mibbies).

mibbies (mi-bee) adv. maybe, perhaps – ‘Mibees oo should look closer at Mother Nature’ [We] (also spelled ‘mibees'; cf. the older mebbies).

Michael (mi-kul) n. (11th/12th C.) probably of Cumbrian origin, he was nominated as Bishop of Glasgow by David, brother of King Alexander of Scotland. His consecration by Archbishop Thomas of York was sometime between 1109 and 1114. He filled a position that had been vacant for a long time. However, it is unclear if he ever played a significant role in the Diocese, or ever visited Teviotdale.

Michael Graham’s (mi-kul-gră-umz) n. cobbler’s shop on Silver Street through much of the 20th century – ‘...Pies and peas at Bruciana’s and tacketts at Michael Graham’s ...’ [AY].

Michaelmas (mi-kal-mis) n. important date in the calendar of former centuries, being a feast day of the Archangel Michael, held on the 29th of September. Around the 16th century, this was one of the 3 times a year that the head courts would meet annually, specifically the 1st Tuesday after Michaelmas. It was once the date on which Hawick’s Bailies were annually selected – ‘...payable at Michellness nixt, for the use and behoove of the said towne’ [BR1707], ‘In the Michaelmas moonlight, weird and tall The watchman stood on the peel tower wall’ [WHO].

Michie (mi-chëe) n. Alastair (1921–2008) eldest son of Ann Redpath, he was born in France, but moved to Hawick with his family in 1934. He attended the High School and received a scholarship to study architecture at the Edinburgh College of Art. However, war intervened, and he became an R.A.F. pilot, later working as an illustrator and graphic designer. He became a self-taught painter and sculptor at the age of 40, after seeing an exhibition of American abstract expressionists. He lived in Dorset and married Hazel Greenham and secondly Sally Greasley. The Hawick Museum has at least one of his paintings.

Alexander (b.1764) probably son of John, who was the first Michie of Old Northhouse. His eldest son was John. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Potts in 1797. He was probably father of Alexander and Robert of the Archaeological Society. Alexander (18th/19th C.) slubber with William Wilson. In 1797 he was sent to Galashiels for 10 months to learn the trade and he returned to be the first slubber in Hawick. He could be the spinner of that name who went to America, and when he returned in the 1840s there was a big celebration in the Fleece Inn, hosted by the Hawick Instrumental Band in which he had formerly played. Alexander (b.1788/9) originally from Aberdeen, he was a gardener in Hawick. He is recorded at about 59 High Street in 1841 and 1851 (when he was a widower). Margaret, who was an unmarried seamstress in an adjacent house, was probably related. Alexander (b.c.1795) mason who lived at Branxholme Bridgend in 1841. He may have been brother of William and Robert. His wife was Jean and he probably had a daughter Jean, who married Robert Archibald. Alexander (1813–1886) brother of Robert, he was also a Skinner in Hawick. He was living on the Cross Wynd in 1841, with the family of millwright Gideon Scott. In 1851 he was listed on Orrock Place as a master Skinner, employing 3 men. He must have been partner with another Skinner, since ‘Scott & Michie’ is listed at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was at 4 Orrock Place as a master Skinner employing 5 men. He may later have moved to Galashiels. He was a founder... member of the Hawick Archaeological Society, being the fourth official member. He acted as Museum Curator for the Archaeological Society in the early 1860s. He also wrote some anonymous poetry, such as ‘Auld Moat’s Address’, before he left Hawick in 1864 to live in Galashiels. As a youth he was a great athlete, regularly appearing at the Innerleithen and Mungerton games, excelling at running, leaping, hammer-throwing and ‘hitch-and-kick’. He may have been the same Alexander who served as first Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk. Later in life he wrote regularly in the local press about reminiscences of the Common Riding and related themes. He also wrote the introduction for the 1886 edition of Common Riding songs. He is supposed to have only missed a single Common Riding in his life. Much of the credit for the revival of the Common Riding in the 1880s is due to his letter-writing and powers of persuasion. As a result, he was invited as a special guest to all the events of 1886. Some of his articles on Hawick characters, printed in the Transactions, later appeared in Robert Murray’s book. He is probably the Alex recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in about 1874. In 1845 he married Isabella Scott, who was a dressmaker. Their children included: James Cockburn (b.1846), who died young; Jessie Sibbald (b.1847); Elizabeth Pott (b.1851); Walter Francis Scott (b.1855); Susan Mary (b.1859); and Gideon Scott (b.1862), presumably named after the former millwright. A photograph of him exists. He also appears in a portrait (painted by John Guthrie) along with his brother Robert and William N. Kennedy. Baillie Alexander (b.1832) son of currier Robert. He was a Magistrate in Hawick, and should not be confused with the other contemporary Alexander, who was his uncle. He also served as Vice-President of the Archaeological Society. He left for South Africa in 1879, with Frank Hogg first publicly singing ‘I Like Auld Hawick’ at his farewell dinner. He lived at Maraisburg, Transvaal. Andrew Rodgie (1806/7–54) builder in Hawick. He was one of the ‘Brigend Michies’, this family being raised in the Green Kirk, hence his middle name (and the fact that birth records are scarce for these Michies). It is said by James Haining that he had brothers Robert (a mason), John (building foreman in Edinburgh) and Hugh (of Laing, Michie & Graham), but Hugh seems more likely to have been his nephew; it is also unclear who their father might have been. He was listed on the Loan in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived 19 Loan, according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1851 he is recorded as a master mason, employing 20 men, 4 apprentices and 8 labourers. His firm constructed the Old Parish Church and several other important buildings of the mid-19th century. His wife was Mary, and they had a daughter, Betsey. His nephew Adam Laidlaw carried on the business after his death. Andrew Smith (1844–1936) son of skinner Robert, he was born in Hawick. He worked for the National Bank of Scotland in Hawick and was transferred to Edinburgh in 1862, then London in 1866. In 1874 he moved to the Royal Bank of Scotland, being recruited as Deputy Manager in London. In 1889 he became sub-cashier in the bank’s Glasgow office and a year later was Cashier there. He retired in 1910, returning to London. He is buried at Rowledge in Surrey. He married Jessie Fraser in 1872 and they had children Arthur, Charles and Agnes. He published many articles on banking and revised James William Gilbart’s work ‘The history, principles and practice of banking’. Bruce raised in Hawick, he played in the baritone horn section of the Saxhorn Band. He trained in medicine, but continued to perform as a multi-instrumentalist woodwind player, based in Perthshire. He has played with The Walktalls, Martin Stephenson and Delta Mainline. Christopher Young (b.1829) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Betty Young. It is said that as a child he was chased by the Devil in the form of a pig. He worked as a forester to the Countess of Seafield and contributed to the Transactions of the Highland and Agricultural Society. He was apparently offered the position of Factor at Balmoral, but declined. He wrote ‘The Larch: A Practical Treatise on Its Culture and General Management’ (1882 and 1885), as well as ‘Practice of Forestry’ (1888). David (19th/20th C.) apprentice with chemist John Craig, he became manager of the lemonade works, then partner, and sole owner from 1919. David A.R. (b.1928) youngest son of James and Anne Redpath. He became an artist, like his brother Alastair. He was born in France, but moved to Hawick with his family in 1934, attending St. Mary’s and the High School. He was an instructor in the Royal Artillery Signals Training Regiment, then studied at the Edinburgh College of Art. After travelling to Italy, he started on an art career that has included one-man exhibitions and prizes, being known for both oils and watercolours. He worked as a teacher at the Edinburgh College of Art, later becoming Head of the School of Drawing and later Vice-President. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1989 and had an exhibition at the Scott Gallery in 2009. He was awarded the O.B.E. in 1997 and is a member of the Royal Scottish Academy. George (18th/19th C.) agricultural worker, probably son of Alexander, from Slatehills. He married Margaret Turnbull and their daughter Jane married Thomas Rutherford, from Haysike. Hugh (b.c.1745) farmer at Slatehills. He may have had a brother called John, who was the first of the Michies of Old Northhouse. Hugh (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at ‘Goldielands Bridge End’ in 1797. He was part of the family that farmed in that area for many generations. He may be the Hugh who married Margaret Telfer in Hawick Parish in 1787. Hugh (1830–91) said to be brother of Andrew Rodgie, Robert and John. However, he seems more likely to be son of mason Robert. He was partner in tweed merchants’ Laing, Michie & Graham. Later he opened a newsagent’s shop at 2 High Street, with the help of his daughter Margaret. He married Christina Dobson, from the wood merchants of Leith; she died at the age of 85. Their children include: Robert (b.1863), emigrated to Australia; Margaret Allan (1865–1932); George Dobson (b.1866); John Stewart (b.1869), tweed designer in Huddersfield, who retired to Folkestone; and Agnes Dobson (b.1873). John (18th C.) probably the first of the Michie’s of Northhouse. He may have been father of Alexander and brother of Hugh of Slatehills. John (18th C.) married Margaret Shiel in Roberton Parish in 1739. John (18th/19th C.) weaver of Old Northhouse. He may have been son of the earlier John and father of the later John. He could be the John who married Mary Douglas in Hawick Parish in 1790. He was one of the Volunteers who responded to the ‘False Alarm’ in 1804; when he went off with his gun his daughter is meant to have said ‘Shoot iz ’eersel’, faither; ye’ll dae it cannier than the Frainch’. He had at least 2 daughters: Janet, who married Adam Easton, farmer at Overhall; and Margaret (1805/6–87), who married warehouseman Thomas Anderson. John (1788/9–1861) weaver at Old Northhouse in 1841. In 1851 he is recorded there as an ex-weaver, along with his wife, both as paupers at that time. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Young, recorded in Cavers and Kirkton Parishes in 1821; she died in Denholm in 1864, aged 78. Their children included: Jessey (1821–46); Isabel (b.1824); William (b.1826); Christopher Young (b.1829); Robert (b.1832); and Mary Ann (b.1835). He could be the John Michie of Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. John (b.c.1800) spinner in Wilton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835 at Dovemount and in 1840 and 1841 at Kirk-style. He was also an Elder of Wilton Kirk. His wife was Jane and their children included Robert, Eliza and John. John (19th C.) probably brother of masons Andrew Rodgie and Robert. He became a foreman with builders Messres. Colville of Edinburgh. John (1813–70) clerk in the Relief Kirk Session. John (19th C.) of the Victoria Tavern, Hobart, listed as a subscriber to the Common Riding in 1888 and 1889. Robert (b.c.1805) mason journeyman, living at Branxholme Bridgend in 1841. He was brother of William, who farmed there. He may also have been brother of Andrew Rodgie. He probably married Agnes Ann Smith and had children including Hugh (b.c.1831), Walter (b.c.1833), Elizabeth (b.c.1834) and John (b.c.1837). Robert (1807–1875) brother of Alexander (later of Galashiels), and probably son of Alexander and Betty Pott. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archeological Society, being its second official member. A great sportsman in his youth, he won the wrestling contest at the St. Ronan’s games at Innerleithen in 1831, as well as winning the ‘light ball’ event (probably throwing). At the Common Riding Games of 1834 he won the ‘ball throw’ event. He was a currier by trade, and was recorded as such on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was also listed as a currier on O’Connell Street in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, and appears in Slater’s 1852 directory, where he was a currier and leather cutter, as well as a tanner and Skinner. In 1851 he was listed at 11 O’Connell Street (originally No. 6), as an employer of 1 journeyman and 2 apprentices. In 1861 he was at 6 O’Connell Street, master currier and tanner, employing 3 men and 1 boy. In 1846 he wrote to an American temperance leader, the letter being printed in a Boston newspaper, but then reprinted in Britain, getting him into trouble with the Hawick Free Church; a locally-published pamphlet attacked his abolitionist views. He gave a lecture on ‘Local Antiquities’ in 1856 (immediately after a lecture on Archaeology by George Webster), this being only the second lecture given at the Society’s meetings. He also gave a lecture on local hill forts in December of 1856 and one on Trimontium in February 1857. He was also on the Town Council. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He was one of the first Deacons of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk, as well as one of the first Trustees. He was also one of the earliest members of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, and well known for giving speeches on this subject, always in local dialect. He married Agnes Elizabeth (or Ann) Smith in Wilton Parish in 1830. Their children included: Grace (b.1830); Alexander (b.1832); Elizabeth (b.1834); Joanna (b.1836) and Joana (b.1838), who both died young; Thomas (b.1842); Andrew Smith (b.1841); Andrew Smith (again, b.1844); and Robert (b.1848). He appeared in a portrait (painted by John Guthrie) along with his brother Alexander and William N. Kennedy. A portrait of him alone was presented to the Archaeological Society by his son A.S. Michie on the occasion of the 1906 jubilee – ‘Guid Robbie Michie, noble man, First o’ the speechifyin’ clan’ [RDW].

Robert (b.1810/1) born in Cavers Parish, he was a shepherd in the Hawick area. He may be the Robert who was an agricultural labourer at Whitchesters in 1841. He is listed at Minto Kaims in 1851 and Hayside (in Wilton Parish) in 1861. His wife was Helen (from Minto) and their children included John, James, Janet, Mary, Rachel, Robert, Helen and Thomas. Robert (b.1832/3) born in Wilton Parish, probably son of spinner John. He was miller at Newstead near Melrose. His wife was Agnes and their children included John, William and Isabella. Robert (19th C.) first Captain of Hawick R.F.C., from 1873 for 4 years. Walter (1753/4–1816) undertaker in Edinburgh. He died in Hawick. William (1792–1885) from Old Northhouse. He emigrated to Canada, settling in Esquesing, Ontario, where he farmed and had a saw-mill. His wife was Margaret, and their children included: Thomas (1824–1901); Mary (1834–1902); Robert (b.1837); Alexander (1843–93); Ellen (1850–1901); George (1851–1918); Elizabeth (1853–1901); and William (b.1854). He died in Esquesing, aged 92½. William (1797/8–1862) farmer at Branxholme Bridgend. In 1841 the family were living at ‘Branxholm bras’, which may have been the same as Scatterpenny. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Branxholme Bridgend, farming 16 acres and employing one man. He contributed local information for the Ordnance Survey in about 1859. He married Isabella. They had 9 daughters, including: Margaret who became Mrs. Welsh; Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’), who married baker John Campbell; Isabella; Mary; Beatrix, who married James Dewar; Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’); and Alexandrina. He is buried in old Wilton Cemetery (sometimes formerly spelled ‘Michi’ and ‘Miki’).

Michie’s (mich-eez) n. Robert Michie & Son, tanner’s business in Hawick in the mid-to-late 19th century. They were situated on Buccleuch Street, by the River Teviot. In 1871 the firm estimated that it tanned 1,270 hides, producing over 21,000 pounds of leather.

Michie’s Brig (mich-eez-brig) n. another name for the Branxholme Bridge, across the Teviot at Branxholme Bridgend, named after the family which lived there for generations and who became builders in the early 19th century.

Michie’s Well (mich-eez-wel) n. a former public water supply about half-way up Drumlanrig Square, above the Mid Row, also known as ‘Porteous’ Well’.

micht (micht) v., arch. might, may – ‘That thay micht sete their houpe in God . . .’ [HSR], ‘Oo’ve a pairk in Wulton Ludge That e’en Fairyland micht grudge’ [TK], ‘It micht hev been less – bit no’ muckle’ [RM], ‘Aa whiles think that life in this grey auld toon o’ Hawick Micht weel be compared to a river . . .’ [DH], ‘. . .Sealed, ye micht say, Wi’ a brass stud, farbye’ [DH], ‘How micht I come to the auld toon? . . .’ [WL], ‘Her tongue micht no’ answer the cut o’ your shoe’ [DJ], also used as a double modal verb – ‘Yince an A’d wun there, A thorcht, A micht mebbies cood geet a hurl the lenth o Hawick’ [ECS] (note the use of multiple modal verbs).

micht (micht) n., arch. might, power – ‘. . . an’ nane o’ the men o’ micht hae find their han’s’ [HSR], ‘. . . Wad chase o’er the Nipknowes wi’ micht and wi’ main’ [JEDM], ‘. . . Like a struttin’ cock on the midden heap’ [WL] (also ‘midding’ and variants).

Mickle (mi-kul) n. William Julius (1734–88) born in Langholm, 3rd son of the Parish minister, changing his name from ‘Meikle’. He was educated in Langholm and then at Edinburgh High School and went into the brewing trade followed by some of his family. In 1762 he published ‘Providence and other poems’, then went to London to try for a literary career, eventually becoming a corrector for the Clarendon Press in Oxford. This he gave up to translate Camoens’ ‘Lusiad’ (from the Portuguese), taking 4 years and being published in 1775. His ballad ‘Cumnor Hall’ is supposed to have inspired Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Kenilworth’. He also travelled to Portugal with the Navy, returning fairly wealthy and married Mary Tomkins. As a poet he was very versatile, writing both short and long pieces, including the Scottish patriotic song ‘There’s Nae Luck About the Hoose’.

Mid Broadlee (mid-brod-lee) n. formerly part of the farm of Broadlee. In 1650 the ‘communicators’ recorded there were John Clerk, Malie Shiel, Alexander Scott and Agnes Scott.

Midburn (mid-burn) n. farm in Hobkirk Parish, between Hawthornside and Highend. It was also known as ‘Africa’. The L-shaped barns probably date from the mid-18th century. James Renwick was there in 1790 and John Common was tenant in 1797. It was farmed by the Turnbulls through the 19th century, from about 1823. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1868. There was also once a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond (it is ‘Middleburn’ in 1790 and marked ‘Middleburn’ on Stobie’s 1770 map.

midden (mi-din, -den, -deen) n. literally the house waste heap or dunghill, but applied to mean any dirty or untidy place – ‘yon hoose was a right midden’. Middens in Hawick were common at the front of every house, often under the forestairs. They were forbidden by Council rules in 1749, but mostly not removed until around 1800. The last to remain were those in the Sandbed, Kirk Wynd and Green Wynd (the owners paying a small rent to the Burgh to keep their middens), which were removed following a petition in 1810 – . . . but a man may look at the moon till he land in the midding, for all that’ [JTe], ‘He raecies up in the puir owt o’ the dust, an’ lyfts up the needle owt o’ the midden’ [HSR], ‘A stinkin’ midden, a scartin’ hen – There’s sma’ choice there ‘tween craws and men’ [DH], ‘. . . Like a struttin’ cock on the midden heap’ [WL] (also ‘midding’ and variants).

midden-stank (mi-din-stawngk) n., arch. a foul ditch that drains from a dung heap – ‘. . . But the hypocrite weed Grew rank in its stead, Frae a heart vile as yon midden-stank’ [JoHa] (see midden and stank).

middle (mi-dul) v., arch. to meddle, bother – ‘Dunion . . . is buirdly billie ti Ruberslaw, an there the perr stand . . .leike as they war glunshin an shuirrin doon at aabodie that wad middle thum’ [ECS].

Middle (mi-dul) n. former name for lands that were incorporated into the Wells estate near Bedrule. Along with ‘Holm’ they may have been part of the lands called Dykes. They are listed (along with Fowlerslands and Holm) in the 1511 charter of the Douglasses of Cavers, along with the ‘corn mill and walk mill’ (that was later called Doveashaughmill). The lands were at one time partly in the Parish of Kirkton, but in the Barony of Cavers (on the west side of the Rule Water). In earlier times it may have been in the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1634 James Stewart of Nether Horshburgh was served heir to his father Robert Stewart in his lands of ‘Helme et Middill’, with grain mill and fuller’s mill called ‘Dowishauch’, comprising a 3 merk land in the Barony of Cavers. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and his brother Archibald in 1698, and still listed along with ‘Helme’ as having a corn mill and waulk mill attached. James Dryden was there in 1736. It is unclear whether these lands were associated with East Middle (it is ‘Middill’ and ‘Myddill’ in 1511 and ‘Midle’ in 1698; the origin of the name is probably from being the centre of the in-bye land of an estate).

Middle (mi-dul) n. lands in Cavers Parish, later divided into East Middle and West Middle. William Douglas was there in 1720 when he had a daughter baptised in Kirkton Parish (the origin probably comes from being farmlands central to the estate, as opposed to the out-bye land).

the Middle Loft (thu-mi-dul-loft) n. former balcony in St. Mary’s Kirk, built in 1684 by James Thorbrand. In 1685 William Laing and Walter Scott (presumably Bailies at the time) were paid back the 100 marks Scots that it had cost to construct. This balcony was lost when the church was rebuilt around 1763. It was also known as ‘the Steeple Loft’. The 2 front seats were formally assigned to the Bailies in 1707 (although this is a little confusing, since the ‘Bailies’ Loft’ was a separate balcony). The Council paid 200 merks Scots for the timber work to fix it in 1708, the money being raised by assessing the Burgesses. It was one of two balconies that were entered from the steeple side, the higher one being the ‘High Loft’ – ‘John Turnbull, mason, to collect ye Midle and Wester Lofts’ [PR1718].

Middle Marches (mi-dul-mär-cheez) n. the Middle Marches, generally referring to an area running from the Cheviots to the Kershope Burn. The Scottish Middle March consisted essentially of Roxburghshire (including Liddesdale), Selkirkshire and Peeblesshire, with judicial centre in Jedburgh, and the Wardens being the Kers or Kerrs for much of the time. The English Middle March consisted of Coquetdale, Redesdale and Tynedale. Together they saw the worst of the lawlessness of rieving times.

Middlemas (mi-dul-manz) n. Adam (d.bef. 1581) recorded being deceased when his son John witnessed a sasine for William (son to the deceased John) in Lilliesleaf in 1580/1. Andrew (15th/16th C.) convicted in 1510 in Jedburgh Justice-aire, with secretly destroying the wood of Gateshaw. George (16th C.) servant to James Kerr, son of the Laird of Greenhead. In 1586 his master was instructed to enter him and another servant into court. James (16th C.) recorded in 1561, when Thomas Scott of Haining was obliged to enter him before the Warden of the East Marches. Either he or ‘quhyte Will Young’, or his servant or some other person was to be warded to answer the charge of stealing from David Thomson in Berwick. He was presumably local. James (16th/17th C.) son of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel. In 1604 he and his father were declared rebels for failing to appear to answer to the charges of killing Thomas Kerr of Crailing and his servant. This appears to have been part of an on-going feud between the Kers and the Turnbuls, with the power of the courts on the Ker side. He is probably the brother of William of Lilliesleaf who (along with 2 other men) was part of a complaint in 1617 by George Douglas of Friarshaw and George Douglas in Lilliesleaf, specifically that the 3 men had tried to break into both the houses at Lilliesleaf and Friarshaw. He is also recorded as brother of William ‘of Lillislie’ listed in 1618 among men accused of assaulting and threatening George Turnbull of Belses and his workers; he was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. James (d.bef. 1671) proprietor of Raperlaw. He was listed as owner of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf on the 1643 county valuation, his lands being valued at £416. His is recorded as owner of ‘Reaperhall’ (i.e. Raperlaw) in 1670 when he brought a court action. In 1671 (by which time he was deceased) he is transcribed as ‘portioner of Kaperhall’. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls he paid tax on £110 10s, as one of the heritors of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Emma (or Anna) married Walter Scott of Altont. He could be the same as the James of Raperlaw who married Anna Scott, and whose son William was involved with claims with her new husband Thomas Riddell in 1661. He is probably the James of ‘Reperlaw’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. James (17th C.) paid the land tax on part of Raperlaw in 1678. These were the lands formerly held by Walter Turnbull and corresponded to Childknow (valued at £101 19s 4d) and ‘Part of the muir of Childknow’ (valued at £33 9s 2d). He is recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the earlier James, as well as to Walter, who is also recorded at Raperlaw in 1694. The same lands were owned by Hunter of Hunthill in the 18th century. James (b.1819/20) woollen manufacturer, son of John. In 1861 he was living at 10 Slitrig Crescent and employing 18 workmen. He was at that time living with his widowed mother Isabella and his brother William. He may be the Mr. Middlemas of Slitrig Bank who gave a talk on 'Botany' to the Architectural Society in 1857. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf was listed among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. John (d.bef. 1581) tenant in Lilliesleaf, perhaps son of the earlier John. In 1563 his eldest daughter Janet was one of 2 choices of wife offered to William Davidson by Walter Riddell of that Ilk. Probably the same John was listed as owner of half of Raperlaw when it was leased to Andrew Gray, George Gray and Thomas Allan. He is probably the John in Lilliesleaf recorded being deceased in 1580/1 when his son William received sasine to his 4 husbandlands in Lilliesleaf. John (d.1601) brother of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel. He was killed in Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601 as part of an ongoing feud between Turnbulls and Kers. About 30 Turnbulls from the Minto area entered Jedburgh to find Thomas Kerr of Crawling (brother of the Provost), killing him and his servant and wounding several other Jedburgh men. On the Turnbull side he was killed, along with Robert Turnbull of Bowlie. Several men were later convicted and hanged for their part in this skirmish. Margaret Turnbull a relative (possibly sister) was one of the 'persewaris' of the case against the Kers for his murder. John of Alton (17th C.) mentioned in a 1666 list of landowners in Hassendean Parish. He may have been related to Walter Scott of Alton, who married Anna Middlemas at about that time. John (18th/19th C.) herd at Jedhead in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenant Book for 1799. John (b.1791) son of Alexander, he was born in Ednam. He was a small-scale manufacturer in Hawick in the early-to-mid 1800s. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 as foreman at Pathead and was at Stellhouse in 1840. In 1841 he was recorded as a woollen factory foreman, living at Stellhouse. He married Isabella Broomfield, sister of Alexander, who was foreman at Cumledge Mills. Their children included: Alexander; James (b.1820), who carried on his father’s business; Elizabeth (Betsy), who married William Laidlaw (grocer and manufacturer); Isabella; Jane; William; and Margaret.

