the K.O.S.B. (thu-kā-ō-es-bee) n. the King’s Own Scottish Borderers, local infantry Regiment, covering the Borders and nearby areas. The Regiment was raised in March 1689 in Abbey Close at Holyrood by David Leslie, 3rd Earl of Leven. About 800 men were gathered in about 2 hours as a ‘loyalist’ force to protect Edinburgh against the Highlanders and other supporters of William of Orange. This force was eventually renamed the Kings Own Borderers in 1805 and the K.O.S.B. in 1887, and formally adopted the Leslie tartan in 1898. The K.O.S.B. has fought in almost every campaign involving the British Army in the last 300 years. There is a record of them celebrating the Hawick Common Riding in Egypt in 1889. The 1/4th Battalion (Territorial Force, pronounced ‘first fourth’, i.e. the first part of the 4th Battalion) grew out of the Border Rifles and included many local volunteers who signed up in the years leading up to WWI. In 1915, because of the losses suffered by the regular army units, the 1/4th were sent to Gallipoli, where they took place in that ill-conceived campaign against Turkey. They later served in Egypt, Palestine and on the Western Front. Later the 7th/8th presented the town with their Colours when they were disbanded after WWI. The entire Regiment was given the last freedom of the town in 1974. The Regiment paraded through Hawick in 2006 before merging with the Royal Scots to become the Royal Scots Borderers, 1st Battalion of the Royal Regiment of Scotland. In 2009 a plaque was placed outside the Town Hall to honour all the men who served with the regiment. ‘For king and country and the Scottish Borderers the story of the 1/4th (Border) Battalion, the King’s Own Scottish Borderers on the Gallipoli Peninsula 1915’ was written by Gavin Richardson in 1987 and ‘A History of the 1/4th (Border) Battalion, the King’s Own Scottish Borderers 1916–1918: Egypt, Palestine and the Western Front’ in 1992. ‘Borderers in Battle: The War Story of the King’s Own Scottish Borderers, 1939–1945’ (1948) was written by Hugh Gunning.

the Kosbies (θu-koz-bees) n., pl. popular name for members of the K.O.S.B.

Kossuth (ko-sooth) n. Louis (1802–94) Hungarian revolutionary, who worked for Hungarian independence, becoming President in 1849. However, the republic was short-lived, with Russia intervening to help Austria. He toured Britain and the U.S. and received ovations as a champion of liberty, including being made an Honorary
Kristenbury Crags

Kowes (kow) n. Thomas (15th C.) for the sasine giving James Douglas of Drumlanrig the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He was a presbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow. It is unclear if there would be a more modern spelling of his surname.

Krame (kräm) n., arch. a temporary merchant’s booth, stall at a fair – Assolzie George Makwetie fra the claim persewit be John Scott, petlar, for a half dozen of butes, mae or fewer, allegit taken away fra his crame in Hawick [BR1655], ‘...for the stealing and thefntusly away taken out of his craine in open market ane pair of single soled shoes’ [BR1860], ‘Sally Machusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI], ‘Gibbie the Gowk’s no’ sic a gowk but he’l’ll pack up the krame a’ right enough’ [JEDM], ‘Rows of ‘krames’ laden with toothsome dainties ...’ [BM1907], ‘A raw o treis; a raw o krames; a raw o hooses’ [ECS], ‘...Better, daur-say, Brocht, factory-fresh (sei telly) til eer hame, twae hunder miles, than frac some mercat-krame ...’ [DH] (also spelled ‘kraim’, ‘crame’ and ‘creme’; still in use to refer to stalls up the Moor at the Common Riding, although it is now obscure elsewhere in Scotland; from Mediaeval German or Dutch).

Krame-wife (kräim-wif) n., arch. a female stall-holder at a fair etc. – ‘...and on Hopekirk Ba’ morning the kram-wives regularly took up their station in the kirkyard and exposed their wares of gingerbread, tam trott, and clagam on the old station in the kirkyard and exposed their wares morning the kraim-wives regularly took up their parts of southern Liddesdale.

Krucrewoch (krook-rooch) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed among tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. It is unclear what the modern form of this name would be, perhaps just an error for ‘Crook’ or ‘Crooch’.

KS (kä-ess) n. for a long time the 2-letter car licence plate code indicating Roxburghshire.

the Kumfy Mill (thu-kum-fö-nil) n. popular name for the Braemar factory on Commercial Road. It was earlier the business of A. Brodie & Co.

Kurnel (kur-nul) n., arch. a kernel (also kurnel).

Kush-Mush (kush-mush) n. nickname in use in the 19th century – ‘Here’s Soapy Ballantyne and Wull Slush, Here’s Todd Lowrie and Peggy Neill: Davie A’-things and auld Kush-Mush, And Jenny A’-things is here as weel’ [HI].

Kye (kī) n., pl., arch. cows, cattle – ‘Item sex ky viz. foure ky with followaris and twa with cauf price of the pece ourheid £8’ [SPB1579], ‘...Betide me life, betide me death, These three ky shall gae t’ Liddesdale wi’ me. Kyle (kil) n., arch. a pin used in a kind of game of skittles (see also kyles).

Kyle (kil) n., arch. a small hayrick, a ‘coil’, v., arch. to gather hay into ‘coils’.

Kyle (kil) n. Alexander (b.c.1795) dyer living on the Howegate, at about No. 12. His wife was Jane, and their children included John, Anne, Mary, William, Archibald, and Thomas. Alexander (19th/20th C.) son of John, he worked in the tweed trade and then was tobaccoconist at 3 Tower Knowe. He was Cornet in 1872. He married Jessie S. Elliot, who was daughter of Hawick’s first cabman, and died in 1885, aged 29. His son William was Cornet in 1905. Their other children included Thomas, Lizzie H. and William, none of whom reached adulthood. Andrew (1729/30–1833) born at Heughhead farm in Castleton Parish. He was tenant farmer at Braidlie on the Hermitage Water. He was farmer at Demainholm on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls, and Braidlie in 1794 and 1797. He was also taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean, daughter of David Murray, and she died in 1834, aged 83. He died in his 94th year and is buried at Ettleton. Their children included: David (1776/7–1861) and William (1777/8–1855). His daughters could be the ‘Miss Kyles’ recorded at Braidlie in the 1830s. Andrew (1805/6–91) farmer at Dinlabyre and Midtodhills near Carlisle. He was farmer at Dinlabyre in 1851, when he is recorded farming 140 acres ‘arabil, of Moor N. Known’ and employing 5 labourers. His wife was Elizabeth, who died in 1908, aged 90. Their children included: Margaret (1841/2–1922); James; Jane (1850–96); and Elizabeth (1853/4–1924). He died in Inverness-shire and the family are buried at Ettleton. Arthur (18th/19th C.) farmer at Braildie in Castleton Parish. He was listed as ‘Broadlee’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was also listed in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was also listed as head of household there in 1835–36. He was probably related to Andrew, who was farmer at Braildie in 1797. He could be the same Arthur who was farmer at South Greenholm in Castleton Parish in 1841. David (18th C.) resident of Melrose. In 1776 he married Betty Kedie, daughter of Hawick baker John, the marriage being proclaimed in both parishes. They had several children in Melrose. In 1782 his daughter Betty died in Hawick. David (1777–1861) farmer at Broadlee in Castleton Parish. He was son of Andrew and Jean Murray. In 1851 he was listed as farme of 2000 acres of moorland, employing 4 labourers. He married Betty Milligan. Their children included: Mina Crozier (b.1821); Elliott (b.1823); Jane; Andrew; and Anne (b.1833), Anne married shepherd William Glendimming. He is probably the ‘Davie Kyle’, breeder of Dandie Dinmonts, of whom a poem was written by ‘Halbert Noble’ in 1861. He fathered a child with Jean Armstrong of Canonbie in 1832. David (b.c.1785) recorded as a ‘broker’ on the Fore Raw in 1841. His wife was Margaret. Francis ‘Frank’ (1818–c.1900) son of James and Janet. He was farmer at Hillesland, taking over from his father as the Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant there in 1843. He was Cornet in 1845 and owned 74 High Street. His son John was also Cornet and farmed at the Wellogate. In 1851 he was listed at ‘4 High Street – F. Kyle’s’ (although 74 High Street is clearly meant), a farmer of 30 acres, employing 1 person. He was listed as a farmer on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was one of the townspeople who recovered from cholera during the 1849 outbreak. He lived into his 80s and was the oldest living Cornet in the late 19th century. He turned out for the Friday at least as late as 1881. There is a photograph of him with the 1846 and 1897 Cornets; this makes him the earliest Cornet of whom we have a photograph. In 1847 he married Isabella Cairns and their children included: Agnes (‘Nancy’); Janet; Isabella; James; and John. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Headshaw, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same George was cottar in Castleside in 1762; he married Margaret Laidlaw and had several children baptised in Ashkirk Parish, including Thomas (b.1762), Agnes (b.1763), Mary (b.1765), Janet (b.1767), Isabel (b.1771), and Margaret (b.1775). James (1733/4–1813) weaver in Castleton Parish. He lived at Heughhead, where his wife and some children died. However, he moved to Newcastle, where he himself died. His wife was Agnes Armstrong, who died in 1803, aged 61. Their children included Margaret (1779/80–93). James John (d.bef. 1797) gardener in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains in 1761. He married Agnes Mitchellhill in 1751 and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: William (b.1757); John (b.1759); John (again, b.1760); Adam (b.1762); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1762 were Walter Cook and Thomas Cowan. Note that his fore-name is sometimes given as just ‘John’ and his wife’s surname sometimes as ‘Mitchel’. James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He married Esther Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1787); Esther (b.1789); John (b.1791); William (b.1794); Robert (b.1796); Beatrix (b.1798); and Adam (b.1802). The witnesses in 1791 were William (surely a close relative) and Thomas Brown. The death of his daughter Beatrix is recorded in Hawick in 1815. James (1752–98) flesher in Hawick. He paid the Horse Tax in 1792 and 1797. He married Mary Porteous (1753–1824). Their children included: Mary (b.1778), who died young; Helen (b.1780), also died young; John (b.1781) manufacturer in Hawick; Andrew (b.1784), who died aged 10; and Mary (again, b.1786), also died young. He is buried in old Wilton Cemetery. He may be the gradener James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Brown and Beatrix Kyle in 1793. James (c.1780–c.1843) joiner and wood-turner of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is likely the Kyle recorded around 74 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map (but could be the other Kyle listed at No. 33), and at about the same place in the 1841 census. He probably also farmed at Hilliesland. His wife was Janet and their children included: Nancy; Francis, who became Cornet; and Janet. He may be the James recorded in about 1874 as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick (even if he was deceased by then). Jane (b.1783/4) proprietor of an inn in Newcastleton in 1825/6, and explicitly of the Grapes Inn in 1837. This was situated at 16 Douglas Square. In 1851 she was recorded as a widow. She was living with her children William and Mary in 1841 and Mary in 1851. She was also at the Grapes Inn in 1852, although incorrectly listed as ‘Kyle’. She was probably Jean Foster, who married George and had children Betty (b.1806), William (b.1808), Fanny (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813), Mary (b.1815) and Georgina (b.1819). John (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Helen Beattie and their children included: Janet (b.1756); Robert (b.1759), also a mason; and Sarah (b.1762). The witnesses in 1759 were smiths James and Robert, who were probably related to his wife. He was deceased before his son Robert died in 1801. He could be the John who witnessed baptisms in 1772 for Thomas Lookup and in 1779 for wright James Hogg. John see James John. John (c.1744–1800) farmer at Heughhead, son of William and Betty Wilson. He was recorded at Heughhead in the Castleton Horse Tax Rolls in 1789–90. He and his father were probably the ‘Messrs Kyles, Heughheads’ who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Agnes Murray, who died in 1806, aged 46. They had a daughter Isabel (d.1869). He was buried at Etterton. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1797, when he was working for George Douglas. He was also recorded as gardener at Cavers in 1800. His children included: Mark (b.1798); Alexander (b.1800); and Thomas (b.1801). John (18th/19th C.) merchant of Hawick, who was the ‘royalist’ Cornet of the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809, selected by the Council, but opposed by the ‘Wesla Lads’. This was in objection to new rules imposed by the Council, restricting the Common Riding participants to a limited circle of invited guests. The ‘Wesla Lads’ instead appointed their own ‘rebel’ Cornet, John Tullie. Kyle had about 45 supporters, half of whom were said to be strangers, and they were hissed and cursed at by the crowds. He may be the John born to James and Mary Porteous in Hawick in 1781. He may also be the same John who was a member of the Curling Club in 1812. It is possible he is the grocer and spirit dealer of the High Street who was recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory or the stocking manufacturer of the High Street – ‘...Elect a trader ca’d John Kyle, Massy in iz merchant style’ [MB]. John (1781–1851) son of butcher James, he was hosiery manufacturer of the early 1800s, with firm John Kyle & Co. operating on the High Street. He may be the same John who was appointed as Cornet during the disputed year of 1809. ‘John & James Kyle’ was listed on the High Street among hosiery manufacturers in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1841 census he is living with James and Mary, probably both younger siblings. Mary Ann, who is listed as house proprietor and hosier on the High Street on the 1851 census, is probably the same sister; she was on Bridge Street in 1861. He may have been son of James and Mary Porteous. John (1791–1866) gardener at Wilton Lodge for 50 years, he was also a Trustee and elder of the Relief Kirk. In 1851 his address was recorded as ‘Wilton Lodge Garden House’. His wife was Margaret, and children included Helen and James. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John ‘the Nether Wulton Youth’ (1827–1900) son of Alexander and Jane (or Janet) Reid, he was born at Netherwitten, Northumberland, and his father was originally from Kelso. His family moved to Hawick when he was about 10. He was known as a great runner in his younger days, hence his nickname. His brothers were William, Thomas and Richard (who was a foreman skinner in Galashiels). He worked all his life with John Laing & Sons, becoming a hosiery manager. He held many positions associated with the Common Riding organisation, and was Acting Father of Lodge 111. On Old Year’s Night 1847 he married Margaret Hall from Eskdalemuir, and she died in 1904, aged 76. Their children were: Alexander, Cornet in 1872; James Hall, framem smith, who married Jane Little; John, engineer in Bloemfontein, South Africa; Mary, who married Robert Millar; and William, who died in infancy. John (1829–1909) son of William and Robina Cavers. He was a carter, agricultural labourer and ploughman in Castleton. In 1860 he married Mary (1836–1931), daughter of John Armstrong and Janet Glendinning. Their children were: Janet (1860–1908); William (b.1836); Robina (1865–1952); Agnes (1868–82); and John Armstrong (1871–81). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery, next to Andrew (d.1891). John (19th C.) son of Francis. He was a farmer who was Cornet in 1885. It is said that his year saw the beginning of the resurgence of interest in the ceremonial side of the Common Riding, with the Council resolving to officially support the events. He may be the farmer John whose property at 74 High Street was demolished to make way for the Pavillion Theatre. John (1871–1958) born in Hawick, son of a fine art dealer Andrew, and Agnes Waugh. He left the High School in 1885, having won the Queen’s Prize for drawing. He worked for 8 years as a watchmaker and jeweller, then got an assistant teaching position in Lancashire, and finally won a scholarship to the Royal College of Art in London. After 3 year’s of study, he travelled in Europe, taught at Huddersfield technical College and in Alloa and emigrated to Canada in 1905, becoming the Art Supervisor for City Schools in Vancouver. He was later described as ‘an outstanding educationalist and one of the most influential men in the history of British Columbia Arts and Crafts’. He was one of the founders of the British Columbia Society of Fine Arts, started the first art night classes in Vancouver and was also instrumental in starting correspondence courses. He was Director of Technical Education for the Province of British Columbia 1913–38. He is also credited with being the first to sponsor an exhibition by Emily Carr. He wrote and illustrated 3 books on teaching woodwork, lettering, and metalwork, ‘Design for Industrial Arts’ (1931). He married Nellie Hadwood in Ettleton Cemetery, next to Andrew (d.1891). He was tenant at Heughhead. He and his son were probably the ‘Messrs Kyles, Heughheads’ who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Betty Wilson, who died in 1786, aged 74. Their children included: John (1743/4–1800); George (1756/7–1819); and 2 sons who died in infancy. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastle, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the ‘William, senior, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 along with ‘William, junior’ (presumably his son). William (18th/19th C.) baker in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. William (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘William, junior, Castleton’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ along with ‘William, senior’. He may be the same William as the flesher listed in Newcastle in Pigot’s 1837 directory. William (b.1794) son of James and Esther Scott. He was a gardener living on the Sandbed (actually at 6 Buccleuch Street) in at least 1841–61. In 1852 he was listed as a greengrocer on Buccleuch Street. He lived with his sisters Mary and Agnes, and nieces and nephews Helen, James, John and Margaret. In 1861 he was recorded as a market gardener. William (19th C.) recorded at Greenholm among the gentry living near Newcastle in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the same William of Greenholm recorded dissolving the drapers John Armstrong and Company in Glasgow in 1839. William (1796–1890) carter and farmer at Lea-haugh in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he is recorded as ‘Farmer of about 300 acres more or less’. He married Robina, daughter of joiner John Cavers and Jane Douglas; she died in 1877, aged 71. Their children included: Agnes (1827–82), who married Andrew Mitchellhill; John (1829–1909); James (1830–46); William (1833–1909), farmer; Thomas (1835–1914); Jane (b.1837), who married Matthew Murray; Betty (b.1839); Henry (b.1843) and another Henry (b.1845), who both died young; James (b.1847), a shepherd; George (1850–1908), a builder; and Mary (b.1853), who died at Netherraw. The family are buried at Ettleton Cemetery. William (1829/30–1904) brother of John, Thomas and Richard. He was a commission agent. William (1833–1909) eldest son of William. He farmed at Leahaugh, like his father before him. He and his brother Thomas were subscribers to David Anderson’s book of verse in 1868. He died at Leahaugh and is buried at Ettleton Cemetery. William Elliot ‘Willie’ (19th/20th C.) son of Alexander, he worked as a joiner and then coal merchant, and was probably the most famous Hawick rugby player of his day. He played forward for Hawick R.F.C. for many years, retiring after being concussed in the final of the 1913 Hawick Sevens. He came out of retirement during and after WWI and also played for Scotland. In his first international match he was the only forward not educated at a Public School. He was Cornet in 1905 (formerly ‘Cayle’, ‘Kyel’, ‘Kyll’ and variants).

kyles (kilz) n., pl., arch. the game played with small skittles (James Murray wrote that this was played in Hawick ‘in the early part of the 19th c.; possibly from Old French ‘quille’).

Kyle’s Close (kilz-clós) n. passageway off the High Street in the mid-19th century, position uncertain. There are Kyles labelled on Wood’s 1824 map at about Nos. 33 and 74; the one opposite the Cross Wynd is clearly marked as a passageway.

laddie  (la-dee)  n. a boy, young man – ‘hei was hardly mair than a laddie when hei went off ti the War’, ‘The laddie that’s over the sea, Mary, The laddie that’s over the sea’ [JTe], ‘Will the mornin’ bring the laddies back in triumph o’er the foe?’ [JYH], ‘...To be a laddie racing roond The auld Mid Raw’ [JT], ‘...Like my laddie on the lea For his ain countree’ [JEDM], ‘...But aa’ve a little laddie now, As like um as a pel!’ [DH], ‘Hawick’s a grand place ti be a laddie in! Oot on a simmer morning wi the airly sun in eer een’ [DH].

lade  (läd)  n. a watercourse, especially one that carries water to a mill, also called a dam – ‘they decided ti fill in the auld mill lade’ (sometimes called ‘a mill lead’).

ladies  (la-deez)  n., pl.  watercourses built to supply power to mills. Those in Hawick at times diverted more water than was flowing through the rivers, while at other times had a reputation for being filthy. Over time large sections of some were covered over, but some parts remained open. Signs still remain of the several that were built in Hawick. They include: the first lade off the Slitrig (the ‘Dam’ of the Backdamgate etc.), which ran the water wheel for Hawick Mill; the later lade in Lynnwood; the old lade in Wilton called Wilton Dam or Roughheugh Dam (with the water diverted by the Cauld) and its extension through Wilton Glebe lands in 1827–28; the lade along Teviot Road; and the lade used by Weenland Mill. A survey was carried out of the complex of lades off Commercial Road in 1999/2000, with 2 of them being bricked up afterwards. A section of the lade in Weensland is still visible near Oliver Park. There were also lades constructed for most of the mills in the countryside around Hawick. These include a channel from Wilton Burn passing the farm of Netherhall, the one at Wilton Dean.

Ladhope  (law-dup)  n. farm in the Yarrow valley, between Whithope and Sundhope. It was a Crown property from about 1456, being assigned to Patrick Crichton of Cranston in 1488 and Walter Scott (probably of Howpsalsy) in 1490 and 1492. Dicksons were recorded there in 1494/5, accused of rieving crimes. In 1541 the lands were occupied by Robert of Howpsasley, paying £24 yearly. Walter Scott in Ladhope was recorded as deceased in 1671 (it is ‘Ladhop’ in 1456, 1488 and 1490, ‘Laidhope’ in 1492, ‘laidhop’ and in 1494/5 ‘Laudhope’ in 1541).

the Ladies’ Circle  (thu-lä-deez-sir-kul)  n. a charitable and social organisation, started in 1930, the sister organisation of the Round Table. The Hawick organisation??.

the Ladies’ Clothin Society  (thu-lä-deez-klö-thin-su-sl-i’-ee)  n. local charitable organisation, providing clothing for the poor, active in Hawick in the late 19th century. It was run by Mrs. Palmer Douglas and Mrs. Turnbull of Ormiston.

ladies’ gairtens  (lä-deez-gär-tinz)  n., pl., arch.  the striped ribbon grass, Phalaris arundinacea picta.

the Ladies’ Pool  (thu-lä-deez-pool)  n. former name for a shallow pool below the Cauld, on the north side of the Teviot (with the ‘Cat’s Pool’ being on the other side), used for swimming in summer. The name was in use in the mid-20th century when the river course almost split in two below the Cauld. Boys who went in that side were called ‘jessies’ (also sometimes ‘Lady’s Pool’).

ladies’ purse  (lä-deez-purs)  n., arch.  the shepherd’s purse, Capsella bursa-pastoris, also used for flowers of the calceolaria.

the Ladies’ Purse  (thu-lä-deez-purs)  n. race held at the Common Riding from at least 1834 to the 1860s. For example in 1861 it was one of only 3 named races, with the others being races for riding gear etc.

ladies’ purses  (lä-deez-pur-seez)  n., pl., arch.  flowers of the calceolaria.

Ladies’ Sate  (lä-deez-sä’)  n. Ladies’ Seat, southern part of Todshawhaugh Hill, on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Todshawhaugh farm. It reaches a height of 264 m.

Ladies’ Slack  (* lä-deez-slawk *)  n. pass between Heip Hill and Welsh’s Hill, just to the north-east of Whitehaugh farm (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Ladies’ Well  (lä-deez-wel)  n. spring just to the east of Knowesouth. It may be the ‘Lady’s well, or Our Lady’s Well’ described in 1837, and suggested perhaps to be associated with Jedburgh Abbey. The Land Tax Rolls of 1811 includes mention of ‘Lady’s Well Meadow’ being part of Newton, adjacent to Lanton.
Ladies’ Edge

Ladies’ Edge (lā-deez-ə) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed ‘as Lady’s-edge’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

dladle (lā-dəl) n., arch. a church collection plate having a long handle.

the Lads (θu-lawdz) n. name sometimes used to refer to followers of the Cornet, particularly the unmarried and/or younger ones. Since 1961 the upstairs gallery at the Colour Bussing has been reserved for ‘the Lads’.

the Lads’ Gallery (θu-lawdz-gaw-lu-ree) n. middle section upstairs in the Town Hall, specifically during the Colour Bussing ceremony, when it is taken up by the Cornet’s supporters. Each ‘Lad’ has a ribbon pinned on him by one of the Maids of Honour. It has become traditional for programmes to be made into paper aeroplanes and thrown down towards the Maids of Honour at the end of the proceedings.

Ladshaw Sike (lad-shaw-sik) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley. It rises on Ladshaw Fell, joining Gavel Sike and Stock Grain to become part of the headwaters of the Howpasley Burn.

Lady (lā-dee) n. former house on Hermitage Water, located on the north side of the valley between the Castle and Braidlie, at the foot of what is now Lady’s Knowe (marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map as ‘Lada’).

the Lady (θu-lā-dee) n. nickname for David Scott of Stirches.

Lady Appotside (lā-dee-aw-pi’-sīd) n. name used to refer to Lady Margaret Lorraine of Harwood and Appotside.

Lady Day (lā-dee-dā) n. Feast of the Annunciation, 25th March, formerly the beginning of the New Year. The phrase is recorded in the local Commissioners’ Court for 1622, shortly after the beginning of the year had been shifted to 1st January. It was used to denote the end of the hiring period beginning with Whitsunday.

Lady Highchester (lā-dee-hI-ches-tur) n. title of Margaret Hamilton, wife of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester (or ‘Haychester’).

Lady Howpaslot (lā-dee-how-pas-lo’) n. name used to refer to Lady Scott of Howpasley.

Ladykirk (lā-dee-kirk) n. village on the Tweed in Berwickshire. Originally Upsettlington, its name was changed around 1500 by James IV after he nearly drowned there, it being a popular crossing point for armies. The mansion there was built in 1799, but demolished in the 1930s and replaced by a new house in the 1960s (it is ‘Lady K’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Ladyland (lā-deez-lawnd) n. former name for lands in the eastern part of Hawick. They are referred to in a charter of ‘Soltracroft’ (i.e. the Trinitylands) in 1557, which is described as having Ladyland to the east. This means the lands were somewhere east of Trinity, perhaps around what was later called Weensland. They are again mentioned in 1565/6 as being adjacent to the Trinitylands. A 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish states that ‘there is a land, called Ladyland, possessed by Sir Walter Scott of Goudilands, ther are sick lands as are pretendid to belong to the kirk’, suggesting a connection with St. Mary’s Kirk; the lands are valued at ‘4 bolls in stok, ane boll in teynd’. In a 1696 sasine of Charles Scott of Crumhaugh and Goldielands we find ‘Trinity lands’ included, and it seems likely this was the same piece of land, taking on the more generic name of the larger adjacent lands.

Ladyland (lā-dee-lawnd) n. former piece of land in the Barony of Minto. It was formerly called ‘Hassendean Ladylands’ and owned by Douglas of Cavers; part valued at £18 was sold to the Duke of Roxburgh before 1743 and incorporated into Minto Parish, while another 6-acre part valued at £16 was sold to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1745 and also incorporated into Minto. It is described in 1683 as being 4 acres commonly called Ladyland, inherited by Gilbert Elliott along with Craugend and Deanfoot. In 1811 it was ‘Hassendean Lady Lands’; the 2 separate parts were still then owned by the Duke of Roxburgh and by the Duke of Buccleuch. The name suggests that the lands (like Lanton Ladylands) were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was once parton (see also Oor Lady Land).

Ladylands see Oor Lady Land

Ladylands (lā-dee-lawndz) n. former name for land near Lanton. They were valued at £10 in the 18th century and ‘formerly stated in Cavers parish’. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describes how these lands had been in the Barony of Cavers, and were ‘Langtoun Lady Lands, now in the parish of Jedburgh’. The lands were probably connected with ‘Ladies’ Well’ and ‘Lady’s Edge’, which were once part of the lands of Newton. Like ‘Hassendean Ladyland’ in Minto Parish, these lands were probably once associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was patron, both former being contained in the Barony of Cavers (see also Lanton Lady Lands).
Ladylaw

Ladylaw (lä-dee-law) n. another name for Ladylaw Hoose and the area of eastern Sunnyhill around it.

the Ladylaw Centre (thu-lä-dee-law-seun’-ur) n. multi-purpose commercial building converted from part of the former Wilson and Glenny’s factory on Wilton Path after it closed in 1980. The complex included a furniture and carpet warehouse, small companies, offices and a bistro, which opened in 1983. It was never fully used and closed about 10 years later, being then demolished, and is now the site of a supermarket. Only foundations are left, along with the Bath Street Centre (part of Borders College).

Ladylaw Hoose (lä-dee-law-hoos) n. house constructed above Langlands Road on Rosalee Brae for manufacturer John Wilson sometime before 1846, perhaps as early as 1830. It was the first house built in Sunnyhill, in an area of the old Langlands estate formerly known as Roughheugh, and to which it later gave its name. The name itself was probably invented by John Wilson. The house can be seen as the only one in the Sunnyhill area on the painting of Hawick from the Mote in about 1850. It was built in an Italianate style and had a north wing added in 1902, probably by J.P. Alison. Alison lived in the house himself and installed a fireplace in the central hallway, with an inscription commemorating how he survived a gas explosion at the house in 1910. In 1953 the house was split into 2 dwellings. It is a grade B listed building.

Ladylaw Mills (lä-dee-law-milz) n. textile mill in the Langlands or Roughheugh area, for a long time in the Wilson family. It was built for Wilson & Watson’s, then taken over by William Wilson in 1819. In 1851 it passed to John Wilson & Sons and in 1876 to Wilson & Glenny’s, with whom it remained for a century. A water wheel was installed by Melrose’s in 1885 and repaired in 1920, when it was used along with steam engines. Following a major fire in 1959, the mill was substantially rebuilt in 1961, but closed in 1980, to be converted into the Ladylaw Centre and later replaced by Lidl supermarket (also sometimes singular ‘Mill’).

Ladylaw Place (lä-dee-law-plis) n. row of houses built from 1841 on the north side of the western end of what is now Princes Street, named after the nearby Ladylaw House. The name vanished when the area was reconstructed around 1971 and renamed part of Princes Street. North of Ladylaw Place there were allotments in the mid-to-late 19th century, and before that the first open field was called ‘the Pedlar’s Field’.

the Lady Riders (thl-lä-dee-ri-durz) n. Hawick Lady Rider’s Association, set up shortly after the 1996 Common Riding, amid the furore over whether women should be allowed to ride during the Ride-outs and the Common Riding itself.

lady’s gairtens (lä-gär-tinz) n., pl., arch. ribbon grass, Phalaris arundinacea (also gairtens).

Lady’s Knowe (lä-deez-now) n. small hill to the west of Hermitage Castle, reaching a height of 223 m. There is a settlement enclosure on the east side, including the remains of a later farmstead and with a trackway leading downhill from it. The slopes of the hill are covered with evidence of early field systems, including cultivation terraces and rig lines.

the Lady’s Pool (thu-lä-deez-pool) n. former name for a pool in the Slitrig near Lynnwood. It is mentioned as part of a story about ‘Yedie Broon’ recounted in 1863 (descending to there from Haggishaa to clean off the sticky treacle toffee).

the Lady’s Pool see the Ladies’ Pool

Lady’s Scar (lä-deez-skawr) n. steep bank on the west side of the Liddel just north of Lea haugh Cottage.

Lady’s Sike (lä-deez-sik) n. stream that effectively forms the western part of the defences of Hermitage Castle, although it was diverted to join the Castle Sike and flow to the east. On the slope between this stream and Castle Sike there is a series of small cairns (the name presumably derives from the nearby chapel being dedicated to St. Mary).

Lady Stirches (lä-dee-stir-cheez) n. name used formerly to refer to Mrs. Chisholme of Stirches.

Lady Symmington (lä-dee-si-ming-tin) n. listed among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century by James Wilson. Her name is written ‘Summington’. Her lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £200 in 1643, and in one transcription of the valuation rolls she is entered as ‘Anna McGill, Lady Summington’. Her name appears to be wrongly transcribed as ‘Lady Farnington’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Since her name appears alongside that of Rev. Walter McGill, then she was surely related to the minister. Rev. The children of Sir James Douglas of Cavers with his 2nd wife (a daughter of Sir James McGill) were said to have taken the surname McGill in order to claim inheritance from their maternal grandfather. It is hence possible that she and Rev. Walter were brother and sister, or alternatively (and perhaps more likely, given the timing) they were brother-in-law and sister-in-law of Douglas of Cavers. She presumably married the Laird of Symington, but which one is not clear. By 1678 her lands in Cavers Parish were back in the hands of the Douglases of Cavers. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls her name is mis-transcribed as ‘Farnington’.

Lady’s Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring on the lands of Borthwickbrae. The 1859 Ordnance Survey Name Book describes it as ‘a well of excellent water’. It lies only about 500 m from the former chapel of Kirkborthwick, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

Lady’s Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring near Abbotrule church, presumably named after an association with ‘Our Lady’.

Lady’s Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring lying between Wauchope and Templehall farms, close to the Wauchope Burn, in Hobkirk Parish.

Lady Synton (lā-dee-sin-in)* n. name used for the wife of the Laird of Synton, particularly the widow Isobel Scott.

Lady Todrig (lā-dee-tōd-rig) n. former name used for the wife of the Laird of Todrig, i.e. Mrs. Scott.

Lady Whitslade (lā-dee-whi-slād)* n. title used to refer to the wife of the Laird of Whitslade (e.g. in 1707).

laiber (lā-bur) v., arch. to besmear, especially with food – ‘The bairn laiber’t hir jupie or dai-"dle’ [GW].

laid (lād) n., arch. a load – ‘...as ane hivie lade thae ar ower hivie for me’ [HSR], ‘So on I gaed, wi’ love a lade My heart played loup and flutter ...’ [WaD], overindulgence in strong drink, as much liquor as one can hold, v. to load – ‘Blis-"set be the Lord, wha daye after daye lades us wi’ goud things ...’ [HSR] (also written ‘lade’).

laid (lād) pp., adj., arch. smeared with butter, tar or other substance, to protect from the weather or vermin (said of a sheep’s fleece, or the wool produced from it) – ‘Cheviot wool laid with tar and butter, per stone of 24 lbs. English, 10s. 7d.; ditto laid with turpentine, 14s. 2d. ...’ [RGJH].

laidman (lād-mun) n., arch. a carter who works for a miller, delivering corn – ‘Aw mind ... the first barley mill in Ashkirk Mill, when Aw was a young chap and the miller’s laidman there’ [BCM1880].

laidner (lād-nur) n., arch. a larder, hence winter’s provisions, particularly referring to an animal slaughtered and cured for winter food – ‘The lands of meikle whitlaw sett by rentall right To Francis Gledstanes of Whitlaw during his lifetime for gentleman Srvine with ane fat mart at ladner tyne or price thruf’ [Buc1692].

laid-treis (lād-trīz) n., arch. a large frame to fix to a farm cart to allow it to take an increased load.

Laidlaw (lād-law, -lu, -lee, -li) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name was given as ‘Eddie Ladlay’ from Whiteside in Jedforest, and the only other Laidlaw named among a set of mostly Olivers was John of ‘Breerbush’. Adam ‘Great Legs’ (16th C.) named along with Douglases, Turnbulls, Shiels and others who were accused in 1590 of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton. He may have been from Rulewater like some of the other men named. His name is recorded as ‘Eddie Ladlief Greetleges’. He was also ‘Eddie Ladley ‘great legs’ ’ in 1590 when accused, with David of ‘Antreahawge’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull, of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman. Additionally in 1590 he was accused along with David of Roughlee of stealing cattle from ‘Hefferlave’. Presumably his nickname meant he had long legs, rather than good-looking legs! Adam ‘Adie’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden’s tenants, along with Thomas of the Haugh, as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshill and others. He is also ‘Eddie’ when accused in 1590, along with Thomas of Haugh, of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Great Legs’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1656 his son James with Bessie Grieve was baptised in Hawick. This child was born illegitimately, with witnesses John (surely a relative) and James Grieve (probably related to Bessie Grieve). Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Veitch and their children included an unnamed son (b.1660). Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included Walter (b.1669) and Margaret (b.1673). Adam (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Little Cavers’ in 1684 when he was listed among a huge number of people declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel ‘Andison’ (presumably ‘Anderson’) and their children included: Alexander (b.1689). Adam (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Leadon’ (probably Leyden) and their children included Robert (b.1701). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Southfield in 1711. He married Janet Fletcher and their children included: David (b.1711); and Adam (b.1715). The witnesses in 1711 were Walter Scott in Newbigging and James Scott in Nether Southfield. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He is recorded at the Markclair in 1716 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Bell and their children included: Violet (b.1729); Simon (b.1730); and William (b.1734). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1731. Adam Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Wester Burnfoot in 1736 and Galalaw in 1747. He married Violet Bonar and their children included: Thomas (b.1736); William (b.1738); Helen (b.1741); Margaret (b.1743); and Violet (b.1747). The witnesses in 1736 were Archibald and John Scott and in 1747 were John and Thomas Scott. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Veitch and their children included: Adam (b.1754). Adam (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1787–90. Rev. Adam (1753/4–1834) licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1778, he was ordained as minister at South Shields in 1782, and promoted to St. James’, Silver Street, Newcastle in 1784. He was presented to Southdean Parish in 1809 in competition with John Richmond, who was preferred. However, he became minister at Kirkton in 1818 (although it is unclear what he did in the interim), where he remained until his death. In 1820 he performed a baptism in Cavers (probably at Caerlenrig). In 1786 he married Mary Laidlaw, who died in 1849. Their children included William, Adam, Thomas, John Whitfield, Robert and David. He could be the Adam, student of divinity who witnessed a lease for Simon in Boos Mill in 1773 (suggesting a relationship). Adam (b.1814/5) mason who worked with his uncle Andrew Roddie Michie. He was disabled in an accident, and had to give up being a builder, becoming a coal agent instead. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a coal agent at the Station for Edmonston Colliery. After his uncle’s death in 1854 he ran his own builders firm. They built Heronhill and several other local villas and started work on the Exchange Buildings, although the first arch caved in and the firm was replaced. He married Margaret Cathrae in Wilton in 1838. In 1841 he was living at the North Toll Bar. He later lived at Kirkhouse in Wilton Parish and then farmed at Ancrum Craigs. His children included: Adam, who was a clerk; Thomas C., who carried on the farm; John Michie; James, who farmed at Trowmill; and Marjorie (or Margaret Michie), who married a farmer named Elliot, later married D. McBunie Watson, and was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library. One of his children died in 1838. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in Edgerston in 1502. He was convicted for comming with Rutherfords and Grahamslaws who were fugitives and for the murder of Patrick Hepburn, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as surety. Alexander (16th C.) part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably local, like all the other men on the panel. Alexander (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Robert, who was also tenant there. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Laidlaw in 1765 and their children included: David (b.1767); Violet (b.1769); and Margaret (b.1773); and Margaret (again, b.1777). Alexander (18th C.) married Isobel Thomson in Wilton Parish in 1768. Alexander (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Hobkirk in Roberton in 1802. Alexander (d.1842) tenant farmer at Bowerhope in the Yarrow valley. He survived being buried for 14 hours following an avalanche when he was a shepherd. He was a good friend of the Ettrick Shepherd, contributed to the ‘Scots Magazine’ and wrote essays for the Highland Society. He was related to William Laidlaw, who wrote ‘Lucy’s Flittin’. Alexander (b.c.1807) farm worker for Ebenezer Beattie at Oakwood. In 1825 Sir Walter Scott writes of an incident in which he came across some little people dressed in strange clothes, sitting under some trees near the Ettrick. Convinced that he was seeing the ‘fairy court’, he summoned neighbours, who also beheld the same sight. However, it turned out that these were puppets which had been stolen from the belongings of a man who had just given a puppet show at a fair in Selkirk, and had been abandoned in the countryside by the thieves.
Andrew (16th C.) tenant in Wadeshill in Jedforest in 1541, paying 22 shillings yearly. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (c.1725–81) tenant farmer at Gair, in Ettrick Parish. He previously lived at Glenkerry and perhaps also at Ropelawshiel, where one of his children was born. In 1746 in Westerkirk he married Agnes Glendinning, who died in 1792, aged 67; she was daughter of Archibald Glendinning and Jane Beatty. Their children were: Walter (b.1747); Robert (b.1749); Archibald (b.1751); Jean (b.1753); John (1755–69); William (1758–62); James (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1762); William (again, b.1765); John (again, 1769–99), buried at Robertson; and Andrew (b.1774). He is buried at Teviothead. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Askirk Parish. His wife was Isabel and their children included: Charles (b.1767). Andrew (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Jean Elliot and their children included Barbara (b.1797). Perhaps the same Andrew was recorded in a legal case in 1814, involving Hawick lawyer Gilbert Amos. Barrie (1921/2–2004) international rugby referee from Hawick. He played for Hawick Harlequins. Bennet (16th C.) listed as tenant in Northbank in 1541 along with ‘Belle’ and Thomas, paying 22 shillings yearly. His first name is recorded as ‘Bennete’. Charles Gray (1804/5–73) youngest son of William, he was named after the evangelist preacher of the Tabernacle. He lived on the Loan (at about No. 14 in 1841). In 1851 he was a widower lodging at 5 Mid Raw with 3 of his children and in 1861 was still there (with his brother-in-law James Harkness). He married Hannah Harkness (who died in 1849), niece of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. Their children included Margaret, William, Ellen (or Helen, who died in infancy), Thomas, George, a second Ellen (whose son was Walter Laidlaw) and Charles. Daniel McGowan (1826–64) younger son of William and Jane Fisher. He was a commercial traveller and partner in the family hosiery business. He built Hopehill, intending to be married, but died aged 39. There is a portrait of him. David (16th C.) tenant at ‘Anterhauch’ (i.e. Antioch) according to a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably an ancestor of the later David there. David (16th C.) resident at Roughlee when he was among men accused in 1590 of raiding into England 2 years earlier. He is ‘Davie Ladley of the Roughley’, and he is listed along with Adie ‘Great Legs’. Additionally he was accused in 1590 of stealing horses from John Salkeld, along with ‘Renny’, Thomas of Haugh and Steven of the Bank. David ‘Cuddy’s Davie’ (16th C.) listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. His name is recorded as ‘Davie Laidlea Cuddis Davie’, but it is unclear who his father was. David (16th C.) described as ‘Davie Ladley of Antreahawghe’ in 1590. He was accused of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman, along with ‘Adie Great Legs’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull. It seems likely that ‘Antreahawghe’ is Antroch in the Jed valley. David of Sunnyside (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he was accused (along with Rutherfords, Croziers, Elliots and Armstrongs) of rieving from Woodburn in the previous year. His name is written ‘Davie Ladley of the Sonnye syde’. He probably lived around the Jed valley. David (17th C.) tenant at Jedhead in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. David (18th C.) farmer at Highchesters. He was related to John Leyden’s father, his sister Margaret probably being Leyden’s paternal grandmother. He married Isabella Armstrong, who claimed descent from the Armstrongs of Gilnockie; she died in Hawick in 1808, when he was already deceased. Their children included: Robert (b.1753); and Isabella (b.1764), who married Robert Grieve. David (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1772 when his son David was baptised in Robertson Parish. Agnes (b.1768) was probably also his daughter. David (18th/19th C.) agricultural labourer. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Whithope in Robertson Parish. He married Helen Hart in 1825 and their children included: Robert; George; Isabella (b.1831); Helen; Margaret; and Davina (b.1838). David (b.c.1810) educated at New Mill and Edinburgh, he was Schoolmaster at Newmill from 1837. He is probably the teacher David, living with Thomas and his family at Branxholme Loch in 1841. He may be the David, son of John, born in Minto Parish in 1808. David (1907–2003) born near Hawick, and educated at the High School and then Nottingham University, he worked in accountancy, manufacturing and other jobs. He founded the first Scout troop in Hawick, and travelled to Switzerland for the very first Scout Jamboree. He moved to Cornwall, where he spent most of his life, where he was an enthusiastic Rotarian. He married Elsie in 1936. Douglas (b.1810–77) son of William and Helen Douglas, he was from the Rulewater Laidlaws. He was a licensed grocer in Hawick in the early 1800s and apparently known for selling good whisky. He is listed on the Tower Knowe in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is recorded at about 3 Tower Knowe in the 1841 census, living with Joan and Jessie, probably his sisters. Probably before 1851 he emigrated to the Toronto area, where he married Elizabeth Ross and had a daughter Mary Douglas. He had a general store in Holland Landing and in about 1853 went to Lefroy, where he traded in grain. George (1797–1844) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America. They lived in Delaware County, New York, then moved to Niagara Township in Canada, and from about 1843 set up a farm at Caistor in Lincoln County. In 1817 he married Margaret Rae (d.1846). Their children were: William (1818–53), born in Hawick; Jenny (b.1819), who died in infancy; Jane (1821–63), born in the U.S.A.; Maria (1823–1913); Margaret (b.1824), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1825–95); and James (b.1826). Helen see Nelly. Helen (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside in 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isabel ‘Belle’ (16th C.) tenant in Northbank in 1541, along with Thomas and Bennet. Isabella (b.1865) daughter of William, farmer at Weensmoor, and Agnes Purdon. She was recorded as a pupil teacher in Hawick in 1881 and in 1891 was in Midlothian working as a G.P.O. Clerk. She worked for the Post Office in London. Jackie (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 as ‘Jaquie Laidlaw’ whe he was part of the raid on the Kers in Jedburgh by a group of Turnbulls and their associates. Jacob (17th C.) recorded on Antroch on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Laidlo’. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Jacobi Laidlaw’ listed as a debtor in the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501, along with David Scott ‘de Franscurni’ and Adam Scott, with Walter Scott of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. James (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, along with Lawrence, probably his father or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Thomas renting another part of the farm. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included Malie (b.1651). James (b.1648), with no mother’s name given, may also be his son. The witnesses in 1651 appear to be William and Walter Laidlaw. James (17th C.) owner of quarter of the lands of Fairnielees in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ of 1647. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hislop and their children included William (b.1651). The witnesses were William Elliot and William Dickson. James (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Fulsid in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert was also listed there, and so probably a relative. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Wadsholm’ (probably near Wadeshill) in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James (17th C.) tenant in Kirkton. He is listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. He was recorded there in 1700. In 1699 in Hawick he married Margaret Hislop from Castleton Parish. Their children included: James (b.1700), baptised in Hawick. He is probably the James in Branzholme Town whose son Andrew was baptised in 1702. The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and William Clerk in Colterscleuch and in 1702 were James Ogilvie (gardener at Branzholme), Henry Orrock and Alexander Hislop (probably related to his wife). Perhaps the same James married ‘Mary Hiselip’ in Kirkton Parish in 1716. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Hislop in 1698. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as a herd in Ashkirk itself in 1715. He married Margaret Hislop and their son James was baptised in 1715. It is possible he is the same James from Hawick who married Margaret Hislop. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His son Adam was baptised in Roberton parish in 1703. Walter (b.1705) may also have been his son. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Deanbrae in 1716. He married Bessie Armstrong in Cavers in 1701. His children baptised in Caves included: William (b.1702); Margaret (b.1703); Walter (b.1705); Walter (again, b.1706); Janet (b.1708); James (b.1711); Thomas (b.1716); John (b.1718); Walter (b.1721); Robert (b.1724); and Agnes (b.1724). James (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘coater’ (i.e. cottar) at Branxholme Park in 1708. He married Margaret Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Adam (b.1703); and James (b.1708). The witnesses were Walter Grieve ‘in Park’ and James Grieve in Commonside. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His marriage is recorded in 1715, with no wife’s name given. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, recorded at the Marklair in 1722. Perhaps the same James married Marion Laidlaw in Hawick in 1721. He had an unnamed child baptised in Robertson in 1722. James (18th C.) tenant at Berryfell in the 1730s, where several of his children were born. He leased Over Cassock from Walter Scott of Harden in 1738. He married Margaret Mack in Cavers Parish in 1733 and their children probably included: an unnamed son (b.1734); Helen (b.1736); James (b.1738); James (again, b.1740); and Betty (b.1741). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1737 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. It is unclear if he could be the same man as the tenant at Berryfell. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Laidlaw in 1739. James (18th C.) resident of 'Mains' (i.e. Borthwickbrae Mains) in 1743 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. Bessie (b.1749) was probably his daughter. He may be the James living at Parkhill in 1736 when his daughter Janet was baptised. James (d.1756) shepherd at Wigg. His son William was wright in Toon-o-Rule. It seems likely that he is closely related to James, who was progenitor of the Laidlaws of Weensmoor. James (b.c.1738) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. He lived at Weens, Weensmoor, and Bonchester Bridge. In 1764 he married Margaret Scott. Their children were: John (b.1765), who married Margaret Buckham; William (b.1768), who farmed at Weensmoor; Thomas, who died in infancy; James (b.1771); Janet (b.1774); Thomas (again, b.1776); Walter (b.1780), born at Weensmoor, gardener at Raby Castle; and Euphemia (b.1783), who married Walter Elliot from Hawick. He may be the James, son of John who lived at Parkhill. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Oliver and their children included: Thomas (b.1769); Janet (b.1773); Margaret (b.1776); Agnes (b.1778); and Mary (b.1780), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1773 were Thomas Rutherford and Robert Riddell. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Hawickshiels blacksmith John Ker in 1760. James (18th C.) farmer at Hartwoodburn, recorded on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Learmont, who died in 1797 (the result of a drowning). Their children included: Janet (b.1771); James (b.1774); Robert (b.1778); and John (b.1785). The witnesses in 1771 were John Bridges, senior and Alexander Bunyan and in 1774 were the whole congregation. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Meadshaw in 1780 and 1786. His children included Walter (b.1780) and James (b.1786). He may be the James who married Isobel Scoon in Roberton in 1777 and whose children included Beatrix (b.1791). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1795 he married Janet Darling and she died in 1810; the word ‘sauglay’ appears to be written after his name, and although it is unclear what it meant, it is probably the same as ‘Saughlaw’ applied to Walter in 1787 and 1795. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mabonlaw, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. James (1795–1838) son of hosiery manufacturer William. He was a hosiery finisher, and lived for several years at West Port House. He married Ann Affleck, from Peebles and she died in 1834. He died leaving a young family of 4 sons and 1 daughter: William (b.1821) the eldest; Thomas (b.1824); Robert (b.1826); Catherine (1828–1841); and Walter (b.1832). James ‘Jimmie’ (1797–1879) son of William and Helen Douglas, he was born at Langraw. He was miller at Hallrule Mill, recorded in Pigot’s directories of 1825/6 and 1837, as well as Slater’s 1852 directory. He was listed at Hallrule in 1841. He was tenant of Hallrule Mill farm in the period 1825–55, and all his children were born there. He was later farmer at Hartshaugh Mill, where he was recorded in 1868. For a while he also transported grain across the Border by horse and returned with coals. By 1871 he was farming 237 acres at Hartshaugh Mill. In 1826 he married Isabella Turnbull at Greenriver House, and she died in 1871, aged 73; she was daughter of Henry Turnbull and Betty Stavert. Their children included: Elizabeth (Betsy, 1827–1906), who married Andrew Murray; William (b.1829), who took over at Hartshaugh Mill, but moved to Canada and died unmarried; Henry (1831–89), who had an accident that affected his brain; Helen (b.1833), who lived at old Hallrule House, and she died in 1871, aged 73; she was daughter of Henry Turnbull and Betty Stavert. Their children included: George (b.1865). James Armstrong (1911/2–44) son of Robert and Ellen, he was born in Hawick. He served as a Lance Corporal with the 1st Singapore Volunteer Corps. He was captured by the Japanese and killed on the Rakuyo Maru, one of the ‘Hell Ships’, which were torpedoed by US submarines. Janet (b.c.1775) listed as ‘Independent’ in 1841 when she was living at Hallrule with the Smith family. She was probably a widow of a local Laidlaw. J.B. (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Edinburgh. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. Jock (1920-2001) born in Makerstoun, nephew of piper Daniel. He joined the Queen’s Own Cameron Highlanders as a boy piper and served with them during WWII. He was one of only 79 survivors from his battalion who made it back to Britain after the fall of Dunkirk. In 1945 in Burma he led his company into battle, probably the last time this was done in the British army. After the War he lived in Hawick for a while, where he as Pipe Major to the Scout Pipe Band. He then moved to Banbury in Oxfordshire, where he helped found a new pipe band. He was honorary piper to the Dunkirk Veterans’ Association and the Burma Star Association. In later life he lived in Springwood village, near Kelso. He married Margaret and they had children John and Sandra. John (d.be. 1502) resident of Lilliesleaf. John (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Roughhill according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. John (16th C.) tenant in a small part of Harelawcleuch in 1541. He was probably related to Patrick, who was one of the tenants in the other part. John (16th C.) tenant in ‘Waldspindillies’ (i.e. Wattie’s Spinnels) in 1541, paying 44 shillings yearly. He was probably related to other Laidlaws who farmed nearby. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Ladlay of Breerbushe’ on a 1544 list of Scotsmen who gave their allegiance to the English King. ‘Edde’ from Whiteside was the only other Laidlaw listed. His lands were probably Brierlee, near Edgerston. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Wadeshill in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John (17th C.) resident at Shankend in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 3 hearths. John (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to Walter, who was at Ormiston in 1684. John (17th C.) resident of Roughhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas who was also listed there. John (17th C.) recorded at Thorterwood on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. John (17th C.) resident in ‘waills’ near Newmill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. This was probably the farm of Valesburn. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Hume and their children included Isobel (b.1702). John (d.be. 1709) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Robson and their children included Margaret (b.1702); and Agnes (b.1709). His wife was a widow in ‘Langtoun’ in Ashkirk Parish when their daughter Agnes was baptised. John (d.1712) resident of Craikshiel. His daughter Isobel was baptised in 1712 after his death, his brother ‘being sponcer for ye child’. He may be the John who married Mary Murray in Roberton in 1707. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1708 he was described as ‘servitor to Adam Elliott of Arcleton In Harwood’ when his son Walter was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Adam Elliott and Bailie Walter Graham. probably related to John, who was tenants in the other part. Peter Fisher (1830/1–1917) 2nd surviving son of William, and brother of Thomas and William, he was named after his maternal grandfather. He planned to enter the ministry, but instead joined his father’s manufacturing business, then set up on his own as a hosiery manufacturer in Melgund Place. He later moved to Appletreehall, although that factory burned down. He then lived at Wilton Grove, where he ran a small frame shop, which was later taken over by Robert Murray, then Mr. Routledge and eventually by Peter Scott. He moved to Jedburgh at one point, to work at Allars Mill (run by other family members), but spent most of his long life in Hawick. He later lived at Galabrae and became a coal merchant, auctioneer and newspaper correspondent. He was the last surviving member of the first ‘reformed’ Council, and one of the last two surviving Hawick Burgess. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He joined the Free Church at the Disruption, and the first meeting to set up a Free Church in Wilton took place in his warehouse in 1866. He was described as ‘unconventional in manners and address’. In 1857 he married Catherine Gray in Rothbury. Their children were: William, who died young; George (b.1861), also died young; Jessie Lindsay (b.1862); Jane Fisher (b.1864), who married W.F. Duncan; another William (b.1866), who spent many years in Australia and later farmed in California; George Gray, a fruit grower in California; Mary, who married G.A. Hillman of Chino, California; Thomas; Daniel, a chemist in Basingstoke; and Catherine, who married chemist W.B. Rawlinson. He was healthy to the end, walking from his house at Galabrae into town until about a year before his death. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Peter (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Rachel Scott in 1862 and their children included: Helen (b.1863); Hannah (b.1865); Sarah (b.1867); Thomas (b.1869); Robert (b.1871); and Sarah (again, b.1874). Richard (19th/20th C.) served as a Bailie and also as Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He also wrote articles for the Archaeological Society Transactions. In 1939 he was living at Wilton Lodge. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘in knawis edzartoun’ in 1502. He was presumably tenant in part of Edgerton. He served as surety for his brother Walter (alias ‘Rutherford’), as well as for himself, and was fined for non-appearance. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Alexander, who was also tenant there. Robert (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Whiteside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He was probably related to James, who was also listed as a tenant there. Robert (17th C.) recorded in a rental roll of 1669 along with Adam Oliver. It is unclear where they were tenants, but perhaps Northbank or Slack. Robert (17th C.) listed in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is ambiguous where he was a tenant, but he is listed right after John in Wadeshiel and before Robert in Southdean Law. He could be the tenant of Wadeshill who is recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (17th C.) listed as tenant in Southdean Law in the 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Roughlee according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is probably the same Robert recorded at Southdean Parish on the crossed out part of the rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Northbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in Haregrain in 1709 when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Walter Grieve in Park and Walter Scott in Merrylaw. Perhaps the same Robert was herd in Commonsidie in 1714 when his unnamed child was baptised, with witnesses Thomas Hume ‘preacher’ and Walter Purdom. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Falnash in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Redfordgreen in 1711 and 1724. His children included Janet (b.1711) and Bessie (b.1724). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Eilrig in 1711. His children included Andrew (b.1711). He must be distinct from the Robert in Redfordgreen, since the baptisms are just a month apart. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Thornyhaugh in 1741 when his son Thomas was baptised. Robert (b.1743), Walter (b.1745) and John (b.1747) were probably also his children. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee in Hobkirk Parish in 1785–88, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He was surely related to Thomas who was farmer there immediately afterwards. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Falnash from about the 1760s. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Nichol. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–97. In 1797 he was recorded having 3 work horses as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for Laidlaw

5 dogs in the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. Around 1799 he was one of the local men who contributed money to help in the war against France. He may have been father of Elizabeth, who married William Elliot in Millburnholm. He may also have been father of Thomas, who moved from Fahnash to take over the farm of Todshawhill in Eskdalemuir after the ‘Gonial Blast’ of 1795. He married Jane Shortreed and had children born in Cavers and Hawick Parishes: Elizabeth (b.1750); Mary (b.1752); Margaret (b.1753); Robert (b.1755); Jane (b.1759), who may have married Rev. William Hardie Moncrieff and died in 1821 at Fahnash; Janet (b.1762); Thomas (b.1764); Janet (again, b.1765); William (b.1766); John (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Cornelius (b.1772). The witnesses to the 1764 baptism were John Pott and George Pott of ‘Ridge’, while in 1766 they were Walter Scott senior (Commonside) and Robert Scott (Skelfhill). Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gorrenberry, recorded on both the Horse Tax Rolls in 1792-97. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He may be the Laidlaw at Gorrenberry whose daughter Jean married Henry Elliot of Bush. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Janet Scott, who was from Cavers Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Fahnash. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may have been son of Thomas and grandson of the earlier Robert, tenant at Fahnash. Robert (d.bef. 1809) wright at West Port. He was already deceased in 1809 when his wife Margaret Scott died. He married Margaret Scott in 1790. He was probably the Hawick mason who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at Harden in 1786 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. He could be the Robert who married Margaret Grievie in Robertson in 1786. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1796 as ‘Residenter in Denholm’. He married Margaret Blyth and their children included Betty (b.1796) and Andrew (b.1798). Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant in Kingledoors in Drumelzier Parish. In 1788 (and also in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he is recorded as owner of the parts of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish that had previously been owned by Ralph Davidson and Andrew Davidson, valued together at £210 5s 6d. He married Dorothea Turnbull, who was probably daughter of Walter Turnbull of Firth, a previous occupant of Greenhouse. Their children were Robert (b.1782), Walter (b.1783), Dorothea (b.1785), Elizabeth (b.1786), Barbara (b.1788), Robert (again, b.1790), Alexander (b.1792), William (b.1795), Agnes (b.1797), Mary (b.1799), Robert (once more, b.1800), Elizabeth (again, b.1802) and Mary (again, b.1803). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Sibbald in Wilton Parish in 1803. Robert (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. His son James died in 1819. He also had a child who died in 1838. He may be the Robert who married Anne Walker in Wilton in 1837. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Beatrix Michie and their children included: William (b.1815). Robert ‘Auld London’ or ‘London Laidlaw’ (1792–1878) son of William, the first of the family to come to Hawick, with his mother being Margaret Aitken. He rented the Moat and other fields and sold milk etc., at his house at 17 Loan. He acted as one of the witnesses called to London to give evidence about the conduct of some Hawick men at the election of 1837, and was given his nickname as a result. He is said to have told his friends on his return that during the boat trip there had ‘only been a fir deal between him and eternity’. His nickname was also pronounced ‘Auld Lunan’. He married Rachel Rae, who died in 1866, aged 71. Their children were: William (b.1815); Margaret (b.1820), who married Andrew Blyth; Rachel (b.1822); Janet (b.1825); Jane (b.1827); and Robert (b.1832), who was Cornet in 1852 and married Jessie Gow. He is probably the stockingmaker Robert whose infant son’s death is recorded in 1822 – ‘Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’ [HI]. Robert (b.1799) only son of Thomas, he was farmer at Nether Cassoc, like his father. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jean Beattie and his children included Mary and John. Robert (19th C.) married Ann Walker in Wilton in 1837. Robert (b.1820s) 4th son of Thomas. He became a small hosiery manufacturer in Glasgow, then in 1886 emigrated to New Zealand (although this may have been a generation later). Robert ‘Robbie’ (19th C.) appointed choir-master of Hawick Parish Church in the mid-19th century, being one of the first to hold such a position in Hawick. Robert (b.1825/6) butcher in Denholm. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a butcher and shopkeeper. In 1861 he was living with his mother Mary and sister Margaret, probably on Main Street. He may be the Robert who chaired the centenary Burns night in Denholm in 1859. Robert (1832/3–1908) son of Robert, he was a mason to trade, but later took over his father's fields up the Loan. He was Cornet in 1852. He married Jessie Gow from Perthshire, who died in 1910, aged 48. Their children included James (who died aged 25 at Burnflat Cottage), John (who died in infancy), Robert (who died aged 17), Stewart (who died in infancy), another Robert (who died in infancy), Rachel, Eliza (who married Robert Oliver Pott, from Duns, woollen manufacturer in Honley, near Huddersfield), Walter and Agnes (who lived at Thongsbridge, near Huddersfield). Robert (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Murray and their children included James (b.1863) and Janet (b.1866). Robert Grierson (1856/7–1933) son of Thomas, he helped run the family tweed manufacturing business along with his brother William. He was for a while President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He was also Captain of the Golf Club. He lived at Hazelwood in the late 1800s. After the firm folded around 1908 he carried on as a commission agent, finally retiring only a few years before his death, and passing on that business to George Wilson & Sons. Sir Robert (1856–1915) 2nd son of William and Agnes Purdom, he was born at Bonchester. He was educated at Kirkton and Denholm schools, and served his apprenticeship with Wood, Graham & Co., drapers in Hawick. He then moved to work as a draper in London, leaving in 1875 for Cape Colony (i.e. South Africa), where he carried out business in Kimberley. In 1877 he sailed for Japan, but broke his journey in India. He moved to Calcutta, where he worked for 5 years. In 1881, along with Edward Whiteaway, he set up Whiteaway, Laidlaw & Co., which operated on a strictly cash basis (unusual for businesses in India in those days), with the first premises in Chowringhi. The firm expanded from drapery into general goods, and soon there were department stores in about 20 major cities throughout India. In 1898 he became sole partner and the firm expanded into other Asian cities (including Shanghai and Singapore); it was often referred to as ‘the Selfridge’s of India’, at its height employed 2400 people, and remained in business until 1962. He also owned tea plantations in Darjeeling and rubber estates in the Federated Malay States, and was senior partner in a shipping firm. He joined the American Methodist Church in India and became involved in missionary work and Christian schools. In particular he supported the Calcutta Boy’s School, which opened in 1877, with a girls’ school following 9 years later. He spent 20 years in India before returning to Britain, settling in Chislehurst. He bought a new house there by Camden Park and named it ‘Bonchester’; the street that it is on was later called Bonchester Close. A Liberal, he became more interested in politics on his return to Britain, and was M.P. for West Renfrewshire 1906–10, with Winston Churchill being one of his political supporters. He was knighted in 1909, and became British Commissioner to the International Opium Commission in Shanghai. In 1909 he moved to ‘The Warren’ at Coney Hall, Hayes, and grew rhododendrons and azaleas there. A keen traveller, he was a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. He was also President of the World’s Sunday School Association and an Executive of the National Temperance League. In 1912 he purchased the estate of Wolfelee from Edward Elliot, 6th Laird; in later life he was referred to as being ‘of Wolfelee’. In 1879 he married Mary, daughter of Capt. W. Blow Collins and widow of W.L. Francis of the India Office. He became step-father to the several children of his wife, and together they had children: William, who died in infancy; Ethel; Mildred (or Margaret); Dorothy; and 2 daughters who also died in infancy. He had the William Laidlaw Memorial Hall erected at Bonchester Bridge in memory of his son William, as well as his father, who was also William. He left some money in his will to support a school for poor children in South India, which is still known as the Laidlaw Memorial School, Ketti Nilgiris. He privately published ‘By the Way’, about a trip he took around the world. Robert Henderson (1872–1953) writer of the words for ‘Auld Hawick My Dreams’ and ‘Teviotdale’, among other songs. He was son of stockmaker Thomas and Robina Henderson and born at 6 Slitrig Bank. He apprenticed as a printer in Hawick, but emigrated to America, working in Boston. On returning to Hawick he joined the Hawick Express and became foreman printer there. He contributed poems to the newspaper and also wrote the Betty Whutson’s Letter column for many years. He wrote an article on the Verter Well and associated poetry competition for the Archaeological Society. He was long connected with West Port Church, being Session Clerk there for 22 years, as well as Sunday School Superintendent. He was also a lay preacher himself and was a member of Lodge St. James 424. He married Agnes Anderson. He lived at 22 Beaconsfield Terrace, where he died, and is buried in the Wellogate.
Cemetery. Note that an older brother of the same name was born in 1863 and died in infancy, leading to some confusion over his own year of birth. Simon (15th C.) listed as a witness on the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. His name is recorded as ‘Symone Laidlaw’ and he may have been a ‘presbyter’, along with Thomas Falconer. Simon (18th C.) tenant at Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1762. He was later farmer at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish, according to a tack of 1773, with the Riddells of that Ilk. He is probably the Simon, son of Adam and Helen Bell born in Ashkirk in 1730. Steven of Bank (16th C.) recorded in 1590 of stealing horses from Englishman John Salkeld. His name is recorded as ‘Steven Ladley of the Steake’ and others named are ‘Rennye’, Steven of the Banke and David of Roughlee he was accused of stealing horses by John Salkeld. He was further recorded along with Lionel in 1590, accused of stealing from the Reeds of ‘the Old towne’ in England. Thomas (17th C.) paid the land tax in Southdean Parish on behalf of the Marquess of Douglas in 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Rouchhirst according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. ‘Martin Laidlæ, yr.’ was also listed, and presumably his son or brother. Probably the same Thomas was listed at Rouchirst in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, along with John. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Antwoch’ (i.e. ‘Antroch’) in a rental roll of 1669 for Jedburgh Forest. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at the farm of Haugh in the Jed valley according to a 1669 rental roll. Probably the same Thomas was still tenant in Haugh on the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. There were Laidlaws at Haugh at the end of the 16th century. Thomas (17th C.) married ‘Euphan Bellinden’. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1676, with witnesses Thomas Borthwick and Robert Grieve. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Loraine and their children included: Helen (b.1686); and Isobel (b.1689). He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Roberton in 1686 for John ‘Bleak’ and Katherine (who may have been his sister, or other relative). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Stirches in 1747. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Smith (also living in the Stirches area) in 1747. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1744 and their children included: James (b.1745); Thomas (b.1747); Margaret (b.1750); and Robert (b.1752). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He married Margaret Anderson and their children included: Janet (b.1765) and James (b.1767), baptised in Hawick; and Janet (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771), Betty (b.1773), Agnes (b.1775), Adam (b.1778), and Adam (again, b.1780), baptised in Wilton. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1767 for herd John Scott and in 1771 for Thomas Elliot in Newmill. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee according to the 1789–91 Horse Tax Rolls. He succeeded Robert as farmer, and was presumably his son or brother. Thomas (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1792 (along with fellow weaver William) he witnessed a baptism for Walter. He was thus probably closely related (perhaps brother) to the carpenter-making Laidlaws. In 1795 and 1797 he witnessed baptisms for William. He married Margaret Stewart and their children included William (b.1796). The witnesses in 1796 were Walter (perhaps his brother) and Walter Tinlin. He could be the son of William and Isabel Birnie baptised in Hawick in 1772. Thomas (18th/19th C.) ‘gauger’, i.e. exciseman in Hawick. The death is recorded in 1811 of ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’, spouse to his father. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newlands in Minto Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. Thomas (d.1823) farmer at Falnash. He was probably son of Robert, who also farmed at Falnash. He was listed at Falnash on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1786. He took on the additional farm of Nether Cassock in 1800. He was probably the ‘Mr Laidlaw of Falnash, a gentleman of great responsibility and intelligence’ who took the young Tom Jenkins into his household, and later encouraged his education. He married Margaret Beattie and had one son, Robert. He was listed at Nether Cassock when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He could be the Thomas of Cavers Parish whose son Robert was baptised in 1771. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Agnes Glendinning and their children included Thomas (b.1814). Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker who moved to London. In 1815 the death of his mother, Anne Hogg, is recorded in Hawick. Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker at Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the resident of Cavers Parish who married Amanda Wood and whose children included Anne (b.1817), Thomas (b.1820), Helen (b.1823) and John Young (b.1826). Thomas (1801/2–28) son of William. He emigrated to America and died in a canal there aged 26. His children included William (grocer in Hawick and manufacturer at Cumledge Mills), Thomas (also grocer for a while), Walter (who moved to Australia), Robert (hosiery manufacturer of Glasgow, who moved to New Zealand) and Catherine (who married Alexander Mercer and moved to Australia). Thomas (b.1810/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was a farmer at Longbaulk. In 1841 he was living at Easter Branxholme Loch (with a teacher, David, who was probably his brother). He was still there in 1851. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 20 acres there. His wife was Hannah and their children included John, David, Peter, Thomas, Sarah, Helen, Hannah and Mary. Thomas (b.1820s) 2nd son of Thomas. He carried on his brother William’s grocer’s business at 4 High Street, then moved to Bolton. His children included William, Thomas, James and Catherine. Thomas ‘Chinny’, ‘Secky’ (1829–1907) hosiery manufacturer who ran William Laidlaw & Sons from 1855, and built the mansion house he called ‘Sillerbuthall’ (completed in 1866). His name is entered onto the Land Tax records in about 1874 as owner of Dovemount and Silverbuthall (acquired in 2 parts from James Scott) and also for owning ‘Souter’s Acre’ that was formerly part of the Whitehaugh estate. He was recorded at Silverbuthall in 1868. He was the third son of William, and continued to develop the family business. He acquired Lynnwood Mills from William Nixon in 1864, carrying out more yarn spinning, while giving up hosiery, but extending Teviot Crescent Mills. It is said that he was an easy-going boss until he found out he was being cheated by some of his employees, and thereafter was much harsher; this probably explains his nickname of ‘Secky’ (and perhaps also ‘Checkum’). His manner was described as being brusque and unaffected. In the 1850s he served on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Hawick District. He was a Conservative in politics and was Councillor for North High Street Ward 1861–66. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also a member of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce, being President for a while. He was for many years Chairman of Hawick Gas Company. He also helped found St. Andrew’s Free Church, and deacon there for a long time. He married Beatrice, daughter of Robert Grierson, and she died in 1898, aged 66. Their children were: William; Robert Grierson, Daniel McGowan, who died aged 6 after an accident with a pony; Elizabeth, who died in infancy; Elizabeth (again), who married solicitor Henry Cousins; Jane Beatrice (b.1868), who married Anton Becker of Leeds; Margaret Isabella (b.1871), who married E. Jenkins, of the Bank of Scotland; and Kate, who lived in Edinburgh. He was buried at the Wellogate and his sons William and Robert G. wound up the family business about a year later. Several stories are told about him (in notes by James H. Haining). Thomas (19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. He married Robina Henderson, and their children included: Thomas (b.1864); Robert Henderson (b.1866), who died in infancy; William (b.1868): John Henderson (1870), a tailor who emigrated to Boston and settled in Port Hood, Nova Scotia, with his son Alexander Fraser being a leader in the Canadian co-operative movement; Robert Henderson (b.1872), song writer; and William (again, b.1874). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Paterson and their children included Mary (b.1871). Thomas Hill ‘T.H.’ (1846–1915) born in Annan, he became a master painter in Hawick. He was also a Bailie, and known as a local artist, living at 13 High Street. He illustrated Robert Murray’s ‘Hawick Characters’, Goodfellow’s ‘Guide to Hawick’ and Tancred’s ‘Rulewater and its People’. He also painted a back view of the old Town House. His wife Jane Scott Pow was daughter of Gavin Pow and sister of John Pow. He was also the ex-Bailie Laidlaw who was on the initial Common Riding Ceremonial Committee of 1887 and served as a Race Steward. Thomas A. Kenneth ‘Ken’ (1936–) son of Jean and Arthur of 6 Northcote Street. He started cycling at age 15, and became extremely successful. He won the Scottish Daily Express 3-day road race in 1957, later winning the Scottish 100 mile championship in record time. He was the only Scot in the 1960 Olympic Games team and in 1961 was the first Scot to complete the Tour de France, leading during the 16th stage. He emigrated to New York in 1964, where he worked as a carpenter, and later moved to Savannah, Georgia. He married Theresa and emigrated to Savannah, Georgia. In 2005 he was made an Honorary Life Member of the Hawick Cycling Club at a special dinner. An annual event in Hawick, the ‘Ken Laidlaw Sportive’, was named in his honour. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded is 1502 as brother of Robert ‘in knawis edzartoun’ and also in the same place. He was probably a tradesman of some sort in Hawick. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in Hawickshiel in 1766. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Spinny and their children included: Isobel (b.1718); and James (b.1720). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Anderson and their children included: Isobel (b.1737); and Margaret (b.1742). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Smail and their children included Margaret (b.1741). Walter (18th C.) shepherd in Roberton and Hawick Parishes. He was at Eilrig in 1733, 1735 and 1736 and was recorded as ‘herd’ in 1742. He married Janet Chisholme in Roberton in 1731. Their children included: Margaret (b.1732), Janet (b.1733) and Margaret (again, b.1736), baptised in Roberton; and Walter (b.1742), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1742 were Walter Hogg and John Elliot (both servants). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Wilson and their son William was baptised in 1745. Walter (18th/19th C.) probably brother of William, with whom he came to Hawick to work in the carpet factory. In 1796 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas (perhaps another brother) and in 1797 he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for William. He married Mary Miller in Hawick in 1780 and their children included: William (b.1781); Beatrix (b.1784): Isabel (b.1785); William (again, b.1788); Margaret (b.1792); and Robert (b.1796). The witnesses in 1792 were weavers William and Thomas Laidlaw, who were probably his brother and another relative. The names of his children suggest that he could also have been a son of William and Isabel Birnie, but his baptism is not recorded in Hawick Parish. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1787 as ‘Saughlaw’, when his daughter Margaret died and again in 1795 when his unnamed child died in Hawick Parish. Presumably the designation was the place where he lived, but this is unclear. He was probably related to James ‘sauglay’, recorded in 1810. He may be the Walter whose son James died in Hawick in 1781. Walter (b.1780) son of James and Margaret Scott. He was born at Weensmoor in Hobkirk Parish. He became head gardener at Raby Castle, home of the Duke of Cleveland. He had daughters Mary and Anne. Walter (b.c.1780) born at Meadshaw, son of James and Isabella Scoon. He became a butcher in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 19 High Street. In 1801 he married Margaret Oliver (b.1777) in Kirkton. Their children included: Robert (b.1802); Mary (1806–81) married James Little; Isabella (b.1812) married Mr. Temple; and Walter (b.1816). Walter (b.1811/2) from Jedburgh, he was a blacksmith in Wilton. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a blacksmith on Wilton Place. In 1851 he was on Wilton Place, at about the modern 34 Princes Street, and in 1861 on the east side of Dickson Street. His wife was Janet and their children included Thomas and Elizabeth.

Walter (1838–1911) poet and local historian in Jedburgh. He wrote several articles about Jedburgh and its history and for 20 years acted as custodian for Jedburgh Abbey. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He wrote ‘Poems: chiefly on Jedburgh and vicinity’ (1901) and ‘Poetry and prose’ (1900, 1904, 1908) – “...a geyan yibble poyeter an a leal Border Scot ti buit, Walter Laidlaw maun be a sair miss ti the Waeter-gate o Jed’ [ECS]. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as one of the tenants of the lands of Deloraine and ‘Wardishope’ in Ettrick. William (17th C.) recorded as a tenant in Woll in 1639. He was called as a witness in a dispute between Francis Scott of Castleside and his mother-in-law, Margaret Scott. Perhaps the same William had the following children baptised in Ashkirk Parish: William (b.1631); Margaret (b.1632); James (b.1636); Janet (b.1639); Robert (b.1639); Thomas (b.1641); an unnamed daughter (b.1643); Agnes (b.1645); and William (again, b.1647). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1651 for John Stewart and perhaps one for James. William (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Bank according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John Oliver was tenant there at the same time. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Brewbuse’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear exactly where this farm was. William (17th C.) tenant in Little Cavers recorded in 1684 on a list of men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Laidlaw and their children included: Agnes (b.1688). William (1656/7–1717) tailor in Dodburn. He is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (17th/18th C.) herd in Wester Essenside. He married Mary Elliot in 1697. Perhaps the same Laidlaw (with no forename given) was herd in Huntly in 1715 when his son John was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Jean (b.1701); and Janet and Catherine (b.1705). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1712) and Robert (b.1715). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Jackson and their children included: James (b.1706); and Robert (b.1708). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1728 he was at Broadleeshiel when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Howcleuch in 1742 when his son James was baptised in Roberton. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1727, 1730 and 1737. He is probably the William who married Margaret Reed in 1725 and had children John (b.1727), Thomas (b.1730), Janet (b.1732), Betty (b.1735) and Bessie (b.1737). William (18th C.) son of shepherd James, he was a wright in Town-o’Rule. It was said that the family were related to the Laidlaws of Weensmoor, and their burial grounds were adjacent in Hobkirk Kirkyards. He married Margaret Best of Kirkton Parish in 1762; they were members of the Associate Kirk in Jedburgh. Their children included: Agnes (b.1763), who married an Oliver; Bettie (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); Thomas (b.1773); Mary (b.1775), who married a Thomson; and Nelly (b.1777), who became teacher at the ‘Scainty Schuil’. He could be the William who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1811. William (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1764 and 1767. His children (baptised in Roberton) included James (b.1764) and Alexander (b.1767). He may be the William who married Bett Matheson in Roberton in 1762, his wife being from Yarrow Parish. William (18th C.) married Helen Grieve in Wilton Parish in 1764. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Brown in 1764 and their children included: Adam (b.1765); and Helen (b.1768). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Birnie (or Burnet) and their children included: William (b.1759); Isabel (b.1762); Margaret (b.1765); and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation.
Given the names, it is possible that he was father of William of the carpet factory, as well as father of Walter and Thomas. William (1759–1823) along with his brother (perhaps Walter) he came to Hawick from Leith to work in the Orrock Place carpet factory. However, it seems that he may be the son of William and Isabel Birnie born in Hawick (so perhaps the bothers returned to Hawick rather than coming as complete outsiders). His property on the Cross Wynd was sold in 1811 to form part of the site of Allars Kirk. He was also one of the founder members of the Independent Kirk in Hawick, being an elder in that church and calling his youngest son after one of the evangelist preachers, Charles Gray (the ‘Tabernacle’ was built next door to his wife’s family home on the Kirk Wynd). He may be the William who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785. He was progenitor of the most prominent local branch of the family. He is probably the weaver William who in 1792 (along with fellow weaver Thomas) witnessed a baptism for Walter. In 1794 he witnessed a baptism for manufacturer Walter Richardson. In the early part of the 19th century he set up his own hosiery business with his son William, starting out with just 4 frames. They later expanded to both tweed and hosiery, building the main mill in 1834, and later focussing just on tweeds. He married Margaret Aitken (1765–1842), daughter of Robert and Janet Scott. They lived in the Mid Raw and their children were: Janet (b.1784), who married spinner Robert Wilson; William (b.1786), ‘Shaffles’; Robert (b.1792), ‘Auld London’, who lived at 17 Loan; James (b.1795), who married Ann Affleck and died leaving a young family; Thomas (b.1797), who emigrated to America and drowned in a canal; Walter (b.1797), who probably died in 1819; George (b.1797); Charles Gray; Isabella, who married William Wilson, spinner of Lynnwood; Grace, who married draper George Borrowman; and 3 other sons, including one who farmed in Yarrow. The witnesses in 1795 were James Rae and Thomas (who was surely related) and in 1797 were Thomas and Walter (perhaps both his brothers). William (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (b.1768) son of James and Margaret Scott. He was born at Hartshaugh near Bonchester (although Tancred states he was born at Wester Swanshiel). He was farmer at Weensmoor in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded there in 1841. His wife was Helen, daughter of James Douglas from Castleton; she was said to be a favourite of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Their children included: James (b.1797), who farmed at Hallrule Mill and Hartshaugh Mill; Douglas (b.1799), born at Kirknower, but died young; Christian (b.1801), who married William Gowanlock; Margaret (b.1803), who married William Sibbald; Mary (b.1806), married William Smith; Helen, married John Turnbull and went to Canada; Douglas (again, b.1810), who emigrated to Toronto; Joanna (b.1812), who later went to Canada and married storekeeper David Davidson; John (d.1814); William (b.1815), who later farmed at Weensmoor; and Jennet or Jessie (b.1817), who married Hawick shoemaker Charles Scott. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greatlaws in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. William (1780–1845) born at Blackhouse in Selkirkshire, the Ettrick Shepherd worked for his family for 10 years. Together they helped Sir Walter Scott to gather Border ballads. He first encountered Scott when he travelled to Yarrow with John Leyden in 1802. He was a farmer, then an exciseman and later worked as Scott’s factor and secretary. He wrote several poems of his own, including ‘Lucy’s Flittin’ (which appeared in ‘The Banquet of Euphrosyne’, published in Hawick in 1811). He also wrote a description of Selkirkshire for the Edinburgh Encyclopædia. William (18th/19th C.) married Betty Easton in Wilton Parish in 1809. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nelly Waldie and their children included Mary Jane (b.1813). William (18th/19th C.) road contractor, who was one of the first residents of Bonchester Brigend in the early 1800s. William ‘Auld Laidlaw’, ‘Shaffles’ or ‘The Auld Laird’ (1786–1861) eldest son of the first William, along with whom he founded the hosiery firm William Laidlaw & Sons in 1811, succeeding to the business of Mr. Purdom. To begin with he was the traveller for the firm, spending much time in the Newcastle area (where he often stayed at the ‘Robin Hood’ on Pilgrim Street) and further afield, sometimes in the company of Robert Leishman. One story is told of how he returned to Hawick on foot during a snowstorm, losing his way, but bumping into Willie Winter’s post, thereby recovering his bearings. It is said that he loved to bargain, and could not take a trip, even once retired, without some goods to sell. He lived for a while in a house at 14 Howegate, with his stocking-shop behind; this is probably the place marked ‘Laidlaw’ on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1834 he built Teviot Crescent Mills, expanding into the much larger premises there and moving into tweeds. He built up a huge manufacturing business from humble beginnings. In his day he was apparently the only person to openly sing ‘Teribus’ out of season, at the Bailies’ dinner, and he would sing the ‘Auld Sang’ at the married men’s Common Riding dinner. He was an ardent Conservative in politics, losing his coat tails during the election troubles of 1837, and objections to ‘Radicals’ seeking the vote were often made in his name afterwards. In 1814 he married Jane Fisher (daughter of a Glasgow merchant), who died in 1844, aged 50. His sons were: William (1817–59); Peter Fisher; Daniel McGowan (1824/5–54), who built Hopehill; and Thomas (b.1829). They also had daughters Margaret (who married Rev. John Gilchrist Dyer in 1846), Jane, Jessie (1833–41), one who became Mrs. McGinly, and 4 others who died in infancy. He later married Jane Rutherford (nee Waldie) at Edinburgh in 1845. Her daughter Agnes Rutherford married William, her step-brother. Although most of his family left for the Free Kirk at the Disruption, he stayed with the ‘Auld Kirk’, despite repeatedly being cited for not keeping fast days. He lived beside his factory of Teviot Crescent, and is buried in St. Mary’s Cemetery. A portrait of him is in the Museum, by an unknown artist. William (b.1788) son of the first Hawick William’s brother (possibly Walter), and hence cousin of ‘Shaffles’. He was a weaver and later a grocer. Along with his brother Walter he owned property at 8 Loan. He is listed as a grocer in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Agnes Lamb. Their children included: Mary (b.c.1819), who married Thomas Stevenson; Agnes (b.c.1821), who married Hugh Douglas; and Walter (b.c.1823), an engineer with the government in India. He is buried at St. Mary’s. He could be the ‘Wm. Laidlaw, Loan’ who arranged for a musician from Jedburgh to play for the ‘rebel’ Cornet of 1809. William (b.1792/3) porter in Hawick, living at about 20 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was described as an ‘Out door Labourer’ and living around the Crown Close. His wife was Isabella and their children included John, Margaret, Elizabeth, William, Catherine, Sophia and Isabella. He could be the William listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a coal agent (for Arniston Colliery) at the Station. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Middlemas in Wilton in 1844. William (19th C.) tinsmith in Hawick. He married Helen Elliot Amos (from the Hobkirke family) in 1866. William (b.1814/5) shoemaker in Denholm. In 1851 he was living with his wife Margaret Jamieson and their children Janet, Ann, Catherine, Thomas, Margaret, Joan and Jane. William (1815–80) son of Robert, ‘Auld London’. He was a frameworker living on the Loan, at about No. 9. He married Christian Affleck Scott (1815–75). Their children were: Robert (b.1838); George (b.1840); Margaret (b.1846), who married Joseph Hogg; Rachel (b.1852); and Daniel (b.1855). He took in 3 sons of his uncle James when he died about 1838: Thomas (b.c.1824); Robert (b.c.1826); and Walter (b.c.1833). William (1815–84) son of William, who farmed at Weensmoor. He is recorded as farmer of Weensmoor in 1851, farming 52 acres and employing 1 labourer. He lived with his niece Mary and nephew James. By 1861 he was farmer at Bonchester, farming 152 acres and employing 3 people. He farmed at Bonchester for 19 years. He was listed on the first congregation of Wolvelee Free Kirk in 1849, was a trustee and was Treasurer for 37 years. He also helped with building the first church there. In 1853 he married Agnes Purdom (from Newcastle), aunt of the Agnes Purdom who married mason Andrew Waugh. His children included: William (b.1854), farmer at East Fodderlee; Robert (b.1856), Indian businessman and M.P. for East Renfewshire; Agnes (b.1858), who married Stewart Douglas Elliot, a Councillor in Edinburgh; Helen (b.1859), who married James Phimister; James (b.1861), who emigrated to Canada and died unmarried; Isabella (b.1865), who worked for the Post Office in London; Arthur (b.1867), who emigrated to San Francisco and married Hattie Turner; John (b.1868), who emigrated to Australia; Margaret (b.1870), who married James Armour, a tea manager in India; Douglas (b.1874), a market gardener in Congleton; and Walter Scott (1877–1919), who trained as a doctor and managed a rubber plantation in the Straits Settlements. The William Laidlaw Memorial Hall was built partly in his memory. William (1817–59) son of William, he took over the firm of William Laidlaw & Sons in partnership with his brothers in 1845. The firm purchased Lynnwood Spinning Mill from Nixon’s. He was Cornet in 1838. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Agnes, daughter of builder Robert Rutherford, and his step-sister. Their children were: William, of Grieve & Laidlaw; and Jeannie Waddie Fisher (b.1858), who married John G. Wilson. He later married Christina F. Scott (who died in 1875, aged 59). In 1861 his widow was an ‘Annu- itant’ at 3 Teviot Crescent. William (b.1818/9) originally from Melrose, he was a farmer at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. He is listed there in 1841, when he farmed 150 acres and employed 8 men. His wife was Isabel and their children included William and Mary. William (b.1821) from Hawick. He married Betsy Elliot and became a sheep farmer in Fodderty, Ross and Cromarty. William (1821–1908) manufacturer, born in Hawick, son of James and grandson of hosiery manufac- turer William. His mother was Ann Affleck, from Peebles. At the age of 17 he was left with no parents, and entered the warehouse of his uncle William on Teviot Crescent, but after a few years became a grocer. His premises were on the High Street (No. 12), where the Cannon Inn had been and the Royal Bank would be built later. In the 1841 census he was there (near the top of the Millport), but in 1851 he was at No. 4 High Street, formerly Andrew Borthwick’s property. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was ‘William Laidlaw, jun.’ on the High Street. He left Hawick in 1854, turning over the grocer’s business to his brother and taking a lease of Cumledge Mills near Duns. He started in yarn weaving, but moved into blanket manufacturing. From 1875 he was also involved (along with other family members) with Allars Mill in Jedburgh. The overall business was called Laidlaw Brothers, and later Laidlaw’s Blanket and Tweed Mills, Ltd. He purchased Cumledge Mills outright in 1888. He managed the Cumledge Mill side of the business along with his sons William and Alexander, with the older brothers, James and John managing Allars Mill. In the 1930s the company directors included 3 William Laidlaws, all cousins! In 1844 he mar- ried Elizabeth Bell and their children included: Mary (b.1861). William (1835/6–1917) son of Thomas. Along with his brother Robert Grier- son he was a partner in Thomas Laidlaw & Sons, but wrapped up the business in 1908. He died at Broadstairs and is buried in the Welloagate Cemetery. William (1854–1911) son of William and Agnes Purdom. He farmed at East Dodderlee. In 1880 he married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’, 1854–1925) Hall, 2nd daughter of baker Robert Young. They had 4 sons and 1 daughter, including Douglas (b.1888), Agnes Lamb and Alexander (b.1892). In 1901 his family were living in Minto. William (b.1845/6) son of William and Jane Newell. His marriage certificate states that he was born in Dunfriesshire, although family tradition says that he came from Hawick. He emigrated to Aus- tralia and in 1870 in Melbourne married Agnes Ferguson (daughter of a Denholm mason). They had 2 sons. William (1852/3–91) son of William. He was a manufacturer of Grieve & Laidlaw, Stonefield Mills. He married Mary Reid Clark, who died in 1929, aged 76. Their children in- cluded William Rutherford Clark, who died aged 16. William (1857/8–1912) cycle agent in Hawick. He was Captain of St. Cuthbert’s (rugby) Football Club for its first two seasons, from when it formed in 1877. He was also known as a keen cyclist in his early years. He worked for 38 years with Geo. & Jas. Oliver, providing valuable assistance to John Oliver in his work as Clerk to the School Board. He was in partnership with Robert Milligan for a while as a cycle business. He mar- ried Betsy Park, and she died in 1935, aged 70. They had 2 children who died young. William (1866–1931) eldest son of Peter Fisher. At the age of 19 he emigrated to Queensland, where he was involved with gold mining and prospecting and served in the Australian Bushmen’s Corps in the Boer War. After marrying he moved to Califor- nia where he became a fruit grower, and his wife Rev. Alice Z. Laidlaw was pastor at the church in Narod. (formerly spelled ‘Ladlaw’, ‘Ladley’, ‘Laidla’, ‘Laidlay’, ‘Laidlæ’, ‘Laidiea’, ‘Laidie’, ‘Laidley’, ‘Laidlo’, ‘Laidlow’, ‘Laidhue’, ‘Laidly’, ‘Laidlaw’, etc.).

Laidlawhope (laid-lup) n. former farm in Lid- desdale, probably on the Laidlawhope Burn. It is listed as ‘Ladlawhope’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 4 merks. On the 1541 rental roll it is ‘Ladelhope’ and still worth 4 merks, but vacant at that time. It is possible that this is the ‘Ladhope, of the laird of Howpaslettes lands called Scott’ which were burned by the Laidlaw Memorial Hall

Armstrongs in 1544 (although ‘Lairhope’ could be meant). It is probably the ‘Laidhop’ listed in 1632 among the lands in Liddesdale owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). In 1718 it was combined with Whitrope in the farm of Stitchilhill (it is ‘Ladhope’ in 1718).

Laidlaw Place
(liad-law-plis) n. street marked incorrectly for Ladylaw Place on the 1897 Ordnance Survey map.

Laidlaw’s
(liad-lawz) n. William Laidlaw & Sons, manufacturers of hosiery and tweeds, founded in 1811 as a hosiery manufacturers in the ‘Mid Raw’. The business moved after a few years to 14 Howegate, with a second stocking-shop in the Backdamgate. Their main factory was next to the Little Haugh (Teviot Crescent Mills), erected in 1834, with extensions built to produce tweed in 1841. The firm then introduced piecing machines made by Melrose’s. They also made blankets in the 1840s. They were listed at Teviot Crescent Mills in 1852. From 1864 they purchased Lynnwood Mills and concentrated on yarn spinning and tweed manufacture. They also operated the Weensland spinning mill for several years after 1864. The family retired from business in 1908 although the company name carried on for a while, and was succeeded by George Wilson & Sons. The main mills were later demolished, although some photographs still exist to show how extensive they were. The Museum has company ledgers from 1926–32.

Laidlaw’s Cauld (liad-lawz-kawld) n. weir once stretching over the Teviot near the old Victoria Laundry, named after Laidlaw’s Mill nearby. It was built in about 1834 by Gideon Scott & Sons, and obliterated the piece of ground known as the Fairy Faulds. Traces can still be easily seen when the river is low. It was used to divert water through a mill lade, which ran alongside Teviot Crescent and through Teviot Crescent Mills, being filled in in 1914. The Cauld itself was largely removed after WWII. In earlier times there had been a ford near here, just upriver from the main ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd. In the 19th century, when the river was frozen, there were sometimes curling matches played there. The Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men are shown crossing the Teviot near the Cauld in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding. It also features in the song ‘The Anvil Crew’ – ‘But when we came to Laidlaw’s Cauld, There a horde of pirates lay’ [WE].

Laidlaw Terrace
(liad-law-te-ris) n. street constructed in 1888 along the south bank of the Teviot, off North Bridge Street. This involved building up the river-side, with the library being added at the top in 1904 (now Nos. 1 and 2). It was named after William Laidlaw & Sons, yarn spinners and tweed manufacturers, with the street essentially being built to provide accommodation for workers at Teviot Crescent Mills. The bottom of the street long had an undeveloped area used as a sawmill yard and later a builder’s yard, with an adjacent footpath along the riverside.

Laidlehope Burn
(liad-lup-burn) n. stream that rises near Kiln Knowe, above the Slitrig’s headwaters, and flows south to join the Roughley Burn, not far from the Ninestane Rig. This is related to the farm of ‘Ladlawhope’ recorded in c.1376. Where the burn was crossed by the Waverly Line there was Laidlehope Culvert (it is written ‘Laidlerhope’ by Smail in 1880).

laif
(li) n., arch. a loaf – ‘A made a faisasable mael oot o pie-soop, ... caald flesh, pickit ingans, an nae skrimp o laif’ [ECS], ‘Th’ breid in Glesca bein’ reduced a ha’penny th’ quarter laif’ [HEx1921], also used to distinguish bread from other baked goods – Howt! ‘A’n fair staad o laif, eend on. Let’s se a hyimm-backen scone’ [ECS] (note that the plural is ‘laifs’).

(li) n., arch. loaf-bread, flour-based bread baked as loaves, as distinct from other baked goods such as oatcakes.

(la, laich) adj., arch., poet. low – ‘the said Francis Scott, his tenement of houses, high and laigh, back and fore, with the yeard and per- tinents lying within the town and burgh of Ha- Wick’ [BR], ‘... set, let, or hire any of their houses, high or laigh, back or fore, to any families or per- son, strangers, whatsover, without the first ac- quainting the present Magistrates ...’ [BR1699], ‘The first ae guide that they met wi’, It was high up in Hardhaughswire; The second guide that they met wi’, It was laigh down in Borthwick water’ [T], ‘Then Johnie let a spear fa’ laigh by his thigh, Fala, &c. Thought weill to hae slain the innocent, I trow ...’ [CPM], ‘... They fand their tree three ells o’er laigh – They fand their stick baith short and sma’. With my fa ding, &c.’ [CPM], ‘An’ if ye’ll tak sae laigh a look, As patronize this little book’ [JR], ‘She lookit hiche to the bodynge hille, And laighe to the darklynge deane ...’ [JTe], ‘...for we ar brung verra leich’ [HSR], ‘Hei leuch at the laich door- heid’ [JAHM], ‘...Laigh drown I louted on my knees, An’ preed the Hunter’s pool’ [ECB], ‘To see laighest (lā-chīst) adj., poet. lowest – ‘...an[th] thou hest freet my saul frae the leichist hell’ [HSR], ‘...an’ queerlie wrouched in the leichist paires o’ the yirth’ [HSR].

laigishin (lä̅-gǐ-shǐn) n., arch. a large, cumbersome quantity (related to the local word for ‘legacy’).

laik (lä̅k) adj., arch. lacking, wanting – ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scoir 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great teynd, laik ane firlot, and 20 libis of vicarage’ [PR1627].

Laik (lä̅k) n. James (b.1740) son of Thomas, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. In 1785–91 he was listed as house servant at Wells, working for Gilbert Elliott. In 1785 his name was listed as ‘John’. In 1791 he was listed as a butler at Wells and in 1792, 1794 and 1797 as a house servant. His name was sometimes listed as ‘Luke’. He could be the James ‘Loch’ whose son Thomas was baptised in Southdean in 1774.

Joshua (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was a gardener in Cavers. His children included Christian (b.1715) and Isobel (b.1717).

Rev. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in Billerwell in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland. He was licensed as a minister by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1711 and presented to Southdean Parish in July 1716. However, the parishioners refused to sign the call in December and he ended up as minister at Longframlington, Northumberland. He was recorded in the Hawick Parish Session records of 1713 (presumably during a sermon) reminding parents to send their children to school, and also as a substitute in 1714 when Hawick’s minister was absent (also written ‘Laik’ and ‘Lake’ and probably the same as ‘Leck’).

Lailsell (lé̅l-sel′) n. former name for lands in the upper Slitrig valley. It is listed in 1607 along with ‘Carlinghall’ (probably Carlin Hole), ‘Brounishall’ (probably Broon’s Hill) and other lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. It may be a transcription error for somewhere more familiar.

Laing (lä̅n̄ g, lā̅n) n. Adam (1818/9–1900) Hawick stockmaker apparently noted for his gentlemanly bearing. In 1851 he was at about 29 High Street and in 1861 was living at 5 Slitrig Bank. In 1844 he married Agnes (1824/5–1902), daughter of James Hogg, the writer of ‘Teribus’. They had 8 children: Jane (b.c.1845) or Jeanie, who married hosiery manufacturer James Renwick; James (1846/7–1909), grocer; Euphemia (1850/1–1918), who lived at Marlefield; Eliza (b.c.1853); Agnes (1855–1910) who married manufacturer Francis Elliot Wilson; Adam (b.1858), who died young; Christina Grey (b.1861), who married Alfred Warr, minister of Rosneath; and Jessie D. (b.1864), who married James White and lived in Glasgow.

Adam (1859–1918) Burgh Chamberlain of Hawick, co-author of ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898) with R.S. Craig, and author of ‘Branxholme Castle and the Land of the Scotts’ (1901). The book ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ was significant in establishing the connection between the Hawick Flag and Hexham, which overcame criticism at the time about the lack of historical evidence for the events of Hornshole. The 3rd son of Walter of Denholm Hill and Margaret Scott, he was educated in Denholm and at Teviot Grove Academy. He was an apprentice with Purdons, trained further in Edinburgh and returned to Hawick to work with W.M. Syme. He served as Burgh Chamberlain for 16 years from 1891, before becoming the first Burgh Treasurer. He was one of the founder members of the Callants’ Club, its first Honorary Treasurer, and Vice-President during WWI. He was one of the founders of the Teviotdale Cycling Club, won a couple of Moss paul to Hawick races, and was also involved with other local sports organisations. He helped get the Liberal Club premises built and was Club Treasurer for many years. He was a member of the Archaeological Society and the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club. He also acted as Secretary of the Public Library and Secretary and Treasurer of the Museum. In addition he was heavily involved in erecting many of the monuments and plaques carried out in his day, as well as helping resuscitate Moss paul. He was a keen Common Riding supporter and pushed for the resumption of the riding of the full marches at Pilmuir and the cutting of the sod ceremony. Sinton’s bibliography of Hawick-related works (which he helped to compile) states that he possessed a rare 3rd edition of James Hogg’s ‘Flodden Field and the Colour’, inserted inside of which was a manuscript of the tune as played by the town piper in 1777.
Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1786–1850) hosiery manufacturer. He was son of John and Agnes Donaldson, brother of David, father of Walter and grand-father of J.T. of Linden Park. He was in partnership with his brother in the early 19th century with premises where the Sandbed Store was later located. Originally they spun yarn on the hand jenny and operated a small hosiery business. However, they joined with the Dicksons in 1802 to form Dicksons & Laings. He is probably the ‘A. Laing’ whose property at Dovemount is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had the house Springbank built for him, above the main factory area. The family were Reform supporters of their day. In the 1834 electoral roll he and his brother David were listed as joint proprietors in the spinning mill. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as manufacturer at Wilton Mills. In the 1841 census he was living at Wilton Mills. His first wife was Ann (1789–1822), youngest daughter of Walter Wilson (and sister of skinner Thomas Wilson), who died in childbirth. Their surviving children were: and Ann (b.1811) who married John Elliot and moved to Massachusetts, U.S.A.; John (b.1812); and Walter (b.1820). He secondly married Janet, daughter of William Roger, who was his cousin (their mothers both Donaldsons being sisters). They had 2 surviving children: Margery (1818–1908) who married Robert Brown; and Alexander Brown (b.1829), who married Janet, daughter of William Brown from Galashiels and was mother of Alexander Laing Brown; and Alexander Brown (b.1829), who married Jane Dinwiddie. She was a widow living at Springbank in 1851 along with her son Alexander and 2 servants. Alexander ‘Allie’ (b.1829) son of manufacturer Alexander and his 2nd wife Janet Roger. He followed his father into woollen manufacturing. He was partner (with William Irving) in the firm Laing & Irving and lived at Iyvbend. In the 1850s he was the Alexander (of Laing & Irvine) who was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He became a partner in Laing, Michie & Graham and Laing & Gawn, which later merged to become Currie, Lee & Gawn. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickiana’. He is probably the Alex recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in about 1874. He married Jane Milligan (1844–1911), daughter of James Dinwiddie, who helped establish the hosiery industry in Dumfries. They had a large family, Alexander ‘Lal being the eldest son. Alexander James ‘Lal’ (b.1865) son of Alexander and Jane Milligan Dinwiddie. He was a prominent Hawick rugby forward from around 1883, being Captain of the Hawick team in 1888. He represented Roxburgh County and South of Scotland. He was known as a fast forward. He also played in the British team which first went to Australia in 1888. He emigrated to America shortly after this, married twice and had at least one daughter who visited Hawick a few times and died in Palm Springs.

Andrew (b.1803/4) innkeeper of the Black Bull in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was gamekeeper at Ayton in Berwickshire. His wife was Isabella and their children included Jessy, Isabella, Thomas, Elizabeth, James, Helen, Robert and Margaret Ann. David of Westerkirk (d.bef. 1727). He married Katherine, eldest daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton in 1720. His widow later married Charles Telfer, Hawick’s minister and thirdly Robert Elliot of Fenwick. David (d.1781) mason in Hawick. He was probably the David, son of Walter, born in Hawick in 1710. In 1734 he and his men were paid for 6½ days’ work they did on the West Port. He was recorded as a mason in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness and as a wright in 1745 when he witnessed 2 baptisms. In 1752 he was paid ‘for pointing a hole on the steeple-head, and altering a crack’. He was among the men paid in 1755 ‘for the herd’s house building’. He witnessed a baptism for John Richardson in 1772. He is probably the mason David who (along with mason Walter, likely his son) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his other son). He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason John (possibly his son). He was deceased when his mason son Walter died in 1798. He married Helen Wallace and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Walter (b.1733); Ann (b.1735); Janet (b.1737); Helen (b.1739); Jean (b.1742); John (b.1744); and James (b.1746). It is possible he was also father of Hannah (b.c.1750), who married Andrew Hunter. The witnesses in 1742 were Robert Pringle, Excise Officer and wright Robert Pringle. He could be the David who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. His death is recorded in 1781 as ‘Auld David Laing Mason’. David (1782–1840) son of John, he was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He was originally in partnership with his brother Alexander and later as part of Dicksons & Laings of Wilton Mills. He was Cornet in 1805. He lived at No. 1

Laing

Wilton Bank, He was one of the first members of Hawick Curling Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Janet, daughter of John Fiddles in Hobkirk Parish in 1811; she died in Glasgow in 1868, aged 79. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1812); John (b.1814), draper; Agnes (b.1816); Helen (b.1819); Jemima (b.1824); and James Robert (b.1827). 3 of their daughters moved to Warkworth, Northumberland. His widow was living on Wilton Bank in 1841, along with Helen, Jemima, James and a servant. In 1851 Janet was living on the Howegate with Jemima and James. He died at Springbank and is buried at St. Mary's.

David (19th C.) Bailie of the 1820s and 1830s. He went to Jedburgh along with 70 special constables to help keep the peace in the election of 1831. He may have been the same man as manufacturer David. After the election of 1832 he released a prisoner in Hawick (by the name of Scott) who had been accused of disorderly conduct and assault. This led to complaints on behalf of the Duke of Buccleuch and others. He is probably the 'D. Laing' whose property is marked on Wood's 1824 map, on the middle of the north side of the Sandbed. Donald McLeod (b.c.1898) son of Thomas Alexander and Agnes Brown. He enlisted in the army in 1914 when he was probably only about 16. After WWI he worked on rubber plantations in Malaya. He married his cousin, Margery Haddon. George (1883–1947) son of manufacturer John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was educated at home and in Eastbourne, along with his brothers Walter, Ivan and Maurice. He farmed at Nikuyu in Kenya. Gilbert (d.1777) son of Walter, he became a merchant in St. Petersburg. His brother was William of Meiklebole and his sister Margaret married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He also had a nephew 'Watty' Scott, who spent some time in St. Petersburg, but returned to Scotland in ruin. He suffered strokes in the late 1770s and died in Russia. He married Elizabeth Catherine Gardner in 1765. Some of his correspondence is in the National Archives, labelled 'I desire my son William not to burn these letters till he has leisure to read them all over'. Ivan (1885–1917) 3rd son of John Turnbull and Anna Drummond Thomson. Born at Springbank (before it was the Haig Maternity Hospital), he was educated at home by a governess and at New College, Eastbourne, as well as in Belgium. When he returned to Hawick he lived at Ashleigh in East Stewart Place. Well-known as an athlete, he excelled at swimming, played three-quarter (wing) for Hawick R.F.C. and also played for the Teviotdale (mixed) hockey team. By some lucky chance he ended up playing for Scotland (with the home nations having separate hockey teams) in the 1908 London Olympics. The story goes that he was spotted on the platform by the other members of the team when their train passed through Hawick and convinced by a sporting friend, Dr. Norman Stevenson, to join the team. How much truth there is in this version is unknown (since a team sheet published the week before the game shows his name), but it certainly makes for a dramatic story! He played in 2 games, scoring the first ever Olympic goal in hockey (against Germany, which is ironic, given the events of a few years later). The official match report reads ‘At the beginning of the game Scotland attacked, and from a pass by Stevenson, Laing quickly scored the first goal’. That first game took place at Shepherd’s Bush stadium, months after the rest of the Games had finished. In the second game they were defeated by England. The team refused to play for the 3rd place play-off (all in the same day!), and he apparently returned to Hawick on the overnight train. However, he never again represented Scotland at hockey. He went into partnership with his father in 1908, their hosiery business being Drummond & Laings, Wilton Path. This was later taken over by Innes-Henderson’s, with whom he remained until enlisting in the War effort. In 1915 he joined the 28th Battalion of the London Regiment, the ‘Artists’ Rifles’, and was then gazetted into the Coldstream Guards. He was awarded the Military Cross at the Somme in 1916. But he was killed by machine gun fire when his unit were taking Gouzeaucourt. Another tragic casualty of WWI, he is buried in Metz-en-Couture cemetery in France. In 2008, to commemorate the Olympic goal centenary, the Archaeological Society commissioned Hamish Smith to make a trophy to be competed for annually by girls versus boys teams at the High School. Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate. His 1672 will is in the National Archives (but he appears to have died significantly later). He was related to the Laing family who were later Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch and owned land at the Flex, Burnfoot-on-Ale and elsewhere. He was a Bailie during the 1660s and 70s. He could be the James recorded as one of the owners of West Mains in 1663. He was Bailie in 1668 when the Council made a decree to support the breaking of illegal dykes on the Common. He may be the James who was Bailie in 1670/1, and whose brother William was farmer at Earlside. He is recorded as an ex-Bailie in a sasine of 1687 when his son Walter was witness to a sasine in Hawick. He could be the James, married to Helen Elliot, whose son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1653. James (17th C.) tenant in Earlside. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He was probably son of William, who was tenant in Earlside and transported for being a Covenanter. James (18th C.) hedger in Abbotrule, recorded in 1785. James Robert (b.1827) son of David and Janet Fiddes. He was a draper on the Howe gate. In the 1851 census he was at about 2 Howe gate, living with his widowed mother and his sister Jenima, as well as George Webster and a servant. His draper’s partnership with Webster is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory.

It appears that he moved to London, where the business expanded, become a general warehousing firm. He later became partner in Paterson, Laing and Bruce, registered in London and Melbourne. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of Robert Fiddes of London. He had a son James Robert (d.1916), and a daughter Jane Tullock Fiddes. He is probably the James Robert of 27 Earl’s Court Square, London, who died in 1898. James (b.c.1847) only surviving son of Adam Laing and Agnes Hogg. He was grandson of James Hogg of ‘Teribus’ fame, and erected the gravestone to the memory of his parents and grandparents in Old Wilton Cemetery in 1909, replacing an older stone. He was a grocer in Hawick, being foreman in the business of Mungo Wilson on Silver Street, and later taking over. After his death the shop was acquired by Oliver and Thomas Mason Hardie. John (d.1483) from the Laings of Redhouse near Edinburgh, he held minor benefices and acted as secretary to Mary of Gueldres in the 1460s. He became Royal Treasurer from 1470 and was Clerk Register. In 1474 he was appointed as Bishop of Glasgow, thus becoming Hawick’s bishop. He founded a Franciscan friary in Glasgow in 1476. He became Chancellor to James III in 1482 and was involved in the rejection of William Scheves, Archbishop of St. Andrews. His seal bore images of 3 saints, probably Kentigern, Michael and Catherine, and also the words ‘S’ JOHIS EPI. GLASGUENSIS’. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Lane’ on a list of tenants at Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (17th C.) piper who was on a list of 16 local men named in 1627 by the Hawick Bailie as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. His surname is written ‘Leing’. John of Westerkirk (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696 when he was on the Commission of Supply for Dumfriesshire. His children included: Walter, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Selkirkshire; John, Chamberlain in Liddesdale, who held lands at the Flex; Helen, who married James Grieve, tenant at Todshawhaugh; and another daughter who married Ogilvie of Brieryyards. John (d.c.1780) son of John of Westerkirk and brother of Walter. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Liddesdale in the period 1730–66. He also acted as ‘factor loco tutoris’, i.e. in place of one of the young Duke’s guardians for business in Teviotdale around 1756. In 1736 he rented ‘Stitchelhill and Leyes’ in Liddesdale from the Duke of Buccleuch. He lived at ‘The Roan’ and held lands at the Flex. He paid the window tax at Roan in 1774 writing from the Flex to his niece Meg (or Margaret) Elliot at Borthwickbrae, regarding the debts of Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He is also described as ‘of Burrofoot’ (probably in Ale Water); he was so recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761 and on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. The Elliots of Borthwickbrae eventually came to possess the lands of Flex and Old Melrose through this marriage to his niece. In 1777 he gained about 7 Scots acres of Hawick Common in the Division. John (18th C.) house servant at Wells in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Nassau Elliot. John (1744–1816) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. In 1781 he married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Donald (also listed as Donaldson), and she died in about 1824. They had 9 children, including: David (b.1782), manufacturer in Hawick; Agnes (b.1783); Alexander (b.1786), who married his cousin Janet Roger; Helen (b.1788); Walter (b.1790); John (b.1792); James (b.1799). The witnesses in 1790 were masons Walter and David (probably his brother and father) and in 1792 were wright William Roger (who also married a Donald) and mason David (probably his father). An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1798. He may be the John from Hawick recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. He may be the John who was recorded in the 1797 House Tax Rolls for Hawick. He conveyed all his property to his eldest son David, with the condition that he should pay £100 in rentals to his third son Walter a year after his death, or alternatively to give Walter half of the property of his ‘opposite to the West Pant-Well of Hawick’; because David ended up liable for his debts, but the other children renounced their claims, but still expected a share of money from this arrangement, it led to a dispute between the 2 brothers in court in 1829. John (18th/19th C.) mason of Hawick who worked on Stobs Castle around 1800 and who helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. This may be the same mason who died at Doveshaughbraehead in 1824, aged 57 and whose wife Isabella Hunter died in Hawick in 1841, aged 69; this family are buried in Bedrule churchyard. He may be the Hawick mason whose unnamed child died in 1798. He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason David. John (1812–76) hosiery manufacturer of the mid-19th century. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson. He was partner along with his father in Dicksons & Laings from an early age. But after his father’s death he went into business for himself at 8 and 9 Slitrig Crescent, the firm being named John Laing & Sons; it survived until 2006. He is listed as a merchant in Hawick among heads of households in Wilton Parish for 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was living at 18 Bucleuch Street and listed as a manufacturer of woollen hosiery, employing 28 men and 14 women. He was the first to introduce power frames into Hawick in 1858, and was also an early promoter of the use of merino wool. He was the first President of the Hawick Bowling Club. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Mary, 7th daughter of Thomas Anderson of Kirkcudbright, and she died in 1892, aged 68. Their children were: Alexander and Mary Marion (buried in Menton Cemetery, France), who did not reach adulthood; John Hugh Alexander, a doctor in Edinburgh; Janetta McNaught; Thomas Anderson, manufacturer; Patrick Anderson (b.1853), also manufacturer; and Samuel James Anderson (b.1861). He died at Slitrig House. A portrait of him exists. John (b.1814) son of David and Janet Fiddles, he worked as a draper and later was a hosier and coal merchant. He was cousin of John, the hosier manufacturer. His draper’s firm is recorded on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived at about 55 High Street in 1841 and 49 High Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet, and their children included James, Ellen, David and William. John (b.1817/8) from Bedrule, son of John, he was a boot-maker in Hawick. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the High Street. In 1851 he was at about 29 High Street. In 1861 he is recorded at 10 High Street, and employed 8 men. John Turnbull (1854–1913) local manufacturer, son of Walter and Euphemia Turnbull. He was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He was prominent in local politics in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and lived at Linden Park. He was also on the original committee of Hawick Bowling Club, and President in the 1860s. He married Anna Drummond (1855–1931), 2nd daughter of Dr. George Thomson. Their sons were Walter, George, Ivan and Maurice Wyville. For several years the family held an annual New Year’s day mixed hockey match against the Grievs of Branxholme Park. Kenneth Joseph Price (b.1890) son of manufacturer Patrick. He married his cousin Florence Laing. He rode motorbikes in WWI until he learned to fly, becoming a pilot with the RAF in 1918, where he is credited as an ace with 5 victories. He is said to have been the first person to fly over Hawick. He was wounded in a motorcycle accident while on leave in 1918. He later worked as an engineer with John Melrose & Sons and lived well into his 90s. Maurice (1885–1955) son of John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was younger brother of Walter, George and Ivan. He was a successful district hockey player and later South selector. He served with the Royal Field Artillery in WWI and became Captain. He married Sheila Brown of Galashields (unrelated to the other Browns who had married into this family). They had one son (who worked at the Cape Observatory) and several daughters. Norman Hugh Anderson (b.1888) son of manufacturer Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price, i.e. one of the ‘Balcary Laings’. He was a farmer at Cleuchhead. He married Cissy, daughter of Dr. George Gunn Bannerman. Their children included: George; Patrick, who received the Military Cross in WWII and set up the haulage firm P.A. Laing; and Drummond, who moved to Cape Town, South Africa. Patrick Anderson (1853–1921) son of John and Mary Anderson. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Thomas. He lived at Balcary. He married Florence ‘Fanny’ Elizabeth (who was born in Chicago), daughter of Joseph Price of Clapham Common. She was sister of Mrs. Robert Pringle of Wood Norton, and died in 1917, aged 54. Their children were Patrick Lindsay Price (Major with the K.O.S.B. in WWI), Norman Hugh Anderson (farmer at Cleuchhead), Kenneth Joseph Price (engineer with Melrose’s) and Margaret Frances Lindsay (married Isaac Grey Wallis). This branch of the family were known as the ‘Balcary Laings’. Patrick Lindsay Price (b.1886) eldest son of Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price. He was a Major in the K.O.S.B. and was awarded the Military Cross in WWI. He commanded ‘C’ Company in the Battle of Romani in 1916, securing the Suez Canal, and receiving the Order of the Nile from the Sultan of Egypt. Patrick Anderson (20th C.) from the Balcary Laings, son of Norman. He served with the 51st Highland Division at Dunkirk and later transferred to the Reconnaissance Corps. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1945. He set up the haulage firm P.A. Laing. in 1955. He married Shirley, daughter of Hawick lawyer Guy H. Armstrong. There children were Hugh and Lucinda Steen. Robert (16th/17th C.) merchant of Hawick, probably a tanner. He gave evidence in the 1612 case of the death of Jock Elliot. He was ‘in the Kirkyard of Hawick priking some skynnis’ (showing that at that time the churchyard was used for many purposes) and found Elliot ‘hingand in his awin belt; quilk belt he cuttit, and thair being lyfe in the defunct, was brocht out, bot shortlie thairefter he deceist’. He may have been the same Robert who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. Robert (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Bennet in Hawick in 1656. Robert (18th C.) footman at Minto House in 1788, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Thomas Anderson (1851–1920) son of manufacturer John and grandson of Alexander. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Patrick. He was Honorary Treasurer of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He lived at Netherwood and Langlee. He married Agnes Eliza Douglas Brown from Kirkcudbrightshire (who died in 1933); she was sister of Esther Brown who married M.P. Alexander Laing Brown. They had a family of 11, including a daughter (who married Charles W. Grieve of Bronzeholme Park), Donald McLeod (who married his cousin, Margery Haddon), and Florence (who married her cousin Kenneth). This branch were known as the ‘Netherwud Laings’. Walter (17th C.) son of Bailie James. He was witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1687. Probably the same Walter witnessed a baptism in 1687. He is likely to be the merchant and listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is possible he was a witness to a baptism for Andrew Angus in Hawick Parish in 1678. Walter (1649/50–1736) son of John of Westerkirk. He was a ‘writer’ in Edinburgh. From 1717 he was Chamberlain to Francis, Duke of Buccleuch, covering Eckford, Lempitlaw and Langton (as well as Ettrick Forest for part of this period) and being based at Newark. He served in this function until 1734, being succeeded by William, probably his son. In 1716 he is ‘clerk to ye Duchess of Buccleugh’ and ‘Tenent of Park’ when his ‘servitor’ Walter Little married Janet Scoon. He married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Alexander Johnston of Elshiesheills about 1713. His sons were probably William, Gilbert and James. His eldest daughter Violet married David Scott, tenant at Carterhaugh and his 2nd daughter Marion married John Laing, farmer at Westerkirk (and surely a relative) about 1750. Another daughter, Margaret, married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae (and through her the Elliots of Borthwickbrae would come into possession of her uncle John’s lands of Flex, Old Melrose, etc.). He died at Todshawhaugh, home of his brother-in-law James Grieve. Walter (b.1680) son of William and Jane Thorbrand. He is probably the Walter who married Janet Brunfield, and had children Elspeth (b.1703) and David (b.1710). Only his wife witnessed the baptisms, since he was forbidden from attending because of the scandal he caused by getting his niece (Agnes Scott) pregnant, fixing the child over the Border and then pressuring her and others to swear that there was no bastard child. The witnesses in 1703 were weaver Robert Tinlin and glouer James Burn. Walter (d.bef. 1764) probably son of Walter, he was also sometimes Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch at Newark. It is said that he was given the position after risking his life to save some papers for the Scotts of Buccleuch at Dalkeith House. His eldest daughter Margaret married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1764, and she later inherited the lands of Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot. He had a son Gilbert who became a merchant in St. Petersburgh and another son, William of Meikledale. James may have been another son. His relationship with John (also a Chamberlain to Buccleuch) is unclear. Walter (d.1798) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. He is probably the son of David and Helen Wallace born in Hawick in 1733. He is probably the mason Walter who (along with mason David, likely his father) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his brother). Walter (b.c.1790) farmer at Denholmhill. He is probably also the builder in Denholm, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He acquired Denholmhill farm in about 1818 and expanded the quarrying, which had been started by the Fergusons and the Littles. He opened up the eastern (white) quarry and the western (red) one. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was still alive in 1851, but dead before 1861. His son Walter took over the farm and quarry. Walter (b.1819/9) son of Walter. He took over the farm of Denholmhill and the quarry there. In 1861 he was farming 520 acres, employing 26 people on the farm, and also tenant of the quarries, employing 37 masons and 26 labourers. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, Christina, Thomas, Adam and Helen. Walter (1820–1895) manufacturer of Laing & Irvine’s and later of Dicksons & Laings. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson and brother of John. He carried on with the firm after his brother John split off to form John Laing & Sons. He lived at Springbank and later Linden Park. He was a member of the new Town Council who argued for continued Council involvement in the Common Riding in the 1860s. He was also one of the founders of the Working Men’s Building & Investment Co., and its Chairman from 1890–95. In addition he was on the School Board and became Chairman of the Science and Technical School in Hawick, as well as the School of Art. A Liberal in politics, he was President of the Hawick Advanced Liberal Association. He married Euphemia Turnbull, who died in 1895. They had a large family, but all except John Turnbull died before reaching adulthood. Walter (1882–1959) son of John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was brother of Maurice, Ivan and George. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and served in the Coldstream Guards. There is a letter from him to his brother Maurice, bringing the news of Ivan’s death on the front. He married Joan Gotto from Belfast and had 2 children. He died in County Down. William (17th C.) tenant in Earlsde, brother of James, who was Bailie in Hawick. He was tried in 1678 for being a Covenanter supporter. However, he must have escaped (perhaps one of the men to flee when their transport ship was abandoned in London). He is listed among those declared fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’ in 1684. He was fined 500 marks for attending meetings of outed ministers. Later the same year he was recorded as being ‘in Hawick’ when he was banished ‘to the plantations’ along with several other men. Their crime was ‘rebellion and reset of rebels’, meaning religious non-conformity following the re-introduction of Episcopalianism. On this second occasion he did not escape, but was among 32 men who were transported to Carolina, subject to great hardship on the journey and then after arrival, so that only 6 returned after the Revolution. He may be the William ‘Lyng’ whose widow was recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls, listed after the house of Earlsde in 1694. He might be the William on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Hamilton in Hawick in 1673 and another for William Welch (or ‘Wetch’) in 1675. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Scott (who probably lived in the Borthwick valley) in 1676, as well as for Rev. Patrick Cunningham in 1680. Bailie William (17th/18th C.) Hawick Councillor recorded in 1683 and 1684, who was Bailie in 1685 and in 1697. In 1685, along with Walter Scott, he had permission from the Council to be reimbursed for the costs of building the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s, suggesting that he was Bailie around the time of construction. In 1688 and 1700 he witnessed baptisms for merchant John Scott ‘Whiteyetts’ and he witnessed another for Robert Hogg in Weensland in 1688. He was ‘late baylyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘Wm Laing laite Bailyea’ who paid tax for 4 hearths on the west-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694; this suggests that he lived in a large house. He is probably the William who, along with ‘Mr James’ witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1700 for glover James Scott. He was ‘balyie’ when he witnessed a baptism in 1686 for schoolmaster John Purdon and ‘late Bailie’ in 1700 when witnessing a baptism for the same man. He also witnessed baptisms for shoemaker John Scott in 1708, for Laird (lärd) n. nickname of James Scott, the first recorded Cornet. Thomas and Robert Scott are both recorded in 1693/4 with the same nickname, suggesting perhaps that they were all related, as well as an earlier James recorded in 1676. John Chisholme also had this same nickname in 1712. There are other similar nicknames, e.g. ‘the Blue Laird’, ‘the Black Laird’, ‘the Dud-die Laird’ and ‘the Muckle Laird’. Many of these may have been Hilliesland ‘Lairds’, i.e. local men who kept fields up beyond the Wellogate, or elsewhere around Hawick. When a landowner had a grown son they would often be the ‘Auld Laird’ and ‘Young Laird’. In earlier centuries it was common for the sons of a major landowner to be known as ‘the Laird’s Wat’, ‘the Laird’s Jock’, etc.

the Laird (thu-lär) n. nickname of the 18th and early 19th centuries, commonly given to men with some property, e.g. William Laidlaw, even small fields, e.g. the Hilliesland Lairds. It may also be that the name was used jocularly or ironically. A person called ‘John ye Laird’ was one of the poor of the Parish who is recorded receiving some of the collection in 1711 and ‘Wat the Laird’ was recorded around 1800.

Laird’s Hill (lärdz-hil) n. hill in the upper Borthwick valley, just north-east of Old Howpasley, reaching a height of 343 m.

lairdship (lärd-ship) n. state of being a laird, territory and rights of a laird – ‘...and the said lairdship of Coklaw to cum to the airis famail of the said James ... ’ [SB1519].

Laird’s Knowe (lärdz-now) n. small hill on Craik Moor, just to the north of the old Roman road. The stream to the north-east is Laird’s Cleuch Sike. It is unclear which Laird gave his name to these features.

the Laird’s Wat (thu-lärdz-waw’) n. popular name for Walter Scott of Goldielands – ‘...And the laird Watt, that worthy man, Brought in his surname, weel be’t seen’ [CPM].

lairge (lärg) adj. large – ‘...aw just went rum-maging aboot, an’ then aw saw a lairge fire, an’ made ma way towards it’ [JHH].

lairge (lärg) adv., arch. boastfully (this meaning peculiar to Roxburghshire), adj., arch. boastful, bombastic, copious, full – ‘...and obligt that the sd. persones shall give satisfactione to ye kirke as orthodox and large’ [BR1689].

lairgeness (lärr) n. largeness, arch. generosity, largesse – ‘The discriptiovne of Wm Scott of Goddilands his qvalities. ... Heir lys bvreit lairgenes & lavtie ... ’ [MI1596]. the side road from Teviothead at Bowanhill. The Lairhope Burn passes here

Lairhope (lär-höp, lä-rup) n. former farm above Falnash on the Lairhope Burn, with a small loch nearby. The track here used to be (before about the mid-18th century) part of an alternative road from the south towards Hawick, crossing over to the upper Borthwick valley via Old Howpasley. The main lands were originally ‘Lairs’, with the ‘hope’ being attached, and later the base name being lost. It may be the ‘lairis’ where Robert Turnbull was recorded in 1493 and ‘Robertus Scot in Laris’ is recorded in 1501. It seems likely to be the ‘towne callid Ladduppe in Tyvidiaill, of the Lairde of Howpaslyes called Scot’ which was burned by a band of Armstrongs in 1543/4. Matthew Little was tenant there in 1576. Andrew Armstrong was there in 1623. It was valued in 1627, paying ‘50 lb., vicarage 10 lb.’, listed along with Chisholme and Parkhill. Walter Scott of Newton was owner in 1678, when it was valued at £266 13s 4d. It is listed along with ‘Lares’ in the list for the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. Janet Grieve was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. James Hislop was there in 1698. James
Lairhope Burn

Nichol was tenant there in 1705 and John Nichol was heir in 1711. The farm was purchased by the Buccleuch estates from the trustees of Elliot of Fenwick around 1756, when it was referred to as the ‘5 merkland of old extent of Lairs alias Lairhope’. James Renwick was there in 1786. In 1788 and 1811 it is ‘Larehope’ when valued at £266 13s 4d as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. John Anderson was shepherd there in the mid-19th century, George Rutherford in 1841 and Walter Elliot in 1851 and 1861. On the south-east slope of Lairhope Braes are the foundations of several buildings and enclosures of unknown age, probably a township by the side of the former main road (it is probably the ‘Larishop’ of 1500, and is ‘Lairhoope’ in 1686, ‘Lairhoip’ in 1623, ‘Lareshope’ in 1686, ‘Larehop’ in 1698 and ‘Larehope’ in 1711; it is marked ‘Lairhoop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; ‘lair’ is Scots for a place where animals sheltered).

Lairhope Burn (la-rup-burn) n. stream in the headwaters of the Teviot, joining Hazelpo Burn to become Fahlurn Burn. It rises around Pike Hill and is fed by smaller streams such as Ruthead Sike, Hare Grain, Lousey Hass and Crib Sike. There is a marshy area around Lairhope farm.

Lairhope Braes (la-rup-bräz) n. hilly slope just to the west of Lairhope, in the headwaters of the Teviot. The name presumably derives from being a slope on the old road that used to pass from here to the top of the Borthwick valley via Howples.

lairn (lärn) v. to learn – ‘she gien thum a bible verse ti lairn every night’, ‘A lairned eet fri ma fither’, ‘...gie me understan’in’, that I may learn thy commandments’ [HSR], ‘Gin I hadna traivelled, the first ane said, ‘I had never lairned.’ ‘Gin I hadna my buiks,’ quo the second ane, ‘I had naething airden’’ [WL], to teach – ‘that skelpin lairned um aa right’.

This day Mr John Purdom gave in ane account of poor scholar’s quarter wages... and other three in the end of the account are set doun, whom he learned gratis’ [PR1712], ‘Ye glowrin’ idiot. That’ll lairn ye to glower at me’ [JEDM], ‘...Lairnin hunders o Hawick rugby boys The basics o the game’ [IWL].

lairnt (lärnt) pp. learned – ‘...And mony generations syne, Caurlrieff, I should hae lairnt to care’ [DH], ‘...that’s where hei lairnt aboot the world’ [IWL], ‘And the thing that makes oo spairial Is oo speak in oor ain way, And now that oo hev lairnt ee, Ee can dae eet tae’ [IWL] (also written ‘lairned’).

Lairs (lärz) n. original name for lands that were later known as Lairhope. Robert Turnbull in ‘lairis’ was recorded in 1493. It was owned by George Scott in 1501, with some dispute over whether it had been historically held ‘in blanch farm’ or ‘by ward and relief’, from the superior, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. Robert Scott was also recorded as tenant there in 1501. The lands of ‘Lares and Lareshope’ are listed among lands owned by Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1868, so they were separate at one point (it is ‘Laris’ in 1501; see also Lairhope and Larristofts).

laishur (lä-shur) n. leisure (also formerly leasur).

laist (läit) v., arch. to allure, entice (noted as an old Teviotdale word by J. Jamieson).

laith (läth) adj. loath – ‘To hurt the creatures I’ll be laith, Gar but the owner pay the skaith’ [JR], ‘To injure you I would be laith, So hide not thou thy thorns frea me...’ [TCh], ‘Bit ‘nae man can tether tieme nor teide,’ an, sweer drawn an laith tho A was...’ [ECs], ‘...Ilk feathered songster’s laith to gang Frae the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA], ‘Sae, naething laith, hei drank it slowly doon...’ [DH], ‘Aw tell o’ the day that Scobie was laith...’ [MB].

Lairtin (lä-t-in) n., arch. Latin. The following gem is meant to have been recited by a Hawick pupil in the early 1800s – ‘Cæsar Galliam intravit summa diligentia omnibus copiis’ (Caesar entered Gaul on the top of a diligence, his forces going in the omnibus).

Lakes Haugh Park (läks-hawch-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was listed ‘Lake’s-haugh’ in 1779, with a value of £36 9s 10d. It was among lands liferented to Robert Trotter in 1779, but disputed in 1780, with a rental of £10. It was still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Lal (lawl) n. nickname for Alex Laing.

Lamb (lawm) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish. He married Bessie Laidlaw and their twins James and Janet were baptised in Hawick in 1689. The witnesses were William Swan and Patrick Bridges. Adam (d.1808)

weaver in Hawick, son of weaver John. Perhaps the same Adam married Janet Linton and had a daughter Isabel baptised in Hawick in 1779. He may also be the Adam who married Agnes Hogg (also from Hawick) in 1794. Adam (1826–1913) born in Hawick, son of John and Elizabeth. He trained as a thongmaker, but then emigrated to Galt, Ontario, later moving to MacGregor, Manitoba, where he was among the first settlers. He firstly married Janet Gibb, and secondly married Mary Queen. His children included Robert E. (1862–1932). Agnes ‘Bonnie Aggie’ (19th/20th C.) seller of confectionary in Hawick. She is believed to have been the originator of the recipe for Hawick Balls. She may have started in Needle Street and then moved to Commercial Road, where she was in business with Jessie McVittie. She certainly had a shop at 31 Drumlanrig Square for a while. She is probably the Agnes Lamb who married Robert Young, who was a baker at 75 High Street. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Newlands. In 1684 he was listed among local men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Cavers itself in 1741. His children included: Ann (b.1741); and Archibald (b.1743). Benjamin (b.1766) son of James, he was a weaver in Hawick. He married Mary Weens in 1790, and she died in 1806. Their children included: Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1799 when her illegitimate child was buried in Hawick. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Wester Mill in 1751. Probably the same George witnessed in 1751 a baptism for Walter Ker, resident of Borthaugh. He married Mary Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1743 and their children included David (b.1745) and Jean (b.1751). The witnesses in 1751 were Walter and Robert Scott. George (18th C.) gardener who married Janet Laidlaw in Hawick Parish in 1759. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Mary (b.1765); and George (b.1768). The witnesses in 1760 were John Laidlaw (probably related to his wife) and James Bridges. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Nelly Paisley and their children included: John (b.1779); George and Robert (b.1780); Margaret (b.1781); and George (again, b.1789). George (18th C.) Rector of the Grammar School James (b.1791); Agnes (b.1797); and Benjamin (b.1802). 1773–87. He may have been the first to use the title of ‘Rector’. He resigned from the position, presumably to take up another position elsewhere.

It is not impossible that he could be the George Lamb described as a schoolmaster and formerly a dissenting minister, who performed ‘irregular marriages’ at Lamberton Toll near Berwick, dying in 1816, aged 68. He is recorded as ‘The Rev. Mr George Lamb’ in Hawick on the subscriber list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). George (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick who married Janet Laidlaw. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Mary (b.1765); George (b.1768); and Walter (b.1771). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were John Laidlaw and James Briggs. He is probably the George recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, and the George who died in 1802, father of cooper Walter. It is possible he is the George, son of John and Janet Scott, who was born in Wilton Parish in 1740. He may also be the gardener at Wilton Lodge listed in 1792–94, when he was working for Lord Napier. George (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1809. In 1797 in Hawick possibly the same George married Betty Turnbull from Wilton. Hugh (18th/19th C.) Hawick baker. His daughter Betty died in 1801 and his son Hugh in 1805. James (d.c.1683) tenant in ‘Whitrige’ in 1683 when his will was recorded. This could have been Whitriggs or perhaps somewhere else in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. James (17th C.) name of 2 separate residents of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Flight in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (d.bef. 1808) weaver in Hawick. He was already deceased in 1808 when his son Adam died. James (b.1765/6) weaver who was an old man living at Slaidhills with his daughter Elizabeth in 1841 and 1851. James (b.c.1795) from Teviothead, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was living at ‘Eildrige Shank’, i.e. Eilrig Burnfoot and in 1851 he was at Dodburn. His wife was Catherine and their children included James, John, Catherine, George, Jane and Walter. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Stichers. Janet (19th/20th C.) shopkeeper of a baby linen and fancy goods shop at 59 High Street. She can be seen outside the shop in an early photograph. The shop sign read ‘John Lamb’, presumably her father, and they must have been from the Needle Street family. She retired in 1928 and the business was sold to Miss Rutherford and later continued by Mr. Stormont.
John (15th C.) tenant in Wilton who is mentioned in 1493. Jock Elliot (from Caverton) had remission for several crimes, including stealing 16 sheep from him. John (1652/3–1725) weaver in Bedrule. He is buried in the Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably the John listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694, and likely related to the William who is listed after him. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in ‘Gurnford’ in 1703, when his son John was baptised. This happened at the same time as the baptism of a son of John Lorraine, with the witnesses being Adam Scott and Walter Scott. He had other children George (b.1704) and John (again, b.1706). He may be the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Boonraw in 1696. He may be the John whose son William married Jean Turnbull in 1726. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1724. He is probably the John who in 1733 and 1738 witnessed baptisms for Robert Ormiston, resident at Boonraw. He married Bessie Collins in Wilton in 1711. Her surname is also recorded as ‘Colven’ and their children included: Janet (b.1718); and John (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were John Dryden and Thomas Dodds. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism in 1729 for William, who was living at Stiches. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1730); John (b.1732); Margaret (b.1735); Robert (b.1738); George (b.1740); Jean (b.1743); an unnamed child (b.1745); and Janet (b.1753). John (d.1805) gardener on the Cross Wynd. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for William Turner and Agnes Lamb (perhaps his brother-in-law and sister). He married Janet Turner and their children included Agnes (b.1757), William (b.1760) and Andrew (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole of Wilson Congregation, in 1761 were Bailie Robert Scott, merchant, and gardener Andrew (who was surely related to his wife). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Isobel Welsh, also from Hawick. Their daughter Joan was baptised in Hawick, probably in 1789. The witnesses were Andrew Elliot and Thomas Miller. John (b.1793) son of James and Mary. He was a needle-maker at 10 Mid Raw. He is recorded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was listed as a needle-maker in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Janet and their children included Margaret, Mary, Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), Benjamin, Agnes, Isabell, Janet and John. Mary (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Burnhead in at least the period 1786–88, when she was working for William Scott. Matthew (15th C.) resident of Raperlaw. In 1494/5 he was convicted of common theft ‘of old and new’, but his case was suspended. Miss (18th/19th C.) seller of ‘rock boat’s from the end of Needle Street in the 1800s. This could be the same as the person mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’ — ‘Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as a ‘fisher’ in 1708. He married Bessie Wilson and their children included James (b.1708), with baptismal witnesses carriers John Hardie and James Aitken and Bailie James Deans. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Ormiston in Wilton Parish in 1764. Their children included: John (b.1765); Jean (b.1767); James (b.1769); Robert (b.1771); Janet (b.1772); and Robert (again, b.1781). The witnesses in 1769 were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid, in 1772 were Bailie Andrew Scott and Alexander Bunyan (Kirk Officer) and in 1781 were weaver John Briggs and Thomas Miller. Robert (b.1784/5) born in Hawick, he was a farm worker in Roberton Parish. He was living at Hoscote Cottage in 1841 and Deanburnhaugh in 1851. By 1861 he was a gardener in Kelso. He married Christian Noble and their children included: John (b.1808/9); Betty (b.1810/1), who married a Gibson; Robert (b.1812); Margaret (b.1814); Robert (b.1816); Christian (or ‘Christy’, b.1819); Minie (b.1821); Agnes (b.1826); Peter (b.1832/3); and Barbara (b.1830/1). The first 2 children were baptised in Minto Parish and the next 4 in Ashkirk Parish. Robert (b.c.1832) born at Wilton Pathhead, son of John and Betsy. He trained as a woollen hosiery dresser, like his father. He emigrated to Galt, Ontario, along with his older brother Adam. They later moved to MacGregor, Manitoba, where they were among the first settlers. He farmed there and gave 2 acres of his land to establish a school, which he called Path Head School, after his birthplace. There is a cairn marking the location of the former school. Stewart (b.c.1815) Hawick resident who married Margaret Murray in 1840. He was found guilty of mobbing and rioting against Tory supporters at the 1837 election in Hawick, along with 3 others (and one who was found not guilty). Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Woodhead (probably in Ewesdale). He was one of the founders of the Wisp Club in 1826. Thomas (1851–1939) slater in Hawick. He joined the Hawick Fire Brigade in 1872, eventually becoming Captain and retiring from the service in 1922. Also a keen bowler, he won the Buccleuch Bowling Club championship 11 times. Walter (1771–1846) son of George and Janet Laidlaw. He was a cooper of the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about No. 6. He married Christian, daughter of William Phillips and Mary Scott. Their children included: George (b.1809), who moved to Canada; Mary (b.1811); William (b.1812), who trained for the ministry; Janet (b.1814); and Christian (b.1817), who was the 2nd wife of James Damone Kennedy. William (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Cavers Parish in March of 1546/7. It is unknown how long he held this position or if he was ever in the parish. He was the sister’s son and heir of Patrick Panter, who was Abbot of Cambuskenneth and Secretary of State. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (when Hassendean was still part of it). He is recorded at Newton in 1688. He married Isobel Leyden in 1686 and their children included: William (b.1687); James (b.1688); and George (b.1689). The witnesses in 1687 were William Leyden and James Smith and in 1688 were William and James Leyden, who were surely related to his wife. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1681 and another for William Scott in Newton in 1683. He may be the William who, along with John, witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Boonraw in 1696. William (17th C.) resident at Stiches according to the 1694 Hearth Tax roll for Hassendean Parish. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1714 when his daughter Euphan was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Boonraw in 1724 and Stiches in 1729. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1735 for William Scott, resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Renwick in 1719 (and perhaps also proclaimed in 1718, although no wife’s name is listed). Their children included: John (b.1720); Jean (b.1724); Euphan (b.1727); John (b.1729); William (b.1731); and William (again, b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were James and John Armstrong, in 1727 included William Lorraine and in 1729 were John Lamb (surely related) and John Scott. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine (resident of Stiches) in 1729 and another for John Lorraine in 1754. He may be the William who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He could be the William ‘Ballad Singer’ who was already deceased in 1797 when his daughter Jean died in Hawick. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of John. He was recorded living at Wester Burnfoot in 1735. In 1726 he married Jean, daughter of Robert Turnbull, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included: Jean (b.1728); Euphan (b.1734); Johanna (b.1735); and Robert (b.1739). The witnesses in 1735 were Walter Riddell and William Sanderson. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Sarah Hume in 1763. His wife was from Minto Parish. They had an unnamed child baptised in 1766. William (d.1815) recorded in the Hawick death register as ‘Betty Ingles’s Husband’. It is unclear why he would have been recorded in this way, but presumably by the time of his death his wife was more well-known in the Town than he was. Rev. William (1812–77) born in Hawick Parish, he was son of cooper Walter and Christian Phillips. He was educated at Edinburgh High School and University and licensed as a minister by Jedburgh Presbytery. He was preacher at Caerlerrig (Teviothead) Chapel of Ease 1843–44 and was then translated to Ednam, where he remained until his death. He married Christian Archibald MacDougall, daughter of Joseph Yair, minister of Eckford. His children were: Helen Josephine (b.1869); Walter minister of Lauder; Christian (b.1871); William (b.1874); George (b.1875); and John Yair (b.1877).

lamber (lawm-ur) n., arch. a lambing-stick, crook.

Lambert (lawm-bur’) n. Andrew (b.1814/5) shepherd at Clerklands Cottages in 1851. His wife was Mary A. and they had a son James. James (b.1786/7) farmer at Clerklands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was recorded as a miller in Lilliesleaf in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1851 he was farming 575 acres and employed 14 workers. He was already widowed and living with his son William. He may be the James who was recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1819 when his marriage to Jean Melrose was announced in Melrose Parish. James (b.1809/10) born in Selkirk Parish, he was probably son of James. He was farmer and miller at Midlem Mill and Toft Barns in Bowden Parish. In 1851 he was farming 85 acres and employing 4 labourers. His wife was Margaret from Heriot.
Lambert’s

Their children included Isabella, Janet, Margaret, Jean, Helen and James. James (19th C.) railway guard. He married Agnes (1829–1916), daughter of William Murray. Later she kept a washhouse at 29 Wellogate Place, afterwards run by their daughter Helen. His sister-in-law (also Helen) married Andrew Lambert, possibly his brother. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Allanhaugh-mill in 1797. His name appears to be ‘Lammert’.

the Lamp

(Lanark) n. the 1537 Charter stipulates that a lamp should be permanently burning before the High Altar of the Parish Church ‘... for the souls of the Barons of Hawick, founders of said lamp, and their successors’. According to the Charter it was the duty of the heirs of James Blair to provide this lamp, and they thus held some special status through paying one penny Scots each Pentecost in return for a half particate of land. Whether this lamp was part of the original foundation of St. Mary’s (and hence started by the Lovels) or began with Douglas of Drumlanrig, or at some point between, is unknown. It is also unclear when this arrangement ended, but certainly the burning of the lamp would have been abolished by the Reformation. The presence of Sir James Douglas at Parliament during the ratification of the Confessions of Faith in 1560 effectively exonerated the people of Hawick from their obligation to maintain the lamp. The lamp symbol appears on the Hawick coat of arms, and similar lamps were incorporated into the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, At matins, mass, and vesper hymn, Cast here its rays subdued and dim’ [WNK].

Lampin Lizzie (lam-pin-li-zee) n. local character of the early 19th century.

the lamplighter (thu-lawmp-li’-ur) n. official town appointment after oil lighting was installed in 1813 (60 lamps being installed in the main streets). He used a ladder and a flaming torch, lighting the oil lamps nightly from 15th November until 7th April. He was later responsible for lighting the gas lamps, introduced in 1831.

lan’ (lawn’) n., poet. land – ‘Though I maun face storms, baith by laun’ an’ water ...’ [JoHa], ‘He turnet the se intil dry lan’...’ [HSR], ‘... my saul thirsts effer thee as ane thristie na’’ [HSR] (also written ‘laun’).

Lanark (law-nurk) n. town in South Lanarkshire, which has been a Royal Burgh since the early 12th century. The earliest record of a riding of the marches festival is 1570 and it still continues, focussed on ‘Lanimers Day’ (usually the same day as the Thursday of Hawick Common Riding) and involving a ‘Lord Cornet’ and ‘Lanimer Queen’. Population (1991) 8,877.

land-end (lawnd-end) n., arch. top end of a rig, end of a furrow – ‘...But Robin reached the land-end first And foremost o’ the boon’ [JT].

Landles (lawn-dulz) n. Andrew (1815–53) originally from Northumberland, he was a master framesmith in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Teviot Square (probably 12 Sandbed), employing 4 men. He was listed as a framesmith on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1839 he married Mary, daughter of David Affleck, who was born in Wigtownshire. Their children included Margaret, Maria, David and Andrew. He may have died in Australia. Andrew, J.P. (1853–1940) son of Andrew. He was a Town Councillor from 1909 and Bailie in the 1920s, as well as J.P. from 1913. He worked in the woollen industry all his life. He was involved with setting up Hawick R.F.C., and wrote a memoir of those times in the early 1920s. He was also involved with the Volunteers, the Foresters and the Home Mission. He retired from the Common Riding Committee in 1932 after 40 years of service. He married Sarah, daughter of Valentine Godfrey, and she died in 1941. He was grandfather of Wullie and great-grandfather of Ian. His children were: Andrew, Professor of Music at Eugene, Oregon; David, who died young; Thomas, who was a policeman and member of the Brethren; William, who was a hosiery worker and artist; John Chapman Gray ‘Chap’, who was Cornet and Provost; Jessie, who married confectioner Alexander Murray; and Mary Affleck, who married baths attendant Frederick Crozier. Andrew (1877–1944) son of Bailie Andrew. He emigrated to Eugene Oregon, where he was a Professor of Music. He married Sarah Calderhead. His son Andrew was 5 when the family emigrated and died aged 95 in 1999; his ashes were returned to Hawick in 2001. Andrew ‘Andra’ (??–??) uncle of Ian and brother of Wullie. He was a stalwart committee man of the Archaeological Society and known for his sense of humour. Ian William (1952– ), B.E.M., High School History teacher, and son of Wullie. Educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh University, graduating in 1974, he then trained as a teacher at Moray House, returning to Hawick as a teacher in 1975. He later became Head of the History Department, retaining the position until retirement in 2009. He was the instigator of the battlefield tours for pupils and later adults from Hawick. He is writer of the words and music for ‘Auld Hawick, Ma Border Hame’, ‘My Teviot Valley’, ‘A’m Comin’ Hame’ and other more impromptu songs set to well known tunes. His poems include ‘The Vertish Hill’, ‘The Man that oo Ca’ Bill’ and ‘Doon Oor Close And Up Oor Stair’. He is frequent accompanist at Common Riding and other functions, having taken over in ‘the Hut’ from Adie Ingles. He has also been star of the annual Panto and played ‘Gibbie the Gowk’ in ‘The Gutterbludes’. He is a public speaker extraordinaire, local dialect enthusiast and general all-round entertainer. He has made a large number of valuable tape recordings of elderly locals (an archive of 150 cassette tapes being digitised in 2015), and contributed to local history and culture in innumerable ways. He also has an unrivalled collection of photographic slides relating to Hawick and area. He wrote ‘Honest men and bright-eyed daughters’ (1991), ‘Mair honest men’ (1993) and ‘Son of Honest Men’ (2000) with Derek Lunn, ‘Walking in the Land of the Reivers’ (2011) with Alan Brydon, and has contributed many articles to the Archaeological Society Transactions, as well as serving in most capacities on its committee. He wrote the musical plays ‘A Reiver’s Moon’ and ‘1514: The Musical’ with Alan Brydon. He was Hawick Citizen of the Year in 2000. Common Riding Chief Guest in 2004 and has been President of the 1514 and Callants’ Clubs. He also provides the acrostics for the Callants’ Club dinner guest. He was heavily involved in arranging the Adam Grant plaque, the James Thomson statue and the Bill McLaren bust. His ‘night cless’ has been popular for decades. He was recorded in dialect in 2004 as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project. In 2013 he was awarded the British Empire Medal for services to the community in Hawick – ‘Now as maist o ee ken ‘A few remarks’ and ‘Ian Landles’ irni words ee wad expect ti come across in the same sentence!’ [IWL].

John Chapman Gray, J.P., ‘Chap’ (1892–1980), son of Bailie Andrew and uncle of Wullie. He had his schooling at Buccleuch and Wilton. He served an apprenticeship with Barrie & Kersel and spent the rest of his life with Innes & Henderson. In WWI he served with Lothian and Border Horse. He played rugby, swam and was in the water polo team in the opening game at ‘the Baths’. He was Cornet in 1921, Councillor from 1931 for South High Street Ward and Bailie from 1935. He served as Provost 1938–40, and has been described as Hawick’s first ‘working man’ Provost. The ‘Provost Landles Spitfire Fund’ raised money for the purchase of the ‘Teribus Spitfire’ in WWII. He rode the Marches himself in 1940, and led a group each year during the rest of the war. He was the first enrolled member of the Hawick British Legion, President of the Callants’ Club and of Hawick R.F.C. He was a director on the Board of the Co-op Society, Convenor of the County Health Committee and an elder in St. Andrew’s Church. Landles Road is named after him. Thomas (19th/20th C.) son of Bailie Andrew. He was a policeman and then worked with Urban Electric Co. in Hawick. He was a leading preacher with the Open Brethren. His son William was the local poet, father of Ian. William (14th C.) probably a descendant of John de Landales, who was great-grandson of Orm. He was granted the lands of Swinside and Renalston in about 1390, after they were forfeited by Robert Burrell. He was also granted a charter of lands in Oxnam. He was ‘William de Laundelis of Swnysshed’ in 1390 when he witnessed the charter of John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. He also received a charter of lands in Oxnam, forfeited by John Wylie. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Katharine, who married John Lauder. William ‘Wullie’, M.B.E. (1912–98) cousin of Bill and nephew of ‘Chap’, he was born at 7 Sandbed and educated at Buccleuch and Wilton Schools. He worked in the knitwear industry, first for Turner & Rutherford and then at Glebe Mills, where he was company secretary. He later spent time working for Roberts of Selkirk and Thorburn of Walkerburn before returning to a Hawick firm in John Laing’s, and finally retiring in 1977. After retirement he wrote court reports for the Hawick News. However, it is as a writer that he is remembered, particularly as a poet, publishing over 400 pieces. Among these were ‘Oor Border Hame’ and ‘Bothwick Water’, both set to music. Many of his poems have local flavour, including ‘The Exile’s Return’, ‘A Callant’s Games’, ‘Hawick Sang’, ‘Hame Toun’, ‘The Centre o’ them a’, ‘The Rowan Hills sae Green’ and ‘The Herd’s Psalm’. His poetry collections include ‘A Breath frae the Hills: verses Scots and English’ (1950), ‘Gooseberry Fair, and other verses, Scots and English’ (1952), ‘Penny Numbers: poems Scots and English’ (1969) and ‘Turn o the Year and other poems chiefly in Scots’ (1989). As ‘Quartus’ he was writer of the ‘Thought For The Week’ Christian commentary column in the Hawick News; these were collected in ‘I to the Hills’ (1979), ‘All Good Gifts Around Us’ (1982) and ‘Roving Commission’ (1992). He wrote a short book on Will H. Ogilvie in 1992. He was awarded the M.B.E. for services to Border literature in 1996. In addition he was a lay preacher, involved with the local Brethren Fellowship. He was father of Ian W. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William ‘Bill’ (1923–2016) cousin of Wullie and nephew of ‘Chap’. He

Lang (lawng) n. Andrew (1712–53) writer in Selkirk, son of John (Selkirk Deacon of Trades) and Isobel Murray (from Philiphaugh). He was recorded as the Procurator Fiscal in Selkirk in 1751. In 1741 he married Henrietta Chisholme, widow of Robert Mercer; she was daughter of William Chisholme of Broadlee and Ann Rutherford (daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth). Their children included: Isobel (b.1742);
Henrietta (b.1743); John (b.1744); and Katherine (b.1752). He drowned in the Ettrick and left a son John and 4 daughters. In 1761 his widow had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk, on behalf of herself and her son John; she had several other discharges in the years until 1782. Andrew (1783–1842) son of John, who was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire. He was also Sheriff Clerk and served under Sir Walter Scott. His son John was also Sheriff Clerk and his grandson was the author, also Andrew. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Several letters relating to his legal work are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in the period 1825–29. He married Margaret Suter in 1809. Andrew (1844–1912) author, born at Viewfield in Selkirk. His parents were John, who was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire and Jane Plenderleath Sellar. He was descended from a family of trades deacons in Selkirk, and he also had Chisholmes of that Ilk and Murrays of Philiphaugh among his ancestors. He was educated in Edinburgh, St. Andrews, Glasgow and Oxford, and lived most of his life in London. He became a journalist, writing extensively for the Daily News and for Longman’s Magazine. He wrote such a varied selection of things that many people of the time believed he was a pseudonym for a whole group of writers! His collections of fairy tales and writings on angling are still widely read, but he was also a poet and essayist. For works of local interest, he edited Scott’s Waverley Novels, as well as his Poems and Ballads, wrote ‘Sir Walter Scott and the Border Minstrelsy’ (1910) and ‘Highways and Byways in the Border’ (1913, with his brother John). lang airm (lawng-ārm) n., arch. to ‘make a lang airm’ means to help oneself at the table – ‘Now make a lang airm’ [GW].

langam lily (lawng-um-li-lee) n., arch. the dandelion (a joking reference to Langholm).

Langbaulk (hum-bawk, lawng-bawlk) n. farm-house on the left hand-side of Buccleuch Road, just after the Dunk, being at the end of the ‘Lumb’ road. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester parts. John Henderson was farmer here in 1797 and still recorded in 1841. Francis Henderson was there in the mid-20th century.

Langbaulk Road (hum-bawk-rōd) n. more recently spelled Longbaulk, but pronounced ‘Lumb’ – this is the right fork at the top of the Loan. It was probably developed as a proper road in about 1762, as part of the coach road to Carlisle before the ‘New Road’ was opened in 1815. It is now often used for country walks. Part of the original road is a grass-grown right-of-way, which leaves the metalled road and passes the Longbaulk farm steadings. It was named in 1965, with new private and council houses built here between 1970 and 1980. The part officially called ‘Longbaulk Road’ is a dead end, with ‘the Lumb’ continuing as Crumhaughhill Road. After the ‘New Road’ was built there was for a long time a notice that read, when coming towards Hawick, ‘No road this way for the public. Trespassers will be prosecuted for evasion of the toll bar’ (the name either means ‘a long hard pull’ or refers to a long ‘baulk’ or strip of land left unploughed).

Langbaulk Toll-Hoose (hum-bawk-tōl-hoos) n. former toll-house on the New Road, being now the first house on Parkdaill.

Langbits (lawng-bits) n. lands in the Barony of Cavers. In 1519/20 they were promised from James Gledstains as part of the marriage contract for his son James, and a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear where exactly these lands were, but probably near Teviothead (written ‘Langbittis’).

Lang Burn (lawng-burn) n. stream in the upper Slitrig valley (essentially being the upper part of the Slitrig itself) running alongside the B6399 from Shankend to Langburnshiel. It is essentially formed from the confluence of the Leap Burn, Flish Burn and Rope Sike. The lands there...
Langburnshiels

may be the same as those lands recorded in a Baronial dispute of Feu-Rule in 1562 (it is probably the tributary of the Slitrig marked ‘Langhburn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Langburnshiels (lawng-burn-sheelz) n. Longburnshiels, hamlet and farm near Shankend on the Newcastleton road, once site of the ‘Turf Hotel’ used by railway labourers. It was contained within Hobkirk Parish and was once part of the estate of Eliot of Harwood, being listed as ‘Langburne’ among the Harwood farms on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert Oliver was there from around the 1760s, John Elliot shepherd at about the same time. Robert Elliot was recorded there in 1785, Robert Oliver 1786–90, Alexander Lillico in 1790 and Thomas Oliver in 1791–94. There was a Robertson there in 1797. The tenants were William Stephenson in the late 18th century till 1807, then James Mather from 1813, followed by Daniel Mather. The Carruthers and Elliot families were there in 1841, and the Carruthers and Scotts in 1851. Thomas Carruthers was manager of the farm there until the 1860s. The Hawick postman used to go as far as here by bicycle. Peculiar lines of stones have been noted on a nearby hill, examined by Alexander Michie and James Murray in 1863, as well as a possible hill-fort being described nearby (it is just ‘Langburn’ in 1790; this may be the place marked ‘Shells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langbyre (lawng-bir) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, near the modern Lymiecleuch. It was among lands purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers owned by the Elliotts of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. The lands were included among those of Lymiecleuch when sold by William Elliott of Stobs to a group of Elliots in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. It was among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Lang Cairn (lawng-kärn) n. Long Cairn, near the Kershope Burn, situated on Long Knowe, directly north of Scotch Kershope, now in the middle of Newcastleton Forest. It is the only known neolithic structure in Roxburghshire. It is a stone-built, barrow-like burial cairn, roughly pear-shaped, with maximum size about 53 m by 14 m, and with part of an exposed cist towards the north end. It was excavated around 1850 and investigated again in 1870 when it was said to contain ‘several stone coffins of various sizes standing exposed’. There is a nearby standing stone marking a boundary of the Debateable Lands.

Lang Cleuch (lawng-clooch) n. stream that rises on the northern side of Skelfhill and runs roughly north-eastwards to join the Skelfhill Burn.

Langleuch (lawng-cloocho) n. former farmstead marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map in the upper part of the Allan valley, perhaps near Skelfhillhope. ‘Langleuchside’ was listed as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in 1660. ‘Longcleuchside’ is shown on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands, attached to Skelfill and Fairnyside. The cleuch itself is labelled on the map, corresponding to the modern Pen Sike. John Armstrong was farmer there in the late 18th century. It could be the ‘langcleuch’ recorded in 1502 when John Winthopre, James ‘aronyk’ and Robert Paterson had 60 sheep stolen from there by Patrick, son of Adam Scott in Harwoodhill.

the Lang Croft (thu-lawng-kroft) n. long field that once lay north and north-west of the present Crumhaughhill Road, and on part of which Longcroft Crescent and Road were built.

Langcroft Crescent (lawng-kroft-kre-sin’) n. Langcroft Crescent, loop off Longbaulk Road, built in 1938 and named after the ‘Long Croft’ which once stood there.

Langcroft Road (lawng-kroft-röd) n. Langcroft Road, street connecting Longcroft Crescent with Longbaulk Road, built in 1938 and named after the ‘Long Croft’.

Langdale (lawng-däl) n. remote area in Cumbria that was a neolithic axe factory. The polished greenstone volcanic tuff found here is the source for a large fraction of the neolithic axe-heads discovered around Britain. An example found at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot (measuring 4.5 × 1.75 × 0.75 inches and now in the National Museum) came from here.

lang drink o witter (lawng-drinkg-ō-wi’-ur) n. colloquial expression for a tall, skinny person.

Lang Eild-rig (lawng-eeld-rig) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

langer (lawng-ur) adj., adv. longer – ‘Jimmy Rae’s no cuttin hair ony langer!’; ‘if ee stand there ony langer, ee’ll take ruit!’; ‘... and to remove from the town for ane yair and langer ...’[BR1644], ‘He reas the text with haly anger, ’Till he could sit nor read nae langer’[JR], ‘Where will ye get a whisky soss To moistify your middle,
For now nae langer at Haremoss You’ll hear auld Ruickbie’s fiddle’ [JR], ‘Nae langer could he thole, She tore his vera soul’ [JTe], ‘Some say it is a gross abuse, Some say they’ll it nae langer use . . . ’ [TP], . . . on account o hevin been there a sicht langer’ [DH] (note there is no hard g in the pronunciation).

Lang (lawng-ist) adj. longest – ‘Aye’, he said, things lest longest efter they’re dune’‘ [JHH] (note the lack of the hard g in the pronunciation).

Lang Flow (lawng-flō) n. Long Flow, area between Redfordgreen and Bleak Law, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map.

the Lang Field (thu-lawng-field) n. name for the field of the Common, to the east of the road between Pilnmir and Pilnmir Rig farms.

Langflat (lawng-fla ) n. former name for a farmstead bordering on the old Common, being the eastern part of Southfield farm, lying west of the road shortly before the Caa Knowe. Simon Learmonth and Alexander Kennedy were living there in 1694 when it is ‘Langflate’ (mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common).

Langformacus (lawng-for-mā-kis) n. Longformacus, a village in Berwickshire, on the Dye Water, north-west of Duns, containing 18th century Longformacus House and associated unusual dovecote (the origin is ‘church meadow of Maccus’ in Old Welsh).

Lang Gill (lawng-gil) n. Long Gill, stream in a narrow ravine in the hills to the west of Newcastleton, rising on Millstone Edge and running roughly south to join the Black Burn. There are a couple of ruined bothies and sheepfolds along its banks, as well as turf-banked enclosure to the south (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Lang Grain (lawng-grān) n. Long Grain, stream that joins the Whitrope Burn just south of Whitropefoot. There are grouse butts in the upper part and an old sheepfold part-way down. On the banks of the stream, just to the west of the main road are the remains of 2 shieling-huts. ‘Langgrainfit’ was a former farmstead on the drove road, once an important stopping point before the turnpike road (B6399) was opened. There are many other small streams with the same name, e.g. one in the headwaters of the Teviot, another at Moss paal and a third near Altrive in the upper Etrick valley (‘Grain’ is Scots for a branch of a stream, derived from Old Norse).

Lang Grain (lawng-grān) n. stream that runs to the east to join the Black Burn near Moss paal. It rises on Wisp Hill and forms part of the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire.

Lang Grain (lawng-grān) n. small stream that rises on Lamblair Hill and flows north-east to join Singdean Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Langgrainfit (lawng-grān-fi) n. former farmstead on the drove road by Whitropefoot, near the foot of Long Grain.

Lang Hassendean (lawng-haw-sin-deen) n. lands in the Barony of Hassendean, recorded in a charter of 1457 when they passed from William Cunningham to his son Neil, excepting the part called ‘Camehill’. There was a dispute among the Cunnannels, with the land being confirmed to Elizabeth (daughter of George Cunningham of Beltou) in 1483, and confirmed again in 1514. The 1514 sasine states that the lands include a tower, so it may be that ‘Langhassendean’ was simply the name used for the main town of Hassendean. The ‘precept of sasine’ of 1514 also refers to ‘Eister Hassindene’, so these may also be the same lands. A document of 1470 refers to the whole (half) barony as ‘Lang Hassindean’.

Langhaugh (lawng-haw-ch) n. former fortified house on the north side of the Teviot valley somewhere between Teviothead and Blackeuch. The lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615. James Douglas of Drumlanrig had a ‘houn’ in 1607 for William Scott of How pasley to remove from these and other lands. In 1624 the lands were purchased from the Earl of Douglas by Robert Elliot of Fahnash (along with Hislop). In 1647 Archibald Elliot of Fahnash was served heir to his father’s 5 merk land there. They were sold back to the superior, James, Earl of Queensberry in 1650. They were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh from 1674. The lands of ‘Langhauch water’ were inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690, along with part of Fahnash, Tanlaw Naze and Calfshaw. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. It is ‘Longhaugh-water’ in 1707 when valued at £166 13s 4d (and can be identified as part of the Hawick Parish lands of Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane in 1678). It is ‘Longhaugh-water’ in 1788 and ‘Langhaugh Water’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when valued at £166 13s 4d. (it is ‘Langhauch’ in 1511, ‘Langhauch’ in 1572, ‘Longhauch’ in 1610, ‘Langheuch’ in 1637 and ‘Langhauch’ in 1647; it

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, between NetherRAW and Hartgarth. It is listed in a rental record of about 1376, valued at 10 shillings. It was held by the Elliots of Redheugh from the latter part of the 15th century to at least the early 17th. This is probably where Robert ‘Elwald’ was recorded as Laird there in 1494/5. Will Foster was recorded there in 1611. It was among the lands contested between the Elliots of Redheugh and the Scotts of Buccleuch in about 1612. It was one of 3 farms that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. It was under a ‘wadsett’ until James Elliott (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’) paid it off in 1639. The lands were valued (along with Hartgarth) at £466 13s 4d in 1678. Christopher Irving of Binks purchased the farm (along with several others) in 1688, after Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt. There was a shepherd recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It was purchased by the Olivers of Dinlabyre about 1700 and sold in 1773 to William Sharp of Hartsgarth. Dyker William Thomson and family lived there in 1851. Before about 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. By the 18th century it appears that the farm had migrated down-hill. There is now a cottage marked there close to the road. On the eastern slopes of Thornside Hill above are 2 boundary dykes, probably defining the boundaries of the former farm, and area of about 50 hectares, including evidence of ancient field systems and rig lines. On a terrace on the hillside are the remains of a farmstead and hut (it is ‘Langhalgh’ around 1376, ‘langhalch’ in 1494/5, ‘Langhauch’ in 1612 and transcribed as ‘Lahauch’ in about 1624; it is marked ‘Langhauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Longhaugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former farm in the upper Rule valley, just north of Wauchope. The lands specifically lay to the east of Templehall and Brewlands. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1502. It is mentioned in 1676 as the Twenty pound land of Wauchope and Longhaugh’ (it is ‘le langhauch’ in 1502, ‘Langheuch’ in 1567, ‘Langhawght’ in 1604, ‘Langhauch’ in 1605, ‘Langhauche’ in 1637 and ‘Langhaughe’ in 1649; marked on Gordon’s c.1590 map, Blaue’s 1654 map and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Longhaugh’).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former name for part of the lands of Deanfoot in Minto Parish. In 1779 they were valued at £36 and part of the Minto estate, with the liferent being held by Robert Trotter of Bush. In 1780 the lands were referred as ‘Long-haugh parks’. It was still listed in 1811.

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish that were part of Dryden and Clews farms. ‘Longhaugh and Strawbrae’ is listed in 1780 among the lands whose liferent had been given to Dr. William Elliot.

Langhaugh Waas (lawng-hawch-wawz, -walz) n. former farmstead near Langhaugh on the Wauchope estate, also sometimes referred to as ‘Wauchope Waas’ and popularly known as ‘the Waas’. It consisted of small patches of land between the road and the Rule Water. There may have been a small shop there in the early 19th century. The residents in the mid-19th century were William and Rachel Tait (also written ‘Langhaughwalls’, etc.).

Langheugh House (lawng-hew-hoos, -lewch-hoos) n. villa-style house off Buccleuch Road designed by J.P. Alison in 1905. Langheugh Road was originally its drive-way.

Langheugh Road (lawng-hew-rød) n. private street off Buccleuch Road, opposite the playing fields, containing several large houses. It was developed largely in the period 1965–70, and named after several houses that had already been built. Many of the residents use Buccleuch Road as their address.

Langholm (lawng-um) n. town 24 miles south of Hawick, along the A7, where the River Esk is met by the Wauchope Water and the Ewes Water. In the heart of riever country, it has been prominent in the tweed industry, with the first major factory being built in 1832; before that there was extensive employment in cotton manufacturing, and later the town was known for the production of checked cloth. Whita Hill (1163 ft) looms over the town, with the monument to Sir John Malcolm on the summit. It was actually 2 towns on opposite sides of the Esk, with the old town being made a burgh of barony in 1610 (with other charters later that century), and the new or ‘Meikleholm’ being built to a fairly regular pattern from 1778 by the Duke of Buccleuch. At the end of the 17th century it was temporarily in the county of Roxburghshire. The library dates from 1875–78 and the Town Hall from 1811–12. The ruins of Langholm Castle lie just to the north, built around 1526 and abandoned in the early 18th century. Additionally James Playfair’s
Langholm Castle

Langholm Lodge was built 1786–89 as a hunting lodge for the Duke of Buccleuch. Langholm Common Riding dates back to 1759, with the first Cornet elected in 1817. It involves the carrying of traditional emblems through the streets and the unique ‘Crying of the Fair’ (an example proclamation being published as early as 1731), while the colours are based on those of the Derby winner. John Hyslop’s ‘Echoes from the Border Hills’ (1912, revised in 1992) contains anecdotes from Eskdale in the 19th century. The book ‘Langholm as it was’ (1912) was also written by John Hyslop, with a new edition appearing in 2002. Population 2,538 (1991) – ‘The roads atween Hawick And Langholm Are the roads atween Heaven and hell . . . ’ [DH], ‘. . . was a gaird on the mail coach afore hei took over the Croon Inn in the Langum’ [BW1979] (it is ‘ye Langhame’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map, while ‘Cust. of Langhoome’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Langholm Castle (lawng-um-kaw-sul) n. ruined tower in Langholm, near the confluence of the Esk and Ews Water, once home of the Armstrongs. It may have been built in the 1520s and abandoned 200 years later. All that now exists are the south wall and fragments of the adjoining walls. It is also known as ‘Langholm Tower’.

Langholm lily (lawng-um-li-lee) n., arch. a sobriquet for the dandelion (recorded in the Hawick News in 1954).

Langholmite (lawng-um-i’) n. person from Langholm. Famous Langholmites include Hugh MacDiarmid, Thomas Telford and William Julius Mickle.

Langholm Street (lawng-um-stree’) n. street in Newcastleton which is the beginning of the road over the hills to Langholm. The Parish Manse was at No. 23.

Langhope (lawng-up) n. former name for part of the farm at Crumhaughhill. There are several other places of the same name, including a height near the Wisp Hill, a stream that joins the Ale Water and a former property of the Scotts of Buccleuch near Melrose (it was mentioned in the court case for the division of the Common in 1767).

Langhope (lawng-hop, -up) n. Longhope, farm on the Langhope Burn near Todrig, west of Ashkirk, which was once a Scott possession. It is recorded in a document from the reign of William I, relating to the Diocese of Glasgow’s lands in Ashkirk Parish. They were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, split into the ‘Eststeid de Langhop’, ‘Middillsteid’ and ‘Weststeid’. In the 1470s John Cranston of that Ilk had remission for the ‘grassum’ there. In the 1480s they were leased to Ainslies, Cranstons and John Scott of Todshawhaugh. In 1499 and 1501 they were assigned to Alexander Scott and his mother, Robert Scott of Stiches, Patrick Home and William Cranston of that Ilk. The land remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1510 the west stead was feued to Thomas Cranston, the middle stead to Sir William Cranston and then Alexander Scott, and the east stead to Walter Scott; the middle stead was also called ‘Howford’, suggesting this was the place on the Ettrick, further to the north (making it unclear whether this was the same place or another Langhope on Ettrick). Walter Scott in Synton was tenant in 1541, paying £18 yearly. The meadow there ‘langhoup medo’ was part of lands belonging to George Scott of Blindhaugh, which he assigned to his 3rd son William. ‘Robert Scot of Langup’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch (this probably around 1600). The Scots of Langhope were descended from the Huntly branch, and owned the lands until about 1620. The old Scots of Headshaw then bought the lands, which were sold (along with Headshaw) in 1629 to John of Yorkston, who passed it to his son John Scott of Langhope. ‘Langupmedow’ was owned by Scott of Woll in 1609. William of Langhope had a ‘wadset’ with Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1669, and by 1677 Walter was ‘now of Langhope’. In 1688 it was sold to his son John Scott, then to Adam Scott of Bowhill in 1691. In 1691 the value was given as £18. Tax was paid for 5 hearths there in 1694. It was later owned by the Elliots of Minto (probably purchased along with Headshaw in 1696). Thomas Nivison was herd there in 1697. John Brydon was tenant there in 1784 and John Paterson in 1785. In 1785 and 1802 it was valued at £548 ‘of Stock’ and £33 for the teinds. Walter Todd lived there in the early 19th century and Thomas Scott in the 1860s. It is also mentioned in the ballad ‘The Fray of Elibank’ – ‘Though Andrew o’ Langhope had fa’n i’ the fight, He only lay still till the battle was by, Then ventured to rise an’ climb over the height, An’ there he set up a lamentable cry’ [ES] (the name occurs in the late 12th century; it is ‘Lang Hoip’ in 1541 and ‘Langhop’ in 1661; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Langup’ and is ‘Longhope’ by Ainslie’s 1773 map).

lands of Whitslade in a charter by William I and also as ‘the rivulet of Langhope’ as part of the boundary of lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk – ‘And now the dreary distance doth wear it like a bride, Out beyond Langhope Burn and over Essenside’ [WHO] (it is ‘rivulus de Longhope’ about 1770; there is another stream of the same name in the headwaters of the Ettrick).

Langhope Drive (lawng-hop-driv) n. Longhope Drive, part of the private housing development at the top of Crumhaughhill, built in 1979. It is named after a former croft incorporated into Crumhaughhill farm, the name meaning a piece of enclosed land, usually a hollow.

Langhope Height (lawng-hop-hi’) n. hill south of Teviothead, being the western ridge of Comb Hill, with the stream called the Lang Hope nearby.

Langhope Rig (lawng-hop-rig) n. ridge above the Langhope Burn, between Shaws Under Loch and Akermoor Loch. Since 2015 it has been the location for a wind farm, consisting of 10 turbines. A related community fund has supported small projects in the neighbouring district.

langin (lawng-in) n. longing, desire – ‘Lord, a’ my langin’ is afore thee; an’ my graenin’ isna hidden frae thee’ [HSR], ‘...an’ satisfies the langin’ o’ ilka levin’ thing’ [HSR], ‘...the thought, the langin’s, an’ the resolves o’ an exile thre’ hame’ [BW1939].

langish (lawng-ceesh) adj. longish, somewhat long – ‘Well, kindle the pipes chaps, and make yourselves snug, for it’s a langish yarn ...’ [JEDM].

langit (lawng-ce’, -i’) pp., poet. longed – ‘Behold, I hae langet efter thy preceeps ...’ [HSR], ‘...for I langet for thy commandements’ [HSR].

lang kail (lawng-kal) n., arch. a form of borecole that is purplish and with less wrinkly leaves than the more common variety, soup made from this – ‘If it was het, the langkail gully Play’d smash amang’t to end the tulzie’ [JR] (also written ‘langkail’; see also kail).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for a large part of western Wilton town. The more extensive estate was the eastern half barony of Wilton, being the estate of the Langlands family since at least 1451. Robert of that Ilk’s estate in Wilton Parish was valued at £953 16s 8d in 1643 and he paid tax on £992 of land for the estate in 1663. It was still valued at £992 16s 8d in 1678. On the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls the estate is recorded as being composed of Whitfield, Mervinslaw, Brieryhill, Dean Mill, Roughheugh and Heap. The Laird of Langlands is described as ceremoniously observing the marking of his land’s boundary with Hawick in the early 1700s. This happened at the Cable Pool and at Roughheugh Mill. The land remained in the family for 300 years, being diminished over time, particularly in the 18th century, and then sold off entirely in 1783 to Thomas Elliot. By that time the main estate was valued at £278 12s 8d and consisted of the half-Barony of Wilton, as well as Calaburn and ‘sundry inclosures in Rough-heugh, sold to other persons, but not yet disjoined’. It then passed to Lord Napier around 1790, to James Anderson about 1805 and finally descended to the Pringles. It was valued at £278 12s 8d in 1811, and some enclosures in Roughheugh were later sold to Rev. John Thomson, so that the value in about 1874 was about £262. By then the remaining property was known as Wilton Lodge and was purchased by the Town in 1889 as a public park. In older records there are people recorded living at ‘Langlands’, but it is not clear how extensive an area was covered by that designation. Note that there are several other places called ‘Langlands’, e.g. in Angus, Ayrshire, Devon, Essex, Falkirk, Kirkcudbrightshire, Lanarkshire, Somerset and Yorkshire (formerly spelled ‘Langlans’, it is ‘Langlans’ in 1748).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. Victorian villa-style house in Sunnyhill, designed by John Guthrie about 1878. It was built for manufacturer Walter Pringle, and was one of the earliest villas in the Sunnyhill area. There were new stables, alterations and additions designed by Peddie & MacKay of Edinburgh in 1880. It was formerly the home of the Pringles and then Sir Thomas Henderson. Art deco style interior alterations were made in the 1920s or 30s. It is now split into ‘East’ and ‘West’ parts and is a grade C listed building.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale. They are recorded in 1541 along with Millholm, as pertaining to the Laird of Mangerton. The precise location is unknown. It could be the same as the lands ‘called Langland, within a hedge, worth 33s. 2d.’ listed in the English part of Liddesdale in 1276 (it is ‘Langlands’ in 1541; the existence of this name also in Liddesdale is confusing).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for land in Minto Parish. It is listed in the 1779 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) along with ‘Quarter of Whitefield’, valued at £73 3s 6d. It was among lands whose liferent was given to Rev. Robert Elliot (brother of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto) in 1779. In 1780 it is listed as part of the eastern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for lands lying within the Barony of Caverton in Roxburghshire. The name occurs as ‘Langislandis’ in the Exchequer Rolls for the 1450s and 1470s. There is presumably no direct connection with the lands in Wilton.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) listed among the men who accompanied Robert Scott, younger of Haining in an attack on Selkirk Mill in 1608. Possibly the same Adam (tenant of some lands that are not transcribed) accompanied the Scotts of Whitehaugh, Headsaw, Kirkhouses and Huntly when they forcibly took possession of the farm of Hartwoodburn in 1627. He may be the uncle of George of that Ilk recorded in 1610 when the family, along with several Scotts, petitioned for removal of a hornring and reduction of penalties. George acted as cautioner for him and several others, promising they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhaugh) and associates. Andrew (15th C.) monk of Newbattle, who was witness to a charter of the Barony of Cranston McGill in 1477/8. In 1488 he was Abbot of Newbattle when he witnessed another document, and was Abbot until at least 1492. He may have been related to the local family. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1610 as uncle of George of that Ilk when there a request to lift the ‘hornring’ and modify the penalty on their ancestor. This was probably his father James, who was declared a rebel in 1581. It seems likely that he was brother of the previous Laird Robert. He may be the same Andrew who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Charles (16th C.) recorded in 1531 as ‘Karolo vicario de Dryvisdall’, i.e. Vicar of Drysdale near Lockerbie. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in the register of Cuchar Abbey in 1550. George (16th/17th C.) of that Ilk, son of Robert. In about 1611 he was served heir to his father in the half lands and Barony of Wilton, including the alternating advowson of the Parish Kirk. In 1610, along with his brothers Robert and James and his uncle Andrew, as well as several Scotts, he asked for suspension of the ‘hornring’ (possibly the one imposed on James in 1581), and reduction of the penalties imposed to find caution that they not harm the Scotts of Todshawaugh and Ormiston.

His cautioner in this dispute was William Scott, younger of Harden, while he himself acted as cautioner for the Scotts of Sinton, Whitehaugh and Burnfoot, as well as Robert, James and Adam Langlands, plus Roger in Hawick. He was confirmed in the half barony in 1614 and is recorded in a charter (related to Hawick) in 1615. In 1616 he was foreman of the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ guilty of multiple thefts. He may have been succeeded soon afterwards by John, who is recorded as ‘of that Ilk’ in 1617. However, he may be the same George who was recorded several times until 1638 (if John was not actually Baron). George (17th C.) of that Ilk. He possibly succeeded his father John (or is the same as the previous George). He is listed as Laird in 1628 among the major landowners who met to elect M.P.s. for Roxburghshire. He signed the Confession of Faith in 1638. This document was also signed by Robert ‘fier of that Ilk’ (i.e. probably his son and heir), together with Andrew and Walter of Brieryhill (probably close relatives). He was probably the George who married Esther Scott, younger daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden (and widow of Elliot of Falnash). George (d.bef. 1681) of that Ilk. Probably son of Robert, he is recorded as witness to a Gledstains christening in 1672. The length of his tenure as Baron is uncertain. The land tax was paid by the ‘laird of Langlands’ in 1678 (for about £990), with the name not given, suggesting perhaps he was recently deceased and formal succession not yet established. His wife was Janet Douglas, whose will exists from 1681 (when she was ‘relict of George Langlands, of that Ilk’). Her ‘plenishing’ included ‘feather beds, bolsters and cods, some of which were stuffed with worsted, blankets, sheets and table linen, servitors, board cloths, towels, spindles of worsted, and straiken yarn, round stoupit beds, kists, barrels, tubs, koags, and bickers, one and a half dozen trenchers, pair of clatts and (hand) cairds, heckles, reels, dishes and ladles, baskets and creels, posset pig, pair of raxes and ane speit, broad pleats, two chandleis, salt fat, ane pot and flaggon, ane pynt stoup, crook, girdle and pot coffer’ [DMW]. George (d.1689) eldest son of John, minister of Wilton. His will exists, where he left a parcel of books and other goods, some money and bonds due to him. This is recorded at the commissariat of Peebles in 1690, where he is ‘Mr. George Langlands son to Mr. John Langlands late minister at Wilton’. It is unclear where he might have been a minister.
Langlands

himself (or if he was instead a schoolmaster perhaps). He is probably the ‘Mr Geo: Langlands’ who witnessed a baptism in Hassendean in 1687 for Adam Scott and Esther Langlands (who was his sister). In his will, he is stated to have left ‘ane little parcell off books’, as well as £40 Scots of ‘lyng money’ and £400 in cash. George (d.1752) of that Ilk, son of Robert and Mary Scott, and brother of Rev. John. He was the second last Laird. He may be the George who was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh (as a surgeon) in 1715 and is further listed in Edinburgh records of 1718 and 1721. He is recorded as Laird in a disposition of 1725 and was ‘preses’ of Wilton Kirk Session meetings in 1741 and 1751. He paid the window tax for Langlands in 1748. There are existing papers relating to the sharing of the patronage of Wilton Kirk with the Duke of Buccleuch. He feued part of his estate, including Howlands, in the mid-18th century. He is recorded having an illegitimate child called ‘Rocher’ with Margaret Scott in 1724; the witnesses to the baptism were William ‘Steward’ and James Simpson (perhaps his servants). He married Anna Couper, and their children included: Marion (b.1725); Robert (1727–1803), who succeeded as last Laird; Margaret (1729/30–1819) last of the local Langlands; William (b.1732); and Isobel (b.1734). James (d.aft. 1453) of that Ilk, son of John. He succeeded to the family lands and from then the family surname was ‘Langlands’. He is mentioned in charters from at least 1427, when he was witness to the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig; he is there recorded as ‘Jacobum de Langlandis’. He is probably also the James who was on an ‘inquest of retour’ in 1424 made in Hawick for lands in Hownam (although it is unclear if he was already Laird). In 1431 he granted the lands of Heap (which had been resigned by Robert of Hepe) to Walter Scott ‘Lord of Muirthoustoun’ at St. Mary’s Kirk. It thus appears likely that he was already Baron of Wilton at that time. In 1432 he was witness at the old manor of Cavers to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. He is recorded as ‘Jacobus de Langlandis’ in 1437 when a witness at the Jedburgh court to decide on the dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Janet Murray, widow of James Gedestoins, over the lands of East Mains of Hawick. In 1447 he was ‘Jacobo Langlandis de eodem’ when he witnessed the charter from Margaret Cusing (wife of Simon Routledge, Burgess of Hawick) to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was the father of the John to whom he resigned the half Barony of Wilton in 1451, reserving a free tenement for himself and after his death to his wife Mary (or ‘Mariote’). He also swapped the lands of Milsington with those of Heap with Walter Scott at Wilton Kirk in 1451. And in 1453 he had an ‘excambion’ with Walter Scott of Kirkurd for the freehold of the lands of Wester Heap. This was signed by his son and heir John, as well as Robert of Langlands who must have been a close relative. James of Langlands (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to Richard Rutherford being served heir to his grandfather in 1499. He is recorded as ‘James Langglens of that Ilk’. Probably the same man was ‘of Wilton’ in 1500 when listed as one of the valuators for Whithope. He was probably either the son or brother of Roger/Robert (who killed George Fairneylaw). He is also probably the ‘James Langlandis of Wiltoun’ listed among 24 Roxburghshire who had remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III, particularly on the field of battle at Stirling. James (d.c.1590) of that Ilk, probably son of John. He is recorded in a sasine of 1559 and in a bond between the Scotts and Kers in March 1564/5, where Walter Scott of Branxholme assumes the burden for ‘James Langlandis of that Ilk and his barnis’. So they were presumably related, perhaps through his wife or mother (and the suggestion is also that he had children by then). Also in that document he is listed (along with Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) as a special ‘umpire’ for the feud between Ker of Cessford and Ormiston of that Ilk. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He is mentioned numerous times in the Register of the Privy Seal. In 1569 he was one of the sureties for some Elliots, that they would enter into ward in St. Andrews. He was admitted as a messenger for Roxburgh by Sir David Lindsay, the Lyon King of Arms, in 1569 and mentioned in an inquest in Jedburgh the same year. He was entered before the Privy Council in 1571. He signed the Roxburgh band and ‘made faith’ to James IV and the Regent Morton in early 1572/3, with Andrew Ker of Faldonside as his surety; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He was also surety for William, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw at the same time. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573 (‘with my hand at the pen’). He was also in 1573 surety for the non-appearance of William Robson, charged with the murder of William Hall of ‘Wollie’, and had to pay 20 merks to his daughter ‘Malie’ on Robson’s non-appearance. He was recorded as being ‘de Wiltounhill’ in 1574, when he was superior of the lands of Borthaugh (held by the Scotts of Buccleuch). In 1576 he gave a pledge for George Elliot, ‘the Cleg’ and John Stoddart, his ‘cobilman’. Also in 1576 he was a surety along with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Langlands of that Ilk for tenants in Lairhope and Broadlee. Also in 1576 it is mentioned in a charter for Stewart of Minto that he held several the market rights of Minto at that time. Furthermore, in 1576 he had an obligation to relieve sureties before the Privy Council. Also in 1576 he was ordered to pay 20 merks to Malie Hall for satisfaction for the murder of her father, James Hall in Woollie by Will Robson of ‘Rochthewchmynye’. Along with 21 other Border lairds, he was summoned to appear at Stirling as caution for his kinsmen and retainers in 1578/9, but failed to appear. He was stated to have ‘enterit the said Johanne Stodart, his cobilman, to the said lord lieutenant and Justice’, but nevertheless was found liable for the other fines. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stichers regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he was on a long list of Scotts and others summoned to appear before the Privy Council to answer several charges made by Elliot of Braidlie and the Armstrongs. He was denounced a rebel in 1581 (among a large number of Border Lairds accused of not presenting men to answer rieving charges), but must have been reinstated since he was among Lairds invited to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 to help quiet troubles in Teviotdale and Liddesdale. In 1581 he gave sasine to his son and heir Robert of his half Barony of Wilton, retaining lifrent for himself and after his death the payment of 20 bolls of grain annually to his wife Marion Scott for ‘upholding of hir and hir bairnes’; the precept of sasine was made in Selkirk (for unspecified reasons), the witnesses including Walter Riddell of that Ilk, George Scott of Synton, William Scott in Huntly and Walter Veitch of North Synton. The sasine was also recorded in Selkirk, with witnesses Rev. William Auchmotvie, John (his son) and 2 servants of his son Robert. In 1588 he is recorded in a contract regarding teinds with his son John (Parson of Wilton) and Walter Scott of Harden. In 1589 he was cautioner for Edward Lorraine of Harwood. The last record of him is in 1590 and he is probably the Laird of Langlands listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590 (although probably prepared earlier). He married Marion Scott and was succeeded by his son Robert. Other sons included Rev. John and probably Andrew. James ‘Jamie’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant of lands of Kelso Abbey in 1567. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being acquitted of crimes in Jedburgh in 1611. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands. He could be the brother of George of that Ilk who was mentioned in 1610 when they petitioned to have their hornng and penalties reduced. James (d.c.1695) brother of Rev. John of Wilton. In 1695 his nephew James was served as his heir. He presumably died without issue. His existence may provide a clue to the identity of the father of Rev. John of Wilton. James (17th C.) son of John, minister of Wilton and younger brother of George, from whom he inherited in 1691. He could be the James listed as resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. In 1695 he was served heir to his uncle James. James (17th/18th C.) Baron of Wilton, who is said to have ridden a black stallion named Nimrod and would turn out in his gaudy finery for a ceremonial marking of the boundaries at the Roughheugh Mill (the axle of its water wheel being on the boundary), with him making a show of defending his property. This was described by Robert Wilson, but it is unclear which period this took place in; the name seems likely to be confused with another Baron. James (18th C.) married Janet Mack in Bedrule in 1737. It is unclear how he was related to the other local Langlands. Janet nee Douglas (d.c.1683) wife of George of that Ilk. She was a widow in her will, which includes a detailed list of her possessions, giving an idea of the contents of a late 17th century mansion house. John (d.c.1363) possibly the first family member to use the name ‘de Langlandis’, he was probably the successor to Thomas de Longueville (or Charteris), inheriting the Peeblesshire estate in 1340. He also had lands at ‘Milsallystoun’ (Milsington) and ‘Ochterhyud’ (Outerside), along with a mill there, which were granted to his widow ‘Mariote Cumyne’ (i.e. Marion Comyn) by David II in 1363. It is possible he was the John, son of Margaret, who had a charter for the Barony of Wilton after it was forfeited by William Maxwell during the reign of David II. John (15th C.) of that Ilk, son of James. In 1450 he was ‘Johannem de Langlandis’ on the ‘retour’ for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick by

Langlands

William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was granted the (eastern) half Barony of Wilton, along with Langlandschill (in Peeblesshire) in 1451 by James II, the lands having been resigned by his father. His mother Mary is also mentioned in this charter. This is the first definitive record of a line of Langlands Lairds that would stretch over 300 years. However, it seems clear that the family (or the closely related ‘de Charteris’ family) held the lands for several generations before. He probably moved the family seat from Peeblesshire to Wilton about this time. Also in 1451 he had a charter of ‘excambion’ with Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd (and Buccleuch), where he gave up Milington for Heap. In 1453 he witnessed a charter of ‘excambion’ with Walter Scott of Kirkurd involving the freeholding of Wester Heap; Robert of Langlands was also a witness, so probably a brother or uncle. He is recorded attesting that John of St. Michael inherited his father’s lands of Whitchesters in a document of 1455 notarised in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. In 1455 he is also recorded as ‘Lord of Heip’. He is probably the ‘Johannes Langlandis’ listed among the men who received a reward from the King for the capture of James Douglas of Balverny in 1463/4. And presumably the same ‘John Langlandis’ was on the panel in 1464/5 to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh by Archibald Douglas. It is unclear how he is related to other Langlands. John (d.c.1602) son of James of that Ilk. He is first recorded in 1575 as ‘Johne Langlandis, reidare at Wiltoun’ (i.e. Reader, meaning he assisted the minister, who served several parishes). He received a stipend of 20 merks and the Kirk lands left vacant by Thomas Weston. Afterwards he was appointed Rector and is recorded as Reader for the period 1574–85. During that time it appears that William Auchmowtie was minister for Wilton and several neighbouring parishes. The division of responsibilities between the 2 men is unclear, and it is also merely a guess that while Auchmowtie was a Protestant minister, Langlands had been trained as a Catholic Priest. Both he and Auchmowtie were witnesses in 1581 to the sasine where his father resigned his half Barony of Wilton to his brother Robert. In 1588 he is recorded as Parson in a contract (in which his father is mentioned as James of that Ilk), with Walter Scott of Harden involving payment of teinds. He was deposed from Wilton some time before 1590, possibly indicating that he had formerly been a Catholic. However, it is also possible that he was reinstated and served until his death, which appears to have been in 1602, when William Clerk became the new minister. It is possible that he was the minister who received the gift of about 80 acres of the Mains of Wilton, but other versions of the story (which seem more likely) say it was the 17th century minister of the same name. However, he was son of the Laird and certainly held property in his own right in Heiton and Easter Heap (and possibly elsewhere), which his son William inherited in 1612. His children included William (who was served as heir about 10 years after his death, suggesting perhaps there was an older brother or otherwise legal complications) and Bessie (who married Adam, brother of William Scott of Burnhead). John (d.bef. 1628) of that Ilk. His name occurs in a bond of 1617, and he must have succeeded George. If he was Baron, then he was succeeded by another George. Alternatively he may have been brother (or other close relative) of George, and not actually Baron himself. Rev. John (d.bef. 1692) minister of Wilton, he was brother of the Laird of Langlands (probably Robert, but possibly George). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1634 and became one of the Masters of Edinburgh High School in 1638. He was also one of the signatories of the Confessions of Faith in Hawick in 1638. He was presented to Wilton by Francis, Earl of Buccleuch (incorrectly given as Bothwell in one account) in 1641. He is reputedly the minister who received the extensive (80 acre) lands of Wilton Glebe (or Mains). It is said that his brother granted him the extra land of Wilton Mains to increase his income to help with his family of 10 (this account was told by the last local Langlands). He baptised Walter Scott, son of Gideon of Highchesters in 1644. There is a record of 1648 involving Gideon Scott and Francis, Earl of Buccleuch over valuation of teinds. In 1649 there is a record of complaint against the Earl of Buccleuch, craving a more stable stipend, which appears to have been resolved. He also preached occasionally at Borthwick Kirk, probably the last minister to do so; he certainly asked to be freed of his responsibilities in the Borthwick, or to be given a stipend out of it, in 1642. He is listed as proprietor of Wilton in a list of communicants of the area west of Hawick in 1650 (while the Baron, Robert, is listed at Dean Mill); from that document his wife may have been Agnes Douglas, although elsewhere she is named as Anna Douglas (and it is not clear which branch of the Douglas family she was from), and the other household residents (presumably servants) were John Scott, William Douglas, Adam ‘Roe’ (probably Rae), Janet Scott and Janet ‘Roe’. He is recorded in a sasine in 1664 having an annual rent of land at ‘Hayning’ (probably the Haining in Selkirk). In 1662 he was confined to his Parish for refusing to conform to Episcopacy (i.e. being a Covenanter; the younger ministers were removed from their parishes), but possibly did conform, appears to have been reinstated in 1667 and is still recorded as minister in 1669. He continued as minister, but was removed some time after refusing to take the Test. There is a letter of 1683 from the Archbishop of Glasgow to the Persbytery to stop favouring him since he ‘has not preached for some Sundays’, and asking advice about John Stewart, who succeeded him that year; this suggests that he was probably removed because of religious dispute. In 1669 his son James became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh, and in 1692 his son Walter followed suit, by which time he was deceased. His children are listed (presumably in order) in the will of his son George. His daughters were: Anna, who married Henry Haswell in Crailing; Esther, who married Adam Scott in Galalaw; Elizabeth, who married William McKay or Mackie in Dunbar; Margaret, who married William Elphinstoun in Hartshaugh; Marion, who married Walter Leathead, portioner in Lilliesleaf; Agnes, who married Robert Elliot of Rig (i.e. Caerlenrig); and Rebecca and Jennot, who both stayed in Hawick. His sons were: George, who died in 1689; the already mentioned James; Walter, who lived in Hawick; Robert, who died between 1665 and 1668; and probably John the minister of Hawick (although this is unconfirmed, it seems extremely likely). In 1695 his son James was served as heir to his brother James. It is possible his wife was the ‘Mrs Langlands’ who was taxed for 3 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694. Rev. John (1633–1707) minister of Hawick. Note that he is easily confused with the earlier minister of Wilton of the same name, who was probably his father. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1662, was licensed by the Bishop of Edinburgh in 1666 and was installed in Hawick in October 1667, replacing Presbyterian Alexander Kinnear. He is still recorded as minister in 1684 when the new ‘Steeple Loft’ was built. He was eventually deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not Praying for William and Mary (i.e. he refused to give up Episcopalianism after the Revolution). He was also accused of praying for the late King James. He was the last Episcopalian minister of Hawick Parish, before the Revolution. He is mentioned in an Edinburgh record as marrying ‘without proclamation’ William Murray, younger of Haddin to Margaret Gladstains (daughter of the late Gladstains of that Ilk) in 1693. After his removal he continued to minister in Hawick to a small congregation of Episcopalians (and presumably Jacobite supporters), in a private house at the top of the Kirk Wynd. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Robert Langlands (who was surely related and perhaps his son) renting 1/2 of the farm of Wiltonburn. He is mentioned in a disposition relating to the Alcorne family in 1695.

He is recorded in the Gledstains bible baptising 4 of the children of Walter Gledstains in the period 1672-81. He is also said to have moved to the north of England, where his family settled near Alnwick (but this seems more likely to have been the family of one of his brothers). He married Margaret Rutherford and their children were: Robert (b.1675); John (b.1678), who became a doctor; Margaret (b.1681), who presumably died young; Alison (b.1682) who may have married Francis Scott in 1713, and was recorded being in Jedburgh Parish at that time; and Margaret (b.1687). John (b.1678) son of Hawick minister John, he became a doctor. He is mentioned in a disposition of 1708 (in the National Archives) when he assigned lands to William Ainslie of Blackhill. It is possible he was the John in Woodhouselee served as joint heir (along with Robert) of Walter, Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1694 and whose son Walter was served as his heir in 1700. He may be the John who in 1718 petitioned the Bailies of Selkirk to be recognised as the heir of his uncle Walter. John (18th C.) recorded in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for Will Turnbull in Hawick. John Charles (1800–74) direct descendant of the Langlands of Wilton. A son of the Rev. John of Wilton lived and died in Newcastle, his son Ranald was baptised in 1715 and the family continued in Northumberland, with John marrying in 1764, then his son John being baptised in 1773, marrying in 1794 and dying in 1804, and his son being John Charles. He married in 1830 and had 2 sons and 6 daughters. He was born in Newcastle and became tenant of Old Berwick in 1823. He made genealogical notes about the Langlands family. The church there contains memorial panels to several family members. Margaret (1730–1819) daughter of George of that Ilk and sister of Robert, the last Laird of Langlands. She is said (in Wilson’s ‘Memories of Hawick’) to have given the origin of her family as Norman, and described the motto as ‘Bon Esperance’. She died in Hawick, at 26 High Street in reduced circumstances, some accounts saying that this was in 1814 or 15, but the later date is correct, since it is in the Hawick Parish records. She was the last person to be buried in the family aisle in old Wilton Kirk. Since this was below the loft inside the church itself, there was some opposition to this, but it is said that Dr. Charters stated that he would not allow her to be separated from her forefathers. Some of the seats had to be lifted to allow the grave to be dug, and the graveside was lit by candles because of the lack of natural light under the loft. She left £20 ‘to be distributed among the industrious of the parishes of Hawick and Wilton’. Mrs. ?? (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. She could be the wife of Rev. John or the wife of Robert of that Ilk. Peter (d.1549) Priest at Wilton Kirk. John Greenlaw replaced him after he died. He was presumably son of a former Laird of Langlands. It is probably the same Peter who in 1542 witnessed a procuratory where George Rutherford of Hundalee resigned his lands in favour of his son Nicholas Rutherford. Rachel see Rachel Scott. Richard (14th/15th C.) master of the hospital at St. Germaines. He witnessed a charter of Robert II in 1421. He was presumably related to the Langlands of that Ilk. Robert (15th C.) witness to the 1451 transfer of Heap for Milsington, between John Langlands of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably the brother of the Laird or younger brother to the heir, James. He also witnessed the related sasine at Milsington in 1453, where he is ‘Roberto de Langlandis’. Robert (15th/16th C.) of that Ilk, said to have been the Baron of Wilton who killed George Fairneylaw. However, it seems more likely that this was Roger, or that the names were used interchangeably. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness in 1512 to the charter where Roger of that Ilk granted his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was surely related to the Laird, probably brother or son. Robert (d.bef. 1610) of that Ilk, son of James. In 1580/1 his father resigned his hald Barony of Wilton in his favour, reserving a liferent for himself, and with a provision to provide for his mother (Marion Scott) and her children. He is recorded as witness to a bond of March 1594/5 (along with William Scott of Allanhaugh and Allan Deans in Hawick) made by James Gledstains, pledging that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. He was still head of the family in a record of 1599, but was succeeded by George some time before 1610. George’s brothers were Robert and James, and so they were probably all his sons. Similarly, George’s uncle was Adam, so this was probably his brother. His son George was served as his heir in 1611. Robert (17th C.) named by the Hawick Bailie on a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ fit for sending to the army in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars' and dismissed. Robert (17th C.) of that Ilk. He appears to have succeeded George (probably his father) around 1640. In 1638 he signed the Confession of Faith and is recorded there as ‘fier of yt. ilke’. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and was also on the Committee of War for the county in 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1648. He was the second largest landowner in Hawick (after the Earl of Buccleuch) in a 1643 valuation, with a value of £953 16s 8d. He was probably also the Robert whose land in Hawick was valued at £3 in 1643. He is also recorded as a heritor of Wilton in 1649. Probably the same Robert was proprietor of Dean Mill in a list of communicants of 1650, and from that document his wife may have been Margaret ‘Per’ and their (adult) children George, Adam and Margaret. In any case, he was probably succeeded by George. In 1659 another son Robert is recorded becoming a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was fined £1,800 (about 2 full years rental as valued on his estates) in 1662 for refusing to give up episcopacy. He was probably the brother of John, minister of Wilton (who was similarly fined). He must have been the Robert of that Ilk recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when he paid tax on £992, with part ‘pertaining to Margaret Donalsone’, who may have been his wife. Robert (17th C.) probably related to the Wilton family, although the connection is unclear. He was a tutor of a branch of the house of Cardross, being governor of the brothers of the Earl in the 1670s. In 1675 he was seized by guards under Sir Mungo Murray, but later released. He took refuge in Holland, returned after the Revolution and became a minister. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhaugh. In the 1686 ratification of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is stated that he was sometimes occupier of Whames. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could be the Robert, married to Isobel Scott, whose daughter Isobel was born in Hawick in 1680. The witnesses to that baptism were Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and George Scott of Boonraw (who were probably related to his wife). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Scott in 1688. Robert (17th C.) rented 1/2 of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1694 and 1696. Rev. John acted as his cautioner; this makes it clear that he was not the same man as Robert of that Ilk, but it also suggests that he was probably related to the minister. It seems possible that he may be the Robert, son of Rev. John, born in 1675. His will is recorded in 1696, suggesting that this is when he died. Robert (d.bef. 1725) of that Ilk, probably the son of George and Janet Douglas. He was most likely the Laird who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and again in 1690. He was also probably the Laird of Langlands in 1694 when his interests in Wilton Parish are recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls; he paid tax for 6 hearths at his house. In 1687 he was granted a sasine for 2 tenements in Hawick, and is also recorded in another Hawick sasine in 1691. He also owned the piece of the Sandbed on which the Grammar School would be built, which he bought in 1701 and sold to Adam Elliot of Arkleton in 1713. In 1701 he obtained a lease of Wester Alemoor from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for gardener Robert Roger in Hawick in 1701. In 1704 he was again listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Mary Scott and a sasine in her favour, recorded in 1690, may have been part of the marriage contract; it is unclear from which branch of the Scotts his wife came. He was also recorded as a Commissioner of Supply in 1704. His son George succeeded before 1725, when his widow was still alive. His eldest daughter was Isabella, who married Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk and died in 1740. Dr. Robert (1727–1803) of that Ilk. Son of George, he was the last Laird of Langlands, being served heir of the half Barony of Wilton in 1758 (with Walter Irwin acting as factor in the interim). Born in Hawick, he studied medicine in Edinburgh and practised there as a surgeon, perhaps also serving with the family of the Duke of Argyll. He played an active part in the work of Wilton Parish in the period 1759–73, his name appearing regularly in the minute books. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. As a member of the Roads Trustees Committee, he was the principal proponent for the building of the New Road for many years before it was finally approved by the Roads Trustees. His first proposal was in around 1765, and his only supporters then were Elliott of Stobs and Scott of S Cathyson. He was also a local Justice of the Peace in the 1760s. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He appears to have sold off the patronage of Wilton Kirk to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. The estate was already much reduced when he inherited it, but it further diminished under his Lairdship. The estate was handed over to trustees (Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs and writers Thomas Tod and Cornelius Elliot) in the 1770s, and the final part was sold off in 1783. However, he kept the superiority of Langlands and on that basis was kept on the voters roll for Roxburghshire in 1780. He returned to Edinburgh to practise as a doctor in the mid-1770s. He is recorded in 1780 obtaining ‘liferent’ of the lands of Broomhall and part of Mertoun from Walter Scott of Harden, with sasine following in 1792. In 1783 he donated ‘a chicken, preserved in spirits, of the skull’ to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He remained unmarried and died in Edinburgh in April 1803, being buried in Old Calton cemetery, in the burial place of the Boys of Maxpoffle. Roger (15th/16th C.) of that Ilk, Baron of Wilton. Based on dates he is probably a grandson of John of Langlands who is last recorded in 1455. He is said to have beheaded the messenger of Melrose Abbey, George Fairneylaw, around 1493 or 1494, in a dispute over tithes payable to the Abbey (although Fairneylaw was actually a cleric of the Diocese of Glasgow, and his own name is often incorrectly given as ‘Robert’). The tradition also states that the Heap Cross marked the spot of the murder, although this is long gone (and seems likely to have existed long before). He is supposed to have immediately sought the King’s pardon, saying that he had knocked the bonnet off a dignitary of the church, and omitting to say that his head had been in it! The only historical record (from the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, described in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’) is of Sir Robert Ker and John Rutherford of Edgerston being sureties for his appearance to answer to the slaughter of ‘Sir George Farnylaw, chaplain’, and of him being denounced a rebel and being fined (then having all his goods forfeited to the King) in February 1494/5 for failure to appear. He appears to have had a sasine for Wilton in 1503. He was reconciled at least by 1506, when he was witness at an inquest held in Jedburgh. He was also witness to a ‘retour’ of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1508 and another of Adam Hepburne, Earl of Bothwell that same year. In 1512 there is a charter of transfer of his lands at Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill (the name connection with the lands perhaps suggesting he was perhaps a relative) for 1 penny ‘brench farm’ payable at Pentecost in Wilton Kirk. Robert was a witness, and so presumably a relative. There are no records of him after this (and John is mentioned in 1522), so perhaps he did not survive Flodden – ‘Oh, Langlands ye’re a graceless man An’ a graceless man are ye; If ye wunna pay the kirk its due The kirk’s curse ye maun dree’ [FL]. Roger (16th C.) recorded as ‘of Wiltonhall’ in 1531/2 in a charter of the lands of Borthaugh. This may indicate that there was another generation in the early 16th century, and he may have succeeded from John and been succeeded by another John. Roger (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Hawick in 1610. George of that Ilk acted as cautioner for him (and several other Langlands and Scotts) that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhaugh) and his associates. He was surely a relative of George of that Ilk (but probably not brother or uncle, since that would have been stated). Thomas (14th/15th C.) Abbot of Newbattle in 1422. He is recorded as ‘de Langlandis’ and so presumably directly related to the main family branch. Walter of Brieryhill (16th C.) signatory of the local Confession of Faith in 1638. He signed along with George of that Ilk, Robert (George’s son and heir) and Andrew, who were all surely close relatives. Walter (d.c.1694) Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1698 he is described as ‘chamberlain to Sir William Scot of harden elder and younger’ in a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk regarding annual rent. In 1694 his brothers Robert and John were served as his joint heirs. Robert was described as his immediately younger brother, and John was ‘in Woodhouseie’. His will is recorded in Lauder in 1698, where he is described as Chamberlain to Sir Walter Scott of Harden in the Parish of Merton. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands; however, given the earlier connections of the Langlands of Wilton to the Scotts of Harden, it is probable he was from the local family. Perhaps he was the eldest (and otherwise unrecorded) son of Rev. John of Hawick, who also had sons Robert and John. He may be the Walter whose nephew petitioned the Bailies of Selkirk in 1718 to be recognised as his heir. William (15th C.) served as surety in 1493, along with the Laird of Bedrule, for John Sinclair in Minto, as well as for John Aitkin and Thomas Bell. It seems likely that he was either Laird of Langlands, or closely related. William (16th/17th C.) son of John, Rector of Wilton. In 1612 he inherited land at ‘Heytoun’ (possibly Heiton) and an annual grant of grain from ‘Eister Heap’. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their son William was baptised in 1719, with the Langlands (thu-lawng-lindz) n. important family in Wilton, from perhaps as early as 1290, and certainly 1451, until the family sold off the Langlands estate in 1783, with the last local family member dying in Hawick in 1819. Langlands Hill in Peeblesshire may have been the original family seat. The family may have once been ‘Longueville’, while the ‘de Charteris’ family may also have been one and the same; however, these connections have been the subject of much debate. Local members were buried in the eastern end of old Wilton Church, in an aisle under the gallery. A branch of the local family moved to the Newcastle area and there are memorial panels to some of them in Old Berwick church. The seal of the local family (showing a lion rampant, without motto) is in the Museum. The family shield is silver with a red chevron and 3 mullets (stars), while the crest shows an anchor standing in the sea and the motto is ‘Spero’ (‘I hope’) or ‘Bon Esperance’. The family seal was donated to the Museum in 1856 and an armorial panel in Wilton Kirk was apparently painted over in the middle of the 19th century – ‘They saw bold Langlands proudly ride in armour burnished bright, With stately Wallace by his side, Fair freedom’s fearless knight’ [JI], ‘And Langlands ne’er meets the marchmen now, To see that his flag is planted fair, And peace prevails where once was feud, And Langlands o’ Langlands is nae mair’ [BCM1880].

Langlands Bank (lawng-lindz-bawngk) n. long row of working-class housing, built between 1850 and 1855, on a parallel street to the south of Langlands Road, and named after the Langlands family who once owned the area. A series of steps led down to the lower level flats. The block can be seen in an 1865 photograph, with little other housing around. The houses were demolished in 1971 and the site grassed over, with the rubble being used to raise the level of the Big Haugh.

Langlands Boathouse (lawng-lindz-bó’-hoos) n. Langlands Boathouse, once in the grounds of what is now Deanfield, and the home of the Coble Pool ferryman.

Langlands Brig (lawng-lindz-brig) n. Langlands Bridge, a footbridge across the Teviot in Wilton Lodge Park, off Buccleuch Road at the western end of the Playing Fields. It was erected in 1894 and marks the former boundary of the Burgh (named after the Langlands family).

Langlands Road

Langlands Cauld (lawng-lindz-kawld) n. another name for the Coble Cauld (mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common).

the Langlands Club (thu-lawng-lindz-klb) n. social club which met in a back room of the Museum in the early 20th century.

Langlands Court (lawng-lindz-kör) n. sheltered housing complex built in 1984 near the previous Langlands Bank, and on the site of the former St. Margaret’s Church.

Langlands Dean (lawng-lindz-deen) n. former name for Wilton Dean. It was in use in baptismal records from at least 1797, but had died out by the 1860s.

Langlands Mill (lawng-lindz-mill) n. another name for Ladylaw Mill (sometimes called ‘Langlands and Ladylaw Mills’ or ‘Langlands Spinning Mill’), long the property of the Wilson family, and later the main factory of Wilson & Glenny’s. For a time the Langlands Mill part was separate, also sometimes known as the Roughheugh Waulk Mill. A new factory was built behind Dangerfield Mill, probably been 1810 and 1818 when the Wilson and Watson partnership ended; this is marked ‘Langlands Spinning Mill’ on Wood’s 1824 map. It was originally constructed for Wilson to supply yarn for his expanding stocking frame business. The mill was driven by water in the Wilton Dam. In 1831 it contained the first steam engine built in Hawick (by Melrose’s). A separate mill was built perhaps 1851 on a site adjacent to the Roughheugh Waulk Mill, and known at that time as ‘Ladylaw’, distinct from Roughheugh.

Langlands Park (lawng-lindz-pawrk) n. villa built possibly for James Oliver. It was designed in Scottish baronial style by Glasgow-based architect John Thomas Rochead in 1863. The house was renovated for Peter Scott in 1914, and so may have changed its name.

Langlands Place (lawng-lindz-plis) n. street that was incorporated into Wilton Crescent in 1865 (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Langlands Raik (lawng-lindz-rák) n. area mentioned in an old description of the Common at Myreslawgreen, meaning an extent of land used for grazing sheep or cattle – ‘...the highway from West Port to Langlands Raik on the east’ (i.e. the ‘Common Vennel’, so that ‘Langlands Raik’ must have been around the Playing Fields or Coble; this could be ‘Reach’, i.e. a stretch of the Teviot).

Langlands Road (lawng-lindz-röd) n. street stretching from the top of Roadhead to Wilton Path. It was once known as ‘the kirk road from Wilton to Langlands’, and was named around
Langlee

1868. The street was once very narrow, but widened about 10 feet in 1904, with some demolition of houses at the Roadhead end. The street was extended when Langlands Bank was demolished in 1971.

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. house above Langlands Road, built in 1907 to designs by J.P. Alison. It may have originally been built for manufacturer T.A. Laing and was later the home of George Scott, son of the founder of Pesco's.

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. farm on the west side of the Jed Water, opposite Ferniehirst Castle. It was listed as ‘Langle’ in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at 25 shillings. It is probably the lands of ‘Langley’ listed among those held by the French family in 1588 (and formerly part of the holdings of Jedburgh Abbey). It was owned by the Bruce family from the early 1800s, then the Dalrymples. James Fair owned the lands in 1788 and through the early 19th century, passing them to his nephew James Elliot Shortreed-Fair. It was bought by Charles Scott of Howcleuch (son of Walter of Wualcope) in the late 19th century. The house built about the 1790s was replaced with a design by David Bryce in the 1860s. There is planted parkland from an earlier period (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Langly’).

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. area between Galashiels and Melrose, on the north of where the Gala Water meets the Ettrick. It was formerly an estate with mansion house. It is now a rather depressing suburb of Galashiels.

Langley Cleuch (lawng-lee-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, that rises near Blinkbonnt and runs through Langycleuch Wood to become part of the Tweed Burn.

Langmoss Knowe (lawng-mos-now) n. small hill on the northern side of Drinkstone Hill, containing the remains of some ancient enclosures.

lang-nebbit (lawng-ne-bee’, -bi’) adj., arch. long-nosed – ‘Ye lang-nebbit pryin race, Who kittle words an’ letters trace’ [JR], astute, learned – ‘Lang-nebbit words he has in store, His brains were ne’er surpassed by ony; Kirk session law, he bang’d it a’, Did Cuillie Jock o’ auld Blinkbonny’ [DA].

Langnewton (lawng-new’in) n. Longnewton, hamlet about 3 miles south of Newton St. Boswells. This was also a small, ancient parish, which was absorbed into Ancrum at the end of the 17th century. Hence it was once the western part of the later Parish of Ancrum. The church was described as a benefice of 8 merks in 1220; there is now no sign of it. The Rectory belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. John of ‘Longa Newton’ swore paid homage to Edward I in 1296. The barony was granted to Robert, Stewart of Scotland by Robert the Bruce around the 1320s, and by the late 14th century the barony was held by a branch of the Douglases. There were Rutherfords there in the 15th century. Patrick and Arthur Crawford were at the mill there in 1493. Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, was infected in lands there in 1499/1500 and the lands were confirmed to Adam, Earl of Bothwell in 1511. There was a tower house here in the 16th century, which in 1513 was given to the custody of Adam, Master of the Anchorite Order, for protection, and in 1589 it was taken by Andrew Ker of Newhall, who was then denounced as a rebel. The Barony was held by Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch when he inherited his father’s lands and rights in 1634. The whole Parish was valued at about £2500 in 1643 and 1663 and was held by the Earl of Lothian. It was among baronies and lands inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Patrick Scott, fiar of Ancrum, paid the land tax on the whole parish there in 1678, when it was valued at aabout £2200. There was formerly a mill here, on the right bank of the Teviot, as well as a school. The area to the north of the village was formerly known as Longnewton Common – ‘The Craig for strength, Woodhead for length, Palacehill for beauty, Sandystones the most confused place In all Longnewton barony’ [T] (the name first appears as ‘Longa Neutum’ in 1220, and is thereafter often ‘Langnewton’; ‘Langneutoune’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Longnewtoun’, or similar; it is ‘Lang new’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas; the origin is simply Old English for ‘long new town’, which is descriptive of the village.
Langraw

Langowan (lang-o-waw’-ur) n. former farmstead in upper Teviotdale. In the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed between Hislopi and Blackcleugh, ‘estimat to 20 lb., 3 lb. in teynd’ with ‘no corne’. It is unclear precisely where it was located.

Lang Penman (lang-pen-min) n. nickname for a minor riever, captured by the Laird of Buccleuch in 1530. He was also recorded in 1535 as ‘servant of one called Dikkis Wille’ (possibly William Armstrong, son of Richard) among a list of men denounced as rebels for a raid on the farm at Craik. His surname was probably Penman and he was presumably tall.

Langraw (lang-raw) n. farm just south of Bonchester Bridge. The land there was apparently once owned by monks from Jedburgh Abbey, as part of the Barony of Abbotrule. David ‘Schewill’ (or Sheil) was tenant there in 1516 and another David recorded there in 1567. A tower there was burned by the English in 1545. In 1569 it was acquired (along with several other lands) by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and was still listed as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Archie Turnbull ‘of Langraw’ was recorded in 1579/80. Robert Elliot ‘in Langraw’ is recorded in 1610, a Shiel was tenant in 1626 and George Shiel in 1688. The lands were valued at £104 in 1643 and 1663, with Lyle Shiel in 1643 and George Shiel in 1663 owning an additional £52 there. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whiteside) in 1670. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, William Turnbull ‘of Langraw’ was taxed for having 2 hearths, and James Shiel, ‘portioener’ there, was also taxed for 2 hearths. Alexander Turnbull was tenant there in 1738. Walter Barrie and Thomas Hope are recorded as tenants in 1797. It was owned by the Turnbulls through the 17th and 18th centuries, until sold off by the heir of the last Laird in 1801. It was purchased by William Oliver and held by that family through most of the 19th century. William Oliver was owner in 1811, when it was valued at £104. By about 1874 it was partly owned by George Tancred of Weens, the other part by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. From 1882 it was tenanted jointly by William Bell junior and senior. A collection of partly burned bones was discovered here in the 19th century, in a circular area about 18 feet in diameter, reported in the Statistical Account in 1836; this could be the same as the tumulus that is reported to have existed there in 1926. A socketed bronze axe found there was donated to the National Museum of Antiquities in 1833. A stone axe-head, whores and an arrow-head were found there and in the collection of Walter Deans (it is ‘Langrau’ in 1516; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langraw (lang-raw) n. Longrow, farm in the southern part of Castleton Parish. It is about the southernmost part of Roxburghshire. Just north of the farm are old quarries, in one of which there are exposed parts of a cist, and in another is a grass-grown mound that was a lime kiln. There was formerly a lime kiln to the north-west, on the banks of the Muir Burn. Henry Forester was there in the period 1788–91. John Scott was farmer there in 1851 (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langraw Scaur (lang-raw-skawr) n. former name for cottages near Langraw (by Bonchester Bridge), presumably named for a ‘scaur’ there. It was also known as ‘Scaur Nook’. William Oliver, hind at Langraw, lived there in the mid-19th century.

Lang Sandy (lawng-sawn-dee) n. nickname for Alexander Scott.

Langshaw (lawng-shaw) n. ruined 16th century L-plan tower a few miles north of Galashiels, stronghold of the Borthwicks. It is very close to Colmslie and Hillslap towers. It was in the hands of Lord Home in the latter part of the 15th century and was once a seat of the Murrays. Part of it was rented from Melrose Abbey by the Pringles of Galashiels according to a document of 1529 (the name is probably simply Old English for ‘the long wood’ and is first recorded in 1586; it was spelled ‘Langschaw’ and variants and was later ‘Lainshaw’).

Langshawburn (lawng-shaw-burn) n. remote farmstead over into Dumfriesshire, just to the west of Craik Cross Hill. It was once split into Upper and Nether Langshawburn. Cowans and Murrays lived there in 1841 (it is marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch).

Langside (lawng-sid) n. villa at 39 Weensland Road. It was built for manufacturer Adam Darling in the latter part of the 19th century.
Langside

James Burnet was there in the 1930s (also written ‘Langsyde’).

Langside (lawng-sùd) n. former name for the lands at Langsidebrae. It formed part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs in 1678 and still recorded that way in 1811 and in about 1874. William Pott was living there in 1702, Walter Bowie in 1719, William Scott in 1757 and William Nichol in 1769 (it is ‘Langsyde’ in 1573, 1692 and 1698 and ‘Langside’ in 1678).

Langside (lawng-sùd) n. farm near Bowden. A story is told of the Covenanter Alexander Peden working there in disguise and then being recognised by locals at a field preaching on the following Sunday. There were Elliots of Langside in the 17th century (easily confused with Lansiobrae near Shankend).

Langsidebrae (lawng-sùd-brà) n. farmstead just to the west of the Langside Burn above Shankend in the upper Slitrig valley. This is probably the ‘Langside’ listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. The lands here are referred to as just ‘Langside’ in a 1511 charter of Douglas of Cavers. In 1573 Douglas of Cavers had a decree to remove Robert Elliot of Redheugh from these lands, but Elliot argued that ‘his fader and guid sire wes in possessioun of the saidis landis thir mony yeris bi-gane’. It is probably the farm of that name, possessed by William, younger of Cavers in about 1614 when some livestock were stolen. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when that was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was ‘Langsyde’ owned by the Elliots of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. inherited by Sir William Elliott in 1692. John Elliot was tenant in ‘Langside’ in 1694. Walter and James Armstrong were farmers there in 1797, with William Hobkirk as shepherd. Thomas Cairns was there in 1868. John Rae was shepherd here in the mid-19th century.

Langside Burn (lawng-sùd-burn) n. stream joining the Slitrig at Shankend and fed by smaller streams that rise on the slopes of the Maidens and Greatmoor, including Fore Burn, Mid Burn, Back Burn and Pap Sike. In its upper part is the waterfall of Hawkhass Linn, with an adjacent earthwork. A little further down, near where it crosses the line of the Catrail are the remains of a farmstead, being a D-shaped enclosure about 55 m across, with signs of 2 sets of rectangular foundations, one inside and one outside. The stream runs through Langside Burn Wood, near where the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows some buildings. The steadings of Langsidebrae is to the west. There is a farm of the same name in Bowden Parish and several others across Scotland.

Langside Burn (lawng-sùd-burn) n. former name for a stream near Whithope, perhaps Whames Sike. It is listed as ‘langsideburn’ in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands between Whithope and Whames.

Langslack Sike (lawng-slak-sik) n. Langslack Sike, stream that flows roughly north-east to join the Jed Water, to the east of Southdean Mill. The area is rich in archaeological remains. Hyndhaughhead Tower lay on its northern banks, and Slack’s Tower a little to the south. There was another tower house just 150 m east of Hyndhaughhead, on the south side of the stream. The foundations are still visible, about 6.6 m by 3.8 m, surrounded by banks, and with 2 larger farmstead buildings adjacent. There are also signs of rig lines, enclosures and other banks from the former farm. It is also possible that there are remains of a homestead here, buried in peat. This may correspond to ‘Watersyde’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map.

Lang Sike (lawng-sik) n. small stream joining the Leap Burn just to the west of Robert’s Linn bridge. The Catrail crosses just to the south and there are the remains of a settlement there, being about 110 m in diameter and enclosing 3 platforms. The area is now covered with forest.

langsome (lawng-sum) adj., arch. slow, tedious, weary, lengthy – ‘But I forget the langsomes years that o’er our head ha’ e fled, I dinna see the burning tears Thae een o’ blue ha’e shed’ [JT].

the Lang Stand Oot (thu-lawng-stand-oo’) n. local industrial dispute of 1822–23, lasting 14 months. It was prompted by the Hawick hosiery employers trying to reduce wages so that they could price their goods more competitively. This was a combined effort of all the town’s manufacturers, except William Beck. Plays and other entertainments were put on in the Town Hall and elsewhere to raise money for the strikers. Strike leaders were imprisoned in Jethart Jail, but were freed without trial. Eventually the employers conceded.

lang syne (lawng-sín) adj., arch., poet. of long ago, old-time, ancient – ‘Lang syne, whan decent gude grey claiith, Did hap the laird an’ tenant baith’ [JR], ‘A’ ye wha doat on langsye things, Wha heap auld armour up in bings . . .' [JoHa], ‘Jingo ring was mair i’ ma line i’ th’ lang-syne days . . . ’ [HEx1919], adv., arch., poet. long ago,
Lang Synton

(lawng-sin-tin) n. possible former name for lands, perhaps near Synton. In 1679 John Shortreed in ‘Longsintoune’ had a discharge for payment with the Burgh of Selkirk and he was in ‘Langseintein’ in 1681.

Lang Tae (lawng-tä) n. hill in Craik Forest, near the head of Wolfecleuch Burn. It reaches a height of 438 m.

Langtae Hill (lawng-tä-hil) n. hill just to the west of Cauldcleugh. It reaches a height of 554 m (1,786 feet) and is the source of the Skelfhill Burn.

Lang Tam Dyce (lawng-tawm-dis) n. nickname for Rev. Thomas Dyce.

Lang-tholance (lawng-thó-lins) adj., poet. long-suffering – ‘...fu’ o’ tendir pitie, an’ gracious, lang-tholance, an’ waynesum in mercie an’ trouth’ [HSD].

Langton (lawng-tin) n. William (b.1814/5) from England, he worked as a stock frame-smith in Hawick. In 1841 he was at about 55 High Street, but by 1851 had moved to O’Connell Street. His brothers John and James were living with him by then. The family moved to 15 Backdamgate, then back to O’Connell Street by 1871. In 1837 in Hawick he married Mehala Dow, from London. Their children included: William (b.1837), also a framesmith; Rebecca (b.1840); Mehala (or Matilda, b.1842); Mary (b.1847); John (b.1854); Catherine (b.1851); John (b.1854); Eliza (b.1856); and Ann (b.1861).

Langtonheight (lawng-tin-hi) n. farmstead in Ashkirk Parish, just to the east of Synton Parkhead. It is probably the ‘Langtoone’ where Thomas Hunter was tenant in 1697 and William Hislop was servant in 1698. Janet Robson was a widow living there in 1709 and Walter Veitch was tailor there in at least 1715–19. In 1716 Walter Dunlop was tenant there, Michael Anderson was herd and Thomas Scott was cottar. Francis Cumming was cottar in 1717 and John Dunlop was tenant in 1724. This is recorded as ‘Longtown’ where Michael Anderson and Walter Veitch were located in 1719. Walter Thomson was farmer there in 1797, with 4 work horses on the farm. Walter Scott was shepherd there in 1851 (it is ‘Longtoonheight’ in 1797; ‘Longtown’ is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Langtoon (lawng-town) n. Longtown, town on the A7 towards Carlisle, about 3 miles south of the Border. It has a handsome bridge, is near to the site of the Battle of Solway Moss (1542), and was a former station on the Waverley Line. Population about 3,000 – ‘...the winner was Dick Wricht thre Langtoon whae got echt pound iz heis reward’ [BW1974].

Langtoon see Lanton

Langview (lawng-vew) n. Longview, a Victorian villa-style house behind the ‘Auld Man’s Sate’.

lang-wundit (lawng-wun-dee) adj. long-winded – ‘Ilk ane believes the other ane A great lang-wundit blether, An’ like the man that couldna’ speak On onything but leather’ [FL], ‘That langwundit title remains iz the offishial yin altho it’s seldom spoken at length’ [BW] (also written ‘langwundett’, etc.).

Lanso (lawn-so) n. short form for ‘John Laing & Sons Ltd.’, but not nearly as commonly used as ‘Peso’.

Lant (lawn) n. former lands in the Barony of Hawick, probably the same as Harwudhill. The ratification of the Barony to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686 lists ‘the lands of Harwoodhill and Emmetsheels, somtymes called Lant and Emmetsheells’.

the Lantern Show (thu-lan-turn-shō) n. former name for a slide-show, particularly those associated with the Brethren Hall in Old Manse Lane in the early part of the 20th century.

Lanton (lawn-in, lawn-tin) n. village about 8 miles north-east of Hawick, half a mile off the A698. It contains several 18th century buildings and also a 16th century peel tower incorporated into Lanton House. There is also a garden having a plaque inscribed with Wullie Landles’ poem ‘Lanton’. The village used to be home of the Crownor (i.e. coroner) of Roxburgh and was also known as Cranstoun. Lands here were part of the original grant to Jedburgh Abbey in the early 12th century. Later the lands were split among several different owners, with a total value of more than £1700. Janet Turnbull had sasine for the lands in 1502, and Margaret and Elizabeth Turnbull in 1506. The area was burned by Dacre’s men, led by Sir Roger Fenwick in late 1513, and by Hertford’s men in 1545. A ‘6 pound land of Langtoune’ was owned by the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch from at least 1502; they were valued at £6 in 1574, when still held by the Scots of Buccleuch. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634 and 1653, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The Mathers of Lanton were a prominent family in the Jedburgh area in the 17th century. A large part of the land passed to the Douglases sometime in the 17th century (with 2 acres there being included among possessions of the Douglases of Cavers in 1687 and 1698) and was sold to the Fergusons in 1694, then passed to the Youngs and the Browns. Rev. George Dickson held part of the lands from 1770, and they were sold by his trustees to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot in 1796. In the 1788 county valuation draft lands there were owned by George Black of Menslaws, the Duke of Buccleuch, George Dickson’s trustees, William Douglas of Timpendean, Walter Hunter of Polmood, Andrew Mather, John Mather’s heirs, Thomas Ogilvie of Cheysters, James Porteous, Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth, Robert Scott, William Turnbull and Thomas Waugh of Hawkburn. Rutherford of Knowesouth, Robert Scott, William Turnbull and Thomas Waugh of Hawkburn.

Lanton Mains (lawn’-in-mänz) n. farm just past Knowesouth on the A698. In 1870 a Bronze Age cist was discovered there, containing skeletal remains, a beaker and flint flakes.

Lanton Place (lawn’-in-plis) n. part of Stirches, off Guthrie Drive, built in 1978 and named after the village of Lanton.

Lanton Lady Lands (lawn’-in-lä-dee-lawndz) n. lands near Lanton that were once owned by the Douglases of Cavers and valued at £10. The lands were incorporated into Jedburgh Parish before 1788. They are described as ‘formerly in Cavers Parish’ in the 1788 draft valuation, when they belonged to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. The name suggests that the lands were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers once held the patronage (along with Hassendean Lady Lands).

Lanton (lawn-tin, lawng-toon) n. William (15th C.) member of the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. He is recorded as being of ‘Langthoun’.

Lanton Cauld (lawn’-in-kawld) n. weir in the Teviot near Lanton Mill.

Lanton Hill (lawn’-in-hil) n. hill south of Lanton village and west of Jedburgh, containing a farm of the same name. There are 2 forts on its northern side. There is also a linear feature stretching from here to the south, towards the Dunion.

Lanton Lady Lands (lawn’-in-lä-dee-lawndz) n. lands near Lanton that were once owned by the Douglases of Cavers and valued at £10. The lands were incorporated into Jedburgh Parish before 1788. They are described as ‘formerly in Cavers Parish’ in the 1788 draft valuation, when they belonged to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. Larristofts was on ov a laarrie comin birrlin alang . . . ’ [ECS] (also written ‘laarie’).

Larristofts (law-ris-tofts) n. lands listed in 1511 among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands continued to be listed in 1572 when James Douglas inherited the Barony of Hawick. In 1615 it is transcribed ‘Lairis, Toftis, Kirkwood’, which is probably ‘Larristofts and Kirkwood’. It seems likely that this is related to the lands of Lairis near Teviothead, and unrelated to Larriston, although of course there may be other possibilities (it is ‘Laristofts’ in 1511 and ‘ Lairis Tofts’ and ‘Lairris Toftis’ in 1572).

Larriston (law-ris-tin) n. farm on the Liddel Water, south of Saughtree. The Larriston Burn, draining from Larriston Fellis, joins the Liddel just below here. A former tower there was an important seat of the Elliots from the early 16th century. It is suggested that the site of the tower was on the Larriston Burn near Upper Larriston, some distance from the main house today. However, there may have been a separate tower-house near the modern house. Jeffrey says that when the foundation were dug up in about 1800 a large oven and an 18 pound cannon-ball were found. It may be the ‘Lanorowstanys’ listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. Two separate farms there were formerly called Over and Nether Larriston; these were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh in the late 1540s and which was attacked by the English in 1544. This was probably the site of the tower built by Martin Elliot of Braidlie in the 1570s and which was attacked by the English in 1584 (referred to in another English account as ‘Martins tower’). Probably a new tower was built by Robert Elliot of Redheugh in the late 1580s, since an English letter of 1596 describes that he ‘within these 12 years, has erected another called laristone’. The last Robert of Redheugh mostly resided there in the early 17th century. He had a daughter Margaret, who married James Eliott, son of ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Garters’, and their son Gilbert became the next Elliot of Larriston. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls the whole estate was valued at £1934, with Larriston itself valued at £834. Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt and the lands of Over and Nether Larriston were sold to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688. Tax was paid for 4 hearths at the house in 1694, and there was a shepherd and another house with a kiln recorded. Robert Elliot was able to buy back the lands in 1695, re-instating the dower rights from the rents to his grandmother (Margaret of Redheugh). Bonnie Prince Charlie is said to have spent the night here on his march south, and for a long time the bed he slept in was pointed out. When the farms of the Scotts of Buccleuch were surveyed in 1718 there were 3 small pieces of land belonging to the farm in loops of the Liddel Water adjacent to Riccarton farm. The Elliots of Larriston finally lost the lands through debt, selling Over and Nether Larriston and Larriston Rig to John Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1719 (for £1,808 6 shillings sterling). However, they were back in Elliot hands when purchased by Maj.-Gen. William Elliot (from William Oliver of Dinlabyre) in 1786. In 1788 the lands were recorded valued at £834. Maj.-Gen. Elliot left the lands to his cousin’s son, George Fraser Scott, who took the additional surname ‘Elliot’. This George Scott-Elliot was Laird in 1811 of ‘Lariston, comprehending Over and Nether Larriston, and mill and Mill Lands thereof’, valued at £627. George Turnbull was a resident there in 1821. Scott-Elliot sold the estate in 1843 to James Jardine for £29,000. It may be the ‘Lanorowstanes’ listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was popularised in the Ettrick Shepherd’s ballad ‘Lock the Door Lariston’. A lintel above the cottage door there is inscribed ‘J.S.’ and ‘M.R.’ for James of Stobs and Margaret of Redheugh – ‘See how they wane, the proud fyles of the Windermere, Howard ah! woe to the hopes of the day; Hear the wild welkin rend, While the Scots shouts as...’}

Larriston Burn (law-ris-tin-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on Foulmire Heights and Loch Knowe and flowing west and south-west to join
Larriston Fells

Larriston is one of the Debateable Lands on the Scottish side, over the Border from Bewcastle Fells. The hills reach a height of 1,677 feet and feed the Larriston Burn to the west.

Larriston Knowe

Larriston Knowe is another hill that is part of Whitrope Edge, north of Whitropefoot (it is unclear whether there is a connection to the Larriston further south).

Larriston Lime Works

This area has also been referred to as Upper Larriston. It started in 1811, and expanded in 1820 to the Larriston lime works. The farm of Larriston Burn was once separate from that of Larriston. Airchie Elliot was there in 1590 as well as 'Geordie Nixon of the Lareston burne' in the same year, both accused of rieving (it is 'Lareston burne' in 1588).

Larriston Mill

Among lands sold by Robert Elliot of Larriston to the Larriston further south. There are remains of lime kilns and old quarries scattered over a wide area.

Larriston Rig

The Lasses Association Denner

The Lasses Association Denner is a dinner organised for the new Cornet’s Lass and Acting Mother on Picking Night. The pair both make speeches and are presented with their Lasses Association badges, and the Cornet’s Lass is also presented with a Hawick song book.

The Lassie That Works in the Mill

The Lassie That Works in the Mill is a song written by Walter Peden, in a dialect that is only partly Hawick. It was performed regularly by his sons George and Jock, lost for a while, but recovered from a tape recording at the Gilded Chamber. The music was later adapted by Henry Douglas, adding 8 bars to the original 16. Ian Seeley wrote a piano accompaniment for the 2001 ‘Hawick Songs’ collection. It is included on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Henry Douglas.

Latoun (lā-tin) n. Sir Brian (d.1545) English commander of Henry VIII, who was Governor of Norham Castle. Along with Sir Ralph Evers headed the invading forces that laid waste to the Borders in 1544/5, possibly including Hawick and Branxholme. Their ‘bloody ledger’ boasts of destroying 192 towns, towers, barkins, churches and houses, killing 403 Scots, capturing 816 prisoners, and taking 10,386 cattle, 12,492 sheep, 1296 horses, 200 goats and 850 bolls of corn, along with an incalculable amount of goods. He was killed at Ancrum Moor and probably buried at Jedburgh – ‘The ravag’d abbey rang the funeral knell, When fierce Latoun and savage Evers fell’ [JL] (also spelled ‘Laiton’, ‘Layton’, etc.).

latter-will (law-tur-wil) n., arch. a will, document setting out a persons intentions for disposing of their estate – ‘Followis the Legacie and latter-will. At Hawik, the ellevint day of April, the zeir of God jmvc and thrie scoir and fourtene zeris ... ’ [SB1574].

Lauder (law-dur) n. town on the Leader Wa-t, in the former county of Berwickshire. It has preserved its original medival form, with a single street widening into the Market Place, and the main road being divided by the central Mid Row, with its 18th century Town Hall. A bridge is recorded there as early as 1482. It was made a royal burgh in 1502, and was the site of the 1482 hanging of six favourites of James III by Archibald Douglas (Bell-the-Cat). Thirlestane Castle lies just outside the town. The town is on the main A68 road north from Hawick via Jedburgh, and until 1755 was also part of the route north via Selkirk, so it must have been a familiar stop-ping point for centuries of travelling Teries. Its Common Riding is one of the oldest, with reference to it in 1686, although it was in abeyance for 80 years before being revived in 1910. It includes a mounted procession to the Watering Stane and Lauder

Lauder (law-dur) n. Adam (b.c.1790) slater in Newcastle-on-Tyne. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about 41 South Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had children Adam, John, William, Agnes and Walter. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Alexander (16th C.) son and heir of William, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1540 he and his wife Marion Hay were given sasine of his father’s lands of Todrig by John Hay, Lord of Yester. These lands included the ‘manor and mansion thereto and pertinents’. Also in 1540 he and his wife was Marion Hay sold a tenement to Alexander Gledstains. In 1543 he was directed to pay a sum to Katherine Gray (widow of a former holder of lands at Todrig) for her ‘terse’, but protested. In 1544 there was an agreement between him and his wife Marion Hay over lands in Selkirk pertaining to Alexander Gledstains. In 1545 he and his wife sold a tenement in Selkirk to Patrick Kelso. He was recorded as Burgess of Edinburgh in 1557. Alexander (b.1794/5) born in Smailholm, he was miller at Riddell Mill. In 1861 he was there farming 65 acres and employing 4 people. He was still there in 1868 His wife was Margaret and their children included Alexander and Mary. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1731. He probably married Bessie Chisholme in 1728. His children included: Janet (b.1739); Walter (b.1731); James (b.1734); Adam (b.1738); and Margaret (b.1741). He may also be the Andrew who married Margaret Scott in Roberton in 1737. Cuthbert of Todrig (15th/16th C.). He was convicted in 1508 of several crimes. This included stealing 2 horses from Alexander Turnbull at Braidlie, resetting and abetting with the thieves and rebels Alexander Cranston, William Oliver, Simon Turnbull and Robert Turnbull. For these crimes he was drawn and hanged and all his possessions forfeited. His brother and heir Walter is recorded in a document in Selkirk in 1528. David (–) local mortgage advisor and runner who won the 2003 ‘New Year Sprint’ event at Musselburgh Racecourse. Edward (14th/15th C.) cleric who held some rights as Archdeacon of Teviotdale. He resigned these in favour of William Crozier in 1419. George of Whitslade (15th C.) granted the lease of Deloraine and Waitheshope in 1488. His family lands were Whitslade in Berwickshire (not the place of the same name in Ashkirk Parish). George (16th C.) mentioned in 1538 along with Thomas, when Katherine Gray had their sheep legally removed from Todrig. Probably the same George was also mentioned in 1537 along with Richard when they were ordered to remove themselves and their servants from Todrig. Hector (15th C.) specially deputised as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1464/5 for an inquest giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to Archibald, son of the deceased William Douglas of Cavers. His name is recorded as ‘Hector of Lawdre’. He was also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5, where he is ‘of Lauedyr’. Hector (15th/16th C.) tenant in Clerklands recorded in 1493 as brother of Thomas. He was allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for a series of crimes, including stealing from several farms, bringing in Nixons from England and associating with William Elliot ‘and other thieves of Branxholme’. His sureties were Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw, and the Laird of Buccleuch. In 1494 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he witnessed the charter for the lands of Galalaw by James Scott of Kirkurd in 1494. In 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he had a remission for several crimes, including: helping 2 Elliots and 5 Armstrongs, ‘Traitors of Levyn’ in a raid on ‘Quhit-mur’, involvement in a raid on the ‘Pot-Loche’ of Selkirk; resetting Armstrongs, Elliots and Fosters; ‘wickedness’ done to Adam Thomson in Selkirk; bringing in 2 Nixons; pilaging from Whitlawhouse; the theft of cattle, sheep and a horse from the Turnbulls from Langhope; and further thefts from Shilling Green and Harthorn. Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw was surety for him in 1494/5. He is probably the Hector listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined (including Walter Scott in Headshaw and David Scott in Galalaw). In 1502 he is described as ‘in Clerklands’ when he had remission for several crimes: stealing 40 cows from John Scott of Hoddom House, along with a band of Armstrongs; burning Whitslade house with the Armstrongs; stealing 2 horses from Launder woods; stealing several other horses from different people; stealing cows from William Wood out of Harthemen and Whitlelawhouse; stealing 16 cows and 2 horses from Whitslade; and stealing cows from Traquair. John Scott ‘in le walis’ acted as surety. He also had remission for stealing 60 sheep from John Thomson in Harthern and for wounding Adam Thomson in Selkirk, with Robert Scott of Stiches acting as surety. Additionally in 1502, he had remission for stealing 5 horses from several men in the Forest of Lauder, with James Scott of Askikirk as his surety. James (15th/16th C.) younger brother of Cuthbert of Todrig. In 1582 his brother Walter (who was heir to Cuthbert) appointed him as his procurator to deal with matters related to their brother’s estate. James of Carolside, ‘Beau’ (d.1799) son of John and Agnes Adam. He was owner of the lands of Redfordgreen and Dryclenghshiel in 1785. He paid the land tax on their value of £169 6s 8d. He also owned Whitslade and paid tax on its value of £266 13s 4d. His main estate of Carolside was near Earlston. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in 1502, along with James Elliot and Janet Ker. The three had 7 cows stolen from them, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. John (d.c.1551) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1534. He succeeded George Lockhart, who became Dean of Glasgow, possibly with some exchange between the pair. He resigned the office in favour of John Hepburn in 1544, but retained some of the benefits until his death. John of Carolside and Whitslade (d.c.1788) owner of the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen and Dryclenghshiel. He married Agnes Adam, who inherited the lands from her brother John Adam of Whitslade. He was succeeded by his son James. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when her goods were listed as part of a transaction involving the lands of Todrig. She is probably the Katherine Gray, recorded in connection with Todrig in the same year. She may have been wife of William of Todrig. In 1543 she was ‘spouse of the deceased . . .’ when Alexander Lauder was directed to pay her 16 merks for the ‘terce’ on a husbandland (probably in Todrig). Richard (16th C.) mentioned along with George in 1537 when they were ordered to remove themselves and their servants from Todrig. Sir Robert of the Bass and Quarrelwood (d.1337) son of Sir Robert. He was referred to as ‘elder’ to distinguish him from his son, also Sir Robert. He served as Ambassador to England during the time of Robert the Bruce. He was also Keeper of Berwick Castle and for a while was Chamberlain of Scotland. From about 1319 he was Justiciar of Lothian, responsible for the justice aires south of the Forth, including those held in Roxburghshire. He was present at the Battle of Halidon in 1333. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant at ‘Merch-cluche’ whose lands were raided and goods stolen by Peter Turnbull of Bonchester and a group of Englishmen. He himself was taken to Bewcastle ‘until he redeemed himself’, i.e. he was held for ransom. In 1502 Turnbull had remission for these crimes. Robert of that Ilk (16th C.) recorded in 1528/9 when he was involved in a deal with John Cranston of that Ilk, for lands in Smallholm. These lands had belonged to Oliver. He was also listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branholme. Stephen (d. bef. 1530) Burgess of Selkirk. In about 1512 he was granted a charter by John Hay, Lord Yester, for the lands of Todrig ‘with the manor and dwelling house thereto and pertinents lying in the said barony of Olivercastell in the sheriffdom of Selkirk’. Richard Lauder was one of the witnesses, and presumably related. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1519. In 1526/7 he received money for lands then belonging to James Murray of Falahill. In 1527/8 he was ‘not sound in his mind but labouring in his final pains’ when he retitled his testament. He was deceased in 1530 when William Scott of Harden swore he owed him ‘na mair bot ane merc’, and others swore the same one behalf of William Scott in Todrig. This was all in the presence of his widow, Margaret Lauder. His son William inherited his tenement in Selkirk in 1532. Thomas of Todrig (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5. He had remission for his part in several crimes: attacking John and Adam Thomson in Selkirk; stealing sheep from Harthern; stealing from a poor man called Robert Gordon at Peebles ford; stealing 6 cows from Innerleithen; stealing a cow and a list of items from William Mitchell at ‘war’; stealing a skin from the Laird of Dewar; stealing 16 head of cattle from ‘cabrostoun’; stealing cattle and sheep from Purveshill; resetting Alexander, son of Robert Turnbull; a theft from William Turnbull in Shielwood; and common theft and delivery of stolen goods before the date of his previous remission. Walter Scott of Howpasley served as his surety. He is also recorded in 1493 when his brother Hector was allowed to compound for rieving crimes; since the same Hector was later recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig, then presumably that was him. He was presumably father or elder brother of Cuthbert, who was Laird of Todrig in the early 16th century. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in 1538 along with George, when Katherine Gray had their sheep legally removed from Todrig. He is probably the Thomas listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in Selkirk in 1539/40. Thomas (16th/17th C.) tenant in Braidhaugh in 1620. He was witness to a charter for Goldielands, given by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. The lands of 'Braidhaughe' were presumably the place near Branxholme. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Priesthaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (18th C.) resident at 'Todridge'. His son William was baptised in 1732. Walter (15th/16th C.) brother and heir of Cuthbert of Todrig. In 1528 he is recorded in a document in Auld Roxburgh (but preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books) in 1528 when he made his brother James his procurator. William (d.1425/6) son of Sir Robert of Edrington and The Bass, and Edinburgh, and nephew of Sir Alan of Hatton. His mother was Annabella, and his half-brother was Alexander, Bishop of Dunkeld. He was educated in France and became Archdeacon of Lothian by 1405. He appears to have dispossessed John de Hawick from his position as Precentor of Glasgow in the period 1403-6. In 1408 he was consecrated as Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding Matthew Glendonwyn. He acted as an envoy to England and France and probably helped persuade Robert, Duke of Albany, to support Martin V instead of Benedict XIII. He was appointed as Chancellor by Murdoch, Duke of Albany, and continued under James I. It is unclear if he played a prominent role in Teviotdale. However, he did extend Glasgow Cathedral, and is buried at the old parish church in Lader. His seal was very elaborate, showing the Trinity, saints, a kneeling bishop, shields and the words 'S' WILLELMI DEI GRACIA EPISCOPI GLASGUENSIS'. William (d.bef. 1539) Burgess of Edinburgh, who was heir to Stephen. He was recorded as one of the officials for a document in Selkirk in 1527/8. In 1530 he was among a group of men from the Selkirk area who took goods from men from Moffat, but later returned them. In 1530 Patrick Murray of Falahill granted him sasine of lands in Selkirk. He may be the William who in about 1530 was heir to his grandfather John in a tenement in Selkirk. In 1532 he had a charter for Stephen's tenement in Selkirk. A further document records how he was to receive rent for the building from Nicholas Ker and Marion Brydon. In 1533/4 he resigned a tenement in Selkirk to Marion Notman. In 1534 he was a Burgess of Selkirk when he resigned a tenement in Selkirk. In 1535 he was 'burgess of Edinburgh and lord of the lands of Toddryk' when he came to the house of his tenant William Scott and 'placing outside of a stool at the front door as is the custom in such things' announced that William Scott should be ejected from his lands of Todrig. He is probably the William of Todrig recorded in 1537 when William Mathieson agreed to pay annual rent to him for lands in Selkirk. He was deceased in 1539 when there was an inquest for the succession of his son and heir Alexander for his lands of Todrig; Katherine Gray, wife of Hubert Maxwell was also involved, and may have been his widow. In 1540 Alexander was given sasine of his lands of Todrig. William (16th C.) listed as 'Maister' in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was owed money 'conform to the Lairdis obligatioun'. However, it is unclear who he was, or whether he was local (formerly 'Ladder', 'Lader' and variants).

the Laurels (thu-law-rulz) n. Guest House at 8 Princes Street.

Laurie (law-ree) n. Christian name, usually a familiar form of Lawrence, also sometimes spelled 'Lawrie'.

Laurie (law-ree, low-ree) n. George from Jedburgh Parish, in 1793 he married Margaret Lamb in Cavers. Their children Anne and Jean were born in Jedburgh. Rev. James (c.1704–83) Minister of Hawick Parish 1757–83. He attended university along with Dr. John Armstrong (of Liddesdale and later London). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1724, was licensed by Duns Presbytery in 1732 and was ordained at Langton (in Berwickshire) in 1734. There he married and had a family. He was presented to Hawick by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in mid-1757 and installed a few months later. In 1759 he acted as witness for a baptism for wright John Kay. He was known for being very pugnacious and was an acquaintance of the influential Dr. Alexander Carlyle (minister of Inversesk), who called him 'a boundless liar' in his diaries! He was also described thus: 'as a companion he was very amusing by the relation of fictitious stories'; it is said that he recounted fantastic tales...

based on the time he and Dr. Armstrong had joined a band of gypsies while they were students and also the time he spent visiting the doctor in London, where he claimed he befriended the top politicians of the day. He accompanied Carlyle and his party through Langholm to Carlisle, where he got into a fight ‘with a drunken squire of the name of Dacres, who had insulted him with foul language’ (a descendant of Lord Dacres perhaps?). However, there is little independent information to support this general character assassination. He gathered some parishioners together in St. Mary’s churchyard to pray during the great flood of 1767, afterwards claiming to have helped abate the waters (although according to the miller the flood had already much receded by then!). Both the Burgher and Anti-Burgher secession churches were formed in Hawick during his ministry, presumably encouraged in part by his unpopularity. It was also said that he refused to allow the parishioners to use a well at the Manse, as they had done previously, and Council records show a wall was pulled down, which he had had built across a thoroughfare on Burgh property. In 1767 he was described as owner of property in the East End of Hawick. In 1743 he married Elizabeth Foggo, who died in 1792. Their children (all baptised in Langholm) included: John (b.1744), who was minister at Teviothead, Eskdalemuir and Ewes; Cumberland Alex (b.1746); Mary (b.1748); and Elizabeth (b.1751). He could be the James born to John and Elizabeth Whitehead in Cockburnspath in 1707 – ‘Lawrie, that honest man o’ God, Deeming it judgement sent abroad Frac heaven direct be–

John (16th C.) notary to a charter relating to Harden in the Barony of Wilton in 1559. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Ginkwood in 1716 and 1718. His children included William (b.1714), Janet (b.1716) and Janet (again, b.1718). Rev. John (1702/3–62) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1722, was licensed by Penpont Presbytery in 1731 and was the second of the regular preachers at the Teviothead chapel-of-ease from 1738 until about 1745. In that year he was translated to Middlebie. He witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1743 (for workmen John Rieve and John Armstrong, who may have had a connection to Teviothead); he is recorded there as ‘Mr John Lawrie preacher of the Gospel’. He married Anna Bell, who died in 1797, aged 85, and they had at least one son. Rev. John (1744–1817) son of James, minister of Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1761, 1762, 1763, 1764 and 1765, when he was still a student (perhaps being the stand-in when the parents did not have other witnesses available, or else being an assistant in the church). He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1767 and became the minister at Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) shortly after that. However, there is some potential confusion here with the earlier Teviothead minister of the same name. In 1772 he was recorded as ‘Preacher’ when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Lookup, who probably lived in the upper Teviot valley. He is probably the ‘Mr’ John who witnessed a baptism in 1776 for George Balmer. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was translated to Eskdalemuir in 1785 and to Ewes in 1791. He was taxed for having a female servant in the 1780s. He was recorded at Ewes on the 1790–1797 Horse Tax Rolls and the 1797 Clock Tax Rolls. In 1786 he married Anne, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield, and she died in 1834, aged 73. Their children included: James (1787–1851), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines; William (1788–1842), Captain in the Royal Marines; Mary (1789–94); John (1790–1861), who became a Major General; Elizabeth (b.1793), who married Lieut. David Maxwell, younger of Broomholm; Adam Ogilvie (1795–1814), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines, who died at sea; Robert (1797–1828), who died in Langholm; and Walter (1805–44), surgeon with the 4th Regiment Madras Light Cavalry, who died at Anantapur, India. John R. (19th/20th C.) wrote some lines in memory of his brother-in-law James Davidson. Walter (b.c.1833) baker at 39 High Street. His wife was Janet and their children included: David; Adam; Walter; and Euphemia. Walter (1858–1923) son of baker Walter. He was also a baker, based at 39 High Street, who became a licensed grocer at the foot of the Mid Row and wine and spirit merchant of 13 Teviot Crescent. Additionally, he produced and sold aerated waters. He was a well known speaker at social functions and a member of the Masons. He bequeathed money for the Laurie Brig and Laurie Shelter (formerly written ‘Lourie’ and ‘Lourrie’; see also Lawrie and Lowrie).

the Laurie Brig (thu-law-rec-brig) n. footbridge across the Teviot at the Spetch in Wilton Lodge Park, named after Walter Laurie, built in 1924 and opened by the Prince of Wales. It is near here that the riders stop to sing ‘Teribus’ on the Saturday morning of Common Riding week,
Laurie’s Den

The Principals standing in their stirrups. This tradition apparently began because it was once the site of a large gun, melted down like other sources of iron during WWII. The scissors used in the opening ceremony are in the Museum (sometimes erroneously written ‘Lawrie’).

Laurie’s Den (law-rezz-den) n. area to the north of Faw Hill and west of the farm of Ashtrees. To the south-west there are the remains of an ancient enclosure, perhaps a medieval stock pen (note the place of essentially the same name in Hawick, Lawrie’s Denn).

the Laurie Shelter (luh-law-ree-shel-ur) n. shelter in Wilton Lodge Park located near the Boer War Memorial, named after Walter Laurie who bequeathed money for its erection.

Law (law) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident at Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Archibald (b.1770/1) born in Bowden, he was a grocer and carrier in Lilliesleaf. In Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories he is recorded as carrier, leaving Lilliesleaf for Hawick once a week. In 1851 he was ‘Landed Proprietor & Ag. Lab.’ on the south side of Main Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed simply as a grocer. He had a daughter Ann. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) resident of Menslaws. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 5 firlots of grain stolen from him there by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton.

Hugh (19th C.) farmer and coal agent, who was the last tenant of the fields between Havelock Street and Howdenbank, at that time part of Wilton Mains. He may have been the same Hugh described as an engineer of Wilton Place. James (c.1560–1632) born in Fife, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1581, and became minister of Kirkliston. As a young minister he is recorded being censured (along with John Spottiswoode) for playing football on the Sabbath. He became a royal chaplain in 1601, and was titular Bishop of Orkney from 1605. He was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1608 and preached in favour of episcopacy before the assembly in 1610. In 1615 he was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow, succeeding his friend Spottiswood. He must have temporarily held the superiority of local lands, since in 1624 he gave a sasine for Headshaw, Dryden and other lands to Andrew Hay, and in 1628 gave a charter of the lands of Barnhills to William Bennet. He married at least twice. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Horsleyhill. His will is recorded in 1682. He could be the James who witnessed baptisms.
for Robert Scott and William Scott in Roberton Parish in 1681. Jean (19th C.) name (or possibly nickname) for a Hawick character of the mid-1800s – ‘Goold Ballantine and auld Hawick Jock, Wattie Moudie, Jock Gray and a; Jenny’s Penny wi’ plaid o’ check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law’ [HI]. John (d.c.1687) tenant in Hawick. His will is recorded in 1687. Probably the same James witnessed a baptism in 1682 for James Turnbull in Denholm. Rev. John (1791–1875) coming from Linlithgow West, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed as a preacher of the Associate Presbytery of Falkirk. He became the third minister of Newcastleton Burgher Kirk in 1812. He was described as ‘very young and blooming’ when he started and ‘never seemed to grow older or less comely’. He was thus an object of much attention among local farmers with marriageable daughters. He was said to be a ‘handsome and vigorous preacher’ who became known as ‘the Lion of Liddesdale’. He started one of the first Sunday Schools in the district, and brought in 2 people from Carlisle to give singing instructions to the congregation. He visited London in 1824, and his wife would only let him go if he left a portrait of himself, so he got one done in Hawick in about 2 hours. In 1828 he was translated to St. Margaret’s, Dunfermline. He moved to Innerleithen in 1850 and had his jubilee as a minister in 1862. He married Jane Murray, who died in 1847; she was from his congregation and one of 7 sisters. They had 4 daughters and 1 son: Agnes; Janie, who married manufacturer George Wilson in Hawick; Janet, who married John Tod from Dalkeith; Ellen, who married Thomas Bonnar, architect in Dunfermline; and William, who died in Trinidad. In 1859 he remarried, to Jessie Sanderson, but she died in 1860. It is said that he was related to Prime Minister Andrew Bonar Law. He died at Eskbank, Dalkeith and is buried at Dunfermline, alongside his wife Jean Murray of Whisgills. John (1906–59) schoolmaster at Denholm. He married Margaret Janet Robertson. They are buried in Denholm. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘in Kames’ in 1632 when along with several others he feued Westbarns (near Belse) from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. Walter (19th C.) commission agent of 7 Slitrig Crescent. His daughter Margaret married Walter Scott (of Lyle & Scott), while Kate married John Rennie (of the British Linen Bank) and Jane married Walter Phillips Kennedy (bookseller). He may be the Walter, married to Janet Kedie, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Mary (b.1868): Walter (b.1872); and Thomas Kedie (b.1874).

the Law (thu-law) n. popular name used in the district of Denholm for Ruberslaw – ‘...an’ then for the Law – his ordinar’ hunting grund’ [BCM1881] (e.g. used by James Murray in 1863).

law borrows (law-bo-röz) n., arch. legal security given by a person, that they will not harm another person – ‘... James Budie, dreading personal and bodily harne of Adam Brown, weiver, and craved lawborrows ...’[BR].

lawest (law-iist) adj., poet. lowest – ‘Thou best layde me in the lawist pitt, in mirk, in the deeps’ [HSR].

dlawfi (law-fi) adj., arch. lawful, official, proper – ‘...told her that neither God nor man was her master, and that she was a ‘lawfu’ witch’ [EM1820], legitimate, offspring recognised by the law – ‘The Beddall was ordered to summond Robert Eliot eldest lawful son to Francis Eliot ...’ [PR1717] (also written ‘lawfu’); the last meaning common in older documents, sometimes contrasted with natural.

Lawgaps (law-gaps) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as part of the area called Ermildon. It was recorded as ‘Lawgappis’ and listed as being valued at 20 shillings.

lawgier (law-gee-ur) n., poet. a lawgiver – ‘Ephraim alsua is the strencht o’ mine heaed, an’ Judah is my lawgieer’ [HSR].

Lawhope (law-up) n. former name for land in the Barony of Ashkirk. They were part of the estate purchased by Archibald Cochrane of Ashkirk in 1795. They are described in 1815 as ‘Lawhope meadow’.

lawin (law-in) n., arch. a bill, particularly in a public house – ‘A paid ma laween ... an an’ A lifteet the sneck an gaed oot again ti the Mercat Cross’ [ECS], ‘Yin champagne-cork, left for the lawin’, By a Pipe Band efter yon drummin’ and blawin’’ [DH] (also written ‘laween’).

Lawler (law-lur) n. Thomas ‘Tom’ or ‘the Irish Schoolmaster’ (d.1874) once a schoolmaster in Longford, Ireland, he worked in Hawick as a labourer, lodging-house keeper, and a hawker and carrier along with his wife Kate. He died in Hawick Poorhouse.

lawlie (law-lee) adj., poet. lowly, humble – ‘I am meik an’ lawlie in hairt’[HSR], n. the lowly – ‘... the lawlie sall heer o’t, an’ be gladsume’[HSR].

lawly (law-lee) adv., arch. lawfully – ‘The Court lawlie fensit. The said day, with the consent of the bailies and council of said bruche of Hawick ... ’[BR].

Lawrence (law-ruhs) n. Samuel (19th C.) town bellman in the late 1900s, who was also the last tenant of the Fleece Inn – ‘Scottie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam’l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grim’ [HF].

Lawrie (law-ree, low-ree) n. David (18th/19th C.) from Glasgow, he was fier to Capt. Campbell of the 91st Regiment. He used to play for the recruiting party, which paraded through Hawick on market days in the early part of the 19th century. In 1809 he offered to play for the ‘rebel’ Cornet, but was forbidden by his Captain. James (18th C.) owner of lands referred to as ‘Lawrie’s Denn’, located around Oliver Crescent and Oliver Place. He may have been the ‘John Lawrie’ referred to by Robert Wilson as one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. Peter (1828–1902) son of William, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Jane, daughter of Ebenezer Wemyss and Janet Laidlaw. In 1853 the family emigrated to Australia, settling in Tarnagulla, where gold had been found. There are many descendants in the area of Victoria today, using the spelling ‘Laurie’. Thomas (18th C.) listed at ‘Danston Mill’ in Lilliesleaf Parish when he paid the cart tax in 1785. ‘Danston’ is presumably Dunstane. William (b.c.1797) stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Wilhelmina (‘Mina’) Pasley (or Paisley), who had previously been married to Frederick Diener. Their children were: Peter, a stockingmaker; Margaret, who married Robert Richardson; Thomas, who was a cabinet-maker’s apprentice; and an infant son who died in 1822. He may be the same as the William Lawrie who provided entertainment on the ‘slack rope’ as part of the efforts to raise money for strikers during the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ (see also Laurie and Lowrie).

Lawrie’s Denn (law-reez-den) n. former name for area at the east end of Hawick, in use before the houses were built there. It is marked on Wood’s 1824 map near where the Auction Mart was later built, and on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map the name appears near the beginning of Weensland Road. In 1824 the land was owned by Archibald Dickson. It is referred to as ‘Laurie’s Yard’ and ‘Laurie’s Den’ in the 1841 census. The name derives from James Lawrie who once owned the lands, together with the Old English for ‘wooded hollow’ (also written ‘Laurie’s Denn’).

Lawrie’s Flat (law-reez-flaw) n. name marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map for the orchard area roughly where Trinity School was later built, a little further from the centre of town than ‘Lawrie’s Den’.

Laws (lawz) n. former lands occurring as ‘Lawis’ on the 1594 list of those held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick. The name occurs between ‘Langhaugh’ and ‘Tofts’, suggesting a location in the upper Teviot valley. However, it is possible that the lands meant are those in Liddesdale.

Laws (lawz) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, between the B6357 and Riccarton Junction. They are recorded in the rental roll of c.1376 in the region then known as Ermiton (probably around the modern Arnton Fell). ‘Lawis superior’ is valued at 12 shillings and ‘Lawis inferior’ as 7 shillings, as well as ‘Locus Ricardi de Lawis’ (8 shillings), ‘Locus Roberti de Lawis’ (8 shillings 4 pence) and ‘Locus Ennie de Lawis’ (3 shillings); it is unclear to which family these Lairds belonged. It seems likely this is the same place as Lawshill, which is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and associated with Law’s Hill on modern maps. It could also be the same place as ‘the Hill’, which was a seat of the Elliots in the 16th century. It is ‘Leys’ on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it extended to 546 acres, bounded by Dawstonburn, Saughtree, Riccarton, Roughlee and Stitchelhill; the farmhouse was shown on the map close to the place marked as the remains of Riccarton Tower on modern maps.

Lawshill (lawz-hil) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, roughly north of Riccarton farm. It is surely connected with the lands of ‘Lawys superior’ and ‘Lawys inferior’ listed on a c.1376 rental roll. Law’s Hill is essentially the southern spur of Shiel Knowe, with Palmer’s Hill Cutting passing through it. The farm was occupied by John Nixon in 1623 and by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47, along with Riccartonfoot and Prickinghaugh (it was ‘Lawishill’ in 1623 and ‘Laweshill’ in 1634).

the Laws of the Mairches (thu-lawz-ov-thu-mar-cheez) n. rules for governing the Border, set up by a commission of English and Scottish knights in 1249. This included the establishment of the Wardens and how they were supposed to deal with rievers etc.

Lawson (law-sin) n. Judge Alexander Sutherland (1842–1916) watchmaker and jeweller of 1 Sandbed. He started his business in 1864, and also acted as an optician, silversmith and shipping agent. He was a member of the Town Council for 43 years, being Treasurer, becoming a Bailie and later a Judge. He was a Mason, associated with B.U.R.A. No. 424. He was also one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee in 1887, and acted as a Race Steward. The Lawson Bridge was named after him, and he can be seen in a photograph of the older version of the bridge about 1900. His wife’s name was Catherine. His daughter unveiled the Hornshole Memorial in 1901 – ‘... There to answer Bailie Lawson Aboot every wound and scar’ [WE]. Isobel (18th/19th C.) living at Newmill in 1793 when her daughter Margaret (b.1774) was baptised in Robertson. She acted as ‘Sponcer for the child’. James of Cairnmuir (17th C.) had the teinds of the Parish of Bedrule ratified to him in 1639, confirmed by a Private Act of Parliament of 1641. It is unclear what his connection was, but the original grant appears to have been from Rev. Joseph Tennant in 1632. James (18th C.) waiter working for vintner Robert Armstrong in Hawick in 1794. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aiire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. Robert (17th C.) listed at Whithope among ‘The poor in Hauick Parishes’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) resident at Teindside. He married Margaret Scoon, who may be the daughter of Walter Scoon and Isobel Miller born in 1720. Their children included: Robert (b.1745); Isobel (b.1747); Elizabeth (b.1750); John (b.1756); and George (b.1760); and Walter (b.1760). His children were baptised in Hawick, Wilton and Robertson Parishes. He was probably also the workman whose son William (b.1742) was baptised in Hawick, with the mother’s name given as ‘Janet’ Scoon and witnesses John Elliot at Goldielands and Robert Scott at Crumhaugh. The witnesses in 1745 were the Thomas Elliot in Harwood and Bailie Robert Boyd, and in 1750 were John and Robert Scott from Galalaw. Robert (18th C.) probably son of Robert. He was resident at Chapelhill in 1774 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Robertson Parish. Other children were William (b.1775), Walter (b.1776), Margaret (b.1778), Margaret (again, b.1779) and Robert (b.1782). Walter (b.1811/2) from Westerkirk, he was a farm worker in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was at Meadshaw Cottage and in 1851 at Craik. In 1840 in Ettrick Parish he married Janet Jackson (from Cavers Parish) and their children included: Janet (b.1841); Jane (b.1842); Thomas (b.1844); Jean (b.1849); and Susanna (b.1854). Walter (19th C.) Burgh Officer in the 1880s, acting as Keeper of the Town Hall among other duties. He was also the halberdier in 1887 when the custom was revived of having the Burgh Officer, accompanied by the Drums and Fifes, walk to the Cornet-elect’s house on Picking Night. Sir William (d.1632) son of Thomas of Little Usworth, County Durham. He was High Sheriff of Cumberland and in 1591 was made Convener of the Commission of the Marches. Knighted in 1604, in 1605 he was Convenor to the English Commission to govern the Borders. His name occurs many times in relation to the pacification of the Borders (i.e. capturing men from various families and executing or exiling them). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Todshawhillshiel in 1716. His children included: Helen (b.1714); Robert (b.1716); and Walter (b.1719). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Burnfoot in 1743 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Robertson Parish. Margaret (b.1737) and Janet (b.1740) were probably also his daughters. William (18th C.) recorded at Eilrig when some of his children were baptised in the 1770s. He married Jean Elliot in Robertson Parish in 1771. His children included: Isobel (b.1772); and Robert (b.1775). William (19th/20th C.) of Edinburgh designer of Hawick’s WWI Roll of Honour (formerly also spelled ‘Lawsone’, ‘Lawsonne’, etc.).

the Lawson Brig (thu-law-sin-brig) n. iron foot-bridge over the Teviot connecting Free Church Lane with the Haugh, originally constructed in 1904, and replaced in 1988. It was named after Judge Lawson and replaced an earlier wooden structure erected in 1886, with steps at either end. This was built by David Taylor, with building foreman J.P. Tait. There is a photograph showing the original opening in 1886. It was popularly known as the Shit Brig.

Lawston (law-stin) n. farm in the far south of Castleton Parish, between the B6357 and the Liddel Water, after Kershopefoot. There are rig lines to the south-east and to the south are 3 oval hollows, which are probably coal pits. There was a colliery here from a few decades starting about the end of the 18th century, the only one of consequence in Roxburghshire. The stream there is said to have once had a sulphurous spring. William Oliver was there in 1797. William Graham... the Lawyer was farmer there in at least the period 1821–51 (it is ‘Lawstone’ in 1821 and ‘Lawstown’ in 1838 and 1851; it appears as ‘Lawstern’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Lawyer (θu-law-yur) n. nickname for William Oliver in the 16th century.

Lawyhaugh (law-e-hawk) n. possible place name in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll c.1376 as ‘Lawyhalch’, with a value of 3 pounds. This is distinct from ‘Langhalgh’, which is also listed, but the location, and pronunciation, are unknown. It is possible it corresponds to the small farmstead labelled on Stobie’s 1770- map as ‘Lawsholm’, on the Liddel to the southeast of Lawston farm.

lay (lā) n., arch. the movable frame of a loom, containing the reed, which oscillates to beat the yarn into place – ‘Now when sitting at work on his loom, He thought, as the shuttle from end to end of the moving lay, That he had had troubles enow’ [JCG].

layne (lān) v., poet. to conceal, keep secret – ‘Its I, Watty Wudspurs, loose the kye! I winna layne my name frae thee! And I will loose out the captain’s kye, In scorn of a’ his men and he’ [T].

The Lay of the Last Minstrel (θu-lā-ov-thu-lawst-mins-trul) n. narrative poem by Sir Walter Scott, which is set partly at Branxholme. It was finished in 1804, published in 1805 and was immediately successful and hugely influential. This success contributed significantly to the romanticised view of Borders history and to local tourism. The poem is composed of 6 cantos and written in an irregular metre. The main story is told by an aging minstrel who receives hospitality from Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch at Newark Castle. He sings about the Lady of Branxholme Castle (Janet Beaton), who opposes the marriage of her daughter Margaret to Henry of Cranstoun, and enemy of the family. Her champion Sir Richard Musgrave, who has accused Deloraine of plundering his lands during a truce. The goblin page transforms Cranston into Deloraine to fight the duel, which he wins. The heir of Branxholme is released and finally Margaret and Henry are allowed to marry. But during the wedding celebrations the ghost of Michael Scott appears to reclaim the evil dwarf as his servant.

lay on (lā-ōn) v., arch. to impose, charge, levy, assess – ‘...did lay on ane stent by foru classes, viz., twenty-four shilling scotts, eightein, twelve, and six, ... ’ [BR1701], to fall thickly (said of snow or rain), to beat or work with vigour, to flatter, lay it on thick – ‘... as (yince an ei’d been suit-ten on) hei laid on an ranted off yirrds o Border rheimie an lore’ [ECS], to work hard, apply energy – ‘Hicher up, nerr the croon o the hill, men war layin on an chaappin ... ’ [ECS].

lay ti (lā-ti) v., arch. to start on food, set about eating – ‘...had their beats pasturing on the Common, they lay to it, and had passage out and in’ [C&L1767].

lazy (lā-zee) n., arch. a fit of laziness – ‘Ach, na! A’m no verrih on wui’d – A’ve taen the laizy the day!’ [ECS] [also written ‘laizy’].

lea (le) n. a piece of fallow land, untilled land, grassy field – ‘At Kershope-foot the tryst was set, Kershope of the ley lee’ [T], ‘And Crosier says he will do waur – He will do waur if waur can be; He’ll make the bairns a’ fatherless. And then, the land it may lie lee’ [T], ‘...my father chanced to look alang the lea at the head o’ the bucht’ [LHTB], ‘Fair May unto the window ran, To see what she could see; And there she saw the hunting band, Parading on the lea’ [JTe], adj. fallow, barren (also written ‘lee’; it is common as a suffix in place names, where it can also be ‘ley’ and ‘lie’).

lea’ (lee) v., arch., poet. to leave, depart from – ‘My heart is unco wae to lea’ thee’ [JS], to leave alone – ‘Lea’ er (‘im, iz, ‘d, etc.) alane’ [GW].

Leaburn Drive (lee-burn-driv) n. street off the south of Weensland Road, with housing begun in 1934, with more development after the War and the road being taken over by the Council in the 1960s. It was originally the driveway from Weensland Road to Leaburn House. The road has a turning place half-way up.

Leaburn Grove (lee-burn-grōv) n. street off Leaburn Drive, developed in 2001.

Leaburn Hoose (lee-burn-hoos) n. former house on Leaburn Drive, demolished in 1964. It was the town-house of Thomas Lindsay Watson (presumably named after the meadow on which it was built, and the Boozie Burn that flowed through it).

lead (leed) n. a leash (more commonly used for a dog leash than in standard English).

lead (leed) v., arch. to convey a cart, carry peats etc. – ‘May it therfor please yow to grant your petitioner freedom and libertie as to cast, win, and lead, make in and away take of your Commone Muire of Haviecke als many divots as will thatch his said stable . . .’ [BR1704], ‘. . . upon ane missive letter from the laird of Gladstains, the bailies and council gave libertie to him to cast, win, and lead some divots off the common’ [BR1707], ‘. . . for him to buy a beast for carrieing heather, leading of fuel, and carrieing to anie who would employ him’ [PR1723], ‘Paid James Heardye for liding 600 difeits to tolbooth, 1 10 0’ [BR1739], ‘. . . the Hawick beasts seldom touched it, because of the distance, unless when they were leading their peats or turfs’ [C&L].

Leadbetter (led-be’-ur) n. Alan Edmonston-ounge Greenshields (1897/8–1917) son of Thomas. He was a Major in the Royal Horse Artillery who was mentioned in dispatches at Gallipoli, was wounded at Longueval and killed near Ypres. He is buried at Elverdinghe and there is a memorial plaque in Bedrule Kirk. Thomas Greenshields, J.P. (1859–1931) son of James Greenshields and Margaret MacPherson, he was born in Glasgow and was an architect with Leadbetter & Fairley. He started his own architect’s practice in Edinburgh in 1890, taking on James McLellan Fairley as a partner in 1895. In 1897 he inherited Stobieside from his father and in about 1912 became owner of Spittal Tower near Bedrule, which he had restored. He designed the renovations for Bedrule Kirk in 1914, and the War Memorial there, and was an elder at the church 1919–31. He also designed the new Wells House, as well as many other houses in southern Scotland. He married Mary Anne Usher (daughter of Sir John of Norton and Wells) in Ratho in 1890. There is a plaque to their memory inside Bedrule Kirk. Their children were James Greenshields (solicitor), John Usher and Maj. Alan Edmonstone (killed in WWI), Mary Balmer and Jean Gillespie.

Leaderfoot (lee-dur-fi’) n. Leaderfoot, a village just east of Melrose, with a modern bridge over the Tweed for the A68, together with the elegant 1779–80 Drygrange Bridge and adjacent 1865 19-arch railway viaduct. The area is sometimes jokingly called ‘Tripontium’.

leadin (lee-din) n., arch. the grain or other crops carted in from the fields – ‘Fenwick had a happy knack of turning up on such occasions as clippings and hay leadings’ [BM1907], ‘I finished ma schooling at Kirkton . . . an startit work on the farm drivin a one horse wi a cart . . . for feedin sheep an cartin leadin in for cattle turnips’ [TH] (see lead).

Leaufaud (lee-fawld) n. former lands in Liddesdale, near Leahaugh, Langhaugh and Hartsgarth. It is probably the land referred to as ‘et le faulde’ in 1479 among the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1637 it is ‘Leyfauld’ when part of the lands to be inherited by James Elliott and his wife Margaret, daughter of Robert of Redheugh (the name presumably comes from ‘le fauld’; it is ‘Liefauld’ in about 1624).

leafs (leafs) pl. leaves – ‘The banes o’ murderers an’ thieves, An’ bandit leaders, Porcupine quills, an’ withert leafs, Frae Leb’non’s cedars’ [JoHa], ‘The fisslin leafs trimmelt an’ an bevvert i the simmer breeze’ [ECS], ‘. . . keekin throwe atween the leafs . . . ’ [ECS] (an example of the use of a different plural in Hawick than in standard English).

Leafy Hoose (lee-lee-hoos) n. former name for a house in the Weensland area, recorded in the 1851 census. It is probably the same as ‘Ivybank’.

the Leagair (thu-lee-gär) n. rising ground on the south side of the Liddel Water, inside Cumberland, roughly opposite Liddelbank – ‘. . . Awake all the song birds adown in the valley, The day-dawn is breaking ayont the Lea-gair’ [DA].

the League o Pity (thu-leeeg-ô-pi’-ee) n. children’s wing of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, specifically the Scottish version. It was a prominent charitable association in the mid-20th century, organising many local fund-raising events. It was the forerunner of today’s N.S.P.C.C. Schools.

Leahaugh (lee-hawf) n. farmhouse on the Hermitage Water, just south of the Hartsgarth Bridge. Across the road there is the remains of what was once a public right of way and probably the main road through the valley until the 18th century. The name was once also ‘Leauch’. It is ‘Layhalcht’ in 1479 when granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with ‘Carolschelis’ and ‘hartsgarth’. The Elliots held it, along with Hartsgarth, Leahaugh Cottage

Langhaugh and Leafuld, through the 16th century and into the early 17th. It was one of 3 farms given by the last Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his daughter Esther in about the 1640s. It was possessed by Will Armstrong in 1632. It was valued (along with Greenholm) in 1678 at about £137. John ‘Weily’ was there in 1694. It was owned by William Manderson according to the 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, and still valued along with Greenholm at £136 15s 8d. Robert Elliot and John Blacklock were both there in 1837. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in the 1840s. The farm was ravaged by the flood of 1846. Thomas and William Kyle were there in 1868. By 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farm at Leahaugh Holm was destroyed in the great flood of 1846 (it is ‘layhauch’ in 1489, ‘Layhauch’ in 1526, ‘Leyhauche’ in 1537/8, ‘leyhauch’ in 1613, ‘Leyhauche’ in about 1624, ‘Leaheuch’ in 1632, ‘Layheuch’ in about 1640, ‘Leaugh’ in 1694 and ‘Leeachaugh’ in 1797, 1811 and 1841; it is ‘Leehaugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Leahaugh Brig (lee-hawf-brig) n. bridge carrying the B6399 road over the Hermitage Water at Leaugh. It is for some reason labelled ‘Leaugh Bridge’ on the Ordnance Survey map.

Leahaugh Cottage (lee-hawf-ko’-eej) n. cottage in Castleton Parish, between the main road and the river, between Leahaugh and Redheugh farms. Arthur Moffat was farmer there in 1861.

Leaheid Loch (lee-heed-loch) n. Leaheid Loch, a small body of water out beyond Stirches, by the roadside roughly opposite Stintyknowe, also called Dykenewk. There were adjacent farm buildings shown on the Ordnance Survey map of 1863.

Leaheids (lee-heedz) n. Leaheads, former farmstead by Leahead Loch. William Goodfellow was there in 1708 and Walter Scott in 1709. Alexander Cunningham was there in 1747, John Miller in 1759 and James Riddell in 1797. William Douglas was shepherd there around 1840 and Thomas Lockie was ‘Game Guard’ in 1851 (it is ‘Leeheads’ in 1797, ‘Leehead’ in 1840 and ‘Leahead’ in 1841; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map of Roxburghshire).

leal (lee-l) adj., arch., poet. faithful, loyal, true – ‘…the leal an’ aea Saul loe thee’ [HSR], ‘He’s weel an’ he’s leal, an’ he’s on his way home …’ [JJ], ‘For lads leal and true, And lasses braw and fair …’ [TC], ‘Here though art, and where to-morrow, Far from Hawick, leal and kind …’ [TCh], ‘…At his leal auld chieftan’s word’ [JEDM], ‘…A lad-die kind and leal’ [??], ‘…The leal hands haunt out a welcome, The sib herts still beat true’ [WL], ‘Lang may the Common Riding leeve in the herts O’ every leal Teri …’ [DH] (from Old English; sometimes spelled ‘leil’).

leally (lee-lee) adv., arch. faithfully, loyally – ‘…and the faith in my body leelie and treuley bindis o oun’ [NT], ‘…Wee shall leelie and treuley keip this oun bond for all quarrells, bloods and goods’ [CBP1584].

lealest (lee-ist) adj., poet. most loyal – ‘O he was the lord o’ the keenest sword, And he was the lord o’ the lealest love’ [JTe].

lealthfu’ (lealth-foo) adj., poet. loyal, staunch – ‘Her lealthfu’ heart’ [HSR].

leam (leem) v., poet. to gleam, flash – ‘But it never kent the gorie That leamed frae flags to riggin …’ [WL], n., poet. a gleam, flash, glow, radiance – ‘And the brunstane leame came frae their throats, And syngit his drakit tail’ [JTe], ‘…its kools ar kools o’ fire, whilk hae ane maist vee-ment leme’ [HSR], ‘…Hae the same leme o colour As Mimi wore at her corsage And braidit in her hair’ [DH] (also written ‘leme’).

Lean Yeddie Gibson (leen-ye-dee-gib-sin) n. song of the mid 19th century, written probably by William Tait and Andrew Cameron, with help from Adam Brown and set to music by Walter Davidson. It is about an enthusiastic Hawick angler who died while fishing the Teviot in the 1850s.

the Leap (thu-leep) n. name often used for Leap Hill to the south of Hawick.

Leap Burn (leep-burn) n. stream that joins the Floss Burn to create the Lang Burn near Langburnshiel. It is hence one of the headwaters of the Slitrig.

Leap Hill (leep-hil) n. hill along the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, on the north side, to the south of Western Essenside. It reaches 319 m high and contains various ancient earthworks. A probable hill-fort, just south-east of the summit has been largely destroyed by cultivation. The remains of 2 old sheepfolds lie on the south side. This was also the name of a farmstead there, part of the lands owned by George Scott of Blindhaugh in 1544. In that year George’s 3rd son William was assigned ‘all and hail the leip hill langhoup medo and por-ciones of land about the burn syd callit lainghoup burn’, occupied by Walter Watson. It was owned by the Scotts of Woll in the early 17th century and the Laings in the 18th century, passing to the Cochranes of Ashkirk in 1795. It was valued at £140 in 1643 and owned by Thomas Scott; the teinds were valued (along with Woll, Castle- side and Broadlee), valued at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. Part was owned by Mrs. Elliott of Borthwickbrae in 1788 (as still recorded in about 1811) and Allan Elliott Lockhart by 1874, still valued at £143 (it is ‘Leiphill’ in 1609, 1643 and 1788).

Leap Hill (leep-hill) n. hill between Whitrope Cottages and the Maidens, reaching a height of 472 m (1544 feet). It is often referred to as simply ‘the Leap’ and was formerly called ‘Leap Steel’. There is a linear earthwork running west from the western slopes of the hill, now hard to make out, but perhaps once running as far as the head of the Harwood Burn (it is marked ‘Lyipe’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and has its modern spelling on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Leap Linns (thu-leep-linz) n. popular name for a narrow gorge through which the Ale Water flows, near Leap Hill, just south-west of Shielwood farm. A pool there was sometimes a summer swimming spot. On an eastern spur of Leap Hill there, there are the remains of a settlement, about 100 m by 45 m, and contains evidence of a hut circle and 2 enclosures, probably later sheepfolds (the name is probably the ‘de Lepes intra Askirke et Whitesalde in Alne’, i.e. between Askirk and Whitslade, mentioned in a charter of the late 12th century; the ‘linns’ probably refers to the narrow gorge there, and not to a waterfall; it is marked ‘Leap Linn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Leapsteal (leep-steel) n. former name for an area around the Leap Burn (described as part of the Catrail’s course, between the Maidens and Robert’s Linn, in William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ (1821), Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ and contemporary descriptions).

lear (leer) n., arch., poet. learning – ‘... For want o’ braith or lear’ [DH], ‘What’s this? His lear wad flype The wisdom o’ the day!’ [WL], v. to learn, teach (also lair).

Learmonth (leeer-munth) n. Archibald (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1742 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children included Robert (b.1741) and Margaret (b.1746). Perhaps he is the same as Archibald ‘Lernment’ at Deanhead, whose daughter Isabel was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1737. Henry (19th/20th C.) son of Henry. He was Cornet in 1882, with his own father serving as Acting Father. He was a ‘powerloom tuner’, but later farmed at Greenbraehead, and then emigrated to America. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493; Laurence and Thomas were listed right after him. William, son of James, who was called later, may also have been his son. They were all recorded again in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for their non-appearance. Perhaps the same ‘Jacobum Lernmonth’ was recorded in 1508 when he witnessed the sasine for Adam Herpburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale; many of the other men were relatively local. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster at Minto in deeds of 1624 and 1625. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Govenlock and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1683. He witnessed a baptism for Andrew Fisher in 1681. James (17th C.) resident of Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1710 and Whittfield in 1712. His children included: Robert (b.1710); and Isobel (b.1712). James Pringle, J.P., Manager of the British Linen Bank in Newcastleton in the mid-20th century. He lived at the Bank House and was first Treasurer of the village hall committee. John (17th/18th C.) resident in ‘Mains’ in Roberton Parish in 1717, 1721, 1726, 1729, 1731 and 1734. He is surely related to Thomas, who was there at about the same time. His children included: James (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); John (b.1721); Agnes (b.1724); Isobel (b.1726); John (again, b.1729); William (b.1731); and Thomas (b.1734). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded living at ‘Mossopalgreen’ in 1755. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1755). Perhaps the couple with the same names were in Canonbie in 1766 when an unnamed child of theirs was baptised. John (d.bef. 1794) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Turnbull in 1756 and her death is recorded in 1794. They had a daughter Margaret (b.1757). Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493; James was listed right before him and Thomas right after. They were all recorded again in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for their non-appearance. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Noble and their son John was baptised in 1686. Helen (b.1684) was probably also his child. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Falside in 1686 and another for James Noble in 1687. He may be the same Robert who was at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Borthwickshields in 1711, when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Probably the same Robert was recorded at Howcleuch in early and late 1717 when his sons Robert and John were baptised. He may be the Robert who married Elspeth Little in Roberton in 1708. Thomas, who married Margaret Inglis in Roberton in 1726, may also be his son. Robert ‘Rob’ (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Janet Andison. In 1721 they were rebuked by the Hawick Session because they ‘did accommodat married men and young men, yea, even boyes, with Candle and Cards, they cursing, swearing and blaspheming the name of God in ye season of ye night’; this would appear to a gambling house (although possibly to do with Tarot cards). In 1724 he was further cited for ‘allowing persons for meeting in his house for playing att cards’. After promising to no longer allow people to come to his house for gambling, the Beadle was instructed to check on him from time to time, this possibly ending the practice. He may have been the Robert born in Hawick to James and Helen G Owenlock.

Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Wait and their unnamed child was baptised in 1763. He could be the Robert, son of Robert, baptised in Hobkirk in 1736. Simon (17th C.) resident at Langflat (near Southfield) in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1475/6 to a document relating to the lands of Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch. His name is recorded as ‘Thoma Lermond’. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-naire in Jedburgh in 1493; James and Lawrence were also listed, and so they were surely related. All 3 were again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Thomas Lermont, cailit Lard of that Ilk’. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Weens, recorded as ‘Thomas Leirmont’ in the 1562 dispute over lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule. Probably a related Thomas ‘Leirmont’ is recorded in an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1727 and 1728 he was at Mains. He was surely related to John, who was at Mains at the same time. In 1726 he married Margaret Inglis, also from Robertson. His children included Isobel (b.1727) and Isobel (again, b.1728). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish. He married Jean Riddell in 1730 and their children included William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1735 were Thomas and John Irvine. William (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-naire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded as son of James, who may have been the same James called earlier at the 1493 court. He was cited again at the 1494/5 Justice-naire. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as gardener at Whitslade in 1698. His wife was a Brunton and their children included Isobel (b.1698). Perhaps the same William also married Isobel Scott and had further children Janet (b.1701) and Thomas (b.1703) (also spelled ‘Larment’, ‘Learmond’, ‘Lermond’, ‘Lerment’, ‘Leirmont’, ‘Lermont’, ‘Lermont’, ‘Lromont’, ‘Lormont’ and variants).

leash (lees) n., arch. division of the threads for weaving – ‘In order to prevent two threads of different colours from coming together in the ‘leash’ at the end of each gang or course in warping . . .’ [BCM1881], v., arch. to wind off, separate threads before weaving – ‘Ti lease yairn’ [GW].

leasehold (lees-haud) n. leasehold – ‘The trimmle o’ pule and stream . . . the lost lease-haud o’ youth . . .’ [DH].

leases (lee-seex) n., pl. rentals of farms. These were traditionally made for periods of 15 or 19 years, but sometimes 9 years or shorter. The land-owner usually leased to the same farmer, sometimes extending over several generations of the same family. Rent was once paid in kind, but that eventually gave way to cash. There were several different kinds of lease, sometimes also called a ‘tack’.

leasur (lee-zur) n., arch. leisure – ‘Bot the season now confyning us to our housses and giving us more leasur to mind and attend thess domesticke affairs . . .’ [BR1692 laishur].

leave (lev) n., arch. dismissal, permission to leave, playtime at school – ‘The bairns new oot o the skull for leave, gaed . . . rinnin aboot’ [ECS].

leazle (lee-zul) v., poet. to exert – ‘… naither do I leazle mysel’, makin’ a-wark in meikle matters, or in things owre heich for me’ [HSR] (this word is only known once, and is suggested to be a misprint for ‘bazle’, a variant of ‘baisle’).

Leche (lesh) n. John (d.1395) secretary to the Bishop of Glasgow. He obtained the living of Hawick Church sometime before 1363 and in that year asked for papal confirmation that he held it over the former incumbent John Fleming. It is said ‘he had the church of Haweyk, near the English march, which on account of wars and pestilences brings no fruits’. He held the Hawick benefice until at least 1378. There is no reason to believe that he ever visited the town, however. In 1366 he is recorded paying the contribution of the See of Glasgow to the King’s Chamberlain (and there was a contemporary of the same name recorded in the Exchequer Rolls who was a Burgess of Linlithgow). In 1376 he is the John ‘Lethi’ or ‘Lechi’ who was ‘vicar-general in spirituals’ of Walter, Bishop of Glasgow, when he arranged the transfer of the living of Cavers to Matthew Glendonwyn. There is a Patrick, perhaps his son, who was Dean of Glasgow sometime after 1421 and before 1444, and Chancellor of Glasgow from around 1444–60 (also spelled ‘Liche’ and possibly equivalent to ‘Lethi’).

Leck (lek) n. Rev. Joseph of Rawflat (c.1698–1785) minister of Yetholm, 1731–85. He gained the lands of Rawflat in 1739 and they later passed to John Edmund Elliot. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. A story is told of how he was set upon by robbers, and when he and the leader (the local gypsy Will Faa) recognised each other, there were apologies made, and the pair agreed never to speak of it again. He married Ann Scott from Sprouston and their children included: Henry (1736–67); Susan (b.1742), who married Henry Ainslie, Sheriff-Clerk of Roxburghshire; Jean; William; and Thomas. Robert (b.1811/2) from Castleton Parish, he was a publican at about 31 High Street in 1841 and 1851. This was possibly the same as the White Hart Inn and was listed as the Bull & Butcher in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was listed as an agricultural labourer, living at 3 Slitrig Bank. He married Mary (1811–55) daughter of Robert Mitchellhill. Their children included Margaret, Jane, Mary, Robert, Julian, Helen, Thomas, James and William G.

lector (lek-tur) n., arch. a pupil of English (as opposed to Latin), someone who reads the scripture in church – ‘… those who learned humanity, and also the lectors, were all taught under one roof by the then incumbent … and when those who learned humanity, and others who were lectors, were disjoined …’ [PR1713].

ledger (le-dur) n. a ledger – ‘… As he spiels up and doon his ledger o’ sang, Blithely I ken’ [DH], ‘Hei’s often swung frae scaffolds and faen frae ledgers’ [IWL] (see also the older lether).

leddie see ledy

leddy (le-dee) n., arch. a lady, female landowner or wife of landowner – ‘… her blessings on Leddie Elliot were both loud and long …’ [RM], ‘… But now I was ledy o’ houses an’ land’ [JT], ‘Hooray for Verter’s famous Well, An’ Tamson’s bonnie leddy’ [VW], ‘And we’ll hing thegether like burrs, As lang as oor heads we hain, For his Leddy has tabled his spurs, And Harden maun ride again’ [TK], ‘Then a’ the leddies curled their brows, The cup smashed wi’ a tune …’ [WFC], ‘… Amang them na there was nane to marrow Auld Harden’s leddy, the ‘Flooer o’ Yarrow’’ [WL] (also spelled ‘leddie’ and ‘ledy’, and sometimes capitalised).

led ferm (led-ferm) n., arch. a small farm that is let along with a bigger one on which the tenant resides, the smaller farm having just one or more shepherds living on it – ‘It had been the custom for many years that Craikhope was let as a led ferm along with Billholm …’ [RB].

lee (lee) n., poet. a lie – ‘… But raither wud wait till oor back’s oot o’ sicht, To drap what they ken is a lee’ [WFC], v. to lie – ‘… An muckle mair, if I should mention, Ye’d swear I lee’ [JoHa], ‘Let the leein’ lipps be putten til seelence, whilk speik sadlie …’ [HSR], ‘Thou loest ill mair nor guid, an’ leein’ rthir nor til speik richteouniss’ [HSR] (cf. the locally more common lei).

Lee (lee) n. Agnes (16th C.) widow of Robert. In 1541 she was recorded as tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh. Her first name is written ‘Agnete’. George (b.1803/4) probably born in Hownam Parish, son of John ‘Lees’ and Isobel Paterson. He worked for several years as a jeweller in Hawick. He married Margaret Paris in Stow in 1826; she was daughter of the Stow schoolmaster. Their children included: Mary (b.1827); John (b.1829), who must have died young; James Paris (b.1831), firearms inventor; John (b.1833) Canadian foundry owner; Isabella (b.1835); Margaret Paris; Ann; George; and Jessie. The first 5 children were born in Hawick. He emigrated to Canada with his family in 1836, originally settling in Galt, Ontario. He was recorded there as a watchmaker in 1852. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably related to the Lees who held the other half of the lands. James (19th C.) recorded as teacher at a school in O’Connell Street on Pigot’s 1837 directory. James Paris (1831–1904) born in Hawick, son of George, a watchmaker and jeweller. His mother was Margaret Paris. The family emigrated to Galt, Canada when he was 5. There he became a watchmaker like his father, before moving to the U.S.A. and setting up the Lee Firearms Company during the U.S. Civil War, which led to the Remington-Lee rifle design of the 1880s. He later had a hand in developing the typewriter, and back in Britain developed the Lee-Metford rifle. Modifications to this design at the Enfield Royal Ordnance Factory led to the famous Lee-Enfield rifle in 1895, which was extensively used worldwide over the next 50 years. Variants of this rifle were used in every conflict from the Boer War to the Korean War, and the Lee-Enfield Mark III was the decisive British battle rifle of WWI. He married Caroline Chrysler (of the later automobile family) and had sons William and George. He died while on holiday in Newhaven, Connecticut. A commemorative plaque was placed on the stair from the Kirkwynd to St. Mary’s in 1981, the 150th anniversary of his birth. There is a large plaque in Wallaceburg, Chatham-Kent, western Ontario, where he is said to have completed the design of the box magazine while visiting his brother John. John (1833–1907) born in Hawick, son of George and Margaret Paris. He was a younger brother of James. The family emigrated to Galt, Ontario when he was only about 2 years old. He later settled at Wallaceburg, near Chatham-Kent, in south-western Ontario. He owned a foundry there, and worked with his brother to invent the prototype bolt-action rifle, which led to the Lee-Metford and Lee-Enfield series. Oral tradition says that the first shots of the prototype were fired into an oak tree outside the foundry in Wallaceburg. The original gun is housed in a museum there. He married Louisa Cordelia Clifford and had children James Paris and Frank M. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Roberti de Lee’ in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfohopelee. William is also listed, before him and so probably related. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Old Jedburgh farm. In 1541 his widow Agnes was recorded as tenant of the half farm, with Gilbert (surely a relative) in the other half. William (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfohopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby, including Robert, who was probably related. William (16th C.) tenant of the farm of ‘Auld Jedburgh-heid’ according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was surely related to the other Lees at Old Jedburgh.

leear (lee-ur) n., poet a liar – ‘I said in my haste, A’ men ar leearis’ [HSR] (cf. leier).

leeberal (lee-bu-rul) adj. liberal – ‘The rantin’ songs, the leeberial drams, An’ lashins o’ bitter yill’ [RM], relating to the Liberal Party – ‘I’ve aye voted Leeberal, the Tories I ban; I’ll vote Leebeal again, Mr. Elliot’s my man’ [JCG].

the Leeberal Club (thu-lee-bu-rul-klub) n. Hawick Liberal Club, being a political and social club connected with the Liberal Party. The premises stood at the corner of the High Street and Brougham Place, and were built in 1894 on the site of Milligan’s the cabinet-makers. The architect was J.P. Alison (with help by apprentice Alexander Inglis). It is a prominent L-shaped building with Renaissance detailing and a prominent 3-storey bay window. The club went through periods of financial difficulty, with parts of the building being let for other purposes. It closed in the late 1990s and re-opened as Hawick Sports and Social Club. However, the building has been involved in an ownership dispute, and its future remains uncertain. The building is marked with a plaque commemorating the laying of the foundation stone.

leed (lee-d) adj., n. lead – ‘he was hut over the heid wi a pipe made o leed’, ‘But, oh! the herd that’s in the clay, And cauld as leid’ [TCh], a needle on a knitting frame, v. to coat with lead paint – ‘Ee gaun ower the fireplace wi’ a duster But oor mothers hed a black leeded grate’ [AY] (note the pronunciation; also spelled ‘lead’ and ‘leid’).

Lees (leez) n. former name for the farm now called West Lees, near Appletreehall. The old names for the lands there were Easter and Wester Moormaw. There were Scotts of Lees in the 17th and 18th centuries, connected with the Scotts of Catslack. William ‘in Lees’ was recorded in 1698. Robert Scott was there in 1705. John Elliot was tenant there in 1711, Adam Scott in 1721–35, David Renwick in 1725 and Robert Graham in 1729. George Graham was there in 1747, John Irvine in 1759 and John Scott in 1764. Alexander Somerville was tenant there in 1812. The lands were valued at £52 in 1811, when owned by William Scott of Burnhead. John Wilson was farmer there in 1841 and Thomas Turnbull in 1861 (also written ‘Lies’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Lees see Laws

Lees (leez) n. Alexander (b.1821/2) from Earlston, he was a blacksmith on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 79 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret and Isabella. David (1812/3–78) farmer at Fenwick. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 140 acres, employing 3 people. He married Isabella Tait, who died in 1871, aged 59. Their children included Janet, Isabella and James (who married Jane Little). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. David Crawford (19th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He donated a set of communion plate to the Relief (Allars) Kirk before emigrating to America about 1850. These sacrament vessels went to the elders on the closure of Allars. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1721. He married Margaret Graham and their children included: James (b.1719); and Francis (b.1721). The witnesses in 1721 were John Dryden and James Blyth. Bessie (b.1723), James (b.1726) and Helen (b.1729), baptised in Minto, could also be his children. William (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Brankholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Leys’ (also written ‘Lies’ and ‘Leys’).

the Lees (thu-leez) n. mansion house near Coldstream, built around 1770 for the Pringles and destroyed in 1975. It was then peculiarly converted into a circular house.

Leggat

‘Woollee smiddy’. He was listed among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. He married Mary Scott in 1814. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. His name was written ‘Ligertuood’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish when his daughter Margaret was baptised in 1719. He is probably the James who got married in Ashkirk in 1715 (with no wife’s name given). John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His name was written ‘Ligeruood’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Kedie in 1699 and their children included: Isobel (b.1702); and John (b.1709). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1720 he married Bessie Riddell, who was also from Roberton, the marriage taking place in Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Lidgertwood’ (former spelling variants include ‘Liddgertwood’, ‘Ligertwood’, ‘Litchardwood’ and even ‘Lizzarhide’).

Leggat (le-ga’) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) coachman and servant to Rev. Dr. Charters of Wilton for 42 years. He was recorded as ‘chaise driver’ for the minister in the tax records of 1797. He was a seceder, being a member of the ‘Burgher’ congregation and hence never entered the church to hear his employer preach. When his master preached at a neighbouring church, he would sleep in the carriage until the service was over. He once drove all the way to Ashkirk by mistake without the minister inside the carriage. He was said to be rather slow in his movements, and a story is told of how, when sent on an errand into Hawick, he would fetch a horse from the far end of the Glebe, so that a maid servant had already gone to Hawick and returned before he was ready to go. It is also said that frequent complaints were made by the maidservants about his old-world and disobliging ways, but the minister would always just say ‘As long as I have a house, Andrew shall have a chair’. Andrew (18th/19th C.) gardener and house servant at Woll in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Scott of Woll. By 1785 he was ‘Footman & House Servant’ for Charles Scott of Woll and continued there until at least 1788. By 1791 there was a different servant at Woll, and he was listed as ‘postillion’ at Burnhead. He was still coachman at Burnhead in 1793. It seems possible he was the same man as the coach-driver for Rev. Charters of Wilton. He is probably the Andrew who married Janet Scott in Ashkirk in 1775, and whose children included: John (b.1777); Andrew (b.1779); Margaret (b.1780), possibly the same as Peggy; Gideon (b.1785); and William (b.1790), born in Wilton, who became a merchant in New York. Andrew (18th/19th C.) whipmaker in Hawick. His son William died in Hawick in 1808 and his daughter Margaret in 1810; she could be the daughter of Andrew and Janet Scott born in Ashkirk in 1780. His son William died in 1808. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Andrew (b.1750); Walter (b.1752); John (b.1754); Bettie (b.1856); Gideon (b.1758); James (b.1763); and Robert (b.1767). He may be the Gideon in Unthank who (perhaps secondly) married Margaret Oliver from Abbotrule in 1762. He may be the Gideon, son of Andrew, born in Kirkton in 1722. John (18th C.) listed as house and stable servant at Woll in 1797, when he was working for Charles Scott. He was probably son of Andrew, who had earlier been the servant of the Scotts of Woll. John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the John whose son Walter was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1791. Janet, described as ‘independent’ in Denholm in the 1841 census, may have been his widow; by 1851 she is a 76 year old pauper, recorded as born in Denholm. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (b.1780) probably daughter of Andrew and Janet Scott. She married Thomas Purdie in Wilton in 1802.

Rev. Robert (b.1861) son of James and Jane Finlay, he was born at Coatbridge (or Old Monkland). He was educated in Glasgow and learned shorthand at an early age. He worked in an accounting office, then for a newspaper, but gave up journalism to train for the Church. He was licensed in 1889 and in 1891 was ordained as minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He remained there until 1898 when he left for Bankhill Church, Berwick, which he resigned in 1919. He set up a Literary Society in Rulewater and contributed to several newspapers and magazines. He did not marry. William ‘Willie’ or ‘Wullie’ (1718–1768) 2nd son of Andrew, blacksmith at Cauldmill, he grew up with his older brother Archibald and sister Margaret, who worked on Cavers estate. He was a simple-minded worker employed on Cavers estate to run errands, and is traditionally said to have been killed by the cook when he returned with the wrong vegetables. He was immortalised in stone through a crude statue, where he is posing with his dog, bonnet and basket. He lived with his sister Margaret at Cauld Mill; she was a servant, possibly working in the washing house there. Lady Cavers appears to have been kind to him, since there are several estate records of purchases of clothing and shoes on his behalf. The statue was probably an apprentice piece by a mason at Denholm Quarry. One story is that Wullie did not like it and kicked off the dog’s ear in anger. The statue originally stood in the walled garden at Cavers, later being moved to the sawmill and then to near the mansion house itself. There it was vandalised and the pieces fell into different hands and the statue was believed to be lost forever. However, the pieces were collected by W.B. Little and Jack Fraser and the statue reconstructed by Fraser and placed in the garden of old Wilton Manse. After Fraser’s death (and much negotiation) it was returned to Cavers around 2002, and is now situated outside the modern Cavers Kirk. William (b.1790) born in Wilton, son of Andrew and Janet Scott. In Hawick he was a friend of William Scott, later his business partner. He emigrated to New York in 1818, where he started a dry goods firm of Scott & Leggat, with a shop on Hudson Street. He married Mary Robertson and then Jane Ann Atwill (who was a niece of William Scott’s wife). His children were: Jennett (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); Richard (b.1833); Gertrude Roos (b.1834); William Scott (b.1839); Mary Jane (b.1840); Anna (b.1843); and Alexander (b.1845). It is said that he ‘cherished an ardent love for his native country and retained to the last in all its purity the Scottish accent’.

leggums (le-gum) n., pl., arch. leggings – ‘...the motor dreiver, trig in eis tich leggums’ [ECS], ‘A per o’ leggims’ [GW] (also ‘leggims’).

the Legion (thu-lee-jin) n. Hawick Royal British Legion Club, formed in 1938. The Club met originally in the Y.M.C.A. rooms on O’Connell Street, then on Commercial Road and after WWII moved to 3 O’Connell Street, which had been the ‘Central Rooms’ or Johnstone’s tea rooms. The Club existed to help ex-servicemen in difficulty and as a social centre for ex-servicemen, and was a branch of the national association founded by Earl Haig in 1921 (with the ‘Royal’ title being granted in 1971). Capt. B. Montgomery was the first Chairman and Provost Llandes was the first enrolled member. The Club published the ‘Hawick Pictorials’ 1939–59. It also helped found a football team in 1953, started by Ronnie Telfer. The Club closed in 1997, with the clubrooms later used as a fitness centre. There was also a branch in Newcastleton, at 3 North Hermitage Street.

Leipzig

Leipzig (lip-zig) n. battle of 1813, where the coalition armies defeated the French under Napoleon, being the largest battle in Europe until WWI, and the first major defeat for Napoleon. Although no British troops were involved, the victory was a cause of huge celebrations throughout the country. It was celebrated in Hawick with illuminations, probably meaning extra lamps and candles in the mains treets, burning tar barrels and a torchlight procession.

leish (leesh) adj., arch. supple, athletic, active, nimble, sometimes suggesting tallness – ‘...my faither was buchtin’ the Brocklaw yowes to twae young, lish, clever hizzies ae night after sunset’ [LHTB], ‘A pairteet thre th leesh, swank-leike fallih (‘at ’Ad been followin eis lead) at the whusht road-end at Jedfit’ [ECS], ‘My fishin’-wand, it’s strang an leish ...’ [DH], ‘The gress grew lang an leish ahint the schule’ [DH] (occasionally spelled ‘leash’ or ‘leesh’).

Leishman (leesh-min) n. James (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Edinburgh and the north, as well as to Newcastle, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may have married Catherine and had children including Robert. Robert (b.c.1812/3) Hawick hosiery traveller from the West End. In 1837 he was running a cart from Buccleuch Street to Edinburgh and Galashiels twice a week, and once a week to Newcastle. In 1841 he was listed as a carrier on the Back Row. He often accompanied William Laidlaw on sales trips to the Newcastle area. It was said to have been ‘an open secret that Robert’s conscience did not trouble him with knotty questions of excise’ [JHH]. His wife was Isabel (from Smailholm) and their children included James, Agnes, Margaret, Jane and Thomas. His mother was probably Catherine (living with him in 1841). By 1871 he was living in Berwick and his name was spelled ‘Lishman’. Robert ‘Bert’ (d.1961), well known local auctioneer, with a saleroom in the old ‘Green Kirk’ building at Myreslawgreen. He was writer of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column for many years. He was also a member of Hawick Town Council and Bailie from 1946 to 1961, when he died on a visit to Tasmania.

Leishman Place (leesh-min-plis) n. part of Burnfoot, built in two phases, beginning in 1957. It is a dead-end street off Ruberslaw Road and was named after Bert Leishman.

Leishman’s (leesh-minz) n. carriers firm of the early 19th century which ran weekly between Hawick and Newcastle.

leisome (li-sum) adj., arch. telling a lie, fibbing – ‘If it’s nae lee, it’s e’en unco leesum like’ [JoJ] (also written ‘leesome’, but not to be confused with ‘leesome’).

leisome-like (li-sum-lik) adj., arch. like a lie – ‘A leisome-like story’ [GW].

leister (lee-stur) n. a spear with three or more prongs used for fishing – ‘Wi’ their nets and their leisters, their bowats and gegs ...’ [UB], ‘In my youth, when ‘leisters’ were not illegal, or at least when their use was winked at by the powers that were ...’[RB], v. to fish with a leister – ‘...when law allowed the leistering of salmon ...’ [RM] (probably from Old Norse; some old examples exist in the Museum).

the Leisure Centre (thu-leeshur-seu-ur) n. Teviotdale Leisure Centre, Mansfield Road, opened in 1982 on the site of the former railway station. It consists of a swimming pool and squash courts, with an indoor bowling hall opened in 1985. It was designed by Faulkener-Brown, Hendy & Stonor of Newcastle, with opinions differing as to its aesthetic qualities. The bowling extension was not designed to match the original part, and here opinions do not differ. The palm tree fell into the pool in 2008.

Leitch (leech) n. Andrew (b.1838) son of Andrew from Largo, he studied at St. Andrews University 1855–59. He became a teacher, working in Castletown, Caithness, Dollar Academy, Dalry, and also in Hawick. George (b.1795/6) from Galashiels, he was farmer at Barnes in 1851. He was then farming 730 acres and employing 6 people. His wife was Isabel (from Smallholm) and their children included James M., Alexander, Isabel and Richard W. Simon (15th/16th C.) tenant of Minto Craigend about 1502, along with Thomas Young and his son Thomas, and William Johnstone. Their farms had been raided by a group led by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshaws, for which Scott received remission. His name is recorded as ‘Symon Leich’.

Leith (leeth) n. port situated where the Water of Leith joins the Firth of Forth, now essentially part of Edinburgh. It was an important port for local trade, particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries. Sometimes proclamations were read ‘at the peer of Leith’ in order to be widely broadcast, e.g. a record in the 1723 Session books relating to an attempt to ascertain whether a Hawick woman’s husband was alive or not.

Leithead (leeth-head, lut-head) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) weaver in Crumhaugh. In 1722 he married Rachel Scott in Hawick Parish. They had a daughter Isobel in 1726, and another Isobel in 1732. The 1725 baptism was witnessed by William Elliot and John Scott. He could be the man of that name, ‘old Andrew Cross Wind’, who died in Hawick in 1778. He could be the Andrew who witnessed baptisms in 1772 for Robert and for Walter and in 1774 (along with Robert) for John. David (17th C.) resident of ‘Crackuooll’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. Probably the same David married Janet Shiel with their daughter Agnes baptised in 1690, and witness Robert Pringle and James (probably a relative). Gladstones (b.1744) local labourer, son of William. He married Helen Hall and their children, baptised in Kirkton Parish, included: Betty (b.1769); Helen (b.1774); Gilbert (b.1776); Janet (b.1777); and another Janet (b.1786/7), who married shepherd and carrier Adam Scott. Henry (b.1817/8) from Polwarth in Berwickshire, he was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He is recorded there in 1851 and 1861. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianae’. He was said to have ‘a curious habit of putting his tongue out at the side of his mouth, and is here represented doing so.’ He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Hymers in Cavers Parish in 1856. Their children included James (b.1857), Margaret (b.1859) and Elizabeth Agnes (b.1860). Isabel ‘Tibbie o the Green’ (c.1795–1870) well-known West-ender of the mid-19th century. Daughter of market gardener Robert, the family had a garden at Myreslawgreen, the property of Mr. Turnbull of Briery-yards. She lived in a house near there, possibly corresponding to 4 Myreslawgreen, being there with her brother William until his death in the 1850s. She was known as an independent but warm-hearted person who kept old-fashioned dress. She is probably the woman of this name who was among West-enders to recover from cholera in 1832. In 1851 she was described as a ‘Gardener’ and in 1861 she was an ‘Outdoor Worker’. She also had a niece Isabel Mein and a grand nephew Robert M. Laurie. Her bier is said to have been the last that used the Hawick ‘mort-cloth’. The family name locally goes back at least to William of Cavers Parish, whose daughter Margaret was married in Edinburgh in 1708. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from the wright there. James (17th C.) wright of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Nochol and their children included: James (b.1704).
of William and Janet Tait. He lived at Sandyhall (Ashkirk), Woll (Ashkirk), Birkwood (Ashkirk) and Langshaw (Melrose). In 1803 he married Jane Harvey. Their children included: William (1805–74); Robert (b.1807), who married Janet Jessce Knox and emigrated to Waterloo County, Ontorio; Jane (b.1811), who married William Dodds; James (b.1816), who died in Wyoming; Thomas (b.1817); John (b.c.1820); and Janet or Jessie (b.c.1824), who married James Cousins. John (b.c.1810) carter in Hawick. In 1841 he was listed as a farmer, probably on the Cross Wynd, but by 1861 he was at Mather’s Close. His wife was Mary and their children included John, William, Janet, Henry, Thomas, Agnes, Mary and Margaret. He may have been son of the earlier Jphn of the Cross Wynd. Richard (b.c.1775) mason who lived on the Kirkwynd. He married Elizabeth Aitkin and their children included Robert, David and Catherine. Robert (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is probably the Robert who (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism in 1774 for John. He married Betty Laidlaw and their children included Andrew (b.1770) and Isabel (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were Andrew (perhaps his father) and Alexander Bunyan. He is probably the Robert whose wife was buried in Hawick in 1772. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hogg and their son Walter was baptised in 1777. The witness were John and Walter, who were surely his close relatives. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Tushope in 1767. Robert (18th/19th C.) one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in about 1798. Robert (18th/19th C.) described as ‘R. Leithead o’ the Green’. He may be the market gardener who was father to ‘Tibbie o the Green’. In 1809 he and weaver Peter Fletcher walked to Selkirk to secure the services of a drummer and a fifer for the ‘rebel’ party at the Common Riding. He could be the stocking-maker Robert who contracted cholera in 1832, but recovered; he lived in an upper flat of the house containing Henry Haliburton on the Back Row. He married Janet Anderson in 1782. Their children included: William (b.1783), who was a frame-worker; Robert (b.1785); Robert (b.1786); Jane (b.1787); Isobel (b.1790), ‘Tibbie o the Green’; Agnes (b.1792); and Mary (b.c.1800). His mother ‘at the green’ died in 1782. He is probably the stockingmaker Robert whose unamed child died in 1811. Robert (19th C.) stocking-maker who lived on the Loan. In 1863 he presented the Archiological Society with the flag from the ‘Wasla Water’ party of 1809. He was surely related to the earlier ‘R. Leithead o’ the Green’ who had been involved on the ‘rebel’ side in 1809. He could be the Robert born to Richard and Elizabeth Aitkin in 1805. Walter (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed in Lilliesleaf. He may be the Walter, portioner of Lilliesleaf, who married Marion, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth (or Euphan) Henry and their children included: Andrew (b.1766); and George (b.1768). Witnesses to the 1766 baptism were Andrew and John, who were surely closely related to him. Probably the same Walter witnessed (along with John) a baptism for Robert in 1777. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marjory Thomson and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were Andrew (surely related to him) and Andrew Thomson (probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same William married Isobel Scott and had a son Walter baptised in Ashkirk in 1691. The baptismal witnesses were Robert and William Scott(probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He was probably related to Walter, who was a wright in Lilliesleaf at the same time. William (17th C.) farmer in Cavers Parish. He is recorded as deceased in 1708 when his daughter Margaret maried Alexander Grib in Edinburgh. William (17th/18th C.) gardener at Fenwick. He married Bessie Stevenson in 1714, possibly at the house of William Whillans at the Flex. This was a ‘supernumerary marriage’, i.e. the celebration had more guests than the modest amount prescribed by the law of the time. Both he and Whillans probably lost the bond that they had lodged with the Session. William (b.1721/2) farm labourer in Hawick Parish, living at Meikle Whitlaw and Flex from infancy. He worked mainly as a ploughman. In 1741 he was recorded as resident at Whitlewauhaugh. In 1767 he gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common; he was described as married at that time. He married Bessy Gledstains.
and their children, born in Hawick Parish, included: John (b.1737); Gledstains (or Gladstone, b.1741), an unusual forename, presumably from his mother’s maiden name; and Janet (b.1743). The witnesses in 1741 were carrier John Ruecastle and Kirk Officer John Telfer. Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Whittal in 1768. William (18th C.) recorded living at Orchard in 1749. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included John (b.1743), Richard (b.1745) and Robert (b.1749). William (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish that had formerly been owned by the fenars of Lilliesleaf. These lands were valued at £171 10s. He was also recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as former holder of lands in Lilliesleaf that had been acquired by Edgar Hunter and were at that time owned by William Riddell of Camieston. He was probably related to John, who also owned lands in Lilliesleaf (also spelled ‘Leathhead’, ‘Leitheheide’, ‘Leithhead’, ‘Lithead’ and ‘Lithhead’).

lemane (le-main) n., poet. a sweetheart, concubine – ‘Ther ar thriescoore queens, and fourscoore lemanes, an’ mays wuthowten nummer’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

Lempitlaw (lempit-law) n. village in north-eastern Roxburghshire, about 3 miles east of Kelso. It used also to be the name of a small parish, which was annexed to Sprouston. The church there was connected with Soutra. The site of the 13th century parish church can still be made out in the churchyard, which includes a well-preserved hog-back gravestone. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott of Rankilburn and his son Walter in the early 15th century. They were effectively annexed to the Barony of Branxholme, remaining that way through part of the 16th and 17th centuries. In 1517 they were described as being ‘waste’, but valued at 20 pounds in times of peace. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. In 1692 the ‘tacks’ of the lands were set to Sir Patrick Scott, along with those of the Barony of Eckford and the lands in Hawick owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties and still listed as a Buccleuch property in the Land Tax Rolls of the 19th century (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘lumpedu hlaw’, meaning ‘limpet-shaped hill’; it first occurs as ‘Lempedelawe’ in 1190 and is ‘Lempatlaw’ in 1426, ‘Lempatlaw’ in 1463, ‘Lempetlaw’ in 1484, ‘Lempetlaw’ in 1517, and ‘Lempetlaw’ in 1528 and 1553/4).

len (len) n. a loan – ‘gie’s a len o a fiver’, ‘Wull ee gie’z a len o eer grap’ [ECS], ‘Gie’s a len o’ eer hurlibarra’ [GW], ‘Howanever, insteed o’ comin for the len o’ mine for the denner tables …’ [BW1978], v. to loan – ‘Ane guid man shaws faavor an’ len’s …” [HSR], ‘Can ye len’s half a croon?’ [RM], ‘He is evir misrecorde, an’ len’s: an’ his affspring ar blisset’ [HSR] (shortened form of lend: also written ‘len”; see also take a len o).

lenity (lo-ni-tec) n., arch. mildness, lenience – ‘…and whereas the said Mr John of his own lenity, since the aforesaid year 1669, never quarell’d several persons in the toun to educat children further than the said book …’ [PR1713].

lenten kail (le-ti-n-kail) n., arch. a meatless vegetable soup, often made of boiled cabbage served in milk – ‘Dame Appetite, he thought to bang her, But flesh is frail! That day – bad luck, (mis-fortune hang her), Brought lentrin kail’ [JR], ‘It [the food] consisted of milk and meat and what was called ‘Lenten Kail’, an expression now rarely heard in the parish [of Teviothead]’ [HAST1902] (also ‘lentrin kail’; probably from being served in the Spring).

lenth (lenth) n. length, the extent of something – ‘look it the lenth o that hing!’, ‘…lyk as at mair lenth is contenit in the decret gewyn the day be the lenth’ [GW], ‘The awfishest blatter o rain cam on, and A was amaist drookeet be A wan the lenth o the Sandbed’ [ECS], state of extreme agitation or anger, tantrum, fit – ‘she we’ an awfis lenth when she saw the messs’, ‘Hei’s gaun a bonnie lenth’ [ECS], distance to someone’s adode – ‘If ee come ma lenth, gie’s a ca’ [GW], the whole extent – ‘The day be the lenth’ [GW] (note the difference in pronunciation compared with standard English).

the lenth (thu-lenth) adv. the distance, as far as required – ‘But they told Bailie Purdom who went the length, that …’ [PR1722].
the lentho (thu-lenth-o) adv. as far as, the full extent of – ‘the bairn got the lentho the street afore they fund ‘er’, ‘Yince an A’d wun there, A thocht, A micht mebbes cood geet a hurl the lentho o Hawick’[ECS], ‘A wun the lentho o’ the brig’[GW].

lengthen (len-thin) v. to lengthen (note that n replaces ng).

leper squint (le-pur-skwun) n., arch. a leper’s squint, a small, low window in a church through which lepers could hear and see the communion service without coming into contact with the congregation. There may be an example in Cavers Auld Kirk (also written ‘leper’s’ or ‘lepers’) the Leper Well (thu-le-pur-wel) n. popular name for a spring near Spittal-on-Rule, still current in the mid-20th century. The spring was surrounded by dressed stones, and its name gives some creedence to the idea that there was once a leper’s hospital there. It was also known as ‘the Kirkyaird Well’, and used to be thought to possess healing powers, particularly for skin diseases.

leprosy (lep-ru-se) n. chronic, mildly contagious disease caused by Mycobacterium leprae, characterised by inflamed nodules beneath the skin, loss of sensation and wasting of body parts. It now occurs only in tropical and sub-tropical regions, but was common in Mediavdal Europe, where it was seen as both holy and sinful. It was certainly rife throughout the British Isles by the certain region. It has a tower-shaped dovecote dating from about 1800.

least (lest) v. to last, endure – ‘A deh ken how long he’ll lest is the new R.E. teacher’, ‘She’s like a guid bit tweed hersel’, Made tae lest forever’[IJ], ‘...thinkin that here was a meenit o his life he wad like to lest for ever’[DH], ‘...But how lang will it lest’[WL], adj. last, final – ‘she’s the lest o her generation’.

lestand (les-tand) pres. part., adj., arch. continuing, lasting – ‘...Jhone Scot, and Stephyn Scot, greyting in Gode ay lestande’[SB1431].

lestic (les-teek) n., adj. elastic – ‘My mither aince for lestic sent me roun’, A yird o’ black tae dae her need’[WL], ‘Skinny’ or ‘grey’ – ee even got a choice: Succulent dauks o lestic-sided dough’[DH], ‘Sailin roond in a sea o’ bliss wi a conconut in yin hand And a ‘lestic ba’ in the tother ...’[DH] (cf. leskit and eleestic).

let bat (le-baw) v., arch. to give an indication, let on, inform, declare – ‘Never luit bat! = Take no notice! or Keep ‘mum!’[ECS], ‘Brer Rabbit never luit bat’ when he ‘lay low and sed nuf’[DH] (cf. bat).

let dab (le-dawb) v., arch. to hint, divulge a secret – ‘Aw think she jalooses what Aw’ve come for, but mind, Aw never let dab about the rest o’ ee’[JEDM], ‘And, loons, here’s a secret I’m gaun tae loot dab ...’[DJ] (sometimes ‘loot dab’).

Letham see Lethem

Letham (le-thum) n. James (1954–) born in Airdrie, he was educated in Aberdeen at Madras College in St. Andrews and at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music in Glasgow. After training as a teacher he was appointed to Galashiels Academy, then became Head of Music at Jedburgh, before succeeding Ian Seeley as Head of Music at Hawick High School in 1997. He has been involved in a large number of musical enterprises in the Borders, including serving as musical director for Hawick Amateur Operatic Society, conductor of the Eildon Singers and the Borders Youth Orchestra and work with the Hawick community choir the Melody Makers. He has been a strong promoter of the work of Hawick-born composer Sir
Lethem

John Blackwood. He also wrote the music for ‘The Best O’ A’’. He retired in 2011 (see also Lethem).

Lethem (le-thum) n. hamlet between the A6088 and A68, just before the Carter Bar, in the eastern part of Southdean Parish. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 3 stedings and valued at £3 6 shillings. In 1541 Thomas Laidlaw was tenant of part paying 22s yearly and Laurence Lawrence and James Laidlaw were tenants of another part paying 22s yearly. John Oliver and Simon Robson were there in 1623. John Thomson was tenant there in 1694. Thomas Scott is recorded there on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls and his son was still there in 1841. Walter Renwick was shepherd there in 1797. There was once a chapel here, but no signs of it remain, although the small hill to the west is known as Chapel Knowe; here there are the remains of a settlement, about 43 m by 33 m in size, overlain by a smaller, roughly triangular enclosure (note, however, that there could be confusion here with the ancient chapel which was once situated in the village of Leitholm in Eccles Parish). A fort is on the hill just to the north. ‘Katey’s Cross’ was also just to the west, once used as a gathering point for a local market, and on the site of the former settlement of ‘Wattie’s Spinnels’ (also written ‘Letham’, as well as ‘Leatham’, ‘Lethame’, etc.; there are other places of the same name in Eccles Parish near Berwick, also called ‘Leitholm’, as well as elsewhere in Scotland).

Lethem (le-thum) n. Edmund (13th/14th C.) rector of ‘the church of Saint Marie of Farmainishop’ (i.e. St. Mary’s of the Lowes, Yarrow) from 1292. He is recorded as ‘Master Edmund de Letham’. In 1296 he swore fealty to Edward I, and later that year he received a writ from Edward to restore him to his lands and rights as ‘parson of the church of the forest’. Helen née Turnbull (17th C.) wife of James. She kept an inn in Hawick after her husband’s death. Here in 1642 a large group was drinking with a servant of the Laird of Cavers, who accused his companions of stealing his wallet, with the case heard by the Hawick Magistrates. John and William, mentioned in the same case, were his sons. Henry (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scots, Turnbuls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. Isobell (b.1687) born in Hawick, daughter of James and Isobell ‘Gyrden’. She is recorded as ‘Lithen’ in the Parish records in 1713 when she returned to Hawick after working ‘in service’ in Edinburgh, and was asked to produce a ‘testificate’ since it was rumoured that she had been married and her husband Benjamin Taylor had deserted her. In 1715 she was described as ‘servitrix to ye Laird of Whithaugh’ (the one in Liddesdale) when summoned by Hawick Session from Castleton Parish ‘to come and satisfie here for her scandal of adulterie’. She stood several mornings at the church door in sackcloth, but because of the distance she had to travel was then leniently ‘to appear hereafter on the usual place of repentance in sackcloth two other days, before noon and after noon’. She appeared for the last time at the end of that year, and appears to have then fully satisfied the Session. It is possible she is the Isobel ‘Lithen’ recorded in 1716 when her son John, conceived in adultery with John Scott, was baptised in Hawick. By 1723 she appears to have settled into a relationship with William Hood, and again the Session became upset by ‘the scandal of adulterie’; she stood in sackcloth for 11 Sundays and her partner William for 6 Sundays. James (16th/17th C.) assualted by Walter Scott of Burnfoot and his wife Margaret with a large stone in St. Mary’s Kirk in 1616. They were later also accused of assaulting him and his wife on the High Street, along with 7 accomplices. The same James was probably an innkeeper, whose widow Helen Turnbull is recorded in 1642 as part of a court case when a group of people were accused of stealing a wallet in her establishment. Their sons are there recorded as John and William ‘Lethane’. He may also be the ‘James Lechen’ recorded in the 1616 trial over the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley; afterwards when ‘Marion’s Geordie’ was confronted in Hawick as a suspect by James Douglas, he and 2 other men (‘Bonnie Johnnie’ Scott and James Wemys) took the pistol from Geordie before he could shoot. James (17th C.) probably son of John and Isobel Turnbull. He married Isobel Jardine (or ‘Gyrden’). Their children included: John (b.1783); Andrew (b.1686); Isobel (b.1687); and Andrew (again, b.1689). The witnesses in 1689 were Bailie James Deans and Andrew Porteous. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Benjamin Taylor had deserted her. In 1715 she was described as ‘servitrix to ye Laird of Whithaugh’ (the one in Liddesdale) when summoned by Hawick Session from Castleton Parish ‘to come and satisfie here for her scandal of adulterie’. She stood several mornings at the church door in sackcloth, but because of the distance she had to travel was then leniently ‘to appear hereafter on the usual place of repentance in sackcloth two other days, before noon and after noon’. She appeared for the last time at the end of that year, and appears to have then fully satisfied the Session. James (17th C.) probably son of John and Isobel Turnbull. He married Isobel Jardine (or ‘Gyrden’). Their children included: John (b.1783); Andrew (b.1686); Isobel (b.1687); and Andrew (again, b.1689). The witnesses in 1689 were Bailie James Deans and Andrew Porteous. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 (suggesting they were related). James (17th C.) recorded as an officer of the Baron in Hawick in 1672, specifically ‘the one of the Erles officers’, at the 1672 setting of the fair. In 1673 he was recorded as Procurator-fiscal of the Regality of Hawick. James (17th/18th C.) sheriff officer in Hawick. He was ‘officer’ in 1700 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Robert Paisley and for Robert Gledstains. In 1702 (or perhaps 1712) he was found guilty by the Session of drinking after 10 p.m., and for swearing. He is described as ‘James Leythen, shyreff-officer’, but it still seems unclear whether he was a Burgh Officer or an officer of the court. He was ‘officer’ in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter (who was surely related). He could be the same ‘James Leithan’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is possible he was the same James who was Procurator-fiscal of the Regality of Hawick in the 1670s, or otherwise was surely related to him. John (13th C.) witnessed to a charter for Melrose Abbey sometime in the period 1220 to 1243. John (17th C.) son of James and Helen Turnbull. He is described as ‘in Hawick’ in a 1642 Magistrates Court trial when he was one of several accused of stealing the wallet of Samuel Rutherford (a servant of Douglas of Cavers) in his mother’s inn. He later accused Rutherford of violently demanding the whereabouts of his wallet. His brother William was also mentioned in the 1642 case. He could be the John ‘Lithen’, married to Isobel Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1648), James (again, b.1649), Helen (b.1652), William (b.1654), or alternatively the John, married to Janet Gledstains, whose son Francis was baptised in Hawick in 1643. Probably the same John ‘Lethane’ was mentioned in Hawick in 1656, when Martin Elliot was ordered to pay 30 shillings ‘for absence from his service for 5 weeks’, although let off the money claimed ‘for the Trooper coming to the said John Lethane’. John (17th C.) Bailie or officer of the Baron in Hawick in 1673. In that year the Earl of Queensberry complained that his representatives were attacked when trying to ‘ride the fair’ in Hawick ‘and particularly did assault and invade the said John Lea-then with drawn swords, and masterfully pulled him off his horse, tore off his clothes, and struck him’. His surname is given as ‘Leathen’, and it is possible this may have been a variant of ‘Leyen’ rather than ‘Lethem’. However, he may have been related to the slightly later James ‘Leythen’ who was a ‘shyreff-officer’. Richard (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident recorded as ‘Leythen’ in 1707. William Sutter was rebuked for being in his house at the time of Sunday morning service. Walter (17th/18th C.) shoemaker listed among the young men fined for their part in the disturbances at the Common Riding of 1706; his surname is recorded in the Town Book as ‘Leythen’. The group seemed to be mostly from the West-end, suggesting he was also from there. He is probably the Walter, son of William ‘Lithen’ and Jane Morrison, born in Hawick in 1682. He was Walter ‘Lithen’ when he married Isobel Newbie in 1707; they had several children baptised in Hawick, including Marion (b.1708), James (b.1711), William (b.1713), Jane (b.1715), Walter (b.1717), Gavin (b.1719), Robert (b.1721) and Patrick (b.1723). The witnesses in 1711 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and James Lethem ‘officer’ and in 1721 were Bailies George Martin and Robert Ruecastle. William (17th C.) brother of John in Hawick. They were listed in 1642 among acquaintances of Samuel Rutherford, servant of the Laird of Cavers, who accused them of stealing his wallet in Hawick. William (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is probably father of shoemaker Walter, and hence likely to have been a shoemaker himself. He is likely the son of John and Isobel Turnbull, born in Hawick in 1654 and the husband of Jane Morrison, whose children baptised in Hawick included Walter (b.1682), Thomas (b.1684), Beatrix (b.1687) and Helen (b.1689). the witnesses in 1684 were Thomas Turnbull and James ‘Lithen’ (who was surely related). (spellings vary, such as ‘Leithan’, ‘Lethean’, ‘Letham’ and ‘Lithen’: the surname probably derives from the lands of Leitholm in Berwickshire, but some fraction may come from the more local area in Southdean Parish; it is possible that the name was once the same as or confused with Leyden).

lether (le-thur) n., arch. a ladder – ‘…unless the bystanders had not quickly procured a leather, which taken at the west gavel of John Kaidzie’s house …’ [JW1767] (see also the more common leder).

leuch (lewch) pp., arch. laughed, uttered a laugh – ‘And leugh, and cried, as he trumpet him down – He will be a sottering bleeze’ [JTe], ‘Hei leuch at the laich door-heid’ [JAHM], ‘The [ECS], ‘He leuch a guid yin' (= had a hearty laugh)’ [GW], ‘... he never leuch but when the clock chappit’ [DMW], ‘Syne he up and he leuch at the baur he uttered, And missed the aith that the ledder muttered’ [WL] (also written ‘leigh’; past tense of leuch; the past participle form is leuchten; the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ü and oo).

leuch (lewch) adj., arch. low in various senses, not high, short – ‘Cash from Andrew Pertos, for the rent of the leach prison, 0 10 0' [BR1751], 'Shurelie men o' leuch degree ar vanitie: an' men o' heich degree ar ane lee' [HSR], 'Beith leuch an' heich, riche an' puir thegither' [HRS], ‘Duist at the gangeen-in ti the village, alang the lauch road thonder ...’ [ECS], ‘A leuch-lyin’ place’ [GW], adv. low in respect to situation (also written ‘leach’ and perhaps ‘leach’; cf. laigh and law).

leve (leev) n., arch. permission, leave – ‘...for outyn the leve of ony juge of law, spirituale or temporale ...’ [SB1470].

the Level (thu-le-vul) n. popular name for the High Level pub.

Leven (lee-vin) n. old name for the ‘Line’ or ‘Lynie’ Water just over the Border in Cumbria. It was formerly one of the lawless valleys of the Border. It is probably the place referred to in the late 15th and early 16th centuries when many Scotsmen were charged by the Privy Council with ‘communing with the English of Levin’ and similar. For example, in 1493 Walter Scott of Headshaw paid a fine for ‘treasonably Intercommuning with the Thieves and Traitors of Levyn’ and Robert Scott in Todshawhaugh and John Turnbull in Hawick compounded for bringing in rebels ‘de levyn’. In 1494/5 Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for bringing in 5 Armstrong brothers, traitors ‘de levyn’. In a note to a legal case of 1502, Pitcairn gave a footnote to word ‘Levin’ as ‘A district of Lancashire, then infamous for its ‘Traitouris’ and ‘lymmaris,’ who made numerous raids and forays every year on the least protected parts of the Scottish Borders’. However, it seems likely that the term was used to apply fairly generally to rievers from over the Border, rather than only for Englishmen from this valley. Thomas Musgrave in 1583 described it thus: ‘Black Leven water is a littell brooke, and so is Whyt Leven the lyke, and are not in anie place a myle and a halfe distant one from an other, and are inhabyted with the Nyxons, untiit it come to a place called the Blackdobs, are then the Rutligis dwell on bothe the side of it, untiit it come to a place called the Lukkins of Leven, then it descends Sowpert, wheare the Taylors have it, thens it descendes the boundes of Sopert, and is inhabyted by Graymes called the Graymes of Leven, and runeth into the ryver of Eske at Gorth Storys howse called the Lard. There is also a river of the same name in North Yorkshire, which drains Lake Windermere into Morecambe Bay, but it seems unlikely this is what is meant in the 15th and 16th century references (it is written ‘levy’ in 1493).

lew in (loo-in) v., arch. to involve, oblige to do something – ‘Ti lewe in = to involve; to ‘let in’ or ‘drag in’’ [ECS], ‘A was lew’d in ti pay his fine’ [GW] (also written ‘lewe in’; only used in the past participle).

Lewenlees (lew-in-leez) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded c.1376 on a rental roll as part of the area then known as Ermildon. It was recorded as ‘Lewynleys’, and valued at 16 shillings and 2 pence. In 1541 it was ‘Lewinlowis’ and valued at 10 shillings, with Robert Elliot as tenant.

Lewenshope (lew-inz-hop) n. former farm on the north side of the Yarrow valley, south of Hangingshaw. These were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, leased to Sir George Douglas and to the Murrays, with the Murrays continuing as owners into the 16th century. James Murray of Falahill held the lands of the Queen in 1528 and assigned them to his wife, Margaret Home. Patrick Murray of Hangingshaw was recorded as owner in 1541, when the rental was £50. ‘Lewinshope & Scadarig’ were held by Johnstone of Alva in the 1802 Land Tax Rolls (it is marked both ‘Lewinshoope’ and ‘lewinshoop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Lewynnishop’ in 1456 and 1471, ‘Lewinishope’ in 1484, ‘Lewynshop’ in 1486, ‘lewynhop’ in 1494/5, ‘Lewinshop’ in 1502 and ‘Leyvmnshop’ in 1541).

lewer (loo-ur) n., arch. a lever, pole for levering – ‘The mouse proposes to join her in spinning; and inquires, ‘But where will I get a spindle, fair lady mine?’ when the frog desires it to take ‘the auld mill lewer’’ [JL].
Lewis

Lewis (loo-is) n. Alexander (19th C.) listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a cole merchant for the Duke of Buccleuch, based at the Hawick Station. James (b.1828/9) born in Cavers Parish, son of Walter and Barbara. He was living with his parents at Howgill in Ewesdale in 1841. By 1851 he was teacher at Burnmouth School in Castleton Parish. He lived there with his younger sister. By 1861 he had been replaced by John Hardie, but it is unclear what happened to him.

Leyden (li-, Il-din) n. Adam (17th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Ledan in Little Cavers’ in 1684 when he was among those proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. Adam (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Andrew (b.1694) was probably his son. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Spittal in 1721. He probably married Helen Turnbull in Cavers in 1709 and their children included: Helen (b.1710); Betty (b.1712); Jane (b.1714); Isabel (b.1717); William (b.1719); and James (b.1721). Adam (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Pott. He married Elizabeth Richardson and their children included: John (b.1757); Adam (b.1759); Elizabeth (b.1761); Peter (b.1762); Walter (b.1765); and Robert (b.1767). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation, in 1762 were weaver John Simpson and Kirk Officer Alexander Bunyan and in 1765 were Alex Nivison and James Brydon. He could be the Adam ‘Liddon’ who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. He is probably the Adam whose son Andrew died in 1778. Adam (b.1780/1) bookseller in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on Miller’s Close with farmer John (probably his brother) and Helen (John’s wife). In 1851 he was a lodger on O’Connell Street. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (1788–1876) son of Robert and Helen Clerk. He was a farmer living up the Loan. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer of 30 acres, and resided at about 66 High Street. His fields were probably up the Wellogate. In 1816 he married Margaret Laidlaw, and she died in 1856. Their children included: Robert (c.1819–77), who married Betty McAlpine; Betty (b.1819), who died young; John (1821–57); Matthew (b.1824), who died in Melbourne; Andrew (b.1830), coal agent and Cornet; and Helen (b.1834), who married Alexander Nivison Scott. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. He is probably the Andrew, married to Catherine Aitchison, whose children baptised in Hawick included Manie (b.1635) and Christian (b.1640). The witnesses in 1640 were William Lorraine and Simon Adamson. He himself witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Scott in 1640. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (probably actually the Hassendean area). He witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott and Isobel Turnbull in 1683 and another for Gavin Turnbull in 1684. He married Janet Fletcher and their children included: Isobel (b.1681); and Andrew (b.1683). The witnesses in 1681 were William Turnbull and William Redford and in 1683 were Robert Thomson and James Thomson. Andrew (18th/19th C.) youngest brother of Dr. John. He stated that, although young at the time, he remembers the farewell visit of his brother, and their mother singing the ballads ‘Young Benjie’, ‘Tamlane’ and ‘Bonora’. Andrew (b.1830) son of Yeddie, farmer at the Wellogate, who lived at 66 High Street. His mother was Margaret Laidlaw, from Melrose. He was Cornet in 1857, when the first known photograph of the Principals was taken (note that there is some confusion over whether the image might be flipped, with the sash over the wrong shoulder and hence the Right- and Left-Hand Men switched). He worked as a coal agent. In 1859 he married Margaret Elliot (b.1829) from Castleton Parish, daughter of John Elliot and Fanny Wilson. He moved to 6 Cross Wynd and later moved to Newcastle where he ran a pub. Their children included: Frances (formerly surname Elliot, b.1856); William Elliot (b.1859); Margaret (b.1861), who died young; Adam (b.1862), cabinet maker; and John (b.1864). George (b.c.1775) baker who lived at about 49 High Street. He is recorded there in 1841 with his wife Janet and children Joan, George and Margaret. James (1637/8–88) tenant in Earlside. His gravestone in Cavers kirkyard was written in verse, starting ‘Here lies the body of James Leydon, In this churchyard beneath this stone; And Margaret Scott, his spouse alone, Lyeth also here beneath this stone’. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included William, Adam and John. His will is recorded in 1688. He could be the James (with surname blank) recorded ‘in Earlesdye’ in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. James (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys that killed about 200 men. Most of those who survived were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica or New Jersey. James (17th C.) tenant in Little Cavers. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He may be the James who was listed at Ashybank in 1694 or the James in ‘Estloidge’ (if this is East Lodge) whose will is recorded in 1698. James (17th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. The will of his wife Margaret Greenshields is recorded in 1690. James (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1788–91. He was a carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and had 4 horses at that time. He is probably the James ‘Leadon’ whose child died in Hawick in 1787. Jane (19th C.) one of the operators of the first 4 power looms to arrive in Hawick, at Dicksons & Laings in 1830. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1688 along with Bessie Wilson, when they were fined for insulting Bailie Scott when he was equipping the Royalist Militia. Janet (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick when she paid the Hearth Tax in 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Gledstains and their son Francis was baptised in 1643. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included James (b.1648), James (again, b.1649), Helen (b.1652) and William (b.1654). The witnesses in 1654 were Andrew Liddersdale and Robert Scott. John (1632/3–88) farmer at Earlside and ancestor of John Casper. He married Margaret, and his children included William, Adam and John. He is buried in Cavers old churchyard and is said to have composed his own epitaph in verse for his tombstone – ‘Here lies the body of James Leydon, In this Churchyard beneath this stone, And Margaret Scott, his spouse alone, Lyeth also beneath this stone. And their posterity that’s gone, Lies also here beneath this stone: William, Adam Leydon, and John, Ly also here beneath this stone. In Earlside they lived some years agoone, Now here they ly beneath this stone’. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Young and their children included Janet (b.1688). John (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: William (b.1693); Margaret (b.1694); Isabel (b.1696); and Margaret (again, b.1696). John (17th/18th C.) resident at Dodburn. In 1706 he married Janet Scott in Hawick Parish; he was recorded being from Kirkton Parish. His children baptised in Cavers and Kirkton Parishes included: James (b.1706); Samuel (b.1707); and James (again, b.1709). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Tower in 1727 when he married Bessie Murray. He may be the John who was in Denholm in 1730 when his son Samuel was baptised. He may also be the John who was in Birneyknow when his unnamed child was baptised. His other children may have included: Adam (b.1714); Bessie (b.1718); John (b.1722); Adam (b.1724); Isabel (b.1728); Walter (b.1728); John (b.1734); Margaret (b.1736); Euphan (b.1738); an unnamed child (b.1740); another unnamed child (b.1742); Margaret (b.1743); and James (b.1744). It seems likely that there are at least 2 families here. John (18th C.) tailor in Denholm, recorded in 1726. Probably the same John was also recorded in Denholm in 1730 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. His children included: Hugh (b.1726); and Bessie (b.1730). It is unclear which other children were his, and which were the other contemporary James in Cavers. John (18th C.) cooper at Dykes. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1730. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Margaret Laidlaw. Their children included: Robert (b.1750). John (b.1764) and Margaret (b.1766) may also have been his children. John (18th C.) father of John Casper (b.1775). He was shepherd at Henlawshiel from the late 1770s and later took over the whole of Nether Tofts. He married Isabella Scott. They had 3 other sons, as well as 2 daughters. His children may include Betty (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771), Jean (b.1777) and Mary (b.1780), all born in Cavers Parish, but with no mother’s name given. Robert was one son and the youngest was Andrew (but there appear to be no records of their baptisms). He is probably the John, son of John, born in Cavers Parish in 1734. John (18th/19th C.) heckler at Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William was also recorded in Denholm, and so probably related. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (d.1808) from Cavers Parish, he was described as a lapidary (i.e. jeweller) in Edinburgh when his death was reported in the Scots Magazine. He left £50 to his native parish. Dr. John Casper (1775–1811) linguist and poet, born in Denholm, in the thatched cottage on the Green (which can be seen in an early photo of Denholm, and still exists today). His father John was manager at Nether-Tofts farm and his mother Isabella Scott was from Liddesdale. The family moved to Henlawshiels when he was four. He was taught to read by his grandmother and learned Border ballads from his mother. He went to Kirkton School at age 9, where his roughly 3 years of schooling was interrupted by one schoolmaster dying and another being removed. He was tutored by Rev. James Duncan of Denholm for another couple of years, where he developed his Latin and Greek abilities. It is said that his father wanted to purchase an ass to convey him the 3 or so miles to Denholm, and although put off by the ridicule he would get from his classmates, he accepted the offer when the owner threw in a copy of old language dictionary (the ‘Calepini Dictionarium Octalinge’). At age 15 he went to Edinburgh University (apparently going half-way with his father on a horse, then walking the rest), where he qualified as a doctor and a minister. In Edinburgh he joined the Literary Society, where he made many friends and practised public speaking. He is said to have already known French, Spanish, Italian, German, ancient Icelandic, Arabic and Persian before he was 20! On trips back to Denholm he studied in a bower in Denholm Dean in the summers and in Cavers old kirk in the winters. He also spent one summer as an assistant teacher at Clovenfords (more specifically Caddonlee), where he met Nicol the poet. He was also allowed access to the library of Cavers House when back from university. In the later 1790s he served as private tutor in the summers, and so spent less and less time in his beloved Borderland. With an interest in travel and other cultures, he wrote ‘Historical and Philosophical Sketch of the Discoveries and Settlements of the Europeans in Northern and Western Africa, at the Close of the Eighteenth Century’, published in 1799. Additionally he contributed poetry to the Edinburgh Magazine. However, he continued to be a regular attendant at Hawick markets, and nearly came to grief there in 1799, when a troop of Volunteers, friends of Mungo Park’s, objected to Park’s treatment in his book on African discoveries. He was licensed to preach in St. Andrews in 1798, and gave occasional sermons around Edinburgh. At one point there was an arrangement for him to become assistant and successor to the minister of Cavers, but this fell through. He collaborated with Walter Scott in collecting ballads, wrote poetry and edited the Scots Magazine for about 6 months. In 1800 he spent several months touring the Highlands (his manuscript travelogue being published much later). His poem ‘The Elfinking’ was published in Lewis’ ‘Tales of Wonder’ in 1801. On having the prospect of an appointment with the East India Company as assistant surgeon, he quickly completed his medical training, receiving an M.D. from St. Andrews. He paid his last visit to his parents and Teviotdale in late 1802. He missed embarking on the intended ship through illness, that ship wrecking on Margate Sands. While waiting for the next ship he prepared the epic ‘Scenes of Infancy’ for publication. He then sailed for Madras, where he served as surgeon, then went as surgeon and naturalist on an expedition through Mysore, although he became ill and convalesced in the house of Sir John Malcolm (of Eskdale). His anthology ‘The Scottish Descriptive Poems with some illustrations of Scottish literary antiquities’ was published in 1803. In 1805 he went on a sea voyage to Pulo Penang (Prince of Wales Island) Malaysia, where he was the only European on-board, and they narrowly avoided being captured by the French. He spent months there, where he met Stamford Raffles among other people, addressing his verses ‘The Dirge of the departed Year’ to Mrs. Raffles. He returned to Calcutta and after writing a dissertation on asiacic languages was appointed Professor of the Hindostani language in Bengal College, which he later gave up to be a Judge in Calcutta (being appointed by Lord Minto). After 2 years he switched position again to be a Commissioner of the Court of Requests in Calcutta, which required knowledge of the local languages. In 1810 he became Assay Master at the Calcutta mint, with relatively high salary and light duties. But this new easy life was short-lived, for in 1811 he accompanied Lord Minto on an expedition to Java, where he helped translate and write letters between the British and local chiefs. He accompanied the conquering British troops to Batavia but there contracted a fever (it is said from the ‘pestilential air’ of a store room containing ancient objects in a Dutch government building, but probably either malaria or dengue). Three days later he was dead, at the age of 36. He was buried at Tanabang Cemetery, Batavia (now Jakarta). He was said to be of medium stature, but strong and athletic in his youth. He also strictly abstained from vices. He talked loudly and a lot (Lord Minto wrote ‘I do not believe so great a reader was ever so great a talker) in a ‘shriil, piercing, and at the same time grating voice’. He was proudly independent, was said to be lacking in refined manners, and retained his Teviotdale accent throughout his life (which put off many Englishmen). Encouraged to lose his accent he replied ‘Learn English! no; never; it was trying to learn that language that spoilt my Scotch, and as to being silent, I will promise to hold my tongue, if you will make fools hold theirs’. It is said that the main defect of his personality was ‘his passion for display’ and hence ‘he was naturally enough judged by many, who measured him by an ordinary standard, to be more superficial than profound’. Nevertheless his drive to study, even through illness, was remarkable, and he said ‘I cannot be idle; and whether I die or live, the wheel must go round to the last’. He is supposed to have spoken 34 separate languages or dialects (the estimated numbers vary), and translated several texts in obscure dialects. He also translated some of the gospels of the New Testament into Pushtu, Maldivian, Beluchi, Macassar and Bugi. At the time of his death he was contemplating a comparative arrangement of languages. There are only 2 surviving likenesses of him, one being a sketch made by Capt. George Elliot on the voyage to Java. A monument to him was erected in 1861 in the middle of Denholm Green, designed by Hector H. Orrock. The cottage in which he was born still stands on the north side of the Green. A granite obelisk was erected at Henlaw-shiel where he spent his childhood. His first published poem was in the Edinburgh Literary Magazine in 1795, followed by many more, including ‘Ruberslaw’ that same year; these first contributions were signed ‘J.L., Banks of the Teviot’. As part of his long poem ‘Scenes of Infancy’ (1803), he wrote the oft-quoted lines: ‘Boast! Hawick, boast! thy structures rear’d in blood, Shall rise triumphant over flame and flood; Still doom’d to prosper, since on Flodden’s field Thy sons a hardy band, unwont to yield, Fell with their martial king, and (glorious boast!) Gain’d proud renown where Scotia’s fame was lost’. His 2 other poems with local flavour are ‘Lord Soulis’ and ‘Cout of Kielder’. He contributed several pieces to Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’ (1801), including most of the essay on fairy superstitions. The glossary of his annotated ‘The Complaynt of Scotland’ (1801) is a useful early source of local words. He also edited ‘Scottish Descriptive Poems’ (1803). Much of his output was published in ‘The Poetical Remains of the Late Dr. John Leyden, with Memoirs of His Life’, edited by Rev. James Morton (1819). Although his poetry has largely gone out of fashion, the fantastic poems ‘The Mermaid’ and ‘The Elfin King’ have had a lasting popularity. Several of his translations and other largely completed projects, left with his friends Richard Heber and William Erskine, were published posthumously, but others were lost forever. 2 books, ‘Life of Dr. John Leyden, Poet and Linguist’ (1908) by John Reith, and ‘Leydeniana: or, Gleanings from some unpublished documents regarding Dr. Leyden’ (1912) by James Sinton, collected much of what had been learned about Leyden in subsequent years. A centenary celebration was held in Denholm in 1875 and there were also events in 2011 to mark the 200th anniversary of his death. A booklet ‘Dr. Leyden’s Punjabi Translations’ was published in 2011 – ‘The tongue that was spoken by Leyden and Scott …’ [WS], ‘His bright and brief career is o’er, And mute his tuneful strains; Quenched is his lamp of varied lore, That lov’d the light of song to pour; A distant and a deadly shore Has Leyden’s cold remains’ [SWS], ‘…Since Leyden left his dearly loved strand To find a grave in scorched Java’s sand’ [JoHa], ‘Regretted by the worthy and the wise. A higher monument is his, by far, Than any costly pile of stones can show, Or sculptured column towering to the skies’ [JCG], ‘A fremm land claimed his banes, and though He feared we’d a’ forget In loyal herts oor lad o’ pairts Will lang be honoured yet’ [WL]. John (b.c.1785) farmer on the High Street. He was living on Miller’s Close in 1841. His wife was Helen and they also lived with Adam (probably his brother), a bookseller. Janet, who was probably related, was a widow on Miller’s Close in 1851, with daughter Jane and grand-daughter Margaret Hutton. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Denholm. He married Isabella, daughter of Rev. William Burn. Their children included William (b.1811), proprietor of the Fox & Hounds. He could be the same as the heckler recorded in Denholm in 1776. John Lamb, O.B.E., C.B.E. (1904–88) descendant of John Casper, he was born locally and became a linguist and diplomat. A plaque to his memory was added to the Leyden memorial.

Margaret ‘Peggy’ (18th C.) servant at Cavers in 1791, when she worked for George Douglas.

Matthews (b.1794/5) stocking maker in Wilton and Hawick. In 1835 he was listed among heads of households at Wilton, but in 1840 and 1841 was at Melgund Place. By 1851 he was a foreman in a woolen factory, living at 3 Weensland (which probably meant Weensland Mill Houses).

In the 1841 census he was at about 7 Melgund Place. His wife was Helen (or Ellen) and their children included Robert, Helen, Margaret, John, Edward N. and George. Robert (c.1770–1840) carrier in Hawick. In 1816 he purchased 66 High Street, and the buildings behind 66 and 68, from stockingmaker Walter Murray. His family owned these properties for almost 50 years. He may have been the Robert who was son of Adam and Eliza Richardson, born in Hawick in 1766. He is recorded as a carrier in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He married Helen Clerk in 1791 and she is probably the wife of his whose death is recorded in 1808. Their son Adam (‘Yeddie’) farmed up the Wellogate. He probably died in the cholera epidemic, his death being listed along with 9 others on the same day. Robert (18th/19th C.) son of John and brother of Dr. John. He studied medicine. It is said that he took an unfinished portrait of his brother John (perhaps the only accurate portrait) and had it altered to become a portrait of himself. Sir Walter Scott wrote to him on hearing the news of his brother’s death.

Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Beatrice Balmer in 1844 and their children included: George Lunn (b.1855); Robert (b.1857); and Helen (b.1862). Samuel (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was at Dodburn in 1730 when he married Helen Elliot. His children, baptised in Cavers, included John (b.1731), an unnamed child (b.1737), Hanna (b.1743), Jean (b.1745), Elizabeth (b.1748). William (17th C.) married Bessie Elliot in Robertson Parish in 1688. His wife was from Cavers Parish. He he probably the William who witnessed baptisms for Isobel (perhaps his sister) and William Lamb in Robertson in 1687 and 1688. William (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was probably related to Adam, who was also listed in Denholm. He is probably the William who was living at Ashybank in 1702. He could be the William whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Andrew (b.1694); James (b.1696); John (b.1702); and Janet (b.1704). William (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Leadin’. He could be the ‘W. Leyden’ fined along with ‘J. Swan’ in 1702 for drunkenness. William (17th/18th C.) wright in Denholm in 1722 when his son Adam was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers Parish, who were probably his include William (b.1716), Helen (b.1717), William (again, b.1720), Bessie (b.1727) and William (again, b.1732). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included an unnamed son (b.1724), William (b.1726), John (b.1728), Euphan (b.1731) and James (b.1734). William (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably related to the William mentioned in 1735 when the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate, which was to the east of his. He had a son who died in Hawick in 1815. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1751. William (18th/19th C.) cooper in Denholm, recorded in 1769 and 1771. His children included James (b.1769) and Janet (b.1771). Probably the same William was the resident in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; he was probably related to James, who is also listed under Denholm. There appear to have been 2 contemporary Williams in Cavers, with other children of one or other family being Jane (b.1763), Betty (b.1765), John (b.1765), Isabel (b.1767), James (b.1767), Betty (b.1770), Jeany (b.1773) and Bellow (b.1773), William (b.1811) born in Denholm, son of John and Isabella Burn. In his youth he was a superb athlete, excelling at multiple sports at the St. Ronan’s Games in the period 1832–35. In 1833 he won both the running and standing versions of the ‘hop, step and leap’, as well as 2 races. In 1834 and 1835 he won just about every event he entered, including the long jump, high jump, wrestling and throwing. He was a stockingmaker in Denholm and also proprietor of the Fox and Hounds. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as vintner at the ‘Hare & Hounds’.

Leyden Cottage (lā-din-ko¬-cej) n. house in Denholm that was the birthplace of John Leyden.
Leyden Monument

in 1775. It is a small thatched and harled cottage off the north corner of the Green, on Leyden Road. It bears a commemorative plaque, and is now designated a ‘Class B’ listed building. It can be seen in the 1850s sketch by J.A.H. Murray and in a photograph from perhaps the 1860s. It was re-thatched in 1946 (also called ‘Leyden’s Cottage’).