Robert (18th C.) servant to Douglas of Cavers, recorded in 1785 and 1791. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1785); and Janet (b.1791). Robert (18th/19th C.) served at Spittal in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Scott and their children included Robert (b.1809). Thomas (15th C.) recorded on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. Thomas (15th C.) early member of this family, based at Ploro. He was master ranger of Yarrow from at least 1468, and presumably related to William, who was Ranger before him. He is surely the Thomas, cousin of Robert Scott of Haining, to whom Scott granted the lands of ‘Greviston and Gillishau’ in Peeblesshire in 1476. He is recorded ‘in Ploro’, in 1494/5 (probably related to the area of Plora near Innerleithen). That year there was remission to Alexander, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, for resetting the thefts of Adam Howiston and Robert Jackson. This included the slaughter of his wife and 2 sons, as well as 11 horses, 44 cows and a long list of items. This list is unique in its detailed specification of valuable goods belonging to a minor (but relatively wealthy laird) at the end of the 1400s. Also in 1494/5 John Scott of Erncleuch was allowed to ‘compone’ for his part in several crimes, including bringing in thieves and ‘traitors of Leven’ to slughter his wife and two ‘offspring’, Ninian and John. He was probably the same as Thomas, chief of the Middlemas clan, who acquired Ploro in 1497. Thomas (16th C.) listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of being responsible for the deaths of Englishmen. He was said to have slain Quentin Watson. Thomas ‘Tammy Mid’ (20th C.) metal merchant of the mid-20th century, running the business at 55 High Street, which was very successful during the War years. He was also known for his large feet, which meant he wore excessively patched hand-made boots. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of William of Middlemas. Along with his brother William, he was accused of harassing and attacking George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers; appearing personally before the Privy Council, he was sent to Edinburgh Tolbooth afterwards. William Elliot, his servitor, was also involved. George Ker, apparent of Cavers Carre became cautioner for him and his brother William for the sum of 300 merks, not to harm George Turnbull or his family or servants. Walter (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth
Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths and was probably related to James, who was also listed there. William (14th/15th C.) Vicar of Selkirk. In 1425 he was granted the office of Master of the Ward of Yarrow by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, confirmed by James I in the following year; his nephew George was also named in the charter as his successor in the office. In 1436 he was recorded in a charter related to St. Andrews Kirk in Peebles. William (15th C.) Master Ranger of Yarrow Ward from at least 1456 until 1460. He was succeeded in this office by Thomas, who was therefore probably his son. William (15th/16th C.) along with David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley and George Hepburn, he held the lands of Boonraw, which passed to Robert Scott of Stirches in 1504/5. Perhaps the same William is recorded in 1502 when Robert Scott in Synton and William Scott in Fenwick were fined for failing to enter him in the itinerant court at Jedburgh. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as a witness in Selkirk for a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. William of Lilliesleaf (16th C.) recorded as ‘Middimest in Lilliselef’ in 1563 when he ‘wadset’ his lands at the ‘Hungrie Hills’ and other lands near Lilliesleaf Kirk to Walter Riddell of that Ilk. In the same year he was ‘William Myddilmest in Lelis Freirschaw’ when he rented some land to John Redford, this being ‘Coit acre’ and a rig of land lying in ‘Myddillis’ (perhaps suggesting a connection with his name). Probably the same William is recorded in 1562 when he let an acre of land in fields of the town of Lilliesleaf to Hohn Hislop. He is probably the William ‘Middelmost of Lillusie’ recorded in 1580 when he admitted John Donaldson as tenant to 6 acres of land in the town of Lilliesleaf, for yearly payments of 24 pounds; these lands were at ‘Portus Croft Heid’. He may be the William, son of the deceased John of Lilliesleaf recorded in 1580/1 when he received sasine for 4 husbandlands in Lillieleaf. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction between William Scott in Burnfoot and Scott’s future wife Janet, daughter of William Scott in Huntly. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. Probably the same William is recorded in 1581/2 when ‘one quarter of the half husbandland’ of his steading held by John Smail was given to Smail’s mother as part of a marriage contract. He is also recorded as ‘Middlemist of Leilsie’ in 1583/4 when he received half of the meadow of Belses. And in 1589 he was involved in an action with Walter Riddell over the ‘Treincersgait’. He may be the same William described in 1595/6 as ‘officier baronie de Lillisleif’ (probably meaning the Baron Bailie) when he was granted the 5-pound land of Belsie and 7 husbandlands and 2 cottage-lands within Lilliesleaf. William of Chapel (16th/17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, probably son of the earlier William. He was ‘William Middilnest of Lilesie Chapel’ when he was ordered captured along with Hector Turnbull of Belsie, for the slaughter of Thomas Kerr of Crailing in 1601. This was a result of a skirmish in Jedburgh, when about 30 Turnbulls from the Minto area entered Jedburgh seeking Ker, this being part of an ongoing feud between the families. He had a brother John, who was killed in Jedburgh on that day in 1601. He was declared a rebel in 1604, along with his son James, for the murder of Thomas Kerr of Crailing in that skirmish in Jedburgh in 1601. Thomas Turnbull of Minto acted as cautions. He could be the Laird of ‘Chapel-Middelmisse’ whose wife was a daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade (according to Scott of Satchells). He is probably the William ‘Middlemest of the Chapel’ whose servant Willie Scot was apprehended as a fugitive in Dysart in 1610. He is probably the William ‘of Lillisie’ who in 1618 was accused of harassing and attacking George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers. His brother James, sons William and Walter, and other supporters were also involved. He was ordered by the Privy Council to be entered into Edinburgh Tolbooth ‘and to remain there till further order be taken with them’. He is probably the William ‘of Lillesleis Chappell’ who in 1617 the Rutherfords complained was still at the horn, but not yet apprehended. Additionally, in 1619 Archibald Ker in Bowden complained that he owed him money and was ‘unrelaxed from a horning’. William of Chapel (17th C.) son of William of Chapel. He is probably the ‘William Middlemest, younger’ of Lilliesleaf named in 1618 among Middlemas and their supporters who had harassed and attacked George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers; appearing personally before the Privy Council, he was sent to Edinburgh Tolbooth afterwards. George Ker, apparent of Cavers Carre became cautions for him and his brother Walter for the sum of 300 merks, not to harm George Turnbull or his family or servants. He was served heir to his father in 1622 in the lands of Raperlaw. He is probably the ‘William Midlemaist of Lillisleif Chappell’

Midgehope (mi-jup?) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, just south of Ettrick village. It was owned by Melrose Abbey in 1415 when neighbouring lands were swapped with Scott of Rankilburn for the lands of Bellendean. Simon Scott was recorded there in 1494/5 and Walter Scott in 1502. It was part of the lands owned by Melrose Abbey until about the Reformation. Along with Thirlestane, it was raided by a large group of Amstrongs in 1543, taking 200 cows, 20 horses and 4 or 5 prisoners. There were Littles there in 1573. In the late 16th century William Scott of Midgehope was 2nd son of William of Tushielaw, and ancestor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill. It may be the ‘Medop’ belonging to Walter Scott of Tushielaw in 1586 when 24 cattle and 400 sheep were stolen by a gang of Armstrongs and later another 36 cattle 400 sheep, 3 horses and ‘the insight of the whole town’. Gilbert Elliott of Stobs held the reversion of half the lands, resigning this to Walter Scott of Tushielaw in 1620. The lands were still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. Charles Scott of Woll owned the lands in 1785. In the late 18th century John Scott of Midgehope was a son of William of Woll and father of William of Teviot Bank. Andrew Henderson was owner in 1803 – ‘Gae warn the lads of Thirlistone, Genscleugh, and Newburgh fair, With Tushielaw, and Midgehope, in armour to appear’ [WSB] (called ‘Midgap’ by Scott of Satchells; it is ‘Mighope’ and ‘Migehope’ in 1415, ‘myghop’ in 1494/5, ‘myghop’ in 1502, ‘Migheip’ in 1564 and ‘Megehoip’ in 1573; ‘Midgehoop’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Middlesteid (mi-dul-steeds) n. Middlestead, farm in Selkirk Parish, east of Oakwood Mill. Lands of the farm bordered on the Parish of Ashkirk. It is probably the ‘Middlesteid of Falshide’ granted to James Scott of Kirkurd in 1490. John Scott of Middlestead was listed by Scott of Satchells among the men who were on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Archibald, son of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins’), inherited the lands in 1637. There were Plummers there from about the mid-17th century and Scott-Plummers in the 19th century. Robert Preacher was tenant in 1719.

Mid Grain (mid-grän) n. small stream that rises on Whitegrain Fell and flows north-east to join Singlean Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Bucleuch survey).

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in the Slitrig Water, to the east of Stobs Woodfoot. On a shelf near the summit is a hill-fort, approximately 75 m by 40 m, but largely destroyed by later occupation by a settlement and quarrying. It consists of inner and outer ramparts, and contains several hut circles associated with the settlement. Just south-east of the fort are the remains of a linear earthwork, traceable about 140 m, but probably once longer.

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, just to the south-east of Elrig farm, and reaching a height of 317 m.

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, near the head of Borthwickbrae Burn. It lies between Byrelee Hill and Easter Hill and reaches a height of 368 m.
Mid Hill

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in upper Liddesdale, lying on the west side of Cliffhope Burn near Singdean. It reaches a height of 434 m (it appears to be marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Middle’).

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in the very upper part of the Hermitage valley, south-west of Twislehope Hope. It reaches a height of 436 m.

Midlem (mid-lum) n. hamlet north of Hawick and about 4½ miles east of Selkirk. It has an old rectangular lay-out, with the smithy in the middle of the village green. It was once a linen manufacturing centre, and a village of some importance. It lies on the Midlem Burn, which joins the Ale Water. The village is mentioned in 1119 in connection with Selkirk Abbey and remained in monastic hands for 450 years, with the Knights Templar apparently also having some land there. The village also had possibly the first Secession church in Scotland, built in 1746, and closed in 1938, with some Hawick area families travelling all the way there for services; there are baptismal records covering the period 1743–1919 (with some gaps). The top end of the village offers a magnificent view of Ruberslaw. In 1535 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was tried (and found not guilty) of leading men from Liddesdale to there, stealing 100 cows and 20 horses. J. Walter Elliot wrote ‘The Story of Midlem and the Midlem Pail’ (the origin is Old English ‘middel ham’, meaning simply ‘middle homestead’; it first occurs as ‘Middelham’ about 1120, is ‘Mydelm’ in 1535 and only gains its modern spelling by the 17th century; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Midlum’).

Midlem Mill (mid-lum-mil) n. farm with a mill, situated near the village of Midlem. John Lillie and James Lawson are recorded there in 1493. It was later a seat of a branch of the Elliots. The first Laird, in the mid-17th century, was Gavin Eliott, also of Grange (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters’ and ancestor of the Earls of Minto), followed by Robert, another Robert and finally Gavin. Robert Elliot paid tax on his lands there valued at about £400 in 1678. Lady Elliot paid tax on 19 windows in 1753. The estate was sold off to clear debts in about 1756. It was sold to Prof. George Stewart in 1773. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1797 and Thomas Weir in the 1860s. It is said that the house was rebuilt and named Linthill (also spelled ‘Middlemilne’, ‘Midlem-mile’, ‘Midlem-miln’, ‘Midlemmiln’, ‘Midlemmilne’, ‘Midlemmyne’, ‘Midlamyne’; it is ‘Midlaymilne’ in Hawick Burgh records of 1734).

Mid Liddle Street (mid-li-dul-stee’) n. street in Newcastleton, lying along the west side of the Liddel (or Liddle) Water, between North Liddle Street and South Liddle Street.

midnicht (mid-nicht) n. midnight – ‘…At dark midnicht, on passers-by, ’Twill through the hedgerows keek’ [TCh], ‘There’s a silence in the cobbled wynds, and smell the midnicht air’ [JYH], ‘For aa A pat a warm pig i the bed, it was midnicht or A cam a-heat’ [ECS].

Midquarter (mid-kwar’-ur) n. former farm in Abbotrule Parish. It was advertised for lease in 1785, along with others on the Abbotrule estate. ‘Doorpool, Midquarter, (including the Easter Park) and a small possession, part of the Farm occupied by George Minto’ was listed on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule and valued at about £210 (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Midraw see the Mid Raw

the Mid Raw (thu-mid-raw) n. row of pended, thatched tenements which stood in the centre of what is now Drumlanrig Square, between the Fore and Back Raws. The original construction may date back to around the 16th century. It exists in several photographs, including one during its demolition, showing the arched lower floor. A public well, originating at the Sclidder Springs, stood at the bottom. The gable end at the top held a large notice board. It was the location for some of the densest and poorest housing conditions in Hawick, with no sanitation and some rooms still having clay floors. It is estimated that there were 110 people living in 10 separate houses. By the latter part of the 19th century they had become very dilapidated and the building was demolished in 1884, after being purchased by public subscription and gifted to the Town (since the Council had no powers to declare houses unfit for habitation). A Commemorative plaque was placed on a nearby house. In 1910 the site was turned into an ornamental garden with fountain and the Brown Clock in the centre of the Square, designed by J.P. Alison. Some of the stone was used to build the wall along the roadside at Pipleheugh (since rebuilt), and a wooden cup in the Museum was made by James Thomson from a salvaged beam. A few fragments of the former Pipleheugh wall were incorporated into the James Thomson statue base. A photograph was taken shortly before the demolition – ‘Though the Moat itsel’ may fa’, Like the famous auld Mid Raw … ’[JEDM], ‘…And we maun bid a last farewell To the Auld Mid Raw’ [JT].

Midroughlee (mid-rowch-lee) n. former name for a steading in Jedforest. It was recorded along with Wester Roughlee and Roughleanwik in 1538 and 1539, valued at 30 shillings (it is ‘Mydroughleis’ in 1538 and 1539; see Roughlee).

mids (midz) n., arch. the middle, middle of, midst – ‘…he sall set the thornis within his awin bounds, and his nighbour’s within the mids … ’ [BR1640], ‘In the myds o’’ [JAHM], ‘Threh the mids o thir verra busses … ’ [ECS], ‘I the mids o’ Lammas fair’ [GW], a middle course, medium example, compromise – ‘There’s a guid mids! Bit A daarsay there’s a selly bit aboot uz an … ’ [ECS].

Midshaw see Meadshaw

Midshiel (mid-sheels) n. farm near the Teviot about 2 miles north-east of Hawick, just north of Briery Yards, nestled between the Teviot and the old railway line. A mound nearby is said to be the site of a cottage that was covered over when the residents had the plague; this may be the same as the round cairn, planted with trees, which is about 300 m north-west of the house (on the opposite side of the road, near the railway, marked ‘Tumulus’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map) and about 25 m in diameter. There is also an ancient standing stone, just to the north-east of the cairn; this is about 2.3 m high, 4-sided and more than 2 m around at the base. Aerial photography has revealed signs of an enclosure in the field to the north of the house. Redemption money was paid for the lands (along with Appletreehall) by Alexander Scott of Howpasley and Abington in 1470. Superiority of the lands (along with Appletreehall and parts of Hassendean) were forfeited after the execution of Alexander, Lord Home in 1516, passing to James Lundie, but returning to George, Lord Home, probably in 1522. Robert Scott of Howpasley and his wife Isobel Murray had a charter of the lands in 1536, when they were part of the barony of Hassendean, with superior being Alexander, Lord Home. It was probably owned (along with Appletreehall) by Walter Scott of Howpasley before that. It passed to Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside in 1578/9 and then his son Walter Scott of Howpasley in 1588. In 1611 it was confirmed to Philip Scott of Dryhope by the superior Alexander Cranston of Mordiston. Walter Scott of Midshiel was recorded in 1628. It was a tenanted farm of the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the late 17th century. Some women from here were supposedly involved in the dispute over the removal of Hassendean Kirk’s roof to Roberton in the late 17th century. It was part of the lands of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton in 1678. The Laird of Newton (probably Francis Scott) was living there in 1694, when he paid tax for having 7 hearths. Walter Scott of Crumhaugh was living there in 1722 and 1724, Robert Turnbull and Richard Turnbull in 1729 and William Turnbull and Robert Turnbull in 1733–36 and Andrew Stewart and Walter Grieve in 1737. Walter Scott of Crumhaugh was living there in 1742 and Gideon Scott was there in 1747. Rebecca Scott paid the window tax on 16 windows there in 1748. Capt. John Douglas of Cavers purchased the estate from the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the mid-1700s. After his death in 1786 it was inherited by the son of his cousin, who was Archibald Douglas of Adderstone. Archibald Douglas owned the farm by 1788 (and still recorded that way in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £235. It was later the home of miller John White. The Douglases sold the land to William Turnbull of Fenwick in 1852, who sold it in 1896 to Rutherford Shells. The level area in front of the house was used on several occasions for reviewing the Border Mounted Rifles. The road to Hawick passing near here was improved in 1775. The house is a grade B listed building – ‘And there were three wives in Midshielis, And three in Bridieyairds; And they’re awei to the Kirk o’ Hassendean, And left baith wheel and cairds’ [T] (it is marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Midshielis’, on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Meadsheills’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Medsheills’; it was recorded as ‘Mydshelis’ in 1535 and 1536, ‘meidshelis’ in 1561/2, ‘Midshells’ in 1628, ‘Midsheills’ in 1681, ‘Meidsheils’ in 1678, ‘Meitchels’ in 1694, ‘Meatsheils’ in 1711, ‘mitches’ in 1724, ‘medsheils’ in 1729, ‘Mitsheils’ in 1737, ‘Meetshielis’ in 1821 and ‘Midshields’ in 1841).

Midsideshaw (mid-sid-shaw) n. former lands in the Rule valley, described a a ‘pendicle’ of ‘Woollie’ (i.e. Wolfelee) in 1659 (it is possible this is an error for ‘Macksideshaw’).

Mid Sike (mid-sik) n. small stream on the north side of the Borthwick valley. It joins the Hoscote Burn just below Black Sike.

Midsummer (mid-su-mur) n. formerly in Scotland this was June 24th, sometimes used as a term day – ‘geifand a penny of the wsuale mone of Midsummer Fair

Scotland at the Fest of Nativet of Sant Jhone the Baptist, callit Mydsomer . . . ’ [SB1500].

Midsummer Fair (mid-su-mur-făr) n. former fair taking place at various dates in the Summer in Hawick. In 1670 it happened on 24th June, actually close to the middle of Summer. However, it was on 5th July in the 18th century. It was moved to 17th July (the day before the St. Boswells Fair) in 1799. It was set up as a fair and market for cattle, wool and linen goods, and ceased around the middle of the 19th century.

Mile see Mei

Milbank (mil-angk) n. Sir Frederick Acclom (1820–98) of Well (near Ripon), M.P. and famous sportsman of his times. He holds one of the records for the most grouse shot in a single day (2,070 in a party with 6 guns in 1872). He took part in a celebrated early cricket match at Borthwickbrae in the 1840s, and at the return game on the Upper Haugh drove the ball from the Upper Haugh into the Under Haugh. He was recorded in a directory of 1852 living at Borthwickbrae. Along with his wife he presented a silver chalice, paten and wine flagon to St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

Mileburn see Millburn

Miles (milz) n. Francis (b.1705) son of Richard. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for ‘periewigmaker’ Robert (surely a relative, perhaps his brother). In 1723 in Hawick he married Isabel Phaup or ‘Phape’. Their children included: Margaret (b.1723); Jean (b.1724); Thomas (b.1726); Robert (b.1728); Gideon (b.1730); William (b.1737); and Francis (b.1740). The witnesses in 1730 were Richard and Robert (probably his father and other relative). Francis (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Mary Hair. Their children included Isobel (b.1743). He could be the same man as the barber, if he married twice. Francis (18th C.) married Margaret Riddell in Hawick in 1758. He could be the barber of that name who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott and Ann ‘Doeg’ in 1758. He could be the Francis who witnessed a baptism for wig-maker Robert in 1766. James (19th C.) married Isabella Hessel in Hawick in 1869. Their son Adam may have drowned in a pool near the Flex. Mr. (16th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1579. James Burn, indweller in Selkirk, owed him 5 half firlots of meal. His forename is not recorded. Richard (17th/18th C.) wig-maker in Hawick. In 1697 someone was convicted of stealing ‘ane laced pinner’ from his wife. In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Brown, ‘Headhouse younger’. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for Robert (who was surely closely related). He may be the same Richard who married Agnes Lindsay in Hawick in 1705 and whose children included: Francis (b.1705), also a wigmaker; and Richard (b.1707). The witnesses in 1707 were gardener James Falside and merchant Thomas Hardie. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Martha Bell and their son Richard was baptised in 1714. The witnesses in 1714 were Richard (who was surely either his father or brother) and John Nordell. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘periewiggmaker’ in Hawick in 1725. Also in 1725 he was ‘wigmaker’ when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Scott. He married Jean Cook in Hawick in 1715. Their children included: Mary (b.1716); Isobella (b.1718); Agnes (b.1719); Margaret (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); and Robert (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were Francis (who was surely related) and John Scott ‘Whitegates’. Robert (18th C.) wig-maker in Hawick. He married Rachel Nicol (perhaps this was the 2nd marriage of the wigmaker Robert who had married Jean Cook). Their children included Mary (b.1737). The witnesses to her baptism were merchant William Oliver junior and Kirk Officer John Telfer. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1758); Margaret (b.1760); and an unnamed child (b.1762). Robert (18th C.) wig-maker in Hawick, who married Ann Elliot. Their children included: William (b.1764); Catherine (b.1766); William (again, b.1768); and Robert (b.1775). The witnesses in 1764 were Francis and John (with the surnames hard to read) and in 1766 were Francis Miles (surely a close relative) and Archibald Elliot. He could be the Robert whose daughter Agnes died in Hawick in 1777. He could be son of the earlier wig-maker of the same name (or he married twice with a big gap). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Atkin in Hawick in 1796. He could be the stockmaker recorded in the Militia ballot in 1799 among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. He could be the barber who died in 1805. Robert (d.1805) local barber, son of Francis. His children included: James, who married Isabella Hessel; and unnamed children who died in 1805 and 1808 – ‘Robert Miles the barber, and Michael up the stair, Willie Tully makes the wigs, and Jenny buys the hair’ [T]. Robert (b.1812/3) stocking-maker living on O’Connell Street in 1841 and in Wiltion Kirkstyle in 1851. He married Janet Bramwell. Their children included: Robert (b.1836); John; Euphemia; James; David; and Agnes. His older sister Elizabeth also lived with him. He could be the Robert who died in 1877. Robert (b.1836) son of Robert, he worked as a fuller in Wiltion. In 1851 he was living on Langlands Bank. He married Ann Stewart and their children included Agnes and Robert. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the William born to Robert and Ann Elliot in Hawick in 1768 (also formerly written ‘Myles’).

Milestone Peth (mɪl-stən-peth) n. former name for a path between Ashbank and Honeyburn. The path went to the south from the main Hawick-Denholm road (A698), crossing a small hill that was removed to straighten the road. It is now by-passed by the modern course of the main road. There was once a ford across the Teviot at the foot of the path. It is now marked on the Ordnance Survey map through the name of the wood alongside the A698 near there. The name derived from a milestone that was once on the road near there, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, showing 4 miles to Hawick and 16 miles to Kelso.

Milestone (mɪl-stæn) n., pl. formerly, numbered markers by the side of a road, set out at intervals of 1 mile. Wood’s 1824 map show a mile stone near the present position of the Horse.