Leyden Monument (lí-, Il-din-mo-new-min’) n. memorial to John Leyden erected on Denholm Green in 1861. It was designed by Hector H. Orrock and sculpted by Handyside Ritchie. It consists of a Swinton stone Gothic spire on top of two tiers of Aberdeen granite columns. It used to get an annual wash by the Denholm fire brigade. It was restored in 1982 with funds raised by a sponsored walk following the route Leyden took when he left to attend Edinburgh University.

the Library (thu-I-bru-ree) n. Hawick Public Library, founded in 1878 under the provision of the Public Libraries Act (which allowed the use of rate money). It started in rooms in the Exchange, with a temporary move to Bridge Street in 1883, before moving to an upstairs part of the new Town Hall in 1886. The earliest history is unclear, with some accounts suggesting that the first ‘public’ library was founded in 1760 or the first ‘subscription library’ in 1762, with other ‘circulating libraries’ started later; the ‘Public Library of Hawick’ published a catalogue in 1792. Dr. Charters of Wilton set up a free circulating library for members of his congregation in the early 1800s. The Trades’ Library was started in 1802. The current library building on North Bridge Street, built with a gift of £10,000 from Andrew Carnegie, was opened in 1904 by Carnegie himself, with Mrs. Carnegie ceremonially unlocking the doors with a golden key. The opening day was a half holiday in the town, and the streets were decorated with flags etc. It was designed by John Nicholl Scott and Alexander Lorne Campbell of Edinburgh (who also designed the Boer War Memorial), following a design competition. The building has some stonework by William Birnie Rhind, with the exterior dominated by the corner entrance tower and the round-headed gables. There are 4 large windows with heraldic designs, with the arms of Dunfermline (Carnegie’s home town), Hawick, Galashiels, Selkirk, Jedburgh, Kelso, Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Berwickshire and emblems of Scotland, England and Ireland, together with the arms and mottoes of the Ker, Scott, Douglas, Gladstains, Elliot, Armstrong and Turnbull families. The building had a major extension, funded by Sir Thomas Henderson, in 1939. The Library is now integrated into the Scottish Borders Council Library Service, and holds a valuable reference section of materials relating to Hawick. It is a grade B listed building.

Lichton (licht-tin) n. (15th C.) proposed as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1472, on the nomination of Patrick Hume. However, by 1474 the Archdeaconry was held by David Luthirdale.

The Licht Roads (thu-licht-rödə) n. former popular name for the road in the Thorter-dykes area distinguished from ‘the Derk Roads’ in not being covered in trees, and presumably corresponding to the present Rosebank Road and Burnflat Brae.
licks (lights) n., pl., arch. the refuse from winnowed grain.

lights (lights) n., pl., arch. lights. Hawick’s first street lights were a set of 60 oil lamps, ceremoniously lighted on New Year’s Day 1813, mainly along the High Street. They were lit nightly by the lamplighter from 15th November until 7th April, and several more were added in 1815. Gas lighting was introduced to the streets in 1831. Electric lighting started in 1901 with the Urban Electric Supply Company. Lighting was first used for rugby games as early as 1879.

lichtsome (licht-sum) adj., poet. light, carefree, cheerful – ‘...failed to damp the buoyancy of his spirits, which was so remarkable that ‘as lichtsome as Yedie Broon’ became a local proverb’[WNK], ‘O ye that bear the lichtsome soul, that love things waggish, daft and droll’[RM], ‘I’m humming sudden snatches of a lichtsome melody ...’[JYH], ‘...ma lang Dander throwe the Bonnie Borderland, ... – cam ti an end i the hert o a lichtsome strooshie’[ECS], ‘Aroond the town in lichtsome lilt There’s music sweet and clear’[WL].

lichtsomeness (licht-sum-nis) n., poet. light-someness, nimbleness – ‘...But she taks her lichtsomeness oot o’ the springtime, The lass wi’ the lauch that wad gliff awa care’[WL].

lick (lik) prep., adv., arch. like – ‘aa thaim an other sic lick things’ (see also like).

lick (lik) n., arch. a stroke, blow, the merest drink or taste – ‘Gie’s a lick o sayrup, mother, ir ee?’[ECS], ‘Faix bit A’m dry; A hehna hed a lick an a day’[ECS].

A thing of huge and monstrous size Was steering that way hastily’[ES], ‘Sweet sand the Liddle at our feet, I never heard it flow so cheery; With bliss life’s moments seemed complete That night by Liddle wi’ my dearie’[TCh] (sometimes written ‘Liddell’ or ‘Liddle’ and formerly ‘Liddal’).

Liddelbank (li-dul-bawngk) n. mansion on the Liddel Water, near the very southernmost point of Roxburghshire. It was built on what had been part of the farm of Greena in 1793 for William Oliver, the local Sheriff and enthusiastic promoter of road improvements. Oliver was recorded there as owner of no less than 10 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James Alexander Attwood was there in the early 19th century and Walter Armstrong around 1821. Robert Jardine, M.P., lived there in the mid-19th century, William Brackenridge around 1870 and Thomas Bell in the latter part of the 19th century. Coal was once mined (in limited quantities) on the estate. It is also sometimes called ‘Bellsbank’. The house has a walled garden, now derelict – ‘Liddelbank, unrecorded in tale yet, or story, Neglected – forgotten in Border bards’ song: Fair gem of the Liddel, its pride and its glory, I will chant thee a stave as I journey along’[DA] (it is ‘Liddel Bank’ in 1797 and ‘Liddell Bank’ in the 1860s).

Liddel Castle (li-dul-kaw-sul) n. former Castle in Liddesdale, between Newcastleton and Saughtree, near the confluence of the Liddel and the Esk. Nothing remains now of this Norman fortification, except some impressive earthworks between the road and the river, on a promontory, surrounded on 3 sides by the river and the Kirk Cleuch Burn. It was once surrounded by the Castle Town, which gave its name to the area, although little evidence of former habitation remains today. The castle was probably built by Ranulph de Soulis when he was granted the surrounding barony by David I in the 12th century. It was constructed on the usually motte and bailey pattern, covering about 200 m² in the north section and 160 m² in the southern, sloping section. The location of a well can also be identified as a square depression. The castle appears to have been abandoned around the early 14th century. Around the 18th century it was sometimes referred to as ‘the Roman Camp’, because the origin of the mounds were not understood.

Liddell (li-dul) n. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as ‘servant to Widow Layng’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Archibald (18th or another man of the same name) was recorded warm! He may have reformed, however, since he never pray for them as long as his blood was copalianism), specifically saying that 'he would for William and Mary (i.e. not giving up Epis-

of weights and measures for the Burgh, and is also measures for making use of other measures be-given in not only by the tacksman of the Duke’s sures used by several Hawick traders, in presence
at St. Jude’s Fair. In 1676 he checked the mea-sides his, but also by ane great number of poor people'; he thus effectively served as the surveyor of weights and measures for the Burgh, and as a result was tried for treason in 1484 an executed soon after. He was patron of Blind Harry, and it is said he was a major source of information for the poem ‘Wallace’. James (17th C.) Town Clerk 1658–59. Probably the same James was on the Council in 1668 and was Procurator Fiscal of Hawick in 1673. In 1673 Robert Scott of Horsleyhill was charged by the Bailies with stealing from his house ‘five firelocks with ane pair of bandeliers belonging to the town’. Presumably he had charge of some of the firearms used by the Burgh Officers, and the theft could be part of the events around disputes between the Hawick authorities and the Baron’s Bailie. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Stewart in 1651 and another for Thomas Scott in 1654. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for John Elliot, farmer at Southfield, in 1672. He may be the merchant of that name on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot
at St. Jude’s Fair. In 1676 he checked the measures used by several Hawick traders, in presence of divers and sundry witnesses, upon complaint
given in not only by the tacksman of the Duke’s
measures for making use of other measures besides his, but also by ane great number of poor people’; he thus effectively served as the surveyor
of weights and measures for the Burgh, and is also referred to as a merchant. He may be the James, made to Isabell Watt, whose children included:
Isobell (b.1650); and William (b.1653). Rev.
John (17th C.) graduating from Glasgow University in 1674, he was licensed by that Presbytery in 1681. He was presented to Hobkirk Parish in late 1682 and ordained there in early 1683. However, he was deprived in 1689 for not praying for William and Mary (i.e. not giving up Episcopalianism), specifically saying that ‘he would never pray for them as long as his blood was warm’! He may have reformed, however, since he (or another man of the same name) was recorded as assistant at Montrose in 1696 and Brechin in 1698. Robert of Balmure (15th C.) Steward of King James II. He was one of the Commissioners for negotiating with the English in 1453. He served as Ranger of Yarrow Ward from at least 1456 and through the 1460s. He had the farms of Blackgrain, Montbenger and then Tinnis in Yarrow for his fee. Probably the same Robert was also Keeper of Dunbenger, as well as being involved with the leasing of Crown land in Galloway and March, and thus mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1440s and 50s. He may be the Robert whose murder by James Davidson ‘in Quhitmerhall’ is recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502. It seems likely he was related to George, who was Rector of the Forest in the 1470s and 1480s. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Cawfaulds in 1727. He married Bessie Scott (perhaps in 1714, although no wife’s name is given). Their children included:
Robert (b.1717); Robert (again, b.1720); Janet (b.1723); and Isobel (b.1727). The witnesses in 1727 were Thomas Turnbull and William Douglas. He is probably the Robert who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Andrew Harkness, resident of Clarilaw. Robert (18th C.) resident of Burnfoot Mill. He married Agnes Douglas and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Robert (b.1751); James (b.1752); Agnes (b.1754); Thomas (b.1757); Archibald (b.1765); and Euphan (b.1770). The 1770 baptism was carried out by Rev. Young of the Associate Con-egregation in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was deceased by 1793 when his widow, Elizabeth Hardie married Alexander Shaw in Edinburgh. Thomas (17th C.) married Isobel
Wright in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish (probably the part corresponding to Hassendean). Their son Robert was baptised in 1687, with witnesses George Scott and James Wright (who was probably related to his wife). In 1686 he witnessed a baptism for George Cockburn in Roberton Parish. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Briery Yards in 1722 and Clarilaw in 1724, 1727 and 1729.
He married Isobel Cavers and their children included: Thomas (b.1722); Isobel (b.1724); James (b.1726); Helen (b.1727); Helen (b.1729); James (b.1731); and Robert (b.1734). The witnesses in 1722 were William and Robert Easton, in 1724 were James Cavers (probably related to his wife) and John Dryden, in 1727 and 1729 were James and John Dryden. Thomas (18th C.) resident of

in 1751. He married Margaret Hoy in 1740 and their children included: Robert (b.1742); William (b.1745); Mark (b.1748); Thomas (b.1751); John (b.1753); and Elizabeth (b.1759). The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Davidson and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1825); Isabella (b.1827); and James (b.1829). Walter (17th C.) see Walter Riddell. William (17th C.) referred to as ‘merchant, younger’ in Hawick in 1644 when he held the surplus of the money collected for the Covenanting army. He or his father may be the same as the procurator fiscal of the Burgh in the 1630s. He may also be the William who was elected to the Council in 1648. He could be the William, married to Jean Liddersdale, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included John (b.1637), Isobel (b.1639), Janet (b.1640), Marion (b.1644), Jean (b.1646) and James (b.1648). He witnessed baptisms in 1641 for William Wright and Thomas Oliver, both along with Andrew Liddersdale (who was presumably closely related to his wife). William (17th C.) listed among the poor of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was ‘in Burnfoot’. This was presumably Hassendean Burnfoot. He could be the William, married to Margaret Scott, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1683 (sometimes spelled ‘Liddel’ and formerly ‘Ledale’, ‘Liddale’, etc.; see also Liddle).

Liddel Strength (li-dul-strench) n. ruined fortress on the south bank of the Liddel Water, near the confluence with the Esk and the village of Moat in Cumbria. It has an impressive high motte and two baileys built on a cliff and dating to the 12th century with a later tower. Sir John Wake held the castle in the late 13th century, and then it passed to Sir Simon Lindsay, who also held Hermitage at the same time.

Liddel Viaduct (li-dul-vI-a-dukt) n. railway viaduct across the Liddel Water on the Waverley Line, just south of Newcastleton. It has been demolished, but the approaches are still visible.

Liddel Witter (li-dul-wi'-ur) n. the Liddel Water, formed by the meeting of 3 burns near Saughtree in the Deadwater heights, it is about 27 miles long and joins the Esk near Canonbie. It was a central feature in the area of cross-border raids that went on for centuries. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrave described it thus: ‘The ryver is all Scottishe, untill it come to Kyrsopp foote, planted with Ellotes untill it come neare Wheatoughe towre, then the Armestronges inhabit it on both sydes, untill it come to Kyrsopp foote, where it takes the dyvysion of the realmes from Kyrsopp – then the Armestronges have the one syde, and the Engrishe Fosters the other syde, soe it desendes by the Harlowe on the one syde and the Haythawyt on the other, and runeth into the ryver called Eske. Its valley, Liddesdale, is now quite under-populated, with Newcastleton the major town (also spelled ‘Liddle’ and older variants).

lidder (li-dur) adj., arch. lazy, tardy – ‘Now Lidderdale has lyan lang in, Fala, fala, fala, faliddle. There is nae riding there at a’: Their horses are grown sae liddar fat, They downa stur out o’ the sta’. Fala, &c’ [CPM], ‘I’ve been very liddar in writin’’ [GW].

Liddersdale see Liddersdale

Liddersdale (li-durz-dail) n. Adam (16th C.) ‘flescheour’ (i.e. butcher) of Hawick listed in the testament of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He was owed money for supplying ‘flesche to the place’ and his name is recorded as ‘Adame Liddersdale’. Andrew (16th C.) holder of 5 participates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was probably related to others of the same surname who also owned lands at that time. He could be the same man as Andrew ‘Lutherdale’. Andrew (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He is probably the currier from Hawick who witnessed a deed in 1630 for Thomas of St. Mary’s Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire), who was granted a fourth part of Easter Mains by Viscount Drumlanrig; John, currier in Hawick, and Andrew, currier in Selkirk, were also listed and so presumably related. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Wright and Thomas Oliver in 1641, for George Scott in 1651 and for John Leyden in 1654. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1651 when his daughter Janet, with Isobel Young, was baptised in Ashkirk. The record is labelled ‘for’, and witnesses were George Orniston and George (who was surely related to him). George (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. He was son of Thomas, who was also a witness. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded as being ‘of Liddersdale’ in 1278/9 when he was on a panel at Newcastle. His family presumably had lands in Liddesdale, and may have given risen to this surname. Hawise (16th C.) owner of 1 participate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s
Liddesdale

1537 Charter. The forename could have been ‘Hally’ or some other close variant. James (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘alias Blakstanehoune in Hawik’. He was probably a Bailie in Hawick, since he gave sasine of the half Barony of Wilton from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert Langlands. It is unclear what his nickname refers to. Janet (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Presumably the same Janet was also joint owner (along with Stephen Scott and John Short) of another particate on the south, as well as a particate on the north side. She was probably related to Andrew, Hawise, Thomas and Nichol, and may have been a widow or heiress. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Johannis Lidderdale’ in Hawick in 1493 when George Waugh in Hawick was surety for him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In the next entry the same John in Hawick was himself surety for Thomas, who was fined for non-appearance. In 1494/5 the pair of men were allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of consorting with the Elliots of Branxholme. John ‘Jock the Deacon’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, with the events themselves happening 2 years earlier. He may have been a Burgh Officer of some sort, given his implication in the treatment of the prisoner in Hawick steeple. His nickname suggests he may have been Deacon in one of the Trades. It seems likely he was related to the earlier John in Hawick. John (17th C.) leather merchant in Hawick. In 1630 he acted for Thomas of the Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire) when he had a ‘clare constat’ for quarter of the lands of East Mains, from the Viscount Drumlanrig. He was presumably related to Thomas in some way, and probably closely related to Andrew (currier in Hawick) and William (currier and Burgess of Selkirk) who were witnesses. John (17th C.) schoolmaster in Hawick, who was one of the witnesses to the signing of the ‘Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union’ (Covenant) in 1638. He is the first schoolmaster on record in Hawick, and although it is not known what sort of school he was in charge of, it was presumably the Parish School. Margaret (16th C.) holder of 1 1/2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Nichol (16th C.) holder of half a particate of land on the south side of the main street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Philip (16th C.) recorded in 1552 when his wife (‘vxori Philippi Lidderdaill’) was listed as being owed money by William, younger of Branxholme. He may be the same Philip listed as owning 2 particates of land on the north side of the main street in Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Robert ‘the Corbie’ (17th C.) one of a list of 16 local men named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. However, when produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Thomas (15th C.) fined in 1493 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John was his surety and he also acted for himself. Both men were ‘in hawic’. He was probably related to the later Thomas. In 1494/5 both he and John were allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for the crime of consorting with the Elliots of Branxholme. In the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 he is recorded having obtained remission from the King. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in the 1537 as holder of 2 particates of land on the south side of Hawick’s public street. He was presumably related to some of the other Liddersdales in the Charter. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His son George was also a witness and he was listed as ‘elder’ (suggesting there was another Thomas at the time). Thomas (17th C.) of St. Mary’s Isle (in Galloway), given quarter of a ‘merkland’ of Easter Mains by Viscount Drumlanrig in a deed of 1630. The deed also mentions John and Andrew, curriers of the same place, and William, Burgess of Selkirk (probably a variant of ‘Lidderdale’; also spelled ‘Lidderdaill’, ‘Lidderdail’, ‘Lidderdale’, ‘Lidderdail’, ‘Liddirdaille’, etc.; see also Luderdale, which may be the same name in some cases).

Liddesdale (li-diz-dal) n. valley of the Liddel Water, extending more than 20 miles from about Peel Fell to the Esk. In rievie days this was one of the most lawless areas in the land, with the Elliots and Armstrongs holding sway over the upper and lower parts of the valley, respectively. The name is sometimes used synonymously with Castleton Parish. A rental roll of around 1376, among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton, is invaluable for listing all the farms in the area in the late 14th century, including the names of many land-owners at that time (‘Willemi Sturhes’, ‘Croyser’, ‘Fethyng’, ‘Loumane’, ‘Willemi filii Alani’, ‘Willemi del Syde’, ‘Johannis Ruffon’, ‘Ricardi Broun’, ‘Thome Gilson’, ‘Ade de Syde’, ‘Elie Nobill’, ‘Dauid Stodhirde’,...

‘Ennie de Lawys’, ‘Ricardi de Lawis’, ‘Roberti de Lawis’, ‘Mathei Meryng’, ‘Willeml Nysson’ and ‘Philippi de Fausyte’; the lands are divided into 4 ‘quarterium’, the 1st unnamed, the others being ‘Ludne’, ‘Ernydloune’ and ‘Mangertoun’, with an additional area being ‘Forest’, and a several other lands being listed as free tenandries or church properties. The lands were a Lordship, held by the Douglases in the 15th century (along with Ewesdale and Eskdale), with a Bailie appointed to administer the lands. When the area was laid waste by the English in 1514 it was described as ‘12 miles of Lienth, within the Middill Marche of Scotland, whereupon was 100 pleughes’. Another rental roll of 1541 (transcribed in the Exchequer Rolls as well as the Buccleuch Muniments) lists more than 140 farms and their values and tenants at that time, mostly Ells in the north and Armstrongs in the south, with a few Nixons, Croziers and others. An English record of 1592 describes that ‘the chief surnames in Liddesdale standes upon Armesstromes and Elwoodes’ and ‘is the most offensive countrie against both West and Middle Marches’. The area was long a Lordship, possessed by the Soulises and Douglases, and later the Earls of Bothwell, forfeited by Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell and passing to the Earls of Buccleuch and Roxburgh in 1632: the document describing this lists the owners of all the farms at that time. The Lordship is listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1663. The area was surveyed in 1718, when most of the farms were possessed by Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch. These maps forma valuable record of the farm boundaries at that time, as well as the location of farmhouses and woods 300 years ago. It is said that Sir Walter Scott’s carriage was the first wheeled vehicle seen in the area in 1798 – ‘The Armestranges, that aye haed a hardy house, but not a hail, The Elliot’s honours to maintaine, Brought down the lave o’ Liddesdale’ [T], ‘Of Liddesdale the common thieves Sae pertly steals now and reaves, That name may keep Horse, noit, or sheep, For their mischiefes’ [SRM], ‘The outlaws come frae Liddesdale, They herry Redesdale far and near; The rich man’s gelding it maun gang, They canna pass the puir man’s mear’ [LHTB], ‘The Teviot lads are funk and free, The Ettrick chaps are fu’ o glee, But far aboon them a’ to me Are the merry lads o’ Liddesdale’ [DA], ‘Oh, Liddesdale, thou land of mist, I lo’e thy benty bogs and rushes . . .’ [TCh], ‘. . .Then swung to their saddles and followed the trail Where the sun leaned over to Liddesdale’ [WHO], ‘. . .And what to me fresher cenow Than the seep o’ a Liddesdale drowe?’ [WL] (formerly spelled ‘Liddeisdail’, etc., it is ‘Valle Lid[el]’ about 1150, ‘Lidelesdale’ in the early 1200s, ‘Lyddellisdale’ in 1353/4, ‘Lyddallisdale’ in 1397, ‘Ledalisdale’ in 1428/9, ‘Lyddalysdale’ in 1456, ‘Liddalisdale’ in 1470, ‘Lidaldais’ in 1472, ‘ledesdale’ in 1479, ‘Lyddalisdale’ in 1489, ‘Liddalisdale’ in 1494/5 and 1502, ‘Ledellisdail’ and ‘Ledallisdail’ in 1508 and ‘Liddalisdaill’ in 1508, ‘Ledallisdail’ in 1526, ‘Liddesdaill’ in 1530, ‘Liddisdale’ in 1535, ‘Liddersdell’ in 1541, ‘Liddisdaill’ and ‘Liddisdale’ in 1551, ‘Liddisdaill’ in 1569, 1586, 1599, 1632, 1653, 1661 and 1663 and ‘Lidesdaill’ in 1661; note there is a small place with the same name in the Highlands).

Liddle (li-dul) n. Ebenezer (b.1791/2) gardener and farmer living on Wiltoun Damside in 1841. In 1851 he was at Upper Damside, farmer of 17 acres. He is listed as a gardener in Wiltoun in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Elizabeth Lillias in Wiltoun in 1812. John (17th C.) minister of Hobbker Parish. He refused to pray for William and Mary and was removed, leading to the Parish being vacant for 1689-94. John (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Carlisle. In December 1808 he was held up at Branhelme by 2 men with pistols. They tied him to a tree and robbed him of over £100. This was the most famous local case of highway robbery. The thieves were never caught, despite a large reward being offered by the carriers of Hawick. Robert (18th/19th C.) overseer at Boghall. He is listed among heads of households in Wiltoun Parish in 1835 and 1840. Thomas (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1794. He could be the Thomas whose son Thomas (b.1777) to Mary Turnbull was baptised in Wiltoun Parish. Thomas (d.1835) grocer and corn dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Thomas who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Maragret Davidson in 1822. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1825), who married baker George Paterson; Isabella (b.1827), who later also married George Paterson; James (b.1829); Margaret (b.1831); Agnes (b.1832); and Jemima (b.1833). His wife and children are recorded at about 8 High Street on the 1841 census (see also Liddell).

Lilliard (li-lee-ard) n. the Maiden Lilliard of Maxton who supposedly saw her lover killed at Ancrum Moor and waded in to avenge him, being killed in the process – ‘… And when her legs were cutit off She fought upon her stumps’. A small monument commemorates her supposed grave, about 400 yards east of the A68, near the line of Dere Street. Unfortunately it seems very unlikely that she ever existed, since the place name predates the battle, the monument is essentially a replacement for the earlier ‘Lilliard’s Cross’ and the lines appear to be cribbed from ‘Chevy Chase’, but it’s a good story nevertheless.

Lilliard’s Cross (li-lee-ardz-kros) n. former wayside marker at Lilliard’s Edge. The name dates back to at least the 12th century, and was still in use in the 16th (it is ‘Lillyat Cros’ in 1378 and ‘Lylzeartis Croce’ in 1547/8).

Lilliard’s Edge (li-lee-ardz-ej) n. farm by the A68, between Jedburgh and St. Boswells, with a nearby caravan park. Dere Street passes near here, and it is next to the site of the Battle of Ancrum Moor, as well as of the monument to ‘Lilliard’. The name is generally applied to the high point on the A68 here, which reaches 172 m (565 ft). Just off the road to the west is the Monteath Mausoleum, and a little further south lies the Lillardsedge Park caravan park (the origin of the name is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Lil’ plus ‘geat’, meaning ‘the gate belonging to Lil’; it appears as ‘Lylzeartis Croce’ in 1548 and ‘Lilliartis Crosse’ in 1632; it is also written as one word, ‘Lillardsedge’).
John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He is probably the John who married Janet Wright in Bedrule in 1691. James (b.1697) and John (b.1697), baptised in Bedrule, were probably his children. John (17th/18th C.) married Mary Young in 1705, the marriage being proclaimed in Bedrule and Minto Parishes. Probably the same John had several children baptised in Bedrule: Isabella (b.1706); Margaret (b.1708); Andrew (b.1711); Mary (b.1714); Robert (b.1716); and Isabella (again, b.1722). John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Mather in Bedrule in 1729. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1727), Janet (b.1730), Marion (b.1732), Thomas (b.1736), Margaret (b.1738) and Walter (b.1743). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1768) and Isabella (b.1771). John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1777.

John (d.1808) Hawick resident. He married Helen Reid, who died one day after him. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott at Whitlefield in Wilton Parish in 1772. John (19th C.) Hawick resident, member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Symington in 1807 and their children included:
Thomas (1807–62), who died in Kelso; and Andrew (1809–c.73), who died in Nenthorn. John (19th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Young and their son Robert was baptised in 1853. Robert (17th C.) married Agnes ‘Willieton’ in Hawick in 1791. Robert (1818/9–76) son of William and Margaret Nichol who lived in at least Cavers and Castleton Parishes. There appears to be no record of his baptism. He worked as a farm labourer at Riddletonehill near Maxton. In 1841, along with his brother James, he emigrated to Canada, other family members following later. He settled in Gloucester Township, Ontario, where he and his brother purchased a farm; he also worked as a stone mason. He married Christina Kinmond and his children were Jane, Margaret, Isabella, Elisabeth, William, John, Jessie, Robert and Christina. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax roll for Bedrule Parish in 1694. Probably the same Thomas married Janet Wright in Bedrule in 1691. His children, baptised in Bedrule, included Robert (b.1695) and Margaret (b.1700). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Thomson and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1722. Perhaps the same Thomas had children William (b.1715) and Isabel (b.1719) baptised in Cavers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Betty Shortreed and their children included Peggy (b.1788) and George (b.1790). Thomas (b.1831/2) from Berwick-on-Tweed, he was a railway engine driver. In 1861 he was living on Wilton Terrace. His wife was Agnes and their children included William and Thomas. Walter (17th C.) recorded on the Hearth Tax list for Bedrule Parish in 1694. He may be closely related to John and Thomas, who are also listed. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule in 1730. Walter (b.1819) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a butcher in Lilliesleaf, probably on the north side. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Eliza Davidson (from Mertoun) and their children included: Agnes; Alexander (b.1849); Jane (b.1851); and William (b.1853). William (1652/3–1720) tenant in West Lees. His wife, Janet Turnbull, died in 1719, aged 55. They were buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably the William listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax records under the Laird of Newton’s farms in Bedrule Parish. He may be the William who married Isabel Rutherford in Bedrule in 1691, and whose children included Walter (b.1691), Thomas (b.1693), Walter (again, b.1696), James (b.1698), William (b.1702), John (b.1705) and Bessie (b.1708). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He could be the son of William Lillico born in Abbotrule in 1665. He was herd at the Flex in 1700 and in 1709. He married Isobel Rutherford in Bedrule in 1691. Their children included: Andrew (b.1691); Margaret (b.1700); William (b.1702); James (b.1703); Agnes (b.1705); and Isobel (b.1709). The witnesses in 1700 were William and Francis Henderson, smiths at the Flex and in 1709 were James Gray in Whitlaw and William Henderson, younger in Flex. William (18th C.) married Jean Ferguson in Bedrule in 1756. William (18th C.) married Elspeth Beattie in Castleton in 1763. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Marion (b.1766), Janet (b.1770), Sarah (b.1772), an unnamed child (b.1774) and William (b.1776). He is probably the William who married Jean Aitchison in Hobkirk Parish in 1770 (but then must have had an earlier wife also). William (d.c.1832) resident of Castleton, Cavers and Bedrule Parishes. He was living at Bedrule Mill in about 1829. His wife was Margaret Nichol, the couple being rebuked for their first child being born in fornication. Their children included: Janet (1800–80), baptised in Castleton Parish, who emigrated to Canada with her brothers and became matron of a home for orphans; William (b.1802) also baptised in Castleton; Adam (b.1812), baptised in Cavers; James (1815/6–99), who emigrated to Canada in 1841; and Robert (1818/9–76), who emigrated with his brother. He was already dead in 1841 when his wife, 3 children and 2 grandchildren emigrated to Canada. An entry in the Bedrule Parish records shows his widow being giving some of the poor money. William (1782–1861) son of Alexander and brother of Douglas. He became shepherd at Gatehousecote and later Templehall. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer living with his family at South Berryfell and in 1851 was shepherd at Dodburn. By 1861 he and his wife were living at Burnflat in Hawick. In 1814 in Hobkirk Parish he married Christian (or perhaps Katherine) Telfer, who was from Newcastle; she died in 1873, aged 81. Their children included: Helen (b.1815); Alexander (b.1816), who was at Ladfield in Oxnam Parish in 1851; James (b.1818); Isabella (b.1820); Elizabeth (b.1823); Christian (b.1825); Helen; William (1827–95); Elspeth (1830–1903); and Andrew. The family are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. William (b.1827) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of William. He was a shepherd at Lillico’s was a tobacco shop at 3 High Street in the 20th century. The property was previously a bicycle shop. Note that there have been members of this family in the Hawick area for centuries. Helen Lillico was wife of Walter Turnbull of Bedrule around 1600, and there were Lillicos farming in Bedrule Parish from at least the late 17th century.

Lillie (li-lee) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as Blakehope in Castleton Parish on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls.

Lillielaw Park (li-lee-law-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was ‘Lillilaw park’ in 1779, when valued at £72 19s 8d and lifestayed by Robert Trotter of Bush. It lay to the north-west of the Minto-to-Jedburgh road, bounded by Craigend farm, Cleuchhead farm, Spout Burn Park, the Minto-to-Jedburgh road and Minto Glen garden. It was still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. A cottage called ‘Lillylaw’ is still marked there on modern maps.

Lilliesleaf (li-leez-leaf, lilz-lee) n. village about 8 miles north of Hawick, and also the name of the associated parish, part of Roxburghshire. The village was once known as ‘Easter Lilliesleaf’, to distinguish it from the Wester part, which was associated with the Barony of Riddell. The Riddells of that Ilk long held lands there, with an early document naming specific places in the early 13th century. The Barony of Lilliesleaf was owned by the Diocese of Glasgow from at least the early 12 century until the Reformation. The village once held several fortified houses, the largest being a 2-storey tower at the eastern end of the village, part of the walls of which still existed until about 1810. The moors around the village held many ‘conventicles’ in the late 17th century, and was the scene of several skirmishes with the dragoons. John ‘sleich’ and Alexander Alemoor are recorded there in 1502. A charter of 1595/6 lists men granted land within the village being Walter Riddell of that Ilk, William Riddell of Bewlie, Archibald Douglas in Friarsshaw, William Riddell in Greatlaws, Alexander Hogg, Thomas Young, William Smail, John Hogg, Thomas Bairnsfather, James Hill, James Henderson, Alexander Smail, Adam Smail, William Robson, William Middlemas, William Douglas and John Redford. The feuars lands were valued at £1283 15s (exclusive of Walter Scott of Chapel’s share) in the 1643 county valuation. Additionally in 1643 Walter Scott held lands valued at £200, Walter Riddell was portioner of ‘20 soums’ valued at £60 and 4 acres at £26, and Alexander Hood held £10. The feuars lands were valued at £800 in 1678. In 1694 the residents recorded there were Andrew Davidson, William Leithead, Andrew Riddell, Andrew Gray, Thomas Smail, David Gray, Alexander Smail, James Leithead, Thomas Marshal, William Mason, Robert Leithead, Walter Davidson, James Riddell, James Redford, James Hill, John Scott and William Henderson, along with merchant John Smail, smith John Wright, cooper John Glendinning and wrights Walter Leithead, John Smail and James Leithead. The 1797 Horse Tax Rolls records the horse owners there as John Cochrane, John Anderson, Andrew Redford, John Muir, Robert Stirling, Andrew Riddell, James Lunn, William Grieve, John Hislop, John Kid, James Stirling, Thomas Chisholme, John Scott, James Hogg and James Easton. In the 19th century there were weavers there working for Hawick manufacturers. The village consists largely of a single street, and has many 18th and 19th century buildings. The present church was built in 1771, with later additions, and the graveyard contains the remains of the Riddells of that Ilk. A war memorial, made of Doddington stone and designed by J.P. Alison, was erected after WWI. A schoolhouse was built in 1822 as well as the ‘Currie School’ for girls in 1860, and the village still has its own primary school. The Common of Lilliesleaf was divided among the feuars and heritors in 1701/2, and only a few acres remained by the early 19th century. There is a multi-purpose building, Currie Memorial Hall. The Plough Inn and the Cross Keys are the local pubs, although there were 4 public houses in 1834. The village was the very first destination for a Ride-out in 1891. It became a regular location for many years, ending in 1984, but revived again in 2004 and 2005. ‘Voices from Lilliesleaf: Life and Work in a Scottish Borders Village During the Twentieth Century’ (2015) was written by Ian MacDougall, based on interviews with locals – ‘And where around lang Lilliesleif With lavish hand is flung A wealth of grace more dear to me Than aught that ere was sung’ [FL], ‘Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lillisleaf’ [WL] (the origin is probably ‘Lil’s cliff’ or ‘slope’, with the Old English personal name ‘Lil’ or ‘Lilla’;) it is first recorded as ‘Lillescleiva’ about 1120, ‘Lillisclive’ and ‘Lyllesclefe’ in about 1150, ‘Lillescleive’ in 1156, ‘Lillesclive’ in 1170, then in forms such as ‘Leslescleiff’, ‘Lellescleff’, ‘Lellisleif’, ‘Lellislie’, ‘Lileisleiff’, ‘Lilislee’, ‘Lillislife’, ‘Lillishie', Lilliesleaf (li-leez-leef) n. farm in Rivonia on the outskirts of Johannesburg, presumably named after the local village. It hit the headlines in 1963 when it was raided by South African police and a number of ANC leaders were captured. The house had been the group’s hide-out for about 2 years. Nelson Mandela himself was captured separately (at Howick!) in the KwaZulu-Natal Midlands and the whole group were put on trial, leading to ‘Rivonia’ and ‘Lilliesleaf Farm’ becoming internationally synonymous with the suppression of black resistance in South Africa. In 1991, after his release from prison, Mandela spent some time scouring the suburbs for the farmhouse and finally located it. In 2001 the Lilliesleaf Trust was set up to turn the farmhouse to turn the site into a museum and conference centre.

Lilliesleaf (li-leez-leef) n. Adam (13th C.) witness to a grant of lands at Cresswell in Hassendean. This was probably in the late 1220s. His name is given as ‘Ada de Lillesclue’. It is unclear how he might have been related to Stephen or other nearly contemporary men with the same designation. Alexander (12th/13th C.) son of Walthof. He witnessed a grant in the period 1185–1215 by Geoffrey the cook of Whittom to the hospital of Jerusalem at Torphichen. He also witnessed the confirmation of this grant by Patrick Riddell and another grant of lands in Whitton by Patrick (who was thus surely related). He further witnessed the grant of lands in Haddington by William of Lilliesleaf to Melrose Abbey, also in 1185–1215. Probably the same Alexander was the father of this same William, who was mentioned in other charters for Walter of Riddell and Adam of Durham in the early 1200s. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) son of Walthof and brother of Alexander. His name is also written ‘Gaufrid’. In about 1200 he granted 3 oxgangs of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey. This was confirmed by Patrick of Ryedale and then Eustace of Vesyce in the early 13th century. There was also separate confirmations of grants to Melrose Abbey of 4 oxgangs of land in Whitton and then 13 acres and half a parcel of land in Whitton in the period 1195–1207. In the period 1185–1215 he witnessed a grant for William of Lilliesleaf. It seems likely that the designation ‘of Lilliesleaf’ (and the connection to Whitton) meant that he was directly related to the Riddells of that Ilk. John (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf in the late part of the 12th century and until at least 1204. He was recorded as ‘Master’ in the period 1201–05 when he witnessed a grant of lands in Clifton in Roxburghshire to Melrose Abbey. Sometime in the period 1182–96 he settled a dispute over the teinds of the lands in Roxburghshire previously belonging to Ulkill Wallace. He was also probably the ‘Master J., Rector of Lilliesleaf’, referred to in a papal letter of 1204. He could be the John, brother of Simon, Parson of Lilliesleaf, who witnessed the renewal of the gift of Hassendean Church in the period 1204–07. He may have effectively taken the surname of Lilliesleaf from his church. Stephen, who held the churches of Borthwick and Nenthorn, may have been his son. He may be the same as John of Huntingdon, who was Clerk of Bishop Jocelin of Glasgow. It is also possible he was son or other close relative of Walter of Lilliesleaf, recorded about 25 years earlier. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johan de Lillesclif’ in the county of Roxburgh when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It seems reasonable to assume that he was related to the earlier John, Rector of Lilliesleaf. His seal showed an 8-rayed figure and the name ‘S’IOHIS D’LELISCL’. He is probably the ‘Johanne, de Lilliscleif’ recorded in a charter of Sprouston in 1320/1. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johan de Lyliscluw’ in the county of Peebles when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It is possible that this was the same man as the John in Roxburghshire, if his name is entered twice. Richard (15th C.) recorded as ‘de Lyliscleue’ in 1436/7, when he resigned the lands of Lilliesleaf to his superior ‘Mungo de Redale’ (Riddell probably). Simon (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf. Sometime in the period 1204–07 he witnessed a charter establishing the Church of Hassendean. His brother John was also a witness, and it is possible he was the man who was formerly the Rector of Lilliesleaf. They may have been part of the Riddell family, who were the superiors of the lands of Lilliesleaf at that time. Stephen (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘master, clerk, persona’ in 1204 when he witnessed an agreement between the Bishop of St. Andrews, Durham Cathedral and Coldingham; he was there ‘Stephano de
Lilliesleaf Burgher Kirk

Lilliesleaf Burgher Kirk (li-leez-leeuf-burgur-kirk) n. former church in Lilliesleaf. In 1804 some of the parishioners wanted William Campbell’s son to replace him as Lilliesleaf Parish minister, but the Duke of Roxburghe appointed James Stalker (who had been Chaplain to the Royal Forces at Fort George, and to whom the Duke owed an obligation). This led about 70 families to secede and form a Relief congregation. However, a dispute with the Relief Synod over the appointment of their first minister led to them seceding from that organisation and becoming a Burgher congregation. Their secession church was built in the village by 1809. There was also trouble over the appointment of the second minister, and hence a gap of several years. the congregation eventually became part of the United Free Presbyterian Church about 1900 (along with the other secession churches), and was united with Ashkirk Free Kirk in 1909. A roll of the ministers is: James Colquhoun 1808–14; Patrick Bradley 1817–41; William Kiddy 1843–49; John Ballantyne 1851–54; William Young 1857–74; Alexander Paterson 1875–96; George Minto 1897–1908; Peter Alison 1909–25; John H. Ogilvie 1926–28.

Lilliesleaf Kirk (li-leez-leeuf-kirk) n. church in Lilliesleaf, at the eastern side of the village, sur rounding the parish church. There are records of a church at least as early as 1116. Sometime between 1114 and 1147 there is a grant from there to Uchtred the priest, confirmed about 1160. In the 1170s and 1180s there were several documents from Popes confirming the church as a ‘mensal’ church of the Bishop of Glasgow. In 1190 the Parson is recorded claiming lands at Bowden, and about that time the parson is recorded as ‘J.’ when there was a dispute settled with the Abbey of Kelso. In 1220 the parson was ‘Master Stephen’, according to a document of the Priory of St. Andrews. The church belonged to Glasgow Diocese until the time of the Reformation, with the connection recorded at least as early as 1160. The earlier church was located in the middle of the modern graveyard, and was thatched. The church was described as ‘St Mungo’s chapel of Lilleslef’ in 1546 and ‘S. Mungo Chapel’ in 1562; hence it was either dedicated to St. Mungo (or Kentigern) originally or rededicated to him later. The present church was rebuilt in 1771, during the ministry of William Campbell (whose daughter married the Hawick minister Robert Gillan). It was erected to the north of the former church. The choir of the older church was turned into the burial aisle of the Riddells of Riddell, along with the Riddells of Muselee and the Stewarts of Hermiton. A manse was built in 1821, with glebe lands of about 11 acres. Tax was paid on 17 windows at the former manse in 1748. The new church was extended in 1883, and had a nave and square bell-tower added in 1910, under Rev. Arthur Pollock Syn. A triple-arched apse was the added, to designs by J.P. Alison in 1909.
has a stained glass by W. Wilson. In 1916 a stone panel with an incised sun-dial was added, probably originally from the older church. The church contains a red sandstone font, which may be as old as the 14th century; at some point it must have been rolled down to the churchyard, and was not moved back up until 1883, when it was built into a wall, and 30 years later moved into the new apse. There was also a Relief (or Burgher) church set up in the village in the early years of the 19th century. There were formerly additional chapels in the Parish at Chapel (the site later called Chapel Farm), Hermiston and Riddell (near Riddell Mill). The parish was linked with Ashkirk in 1601 and `K. of Lilsly' is marked on Blaeu's 1999 map. The lands of `Lilslie-chapell' are recorded in 87; James Watson 1988-94; W. Frank Campbell 1969-76; Thomas W. Donald 1977-80; Ewan S. Trail 1961-69; Henry M. Arthur Pollock Sym 1888-1928; James McKen- Gourlay 1842-81; Robert Blackstock 1881-88; Stalker 1805-16; David Baxter 1816-42; Adam Gourlay 1842-81; Robert Blackstock 1881-88; Arthur Pollock Sym 1888-1928; James McKenzie 1929-61; Ewan S. Trail 1961-69; Henry M. Jamieson 1969-76; Thomas W. Donald 1977-87; James Watson 1988-94; W. Frank Campbell 1999- (the lands of ‘Lilslie-chapell’ are recorded in 1601 and ‘K. of Lilsly’ is marked on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Lilliesleaf Library (li-leez-leef-li-bru-ree) n. library established in about 1818 in Lilliesleaf. It was stocked with books that had been donated or purchased by the fees of subscribers.

Lilliesleaf Limited (li-leez-leef-li-mi’-eed) n. company set up recently by Sir Walter John Buchanan Riddell, Baronet of Riddell.

Lilliesleaf Mill (li-leez-leef-mil) n. former corn mill in Lilliesleaf Parish, probably an alternative name for one of the mills near there, most likely Riddell Mill. In about 1530 William Scott in Ashkirk sold the rights to half of the mill for £40 Scots to his brother Walter. John Riddell was there in 1580. It was confirmed to the Riddells of that Ilk in 1595/6. The Earl of Roxburghie was superior in 1643, when the lands were valued at £104; however, it was also listed is part of the possessions of Sir Walter Riddell, valued at £172 in 1643, with a feu duty of £5 and mill teinds (held by the Duke of Roxburghie) at £104. Walter Riddell paid the land tax on ‘Lilliesleaf and for the mylne thereof’ in 1678, when the total value was £407 15s, the mill itself being valued at £167. 2 cottage-lands there were inherited by Andrew Riddell of Haining in 1696. It is ‘Lillias-leaf-mill’ in 1684 when Richard Turner was tenant. John Haliburton was there in 1694. The lands were still valued at £104 in 1788 and owned by the Duke of Roxburghie. James Crawford was tenant in 1787, James Hogg in 1797 and James Lambert in 1825 (it is ‘the mylne of Lyllisle’ in 1580 and ‘Lilsliefmyln’ in 1694).

Lilliesleaf Moor (li-leez-leef-moor) n. area to the south-west of Lilliesleaf village. A spot about 3½ miles from the centre of the village was used for conventicles in the 17th century. It is said that the dragoons came upon the field meeting one Sunday in about 1676, but meeting resistance from the attendees, they fled. It may be that this was the local common, which was divided up among neighbouring farms. Parts of the lands there, once belonging to Chapel and Easter Lilliesleaf farms, were owned by Col. Edgar Hunter of Linthill and acquired by the Riddells of that Ilk (also written ‘Muir’).

Lilliesleaf Moss (li-leez-leef-mos) n. boggy area to the south of the east end of Lilliesleaf village, known locally as simply ‘The Moss’.

Lilliesleaf Parish (li-leez-leef-pa-reesh) n. parish in northern Roxburghshire. The parish was historically bounded by Selkirk, Bowden, Ancrum, Minto, Wilton and Ashkirk. The Parish had a church from at least 1116 and this belonged to the See of Glasgow until just before the Reformation. It was formally removed from Glasgow’s control in an act of 1641. Part of the lands were granted by David I to the monks of Kelso Abbey about 1160. A charter of Pope Eugenius in 1440 revokes the union of the church there (union with what is unclear), then another charter of union by Pope Sixtus IV in 1479. Presumably the lands originally formed an estate. Robert ‘de Lylliscleu’ is recorded resigning the lands to ‘Mungo de Redale’ in 1436/7. In 1643 the total value of the Parish was recorded as £8325 18s 4d; the ‘Parsonage Teinds of the parish’ were listed as £1397, with ‘Stipend’ of £333 6s 8d. However, the teinds of the Parish were separately listed at £94 (perhaps sterling) in 1643, when they were held by the Duke of Roxburgh. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £7700. In 1678 the total rents were valued at £8265 18s 4d, including the Kirk lands and teinds valued at £1257 13s 4d (and owned by the Earl of Roxburgh). The moors were frequently used for ‘field conventicles’ in the 17th century. The patronage of the Parish Kirk went to the Kers of Roxburgh after the Reformation. It is stated in 1834 that older residents could remember when there were 14 towers in the Parish. At the end of the 18th century there were 17 heritors, 630 inhabitants, 14 weavers, 13 joiners, 2 coopers, 11 tailors, and 4 licensed houses. There are Parish registers dating from 1737 (those from back to 1648 apparently became damp and decayed). A book ‘The Parish of Lilliesleaf’ was written by Rev. James McKenzie wrote articles for the Transactions in the 1940s and an oral history project was started), etc., etc.’[ECS].
Lilliesleaf Relief Kirk

Lilylaw Ludge (li-lee-law-huj) n. name for the south lodge of the Minto estate. It is still marked on the Ordnance Survey map, at the southern end of the Minto Craigs woods (also written ‘Lillilaw’).

lilyoak (li-lee-ak) n., arch. lilac, Syringa vulgaris

Mary’s relief Kirk

Lilliesleaf Schul (li-leez-leaf-skil) n. school in Lilliesleaf, existing since at least the early 17th century. Patrick Nichol was recorded as schoolmaster there in 1634. There were more than 40 pupils in the 1830s. The master there over 1805–50 was George Scott, and in the 1860s was James W. Mackay. There was a school-house built in about the 1820s. The present building was constructed in 1962 and extended in the 1990s. The pupils from the modern primary school attend Selkirk High School.

lilt (lilt, lil’) v., poet. to sing cheerfully, to trill a tune without singing the words, figuratively applied to birds, running water etc. – ‘As arm in arm we walk’d alang, The mavis lilted up his sang’[JoHa], ‘...thaye crye owt for joy, thaye lilt alsua an’ sing’[HSR], ‘The mavis, linte and leverock lilt Their love layes in cadence sweet’[TK], ‘May you ever, happy river, lilt your joyous song’[WL], to trip, jog, skip, n. cheerful singing, lively song – ‘O blythe is the lilt & his ain mither tongue’[WS], ‘Oh kindly is the Teviot tongue, Her lilt is aye sae bonny’[RH].

Limekilnedge

Limekilnedge (lim-kiln-ej) n. area near the highest section of the road to Newcastle, which was formerly part of the drove road to Liddesdale, important for the coal from Blaishtetts that was brought over by pony. The summit, with a triangulation pillar, reaches 430 m (1182 ft). The name derives from the former lime-workings there, sometimes called ‘Stobs Limery’, with quarries and some ruined kilns still visible. James Ashcroft was a lime burner there in 1841, Andrew Elliot was based there in the 1850s and William McDonald in 1861. In the early 1860s there were a large number of labourers (plus support people and family members) living in huts there, while working on the nearby tunnel; 71 people are listed on the 1861 census. It was described as a village in an 1868 directory – ‘Frac Limekilnedge to Teviot The rowin hills sae green ...’[WL], ‘...And lang or the birds leave the hedge, I’ll stride owre the Limekilnedge’[WL] (also sometimes ‘the Limekilnedge’; it is marked as ‘Lymkill hedge fells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Lulworth Cottage
Limekilnsyke

Limekilnsyke (līm-kīl-sīk) n. former cottage near Langburnshields in Rulewater.

Limekilnwud (līm-kīl-wud) n. former lands in Jedforest, probably near Limekilnsyke. It is listed as ‘Lymeklywold’ along with Fernhirst in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. ‘Edwarde Ollyver of Lymyklywod’ is listed among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544.

the Limes (thī-līmz) n. Victorian house formerly overlooking Wellfield, now on Raeson Park, also once known as ‘Viewfield’. It was the home of the Blenkhorns in the 1880s, and later of William Boyd Sime and Robert G. Maxwell. There is some confusion over whether this was also a former name for Sillerbuthall House.

lime-stane (līm-stān) n. lime-stone – ‘But when a farmer pits doon a load o lime-stane in a field, then I gie up a’ thegither . . .’[DH].

Limey Sike (lī-mee-sīk) n. small stream that rises near the Nine Stane Rig and flows to the south-east to join Roughley Burn.

Limiecleuch see Lymiecleuch

Limie Sike (lī-mee-sīk) n. small stream that joins the south side of the Borthwick Water to the west of Eilrig farm.

lim (lim) n., arch. a lame person, cripple – ‘. . . A’d naether bumble, brizz, bate, nor blusht-bit ti play the limm an gar iz humple or turn lameter’[ECS], ‘Ti play the limm = to mar; destroy; spoil’[ECS] (also written ‘limm’).

limber (lim-bur) adj. lithe – ‘Nor was A tewd or mauchless, but limmer an lither’[ECS], supple, pliant – ‘Often used when referring to boots, when it signifies pliable in the sense of yielding, giving comfort’[ECS], (the b is sounded; noted by E.C. Smith, suggesting it was more prevalent locally than in standard English).

limmer (līm-nūr) n., arch. a lowly fellow, rascal, scoundrel, rogue – ‘But what gard thou steal the laird’s Jock’s horse, Fala, &c. And limmer, what gard thou steal him, quo’ he’[CPM], ‘. . . Till oot again the loupil’ limmer’[JBS], ‘Did ye ever see sic a limmer?’[WNK], ‘His een grew bricht, and his senses dimmer, And noucht wad please till the saucy limmer . . .’[WL] (from French).

Lindean (līn-deen) n. village to the north of Selkirk, being about the largest village between Selkirk and Melrose. It was a former station on the Selkirk branch line of the Waverley Line, which ran from 1856–64. The original church was set up there about 1119 by 7 monks from Tiron, who were later moved to founded Kelso Abbey in 1128. This could be the ‘Lyndene’ in the Barony of ‘Bolden’ (i.e. Bowden) recorded in 1541 when the tenants included George, William, John and Thomas ‘Elwand’.

the Linden (thīn-līn-deen) n. Hawick Linden, a ‘junior’ rugby team, formed in 1921, and playing in the Borders District League. In 1963 they joined with the Trades in renting facilities at the Volunteer Park. Their strip consists of a royal blue shirt and socks. A history ‘Roots and Branches’ was written by B. Russell in 1997.

Linden Crescent (līn-deen-kre-sīn’, -dīn-) n. street built in 1893 and named after Linden Park. It is a road with a tight bend joining St. Ninian’s Road with the ‘Killin Hoose Brae’.

Linden Park (līn-dīn-pawrk, -dīn-) n. house built as the residence of Walter Laing of Dicksons & Laings, off the Denholm road past Trow Mill. The site previously held an ancient burial cairn, dug out to prepare the foundations. It was built in 1885, designed by John Guthrie and named after the linden or lime trees that grew there. There were additions to the house, designed by J.P. Alison in 1896. There was also a small lake on the grounds, with islands in it. The house was one of the first locally to be lighted by electricity. It also had an ornamental garden in a Chinese style, with pagodas and bridges crossing the pond. A folly built to resemble a ruined keep was also built on the grounds. The house was later home of Walter Laing’s son, manufacturer John Turnbull Laing. It is rumoured to have been the scene of a nighttime visit by a King in a horse-drawn carriage from Hassetdean Station to visit his paramour. It burned down in 1921, with the then owner Harry Smith convicted of arson. It was demolished in the 1950s and replaced by a development of bungalows including Linden House, Greenskares and the Archery). A stone bearing a verse from ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, carved for the house in 1885, was moved to behind the War Memorial near the Museum in 1978 – ‘. . . bye auld Hornshole, – a picter o gray an green – wui a glist o the Mon- ment; bye Limdean an Weensland’[ECS].

Linden Terrace (līn-deen-te-ris, -dīn-) n. street at the top of Linden Crescent, built in 1892 and named after Linden Park.

Lindisfarne (līn-dīz-fawrn) n. also known as Holy Island, the cradle of early Christianity in north-eastern England, established by St. Aidan, St. Cuthbert and St. Wilfred in the 7th century. It can be reached by foot at low tide, and contains buildings dating from every century since at least the 11th. Wilton (‘Wiltuna’) is probably first mentioned about 843 in a deed of Egred, Bishop of Lindisfarne. The whole of Teviotdale appears to have been attached to the Priory's see until transferred to Durham, perhaps in the middle of the 11th century.

Lindisfarne \textit{(lin-diz-fawrn)} \textit{n.} large house on the left of Stirches Road, formerly a residence of the Innes family, now split into 2 flats. It was built in the latter part of the 19th century, with architect John Guthrie.

Lindsay \textit{(lin-zee)} \textit{n.} Alexander of Dunrod (15th C.) held lands of Tofts in 1478, from the superior Archibald, Earl of Angus. This may have been the same as the lands in Kirkton Parish, although this is unclear. Andrew (14th/15th C.) son of William of the Byres and an unknown mother (he was probably illegitimate). He is probably the Andrew who was granted the lands of Stouslie and Groundistone by his father William in an undated charter, probably around 1390. David (d.1490) son of John, he was 2nd Lord of the Byres. In 1484 he was Baron of Chamberlain Newtoune when he granted Over and Nether Newhall (later called Burnhead and Burnfoot) to James Scott of Kirkurd. In 1488 he witnessed the charter for the Barony of Branxholme. He married Janet Ramsey, but died without issue. He was succeeded as Lord Lindsay by his brother John. His seal bore a horizontal stripe with 3 stars. James (14th C.) granted the lands of Chamberlain Newtoune to William de Lindsay in about 1380. He was presumably Baron of these lands at that time, although it is unclear which James he might have been, and how he was related to William. It is possible he was the Lord of Crawford, who witnessed the grant of Drumlanrig to William Douglas in the period 1384-88. James (d.bef. 1488) Rector of Hawick, perhaps from 1447, when it was made a canonry and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell (St. Mary's was described as the `Church of Hawwyc'). He was appointed by William, Earl of Douglas and Avendale, and described as his kinsman (3 separate Lindsays of Crawford had married into the Douglas family in the previous century). In 1470 he held the Rectory of Benholm (in St. Andrews Diocese) and swapped it with Gilbert Kennedy for the Canonry of Bothwell and Rectory of Hawick. There was also a dispute in 1470 over whether he really held an M.A. In 1476 it is stated that he was preparing to resign the benefices of Bothwell and Hawick and John Scott requested that he be given them by the Pope (although that does not appear to have happened). In 1480 he was Canon of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell and Prebendary of Hawick when he supplicated to the Pope to be allowed to hold 2 incompatible dignities. He was later Dean of Glasgow, taking over from Thomas Vaus in the mid-1460s. He may be the James of `Colbantoun', Rector of Douglas, secretary to the Earl of Douglas, who witnessed a charter granted by the Earl to William Cranston in 1443. He is probably the `James Lindissay, canon of Glasgow' who witnessed a notorial instrument in 1446/7 made at Newark in which Oswald Abernethy proclaimed that his only superior was the Baron of Hawick. He is still recorded in 1487, and died shortly afterwards. James (18th C.) carpet-weaver in Hawick. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1774. Perhaps the same James, married to Elizabeth Lindsay, had children: John (b.1767), baptised in Hawick; and James (b.1769), John (again, b.1770) and James (again, b.1772). baptised in Ednam. John (d.c.1335) from the family of the Earldom of Crawford, son of Sir Philip of Staplegordon. He was a Canon of the Diocese of Glasgow who was elected as successor to Stephen de Dunideer in 1317. This was done without the knowledge that Pope John XXII had already appointed Englishman John de Egglescliffe. However, Egglescliffe never took up the appointment, on account of Scotland being at war with England, and was translated to Ireland. He was then confirmed as Bishop in 1323. As Bishop of Glasgow, he had authority in the area around Hawick. He played an active role in national politics, supporting Robert the Bruce and Edward Baliol. He died when the Flemish ship he was on was attacked by English pirates. His seal showed a bishop beneath a canopy, with 2 shields, a fish and a bird, with the words `S' JOHIS DEI GRA. EPI. GLASGUEN. AD CAS.' John of Dunrod (14th C.) son of Sir James of Craigie. He owned the Barony of Langnewton. In 1360 he granted the lands of Langnewton to William Cochrane of that Ilk. John (d.1482) Lord Lindsay of the Byres, son of Sir William of Abercorn and the Byres. In about 1415 (after the death of his father) he had a charter for the Barony of Byres and other lands, which included Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded as Baron of Chamberlain Newton in 1444 in a charter for Borthwickshiel and in 1468 he is recorded granting the lands of ‘Stowislee’ (i.e. Stouslie) to John Turnbull. In 1471 the Lords decreed that Thomas Turnbull ‘of Faulyshe’ should pay for 3 years of the ‘male of the landis of Chaumerlane Newtoume’. Also in 1471 he had a precept of sasine for lands in Borthwickshiel. He was High Justiciar of Scotland North of

He was also recorded as superior of the lands of Borthwickshiels in the 4th year of the reign of Robert II (i.e. c.1375), the lands having been resigned by Laurence Abernethy. It is unclear which William he was, possibly William of Abercorn and the Byres, or William of Rosie and Logie. It is also unclear if the family ever had a direct connection with the Borthwick valley. In the 10th year of Robert II there was a confirming charter from James of Lindsay (presumably a relative) to him for the lands of Chamberlain Newton. Sir William of the Byres (d.1414) son of Sir William and Christiana Mure. He was granted lands in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, including Stouslie and Groundistone, by King David II ‘through forfeiture of certain lieges’. In an undated charter (probably around 1390, based on the witnesses) he granted Stouslie and part of Groundistone to his son Andrew, while part had previously been infefted to William Gourlay. He was also recorded as superior of the lands of Borthwickshiels. He married Christiana, daughter of Sir William Keith. He was succeeded by his son John, who was 1st Lord Lindsay of the Byres. William of Garmilton (d.bef. 1468) re- signed the lands of ‘Stowislee’ (i.e. Stouslie) in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton to John Turnbull. His relative John Lord of the Byres was Baron of Chamberlain Newton at the time. William (18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1724 he mar- ried Agnes Armstrong, who was also from Ha- wick. Their children included Adam (b.1728) and William (b.1732). Rev. William (b.1876) born in Coatbridge, he graduated in 1901 and became the Forth. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Stewart, 1st Lord Lorn. He was succeeded in turn by his sons David, John and Patrick. His children included: David, 2nd Lord; John, 3rd Lord; Patrick, 4th Lord; Margaret, who married Walter Stewart, 1st Lord Innermeath and secondly married Henry Wardlaw (Baron of Wilton); Christian, who firstly married John, Master of Set- ton and secondly married Robert Cunningham, 2nd Earl of Glencarn (who was Baron of Has- sendean); and Mariot, who married John Hay, 1st Lord Hay of Yester. He must have lived to be quite old. John of Wauchope (d.1505) from the ancient Dumfriesshire family, probably the 12th Laird. He was witness to a sasine for George Dou-glas, Master of Angus in 1499. He held the lands of Fiddleton and others prior to them being sold about 1506. In 1505 he was hanged at Dumfries for the murder of Bartholomew Glendinning and his brother Simon. Bartholomew was the local Sheriff on official business to ‘poind’ a third of the lands at the insistance of Margaret, widow of his father, John Lindsay. Thereafter his goods and lands were forfeited, although Wauchope was recovered by the family shortly afterwards. The lands in Ewesdale appear to have included Melk- ledale, Arkleton, Terrona, Flask, Howgill, Glen- divan, Sorbie, Burngrains, Bush, Bliss and Wrae. John (15th/16th C.) listed in a letter of remis- sion of 1510 for assisting rebels. He is named along with David Scott of Galalaw, plus John and Walter Scott. Patrick (1566–1644) son of John, related to the Lindsay of Edzell in Anc- gas. He was minister of Guthrie near Arbroath, and then St. Vigeans. He attended several General Assemblies, and was a strong supporter of the episcopalian views of James VI. He became Bishop of Ross in 1613 and then Archbishop of Glasgow in 1633. He must have temporarily held the superiority of lands in Minto, since in 1634 he gave a charter of confirmation for Barnhills to William Bennet. However, in 1638 he was de- posed for urging his presbyters to use the ‘New Service Book’, and although ill he escaped to England and died in poverty in York. He was the last Bishop until the Restoration. Sir Si- mon of Arthuret (13th/14th C.) son of Sir John, Lord Chamberlain, who was the first of the Lind- says to be granted lands in Wauchope. He is recorded in English documents of 1278/9 and 1281/2. He was appointed Captain of Eskdale by Edward I in 1298. His brother Sir Philip had fought with Edward against the Scots, but went over to Bruce’s side at Bannockburn. He himself was powerful on the English side, being effectively Warden of the Western Marches. In 1300 he was appointed as Keeper of the late John Wake’s lands of Liddel and Hermitage, separately referred to as ‘the fortresses of Lydel and Eremitage-Soules’ and ‘the castle of Hermitage, the mote of Lydel, and the lands of the valley of Lydel both in England and Scotland belonging to the late John Wake; this probably refers to the early castles of Liddel Strength and Hermitage. But he must only have held this position for a few years. He became a prisoner after Bannockburn and forfeited all his lands etc. However, his son Sir John received a charter of Wauchope from the King in 1321. His descendants held the lands until the end of the 17th century, and claimed to be the oldest representa-tives of the Lindsay Clan. Sir William (14th C.) granted lands including those of Borthwickshiels in the 4th year of the reign of Robert II (i.e. c.1375), the lands having been resigned by Laurence Abernethy. It is unclear which William he was, possibly William of Abercorn and the Byres, or William of Rosie and Logie. It is also unclear if the family ever had a direct connection with the Borthwick valley. Lindsay Grieve’s (lin-zee-greevez) n. butcher’s shop at 29 High Street, with prize-winning haggis.

Lindsay’s Corner (lin-zeez-kor-nur) n. blind corner in Denholm, on the way into the village from Hawick. A shop there was run by the Lindsay family for most of the 20th century, first as a bakers and then a grocers. The business also used to have a van, which drove around the rural areas, this being particularly during WWII. Although the shop was sold in the 1990s, the popular name is still used.

line (lin) n. a note, authorization – ‘A got a line frae the doctor’, ‘here’s ma bookie’s line’.

Lineart Moss (li-nur-mos) n. boggy area on Hawick Common near Pilnuir farm, also called ‘St. Leonard’s Moss’. It was mentioned in descriptions of the Common in the dispositions given in 1767, where it is also referred to as ‘the Lineart’ (one name is presumably a corruption of the other).

lineen (li-neen) n., arch. a lining, an inside cover, ‘A guid lineen = a satisfying meal’ [ECS].

linen (li-nin) n. a cloth made from thread obtained from the fibres of the flax plant. In the 18th century and before, it was common for everyone to have their own small plot of flax or ‘lint’, which they would ‘swingle’ and ‘heckle’ to produce linen thread to weave into clothing. Linen weaving was formerly known at Hassendean, Northhouse, Newbiggin, Hawick Shiel and Denholm, among other places. There was also some linen industry in Hawick itself, with a weaving shop manufacturing linen checks from about the middle of the 18th century. A little later there was a factory making ‘inkle’ (or linen tapes), before hosiery took over. The cloth came in either the rawer green form, or was bleached and sold particularly at St. Boswells Fair. The last weavers of linen in the Borders were still active up until about the 1830s in the St. Boswells area (see also lining).

Linfit (lin-fi’) n. former school in Yarrow Water, situated near the church in the settlement of Yarrow. The school had a good reputation and had many boarders in the early 1800s, with as many as 100 pupils (as describe by Rev. James Russell). This included Christian Scott from Todshawhaugh and Clement, Tom Brown from the Tower Inn in Hawick and the ‘Dandie Dimmont’ (i.e. Davidson) family from Liddesdale. The teacher who made the school so well-known was James Scott, who served there 1784–1818. He took over from Alexander (‘Sandy’) Wilson.

ling (ling) n., poet. heather – ‘Ho! For the blades of Harden. Ho! for the pikes that cross. Ho! For the king of lance and ling – A Scott on the Ettrick moss!’ [WHO], ‘...He heard the whirr of the grouse’s wing And the drone of a bee as it lit on the ling’ [WHO], ‘Whaur the mists on the black hills hing, And the broon burns that, oot o’ the ling, The scent o’ the peat moss bring’ [WL].

linglet (ling-ul’) pp., adj., arch. hanging in a clinging way – ‘The linglet tails o’ er skirt’ [GW].

Linglie (ling-lee) n. former farm over the Ettrick to the north of Selkirk and the name of the road there, as well as a nearby hill containing a linear earthwork. It was long owned by the Burgh of Selkirk. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1708 (note that it may sometimes be confused with Singlie).

Linhope (li-nup, lin-hop) n. farm between Teviothead and Mosspaull, once owned by William Aitchison, who was long involved in local farmers groups. It was listed along with Frostylee and Phaup in the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and in the marriage contract of Anne Scott of Buccleuch in 1663; these were united with lands in Wilton and others into ‘the tenement of Blackgraine’. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when that superiority was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. James Grieve was tenant of the Duchess of Buccleuch there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718 when it covered 2669 acres and was bounded by Phaup, Skelfhill, Gorrenberry, Billhope, Carewoodrig, Burnfoot in Ewes, Eweslees, Lymiecleuch and Binks. William Little was there in 1724. John Elliot was there in 1733. It was leased from the Buccleuch Estates to John Elliot linky (ling-kee) adj., arch. deceitful, fickle (especially said of women).

Linlithgow (lin-lith-gō) n. town in West Lothian, between Edinburgh and Grangemouth, one of the 4 Scottish Burghs created by David I. They have been riding their marches since at least 1541. The festival is now held on the first Tuesday after the second Thursday in June, involves riding to Blackness, having a procession three times round the Cross, and has reciprocal ties with Lanark’s festival. Population (1991) 11,866.

Linlithgow measure (lin-lith-gō-me-shur) n., arch. standard for measuring the capacity of dry goods, based on a standard of the boll kept in Linlithgow. This was used in Scotland from 1661, with the standard being about 145 litres for wheat, beans and meal, but about 212 litres for barley, oats and malt.

linn (lin) n. a waterfall, pool at the foot of one—‘And now young Keeldar reach’d the stream, Above the foamy lin; The Border lances round him gleam, And force the warrior in’ [JL], ‘The only tongue that they might hear Was the lynne’s deep murmuring fa’’ [JTe], ‘The rill is now a raging flood, And roars adown the craggie lim’ [JTe], ‘...But aye, as yet, escap’d that linn Owre whilk sae mony fa’’s [JoHa], ‘The wee waterfa’ or the fifty-feet lim’ [HSR], ‘The brown trout lay at the linn Doon the craggie linn’ [JTe], ‘...And they a’ gang a’ linkin’ To seek their Hogmanay’ [JT], ‘In the bitter back end He will link down the glen...’ [WL].

forms the linn where hazels twine. With woodbine and with thorn\textsuperscript{[JW]} (from Old English; also spelled `lin', `lyn' and `lyne'; the former meaning occurs in place names such as `Robert's Linn', `Hawkhass Linn' and `Penton Linns', while the latter occurs in e.g. the `Leap Linns', `Lynwood').

\textbf{lint} (\textit{lin}, \textit{linit}) \textit{n.}, arch. flax, a small plant with blue flowers, Linum usitatissimum, formerly grown for its fibrous stems, which were prepared to make linen. Used either as animal fodder or for flax prepared for spinning. Formerly it was much grown around Hawick, with even each hind having his own plot. In the early 19th century a ploughman in Hobkirk Parish received a cupful of lint seed as part of his payment in kind. The cultivation of the plants and preparation of the lint was once a very labour intensive operation, with the stalks lying `nine nights' in a pond or pit of water, then using a `break' (or `breek') to split the fibres, followed by the `swingling' -\textsuperscript{[JW]}. Two stones of lint \textit{£7} \textsuperscript{[BR1639]}, `Item whatsoever person that steillis any of their neighbours peittis, turffis, green kail, corne, lint, hemp, ...' \textsuperscript{[BR1640]}, `A party is fined for steeping lint in Teviot at the yard foot's' \textsuperscript{[JW1702]} (from Medieval English, the word survives in Linthill near Lilliesleaf, Linthaughlee near Jedburgh, Linthaugha near Ashkirk, Lint Haughs near Denholm, and Lintdub Knowes near Harden).

\textbf{Lintalee} (\textit{lin-tu-lee}) \textit{n.} house about a mile south of Jedburgh on the banks of the Jed Water and formerly in the Jed Forest. It was residence of Sir James Douglas from around 1316 when he was Warden of the Marches. It is also the site of a battle where Douglas' men defeated those of the Earl of Arundel in the Spring of 1317. Some were ambushed using intertwined birch branches in a narrow pass, perhaps at the Willowford Burn, where Sir Thomas of Richmond was killed. Another English group under a priest named Ellis was discovered feasting near Lintalee itself and also defeated. The Englishmen who escaped with tales of defeat convinced Arundel to turn his huge army South again. The manor house there continued to be used by the Lords of Jedforest into the 15th century. In 1457 it was given for the use of Andrew Ker of Cessford, Bailie of the Lordship. William Ker was recorded there in 1494/5. It was valued at 25 shillings in 1538 and also in 1541, when the tenant was Ralph Ker. It was owned by the Marquis of Douglas in 1643 and 1678, when valued at £160. In 1694 it `Mr Thomas Sheill' was taxed for having 10 hearths at the house there; this seems likely to have been the same man who was minister at Roberton Kirk. John Turner paid tax for 21 windows there in 1748. Archibald Douglas of Douglas was recorded as owner in 1788 (also known as `Linthaughlee', it is `Lintole' in 1457, `Lynmontlee' in 1493, `Lintole' in 1517, `Lintolee' in 1539, `Lintole' in 1541 and `Lintlauglie' and `linthaughlie' in 1694; it is `Lynstaly' on Blaeu's 1654 map; the origin of the name is probably just `the clearing where flax grows').

\textbf{lint-brake} (\textit{lin-brak}) \textit{n.}, arch. a flax-breaking instrument – `Lint-brake. An instrument used for breaking or softening flax, in place of the fluted rollers of the flax-mill, previous to the operation of rubbing and swingling, Teviotd.' \textsuperscript{[JoJ]} (cf. lint-breek).

\textbf{Lintdub Knowes} (\textit{lin-dub-nowz}) \textit{n.} hilly area just to the north of Harden House (the name is presumably from a marshy area where flax once grew).

\textbf{Lintdykes} (\textit{lin-diks}) \textit{n.} former place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded as `Lintedikes' in the early 13th century when it was part of a grant from Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey. The lands had previously been held in dowry by Matilda Corbet.

\textbf{lint-fever} (\textit{lin-fee-vur}) \textit{n.}, arch. former name for a condition that people sometimes got when they were first involved in `swingling' lint – `The first attempt at swingling was often accompanied by an illness called the Lint-fever, supposed to be owing to the dust entering the nostrils and eyes' \textsuperscript{[JAHM]}.

\textbf{Linthaugh} (\textit{lin-hawf}) \textit{n.} former name for an area near the river in Denholm, where flax was steeped in the 18th century. It probably refers to the flat piece of land lying to the west of the mouth of the Dean Burn (also `Lint Haughs').

\textbf{Linthaughlee} see \textbf{Lintalee}
Linthill (lin'-hil) n. Victorian mansion between Lilliesleaf and Midlem, once home of the Homes. There is a walled garden nursery there. It may be that this was the same place once called Midlem Mill, with the main house rebuilt after having been sold by the Elliots in about 1756. The land was owned by Rev. William Hunter of Lilliesleaf in the early 18th century, when the part on the south side of the Ale, referred to as ‘Union Hall’, was united with Midlem Mill on the north side, the new estate being called Linthill, or ‘Linthills’. Dr. Hunter paid tax for 13 windows there in 1748. The estate may also at some point owned by the Kerrs of Cavers Carre. The estate was inherited through marriage by the Riddells of Camieston (a cadet line of the Riddells of that Ilk). The lands were valued at £171 10s in 1788, split between Union Hall (valued at £121 10s) and Ryecastle and Quartersides (valued at £50). William Riddell sold it to William Currie in 1822, and Curries lived there through much of the 19th century. A plan of the estate from 1820 is in the National Archives – ‘And sweeter walks ane canna get Than walks by fair Linthill, Where murmuring soft the river sings To rose and daffodil’ [FL] (also written ‘Linth Hill’; it is ‘Lintheath’ on Roy’s c.1750 map).

Lintie (lin’-ee, lin-tee) n. linnet, often used figuratively to suggest cheerfulness – ‘...he’s off to see if he can cage the lintie and bring her here’ [JEDM], ‘The hawk that built upon the rock, And the lintie in the shaw’ [HSR], ‘The mavis, lintie and laverock lilt a nest in the yellow gorse beside the murmurin’ mither’s throat, it’s cheerfu’ music still, Has socht lintie in the shaw’ [HSR], ‘And the lintie in her gade to see the sky’ [JEDM], ‘...the lintie on the white stone’ [JYH], ‘I hear the linties in the high fields’ [JS], ‘The hawk that built upon the rock, And the lintie in her mither’s throat, it’s cheerfu’ music still, Has socht a nest in the yellow gorse beside the murmurin’ Till’ [JYH], ‘The mavis, lintie and laverock lilt ... ’ [TK], ‘I hear the linties in the whins Where Ettrick rins’ [JBS].

Lintinhall (lin-tin-haw) n. lintin hall, former farmstead in roughly the same location as Stintyknowe (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, and given the similarity of names, possibly an error).

Lintobank (lin’-u-bawneg) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, near Riddell. Robert Wilson was recorded there in 1581/2. The name appears as ‘Lintobank tunc Riddell nuncapate’ in 1602 and appears to have replaced the earlier ‘Escetho’. In 1636 it was a 4-pound land when inherited by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk and was still a 4-pound land when inherited by Sir John Riddell in 1669 (it was ‘ Lyonthopbank’ in 1581/2).

Linton (lin’-in, lin-tin) n. village and parish in east Roxburghshire on the Kale Water, north of Morebattle, famous for its Norman Church and legendary ‘worm’ (which, sadly only dates to the 17th century). An account of the parish was written by A.O. Mackie and M.J.H. Robson in 1960 – ‘The wode Laird of Laristone Slew the worm of Worne’s Glen, And wan all Linton parochine’ [T] (the origin is probably Old English ‘lyn tun’, meaning the farm by the lake, since much of the Parish was formerly under water; formerly spelled ‘Lyntoune’ and variants).

Linton (lin’-in) n. Adam (19th C.) cattle-dealer of Newton-muir. He was one of the earliest Trustees of Hawick Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from about 1848. He may be the Adam who married Margaret Wood in Hawick in 1850. His wife Margaret and children Esther, Cecilia, John, George, Andrew and William are recorded at Newton Mains in 1851. Alexander (b.1818/9) born in Cavers Parish. In 1861 he was a shepherd at Allygrain. His wife was Jane and their children included Beatrice, John, Walter, Sarah and Jane. Andrew (b.c.1785) shop-keeper on the High Street. He is listed as a grocer in Pigot’s 1837 directory and a meal-dealer in 1841. In 1841 he was living at about No. 29, with his wife Margaret and children Jessie and Walter. He married Margaret Michie and their children were: Jessie (b.c.1815); Adam (c.1820–79), stocking-maker in Hawick; and Walter (b.c.1827). James (18th C.) from Ettrick Parish. In 1728 he married Margaret, sister of John Elliot in Penchrise. John (b.c.1780) born at Kirkpatrick-Juxta in Dumfriesshire, he married Sarah, daughter of John Armstrong from Teviothead. He was a farm worker, probably shepherd, at Skelfhill, Whitriggs, Ramsaycleuch and Craikshiel, as well as probably Whitehillbrae and Pyat Knowe near Dodburn. He married Sarah, who was born in Teviothead, daughter of John Armstrong and Isabella Knox. Their children were: John (b.1805); Elizabeth (b.1807); Adam (b.1808); Helen (b.1810); George (b.1812); Andrew (b.1814); Jean (b.1816); Alexander (b.1818); Janet (b.1821); William (b.1822); and Robert (b.1825), who married Helen Stoddart and secondly Barbara Little Armstrong and emigrated. He and his wife were still alive in 1861, residing with their son Robert at West Cote. John (b.c.1815) recorded as a publican at about 7 Sandbed in 1841. He was an agricultural labourer at the same address in 1851. Joseph (18th C.) recorded in ‘Bouand...’ (probably Bowanhill) in Cavers Parish. His son Adam was baptised there in 1727. Robert (b.1825) born at Craikshiel, son of farm worker John and Sarah Armstrong. He was shepherd at West Cote.
Linton’s Close (lin’-inz-klos) n. passageway in the mid-19th century, next to the current Bank of Scotland, 7 High Street, named after a one-time owner of the property (there could be confusion with Sinton’s Close, since 29 High Street is marked ‘Linton’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

the Linton Worm (thu-lin’-zin-wun-rum) n. mythical creature said to have lived in a cave at Linton Hill, near the village of Linton in the 12th century and slain by Somerville of Larriston. A carving over the door of Linton Church commemorates the event. It is also known as the worm ‘Wormiston’ – ‘Pure blows the summer breeze o’er moor and dell, Since 29th High Street the mid-19th century, next to the current Bank of Scotland, 7 High Street, where they still have descendants. William (19th C.) shepherd at Millburn. He is listed there among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. William (b.1805/6) framesmith on the High Street according to Slater’s 1852 directory (where he is ‘Lanton’). In 1851 he was a ‘Woollen Power Loom Waver’ at 3 Bridge Street (perhaps the modern No. 20). His wife was Janet (from Chertsey) and their children included Margaret, Agnes and Janet (also written ‘Lintoun’; note that this name is sometimes confused with Sinton in written records).

Lithgow (li-thgow) n. Alexander (18th C.) recorded as ‘Mr’ in 1741 when he witnessed a baptism for workman William Graham in Hawick in 1741. He may have been son of Rev. Robert. Andrew (17th/18th C.) excise officer in Hawick. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Session for being involved in late night drunkeness at Thomas Huggan’s house. He apparently went to break up the fight between Huggan and William Oliver. He was witness to the ‘irregular marriage’ of fellow excise officer Thomas Hume of Hawick in 1718. Helen (17th/18th C.) sister of Rev. Robert of Ashkirk and daughter of Alexander of Drygrange. She is said to have married James Anderson (although this could be confusion with a later James Henderson) and had 3 children: Thomas; John; and Jean, who married George Thorburn, smith in Ashkirk, whose grand-daughter married John Eckford, hosier in Hawick. Her nephew Hector Lithgow left a small fortune, which Eckford spent his life trying to prove a claim to. Rev. John (b.c.1620) son of Thomas, portioner at Redpath, Earlston and Isobella Haliburton. He moved from a charge in Ireland some time before 1646 to become minister at Ewes Kirk. In 1664 he refused to conform to Episcopacy and was deprived of his living. This happened ostentatiously, with the messenger delivering the Act of Suspension right after the Sunday sermon with the congregation still present. He continued to preach at conventicles and in 1682 was fined and sentenced to imprisonment on the Bass Rock. He was freed on the promise of leaving the country. He returned to Ewes in 1689 after the Revolution, was restored by Act of Parliament in 1690 and was also a member of the Assembly. He retired to Redpath in 1694. He married firstly Isobel Weir and secondly Isobel Scott, widow of James Johnstone of Westerraw. His children included: Thomas, with whom he owned land at Bodisbeck; and Janet, who married Nichol Elliot of Unthank. Miss M. (19th C.) assistant teacher in Newcastleton in the 1860s. Rev. Robert (c.1680–1729) youngest son of Alexander of Drygrange and Margaret, daughter of Gavin Elliot of Grange. He had a sister called Helen. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1701 and became Chaplain to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto (his uncle). He was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1707, called to Ashkirk in 1710 and ordained there in 1711. He was described as a moving preacher, who was pious, judicious and possessing a great deal of ingenuity. In 1711 he performed the baptism for a son of Walter Scott of Woll, although it took place in Selkirk. He married Isabella Langlands (who was related to the Hawick and Wilton ministers of the 17th century), daughter of Robert Langlands of that Ilk, and she died in Edinburgh in 1740. Their children included: Alexander (b.1719), who married Helen Pope and served with the 42nd Regiment; Robert (b.1721), who became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1737; May (b.1723); Margaret (b.1726); Jean (b.1728); and Helen (b.1730) (also spelled ‘Lythgow’).

litster (lit-stur) n., arch. a dyer of cloth – ‘. . . the person of John Scott, litster . . . ’ [BR], ‘. . . Jas. Scott, littster, lat baylyea in Hawick’ [BR1694], ‘. . . and stuff petticoat which James Scott, litstar, or his son, dyed’ [BR1697] (spelled ‘litstar’ and other variants).

Litster (lit-stur) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) hind at Dykes. He married Margaret Rutherford in Ancrum in 1817 and their children included: Janet (b.1818); George (b.1820); and twins John and Henry (b.1822). The baptisms were performed before the Jedburgh Burgher Congregation and recorded in Cavers Parish.

litted (li-teed) pp., arch. dyed – ‘[Margaret Drummond was convicted of stealing] one ells of litted stuff’ [BR1697].

litten (li-in) pp. lit, lighted – ‘after the fyre was litten oo didni feel is nithert’ (this is ‘lit’ or ‘lighted’ in standard English).

litter (li-ur) n., arch. a carrier, particularly for bodies, probably a hand-barrow for carting the coffin – ‘. . . that in all time coming the Toun Litter when desired by any country people, they shall pay in to the Treasurer half a crown each time . . . ’ [BR1722], ‘Received from mr Ogilvie of Tiendside for the litter . . . 1 10 0’ [BR1729], ‘Paid John Aitkin, cooper, for ye hooping of ye litter’ [BR1736].

Little (lɪt) n. Adam (1754/5–1808) died at Larriston. He married Margaret Common, who died in Newcastleton in 1846, aged 95. Their children included: James (1794/5–1831); and 2 who died in infancy. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery along with his sister Mary (1756/7–1816). Agnes (b.1821/2) from Berwickshire, she was a shopkeeper in Denholm in the 1850s. She lived on the Canongate. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as ‘Andro Lytle’ when Rowie Foster was found guilty of stealing a horse from the lands of Chapelhill. It is unclear if this was the local Chapelhill or another one. Andrew (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Moorfield. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. Andrew (19th C.) listed in 1852 as carrier between Denholm and Selkirk once a week. Andrew (19th C.) shepherd at Gorrenberry in the 1800s. His daughter Margaret married Alexander Turnbull, servant at Wolfelee. Ann (18th C.) cook at Dinlabyre in 1785, when she was working for William Oliver. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Denholm, listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as ‘Elder’, with ‘younger’ (presumably his son) listed separately. He was taxed for 2 hearths, suggesting that he may have been a smith or in a related trade. Archibald (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘younger’ in Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Archibald (17th/18th C.) ‘fowler’ in Hawick Parish. In 1720 he and smith William Young witnessed a baptism for Adam Brown ‘Headhouss’. He is probably the Archibald, son to William in Hawick, who in 1716 married Agnes Learmouth from Kelso. They had a child Janet baptised in 1720. Archibald (b.1778/9) tailor in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Barbara Jamieson (from Selkirk), and their children included: Margaret (b.1805); James (b.1808); John (b.1811); William (b.c.1815); Crichton (b.c.1820); and Betty (b.c.1825). He was still alive in 1851 and was listed in a directory of 1852. Catherine (d.1829) servant of Dr. Graham in Hawick. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection, and may have been related to William, also of London. Charles (19th C.) listed as a baker on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was probably related to James, also a baker listed in 1852. Cuthbert (17th C.) tenant at Sandholm in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Dr. ?? (19th C.) Doctor in Hawick in the 1800s, of whom a portrait exists. He was referred to in a report on the cholera outbreak of 1832. Francis (17th C.) resident at Mangerton according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He must have been related to James, who was also listed there. George (19th C.) draper in Denholm in the latter part of the 19th century. George (1869–1957) born in Hawick, son of John and Janet Ekron. In 1896 he married Margaret Turnbull Deans (d.1921). Their children were: James Ekron (1897–1917), who served with the Royal West Kent Regiment and was killed in action at Ypres; Marion Nichol Deans (b.1899); Janet (1903–82), married John Wallace and died in West Sussex; and George Francis (b.1914). Hamilton Borthwick ‘Hammy’ (1899–1960s) son of master tailor William and Annie Keir, he was born at 1 Weensland Road. He worked with the Hawick News, and joined the army in 1916, although under-age. He was wounded at the Somme, and received a discharge. He later set up his own printing business in Hawick. But he was best known as a singer, at the Common Riding, in the Hawick Operatic Society and around the Borders. He was official Common Riding Song Singer after 1918. He recorded ‘Meda’s Song’ and ‘O’ a the Airts’ on a 78 r.p.m. record. He moved his printing business to Langholm about 1945, but gave it up around 1952 to become a music teacher at Langholm Academy, retiring in 1964. He married Daisy Graham and they had one child, Helen. J. (18th/19th C.) listed at ‘junior’ at Clerkleap in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. James (17th C.) married Bessie Clerk in Roberton Parish in 1687. James (17th C.) resident at Mangerton according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He must have been related to Francis, who was also listed there. It is possible the is the James ‘Littlemilne in Mangerton mille’ (with the extra ‘mille’ in error perhaps) whose will is recorded in 1683. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘ Poetical Museum’ (1784). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Terrona according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. James (b.c.1790) farmer in Denholm. In the 1841 census he is recorded around Leyden Road. His wife was Margaret and their children included Janet. He is probably the Denholm farmer recorded in 1815 among men accused of James (b.1809/10) stocker in Denholm, probably living on Westside. He married Margaret Scott in 1836 and they had children Agnes, Barbary, Archibald and Adam. James (b.1814/5) mason in Denholm. He was son of mason William and Nanny. In 1861 he is listed there, unmarried, and probably living on the Westside. James (b.1820/1) born in Minto Parish, he was nephew of Archibald Robson. In 1861 he was a 'proprietor of houses' at his uncle's farm of Ashieburn in Ancrum. In the 1860s he was recorded as a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. James (19th C.) skinner in Hawick, recorded in 1872. James (17th C.) herd of Colterscleuch on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism (along with smith Thomas Huntly) for William Bulloch. In 1723 (along with John Ekron) he witnessed another for shoemaker William Wright. In 1707 he married Isobel Elliot and their children included: Bessie (b.1708); Sara (b.1711); Bettie (b.1714); Isobel (b.1716); Helen (b.1718), who in 1742 in Edinburgh married Charles Scott, sergeant in Col. John Price’s regiment; and James (b.1720). The witnesses in 1708 were ‘notar’ William Cunningham and tailor William Scott, in 1714 were Thomas Gray and Thomas Huntly and in 1720 were Thomas Watson (Clerk to the Regality) and merchant Adam Elliot. John (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Newmill. He married Jean, daughter of Thomas Falside, in Hawick Parish in 1717. Their children included: Thomas (b.1724), who presumably died young; Thomas (b.1725), whose baptism was witnessed by William and Robert Thomson; and William (b.1730). John (17th/18th C.) fleshed in Hawick. He is probably the ‘flesher’ who arrived in Hawick in 1716, having previously lived in Nether and Upper Denton, near Brampton in Gillsisland, coming with a certificate of good deportment from his previous parish. He may be the merchant John who witnessed a baptism for flesher George Renwick in 1716. His wife was Margaret Fiddler and their children included: William (b.1717); and James (b.1720). The witnesses in 1720 were fleshers Robert and George Renwick. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1705 and 1715. His children included Walter (b.1701), Walter (again, b.1703), Bessie (b.1705), Janet (b.1707), John (b.1708), Walter (again, b.1710), Jane (b.1713) and Janet (again, b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record in 1742, when his daughter Helen married Serg. Charles Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hall and their children included Margaret (b.1729). John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1737. John (18th C.) recorded in Denholm in 1736 when he married Isabel Murray in Cavers Parish. He was also living in Denholm in 1737. His children probably included: Janet (b.1737); and John (b.1739). John (18th C.) farmer near Hermitage, recorded in 1749. John (d. bef. 1794) recorded at Burnfoot in Ewesdale on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls. It was probably his widow who was listed at Burnfoot in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) fleshed in Hawick. He paid the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick in 1797. He married Jane Armstrong and their children included: Ann (b.1795), born in Langholm, who married Robert Hay and ran the Crown Inn in Hawick; and John (b.1797), born in Hawick, who may have married Elizabeth Clerk in Yarrow. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Colterscleuch and other farms, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 4 horses in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Denholm, recorded in 1784. He was also listed as a mason in Denholm on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. His children included William (b.1782); Agnes (b.1784); Isobel (b.1788); George (b.1790); and ‘Aills’ (b.1793). He may also have been father of John (b.1774). John (d.1813) carrier in the Hawick area. In 1808 near Hawick he was ‘maltreated, and robbed of about £130 . . . about three miles from Hawick’. Never fully recovering his health, he died in Langholm. John (b.1789/90) born in Westerkirk Parish, he was teacher in Ewesdale. He was already schoolmast in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties.
of the Border'. He was listed as a teacher living at Unthank in Ewesdale in 1841. In 1851 he was in the Schoolhouse and listed as 'Parish Schoolmaster'. He was still Parish Schoolmaster in 1861, at the age of 71. His wife was Rachel and their children included Jane and James. John (18th/19th C.) merchant at Coldside in Liddesdale in the early 19th century. He subscribed to William Scott's ' Beauties of the Border' in 1821. John (18th/19th C.) listed as being of 'Know' in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. John (b.c.1763) joiner at Greena in Castleton Parish. He is listed there in 1841. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Roughley in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–41. John (b.1787/8) from Canonbie, he was a blacksmith in Newcastle. His mother was probably Catherine. He was recorded as a blacksmith in Pigot's 1837 directory and Pigot's 1852 directory. In 1841 to 1861 he was living on Douglas Square. He was a registered voter in Castleton Parish in the 1860s.

His cousin Robert Armstrong worked with him. John (b.c.1795) from Canonbie, he was at the Stitchellhill Lime Works in 1841 and proprietor of the Limekilnedge Lime Works in 1851. He married Isabelle Irvine and their children included: George, Thomas, John, James, Walter and Andrew. John (19th C.) cabinet-maker who married Jane, daughter of Provost Robert Milligan. He may be the apprentice cabinet-maker living with carpenter Andrew Scott at Myreslawgreen in 1861. John (b.c.1834) from Langholm, he lived in Hawick. He was a frame worker and lived at 14 Loan. In 1866 he married Janet, daughter of James Ekron and Margaret Thomson. Their children included: Margaret (1866–1941), who married William Beattie; George (1869–1957), who married Margaret Deans; Helen Reid (b.1871), who married George Proudfoot; James Ekron (1873–1961); and Thomas (b.1878). Matthew (16th C.) tenant in Lairhope in 1576, when he and Adam Warwick in 'Braidley' were pledged to the Privy Council not to be involved in thieving. The sureties were Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. He was declared a fugitive in 1578/9 for continuing to commit crimes. Matthew (18th/19th C.) owner of Demainholm (along with Robert Pott) according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. Mrs. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Burnfoot in Ewesdale on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. She was taxed for 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. She also paid the dog and clock taxes at Burnfoot in 1797. She was widow of John, who was listed there in 1792. Robert (17th C.) local man who married Bessie Murray. Their children Margaret (b.1648) and James (b.1650) were baptised in Hawick and their daughter Malie in Ashkirk in 1652. The witnesses in 1648 were Thomas Shiel and William Grieve and in 1652 were James Hastic and John Armstrong. Robert (18th C.) farmer in Yethouse in Liddesdale, recorded in 1748. Robert (1751/2–1823) died at Tinnisburn. He married Janet Murray, who died at 'Rashill' in 1830, aged 71. Their children included: Margaret (1792/3–1812); James (1795/6–1828), who died at Greens; and 2 children who died in infancy. Robert (1760/1–1802) died at Nether Larriston. His wife was Mary Scott and their children included: Isabella (1790/1–1808); and Thomas (1793/4–1820). They are buried in Etلتleton Cemetery. Simon of Meikledale (14th/15th C.) sometimes considered to be the first chief of his clan. In 1426 he had a charter confirmed by James I of an earlier grant by Robert, Duke of Albany. This was for the lands of 'Senbigill', 'Meikildale', 'Kirkton', 'Sorbi', 'le Milnarland', and 'le Pullis' in the barony of 'Allarynock' which had been resigned by Alexander Fraser of Ewesdale. He is thus he one of the earliest known Lairds in Ewesdale. Simon of Meikledale (16th C.) descendant of the earlier Simon. In 1537 he had a charter of the lands of Meikledale in the valley of Ewes. The charter was witnessed by William Little, Burgess of Edinburgh and the following sasine by Andrew and Edward Little; these may have been relatives. Simon of Meikledale (16th C.) presumably son or grandson of the previous Simon. He is recorded in the comprehensive remission of 1585 for men of Dumfriesshire whose superior was Lord Maxwell (perhaps related to the raid on Stirling). He is listed as 'Sim Litill, laird of Mekill, Daill' and a large number of other Littles also appear on the list. Simon (b.1799/1800) from Westerkirk, son of Thomas, he was educated at Kirkton and Edinburgh. He was Schoolmaster at Teviothead from 1818 (effectively succeeding Tom Jenkins). He also acted as Registrar for the area. He was still recorded at Teviothead Schoolhouse in 1861. His wife was Helen and their children included Betsy, William and Isobella. He is buried in Teviothead cemetery, along with an infant child who died in 1832 (as well as Betty Little, 2nd wife of David Scott from Thornhali). He was probably related to the Kirkton Schoolmaster. He was still alive in 1871. Simon (b.1842) born at Kirkton, son of Thomas, schoolmaster at Kirkton, with his mother being Margaret Turnbull. He was ordained minister of Ballantrae and died unmarried at Lanark Manse. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Langhope in 1579 when he was listed among the debtors to James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. Thomas of Meikledale (16th/17th C.) broke out of Selkirk jail in 1625, along with Robert Scott of Thirlestane, Gavin Elliot of Brugh and George Davidson of Kames. Thomas (d.1673) son of the Laird of Meikledale. His gravestone was once readable in Ewes Kirkyard. Thomas (18th C.) tenant in Rashiegrain. He married Isabel Beat- tie. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Helen (b.1740); and Betty (b.1743). He may be the Thomas who hired the Hawick mort-cloth twice in 1758. Thomas (d.1799) weaver in Hawick whose death is recorded. Thomas (b.1802/3) probably son of Thomas, he was master of Kirkton School from 1834. He was educated at Kirkton and in Edinburgh. He was recorded there in Pigot’s 1837 directory and remained schoolmaster until the 1860s. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish. In 1861 he presented the stone slab, which had been the stool of repentance from Kirkton Kirk, to the Museum. He may be the Thomas who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Thomas; William T.; Simon, who was minister of Ballantrae; and Isabella. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘servitor to Walter Laing clerk to ye Duchess of Buccleugh, (and servitor to ye sd Walter tenant of Park)’ in 1716 when he married Jenet Scoon (daughter to a deceased Scoon). He was recorded in (Branxholme) Park in 1719. His wife’s name was also recorded as ‘Mary’ and ‘Margaret’ (although this seems likely to all be the same couple), with children: Margaret (b.1717); Margaret (again, b.1719); Jean (b.1721); and an unnamed child (b.1725). The witnesses in 1719 were James Henry and Robert Scoon in Branxholme Town (who was probably related to his wife). Walter (18th C.) tenant in Denholm, recorded in 1745 and 1749. He married Janet Spinnie (or Spindie) and their children included: Ann (b.1743); Betty (b.1745); Agnes (b.1747); an unnamed child (b.1749); John (b.1752); and Isabel (b.1756). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of London. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence probably had a local connection. Walter (19th C.) carrier in Newcastleton. In 1852 he was recorded running a weekly service to Nether-Oakshaw, presumably transporting coals from the mine there. William (15th C.) recorded in Thornycleuch in 1494/5 when his son-in-law John Scott was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘of Tounhead’ when he leased half of ‘Tounhead’ to James Runcement, ‘now in Hassendean’. He is recorded in a bond of 1699 as ‘of Hassintounhead’ along with his wife Margaret Gray when he borrowed one thousand pounds from Henry Leck. In 1703 he sold the lands of Hassendean Townhead to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and also borrowed money from James Gray of Nether Ancrum (which he seems to have had difficulty repaying). Henry Leck (tenant in ‘Stodrige’) tried to recover his debt in 1701/2 and this may have been done by 1710, since he recovered his tenancy rights to Hassendean Townhead. In 1705 a bill was sent to him by Gideon Scott of Highchester, via Bailie Robert Hardie of Hawick, then passed on to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. Thomas of Knowe paid his teinds for Townhead in 1705, according to a discharge by Gideon Scott of Falnash (the Duchess’ Chamberlain). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Side. He was listed there in the 1694 Hearth Tax records. In 1707 he was called before the Castleton Kirk Session for making a ‘penny wedding’. He ‘promised that he should not be troublesome about any such thing in future’ and was dismissed to pay a fine to the civil magistrate! William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Gray and their children included: Janet (b.1709); Jean (b.1713); and John (b.1715). William (18th C.) resident at Linhope in 1725 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Bunyan and their children included Margaret (b.1749) and probably William (b.1746). William (18th C.) tenant in Denholm in 1761. He is probably the William who married Isabel Scott and whose children, baptised in Cavers, included James (b.1756), William (b.1761) and Archibald (b.1769). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a ‘farrier’ (or perhaps ‘farmer’) in 1789 when he witnessed a baptism for Mark Sutherland. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse
Little Aggie

Tax Rolls. He may be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border ’ in 1821. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘ History of Hawick ’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection, and may have been related to Charles, also of London. William (b.c.1790) born in Westerkirk, Dumfriesshire, when young he worked as a ploughman at a farm near Birneyknowe. In 1813 he assisted Capt. Walter Scott of Wauchope in catching a murderer (as recounted in Lang’s ‘ Stories of the Border Marches ’). Scott enlisted the ploughman’s help when he caught up with the 6-foot Irishman (called John Linnichen or Henry Macgraw) along this former high road from Hawick to Newcastle. He had attacked and robbed John Macconald, a travelling merchant from Dumfriesshire who was apparently 101 years old. The chase ended on ‘ High Tofts Hill ’, the murderer was apprehended, walked back to Kirkton, then taken by cart to Hawick and on to Jedburgh for trial. William was apparently presented with a baton and excused from paying taxes for the rest of his life. He was later farmer for a while at Salenside. In 1841 he was living at Clerklands and in 1851 was a labourer at ‘ Newtonmoor ’ in Wilton Parish. He married Janet (b.c.1800), daughter of George Thorburn, farmer at Stonedge (and she apparently died aged 99). Their children included: Archibald; Jane; George; Janet; William; James; Andrew; Ann; and Catherine Ann, who Robert Scott, vet at Cauldmill. William (b.1776/7) mason in Denholm. In 1841 and 1851 he was living around the north end of Westside with his wife and adult children. His wife was Agnes (or ‘ Nanny ’) and their children included James, William, George, Robert, Charles and Bell. William (b.1783/4) born in Newbigging, he was a flesher in Newcastleton in 1851 and on an 1852 directory. However, the same William, at about 15 South Hermitage Street, was listed in 1841 as a teacher. His wife was Elizabeth (or ‘ Betty ’) and they had a daughter, Elizabeth. William (18th/19th C.) mason at Holmfoot, probably near Newcastleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border ’ in 1821. William (b.1800/1) from Westerkirk Parish, he was shepherd at Braidielchope in the Hermitage valley in 1851. He may be the labourer William listed as a head of household in Castleton for the first time in 1838. William (b.1818/9) builder in Denholm, son of William. In 1861 he was living around Leyden Road. His wife was Jessie and their children included William and James. William (b.1817/8) shepherd at Stanishope. He married Margaret Greig and their children included William, Elizabeth, Margaret, John, Jane and Robert. He may be the W. Little recorded at Hawkness in 1868. William (b.1817/8) stockingmaker in Denholm, son of Archibald. In 1851 he was living at about Westgate and arund Sunnyside in 1861. He married Margaret Johnstone (from Falnash Mill) and their children included Archibald, John, James, Violet I. and Daniel C. He could be the William from Denholm who won 2 leaping events at the 1835 Common Riding Games. William (19th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton roughly from the 1840s to the 1860s. His wife was called Mary. William (19th/20th C.) son of James of Carlsgill and Janet Keir. His mother was sister of William Keir of Whithaugh. He inherited Whithaugh from his uncle and sold it in 1924 (former pronunciation as in ‘ Leitle ’; also spelled ‘ Little ’, ‘ Littil ’, ‘ Littel ’, ‘ Littill ’, ‘ Lyttill ’, ‘ Lytill ’, ‘ Lytle ’, ‘ Lyttle ’, etc. in older records).

Little Aggie ( li’-ul-aw-gee ) n. nickname in use in the 19th century, ??.

Little Causey ( li’-ul-kaw-zee ) n. former name for part of the road up the Loan. It was here that Capt. Campbell was pelted with manure during the disputed Common Riding of 1809. The precise location is unclear.

Little Cavers ( li’-ul-k a-vurz ) n. small house on the side road between Honeyburn and Ashybank. It has long been coloured pink, and may have once had a small hamlet around it. The name may come from the former name for Kirkton Parish, or have simply developed as an epithet for a hamlet near the main village of Cavers. In 1684 Adam Leyden, William Laidlaw and Andrew Riddell, 3 tenants of the farm there, were listed as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It was the site for the parish school in the 18th century, as Denholm grew so a location was required between Denholm and Cavers (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the little cloth ( thu’li’-ul-kloth ) n. the second-best funerary cloth, in distinction to the main ‘ mortcloth ’ – ‘ Pay’d for the Mortcloth and Little Cloath helping ’ [ PR ].

Little Corbie Sike ( li’-ul-kor-bee-sik ) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Aldery Sike and then Thorlishope Burn. It runs parallel to Muckle Corbie Sike.

Little Cote (li'-ul-kó’) n. name for former farm near Littlecote Hill in Cavers Parish. Adam Huntly was tenant in 1694 and William Blyth in 1776. John Johnstone was there in 1791 and Robert Scott was farmer in 1851. The Armstrong brothers farmed it in the mid-20th century. The name was essentially replaced with the late Eastcote, although the earlier farm may have been to the south-west of the modern Eastcote. The earlier farm of ‘Muckle Cote’ may have been closer to the modern West Cote. There is a possible old enclosure on Littlecote Hill, which could be associated with the former farmstead – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Wormalston and Cavers Knowes’ [T] (it was ‘Litledean’ in 1694 and ‘Lyttle cote’ in 1776).

Little Dan (li'-ul-dawn) n. nickname of the 19th century – ‘Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan. Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’ [HI].

Little Dean (li'-ul-deen) n. former farm near Little Cavers, said to have been used for secret Covenanters’ sermons. It was situated near the plantation still known as Little Dean, which flanks the Honey Burn, just west of Denholm Dean.

Littledean (li'-ul-deen) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, located on the left-hand side of the road between Midshiels and Hassendeanburn. The Mather, Brydon and Milne families lived there in 1841 (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, it is ‘Littiledene’ in 1841).

Littledean (li'-ul-deen) n. ruined 15th century tower in Maxton Parish overlooking the banks of the Tweed, once the home of the Kers. Duns Scott may have been born here about 1265. The lands were possessed by Rutherfords in the 17th century. There is much local folklore about unpleasant occupiers and ghosts. Gen. Ker of Littledean was ruined fighting a legal battle in the early years of the 19th century to establish his claim as heir to the Kers of Cessford and hence to the Dukeedom of Roxburghes. The lands were later part of the estates of Lord Polwarth (the origin of the name is probably just Old English for the little valley’; it is first recorded as ‘litildeene’ in 1502; it is ‘Litlitedene’ in 1547, ‘Litildane’ in 1547/8, ‘Litildiden’ in 1560, ‘Litildane’ in 1574, ‘Litilden’ in 1578/9, ‘Lyttildane’ in 1582 and occurs as ‘Littildermn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

little-denner (li'-ul-de-nur) n., arch. breakfast – ‘Little-dinner, A morsel taken in the morning before going to work, Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

Little Drinkstone (li'-ul-dringk-stin) n. former name for lands near Drinkstone. In 1550/1 Robert, son and heir of Adam Scott of ‘Nethirma-nis of Hassenden’ was infected by Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule in the ‘2½ merklands of Litill Dryngstoun’ in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. There followed a letter of reversion by John Scott of Drinkstone in favour of Robert Scott ‘in Hassendenburn’ of the same lands on payment of £70 Scots in 1566. In 1606 Walter Scott of Alton was served heir to his father Adam’s lands of ‘Littill Dombstoun’ in the Barony of Chamberslain Newton, which is presumably a transcription error for Little Drinkstone.

the Little End (thu-li'-ul-end) n. informal name for part of the old school on Orrock Place, where the younger children were taught.

Little France (li'-ul-frans) n. name for an area between the Slitrig and the old railway line just north of Shankend farm. Aerial photography has identified the outlines of rig lines, a small enclosure and the foundations of former buildings (the origin is obscure; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Little Gledstane (li'-ul-gled-stän) n. nickname for one of the local Gledstains family of Cocklaw Castle, who took part in the Raid of the Redeswire. This was probably James of Cocklaw, 12th of that Ilk, the nickname presumably suggesting that he was short. There was also a field in Rulewater with the same name, but whether it was connected is uncertain – ‘The laird Watt did weel indeed, His friends stude stoutly by himsell; With little Gladstane, gude in need, For Greitin kendna gude be ill’ [T].

Little Gledstains (li'-ul-gled-stänz) n. former name for some lands which were part of the Barony of Feu-Rule in the Rule valley. There is presumably some connection with the Gledstains family and perhaps with the local hero of the Raid of the Redeswire in particular, but no details are known. The lands lay between those of Hobsburn and Langraw (precisely where is uncertain, since these farms were once of considerable extent) and were said to have formerly been a Lairdship. It is possible that Adam Scott of ‘Gledstains’ recorded in 1581 was Laird there. Robert Elliot ‘in Gledstanes’ was removed from the lands by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in 1610. The lands were part of the Stobs estate in the late 17th century, and were included in the contract where rental income went to the widow of Sir Gilbert Elliott and her surviving children. This is probably the ‘Glestains’ where Thomas Oliver was farmer in the Little Gover

1758. The old house was still in existence in 1775, having thick walls and iron bars on the small windows; part of the building materials were incorporated into the garden house at Hobbsburn (it is ‘Li-tig-laidstaines’ in 1562, ‘Little Gledstaines’ in 1677 and ‘Little Gladstanes’ in 1693).

the Little Gover (thu-li-ul-gi-vur) n. nickname, probably from the 19th century, and possibly related to Johnnie the Gover – ‘Sally Machusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].

Little Harden Burn (li-ul-haw-din-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Harden Hill and joins Harden Burn to the east of old Castleton.

Little Hassendean (li-ul-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for Westerhouses in the Parish of Hassendean, so-called in 1582.

little-hoose (li-ul-hoos) n., arch. a toilet, water-closet.

little lee (li-ul-leec) n., poet. little peace – ‘Aft has he beat your slough-hounds back And set yourselves at little lee. Fala, &c.’ [CPM].

the Little Little Maister (thu-li-ul-mas-tur) n. nickname for a schoolmaster called Turnbull in the late 18th century.

the Little Muir (thu-li-ul-meewr) n. former name for a farmstead or area near Closses, at the edge of Hawick Moor. It was mentioned in 1766 in the description of 9 small pieces of land that were let in order to try to prevent encroachment on the Common by neighbouring tenants.

Little Newton (li-ul-new-in) n. probably part of the farm of Newton in Bedrule Parish. Adam Grahamlaw, son of the Laird of ‘litill newtoun’ is recorded in 1502. The farm was burned by Simon Armstrong and Clement Crozier and their men, for which they were pardoned in 1531/2. John Grahamlaw ‘of Litill Newtoun’ is recorded in 1572/3. William and George ‘Grimslay’, sons of the deceased Harry of ‘Little Newton’, were held for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Hallrule in 1606.

Little Park (li-ul-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, probably the farm of Castleton Park, with the ‘Little’ used to distinguish it from the larger holding of Park (or ‘Copshaw Park’) to the south. William Scott was tenant there in 1694, according to the Horse Tax rolls, with Archibald Nixon also listed as a resident (it is ‘Littill park’ in 1694 and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Little Rulewud (li-ul-rool-wud) n. former name for some lands near Denholm, possibly adjacent to those of Rulewud itself. It has also been suggested that it was an old name for Denholm Dean. In the reign of David I (1329-71) there is a Crown confirmation of these lands in the barony of Cavers to Thomas of Cranstoun. The lands probably once belonged to the family of Rule. This was confirmed again in about 1380, with the lands then being referred to as being ‘near Dennum’. In 1458/9 the lands are among those for which Thomas Cranston of that Ilk had a discharge with Douglas of Cavers for rentals. The lands of ‘Litilroulwod, with tower thereof’ are listed among those in the Barony of Cavers in 1511 and regranted to Sir William Cranston of that Ilk in the following year and still held by John Cranston according to a discharge of 1574. The ‘40 shilling land of Roulwoode parva alias tower’ was passed from John, Lord Cranstoun to his nephew William in 1636. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698; it is described as having a wood and tower, called the lands of ‘Toure’, near the town of Denholm. In modern times the name has been given to a cottage to the east of Denholm Dean (it is ‘Little Rulewod’ in c.1380, ‘lyttill Roulwode’ in 1458/9, ‘Litill Roulwod’ in 1511, ‘roulew parua’ in 1512, ‘Little Roulwod’ in 1574, ‘Little Rowlwood’ in 1687 and ‘Little Roallwood’ in 1698).

Little Saut Haa (li-ul-saw-haw, -sawl-hal) n. Little Salt Hall, house built above Langlands Road in 1937, near the former Salt Hall. It was designed by Kathleen Veitch and probably built for teacher William Redpath. It is a grade C listed building. The word ‘Little’ was later removed from the house’s name.

the Little Shop see the Wee Shop

Little Steil (li-ul-stil) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1541 rental roll as ‘Littlesteil’. They were valued at 6 shillings and tenanted by Bartholomew Nixon (possibly related to Stells or the Steel).

Little Sundi (li-ul-sun-di) n., arch. the day before Communion Sunday, being a fast day, a fast day in general.
Little Tudhope Hill

Little Tudhope Hill (li’-ul-tu-dup-hil) n. hill just to the north-west of Tudhope Hill, on the boundary between Rosburghshire and Dumfriesshire. It reaches a height of 483 m.

Little Warrington Sike (li’-ul-waw-rin’-in-sik) n. stream in Castleton Parish, which rises on Larriston Fells and joins Storff Sike and then Great Warrington Sike before running into Larriston Burn.

little wheel (li’-ul-wheel) n., arch. smaller type of spinning wheel, used in Hawick through the 18th and early 19th centuries for flax or hemp spinning – ‘There was presented by Mrs. Hogg, Crumhaugh-hill, a spinning wheel, i.e. the ‘Little Wheel’, formerly used for spinning lint’ [HAST1863] (cf. muckle wheel).

Little Whithaugh (li’-ul-whi-tuf) n. small farm near Whithaugh, to the north-east of Newcastleton. Thomas Mather was tenant there in 1694.

Little Whitlaw (li’-ul-whi-law) n. name of part of the farm at Whitlaw, lying south of the Flex road, bordering on the old Common. It was next to ‘Meikle Whitlaw’, from which it was separated by the Flex (or Whitlaw) Burn. It was long a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other Buccleuch properties, covering 60 acres and being bounded by the Slitrig, Flex and Hawick Common, with no farmhouse at that time. It was leased (along with Meikle Whitlaw) to Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw in 1692. The tenant at the beginning of the 19th century was James Elliot. The farmer there in 1841 and 1851 was James Knox, when the farm covered 97 acres, and in the 1860s the farmer was James Shiel. The area of this earlier farm is the site of farm buildings of Flex farm.

Little Wrae Cleuch (li’-ul-rä-kloo-ech) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Windy Knowe and lying to the east of Muckle Wrae Cleuch.

Little Wullie Dunlop see Wullie Dunlop

Livingstone (li-ving-stin) n. Rev. John (1603–72) born in Monyabroch, Stirlingshire, son of Rev. William and Agnes. He preached in Ireland and then Galloway, before being appointed minister of Ancrum in 1648. He was one of the Commissioners to Charles I in 1650, perhaps in the party that travelled to Breda to offer him the Crown. He was appointed by Cromwell in 1654 to recommend ministers to vacant parishes. He attested to the character of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch in 1654. After the Restoration he refused to accept episcopacy, was banished in 1663 and died in Holland. He wrote an autobiography (not published until 1754), as well as notes on some of his contemporaries, and worked on a translation of the bible into several languages. He was friends with other local ministers, including Rev. James Kerr at Abbotrule, Rev. John Scott at Oxnam, Rev. John Scott at Hawick and Rev. William Elliot at Yarrow. He also associated with Sir William Scott of Harden, Sir Gideon Scott of Highchesters, Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk and several Pringle landowners, as well as Lady Stobs, Lady Newton and Mrs. Elliot of Craigend. He married Janet Fleming and had at least 15 children, although most died in infancy. His daughter Marion was born in Stranraer in 1642 and married Rev. John Scott of Hawick. His time at Ancrum is recorded on a stone built into the wall of the Manse garden there. Mary Ann (19th C.) owner of the lands of Coldlaw and Tandlaw according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. Her name is recorded as ‘Mrs. Mary Ann Livingstone or Finlay’. She was presumably the widow of someone called either Livingstone or Finlay, perhaps a descendant of Rev. Robert Scott of Coldhouse. William of Drumry (15th C.) son of Sir Robert, from the Clydebank family. He held the half (probably the eastern half) Barony of Hassendean, according to a sasine of 1467. This was also stated in a ‘letter of reversions’ of 1470, in which Alexander Scott of HowPasley and Abington gave redemption money for Midshiel and Appletreehall; it is unclear when he first gained the barony. He was the Lord of Drumry fined in 1493 for non-presence (relating to his lands in Hassendean) at the Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh. He resigned the barony to the King in 1493/4 and it then passed to Alexander, Lord Home. Also in 1493/4 he assigned (with the consent of his son Robert) 3 ‘letters of reversions’ to Alexander, Lord Home, these being for Midshiel and Appletreehall, East Mains and Clarilaw. He probably married Euphemia, daughter of David Wemyss of that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Sir Robert.
Lizzie Campbell’s Spring

lizzie-rin-the-hedge (li-zee-rin-thu-hej) n., arch. goosegrass, cleavers, Galium aparine (also robin-rin-the-hedge; see sticky wullie).

’ll (i, ul) contr. will – ‘Ee’d better heide thae rock-bools, or the bairns ‘ll kinsh thum’[ECS], ‘...oor folk ‘ll bei touched an’ influenced in a manner which ‘ll bei unmistakable’[BW1939] (often attached as a contraction to the previous word).

loan (lôan) n., arch. a lane, especially one leading to a meadow, in former times a strip of land between fields, left uncultivated for driving cattle homeward – ‘At Allanhaugh ... the devil was seen regularly every Saturday evening, walking along the loan’[EM1820], ‘In loan or steedin’ whene’er they saw her, Muckle Mou’d Meg was the name they’d caa her’[WL], ‘At Allanhaugh, a small village (the vestiges of which only now remain) in the upper parts of Tiviotdale, the devil was seen regularly every Saturday evening, walking along the loan’[Scots Mag. 1820].

the Loan (thu-lôn) n. once the lane out to the pastures on the Common, being part of the Burgh lands, sandwiched between both West Mains and East Mains and connecting the Town with the Common. It was known as the ‘Common Lone’ or ‘Lone’ up until about 1860. It became the main road through the town towards Carlisle, this not changing until the New Road was built in 1815. Both sides were first feued in 1792, this being the first extension of the Town beyond its ports (hence before this time the Loan was technically outside the Burgh limits). It was slowly built up with houses from then on, with further development of the upper West End through the 19th century. J.P. Alison designed Nos. 2 and 7 in 1901. Some houses were removed in 1939. There was much demolition and building work between 1957 and 1977, with reconstruction in 1974–77, allowing a clear view of the Moat and new access to Drumlanrig School – ‘Up the Loan we’ll drive like fire ...’[AB], ‘Down the Loan we come fu’ doucely ...’[AB], ‘...And doon the Loan like fire’[JT], ‘As Aw was gaun up Hawick Loan ...’[JSB], ‘For now o’ the Loan I used to ken There’s hardly a stamin’ stane’[DH].

loanheid (lôn-heed) n., arch. top end of a loan – ‘He may have taken in a piece of the loan-head by that dyke’[HAST1916].

the Loanhead (thu-lôn-heed) n. Loanhead, the former name for the area at the top of the Loan. Up until the early 20th century the area had many fields rented by farmers who had their barns and stables in the town. Farmers of the 19th century included the Hendersons of the Back Row, the Blakes of the Back Row, the Elliot of the Loan, the Waldies of the Green Wynd, the Andersons of the Green Wynd, the Patersons of the Loan, the Laidlaws of the Loan, the Thorburns of the Loan, the Richardson of the Loan, the Nichols of the Loan and the Hunters of Drumlanrig Place. The last farmers in the area were probably Dick Scott, (who kept pigs at the top on the right-hand side) and the Cavers family (who were there well into the 20th century). The area also had the covered reservoir that supplied most of the town up until the 1960s; for many decades in the 19th century children would sit on its roof to watch the Chase – ‘... The Loanhead cockerel, noisy bird That early in the morn was heard’[IWL].

Loanhill (lôn-hil) n. lost place name near Branhomme, listed in the description of the half lands of Branhomme in 1420 when they were granted to Robert Scott of Rankiburn. The lands described include ‘half of the meadow of Lonnehyll’, with precise location uncertain, but perhaps somewhere to the west of Branhomme.

loanin (lôn-in) n., arch. a lane, between fields – ‘Ah! weel might there be heard a moaning, Throughout the land on ‘ilka loaning’’[AD], ‘The loanin’ up the hill – ay, ay! Far as the laigh march-line; It was the road we took the kye, When we were boys lang-syne’[ECB], ‘They met in the Kirkyard and loaning, Old burgesses loyal and true’[RSC], ‘The long road that rins doon throwe Newton an bye the Dryburgh loanee’[ECS] (also written ‘loanee’).

the Loanin (thu-lôn-in) n. the Loaning, a street in Denholm, being the road out of town towards the fields to the south of the Hawick to Jedburgh road.

the Loanin Burn (thu-lôn-in-burn) n. stream in Denholm running alongside the Loaning.

the Loanside (thu-lôn-sid) n. former name for lands lying adjacent to the Loan (also written ‘Loneside’).
Loan Toll (lön-tōl) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses, the building still existing with a commemorative plaque, opposite 25 Loan (near the gates of Mote Park). The building sticks out further into the road than those nearby, indicating its former purpose: the Loan was formerly the main road out of Hawick to the south. This is the first place the drums and fifes march to on the Thursday of Common Riding week, and is also on the route of the Cornet’s Walk after the Colour Bussing. It was also referred to as the ‘Turnpike Bar’.

Local Government Bill (lō-kal-gu-ver-min’-bil) n. important bill of 1929 which took away powers from smaller burgh councils (with a population under 20,000), yielding control to County Councils. Parish Councils and Education Authorities were dissolved, with education and welfare being controlled by the County. In Hawick there was much resistance to these changes, with the town losing control of its police force, public health and road maintenance. Roxburghshire County Council grew in power as a result.

loch (loch) n. lake, the nearest big example near Hawick is St. Mary’s Loch. But plenty of smaller bodies of water just outside the town are also called lochs, e.g. Leahead Loch, Mossills Loch and Branxholme Loch.

Loch (loch) n. David of Overcarnbie (d.1780), General Inspector of Fisheries in Scotland and Inspector of the Woollen Manufacturers of Scotland. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1777, presumably when passing through Hawick on the tour he made for the Board of Manufactures. He wrote ‘A Tour through most of the Trading Towns and Villages of Scotland’ in 1778. The book has 2 pages describing trade and industry in Hawick, with a summary of the state of the fledgling knitwear manufacturing. This included a statement that there were 65 looms in the Town (18 of them making carpets) and 6 stocking frames. He once said that children as young as 5 could be usefully employed in the woollen trade.

Loch Bog (loch-bōg) n. area to the north of Newmill Burn and south of Branxholme Easter Loch.

Loch Burn (loch-burn) n. stream running from Blackcleuch Loch north-east to the Allan Water, also known as the Low Burn.

Lochburnfit (low-, loch-burn-fi’) n. Lochburnfoot, a former farmstead where the Loch Burn meets the Allan Water, west of Southfield. The Mosspaull ride-out route often goes past here. There may once have been a weaving village here. Walter Miller was a weaver there in 1694. James and John Reid were living there in 1745 and John ‘Slacer’ in 1748. Agricultural worker Richard Byers and ‘game watcher’ James Miller lived here with their families in 1841 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Loochburnfoot’ in 1694 and ‘Loughburnfoot’ in 1745 and 1841).

Lochburn Plantin (loch-burn-plawn’-in) n. Lochburn Plantation, wooded area along the south side of the Allan Water, just to the southwest of Southfield farm.

Lochcarron (loch-kaw-rin) n. tartan and knitwear manufacturers, with factory at 76 Princes Street, as well as bases in other Border towns. It was founded by Morris Buchan in 1947 in Gala, with his son Alistair Buchan joining in 1959 and becoming C.E.O. in 1986. The Hawick mill was the main knitwear centre, but closed in 2009.

Loch Cottage (loch-ko’-cej) n. cottage to the south of the road which passes Branxholme Easter Loch.

Lochcraig Heid (loch-kräg-heed) n. hill in the south-western part of the Borders, behind Loch Skeen. It reaches a height of 801 m, and can be seen in the distance from many local vantage points.

Lochdail (loch-dāl) n. former name for lands near Hawick. They are mentioned among lost placenames by James Wilson in 1850, but their location is still unknown.

Lochgreen (loch-green) n. lands, formerly part of Essenside, bordering on Essenside Loch. This small area was annexed to Castleside in 1760 in exchange for land nearer to Easter Essenside. This led to a dispute between the Cochranes of Ashkirk and the Elliots of Minto over rights to the marle in the Loch in the early 1800s.

Lochend (loch-end) n. former name of farm near Kaimend, about a mile south-east of Hawick. It was just to the north of the small body of water opposite the road to the east of Kaimend, i.e. on the east side of the back road from Hummelknowes to Ormiston, and was also known as Ormiston Lochend. The farmer there in 1797 was John Clerk. In 1861 it was ‘Loughend’ with James Cavers and Alexander Lang and their families as residents. In the 1860s the farmere there was James Davidson (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, between ‘Roxmount’ and ‘Ormistonmains’, and labelled ‘Ormiston Lochend’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Loch Hill (loch-hil) n. hill on the east side of the Ewes valley, between the farms of Glendivan and Hoghill. It reaches a height of 258 m and has (a hill-fort at its summit, as well as a smaller enclosure to the west. The name presumably comes from the small body of water, which lies on high ground between the 2 archaeological features.

Lochmaben (loch-mü-bin) n. town west of Lockerbie in Annandale. It was a major Bruce seat in the 12th and 13th centuries and became a royal burgh in 1440. Lochmaben Castle was once the strongest fortress in the Borders, and covered 16 acres. The lands passed to the Murrays and then the Johnstones. Population 2,024 (1991).

Loch o the Lowes (loch-ō-thu-lowz) n. body of water south of St. Mary’s Loch, originally part of it, but separated by deposits from the burns that flow into there. It is about 1 1/2 miles in circumference. This may originally have been the name of the whole lake, with the larger portion later taking the name of the chapel there.

Loch Park (loch-pawrk) n. area to the east of the High Street, once a small pond, but largely drained in 1835 because of the smell, to rid the area of its ‘pestilential vapours’. A curling rink was opened there in 1854 and used until 1866, when another pond was opened near St. Leonard’s. It was also used as a place for public demonstrations, e.g. in 1884 around 10,000 people rallied there in support of the Franchise Act. The area was used as an auction ring by Andrew Oliver & Son until 1883, when it was purchased by James Scott and David Rutherford, who continued sales there until the early 1900s. The land was then used for other purposes, becoming a railway maintenance yard in 1921, before being converted to an industrial park for small businesses in 1968. Now the name tends to refer specifically to the industrial estate.

Loch Park Road (loch-pawrk-röd) n. road running along the northern side of the Loch Park Industrial Estate, built in 1884, with the name deriving from the former pond. At the bottom of the street the road passed under a railway bridge, which was demolished in the early 1970s.

Loch Rig (loch-rig) n. ridge just to the south of Shielwood Loch.

Loch Sike (loch-sik) n. small stream that rises in Branxholme Easter Loch, running roughly south-east, through Loch Sike Plantation, to join the Newmill Burn and thence into the Teviot.

Loch Skeen (loch-skeen) n. loch high above the Grey Mare’s Tail, reached via a track along the Tail Burn (also sometimes ‘Skene’).

lock (lok) n., arch. a small amount, particularly of hair, straw or similar, a pinch – ‘An’ yet a lock o’ saut joost right laid on, By an aul’ wife, prove an effectual cure’[JoHa] (cf. weelock).

lock (lok) n. one of two positions in rugby, nos. 4 and 5, also known as the second row, who lock together the front row in the scrum. Such players are usually tall and have squashed ears.

Lock (lok) n. John (13th/14th C.) from somewhere in Roxburghshire. He swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, with his name being recorded as ‘Johan Lock’. His seal shows an 8-rayed figure and the words ‘SJOHT’S LOG’. He was also ‘Lok’ on the jury for the inquest into the inheritance of the half-barony of Wilton in 1303/4.

Lockerbie (lo-kur-bee) n. town near the Border in Dumfries & Galloway region, where the Dryfe Water meets the Annan. It had a nearby Roman camp at Birrenswark Hill. The town was founded in the early 18th century by the Johnstones, became a burgh in 1863, and was known for its lamb sales. It gave its name to the ‘Lockerbie Lick’, meaning a slashed face, during the times of feuding between the Johnstones and the Maxwells. Tragedy struck in 1988 when a terrorist bomb brought down a Pan-Am jet, killing all on-board and 11 people in the town. Population 3,982 (1991).

the Lockerbie lick (thu-lo-kur-bee-lik) n., arch. former term for the habit of the Johnstones of slashing their victims’ faces.

Lockhart (lok-har’) n. Allan Eliott (1803–78) 5th Laird of Borthwickbrae. Second (and oldest surviving) son of William Eliott, he was a lawyer and became Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and then Roxburghshire (in 1848). He was listed as a Commissioner in Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Borthwickbrae. He was called to the Bar in 1824. He was listed at Borthwickbrae among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory, and mentioned as a major landowner in Hawick Parish in 1838. He was Selkirkshire M.P. 1846–61, was also involved in local education and agriculture and served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. In 1841 he was absent from Borthwickbrae, but his sister and 4 children were there, along with a governess and 6 other servants. In 1861 he presented a jar of reptiles to the Archaeological Society. In 1874 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls as owner of Flex, as well as Wester Essenside and Leap Hill. In 1830 he married Charlotte (1809–88), 5th daughter of Sir David Dundas of Beechwood, and succeeded to the estates on the death of his father-in-law 2 years later. He had 12 children, including 5 sons who survived to adulthood: William
Lockhart

(b.1833), who succeeded and married an Elliot of Wolfelee; David (1834–1903), who married Fanny Wood of Hutton and had 3 sons; Capt. Allan (b.1837), who married twice and had a daughter; Col. Robert Dundas (b.1841), who had 2 daughters; and Charles Walter (1850–94), who married a daughter of Mark Neville and died without issue. His daughters included: Matilda (1832–98); Marianne (b.c.1836); and Robina (1840–1924). He retired in 1861 and after the Death of Lord Polwarth was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. George (d.1547) cleric who was Archdeacon of Teviotdale from about 1509 until 1533. The George ‘Herher’ referred to in 1509 is probably a transcription error for his name. He was elevated to Dean of Glasgow in 1533, and remained in that office until he died. Sir George (c.1630–89), Lord Carnwath, son of Sir James of Lee. He was a prominent Scottish advocate, who served as Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, Lord President of the Court of Session, Privy Counsellor and Commissioner to the Scottish Parliament for Lanarkshire. He married Philadelphia, daughter of Lord Wharton and was succeeded by his son George. He was murdered on Edinburgh High Street by the husband of a woman he had represented against him. In 1690 his son George was served heir to his lands around Jedhead in Southdean Parish. It is unclear how he acquired these in the first place. Sir George of Carnwath (1673–1731) son of Sir George. In 1690 he inherited his father’s annual rents of part of the Marquisate of Douglas in Jedforest, specifically 3 half steadings in Jedhead and half of 2 steads in ‘Campsheill-haugh’. He was a member of Parliament for the county of Edinburgh and one of the commissioners for arranging the union with England. He was a spy who brought to light the extent of bribery before the vote for the 1707 Union, leading to Burns line ‘bought and sold for English gold’. He was a Jacobite supporter and later a spy for Charles Stewart, having to flee the country for a year and dying in a duel 3 years later. Gilbert Elliott (1808–24) younger son of William of Borthwickbrae. He joined the Royal Navy and died onboard H.M.S. Diamond, which was captained by Lord Napier. John (18th C.) married Isabel Lillico in bedrule in 1724. John Elliott of Borthwickbrae (1796–1815). Eldest son of William, he was a Cornet in the Dragoons and was killed at Waterloo. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (18th C.) chambermaid at Cavers in 1791, when she worked for George Douglas. Mary Charlotte (1875–1965) daughter of Capt. William, 6th of Borthwickbrae and Dorothea Helen, daughter of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Her father sold Borthwickbrae in 1884. Her 3 brothers died before their father and in 1907 she became head of the lines of both Borthwickbrae and Wolfelee. In 1899 she married Maj. R.H. Adams, but took the surname Elliott-Lockhart in 1907. She had a son, called Sir Allan Robert (b.1905) and a daughter Dorothy Cecil Bertram. Capt. Robert Elliott (19th C.) of Borthwickbrae, he served in the Royal Artillery. Stephen (15th C.) leased the Crown lands of Gilmanscleuch in 1486. Walter Elliott (b.1804) younger son of William. He worked for the East India Company. He married Mary, daughter of William Proctor and died in Madras without any children. Lt.-Col. William Elliott (1764–1832) 4th Laird of Borthwickbrae, eldest surviving son of John of Borthwickbrae and Margaret Laing. He appears to have lived at Orchard before succeeding to Borthwickbrae; he was described as ‘William Elliot Esq. in Orchard’ in the years 1790/1 and 1791/2 when he paid tax for having a female servant and 2 male servants, and also in 1790/1 and 1790/1 when he paid for owning a carriage. From 1792 he was ‘William Elliot of Borthwickbrae’ when he continued to pay the duty for 2 male servants and a carriage in Roberton Parish, with 3 servants in 1793 and 1794 and 1 in 1797. He was at Orchard on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1790–94, when he had up to 4 carriage horses, as well as being owner of 2 work horses in 1797. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. From 1795 he served as Colonel for the local troop of Yeomanry (volunteer cavalry, also known as the Roxburgh Fencible Dragoons), leading his men in repelling the French (who were supplying arms to Ireland) at Killala Bay in 1798. He was later appointed major commandant of the Roxburgh Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry, and turned out with his regiment at the False Alarm of 1804. In 1821 he was appointed Lieut.-Col. of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. In 1802 he paid the Land Tax on Borthwickbrae, the west side of Howcleuch and Wester Alemoor. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1812. He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He was left the lands of Meikledale and Flex by his uncle, William Laing. He also inherited lands of Old Melrose, where his family would sometimes reside. He became M.P. for Selkirkshire, serving 1806–30, and was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1823. There is a letter of 1824 where the Burgh of Selkirk asked him for funds for the races at the Common Riding there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 he complained about poachers, with Andrew Oliver as his lawyer. In 1792 he married Marianna (or Marianne), daughter and heiress of Allan Lockhart of Cleghorn, and changed his surname to ‘Eliott-Lockhart’. His children were: Jane (b.1795), baptised at Edinburgh, but recorded in Robertson; John (1796–1815), who was killed at Waterloo; Margaret, who was at Borthwickbraehaugh in 1841; Allan (b.1803), who succeeded; Walter, who died in Madras; William (b.1808), who became a Major; and Gilbert (1808–24), who died on H.M.S. Diamond. He died at Cleghorn. Capt. William Elliott (1833–1907) 6th Laird of Borthwickbraehaugh, and 14th of Cleghorn in Lanark, eldest son of Allan. He served in the Camerons and 74th Highlanders, retiring from service in 1868. He was then assistant Chief Constable of Lancashire before becoming Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch at Branxholme, with responsibility for Selkirkshire and Teviotdale. He held this position from 1876 until 1892. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1870. He was also Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as Selkirkshire and Lanarkshire. He was Chairman of the Managers of Hawick Cottage Hospital and President of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, as well as being on the committee for the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He became an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1881. In 1882 he was present (as Chamberlain) at the opening of the Dod Burn water works in Hawick. He was also proprietor of the lands at the Flex in the 1880s. He sold Borthwickbraehaugh to Robert Noble in 1884 and for a time lived at Branxholme, but then moved to Cleghorn in Lanarkshire. He matriculated arms in 1893. In 1866 he married Dorothea Helen, eldest daughter of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Their children were: Capt. Allan Ashton (1867–98), who died in Malta; Walter Blair (1870–95), who died unmarried; Mary Charlotte (b.1875), who succeeded as heir of the line; and Norman (b.1871), who died in infancy. He wrote about the history of Branxholme, including the associated Scotts of Buccleuch, for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club (sometimes ‘Lockhardt’), and often called ‘Eliott-Lockhart’, note also that it became ‘Eliott’ rather than ‘Eliot’.

Lockhart Place (lok-har-’plis) n. street in the Wellogate area, built in 1879 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company, and named after the second William Elliott Lockhart. No. 9 is a grade C listed building.

Lockie (lo-kee) n. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Thomson and their children included Thomas (b.1769), Agnes (b.1772) and William (b.1777). The witnesses in 1772 were merchant John Oliver and wright James Aitkin. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. Probably the same Andrew married Isobel Harvie and had children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, including John (b.1691) and Bessie (b.1693). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1720. He married Bessie Storie in 1719. Their children included: John (b.1720); Marion (b.1731) James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Jean Scott. Their children included John (b.1768). James (18th C.) resident at Threehead in Robertson Parish. His name was written ‘Locie’ in 1771 when his twins James and William were baptised. Perhaps the same James was witness to a baptism in Wilton for Walter Scott at Whitfield in 1770. James (18th/19th C.) tailor in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Janet (b.1708) daughter of mason William. She was still living at Borthwickbraehaugh in 1851, but described as a ‘Carrier’. Her son Walter Thomson was also there, and as her nephew William Turnbull. Janet (b.c.1800) grocer recorded on the 1841 census for Wilton. She lived on Damside, which was perhaps the lower part of Wilton Path. Her children included Mary Hall, jessie, Betsy, John and William. By 1861 she appears to be on Dickson Street and with no occupation. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘John Lok’ when he was on the inquisition of 1303/4 for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It seems reasonable to suppose that his named was Lockie and that he was a local man, like the others. John (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William was also listed there and so probably related. John (18th C.) recorded at Denholm in 1725 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (b.1722) and Christian (b.1727), baptised in Cavers, were probably also his children. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1737 he witnessed a baptism for George Wallace, resident at Roughheugh. He married Elspeth Porteous in 1731 and their children included: James (b.1734); Anne...

(b.1736); and James (again, b.1740). It is possible he is the John who died in 1742, after whom the area of 'Lockieshedge' was named. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Nichol and their children included William (b.1764). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Violet Laidlaw and their children included: Mary (b.1752); Janet (b.1754); Isobel (b.1757); and Violet (b.1759). His wife was probably the daughter of Adam Laidlaw and Helen Bell born in 1729. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jane Stoddart and their children included Walter (b.1795), Margaret (b.1797) and Janet (b.1802). John (b.c.1773) resident of Sorbie in Ewesdale. In 1738 he was resident of 'the netherend' of Hassendean Byreleahugh in Roberton Parish. By 1768 he is the John who died in 1742, after whom the area of 'Lockieshedge' was named. John (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish. In 1764 he was a wright at Synton Parkhead. He married Margaret Cavers in 1795 and their children included: James (1796–1825), buried in Borthwick Waas, with the first part of the headstone unreadable; Janet (b.1798); John (b.1800); Jane (b.1802); Ann (b.1805); Isobella (b.1807); Thomas (b.1811); Euphemia (b.1813); William (1814/5–33), also buried in Borthwick Waas and Robert (b.1819). William (1788–1853) born at Stinty-Knowes, son of William and Jean Paterson. He was educated at Wilton and became schoolmaster at Stouslie in 1806, serving there for 37 years. He is listed as teacher at Stouslie among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was also known as a poet. A friend of 'Clinty', he wrote one of the Auld Brig poems. He also wrote 'Farewell to Edinburgh', a poem in celebration of the lighting of Hawick's first gas lamps, and others, including annual odes on the Duke of Buccleuch's birthday. He is also mentioned in a song from 'Daft Jock Gray', recorded in the book 'Memoir of Robert Chambers' (1872) – 'There's Lockie o' the Stinty Knowes, There's Nicol o' Dick-neuk, And Bryson o' the Priestrig, And Hall into the Heap'[DJG]. He married Isabel Anderson (from Roberton) in Wilton Parish in 1808. In the 1841 census he is at Stouslie School with wife Isabella and children Jean (b.1808) and William (b.1814). He is still teachere there in 1851, but now living at Easter Longbaulk, with 3 grandchildren also in the house. He died at Longbaulk. William (19th C.) of William Lockie's knitwear, founded in 1874, based on the Fore Raw and later at Riversdale Mills. He was a contributor to buying the Auld Mid Raw for demolition (sometimes written 'Lockey', 'Loky', 'Lokie', etc.).

house with the same name. It was the easternmost part of the area formerly known as ‘Roughheugh’ and the name applied to a large part of what is now Mayfield. It is first recorded as feued by Robert Langlands in two parts to John Biggar and to Robert and Mark Liddel of Whitehaugh in 1773. This second part passed to the Hart family in 1776. Apparently a beech hedge bordering the old road to Selkirk (Stirches Road) grew until the 18th century, where there are now buildings.
Walter Scott was recorded living there in 1797.
The 18th century high wall was demolished in 1970 when the road was realigned (named after the hedge and an early resident, John Lockie, who died in 1742; also written, presumably in error, ‘Lockiesedge’ and ‘Lockie’s Edge’).

Lockieshedge Hoose (lo-keez-hej-, lo-keez-zej-hoos) n. house in the area known as Lock-ieshedge, off Stirches Road, opposite Wellfield Road. Also known just as ‘Lockiesedge’ or sometimes ‘Lockiesedge’.

Lockie’s Mill (lo-keez-mill) n. William Lockie
& Co., knitwear manufacturers of Riversdale
Mills, founded in 1874. The company also had a small factory off Drumlanrig Square (on the Fore Raw) in the latter part of the 19th century, being a 3-storey building reached from No. 28. This now houses ‘Westfield Works’ at Nos. 27 and 28. The building’s frontage has a combination of paired windows and oriel windows. The modern company focuses on luxury garments.

lock-in (lok-in) n. a period of extended hours
after a pub is technically closed.

lockit (lo-kee’, -ki’) pp., arch. locked – ‘Caged up, within a glass-case lockit, He’ll shew the curse that Job invokit’ [JoHa], ‘I’ll hae him lockit up for a scoundrel obtaining money by false pretences’ [JEDM], ‘... And the lilacs are lockit ticht
I’ their maidenhead’ [DH].

Lock the Door Lariston (lok-thu-dor-law-ri-stin) n. song written by James Hogg, the Et-trick Shepherd, in 1797. It was popular at the Colour Bussing and similar events in the 19th century. Scocha recorded a version in 2001 – ‘Lock the door, Lariston, Lion of Liddesdale; Lock the door, Lariston, Lowther comes on; The Armstrongs are flying. The widows are crying. The Castleton’s burning, and Oliver’s gone’ [ES] (usually spelled with one ‘r’).

locusts (lō-kists) n., pl., arch. carob beans, used as a cattle feed and before WWI purchased by children as a confection, chewing the beans until only the fibre was left – ‘A licorice stick, a neivefu’ monkey nits, A bag o’ locust – tidbits rare’ [WL]

(also called ‘locust beans’).

Lod (lad, lōd) n., arch. Lord – ‘... Till ten had struck, When Bob cries ‘Lod, My chiels, we’re on the batter’’ [VW], interj., arch. used to express disapproval or disagreement, especially in phrases like ‘Lod sakes’ or ‘Lod man!’ – ‘... An’ champin’ smash amang the dirty puddle; Lo’d!
how they sprawl aboot, an’ ginnin’ gudle!’ [JoHa]
(also written ‘Lo’id’).

Lodge 111 (loj-yin-u-lee-vin) n. Hawick Masonic Lodge, being Lodge St. John, No. 111.
Affectionately known as ‘the three ones’. Its premises are at 33 Commercial Road, and were converted from the building of Innes, Chambers & Co., tweed merchants in 1923 (with designs by J.P. Alison). Prior to that their premises were located at Myreslawgreen. The Lodge started at least as early as 1768, when a charter gives its number as 141, this being altered later. Activity lapsed in the mid-19th century, but it was resuscitated in 1860 and has been active since then.
This lodge helped to erect the Henry Scott Ridddell monument.

Lodge 424 (loj-fow-ur-too’ee-fow-ur) n. Lodge
St. James, Border Union Royal Arch (B.U.R.A.), No. 424, being a branch of the Freemasons, with premises at 8 Union Street, built in 1893, to the designs of J.P. Alison. Before that it met every second Tuesday in Orrock Church Hall. It formed essentially out of disputes over the Volunteers, with mass resignations from the other Hawick Lodge in 1863, led by prominent townsmen such as George Hardie Fraser. The Lodge celebrates a Mid-Summer Festival of St. John. Latterly the club members have been meeting twice per month, from September to April. A history, written by James Edgar, was published in 1932.

Lodgegill (loj-gil) n. former farm on the Tarras Water, east of the Ewes valley. It was a seat of the Elliots in the 17th and 18th centuries. Descendants of Anderson of Tushielaw were shepherds there in the 18th and 19th centuries. Robert Scott and family were living there in 1841 – ‘Callants, ride! what ails your rotten naigs? He’s making straight for Lodgegill and the craigs!’ ‘[HNo].

Cavers Parish. William Scott (servant at Colterscleuch) was householder there in 1796. It is recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when John Lunn was farmer there (it is ‘Lodgnowe’ in 1796 and 1797).

Lod-sake (lōd-sāk) interj., arch. a mild oath,
‘for the Lord’s sake’ – ‘... when, Lo’dsake, callants! wad ye believe it – the cratur a’ at Logan (lŏg-ĭn) n. Andrew ‘Andy’, champion archer from Hawick, who runs the Redgauntlet Archery Club. In 2005 he helped British Telecom by firing a downed telephone cable across the Teviot near Hassendean Burn. Later that year he won the Recurve Bow section of the European Championships and was given the Honorary Provost’s Council’s Achievement Award. He lit the brazier at the Opening Ceremony for the Hawick ‘Olympics’ in 2012 – ‘Oov got threi champions archers Europe’s Logan, and world champions McCombe and Cook’ [AlB], Rev. James (16th/17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1602, he was presented to the Parish of Southdean in 1609. However, the Presbytery decided about a week later ‘to provide another kirk for him’, so he appears not to have been the official minister.

James (17th C.) born at Muthill, Perth, he was minister of Robertson Free Kirk. He was recorded at Roberton when the Ordnance Survey Name Book was made in the period 1858–60. In 1861 he was a lodger at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. Note that a man of the same was minister at Swinton 1833–68, and made the second statistical account there. Mr. ?? London Laidlaw (lun-din-lād-lə) n. nickname of Robert Laidlaw.

the London Scottish Border Counties Association (thu-lun-din-ko’-eesh-bör-dur-koon’-eez-aw-so-comp-sheen) n. former organisation of Borders gentlemen and ladies based in London. It was formed at about the end of 1896, and held its first annual dinner in 1898, with the Chair occupied by the Duke of Buccleuch. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle talked on ‘the literature of the Scottish border’ at the 1904 dinner.

Longueville (long-vil) n. Thomas (d.c.1340) possible the earliest member of the Langlands family. One story is that he was a French Pirate, ‘the Red Rover’, who was captured attacking one of William Wallace’s ships, with the two becoming friends. A more likely story is that the family came across with William the Conqueror and settled in Scotland. It seems he was also known as ‘Thomas de Charteris’ after marrying the Charteris heiress and taking her name. It may have been that a branch of the family established themselves at Langlands and took that as their name. This early history is unclear, and further confused through the influence of historical romances such as ‘The Scottish Chiefs’ (1809) by Jane Porter, popularising earlier tales by the mediaeval balladist Blind Harry. The family gained lands at Langlands in Peeblesshire, built the original Kinfauns Castle in Perthshire and also acquired local lands that would become the Langlands (i.e. Wilton) estate. Wallace is traditionally supposed to have visited the Langlands estate in 1297 and ‘tethered his charger to a thorn tree near the Castle Wall’.

the Longuevilles (thu-long-vilz, -long-gwun-vee) n. originally Norman family, taking their name from a small town in Normandy. The Longuevilles, Earls of Buckingham, were the ancient lords, and there are several places still bearing the name in England. The family held lands in the Barony of Wilton from the early 13th century. There has also been the suggestion that this was the same family as ‘Langlands’, who are recorded as Barons of Wilton in the 15th century; this connection would establish the same family as Barons for about 500 years.

Lookup (loo-kup) n. Andrew (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) and Provost of Jedburgh, who was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1776. Probably the same Andrew paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. Thomas (1729/30–1811) forester for the Buccleuch estates in ‘Teviotdale-head’ in at least the period 1798–1807. He is probably the Thomas ‘Lukup’ recorded as ‘Groom and House Servant’ at Branxholme in 1778 and 1779 (working for William Ogilvie) and ‘House Servant’ in 1785 and 1786 (working for Adam Ogilvie). He may be the Thomas who married Alison Gill (or McGill) in 1771 and whose children included: Helen (b.1772); Christian (b.1775); and Robert (b.1783). The witnesses in 1772 were John Laurie (preacher at Caerlenrig) and John Kyle. He died at Branxholme and was buried at St. Mary’s. William (17th C.) listed as wright and servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. His surname is transcribed ‘Linkype’, but it seems likely this was ‘Lookup’. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for work done at Branxholme and Hawick.

loon (loon, lown) n., arch. a lad, youth, fellow, rascal – ‘...Robert Hardie being accusit ...for ...calling the council’s officers men-sworn lowns’ [BR1657], ‘I chased the loons doon to Carlisle, Jook’t the raip on the Hair-i-bee, Ma naig nickert an’ cockit his tail, But wha duar meddle wi’ me?’ [T], ‘...’Till a reid hette pyke the master gatte, And gave his loone a prodde’ [JTe], ‘I hate the loon, who, under friendship’s guise, Conceals the bitter malice of a foe’ [JoHa], ‘...The loon that winna’ chorus’t’ [JT], ‘Now foul fa’ ilka coward loon Wha winna’ join the fray’ [JT], ‘...With an English loon if he crosses spear Well – the English loon has the most to fear!’ [WHO], ‘...Nae fitter henchman could he find Than Denholm’s genius loon’ [WL], ‘...Wi’ Pride no man can muster ‘less he be a Teri loon’ [DJ], ‘And, loons, here’s a secret I’m gaun tae loot dab ...’ [DJ] (also spelled ‘loun’ and ‘lown’; perhaps from Old Dutch).

loory (loo-ree) adj., arch. lowering, threatening (said of the sky).
loose (loos) n., arch. a louse.
Looselaw (loos-law) n. former farmstead on the Tweed Burn in Castleton Parish. On Stobie's 1770 map it was marked on the north side of the burn, close to the location of Hillhouse, which is not marked.
loosy (loo-see) adj., arch. lousy, infested with lice, mean, nasty.
loot (loot) v., poet. to let, allow – 'A wheen o' callants lowsed the girths And loot the sheltie free . . . ' [WL], 'And, loons, here's a secret I'm guen ta loot dabe .' [DJ] (not common Hawick pronunciation).
loom (loom) v., arch. to stoop, bend the body – ' . . aw had just looted doon to talk a birn oot o' ma shoe for a minute . . .' [BCM1880], ' . . . men war layin on a chaappin, lootin doon an howkin thre a skerr, the teime a stane-nappen injin gaed-on leike a tuim mill ' [ECS], n., arch. a stoop, act of bending – 'He limpit and stachert sae when he did gang, Wi' a loot and a stop, syne a bob and a bang' [JoHa] (also lout).
lootch (loo-chee) n., arch. the loach, Cobitis barbatula (also ‘loachie’).
 lootit (loo-teet) pp., arch. stooped – 'But she lootit doon and her rock tuik a lowe, An' that was a bad beginnin' o't' ' [T].
Lopdell-Bradshaw (lop-del-brad-shaw) n. Rev. Humphrey Maitland (1931/2–2004) from Angus, he was son of an officer in the Gordon Highlanders, and served as adjutant for that Regiment while they were stationed at Stobs in the 1930s. He was mentioned in dispatches for action in Cyprus in 1957. He became an Episcopalian minister in the early 1960s, serving at Holy Cross in Edinburgh, then in Gilmerton, Birmingham and Oxgangs, before moving to St. Cuthbert’s in Hawick in 1977. He left in 1988 for the Isla-Deveron group of parishes, apparently amid a storm over a section of the vestry forming a sort of social work agency. He was Canon of St. Andrew’s Cathedral, Inverness from 1991. He retired in 1997 and moved to Kirriemuir. He married Margaret and they had a daughter, Diane.
lopper gowan (lo-pur-gow-in) n., arch. the oxeye daisy, marguerite, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum (also ‘loppert gowan’; cf. horse-gowan).
loppert (lo-pur) pp., adj., arch. coagulated, clotted, said of milk, etc. – 'At dinner-time he treats his stomach, With lopper’d milk, or barley drammock' [JR], 'The mune she shines sae bright, Till a' the yirth aneth her een Is fu' o' loppert light' [DH] (also loupered).
lopperty (lo-pur-tee) adj., arch. coagulated, clotted.
lopperty-heid (lo-pur-‘ee-heed) n., arch. a dolt, blockhead.
Lord Alemoor (lørd-āl-moor) n. alternative title of the Earl of Tarras (Walter Scott of High Chester and Harden) in the latter part of the 17th century. It was also the title of Andrew Pringle, an 18th century judge.
Lord Balmerino see Elphinstone
Lord Goldielands (lørd-gold-‘ee-lindz) n. subsidiary title used by the Scotts of Buccleuch, along with Earl of Deloraine and Viscount Hermitage. It was created in 1706 for Henry, 3rd son of James, 1st Duke of Buccleuch, and became extinct in 1807 when Henry Scott, 4th Earl of Deloraine, died.
Lord Heathfield see Gen. George Augustus Eliott
Lord Herries (lørd-he-reez) n. hereditary title of the Herries and then Maxwell families, who owned the Barony of Feu-Rule until the mid-17th century (see Herries and Maxwell: written ‘Herris’ and variants).
Lord Harry’s Rant (lørd-ha-reez-rawn) n. song appearing in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’, published in Hawick in 1784. It is said there to be about one of the Earls of Deloraine, and this may have been Henry Scott (1676–1730), 1st Earl of Deloraine, 2nd son of James, 1st Duke of Buccleuch. With the first lines being ‘Give ear to my frolicsome ditty, Of one that a wager did lay . . .’, it has been printed in several forms under different names, such as ‘The Rant’. It tells the story of a gentleman who made a bet that he could cross the city without saying anything to the night watchers. But he is arrested by one, and only freed by the intercession of the Lord Mayor’s daughter.
Lord Lieutenant (lørd-loo-te-‘nin) n. official position in a county, originally set up in the late 18th century to be responsible for maintaining local law and order and calling out the militias in times of disturbance. It is a non-political position, the appointee being the Crown’s representative in the county, presenting medals on behalf of the Queen, organising royal visits, etc. They also have responsibility for the Territorial Army and Justices of the Peace. The position is typically held by a retired senior military officer, peer or business person. Lieutenants are among the few people allowed to fly the Lion Rampant. Due to local government reorganisation the regions covered are no longer counties, but referred Lord Montague (lòrd-mon-tu-gew) n. title of Henry James Montagu Scott uncle and guardian to the young 5th Duke of Buccleuch, who was made an Honorary Burgess along with the Duke when they travelled through Hawick in 1821.

Lord o Buccleuch (lòrd-ō-boo-kloo) n. title used by the head of the Scotts, also known as Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. The 1st Lord of Buccleuch was Walter, ‘the Bold Buccleuch’, who was raised to the peerage in 1606 and died in 1611. His son Walter was 2nd Lord until elevated to an Earldom in 1619. However, several of the earlier chiefs were called ‘Lord’, this being formerly synonymous with ‘Laird’. There were at least 10 Lairds before ‘the Bold Buccleuch’, with the first to sit in the Scottish Parliament as Lord of Buccleuch being Sir David Scott, 7th Laird, in 1481.

Lord o Hawick (lòrd-ō-hlk) n. title of the Barons of Hawick, particular used of the Douglases, responsible for law enforcement around Hawick in the early 16th century.

Lord Olifer (lòrd-o-lee-vur) n. nickname for Robert Oliver in the 17th century, and his son, also Robert in the early 18th century, as well as for an earlier Oliver in Falside in Southdean Parish – ‘Lord Olipher embalmed in song, A stranger to fear, a foe to wrong; Like sturdy Hab, branched from your race, Your lineage royalty would grace’ [WNK].

Lord Neaves see Neaves, Charles

Lord Pei Huill (lòrd-pi-hil) n., arch. a snobbish person – ‘... the man with the airs and graces was inevitably ‘Lord Pei Huill’ ’ [WL].

Lord Polwarth (lòrd-pol-wurth) n. the present head of the Scotts of Harden is Henry Alexander Hepburne-Scott, 10th Lord Polwarth. The first local Lord Polwarth was Hugh Scott, 11th Baron of Harden.

the Lord’s Trei (thò-lòrdz-trí) n. former tree near the western side of the road shortly before coming to the Caa Knowe. Its position is indicated by a raised area in the field. This is probably an ancient burial cairn (about 33 ft in diameter) with an enclosure around it. It may be related to the Caa Knowe cairn, which is nearby. The date that the tree grew in the centre is not known, but it was already an old tradition by the mid-19th century.

Lord Warden (lòrd-warden) n. official government position from the early 14th century until the Union of the Crowns in 1603, with responsibility for security of the lands around the Border. There were Lord Wardens of both Scotland and England, with the land split into West, Middle and East portions (sometimes just West and East), with Hawick lying in the Scottish Middle Marches. Sir James Douglas (‘The Black Douglas’) was the first recorded appointee on the Scottish side, in 1314. The Wardenship was hereditary with the Douglas family until forfeited in 1455. Afterwards there were usually 3 separate Scottish Wardens. The relevant Wardens for Hawick are approximately: Sir James Douglas, from 1314; Sir William Douglas, from 1343; Sir Archibald Douglas, 1364 and 1368-1400; Archibald 4th Earl of Douglas, from 1400; James 7th Earl of Douglas, sometime; William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, from 1433; William, 8th Earl of Douglas, from 1450; William Douglas of Cluny, from 1464; James, Earl of Buchan, from 1479; Walter Ker of Cessford, from 1502; Ralph and Andrew Ker, from 1503; Alexander, 3rd Lord Hume, from 1510; Sir Robert Ker, from 1514; Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford, from 1515; Anthony Darcy, from 1516; Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus, from 1525; Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, from 1536; Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, from 1538; Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, from 1550; James, Earl of Bothwell, from 1558; Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. From 1560; Earl of Angus (Archibald Douglas), from 1574; William Ker of Cessford, from 1583; Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, from 1584; Earl of Arran (James Stewart), from 1588; William Ker of Cessford, from 1588; Duke of Lennox (Ludovic Stewart), from 1592; Sir Robert Ker c.1594–1603 (see also Warden).

lorimer (lo-ri-nur, -ree-) n., arch. someone who makes metal parts for bridles and saddles, a saddler – ‘... Decerns Thomas Oliver to content and pay to James Scott, lorimer, 3 half firlots of aitts eiti... by his guidis and geir ... ‘ [BR1642].

Lorimer (lo-ri-nur) n. Sir Robert Stodart, R.S.A. (1864–1929) born in Edinburgh, he became a noted architect and promoter of the Arts and Crafts movement in Scotland. He designed the National War Memorial at Edinburgh Castle. Locally he was responsible for the design of the 1908 wooden chancel screen in St. Cuthbert’s, the 1897/8 renovation of Fatlips Castle, the clock tower in Gala Burgh Chambers and the War Memorial in Kelso.
Lorraine

Lorraine (lɔːrən) n. Agnes (16th/17th C.) suggested to have been a daughter of Hector of Harwood (although there is no evidence for this). She married Martin Elliot. In 1618 she held the livery of half a husbandland in Lilliesleaf and gifted the lands to her son and heir William Elliot. In 1625 she and William Elliot had a sasine of lands in Lilliesleaf. Agnes (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1745 she was charged by the Kirk Session of fornication with Thomas Barry, on the birth of her unnamed child. She had to appear before the congregation in sackcloth no less than 11 times. Probably the same Agnes appears to have married Thomas Barrie in Kirkton Parish in 1748. Alexander (14th C.) said to have been taken prisoner at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. It has been suggested that he was a son of Eustace, but there is no definite evidence of their relationship. In 1359 he was granted custody of the lands of Richard of Kirkbride by Edward III, presumably for supporting the English King. It may be that he was the progenitor of the Berwickshire Lorraines (several named Alexander), who were Sheriff-Clerks in Duns in the 17th and 18th centuries there. Alexander (16th/17th C.) resident of Kelso Parish. In 1602 he and his wife Marion Rutherford had a son James baptised. Among the witnesses was George Lorraine, who was surely a relative. It seems likely he was descended from the earlier Alexander. An Alexander recorded in Edinburgh in 1621 may have been his son, as well as John, who was a writer in Duns and married a daughter of Sir Alexander Don. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish and then gardener at Oakwood and Middleford. He was probably related to William and Robert, who were also in Ashkirk at the same time; they may all have been brothers and sons of George and Janet Fleming. His brother Robert (a gardener) witnessed the baptism in 1697 and probably the one in 1691 (which is hard to read) along with James . . . . He married Jean Ker and their children (several baptised in Selkirk) included: Jean (b.1691); Mary (b.1693); Margaret (b.1697); Lilias (b.1698); Elspeth (b.1700); and Margaret (again, b.1705). Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son James was baptised in Bedrule in 1698. His name is recorded as ‘Archibald Lorring’. He may have been a son of Walter and Janet Shortreed. Beatrix (17th C.) recorded in 1643 in Ruletownhead in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. Her lands were valued at £10. Edward (15th C.) Englishman who was the progenitor of the Barons of Kirkharle in Northumberland. It is unclear what connection there was to the Roxburghshire Lorraines; however, the forename Edward was also known in that branch. He was said to have lands in the Durham area. In 1425 he married Johanna, daughter and heiress of William de Strother. He thus became owner of Kirkharle, and neighbouring lands, including the Northumbrian farm of Hawick. He was probably succeeded by his son Edward. Edward (15th/16th C.) possibly son of James. He may have been the uncle of Hector of Harwood, for whom he witnessed a sasine in 1531. The witnesses after him were William and Patrick. Edward (16th C.) son of John who held lands in Blainslie near Melrose. His name appears to be written ‘Lorne’. In 1579 he had sasine for lands in Blainslie as well as the reversion for the lands. Edward (d.c.1598) Laird of Harwood in the late 1500s, son of Hector, who he succeeded in 1573. In 1573 he was summoned to appear before the Privy Council, along with Sir Thomas Turnbull and others for their raid on the house of Robert Kerr of Woodhead; however, they were acquitted because Kerr had been assisting the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He owned Hawthornside as well as Harwood, and also held the lands of Appotside (perhaps through marriage). In 1578/9 he was ‘guidsone’ (i.e. son-in-law) to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, when he was among men required to be presented to the Privy Council, with John Johnstone of that Ilk as cautioner, for the murder of Thomas Shiel. In 1580 he was ‘younger of Harwood’ when he was in a bond with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and Barnhills to keep peace with the Turnbulls of Minto and others; at that point the Lorraines of Harwood were united with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and Barhills, and feuding with the Turnbulls of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobsburn. In 1583 William Douglas of Cavers was cautioner for him. He is probably the ‘Larde of Harret’ who signed a bond of assurance with the English Warden in 1584 (along with Gledstains, Elliots, Armstrongs and others). He was recorded in 1585 along with William Douglas of Cavers as cautioners for John Douglas of Whitriggs. He and John Turnbull of Minto were cautioners for ‘Hobie Elliot, called Vicar’s Hobb’ in 1589. Also in 1589 James Langlands of that Ilk was cautioner for him. About 1590 he was listed among landed men in the Borders. He is probably the Edward who (along with Gilbert) signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1580 he married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. He is said to have been an unassuming man, although his wife was the opposite. She apparently roused the ire of the Turnbull Clan, who laid waste to Harwood in the years 1598–1605. Hector and William, probably his sons or other close relatives, were slain, along with his wife’s servant. Flocks and herds were also carried off, as well as timber. The feud only ended when an appeal was made to the Earl of Angus. His son Hector succeeded him by 1599, while Edward and James were other surviving sons, and he may also have had sons William, Walter and Fergus. In 1606 his son James was declared a fugitive. Edward (16th/17th C.) younger son of Edward and Margaret Turnbull. He is mentioned several times as ‘Edward the younger of Harwood’. Edward of Harwood (b.c.1600) son of Hector, with his mother possibly being a daughter of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. His father was killed when he was quite young and his uncle James served as his tutor. He is recorded in an instrument of 1619 being required to marry Margaret Hamilton, sister to Francis Hamilton, who was heir of James Hamilton, formerly owner of lands in the Rule valley; this was under the instructions of his superior, Lord Herries. In fact Margaret married Rev. William Weir, who became minister at Hobbirk; it may be that not fulfilling the marriage contract meant that Edward had to pay a fine to Lord Herries. In 1630 he is recorded in a ‘contract of wadsett’ assigning the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside to William Weir, minister of Hobbirk; this followed the contract of 1598 when his father Hector had borrowed money from James Hamilton. In 1631 he granted sasine of Hartshaugh to Gilbert Elliott. Also in 1631 he had a precept of clare constat and sasine for Harwood and Hawthornside, granted by Andrew, Lord Jedburgh; this renewal confirms that he was great-grandson of Hector. In 1632 he and Rev. Weir were involved in another wadset of Harwood to Gilbert Elliott (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairtins’). In 1632 he had a sasine for Appotside, granted by Rev. William Weir, with the consent of Francis, son of James Hamilton, as well as for Tythelhouse. In 1633 he had a wadset with Gilbert Elliott for the lands of Tythelhouse. In 1637 he and Gilbert Elliott granted the lands of Harwood and Tythelhouse to William, eldest son of Simon Elliott of the Binks. He had thus ended his family’s ownership of Harwood, but held onto the small farm of Appotside. In 1643 he is listed as owner of Appotside, valued at £200. He is probably the ‘Laird Lorran’ who led a group of 20 or so men who captured Royalist leader William Murray after the Battle of Philiphaugh. He is recorded as ‘of Aposyd’ as witness to a contract of 1648 and again in 1649. He witnessed a marriage contract in 1652 for Robert Elliott and Margaret Riddell. In 1654 he is described as the ‘heritable proprietor’ when he and his eldest son Walter had a contract of ‘wadset’ with William Elliott of Harwood and the Binks for the lands of Appotside. In 1656 he resigned his lands of Appotside and Tythelhouse in favour of William Elliott of Harwood; this was with the agreement of his wife, Maisie Elliot, and also mentions his eldest son, Walter. An additional contract reserves for him the ‘mill, multures, sequels, suckin, kiln, houses, mill-lands lying beyond the water dam on the south side’ of Appotside, along with pasture for a few animals. He signed his surname as ‘Lorrain’. In 1659 he appears to be the tenant of Appotside Mill, along with Walter Riddell (tenant at Appotside), when the ‘liferent’ of the lands was given to Christine Grahamslaw (new wife of William Elliot of Harwood). In 1662 he was listed among the debtors to the deceased William Elliott of Harwood; Walter ‘in Whyttchaugh’ was also listed, and probably his son. In about 1663 the Land Tax Rolls record that he paid tax on £300 at Appotside. He married Maisie Elliot, who may have been from the Eliotts of Stobs (his neighbours) or the Eliotts of Reidheugh (his mother’s family). His eldest son Walter was perhaps the Walter who married Janet Shortreed and lived in Hawick Parish. He may also have had a daughter Alison, married to Robert Scott, whose daughter Elspeth was born in Kelso in 1635. He may also have had a younger son George, who had a daughter baptised in Hawick the same day as a daughter of Walter. He probably remained at Appotside until his death, ending his family’s association of about 250 years with the lands around Harwood. Eustace (d.bef. 1374) probably ancestor of the Lorraines of Harwood, his surname is given as ‘de Lorreyne’ and similar variants, while his forename is also ‘Eustachius’ and ‘Tassyn’. He was involved in events on both sides of the Border and is recorded between 1323 and 1374 (which is long enough that it is possible there were 2 generations here). It is not known when he was born or who his parents were. Although sometimes referred to as a knight, it is unclear which side of the Border this came from. He held land in Roxburghshire, including ‘Heroude’ (which is surely Harwood in Rulewater), as well as in Dumfriesshire (including ‘Coschogill’) and in Ayrshire. In 1323 he was given safe passage to meet the Earl of Atholl in England, with the stipulation that he was not to go more than 10 leagues across the Border. In 1331 he was among men accused of illegally hunting on the Earl of Angus’ lands in Northumberland. In 1333 he was a Scotsman appointed by Edward III as one of the Commissioners to inquire into the valuation of Berwick. He was a Commissioner for the Treaty of Perth in 1335, having his Scottish lands restored at that time. About the same year he was among a few Scottish noblemen who swore fealty to Edward III and in 1336 was granted a pardon by the English King for crimes committed in Scotland. In 1340 he had remission (now from the Scottish King) for the killing of Robert Lauder, although no details of the incident are given. In 1343 he was given compensation by Edward III for lands lost in Scotland. He was also Warden of Roxburgh Castle (with Sir William Douglas as Governor at the same time) in 1346, when the Castle was surrendered to the English (specifically Henry Percy and Ralph Neville). He had a son (perhaps on the English side) captured at the Battle of Neville’s Cross (by Robert Bertram), for whom ransom was paid in 1347. He was ‘Eustacio Loreyn’ when he witnessed to a charter for Adam of Rule, for the lands of Altonburn, in about 1354. Around that time (and certainly by 1357) he forfeited his lands to Hugh Blair of that Ilk, presumably for acting against the Scottish King; the lands were confirmed to Hugh’s son James Blair in 1374. In 1357/8 he witnessed a charter of confirmation by John Copeland to John Ker for lands in Altonburn; at that point he was ‘of Chatto’. He was still ‘of Chatto’ in 1358 when he witnessed a charter for William of Blakedene, confirming lands of Molle and Altonburn to John Ker. He was probably related to James, recorded in the 1350s and 60s, including witnessing the 2 charters of 1357/8 and 1358 with him. It has been suggested that James (perhaps ancestor of the Harwood line), Alexander (perhaps ancestor of the Berwickshire line), Robert (perhaps ancestor of the Hummel-knowes line) and William may all have been his sons, but there is no definitive evidence for any of these connections. Eustace (15th C.) recorded as a witness to a ratification of a gift of land in Edinburgh in 1457. He was surely a descendant of the earlier Eustace. Fergus (d.1616) murdered at ‘Gaithouslok’ (i.e. Gatehousecote) by Andrew and Cuthbert McDougal, tenants in Stonedige. They were apparently caught ‘with the bloody hand’ and committed to Jedburgh Tolbooth in 1618. He was surely related to Walter, tenant in Gatehousecote, and it has been suggested that he might have been a younger son of Edward of Harwood. It is unclear where his forename came from, but there is a Fergus Turnbull recorded a century earlier. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk. His daughter Elspeth was baptised there in 1641, with his surname being recorded as ‘Lorne’. George (17th C.) described as ‘in Cavers’, along with William, in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Samuel Rutherford, servant of the Laird of Cavers, accused a large group of his drinking friends of stealing his wallet. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anna (or perhaps Janet) Fleming and their children included John (b.1655). The baptism was witnessed by John Lister and Simon Adamson and was the same day as Walter’s daughter Isobel was baptised; this hints that he may have been Walter’s brother, and hence a younger son of Edward of Harwood. It has been suggested that he may also have had children Robert, William, Isobell and Alexander. George (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same George was recorded in 1691 when he and another man were paid for mowing in the account book of Dame Magdalene Nicholson, widow of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs. George (d.1720) servant of George Scott in Easter Groundiston. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: John (b.1703); George (b.1706); Agnes (b.1709); and Janet (b.1714). The baptism in 1703 was done along with a son of John Lamb, with witnesses Adam Scott and Walter Scott. The 1706 baptism was done at Wilton Common, with witnesses James Irvine and Will Scott. The use of the Wilton ‘mortcloth’ for his funeral is recorded, and he was transcribed ‘in Coghall’ (probably ‘Boghall’). The death of ‘Agnes Lorran in Heap’ in 1735 was probably his daughter. It has been suggested that he may have been son of John and grandson of George and Janet Fleming. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Nichol in 1720 and their children included Helen (b.1731). He may have been the son of George born in 1706 and the later George may have been his own son. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Hart in 1752. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism for John in 1755. He may be the George whose funeral is recorded in Wilton in 1770. He may have been son of the earlier George from Wilton. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1763.

and 1765 (and hence surely related to John, who was also there at about the same time) and at Hummelknowes in 1772. His children included: Margaret (b.1763); Helen (b.1765); an unnamed son (b.1767); and John (b.1772). Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th C.) probably son of Hector. He was listed in 1579 among Scotsmen accused by ‘the Laird of Pansoun, Englishman’ of raiding into England; he was stated there to be son of the Laird of Harwood. He was also on a list in 1579/80 of men charged to make recompense to Englishmen they had acted against; his cautioner then was the Laird of Bedrule. He is also recorded in 1583/4 when he was denounced along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others for not appearing before the Privy Council. He is probably the Gilbert who (along with Edward) signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He is probably the Gilbert, who along with Hector ‘Lorance’ (probably his brother) is recorded being fined for crimes against William Hall of Otterburn in 1596. He could be the ‘Gib Lorreyne’ listed along with ‘Archy Trumble’ in a complaint of a raid into England in 1597. In 1599 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope complained that he and Hector, ‘father-brothers of Hector Lorane of that Ilk’ were involved in the slaughter of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope, and were declared rebels for failing to appear. He could be the ‘Gilbert Lorreyne of Hawdon’ recorded in 1601 when Richard Fenwick of Stanton accused him of stealing livestock from him. He may also be the Gib ‘of Apputtsyde’ recorded in 1601 along with Hector and John, as well as several Turnbuls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman. He is probably the ‘Gib Loraybe, called Auld Gib’ who was listed as a fugitive in 1605, along with ‘Jock’s John’ and many Armstrongs, Elliots, Turnbuls, etc. He was listed again as a fugitive for failing to attend another Border Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1606, along with his brother Hector; he was then ‘Gib Lorayne, called Old Gib’. This suggests that he may have had a son who was ‘Young Gib’. It has been suggested that he married a sister of William Scott of Tushielaw, but there is no evidence for this. Grizel (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote listed in 1684 among people who failed to appear in Jedburgh when cited. The others included Margaret (who may have been her sister) and Andrew Shiel. They were probably Covenanting objectors. She was also listed in 1684 along with Margaret and Beatrix, possibly her sisters. It has been suggested she might have been daughter of Walter (but there is no proof for this). Hector (16th C.) owner of the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside according to a charter granted by William Lord Herries in 1531 (incorrectly noted as in one source as 1561). He was the grandson (and heir) of James and son of John. He may have been a minor when he succeeded his grandfather (his father presumably predeceasing his grandfather). He seems to have been the first Hector in his family, so perhaps his mother was a Turnbull (where this forename was known at the time, and with 2 Turnbuls witnessing the 1531 charter). It was stated that the earlier charters for the lands had been accidentally burned, and hence a new charter was given in 1531. The sasine for his lands was witnessed by Edward, William and Patrick, who may have been his uncles, or other near relatives. He is probably the ‘Ecto’ Lord of Harwode’ who had a bond of 1557 along with Turnbuls, Elliots and others, to present ‘Will Nyksone, called Gymmerhom’. He is probably the ‘Lard of Harwode’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was succeeded by his son Edward and probably also had sons Hector and Gilbert, and perhaps daughters Agnes and Marion. He probably died before 1573. In 1583/4 he was probably the Hector of Harwood on a list of Borderers ordered by the Privy Council to render their houses for the King’s use (making it somewhat unclear when he died). He is probably the Hector recorded on Monipennie’s list of Border Lairds in the 1590s (even although he was deceased by then). His son Edward is recorded in 1578/9 as ‘guidsone’ to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, and hence his wife was probably sister of Turnbull of Bedrule. Hector (16th/17th C.) son of Hector of Harwood and brother of Edward and Gib. He is probably the Hector, who along with Gilbert ‘Lorance’ is recorded being fined for crimes against William Hall of Otterburn in 1596. In 1599 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope complained that he and Gilbert, ‘father-brothers of Hector Lorane of that Ilk’ were involved in the slaughter of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope, and were declared rebels for failing to appear. He is probably the Hector ‘of Apputtsyde’ listed in 1601 along with Gib and John, along with several Turnbuls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman. He was listed in 1606, along with his brother ‘Auld Gib’, among men declared as fugitives for not attending a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh. Hector (c.1582–1604) son of Edward and grandson of Hector. He was Laird of Harwood and was succeeded by his grandson Hector, probably son of his own son Edward. A contract of 1598 with James Hamilton describes a loan (of £1000) from Hamilton, and how he will inherit the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside, but with Hamilton receiving the lands if he defaulted on the loan. This was confirmed in a contract of 1600, where he was to be infested in the lands, with the loan from Hamilton now being almost £1200. In 1602 the wardship of his lands was granted to James Hamilton, as well as 'the marriage of Hector Lorane, now of Harwode' and the marriage of any other male heirs who might succeed later; he was still a minor at this point, since he was described as 'apparent of Harwood'. Hamilton also had a charter for the lands of Tythehouse and Appotside. It seems likely that in about 1602 he married a daughter of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Marion Hamilton, who was the sister of James Hamilton (who held the rights of his marriage). However, his wife's first name is not recorded and it is not known if she remarried after his early death. He was killed 'with schotis of hagbutis and pistolettis' as part of the feud between Lady Appotside (his mother, daughter of the Laird of Bedrule) and other local Turnbulls. After his death the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside reverted to the superior, William, Lord Herries, until taken temporarily by James Hamilton. He probably had a single child, Edward, who succeeded. Hector of Harwood (16th/17th C.) heir to his grandfather Hector. He is recorded in a deed of 1631 for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside; William and Patrick were witnesses to the associated sasine. He was the last Lorraine Laird of Harwood, selling the lands, along with Tythehouse and Appotside to Simon Elliot of the Binks in 1637. He married a daughter of Robert Elliot, 16th of Redheugh, whose brother was William Elliot of Hartshaugh.

Dr. Herbert James Bell (1852–1909) son of Rev. Joseph, minister of Tinwald and Caerlaverock. He was great-great-grandson of William, servitor to John Scott of Gorrenberry, and hence was descended from the Lornaines of Harwood. He graduated from Edinburgh University, then spending 3 years in the U.S.A. before commencing in medical practice in England. He moved to Hawick in about 1889, taking over from Dr. Penman. He lived at 31 Bridge Street. He served as surgeon to the Mechanics’ Friendly Society and was medical officer to the Hawick Post Office. He was also a member of Hawick School Board, was an elder in Hawick Parish Church and served as President of Hawick R.F.C. He was a Unionist in politics and was President of the Hawick Constitutional Club. He once stood as a local councillor. He spent 1902 as a government medical officer on the Gold Coast in Africa. From 1903 he was medical officer for Stobs Camp. His wife was Janet Hewat (1861–1935), who communicated with George Tancred regarding the Lornaines of Harwood. Their children were: Joseph Currie (b.1886), who was also a doctor; Edith Dickson Bell (b.1887), who married David Bell and secondly H.S. Davidson; Janet Hewat (b.1889), born in Hawick, who married Charles MacLeod; Alice Mary Neilson (b.1891), also born in Hawick, who married Nicholas Vass; and Richard Hewat Bell (b.1894), also born in Hawick, who married Mary Gould. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Hugh (13th C.) recorded in about the period 1210–22 when he and his wife Ada, daughter and heiress of James Fraser, renewed a charter to Kelso Abbey. This was for the church of Keith-Humbie in East Lothian. His name is given as ‘Hugo Lorens', which is presumably ‘Lorraine'. However, it is unclear how he was related to other Lornaines. James (d.1346) said to have been a ‘Bannet’ who was killed at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. His name is given as ‘James Loreyn’. It is unclear if he was on the Scottish or English side, and how he might have been related to Eustace, who was Warden of Roxburgh Castle at that time. James (14th C.) witness in 1354 to a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. He was also witness to the charter granting the lands of Altonburn to the Kers in 1357/8 and another granting them further lands in Sprouston in 1358. In 1357/8 he was granted an annuity of £20 by Edward III, for having lost most of his Scottish lands on account of supporting England, and this was repeated the following year. In 1357/8 he witnessed a charter for John Copeland and another in 1358 for William of Blakedene, both relating to the lands of Altonburn (and both also witnessed by Eustace). Also in 1358 he was granted the Barony of Caverton in Roxburghshire, and in 1361 received custody of the lands of Old Roxburgh, formerly belonging to the deceased Nicholas de Seymour. In 1365 he witnessed a quitclaim by Joan, wife of John of Copeland. In about 1370 he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessden to Melrose Abbey. He is recorded as being ‘de Lorreyne’, ‘Loreyne’, ‘Loreyn’ and ‘Lorreyn’. He was probably directly related to Eustace (perhaps his son or brother), who was recorded in the 1330s to 50s. One possibility is that he was son of Eustace and direct ancestor of the later Lorraines of Harwood. James (15th C.) recorded in 1454/5 when he attempted to recover the lands of Coschogill in the Regality of Drumlanrig from John Blair of Adamton. These had been in the hands of the Blairs since forfeited by Eustace about a century earlier. Given the court case to recover some of the family lands in Dumfriesshire, it seems clear that he was a direct descendant of Eustace, and either was already Laird of Harwood, or succeeded in recovering these lands at about the same time. Probably the same James was on an inquest held in Dunfries in 1451/2 regarding the lands of Sir James Douglas, and he was likely also the Lorraine who witnessed a land transfer to a Bailie of Dumfries in 1453. Perhaps the same James was a member of an inquest at Jedburgh Forest in 1439, relating to succession of the lands of John Douglas of Bonjedward. He was surely related to the nearly contemporary John of Harwood, perhaps his brother. James (15th/16th C.) mentioned in a charter of 1531 to his grandson Hector, by which time he was deceased. His son (and father of Hector of Harwood) may have been John. It has been suggested that he was son of John of Harwood, recorded in 1464/5, and descended from Eustace. He is recorded as ‘Jacobi lorane’ in 1494/5 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Probably the same James ‘Lorein of Herwood’ was part of an assize in 1507. He may have had sons John, Edward, William and Patrick (the latter 3 being witnesses to the sasine in 1531 for Hector, listed in this order); however, there are no documents to confirm any of this. Nevertheless, there is evidence that John was father of Hector, and hence presumably John was his son. James (16th C.) listed in 1547 among residents of ‘Overtoune of Blanyslie’ near Melrose. His surname is given as ‘Lorne’, but it seems likely this was Lorraine. It is unclear how he would have been related to other Lorraines, but it has been suggested that he could have been a son of John of Harwood. He married Agnes Lamb and his son Edward had a ‘precept of clare constat’ for his father’s lands in Blainslie in about 1579. James of Appotside (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Edward of Harwood and Margaret Turnbull. In 1598 he was implicated in the slaughter of David Turnbull of Wanchope near his house. This was no doubt part of the ongoing feud between the Turnbulls and Lorraines. Note that his younger brother William was killed by Turnbulls in 1600 and his older brother Hector in 1604. In 1605 he is recorded as ‘Jacobo Lorane fratri Hectoris Lorane de Harwode’ when he had remission for being involved in the murder of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1606 he was denounced for resisting a messenger that came to apprehend the fugitive William Turnbull of Braidhaugh. In 1606/7 he was recorded as brother of the deceased Hector of Harwood and ‘propinquior agnatus’ (i.e. closer relative) to Hector, on his father Edward’s side; he was thus appointed as tutor to his young nephew Edward. In 1607 Thomas Home, Burgess of Musselburgh was cautioner for him to appear before the Privy Council to answer the charges brought against him by Thomas Turnbull of Wauchope and Hector Turnbull of Barnhills, namely ‘for presenting bended pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. Also in 1607 he was son of Edward of Harwood when he petitioned the Privy Council, claiming that he never received the charge and hence did not appear to be warded in Edinburgh Tolbooth. He paid a fine, but it is unclear if he was imprisoned afterwards. In 1618/9 he was witness to a bond between Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and Adam Turnbull of the Townhead of Abbotrule. In 1619 there was a complaint that he had threatened William Ker (younger of Yair) with a hagbut when he was riding near the headwaters of Rule. He was denounced a rebel for failing to appear, but it is unclear whether or not he escaped punishment. There is no information about whether he married or had children. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ancrum Parish. He had a marriage contract with Isobel Bairnfather in 1687, in which she has sasine of ‘ane nether hous and two rigs of arrable land in nether ancrum’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Stichers who was given 10 shillings by Wilton Parish in 1704. He may be the person transcribed as ‘Jannet Lorne’ (possibly at Easter Heap) who was given money the previous year. He was probably related to Patrick and William, who were recorded at Heap in 1650. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘sometime in Cleithaugh’ in Southdean Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1708, with the child’s father engaging for the child in his absence. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at ‘Coldfolds’ (possibly Cawfauls) in 1750, Broadlee in 1753 and Clarilaw in 1758. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: Samuel (b.1750); James (b.1753); and Betty (b.1758). The witnesses in 1750 were Thomas Riddell and James Simpson, in 1753 were James Dryden and James Martin and in 1758 were James Dryden and Andrew Blyth. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for John Rutherford in 1779. He could be the James who died in Wilton in 1811, with Betty dying in 1812. James (18th/19th C.) married Betty Scott in Wilton Parish in 1809. Jean (d.1769) resident of Doorpool. She is buried in Hobkirk Cemetery, with the funeral of William being recorded the same day. Dr. Joseph Currie (1886–1945) son of Hawick doctor Herbert. He graduated from Edinburgh University and was admitted to the Royal College of Surgeons. It is said that in 1907 he moved to become medical officer for the Burmah Oil Company in Rangoon. During WWI he served in the R.A.M.C. as a Lieutenant and then Captain. Afterwards he was a surgeon in Edinburgh. He married 3 times, to Margaret Kennedy, Alice Wilson and Margaret Young. He had a son Herbert Derrick Bell (1913–82), who played rugby for Scotland. John of Harwood (15th C.) member of the panel in 1464/5 that ruled on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas. He is listed as ‘John Lorane of Harwood’. He was probably a descendant of Eustace. He was surely closely related to the James who was recorded in 1454/5, perhaps his brother. He may have been father of James of Harwood and hence direct ancestor of later Lorraines of Harwood. John of Lorraine (15th/16th C.) probably son of James and father of Hector. He is probably the John whose seal is recorded among Rutherford charters, showing a lion rampant and the words ‘S iohanes LORAN’. He is recorded in 1493 when the Sheriff, William Douglas of Cavers, was fined for failure to produce him at the Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh (unless this was a different generation); he was again recorded in 1494/5 for failing to appear. Given that Hector was served heir to his grandfather James in 1531, he must have already been deceased by then. He was explicitly stated to have been father of Hector in the ‘Acta Dominorum’ for 1535/6, relating to a claim made against his son by James Wallace of ‘Cornell’, son and heir of Adam Wallace of Craigie. As well as a son Hector, he may have had children James (connected with Blainslie), John (perhaps father of ‘Jock’s John’) and Bessie (also in Blainslie, married to Michael Dickson). John (16th C.) recorded in 1574 as owner of property in Jedburgh. It has been suggested that he might have been a son of John and hence brother of Hector of Harwood. He may have been father of ‘Jock’s Johnne’. John of Appotside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 with Gib and Hector, along with several Turnbulls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman from Morpeth. Probably the same man was ‘Johrne Lorayne, called ‘Jok’s Johnne’ in 1605, when listed as a fugitive, along with ‘Auld Gib’; he was recorded there as ‘Johne Lorayne, called Jok’s Johnne’. He was thus son of John, and surely descended from the Lorraines of Harwood (perhaps great-great-grandson of James of Harwood). John (17th C.) witness in Hawick in 1657 to the baptism of Beatrix, daughter of Walter and Janet Shortreed. He was presumably related to Walter. John (b.1655) son of George and Janet Fleming and probably descended from the Lorraines of Harwood. It has been suggested that he may have been father of many of the family members associated with Wilton, e.g. George, James and William. However, there is no documentary proof for this. John (17th C.) resident of Ruletownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. John (17th/18th C.) servitor to John Scott of Ancrum. In 1712 he was attending the New North Kirk of Edinburgh when accused by the Ancrum Session of fornication with Agnes Cant; he was publicly rebuked in Ancrum in 1716. In 1714 he married Isabel Leithead in Lilliesleaf Parish and their son Thomas (b.1716) was baptised in Ancrum. It is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was in Upper Tofts in 1722, Berryfell in 1725 and Earlside in 1732. He married Margaret Glendinning in Kirkton Parish in 1722. Their children included: Jane (b.1725); and John (b.1732). He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter in Wilton Parish in 1729. He may also have been father of Agnes, who had a child with Thomas Barrie in 1745. John (18th C.) resident of Netherhall in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Easton in 1751. Their children included: William (b.1752); Helen (b.1754); and John (b.1755). The witnesses in 1752 were Thomas Hay and Thomas Scott and in 1754 were William Lamb (suggesting that he may have been a son of Walter, who reciprocated in witnessing a baptism for William Lamb) and William Noble. The witness in 1755 was George, who was surely a close relative. In 1752 he and Janet Scott in Wiltonburn were accused of fornication by the Wilton Session, and made to pay fines. Perhaps the same John married Bessie Scott (from Kirkton Parish) in 1758 in Wilton Parish. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Robert Stewart in 1775. However, he may also be the John for whom the Wilton ‘mortcloth’ fee was paid in 1774. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1748 he married Ann Mitchellill from Cavers. Further children baptized in Cavers Parish were probably also his: Christian (b.1758); Anne (b.1760); and Margaret (b.1769). In at least 1758–69 he was living in Orchard (and hence was surely related to George, who was in Orchard in 1763). He could be the John, son of John, born in 1732. He is probably the John who received poor relief in Kirkton in 1796. John (18th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Kirkton Parish in 1760. His surname is written ‘Lorn’ and ‘Loran’. He was at Acreknowe in 1761 and 1764, and Newmill in 1764 and 1768. His children included: Janet (b.1761), who may have had a child Walter with Robert Ballantyne in 1796 Jean (b.1764); John (b.1766); and Margaret (b.1768), who may have married Robert Anderson. He could be the ‘John Loran’ recorded in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common); along with several other neighbouring farmers he paid a penny per 50 divots. He is probably the John who received poor relief in Kirkton in 1796. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Learmonth and the couple paid a fine to the Session for fornication. Their children included Benjamin (b.1769). The witnesses were Walter Irvine and John Murray. It seems likely he was related to Walter, who witnessed a baptism for Walter Irvine and Isobel Learmonth (probably related to his wife) in Wilton in 1765. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, possibly son of John and Helen Easton. He married Margaret Graham in 1778. He may be the John who died in Wilton Parish in 1806. Lady Margaret nee Turner (16th/17th C.) daughter of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and wife of Edward Lorraine, who was Laird of Harwood and Appotside. She may have been called ‘Lady Appotside’, and it is possible her husband gained these lands from her father through their marriage. She was said to be quite quarrelsome, particularly towards her own family, and suffered the wrath of Turnbull Clan, who laid waste to Harwood and Appotside, with matters coming to a head in 1598 and the years following. 200 cows were stolen, along with 600 sheep, 30 horses and ‘the haill in- sicht and plenissing’ of Harwood in 1598. The following year 30 cows and goods were taken from Appotside, which was also burned. And in the years 1599–1605 the woods at Appotside were cut down, including about 2200 trees. Her servant Lyall Brown was killed in 1598 along with William Lorraine in 1600 and Hector Lorraine of Harwood in 1604 (both probably her sons). Apparently she appealed to the Earl of Angus, who offered to repay her out of his own pocket. And although this never transpired, the feud came to an eventual end. She is probably the same Margaret who (along with her son James) brought a court action in 1609 against Andrew Hamilton for intruding on the lands of Tythehouse. Margaret (17th C.) listed as a midwife in 1676 among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for being ‘most active and guilty of ane insolent ryot latly committed upon the person of Mr. George Baptie, minister, in the churchyeard of Abbotrule’. This presumably means she objected to having an Episcopal minister in her parish. The others listed included her daughter Anna Shiel, as well as Agnes and Bessie Shiel (probably related to her) and Elspeth Jackson. In 1684 she was listed at Gatehousecote among persons who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh; others included Andrew Shiel (surely related, and perhaps even her husband) and Grizel (perhaps her sister) there. She is further listed in 1684 along with Grizel and Beatrice (perhaps both her sisters). She may be the Margaret ‘in Graden Barronnie’ who refused to take the oath of abjuration in 1685. Her daughter Euphan was recorded in 1691 (as well as Jean, wife of William ‘Zeaman’, who could be another sister), when she was again referred to as a ‘mid-wyffe in Gettascot’. Probably the same Margaret was resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Marion (16th/7th C.) see Marion Turnbull Patrick (14th/15th C.) son and heir of Robert, who was Laird of ‘Homylknole’ (i.e. Hummelknowes). In 1428/9 he resigned his lands into the hands of his overlord in favour of Janet Rutherford, ‘wyfe quhylem’ (probably ‘former wife’) of George Rutherford of Chatto, excepting his own liferent. He was described as her ‘eme’, meaning uncle (usually maternal); however, it has been suggested that she was a Rutherford of Edgerston. The reason was because she had helped him ‘wyn’ his lands of ‘Homylknole’ and the indenture was signed at ‘Lynthaulche’ (probably Lintalee). This document is the earliest record of Hummelknowes, and the earliest connection of the Lorraines with the Hawick area. He has a seal that was ‘a lion passant, guardant crowned’. It has been suggested that his children included sons James (juror in 1439), Robert (juror in 1440) and John (Master of Coldstream Priory); however, there is no evidence for this and it seems more likely that James was from the Harwood branch and John from the Berwickshire line. Patrick (16th C.) mentioned in the records of St. Andrews University. He matriculated in 1529, graduated in 1527 and became a licentiate in 1529. It is possible he is the same Patrick who witnessed the charter for Hector of Harwood in 1531, making him perhaps son of James and Hector’s uncle. He could be the same man as the clerk of Glasgow Diocese. Patrick (16th C.) clerk of the Diocese of Glasgow who drew up the sasine for Wolfelee and other lands for David Home of Wedderburn in 1550. Probably the same notary of the Glasgow Diocese wrote a sasine of 1559 relating to lands in Wilton. He may also be the Patrick who witnessed a sasine in 1531 relating to Hector Lorraine; this suggests he was related to Hector, perhaps being his uncle and hence son of James. Probably the same Patrick also witnessed a bond signed in 1546, for entering Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst. Patrick (17th C.) listed along with William on a list of Communicants at Easter Heap in 1650. They were probably related to the later Lorraines of Wilton. Robert (14th C.) recorded in 1361 as a juror on an inquest held at Roxburgh regarding the possessions of Sir William Dacre. It seems likely he was closely related to Eustace, perhaps a brother or son. One possibility is that he was a son of Eustace and direct ancestor of the Lorraines of Hummelknowes. Robert of Hummelknowes (15th C.) recorded on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 (for deciding on the succession of lands in Hownam). He was also ‘Robyn Lorane, Lord of Homylknow’, whose son Patrick is recorded in an indenture of 1428/9. It seems likely that he was a descendant of Eustace, perhaps through his son Robert. It is possible that the same Robert was on a retour of inquest for the lands of Samuelston, held at Lauder in 1440. Bailie Robert (15th C.) along with Simon of Routledge, he was Bailie recorded in a sasine of 1453, and hence one of the first 2 known Bailies of Hawick. It is possible he was the same man as the Robert recorded in the 1420s. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Margaret Burn and their children included Beatrix (b.1688). The witnesses to the baptism were John Stuart and Robert Howden. It has been suggested that he was a son of George and Janet Fleming, but it seems more likely that he was closely related to the other Ashkirk Lorraines.

He may be the gardener Robert, who witnessed a baptism for his brother Alexander in Ashkirk in 1695. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Story in Cavers Parish in 1707. He may have been ‘in Tour’. It is possible that he was a son of Robert and Margaret Burn. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Weens. His son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1728. Roger (13th C.) witness to a confirmation of a gift of Ralph Maule to Newbattle Abbey sometime before 1231. In 1234 he was witness for the settlement of a dispute between the Chapter of Moray and Alan Durward. He is also recorded as a juror for Earl Patrick of Dunbar and Earl Walter Comyn of Menteith in about 1245. His surname is written ‘Lohereng’, ‘Lorang’ and ‘Loren’. It is possible he was an ancestor of the Scottish Lorraines, but there is no direct evidence of any connections. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote. In 1619 he had a bond with ‘his good friend’ Adam Turnbull, tenant of Bonchester Townhead. Given the timing, it is possible that he was a younger son of Edward of Harwood and Margaret Turnbull. It is suggested that he may have been father of Margaret (wife of a Shiel), who is recorded in Gatehousecote in the 1670s to 90s, and perhaps also father of Grizel and Beatrix (who are recorded along with Margaret in 1684), as well as Jean (recorded along with Margaret in 1691). Walter (17th C.) eldest son of Edward. In 1654 he and his father signed a contract with William Elliot of Harwood and the Binks, guaranteeing Elliot rentals from Appotside and its mill in return for a loan of 6,000 merks Scots. He signed his surname as ‘Lorrane’. Probably the same Walter was recorded as ‘in Whyttehaugh’ (likely in Castleton Parish) as a debtor in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and the Binks in 1662. He may also be the Walter ‘of Greins in the parochine of Castleton’ who had a bond with his brother-in-law Robert Scott of ‘Cartetoune’ in 1667. In 1670 he was tenant in Riccartonfoot when there was a discharge recording that he was unable to pay £220. In 1671 he rented the farm of Powisholm for a year, rented Byreholm in 1673 and Byegate in 1677. There is a tradition that he was killed at the Battle of Bothwell Brig in 1679, but there is no evidence to support this. It is possible he was the Walter ‘Lorane’ recorded in Hawick in the 1650s and 60s. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He may be the same man as the son of Edward, last Laird of Harwood. He is recorded in 1665 when he accused Marion Gillespie of ‘pulling the hair out of his heid’. Probably the same Walter married Janet Shortreed and his children baptised in Hawick included: Isobell (b.1655), who could be the Isobel who married Thomas Laidlaw and lived in Roberton Parish or the Isobell who married George Minto and lived in Ashkirk Parish; and Beatrrix (b.1657). Walter, who married Bessie Riddell, was probably also his son. It is also possible that another son was Archibald who was living in Holkirk Parish when his son James was baptised in Bedrule. The witnesses to the 1655 baptism were John Scott (possibly of Gorrenberry) and Andrew Chisholme (possibly of Parkhill), while the witnesses in 1657 were John Scott and John Lorraine. Walter (17th C.) married Helen Scott in Ashkirk Parish in 1657. It is possible he was a son of Walter and grandson of Edward of Lorraine and Margaret Turnbull. It is possible that the Helen who married William Thomson in Selkirk in 1697 was his daughter. Walter (17th C.) probably son of Walter and Janet Shortreed. He is recorded in 1681 as ‘in Hardine’ (probably Harden in Liddesdale) when he had a bond borrowing £3 from Walter Scott of Wauchope. He is recorded at Kirkndean in 1681 and 1682 in the Buccleuch estates rental book, when it is clear that a lot of his livestock had died. He rented Greens in 1682, but it not recorded what happened to him after that. He married Bessie Riddell and their children son William was baptised in 1682, with witnesses. John Riddell (probably brother or father of Bessie) and William Wilson. If he was grandson of Edward of Harwood, then it is possible that his wife was related to the Riddells of Bewlie (who were associated with that family). Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers. In 1714 he was in East Cavers and in at least 1717–24 in Denholm. His children included: Ann (b.1714); Thomas (b.1717); Margaret (b.1721); and George (b.1724). He may be the Walter who married Margaret Miller of Cauldmill in 1705. He may also be the ‘Walter Lorrain in Kirktonw’ whose son John (b.1706) was baptised in Cavers. It is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Stirches in 1724, 1727 and 1729. He married Bessie Graham in 1722 and their children included: George (b.1724); William (b.1727), who may have married Margaret Hope in Dumfries in 1755; and Agnes (b.1729), who may have married John Armstrong in 1751 and could be the Agnes who died in 1781. The witnesses in 1724 were Walter Scott and John Scott and in 1727 were James Douglas and James Scott. John Lorraine (along with William Lamb) witnessed the baptism in 1729 and must have been a close relative. In 1727 he witnessed a baptism for William Lamb. He was surely related to other Wilton Lorraines. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He may be the Walter (b.1733), son of William and Helen Owens. He married Margaret Smith in 1760 (apparently after the birth of their 1st daughter) and she died in Hawick in 1781. Their children included: Margaret (b.1759); and Mary (b.1764). The witnesses in 1764 were Walter Ballantyne and James Wilson. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for James Irvine in Wilton Parish in 1765. He was probably the Walter who had a child die of smallpox in Hawick in 1775. He could be the deceased Walter whose daughter Margaret died in 1777. Walter (1742–1817) eldest son of William and Janet Clerk. His father came from Nether Tofts in Kirkton Parish. He was born at Barnlies in Dumfriesshire. He was a farmer at Oakwoodhill and married Mary, daughter of farmer Francis Currie. Their children included: William (1772–1842); Francis (1773–1815); John (1775–1849); Andrew (1778–87); James (1781–1804); Walter (1783–1872); Joseph (1785–1809); Margaret (1787–92); and Andrew (again, 1790–92). The family are buried at Kirkconnel. William (14th C.) gave a wadset to Alan Lauder in 1386 for his lands of Lorymeslands’. This could be simply ‘Lorraine lands’ and were on the north side of the Lauder Water. He is recorded as ‘Willm. of Loren of Swynstoun’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other contemporary Lorraines. He may have been a son or other close relative of Eustace, but given that the name ‘William’ was not common in the family immediately afterwards, it seems unlikely he was an ancestor of later local Lorraines. William (15th/16th C.) holder of the lands of Hanginside (i.e. what became Hawthornside) before being granted to Richard Hangingside (before 1488), apparently because he had transferred his allegiance to the English King. William (16th C.) witness to a sasine for Hector’s lands of Harwood and Hawthornside in 1531. He was thus probably related to Hector, perhaps being his uncle, which would make him a son of James. Edward was listed before him and Patrick after him (and were surely related). William (1586/7–1600) son of Edward and Margaret Turnbull. He was killed at the age of 13 in the woods of Lorraine. This was part of a feud between local Turnbuls and his mother ‘Lady Appotside’. His elder brother the Lorraines

Hector of Harwood was also killed 4 years later. William (17th C.) described as ‘in Cavers’, along with George, in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Samuell Rutherford accused a large group of his drinking friends of stealing his wallet. His name came before that of George. William (17th C.) listed along with Patrick on a list of Communicants at Easter Heap in 1650. They were probably related to the later Lorraines in Wilton. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leiden in Hawick in 1640; the other witness was Simon Adamson, who also witnessed a baptism for George in 1655, suggesting he was related to George and Walter and hence potentially a son of Edward and Maisie Elliot. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He may have been a son of George and Janet Fleming. He married Dorothy Duncan and their children included Mary (b.1697), who was ‘begoten in fornication’. His wife may be the ‘Dorothea Lorrain’ who was given poor relief by Ashkirk Parish in 1713, 1714, 1715 and 1716 and was ‘in Sinton’ when buried in 1716. William (b.1682) son of Walter and Bessie Riddell, he was born in Hawick Parish. He was ‘servitor’ to John Scott of Gorrenberry, who held lands at Nether Tofts. In 1707 in Edinburgh he married Bessie Buchanan, widow of writer Robert ‘Cristall’; she was daughter of wright Duncan Buchanan and married her 1st husband in 1698. This suggests that he was spending some of his time in Edinburgh, where presumably his master also had a house. His son William was baptised in Kirkton in 1709, when he was recorded being in Nether Tofts. Margaret, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1721, was probably also his child. There were also other children baptised in Edinburgh: Elizabeth (b.1708); ‘Sibbilett’ (b.1709); Walter (b.1711); Bessie (b.1712); and Anne (b.1714). Most probably died in childhood and were buried in Edinburgh. He was later a stabler in the South West Parish of Edinburgh and: in 1718 married Katherine Paterson; in 1722 had bans proclaimed to marry Katherine Ogilvie; and in 1723 married Christian Kyle. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1712 he was gardener in Whitfield and in 1716 he may have been at Brieryards. In 1712 he married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Brown from Robertson Parish, daughter of Robert Brown, from Kirkton Parish. Their children included John (b.1716). His wife could be the Elspeth Brown who was buried in Wilton in 1747. He may have been a son of John and brother of George and Walter. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Borthaugh in most of the baptismal entries 1723–36. However, he may have been at Newton in 1733. He married Helen Ovens and their children included: Walter (b.1723); Margaret (b.1725); Bessie (b.1727), who may have married Robert Wilson and died in 1778; Elizabeth (b.1729); Francis (b.1731); Walter (again, b.1733); and Helen (b.1736). The witnesses in 1725 and 1729 were George Bell and Walter Riddell, in 1727 were Robert Cowan and James ‘Beasly’, in 1731 were George Bell and John Scott, in 1733 were Patrick Scott and John Hume and in 1736 were Walter Riddell and Thomas Kerr. He may be the William whose death is recorded in Wilton in 1777. William (c.1707–90) son of William, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. In 1740 he married Janet Clerk in Hawick; at that time he was still living at Nether Tofts. Soon afterwards he moved to Cadgillside farm at Chapelknowe near Canobie, where his first son Walter (father of Dr. William) was born in 1742. Other children included: Janet (b.1744); Andrew (1746–1819); William (b.1749); John (1751–1829); James (1753–1822); and Margaret (1755–1833). His wife is recorded at Barnes when she had poor relief in 1889 and also several more times until her death in 1800. William (d.1769) resident of Doorpool. He is buried in Hobbirk Cemetery, with the funeral of Jean being recorded the same day. Dr. William (1772–1841) born at Chapelknowe near Canobie, he was son of Walter and grandson of William, who was from Kirkton Parish. He was classics master at Selkirk Grammar School, then Rector of Jedburgh Grammar School and is described in the book ‘A Borders Schoolmaster’ (2000) by Audrey Mitchell. He was later Master at Glasgow High School. In 1803 he married Dorothea (or ‘Dora’), daughter of Thomas Scott of Boucher. 3 of his sons were Doctors at Glasgow University (formerly spelled ‘Loran’, ‘Lorane’, ‘Lorain’, ‘Lorraine’, ‘Lorayne’, ‘Loreen’, ‘Loreyn’, ‘Lorren’, ‘Lorain’, ‘Lorrain’, ‘Lorren’, ‘Lorrence’, ‘Lorrin’, ‘Lowrran’, etc.).

the Lorraines (θu-lɔr-anz) n. family that was once important in the Borders, particularly in Rulewater. The origin of the name is surely the region of Lorraine in north-eastern France, perhaps coming over to Britain at the time of William the Conqueror. The same French family from the Duchy of Lorraine provided a later connection with Scotland through Mary of Guise, who was daughter of Claude of Lorraine, becoming Queen Consort of James V and mother of Mary, Queen Lorraine Wud of Scots. It has also been claimed that the family is connected with the lands of Deloraine in the Ettrick valley. The early history is very unclear, as is the connection with the Barons of this name who inhabited part of Northumberland (including, confusingly, the farm of Hawick), specifically Kirkharle. Eustace, recorded in the 1330s to 50s, may have been an early ancestor of the Roxburghshire family. There were Lorraines at Hummelknowes near Hawick in the 15th century and Robert Lorraine was one of the earliest recorded Bailies of Hawick, in 1453. The Roxburghshire Lorraines held the lands of Harwood from at least the late 15th century until 1637. The name occurs several times among lists of men accused of mounting raids into England in the 16th century. The arms of Lorraine of Harwood are shown as 3 green laurel leaves on a silver background in 1542.

Lorraine Wud (lō-rān-wud) n. former name for a wood near Harwood or Appotside in the Rule valley, named after the family that once owned the land. It is recorded in 1606 that young William Lorraine was killed ‘within the wood of Lorane’ by a gang of Turnbulls, this being part of an ongoing feud with his mother Margaret, ‘Lady Appotside’, herself a Turnbull by birth.

losh (losh) interj., arch. an exclamation of wonder, dismay or remonstration (perhaps a shortened form of ‘Lord save us’) – ‘Losh man! hae done wi’ senseless clatter, Will siccan whingeing mend the matter?’ [RDW], ‘Losh chaps, Aw mind yince yae terrible frost and the Loan sklye was on . . .’ [JEDM], ‘Losh mei, Aw dimna ken at a’, but ca’ him nae neebor o’ mine’ [JEDM], ‘Losh sakes mei! the thocht that come seipin, ar fit ti gar aa the trunchees an the fashes gang leike the swaef off the deike in a thowe’ [ECS], ‘Losh! The scene is fair entrancin’, And draws a smile’ [RH], ‘. . . His head, losh me, is no’ that grey, Sae he may get a couthie kimmer’ [TCh], ‘Losh he wammelt and tumm’led ower on to the flure’ [UB], ‘My better half’s just come in wi a bang, And, losh man, her friends drove hame in a carriage’ [TCh], ‘But, losh me, what’s a’ this spread o’er And all the cause of gurgling mirth?’ [WFC] (local variants noted by G. Watson include ‘loch man!’, ‘loch mei!’, ‘loch sake!’ and ‘loch sakes mei!’; this is a euphemism for ‘Lord’, perhaps influenced by other exclamations, such as ‘gosh’).

loss (los, lōs) v. to lose – ‘deh loss the heid’, ‘A hope it rains the whole weekend A hope ye loss yer flag . . .’ [T].

lossit (lo-see’, -si) pp., arch. lost – ‘. . . promisest be him to bring halil, saif and sound to Hawick, quhilk he brak, drownet, and lossit be the way’ [BR1652].

lot (lōt) n., arch. an assessed contribution for a common purpose – ‘. . . that each inhabitant who pays not stent nor lott shall be lyable for the same price . . .’ [BR1722] (also written ‘lott’).

Lothian (lō-thee-in) n. general geographic name for the area around Edinburgh. Latterly it has included the counties of Linlithgow, Midlothian and Haddington, but it formerly applied to all the eastern part of the Lowlands, even including Roxburghshire.

Lothian (lō-thee-in) n. Joseph (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Joanna (b.1736); Peter (b.1738); and George (b.1742). The witnesses in 1738 were Walter Scott of Newton and Patrick Scott, younger of Alton, suggesting that his wife was related to these branches of the Scotts. The 1742 witnesses were merchant Charles Tudhope and mason James Harkness (formerly ‘Lowthian’).

Lothian an Border Horse (lō-thee-in-an-bōr-dur-hors) n. local Territorial Yeomanry Regiment. It was generally for the wealthier volunteers who had their own horse. It grew out of the Royal Edinburgh Volunteer Light Dragoons, set up in 1797 (with Sir Walter Scott as its first quartermaster) and the East Lothian Yeomanry Cavalry, set up at the same time by the Duke of Buccleuch. The 2 merged in 1800 to form the Royal Midlothian Yeomanry Cavalry. It disbanded in 1838, but the 2 units reformed in the 1840s, and amalgamated again in 1879, and were renamed the Lothian and Border Horse in 1908. C Squadron was based in Hawick, with detachments in the main towns of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. Many men volunteered for service in this regiment during WWI. In 1921 armoured cars replaced horses and from 1924 it was associated with the 4th Royal Tank Regiment. It became the 1st and 2nd Lothians and Border Horse in 1939, and saw action in North Africa, France and Italy during WWII. In 1956 it was amalgamated with other regiments to form the Queen’s Own Lowland Yeomanry and was again disbanded in 1967, although resurrected as the Scottish Yeomanry from 1992-99. ‘War Record of the 4th Battalion King’s Own Scottish Borderers and Lothian and Border Horse’ (1920) was written by W.S. Brown. Papers from the regiment are in the National Library of Scotland.

Lothian Street

Lothian Street (lo-thi-ine-stree) n. street on the high ground by Loch Park. The main buildings were erected in 1875, with several additional dwellings in the following few years. There was also part of the Lyle & Scott factory there. However, part of the east side was demolished in 1977 and made into a car park. It was named after Schomburg Henry Kerr, 9th Marquess of Lothian.

Lough (lowch) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535 when, along with several others, he was accused of taking grain from ‘le Schaw’ belonging to John Hall. In 1538 he had George Robson, John Robson, Walter Veitch, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott removed from his 20 merklands in Synton. Oliver (1826–1916) son of Walter, who was a carrier around Southdean. In 1848 he married Agnes, daughter of William Oliver (hind at Langraw). In 1851 they were living with his in-laws at Langraw Scour. Around the late 1850s they emigrated to Nevada, U.S.A. His children included Walter (b.1848), William (b.1850), Betsey (b.1854) and Henry (b.1856). He died in Nebraska. Walter ‘Wattie’ (b.c.1785–1864) son of James and Christian Oliver, he was born in Jedburgh Parish. He was a carrier at Letham in Southdean Parish in 1841 and in 1851 was carrier and grocer at Gatehousecote. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Formerly Carrier’ at Old Gatehousecote. He ran a cart to Liddesdale in the days before the railway. He married Elizabeth (Betty) Storie in 1819. Their children were: James (b.1820), who married Euphemia Telfer; George (b.1821); Isabella (b.1823), who married George Telfer; Oliver (b.1826), who emigrated to the U.S.A.; Walter (b.1829), who married Isabella Rutherford; Thomas (b.1832), who was a labourer at Highend in 1851; and Mary (b.1834), who married Andrew Smith. Most of his children were born in Oxnam Parish and some were christened at the Free Kirk in Jedburgh. He died in Hobbirk (formerly written ‘Louche’).

the Loupin Stane (th-low-pin-stän) n. small-standing stone in an isolated area in Craik Forest, a little over a kilometer to the west-northwest from Wolfcleuchhead. The dimensions are 0.8 m long by 35 cm wide at the top, narrowing to a point, and just 5 cm thick. On one side are carved 2 heads and lettering, while on the other is inscribed ‘Wolfcleuchhead’. It is possible this is a mounting step from the steading of Wolfcleuchhead, moved to its present position at some point (see also lowpin-on stane).

the Loupin Stanes (th-low-pin-stänz) n. small stone circle near Eskdalemuir, not far from ‘the Girdle Stanes’. There are 12 stones in an oval about 18 m across, including 2 larger ones that provide the ‘entrance’. The popular name comes the story that locals used to try to leap between these two stones until someone’s leg was broken (although they are probably too far apart for this to be feasible).

lourd (loord) adjv., poet. rather, liked – ‘I wad lourd have had a winding-sheet, And helped to put it ower his head, Ere he had been disgraced by the border Scot, Whan he ower Liddel his men did lead!’ [T].

the Lousy Drain (thu-low-zee-dreän) n. popular name for an open ditch in Hobbirk Parish in the 19th century. It ran down from Kirknow farm through the Parish school playground, and served as an open sewer, which older boys would try to jump over.

lout (lowt) v., poet. to bend, stoop – ‘...Laigh doun I louted on my knees, An’ preed the byre’ [WL] (also ‘le Schaw’ belonging to John Hall. In 1538 he had George Robson, John Robson, Walter Veitch, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott removed from his 20 merklands in Synton. Oliver (1826–1916) son of Walter, who was a carrier around Southdean. Most of his children were born in Oxnam Parish and some were christened at the Free Kirk in Jedburgh. He died in Hobbirk (formerly written ‘Louche’).

Lovel (lu vul) n. Agnes (13th/14th C.) listed in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘Agneys Louel qe fu la femme Henry del counte de Rokesburg’, so she was presumably the wife of an already deceased Henry. Maurice, Parson of ‘Little Cavers’, who also appears on the Roll, may be her son or other relative. It is possible she is the same as the Eva, widow of Henry, who is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535 when, along with several others, he was accused of taking grain from ‘le Schaw’ belonging to John Hall. In 1538 he had George Robson, John Robson, Walter Veitch, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott removed from his 20 merklands in Synton. Oliver (1826–1916) son of Walter, who was a carrier around Southdean. Lovel was probably also the ‘henrici lupelli’ (i.e. Henry, Wick when he was a witness in 1166 and 1190. He is recorded as Baron of Hawick when he witnessed a charter by King William to the 12th century. He was ‘Henry Luvel’ in 1166, and other grants in Somerset in the latter part of (i.e., before 1166) he had his gift to the Priory confirmed. He also witnessed several other grants in Somerset in the latter part of the 12th century. He was ‘Henry Luvel’ in 1166 when he witnessed a charter by King William to Robert de Brus. He is recorded as Baron of Hawick when he was a witness in 1166 and 1190. He was probably also the ‘henrici lupelli’ (i.e., Henry, Little Wolf) who is recorded in a charter (confirmed by Pope Lucius III in 1183, Pope Gregory VIII in 1187 and Pope Clement III in 1188) giving 2 oxgates of land at ‘Branchenulle’ (i.e., Brauxholme) to the canons of St. Andrews. This was witnessed by the first 3 clergymen known to be connected with Hawick. This same grant of 2 oxgates of land in Brauxholme to St. Andrews Priory in about 1175 was mentioned in a list of gifts in 1206, 1216, 1246 and 1248. In 1190 he was recorded in the Pipe Rolls for Dorset and Somerset. He married Alice de Cary, and his sons were Ralph (who died without issue) and Henry (who succeeded to the Barony of Hawick). Other children may have included Maurice and Richard, who exchanged these 2 oxgates for other nearby lands in about the 1190s. This Richard may have also succeeded the next Henry, and was therefore either his son or grandson. Henry (d.c.1216) Lord Cary, probably younger son of Henry, he succeeded his brother Ralph, who died in 1207. In 1197 he was assessed for fees for the Norman army. In the period 1198–1202 he was appointed as attorney in a case by Ralph de Trubleville. In 1207 he settled a case brought by Matilda, his brother Ralph’s widow, over lands she claimed she had been given in dower; this included 1/3 of the family’s barony in Scotland (presumably Hawick), but she settled for the manor of ‘Hunewic’ (i.e., Honeywick near Castle Cary), together with money and livestock. In 1208 he paid 300 marks for the livery of his lands, and still held some Somerset lands jointly with his mother Alice and sister-in-law Maud (the same as Matilda). In 1210 he paid King John to avoid going on the expedition to Ireland. He married Christiania and was succeeded by his brother (although some accounts say son) Richard. However this genealogy may be confused, and there may be another extra generation of Henrys and/or Richards. He may be the Henry who was among witnesses to a charter for Gilmerston in the Glasgow chartulary in the reign of William. His widow ‘Cristina’ secondly married Richard Cotel; in about 1222 she complained that Richard ‘Luvel’ (probably her brother-in-law, or possibly her son) had disposed of some of her dower lands. In 1248 she complained again about being removed from her dower lands, and there was a complicated agreement over several lands, including ‘Honeywik’ (i.e., Honeywick near Castle Cary). Henry (d.1262/3) of Castle Cary and Hawick, 2nd son of Richard, his elder brother William dying before their father. He married Eve (or Eva), who died in 1294.

They had sons Richard and Hugh, who both succeeded. They also had daughters Alicia (the elder) and Cristiana (d. bef. 1264), who were both unmarried. Little else is known about him and it is unclear whether he played any direct role in the Hawick area. He may be the ‘Sir H.’ who witnessed an agreement in Somerset in 1256. In 1263 his son and heir Richard did homage to the English King and received his father’s lands. However in 1264 there was an inquest into the age of Richard’s brother Hugh, and whether he should be heir of ‘Kari Lovel’; his widow ‘Lady Eva Lovel’ is also mentioned. Also in 1264 his daughter Alicia brought a case against Hugh, complaining that he had tried to dispossess her from the lands that she and her deceased sister Cristiana had been granted. His widow Eva is further referred to in 1294 when her lands and her son Hugh’s lands were given to the custody of John de Soulis. Hugh (d.c. 1290) of Castle Cary and Hawick, brother of Richard and 2nd son of Henry. In 1264 there was an inquiry into his age, since his brother Richard had died, and so he succeeded to the barony of ‘Kari Lovel’ (i.e. Cary). Also in 1264 his sister Alicia accused him of dispossessing her of a manor in Sussex, given to her and her deceased sister Cristiana; he was charged to allow his sister to keep her farm. He was recorded as Baron of Hawick in 1268. A 1268 plea against him for restoring a watercourse at Castle Cary mentions that his grandfather was Richard. A further case in 1268 involves his sister-in-law Cecilia and the land of ‘Wynkanton’. He was recorded as lord of ‘karycastle’ in the 1270s, in 1274 was ‘Sir Hugh’ of Cary when he made an agreement with the Prior of Bruton, and was ‘Hugone Luvel’ when he witnessed a grant for Bruton Priory. He married Eleanor (or ‘Alianors’) and their children were: Sir Richard, who succeeded in 1303 when still a minor, becoming Lord of Castle Cary and Baron of Hawick; and Olivia, who married John de Gournay. He was recorded in 1291 when his widow was directed not to re-marry without the King’s permission and John de Soulis was given custody of 2/3 of his lands until his heir reached majority. Additional lands and privileges of his (including the church of ‘Stoketone’) were granted to John de Soulis in 1292/3, and also in his lands were confirmed to John de Soulis, along with the lands which Eva Lovel (his mother) had held until his majority. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English record of 1306 as a supporter of Robert the Bruce who had been sent to a prison. It is unclear how he was related to the other Lovels of the time. Sir James (c.1316-42) only son of Richard the first Lord of Castle Cary. He married Elizabeth or Isabel around 1328, but died before his father. Their children were Richard (who died young) and Muriel (who inherited the titles and married Nicholas Seymour). Sir William of Douglas had a crown charter of 1341 for all his forfeited lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1342 his widow is recorded having livery of 2 manors in Somerset, which had been given to him by his father in 1328/9. Sir John (13th C.) recorded ‘as magistro Johanne Lovel’ on an assize in Cumberland in 1292, then in a court case in Newcastle in 1293, relating to affairs in Scotland. He was also recorded in the same way in 1296, in a document relating to equipping Edward I’s expedition into Scotland. He was certainly English, but it is unclear where he came from. He was also recorded as ‘the marshal’ who had come to pacify the dispute between the Welsh and English in Edinburgh. Lawrence (13th C.) recorded (probably early) in the period 1259-86 in a document relating to King Alexander at Lanark. He served as some kind of soldier. It is unclear how he was related to other Scottish Lovels. Margaret (d. bef. 1164) wife of Ralph. It is unknown what her maiden name was, but not impossible she was also a Lovel. She may have held the lands of Hawick after her husband’s death. Her son and heir was Henry. She secondly married Thomas of London (who also married Escina of Mow); with the consent of her sons Henry and Thomas she granted ‘Ughtredshaghe’ (probably Outerside) to Jedburgh Abbey at its foundation, as confirmed in about 1170. Maurice (13th C.) probably son of Henry. Along with Richard he exchanged these 2 oxgangs for other nearby lands in about the 1190s. He may be the Maurice who witnessed an undated grant by Richard, Lord of Cary, to the Priory of Bruton, with another witness being Henry, son of Richard. Maurice (13th C.) recorded as ‘Morice Louel, persone del Eglise de Petyt Cares, del comte de Rokesburgh’ (i.e. ‘parson of Little Cavers’) in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. In a list drawn up in 1777 he is transcribed as ‘Mauricius Lunel, Parsone ecclesiae de Parva Caures’. The ‘Agneys Louel’, widow of Henry, who also appears on the Ragman Rolls may have been his mother. Note that there was another Maurice a generation or 2 earlier, probably brother of the Richard who died in 1253. Muriel (b.1331/2) daughter of James, who died in 1342, she succeeded her grandfather Sir Richard in 1351, probably becoming Baroness Lovel. It is unclear if she inherited the Barony of Hawick, although control of the lands was certainly no longer in Lovel hands by her time. She married Nicholas, Lord St. Maur. Ralph (d.c.1121) one of the earliest known Lovels. He held Castle Cary in 1107. He was probably the son of Walter de Douai, Baron Bampton, who held the Castle at the time of the Domesday Book. However, these early generations are very uncertain, and it is unclear how he may have been related to the other contemporary Lovels. He may have been succeeded by Baldwin. Ralph (d.c.1159) of Tintenhill and Castle Cary, son of William (although possibly related to the near contemporary Baldwin, since accounts of these generations are very uncertain). He may have been the first family member to adopt the surname ‘Lovell’, based on the family nickname ‘Lupellus’, meaning ‘Little Wolf’ (which was also applied to his brothers Henry and William). He appears to have also had the nickname ‘Simelt’. Along with his father he was part of the rebellion against King Stephen of England, and defended Castle Cary in a siege in 1152. He is said to have married a daughter of Henry de Novo Mercatu, from whom he received Dunkerton in Somerset. This wife could have been Margaret, who appears to have been the heiress of Hawick (and so possible the barony was part of her dower lands), and died before 1164; it is not impossible that she was the Margaret who secondly married Thomas de London. He was succeeded by Henry, who was probably his brother (or possibly his son). He may be the Ralph who restored the grant of lands to the Priory of Bruton that his father had taken away; this was witnessed by ‘Thoma Lupell’, who was surely a close relative. Ralph (d.c.1207) eldest son of Henry, from whom he succeeded, before in turn being succeeded in the Baronies of Castle Cary and Hawick by his brother Henry. His name is also recorded as ‘Rodolph’. He married Maud (or Matilda), daughter of Henry de Newmarche. In 1207, after he had died without issue, ‘Matillidis’ claimed her dower lands and made a settlement with her brother-in-law Henry over rights to the manor of ‘Hunewic’ (probably ‘Honeywick’). In about 1222 his widow was now married to Ralph Lebutiler, when she and Christina (widow of Henry) complained that Richard had dispossessed them of their inheritance, including some lands in Scotland. Richard (12th C.) of Castle Cary and Hawick, possibly son of Henry. He married Alice and their sons were William (who died young) and Henry. He is probably also the ‘Ricardi Lupelli domini de Hawic’ recorded in the Register of the Priory of St. Andrews in about the 1190s. There he exchanged 2 ‘bovates’ (i.e. ox-gates) of land between Whames and Whithope to the canons of St. Andrews, in exchange for lands in ‘Brancheshelm’ (i.e. Branxholm) which had been conferred by his father Henry. The boundaries of these lands are given, and are interesting in preserving several lost place names, namely ‘anesotd terre’, ‘chestris’, ‘farmp’, ‘langesideburne’ and ‘qui风筝ne’. He may also be the ‘Richard Luvel, lord of Cary’ who confirmed a gift to the Priory of Bruton, and whose confirmation was witnessed by his son Henry, as well as Maurice (who could have been his brother). Note that there are several Richards, Henrys and Ralphs at about this time, and so the details of the family tree are hard to disentangle. Richard (d.1253) probably son of Henry, and brother of Ralph and Henry. However, given the length of time that elapsed, it is also possible he was son of an additional Richard, and hence grandson of Henry. He was probably the Richard ‘Luvel’ who was involved in a land transaction relating to Biddesham near Cary in 1203/4. He succeeded Henry in 1218, paying £100 for the livery of Cary and the other Somerset estates. In about 1222 he was described as tenant when there was a claim against him by Christina, widow of Henry. She had remarried to Richard Cotel, and claimed that he had dispossessed her of her dower lands of ‘Kary, Wrekton and Pidecumbe’, as well as other lands and rights. Also mentioned was Matilda, formerly wife of Ralph ‘Luvel’, and now wife of Ralph Lebutiler, who also held lands in inheritance. These disagreements included ‘the land which Richard Luvel held in Scotland’. In 1231 he had a charter for demesne lands of Cary and also witnessed another charter. He is further recorded in the 1230s and 40s regarding knights service. In about 1237 he gave agreement that the Priory of Bath should hold the rights to the church of Castle Cary, as granted by his father Henry. In 1248 Christina ‘Luvel’ (stated to have been the wife of his brother) complained again that he owes her money and dower lands, ‘as well in England as in Scotland’. A court case against him in 1255 was adjourned because he was deceased by then. He married Alice, whose surname is unknown. After she was widowed, her marriage was granted to William Berkeley, but he married someone else and so she then married Nicholas de Haversham. Their children included: William, who died before him; and Henry, who succeeded. Richard
Lovel

(d.1263/4) of Castle Cary and Hawick, eldest son of Henry. He succeeded his father, but died only a year or two later, and was in turn succeeded by his brother Hugh. He married Cecily (or Cecilia), whose surname is unknown; she was involved in a plea regarding her dower lands of ‘Wynkanton’ in 1268. He is recorded as ‘Richard Lupell’ in the Scottish Exchequer Rolls in the period 1264–66 as late owner of the Barony of Hawick. Richard (13th C.). His lands are referred to in 1278 by the Sheriff of Somerset and Dorset, and again in 1283. It is unclear who he was. Sir Richard (c.1283–1351) Lord Lovel, son of Hugh. He was born at Castle Cary and was custodian of the castles of Corfe and Purbeck. He succeeded his father in about 1291, while still a minor, his guardian being John de Souls. In 1297 he swore to Edward I that he would serve him against France. He is listed in rolls of knights in 1298 and 1301 and found 2 men to serve Edward I in 1302. In about 1303 he achieved majority and took up his estates. In 1306 he received 10 marks for helping Edward against Robert the Bruce. He probably left Scotland soon afterwards, since Bransholme (in the Barony of Hawick) was granted to Sir Henry Baliol in 1307, with a confirming charter in about 1321. Furthermore the Barony of Hawick was granted to the Earl of Strathearn (perhaps before 1329). In 1310 he received the Manor of ‘Wynfirthegle’ in exchange for his wife’s manor of Old Roxburgh. In 1318/9 he was ‘lord of Caricastel’ when he gave up his rights to some lands in favour of Montacute Priory, with his wife Muriel also being mentioned. He was also holder of the Barony of Hawick in one of the oldest existing records, when it was regranted by Edward III in 1347 (although at a similar time it was also granted to Maurice Murray by David II of Scotland). Sometime before 1310/1 he married Muriel (or Muriella), daughter and heir of John Souls (his guardian) of Old Roxburgh. In 1316 he was given a charter of Sir John Souls’ lands in Dumfries, as well as Old Roxburgh, but then Old Roxburgh was kept for the safety of Roxburgh Castle, and he was granted the Manor of Bradenach in Devon in exchange. In 1335 he had the castles of Corfe and Purbeck committed to him and his wife (Muriel Souls). He was summoned to English Parliament in 1348 and 1350 as Lord Lovel. His children were: Joan, who married Sir John de Moels; James, who died before him and whose daughter Muriel succeeded, followed by her son Richard Seymour; and Eleanor, who married Roger Rouhaut of Aston Rowant. He is probably the Richard whose seal bore a lion rampant on a background of crosses. The failure of the male line here ended the direct succession of more than 2 centuries. Robert (d.1121) son of Ascelin Gouel de Percival and brother of William (at least in some accounts of the early Lovels). He probably inherited Castle Cary from his father in about 1119, but died soon afterwards. In 1119 he took up arms against Henry I, but negotiations, involving Radulfus Rufus (his brother-in-law) led him to switch allegiance to the King. He may be the ‘Robertus Luvelius’ who witnessed a gift to the canons of Bruton. He left no issue and was succeeded by his brother William. Roger (13th C.) son of Roger. In 1242 he and Richard de Dreycote confirmed a grant of lands to the Canons of Bruton; ‘Domino Ricardo Lupello’ was the first witness and hence probably a close relative. He is recorded as ‘Rogero Lupello’ when he witnessed an agreement with the Priory of Bruton in 1253. Probably the same Roger was also recorded in some other Somerset documents at about the same time. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among men for whose murder William Clerk ‘apud ecclesiam foreste’ (i.e. at the Kirk of the Forest) had remission a the Justiciary in Selkirk. He may have been one of the last men of this surname in the region. William (d.c.1155) of Castle Cary, also described as Earl of Yvery and ‘Lupellus’, his surname may have been ‘Gouel de Perceval’, with ‘Lovel’ being first adopted by his son from the ‘Lupellus’ nickname. It is said that his nickname was the diminutive form of ‘Lupus’, which had been attached to his father. In some accounts of the early Lovels he is the son of Ascelin Gouel de Perceval and younger brother of Robert, from whom he succeeded; however, these early generation are very uncertain, and there is dispute among authorities. He held estates of Yvery in Normandy and Cary, Weston, Stawell, etc. in England. Spending more time in England than his father and grandfather, he may have built the first stone castle at Castle Cary. He fought for Waleran in a rebellion against Henry I about 1123, escaping imprisonment in 1124 and returning home in disguise, barefoot, having given the Seine ferryman his shoes. He supported Matilda against Stephen in the English civil war, resulting in Stephen besieging Castle Cary, taking it in 1138, but returning it on the promise not to support Matilda. The castle was again besieged in 1153, when William and his son Ralph reneged on this promise, but was saved by the arrival of the Earl of Gloucester’s force. He is probably the ‘Willelmus, qui cognominatur Lupellus’ who had a charter with the Abbey of St. Peter of Chartres in the early 12th century. He also confirmed a gift to the Priory of Bruton. It is unclear if he was also Baron of Hawick, or if the barony was first held by his son, or even if it was held by another family member during his lifetime. He married Auberie, sister of Waleran de Bellemonte, Earl of Mellent (and related to the Kings of France). Their children may have included: Waleran, Baron de Yvery, whose descendants retained that Barony until the 15th century; Ralph, who succeeded to Castle Cary; Henry, who later succeeded; William of Titchmarsh and Minster Lovel, although this is disputed by some accounts; and Richard Pereoal, ancestor of the Earls of Egmont. William (14th C.) said to have forfeited lands in Eskdale and Evesdale in the reign of David II. These lands were granted to William, Lord Douglas, younger. He is probably the Sir William who was at ‘Haydenebruge’ in 1327. However, it is unclear how he was related to James, who forfeited the same lands in 1341; it may be that the names were in error (also written ‘Lovell’, ‘Lovel’, ‘Lupellus’, ‘Luvell’, ‘Luvellus’, etc.).

Lovel Court (lu-vul-kör) n. street name for the courtyard developed behind Drumlanrig’s Tower when the area was renovated in the early 1990s. It had once been the stabilising area for the Tower Inn and a large building housing the Tower Garage (originally misspelled ‘Lovell’ on the street sign).

the Lovels (thu-lu-vulz) n. family name of Norman nobility who were given lands around Hawick by David I in the 1120s or 30s. The family held the lands of Yvery in Normandy. They may have settled in Teviotdale in the previous reign of Alexander I. Their lands included Bransholme, which they held until 1307. They built their castle, the Moat (or Motte), a wooden palisaded tower on a mound of earth, as a symbol of their lordship of the lands around Hawick. They later built a more substantial tower where Drumlanrig’s Tower now stands, as well as rebuilding St. Mary’s in stone. The Lovels held the patronage of the church in Hawick until 1355. The family also held lands elsewhere, particularly Castle Cary in Somersetshire (south of Bristol). Castle Cary was a Norman fortification, built at the foot of Lodge Hill, and held by the Lovels from perhaps 1107 until it was destroyed about 1155. The fortifications can still be seen above the town, including a mound where the castle stood (reminiscent of Hawick’s Moat). During the Wars of Independence their loyalties lay with the English and the family returned to Somerset. Their Hawick lands were forfeited by David II and given to Maurice Murray, later being passed to Archibald Douglas in the 15th century. The Lovels continued to hold lands in Somerset long after the castle there had been destroyed, and the town there is still called Castle Cary. The family name probably derives from an early member nicknamed ‘Lupellus’ (Little Wolf) which became ‘Lupel’ and then ‘Lovel’. Their arms were a gold background strewn with crosses, and with a blue lion rampant.

The identification of Lovel of Hawick and Bransholme with Lovel of Castle Cary was only made in about the 1870s by historian Joseph Bain. Note that there were other prominent branches of the family, e.g. the Lovels of Titchmarsh (or ‘Tichmersh, in Northamptonshire), the Lovels of Minster Lovel (in Oxfordshire) and the Lovels of Ballumbie (in Angus), but they may not all have been directly connected. There is a Lovel mentioned in the Scottish ballad ‘The Battle of Otterburn’ and a ballad called ‘Lord Lovel’ (about a knight who dies of sorrow after returning to hear of the death of his love): ‘What shameful deed besmirched with guilt Attached to the Lovels’ name? What untold sin? – no mortal knows Except the monk who shivered the same’ [JCG].

Lowe (low) n. Rev. Alexander (19th/20th C.) born in Edinburgh, he was minister of the Park Church in Newcastleton from 1898. This was the former Free Church, and now the village hall. He resigned in 1934, after which the charge of this church was merged with that of the South Church in the village. In 1906 he sued the Council for leaving a mud-heap in the road, which he fell over.

Lowie (low-ee) n., arch. a large lazy person.

Lowis (lowz) n. Patrick of Manor (d.bef. 1459) from the family which held half of the Barony of Manor (the other being held by the Inglis family, with a small part also connected with the local Gledstains). He acted as Baron Bailie for the Scotts of Buccleuch, and is recorded as witness to documents at least from 1427–57. In 1446 he witnessed the charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. In 1447 he was one of the witnesses to the feu charter between Simon of Routledge and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for lands of Birkwood just outside Hawick. In 1449 he was Patricio Lowis de Mener’ when he witnessed the renunciation of the lands of Lochurd and Kirkurd by Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1451 he witnessed a document for Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd in Edinburgh. He was succeeded by Thomas, probably his son. William (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484.

Ludne (lu-den) n. former name for a former area in Liddesdale. In a rental roll of c.1376 the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ is listed as one of the 4 main sections, including 29 farms, with total value of 18 pounds 11 shillings and 8 pence. Among the farms was Greenshiel, Oldshiel, Carryshiel, Hartsgarth, Langhaugh and Tofts, and the holders of lands were ‘Fethyng’, ‘Loumane’, ‘Willelmi filii Alani’, ‘Ricardi de Roule’ and ‘Willelmi del Syde’. It seems to have coincided with the west side of the Hermitage Water. However, the precise extent of the area, as well as the pronunciation and any connection with modern lands, is unknown.

Luff (lu) n. John George (1845/6–1918) local hotel proprietor. Born in Sussex, he came to Hawick about 1877 as a waiter in the Tower Hotel, where he developed a novel shorthand slate attached to his waiter’s tray. It is said that he spoke fluent French and Italian, having spent time on the Continent. He went into business on his own, later having the Central Hotel built, which he ran originally as a temperance hotel. He later offered to demolish the ‘Coffin End’ at his own expense if the Town would grant him a liquor licence; this request was denied, but after improving his hotel and being granted a licence, he did in fact have the wooden eye-sores removed and gifted the land to the Town. He was a vocal opponent of the Clubs of the Town and in general, claiming they were merely unlicensed drinking establishments; he published some pamphlets on this topic. He was a Councillor for Wilton Ward in the period 1901–04, being fond of novel schemes and for quoting aphorisms, and famous for speeches he gave from the Central Hotel balcony. On one such famous occasion he proposed a scheme to turn the Park into a pleasure park, with a huge artificial lake. He published ‘A system of mastering Pitman’s manual’ (1877), ‘Thoughts on clubs by a country cook’ (1899) and ‘The Income Tax Corrector (c.1910). His engraved shorthand tray is in the Museum, and he is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery – ‘When the moon is made of green cheese, And pigs begin to fly, Though they are the most unlikely birds. That ever went into the sky. When Councillor Luff is Provost, Oh! won't the pork be high!' [TJ], 'He's a scrumptious sort of man is John George Luff. He's a bump-tious sort of man is John George Luff; And the Central Hotel It suits him very well. A vigorous sort of man is John Georg Luff' [JCG].

Lumsden (limz-din) n. Ernest headmaster of St. Cuthbert’s School from 1925 until about 1945. During WWII he also acted as organist and choirmaster in the Kirk.

Lunardi (loo-nar-dee) n. Vincent (1759–1806) balloonist, who made the first substantial flight in Britain, and was a household name in the late 18th century. He made several flights in Britain in the 1780s, including from Kelso and from Edinburgh. After launching from St. Andrews Churchyard, Glasgow on the 23rd November 1785 at 1.45 p.m. (with a crowd estimated at 100,000), he had an adventurous voyage, with the wind blowing him to the south-east. He tried to land on a hill near Dryhope (apparently thinking that St. Mary’s Loch might be an arm of the sea), where he lost his anchor, flag and some ropes, and was spotted by many local people. He eventually came down about 2 miles east of Alemoor at about 3.55, being fortuitously met by Mr. and Mrs. Chisholm of Stirches, who had shouted ‘Lunardi, come down’ at him. Mrs. Chisholm rode for about 3 miles in the balloon, with 2 shepherds holding the ropes. Then they brought him to Hawick and he spent the night at Stirches. The following day he was received by the Magistrates, entertained at a special dinner and afterwards given the freedom of the Town.

Lundie (lun-dee) n. Allan (16th/17th C.) studied at St. Salvator’s College and graduated from St. Andrews University in 1586. He became Vicar at Lessuden (St. Boswells) in 1596. He was rebuked by the Presbytery in 1608 and again in 1610 for negligence and being ‘ane player at cairdis’, among other complaints. He was translated to Hassendean in 1610, but only stayed about a year before moving on to Channelkirk in 1611 (basically he had a choice, and while he preferred Hassendean, the Presbytery advised Channelkirk). He went to Hutton and Fishwick in 1614, demitted sometime before 1636, but was recorded as still alive in 1639. His descendants held land at Spittal (near Berwick) for several generations. He married Agnes Trottar and their children were James (next minister of Hutton), William, John, Andrew and Elizabeth. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1517 being given the wardship of the lands of the deceased Walter Scott of Howpasley, as well as rights over the marriage of his daughter. These were the superiority of lands forfeited after the execution of Alexander, Lord Home. In 1535 there was a reversion of his charter for the lands of ‘Apiltrehaill, Mydschelis, Crawlawhill’ plus their mills, ‘Cotlaw, Butrig and Ourir and Nethir Manys of Hassindene’; the lands returned to George, Lord Home. He was probably related to the family of Lundie of that Ilk, but it is unclear if he played any other role locally. William (18th C.) taylor in Ormiston, recorded in 1753 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Alison Scott and their son Archibald was baptised in 1772 (also spelled ‘Lundy’ etc.).

lunge (lunj) v., poet. to belabour, beat – ‘Content, quoth I, ‘that want should lunge me’’ [JR].

Lunn (lun) n. Andrew (18th C.) married Isabel Lillico in Bedrule in 1730. Derek son of Bill and Joyce, he is a local photographer, long-time member of Hawick Camera Club and Associate Member of the Royal Photographic Society. After receiving a camera as a 21st-birthday gift, he decided to turn his hobby into his profession. His work has included weddings and commercial commissions, but he is particularly known for portraits. His studio space has been at 49 North Bridge Street and then 10 Howegate. He was named Scottish Portrait Photographer of the Year in 2002. With Ian Landles he mounted exhibitions with accompanying books: ‘Honest Men and Bright-eyed Daughters’ (1990); ‘Mair Honest Men . . .’ (1993); and ‘Son of Honest Men’ (2000). He also plays guitar and sings, being for several years in the band ‘3D’ and later drummer in ‘The Medicine Hat’. Donald (1931–2008) born on the
Lunn

Loan, he was an apprentice butcher with Scott & Telfer’s and started his own business on the Howegate, famous for his tripe and haggis. He also played rugby for the Trades and served in the R.A.F. for 2 years. He was Cornet in 1957 and was President of the Callants’, Mosstroopers’ and 1514 Clubs. He married Eileen and had a daughter Vivienne. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married to Janet Hobkirk and their son Walter was baptised in 1639. James (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. His son, also James, was a witness in 1666 to a case involving a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk between William Turnbull likely to be son of the earlier weaver James. In 1707 he witnessed a baptism for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan. He married Marion Wilson and their children, born in Hawick, included: Thomas (b.1671); Marion (b.1672); James (b.1673); Jane (b.1683); and Bessie (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were William Swan and William Bridges and in 1689 were weaver William Swan and dyer George Young. Marion who married William Murray in Yarrow in 1701 may be his daughter. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm. His unnamed child was baptised in 1705. Other children, who were probably his include Walter (b.1696), Janet (b.1699), Janet (again, b.1700) and James (b.1708). James (b.c.1705) resident of Hawick. He married Helen Rae (b.c.1711) and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Katherine (b.1738); and Walter (b.1740). He may be the James, son of John, born in Hawick in 1705, or the son of James born in Cavers in 1708. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Earlside. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (1769–1839) son of Walter and Betty Turnbull. He was born at Colterscleuch. Based on the births of his children he lived at Rough-hope, and elsewhere in the Borthwick and upper Teviot valleys. He married Elizabeth Telford (c.1773–1845), who is buried at Teviothead. Their children included: Elizabeth (1796–1880), who married James Lough at Ropelawshiel; Mina (c.1799–1888), who married Henry Scott and died at Milsington; Joan (c.1801–80), who married William Scott; Walter (1803–73), who married Janet Grieve and die at Meadowshaw; Janet (1806–79), who married William Beattie; and Grace, who married Robert Armstrong. Jean ‘Blinnd Jean’ (d.1778) Hawick resident whose death is recorded along with her nickname. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Clerk and their unnamed child was baptised in 1671. It seems likely that he was father of weaver John, as well as Helen, who married James Scott ‘Laird’. John (17th C.) married Isobel Young in Roberton in 1687. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the weaver who in 1700 (along with James Scott, Laird’) witnessed a baptism for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan. He gave evidence in 1710 about a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk between 2 other weavers. He married Marion Wight in Hawick in 1701. Their children included: Marie (b.1701); Janet (b.1703); and James (b.1705). The witnesses in 1703 were James Scott ‘Laird’ and weaver Mungo Swan, and in 1705 were John Swan, James Scott ‘Westport’ and James Scott ‘Doctor’. It seems likely he was son of the earlier weaver John and the wife of James Scott ‘Laird’ was Helen Lunn, who may have been his sister. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Rule and their children included: Bessie (b.1719); Jean (b.1722); and Isobel (b.1725). weaver in Hawick who gave evidence in 1710 about John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Nisbet and their children included: James (b.1760); Walter (b.1763); and Charles (b.1764). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes McMillan and their children included: John (b.1762). John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Betty (b.1759) and John (b.1761). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Lodgeknow (in Cavers Parish), recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1777–1861) son of Walter and Betty Turnbull. He was a labourer living in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 6 South Liddle Street, and in 1851 was with his son Robert at Eskdalemuir. He married Isabella Eckford, who came from Crailing. Their children included: Walter (1806–79), who was born in Hobkirk Parish, married Margaret Dalgleish and live in Selkirk; Agnes (1807–90), who married Francis Govenlock; George (b.1809); Elizabeth (1817–93), born in Kirkton Parish, married Archibald Hall and died in Langholm; and Robert (1817–56), who married Isabella Armstrong. He secondly married Nelly (d.1870), daughter of John Hotson. John (b.1802) son of James and Janet Reid. He was a woollen and linen draper in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was listed as a merchant in Lilliesleaf in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was recorded on the south side of Main Street. He lived with his mother Janet and sisters Margaret and Jean. He was probably unmarried when he died. His drapery business was carried on by James Hood, and in 1872 (after his death) was renamed John Lunn & Co. John (1812–71) from Lilliesleaf, he wrote occasional pieces for the local press. He could be the same man as the draper in Lilliesleaf. He chaired the Lilliesleaf centenary Burns Night. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1689 he was fined by the Magistrates for the ‘exhorbitant’ wedding of his daughter to William Douglas. He was listed as a merchant among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same Thomas ‘Lune’ was listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the ‘T. Lun’ who was fined by the Bailies in 1675 ‘in not coming to the night watch when he was charged to do so’. He may be the Thomas, married to Margaret Armstrong, whose children baptised in Hawick included Marion (b.1672) and Alison (or perhaps ‘A son’, b.1675); the witnesses in 1675 were James Newbie and William Swan. He witnessed a baptism for Patrick Bridges in 1678, along with William Swan. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1724 he appeared before the Session to apologise for defaming his fellow weaver William Scott. He was probably the Thomas born in Hawick in 1686 to James and Marion Wilson. Thomas ‘Tom’ (18th/19th C.) weaver at Shuttlehaa near Teviotdale. It is unclear how he was related to other local Lunns. He was married to the sister of James Swanson, who brought Tom Jenkins to the area; however, her name is not known. After Swanson died a few days after returning to Hawick, he looked after Jenkins, as well as Swanson’s illegitimate son James. Thomas (18th/19th C.) stock manufacturer in Lilliesleaf, in partnership with James Sterling, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (17th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1774 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. Adam (b.1776) was probably also his child (formerly written ‘Lun’, ‘Lune’, etc.).

Lunon (lu-nin) n. London, capital of England, once connected to Hawick by train – ‘Frae Lunon town an act they shaw, To summon men by dint o’ law’ [JR], ‘I wonder how the King an’ the founk o’ Lunin allow sic things’ [RW] (spelled several ways).

Lunt (lu’nt, lunt) n., arch., poet. a light, ember, match, piece of inflammable material – ‘Lunt the flame of a smothered fire which suddenly bursts into a blaze, Teviotd.’ [JoJ], ‘A wheen folk oot picnickin at a deike-fit on Dunieoseide hed kinnelt a lunt . . . ’ [ECS], ‘Salome flang like a wanton, free, A lunt, the flash o’ her witchin’ ee’ [WL], v., arch. to become alight – ‘Ye shake yer head – thou anger canna hide it: Lunt, puff! quo’ I; joost bite yer lip an’ bide it’ [JoHa], ‘Thae rositty sticks’ll lunt grand’ [GW], to set on fire, to light – ‘A luntin’ match’ [GW], to smoke a pipe, especially to make it give off a lot of smoke.

Lurden (lur-din) n. farm in the former Hassendean Parish, just to the north of Knowetownhead (this is an old Scots word for ‘mean fellow, sluggard’).

Lurden Burn (lur-din-burn) n. small stream that rises near Clarilaw, passes Hassendeanburn farm and joins the Hassendean Burn at Lurden. A footbridge over the burn gives access to the farm.

Lurden Entry (lur-din-en-tree) n. former name for a track leading from Lurden and Knowetownhead to the B6359 just east of Horsleyhill. There was a railway bridge over the track here, and another bridge over the railway to the south.

Lurgie (lur-gee) n. nickname of Robert Wilson, deriving from the family home of Lurgiescleuch.

Lurgies Burn (lur-gee-burn) n. stream that runs into the Harwood Lake in the upper Rule valley. It is formed from Black Cleuch and the Freestone Cleuch.

Lurgiescleuch (lur-gee-zclooch) n. farm on the track above Harwood, lying on the Lurgie Burn. It was the former home of Hawick historian Robert Wilson's family (probably his grandfather), hence his nickname ‘Lurgie’. It once formed the eastern quarter of the lands of Fairnielee and was sold by William, Earl of Lothian in 1647 (along with Stanedge) to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers. There was 1 hearth listed on the tax rolls at the end of the 17th century. John Wilson was there in 1786. James Dryden and Thomas Potts were there in 1821. Shepherd James Wilson and his family were there in 1861 and G. Pringle in 1868. An old road crosses from here to Langburnshiel in the Slitrig valley (it is ‘Lurgiscleuch’ in 1647 and ‘Lurgiscleugh’ in 1694 and 1786; the farm is marked ‘Lurgyscleugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name is obscure).

Lurgie’s Well (lur-gee-wel) n. popular name for a spring beside St. Leonard’s, named after Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson, from it being a favourite rendezvous of his. It is said that he fell asleep there and caught the chill that led to his death.

luskee (lus-kee) n., poet. meaning uncertain – ‘In the upland way ... the luskees there that busk the brae Are the bees that mak’ the honey’ [HSR].

Lustruther (lu-stru-thur) n. farm and surrounding area in Southdean, just south of the main road between Chesters and Southdean. Robert Oliver was tenant there about 1502. The Olivers farmed there for many generations, this being the same family as the Olivers of Dinlabyre, and said to have been descended from the Strynds branch. It has also been stated that around the 17th century the family made a fortune from driving Scottish cattle to markets in England, when that was illegal. It was described being 2 steadings valued at 50 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In 1541 the tenants listed on the rental roll were William (‘the Lawyer’), Marion (his mother), John (‘Blackhead’), another John, Katherine, Marion, Janet and Robert Oliver; it was split into 4 parts, with total value 50s. A tower near here was burned by Dacre’s men (led by Sir John Radcliff) in late 1513 and by the English again in 1544; there is now no sign of the tower house, and the modern farmhouse bears the date 1777. William Oliver, Hob Oliver and John Oliver, younger, were all ‘of Lustroder’ when they were among Olivers swearing allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. It is said that around the 17th century the Olivers of Lustruther made a fortune engaged in (illegally) driving cattle across the Border. David Turnbull, tenant there, was exiled for perjury in 1622. The tenants of the farm in 1669 were Agnes Shiel and William Oliver. Christian Oliver was recorded there in 1684. George Riddell was there in 1688, John Oliver in 1694, William Slatter in 1797 and James Fair around the 1820s. Above the plantation known as Lustruther Strip is a short linear earthwork, and in the same area there is a quarry, field boundaries and rig and furrow lines (the origin is probably Old English ‘hlose’ and Middle English ‘struther’, meaning ‘the pig-sty by the marsh; the name is first recorded in 1502 as ‘Lustruthir’, it is ‘Lurchestrother’ in 1513, ‘Lustroder’ in 1538, ‘Lustrudir’ in 1539, ‘Lustruder’ and ‘Lustroder’ in 1544, ‘Lwstruder’ in 1562, ‘Lustrother’ in 1583, lut (lu', lut) n., poet. to let - 'An' he lut it fa' in the middle o' thair camp roun' about thair bydin'-pieces [HSR]. 'The king sendet an' lowe-set him; een the ruulir o' the peeple, an' lut him gae free' [HSR] (cf. lut and lut).

Luderdale (loo-thur-dail) n. Andrew (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Abbotrule in 1476 when he supplicated to the Pope to be allowed to hold 2 benefices at once. His name appears as 'Luderdel'. Probably the same Andrew was Abbot of Dryburgh 1482–1508. He seems likely to be related to the Lairds of St. Mary's Isle in Kirkudbrightshire, who appear to have moved there from the Roxburghshire and Berwickshire area in the mid-16th century. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Andrea Luderdale' when he witnessed the baronial sasine for Hawick in 1511/2. This was along with Robert (Chaplain) and James, who were presumably related. He also witnessed the sasine of 1514 for James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He may be the same as the earlier Andrew, or else was probably related to him. David (d.bef. 1486) recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale 1474–75. His is probably the 'Duncan archd. of Glasgow' mentioned in 1474. He appears as Archdeacon of Dunkeld 1475–79. He was also Canon of Dunblane and Rector of St. Ternan in Arbuthnott. He served as Comptroller (i.e. responsible for accounts) under James IV. James (15th/16th C.) probably related to Andrew and Robert, who also witnessed the 1511/2 sasine for the Barony of Hawick, the ceremony taking place at the Mote. It is possible he is the 'James Liderdele, chaplainn native of Scotland' recorded in Greenwich in the 1516 'Patent Rolls' of Henry VIII. John (15th C.) notary in Edinburgh who witnessed a document relating to the lands of Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1475/6. He is recorded as 'Jhoanne Luderdale'. Robert (15th/16th C.) first witness to the 1511/2 sasine for giving the Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is recorded as 'domino Roberto Luderdale, capellano', so he was Chaplain, presumably of Hawick, and held a Masters degree. Andrew and James were also witnesses, and so probably brothers or sons. He also witnessed the sasine for the Barony in 1514, listed after Alexander Newton, 'vicario de Hawik'. This suggests he had a subsidiary function to Newton, or was in charge of one of the smaller chapels within the Barony. Probably the same 'domino Roberto Luderdale' was listed in a Glasgow Diocese document in 1510. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1432 to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; there his name is recorded as 'Thoma Luderdale', and he is listed as a Burgess (presumably of Hawick) along with Simon Routledge. He was also 'Thoma de Luderdale' in 1452 when he was among 4 Burgess of Hawick on the list of witnesses to the sasine granting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is recorded in an early Hawick sasine of 1453, where his name was written 'Thomas of Luderdale'. In 1455 he was 'Thomas de Luderdale' when he witnessed a document at St. Mary's relating to the lands of Whitchesters. And in 1456 he was one of the witnesses for another Whitchesters document, where he is listed as 'Thoma de Luderdale' and one of the burgesses (of Hawick presumably) (also spelled 'Luderdale', 'Luderdaill', 'Luderdale', 'Luthirdale', etc.; this may be a variant of 'Lauderdale'; cf. Liddersdale, which may be based on 'Liddesdale', but may in some cases be the same surname).

Lyall (I-ul) n. Joseph C. (19th C.) registrar for Eves Parish in at least the 1860s to 1880s. He also served as Session Clerk and Clerk to the School Board. Thomas 'Tom' (1940–2020) born in the Haig, son of lorry driver Tom and Ina Scott, he attended Trinity and the High School. He was known as a successful rugby player in the back row and as centre for the Y.M. and also played for Hawick R.F.C. He worked Turner & Rutherfords, Braemar and John Laing, ending up as knitting manager. He married Georgie Collins and they had children Julie, Kirsty and Kendra.

Lynd (I-and) pres. part., arch. lying – '…with the pertinentis, liand within the baronie of Braxhelm …'[SB1569], '…for the compositioun of hir teindis of Trowis, liand within the parrochins of Cauers'[SB1574], '…of the said lands of Flex heritable pertainging to him lyand contiguous with and to our Common of Havicke …'[BR1692], '…upon ane tenement of land of his in Hawick, lyand betwixt the land of James Brown on the north part …' [JW] (also written 'liand').

Lydgate (lid-ga) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as 'Adam de Lydgate' in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Several of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where he was from.

lyin money (ll-in-mu-nee) n., arch. unused money – ‘Lyin money or eidl (idle) money = unused capital, or money not invested in any business or enterprise, etc.’ [ECS].

Lyle (lil) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1567 as ‘man and servand’ to David Turnbull of Wauchope. Turnbull was ordered to present him to answer charges of raiding into England. Agnes McDonald nee Robson, ‘Nan’, M.B.E. (1929–2010). Born and lived in Hawick all her life, she had several jobs, including librarian at Newmill. She was associated with many local clubs and charitable organisations, in particular with the Scouting movement along with husband Rob, for which she received an M.B.E. in 1988. She received many honours from the Scouts, including the Silver Wolf, serving as a leader for about 60 years. She gave a talk to the Archaeological Society on the history of Scouting in Hawick. She was also awarded the Paul Harris Fellowship by the Rotary Club and had a village school named after her in Kenya, following her work with the Borders Exploration Group. A memorial cairn was erected on Whitchesters Hill in 2011, with an associated walk. The top of the cairn is inscribed ‘Baden-Powell Do your best. Try and leave this world a little better than you found it’. Her children were Ruth, Joyce and Andrew. John (17th C.) possible name for resident near Leahaugh in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. His name appears to be written ‘Leule’. John (18th/19th C.) John recorded as ‘John Lisle in Denholm’ in 1818 when his marriage to was Jean Turnball was announced in Melrose Parish. Fr. John Stevenson (1850–c.1920) born in Derry, he served in the army, but becoming a convert to Catholicism, he abandoned a military career to train for the priesthood. He was ordained in 1889, became assistant at Falkirk and then served as Hawick’s priest 1892–1912. He was known as a quiet man, but always at the beck and call of his congregation. He personally taught the older pupils in the mornings and held a boy’s club after school. He oversaw the widening of the seatings within the chapel. In failing health, he was transferred to Peebles. Robert 2nd Lord Lyle (d.1497) son of Robert, 1st Lord. He was based in Renfrewshire. He served as ambassador to England from 1472. In 1482 he was charged with treasonable communication with James, 9th Earl of Douglas, but was acquitted. He gained some of the Earl of Angus’ lands in 1485. In 1488 he was assigned the lease of Sundhope in the Yarrow valley and gave up the lease on ‘Garlachleuch et Blakhous’. He was one of the Justiciars at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh in 1493 and in Jedburgh and Selkirk in 1494. He was involved with negotiations with James III before the Battle of Sauchieburn (where he was probably present) and afterwards when James IV was crowned, for whom he served as Royal Justiciar. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Robert S. ‘Rob’ (1921/2–91) brought up in Hawick, he worked with Hawick Hosiery Co., but then became an apprentice with Ingles the joiners. He served in the R.A.F. in WWII and later became a cabinet maker with Temples House Finishers. He then trained at Moray House and became a High School woodwork teacher for the next 30 years. While there he started the High School Pipe Band and was also a guidance teacher. He was also a founder member of the Trades rugby team. He was a piper with the Home Guard, Ex-Servicemen’s and Scout Pipe Bands (which he restarted in 1972). He was heavily involved with the Scout movement for most of his life, becoming Group Scout Leader for Hawick, Assistant District Commissioner for Roxburgh and Border Scout Mountain Adviser. He was awarded the Medal of Merit in 1972 and the Silver Acorn by the Chief Scout in 1980. In 1954 he married Nan Robson. Walter (16th C.) ‘exhorter’ of Southdean Parish in 1567. Perhaps the same Walter (although recorded as ‘Pyle’) was exhorter at Foulden in 1563; it is possible that ‘Foulden’ is an error for ‘Souden’. William (b.1796/7) from Melrose, he was a farm steward in the Hawick area. In 1851 he was living at ‘Pitt Cottage’, near Branxholme Braes. His wife was Helen, and they had children, John, Thomas, William, Margaret and Alexander. William (1833–1904) co-founder of Lyle & Scott’s. Born in Hawick, he initially travelled for William Laidlaw & Sons, then managed Wilson & Armstrong’s. Along with Walter Scott he founded Lyle & Scott as a hosiery manufacturers in 1874/5, running the company alone after Scott died in 1892. Not prominent in public life, nevertheless he was a manager of the Cottage Hospital and benefactor of the Jubilee Nursing Scheme, as well as being Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was an elder at St. Andrew’s Free Church and a staunch Liberal. A keen outdoor sportsman, he tenanted the Pilmuir shootings for many years. He was also a keen gardener, as attested by the grounds at his home, Kildowan. He married Agnes, daughter of weaver Charles Scott; she died in 1899, aged 68.
Lyle an Scott’s

and was a cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray (formerly written ‘Lisle’ and variants).

Lyle an Scott’s (lil-in-skots) n. knitwear company with main factory on Liddesdale Road. It was established by William Lyle and Walter Scott as a hosiery manufacturers in 1874, the pair having previously worked as managers in other factories. The firm once had premises on Lothian Street (certainly in the early 1900s), and this was probably the original factory, built for them by Marchall & Son, with designs and joinery by A. Inglis & SOn. The firm became a limited company in 1897. The company bought the Liddesdale Road property around 1939, but it was taken over by the War Department and used as a munitions factory until after the War. Like other companies, it moved into twin-sets and other fashion knitwear by the mid-20th century. In 1938 they made an agreement with Cooper’s in the United States to be the sole British manufacturer of Jockey Y-front underwear. There were boom years in the 1950s with the production of Y-fronts, and in the 1960s with highly patterned golfwear. Since 1975 the company has had a Royal Warrant by appointment to HRH the Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh. The company merged with Wolsey Ltd. in 1964 and became part of the Courtauld’s Group in 1967. The company trademark is a golden eagle. The company’s additional premises at Burnfoot were vacated in the 1990s and destroyed in a fire in 2005.

Lyle an Scott’s Brig (lil-in-scots-brig) n. footbridge across the Slitrig connecting the Back Braes to a footpath behind the Lyle & Scott’s factory on Liddesdale Road. It was built in about 1957 by an engineering company from Monmouth, under the instruction of Adam Balmer, chief engineer of the factory. There had previously been flat stepping stones there, which were useful when the river was low. With the expansion into Y-fronts the company built the bridge to assist its workers from the West-end (also sometimes called ‘the Backbrae Fitbrig’).

Lymiecleuch (li-meekloogch) n. farm on the side road south-west of Teviothead. In 1670 it was purchased from William Elliott, younger of Stobs, by Simon Elliott of the Binks and Swinside, William Elliott of Unthank, and William’s son Adam. At that time it included the lands of Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch. In 1678 it was valued at £1000 and part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs. The precise ownership in the late 17th century is complicated. Sir William Elliott of Stobs and William Elliot paid the land tax in 1678 for their halves of the lands, each valued at £500. Adam Elliot of Mosspecble gained a charter of the lands in 1673, but lost them in 1687. In that year Sir William Elliott of Stobs, issued a charter to his brother John for these lands, but John did not gain possession until 1695. About 1695 William and Robert Elliot of Lymiecleuch and Penchrise were charged with theft by John Riddell of Haining; failing to appear, their surety, Gilbert Elliott of Stobs paid the fine, and after a further payment acquired both farms. Adam Elliot of Lymiecleuch was involved in a legal action with Anna Duches of Buccleuch in the period 1698–1703. Adam Elliot was there in 1705, Walter Scott in 1708, James Telfer in 1717 and James Jardine in 1719. William Pott was herd there in 1727, Thomas Davidson was there in 1730 and John Rae in 1731. In 1788 it was valued at £1000 and owned by Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs. £1633 6s 8d Thomas Telfer and William Nixon were farmers there in 1797. James Elliot was farmer there in 1841 and John Clerk in 1868. It was used as a shooting lodge in the late 19th century. The hill above is called Limie Hill, and the Limie Sike joins the Lymiecleuch Burn there (also spelled ‘Limiecleuch’ ‘Lymiecleuch’ and ‘Lymiecleugh’; it is ‘Limeycleuch’ ‘and Limiecleugh’ in 1705 and ‘Lymeicleuch’ about 1700. ’Lymeicleuch’ in 1717, ‘Lymiecleuch’ in 1797 and ‘Limeycleuch’ in 1821; note there is a place of essentially the same name near Canonbie, with which it can be easily confused).

Lymiecleuch Burn (li-meekloogch-burn) n. stream that is formed from the streams of Merrypath Sike, Wrangway Burn and Lang Hope near the farm of Wisp and runs roughly northwards to join the Teviot near Teviothead. Its source is around Pikethaw Hill on the border of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire (it is ‘Lymycleuch Burn’ in 1839).

Lynch’s (lin-cheez) n. toy shop on the north side of the High Street, at No. 19, in the latter part of the 20th century. Also known as ‘J. Lynch’ (pronounced jIl), ‘Miss Lynch’s’ and ‘Pairky Aathing’s’. It closed in 1989 – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for oor tools, Jess McVeeties for rock bools, Lynch’s hed a’ kinds o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pie...’ [IWL].

Lyne (lin) n. farm marked on Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650 and Adair’s c. 1688 manuscript map of the Sheriffdom of Ettrick Forest, between Millsington and Hoscote, on the north side of the Borthwick. This corresponds roughly to the position of Deanburnhaugh. It is probably the same place referred to in several charters and other documents along with Girnwood as ‘Greenwood and Lyne’. In 1488 the lands were leased by Robert Scott from Thomas Turnbull, later leased by the Lords of Home, and sold to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1532/3. The lands were ratified to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1693. It seems likely this was associated with the waterfall at Girnwood Linn, to the west of the farm of Girnwood (it is ‘Lyne’ in 1488).

Lyne (lin) n. parish to the west of Peebles, formerly part of ‘Lyne and Megget’ parish. The Lyne Water flows through the area to join the Tweed. The area contains the remains of an extensive Roman fort from the 2nd century, and a road probably connected it with Newsteads near Melrose.

Lyne (lin) n. William (17th C.) tenant of Goldielands in 1642 when he is recorded as part of an accusation (probably unfounded) of theft in Hawick magistrates court. His wife was Margaret McDougall.

Lynn (lin) n. Richard (19th/20th C.) served as Burgh Foreman for Hawick. In that capacity he lived at 10 Slitrig Crescent. He is probably the ‘Dick’ whose son ran Swinton the builders in Hawick. It is said that just after the Boer War he came across another Hawick man in South Africa, while leaning out of a train window, and although they recognised each other, the train passed before they could talk.

Lynnkie (li-nee) n., ins. name sometimes used for someone from Lynnwood housing estate, usually used derogatorily.

Lynnwood see Lynnwud

Lynnwud (lin-wud) n. Lynnwood, an area in the south-west of Hawick, off the Newcastleton Road, on a flat piece of ground in a loop of the Slitrig. It became a council housing estate on the outskirts of town, built in 1933 and comprising Lynnwood Road and Lynnwood Crescent. Originally a pleasant enough residential area, it grew to be infamous, becoming synonymous with the least desirable elements within the town, the area being renamed Liddesdale in an attempt to reinvent the area. It fell into a state of disrepair and was largely demolished in 1980-81, being completely levelled in 1991 to make way for new housing. After a public vote the area was renamed Lynnwood again – ‘The plaintive sound is wafted on the gale, And Lynnwood’s sighs are heard to join the wail’ [WNK]. ‘Oh Lynnwood guards the South approach, Drumlanrig holds the West . . . ’ [NM], ‘Since Stepehenson’s infernal din Came scream’ doon frae Linwood Linn . . . ’ [WP] (named for the ‘linn’, i.e. stream in a ravine, and wood that stood there; sometimes spelled with one ‘n’, and sometimes with an ‘i’).

Lynnwud Brig (lin-wud-brig) n. Lynnwood Bridge, name sometimes used for the bridge across the Slitrig to Lynnwood House. It may also refer to the bridge behind Lyle & Scott’s factory, connecting Liddesdale Road with the ‘Back Braes’. A footbridge near there, sometimes called ‘Nixon’s Brig’, was washed away in the 1846 flood.

Lynnwud Cauld (lin-wud-kawld) n. Lynnwood Cauld, the weir built upstream from Lynnwood, by Slitrig Viaduct, which once helped supply the water power for Lynnwood Mill. It was sometimes known as ‘Nixon’s Cauld’. It was partly swept away in the flood of 1846.

Lynnwud Crescent (lin-wud-kre-sin’) n. Lynnwood Crescent, street at the south east end of town, named after the nearby stream and wood, with the houses built in 1933. It was renamed Liddesdale Road in 1971 and by 1991 the houses has been demolished and the site cleared, with new housing appearing from 2001.

Lynnwud Hoose (lin-wud-hoos) n. Lynnwood House, built for William Nixon on the western bank of the Slitrig north of the ‘Scaur’. It is a large white house on the right-hand side of the road driving out of Hawick, and is now split into flats. It was certainly built before 1841 and William Nixon was still recorded there in 1868. Originally the house was reached via a drive that crossed a ford over the Slitrig, but in 1878 a bridge was erected and the gate lodge built, along with landscaping of the gardens. During WWII it was used as a hostel for women war workers.

Lynnwud Ludge (lin-wud-luj) n. gate house for Lynnwood House at 10 Liddesdale Road. It was probably built in 1878 at the same time as the bridge over the Slitrig to the main house. It is a single-storey house with a rectangular plan, but with overhanging eaves and an attic gable.

Lynnwud Mill (lin-wud-mil) n. Lynnwood Mill, hosiery mill at Lynnwood, built by John Nixon & Sons, with the first construction perhaps being as early as 1803. Before it was built the spun wool was sent to Galashiels for carding; but the new factory enabled the spinning and carding to be carried out in one place. The factory was probably extended during the days of William Nixon, and the 1858 Ordnance Survey map clearly shows the associated gasometer and ‘tenter fields’. The mill was sold to Laidlaws in 1864. There was a serious fire there in 1869, with rebuilding afterwards. It was a prominent factory throughout the 19th century, but closed at the beginning of the 20th. Water power was provided by a short lade, fed from Lynnwood Cauld. It was demolished in 1933 to make way for the Lynnwood housing scheme – ‘While fashion’d fair and wardly gear May charm whae’er they will, Gi’e me my ain, my bonnie Jean, – The lass o’ Lynnwood Mill’ [JT] (also sometimes ‘Lynnwood Mills’).

Lynnwood Road (lin-wud-rōd) n. Lynnwood Road, name given for the continuation of Slitrig Crescent, being the beginning of the B6399 leading to Newcastleton. The mill lade used to pass along the east side of the road, in front of all the houses there. The name was given when new houses were built in 1933, and came from the nearby stream and wood. It was renamed Liddesdale Road in 1971, had new houses built in 1973, and the houses at the southern end were demolished in 1982.

Lynnwood Wud (lin-wud-wud) n. name sometimes used for the wood above Lynnwood, or possibly for the wood that was formerly at Lynnwood before development.

John (d.c.1423) cleric who was proposed as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1418. This was done by James I, while he was in captivity. Other men held the Archdeaconry at about the same time, however, he continued to retain some rights until his death. John (1431–1497) son of Patrick, he was 3rd Lord Glamis, succeeding his brother in 1486. He attended university, perhaps in Paris, and was appointed as Justiciar North of the Forth. He was one of the Justiciars at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh and Selkirk in 1494. He married Elizabeth Scrymgeour and was succeeded by his eldest son, John. Three other sons of his were killed at Flodden. Matthew (19th C.) brother of Richard. Matthew (19th C.) Hawick stockingmaker, with a small shop near Hawick Mill. He apparently figured out how to make improvements so that silk and wool for men’s coats could be made using the stocking frame. He was given £40 from the Board of Trade for this innovation. He sold a cloak to the Duchess of Buccleuch, then made one for the Duke of York, which used lamb’s wool in a tartan pattern. This was exhibited in the Town Hall, following which the Duke ordered a second. He then made a cloak of blue silk and scarlet wool for King George IV and was at Dalkeith House when it was presented to him in 1822. There is a sketch of him by Alexander Michie. He could have been the Matthew, married to Janet Norrie, whose son Matthew was born in Hawick in 1796. The death of Matthew, son to stocking-maker Matthew, is recorded in Hawick in 1816. Richard (19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1863 he presented to the Museum a Roman coin that was found when the Auld Brig was demolished in 1851. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘fabro farraris’ (i.e. horseshoe maker or blacksmith) in Hawick in a list of creditors of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch, in 1552. Robert (b.1850) married Joan Currie and had 8 children in Hawick. They were: Catherine (b.1873); Andrew (b.1875); William (b.1877); Jessie (b.1879); Daniel (b.1881); James (b.1885); Robert (b.1885), possibly a twin of James; and Mary (b.1890) (formerly spelled ‘Lion’).

Lyons (H-inz) n. Deborah ‘Debbie’ singer with the Hawick Amateur Operatic Society and band 3D. In 2005 she was the first woman to sing at the Common Riding Dinner.

M’ (muk) n. old written variant of ‘Mac’ or ‘Mc’, e.g. in ‘Rev. John M’Rae, D.D.’.

ma (maw) adj. my – ‘Where is ma cornet? Get mounted an’ ride!’ [JEDM], ‘...ma hoose upon the rock’ [JEDM], ‘And now that Ah’ve come tae the end o’ ma sang ...’ [WAP], ‘For fate decreed that Hawick Among the hills should be ma hame’ [IWL], ‘The true Objective Singular ma is now almost obsolete, except among old people, the plural ‘us’ being regularly used instead’ [JAHM].

Ma Baa (maw-baw) n. nickname for Jackie Wright.

Maben (mä-ben) n. Anne Armstrong (b.1819) born in Southdean Parish, daughter of schoolmaster Thomas. In 1849 she became the 2nd wife of farmer James. She took over the running of Town-o-Rule farm after the death of her husband. In 1861 she was recorded there as farmer of 230 acres, employing 7 labourers. Her son William eventually took over the farm.

Bryden minister of Castleton Parish from 1965. He was famously arrested for leading a protest against the closing of the Waverley Line, blocking the level crossing in Newcastleton for the last train. He was previously in the Orkneys, where he led a male voice choir, which released a record ‘Men of Orkney’. James (1817–58) farmer at Town-o-Rule, son of shepherd William and Jane Hall. He married Elizabeth Douglas in 1844 and in 1849 he married his 2nd wife, Anne Rutherford Armstrong. His children included: William, who later farmed at Town-o-Rule; Sarah; and Jane, who married William Whillans. Robert (19th/20th C.) coal merchant in Hawick. He retired in 1914 and the firm was continued by his sons Walter and Mabonlaw.

Mabonlaw (mä-bin-law) n. farm above Harden, once part of the estate of the Scotts of Harden, it had more recently been available as a rental cottage. It stands near the Marchelyton Burn, and the hill above, presumably Mabon Law, reaches a height of 256 m and contains a fort, about 55 m by 25 m, with a single rampart and external ditches. It was part of the Harden estate from the 16th to 19th centuries, being valued in 1811 (along with ‘Highchesters Whinny Park’) at £312. In 1576 it was ‘infefted’ to Marion Scott (‘the Flower of Yarrow’) as part of the marriage agreement with Walter Scott (later ‘Auld Wat’) of Harden. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Isobel Briggs, John Briggs, Helen Lunn, John White, Janet Turnbull, Bessie White, Robert Rule, Bessie Henderson, James Riddell, Janet Miller, John Wilson, Jean Scott, George Lawson, Margaret Wilson, James Telfer, Janet Easton, John Telfer and Jeanie Brand. John Thomson, was tenant there in 1684, when he was declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. The area was part of Wilton Parish until transferred to Roberton in 1690. It was included among lands inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester from his father Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1694. There were 8 separate households listed there in 1694, including 3 Riddells. John Leithhead was recorded there in 1702. Thomas Anderson was there in 1710, James Wilson in 1710–23, Adam Hardie in at least 1711–1713, Walter Riddell and William Beattie in 1717, William Nichol in 1718–23, Janet Sweet in 1720, William Elliot in 1721–27, John Nichol in 1723, Thomas Turnbull in 1725 and Andrew Chisholme in 1728. It may have been sold by Walter Scott of Harden about 1754. The headlands with Todshaw were divided in 1757. James Hume was living there in 1757, Robert Turnbull in 1763–66, William Laidlaw in 1764–67 and Thomas Nichol in 1766, Walter Elliot in 1771, David Laidlaw in 1772, John Watson in 1773 and William Lunn in 1774. In 1779 it was among lands whose liferent was sold by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Murray’s, with the poem being set to music by Francis George Scott. Scott was one of his close friends, and set many of his verses to music, as well as helping him to compile various writings into ‘A Drunk Man Looks at the Thistle’. A modern monument to him was erected on Whita Hill in 1988.
Mabonlaw Moss

MacDonald

‘Archie’ (1904–83) Liberal M.P. for Roxburgh & Selkirkshire 1950–51. He won with a large majority over Lord William Scott in a by-election, but the next year was defeated by C.E.M. Donaldson by only 829 votes. His name is often spelled ‘Macdonald’. James Ronald (1858–1937) born in St. Andrews, son of James and Catherine. He was educated at Madras College, St. Andrews University and Edinburgh University, where he graduated M.A. in 1880 and was licensed to preach in 1892. He became licentiate at Saughtree Kirk in 1892 and left in 1902 to become assistant and then minister at Eskdalemuir. He married Emily Sophia Nichols. Jessie Stoddart M. (d.2004) wrote ‘The Place-names of Roxburghshire’ (1991) which was started as a thesis project when she was a student and completed for a Transactions article and this book. It mainly focuses on names for which there is evidence before 1600 (and an addendum is lodged with the Borders Archive). She also wrote ‘Bowden Kirk, 1128–1978’ (1978 and 1994). She was a Headmistress at James Gillespie’s in Edinburgh, and retired to Bowden. John (b.1851/2) from Urry in Ross-shire, he was Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh Police from about 1878 until 1902. He also acted as Sanitary Inspector, Public Prosecutor and Fire Master. In addition he was Captain of the Golf Club. He can be seen with the Fire Brigade in a photo of 1889. He used to ride at the head of the Common Riding Procession, and can be seen in the Gaylor film clip of 1899. Mr. ?? Police Superintendent in Hawick in the 1970s/80s. Robert (b.1817/8) from Muckhart in Perthshire, he was a grocer and wine merchant at about 6 Howegate in 1851. He was already a widower, with daughters Janet W. and Jane M. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howe-gate, as well as seedsmen, ‘agent for Bigg’s sheep dipping compound’ and ‘tallow chandler’. Col. William of Powderhall and Ormiston (19th C.), J.P., officer of the Scots Greys who were used to control riots surrounding elections in Roxburghshire in the 1830s. It is said that in 1836, when he was in Hawick to attend a dinner given for Lord Minto, the open carriage in which he was leaving with his family was followed for about a mile out of town, with a crowd pelting it with mud. He led the troop who were in Hawick to keep the peace at the election of 1837. He attacked the mob along with several special constables, losing his hat and being struck by a stone on the forehead in the doorway of 3 Sandbel. He also attended the 1839 banquet held at Branxholme to honour the Duke of Buccleuch. He subscribed to 4 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, when he was already ‘of Ormiston’. He is listed on the 1837 electoral roll, having acquired Ormiston through marriage. He also held lands in Cavers Parish. He served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. He was also a Vice-President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He owned Ormiston House just outside Hawick, and occupied it in the Autumn months (for hunting), with Provost Wilson occupying it for the rest of the year. His children included Alexander and John James, also listed as joint life-renters in 1835. His wife ‘Mrs. Margaret F. McDonald or Muir’ was listed as owner of Ormiston in about 1874.

Macdowall see McDougall

MacDowall (muk-dow-ul) n. Fergus (15th C.) held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1465. He was a direct appointee by the Pope, and not by the monks of Melrose that had made some previous appointments. He is probably the Fergus who witnessed a few charters in 1463 and perhaps the same ‘Fergusio Macdowell’ recorded on a charters for lands in Wigtown in 1508. Perhaps 2 men are conflated here: one Fergus, Lord Register and Rector of Wigtown, who was the 2nd son of Uchtred Macdowall, 7th of Garthland; and the other the son of Dungald, who is mentioned in letter of marriage of 1465/6 (see also McDougall).

Macfee (muk-fee) n. William G. (19th/20th C.) from Dennistoun, Glasgow. He preached for several months in the ‘Ern Kirk’ in Wilton in 1889. The congregation were keen for him to become their minister, but he was ordained at Pendleton Church in Manchester, went to Partick in 1895 and then moved to a better climate for his health in 1900.

MacGill (nu-gil) n. Rev. John White (1867–1937) born in Musselburgh, son of a minister, he graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1889 and was licensed by Dalkeith Presbytery in 1892. He was assistant at Alexandria, North Berwick and St. Margaret’s (Edinburgh), before being ordained at St. Catherine’s, British Guiana in 1897. In 1924 he was translated to Inverallochy and then became minister of Saughtree kirk in 1925. However, he remained only 2 years before moving to Caerlaverock. He married Edith Sarah Luxton Wexford, and they had 2 children (also McGill).

MacGregor (mu-gre-gur) n. Alexander (19th C.) teacher at Saughtree school in the mid-1860s. He took over from James Telfer, who had been teacher there for almost 30 years. He is probably the same as Rev. Alexander, who graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1861, was ordained as minister of Haggis in 1865 and was at Inverkeithing and Rosyth from 1866. Augustus Wallace, W.S. (1867–1937) son of Rev. John and grandson of the Rev. J.A. Wallace. He was employed by Purdom’s in Hawick for 16 years and was later a partner of Auld & MacDonald, W.S.
He was a member of the Scottish Zoological Society and the Hawick Archaeological Society, and was also known as a stamp collector (jointly editing a catalogue on the Malay States). He also edited the book ‘Fifty Years of Lawn Tennis in Scotland’ (1927). It is said that he was more interested in tennis than employment, and was a notable player in his youth. He served as a Captain in the K.O.S.B. in WWI, although he was never posted abroad. He also helped execute Hawick’s WWI Roll of Honour. He died in Hawick. Donald (b.1856) from Inverness, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1878, M.B. from Edinburgh in 1884 and M.D. in 1886. He was at Chester-Le-Street and Ketteringham, before coming to the Hawick area. He lived in Denholm in the 1880s and 1890s. In 1887 he married Jessie, daughter of J.H. Mundell of Mundeville Park, Bournemouth. Their children included Donald Hamilton (d.1918, who fought with the Gordon Highlanders) and Marjorie S. John (18th C.) listed as footman at Borthwickbrae in 1792 and 1793, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. Rev. John (1824-73) born in Golspie, Sutherland, he studied at New College, Edinburgh 1850-54. He assisted at Rothsay and the Free New North Church in Edinburgh, was ordained at Kirkurd in Peeblesshire and became minister of Hawick Free Kirk (i.e. St. George’s) in 1865, having been called in 1864. He was apparently a great biblical scholar. In 1865 he married Rev. Wallace’s eldest daughter, Wilhelmina Hepburn; however, she died of small-pox in 1869. He became ill in 1879 and was given 6 months leave, but died within a couple of months, leaving his only child Augustus Wallace (b.1867) an orphan. Mr. ?? (18th C.) dance-master who hired out part of the Hawick Town House in order to give lessons in 1794. He probably went round other Border towns.

Machell (ma-kel) n. Nicholas (19th C.) listed as a carrier’s agent on the Backdamgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His carts went to Carlisle Edinburgh and parts of Lanarkshire from the Backdamgate every Monday and Thursday. He married Mary Hunter in Hawick in 1838. Although he is unrecorded after that, it may be that his surname was really ‘Maxwell’ or ‘Mitchell’, for example.

Machine (ma-shen) n., arch. a passenger vehicle, small carriage, motor car – ‘...an A ettit at fimbinsome machine tiserr ma ends’ [ECS].

MacIntyre (mau-kin-tr) n. Charles (18th C.) footman at Riddell in 1794, when he was working for Lady Riddell. Rev. Duncan (1883-1969) son of an Inverness Headmaster, he trained for the Episcopalian ministry, being ordained in 1910. He served as Curate in Hawick that same year before moving to Glasgow. He was later Rector in Dumfries and at Aberfeldy and Strathtay.

Mack (mawk) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm, where he was recorded in 1718 and 1722. His children included Jane (b.1718); and John (b.1722). Other children, baptised in Cavers, who could be his include Margaret (b.1707) and Adam (b.1711). Adam (18th C.) from Cavers Parish, he married Margaret Henderson in Robertson in 1749. John (b.1825) son of John and Mary Colledge. He was a grocer and mason in Denholm. He was recorded around Canongate in 1861. In 1850 in Hobkirk Parish he married Jane Bane, and their children included: Janet (b.1851); Mary (b.1853); Emily (b.1856): Agnes; and John (b.1861). In 1867 he secondly married married Euphemia Dickson (who was a widow of John Rutherford), and had a second family: Jane (b.1868); Catherine (b.1870); Robert Dickson (b.1871); and Grace (b.1873). She kept a shop in Denholm, which sold ‘taffy’, scones, etc. William (16th C.) listed as ‘William Mak’, along with 15 other people who occupied Newton in Bedrule in 1531 (it is unclear precisely what his surname was).

Mackay (mu-kI) n. Daniel Neil ‘Neil’ (1928–96) born at 10 Slitrig Crescent, where his father was Burgh Foreman, he was son of draper William Gibson. He was educated at Hawick High School and the Royal High School in Edinburgh and served with the Royal Signals in Sri Lanka. On returning to Hawick he ran the family draper’s shop in Croft Road, and later moved it to North Bridge Street, near the Baptist Opening. He was elected Town Councillor in 1969 and served the Town as Dean of Guild. He was also a Justice of the Peace and later a county councillor, as well as Vice-Chairman of Roxburgh District Council until 1980. He was additionally Chairman of Hawick Chamber of Trade and was an instigator for the twinning of Hawick with Baillieu. He was also a member of Lodge St. John 111. He was a keen writer, originating the ‘Janus’ column in the Hawick News. He also played piano and wrote the song ‘Home By Burnfoot’. He was Town Councillor for Burnfoot Ward when he wrote the song, which won a contest set by Burnfoot Residents’ Association. He died at 5 Wilton Glebe and is buried in Wilton Cemetery. Rev. Donald Mackenzie (1817–75) son of Dr. George from Rafford, Moray, he studied in Aberdeen and Edinburgh. He was assistant at Drainie (Lossiemouth) and became a Free Kirk minister there in 1844. He resigned because of ill-health in 1852, but accepted a call to Newcastleton Free Kirk in 1856. He remained until 1860, when he moved to Rafford as his father’s successor. He married Sophia Wood in Dumfries in 1861, but they appear to have had no children. Rev. Donald from Dalrymple, he became minister at Burnfoot in 1966. Hugh Hawick’s deputy librarian for many years, and long-time committee member of the Archaological Society. He moved to Hawick in 1974. He wrote the introduction to the collection of David Hill’s writings in 2011. James W. (19th C.) teacher at Lilliesleaf School in the 1860s. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish. Neil see Daniel Neil. William (19th C.) saddler recorded on Douglas Square in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He could be the same man as the Irish railway worker residing in the village in 1861 (also written ‘MacKay’).

Mackenzie (mu-ken-zee) n. Rev. Alexander (18th C.) minister from Edinbrugh. He married Margaret, daughter of Dr. William Rutherford of Barnhills. His wife inherited 1/3 of Barnhills, and he purchased the other 2/3 from his sisters-in-law, Helen and Jean in the late 1730s. He also held lands at Auldsmeeton. In 1749 Barnhills was sold to John Callender, W.S., then immediately to John Mackenzie (possibly a relative) of Devlin and then Rev. Walter Stewart, minister of Ashkirk. Elizabeth Toll-keeper and early member of Allars Kirk. Rev. George Omund (1893–1943) son of John and Janet Ormond, he was educated at George Watson’s and Edinburgh University. He was licensed in 1922, became assistant at Kirkintilloch and was translated from Methil to become minister of Minto Kirk in 1927. He demitted in 1935 and was admitted to Nicolson Street Church, Edinburgh, in 1939. He married Isabella Jopp Spence and their children were: Ian Gordon (1916–80); Thomas Spence Seaforth (1917–23); George Fingal (1920–45), killed when his ship was torpedoed; Gilbert Omund (1921–2003); Kenneth Macbeth (1923–1992); and Ella Jean Christine (b.1926). James (d.1744) son of George, Earl of Cromarty. He was known as Lord Royston. He was one of the Commissioners for letting the Duchess of Buccleuch’s lands in Scotland, serving in this capacity 1711–31. In 1725 the Hawick Kirk Session wrote to him asking for assistance with the many poor people in the Parish. There are many letters in existence from the Duchess to him, covering that time period. In about 1730 she wrote about several matters including thanking him ‘for buying that peec of ground in Hanick. ’Tis most convenent for me of anie thing belonging to that litll howse’ (presumably referring to land adjacent to Drumlanrig’s Tower). Rev. Laurence (1816–69) son of Andrew of Greenburn. He studied at St. Andrews University 1831–9, and was a Probationer within Perth Presbytery for many years before being ordained as a minister. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Gilbert, Earl of Minto in 1843 after John Edmondston walked out with much of the congregation at the Disruption. He was deprived in 1854 and died unmarried in Crieff (see also McKenzie).

Mackintosh (ma-kin-tosh) n. Angus (19th C.) factor to the Earl of Minto in the 1860s. He thus served as Chairman of the Parochial Board. He lived at Minto Cleuchhead, but must have taken over from Ephraim Selby after 1861. William (18th C.) house servant at Synton in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Alexander Scott of Synton (also spelled ‘McIntosh’ and variants).

Mack-like (mawk-lik) adj., arch. neat, tidy.

Macksie (mawk-sid) n. farm a little to the east of Hobkirk and Wolfelee, once part of the Barony of Abbotrule. Peter Turnbull is recorded there in 1502. It was acquired by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey on 1569. The superiority was still with the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. David Turnbull was there in 1611, Patrick Turnbull in 1618 and Lawrence Turnbull in 1622. It is probably the ‘Laird of Toft’s Turnbull’s . . . side’ recorded in the 1643 county valuation, valued at £100; Gavin Turnbull was also there (with land valued at £24) and Janet Home was liferenter (with land valued at £50). It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Archibald Shiel was a tenant there in 1684 when listed as a fugitive for attending conventicles. John Turnbull and James Oliver were tenant there in 1694, with William Shiel, Margaret Dickson, William Scott and Thomas Turnbull all listed as cottars. It was sold by William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751, becoming part of the Wolfelee estate for the next century and a half. It was listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1788 (in also 1811), with a value (along with Blackcleuchmouth) of £166 15s 4d. It was briefly lived in by James, the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee, while the main house was being built in the 1820s, and again by Mrs. Elliot of Wolfelee during renovations in 1862. There were Turnbells there in early 17th century and the tenant was John Mair in the mid-17th century, John Sharp in the mid-18th century and Turnbells again in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. The farm was quite extensive and for a fraction of the 19th century was let out as grassland. Robert Allan was farmer in 1868. Tenants in the late 19th and early 20th centuries were Mr. Clark and then Mr. Logan. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. There was also once a toll-bar on the road near here (also spelled ‘Maxside’ and variants, it was ‘maxsyd’ in 1502, ‘Maxsyde’ in 1569, ‘Maxsyde’ in 1588, ‘M’syd’ in 1618, ‘Maksyde’ in 1626, ‘Machsyde’ in 1653, ‘Macksyd’ in 1670, ‘Mac-side’ in 1684, ‘Macksyde’ and ‘maxside’ in 1694 and ‘Maxside’ in 1797; it occurs on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Maxsyd’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Maxsyde’, although is marked too far north; the origin of the name is probably ‘the slope belonging to Maccus’, from a variant of the personal name Magnus, cf. ‘Maxpoffle’ and ‘Maxwell-stur’ (19th C.).

Mackside Moss (mawk-s{"u}d-mos) n. former common near Mackside. Part of the land there was used for the manse of Wolfelee Free Kirk.

Macksideshaw (mawk-s{"u}d-shaw) n. former steading near Mackside. Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs had a charter of the lands (along with Wells) in 1659. It was later part of the estate of Wolfelee (recorded in 1659 and 1730).

Mackside Toll Bar (mawk-s{"u}d-t{"o}l-bawr) n. former toll-house near Mackside, on the Wolfelee estate. There were Thomsons there in the late 1800s.

MacLean (mu-kl{"a}n) n. Sorley (1911–96) Scottish poet, born on Raasay. He wrote extensively in Gaelic as well as English, had sympathy with far-left politics and served in the Army in North Africa during WWII. He came to Hawick in October 1939 to teach evacuees, and stayed until about the following June. During this period he wrote most of his renowned ‘D{"a}nn do Eimhir’ poems.

MacLeod (muk-lowd) n. Scott (1979–) born in Hawick and educated at the High School, he was a lock in rugby. He played basketball and golf at school, but joined the Trades at the age of 20. He then played for Hawick R.F.C. He joined the Border Reivers in 2002, but left to play for Welsh rugby team the Scarlets and then for Edinburgh Rugby, before moving to Japanese side Kobe Kobelco Steelers and then the Newcastle Falcons. He was first capped for Scotland in 2004 and has 24 caps, including 2 Calcutta Cup wins. He retired from playing in the 2015/6 season and started coaching (also MacLeod).

written 'Catherine'. She lived at Wauchope after her husband's death, and is recorded as proprietor there in a directory of 1868. She later moved to Pinnaclehill, near Kelso. Thomas J.P. (1816–62) of Wauchope and Pinnaclehill, eldest son of Walter the 4th Laird. He was educated at Loretto, trained as a lawyer, apprenticed to Laurence Davidson and Thomas Syme, and became Writer to the Signet in 1838. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1841. In 1844 he married Katherine Jane, daughter of Capt. Browne Roberts from Kent (who had been High Sheriff of Calcutta); his sister-in-law Margaret Amelia Roberts later married his brother Charles of Langlee. They lived in Edinburgh and then at Harwood House, where most of his family was born. Quiet in manner, it is said that the secluded country life suited him. He succeeded to Wauchope after the death of his father in 1857 and moved there. He also held part of Weensland that had previously belonged to Archibald Dickson. He assumed the Macmillan surname after inheriting his maternal grandfather's estate of Shorthope. His children were: Walter, who died in infancy; another Walter, who succeeded; Arthur Francis; Edith Marion, who married Maj.-Gen. Frederick Edward Sotheby from Northamptonshire; Marion Maude, who died unmarried; and Katherine Margaret, died young after joining a sisterhood in England. Thomas Alexander Frederick (1881–c.1952) 7th Laird of Wauchope and Pinnaclehill, son of Walter. He was educated at Eton and trained as an English lawyer. He let Wauchope out for shooting. He sold it about 1936. He married Karen Anna Erichsen in 1912 and secondly in 1918 married Enid Cynthia Paine. His son was Walter Theodore Robin. Walter (1848–1901) 6th Laird of Wauchope and also of Pinnaclehill, son of Thomas. He was born in Edinburgh and educated at Harrow and Cambridge University. He became Lieutenant in the 6th Dragoon Guards and later served as Captain of the Scottish Borderers Militia, based in Dumfries. He had a new house built at Wauchope about 1875. Regarded as reserved like his father, he was fond of reading and also rode with the Blackmoorvale hounds. He was Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire and Chairman of the Hobkirk School Board. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1869. In about 1874 he is recorded as owner of the estate of Wauchope. In 1888 he was the first County Councillor elected for Hobkirk Parish. He left Wauchope for Bournemouth due to failing health, and died there. In 1876 he married Antoinetta, eldest daughter of Theodore Henry Dury of Bonsall, Derbyshire. His children were: Thomas Arthur Frederick; and Cecille Margaret, who married Cmdr. James Tancred of the Royal Navy.

Macmorland (muk-mör-lind) n. John Peter (1839–93) son of Peterm minister of North Berwick, he was educated in Edinburgh, graduating with his B.D. in 1865. He was licensed by Dunbar Presbytery and became minister of Minto Kirk in 1865. He married Elizabeth Macdonald (who died in 1917), daughter of Eaglesfield Bradshaw Smith of Blackwood House and their only child was Elizabeth Philadelphia Macdonald Lockhart, who married William Higgin of Belfast. Alexander Galloway became his assistant and successor in 1878, and he died in Switzerland (also written 'McMorland').

Macmorrin (muk-mor-rin) n. William (d.c.1408) cleric of Glasgow Diocese, whose name has variant spellings, such as 'McMoyn'. He held the position of Archdeacon of Teviotdale sometime shortly before 1408. He may also have been Archdeacon of Glasgow in about 1403.

MacNee (muk-nee) n. Daniel (d.c.1860) preacher at Teviothead from 1847, probably until it became a new Parish in 1850. He then emigrated to Hamilton, Ontario, but later returned to Scotland and died in Edinburgh. George Fraser (1863–1905) born in Wilton, son of Robert and Jemima Fraser. He was a student teacher at Buccleuch School, before moving to Edinburgh where he became Secretary to the Church of Scotland Committee on Education. He was also Vice-President of the Edinburgh Borders Union, organising their Hawick nights. He may have written the article on Hawick Common Riding for the Edinburgh Despatch in 1891. He presented the Cornet with a new Sash in 1898 (on behalf of Teries in Edinburgh), and was a member of the Callants' and Archaeological Clubs. A keen walker of Border hills, he once walked from Hawick to Newcastle in a single day. He also walked Hadrian's Wall extensively and gave illustrated lectures on it. He was also a keen Volunteer, becoming Captain of College Company 4th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots. He was said to be of a happy and generous disposition and have a boyish enthusiasm for his native town. He died in a shooting accident (his trigger apparently caught on a twig when he was shooting rabbits at Corstorphine) and was buried with military honours in the Wellogate. The MacNee Fountain was erected in his memory by public subscription.
the MacNee Fountain

the MacNee Fountain (thu-muk-ne-fown'-in) n. ornate grey granite drinking fountain in Wilton Lodge Park, near Langlands Bridge. It was erected by public subscription in 1906 in memory of George Fraser MacNee.

MacNeill (muk-neel) n. Jessie (1853–1922) younger daughter of Bedrule Schoolmaster William. From 1882 she assisted her father as sewing mistress. After his death in 1893 she stayed on for a short time, but then became sick-nurse for a farmer in Southdean called Riddell. Late in life she married Denholm postman Hugh Rigby.

William (1814–1893) from Tranent in East Lothian, son of David and Frances Fraser. He became teacher at Longniddry in 1844 and then was teacher at Cogsmill from 1849. A few years later he moved to Bedrule School, where he was schoolmaster for 38 years. He also served as Registrar for the Parish, as well as Session Clerk, Inspector of the Poor and Clerk of the School Board. In 1843 he married Helen Imrie (who died in 1878). Their children included: Mary (b.1844); David (b.1845); Frances (b.1847), who married Archibald Stewart; Alexander (b.1849); Helen (b.1851), who married William Cairns Robinson; Jessie (b.1853), who married Hugh J. Rigby of Denholm; and William (b.1857), who died in his teens. His wife worked as an assistant at Bedrule School, but after her death he was denied a request for an assistant. After he resigned and was reinstated, he was able to hire his daughter Jessie as a sewing mistress from 1882. He complained about the state of the schoolhouse in 1892 and retired later that year. The family are buried in Bedrule churchyard (also written ‘MacNeil’ and ‘MeCNeil’).

Macomie (ma-k-o-mee) n. William (17th C.) resident of the former Hassendean Parish. He married Jean Burn in Roberton in 1685 and their children included: John (b.1685); Janet (b.1685); and James (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were John and James Martin. His surname could be a variant of ‘McCombe’.

MacQueen (mu-kwseen) n. Robert (1722–99) advocate of Edinburgh who acted as official council for Hawick in the action regarding the Division of the Common raised in 1767. In 1768 he gave his opinion that the case was unclear, stating that ‘on the one hand, that the town hath considered themselves as proprietors of the Commonty … but, on the other hand, the Duke has brought a pretty strong proof that his tenants for time immemorial have been in use to pasture, and to cast peats, &c’. He was consulted again in 1774, by which time he was of the opinion that the neighbouring land owners had a claim and suggested that the Town should offer to concede 1/3 of the Common to save expense. He was known as a brilliant lawyer, who was coarse, heavy-drinking and extremely popular. He was afterwards Lord Braxfield, becoming infamous as a judge who was fond of savage punishments, e.g. sentencing reformer Thomas Muir to transportation. He was the original of R.L. Stevenson’s ‘Weir of Hermiston’ and the ‘Jolly Judge’ pub in Edinburgh was named after him. Rev. Richard Rose (b.1833) born at Braemar, he was a missionary involved with the Free Kirk in Hawick. He studied at Edinburgh University. He became the first ordained minister of the West Port Free Church in 1869, staying for only a few years. In 1870 he married Margaret Phillips, widow of brewer George Henry King. He left Hawick in 1872 to move to Dundee and then was translated to Knockando in 1875 (also spelled ‘McQueen’).

MacQuoid (mu-kwoyde) n. Peter Craik (b.1895) born on the Isle of Wight and licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1921. Probably his first charge was as assistant in Hawick. He moved to become minister at Bothkennar in 1924 and went to Turriff in 1927.

MacRae (mu-kraey) n. Rev. Dr. John (1815–92) native of Glasgow (born on Burns birthday), he was the son of James, a Glasgow shoemaker. He was educated at Glasgow University and licensed by that Presbytery. He succeeded Wallace as Minister of Hawick Parish at the Disruption of 1843 and remained for almost 50 years. He lived in the Manse on Buccleuch Road. He moved from St. Mary’s to the new Old Parish Church in 1844. His time as minister also saw the creation of the separate congregations of St. Mary’s and St. John’s. He was the instigator for the founding of the Industrial School (later Drumlanrig) and also served as an Orrock Trustee. He was one of the most scholarly preachers of his age, receiving an honorary Doctor of Divinity from Glasgow University in 1864. He also founded the Blantyre Mission in British Central Africa (now Malawi). A disagreement with his assistant (J.A. Birrell) in 1881 resulted in part of the congregation leaving to form Wellington Church. He was a highly respected figure in Hawick, projecting an air of old-time dignity (and argued against instrumental music as late as 1882). He laboured under a lameness of foot, and was supposed to have said ‘if it had not been for this I would have been a soldier’. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald MacLachlan of Helensburgh (and she died childless in 1882). A memorial ward at the Cottage Hospital was erected in his memory, along with a tombstone in the Wellogate Cemetery, a memorial brass plaque in the Church, and communion cups from his congregation. His publications include ‘Sermons’ (published in Hawick, 1851), ‘Sermon for the National Fast’ (1854), ‘The Scripture Law of Marriage’ (Hawick, 1861 and 1862), ‘Sermon on the Completion of the Fortieth Year of his Ministry’ (Hawick, 1883), ‘Sermon on the Death of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry’ (Hawick, 1884), ‘Sermon on the Death of H.R.H. Prince Leopold’ (Hawick, 1884), ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of General Gordon’ (Hawick, 1885), ‘Sermon on the Disestablishment and Religious Equality’ (Hawick, 1885), ‘Funeral Sermon on the Life and Character of the Rev. James Stewart, Minister of Wilton’ (Hawick, 1886) and ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen’ (Hawick, 1887) (also written ‘Macrae’).

MacRae’s Band (muk-räz-bawnd) n. popular name for a choir that started in the Parish Church in the mid-19th century when Rev. MacRae was Minister. They practised every Saturday night in the old Parish School in Orrock Place, and were later disbanded.

Mactaggart (muk-taw-gur’) n. Bruce see W. Bruce. Ian C. (1900/1–1965) son of Robert and Mary Aikman, he was Cornet in 1928. Events at his year as Common Riding were recorded on a silent black and white film. He won the Medway Cup outright at the Common Riding Races of 1933, winning on Rufus for the third time (after victories in 1929 and 1932, and coming second in 1930 and 1931). In 1934 it was replaced by the Rufus Trophy and won by him on Rufus! In 1966 the Medway trophy was returned by his wife for competition. He was Callants’ Club President in 1955. He was Managing Director of Mactaggart Brothers, wool merchants, seeing the firm in 1964. He served as chief executive officer for wool control in Scotland during WWII. He married Jessie S. Borland and they are both buried in Denholm. They had 2 daughters, Fiona and Ann. Robert Lamb Watson (1870–1949) son of Robert Lamb Watson and Mary Jane Alexander Main, and brother of William Alexander Main. He was born in Duddingston, Midlothian and became a manager at Pringle’s in Hawick. He married Mary Helen (‘Nellie’) Aikman. Their children were: James (d.1956); Ian (1900/1–65); and Mamie. He secondly married Hyndimer Hewatt, and their children included Arthur Crosbie (1918–42), who died at El Alamein. William Alexander Main (b.1868) born in Glasgow, son of Robert Lamb Watson (also the name of his brother) and Mary Jane Alexander Main. He was a businessman who established the skinworks Mactaggart Brothers. In 1903 he married Mary Jane Cooper, and their children included William Alexander and Mary Bryson. William Alexander, C.B.E., J.P. ‘Wullie’ or ‘Wullie Mac’ (1906–2002) born at Braeside, Weensland Road, son of William Alexander Main and Margaret Jane Cooper. He was educated in Melrose and at Sedbergh School. He took up rugby and first played for Hawick R.F.C. at 17. He was part of the team that won all the ‘sevens’ in 1927. Instead of following in the family business he joined Pringle’s in 1925 as a trainee manager, becoming Director in 1932 and joint Managing Director (with Arthur Oddy) in 1933 at the age of only 27. In 1936 he convinced the other directors to change the name from ‘Robert Pringle & Sons’ to just ‘Pringles’ and to diversify into fashion knitwear. He served with the K.O.S.B. territorial battalion 1926–33 and was put in charge of the Hawick Air Training Corps in 1939, later serving with the R.A.M.C. in Europe. He became sole Managing Director in 1945, following the resignation of Oddy. He then led the company to enormous post-war success, becoming Chairman of the Board in 1960. He resigned as Managing Director in 1968, following the take-over by Dawson International, but he reamedain as Chairman until 1969. During his time in charge the workforce increased from 200 to 2,000 and the firm essentially cornered the worldwide market in fashion knitwear for golfers. He is said to have a very ‘hands-on’ approach to management, regularly walking on the shop-floor and talking individually to the workers. He received the C.B.E. in 1964 for services to industry. He was Cornet in 1930. He was also briefly on the Town Council, and involved with the Callants’ Club, Vertish Hill Sports and Buccleuch Hunt. He contributed funds to establish the Hawick Youth Centre, and he and his wife donated stained glass windows to Lilliesleaf Church. He was President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1972, its centenary year. He married his Cornet’s Lass Marjorie Laing Innes, and she died in 1998. The family settled at Bewlie. Their children were: Bruce; Alan; and Claire. W. Bruce (1933– ) son of Wullie. He joined Pringle’s as a trainee in 1951, becoming a Director in 1964 and Mactaggart’s

Managing Director in 1969. He was Cornet in 1954 and Acting Father in 1971 (to the son of his own Acting Father, John P. Martin). He married Sheila Tait and had 2 sons and 2 daughters.

Mactaggart’s (muk-taw-gurtz) n. skinworks, built on land off Albert Road, which had previously been the site of Albert Mills. The skinworks had also previously been off St. George’s Lane. It closed in the early 1970s, and was demolished to make way for a supermarket and housing built in 1977 – … Built where McTaggart’s men, Worked wi’ skins wi’ weary fingers, When the wund blows the right way, The smell still lingers’ [IWL].

Magistrate

19th century, essentially a forerunner of the cinema. There are records of large turnouts for such shows in Hawick, and many slides from around 1900 survive in the Museum, most made by D. Gaylor.

Magistrate (maw-jis-trā’) n. formerly one of two officers, the Senior Magistrate and the Junior Magistrate, elected annually by the Burgess to enforce laws with the town. The word was synonymous with ‘Bailie’ for most of Hawick’s recorded history. Typically each Magistrate would serve for 2 years (with the election in early October), first as Junior and then as Senior Magistrate, although there were exceptions to this. Because of the specific wording of Hawick’s Charter, the Magistrates exercise a jurisdiction similar to that of Magistrates in a Royal Burgh, and in former times they had a great amount of leeway in administering justice. In the 17th and 18th centuries there were often disputes over jurisdiction, with Hawick residents being forbidden from appealing to any other courts (i.e. the Baron Bailie or the Sheriff) than the Hawick Magistrates Court. During the 18th century it was common for the magistrates also to keep an inn where local disputes would be settled and much of the business of the Town carried out; there was criticism that they profitted from the Town’s business. Before there was a Provost, the Senior Magistrate was the highest elected official in town. After the reconstitution of the council in 1861 there were 4 magistrates. The Magistrates would sit on the bench to deal with local legal matters, although they were also Justices of the Peace only in fairly recent times. Their legal jurisdiction only extended to the Burgh boundaries (formerly synonymous with Bailie).

magistracie (maw-jis-tri-see) n., arch. the office of a magistrate, the magistrates collectively – ‘...conform to the ancient pratice of this burgh since the first ryse and beginning of magistracy within the same’ [BR1673]; ‘...even to the comitting of some ryott, abusing of Magistracie and almost to the effusione of blood’ [BR1706], ‘...that whosoever has a mind to set up for the Magistracy, and peerther for it, shall be put in the Bailies’ Leet without any objection’ [BR1756] (also written ‘magistracy’).

the Magna Charta (thu-mawg-na-chawr-ta) n. name sometimes formerly used for the Charter of 1537 granted by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to the inhabitants of the Burgh of Hawick.

Mag Nichol’s Trough (mawg-ni-kulz-trof’) n. popular name for a former public water supply near the head of the Loan. Also sometimes called ‘Jamie Nichol’s Trough’. There was also a private supply nearby that was used by the Nichols.

the Maidens (thu-mā-dinz) n. another name for the Maidens – ‘It rows aboot, it trows aboot, Baith near and far awa’; Whiles it is on the Maiden’s Paps, And whiles on Ruberslaw’ [TCh] (it is ‘Maiden Pups’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Maiden Paps (thu-mā-din-pawps) n. another name for the Maidens – ‘It rows aboot, it trows aboot, Baith near and far awa’; Whiles it is on the Maiden’s Paps, And whiles on Ruberslaw’ [TCh] (it is ‘Maiden Pups’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Maiden Way (thu-mā-din-wā) n. ancient road passing nearby to Hawick, believed to pre-date the Romans. There may be more than one road given this name. The local one passes through the head of Liddesdale and across the hills to the west of Dodburn, being used as a drove road until relatively recent times. This has been suggested as the northern extension of the road of the same name, which crosses the Penines (being part of the Penine Way near Alston), passing near Bewcastle and on through the South Tyne valley. The ‘Thief’s Road’ may have followed a similar path (the origin is probably Old Welsh for ‘elevated’ rather than being related to the English word).

maidicine (mā-dee-sīn, -di-seen) n. medicine – ‘...Jimmy Black, the Nobel Prize for Maidicine wummer’ [IWL].

the Maids o Honour (thu-mād-ō-on-ur) n. a group of single women selected by the Cornet’s Lass to assist at the Colour Bussing (and Overseas Night the evening before). They follow her in with the Flag, and pin ribbons on the Cornet’s supporters. Their role in the Colour Bussing and in decorating the Principals’ coats with ribbons goes back at least to the beginning of the 19th century. The number is fixed at 22, 10 selected by the Cornet and his Lass, 5 each by the Right-and

Main (mān) n. Agnes (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Whithope in 1722, Borthwickbrae in 1724 and Whithope in 1728. In 1720 he married ‘Manny Whitt’ (presumably Many White), who was also from Robertson. He may also have married Janet Scott in Roberton in 1727. His children included: Janet (b.1722); John (b.1724); Hugh (b.1728); and James (b.1730).

Andrew (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Muselee in 1741. He is probably the Andrew who married Margaret Easton in Roberton in 1736. His children included: Margaret (b.1741); and Helen (b.1745). He is surely related to the earlier Andrew. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He was married in 1687, although his wife’s name is then blank. His wife was Isobel Martin and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1688, with witnesses John Dodds and Adam Craig. Probably the same James married Helen Pott in Roberton in 1689. He may also be the James whose son John was baptised in Robertson in 1702. He witnessed a baptism for Adam Craig and Isobel Main (surely a relative) in 1688. John (18th C.) gardener in Ormiston. In 1728 in Cavers Parish he married Agnes Elliot. His children included Richard (b.1731) and Marion (b.1732).

Richard (17th/18th C.) resident of Earlside in 1708 when his son Thomas was baptised in Cavers Parish. Other children were: Agnes (b.1710) and James (b.1722). Richard (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Kershope ‘Easter’ in 1768 and Sundhope in 1770. Probably the same Richard was shepherd at Whiptopefoot, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Elizabeth Amos and their children included: William (b.1761); Helen (b.1763); Robert (b.1766); Mary (b.1768); and Jean (b.1770).

William (18th C.) resident of Southdeanrig in 1724, 1726 and 1729. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: James (b.1724); Agnes (b.1726); Richard (b.1729); and Isabel (b.1732) (also written ‘Maine’; see also Mein).

Mains see Borthwick Mains
Mains see Cavers Mains
Mains (māns) n. farm near old Castleton.

There are enclosures, field boundaries and earthworks nearby, close to the old railway line. It is recorded in the ballad ‘Hobbie Noble’ that ‘Sim o’ the Mains’ was the betrayer of Hobbie. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is ‘Manys’, with value 10 shillings and 8 pence, and tenanted by Thomas Armstrong. A later Thomas Armstrong of Maynes was recorded in 1590. ‘Gilbert Elliot of the Maynis’ is recorded in 1599. James Murray was there in 1682. Adam Murray and Quentin Crozier were there in 1694. George Irvine was farmer there in 1797, William Irving in 1821 and William Snowden in the 1860s – ‘At Kershope foot the tryste was set, Kershope of the illye lee; And there was traitor Sim o’ the Mains, And with him a private companie’ [T] (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map; it was presumably once the ‘home farm’ for the local baron).

the Mains (thu-mānz) n. former local name for Borthwick Mains.

Mains Haugh (mānз-hawch) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was ‘Main’s haugh’ in 1779, valued at £21 17s 11d and still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

mair (mair) n., arch. a moor, broad area of open land, often high and containing boggy regions – ‘Where we roam o’er the hill, or tread heather mairs Or walk in the valley among scenes so rare’ [JCa] (the spelling and pronunciation are problematic, since muir is often written down although mär is meant; see also moor in place names).

the Mair (thu-mär) n. Hawick Moor, part of the Common, usually referring explicitly to the area containing St. Leonard’s race course. This is the location of the main social event of the Common Riding on the Friday and Saturday afternoons (since 1855 and 1868, respectively). Stalls, entertainments, beer tents etc. are in abundance. On Common Riding Friday the Cornet and his followers arrive at the back gate (towards Pilmuir) at about noon. The Cornet then rides round the course with the Flag, followed by the Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father and then the other riders. The ‘Big Fower’ ride their horses back round the course to the Paddock and the Cornet climbs to the roof of the Committee Room, waving the Flag towards the hillside and then towards the Paddock side, before setting it there for the duration of the races. When he climbs down the Cornet, together with the Acting Father, are presented with riding crops by the Chief Guest. The race meeting then starts in earnest, with both the more serious ‘fallping’ races and the Cornet’s Races (which are only for supporters who have ridden that day). The betting is fiercest on the ‘Tradesmen’s Handicap’. Before the Cornet has even arrived there has in modern times been a relay race run between children from the primary schools in Hawick. The Cornet leaves the Mair on the Friday at about 4 p.m., exiting by the top gate. Most people usually stay there for much longer, however, and the ‘picnics’ go on until well into the night if the weather is good. The race meeting starts later on the Saturday. Admission was first charged in 1883. In 1919 no licensed tents were permitted – ‘We’ll a’ hie to the muir a-riding: Drumlanrig gave it for providing’ [AB], ‘But while the Common-Riding’s on there’s never yin’ll care O’ joining Bonnie Chairlie’s flag They’ll a’ be at the Mair’ [T] (also known as the ‘Muir’, ‘the Moor’ or more formally ‘St. Leonard’s Park’).

Mair (mär) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) weaver in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households in 1835. He was surely related to Andrew. Alexander (1776–1842) carrier of Hawick, operating from Backdamgate. In the early 19th century his firm ran a service between Hawick and Galashiels every Tuesday, continuing on to Edinburgh and Leith, amongst other places. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory leaving for Edinburgh on Tuesdays and Fridays and returning on Wednesdays and Saturdays, as well as going to Glasgow on Wednesdays. In 1837 he is listed going to Galashiels and Edinburgh every Tuesday. At the 1837 election one of the Tory voters escaped the mob by hiding in his house, which was stated to be ‘by the Towerdyke-side’. He is recorded as a carrier near the Crescent (possibly the Mill Path) in 1841. He was heavily involved with the Relief Kirk. He married Elizabeth, daughter of carrier William Wilson, who died in 1847 aged 67. Their children included: William (1809/10–47), innkeeper at Gala Bank; Ann (1812/13–46); John; Janet; and Elizabeth (b.1821/2), who died young. One of his daughters became Mrs. Drummond. Andrew (18th C.) wright in Town-o'-Rule. Andrew (b.1794/5) from Newcastleton, he was listed as a weaver among heads of a households in 1835. By 1841 he was a hand-loom weaver in Hawick, living at Lockiesedge, then 5 Bourtree Place in 1851 and 5 O’Connell Street in 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Andrew Jr., Adam, Jane and Isabella. Gilbert (b.1785/6) born in Castleton Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Silverbuthall in 1841 and Wilton Roadhead in 1851. His wife was Margaret, and their children included William, Andrew, Walter, Francis, Thomas and Mary. James (d.1812) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife died in 1811 and he followed a year later. He could be the James, son of Andrew born in Hobkirk in 1743. James (b.c.1793) weaver in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841 at Lockiesedge. He was also recorded at Lockiesedge on the 1841 census. His children included David, Catherine, Jane, Agnes, Mary and Margaret. John (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His wife was Margaret Scott and their son Thomas was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1673. The witnesses were Richard Elliot and Robert Scott. His name is written ‘Mayr’. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name was listed as ‘John Maire Elder’, and the ‘younger’ John who was also there was probably his son. John (17th/18th C.) probably son of John, he was tenant farmer at Mackside. He may be the John ‘younger’ who was listed along with John ‘Elder’ at Stonedge in 1694. In 1704 (or perhaps a confirmation of the purchase of 1666) he purchased half the lands of Kirknowe from John Shiel. His son Richard married Janet, only daughter of John Shiel (and probably grand-daughter of the man he bought the land from). John (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785–91. Rev. John (1822–1902) born in Paisley, 3rd son of John. He was educated in Paisley and at Glasgow University and was licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1845. Then in 1847 he was ordained as assistant and successor at Southdean, and remained there for well over half a century. In 1887 he obtained a doctorate from Glasgow University. He married Agnes (who died in 1900), daughter of George Grant of Glasgow, who founded a bursary in her father’s name. His publications include ‘Memorial Sermon preached in the Old Parish Church of Southdean’ (1876), ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of Jane Grant’ (published in Hawick, 1883), ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of James Stewart, Min. of Wilton’ (Hawick, 1886), and ‘Pulpit Memorial of the Life and Character of the late Rev. John MacRae, D.D., Min. of Hawick (Hawick, 1892). There is a bronze plaque to his memory in Southdean Kirk. Richard (18th C.) significant parishioner of Hobkirk in the early 1700s, described as a ‘portioner’. He was son of John, who had purchased half of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded as possessor of part of Kirknowe and Kirkstile in 1745. With the permission of his wife Janet Shiel he sold the lands to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. His daughters Jane and Magdalen later possessed a cottage at Kirkstile. Dr. Robert (1864–1902) born in Tarbolton, Ayrshire, son of Archibald and Anne Vass. He graduated M.B. and C.M. from Glasgow University in 1886. He came to Hawick in 1890 to assist Dr. Bannerman, later becoming a partner. He first followed the Cornet in 1891, along with several of the town’s other doctors. As well as being a popular doctor, he became a Councillor for North High Street Ward in 1894, serving on the Sanitary Committee and Lunacy Board. This led to him being Cornet in 1896, the only known non-Teri to hold that office. The explanation is that when a last minute Cornet needed to be found he was the only unmarried man on the Council, and was talked into accepting the position. Provost Barrie served as his Acting Father, and it appears that he did not serve as Right- or Left-Hand Man afterwards. He was a keen sportsman, being Captain of the Golf Club, and he was also involved with the Border Rifles and the Masons. He died at age 37 and is buried at Tarbolton. W. (18th/19th C.) teacher in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (b.1823/4) blacksmith living on Ladylaw Place in 1851. His wife was Ann (also ‘Maire’ and ‘Mayr’).

mairriage (mu-reej) n.  marriage – ‘Cranston tried teh disown the wain an declare the maireigee illegal’ [BW]. ‘The son o a mixed mairriage …’ [IWL], ‘The times hae changed, and it’s naething now To lieflytly cherish the mairriage vow’ [WL]. In modern times the favourite day for weddings has been Saturday, but formerly the normal day was the Friday following the 3 proclamations made in church. The ceremony was often preceded by a feet-washing tradition before the hen party, which usually took place on the Tuesday before. Prior to about the mid-19th century marriages in Hawick took place at the Mause, rather than in the Kirk. ‘Irregular’ marriages were performed in front of witnesses and not by the parish minister; they were common in the 17th and 18th century among the religiously disenfranchised.

mairriaged (mu-reej-ed) adj., arch.  married – ‘…and purposed to cohabit togethir as mairried persones, if not questioned by the magistrat of ye sd. tonne’ [BR1689].

Maitland (māt-lind) n. Barbara 'Babby Met- tlin' (17th C.) said to have been housekeeper to the first Laird of Tushielaw (although it is unclear who this may have been). She taught the ballad 'Auld Maitland' to Andrew Moor, who taught it to Sir Walter Scott, leading to its publication.

Edward Francis (1803–70) born in Edinburgh, he became Solicitor General for Scotland and was raised to the peerage as Lord Barcaple. He was living at Woll, Ashkirk in 1857. Sir Richard of Lethington (1496–1586) Privy Counsellor, Judge and Keeper of the Great Seal for James V, Mary Queen of Scots and James VI. His father, Sir Wil- liam, had fallen at Flodden, and he married Mary Cranstoun. Becoming blind later in life, he wrote a series of satirical poems, e.g. 'Aganis the Theivis song and ballad' [IHS], 'Laying the Theivis' [IWL], 'A thoosand times I've tried ti tell My tale ti folk, that maistly fell Stark, sprawlin' deid' [WP].

Robert (15th C.) listed among local men as witness to the 1464/5 sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. His name is recorded as 'Roberto Mateland'. William of Lethington (1525–73) son of poet Richard, he was Secretary of State to Mary of Lorraine and also Mary, Queen of Scots. He was often referred to simply as 'Lethington'. He was originally an ally of the Earl of Moray, probably being involved in the murders of Rizzio and Darnley, but later sided with Mary. In 1559 he was appointed along with the Earl of Bothwell and Ker of Cessford to keep order on the Border. He acted to restore Mary to power, but was forced to surrender in a siege at Edinburgh Castle and died in Leith prison.

Makerstoun (mā-kurz-tin, -toon) n. small parish on the north side of the Tweed, between Dryburgh and Kelso. It contains the village of Mekerstoun, as well as Makerstoun House (the origin of the name is probably ‘Malkauistun’; it first appears in 1159 as ‘Malcarvaston’ and in a list from St. Andrews Priory about the same time as ‘Malkaruiustun’; the ‘I’ disappeared in the 15th century; it is also written ‘Makerston’, ‘Makeairstoun’, ‘Makkarystoun’, ‘McCairston’, ‘M’Caristoun’ and other variants; it is ‘Machanstoun’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Maccarstoun’ on Roy’s 1750 map).

Makerstoun Hoose (mawk-ur-stin-hoos) n. house in the parish of Makerstoun, standing in extensive grounds above the Tweed between St. Boswells and Kelso. Originally a tower of the Corbetts was there, it was home to the McDougalls (or Makdougalls) of Makerstoun from 1374. A new house was built on the ruins of a tower destroyed by Hertford’s men in 1545, constructed in 1590, with extensive later renovations. It was rebuilt in 1714 to designs by William Adam (father of Robert) and enlarged into a Victorian mansion in 1812, to plans of Archibald Elliot. The estate passed to Hay-McDouggall, then to General Sir Thomas Brisbane, and then the Scotts of Gala, all through marriage. Sir Thomas Brisbane built an observatory in the grounds, where he carried out pioneering observations on magnetism. Although the house burned down in 1970, it was rebuilt to the original design by 1973. On the opposite side of the Teviot stands ‘The Law’, also known as ‘The Pleahill’, probably a Norman motte, where local courts were held.

Malcolm (mawl-kum) n. George (1722–1803) son of Rev. Robert, minister of Burnfoot-in-Ewes. His father was granted the farm of Burnfoot-in-Ewes and he helped his father to run it and succeeded to the farm. He also merged it with the neighbouring lands of Douglas. He married Margaret Paisley of Craig and had a family of 17. Among these were the ‘4 knights of Eskdale’, namely Col. Sir James, Adm. Sir Pulteney, Vice-Adm. Sir Charles and Gen. Sir John.

Sir John (1769–1833) soldier and diplomat from a prominent family based at Burnfoot near Langholm, he and his 3 brothers being called the ‘Four Knights of Eskdale’. He entered the military at the age of 12. He served as Governor of Bombay, is buried in Westminster, and had a 100 ft obelisk built in his memory on Whita Hill above Langholm in 1835. In about 1805 he helped the ailing Dr. John Leyden to recover from illness in his home at Seringapatam. He inscribed some complementary lines of verse in Leyden’s ‘Scenes of Infancy’, to which Leyden reciprocated. John (19th C.) from Samuelston, he was schoolmaster at Hobkirk from 1857. He had a stove and a porch fitted to the schoolhouse. He taught through the transition from Parish to Board School. He was said to be an excellent teacher, although perhaps pedantic and with a hasty temper. He was keen on teaching his pupils about Border history. He was Secretary of the Border Association of Teachers. He married the sister of Daniel Henderson of the Bonchester Bridge Inn and they had children. He died at about age 50 and is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard.

Rev. Robert (1687/8–1761) son of David from the Lochore family. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1707, became tutor to Lord President Dalrymple and was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1716. He was called Ewes Kirk in 1717 and remained there until his death. He failed to inherit the family estate near Cupar on account of his relative being an Episcopalian and leaving it to someone else. However, he was given the estate of Burnfoot (in Eskdale) by the Earl of Dalkeith, and this would remain in his family for several generations. He established a Poor House in the Parish. In 1722 he married Agnes, daughter of Rev. George Campbell, and she died in 1767. Their children were: George (1722–1803), farmer at Burnfoot, father of the ‘4 Knights of Eskdale’; Wilhelmina (b.1729); David; and Marion.

William Elphinstone (1816–1907) from the family of Burnfoot in Dumfriesshire, he was son of Adm. Sir Pulteney. He served in the Royal Navy from the age of 14, but left 2 years later on account of weak health. After graduating her after a while, an’ whan there was a munnelicht nicht’ [BCM1880].

Maknet (mak-net) n. William (16th C.) listed in 1552 among people owed money on the last testament of William Scott, younger of Branxholme. The surname could be ‘McKnight’ or something else.

mak penny (mak-pe-nee) v., arch. to convert into cash, realise as funds – ‘...and mak penny of his rediast gudis, to the awaile of the said sown of thua hunder merkis ... ’ [SB1500].

mala fama (ma-la-fa-na) n., arch. a report of bad behaviour – ‘...or yet to sett or hire to any person who is in mala fama, or under ane evil report, any of their said houses ... ’ [BR1699] (from Latin for ‘evil rumour’).

Malanoth (ma-la-noth) n. Adam (15th C.) received 2 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. It is unclear if his surname is a variant of something else.

Malcolm (mawl-kum) n. name of 4 Scottish Kings. Malcolm I (d.954) King of Alba (i.e. northern Scotland) from 943. He signed a treaty with Edward I of England, gaining Strathclyde and Cumbria. He was never the monarch in the Scottish Borders. Malcolm II (d.1034) son of Kenneth III. He fought at the Battle of Carham, the outcome of which merged Strathclyde with Alba, leading to the formation of modern Scotland. He was thus the first ‘Scottish’ monarch for the Hawick area. Malcolm III (c.1031–93) eldest son of Duncan I, he was King from 1058. He was also known as Malcolm Canmore (‘of the large head’). After his father died he took refuge in England, later invading with the help of the noblemen of Southern Scotland and killed Lulach I. He made an alliance with England, and married St. Margaret. It is thought that during this time Middle English became the dominant language in the Scottish Lowlands. In 1072 he was forced to swear allegiance to William I of England, but in 1091 invaded Northumbria and besieged Durham. This attempt to control Northumbria failed when William II of England sent an army north. But he tried again in 1093, besieging Alnwick. However, he was killed there, along with his son Edward. He was succeeded by his younger brother Donald III. Malcolm IV (c.1141–65) grandson of David I, he succeeded to the throne in 1153. Sometimes referred to as ‘the Maiden’, he died unmarried in Jedburgh and was succeeded by William I. He founded Soutra Hospital in 1164. He also granted additional lands and rights to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey.

from Cambridge he travelled extensively and then settled at Burnfoot farm in 1843. He was a Justice of the Peace, Commissioner of Supply and Deputy-Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire and commanded the Langholm Company of Volunteers. In 1857 he married Mary (d.1859) daughter of James of Cavers. When his wife’s brother James died in 1878, the Cavers estate was inherited by his daughter Mary. After his first wife’s death he secondly married Charlotte Leslie Melville (1826–92). William (19th/20th C.) from Norham-on-Tweed, he was Police Constable in Rulewater, being based at the Forkins. He married Jessie Johnston.

Mangerton (män-jer-, mang-ger-tin) n. former tower house of the chief of the Armstrongs, between Newcastleton and Kershopefoot, on the banks of the Liddel. It was the seat of 10 sucmodern farmhouse. To the west of the farmhouse is Mangerton Mill, which lies on a lade built off the Liddel Water. The lands associated with the estate are listed on a rental roll

laces of Morton: Ragarth; Speteltoun; Mangerton; Mangertounholme; Grenys; Qwlythawlgh; Westburne-flait; Fouterlampert; Dominium inferius; Haldyksis; Poudercroft; Swnye Acre; Terra cissorios; Dominium superius; Hardenkaui; Tyco-

cotis; Pratum aule; Flygh superior; Kelloley cum Mynhelohime; Lanorowftanys; Terra Philipp de Fausyde cum Holdoun; Strypschelden; Ricarden; Halyfysted; Hetryes; and Redethugh. Lands

there were resigned by Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482, granted to David Scott of Bucceuch the same year (presumably as superior), and confirmed to Walter Scott of Brax-holme in 1484/5. There was a further gift of non-entry of the lands to Walter Scott of Bucceuch in 1550/1; they would pass fully to the Scotts of Bucceuch in 1629, when Francis Scott was granted ‘the castle, tower and fortalice thereof’.

The lands of William Scott of Mangerton were valued at £1800 in 1643. ‘Lady Mangerstowne’

was responsible for the land tax in 1663, including £852 for ‘towresfelde’, £100 for the ‘teind of the towre’ and £800 for her rents in Castleton.

The ‘Laird of Mangerstain’ paid tax on a value of

and Francis Little were listed there on the 1694

along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it extended to 349 acres, bounded by Sorbietrees, Liddel Water and Tweed Burn.

At that time it contained the farmstead of Blacksideeves, there was also a common off to the northeast and the map shows the old tower and a farmhouse just to its west, as well as the current farmhouse and mill. James Renwick was tenant in the mid-1700s. In 1788 the lands were still valued at £1280 and owned by the Duke of Bucceuch. Robert Hogg was farmer there in 1797 and Thomas Elliot in 1851 and 1861. The name ‘Meriantoun’ (recorded in the 16th century)

may be an alternative version of Mangerton – ‘I have Mangerton, Ogilvie, Raeburn, and Nether-bie, Old Sim, of Whitram, and all his array. Come all Northumberland, Teesdale and Cumberland,

name occurs at least as early as 1376 as ‘Mangertoune’ and is ‘Mangerton’ in 1482, ‘Maynger-toun’ in 1530, ‘Mengertoun’ in 1578/9, ‘Mangertoun’ in 1581, ‘Manjertoune’ in 1584, ‘Mangerton’ in 1632, ‘Maingertoun’ in 1635 and 1644 and ‘Mengertoun’ in 1644 and 1694; it appears clearly on Sandison’s c.1590 map, is ‘Mangertone’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Mangerton’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; its origin is probably the Old English ‘mangera tun’, meaning ‘farm of the merchants’.

Mangerton Mill (män-ør-tin-nil) n. former mill near the farm of Mangerton. It is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, and still clearly on the modern Ordnance Survey map, beside the mill lade at the curve in the Liddel there. James Armstrong was tenant there in 1611. James ‘Littleline’ was tenant in 1683. Andrew Turnbull was miller there in the mid-18th century. Thomas Elliot was miller there in 1852 (it is ‘Mangertoun Mill’ in 1611; it is ‘Mangerton Mill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Mangertonholm (män-ør-tin-höm) n. lands formerly attached to the estate of Mangerton. It is listed in a rental roll c.1376 as ‘Mangertounholme’ and with a value of 13 shillings.

Mang Howes and Knowes (mänw-hawz-in-nowz) n. prose piece written by Elliot Cowan Smith in 1914, around the time of his 23rd birthday. Its full title is ‘Mang Howes an Knowes, A Day’s Dander Throwe Border Waeter-Gates’, and it describes a journey from St. Boswells to Hawick. It was originally circulated among a few friends, but published in 1925, following Smith’s untimely death. It is a staggering piece of work, so replete with vernacular vocabulary that it is hard to read without the help of Smith’s article on the local dialect ‘Braid Haaick’.

Manor (ma-nur) n. parish in Peeblesshire, south-west of the town of Peebles, extending along the valley of the Manor Water from the Tweed towards Megget. It is also sometimes called Kirkton Manor. The barony was granted by Robert III to Sir William Inglis in 1396, as a reward for killing the English knight Thomas de Struthers at Rulehaugh. This was the same Inglis family who were barons of Branxholme. Sir William’s son John had a charter of the barony from Archibald, Earl of Douglas, who was already superior of the family’s lands in Roxburghshire. John Inglis of Manor swapped half of Branxholme for Murdiestoun with Robert Scotts of Buccleuch in 1420. And in 1446 his son, Thomas Inglis of Manor, swapped the other half of Branxholme with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The Inglis family sold their half to David Pringle of Smailholm in 1522. The other half of the barony belonged to the Lowis family, with Patrick ‘of the Lowis of Meamer’ being balie to Sir Walter Scott in 1434. A small part of the barony once also belonged to the Gledstains of that Ilk (also written ‘Maner’, ‘Manner’, etc.; it is ‘Menar’ in 1431).

the Manse (thu-mawns) n. usually referring to Hawick Parish Manse, situated on Old Manse Road, and later to the new Manse built on Buccleuch Road in 1844 (renamed Parkview and more recently Dunira). A new manse was built on Old Manse Road in 1763, at a cost of £200. This was for a while the only house beyond the Old Parish Church along the New Road. The phrase is also used sometimes to refer to the homes of other local ministers (see also the Auld Manse).

Manse Brae (mans-brä) n. former popular name for the road at Denholm Townhead, where the Church manse was located (now Beechlands), i.e. part of the road from Hawick into Denholm. Also the name for the road (north) up to the Manse in Roberton, at the top of which the older church stood.

Manse Lane (mans-län) n. name used for Old Manse Lane before about 1860.

Mansfield (manz-, mans-feeld) n. area of town down-river from the North Bridge, generally referring to the part on the north side of the Teviot, lying along Mansfield Road. It consists of housing, factories, sports grounds, and an industrial area. It was named after Wilton Parish Church Manse, which was once the only property in the area (now in Mansfield Square), the Minister of Wilton owning a large tract of land there from at least the mid-17th century. The Mansfield Glebe land here was purchased by the Town Council in the late 1870s, with factories, housing and the sewage works built soon after. Eastfield Mills dominated the area in the late 19th century, with Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. building most of the tenement blocks to provide convenient housing for their workers.

Mansfield (manz-feeld) n. Ralph (1556–1633) from Yorkshire, he was appointed as a deputy warden by Ralph Evers, Lord Eure. He served as Captain of Harbottle and Keeper of Tynedale. There were complaints against him by other Englishmen in 1597, including his ‘extortions of 15 score head of cattle and 400 sheep – conveyance of Cesford to Toplif to buy a horse – caused 2 Englishmen to fight before Buccleuch at Hawick – till one was slain’. It is separately referred to as an incident of ‘carrying Englishmen into Scotland to combat before Bawcleugh, where the one murdered the other’. His response to the last accusation is that he took no men to Hawick, ‘but 2 English fugitives, some time of Redesdale, one accusing the other of crimes, did combat before Buccleuch’, and when he got there he tried to stop the fight. The true details of these events, and where exactly this fight may have taken place, are not known.

the Mansfield Bar (thu-manz-feeld-bawr) n. public house at 16 Mansfield Road.

Mansfield Brig (manz-feeld-brig) n. Mansfield Bridge, or Footbridge, across the Teviot connecting Mansfield Road with the end of Noble Place. It was suggested by a petition of 308 names in 1886 and funded by subscription. The original wooden footbridge was opened by provost Milligan in 1888, but washed away in 1938, being replaced in 1939. A completely new bridge was erected in 1986.

Mansfield Crescent (manz-feeld-kre-sin’) n. street built in 1887 on land that was formerly part of Wilton Manse Glebe.

Mansfield Gaidens (manz-feeld-gär-dinz) n. street in Mansfield, being a continuation of Mansfield Park, built around 1925, with additional houses added in 1972.

Mansfield House (manz-feeld-hoos) n. originally Thornwood House, built in 1870/1 for auctioneer James Oliver. It was designed in a Greek Revival style by J.T. Rochead, with Italianate decor and splendid gardens. It retains much of the original ceiling plasterwork. Sold by the Oliviers in 1936, it was owned by Lt.-Col. Mudue and by 1956 had become a hotel and night club, having several owners over the subsequent decades. In 1973 it was taken over by the Hawkinses, who changed the name to Mansfield Park Hotel. Later the McMannuses changed the name to Mansfield House Hotel. It was taken over by Ian and Sheila McKinnon in 1985 and renovated into Hawick’s premier hotel, with 12 unique bedrooms and set in 10 acres of land. In 2009 it was purchased by the Midgée Company. It has been a very popular site for wedding receptions (see also Thornwud Hoose).

on and around the site of the old Blenkhorn, Richardson tweed mill.

Mansfield Mills (manz-feeld-nilz) n. name for knitwear mills on Mansfield road, which were built 1880–1929. Samuel Findlater, hosiery and glove manufacturer was there from around 1882. It may also have been associated with James Renwick & Co. From 1891 it house Tun & Rutherford’s, which closed around 1950. There was a fire there in 1955. Braemar moved in around 1969, replaced by Jaeger in the early 1970s. The building was partly converted into flats in the 1990s, with Clan Douglas moving into part of it in 1999.

Mansfield Mission Hut (manz-feeld-mishin-lu’) n. independent evangelical organisation established for women in the Mansfield area in 1937. It was separate from the Hawick Home Mission.

Mansfield Park (manz-feeld-pawrk) n. home of Hawick R.F.C. since 1888, times each season. A new pavilion was opened in 1919, a new stand in 1955 and floodlights in 1993 – ‘As I view life’s looking glass Where can any joy surpass The callants doon at Mansfield When they hold the final pass?’ [RMc].

Mansfield Park (manz-feeld-pawrk) n. street running parallel and to the north of Mansfield Road, becoming Mansfield Court at one end and Mansfield Gardens at the other. The original houses were built in 1890. The name was in use for the general area before it was feued for factories and housing in the 1880s.

Mansfield Road (manz-feeld-röd) n. main road through the Mansfield area. The original houses were built in 1882.

Mansfield Square (manz-feeld-skwär) n. street named after Wilton Manse, which was the only building in the area when the Town Council bought the land in 1875. The buildings were erected in 1888, and the original manse was later made into private housing, surviving the demolitions of 1974.

Mansholme Mills (mans-höm-nilz) n. 19th century woollen manufacturing mill off Mansfield Road behind Waverley Mills. The factory was associated with yarn spinning for a number of smaller firms, specifically James Taylor, Robert Grierson & Co., Dunsmore, Johnston & Co., and Tant & Anderson.

Man-sworn (man-swörn) adj., arch. forsworn, lying deliberately, used as an insulting phrase – ‘… Thomas Olipher, cordiner, … for giving of un-reverent language to the bailies in face of court, and calling William Ruecastell man-sworn in face of court’ [BR1642].

Manteen (man-teen) v., poet. to maintain – ‘I ken that the Lord will mainteen the caus o’ the affliccket, and the richt o’ the puir’ [HSR].

Mantel Waas (mawn-tul-wawz) n. name use for a former ruin near Ancrum, around Nether Ancrum, to the east of the village. It was sometimes referred to as ‘Malton Walls’ (most likely in error, leading to a supposed association with the Knights of Malta), but ‘Mantel’ is how the locals referred to it, which means simply parapet walls. It was perhaps a palace of the Bishops of Glasgow, who held lands there, or otherwise remains of former fortifications at Ancrum. It was described at the end of the 18th century (by Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh) as being a parallelogram in plan, built of stone and lime, and having vaults under it. A high gable with a beautiful window as said to have stood until the mid-18th century and the last portion of the walls fell in about the mid-19th century. It was said that human bones were regularly unearthed there and in 1956 the remains of a statue were dug up nearby. A gravestone inscribed ‘1607’ is built into a house in the area. Nothing can now be seen of this former construction today. There is a fanciful tradition that an underground passage led from this place to Timpended Castle (also written ‘Mantle’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Manuale (ma-new-al) adj., arch. written with the hand – ‘…be the hand of our lout familiar clerk, Maister Richard Lawson, clerk of our Justiciary, wnder his subscriptioun manuale …’ [SB1500].

Manuel (mawn-wel) n. George (17th C.) resident at Barnes in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Mannall’. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Hall and their children included Robert (b.1683). John (b.1806) master blacksmith in Lilliesleaf, son of William. His smithy was on the north side of Main Street. He may never have married, being listed living with his sister as housekeeper in 1851. He was also recorded in Slater’s 1852 directory. John Manuel (1837/8–1900) Burgh Surveyor and Master of Works from 1874–1900. Born in Perth, son of Peter, the Clerk of Works in Edinburgh, and Agnes Wilson. He came to Hawick in 1874. He designed his own house Elmbank in Fenwick Park in 1884, with the access road called ‘Manuel’s Brae’ long afterwards. He also worked as an architect for Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Company (on the Terraces), and designed several other buildings, including Howlands Mill. He was one of the founders of Hawick Golf Club, and also keen on bowling, curling and fishing. In addition he was a Mason and manager at East Bank Kirk, as well as being known as a fine bass singer. One of his regular duties was to oversee the erection of the ring and platforms at the Common Riding Games. He married music teacher Isabella (or Catherine) Hunter of North Berwick and their children were: Margaret Agnes (b.1877), who became an artist in New York; John (b.1879); Catherine Hunter (1881–1969), who died in Vancouver; Francis Eric (b.1886), who went to India, worked as a banker, and retired to the south coast of England; and Florence Wilson (1888–1971), who died in Kelowna, British Columbia. John and the 3 daughters all eventually emigrated to North America. There is a possibility that another son may have been Robert, who emigrated to America and named the Hawick in Minnesota (although there is no evidence to support this, and the timing does not work very well). His wife died on Christmas day in 1896 and was buried in Wilton Cemetery (the lay-out of which he must have been closely involved in). He became ill in 1900, with his son John taking over his duties temporarily. He died suddenly of a heart-attack and was also buried at Wilton. John (1879–1933) son of John, born at 25 North Bridge Street. He trained in Hawick under J.P. Alison as well as in Edinburgh, and worked in London. When his father became ill in 1900, he returned to Hawick to serve as interim Burgh Surveyor. But by 1904 he moved to Liverpool, then London, then Colwyn Bay in Wales. He exhibited designs and drawings at the R.S.A. in 1900 and 1901. He married Madeline, daughter of hardware merchant William Brown in 1908. After 1912 he emigrated to Canada (his 3 sisters following him there), where he contributed to the design of the Provincial Legislature in Winnipeg and the Labor Temple in Calgary. He was also resident architect at the Banff Springs Hotel. He died after falling from a 10th floor window at the Palliser Hotel in Calgary, and is buried there in the Burnsland Cemetery. Robert (17th/18th C.) possibly the son of George and Isobel Hall born in Hawick in 1683. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish in 1705 for smith John Dryden. In the baptismal record of 1719 he is ‘in ye toun of Hawick’. He married Janet Tullie and their son John was baptised in 1719, with witnesses candlemaker John Scott and James Paterson ‘Duke’. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1719 being ‘in ye toun of Hawick’. In 1719 he married Agnes, daughter to Henry Gibson, flesher in Melrose, and their son John was baptised in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His son William was born in 1755. Robert (19th/20th C.) said to be son of John (although there is no evidence to support this). He became a railway manager in the U.S.A., and was responsible for the naming of Hawick, Minnesota (mis-typed ‘R. Manvel’ in the 1905 history of Kandiyohi County; also notice a possible conflation with Santa Fe Railroad President Allen Manvel). There is clearly some confusion in the story of how the Hawick in Minnesota got its name and any connection with the Manuel family remains unproven. Samuel (19th C.) blacksmith on the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He does not appear in the 1841 census. Simon (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His wife was Margaret Smail. Their children included: Janet (b.1764); Jean (b.1769); Jean (b.1771); and William (b.1775). William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He had children: Isabell (b.1737); Jean (b.1737), apparently twin of Isabell; Gilbert (b.1739); James (b.1742); Margaret (b.1744); and Jean (b.1747). William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf whose children included: Robert (b.1755); John (b.1757); Margaret (b.1762); and George (b.1764). William (18th C.) married Margaret Fairlie. Their children included: Jean (b.1768); Jean (again, b.1769); Jean (again, b.1771); and Riddell (b.1772). William (b.1770), with no mother’s name given, may also be his son. William (18th C.) recorded as owner of land in Lilliesleaf in 1788, valued at £6 13s 4d. His surname was given as ‘Manwell’ and he was still recorded as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may be the son of Simon and Margaret Smail born in Lilliesleaf in 1775. He married Jean Swanson. Their children included: Margaret (1802); Simon (b.1803); Agnes (b.1804); John (b.1806); William (b.1808), blacksmith in Melrose; Jessy (b.1810); Mary (b.1811); and Agnes (b.1814). Manuel's Brae (mawn-welz-brä) n. former name for the road leading to the large houses that were built at Fenwick Park, off Weensland Road. It is the lower part of the street now known as Fenwick Park. The name came from John Manuel, who built ‘Elm Bank’.

manufacturing (ma-new-fak-choo-ri) n. manufacturing. Hawick's production of goods grew slowly, until the rapid expansion of woollens in the early 19th century. In the earliest records there are examples of various tradesmen in the town, making items from wood, metal, leather, etc. There was also small-scale, largely domestic, production of linen and woolen garments. The trades were governed through 7 ‘incorporations’, namely weavers, shoemakers (or cordiners), skinners (and glovers), hammermen, fleshers (i.e. butchers), tailors and bakers (or baxters). A small factory making carpets appeared in Hawick in the 1750s, stocking frames were introduced in the 1770s, linen tape manufacturing started in the 1780s and yarn spinning commenced in the early 1800s. In 1839 the Minister described people being employed ‘in the manufacture of thongs, gloves, candles, machinery, and in the tanning of leather and dressing of sheep skins’, although woollen manufacturing by far dominated.

Manvers (man-varz) n. Robert de (13th/14th C.), given part of the estate of Chisholme by the English King Edward in 1317 (along with Ranulpus de Home), although it was restored to John ‘de Cheseholme’ 3 years later.

the Maori flag (thu-now-ree-flawg) n. artefact donated to Hawick Museum in 1921 by artist Tom Scott. It had been captured by Crown forces in 1865 at the Battle of Omaruhakeke. In 2015 there was a request to return the flag to New Zealand.

Mar (mawr) n. Margaret (d.c.1391) daughter of Donald, 8th Earl of Mar, and sister of Thomas, 9th Earl. She married William, 1st Earl of Douglas. Her husband died in 1384 and she secondly married Sir John Swinton of Swinton. Her son James inherited the titles of both Douglas and Mar. However, she also seems to have been regarded as Countess of Mar in her own right, with that title going to her daughter Isabel. Thomas 9th (or 10th) Earl of Mar (c.1332–c.74) son of Donald, 8th Earl of Mar and Isabel Stewart, last of a line of ‘Mormaers’ of Mar (in Aberdeenshire), with no clear surname. Both Thomas Baliol and the Earl of Douglas are referred to as his brothers, but it seems this was likely to have meant step-brothers or brothers-in-law. He was apparently raised in England. He witnessed charters during the reigns of David II and Robert II and became High Chamberlain of Scotland. He also held many titles, particularly in northern Scotland, but also including the Barony of Cavers. He was certainly Lord of Cavers by 1357. In 1358 he witnessed the charter for the Barony of Hawick, granted to Sir Thomas Murray. He granted the lands of Denholm, Denholm Dean and ‘Balleolhage’ to Thomas Cranston in an undated charter (confirmed decades later in 1441). The grant excepted his domain lands within the Barony of Cavers and his lands of Stobs. He granted Cavers to Thomas Baliol, in fee. In 1368 he granted the patronage and advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey. Also in 1368 he gave his consent to a grant by Thomas Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas, of Earlside in the Barony of Cavers. It is unclear exactly when he died, and it seems there was some confusion after his death about the inheritance of the Cavers lands and titles immediately afterwards; however, in an investigation into the status of the Kirk of Cavers in 1406 he is still referred to as the former Baron, with his confirming gift of the Kirk to Melrose Abbey cited. He married Margaret Graham, Countess of Menteith (and widow of John Murray) and later Margaret Stewart, Countess of Angus, elder daughter of Thomas, Earl of Angus. He had no heirs and his titles fell to his sister Margaret, Countess of Mar, who married William, 1st Earl of Douglas and Earl of Mar. The titles then passed to their daughter Isabella, Countess of Mar, and eventually to the Douglasses directly.

Marchmount (mawrch-mown) n. alternative name for Roxburgh Castle.

Marcus (mar-kis) n. Walter ‘Mr. Walter’ (20th C.) from Westphalia in Germany, he had to leave because of Nazi persecution and founded a fashion house in London, along with his younger brother Otto. When they established a factory in Hawick in 1940, he came to live in the Town and stayed until the 1950s, being manager of the W. & O. Marcus factory on Commercial Road. He also organised regular fashion shows in the Tower Hotel. He joined the Home Guard during the War.
Marcus’s

He lived with his wife Anne and daughter Helen at Wellogate Villa. He had a reputation for being a strict, but fair employer. However, it was said that he was often bad-tempered during Jewish fast days, with his wife calling ahead to the factory to warn the workers. He moved to London in the mid-1950s after his brother became ill. But he continued to visit Hawick until the factory closed in 1964.

Marcus’s (mar-ki-seez) n. W. & O. Marcus, former dress-making factory on Commercial Road. The firm was founded by Jewish refugees Walter and Otto Marcus (friends of Otto Weisz) in 1939, and became one of the top 10 fashion houses in London. The Hawick factory was set up in 1940 in part of the Willglen Mill building. It operated until 1965, managed by Frederica Rosenberger. The connection to Hawick was probably established from the brothers knowing Otto Wiesz, head designer at Pringles (as well as the known availability of textile workers and the relative safety of the Borders in wartime). During the London Blitz workers were brought up to work in Hawick and many of them stayed. At the height of production it employed 180 workers. The dresses were known for their use of luxury materials. The firm supplied dresses to many London department stores, such as Harrods, Liberty, Fortnum & Mason, Bourne & Hollingsworth, Debenhams and Selfridges, as well as Greensmith Downes and Jenners in Edinburgh. One of the reasons cited for closure was rising rail costs for transporting materials and finished goods to and from London. After the factory closed the building was used as the Scout Headquarters. The ladies garment tradition was carried on by ‘Alison Russell’, run by ex-Marcus employee Ella Russell at Loch Park for about 20 years after Marcus’ closed. Another company, Simon Marcus, skirt manufacturers, was based at Loch Park 1979–93. The original building at 22 Commercial Road was demolished in the late 1990s. Herriot-Watt archives hold design books, loose patterns and an unpublished company history. There was a reunion of 52 former employees held in 2003.

Margaret (mawr-gri’) n. (1283–90) Queen of Scotland from 1286, she was known as ‘the Maid of Norway’. She was the great-grand-daughter of Alexander III and his only surviving descendant, being daughter of Eric II of Norway. Following the Treaty of Birgham (near Kelso), in which she was betrothed to Edward I’s son in return for assurance of Scottish independence, but with Edward as her ward, she was brought by ship from Norway, but died en route. This left Scotland with at least a dozen claimants to the throne, including Sir Nicholas de Soulis. Michael Scot is said to have helped bring her back to Scotland.

Margaret Scott (mawr-gri’-sko’) n. fictional daughter of the Laird of Branxholme in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’. In the story she is in love with Henry of Cranstoun, who belongs to a family who are enemies of the Scotts, but through various twists they get married in the end. She is based upon a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, although it was Janet, not Margaret, who married a Cranston.

the Marina (thu-maw-re-nu) n. picture house, bingo hall, pub and entertainment centre on Towerdyneside, previously known by many other names, including the Empire, the Kings, and the Odeon, having originally been the Exchange Hall. It was the last commercial cinema in Hawick, and stopped showing films in June 1985, when it became a bingo hall and then a night club. The last film showing was a double bill of ‘Revenge of the Nerds’ and ‘Bachelor Party’. The building burned down in 1992 and was largely demolished in 1998.

(mawr-jør-ree-bawngks) n. John (16th C.) son of Philip, who was one of the first to use this surname. He was a younger brother of William (to whom he succeeded) and elder brother of Thomas (who represented Douglas of Cavers in 1541). He was a Guild Brother and Bailie in Edinburgh and served as Dean of Guild. He is probably the Burgess of Edinburgh of that name who in 1532 witnessed a sasine (recorded in Selkirk) for William Walker selling his tenement in Hawick to John Morlaw. Thomas of that Ilk (d.1557), son of Philip and brother of John. He was one of 10 advocates appointed as procurators nefore the Lords of Session. He served as Lord Provost.
of Edinburgh and later became Lord Clerk Register, with the title Lord Ratho. In 1541 he represented James Douglas of Cavers and his tenants in asking for reparations from Walter Scott of Branhulme for burning the farm of Whitriggs. Perhaps the same Thomas served as procurator for a case in Selkirk in 1533 regarding Sunderlandhall. Probably the same Thomas acted as agent in 1539 to receive a large number of sheep from Patrick Murray of Falahill and others, owed to the King and passed to Robert Scott of Howpasley and Ninian Anderson (formerly ‘Mairiorbankis’ and variants).

Mark (mawrk) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Crumhaugh. In 1724 he married Jean Goodfellow, who was from Roberton Parish, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Roberton. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to Robert, who was also listed there. In 1690 he witnessed a baptism for John Hastie and in 1691 probably witnessed another for Robert. In 1694 he and Robert witnessed a baptism for James Deans. George (19th C.) farmer at Hassendeanburn in the 1860s. John (17th C.) resident the Hawick area. He witnessed a Roberton baptism for Andrew Fisher in 1681 and a Hawick baptism for William Haswell in 1688. Robert (17th C.) resident at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. In 1694 he and Andrew witnessed a baptism for James Deans. He married Janet Henderson and their children included Marion (b.1691) and Margaret (b.1698). The witnesses in 1691 were Andrew [probably Mark] and Alexander [probably Wilson]. Simon (17th/18th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is listed as ‘Simon Mack, carrier’ among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He married Isobel Young and their children, baptised in Hawick, included Isobel (b.1701), Robert (b.1702), Janet (b.1708) and Agnes (b.1713). Janet (b.1694) may also have been his child. The witnesses in 1708 were Baillie George Martin and smith James Scott. Simon (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. His name appears to be written ‘Merk’ in one records. He married Helen ‘Huishon’ and their children included Anna (b.1719). The witnesses in 1719 were tailor James Turnbull and ‘Mr’ John Purdom. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1651 he witnessed a baptism for James Elliot. Probably the same William married Janet ‘Bran’ and had children Marion (b.1657) and Bessie (b.1660). Agnes (b.1645) and Marion (b.1651), with no mother’s name given, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1651 were James Elliot and George ‘diure’. He may also have witnessed a baptism in 1656 for Walter Scott ‘called of Huntlie’ (also written ‘Marke’ and ‘Merk’).

Marlside (ma-rul-sid) n. former name for lands in Hassendean Parish. It was included along with Hassendean in the 1718 survey of properties belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch, presumably corresponding to the part to the north, around Marlside Hill.

marri (ma-ri) n. marrow – ‘hearing about the move ti Gala chilled is ti the marri’, ‘My saul sall be satisfet as wi’ marra an’ fatniss . . . ’ [HSR] (also written ‘marra’).

Marriot (maur-i-i) n. Daniel ‘Rueben Watts’ or ‘Reuben Watt’ (1817–92) English stocking-maker, born in Ashover, Derbyshire, he came to Hawick in 1851. He worked diligently to promote improved public sanitation, conducting a voluminous correspondence with the newspapers, Town Council, and officials all the way up to the Home Secretary and even the Prince of Wales. He was considered a nuisance by many, complaining regularly about policing, municipal works etc. He married Mary Randle (nee Orr). After his son was killed during the Chase in 1868 he became staunchly opposed to the Common Riding. He also had sons Daniel and David. In 1861 he lived at 13 Back Row. He adopted the name ‘Reuben Watts’ in Hawick, particularly in his correspondence, and is buried at the Wellogate – ‘...While listening to its pleasing ripple Discuss great matters municipal. And sanitary measures pat To satisfy even Reuben Watt’ [VW]. George (1859–68) son of Daniel, he was killed by a horse at the end of Drumlanrig Place after rushing onto the road during the Wednesday morning Chase of 1868. This led the Council to ban galloping in the streets the following year – ‘Loan chase when a’ Hawick was grievin’, Wee George Marriot killed when leavin’ The Chennel quick, an’ horses hewed, The chase wad huv tae be reviewed’ [MB] (also written ‘Marriott’).

_Martini_ (mär'-tee-nee) n. John (15th/16th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale, succeeding William Elphinstone (senior). He resigned his rights some time before 1510, and may have served 1486–91.

_Martinee Sike_ (mär'-in-lee-si) n. stream in Southdean Parish, crossed by the A6088 shortly before the turn-off for Lethem. On the north side of the road there, between Steele Knowe and Crink Law, are the remains of a settlement, consisting of an oval enclosure about 30 m across (perhaps from the first millennium B.C.E.). A little further east, also on the north side of the road are further archaeological remains, comprising a roughly circular enclosure 14 m across and a hut circle 7 m in diameter. And further to the west of the stream are more field boundaries, a homestead site, 2 disused quarries and rig and furrow lines seen on aerial photographs. On the south side of the road there are the remains of 2 farmsteads, rig lines, cultivation terraces, small cairns and pens, surrounded by 2 large enclosures. Also on the south side of the road, but the other side of the stream is the remains of yet another homestead and hut platform. The age of all of these farmsteads is unknown, and there are no correspondong settlements on any old maps of the area. The forest there is known as Martinlee Plantation.

_Martinmas_ (mar-, mer-tin-mus) n. one of the Scottish quarter days, falling on 11th November. It was a Christian feast in commemoration of the death of St. Martin of Tours. It was formerly one of the main days used for the payment of annual rents. The land-holders of Hawick formerly had to pay the token rent to the Baron on this date, as well as on Whitsunday. The first Thursday after Martinmas was called ‘Term Thursdi’ and was once an important fair day in Hawick. In country areas the `mairt’ was killed about this day to be salted and stored for the winter – ‘...account promised be the said Adam Scott to him for his shonne fra Martinmas last to Whitsunday next’ [BR], ‘Yon gowd o’ Martinmas Cleeds timely daith. I mind o’ braw Whutson lads: Green was their graith’ [DH].

_Mary o Guise_ (mā-ree-ō-gyez) n. (1515–60) daughter of Claude de Lorraine, duc de Guise, she married Louis d’Orléans, 2nd duc de Longueville, who died in 1537. She then married James V of Scotland and became Regent after his death in 1542. She stopped her daughter Mary (later Queen of Scots) being arranged into a marriage with Prince Edward of England, thereby initiat-ing the ‘Rough Wooing’. In 1548 there is a letter in which she undertakes to support Sir Walter Scott of Bruxholme in recognition of his ‘band of manrent’ to her. She later prosecuted Protes-tants in Scotland, with the aid of Archbishop Beaton, which helped accelerate the Scottish Ref-ormation. Her death effectively brought an end to the Auld Alliance.