Milfield Plain see Millfield Plain

the Military Hospital (θu-mi-li’-u-ree-hosp-i’-ul) n. hospital in Hawick for treating wounded soldiers during WWI. It was also known as ‘Hawick War Hospital’, where?? Patients were banned from visiting licensed premises.

the Militia (θu-mi-li-sha) n. an army distinct from the professional army, being the forerunner of today’s Territorial Army. The history of the militia goes back for hundereds of years, although locally it is relevant only in the 17th to 19th centuries. In Hawick the term was applied to one of a number of partly voluntary forces, although technically distinct from the Volunteers and the Yeomanry. There are records of court cases involving ‘his Majesty’s Militia’ from the 1660s, when money was raised and men were selected to serve by ballot; in 1688 2 men were fined for fleeing the Town when they were recruiting and in 1694 2 men were admitted as Honorary Burgesses for serving ‘as militia hired men for the said town’. In 1796 a law was passed prescribing that each community should provide men or pay £25 each, which Hawick did for its quota of 3. In each parish, schoolmasters, assisted by constables, were meant to provide lists of all men between the ages of 19 and 30 (extended to 18 and 35), those serving to be chosen by ballot from such lists (although there were reasons for exceptions). Lists for each parish were drawn up in the period 1797–1802; there was some resistance, with officials being harassed and some copies of lists destroyed, as recorded in the surviving Lieutenancy Book for the Count of Roxburgh. The men joined the ‘4th Regiment of the North British Militia’. From the county there were 68 men balloted in 1799. Initially such forces were under the command of the Lord Lieutenants of each county. Men had to commit to a certain number of days of service (21 days annually) over 5 years, during which they could be called up in times of need. Militia units were very active in the late 18th century, with the threat of French invasion. Hawick was the rallying place for the upper troop of Roxburghshire Yeomanry, while the early 19th century saw the Roxburgh Militia active. The 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia was established in 1810 and based at Jedburgh, with the 2nd Regiment based at Kelso. The men in these units were drawn by ballot (between the ages of 19 and 30), served for 4 years, and were not allowed to find substitutes. The would only train within the county, unless invasion or rebellion broke out. There is a record of messages being posted at schoolhouses in Selkirkshire in 1813, describing the ballotting process. The Dumfries Militia, which was more like a semi-professional unit, recruited in Hawick in the early part of the 19th century.

the Milk Drum (θu-milk-drum) n. former popular name for the hospitality offered to the Drums and Fifes on the Friday morning around 7 a.m. The tradition is said to have started when Mrs. Hardie, proprietor of the dairy, offered one of the ailing members of the band some fresh milk in 1871. It was continued by Hardie’s and then the Brown family (at what point rum may have been added is not known!).

milkit (mil-kee’,-ki’) pp. milked – ‘When bonnye Jeanye Roole she milket the yowes I` the buchte aboon the lynne ...’ [JTe].
Milkstweet Willie’s Thorn

Milkstweet Willie’s Thorn (milk-swee’-wi-leex-thörn) n. ancient thorn bush at Newmill, associated with the ballad ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’ (see also Sweet Milk).

Milk-the-kye (milk-thu-kI) n., arch. the dock weed in its seed-bearing stage.

Mill (mil) n. a factory, building containing manufacturing machines, particularly referring to a knitwear factory. ‘The mill’ is a familiar name for one of the main town factories. The first factories in Hawick appeared in the late 18th century, for the manufacture of linen tapes and carpets. Spinning and weaving then moved from being domestic operations, to being organised in large factories. Through the 19th century these dominated employment in the Town. Working conditions were poor to start with; it is recorded in the 1830s that the standard working week was 6 a.m. to 7 p.m., Monday to Saturday, with night shifts coming in at about that time. Women were employed as well as men, but traditionally in different jobs, and with children working as ‘piecers’ from about the age of 9. In earlier times the word referred exclusively to a corn mill, which in older records would be ‘miln’ – ‘...Mind, aw’m getting the hang o’ it And next year, for the mill aw’ll maybe no yearn’ [AY], ‘There’s a little town that’s nestling ‘mid the glory of the hills, Where the smoke goes rising slowly from the busy, scattered mills’ [WFC].

The Mill Acre (thu-mil-ä-kur) n. former name for a triangle of land north of Wellington Street, bounded by Wilton Path and Langlands Road (presumably once connected with Roughheugh Mill).

Mill Acre (mil-ä-kur) n. former name for lands associated with Belses Mill. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew (it is ‘Mylne aiker’ in 1678 and ‘Mlynacker’ in 1684).

Millbank (mil-bawngk) n. another name for the Mill Path. It may also have been the name of the hosiery factory built there for Robert Ewen and later part of Hogg’s Mill. Houses in this area were removed to make way for the railway to Carlisle in about 1860 (‘Mill Bank Street’ is recorded in the 1851 census).

Millbank Hoose (mil-bawngk) n. house on the Mill Path, once the residence of Provost and manufacturer Robert Ewen.

Millburn (mil-burn) n. former lands located roughly where Hermitage village is. In 1718 it was included along with Over Closs and several other farmsteads in the survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. ‘Overcloss alias Milburnholme’ was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. In 1839 in the New Statistical Survey it was reported that the Nine Stane Rig within the bounds of this farm. A flint found near here is in Hawick Museum – ‘Now, wae be to thee, Armstrong o’ Millburn! And O an ill death may’st thou dee! Through thee we have lost brave Lairistan, But his equal thou wilt never be’ [ES] (also written ‘Milburn’; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Milburne’, on the Buccleuch survey as ‘Millburne’ and is probably the ‘Milholme’ of Sandison’s c.1590 map).

Millburnholm (mil-burn-höm) n. former farm where the Whitrope Burn meets the Hermitage Water, at the modern location of Hermitage village. This was probably the farm of ‘Jame of Milbourne home’ (most likely an Elliot) recorded in 1587/8. William Henderson was tenant there in 1694. It was included along with Over Closs, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. The former farmhouse was visited by Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed in 1792, and was at that time the last of the old style cottages in the district. It was a single storey at one end, with an extra storey at the other end, and with tiny windows looking through the thatched roof. Willie Elliot was farmer there at that time, and still recorded in 1797. Robert Elliot was farmer there in 1821 and 1841. There is a linear earthwork there, running east from the B6399 at least to the next stream, possibly all the way to the Roughley Burn (it is ‘Mylburnholme’ in 1694, ‘Milburnholm’ in 1797 and ‘Millburn Holm’ in 1821; it is ‘Milburnholme’ and ‘Millburnholm’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Mill Cornet (mil-kör-ni) n. a mock Cornet selected in one of the local knitwear factories. Usually it was the youngest apprentice, and in the larger mills there were also Cornet’s Lasses, as well as Right- and Left-Hand Men and their Lasses, with those selected being the youngest 3 male and female employees. They would wear the same jackets and hats each year, and the party would go round the various ‘flats’, entertaining the workforce. The practice took place from about 1790s, including Braemar, Hawick Cashmere, John Laing’s, Johnstone’s, Lyle & Scott’s, Pesco’s, Pringle’s, Turner & Rutherford’s and Woodcock’s. The tradition largely died out in the 1970s, but is still continued by a few companies.

Millcote (mil-ko’) n. lands in Lidderdale recorded on a rental roll from about 1376, and associated with the Mangerton estate. They are listed as ‘Mylnicotis’ and with a value of 10 shillings.

mill-door (mil-dör) n., arch. entrance to a mill – ‘Saying ‘She has a mouth like (or as big as) a mill-door (= one very large and gaping)’ [GW].

the Millennium Nature Trail (thu-mi-len-ce-um-ná-char-tráil) n. nature trail laid out in Wilton Lodge Park around 2000. There is an accompanying leaflet that describes the trail, which starts from the Museum.

the Millennium Stane (thu-mi-len-ce-um-stān) n. commemorative standing stone placed on the Miller’s Knowes in 2000, inscribed – ‘Look back on Bonnie Teviotside, and Hawick Among the Hills’. It was brought from a quarry near Jedburgh.

miller (mi-lur) n. person who runs a corn mill, having a special status within a barony – ‘Ee’ve the cheek o’ (or as muckle impetence as) the miller’s horse’ [GW], ‘ti droon the miller’ meant to add too much water to dough, liquor, etc. (see also millers).

Miller (mi-lur) n.
- Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1690 and for Francis in 1691 (possibly his sons).
- Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Cauldmill in 1723. His children included: James (b.1721); and Adam (b.1723).
- Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Appletreehall in 1724. He married Elspeth ‘moor’ and their children included Bessie (b.1724), with witnesses John and Walter Scott.
- Adam (b.c.1753) originally from Robertson Parish, he was living in Denholm in 1788, 1793, 1798 and 1800. He is recorded as ‘independent’ on the 1841 Hawick census, living somewhere on Buccleuch Street. He may be the ‘Mr. Miller’ marked on Buccleuch Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He married Rachel Scott in Crailing Parish in 1784. Their children included (the first 2 baptised in Crailing and the rest in Robertson Parish): William (b.1786), baptised in Crailing; Adam (b.1788), Thomas (b.1790) and John (b.1793), baptised in Cavers; and an unnamed child (b.1792). Alexander (b.1796), Charles (b.1798), twins Janet and Elizabeth (b.1800), and Robert (b.1803), baptised in Robertson. John (b.c.1801) may have been another child.
- Alexander (18th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £27. His son was probably William, who owned the same lands in 1678.
- Alexander (18th C.) weaver at ‘…head’ in Wilton Parish, according to his headstone. He married Marion Smith, who died in 1769, aged 59, and is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery.
- Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gripenowe in 1786. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Mary (b.1783); William (b.1786); and John (b.1787).
- Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at Teindside Bridge, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls.
- Alexander (1867–1947) from Ayton in Berwickshire, he served as Stationmaster at several locations, including Hawick in about 1915.
- Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of North Shields. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had a local connection.
- Andrew (19th C.) married Eliza Thomson in Wilton in 1852.
- Andrew ‘The Marquis’ (19th/20th C.) son of a coal agent in Hawick. There is a story told of him pulling Peter Laidlaw’s leg by recounting a dream in which he was in Hell and the Devil tells him to get off his seat, saying ‘Ee’ve nae richt there; it’s reserved for Peter Laidlaw’.
- Charles (18th C.) resident of Wilton Old Cemetery. In 1757 he witnessed baptisms for carrier Thomas Black and for weaver David (who was surely related, perhaps his brother). In 1760 he witnessed baptisms for weaver David (who was surely related to him) and John Scott. He married Ann Blaikie and their daughter Ann was baptised in Hawick in 1758. He may be the Charles whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1787 and whose son David died in 1808. He is probably the Charles, father-in-law to stocking-maker Thomas Scott, whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1816 (in which case Isabel was his daughter). He could be the son of John and Helen Paterson born in Hawick in 1723.
- Charles (18th C.) resident at Chapelhill in 1775 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson Parish.
- Charles (18th/19th C.) married Janet Easton in Hawick in 1798.
- Christian (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house on Silver Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. She is probably the Christian at ‘Slitrigge Bridge’ and described as ‘independent’ on the 1841 census. She could be the Christian, daughter of James and Christian Winthrope, who was born in Hawick in 1785. David (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for workman John Douglas. Probably the same David witnessed a baptism for James Thomson in Weensland in 1704. David (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he was perhaps in Burngrove (the entry is hard to read) when his daughter Jean was baptised. William Miller and Adam Scott were witnesses. He may be the David who married Bessie Scott and whose son Walter was baptised. William Miller and Adam Scott were witnesses. He may be the David who married Bessie Scott and whose son Walter was baptised in Wilton in 1695. David (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded as witness to several baptisms in 1702, 1704, 1705, 1706, 1708, 1709 and 1712. He thus seems likely to have either been an elder of the Kirk or held an office within the Incorporation of Weavers. He is probably the David who witnessed baptisms for Walter White in 1712 and 1731. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for James Dickson, the other witness being weaver William (who was surely related). His son John was baptised in Hawick in 1700, with witnesses Walter Turnbull and Patrick Richardson. He is probably the David who was fined in 1716 for calling Isobel Anderson a liar in court. He is probably the David who witnessed baptisms in 1718 for shoemaker John Gardner and for John Scott ‘Whitegates’. He and John (perhaps his son) were witnesses to a baptism for William Gledstains in 1721. David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He may have been son of the earlier David. In 1723 he married Margaret, daughter of the deceased Walter Armstrong in Weensland. Their children included: Margaret (b.1724); and David (b.1728). The witnesses in 1728 were William Tudhope and weaver John (probably his brother). David (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included: William (b.1733); and Helen (b.1736). David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick, perhaps related to the earlier David. He may be the David, son of David and Margaret Armstrong, baptised in Hawick in 1728. He married Helen Wright in 1756 and their children included: Jean (b.1757); John (b.1760); Helen (b.1761); and Robert (b.1763). Weaver Charles Miller witnessed the 1760 baptism and was surely related. The witnesses in 1757 were weavers John Gray and Charles (who was surely related). He could be the David who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He could be the weaver David whose death is recorded in 1810 when he ‘Drowned himself in Sliitrigg’. He could be the David whose son Francis died in 1781. David (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Isabel (b.1772); John (b.1773); John (again, b.1773); David (b.1778); and William (b.1782). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. He is probably the David who (along with weaver Robert Douglas) in 1774 witnessed a baptism for weaver Archibald Douglas; the next baptismal entry was for his own child in 1773, with the witnesses being weavers Robert and Archibald Douglas. David (18th/19th C.) labourer in Hawick. In 1798 he acted as substitute for John Kennedy, mason of Minto, in the ballot for men serving in the Militia. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Agnes Scott, who was also from Hawick. David (18th/19th C.) tailor in Newcastle. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence must have had a local connection. David (b.1795) son of Thomas. He emigrated to America in 1817, settling in Bovina, New York. In 1817 he married Nancy, daughter of Scotsman John Thomson. His 2nd wife was Isabella, daughter of Bailie ‘Tammy’ Turnbull. Their daughter Isabella Wilson married John Robertson Hoy. Many letters survive, sent to him from his family members in the Borthwick valley. Elizabeth (17th C.) recorded in 1695 when she was convicted of theft in Hawick. She was banished ‘out of the Ports of the town’, with the Burgh Officers announcing that no one should habour or reset her. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (d.1720) recorded being in Wiltonburn when her funeral took place in Wilton Parish. She may have been related to Robert, who was blacksmith at Borthaugh. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Turnbull and their children included: Adam (b.1685); Helen (b.1700); Thomas (b.1703); Walter (b.1706); and Sarah (b.1708). In 1691 he was married to ‘Bessie’ Turnbull (probably an error) when his daughter Isobel was baptised, with witnesses Adam Miller and James Neill. George (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son James was baptised in 1742. George (19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1763. George (1777/8–1849) sawyer in Hawick, son of Janet Kedie, who died in 1832, aged 75. He could be the wright recorded in Denholm on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. In 1841 he was resident at about 71 High Street and recorded as ‘independent’. He was living with his sister Isabel (who died. in 1841, aged 50), as well as a servant, Janet Hume. He could be the Miller who gave his name to the adjacent close. He is buried in St. Mary’s. George (19th C.) resident of Teviothead Parish. He married Jane Armstrong and their children included: Christian (b.1835); Margaret (b.1837); Mary (b.1839); Helen (b.1841); Jessie (b.1843); Alexander (b.1846); and Isabella (b.1848). George (b.1829/30) born in Ancrum Parish. He was a flour miller living on the Cross Wynd in 1851. In 1850 he married Jane, daughter of Archibald Holbkirk from Jedburgh and their children included Robert. George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anne Baillie and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1852. James (16th C.) notary, probably in Jedburgh. In 1574 he was notary for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and other Turnbills in their bond of service with Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he witnessed a baptism for Patrick Redford. He married Margaret Redford in 1656 and their children included Isobel (b.1657), Robert (b.1659) and Thomas (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were Thomas Maben and James Wallace. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Thomson and their children included: Margaret (b.1670); and Janet (b.1673). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Allan and their children included Isobel (b.1675). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1689. The witnesses were William Bell in Whitchesters and weaver John Turnbull. He could also be the James whose son Robert was baptised in Wilton in 1702. James (17th C.) from Lochburnfoot, he lived at Harwoodskefoot. He was said to be a Covenanter and once carried a child to the top of Ruberslaw to be baptised. He may be the same as one of the others Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) weaver living at Slaidhills. In 1717 he married Bessie Wilson in Hawick. Their son Thomas was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1730, when he was recorded living at Branzholme. James (17th/18th C.) proprietor of the main inn in Denholm in 1745, when the Highlander army passed through. The officers apparently stayed at the inn. It is said that a servant stole the paybag of the army, but it was returned after there was a threat to burn down the village. James (b.c.1725) gardener, one of the 6 representative Burgesses appointed to perambulate and define the boundaries of the Burgh’s land in 1767, during court proceedings for the division of the Common. He could be the James who married Jean Gledstains in Wilton in 1741 and had children including: Margaret (b.1743) and Betty (b.1761), baptised in Hawick; John (b.1748), William (b.1749), Thomas (b.1751), Thomas (again, b.1752), Isaac (b.1754) and Halbert (b.1756), baptised in Melrose; and James (b.1742) and Albert (b.1758), baptised in Wilton. In 1742 this James was in Appletreehall and the baptismal witnesses were Anthony Turnbull of Knowe and Robert Wilson. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Northhousehaugh in 1772 when his daughter Mary was baptised. James (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick who subscribed to 2 copies of Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the James paid by the Council in 1771 for ‘making poor’s list’. He may be the James who married Christian Wintrope (probably sister of the writer James) in 1772, with children: Walter (b.1772); Thomas (1774–1819), also a writer in Hawick; Jane (b.1775), who married Jospheh Peacock; James (b.1777); Andrew (b.1779); Margaret (b.1781); and Christian (b.1785). In 1876 his daughter Janet had a paternity case against John Scott of Ladylaw Place.

Sir Ronald Andrew Baird (1937–) born and educated in Edinburgh, he trained as a chartered accountant and worked in London and the Midlands before returning to Scotland in 1968 to join Dawson International. He became a Director in 1976 and from 1982-95 he was Chairman and Chief Executive, helping Dawson to become one of Scotland’s leading companies, with Pringle’s being one of its main assets. However, this period also saw the decline of Pringle’s and knitwear in Hawick generally. In 1995 he was effectively forced to resign after poor performance by Dawson, and his hefty compensation package caused some protest at the time. He was Chairman of the Scottish Textile Association 1992–5. He was Chief Guest at the 1993 Common Riding. He received the C.B.E. in 1975 and a knighthood in 1993. Mr. ?? stationmaster of Hawick Station in the early 20th century. Simon (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was also there in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, resident there. He and Walter Scott were described as tenants in Hawick Shiel in 1706 when they witnessed a baptism for James Davidson, also tenant in Hawick Shiel. He was joint tenant of Hawick Shiel (along with Walter Scott) in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1716 he (and Walter Nixon, also at Hawick Shiel) witnessed a baptism for James Borthwick, shepherd at Hawick Shiel. He may be Simon, married to a Murray, who had an unnamed child baptised in Hawick Parish in 1683. Thomas (17th C.) listed as tenant at Mervinslaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the Thomas married to an Easton whose son John was baptised in Wilton in 1697; the witnesses were Robert and William Scott. Alternatively he could be the Thomas, married to Jean Culbertson, whose daughter Jean was baptised in 1694. Thomas (17th C.) joint tenant along with John ‘Bue’ in Timbersidemill according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. They were recorded as having ‘an kiln betuixt thm’. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His son Alexander was baptised in 1703. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Marion Hobkirk in Cavers Parish in 1708. He may be the Thomas who was at Ormiston in 1709 when his son William was baptised and at Hummelknowes in 1717 when his son John was baptised in Cavers. William (b.1709), Margaret (b.1712), Marion (b.1714), John (b.1717), Robert (b.1719) and Janet (b.1721) are probably also his children. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Grizel Graham and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1745. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Murray and their children included: Janet (b.1745); Janet (again, b.1747): William (b.1749); John (b.1751); Thomas (b.1753); Robert (b.1755); Jane (b.1760); James (b.1762); and Francis (b.1765). He could be the gardener Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1761 for shoemaker John Oliver. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included Elizabeth (b.1771), William (b.1774) and Robert (b.1777). Thomas (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Kelso. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785-88. He was a carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was surely related to Robert, who was also a carrier. He may be the Thomas, married to Agnes Smith, whose children (baptised in Hawick) included: John (b.1775); Agnes (b.1777); James (b.1781);
and James (again, b.1784). The witnesses in 1781 were shoemaker Charles Wilson and tailor Walter Pringle. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Robert Grieve in 1763 and another for Robert Lamb in 1781. An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1787. He is probably the Thomas whose father John died in Hawick in 1790; if so he was probably born in 1744. Thomas (d.1794) Kirk Officer whose death is recorded in Hawick. He was Kirk Officer when he witnessed baptisms in 1784 for shoemaker James Cheap, in 1786 for John Stewart and (along with shoemaker George Gardner) for shoemaker John Wiens, in 1788 for watchmaker John Stewart, and in about 1789 for John Lamb. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Chesterhill in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton. His unnamed child died in 1808. Thomas (1774–1819) son of writer James. He was recorded as a writer on the 1799 list for the Militia ballot. He was a ‘writer’ when he witnessed baptisms for Joseph Peacock and Jean (his sister) in 1799, 1801, 1805, 1806 and 1808. He is probably the Thomas of Hawick recorded in a document in Selkirk in 1807 and the Hawick writer recorded in letters of 1814, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He is still listed as a writer when he died in Hawick. Thomas (d.bef. 1835) resident of Deanburnhaugh, probably a tenant farmer. His father was probably James and his brother John, joiner at Roberton. He was recorded living at Highchesters in 1801. He was Beadle at Roberton Kirk. In 1791 he married Agnes Laidlaw in Hawick, the pair both recorded being from Hawick Parish. In 1812 he secondly married Isabella Scott in Roberton. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: William (b.1791), who emigrated to Bovina, New York; David (b.1795), who also emigrated to Bovina; John (b.1797), who was factor at Traquair; Christina (‘Cirsty’, b.1799), who moved to Bovina and married James Fletcher from Ettrick; and Berry Shaw (b.1801), named after the local minister, who joined his brothers. He lost an eye to a cow’s horn in about 1822. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Catherine Jamieson and their children included: Ann (b.1842); James (b.1845); Margaret (b.1848); John (b.1850); and Janet (b.1854). William (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Whillans and their son Thomas was baptised in 1848. William (b.1831/1) from Teviothead. In 1861 he was living at Borthwickhead Schoolhouse and working as a ‘Teacher of English, reading etc.’ William (b.1836/7) ‘Millwright Fitter’ in Selkirk in 1861. He was born in Hawick, married Christina and their children included John E. and Christina S. William ‘Willie’ (19th C.) one of 3 men who instigated the Hawick Home Mission in 1872. He was the first President when the Mission was formally founded in the next year. Either he or a later William was leader of the Hawick Home Mission choir for 25 years in the early part of the 20th century. Rev. William Carrick (1858–1915) born in Glasgow, son of Andrew and Margaret Carrick. He was educated at the Church of Scotland Normal School and Glasgow University, and licensed to preach in 1881. He became assistant at St. George’s, Paisley and was ordained at Howwood Chapel in 1883. He was first Minister of the new Wellington Church in 1886 and first minister of the newly created St. Margaret’s Parish in 1896. He was a guest at the 1890 Colour Bussing. He was translated to Yetholm in 1898. He married Margaret Walker, daughter of Thomas McQueen in 1887, and she died in 1894. He secondly married Johanna, daughter of John Bonthron in 1901. His children included William Bonthron Carrick and John Bonthron (formerly spelled ‘Millar’ and ‘Milner’). millers (mi-lurz) n. people in charge of corn mills. In Hawick the mill was at the Mill Port, moving to the Mill Path in the late 18th century, and the miller had grazing rights and grew corn at the Millers Knowes. Hawick’s millers have included: John Dempster in 1622; William Patter son 1680s; Walter Elliot, at least 1709–1714 Robert Elliot 1720s; James Scott 1730s; Adam Scott in 1784; John Ainslie late 1700s; John Oliver 1820s to 1840s; and John Young Scott mid-1800s. the Miller’s (thu-mi-lurz) n. the Miller’s Knowes, a hilly area between Weensland Road and the Orchard Road, reached via the iron gate and path off Weensland Road, or from the Braid Road. It is named after the miller of the old Hawick corn mill, who for centuries grew corn and had grazing rights there. The area was made notorious after a man called John Webster committed suicide in the old quarry there in 1748. It has been a public park since 1892, part being purchased from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1920, and the rest gifted in 1930. It is now officially known as Miller’s Knowes Park, and offers spectacular views of the town, and is also used by children for sledding and sliding, as well as dog walkers and others. The Independent Broadcasting Authority leased part of the summit for 60 years for a microwave transmitter in 1962 (used as a relay for the Selkirk transmitter), and a BMX track was constructed in 1985 (but closed in the late 1990s... due to continual bad weather). It is also home to a playground, the Millennium Stone and nearby memorial seat (to Frank T. Scott). It was once properly known as ‘Galalaw Knowes’ – ‘Sae lasses braw an’ callants a’ Where better mak’ your vows, Than where the hill o’looks the toon – The bonnie Miller’s Knowes’ [WFC].