_Mary Queen o Scots_ (mā-ree-kween-ō-skots) n. (1542–87) Mary Stuart (or Stewart) daughter of James V and Mary of Guise, born at Linlith-gow, she became Queen of Scotland 6 days later. She was sent to France at age 6, and married Francis, which later made her Queen of France. She returned to Scotland in 1561, and after much political intrigue was forced to abdicate in favour of her son James in 1567. She went to England for support, but never met Elizabeth, instead be-ing imprisoned for 19 years, becoming implicated in various Catholic plots, and finally being be-headed at Fotheringay. In Hawick she was sig-nificant for confirming (as required by law) Douglas’ Charter to Hawick in 1545, when she was just 2½! Attempts to have her wed Henry VIII’s son Edward led to the ‘Rough Wooing’ and the burning of Hawick along with much of the rest of the Borders. She stayed temporarily in Jed-burgh, and famously rode from there to visit the wounded Earl of Bothwell at Hermitage Castle in 1566, returning the same night, possibly caus-ing an illness that incapacitated her for weeks. It has been suggested that her route proceeded via Jedburgh Castle, the Dunion, Swinnie Moor, Earlsdie, Coliforthill, Whitlaw, Flex, Priesthaugh and the Braidlie Burn (the headwaters of which are still called the Queen’s Mire). Memorabilia can be seen at ‘Mary Queen of Scots House’ in Jedburgh and in Abbotsford.

_Mary’s Well_ (mā-reez-wel) n. former spring

William (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is written ‘Messone’ (see also Masson).

the Masonic (thu-maw-so-neek) n. popular name for the Masonic Hall, referring to the former building at Myreslawgreen or the one on Union Street. There were dances organised at the Union Street hall during the 1930s, continuing during and after the War years for the benefit of troops stationed at Stobs, and often organised by Jocky Thomson.

the Masonic Hall (thu-maw-so-neek-hawl) n. former Freemason’s building at Myreslawgreen until 1922, after which No. 111 moved to Commercial Road. The other Lodge, No. 424, has been on Union Street since 1893, and often held functions in its adjoining hall. The hall at Myreslawgreen had previously been the ‘Green Kirk’, and was later used for dances, when it was referred to as ‘the Rabble’.

the Masons (thu-mā-sinz) n. the Masonic Lodge, associated with the Free and Accepted Masons, an international fraternal and charitable organisation, founded on Christianity, with its own set of rituals, acting as a meeting place for men, for social enjoyment and mutual assistance. In Hawick there have been Masons since at least 1768 and there are two separate clubs: Lodge St. John, No. 111 on Commercial Road; and Lodge St. James, B.U.R.A. No. 424 on Union Street. The second was set up after a dispute arising in the first in 1863 connected with the Volunteers. These lodges have typically had a number of the town’s most prominent men as members. There was also in the late 19th century another chapter, ‘Border Union Royal Arch Chapter No. 89’ in Hawick. The Lodge of Melrose St. John claims to be the oldest in Scotland and celebrates with a torchlight procession each 27th December. In the 19th century the local Freemasons were conspicuous at opening ceremonies and processions, e.g. for laying the foundation stone for the Subscription Rooms in 1821 and the Exchange Buildings in 1865 and at the opening ceremony for the Dod Burn water supply in 1882 – ‘These only, through their power o’er thee, Are valueless or fraught with good; There’s but one upward path for me, That path through deeds of Brotherhood’ [JEDM].

massie (maw-see) adj., arch. haughty, bumptious, overly proud – ‘Never devaaldin ti crack prood an massy about its bonnie bits an its history’ [ECS], ‘...lang or monie a massy jumpet-up toon was buggen or thocht o’ [ECS], ‘...Elect a trader ca’d John Kyle, Massy, in iz merchant style’ [MB], adv. haughtily, proudly – ‘...never devaaldin ti crack prood an massy about its bonnie bits an its history’ [ECS], ‘But I’ll up throwe thir divots Afore him, massy, his lane, Alow thon leec’in’ hunderwechts O’ marble stane!’ [DH] (also spelled ‘massy’).

Masson (maw-sin) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) weaver in Lilliesleaf. His children included: Margaret (b.1784); Agnes (b.1790); Joseph (b.1800); and Alexander (b.1802). George (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: William (b.1752); ‘Nanse’ (b.1754); and Elizabeth (b.1760). George (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He is recorded as ‘Junior’ in 1790, so he is probably son of the earlier George. His children included: Isabel (b.1784); Elizabeth (b.1786); Rabina (b.1788); George (b.1790); George (again, also b.1790); Robert (b.1792); Margaret (b.1795); and Janet (b.1797). William (20th C.) head forester on the Cavers estate. He lived with his family at the Overseer’s Cottage from about 1923 until the late 1940s. His wife was Nellie and their children were: Marjory, who married Johnnie Bryce and was postmistress at the Sandbed Post Office; Hellen, who married Allan Watt of Dovemount newsagent’s; and Ina, who married Thomas Brockie of Hawthornside farm (this name may be a variant of Mason).

Master Grain (maw-stur-gran) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Skelfhill Burn, rising between Millstone Edge and Langtai Hill. It is marked on a 1718 survey of Skelfhill farm.

Masterton (maw-stur-tin) n. Thomas (b.1828/9) from Edinburgh. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Sandbed, along with William Richmond. The pair are listed in the 1851 census and as ‘Richmond & Masterton’ in Slater’s 1852 directory.

Mathane (maw-thaan) n. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Mathane’ when he was Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1394. He is described as ‘teacher and schoolmaster’ of David, Earl of Carrick, eldest son of the King of Scotland, who petitioned for a benefice for him. It is unclear where he was from. Nothing else appears to be known about him.

Mather (ma-dur) n. Andrew of Lanton (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English raid Goldielands and neighbouring farms. His name is recorded as ‘Andro Mader of Langtoun’. In 1553/4 he was ‘Andream Mader de Langtoun’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Walter Scott of Branxholme. He could be the ‘Andrew Meyther’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was closely related to James, John and Margaret, who are listed separately. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as ‘cottar’ at Rule-townfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Daniel (1716/7–99) tenant farmer at Ashybank. He paid tax for having a saddle horse at Ashybank in the years 1789–97. He was recorded as owner of 10 farm horses and 1 saddle horse there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Chisholme, who died in 1795, aged 72. Their son James succeeded as tenant of Ashybank. Daniel (1808–69) son of James, he was born at Ashybank. He took over from his father as tenant of Hallrule when he reached majority. Sometime during his tenancy of Hallrule a large cairn was removed, inside which was discovered an ‘urn’ (which has not survived). He was said to be a big, powerful-looking man, with a slow, deep voice and possessed of an abundance of common sense. He lived in Rule Water for more than 50 years. He was responsible for ploughing Ruberslaw almost up to the crags (although this resulted in the removal of an ancient cairn). He was a keen horseman and rode with the Buccleuch Hunt. He also purchased land in Ireland and improved the farms there, although in 1855 he was shot in the back there, taking several months to recover, despite attempting to follow his assailant on horseback. He also had some pellets embedded in his forehead until his death. As a result of this purchase in Ireland he was referred to as ‘of Falty Park, Ballinasloe’. He was still recorded as farmer at Hallrule in 1868. He died unmarried and left his property to his sister’s son John Arres (who added his surname). John and James Arres erected a memorial to his memory (and including other family members) in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. George (17th C.) tenant in ‘Langtoune’ (i.e. Lanton). The will of his wife Helen Brown is recorded in 1686. George (18th C.) dyker in Lanton. His wife ‘Isble Madder’ died in 1762, aged 39, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Helen (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598 as schoolmaster at Longnewton. He is also recorded in deeds of 1608 and 1609 as schoolmaster at Bedrule. Probably the same James was schoolmaster at Jedburgh and Hundalee in 1610. James (17th C.) recorded as owner of lands at Lanton in the 1643 valuation rolls. He also held ‘the lands called Turnbull’s lands’ in Jedburgh Parish. He was probably son or brother of John of Lanton, who is also listed in 1643. Probably the same James is recorded at Lanton in 1663. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was probably closely related to Andrew, John and Margaret. He may be the James recorded as owner of lands at Lanton valued at £580 in 1678 (and also lands in Ulston); at the same time William of Lanton held the bulk of the lands there, and so was probably his father or elder brother. James (1761/2-1826) farmer, who was tenant at Ashybank in the first quarter of the 19th century. He was son of Daniel, who farmed there before him. In 1813 made an offer to be tenant of Langburnshiel, his success being announced after the Laird, James Elliot of Harwood, dined with all the prospective tenants in the Tower Inn in Hawick. A few years later he leased Hallrule farm. He married Rachel Ogilvie, who died in 1837, aged 71. Their son Daniel took over the farm, and they also had a daughter, Jessie. James (18th/19th C.) lived at Mosshouses, Dykeraw and Southdean. He married Janet Synton and their children included: John (b.1804); Peter (b.1805); Janet (b.1808); Agnes (b.1811); James (b.1812); Margaret; Ann, who married Matthew Henderson in Oxnam; and Cecilia, who married William Telfer in Jedburgh. James (c.1810–bef. 1857) gardener, grocer and spirit dealer in Wilton. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory in Wilton, as grocer and spirit dealer. He is recorded among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840, when he was a gardener at Damside. He was a gardener and spirit dealer at Damside on the 1841 census. By 1851 his widow was a vintner on Wilton Path and she was listed as grocer on Wilton Path in Slater’s 1852 directory, suggesting that he was already deceased by then. He was also a master gardener. He married Janet Lillico. Their children included: Andrew (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); Agnes (b.1835), who married Robert Weir and secondly Robert Cavers (in 1857, by which time he was deceased); and James (b.1839). His father may be the ‘Mr. Mather’ whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map along what became Baker Street. This may thus be the family that gave its name to Mather’s Close. Janet (b.1800/1) grocer listed on Wilton Path in 1851 and in Slater’s 1852 directory, as well as in 1861. She was married to James, who appears to have died at least by 1857. In 1861 she was living with her daughter Agnes Cavers (also a widow) and granddaughter Robina Cavers. Rev. John (d.bef. 1642) son of William of Lanton, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1598. He became minister at Minto in 1601 and was translated to Hassendean in 1602. He was deposed in 1609 for ‘divers slanders (keeping licentious company, &c.)’. His widow is described as being destitute in 1642. Robert Collace was recorded as being Reader at Hassendean in 1606, so it may be that Collace was the actual preacher, while Mader simply held the living. John of Lanton (17th C.) recorded as owner of lands in Jedburgh Parish in 1643. It is possible he is the same man as Rev. John. Andrew and the recently deceased John, recorded as owners of lands in Lanton in 1788, were probably his descendants. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was related to Andrew, James and Margaret. John (18th C.) Town Piper in Hawick, probably around 1732–41. His surname is recorded as ‘Meader’. In 1732 he was recorded being paid for playing at the King’s Rantin. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. She was probably widow of a farmer near Newton. Thomas (16th C.) listed among the occupiers of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at Little Withhaugh in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (18th/19th C.) son of Daniel and probably father of James. He farmed at Ashybank for 12 years up until 1802, which may have been when he died.

Matheson

(16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmus Mader of Langtoun’ in 1569 when he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He is probably the William of Lanton whose son was Rev. John, minister of Minto. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘William Mader of Langtoun’ in 1610 when he was listed on an inquest for lands in Rulewater. William of Lanton (17th C.) leased the lands of ‘Kaimes and the Hills’ from Walter Riddell of Minto in 1683. He paid the land tax in Jedburgh Parish in 1678, his lands of Lanton being valued at about £680; at the same time James (probably his son) had land valued at about £580. He was described as ‘in Longtoun’ in 1686/7 when Walter Scott, Earl of Tarriars took him to court for non-payment of duties for the lands of ‘Kaimes and Minto hills’. But he sub-leased the same lands to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth in 1687. He is probably the William of Lanton recorded in 1707 with lands valued at about £650; at that time ‘J. and W. Madders portioners there’ had land valued at about £520. William (b.1806/7) tailor in Minto. He is recorded there in 1852. His children included Helen and Isabella. William (b.1857) son of Rachel Tait, born at Wauchope Waas. He took over the local carrier’s business from his grandfather William Tait in the mid-1880s. In 1884 he married Elspeth Scott from Twislehope and they had a daughter Margaret Jane. His wife became the local post-mistress (also formerly spelled ‘Mader’, ‘Madder’ and ‘Meader’).

Mather’s Close (maw-thurz-kłos) n. former passageway off the High Street situated where Baker Street is now. It was once an area of severely over-crowded housing, with shops at the top, and only a narrow passageway connecting to the High Street. There was also a smithy near the top. The 1858 Ordnance Survey map shows a bridge over the mill lade at the bottom. The close was opened up into a street about 1868 when No. 75 High Street was rebuilt.

Mathieson

n. James (17th/18th C.) smith at Kirkhope in at least the period 1698–1702. He married Agnes Coltart and their children included: Jean (b.1695); Walter (b.1698); and an unnamed child (b.1702). James (18th/19th C.) recorded as blacksmith in Ashkirk in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His name is recorded as ‘Matthewson’. His wife may have been Mary, who was living with children John, Ann and Robert at Ashkirk Mill in 1841. John (b.1812/3) veterinary surgeon and blacksmith in Ashkirk. He may be son of James, who was blacksmith earlier in Ashkirk. He was at Ashkirk Mill in 1841 and was resident of the smithy also known as Crowkowse. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Landed Proprietor & Vetinary Surgeon, Farmer of 22 acres & Blacksmith’. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 he was listed as owner of the lands in Lilliesleaf that had formerly belonged to Andrew Gray. He married Isabella Redford and their children included: Margaret (b.1843); Mary Anne (b.1845); and Isabella (b.1850). Peter (b.1816/7) gardener living at Borthwickshiel Cottage in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was gardener at Wolfeee. He married Agnes Gledstains in Peebles in 1838 and their children included: Helen; Louisa; Jane; Euphemia; Andrew (b.1844); Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’, b.1844); Thomas (b.1847); Margaret E. (b.1849); James; and Robert (b.1857). Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in 1722, the marriage being proclaimed in Bedrule and Minto Parishes. Rev. William (1849–1913) training at Edinburgh Theological Hall, he was the last minister of the old Congregational Kirk in Hawick, replacing Rev. W.L. Walker, but only staying for part of 1877. The congregation had already dwindled, and probably those remaining joined the Evangelical Kirk, which later changed its name to become today’s Congregational Kirk. He was later minister at Stewartfield, Aberdeenshire and Cumnock, Ayrshire (sometimes written ‘Mathewson’ or ‘Matthewson’; see also Mathieson).

Mathieson’s (maw-thee-zinz) n. bakers and confectioners on the west side of North Bridge Street through much of the 20th century.

Mathieson (maw-thee-sinz) n. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (19th C.) brother of James. He was gardener at Weens, and together with his brother and John Halliday (‘the Rustic Bard’) founded the Hobkirk Flower Show. In 1851 he and his nephew saw ‘a man walking in the sky’, i.e. a ‘Brocken spectre’ or mirage illusion of a man’s shadow, as reported by John Halliday. He could be the Alexander living at Borthwickshiel Cottage with gardener Peter in 1841. James (19th C.) brother of Sandy, he was gardener at Wauchope, and one of the founders of the Hobkirk Flower Show. James (1825/6–1900) grandson of Sir Walter Scott’s coachman. He was a foreman at Weensland Mills. He married Charlotte Sinclair, who died in 1889, aged 62. Their children included Charlotte, Allison and Thomas (all of whom died young), as well as another Charlotte and William Sinclair (who was a confectioner and Maxpoffle (mawks-po-ful) n. Victorian red sandstone house near Bowden. It was built in the 1860s to replace a house constructed c.1810. The lands also contain the remains of a cylindrical dovecote, probably from the 17th century. ‘Adam de Maxpoffel’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 and was ‘Adam Makepoffel’ that same year when he had his lands in Roxburghshire restored to him. Rev. Andrew Duncanson of Maxton paid the land tax there in 1678 (the name derives from Old English ‘small piece of land belonging to Maccus, where Maccus is an Irish or Scandinavian form of Magnus, cf. Mackside; it is ‘Maxpople’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

maxter (maks-tur) n., arch. a mixture – ‘Humour and faith weel blent thegither To match the maxter o’ the days’ [WL] (cf. the more common mixtur).

Maxton (maks-tin) n. village on the A699 between St. Boswells and Kelso, a former station on the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway, and a Parish bordering on St. Boswells and Roxburgh. Destroyed by Hertford’s men in 1545, it was made a Burgh of Barony in 1587, with the Ker’s the original landowners. The parish church is mid-18th century, with portions of an earlier building, and the Maxton Cross is on the former village green. A history of the Parish was published by Charles Denoon in 2000 (the origin is probably ‘the farm belonging to Maccus’ and first appears as ‘Mackestun’ in 1116).

Maxton Court (mawks-tin-kör’) n. part of Stitches, adjacent to Oxnam Court, built in 1976 and named after the village.

Maxwell (maks-wul, -wel) n. Agnes (c.1534-94) 4th Lady of Herries. She was the only daughter and heir of William, 3rd Lord Herries. Her maiden name should probably be considered as ‘Herries’. She married John Maxwell, son of the 5th Lord Maxwell (after Maxwell had sought agreement from her guardian, the Earl of Arran, using 2,000 horsemen!; Maxwell eventually became Lord Herries himself, but later suffered for his support of Mary Queen of Scots). They had 4 sons and 7 daughters, including William, who succeeded. She was the superior of part of the Barony of Feu-Rule (essentially Hobkirk Parish), inherited from her father. There was a major dispute with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1561 and 1562 over the Barony, resulting in her lands being fixed at 1/3 of half of the Barony. Alex see Mowdie Maxwell. Alexander Harley of Portrack (1782-1853) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale and Liddesdale in the period 1833–51. He married Sarah Telfer Hyslop. Maxwell a regular visitor to Newcastleton and elsewhere. He carried a brass-bound wooden box on his back from which he sold cheap jewellery, pocket knives, shaving necessities, etc. He was said to resemble Father Christmas and wear a very tall hat. He was living at 5 High Street on the 1861 census, along with his son William, daughter Ellen and 2 grandchildren. His occupation was given as 'Travelling Toy & Jewelery Mcht.' Archibald of Liddelbank and Liverpool (19th C.) along with Thomas (probably his son) he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. Sir Aymer (d.1266) son of John, who was Chamberlain of Scotland. He was also Chamberlain, as well as Justiciar. His name was written 'Eynmer' and other variants. Along with his father, he witnessed a charter for Melrose Abbey’s lands in Ettrick in 1235/6. He granted the lands of Todrig to Alexander de Synton in about 1260. He may be the same as the ‘Elmerno de Maxwell’ who was ‘vicecomite’ (i.e. Sheriff) of Roxburghshire in about 1250 when he witnessed a deed of Lempitlaw to Soutra. He was removed by King Alexander from his Council, because of offences against England, in a document drawn up at Sprouston in 1255. Lands in Tynedale were delivered to him in 1260/1. He was recorded as the King’s Sheriff in 1262. He married Mary (or Maria) McGeachen of Mearns and was succeeded by his son Sir Herbert. Charles (b.c.1765) surgeon recorded at Riccarton in 1835. He was also there in 1841, along with 2 Janes, probably his wife and daughter. He probably married Jean Jardine and they had a daughter Mary in 1800. He may be the ‘Mr. C. Maxwell, surgeon’ in Jedburgh in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He is probably the Dr. Maxwell who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library in 1832. George (16th C.) Hawick merchant mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He is listed as being owed money for ‘merchandice and furneising of the Lairdis seruandis’, however, it is unclear what sort of merchant he was. Perhaps the same George was listed in 1571 as one of 4 inhabitants of Hawick who entered themselves to remain in ward in Leith, with Sir William Ker of Caverton as cautioner. In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Perniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as cautioner. Gilbert (13th/14th C.) received the eastern half of the Barony of Wilton (with Henry Wardlaw being granted the other part) in 1306, presumably for helping Robert the Bruce in his struggle to achieve independence for Scotland. However, in 1342 he pledged the estate to the monks of Melrose Abbey for the payment of one silver penny at the festival of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, while holding the right for himself or his heirs to redeem the land for the payment of £40 sterling. It appears that the land was indeed redeemed, and was later forfeited and returned to the Crown. His seal bore a lion rampant with a saltire on top and the words ‘S GILBERTI DE MAXWELE’. Sir Herbert de (d.c.1206) Sheriff of Teviotdale as well as Dumfries. He is only the 2nd or 3rd recorded generation of Maxwells, but little is known about him. He witnessed the confirmation of the church of Hassendean to Paisley Abbey in the 1180s. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Yorkshire in 1190/1. He had 3 sons: John, who was Sheriff of Roxburgh and Chamberlain of Scotland; Aymer; and Robert. The later Baron of Wilton, Gilbert, was probably a descendant of his, James (16th/17th C.) member of the court of James VI, who was rewarded in 1605, along with Robert Douglas, with the former Debatable Lands. These were erected into the Barony of Tarras. However, in 1607 the two men brought a case against many Armstrongs and others who had tried to prevent them from possessing the lands. In a second Act of 1609 the lands were granted to him alone. James (b.1808/9) from Kirkcaldy, he was a tinsmith in Hawick. He was on the Kirk Wynd in 1841 and on the Roond Close in 1851. His wife was Janet and they had children Robert, Isabella, Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), Agnes, Jane, Hannah and Mary Ann. John (d.1241) Chamberlain to King Alexander II, he also served as Sheriff of Berwick and Sheriff of Roxburgh. He was son of Herbert and brother of Aymer. He witnessed a charter between Gervase Avenel and Melrose Abbey in 1214. He is recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh when he witnessed grants involving Kelso Abbey from at least 1214 and also and another in the period 1213–19 for Patrick of Whittton to Melrose Abbey. In 1215 he was among a few men sent by the King to the English court to attend to his affairs. In 1220 he witnessed a pledge by King Alexander to marry King Henry of England’s sister Joan, and in 1221 he witnessed the dowry charter for Joan of England, which included Jedburgh and Hassendean. He was also recorded as Sheriff in 1225 and 1226. As Chamberlain he is also named in many other documents in the 1220s and 1230s.

He witnessed the charter granting lands in Ettrick to Melrose Abbey in 1235/6. He was succeeded by his son Aymer. John (d.1513) 4th Lord, son of John. He succeeded his father in 1486 and also then became Warden of the West Marches. He was recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502, when he was fined for non-appearence for his Roxburghshire lands of Maxwellfield. In 1508 he, along with William Douglas of Drumlanrig and their men attacked the Crichtons and others in Dumfries. He married Agnes, daughter of James Stewart, 1st Earl of Buchan. They had at least 8 children, including Robert, who succeeded. He was killed at Flodden. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Sir John 4th Lord Herries of Terregles (c.1512–82/3) younger brother of Robert, 5th Lord of Maxwell. He served as Warden of the West Marches in 1552 and was reappointed in 1561. He was said to be a great supporter of Mary, Queen of Scots. He was listed (on the side of Sir Walter of Buccleuch) on the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. The situation was sufficiently lawless in the West Marches that in 1565 the Privy Council laid out what would happen to his wife and children in the event that he should die performing his duties as Warden. In 1579 he made pledges to bring certain Armstrongs before the Privy Council, and also had a disagreement about ownership of lands with Christie Armstrong of ‘Barngleis’. He married Agnes Herries (daughter and heiress of William, 3rd Lord Herries), from whom he inherited his titles. He was succeeded by his son William, the 5th Lord. John 7th Lord Maxwell (1553–93) posthumously born 2nd son of Robert, the 5th Lord. He succeeded after his older brother Robert died aged 4. He and other Maxwellss were sureties in 1569 for 5 Scotts of Ewesdale. In 1572 he was among the men who signed the return for James Douglas to the Barony of Hawick. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He was made Warden of the West Marches in the 1570s, although for a while the title was given to his rivals the Johnstones. He was recorded in the register of the Privy Council several times in the 1570s. He and Robert of Cowhill served as sureties for several Armstrongs and others who were being held in ward. He temporarily received the Earldom of Morton, after the Regent Morton was executed in 1581. He was denounced as a rebel in 1581 for failing to present Armstrongs and Beatties to answer their rieving crimes. He was a strong supporter of the old Catholic religion and was involved with other Lords in struggles for power in Scotland. In 1585, for his good service to the King, he and his followers (a huge number named explicitly) had relief for all their crimes committed since 1569. However, in 1587 he was again out of favour with the King, and was plotting to help the Spanish Armada invade England. He was captured and imprisoned in Edinburgh, but released in 1589. He was again Warden of the West Marches 1590–92. He gathered allies in order to attack the Johnstones, the conflict taking place at Dryfe Sands near Lockerbie in December 1593. These allies included Drumlanrig, who, however, left the battle early with his men. On the Johnstone side were many Scotts, Elliots, Armstrongs, Chisholmes and others from the Hawick area. His force suffered a complete rout and he himself was killed, after being cornered and having his right hand cut off. A letter of ‘respite’ by James VI in 1594 lists about 160 men implicated in his slaughter, including many from Teviotdale and Liddesdale. 2 thorn trees ‘Maxwell’s Thorns’ were said to have been planted where he fell. He married Elizabeth, daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. He was succeeded by his son John. John 6th Lord Herries (1583–c.1627) son of William, 5th Lord of Herries. In 1604 he was served heir to his father William in the Barony of Feu-Rule, which was erected with other lands into the Barony of Herries. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John, 8th Lord Maxwell and was succeeded by his son John, 7th Lord Herries. John 8th Lord Maxwell (c.1585–1613) son of John, who was killed at Dryfe Sands. He was served heir to his father’s extensive properties in 1604, including farms in Ewesdale. He was a Catholic, like his father, and was imprisoned in 1601 for ‘favouring Popery’. He escaped Edinburgh Castle in 1602 and had 2 of the Johnstones killed, although there was supposedly a reconciliation in 1605. He challenged William Douglas of Lochleven to a duel over the Morton title, and was again imprisoned in Edinburgh in 1607. However, he once more escaped (although his fellow prisoner Sir James Macdonald was found hiding in a dung hill). Another meeting was arranged to attempted reconciliation with the Johnstones, at which he shot Sir James Johnstone in the back. Tried in his absence in 1609 he fled to France, returned to Scotland in 1612, was captured and executed. The lands and titles he forfeited included the Lordship of the lower part of Ewesdale. He married the only sister of James, 2nd Marquis of Hamilton. His titles and lands were forfeited, but eventually reacquired by his brother Robert. His tale is reaquired by the phrase ‘Lord Maxwell’s Good Night’. John 3rd Earl of Nithsdale, 7th Lord Herries (d.1677) son of John, 6th Lord Herries of Terregles, his mother being Elizabeth Maxwell, sister of Robert, 1st Earl of Nithsdale. He succeed his great-grandfather’s brother Robert in 1670, as Lord of Maxwell, Eskdale and Carlisle. He was also superior of lands in Arkleton, Meikledale, Ewesdale, including Flask, Howgill, Glendivian, Burngrains, Wolfhope, Park, Terrona and Whitsheils. He married Elizabeth Gordon and was succeeded by his son, Robert, 4th Earl of Nithsdale. John of Broomholm (d.1806) son of William of Broomholm and Agnes Scott of Woll. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He married Wilhelmina Malcolm and was succeeded in turn by his sons George and David. John (b.1802/3) stockmaking who was noted as one of those who helped during the cholera outbreak of 1849. He was the father of John. John (19th/20th C.) plumber and conductor of the Saxhorn Band. Mina (b.1798/9) recorded as ‘Ind.’ at the farm of Wrae in Ewesdale in the 1841 census. Mysie see Mysie Maxwell. Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Edinburgh. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence presumably had a local connection. Robert 4th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1546) son of John, who was killed at Flodden. He was part of James V’s Royal Council, also serving as Extraordinary Lord of Session and High Admiral. In addition he was Warden of the West Marches and in 1526 was appointed as Justiciar. He was one of the Border chiefs imprisoned briefly in 1530 for failing to keep control of thieves. He was said to have been terrified of the power of Johnnie Armstrong and when James V had Armstrong hanged, he received a charter for his lands, signed by the King at Priesthaugh. In 1530/1 he was a surety for the entry of John, son of Walter Scott of Synton and William, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh. He served as interim Keeper of Hermitage in the 1530s while the Earl of Bothwell was imprisoned or exiled; in 1534 their is an entry in the Lord High Treasurer’s accounts to him ‘for keeping the House of Armytage and Rowlings of the inhabitants of Liddesdale for ye space of seven months’ and another entry in 1540 for repairing the castle. He resigned the lands of Park in Ewesdale, for which David Armstrong had a charter in 1535. In 1537 he was granted the lands and possessions in Ewesdale previously belonging to Simon Armstrong of Whitaugh. In 1540 Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch offered to take over the rule of Eskdale, Ewesdale and Wauchopedale if he would not take it. In 1541 an English letter claims he had met at Langholm with 2 Armstrongs, 2 Elliots and 2 Croziers, to encourage them to carry out raids on England. He was captured by the English at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and secondly married Agnes, daughter of James Stewart, 1st Earl of Buchan. His children included: Margaret, who married Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Douglas; Robert, who succeeded; and Sir John, Lord Herries of Terregles. Robert 5th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1552) son of Robert. He succeeded his father in the Barony of Caerlaverock and other lands in 1550. He also held several farms in Ewesdale and Eskdale. In 1545 he was ‘Master of Maxwell’ when listed among Border lairds who gave assurance to ‘have na intelligence with Inglan’. He married Beatrix, daughter of James Douglas, 3rd Earl of Morton. He was Warden of the West Marches from 1550 (but perhaps replacing his father as early as 1542) until his death. He was succeeded by his sons Robert and John. Robert 6th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1554) son of Robert and Beatrix Douglas. He succeeded his father as an infant and died when still just 4, being in turn succeeded by his brother John. Robert 4th Earl of Nithsdale (1628–96) succeeded his father John in his many titles and lands. This included superiority of the farms of Nether Ewesdale. He married Lucy Douglas, daughter of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas. He was succeeded by his son William. Robert G. (1877/8–1916) elder brother of William, founder and head of the woollen manufacturers Robert G. Maxwell & Co., based in Docevocote Street. He lived at the Limes on Rae son Park. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He enlisted into the Seaforth Highlanders in 1914, became Captain and died during an advance on Kut, Mesopotamia. Stewart (b.c.1795) woolen hosier, living at ‘Wilton Lodge Park cottage’ in 1841. This was probably somewhere near the end of Langlands Road. William (14th C.) holder of the (eastern) half barony of Wilton, and hence probably the heir of Gilbert. He appears to have redeemed the estate from the monks of Melrose Abbey and then forfeited it to the Crown, sometime around 1340. It was then granted to John, son of Margaret Maxwellheugh (surname not given). He is possibly the William, who along with his wife, was granted the lands of 'Apiltrie' by King Robert, after being forfeited by Thomas Carnoto (probably Charteris); this is likely to be Appletreethall, although there are other possibilities. William (1555–1604) 5th Lord Herries, son of Agnes Herries and Sir John Maxwell. He held part of the Barony of Feurule. In 1587 he served as Warden of the Western Marches. In 1597 he complained against Englishmen for stealing large amounts of livestock from his farms, as well as ransoming 4 of his servants. In 1602 he granted the wardship of Appotside and Tythehouse to James Hamilton and also the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside to him during the minority of Hector Lorraine. In 1603 he granted a marriage contract between Turnbells in Feurule. He married Catherine, daughter of Commendator Mark Kerr and was succeeded by his son John, 6th Lord Herries. Rev. William (1600–51) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1620, he was presented to Minto Parish at the end of 1624 and admitted there in 1625. He was the minister of Minto who signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638 (although his name was transcribed 'Mr Wm. Murray (?)'. He preached at Bedrule in 1640, during the ceremony to admit Henry Elliot as the new minister there. He was presented to St. Mary's Kirk of the Lowes in 1641, but the move did not happen, instead he remained at Minto until his death. He married Anna Inglis and was survived by his wife and 4 children. William 5th Earl of Nithsdale (1676–1744) succeeded his father Robert in his many titles and lands in 1696. In 1698 he was also served heir (perhaps just to reconfirm his rights) to the lands and titles of his ancestor Robert (great-grandfather of his father and older brother of John, Lord Herries, who was grandfather of John, Earl of Nithsdale, also his grandfather). This included superiority of the farms of Nether Ewesdale. His mother was Lucie Douglas, daughter of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas. He took part in the Jacobite rising of 1715, was captured and imprisoned in the Tower of London, but escaped by changing clothes with his wife's maid. He fled to Rome, but lost all his titles and properties. William (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of the lands in Lilliesleaf valued at £10. William (d.1916) brother of Robert G., and partner in the Dovecote Street manufacturing business. He was killed at the Somme (formerly spelled 'Mackuswell', 'Maxwall' and variants).

Maxwellheugh (maks-wul-hewe) n. hamlet just south of Kelso (the origin of the name is probably from the Old English personal name 'Maccus', along with 'wiella hoh' meaning 'height beside the pool'; the name is first recorded as 'Mackus well' about 1200).

Maxwell’s (maks-wulz, -welz) n. former woollen manufacturer and cloth merchants, R.G. Maxwell & Co., located in the building in Dovecote Street which was converted into Horne Court. McCartney (mu-kawr-nee) n. Rev. Alexander C. (1930–2009) raised in Ayrshire, he was educated at Cumnock Academy, trained as an engineer in Kilmarnock and became an engineering officer in the Merchant Marines. He later worked at Prestwick and the electricity board, but later in life trained for the ministry. He was assistant at Castlehills Church in Ayr, then minister at Kelty Parish in Fife in 1974. In 1985 he became minister of St. Mary’s Church (linked with Cavers and Kirkton). The link with Cavers and Kirkton was broken in 1988, and he remained as minister of St. Mary’s until 1987. He was keenly involved in local music, and took riding lessons so he could gain his Mosstroopers’ Badge. He was also a regular speaker at Burns suppers, and a football fan. From 1987 he was minister of Caputh, Cluny and Kinclaven in Perthshire and retired in 1995. He and his wife Nancy then moved to Crail. They had a son Keith and daughter Elha. Robin Bruce ‘Bruce’ son of Robert, he was a chemistry teacher at Langholm Academy. While at Edinburgh University he was President of the Railway Society, and took part in the protests related to the closure of the Waverley Line in 1969. He wrote ‘The Railway to Langholm: An Illustrated Record’ (1991) and was co-compiler (with Brenda I. Morrison) of ‘The Ewes Valley’ (2000). Kenneth ‘Kenny’ (1953– ) played for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1970s and has refereed at all levels, including internationals in the 1990s. He is a fireman by trade. He was also Acting Father in 2000, has been a Scottish Borders Councillor and became Honorary Provost in 2005. Robert (1909–96) writer of ‘A Song O’ Hawick’. He was born in Wilton Dean, brought up in the Westend and lived later at Lockhart Place. The family originally came from the Langholm area and he was a cousin of the father of Kenny. He was a Kennedy-Dechan gold medallist at the High School in 1924. He spent the years of WWII with Montgomery’s 8th Army, but otherwise spent his working life as a solicitor’s clerk with Purdom’s. He was Treasurer of the Liberal Club for many years and was heavily involved in the P.S.A. Choir. He always enjoyed music and played the mouth organ. He spent his later life in Buccleuch Rest Home, where he started writing local verse. He recorded his ‘A Song O’ Hawick’ on cassette tape, and it was transcribed by Ian Seeley in 1990. He died in the Cottage Hospital and was buried in the Wellogate.

McCaskie (mu-kaw-skee) n. Thomas owner of a hat factory in Under Danseide in the mid-19th century. This was probably formerly the business premises of William Wilson’s. In 1821 he married Elizabeth Taylor (aunt of another Elizabeth Taylor, mother of David Hardie of Blenheim, Richardson), and she died in 1863, aged 70. They had a son George, who died aged 20. Their daughters Charlotte and Margaret ran a girl’s school in Bourtree Place for a while, but later emigrated to Australia.

McClymont (mu-ki-min) n. Rev. James (1809–86) Denholm Minister, born at Dalmellington in Ayrshire. He was educated at Glasgow University and the Divinity Hall in Edinburgh, became minister at Birdhopecraig in Northumberland, then was assistant in Ayrshire and was ordained in 1837. However, he left the Established Church to join the Free Church, and was called to Carsphairn and Dalmellington, but was not settled there. He was translated to New Hampstead in London in 1846 and then became minister at Denholm Free Kirk 1847–86, one of the longest serving ministers there. For the last few years he was assisted by Thomas Pitt. He married three times, one wife being Mary Roxburgh, with whom he had a son, James Roxburgh. His last wife was Elizabeth Rutherford Turnbull. Their children were: Andrew Colville (b.1872); John Campbell (b.1874); William ‘Willie’ (b.1876); Anna Marion (b.1877); and Alexander Watson ‘Alec’ (b.1879), who was a United Free Church minister. His last child was born when he was 70 years old. He died in Edinburgh.

McColl (mu-kol) n. Rev. Alexander Munn (1831–66) born in Liverpool, only son of Alexander, a sailor from Greenock, he was educated at Glasgow University. He was ordained as minister of Cavers in 1854 and remained there until his death. He married Jane Carfax, daughter of William Elliot of Hawick. She later married advocate David Duncan and died in 1893 (also written ‘Maccoll’ and ‘M’Coll’).

McConnell (mu-ko-nul) n. Brian (1950/1– ) brother of David, he played centre forward in football. Both brothers excelled at swimming and represented Scotland in water polo. They first played football for a team in Denholm, moving to Hawick United Colts and then the senior team. They were also part of a successful five-side team and both moved to play for Selkirk. He later played for Hawick Royal Albert (including in their Scottish Qualifying Cup-winning team). He then returned to Hawick United and finished his playing days at Hawick Legion at the age of 48.

David (1951/2—) brother of Brian, he initially played football at full-back, but was best remembered as a goalkeeper. After a defeat to Montrose in the Scottish Cup in 1974 he was asked to play in a trial for St. Mirren reserves, followed by a trial in goal for the first team against Rangers. He was signed by Alex Ferguson for St. Mirren and stayed for a season. He then played for Berwick Rangers, had to quit because of injury, but returned to play for Hawick Royal Albert before coaching Hawick Legion. Rev. Robert minister of Roberton Kirk 1966–83. He was also responsible for Teviothead masculine in 1851 directory. In 1851 and on Slater’s directory as `Railway Manager’ at Shankendshiels. He lived there with his wife Janet and son Peter. He could be the ‘Mr. MacDonald’ who operated the Turf Hotel at Shankend and some other sod-built pubs to serve the navvies working on the Hawick to Carlisle railway line. James (19th/20th C.) referred to as ‘Pastor’ and ‘the Kilwinning Martyr’, he was a fraudulent anti-Catholic preacher. He started a Protestant Guild in Hawick in about 1913, but was arrested for deserting his family in Hamilton. There were wild scenes in Hawick when he tried to return, caused by an antagonistic crowd, outnumbering his supporters. He was later fined for drunkenness in Hawick. Robert (b.c.1780) born in Wigtown, he was a nailer at the Sandbed, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row with wife Elizabeth and children Joan, Flora, Elizabeth, Jane, Anne and Margaret. In 1851 he was on the Kilmarnock, she grew up in Ayrshire and later lived in Northern Ireland before moving to Hawick. She worked in Bantel her entire working life. She was a successful lawn bowler, starting in Northern Ireland, where she was part of the winning fours team in Irish national competition in 1971 and the British Isles fours championship in 1972. In Hawick she became a member of the Buccleuch Bowling Club. She first represented Scotland in 1981, paying as skip for most of the next 13 years, which included winning the silver medal in Singles at the 1986 Commonwealth Games. She won the Scottish Pairs in 1992, the Scottish Triples in 1993, as well as 3 World Championships. She married James (‘Jim’) and had sons Stewart and Alan.

McCrae (mu-krā) n. Lt.-Col. David (1845–1930) from Balmaghie in Kirkcudbrightshire, he emigrated to Canada with his father Thomas and lived in Guelph. He was partner in the firm McCrae & Armstrong, along with John Armstrong of Hawick, and they employed many weavers who had come from around Hawick. Robert Ewan describes being shown around Guelph by him in ‘Through Canada in 1878’. He was father of John, writer of the WWI poem ‘In Flanders Fields’.

McCrerie (mu-krä-ree) n. Charles W. ‘Charlie’ Cornet in 1975, often referred to as ‘the Sunshine Cornet’ because of how sunny it was at the Common Riding that year. He was also one of the founder members of the Border Horse Racin Association.

McCrone (mu-krōn) n. Senga (1933/4–2020) born in Kilmarnock, she grew up in Ayrshire and later lived in Northern Ireland before moving to Hawick. She worked in Bantel her entire working life. She was a successful lawn bowler, starting in Northern Ireland, where she was part of the winning fours team in Irish national competition in 1971 and the British Isles fours championship in 1972. In Hawick she became a member of the Buccleuch Bowling Club. She first represented Scotland in 1981, paying as skip for most of the next 13 years, which included winning the silver medal in Singles at the 1986 Commonwealth Games. She won the Scottish Pairs in 1992, the McCrone (mu-krōn) n. Flora, Jane and Ann. Verran (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a restaurant at the Station Buildings. A photograph taken in the 1920s shows him outside his business. William (b.1807/8) from Knockando in Invernesshire, he was a lime-burner at Limekilnedge. He was recorded there in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included William and Ann (see also MacDonald).

McDonald’s (muk-do-muldz) n. former restaurant at the Station Buildings, run by Robert McDonald. It did a roaring business in the heyday of the railway, serving breakfasts, teas and dinners. McDonald and staff can be seen outside the business premises in a photograph of the 1920s. The location was later the Station Launderette and the Shugonda Balti House.

the McDonald Shelter (thu-muk-do-muld-she-l-tur) n. public shelter constructed on the Station side of the North Bridge in 1959, constructed of concrete slabs, with public toilets attached. Construction was made possible through a bequest of the McDonald family (related to Swintons). It was demolished around 2000 during construction of the Waverley Bridge.

McDougall (muk-doo-gul) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) son of Dungal. He was listed as son and heir of his father in 1477/8, in the lands of Makerstoun and Yetholm. He is ‘And. Mdkwll-ell de Mkarstoun’ in 1490/1 when he witnessed a charter for Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. He witnessed a confirming charter for the Barony of Wilton (for John Scott) in 1494. He had a confirming charter for the Barony of Yetholm in 1495. He witnessed a charter for Adam Hepburne of Craigs in 1505 and another for Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, in 1506/7. In 1510 he and about 20 of his associates were charged with robbing and harassing Katherine Hoppringle (perhaps the widow of his father), depriving her of the lands to which she was legally entitled. He married Elizabeth daughter of Patrick Hepburn, 1st Lord of Hailes. He was probably father of Thomas (who married Janet Scott of Howpasley in about 1532), William (who is said to have succeeded, although this may be confused), Elizabeth (who married Andrew Haig of Bemersyde) and Maragret (who married Gavin Elliot). Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as tenant in Stonedge along with Cuthbert when they were caught ‘with the bloody hand’ for the murder of Fergus Lorraine in Gatehousecote. He is recorded as ‘Andro McDowall in Stainledge’. It seems likely he and Cuthbert (probably his brother) were hanged for the murder in 1618. Cuthbert (16th/17th C.) listed along with Andrew in 1616 when they were caught red-handed for the murder of Fergus Lorraine. The pair were committed to Jedburgh Tolbooth in 1618 and although the outcome is not recorded, they were probably hanged. Dungal of Makerstoun (15th C.) had a sasine for an 80 merk land in 1461. He was part of the panel of 1464/5 which ruled on the dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Makerstoun and Yetholm in 1477/8. He witnessed a charter for Robert Ramsay of Cockpen in 1485/6. He was probably son of Duncan, father of Andrew and brother of Barbara, who married Gilbert Haig of Bemersyde. George (16th/17th C.) probably son of Thomas and Margaret Home. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638, his name being recorded as ‘G. Mdkdougall of Makrarstoun’. He may be the McDougall who represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1625. He appears to have been succeeded by Sir William, presumably his son. Henry ‘Harry’ (17th C.) probably son of Sir William of Makerstoun. In 1658 he was among 20 ‘gentlemen and heirs’ of Roxburghshire who signed a commission to oppose payment requested from the county. He was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire (i.e. an M.P.), appointed in 1665, 1678 and 1681. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He was probably son of Sir William of Makerstoun. His wife was Barbara and there was a ratification of Thomas as his heir in 1670. John (19th C.) law clerk in Hawick in the 1860s. Robert (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hawick Parish’ in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (18th/19th C.) cartwright on the Round Close, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Makerstoun in 1502. Along with William Ormiston, in the same place, he was absent from the indictments given at Jedburgh, although the crimes are not recorded. His name is given as Thomas makdowell. Thomas of Makerstoun (16th C.) recorded in a marriage contract of 1532 with Janet Scott of Howpasley. He is probably the Thomas ‘McDuell’ who witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1533. He witnessed a document in Selkirk between the Kers of Mersington and Shaws in 1534. He is recorded in 1537 among Kers and others who were accused of burning Cunzierton and killing 2 men called Hall. He is also listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; Alexander of ‘Stedrik’ is also listed and probably closely related. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1560 he was named (as guarantor on the Ker side) on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He is probably the Thomas listed in 1569 among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. Thomas (d.1604) son of William. His sister Elizabeth married Andrew Haig of Bemersyde. He is probably the Laird of Makerstoun who served in Parliament as a minor baron in 1597. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir George Home of Wedderburn. He was succeeded by his son James, who was in turn succeeded by his grandson Sir William. He also had a daughter Eupheme (or Mary), who married Richard Lauder. Sir William (17th C.) probably grandson of Thomas, with the name of his father perhaps being George. He or his father represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1625. About 1625 he also married Margaret, daughter of Walter (‘Auld Wat’) Scott of Harden with Wat’s 2nd wife Margaret Edgar. His children included: Henry, who succeeded; and Anne Isabel, who married Walter Scott of Raeburn. William (18th C.) miller at Spittal. His son David was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1725 (also ‘MacDougall’, ‘Makdougal’, ‘Mckdougall’, and variants; formerly interchangeable with MacDowall, Macdowall, Mckdowell, McDowell, etc.).

McEwen (nuk-yoo-win) n. Rev. James (1831–1924) from Kirkcudbright, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1852. He was ordained as minister of Ford in 1856. In 1862 he was translated to become minister of the East Bank Church. He introduced hymn singing, as opposed to the traditional unaccompanied psalms, led by the precentor. He remained until 1873, when he moved to Sydney Place, Glasgow. In 1858 he married Jane Blackwood (1839–71), who died at East Back Manse, and is buried in the Wellogate. In 1873 he secondly married Margaret (b.1851), daughter of engineer John Melrose, and she died in 1937, aged 87. His children were: Jane (1861–90); Thomas (1863–1937), who was born in Hawick; William; Sir John Blackwood (1868–1948), also born in Hawick; George Cavet (b.1871): Katherine; Marion Cavet (1875–1961); Jessie Seath (b.1877); Helen Melrose (b.1879); and Sydney Melrose (b.1881). He was described as ‘of thin, wiry make, nimble in mind and body, he seemed to be endowed with a tireless energy’. A photograph of him exist. Sir John Blackwood (1868–1948) composer and college head. He was born in Hawick at the East Bank Manse, son of Rev. James and Jane Blackwood. At age 17 St. John’s Kirk appointed him as organist and choirmaster. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1888, then studied music, while being employed as choirmaster. Afterwards he attended the Royal Academy of Music in London, returning to Scotland in 1895, but being invited back to the Royal Academy 3 years later as a professor of harmony and composition. He was a prominent member of the Philharmonic Society, as well as a founder member and first Honorary Secretary of the Society of British Composers. He became Principal of the Royal Academy of Music in 1924, holding this position until 1936. He produced a significant body of music, particularly chamber music. The first public performance of his work was in 1894. Probably his best-known piece is the ‘Solway Symphony’, composed in 1911, first performed in 1922, and performed for the first time (at least the first movement) in Hawick in 2014. It was the first piece by a British composer to be recorded on the HMV label. His music is described as ‘post-Wagnerian’, with influences from Scottish folk traditions. He wrote a large amount of chamber music, including 17 string quartets and 7 violin sonatas. He also wrote orchestral music, including settings of 3 Border Ballads. In 1913 he suffered some sort of personal crisis, which led him to focus on chamber music thereafter. He received an honorary degree from Oxford in 1926 and Glasgow in 1933 and was knighted in 1931. He had left-wing political views, set out in pamphlets such as ‘Abolish Money’ and ‘Total Democracy’. In 1902 he married Hedwig Ethel, daughter of naval architect Henry Alwyn Bevan Cole; they had no children. The Provost of Hawick sent him a congratulatory note on his 80th birthday. He died at his home in London and left a large legacy for the promotion of new Scottish chamber music. Most of his manuscripts are held at Glasgow University. An exhibition and concert to celebrate his music were organised in Hawick in 2013 (also written ‘McEwan’).

McFarlane (nuk-fawr-lin) n. James (b.1825/6) from St. Boswells, he was listed as blacksmith on Mather’s Close in 1851. His wife was Helen Thompson and they had a son, James.

John (18th C.) resident of Denholm. His son Peter was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1784.

Robert (b.c.1840) shoemaker in Hawick, listed on the Howegate in 1837 and on the 1841 census. His wife was Janet and they had children William, Robert, Jane and Anne. Tib (18th/19th C.) probably Isabel or Elizabeth, she was a resident of Cavers Parish. In her old age she was quite bent, and reputed by local people to be a witch. One day she was caught by Thomas Turnbull stealing harvested oats from his farm at East Middle, and he turned her off his land. However, a deputation of reapers from Denholm came to complain to him that they would all be cursed.

McGarrrity (mu-ga-ri’-ee) n. Rev. Robert Forsyth (1869–1933) born in Armadale in West Lothian, he was a minister at Carfin and then Murray (Orkney). He became minister at Saughtree Kirk in 1929 and remained until his death. He married Jeannie Gloag and died in Edinburgh.

McGaughey (mu-gaw-ch) n. Sean (1961/2– ) attended St. Margaret’s and the High School. After leaving school he worked in the knitwear industry. He played rugby for the Y.M., then for Hawick R.F.C., firstly in the 1979/80 season; he became a regular in the back row in the team that won the title 3 years in a row, 1984/5, 1985/6 and 1986/7. In 1983/4 he toured with the Grand Slam-winning Scottish team, gaining a single cap in 1984. He also played for the South of Scotland and the Barbarians. He was forwards coach in Hawick 2001/2.

McGee (mu-gee) n. Allan Hawick paramedic who has long been involved with the Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue, Duke of Edinburgh’s Award Scheme and Borders Exploration Group. He has been awarded the Winston Churchill Award and the Honorary Provost’s Achievement Award.

William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bedrule, listed among a number of Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He is recorded as ‘William Makge in Bethroule’.

McGeorge’s (muk-jor-jeez) n. J. & D. McGeorge Ltd., Hawick knitwear manufacturers of the latter part of the 20th century. Records of the company covering the period 1960–96 exist. The original company was founded by James McGeorge in Dumfries in 1881.

McGibbon (mu-gi-bin) n. Fr. Charles Mungo (1905–90) born in Joppa, Edinburgh, his father died in WWI. He was ordained a priest in 1930 and served in Grenada, Tivoli and Victoria. He returned to Britain in 1950, serving in Edinburgh and Leicester, before returning to Barbados. In 1964 he was appointed Chaplain to the Dominican sisters in Hawick, remaining until St. Margaret’s Convent was closed in 1988. He spent his last years back in Edinburgh.

McGill (mu-gil) n. Anna see Lady Symington. Rev. Francis (1588/9–1664) licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1611, he obtained half the living of Borthwick from the minister of Wilton (William Clerk) in 1612. It is unclear for how long he may have preached there, but he became minister of Kirkmichael in 1620. He married Elizabeth McMoran, who died in 1670 at 93 years old. Their children were Margaret and Marion (who married William Herreis of Harthwaite). John (18th C.) tenant farmer at Hasendean Townhead. In 1725 the schoolmaster of Minto, Walter Turnbull, raised ‘letters of hornig and poinding’ against him, presumably to try to recover a debt. Rev. Walter (d.1651) possibly related to Sir James Douglas of Cavers, whose children with his 2nd wife (a daughter of Sir James McGill) are said to have taken the surname McGill. He was probably born too early to have been a son of Sir James Douglas, and so may have been his brother-in-law or similar. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1593. He is recorded as minister and vicar of Cavers in 1603 when he gave the ‘tack of the teinds’ to Sir Walter Scott of Brazzholme, and again in 1607. He held the parsonage and vicarage of Kirktown from 1606, as well as the parsonage of Cavers (although he was only presented to the vicarage in 1609). In a Scottish statute of 1622 he is recorded having the right of the vicarage of Cavers Parish. He was minister in 1627 when William Henderson (‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’) was excommunicated for the slaying of William Elliot. He witnessed a charter transferring Harwood from Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir of Hobkirk to Gilbert Elliott and another regarding Appotside and Tythehouse in 1632. He gave £20 towards building the Library at Glasgow University in about 1636. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he was stated as being aged and infirm and requiring a helper. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £100 in 1643 (and were part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers by the 1678 valuation). He is recorded as minister of Cavers in a Hawick Burgh records entry of 1644. Also in 1644 he reported to the Presbytery about 2 men at Fastcastle (in Bedrule Parish) who refused to sign the Covenant. He remained Cavers minister until 1647, when succeeded by James Douglas. He preached to a visitation of Cavers in 1645 when there is a record that he was 100 years old (although this scarcely seems credible, given that he graduated in 1593). He married Lilias Bartane (or Bartoun, who died in 1671) and their children included James (who died before 1651), Walter (Minister of Wigton) and Samuel (Minister of Trailflat). His wife is recorded in a bond of 1651 with John Wynram of Libberton. A gravestone in Cavers old Kirkyard, marked ‘Johanna Magel, 1630’ is probably his daughter (spelled ‘Makgill’ and variants; see also MacGill).

McGinn (mu-gin) n. Matthews ‘Matt’ (1928–1977) prolific song-writer from the east end of Glasgow. His children’s songs, such as ‘The Red Yo-yo’ and ‘The Kirkcudbright Centipede’ are well known to children, and some of his bawdier (such as ‘The Bee from The Old Town of Effen’) or political ones (such as ‘The Man They Could Not Hang’) to adults. He wrote the song ‘The Rolling Hills o’ the Borders’ popularised by the John Wright Band and Scocha. Rev. Thomas minister of Bedrule Kirk from 1945 until it merged with Denholm in 1963.

McGivern (mu-gi-vurn) n. Alec owner of the Tower Hotel in the latter half of the 20th century. He had the bungalow Linden House built on the site of Linden Park.

McGowan (mu-gow-in) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Ade Makgowan’ when he was bequeathed 6 shillings in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed among servants of the Laird. George (??–1?) Hawick born and bred, he worked for the Hawick Express and the Hawick News, mainly covering rugby and other sports. He was a rugby player and sprinter, and also on the Town Council. In 1974 he emigrated to New Zealand, and wrote the books ‘Memories From Afar’ (1992) and ‘The Way We Were’ (1997). William (16th C.) public notary from at least 1553, as recorded in Wigtown. He held the parsonage and vicarage of Minto from 1574. He was a member of the Assembly of 1575 and was also Commissary of Wigton, probably residing there rather than in Minto. He was accused of non-residence, and appears to have been deprived in 1576, but may have continued until about 1585, or else that was the year he took up residence (formerly spelled ‘M’Gowen’, etc.).

McHenry’s (mu-ken-reez) n. former corner shop on Mansfield Road, visible in a photograph of 1905.

McInnes (mu-ki-nis) n. Rev. Æneas Ede (1861–1931) born in Bower, Caithness, he was son of schoolmaster Angus and Charlotte Brown. He received his M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1884 and was licensed to preach by Caithness Presbytery in 1887. He became assistant at Selkirk and then in 1894 was ordained assistant and successor (to Rev. Mercer Hall) at Rober- ton. In 1904 he married Kate, daughter of George Spackman. He retired around 1929 and died at Earlston.

McIntyre (maw-kin-tIr) n. Robert (20th C.) from Hawick, he became Rector of Kilmarnock Academy and authored or edited 19 school textbooks in English.

McKelvie (maw-kul-vee) n. William (d.1906) police Constable who was beaten while making an arrest in Hawick and died. Possibly the only police officer in modern times to be killed on duty in the town.

McKenzie (mu-ken-zee) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Catherine (19th C.) servant to pub proprietor Robert Newall. She was one of the people who contracted cholera in the 1832 outbreak, but recovered. Charles (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Edinburgh who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1779. Francis (18th C.) wigmaker in Hawick. In 1788 he witnessed a baptism for watchmaker John Stewart. Francis ‘Frank’ (1824–1900) hairdresser at 15 Howegate, having learned the trade from his grandfather Dick. His mother was Ann, who later married David Affleck. He was listed as a Howegate hairdresser in Slater’s 1852 directory, as well as a toy dealer. He was the 5th listed member of the Archaeological Society and served as President in 1889. In 1856 he gave to the Museum 2 white bear skulls and an old lock from Harden, as well as a stone hammer in 1857. He also donated some coins and fossils to the Museum in the 1860s. He was Councillor for Slitrig Ward for 6 years. It is said that his shop was a focus for discussion of the Town’s affairs. He married Euphemia Notman, and their children were James (a painter, whose daughter Isobel was a High School teacher), Walter (an Edinburgh Town Councillor) and Margaret (who became Mrs. Douglas). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) listed at Limekilnedge in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. Sir James (17th/18th C.) son of George, who became Viscount Tarbet. He became a lawyer, and was a Senator with the title

Lord Royston. He dealt with some of the business affairs of the Duchess of Buccleuch in her senior years, the Session of Hawick writing to him in 1725 to seek assistance with the parish's poor.

Rev. James (b.1890) translated from St. Paul's, Perth to become minister of Lilliesleaf in 1929, serving the Parish until 1961. He wrote two articles on ‘Lilliesleaf’ in the 1947 and 1949 Transactions. Richard ‘Dick’ (b.c.1780) hairdresser. His business premises were initially in the row of houses that stood in the middle of the Tower Knowe, moving to 14 Howegate when this row was demolished and then to No. 15. He is listed on the Howegate in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His business was taken over by his grandson Frank. Catherine, who contracted cholera in 1832 (but recovered), servant at Robert Newall’s public house, was his daughter. He himself also had a bout with the disease, but was cured. Walter (19th/20th C.) son of Frank. He worked as a railwayman and became a Town Councillor in Edinburgh. He married Jeannie, sister of the Provost of Haddington William Davidson, and daughter of Hawick manufacturer William (see also Mackenzie).

McKie (mu-kee) n. William (b.1821/2) from Dumfries, he went into partnership with William Nixon, forming Nixon & McKie around 1850. He led the hosiery part of the business, with Nixon in charge of the spinning. However, the firm folded in about 1866 and the premises were sold to Thomas Laidlaw and Robert Pringle & Son. He was one of the founder members of Hawick Bowling Club in 1854. In 1861 he was living at 17 Buccleuch Street and was unmarried; he employed 87 people at that time.

the McKinley Act (thu-mu-kin-lee-awkt) n. U.S. act of 1890, imposing large tariffs on imported high quality woollen goods (among other items), which led to economic difficulties for many Hawick tweed manufacturers.

McKinnon (mu-ki-nin) n. Hugh (b.1782/3) from Dumfriesshire, he was a stocking-maker in Hawick. In 1841 and 1851 he was living at Roadhead in Wilton. He married Isabella (‘Tibbie’) Aitken, maternal aunt of the writer Thomas Carlyle. His children were: Alexander; Angus; Mary Ann, who married James Jamieson; Sarah, who married George Turnbull; and Marion (d.1844), who died of consumption. There are mentions of some members of the family in the letters of Thomas Carlyle, with the name sometimes being spelled ‘McKinnow’. James ‘Jim’ (1931/2-) road sweeper for the Council and horse-racing enthusiast. He was Cornet's groom for over 15 years.

McLagan (mnuk-law-gin) n. Thomas Burns (1875–1965) native of Ladybank in Fife, he came to Hawick in 1895 as a postal sorting clerk, eventually becoming overseer. He was a Town Councillor for North High Street Ward from 1938 until 1955, being appointed Dean of Guild in 1939, Junior Bailie in 1940 and serving as Provost 1940–45. Because of the War years, he is the only Provost to have never officiated at a Common Riding. He was Convenor of the County Health and Welfare Committee, a member of the Archaeological Society and an elder in St. John's Church. As Provost he gave the V.J. Day address to the town from the balcony of the Council Chambers in 1945. Married to Elizabeth Grierson of Hawick, he had no family, and shunned publicity. Later he became Postmaster at Keith and Head Postmaster at Forfar, before retiring back to Hawick. McLagan Drive was named after him.

McLagan Drive (mnuk-law-gin-driver) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1949, extended in 1963 and named after Provost Thomas B. McLagan. Several of the houses were redeveloped by Eildon Housing.

McLaren (mnuk-law-rin) n. Sandy (1945– ) born in Ballinluig, he worked on the family farm until a dust allergy forced him to find a new career. In 1972 he came to Hawick as a policeman, becoming a Sergeant in 1980. He spent several years in Edinburgh and other Border towns before returning to Hawick in 1998 as Inspector in the traffic department. He retired from the Police in 2004, but later had some part-time jobs in Hawick as well as volunteering as a drover with the Royal Voluntary Service. At age 60 he took up the pipes, joining the Hawick Scout Pipe Band. He also has the distinction of having been a member of the Atholl Highlanders, the only lawful private army in Europe. His wife Shiel came from Strathay and had several jobs in Hawick. The couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020. Their children are Shonagh (the first full-time female firefighter in the Borders) and Allison (Deputy Head in Earlston). William Pollock ‘Bill’, M.B.E. (1923–2010) born and brought up in Hawick, he attended Trinity and the High School, and was commissioned with the Royal Artillery in WWII. A bouts of T.B. ended his rugby playing career early, but he taught rugby to primary school boys until 1987. He worked with the Hawick Express, later becoming well known as a radio and TV commentator, and has also written or edited several books on rugby, for example ‘100 Years of Hawick Rugby’ (1972), and narrated TV programmes and videos on the Borders. He was awarded an M.B.E. for services to rugby in 1979, followed by an O.B.E. in 1995 and a C.B.E. in 2003. He finally retired from rugby commenting in 2002. His autobiography ‘The Voice of Rugby’ was published in 2004. McLaren Court is named after him. A memorial bust was unveiled in 2012, sculpted by Rory Maciver, and inscribed ‘The Voice of Rugby’. He can be heard recounting rugby memories on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012).

McLaren Court (muk-law-rin-kör) n. part of the Meadows, built in 1964, refurbished later as luxury flats, and named after rugby commentator Bill McLaren.

McLear (muk-leer) n. Margaret (18th C.) housekeeper at Branxholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie.

McLean (muk-län) n. Rev. Joseph William (1850/1–1903) came to Saughtree Kirk as licentiate in 1902. However, he died the following year. William (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Makclaine’. Rev. William (19th C.) presented to Ashkirk Parish by Gilbert, Earl of Minto in late 1854 and ordained there early the following year. He was translated to Merton in 1860 and then to Peningham in 1864.

McLellan (muk-le-lin) n. Ebenezer (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, probably the son of Peter born in Forgandenny, Perthshire in 1769. He married Jane Turnbull in 1794; she may have been the eldest daughter of Thomas Turnbull and Beatrix Ruecastle. They had a son, Peter (b.1796). Even although his name is transcribed as ‘Mclenan’ in the parish records, it seems likely he was a McLellan. He is also probably the Ebenezer who later married Janet Wilson and whose children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: John (b.1805); and James (b.1809), with the surname recorded as ‘Mcclenal’. Patrick (17th C.) gardener listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for tailor Alexander Hislop, in 1703 for fellow gardener John Vair, in 1704 for thatcher John Shiel and for John Turnbull ‘o’ye’ to Rev. James Ker and in 1705 for workman John Douglas. He is probably the Patrick, married to Marion Scoon, who had an unnamed son baptised in Hawick in 1683. He is probably also the Patrick whose children baptised in Hawick included Mary (b.1701) and Patrick (b.1703). Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of London. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was probably the son of Ebenezer and Jane Turnbull born in Hawick in 1796 (formerly ‘Macelan’ and ‘Mcclenan’).

McLennan (mu-kle-nin) n. Rev. Findlay (18th C.) minister of Kelso Qualified Chapel 1750–7. He carried out Episcopalian services in Hawick around this time, probably in a building on Kirk Wynd. The Hawick Parish register in the 1770s records an earlier baptism: ‘Mira Gladstains Daughter of John Gladstains of Whitlaw baptized by the Rev. Mr. Finley McLenan Minister of the Episcopal Congregation of Hawick before these witnesses Mr. Robert Scott Whitslade Surgeon in Hawick & John and James Gladstains both of Hawick in November 1753’. There are men of the same name recorded in Ross & Cromarty in the later 18th century. John (b.1849/50) from Inverness, he was recorded as Police Sergeant in Hawick in 1891 (also written ‘MacLennan’).

McLeod (mu-klowd) n. Brian, B.E.M. (1946/7–) son of a soldier, he attended school in Berlin, Burnfoot and Hawick High. After being in the Army for 23 years he settled back in Hawick. After retiring he took command of the Hawick Army Cadet Force and had for a long time been on the Committee of the local British Legion, for which service he received the B.E.M. in 2016. He has also been a Community Councillor. He married Marilyn in 1970 and the couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020. They had children Tracy and Iain. Christine (1934–) Hawick born and bred, sister-in-law of Hugh. She worked in Pringle’s, and has been a Girl Guide leader most of her life, becoming a District Commissioner, and for which she was awarded the B.E.M. Dr. Donald J.A. (c.1828–1903) born in the Hebrides, educated at Edinburgh University, he came to Denholm in 1849 to assist with the cholera outbreak. After the last case in Denholm he moved to help in the Hawick cholera outbreak, when 141 people died in the parish. He was a partner of Hawick’s Dr. John Douglas (following the death of Robert Douglas, the former partner and brother of Dr. Douglas). He became joint Medical Officer of the Parish in 1851 (in connection with the Poorhouse), Medical Officer in 1856, Medical Officer for the Burgh in 1868 and local Police Surgeon in 1896. He also acted as medical officer for several other local organisations, including being Honorary Medical Officer for the Cottage Hospital. He later practised in partnership with Dr. Barrie. In all, he was a doctor in the town for more than 50 years. He was an active member of the Con Club, a leader in the efforts to establish public swimming baths in Hawick, and a founder member of the Hawick Bowling Club and Hawick Billiards Club. His business premises were at 7 Buccleuch Street. His caricature from 1856 appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianae’. He is buried in the Wellowgate Cemetery.

Hugh F., O.B.E. (1932–2014) rugby prop forward, born and bred in the town. He supposedly played his first junior rugby game at 17, when walking past the ground and asked to join in when one of the players was ill. He played for Hawick R.F.C. 1949–62, and was capped forty consecutive times 1954–62. He played 14 times for the Barbarians and toured with the British Lions. He was awarded the O.B.E. in 1962 for services to rugby and was President of Hawick R.F.C. 1983–85. He ran a plasterer’s business and sports shop.

Mary (19th C.) resident of Wilton whose death is commemorated in a poem by Thomas Chapman – ‘Farewell to my Mary, nae mair shall I see her Amid her companions in woodland or street ... ’ [TCh] (also MacLeod).

McLuckie (muk-lu-kee) n. John Morrison (1867–1926) born at Gartsherrir, Lanarkshire, he was educated at Glasgow University. He was licensed by Hamilton Presbytery in 1891, was missionary in Cambuslang and ordained to the Scots Church, St. Vincent in the West Indies. He was then minister at Ruthrieston in Aberdeen, Wallacetown in Dundee and at Lady Yester’s. In 1918 he became minister of Castleton Parish and remained until his death. He married Mabel Annie Johnston and they had a daughter, Joyce Elinor MacLuckie (b.1905), who married Robert Bernard Benson of the Natural History Museum, Kensington.

McManus (muk-maw-nis) n. Patricia Margaret, O.B.E. (?–) Hawick health visitor and Chairman of the Royal College of Nursing Scottish Board. She was awarded an O.B.E. for services to health care in 1998.

McMath (muk-maw-th) n. John (1795–1834) stockmaker, appointed precentor of the Relief Kirk in Hawick in 1821. His widow Janet was living on the Kirk Wynd in 1841, along with children Margaret, William, Janet, Agnes, Helen and Jane. William (15th C.) received 6 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. His name is listed as ‘Willelmo Makmath’.

McMorren (muk-mo-rin) n. James (19th C.) Police Judge, once based in Hawick, but moved to Selkirk. He was in Hawick in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He is listed at the Dean among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He married Mary Douglas, daughter of Hugh and Agnes Laidlaw of Hawick. She may be the Mrs. McMorran who had a cottage built for her on land at Loch Park about 1879. James (19th C.) spinner in Wilton and Hawick. He is listed among heads of households at the Dean in 1835 and in the Village in Hawick in 1840 and 1841 (there are various spellings, including ‘McMorren’).

McNairn (muk-narn) n. George S. (19th C.) son of John of Edinburgh. He was librarian in Hawick and later at Motherwell Public Library. John (19th C.) father of John, he lived in Edinburgh, but developed strong connections with Hawick. For Thomas Laidlaw of Sillerbuthall he painted a view of Hawick from the West Braid Road about 1870, useful as a record of the growth of the Town. The painting was acquired by the trustees of Sheriff Anderson and presented to the Magistrates and Council, and is now in the Museum collection. He was married twice, secondly to Christina, daughter of William Somerville. He had 8 children, including John (of the Hawick News), George S. (librarian) and Arthur Stuart (secretary of the Evangelical Union of South America). John (1856–1925) co-founder of the Hawick News, with James Vair, and co-publisher of ‘Pictures from the Past of Auld Hawick’ (1911) with J.J. Vernon, ‘Hawick and the Great War, 1914–1919’ (1920) with Vair and several other books. He was born in Edinburgh, son of a painter, and moved to Hawick in 1871, working on the Hawick Advertiser. He took sole control of the Hawick News in 1908, passing it on to his family when he died, and is buried in the Wellowgate Cemetery.

McNicol (muk-nil-kol) n. Rev. Donald (19th/20th C.) from Clydebank, he was minister at Hawick Baptist Kirk from 1903. He took over after a roughly 1½ year long vacancy. He was said to be a powerful preacher, and attracted many new young people to the Church. During his time a balcony was added to the church and a new baptistry introduced. In 1907 he moved McPhail (muk-fäl) n. Rev. Archibald Connell (1827–1907) born in Southend, Campbell-town, son of Dougal (or Dugald) and Margaret Connell, his grandfather being a tenant farmer on Mull and his middle name coming from a maternal uncle who made a fortune in Tobago. He was educated at Dalintobar and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Kintyre Presbytery and became a missionary at Crofthead in Whitburn Parish. He was ordained as minister at Quarter Chapel in Hamilton Parish 1862, translated to Beath, Fife in 1870 and then became minister of Hobkirk in 1876, where he remained until his death. He married Mary Georgina, daughter of Dr. George Welsh (a medical missionary in India), who was widow of Capt. Robert Roy. His wife died in 1900. Their only daughter Georgina Louisa married Walter Turnbull, farmer at Hartshaugh. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard.
McPhail

McPherson (muk-fer-sin) n. Donald (1842–1907) born at Berriedale in Caithness, he learned gardening, moved to Oban and trained in forestry. He moved to Wolfelee in 1871 as gardener to Sir Walter Elliot. He became manager and helped James Elliot (younger of Wolfelee) run the estate. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1883. Mrs. ?? (17th C.) one of the tenants in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Her name is written ‘M’Feisoon’. She was probably a widow of the former tenant.

McQuarrie (muk-ker-ree) n. Capt. (18th/19th C.) of the 42nd Royal Highland Regiment (Black Watch). Along with 2 other officers he was made an Honorary Burgess when they passed through Hawick in 1802 after defeating the French in Egypt. It is possible this is the same man as Lachlan MacQuarrie (1762–1824), who became governor of New South Wales.

McQueston (muk-kwes-tin) n. Peter (18th/19th C.) gardener at Riddell in 1797, when he was working for Sir John Riddell.

McRobbie (muk-ro-bee) n. Peter (1943– ) born in Hawick, son of shopkeeper William and Mary Fleming, who was a writer. His family emigrated to the U.S. when he was a child and he grew up in Milford, Connecticut. He studied Theatre at Yale University and served in the U.S. Army. He moved to New York to pursue an acting career, supporting himself in advertising before finding success in the mid-1970s. He became a professional actor, appearing in stage productions, as well as on screen. He may be best known as a regular on the television show ‘Law & Order’ and for playing Jake Gyllenhaal’s father in ‘Brokeback Mountain’, as well as Maggie Gyllenhaal’s father in ‘World Trade Center’. He married Charlotte Bova in 1977 and they have 2 children, Oliver and Andrew.

McRobert (muk-ro-bur’) n. Rev. John (b.1794/5–1876) born at Kirkbean in Kirkcudbrightshire, he was the last minister of Denholm Congregational Kirk. He trained at Glasgow Theological Hall and was minister at Ellon 1828–34, Falkirk 1834–36, Grangemouth 1836–38 and Cambuslang 1838–46, before coming to Denholm in 1846. He remained as minister until 1876. He also ran the Free Library in Denholm in the 1850s. In 1831 he married Catherine Copland, from Glasgow, and she was a teacher. They lived at Deanburn Cottage in 1851 and on Westgate in 1861. Mary McRobert, listed as infant school teacher in Denholm in 1852, was probably his daughter.

McVittie (muk-vi’-ee, -vee’) n. George (17th C.) recorded in the Town Book for 1655. He was absolved from the claim brought against him by John Scott ‘pethar’ for 6 or so boots taken from his stall in Hawick. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Glack in Hawick in 1680. James (19th C.) minor poet who wrote under the pseudonym ‘Eskdale’. Jess (19th C.) seller of tripe, toffee and other wares in the later 19th century and early 20th. Her shop was at the corner of Drumlanrig Square and the Kirk Wynd. In 1841 there were 28 people living there, mostly lime contractors, miners, merchants and quarry near the Carter Bar, also known as Carter Quarry. In 1841 there were 28 people living there, mostly lime contractors, miners, merchants and work there.

Meadsgrove Plantin (meedsgröv-plawn-tin) n. plantation on the former Wells estate, situated to the north of Blawearie cottage.

Meadshaw (meed-shaw) n. farm on the north side of the Borthwick valley just past Philip. It has sometimes been marked ‘Meadshaw’ on maps. There were 5 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely James Todd, Jean Scott, Walter Beattie, James Chisholme and Janet Baptie. There was a skirmish between Royalist and Commonwealth forces near here in 1653 (perhaps the last military conflict near Hawick). It was part of Wilton Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90. Robert Scott was there in 1702 and Walter Stoddart in 1710. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties; at that time the farm covered 344, ‘but very inconvenient it being long and narrow’, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Craik, Henwoodie common and Outersiderig. It was rented from the Buccleuch estates by William Ogilvie in 1723. Cooper James Scott was living there in 1753. Robert Beattie was there in 1766, James Laidlaw in 1780-86 and John Nichol in 1792. It was valued along with Craik and Whinmeycleuch in 1785 and 1803. James Douglas was shepherd there in the early 1800s. Walter Lawson, Walter Lunn and their families were there in 1841. About 500m to the west, near the northern bank of the Borthwick, are the remains of a settlement, roughly circular, about 45m in diameter. To the north-east of this settlement is another circular enclosure, probably an old sheepfold (formerly also written ‘Midshaw’, ‘Meidshaw’, etc.; it appears to be ‘Meitsheills’ in 1650, ‘Mitchaw’ in 1690, ‘Mitcha’ in 1702, ‘meatshaw’ in 1710 and ‘Midshaw’ in 1785; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Meedshaw’, on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Milshaw’ and on Ainslie’s 1773 map as ‘Midshaw’).

Meadshaw Rig (meed-shaw-rig) n. ridge on the south side of the Borthwick valley, south of Eildrig farm, lying between Mid Hill and Rashy Hill. Note that it is a couple of kilometres from the farm of Meadshaw. There is a linear earthwork there.

mechanics (me-ka-nics) n., pl., arch. manual workmen, craftsmen, artisans – ‘...it was found therein specified that ye loft bewest the church door was allocat to the Mechanicks in ye toom as is att more length set down in Anno 1683 ...’ [PR1717] (it is unclear whether the word was used to refer to all the incorporated trades in the Town, or only some of them, e.g. the hammermen).

the Mechanics’ Institute (thu-me-kaw-neeks-in-sti-choo) n. organisation active in Hawick in the mid-19th century, which ran lectures to promote general knowledge among the working class. There were many ‘Mechanics’ Institutes’ set up in other towns in this period. It ran a library on O’Connell Street. It may have been the same as the I.O.U.S. Mechanics Friendly Society.

Meda (mee-da) n. the scout in the play ‘The Gutterbludes’, described as ‘A Veteran Canadian Pioneer, originally named ‘The Medicine Man’ by the Mohicans, of Scottish Descent’.

Meda’s Song (mee-duz-sawng) n. song written for the play ‘The Gutterbludes’ in 1905, with words by J.E.D. Murray and music by Adam Grant. It is about an Indian scout (Meda) who is really an exiled Teri in disguise, with the role first performed by W.F. Crosby. It is also sometimes called ‘The Song of Meda’. It was first published in 1905 as part of the song sheet for ‘The Gutterbludes’, but the 3rd verse was not published until 1913 (in an edition by Adam Grant, published in memory of his daughter Nan), so it is unclear if this verse was included in the original. A version was recorded by Hamilton B. Little on a 78 r.p.m. record in the 1930s. Grant’s simple accompaniment was embellished by Adie Ingles for the 1957 song book. It was changed again by Ian Seeley for the 2001 edition of ‘The Hawick Songs’, making it again chordal, but more modern. It is a powerful song, and retains its popularity. Despite having no chorus, the audience typically join in gradually as the song progresses, until all are singing by the end.

Medlicott (mee-dee-koe) n. Capt. Walter Sandfield (1879–1970) son of Henry Edmundstone and Kate D’Oyley Gale. He was an officer in the Northumberlnd Hussars. He married Lavender Mary Pease. Later in life he lived at Old Fodderlee, where he died, aged 90.

the Medway Cup (thu-mee-wa-kup) n. the Medway Challenge Cup, competed for at the Common Riding races, presented by Oliver Kennedy in 1927, when it replaced the Branxholm Stakes. Kennedy moved to Southend to set up his own knitwear company, using ‘Medway’ as his trade name (because the factory looked across the Thames Estuary to where it is joined by the River Medway). The cup was won by Marjorie Haddon.
on Rufus on Common Riding Saturday of 1927. Cornet Ian Mactaggart, also riding Rufus, won it in 1929, was second in 1930 and 1931 and won again in 1932 and 1933, getting it outright following his 3 victories. However, the cup was given back for competition again in 1966 by the widow of ex-Cornet Ian Mactaggart. The Kennedy family continues to provide sponsorship for the race.

meed (meed) n., poet. merit, reward – ‘O heaven and earth! but death is a meed, Which sorrow like her’s might desire …’ [JTe], ‘…Baffling despair with a Border blow, and deeming our brightest meed, The sunny smile of an auld, auld toon, Where the Teviot twines to the Tweed’ [JYH], mood, disposition.

Meek (mek) n. Brian, J.P., O.B.E. (1939–2004) born in Leith, he spent time in Hawick during WWII, then attended the Royal High School in Edinburgh before embarking on a career in journalism. He worked largely as a feature and sports writer, with long involvement with the Scottish Daily Express and later the Herald. He was a Conservative politician on various levels of local government in Edinburgh. He was columnist of the year 4 times and sports writer of the year twice.

meenint (nee-nin) n., arch. minute – ‘…an clappeeet masel doon a meenint on ov a foogie bank’ [ECS], ‘It wad want a twae-threi meenints a twae i the eftermin …’ [ECS] (of time; meenite is more common).

meenister (nee-nis-tur, mi-nee-stur) n. a minister – The meenister said, When he gied us a ca’, ‘We ken some folk that weel, We dinna ken them ava’’ [LJ] (also sometimes ‘mineester’).

meenisters (nee-nis-turz) n., pl. ministers, being appointed to each parish in the post-Reformation Church of Scotland, as well as other related churches. They also served as Moderators for their parish Sessions. The Hawick minister lived in the Manse, which for centuries was on Old Manse Lane. In the 18th century the Hawick minister enjoyed the privilege of cutting peat and turf on the Common and of grazing on the Common any horses, cows or sheep that he possessed; he also received a ‘teind’ for any newborns to the Town’s livestock, 4d for a lamb, 1s for a calf and 1s 8d for a foal. Parish ministers of Hawick can be traced back for several centuries, although the early days are actual duties to the parish. The first Hawick clergymen on record are Henry, ‘persona’ (i.e. Parson), and Algar and William, both ‘capellano’ (i.e. Chaplain) in about 1183. Then comes William (‘Willo Clerico de haucic’), probably the same man 4 more times in the next decade or 2, followed by ‘Maurice, Parson of Hawick’ in 1235. Then there is Rudolphus (or Ralph) in the 1260s and Richard de Witten in 1296. There then follows several Rectors who held the ‘benefice’ of the church of Hawick, although probably never visited the town, and may have had a curate performing the pastoral duties. The role afterwards is: Robert de Ormesby in 1297; Richard de Clare for a few years up until perhaps 1311; an unnamed appointee of Edward II in 1319; Gerard Kereti, from about 1346–53; John of Hawick, from 1355/6; John Fleming (possibly the same as the previous Rector) until some time before 1363; John Leche, from before 1363 until at least 1378; John Crondale, probably after 1378; William Turnbull, from before 1431; James Lindsay, Rector from 1447, Prebendary from 1470; Thomas Falconer, Chaplain in 1452; Hugh de Douglas noted in 1460; Gilbert Kennedy, Prebendary until 1470; Alexander Murray at least 1476–82; John Preston, Parson in 1481; James Merchiston in the years around 1504; Robert Lutherland, Chaplain in at least 1511/2–14; Alexander Newton, Vicar in 1514; William Cunningham, Parson in 1519/20; John Hardie, Chaplain in 1519/20; John Scott, Vicar in at least 1528–39/40; John Hepburn, Rector in 1532; Pate Witelow around 1532; and John Scott, Rector from 1536. John Young was burned in his tower in 1548. George Hepburn was Parson around 1559, probably the last before the Reformation. John Sandilands was recorded as Rector in 1554 and 1558, and after the Reformation was Parson, probably from 1563 until 1583. John Spottiswood was also recorded as a Rector in 1558 (so there were apparently 2 men sharing this benefice). William Fowler held the post of Parson from 1585 until 1601. However, Henry Scott was Reader in 1574–79, while William Auchmowtie was Minister for Hawick, Wilton, Kirkton, Hassendean and Cavers (at the same time) from 1575 until at least 1591, i.e. he was the actual minister during the time of at least a couple of Parsons and Readers. The charge was vacant in 1599 (and possibly for several years around that time). We then have the post-Reformation bona fide parish Ministers: Thomas Abernethy, from 1601 until about 1610; Adam Scott 1612–c.24; Robert Cunningham 1625–56; John Scott 1657–62; and Alexander Kinmear about 1663–67. John Langlands was the last Episcopalian, appointed in 1667 and deprived in 1689. There was then a vacancy for about the Meenister’s Entry (thu-mee-nis-turz-en-tree) n. Minister’s Entry, name used for Brougham Place before about 1840.

the Meenister’s Pool (thu-mee-nis-turz-pool) n. popular name around the 19th century for a fishing pool (in many parishes) frequented by the local minister.

Meg (meg) n. Christian name, usually a familiar form of Margaret − ‘…Aw wunder what Meg’ll say?’ [RM] (also Mag and Maggy).

Meg an the Bairns (meg-in-thu-bärnz) n. popular name for two small cairns on top of Needs Law in the north-eastern part of Castleton Parish. The ancient cairn there is about 17 m in diameter and has these 2 modern cairns on top, one smaller than the other.

Meggat’s Ade (meg-gits-ad) n. nickname for Adam Crozier.

the Megget (thu-me-gi) n. reservoir created in the 1983, when a valley to the west of St. Mary’s Loch was flooded, covering the ruined 16th century Cranmul Tower. It has the biggest earth dam in Scotland and supplies water to Edinburgh and the Lothians. The area was referred to as ‘Megotland’ around the early 1500s when it was a favourite hunting centre for the King, and also used as a base for suppressing rievers. It is also the name of the river that rises near Broad Law, passes through the Reservoir and empties into St. Mary’s Loch − ‘Meggat Water and Tema, They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout breasting their rills’ [WL] (also spelled ‘Meggat’; marked ‘Stanhouse or Meggat Riv.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Meg’s Hill (megz-hil) n. hill on the left-hand side of the A7 south of Teviothead, between Castleweary and Linhope. It reaches a height of 353 m.

meg sakes mei (meg-sak-s-mi) n. interj., expression of surprise or exasperation − ‘Bidden, meg sakes mei mother, bidden, how could Aw, an’ yow a’ eer lane on a Common Ridin’ night?’ [JEDM] (presumably a variant of Lod-sakes-mei)

Meg the Manty (meg-thu-mawn-tee) n. popular name for Margaret Watson (or possibly Walker). She is also referred to as ‘Meg the Mantua’ − ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddly aboot, And Gleska Jamie sits a song ’Tae Shau Cherl, Chinnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI] (probably derived from ‘Mantie’, a Scots version of the English ‘manteau’ or ‘mantua’, being a loose flowing gown).

Meikle (nee-kul) n. David Skene (1939–) educated at Cambridge University, he was minister at Westcott House 1961–3, then in Edinburgh before moving to Hawick. He was Curate at St. Cuthbert’s 1963–7, before moving to St. Philip’s, Edinburgh.

meikle (nee-kul) adj., arch., poet. big, large (a variant of muckle) – ‘O! what’s this com’d o’ me now, quo’ Dickie, Fala, &c. What meikle wae’s this happen’d o’ me, quo’ he?[CPM], ‘...Now tell me, thou sprite, who art meikle of might, The death that I must die!’ [JL], ‘I wull prayse thee amang meikle peepole’ [HSR], ‘...naether do I leazle mysel’, makin’ a-wark in meikle mattirs [...] [HSR], adv. much – ‘...in ane unlaw of 6s. ...and as meikle that lies out of the nicht in his neighbour’s corn or haynet gers’ [BR1649], ‘Mair til be desiret ar thaye nor gowd, yis, nor meikle fyne gowd’ [HSR], ‘...ane michtie man isna delerret bie meikle doucht’ [HSR], ‘They tell o’ meikle care and pain, They tell o’ mony waes; We needna think to light again The love o’ early days’ [JT], ‘...Her hope o’ meikle fortune’s sma’’ [WL] (also in some place names, e.g. Meikledale and Meikle Whitlaw).

the Meikle Brig (thu-nee-kul-brig) n. former name for Hawick’s main bridge, perhaps suggesting there was a second one, as also indicated by other records of the early 18th century. The Session books of 1722 state that 2 elders are to collect money ‘from ye west side of ye toum to ye Bridge and the next ‘from ye Meekle bridge to Wm. Dickson’s house’. This is suggestive of 2 separate bridges across the Slitrig, this being the popular name for the larger one, but this is far from certain. It may be that the ‘Meikle Brig’ was the ‘Auld Brig’ (not perhaps so old back then), with the other being a bridge over the Slitrig mill lade.

Meikle Cavers (nee-kul-kā-vurz) n. former name for ‘Cavers Magna’, i.e. the main Parish of Cavers, recorded in an instrument of 1404/5 and a papal bull of 1419.

Meikledale (nee-kul-dāl) n. farm near where the Meikledale Burn joins the Ewes Water on the A7, about 5 miles south of Mosspaul. The lands there were long the seat of the Littles, from before 1426 when Simon Little had an earlier grant confirmed. They were described as a 20-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. They were then owned by the Elliots. The farm was valued at £900 in 1671 when Adam Elliot was owner. When inherited by Adam’s son William in 1682 the farm (together with Meikledalehope) was described as a 19-merk land of old extent. William Scott of Rowanburn (a descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane) acquired it in 1733 and sold it to William Laing (Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1750). Thomas Beattie was then the tenant, and wrote a diary, which survives. He was still there until at least 1797. Mr. Laing sold it to William Elliot Lockhart of Borthwickbrae, his nephew. The tenant in 1841 and until at least the 1860s was John Common. An ancient standing stone, the ‘Grey Wether’ stood in front of the house. There are remains of an ancient settlement just to the north-east, and another further up the Burn at Rigfoot. There was also formerly a mill there (sometimes ‘Muckedale’); it is ‘Meikledale’ in 1426, ‘Mekildail’ in 1550, ‘Mekildail’ in 1569 and ‘Muckedale’ in 1785; it is ‘Meikdale’ on Blaenu’s 1654 map and ‘Muckedale’ on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Meikledale Burn (nee-kul-dāl-burn) n. major stream that rises at Faw Side and Rashiegrain Height (on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire) and joins the Ewes Water near the farm of Meikledale. There are signs of a rectangular platform near the head of the burn and signs of a settlement further down.

Meikledale Haugh (nee-kul-dāl-hawch) n. cottage near Meikledale. There were Jacksons and Douglasses there in 1841.

Meikledalehope (nee-kul-dāl-hōp) n. former lands near Meikledale. This could be the ‘mekil-hop’ where Simon Scott was recorded in 1494/5. The lands were inherited along with Meikledale by William Elliot in 1682 (it is ‘Meikledailhope’ in 1682).

Meikle Whitlaw (nee-kul-whi'-law) n., former name for a farm at Whitlaw, to the north of the Flex road, opposite 'Little Whitlaw'. The 2 former farms were separated by the Flex Burn. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, at that time covering 188 acres and being bounded by the Slitrig, Little Whitlaw and Hawick Common, with the farmhouse at the south end, on the Flex Burn. The old boundary of the Common came to a point there, with the boundary line running through one of the farm buildings; this was the house of Janet Martin at the time of the 1767 description of the Common. At the Riding of the Marches a cut sod was placed on the roof and the Flag passed over it also (presumably by the Cornet). The farm was formerly owned by the Gladstains, then became a tenanted farm belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch. There is a record of a band of English and Scottish thieves stealing cattle from John Gledstanes' byre there in 1580 and being followed by a band of Gladstains and Scotts; on their return through Liddesdale they were ambushed by Armstrongs and others and Walter, brother of James Gladstains of Cocklaw was killed. In 1692 Francis Gladstains renewed his lease, which he held by right through 'gentleman service'. In the 1750s there was a dispute over the apportionment of the 'cess' between these lands and the Flex. 'Mickle and Little Whitlaws' were valued together at £152 2s 7d in 1811, when owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farmer in the mid-19th century was William Knox; he was said to have succeeded 2 of his uncles, who became tenants in about 1746 (although it was probably later), succeeding John Gladstains. The site of the former farm buildings is now the main part of Flex farm (also known as 'Muckle Whitlaw'; it is 'Mekle Quhitelaw' in 1580 and 'Meikle Whittlawes' in 1718).

He was listed in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 being owed £87 3s 4d for his work at Branxholme. Robert (17th/18th C.) mason originally from Melrose Parish. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for workman Adam Tudhope. In 1716 in Hawick he married Agnes, daughter of the deceased James Chisholme. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included: Agnes (b.1724); and Richard (b.1731).

Thomas (b.1821/2) farmer at Broomhills in Southdean in the 1860s. He was living with his mother Elizabeth at Southdean Glebe in 1841 and was at Broom farm by 1851. In 1861 he was farmer of 220 acres at Broomhills, employing 7 people. He married Elizabeth or Betsy Smith in Hobkirk Parish in 1855. He must have been related to the Meins of Hunthill and Ormiston (formerly written 'Mean' and variants; see also Main).

Mellerstain (me-lur-staın) n. Georgian manor house, near Gordon in Berwickshire. Built in the 18th century by William and Robert Adam for the Bailie family, it was originally called Whitesyde, and is now open to the public. Its landscape was laid out in the 1720s and 30s, further developed by Reginald Blomfield around 1900 into an outstanding example of a planned estate. The Hundy Mundy folly to the south, with a wooded area, is now used for natural burials.

Mellerstain

Melgund Glen (mel-gind-glen) n. house near Denholm, belonging to the Earl of Minto. It lies between Hassendean Bank and Minto Mound, on the Grinding Burn. It was probably designed by W.H. Playfair in 1827 and was used as the Manse for Minto Parish. Some old field boundaries are visible to the north-west.

Melgund Place (mel-gind-plis) n. street running between the tops of Brougham Place and O’Connell Street, with original houses built in 1837 (the street name is already used in Pigot’s 1837 directory). It was named after a title borne by the heir to the Earldom of Minto, being an area in Forfarshire. J.P. Alison designed the tenement at No. 1.

the Melgund Pump (Thu-mel-gind-pump) n. popular name for the Melgund Bar at 11 Melgund Place. Originally it was the name of a spring at the corner of Melgund Place and O’Connell Street, demolished in 1881. It was also known as ‘Stenton’s Pump’.

the Melgund (Thu-mel-gind) n. the Melgund Bar at 11 Melgund Place, taking its name from the spring that once stood near there. Also sometimes called the ‘Melgund Pump’. It closed in 2004, but reopened briefly in 2006, turning into a bar and Indian restaurant in 2008.

melly (me-lee) n., arch. cloth that is a mixture of colours – ‘...for art and part of theft and concealment ...six ells of melley, twenty-four ells of white cloth ...’ [RBA1537].
Melrose (mel-röz) n. town built at the foot of the Eildons in the Tweed valley, birthplace of rugby sevens. St. Aidan founded a monastery here in the 7th century, being succeeded by St. Boswell and St. Cuthbert, with the present abbey founded around 1136. The town became a Burgh of Barony in 1609. The 15th century Commissor’s House, repaired 1645 Market Cross, and Priorwood Gardens are other attractions. At one time called Fordel, it was well known for producing linens until the late 18th century, and also known as the former home of ‘Coltart’s Candy’. Melrose was a station on the Waverley Line, but is now primarily a residential and retirement community. Considered ‘poser’ by other Borderers, it is rarely the best-loved among the other towns – ‘The dastards of Melrose and Galashiels weavers! They pulled out our badge, and became our deceivers’ [JH]. Melrose Festival Week was inaugurated in 1938, led by the Melrosian and the Festival Queen, and has some events in the grounds of Melrose Abbey. The local song has some great words – ‘It’s oor ain toon, It’s the best toon That ever there be: Here’s tae Melrose, gem o’ Scotland, The toon o’ the free’. The town has also given rise to a surname. Population (1991) 2,270 (the origin is possibly the Old British ‘mael’ and Old Welsh ‘rhos’, meaning ‘bare or cropped moor’, although the Gaelic ‘ros’ for ‘promontory’ has also been suggested; the name was probably transferred from Old Melrose where the Abbey was first sited; certainly the name has nothing to do with the rose, despite its appearance on the town’s coat of arms; the name first appears as ‘Mailros’ about 700 and had varied spellings until the 17th century).

Melrose (mel-röz) n. Adam (d.1222) referred to as ‘Adam of Melrose’, where he became Abbot in 1207. His origins are a mystery. In 1213 he became Bishop of Caithness, and was consecrated in May 1214. In the following month he dedicated the church of St. Mary in Hawick. This is presumably because he had previously been Abbot of Melrose, and would have been something he did before returning to Caithness. In 1218 he was one of the Bishops who visited the Pope to reverse the excommunication imposed upon the whole Kingdom of Scotland. He was burned to death in his kitchen at Halkirk by a mob of infuriated farmers after he had increased the tax. Adam (1817/8–74) another of the engineering family, of whom a portrait exists. He married Agnes, daughter of plumber and slater Walter Grieve, and she died in 1891, aged 75. Their children included: Janet, who married James Davidson, who worked for Patons, spinners in Alloa; Helen (b.1844); Agnes; another Agnes; Walter (b.1849); Maggie (b.1853); Lizzie; Isabella; and Jemina. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Helen (19th C.) listed as milliner or dressmaker in Slater’s 1852 directory. J. (d.1814) resident of Macksie. His death is recorded in Hobkirk Parish. James (b.1767/8) born in Ratho, Midlothian, he was an engineer who came to Hawick from Berwick in the 1810s and founded the local firm James Melrose & Sons in 1815. Their premises started in Brougham Place (shown on Wood’s 1824 map) and moved to Slitrig Crescent. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed as a millwright and machine maker at ‘Woodyard’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and was still there on the 1841 census. The firm produced much of the machinery for woolen mills in the South of Scotland. He is recorded as a joint proprietor with his son James in the 1837 electoral roll. In 1837 he was listed simply on the High Street. He is said to have invented the piecing machine (for joining the ‘rovings’ in preparation for spinning) in Hawick in 1844, which was adopted throughout Scotland, as well as in England, and as far afield as Russia. In 1851 he was at 1 High Street (although clearly the east end of the High Street was meant) and ‘Jas. Melrose & Son, millwrights, East end’ is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1808 he married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Hardie in Eccles, Berwickshire. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1810); and John (b.1815). He was still alive in 1851. James (d.1862) from Hawick, he became foreman of the Keysham Steam Factory in Devonport. He married Janet Easton, who died in Hawick in 1886. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as tenant in ‘quithalch’, when he was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing cows from the Frissells near Peebles. It is unclear which of the Whithaugh or Whitehaughes he lived at, but his surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. John (c.1815–89) son of James, he ran the family engineering firm. He was born in Berwick. He was a Town Councillor for Slitrig Ward until 1867. He was Chairman of Hawick Gas Light Co., and member of the Parochial Board. He was also on the original Hawick Bowling Club committee in 1854. In 1851 he was at 5 Brougham Place and at 14 Slitrig Crescent in 1861. He donated a communion cup from the Green Kirk to the Museum. He married Catherine Easton. Their children were: Eliza (b.1841); James (b.1843); Helen Hardie (b.1845); William (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); John (b.1853), who became Hawick Provost; and Catherine (b.c.1855). John, C.B.E. (b.1853) son of John and Cathearing Easton. He grew up in Hawick, where he was taught for a while by James Murray. He ran the engineering company James Melrose & Sons. He was on Hawick Town Council for Teviot Ward from 1898 and was soon elected a Magistrate, then was Provost 1902–1919, being Hawick’s longest serving Provost. He was said to be a man of few words, but an untiring public servant. A large number of improvements were carried out during his Provostship, including the Boer War Memorial, the Quater-Centenary, the Corporations Swimming Baths, Anderson Sanatorium, the Fire Station, acquisition of Moat Park and the move of the Museum to Wilton Lodge. In 1906 he was the first Provost to wear the robes, with chain and badge of office. He was Chairman of the Common Riding Committee and the Ceremonial Committee, Chairman of the Home-Coming and Pageant Committee, one of the original members of the Callants’ Club and an early President. He was also Chairman of the local Military Tribunal during WWI, for which service he received the C.B.E. He was Unionist in politics, Chairman of the Hawick Gas Company and Teviotdale Dairy Co., Governor of Hawick Savings Bank, member of the District Board of Control and a J.P. He married Grace Franch Taylor, who came from Lauder. On his retirement he was presented with a portrait by George Fiddes Watt, R.S.A., which is now in the Town Hall. He lived at Hopehill, is buried at Wilton Cemetery, and Melrose Court is named after him. He can be seen in a film clip of Baden-Powell’s visit to Hawick in 1910. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Rieve in Roberton in 1794. Their children included: Robert (b.1795), baptised in Roberton; and Janet (b.1805), baptised in Galashiels. The 1795 baptism was 1by law in Kelso Parish’. William (15th C.) witness in 1454 to a charter in Wilton Parish. He is recorded as ‘Willelmo Melrose’. Most of the other witnesses were local men. William (d.1908) brother of Provost John, he was a partner in Melrose’s engineering firm, having served as apprentice under his father and uncle. He was on the School Board, associated with the Archaeological Society, a Director of the Hawick Gas-Light Company and a member of the East Bank Church. He had been taught by J.A.H. Murray and was one of the first people in Hawick to take up cycling. He installed the first electric generator in Hawick, which ran at Tower Mill, and provided electric lighting to William Elliot’s house at Tievot Lodge.
Melrose

Melrose Abbey (mel-röz-aw-bee) n. Abbey in the town of Melrose, founded by David I around 1136, with Cistercian (also known as ‘white’) monks. This followed an earlier monastery built at Old Melrose, in a loop of the Tweed, about 2½ miles downriver. It was founded around 650 by St. Aidan, with St. Boisil and St. Cuthbert also Priors there. This building was burned in 839, slowly fell into decay and was abandoned by the 11th century. The new abbey was dedicated to St. Mary and was headed by an Abbot. The town of Melrose grew up around the Abbey. The ‘Chronicle of Melrose’ is a historical record compiled by the monks, covering the period 731–1264, and including the consecration of St. Mary’s in Hawick in 1214. The Abbey held the right of patronage of Hassendean Parish from the late 12th century until the Reformation. They also held extensive pieces of land throughout the Borders, including a large chunk of Ettrick (according to a charter of around 1235) and Ringwood, an area in southern Cavers Parish, as first recorded in 1360. Their lands were erected into a free regality in 1358. Around the same time there was confirmation of the Abbey’s right to the annual rents from the sheriff courts and justice courts of Roxburghshire. Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Bailie of their lands in 1519, confirmed in 1524/5; this included ‘Melrosland, Etrikheid, Rodonaland, Eskdalmuir, Ringwoodfield, Est Tevidall and Vggynis’. The Abbey was frequently damaged during Border skirmishes, being burned in 1322, when Abbot Peebles was slain by Edward II’s men. Robert the Bruce gave a huge sum for its rebuilding. Lands gifted to the Abbey about that time included some in the Borthwick valley. Burned again in 1385, it was rebuilt in the 15th century, and burned again in 1545. Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme apparently dismantled much of it in 1569 (according to a court case of 1573), claiming he had carried off the materials to save them from the English. The abbey was finally destroyed in the Reformation, and the lands were administered by a Commander. After many changes of hands the lands (including the Kirks of Hassendean and Cavers) were formally resigned in 1609, becoming part of the Lordship of Melrose. The parish kirk was constructed over the nave in 1618. Thomas Hamilton became Earl of Melrose and gained the lands of the Abbey in 1619, and later they passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch. Records of the Regality of Melrose, pertaining to the former Abbey’s lands preserve some important local information. The Abbey was built in red sandstone, including fine tracery, with much intricate carving surviving. It was extensively restored in 1822, at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch, under the supervision of Sir Walter Scott. Alexander II is buried here, as well as allegedly the heart of Robert the Bruce, after being carried back from the Crusades. More local connections include that St. Cuthbert is said to have started his career at Melrose Abbey, George Fairneylaw, a messenger from the Abbey is meant to have been killed by Roger Langlands at Stirches in 1493 (possibly true, although Fairneylaw was a cleric of the Diocese of Glasgow), and the monks are supposed to have first built the shelter at Mosspaull (although there is no evidence to support this, but they did own land in the neighbourhood). The abbey is now open to the public, port this, but they did own land in the neighbourhood). The abbey is now open to the public, as well as the adjacent Commendator’s House – ‘Deserted Melrose! oft with holy dare I trace thy ruins mouldering o’er the dead; While, as the fragments fall, wild fancy hears The solemn steps of old departed years’ [JL].

Melroselands (mel-roz-lawndz) n. lands held by Melrose Abbey in the 15th and 16th centuries. It is unclear exactly the extent of these lands, and whether they always meant the same thing. Along with Ettrick, Rodon, Eskdalmuir, Ringwoodfield and East Teviotdale, they formed a set of lands to which Sir David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert were appointed as bailies in 1484. Gilbert Leighton and Robert Cairncross were recorded as tenants in 1493. The appointment was hereditary, with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch was appointed to the same office in 1519, Sir Walter succeeding his grandfather in 1564 and the next Sir Walter succeeding his father in 1574 (it is ‘Melroslandis’ in 1519, ‘Melrosland’ in 1524 and ‘Melrosland’ in 1553/4).

Melrose’s (mel-roz-seez) n. local engineering firm, founded in 1815 as James Melrose & Sons, starting in Broughton Place and moving to Slitrig Crescent. They supplied many of the local textile mills, e.g. the new pit wheel for Wilton Mills in 1829, the first steam engine built in Hawick, for Langlands Mill in 1831, and the first ‘piecing machine’ in Hawick in 1844. They furnished the mills at the Glebe, Riversdale and Teviotdale. They also occupied the Teviotside Foundry on the east side of Commercial Road from the late 19th century. At their height the company was supplying factories from the England Midlands to far north of Scotland. The National Archives of Scotland have papers dating from 1867, while the Scottish Borders Archive has some engineering plans from about 1863–1910.

Melrose’s (mel-roz-seez) n. butcher’s shop also run as a hostelry by Mrs. Melrose in the early 19th century. It was located at the eastern side of the Tower.

Melrosian (me-roz-ee-in) n. someone from Melrose, also the name of the principal of the Melrose festival.

meltth (mel’t) n., arch. the milt, male reproductive gland of a fish, arch., poet. a meal, food, sustenance – ‘Thaye sall fa’ bie the sword; thaye sall be ane melteth for the tods’ [HSR], ‘... an’ that was ay when ye gaed him a gude meltith – a nicht’s hudgin’ an’ a pickle meal away wi’ him in the mornin’’ [BCM1880].

Melville (mel-vil) n. David (1660–1728) 3rd son of George, Earl of Melville. He became 3rd Earl of Leven in 1681. He came over to Scotland with the army of William of Orange in 1688.
Along with his father, he helped deal with the affairs in Scotland for Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch, who was half-sister of his mother. There are several letters in existence from her to him in the period 1696–1702. Holding several high offices, he was appointed a Commissioner for the Union in 1706, was a Representative Peer 1707–10, but dismissed from all offices in 1712. George (1636–1707) 4th Lord and 1st Earl of Melville. He was an advisor of the young Duchess of Buccleuch, taking care of her affairs in Scotland. Accused in the ‘Rye House Plot’ of 1683, he fled to Holland. He returned to Scotland after the Revolution and became Secretary of State for Scotland. He and his son continued to deal with the estates of the Duchess, but after her return to Scotland in 1701 she started to suspect that they had worked in their own interest, and the legal disputes took until 1711 to resolve. He is portrayed as Henry Morton in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Old Mortality’. He married Catherine, only daughter of Lady Margaret Leslie and her 1st husband, Lord Balgonie; she was a step-sister of the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son David, who was also Earl of Leven. James of Halhill (d.bef. 1714) son of Sir James of Halhill and Burnstane. His great-grandfather, also Sir James, was author of the ‘Memoirs of His Own Life’. In 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the `Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1696 John Scott of Synton and Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane had a bond with him. Rev. John (17th C.) from the Mearns, he graduated from Aberdeen in 1667. He became minister at Ewes Kirk in about 1682. However, he was deprived in 1689 for refusing to give up Episcopalianism.

mem (mem) n., arch. ma’am, madam – ‘I dinna ken how much whisky they took, mem, but they’ve drucken sax gang o’ watter!’ [V&M], ‘Deed, then, mem’, said she, ‘I won’t hire with that condition; for I wadna gie the crack i’ the kirkya’ird after, for a’ the rest o’ the service’ [WiS].

Members of Parliament (mem-burz-ô-par-li-min’ ) n. Members of Parliament, elected by voters in a constituency to represent them in the House of Commons. This system grew out of conventions of the minor barons, which started about the 15th century, but without specifically representing a region. From the 16th century counties had representatives to the Scottish Parliament, called Commissioners; there were 2 of these at a time throughout the 17th century, with an additional 2 appointed in 1690, and the last term being 1702–07. The families of Douglas of Cavers, Pringle of Stichell, Eliott of Stobs, Eliott of Minto, McDougall of Makerstoun, Scott of Langshaw, Ker of Greenhead, Scott of Ancrum, Riddell of that Ilk, Bennet of Grubet, Scott of Woll, Scott of Gala and Eliott of Headshaw all represented the county. A surviving document of 1628 describes how the Sheriff was unable to get anyone to agree to be a Commissioner, even after 4 meetings! For the Parliament of 1621 the Commissioners were the Sheriff himself (Sir William Douglas of Cavers) and (Andrew) Riddell of that Ilk, while for the 1633 Parliament it was again the Sheriff and (perhaps Walter) Riddell of that Ilk. The appointment of Commissioners to the Parliamets of Charles and William during the chaotic 17th centuries is hard to track, and it may be that men were appointed in place of others (hence the list below may not be accurate in this period). The first Westminster Member of Parliament for Roxburghshire was in 1708. Before 1832 there were very few local electors, for example the number in Hawick was only 2 or 3 out of the 143 voters in the county of Roxburghshire in 1812. Hawick people were extremely active in pushing for electoral reform and the extension of political franchise. After the 1868 Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, a new constituency, the Hawick (or Border) Burghs was set up, including the boundaries of Hawick, Galashiels and Selkirk. Hawick’s M.P. was thus separate from that of Roxburghshire until this seat was dissolved in 1918. The constituency was called ‘Roxburgh & Selkirk’ 1918–55, then merged into ‘ Roxburgh, Selkirk & Peebles’ 1955–83, became ‘Roxburgh and Berwickshire’ 1983–2005 and is now Berwickshire, Roxburgh & Selkirk. A list of Hawick’s M.Ps. is: Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun 1597; Sir John Ker of Hirsels 1605, 1607; Sir William Cranston 1608; Sir William Douglas of Cavers 1612, 1617, 1621, 1628–33, 1639–40, 1644, 1645–46, 1650; Andrew Riddell of that Ilk 1617, 1621; John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw 1625; Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun 1625; Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk 1628–33, 1646–47, 1650; Sir James Kerr of Hundalee and Crailling 1630; John Rutherford of Hunthill 1630; Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk 1633; Robert Pringle of Stichill 1639–41; William Eliott of Stobs 1640–41, 1643, 1645–47, 1650–51; Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers 1643–44, 1648–49; Sir John Ker of Lochtour 1644; Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead 1645, 1648–49; William Kerr of Newton 1646–47, 1656–58; Gideon Scott of Highchester 1650; Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead 1658–59, 1669–74; Sir Archibald Douglas.
Memoral (me-nō-ruil) n., poet. a memorial – ‘...an’ thy memorall, O Lord, throweowt a’ ganerations’ [HSR].

Mem Dyce (mem-dis) n. nickname of Isobel Dyce.

Memor (me-nour) n., poet. a memorial – ‘...an’ thy memorall, O Lord, throweowt a’ ganerations’ [HSR].

Menie (mu-naj) n., arch. a benefit club of neighbours or workers, particularly a scheme, generally among women in the 19th and early 20th centuries, where those joining paid a fixed amount every week (plus perhaps a small commission going to the treasurer for managing the fund) for 20 weeks and a draw was made to distribute the total each week. In the late 1800s the contribution might be 1 shilling, with the £1 total given out randomly each week. The practice may still be carried out in mills today, with larger sums involved, and sometimes individuals arranging to be near the beginning or end of the draw – ‘...joining a ‘menage’ was as stupid a thing as going to the pawnbroker ...’ [JTu] (from French; noted by E.C. Smith, but already a thing of the past by then; cf. teedly).

Mend (mend) v., arch. to fully recover from an illness or injury (different meaning from standard English; noted by E.C. Smith; see also menders).

Mender (men-dur) n. a person who makes minor repairs to the stitching of garments in the knitwear industry after being found by a ‘looker’. Good practitioners of this art are ‘invisible menders’.

Mendit (men-dec’, -di’) pp. mended – ‘The hurlie at ei mendet the trams o’ [ECS].

Mends (mendz) n., pl., arch. recovery, healing – ‘On the way o mends = to be convalescent; progressing towards recovery of health’ [ECS] (cf. mend).

Meng (meng) v. to smell, stink, pong, arch. to mix among filth, n. a smell, stink, n., arch. human excrement (also ming).

Meng (meng) v., arch. to mix things among filth.

Menie (me-née) n. diminutive of the name ‘Williamina’ – ‘O where is tinye Hewe? O where is little Lenne? And where is bonny Lu? And Menie o’ the glenn?’ [JTe].

Menna see menni

Mennent (men-en’) n., arch. a minnow – ‘Christopher North’ uses baggie-mennon, an approximate combination of two Hawick terms. Ramsay has mennin’ [ECS] (also written ‘mennant’ and ‘mennet’).

Menni (me-ni, -na, -nu) contr. mustn’t, must not, may not – ‘ee menni dae’d’, ‘Yow yins that’s keinda perjink menna be uggeet at iz for aa this’ [ECS], ‘An’ wei menna forget that in the vast majority o’ the tenements in the toon the kitchen had tae ser’ as the bedroom as weel’ [BW1938] (also written ‘menna’: cf. mauni).
men’s baa

men’s baa (menz-baw) n., arch. handball game formerly played in Hawick on the Monday preceding the game in Jedburgh (held on ‘Fastern’s-E’en’, i.e. Shrove Tuesday, or the day before Lent). It was distinguished from the ‘callants’ baa’, which was played on the preceding Saturday.

mense (mens) n., arch., poet. manners, decorum, respectability, honour, dignity, hospitality – ‘You now will see an altered chield, Wi’ sense, and mense, and wisdom filled’[JoHa], ‘That wumman hes naethher sense nor mense’[ECS], ‘Never heed! oo’ll heh baith oor mert an oor mense (said when a cordial invitation has been declined)’[ECS], ‘For she had baken a crumpie cake And butter scones, for mense’s sake, To entertain her lodger’[HSR], ‘Then, lickyng my chops, I thought that the Auld Testament had muckle mense ...’ [DH], ‘God gie us mense this Christmas To fluff intil a lwe ...’ [WL], ‘...A haandle o’ mense to oor dull heids send’ [WL], credit, sense of pride – ‘For Bosells hes muckle mense o er Green!’[ECS], ‘Her familye hae muckle mense o her’[GW], someone who is a credit, respect – ‘She’s the mense o’ the famely’[GW], ‘Hei’s a gleg callant; ee heh muckle mense o um’[ECS], reward, recompense – ‘...And a’ the prayers the poor fool pray’d, I wish I had a mense for my ain three ky. Fala, &c.’[CPM].

mensefi (mens-fi) adj., arch. mannerly, hospitable, generous, sensible – ‘We mourn the loss o’ mensefi’ John: ‘Yet greet in vain since he is gone: A blyther lad ne’er buir a drone ...’[CPM], ‘When we went to tea, we got something before to make us ‘menseful’ – i.e., moderate in what we partook of’[RJR], ‘But mind ye, she maun be mensefu the wench when she makes the par-ritch’[JEDM], ‘A was verryh mensefi at tei-time: A duist tuik yeh cup’[ECS], ‘A’d lippent oon that wanchancy motor as the maist mensief way o wunnin threh Jethart ti Haaick’[ECS] (also spelled ‘mensefui’, etc.).

menseless (mens-lis) adj., arch. unmannerly, ill-bred, boorish – ‘A duist hyit jairgin things, an that menseless road-injin fair garrd mei gurrl!’[ECS], indecent, improper.

Menslaws (mens-lawz, -les) n. farm just north of Spittal-on-Rule, near where the Rule Water joins the Teviot. There was once a quarry there, which supplied stone to Hawick, among other place. It may be the ‘menskles’ where Gilbert Law had grain stolen by Adam Grahamlaw, according to a case of 1502. It is probably the ‘Mensles’ listed among the lands of the Stobs estate purchased by Gilbert Eliott from his half sisters in about 1608. In 1623 the lands were granted to the Kers of Cavers-Carre and later the farm at ‘Menseless Pathhead’ was part of the Cavers estate. It was among lands owned by Sir Thomas Ker in 1643, valued at £357. It was among lands inherited by John, son of John Kerr of West Nisbet in 1684. William Brown was there in 1687. Also in 1687 5 acres of land there were listed among lands inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers and by his brother Archibald in 1698. James Riddell was recorded there in 1745. Before 1786 the farm was owned by William Black, his lands being stated in 1788 to have been valued at £263 16s 3d, including the 2 husbandlands at the ‘waulk-mill’. The farm then passed to the Bells; William Bell had a new house built there about this time and was recorded as owner of 5 horses there in 1797. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was recorded being owned by Robert Bell, and valued at £264. Land steward Mark Turnbull was there in 1851. In 1860, a year after the death of George Bell, it was sold to Thomas Cockburn, then owned briefly by a Mr. Turnbull, before being bought by Robert Cunningham, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch. Thomas Riddell was there in the 1860s. The tenants of the house in the early 20th century were 2 sisters called Peter. There was once a quarry there, supplying stone for buildings in Hawick and Jedburgh. A burial cist was found there, north of the farm, at the edge of the Teviot flood plain; 2 boys discovered it in 1960, James Wallace and Michael Turnbull, and it was excavated by the Hawick Archaeological Society the following year, revealing an adult and juvenile skeleton and triangular flint point. The remains are in the Museum (sometimes ‘Mainslaws’), the name is probably from the Old English ‘gemeanes leah’, meaning ‘common property’, or possibly ‘menseless’, meaning untidy or uncleared land; it first appears transcribed as ‘menskles’ in 1502, then is ‘Mensles’ in 1516 and 1571, with ‘Menslawis’ soon after, although it is still ‘Mensles’ in 1623, ‘Mensis’ in 1643, ‘Menslie’ and ‘Menseless’ in 1678, ‘Menslie’ in 1687 and 1698, ‘Mensless’ in 1761 and 1797 and ‘Mainslaws or Mensless’ in 1811; Sir James Murray refers to it as ‘Menzies Laws’ in 1888; it is ‘Mensles’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and incorrectly appears as ‘Mansles’ on Stobie’s 1770 map.

men-sworn (men-swörn) pp., adj., arch. forsworn, perjured – ‘...and calling the council’s officers men-sworn louns, was fined £10 Scots’[BR1657].

mentionat (men-shin-a’) pp., arch. mentioned, referred to – ‘...as if ther wer ane particular paper granted by us and ilk ane of us to the effect above mentionat’ [BR1692], ‘...to prove that the said Andrew came down the Bedell’s stair att the above mentionat silent houres of ye night’ [PR1718], ‘...the said William Whaton, riding in ye manner above mentionat’ [PR1718].

mer (mer) v., arch. to mar, injure, to stay the course of (a ball, hoop etc. that has gotten out of control), to stop or block the way (of sheep or cattle) – ‘Beide yow there an merr thir paips soomin doon the guitter’ [ECS], ‘Eee sood heh merrd the bool; it’s rowld owre fer’ [ECS], to steer a ‘yoke-a-tullie’ with the feet – ‘A gaird maun be gey skeely at merrin’ [GW], ‘Sic a byordnar grand bit for a tulie’ with the feet { `A gaird maun be gey skeely bool; it’s rowld owre fer’ [ECS], to steer a ‘yoke-a-tullie’! By!! The gaird wad at merrin’ [GW], `Sic a byordnar grand bit for a tulie’ with the feet { `A gaird maun be gey skeely bool; it’s rowld owre fer’ [ECS], to steer a ‘yoke-a-tullie’! By!! The gaird wad at merrin’ [GW], `Sic a byordnar grand bit for a tulie’ with the feet { `A gaird maun be gey skeely bool; it’s rowld owre fer’ [ECS], to steer a ‘yoke-a-tullie’! By!! The gaird wad at merrin’ [GW], `Sic a byordnar grand bit for a tulie’ with the feet { `A gaird maun be gey skeely bool; it’s rowld owre fer’ [ECS], to steer a ‘yoke-a-tullie’! By!! The gaird wad at merrin’ [GW], `Sic a byordnar grand bit for a tulie’ with the feet { `A gaird maun be gey skeely bool; it’s rowld owre fer’ [ECS], to steer a ‘yoke-a-tullie’! By!!

mercat (mer-ki’, mer-ka’) n. market, historically Hawick’s main markets were held on Thursdays – ‘the mercat’s now on Seturdis’, ‘Item, that all frescheris present the hale flesh slaine by them at the mercat place ...’ [BR1640], ‘...and having caused proclaim her several tymes ...at the mercat crose of Hawicke in time of mercat day’ [BR1641], ‘...rin the merket gairden and dairy at Cavers’ [IWL], ‘...Better, daur-say, Brocht, factory-fresh (sei telly) til eer hame, twae hunder miles, than frae some mercat-krame ...’ [DH]. In the 18th century Hawick had a flesh-market, butter-market, meal-market, salt-market and horse-market. The Thursday market took place in the lower part of the Town House, with all sorts of farm produce sold. In general the market area was around the Cross until the late 18th century, with 80–120 stalls extending along the High Street, selling everything from housewares and food to meat and coal. The sheep market was recorded being at the Sandbed in 1700. The general market moved to the Sandbed for a few decades, and shifted to the Tower Knowe in 1815 with the construction of the New Road. It was stated in 1839 that the number of carts coming to the town for a market day was about 170. The cattle market (and hiring fair), a right of the Duke of Buccleuch, took place in early November until the end of the 19th century. The Auction Mart, at what is now Mart Street, dominated the sale of livestock through the late 19th and much of the 20th centuries. In the 20th century the Saturday market was held near the Auction Mart and is now in the Big Haugh – ‘To fair or merket she walked alone, At best, the lasie was unco plain’ [WL] (also spelled ‘merket’, etc.; cf. mairket, mairt and mert).

the Mercat Cross (thin-mer-ki’-kros) n. Market Cross, denoting the place at which markets were held, formerly the site of Hawick’s cross. It was also sometimes referred to as the ‘flesh-market cross’. In Hawick this was near the Town Hall, at the junction of the roads to Edinburgh, Jedburgh, Newcastle and Carlisle. It is referred to in 1514 as ‘crucem foralem’ when part of the ceremony for giving Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig the Barony of Hawick was carried out there. It was extant in 1542, when a proclamation was read from it, and presumably there earlier. In 1545 it is among the market crosses to which a proclamation about Sir Walter Scott of Bransholm was to be attached. There is a record in 1715 (when it is referred to as the ‘common mercat cros’) that it was to be repaired and several other records of it being mended from about 1724 on. During the 18th century it is recorded that a proclamation was made there on the day of the Common Riding, describing what parts of the Common were to be used for cutting peats and for making ‘bakes’, etc. It was demolished in 1762 during road improvements, the shaft and capital apparently being sold off for 11/6. The removal took 2 labourers 2 full days. The base of the Cross was inverted, sunk into the pavement nearby, had an iron ring attached, and until about 1781 was used for bull-baiting and for displaying criminals as a public spectacle. It was then removed to near the Teviot, where it was used for tying skins to be washed in the river. The stone was rescued when Teviot Road was built in about 1860 and moved to the Museum at Orrock Place and later to the Buccleuch Memorial. William N. Kennedy wrote an article on the Cross in 1863, stating that the base was made of Whitlepe Burn sandstone. In 1927 the Cross was reconstructed beside the Museum, using a modern shaft and a capital (perhaps 17th century, probably the one discovered at Abbey Sike in Castleton). However, the capital was moved inside after the Cross was vandalised in 1985. A plaque (placed around 1946) marks its original position near the bottom of the Cross Wynd, which was named for it. Here also the proclamation to the Burgesses is made by the Burgh Officer, warning them all to attend.

the Riding of the Marches or pay a hefty fine. For centuries this advertisement for the Common Riding has been called out on the Thursday here. In former times the Burgess Roll was also called here on the Friday before the Riding of the Marches. Other notices would be fixed to the Cross in former times, e.g. lists of those accused of being Covenanters in the late 17th century, and the ‘Chevalier’ was proclaimed here in 1715. Thieves were sometimes made to stand at the cross on market day, with their crime written on a piece of paper stuck to their forehead. This punishment continued into the early 19th century. In addition the town stocks were once located next to the Cross – ‘...the said Adam Gowanlock brought the said meir to the mercat-crose of Hawick the said day to be apprised ...’[BR], ‘...in respect it was publicly done at the mercat cross, in presence and in the hearing of divers famous witnesses’[BR1685] (note that Market Crosses were rarely ‘cross-shaped’, usually consisting of a shaft crowned with a carved emblem as capital; it is unclear what was carved on the capital of Hawick’s original Cross).

the Mercat Gait (thu-mer-ki’-gā’) n. former name for a road in Ashkirk. It is recorded in 1589 that it was on the west and north sides of Wollhaugh.

Mercat Place (mer-ki’-plis) n. Market Place, name used for a while in the 19th century for an area including Tower Knowe and Drumlanrig Bridge over the Slitrig, which was used as a market place. It is so labelled on Wood’s 1824 map and also used in Slater’s 1852 directory.

Mercer (mer-sur) n. Janet nee Reid (b.1799/1800) from Hawick, she was a wool sorter living at about 7 Allars Bank in 1841. She listed as a coffee-house keeper on the Cross Wynd in 1851, living with her grandson Mary E., as well as 5 lodgers and a female servant. She may be the Jane who had worked as a servant with the Halliburton family in the West End, contracting cholera in 1832, but recovering. Robert, W.S. (1797–1875) lawyer in Edinburgh. He was son of James of Scotsbank. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and so presumably had a local connection. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Scott-Moncrieff.

merch (merch) v., arch. to set a boundary, particularly by laying down markers – ‘The said day, Allane Deanes, travellour, being accusit for not being at the ryding and merching of the Commoune ...’[BR1645].
wife Sybilla. This was probably the original Hermitage Chapel, which led to the stream being later known as the Hermitage Water. The hermit was called William ‘de Mercieleye’, and the date is unknown, but must have been before 1206. The second monk from Kelso was called Roger, and he was granted land beside ‘Heleychesters’ (probably in Temple Healey) some time before 1229 (the name suggests a boundary between properties, but it is unknown what these may have been; the name does not appear on any map, and was completely superseded by ‘Hermitage’).

Merchinlee (mer-chin-lee) n. former name for lands on the Hermitage Water. William ‘de Mercieleye’ was granted a hermitage there by Walter de Bolbeck some time before 1206, this probably being the original Hermitage Chapel. It was set up for 2 monks from Kelso Abbey, the other being ‘Roger monk of Merchingley’ who was later granted 26 acres of land beside Heleychesters (probably in Temple Healey) by Hugh de Baliol, some time before 1229. The lands are described as ‘from the Merchingburn on the one side, by a circuit from the Tile Ford on to the Ford where the Stanesden Burn (possibly the Roughley Burn) descends to the Merchingburn’ (also written ‘Mercheleya’).

Merchiston (mer-chi-, -chum-stin) n. James (d.c.1527) recorded as Rector of Hawick in 1504. 2 years earlier he is recorded receiving payment from the court of James IV for a young horse brought by him from Flanders. He was listed as a Chaplain of Glasgow Diocese in 1505, although the parish is not named. He also appears to have received more senior appointments in the Diocese in 1511. In 1512 he was designated Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine and lived on Edinburgh High Street, so probably ceased to be associated with Hawick before then. Also in 1512 he was one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts. His name appears in various Edinburgh deeds in the period 1512–18 (also written ‘Merchamston’, ‘Merchainston’, etc.).

mercif (mer-see-f) adj., arch. merciful, temperate (of weather) – ‘The weather on the Friday had been mercifeh but a damp Seterday hed cut the attendance at the Sports’ [BW1974] (also written ‘mercifeh’).

mercy (mer-see) interj. goodness, dear – ‘mercy mei’, ‘The lasses, eh mercy, A’ kannae stert now ...’ [??], ‘Mercy, here’s a caperin’ Irishman. This is no’ the man for mei oanway’ [JEDM].

mere (meer) n., arch. a mare, female horse – ‘...either in his nichbour’s corn, meadow, or haynit gers, sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings ...’ [BR1640], ‘Weel, sin’ that time the sheep has been to sheer, And he’s been east to buy the laird a meer’ [CPM], ‘The outlaws come frae Liddesdale, They herry Redesdale far and near; The rich man’s gelding it maun gang, They canna pass the puir man’s meir’ [T], ‘Or how Ratlin’ Rab the Ranter And Deans mere ...’ [RH], ‘... Aw heard a puir auld grey meer Gi’e mony a heavy groan’ [JSB], ‘John Paiterson’s meir, She canna be here’ [JP] (also spelled ‘mear’, ‘meir’ and ‘meir’).

Merianton (me-ree-in-tin) n. Lairdship held by the Armstrongs in the 16th century. It appears to be another name for Mangerton (it is ‘Meriantoun’ and ‘Merjantoun’ in 1541).

merdian (me-ri-dee-in) n., arch. former name for a social mid-day drink, especially among merchants.

meritable (me-ri-ta-bul) adj., arch. worthy of merit – ‘For that yt ys neidfull and merityable to ber wytnes to the suthfastnes ...’ [SB1431].

merk (merk) v. to mark – ‘did ee merk ma car?’, ‘Merk the perfite man, an’ behald the upricht ...’ [HSR], ‘Merk ye weel hir bullwarks: tak’ tent til hir palaces ...’ [HSR], ‘He kens my failin’s, merks my ilka turn, And whiles, when frae the track I gang astray ...’ [WL], ‘Hither and yont throu the hodden mist Rise the merks o her classic story ...’ [WL], ‘...a his interests merk um oot as a Gitterbluid Wastender’ [IWL], n. a mark – ‘they’re jist a couple o pail merks, thaim’, ‘Let this beide as a merk o the respeck o the wreiter ...’ [ECS], ‘An a merk on the shooder o’ Cauldcleuch To show where the cloudberries growe ...’ [DH], ‘...ee’ll be followin in the hoofmerks and the fitprints o the burgesses of old’ [IWL], ‘...bit maistly thame that tane es much time es they hed available, got the best merks’ [We].

merk (merk) n., arch. an old Scottish silver coin worth thirteen shillings and four pence (two-thirds of a pound) Scots, or about 13 shillings and 1/3 pence sterling – ‘...the sovme of fourty lib. and fourtene merks, gude an vsuale money of Scotland ...’ [SB1510/1], ‘...the two hundred merks allowit by the Earl of Queensberry and debursed be the town of Hawick ...’ [BR1644], ‘...9000 merks to the schoolmaster, and the rest of the 1600 merks to the poor of the parish’ [PR1714], ‘Whip her in, whip her oot, Sax merks in a clout’ [JP].
Merlin (mer-lin) n. semi-mythical poet-warrior of the 6th century, referred to as ‘Merlinus Caledonensis’ (‘Merlin of Caledonia’) and ‘Myrddin Wylt’ (‘Merlin the Wild’) in several Old Welsh and later sources. He is the most important prototype for Merlin of the Arthurian legends. He is said to have been born at Caerwerthevin (perhaps Carnwarth) and was present at the Battle of Arderydd (probably Arthuret or possibly Ettrick) in 573, where he killed his own nephew, driving him mad and into seclusion in the forests of southern Scotland. He was said to have been buried at Drumelzier in Tweeddale. Geoffrey of Monmouth around 1150 wrote about his supposed life and later sources. He is the most important prototype for Merlin of the Arthurian legends. He is said to have been born at Caerwerthevin (perhaps Carnwarth) and was present at the Battle of Arderydd (probably Arthuret or possibly Ettrick) in 573, where he killed his own nephew, driving him mad and into seclusion in the forests of southern Scotland. He was said to have been buried at Drumelzier in Tweeddale. Geoffrey of Monmouth around 1150 wrote about his supposed life and later sources. Merlin Dean (mer-lin-deen) n. wooded stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Black Law in Bedrule Parish, joining the Greypeel Burn and eventually flowing into the Jed Water.

merr see mer

merrer (me-rur) n., arch. someone who steers the course of farm animals, the ‘gaird’ in a ‘yoke-a-tullie’ – ‘A guid (or skeely) merrer’ [GW] (cf. mer).

merry dancers (me-ree-dan-surz) n., pl., arch. heat haze, the effects of turbulence in the air on a hot day, described by J. Jamieson as ‘The exhalations from the earth in a warm day, as seen flickering in the atmosphere, Roxb.’.

Merry Knowes (me-ree-nowz) n. hilly area just to the north-east of Whitslade farm, to the south of Whitslade Hill. A local version of the ballad ‘Ewe-buchits’ (or ‘The Broom o’ Cowden-knowes’) states that they are part of Whitslade – ‘Come round about the Merry-Knowes, my Marion, For Whitslade is lying lee’ [T] (also written ‘Merry-Knowes’).

Merrylaw (me-reu-law) n. farm along the road leading south-west from Teviothead, lying close to the source of the Teviot, on the south side. It was home of a branch of the Scotts and also Turnbulls, who were tenants at Falnash. The earliest known owners were Elliots, holding the lands of their feudal superiors the Douglasses. It appears to have been joined with Carlenrig in the valuation of 1678, but was separated in 1788 when valued at £133 6s 8d. It was ‘Mirilaw’ owned by the Elliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687. It was among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. About 1694 ‘William Scott in Merrylaw’ was tenant of Elliott of Stobs. Walter Scott of Merrylaw was renting part of Whithope in 1698 and he was an elder of Robertson Kirk in the early 1700s. David Scott was there in at least 1708–24, James Murray in 1724, John Laidlaw in 1749 and John Telfer in 1755. William Goodfellow was tenant there in at least 1784–90. William Scott of Merrylaw was minister at Kirkpatrick-Juxta. Walter Scott of Merrylaw was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1809. He was probably the Scott of Merrylaw who was listed as owner in 1788 (and still listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). William Goodfellow was tenant there for about 50 years in the late 1700s and early 1800s. James Dryden (d.1820) was shepherd there. There were Hopes there in 1841. It was owned by Turnbulls in the mid-to-late 19th century and bought by the Strang-Steel family about 1920. The Martins farmed there in the early 1900s and the Tullies were there from 1935 until the mid-1960s. The farm lay within Cavers Parish until the formation of Teviothead Parish in 1850. The lands are now mainly planted with trees – ‘Maps . . . skurled wi’ odd scales o’ troot Frae Merrylaw to Meggat . . . ’[DH] (first occurring in 1380, it is transcribed ‘Murlaw’ in 1687, ‘Merrilaw’ in 1692 and 1694, ‘Merriela’ in 1698, ‘Merriea’ in 1708, 1709 and 1713, ‘Merrilaw’ in 1724, ‘Mirrielan’ in 1730 and ‘Mirrilaw’ in 1749; the origin of the first part of the name is obscure, but probably connected with Merry Naze and Merrypath Rig).

Merry Naze (me-ree-nazes) n. hill lying to the south of Lairhope farm, west of Falnash, and not far from Tanlaw Naze. It is probably the lands called ‘Muryneis’ in the Barony of Hawick, which were explicitly listed among the lands held ‘in property’ by the Baron in 1511, and among the lands inherited along with the Barony in 1572. There was once a farm near here, home to the son of Elliot of Fahnash in 1562. Archibald Elliot ‘of Mirrieneis’ was recorded in 1598. In 1627 the farm was estimated to ‘pay 40 lb. in stok, and 8 merk in teyd. The maynes lands’ there are listed among the lands for which Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch was superior in 1686. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Fahnash to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch around 1760 (marked ‘Mirrienyse’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is probably ‘Muryneis’ and ‘Murines’ in 1511, ‘Muryneis’ in 1514, ‘Merynes’ in 1562, ‘Muryneis’ in 1572, ‘Mirryneis’ in 1615, ‘Mrrinies’ in 1627, ‘Mirries’ and ‘Mrrynees’ in 1686 and ‘Merrynees’ about 1760; the first element of the name could be Middle English ‘mirrie’ for merry, but may have another origin in common with Merrylaw and Merrypath Rig, while the second element is Middle English ‘nese’, being a projecting nose of land).

Merrypath Rig (me-ree-pawth-rig) n. ridge between Merrylaw and Ewes Doors, the summit reaching a height of 382 m. There is a linear earthwork, about 150 m long, which is crossed by the course of the old road from Eweslees to Caerlenrig (it is marked ‘Meddop petth’ in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

the Merse (thu-mers) n. Eastern Border country, generally corresponding to Berwickshire, or a slightly larger area including the entire plain of the Tweed. It is usually synonymous with the Scottish East March – ‘A Merse mist alang the Tweed, In a harvest mournin’s guid indeed’ [T], ‘Roxburgh huddles her shattered shell In the folds of her mossy plaid; Gazing at ease o’er the meadowed Merse, Hume towers, in her green arrayed’ [WL].

mershal (mer-shul) n., v. marshal. At the Common Riding the Marshals are experienced riders appointed to check that the road is clear for the Chase, ensure the safety of the riders on Ride-outs, etc.

Mershall (mer-shul) n. (Marshall) Alfred (19th C.) married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Murray and Mary Scott. His wife was younger sister of Sir James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. Their children included Mary Isa (d.1961), who died in Melrose. Alistair (?? – ) Common Riding Committee Secretary in the mid-1960s, who left town afterwards. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in Wilton in 1709 when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, tailor there. In 1725 he was living at ‘boathouse’, suggesting that he ran the coble ferry. He married Agnes Scott in 1703 and their children included: Janet (b.1718); Agnes (b.1720); Thomas (b.1722); and Anne (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were John Murray and John Scott. Isabel (b.1704) and Helen (b.1710), baptised in Wilton, were probably also his children. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Silverbuthall in 1711 when his son William was baptised, their surname being written ‘Mersil’. He could be the same Andrew who was at Mervinslaw in 1709. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son Alexander died in Hawick in 1778. He could be the James who married Margaret Murray in 1774 and whose children included Katherine (b.1775), John (b.1782) and Alexander (b.1785). Jason (1970 – ) Hawick man who started working for the Hawick News in 1986, later working for the Tweeddale Press. He became Editor of the Hawick News in 2007. John (d.1815) recorded as father of Mary and Jean when his death is recorded in Hawick in 1815. John (b.1782/3) tobacco manufacturer in Hawick, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived at about 20 High Street in 1841 and 1851. He was unmarried and lived with his sister Catherine. John (1801–74) head of the local builders firm John Marshall & Sons, which was responsible for several prominent buildings. They built the new Teviot Bridge in 1865 and the factory for Lyle & Scott in 1874/5. Katie (19th C.) proprietor of a tobacconist’s shop.
at 20 High Street in the mid-19th century, which gave its name to the adjacent close. She lived in the property along with her brother James. Mary Isabella G. ‘Isa’ (c.1800–1961) daughter of Alfred and Margaret Murray. Her mother was a sister of James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. She was a teacher at Drumlanrig School for about 25 years. She was also a keen member of the Hawick Liberal Association. She was the oldest member of the Archaeological Society at the time of her death. She lived at 6 Elm Grove. She died in hospital at Melrose. Robert (b.1826/7) from Scone in Perthshire, he was a builder in Hawick, with the firm Marshall & Ballantyne. They were responsible for the renovations to St. Mary’s Kirk in 1863. He donated an old coin he found there to the Museum. In 1861 he was living at Ladylaw Place with his wife Ann and children John, Robert, Frances Elizabeth Ann, James Young and Jessie Young. Stuart (1963/4–) born and bred in Hawick he became a local Councillor and was Honorary Provost 2013–17. He has also been involved with Escape Youth Cafe, the Hawick Flood Group and many other local organisations. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Riddell. In 1621 James Scott, indweller in Selkirk, was summoned to appear before the Lords of Council and Session for stealing his horse. William (19th C.) partner with John in the local builders firm. He was probably John’s son. He made donations to the Museum in the 1860s (also formerly ‘Marsel’, ‘Mercel’, ‘Merchall’, ‘Mersall’, ‘Mersel’, and ‘Mersell’).

Mershall’s (mer-shulz) n. John Marshall & Sons, a large building firm, significant in the latter part of the 19th and early part of the 20th centuries. They were responsible for the Teviot Bridge (1865), Henry Scott Riddell Memorial (1874), Lyle & Scott’s factory (1874/5), Town Hall (1884–86), and the Brown Fountain (1910). Their yards were on the west side of Commercial Road and before that on Slitrig Crescent. They also had an interest in the Blaxter Quarry in Northumberland.

Mershall’s Close (mer-shulz-klös) n. Marshall’s Close, a passageway at 20 High Street in the mid-19th century. It was located to the west of the Crown Hotel, between 2 small shops, and named after the tobacconist’s run by Katie Marshall.

Merten see Mertin

Mertimes (mer-tee-mes) n. former version of Martinmas – ‘...for the Witsounday and Mertymes male of the landis of Lempetlaw ...’ [SB1574] (also formerly Mertinmes).

Mertin (mer’t-in, mar-tin) n. (Marten or Martin) A. (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Adam (17th C.) one of 3 men fined in 1642 for their animals eating the oats of Gilbert Watt, the Town Clerk. He is probably the same ‘Adam Mairtene’ who was one of the men who apprised horses in Hawick for the Covenanter army in 1644. He could be the Adam, married to Margaret Gordon, whose children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1634), Agnes (b.1642), Janet (b.1644) and Helen (b.1647), or the Adam, married to Margaret Weens, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in 1648. Perhaps he is the Adam who (along with Alexander) witnessed a baptism for James. He could be the Adam who witnessed a baptism in 1671 for Margaret (perhaps his daughter) and William Renwick. Adam (17th C.) carrier in Hawick recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Perhaps the same Adam married Anna Henderson in Roberton (actually Hasendean) in 1687 and had a daughter Margaret baptised in 1688; the baptismal witnesses were John Martin and Thomas Henderson (who were probably related to him and his wife). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1716 he married Margaret Martin, both being described as ‘servants in Goldielands’. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Clarilaw in 1724 and 1727. In 1737 he witnessed baptism for James Dryden and for Robert Easton, who both lived at Clarilaw. He married Margaret Crozier and their children included: John (b.1717); Janet (b.1720); Marion (b.1722); James (b.1724); and James (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1724 were Thomas Irvine and William Easton and in 1727 were James Blyth and W. Graham. Elliot H. (19th C.) artist living in Hawick in the latter part of the 19th century, running the Hawick School of Art on Wilton Hill. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed ‘eist the wa- ter’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. Bailie George (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1700 for gardener Gideon Gardner (and was there ‘merchant’, but not recorded as Bailie). He was listed as Bailie (although this probably meant ex-Bailie) when he witnessed baptisms in 1702 for tailor John Scott, for Bailie Walter Graham and for merchant Patrick Angus. He also witnessed baptisms in 1703 for herd James Glendinning, in 1704 for merchant Michael Scott, for merchant William Dickson and for John Turnbull ('oye' to Rev. James Ker), in 1705 for merchant William Oliver and for Bailie Walter Graham, in 1706 for workman John Shiel, for shoemaker Robert Oliver, for Walter Paterson in Burnflat, for workman John Renwick and for Robert Rutherford, in 1707 for smith George Scott, Thomas Gledstains, merchant ‘Black Walter’ Scott, gardener James Dunn and William Gledstains, workman in Whital, in 1708 for David Young and for John Rae, in 1709 for merchant William Dickson, for baker Adam Richardson and for weaver William Hill, in 1712 for John Chisholme ‘Laird’, and in 1714 for weaver George Wight. Based on all of this, it seems likely he served as an Elder in the Kirk. The witnesses to his daughter’s baptism in 1704 were glover John Hart and merchant Thomas Waugh. He was the person who purchased the new Flag in 1707 (now the oldest one in existence) in Edinburgh, at a cost of £10 14s. He was still on the Town Council in 1707 (when a fine was imposed on the 2 acting Bailies). He was an ex-Bailie on the Council when the bond was granted (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed further baptisms for John Ekron in 1716 and 1723, for workman William Inglis and for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1721, for carrier John Tait and for John Fairgrieve in 1726, for merchant Robert Howison in 1730, and for Robert Aitken in 1731. His first wife was Grizel Oliver and their children included: Christian (b.1701); George (b.1702); Bessie (b.1704); Anna (b.1706); Helen (b.1708); Janet (b.1709); Thomas (b.1712); and Jean (b.1714). The witnesses in 1701 were glover John Hart and Bailie Walter Graham, in 1702 were Bailie Patrick Richardson and glover John Hart, in 1704 were glover John Hart and merchant Thomas Waugh, in 1706 were Bailies Walter Graham and Patrick Richardson, in 1708 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Graham, in 1712 were miller Walter Paisley and weaver David Miller, and in 1714 were Bailies Walter Elliot and Robert Ruecastle. He married Elizabeth Ker (widow of James Wastoun) in ‘Haddock hole’ Edinburgh in 1719; he was then described as ‘late bailie of Hawick’. He was probably the Bailie Martin who was an elder charged with collecting money from ‘ye Cross upon both sides of ye toun even unto the bridge’ in 1717 (suggesting he lived in this area perhaps) and being one of the elders charged with resolving the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham in 1718. His son Thomas became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1738 and his daughter Jane (possibly born in 1714) married David Greg of Edinburgh in 1743. George (18th C.) teacher at the ‘English school’ in Selkirk in 1744. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Cowan and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1648. The witnesses were Alexander and Adam. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Bessie White. Their son James was baptised in 1648. James (17th C.) farmer at Branxholme Town in 1671, when there were 7 tenants recorded there. His name does not appear in 1675. There were Jameses born in Hawick Parish in 1634, 1639 and 1647, any of which could be him. He may be the James, married to Rosie Richardson (a family who also farmed at Branxholme Town), whose daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1677, and who may also have been father of Malie, baptised in 1673 (with no mother’s name given, but witnesses John Richardson and Patrick Scoon). James (17th C.) recorded at Appletreehall in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Marion Liddersdale and their children included James (b.1682). The witnesses were Walter Scott and Walter Armstrong. He is probably the James who (along with John) witnessed a baptism for William Macomie in the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish in 1688. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Lamb in 1752. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Douglas at Clarilaw in 1772. Janet (18th C.) resident of a house on the farm of Muckle Whital. It was described in 1767 in the description of the perambulation of the Common, this being a house where the boundary passed over. Johan (19th/20th C.) granddaughter of tailor Robert. She was known as a poet and painter. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘John Martyn in Branxholme’ in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1504 when he received remission for his crimes. This seems to have been connected with the crimes of William Scott ‘in Hawick’ and John Scott ‘in Wilton’, who received pardons a few years earlier. He is probably an ancestor of the same local family after whom ‘Mertin’s Brig’ is named. John (16th C.) tenant at Branxholme Town in 1574, as described in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Johne Martene in Banxholme toun’. He is surely related to the John who was tenant in the same place half a century later. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Jon Mairtene in Branxholme toune’ in 1623 when he (and 3 other local men, from Chapellehill, Priesthaugh and Craik) were surety for ‘Hob Cowane in Ailmure’. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. His name appears to be written ‘Mortine’ (and hence could also be ‘Morton’). He married Agnes Porteous and their children included: Marie (b.1679); and Bessie (b.1681). The witnesses in 1681 were Adam Sanderson and John Martin (who may have been his father). He is probably the John who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for William Macomie in the Hassendean part of Robertson Parish in 1688 and who witnessed a baptism for Adam in 1688. John (17th C.) listed at Crumhaugh among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who was married to Margaret Elliot, and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Charles (b.1675), Helen (b.1682), Walter (b.1685) and Andrew (b.1688). He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1680. John (19th C.) owner of the farm of Firth in about 1874, according to the Land Tax Rolls. John P. baker who was Cornet in 1938. He served as Acting Father to Bruce Mactaggart in 1954. Mactaggart was in turn Acting Father to his son Drew. Margaret (17th C.) resident of ‘Barnknow’. In 1680 she was found guilty of attempting to steal a pair of shoes from a Selkirk stall-owner at Hawick Market. She was sentenced to be ‘punished in her person and goods’. Mrs. ?? (18th/19th C.) recorded at Minto House on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. She was presumably a house-keeper or governess. Robert (16th/17th C.) surety for ‘Hob Cowane in Ailmure’ in the Circuit Court records of 1623, along with John Martin (presumably a relative), Simon Wilson (in Priesthaugh) and William Cowan (in Craik). Robert (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was a tailor who lived at Howdenburn. He was there in 1851, when he employed 1 man, and was also there in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Hunter, daughter of ‘Kittlin Soup’ and their children included Margaret, James, Mary and Thomas. They were grand-parents of local poet and painter Johan Miller. Simon (16th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in part of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish in 1619. He is recorded as ‘Thomas Martene in Fultoun’. Thomas (16th C.) witness to a 1622 sasine of Allan Deans in Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Thomas Mairtene in Hawick’. Rev. Thomas (1754/4–1812) licensed by Peebles Presbytery in 1789, he was presented to Castleton Parish in 1790 and ordained as minister there the following year. However, after less than 4 months he was translated to Langholm; there is no record of the reason for this. He died in Edinburgh where he was attending the General Assembly. He wrote a description of Langholm Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. Thomas (b.c.1813/4) born in Canonbie, he was a cooper in Newcastle. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1838. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He continued as a cooper until the 1850s. He lived at about 2 South Hermitage Street. He married Janet Udale and their children included: Anne (b.1836); Isabella (b.1837); William (b.1839); and Robert (b.1841). Rev. Walter (c.1631–76) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1651, he is recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 1657, his surname then spelled ‘Martaine’. In that year Robert Howitson was ordered to pay him ‘19 merkis Scots by begane quarter wages due to him for teaching of his sons in the schole several quarters bygane’; this suggests that he had been a teacher in Hawick for at least a couple of years previously. He was again recorded in 1665, as ‘Mairteen’. Later that year he was recommended to be licensed to preach, and he became minister of Abbotrule in mid-1666. Since he was an Episcoplain replacement for the exiled former Covenanting minister, it is unclear if he was popular in his parish. He was responsible for reporting a Covenanter from his congregation to the authorities, resulting in the man being sentenced to conscription as a soldier, and instead paying a £100 alternative fine. A ‘gift of his bastardy’ was given by the King to his widow Barbara Skinner (or Kinnear) in 1676. Walter (17th C.) resident of Coliforthill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in the Flex. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Stoddart (in Flex), along with William Henderson (also in Flex) in 1674. He is probably the Walter whose wife Margaret Scott’s will is recorded in 1687. Their children included Thomas (b.1673) and an unnamed son (b.1675). He may have been father of the later Walter in the Flex (or else he had a second marriage late in life). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in the Flex. He is so recorded in 1700, although his name is listed as ‘Walleam’, which is likely an error. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for wright John Dalgleish in 1700. He married Agnes Nixon and their children included: William (b.1700); Walter (b.1702); and Margaret (b.1705). The witnesses in 1700 were Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw and William Nixon and in 1705 were William and Francis Henderson, smiths at the Flex and Francis Paterson, also at the Flex. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Alton Croft in 1700. He was recorded there as tenant in 1702. His wife was Margaret Glendinning and their children included: Margaret (b.1700); John (b.1702); Esther (b.1704); Helen (b.1707); James (b.1710); and Janet (b.1714). The witnesses in 1700 were gardener James Falsyde and Walter Scott in Goldielands and in 1702 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Walter Riddell in Allanhaugh Mill. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Walter who was at the Flex at the same time (but they were clearly distinct, with their children being baptised on the same day in 1700). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Leyden and their children included: Euphan (b.1777); Samuel (b.1784); and Betty (b.1786). The witnesses were the Associate Congregation. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded at Broomhill in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (15th C.) tenant in Whitchester who is mentioned in 1493. Jock Elliot (from Caverton) had remission for several crimes, including stealing 3 sheep from him. It seems likely that he was related to the later Martins of the area. William ‘Willie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Branzholme in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, or probably the Hassendean part. He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: Andrew (b.1680); James (b.1682); and Margaret (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were William Young and Thomas Caldwell. In 1683 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Craig. William (17th/18th C.) recorded being ‘servant in Wimingtontou ridge’ in 1719 when he married Margaret Douglas, daughter of a carrier in Hawick. He was in ‘Rige’, i.e. Wimingtonrig when his son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. He is probably not the same man as William, resident of Over Southfield. William (17th/18th C.) farm servant at Over Southfield. He was ‘servitor in over Southfield’ in 1713 and recorded still living at Over Southfield in 1720. He was also recorded as servant to John Goodfellow in Over Southfield in 1712 when he married Helen Nichol from Hawick Parish. His wife may have been the daughter of William Nichol and Janet Gray baptised in Hawick in 1688. Their children (also baptised in Hawick) included: Walter (b.1713); John (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); Janet (b.1722); and Robert (b.1723). Janet (b.1714) and William (b.1716) were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1713 were John and William Goodfellow in Over Southfield and in 1720 were Walter Scott and William Goodfellow. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Parkhill in 1722 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. It is possible this was somehow a second baptism for the daughter of William and Helen Nichol. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean ‘Clemison’. Their unnamed child died in Hawick in 1816 and their daughter Isabella was baptised in 1824. Rev. William Stewart (1793/4–1857) from Crawford in Lanarkshire, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1823. He became minister of Kirkton in 1834, where he remained until his death. He wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account in 1838; it is the shortest of the local entries. He ould regularly ride over the hill to take services at Cogsmill Schoolhouse. He lived at the Parish Manse with a servant and never married (early spellings include ‘Mairteen’, ‘Mairten’, ‘Martene’, ‘Marteine’, ‘Marten’, ‘Martene’, ‘Martine’, ‘Martyne’, ‘Mertyn’, ‘Merten’, ‘Mertene’, ‘Merton’, ‘Meryn’, etc.).

Mertinmas (mer’-in-mis) n. another name for Martinmas – ‘Dedicat til a man (sine deid) wha spiered: ‘Hev ee been writin ony hairy poetry, lately?’ Mertinmas. 1969 [DH] (also formerly Mertimes).

Mertin’s Brig (mer’-inz-brig) n. Martin’s Bridge, over the Teviot just south of town, marking the beginning of the B711 road to the Borthwick, and named for its proximity to Martin’s House. It was built in 1826, providing a more direct route to the Borthwick valley from Hawick. It is a popular end-point for walks. In the field to the west of here, linear field markings have been seen in aerial photographs, probably old field boundaries or ditches – ‘Doon by mony a knowe and knoll, Branksholme, Martin’s Brig, the Toll, …’ [Tk].

Mertoun Hoose

Mertoun Hoose (mer'-inz-hoos) n. Martin’s House, a farmhouse near Martin’s Bridge, marking the end of the Goldiebanks-Langbaurk section of the road south, before the New Road was built in 1815. The farmers recorded there in 1797 were William Scott and John Scott. John Scott was farmer there in 1841 and William Fulton in 1851. The front elevation of the house is towards the hill, since the main road used to pass there – ‘Martin-House’s hint side is now its fore side, and the real auld front is roond aboot at the back’ [V&M] (also written as one word, its origin is uncertain, since no ‘Martin’ is recorded there, so a connection with house-martins has been suggested).

Mertin’s Sym (mer'-inz-sim) n. nickname of Simon Elliot of Philhope, son of Martin of Braidlie.

Merton (mer-ton) n. John (13th/14th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1395. He exchanged this position with Gilbert Mousewald before 1404. He is referred to as ‘de Merton’.

Mertoun (mer-toon) n. parish in the southwest part of Berwickshire, divided by the Tweed from Melrose, St. Boswells and Maxton. It contains Mertoun House, Bemersyde and Dryburgh Abbey. The Scotts of Harden formerly possessed the Barony of Mertoun.

Mertown House (mer'-in-, mer-toon-hoos) n. mansion house on the Tweed near St. Boswells, built in the early 18th century by Sir William Bruce for the Scotts of Harden. Sir William Scott of Harden acquired Old Mertown House (still existing) around 1649, and the second Sir William made it the main family seat (with his brother Sir Gideon of Highchester taking up residence at Harden itself). The family moved back to Harden in 1912. A former house was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. Mertoun Kirk, dating from 1658 stands on the estate, with the churchyard containing the burial vault of the Scotts of Harden.

The gardens are open to the public, and contain a dovecote dating from 1576 (it was formerly ‘Merton’ and variants).

mervil (mer-vil) adj., arch. inactive in both body and mind (noted by J. Jamieson).

Mervinslaw (mer-vinz-law) n. farm in the north-east part of Southdean Parish, off the western side of the A68. The modern farm is to the west of Camptown, off the side road that leads to Roughlee and Falside. The older farm was probably further south, nearer to the ruined peel tower. Jedforest Deer and Farm Park is on Mervinslaw Estate. It may be the ‘Schervinlesslaw’ (with various spelling transcriptions) given in the founding charter of Jedburgh Abbey in the mid-12th century, when one third of the lands were gifted to the Abbey by Christina, wife of Gervase Riddell. The estate was once held as part of the fee by the office of Bailie of the Regality of Jedforest. Robert Waugh was tenant there around 1500. The ruins of the pele there have dimensions about 8 m × 4 m, within walls almost 2 m thick, and probably date to the late 16th century. It was described as the 8 steadings, valued at £10 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. James Oliver, William Oliver, Margaret Oliver (his mother), Marion Craighill, James Craighill (her son), David Stobs, Elizabeth Hunter, John Wedderburn, William Oliver (alias ‘Merchant’) and James Waugh were listed as tenants there in 1541; it was split into 7 separate steadings, with total yearly payments of £1 6s 3d. It is possible that ‘William Ollyver of Myrleslawe’ and ‘Ranyon Ollyver of the same’, included in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII, may have been from here. The tenants in 1669 were John ‘Wach’, Thomas ‘Olipher’, Mrs. ‘McFeisoon’, James ‘forssett’, John ‘Waderburn’, ‘Ritchart’ and John Curles and James ‘Olipher’. The will of John Aitken in Mervinslaw is recorded in 1683. Robert Oliver was there in 1685. In 1694 the residents were Thomas Miller, John Hill, Thomas Walker, Thomas Curle, Margaret Waugh and Margaret Young, as well as Jean Frissell listed among the poor of the Parish. Robert Davidson was there in 1790-92. In 1797 William Turnbull, Charles Scott and John Scott were there, with Thomas Thomson at ‘Marvenslaw Mains’. Adam Buckham was shepherd there in 1797. Thomas Scott was farmer there in the mid-19th century. The land was purchased by John Lang in 1923. Jack Waterstones was the occupier in the mid-20th century. The hill ‘Mervins Law’ reaches 255 m (836 ft) to the south of the farm. Near where the Peel Burn meets the Jed Water the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building and some enclosures. A medieval sword pommel found there is in the National Museum of Antiquities (it is probably the ‘Xernwingsleslawe’ or ‘Hernwingeslawe’ listed in the 1165 charter of Jedburgh Abbey as being opposite the chapel at Old Jeddart; it is ‘mervynniss law’ in 1502, ‘Mervynnslaw’ in 1538, ‘Merwinslaw’ in 1539, ‘Mervennislaw’ and ‘Mervenislaw’ in 1541.
Mervinslaw

‘Mervinslaw’ in 1571/2, ‘Mervingislaw’ in 1582, ‘Mervingslaw’ in 1669, ‘mervinsla’ in 1704 and ‘Marvinslaw’ and ‘Marvenslaw’ in 1797; Blaen’s c.1654 map shows the tower at ‘Mervinslaw’, as well as farms at ‘Nuik’, ‘Banck’ and ‘Hauch’ to the south; note that there was once a farmstead of the same name in Wilton Parish.

Mervinslaw (mer-vinz-law) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, lying near the hill Mervinslaw, once part of the estates of the Scotts of Whitehaugh. There is a record of it being sold by Roger Langlands of Wilton to William Inglis of Langlandshill in 1512. It was to be held for one penny ‘blench-ferm’, payable yearly at Pentecost in Wilton Church. There were 7 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely William Miller, Marion Langlands, Helen Miller, Robert Hogg, William Gotterson, Christian Morton and Margaret Gotterson. John Riddell was cottar there in 1694. Walter Cavers was there in 1697, Francis Scott in 1704, William Graham in 1705 and Helen Hislop in 1707. In 1709 Andrew Marshall was tenant, John Scott was tailor there and John Rule was shepherd. Francis Elliot was living there in 1721 and James Noble in 1751 (it may sometimes be confused with the farm of the same name in Southdean Parish and Mabonlaw in Wilton Parish; it is ‘Mervynniswod’ in 1512, ‘Mavinslau’ in 1707 and ‘Marvinslaw’ in 1709; it is marked ‘Marvin’s Law’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mervins Law (mer-vinz-law) n. hill a couple of miles west of Hawick, between Whitehaugh and Calaburn farms. The farm of ‘Mervinslaw’ was once near there (it is marked ‘Marvin’s Law’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mervinslaw Toor (mer-vinz-law-toor) n. ruined, but well-preserved, 16th century peel tower, about 5 miles south of Jedburgh on the Peel Burn. It is quite far south of the modern Mervinslaw farm, on the southern slopes of Mervin’s Law. It still has 2 stories and a garret, and measures about 8 m by 6.5 m. Each storey is one unvaulted room, and the top level must have been reached by an internal ladder. Below is a D-shaped excavation of some sort and on the surrounding slopes are the remains of 3 separate buildings.

Mervinswud (mer-vinz-wud) n. former lands in Jedforest, listed in a rental roll of 1541, next to Mervinslaw. William Hunter was tenant and the lands paid 12s 6d yearly (‘Mervenniswod’ in 1541).

mese (mees) v., arch. to mellow, mature fruit by forcing (noted by J. Jamieson; also written ‘meise’).
Metcalfe

Metcalfe  (met-kawf) n. John, M.B.E., from Hawick, he was Chairman of the Borders branch of the Multiple Sclerosis Society. He held the Borders position for 13 years, retiring in 2003, and was Scottish Chairman 1994-97. He received the M.B.E. for services to the Multiple Sclerosis Society in 2003.

methglin  (me-the-glin) n., poet. a spicy mead
- ‘Then drink the pure methglin of the bee. The heath’s brown juice, and live or perish free!’ [JL].

metter  (me-tur) n., arch. a measurer, particularly applied to the act of preparing to cast spells
- ‘Compeired Issobell Howetsone in Riddell ane being …as a common chairmer and a metter of the belt’ [SPB1628].

mettled  (met-tuld) adj., arch. high-spirited, ardent, mettlesome – ‘The Cornet and his merry men On mettled steeds are prancin’ ’[JT], ‘The heroes are marshalled, the mettled steeds are bounding’ [JT], ‘…That glorious chase on mettled steeds By lads wha aye were free’ [WLu], ‘His mettled wife, inured to strife … ’[MG].

Mettlin Well  (met-lin-wel) n. spring between the farms of Netherraw, Greenhouse and Raperlaw. There was an agreement for its use between the neighbouring farms in 1909.

Mey  see Maye

Meyrle  (mi-rul) n. lost place name near Branhholme, mentioned in the 1420 description when half the lands of Branhholme were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. The description includes ‘the half of the lands of the Meyrle, and the two cottage lands on the west side of the said river of Branchsemell in the barony of Hawick’. The precise location is uncertain, since even the ‘river’ mentioned is ambiguous, although perhaps the stream running through Branhholme Glen is meant (note that the pronunciation is unclear).

mibbe  (mi-bee) adv. maybe, perhaps – ‘there’s mibbe twae or thri better yins’, ‘All mibbe guam’, ‘A said ‘mibbe’, and that’s final!’ (cf. the less common mebbe and older mebbies).

mibbies  (mi-bee) adv. maybe, perhaps – ‘Mibees oo should look closer at Mother Nature’ [We] (also spelled ‘mibees’; cf. the older mebbies).

Michael  (mi-kul) n. (11th/12th C.) probably of Cumbrian origin, he was nominated as Bishop of Glasgow by David, brother of King Alexander of Scotland. His consecration by Archbishop Thomas of York was sometime between 1109 and 1114. He filled a position that had been vacant for a long time. However, it is unclear if he ever played a significant role in the Diocese, or ever visited Teviotdale.

Michael Graham’s  (mi-kul-gra-unz) n. cobbler’s shop on Silver Street through much of the 20th century – ‘…Pies and peas at Bruciana’s and tuckets at Michael Graham’s …’ [AY].

Michaelmas  (mi-kal-us) n. important date in the calendar of former centuries, being a feast day of the Archangel Michael, held on the 29th of September. Around the 16th century, this was one of the 3 times a year that the head courts would meet annually, specifically the 1st Tuesday after Michaelmas. It was once the date on which Hawick’s Bailies were annually selected – ‘…payable at Michellmess nixt, for the use and behoove of the said towne’ [BR1707]. ‘In the Michaelmas moonlight, weird and tall The watchman stood on the peel tower wall’ [WHO].

Michie  (mi-chee) n. Alastair (1921–2008) eldest son of Ann Redpath, he was born in France, but moved to Hawick with his family in 1934. He attended the High School and received a scholarship to study architecture at the Edinburgh College of Art. However, war intervened, and he became an R.A.F. pilot, later working as an illustrator and graphic designer. He became a self-taught painter and sculptor at the age of 40, after seeing an exhibition of American abstract expressionists. He lived in Dorset and married Hazel Greenham and secondly Sally Greasley. The Hawick Museum has at least one of his paintings.

Alexander  (b.1764) probably son of John, who was the first Michie of Old Northhouse. His eldest son was John. Alexander  (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Potts in 1797. He was probably father of Alexander and Robert of the Archaeological Society. Alexander  (18th/19th C.) slubber with William Wilson. In 1797 he was sent to Galashiels for 10 months to learn the trade and he returned to be the first slubber in Hawick. He could be the spinner of that name who went to America, and when he returned in the 1840s there was a big celebration in the Fleece Inn, hosted by the Hawick Instrumental Band in which he had formerly played.

Alexander  (b.1788/9) originally from Aberdeen, he was a gardener in Hawick. He is recorded at about 59 High Street in 1841 and 1851 (when he was a widower). Margaret, who was an unmarried seamstress in an adjacent house, was probably related. Alexander  (b.c.1795) mason who lived at Branhholme Bridgend in 1841. He may have been brother of William and Robert. His wife was Jean and he probably had a daughter Jean, who married Robert Archibald. Alexander  (1813–1886) brother of Robert, he was also a Skinner in Hawick. He was living on the Cross Wynd in 1841, with the family of millwright Gideon Scott. In 1851 he was listed on Orrock Place as a master Skinner, employing 3 men. He must have been partner with another Skinner, since ‘Scott & Michie’ is listed at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was at 4 Orrock Place as a master Skinner employing 5 men. He may later have moved to Galashiels. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archeological Society, being the fourth official member. He acted as Museum Curator for the Archeological Society in the early 1860s. He also wrote some anonymous poetry, such as ‘Auld Moat’s Address’, before he left Hawick in 1864 to live in Galashiels. As a youth he was a great athlete, regularly appearing at the Innerleithen and Mangerton Games, excelling at running, leaping, hammer-throwing and ‘hitch-and-kick’. He may have been the same Alexander who served as first Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk. Later in life he wrote regularly in the local press about reminiscences of the Common Riding and related themes. He also wrote the introduction for the 1886 edition of Common Riding Songs. He is supposed to have only missed a single Common Riding in his life. Much of the credit for the revival of the Common Riding in the 1880s is due to his letter-writing and powers of persuasion. As a result, he was invited as a special guest to all the events of 1886. Some of his articles on Hawick characters, printed in the Transactions, later appeared in Robert Murray’s book. He is probably the Alex recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in about 1874. In 1845 he married Isabell Scott, who was a Dressmaker. Their children included: James Cockburn (b.1846), who died young; Jessie Sibbald (b.1847); Elizabeth Pott (b.1851); Walter Francis Scott (b.1855); Susan Mary (b.1859); and Gideon Scott (b.1862), presumably named after the former millwright. A photograph of him exists. He also appears in a portrait (painted by John Guthrie) along with his brother Robert and William N. Kennedy. Bailie Alexander (b.1832) son of currier Robert. He was a Magistrate in Hawick, and should not be confused with the other contemporary Alexander, who was his uncle. He also served as Vice-President of the Archeological Society. He left for South Africa in 1879, with Frank Hogg first publicly singing ‘I Like Auld Hawick’ at his farewell dinner. He lived at Maraisburg, Transvaal. Andrew Rodgie (1806/7–54) builder in Hawick. He was one of the ‘Brigend Michies’, this family being raised in the Green Kirk, hence his middle name (and the fact that birth records are scarce for these Michies). It is said by James Haining that he had brothers Robert (a Mason), John (Building Foreman in Edinburgh) and Hugh (of Laing, Michie & Graham), but Hugh seems more likely to have been his nephew; it is also unclear who their father might have been. He was listed on the Loan in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived 19 Loan, according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1851 he is recorded as a master Mason, employing 20 men, 4 apprentices and 8 labourers. His firm constructed the Old Parish Church and several other important buildings of the mid-19th century. His wife was Mary, and they had a daughter, Betsey. His nephew Adam Laidlaw carried on the business after his death. Andrew Smith (1844–1936) son of Skinner Robert, he was born in Hawick. He worked for the National Bank of Scotland in Hawick and was transferred to Edinburgh in 1862, then London in 1866. In 1874 he moved to the Royal Bank of Scotland, being recruited as Deputy Manager in London. In 1889 he became sub-cashier in the bank’s Glasgow office and a year later was Cashier there. He retired in 1910, returning to London. He is buried at Rowledge in Surrey. He married Jessie Fraser in 1872 and they had children Arthur, Charles and Agnes. He published many articles on banking and revised James William Gilbart’s work ‘The History, Principles and Practice of Banking’. Bruce raised in Hawick, he played in the baritone horn section of the Saxhorn Band. He trained in medicine, but continued to perform as a multi-instrumentalist woodwind player, based in Perthshire. He has played with The Walktalls, Martin Stephenson and Delta Mainline. Christopher Young (b.1829) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Betty Young. It is said that as a child he was chased by the Devil in the form of a pig. He worked as a forester to the Countess of Seafield and contributed to the Transactions of the Highland and Agricultural Society. He was apparently offered the position of Factor at Balmoral, but declined. He wrote ‘The Larch: A Practical Treatise on Its Culture and General Management’ (1882 and 1885), as well as ‘Practice of Forestry’ (1888). David (19th/20th C.) Apprentice with chemist John Craig, he became manager of the Lemonade works, then partner, and sole owner from 1919. David A.R. (b.1928) youngest son of James and Anne Redpath. He became an artist, like his brother Alastair. He was born in France, but moved to Hawick with his family in 1934, attending St. Mary’s and the High School. He was an instructor in the Royal Artillery Signals Training Regiment, then studied at the Edinburgh College of Art. After travelling to Italy, he started on an art career that has included one-man exhibitions and prizes, being known for both oils and watercolours. He worked as a teacher at the Edinburgh College of Art, later becoming Head of the School of Drawing and later Vice-President. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1989 and had an exhibition at the Scott Gallery in 2009. He was awarded the O.B.E. in 1997 and is a member of the Royal Scottish Academy. George (18th/19th C.) agricultural worker, probably son of Alexander, from Slatehills. He married Margaret Turnbull and their daughter Jane married Thomas Rutherford, from Haysike. Hugh (b.c.1745) farmer at Slatehills. He may have had a brother called John, who was the first of the Michies of Old Northhouse. Hugh (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at ‘Goldielands Bridge End’ in 1797. He was part of the family that farmed in that area for many generations. He may be the Hugh who married Margaret Telfer in Hawick Parish in 1787. Hugh (1830–91) said to be brother of Andrew Rodgie, Robert and John. However, he seems more likely to be son of mason Robert. He was partner in tweed merchants’ Laing, Michie & Graham. Later he opened a newsagent’s shop at 2 High Street, with the help of his daughter Margaret. He married Christina Dobson, from the wood merchants of Leith; she died at the age of 85. Their children include: Robert (b.1863), emigrated to Australia; Margaret Allan (1865–1932); George Dobson (b.1866); John Stewart (b.1869), tweed designer in Huddersfield, who retired to Folkestone; and Agnes Dobson (b.1873). John (18th C.) probably the first of the Michie’s of Northhouse. He may have been father of Alexander and brother of Hugh of Slatehills. John (18th C.) married Margaret Shiel in Robertson Parish in 1739. John (18th/19th C.) weaver of Old Northhouse. He may have been son of the earlier John and father of the later John. He could be the John who married Mary Douglas in Hawick Parish in 1790. He was one of the Volunteers who responded to the ‘False Alarm’ in 1804; when he went off with his gun his daughter is meant to have said ‘Shoo! iz ‘eersel’, father; ye’ll dae it cannier than the Frainch’. He had at least 2 daughters: Janet, who married Adam Easton, farmer at Overhall; and Margaret (1805/6–87), who married warehouseman Thomas Anderson. John (1788/9–1861) weaver at Old Northhouse in 1841. In 1851 he is recorded there as an ex-weaver, along with his wife, both as pavers at that time. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Young, recorded in Cavers and Kirkton Parishes in 1821; she died in Denholm in 1864, aged 78. Their children included: Jessey (1821–46); Isabel (b.1824); William (b.1826); Christopher Young (b.1829); Robert (b.1832); and Mary Ann (b.1835). He could be the John Michie of Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. John (b.c.1800) spinner in Wilton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835 at Dovemount and in 1840 and 1841 at Kirkstyle. He was also an Elder of Wilton Kirk. His wife was Jane and their children included Robert, Eliza and John. John (19th C.) probably brother of masons Andrew Rodgie and Robert. He became a foreman with builders Messres. Colville of Edinburgh. John (1813–70) clerk in the Relief Kirk Session. John (19th C.) of the Victoria Tavern, Hobart, listed as a subscriber to the Common Riding in 1888 and 1889. Robert (b.c.1805) mason journeyman, living at Braxholm Bridgend in 1841. He was brother of William, who farmed there. He may also have been brother of Andrew Rodgie. He probably married Agnes Ann Smith and had children including Hugh (b.c.1831), Walter (b.c.1833); Elizabeth (b.c.1834) and John (b.c.1837). Robert (1807–1875) brother of Alexander (later of Galashiels), and probably son of Alexander and Betty Pott. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archaeological Society, being its second official member. He was a currier by trade, and was listed as such on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was also a currier on O’Connell Street in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, and appears in Slater’s 1852 directory, where he was a currier and leather cutter, as well as a tanner and Skinner. In 1851 he was listed at 11 O’Connell Street (originally No. 6), as an employer of 1 journeyman and 2 apprentices. In 1861 he was at 6 O’Connell Street, master currier and tanner, employing 3 men and 1 boy. He gave a lecture on ‘Local Antiquities’ in 1856 (immediately after a lecture on Archaeology by George Webster), this being only the second lecture given at the Society’s meetings. He also gave a lecture on local hill forts in December of 1856 and one on Trimontium in February 1857. A great sportsman in his youth, he won the wrestling contest at the St. Ronan’s games at Innerleithen in 1831, as well as winning the ‘light ball’ event.

(probably throwing). At the Common Riding Games of 1834 he won the ‘ball throw’ event. He was also on the Town Council. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He was one of the first Deacons of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk, as well as one of the first Trustees. He was also one of the earliest members of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, and well known for giving speeches on this subject, always in local dialect. He married Agnes Elizabeth (or Ann) Smith in Wilton Parish in 1830. Their children included: Grace (b.1830); Alexander (b.1832); Elizabeth (b.1834); Joanna (b.1836) and Joana (b.1838), who both died young; Thomas (b.1842); Andrew Smith (b.1841); Andrew Smith (again, b.1844); and Robert (b.1848). He appeared in a portrait (painted by John Guthrie) along with his brother Alexander and William N. Kennedy. A portrait of him alone was presented to the Archaeological Society by his son A.S. Michie on the occasion of the 1906 jubilee – ‘Guid Robbie Michie, noble man, First o’ the speechifyin’ clan’ [RDW].

Robert (b.1810/1) born in Cavers Parish, he was a shepherd in the Hawick area. He may be the Robert who was an agricultural labourer at Whitchesters in 1841. He is listed at Minto Kaims in 1851 and Hayside (in Wilton Parish) in 1861. His wife was Helen (from Minto) and their children included John, James, Janet, Mary, Rachel, Robert, Helen and Thomas. Robert (b.1832/3) born in Wilton Parish, probably son of spinner John. He was miller at Newstead near Melrose. His wife was Agnes and their children included John, William and Isabella. Robert (19th C.) first Captain of Hawick R.F.C., from 1873 for 4 years. Walter (1753/4–1816) undertaker in Edinburgh. He died in Hawick. William (1792–1885) from Old Northhouse. He emigrated to Canada, settling in Esquesing, Ontario, where he farmed and had a saw-mill. His wife was Margaret, and their children included: Thomas (1824–1901); Mary (1834–1902); Robert (b.1837); Alexander (1843–93); Ellen (1850–1901); George (1851–1918); Elizabeth (1853–1901); and William (b.1854). He died in Esquesing, aged 92½. William (1797/8–1862) farmer at Branxholme Bridgend. In 1841 the family were living at ‘Branxholme braes’, which may have been the same as Scatterpenny. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Branxholme Bridgend, farming 16 acres and employing one man. He contributed local information for the Ordnance Survey in about 1859. He married Isabella. They had 9 daughters, including: Margaret who became Mrs. Welsh; Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’), who married baker John Campbell; Isabella; Mary; Beatriz, who married James Dewar; Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’); and Alexandrina. He is buried in old Wilton Cemetery.

Michie’s (mich-eez) n. Robert Michie & Son, tanner’s business in Hawick in the mid-to-late 19th century. They were situated on Buccleuch Street, by the River Teviot. In 1871 the firm estimated that it tanned 1,270 hides, producing over 21,000 pounds of leather.

Michie’s Brig (mich-eez-brig) n. another name for the Branxholme Bridge, across the Teviot at Branxholme Bridgend, named after the family which lived there for generations and who became builders in the early 19th century.

Michie’s Well (mich-eez-wel) n. a former public water supply about half-way up Drumlanrig Square, above the Mid Row, also known as ‘Porteous’ Well.

micht (micht) v., arch. might, may – ‘That thaye micht sete their houpe in God . . .’ [HSR], ‘Oo’ve a pairk in Wulton Ludge That e’en Fairyland micht grudge’ [TK], ‘It micht hev been less – bit no’ muckle’ [RM], ‘An’ white think that life in this grey auld toon o’ Hawick Micht weel be compared to a river . . .’ [DH], ‘. . . How mickle hev ee?’[JEDM], ‘We ‘laid her doon’ wi mickle care,’ And cairrit on tae Eskdalemuir’[DH] (not often used in Hawick; cf. muckle).

Mickle (mi-kul) n. William Julius (1734–88) born in Langholm, 3rd son of the Parish minister, changing his name from ‘Meikle’. He was educated in Langholm and then at Edinburgh High School and went into the brewing trade followed by some of his family. In 1762 he published ‘Providence and other poems’, then went to London to try for a literary career, eventually becoming a corrector for the Clarendon Press in Oxford. This he gave up to translate Camoens’ ‘Lusiad’ (from the Portuguese), taking 4 years and being published in 1775. His balled ‘Cumnor Hall’ is supposed to have inspired Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Ke-nilworth’. He also travelled to Portugal with the Navy, returning fairly wealthy and married Mary Tomkins. As a poet he was very versatile, writing both short and long pieces, including the Scottish patriotic song ‘There’s Nae Luck Aboot the Hoose’.

Mid Broadlee (mid-bröd-lee) n. formerly part of the farm of Broadlee. In 1650 the ‘communicants’ recorded there were John Clerk, Malie Shiel, Alexander Scott and Agnes Scott.

Midburn (mid-burn) n. farm in Hobkirk Parish, between Hawthornside and Highend. It was also known as ‘Africa’. The L-shaped barns probably date from the mid-18th century. James Rennie was there in 1790 and John Common was tenant in 1797. It was farmed by the Turnbulls through the 19th century, from about 1823. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1868. There was also once a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond (it is ‘Middleburn’ in 1790 and marked ‘Middleburn’ on Stobie’s 1770 map.

midden (mi-din, -den, -deen) n. literally the house waste heap or dunghill, but applied to mean any dirty or untidy place – ‘you hoose was a right midden’. Middens in Hawick were common at the front of every house, often under the forestairs. They were forbidden by Council rules in 1749, but mostly not removed until around 1800. The last to remain were those in the Sandbed, Kirk Wynd and Green Wynd (the owners paying a small rent to the Burgh to keep their middens), which were removed following a petition in 1810 – ‘He raesis up in the puir owt o’ the dust, an’ lyfts up the needle owt o’ the midden’[HSR], ‘A stinkin’ midden, a scartin’ hen { There’s sma’ choice there ‘tween craws and men’[DH], ‘. . . Like a struttin’ cock on the midden heap’[WL] (also ‘midding’ and variants).

middest (mi-dist) n., arch. middle, midst, centre – ‘. . . in offering to beat up and break of the door of the dwelling hous . . . in the middest of the night’[BR].

middle (mi-dul) n., arch. to meddle, bother – ‘Dunion . . . is buirdly billie ti Ruberslaw, an there the perr stand . . . leike as they war glun-shin an shuirrin doon at aabodie that wad middle thum’[ECS].

Middle (mi-dul) n. former name for lands that were incorporated into the Wells estate near Bedrule. Along with ‘Holm’ they may have been part of the lands called Dykes. They are listed (along with Fowlerslands and Holm) in the 1511 charter of the Douglasses of Cavers, along with the ‘corn mill and walk mill’ (that was later called Doveshiremill). The lands were at one time partly in the Parish of Kirkton, but in the Barony of Cavers (on the west side of the Rule Water). In earlier times it may have been in the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1634 James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh was served heir to his father Robert Stewart in his lands of ‘Helme et Middill’, with grain mill and fuller’s mill called ‘Dowishauch’, comprising a 3 merk land in the Barony of Cavers. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and his brother Archibald in 1698, and still listed along with ‘Helme’ as having a corn mill and waulk mill attached. James Dryden was there in 1736. It is unclear whether these lands were associated with East Middle (it is ‘Middill’ and ‘Myddill’ in 1511.
and ‘Middle’ in 1698; the origin of the name is probably from being the centre of the in-bye land of an estate.

Middle (mi-dul) n. lands in Cavers Parish, later divided into East Middle and West Middle. William Douglas was there in 1720 when he had a daughter baptised in Kirkton Parish (the origin probably comes from being farmlands central to the estate, as opposed to the out-bye land).

Middleburn (mi-dul-burn) n. former name for Midburn.

the Middle Loft (thu-mi-dul-loft) n. former balcony in St. Mary’s Kirk, built in 1684 by James Thorbrand. In 1685 William Laing and Walter Scott (presumably Bailies at the time) were paid back the 100 marks Scots that it had cost to construct. This balcony was lost when the church was rebuilt around 1763. It was also known as ‘the Steeple Loft’. The 2 front seats were formally assigned to the Bailies in 1707 (although this is a little confusing, since the ‘Bailies’ Loft’ was a separate balcony). The Council paid 200 merks Scots for the timber work to fix it in 1708, the money being raised by assessing the Burgess. It was one of two balconies that were entered from the steeple side, the higher one being the ‘High Loft’ – ‘John Turnbull, mason, to collect ye Midle and Wester Lofts’ [PR1718].

Middle Mains (mi-dul-mänz) n. former name for part of the demesne lands of Hassendean (see Hassendean Mains).

Middle Marches (mi-dul-mär-cheez) n. the Middle Marches, generally referring to an area running from the Cheviots to the Kershope Burn. The Scottish Middle March consisted essentially of Roxburghshire (including Liddesdale), Selkirkshire and Peeblesshire, with judicial centre in Jedburgh, and the Wardens being the Kers or Kerrs for much of the time. The English Middle March consisted of Coquetdale, Redesdale and Tyndale. Together they saw the worst of the lawlessness of rieving times.

Middlemas (mi-dul-mis) n. Adam (d.bef. 1581) recorded being deceased when his son John witnessed a sasine for William (son to the deceased John) in Lilliesleaf in 1580/1. Andrew (15th/16th C.) convicted in 1510 in Jedburgh Justice-aitre, with secretly destroying the wood of Gateshaw. James (16th C.) recorded in 1561, when Thomas Scott of Haining was obliged to enter him before the Warden of the East Marches. Either he or ‘quhyte Will Young’, or his servant or some other person was to be warded to answer the charge of stealing from David Thomson in Berwick. He was presumably local. James (16th/17th C.) son of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel. In 1604 he and his father were declared rebels for failing to appear to answer to the charges of killing Thomas Ker of Crailing and his servant. This appears to have been part of an on-going feud between the Kers and the Turnbuls, with the power of the courts on the Ker side. James (d.bef. 1671) proprietor of Raperlaw. He was listed as owner of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf on the 1643 county valuation, his lands being valued at £416. His is recorded as owner of ‘Reaperhall’ (i.e. Raperlaw) in 1670 when he brought a court action. In 1671 (by which time he was deceased) he is transcribed as ‘portioner of Kaperhall’. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls he paid tax on £110 10s, as one of the heritors of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Emma (or Anna) married Walter Scott of Alton. He could be the same as the James of Raperlaw who married Anna Scott, and whose son William was involved with claims with her new husband Thomas Riddell in 1661. He is probably the James of ‘Reperlaw’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. James (17th C.) paid the land tax on part of Raperlaw in 1678. These were the lands formerly held by Walter Turnbull and corresponded to Childknow (valued at £101 19s 4d) and ‘Part of the mir of Childknow’ (valued at £33 9s 2d). He is recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the earlier James, as well as to Walter, who is also recorded at Raperlaw in 1694. The same lands were owned by Hunter of Hunthill in the 18th century. James (b.1819/20) woollen manufacturer, son of John. In 1861 he was living at 10 Slitrig Crescent and employing 18 workmen. He was at that time living with his widowed mother Isabella and his brother William. He may be the Mr. Middlemas of Slitrig Bank who gave a talk on ‘Botany’ to the Archaeological Society in 1857. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf who was listed among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. John (d.bef. 1581) tenant in Lilliesleaf, perhaps son of the earlier John. In 1563 his eldest daughter Janet was one of 2 choices of wife offered to William Davidson by Walter Riddell of that Ilk. Probably the same John was listed as owner of half of Raperlaw when it was leased to Andrew Gray, George Gray and Thomas Allan. He is probably the John in Lilliesleaf recorded being deceased in 1580/1 when his son William received sasine to his 4 husbandlands in Lilliesleaf.
John (d.1601) brother of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel. He was killed in Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601 as part of an ongoing feud between Turnbulls and Kers. About 30 Turnbulls from the Minto area entered Jedburgh to find Thomas Ker of Crailling (brother of the Provost), killing him and his servant and wounding several other Jedburgh men. On the Turnbull side he was killed, along with Robert Turnbull of Bewlie. Several men were later convicted and hanged for their part in this skirmish. Margaret Turnbull a relative (possibly sister) was one of the ‘persewaris’ of the case against the Kers for his murder. John of Alton (17th C.) mentioned in a 1666 list of landowners in Hassendean Parish. He may have been related to Walter Scott of Alton, who married Anna Middlemas at about that time. John (b.1791) son of Alexander, he was born in Ednam. He was a small-scale manufacturer in Hawick in the early-to-mid 1800s. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 as foreman at Pathead and was at Stellhouse in 1840. In 1841 he was recorded as a woollen factory foreman, living at Stellhouse. He married Isabella Broomfield, sister of Alexander, who was foreman at Cumledge Mills. Their children included: Alexander; James (b.1820), who carried on his father’s business; Elizabeth (Betsy), who married William Laidlaw (grocer and manufacturer); Isabella; Jane; William; and Margaret.

Robert (18th C.) servant to Douglas of Cavers, recorded in 1785 and 1791. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1785); and Janet (b.1791). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Scott and their children included Robert (b.1809).

Thomas (15th C.) recorded on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. Thomas (15th C.) early member of this family, based at Ploro. He was master ranger of Yarrow from at least 1468, and presumably related to William, who was Ranger before him. He is surely the Thomas, cousin of Robert Scott of Haining, to whom Scott granted the lands of ‘Greystone and Gillishauch’ in Peeblesshire in 1476. He is recorded in ‘Ploro’, in 1494/5 (probably related to the area of Ploro near Innerleithen). That year there was remission to Alexander, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, for resetting the thefts of Adam Howiston and Robert Jackson. This included the slaughter of his wife and 2 sons, as well as 11 horses, 44 cows and a long list of items. This list is unique in its detailed specification of valuable goods belonging to a minor (but relatively wealthy laird) at the end of the 1400s. Also in 1494/5 John Scott of Ernecleuch was allowed to ‘compone’ for his part in several crimes, including bringing in thieves and ‘traitors of Leven’ to slaughter his wife and two ‘offspring’, Ninian and John. He was probably the same as Thomas, chief of the Middlemas clan, who acquired Ploro in 1497. Thomas (16th C.) listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of being responsible for the deaths of Englishmen. He was said to have slain Quentin Watson. Thomas ‘Tammy Mid’ (20th C.) metal merchant of the mid-20th century, running the business at 55 High Street, which was very successful during the War years. He was also known for his large feet, which meant he wore excessively patched hand-made boots. Walter (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths and was probably related to James, who was also listed there. William (14th/15th C.) Vicar of Selkirk. In 1425 he was granted the office of Master of the Ward of Yarrow by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, confirmed by James I in the following year; his nephew George was also named in the charter as his successor in the office. In 1436 he was recorded in a charter related to St. Andrews Kirk in Peebles. William (15th C.) Master Ranger of Yarrow Ward from at least 1456 until 1460. He was succeeded in this office by Thomas, who was therefore probably his son. William (15th/16th C.) along with David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley and George Hepburn, he held the lands of Boonraw, which passed to Robert Scott of Stirches in 1504/5. Perhaps the same William is recorded in 1502 when Robert Scott in Synton and William Scott in Fenwick were fined for failing to enter him in the itinerant court at Jedburgh. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as a witness in Selkirk for a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. William of Lilliesleaf (16th C.) recorded as ‘Middilmest in Lilliseleif’ in 1563 when he ‘wadset’ his lands at the ‘Hungrie Hills’ and other lands near Lilliesleaf Kirk to Walter Riddell of that Ilk. In the same year he was ‘William Myddilmest in Lisle Freirschaw’ when he rented some land to John Redford, this being ‘Coit acre’ and a rig of land lying in ‘Myddillis’ (perhaps suggesting a connection with his name). Probably the same William is recorded in 1562 when he let an acre of land in fields of the town of Lilliesleaf to Hohn Hislop. He is probably the William ‘Middelmest of Lillisle' recorded in 1580 when he admitted John Donaldson as tenant to 6 acres of land in the town of Lilliesleaf, for yearly payments of 24 pounds; these lands were at ‘Portus Croft Heid’. He may be the William, son of the deceased John of Lilliesleaf recorded in 1580/1 when he received sasine for 4 husbandlands in Lillieleaf. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction between William Scott in Burnfoot and Scott’s future wife Janet, daughter of William Scott in Huntly. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the livery of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. Probably the same William is recorded in 1581/2 when ‘one quarter of the half husbandland’ of his father was involved in a discharge with his mother as part of a marriage contract. He is also recorded as ‘Middilmest of Leilsle’ in 1583/4 when he received half of the meadow of Belses. And in 1589 he was involved in an action with Walter Riddell over the ‘Treincersgait’. He may be the William described in 1595/6 as ‘officiario Riddell over the ‘Treincersgait’. He may be the 1589 he was involved in an action with Walter Riddell over the ‘Treincersgait’. He may be the same William is recorded in 1581/2 when ‘one quarter of the half husbandland’ of his father was involved in a discharge with his mother as part of a marriage contract. He is also recorded as ‘Middilmest of Leilsle’ in 1583/4 when he received half of the meadow of Belses. And in 1589 he was involved in an action with Walter Riddell over the ‘Treincersgait’. He may be the same William described in 1595/6 as ‘officiario Riddell over the ‘Treincersgait’. He may be the William described in 1595/6 as ‘officiario Riddell over the ‘Treincersgait’. He may be the William described in 1595/6 as ‘officiario Riddell over the ‘Treincersgait’.

Middlesteid (mi-dul-steeds) n. Middlestead, farm in Selkirk Parish, east of Oakwood Mill. Lands of the farm bordered on the Parish of Ashkirk. It is probably the ‘Middlestead of Fallside’ granted to James Scott of Kirkurd in 1490. John Scott of Middlestead was listed by Scott of Satchells among the men who were on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Archibald, son of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins’), inherited the lands in 1637. There were Plimmers there from about the middle-17th century and Scott-Plimmers in the 19th century. Robert Preacher was tenant in 1719.

Midgap see Midgehope

Midgard (mid-gawrd) n. farm situated between Cavers and Mains. Mason Archibald Minto was there in 1767. The mother of the Laird of Cavers was recorded there in 1868.

Midgehope (mi-jup??) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, just south of Ettrick village. It was owned by Melrose Abbey in 1415 when neighbouring lands were swapped with Scott of Rankiburn for the lands of Bellendean. Simon Scott was recorded there in 1494/5. It was part of the lands owned by Melrose Abbey until about the Reformation. Along with Thirlestane, it was raided by a large group of Armstrongs in 1543, taking 200 cows, 20 horses and 4 or 5 prisoners. There were Littles there in 1573. In the late 16th century William Scott of Midgehope was 2nd son of William of Tushielaw, and ancestor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill. Gilbert Elliott of Stobs held the reversion of half the lands, resigning this to Walter Scott of Tushielaw in 1620. The lands were still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. Charles Scott of Woll owned the lands in 1785. In the late 18th century John Scott of Midgehope was a son of William of Woll and father of William of Teviot Bank. Andrew Henderson was owner in 1803 – ‘Gae warn the lads of Thirlstone, Gempleugh, and Newburgh fair, With Tushielaw, and Midgehope, in armour to appear’ [WSB] (called ‘Midgap’ by Scott of Satchells; it is ‘Mighope’ and ‘Migehope’ in 1415, ‘myghop’ in 1494/5, ‘Mige- hoip’ in 1564 and ‘Megehoip’ in 1573; ‘Midge- hoop’ is marked on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Mid Grain (mid-gran) n. small stream that rises on Whitegrain Fell and flows north-east to join Singdean Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in the Siltirig Water, to the east of Stobs Woodfoot. On a shelf near the summit is a hill-fort, approximately 75 m by 40 m, but largely destroyed by later occupation by a settlement and quarrying. It consists of inner and outer ramparts, and contains several hut circles associated with the settlement. Just south-east of the fort are the remains of a linear earthwork, traceable about 140 m, but probably once longer.

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, just to the south-east of Eilrig farm, and reaching a height of 317 m.

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, near the head of Borthwickbrae Burn. It lies between Byrelee Hill and Easter Hill and reaches a height of 368 m.

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in upper Liddesdale, lying on the west side of Cliffhope Burn near Singdean. It reaches a height of 434 m (it appears to be marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Middle’).

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in the very upper part of the Hermitage valley, south-west of Twislehope Hope. It reaches a height of 436 m.

Midholm (mi-dum) n. former name for Midlem, particularly used to refer to its Secessionist congregation in the 18th century.

Midlem (mid-lum) n. hamlet north of Hawick and about 41/2 miles east of Selkirk. It has an old rectangular lay-out, with the smithy in the middle of the village green. It was once a linen manufacturing centre, and a village of some importance. It lies on the Midlem Burn, which joins the Ale Water. The village is mentioned in 1119 in connection with Selkirk Abbey and remained in monastic hands for 450 years, with the Knights Templar apparently also having some land there. The village also had possibly the first Secession church in Scotland, built in 1746, and closed in 1938, with some Hawick area families travelling all the way there for services; there are baptismal records covering the period 1743–1919 (with some gaps). The top end of the village offers a magnificent view of Ruberslaw. In 1535 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was tried (and found not guilty) of leading men from Liddesdale to there, stealing 100 cows and 20 horses. J. Walter Elliot wrote ‘The Story of Midlem and the Midlem Pail’ (the origin is Old English ‘middel ham’, meaning simply ‘middle homestead’; it first occurs as ‘Middelham’ about 1120, is ‘Mydlem’ in 1535 and only gains its modern spelling by the 17th century; it occurs on Blaen’s 1654 map as ‘Midlummit’).

Midlem Mill (mid-lum-mil) n. farm with a mill, situated near the village of Midlem. John Lillie and James Lawson are recorded there in 1493. It was later a seat of a branch of the Elliots. The first Laird, in the mid-17th century, was Gavin Elliott, also of Grange (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters’ and ancestor of the Earls of Minto), followed by Robert, another Robert and finally Gavin. Robert Elliot paid tax on his lands there valued at about £400 in 1678. Lady Elliot paid tax on 19 windows in 1753. The estate was sold off to clear debts in about 1756. It was sold to Prof. George Stewart in 1773. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1797 and Thomas Weir in the 1860s. It is said that the house was rebuilt and named Linthill (also spelled ‘Midlemilne’, ‘Midlemilne’, ‘Midlem-miln’, ‘Midlem-milhyn’, ‘Midlem-milhyn’, ‘Midlem-milhyn’, ‘Midlem-milhyn’; it is ‘Midlaminil’ in Hawick Burgh records of 1734).

Mid Liddle Street (mid-li-del-stee) n. street in Newcastleton, lying along the west side of the Liddel (or Liddle) Water, between North Liddle Street and South Liddle Street.

cobbled wynds, and smell the midnicht air’ [JYH], ‘For aa A pat a warm pig i the bed, it was midnicht or A cam a-hea’t’ [ECS].

Midquarter (mid-kwar’-ur) n. former farm in Abbotrule Parish. It was advertised for lease in 1785, along with others on the Abbotrule estate. ‘Doorpoole, Midquarter, (including the Easter Park) and a small possession, part of the Farm occupied by George Minto’ was listed on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule and valued at about £210 (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Midraw see the Mid Raw

the Mid Raw (thu-mid-raw) n. row of pended, thatched tenements which stood in the centre of what is now Drumlanrig Square, between the Fore and Back Raws. The original construction may date back to around the 16th century. It exists in several photographs, including one during its demolition, showing the arched lower floor. A public well, originating at the Slidders Springs, stood at the bottom. The gable end at the top held a large notice board. It was the location for some of the densest and poorest housing conditions in Hawick, with no sanitation and some rooms still having clay floors. It is estimated that there were 110 people living in 10 separate houses. By the latter part of the 19th century they had become very dilapidated and the building was demolished in 1884, after being purchased by public subscription and gifted to the Town (since the Council had no powers to declare houses unfit for habitation). A Commemorative plaque was placed on a nearby house. In 1910 the site was turned into an ornamental garden with fountain and the Brown Clock in the centre of the Square, designed by J.P. Alison. Some of the stone was used to build the wall along the roadside at Pipleheugh (since rebuilt), and a wooden cup in the Museum was made by James Thomson from a salvaged beam. A few fragments of the former Pipleheugh wall were incorporated into the James Thomson statue base. A photograph was taken shortly before the demolition – ‘Though the Moat itsel’ may fa’, Like the famous auld Mid Raw . . . ’ [JEDM], ‘...And we maun bid a last farewell To the Auld Mid Raw’ [JT].

Midroughlee (mid-rowch-lee) n. former name for a steadying in Jedforest. It was recorded along with Wester Roughlee and Roughleeneuk in 1538 and 1539, valued at 30 shillings (it is ‘Mydrouchleis’ in 1538 and 1539; see Roughlee).

mids (midz) n., arch. the middle, middle of, midst – ‘...he sall set the thornis within his awin bounds, and his nichbour’s within the mids ...’ [BR1640], ‘In the myds o’’ [JAHM], ‘Threh the mids o thir verra busses ...’ [ECS], ‘I the mids o’ Lammas fair’[GW], a middle course, medium example, compromise – ‘There’s a guid mids! Bit A daarsay there’s a selly bit aboot uz aa ...’ [ECS].

Midshaw see Meadshaw

Midshiels (mid-sheelz) n. farm near the Teviot about 2 miles north-east of Hawick, just north of Briery Yards, nestled between the Teviot and the old railway line. A mound nearby is said to be the site of a cottage that was covered over when the residents had the plague; this may be the same as the round cairn, planted with trees, which is about 300 m north-west of the house (on the opposite side of the road, near the railway, marked ‘Tumulus’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map) and about 25 m in diameter. There is also an ancient standing stone, just to the north-east of the cairn; this is about 2.3 m high, 4-sided and more than 2 m around at the base. Aerial photography has revealed signs of an enclosure in the field to the north of the house. Redemption money was paid for the lands (along with Appletreehall) by Alexander Scott of Howpasley and Abington in 1470. Superiority of the lands (along with Appletreehall and parts of Hassendean) were forfeited after the execution of Alexander, Lord Home in 1516, passing to James Lundie, but returning to George, Lord Home, probably in 1522. Robert Scott of Howpasley and his wife Isobel Murray had a charter of the lands in 1536, when they were part of the barony of Hassendean, with superior being Alexander, Lord Home. It was probably owned (along with Appletreehall) by Walter Scott of Howpasley before that. It passed to Sir Walter Scott of Birksinde in 1578/9 and then his son Walter Scott of Howpasley in 1588. In 1611 it was confirmed to Philip Scott of Dryhope by the superior Alexander Cranston of Mordiston. Walter Scott of Midshiels was recorded in 1628. It was a tenant farm of the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the late 17th century. Some women from here were supposedly involved in the dispute over the removal of Hassendean Kirk’s roof to Robertson in the late 17th century. It was part of the lands of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton in 1678. The Laird of Newton (probably Francis Scott) was living there in 1694, when he paid tax for having 7 hearths. Walter Scott of Crumhaugh was living there in 1722 and 1724, Robert Turnbull and Richard Turnbull in 1729 and William Turnbull and Robert Turnbull in 1733–36. Gideon Scott was there in 1747. Rebecca Scott paid the window tax on 16 windows there in 1748. Capt. John Douglas of Cavers purchased the estate from the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the mid-1700s. After his death in 1786 it was inherited by the son of his cousin, who was Archibald Douglas of Adderstone. Archibald Douglas owned the farm by 1788 (and still recorded that way in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £235. It was later the home of miller John White. The Douglasses sold the land to William Turnbull of Fenwick in 1852, who sold it in 1896 to Rutherford Shiells. The level area in front of the house was used on several occasions for reviewing the Border Mounted Rifles. The road to Hawick passing near here was improved in 1775. The house is a grade B listed building (‘And they’re awa to the Kirk o’ Jamieson).

Midsideshaw (mid-sid-shaw) n. former lands in the Rule valley, described as a ‘pendicle’ of ‘Woollie’ (i.e. Wolfelee) in 1659 (it is possible this is an error for ‘Macksideshaw’).

Mid Sike (mid-sik) n. small stream on the north side of the Borthwick valley. It joins the Hoscot Burn just below Black Sike.

Midssummer (mid-su-mur) n. formerly in Scotland this was June 24th, sometimes used as a term day – ‘...geifand a penny of the wsuale mone of Scotland this was June 24th, sometimes used as a term day { ‘Selkirk is eleein mile away’, ‘how mony meile? (= how many miles?)’ [ECS].

Mile burn see Milburn

Mile (miil) n. mile, note that the singular form is often used for the plural – ‘Selkirk is eleven mile away’, ‘how mony meile? (= how many miles?)’ [ECS].

Mile (miil) n., arch. wild celery, Apium graveolens (noted by J. Jamieson).

Mile (miil) n., arch. a fluke, parasite found on the intestines and livers of sheep (noted by J. Jamieson).

Miles (miilz) n. Francis (b.1705) son of Richard. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for ‘periewig-maker’ Robert (surely a relative, perhaps his brother). In 1723 in Hawick he married Isabel Phaup or ‘Phape’. Their children included: Margaret (b.1723); Jean (b.1724); Thomas (b.1726); Robert (b.1728); Gideon (b.1730); William (b.1737); and Francis (b.1740). The witnesses in 1730 were Richard and Robert (probably his father and other relative). Francis (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Mary Hair. Their children included Isobel (b.1743). He could be the same man as the barber, if he married twice. Francis (18th C.) married Margaret Riddell in Hawick in 1758. He could be the barber of that name who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott and Ann ‘Doeg’ in 1758. He could be the Francis who witnessed a baptism for wig-maker Robert in 1766. James (19th C.) married Isabella Hessel in Hawick in 1869. Their son Adam may have drowned in a pool near the Flex. Mr. (16th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1579. James Burn, indweller in Selkirk, owed him 5 half firlots of meal. His forename is not recorded. Richard (17th/18th C.) wig-maker in Hawick. In 1697 someone was convicted of stealing ‘ane laced pinner’ from his wife. In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Brown, ‘Headhouse younger’. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for Robert (who was surely closely related). He may be the same Richard who married Agnes Lindsay in Hawick in 1705 and whose children included: Francis (b.1705), also a wigmaker; and Richard (b.1707). The witnesses in 1707 were gardener James Falside and merchant Thomas Hardie. Robert
Milestane Peth

(17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Martha Bell and their son Richard was baptised in 1714. The witnesses in 1714 were Richard (who was surely either his father or brother) and John Nordell. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘periewiggmaker’ in Hawick in 1725. Also in 1725 he was ‘wigmaker’ when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Scott.

He married Jean Cook in Hawick in 1715. Their children included: Mary (b.1716); Isabella (b.1718); Agnes (b.1719); Margaret (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); and Robert (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were Francis (who was surely related) and John Scott ‘Whitesgates’.

Robert (18th C.) wig-maker in Hawick. He married Rachel Nichol (perhaps this was the 2nd marriage of the wigmaker Robert who had married Jean Cook). Their children included Mary (b.1737). The witnesses to her baptism were merchant William Oliver junior and Kirk Officer John Telfer.

Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1758); Margaret (b.1760); and an unnamed child (b.1762). Robert (18th C.) wig-maker in Hawick, who married Ann Elliot. Their children included: William (b.1764); Catherine (b.1766); William (again, b.1768); and Robert (b.1775).

The witnesses in 1764 were Francis and John (with the surnames hard to read) and in 1766 were Francis Miles (surely a close relative) and Archibald Elliot. He could be the Robert whose daughter Agnes died in Hawick in 1777. He could be son of the earlier wig-maker of the same name (or he married twice with a big gap).

Robert (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Aitkin in Hawick in 1796. He could be the barber who died in 1805. Robert (d.1805) local barber, son of Francis. His children included: James, who married Isabella Hessel; and unnamed children who died in 1805 and 1808 – ‘Robert Miles the barber, and Michael up the stair, Willie Tully makes the wigs, and Jenny buys the hair’ [T].

Robert (b.1812/3) stocking-maker living on O’Connell Street in 1841 and in Wilton Kirkstyle in 1851. He married Janet Bannwell. Their children included: Robert (b.1836): John; Euphemia; James; David; and Agnes. His older sister Elizabeth also lived with him. He could be the Robert who died in 1877.

Robert (b.1836) son of Robert, he worked as a fuller in Wilton. In 1851 he was living on Langlands Bank. He married Ann Stewart and their children included Agnes and Robert.

William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the William born to Robert and Ann Elliot in Hawick in 1768 (also formerly written ‘Myles’).

Milestane Peth (mil-stån-peth) n. former name for a path between Ashybank and Honeyburn. The path went to the south from the main Hawick-Denholm road (A698), crossing a small hill that was removed to straighten the road. It is now by-passed by the modern course of the main road. There was once a ford across the Teviot at the foot of the path. It is now marked on the Ordnance Survey map through the name of the wood alongside the A698 near there. The name derived from a milestone that was once on the road near there, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, showing 4 miles to Hawick and 16 miles to Kelso.

mile stanes (mil-stånz) n., pl. formerly, numbered markers by the side of a road, set out at intervals of 1 mile. Wood’s 1824 map show a mile stone near the present position of the Horse.

the Military Hospital (thu-mi-li-’u-ree-hos-pi-ul) n. hospital in Hawick for treating wounded soldiers during WWI. It was also known as ‘Hawick War Hospital’, where?? Patients were banned from visiting licensed premises.

the Militia (thu-mi-li-sha) n. an army distinct from the professional army, being the forerunner of today’s Territorial Army. The history of the militia goes back for hundreders of years, although locally it is relevant only in the 17th to 19th centuries. In Hawick the term was applied to one of a number of partly voluntary forces, although technically distinct from the Volunteers and the Yeomanry. There are records of court cases involving ‘his Majesty’s Militia’ from the 1660s, when money was raised and men were selected to serve by ballot; in 1688 2 men were fined for fleeing the Town when they were recruiting and in 1694 2 men were admitted as Honorary Burgesss for serving ‘as militia hired men for the said town’. In 1796 a law was passed proscribing that each community should provide men or pay £25 each, which Hawick did for its quota of 3. Schoolmasters were meant to provide lists of all men between 18 and 35, those serving to be chosen by ballot (although there were many reasons for exceptions). Initially such forces were under the command of the Lord Lieutenants of each county. Men had to commit to a certain number of days of service (21 days annually) over 5 years, during which they could be called up in times of need. Militia units were very active in the late 18th century, with the threat of French invasion. Hawick was the rallying place for the upper troop of Roxburghshire Yeomanry, while the early 19th century saw the
the Milk Drum

Roxburgh Militia active. The 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia was established in 1810 and based at Jedburgh, with the 2nd Regiment based at Kelso. The men in these units were drawn by ballot (between the ages of 18 and 30), served for 4 years, and were not allowed to find substitutes. The would only train within the county, unless invasion or rebellion broke out. There is a record of messages being posted at schoolhouses in Selkirkshire in 1813, describing the balloting process. The Dumfries Militia, which was more like a semi-professional unit, recruited in Hawick in the early part of the 19th century.

c. the Milk Drum (\textit{thu-milk-drum}) \textit{n.} former popular name for the hospitality offered to the Drums and Fifes on the Friday morning around 7 a.m. The tradition is said to have started when Mrs. Hardie, proprietor of the dairy, offered one of the ailing members of the band some fresh milk in 1871. It was continued by Hardie’s and then the Brown family (at what point rum may have been added is not known).

milkit (\textit{mil-kee'}, \textit{-ki'}) \textit{pp.} milked – ‘When bonnye Jeanye Roole she milket the yowes I’ the buchte aboon the lynne …’ [JTe].

Milksweet Willie’s Thorn (\textit{milk-swee’-wi-leez-thôrn}) \textit{n.} ancient thorn bush at Newmill, associated with the ballad ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’ (see also \textit{Sweet Milk}).

milk-the-kye (\textit{milk-thu-ki}) \textit{n.}, arch. the dock weed in its seed-bearing stage.

mill (\textit{mil}) \textit{n.} a factory, building containing manufacturing machines, particularly referring to a knitwear factory. ‘The mill’ is a familiar name for one of the main town factories. The first factories in Hawick appeared in the late 18th century, for the manufacture of linen tapes and carpets. Spinning and weaving then moved from being domestic operations, to being organised in large factories. Through the 19th century these dominated employment in the Town. Working conditions were poor to start with; it is recorded in the 1830s that the standard working week was 6 a.m. to 7 p.m., Monday to Saturday, with night shifts coming in at about that time. Women were employed as well as men, but traditionally in different jobs, and with children working as ‘piecers’ from about the age of 9. In earlier times the word referred exclusively to a corn mill, which in older records would be ‘miln’ – ‘…Mind, aw’m gettin’ the hang o’ it And next year, for the mill aw’ll maybe no yearn’ [AY], ‘There’s a little town that’s nestling ‘mid the glory of the hills, Where the smoke goes rising slowly from the busy, scattered mills’ [WFC].

Mill (\textit{mil}) \textit{n.} \textit{John} (18th C.) butler at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas.

c. the Mill Acre (\textit{thu-mil-å-kur}) \textit{n.} former name for a triangle of land north of Wellington Street, bounded by Wilton Path and Langlands Road (presumably once connected with Roughheugh Mill).

Mill Acre (\textit{mil-å-kur}) \textit{n.} former name for lands associated with Belses Mill. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Kerr in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew (it is ‘Mylne aiker’ in 1678 and ‘Milnaiker’ in 1684).

Millbank (\textit{mil-bawngk}) \textit{n.} another name for the Mill Path. It may also have been the name of the hosiery factory built there for Robert Ewen and later part of Hogg’s Mill. Houses in this area were removed to make way for the railway to Carlisle in about 1860 (‘Mill Bank Street’ is recorded in the 1851 census).

Millbank Hoose (\textit{mil-bawngk}) \textit{n.} house on the Mill Path, once the residence of Provost and manufacturer Robert Ewen.

Millburn (\textit{mil-burn}) \textit{n.} former lands located roughly where Hermitage village is. In 1718 it was included along with Over Closs and several other farmsteads in the survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1839 in the New Statistical Survey it was reported that the Nine Stane Rig within the bounds of this farm. A flint found near here is in Hawick Museum – ‘Now, wae be to thee, Armstrong o’ Millburn! And O an ill death may’s thoun deel! Through thee we have lost brave Lairistan, But his equal thou wilt never be’ [ES] (also written ‘Milburn’; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Milburne’, on the Buccleuch survey as ‘Milburne’ and is probably the ‘Milholme’ of Sandison’s c.1590 map).

Millburnholm (\textit{mil-burn-hööm}) \textit{n.} former farm where the Whitrope Burn meets the Hermitage Water, at the modern location of Hermitage village. This was probably the farm of ‘Jame of Milbourne home’ (most likely an Elliot) recorded in 1587/8. William Henderson was tenant there in 1694. It was included along with Over Closs, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. The former farmhouse was visited by Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed in 1792, and was at that time the last of the old style cottages in the district. It was a single storey at one end, with an extra storey at the other end, and with tiny windows looking through the thatched roof. Willie

Elliot was farmer there at that time, and still recorded in 1797. Robert Elliot was farmer there in 1821 and 1841. There is a linear earthwork there, running east from the B6399 at least to the next stream, possibly all the way to the Roughley Burn (it is ‘Mylnburnholme’ in 1694, ‘Milnburnholm’ in 1797 and ‘Millburn Holm’ in 1821; it is ‘Milneburneholme’ and ‘Millburneholme’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Millburn Schuil see Hermitage Schuil

Mill Cornet (mil-kör-ni’) n. a mock Cornet selected in one of the local knitwear factories. Usually it was the youngest apprentice, and in the larger mills there were also Cornet’s Lasses, as well as Right- and Left-Hand Men and their Lasses, with those selected being the youngest 3 male and female employees. They would wear the same jackets and hats each year, and the party would go round the various ‘flats’, entertaining the workforce. The practice took place from at least the 1920s, including Braemar, Hawick Cashmere, John Laing’s, Johnstone’s, Lyle & Scott’s, Pesco’s, Pringle’s, Turner & Rutherford’s and Woodcock’s. The tradition largely died out in the 1970s, but is still continued by a few companies.

Millcote (mil-ko’) n. lands in Liddesdale recorded on a rental roll from about 1376, and associated with the Mangerton estate. They are listed as ‘Mylnicotis’ and with a value of 10 shillings.

mill-door (mil-dör) n., arch. entrance to a mill – ‘Saying ‘She has a mooth like (or as big as) a mill-door (= one very large and gaping)’ [GW].

the Millennium Nature Trail (thu-mi-len-ee-um-nä-char-träl) n. nature trail laid out in Wilton Lodge Park around 2000. There is an accompanying leaflet that describes the trail, which starts from the Museum.

the Millennium Stane (thu-mi-len-ee-um-stään) n. commemorative standing stone placed on the Miller’s Knowes in 2000, inscribed – ‘Look back on Bonnie Teviotside, and Hawick Among the Hills’. It was brought from a quarry near Jedburgh.

miller (mi-lur) n. person who runs a corn mill, having a special status within a barony – ‘Ee’ve the cheek o’ (or as muckle impetence as) the miller’s horse’ [GW], ‘ti droon the miller’ meant to add too much water to dough, liquor, etc. (see also millers).

Miller (mi-lur) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1690 and for Francis in 1691 (possibly his sons). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Cauldmill in 1723. His children included: James (b.1721); and Adam (b.1723). Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Appletreehall in 1724. He married Elspeth ‘moor’ and their children included Bessie (b.1724), with witnesses John and Walter Scott. Adam (b.c.1753) originally from Robertson Parish, he was living in Denholm in 1788, 1793, 1798 and 1800. He is recorded as ‘independent’ on the 1841 Hawick census, living somewhere on Buccleuch Street. He may be the ‘Mr. Miller’ marked on Buccleuch Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He married Rachel Scott in Crailling Parish in 1784. Their children included (the first 2 baptised in Crailling and the rest in Robertson Parish): William (b.1786), baptised in Crailling; Adam (b.1788), Thomas (b.1790) and John (b.1793), baptised in Cavers; and an unnamed child (b.1792), Alexander (b.1796), Charles (b.1798), twins Janet and Elizabeth (b.1800), and Robert (b.1803), baptised in Robertson. John (b.c.1801) may have been another child. Alexander (18th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £27. His son was probably William, who owned the same lands in 1678. Alexander (18th C.) shepherd at ‘...head’ in Wilton Parish, according to his headstone. He married Marion Smith, who died in 1769, aged 59, and is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gripknowe in 1786. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Mary (b.1783); William (b.1786); and John (b.1787). Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at Teindside Bridge, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Alexander (1867–1947) from Ayton in Berwickshire, he served as Stationmaster at several locations, including Hawick in about 1915. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Stationmaster. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had a local connection. Andrew ‘The Marquis’ (19th/20th C.) son of a coal agent in Hawick. There is a story told of him pulling Peter Laidlaw’s leg by recounting a dream in which he was in Hell and the Devil tells him to get off his seat, saying ‘Ee’ve nae rict there; it’s reserved for Peter Laidlaw’. Charles (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1757 he witnessed baptism for carrier Thomas Black and for weaver David (who was surely related, perhaps his brother). to him) and John Scott. He married Ann Blaikie and their daughter Ann was baptised in Hawick in 1758. He may be the Charles whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1787 and whose son David died in 1808. He is probably the Charles, father-in-law to stocking-maker Thomas Scott, whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1816 (in which case Isabel was his daughter). He could be the son of John and Helen Paterson born in Hawick in 1723. Charles (18th C.) resident in Chapelhill in 1775 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson Parish. Christian (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house on Silver Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. She is probably the Christian at ‘Slitrige Bridge’ and described as ‘independent’ on the 1841 census. She could be the Christian, daughter of James and Christian Winthrope, who was born in Hawick in 1785. David (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for workman John Douglas. Probably the same David witnessed a baptism for James Thomson in Weensland in 1704. David (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he was perhaps in Burngrove (the entry is hard to read) when his daughter Jean was baptised. William Miller and Adam Scott were witnesses. He may be the David who married Bessie Scott and whose son Walter was baptised in Wilton in 1695. David (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded as witness to several baptisms in 1702, 1704, 1705, 1706, 1708, 1709 and 1712. He thus seems likely to have either been an elder of the Kirk or held an office within the Incorporation of Weavers. He is probably the David who witnessed baptisms for Walter White in 1712 and 1731. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for James Dickson, the other witness being weaver William (who was surely related). His son John was baptised in Hawick in 1700, with witnesses Walter Turnbull and Patrick Richardson. He is probably the David who was fined in 1716 for calling Isobel Anderson a liar in court. He is probably the David who witnessed baptisms in 1718 for shoemaker John Gardner and for John Scott ‘Whitegates’. He and John (perhaps his son) were witnesses to a baptism for William Gledstains in 1721. David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He may have been son of the earlier David. In 1723 he married Margaret, daughter of the deceased Walter Armstrong in Weensland. Their children included: Margaret (b.1724); and David (b.1728). The witnesses in 1728 were William Tudhope and weaver John (probably his brother). David (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included: William (b.1733); and Helen (b.1736). David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick, perhaps related to the earlier David. He may be the David, son of David and Margaret Armstrong, baptised in Hawick in 1728. He married Helen Wright in 1756 and their children included: Jean (b.1757); John (b.1760); Helen (b.1761); and Robert (b.1763). Weaver Charles Miller witnessed the 1760 baptism and was surely related. The witnesses in 1757 were weavers John Gray and Charles (who was surely related). He could be the David who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He could be the weaver David whose death is recorded in 1810 when he ‘Drowned himself in Slitrigg’. He could be the David whose son Francis died in 1781. David (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Isabel (b.1772); John (b.1773); John (again, b.1773); David (b.1778); and William (b.1782). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. He is probably the David who (along with weaver Robert Douglas) in 1774 witnessed a baptism for weaver Archibald Douglas; the next baptismal entry was for his own child in 1773, with the witnesses being weavers Robert and Archibald Douglas. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Agnes Scott, who was also from Hawick. David (18th/19th C.) tailor in Newcastle. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence must have had a local connection. David (b.1795) son of Thomas. He emigrated to America in 1817, settling in Bovina, New York. In 1817 he married Nancy, daughter of Scotsman John Thomson. His 2nd wife was Isabella, daughter of Bailie ‘Tammy’ Turnbull. Their daughter Isabella Wilson married John Robertson Hoy. Many letters survive, sent to him from his family members in the Borthwick valley. Elizabeth (17th C.) recorded in 1695 when she was convicted of theft in Hawick. She was banished ‘out of the Ports of the town’, with the Burgh Officers announcing that no one should harbour or reset her. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (d.1720) recorded being in Wiltonburn when her funeral took place in Wilton Parish. She may have been related to Robert, who was blacksmith at Borthaugh. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Turnbull and their children included: Adam (b.1685); Helen (b.1700); Thomas (b.1703); Walter (b.1706); and Sarah (b.1708). In 1691 he was married to ‘Bessie’ Turnbull (probably an error) when his daughter Isobel was baptised, with witnesses
Adam Miller and James Neil. George (1777/8–1849) sawyer in Hawick, son of Janet Kidie, who died in 1832, aged 75. In 1841 he was resident at about 71 High Street and recorded as ‘independent’. He was living with his sister Isabel (who died in 1841, aged 50), as well as a servant, Janet Hume. He could be the Miller who gave his name to the adjacent close. He is buried in St. Mary’s. George (b.1829/30) born in Ancrum Parish. He was a flour miller living on the Cross Wynd in 1851. In 1850 he married Jane, daughter of Archibald Hobkirk from Jedburgh and their children included Robert. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he witnessed a baptism for Patrick Redford. He married Margaret Redford in 1656 and their children included Isobel (b.1657), Robert (b.1659) and Thomas (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were Thomas Maben and James Wallace. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. Sir Ronald Andrew Baird (1937-) born and educated in Edinburgh, he trained as a chartered accountant and worked in London and the Midlands before returning to Scotland in 1968 to join Dawson International. He became a Director in 1976 and from 1982–95 he was Chairman and Chief Executive, helping Dawson to become one of Scotland’s leading companies, with Pringle’s being one of its main assets. However, this period also saw the decline of Pringle’s and knitwear in Hawick generally. In 1995 he was effectively forced to resign after poor performance by Dawson, and his hefty compensation package caused some protest at the time. He was Chairman of the Scottish Textile Association 1992–5. He was Chief Guest at the 1993 Common Riding. He received the C.B.E. in 1975 and a knighthood in 1993. Mr. ?? station-master of Hawick Station in the early 20th century. Simon (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was also there in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, resident there. He and Walter Scott were described as tenants in Hawick Shiel in 1706 when they witnessed a baptism for James Davidson, also tenant in Hawick Shiel. He was joint tenant of Hawick Shiel (along with Walter Scott) in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1716 he (and Walter Nixon, also at Hawick Shiel) witnessed a baptism for James Borthwick, shepherd at Hawick Shiel. He may be the Simon, married to a Murray, who had an unnamed child baptised in Hawick Parish in 1683. Thomas (17th C.) listed as tenant at Mervinslaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Thomas married to an Easton whose son John was baptised in Wilton in 1697. The witnesses were Robert and William Scott. Thomas (17th C.) joint tenant along with John ‘Bue’ in Timbersidemill according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. They were recorded as having ‘an kiln betuixt thm’. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Marion Hobkirk in Cavers Parish in 1708. He may be the Thomas who was at Ormiston in 1709 when his son William was baptised and at Hummelknowes in 1717 when his son John was baptised in Cavers. William (b.1709), Margaret (b.1712), Marion (b.1714), John (b.1717), Robert (b.1719) and Janet (b.1721) are probably also his children. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included Elizabeth (b.1771), William (b.1774) and Robert (b.1777). Thomas (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Kelso. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–88. He was a carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was surely related to Robert, who was also a carrier. He may be the Thomas, married to Agnes Smith, whose children (baptised in Hawick) included: John (b.1775); Agnes (b.1777); James (b.1781); and James (again, b.1784). The witnesses in 1781 were shoemaker Charles Wilson and tailor Walter Pringle. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Robert Grieve in 1763 and another for Robert Lamb in 1781. An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1787. He is probably the Thomas whose father John died in Hawick in 1790; if so he was probably born in 1744. Thomas (d.1794) Kirk Officer whose death is recorded in Hawick. He was Kirk Officer when he witnessed baptisms in 1784 for shoemaker James Cheap, in 1786 for John Stewart and (along with shoemaker George Gardner) for shoemaker John Wiens, in 1788 for watchmaker John Stewart, and in about 1789 for John Lamb. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1808. Thomas (1774–1819) son of writer James. He was a ‘writer’ in 1799 when he witnessed baptisms for Joseph Peacock and Jean (his sister) in 1799, 1801, 1805, 1806 and 1808. He is probably the Thomas of Hawick recorded in a document in Selkirk in 1807 and the Hawick writer recorded in letters of 1814, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He is still listed as a writer when he died in Hawick. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of London. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence must have had a local connection. Thomas (d.bef. 1835) resident of Deanburnhaugh, probably a tenant farmer. His father was probably James and his brother John, joiner at Roberton. He was recorded living at Highchesters in 1801. He was Beadle at Roberton Kirk. He could be the Walter, married to Margaret Riddell.

The witnesses were Adam Miller and Andrew Riddell. Walter (17th C.) weaver at Lochburnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He could be the Walter, married to Margaret Glendinning, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: Isobel (b.1678); Janet (b.1682); and Helen (b.1684). In 1684 the witnesses were John Turnbull and William Paterson. Walter (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Walter Cavers in Mervinslaw in 1697. Walter (17th C.) listed as tenant at Outerside among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Walter (18th C.) resident at Parkhill in 1743 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1743. It seems likely he is the Walter who married Margaret Halliday in Robertson in 1735. He is probably the Walter who was at ‘Haugh’ in 1757 when his daughter Beatrix was baptised in Robertson. Other children born in Robertson who may have been his include William (b.1738), Isobel (b.1741), Margaret (b.1747), James (b.1749) and Mary (b.1754). Walter (18th/19th C.) saddler recorded in Denholm in 1837. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. In 1663 and 1678 he is recorded paying the land tax on £27. He is probably son of Alexander, who owned the same lands in 1643. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Allan in Wilton in 1702. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Todshaw. His son William was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1703 William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Agnes and they had an unnamed daughter baptised in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1711 he was at Easter Groundstone when his daughter Helen was baptised. He could be the William who married Bessie (or Jean) Murray and had children Agnes (b.1716) and Jean (b.1719) baptised in Wilton. William (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, who, along with Adam Kerr, was rebuked in 1713 for riding on stilts on the Sabbath ‘thereby causing crowds of bairns to follow them’. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Hardenburnfoot in 1717, 1720, 1722, 1724 and 1727. His children included: Robert (b.1717); Thomas (b.1720); James (b.1722); Helen (b.1724); and Janet (b.1727). He is probably the William who married Margaret Neil in 1715 or the William who married Janet Wilson in 1716. Other children, baptised in Robertson Parish, may include Marion (b.1719) and Isobel (b.1729). William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for gardener Thomas Boyd and in 1725 another for tailor Robert Chisholme. He was recorded as ‘weaver att ye east end of Hawick’ in 1715. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for James Dickson, the other witness being weaver David (who was surely related). Also in 1719 he servant William Scott got married in Hawick. He married Marion Huntly and their children included: Bessie (b.1712); Mary (b.1715); Janet (b.1718); and David (b.1721). The witnesses in 1712 were Bailie James Scott and merchant Thomas Hardie and in 1715 were John (surely a relative, perhaps a brother) and Bailie James Scott. William (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who married Anna Hope. Their children included: Robert William (b.1711); Margaret (b.1714); Margaret (again, b.1717); and Janet (b.1720). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was in Denholm in 1738. His children included: Janet (b.1723); Margaret (b.1733); Thomas (b.1735); and Charles (b.1738). William (18th C.) resident at Woodburn in 1772 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. He could be the same as the William recorded at Whithope in 1774 when his son George was baptised and at Highchesters in 1781 when his son James was baptised. He could be the William who married Janet Kedie in Roberton in 1769. Other children were probably Agnes (b.1770), John (b.1776), Thomas (b.1777) and William (b.1779). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Wiltonburn in 1786 and 1789. Perhaps the same William married Betty Watson in 1785 and was living at Threehead in 1795 and 1798. His children probably included Robert (b.1786), Andrew (b.1789), Jane (b.1792), James Hay (b.1795) and Thomas (b.1798). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Ann Routledge, who was also from Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Shielwood, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bowanhill Roadside, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (b.c.1770) overseer at a woollen factory, living on Wilton Damside in 1841. He is probably the William living at Roughhead in 1835, when listed among heads of households on Wilton Parish. He could be the William ‘Slubber’ whose son died in Hawick in 1824. He could also be the William, tailor, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (18th/19th C.) member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. This could be the same man as William the painter. William (b.1782/3) painter and glazier on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was on the short-list for Cornet in 1817. He could be the ‘Mr. Miller’ whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map at about 69 High Street, giving its name to Miller’s Close. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was a painter on the Howegate. In 1841 he was living at the Sandbed with wife Margaret and children James and William. He married Margaret, daughter of slater Robert Elliott, and their children included: William (b.1836); Janet (b.1839); Jane (b.1841); Robert (b.1845); Margaret (b.1850). He may have been the William born to David and Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1782. William (d.bef. 1840) wright in Hawick. He married Helen (‘Nelly’) Buckham, and she died in 1840. They had a son James who died in 1808, another James (b.1810), as well as John (1805/6–23). William (1791–1870) eldest son of Thomas, he was probably born at Deanburnhaugh. He was a farm labourer at Milsington and lived at Easter Parkhill and Musesee (where he was tenant farmer for a while). In 1819 he married Elizabeth Scott, from Milsington. In 1825 he married Isabel (1802–82), daughter of Michael Dickson and Jane Jardine. The family emigrated to America in 1831, settling in Bovina, New York. Their first 3 children were born in Roberton Parish and the rest in America. Their children were: Thomas (1826–1911); Michael (1828–1915); William (1830–1912); David (b.1832), who died young; Walter (1835–1908); Berry Shaw (1837–1906); Janet (1839–70); and Gilbert Dickson (1843–1931). Photographs of him and his wife exist. William (b.c.1810) blacksmith on the Sandbed. His wife was Helen and their children included Mary, Thomas, Janet, Margaret and Walter. William (b.1811/2) tailor on Orrock Place in 1851 and at 21 Howegate in 1861. He was listed as a tailor on ‘Teviot square’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret, Mary, Sarah, Elizabeth, John and Walter Alexander. William ‘Willie’ (19th C.) one of 3 men who instigated the Hawick Home Mission in 1872. He was the first President when the Mission was formally founded in the next year. Either he or a later William was leader of the Hawick Home Mission choir for 25 years in the early part of the 20th century. Rev. William Carrick (1858–1915) born in Glasgow, son of Andrew and Margaret Carrick. He was educated at the Church of Scotland Normal School and Glasgow University, and licensed to preach in 1881. He became assistant at St. George’s, Paisley and was ordained at Howood Chapel in 1883. He was first Minister of the new Wellington Church in 1886 and first minister of the newly created St. Margaret’s Parish in 1896. He was a guest at the 1890 Colour Bussing. He was translated to Yetholm in 1898. He married Margaret Walker, daughter of Thomas McQueen in 1887, and she died in 1894. He secondly married Johanna, daughter of John Bonthron in 1901. His children included William Bonthron Carrick and John Bonthron (formerly spelled ‘Millar’ and ‘Milner’). millers (mi-lurz) n. people in charge of corn mills. In Hawick the mill was at the Mill Port, moving to the Mill Path in the late 18th century, and the miller had grazing rights and grew corn at the Miller’s Knowes. Hawick’s millers have included: John Dempster in 1622; William Paterson 1680s; Walter Elliot, at least 1709–1714 Robert Elliot 1720s; James Scott 1750s; Adam Scott in 1784; John Ainslie late 1700s; John Oliver 1820s to 1840s; and John Young Scott mid-1800s.

the Miller’s (thu-mi-lurz) n. the Miller’s Knowes, a hilly area between Weensland Road and the Orchard Road, reached via the iron gate and path off Weensland Road, or from the Braid Road. It is named after the miller of the old Hawick corn mill, who for centuries grew corn and had grazing rights there. The area was made notorious after a man called John Webster committed suicide in the old quarry there in 1748. It has been a public park since 1892, part being purchased from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1920, and the rest gifted in 1930. It is now officially known as Miller’s Knowes Park, and offers spectacular views of the town, and is also used by children for sledding and sliding, as well as dog walkers and others. The Independent Broadcasting Authority leased part of the summit for 60 years for a microwave transmitter in 1962 (used as a relay for the Selkirk transmitter), and a BMX track was constructed in 1985 (but closed in the late 1990s due to continual bad weather). It is also home to a playground, the Millennium Stone and nearby memorial seat (to Frank T. Scott). It was once properly known as ‘Galalaw Knowes’ – ‘Sae lassies braw an’ callants a’ Where better mak’ your vows, Than where the hill o’erlooks the toon – The bonnie Miller’s Knowes’ [WFC].

Miller’s Close (mi-lurz-klös) n. popular 19th century name for a passageway located at 69 High Street. It was named after someone by the name of Miller, whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. Local historian Robert Murray’s family lived there (also written ‘Millar’s Close’).

the Miller’s Knowes (thu-mi-lurz-nowz) n. full name of the Miller’s – ‘And so it was in Hawick town, Nearby the Miller’s Knowes, We pledged our troth together there, With all a lover’s vows’ [WFC], ‘Some summer day again we’ll gang To wander through the verdant howes, And greet dear Memories amang The gentle, winding Millers Knowes’ [WP].

Millholm (mil-hom) n. place marked as ‘Milholm’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. It appears to be near the modern Hermitage village, and is probably the same place as Millburn. It may be the ‘mylnholme’ where Walter Turnbull is recorded as tenant in 1694 (but is hard to distinguish from Millholm, which is further to the south).

Millholm (mil-hom-kros) n. former lands in Liddesdale, located near the Millholm Cross, south of Newcastle. In 1541 it was recorded as ‘Mylneholme’ and in the hands of the Laird of Mangerton. There was a Walter Scott there in about 1622. In 1632 the farm here, along with Ettleton, was possessed by David Goldie and James Mitchellson. Andrew Wilson was there in 1685. It is described in a survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 1553 acres, and was bounded by Gillfoot, the Liddel Water, Side, Tarras, Copshaw Park and Blackburn. The farmhouse is in approximately the modern place, with cornland between it and the river, and adjacent small fields belonging to Greens and Mangerton farms. A symbol near the farmhouse could be meant to indicate the Millholm Cross, but there is no sign of Ettleton Cemetery on the 1718 map. The farmer there in the mid-18th century was Walter Scott. James Inglis was tenant in the early 19th century. The name may simply be the ‘home mill’ for the local laird (also called ‘Mylnholm’; it is ‘Mylneholme’ in 1622, ‘Mylneholmes’ in 1632, ‘Mylne-holm’ in 1685 and ‘Milneholme’ in 1718; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).
the Millholm Cross

ancient carved cross just south of Newcastleton, on the west side of the Canonbie road. It probably commemorates Alexander Armstrong, Laird of Mangerton, who was killed in 1320 and his body laid here while his clansmen rested on their way to Ettleton churchyard. The original part of the cross is about 10 feet high, including the base, and it has a modern top. The shaft has the letters ‘MA’ and ‘AA’, together with a carved sword. The Armstrong Clan Trust erected a nearby plaque. It is said to have been used as a local meeting place, where transactions were carried out, servants hired and feuds settled. Probably the farm here is the ‘Mylneholme’, with a value of 15 shillings, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 – ‘The Cross at Millholm, which perpetuates the name Of gallant Lord Mangerton, peerless in fame’ [DA] (also called ‘Milmholm Cross’).

Millhouse (Mil-hoos) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll c.1376. They are listed there as ‘Mihnehouse’, with a value of 5 shillings and 9 pence. In a rental roll of 1541 they are worth 15 shillings and leased to Thomas Armstrong, probably of Mangerton (it is ‘Mylhous’ in 1541).

Mill Hoose (Mil-hoos) n. 2-storey house attached to the former Corn Mill on the Mill Path, also known as ‘Hawick Mill Hoose’ or ‘the Mill Hoose’. It was rebuilt 1862–3. It has a central plastered door-piece and a simple elegance of construction. It is a grade C listed building.

Milligan (mi-lee-gin) n. Charles (19th/20th C.) son of William, and nephew of Provost Robert. He married Jane Beattie, whose mother was a Nichol of Craik and also related to Provost Renwick’s grandmother. He learned the upholstery trade from his uncle and started his own business. This was carried on as Milligan Brothers by his sons Robert and John. Christopher ‘Kit’ (??–??) wrote ‘Riccarton Junction: memories of my life in this railway village’ (1994). He was born in the village and lived there until the railway closed, when he moved to Hawick. At the site of the Riccarton Junction North signal box an information panel has been erected in his memory. George (1775–1855) from Watten in Caithness, he was a joiner, cabinet-maker and undertaker in Hawick. He was father of Provost Robert, William (farmer in Denholm) and Sophia (who married Andrew Park and emigrated to America in 1857). He was an elder in the Relief Kirk. He was listed as a joiner and cabinet-maker on Moncrieff’s Close (an old name for Tannage Close) in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was living on Tannage Close in 1841 and in 1851 he was a lodger with clockmaker John Graham. He married Jane Paterson, sister of ‘Pawkie Paterson’, who died in 1839, aged 54 (she had previously had a child with Frenchman M. Cabourne). He died suddenly stepping into a train carriage at Hawick station the morning after the Winter Fair. Together with his son Robert, the pair ran the family cabinet-maker’s for about 75 years. George Halberdier 1895–96. He worked for the Council and was officially a ‘District Officer’. He was thus the main Halberdier, who would organise the venues, etc., as well as reading the Proclamation and devillering the letter to the Cornet Elect. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1612 as ‘Johnne Amulieckyn, in Cruikis’. Along with Ninian Armstrong (son of Thomas) he was found guilty of helping John, Lord Maxwell, who was on the run for murder and treason. His farm was near Langholm, possibly the Crooks next to Westerkirk. He was sentenced to be hanged in Edinburgh. Rev. Robert (1836–88) son of Dumfries hosiery manufacturer William, he studied at Edinburgh University and New College. He was ordained as 2nd minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1863. He was quite evangelical in style, had a large bible class and introduced hymn singing to Wolfelee. He and his family contributed significantly to the fund for the new church building. It is said that he also laboured at the Free Church mission in Hawick and made designs for the new free Church in Newcastleton. He left Wolfelee in 1871 for the Chalmers Territorial Church in Dundee. He married Mary Spiers from Glasgow in 1863, and she died in 1906. Their children were: Jane (b.1865), born in Hobkirk, married Robert White in Lanarkshire; Amelia Baxter (b.1867), born in Hockirk, married Carl Ludwig Arter from Zurich and settled in Tehran; Phebe (b.1869), born in Hobkirk, married Rev. Frederick Arthur Taylor; and William (b.1874), born in Dundee, who was either a businessman in Tehran or moved to Alberta, Canada. He drowned while bathing at Montrose while on holiday with his family, on the eve of celebrating 25 years in the ministry. Robert (1821–1892) born on Common Riding morning, his mother was a sister of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. He became a cabinet-maker and undertaker and was well-known for his repartee as an auctioneer. In 1851 he was listed as a joiner on Moncrieff’s Close. His later business premises were at 80 High Street, where the Liberal Club was later built. The house was set back and the yard in front was used for...

furniture sales. He was a Councillor for over 30 years, mainly for South High Street Ward, becoming a Magistrate (possibly for longer than anyone else), then acting-Provost in 1875, beating Edward Wilson by a single vote in the 1884 Council election and being Provost 1887–90. He was sometimes referred to as ‘the Bailyeh’. As a Councillor he was known to be blunt and outspoken. He had virtually no formal education and it is said that he rather gloried in this fact. Wilton Lodge Park was acquired during his Provostship. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, being Chairman of the Race Committee and he was the Provost referred to in J.E.D. Murray’s ‘Nicht Afore the Morn’. He was a School Board member, Parochial Board member, keen bowler (being on the founding committee of Hawick Bowling Club), Vice-President of the Curling Club, and a Conservative, although little involved in party politics. He was presented with a gold watch on his retirement as Provost. He married Margaret Hunter, daughter of the landlord of the Black Bull, and she died in 1897, aged 70. Their children were George and Robert, who died in infancy, Barbara Scott, Margaret, Mary (who married John Henderson) and Jane (who married John Little). He secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Smith, and she died in 1897, aged 70. Their children were Robert (also an auctioneer) and Janet. He is buried in the Wellogate, and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by Frank Wood in 1890, and said to have perhaps been damaged by a halberd!). Robert (1851/2–1931) son of William and nephew of Provost Robert. He became a cycle and motor mechanic and was known as a cheerful individual, who had great technical and creative skill, but less business acumen. He built a 1 1/2 horse power motor quadrocycle, which was essentially an early motor car. He also built many other mechanical devices, and was a keen early promoter of pneumatic tyres. He went into partnership with William Laidlaw and later with Alexander Bell, the firm Milligan & Bell being successful through most of the 20th century. Robert (1865–1906) son of Provost Robert and Margaret Smith. He carried on the auctioneering business after his father’s death, but it gradually petered out. He married Grace Bilby and his son Robert fought in WWI in the Canadian forces. Sandy born and raised in Denholm, he worked in textile engineering design, but in 1993 became a full-time artist. He specialises in Border landscapes using pastels. William (16th C.) Vicar of Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1545 as ‘Amuligane’. Nothing else appears to be known about him. William (19th C.) brother of Provost Robert, he was a farmer near Denholm. He married a Scott of Milsington and his children included: Charles, who became an upholsterer; and Robert, a bicycle and motor engineer (also written ‘Millican’).

Milligan’s Peth (mi-lee-ginz-peth) n. name sometimes used in the late 19th century for Brougham Place, after the cabinet-making business of Robert Milligan, which was at the foot of the street.

Millingwud Fell (mi-lin-wud-fel) n. Millingwood Fell, also formerly known as Millenwood Fell, a high hill in the west of Castleton Parish, near the source of the Hermitage Water. It reaches a height of 517 m, with the somewhat higher Scawd Bank just to the south (it appears to be ‘Millin Wod Fell’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, is ‘Mellenwood Fell’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Millenwood-fell’ in the New Statistical Account).

millman (mil-mum) n. occupation in the knittwear industry, someone who mills (or washes) garments after they have been knitted and joined together. This was generally carried out by a highly experienced worker, who could tell by the feel whether a garment had been fully milled.

Millmoor (mil-moor) n. lands in Liddesdale once attached to the estate of Mangerton. In a c.1376 rental roll they are listed as ‘Milnmore’ with a value of 2 shillings.

Millpeth see the Mill Peth

the Mill Peth (thu-nil-peth) n. Mill Path, a short street running from Slitrig Crescent to Wellowate Brae, named after Hawick Corn Mill and formerly known as Kiln Path. The original houses were constructed in 1849 and the county police station was once on this street. The lower part, including the old Salvation Army Hall, was demolished in 1968 to make way for new housing for elderly people. The Song Singing ceremony takes place here on the Friday of the Common Riding. The Cornet and mounted supporters are led up the Cross Wynd by the Drums and Fifes and at the top of the Mill Path the Cornet dismounts, thanking the riders as they pass. Then the Principles, Provost and Bailies walk down to...
Millport

the foot of the street for the Proclamation and the Song Singing. This takes place on a specially constructed platform on the north side (corner with Allars Crescent), which replaced the former site, the roof of Tibbie the Fiddler’s Cottage on the opposite side of the street. No 3 and the Corn Mill are listed buildings – ‘Owre the Mill Path swells the chorus, Flag and ribbons waving o’er us’ [RK].

Millport see Mill Port

Mill Pool (mil-pool) n. pool in the Teviot near Lanton Mill. The weir there was called ‘Lanton Cauld’.

Mill Port (mil-pör’) n. short piece of road along the side of the Slitrig, entered by steps opposite the Tower. It was originally the site of a gateway near the old Corn Mill, which was partly washed away in the flood of 1767 and the remains demolished. The ‘undermost house of the Mill Port’ was also carried away in the flood. The steps down from the High Street date at least from the early 19th century. It once contained a number of poor lodging-houses, being the site of a murder (resulting in Hawick’s last hanging) in 1814. A thatched row of tenements, one with an outside staircase, was demolished in the 1860s (it is ‘milneport’ in 1708).

Mill Shot (mil-sho’) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. It is listed as ‘Colver Field, or Mill Shot’.

Millport Toor (mil-pör’-toor) n. former building on Mill Port. It may be the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ owned by the Scotts of Whitchesters in the early 16th century. This may be the same place once called the Lieutenant’s Tower and referred to as ‘the Peill’ in 1656. In a description of the great flood of 1767 it was said that the ‘old Milnport Tower is undermined and the walls rent’. It was probably demolished after that. There is a legend that it was connected by an underground passage to Drumlanrig’s Tower.

Millrig-quarter (mill-rig-kwar-tur) n. former name for lands in Belses. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Kerr in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew, and in 1684 when inherited by Sir Thomas’ nephew John. In 1684 it was described as 7 husbandlands of land (it is listed as ‘Millrigquarter’ in 1678 and ‘Milnerig quarter’ in 1684).

Millrig Sike (mil-rig-sik) n. former name for lands in Belses, described in 1684 as 3 husbandlands in Belses ‘cum rivola vocata the Milnerig Sike’. The lands were presumably by a small stream or perhaps the mill lade.

Mill-rynd (mil-ründ) n., arch. the iron structure supporting the upper stone in a corn mill, a coin with an impression like the image of such – ‘... being £11 money of this realme thereintil, being three 4 merk peices coneyest (i.e. coined) with the milne rynd ...’ [BR1642].

Mills (milz) n., pl. corn mills, i.e. buildings used for grinding grains into flour or meal, formerly crucial parts of the feudal structure, with each barony having its own mill where the tenant farmers had to have their produce ground for a fee. These reached their peak probably in the 17th century, and then began to disappear, although 10 local ones are still listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Eventually some of them were converted into textile mills. They were almost always water powered, although in earlier times they would have been hand-mills, and animal-driven mills also existed. The following were probably all local mills: Hawick Mill; Allanhaugh Mill; Ancurm Mill; Appotside Mill; Ashkirk Mill; Bedrule Mill; Belses Mill; Boosmill (on Ale); Borthaugh Mill; Buccleuch Mill; Burnfit Mill; Cauld Mill; Chisholme Mill; Cogsmill; Craik Mill; Crawhill Mill; Dean Mill; Dennum Mill; Dobburn Mill; Dovesshaugh Mill; Falnash Mill; Hallrule Mill; Hartshaugh Mill; Harwood Mill; Hassocknow Mill; Heidshaw Mill; Highcheste Mill; Hobbsburn Mill; Howcleigh Mill; Hummelkowne Mill; Larriston Mill; Lilliesleaf Mill; Midlem Mill; Minto Mill; Newmill on Teviot; Newmill on Slitrig; Newton Mill (Bedrule); Phillhope Mill; Raesknowe Mill; Riccarton Mill; Riddell Mill; Roughheugh/Langlands/Wilton Mill; Ruletownhead Mill; Scaur Mill/Timberside Mill; Soothdean Mill; Spittal Mill; Synton Mill; Trow Mill; Weensland Mill; Wester Mill (Wilton); Whitehaugh Mill (Liddesdale); Whithope Mill (Borthwick); Winnington Mill; and Woollee Mill (Rule). There were also small mills on some farms, powered by water from ponds. In Rulewater, for example, these were at Abbotrule, Bedrule, Billerwell, Cleuchhead, Doorpool, Easter Fodderlee, Gatehousecote, Greenriver, Hallrule, Hawthornside, Mackside, Midburn, Ruletownhead, Towno-Rule, Tythehouse, Wester Fodderlee and Westerhouses.

Mills (milz) n. George (b.1812/3) from Edinburgh, he was a coach painter living on the Back Row in 1851. His wife was Ann and their children included Jane, Margaret, James and David.

Henry (18th C.) listed as postillion at Cavers in 1791, when he was working for George Douglas.
He could be related to the butler John ‘Mill’, who was working at Cavers a few years earlier. James (19th C.) hind at Midshields. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840.

Millside (mīl-sīd) n. former name for a place near Hawick. John Cook was living there in 1767. It is unclear where this might have been, but perhaps an alternative name for the Mill Path.

Millstane Edge (mīl-stān-ēj) n. Millstone Edge, hill roughly between Linhope farm and Cauldcleuch Head, to the north of Tudhope Hill. It reaches a height of 567 m.

Millstane Edge (mīl-stān-ēj) n. Millstone Edge, hill in southern Roxburghshire, lying on the border with Dumfriesshire, north-west of Newcastleton, just south of Roan Fell. It reaches a height of 561 m and has a triangulation pillar on another slight summit to the south. There are many cairns in the area. The hill got its name from the quarry on the eastern side, where blanks for millstones were cut, one good discarded example being visible there today (there is a well-known place of the same name in the Derbyshire Peak District).

Millstane Sike (mīl-stān-sīk) n. small stream in Southdean Parish on the right side of the A6088 just before Lethem. It flows into the Carter Burn. The reason for the name is unknown. But there are several quarry holes on both sides of the stream, which have been used to excavate the outcrops of sandstone found here.

mill-steep (mīl-steep) n., arch. a lever fixed to the machinery of a corn-mill, by which the millstones may be moved relative to each other (noted by J. Jamieson).

mill-yins (mīl-yinz) n., pl. factory workers – ‘The mills war skailin an the mill-yins war toavin style’ [BR1688].

Milma (mīl-ma) n. alternative name of the lands held by William Scott in Lees in the 16th century, and later by the Scotts of Lees and Burnhead. The 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 lists ‘Mowmaw, or Millmaw, commonly called Lees’, valued at £52 (the name is probably related to ‘Wester and East Moor-maw’, an old name for West and East Lees; see also Moormaw).

Milmoe (mīl-mō) n. Hugh Joseph (1819/20–85) coming from Ireland, he was a pawn-broker at 2 Orrock Place. He was immortalized in the verse of the song ‘Kinly Stick’. He was in Hawick at least as early as 1871, when he had an advertisement in the Hawick Advertiser. He died at 5 Baker Street, where his brother Patrick died and 1886 and his sister Bridget in 1899. There is a family with similar Christian names in County Sligo.

Milmoe’s (mīl-mōz) n. former pawnshop in the Sandbed, remembered in the song ‘Kinly Stick’ – ‘...Streicht to the pawnshop that’s kept by Milmoe’ [WE].

miln (mīln) n., arch. a mill, usually for grinding corn, and typically water-powered. As part of the feudal system every barony or estate would have at least one mill, with the tenants kept in a system of multure, i.e. they were obliged to have their corn and other grains ground there, and would pay part of the grains as a tax. Burghs and abbeys would have their own separate mills.

miln-steed (mīln-steed) n., arch. a mill stead, piece of land suitable for a mill – ‘It is two reasonable myle Between the miln-steed and the kirk-stye’ [BR1688].

mil-sie (mil-sīe) n., arch. a milk-sieve – ‘Seilin the milk throwe a milsie’ [ECS] (also written ‘miliscie’; noted by E.C. Smith).

Milsington (mīl-sing-tīn, mīl-sīn-toon) n. farm along the Borthwick valley, on the right before Deanburnhaugh. It was formerly part of Haswendean Parish before becoming part of the new Parish of Roberton in 1689/90. At that time, along with Girnwood, it was valued at about £1300. The lands belonged to John de Langlands in the 14th century. His widow Marion Comyn had a charter for these lands, along with the mill and the lands of Outerside in about 1363. The Langlands exchanged the lands for Hepe with Sir Walter Scott in 1451 (in a charter dated at Wilton Kirk). In this charter they are described as lying between the lands of Borthwick on the east, Milsingtonhaugh

Chisholme on the south, ‘Dalyrig’ and Hoscote on the west and Bellendean on the north. Walter was to pay annually a red rose or six pennies Scots at the feast of St. John the Baptist. In 1453 there was a confirming charter of ‘excommunion’ of James of Langlands ‘frank-tenement of the town of Milsaintoun’ for Sir Walter Scott’s frank-tenement of Wester Hepe. The sasine was signed at the ‘chief messuage’ of Milsington on the last day of December in 1453. In 1492 the lands were described as being then waste, but normally valued at 10 merks (and still worth £10 Scots in 1553/4). John Cockburn was recorded there in 1502. From the late 16th century the Milsington Scotts resided there, descended from Thomas, second son of Walter ‘the Hawke’ who accompanied the ‘Brave Buccleuch’ on the rescue of Kinmont Willie. The Milsington line is continued in the Scotts of Girnwood and of Newton. There were 15 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely James Purdom, Margaret Nichol, Robert Purdom, Helen Nichol, Thomas Brown, Bessie Inglis, Walter Scott, Adam Robson, Margaret Greenshields, Helen Rae, John Rae, Patrick Thomson, Thomas Robson, William Robson and Margaret Turnbull. It was listed among properties of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1678. The farm was in Wilton Parish until Robertson was formed in 1689/90. William Scott paid the Hearth Tax for 3 hearths in 1694, with John Goodfellow as shepherd at that time. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it covered 1259 acres and was bounded by Borthwickbrae, the Borthwick Water, Hoscote, Henwoodie common and Bellendean. James Leithhead was recorded there in 1717–25, John Dickson in 1720, John Wight in 1725, James Elliot in 1756, Andrew Goodfellow in 1764 and William Scott in 1797. In the 1788 county valuation the lands here, along with Girnwood, were valued at £1305 13s 4d. From 1831 Milsington was tenanted by Charles Scott, cousin of Sir Walter the writer. In 1841 there were about 20 people living around the farm estate, as well as those in the principal farmhouse. The main road through the Borthwick used to pass directly in front of the farmhouse. A side road leaves from near here to join the Teviot valley at Branxholme Bridgend. A massive Roman bronze leg of a man on horseback was found there in 1820, possibly part of the loot from some southern town, and now in the Scottish National Museum; collected with it was a brass base (with an inscribed ‘L’) of what may have been a statue of Victory, perhaps also found at Milsington. There is a local tradition of buried treasure at Pot Syke, which may be where these items were found (first recorded as ‘Milsallistoun’ in 1363, it was ‘Mylsaintoun’ in 1451, ‘Milsaintoun’ in 1453, ‘Mylsintoune’ in 1492, ‘melsintoun’ in 1502, ‘Milsyntoun’ in 1553/4, ‘Mythnesingtoun’ in 1574 and 1640, ‘Milsington’ in 1718, ‘Milsington’ in 1764 and 1771 and ‘Milsintoun’ in 1717; there are many other spelling variants, including ‘Milsingtone’, etc.; it is ‘Milsintowne’ on a 1650 parish map and Blaeu’s 1654 map shows it as ‘N. Milsintoun’ and ‘O. Milsintoun’, while Jenner & Hollar’s c. 1644 map and Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland have it as ‘Milsintoun’ and Adair’s c. 1688 manuscript appears to show ‘Wilsington’; the name probably derives from ‘Mael-suthan’s farm’, where ‘Mael-suthan’ or ‘Myslan’ is a personal name introduced by the Norwegians from Ireland).

Milsingtonhaugh (mil-sin-toon-hawch) n. former farmstead near Milsington. It is recorded in 1790 as ‘Milsington Haug’, when John Anderson paid the cart tax there and in 1797, when Robert Oliver was farmer there. Walter Scott was living there in at least 1793–95.

Milsington Hill (mil-sing-tin-hil, mul-sin-toon-hil) n. hill just to the west of Milsington farm in the Borthwick valley. It has two peaks, both reaching to 263 m. The western one contains the remains of an earthwork, about 85 m across; it consists of a bank and ditch, best preserved at the south corner.

Milsingtonshankfit (mil-sin-tin-shawngk-fi’) n. former cottage in the Borthwick valley, situated at the beginning of the road to Milsington farmhouse (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Milsingtonshiel (mil-sin-toon-sheel) n. former farmstead near Milsington. It may be the same place sometimes called ‘Whaupshaw’. James Hinton was there in at least 1716–22, James Scott in 1717–23, Walter Henderson in 1726, Walter Scott in 1741 and Thomas Rae in 1762–71. Farm worker John Pringle and family were there in 1841 (it is ‘Milsingtonshieils’ in 1716, ‘Milsintounshieils’ in 1721, ‘Milsington Shiel’ in 1741 and ‘Milsingtontownshiel’ in 1771).

Milestone Path (mil-, mil-stân-pawth) n. hill between Ashybank and Honeyburn on the A698, and also the name for a field and wood there. This was presumably once part of the original route between Hawick and Denholm, before the lower route was built for coaches. The oak wood was partly removed when the course of the main road.

was changed in the late 20th century, but was replanted.

Milton (mil-tin) n. possibly a former alternative name for Rawflat.

Milton (mil-tin) n. village in Dumfries & Galloway (actually one of several with this name) off the A74 south of Moffat, built on the site of a large Roman fort established around the year 80. There is a possible military road from there to the fort near Aikwood Tower.

mim (mim) adj., poet. silent, coy, prim – ‘He’s never owre blate, and he canna keep mim, But the world’s the better o’ bodies like him!’ [WL].

mimmer (mi-mur) adj., poet. more prim, coyer – ‘Than mine, yenow, a mimmer face Was Never shewed in either case’ [JoHa].

my minnie! [HSR], v., arch. to mother – ‘...a little ewe lamb, which had lost its mother and was being minnied by the shepherd’ [WNK].

mint (mint) pp., poet. set out, aimed, ventured – ‘When guarded by this fourfold fence, Auld Nick can never fang us; Nor Bonapart’ e’er drive us hence, Nor villains mint to wrang us’ [JR], ‘Butte Lucky Scrae’s half worried steed, He never mint the road, Till a reid hette pyke the master gatte, And gave his loone a prodde’ [JTe].

Minti (min’-i, min-ti) n. Minto, a village, former estate and parish about 6 miles north-east of Hawick and 1 1/2 miles north of Denholm. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle. The village was burned in a raid about 1490. It was burned again by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545, including ‘Mynto Crag, Mynto town, Mynto place, Weast Mynto, the Crag End’. Some of the old village can still be made out, but the present one was laid out by William Playfair for the 2nd Earl of Minto in the early 19th century. The move was arranged so that the village could not be directly seen from Minto House. It contains the William Playfair 1830/1 gothic-style church, renovated in 1934, as well as the Thomas Clapperton War Memorial. Nearby is the demolished Minto House, with grounds containing the remains of an old Norman Church with an ancient burial ground, as well as an 18-hole golf course. The estate was owned by the Turnbulls from at least 1329, although at least part of the barony was granted to the Stewarts of Jedworth in 1390, and then disputed in the next century. James Langlands appears to have held half the rights to the markets there in 1476. In 1501 William Turnbull had a sasine for 2/3 of the lands, with Alexander Stewart having a sasine for the other 1/3. The half baronies were held by the Turnbulls and Stewarts until the early 17th century. John Turnbull of Minto was a significant leader of the Turnbulls in the late 16th century. In 1643 the lands owned by Turnbull of Minto were valued at £2006 13s 4d and consisted of ‘Minto, town, mains, mill, kaims, with teinds and pertinents’; there was also £102 of land owned by Turnbull of Tofts and the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot, owned by Gilbert Elliot and valued at £660. In 1678 the estate of the Laird of Minto was valued at £2008 13s 4d. Craigend and Deanfoot were sold to Gilbert Elliot of Craigend in about 1640 and later combined with part of Minto, which continued to pass to Eliotts until sold by Gilbert Elliot in 1687. The rest of the lands passed to the Scotts of Harwood in 1673, then Walter Riddell from Edinburgh in 1676, briefly Thomas Rutherford and eventually the Scotts of Harden in 1691, with Gideon Scott of Highchester having a confirming charter for the Barony in 1695. At this time the village became a Burgh of Barony, and the existing Common is also mentioned. Markets were to be held on Wednesdays and fairs on 14th June and 14th November. The lands were sold to the Elliots in 1703. In 1707 the whole Barony was valued at £2768 13s 4d. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls the residents listed were Robert Brown, John Dickson, William Turnbull (smith), James Oliver and (another) William Turnbull. In 1811 the ‘Barony (being the whole of the old Parish) of Minto’ was valued at about £2800; the full Parish at that time was valued at £5163. An ancient bronze axe was found nearby about 1888 and is now in the National Museum of Scotland. A spindle whorl from here is in Hawick Museum. Note that there are now several Mintos elsewhere in the world, all ultimately deriving from this small area (but many via the Earls of Minto). The village also gave rise to a surname – ‘In lines of crystal shine the wandering rills Down the green slopes of Minto’s sun-bright hills’ [JL] (the name probably derives from the Old Welsh for a hill, plus ‘how’ for a hollow, or Old English ‘hoh’, also meaning hill; it is recorded from very early times, with the ‘d’ changing to a ‘t’ by 1150, when it is ‘Munetov’ and 1166, when it is ‘Munethov’; it is thereafter ‘Minthov’, etc., with the middle ‘th’ disappearing by the end of the 14th century; it was formerly often written ‘Mynuto’; it is ‘Mynetowe’ in 1296, ‘Mynethowe’ in 1380, ‘Mentov’ in 1383, ‘Mynout’ and ‘Myntow’ in 1390, ‘Mintow’ in c.1400, ‘Myntow’ in 1461, ‘Myntto’ in 1491/2, ‘mynto’ in 1493, ‘Myneto’ in 1501 and ‘Mynto’ in 1508, 1511, 1516, 1528, 1535, 1548, 1553/4 and 1576; ‘Mintotour’, ‘Mintocraig’ and ‘Minto K.’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Minti (min’-i, min-ti) n. (Minto) Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is recorded as ‘Dande Mynto’. He may have been an ancestor of later local Mintos. Andrew (17th/18th C.) merchant in Selkirk. In 1720 he was charged with assault and also with throwing stones at a dog. In 1723 he was recorded in 2 legal cases involving debt and another for an assault. He may be the son of Walter who was charged with assault, threatening to kill someone and breach of the peace (along with his father) in Selkirk in 1719. Andrew (b.1734) 2nd son of George and Agnes Forrest. He was a resident of Southdean Parish, perhaps a mason like his father and brother Archibald. He firstly married Janet Oliver in 1758 and secondly married (in an irregular marriage of some sort) Betty ‘Boal’ (probably Bowie) in 1776. His children included: George (b.1759); John (b.1779); Nelly (b.1781); Nanny (b.1783); Andrew (b.1785); William (b.1788); Betty (b.1790); and Archibald (b.1794), who was baptised in Hobbirk. All except the last were baptised in Southdean Parish. Andrew (b.1785) born in Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Betty ‘Boal’. He was a farmer at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was ‘Funderholder & Retired Farmer’, living in Lilliesleaf village. In 1817 he married Janet Dalgleish, and she died in 1852. Their children included: Alexander (b.1818); Andrew (b.1820), born in Hawick, who was a cattle dealer; Elizabeth (b.c.1823); and John (b.c.1826). Andrew (1817–1903) son of William, he was born in Hobbirk Parish. He worked for a while as a servant at Weens. In 1861 he was a ploughman, living at Cleughhead Cottages. He was part of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. His wife was Catherine and their children included Janet, Jean, Ann and Margaret. One of his daughters married Mr. Kennedy of the Tower Hotel in Hawick. Archibald (b.1732) son of George and Agnes Forrest, he was baptised in Minto Parish and was a mason in Abbotrule. In 1766 he married Margaret (or Mary) Turnbull. Their children included: Margaret (b.1767); Agnes (b.1769); Nelly (b.1774); George (1776–1860); and Robert (b.1781). In 1767 he was living at Midguard. David (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. This was near the tenement of Thomas, who was surely related. In 1535 he purchased a tenement from William Ker; Thomas was one of the witnesses and probably a relative. He may be the David who resigned a tenement in 1541 to his younger son John and another tenement in favour of his 2nd son James in 1545. He may be the David ‘elder’ who was involved in a transaction with David, smith, in 1541. He is probably the deceased David whose son John inherited his property in Selkirk in 1542/3. David (15th/16th C.) smith recorded in Selkirk in 1541. He was son and heir of the deceased James. David (17th C.) resident at Doecleuch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. David (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He is probably the ‘Dainied Minto’ recorded in the Hawick Town Book of 1731; he was paid ‘for 3 lod of claye for the well, 5s. 6d. Scots’. He was recorded as a carrier when he witnessed baptisms for Walter Scott in Crumhaugh in 1708, for wright John Pringle in 1709, for wright John Pringle in 1716, and for ‘Tenent in Hawick’ David Wilson in 1721. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included: Margaret (b.1691), who probably married William Riddell in 1714; John (b.1700); Walter (b.1701); Beatrix (b.1703); David (b.1706); Robert (b.1708); and David (again, b.1713). The witnesses in 1700 were Bailie Walter Graham and weaver James Wight, in 1703 were gardener James Falside nd merchant Thomas Waugh, in 1706 were ‘vintner’ Francis Elliot and weaver Robert Wight, and in 1713 were Bailie (of the Regality) Walter Elliot and ex-Bailie Robert Ruescastle. David (17th/18th C.) recorded in a bond in Selkirk in 1721 with Walter. He is also recorded in Selkirk in 1726, when he was paid for building bridges, renovating the mill dam and other construction work. In 1727 he was paid for working on the school in Selkirk, in 1730 for further wright work, in 1745 for mason work, in 1749 for work on bridges, in 1752 for work on the school and well, in 1753 for work on the Town House and for further work in 1761. David (18th C.) responsible for dealing with (i.e. moving on) crippled beggars for the Hawick Kirk Session in the early-to-mid 1700s. He could be the David, married to Janet Glendinning, whose son Walter was born in 1701. David (18th C.) tenant in Fairnilee Bridgend. In 1763 he represented some residents of Midlem in a case in Selkirk. Perhaps the same David is recorded in a receipt in Selkirk in 1758. David (18th/19th C.) dyker recorded in a document in Selkirk in 1814. William is also mentioned and so presumably related. Francis (17th/18th C.) thatcher in Selkirk, recorded in 1708. Perhaps the same Francis was a wright recorded in Selkirk (along with John) in 1727 and recorded in a receipt in 1732. Francis (18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He was paid in 1762 for supplying timber for the Corn Mill in Selkirk and had a complaint against him in 1774. Gavin (b.1841) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Rebecca Pow. He was a blacksmith in Ashkirk, later moving to the Carlisle area. In 1861 he was at Blacklee, Hobbirk, working with blacksmith William Pow. In 1866 he married Elizabeth Telfer in Ashkirk Parish. Their children included Margaret (b.1867), William (b.1869), James Simpson (b.1872), Andrew (b.1874), Rebecca (b.c.1880), Elizabeth (b.c.1885) and Charlotte (b.c.1885). George (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He paid tax for a kiln, as well as a hearth, suggesting he was a tradesman of some sort. Although unclear, he may have been at Burnfoot in Wilton. He could be the George who married Isobel Lorraine in Ashkirk in 1688, and who had a son Thomas (b.1689) baptised in Ashkirk; the witnesses to the baptism were William Minto and Andrew Fletcher. It seems likely he was an ancestor of the George recorded in 1731. George (18th C.) mason in Hassendean, probably a descendant of the earlier George who lived in Hassendean. He was a direct ancestor of the later minister at Lilliesleaf of the same name and also of more than half of the Mintos living in Roxburghshire in the 19th century. In Minto Parish in 1731 he married Agnes (b.1712), daughter of Archibald Forrest of Huntlaw. Their children included: Archibald (b.1732), who was baptised in Minto Parish and was also a mason; Andrew (b.1734), baptised in Ancrum Parish; John (b.1737), who married Margaret Scott in 1764 and may have moved away from the Borders; and twins George and William (b.1740), who may have died in infancy. Their 4 younger children were baptised in Ancrum Parish. George (18th C.) tenant farmer at Langside. In 1752 he married Barbara, daughter of Mark Chisholme and Barbara Bennett. He later lived at Rueltownhead, which had been owned by his in-laws. His children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: Markie (b.1755), named after her grandfather, who married William Bell of Menslaws; and William (b.1756), who was an officer in the Royal Marines. George (18th C.) married Isabel Sharp in Bedrule Parish in 1782. He is probably different from the George who had children in Southdean Parish (although this is unclear). William (b.1794) and Margaret (b.1796), baptised in Bedrule Parish, were probably his children. George (b.1759) son of Andrew and Janet Oliver. He is probably the George who got married in Southdean Parish in 1787 (perhaps to Mary Moscrop). Probably the same George had the following children baptised in Southdean Parish: Betty (b.1788); Janet (b.1790); and Isabella (b.1792). George (1776–1860) son of mason Archibald. He is said to have farmed Abbotrule Glebe. He may be the George, part of whose farm in Southdean Parish was owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He was great-grandfather of Rev. George of Lilliesleaf. In 1803 he married Helen Murray and their children included: Margaret (b.1803); Archibald (b.1806); Agnes (b.1807); James (b.1811); Ellison (b.c.1811); Robert (b.c.1818); Thomas (b.c.1820); and George (b.c.1827). Archibald (b.1806), baptised in Southdean Parish, may have been his son. Rev. George (1864–1947) from Greenock, he was ordained as minister of Lilliesleaf United Free Kirk in 1897 and remained until 1908. He came from a long line of local Mintos, going back at least to his great-great-great-grandfather George, who was a mason in Hassendean. 2 months after arriving in Lilliesleaf he married Eliza, daughter of Ewen Sutherland. Their children were: Marjorie (b.1898); George Walker (b.1899); Ewen Sutherland (b.1902); Archibald Herbert (b.1905); Robert Macfee (b.1908); and Kenneth Ross (b.1910). Helen (b.1793) dealer in small wares on Orrock Place. She was recorded there in 1841 and 1851, when she was a ‘Candlerer’ (i.e. presser of fabrics). Her daughter Betsy Grieve assisted her. By 1861 she was ‘Keeper of a Mangle’ on Factory Close. Henry (15th C.) had a sasine for a half merk land in Selkirk in 1454. James (16th C.) recorded as witness to transactions in Selkirk in 1535 and 1539. Probably the same James was son to the deceased Thomas when he purchased 1/4 of Ladylands in Selkirk in 1536. James (16th C.) 2nd son of David. In 1543 and 1581. He is probably the Burgess John who made a financial bond in Selkirk in 1580. John ‘younger’ is also recorded in 1579, 1580 and 1581, and probably his son, while Janet may have been his daughter. John (17th C.) recorded in 1672 when his ‘arable lands and crofts’ in Selkirk are mentioned. John (17th C.) resident at Easter Essendise on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He witnessed a baptism in 1690 for William Scott and others in 1694 for James Scott and Janet Scott, for William Scott and Margaret Scott and for Andrew Raither. He is probably the John, married to Isobel Sword, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Ashkirk in 1687. John (17th/18th C.) wright recorded in Selkirk in 1727, along with Francis. They were probably both related to Thomas. Probably the same John was recorded in a receipt in 1731 and was paid for repair work in Selkirk in about 1745 and for making up tables of weights in 1762 and 1767. He signed an admission to the Hammermen’s Incorporation in 1758. John (18th C.) recorded as master of the English School in Selkirk in at least 1752–72. Perhaps his widow may have been the ‘Bell Minto’ who wrote to the Burgh of Selkirk in 1784. John (b.c.1816) farmworker in Castleton. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at about 29 South Hermitage.
Street, but by 1851 was shepherd at Broadlie Burnfoot. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Little and their children included Jean (b.c.1835), Elspeth (‘Eppy’, b.c.1837), William (b.c.1839), Margaret (b.c.1843) and Helen (b.c.1851). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1822 he married Helen Richardson, who was from Hawwick. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick.
The death of his infant son is recorded in 1823.
John Dalgleish (1826–1908) son of Andrew and Jane (or Janet) Dalgleish. In the 1850s he was one of 2 executors (along with Dr. Adam Elliot of Goldielands) for arranging the ‘Coutard Fund’, bequeathed by John and William Dalgleish to help the poor of Hobkirk Parish. Mrs. ?? (19th C.) of the East End Toll Bar, an early member of Allars Kirk. Robert (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker William Riddell. Robert ‘My Lord Minto’ (d.1776) Hawick resident whose death is recorded with an unusual nickname. He could be the Robert who married Betty (or Agnes) Paterson and had children Janet (b.1736), Margaret (b.1739) and Agnes (b.1743). Alternatively he could be the Robert ho married Margaret Scott in 1742 and whose children included Agnes (b.1743).
Robert (b.1781) baptised in Southdean Parish, younger son of Archibald and Margaret Turnbull.
He married Isabella Bicket and they had 3 children baptised in Bowden Parish: Janet (b.1805); Archibald (b.1806); and William Bicket (b.1812).
Robert (19th C.) son of the farmer of Abbot-rule Glebe. He became a ship’s steward, voyaging across the Atlantic, but he returned to help on the farm. He married Mary Telfer (daughter of the tenant of Roundabouts), and they lived at Kelso, Whittle Toll, Dykeraw and Wolfelee Glen. He was a handyman on Wolfelee estate before being appointed gamekeeper into the new lodge there. After retiring he moved to Mack-side old Toll Bar. He lived to the age of about 80, as did his wife. Their children were George, Euphemia, Ellen, Mary and Jessie (who married Robert Tinlin). Roger (12th C.) witness to a charter of Ranulph de Soulis about 1150. He is recorded as ‘of Munetov’, along with Simon his brother. In 1166 he was ‘Roger de Munetov’ when he was witness to a grant by King William to Robert de Brus. Thomas (15th C.) tenant of Minto Common. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including stealing a black ox from him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1527 he is recorded resigning his tenement of land to his wife Elizabeth Notman, as well as regining an annual rent of the tenement of David (who was surely a relative). The nearby tenement of David was also mentioned in 1527. In the same year he witnessed a document in Selkirk. He was owner of a rig of land in Selkirk in 1530/1. He is still recorded as owner of a tenement in 1531 and 1534. In 1532 he was ‘elder’ when he witnessed a sasine in Selkirk and also resigned a tenement to Thomas ‘younger’ (presumably his son). In 1535 he was one of the ‘landmaires’ chosen to ‘rid the boundis’ of Selkirk Common. In 1536 he resigned his tenement in Selkirk to his heir John; David was a witness, and hence probably related. His son and heir John is recorded in about 1541 assigning a yard in Selkirk. Thomas d(bef. 1539) resident of Selkirk, perhaps son of the earlier Thomas. He is recorded in 1539 when a transaction involving tenants in Ashkirk and Falside was done in his house. Later in 1539 he was deceased when his wife Marion Minto and son James rented part of Ladyland to John Bry-don. In 1543 his wife was recorded as Marion Burnet, with his son and heir being John and James another son. Thomas (16th C.) recorded representing someone in a court case in Selkirk in 1561. He is probably the Thomas ‘elder’ who was a Burgess of Selkirk in 1581 when he had an agreement involving his wife ‘Bigie’ Murray and son Thomas. He is probably also the Thomas who rig in Selkirk is mentioned in 1581. Thomas (16th C.) probably son of Thomas. He was recorded as ‘younger’ when he was a witness in Selkirk in 1580 and 1580/1. In 1581 he was warned to appear to receive redemption money at Selkirk Kirk.
Also in 1581 he was involved in an agreement with his father Thomas, involving a loan and the transfer of land in Selkirk and another agreement over the purchase of a horse. He is probably the Burgess of Selkirk who witnessed another transaction in 1581. Thomas (17th/18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He is recorded in 1727 when he was paid for mending the Selkirk Tollbooth. Also in 1727, along with William Scott, he received money for ‘work at the milus, bridges, mealmartet and house’ in Selkirk. Wrights Francis and John are also mentioned in 1727 and surely related. In 1729 he provided a bell for the top of Selkirk Schoolhouse. He was involved in a case for recovering a debt in 1737. In 1741 and 1742 he carried out other ‘builder work’ and ‘smithy work' for the Burgh of Selkirk. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Janet (b.1726), William (b.1730), Agnes (b.1732), John (b.1734) and Thomas (b.1738). Thomas (19th C.) coach driver who was an early member of Allars Kirk. He is described as a ‘chaise driver’ in 1829, when one of his children died. Walter (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He may be related to James, who is also listed. Walter (17th C.) listed at Highchesters on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He paid tax for 3 hearths, suggesting he was either a significant tenant or a tradesman of some sort. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1719 when he and his son Andrew were charged with assault. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded in a bond in Selkirk in 1721 with David. William of Minto (15th C.) notary in 1431 for the ‘intrument’ transferring the lands of Heap between the Langlands and the Scotts. He is recorded as ‘Willelmus de Myntow presbyter Glasguensis diocesis’. William (15th C.) resident of Minto. In 1493 Walter and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole were able to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including the theft of a cow from him. He was probably related to John who was also ‘in mynto’ at the same time. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Agnes Scott in 1726 and his son William was baptised in 1727. Lt.-Col. William (1756–1827) born at Ruletownhead, son of George and Barbara Chisholme, he was christened in Southdean Parish. He served in the Royal Marine Artillery. Joining as a Lieutenant in 1779, he became Captain in 1796 and Major in 1801. He was wounded 3 separate times, once in 1783 while fighting the French frigate Sybille on board the British Magicienne, and another time in 1801 when in a battalion attached to the Army at Aboukir in Egypt. He later served in the Royal Marines Artillery and retired in 1826. In 1812 he married Grace Little, but they had no children. William (b.1788) born in Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Betty ‘Boal’. He was a mason living at Forkins in the 1841 to 1861 censuses. In 1815 he married Janet Oliver (from Castleton) and their children included: George (b.1819); Betty (b.1822); Jessy (b.1824); John (b.1827); Helen (b.1829); Archibald (b.1831); Robert (b.1833); Margaret (b.1835); Peter (b.1837); Agnes (b.1840); and James (b.1840). Andrew (b.1817), who worked at Weens and was ploughman at Cleughhead Cottages, was probably also his son. William (b.c.1801) born in Southdean Parish, he was a labourer living at Doorpool in 1841, Birneyknowe in 1851 and Cleughhead Cottages in 1861. He was surely related to the mason of the same name, who was his near neighbour, as well as Andrew, who also lived at Cleughhead. His wife was Mary and their children included Margaret, Agnes, Archibald, James, Robert Robina and Janet. He was already widowed by 1861. He may be the William, son of Agnes (or Nanny), baptised in Southdean Parish in 1802. William (b.1812) born in Castleton, son of William and Margaret Elliot. In 1841 and 1851 he was a labourer living at Borthaugh Cottages. In 1861 he was ‘General Servant Ploughman’, living at Highchester Cottage in Robertson Parish. He married Rebecca Pow and their children included: William (b.1835); Andrew (b.1838); Gavin (b.1841); Mary (b.1843); William Bruce (b.c.1845); George (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); and James O. (b.1853). William (b.c.1815) born in Southdean Parish, he was a farm labourer. In 1851 he was visiting William Scott, farm servant at Silverbuthall. William (b.1834/5) from Langholm, he was blacksmith at Hewsbridge in Castleton Parish in 1861. He was recorded as resident at Steele Road in 1868. His wife was Jessie. William (19th C.) elder of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk in the latter part of the 19th century. William (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a cab business on Oliver Crescent around 1900. He married Ellen, daughter of James Grieve, tailor at Bonchester Bridge (formerly written ‘Mintoe’ and other variants).

Minti Bank (min’-i-bangk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish that were part of Deanfoot. It probably corresponds to the place labelled ‘Deanfoot Bank’ on modern maps (it is ‘Mintobank’ in 1780).

Minti Brae (min’-i-brā) n. name sometimes used for the road north of Denholm leading to Minto, particularly the part across the river. There was a saw mill here in the 19th century.

Minti Cleuchheid (min’-i-kloo-ch-heed) n. Minto Cleuchhead, farmstead recorded in the late 17th and early 18th centuries when it was farmed by the Turnbuls. Stepeh Turnbull was there in 1692. The house there was a home of the Earl of Minto’s family in the 20th century (also written ‘Cleughhead’ etc.).

Minti Cragfit (min’-i-krawg-fi’) n. Minto Cragfoot, former name for an area at the foot of the Crags. A story is told (in the 1820 Edinburgh Magazine and repeated in 1914 in ‘Highways and Byways in the Border’) of a mother from here having her infant swapped for a changeling by the fairies. The minister of Bedrule (Rev. Borland) was called and administered a brew of boiled foxgloves (i.e. digitalis!) to the infant, and locked it in a barn for the night, after which it apparently returned to be ‘as healthy and cheerful as it formerly was’.
Minti Crags

Minti Crags (min’-i-krawgz) n. Minto Crags, a prominent rocky outcrop overlooking the Teviot valley, just north-east of Minto village. The crags can be seen in a sketch of 1790, before the plantations of the 1st Earl of Minto covered them. They reach 224 m (729 ft) and have Fatlips Castle perched on the steep side, and Barnhills Bed below. Additionally there is some evidence for a fort in the region to the north and north-west of Fatlips; the ramparts were probably built to take advantage of the natural rock outcroppings, and have been partly obliterated by quarrelling and planting – ‘On Minto-crags the moonbeams glint, Where Barnhill hew’d his bed of flint’ [SWS], ‘. . . a short the fer seide o Teiot’s floory vale, Mintih Craigs (haappeet an rowed in their leafy maud) brennt raise ther skerrs’ [ECS] (also sometimes ‘Craigis’).

Minti Craig see min’-i-krag n. former fortified house at Minto. ‘Mynto Crag’ was burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. In 1550 it is listed as the limit of the half of the Middle Marches to which Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Warden. The farm there was known by the same name and owned by the Turnbulls in the 17th century. It may be the same as the place called ‘Minti Craigend’ and was formerly part of the farm of Minto Mill (it is labelled to the east of Minto Kirk, on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Mynto Crage’ in 1550 and ‘the Craigie of Mynto’ in 1656)

Minti Craigend see min’-i-krag-end n. former name for a farmstead near Minto Crags, and also called simply Craigend. Note that the lands called ‘Minti Craig’ were probably adjacent, but distinct. Gilbert and William Johnstone, Simon Leitch, Margaret Ord and Thomas Young were there in 1502. Thomas Porteous leased the lands in 1686. Patrick Bowie, Thomas Brown, William Cunningham, John Haliburton, Robert Minto, Walter Renwick, John Stavert, Thomas Wilkie and Robert Young were there in 1694

Minti Crags see Minti Crags

Minti East Ludge (min’-i-cest-luj) n. former lodge house for Minto estate, situated to the south of Minto Crags.

Minti Gairdens (min’-i-gar-dinz) n. road in Denholm off the Canongate, with private housing built in the 1970s.

Minti Glen (min’-i-glen) n. narrow valley around a stream passing from Minto to the Teviot, and also the name of a farm there. The glen was once laid out with walks, as part of the Minto estate and contained many planted trees, including some of the first larches to be imported into Scotland. The small lake near its head was artificially created in 1735 as part of the landscaping for Minto House.

Minti Golf Club (min’-i-golf-klub) n. golf club that runs a course near Minto village, established in 1928. It is the closest course other than the Vertish and is 5,393 yards, par 69.

Minti Hills (min’-i-hilz) n. Minto Hills, better known as the the Mintis, which are easily seen from points around Hawick. The southern peak reaches a height of 276 m (905 ft), with a triangulation pillar on top, while the northern hill is 253 m (837 ft) and topped by a cairn. This was also the name of a farm, which is recorded in 1779 being valued at £365 2d. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 it was owned by Lord Minto and liferented by the late Lord Westhall – ‘While the Minto Hills in their verdure seen Seem reflecting the light frae their mantle green’ [TC], ‘Now, the ‘ern-horse’ rins roond ahint the Mintih Hills . . . ’ [ECS] (the word ‘Minto’ probably derives from the Old Welsh for hill, ‘mynydd’ together with the Old English for hill, ‘hoh’, and hence ‘Minto Hills’ means the same thing thrice!).

Minti Hoose (min’-i-hoos) n. Minto House, former seat of the Elliots of Minto for 2 centuries. Existing from the 16th century, the house was charged for having 8 hearths in 1694, and 46 windows in 1748. It was substantially remodelled 1738–43 to a V-plan by William Adam, and essentially completed in 1809–14 by Archibald Elliot (from Ancrum). The ‘Lands round Minto House’ were valued at £72 17s 6d in 1788 and in 1811 (with the garden and nursery, and several other pieces of land listed separately). The house was altered again in 1837 by William Playfair and terraced gardens were landscaped by Sir Robert Lorimer in the period 1894–1906. In the early 19th century the village was moved so that it could not be seen from the windows of the mansion: the exact choice of location for the house has been considered puzzling, and may have been related to this. It was 4 storeys in height and the top floor contained a sort of museum, showing artefacts related to the family. A watercolour sketch of the house exists from 1792. After being abandoned by the Elliot family, the house was used in the War effort, then rented to serve as the location of a private girl’s school, Craigmount School from 1952 until 1962. The school then purchased the house, but went into liquidation in 1966 and the house became derelict. In 1972 Viscount Melgund (later Earl of Minto) outbid another purchaser and immediately applied for permission to demolish this listed building, which was finally given by the County Council. It was partially demolished in 1973, becoming a roofless shell, and there followed lengthy debate about its fate. There was a plan in 1991 to dismantle the remaining walls and ship them to Japan, stone by stone, although costs proved prohibitive. Demolition re-started in 1992, including burning of internal timbers, despite being relisted category ‘A’, and there is now little left. This episode is sometimes referred to as the ‘Minto Debacle’, and influenced subsequent policies on preserving historical buildings in Scotland. The grounds contain the remains of a Norman church and burial enclosure, as well as the golf course. There were other buildings associated with the mansion and school, including a residential building, stable (later gymnasium), cottage (used for laundry) and dairy.

Minti Kames (min‘-i-kāṃz) n. Minti Kames, farm just north of the Minto Hills, adjacent to the old railway line. It is probably the ‘Place of Camys’ referred to in 1502, when Peter Turnbull and other Turnbull outlaws were accused of stealing oxen, cows, horses and mares from John Grahamslaw there. John Young ‘in the Cames’ in Minto Parish was hanged for murder in 1580. ‘Dand’ Davidson in ‘Kames’ is recorded in 1580/1. David Davidson ‘of the Kaims’ was recorded in 1601 when he was maimed in Jedburgh in a fight than was part of the feud between the Turnbulls of the Minto area and the Kers. ‘Kaines and Minto hills’ were owned by Scott of Harden and farmed by William Mather in the late 17th century. William Douglas was ‘late tenant’ in 1743. In 1779 the lands were part of the Minto estate, valued at £219 2d and liferented by Sir John Dalrymple. The farm was owned by Lord Minto according to the 1811 Land Tax Roll. John Turnbull was farmer there in 1797 when he had 12 horses. John Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and David Brockie in 1861. Crop marks visible from the air in a field to the north-west may be old boundaries and rig lines. There is a bridge to the farm, over the former railway line, another over the line near Kames North Loch, and one more for a track to the south. To the north-west of Kames South Loch is a field with signs of an ancient enclosure (it is ‘Kamys’ in 1576, ‘the Kamis’ in 1601 and ‘Kaims’ in 1811; probably the same place is marked ‘Keems’ and ‘Kenner’ on Blaeu’s 1654 maps, and although not exactly in the right location this appears to be a transcription error from Blaeu’s 1590s manuscript that shows ‘M. Keams.’; it is written ‘Kaines’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; see also Kames Moss).

Minti Kirk (min‘-i-kīrk) n. Minto Parish Church, the present one replacing a much earlier building, dating back to at least 1275. This is when the Rectory is listed on Bagimont’s Roll, with a value of 4s. 4d. The remains of this Norman Church, on the grounds of the Minto estate, contain a burial enclosure with some ancient stones and a set of iron neck-rings set in the doorway. There are many gravestones from the 17th and 18th centuries, and part of a child’s stone coffin, probably from the 13th or 14th century. ‘Serlo’ was parson there when he witnessed a grant by daughter of the Baron of Minto in about the period 1230–60. William Woodburn may have been a Parson there who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The church was mentioned in ratifications of other churches being connected to Melrose Abbey in 1315. There is a curious charter of Edward III in 1374, which states that the church was then in the diocese of Lincoln. The old church was demolished in 1831, and it is said that at that time a collection of about 400 small silver coins (from the 13th and 14th century) were discovered. The current Gothic-style church was constructed 1830–31 by William Playfair, and built on the road through the village. When built, there was a private gallery for the family of the Earl of Minto. It has a square tower, contains an organ presented by the Countess of Minto in 1880 and was renovated in 1934. The standard of the Blues and Royals Household Cavalry Regiment was laid there in 2004 in memory of Alexander Tweedie, the first Borderer to be killed in the Iraq conflict. Nearby is the Thomas Clapperton War Memorial. The Manse was built at the same time in a Tuscan villa style, and later called Melgund Glen (an earlier Manse was taxed for 18 windows in 1748). When the new church was built the old churchyard was converted into a garden on the Minto estate, much admired in the 19th century. The church was linked with Ancrum 1862–76 and then with Denholm and Bedrule in 1976. In 2003 it was linked, along with Denholm and Bedrule, into a wider area called Ruberslaw, which was then extended to include Hobkirk and Southdean. The oldest surviving communion token is a large lead oblong shape, bearing the letters ‘M.K.’ and probably from the 17th century. In 1838 the minister describes 2 artefacts founds nearby, which may date to the period of monastic connection: a large silver hoop, inscribed ‘IHESES NA’ (possibly Jesus of Nazareth) and cross shapes; and an ancient copper seal inscribed ‘S ADEN PASTOREL’, along with a primitive lamb. A roll of the ministry is: Serlo, mid-13th C.; William Woodburn, 1296; John Blackadder, Rector in 1463; Patrick Mason, Rector in 1483; George Panter, Rector from 1512; Walter Stewart, Rector at least 1542–44; John Turnbull, Clerk 1559; David Turnbull, 1569; William McGowen, Parson 1574–76 (and perhaps to 1585); Edward Dickson, Reader 1576–78; Robert Hamilton, Reader 1579; Patrick Bishop 1589–c.90; John Mather 1601–02; James Johnstone 1607–08; Adam Scott 1608–12; Samuel Cockburn 1609–c.24; William Wishart, assistant 1613–18; William Maxwell 1625–51; James Ainslie 1652–62; Francis Scott 1664–78; James Kirkwood 1679–81; William Wishart 1682–90; James Ainslie 1690–1702; Walter Ainslie 1698–1700; John Ritchie 1703–44; George Kay, assistant 1741–43; George Bruce 1745–66; Thomas Somerville 1767–73; William Burn 1774–1826; David Aitken 1827–64; J.P. Macmorland 1865–93; Alexander Galloway 1878–1926; George O. Mackenzie 1927–35; John Pollock 1936–56; Ian B. MacCalman 1956–67; Peter B. Gunn 1968–76; James F. Falconer 1976–77; John T. Stuart 1978–84; Moira Herkes 1985–88; Thomas Preston 1989–92.

Minti Manse (min’i-mawns) n. former manse for the Parish of Minto. The Manse was taxed for having 5 hearths in 1694 and 18 windows in 1748. A new site for the Manse was selected in 1772 and the building erected in 1773 for the incoming minister, Rev. William Burn. Lady Minto referred to it as a ‘long, low, ugly building, which it was necessary to conceal as much as possible’, and hence it was surrounded by trees. A new Manse was built 1827–9 in a Tuscan villa style, at the same time as other improvements were made to the estate; this was later known as Melgund Glen. The older building was pulled down 1830/1.

Minti Mill (min’i-mil) n. former farm near Minto, site of the local corn mill. William Brown was tenant there in 1684. This was an earlier name for lands that were included in 1779 along with Craigend in the part of Minto liferent to Sir John Stewart of Allanshaws. It is possible that this was essentially the same location as the earlier farm of Minto Mill. The 1811 Land ‘Tax Rolls lists ‘Mill Banks’, ‘Mill Haugh’ and related lands lying near to Craigend.

Minti Muir Parks (min’i-mewr-pawrks) n. former name for a set of lands in Minto Parish. In 1779 they were liferented to Sir John Dalrymple when valued at £127 15s 1d. They were listed separately from Mintu Muir and described as ‘four inclosures’ bounded by the farm of Minto Hills, the road from Hassendean to Troneyhill, the road from Lilliesleaf to Jedburgh, the lands of Crowsmoss and Walrigpark, the road from Hawick to St. Boswell’s, the farm of Newlands and the lands of Hassendean. In 1811 the lands were owned by Lord Minto.

Minti North Ludge (min’i-north-luj) n. former lodge house for Minto estate, situated at a turn in the road, between Hillend and Standhill. The adjacent plantation is called the North Lodge Strip. One roofed building, an unroofed building and an enclosure are marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Minti Pairish (min’i-pa-reesh) n. small parish of Minto, consisting of the villages of Minto and Hassendean and adjacent areas, being bordered by Lilliesleaf, Ancrum, Bedrule, Cavers and Wilton Parishes and part of Selkirkshire. It once coincided with the boundaries of the Barony of Minto, but later included a large part of the suppressed parish of Hassendean. The topography is dominated by the Minto Hills and Minto Crags. In 1643 the lands were valued at £2768 13s 4d and there were only 5 owners: John Turnbull, William Turnbull and Elizabeth Elliot for Minto; Turnbull of Tofts; and Gilbert Elliot for Craigend and Deanfoot. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £2400. In 1663 the land tax on more than £2100 was paid by the Laird of Minto (probably still John Turnbull) and £660 by Gilbert Elliot. The value was the same in 1688, when the entire Parish was owned by 2 Gilbert Elliths, one being the Laird of Minto and the other the Laird of Craigend. In the mid-19th century the parish had a reputation for having no paupers, no toll-bars and no public houses. In 1838 the minister wrote that education was eroding the local language and that ‘it is not improbably, that, ere long, the ancient dialect of the district, which has several interesting peculiarities, may become, in a great measure, extinct.’ The existing parish registers begin in 1703, and are fairly complete for births. However, no register of deaths was kept until more recent times, and marriages were only recorded through the reading of the banns, with some significant gaps.

Minti Place (min’-i-plis) n. Minto Place, a street in the Wellogate on the opposite side of the street from Glebe View. It was built in 1875 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company and named after Gilbert John Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 4th Earl of Minto. The upper houses were originally named Glebe Terrace until 1882.

Minti pump (min’-i-pump) n. water pump at the main road junction in Minto village. It dates from about 1860 and was restored in 2020.

the Minti Road (th-min’-rød) n. street in Denholm leading out of the village towards Minto, being part of the B6405.

the Mintis (thu-min’-iz, min-tiz) n. the Minto Hills, twin hills near Minto, a distinctive feature of the landscape north-east of Hawick. The hills are formed of igneous rocks, like many of the higher peaks in the area; it is belived that they are the eroded remains of a paired volcanic vent. The southern hill has a triangulation marker and reaches 276 m, the other reaches 253 m and is topped by a cairn. The summit of the southern hill has the faint remains of a former fort, about 120 m by 75 m in size, with an entrance on the west side. The cairn on the summit of the north hill is about 10 m in diameter, flat-topped, and has some large kerb-stones around it. Around the lower slopes of the hills are extensive remains of rig, terraces and other signs of earlier cultivation – ‘The scenes round Denholm, they are rich indeed; With Minto hills and crags what can compare? And Ruberslaw, whose high majestic head Towers upward, like the lark, till lost in air’ [TCh] (see also Minti Hills).

Minti Schuil (min’-i-skil) n. schoolhouse in Minto, serving the surrounding area. It was probably established in the early 17th century. John Davidson was recorded as schoolmaster there in 1616 and James Learmonth in 1624 and 1625. Walter Elliot was schoolmaster there in the 1720s and early 1730s. A Mr. Watson was master until about 1784 and George Scott from around then until the 1820s. They were followed by William Watson, who gave the school a strong reputation, with several students boarding there from outside the Parish. Mr. Wylie took over as schoolmaster about 1840 and John R. Hamilton was teacher in the 1850s and 60s. The teacher normally served as Clerk to the Heritors and Session Clerk for the Parish. In the early 19th century there was also a small school teaching younger children and instructing girls in sewing. The Borders Archive has School Board documents for 1873–1916, registers for 1915–63 and log books for 1874–1963.

the Minti Stakes (th-min’-i-stāks) n. former Friday Common Riding race, started at least as early as the 1880s.

the Minti Stane (min’-i-stān) n. inscribed stone on the Minto estate, coming from near the town of Malang in East Java, also called the Sangguran Stone. It was carved in the year 982, and carries a long inscription to the Javanese King Sri Maharaja Rakai Pangkaja Dyah Wawa Sri Wijaya-lokanamottungi. It was collected in 1812 by Sir Stamford Raffles and given as a gift to Lord Minto, who had it sent to his home in Scotland.

Minti Toon (min’-i-too’n) n. former name for an area in Minto Parish, presumably around the old home farm of the Baron. It is listed among the lands of ‘Minto Townhead’ that were liferented by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779.

Minti Toonheid (min’-i-too’n-heed) n. farm at the northern end of Minto village. In the early 19th century it was farmed by the Turnbulls, with William Turnbull there in the 1860s. Robert Watson was farmer in the early 20th century. In 1779 Rev. William Elliot (brother of the Laird of Minto) was granted liferent of these lands. They are described as consisting of South Croft, North Croft, Quicksands Park, Notman’s Shot, Langlands, Templecroft, Howden, Whitfield, West South Croft, Minto Town and the green of Minto, ‘which pieces of ground were some time ago known by the name of Minto Townhead’. The lands were valued at £461 1s 10d. The boundaries of the lands were the Minto-to-Hawick road, Minto Glebe, the march ‘which runs through Howden syke’, the foot of Minto Hill, Hilrends Park, Towledge Park, Cow Park and the lawn around Minto House.

Minti Toor (min’-i-toor, -tow-ur) n. another name for Fatlips Castle.

Minti West Ludge (min’-i-west-luj) n. former lodge house for the Minto estate, situated south of the village, by the modern entrance to the golf club.

Minti Wuds (min’-i-wudz) n. wooded area near Minto – ‘Sine off we’d hie tae Minto Woods For blaebberries and slaes’ [WLu].

Minto see Minti

- Walter Scott of Todrik the sum of £100 scots in his necessitie and mister’ [SPB1579].

- Mrs., respectful term for an older woman – ‘is the mistress o the hoose hym?’ (note the full pronunciation was once common, unlike in the English mi-stus).

- to fail to keep an appointment.

- Hugh (18th/19th C.) wood merchant of Fisherrow (Musselburgh), who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1813. He was probably the ‘Hugh Mitchell, Burntisland’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1811. He is probably the same James who married Ann Murray in Wilton in 1805, and whose children included: Jean (b.1808); and Thomas (b.1809).

- James (17th C.) resident of Eves Parish. He married Jean Beattie and their children included: Janet (b.1756); Thomas (b.1758); Jean (b.1760); and James (b.1763). The witnesses in 1758 were Andrew Lamb and John Elliot.

- John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Liddel Bank in 1797, when he was working for William Oliver. Robert ‘Bob’ (b.1780/1) Hawick’s first milkman, operating from Southfield, formerly ostler of the Tower Hotel. On one famous occasion, in a snowstorm in 1831, he brought back the Carlisle mail on foot after abandoning his horse at Teviothead. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men who in 1530 swore that William Scott of Harden did not owe more than a merk to the deceased Stephen Lauder. William (17th/18th C.) baxter in Hawick. In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Andrew Turnbull. He could be the William who married Marion Laidlaw in Hawick in 1718. William (18th C.) resident of Denholm in 1780. Probably the same William was recorded as miller at Denholm Mill in 1785. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included William (b.1780) and James (b.1785) (also Mitchell).

- Alexander (b.1828/9) born in Selkirk, he was a butcher on Silver Street. He is listed on Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 4 Silver Street and in 1861 he was on the Round Close. Probably the same Alexander was President of the Common Riding (Race) Committee in 1856, when the Cornet elected by the Council refused to accept the offer. He married Margaret Laidlaw. Their children included: Isabella (b.c.1851); Violet (b.c.1853);
William (b.1856); Agnes (b.1859); Margaret Anderson (b.1860); Alexander (b.1862); and Janet Laidlaw (b.1864). Andrew (19th C.) tailor on the Howegate, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. Charles (19th C.) listed as miller at New Mill on Slitrig in Slater’s 1852 directory. George (d.1957) Director of Pringle’s of Scotland from 1937. Henry (b.1825/6) son of tailor James, he himself was a tailor at 8 Howegate. He was at 8 Howegate in 1861 until at least 1881. He married Anne Millington and their children included Anne, Margaret, James, Thomas, Henry (b.1856), Robert (b.1858), Mary (b.1860), David (b.1864), Agnes (b.1863), George (b.1867), Agnes (again, b.1870) and George (again, b.1872). Henry (d.1960) joined Craig’s Aerated Waters in the 1920, becoming manager. In 1948 he put in an offer for the firm, but was outbid by the Scottish Co-operative Wholesale Society. However, he remained as manager until his death. His son, also Henry, then carried on as manager. Henry son of Henry. Like his father he worked for what had been Craig’s Aerated Waters at 22 Buccleuch Street. He took over as manager in 1960, but production of sodas ceased soon after. James (c.1785-1850) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. He married Ann Murray (b.1788) in Wilton in 1805. In 1841 he was living on the High Street (about No. 12) with his wife and 3 children. He must have been deceased by 1851, when his wife was living with his son. His children were: Ann (b.c.1820); Henry (b.1825/6), a tailor on the Howegate; and James (b.1830), who emigrated to Canada. He could be the James, son of William, born in Cavers Parish in 1785. James (18th/19th C.) listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as running an eating house on the Howegate. James (1830–1914) born in Hawick, son of High Street tailor James. He was employed as a weaver, and still living with his brother and mother on the Howegate in 1851. He emigrated to Canada in 1854, arriving in Galt, then moving to Guelph before moving to Manitoba, settling in Arrow River in 1882. He homesteaded, also serving as ferryman across the Assiniboine River. He invented a new kind of lifeboat, patented in 1898 and exhibited in Europe in 1909 (when he also returned for a visit to Hawick). He married Janet Bell Waugh (1836–1920), who came from Moffat and they had several children. John (1810/11–81) real name of the man who inspired ‘Heather Jock’ in the song ‘Kinly Stick’. He was a native of Hexham, who came to Hawick at age 16; it is said that he walked all the way in order to find work. He was well known in Town for the next 50 years. He was a wrestler and runner in his youth. He worked in the hosiery industry, but mainly made a living at poaching, as well as by gathering cresses, labouring, etc. He was also in the Grenadier Guards for a while, but deserted. In 1841 he was living at 4 Silver Street, then around Punch Bowl Close in 1851, and is listed as a railway labourer on Dickson Street. He was living at 9 Kirk Wynd in 1871. It seems that he became a wanderer, collecting moss and sleeping rough (hence his nickname). Adie Ingles suggests that he may have spent some time in Australia, and returned whistling the tune of ‘Click Go the Shears’, but there is no evidence to support this. In 1874 he was rescued from the Teviot ‘having been inibbing of his favourite beverage rather freely. In 1841 he married Elizabeth Lamb in Hawick. Their children included Adam, Janet, Benjamin, John and James. He died of tetanus in Jethart Jail – ‘Crane-like he watched the purling streams, And for a crust would gather bones; Of statute laws he’s broken more Than ere he broke of hard whin stones’ [TCh]. Peter (17th/18th C.) mason in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1710 for carrier David Wilson and for younger carrier William Aitken. In 1705 in Edinburgh he married Agnes Guild, servant to merchant and Burgess of Edinburgh, David Weems; his name is recorded there as ‘Patrick’. Their children included: Anna (b.1706); James (b.1708); John (b.1708); and Jean (b.1712). The witnesses in 1706 were masons John Napier and John Turnbull, in 1708 were merchant Walter Weens and mason John Napier and in 1712 were masons John Turnbull and Nichol Turnbull. Rev. Robert (1826–93) from Auchterarder, he probably attended Edinburgh University. He came to Hawick as a guest preacher at the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Church towards the end of 1849, a few weeks later accepted the ‘call’ to the church, and was inducted early in 1850. He preached 3 sermons every Sunday, as well as in the open air on street corners and around the countryside. He also carried out a vigorous correspondence about evangelism in the Hawick Advertiser. He turned down one call to another church, but left suddenly in 1864 to become assistant to Dr. Morrison at Dundas Street Church, Glasgow. He was later minister at Queen’s Park, Manchester, St. John’s Wood Terrace, Middlesex, Chorton-cum-Hardy.
Lancashire, Elgin Brook, Hertfordshire and Nelson Street, Greenock. Robert (1848–1928) born in Kinross, Perthshire, he spent his early years in Gala, ran away from home at age 14 and was a glazier's apprentice in Edinburgh. He began a glaziers business in Hawick in about 1873, and certainly by 1875; this would become the longest established glazing business in Scotland. He was a Councillor for North High Street Ward from 1884, was a Magistrate for 9 years, Provost 1896–1902, and returned to the Council 1919–23. He was also appointed Honorary Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire. His Provostship saw the erection of the Public Library, re-laying of the pavements and the letting of the Haugh as a show-ground at the Common Riding. He was an early advocate for electric lighting, Chairman of the Hawick School Board and a Common Riding supporter. Liberal in politics, he was a Mason and an Orrack Church elder. His business on Oliver Crescent can be seen in a photograph from the early 1900s. The glazing business was continued by his son Alexander. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery (formerly ‘Mitchil’ etc.; see also Mitchel).

Mitchellhill (mi-chul-hil) n. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Nancy Harkness. Their son Thomas was baptised in 1747. He may be the Alexander recorded as owner of 2 work horses, along with George, in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the deceased Alexander whose son George died in 1822, aged 76. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (b.1771) son of George and Margaret Noble. He was a local character of the early 1800s, described as ‘the smuggler’, possibly the local labourer who died in 1850. A story is told about him and his father (or possibly an Alexander Mitchell, rather than Mitchellhill), resting in a hay-loft near the Carter Bar Toll. They hid their smuggled gin when they saw the excisemen coming, but then in the dark fought with each other, his father biting his leg, saying ‘A’ve left the marks o’ ma teeth on yin o’ their legs at ony rate!’ and him replying ‘It was me ye bate, faither! Was aw no guigame no te squeel?’ He is recorded on the Fore Raw in 1841, along with wife Agnes. He married Agnes Scott and their children included George (b.1807) and Mary (d.1808). Andrew (1818–78) son of Thomas and Janet Thompson, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was an innkeeper in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was innkeeper at about 45 North Hermitage Street. In 1861 he is recorded as ‘Proprietor of Houses’ at about 8 North Hermitage Street. He was on the Town Committee of Management. In 1857 he married Agnes, daughter of farmer William Kyle. Their children included: William (1859–1938), a mason; Thomas (b.1857); and Janet (1865–77). George (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax roll in Hawick in 1791. He was listed in Hawick along with Alexander as owners of 2 work horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the George who married Margaret Noble (who died in 1808) and whose children included: Alexander (b.1771); James (b.1773); and Mary (b.1777). He is probably the George, son of the deceased Alexander, who died in 1822, aged 76. Henry (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1690 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott. He married Isobel Robson and their children included John (b.1689). He may have witnessed a baptism in 1691 for Robert. Henry (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craikshiel in 1726 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Henry (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1757. His children included: Margaret (b.1748); John (b.1750); Janet (b.1752); Janet (b.1754); Helen (b.1757); and William (b.1760). Henry (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was at West Burnfoot in 1744. He married Margaret Thomson and their children included: Isabel (b.1744); William (b.1746); Thomas (b.1749); Henry (b.1750); Catherine (b.1753); and Helen (b.1755). J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably closely related to Robert, who also subscribed. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1776 he married Margaret Scott, who was from Jedburgh Parish. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. 2 unnamed children of his died in 1810. James (b.1809) son of Thomas and Janet Thomson. He was innkeeper of the Black Bull on North Hermitage Street in Newcastleton in 1851, living with his sister Jane and Brother Andrew. He was also listed there in 1852. Jane (b.1815) daughter of Thomas and Janet Thomson and brother of James. She married William Nichol, but was already a widow by 1851. She had children Mary Anne, Thomas and Betty. She was living with her innkeeper brother on North Hermitage Street in Newcastleton in 1951, but by 1861 was innkeeper herself. Her inn was at about 45 North Hermitage Street, and called the Black Bull. Jenny (18th/19th C.) recorded in the story of the disputed Common Riding of 1809. A bucketful of material from her byre was used to pelt Captain Campbell and others of the ‘royalist’ party as they rode up the Loan. She was presumably the wife of a man with fields up the Loan. John (16th C.) notary in 1528 to an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, signed at Selkirk. Other witnesses included the Vicars of Selkirk and Hawick. Probably the same ‘sir John’ witnessed a document in 1530 for Robert Turnbull of Philiphaugh and was recorded as a chaplain when he witnessed a document related to an action against Patrick Murray of Falahill. He was recorded as ‘sir’ in 1532 when he held a tenement in Selkirk and in 1535 when he witnessed a document for Walter Scott of Roberton. He also witnessed an agreement in 1536 between Richard Bothwell, Parson of Ashkirk, and Simon Shortreed, Vicar of Ashkirk. In 1539 he was notary for an instrument among Scots, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott. In 1540 he witnessed an agreement between Katherine Scott of Colifort and John Cranston of that Ilk. John (18th C.) resident at Penchrise. He probably married Janet Blaikie in Cavers Parish in 1734. His son John was baptised in 1734. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He married Margaret Allan and their children included Thomas (b.1691) and Robert (b.1696). The witnesses in 1691 were hard to read (perhaps Thomas and Henry Mitchellhill). Robert (d.bef. 1766) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Girnwood in 1757 and Elrig in 1764. His widow was recorded at Chisholme in 1766 when his last child was born posthumously. His children included Isobel (b.1755), William (b.1757), Robert (b.1759), Thomas (b.1761), James (b.1764) and John (b.1766). Robert (1782/3–1858) from Selkirk, he was a farmer and carter in Newcastleton. He was probably the Mitchellhill listed as ‘R., Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a carter in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Douglas Square. He emigrated to Galt, Ontario, where he died. He married Margaret Murray, who died in 1882, aged 94. Their children included: Thomas (1810/1–24); Robert (1818/9–42); Jane (b.1823/4); July; and Margaret (1830/1–43). Robert (b.1873/4) from Jedburgh, he was an agricultural labourer in Denholm in 1841. By 1851 he was listed as a pensioner at ‘Guide Post’ cottages at Spittal-on-Rule. His wife was Margaret and their children included: Mary (b.1831/2); Isabel (b.1834/5); Robert (b.c.1836); William (b.1837/8); and Agnes (b.1840/1). Thomas (d.bef. 1820) who was running the inn in 1841.

William (17th/18th C.) recorded as servitor to William Ogilvie in Branzholme. In 1719 he was recorded as ‘workman in Branxholm’ and ‘servant’ to Walter Scott. William (18th/19th C.) working man from the Newmill area, who set up a Sunday School there along with James Ruickie. He could be related to the earlier William from Branzholme Town. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1774 for James Easton from Branzholme and in 1773 and 1776 for Thomas Rutherford from Branzholme. He may be the William who married Helen Murray and whose children included Agnes (b.1775), Helen (b.1777) and Margaret Helen (b.1781). The witnesses in 1777 were the whole congregation. William (1859–1938) son of Andrew and Agnes Kyle, he was born in Castleton. He worked as a mason. He married Isabella Bell and their son William (1898–1918) died of wounds in France (also written ‘Mitchelhill’ and ‘Mitchellhill’; sometimes formerly recorded as just ‘Mitchill’).

Mitchell’s Ford (mi-chulz-fórd) n. former ford across the Teviot, situated a little south of a line joining Midshields with Eastcote (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mitchell’s Gless (mi-chulz-gles) n. Mitchell Glass, glazier’s based in Hawick. It was founded by Robert Mitchell in about 1873 and became the oldest established glaziers in Scotland. The firm was continued by Robert’s son Alexander, and then by the Fisher family.

Mitchell’s Slack

Mitchell’s Slack (mi-chulz-shawk) n. former name of a hollow near Southfield, said to have been a place where Covenanters held secret sermons in the 17th century. It is also known as ‘Mitchell’s Hole’. The name is said to have been given to commemorate Covenanter James Mitchell (even although there was no direct connection to him), who tried to assassinate Archbishop Sharp in 1668, and was executed in 1678.

Mitchels (mi-chulz) n. former farm, possibly near Bryery-yards. It is recorded (as ‘Mitchels’) among the lands transferred from Hassendean Parish to Wilton in 1690.

Mitchel’s (mi-chulz) n. former carrier’s business. In the early 19th century they travelled twice a week, both ways, between Hawick and Carlisle.

Mitchelson (mi-chul-sin) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Andrew Michelson’, when David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirches had a remission for a raid on lands at Blackhall (or Blackhaugh) tenanted by him and John ‘Spedane’. It is unclear whether this was in Rulewater or Ewesdale or elsewhere. George (17th C.) tenant at Sorbietrees in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records.

Rev. James (d.1625) brother of John of Middle-ton, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1605 and became minister at Hassendean in 1611. He was translated to Bathans (Yester) in 1613 and was a member of the Assembly in 1618. He married Euphame Borthwick (who died in 1627) and their children were John, Margaret, William married Eupham Borthwick (who died in 1627) and was a member of the Assembly in 1618. He married Euphame Borthwick (who died in 1627) and their children were John, Margaret, William and James.

John (15th/16th C.) recorded as resident of Oakwood in 1502 when Alexander Scott had remission for stealing a horse from him. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as resident of the lands of Castleton. Thomas (d.bef. 1696) probably farmer in the lower Borthwick valley. In 1696 his widow, a Riddell whose first name is not given, was renting half of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch. Her cautioner was Robert Scott (also farmer at Wiltonburn), suggesting a close relationship. Note that in 1694 1/3 of Wiltonburn was being rented by Bessie Scott, widow of James Riddell, who seems likely to have been related to his wife. William (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694 (also spelled ‘Michelson’, ‘Mitchelsone’ and ‘Mitchellsone’).

Mithag (mi-thag) n. Alan of Hartwoodburn (16th C.) recorded in 1539/40 when he had a commission from the Dean of Jedburgh regarding a slander brought against him about stealing and eating some sheep. The list of friends who would support him included Thomas Elliot, Mark Ker in Kippielaw, William Scott in Hart-woodmyres, Walter Scott in Headshaw, Thomas Lauder, John Chisholme, David Todrig, Ninian Brydon and David Mithag. There were several other men with this same surname in Selkirk at that time (the pronunciation is unclear).

Modrell (məʊd-ˈrel) n. Mungo (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Hassendeanbank. His surname could be a transcription error for some more familiar name.

Moffat (moʊ-ˈfæt) n. town about 40 miles to the west of Hawick, in the south-eastern part of Dumfries & Galloway. Receiving Burgh of Barony status only in 1648, it developed as a market town on the main west-coast routes to Glasgow and Edinburgh. Centrepiece of the town is the magnificent Moffat Ram statue. The nearby sulphurous spring was popular for its purported health benefits in the 18th and 19th centuries. Population 2,342 (1991) – ‘’Tweeen Moffat hills and lofty Cheviot’ [JH].

Moffat (moʊ-ˈfæt) n. Adam (17th C.) piper who was rebuked by Ashkirk Session in 1638 for ‘pyping at bridals’. He was ordered to appear at the Kirk door wrapped in sheets, with bare feet and legs, and ‘after the pepil was in, to go to the place of repentance, and so to continue Sabbathlie inuring their wills’. Arthur (b.1803/4) from Tundergarth, he was farmer at Leahaugh Cottage in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he is recorded there as farmer of 6 acres. His wife was Janet and their children included Jane, Walter, Janet, Margaret, James and Helen Agnes. David (16th C.) recorded in Synton in 1581 when he was witness to an agreement between Margaret, widow of William Scott of Burnfoot and her son William. George (18th C.) listed as footman at Synton in 1792, when he was working for Charles Riddell. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1789 he married Isabella Murray. James (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when the Coroner, William Cranston, was fined for failing to arrest him. His name is given as ‘Jacobo moffet’ in Holydean or Nisbet. James (17th C.) leased part of the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1693. James (1720/1–1779) son of James, from whom he took over as tenant of Howpasley farm. In 1744 he moved to Garwald in Dumfriesshire, rented from the Duke of Buccleuch. He also farmed at Meikleholm for a while. He married Margaret Borthwick (1732/3–1806). His children included: John (1772–1823), who took over as farmer at Garwald; William (1773–1847), who farmed at Mosspeebie and Craik; and Margaret (1762/3–1855), who married Rev. Dr. William Brown of Eskdalemuir, and died in Hawick. James (1811–76) elder son of William. He and his brother James helped their father farm at Craik, as well as Garwald over in Dumfriesshire. John (1677/8–1728) tenant at Howpasley. He was said to be descended from Thomas, who received a grant of lands in Meggat in the 14th century. He was recorded at Howpasley in the baptismal records of most of his children in Roberton Parish. He married Helen Borthwick (1677/8–1754). He was succeeded at Howpasley by his son James (1721–79, baptised in Roberton) and had 7 other children, including Janet, Mary and Euphemia (1708/9–97). Other children baptised in Roberton who were probably his include Margaret (b.1716), Elspeth (b.1718), Margaret (again, b.1721) and Bettie (b.1722). He was buried at Watcarrick Churchyard. John (1813–82) son of William. He helped his father and brother James farm at Craik and Garwald. He was still tenant farmer at Craik in the 1870s. He married Anne Laidlaw (d.1915) and their children included: William (1864–1932); James (d.1941), who married Janet Robina Brydon; and Anne (d.1853). Their children included: John (b.1883), born in Canonbie; Mary (b.1889), born in Hawick; Peter (1890–1968), born at Branxholme Park; Janet (b.1892), born at Branxholme Park; and Margaret (b.1894), born in Hawick. His wife may be the Elizabeth McInnes who wrote the poem ‘A Legend of Hawick’. Nicholas (d.1270) Archdeacon of Teviotdale in the period 1245–70, referred to as being ‘de Moffat’. He witnessed a charter for Soutra Hospital in 1255. He was bishop-elect of Glasgow twice, the first time (1259) travelling to Rome, but failing to be consecrated (probably because of political infighting among his travelling companions) and the second time (1268–70) because he died before consecration. He was buried at Tyningham, East Lothian. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Tait, who was from Yarrow Parish. Their children included John (b.1654) and Janet (b.1656). The witnesses in 1656 were ‘John . . .’ and ‘Robert . . .’. Robert of Hermiston (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear where he came from, or how long he owned these local lands. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craikhope in 1723, 1726, 1728 and 1736. His children included: Helen (b.1723); Helen (again, b.1726); Margaret (b.1728); Mary (b.1730); John (b.1736); and William (b.1741). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Deanfoot in 1777 when his son William was baptised. William (1773–1847) son of James, tenant farmer at Garwald in Dumfriesshire, and formerly at Howpasley. He became tenant at Mosspeebie in 1800 and then Craik in 1817. He was joint tenant there with his sons John and James from 1833. In addition he ran the farm at Garwald after the death of his older brother John in 1823. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jane Grieve. His sons James (1811–76) and John (1813–82) continued to farm after him. He also had 1 other son and 6 daughters. William (1864–1932) born at Craik farm, he took over Garwald when he reached the age of 21. He became known as a sheep judge, as well as a pursuer of country sports. In 1911 he bought the farm of Georgefield and Glendinning, and later purchased the farm of Garwald, which the family had long tenanted. He married Alison Gray and their children included: John (b.1892), who sold Georgefield and Glendinning in 1947; Mary; Anne; and Alexander Gray (b.1905), who sold Garwald in 1950 (also formerly ‘Moffet’). Moffat Well (mo-fi-wel) n. sulphurous spring near Moffat, once believed to have healing powers. There are notices in Hawick’s 18th century parish records of disbursements to help sick people travel there. It was discovered in 1633 and access improved in 1758. It was a draw for visitors until the 1920s.

moggans (mo-ginz) n., pl., arch. the legs (noted by J. Jamieson).

Moinnet (moi-net) n. James (15th C.) witness to the charter of 1494 in which James of Kirkurd granted the lands of Galalaw to his son David. It is unclear whether his surname has a modern equivalent.

moistify (moi-sti-fl) v., poet. to moisten – ‘Where ye will get a whisky soss To moistify your middle’ [JR].

mole-catcher (môl-kaw-chur) n., arch. someone earning their living from catching moles. From medieval times until the mid-20th century this was a common occupation in rural areas. There were at least a couple employed in Denholm alone around 1900.
mole-heid

mole-heid (möl-heed) n., arch. a mole-head, dolt, stupid person – ‘Dogsrabbit it, what’s keepit ye, ye lazy molehead?’ [WNK], ‘Hae dune, ye molehead, Wilton Kirk’s comin’ over Teiot Brig’ [RM].

Moll (mol) n. horse owned by William Nixon, and rode by him when he was Cornet in 1813. It was also known as ‘Molly’. In later years it was often seen with Nixon’s groom, Wullie Bulloch, who doted over it. The pair were painted together by Adam Brown.

Molle (mol, now) n. former parish, forming what is now the southernmost part of Morebattle, which was united with Morebattle in the 17th century. It was owned by Eschina de Londonis (or de Molle) in the mid-12th century, and part of it was gifted to Kelso Abbey around 1190. Some of the lands there were also held by the Lovel family. The lands were also briefly owned by Adam of Rule, through his wife Johanna. They later passed to the Kers. Liulf, son of Uchtred, Lord of Mow, was a witness to the charter of about 1120 founding Selkirk Abbey. The Molle family married into the families of Avenel, Maleverer, de Lincoln, de Vesci, Scott and others, and tracing their lineage is difficult. The names Mow Hope, Mow Kirk (granted before 1152 to Kelso Abbey by Uchtred son of Liulf) and Mow Stell are lost, but it survives in Mowhaugh on the Bowmont Water. Members of the eponymous family crop up in local documents, e.g., ‘William Mow in Mowmaynis’ was part of inquest for lands in Rulewater in 1610 (also spelled ‘Mow’ and variants; the name probably comes from the Old Welsh ‘mael’ for ‘bare hill’, and is first recorded in the mid-12th century).

Molle (mol) n. Anselm (12th C.) formerly of Whiton, he gained part of the lands at Molle, granted in a charter during the reign of William I (probably 1170–90), which was witnessed by Roger, son of ‘John de Hawic’, as well as Robert of Wilton and Adam of Ashkirk; this was one of the first mentions of anyone who came from Hawick. His son Richard was also a witness. In about 1193 he granted lands of Molle (or Mow) to Kelso Abbey and later had a dispute with Kelso Abbey over teinds at Molle. His relationship with Eschina is unclear (it may be that they held different parts of the lands of Molle and were unrelated). His name may also have been written ‘Ansold’. His wife was Agnes. His daughter Isolda married Alexander and had a part of Molle in the early 1200s, while his main heiress was Matilda, who married Richard de Lincoln. He was ancestor of the family of Mow of that Ilk. Eschina also ‘Eschyne’ (12th/13th C.) daughter of Thomas de Londonis (who held the office of Doorward under William the Lion, and his ancestors took the name of Dorward) and Eschelyn (daughter of Uchtred de Molle), she was also known as ‘Eschina de Londonis’. In some accounts her father is given as Uchtred, son of Liulf. She was born in Roxburghshire and held lands at Huntlaw and Molle on the Bowmont Water. She may have first married Robert ‘de Croc’. She married Walter Fitz Alan, 1st High Steward of Scotland, who held ‘Mow’ about 1160, as well as lands at Hassendean and at Renfrew; he died in 1177. She had a charter of Molle in 1186. Around 1190 she gifted part of Molle to Kelso Abbey. She lastly married Henry ‘de Mow’, the 2 settling a dispute with Kelso Abbey about 1200 and still later is described as a widow. Alan, her son with Walter, succeeded to most of his father’s lands, as well as the office of Steward of Scotland. With Henry she had 4 daughters: Margaret (buried at Paisley Abbey, where she had given land); Eschina; Avicia (or Alicia), who probably married Richard Scott, ancestor of the Scotts of Buccleuch; and Cecilia, who married Simon Maleverer and had a charter of Molle in about 1250. Isolda (13th C.) daughter of Anselm and younger sister of Matilda. She married Alexander (son of William, son of Edgar) and they had a daughter, Christina, who married Almer Scott of Mow, who may have been related to Richard Scott of Mow. Uchtred (12th C.) son of Liulf. He granted the Church of Molle (present day Morebattle) to Kelso Abbey in the mid-1100s. He perambulated the boundaries himself, along with Aldred, the Dean of Teviotdale. He may have been the father of Eschina (earlier written ‘de Molle’ and variants).

other Sunday, as well as lectures in the evening. He also preached in alternate weeks at a temporary chapel in St. Boswells, as well as ministering to Catholics in Jedburgh and Kelso. This being a strain on his health, he was transferred to Dunfries and then Edinburgh, where he died suddenly.

Monanday  (mon-nin-da, mœ-nin-da) n., arch. Monday – ‘As Aw was gaun up Hawick Loan Yeh Monanday at morn ... ’ [JSB] (cf. the more modern Mondi; derived from the Anglo-Saxon).

Moncrieff  (mon-kreef) n. David (1771–1834) youngest son of Annan minister William and Ann Hardie. His brother William Hardie was minister at Annan after their father. He was proprietor of properties in Moncrieff’s Close from 1812, and made an Honorary Burgess in 1818 for benevolence to the poor. His property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map at about No. 63 High Street. It is unclear what the family’s original connection was to Hawick, but it could possibly be through his mother Ann Hardie (who died in 1821, aged 86). It is said that he was a great benefactor of the poor and unfortunate, and gave many contributions anonymously. He also befriended and helped Tom Jenkins, offering money so he could continue bidding on a Greek dictionary in an auction in Hawick, and later writing him a letter of reference. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 'History of Hawick' in 1825. His brother married Jean Laidlaw, who died at Falnash, and was probably daughter of Robert Laidlaw, farmer there; their daughter (his niece) Mary married Rev. Robert Shaw of Ewes (and earlier preacher at Teviotdale). He was described as having a round face, which was ruddy and cheerful, stout on person, always clad in black, with matching breeches and silk stockings, and carried a gold-headed cane. He appears to have married Helen Webster, and they had a daughter, Margaret. His curling stone (inscribed with his name) is in the Museum. John (d.1697), W.S. acted as agent to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696, for the rentals around Branholme. Margaret (b.1800) daughter of David, grand-daughter of Rev. William of Annan, and niece of Marion. She presented a cloth for the communion table at Hawick Free Kirk. She lived with her aunt at 63 High Street. Marion (1768–1862) daughter of Rev. William of Annan, and brother of David. She lived at 63 High Street. She was known as a charitable contributor to many causes in Hawick. One story is told of how she was asked to donate to some particular scheme, the organisation of which had taken 4 years, during which time she saved a pound note in her bible, so that she would be sure to have it on hand when the minister called. She was listed as ‘Miss Moncrieff’ among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She presented a communion token mold to the new Hawick Free Kirk in the early 1840s. Her niece Margaret is also recorded presenting a cloth for the communion table. She is probably the ‘Miss Marion’ involved in a bond with Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood in 1845. In later age she and her niece were referred to as the ‘Misses Moncrieff’ (e.g. in Slater’s 1852 directory, when they are listed among the local gentry). She also lived for a while with her grand-nieces Anne Janet and Marion Shaw. She died in Hawick at the age of 94 – ‘There’s Bailie Nixon, merchant, The Miss Moncrieffs and a’, And if ye gang some farther east, Ye’ll come to Willie Ha’’ [DJG].

Moncrieff’s Close  (mon-kreefs-klis) n. name in use for Tannage Close in the early 19th century, from a family who used to live at the top on the east side, at No. 63 High Street (to confuse matters, the 1858 Ordnance Survey map marks only the top of the street as Moncrieff’s Close, with the bottom labelled as Tannage Close).

Mondi  (mu-ndi) n. Monday (also spelled ‘Mondih’, cf. the older Monanday).

the Mondi  (thu-mu-ndi) n. sometimes used to refer to the Monday of Common Riding Week. This day has the first of the morning Chases, with the horses leaving the Backdamgate at 6.30 a.m.

John Charles (1864–1935) 2nd son of William, the 6th Duke. He trained for the Navy, passing his entrance examination at the age of 12, and served for several years at sea, reaching the rank of Lieutenant. However, his naval career was cut short by the accidental death of his elder brother Walter Henry in 1886, when he became Earl of Dalkeith. He became the 7th Duke of Buccleuch on the death of his father in 1914. He was Conservative M.P. for Roxburghshire 1895–1906 while Earl of Dalkeith. He was Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburgh 1915–35 and also served as a J.P. for Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire. He was also Captain General of the Royal Company of Archers and Honorary Colonel in the Royal Artillery (Territorial Army). He was Lord Clerk Register for Scotland 1926–35. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1889. He was also Honorary President of the Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club and of Hawick R.F.C. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1904 when the Library was opened, and was present at the unveiling of the Horse Monument in 1914. He also gave the Playing Fields to the Town in 1933. In 1893 he married Margaret Alice Bridgeman, 2nd daughter of Viscount Newport. Their children were: Margaret Ida, who married Adm. Sir Geoffrey Alan brooke Hawkins; Walter John, who succeeded; Lt.-Col. William Walter, who married Rachel Douglas-Home, daughter of the 13th Earl of Home; Sybil Anne, who married Charles Bathurst Hele Phipps; Alice Christabel, who married Henry William Frederick Albert Windsor, 1st Duke of Gloucester (and son of George V) and lived to be 102; Mary Theresa, who married David George Brownlow Cecil, Marquis of Exeter; Angela Christine Rose, who married Vice-Adm. Sir Peter Dawnay; and George Francis John, who married Mary Wina Mannin Bishop. He died at Bowhill and was buried at Dalkeith.

Richard Walter John (1954– ) 10th Duke of Buccleuch, succeeding on the death of his father in 2007. He long managed the Buccleuch estates as the Earl of Dalkeith. He was also Regimental Trustee of the K.O.S.B., and has been involved in several television and arts bodies. He married Lady Elizabeth Kerr (daughter of the Marquess of Lothian) and their children are: Walter; Lord Charles; and Lady Amabel.

Walter Francis (1806–1884) 5th Duke of Buccleuch and 7th Duke of Queensberry, son of Charles Montagu-Scott. He was born at Dalkeith House and succeeded when he was 13. He was the Honorable Walter Francis Montagu until the death of his elder brother, then had the title of Lord Whitchester until his father became Duke after which he was the Earl of Dalkeith. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire (as the Earl of Dalkeith) in 1819. He succeeded to the Buccleuch titles on the death of his father in 1819. His guardian was his uncle, Lord Montagu, and he was sent to Eton to be educated, but had to leave due to ill-health. He later attended St. John’s College, Cambridge. He was made an Honorary Burgess when passing through Hawick for the first time in 1821. In 1822 he was host to George IV at Dalkeith House for a fortnight (and repeated this for Queen Victoria in 1842). Celebrations for his coming of age (in 1827) were somewhat tempered by the recent death of his grandmother, Duchess Elizabeth. He subscribed to 3 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 there was a great celebration in Hawick, with an ox roasted at the Tower Knowe, distributed to all comers, along with 500 loaves and a hogshead of ale, with the Town illuminated along with fireworks and a beacon at Crumhaugh-hill. He was made Lord Lieutenant of Midlothian in 1828 and Roxburghshire in 1841. In 1829 he took his seat in the House of Lords as the Earl of Doncaster, and was a staunch Conservative in politics. However, in later years he changed his position and became a supporter of the repeal of the Corn Laws. He had Granton Harbour built in 1835. In 1838 he became Captain-General of the Royal Company of Archers. In 1839 there was a banquet held at Branxholme to celebrate his return from a long trip to Europe. A pavilion in the style of a baronial hall was erected on the Castle green (by Smith of Darnick), able to seat about 1,000 people; the chairman of the event was James Grieve of Branxholme Braes and above the chair was a buck’s head with the word ‘Bellen-den’ in gold lettering. Sometimes referred to as ‘the Good Duke Walter’, among his gifts to the town were Hawick Old Parish Church, the repair to George IV at Dalkeith House for a fortnight and the Allan and Dod water works. He performed the turning on ceremonies for both the Allan and Dod supplies. He also remitted customs that were traditionally levied by the Baron, cancelled a debt owed to him by the Road Trust, feued land to the Hawick Working Men’s Building Society, and gave fields to the Bowling and Cricket Clubs at minimal rent. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He became a Privy Councillor in 1842 and Lord Privy Seal in 1842–46 in Sir Robert Peel’s administration, and was also President of the Council, as well as being ‘Gold Stick’ in 2 coronations. He regularly attended the House of Lords, but seldom spoke. He was Colonel of the Edinburgh Militia, the ‘Duke’s Canaries’. He was also President of the Highland Agricultural Society, the Society of Antiquaries, the Architectural Society of Scotland and the British Association as well as Chancellor of Glasgow University, Vice-President of the Royal Institution for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts and leading member of the Board of Trustees for Manufactures. He was heavily involved in agricultural improvements, and headed the subscription list for enlarging Edinburgh university. He received honorary degrees from Glasgow, Edinburgh and Cambridge Universities. As a member of the Bannatyne Club he funded the publication of the ‘Chartulary of Melrose’ in 1837. In the 1850s he wrote to the tenants of his farms, urging them to preserve any monuments of antiquity. A dinner was held in his honour in Edinburgh in 1878 on the occasion of his jubilee as landlord, with an illuminated address being signed by 700 tenants. His statue stands in front of St. Giles Kirk in Edinburgh, with a decorated pedestal showing scenes from the history of his family. The Buccleuch Memorial was erected in his honour, Duke Street was named after him, and a portrait of him by Knighton Warren (commissioned by the Council) hangs in the Town Hall. In 1829 he married Lady Charlotte Anne Thynne, youngest daughter of Thomas, 2nd Marquis of Bath, who was Mistress of the Robes to Queen Victoria; she died in 1895, aged 84. Their children were: William Henry Walter (b.1831), who succeeded as 6th Duke; Henry John (b.1832); Walter Charles (b.1834), Captain of the 15th Hussars, who married Anna Maria, daughter of Sir William Edmund Cradock Hartopp; Francis Robert (b.1837), who died aged 2; Charles Thomas (b.1839), Admiral in the Royal Navy; Victoria Alexandrina (b.1844), who married the Marquess of Lothian and secondly married Bertram Talbot; Margaret Elizabeth (b.1846), who married Donald Cameron of Lochiel; and Mary Charlotte (b.1851), who married Walter Rodolph Trefusis. He died at Bowhill after being Duke for an unprecedented 65 years, and was buried at Dalkeith.

Walter Francis John ‘Johnnie’ (1923–2007) 9th Duke of Buccleuch, son of Walter John, he attended Eton and served in the Navy during WWII. He then studied agriculture and forestry at Oxford and became Director of the Buccleuch Estates in 1949. He served as a Roxburghshire County Councillor 1958–60. He was Conservative M.P. for Edinburgh North, 1960–73, as Earl of Dalkeith. He was also Captain in the Royal Company of Archers, Lord Lieutenant of Roxburgh, Ettrick & Lauderdale, President of the Royal Highland and Agricultural Society for Scotland and served on committees for many benevolent organisations, including advocating for those with disabilities. In 1971 he injured his spine in a hunting accident, and was then confined to a wheelchair. In 1973 he succeeded to the Buccleuch titles on the death of his father. He was then in the House of Lords until the removal of hereditary peers in 1999. He was made a Knight of the Thistle in 1978, and changed his surname back to simply ‘Scott’. He married Jane McNeill of Colonsay in 1953 (she had been a famous model) and they had 4 children: Richard, who succeeded; Lord William, who married Hafize Berrin Torolosan; Lady Charlotte-Anne, who married Count Bernard de Castellane; and Lord Damian, who married Elizabeth Powis. He was the biggest landowner in the U.K. (about 400 square miles), and owned many great art treasures (including da Vinci’s ‘Madonna and the Yarnwinder’, stolen from Drumlanrig Castle in 2003). He died at Bowhill and his funeral was held at Melrose Abbey. Walter Henry (1861–1886) eldest son of William Henry, 6th Duke of Buccleuch. He had the tile Lord Eskdale. He died from a gun accident when stalking deer near Achnacarry, and so the Dukedom was eventually inherited by his younger brother John Charles.

Walter John (1894–1973) son of John Charles, he became the 8th Duke of Buccleuch in 1935. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church College, Oxford. He was a soldier, politician, farmer and banker, as well as Lord Steward of Her Majesty’s Household and Chancellor of the Order of the Thistle. He was Commanding Officer of the 4th Battalion K.O.S.B. 1923–30. He was M.P. for Roxburgh and Selkirk Counties 1929–35 (while Lord Dalkeith) and was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1933. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire 1932–73 and Captain General of the Royal Company of Archers, as well as being a J.P. for Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire and Deputy-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire.
Montagu-Scott

He served as Aide-de-Camp to the Governor-General of Canada. He received honorary degrees from Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities. In 1921 he married Vreda Esther Mary, daughter of Maj. William Frank Lascelles. Their children were: Elizabeth Diana, who married Hugh Algeron Percy, 10th Duke of Northumberland; Walter Francis John, who succeeded; and Caroline Margaret, who married Sir Ian Hedworth John Little Gilmour, Baron of Craigmillar. William Henry Walter (1831–1914) son of Walter, he had been Earl of Dalkeith, and became the 6th Duke of Buccleuch and 8th of Queensberry in 1884. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church College, Oxford. He was M.P. for Mid-Lothian 1853–68 and 1874–80 and stood unsuccessfully against Gladstone in the 1880 election. He was also Lord Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire from 1858 and Lieut.-Gen. of the Royal Company of Archers. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justic of the Peace in Roxburghshire. In 1885 he was made an Honorary Burgess when the foundation stone of the new Town Hall was laid and the Cottage Hospital opened. He was President of the Hawick Fine Art Association, the Cottage Hospital and the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association and Patron of the Archæological Society and the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society. He presented a prize bat for the best batsman of the Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club in the late 1800s. In 1901 he was made a Privy Councillor. He also opened the Museum in Wilton Lodge in 1910 and was presented with a golden key in commemoration of his recent golden wedding. In 1859 he married Louisa Jane Hamilton, 3rd daughter of James, Duke of Abercorn; she was Mistress of the Robes to Queen Victoria and Queen Alexandra. Their children were: Walter Henry, Lord Eskdale, who died in a shooting accident aged 25; John Charles, who succeeded; George William, Captain in the 10th Hussars, who married Elizabeth Emily Manners, youngest daughter of the Duke of Rutland; Henry Francis, Major in the Royal Scots, who died unmarried; Herbert Andrew, Captain in the Irish Guards, who planted the British flag at Pretoria, and married Marie Josephine, daughter of James Edwards; Francis George, Aide-de-Camp to the Viceroy of India and married Eileen Nina Sibell Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, daughter of the 4th Earl of Minto: Katherine Mary, married Major Thomas Brand, eldest son of Viscount Hampden; and Constance Anne, who married Douglas Halyburton, son of the 1st Earl Cairns. Lord William Walter (1896–1958) son of John Charles, the 7th Duke of Buccleuch and brother of Walter John, the 8th Duke. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst. He was Captain in the 10th Hussars, received the Military Cross in 1919 and was Aide-de-Camp to the Governor-General of Canada 1925–26. He was also admitted to the Royal Company of Archers. He was Conservative M.P. for Roxburghshire & Selkirkshire 1935–1950, losing to Liberal A.J.F. MacDonald. In the 1930s he was connected with Sir Oswald Mosley’s ‘January Club’ and British Union of Fascists. He is also referred to as Lt. Col. Scott. He married Lady Rachel Douglas-Home, daughter of the 13th Earl of Home and they had 5 children: Margaret Elizabeth; Frances Henrietta; Rosemary Alice; Jean Louise; and Walter William. He lived at Eildon Hall, St. Boswells. (the name is also sometimes un-hyphenated and occasionally spelled ‘Montague’).

Montagu-Scott (mon-ta-gew-sko’) n. Charles William Henry (1772–1819) eldest surviving son of Henry Scott of Buccleuch and Lady Elizabeth Monatagu. He was called the Earl of Dalkeith during his father’s lifetime. Educated at Eton, he was an English M.P. for Marlborough, Ludgershall, St. Michaels and Marlborough (again) in the years 1793–1807. He was called to the House of Lords as Baron Tynedale in 1807 and became the 4th Duke of Buccleuch and 6th of Queensberry in 1812. He was Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire 1794–1819 and Dumfriesshire 1810–19, as well as Colonel Commandant of the Dumfries Militia. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was also President of the Pitt Club of Scotland, Governor of the Royal Bank and President of the Highland Society. He provided assistance to both Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd (to whom he gave free tenancy of the farm of Altrieve), and had the ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ dedicated to him. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808. He was present at the ‘Carterhaugh Ban’ in 1815. He repaired Drumlanrig Castle and generally improved the Queensberry estates. However, Robert Wilson describes how he was reluctant to grant fees for woollen mill development on his property around Hawick. It is said that he led a relatively quiet and religious life, managing his estates rather than spending time in London. In 1795 he married Harriet Katherine Townshend, 4th daughter of Thomas, Viscount Sydney; she died in 1814. He was succeeded by his eldest son Walter Francis (1806–84), when the surname Montagu-Douglas-Scott began to be used. His other children were: Anne Elizabeth (1796–1844), who died unmarried, aged 47; George Henry (1798–1808), Lord Scott, who died of measles while a schoolboy at Eton; Charlotte Albinia (1799–1828), who married James Thomas, 4th Earl of Courtown, and died in Rome; Isabella Mary (1800–29), who married Peregrine Francis Cost; Katherine Frances (1803–14), who died aged 10; John Douglas (1809–60), who was M.P. for Roxburghshire; Margaret Harriet (1811–46), who married Charles Viscount Marsham, who was later Earl of Romney; and Harriet Janet Sarah (1814–70), who married Rev. Edward Moore, Honorary Canon of Canterbury Cathedral. In ill-health for at least 6 years, he died in Lisbon, where he had gone for his health, and is buried at Warkton. Henry James see Henry James Scott (the surnames are confusing during this generation).

Montbenger (mont-beng-gur) n. lands in the upper Yarrow valley, near where the B709 meets the A708. These were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, held by the Crichtons of Cranston Riddell in the early 16th century. It was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 16th and 17th centuries. William Elliot of Horsleyhill claimed he was owed ‘mails’ for his steading at the Easter part there in 1575/6. There were Scotts there in the 17th century (also written ‘Mountbenger’; it is ‘Mountbergeris’ in 1456, ‘Montbrengear’ in 1468, ‘Monbrenaaris’ in 1471, ‘Montbereris Estir et Westir’ in 1502, ‘Montbergar Wester’ and ‘Montbergar Eister’ in 1541, ‘Montbernegeare, Estir and Westir’ in 1542, ‘Ester and Wester Montbenger’ in 1550, ‘Montberngar Eistir’ in 1575/6, ‘Eister et Wester Montberringeris’ in 1634 and ‘Easter and Wester Montbengeris’ in 1663).

Monteath (mon-teeth) n. Miss (19th/20th C.) of St. Boswells. She rode on Common Riding Friday in 1914, perhaps the first woman to do this.

Monteath Mausoleum (mon-teeth-maw-zole-um) n. mausoleum just west of Lilliard’s Edge, built in a domed Byzantine style with decorations reminiscent of India. It is the tomb of Gen. Sir Thomas Monteath Douglas (of Stonebyres, Lanarkshire), who had a distinguished military career in the early 19th century, spending much of his time in India. It was designed by the Edinburgh architects Peddie & Kinnear and erected in 1864 by Harkness, stonemasons of Hawick, under the supervision of Sir Thomas himself (with the lions carved by Alex Pirnie). The general took up residence there in 1868.

Monteviot Hoose (mon-teev-yi’hoos) n. stately home about 2 miles south of Jedburgh. The lands there were held by the Earl of Lothian in 1678. The mansion was created from a farmhouse around 1740, with much later alteration. The lands were described in 1788 as ‘Spittal, now called Mount Teviot’. The house was lived in by Adm. John Elliot, then the Kerrs, and is now the seat of the Marquess of Lothian. The landscaping of the estate is on a grand scale compared with the modest size of the house – ‘Here stands Mountiviot, opening to the eye A second paradise for rural sweets …’ [JR] (the name first appears as ‘Teviotmount’ in 1665, although the area was formerly known as ‘Ancrum Spittal’).

Montgomery (mont-gu-mu-ree) n. George (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick for surgeon Walter Scott in 1731. George (b.1824/5) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was a boarder with Walter Ballantyne at 7 Back Row, and was employing 3 men. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included George, Elizabeth, John and Walter. George (d.1835) cooper of the Kirk Wynd, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory.

James (1721–1803) born in Peeblesshire, he was appointed Sheriff there at age 27, then served as M.P. for Dumfriesshire and for Peeblesshire before becoming Solicitor General and then Lord Advocate. He was often called upon as a legal arbitrator, and in that role he was asked for his opinion on Hawick’s rights to the Common in 1765, driven by the Town’s intention to put the land to better use. His opinion at that time was that the Common belonged jointly to the successors to the particates named in the Charter of 1537 and ‘neither the Duke of Buccleuch as superior, nor the Burgesses who have neither houses nor lands, are entitled to any share in the division’. After the Council decided to let parts of the Common adjacent to the neighbouring lands, he was again asked his opinion in 1766. This time his opinion had changed somewhat and he suggested that the Duke’s tenants may have a right of pasturage on the Common, and he recommended formal arbitration to resolve the issue. He appears to have given no weight at all to the annual marking of the boundaries of the Common by the Burgesses of Hawick. He was in fact later the issuer of the decision to give 30% of the Common Moor to Buccleuch and other neighbouring... landowners; this despite the fact that he was a close friend of the Duke of Buccleuch (working in Parliament to pass the Bank of Ayr bill, which directly affected both the Buccleuch and Queensberry estates), and hence could hardly be considered to be impartial. In 1777 he was appointed Chief Baron of the Exchequer. In 1778 the Magistrates of Hawick presented him with a carpet, stating that he ‘did not know that any carpets of such size, without a seam, had been made in this country’. He purchased Stanhope in Peeblesshire and was said to be enthusiastic about agricultural improvement. He retired in 1801 as Baronet of Stobo. James (18th C.) recorded at Hummellknowshaugh in 1780. He married Isabel Douglas and their children included George (b.1780). James (b.c.1805) recorded as a horse-keeper on the Fore Row in 1841. His wife was Sarah, and their children included Mary, James, Agnes and Elizabeth. James (19th/20th C.) local cricketer, having the highest batting average for the Hawick and Wilton club in the 13 years from 1886 until 1898. He also scored 43 in a match for Roxburgh County against an M.C.C. visiting side in 1895. Janet (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John (b.1814/5) shoemaker who lived at ‘Kirkgate’ (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) according to the 1851 census. He is probably the John listed as a shopkeeper on Needle Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Isabel Cairns, recorded as a school mistress in 1845. James (16th C.) minister at Stirling, he was appointed as titular Archbishop of Glasgow in 1581, even although he had opposed episcopalianism. However, these were troubled times, his appointment was disputed, there were violent clashes at Glasgow Cathedral and he was deprived in 1585. He was later minister in Ayrshire. William Augustus (1872–1948) born in Hawick, he studied piano, organ and music theory, graduating with a B. Mus. from Durham in 1897. He was organist and choirmaster in Gainsborough Parish in England and emigrated to Canada in 1913. There he was organist and choirmaster in Sherbrooke, Calgary and Halifax. He published more than 100 musical compositions, including works for voice, organ, piano and violin (also spelled ‘Montgomerie’ and ‘Montgomery’).

Moormaw (moo-naw) n. former farm in Hassendean Parish, later called ‘Lees’, with ‘West Lees’ still existing. Charters for the Easter and Wester parts was granted by John Scott of Burnhead to John Scott, Vicar of Hawick in 1535 and 1539. And in 1544 East Moormaw was sold by John Scott, Vicar of Hawick back to John Scott of Burnhead. However, in 1606 William Scott in Catslack was served heir to these lands of his great-grand-uncle, John Scott, Vicar of Hawick; at that point Easter Moormaw was a ‘40 shilling land’. It is recorded being occupied by a branch of the Scott family in 1666. It is probably the place where Walter Scott of Catslack paid the land tax on £52 in 1663 and John Scott of Catslack in 1678. It seems possible it is the ‘miln-maw’ in Hassendean Parish, where Andrew Donald and Thomas Sanderson were located at the time of the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is the ‘Mowmaw, or Millmae, commonly called Lees’ owned by William Scott of Burnhead and valued at £52 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (also written ‘Muremaw’; it is ‘Murmawe’ in 1544 and transcribed ‘Eister Mirmawok’ in 1607; see also Milma).

Moorsom (moo-sum) n. Jermyn married Pamela Irene Milborne-Swinnerton-Pilkington and lived at Hyndlee. His brother, Raisley Stuart (1892–1981) was involved with the Bloomsbury set between the Wars.

Morebattle (mōr-baw’-ul) n. village in the eastern Borders, on the Kale Water. There are several ancient encampments near here, as well as the reconstructed 16th century Corbet Tower.
A fire in the Manse there destroyed the pre-1708 records of the entire Synod of Merse and Teviotdale (the origin is probably Old English for ‘building by the lake’, since a lake near there was only drained in the 19th century; the name first apppears in about 1120 as ‘Mereboda’).

Morlaw (mor-law, -lō) n. Duncan (15th C.)
witness to Hawick’s earliest known sasine in 1453.
His name is written ‘Morlay’. It is reasonable to think that he was an ancestor of the later Morlaws in Hawick. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1641. She was ordered to pay money that she owed Helen Deans as her fee for a period in the previous year, ‘but assoilized fra her hois and schone’. Presumably Deans was a servant of hers. Janet (17th C.) resident of Dean Mill recorded in a 1650 list of communicants (recorded as ‘Jannet Morling’). She may have been one of the last descendants of John to have the family name. James (16th C.) recorded as witness to a Hawick sasine of 1558, where his name is recorded as ‘Morlaw’. It is easy to imagine that he was son of John from the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.)
recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books of 1530/1 when he purchased from William and Adam Ker in Shaws. In 1532 he purchased from William Walker a croft and a tenement in Hawick. He was recorded as being ‘John Morlawe of Todschawe’, suggesting that he owned the lands of Todshaw in the Borthwick valley. His tenement was at the Tower Knowe, described as being ‘on the north side of the king’s street between the tenement of Alexander Paslaw on the east, the Slytryk water on the west and north and the said king’s street on the south’, while the croft ‘lies on the east side of the Slytryk water with the Teviot water on the north and the tenement of James Blair on the west’. The croft is surely what became known as Morlaw’s Croft (and so the ‘east’ in the Selkirk record must be an error for ‘west’). Perhaps the same John is recorded in 1532/3 when he purchased from Selkirk from John Scott. He purchased further land in Selkirk from the Kers of Shaws in 1534 and also complained that they owed him 2 bolls of nour. In 1535 he bought a tenement in Selkirk from Alan ‘Mithag’. He is also mentioned in the 1537 charter as being the holder of 3 participates on the north side of the main street in Hawick, with his surname written ‘Morlo’. He was still recorded as owner of a ten-emen in ‘Peilgait’ in Selkirk in 1543. Thomas (16th C.) owner of a tenement on the main street in Selkirk in 1528. In 1530 he gained a rig of Morpeth n. town in Northumberland, on the Wansbeck River, an important market centre, with a bridge built by Thomas Telford, and an interesting old clock tower. Morpeth Castile was once the seat of the Lords Dacre, Wardens of the Marches. It was also the site of a Covenanters’ siege of 1644. It has celebrating the Morpeth Gatherings in April since 1968, with the ‘Border Cavalcade’ commemorating Lord Greystocke’s return from Otterburn in 1388. Population 14,400.

Morren (mør-rin) n. John (1863–1950) born in Auchindoir in Aberdeenshire, in 1902 he moved from Aberdeen City Police to be Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh force. He lived at Glenview on Orchar Terrace. He remained as Chief Constable until 1909, taking over as Chief Constable of the Berwickshire, Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire Constabularies. He retired in 1933 and moved back to Aberdeen. He was awarded the King George V Coronation (Scottish Police) Medal, as well as the O.B.E. He can be seen in a photographic portrait in full uniform, with remarkable moustache.

Morris Clyde (mør-ris-klāl) n. pen-name for the writer of the poem ‘The Hawick Gathering Cry’.

Morrishall (mør-ris-hawl) n. Morrishall, former farmstead in Wilton Parish, between Wilton Dean and Whitehaugh, near Brieryhill, lying beside the modern Whitehaugh Road. John Morton and family were there in at least 1835–1851. It was probably deserted in the 1850s and derelict soon after. It was also known as ‘Murrayshall’ (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Morrison (mør-ree-sin) n. Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of Robert, baker in Edinburgh, his mother being a Home. In 1693 he was served heir portioner, along with James Dickson and John Shoreswood, in the Barony of Home, inherited from Jean, daughter of John Home. This included superiority over lands in Hassendean, and explicitly Applethetshall, as well as the lands of Redfordgreen, Drycleuchlea, Huntly and Hartwoodburn. James (15th/16th C.) born in Perth and Kinross, he was licensed by the Associate Presbytery of Earlston in 1756 and in the same year ordained as minister at Norham (just across the Border). He was Clerk of the Anti-Burgher Synod and Presbytery for more than 50 years. He is one of the people claimed to have started the first Sunday School, this being in 1756 or 1757. It is recorded that in 1766 he was in Hawick to perform a baptism for Robert Brown and Agnes Scott, members of the Anti-Burgher congregation, who did not yet have a local minister of their own. It thus appears that he may have been a temporary preacher at the Green Kirk, before John Young arrived. He is buried at Norham. James (1816–93) evangelical preacher who was one of the founders of the Evangelical Union, after being ousted from the Synod of the United Secession Church in 1841. His first visit to the Borders was to preach in Hawick and Denholm in a December of the mid-1840s. On one Sunday he preached at the old Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, then in the open air at the Tower Knowe to a crowd of 700–800, and finally in the Subscription Rooms (with the seats removed) to perhaps 1,000. This was part of the impetus for forming Hawick Congregational Kirk in 1848. He returned in early 1849 to formally induct Alexander Duff as the first E.U. minister in Hawick and later to open the new church. James (b.1829/30) from Lanark, he was head gardener at Wauchope in the 1860s. His wife was Helen and their children included John, Anne H. and Elizabeth. John (b.1822/3) head gardener at Weens in the 1860s. From Lanark, he was probably younger brother of James, gardener at Wauchope. His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Mary J.D. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was described as late Bailie in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howagate to Patrick Hardie. William (16th C.) tailor who was owed money according to the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. It is unclear if he was from the Hawick area or Edinburgh. William (19th C.) earthenware and glass dealer on Needle Street, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He could be the William listed in the 1851 census as a boot closer from Edinburgh, living as a lodger on the Round Close. William, J.P. (1839–92) born in Craig Madderty, Perthshire, he became a detective with the Leith Constabulary, then came to Hawick around 1865. He acted as Super-intendent of Police and Procurator-Fiscal for the Burgh for 11 years, as well as being Firemaster and managing the Hawick Advertiser from 1876–90. His company was printer, publisher, book-seller and stationer at 3 High Street. He was on the Town Council for at least a dozen years, serving as a Bailie for most of that time, and being a candidate for Provost. For several years he provided the refreshments for the riders at Myreslawgreen on the Friday of the Common Riding. He was the first Bailie to carry the Flag at the Chase in 1887 when that practice was revived (and the Provost of the day could not ride). However, in 1890 he galloped round the course with the Flag, to the cheers of the crowd, but the decision of the Common Riding organisers, since it was against all tradition. He was also Chairman of the Parochial Board, as well as being involved with the School Board, the Gas Company board, the Hawick Bowling Club, the Masons and the Common Riding. He was a Liberal in politics and was a candidate for Provost in 1890. He left Hawick suddenly in 1890 and died accidentally near Seattle (U.S.A.) a year and a half later. His wife was Margaret Gregg, who wrote some poetry under the pseudonym ‘M.G.M.’ He lived at Morrison Cottage, which gave its name to Morrison Place. Mrs. William nee Gregg (1834–98) wife of Bailie Morrison, whom she married in Leith in 1862. They had 6 children in Hawick. She wrote poetry in the local papers and in ‘Modern Scottish Poets’ using the initials M.G.M. She died at 3 Morrison Place. William (1863–1911) only child of Bailie William to reach adulthood. He grew up in Hawick, became a printer with his father, emigrated to Australia in 1883 and became the New South Wales Government Printer.
also records of a 2nd (presumably the older velvet one, sometimes called ‘the little cloth’) and even 3rd cloth (possibly just of cheap black material) being rented for lesser fees; in the mid-18th century there were the ‘best’, ‘second’ and ‘littell’ ‘cloaths’. The use of the cloth was widely debated in the mid-19th century, it fell into disfavour by the 1860s and is said to have been last used for Tibbie Leithead in 1870. The fee was 18 shillings Scots for those in the town and 20 shillings for the country part of the parish. There was also one in use in Wilton Parish. Other mort-cloths owned by incorporated trades were in use until 1721, with a ‘memorial’ against the use of private mort-cloths issued in 1726 – ‘Win Dickson gave in account of ye profites of ye 2 mortcloths …’ [PR1724], ‘This day a man in the Hungrehill was buried having the Mortcloath payed’ [Ash], ‘O, have ye heard the news of late, That things have come to sic a state, The fouk o’ Hawick are talking great Against our bonnie mortcloth. Some say it is a gross abuse, Some say they’l it nae longer use, And some they will not pay the dues O’ hiring out our mortcloth’ [TP] (also spelled as one word ‘mortcloth’).

mortify (mor-ti-fl) v., arch. to bequeath in perpetuity, particularly when given to a public body – ‘I hereby mortifie and dispone to the said Paroch of Hawick all and haill the Soume of Nine thousand Merks Scots money to ly as ane mortified fund’ [PR], ‘…who are to bestow the money mortified by the late Mr Alexander Orrok, our minister here …’ [PR1714] (Scots Law term).

mortification (mor-ti-fi-shn) n., arch. property or money bequeathed to charity – ‘And by the said mortification her Grace is patron of both for presenting the schoolmaster when vacant …’ [PR1714].

mortifier (mor-ti-fl-ur) n., arch. one who mortifies, person who bequeatheth something to a public pody – ‘They in the highlands gote the best part thereof according to the desire of the mortifier’ [PR715].

Mortimer (mor’i-mur, -ee-) n. Rev. Cyrus M. minister of Roberton from 1930–54. He started the first troop of Boy Scouts in Roberton Parish.

Morton (mor’-in) n. Adam (15th C.) bequeathed 6 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Ade Mortoun’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Briery Yards according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably the Adam, married to Anna Henderson, whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included Helen (b.1695), Anna (b.1702) and Jean (b.1709) He is probably the Adam who in 1698 witnessed a baptism for William Scott in Lees and Isabella Morton (perhaps his sister). Andrew (17/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott, tenant in Falsnash, in 1706. George ‘Geordie’ (16/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Harrett’ (presumably Harwood) in the 1622 Commissioners’ Court in 1622 when he was cleared, along with Walter Turnbull (tenant of Skelfhill) of stealing 2 sheep from ‘Laird Svarley’ (an Englishman). Rev. James (1783–1865) said to be a cousin of Dr. John Leyden, he was Prebendary of Lincoln and Vicar of Holbeach in Lincolnshire. He wrote ‘The Poetical Remains of the late Dr. John Leyden’ (1819) and ‘Monastic Annals of Teviotdale’ (1832). He became acquainted with William Norman Kennedy after a visit to Hawick, in which he was given a tour of local archaeological sites, along with Robert White of Newcastle. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Johannes de Mortoun’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably local. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in ‘le craik’ (presumably Craik) in 1502 at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was fined for non-appearance, and acted as his own surety. John (d.c.1683) at Appletreeshall in 1683 when his will is recorded. His surname is written ‘Mortoune’. John (b.c.1840) agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. He was listed at Murrayshall, among heads of households, 1855–41. His wife was Agnes and their children included Jeannie, Isabella, Katherine, Agnes, Betty and Mary. Robert (b.1778/9) from Dalkeith, he was a farmer and gardener living at Damhead in 1841. In 1851 he was at Upper Damsie. He is listed as a gardener in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Catherine and their children included William, Catherine and John. Rev. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1919–2013) born in Kilmarnock, he studied Arts at Glasgow University and trained for the ministry there. He was ordained as minister of West Port Kirk in 1945 and remained until 1951. He then moved to St. Nicholas’ Church in Cardonald, and in 1947 was translated to Stonelaw, Rutherglen, where he was minister until he retired in 1986. In 1978–79 he was Moderator of the Glasgow Presbytery. His wife was Netta. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter (in earlier times this is easily confused with Mertin).

mort-safe (mort-sāf) n., arch. a device for preventing a coffin from being stolen, often an iron cage that could be locked over a grave. They were prevalent in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. A padlock from a device used at Cavers up until about 1830 is in the Museum.