Miller’s Close (mi-lurz-kłös) n. popular 19th century name for a passageway located at 69 High Street. It was named after someone by the name of Miller, whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. Local historian Robert Murray’s family lived there (also written ‘Millar’s Close’).

the Miller’s Knowes (thu-mi-lurz-nowz) n. full name of the Miller’s – ‘And so it was in Hawick town, Nearby the Miller’s Knowes, We pledged our troth together there, With all a lover’s vows’ [WFC], ‘Some summer day again we’ll gang To wander through the verdant howes, And greet dear Memories amang The gentle, windin’ Millers Knowes’ [WP].

Millfield Plain (mil-feeld-plän) n. land-locked valley near Wooler in Northumberland, between the Tweed and Till rivers, close to the final battle site of Flodden Field. It was once the base of a prehistoric lake, and traditionally associated with King Arthur. It was also the scene of a minor battle in August 1513. Lord Home’s raiding party was ambushed by Sir William Bulmer’s men, resulting in heavy losses for the Scots. This event is also referred to as the ‘Ill Raid’ and was a forerunner for Flodden about a month later. It is also associated with the battle of Homildon Hill and a much earlier Saxon battlefield – ‘...Not all the snow on Millfield Plain Could make those white blades white again!’ [WHO] (the name is probably p-Celtic in origin).

Millholm (mil-høm) n. place marked as ‘Milholm’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debateable Land. It appears to be near the modern Hermitage village, and is probably the same place as Millburn. It may be the ‘mylnholme’ where Walter Turnbull is recorded as tenant in 1694 (but is hard to distinguish from Millholm, which is further to the south).

Millholm Cross (thu-mil-høm-kros) n. ancient carved cross just south of Newcastleton, on the west side of the Canonbie road. It probably commemorates Alexander Armstrong, Laird of Mangerton, who was killed in 1320 and his body laid here while his clansmen rested on their way to Ettleton churchyard. The original part of the cross is about 10 feet high, including the base, and it has a modern top. The shaft has the letters ‘MA’ and ‘AA’, together with a carved sword. The Armstrong Clan Trust erected a nearby plaque. It is said to have been used as a local meeting place, where transactions were carried out, servants hitted and feuds settled. Probably the farm here is the ‘Mylneholm’ with a value of 15 shillings, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 – ‘The Cross at Millholm, which perpetuates the name Of gallant Lord Mangerton, peer-less in fame’ [DA] (also called ‘Mylholm Cross’).

Millhouse (mil-høos) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll c.1376. They are listed there as ‘Milhehouse’, with a value of 5 shillings and 9 pence. In a rental roll of 1541 they are worth 15 shillings and leased to Thomas Armstrong, probably of Mangerton (it is ‘Mylhos’ in 1541).
Mill Hoose

Mill Hoose (mil-hoos) n. 2-storey house attached to the former Corn Mill on the Mill Path, also known as ‘Hawick Mill Hoose’ or ‘the Mill Hoose’. It was rebuilt 1862-3. It has a central pilaster door-piece and a simple elegance of construction. It is a grade C listed building.

Milligan (mi-lee-gin) n. Charles (19th/20th C.) son of William, and nephew of Provost Robert. He married Jane Beattie, whose mother was a Nichol of Craik and also related to Provost Renwick’s grandmother. He learned the upholstery trade from his uncle and started his own business. This was carried on as Milligan Brothers by his sons Robert and John. Christopher ‘Kit’ (??–20th C.) wrote ‘Riccarton Junction: memories of my life in this railway village’ (1994). He was born in the village and lived there until the railway closed, when he moved to Hawick. At the site of the Riccarton Junction North signal box an information panel has been erected in his memory. George (1775–1855) from Watten in Caithness, he was a joiner, cabinet-maker and undertaker in Hawick. He was father of Provost Robert, William (farmer in Denholm) and Sophia (who married Andrew Park and emigrated to America in 1857). He was an elder in the Relief Kirk. He was listed as a joiner and cabinet-maker on Moncrieff’s Close (an old name for Tannage Close) in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was living on Tannage Close in 1841 and in 1851 he was a lodger with clockmaker John Graham. He married Jane Paterson, sister of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson, who died in 1839, aged 54 (she had previously had a child with Frenchman M. Cabourne). He died suddenly stepping into a train carriage at Hawick station the morning after the Winter Fair. Together with his son Robert, the pair ran the family cabinet-maker’s for about 75 years. George Halberdier 1885–96. He worked for the Council and was officially a ‘District Officer’. He was thus the main Halberdier, who would organise the venues, etc., as well as reading the Proclamation and devolving the letter to the Cornet Elect. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1612 as ‘Johnne Amullieken, in Cruikis’. Along with Ninian Armstrong (son of Thomas) he was found guilty of helping John, Lord Maxwell, who was on the run for murder and treason. His farm was near Langholm, possibly the Crooks next to Westerkirk. He was sentenced to be hanged in Edinburgh. Rev. Robert (1836–88) son of Dumfries hosiery manufacturer William, he studied at Edinburgh University and New College. He was ordained as 2nd minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1863. He was quite evangelical in style, had a large bible class and introduced hymn singing to Wolfelee. He and his family contributed significantly to the fund for the new church building. It is said that he also laboured at the Free Church mission in Hawick and made designs for the new free Church in Newcastleton. He left Wolfelee in 1871 for the Chalmers Territorial Church in Dundee. He married Mary Spiers from Glasgow in 1863, and she died in 1906. Their children were: Jane (b.1865), born in Hobkirk, married Robert White in Lancashire; Amelia Baxter (b.1867), born in Hockirk, married Carl Ludwig Arter from Zurich and settled in Tehran; Phoebe (b.1869), born in Hobbirk, married Rev. Frederick Arthur Taylor; and William (b.1874), born in Dundee, who was either a businessman in Tehran or moved to Alberta, Canada. He drowned while bathing at Montrose while on holiday with his family, on the eve of celebrating 25 years in the ministry. Robert (1821–1892) born on Common Riding morning, his mother was a sister of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. He became a cabinet-maker and undertaker and was well-known for his repartee as an auctioneer. In 1851 he was listed as a joiner on Moncrieff’s Close. His later business premises were at 80 High Street, where the Liberal Club was later built. The house was set back and the yard in front was used for furniture sales. He was a Councillor for over 30 years, mainly for South High Street Ward, becoming a Magistrate (possibly for longer than anyone else), then acting-Provost in 1875, beating Edward Wilson by a single vote in the 1884 Council election and being Provost 1887–90. He was sometimes referred to as ‘the Bailyeh’. As a Councillor he was known to be blunt and outspoken. He had virtually no formal education and it is said that he rather gloried in this fact. Wilton Lodge Park was acquired during his Provostship. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, being Chairman of the Race Committee and he was the Provost referred to in J.E.D. Murray’s ‘Nicht Afore the Morn’. He was a School Board member, Parochial Board member, keen bowler (being on the founding committee of Hawick Bowling Club), Vice-President of the Curling Club, and a Conservative, although little involved in party politics. He was presented with a gold watch on his retirement as Provost. He married Margaret Hunter, daughter of the landlord of the Black Bull, and she died in 1856, aged 34. Their children were George and Robert, who died in infancy, Barbara Scott, Margaret, Mary (who married John Henderson) and Jane (who married John Little).
Milligan’s

He secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Smith, and she died in 1897, aged 70. Their children were Robert (also an auctioneer) and Janet. He is buried in the Wellogate, and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by Frank Wood in 1890, and said to have perhaps been damaged by a halberd!). Robert (1851/2–1931) son of William and nephew of Provost Robert. He became a cycle and motor mechanic and was known as a cheerful individual, who had great technical and creative skill, but less business acumen. He built a 1 1/2 horse power motor quadrocycle, which was essentially an early motor car. He also built many other mechanical devices, and was a keen early promoter of pneumatic tyres. He went into partnership with William Laidlaw and later with Alexander Bell, the firm Milligan & Bell being successful through most of the 20th century. Robert (1865–1906) son of Provost Robert and Margaret Smith. He carried on the auctioneering business after his father’s death, but it gradually petered out. He married Grace Bilby and their son Robert fought in WWI in the Canadian forces. Sandy born and raised in Denholm, he worked in textile engineering design, but in 1993 became a full-time artist. He specialises in Border landscapes using pastels. William (16th C.) Vicar of Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1545 as ‘Amuligane’. Nothing else appears to be known about him. William (19th C.) brother of Provost Robert, he was a farmer near Denholm. He married a Scott of Milsington and his children included: Charles, who became an upholsterer; and Robert, a bicycle and motor engineer (also written ‘Millican’).

Milligan’s (mi-lee-ginz) n. former popular name for the business premises at 80 High Street. The Milligan family lived there, with their cabinet-maker’s shop below.

Milligan’s Peth (mi-lee-ginz-peth) n. name sometimes used in the late 19th century for Brougham Place, after the cabinet-making business of Robert Milligan, which was at the foot of the street.

Millingwud Fell (mi-lin-wud-fel) n. Millingwood Fell, also formerly known as Millenwood Fell, a high hill in the west of Castleton Parish, near the source of the Hermitage Water. It reaches a height of 517 m, with the somewhat higher Scawd Bank just to the south (it appears to be ‘Millin Wod Fell’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, 'Mellenwood Fell' on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Millenwood-fell’ in the New Statistical Account).

mill lade (mil-lād) n. another term for a lade (possibly more common than simply ‘lade’).

millman (mil-man) n. occupation in the knitwear industry, someone who mills (or washes) garments after they have been knitted and joined together. This was generally carried out by a highly experienced worker, who could tell by the feel whether a garment had been fully milled.

Millmoor (mil-moor) n. lands in Liddesdale once attached to the estate of Mangerton. In a c.1376 rental roll they are listed as ‘Milnmore’ with a value of 2 shillings.

Millpeth see the Mill Peth

the Mill Peth (thu-mil-peth) n. Mill Path, a short street running from Slitrig Crescent to Wellogate Brae, named after Hawick Corn Mill and formerly known as Kilm Path. The original houses were constructed in 1849 and the county police station was once on this street. The lower part, including the old Salvation Army Hall, was demolished in 1968 to make way for new housing for elderly people. The Song Singing ceremony takes place here on the Friday of the Common Riding. The Cornet and mounted supporters are led up the Cross Wynd by the Drums and Fifes and at the top of the Mill Path the Cornet dismounts, thanking the riders as they pass. Then the Principles, Provost and Bailies walk down to the foot of the street for the Proclamation and the Song Singing. This takes place on a specially constructed platform on the north side (corner with Allars Crescent), which replaced the former site, the roof of Tibbie the Fiddler’s Cottage on the opposite side of the street. No 3 and the Corn Mill are listed buildings – ‘Owre the Mill Path swells the chorus, Flag and ribbons waving o’er us’ [RK].

Millport see Mill Port

Mill Pool (mil-pool) n. pool in the Teviot near Lanton Mill. The weir there was called ‘Lanton Cauld’.

Mill Port (mil-pōr) n. short piece of road along the side of the Slitrig, entered by steps opposite the Tower. It was originally the site of a gateway near the old Corn Mill, which was partly washed away in the flood of 1767 and the remains demolished. The ‘undermost house of the Mill Port’ was also carried away in the flood. The steps down from the High Street date at least from the early 19th century. It once contained a number of poor lodging-houses, being the site of a murder (resulting in Hawick’s last hanging) in 1814.
A thatched row of tenements, one with an outside staircase, was demolished in the 1860s (it is ‘milneport’ in 1708).

Mill Shot (mil-sho’) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. It is listed as ‘Colver Field, or Mill Shot’.

Millport Toor (mil-pör'-toor) n. former building on Mill Port. It may be the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ owned by the Scotts of Whitchesters in the early 16th century. This may be the same place once called the Lieutenant’s Tower and referred to as ‘the Peill’ in 1656. In a description of the great flood of 1767 it was said that the ‘old Milnport Tower is undermined and the walls rent’. It was probably demolished after that. There is a legend that it was connected by an underground passage to Drumlanrig’s Tower.

Millrig-quarter (mil-rig-kwar-tur) n. former name for lands in Belses. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew, and in 1684 when inherited by Sir Thomas’ nephew John. In 1684 it was described as 7 husbandlands of land (it is listed as ‘Mylirrigquarter’ in 1678 and ‘Mîlnerig quarter’ in 1684).

Millrig Sike (mil-rig-sîk) n. former name for lands in Belses, described in 1684 as 3 husbandlands in Belses ‘cum rivola vocata the Milnerig Sike’. The lands were presumably by a small stream or perhaps the mill lade.

mill-rynd (mil-ryn)., arch. the iron structure supporting the upper stone in a corn mill, a coin with an impression like the image of such – ‘...being £11 money of this realme therein, being three 4 merk peices coneyst (i.e. coined) with the milne rynd ...’ [BR1642].

mills (milz) n., pl. corn mills, i.e. buildings used for grinding grains into flour or meal, formerly crucial parts of the feudal structure, with each barony having its own mill where the tenant farmers had to have their produce ground for a fee. These reached their peak probably in the 17th century, and then began to disappear, although 10 local ones are still listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Eventually some of them were converted into textile mills. They were almost always water powered, although in earlier times they would have been hand-mills, and animal-driven mills also existed. The following were probably all local mills: Hawick Mill; Allanhaugh Mill; Ancrum Mill; Appotside Mill; Ashkirk Mill; Bedrule Mill; Belses Mill; Boosmill (on Ale); Borthaugh Mill; Buccleuch Mill; Burnfit Mill; Cauld Mill; Chisholme Mill; Cogsmill; Craik Mill; Crawhill Mill; Dean Mill; Denum Mill; Dodburn Mill; Doveston Mill; Falnaish Mill; Hall- rule Mill; Harthaugh Mill; Harwood Mill; Has- sendean Mill; Heidshaw Mill; Highchesters Mill; Hobsburn Mill; Howcleuch Mill; Hummelknowe Mill; Larriston Mill; Lilliesleaf Mill; Midlem Mill; Minto Mill; Newmill on Teviot; Newmill on Slinrig; Newton Mill (Bedrule); Philhope Mill; Raesknowe Mill; Riccarton Mill; Riddell Mill; Roughhead/Langlands/Wilton Mill; Ruletownhead Mill; Scaw Mill; Timberside Mill; Soothdean Mill; Spittal Mill; Synton Mill; Trow Mill; Weens- land Mill; Wester Mill (Wilton); Whitehaugh Mill (Liddesdale); Whithope Mill (Borthwick); Winnington Mill; and Woollee Mill (Rule). There were also small mills on some farms, powered by water from ponds. In Rulewater, for example, these were at Abbotrule, Bedrule, Biller- well, Cleuchhead, Doorphool, Easter Fodderlee, Gatehousecote, Greenriver, Hallrule, Hawthorn- side, Mackside, Midburn, Ruletownhead, Town- o-Rule, Tytehouse, Wester Fodderlee and West- erhouses.

Mills (milz) n. George (b.1812/3) from Edinburgh, he was a coach painter living on the Back Row in 1851. His wife was Ann and their children included Jane, Margaret, James and David. Henry (18th C.) listed as postillion at Cavers in 1791, when he was working for George Douglas. He could be related to the butler John ‘Mill’, who was working at Cavers a few years earlier. James (19th C.) hind at Midshiels. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. Robert (18th/19th C.) stocking- maker recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia.

Millside (mil-sîd) n. former name for a place near Hawick. John Cook was living there in 1767. It is unclear where this might have been, but perhaps an alternative name for the Mill Path.

Millstane Edge (mil-stân-ef) n. Millstone Edge, hill roughly between Linhope farm and Cauldcleuch Head, to the north of Tushope Hill. It reaches a height of 567 m.

Millstane Edge (mil-stân-ef) n. Millstone Edge, hill in southern Roxburghshire, lying on the border with Dumfriesshire, north-west of New- castleton, just south of Roan Fell. It reaches a height of 561 m and has a triangulation pillar on another slight summit to the south. There are many cairns in the area. The hill got its name from the quarry on the eastern side, where blanks for millstones were cut, one good discarded example being visible there today (there is a well-known place of the same name in the Derbyshire Peak District).

Millstane Sike (mil-stān-sik) n. small stream in Southdean Parish on the right side of the A6088 just before Lethem. It flows into the Carter Burn. The reason for the name is unknown. But there are several quarry holes on both sides of the stream, which have been used to excavate the outcrops of sandstone found here.

mill-steep (mil-steep) n., arch. a lever fixed to the machinery of a corn-mill, by which the millstones may be moved relative to each other (noted by J. Jamieson).

mill-yins (mil-yinz) n., pl. factory workers – ‘The mills war skailin an the mill-yins war toavin hyimm’ [ECS].

Milmoe (mil-mo) n. alternative name of the lands held by William Scott in Lees in the 16th century, and later by the Scotts of Lees and Burnhead. The 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 lists ‘Mownaw, or Millmae, commonly called Lees’, valued at £52 (the name is probably related to ‘Wester and East Moor’, an old name for West and East Lees; see also Moormaw).

Milmoe’s (mil-mo) n. former pawnshop in the Sandbed, in around the 1860s to 80s remembered in the song ‘Kinly Stick’ – ‘...Streich to the pawnshop that’s kept by Milmoe’ [WE].

mils (mil) n., arch. a mill, usually for grinding corn, and typically water-powered. As part of the feudal system every barony or estate would have at least one mill, with the tenants kept in a system of multure, i.e. they were obliged to have their corn and other grains ground there, and would pay part of the grains as a tax. Burghs and abbeys would have their own separate mills. Hawick is known to have had one since at least 1412 – ‘Heir lyis ane honest man, John Deaneis, qvha vas tenant kyndlie of Havik Mils’ (from Old English, surviving longer in place names than in speech).

Milne (miln) n. Alexander ‘Wat’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His surname is recorded as ‘Mylne’.

Henry ‘Henry the Hadda Man’ (19th C.) fishmonger at 5 High Street.

miln-steed (miln-steed) n., arch. a mill stead, piece of land suitable for a mill – ‘It is two reasonable myle Between the miln-steed and the kirk-style’ [BR1688].

mil-sie (mil-se) n., arch. a milk-sieve – ‘Seilin the milk throwe a milsie’ [ECS] (also written ‘milislie’; noted by E.C. Smith).

Milsington (mil-sin-tin, mil-sin-toon) n. farm along the Borthwick valley, on the right before Deanburnhaugh. It was formerly part of Has-sendean Parish before becoming part of the new Parish of Robertson in 1689/90. At that time, along with Girnwood, it was valued at about £1300. The lands belonged to John de Langlands in the 14th century. His widow Marion Comyn had a charter for these lands, along with the mill and the lands of Outersideig in about 1363. The Langlands exchanged the lands for Hepe with Sir Walter Scott in 1451 (in a charter dated at Wilton Kirk). In this charter they are described as lying between the lands of Borthwick on the east, Chisholme on the south, ‘Dualyrig’ and Hoscote on the west and Bellowdean on the north. Walter was to pay annually a red rose or six pennies Scots at the feast of St. John the Baptist. In 1453 there was a confirming charter of ‘excam-bion’ of James of Langlands ‘frank-tenement of the town of Milsaintoun’ for Sir Walter Scott’s frank-tenement of Wester Hepe. The sasine was signed at the ‘chief messuage’ of Milsington on the last day of December in 1453. In 1492 the lands were described as being then waste, but normally valued at 10 merks (and still worth £10 Scots in 1553/4). John Cockburn was recorded there in 1502. From the late 16th century the Milsington Scotts resided there, descended from Thomas, second son of Walter ‘the Hawke’ who accompanied the ‘Brave Buccleuch’ on the rescue of Kinmont Willie. The Milsington line is continued in the Scotts of Girnwood and of Newton. There were 15 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely James Purdom, Margaret Nichol, Robert Purdom, Helen Nichol, Thomas Brown, Bessie Inglis, Walter Scott, Adam Robson, Margaret Greenshields, Helen Rae, John Rae, Patrick Thomson, Thomas Robson, William Robson and Margaret Turnbull. It was listed among properties of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1678. The farm was in Wilton Parish until Robertson was formed in 1689/90. William Scott paid the Hearth Tax for 3 hearths in 1694, with John Goodfellow as shepherd at that time. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it covered 1259 acres and was bounded by Borthwickbrae, the Borthwick Water, Hoscote, Henwoodie common and Bellendean. James Leithead was recorded there in 1717–25, John Dickson in 1720, John Wight in 1725, James Elliot in 1756, Andrew Goodfellow in 1764 and William Scott in 1797. In the 1788 county valuation the lands here, along with Girnwood, were valued at £1305 13s 4d. From 1831 Milsington was tenanted by Charles Scott, cousin of Sir Walter the writer. In 1841 there were about 20 people living around the farm estate, as well as those in the principal farmhouse. The main road through the Borthwick used to pass directly in front of the farmhouse. A side road leaves from near here to join the Teviot valley at Branzholmie Bridgend. A massive Roman bronze leg of a man on horseback was found there in 1820, possibly part of the loot from some southern town, and now in the Scottish National Museum; collected with it was a brass base (with an inscribed ‘L’) of what may have been a statue of Victory, perhaps also found at Milsington. There is a local tradition of buried treasure at Pot Syke, which may be where these items were found (first recorded as ‘Milsallistoun’ in 1363, it was ‘Mylsinton’ in 1451, ‘Milsaintoun’ in 1453, ‘Mylsinton’ in 1492, ‘Milsintoun’ in 1502, ‘Mylsinton’ in 1553/4, ‘Mynlesington’ in 1574 and 1640, ‘Milsingtontoune’ in 1652, ‘Milsington’ in 1684, ‘Milsingtontoune’ in 1718, ‘Milsington-town’ in 1764 and 1771 and ‘Milsintoun’ in 1717; there are many other spelling variants, including ‘Milsintoun’, etc.; it is ‘Milsingtontoune’ on a 1650 parish map and Blaeu’s 1654 map shows it as ‘N. Milsintoun’ and ‘O. Milsintoun’, while Jenner & Hollar’s c. 1644 map and Vischer’s 1689 map of Scotland have it as ‘Milsintoun’ and Adair’s c. 1688 manuscript appears to show ‘Wilsingtontoune’; the name probably derives from ‘Mael-suithan’s farm’, where ‘Mael-suithan’ or ‘Mys-lan’ is a personal name introduced by the Norwegians from Ireland).

Milsingtonhaugh (mil-sin-toon-hawch) n. former farmstead near Milsington. It is recorded in 1790 as ‘Milsington Haug’, when John Anderson paid the cart tax there and in 1797, when Robert Oliver was farmer there. Walter Scott was living there in at least 1793–95.

Milsington Hill (mil-sing-tin-hil, mil-sin-toon-hil) n. hill just to the west of Milsington farm in the Borthwick valley. It has two peaks, both reaching to 263 m. The western one contains the remains of an earthwork, about 85 m across; it consists of a bank and ditch, best preserved at the south corner.

Milsingtonshankfit (mil-sin-tin-shawngk-fi) n. former cottage in the Borthwick valley, situated at the beginning of the road to Milsington farmhouse (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Milsingtonshiel (mil-sin-toon-sheel) n. former farmstead near Milsington. It may be the same place sometimes called ‘Whaupshaw’. James Hinton was there in at least 1716–22, James Scott in 1717–23, Walter Henderson in 1726, Walter Scott in 1741 and Thomas Rae in 1762–71. Farm worker John Pringle and family were there in 1841 (it is ‘Milsingtonmsheils’ in 1716, ‘Milsingtonsheils’ in 1721, ‘Milsington Shiel’ in 1741 and ‘Milsingtonswichiel’ in 1771).

Milestone Path (mil-, mil-stan-pawth) n. hill between Ashybank and Honeyburn on the A698, and also the name for a field and wood there. This was presumably once part of the original route between Hawick and Denholm, before the lower route was built for coaches. The oak wood was partly removed when the course of the main road was changed in the late 20th century, but was replanted.

Milton (mil-tin) n. village in Dumfries & Galloway (actually one of several with this name) off the A74 south of Moffat, built on the site of a large Roman fort established around the year 80. There is a possible military road from there to the fort near Aikwood Tower.

Minti (min’i, min-ti) n. Minto, a village, former estate and parish about 6 miles north-east of Hawick and 1 1/2 miles north of Denholm. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle. The village was burned in a raid about 1490. It was burned again by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545, including ‘Mynto Crag, Mynto town, Mynto place, Weast Mynto, the Crag End’. Some of the old village can still be made out, but the present one was laid out by William Playfair for the 2nd Earl of Minto in the early 19th century. The move was arranged so that the village could not be directly seen from Minto House. It contains the William Playfair 1830/1 gothic-style church, renovated in 1934, as well as the Thomas Clapperton War Memorial. Nearby is the demolished Minto House, with grounds containing the remains of an old Norman Church with an ancient burial ground, as well as an 18-hole golf course. The estate was owned by the Turnbulls from at least 1329, although at least part of the barony was granted to the Stewarts of Jedworth in 1390, and then disputed in the next century. James Langlands appears to have held half the rights to the markets there in 1476. In 1501 William Turnbull had a sasine for 2/3 of the lands, with Alexander Stewart having a sasine for the other 1/3. The half baronies were held by the Turnbulls and Stewarts until the early 17th century. John Turnbull of Minto was a significant leader of the Turnbulls in the late 16th century. In 1643 the lands owned by Turnbull of Minto were valued at £2006 13s 4d and consisted of ‘Minto, town, mains, mill, by Turnbull of Minto were valued at £1707 the whole Barony was valued at £2008 13s 4d. Craigend and Deanfoot were sold to Gilbert Elliott of Craigend in about 1640 and later combined with part of Minto, which continued to pass to Elliot's until sold by Gilbert Elliott in 1687. The rest of the lands passed to the Scotts of Harwood in 1673, then Walter Riddell from Edinburgh in 1676, briefly Thomas Rutherford and eventually the Scotts of Harden in 1691, with Gideon Scott of Highchester having a confirming charter for the Barony in 1695. At this time the village became a Burgh of Barony, and the existing Common is also mentioned. Markets were to be held on Wednesdays and fairs on 14th June and 14th November. The lands were sold to the Elliots in 1703. In 1707 the whole Barony was valued at £2768 13s 4d. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls the residents listed were Robert Brown, John Dickson, William Turnbull (smith), James Oliver and (another) William Turnbull. In 1811 the ‘Barony (being the whole of the old Parish) of Minto’ was valued at about £2800; the full Parish at that time was valued at £5163. An ancient bronze axe was found nearby about 1888 and is now in the National Museum of Scotland. A spindle whorl from here is in Hawick Museum. Note that there are now several Mintos elsewhere in the world, all ultimately deriving from this small area (but many via the Earls of Minto). The village also gave rise to a surname – ‘In lines of crystal shine the wandering rills Down the green slopes of Minto’s sunbright hills’ [JL] (the name probably derives from the Old Welsh for a hill, plus ‘how’ for a hollow, or Old English ‘hoh’, also meaning hill: it is recorded from very early times, with the ‘d’ changing to a ‘t’ by 1150, when it is ‘Munetov’ and 1166, when it is ‘Munethov’; it is thereafter ‘Minthov’, etc., with the middle ‘h’ disappearing by the end of the 14th century; it was formerly often written ‘Mynto’; it is ‘Mynetowe’ in 1296, ‘Myntehowe’ in 1380, ‘Mentov’ in 1383, ‘Myntou’ and ‘Myntow’ in 1390, ‘Mintow’ in c.1400, ‘Myntow’ in 1461, ‘Mynto’ in 1491/2, ‘mynto’ in 1493, ‘Myneto’ in 1501 and ‘Mynto’ in 1508, 1511, 1516, 1528, 1535, 1548, 1553/4 and 1576; ‘Mitontour’, ‘Mintocraig’ and ‘Minto K.’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map). Minti (min̄-i, min-ti) n. (Minto) Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is recorded as ‘Dande Mynto’. He may have been an ancestor of later local Mintos. Andrew (17th/18th C.) merchant in Selkirk. In 1720 he was charged with assault and also with throwing stones at a dog. In 1723 he was recorded in 2 legal cases involving debt and another for an assault. He may be the son of Walter who was charged with assault, threatening to kill someone and breach of the peace (along with his father) in Selkirk in 1719. Andrew (b.1734) 2nd son of George and Agnes Forrest. He was a resident of Southdean Parish, perhaps a mason like his father and brother Archibald. He firstly married Janet Oliver in 1758 and secondly married (in an irregular marriage of some sort) Betty ‘Boal’ (probably Bowie) in 1776. His children included: George (b.1759); John (b.1779); Nelly (b.1781); Nanny (b.1783); Andrew (b.1785); William (b.1788); Betty (b.1790); and Archibald (b.1794), who was baptised in Hobkirk. All except the last were baptised in Southdean Parish. Andrew (b.1785) born in Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Betty ‘Boal’. He was a farmer at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was ‘Fundholder & Retired Farmer’, living in Lilliesleaf village. In 1817 he married Janet Dalgleish, and she died in 1852. Their children included: Alexander (b.1818); Andrew (b.1820), born in Hawick, who was a cattle dealer; Elizabeth (b.c.1823); and...
John (b.1826). Andrew (1817–1903) son of William, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He worked for a while as a servant at Weens. In 1861 he was a ploughman, living at Cleughhead Cottages. He was part of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. His wife was Catherine and their children included Janet, Jean, Ann and Margaret. One of his daughters married Mr. Kennedy of the Tower Hotel in Hawick. Archibald (b.1732) son of George and Agnes Forrest, he was baptised in Minto Parish and was a mason in Abbotsrule. In 1766 he married Margaret (or Mary) Turnbull. Their children included: Margaret (b.1767); Agnes (b.1769); Nelly (b.1774); George (1776–1860); and Robert (b.1781). In 1767 he was living at Midguard. David (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. This was near the tenement of Thomas, who was surely related. In 1535 he purchased a tenement from William Ker; Thomas was one of the witnesses and probably a relative. He may be the David who resigned a tenement in 1541 to his younger son John and another tenement in favour of his 2nd son James in 1545. He may be the David ‘elder’ who was involved in a transaction with David, smith, in 1541. He is probably the deceased David whose son John inherited his property in Selkirk in 1542/3. David (15th/16th C.) smith recorded in Selkirk in 1541. He was son and heir of the deceased James. David (17th C.) resident at Doecleuch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. David (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He is probably the ‘Dauid Mintoe’ recorded in the Hawick Town Book of 1731; he was paid ‘for 3 lod of claye for the well, 5s. 6d. Scots’. He was recorded as a carrier when he witnessed baptisms for Walter Scott in Crumhaugh in 1708, for wright John Pringle in 1709, for wright John Pringle in 1716, and for ‘Tenant in Hawick’ David Wilson in 1721. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included: Margaret (b.1691), who probably married William Riddell in 1714; John (b.1700); Walter (b.1701); Beatrix (b.1703); David (b.1706); Robert (b.1708); and David (again, b.1713). The witnesses in 1700 were Bailie Walter Graham and weaver James Wight, in 1703 were gardener James Falseide nd merchant Thomas Waugh, in 1706 were ‘vintner’ Francis Elliot and weaver Robert Wight, and in 1713 were Bailie (of the Regality) Walter Elliot and ex-Bailie Robert Ruescastle. David (17th/18th C.) recorded in a bond in Selkirk in 1721 with Walter. He is also recorded in Selkirk in 1726, when he was paid for building bridges, renovating the mill dam and other construction work. In 1727 he was paid for working on the school in Selkirk, in 1730 for further wright work, in 1745 for mason work, in 1749 for work on bridges, in 1752 for work on the school and well, in 1753 for work on the Town House and for further work in 1761. David (18th C.) responsible for dealing with (i.e. moving on) crippled beggars for the Hawick Kirk Session in the early-to-mid 1700s. He could be the David, married to Janet Glendinning, whose son Walter was born in 1701. David (18th C.) tenant in Fairnilee Bridgend. In 1763 he represented some residents of Midlem in a case in Selkirk. Perhaps the same David is recorded in a receipt in Selkirk in 1758. David (18th/19th C.) dyer recorded in a document in Selkirk in 1814. William is also mentioned and so presumably related. Francis (17th/18th C.) thatcher in Selkirk, recorded in 1708. Perhaps the same Francis was a wright recorded in Selkirk (along with John) in 1727 and recorded in a receipt in 1732. Francis (18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He was paid in 1762 for supplying timber for the Corn Mill in Selkirk and had a complaint against him in 1774. Gavin (b.1841) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Rebecca Pow. He was a blacksmith in Ashkirk, later moving to the Carlisle area. In 1861 he was at Blacklee, Hobkirk, working with blacksmith William Pow. In 1866 he married Elizabeth Telfer in Ashkirk Parish. Their children included Margaret (b.1867), William (b.1869), James Simpson (b.1872), Andrew (b.1874), Rebecca (b.c.1880), Elizabeth (b.c.1885) and Charlotte (b.c.1885). George (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He paid tax for a kiln, as well as a hearth, suggesting he was a tradesman of some sort. Although unclear, he may have been at Burnfoott in Wilton. He could be the George who married Isobel Lorraine in Ashkirk in 1688, and who had a son Thomas (b.1689) baptised in Ashkirk; the witnesses to the baptism were William Minto and Andrew Fletcher. It seems likely he was an ancestor of the George recorded in 1731. George (18th C.) mason in Hassendean, probably a descendant of the earlier George who lived in Hassendean. He was a direct ancestor of the later minister at Lilliesleaf of the same name and also of more than half of the Mintos living in Roxburghshire in the 19th century. In Minto Parish in 1731 he married Agnes (b.1712), daughter of Archibald Forrest of Huntlaw. Their children included: Archibald (b.1732), who was baptised in Minto Parish and was also a mason; Andrew (b.1734), baptised in Ancrum Parish; John (b.1737), who married Margaret Scott in 1764 and may have moved away from the Borders; and twins George and William (b.1740), who may have died in infancy. Their 4 younger children were baptised in Ancrum Parish. George (18th C.) tenant farmer at Langside. In 1752 he married Barbara, daughter of Mark Chisholme and Barbara Bennet. He later lived at Rueltownhead, which had been owned by his in-laws. His children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: Markie (b.1755), named after her grandfather, who married William Bell of Menslaws; and William (b.1756), who was an officer in the Royal Marines. George (18th C.) married Isabel Sharp in Bedrule Parish in 1782. He is probably different from the George who had children in Southdean Parish (although this is unclear). William (b.1794) and Margaret (b.1796), baptised in Bedrule Parish, were probably his children. George (b.1759) son of Andrew and Janet Oliver. He is probably the George who got married in Southdean Parish in 1787 (perhaps to Mary Moscrop). Probably the same George had the following children baptised in Southdean Parish: Betty (b.1788); Janet (b.1790); and Isabella (b.1792). George (1776–1860) son of mason Archibald. He is said to have farmed Abbotrule Glebe. He may be the George, part of whose farm in Southdean Parish was owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He was great-grandfather of Rev. George of Lilliesleaf. In 1803 he married Helen Murray and their children included: Margaret (b.1803); Archibald (b.1806); Agnes (b.1807); James (b.1811); Ellison (b.c.1811); Robert (b.c.1818); Thomas (b.c.1820); and George (b.c.1827). Archibald (b.1806), baptised in Southdean Parish, was probably his son.

Rev. George (1864–1947) from Greenock, he was ordained as minister of Lilliesleaf United Free Kirk in 1897 and remained until 1908. He came from a long line of local Mintos, going back at least to his great-great-grandfather George, who was a mason in Hassendean. 2 months after arriving in Lilliesleaf he married Eliza, daughter of Ewen Sutherland. Their children were: Marjorie (b.1898); George Walker (b.1899); Ewen Sutherland (b.1902); Archibald Herbert (b.1905); Robert Macfie (b.1908); and Kenneth Ross (b.1910). Helen (b.1793) dealer in small wares on Orrock Place. She was recorded there in 1841 and 1851, when she was a ‘Cальнanderer’ (i.e. presser of fabrics). Her daughter Betsy Grieve assisted her. By 1861 she was ‘Keeper of a Mangle’ on Factory Close. Henry (15th C.) had a sasine for a half merk land in Selkirk in 1454. James (16th C.) recorded as witness to transactions in Selkirk in 1535 and 1539. Probably the same James was son to the deceased Thomas when he purchased 14 of Ladylands in Selkirk in 1536. James (16th C.) 2nd son of David. In 1543 C.) baker in Selkirk, recorded in 1620. James (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish in 1691 for Andrew Lockie. James (18th/19th C.) servant in Chesterhill in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. John (15th C.) resident of Minto. In 1493 Walter and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole were able to ‘com-pone’ for several crimes, including the theft of 16 sheep from him. He was probably related to William who was also ‘in mynto’ at the same time. John (d.bef. 1502) recorded at the 1502 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Richard Davidson in Primside was convicted of communing with his son John, who was ‘at the horn’ for his murder. His name is recorded as ‘Johannis Mynto’; it is not stated where he was from, but he could be the same as the resident of Minto. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Mynto, younger’ when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1543. He may be the same as John ‘elder’ who is recorded in Selkirk in 1579, 1579/80 and 1581. He is probably the Burgess John who made a financial bond in Selkirk in 1580. John ‘younger’ is also recorded in 1579, 1580 and 1581, and probably his son, while Janet may have been his daughter. John (17th C.) recorded in 1672 when his ‘arable lands and crofts’ in Selkirk are mentioned. John (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He witnessed a baptism in 1691 for Andrew Raither. He is probably the John, married to Isobel Sword, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Ashkirk in 1687. John (17th/18th C.) wright recorded in Selkirk in 1727, along with Francis. They were probably both related to Thomas. Probably the same John was recorded in a receipt in 1731 and was paid for repair work in Selkirk in about 1745 and for making up tables of weights in 1762 and 1767. He signed an admission to the Hammermen’s Incorporation in 1758. John (18th C.) recorded as master of the English School in Selkirk in at least 1752–72. Perhaps his widow may have been the ‘Bell Minto’ who wrote to the Burgh of Selkirk in 1784. John (b.c.1816) farmworker in Castleton. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at about 29 South Hermitage Street, but by 1851 was shepherd at Broadlie Burnfoot. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Little and their children included Jean (b.c.1835), Elspeth (‘Eppy’, b.c.1837), William (b.c.1839), Margaret (b.c.1843) and Helen (b.c.1851). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1822 he married Helen Richardson, who was from Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick. The death of his infant son is recorded in 1823. John Dalgleish (1826–1908) son of Andrew and Jane (or Janet) Dalgleish. In the 1850s he was one of 2 executors (along with Dr. Adam Elliot of Goldielands) for arranging the ‘Coutard Fund’, bequeathed by John and William Dalgleish to help the poor of Hobkirk Parish. Mrs. ?? (19th C.) of the East End Toll Bar, an early member of Allars Kirk. Robert (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker William Riddell. Robert ‘My Lord Minto’ (d.1776) Hawick resident whose death is recorded with an unusual nickname. He could be the Robert who married Betty (or Agnes) Paterson and had children Janet (b.1736), Margaret (b.1739) and Agnes (b.1743). Alternatively he could be the Robert ho married Margaret Scott in 1742 and whose children included Agnes (b.1743). Robert (b.1781) baptised in Southdean Parish, younger son of Archibald and Margaret Turnbull. He married Isabella Bicket and they had 3 children baptised in Bowden Parish: Janet (b.1805); Archibald (b.1806); and William Bicket (b.1812). Robert (19th C.) son of the farmer of Abbotrule Glebe. He became a ship’s steward, voyaging across the Atlantic, but he returned to help on the farm. He married Mary Telfer (daughter of the tenant of Roundabouts), and they lived at Kelso, Whittle Toll, Dykeraw and Wolfelee Glen. He was a handyan on Wolfelee estate before being appointed gamekeeper and moving into the new lodge there. After retiring he moved to Macksidie old Toll Bar. He lived to the age of about 80, as did his wife. Their children were George, Euphemia, Ellen, Mary and Jessie (who married Robert Tinlin). Roger (12th C.) witness to a charter of Ranulph de Soulis about 1150. He is recorded as ‘of Munetov’, along with Simon his brother. In 1166 he was ‘Roger de Muneithov’ when he was witness to a grant by King William to Robert de Brus. Thomas (15th C.) tenant of Minto Common. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including stealing a black ox from him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1527 he is recorded resigning his tenement of land to his wife Elizabeth Notman, as well as regiving an annual rent of the tenement of David (who was surely a relative). The nearby tenement of David was also mentioned in 1527. In the same year he witnessed a document in Selkirk. He was owner of a rig of land in Selkirk in 1530/1. He is still recorded as owner of a tenement in 1531 and 1534. In 1532 he was ‘elder’ when he witnessed a sasine in Selkirk and also resigned a tenement to Thomas ‘younger’ (presumably his son). In 1535 he was one of the ‘landmaires’ chosen to ‘rid the boundis’ of Selkirk Common. In 1536 he resigned his tenement in Selkirk to his heir John; David was a witness, and hence probably related. His son and heir John is recorded in about 1541 assigning a yard in Selkirk. Thomas (d.bef. 1539) resident of Selkirk, perhaps son of the earlier Thomas. He is recorded in 1539 when a transaction involving tenants in Ashkirk and Falside was done in his house. Later in 1539 he was deceased when his wife Marion Minto and son James rented part of Ladyland to John Brydon. In 1543 his wife was recorded as Marion Burnet, with his son and heir being John and James another son. Thomas (16th C.) recorded representing someone in a court case in Selkirk in 1561. He is probably the Thomas ‘elder’ who was a Burgess of Selkirk in 1581 when he had an agreement involving his wife ‘Bigie’ Murray and son Thomas. He is probably also the Thomas who rig in Selkirk is mentioned in 1581. Thomas (16th C.) probably son of Thomas. He was recorded as ‘younger’ when he was a witness in Selkirk in 1580 and 1580/1. In 1581 he was warned to appear to receive redemption money at Selkirk Kirk. Also in 1581 he was involved in an agreement with his father Thomas, involving a loan and the transfer of land in Selkirk and another agreement over the purchase of a horse. He is probably the Burgess of Selkirk who witnessed another transaction in 1581. Thomas (17th/18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He is recorded in 1727 when he was paid for mending the Selkirk Tollbooth. Also in 1727, along with William Scott, he received money for ‘work at the milns, bridges, mealmarket and house’ in Selkirk. Wrights Francis and John are also mentioned in 1727 and surely related. In 1729 he provided a bell for the top of Selkirk Schoolhouse. He was involved in a case for recovering a debt in 1737. In 1741 and 1742 he carried out other ‘builder work’ and ‘smithy work’ for the Burgh of Selkirk. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Janet (b.1726), William (b.1730), Agnes (b.1732), John (b.1734) and Thomas (b.1738). Thomas (19th C.) coach driver who was an early member of Allasses Kirk. He is described as a ‘chaise driver’ in 1829, when one of his children died. Walter (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He may be related to James, who is also listed. Walter (17th C.) listed at Highchesters on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He paid tax for 3 hearths, suggesting he was either a significant tenant or a tradesman of some sort. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1719 when he and his son Andrew were charged with assault. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded in a bond in Selkirk in 1721 with David. William of Minto (15th C.) notary in 1431 for the ‘instrument’ transferring the lands of Heap between the Langlands and the Scotts. He is recorded as ‘Willelmus de Myntow presbyter Glasguensis diocesis’. William (15th C.) resident of Minto. In 1493 Walter and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole were able to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including the theft of a cow from him. He was probably related to John who was also ‘in mynto’ at the same time. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Agnes Scott in 1726 and his son William was baptised in 1727. Lt.-Col. William (1756–1827) born at Rueltownhead, son of George and Barbara Chisholme, he was christened in Southdean Parish. He served in the Royal Marine Artillery. Joining as a Lieutenant in 1779, he became Captain in 1796 and Major in 1801. He was wounded 3 separate times, once in 1783 while fighting the French frigate Sybille on board the British Magicienne, and another time in 1796 and Major in 1801. He was wounded 3 separate times, once in 1783 while fighting the French frigate Sybille on board the British Magicienne, and another time in 1801 when in a battalion attached to the Army at Aboukir in Egypt. He later served in the Royal Marines Artillery and retired in 1826. In 1812 he married Grace Little, but they had no children. William (b.1788) born in Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Betty ‘Boal’. He was a mason living at Forkins in the 1841 to 1861 censuses. In 1815 he married Janet Oliver (from Castleton) and their children included: George (b.1819); Betty (b.1822); Jessy (b.1824); John (b.1827); Helen (b.1829); Archibald (b.1831); Robert (b.1833); Margaret (b.1835); Peter (b.1837); Agnes (b.1840); and James (b.1840). Andrew (b.1817), who worked at Weens and was ploughman at Cleughhead Cottages, was probably also his son. William (b.1801) born in Southdean Parish, he was a labourer living at Doorpool in 1841, Birneyknoive in 1851 and Cleughhead Cottages in 1861. He was surely related to the mason of the same name, who was his near neighbour, as well as Andrew, who also lived at Cleughhead. His wife was Mary and their children included Margaret, Agnes, Archibald, James, Robert Robina and Janet. He was already widowed by 1861. He may be the William, son of Agnes (or Nanny), baptised in Southdean Parish in 1802. Another labourer of the same name, son of mason George, died in Lenton in 1865. William (b.1812) born in Castleton, son of William and Margaret Elliot. In 1841 and 1851 he was a labourer living at Borthaugh Cottages. In 1861 he was ‘General Servant Ploughman’, living at Highchester Cottage in Roberton Parish. He married Rebecca Pow and their children included: William (b.1835); Andrew (b.1838); Gavin (b.1841); Mary (b.1843); William Bruce (b.1845); George (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); and James O. (b.1853). William (b.c.1815) born in Southdean Parish, he was a farm labourer. In 1851 he was visiting William Scott, farm servant at Silverbuthall. William (b.1834/5) from Langholm, he was blacksmith at Hewsbridge in Castleton Parish in 1861. He was recorded as resident at Steele Road in 1868. His wife was Jessie. William (19th C.) elder of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk in the latter part of the 19th century. William (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a cab business on Oliver Crescent around 1900. He married Ellen, daughter of James Grieve, tailor at Banchester Bridge (formerly written ‘Mintoe’ and other variants). Minti Bank (min’-i-bangk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish that were part of Deanfoot. It probably corresponds to the place labelled ‘Deanfoot Bank’ on modern maps (it is ‘Minto-bank’ in 1780). Minti Brae (min’-i-brā) n. name sometimes used for the road north of Denholm leading to Minto, particularly the part across the river. There was a saw mill here in the 19th century. Minti Cleuchheid (min’-i-klooch-heed) n. Minto Cleuchhead, farmstead recorded in the late 17th and early 18th centuries when it was farmed by the Turnbulls. Stepeh Turnbull was there in 1692. The house there was a home of the Earl of Minto’s family in the 20th century and is still a family residence. The ‘Minto Stone’ was moved there in 2013/4 (also written ‘Cleughhead’ etc.).
Minti Cragfit (min’-i-krawg-fi) n. Minto Cragfoot, former name for an area at the foot of the Crags. A story is told (in the 1820 Edinburgh Magazine and repeated in 1914 in ‘Highways and Byways in the Border’) of a mother from here having her infant swapped for a changeling by the fairies. The minister of Bedrule (Rev. Borland) was called and administered a brew of boiled foxgloves (i.e. digitalis!) to the infant, and locked it in a barn for the night, after which it apparently returned to be ‘as healthy and cheerful as it formerly was’.

Minti Crags (min’-i-krawgz) n. Minto Crags, a prominent rocky outcrop overlooking the Teviot valley, just north-east of Minto village. The crags can be seen in a sketch of 1790, before the plantations of the 1st Earl of Minto covered them. They reach 224 m (729 ft) and have Fatlips Castle perched on the steep side, and Barnhills Bed below. Additionally there is some evidence for a fort in the region to the north and northwest of Fatlips; the ramparts were probably built to take advantage of the natural rock outcappings, and have been partly obliterated by quarrying and planting – ‘On Minto-crags the moonbeams glint, Where Barnhill hew’d his bed of flint’ [SWS], ‘...a-ha-bet tu te-o’ Te’it’s flooery vaile, Mintih Craigs (haappeet an rowed in their leafy maud) bren’ rase thir skerrs’ [ECS] (also sometimes ‘Craigs’).

Minti Craigh see min’-i-krag n. former fortified house at Minto. ‘Myunto Crag’ was burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. In 1550 it is listed as the limit of the half of the Middle Marches to which Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Warden. The farm there was known by the same name and owned by the Turnbulls in the 17th century. It may be the same as the place called ‘Minti Craigend’ and was formerly part of the farm of Minto Mill (it is labelled to the east of Minto Kirk, on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Mynuto Crage’ in 1550 and ‘the Cragge of Myunto’ in 1656)

Minti Craigend see min’-i-krag-end n. former name for a farmstead near Minto Crags, and also called simply Craigend. Note that the lands called ‘Minti Craig’ were probably adjacent, but distinct. Gilbert and William Johnstone, Simon Leitch, Margaret Ord and Thomas Young were there in 1502. Thomas Porteous leased the lands in 1686. Patrick Bowie, Thomas Brown, William Cunningham, John Haliburton, Robert Minto, Walter Renwick, John Stavert, Thomas Wilkie and Robert Young were there in 1694

Minti East Ludge (min’-i-eest-huj) n. former lodge house for Minto estate, situated to the south of Minto Crags.

Minti Gairdens (min’-i-gar-dinz) n. road in Denholm off the Canongate, with private housing built in the 1970s.

Minti Glen (min’-i-glen) n. narrow valley around a stream passing from Minto to the Teviot, and also the name of a farm there. The glen was once laid out with walks, as part of the Minto estate and contained many planted trees, including some of the first larches to be imported into Scotland. The small lake near its head was artificially created in 1735 as part of the landscaping for Minto House.

Minti Golf Club (min’-i-golf-klub) n. golf club that runs a course near Minto village, established in 1928. It is the closest course other than the Vertish and is 5,393 yards, par 69.