Moscrop (mos-krop, -krip) n. Adam (16th C.) 2 men with the same name, one ‘Mr.’ and one ‘Sir’ were chaplains and notaries to an instrument following an inquest over disputed land in Jedburgh in 1533. They could easily have been descended from the earlier Patrick and/or James. One of them was probably the Adam who was notary for a sasine of lands in Fen-Rule in 1560 and for a document for Lady Catherine Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1564. ‘Master Adam Mostrope curate in Jed’ was involved in the marriage of John Rutherford of Hunthill and Christian Pringle in 1529. Adam (16th C.) recorded in Riddell in 1580 when his servant Robert witnessed an agreement between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. Clement (16th/17th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Ville Moscop in Jedburgh’. William (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, his children were baptised in Hawick Parish. He probably lived in the country area towards Teviothead. He married Marion Rae and their children included: Margaret (b.1670); Isobel (b.1672); Janet (b.1676); and an unnamed son (b.1686). The witnesses in 1676 were schoolmaster John Purdom and James Elliot (also formerly ‘Moscip’ and ‘Moscope’).

Moses (mō-zeez) n. nickname in use in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

moss (mos) n. marshy land, bog, morass, moorland, usually high up and sometimes applied to an area used for cutting peats and turfs – ‘He’s guided them o’er moss and muir, O’er hill and houp, and mony ae down’ [T], ‘How swift they flew! no eye could view Their track on heath or hill; Yet swift across both moor and moss, E’en! no eye could view Their track on heath or hill;’

the Moss ([thu-mos] n. popular name for the area of wetlands to the south of Lilliesleaf village, also known as Lilliesleaf Moss.

Moss ([mos] n. John (17th/18th C.) maltman in Hawick. In 1746 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for merchant Andrew Ekron. In 1724 he married Bessie Richardson, who was also from the Town of Hawick. Their children included Helen (b.1725) and Janet (b.1738). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Robert Ruecastle and Henry Orrock. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Thomas Porteous and in 1743 he witnessed a baptism for James Oliver, tenant in Earlsdie.

mossbluiter ([mos-bli’ur] n., arch. the bittern, Botaurus stellaris, the common snipe, Capella gallinago – ‘...cultivating wastes, where the whaup and mossbluiter are heard, or where the wild fowls of heaven are destined to reside’ [RW] (also bog-bluter and sometimes heather-bleat), from the noise made by the snipe’s tail feathers during courtship, or the booming call of the male bittern).

Mossbrae ([mos-brə] n. placename in Robertson Parish. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1717, John Turnbull in 1718 and James Donaldson in 1725–28. It is unclear exactly this might be.

Mossburnford ([mos-burn-förd] n. hamlet about 3 miles south of Jedburgh. Mossburnford House dates from the early 19th century, but is on the site of a much earlier house. This was once home of a branch of the Rutherfords and was visited by Burns in 1787.

mosscheeper ([mos-chee-pur] n., arch. the meadow pipit, Anthus pratensis (also murrecheeper and titlin).

mosser ([mo-sur] n., arch. a mosstrooper, some one engaged in cutting peats.

mosses ([mos-seez] n., pl., arch. areas of moorland, particularly those from which peats are cut – ‘...and that they must not spread peets or set any bings within the said mosses for the space of fifteen days ...’ [BR1743], ‘...generally got his peats and turf for the use of his family from the mosses and muir in the Common’ [C&L1767].

moss-hagg ([mos-hawg] n. a piece of iground from which peats have been cut.

moss-haggs ([mos-hawgz] n., pl. boggy moorland, particularly pits where peats have previously been cut – ‘The breadth of the Border, parched and dried, Went sore from the swords of the sun, The wild flowers drooped and the moorland parched and dried, Went sore from the swords of the sun. The wild flowers drooped and the moorland was a mosstrooper, some one engaged in cutting peats.

Mossills Loch ([mos-hilz-loch] n. small body of water in the Target Hills, lying between the Braid Road and Ormiston, also known as the Target Pond (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mossills Road ([mos-hilz-röd] n. former name for part of the road above the Wellogate, probably the narrow road towards Ormiston that goes past Mossills Loch. The name is used in Robert Murray’s ‘Hawick Songs and Song Writers’, when it is suggested that Sir Walter Scott may have conducted the Wordsworths here in 1803.

Mosshouses ([mos-hoos-eez] n. Mosshouses, former cottages on the farm of Mackside that were lived in during the 18th and early 19th centuries, but were already gone by the beginning of the 20th.

Moss Knowe ([mos-now] n. hill to the southeast of Shielswood Loch, being a shallow hill reaching a height of 299 m.

Mossman ([mos-mun] n. Alan (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh, recorded in a charter of 1531/2 receiving the lands of Borthaugh and its mill from Roger Langlands. His acquisition of the land was involved in an agreement with Lawson of Highriggs, perhaps settling a debt of John Scott of Borthaugh. Later that year, however, he sold Borthaugh, Commonside and Dryden to Walter
Mosspark Rig

Scott of Branxholme and his wife Janet Kerr. James (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In about 1678 he was fined 1000 merks for attending conventicles, this being a larger sum than the other 6 or 7 people who were fined at the same time. He was probably imprisoned on the Bass Rock, and after his fine was unpaid he was probably transported. However, it is possible was among the men who escaped from their ship in London. James (18th C.) early hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. There is a record of 1791 (from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of him receiving £10 towards purchasing a frame for making ribbed stockings, and a few years later he received money for a twisting mill. In 1790 and 1792 he witnessed baptisms for Skinner James Renwick. He is probably the stockingmaker whose unnamed child is recorded dying in 1805 and whose unnamed child and grandchild are recorded dying in 1808. He is probably the merchant James whose son James died in Hawick in 1816. He may be the James who married Janet Renwick in 1783, and whose children (baptised in Hawick) included Elizabeth (b.1784) and Adam (b.1785). The witnesses in 1784 were flesher Gideon Renwick and shoemaker William Renwick (who were surely related to his wife). James (18th/19th C.) fishing tackle maker of the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Margaret (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1785, when she was working for Adam Ogilvie.

Mosspark Rig (mos-pawrk-rig) n. area of moorland on the west side of the Hermitage Water near Leaugh. There is an ancient enclosure near the river there, and another close to the confluence with the Thief Sike.

Mosspatrick (mos-paw-trik) n. former name for an area roughly between the heads of the Allan Water and the Braeildie Burn off Hermitage. This may correspond to the ‘Queen’s Mire’ on modern maps (it is recorded in Douglas of Cavers papers in the 15th century and is ‘M’Patrick’ in 1516; ‘Mosspatrickhope swire’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Mosspatrickhope (mos-paw-trik-hop) n. former house at Mosspatrick, once a home of the Ellotts. It is probably the ‘Mal Patrikhope’ which was granted by William Douglas, Earl of Angus top Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1428, along with Braeildie and ‘Le Schewis’, and granted to a William Douglas of Cavers in 1470, with sasine given in 1472. It is transcribed as ‘Makpatrikhope’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when it was valued at 10 merks and had William Elliot as tenant. Later in the 16th century it was still tenanted by men called William Elliot. It was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1632 (it is ‘Mal Patrikhope’ in 1428, ‘Mawpatrichop’ in 1470, ‘Mawpatrikhope’ in 1472, ‘Mospatrikhoip’ in 1581 and transcribed ‘Makpatrikhope’ in 1632; ‘Moss patrick hoopescwyne’ and ‘Mosspatrick hopswyire’ appear on separate sheets of Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Mossaul (mos-pawl) n. hotel on the A7 near the highest (853 ft) point of the road, on the watershed on the way to Langholm, and very close to the boundary of the Scottish Borders with Dumfries and Galloway. A shelter has existed here for hundreds of years; it has been suggested that this was perhaps established by the monks of Melrose Abbey, and although there is no evidence for this suggestion, they did own the neighbouring lands of Penangushope and others (in Ringwoodfield to the north). Lawrence Elliot was there in 1494/5. It was listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10. In 1525 the lands were among those in Ewesdale resigned by Simon Armstrong to his superior George, Lord Home: this was carried out at Kelso Abbey (suggesting this Abbey held control over Ewesdale Parish). This transfer of the superiority back to the Homes was confirmed in 1535 when the King revoked the preceding charter. It is probably the ‘Mossfauld’ listed in 1663 among the lands owned by the Scotts of Bucleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. The inn is first definitively recorded in 1767 (by Dr. Carlyle of Inveresk), but could be much older. It became an important stopping point for mail coaches and carters when the road was improved in the mid-18th century. In the early days it is said to have been occasionally used by debtors trying to nip over the county border to escape either the Roxburghshire or Dumfriesshire authorities. John Scott is recorded living there in 1779 and 1782 and was explicitly listed as innkeeper there in 1788. James Ruickbie wrote a poem after seeing the improvements made to the buildings in the early years of the 19th century. Robert Gothenlock was landlord for 45 years until 1861. The hotel was much improved, with a large stabling area to the west, consisting of as many as 42 stalls, where the coaches horses were exchanged. It was a very busy place for several decades. However, with the building of the Hawick-Carlisle railway the hotel fell into disuse, its licence lapsing in 1865, and the building becoming derelict in the latter part of the 19th century. There were tall poles... lining the road at intervals, which were used to guide the coaches through snow drifts; some were still in place in the early 20th century. The inn was resuscitated in 1900 through a private company of local gentlemen, largely to cater for cycling enthusiasts, the land being feuined on good terms for use as a wayside hostelry. The more modern building was smaller than its predecessor. A bowling green was also added for a while on the western side and a 6-hole golf course was also opened. It is also the location of the Mosspaul ride out of 24 miles over rough moorland. This first took place in 1901, and is traditionally 2 weeks before Common Riding weekend. The Mosstroopers’ Club erected a memorial cairn there in 2000 – ‘Oo get yon spacial feelin as the Saxhorn Band leads the Mosstroopers safe in frae mosspaul’ [IWL] (the name is probably derived from the boggy ground, with the roots being the old Celtic ‘megestu’ for ‘open land’ and ‘pol’ suggesting ‘boggy hollow’ or ‘upland stream’; the 2nd syllable has also been suggested to indicate that a pole here once marked the county boundary, but that seems less likely; there is an even more fanciful suggestion that it relates to a chapel to St. Paul that may have been on the site, but there is no evidence for this, and it may be a confusion with the chapel to St. Paul which was a few miles further south at Ewes Doors; the name perhaps first appears in 1494/5 as ‘mos paul’; it is ‘Mosspaul’ in 1506, ‘Mosspaul’ in 1509/10, ‘Mosspall’ in 1525, ‘Mospaule’ in 1535 and ‘Mispaul’ in 1782).

Mosspaul Bothy (mos-pawl-bo-thee) n. house at Mosspaul, behind the hotel. It was rebuilt fairly recently, on the site of a former building, which local tradition says was itself on the site of the ancient wayside hostel dedicated to St. Paul (for which there is no evidence of course).

Mosspaul Burn (mos-pawl-burn) n. stream that flows to the west to join the Black Burn and Lang Grain near Mosspaul. The upper part rises on Carlin Tooth and flows through Penangus Hope, forming part of the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire. Note that the Black Burn is also called the Mosspaul Burn as it runs to the south to join the Ewes Water. The Mosspaul Club (thu-mos-pawl-klib) n. former organization composed of the Directors of the committee that raised funds for the rebuilding of Mosspaul Hotel, plus some of their friends. It was in some loose sense a continuation of the earlier Wisp Club. It was formed in 1900 and held an annual outing and dinner at the hotel. Dr. McLeod was the first President. The dinners were interrupted by WWI, and although it met again after the war, it petered out a few years later.

Mosspaulgreen (mos-pawl-green) n. area near Mosspaul. John Lawson was living there in 1755. It was one end of the ‘Mosspaulgreen to Hare-moss’ Turnpike road, improved about 1770, being the Roxburghshire part of what became the A7 (it is ‘Mospalgreen’ in 1755).

Mosspaul Hotel (mos-pawl-hô-tel) n. name sometimes used for the hotel at Mosspaul, formerly called the ‘Mosspaul Inn’.

Mosspueble (mos-pee-bul) n. farm on the A7 between Mosspaul and Langholm, just south of Unthank. Like other parts of Ewesdale, the superiority was held by the Homes in the early 16th century. Adam Scott was a farmer there in 1585. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it was combined with ‘Byercleughwater’, consisting of 1592 acres, bounded by Tarras, lands of the Laird of Arkleton and Unthank. Robert Aitchison was there in at least the period 1785–97. In 1800 it was leased by William Moffat. Alexander Borthwick was farmer in 1841 and Capt. Stewart in the 1860s. There are remains of an ancient settlement south-east of the farmhouse (it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 maps as ‘Mospeel’ and ‘Mospepill’ and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Mospeels’; it is ‘Mospeule’ in 1506, ‘Mospeble’ in 1509/10, ‘Mospebill’ in 1525, ‘Mospaule’ in 1535 and ‘Mispaul’ in 1782).

Mosspueble Cottage (mos-pee-bul-ko’-eej) n. former cottage near Mosspueble farm in the Ewes valley. John Murray and 3 others were living there in 1841.

Moss Toor (mos-toor) n. placename near Hawick, recorded in 1582. Robert Weens ‘in Mos toure’ witnessed an agreement in Hawick for Alan Deans and Alexander Weens.

Moss Toor (mos-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 15th century tower near Eckford, which could only be approached through the march from a causeway on the north side. It was destroyed in 1523, re-built and burned by Sir Ralph Evers men in 1544.
mosstroop (mos-troop) v., arch. to freeboot, rieve – ‘Whitslade is slumbering undisturbed and down in Harden Glen The tall trees murmur in their dreams of Wat’s mosstrooping men’ [WHO].

mosstrooper (mos-troo-pur) n. one of a band of raiders operating on the boggy moorland of the Borders around the 17th century, a marauder – ‘By moor and moss and river, To the swish of swathèd grass And burnside reeds aequiver, The dead mosstroopers pass’ [RSC].

Mosstrooper (mos-troo-pur) n. member of the Ancient Order of Mosstroopers. Membership consists of those who have ridden to Mosspaul and back on the annual ride-out.

the Mosstroopers’ Club (thu-mos-troopurs-klub) n. club formed of members of the Ancient Order of Mosstroopers. It existed from probably 1901, when there was a ride-out to the newly opened Mosspaul Hotel, with the riders being entertained there by the directors. There was originally a ‘secret’ initiation ceremony, with new members smearing the sign of the Hawick cross on their foreheads. It was reconstructed following the suggestion of J.E.D. Murray at a meeting in 1920. One of the main aims was to encourage mounted supporters to follow the Cornet. The first club President was T.G. Winning in 1920 and since then there has been a new President each year. The Club motto is ‘Aye Defend’, their song is ‘The Mosstrooper’s Song’, and the Club badge was designed by J.E.D. Murray, with his own favourite horse’s head making the main part of the design. Badges were presented to some women in the period 1920–31, with this ceasing after a female rider broke her leg. The Club’s tie was designed in 1951, and is moss green with red and yellow stripes. A junior tie was designed in 1995. Perhaps the main event in the Clubs’ calendar is the Smoker for the Cornet, held on the evening of the Mosspaul Rideout. The Club also holds an annual ball (since 1920), Burns night (since 1949), organises race meetings, gymkhana and other events, and regularly contributes to causes that preserve the town’s traditions. A CD was released under the Club’s auspices in 2013.

The Mosstrooper’s Song (thu-mos-troopurs-saung) n. song composed by Adam Colledge, with words by J.E.D. Murray, written in 1928 and published in 1931, with the subtitle ‘Four Hunder Horsemen’. It was officially adopted as the anthem of the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1937. The tune bears a similarity to Costa’s ‘March of the Israélites’. It has remained popular despite having a different chorus for each verse. Adam Ingles changed the accompaniment for the 1957 song book, which probably added to its popularity. It was slightly altered again by Ian Seeley for the 2001 song anthology.

Mossy Knowe (mo-see-now) n. standing on the south side of the Teviot, where the Northhouse Burn joins. William Murray was joined there in the early 19th century. Widow Mary Murray and her family were there in 1841. This area is also known as ‘Change Hoose’. The name may derive from the enclosure about 500 yards further up the River. This is a low earthen bank, much eroded, covering an area about 300 ft by 200 ft with a gap in the north-east (it is Moozieknowe’ in 1841).

the Mote (thu-mò) n. Norman built earthwork, once topped by a defensive wooden tower, 312 feet (95 m) round at its base (about 30 m diameter) and 25–30 feet (about 8 m) high. It is situated in Mote Park, roughly behind 23 Loan. In the 19th century it was conjectured to be associated with Druids, sun-worship and human sacrifice, and was also believed to be a burial mound. It was also traditionally said to have been a place of justice (as first stated by Robert Wilson). An archaeological investigation by Dr. Alexander O. Curle in 1912 revealed an ancient ditch and several artefacts (now in the Museum) of Norman date, clearing up any doubt about its origin; this included pottery shards, a bone needle and a coin of Henry II. It was probably a fairly standard ‘motte and bailey’ construction (as should always have been clear, given the name), with the bailey to the north-east, enclosed in a wooden palisade. This was the seat of the Lovels and possibly Douglases until they moved to where Drumlanrig’s Tower is now. It is likely that the location had legal significance long after the wooden structure on the top was gone. In 1484 the sasine for the Barony of Hawick was granted ‘at the principal messuage of the barony of Hawick, called the Mote’, and the same phrase was repeated in 1514; this suggests that the site (whether or not there was still a building there) was at that point recognised as the Baron’s legal headquarters. Lands in that area were once held by a branch of the Scotts, with William ‘in the Mott’ being one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch mentioned by Scott of

Mote Park

The Mote is now in the centre of a park and has a staircase (38 steps) and seat on top. Each Common Riding the Cornet and other Principals sing ‘Teribus’ on the top of the Mote to greet the Saturday dawn (although in 1896 this visit was shifted to 1.30 a.m.); this tradition is shown in a photograph from 1911. It may be that the Mote once formed a more important part of the Common Riding events, since in about 1710 Rev. Robert Cunningham wrote in his poem that this ‘artful Mount’ was where the natives ‘acted all their games of May’ – ‘It first be torn not by the plough The ancient bonny green Moat-Knowe; For sair I fear it, too, maun fall, Though reared by hands Druidical’ [AD], ‘Is it natural or artificial?’ asked a stranger at a little boy. ‘It’s neither of the two; it’s just the moat’ [RJT], ‘We’ve a Moat, which down the ages, Witnessed many a deed of fame’ [TC], ‘And the Moat’s there, and the Haugh’s there, And the auld soul-stirring songs’ [WL], ‘The green auld Mote stands sentinel The echo o’ St. Mary’s bell Still rings oot owre hill and dell In Hawick ma Border hame’ [WL] (often locally spelled ‘Moat’, leading to some confusion about its origin, with people incorrectly envisioning a water-filled ditch, rather than a defensive mound; note also that hills where open air courts were held were often called ‘moat-hills’, and this may also be relevant to the origin, or simply another source of confusion; it is ‘le Mott de Hawik’ in 1511, ‘le Mott in Hawyk’ in 1511/2 and ‘the Mote’ in 1793 and 1821: other surviving examples of mottes include those at Riddell, the Hain- ing and Phenzhopehaugh).

Mount Common

The Mount is now in the centre of a park and has a staircase (38 steps) and seat on top. Each Common Riding the Cornet and other Principals sing ‘Teribus’ on the top of the Mount to greet the Saturday dawn (although in 1896 this visit was shifted to 1.30 a.m.); this tradition is shown in a photograph from 1911. It may be that the Mount once formed a more important part of the Common Riding events, since in about 1710 Rev. Robert Cunningham wrote in his poem that this ‘artful Mount’ was where the natives ‘acted all their games of May’ – ‘It first be torn not by the plough The ancient bonny green Moat-Knowe; For sair I fear it, too, maun fall, Though reared by hands Druidical’ [AD], ‘Is it natural or artificial?’ asked a stranger at a little boy. ‘It’s neither of the two; it’s just the moat’ [RJT], ‘We’ve a Moat, which down the ages, Witnessed many a deed of fame’ [TC], ‘And the Moat’s there, and the Haugh’s there, And the auld soul-stirring songs’ [WL], ‘The green auld Mote stands sentinel The echo o’ St. Mary’s bell Still rings oot owre hill and dell In Hawick ma Border hame’ [WL] (often locally spelled ‘Moat’, leading to some confusion about its origin, with people incorrectly envisioning a water-filled ditch, rather than a defensive mound; note also that hills where open air courts were held were often called ‘moat-hills’, and this may also be relevant to the origin, or simply another source of confusion; it is ‘le Mott de Hawik’ in 1511, ‘le Mott in Hawyk’ in 1511/2 and ‘the Mote’ in 1793 and 1821: other surviving examples of mottes include those at Riddell, the Haining and Phenzhopehaugh).

Mote Park

motey breid (mō-tee-breed) n., poet. a cur- ranty loaf – ‘Motey bread right plenty’ [JoHo].

Mother Riley’s (mu-thur-ri-leez) n. former popular name of the Bourtree Place fish and chip shop, named for the older Mrs. Shiel, after the popular films of the 1930s and 40s – ‘Headin Weensland way, in Bourtree Place an auld freend popular lms of the 1930s and 40s { `Headin Muckle Mou’d Meg: the common Teviotdale pronunciation is mow, even when written ‘mou’).

moud see mowd

moud (mowd) n., poet. soil, earth of a graveyard – ‘I’ll fight wi’ the bodie an’ cangle, Till I get him laid i’ the mou’d’ [JoHa] (cf. mools and mnil).

Moully Sike (mow-lee-sik) n. small stream off the north side of the Black Burn in Liddesdale.

mount (mown’) v., arch. to adorn, trim (also munt).

Mount (mown’) n. former farmstead where Per- ryshiel Sike meets the Whitrope Burn, just south of Whitropefoot. This is probably where Gilbert Elliot ‘at Mount’ (son of William of Penchrise) lived around 1700. William Barton was shepherd there around 1840. In 1851 road labourer Andrew Elliot and family were there, in 1861 William Beattie’s family and in 1868 John Kyle (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

mountain dew (mown’-in-jo) n., arch. ho- mourous name for whisky, often referring to the illicitly distilled sort – ‘... might partake of pot- luck with him, taste his maut and mountain dew ...’ [RW], ‘... They’re penurious and few, If they tried my Mountain Dew They would tipple on the sly, says John George Luff’ [JCG].

mountain wine (mown’-in-win) n., arch. phrase used in the 18th and early 19th centuries for a white (or Malaga) table wine.

Mountbenger (mown’-beng-gur) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, near the Gordon Arms, where the Mountbenger Burn meets the Yarrow Water. Mountbenger Law, to the north, reaches a height of 543 m. It was formerly Crown land, leased to the Crichtons in the late 15th century. John Chisholme was there in 1579 and John Hislop in 1581 (‘Estir Munbergeris’ and ‘Westir Munber- geris’ are recorded in 1489, ‘Montberger’ in 1492 and ‘Munbarneger’ in 1579; ‘West Muntherner’ and ‘East Muntherner’ are on the 1718 Buc- cleuch survey).

Mount Common (mown’-ko-min) n. lands in the Ettrick valley, by the Tima Water. Mount- common Hill reaches a height of 462 m. The lands were owned by the Crown from about 1456. The lands were let at ‘half ferme’ to David Scott (probably of Bucleuch) in 1459. They were described as a land of 2 steadings in 1488, namely Deep- hope and Gamescleuch. They were let to Alexan- der Scott and David Scott in 1469. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1541 it was ‘Montcolmone, alias Deiphope’, when occu- pied by William Scott, paying £10 yearly. It was once part of the parish of Rankilburn. It has long been part of the Buccleuch estates (it is ‘Moncommane’ in 1456, ‘Montcolman’ in 1459 and 1469, ‘Montcowmane’ in 1488, ‘Montcowman’ in 1492 and ‘Montcommone’ in 1502; ‘Mon Comon Hill’ is marked on Blaue’s 1654 map).

mounteback (mown‘-ee-bawk, mun‘-ee-bawk) n., arch. charlatan, trickster – ‘Aw wonder at yon mountebacks disna think shame at ganging into Mr. Nixon’s seat’ [RM] (many spellings exist; see also muntybank).

mounter (mown‘-ur) n., arch. term used in the 19th century for a person who trims garments.

Mount Hawick (mownt-ha-wik) n. hill in Western Australia, south-west of the town of Halls Creek. It was named on April 27th 1894 by David W. Carnegie (1871–1900, youngest son of the Earl of Southeaks), as described in his book ‘Spinifex and Sand, A Narrative of Five Years' Pioneering and Exploration in Western Australia’ (1898). Carnegie’s journey across Western Australia is described as one of the last great explorations of the Australian wilderness. He named it after his prospecting partner Lord Percy Douglas (who was also Lord Douglas of Hawick). Carnegie died in Nigeria as a result of being shot with a poisoned arrow. Mount Hawick is approximately at Latitude 18°54’ South, Longitude 127°1’ East (there is also a separate ‘Hawick Hill’ in Western Australia).

the Mountin Sang (thu-mown‘-in-sawng) n. name sometimes used for the ‘Auld Sang’, particularly as sung at the Tower Knowe when the Cornet and supporters mount their horses for the marching of the Common on the Friday. The singing is led by the official ‘Sang Singer’. Until 1921 it was sung from a window of a room at the Tower, while from 1922 it has been performed on the steps outside.

mouster (mow-stur) n., arch. moisture – ‘For daye an’ nicht thy han’ was hivie apon me; my moustr is turnet intil the drouth o’ simmer’ [HSR].

Mouswald (mows-wawld) n. Gilbert (14th/15th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1404 when he exchanged for another benefice with John de Merton. He appears to have still held it in 1308, but this is somewhat confusing, since William Macmorrin also held the position in that year. He gifted a missal to Glasgow Cathedral in about 1400.

mout (mowt, mow’) v., arch. to eat food with small bites, nibble (also moot and cf. mowp).

movit (moo-vee‘, -vi’) pp., arch. moved, instituted a legal action – ‘...anent the slauchteris and thei’eris causiss movit be the sonis of ymwhile Adame Scot of Alanehaucht aganis me, the said Walter ...’ [SB1585], ‘...he sall nevir thole the rightheus til be muvet’ [HSR], ‘...the wrrld sal alsua be sete siccer that it canna be muvet ...’ [HSR].

mowp (mowp) v., arch. to nibble, eat by nibbling, twitch the lips – ‘...wi mous moupin’ like maikins in May!’ [EM1820] (also written ‘moup’; cf. mout).
mowsent (mow-sent) adj., arch. somewhat mouldy, moth-eaten, shabby (also known in Northumberland).

Mrs. Bucket (mi-siz-bu-ki’) n. nickname for Marion Chrystie.

Mrs. Inglis’ (mi-siz-ing-ulz, -gul-zeez) n. popular name in the early 19th century for the hostelry at 64 High Street, which was later called the Half Moon Hotel. It was also known as ‘Wull Inglis’, so presumably Mrs. Inglis was the widow of William Inglis.

Mrs. Mack’s (mi-siz-mawks) n. popular name for a former shop on Canongate in Denholm. It was kept by Euphemia Mack (nee Dickson), who was the widow of grocer John Mack in the latter part of the 19th century. She was well-known locally for her ‘taffy’ and home baked goods.

muck (muk) n. dung, manure – ‘...Its ooter rind is snowly fair, The inner, muck; Wha’d view hypocrisy laid bare, Look at his pluck’ [JoHa], ‘...thaye becam’ as muck for the yorth’ [HSR], v. to spread dung – ‘...in carreing the ground of the Common and muckeing the arable land with to spread dung { [BR1698], ‘...As muck in common hae Jennie and me’ [DJ], often used redundantly together with other words of similar meaning – ‘muck big’, ‘muckle huge’, n. a large quantity – ‘ee wunni get muckle frae her’ (also sometimes mickle; it occurs in several place names).

muckle Heid (mu-kul-kor-bee-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Thorlieshope Burn. It runs parallel to Little Muckle Corbie Sike.

Muckle Cote (mu-kul-kó’) n. former name of a farm near West Cote in Cavers Parish, perhaps essentially the same as the modern West Cote. The farm of ‘Little Cote’ lay further to the east. William Dryden and William Blyth were listed there in 1694 – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes’ [T] (it is ‘Miklecoatt’ in 1694).

Muckle Dood (mu-kul-dód) n. hill between Langhope Burn and Todrig Burn, just west of Todrig. It reaches a height of 363 m and has Little Dood as its eastern spur.

Muckle Heid (mu-kul-heed) n. Muckle Head, hill in upper Liddesdale, to the east of Cliffhope Burn. It reaches a height of 422 m.

Muckle Knowe (mu-kul-now) n. hill just to the north of Mabonlaw farm.

Muckle Knowe (mu-kul-now) n. hill in the upper Borthwick valley, just west of Wolfecleuchhead, reaching a height of 425 m.

Muckle Knowe (mu-kul-now) n. hill just to the right of the B711 after Alemoor Loch. It reaches a height of 349 m and is part of Bellendean Rig, with Little knowe to the south-east.

Muckle Knowe (mu-kul-now) n. hill between the Priesthaugh and Dod Burns, to the south of Gray Coat. It reaches a height of 396 m and has a cairn on a rocky outcrop a little south of the peak (it is ‘Meikle Knowe’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the muckle leet (thu-mu-kul-lee’) n. phrase used in the 18th and early 19th centuries for the list of acquaintances named by the friends listed by the Cornet. This formed the longer list of people formally invited to the Common Riding festivities – ‘There was the Cornet’s leets, enumerating his own circle of acquaintances, and there was the ‘muckle leet’, prepared by the Cornet in consultation with his immediate associates’ [WSR].

Muckle Mou’d Meg (mu-kul-mood-, -mowd-meg) n. actually Agnes Murray, daughter of the Laird of Elibank, apparently hard to marry off because of her appearance, she eventually married Sir William Scott of Harden in a choice between her and the gallowgs. Details of the real marriage are preserved in 2 separate contracts, separated by a few months in 1611. The romanticised story is told in the ballad, one version of which is Hogg’s ‘The Fray at Elibank’. Wullie Landles also wrote a long poem based on the story – ‘In loan or steedin’ wher’er they saw her, Muckle Mou’d Meg was the name they’d caa her’ [WL]. ‘What Am A ti dae, mun, what Am A ti dae? Ave either got ti mairry Meg or face the hingin tree. Was ever man gien sic a choice, doon through a history? What Am A ti dae, mun, what Am a ti dae?’ [IWL].

Muckle Sike (mu-kul-sik) n. small stream in the headwaters of Twislehope Burn in the upper Hermitage valley, south of Twislehope Hope. It rises near Mid Hill joining East Grain to become Deep Gill.

mucklelest (mu-kul-ist) adj. biggest – ‘...and what a haggis she got, the mucklelest chieftain o the puddin race imaginable, threi fit in diameter ...’ [IWL].

Muckle Swine Cleuch (mu-kul-swön-kloche) n. stream that rises on Needs Law and flows westwards to join the Caddroun Burn near Singdean. Cathide Sike is a small side stream. Little Swine Cleuch lies just to the south (it is marked ‘Swines Cleuch’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Muckle Thwarter Gill (mu-kul-thwar’-urgil) n. stream in eastern Liddesdale, rising on Thwartergill Head and running southwards to join the Kershop Burn to the west of Scotch Kershop.

muckle ti mean (mu-kul-ti-meen) adj., arch. much to be pitied, to be greatly sympathised with – ‘Folk are muckle ti mean that beide on aether seido o the Mairches atween twae prood an towty countries ’at canna grei an are ayie cuissenoo’’ [ECS]. ‘Even my douce auld neebor The Moat Looks muckle to mean and lane’ [DH], ‘The poor o’ the parish are muckle to mean In a but or a ben they dwell by their lane’ [RF] (noted by E.C. Smith).

muckle wheel (mu-kul-wheel) n., arch. simple design for a spinning wheel popular in the 18th century. In the earliest form there was a large, wooden fly-wheel, which was propelled by a shove of the hand, with the operator walking backwards to draw out the yarn, the length of which was then wound on a spindle and the process repeated. Later a drive belt linked the small spindle to the large wheel, which was still typically driven by hand until foot treadles came in much later. This was the first machine to be widely used in the beginnings of the knitwear industry in Hawick, and was common in homes into the 19th century. It was effectively replaced by the ‘spinning jenny’ – ‘...a small trade in yarns spun by women on the ‘muckle’ wheel ...’ [WSR] (also known as the ‘meikle wheel’; cf. little wheel).

Muckle Whitlaw see Meikle Whitlaw

Muckle Wrae Cleuch (mu-kul-rä-klooch) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Windy Knowe and lying to the west of Little Wrae Cleuch. Both streams have steep gorges.

Muckle Willie (mu-kul-wi-lee) n. nickname for William Scott in 1599.

muck-sel (muk-sel) adj. very dirty, literally ‘muck itself’, or ‘muck’s self’ – ‘We could be muck’s sel and dirt teh the emboles’ [HAST1958] (also written ‘muck’s sel’ and variants).

mudgeons (mu-jinz) n., pl., arch. movements of the features showing displeasure or scorn.

Madie (mu-dee) n. James C. (19th C.) teacher of the Academy based at the Subscription Rooms in the mid-19th century. He was later joined by James Brand, but apparently a clash of personalities led Brand to leave and start his own school. The school was known as ‘Hawick High School’ and was in competition with the public ‘Buccleuch School’ across the street. It ran until around 1874. He eventually wound up the school...

and left Hawick, possibly because of the competition from ‘Brand’s Schuill’. He also served as Session Clerk for Hawick Free Kirk 1866–74. In about 1874 he was recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick (see also Moodie).

Mudie’s monkeys (mu-deez-mung-keez) n., pl. former nickname for pupils at the Subscription Rooms Academy, taught by Mr. Mudie, and used as a taunt by pupils from the Grammar School (‘Dodds’s whulps’).

muffatei (mu-faw-ti) n., arch. a muffetee, small muff, usually worn over the wrists.

mug (mug) v. to handle messily, touch with dirty fingers, bungle — ‘deh mug they photis’, n., arch. a bungle, instance of messy handling.

mugger (mu-gur) n., arch. an itinerant tinker — ‘Originally muggers were a bohemian class of the tinker (tinkler in Hawick) kind, but the word has come to denote ‘people of disreputable habits and appearance’. An inference is that the old name of mugger was derived from the nature of the wares sold by these people, viz., earthenware, crockery, ‘mugs’, etc.’ [ECS], ‘…A stan-nin’, droolin’, at your place, Like hauf-sterved muggers: Sma’ credit to the human race, Ye hungry buggers!’ [DH].

muggit (mu-gee’, -gi’) adj., arch. exhausted — ‘A’ m fair muggit oot’ [GW].

muggit (mu-gee’, -gi’) adj., arch. soiled or spoiled through ill-use — ‘Muggeet is allied closely to maiggeet, though not necessarily inferring actual handling or fingering, whereas the latter term does. On the other hand, the rough ‘fondling’ which a kitten often receives at the hands of a child is more often spoken of as a muggeen than as a maiggeen, probably more from the effect than from the deed’ [ECS] (so mug and cf. maigit).

muify (mi-fee) adj., poet. steamy, humid, warm and moist — ‘Oot in the muify stable She socht a place to lie’ [WL] (cf. muth).

muil in wi (mil-in-wi) v., arch. to seek intimate acquaintance with, especially by insinuation — ‘Ti muil in wui = to insinuate or wheedle one’s friendship or companionship upon another’ [ECS], ‘Frost muillers the clods’ [GW] (noted by E.C. Smith).

muillery (mi-lu-ree) adj., arch. crumbly.

muilling (mi-lin) n., arch. a crumb — ‘There was a gey little hote o muilleens left for Lazarus!’ [ECS], ‘A herbour for auld muillins O’ lang-forgotten pieces …’ [DH] (also spelled ‘muilllen’).

muils (milz) n., pl., arch. earth of a graveyard — ‘Let this beide as a merk o the respeck o the wret-iter …ti yin that may the muils lie licht on; the auld yeh-teime keeper o Jethart Aibbey!’ [ECS] (cf. moools).

muin (miin, min, moon) n., arch. the Moon — ‘A duil mirk nicht an’ nac muin’ [??], ‘In a far Scots moor ’neath the siller mune, A plover’s cry in the cluds abune …’[JYH], ‘Wi’ awe-struck face, the startled mune Stood still an’ glowered’ [WP], ‘Through the hert o’ the hills, By the liicht o’ the stars and the mune’ [WL], ‘The mune she shines sae bright, Till a’ the yirth is marlt wi’ The grymnis o’ her liicht’ [DH], ‘…wi a last gledge at St. Mary’s clock keekin owre the ruifs like a sma local moon’ [DH], a month — ‘He wad sit a muin’[GW] (also spelled ‘mune’ and pronounced with a variety of vowel sounds).

muir (mûr, newr, moor, mær) n. moor, moorland, unenclosed upland — ‘The said day the baylyes and towne Counsell did appoynt and ordaine the meiths and marches of the Common muire, moss and pasturage to be ridden …’[BR1712], ‘…Yer haunts nae mair she will molest, On muir and meath’ [JH], ‘I met a man ootbye the muir; He watcht a rabbit in a snare’ [DH] (note that the word is now most often pronounced mair, while the older pronunciation was mûr or a deep vowel combining i and a; it is not always clear which pronunciation is meant when it is written ‘muir’).

the Muir (thu-mûr, newr, moor, mær) n. Hawick Moor (see also the Mair).

the Muir (thu-mûr, newr) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘The Mure’ in the 1541 rental roll. The precise location is uncertain, but they are listed between Brighouse and Heuchhouse, with a value of 5 shillings and 4 pence.

Muir (newr) n. Sir Adam of Rowallan (14th C.) son of William. He married Janet Muir, from the Pokellie side of the family. His children included: Adam, who succeeded; Sir Reginald, who was Chamberlain of Scotland; and Elizabeth, who married King Robert II. Sir Adam of Rowallan (d.1399) son of Sir Adam. He married Janet, daughter of John Danielson of that Ilk. He was succeeded by Archibald and probably also had daughters Jean and Elizabeth. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Thomson and their children included Bessie (b.1678) and Agnes (b.1680) and an unnamed.
child (b.1687). The witnesses in 1680 were Walter Paisley and Dand Gray (based on which, he probably lived at Weensland). He could be the Alexander who received money from the Wilton poor box in 1705. Sir Archibald of Rowallan (d.1298) son of Sir Gilchrist. He probably held lands in upper Teviotdale, like his father. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Montgomery. He was succeeded by his son William and also had daughters Jean and Margaret. He died in battle near Berwick. Archibald of Rowallan (d.1426) son of Sir Adam. He probably held the lands of Commonside, Dryden and Harwood, like generations of his family before. He married Euphame, daughter of Kennedy of Dumnuir. His eldest son John died before him and he was succeeded by his grandson John, who died at Floddon. Sir Gilchrist (d.c.1280) possibly son of Sir Adam. He was said to have gained the family seat of Rowallan Castle through marrying Isabel, daughter and heir of Walter Comyn. However, another version (in the 17th century family history by Sir William Muir) states that he was dispossessed by Comyn until Alexander III raised a sufficient force to eject the Comyns and re-establish him at Rowallan. He fought at the Battle of Largs. He was succeeded by Sir Archibald of Rowallan. He was also said by his 17th century descendant to have acquired lands in Roxburghshire through his marriage to Isabel Comyn, specifically ‘Cuminside, draden and harwoods’; these are surely the lands of Commonside, Dryden and Harwood in upper Teviotdale. Support for the connection with the Comyns comes from part of the family shield of the Muirs of Rowallan being that of the Comyns. His family were still associated with the lands of Commonside, Dryden and Over Harwood until the early 16th century. Gordon (159–?) son of Bob and Jean, he attended the High School and then trained as a graphic designer in London and New Mexico. He worked for a while as a woodblock artist in Tokyo and in 1984 was a founding partner of Border Image. Along with his old school friend Doug Veitch, he brought the Zimbabwean band the Bhundu Boys to Britain in 1986. He then managed them on a year long tour, which was pivotal in the World Music movement of the time. As a sculptor he has several pieces in public spaces, e.g. ‘Alex the Goose and Friend’ and ‘Leap of Faith’ in Belfast, a set of pieces in Coatbridge and memorials to the men who died building the Forth Bridge. James (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. His surname is written as ‘Muere’. Jean (1933–) schoolteacher and long-time Cavers resident, author of ‘Cavers: a keek in the window’ (2000). She married Acting Father Bob, and has been involved with the Archaeological Society. She also wrote ‘Airchic Oliver’s a Hunder and a Half’ and co-wrote ‘Airchic Oliver’s Birthday Cairds’ with Jim Coltman. In 2015, she and her husband and son wrote an article about the leaders of the Scottish Renaissance, MacDiarmid and Johnstone being friends of the family. John of Rowallan (d.1513) grandson of Robert and son of John and Elizabeth Stewart. In 1508 he was directed by the Privy Council to grant ‘warrandice’ to George Scott of Whames (grandson of Stephen Scott of Muirhouse) in the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood. In 1510/1 George Scott wrote a letter of acquittance, stating that he (John) had paid him (George) the £40 and 14 merks owed for these lands. He may thus be the last Muir of Rowallan to have been associated with lands in upper Teviotdale. He married Margaret, 3rd daughter of Archibald Boyd of Bonshaw; they had 4 sons (including Mungo, who succeeded) and 4 daughters. He was killed at Flodden. His great-great-great-grandson was a poet and politician, who wrote a family history. John (d.1579) Rector of Ashkirk from about the time of the Reformation. He is recorded as holding the parsonage of Ashkirk Parish until his demission in 1570, when it was presented to John Hamilton; he is there recorded as ‘John Mure’. He was deprived in 1573 for failing to subscribe to articles of religion. He is presumably the same ‘Sir John Muir’ who died in 1579 when the vicarage of Ashkirk was given to Thomas Cranstoun. John (17th C.) recorded as being in Weensland in 1687 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Blyth and the witnesses were James Gray and James Miller. He could be the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. It is possible he is the John ‘mure’ who witnessed (along with Walter Paisley) the baptism in Roberton Parish of a ‘bastard child’ of Adam Scott of Burnfoot in 1686. John (17th C.) carrier listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He could be the same as the John who was in Weensland. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Greenbank in 1785, 1786 and 1788, with his surname recorded as ‘Moor’. He married Esther Turnbull in 1784 and their children included: Nelly (b.1785); James (b.1786); and John (b.1788). He may be the 70-year old recorded at Deanburnhaugh in the 1841 census, living with Janet (probably his daughter), and Walter Nichol (who later married Janet). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleif, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert of Rowallan (d.1504) from near Kilmours in Ayrshire, he was nicknamed ‘the Rud’. He held the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood in 1462 as security for a loan to Stephen Scott of Muirhouse. He paid 200 merks for these lands, the document being signed in Edinburgh (presumably where he lived). His name is written ‘Robertus Mure de Rowallane’. In 1477 he gave a discharge to Robert Scott of ‘Dogehauch’ for the balance of the loan. It seems unlikely he ever lived in upper Teviotdale, but his family had been associated with these lands from the 13th century. He married Margaret Newton, daughter of the Laird of Mitchelhill. They had 4 sons (including John, who succeeded) and a daughter. In 1508 his grandson John was directed by the Privy Council to grant ‘warrandice’ to George Scott in the same lands. Rev. Robert (1832/3–1882) from Ayr, became minister at Holm of Balfron and then minister of Allars Church from 1864. He is said to have been of saintly character and with a very liberal outlook. He suffered from ill-health for several years and died in office, leaving a 9 month vacancy at Allars. He wrote ‘The Perpetuity of Christian Friendship’ in Logan’s ‘Words of Comfort’ and contributed articles to ‘Forward’. He married Susan, daughter of Dundee Merchant William Duncan. They had 4 daughters and 1 son: one daughter wrote short stories; one was a classical scholar; Anne Davidson, who became a well-known watercolour artist; and Sir Robert. Sir Robert, F.R.S. (1864–1959) son of Rev. Robert, he was born at Balfron, Stirlingshire, but his father became minister at Hawick shortly after he was born. He spent 16 years growing up in Hawick. He was educated at Hawick Grammar School and Teviot Grove Academy and then Edinburgh University. He chose to follow a career in pathology, first working in Edinburgh, then being offered the Chair of Pathology at St. Andrews and then he was Professor of Pathology at the University of Glasgow 1899–1936. He served on the Medical Research Council and many other bodies related with cancer and disease. During WWI he had a position overseeing hospitals in Scotland. He became a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1911, had a royal medal in 1929, was knighted in 1934 and received the Lister Medal in 1936. He was also a member of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He returned to Hawick in 1926 as the Callants’ Club guest. He was said to have a shy and aloof character, but delighted in deflating pompous colleagues. He never married, but in later life live with 2 of his sisters in Edinburgh. At the age of almost 90 he flew to Australia to visit his eldest sister. He died in Edinburgh. His ‘Manual of Bacteriology’ (1897) went through several editions, and his ‘Textbook of Pathology’ (1924) was extremely successful. Robert ‘Bob’ (1930– ) local vet, who was Acting Father in 1975. He was the first Acting Father to accompany the ‘Big Threi’ to the Coble on the Saturday. He served as President of the Callants’ Club. In 2020 he featured in a video for the song ‘The Grey’, written by his son Gordon. He is married to Jean and father of Gordon, John and Janet. William of Rowallan (13th/14th C.) son of Sir Archibald. He probably owned the lands in upper Teviotdale that were first held by his grandfather. He married a daughter of William Lindsay of Craigie and was succeeded by Sir Adam (formerly written ‘Mure’ and sometimes ‘Moor’).

muir-band (mju-ur-bawnd) n., arch. a hard layer of sand and clay below the topsoil, impervious to water, and believed to hinder the full exploitation of the land – ‘...there exists, not much below the surface, a stiff, dense and sterile clay, which denies all passage to moisture, as well as to the roots of plants...commonly denominated ‘muir-band’...’ [RJE] (also muir-bund).

muir-bund (mju-ur-bund) n., arch. a layer of hard subsoil, adj. having a hard layer (of clay, etc.) beneath the turf – ‘Underlaid by a ‘moor-band’ or a ‘moorband pan’’ [GW] (also mewr-band).

muir-burn (mju-ur-burn) n., arch. a controlled burning of moorland to encourage new growth – ‘...How grand the scene yon russet down displays, While far the withering heaths with moorburn blaze!’ [JL].

the Muir Burn (ðu-ur-, mju-er-burn) n. stream that joins the Liddel at the very southernmost point of Castleton Parish. It forms part of the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire. The area has many signs of ancient use, including rig and furrow field markings, enclosures, a former lime quarry and workings, and several burnt mounds. Additionally there is the site of a chapel, on the east bank of the stream, but over the Dumfriesshire line. The chapel remains measure about 12.5 m by 5 m, with a doorway on the south side. The hill there is still known as Chapel Knowe. This is probably the ‘landis of...
Muirhouse listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch possessed in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch (it is ‘Mire burn’ in 1718, ‘Mare Burn’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘The Mareburn’ in 1821).

Muir-cheeper (mewr-chee-pur) n., arch. the meadow pipit, Anthus pratensis (also moss-cheeper and titlin).

Muircock (mewr-, mär-kok) n. a male red grouse – ‘Where the muircock cries its burley Owre the heather plaided braes’ [WL].

Muir Ferm (mewr-ferm) n. former name for Pilmuir farm.

Muirferm (mewr-ferm) n. former name for a farmstead in Wilton Parish. It is recorded as ‘Moorfarm’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with James Grieve the farmer there. It is unclear where this was, but presumably distinct from Muirfield.

Muirfield (mewr-feeld) n. area between Groundistone and Hassendean. The lands and farm were formerly part of Hassendean Common, which was divided in the late 18th century. William Douglas was recorded there in 1772 and John Oliver in 1791. George Bell was farmer there in 1797. Andrew Little was shepherd there in 1835. Labourer Adam Brydon was there in 1841. A drove road used to pass over here, between Hassendean Common and Groundistone. To the north-east are signs of rig and furrow cultivation. To the north of the farm is a triangulation station at a height of 262 m (also called ‘Moorfield’, so marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Muirfield (mewr-feeld) n. former name for lands in Abbotrule. It is recorded in the 1678 valuation roll as ‘Muirfield acres (Abbotrule)’ when Charles Kerr held the teinds.

Muirfowl (mewr-fowl) n., arch. the red grouse, Lagopus scoticus – ‘The muirfowl a’ they kenn’d her weel, The maukin oft she gar’d them squeal’ [JH].

Muirheid (mewr-heed) n. (Muirhead) Andrew see Andrew de Durisdeer. George (15th/16th C.) son and heir of Robert of Windyhill in Dumfriesshire. He appears to have had a dispute with Douglas of Cavers over the £10 lands of Denholm Mains. He was recorded in 1490 as ‘Master George Murehede’ when he granted a charter of lands within Denholm and Cavers. He gave sasine of these lands to William Douglas of Cavers in 1491/2. He was said to be a ‘familiar servitor’ of the King and was probably related to Master Richard ‘Murehead’ who was Lord Clerk Register and Secretary. He married Anabelle Grierson, with whom he is recorded in a charter for Windyhills in 1506/7. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1479 when James Alemoor of that Ilk and John Turnbull ‘in the Fithe’ were ordered to pay rentals to him for his lands in Cavers Parish. Additionally William Douglas of Cavers did not appear when called to pay the £25 owed for the mails of these same lands. In 1490 his son and heir George had a charter from James IV for lands in ‘the dominical lands of Denhame, and ten-pound land lying in the town and territory of Cavers.’ He is recorded as being of ‘Windihillis’, which is probably the village of Windyhills near Closeburn, Dumfriesshire. Witnesses to the document were Bishop Robert Muirhead of Glasgow and Dean Richard Muirhead of Glasgow, who were presumably relatives. Rev. Robert (1706/7–84) minister of Southdean Parish from 1756 until his death. He married Elizabeth Ainslie in 1779, and she died in 1800.

Muirhen (mewr-, mär-h) n. a female red grouse.

Muirhouse (mewr-hoos) n. Muirhouse, former name for lands in the barony of Crichton and county of Roxburghshire. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 15th century. The name is lost, and the precise location is uncertain (but somewhere near Pathhead). Stephen Scott had a charter of Muirhouse in 1450 and a sasine in 1463; he appears to be the same man who was also ‘of Wilton’ as well as other lands, and was a son of Robert Scott of Rankleburn. Muirhouse was inherited by Stephen’s son Robert, who had a sasine in 1464, then there was a dispute over inheritance by Robert’s son George (also of Borthaugh), with a counter-claim by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. George Scott must have won this case, since his son John had a confirmation in these lands in 1526/7 (note that there are many other places of the same name, including one near Lilliardsedge, another near Dyfesdale in Dumfriesshire and at least 6 others in Midlothian; it is ‘Murhaus’ in 1464 and ‘Myrhaus’ in 1505).

Muirhoose (mewr-hoos-law) n. Muirhooselaw, place name south of Maxton, being essentially the same place as Ancrum Moor and Lilliard’s Edge, and hence sometimes referred to as the site of the Battle of Ancrum Moor in 1545. A trial of 1502 describes how 4 Henrisons were taken from their farm there by rievers and ransomed to the English. It is recorded being leased from Thomas Hamilton to John Haltburton in the 17th century. Haliburton of Muirhooselaw gave evidence at the trial of George Turnbull of Belses in 1603. Many of the buildings of the estate are in a picturesque pink-red sandstone. There is a triangulation pillar above the farmhouse, at a height of 178 m (the name ‘Muirhoose’, now lost, deriving from the Old English ‘mor hus’, meaning ‘house on the moor’, first appears about 1200, while this name first appears in 1529 as ‘Murrieslaw’ and is ‘Moreislaw’ in 1603; it is ‘Murrislaw’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Muirknowe (mooor-, mewr-, mür-now) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Riddell. According to the services of heirs in 1636 and 1669 they corresponded to part of the lands of West Lilliesleaf (it is ‘Murieknow’ in 1636 and ‘Muiriknow’ in 1669).

Muirlaw (mewr-lin) n., poet. moorland – ‘When Hawick bonnie brig ye cross, An’ up the muirland’ striddle, Ye canna lang be at a loss, Ca’ in to Rummie Riddell’ [JR].

Muirlane (mewr-, mewr-, mür-lind) n. moorland – ‘I like to drink the muirlane wells, For that was ye the name for me’ [DA], ‘...Ma mother’s muirlane hame’ [JEDM], ‘Gin ye will leave your muirlane hame, An’ kin o’ low degree, To wed wi’ ane o’ noble name, – Wi’ rank an’ wealth to gie!’ [JT], ‘...Bi the burns o’ the muirlane where lanely whaups cry’ [DH], ‘When the snell wind is nirlin sair, Blawin’ in owre the muirlane bare ...’ [WL].

Muirlaw (mewr-, mür-law) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers. It is listed as ‘Murelaw’ in a 1511 charter of the Douglases of Cavers, along with ‘Drileth, Elrechill, and Dennummains’. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. The precise location is unknown, but presumably near Denholm (it is ‘Murlaw’ in 1687 and ‘Muirlaw’ in 1698).

Muir-man (mür-, mooor-man) n., poet. an inhabitant of the moors, outdoor worker, particularly on the Border – ‘It fell about the Lammas time, When the muir-men won their hay’ [T], ‘Muirmen were mawin’ hay far doun The hill-side, lowne an’ braid ...’ [ECB].

Muir Park (mewr-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish, valued at £29 4s in 1779. It was listed separately from Minto Muir Park, and was mong lands disposed to Sir John Dalrymple in liferent. In 1811 it was owned by Lord Minto.

Muir Plantin (mewr-plan-tin) n. plantation to the east of the A7 between Newton and Groundstone Heights, lying to the south of Muirfield.

Muirshaugh (mewrz-hawch) n. former lands in the Barony of Hawick. The exact location is unknown. They are listed along with Kirkton and others as part of the lands for which Anna Duchess of Buccleuch was superior in 1686 (it is ‘Mureshaugh’ in 1686).

Muirside (mewr-sid) n. former name for a farm in Wilton Parish. It may be the same as Muirfield. James Nichol was there in 1791.

Music (miu-zeek) n., arch. music – ‘...Nae music, truth taac tell’ [WL].

Muislie see Muselee

Misty (mis-tee) adj., arch. musty.

Muith (miith) adj., arch. warm and misty – ‘A muith morning’ [JoJ], soft, calm, comfortable.

Muitt (miu) v., arch. to tire, fatigue.

Muittit (miu’-ce’, -’i’) pp., adj., arch. exhausted, fatigued – ‘A was that muittit, A gaed ti bed at neine an A sleepteet on till echt, gey nerr the clock roond, and still A wasa sleepteet-oot!’ [ECS], ‘A’m fair muittit oot wi wui weshin an errin, an thing’ [ECS] (also written ‘muittiteet’).

Muittit oot (miu’-ce’, -’i-oo’) pp., adj., arch. exhausted, tired out, dog-tired – ‘It wasna leike as A wasa muittit oot or onyways trasht ...’ [ECS], ‘A’m muittit oot an’ fair platchin’’ [GW] (also written ‘muittiteet’, etc.).

Muive (mūv) v., arch. to move.

Mulligrumphs (mu-lee-grumfs) n., arch. a fit of bad temper, snit fit, sulks.

Munro (mun-ro) n. Adam (b.1834) son of William, he continued the rope-making business of his father. In 1861 he was still living with his parents and siblings at 1 Bourtree Place. He married Christina Govenlock and their children included: Mary (b.1871); and William Alexander (b.1873), who was a chemist. Daniel (b.1831/2) from Ireland, he was appointed Superintendent of the Roxburghshire Constabulary by the new Town Council in 1861. In the 1861 census he was living on Jedburgh High Street with his wife Elizabeth and children Janet, Archibald, Helen and Daniel. He was given an increased police force to improve law and order on the streets of Hawick. However, he was dismissed in 1867 and charged with breach of trust and embezzlement.

Eliza (b.1829/30) daughter of Congregational minister and rope-maker William. She was mistress of the Infants’ School on Buccleuch Street in 1852.

John (17th C.) listed among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the John, married to Isobel Henderson, whose children born in Hawick included: Helen (b.1680); William (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1687). Robert (1868–1955) born in Alness, he was educated at Aberdeen Grammar School and Edinburgh University. Admitted to the Scottish Bar in 1893, he became King’s Counsel in 1910. He was Liberal M.P. for Wick 1910–18 and Liberal M.P. for Roxburgh and Selkirk after 1918–22, the first such M.P. after the Border Burghs constituency was dissolved. He was Privy Counsellor from 1913 and Lord Advocate 1913–16, before becoming Secretary of State for Scotland 1916–22. He later became Lord Alness, Chief Justice Clerk. He was created Baron Alness on his retirement from the bench in 1933. He was later Lord-in-Waiting to King George VI and awarded the Grand Cross of the Order of the British Empire. He opened the War Memorial in the Park at a special ceremony in 1920. Rev. William (1798/9–1883) rope-maker from Berwick who became Congregational Church minister for around 40 years. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory he was a rope and twine maker and flax dresser on the High Street. He witnessed a baptism for weaver Charles Scott in 1826. He appears to have first become minister of the newly (re-)formed congregation in 1836, which faltered for several years, with a 2nd splinter Church also forming in 1842. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was a rope-maker at the East Port and in the 1841 census he was at ‘Eastend’ and still a rope-maker. By 1851 he was at 1 Bourtree Place and minister of the ‘Cong. Union Chapel’. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was still listed as a roper-maker, and separately as minister of the Independent Chapel on Melgund Place. In 1847 he invited John Rutherford of Kelso to preach at a series of prayer meetings in Hawick, which took place in the Spring of 1848, ultimately lasted for 7 weeks, and led to the founding of the Evangelical Union Kirk in Hawick (the present Congregational Kirk). However, some dispute led to him to withdraw his support from this ‘mission’, hence the forming of the E.U. Kirk, separate from his own. He was Chairman of the Parochial Board for 20 years and active in public service. He was also first Vice-President of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society. He was noted for courageously visiting the sick and dying during the 1849 cholera epidemic, as a result of which he had a public funeral. He was succeeded as minister in 1873 by Rev. W.L. Walker, by which time the congregation must have been dwindling. He is probably the William Munro who is recorded in about 1874 as owner of the ‘particrate lands’ that had earlier been owned by Robert Herkness. He married Alison, daughter of Yeddie Small. Their children included: Alexander (b.1826); Eliza (b.1830), who was an infant teacher; Adam (b.1834), who continued the rope-making business; Agnes (b.c.1837); Alison (b.c.1839); Margaret (‘Maggie’, b.c.1842); William Alexander (b.c.1844); Charles (b.c.1847); Mary (b.c.1850); and an unnamed son who died in 1840. He may also have had a son John who, along with 2 other Hawick men, was in a Tweed manufacturing partnership in Cork (but there may be confusion over the name). A portrait of him exists. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery (with ropemaker symbols). William Alexander (b.c.1845) son of Rev. William. He was a clerk at Thomas Purdon & Sons. He was connected with Allars Kirk for its last 5 decades, being Session Clerk. He was described as being ‘notable for his fine appearance’ (also written ‘Monroe’).

munsie (mun-see) n., arch. someone deserving contempt, a monstrosity, fright, sight, spectacle – ‘...an aamaist the whole road-end cam oot-her-oot ti waal an glowr at the unordnar mun-sie’ [ECS] (from French ‘monsieur’; mainly from the Scottish North-east).

Agnes (17th C.) listed at Todshawhaugh among ‘The poor in Haivick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Agnes (b.1806/7) grocer on the Loan. She was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 she was living with her husband William, a woollen spinner and their children. In 1851 she was a widow, living at about 11 Loan with her children Thomas, Adam, William, Agnes and Robert. It is not known what her maiden name was. Agnes (b.1822/3) straw hat maker in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 she was living with her sisters Jane (also a straw hat maker) and Margaret (draper and spirit dealer) and brother William (surgeon) at about 1 South Hermitage Street. In 1851 she was a milliner, living with her sisters Margaret and Jane. Agnes (1829–1916) daughter of Andrew of Spittal Tower. She married railway guard James Lambert and later kept a washhouse at 29 Wellogate Place. Her daughter Helen kept up the wash-house. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1428/9 when he gave a sasine at the command of Archibald, Earl of Douglas, of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He may have been an officer or bailie for the Barony or Earl, or possibly he held the rights of the Barony while the heir to Drumlanrig was a minor. He is probably the ‘Sandris of murray’ on an assize for lands in Bemersyde in 1425. He is also probably the ‘Alexandrum de Murrase’ who was on the inquest for the lands of Eilrig in 1426. Probably the same ‘Alexandro de Murray’ witnessed the 1431 document transferring Heap from the Langlands’ to the Scotts; in his attestation to the same transfer he is ‘Alysander off Murray off Cranstoun’. In 1443 he is ‘Alexander de Moravia’ of Cranston when witness to a charter for William Cranston of Crailing. Alexander (d.bef. 1485) Rector of Hawick. He was 2nd son of John of Philiphaugh, brother of Patrick of Falahill and uncle of John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’. As a cleric, he was sometimes referred to as ‘Master’. He was mentioned regularly in the Exchequer Rolls from at least 1460, being King’s Receiver and then Clerk of the Chancery from 1465. He was Clerk and Director of the Chancery of Scotland in 1477. He was also one of the Auditors of the Exchequer and a Canon of Moray from at least 1464. His name appears between 1476 and 1482 as Rector of Hawick. In 1476/7 he was listed as Rector of Hawick and Director of the Chancery when he has a charter for lands in Berwick. In 1479 he brought an action against David Scott of Buccleuch for the sum of 44 pounds of tax belonging to the church, but...
collected by Scott; there is no record of how this was resolved. Also in 1479 he was assigned the ‘grassum’ for part of the lands of ‘Warmwod’ in Ettrick Ward. He was listed as ‘rectore de Hawk’ when he witnessed a charter for James Hunter, Rector of Cranston. In 1482 he was also recorded as Rector of ‘Petty and Brachly’ when witness to an Inverness-shire document (along with the Rector of Ettrick Forest and others). About 1484 he appears to have himself been ‘rector of The Forest’ (i.e. Yarrow Kirk), and was still Director of the Chancery. His brother William is mentioned in 1485, by which time he was deceased. In 1536/7 it is written that John Scott took over as Vicar of Hawick following the death of Alexander Murray; however, this must either be an error or a later man of the same name. Alexander of Orchard (16th C.) recorded in 1575/6 making a complaint regarding ‘mails’ for Elibank. It is unclear how he was related to other Murrays, but he was surely connected with the Murrays of Blackbarony. Alexander (d.1682) son and heir of Sir Robert of Priestfield. In 1672 he was served heir to his father’s lands in Hawick. This was explicitly the annual rent of 600 merks for the 20 husbandlands of lands in the east of the Town of Hawick and 8 husbandlands of land in the west of Hawick. It is unclear where these lands were, why they were owned by Murrays, and what happened to them. He married Janet, daughter of James Rocheid of Inverleith. He appears to have himself been ‘rector of The Forest’ (i.e. Yarrow Kirk), and was still Director of the Chancery. His brother William is mentioned in 1485, by which time he was deceased. In 1536/7 it is written that John Scott took over as Vicar of Hawick following the death of Alexander Murray; however, this must either be an error or a later man of the same name. This was explicitly the annual rent of 600 merks for the 20 husbandlands of lands in the east of the Town of Hawick and 8 husbandlands of land in the west of Hawick. It is unclear where these lands were, why they were owned by Murrays, and what happened to them. He married Janet, daughter of James Rocheid of Inverleith. He was succeeded by his son Sir Alexander of Melgum (1682–1713), who married Grizel, daughter of Patrick Kynynmound of that Ilk. Alexander (b.c.1790) from Brownmuir in Selkirkshire, he was a cattle dealer in Lilliesleaf. He lived with his brothers William (a teacher) and Walter (an agricultural labourer) on the Loan in 1841 and on the south side of Main Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included Thomas, Jessie, Margaret and John W. He was still alive in 1861, although a widower. Alexander Davidson (1840–1907) son of Thomas, clothier in Denholm and Hawick, with his mother being Mary Scott, daughter of Charles Scott, Hawick linen manufacturer. He was younger brother of Sir J.A.H. He was an apprentice at the Hawick Advertiser and was local correspondent for the Southern Reporter. He was a prominent member of the Hawick Mutual Improvement Society. He left Hawick in 1862 to become editor of the Peeblesshire Advertiser. He later was editor of the Fife Journal and Dumfries Courier, before becoming editor of the Newcastle Daily Journal, a position he held for 37 years. He married Elizabeth Stuart Honeyman of Cupar, and she died in 1926, aged 81. They had 7 children. He published a story ‘Charnwood; or, lost, found and faithful!’ in 1876, set in the Borders in the mid-19th century, and a novel ‘The Barringtons’ in 1908. Andrew of Blackbarony (16th C.) son of John, who was Burgess of Edinburgh, and died at Flodden. He was a great-grandson of John of Philiphaugh. There was a ‘retour of service’ for him to inherit his father’s lands in 1513/4, with a special dispensation because of his age. In 1541 he claimed the tenancy of the Crown lands of the wester side of ‘Warmwod’, ‘alias Quhitehauch Braa’ (in Ettrick), then occupied by Walter Scott in Synton; he also claimed Priesthope in Ettrick and Glenypet in Yarrow. He was one of the 4 ‘curators’ of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1564/5 he was listed (on the Buccleuch side) on the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, and his support was also mentioned in the 1568/9 bond. He firstly married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of William Lockhart, and had a daughter Marion, who married James Pringle of Whytbank. He secondly married Grizel Beaton, widow of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and was thus Sir Walter’s step-father. Their children were: Sir John of Blackbarony; Andrew; Sir Gideon of Elibank; William of Dunerne and Newton; Elizabeth, who married James Bothwick of Newbyres and Sir Thomas Hamilton of Priestfield; and Agnes, who married her cousin Patrick Murray of Falahill, but was mentioned in a potential marriage contract in 1568/9, part of the resolution of the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Andrew (17th C.) possibly the father of Andrew of Spittal Tower. He is said to have come from the Braemar area, and refusing to join the force under his superior, the Earl of Mar, he was forced to flee south, where he joined a troop of horsemen under Douglas of Cavers. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1648 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas. He married Margaret Scoon and their children included Adam (b.1643), Helen (b.1646) and Isobel (b.1654). His wife’s name was recorded as Janet in 1646. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Anderson and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1671. The witnesses were John Elliot and William Gray. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Kirkdean in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Andrew ‘The Hazel Dog o the Toor’ (1715–77) second son of John and brother of John (and ancestor of Sir James A.H.). He carried on running the farm tenanted by his father, Spittal Tower. He is recorded as gardener at Tower in 1753 when one of his children was baptised. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Spottiswoode, who came from an old Melrose family (her sister Isobel married James Hood of Dryburgh, ancestor of the Hoods of Lilliesleaf). Their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, were: Elizabeth (b.1747), who emigrated to Canada; Isabel (b.1751); Andrew (b.1753); William (b.1754); Jane (b.1756); John (b.1758); Helen; James (b.1764); Agnes (b.1767); and Mary (1770/1-1845). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Inglis and their children included: Thomas (b.1775); and Andrew (b.1777). He may be the spinner whose child died in Hawick in 1809. Andrew (1753-94) eldest son of Andrew and Elizabeth Spottiswood. He was a tenant farmer, with farms leased from the Dicksons of Hassendeaburn, first Westerhouses and then Newton. He was also tenant at Spittal Tower, like his father. In 1791 he was recorded at ‘Spittalhall’ when one of his children was baptised in Wilton Parish. In 1789 he married Isabella Henderson of Bonchester and she died in 1841/2 (although she was still living with her son William in Hawick in 1841). There is a story about him finding a box of gold when ploughing the fields at Westerhouses. He is supposed to have said to his wife ‘I am just going to shave and take it down to the Burn’, and then he delivered it to Mr. Dickson, who rewarded him with a year’s free rent. His children were: Andrew (1781-1848), who emigrated to Australia; Jean, who died young; James, who married a Wintrope of Hawick and was Sir J.A.H.’s grandfather; William (b.1789), stockmaker and merchant of Hawick; Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’), who married whip-maker Michael Ogilvy; Jane (b.1791), who married William Clerk; and John (b.1793), who died young. Several of his children were christened in Wilton Parish. Andrew (1781-1848) eldest child of Andrew of Spittal Tower. He was an agricultural labourer in Oxnam Parish. He married Isabella Cranston (whose sister was the grandmother of Cogsmill teacher Andrew Oliver); she died in 1832, aged 48 and is buried at Oxnam. After his wife’s death he emigrated with his family to Australia. Their children included: Robert (1811-92), who married Jane Blair and was buried at ‘Haning’ near Bendemeer, New South Wales; Margaret Ann (1813-39), who died on the voyage to Australia; Andrew (1815-46), who became ship’s master and was lost at sea; Isabella (1817-98); William (1819-76), who died at sea; Elizabeth (1821-77); and Jane (b.1824). He died near Melbourne. Andrew (b.c.1783) farmer at Old Castleton in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He was also listed there in 1841. His wife was Janet and their children included George and John. Andrew (1819/20-1907) born in Kirkton Parish, he moved to Hobkirk Parish with his father, who was a hind at Rualtownhead. In 1851 he was an agricultural labourer at Hallrule Mill and in 1861 was a ploughman at Kirknovie. In 1857 he married Betsy, the eldest daughter of the miller at Hallrule, James Laidlaw; she died in 1906. Both he and his wife died at Forkins and are buried at Hobkirk. Their children were: Isabella (b.1857), who died aged 5; and William (b.1858). Andrew (b.1821/2) son of William and brother of William and John. In the 1840s he opened a school in a room at the top of Baker Street. He later left for college, and the school was continued by his brother John, moving to the old East Bank Kirk. He returned later to assist his brother William in running the much larger school, which moved to 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place). They were living at 7 Kirkgate in 1861, presumably next to the school. This eventually became St. Mary’s and ultimately Trinity. Andrew (1823-82) son of weaver and merchant William. He was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Nichol’s Close and in 1851 at 3 Back Row. He married Isabella Brown and their children included Jane, Helen, William and John. Anne (1694-1737) daughter of Bennet, Laird of Chesters, she married her cousin John Murray, who was the Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant at Unthank, and died in 1728. In 1734 she moved to Hawick, where she died. Her son James (b.1713) emigrated to North Carolina in 1735, and is an ancestor of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Sir Archibald of Blackarony (d.bef. 1634) son of Sir John. He was knighted by James VI when he was young, and was made a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1628. He married Margaret Maule, a descendant of the house of Panmure. Their children were: Sir Alexander, 2nd Baronet; Walter of Halmire; Robert, ancestor of the Murrays of Murray’s Hall; Margaret, who married Sir John Hope; Bethia, who married Sir William Forbes of Craigievor and secondly Sir Alexander Forbes of Tolquhune; Helen, who married Sir John Carstairs; and Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Mangerton. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1719 he was heir at Hislop. He married Bessie Black and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1719, with witnesses ‘Mr’ Thomas Hume.
in Commonside, Robert Scott, tenant in Falnash and Archibald Scott in Hislop. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1733 when he married Betty Little. Archibald (b.1744) was probably his son. Archibald (18th/19th C.) tailor in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. He was probably related to James (grandfather of Sir James A.H.), a tailor in Hawick, who learned his trade in Denholm. Cameron ‘Cammie’ (1775– ) son of Ernie, from Jedburgh and June, he was born in Hawick and brought up in Prestonpans and Haddington. after leaving school he joined Hawick R.F.C., being part of their 1996 cup-winning side. He later played professionally for the Borders and Edinburgh before returning to Hawick in 2001/2 and finishing his playing career with Melrose. He was first capped for Scotland in 1998, eventually gaining 24 caps. He works as a P.E. teacher at Berwickshire High School. He married Diane and they have sons Glen and Jack. Charles (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Dryden and their children included: Isobel (b.1770); Robert (b.1772); Charles (b.1776); and Daniel (b.1778). Charles Oliver (1842–1923) son of Thomas and Mary Scott, he was born in Denholm. Brother of Sir James, he was known as an engraver. He worked as a clerk in a woollen factory in Hawick until the age of 21. He then attended the Edinburgh School of Design, working by day as a lithographer. He was Gold and Silver Medalist at the Royal Scottish Academy School. He settled in London in 1868, being on the staff of 'Punch and Judy'. In London he became an engraver and was a founder member of the Royal Society of Painter Etchers. He first exhibited his plates in the Royal Academy Exhibition in 1878. He also worked on some local projects, including the reproduction of Tom Scott’s ‘Return to Hawick’, and some original etchings of Hawick, for example images of the old Town Hall and St. Mary’s Kirk. There is also a well-known picture of Sir Walter Scott’s Tomb at Dryburgh Abbey. He married Elizabeth Wilson, daughter of Archibald Campbell from Glasgow and they had 7 children. He died in Croydon. Christina nee Winthrope (18th/19th C.) daughter of Hawick writer (i.e. lawyer) Thomas. She married a Mr. Stewart and became widowed. A story is told of how she met her new husband James Murray. Apparently she dreamt she was walking in her father’s garden at the Wheathole and there met a man she did not recognise, but later saw him in East Bank Kirk (built on the site of the garden), later was introduced to him and eventually they were married. David (b.1704) son of David, he was born in Ewes Parish. He lived at Whisgills farm in Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Murray (b.1716). Their children included: Elizabeth; Jean, who married Andrew Kyle; Agnes (b.1740); David (b.1743); John (b.1746); William Easton (b.1749); and Thomas (b.1754). David (1768/9–1841) son of James and Anne Dalrymple. He was a joiner at Teindside and perhaps in the Borthwick valley. His wife Mary Anderson died in 1819, aged 43. In 1820 he secondly married Mary Wilson, daughter of a Hawick blacksmith. The Murray family living at Mossyknowe in 1841 are probably his widow Mary and children James (a journeyman joiner), Henry, David and John. David (1791/2–1815) son of Thomas, tenant at Whisgills. He was described as ‘six feet six inches high; and to a majestic and well-proportioned person, he joined the mildest dispositions of mind’. He died aged 23. David (1832/3–83) son of James, he was tenant at Whisgills, like his father. He married Elizabeth Robson, who died in 1896, aged 54. Their children included Jessie Temple (1877/8–1938) and probably James who also farmed at Whisgills. They are buried at Ettleton. David (1870/1–19:11) youngest son of William, teacher at St. Mary’s School. He trained as a doctor at Edinburgh University and became assistant to Dr. James Brydon in the Sandbed. He later married Dr. Barydon’s daughter Mary. He then worked in Dumbarton and Edinburgh, but returned to Hawick as partner to Dr. Brydon about 1901. He carried on for a few years after Brydon’s death in 1905, later taking on Dr. Samuel Davidson as a new partner, but dying himself not long after, aged only 40. He left 2 daughters. E. Judith local art teacher. In 2009, along with Lesley Fraser, she produced the booklet ‘Hawick Common Riding, An Illustrated Guide’, as well as the children’s version ‘The Kidz Guide’, distributed to senior primary pupils. ‘My First Common Riding Book’, aimed at nursery and primary school children followed. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Elliot (18th/19th C.) married Violet Elliot in 1805 in Southdean, and she died at Bonchester. Their children included Charlotte (who married Adam Bell from Camptown), Charles (who worked at Wolfelee), Walter (farm servant, who died at Old Jethart) and John (servant at Wauchope and hedger for Minto estate). Elliot (b.1840) from Hobkirk Parish. 2022
He took over as blacksmith at Chesters from his uncle John Waugh in the early 1870s. He remained as blacksmith for more than 30 years, so that between him, his uncle and his uncle’s father (Robert), they had been blacksmiths at Chesters for about 95 years. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scoon and their children included: Janet (b.1670); Margaret (b.1674); and Marie (b.1675). The witnesses in 1674 were John Murray and John Scoon (who may have been fathers or brothers of the couple). He could be the Francis born in 1643 to Alaric and ‘Manie’ Scott. Frank James (d.1943) younger brother of J.E.D. He was a plumber, like his father. He married Mary Dickie, and had 2 children, John Archibald Campbell (who worked in hosiery) and Mary Margaret. Gavin P. (19th/20th C.) 4th man to serve as Secretary for the Congregational Kirk. George (17th C.) weaver at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleton, recorded along with John on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John’s name came first and so was presumably his elder brother or father. George (b.1803/4) from Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Rulstonmead in 1861. He probably took over as shepherd there from his father, and was likely brother of Andrew. His wife was Jane and she had a son John Hume from a previous marriage. They had a daughter Jane. George (b.c.1810) grocer on the Howgate, probably at No. 16. He later worked as a mason’s labourer. He married Helen Tully and their children included Agnes, George, Janet and David. George (b.1806/7) from Castleton Parish, he was a shoemaker journeyman in Hawick. He was living at about 43 High Street in 1841 and on the Kirkwynd in 1851. His wife was Sarah and their children included Helen and Ann. George (19th C.) shepherd of Allanhaughmill. From about 1848 he was one of the first Trustees of Hawick Congregational (then Evangelical) Kirk. He could be the agricultural labourer listed at Haysike in 1841, with wife Margaret and children John, Thomas and Helen. George Oliver (b.1857) younger son of local historian Robert. In 1863 he presented to the Museum an amulet found in the Glebe allotments. He provided a horn mull (or perhaps the snuff) for the Smuffing in 1889. He became a doctor in Tunnel City, Wisconsin. He married Sarah Johnstone and their children were Robert Oliver and Agnes Ariska. George Malcolm, C.B.E. (1937/8-) educated at Hawick High School, he qualified as a Fellow of the Faculty of Actuaries in 1961. He was a Director of the Scottish Life Assurance Company and President of the Faculty of Actuaries 1994-96. He was awarded a C.B.E. in 1995. He has been President of the Callants’ Club and Hawick R.F.C., as well as honorary secretary of Edinburgh Borderers R.F.C. and involved with the Scottish Sports Council, the General Teaching Council of Scotland and Craiglockhart College. Sir Gideon of Eliebank (d.1621) 3rd son of Sir Andrew of Blackbarony. His mother was Grizel Beaton, widow of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and thus he was half-brother to Sir Walter Scott, 10th Laird of Buccleuch. Sir Walter owed him ‘males’ for the lands of Glenpyet in his last testament of 1574. In 1594 he was ‘Jedion Murray of Glenpint’ among the 180 or so followers of Sir James Johnstone who had a ‘respite’ for their role at Dryfe Sands the year before. He may have been educated for the church and was ‘chanter’ of Aberdeen. In 1590 along with John of Blackbarony, Patrick of Falahill and other Murays he was put under caution not to harm Robert Scott of Haining and James Scott, ‘callit Mekle Jame Eister’. He is probably the ‘Mr. Gedion Murray’ who witnessed a document in Edinburgh for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1591. In about 1591 he killed a man called Aitchison. In 1592, along with Walter Scott of Goldielands, he was given a commission to ‘demolish the houses and fortalices of Harden and Dryhoip’, because of Walter Scott of Harden’s involvement in the Falkland Raid. He is probably the ‘Jedion Murray of Glenpint’ listed among the supporters of Sir James Johnstone at Dryfe Sands in 1593 and about the same time he was ‘of Glenpoyte’ when he was surety for William Scott of Hartwoodmyres and Walter Scott of Stirkshaws. In 1594 he was ‘Mr. Gedeon Murray of Glenpytte’ when he witnessed a document for the Duke of Lennox and also witnessed a bond of ‘manrent’ for the Beatties to Sir Walter Scott, signed in Hawick in 1595. In 1595 the King confirmed a charter granting him ‘Elebanck, or Eleburne, in the forest and Lordship of Ettrick’. In 1596/7 Sir Walter of Buccleuch granted him the lands of Crichton, this being signed in Hawick. He was Provost of Crichton, this patronage later going to the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1598 he acted as commissioner to Sir Walter Scott in a contract with the Homes of Wedderburn regarding the lands of Whitsome, and witnessed a charter at Branxholme in 1599. In 1598/9 he resigned the lands of Easter and Wester Deloraine and Carterhaugh to Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Braxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1602 he and his brother John were responsible for removing Scott of Hundlehope and others from lands belonging to Stewart of Traquair, and he was also surety for Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He was still witnessing documents for Scott of Buccleuch in 1603. In 1604 he and other Murrays had a caution not to harm the Stewarts of Traquair and elsewhere. He was knighted in 1605 and appointed as one of the 5 Scottish Commissioners given responsibility to ruthlessly carry out the pacification of the Borders. In 1606 he added lands of Langshaw (in Eildon Water) and Whytbank (in Selkirkshire) to his estates. In 1607 he was mentioned in a Melrose document relating to the lands of Langshaw (where he is ‘Jedeane’ and is referred to in relation to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch as ‘beand full sister and brother bairnes’). In 1608 he was appointed to ensure that the Presbytery of Jedburgh elected ‘a constant moderator’, against the wishes of the ministers. In 1608 (although the date may be suspect) he received the teinds of Hawick Kirk in a ‘tack’ by Rev. William Fowler, with the consent of Lord Scott of Buccleuch. This was to last for his lifetime and then 19 more years. In 1610 he became a Privy Councillor and Comptroller and was named to the Commission for keeping peace in Selkirkshire. He served on the Judiciary Court in Jedburgh in 1611. He represented Selkirkshire in Parliament in 1612. In 1613 he was appointed Treasurer Depute and created Lord Elibank. He was Depute-Treasurer for the Justices who prosecuted the Earl of Orkney in 1615. He made preparations for the Royal visit to Scotland in 1617. He appears to have been a willing instrument of the King in imposing Episcopacy on the Scottish people. In 1618 he represented Scotland at an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. In 1524/5 he was one of those who promised to help keep order with the newly appointed Warden and Lieutenant of the Borders, the Earl of Angus. He is probably the James recorded in 1526 as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. In 1527 he had an agreement with Sir Robert Stewart of Minto, respectively. He held several lands in Selkirkshire and also Peeblesshire. In 1519/20 he resigned ‘Eldinghop’ (in Yarrow) to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was on an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. In 1524/5 he was one of those who promised to help keep order with the newly appointed Warden and Lieutenant of the Borders, the Earl of Angus. He is probably the James recorded in 1526 as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. In 1527 he had an agreement with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme to end their feud; he agreed to forgive the Scots and their allies for all former killings and spoliation in return for 500 merks Scots, and he also agreed to end his dispute over the lands of Kirkurd. In 1528 he agreed to deliver up all charters etc. relating to Kirkurd and give up any claim to the lands. Also in 1528 he assigned his lands of Lewenshope to his wife. He married Margaret Home and/or a daughter

Gordon F. (20th C.) Town Hall Legal Assistant 1958–60 and Depute Town Clerk 1960–62. Graeme (d.2000) well known reciter, brother of Philip. Harold James Ruthven (1868–1955) son of Sir James A.H. He was known as an educationalist, inspector of schools, chess historian and champion of left-handedness. He wrote an article ‘The Family of Sir James Murray’ in the 1928 Archaeological Society Transactions and a biographical sketch of his father’s life in the 1934 Transactions. He also provided family-related notes to James Haining for his monumental inscriptions. Helen (b.c.1780) grocer in Newcastleton, listed in 1837. In 1841 she was at about 2 Langholm Street. Henry (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was married to Ann Bell and they had several children baptised at Netherraw and Upper Raw. Their children included Adam (b.1795), Robert (b.1797), Betty (b.1799), James (b.1802), Margaret (b.1806) and George (b.1806). James of Bowhill (d.1513) recorded in about 1529 in the Selkirk Protocol Books. He was said to have ‘died under the banner of our deceased supreme lord king James IV’ when his only daughter and heir Isabel gave the south part of Bowhill to her uncle, Michael Scott of Aikwood, and Michael’s son William. Also in 1529 his daughter granted her lands of the west side of Kershope to Michael Scott. This suggests that he had married a sister of Michael Scott of Aikwood. He was probably related to the deceased Thomas of Bowhill recorded in 1539. James of Falahill (d.c.1529) elder son of John ‘the Outlaw’. His sisters Elizabeth, Isabel and Janet married Sir James Douglas of Cavers, Robert Scott of Howpasley and Sir Robert Stewart of Minto, respectively. He held several lands in Selkirkshire and also Peeblesshire. In 1519/20 he resigned ‘Eldinghop’ (in Yarrow) to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was on an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. In 1524/5 he was one of those who promised to help keep order with the newly appointed Warden and Lieutenant of the Borders, the Earl of Angus. He is probably the James recorded in 1526 as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. In 1527 he had an agreement with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme to end their feud; he agreed to forgive the Scots and their allies for all former killings and spoliation in return for 500 merks Scots, and he also agreed to end his dispute over the lands of Kirkurd. In 1528 he agreed to deliver up all charters etc. relating to Kirkurd and give up any claim to the lands. Also in 1528 he assigned his lands of Lewenshope to his wife. He married Margaret Home and/or a daughter of Sir John Cranston and was succeeded by his son Patrick in 1530. James (16th C.) tenant in Sundhope in the Yarrow Valley. He was recorded in 1539/40 as ‘layman of the diocese of Glasgow when he was decreed to be within the 4th grade of consanguinity with Marion, daughter of Adam Dalgleish of Deuchar. James (16th C.) tenant of Swinstead in Kirkton Parish. In 1581 he was ‘in Swynsteids’ along with Hector Jardine when they (along with several Elliots) witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs from his deceased brother George Gledstains. Sir James (17th C.) son of John of Falahill and Philiphaugh. He was knighted by Charles I. In 1628–33 he represented Selkirkshire. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Craig of Riccarton. He was served heir to his father’s 5-pound Chapel lands of Caerlenrig, and also a huge number of other lands. He moved to England and lived quietly there during the Civil War. He married Jean Carnegie, Viscountess of Stormont. He died without issue. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Armstrong and their son William was baptised in 1648. James (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when his daughter Agnes with Isobel Nixon was baptised in Hawick. This was labelled ‘for: in Cavers’, making it clear that the couple were unmarried and that at least one of them was from Cavers Parish. The witnesses were Thomas Johnston and William Nixon (probably related to Isobel). James (17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1668. James (d.c.1682) recorded as tenant ‘in Mains of Liddesdail’ in 1682, when his will is listed. He was surely related to Adam who was at Mains in 1694. James (17th C.) herd at Borthwickshiels in 1683. His daughter Bessie was baptised in Roberton Parish. She was at Burnhead in 1709 and at Newton in 1711. His children included: Jean (b.1709); and William (b.1711). He could be the James who married Elspeth (or Janet) Turnbull in 1711. He was at Craikshiel in 1718 and Craik in 1720. He probably married Bessie Dickson in Roberton in 1717 and their children included: Bessie (b.1718); and an unnamed son (b.1720). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Blacker in 1728. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Dykes in 1730 and 1738. His children included Isabel (b.1730) and Adam (b.1738). He may be the James who married Mary (or Marion) Rutherford in 1726, the marriage being recorded in Bedrule and Hobkirk parishes. James (1713–81) born at Unthank in the Ewes valley, son of James and Ann Bennet. His father died in 1728 and in 1732 the lease of Unthank and Fiddleton were taken by Robert Elliot of Fenwick and Walter Scott (his cousin, farmer at Commonside and uncle of Sir Walter Scott the writer). He then became a merchant’s apprentice in London, and emigrated to North Carolina (it is said in 1735, although this is impossibly early, since his wife was only born in 1724), while his mother moved to Hawick in 1734 (where she died). He married his cousin Barbara, daughter of Andrew Bennet of Chesters; probably the same Barbara’s ‘bride money’ was paid in Ancrum Parish in 1744. Their children were Elizabeth Dorothy, Archibald, John, Jean and two children who died in infancy. Elizabeth married Edward Hutchinson Robbins, their daughter Annie Jean Robbins married Joseph Lyman, whose daughter Catherine Robbins Lyman married Waren Delano and had a daughter Sara (or Sallie) Delano, who mas the mother of U.S. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt. James himself was exiled after the American Revolution, being loyal to King George, and dying in Halifax, Nova Scotia. Some of his correspondence (including a brief account of a visit to Hawick) was published in ‘Letters of James Murray, Loyalist’ (1901). James (1716/7–92) resident of Teindside. He married Anne Dalrymple, who died at Teindside in 1809, aged 80. Their children included: William, James, Nelly, Elizabeth (or Betty), and James (b.1766), who probably all died young: David (1768/9–1841), joiner; and John, who also died at Teindside at the age of 70. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Burnfoot in 1747 and 1751. He married Helen ‘Hoom’ (i.e. Hume) and their children included: Margaret (b.1746); John (b.1747); Janet (b.1749); and William (b.1751). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden and in 1751 were Robert and John Scott. James (18th C.) resident at Borthwickbrae in 1743 and 1753. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included Helen (b.1743), Robert (b.1745), Thomas (b.1747), Bessie (b.1749), Ann (b.1751), Walter (b.1753) and James (b.1755) were probably also his children. He is probably the wright in Mains (presumably Borthwick Mains) who died in 1775 and is buried in Robertson Cemetery, along with his wife Anne ‘Rickeltoun’ (d.1797). James (b.1741) 2nd son of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He trained for the ministry and became minister at the Presbyterian Church in Harbottle. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: William (b.1768); James (b.1773); and William (b.1778). James (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. In 1783 he was at ‘Drummondshall’. He married Mararet Scott and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1783); Janet (b.1787); Margaret (b.1795); and William (b.1797). The witnesses in 1783 were John and James Carruthers. James ‘Jamie’ (b.c.1755) probably from Ettrick, although possibly the James, son of James, born in Robertson Parish in 1755. His story of encountering a ghost at the Bishop’s Stone (on Woll Rig) in about 1775 was recounted to someone in 1831 who wrote about it in the Border Counties’ Magazine in 1880 (reprinted in 1904). He married Jean Rae in Yarrow in 1810; she had worked as a servant at Headshaw. Their children included: Jean (b.1811); and William (b.1815). James (1756/7–1827) joiner at Borthwickbrae, probably the son of James born in 1755. He is recorded as owner of a horse at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is buried in Robertson Cemetery. His children included: William (1802/3–27). He may be the same as the James who lived at Borthwick Mains. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Borthwick Mains in 1788 and 1792 and Borthwick Burnfoot in 1798. He married Ann Turnbull in Robertson in 1787 and their children included: Betty (b.1788); James (b.1790); Walter (b.1792); and an unnamed son (b.1798). James of Philiphaugh (1769–1852) 3rd son of John. In 1809 he married Mary Dale, daughter of Henry Hughes. They had 3 sons and a daughter, and he was succeeded by the eldest son, John. James (b.c.1775) born in Yarrow Parish, perhaps son of John. He worked as a soldier, being listed as Private and then Corporal in the Dumfriesshire Militia. He married Mary Scott in Canongate, Edinburgh in 1803; his wife was daughter of miller Robert Scott (perhaps miller at Roughheugh) and born in Wilton Parish. His children (born and baptised in Musselburgh, Dalkeith and Wilton, but all registered in Wilton) were: John (b.1806); Robert (b.1808); and James (b.1810). There was also an earlier son, whose name is unknown. The baptism of James in 1810 was witnessed by John Thomline and George Wallace. He may have later had children: Christina (b.1824/5); Thomas (b.1812/3);
Andrew (b.1826/7); Mary (b.1827/8); and Helen (b.1829/30). The family were living at ‘Nixon’s Mill’ (probably Lynnwood Cottages) in 1841, where he was a wool spinner. They were in Dumfries in 1851, where he as working as ‘Under Carder Master Wool’. James (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. James (18th/19th C.) mason in Newcastleton, listed among heads of households in 1835. James (1785–1843) from the Spittal family, he was 3rd child of Andrew who farmed Westerhouses and Newton. He was paternal grandfather of ‘Dictionary’ James. In about 1806 he married (with a curious story of her seeing him in a dream before she knew him) Christina, daughter of Thomas Wintrope, who was a writer in Hawick. He became a tailor, learning his trade in Denholm and later having a shop at 67 High Street (which became the Co-op grocers). He was listed as a High Street tailor in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was long an elder of the East Bank Secession Church, having been one of the original subscribers, receiving money in exchange for bonds (which through some irregularity were all later taken by his grandson Andrew, leaving the rest of his grand-children with nothing). His children were: Isabella, who married Hawick shoemaker William Somerville; Andrew, tailor in Morebattle, who married Minnie Buglass; Thomas, father of Sir James A.H.; Elizabeth, who died young; Stewart, a roper with Munro’s, who married Isabella Anderson: James, a tailor in Hawick who married Isabella Mabon; and Elizabeth, who married stockingmaker Andrew Hood. In 1841 he was listed as a tailor on the High Street, living along with ‘Cathrine’ (possibly his wife Christian, otherwise a sister), and children James and Betty, as well as another James (probably a grandson). James (1789–1853) youngest child of John and Mary Cleuch and grandson of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He was father of Gen. Sir John Murray. He was educated at Denholm, Minto and Jedburgh schools and Edinburgh University. He studied to be a minister, but due to a speech defect he had to give up his ambition (which apparently was not an impediment to becoming a teacher!). He ran a private school in Hawick for several years before being appointed schoolmaster of Hawick Grammar School in 1821 (perhaps as assistant from 1818). He was appointed as Session Clerk in 1821, and as such was the last to carry on the practice of reading the scriptures in church between the morning and evening services. However, he kept only sporadic records in the Session books. He was the first teacher at the new United Schools, when the Parish and Grammar Schools merged in 1825. His favourite saying when punishing pupils was ‘I’ll trim ye!’ He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He gave up as session clerk in 1850, but was headmaster right up until his death in the first few days of 1853. In a directory of 1852 he is listed as Porochial Schoolmaster on Teviot Square. He married Margaret (1790–1851), eldest daughter of Thomas Irvine, farmer at Wauknell, Eskdale; her brother was Maj.-Gen. Sir Archibald Irvine. They had at least 3 children: John Irvine (b.1826), who became a General; Elizabeth, who married Col. Ryall, but died of cholera and had no surviving children; and Thomas Irvine, who died in infancy. He is buried in St. Mary’s churchyard. James (1796/7–1871) son of Thomas and Janet Ingles, he was tenant farmer at Whisgills in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 700 acres, employing 3 men. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Scott, who died in 1874, aged 78. Their children included: Elizabeth; Thomas (1806/7–58), tenant in Burnmouth; Betty (1817–24); David (1832/3–83), also tenant at Whisgills; Agnes (1832/3–80); Jane; Janet, who married John Irving; John; and Mary, who married Adam Scott. They are mostly buried in Etton Cemetery. James (b.1810) son of James and Mary Scott. His father was a soldier, and he was born and baptised in Wilton. He worked as a handloom weaver. In 1841 he was living on Punchbowl Close, was at 5 Teviot Crescent in 1851 and was on Mather’s Close in 1861. He married Isabella Howison and their children included: David (b.1833/4); Robert (b.1835); William (b.1836/7); Isabella (b.1839/40), who must have died young; James (b.1846/7); Jane (or Ann, b.1848/9); Isabella (again, b.1850/1) and Helen (b.1853/4). James (b.1810/1) born in Wilton, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was on the Kirk Wynd in 1841 and at 25 Loan in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Catherine and their children were John, Robert, Helen, Walter, Andrew and Mary. He may be the James, son of John and Mary Scott, baptised in Wilton in 1810. James (1812–75) from Coldstream, he was a blacksmith with premises on Brougham Place. The location was afterwards used by Gould the framsmith. He married Christian, who died in 1896, aged 82. Their children included several who did not reach adulthood, plus Isabella and another daughter who married William Taylor of Ashybank. James (19th C.) founder of J. Murray & Sons, plumbers and slaters of Hawick. He was an elder in Allars Kirk. Sir James Augustus Henry ‘Dictionary Murray’ (1837–1915) born in Denholm, in the Crown Inn on Main Street. He was eldest son of Thomas Murray (clothier in Denholm and later Hawick, from the Spittal Tower family) and Mary Scott (also of Hawick, daughter of Charles Scott, linen manufacturer, and from the Boonraw family), and was a distant relative of the Hawick schoolmaster who was also James Murray. His middle names were added only after he went to Hawick and discovered that some people had more than one Christian name. He developed an early interest in botany, geology and astronomy, as well as languages. He was educated at Cavers, Denholm and Minto schools, attending school only between the ages of 6 and 14½. By the time he left school he had already studied Latin, French, German, Italian and classical Greek. He became a Junior Assistant Master at the United Schools of Hawick in 1854 at age 17. 3 years later he was made headmaster of a new private school in Hawick, the Subscription Academy. He was apparently keen on taking his pupils on excursions to study local botany, geology, etc. He was a founder member of the Archaeological Society in 1856 (when he was still only 19 years old), being the third official member and its first Secretary, as well as contributing many articles (51 in all) on a huge range of topics; he was also the last surviving founder member of the Society. In the early years of the Society, he talked at a large fraction of meetings, covering botany, geology, archaeological artefacts, local history, ‘Two Days’ Ramble up the Slitrig and down the Liddel’, etc. He made a 5-foot long map of ‘Scotland under the Romans’, which he talked about at one of the first meetings of 1856. He wrote a series of articles in the Hawick Advertiser in the 1850s, describing the botany of the area. He also presented the Museum with a cabinet of insects he had collected. In Hawick he was also involved with politics as well as the Total Abstinence Society. He had many talents, for example his sketch of Leyden’s birthplace was used as the frontispiece for the 1858 collection of Leyden’s works. In 1863 he made stencil copies of the stones describing Walter Scott of Goldielands, which were uncovered in St. Mary’s Kirk. He was a member of the Congregational Kirk in Denholm. In 1862 he married Maggie Isabella Sarah Scott (1834–65) in Belfast; she was an infant teacher and daughter of a Hawick clerk. They soon moved to London for his wife’s health, where nevertheless she died in 1865 (of consumption, aged 31), and their infant daughter Anne Marie Gretchen the year before (buried in the Wellogate Cemetery). There he worked for the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China in Threadneedle Street. He obtained a reader’s ticket for the British Museum and resumed his interest in languages, soon meeting several philologists who lived in the London area. In 1867 he married Ada Agnes Ruthven (1845–1936), with Alexander Graham Bell as the best man. In 1870 he was appointed schoolmaster at Mill Hill School, north-west of London and lived in a nearby house called ‘Sunnyside’; he regarded his time there as the happiest of his life (apart from when he was in Hawick of course). He completed ‘The Dialect of the Southern Counties of Scotland’ (1873), the first systematic study of any dialect, and gave papers at meetings of the Philological Society. Contributing more seriously to philological study, he produced editions of ‘The Minor Poems of Sir David Lindsay’ (1871), ‘The Complaynt of Scotland’ (1872) with an extensive introduction and glossary and ‘Romance and prophecies of Thomas of Erceldoune’ (1875), again with notes. He obtained a B.A. from London University in 1873 and an honorary LL.D. from Edinburgh University in 1874. He became President of the Philological Society in 1878 and around 1879 he took over as editor of the ‘New English Dictionary on Historical Principles’ (to become the Oxford English Dictionary). An undertaking of gargantuan proportions, he died before it was completed, although the work was finished under his organisation and inspiration. Much of the work was carried out in a glorified shed in his garden, referred to as the ‘Scriptorium’. After the second volume was published he moved with his family to Oxford to work full time on the dictionary in a new Scriptorium in the garden of 78 Banbury Road, renamed Sunnyhill. Apart from the occasional family holiday he worked tirelessly on the dictionary. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1906, when he was also at the presentation of the Provost’s Chain event, on the 50th anniversary of the Archaeological Society. He had 10 surviving children, all of whom were given Anglo-Saxon first names and middle names given after relatives, including: Harold James Ruthven, who wrote an influential history of chess, as well as providing an article on him for the Archaeological Transactions; and Sir Oswyn, who became Secretary to the Admiralty. He received a knighthood in 1908, as well as honorary degrees from 9 universities. He died of heart failure following a year of illness, in which he completed the volume ‘Trink to Turndown’ on schedule. He is buried at Wolvercote Cemetery near Oxford. A plaque marking his birthplace is in Denholm, and another in Hawick, where he lived on Bourtree Place. The definitive biography is ‘Caught in the Web of Words’ (1977) by his grand-daughter K.M. Elisabeth Murray, and he is also the ‘Professor’ (although he never held that title) in Simon Winchester’s ‘The Professor and the Madman’ (1998, British title ‘The Surgeon of Crowthorne’). His contribution to the systematization of language is immense. All major dictionary projects that came later have followed the principles he laid out. Words from the Hawick area are well represented in his original volumes (but unlike modern dictionaries, he left out all words considered obscene in his day). James (b.1860) son of Robert and Elizabeth Hunter, he was born in Hawick. He moved to Edinburgh, where he worked as a baker, and later the family lived in Kelso. He married Jane McMiehan. James (1874/5–1965) farmer in Whisgills, descended from the earlier Murrays of Whisgills farm. His wife Mary Janet Elliot died in 1908, aged 32. His 2nd wife Margaret Brown died in 1956, aged 76. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Dr. James (1875/6–1920) doctor in Allendale, he died in Newcastle. His wife Elizabeth Jane Murray came from Whisgills, and died in 1963; she secondly married William B. Paterson of Rutherglen. They are buried at Ettleton. Janet (b.1820/1) grocer on Wilton Place, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. She was wife of John, tailor at the Sandbed. In 1851 she was a widow at Wilton Place, with her children John, Elizabeth and William. In 1861 she was at Dovemount with John and William. Her maiden name may have been Wilson. Joan (14th C.) daughter of Sir Maurice, Earl of Strathearn, who was also Baron of Hawick. Through her father she inherited the Barony of Hawick, which then passed to her husband, Sir Thomas of Bothwell. There is some confusion here over multiple Joannas, but it seems likely that it was not her, but her daughter, who married Archibald, 3rd Earl of Douglas. It seems that she was promised to Douglas, but may have died in the plague that ravaged Britain in 1362 (and probably also killed her husband a year or so earlier). Douglas seems to have instead married the daughter, also Joan. Joan or ‘Joanna’ (d.aft. 1401) probably daughter of Sir Thomas Murray of Bothwell. However, she is often confused with her mother, Joan, who was daughter of Sir Maurice, Earl of Strathearn (and in fact the evidence that there were 2 separate women is not clear). She appears to have been the heiress of the Bothwell titles (including the Barony of Hawick), and after the death of her mother she married Archibald Douglas, ‘the Grim’, 3rd Earl of Douglas; however, she would have been quite young when this happened. The Hawick Barony then passed to the Douglases. John (15th C.) witness in 1431 to the transfer of the lands of Heap between the Langlands’ and the Scots. All of the other men who wrote special testaments were local lairds, including Alexander Murray, who must have been a near relation. He was recorded as ‘Jhone off Murray’ and could have been John of Falahill. John of Philiphaugh (d.1477) descendant of Roger de Moravia. He had a charter of the lands of Philiphaugh in 1461. This included the lands of Harehead, Hangingshaw and Lewishope. In 1462 he was appointed Herd-keeper to Queen Mary of Gueldres. He was also Keeper of Newark Castle in the 1460s. He had the lease of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw from 1471 and in 1480 the lease was passed to his son Patrick. In 1475 he was keeper of the King’s property at Bowhill. His sons included: Patrick of Falahill, the eldest, who succeeded; William in Sundhope; and another, whose son John was Burgess in Edinburgh and progenitor of the Murrays of Blackbarony. John (d.c.1485) brother of Ninian. Along with his brother he leased the Crown lands of Kershope on the Ettrick in 1485. In the following year the lease passed to his widow Elizabeth Sinclair, and son Thomas. He was stated to have been killed when his property was devastated by traitors and rebels. John (d.bef. 1494) resident of the Kershope area. In 1494/5 Steven Turnbull, brother of the Laird of Whithope, had reversion for his slaughter. Turnbull was also cited for other crimes, including bringing in ‘traitors of Leven’ for the pillaging and burning of Kershope and the theft of 80 cows from the tenants there. John of Falahill (d.1510) eldest son of Patrick of Philiphauagh and Falahill. He was nephew of Alexander who was Rector of Hawick and was probably the closest historical person to ‘the Outlaw Murray’ of the ballad. In 1488 he was joint tenant with his father in the Crown lands of Lewenshop and Hangingshaw, and later with his son John. In 1489/90 he had a charter for lands in Peeblesshire. He was Ranger of Yarrow Ward until 1489, when he had the lease of Tinnis for his fee. In 1491 he was ‘procurator’ for Alexander Lord Home in an instrument granting Home tenancy in the lands of Harden. He is probably the John who acted as surety for several people at the Justice-ai re in Jedburgh in 1493. He is probably the John ‘de hangitshaw’ whose brother Thomas served as a surety at the Justice-ai re in Selkirk in 1494/5 and who himself served as surety for John Scott in Tushielaw. Also in 1494/5 it is recorded that he had livestock stolen from Newark by Robert Scott of Deloraine. He is also recorded being ‘de hangitschaw’ in the accounts for the Selkirk Justice-ai re of 1494/5, when he was pledge for John Wilson in Hartwoodmyre. He was owner of Westerhouses in Hassendean Parish, receiving the lands ‘under reversion’ (i.e. on non-payment of a loan) from Alexander, Lord Home. In 1497 he had a charter for Cranston-Riddell. In 1499 he had a ‘tack’ of lands with David Hoppringle of ‘the Tynnes’. Also in 1499 he was assigned the lands of ‘Levinishop’ and Hangingshaw in Yarrow, along with his son John (which may be an error). About the same time he gave his permission for Walter Scott to take the lease of Haining. In 1500 Walter Scott of Branxholme was recorded as assignee of him and Ninian (probably a brother or other close relative), when goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope were recovered as part of 19 score merks that he owed them; this was for the damage done to their lands of Kershope. He was Depute Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1501. In 1501/2 he was witness to another bond of reversion for the lands of Harden, also involving Alexander, Lord Home. In 1502-09 he had the lease of the Crown lands of Hangingshaw, Lewenshope and Harehead. In 1502 his farms at Fastheugh and Hangingshaw were raided by Philip Turnbull in Whithope and David Turnbull in Carlinpool. In 1502/3 at Galashields he infected Queen Margaret in the lands of the Forest. In 1506/7 he was one of the men to whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Buccleuch, had to give in his accounts. In 1507/8 he had a letter of obligation with Robert Scott of Whitchesters, involving a loan, with the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ as security. He was appointed as High Sheriff of Selkirkshire, which the King had to humiliatingly give him according to the ballad. He was Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1508 in a charter for lands in Selkirk and in 1509 in the document where Adam Hepburn inherited the lands of Alemoor. In 1508 he had a charter for Falahill and Whittlawland and in 1509 had a charter for the lands of Peel Hill. In 1510/1 he and his wife had a charter for the lands of Cranston-Riddell. He married Janet Forester and later Margaret, daughter of Patrick Hepburn. His children were: James, who succeeded; William, ancestor of the Romanno, Stanhope and Clooney branches; John, who was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1507/8; Patrick, who had a charter for Broadmeadows in 1510; Elizabeth, who married Sir James Douglas, 5th Laird of Cavers; Isabel, who married Robert Scott of Howpasley; and Janet, who married Sir Robert Stewart of Minto. Tradition attributes his death to Scott of Buccleuch or perhaps Scott of Haining at a little mount below Newark Castle. However, he was actually killed by Andrew Ker of Gateshaw and Thomas, brother of Philip Scott of Headshaw, according to cases at Jedburgh Justice-ai re in 1510. John (15th/16th C.) son of John of Falahill. In 1507/8 he leased the Crown lands of Hangingshaw, Lewenshope and Harehead. He was recorded as son and heir of John of Falahill in 1509 and still leasing Crown lands in 1513. He may have been the Sheriff in Selkirkshire recorded at the Justice-ai re at Selkirk in 1510. At that court he was among men found guilty of burning some of the wood in Ettrick Forest. He is probably the John of Falahill who had a charter for the lands of Bold and Philiphaugh in 1512. John of Blackbarony (d.1513) Burgess of Edinburgh, he was grandson of John of Philiphaugh, his father's name being unknown. He may be the John of ‘blac barony et domino de henneland’ who was surety at the Justice-ai re held in Peebles in 1498. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of the early years of the 16th century as Chamberlain of Ballincrief and ‘custumar’ of Haddington. In 1505/6 he was an assignee of the executors of William in Sundhope, his uncle. He is probably the John junior who was allowed the ‘fermes’ of Winterburgh in 1506 and Carterhaugh in 1507. In 1507 he had a charter of the Barony of Blackbarony or Hatton. He is probably the ‘Master John Murray of Blakbarony’ who in 1510/1 was granted the lands of Briery Yards, in the Barony of Hassendean, which had been forfeited by Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn. In 1511 he had a charter for lands in Edinburgh and Haddington and in 1512 and 1513 other charters for lands in Selkirkshire and elsewhere. In 1503/4 he married Isobel, daughter of Richard Happar. They had 2 daughters, and a son, Andrew of Blackbarony. He died at Flodden. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of

Eliott of Falnash in 1569. Eliott acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Sir John of Blackbarony (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew. He was knighted by James VI at Stirling upon announcing to the King the birth of his eldest son, Henry, Prince of Wales. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for ‘Glenpoit and Preischop’ (this being Glenthey in the Yarrow valley). In 1580 he was named in a transaction in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he acted as cautioner for Robert of Aikwood. In 1586 he is recorded as one of the ‘curators’ of the young Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He may be the John who witnessed a bond of ‘manrent’ in Hawick in 1595, between the Beatties and Sir Walter of Branxholme (Gideon Murray, his brother, was also a witness). In 1607 he was in dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk. In 1610 he was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace in Peeblesshire. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Hamilton. Their children were: Andrew, who died before his father; Sir Archibald, who succeeded; Sir John of Raveling; Col. Walter of Pilmore; Alexander; Patrick; William; Margaret, who married Sir Robert Halket of Pitfirrane; Agnes, who married Sir John Riddell of that Ilk; Elizabeth, who married Sir Robert Ker, 1st Earl of Ancrum; Grizel, who married Sir William Douglas of Casbogle; Christian, who married Sir William Veitch of Dawyck; Isabel, who married Patrick Scott of Thirlestane; and possibly another daughter who married William Scott of Mangerton. Sir John of Falahill and Philiphaugh (d.c.1640) son of Patrick of Falahill, he was the first of the family designated ‘of Philiphaugh’. He had a charter of 1584, as heir to his father and also held lands at Hangingshaw and Traquair. He was probably the ‘Johnne Murray, sone to the Sherff of Selkirk’ who was among Borderers cited for non-appearance in 1578/9. He was probably the ‘younger in Philophaucht’ recorded in Selkirk in 1581. He is probably the John in Philiphaugh who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1582. He was served heir to his father in 1601 in the lands of Philiphaugh, as well as the office of Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He represented Selkirkshire (or ‘the Forest’) in the Parliament of 1612. In 1614, on behalf of his wife, he paid money to the Donaldsons of Broadmeadows. In 1620 he had a precept of sasine for Broadmeadows. He was recorded in documents in the Walter Mason Collection in 1610 and c.1620. In 1622 and 1623 he was on the Commission for keeping peace on the Border. In 1623 a man was found guilty of stealing an ox from his servitor, John Murray, from the lands of ‘Low, otherwise called the Catclughe’. He had a charter of 1624 involving lands in the Barony of Buccleuch. In 1624 he and his heir James gave sasine of Broadmeadows to Andrew, son of William Scott in Fauldhouse. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Ardross (or perhaps Sir William of Harden) and secondly married Helen (or Isabel), daughter of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels. His children included: Sir James of Balincrief, his eldest son, who married Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Craig of Riccarton and whose son succeeded to Philiphaugh; Gideon, aide-de-camp to Charles I, who died in service; Joan, a daughter who married James Kerr of Chatto; Anne, who married John Shaw; Grezel; John of Ashiestiel; William, who died fighting for the King; David, who also died the same way; Helen, who married Scott of Broadmeadows; Elizabeth, who married Mr. Knox; and Isabel. He was succeeded by his grandson, Sir John. Sir John (d.1640) 1st Earl of Annandale, son of Sir Charles of Cockpool and Margaret Somerville. His siblings included: Sir James of Cockpool, who married Janet, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig, but died without an heir; Sir Richard, whom he eventually succeeded; Jean, who married John Maxwell of Kirkhouse; and another sister, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1616 and 1624 he sent a letter to Walter Scott, Lord of Buccleuch, expressing his support and essentially apologising for raids against Buccleuch and into England. He was a great favourite of Charles I and acquired a huge estate. Among his lands and rights were the 5-pound land of the Chapel lands of Cuerlenrig, which his son James inherited in 1641. He was created Earl of Annandale in 1624/5 and acquired vast estates. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Shaw. He was succeeded as 2nd Earl by his son James, who died without issue and the title became extinct. Sir John of Ravelrig (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John of Blackbarony. He was granted lands in Belses by William, Earl of Lothian in 1634. He was one of the overseers of the tutors of the children of Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, who died in 1633. John (17th C.) tenant in Woll when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. It is unclear how he was related to other Murrays. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Redford and their children included: Francis (b.1690); Adam (b.1692); Elizabeth (b.1694);
Jean (b.1696); and Anna (b.1699). The witnesses in 1690 were Francis (perhaps his father or brother) and William Dunlop. He may be related to the earlier tenant in Woll. Sir John of Philiphaugh (d.1676) son of Sir James, he succeeded his grandfather Sir John. He was heritable Sheriff of Selkirkshire. In 1646 he was recorded as a judge for trying people in Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire. In 1643, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire and was Convenor in 1644. He joined with Graham's force in 1646 and claimed for damages he sustained against Montrose in 1649. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He is probably the 'John morray of ...' who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1656 for Thomas Scott of Whitslade. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire from 1661. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers and secondly married Margaret, widow of John Trotter of Charterhall and daughter of Sir John Scott of Scotstarvet. His children were: Sir James, who succeeded; John of Bowhill; Col. William; Archibald, Thomas and Lewis, who died young; Anne, who married Alexander Pringle of Whytybank and later Robert Rutherford of Bowland; Janet; Rachel; Elizabeth; and Jean, who died young. In 1688 his wife was served heir to their daughter Jean. John (17th C.) married Marian Lillico in Bedrule in 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John of Bowhill (c.1667–1714) younger son of Sir John of Philiphaugh and brother of Sir James. He was a Senator in the College of Justice. He served as representative to Parliament for Selkirk 1689–1702 and for Selkirkshire 1703–07. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. He was a great supporter of the Union, and was briefly part of the first Parliament of Great Britain until he became Lord Bowhill in 1707. He owned the estate of Bowhill (temporarily out of the hands of the Scotts) and built the house there in 1708. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and their children included John (farmer at Uthank). He was succeeded in the lands of Bowhill by his nephew Lieut.-Col. James. There was an elegy written on his death. John (1669/70–1749) gardener at Spittal Tower, who was a direct ancestor of 'Dictionary' Murray. He came from Hobkirk Parish, renting the garden haugh and enclosure at Spittal Tower in about 1712. His father may have been Andrew, but that is uncertain. He is recorded as gardener at 'Tower' in 1715. In 1701 he married Isobel Turnbull (from Bedrule), who died in 1746, aged 67. They had 7 children (several baptised in Cavers Parish): John (1709–72), the eldest son, with several later generations having the same name; Margaret, eldest daughter, married James Veitch, and her grand-daughter married Castleton Schoolmaster William Scott; Jean, who died in infancy; Agnes (b.1713); Andrew (b.1715); James (b.1720), who also died in infancy; and Mary (b.1724). They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. John (1677–1728) born at Uthank, son of John (from the Philiphaugh family) and Margaret Scott of Ancrum. He leased the farms of Uthank and Fiddleton from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1722. His son James resigned the lands to Robert Elliot of Fenwick and Walter Scott (farmer at Commonside) in 1733. He married his cousin Ann, daughter of Archibald Bennet of Chesters (near Ancrum) in 1712 and their children were: James (b.1713); Archibald (b.1715); Barbara (b.1717); Anna (or Anna, b.1719); John (b.1721, who became a doctor in Norwich); Andrew (b.1723); William (b.1724); Elizabeth (b.1726); and Andrew (b.1728). John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawcleuch. In 1712 in Hawick Parish, he married Marion Paterson, who was 'servitrix to Walter Griev' in Bramsholme Park. Their son William was baptised in Hawick in 1719. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hoscote in 1712 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Robertson Parish and in 1719 when his son John was baptised. He may also be the John resident at Outerside in 1715 when his son James was baptised and in 1717 when his son William was baptised. Other John (17th/18th C.) resident of Chisholme Mill in 1720 when his son Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish. Helen (b.1723) may also be his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Whithope in 1718 when his daughter Mary was baptised and in 1721 when his twins Walter and Helen were baptised in Robertson. John of Philiphaugh (d.1753) son of Sir James. He was heritable Sheriff of Selkirk. He was M.P. for Linlithgow 1725–34 and for Selkirkshire from 1734 until his death. In 1737 he was involved in a bon with a tenant in Philiphaugh. In 1711 he married Eleanor, daughter of Lord Basil Hamilton, and she died in 1783. Their children were: Basil, who died young; John, who was also M.P. for the Linlithgow Burghs; Charles, who died unmarried; James, who succeeded his brother; Janet, who married Mr. Dennis of Jamaica; Eleanor, who married Sir James Nasmyth of Posso; Mary, who married John Macqueen of Jamaica and possibly also Sir Alexander Don, 4th Baronet of Newton; and Margaret, who married Capt. Baugh. John (1709–72) eldest son of John and brother of Andrew. He was the grandfather of the Hawick Rector James Murray, and great-grandfather of Gen. Sir John Murray. He became tenant farmer at Spittal-on-Rule in 1730. He shared the tenancy with the Veitches and the Bunyans, his part including the orchard (hence he was referred to as ‘Gardener in Toure’). He was recorded as gardener at Spittal or at Tower when his children were baptised in Cavers Parish. He married Jean Henderson in 1734 at Newton in Bedrule, and she died in 1786, aged 72. Their children (baptised in Cavers Parish) were: John (b.1735), who was also tenant at Spittal and married Mary Cleuch; James (b.1741), who became Presbyterian minister at Harbottle; Isabel (b.1744), married Mr. Thomson, farmer at Netherraw; Archibald; Andrew (b.1747), whose grandson was editor of the Kelso Mail; Jean (or Jenny, b.1755), lived at Harbottle, then at Hawick; Betty, married James Veitch; Margaret (b.1757); and William (b.1759), who had sons Veitch and John. The baptism of Andrew appears to have been recorded twice in 1747. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard along with most of his family. John (18th C.) resident of Ewesdale. He married Betty Park and their children included: James (b.1753), born in Langholm; and Margaret (b.1759), baptised in Ewes, who probably married Adam Jardine. John of Philiphaugh (d.1800) 2nd son of John of Philiphaugh. He owned the lands of Todshaw in 1757 when its head lands were divided from those of Mabonlaw. He was also involved in a dispute with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch over teinds for Todshaw in the period 1745–70. He was M.P. for Linlithgow Burghs 1754–61. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He paid the land tax for his lands of Philiphaugh in 1785. He was also listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He sold a large part of the estate of Philiphaugh to John Johnstone of Alva (brother of William Johnstone Pulteney). He married a Thomson and was succeeded by his sons John and then James. John (1735–1809) eldest son of John, farmer and gardener at Spittal-on-Rule. On his gravestone he is referred to as ‘Gardiner at Spittal’. He farmed at Spittal in partnership with his mother until her death in 1786 and may have ceased farming there altogether when the holdings were merged in 1807. In 1782 he married Mary Cleuch, who died in Denholm in 1816, aged 65. Their children were: John, whose family emigrated to Australia; Mary (b.1785), who married brewer Alexander Russell and secondly hosier Thomas Scott; Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1787), the youngest daughter; and James (b.1789), schoolmaster in Hawick. He died at Denholm-Townfoot and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. If he was 65 when he died, he was born in 1743/4. John (1745/6–1826) farmer at Whisgills in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there in the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–91. He is probably son of David and was succeeded as farmer by his brother Thomas. He appears not to have had any children and is buried along with his brother’s family at Ettleton. John (18th C.) listed as house servant and groom at Stirches in 1785 and 1786, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was fined in 1785 for his ‘irregular marriage’. Perhaps he is the John whose daughter Betty was baptised in 1787. John of Philiphaugh (d.1830) son of John. He was listed in 1805 and 1819 as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Huntlyhill (in Bedrule Parish), recorded as owner of 3 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleton, recorded along with George on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) drover from ‘Benpeth’ (probably Bentpath) whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1824. John (18th/19th C.) linen and woollen draper in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Castleton merchant of the same name who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (1777/8–1851) born in Castleton Parish, probably son of Robert and Marion Crozier. He was a feuar of Newcastleton, as well as being a farmer and blacksmith, probably on North Hermitage Street. He married Anne Jardine (1802/3–57), who came from Gretna and was significantly younger than him. Their children included: Robert, who was a carter, and emigrated to Ontario; Walter; Marion; John, a blacksmith, who also emigrated to Ontario; James (1834/5–1908); Jennie; and Matthew. He and his wife are buried at Ettleton cemetery. John (1780–1845) son of John and Mary Cleuch. He farmed at Denholm Townfoot and later at Camptown, where he died. He married Isabella Veitch. Their children were: John; Thomas; Robert; George; William; Agnes; Veitch; James; Walter; and Hugh. The children all emigrated to Australia, where they settled on the Murray River. He is buried in Bedrule kirk yard. John (1806–90) born in Wilton Parish, son of James and Mary Scott. He trained as a clothier and tailor. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. On the 1841 census he was listed at about No. 1 Sandbed, with wife Janet and children John, Elizabeth and a new-born (William). In Hawick he married Janet (b.1818), daughter of William Williamson and Elspeth Turnbull. Family history states that in about 1851 he emigrated to Canada with his wife and sons James, John Scott and Robert. His wife was said to have died on the voyage, and he settled down as a farmer, purchasing land in Euphrasia Township, Ontario, in 1855. By 1851 his widow was a grocer on Wilton Place. In 1861 she was at Dovemount (probably about No. 2 Princess Street) and the census says ‘surname Willison deleted’. It is possible there were 2 different Johns being confused here, but more likely is that some of the information is incorrect, and that his wife returned to Hawick after they emigrated. John (b.1807/8) born in Castleton Parish, son of Thomas and Janet Ingles. He became farmer at Wolfelee. In 1851 he was farmer of 145 arable acres and 3000 acres of pasture, employing 5 people. He married Helen (or Ellen), daughter of Thomas Stavert; she died in 1852, aged 59. Their children included: Thomas (1845–61); John (d.1855); Archibald Stavert (b.1849), who emigrated to Australia; and Helen Stavert (b.1852), who died in infancy. The family are buried at Et tetlon. John (1814/5–92) son of William (teacher in the Canonbie area) and Helen Bell. He himself became a teacher in Langholm. He came to Hawick in the late 1840s to run the school at the head of Baker Street, which had been started by his brother Andrew. The school grew, and moved to the old East Bank Kirk. He is listed as teacher at a school in the East End in 1852. He was assisted by his younger brother William, who eventually ran the school that would become St. Mary’s and ultimately Trinity. He himself left to become schoolmaster at Longnewton and eventually at Caverton Mill, near Kelso. He married Jane Richardson, who died in 1915, aged 84. Their children included Graham, who was a tobacconist at 17 High Street, and Nellie, a milliner who retired to Denholm. John (1815/6–88) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was 3rd son of Elliot. He worked as a servant at Wauchope for 19 years, then worked as a hedger at Minto and spent his last 15 years of employment as farm steward at Dimpleknowe. In 1849 he was among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. In 1861 he was Land Steward, living at Wauchope Cottages. He married Helen, daughter of Robert Waugh, Chesters blacksmith in 1839. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters, including: Robert, carpenter at Blacklee who married Margaret Jackson; John; William, who worked as a successful wool broker in Melbourne, then went to Japan; Violet; and a daughter, possibly Elizabeth, who married Hawick grocer Mr. Brydon. He died at St. Boswells. John (1815/6–83) father of J.E.D., he was a Slater and plumber in Hawick. He had a brother; James. His wife was Margaret Dodd (daughter of the chief drummer with the Drums and Fifes), who died in 1902, aged 78. In 1841 he was living with Margaret on O’Connell Street. The family later lived at 2 Union Street. Their other children were: Isabella A., who married teacher James Brand; Robert, who was a commercial traveller in London; Alison, who married Rev. John Gordon; and Frank James; along with Isabella, Robert, Alison, Margaret and Alison Scott, who all died young. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John of Philiphaugh (1817–82) eldest son of James. He was Deputy Lieutenant and J.P. in Selkirkshire. In 1840 he married Rose Mary, heiress of William Andrew Nesbitt. Their children were: John Forbes Pringle Nesbitt, who succeeded; James (b.1845), who married Mary Russell; and Jesse Rose Mary, who married Sir William Lewis Salisbury Trelawny. Gen. Sir John Irvine, K.C.B., V.C. (1826–1902) son of James, the Hawick schoolmaster, and Margaret Irvine from Eskdale. He was 3rd cousin of Sir James A.H. He was born in Hawick and must have grown up in the town. He joined the East India Company at the age of 16 and was sent out to Calcutta in 1842. He was appointed to the 71st Native Infantry later in 1842, and rose through the ranks of the Bengal army, eventually becoming commander of the Indian army. He received a medal during the Punjab Campaign of 1848/9, was mentioned in dispatches and wounded at the Battle of Alighur in 1857, commanded a brigade of horsemen at Kutchla Ghaut in 1858 and then on the Nepal frontier, receiving another medal. In 1865/6 he was on the Bhootan Expedition, for which he received another medal. He became Lieut.-Col. in 1866, Col. in 1868, Maj.-Gen. in 1882, Lieut.-Gen. in 1887 and Gen. in 1891. He received the K.C.B. on the Queen’s Golden Jubilee in 1897. He retired to Kensington. In 1854 he married Wilhelmina Stanley (d.1912), daughter of Col. Duncan Archibald Malcolm; he was son of Thomas Malcolm, who was brother of the 4 knights of Burnfoot. They had 6 children: Lieut. Archibald Ross, who served in Afghanistan, but died of cholera at the age of 24; Duncan, who died in childhood; Minnie, who married Maj. Wright; Caroline, who married T.W. Rawlings; Mary Stewart, who worked with the Salvation Army, being sent out to South Africa in the Boer War and France and Belgium in WWI, being awarded an O.B.E.; and Agnes Meade, who married Capt. Woolcombe of the K.O.S.B. John (b.1829/30) farmer at Upper Burnmouth in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was farming 400 acres and employing 3 men. He lived with his sister Agnes. He could be the John who was on the Town Committee of Management in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He subscribed to David Anderson’s book of verse in 1868. John Scott (1835–1904) son of John and Janet Williamson. He was born in Hawick, and in about 1851 he sailed to Canada with his father and maternal grandfather, William Williamson. They settled in Euphrasia Township, Grey County, Ontario, where he farmed. He married Jane Quinton and they had 8 children. John, J.P. (1835/6–1911) from the Annan area, he became a draper in Hawick (at 31 High Street) and later actuary for Hawick Savings Bank. He also served as a Town Councillor and was Burgh Treasurer in the 1880s. He was Treasurer of the Working Men’s Building & Investment Society and possibly the same John Murray was an early committee member of Hawick R.F.C. His sister Janet married Hawick teacher William Murray (probably her second cousin). He married Elspeth Ferguson, who died in 1929, aged 86. Their children included John (who died in Vancouver), Peter Wilson (of the bullion department in a London bank) and Elizabeth (who married Abraham P. Hindle). John Edward Dodd ‘Jed’ (1858–1936) son of Slater and plumber John. He was writer of the words for many Hawick songs, particularly ‘The Mosstroopers’ Song’, ‘Clinty’s Song’, ‘The Wail of Flodden’, ‘Meda’s Song’ and the ‘Invocation’. He also wrote poems such as ‘Hornshole’ (published when he was 14), ‘Oor Gutterblade’, ‘The Reeky Howe’ (also known as ‘Naething New’, composed for the 1889 Dinner) and ‘Lest We Forget’. In addition there were several comedic plays, and musical plays written with Adam Grant, including ‘Turning Back the Clock’, ‘The Caddie’s Ghost’ (1894), ‘The Tramp’ (1896), ‘The Witch o’ the Wisp Hill’ (1901), ‘Kirsty o’ Cocklaw Castle’ (1904) and ‘The Gutterbludes’ (1905); only for the last 2 do scripts survive. Additionally he wrote many of the words for the ‘Quarter-Centenary Pageant’, acting as Pageant Master. Born at 57 High Street, he apprenticed with John Wield, druggist, but had his health damaged by chemicals. He then left Hawick to pursue work in the chemist’s, grocery and insurance trades, returning to Hawick in 1886 when he started his photographic business. His studio was first where the Post Office was later built (at the corner of Bridge Street and Croft Road), moving to 43 Bridge Street in 1902 (designed by J.P. Alison, who lived next door). This became one of Hawick’s foremost photographic businesses, closing in 1972. An ardent supporter of the Common Riding, his return to Hawick coincided with the rejuvenation of the ceremonial aspects, and he quickly became involved. J.E.D. was Cornet in 1890 (when he recited a specially-composed poem) and Acting Father no less than 4 times (the last time at the age of 67). He helped inaugurate the annual Cornet’s dinner in 1895, ordered the Curds and Cream for almost half a century and acted as marshal for many years. He was a founder member of the Callants’ Club in 1903. During WWI he personally rode the marches each Common Riding day, against the wishes of the Council and the Callants’ Club. In 1920 he suggested the founding of the Mosstroopers’ Club, and his horse was the model for the badge. In addition he was involved with the local Amateur Operatic Society (doing their stage make-up until the year of his death) and succeeded James Thomson as Bard of Masonic Lodge 424. He became an honorary life member of the golf club after the success of ‘the Caddie’s Ghost’ at their 1894 fund-raiser. He was also a great walker and lover of the outdoors, publishing a book entitled ‘Over the Rolling Stones by One of Them’. He additionally wrote an introductory article for James Edgar’s ‘Hawick Songs and Recitations’ (1892). He was also known as painter, particularly of animals. He married Margaret ‘Daisy’ Young (daughter of a Sandbed baker), who had been his Lass, and they had one child, Melgund. The Museum mounted an exhibition devoted to his life in the late 1990s. A portrait of his favourite horse ‘Oakwood Daisy’ is in the Museum, along with an inkwell made from the foot of another, called ‘Ben’. There is also a painting of his, ‘Mrs. Reid, with Betsy the Cow, Pilmuir’. He is buried in the Wellowgate Cemetery in an unmarked grave, although a plaque was unveiled there in 1990. The J.E.D. Murray Memorial Challenge Trophy was first presented at the 1938 Common Riding race meeting. A plaque was unveiled at 57 High Street in 2006 and the Mosstroopers’ Club held a celebration in 2008 to mark the 150th anniversary of his birth. Katherine Maud Elisabeth (1909–98) granddaughter of James A.H. In 1977 she published a biography of her grandfather entitled ‘Caught in the web of words: James A.H. Murray and the Oxford English dictionary’. Kevin police office from Hawick. He became a Superintendent of the Lothian and Borders force and had responsibility for security at the 2014 Commonwealth Games. Malcolm, C.B.E. (1938–) born in Hawick and raised at 12 Loan, he turned down the chance to study science at Edinburgh University, instead joining the Scottish Life Assurance Company. By the time he retired in 1999 he was Chief Executive and Director. He served as President of the Insurance Society of Edinburgh and the Faculty of Actuaries. Always a keen sports enthusiast, he playing for Hawick Trades and Edinburgh Borderers and was Hawick R.F.C. President in 2002–04. He has also been a long-time member of Hawick Golf Club. He was Chief Guest of the Common Riding in 2011 and has served as Callants’ Club President. Margaret (1629/30–1707) wife of William Craw. After her husband died in 1671 she took over his share of the tenancy of Braxholme tower. This she did until at least 1677, with her son James later taking over. She is buried in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. Margaret (b.1820/1) draper, grocer and post-mistress in Newcastleton in the 1850s and 60s. She lived on South Hermitage Street with her twin sister Jane (who was a hat-maker), and another sister Agnes (also a milliner). Her business was listed as ‘Margaret Murray & Co.’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. She was probably related to the earlier Margaret of the same name) married Archibald Douglas ‘the Grim’, passing on the Hawick Barony to the Douglases. Ninian (15th/16th C.) possessor of the lands of Kershope in Ettrick. He and his brother John leased the lands in the mid-1480s, but they were attacked and their property destroyed, with

John being killed in about 1485. He and his son John were given the lease of these Crown lands in 1490. In 1494/5 Lawrence Rutherford in Oakwood had remission for stealing sheep from him at Kershope. He was still leasing half of Kershope in 1502. In 1500 Walter Scott of Branxholme was recorded as assignee of him and John of Falahill in recovering money that Philip Turnbull of Whithope owed them for the damage done to their lands. He is probably the Ninian who, along with John (as well as James Ker) had their farms of Fastheuch and Hangingshaw raided sometime before 1502. Probably the same Ninian was on the 1509 panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor. Thomas is listed after him, and possibly a relative. Sir Oswyn (1873–1936) born at Mill Hill, London, he was a son of Sir James A.H. He went into the Civil Service and became Secretary to the Admiralty 1917–36. His wife Lady Mildred wrote a biography of him. Patrick of Falahill (d.c.1492) son of John. He acquired land near Philiphaugh in about 1477. He had a sasine for the lands of ‘Pringillsland’ and ‘Litsterland’ in Selkirkshire in 1477. From 1477 he was granted the lease of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw, which had been in the hands of his father. In 1479 he gave his seal to an obligation involving the Kers of Cessford. In 1484 and again in 1488 he and his son John had the lease of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw. Around 1485–90 he was also tenant of Bowhill along with his brother Peter. His children included: John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’; Thomas, mentioned as brother of John in 1494/5; and Margaret. Patrick of Falahill (d.1580) son of James of Falahill and grandson of ‘the Outlaw Murray’. He held the office of hereditary Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He also held the lands of Philiphaugh, according to a charter of 1528. In 1530 he was served heir to his father James in the customs and duties of Selkirk, as well as the Sheriffship. However, there was a dispute in that year, with John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, producing royal letters breaking the privilege office of Sheriff that he held; Alexander Tait of Pirn was procurator for a counter-claim that the letters did not discharge him from being Sheriff. In 1531 he owed teind sheaves for his lands of Hangingshaw. In 1533/4 in Selkirk he had a bond between William Stewart of Traquair. In 1534 he required William Douglas of Bonjedward to appear at his court. In 1535 he declared that his forebears and tenants had always kept their herds on Selkirk Common. In 1536 the Bailies of Selkirk complained that he had come to the common ‘with a multitude of men in violent oppression with swords, staffs and cudgels’ and taken away cattle belonging to one of the Bailies; he declared that he had only come to the common with his servants to peaceably pasture his own cattle. In 1536/7 he complained about others encroaching on his ‘friend’ Thomas, who had farmed at Easter Bowhill for 40 years. He was ‘of Hangitschaw’ in 1541 when recorded as owner of the lands of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw in Yarrow, as well as ‘Hairheid’ in Ettrick. In about 1544 there was a ‘summons of reduction’ against him by the Provost and Bailies of Selkirk (probably regarding Selkirk Common). In 1547/8 he was listed among the supporters of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in a bond along with the Kerrs. In 1564/5 he was one of the witnesses to the bond between the Kers and the Scotts. In 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. In 1576 there was an agreement with the Burgh of Selkirk restoring him to his lands. He married Margaret, daughter of John, Lord Fleming, secondly married a daughter of Lord Borthwick and thirdly married Elizabeth Ormiston, who was a widow. His eldest son was James, who married Margaret, daughter of William Stewart of Traquair, and whose son Patrick succeeded. His son Malcolm is recorded in 1573. He also had a daughter, Catherine, who married James Somerville of Cambusnethan. Conflicting with the usual genealogy, in 1579 his son and heir Patrick is recorded in a transaction in Selkirk. Patrick of Falahill (d.1601) grandson of Patrick of Falahill. He is probably the Patrick ‘of Fawlayhill’ who in 1580 witnessed was named in a transaction in Selkirk and witnessed several others. In 1581 he had an arrangement with Robert Scott of Haining over the ‘feu maill’ of Haining. He may be the Patrick ‘ooy and heir’ to the deceased Patrick of Falahill who in 1581/2 granted a sasine to Adam Scott of Bonnington. In about 1588 he was appointed as one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Selkirk and Peebles. He is listed on the 1590 ‘Roll of the Clans’. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, and secondly married Marian, daughter of Sir Lewis Bellendon. His children were: Sir John, who succeeded; Patrick, who held lands in Annandale, and was with Robert Scott, younger of Haining, when he attacked Selkirk Mill in 1608; James, a merchant in Edinburgh; Isabel, who married John Abernethy, Bishop of Caithness; Margaret, who married Ralph Kerr of Primside and Greenhead; Elizabeth, who married Robert Scott of Haining; and Jean, who married John
Sir Patrick of Lainshaw (16th/17th C.) represented Selkirkshire in Parliament in 1617. His Lairdship was later called Langshaw. It is possible he was the same man as Sir Patrick of Elibank. Sir Patrick of Elibank (d.1649) son of Sir Gideon. He was served as heir to his father in 1621. He was Keeper of Caerlaverock Castle. He was involved in a feud with James Cranston in about 1610. In 1621 he succeeded to his father's lands of Langshaw in Melrose Parish. He was also involved in lands by the Commendator of Melrose in about 1621. In 1622 he was involved in a ‘wadset’ with Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, over the lands of Blackgrain in the Lordship of Ettrick. He married no less than 5 times. He was M.P. for Haddington Constabulary 1628–33 and 1640–41. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia and then elevated to the peerage as Lord Elibank. He was succeeded in 1650 by his son Patrick, 2nd Lord Elibank. Sir Patrick of Deuchar (1625/6–89) son of James, who was 3rd son of Patrick of Falahill, with his mother being Bertha Maule, of the Pannure family. His brothers were Sir James of Skirling and Sir Robert of Priestfield. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1665, 1667 and 1669–74. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663 and as a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. He is probably the Patrick who had a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk over Common land in 1665. He paid the land tax in Selkirkshire in 1678 and is recorded representing Henry Hislop in a discharge in 1684 with the Bailie of Selkirk. He may have married Euphan, daughter of James Baird. Patrick of Cherrytrees (18th C.) eldest son of James of Cherrytrees. He was admitted as an Advocate in 1751 and was Sheriff of Roxburghshire from 1769. He served as Sheriff-Depute of Roxburghshire in 1780 and was on the roll of electors for the county. He was probably succeeded by George of Cherrytrees, who owned the lands in Yetholm Parish in 1788. Richard (b.1818/9) farmer and innkeeper in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on Douglas Square, farming 40 acres. In the 1860s he was listed as proprietor of the Crown Inn on Douglas Square (perhaps at the same location). His wife was Jane and their children included Mary, Robert and Jane. Sir Robert of Priestfield (d.1672) 2nd son of James of Skirling and grandson of Patrick of Falahill. He was brother of Sir Patrick of Deuchar and Sir James of Skirling. He was Lord Provost of Edinburgh and represented Edinburgh in Parliament. He acquired the lands of Cameron, Priestfield and Melgum in Forfarshire. He also held 2 tenements in Hawick, which were inherited by his son Alexander in 1672; it is not clear where these pieces of land were located. He firstly married Helen, daughter of Alexander Hay of Kenneth, and secondly married Jean, daughter of John Dickson of Hartree. His children included: James, who died young; Alexander, who succeeded him; John (b.1656); Robert; William (1662–1703); and James (again, b.1669). Robert (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish recorded at Borthwickbrae in 1718 and 1721. He may be the Robert who married Bessie Learmonth in Roberton in 1714. His children probably included: James (b.1715); William (b.1718); Robert (b.1721); and Margaret (b.1723). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Ormiston in 1755. He married Elspeth Grieve and their children included John (b.1752) and Walter (b.1755). William (b.1756) and August (b.1765), also baptised in Cavers, were probably his children. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, perhaps related to the earlier Robert in Ormiston. He was recorded at Sunnyside in 1795. Probably the same Robert was farmer at Ormiston Mains, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. His children included Mary (b.1795) and Walter (b.1798). He may be the Robert who married Betty Pott and whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Robert (b.1805) and Adam (b.1806). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton, who lived at Pathhead and then Toftsholm. He was probably the smith in Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He was one of the first feuars to commence building in Newcastleton. He married twice, his 2nd wife being Marion Crozier. Their children were: John (b.c.1777), who was a blacksmith; Marion (b.1781), who married mason John Nichol; Robert (1784–1859), who married Nellie Scott; Margaret (1788–1882), who married Robert Mitchellhill, and emigrated to Galt, Ontario; and Jane (b.1790), who probably died young. His first wife may have been Margaret Nichol, who died at Millholm in 1774, aged 31, and is buried at Ettleton. Robert (b.1780s) father of plumber John (who was father of J.E.D.) and James. He married Alison Erskine Scott. Robert (1784–1859) nail-maker in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was at about 47 North Hermitage Street. He was probably son of Robert and Marion Crozier. He married Helen (or ‘Nellie’) Scott, who died in 1874, aged 83. Their children included: Robert (1813/4–56); Marion (b.1816); Archibald (1817–44); John; James; Thomas (1827/8–47); and Jean (1831/2–51). They are mostly buried in Etterton Cemetery. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Pott and their children included Richardson (b.1812). Robert (18th/19th C.) baker in Newcastle. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is also listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He does not appear in the 1841 census. Robert (b.c.1810) foreman at Weensland Mills. He was living there in 1841, along with Jessie, probably his wife. Robert (b.1821/2) shepherd at Old Castleton in 1851 and 1861. He is still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Rachel, and their children included Janet, Marion and Jane. Robert (1831–1901) born in Hawick, son of weaver William and Helen Biggar, and cousin of Sir James A.H.’s father. He worked in the hosiery trade with William Watson & Sons, taking over Peter Laidlaw’s business at Wilton Grove for a few years in the 1870s. He was a founder member and President of the Archæological Society (with only his distant cousin Sir James outliving him), major contributor to the Transactions and served as Museum Curator. He was also President of the Temperance Burns Club. He emigrated to Canada in 1882, living mainly in Galt, and returned to Hawick in 1892. He became a contributor to the local press, where he sometimes wrote under the pen-name ‘B.O.B.’, giving us ‘The Reckoning’ for example. However, he was a strong advocate for total abstinence. He was a Councillor 1868/9, supporter of the allotments, the Working Men’s Building Society and the Co-operative Society. He wrote several books of local interest, including ‘The Gypsies of the Borders’ (1875), ‘Hawick Songs and Song Writers’ (1881, 1889, 1897) and ‘Hawick Characters’ (1901), both of which ran to several editions (both were originally published in serial form in the local press, with ‘Hawick Characters’ collecting many articles originally written by others). His ‘History of Hawick, from Earliest Times to 1832’ (1901) is a treasure-trove of anecdotal information. It was followed by ‘History of Hawick, from 1832’ issued by the publisher in 1902 from notes that he left. He also wrote ‘The gypsies of the border’ (1875). He lived at Allars Crescent in the latter part of his life. In 1853 he married Agnes, daughter of George ‘Pie’ Olivers, who died in 1901, aged 72; when they married he was living in Brougham Place. Their sons were William (a merchant in Aberdeen) and George Oliver (a doctor in Wisconsin). A memorial stone was erected in the Wellogate Cemetery by his friends and members of the Archaeological Society, containing the motto ‘Leal to the Border’. A portrait of him was painted by Frank Wood in 1897, in the Museum. Robert (19th C.) son of John. He was a carpenter at Blacklee in Hobkirke Parish. In 1868 he married Margaret Jackson, from Crookholm, Canonbie. Their children were John (chemist and druggist), James (also a carpenter, died age 27) and Margaret (who married Thomas Smith). Robert (b.1835) son of John and Isabella Howison. He was a frame-worker in Hawick, living at 50 High Street in 1861. He married Elizabeth Hunter, who was from Earlston. His children included James (b.1860), who became a baker in Edinburgh. Robert (b.1856) elder brother of J.E.D. He was a commercial traveller in London and had eight children. Roger (d.1330) son of Archibald, he is one of the earliest known ancestors of the local Murrays. He was recorded as being ‘de Moravia’. In 1321 he was granted the lands of Fala by James, Lord Douglas. The Murrays of Falahill, Philiphaugh and Blackbarony are all descended from him. Roger (15th/16th C.) leased half the lands of Sundhope in the Yarrow valley in the period 1487–99. The other half went to William, who was his brother. The pair appear to have had their farm raided several times, e.g. by Robert Turnbull in Castleton (near Braxholme), who was charged with stealing 15 score sheep from Sundhope. He leased half of Windydoors in 1502 as well as half of Sundhope with Thomas (who was surely another relative). Possibly the same Roger was ‘in old age, deprived of strength’ whose land had been ‘despoiled by thieves’ who in 1532/3 sold his Selkirk tenement and riggs to his younger son James. Sarah (1744–1811) of Kensington, who wrote a travel guide ‘A companion, and useful guide to the beauties of Scotland . . .’ published in 1799. She visited Hawick in 1785, her short account including the following: ‘Some young lads passing through the churchyard at Hawick whilst I was in it, with dogs and some strange looking things on their backs, I inquired what they were going to do with them, but their language to me was as Arabic. On my shaking my head as a token of not understanding them, they began screaming in the highest note of their voices, taking me, I suppose, for a deaf woman: and at last we separated, laughing at our inability of understanding each other'. Sir Thomas of Bothwell (d.1361) son of Sir Andrew. The identity of his mother seems to be unknown. He succeeded to his father’s estates after the death of his elder brother John. In 1351 he was a hostage in England, in place of David II. He returned to Scotland in 1352 and was knighted by the following year. He was involved in negotiations for the release of David, and was involved with the Treaty of Berwick in 1357. He appears to have returned as a prisoner to England in 1358, and although he may have returned to Scotland again, he was back a prisoner in London in 1359. He married Joan (or Joanna) Moray, daughter of Sir Maurice of Strathearn, who had been Baron of Hawick. He was granted the Barony (along with that of Sprouston) in a 1358 charter of David II. However, this may have been a re-granting, since it seems likely he gained the Barony through marriage to the daughter of the previous Baron. He was described in 1358 as ‘panitario nostro Scocie’ (i.e. pantler of Scotland). He probably died of the plague in London. Although it is often stated that his widow later married Archibald, Earl of Douglas, it seems more likely that Douglas married his daughter (and heiress), who was also called Joan. Through her the Barony of Hawick passed to the Douglases. Thomas (16th C.) recorded ‘in Newhall’ in 1531/2 when he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. He was probably tenant at Newhall on the Ale Water. Thomas of Bowhill (d.bef. 1539) recorded in 1536/7 when Patrick of Philiphaugh complained on his behalf about others farming at Easter Bowhill. It was stated that he had occupied those lands for 40 years. He is also recorded in 1539 in the Selkirk Protocol Books when his widow Christian Murray sold her part of North Bowhill to Robert Ker, Burgess of Edinburgh. His son and heir had a dispute over the lands of South Bowhill. He was probably related to James of Bowhill, who died at Flodden. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. In 1761 he married Margaret Riddell, who was from Hawick. Their children included: Thomas (b.1762); Walter (b.1762); Gideon (b.1765); John (b.1765); George (b.1767); and Margaret (b.1771). Thomas (1754–1834) son of David and Elizabeth. He was farmer at Whisgills in Castleton Parish, perhaps taking over from his brother John. He was recorded on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was still farmer there in the 1830s. He married Janet Inglis, who was from Millholm, with her maternal grandparents being Brydons from Ettrick; she died in 1852, aged 84. They had many children, including 7 daughters who grew to adulthood and all married: Jean (b.1783), married Rev. John Law of the Newcastle Burngher Kirk; Agnes (b.1784), who married Walter Armstrong, ‘the auld merchant’ in Newcastle; Elizabeth (b.1788), who died young; David (1791/2–1815), who was very tall; Elizabeth (again, 1794–1845), who married Peter Oliver; James (b.1792), who also farmed at Whisgills; Mary (b.1804), who married Robert Elliot in Hermitage; Thomas (b.1796); Julie (b.c.1799); John (b.1803), who died young; and John (again, b.1806), who also died young. One of his daughters agreed to marriage after dreaming about her dress being snagged by her husband-to-be as he was angling. Margaret (1799/1800–61), who married shepherd John Scott, may also have been his daughter. The family are buried in Etton Cemetery (and the dates on the headstone do not all match the birth years from the parish records). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Borthwickbrae. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (b.1794/5) labourer in Roberton Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Roberton Glebefoot, described in 1851 as a ‘Road Contractor’. His wife was Margaret and their children included Beatrix, Jessie, Walter, William, Robert and Thomas. He was probably the son of William baptised in Roberton in 1794. Thomas (d.1842) labourer at Upperraw and Whiteknoewe. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. Thomas, LL.D. (1792–1872) of Edinburgh, was made an Honorary Burgess in 1836 after delivering a series of lectures in the town on ‘the Science of Political Economy’. He wrote several books on varied subjects. Thomas (1806/7–58) son of James, who farmed at Whisgills. He was tenant farmer at Burnmouth. Thomas (1811–73) father of Sir James A.H. Born in Denholm, he had a clothiers business in Hawick. His father was James (descended from the Murrays of Spittal Tower), and his mother Christina Winthrope (whose father was a ‘writer’ in Hawick). He became a journeyman tailor, travelling the north of England and witnessing the opening of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway in 1829. He eventually returned in 1835 and settled in Denholm, since Hawick had too many tailors at the time. However, he moved into Hawick in 1858, his house and business being at 6 Bourtree Place. He was for a while a member of the old Town Council. In 1835 he married Mary (1803–88), 6th child of Hawick linen manufacturer Charles Scott. They had 5 children, all born in Denholm: James (1837–1915), lexicographer extraordinaire; Charles, who died young; Alexander Davidson, newspaper editor; Charles Oliver, engraver; and Margaret Scott, who married Alfred Marshall, and later lived with her mother at 10 Wellogate Place. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Kirnkean in Castleton Parish in 1868. Walter (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Probably the same Walter is recorded in 1691 having a daughter Margaret baptised, with no mother's name given. The witnesses were John and Andrew Riddell. Walter (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (1693/4–1719) buried at Borthwick Waas. His gravestone is adjacent to that of James and others associated with Teindside. Walter (18th C.) farmer who was replaced by Abraham Armstrong as tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1796. This was probably at Shankend farm. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Borthwick Mains in 1792 and 1795 and at Greenbank in 1798. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1791 and their children included: James (b.1793); Margaret (b.1795); and Thomas (b.1798). Walter (b.1740s) younger of Ancrum Bridge; and John. Walter (19th C.) Church Officer of Hawick Free Kirk 1874–87. William (15th C.) leased half the lands of Sundhope in the Yarrow valley from the Crown in the period 1487–99. His son John was also mentioned in 1492. His brother Roger leased the other half of Sundhope. In 1494/5 he had 30 oxen and cows, a horse and goods stolen by David Turnbull, son of the Laird of Whit hope. There were still Murrays at Sundhope in the late-17th century. William of Romanno (d.c.1560) son of William of Shillinglaw. He was listed among the Borders men who followed the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran, for which they had re mission in 1526. His brother Alexander was also listed. He married Joneta, heiress of John Romanno of that Ilk. His children included: William, who succeeded; John; James, Christian, who married William Cockburn of Henderland; and Marion, who married Thomas Dudingston of Southouse. William (16th C.) recorded in Sundhope in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. William (d.c.1633) acted as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for part of the rents in Brauxholm and Wilton in the period 1631–33. In the period 1633–37 his wife Isobel Wilson performed the duty in his place. William (17th C.) servitor to Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, recorded in 1646 when he witnessed a document relating to lands in Edinburgh. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Templehall’ when he witnessed a sasine relating to Harwood lands in 1664. William (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1716 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Wight. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Burnhead in 1724. He married Janet Scott and their children included: John (b.1717); Jean (b.1720); Robert (b.1722); and Walter (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were John and Walter Scott (who may have been related to his wife). William (18th C.) resident of the Dykes in Cavers Parish in 1724 and 1731. His children, baptised in Cavers, included William (b.1724), Margaret (b.1728) and Elizabeth (b.1731). William (b.1740s) younger son of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He had 2 sons: Veitch, who was a builder, working on Ancrum Bridge; and John. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1786. William ‘Willie on the Wundi Sole’ (d.bef. 1805) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Todd in Hawick in 1794. His nickname ‘Willie on the windowsole’ is recorded when his child died in 1787 and when his wife died in 1805. It seems likely that what is meant is the modern ‘window-sill’, but it is still unclear why he might have had this nickname. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Scarnook in 1786, 1788 and 1794. He may be the William who married Beatrix Scott in Roberton in 1786. His children, baptised in Roberton, included: James (b.1786); Walter (b.1788); Beatrix (b.1790); Robert (b.1792); and twins Thomas and William (b.1794). William (1771/2–1833) schoolmaster in Canonbie, who died in Langholm. He married Helen Byers, who died in 1866, aged 70. Their sons Andrew, John and William were teachers in Hawick. Their other children were Fanny (who died aged 95), John (teacher at Caverton Mill, near Kelso), Thomas (who also married a Helen Byers), James and Janet. William (b.1787/8) from Brownmuir in Selkirkshire, he was teacher at a school in Lilliesleaf. He ran his own school (separate from the Parochial School), which was probably on the Loan in the village. His was probably the ‘adventure school’ described in the New Statistical Account (1840) as teaching ‘English reading, writing, and arithmetic, the latter only tolerably well, the former two in the most vulgar manner’. It went on to say that the ‘teacher has no education superior to a common labourer, and refuses to apply for further education’; if not strictly accurate, this suggests strong disagreement with the minister, who probably wrote the account. He was recorded as teacher at Lilliesleaf in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his brothers Alexander and Walter. In 1861 he was on Main Street with his brother Alexander and his family. William (1789–1872) 3rd son of Andrew of Spittal Tower. He was a stockmaking in Hawick and later a merchant. In 1841 he was living on Miller’s Close off the High Street, in 1851 was on Broughton Place and in 1861 he was a grocer and china merchant at 75 High Street. In 1822 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Biggar, and she died in 1871, aged 77. Their children were: Andrew (1823–82), who married Isabella Brown; Jane (b.c.1825), who married John Marchbank; Elizabeth (b.1827), who married Andrew Smith of Dalkeith; Agnes (b.c.1830); Robert (b.c.1832); Isabella (b.c.1834), who married James Lambert and kept a wash-house; Helen (b.c.1836), who married Andrew Lambert; and William (b.c.1839), who married Margaret Anderson and later Mary Ann Hope. William (b.1792/3) from Traquair, he was a famer at Haughhead in Ashkirk Parish. In 1851 he was farmer there of 8 acres and in 1861 he was at ‘Nook Haugh’ farming 10 acres. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Philia Oliver and their children included Mary and Philia. His sister-in-law Janet Oliver (from Ashkirk) was living with the family in 1861. William (1794–1875) son of William and Beatric Scott, he was born in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was at Scarnook with his mother. In 1851 and 1861 he was a retired shepherd living with his daughter and son-in-law at Scarnook. His first wife (according to the gravestone) may have been Helen Grieve, who died in 1822, aged 20. He had sons William (d.1819), who died in infancy, and James (d.1841), who died in an accident at the age of 5. His daughter Helen married carrier John Elliot. He died at Scaurend and was buried in Robertson Cemetery. William (b.1802/3) from Castleton, he was a joiner in Teviothead. He married Betty Young. Their children included: John (b.1829); Elizabeth (b.1831); Thomas (1835–68), who died in an accident in Manchester; Douglas (b.1839); and James (b.1843). He is buried at Teviothead. William (c.1805–bef. 1851) woollen spinner in Hawick. He was living on the Loan in 1841 and his widow was there in 1851. He married Agnes Stevenson and their children included George, Thomas, Adam, William, Agnes and Robert. William (b.1812/3) shepherd at Blackcleugh, Teviothead Parish. He is recorded there in 1851 with his wife Janet and children Thomas, Andrew, George, William, Margaret, Walter and Elizabeth. Dr. William (1813/4–65) surgeon in Newcastle, brother of Margaret, Jane and Agnes. He was listed as a surgeon on Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He collected antiquities from the district, having the last hand-cuffs used in the village, as well as the supposed key from Mangerton Tower and a brass mortar-gun from Hermitage. He presented Liddesdale fossils and other items to the Hawick Archaeological Society. He was listed as a surgeon in Newcastle in the 1850s when he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale. When it was decided that the Liddesdale route would be taken for the railway, he rode his gig to the head of the Liddel with flags flying, to announce the good news to the district. In 1861 he was at about 48 South Hermitage Street, and listed as a surgeon, but blind. In 1843 he married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Scott, a Newcastleton innkeeper. Their children included Isabel, Elizabeth Janet and Mary. Isabel and Mary emigrated to Elmira, Illinois. He is buried at Ettenlon Cemetery. William (b.1814/15) tailor on the High Street. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 6 High Street with his wife Margaret and daughter, also Margaret. In 1851 he was a widower in a lodging house on Walter’s Wynd. William (1831/2–1906) Hawick teacher for over 50 years. Son of William, he was born at Broomieknowe, Canonbie. He came to Hawick in 1850, to help run the school started by his brother Andrew at the top of Baker Street, and continued by his other brother John. The school had moved to the old East Bank Kirk, then to the foot of the close at 9 High Street and then to 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place). He was hired as a teacher at St. Mary's School in 1864 and became the first Headmaster at Trinity in 1876. He was also on the Town Council for 5 years and served as Session Clerk for St. Mary's. When he retired in 1903 he built Carradoyne in Fenwick Park, where he died. He married Janet Murray, eldest sister of J.P. John (and probably his second cousin). Their children included: William, who worked at the Commercial Bank in Hawick, moved to England and retired to Langholm; John, an architect in Liverpool; David (who was assistant to Dr. James Brydon in the Sandbed; and Elizabeth Carruthers, who married Rev. Stewart Burns. William (19th C.) married Jane Dodd Hobkirk in Hawick in 1858. William (1838/9-1916) youngest son of William and brother of poet and historian Robert. He married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Anderson and she died in 1877, aged 33. Their children were William (printer in Costa Rica), Isabella (who married August Louis Roye from Detroit), Andrew (a chemist in Costa Rica who married twice) and 3 children who died young. He later remarried to Mary Ann Hope. He was said to be a striking personality (in contrast to his brother Robert), with a tall stature and a long flowing beard in later years. In 1908 he was elected librarian of the St. Andrew’s Society of Detroit. Soon after he returned to Hawick and became an active member of the Archeological Society, being joint secretary in 1910 and 1911 and writing some articles. William (b.1855) eldest son of local historian Robert. He became a merchant in Aberdeen. He married Georgina Scott and later Catherine Hosie. His children were Margaret, Agnes Oliver, Jane Stewart, Helen Georgina, Janet Brown and Robert. William (19th/20th C.) gardener at Borthwickart. He became a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. William (d.1915) son of William and Margaret Anderson, he was descended from the Spittal Tower Murrays and was nephew of local historian Robert. He became a printer in Costa Rica and married Agnes MacNair. His younger brother Andrew was a chemist in Costa Rica and married his sister-in-law Margaret MacNair (in earliest times interchangeable with ‘Moray’, and became ‘Moravia’, ‘Moravie’, etc. when written in Latin; other spellings include ‘Murra’ and ‘Murry’).

Murray Place (mu-ri-plis) n. lost street name, being the area behind 66 and 68 High Street, named after Walter Murray, stockingmaker who was there for only about 2 years from 1814. The new houses there were built in the early 1860s and for a few years referred to as Albert Place, but Murray Place by the 1868/9 Valuation roll. The name was dropped altogether in 1968 as it became simply the lower part of O’Connell Street.

Murray Place (mu-ri-plis) n. street in Denholm, between Douglas Drive and the Ashloaning, where 10 new houses were built in the 1950s.

the Murrays (thu-murriz) n. Scottish family, probably all originating from an ancient line connected with the area of Moray or Moravia in the north-east of Scotland. The most important Lairdship locally was that of the Murrays of Falahill and Philiphaugh, descended from Archibald, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In the 16th century these Murrays were involved in many feuds, as well as in the struggles against the English. There were long Murrays in Rulewater and in Hawick there were several important families (most of which are directly related), which gave us lexicographer Sir James A.H. Murray, local historian Robert Murray, songwriter J.E.D. Murray and others.

Murray-Stackert (mu-ri-stā-vur’) n. Archibald Stavert (19th/20th C.) lived at Saughtree and later Stanegarthside. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire.

Murray’s Temperance Hotel (mu-riz-tem-pu-rinz-hō-tel) n. teetotal establishment at 15 High Street in the late 19th century.

murt (muur) n., arch. the skin of a sheep that has died naturally – ‘Ane murt lamb skin [is stated to be hardly worth two shillings Scots]’ [BR1700], ‘Murt, A lamb-skin before castration-time, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (also ‘mort’).

murther (mu-thur) n., arch., poet. murder – ‘... but when he heard ane crying murther he straight way went up to make riddance and to alay tumult’ [PR1716], ‘Thaye sley the widaw an’ the fremet, an’ murther the faetherliss’ [HSR] (older version of the word murder).

Muselee (mez-, -mæz-, muiz-lee) n. farm across the Borthwick river from Deanburnhaugh, below Broadlee. It was in Hawick Parish until 1689/90.
when Roberton was formed. The Muselee Burn joins the Borthwick here, and the 276 m Muselee Hill is above. A narrow lane between 2 dykes to the left of the house is part of an old drove road, with cattle passing from the west through here and over to Teviothead and on to English markets. Alexander Scott ‘in Mouslaw’, recorded in 1501, could have been tenant here. Adam Murray is recorded there in 1502. The lands were owned by a branch of the Riddells from at least 1618 and passed to the niece of Charles Riddell of Muselee in 1849 when he died unmarried. In 1627 it was valued along with Woodburn as paying ‘120 lb., vicarage 20 lb’. Archibald Elliot of Muselie, ‘a common a notorious thief and fugitive’ was tried in 1628. There were 4 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Thomas Laidlaw, Malie Wilson, Robert Laidlaw and James Laidlaw. John Riddell paid the land tax on £100 in Hawick Parish in 1663 and 1678 (probably for Muselee, which was in Hawick Parish at that time). George Heatley was there in at least 1732–34 and Andrew Main in 1741. By 1788 (and still continued in 1811) the owner was Charles Riddell and the value was unchanged. John Scott was living there in 1792 and Thomas Grieve is recorded as farmer there in 1797. About the same time John Laidlaw was shepherd there. William Aitkin was farmer there in 1841. Robert Brown was farmer in the 1860s Capt. George Hutton Riddell was the owner in about 1874. (also formerly spelled ‘Mooslie’, ‘Muislie’, ‘Muslie’, ‘Muslie’, ‘Muisla’ and variants; it is ‘muselee’ in 1502, ‘Mouslie’ in 1616, ‘Mewsie’ in 1628, ‘Museley’ in 1653, ‘Muislie’ in 1663, ‘Muslie’ in 1682, ‘Mooslie’ in 1690, ‘Muislie’ in 1678 and 1695, ‘Musely’ in 1719, ‘Mewsie’ in 1761, ‘Muisly’ in 1732, ‘Mooselee’ in 1797 and ‘Muslie’ in 1841; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as ‘Mooselie’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Meussly’ and is absent from Stobie’s 1770 map and Ainslie’s 1821 map; the name may be from Old English ‘mos-leah’ meaning ‘fodder lea’).

Muselee Burn (mewz-lee-burn) n. stream that runs into the Borthwick Water roughly from the south-east, joining near Muselee. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail, with a section of the linear earthwork ending near the stream, about 300 m north of Broadlee Loch. It then runs in a south-easterly direction to connect with the headwaters of the Teinside Burn.

Muselee Hill (mewz-lee-hil) n. hill to the south-east of Muselee farm in the Borthwick valley, reaching a height of 276 m. A linear earthwork runs for about 500 m from Muselee Burn to the east, across the southern slopes of this hill, ending in the headwaters of the Wood Burn. It is presumably an old agricultural boundary.

Muselee Drive (mewz-lee-driv) n. short street in Lilliesleaf, running to the north at the west side of the village, usually written ‘Muselie Drive’.

Muselee Sike (mewz-lee-sik) n. small stream on the south side of the Borthwick valley, between Muselee and Woodburn. It is distinct from Muselee Burn, which lies to the west.

the Museum (tlu-mew-zee-um) n. Hawick’s museum is located in Wilton Lodge, it houses a permanent display of knitwear and hosiery history, as well as other local artefacts, paintings, natural history and achaeology. Many more items of local interest are in storage than can be displayed at one time. It grew out of the collection of the Archaeological Society, which first opened to the public in premises at the end of the High Street in 1858. It can be seen upstairs in the property of Milligan’s (site of the Liberal Club) in an 1858 photo. A steady stream of artefacts were donated to the Society over its first few decades, and were on public display initially only for a few hours on Saturday evenings. There was a catalogue published for the 1866 exhibition given in connection with the Archaeological Society. The collection moved to the old Grammar School building and then the Buccleuch Memorial, where at least one photograph exists showing the collection packed into the available space. In 1906 it was offered to the Town Council, under the condition that Wilton Lodge be converted into use as a Museum. This followed in 1910, when it was opened by the Duke of Buccleuch (who was given an ornate golden key to mark the occasion, and was the first person to sign the visitor’s book). J.P. Alison drew up the original plans for converting the house into a museum. Extensive renovations were carried out in 1959 to showcase the local exhibits, and in 1975 the Scott Gallery extension was added. In 1984 the Museum became the headquarters for the Roxburgh District Museums Service. In early 2007 a new lift was added and other renovations carried out. In 2017 the trust ‘Live Borders’ took over the running of the Museum.

Musgrave (muz-gräv) n. Sir John (c.1450–c.1515) Englishman who was important on the Marches around 1500. In 1502 Adam Turnbull ‘in Hornishole, now in Chalmerlane-Newtoune’ had a remission for several crimes, including ‘the treasonable inbringing’ of him to the ‘Burning of Selkirk and Hereschip, and Stouthreif of goods therein’. He was probably son of Sir Thomas and younger brother of Sir Richard. He was knighted after the Battle of Stoke Field. He was Sheriff of Cumberland from 1489 and Constable of Bewcastle (along with his son Thomas) from 1493. He married Joan, daughter of John Crackenthorpe and secondly Margaret (or Dorothy), sister of John Dudley. He may also be the same Sir John whose wife was an inspiration for some of William Dunbar’s poetry. Sir John of Bewcastle (16th C.) son of Sir William and an unknown mistress. He was also known as ‘Jack a Musgrave’ and was leader of English raiding parties, serving as Captain of Bewcastle. In 1541 he complained that his houses had been burned by Liddesdale men. In 1542 he and 40 men ‘brent a towne in Tevedall canyld Rowlle’, which was presumably on the Rule Water, perhaps Town-o-Rule. He took part in the battle of Solway Moss at the end of 1542. He led a force that intercepted a raiding party of Liddesdale men near Hexham in 1542/3. However, he was accused of ransoming Scottish prisoners. He married Jane Chamber and Agnes Thirlwall and his children included Adam, Ingram, Thomas, Richard and Lancelot. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Simon, who was Captain of the English garrison at Bewcastle. He was younger brother of Christopher. In 1583 he sent a letter to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor in which he lists the chief Elliots and Armstrongs of Liddesdale. He acted as Captain of Bewcastle once his father was too old. In 1596 he attempted a retaliatory raid on the Armstrongs of Holsways, but was ambushed on the way home by John Armstrong of Langholm, William Armstrong of Kinmont and others. They delivered him to Scott of Branxholme and he was returned after paying ransom. These events could have been inspiration for part of the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer o’ the Fair Dodheid’. In 1602 he fought a duel with Lancelot Carleton, after he had been accused of offering to give up Bewcastle to the King of Scotland. He married Ursula, daughter of Sir Richard Carnaby, and secondly married a Scottish woman. There were complaints from English Commissioners in 1606 that ‘he matched one of his base daughters with that bloodie and theevish clanne of the Armstrongs of Whithaughe in Liddesdale’ and that the sons of Sandie’s Ringan were known to frequent his house.
Mushet

Musselburgh

Ilk being served heir to his grandfather. Several of the other witnesses were local men, and so it is possible that this was ‘Howpasley’. Rev. William (d.1678) minister of Slains from 1635, he was translated to Hassendean Parish in 1664, presumably becoming the first Episcoplain minister. However, this was during the time of dispute about dissolving the parish, parts of the fabric having already been removed to Roberton. There was a disagreement with the Presbytery over the allocation of a glebe for him, resolved in his favour in 1668. He remained at Hassendean until his death. Several letters from him to Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester are in the National Archives. He married Christian, daughter of William Hay, minister of Crimond. He had a large family and no personal estate, so his son William (apparently lame in his right hand) was given a bursary by the Presbytery in 1670 and a younger son also given it in 1674. This younger son, or another altogether was Gilbert, who became minister of Cumbernauld. He additionally had at least one daughter, Margaret. There was also a Henry Mushet, minister at Bowden about 20 years earlier who may have been related (spelled ‘Musshit’, ‘Mushet’ and variants).

Musselburgh (mu-sul-bu-ru) n. town in the Lothians, about 6 miles east of Edinburgh. Created a burgh of barony in the early 14th century, it was originally called Eskmouth and nicknamed the ‘Honest Toun’, supposedly after the Regent, Lord Randolph, took shelter there and no one gave away his place of concealment to the English. It is well known to Hawick folk for having a Common Riding, held in late July. The principals are the Honest Lad and Lass, and are elected by open vote of the ‘Honest Toun’s Association’. The festival really began in 1936, building on the ancient riding of the marches ceremony and partly inspired by Hawick Common Riding. The main song is ‘Come all ye Honest Lads and Lasses’.

Myredykes (miër-diks) n. former farm in Castle- ton Parish on the road to Kielder, at the head of the Liddel. It is ‘Myredyks’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. It was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1623. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it covered 306 acres and was bounded by Peel, the Border, Hudshouse and Thorlieshope; the farmhouse appears to be shown on the east bank of... the Peel Burn rather than the west. William Elliot farmed there in the late 18th century. Thomas Elliot, Archibald Scott and their families lived there in 1851 and Thomas Murray’s family in 1861. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. The property is now under forest. There was once a railway bridge over the road there. A flanged axe-head found there is in the National Museum of Antiquities (also written ‘Meerdykes’, it is ‘Meirdykis’ in 1623 and ‘Myerdykes’ in 1718).

Myre-quarter (mɪr-kwear-tur) n. former name for lands in Belses. In 1580/1 they were wadset by ‘Dand’ Davidson to Walter Turnbull of Bewlie for an annual rent of 5 bolls of grain; they were at that time a ‘5 poundland’. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Kerr in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew. In 1874 it was part of the estate of Belses owned by Sir George Douglas of Springwood Park (it is ‘Myre quarter’ in 1580/1 and ‘Myre Quarter’ in 1678).

Myres (mɪrz) n. former name for lands in Lillieleaf. In 1528 John Scott ‘in Myris or Vest Manes in Lillescleff’ received payment for 3 pieces of land, summing to £40. In 1531 John Scott ‘of Myris’ assigned to his cousin Walter Scott, tutor of Haining, these lands, which he rented from the Archbishop of Glasgow. This was confirmed in 1530/1, where John’s lands were described as ‘that fourth part of the lands of Myriss with pertinents lying on the west of the place of Myris’, Walter to pay John £14. In 1595/6 Walter Riddell of that Ilk held the lands of ‘West-Maynis alias Dunstane or Myris’, suggesting this was the same place as West Mains and Dunstane.

Myreslaw Court (mɪrz-lu-kɔr) n. sheltered housing complex built at Myreslaw Green in 1973, adjacent to St. Margaret’s Home. It is on the site of the former ‘Green Kirk’ (later used concerts, church events and as a warehouse) and also the house where the Cornet traditionally stopped for a stirrup cup on the way down from the Mair. It was the first purpose-built sheltered housing unit in Scotland, and used as a model by other local authorities (also written as one word).

Myreslawgreen see Myreslaw Green

Myreslaw Green (mɪrz-lu-green, mɪs-lu-green) n. part of the town Common in the West End. In 1740 it was used to pasture animals employed on building the Teviot Brig, and the Council ordered that no turf should be cut from there.

It was first feued in part in 1766, for the Anti-Burgher meeting house and manse, and not immediately affected by the Division of 1777. Originally a pasture with only one building (the Green Kirk built in 1767), it was developed over the subsequent few decades. The area once included what is now Drumlanrig Place to Myreslawgreen and formed the western boundary of the Burgh. The ‘common vennel at Myreslawgreen’ referred to in the 1537 charter probably ran from Morrisson Place to Coble Pool Lane (now on the High School grounds). When this area is reached by the riders coming back from the Moor on the Friday of the Common Riding, they are served refreshments, or ‘a guid cauld calker’, a tradition possibly began by ‘Rodgie o the Green’. This was continued for about 70 years in the 20th century by the Misses McCallum. ‘Myreslaw Green’ appeared as a street name from at least 1824, and is now mainly used to the single street, which was originally part of Green Wynd. But it is also used more generally to mean that broad area of the West End surrounding the former green, including many streets named after leading Liberal reformers of Victorian times. The street used to contain the West-end branch of the Co-op (the word itself is a mixture of Old English and Norse meaning ‘green swamp’ or ‘marshy grassland’; there are many earlier spellings; it is marked ‘Myres Law Green’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

the Myreslawgreen Mairches (thu-mɪs-lu-green-mar-cheez) n. name formerly used for the boundaries ridden by the Common Riding cavalcade around the Myrselawgreen area, on their return from the Moor.

Napier (nā-pur, -pee-ur) n. Andrew (18th C.) mason of Hawick Parish. In 1747 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for George Richardson. He married Margaret Graham and they had a son John baptised in Hawick in 1739. His other children included: John (b.1744); and Jean (b.1745). He may be the son of John baptised in Hawick in 1710. He could be the Andrew whose sister Janet died in Hawick in 1778. Basil (1877–1900) eldest son of Mark and grandson of Lord Napier. He was Lieutenant with the 34th Battalion, Imperial Yeomanry. He died during the South African War and is listed on the Hawick Boer War Memorial.

Francis (1705–73) 6th Lord Napier of Merchiston and 3rd Baronet of Thirlestane. He was only son of Sir William Scott of Thirlestane and Elizabeth Brisbane, Mistress of Napier. He changed his name from Scott to Napier when he inherited his mother’s titles. He married Henrietta, daughter of Charles Hope, Earl of Hopetoun and secondly Henrietta Maria, daughter of George Johnston of Dublin. His children were: William, who succeeded; Charles of Merchiston Hall; Lieut.-Col. Francis of the Marines; John, who died unmarried; Mark; George; James, who died young; Patrick, Naval Captain; James John; Stewart; Henrietta, who married William, 12th Lord Ross; Hester, who married Alexander Johnson of Carnsalloch; and Mary, who also died young.

Francis (1758–1823) of Thirlestane, 7th Baron Napier, 8th Lord Merchiston, often referred to as ‘Lord Francis Napier’. He was only son of William and grandson of Francis Scott. His family were descendants of the Scotts of Thirlestane (in Ettrick), who were in turn cadets of the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was an army officer who surrendered to Gen. Gates at Saratoga in 1777. Returning to Britain he continued in the Army, laid the foundation stone for Edinburgh University’s ‘Old College’ in 1789, was confirmed to the House of Lords in 1790, became Lord-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and was also Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. In 1784 he married Maria Margaret, eldest daughter of Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Clavering. Thirlestane House (in the Ettrick valley) being too small, around 1790 he moved his home to Langlands, renaming the house Wilton Lodge. He paid tax on 5 female servants at Wilton Lodge in 1789 and 1790 and 3 in 1791, as well as 5 male servants in 1790, 3 in 1791–94 and 4 in 1797. He was taxed for owning a carriage at Wilton Lodge in the period 1789–95 and horses in the period 1789–94. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He had some local involvement in politics, being the head of the group promoting war against France in those years, and chairing an influential anti-reform meeting in Hawick in 1792. In 1793 he headed the pro-war side of a public meeting held in Hawick to discuss the possibility of war with France. In 1797 he was recorded as owner of 2 work horses and 3 carriage or saddle horses at Wilton Lodge on the Horse Tax Rolls; he also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs in the same year. In about 1799 he was among the local men who contributed money to support the war against France. He was noted locally for his dress sense. He still owned Thirlestane and other lands in Ettrick and Yarrow Parishes in 1802. He sold Wilton Lodge again in 1805; however, in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is still listed as owner of the ‘Half Barony of Wilton, called Langlands’, excluding most of Roughheugh, Silverbuthall, Howlands and Dovemount, but including Calaburn. There are several surviving letters from him in the Walter Mason Collection from the period 1815–23. He was involved with setting up the Pastoral Society of Selkirkshire. He had 9 children, 6 of whom were born at Wilton Lodge. His children included: Maria Margaret (b.1785), who married Rev. Orfeur William Kelvington of Hatfield; William John (b.1786), who succeeded; Charlotte (b.1788), who died in infancy; Anne (b.1789), born at Wilton Lodge, who married Sir Thomas Gibson-Carmichael; Sophia (1791–1829), who was born at Wilton Lodge and died unmarried; Francis (b.1793), who must have died young; Charles (b.1794), whose descendants took the surname Napier-Clavering: Rev. Henry Alfred (b.1796); and Caroline (b.1798), who married Neville Reid. The witnesses in 1791 were Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, Thomas Elliot Ogilvie of Chesters, Gilbert Chisholme of Stiches and Dr. James Wilson, surgeon in Hawick – ‘There is Lord Napier o’ the Lodge, And Gawin in the Hall, And

Mr. Charters o’ Wilton Manse, Preaches lectures to us all’ [DJG]. John (17th/18th C.) mason in Hawick. His name is written ‘Neper’ in 1705 and 1706 when he witnessed baptisms (sometimes for fellow masons). In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for fellow mason Peter Mitchell and also for ‘younger’ carrier William Aitken. He is ‘Naper’ when he witnessed baptisms for William Aitken in 1710 and for weaver Andrew Jardine in 1713. He also witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1716 for cooper John Turnbull. He was recorded as ‘merchant’ in his child’s baptismal record of 1718. He married Mary Graham in Hawick in 1705 and their children included Anna (b.1706), Walter (b.1707), Janet (b.1708), Andrew (b.1710), Isobel (b.1712), Agnes (b.1713), Margaret (b.1716), Agnes (again, b.1718), Katherine (b.1720), James (b.1723) and John (b.1729). The witnesses in 1718 were gardener Walter Turnbull and Beadle John Scott. Mark Francis (1852–1919) 3rd son of Sir Francis, 10th Lord Baron Napier of Merchiston and 1st Baron of Ettrick (and Viceroy of India), and great-grandson of the Lord Napier who stayed at Wilton Lodge. He stood unsuccessfully against Unionist Arthur Ralph Douglas Elliot in the 1886 Roxburghshire election, but defeated him to become Liberal M.P. in 1892. He was defeated in the 1895 election by the Conservative Earl of Dalkeith. In 1878 he married Emily Jones. Their children were: Basil, killed in action in South Africa; Claude Inverness; and Philip Henry. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: Marion (b.1694); and John (b.1696). The witnesses in 1696 were William and John Cavers. William (d.1775) 7th Baron Napier, eldest son of Francis. He was a Liet.-Col. in the Army and Deputy-Adjutant General of the forces in Scotland. He married Mainie, daughter of Charles, 8th Lord Cathcart and was succeeded by his only son Francis (also formerly spelled ‘Naper’, ‘Neper’ and ‘Naprie’).