Minti Hills (min’-i-hilkz) n. Minto Hills, better known as the the Mintis, which are easily seen from points around Hawick. The southern peak reaches a height of 276 m (905 ft), with a triangulation pillar on top, while the northern hill is 253 m (837 ft) and topped by a cairn. This was also the name of a farm, which is recorded in 1779 being valued at £365 2d. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 it was owned by Lord Minto and liferented by the late Lord Westhall – ‘While the Minto Hills in their verdure seen Seem reflecting the light frae their mantle green’ [TC], ‘Now, the ‘ern-horse’ rins roond ahint the Mintih Hills ...’ [ECS] (the word ‘Minto’ probably derives from the Old Welsh for hill, ‘mynydd’ together with the Old English for hill, ‘hoh’, and hence ‘Minto Hills’ means the same thing thrice!).

Minti House (min’-i-hoos) n. Minto House, former seat of the Elliots of Minto for 2 centuries. Existing from the 16th century, the house was charged for having 8 hearths in 1694, and 46 windows in 1748. It was substantially remodelled 1738–43 to a V-plan by William Adam, and essentially completed in 1809–14 by Archibald Elliot (from Ancrum). The ‘Lands round Minto House’ were valued at £72 17s 6d in 1788 and in 1811 (with the garden and nursery, and several other pieces of land listed separately). The house was altered again in 1837 by William Playfair and terraced gardens were landscaped by Sir Robert Lorimer in the period 1894–1906. In the early 19th century the village was moved so that it could not be seen from the windows of the mansion; the exact choice of location for the house...

has been considered puzzling, and may have been related to this. It was 4 storeys in height and the top floor contained a sort of museum, showing artefacts related to the family. A watercolour sketch of the house exists from 1792. After being abandoned by the Elliot family, the house was used in the War effort, then rented to serve as the location of a private girl’s school, Craigmount School from 1952 until 1962. The school then purchased the house, but went into liquidation in 1966 and the house became derelict. In 1972 Viscount Melgund (later Earl of Minto) outbid another purchaser and immediately applied for permission to demolish this listed building, which was finally given by the County Council. It was partially demolished in 1973, becoming a roofless shell, and there followed lengthy debate about its fate. There was a plan in 1991 to dismantle the remaining walls and ship them to Japan, stone by stone, although costs proved prohibitive. Demolition re-started in 1992, including burning of internal timbers, despite being relisted category ‘A’, and there is now little left. This episode is sometimes referred to as the ‘Minto Debacle’, and influenced subsequent policies on preserving historical buildings in Scotland. The grounds contain the remains of a Norman church and burial enclosure, as well as the golf course. There were other buildings associated with the mansion and school, including a residential building, stable (later gymnasium), cottage (used for laundry) and dairy.

Minti Kames (min’-i-kämz) n. Minti Kames, farm just north of the Minto Hills, adjacent to the old railway line. It is probably the ‘Place of Camys’ referred to in 1502, when Peter Turnbull and other Turnbull outlaws were accused of stealing oxen, cows, horses and mares from John Grahamslaw there. It may also be the ‘carnys’ where in the same year 2 Croziers were convicted of stealing sheep from James Dalgleish. John Young ‘in the Cames’ in Minto Parish was hanged for murder in 1580. ‘Dand’ Davidson in ‘Kames’ is recorded in 1580/1 and 1595. David (perhaps an error for ‘Dand’) Davidson ‘of the Kains’ was recorded in 1601 when he was maimed in Jedburgh in a fight than was part of the feud between the Turnbuls of the Minto area and the Kers. ‘Kaines and Minto hills’ were owned by Scott of Harden and farmed by William Mather in the late 17th century. William Douglas was ‘late tenant’ in 1743. In 1779 the lands were part of the Minto estate, valued at £219 2d and let-rented by Sir John Dalrymple. The farm was owned by Lord Minto according to the 1811 Land Tax Roll. John Thorburn was farmer there in 1797 when he had 12 horses. Residents there in 1799 included William Jeffrey, Thomas Turnbull, William Oliver and Walter Stott. John Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and David Broekie in 1861. Crop marks visible from the air in a field to the north-west may be old boundaries and rig lines. There is a bridge to the farm, over the former railway line, another over the line near Kames North Loch, and one more for a track to the south. To the north-west of Kames South Loch is a field with signs of an ancient enclosure (it is ‘Kamys’ in 1576, ‘the Cames’ in 1595, ‘the Kamis’ in 1601 and ‘Kaims’ in 1811; probably the same place is marked ‘Keems’ and ‘Kenmer’ on Blaeu’s 1654 maps, and although not exactly in the right location this appears to be a transcription error from Blaeu’s 1590s manuscript that shows ‘M. Keams.’; it is written ‘Kaines’ on the 1718 Buecleuch survey; see also Kames Moss).

Minti Kirk (min’-i-kirk) n. Minto Parish Church, the present one replacing a much earlier building, dating back to at least 1275. This is when the Rectory is listed on Bagimont’s Roll, with a value of 4s. 4d. The remains of this Norman Church, on the grounds of the Minto estate, contain a burial enclosure with some ancient stones and a set of iron neck-rings set in the doorway. There are many gravestones from the 17th and 18th centuries, and part of a child’s stone coffin, probably from the 13th or 14th century. ‘Serlo’ was parson there when he witnessed a grant by daughter of the Baron of Minto in about the period 1230–60. William Woodburn may have been a Parson there who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The church was mentioned in ratifications of other churches being connected to Melrose Abbey in 1315. There is a curious charter of Edward III in 1374, which states that the church was then in the diocese of Lincoln. The old church was demolished in 1831, and it is said that at that time a collection of about 400 small silver coins (from the 13th and 14th century) were discovered. The current Gothic-style church was constructed 1830–31 by William Playfair, and built on the road through the village. When built, there was a private gallery for the family of the Earl of Minto. It has a square tower, contains an organ presented by the Countess of Minto in 1880 and was renovated in 1934. The standard of the Blues and Royals Household Cavalry Regiment was laid there in 2004 in memory of Alexander Tweedie, the first Borderer to be killed in the Iraq conflict. Nearby is the
Thomas Clapperton War Memorial. The Manse was built at the same time in a Tuscan villa style, and later called Melgund Glen (an earlier Manse was taxed for 18 windows in 1748). When the new church was built the old churchyard was converted into a garden on the Minto estate, much admired in the 19th century. The church was linked with Ancrum 1968–76 and then with Denholm and Bedrule in 1976. In 2003 it was linked, along with Denholm and Bedrule, into a wider area called Ruberslaw, which was then extended to include Hobkirk and Southdean. The oldest surviving communion token is a large lead oblong shape, bearing the letters ‘M.K.’ and probably from the 17th century. In 1838 the minister describes 2 artefacts founds nearby, which may date to the period of monastic connection: a large silver hoop, inscribed ‘IHEUSUS NA’ (possibly Jesus of Nazareth) and cross shapes; and an ancient copper seal inscribed ‘S ADEN PASTOREL’, along with a primitive lamb. A roll of the ministry is: Serlo, mid-13th C.; William Woodburn, 1296; John Blackadder, Rector in 1463; Patrick Mason, Rector in 1483; George Panter, Rector from 1512; Walter Stewart, Rector at least 1542–44; John Turnbull, Clerk 1559; David Turnbull, 1569; William McGowen, Parson 1574–76 (and perhaps to 1585); Edward Dickson, Reader 1576–78; Robert Hamilton, Reader 1579; Patrick Bishop 1589–c.90; John Mather 1601–02; James Johnstone 1607–08; Adam Scott 1608–12; Samuel Cockburn 1609–c.24; William Wishart, assistant 1613–18; William Maxwell 1625–51; James Ainslie 1652–62; Francis Scott 1664–78; James Kirkwood 1679–81; William Wishart 1682–90; James Ainslie 1690–1702; Walter Ainslie 1698–1700; John Ritchie 1703–44; George Kay, assistant 1741–43; George Bruce 1745–66; Thomas Somerville 1767–73; William Burn 1774–1826; David Aitken 1827–64; J.P. Macmorland 1865–93; Alexander Galloway 1878–1926; George O. Mackenzie 1927–35; John Pollock 1936–56; Ian B. MacCalman 1956–67; Peter B. Gunn 1968–76; James F. Falconer 1976–77; John T. Stuart 1978–84; Moira Herkes 1985–88; Thomas Preston 1989–92.

Minti Manse (min’-i-mawns) n. former manse for the Parish of Minto. The Manse was taxed for having 5 hearths in 1694 and 18 windows in 1748. A new site for the Manse was selected in 1772 and the building erected in 1773 for the incoming minister, Rev. William Burn. Lady Minto referred to it as a ‘long, low, ugly building, which it was necessary to conceal as much as possible’, and hence it was surrounded by trees. A new Manse was built 1827–9 in a Tuscan villa style, at the same time as other improvements were made to the estate; this was later known as Melgund Glen. The older building was pulled down 1830/1.

Minti Mill (min’-i-nil) n. former farm near Minto, site of the local corn mill. William Brown was tenant there in 1684. This was an earlier name for lands that were included in 1779 along with Craigend in the part of Minto liferented to Sir John Stewart of Allanshaws. It is possible that this was essentially the same location as the earlier farm of Minto Mill. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists ‘Mill Banks’, ‘Mill Haugh’ and related lands lying near to Craigend.

Minti Muir Parks (min’-i-mewr-pawrks) n. former name for a set of lands in Minto Parish. In 1779 they were liferented to Sir John Dalrymple when valued at £127 15s 1d. They were listed separately from Minto Muir and described as ‘four inclosures’ bounded by the farm of Minto Hills, the road from Hassendean to Troneyhill, the road from Lilliesleaf to Jedburgh, the lands of Crowsmoss and Walrigpark, the road from Hawick to St. Boswell’s, the farm of Newlands and the lands of Hassendean. In 1811 the lands were owned by Lord Minto.

Minti North Ludge (min’-i-north-luj) n. former lodge house for Minto estate, situated at a turn in the road, between Hillend and Standhill. The adjacent plantation is called the North Lodge Strip. One roofed building, an unroofed building and an enclosure are marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Minti Pairish (min’-i-pä-reesh) n. small parish of Minto, consisting of the villages of Minto and Hassendean and adjacent areas, being bordered by Lilliesleaf, Ancrum, Bedrule, Cavers and Wilton Parishes and part of Selkirkshire. It once coincided with the boundaries of the Barony of Minto, but later included a large part of the suppressed parish of Hassendean. The topography is dominated by the Minto Hills and Minto Crags. It was a Rectorcy within the Diocese of Glasgow, taxed at 50s 4d in 1275 and £15 11s 1d (along with Kirkmaboe) in 1376. In 1643 the lands were valued at £2768 13s 4d and there were only 5 owners: John Turnbull, William Turnbull and Elizabeth Elliot for Minto; Turnbull of Tofts; and Gilbert Elliot for Craigend and Deanfoot. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £2400. In 1663 the land tax on more than £2100 was paid by the Laird of Minto (probably still John Turnbull) and £660 by Gilbert Elliot.
Minti Place

The value was the same in 1688, when the entire Parish was owned by 2 Gilbert Elliotis, one being the Laird of Minto and the other the Laird of Craigen. There were 35 men listed there between the ages of 19 and 30 in 1799. In the mid-19th century the parish had a reputation for having no paupers, no toll-bars and no public houses. In 1838 the minister wrote that education was eroding the local language and that ‘it is not improbable, that ere long, the ancient dialect of the district, which has several interesting peculiarities, may become, in a great measure, extinct.’ The existing parish registers begin in 1703, and are fairly complete for births. However, no register of deaths was kept until more recent times, and marriages were only recorded through the reading of the banns, with some significant gaps.

Minti Place (min’-i-plis) n. Minto Place, a street in the Wellogate on the opposite side of the street from Glebe View. It was built in 1875 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company and named after Gilbert John Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 4th Earl of Minto. The upper houses were originally named Glebe Terrace until 1882.

the Minti Road (th-min’-rōd) n. street in Denholm leading out of the village towards Minto, being part of the B6405.

the Mintis (thu-min’-iz, min-tiz) n. the Minto Hills, twin hills near Minto, a distinctive feature of the landscape north-east of Hawick. The hills are formed of igneous rocks, like many of the higher peaks in the area; it is believed that they are the eroded remains of a paired volcanic vent. The southern hill has a triangulation marker and reaches 276 m, the other reaches 253 m and is topped by a cairn. The summit of the southern hill has the faint remains of a former fort, about 120 m by 75 m in size, with an entrance on the west side. The cairn on the summit of the north hill is about 10 m in diameter, flat-topped, and has some large kerb-stones around it. Around the lower slopes of the hills are extensive remains of rig, terraces and other signs of earlier cultivation – ‘The scenes round Denholm, they are rich indeed: With Minto hills and crags what can compare? And Ruberslaw, whose high majestic head Towers upward, like the lark, till lost in air’ [TCh] (see also Minti Hills).

Minti Schuil (min’-i-skil) n. schoolhouse in Minto, serving the surrounding area. It was probably established in the early 17th century. John Davidson was recorded as schoolmaster there in 1616 and James Learmonth in 1624 and 1625. Walter Elliot was schoolmaster there in the 1720s and early 1730s. A Mr. Watson was master until about 1784 and George Scott from around then until the 1820s. They were followed by William Grant, who gave the school a strong reputation, with several students boarding there from outside the Parish. Mr. Wylie took over as schoolmaster about 1840 and John R. Hamilton was teacher in the 1850s and 60s. The teacher normally served as Clerk to the Heritors and Session Clerk for the Parish. In the early 19th century there was also a small school teaching younger children and instructing girls in sewing. The Borders Archive has School Board documents for 1873–1916, registers for 1915–63 and log books for 1874–1963.

the Minti Stakes (th-min’-i-stāks) n. former Friday Common Riding race, started at least as early as the 1880s.

the Minti Stane (th-min’-i-stān) n. inscribed stone on the Minto estate, coming from near the town of Malang in East Java, also called the Sangguran Stone. The stone is about 2 metres tall and weighs more than 3 tons. It was carved in the year 982, and carries a long inscription to the Javanese King Sri Maharaja Rakai Pangkaja Dyah Wawa Sri Wijayalokananomottungga. The text (not all of which is legible) describes a granting of rights for establishing the village of Sangguran, including taxation rules, with the obverse containing a long curse against anyone who broke these rules. It was collected in 1812 by Colin Mackenzie and his team for Sir Stamford Raffles and transported ‘with the consent, and by the assistance of the Native Regent from Malang’; Mackenzie had previously worked with Dr. John Leyden and it was he who discovered the buried site of Borobudur (the largest Buddhist temple in the world). In 1813 the stone was given as a gift to the parting Governor-General of India, Gilbert Elliot, Lord Minto, who had it sent to his home in Scotland. Although Lord Minto died in England on his return, the stone continued the planned journey and was displayed in a glass case in Minto House. However, when the house was requisitioned as a military hospital in WWII, the stone was moved to garden, where it was exposed to the elements. In 2013/4 the present Earl of Minto had the stone moved to Cloughhead.

Minti Toon (min’-i-toon) n. former name for an area in Minto Parish, presumably around the old home farm of the Baron. It is listed among the Minti Toonheid (min’-i-toon-heed) n. farm at the northern end of Minto village. In the early 19th century it was farmed by the Turnbulls, with William Turnbull there in the 1860s. Robert Watson was farmer in the early 20th century. In 1779 Rev. William Elliot (brother of the Laird of Minto) was granted liferent of these lands. They are described as consisting of South Croft, North Croft, Quicksands Park, Notman’s Shot, Langlands, Templecrots, Howden, Whitfield, West South Croft, Minto Town and the green of Minto, ‘which pieces of ground were some time ago known by the name of Minto Townhead’. The lands were valued at £461 1s 10d. The boundaries of the lands were the Minto-to-Hawick road, Minto Glebe, the march ‘which runs through Howden syke’, the foot of Minto Hill, Hillends Park, Towledge Park, Cow Park and the lawn around Minto House.

Mitchel

(ni-chul) n. Hugh (18th/19th C.) wood merchant of Fisherton (Musselburgh), who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1813. He was probably the ‘Hugh Mitchell, Burntisland’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1811. He is probably the same James who married Ann Murray in Wilton in 1805, and whose children included: Jean (b.1808); and Thomas (b.1809). James (17th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Jean Beattie and their children included: Janet (b.1756); Thomas (b.1758); Jean (b.1760); and James (b.1763). The witnesses in 1758 were Andrew Lamb and John Elliot. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Liddel Bank in 1797, when he was working for William Oliver. John (18th/19th C.) ‘lynd’ at Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert ‘Bob’ (b.1780/1) Hawick’s first milkman, operating from Southfield, formerly ostler of the Tower Hotel. On one famous occasion, in a snowstorm in 1831, he brought back the Carlisle mail on foot after abandoning his horse at Teviothead. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men who in 1530 swore that William Scott of Harden did not owe more than a merk to the deceased Stephen Lauder. William (17th/18th C.) baxter in Hawick. In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Andrew Turnbull. He could be the William who married Marion Laidlaw in Hawick in 1718. William (18th C.) resident of Denholm in 1780. Probably the same William was recorded as miller at Denholm Mill in 1785. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included William (b.1780) and James (b.1785) (also Mitchell).

Mitchell

(ni-chul) n. Alexander (b.1828/9) born in Selkirk, he was a butcher on Silver Street. He is listed on Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 4 Silver Street and in 1861 he was on the Round Close. Probably the same Alexander was President of the Common Riding (Race) Committee in 1856, when the Cornet elected by the Council refused to accept the offer. He married Margaret Laidlaw. Their children included: Isabella (b.c.1851); Violet (b.c.1853); William (b.1856); Agnes (b.1859); Margaret Anderson (b.1860); Alexander (b.1862); and Janet Laidlaw (b.1864). Andrew (19th C.) tailor on the Howegate, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. Charles (19th C.) listed as miller at New Mill on Slitrig in Slater’s 1852 directory. George (d.1957) Director of Pringle’s of Scotland from 1937. Henry (b.1825/6) son of tailor James, he himself was a tailor at 8 Howegate. He was at 8 Howegate in 1861 until at least 1881. He married Anne Millington and their children included Anne, Margaret, James, Thomas, Henry (b.1856), Robert (b.1858), Mary (b.1860), David (b.1864), Agnes (b.1863), George (b.1867), Agnes (again, b.1870) and George (again, b.1872). Henry (d.1960) joined Craig’s Aerated Waters in the 1920, becoming manager. In 1948 he put in an offer for the firm, but was outbid by the Scottish Co-operative Wholesale Society. However, he remained as manager until his death. His son, also Henry, then carried on as manager. Henry son of Henry. Like his father he worked for what had been Craig’s Aerated Waters at 22 Buccleuch Street. He took over as manager in 1960, but production of sodas ceased soon after. James (c.1785–1850) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. He married Ann Murray (b.1788) in Wilton in 1805. In 1841 he was living on the High Street (about No. 12) with his wife and 3 children. He must have been deceased by 1851, when his wife was living with his son. His children were: Ann (b.c.1820); Henry (b.1825/6), a tailor on the Howegate; and James (b.1830), who emigrated to Canada. He could be the James, son of William, born in Cavers Parish in 1785. James (18th/19th C.) listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as running an eating house on the Howegate. James (1830–1914) born in Hawick, son of High Street tailor James. He was employed as a weaver, and still living with his brother and mother on the Howegate in 1851. He emigrated to Canada in 1854, arriving in Galt, then moving to Guelph before moving to Manitoba, settling in Arrow River in 1882. He homesteaded, also serving as ferryman across the Assiniboine River. He invented a new kind of lifeboat, patented in 1898 and exhibited in Europe in 1909 (when he also returned for a visit to Hawick). He married Janet Bell Waugh (1836–1920), who came from Moffat and they had several children. John (c.1815–81) real name of the man who inspired ‘Heather Jock’ in the song ‘Kinyth Stick’. He was a native of Hexham, who came to Hawick at age 16; it is said that he walked all the way in order to find work. He was well known in Town for the next 50 years. He was a wrestler and runner in his youth. He worked in the hosiery industry, but mainly made a living at poaching, as well as by gathering cresses, labouring, etc. He was also in the Grenadier Guards for... a while, but deserted. In 1841 he was a stock-ingmaker, living at 4 Silver Street, then around Punch Bowl Close in 1851. He is listed as a railway labourer on Dickson Street in 1861 and was living at 9 Kirk Wynd in 1871. It seems that he became a wanderer, collecting moss and sleeping rough (hence his nickname). Adie Ingles suggests that he may have spent some time in Australia, and returned whistling the tune of ‘Click Go the Shears’, but there is no evidence to support this. He is probably the Hawick stock-mingmaker, born in Corbridge, who is recorded in Jedburgh Jail in (at least) 1843, 1851, 1852, 1855, 1856, 1864, and 1865 (twice), and the Hexham man in Hawick Jail in 1851. In 1874 he was rescued from the Teviot ‘having been inbibing of his favourite beverage rather freely’. In 1841 he mar-thed Elizabeth Lamb in Hawick. Their children included Benjamin (b.1853/4), John (b.1846/7) and James (b.1849/50); she also had children Adam (b.1833/4) and Janet (b.1839/40) from a previous marriage. He died of tetanus in Jethart Jail – ‘Crane-like he watched the purling streams, And for a crust would gather bones; Of statute laws he’s broken more Than ere he broke of hard whin stones’ [TCh]. Peter (17th/18th C.) mason in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1710 for carrrier David Wilson and for younger carrier William Aitken. In 1705 in Edinburgh he married Agnes Guild, servant to merchant and Burgess of Edinburgh, David Weems; his name is recorded there as ‘Patrick’. Their children included: Anna (b.1706); James (b.1708); John (b.1708); and Jean (b.1712). The witnesses in 1706 were masions John Napier and John Turnbull, in 1708 were merchant Walter Weems and mason John Napier and in 1712 were masons John Turnbull and Nichol Turnbull. Rev. Robert (1826–93) from Auchterarder, he probably attended Edinburgh University. He came to Hawick as a guest preacher at the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Church towards the end of 1849, a few weeks later accepted the ‘call’ to the church, and was inducted early in 1850. He preached 3 sermons every Sunday, as well as in the open air on street corners and around the countryside. He also carried out a vigorous correspondence about evangelism in the Hawick Advertiser. He turned down one call to another church, but left suddenly in 1864 to become assistant to Dr. Morrison at Dundas Street Church, Glasgow. He was later minister at Queen’s Park, Manchester, St. John’s Wood Terrace, Middlesex, Chorton-cum-Hardy, Lancashire, Elgin Brook, Hertfordshire and Nelson Street, Greenock. Robert (1848–1928) born in Kincross, Perthshire, he spent his early years in Gala, ran away from home at age 14 and was a glazier’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He began a glaziers business in Hawick in about 1873, and certainly by 1875; this would become the longest established glazing business in Scotland. He was a Councillor for North High Street Ward from 1884, was a Magistrate for 9 years, Provost 1896– 1902, and returned to the Council 1919–23. He was also appointed Honorary Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire. His Provostship saw the erection of the Public Library, re-laying of the pavements and the letting of the Haugh as a show-ground at the Common Riding. He was an early advocate for electric lighting, Chairman of the Hawick School Board and a Common Riding supporter.
Liberal in politics, he was a Mason and an Or-rock Church elder. His business on Oliver Crescent can be seen in a photograph from the early 1900s. The glazing business was continued by his son Alexander. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery.
Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is recorded in 1798 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia and later that year he was sworn in (formerly ‘Mitchil’ etc.;

Mitchellhill (mi-chul-hil) n. Adam (18th C.)
made Bessy Rae in Minto in 1743. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Nancy Harkness. Their son Thomas was baptised in 1747. He may be the Alexander recorded as owner of 2 work horses, along with George, in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the deceased Alexander whose son George died in 1822, aged 76. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (b.1771) son of George and Margaret Noble. He was a local character of the early 1800s, described as ‘the smuggler’, possibly the local labourer who died in 1850. He is probably the man of this name recorded as a carrier on the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Hawick. A story is told about him and his father (or possibly an Alexander Mitchell, rather than Mitchellhill), resting in a hay-loft near the Carter Bar Toll. They hid their smuggled gin when they saw the excisemen coming, but then in the dark fought with each other, his
replying ‘It was me ye bate, faither! Was aw no
guigame no te squeel?’ He is recorded on the Fore Raw in 1841, along with wife Agnes. He married Agnes Scott and their children included George Mitchellhill

(b.1807) and Mary (d.1808). Andrew (1818–78) son of Thomas and Janet Thompson, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was an innkeeper in Newcastle. In 1851 he was innkeeper at about 45 North Hermitage Street. In 1861 he is recorded as ‘Proprietor of Houses’ at about 8 North Hermitage Street. He was on the Town Committee of Management. In 1857 he married Agnes, daughter of farmer William Kyle. Their children included: William (1859–1938), a mason; Thomas (b.1857); and Janet (1865–77). George (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax roll in Hawick in 1791. He was listed in Hawick along with Alexander as owners of 2 work horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the George who married Margaret Noble (who died in 1808) and whose children included: Alexander (b.1771); James (b.1773); and Mary (b.1777). He is probably the George, son of the deceased Alexander, who died in 1822, aged 76. Henry (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1690 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott. He married Isobel Robson and their children included John (b.1689). He may have witnessed a baptism in 1691 for Robert. Henry (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craikshiel in 1726 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Henry (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1757. His children included: Margaret (b.1748); John (b.1750); Janet (b.1752); Janet (b.1754); Helen (b.1757); and William (b.1760). Henry (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was at West Burnfoot in 1744. He married Margaret Thomson and their children included: Isabel (b.1744); William (b.1746); Thomas (b.1749); Henry (b.1750); Catherine (b.1753); and Helen (b.1755). J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably closely related to Robert, who also subscribed. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1776 he married Margaret Scott, who was from Jedburgh Parish. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. 2 unnamed children of his died in 1810. James (b.1809) son of Thomas and Janet Thomson. He was innkeeper of the Black Bull on North Hermitage Street in Newcastle. He was living with his sister Jane and Brother Andrew. He was also listed there in 1852. Jane (b.1815) daughter of Thomas and Janet Thomson and brother of James. She married William Nichol, but was already a widow by 1851. She had children Mary Anne, Thomas and Betty. She was living with her innkeeper brother on North Hermitage Street in Newcastle in 1951, but by 1861 was innkeeper herself. Her inn was at about 45 North Hermitage Street, and called the Black Bull. Jenny (18th/19th C.) recorded in the story of the disputed Common Riding of 1809. A bucketful of material from her byre was used to pelt Captain Campbell and others of the ‘royalist’ party as they rode up the Loan. John (16th C.) notary in 1528 to an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, signed at Selkirk. Other witnesses included the Vicars of Selkirk and Hawick. Probably the same ‘sir John’ witnessed a document in 1530 for Robert Turnbull of Philliphaugh and was recorded as a chaplain when he witnessed a document related to an action against Patrick Murray of Falahill. He was recorded as ‘sir’ in 1532 when he held a tenement in Selkirk and in 1535 when he witnessed a document for Walter Scott of Roberton. He also witnessed an agreement in 1536 between Richard Bothwell, Parson of Ashkirk, and Simon Shortreed, Vicar of Ashkirk. In 1539 he was notary for an instrument among Scots, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott. In 1540 he witnessed an agreement between Katherine Scott of Colifort and John Cranston of that Ilk. John (18th C.) resident at Penchrise. He probably married Janet Blaikie in Cavers Parish in 1734. His son John was baptised in 1734. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He married Margaret Allan and their children included Thomas (b.1691) and Robert (b.1696). The witnesses in 1691 were hard to read (perhaps Thomas and Henry Mitchellhill). Robert (d.bef. 1766) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Girkwood in 1757 and Eilrig in 1764. His widow was recorded at Chisholme in 1766 when his last child was born posthumously. His children included Isobel (b.1755), William (b.1757), Robert (b.1759), Thomas (b.1761), James (b.1764) and John (b.1766). Robert (1782/3–1858) from Selkirk, he was a farmer and carter in Newcastle. He was probably the Mitchellhill listed as ‘R., Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a carter in Newcastle among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Douglas Square. He emigrated to Galt, Ontario, where he died. He married Margaret Murray, who died in 1882, aged 94. Their children included: Thomas (1810/1–24); Robert...
Mitchell’s Ford

(1818/9–42); Jane (b.1823/4); July; and Margaret (1830/1–43). Robert (b.1787/8) from Jedburgh, he was an agricultural labourer in Denholm in 1841. By 1851 he was listed as a pensioner at ‘Guide Post’ cottages at Spittal-on-Rule. His wife was Margaret and their children included: Mary (b.1831/2); Isabel (b.1834/5); Robert (b.c.1836); William (b.1837/8); and Agnes (b.1840/1). Thomas (d.1841) proprietor of the Black Bull in Newcastleton in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was also listed as an innkeeper in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835. He married Janet Thomson and their children included: James (b.1809); Mary (b.1811); William (b.c.1812), a farm labourer; Jane (b.1815), who married William Nichol and later ran the inn; and Andrew (b.c.1820), who was running the inn in 1841.

William (17th/18th C.) recorded as servitor to William Ogilvie in Branxholme. In 1719 he was recorded as ‘workman in Branxholmtoun’. He married ‘Marion’ Laidlaw in Hawick in 1718; she was recorded as ‘servitrix to James Griebe in Todshawhaugh. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1720, with witnesses Robert Scott (tenant in Branxholme Town) and William Thomson (in Newmill). His wife is recorded as ‘Helen’ in the baptismal records for their children: Robert (b.1719); Thomas (b.1725); Jean (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); and William (b.1739). The witnesses in 1719 were William Cunningham and ‘servant’ Walter Scott. William (18th/19th C.) working man from the Newmill area, who set up a Sunday School there along with James Ruickbie. He could be related to the earlier William from Branxholme Town. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1774 for James Easton from Branxholme and in 1773 and 1776 for Thomas Rutherford from Branxholme. He may be the William who married Helen Murray and whose children included Agnes (b.1775), Helen (b.1777) and Margaret Helen (b.1781). The witnesses in 1777 were the whole congregation. William (1859–1938) son of Andrew and Agnes Kyle, he was born in Castleton. He worked as a mason. He married Isabella Bell and their son William (1898–1918) died of wounds in France (also written ‘Mitchaelhill’ and ‘Mitchelhill’; sometimes formerly recorded as just ‘Mitchill’). Mitchells (mi-chulz-slawk) n. former farm, possibly near Briery-yards. It is recorded (as ‘Mitchels”) among the lands transferred from Hassendean Parish to Wilton in 1690.

Mitchell’s Ford (mi-chulz-förd) n. former ford across the Teviot, situated a little south of a line joining Midshiels with Eastcote (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mitchell’s Gless (mi-chulz-gles) n. Mitchell Glass, glazier’s based in Hawick. It was founded by Robert Mitchell in about 1873 and became the oldest established glaziers in Scotland. The firm was continued by Robert’s son Alexander, and then by the Fisher family.

Mitchell’s Hole see Mitchell’s Slack

Mitchell’s Slack (mi-chulz-shawk) n. former name of a hollow near Southfield, said to have been a place where Covenanters held secret sermons in the 17th century. It is also known as ‘Mitchell’s Hole’. The name is said to have been given to commemorate Covenanter James Mitchell (even although there was no direct connection to him), who tried to assassinate Archbishop Sharp in 1668, and was executed in 1678.

Mitchels (mi-chulz) n. former farm, possibly near Briery-yards. It is recorded (as ‘Mitchels”) among the lands transferred from Hassendean Parish to Wilton in 1690.

Mitchelson (mi-chul-sin) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Andrew Michelsone’, when David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirches had a remission for a raid on lands at Blackhall (or Blackhaugh) tenanted by him and John ‘Spedane’. It is unclear whether this was in Rulewater or Ewesdale or elsewhere. George ‘Geordie’ (16th/17th C.) John (16th/17th C.) probably resident of Liddesdale. In 1603 he was ‘Geordie Mitchellstoun’ when there was a complaint that he and others had raided ‘Sewingdene’ in 1601, stealing livestock and goods and injuring several people; ‘Cubbie’s Archie’, servant of Simon Elliot of Binks, was the leader of the group, which also contained Armstrongs. George (17th C.) tenant at Sorbietrees in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Rev. James (d.1625) brother of John of Middleton, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1605 and became minister at Hassendean in 1611. He was translated to Bathans (Yester) in 1613 and was a member of the Assembly in 1618. He married Eupham Borthwick (who died in 1627) and their children were John, Margaret, William and James. James (17th C.) joint tenant with David Goldie of the farms of Ettrick and Millholm in Liddesdale in 1632. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as resident of Oakwood in 1502 when Alexander Scott had remission for stealing a horse from him. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the 1694...
Hearth Tax rolls as resident of the lands of Castleton. Thomas (d.bef. 1696) probably farmer in the lower Borthwick valley. In 1696 his widow, a Riddell whose first name is not given, was renting half of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch. Her cautioner was Robert Scott (also farmer at Wiltonburn), suggesting a close relationship. Note that in 1694 1/3 of Wilton-burn was being rented by Bessie Scott, widow of James Riddell, who seems likely to have been related to his wife. William (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish according to the Heath Tax records of 1694 (also spelled ‘Michelsone’, ‘Mitchesone’ and ‘Mitchelsone’).

Mithag (mi-thag) n. Alan of Hartwoodburn (16th C.) recorded in 1539/40 when he had a commission from the Dean of Jedburgh re-

ing and eating some sheep. The list of friends who would support him included Thomas Elliot, Mark Ker in Kippielaw, William Scott in Hart-woodmyres, Walter Scott in Headshaw, Thomas Lauder, John Chisholme, David Todrig, Ninian Brydon and David Mithag. There were several other men with this same surname in Selkirk at that time (the pronunciation is unclear).

Modrell (mod-rel) n. Mungo (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Hassendeanbank. His surname could be a transcription error for some more familiar name.

Moffat (mo-ř’) n. town about 40 miles to the west of Hawick, in the south-eastern part of Dumfries & Galloway. Receiving Burgh of Barony status only in 1648, it developed as a market town on the main west-coast routes to Glasgow and Edinburgh. Centrepiece of the town is the magnificent Moffat Ram statue. The nearby sulphurous spring was popular for its purported health benefits in the 18th and 19th centuries. Population 2,342 (1991) – ‘Tweed Moffat hills and lofty Cheviot’ [JH].

Moffat (mo-ř’) n. Adam (17th C.) pipe who was rebuked by Ashkirk Session in 1638 for ‘pypping at bridals’. He was ordered to appear at the Kirk door wrapped in sheets, with bare feet and legs, and ‘efer the pepil wes in, to go to the place of repentance, and so to continue Sabbathlie induring their wills’. Arthur (b.1803/4) from Tundergarth, he was farmer at Leaugh Cottage in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he is recorded there as farmer of 6 acres. His wife was Janet and their children included Jane, Walter, Janet, Margaret, James and Helen Agnes. David (16th C.) recorded in Synton in 1581 when he was witness to an agreement between Margaret, widow of William Scott of Burnfoot and her son William. George (18th C.) listed as footman at Synton in 1792, when he was working for Charles Riddell. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1789 he married Isabella Murray. James (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when the Coroner, William Cranston, was fined for failing to arrest him. His name is given as ‘Jacobo Moffet’ in Holydean or Nisbet. James (17th C.) leased part of the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1693. James (18th C.) married Agnes Hood in Wilton Parish in 1746. James (1720/1–1779) son of James, from whom he took over as tenant of Howpasley farm. In 1744 he moved to Garwald in Dumfriesshire, rented from the Duke of Buccleuch. He also farmed at Meikleholm for a while. He married Margaret Borthwick (1732/3–1806). His children included: John (1772–1823), who took over as farmer at Garwald; William (1773–1847), who farmed at Mosspeeble and Craik; and Margaret (1762/3–1855), who married Rev. Dr. William Brown of Eskdalemuir, and died in Hawick. James (1811–76) elder son of William. He and his brother James helped their father farm at Craik, as well as Garwald over in Dumfriesshire. John (1677/8–1728) tenant at Howpasley. He was said to be descended from Thomas, who received a grant of lands in Meggat in the 14th century. He was recorded at Howpasley in the baptismal records of most of his children in Roberton Parish. He married Helen Borthwick (1677/8–1754). He was succeeded at Howpasley by his son James (1721–79, baptised in Roberton) and had 7 other children, including Janet, Mary and Euphemia (1708/9–97). Other children baptised in Roberton who were probably his include Margaret (b.1716), Elspeth (b.1718), Margaret (again, b.1721) and Bettie (b.1722). He was buried at Watcarrick Churchyard. John (1813–82) son of William. He helped his father and brother James farm at Craik and Garwald. He was still tenant farmer at Craik in the 1870s. He married Anne Laidlaw (d.1915) and their children included: William (1864–1932); James (d.1941); who married Janet Robina Brydon; and Anne (d.1853). John (1859) born at Old Hoprig, Westerkirk, in 1887 he married Elizabeth McIntunes. Their children included: John (b.1883), born in Canonbie; Mary (b.1889), born in Hawick; Peter (1890–1968), born at Branzholme Park; Janet (b.1892), born at Branzholme Park; and Margaret (b.1894), born in Hawick. His wife may be the Elizabeth McInnes who wrote the poem ‘A Legend of Hawick’. Nicholas (d.1270) Archdeacon of Teviotdale in the period 1245–70, referred to as being ‘de Moffat’. He witnessed a charter for Soutra Hospital in 1255. He was bishop-elect of Glasgow twice, the first time (1259) travelling to Rome, but failing to be consecrated (probably because of political infighting among his travelling companions) and the second time (1268–70) because he died before consecration. He was buried at Tynninghame, East Lothian. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Tait, who was from Yarrow Parish. Their children included John (b.1654) and Janet (17th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear where he came from, or how long he owned these local lands. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craikhope in 1723, 1726, 1728 and 1736. His children included: Helen (b.1723); Helen (again, b.1726); Margaret (b.1728); Mary (b.1730); John (b.1736); and William (b.1741). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Deanfoot in 1777 when his son William was baptised. William (1773–1847) son of James, tenant farmer at Garwald in Dumfriesshire, and formerly at Howpasley. He became tenant at Mosspeebie in 1800 and then Craik in 1817. He was joint tenant there with his sons John and James from 1833. In addition he ran the farm at Garwald after the death of his older brother John in 1823. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jane Grieve. His sons James (1811–76) and John (1813–82) continued to farm after him. He also had 1 other son and 6 daughters. William (1864–1932) born at Craik farm, he took over Garwald when he reached the age of 21. He became known as a sheep judge, as well as a pursuer of country sports. In 1911 he bought the farm of Georgefield and Glendinning, and later purchased the farm of Garwald, which the family had long tenanted. He married Alison Gray and their children included: John (b.1892), who sold Georgefield and Glendinning in 1947; Mary; Anne; and Alexander Gray (b.1905), who sold Garwald in 1950 (also formerly ‘Moffet’).

Moffat Well (mo-fi-wel) n. sulphurous spring near Moffat, once believed to have healing powers. There are notices in Hawick’s 18th century parish records of disbursements to help sick people travel there. It was discovered in 1633 and access improved in 1758. It was a draw for visitors until the 1920s.

Moll (mol) n. horse owned by William Nixon, and rode by him when he was Cornet in 1813. It was also known as ‘Molly’. In later years it was often seen with Nixon’s groom, Willie Bulloch, who doted over it. The pair were painted together by Adam Brown.

Molle (mol, mow) n. former parish, forming what is now the southernmost part of Morebattle, which was united with Morebattle in the 17th century. It was owned by Eschina de Londonis (or de Molle) in the mid-12th century, and part of it was gifted to Kelso Abbey around 1190. Some of the lands there were also held by the Lovel family. The lands were also briefly owned by Adam of Rule, through his wife Johanna. They later passed to the Kers. Liulf, son of Uchtred, Lord of Mow, was a witness to the charter of about 1120 founding Selkirk Abbey. The Molle family married into the families of Avenel, Maleverer, de Lincoln, de Vesci, Scott and others, and tracing their lineage is difficult. The names Mow Hope, Mow Kirk (granted before 1152 to Kelso Abbey by Uchtred son of Liulf) and Mow Stell are lost, but it survives in Mowhaugh on the Bowmont Water. Members of the eponymous family crop up in local documents, e.g. ‘William Mow in Mowmaynis’ was part of inquest for lands in Rulewater in 1610 (also spelt ‘Mow’ and variants; the name probably comes f/om the Old Welsh ‘maal’ for ‘bare hill’, and is first recorded in the mid-12th century).

Molne (moi-net) n. James (15th C.) witness to the charter of 1494 in which James of Kirkurd granted the lands of Galalaw to his son David. It is unclear whether his surname has a modern equivalent.

Moistify (moi-sti-il) v., poet. to moisten – ‘Where ye will get a whisky soss To moistify your middle’ [JR].

Mole-catcher (möl-kaw-chur) n., arch. someone earning their living from catching moles. From mediaeval times until the mid-20th century this was a common occupation in rural areas. There were at least a couple employed in Denholm alone around 1900.

Mole-Head (möl-heed) n., arch. a mole-head, doit, stupid person – ‘Dogsrabbit it, what’s keepit ye, ye lazy molehead!’ [WNK], ‘Hae dune, ye molehead, Wilton Kirk’s comin’ over Teiot Brig’ [RM].

Moll (mol) n. horse owned by William Nixon, and rode by him when he was Cornet in 1813. It was also known as ‘Molly’. In later years it was often seen with Nixon’s groom, Willie Bulloch, who doted over it. The pair were painted together by Adam Brown.

Roger, son of ‘John de Hawic’, as well as Robert of Wilton and Adam of Ashkirk; this was one of the first mentions of anyone who came from Hawick. His son Richard was also a witness. In about 1193 he granted lands of Molle (or Mow) to Kelso Abbey and later had a dispute with Kelso Abbey over teinds at Molle. His relationship with Eschina is unclear (it may be that they held different parts of the lands of Molle and were unrelated). His name may also have been written ‘Ansold’. His wife was Agnes. His daughter Isolda (related). His name may also have been written ‘Eschina de Londonis’. In some accounts her father is given as Uchtred, son of Liulf. She was born in Roxburghshire and held lands at Huntlaw and Molle on the Bowmont Water. She may have first married Robert ‘de Croc’. She married Walter Fitz Alan, 1st High Steward of Scotland, who held ‘Mow’ about 1160, as well as lands at Hassendean and at Renfrew; he died in 1177. She had a charter of Molle in 1186. Around 1190 she gifted part of Molle to Kelso Abbey. She lastly married Henry ‘de Mow’, the 2 settling a dispute with Kelso Abbey about 1200 and still later is described as a widow. Alan, her son with Walter, succeeded to most of his father’s lands, as well as the office of Steward of Scotland. With Henry she had 4 daughters: Margaret (buried at Paisley Abbey, where she had given land); Eschina; Avicia (or Alicia), who probably married Richard Scott, ancestor of the Scotts of Buccleuch; and Cecilia, who married Simon Mauleverer and had a charter of Molle in about 1250. Isolda (13th C.) daughter of Anselm and younger sister of Matilda. She married Alexander (son of William, son of Edgar) and they had a daughter, Christina, who married Almar Scott of Mow, who may have been related to Richard Scott of Mow. Uchtred (12th C.) son of Liulf. He granted the Church of Molle (present day Morebattle) to Kelso Abbey in the mid-1100s. He perambulated the boundaries himself, along with Aldred, the Dean of Teviotdale. He may have been the father of Eschina (earlier written ‘de Molle’ and variants).

Monaghan (mo-ma-hin) n. Fr. James (1814/5–52) born in County Monaghan, Ireland, he served as Hawick’s first Catholic clergyman since before the Reformation, being the priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1846–47. He held morning services every other Sunday, as well as lectures in the evening. He also preached in alternate weeks at a temporary chapel in St. Boswells, as well as ministering to Catholics in in Jedburgh and Kelso. This being a strain on his health, he was transferred to Dumfries and then Edinburgh, where he died suddenly.

Monanday (mu-nin-da, mo-nin-da) n., arch. Monday – ‘As Aw was gaun up Hawick Loan Yeh Monanday at morn . . . ’ [JSB] (cf. the more modern Mondi; derived from the Anglo-Saxon).

Moncrieff (mon-creef) n. David (1771–1834) youngest son of Annan minister William and Ann Hardie. His brother William Hardie was minister at Annan after their father. He was proprietor of properties in Moncrieff’s Close from 1812, and made an Honorary Burgess in 1818 for benevolence to the poor. His property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map at about No. 63 High Street. It is unclear what the family’s original connection was to Hawick, but it could possibly be through his mother Ann Hardie (who died in 1821, aged 86). It is said that he was a great benefactor of the poor and unfortunate, and gave many contributions anonymously. He also befriended and helped Tom Jenkins, offering money so he could continue bidding on a Greek dictionary in an auction in Hawick, and later writing him a letter of reference. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His brother married Jean Laidlaw, who died at Fainash, and was probably daughter of Robert Laidlaw, farmer there; their daughter (his niece) Mary married Rev. Robert Shaw of Ewes (and earlier preacher at Teviotdale). He was described as having a round face, which was ruddy and cheerful, stout on person, always clad in black, with matching breeches and silk stockings, and carried a gold-headed cane. He appears to have married Helen Webster, and they had a daughter, Margaret. His curling stone (inscribed with his name) is in the Museum. John (d.1697), W.S. acted as agent to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696, for the rentals around Branc holme. Margaret (b.1800) daughter of David, grand-daughter of Rev. William of Annan, and niece of Marion. She presented a cloth for the communion table at Hawick Free Kirk. She lived with her aunt at 63 High Street. Marion (1768–1862) daughter of Rev. William of Annan, and brother of David. She lived at 63 High Street. She was known as a charitable contributor to many causes in Hawick. One story is told of how she was asked to donate to some particular scheme, the organisation of which had taken 4 years, during which time she saved a pound note in her bible, so that she would be sure to have it on hand when the minister called. She was listed as ‘Miss Moncrieff’ among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She presented a communion token mold to the new Hawick Free Kirk in the early 1840s. Her niece Margaret is also recorded presenting a cloth for the communion table. She is probably the ‘Miss Marion’ involved in a bond with Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood in 1845. In later age she and her niece were referred to as the ‘Misses Moncrieff’ (e.g. in Slater’s 1852 directory, when they are listed among the local gentry). She also lived for a while with her grand-nieces Anne Janet and Marion Shaw. She died in Hawick at the age of 94 – ‘There’s Bailie Nixon, merchant, The Miss Moncrieffs and a’, And if ye gang some farther east, Ye’ll come to Willie Ha’’ [DJG].

Monipennie

Monipennie (mu-nee-pe-nee) n. John (16th/17th C.) Scottish chronicler and compiler. His ‘Certeine matters concerning the realme of Scotland, composed together’ (c.1594, 1603) contained ‘The names of the principall clannes, and surnames of the borderers not landed’ (although both ‘landed’ and ‘not landed’ are included). This represents a valuable listing of the important men in each family at the end of the 16th century, and includes Olivers, Armstrongs, Elliotis, Nixons, Croziers, Scotts, etc. He also lists ‘The names of the barons, lairds, and chiefe gentlemen in euerie sherifdom’. Although first published about 1594, the list appears to have been compiled somewhat earlier.

the Monkey (thu-mung-kee) n. nickname in use in the 19th century. It was used for the proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb, and perhaps for others before him.

the Monkeyman’s (thu-mung-kee-munz) n. former popular name for the hill where Weensgate Drive and Marmion Road are now located, once used by Hawick’s youth for sledding in the winter.

the Monkeys (thu-mung-keez) n. popular name for the Ewe and Lamb bar in Orrock Place. This apparently arose from a former proprietor, Mr. Carruthers, father of the 1933 Cornet’s Lass, who was nicknamed ‘Monkey Carruthers’ (perhaps because of his gait), and hence regulars spoke about ‘gaun ti the Monkey’s’.

Monkland (mungk-liid) n. former name for the Monk’s Croft.

the Monk’s Croft (thu-mungks-kroft) n. former farm adjacent to the farmhouse at Hassendeanbank. The rents belonged to Melrose Abbey, as part of the agreement going back to the 12th century. In the time of William the Lion it was restricted to the pasturage of 200 ewes, 16 oxen and 4 cows. It was listed in 1582 among lands for which Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill demanded the charters of his father from the widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. It was referred to as ‘a half merk land in Clarelaw called Mounkland’ in about 1620 when Walter Scott had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose. The land became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. The lands were referred to as ‘Monks meadow’ in the 1692 rental lists of the Duchess of Buccleuch in Hassendean, when they were ‘evicted by the minister for his glebe’. William Elliot and John Elliot were there in 1694. It was farmed by the Dicksons of Hassendeanburn in the 18th century. The name presumably derives from an association with the monks of Melrose Abbey and the former tower nearby (also written ‘Monkscroft’; it was ‘Munkscroft’ in 1694; it is presumably the farm adjacent to Knowetownhead, labelled ‘Mountcroft’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Monk’s Flats (mungks-flaws) n. former name for lands in Hassendean Parish, recorded as ‘Monkeflattles’ in a charter around the late 1220s. It is likely to be the same as the Monk’s Croft.

the Monk’s Toor (thu-mungks-toor, -towr) n. the Monk’s Tower, former name for the tower at Hassendean, so called because of the local connection with Melrose Abbey. It was set up as a ‘hospital’ for pilgrims journeying to Melrose Abbey, perhaps as early as the reign of William I. The land was granted by Melrose Abbey to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his wife Janet Beaton, as confirmed by royal charter in 1574. It is referred to at that time as ‘the tower called Hassindenetour or Monkstour’. A branch of Scotts lived there for at least the next several decades. In 1580 a transaction involving Robert Scott of Alton was witnessed there; it was then referred to as ‘the monk tour’. Scott of Satchells lists ‘John Scot of Monks-tower, brother to old William Scott of Alton’ as one of the supporters of Buccleuch around the late 16th century. The 1634 service of heirs for Scott of Buccleuch lists the fortalice called ‘Hassenden-tour alias Monkstour’ along their possessions and it is so recorded in the service of heirs for Mary of Buccleuch in 1653 and for Anne in 1661. The ‘tower and fortalice called Hassenden tower, alias Monkstower’ is recorded in 1693 in the ratification of the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith, as heir to his mother. Its site is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, by the road to the south of Hassendean farm.

Monk’s Pond (mungks-pond) n. name for area between Bedrule and Ruecastle. Presumably there was once a pond there, perhaps with a connection to Jedburgh Abbey.

Monmouth (mon-mooth, -mowth) n. familiar name for the Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch, James Scott née Crofts.

Monograptus riccartonensis (mo-nö-grap-tus-ri-kar-tin-en-sis) n. species of graptolite fossil, identified by Charles Lapworth in 1876 in rocks from the ‘Riccarton Beds’ at Elliotfield. It is named for the locality of Riccarton.
Montagu-Douglas-Scott (1809–60) Lord Scott, son of Charles, 4th Duke and younger brother of Walter the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. He inherited the estate of Dunchurch near Rugby. He entered the Grenadier Guards in 1827, becoming Lieutenant and Captain in 1831 and retiring in 1833. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. A Tory in politics, he was said to be dashing in appearance and having a great command of language. He stood as a candidate in the 1832 post-Reform Act election in Roxburghshire, but was defeated by Capt. George Elliot. After voting himself in Hawick in 1832, he claimed he was attacked by a mob, who tried to pull him from his horse and was struck on the cheek by a rock; those on the other side of the story claimed that the incident started when his servant struck at the people around him on leaving the Tower Inn. He was also in Hawick for the 1835 election, when there were near riots around the Tower Knowe; in this election he defeated Capt. Elliot of Minto by 76 votes (and there was much accusation of ‘faggot’ voters at the time). He remained M.P. until 1837, but thereafter was never induced to stand again. He was also known as a keen sportsman, yachtsman, angler and hunter. His prowess as a hunter and success in breeding racing horses are described in H.H. Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865). In 1836 he married Alicia Anne, elder daughter of John Spottiswood; she composed the tune for ‘Annie Laurie’ as well as other songs, and died in 1900. He had no children. He is buried at Dunchurch, Warwickshire, where his wife designed a sun-dial in his memory. Verses were written about him standing in the 1832 election – ‘...And shall we then give the dear freedom we’ve won To vapourising bullies like booby Lord John?’

John Charles (1864–1935) 2nd son of William, the 6th Duke, He trained for the Navy, passing his entrance examination at the age of 12, and served for several years at sea, reaching the rank of Lieutenant. However, his naval career was cut short by the accidental death of his elder brother Walter Henry in 1886, when he became Earl of Dalkeith. He became the 7th Duke of Buccleuch on the death of his father in 1914. He was Conservative M.P. for Roxburghshire 1895–1906 while Earl of Dalkeith. He was Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburgh & Wilton Cricket Club and of Hawick R.F.C. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1904 when the Library was opened, and was present at the unveiling of the Horse Monument in 1914. He also gave the Playing Fields to the Town in 1933. In 1893 he married Margaret Alice Bridgeman, 2nd daughter of Viscount Newport. Their children were: Margaret Ida, who married Adm. Sir Geoffrey Alan Brooke Hawkins; Walter John, who succeeded; Lt.-Col. William Walter, who married Rachel Douglas-Home, daughter of the 13th Earl of Home; Sybil Anne, who married Charles Bathurst Hele Phipps; Alice Christabel, who

Montagu-Douglas-Scott

Montagu-Douglas-Scott (1832–1905) 2nd son of Walter Francis, 5th Duke of Buccleuch. He was usually referred to as ‘Lord Henry’, and was created 1st Baron Montagu of Beaulieu. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1861–68 and for South Hampshire 1868–84. He was also Captain of the Midlothian Yeomanry and served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He was also Patron of the Liddesdale Curling Club. In 1865 he married Cecily Susan, 2nd daughter of Lord Bathurst Hele Phipps; Alice Christabel, who

He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1861–68 and for South Hampshire 1868–84. He was also Captain of the Midlothian Yeomanry and served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He was also Patron of the Liddesdale Curling Club. In 1865 he married Cecily Susan, 2nd daughter of Lord Bathurst Hele Phipps; Alice Christabel, who married Henry William Frederick Albert Windsor, 1st Duke of Gloucester (and son of George V) and lived to be 102; Mary Theresa, who married David George Brownlow Cecil, Marquis of Exeter; Angela Christine Rose, who married Vice-Adm. Sir Peter Dawny; and George Francis John, who married Mary Wina Mannin Bishop. He died at Bowhill and was buried at Dalkeith. Richard Walter John (1954– ) 10th Duke of Buccleuch, succeeding on the death of his father in 2007. He long managed the Buccleuch estates as the Earl of Dalkeith. He was also Regimental Trustee of the K.O.S.B., and has been involved in several television and arts bodies. He married Lady Elizabeth Kerr (daughter of the Marquess of Lothian) and their children are: Walter; Lord Charles; and Lady Amabel. Lady Sybil Anne (1899–1990) 4th eldest child of John Charles, 7th Duke of Buccleuch. At the age of 14 she was given the honour of unveiling the Horse Memorial in Hawick. In 1919 she married Charles Bathurst Hele Phipps and they had 4 children. Walter Francis (1806–1884) 5th Duke of Buccleuch and 7th Duke of Queensberry, son of Charles Montagu-Scott. He was born at Dalkeith House and succeeded when he was 13. He was the Honorable Walter Francis Montagu until the death of his elder brother, then had the title of Lord Whitchester until his father became Duke after which he was the Earl of Dalkeith. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire (as the Earl of Dalkeith) in 1819. He succeeded to the Buccleuch titles on the death of his father in 1819. His guardian was his uncle, Lord Montagu, and he was sent to Eton to be educated, but had to leave due to ill-health. He later attended St. John’s College, Cambridge. He was made an Honorary Burgess when passing through Hawick for the first time in 1821. In 1822 he was host to George IV at Dalkeith House for a fortnight (and repeated this for Queen Victoria in 1842). Celebrations for his coming of age (in 1827) were somewhat tempered by the recent death of his grandmother, Duchess Elizabeth. He subscribed to 3 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 there was a great celebration in Hawick, with an ox roasted at the Tower Knowe, distributed to all comers, along with 500 loaves and a hogshead of ale, with the Town illuminated along with fireworks and a beacon at Crumhaugh hill. He was made Lord Lieutenant of Midlothian in 1828 and Roxburghshire in 1841. In 1829 he took his seat in the House of Lords as the Earl of Doncaster, and was a staunch Conservative in politics. However, in later years he changed his position and became a supporter of the repeal of the Corn Laws. He had Granton Harbour built in 1835. In 1838 he became Captain-General of the Royal Company of Archers. In 1839 there was a banquet held at Branxholme to celebrate his return from a long trip to Europe. A pavilion in the style of a baronial hall was erected on the Castle green (by Smith of Darnick), able to seat about 1,000 people; the chairman of the event was James Grieve of Branxholme Braes and above the chair was a buck’s head with the word ‘Bellen-den’ in gold lettering. Sometimes referred to as ‘the Good Duke Walter’, among his gifts to the town were Hawick Old Parish Church, the repair of St. Mary’s, St. Cuthbert’s Episcopal Church, parsonage and school, Buccleuch School, schoolhouse and grounds, St. Mary’s School, the sites for the Corn Exchange, Cottage Hospital and the Industrial (Drumlanrig) School, and facilities for the Allan and Dod water works. He performed the turning on ceremonies for both the Allan and Dod supplies. He also remitted customs that were traditionally levied by the Baron, cancelled a debt owed to him by the Road Trust, feuded land to the Hawick Working Men’s Building Society, and gave fields to the Bowling and Cricket Clubs at minimal rent. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He became a Privy Councillor in 1842 and Lord Privy Seal in 1842–46 in Sir Robert Peel’s administration, and was also President of the Council, as well as being ‘Gold Stick’ in 2 coronations. He regularly attended the House of Lords, but seldom spoke. He was Colonel of the Edinburgh Militia, the ‘Duke’s Canaries’. He was also President of the Highland Agricultural Society, the Society of Antiquaries, the Architectural Society of Scotland and the British Association as well as Chancellor of Glasgow University, Vice-President of the Royal Institution for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts and leading member of the Board of Trustees for Manufactures. He was heavily involved in agricultural improvements, and headed the subscription list for enlarging Edinburgh university. He received honorary degrees from Glasgow, Edinburgh and Cambridge Universities. As a member of the Bannatyne Club he funded the publication of the ‘Chartulary of Melrose’ in 1837. In the 1850s he wrote to the tenants of his farms, urging them to preserve any monuments of antiquity. A dinner was held in his honour in Edinburgh in 1878 on the occasion of his jubilee as landlord, with an illuminated address being signed by 700 tenants. His statue stands in front of St. Giles Kirk in Edinburgh, with a decorated pedestal showing scenes from the history of his family. The Buccleuch Memorial was erected in his honour, Duke Street was named after him, and a portrait of him by Knighton Warren (commissioned by the Council) hangs in the Town Hall. In 1829 he married Lady Charlotte Anne Thynne, youngest daughter of Thomas, 2nd Marquis of Bath, who was Mistress of the Robes to Queen Victoria; she died in 1895, aged 84. Their children were: William Henry Walter (b.1831), who succeeded as 6th Duke; Henry John (b.1832); Walter Charles (b.1834), Captain of the 15th Hussars, who married Anna Maria, daughter of Sir William Edmund Cradock Hartopp; Francis Robert (b.1837), who died aged 2; Charles Thomas (b.1839), Admiral in the Royal Navy; Victoria Alexandrina (b.1844), who married the Marquess of Lothian and secondly married Bertram Talbot; Margaret Elizabeth (b.1846), who married Donald Cameron of Lochiel; and Mary Charlotte (b.1851), who married Walter Rodolph Trefusis. He died at Bowhill after being Duke for an unprecedented 65 years, and was buried at Dalkeith.

Walter Francis John ‘Johnnie’ (1923–2007) 9th Duke of Buccleuch, son of Walter John, he attended Eton and served in the Navy during WWII. He then studied agriculture and forestry at Oxford and became Director of the Buccleuch Estates in 1949. He served as a Roxburghshire County Councillor 1958–60. He was Conservative M.P. for Edinburgh North, 1960–73, as Earl of Dalkeith. He was also Captain in the Royal Company of Archers, Lord Lieutenant of Roxburgh, Ettrick & Lauderdale, President of the Royal Highland and Agricultural Society for Scotland and served on committees for many benevolent organisations, including advocating for those with disabilities. In 1971 he injured his spine in a hunting accident, and was then confined to a wheelchair. In 1973 he succeeded to the Buccleuch titles on the death of his father. He was then in the House of Lords until the removal of hereditary peers in 1999. He was made a Knight of the Thistle in 1978, and changed his surname back to simply ‘Scott’. He married Jane McNeill of Colonsay in 1953 (she had been a famous model) and they had 4 children: Richard, who succeeded; Lord William, who married Hafize Berrin Torolsan; Lady Charlotte-Anne, who married Count Bernard de Castellane; and Lord Damian, who married Elizabeth Powis. He was the biggest landowner in the U.K. (about 400 square miles), and owned many great art treasures (including da Vinci’s ‘Madonna and the Yarnwinder’, stolen from Drumlanrig Castle in 2003). He died at Bowhill and his funeral was held at Melrose Abbey. Walter Henry (1861–1886) eldest son of William Henry, 6th Duke of Buccleuch. He had the tile Lord Eskdale. He died from a gun accident when stalking deer near Achnacarry, and so the Dukedom was eventually inherited by his younger brother John Charles.

Walter John (1894–1973) son of John Charles, he became the 8th Duke of Buccleuch in 1935. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church College, Oxford. He was a soldier, politician, farmer and banker, as well as Lord Steward of Her Majesty’s Household and Chancellor of the Order of the Thistle. He was Commanding Officer of the 4th Battalion K.O.S.B. 1923–30. He was M.P. for Roxburgh and Selkirk Counties 1929–35 (while Lord Dalkeith) and was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1933. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire 1932–73 and Captain General of the Royal Company of Archers, as well as being a J.P. for Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire and Deputy-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He served as Aide-de-Camp to the Governor-General of Canada. He received honorary degrees from Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities. In 1921 he married Vreda Esther Mary, daughter of Maj. William Frank Lascelles. Their children were: Elizabeth Diana, who married Hugh Algeron Percy, 10th Duke of Northumberland; Walter Francis John, who succeeded; and Caroline Margaret, who married Sir Ian Hedworth John Little Gilmour, Baron of Craigmillet. William Henry Walter (1831–1914) son of Walter, he had been Earl of Dalkeith, and became the 6th Duke of Buccleuch and 8th of Queensberry in 1884. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church College, Oxford. He was M.P. for Mid-Lothian 1853–68 and 1874–80 and stood unsuccessfully against Gladstone in the 1880 election. He was also Lord Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire from 1858 and Lieut.-Gen. of the Royal Company of Archers. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justic of the Peace in Roxburghshire. In 1885 he was made an Honorary Burgess when the foundation stone of the new Town Hall was laid and the Cottage Hospital opened. He was President of the Hawick Fine Art Association, the Cottage Hospital and the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association and Patron of the Archaeological Society and the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society. He presented a prize bat for the best batsman of the Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club in the late 1800s. In 1901
he was made a Privy Councillor. He also opened the Museum in Wilton Lodge in 1910 and was presented with a golden key in commemoration of his recent golden wedding. In 1859 he married Louisa Jane Hamilton, 3rd daughter of James, Duke of Abercorn; she was Mistress of the Robes to Queen Victoria and Queen Alexandra. Their children were: Walter Henry, Lord Eskdale, who died in a shooting accident aged 25; John Charles, who succeeded; George William, Captain in the 10th Hussars, who married Elizabeth Emily Manners, youngest daughter of the Duke of Rutland; Henry Francis, Major in the Royal Scots, who died unmarried; Herbert Andrew, Captain in the Irish Guards, who planted the British flag at Pretoria, and married Marie Josephine, daughter of James Edwards; Francis George, Aide-de-Camp to the Viceroy of India and married Eileen Nina Sibell Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, daughter of the 4th Earl of Minto; Katherine Mary, married Major Thomas Brand, eldest son of Viscount Hampden; and Constance Anne, who married Douglas Halyburton, son of the 1st Earl Cairns. Lord William Walter (1896–1958) son of John Charles, the 7th Duke of Buccleuch and brother of Walter John, the 8th Duke. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst. He was Captain in the 10th Hussars, received the Military Cross in 1919 and was Aide-de-Camp to the Governor-General of Canada 1925–26. He was also admitted to the Royal Company of Archers. He was Conservative M.P. for Roxburghshire & Selkirkshire 1935–1950, losing to Liberal A.J.F. MacDonald. In the 1930s he was connected with Sir Oswald Mosley’s ‘January Club’ and British Union of Fascists. He is also referred to as Lt. Col. Scott. He married Lady Rachel Douglas-Home, daughter of the 13th Earl of Home and they had 5 children: Margaret Elizabeth; Frances Henrietta; Rosemary Alice; Jean Louise; and Walter William. He lived at Eildon Hall, St. Boswells. (the name is also sometimes un-hyphenated and occasionally spelled ‘Montague’).

Montagu-Scott (mon-ta-gew-sko’) n. Charles William Henry (1772–1819) eldest surviving son of Henry Scott of Buccleuch and Lady Elizabeth Monatagu. He was called the Earl of Dalkeith during his father’s lifetime. Educated at Eton, he was an English M.P. for Marlborough, Ludgershall, St. Michaels and Marlborough (again) in the years 1793–1807. He was called to the House of Lords as Baron Tynedale in 1807 and became the 4th Duke of Buccleuch and 6th of Queensberry in 1812. He was Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire 1794–1819 and Dunfrieshire 1810–19, as well as Colonel Commandant of the Dunfries Militia. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was also President of the Pitt Club of Scotland, Governor of the Royal Bank and President of the Highland Society. He provided assistance to both Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd (to whom he gave free tenancy of the farm of Altrieve), and had the ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ dedicated to him. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808. He was present at the ‘Carterhaugh Baa’ in 1815. He repaired Drumlanrig Castle and generally improved the Queensberry estates. However, Robert Wilson describes how he was reluctant to grant feus for woollen mill development on his property around Hawick. It is said that he led a relatively quiet and religious life, managing his estates rather than spending time in London. In 1795 he married Harriet Katherine Townshend, 4th daughter of Thomas, Viscount Sydney; she died in 1814. He was succeeded by his eldest son Walter Francis (1806–84), when the surname Montagu-Douglas-Scott began to be used. His other children were: Anne Elizabeth (1796–1844), who died unmarried, aged 47; George Henry (1798–1808), Lord Scott, who died of measles while a schoolboy at Eton; Charlotte Albinia (1799–1828), who married James Thomas, 4th Earl of Courtown, and died in Rome; Isabella Mary (1800–29), who married Peregrine Francis Cost; Katherine Frances (1803–14), who died aged 10; John Douglas (1809–60), who was M.P. for Roxburghshire; Margaret Harriet (1811–46), who married Charles Viscount Marshall, who was later Earl of Romney; and Harriet Janet Sarah (1814–70), who married Rev. Edward Moore, Honorary Canon of Canterbury Cathedral. In ill-health for at least 6 years, he died in Lisbon, where he had gone for his health, and is buried at Warkton. Henry James see Henry James Scott (the surnames are confusing during this generation).

Montagu Street (mon-ta-gew-stree’) n. street in Newcastle on North Hermitage Street, opposite Whitchester Street.

Montbenger (mont-beng-gur) n. lands in the upper Yarrow valley, near where the B709 meets the A708. These were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, held by the Crichtons of Cranston Riddell in the early 16th century. It was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 16th and 17th centuries. William Elliot of Horsleyhill claimed he was owed ‘mails’ for his steadings at the Monteath Mausoleum

Monteath (mon-teeth) n. Miss (19th/20th C.) of St. Boswells. She rode on Common Riding Friday in 1914, perhaps the first woman to do this.

Monteath Mausoleum (mon-teeth-maw-zo-lee-um) n. mausoleum just west of Lilliard’s Edge, built in a domed Byzantine style with decorations reminiscent of India. It is the tomb of Gen. Sir Thomas Monteath Douglas (of Stonbyres, Lanarkshire), who had a distinguished military career in the early 19th century, spending much of his time in India. It was designed by the Edinburgh architects Peddie & Kinnear and erected in 1864 by Harkness, stonemasons of Hawick, under the supervision of Sir Thomas himself (with the lions carved by Alex Pirnie). The general took up residence there in 1868.

Monteviot House (mon-teev-yi’-hoos) n. stately home about 2 miles south of Jedburgh. The lands there were held by the Earl of Lothian in 1678. The mansion was created from a farmhouse around 1740, with much later alteration. The lands were described in 1788 as ‘Spittal, now called Mounteviot’. The house was lived in by Adm. John Elliot, then the Kerrs, and is now the seat of the Marquess of Lothian. The landscaping of the estate is on a grand scale compared with the modest size of the house – ‘Here stands Mounteviot, opening to the eye A second paradise for rural sweets ...’ [JR] (the name first appears as ‘Teviotmount’ in 1665, although the area was formerly known as ‘Ancrum Spittal’).

Montgomery (mont-gu-mu-ree) n. Agnes Brown (1866–1946) daughter of Hawick shoemaker George. In 1887 she was probably the ‘Miss Montgomery’ who was Lass to Cornet Tom Scott. In that capacity she was the first person to carry the bussed Flag in the Council Chambers, rather than take it to be displayed in a pub; however, it seems that the Provost’s sister, Jessie Watson actually bussed the Flag that year. In 1891 she married John Muir Hugh in Edinburgh and they had children Elizabeth Ballantyne (b.1892), Thomas Hugh (b.1894) and Jean Muir (b.1895). David (19th C.) married Mary Douglas in Denholm in 1821. George (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick for surgeon Walter Scott in 1731. George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Douglas and their children included William (b.1833). George (d.1835) cooper of the Kirk Wynd, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. George (b.1824/5–1904) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was a boarder with Walter Ballantyne at 7 Back Row, and was employing 3 men. He may have first married Margaret Elliot in 1844. He married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’, 1832–94) Ballantyne in 1854. His children included: George (b.1844/5), presumably from his first marriage; Elizabeth (b.1856/7), born in the U.S.A.; John (b.1858); and Walter (b.1860); James (1864–1921), who married Margaret Dawson; and Agnes Brown (1866–1946). He died at 66 High Street and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. George (19th C.) resident of Hawick who married Sarah Elder. Their children included: Isabella Elder (b.1881). James (1721–1803) born in Peebleshire, he was appointed Sheriff there at age 27, then served as M.P. for Dumfriesshire and for Peebleshire before becoming Solicitor General and then Lord Advocate. He was often called upon as a legal arbitrator, and in that role he was asked for his opinion on Hawick’s rights to the Common in 1765, driven by the Town’s intention to put the land to better use. His opinion at that time was that the Common belonged jointly to the successors to the particates named in the Charter of 1537 and ‘neither the Duke of Buccleuch as superior, nor the Burgesses who have neither houses nor lands, are entitled to any share in the division’. After the Council decided to let parts of the Common adjacent to the neighbouring lands, he was again asked his opinion in 1766. This time his opinion had changed somewhat and he suggested that the Duke’s tenants may have a right of pasturage on the Common, and he recommended formal arbitration to resolve the issue. He appears to have given no weight at all to the annual marking of the boundaries of the Common by the Burgesses of Hawick. He was in fact later the issuer of the decision to give 30% of the Common Moor to Buccleuch and other neighbouring landowners; this despite the fact that he was a close friend of the Duke of Buccleuch (working in Parliament to pass the Bank of Ayr bill, which directly affected both the Buccleuch and Queensberry estates), and hence could hardly be considered to be impartial. In 1777 he was appointed Chief Baron of the Exchequer. In 1778 the Magistrates of Hawick presented him with a carpet, stating that he ‘did not know that any carpets of such size, without a seam, had been made in this country’. He purchased Stanhope in Peeblesshire and was said to be enthusiastic about agricultural improvement. He retired in 1801 as Baronet of Stobo. James (18th C.) recorded at Hummelknowshaugh in 1780. He married Isabel Douglas and their children included George (b.1780). James (b.c.1805) recorded as a horsekeeper on the Fore Row in 1841. His wife was Sarah, and their children included Mary, James, Agnes and Elizabeath. James (19th/20th C.) local cricketer, having the highest batting average for the Hawick and Wilton club in the 13 years from 1886 until 1898. He also scored 43 in a match for Roxburgh County against an M.C.C. visiting side in 1895. Janet (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John (b.1814/5) shoemaker who lived at ‘Kirkgate’ (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) according to the 1851 census. He is probably the John listed as a shopkeeper on Needle Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He firstly married Agnes Smith in Wilton in 1837, but she died in 1840. His second wife was Isabel and their children included Agnes, Elizabeath, Janet and Ann H. His wife may have been Isabel Cairns, recorded as a school mistress in 1837, but she died in 1840. His second wife was Mary (again, b.1838); and Andrew (b.1841). He married Elizabeth Oliver, and their children included: Jane; Robert; and Elizabeth O. James (18th/19th C.) millwright in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the James whose children baptised in Lilliesleaf included: Robert (b.1789); Thomas (b.1790), also a millwright; and James (b.1800). He may also be the James who married Janet Inglis and had children: Jean (b.1806); Mary (b.1808); John (b.1811); Janet (b.1813); and Christian (b.1815). John (16th C.) probably name for a tenant or similar associates of James Douglas of Cavers recorded in 1541. His name appears to be ‘Johnne mudy’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Rigg (i.e. Caerlennig) in 1731 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. Robert (b.1789) from Lilliesleaf Parish, son of James, was millwright in Denholm. He is probably the millwright of that name who gave a valuation for machinery in Selkirk in 1836. He is recorded in Denholm in 1837 and in 1841 was probably on Leyden Road. He married Elizabeth Oliver, and their children (baptised in Cavers Parish) included: James (b.1820); Elizabeth (b.1821); George (b.1823); Jane (or ‘Jenny’, b.1826); Alison (b.1828); Margaret (b.1831); Mary (b.1833); Robert (b.1836); Mary (again, b.1838); and Andrew (b.1841).