Naworth Castle

Naworth Castle (na-wurk-kaw-sul??) n. castle about 12 miles north-east of Carlisle, once a stronghold of the English Wardens of the Western Marches. It was built by Ranulph Dacre in 1335, although there may have been an earlier castle. It continued in the Dacre family until the 1600s, when it passed to the Howard family by marriage (Thomas Howard married the widowed Lady Dacre, and his 3 sons married her 3 daughters!). Lord William Howard (‘Belted Will’) considerably enlarged it, but in 1844 was much damaged in a fire. It was then reconstructed and is still lived in by the Howard descendants, the family of the Earl of Carlisle. A stump in the grounds is supposedly of an oak tree where Scottish rievers were hung.

Ness (nes) n. Rev. David (1863–1935) born in East Wemyss, he graduated M.A. from St. Andrews University in 1885 and was licensed to preach by Kirkcaldy Presbytery in 1889. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk 1889–92 and then assisted at Thornwood, Bothwell. He was ordained as assistant and successor at Whiteinch in 1894 and moved to Savoch in 1928.

Nessie (ne-see) n. aquatic monster supposed to live in Loch Ness, although there has never been convincing evidence. However, its cousin Wullie really does live in Wulliestruther.

neth (neth) prep., poct. beneath, below – ‘. . . But oot yont neth the mune’s licht At the coortin’ thrang . . . ’ [WL].

nether (ne-thur) adj. under, lower, particularly lower-situated of 2 houses or farms (now particularly in place names, e.g. Nethrraw, Nether Bonchester, Netherhall, Nether Kirk and Nether Tofts).

Nether Ancrum (ne-thur-awng-krum) n. former name for what is now the village of Ancrum, with ‘Over Ancrum’ being across the river. The lands were held by ‘David Ancrum’ and a set of feuars in 1643 and valued at £944. It was later owned by Ogilvie of Chesters. In 1788 it was split between 8 separate owners, as well as ‘Fe-wars of Nether Ancrum’ (it is ‘Nether Ancrum’ in 1548/9).

Nether Belses (ne-thur-bel-seez) n. Nether Belses, former name for part of Belses.

Nether Bonchester (ne-thur-bon-ches-tur) n. former farm, just below where the modern Bonchester farm is located, over the bridge at the base of Bonchester Hill. John Turnbull (called ‘Case’) was tenant there in 1494/5. In 1569 it was among the lands purchased from Jedburgh Abbey by Adam French, and is listed ‘with the woddis of the samin’. In 1587 it was again ‘with woods’, along with Over Bonchester, among the lands of the Lordship of Jedburgh. In 1606 the tenant is recorded as Mark Turnbull. It was purchased by Walter Scott in 1632 from Alexander Kirkton (Provost of Jedburgh) and John Moscrop (Burgess of Jedburgh). It was then owned by a branch of the Scotts until sold by his great-grandson in the mid-1700s. It was valued at £180 Scots in 1643, 1663 and 1678 (although there seem to be errors in some records). Thomas Scott, brother of Walter, became the 2nd Scott Laird in 1653. Thomas was succeeded by his son Walter Scott in 1680, and he was recorded as Laird there on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. In 1707 it was owned by William Scott and valued at £180. In 1733 Walter Scott was succeeded by his son, also Walter. He was in turn succeeded by his son Thomas who sold the farm to William Oliver of Weens and Dinlabyre in 1779. Wright John Rule was there in 1788. In 1788 it was still valued at £180. The farm was sold along with Weens to Robert Nutter Campbell in 1793, and in 1796 he sold them to Adm. Thomas Pringle. Francis Renwick was tenant there in 1797. By 1811 the farm (or part of it) was owned by Thomas Cleghorn and valued at £31 4s 8d. The farm had a nursery garden that once supplied trees to other prop-erties in the area. The old house was in a hollow below the present farmhouse’s garden. It was a simple 2-storey building, taken down in the 1780s and part of it still standing around the 1830s. The doors and parts of the flooring were re-used on a cottage at Bridge-end (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Nethir Boneches’ in 1494/5, ‘nethir Bunchester’ in 1569, ‘Neddir Bonechest’ in

Netherby (ne-thur-bee) n. village just over the Border into Cumbria, off the A7. Held by the Grahams in rieving days, Netherby Hall was built around an older tower in the mid-18th cen- tury. There may have been some confusion with Netherhall.

Nethercroft (ne-thur-kroft) n. another name for Northcroft, recorded in the 19th cen- tury. There may have been some confusion with Netherhall.

Nether Croft (ne-thur-kroft) n. former name for lands in the upper Teviot valley somewhere near Dryden, Teindside, etc. The name is recorded as ‘Neather Croft’ in 1686 among the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch then occupied by Robert Grieve in Commonside.

Nether Dykeraw (ne-thur-dik-raw) n. former farmstead near Dykeraw in Southdean Parish. James, Michael, John, Adam and Robert Oliver were tenants there in 1541, paying 25s yearly. David Oliver was there in 1694. James Hargrave was shepherd there in 1797 (it is ‘Nethir Dykraw’ in 1541 and ‘nether dykra’ in 1694).

Nether Foulwud (ne-thur-fowl-wud) n. Nether Foulwood, former name for lands in Liddesdale, situated near where Foulwood Sike meets the Liddel Water, between Mangerton and D’mainholm. Over Foulwood was further up the stream. It is recorded as ‘Foulwod inferior’ on the rental roll of c.1376 and valued at 10 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 ‘Nethir Foulwod’ was leased to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn) and still valued at 10 shillings. It became the modern farm of Gillside.

Nether Galalaw (ne-thue-ga-lu-law) n. former name for lands near Galalaw. It is unclear if this was part of the main farm, or a name for an adjacent farm. In 1534 Gavin Elliot sold the 40-shilling lands there to William Scott, the seal- ing of the letter of reversion being done at Has- sendean Kirk and recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books (it is ‘Neder Gallelaw’ in 1534).

Netherhaa (ne-thur-haw, -hal) n. Netherhall, former farmstead at the western end of Wilton Park, below ‘Overhaa’ (or ‘Everhaa’), and on the eastern side of where the Wilton Burn meets the Teviot. This was once the back entrance to Lang- lands estate, and presumably owned by the Laird of Langlands. However, there is now no sign of a house there and it seems likely it was demolished when the Town took over Wilton Park. Thomas Irvine was there in 1726–29 and John Scott in 1747. It is possible this is the ‘Nethercroft, ac- quired from Langlands’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, with Mrs. Shortreed as owner. A small mill lade is shown off the Wilton Burn, run- ning past the farm, on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. William Henderson was ‘Overseer of Parks’ there in 1851 (it is unclear whether the name is as old as ‘Overhaaa’ or whether it was named later; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and still on the Ordnance Survey map of 1904).

Nether Harden (ne-thur-haw-din) n. former name for lands near Harden, and once part of the barony of Chamberlain Newton, which were resigned by Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden in 1540. The land seems to have been finally conveyed in 1556.

Nether Harden (ne-thur-haw-din) n. former farm in Liddesdale, part of Harden. It is shown on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties, covering 420 acres, bounded by Potterlamport, lands owned by the Laird of Whithaugh and the farms of Cocklaik and Dykeraw. The farmhouse was shown on the south side of the Harden Burn, where there is nothing on modern maps.

Nether Harwud (ne-thur-har-wud) n. former name for lands at Harwood on Teviot. It is listed among the lands held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, along with ‘Over Harwood’ (it is ‘Nether Harewod’ in 1511, ‘Nethir Harwood’ in 1572, ‘Nethair Harwoord’ in 1594 and ‘Nathir Harwood’ in 1615).

Nether Hawthornside (ne-thur-haw-thorn-sid) n. former farm near Hawthornside, called ‘Denesyde’ in earlier times. It is described as being on the left-hand side going up Hawthorns- side Brae (which would confusingly place it on the other side of Hawthornside than the Dean Burn). It once contained some of the best land now incor- porated into Hawthornside, and the Lairds were Turnbulls for several generations.

Nether Kirk (ne-thur-kirk) n. former common name for the church in the Ewes valley next to the A7 between Arkleton and Sorbie, in an area once called ‘Kirkton’. It is distinguished from the ‘Ower Kirk o Ewes’, which is a few miles further up the valley near Unthank, and served the lower part of the valley, referred to as ‘Nether Ewes’. The original church was dedicated to St. Cuthbert and attached to Melrose Abbey. There are many records relating to incumbents of the church from the end of the 13th century. ‘Robert fuz Rauf personne del Eglise de Seint Cuthbert de Ewytesdale’ signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. Roger Kirkpatrick was Rector there in 1556. The patronage of the Kirk was long held by the Maxwells. The position of the church, as well as the minister’s house and glebe, were shown on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was a relatively rudimentary structure, with a thatched roof; an entry in the session records describes how a young couple had to pay penance in the Kirk and also had to go gather heather for the roof. A new church was built on the site of the old in 1866/7. The graveyard contains many old tombstones of the local families of Aitchison, Armstrong, Beattie, Borthwick, Jackson, Little, Rutherford and Scott. The family gravestone of the Malcoms of Burnfoot records the names of 3 of the 4 Knights of Eskdale, and the western side contains the burial place of the Scott-Elliots.

Nether Larriston (ne-thur-law-ree-stin) n. former tower-house at Larriston, situated near the modern farmhouse. It was unclear exactly where it was located. It is marked as ‘Nether Laristone’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (it is ‘Nather Laurestonis’ in about 1624).

Nether Mains of Hassendean see Hassendean Mains

Nether Newhalls (ne-thur-new-haw) n. Nether Newhall, an older name for Burnfoot, once part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. The name was used in the late 15th century for the Lairdship held by a branch of the Scots, later called Scott of Burnfoot. In 1484 the lands were granted to James Scott of Kirkurd by David Lindsay of the Byres, Baron of Chamberlain Newton and Newhall; it was held of the superior for the token fee of a silver penny at the Feast of Pentecost. In 1494 James Scott granted ‘le Nethir Manes de Newhall’ to his son David, along with Galalaw: this was explicitly the west part, above the common road, valued at 3 merks. ‘Over et Nather Newhalls’ are still referred to when the lands were inherited in 1585 and similarly in 1667. The lands were sold by Adam of Burnfoot and Gavin Plummer to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712, when they are described as ‘Nether Newhall, otherwise called Burnfoot, with the milne, milne lands, multures, sucken, knaveship and sequels thereof within the paroch of Hassendean, Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Sheriffdom of Roxburgh’. Over Newhall was probably the same as Burnhead (it is ‘Nethir Newhall’ in 1494, ‘Nethir Newhall’ in 1532, ‘Nether Newhallis’ in 1609 and ‘Nether Newhales’ in 1667).

Netherraw (ne-thur-raw) n. farm and hamlet between Minto and Lilliesleaf. William Thomson was farmer there in 1797 when it is ‘Netherrow’. James Henderson was there in the 1860s. William Cranston was farmer there in the early 20th century.

Netherraw (ne-thur-raw) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, by the B6399, near the junction with the road from Steele Road. The house must have been there from at least the 16th century, and was distinguished from ‘Over’ or ‘Upper Raw’. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Neirland’ in 1632, when possessed by Francis Beattie. William Scott was tenant in 1694 and Adam Armstrong was also recorded there. George ‘Hotson’ was tenant in the early 1700s. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 141 acres, bounded by Totholm, the Hermitage Water, lands of the Laird of Hoscote and Over Raw. The farmhouse at that time was roughly in the same location as the modern building and the farm is described as ‘indifferent good land much damniﬁed with the water’. David Jackson was farmer there in 1797, Walter Scott in 1835, Matthew Elliot in 1851 and Walter Scott in 1861. It was a home of the Elliots until the last farmer, Matthew Elliot died in 1877, when the old buildings were demolished. Some of the land was planted, becoming the Nether Raw Plantation, and the rest was attached to Harts-garth farm. The current house is modern (‘Rha’ is marked near there on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Ra’ on Visscher’s 1689 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows both ‘N. Ra’ and ‘O. raa’ and Stobie’s 1770 map has ‘Upperra’ and ‘Netherraw’; it is Netherrow in 1797).

Netherraw Cottages (ne-thur-raw-ko’ee-jeez) n. houses by the side of the road between Netherraw and Longhaugh. There was a blacksmith’s marked here on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map.

Nether Riccarton see Riccarton

Nether Soothfield (ne-thur-sooth-ﬁeld) n. previously the lower farm at Southfield, now the site of the main farm. It lay just outside the old boundaries of the Common. The land was long owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and was contained within the Lordship of Whitchesters. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, consisting of 145 acres, bounded by Hawick Common, Hawickshiel, Stobicote and Over Southfield. It was mentioned in a Hawick Parish evaluation in 1627, and then said to be ‘of that same nature’ as ‘Upper Southfield’. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1628 and John Elliot of Brugh was recorded as tenant in at least the period 1690–1704. Gilbert Elliot was there in at least 1700–04. Walter and James Scott were tenants in at least 1709–18. Walter and 2 James Scotts were there in 1713. John Elliot was cooper there in 1726. George Telfer was herd there in 1740 (it was ‘Nethersouthfield’) in 1628, ‘Nether Southfield’ in 1690 and ‘nether southfield’ in 1694).

Nether Tofts (ne-thur-tofts) n. farm near Kirkton, north-east of Upper Tofts. It was once part of the Cavers estate. Its lands are on the lower slopes of Ruberslaw. Adam Turnbull was there in 1682 and John Douglas in 1694, along with Andrew Blyth. The lands were inherited by William, son of Thomas Turnbull of Tofts in 1695. James Turnbull, Robert Scott and John Douglas were there in the early 1700s. Francis Scott of Gorrenberry was also there in the early 1700s. John Leyden (father of the poet and linguist) was there in 1787. Walter Blyth was farmer there in at least 1794–97 and Robert Bulman in the 1860s. It was referred to as ‘Low Tofts’ in 1868 when G. Bulman was farmer there. Robert Glendinning collected several artefacts that were ploughed up there, including ake scrapers and akes, 3 spin-}

Nether Whitlaw (ne-thur-whi’law) n. farm to the south of Lindean village, a couple of miles north-west of Selkirk, adjacent to Over Whitlaw. It should not be confused with the farm of Whitlaw just south of Hawick. It was owned by the Kers of Faldaunside in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. There were Porteouses there in the 19th century.

Nether Woollee (ne-thur-woo-lee) n. former name for part of the lands of ‘Woollee’ (or Wolfelee) in use from the 15th to 18th centuries (it is ‘Nether Wolfe’ in 1479 and 1515, ‘Nether Woolie’ in 1522, ‘Nether Woulie’ in 1525 and ‘Netherwoolley’ in 1627).

Netherwood (ne-thur-wud) n. Netherwood, large house on Sunnyhill, on the private drive that is a continuation of Roadhead. It was built in the 19th century for the Laings, being home to Thomas and his family. J.P. Alison was responsible for alterations in the early years of the 20th century. It may have been used as a boys’ home at the end of WWII and is now split into flats.

Neville (ne-vul) n. Sir John (c.1341–88) 3rd Lord of Raby, son of Ralph. He was probably joint Warden of the English West and East Marches 1380–88, along with the Percys. He married Maud Percy and was succeeded by Henry, who became the 1st Earl of Westmorland. He died before his father, although his son Ralph became 2nd Earl of Westmorland. Sir John (1387–1420) son of Ralph, 1st Earl of Westmorland, and half-brother of Richard, 1st Earl of Salisbury. He was Warden of the English West Marches for a few years until his death. Ralph (c.1291–1367) 2nd Baron Neville de Raby, son of Ralph. He was Joint Warden General of the English Marches (along with Henry, 2nd Baron

In 1354 he, along with Henry Percy, was appointed as a commissioner to deal with Elizabeth, widow of Sir William Douglas, former Keeper of Hermitage. He married Alice, daughter of Sir Hugh de Audley and was succeeded by his son Sir John. He also had a son who was Archbishop of York and daughters who married into the Clifford, Dacre, Percy and Scrope families. His youngest daughter Margaret married Henry Percy and was mother of ‘Hotspur’, Ralph (c.1364–1425) 1st Earl of Westmorland, son of John and Maud Percy. He was probably Warden of the English West Marches along with Thomas de Clifford from about 1388. He married his cousin Margaret, daughter of Sir Hugh Stafford (with whom he had 9 children) and then Joan Beaufort, daughter of the 1st Duke of Lancaster (with whom he had another 14 children. He is the inspiration for the character ‘Westmorland’ in Shakespeare’s ‘Henry V’, and it has even been claimed that his great-great-grandson wrote Shakespeare’s plays. Richard (1400–60) 5th Earl of Salisbury, eldest son of Ralph, Earl of Westmorland. About 1420 he became Warden of the English West March (succeeding his eldest half-brother John). He remained Warden until 1424, when he was involved in negotiations for the release of James I. About 1433 he was again Warden of the West Marches, also took over the East Marches and Captancy of Berwick in 1434, but resigned in the next year. His family had regular conflicts with the Percy’s and supported Richard, Duke of York (his brother-in-law). He married Alice Montacute, heiress of the Earl of Salisbury. He was succeeded by his son Richard, ‘the Kingmaker’. He was captured after the Battle of Wakefield and beheaded. Richard ‘the Kingmaker’ (1428–71) Earl of Warwick and Salisbury, eldest son of Richard, the 5th Earl. He was a great Yorkist supporter in the Wars of the Roses. He was Warden of the English East Marches from about 1453, perhaps along with his father initially (since he must only have been 15!). In 1464 his forces burned Jedburgh. He helped Edward IV to gain the English Crown, but later switched his allegiance to put Henry VI back on the throne. He was killed by Edward IV’s forces at the Battle of Barnet.

Neville’s Cross (ne-vulz-kros) n. battle of 1346, in which the Scottish army under King David were routed at Durham by a smaller English army under York, Percy and Neville. On their way south the Scottish army recaptured Liddel Castle. Durham was attacked as a diversionary tactic to help the French. A relic of St. Cuthbert’s is supposed to have helped the English victory and King David II was captured while fleeing. The Scots division under Sir William Douglas suffered particularly disastrously. Sir Michael Scott of Rankilburn and Maurice Murray (then Baron of Hawick) were killed there, while Robert Chisholme of Chisholme and Sir William Douglas (Knight of Liddesdale), as well as the King and about 50 other Barons, were taken prisoner. Afterwards the English army took possession of the Border territory and Hermitage and Roxburgh Castles surrendered, with several locals swearing (temporary) fealty to the English King. The name of the battle derives from the stone cross erected by Lord Neville in commemoration (destroyed in 1589). It is also known as the Battle of Durham.

nev (ne-vee) n., arch. a nephew – ‘The uncle turned red, and the nevy turned blue, Then they looked at each other, these good men and true’ [JCG].

Nevysintonsteed (ne-vee-sin’in-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Nevtsintounsteid’. It is unclear where these lands were or what the name meant (although the ‘nev’ part may refer to a nephew).

ew (new) adv. newly, recently, just – ‘The bairns new oot o the skuil for leave . . . [ECS] (more common than in standard English; see also i the new).

Newall (new-al) n. Broughton (b.1818/9) born in Hawick, he was a frame-worker. In 1851 he lived around the Crown Close and in 1861 on Factory Close. He married Mary Whillans (sister of ‘Kinly Stick’) and their children included Mary, Agnes, Margaret, Robert, Richard, Jane and James. He is probably the ‘Auld Broughton’ mentioned in the poem ‘Hawick Immortals’. Richard (1850–1918) son of Broughton and Mary Whillans. The family lived at Orrock Place when he was young. He was ‘boatswain Newall, who was up aloft’ in William Easton’s song ‘The Anvil Crew’. Ironically he drowned in the Teviot, where he must have cavorted as a youth. Robert (b.1788/9) from St. Michael’s in Dumfriesshire, he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was at about 12 Howegate in 1841. His public house is mentioned as existing during the cholera outbreak of 1832. By 1851 he was a frame-worker living at the Village. His wife was Agnes and their children included: Robert; Thomas, who married Margaret Kersall; and Margaret, who married William Gemmell. Thomas (b.1813/4) from Dumfries, son of Robert. He was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 23 Loan. In 1852 he married Margaret Kersel (also written ‘Newell’).

New Appletreehaa (new-aw-, -ä-pul-tree-haw, -hawl) n. New Appletreehall, name used for an area near to Appletreehall in the late 18th century. It is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when the residents there who owned work horses were John Reid, James Scott and James Crawford.

Newark Castle (new-urt-kaw-sul) n. ruin west of Selkirk, on a mound above the Yarrow, now within the estate of Bowhill. It was formerly called ‘Cathmurlie’ and had adjacent lands called ‘Old Wark’. The existing tower was built in 1423 by Archibald, Earl of Douglas and was used as a residence of the Earls until about 1446. It passed to the crown as the royal hunting seat of Ettrick Forest in 1455. John Murray was custodian in the late 15th century and Scott of Buccleuch was appointed Captain and Keeper in 1542. Several nearby farms were given by the Crown to the keeper of the castle. It was taken in a siege by Lord Grey (with the support of the Kers) in 1547/8; it is marked `Cast. of Newoork' on Blaeu's 1654 map.

Newbattle Viaduct (new-baw’-ul-va-dukt) n. longest viaduct on the Waverley Line, over the River South Esk, near the town of Newbattle, having 22 arches and being almost one third of a mile long (also known as ‘Lothianbridge’).

Newbie (new-bee) n. James (15th/16th C.) local clerk and priest. He held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1500. He was vicar there in 1501/2 when he was notary for a document relating to the lands of Feu-Rule. He is probably the same priest of Glasgow Diocese who was notary for the 1512 sasine transferring Harden from Walter Scott to his brother William. He also notarised the 1514 sasine of the Barony of Hawick, where he is recorded as ‘Jacobus Newbe, presbiter Glasguesnis diocesis’. In 1523 he was notary for a document relating to the lands of the Trows. Either the same or a different ‘Jacobo Newby’ was witness to a sasine for Douglas of Cavers in 1550. He may also be the ‘James Newby, messinger’, who was implicated in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1552 along with James Douglas of Cavers and several Kers; according to the indictment when the group were crossing the Rule he said to the people there ‘Hard ze ony tythennis of the Lard of Bukclucht; he is put in vard, and will never cumme furth’.

James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Scott. Their son Samuel was baptised in 1635. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Turnbull. Their children included Thomas (b.1654) and James (b.1655). James (17th/18th C.) Sheriff-Officer in a record of 1684, when he gave evidence at the trial of Alexander Home, portioner of Home, one of the Covenanter leaders who besieged Drumlanrig’s Tower. He was also listed as ‘officer to the sheriff’ among contributors to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the James recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’; he was probably from the west side. Presumably the same James was described as ‘portioner of Hawick’ in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1719, when his daughter Helen married Alexander Thomson, merchant in Edinburgh. He may be the James who was born in Hawick in 1655, with parents James and Agnes Turnbull. He is probably the James who married Margaret Gillespie, whose children included Robert (b.1671), with the witnesses being Mr. John Purdom and James Thorbrand. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Lunn in Hawick Parish in 1675, another for James Bapte in 1678 and one more for John Scott in Barn Knowe in 1680. Samuel (17th C.) ordered by the Council in 1658 to pay 4 merks for ‘both-meall’ (i.e. booth rent) until Whitsunday. He was on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Probably the same Samuel was fined in 1676 for assaulting masons Andrew Turnbull and Andrew Wilson and ‘for casting downe the mason work at his own hand without one complaint first made to the bailies thereof’; presumably he did not approve of the building work that they were doing for him! He is probably the Samuel born in 1635 to James and Isobell Scott. He could also be the Samuel who married Bessie Wilson and had a son Samuel in 1676. Thomas (d.1602) Reader at Hassendean Kirk 1576-80. He was presented to the vicarage of the Parish on the demitting of Thomas Weston in October 1576 and is recorded demitting this in 1595. Hence it appears he held part of the benefice of the Parish for at least 15 years after he was Reader there. Another record states that John Madder (or Mather) was presented to Hassendean on his death in 1602, so he may have held some of the benefice even longer. In 1580 he witnessed a transaction for Robert Scott of Alton, done at the Monk’s Tower. In 1582, along with Sir Thomas Ker (of Roxburgh Parish), Archibald Simson (of Lilliesleaf), John Scott (of Southdean), James Scott (of Ashkirk) and John McClellan (of Kirkandrews) were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’. Then they were excommunicated in 1588 for continuing with the offence (which is unspecified, but may suggest that the men had been Catholic priests before the Reformation) and in 1590 ordered never to abuse the sacraments under pain of death. They were made to stand for 2 hours at the Market Cross of Edinburgh with a paper on their foreheads proclaiming their crime. Samuel (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1669 he was found guilty of assaulting merchant William Elliot, cutting him ‘with ane sword in ye head’ and for ‘strycking and wounding of him in his face with ane byrdle’. He may be the Samuel who was born in Hawick in 1635, son of James and Isobell Scott. He is probably the Samuel who was married to Bessie Wilson, with son Samuel born in 1676. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1684 when he witnessed the financial document relating to the building of the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s. He is described there as ‘servant’, although it is unclear what this means (also formerly written ‘Neubie’, ‘Newby’, ‘Newbe’ and ‘Nwby’).

Newbiggin

Newbiggin (new-bi-gin) n. Newbiggin, former farmstead that lay between Whitchesters and Southfield, bordering on the Common. It was later the shepherd’s cottage for Whitchesters. The location can still be clearly made out, directly to the south of Whitchesters farm and east of the hill-fort. It was mentioned among the farms burned by the English in 1533. It was long a tenanted farm belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch, being contained within the Lordship of Whitchesters. James Scott was tenant there in 1627. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, and at that time consisted of 111 acres, bounded by Whitchesters, Hawick Common, Over Southfield and Raesknowe. In at least the period 1690–98 the farm was leased to Robert Scott, James Davidson and Margaret Davidson. The householders listed in 1694 were Robert Scott, James Davidson and John Hogg (weaver), with Margaret Davidson and James Murray also listed there among ‘the poor’. James Davidson was still tenant in at least 1702–18. Weaver William Hood was living there in 1704. Walter Scott was joint tenant there in at least 1708–36. John Wilson was tailor there in 1708. Robert Scott was tenant in about 1710 and Andrew Davidson was also there. In 1711 John Wilson was tailor there and Robert Davidson was also living there. James Davidson was there in 1720. Walter Scott was there in about the 1750s and 1760s. Walter Scott and John Rutherford farmed here in 1797 and William Scott was labourer there in 1841. It is said that residents of the farm were formerly weavers. Its buildings were already shown as ruined on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. There is a spring near the old farmstead and the remains of a fort on the hill to the west. The fort must once have been quite extensive, measuring perhaps 90 m by 135 m, but has been partly obliterated due to ploughing, except on the steeper south and south-east sides. Its defences consist of 3 banks of piled rubble and there may be signs of 2 scooped huts on the knoll, which has been heavily quarried. There are also Newbiggings in Oxnam Parish and near Lauder, and several others elsewhere in Scotland (it must have been a ‘new biggin’ at some point; it is ‘Newbigyny’ in 1533 and ‘Neubigging’, ‘neubigging’ in 1694 and ‘Newbeggeng’ in 1718; it appears as ‘Newbrug’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘New Beggen’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Newbiggin (new-bi-gin) n. Newbigging, a farm that lay between Horsleyhill and Knowtownhead, once part of the Middle Mains of Hassendean. In the 1550s there was a dispute over these lands between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill by his first wife and those by his second wife. It was listed in 1582 among lands for which Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill demanded the charters of his father from the widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. It may be the Newbiggin listed as part of the Stobs estate purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. Like much of the area, it became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. The disused quarry of that name is still marked on Ordnance Survey maps (the farm is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and may have been incorrectly transcribed ‘Howbigging’ in 1690).

Newbiggin (new-bi-gin) n. house at No. 9 Lockhart Place, which is a grade C listed building.

Newbiggin (new-bi-gin) n. Sir William (1782–1852) surgeon in Edinburgh, based at 18 St. Andrew’s Square. He gave evidence at the trial of Burke and Hare and became President of the Royal College of Surgeons. In 1825 he subscribed to 2 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, and so it is possible he had some connection with the town. William ‘Willie’, took over as landlord of the Mossspaul Inn in 1962.

Newbiggin Burn (new-bi-gin-burn) n. stream rising near the old Newbiggin farm and flowing roughly south-west to join the Allan Water (marked ‘Newbiggin Hope’ and ‘North Burn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the New Brig (thu-new-brig) n. original name for the North Bridge, built in 1832. It was usually referred to as the ‘Station Brig’ after the railway was completed in 1849.

Newburgh (new-bu-ru) n. farm in the upper Ettrick valley, once home of the Scotts of Newburgh – ‘Gae warn the lads of Thirlistone, Gemsleugh, and Newburgh fair, With Tushielaw, and Midgehope, in armour to appear’ [WSB].

calfit (new-kaw-fee’) adj, arch. having just calved – ‘...nyne new calfit ky, with their followars, price of the peece ourheid, five pundis’ [SB1574].

Newcastle (new-kaw-sul) n. city in the northeast of England, approximately 62 miles southeast of Hawick, reached via the Carter Bar and A68. The city was the site of the interchange between Douglas and Percy that led to the Battle of Otterburn in 1388. It was also captured in 1640 by Montrose’s Covenanter army, which included the Teviotdale Regiment under the Earl of Lothian. It was occupied for about a year, during which time there is a record in the Hawick Town Book of James Scott, former Bailie gathering contributions for the soldiers there. It was occupied again 1644–47, when Buccleuch was involved in the siege. Several Newcastle merchants (probably coal merchants) were made Honorary Burgesses of Hawick in the 18th century. The city was once connected to Hawick by rail via the Riccarton-Hexham line. The old road towards Newcastle was, until the 1830s, up the Cross Wynd and over the hills, part of which can still be traced through the open country. Until the early 1800s the road through Rulewater went from Hawthornside to Forkins, via Highend, and then up Blacklee Brae to join the modern road towards Chesters – ‘To Newc’sell when that they came, The Douglas cry’d on hyght: “Harry Percy, an thou bidest within, Come to the field, and fight” ’ [T] (note the accent on the first syllable).

Newc’sell (new-kaw-sul’in) n. village 20 miles south-west of Hawick in the southern corner of Roxburghshire. It was effectively a replacement for the older settlement of Castleton, which lies further up the Liddel. The site was formerly the farms of Copshaw and the flat land was said to have been used for ‘Horse coursing’, with crowds from both sides of the Border coming to watch the races. This planned village was founded in 1793 by the 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, and laid out according to the design of Mr. Keir of Whitehaugh. The layout is a series of criss-crossed streets around 3 main squares. Its main purpose was as a handloom weaving centre, close to the Border and on the Liddel Water. The first settler was said to be from the Hermitage area and lived in a turf hut while the village was being built. Many early residents were weavers, other tradesmen and retired shepherds. Clog-making was also prominent, and the wearing of clogs in the village was common for much longer than elsewhere. Leases of holdings were originally for 99 years, with each household responsible for erecting their own house. Each feuar also had 2 acres of land attached (later extended to 4 acres per 2 storey house and 2 acres for cottages), as well as a garden of 1/8 acre, and the right to graze a cow on the hill. The management was by 3 elected bailies, one retiring each year. The 99 year leases led to much dispute in 1892 and subsequent improvements to the village. Most householders chose to convert their holdings into feus for purchase and feu-duty. The church (later St. John’s) was built in 1782 (before the new village), with additions in 1891, but only became the parish church in the 1950s. There was a separate Free Kirk, built in 1853 on Langholm Street, a Secession (later United Presbyterian) Kirk built 1801–04 at the Townfoot (now the Heritage Centre) and an Evangelical Union Kirk built in 1850 on South Hermitage Street (and now a private dwelling). There was a subscription library already by 1839. There has always been a school here, but secondary school pupils have been bussed to Hawick since 1962 (and before that some of them took the train). A memorial statue of a K.O.S.B. soldier was erected after WWI. The village has the Liddesdale Heritage Centre, a local history museum. There was a weekly market starting in about 1837 and 2 annual fairs for the selling of sheep. The village formerly hosted 3 hiring days, when servants were hired in the area, and much activity took place, these being in April, May and November. The Holm Show is the annual fair in August, popularised in the song ‘Copshawholm Fair’, and has been running since 1893, while the Newcastleton Traditional Music Festival in July has been running since 1970. The Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 list the owners of horses in the village as James Oliver, James Aitchison, John Beattie, Robert Thomson, James Elliot, Thomas Mathieson, Thomas Dodgson, William Kyle, William Little, John Smith, Andrew Rutherford, Mary Murray, George Dalgleish, Robert Murray, William Beattie, George Scott, John Leyden, Charles Grieve, William Winlaw, James Fell and Thomas Hall. The official name of the village was originally just ‘Castleton’, but the modern name appeared by the early 1800s. The village is also known as ‘Copshaw’, ‘Copshawholm’ or ‘the Holm’. William Hall wrote ‘Newcastleton: A Border Village’ (1905). Population (1991) 813 – ‘Newcastleton was the last o’ the battles And the curtain began tae descend … ’ [AY] (it is ‘New Castleton’ in 1797, with the first recorded appearance as one word being in the Kelso Mail of 1808).

Newcastleton Burgher Kirk (new-kaw-sul’-in-bur-gur-kirk) n. church established in Castleton Parish in the 1750s, originally called the Liddesdale Burgher Kirk or Copshawholm Kirk. Its origin lay in the secession movement of the time, which locally came to a head with the unpopular appointment of Simon Haliburton as Castleton Parish Minister. Their first meeting was under the ‘venerable oak’ near Snabercle. The Edinburgh Anti-Burgher Presbytery was petitioned in 1751 and provided an occasional preacher, then the Edinburgh Burgher Presbytery was approached in 1753. Early preachers included John Brown (later at Haddington) and Archibald Hall (later Torphichen). A building was constructed on the banks of the Liddel at Geilbraefield about then. It was made of rubble with a thatched roof and earth floor. James Wylie was called, but declined, William Ronaldson also ended up elsewhere, and the apparently rebellious James Mitchell was also found wanting. So the first minister was James Fletcher, and not until 1762. Although a remarkable man, he was not a successful minister and the congregation was in decline by the 1790s. However, the name was changed to the Associate Kirk of Newcastleton in 1804, with a new building erected in the village there 1801–4. This was the first church built in the new village and usually referred to as the ‘Toonfit Kirk’, since the site was a former garden at the foot of the village. A Manse was also built at this time. A harmonium was donated to the church in the mid-1800s by Mrs. Tod, daughter of Rev. John Law. After the Secession churches merged it became known as Newcastleton United Presbyterian Kirk. However, further dissent led to the formation of the Free Church in Newcastleton, as well as the Congregational Church. It was renovated along with the Manse in 1875. With the merge of the secession churches with the Church of Scotland in 1929 the church became locally known as ‘the South Church’ (to distinguish it from ‘the Park Church’ and ‘Castle ton Church’). From 1930 the charge was combined with that of the Park Church. A roll of the ministry is: James Fletcher 1762–1801; William Smart, ‘probationer’ 1802; Walter Dunlop 1804–10; John Law 1812–28; John Black 1829–79; James Snadden 1880–c.1929; George Lithgow Wilson 1930–40.

Newcastleton Congregational Kirk (new-kaw-sul’-in-kong-ga-shu-naul-kirk) n. church established in Castleton Parish in 1849 by people seceding from the United Presbyterian congregation. In 1850 they erected a building on South Hermitage Street in Newcastleton. It is sometimes referred to as ‘Newcastleton South’ or ‘the Sooth Kirk’. By 1870 they had joined the Evangelical Union and in 1929 merged with with the South Church (formerly the U.P. congregation), thereafter using the South Church building and manse. The National Archives have records for the period 1854–1934. A partial roll of the ministry is: William Davidson Black 1850–51; Supply ministers 1851–66; Robert Steel 1866–75; A. Turnbull 1876–77; Supplies again 1877–82; Peter Andrew 1882–83; George Davies 1883–86;
Newcastleton Free Kirk

William Paterson 1888–90; John Whitson 1890–91; R. Hunter Craig 1891–95; Supplies 1895–99; James W. Gillies 1899–1905; George A.E. Walker 1908–12; Charles Derry 1916–23; James Anderson 1923–26; Alexander R. Sparke 1939–42; John H. Carlin from 1942; William Kitching 1953–58; Idris J. Vaughan 1965–71; …. Newcastleton Free Kirk (new-kaw-sul’-in-free-kirk) n. Free Church in Newcastleton, founded in 1850. Unlike other Free Churches, this was started following a dispute in the United Presbyterian Church, not the Church of Scotland. It started to meet in the ballroom of the Crown Inn. The first building was constructed in 1853 on Langholm Street (from plans made by Rev. J.B. Johnstone of Wolfelee). It burned down in 1891, but was rebuilt 2 years later. It was also sometimes called Newcastleton North United Free Church. The Free Church Manse was at 13 Douglas Square, built in 1857. It was taken over by the Church of Scotland in 1909. After the merge of the United Presbyterian Church in 1929 it became locally known as ‘the Park Church’, to distinguish it from ‘the South Church’ and ‘Castleton Church’. After Rev. Lowe retired as minister in 1934, the charge was merged with that of the South Church. In 1949 the building was turned into a village hall, with an extension built in 1956; it was named after Rev. Alexander Lowe, the last full-time minister of the church. The National Archives have records for the period 1850–1946. A roll of the ministry is: David Mackay 1856–60; Neil Shaw Ure, M.A. 1861–75; John Smith 1876–98; Alexander Lowe 1898–1834.

Newcastleton Golf Course (new-kaw-sul’-in-golf-kürs) n. golf course outside Newcastleton, on Holm Hill. It is known for its views over the Liddesdale valley, as well as for its small greens. The club was founded in 1894. There are the remains of a settlement on a terrace south of Charlies Sike, in an area of rough ground.

Newcastleton Kirk (new-kaw-sul’-in-kirk) n. parish church of Castleton on Montagu Street (see Castleton Kirk).

Newcastleton Schuil (new-kaw-sul’-in-skil) n. school in the village of Newcastleton, on Montagu Street. Since 1962 senior pupils have been bussed to Hawick High School. The old schoolhouse adjoins the Parish Church, and has had a lintel inserted into the north gable, which bears the date 1621. Ebenezer Wells was schoolmaster there in the early 1800s, Alexander Fisher in at least the period 1825–52, John Brown in the 1860s and Andrew Hobkirk in the 1940s. School log books for 1875–1921 are in the Borders Archive.

Newcastleton Station (new-kaw-sul’-in-stā-shn) n. former station on the Waverley Line in Newcastleton. It was situation on Langholm Street and included a signal box, footbridge, level-crossing and station-master’s house. All that survives is this last building, which has been converted into a private house.

the New Cut (thin-new-ku’) n. popular local name for the cutting made to improve the main road (which became the A7) at Newmill in the early 19th century.

New Eer (new-eer) n., arch. New Year – ‘…Weel – at least till the New Eer!’ [RM], ‘Dau’vit’s been oot o’ woark throb the New Eer; hei was putten away throb the mill’ [ECS], a gift given at the New Year, often in the form of an alcoholic drink, adj. relating to the New Year – ‘Whiles risin’ in a freshet o’ New ‘Eer swa …’ [DH] (often with the definite article; see also Hogmanany and New Year).

Newfield see Newall

Newell Chemicals (new-ul-ke-mee-kulz) n. chemical factory supplying dyes and other products to the textile industry. It was based in a former hosiery factory at 7 Allars Bank, and also referred to as Newtrel Works.

new-fangelt (new-fawng-ul’) adj. new-fangled, novel – ‘is that yin o they new-fangelt hurdie-gurdies?’[CPM], ‘New fangled deevils never heed them, Folk never prize things till they need them’ [WNK], ‘He couldna fash new-fangled things Wi’ all their fall-di-doo’ [WFC] (note the lack of a hard g; also spelled ‘new-fangled’ as in English).

Newfield (new-field) n. name for an area to the south-east of Hummelknowes, containing Newfield Hill (which reaches a height of 237 m) and Newfield Plantation. There was formerly a farmstead there, which is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. Samuel Irvine was there in 1763 and is recorded as farmer there in 1797. Walter Irvine is recorded there in 1815.

Newhaa (new-haw) n. Newhall, farm on the north bank of the Ale Water, just east of Cavers Carre. This could be where Thomas Murray was in 1530/1. John Scott was farmer there in the 1860s (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Newhaa (new-haw) n. Newhall, former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish, between Harwood and Lurgiescleugh. This could be the Newhall in the parish of ‘Boldoun’ (perhaps Soudon) that in 1669 was inherited by William, son of Rev. James Douglas, minister of Hobkirk (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Newhaa (new-haw) n. former name for an area in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, split into ‘Over’ and ‘Nether’ lands, corresponding to the later Burnhead and Burnfoot (‘le newhalburnhed’ is recorded in 1502).

New Harwood (new-haw-ri’, -har-wud) n. former farm near Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. It is recorded as ‘New Harrot’ in 1788 when Thomas Hope was there and ‘Newharrot’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with John Ferguson as tenant and owner of 4 horses. It was also ‘Newharrot’ in 1821 when William Crozier was there.

New Heidshaw (new-heed-shaw) n. farm just outside Ashkirk village, on the Woll Rig road, and on the opposite side of the Headshaw Burn from Headshaw itself. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1709. George Kyle was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘newheadshaw’ in 1709; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

The new hew (thu-new-hew) n., arch. the appearance of newness, fresh look – ‘...composed of ee plus oo – a combination twice noted in our expression ‘the new hew’ (= the appearance of newness)’[ECS], ‘The new hew’s off that wax-claith aareddies; it’s aa raateet wui thae taackets on eer shuin’[ECS] (note the pronunciation with the diphthongal ee-oo).

Newhouse (new-hoos) n. Newhouse, former lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, once home of a branch of the Riddell family. Thomas Knox, George Knox and James Hill were there in 1694. Walter Riddell ‘of Neuhous’ is also recorded separately, paying tax on 4 hearths, as well as having a gardener there. Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse paid the land tax there in 1811, when it was valued at £486. It was sold by Chatto and his son John to Mark Sprot of Riddell. There is still a farm there (it is ‘Neuhous’ in 1694).

Newhouse (new-hoos) n. Newhouse, former farm on the north side of the Ettrick valley, just to the west of Ettrickbridge. The hill ‘Newhouse Kip’ is marked on the modern Ordnance Survey map (labelled as ‘Newhous’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Newhouses (new-hoo-seez, -how-seez) n. Newhouses, farm just east of Newton (‘the Nitton’). The modern farmhouse probably occupies the site of new houses built there in the 17th century, probably to replace Alton. The Taylor family were long farmers there. William Potts and his family lived there in 1841 and George Thomson farmed 156 acres there in 1851. There is an ancient earthwork about 200 m to the north-west of the farm. It lies on a ridge and consists of a bank and ditch enclosing an area about 30 m by 40 m, best preserved on the south-west and with a road through the middle (the name first appears in the 1690s).

Newland (new-lind) n. former lands in Liddlesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll, with a value of 18 pence, and vacant at that time. The precise location if unknown, but judging by where it appears in the list, it must have been close to Copshaw (confusingly it is also listed near the end of the document, with no value). It is possible it is the same as Newlands on the Hermitage Water.

Newlands (new-lindz) n. farm and surrounding area on the road between Hassendean and Lilliesleaf, adjacent to Huntlaw. It was inherited by Ralph ‘de Neulandis’ from his deceased father William in 1440. It was formerly in Hassendean parish, but moved to Minto in 1690. Walter Davidson was tenant there in 1632 when he had a feu-contract with Thomas, Lord Binning. David Scott in Newlands is recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Beises. It was farmed by Davids sons in most of the 17th century. David Davidson of Newlands paid tax on £200 of land in 1663. The Marquess of Douglas paid the land tax on £80 there in 1678. Andrew Lamb was a tenant there in 1684 when he was listed among local men declared as fugitives for attending conventicles. William Halliwell was there in 1694. By 1788 it was owned by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. Thomas Laidlaw was farmer there in 1797 and William Nichol in the mid-19th century. It was valued at £80 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. A drove road used to pass near here. It may also have been referred to as ‘Howlands’.

Newlands (new-lindz) n. farm on the eastern side of the Hermitage valley, roughly opposite Netherraw. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it was combined with Shaws (to the north), the farms together covering 245 acres, bounded by Roughley, Cleuchhead, Toftholm, Nether Raw and Millburnholm and including some land on the west side of the river; the farmhouse at that time is shown much further away from the river than the modern one and there are woods also shown, including young alders, between the farmhouses. George F. Armstrong was gamekeeper there in 1851 and Hugh Johnstone in the 1860s. It was turned into a shooting lodge in the early 20th century. Newlands Plantation is just to the east.
Newlands

Newlands (new-lindz) n. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. Robert ‘younger’ (presumably his son) was also listed. Thomas (15th C.) on the 1482 panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean.

Newlands Burn (new-lindz-burn) n. stream that rises near Hassendean Common, running past Huntlaw and Newlands farms to join the Huntlaw Burn.

New Licht (new-licht) adj., arch. relating to the more liberal faction within the Scottish Presbyterian Church, particularly among the Secessionists, those from the Burgher and Anti-Burgher sides combining into the United Secession Church in 1820 – ‘They thocht to gie the Deil a fricht Wi’ hauding up the torch ‘New Licht’ . . . ’ [DA].

New Mains (new-mänz) n. former name for a farm in Cavers Parish. William Douglas was there in 1716.

New Mill (new-mil) n. farm a few miles south of Hawick on the Slitrig, once the site of a corn-mill on the river. It is sometimes called ‘Newmill on Slitrig’ to distinguish it from Newmill on Teviot. There is a ford here, which was once used as part of a drove road. William Turnbull was miller in 1666. Lancelot Aitchison was tenant in 1694. Hugh Elliot was smith there in 1672. William Whillans was there in 1729. Robert Thomson was there in the 1780s. Robert Thomson and Thomas Borthwick were there in 1797. James Reid was miller in 1841. The weir for the mill was damaged in the 1846 flood. Charles Mitchell was farmer in 1852, Thomas Turnbull in the 1850s and 60s, John Richardson in the late 19th century, Robert Turnbull around 1900, followed by his son Walter Turnbull. The Curds and Cream (meaning the Common Riding Friday ‘Hut’) was there in 1856. Cottages to the south are sometimes referred to as ‘Newmill Cottages’ or ‘Railway Cottages’ (sometimes ‘Newmill’ or ‘Newmills’; it is ‘Newmylne of Slitrig’ in 1666, ‘Neumilne’ in 1694 and ‘Newmiln’ in 1797).

Newmill (new-mil) n. village about 4 miles south-west of Hawick on the A7. Sometimes called Newmill-on-Teviot to distinguish it from the ‘New Mill’ in the Slitrig valley. It was formerly a farm attached to the corn mill. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it comprised 6 acres, with the mill lade clearly shown. In 1694 those listed there with hearths in their homes were Robert Thomson (with 2 kilns), John Dryden (blacksmith) and Alexander Riddell (miller). John Dryden was smith there in at least 1694–1702. Robert Thomson was tenant there in at least 1702–23. William Thomson, both ‘older’ and ‘younger’, were recorded there in the 1710s. James Dryden was smith there in at least 1718–25. Thomas Elliot was there in 1771. James Scott was there in 1791 and Thomas Borthwick is recorded as the farmer in 1797. The village grew up around the mill on the river, which was still in active use in 1825/6 (according to Pigot’s directory), when the miller was Alexander Borthwick. It was converted into a sawmill in the later 19th century. For a while it the village had its own school, which was established in 1804, also used as a community hall and contains a WWI memorial plaque. The village also had its own library from at least the 1830s. In the 1840s the village consisted of a row of thatched houses (the end one being the school), together with the blacksmiths and a few other houses on the other side of the road. The 1841 census lists 13 households. A new building was constructed for the school later, converted into Newmill Country Inn. The Home Mission met regularly in the village from about the 1890s until 1926. The remains of Allanhaugh Tower can be reached via a footbridge and there are also older earthworks near the Teviot further upriver, although largely obliterated by cultivation. A significant cutting was made in the early 19th century to improve the main road, this being referred to as ‘the New Cut’ (the name presumably comes from this being the replacement corn mill, probably for Allanhaugh Mill; it is ‘neumilne’ in 1694, ‘newmiln’ in 1700, ‘Newmilne’ in 1702, 1712 and 1716 and ‘Newmils’ in 1797).

Newmill Burn (new-mil-burn) n. stream that flows from Branxholme Wester Loch to reach the Teviot near Newmill, with Vales Burn joining the Teviot just upriver.

Newmill Damfit see Damfit

Newmill Haa (new-mil-haw) n. village hall in Newmill-on-Teviot.

Newmill on Slitrig (new-mil-on-sli’-reeg) n. name sometimes used for New Mill to distinguish it from Newmill on Teviot.

Newmill Schuil (new-mil-skil) n. former small school in Newmill. It was established by the heritors of Hawick Parish in 1804. There were 40 pupils there in 1837. David Laidlaw was schoolmaster from 1837.

the New Road (thu-new-rød) n. despite not being new for almost 200 hundred years, the name
the New Statistical Account

is still in use! It was built in 1815 and fully opened in 1816 as the new turnpike road from the Sandbed to Goldielands and on to Carlisle or the Borthwick, alongside the Teviot. It replaced the old road that went via the Loan, the Lumbuck and Martinshouse. The toll bar (Wester Toll) was situated outside the present High School. To provide access from the Sandbed, some houses between the Howegate and Orrock Place were demolished. The first part, along which houses were built, was named Buccleuch Street in 1815, while the remaining part within the town boundaries was named Buccleuch Road in 1905—“How micht I come to the auld toon Sall I the New Road spurn, And glint the taps o’ the lang lums Frae the brow o’ Howdenburn?” [WL].

the New Statistical Account (thu-new-stat-is-tee-kul-a-kownt) n. the ‘New Statistical Account of Scotland’, published 1834–45 as a follow-up to the original (sometimes called ‘Old’) ‘Statistical Account of Scotland’ (1791–92). It was a description of each parish in the nation, largely written by the local ministers, but also drawing upon the knowledge of schoolmasters and doctors. Roxburghshire is covered in the 3rd volume, with the entries mostly written in 1834–7 and published in 1841. It represents a valuable snapshot at that period, as well as providing many anecdotal pieces of information that are not otherwise recorded.

Newstead (new-steed, -sted) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, just to the east of Newton. An old quarry and a well are marked just to the north on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. William Taylor was farmer there in 1841 and William Pringle in 1851.

Newstead (new-steed, -sted) n. village about a mile east of Melrose, which is the site of a large Roman fort, also called Trinovantum, and houses the Trimontium Museum. An iron meteorite was found here in 1827 (sometimes ‘Newsteads’, the origin of the name is probably just Old English for ‘the new place’ and is first recorded about 1540).

Newstead (new-steed, -sted) n. cottage to the south of the road near Old Castleton, near Byreholm.

Newton (new’, ni’-in) n. farm on the A7 on the Heights just to the north of Hawick, usually known as the Nitton. This is essentially the same place known as ‘Chamberlain Newton’ from early times. The ‘Chamberlain’ probably comes from Walter Berkeley, an owner in the late 12th century who was Chamberlain of Scotland to William the Lion. The ‘new’ part of the name thus comes from even earlier than this! The grant of the lands to Berkeley by William the Lion was some time in the period 1173–82. The lands later passed to the Grundy family, who probably gave their name to Groundistone. Robert Grundy ‘de Newton’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. There were Scotts of Newton recorded in the 16th to 18th centuries. Cottars living there in 1694 were Hector Shiel, John Taylor and Janet Brown. William Lamb was living there in 1688. Thomas Nichol was recorded there in 1721, William Scott in 1727, John Scott in 1733 and Walter of Newton in 1738. Robert Smith was farmer there in the 1760s. George Haliburton is recorded as farmer there in 1797. The owner recorded in 1811 was William Irvine, when it was valued at £238. John Oliver was a retired farmer there in 1841 and Janet Irvine farmed 383 acres there in 1851. Walter Scott was farmer in the 1860s (the name probably derives from Old English ‘niwa tun’, meaning ‘the new farm’; it was ‘Neutun’ in the 1170s, and was also sometimes ‘Neutoun’, ‘Newtoun’ or ‘Newtone’; see also Chamberlain Newton).

Newton (new’, ni’-in) n. former farm in the Slitrig valley just to the west of Stobs. Newton Cottage is still marked on the Ordnance Surveys map. Newton Hill to the south-west has some settlements on it. In 1622 the lands of Over and Nether Swinstead were among those sold by Robert Elliot of Redheugh to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs; they were described as ‘commonly called the lands of Hilend Barnes and Newton’, suggesting that Newton was once part of Swinstead. James Best, John Hislop and Adam Hislop were there in 1694. William Scott and John Beattie and George Pott were there in the early 1700s. For a few years until 1779 it was farmed (along with Whitehillbrae) by James Sibbald, who later became a publisher in Edinburgh. In 1779 it was valued (along with Whitehillbrae) at £455 7s 4d, being an extensive farm on the Elliot of Stobs estate. John Riddell was farmer there in at least 1786–89 and George Riddell was also there in 1787. William Cochrane was there in 1791–94. Francis Aitkin is recorded as farmer there in 1797. Along with Whitehillbrae it was still valued at about £450 in 1813 (marked ‘Newton’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, it is ‘Neutoun’ in 1694).

Newton (new’-in) n. hamlet and farm on the right bank of the Teviot, on the A698 about midway between Denholm and Cleikum Inn, part of the Parish of Bedrule. It was referred to as the ‘ten pound’ land in the 16th century when owned by Grahamslaw of Newton. Adam Grahamslaw had sasine for the lands in 1504. Adam Grahamslaw of Newton had a charter for the lands in 1531 and John Grahamslaw sold them to Robert Kerr of Ancrum and Woodhead (who married his daughter Helen) in 1586. The ‘procurator of resignation’ of 1531 records the names of the 16 tenants on the lands at that time. It was listed among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. There was a feud between the Grahamslaws of Little Newton and Turnbuls in Rulewater in the early years of the 17th century. This resulted in the 1601 death of 6 Grahamslaw brothers, probably all sons of John Grahamslaw of Newton. The farm at that time belonged to Robert Kerr and his wife Helen Grahamslaw, sister of the murdered men. The Kerrs of Newton held the lands through the 17th century. When inherited by William Kerr of Newton in 1639 the mill was described as recently built and the lands were valued at 12 pounds, 6 shillings and 40 pence. The Laird of Newton’s lands, including the mill, were valued at £853 6s 8d in 1643, 1663 and 1678. The farms of the Laird of Newton featured prominently in the Hearth Tax list for Bedrule Parish at the end of the 17th century. The neighbouring farm of Stirkrrig was incorporated into it, around the end of the 18th century. Adam Chisholme of Newton is recorded in 1690. John Borthwick was tenant there until about 1698. Mrs. Helen Chisholme is recorded paying the tax for 17 windows there in 1748 and Dr. Andrew Wilson was taxed for 16 windows in 1753. The farm was bought by Thomas Elliot Ogilvie in about the mid-1780s and sold by William Ogilvie of Chesters to Thomas Scott of Peel in 1833. Peter Brown was tenant there in the late 18th century. There were no signs of the former peel house by the end of the 18th century, although ‘beautiful avenues of venerable trees’ remained. The farm once had a corn or threshing mill, which at the end of the 18th century was ‘scarcely discernible’ because of floods. There was later a saw mill there, powered through a mill pond to the south. The mansion house was demolished sometime before 1845 and a new house built. The Robson-Scott family lived here from the mid-19th century and it was inherited from them by a cousin, Robert Lang. The farm was sold in 1982, with the 1100 acres being broken up. The former tower house here is marked by a stony mound in a field between the main part of Newton farm and the A698. A ‘perforated stone macehead’ found here is in Hawick Museum, as well as 2 other worked stones, one hemispherical and one conical, and also a 13th century bronze skilet, which was ploughed up in 1964. The Laird of these lands (probably Kerr) is referred to in a version of the ballad ‘Raid of the Redeswire’ – ‘Gude Ederstane was not to lack, Wi Kirktoon, Neutoun, noblemen’ (the name derives simply from the Old English for ‘new farm’; it is ‘Newtoun’ in 1531, ‘Nutone’ in 1548/9, ‘Newtoun de Badralle’ in 1586, ‘Nuttoun’ in 1642 and ‘Newtoun’ in 1643; it is ‘Neutoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map). Newton (new’-in) n. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as ‘Alexandrum de Newtoune’ in 1426 when he was on the inquest for inheritance of the lands of Eilrig, along with many other local men. In 1429/30 he was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. Probably the same man was among the witnesses for the transfer of Heap from the Langlands’ to the Scotts, carried out at St. Mary’s in Hawick in 1431. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Vicar of Hawick, listed as first witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Hawick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1514. He was recorded there as ‘Alexandro Newton vicario de Hawik’, immediately followed by ‘Roberto Luderailli capellano’. So he was clearly the ‘Vicar’ (presumably meaning he held the vicarge teinds), with ‘Luderailli’ being an additional Chaplain of some sort. He was probably replaced by William Cunningham, recorded as Parson in 1519/20. Archibald of that Ilk (15th C.) on a ‘retour’ panel in 1446/7 for Ker of Altonburn. He was also a member of the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. He was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1455 in relation to the Barony of Cessford. He was also a member of the panel that decided on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5; he is recorded there as ‘Archibald Neuton of that ilke’. Fenwick (19th C.) draper from Falstone in Northumberland, in business with his brother Robert. He sold his wares from a travelling cart, being a frequent visitor to Liddesdale before the era of the motor car. He can be seen as an old man with his horse and cart in a photograph from 1890. George (d.c.1500) probably tenant at Synton. He was killed along with George Cavers during a raid on Synton, when 180 cows, 20 horses and other goods were stolen by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, tenant in Stirches. Scott had a remission for these crimes in 1502. James (15th C.) Rector of Bedrule, recorded in 1468 in a document for the Homes of... that Ilk. He is also recorded as Rector of 'Bothrule' (i.e. Bedrule) in 1479 in connection with an altar to St. Kentigern (or St. Mungo) dedicated in Jedburgh Kirk (i.e. the Abbey) to which he allowed '10 merks' from annual rent of 2 tenements in Jedburgh. Presumably the same man was witness to a document in 1478 outlining rights of David Scott of Branxholme within Selkirk; he is referred to there as 'dean of Tevadale'. Probably the same man is also recorded as Dean of Teviotdale in 1488/9 in a document where the priest of Hassendean renounces fees to the Abbot of Melrose. He was still Rector of Bedrule and 'commisario Thevidalie' in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. James of Dalcoif (15th/16th C.) probably son of Archibald, who he succeeded in 1481. He is referred to as 'of Dalcow' in 1487 when he sold the lands of Boonraw to Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw. In 1494 he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton by Alexander Erskine; he was listed as 'Jacobum Newtoun de Dawcofe'. In 1504/5 probably the same James 'of Dalcoif' had a letter of 'procuratory' to his superior, Patrick Earl of Bothwell, to sell the lands of Boonraw from David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley, George Hepburn and William Midlemas to Robert Scott of Stiches. In 1505 he was mentioned as former owner of Boonraw in a charter to Robert Scott of Stiches. He was probably succeeded by another James of Dalcove. The family also owned lands at Newton in Lauderdale. James (15th/16th C.) apparently tenant of Synton when Adam Turnbull of Hornshole was accused of stealing 200 cows and 80 horses there in 1502. He also acted as surety for Turnbull in his remission for several crimes. He could have been the same man as James of Dalcove. Janet (15th/16th C.) wife of Adam Ker in 'St. Helen's Shaw'. In 1537 she had the tenants of James Ker of Mersington and others removed from her lands of Dalcove, Newton and Cessford Mains. She is also recorded in 1539/40 as 'lady of Dalcoif' (i.e. Dalcove). Along with her (presumably second) husband Adam Ker, she had to give up the non-entries of lands in Town Yetholm to Gilbert Ker of Primside and his mother Marion Pringle. As heiress of Dalcove (in Berwickshire) she inherited the lands in 1539 and resigned them to her son Thomas Ker in 1543. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as 'frater vicarius de Selkirk', i.e. brother of the Vicar of Selkirk. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire (formerly spelled 'Newtoun', 'Newtoune', etc.).

Newton Mill (new'-in-mil) n. former mill in Bedrule Parish, associated with the lands of Newton. This was once a corn mill, which at the end of the 18th century was 'scarce discernible' because of floods. It was later the location for a saw mill, powered through a mill pond to the south.
Newton Moor

The mill was among the lands held by the Laird of Newton in 1643, valued at £133 6s 8d and was owned by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters in 1788.

Newton Moor (new-tin-moor) n. former name for the moor near Newton in Bedrule Parish. In about 1795 it is recorded that the minister of Bedrule had the right to cast 2 ‘darg of turf annually’ here.

Newton Muir (new-tin-mewr) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, probably on Groundstone Heights. Agricultural labourer Thomas Hume and family were there in 1841, and it was abandoned in the 1890s.

Newton Pond (new-tin-pond) n. pond to the south of Newton farm in Bedrule Parish. It was formerly used to drive a threshing mill on the farm. Another pond to the southwest is labelled ‘Newton Pond’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and is now ‘Monks Pond’ on maps. There was once a tradition that it was originally built as a fish pond by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. The 1837 article in the New Statistical Account suggests it was fed by the Lady’s Well, but this seems to be confounding the pond with the Ladies’ Well much further down the Ruecastle Burn, near Knowesouth.

Newton Toor (new-‘in-toor) n. former tower near Ruecastle in Bedrule parish, burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. This is presumably an early version of the house at Newton.

Newton Wud (new-‘in-wud) n. name for wood near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Newtoon (new-toon) n. another name for Newtown St. Boswells.

Newtown Mill (new-town-mil) n. name for Newmill in the 16th century (also ‘Newtonne Mihe’ and other variants; this may be the ‘Newton’ marked on de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland, although that geography is confused and the one above Stobs may also be meant).

Newtown St. Boswells (new-town-sin–bozulz) n. town situated on the Bowden Burn, and dating from at least 1654 (so not so new!). It really developed as a railway town on the Waverley Line and as a market centre close to St. Boswells’ Green. The modern Roxburghshire County Council offices were built here in 1966–68. From 1975–1996 this was the administrative centre for the Borders Regional Council, and is now the centre for the Scottish Borders Council. Population (1991) 1,108.

New Woll (new-wol) n. farm south-west of the original Woll. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map, and so has been ‘new’ for a while now. The house is part of the golf course, and is rentable as self-catering accommodation. Francis Scott was tenant there in 1731, William Fowler was there in 1788 and John Sprot was there at the end of the 18th century (it is ‘New Wool’ in 1731 and ‘New-wol’ in 1788).

the New Yairds (thu-new-yārdz) n. name used in Denholm for the plots of landsfeuded around the Green after being augmented in 1836. These comprised the original $3\frac{3}{4}$ acres of the ‘auld yairds’, plus the new approximately 6 acres, split among 60 people. Some feues were subdivided, and 2 were appropriated for the school and schoolmaster’s house and to the road to Hesdenean.

New Year (new-yeer) n. a sum of money given to children at the New Year, or a drink offered to a visitor at the beginning of the year – ‘...But this time aw’ll shake ee quite rigid Aw wad like ma New Year tae be tei’ [AY] (cf. the older the New Eer and also cf. common ridin’).

next efter (next-ef-tur) adv., arch. next in time, next in order – ‘...within the term of a zere next efter folowand that it be made knawin ...’ [SB1470].

neyr (när) adj., arch. near, esp. applied to kinship – ‘The said Arche Armstrong is my neyr cowsein, and my wyfis brother sone’ [SB1587] (cf. ner).

nez (nez) n., poet. the nose – ‘But aye he helde his face syde; And aye his nez did squeeze ...’ [JTn] (used jocularly).

-ni (ni, nu, na) adv. not, generally as part of a contraction, such as ‘canni’, ‘hevni’, ‘wunni’ (this --nae in much of the rest of Scotland, and sometimes spelled that way locally, even when the ni pronunciation is usually meant; H.S. Riddell uses ‘-na’).

nibbie (ni-bee) n., arch. a walking stick or shepherd’s crook, usually made from a natural branch – ‘Gin I get hand o’ my nibbie, I’se reesle your riggin for ye’ [JoJ], ‘Two or three shepherds had to leave their places and use their nibbies unmercifully ...’ [RJR], ‘...an’ the auld brute struck the puir naturel wi’ his nibbie, and sic a crack’ [JEDM], ‘A’ve ma bigcoat an ma nibbie an a guid perr o tacketty shuin, so it mae rain at, for ochts A care!’ [ECS], ‘...marching in front of nibbe-end (ni-bee-end) n., arch. the end of a walking stick.

nibble (ni-bul) v., arch. to fidget, fiddle with the fingers, n., arch. a bargain, stroke of luck – ‘. . .an A gien um a thripny-bit. Sic a nibble for un!’ [ECS], ‘Look sic a nibble A’ve gotten!’ [ECS].

nobody (ni-b-dee, ni-bo-dee) n. nobody – ‘nobody kens where they er ony mair’ (note that the ‘o’ tends not to be pronounced; cf. naebody).

nichbour (nich-bur) n., arch. neighbour, fellow townsmen – ‘. . .either in his nichbour’s corn, meadow, or haynit gers, sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings . . .’ [BR1640], ‘. . .with power to his said nichbour that urch the ground whereupon it standis, to cast downe the said dyck, and tak it away’ [BR1640].

nichbourheid (nich-bur-heed) n., arch. neighbourhood – ‘Item, that ilk nichbour big his heid room dyck yeirlie, for uphawlding of nichbourheid with uthers . . .’ [BR1640].

Nicol (ni-kul, ni-kol) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was most likely the ‘Ade nichol in denuum’ who was cited again at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He may have been closely related to James in Denholm, who was also recorded in 1493 and 1494/5. Probably the same Adam was one of the bailies appointed by James Douglas of Cavers in 1512 in order to give sasine of the lands of Denholm to William Cranston; his name appears to be given as ‘Ade Nicholo’. Adam (d.1626) resident of Cavers Parish. A headstone in the old kirkyard commemorates the death of him and his wife Margaret Smith on the same day. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same resident of Denholm married Janet Turnbull in 1708. Their children included probably half of these: John (b.1708); Margaret (b.1708); Margaret (b.1710); James (b.1711); Bessie (b.1712); Jane (b.1714); Adam (b.1714); Andrew (b.1716); John (b.1716); William (b.1717); Adam (b.1719); Jane (b.1719); John (b.1721); Isabel (b.1724). Adam (18th C.) perhaps son of the earlier Adam. He was resident in Denholm in 1741 and 1742. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: John (b.1741); and Robert (b.1742). Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwick-brae Parkhead in 1793. He married Jane Scoon in Robertson in 1792 and their children included James (b.1793) and Beatrix (b.1796). Probably the same Adam was recorded as owner of a horse at Greenbank in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Adam (b.1769/70) farmer at Tandlaw in Wilton Parish. He was already a widower by 1841. In 1851 he was farming 200 acres, with the farm being run by his son John. Adam (b.1800/1) born in Newcastleton, he lived in Robertson Parish. He was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Deanbarnhaugh in 1841 and a shepherd at Milingston Shankfoot in 1851 and 1861. He married Betty Graham (from Cumberland) and their children included: Helen; Walter; Thomas; Andrew; Jane; James; and Robert. Adam (1818/19-70) son in Newcastleton, son of John. His wife was Jessie Rutherford, who died in 1891, aged 71. They are buried at Ettleton. Adam (b.1825/6-78) son of Robert and Isabella Glendinning, he was born in Castleton Parish. He lived at Dryden with his parents and was shepherd at Pin-glehole in 1861. He married Esther, daughter of William Hardie and Violet Douglas. Their children included: Violet (1859–1931), who married farmer William Steele; Isabella (1861–78); Christian (1864–89); Margaret (1865–1930), who married Michael Anderson Grieve; Elizabeth (1868–1937), who worked as a nurse; and Robert (1869–1937), draper who moved to Fulham. Agnes (17th C.) tenant at Binks in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander (18th C.) resident at Threephead in 1775 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. Alexander (18th/19th C.) cooper who was listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He married Mary Robson, and she died in 1787. Their children included: James (b.1777); Margaret (b.1773), baptised in Wilton; James (again, b.1785); and Jane (b.1785). He may also be the Alexander who married Margaret Gledstains in 1788. His son Walter died in 1801. He is probably also the cooper at Crumhaugh Hill whose wife died in 1824. Andrew (17th C.) tenant at Synton Mill, at the same time as Thomas. They are mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. Andrew (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 he was listed as holding part of Minto Hills farm ‘in tack’, the other part being held by Thomas Thomson. Andrew (18th C.) tenant in Blackhall. In 1758 he was among parishioners in Hobkirk Parish who were asked to provide broom for thatching the roof of the kirk. Andrew (19th C.) farmer at Trow Knowes. He had a house built at Myreslawgreen in about 1879. Charles (b.1818/9) from Perth, he was a plasterer in Wilton. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed on Wilton Path. In 1851 he is recorded as a master plasterer on Ladylaw Place, employing 8 men. His wife was Isabella and their children included Isabella and Christian. Christopher (19th/20th C.) grocery assistant in Hawick who was known for his efforts at poetry, much of it privately published in pamphlet form. He has been described as Hawick’s answer to William McGonagal. An example of his verse is: ‘We started off for Edinburgh By the twenty-past-ten train: When we got into the city It was pouring down with rain’. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (d.1787) housekeeper for merchant William Oliver (i.e. ‘Auld Cash’). She died in Hawick. Elizabeth (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1785, when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Francis (18th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish in 1724 when he married Margaret Wilson in Roberton Parish. Isobel (b.1726), baptised in Hobkirk Parish, may have been their daughter. Francis (18th C.) resident of Harwood Mill. His son John was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738. He could be the Francis who married Margaret Rae in 1732 and whose other children included Thomas (b.1740). He may be the same man as the Francis who earlier married Margaret Wilson. Francis (b.c.1775) labourer at Tweedbank. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. George (16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 as the King’s shepherd in Bellendean. He was paid £3 6s 8d for 5 bolls of grain. George (16th C.) recorded in the will of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, when he was tenant farmer at Bellendean. He could be related to Simon and William who farmed at Buccleuch. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1648 his daughter Helen was baptised, who was conceived in fornication with Agnes ‘Junck’. The witnesses were Thomas and James. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Hislop. Their children included William (b.1650) and Jean (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were John Clerk and Adam Hislop (probably a relative of his wife). George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Elliot and their son James was baptised in 1671. George (17th C.) resident at Sundhope in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the George, married to Bessie Elliot, whose children born in Hawick Parish included: James (b.1671); Bessie (b.1673); and William (b.1681). George (1765/6–1841) tenant farmer at Philhope, probably son of John, tenant in Craik. In 1841 he was recorded there with his wife, 4 children, a labourer and 2 female servants. In 1820 (late in life) he married Ann Burnet, who died in 1879, aged 79. Their children included: John (1820–70), who died at Philhope; Isabella (b.1822); James (b.1823); and William (1826–1902), also died at Philhope. He was buried in Borthwick Waas and may have been son of John (1717/8–92), who is in the adjacent burial plot. George ‘Geordie’ (d.1874) resident of the Rule valley. He carried the post from Bonchester to Chesters, but gave up in 1873 due to ill-health. He died at the Causeyfoot. Helen (17th/18th C.) resident of Greenholm in Castleton Parish. In 1699 she was reported to the Session for blasphemy, specifically saying ‘the Lord had broken His promise’ for giving them such a bad harvest; she had to ‘stand in sackcloth one day publicly upon the place of repentance’. Ian ‘Moose’, Cornet in 1984, he has also been 1514 Club President. His son Ross was Cornet in 2012. J. (18th/19th C.) hosier in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-naire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘in dénú’, which probably meant Denholm. He may have been related to Adam, who was also listed in 1493. He was also cited at the Justice-naire in 1494/5. He may have been closely related to Adam in Denholm, who was also recorded in 1493 and 1494/5. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Anderson and their children included: Janet (b.1651); and James (b.1656). William (b.1653), son of James and Helen ‘Paterson’ was probably a child of the same couple. The witnesses in 1651 were William Anderson and Simon Nichol (who were probably related to him and his wife) and in 1656 were Walter and Robert Nichol. James (17th C.) leased the farm of Todshawhill in 1671. He may be the witness (along with Robert) for a baptism for James Richardson at Howcleuch in 1683. Perhaps the same James was resident of Broadaugh on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) living at Easter Essenside in 1710 when his son James was baptised in Robertson

James (17th/18th C.) resident of Turn in Kirkton Parish. His son Adam was baptised in 1720. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Chapelhill in 1732. His unnamed child was baptised in 1732. Other children included William (b.1730), Agnes (b.1734) and James (b.1735). He may be the James who married Margaret in 1729. James (1715/6–76) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1776, aged 45. Their children included Elizabeth Mary (d.1776), Robert (d.1782) and Archibald (d.1779). He and his wife died at Shaws and are buried in Castleton. James ‘Pistols’ (d.1778) married Margaret Scott, who died in Hawick in 1778. Their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Jane (b.1736); Mary (b.1740); and Thomas (b.1743). He died in 1778, a few months before his wife, with his nickname given in the Parish record. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Martha Hislop (or ‘Hazelhop’) and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1762. The witnesses were Robert Laidlaw in Falnash and James ‘Collur’. James (18th C.) recorded at Outerside in 1762 when his son John was baptised and at Outerside in 1765 when his son John and daughter Jean were baptised in Roberton Parish. He could be the James recorded at Highchesters in 1772 when his daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish. He could be the James (d.1792) commemorated at Borthwick Waas. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1770 he is recorded living at Branzholme Woodfoot. He married Helen Turnbull in 1760. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: Mary (b.1761); James (b.1763); and Helen (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Scott and Andrew Turner. Perhaps the same James was listed at Muirside in Wilton Parish in 1791 when he paid the Cart Tax. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton and Hawick Parishes. He married Christian Hart and their children included: Betty (b.1767), baptised in Wilton; and James (b.1772) and Janet (b.1775), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1772 were James Murray and James Hart. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Elizabeth Renwick in 1787. James (1791–1875) born in Lilliesleaf, son of John. He was an agricultural labourer in Roberton Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his family at Borthwickshiels Lodge, and in 1861 they were living at 4 Orrock Place. He married Elizabeth (1794–1881), daughter of John Cavers and Elizabeth Hislop; she died at Craik. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1813); Janet (b.1815); Margaret (b.1817); Jane (1820–63), who married William Renwick and died in Hawick; Christian (b.1822); Joan (b.1824); John (b.1827); Barbara Pott (b.1829); Walter (b.1831); Williamina (or ‘Mina’, b.1833), who married George Nichol; and Jemima (b.1836). He died at ‘Wheathaugh’ and was buried at Borthwick Waas. James (18th/19th C.) baker of Hawick, recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. James (1787/8–1866) carter in Newcastleton. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 26 Langholm Street. He ran a cart to Langholm twice a week in the 1850s. His wife was Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Burnet from Hawick, who died in 1861, aged 73. Their children included: Mary; John (1809/10–16); William (1811/2–43), who married Janet Mitchelhill; and James (1814/5–83), who married Jane Murray. He could be the labourer in Newcastleton recorded as head of household in 1835. James (b.c.1790) farmer on the Loan. He is recorded on the 1841 census at about No. 53, living with no family and 2 servants. James (b.c.1795) shoemaker in Newcastleton recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was at about 12 South Hermitage Street in 1841. James (b.1815/6) postman in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He took over from Jean Elliot, ‘Lucie Lass’. He lived on South Hermitage Street. He made deliveries along the Liddel and Hermitage Waters on alternate days, going at least as far as Saughtree and Dinlees (with children attending the smaller schools being used to carry letters further afield). He was recorded as a labourer in 1851, living at about 3 Langholm Street. In 1861 he was ‘Post Messenger’ on South Hermitage Street. He married Jane Murray and their children included Mina (b.1843) and Mary Ann (b.1845). James (d.1860s) farmer in Hawick. He married firstly Jean Michie (d.1838) and secondly Margaret Scott (d.1870). He died at the age of 75 and was buried in St. Mary’s kirkyard. James ‘Jamie’ (d.1903) devoted supporter of the Saxhorn Band for almost 40 years. Although he had no musical ability himself he carried the music chest, which he described as playing the ‘Tin Box’. He worked for over 30 years in Elliot’s stockisting-shop – ‘Eppy Sootie and Wullie Pairk, Geordie the Buck and Higgins Phill, Jamie Nichol the Hawick band clairk, The Duddy Laird and Shallow Bill’ [HI]. Janetus (19th C.) carter in Castleton. In 1832 he acknowledged that he was father of Betty Paisley’s child. His forename seems unusual. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Johne Nicoll in Craikhoip’ in 1622 and 1623 when he was caution for Will Elliot in Huntlaw. John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Either he is listed twice or there were 2 men with the same name at that time. John (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) listed as cottar at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He must surely related to Robert, who was also listed there. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Alemoor in 1712 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children who could be his include James (b.1705), Janet (b.1705) and Thomas (b.1714). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1709 he was servant to Robert Thomson in Newmill. He married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1708 and their children included: Robert (b.1709); and James (b.1710). The witnesses in 1709 were Walter Nixon, tenant in Hawick Shiel and merchant Walter Oliver. It is possible he is the same John who was later at Allanhaugh Mill. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was living at Lairhope in 1705 and was herd there in 1711. He married Esther Armstrong in Hawick in 1704 and their children included Janet (b.1705) and James (b.1711). The witnesses in 1711 were the two James Grieves tenants in Commonside (and hence the child may have been named after them). John (17th/18th C.) resident in Branxholme Town in 1717 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. It is unclear why the baptism did not happen in Hawick, but 3 other baptisms of people from Branxholme Town happened on the same day. He may be the John who married Bessie Wilson in Hawick in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1717 and 1727. His children included Janet (b.1717) and Andrew (b.1727). Perhaps the same John was at Mabonlaw in 1723. He may be the John in Eilrig who in 1716 in Hawick Parish married Blench, daughter of James Scott, herd in Falnash. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Commonbrae in 1720. He married Janet Nichol and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1720); Janet (b.1724). The witnesses were John Chisholme, preacher at Caerlenrig and Robert Scott, tenant in Falnash. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He was recorded in 1718 as both ‘workman in Allanhaugh miln’ and ‘servant in Newbigging’, when one of his children was baptised in Hawick. He may be the John whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included William (b.1716) and Walter (b.1718). The witnesses in 1718 were James Davidson and Walter Scott, both tenants in Newbiggin. His son William was created a Burgess of Hawick in 1737, suggesting that this may be when he reached the age of majority (consistent with birth in 1716). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm. His daughter Janet was baptised in Cavers in 1722. Several other children, baptised in Cavers around the same time, may be his. John (18th C.) resident at Priesthaugh in 1726 and 1728. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, include: Janet (b.1726); and Margaret (b.1728). Perhaps the same John was in Brugh in 1733 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. John (18th C.) servant in Hawick. Along with ex-Bailie Walter Graham he witnessed a baptism for carrier George Richard-son in Hawick in 1741. He may have been a servant of Bailie Graham. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Eilrig in 1735 when his son John was baptised. John (1717/8–92) tenant in Craik. He married Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1815, aged 88. Their children included: William (1759/60–1807); 2nd son; John (1762–87), 3rd son; twins Betty and Margaret (b.1764); George (b.1766), probably the farmer at Philhope; and Margaret (again, b.1768). He could be the John whose daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1781. His daughter Elizabeth may have married Adam Scott (from Ettrick) in 1795. He may be the James who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Mary Dickson in 1761 and their son John was born in 1762. He may be the same man as the father of George (b.1764), who lived at Broadlee. He was clearly separate from the contemporary John who lived at Craik. John (18th C.) barber and candlemaker in Hawick. In 1756 he married Mary Turnbull and she died in Hawick in 1787. Their children included: Robert (b.1757); and Michael (b.1760). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by Bailie Robert Howi-son and tobacconist William (who was surely a relation). John (18th C.) baker in Hawick. It is said that when coming back to Hawick from Kelso with a neighbour, they decided to have a race to reach the toll-bar at Spittal-on-Rule. His horse could not take the bend and leaped over the parapet of the Rule Water bridge there. However, since the river was in flood they both escaped injury and he was rescued by the miller, to continue on his journey later the same day. An inscription ‘J.N. and his Horse’s leap’ was carved on the bridge. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1768 his child John with Elizabeth Noble was baptised, the couple being labelled as ‘Fornicators’ and the witnesses being shoemaker Robert Elliot and smith Robert Young. John (1746/7–1819) weaver in Newcastleton. He married Mary Ogilvie, who died in 1795, aged 45. Their children included: Alexander, who died aged 12; John Little, who died in infancy; Walter (1798/9–1818); and John (1790/1–1817). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. John (1762–1839) son of John, he was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was shepherd at Broadmeadows. In 1792 he was living at Meadshaw. In Roberton Parish in 1790 he married Janet Brydon, who was from Ettrick Parish; she died in 1798, aged 30. Their children included: Isobel (b.1791); and John (b.1792). He died at Todshawhill and is buried at Borthwick Waas, along with his wife and mother Mary Dixon (1731/2–1807). He is probably the John, son of John, baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762. John (1764/5–1842) tenant at ‘Carretrigg’ (i.e. Carewoodrig). He married Jane Jardine, who was from Ettrick Parish. His children included: John (1784/5–1842) born at Huntly Hill, near Brechin, eldest of 7 children of John, farmer from Northumberland, and Jane Forbes from Aberdeenshire. He studied Mathematics and Physics at King’s College, Aberdeen, trained as a minister at St. Mary’s College (St. Andrews), but then turned to education. His first teaching job was at Duns. He came to Hawick in the early 1820s to teach in a school for practical education. He was master of the English (i.e. Parish) School from 1821 until the end of 1823. Here he was apparently inspired to follow an interest in astronomy by millwright Gideon Scott, and they watched a transit of Mercury in a garden at Allars Bank (probably in 1832, so he must have returned to Hawick specifically for the event). He left Hawick, becoming editor of the ‘Fife Herald’, Headmaster of Cuper Academy and Rector of Montrose Academy, before becoming Regius Professor of Astronomy at Glasgow University in 1836. He was listed in Cuper in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He regularly gave lectures on astronomy, chemistry and geology. In 1831 he married Jane Tullis (1809–50), daughter of a Cuper printer. Their eldest child John, became a Professor and writer and their youngest, Agnes, married William Jack, Professor of Mathematics at Glasgow. In 1853 he secondly married the prominent anti-slavery campaigner and reformer Elizabeth Pease, against the objections of her friends and Quaker family. He was a lifelong radical in politics, arguing for universal education. He was asked to stand as a Liberal candidate for Glasgow, and the Hungarian patriot Louis Kosuth stayed with him when he toured Britain. Although he published only 2 scientific papers (both on the Moon), he lectured extensively and published many popular books. He wrote the influential ‘Views of the architecture of the heavens: in a series of letters to a lady’ (1839) and ‘Cyclopaedia of the Physical Sciences’ (1857), among other works. He was an inspiring teacher and gave popular public lectures, even travelling to the U.S.A., where he apparently influenced Edgar Allen Poe. He also returned to Hawick to give a popular lecture on Astronomy and was effusive in his praise for his former friend and inspiration, Gideon Scott. He popularised the ‘nebular hypothesis’ for the formation of the Solar System in books such as ‘Phenomena and order of the solar system’ (1838), and was the first to suggest a photographic study of sunspots. He is buried in the Grange cemetery, Edinburgh. There is a commemorative window to him at Bute Hall in Glasgow. John (b.1805/6) born in Robertson Parish, son of Adam, he was farmer at Tandlaw. In 1841 and 1851 he was helping his father at Tandlaw. In 1861 he was tenant at Tandlaw, farming 200 acres and employing 5 people. He was unmarried, but living with a housekeeper and 2 servants. Perhaps the same John was farmer at Coldhouse, listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. John (b.1814/5) mason in Newcastleton, probably son of John. In 1861 he was on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Mary and their children included James, Margaret, John and Marion. John (b.1815/6) born in Ewesdale, he was shepherd at Ewesleeshope. His wife was Mary and their children included John. In 1851 he was also living with his mother Jane. John (1818–83) baptised in Robertson Parish, son of John who was shepherd at Billhope. In 1841 he was living with his parents at Billhope. In 1851 he was shepherd at Priesthaughshiel (and recorded being born in Ashkirk Parish). In 1861 he was shepherd at Braidhaugh south of Hawick. In 1841 he married Mary Stavert (the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Castleton Parishes), who died in Hawick in 1888, aged 67. Their children included Christina, Margaret, Marion, Thomas, Janet, Isabella, Thomas (again, b.1856), Eliza (b.1858) and Mina (b.1862). He and his wife are buried in Borthwick Waas. John (b.1819/20) born in Robertson Parish, son of George. In 1861 he was farmer at Philhope, farming about 1900 acres and employing 4 people. He was unmarried at that time, living with his mother Ann and 3 servants. John (b.1820/1) farmer in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on Montague Street. His wife was Ellen (from Hawick) and their children included Mark, James, John and Margaret. John (1827–81) born in Hawick, son of William. He started as a journeyman warehouseman, becoming a master Skinner and tanner. He ran what was probably the town’s most successful tanning and wool merchants, succeeding to the business of Andrew Ewen in Slitrig Crescent. In 1851 he was living with his mother at 56 High Street; he may have been partner in what is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as ‘Nichael & Scott’, tanners and skinners of Punch Bowl Close. In 1861 he was at 1 Slitrig crescent and listed as a Skinner employing 12 people. He was also a farmer. He entered the Council in 1867 for Slitrig Ward and was elected a Magistrate in 1869, then became Provost 1871–74. During his Provostship Commercial Road was developed and there was the stockingmaker’s strike of 1872/3. He was presented with some inscribed silver plate on his retirement, and returned to the Council in 1878/9. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, chairing the Race Committee, and being a Steward at the Races. He was also Chairman of the first School Board of Hawick, as well as being a local curler and bowler. He married Janet W. Scott (one of the ‘Whack’ Scotts), who died in 1855, aged 24. He later married Annie, daughter of butcher George Davies. Their children were William Scott (who became Provost), John, Margaret Scott (who married solicitor James Barrie), and 2 children who died in infancy. A portrait of him hangs in the Town Hall and he is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John Scott (19th/20th C.) son of Provost John and brother to Provost William Scott. He worked in the hosiery business in Leicester, joined London Scottish as a private, rose to commissioned rank and was awarded the Military Cross for leading his men in a bayonet charge at Mons. He probably married Florence Crane from Leicester. Margaret (b.1794/5) draper in Newcastle, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 and 1861 she was on Stopford Street, already a widow. She had sons John and William. Mark (19th C.) third official Common Riding singer of Hogg’s ‘Teribus’. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in Phillhope in 1579 when he witnessed the transfer of Rough-hope and Phillhope from John Turnbull to Martin Elliot. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1634 as schoolmaster at Lilliesleaf. He is the first teacher on record there. It is possible that the same Patrick was witness in 1651 in Ashkirk Parish. Patrick (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (15th C.) resident of Hartwood. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford in Phaup was allowed to compose for several crimes, including stealing sheep from him and John Fletcher. Robert (d.1699) resident of the Teviothead area whose gravestone is there. His wife Bessie died in 1701. The names of James Nichol and Marian Scott, also engraved on the same stone, are probably his parents (assuming that they survived him). Robert (17th C.) listed as resident at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John, who was also listed as a cottar there, was surely a relative. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Blanch Borthwick in 1703, both being from Hawick Parish. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Weensland. In 1718 he married Janet Paterson in Wilton and their children included: William (b.1719), baptised in Wilton; and Francis (b.1722), John (b.1724) and Isabel (b.1726), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1726 were Henry Orrick and Dand Gray. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Bowanhill in 1726 when one of his children was baptised. Probably the same Robert was tenant in Bowanhill in 1720 when he married Isobel, daughter to the deceased Robert Thomson. Their children likely included Robert (b.1724), James (b.1726) and James (again, b.1732). Robert (1774/5–1852) born in Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer in Deanburnhaugh. He married Catherine (or ‘Ketty’) Wilson (1781/2–1853). Their children included: Jane (b.1806); and Robert (b.1809). He and his wife were recorded at Deanburnhaugh in 1841 and 1851 (by which time he was a ‘Pauper’. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded at Outerside in 1712 when his son Thomas was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (b.1714) may also have been his child. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Phillhope according to the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 1 farm horse and 1 saddle horse at Phillhope in 1797. He also paid tax for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Ovenshank in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (b.1790) stocker maker in Denholm recorded on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living around the Canongate. He had children Andrew, Catherine, William, Jean, Nanny, Robert, Helen and Mary. Robert (1793/4–1854) from Castleton Parish, he was a shepherd at Dryden. He is recorded at Dryden in 1841 and 1851. He married Isabella Glendinning (1788/9–1852). Their children included Adam, Janet and George. His family are buried at Teviothead. Robert ‘Bobby the Drummer’ (1832/3–1920) son of Elliot, he was a weaver in Newcastle, like his father. In early life he also worked as a drover, and knew the old roads well, from the Highlands to the Midlands. His nickname came from playing drums in the village band. In 1861 the family were living at about 23 South Hermitage Street. He was the last person in Newcastle to work the handloom, which he had in the back of his house at 12 South Hermitage Street; he won his last plaid in 1913. Robert (b.1831/2) hosier in Denholm in the 1860s. In 1861 he was listed at about Sunnyside as a ‘wool frame knitter’. His wife was Christian and their children included Agnes and Betsy. Robert J. ‘Bert’ (??–??) founder of R.J. Nichol coach business in 1932. His children were: Bert, who continued the family business; Jessie; and Effie, who died young after an accident. Robert ‘Bert’ (1921–2008) son of Bert, he was born in Lothian Street. He was known as a swimmer in his youth and had a life-long love of rugby, particularly the Linden (which he captained); he also played a few games for Hawick R.F.C. He volunteered for the R.A.F. in WWII, returning to run his father’s business until 1990, driving coaches to rural areas around Hawick, as well as trips further afield. For decades the firm brought schoolchildren from outlying villages to Hawick High School. He married Jean Douglas. In 1955 tragedy struck, when 2 of their children, Robert and Sheena drowned in the Cauld. He also had children Douglas and Dorothy. Ronald Andrew ‘Ronnie’ (1960–2015) rugby player and leader of the Drums and Fifes. Son of Bill and Lydia and brother of Phil, Ian and Lindsay, he was educated at Wilton and Hawick High School and worked as a plasterer and builder. A keen rugby player at school, he went on to play prop forward over 200 times for the Linden and was a regular for the Greens in the 1980s and 1990s, playing 180 games. He also represented the South of Scotland and was capped for the Scotland ‘B’ team in 1985. A great supporter of the Common Riding, he was a member of the Drums and Fifes for 39 years, including being leader for 20 years. He also served as Chairman of the Common Riding Committee 2007–10, as well as President of the Callants’ Club and 1514 Club. He married Lynn Frost in 1981 and they had a son, also Ronnie. Known affectionately as ‘Big Ronnie’, the nickname applied to the size of his heart as much as to the stature of the man himself. A tree and ornamental tree-guard were unveiled in his memory on the Kirkwynd in 2016. Simon (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Buccleuch in 1574, recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branholme. William was also listed as tenant there, and they were probably both related to George, who was tenant at Bellendean. Simon ‘Syme’ (16th/17th C.) tenant of ‘Fairnyleis’ recorded in 1623. Michael Birnie in the same place was found guilty of stealing 30 sheep from there, belonging to him and his son William, along with Walter Scott of Todrig and his son Walter Scott. It is unclear if these lands were Fernielees in Rulewater, or somewhere else. Simon (17th C.) recorded in 1651 when he witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk for William Glen and for James (perhaps a relative). Simon (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Chapelhill in 1721 and Highchesters in 1725. His children, baptised in Roberton, who may be his include William (b.1715), Walter (b.1718), Jean (b.1725); and Robert (b.1728). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Mabonlaw in 1766. He married Betty Sinton in Roberton in 1765. His children included Alison (b.1766). Thomas (18th/19th C.) cooper in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Thomas (19th C.) married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton in 1826. Thomas (1820/1–98) grocer and merchant in Newcastleton. He was at about 16 Douglas Square in 1851 and on North Hermitage Street in 1861. He could be the same as the baker recorded on Douglas Square in the 1860s. He married Julia Mitchellhill, who died in 1888, aged 63. Their children included: Margaret; Robert; Mary (1855/6–97); William; and Thomas (1863/4–98), who died at Portobello. In later life he lived at Brieryhill Cottage, where he died. He is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (b.1820/1) carter on North Hermitage Street in 1851. His wife was Jane and their children included Helen and Mary. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hislop and their son James was baptised in 1654. The witnesses were George Dickson and James (who was probably related). Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1656 he (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for James (who was surely related). He may be the Walter who married Malie Nichol and whose daughter Bessie was baptised in 1650. He might also be the Walter who married Helen ‘Bleck’ and had children Jean (b.1661) and Francis (b.1662). The witnesses in 1661 were George Walker and James Vogan. Walter (17th C.) resident at Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (18th C.) resident in Robertson Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1718 and 1721. Probably the same Walter was at Eilrig in 1732 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Children, baptised in Robertson, who may be his include William (b.1715), Walter (b.1718), Margaret (b.1719), Agnes (b.1721) and Walter (b.1723). Janet (b.1744), Mary (b.1746), John

Nichol

(b.1748) and Robert (b.1750) may be the children of a later marriage or another Walter. Walter (18th C.) resident in Earlside in 1726 when his son Thomas was baptised in Cavers. Walter (18th C.) resident in Ormiston in 1730 and Deanbrae in 1733. Other children (baptised in Cavers) may have included Magdalen (b.1730), Margaret (b.1733), Mary (b.1735), Walter (b.1738), William (b.1740), John (b.1743), Adam (b.1745) and Alexander (b.1747). Walter (18th C.) resident in Todrig Mill in 1763 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. He married Betty Wilson, who died in 1819. Their children included: Margaret (b.1770); Walter (b.1772); Jane (b.1772); Jane (again, b.1775); Margaret (again, b.1776); Betty (b.1777); an unnamed son (b.1779); Joan (b.1780); Mary (b.1783); and John (b.1783). He may have been witness to a baptism in 1783 for Francis Cairns. Dr. Walter (1785–1858) son of William, he was born in Castleton Parish. His father was one of the first feuars to build in Newcastleton. He was the first mathematics teacher at Edinburgh High School. He is described by Thomas Carlyle, and in a letter from his sister Jane Carlyle. Walter (1816/7–84) shepherd in Roberton Parish, born in Castleton. In 1871 he was shepherd at Broadlee. In 1840 he married Janet, daughter of John Muir (or Moore), who died at Branxholme Braes in 1888, aged 83. Their children included: Janet (1841/2–52), who died at Tushielaw; Robert (b.1843); John (1844/5–52), who also died at Tushielaw; and Walter (1847–1878), who died at Broadlee. In 1841 he was living at Deanburnhaugh with his wife and father-in-law and in 1851 and 1861 he was a shepherd at Crookwelcome in Ettrick Parish. The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. Walter (b.1830/1) carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 4 Orrock Place with his wife Mary and daughter Jessie. William (16th C.) tenant at Buccleuch, listed in the last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1574, along with Simon also in Buccleuch, as well as George in Bellendean. William (17th C.) tenant in ‘Carritridge’ (probably Carewoodrig). Along with William Elliot (also in ‘Carritridge’) and several other men from the upper Borthwick and Teviotdale, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Nixon in Hawick Parish in 1678. William (17th C.) herd in Boonraw, recorded when one of his children was baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Brown, and their children included: Bessie and Agnes (b.1679); Thomas (b.1680); and Margaret (b.1682). The witnesses in 1682 were Walter Scott and Walter Sanderson. He himself witnessed a baptism for Robert Storie in Roberton parish in 1686. Perhaps the same William leased part of the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1693. Either he or a later William in Boonraw married Janet ‘Whirk’ and had a daughter Janet baptised in Wilton in 1696; the witnesses were Robert Storie and Robert Ormiston. William (17th C.) resident of North Sinton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. William (17th C.) resident of Easter Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) listed as tenant at Brighouse in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. William (17th C.) listed at ‘vaills’ (i.e. Valesburn) among ‘The poor in Hautick Parich’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Newton on Slitrig. In 1709 he married Janet Paterson in Kirkton Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Mabonlaw in 1718, 1721 and 1723. His children included: James (b.1718); Bessie (b.1721); and Marion (b.1723). He could be the ‘barn man’ who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1718 for John Dickson, workman in Branxholme. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Susan Lauder and their son William was baptised in 1726. The witnesses were Walter And Adam Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Stouslie in 1735 and 1737. In 1735 he witnessed a baptism for James Dryden, resident of Clarilaw. He married Mary Ormiston and their children included James (b.1735) and Robert (b.1737). The witnesses in 1735 were William Scott and Thomas Irvine and in 1737 were Thomas Scott and George Graham. William (18th C.) shepherd at Teindside in 1745. He married Janet Scott and their children included Helen (b.1740). He is probably the William who married Janet Scott in Wilton Parish in 1730. William (b.1742) may also have been his child. The witnesses in 1740 were Walter Scott at Commonside and Thomas Elliot at Harwood. William (18th C.) son of John, tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He was admitted as a Burgess in Hawick in 1737. He could be the William born in Hawick Parish in 1716. William (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Turnbull and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1742. The witnesses were carrier James Wilson and shoemaker Thomas Scott. William (18th C.) merchant who purchased 23 High Street from Robert Scott in 1753, and is probably responsible for the 'All Was Others ...' plaque. He could be the William, tobacconist, who was Cornet in 1748. He is probably the tobacconist William who witnessed a baptism for John in 1757. He could be the William who married Janet Blaikie in Wilton Parish in 1756 and had children (baptised in Hawick), including: William (b.1758); James (b.1761); and Janet (b.1764). The witnesses in 1761 were Hector Blaikie (surely related to his wife) and John Knox and in 1764 were 'Mr John Laurie student' and Alexander Bunyan, officer (suggesting either that he was strongly involved with the Kirk, or that he could not find other witnesses). He could be the William who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1760. William (18th C.) recorded at Highchesters in 1763 when his daughter Ann was baptised in Robertson Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Langside in 1769. His children included Jean (b.1769), Nelly (b.1778), James (b.1784), Thomas (b.1784) and Margaret (b.1786). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Philhopehead in 1780 when his daughter Mary was baptised. William (18th C.) recorded as a carrier in 1767 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Thomas Waugh. He could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (d.c.1795) part of a Hawick family popularly known as 'Ernpistols'. Originally a baker (or perhaps a tailor), he became bankrupt at the end of the 18th century and moved to London as a journeyman. It is said that when delivering bread there, a wealthy lady was struck by him, started up conversation, and offered to pay for a commission for him in the Navy. He is also said to have returned to Hawick on one occasion, when people marvelled at how he looked in uniform, and to have died later at the Nile. It is said that he was uncle of William Nichol, who was 'Willie Brewed a Peck o' Maut' in the song by Burns. It is possible he was the 'Pistols' whose daughter Manie died in Hawick in 1800. William 'Sweet William' (d.1798) Hawick man whose death is recorded in the Parish register. Note that a separate William, husband of Isabel Brown, was recorded dying in the same month. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Brown in 1781 and she died in 1798. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at 'Gibsnose' (in Wilton) on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same William is listed at Pathhead when he paid the cart tax in 1790 and 1791. He is probably the William, recorded at 'Roadside' in 1791, who married Janet Elliot and had children Janet (b.1787) and William (b.1791). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was one of the first feuars to build in Newcastle. He married Mary Murray. Their children included: Jean (b.1782); Margaret (b.1784); Walter (b.1785), who became mathematics teacher at the Edinburgh High School; and Helen (b.1789). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Betty 'Weems', also from Hawick. Their son John was baptised in 1795. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1796 he married Mina Laidlaw, also from Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) father of Provost John. He lived at 56 High Street. His premises are marked on Wood's 1824 map. His wife Mary was listed as 'Proprietor of houses' in 1851. His other children included Elizabeth (who married printer James Dalgleish) and Wilhelmina (who married Bailie John Briggs). William (18th/19th C.) stocking manufacturer in Denholm recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was probably related to Robert, who was also listed as a stocking maker. William (1788/9–1838) weaver in Newcastle. He married Margaret Nichol, who died in 1872, aged 78. Their children included: John (1832/3–1915), who married Margaret Beattie. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. William (b.1790/1) farm overseer at Thorliveshope in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Janet and their children included James and Mary. William (b.1791/2) from Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Newlands in Minto Parish. He was recorded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861, farming 200 acres. His wife was Beatrice and their children included William, Janet, Jane, Beatrix, Christian, Adam, James, John, Francis, Robert and George. William (b.c.1795) farmer at Newlands in Minto Parish. He was recorded there in 1841. His wife was Beatrice and their children included William, Janet, Jane, Beatrix, Christian, Adam, James, John, Francis and Robert. William (1795/6–1870) farmer in Newcastle. In 1851 he was a cattle dealer on Langholm Street and was still there in 1861, farming 12 acres. His first wife was Margaret Elliot, who died at Middlemoss in 1823, aged 26 (probably daughter of Thomas Elliot of Redheugh). He secondly married Agnes Nichol, who died in Newcastle in 1893, aged 85. Their children included: Helen (1828/9–34); John (1829/30–61); William (b.c.1833); Jane.
Nichol’s (nich, n-kolz) n. former bus company, based in Hawick, run by Bert Nichol and his son (also Bert) from 1932–89. Their bus depot was in Noble Street. They operated a regular countryside service around the Hawick area, as well as bussing pupils every school-day to Hawick from Newcastle, Teviothead, Roberton and Bonchester. The company also ran tours and trips to Blackpool, Morecambe, Scarborough, Great Yarmouth and Bailleul. At its height in the early 1980s the business had 9 coaches and 7 full-time drivers. The company ceased operating in 1990.

Nichol’s Croft (ni-kolz-kroft) n. former name for the area previously called Matthew Henderson’s Croft and now called the Village. The name is referred to in a Hawick sasine of 1610. It was used through the 18th century, and still survived into the 19th. It is unknown who the ‘Nichol’ was who gave their name to the land.

Nicholson (ni-kul-sin) n. George (18th/19th C) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Scott and their son George was baptised in 1804. The witnesses were Mrs. Arkle and Robert Tinlin. His wife is probably the Isobel Scott who witnessed a couple of baptisms recorded just previously to that of her own child. The next recorded baptism was for a child of James Sanderson and Isabel Scott in 1811, which may have been a second marriage of his wife.

Clack’ in 1663; ‘Reid Wat’ in 1673; ‘Pedee’ in 1643; ‘Sowtail’ in 1644; ‘Lord Olifer’ in 1651; ‘Marion’s Hob’ in 1622; ‘the Corbie’ and ‘the Suckler’ and ‘Bonnie Johnnie’ in 1616; ‘the Step Stately’ in 1612; ‘Marion’s Geordie’, ‘Jock the Deacon’, ‘Marion’s Hob’, ‘Nimble’ and ‘Murt’ and ‘the Lord’ in 1611; ‘Hob the Lonkie’, and ‘Jock’s Wattie’ in 1610; ‘Gleyit Archie’, ‘the Tailor’, ‘Will the Lad’ and ‘Will’s Airchie’ in 1595; Ekie ‘Braid Belt’, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins’ among the 16th and 17th century local nobility. There are several early Cornets with cognomens, including the first recorded name, ‘Laird’ in 1703. Other examples from the 18th and 19th centuries include: ‘White John’ in 1701; ‘Black John’ and ‘Pope’ in 1704; ‘Doctor’ and ‘Wester James’ in 1705; ‘Skail the Mercat’ and ‘Heidhooose’ in 1706; ‘Duke Aitken’ and ‘Black Walter’ in 1707; ‘Young Whitegates’ in 1720; ‘the Crocodile’, ‘Little Auld Nanny’ and ‘My Lord Minto’ in 1776; ‘Black Andrew’, ‘Blindn Jean’, ‘the Chief’ and ‘Pistols’ in 1778; ‘Meldrum' and ‘Rough Jock’ in 1787; ‘Helen and the Cuddy’ in 1800; ‘Wullie on the Wundi Sole’ and ‘Kill Drys’ in 1805; ‘Garlic Jock’ in 1806; ‘Craft’ and ‘Peggy Cheap’ in 1811; and ‘Forfar’ and ‘Pawkie’ in 1815. Such names were once much more common than today, and a huge number of 19th century examples are collected in the poem ‘Hawick Immortals’. It is important to realise that nicknames were typically employed with no offence meant or taken, and that they would most often be used to refer to a person in conversation, rather than to their face. Nicknames appear to be more common for males, but many local females examples are known. Many such names are handed down in families, often through the oldest son. Some of the names still in use today go back for several generations, and some may be even older.

nickstick (nik-stik) n., arch. a tally, specifically ‘ti loss yin’s nickstick’ is to lose count or miscalculate something, especially the time of a birth – ‘Nickstick bodie, one who proceeds exactly according to rule; as if he has had one to dine with him, he will not ask again without having a return the Ninestane Rig (thu-nín-stán-rig) n. hill off the Newcastleton road, near Whitropefoot, site of a circle of standing stones. The circle is about 290 yards south of the summit. There are nine stones, two of which are large (about 6 feet and 4 feet, respectively) while the others are broken into stumps. The layout is slightly oval, measuring 23 feet by 21 feet. It is believed to be early Bronze Age. It was possibly the location for the ballad ‘Barthram’s Dirge’ and is also by tradition where Lord Soulis was boiled alive in lead. On the south side of the ridge, half a mile from the stone circle, are the remains of a settlement, composed of 2 enclosures. Note there is also a ‘Nine Stane Rig’ in the Lammermuirs – ‘They shot him dead at the Nine-Stane Rig, Beside the Headless Cross, And they left him lying in his blood, Upon the moor and moss’ [T], ‘They bore him down with lances bright, But never a wound or scar had he; With hempen bands they bound him tight, Both hands and feet on the Nine-stane lee’ [JL], ‘The Nine-stanes, his kimmers, Can snirk at his game, But Cauldcleuch and Gritmuir Think black-burnan shame’ [DH] (it is marked ‘Nine Stones’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; there are several places named ‘Nine Stones’ elsewhere in Scotland and England).

the 95 Bus (thu-nín-ee-ív-bus) n. the number of the Edinburgh to Carlisle bus service, which provides Hawick’s main public transport link with nearby cities. The number may have been chosen because it is approximately the distance between the 2 cities. The service has more recently been called the ‘X95’.

Nine-well Park (nín-wel-pawrk) n. field south of the Stonedge farmhouse in the Rule valley. It was so-called because it contains nine separate springs, which were said to never fail.

Ninian Hawick (nín-ein-hoik) n. a musical group based in Minneapolis, presumably near the township of Hawick, featuring John Crozier and friends. They have released one EP titled ‘Steep Steps’, in 1998, including the single ‘Scottish Rite Temple Stomp’ (apparently pronounced almost like it looks, ‘hoik’).

the Nipknowes see the Nip Knowes
the Nip Knowes (thu-nip-nowz) n. road alongside the Vertish, the site of the Chases during the Common Riding, sometimes shortened to ‘the Nippers’. The first year the route to the Moor went this way was 1804, before which the riders went via Haggishaa and over the Vertish Hill. Springs near here were used as the source of the town’s first public water supply in the earlier part of the 19th century – ‘...Wad chase o’er the Nipknowes wi’ micht and wi’ main’ [JEDM], ‘Fit yet to face the Nipknowes or storm the Vertish high. For the drums and fifes are calling, and the Cornet’s riding by’ [JYH], ‘Blissfu’, sleepin’a’ off, aneth the muckle trei That stude sae lang at the fit o the Nipknowes’ [DH], ‘...And A’ve galloped up the Nipknowes in mony a Cornet’s Chase’ [IWL] (from Old English for ‘hillocks at the top of the hill’; also written as one word and erroneously as `Knipknowes’).

Nip Knowes Field (nip-nowz-field) n. name for the field on Hawick Common to the right of the road before reaching the upper entrance to the racecourse. The Community Gallup course was laid out there in 2003.

the Nip Knowes Wud (thu-nip-nowz-wud) n. wood along the Nip Knowes road. It was a location used for cock-fighting until the late 19th century.

Nip-Nebsee see Johnnie Nip-nebs

nippeet see nippit

the Nippers (thu-ni-purz) n. another name for the Nip Knowes – ‘...And said: ‘What’s like the Nippers? Solid?’ ‘No’, ee said, ‘Shundert’’’ [DH].

nippit (ni-pee) pp. nipped, sneaked – ‘hei nippit oot the back afore onybody noticed’, ‘Snatched frae my bosom, like some flower nippit The hope of my future, my bonnie wee bairn’ [RF], pinched, squeezed – ‘...Wi’ labour worn, wi’ poortith nippit, She scarce can hobble’ [JR].

nippit (ni-pee) adj., arch. miserly, penny-pinching – ‘I kennet thee that thou art ane nippit man, sheerin’ where thou hestna sown, an’ getherin’ where thou hestna striinkel’ [HSR], sharp-tongued and crabbed, short in speech.

nippy (ni-pee) adj. sharp, pungent or spicy to the taste – ‘is that ginger wine ower nippy for ee’?, ‘...but they were not good, as they were very ‘nippy’’ [JTu], stinging – ‘they paper cuts can be awfi nippy’.

Niprikin (nip-ri-kin) n., arch. a small morsel (noted by J. Jamieson).

nip-scart (ni-skawr) n., arch. a niggardly person (noted by J. Jamieson).

Nisbet (niz-bi’) n. Henry (b.1833) son of William and Margaret Young. He was listed as a tailor when he joined the Royal Artillery in 1852. He became a Chelsea Pensioner in 1873. James (1785–1854) religious publisher of London, who was father-in-law of Rev. W.A. Wallace. He was a native of Kelso, and one of the principal subscribers to the erection of Kelso North Church. His publishing company, James Nisbet & Co. published most of the books of R.M. Ballantyne, who was related to the Ballantynes of Kelso. He gave 2 flagons, 8 communion cups, 4 plates and a baptismal basin to the new Free Kirk in Hawick. The cups were in continual use until 1924 and the basin was later set in a carved font. John of Nisbetfield (17th/18th C.) lawyer, who was married to Agnes Riddell, and thus assumed the lands of Bewlie. He and John Riddell of Muselee were assigned a new loft in Lilliesleaf Kirk in 1707. He and his wife gave Bewlie (or perhaps half of it) to Walter Scott of Whitfield in 1713, since he had married their only daughter Agnes. Half of Bewlie was leased by him to Thomas Riddell in 1716. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cogsmill in Kirkton Parish. His children included Ann (b.1721), Robert (b.1723), Janet (b.1726) and James (b.1729). Thomas (17th/18th C.) herd in Headshaw. He married Agnes Dalgleish and their children, baptised in Askirk Parish, included George (b.1715). W. (19th/20th C.) manufacturer of fermented ginger beer at 6 O’Connell Street. Walter (b.1824) son of William and Margaret, he was born in Hawick. He joined the 96th Regiment of Foot and was dismissed in 1865, thereafter being registered as a Chelsea Pensioner.
C.) picture framer at Myreslawgreen. In 1854 he married Margaret (or ‘Maggie’), daughter of George Dickson and Annie Affleck. Their children included: Robert, who worked at the Hawick Labour Exchange; and Margaret Young, who married Leonard Kersley, Hawick draper.
Walter (1906/7–2010) born in Hawick, he served in the K.O.S.B. during WWII and then became a banker. He moved to Lanark in 1970, reorganising that town’s banks, and becoming a councillor after retirement. He was also involved in developing New Lanark. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Berryfell in 1733 when he married Beatrix Scott. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1791 he mar-ed Elizabeth Sharp, who was also from Hawick Parish. William (b.c.1795) resident of Hawick Parish, originally from Crailling. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was a woollen frame-work knitter living at 4 Teviot Crescent. He married Margaret Young and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1817); Helen (b.1819); Christian (or Catherine, b.1821); William (b.1823); Robert (b.1824); Walter (b.1827); Beatrix (b.1829); Richard (b.1831);
Henry (b.1833); James (b.1835); and Margaret (b.1837). He is probably the William who was one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left in 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. He could be the same William who was one of the men in the vanguard of the Hawick band at the Carthaugh Baa in 1815, and whose recollections formed part of Robert Murray’s 1863 article on James Hogg.
William (1819–75) farmer from Sprouston, who moved to Hawick to become a butcher. He was one of the first Trustees of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from 1848. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was a flesher on Teviot Square. In 1851 he was already at 1 Buccleuch Street, listed as a master butcher, employing 2 men. 1 Buccleuch Street was at that time was 2 separate shops. He moved to 2 Howegate in 1864.
He married Agnes Story (whose sister was mother of Walter Easton of the ‘Jedburgh Gazette’), who died in 1883, aged 57. They had 3 sons, including William (b.1850, who succeeded to the butcher’s business) and Robert. They also had 4 daughters, including Isabella Douglas (b.1848, who was the first wife of J.J. Vernon) and Margaret T. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. His wife died in Edinburgh in 1883. William (1850–1916) son of William, he followed his father into the butcher’s business at 2 Howegate. He married Elizabeth, eldest child of farmer Walter Henderson. Their children were: Margaret Henderson, a teacher at St. Mary’s Infant School; and William, a hosiery traveller in London (formerly written ‘Nizbet’).

Nitshiel Sike (ni’shel-sik) n. stream on the north side of the Borthwick valley, running past the cottage at Outerside in a roughly eastern direction. Outerside Rig is the hill between this stream and the Hoscoat Burn. About half-way between Outerside and the Borthwick it has been suggested that a possible bridge mound could be related to the Roman road suggested to pass up the Borthwick valley.

the Nitton (thu-ni’in) n. Newton, a farm at the Heights, just north of Hawick. It may have belonged to ‘Robert Grundi de Neuton’ in the late 13th century and was later referred to as ‘Chamberlain Newton’. The original name came from it being granted to Walter de Berkeley, Chamberlain to William the Lion in the late 12th century. The lands were part of Hassendean Parish until that was suppressed in 1690. It was still listed as ‘Newton, or Chamberlain Newton’ in 1788 and 1811. There have been Scots at the farm for many generations (sometimes spelled ‘N’iton’ and other variants; the name first occurs as ‘Chambrilayne neutone’ in 1259, as ‘Neuton’ in the late 13th century, and commonly as ‘Chamberlain Newton’ until the 17th century).

Nitton Muir (ni’in-mewr) n. former farmstead near Newton, precise location uncertain. The Hume family were living there in 1841. It was abandoned around the 1850s.

Niven (ni-vin) n. George (b.1792/3) from Liberton, he was a tanner in Hawick. He was living at about 2 Backdamgate in 1841, but in 1851 was with his nephew Walter Scott in Langholm. He was probably the first person in Hawick to receive a full baptism according to the new evangelical principles of what would become the Baptist Kirk. The baptism was performed by Rev. James Blair in the mill lade off Slitrig Crescent in 1844. His wife was Margaret and their children included Robert and William. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Byreholm in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835.

Niver see nivver

Nivet (ni-vi) n. Henry (19th C.) married Helen Dryden in 1852. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Helen (b.1855); Elizabeth (b.1869); and George (b.1871). He could be the ostler from Hawick who was living in Selkirk in 1851. Henry ‘Harry’, M.B.E. (??– ) born in Hawick, he worked in the knitwear industry, then at the Henderson Tech., becoming Principal in 1975 and was awarded the M.B.E. in 1979. He was also involved with the Archaeological Society, Harriers, Camera Club and other local societies (also written ‘Evitt’).

Nivison (ni-vee-sin) n. Alexander (18th C.) recorded in 1765 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Leyden in Hawick. Rev. Alexander (1786–1861) 3rd son of Abraham, minister of Middlebie, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1811. He became for a time a teacher of oriental languages, and had the opportunity to become a Chaplain in Calcutta, but preferred to stay at home, and so switched positions with James Brown. Thus he was presented to Robertson Parish in mid-1825 and ordained there in 1826. He was recorded at the Manse on the 1841 census, when his brothers Richard and William (both also ministers) were staying with him. He demitted in 1844, when he decided to give up being a minister, and he died in Edinburgh. He married Christina Thomson (d.1849) of Montrose and their children were: Elizabeth Broun (1826–1911), who married Dr. James Ogilvie, missionary in Calcutta, although another account suggests she married the same Rev. James Brown; Alexander (1828–61), who died in Melbourne; Abraham (1830–97) of Edinburgh; David Thomson (1834–67), who died in Calcutta; Christina (1835–51); and Euphemia Duncan (1838–1925), married William Stuart Sutherland of Edinburgh. He wrote a description of the Parish for the ‘New Statistical Account’ in 1834. John (18th C.) resident at Chapelhill in 1743 and 1752 when his children were baptised in Robertson Parish. His name appears to be written ‘Nieveson’ in 1743. His children included: Thomas (b.1743); Bessie (b.1746); and John (b.1752). Thomas (17th C.)
resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1690 he witnessed a baptism for Helen (who was surely related to him) and James Murray. Probably the same Thomas was herd in Langhope in 1697 when he married Bessie Murray, who was also from Ashkirk Parish. Their children included Janet (b.1702), John (b.1709) and William (b.1715). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlside in 1727. His children included Agnes (b.1719) and John (b.1727) (also written ‘Nevison’, ‘Nevison’ and ‘Nyevison’).

nivver (ni-vur) adv. never – ‘he’ll nivver change’, ‘it’s nivver ower late’, ‘...made report this day that they nivtrysted with the like emergence before them tabled ...’ [PR1714], ‘If ye tak it tae hert then ye’ll nivver gang wrang’ [WAP], ‘This is nae place for a Border man to gaun aboot. Niver a brae to pech up over Niver a view’ [DH], ‘It niver happened dinnae fear ye, Petition signed by ilka Teri’ [MB], also used ironically – ‘ee’re never ready at last, ir ee?’, ‘never! A deh believe eet’, used emphatically, not at all – ‘‘Never sic a thing in oor heeds’, he replied’ [BCM1880] (note pronunciation; also spelled ‘niver’ and ‘never’ as in English).

nixin (niks-in) n., arch. a game in which gingerbread cakes are arranged on pieces of wood and the player pays to throw a stick, keeping any cakes that he knocks down (noted by J. Jamieson).

Nixon (nik-sin) n. Adam (16th C.) probably name of ‘Eddy of Larestonburne’, who is listed along with John in 1590. The and other Nixons were named in a complaint them by the tenant of Birdoswald about a raid made on his livestock in 1588. Agnes (18th C.) recorded in a disposition given in 1767 as being one of the cottars of Hawick Shiel who were responsible for making ‘bakes’ on the Common, in violation of the orders of the Hawick Town Council. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed as being ‘in the Brighous’ in 1516 when a number of Nixons and other men of Liddesdale received remission for their crimes. He may have been related to Henry in Larriston, William in Flicht and William in Steel. Alexander (16th C.) recorded as one of the tenants of Brighouse, along with 2 Williams, on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He could be the same man as Alexander ‘of Stelle’ who is recorded (right after William, younger of Brighouse) on a 1544 list of Scotsmen who gave their support to the English King. Alexander (16th C.) recorded at Larriston in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed right after Quentin ‘of Lawrellstane’, and was probably also related to George, Jeffrey, John and Hector, who were also listed in the same place. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Ekkie Nixsoun in Dyk’ in 1611, among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at court in Jeddesdale who complained to the Privy Council about crimes committed by the Scotts and their allies. His lands were probably those of Killoley, near Dinlabyre, and he was likely related to Hob, who was recorded being from there in 1590. Andrew ‘Dandy’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Dande Nixson’ at Brighouse, right after Ringan in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to William, William, younger and George, who were also listed at Brighouse in 1544. Archibald (15th C.) recorded in the proceedings for the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, has remission for several crimes, including bringing in him and Robert (suggesting they were closely related) to take part in raids, perhaps on Whittlehouse. Archibald ‘Aircie’ (16th C.) recorded at the Steele in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He may be related to other Nixons at the Steele in 1544, Barth, Archie, Thomas and Alexander. He may be the ‘Arschie Nixson’ who, along with Ninian Armstrong, had a bond in 1548 to enter 2 Fosters as prisoners at Ferniehirst. Archibald ‘Aircie’ of the Steele (16th C.) signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens in 1584, his name appearing along with Harry of the Steele and Edward of Dinlabyre. His name is recorded as ‘Arche Nixson of the Steile’. Archibald ‘Cow-fowl’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Arche Nixon Cow-fowl’ in 1590 when, along with Elliot of the Steele and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. He was also named in a second accusation of 1590 along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse, Clement Nixon ‘Clash’ and others. Also in 1590 he was listed along with several Elliot and Shiels, who in 1590 were accused of attacking the farm of Dotland a couple of years earlier. Additionally he was named in 1590 along with Clement ‘the Clash’, as well as Ellots, Shiels and others who were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them. He could be the ‘Arche Nickson’ recorded in 1590, accused of being on a raid of Elliots, Nixons and others who raided into England in 1588. He was recorded in 1595 when the Lord of Gilsland complained about raids into England; he is listed there as ‘Arch Nykson alias Cowfowle’, but it is unclear what his nickname might have meant. John of Larristonburn and Clement ‘the Clash’ are also listed and hence perhaps related. It is possible that he is the same man as Airchie of the Steele. Archibald (17th C.) resident at Little Park in Castle-eton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Bartholomew (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of the lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Crauswat, Gusbank, Hurdebus’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He may be the same Bartholomew who was tenant of ‘Stellis within the Dyk’, listed first, along with Thomas and Jeffrey. He may also be the same Bartholomew who was tenant of ‘Litlesteill’ in the 1541 rental roll. He was ‘Barte Ninson of Stele’ in 1544 when listed among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII, and was probably related to the other Nixons listed there, namely Archie, Thomas and Alexander. ‘Wille Nixon Barte son’, also listed in 1544 may have been his son. Charles (18th/19th C.) son of Hawick manufacturer John. He was a solicitor in Nottingham and then Leeds. In 1849 he served as one of the executors for the estate of his brother John. Clement ‘Clem’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Clemme Niksoun in the Esscheis’ in the register of the Privy Council in 1581. He was a servant and dependant of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, and had been taken prisoner by Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh, because Elliot had refused to make him answerable to the Warden for various crimes. In 1581/2 he was ‘Clemme Niksoun, callit of the Hye Asches’ when accused of leading a band who stole 6 cows from a farm at Huntly; his son John was also listed, and he is said to have sold one cow to a merchant from Jedburgh called Milligan, who confessed, and they were declared rebels. It is unclear where ‘the Ashes’ was. Perhaps the same ‘Clem’ was recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding a raid in 1588. Clement ‘the Clash’ (16th/17th C.) servant of William Elliot of Larriston. In 1590 he was named along with Archibald ‘Cowfowle’, as well as Elliots, Shiels and others, of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall; his nickname is recorded there as ‘Cleshe’. He was further accused in 1590 among Elliots and others said to have stolen from the ‘Hewrde’ family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’; he is there ‘Clemye Nixon the Clashie’. Also in 1590 he was ‘Clemny Nyxson alias the Clashie’ on a list of Elliots, Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. In 1595 he was among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid on ‘Haslegyll’; he is there recorded as ‘Clemett Nyxson alias the Clashie’. John, ‘Gleed Larriston’ was also listed as a servant of the Laird of Larriston, and so they may have been related. In 1595 he was also complained about for two other raids, along with Archie ‘alias Cowfowle’, John of Larristonburn, Jenkin and others. There is a further record of a complaint by the English against ‘Clemmy the clashie’ in 1597. His nickname may have referred to being a gossip. Clement ‘Clem the Croon’ (16th C.) listed among Border chiefs by Monipennie in his compilation published about 1594 (but compiled earlier). His name is given as ‘Cleme Nikson, called the Crune’ and in 1580 as ‘Clemme of the Crune’. His son Quentin is recorded in the 1570s and 1580s. Edward (16th C.) listed along with George as tenant of ‘the Dyke’ in Liddesdale in 1541. Both he and George are also recorded on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others, who gave their support to the English Crown in 1544. Edward of Dinlaybe (17th C.) listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He is recorded as ‘Eduarde Nixson, Laird of Dunlybyir’, with his caution being John Carnichael, younger of that Ilk. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with Harry and Airchie of the Steele. Fergus (16th C.) recorded at the Dykes in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His name is given as ‘Fargathe Nixson’ (and ‘Fergus’ seems the most likely forename). ‘Fargaises Willie of Kirkleheade’ is named among men accused of rieving in 1592 (with no surname listed); given the rareness of the name, this could be his son. Probably the same ‘Fergus Nyksen’ was listed along with ‘Hob’ and others in 1541, when accused of raiding Gilsland and killing Englishman Dandy Wigmolm. Gavin (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was also cited for not appearing at another court in Peebles later in 1605. He was ‘in Burnefute’, which was probably the place in Eskdale. Gavin (17th C.) tenant in Graystanehaugh in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Geoffrey (16th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name was listed as ‘gofredi nykson’, and John was right before him. George (16th C.) recorded first on a list of Nixon tenants of Killoley on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. The others were John, Clement and Andrew, who may have been related. He could be the same man as ‘Georg Nixon of Larlestane’ listed first among Nixons in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. George (16th C.) listed along with Edward as tenant of ‘the Dyke’ in Liddesdale in 1541. He may be the same as the tenant of the lands of Killoley. Both he and Edward are also recorded in 1544, swearing allegiance to Henry VIII. George (16th C.) recorded at Brighouse in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to William, William, younger and Ringan and Dandy, who were also listed at Brighouse in 1544. George ‘Geordie’ (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots who were complained about by the English Warden in 1590 regarding a raid in 1588. His son Henry was also listed. He could be the ‘Geordie Nixon of the Larestoune burne’ listed along with ‘Hob’ of Killoley, Hob’s brother Jenkin, John (servant to Martin Elliot), as well as Croziers and Shiels accused in 1590 of stealing from the tenants of ‘Lynbriggs’. Given this list, it seems unlikely he is the same man as ‘Ill-drooned Geordie’, father of Hob and Jenkin. George ‘Ill-drooned Geordie’ (16th C.) recorded at Killoley in 1588 when there was a complaint by Englishmen about a raid made on his livestock. His son ‘Jenkin’ is also listed; and since Jenkin was brother of ‘Hob’, then he was also father of Robert of Killoley. He is probably descended from the George associated with Killoley in the 1540s. He is recorded in 1590 among a group of Elliots and others accused of taking livestock and goods from Over Warden in England. He is the ‘yll drowned Georde’ and ‘halfe drowned Geord’ recorded in 1595 along with Jenkin and other Nixons, Elliots and others when there were complaints made about raids into England. He may be the George who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Hector (16th C.) listed as ‘Ec-tor’ of ‘Lawrellstane’ (probably Larriston) in 1544 when his son John swore allegiance to the English King. Several other men were also listed at Larriston, and so probably related, including George, Quentin and Jeffrey. Henry (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Henry Nicsoun in Larishop’ in a document of 1500 listing men who gave pledges to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. This may have been Lairhope near Teviothead. Golfrid and Edward are also listed there, so they may be his brothers or sons. Perhaps the same Henry, son of John, is also recorded among a large list of men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Henry ‘Crackspear’ (15th/16th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. There he is listed as ‘henrici nykson craksper’. He is also listed among a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1500; he is recorded as ‘Henry Nicsoun, Crakspere’, separate from Henry ‘in Larishop’. He may be the same ‘Henry Niksone’ and ‘Nixsone’ listed in 1510 in the Register of the Privy Seal among men associated with Robert Elliot of Redheugh, required to come before the King to promise to keep order, and then obtaining a respite for their crimes. William ‘Nixson’ is also listed there. Henry (15th/16th C.) named in a respite of 1515/6 along with Robert Elliot of Redheugh, William Elliot of Lariston, James Forster in Greenhaugh, Adam Crozier and others. He is also recorded as ‘in Larestanys’ in 1516 when he had a respite from the Privy Council for all of his crimes; also listed were several other men, including William ‘in Flycht’ and William ‘in Stele’, another Henry and Alexander ‘in the Brighous’. The respite applied to all other Nixons, except Robert and William, ‘brether sister sound to Johne Elwald’. It is likely that most of these men were closely related. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Henrys. Henry (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, along with William, as tenant of ‘Kylsfurd’ (i.e. Kilford). This William could be ‘Grey Will of the Kyll Fuird’ who is recorded in 1563, suggesting that he might be William’s father. Another Henry (or the same one) is listed as tenant of Stripshielden, along with David. Henry ‘Harry’ of Howden (16th C.) recorded in the 1581 Register of the Privy Seal. His name appears with several Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale who were accusing the Scotts of various crimes. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Henrys. He is probably related to the earlier William of Howden. Henry (16th C.) recorded in 1584 as ‘Herrie Nixson’ who was ‘of the Steill’, along with Archie. The pair signed an assurance with the English Wardens, along with Edward of Dinalbyre, to whom they were presumably related. Henry ‘George’s Harry’ (16th C.) listed as one of 3 Nixons among the Border chiefs compiled by Monipennie sometime before 1594. He is recorded as ‘Georgis Harie Nikson’. Probably the same ‘Henrie Nickson sonne to Geordy’ was recorded among Nixons and Ellits complained about by the English Warden in 1590 regarding a raid in 1588; he is there ‘Henrie Nickson sonne to Geordy’. He may be the Henry who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. Henry (16th C.) recorded in 1597 when there was a complaint against him, along with Robert Elliot of Thorlishesope, Hob Armstrong and Alexander Armstrong, for a raid on ‘Ellinghamerigge’ in England. He was referred to as being ‘of Killforde’, but Scott of Buccleuch argued ‘that there is not such a person’. Although there was a man of that name at Kilford 5 decades earlier. He may have got off for giving the wrong name or address! Jeffrey (16th C.) tenant of ‘Stellis’, along with Bartholomew and Thomas, on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He is listed in 1544 as ‘Jeffaray’, brother of Thomas ‘of Stell’, on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Jeffrey (16th C.) recorded at ‘Lawrellstedde’ (probably Larriston) in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to George, Alexander, Quentin, John and Hector, who were also listed at Larriston. Jenkin (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others, who gave assurances to the English King. He was recorded as ‘Jenkyne Nixon of Stanesheld’ (i.e. Staneshiel) and was probably related to John, who was also listed in the same place. He may be the English fugitive Jenkin recorded being reset by ‘Reid’ Simon Armstrong. Jenkin (16th C.) son of George of Killoley and brother of Robert. He is mentioned in a complaint in 1590 about a raid into England made by Nixons and Ellits in 1588. Probably the same ‘Ginkyne’ was accused in 1590 (along with Ellits and Shielis) of stealing from Roland Walker. In 1590 he was listed along with his brother ‘Hob’ of Killoley along with other Nixons, Croziers and Shielis, accused of stealing from the Wilkinsonsof ‘Lynbrigges’. He is recorded being ‘of Kelleley’ and was presumably related to the earlier Nixons from there. The other Nixons named in 1590 were his brother Hob and Geordie of Larriston Burn. He is probably the Jenkin recorded in 1590 on a list of Ellts, Croziers, Nixons and others accused of riev- ing from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. Probably the same ‘Jenken Nyckson son to George’ was listed in 1595 among Nixons, Ellits and others complained about for raids into England. In one raid he is listed along with George ‘yll drowned Georde’, who may have been related and in another he and John are both ‘of Lareston’. John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Perhaps the same John’s son Henry was also listed. John (16th C.) son of Matthew, ‘callid ‘no good clarke’’. He was listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) tenant of ‘Hesseldale’ according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddedale. Perhaps the same John was joint tenant of Heuchhousehill in 1541. John (16th C.) recorded at Killoley in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is listed as ‘John Nyxson of Kellel’, and was probably related to William, who is also recorded at the same place. He is probably the John recorded at Killoley in a rental roll of 1541. John (16th C.) recorded at Flicht in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to Matthew and ‘Perswill’, who were also there in 1544. John (16th C.) resident at ‘Stanesheldes’ (i.e. Staneshiel) recorded in 1544 on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others, who gave assurances to the English King. He was probably related to Jenkin, who was also listed in the same place. John (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as being ‘of Conlegaye’, which could have been Claygate. John (16th C.) listed in a 1544 bond of support for the English King, signed by Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others. His name is given as ‘John Nixon of Lawrellstanes, Ector sone’, and hence presumably Hector was his father. John (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scots and Gledstains at Whithaug in 1580. His name is given as ‘Johnne Niksoun, callit Halyden’, although the meaning of the nickname is unclear. He must have been a supporter of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaug John (16th C.) son of Clem ‘callit of the Hye Asches’. In 1581/2 the pair were among men accused of stealing cattle from a farm at Huntly; he was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. He is recorded as ‘laird of the Highe eshes’ and also ‘of the Higheshies’ in 1595, listed along with his brother (who is unnamed) among men of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England. He is probably the John ‘of Eshes’ who was demanded by the English Commissioners as one of the hostages to be taken as a pledge for other Liddesdale men in 1597. He was further ‘of the Eshes’ in 1597 among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges. John (16th C.) recorded being of Kilford in 1590 when there was a complaint that he and some Elliots had stolen in ‘playne dayelight, thir hirdes’ and 24 head of cattle from people on the English side in 1588. He may be the John recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, accused of taking livestock and goods from Over Warden in England. In 1595 he was ‘alias Larestonburne, guyde and purpose maker’ and ‘of Lareston bre’ when complained about by the Lord of Gilsland regarding 2 raids into England. He could be the John ‘in Larestoun’ who was convicted and executed in Jedburgh in 1611. John ‘Gleed Larriston’ (16th/17th C.) servant of William Elliot of Larriston. His nickname is recorded as ‘gleed Lareston’. In 1595 he was among Nixons and Elliots accused of taking livestock and goods from Over Warden in England. He was ‘alias Larestoneburn, gyude and purpose maker’ and ‘of Lareston bre’ when complained about by the Lord of Gilsland regarding 2 raids into England. He may also be the John accused of 2 further raids in 1595, one with ‘yll drowned Georde’ and another with Jenkin of Larriston. He may have been the same as one of the nearly contemporary Johns associated with Larriston. His nickname presumably referred to a squint. John (16th/17th C.) tenant at Larriston Rig in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Bailie John (c.1757–1812) Bailie and manufacturer. He came to Hawick in 1774, being an apprentice with William Irvine, linen draper. In 1779 he was recorded as Irvine’s apprentice when the pair witnessed a baptism in Cavers Parish. He was one of the first large-scale hosiery employers, taking over from John Hardie around 1780. The original partnership was with William Irvine, George Noble and Thomas Sanson, but Sanson left the same year, and a few years later he was the sole partner. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. In 1786 it is recorded that he was running 8 frames, and started manufacturing ribbed stockings, and in 1795 he already had 12 frames. The firm spun the yarn as well as knitting the hosiery. His premises were on the High Street, where the Victoria Hotel was later built; he lived on the top flat, with the spinning jennies and warehouse below. Around 1793, along with Bailie Simpson, he presented the bible that used to sit at the end of the Magistrates’ row in St. Mary’s Kirk (and moved to the Old Parish). He is probably the merchant of that name who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was recorded as a manufacturer in Hawick on the 1790–91 and 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He paid the dog tax in 1797. Around 1799 he was one of the locals contributing money for the war with France. He was involved in the years 1799–1803 with a court case against merchant Walter Lunn, who was declared bankrupt. He started the early construction phase of what became Lynnwood Mills around 1803 or 1804, and there carding and spinning were carried out. In 1811 he was an Ensign in the 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia. In Hawick in 1782 he married Mary, daughter of William Grieve, tenant of Southfield. Their children included: John (b.1783); Mary (1784–88); William (1785–1871), who succeeded to the hosiery firm; Joseph (1790–1842): Charles, solicitor in Nottingham and Leeds; and an unnamed daughter. The witnesses in 1783 and 1784 were Bailie John Elliot and Robert Grieve (perhaps his wife’s brother). He is probably the John whose eldest daughter Agnes married Robert Jardine in Hawick in 1811. John (1783–1848) eldest son of manufacturer John. He was also a manufacturer in Hawick, being a partner in the firm of Nixon & McKie. He was listed in London when he subscribed for 2 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He died in Nottingham and his inventory from 1849 is preserved, with his estate valued at £2300, his brother Charles... and William Elliot acting as executors. Joseph (1790-1842) younger son of manufacturer John. He was a partner with his brother William. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1841 he was living on Walter’s Wynd with John (probably his son) and a female servant. When his died he was brother was left as sole partner in the family firm. Rev. J.W. (19th/20th C.) Rector of Wetheral, Carlisle, who was appointed to help out with St. Cuthbert’s in Hawick during the vacancy in 1910–11. Martin (16th C.) possessor of ‘Hieflycht’ (i.e. High Flicht) in 1541. He was probably related to other local Nixons. Matthew ‘Nae Guid Clerk’ (16th C.) mentioned in 1541 when his son John was listed among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. His name is given as ‘Matho, callid ‘no good clarke’’, but it is unclear exactly what this meant (however, compare ‘Nae Guid Priest’, which was a nickname for an earlier Oliver). He may be the same as one of the other Matthews. Matthew (16th C.) tenant of Hightrees Cleuch according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He may have been related to John, who leased the neighbouring lands of ‘Heseldale’. He is probably the ‘Mathew Nixson of Hetherclewes’ listed in 1544, among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Matthew (16th C.) recorded at Flicht in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Matthew (16th C.) listed along with William as ‘brother, sister’ in 1544. ‘Pate Nixson Mathewe son’, also listed in 1544 may have been his son, as well as William, Pate’s brother. Mrs. ?? (19th C.) local lady who left a bequest called ‘Mrs. Nixon’s Bounty Fund’, to be distributed to poor women in Hawick and Wilton. It was administered by the ministers of Hawick and St. George’s and the Provost of Hawick, and still had a value of £2300 in 1939. She was presumably wife of one of the local manufacturers. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Renyon Nyxson of Brighows’ in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was probably related to William, William, younger, George and Dandy, who were also listed at Brighouse in 1544. Probably the same Ninian witnessed a bond in 1548 when some Elliots had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Pate Nixson Mathewse son’ and could have been son of Matthew of Hightreecleuch. His brother William is also listed in 1544. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th C.) son of Quentin, he is recorded at Larriston in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His name was given as ‘Patte Nixson of the same, Qwinten sone’. He was probably related to George, Alexander, Jeffrey, John and Hector, who were also listed in the same place. Patrick (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1702. Percival (16th C.) recorded in 1544 as ‘Perswill Nixson, Fleght’ on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others who gave their support to the English Crown. He was probably related to John and Matthew, who were also listed at Flight in 1544. Quentin (16th C.) recorded at Larriston in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His name was given as ‘Quwten Nixson of Lawrellstane’. He was probably related to George, Alexander, Jeffrey, John and Hector, who were also listed in the same place. His son Pate is also listed. Quentin (16th C.) son of ‘Clemmie the Crwne’ or ‘Cleme the Crune’. In 1578 he was held by George Buchanan of the Ilk, on a pledge of good behaviour to the King. In 1580 he was held in ward by the Earl of Lennox in Dumbarton Castle and later that year stated to be warded in Edinburgh Castle. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for theft, along with several Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Christie son of Quentin was recorded in 1585 in a long list of men of Dumfriesshire receiving remission for past crimes. Robert (15th C.) recorded in the proceedings for the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, has remission for several crimes, including bringing in him and Archibald (suggesting they were closely related) to take part in raids. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed along with William as ‘brother, sister’ in 1516. They are given as exceptions to the Nixons who had remission for their crimes, suggesting that what ever they were accused of was more serious. It is unclear which John Elliot was their uncle. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Fergus and others accused of raiding Gilsland and killing Englishman Dandy Wigholm. It is unclear where he came from. Robert ‘Hob’ of Killoley (16th C.) brother of Jenkin and probably son of George, ‘Ill-drooned Geordie’. He was named in 1590 among several Nixons, Croziers, Shiels and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinsonsons of ‘Lynbriggs’. He is recorded being ‘of Kellely’ and was presumably related to the earlier Nixons from there. The other Nixons named in 1590 were his brother Jenkin and Geordie of Larriston Burn (who was therefore presumably distinct from his father). Robert ‘Scabbit Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when he was accused of stealing sheep from ‘Rosie’ and her tenants of Mangerton. He was acquitted of the first cited theft, but found guilty of the second and ordered to be hanged. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Dodburn. He married Janet Riddell and their children included Janet (b.1705) and Gideon (b.1723). The witnesses in 1705 were William Henderson in the Flex and Walter Grieve in Bransholme Park. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Stobicote in 1720. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Brighousecleuchhead in 1622 when he promised to appear before the Justice Court to answer charges against him. Thomas (16th C.) tenant of ‘Stellis’ in Liddesdale in 1541, along with Bartholomew and Jeffrey, who were presumably related. He is also listed in 1544, along with his brother Jeffrey, plus ‘Barte’ and ‘Arche’, among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Thomas (16th C.) recorded at the Dyke in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. ‘Fargathe Nixson’ was also listed there, and so presumably a close relative. Walter (17th/18th C.) Elder of Hawick Kirk who lived at Hawick Shiel. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for John Irvine in Hawick Shiel in 1706. He was listed as tenant in Hawick Shiel when he witnessed baptisms for William Gledstains, for James Borthwick and for Robert Tudhope (serving at Falnah) in 1708 and for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, for John Nichol in Newmill in 1709, for John Turnbull (herd in Whitchesters) in 1710 and for William Hislop, his servant in Hawick Shiel. In 1716 he (and Simon Miller, also at Hawick Shiel) witnessed a baptism for James Borthwick, shepherd at Hawick Shiel. In 1717 he was appointed to collect monies from ‘Hawickshiels, the two Southfields, Allan Haugh milne, Newbigging, and Raes-knewes’, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He was still an elder the following year. He witnessed baptisms in 1718 (along with Walter Scott, both recorded as tenants in Hawick Shiel) for Matthew Charlton, in 1720 for William Hill (weaver at the Flex), in 1721 for 2 men called John Scott in Hawickshiel, as well as William Hislop, in 1723 and 1725 for Robert Scott in Hawick Shiel and also in 1725 for John Scott in Allanhaugh Mill and blacksmith James Gledstains. He may be the Walter who married Janet Riddell and whose son William was baptised in Hawick in 1708. William (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Arnton Fell) in Liddesdale, according to a c.1376 rental roll. The list includes ‘Locus Willemi Nysson’, valued at 21 shillings. William (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Flycht’ in 1516 when he received remission for his crimes from the Privy Council, along with several other Nixons and others. It seems likely he was related to Henry in Larriston, William in the Steel and Alexander in the Brighouse. William (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘in the Stele’ in 1516 among Nixons and other Liddesdale men who received remission for their crimes from the Privy Council. William (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert as ‘brother, sister souns to Johnie Elwald’ in 1516 when several Nixons, except for them, were given respite for their crimes. It is unclear which John Elliot was their uncle. William (16th C.) name of 2 separate men who, along with Alexander, were tenants of Brighouse in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He is also ‘William Nixson of Brighows’ in 1544 when he was on a list of Scotsmen who gave their support to the English Crown; William, younger (presumably his son) was also listed, as well as George, Ringan and Dandy. William (16th C.) recorded at Howden in Liddesdale in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. William (16th C.) listed at Dinlabyre in 1544 among Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others who gave their support to the English Crown. William (16th C.) listed at Killoley in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen swearing allegiance to Henry VIII. He is recorded as ‘William Nixson of Kellele’. He was probably related to John, listed at the same place in 1544 and Hob recorded there in 1590. William (16th C.) son of William of Brighouse. He was recorded as ‘William Nixson younger of Brighows’ in 1544 along a list of Nixons, Croziers, Olivers and others who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His father William was also listed there. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as ‘Wille Nixson Barte son’ and could have been son of Bartholomew of the Steele. William (16th C.) listed in 1544 on a list of Nixons, Olivers, Croziers and others who swore allegiance to the English Crown. He was listed as brother of ‘Pate’, who was son of Mathewe, possibly of Hightreescleuch. William ‘Clement’s Will’ (16th C.) presumably son of Clement, he was known as a thief. In Nixon’s

1557 a bond was signed between Thomas Turnbull of Hartshaugh, George Rutherford of Grange, Adam Turnbull of Woollee and Adam Turnbull of Billerwell to capture him and present him at the ‘airn yetts’ of Ferniehirst. There is another bond of 1557 (where he is ‘Clemattis Will’) among several Armstrongs to present him at Ferniehirst. And a third bond by Hector Armstrong and others (including Archibald of the Steel) to present him to John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1556 on the back of which is a bond by Hector Lorraine of Harwood to present ‘Will Nyksone, called Gunnerhorn’, who could be the same man. William ‘Grey Will’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Grey Will of the Kylf Fuird’. In 1563 Gavin Elliot of Ransiegill and others from Liddesdale entered into a bond with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring him in. He could be the William who was listed after Henry as being tenant of Kilford in 1541. Either he or a different William is also listed as tenant of Howden. He could be the same ‘Gray Wil’ listed among Border chiefs (along with Johnne of the Park) in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation. William (16th C.) listed as ‘alias Kneates, of Higheessches’ in 1597 among 5 Scotsmen delivered to the English Deputy Warden by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch at Copshawholm. It is unclear where ‘Higheessches’ might have been. William (17th/18th C.) farmer at Branzholme Town in 1691, when there were 5 tenants recorded there. He was recorded as tenant in Castelhill in 1692. He could be the William, married to Janet Scott, whose son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1678, along with an unnamed son in 1673. The witnesses in 1678 were John Ker and William Nichol. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Martin in the Flex in 1700 and probably the William recorded in Stobicote in 1707 who witnessed a baptism (along with Robert Thomas in Newmill) for Walter Wilson in Castlehill. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Lymiecleuch, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (1785–1871) hosiery manufacturer, son of John and Mary Grieve. Born in Hawick, he moved to Nottingham, from where he was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1806, after sending a new silk Cornet’s Sash (it is possible that up until then the Cornets simply wore their best clothes, with no formal uniform). Returning to Hawick he worked in Nixon’s and was himself elected as Cornet in 1813. He used to ride a white horse known popularly as ‘Nixon’s mare’. He also acted as paymaster for the prisoners of war who were in Hawick 1812–14. The main manufacturing premises were at 52 High Street (marked on Wood’s 1824 map), before Lynnwood Mill was built. The firm was still listed as ‘John Nixon & Sons’ in Pigot’s 1837 directory, even although his father had died in 1812; it manufactured woolens as well as hosiery. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He laid the foundation stone for the Free Church, was one of its first Trustees as well as serving as a deacon. He later built Lynnwood House (where he is recorded in 1841) and was generally active in public life. In 1851 he is recorded as master woolspinner, employing 115 people. In the 1860s he served as Vice-President of the local division of the Evangelical Alliance. He was also a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Jane, daughter of John Elliot of Binks in 1814, and she died in 1877; the couple had no children. The marriage certificate of 1849 shows his wife’s name to be Jane Elliot Graham (so it is unclear if this was a 2nd wife). He was in partnership for a while with Joseph, his brother. Later he was the sole proprietor of the firm of Nixon’s and restricted himself to the preparation of yarn, with hosiery passing to the form of Nixon & McKie. A portrait of him exists. He donated 2 Adam Brown portraits to the Museum. He was involved in the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ and later with the development of a carrier on a broad frame, which led to a lowering of prices and wages. Hence, through the 1820s he was unpopular among the local stockings-makers, his effigy being carried through the town at one point, with an accompanying song – ‘O, but ye’re a loon, Willie! O, but ye’re a loon! Ye brought the Shirra in a chaise To pull our wages doon’ [T] (formerly written ‘Nexsone’, ‘Nickson’, ‘Nickson’, ‘Nicon’, ‘Niksoune’, ‘Nixson’, ‘Nixsoun’, ‘Nixyne’, ‘Nykson’, ‘Nykson’, ‘Nyksone’, ‘Nyksoun’, ‘Nyxxson’, etc.).

Nixon’s (nik-sinz) n. Messrs. John Nixon & Sons, stocking-makers, with their main mill at Lynnwood, built in the early 1800s. The weir built to divert water into the mill lade at Lynnwood was usually referred to as ‘Nixon’s Cauld’. John Nixon started as a hosiery manufacturer in 1780, spinning as well as knitting. The firm introduced more advanced hosiery machinery to Hawick in 1805. John Nixon died in 1812 and the firm was then run by his sons William and Joseph. Improvements to production in the early 1820s led to a lowering of wages for workers, which was an important part of the ‘ang Stand Oot’ strike of 1822/3. William and Joseph Nixon were the partners in 1829, when they were given a grant from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures for spinning machinery. In 1837 the firm was listed on the High Street, still as ‘John Nixon & Sons’; this was probably where the Victoria Hotel was later located. In 1842 Joseph Nixon died and his brother William was left as sole partner. He then went into partnership with William McKie, and the company was called Nixon & McKie; it was listed as such on Walter’s Wynd in Slater’s 1852 directory. The Lynnwood factory was sold to Thomas Laidlaw in 1864. They also built the factory on Walter’s Wynd that was bought by Pringle’s in 1869 and renamed Rodono.

nixt (nikst) adj., adv. next – ‘The said day the Bayleyes and Counsell appoynted the Commone to ryd upon Fryday nixt, the first day of June’ [BR1705], ‘. . . thereof they appointed their meeting to be on Thursday nixt, the 3 day of May’ [PR1711], ‘. . . should be put out of ye toun and not to reside therein till Whitunday nixt’ [PR1715] (note the pronunciation, even when spelled ‘next’; a colloquial difference with standard English is that, e.g. if this is Saturday, then ‘nixt Mundi’ is 9 days away, while ‘this Mondi’ is in 2 days; cf. the less common neext and older neist).

no (no) adv. not – ‘he’s no is smert is hei thinks hei is’, ‘it’s no fair’, ‘no a bit o’d’, ‘no bad, considerin’, ‘they’ll no be lang in comin’, ‘. . . The crimson current no conceald Wi frozen age’ [JR], ‘Because ye think that yer a gentleman and I think that yer no’ [RM], ‘Aw’m no in the tid for sermons . . . ’ [RM], ‘It’s no’ in steeds, it’s no’ in speeds, It’s something in the heart abiding’ [RH], ‘. . . sic a bleezer as it was, wui no a whuff o wund’ [ECS], ‘A xxt um if this was the Haick Motor, an wuther it gaun back ti Haick that nicht or no’ [ECS], ‘A job is valued for the time it takes, now. No’ the work that’s put intill’t’ [DH], ‘. . . Waxcloth, no carpet, on the fhair, Doon oor close and up oor stair’ [IWL].

no bad (nô-bawd) adj. quite good, excellent – ‘yon tablet’s no bad, issen eet?’, ‘. . . which is no bad, but a long way tae catch up on Andra Ballantyne’ [CT].

Noble (nô-bul) n. Alexander (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Anerton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. ‘Locus Ellie Nobill’ is listed there with a value of 6 shillings. Andrew (b.c.1810) hostler, recorded at about 21 High Street in 1841. By 1851 he was widowed and a frame-worker, living on Walter’s Wynd and in 1861 he was a railway labourer at 77 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Betty, Mary, John, Helen and Joan. Arthur (1834–95) son of Robert Noble, who gave his name to Arthur Street. George (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be the George, son of William and Margaret Pringle, born in Hawick in 1740. He married Jane Scott and their children included Walter (1778), Agnes (b.1775) and Robert (b.1777). His wife ‘Jean’ died in Hawick in 1778. Henry (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Priesthaughshiel in 1781 when his daughter Janet was baptised. James (17th C.) listed at Whithope among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the James, married to Janet Murray, whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish included Walter (b.1682) and probably Helen (b.1684). James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it still contained Hassendean. He was recorded in Parkhill in 1687 when his son James was baptised, with witnesses John Noble (surely a close relative) and Robert Learmonth. He may be the James who married Jean Thomson in Roberton Parish in 1687. James (17th C.) recorded as resident at Borthwickshiel in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is listed under the farms of the Earl of Tarras in Hassendean Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1728 he was in Roberton itself and in 1735 at Borthwickbrae. He married Isobel Ker in Roberton in 1727. Their children included: Agnes (b.1728); Walter (b.1730); twins Isobel and Janet (b.1733); and Mary (b.1735). He was living at Chisholme in 1733. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Ker and their son James was baptised in 1744.
James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Mervinslaw in 1751. He married Marion Young and their son Adam was baptised in 1751, with witnesses Robert Scott and Walter Irvine.

Rev. James (1836–1883) born in Perthshire, son of Rev. James and Margaret Crow. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed to preach by Perth Presbytery in 1859 and became assistant at St. Stephen’s in Edinburgh in 1861. However, later that year he was translated to be minister of Castleton Parish. He served as Chaplain to the Liddesdale Curling Club. In 1879 he attended the celebration for his colleague Rev. John Black of the Associate Kirk in Newcastleton. He died unmarried. James (1851/2–81) son of Andrew, contractor in Coldstream. He drowned in Hawick, and is buried in the family plot in Lennel. John (16th C.) servant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot. In 1590 he was named along with ‘Gib Elliot son to Robin’ and John Shiel (another servant of Robert), as well as Elliotis and Croizers, when they were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall. He was further listed in 1590, along with Nixons, Croizers and Shieles, accused of stealing from the tenants of ‘Lynbrigges’; he is there ‘Martin Elliott’s man’, but it seems that the same person is meant. He may be the John who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. John (17th C.) resident at Horsleyhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish for William Collin in Horsleyhill in 1682, for Thomas Scott in Hassendean in 1683, for Thomas Robson in 1684, for William Scott, for George Hood, for William Collin, for Robert Scott and for James Noble in 1687 and for John Renwick in Horsleyhill in 1688. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Winton and Roberton Parishes. He married Isobell Scott in Winton Parish in 1702 and additionally had Janet (b.1703), William (b.1707) and Janet (b.1710). Robert ‘Hobbie’ (16th C.) Borderer who is mentioned in the ballad ‘Jock o the Side’, as well as in the eponymous ballad. The character in the ballads is perhaps based on ‘Hobbe Noble’, who was living ‘hrd by the howse of Bewcastell’ according to a 1583 letter of Thomas Musgrave. He could be the Robert Noble who died on his farm at Parkhead in 1620 (and hence was not hanged at Carlisle). Robert (17th C.) tailor in Effedge. In 1684 he was listed among men declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. Robert (1839–1919) of Wellfield and later Heronhill and Borthwickbrae, he was from Biggar, coming to Hawick as a housewman and traveller for Dicksons & Laings. He became a junior partner in Richardson, Noble & Co. (established 1871), which built Glebe Mills in 1877. He founded Robert Noble & Co. in 1880 after Robert Richardson died. He was active in public life through being a J.P., President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce and being associated with the School Board, the Cottage Hospital, the Gas Company, the Teviotdale Dairy and the Constitutional Club. He bought Borthwickbrae from William Elliott Lockhart about 1884. About 1895 he gave land around Borthwick Waas Cemetery for a shrubbery, and kept it up at his expense (along with the Grieve sisters). He married Isabella Armstrong in 1860, and their children included Arthur. The Trinity area adjacent to Glebe Mills was developed largely through his efforts, and Noble Place is named after him. He also left money for the Hawick Technical College. Walter (17th C.) among the men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was tenant in Effedge. However, it is possible this was confusion with Robert, tailor in Effedge. Walter (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Winton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th/18th C.) living at Castleside in 1710 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably the Walter who married Isobel Cuthbertson whose son Robert was baptised in Ashkirk in 1706. William (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Brauxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere. William (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Margaret Pringle and their children included: Janet (b.1738); George (b.1740); and James (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were cooper John Aitken...

and ‘Officer’ Thomas Sword. William (18th C.) resident of Denholm in 1772. His children included John (b.1772). William (18th C.) gardener at Burnhead in 1793, when he was working for William Scott. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for John Lorraine in 1754 (formerly ‘Nobill’, ‘Nouble’, ‘Nowble’ and variants).

Noble Place (nō-bul-plis) n. street in the Trinity area near the Glebe Mills, built around 1885 and named after Robert Noble. It was essentially built to provide convenient accommodation for workers at Glebe Mills.

Noble’s (nō-bulz) n. knitwear firm of Robert Noble & Co., founded in 1872 and at Glebe Mills from 1877. The company dwindled after WWII, but survived until 1962, when it merged with other companies (Walter Thorburn of Peebles and George Roberts of Selkirk), with Glebe Mills being taken over by Pringle’s. However, even the new merged company only lasted a few years. Papers relating to the firm exist, covering the period 1879–1959.

Noctes Hawickianae (no-teez-lk-ee-an-ā) n. book published at the end of 1859, containing caricatures and sketches describing the adventures of a theatrical troupe who spent 9 days performing in the Subscription Rooms in Hawick a few weeks earlier. The sub-title was ‘Ye Drama on ye Borders. Being ye feates and adventures of a dramatic companie, what they did, and how they did it, with ye folks they met, and how they met them, and exhibiting ye effects in modern Athens of a very distant explosion, and who were affected thereby, illustrated in upwards of one hundred humorous sketches, embracing portraits of ye Dramatis Personae, from photographs by Treuitt Brothers, and veritable likenesses of other parties from Nature’. The pseudonymous authors were Charles K. Tynte and Austin Burns. The illustrations were actually by Keddy Halswelle (with the assistance of Burns Bryson). The book is now rather rare. It contains a couple of sketches of Hawick streets in 1856, as well as a view including Goldielands Tower and caricatures of a few Hawick residents of the time.

No Kiddin (no-ki-din) n. popular music band based in Hawick in the late 1970s. They consisted of Kenneth Stoddart (keyboards and synthesiser), Stevie Turnbull (lead/rhythm guitar), Paul Deport (lead singer), Jim Inglis (bass guitar) and Derek Lunn (drums).

nolt (nōlt, nōl) n., pl., arch. cattle – ‘Item, whatsoever person or personnes that has thair hors, meiris, or nolt of any sort, out of ane house in Hawick . . . ’[BR1640], ‘...the great inconvenienc that follows by Burgess who live not in the town, their putting horse, nolt and shear to the Common . . . ’[BR1720], ‘...had no right, title, interest, claim of right, property, or possession to the said Commonty, nor privilege of pasturine yrupon with horse, nolt, or other cattle . . . ’[BR1734], ‘...at riding the Common tarry the riders were in use to hound and drive out of the Common all the horse, nolt, and sheep belonging to the tenants on the confines of the Common . . . ’[C&L1767], a bullock, single head of cattle – ‘A cow £22; a nolt £7’[BR1638] (cf. nowt).
Nolt-lair

Nolt-lair (nōl-lār) n. former lands in Liddesdale, adjacent to Yethouse. It is written as ‘Noltlares’ in 1632, among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, and including Hightrees, Burnmouth, Dawstonburn and Prickinbaugh. It is probably the ‘Noltlawis’ recorded in 1611 when Hob, son to Jamie Henderson there, was listed for non-appearance in court at Jedburgh. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties, it was ‘Noutlaires’ and combined with Yethouse to cover 70 acres.

Nolt-lair (nōl-lār) n. lands that were part of Lilliesleaf Common. Along with Stotfield, it was described in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls that it was feued by John Scott in Bewlie Mains.

nominat (no-mi-na', -ni') v., arch. to nominate, name – ‘...and nominat James Scott, called of Westport, to be Corronett for that yeare’ [BR1705], pp. nominated, named – ‘...the elders after nominate were ordered to collect ye money for propagating Christian knowledge in ye High-lands and Northern Islands’ [PR1717], ‘And recommend it to those whom they shall nominat for that effect, to take advice in the first place of the Honourable Laird of Cavers’ [PR1724] (also spelled ‘nominate’).

Nook Haugh (nook-hawch) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish. It was listed in the 1861 census and was probably the same as Haughheid.

norlan (noo-lān) adj. northland, originating in the North – ‘But the norlan’ wind comes laden Wi’ bitin’ frost an’ snow! Oh weary, weary Winter, I wish ye were awa!’ [JT], ‘An’ that’s as true as I’m a Scot, A redshank, Norland haggis eater’ [JoHa], ‘Oh cease they mane, thou norlan’ wind, And o’ thy wallin’ let me be’ [TDa].
Norman (nor-min) n. James (20th C.) owner of the Station Hotel 1933–51. He sold Langbault to the Henderson brothers. His daughter Jean married James Aitkin Henderson, who became Provost.

Normand (nor-mund) n. John (13th/14th C.) first man listed on the inquisition of 1303/4 into the inheritance of William Charteris’ half barony of Wilton. Most of the men are clearly local, and the inquest was held at Roxburgh. His name is written ‘Normaund’. He also swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 as ‘Normaunt’, with a seal showing a lion rampant on a 6-leafed flower and the legend ‘S’IOH’...BVRGES’ DE BERWT’, although he was from Roxburghshire.

Norris (no-rais) n. William (18th C.) resident of Denholm in 1780 and 1781. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Jean (b.1780); and Margaret (b.1781).

Northbank (nor-, north-bawngk) n. former farmstead and ruined 16th century peel tower in Southdean Parish. It is located between Steele Knowe and White Hill, to the east of the hamlets of Chesters and Southdean. The tower is about 5 m by 4 m and is ruined down to a single storey. Adjacent to the tower is an enclosure 23 m square, and there are signs of 2 other turf-walled buildings to the south-west; these are probably the remains of an earlier steading. The previous name for the farm may have been ‘the Banks’. There are modern sheep-shelters there. The surrounding area has old rig lines, covering at least 22 hectares, enclosed by boundary banks and ditches. The more recent farmstead is about 500 m west of the ruined peel tower. It was valued at 22 shillings in 1538 and 1539. ‘Belle’, Thomas and ‘Bennete’ Laidlaw were tenants there in 1541, paying 22s yearly. The tenant of the farm there in 1669 was ‘Lancellot Laidlie’. Robert Laidlaw and George Oliver, each with one hearth, are recorded there in 1694, as well as ‘Culbert whilands’ (it is already ‘Northbank’ in 1538, and is ‘Norbank’ in 1669 and ‘Norbanck’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Norbanck’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but it not marked on Roy’s or Stobie’s 18th century maps).

North Berryfell (north-be-ree-fel) n. farmstead on the east side of the Slitrig and more than a kilometre from Berryfell farm (which is sometimes called ‘South Berryfell’ to distinguish it). William Oliver was there in 1841. James Brunton was farmer in the 1860s, A. Jackson in 1868 and then Drydens until at least the early 1900s. The farmer there in 1872, Mr. Dryden, uncovered an ancient cairn, where pieces of pottery were found, as well as the top stone of a quern nearby. The farmhouse is now a ruin.

North Bridge Street (north-brij-stree) n. road leading to North Bridge, connecting the High Street (or Oliver Place) with Dovemount Place. Before the road was developed the general area had been in use as nurseries by Dickson’s. The name appeared around 1832, with the first house built in 1845. The southern end is just the opposite side of the street from Oliver Place. The middle section used to contain the houses and surgeries of many of the town’s doctors. No. 16 and 39 were designed by J.P. Alison in 1895, as well as a hotel on the street at about the same time. The northern end was built largely in 1899–1900, with Nos. 41–49 designed by J.P. Alison. The Art Nouveau inspired Nos. 43 (J.E.D. Murray’s studio) and 45 (Alison’s own house and office) are particularly noteworthy. Nos. 2, 4, 6 and 41 are grade C listed buildings, while 43, 45, 47 and 49 are grade B (also sometimes referred to as ‘Bridge Street’: named because it is the road to the North Bridge).

North Bridge Street Mill (north-brij-stree-mil) n. former woollen mill situated to the south of the Teviot near North Bridge Stree. It is recorded in 1872, but it is unclear precisely where it was.

North Brig (north-brig) n. North Bridge, being the bridge over the Teviot at the end of North Bridge Street, built in 1832 by John & Thomas Smith of Darnick. It was originally called the New Bridge, to distinguish it from the Teviot Bridge in the west part of the town, and was funded by the Turnpike Trustees, since it allowed for a much easier route to the North. In 1882 it needed to be widened, the corrugated iron parapets being removed and the pavement width added to each arch. This work was carried out by Scott & Thomson’s. Originally it had 4 arches, with 2 allowing carts to pass at the riverside. These were filled in when the river banks were later built up to street level. Stone steps also once led up from the water-side to Bridge Street near the present Library (shown on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map), and another set by the railway, while a steep brae led from near the Buccleuch Memorial to the haugh where Duke Street was later built. In 2000 the bridge was closed to road traffic when the Waverley Bridge was opened to carry the main south-bound A7. It is a grade
North British Railway

C listed building (called ‘the New Brig’ until the railway arrived in 1849, then more often referred to as ‘the Station Brig’).

North British Railway (north-briˈeʃər-ri) n. company that built the railway line south from Edinburgh, reaching Hawick in 1849, and then succeeded, amid bitter political rivalry, to extend the line to Carlisle, completing what would be known as the Waverley Line in 1862.

North Burn (north-burn) n. stream flowing into the Allan Water from the north-east. It rises on Chester Knowe near the former farmstead of Newbigging and flows roughly south-west. It is also sometimes known as Newbiggin Burn.

Northcote Street (north-koˈstreɪt) n. street between Dovecote Street and Laidlaw Terrace, built around 1884 and named after Sir Stafford Henry Northcote (1818–87), who was Chancellor of the Exchequer and Foreign Secretary (the fact that it is north of Dovecote Street can’t be a coincidence though!). The former joinery sheds of Archie Aimers on the south side were replaced in the 1980s by a small grassy area for the use of parents and small children.

Northcroft (north-kroft) n. former name for a farm lying between Stirches House and the Heap Hills. William Rutherford was recordede there in 1752. It was once part of the Langlands estate, but sold off around 1780. In 1788 it was valued at £20 and owned by Mrs. Shortreed, and she was still listed as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. James Black was farmer there in 1841 and the owner by about 1874 was John James Chisholme. It was sometimes referred to as ‘Nethercroft’ (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Northcroft (north-kroft) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, above Commonside on Blaen’s 1654 map. It may be the place of that name referred to in a 1581 complaint when Elliots there were molested by Scotts and others. It was part of the lands associated with Commonside that were already occupied by Gilbert Elliot (brother of Robert of Redheugh) in 1591 when leased to him by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. It was leased to Gilbert Elliot (now of Kirkton) again in 1603, when it was described as a 20-shilling land (it is ‘Norcroft’ in 1603.

North Croft Park (north-kroft-paʊrkw) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. It is listed in 1779 when included among lands whose lterent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot. They are still listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, along with ‘Quarter of Whitefield House’, valued at £52 2s 9d.

the North Crofts (θu-north-krofts) n. former name for an area of Denholm, corresponding to roughly the part later developed as Riverside Drive. It is said that in about 1860 Mr. Laidlaw was digging there when he came upon several stone cists containing human skeletons (also sometimes ‘North Croft’).

North Hermitage Street (north-her-miˈeʃər-stree) n. part of the main B6357 through Newcastleton, lying to the north of Douglas Square. The British Legion Hall is at No. 3.

Northhouse (north-hoʊs) n. Northhouse, farm off the A7 between Newmill and Teviothead, near where the main road crosses the Teviot. The nearby side road goes up the Northhouse Burn to Old Northhouse (which is also referred to as just Northhouse). This was once part of the lands of Ringwoodfield. It was formerly home of a local branch of the Scotts and became part of the Buccleuch estates. John Scott was tenant there in 1498 and had 20 cows stolen by John Dalgleish and others in about 1510. In 1524, when Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme was regranted the office of Bailie of the lands of Melrose Abbey, he was given this farm and that of Thirlestane for his fee. In 1540 the King’s shepherd William Henderson is recorded being paid for oats there. Archibald Elliot of Fahnash was recorded being there in 1547. In 1553/4 the lands were still held in fee (along with Thirlestane) for the office of bailiery; they were together valued at £20 Scots at that time. William Scott of Bowden rented lands there from Melrose Abbey in about 1557 for £5. The lands are listed among those inherited by Sir Walter Scott in 1574. Scott of Satchells lists Walter of Northhouse as the first of the 24 ‘pensioners of Buccleuch’, and says he was the first Scott of Northhouse. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1607. ‘Will’ Scott of Northhouse was declared a rebel in 1608 after failing to answer to charges that he had raided Stobs, stealing the writs and charters for ransom. Another tenant, Archibald Scott is recorded in 1619. It was still listed as part of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. 5 people were listed there in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with 7 hearths being recorded. Archibald Gledstains was tenant there in at least 1696–98 (he was recorded as ‘Mr’, suggesting he may have been the teacher or similar). Thomas Scott was living there in 1702. It was included in the survey of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it covered 1678 acres and was bounded by the River Teviot, Braidaughty, Doeleleuch, Skelfhill, Phaup and Southdeanrig. William Coltart was there in 1726. Thomas Elliot was renting the farm in the period 1745–48 and Robert Miller in 1747. Walter Irvine lived there around the 1760s. In at least the period 1791–97 the tenant was Thomas Scott. John Fenwick farmed there in the 1860s. In the early 20th century there were Amoses there.

There was once a suggestion to divert the Hawick-Carlisle railway from there to Wilton Lodge. An ancient axe-head (perhaps bronze) found there was donated to the Museum in 1861, but subsequently disappeared (see also Auld Northhouse; the origin of the name is surely literal, and is also sometimes ‘Northhouses’; it appears from about 1500 as ‘Northhous’, is ‘Northhous’ in 1498 and 1660, ‘Norththous’ in 1524, ‘Northou’ in 1540, ‘Northows’ in 1547, ‘Norththous’ in 1553/4, ‘Northhou’ in 1557, 1564, 1619 and 1663 and ‘Northhous’ in 1661; it is already ‘Northhouse’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Northhoose Brig (north-hoos-brig) n. road bridge over the Teviot on the A7, near where the Northhouse Burn joins the River.

Northhoose Burn (north-hoos-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from the south, near Northhouse. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail.

Northhoose Chaapel (north-hoos-ch a-pul) n. former chapel at Old Northhouse. Its location is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, although there are now no physical signs of it. It is said that there were burials in the attached graveyard until 1792, and several stones have been subsequently unearthed in the area. The graveyard is marked in 1863 on both sides of the stream, which is called the Chapel Burn. The chapel may have served the upper Teviotdale area before the chapel was built at Caerlenrig.

Northhoose Cottages (north-hoos-ko’-ee’jeez) n., pl. cottages at Northhouse, where the side road to the Allan Water (south from the A7) crosses the Northhouse Burn. A building that is no longer there is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Northhoosehaugh (north-hoos-hawch) n. former name for the flat ground by the Northhouse Burn, probably at ‘Auld Northhouse’, where the small church was built. There was once a farmstead, near where the Catrail crossed the burn. James Miller was there in 1772.

North Ludge see MINTI NORTH LUDGE

Northope Burn (nor-thup-burn) n. stream that rises north of Craik Cross Hill, in a set of sikes called March Sike, Corse Grain, Rashie Grain and Laird’s Cleuch Sike, and becomes one of the streams feeding the head of the Borthwick Water.

Northope Haugh (nor-thup-hawch) n. farmstead in flat ground by the Northope Burn, just to the west of Howpasley, in the upper Borthwick valley. About 250 m to the east are the remains of a large enclosure, with 2 smaller enclosures within it. And about 60 m to the south-west are another 2 small circular enclosures. The age of these features is not known. This was probably the farm of ‘Noirhop’ listed along with Craikhope in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish; together they were estimated at ‘100 lb., vicarage 16 lb’. It was also listed along with Craikhope on a draft map of the Borthwick in 1650, having 8 ‘communicants’ between them.

North Port (north-pör’) n. former entrance to the town at the top of Walter’s Wynd, between 47 and 49 High Street. This was the start of the road towards the North from the old town. A plaque was placed at 51 High Street by the Callants’ Club in 1964.

North Stewart Place (north-stew-ur’-plis) n. original name for the street joining East and West Stewart Places, which were all named after Rev. James Stewart and part of the area popularly known as Stewartfield. It is now part of East Stewart Place.

North Synton (north-sin’-in) n. farm to the east of Ashkirk, but on the north side of the Ale valley, distinct from the other Synton (or Sinton) farms on the south side. It may have been part of the same estate as South Synton in early times, but is separate from at least as early as 1407. In that year Archibald, Earl of Douglas, granted the lands to Barnaby Veitch of Dawyck. Alexander Veitch was recorded as owner in 1502. David Thomson was there in 1581/2. In 1601 it was described as having a ‘tower and fortalice’ and being an annexed part of the Barony of Dawyck. It was held by the Veitch family until 1641, when largely sold to Francis Scott of South Synton, except for Clerklands. In 1643 it was owned by Francis Scott of Synton, with the west side valued at £208 and the east side valued at £338. It was fully annexed to South Synton again in 1675. The ‘laird of North sintoun’ (who appears to have been Rev. Robert Cunningham) paid the land tax there on £600 in 1678; at the same time Francis Scott of Synton was the owner of Essenside, valued at £365. Francis Cunningham of North Synton is recorded in 1690 and his sister Maria was served as heir to his 50-shilling land there in 1691. Dr. Gideon Elliot (son of the tenant in Borthwickshields and descended from the Elliots of Horsley-hill) became Laird through marriage to Margaret Cunningham in 1691. The main house was taxed for having 7 hearths in 1694, and there were 9 people further assessed for having a hearth (William and George Easton, George Scott, George Tait, James and John Veitch, Thomas Cochran and William Nichol), as well as 8 poor people (Bessie Murray, Isobel Turnbull, Isobel Dryden, Jean Foster, Jean Elliot, John Fraiter, Janet Veitch and Margaret Dunlop). Thomas Aitchison was a cottar there in 1698, when William Telfer was also living there. Robert Scott was a cottar there in 1719. Robert Hunter was tenant in 1737. Charles Scott lived there in the 1790s. James King was farmer there in 1797. The value was the same in 1707, £600. It was listed being owned by John Pringle of Clifton in 1788 (and still recorded this way in 1811), when valued along with Birkwood at £600. In the 1830s the lands were owned by Robert Pringle of Clifton. Andrew Riddel was farmer there in the 1860s, followed by John Riddell. The farmhouse was remodelled in the late 17th century, but contains parts of a 16th century building (the oblong part oriented east-west). The north-west extension and porch are modern. The house is 3 storeys on the south, 2 on the north. The oldest part may have been built for James Veitch, who succeeded to the lands in 1536. The vaulted basement is still well preserved. There is also a ‘bun-shaped quern’ beside the east gable and a carved sandstone block built into the south gable. About 200m north-west of the farmhouse are the remains of a hillfort, visible in aerial photographs. About 450m to the north-west are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation. About 600m to the north is an old enclosure, with nearby rig lines. And just south of the road, a little to the east of the farm, are signs of another settlement (its approximate location is marked as ‘Sintoun’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and as ‘North Sintoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Northswentoun’ in 1475, ‘Northsytoun’ in 1497, ‘Northsintone’ in 1525, ‘Norcht Synton’ in 1531, ‘North Syntoune’ in 1609 and 1691 and ‘Northsinton’ in 1704).

North Toon-o-Rule (north-toon-ō-rool) n. North Town-o’-Rule, name for a cottage at the north side of Town-o’-Rule farm, the same as the cottage known locally as Drythropple and renamed Heathfield for a while. This is where the poet John Halliday was living in 1851, as well as carrier John Gray and his family.

the North Tyne (thu-north-tīn) n. river that rises near Kielder Water, being one of the major river valleys of the English Middle March and joining the South Tyne near Hexham – ‘Then seeking the south that held his shrine, Heard the low hills echo ‘To Tyne! To Tyne!’’ [WHO].

Northumbria (nor-thum-bre-a) n. ancient Kingdom of north-eastern England, also including parts of southern Scotland for centuries, and now the general name given to the English north-east. The kingdom was established around the year 600, including Bernicia (roughly from the Forth to the Tees) and Deira (roughly the Tees to the Humber). The name derived from being north of the Humber. Hawick would have been part of the Kingdom of Northumbria until the Battle of Carham in 1018.

Northumbrian (nor-thum-bre-in) adj. relating to present-day Northumberland or ancient Northumbria, n. the language spoken in Northumbria. This was originally one of Brythonic or ‘p-Celtic’ languages, most closely related to Old Welsh. In periods after about the 6th or 7th century the word is used to describe the early form of Anglian spoken throughout the Kingdom of Northumbria and that developed into Scots and in particular the Hawick dialect. Essentially the same form of p-Celtic is sometimes called ‘Cumbric’.

Northville (north-vil) n. private house at 25 North Bridge Street, which later became the Kings Hotel. The property behind it on Union Street was once the site of Teviot Grove Academy. The house was for a few years the home of the poet John Halliday as well as carrier John Gray and his family.

North Witterside Road (north-wi’rur-süd-rōd) n. name sometimes used for Commercial Road before the mid-19th century.

Norville (nor-vil) n. John (17th/18th C.) wig-maker from Greyfriars Parish in Edinburgh. In 1714 he produced a testimonial to Hawick Session from his previous parish attesting that he had made ‘his publick repentance for his scandal’... and could baptise his child. Alos in 1714 he was witness in Hawick to a baptism for Robert Miles. His son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1716 (also written ‘Norvell’).

Norwud (nor-wud) n. Norwood, house on Sunnyhill, built for mill owner Peter Scott in 1904. It was designed by J.P. Allison in an Arts & Crafts style, with multiple gables and a castellated tower. It has an entrance porch and a first-floor balcony at the rear. Fashion parades from Pesco’s used to take place on the lawns of the terraced garden. The Scott family stayed there until 1964, and latterly it has been the home of the Paterson-Browns. It is a grade B listed building. The name is also used more generally for the area around Norwood itself. The ‘Norwood Trophy’ was gifted by Peter Scott and competed for among local bowling clubs.

the Norwud Trophy (thu-nor-wud-trö-fee) n. local bowling trophy, donated by manufacturer Peter Scott and named after his residence. It was presented after the earlier Beechwood Trophy was won outright by the Buccleuch Bowling Club in 1912.

nosey wundi (nō-zee-wun-di) n. an ‘inquisitive glass’, an angled mirror mounted outside a window to allow a view along the street without leaning out. Also referred to as ‘keekin’ or ‘peepin’ glasses. They were introduced by John Guthrie around 1898, when he made one for his house at 61 High Street, after seeing similar devices on buildings in narrow streets on the continent. They soon began to appear all over Hawick, and even spread to some neighbouring towns. Although they existed to a lesser extent elsewhere, they were peculiarly popular locally. Since the height of their popularity they have disappeared one by one. A census of 1989 revealed a total of 51 in Hawick, distributed amongst the Loan, Buccleuch Street, the Sandbed, Silver Street, the Howegate, Kirkstyle, the High Street, Oliver Place, Bourtree Place, Bourtree Terrace, Bridge Street, Croft Road, Laidlaw Terrace, Dovemount Place and Princes Street.

nostirl (nos-ti-rul) n., arch. nostril – ‘Ther gaed up an reek owt o’ his nostirles …’ [HSR] (note ir instead of ri).

notar (nō-tur) n., arch. a notary public, someone authorised to draw up legal documents – ‘…quhilk council and communitie, all in ane vois, electit the said Gilbert Watt, notar, clark for ane yeir to cum …’ [BR1638].

notar-public (nō-tur-pu-bleek) n., arch. a notary public, someone authorised to draw up legal documents – ‘…and heirupoun askit instrument of me, notar public, befor thir witnessis …’ Thomas Westoun, notarius publicus, teste manu propria [SB1574], ‘…to content and pay to Gilbert Watt, notar-public, five half-firtlots aits, eaten by thair guidis to him in harvest last’ [BR1642], ‘…in presence of me, notar publick, and witnesses subscribing, John Scott and Thomas Turnbull, present Bailies of the Burgh and Town of Hawick …’ [BR1734] (also ‘notar publict’ and variants).

notary public (nō-tu-ree-pu-bleek) n., arch. someone with authority to draw up legal documents. In the middle ages this was usually an official of the church; in local charters they are often ‘presbyters’ of the Diocese of Glasgow. Post-Reformation notaries were public officials, often including the Town Clerk.

the Noted Beattie (thu-nō’-eed-bee’-ee) n. Hawick character of the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Together with Caleb Rutherford and ‘Jean Caleb’ they used to put on shows. Beattie would dress in a flesh-coloured outfit and fasten on chains, introduced by Rutherford as ‘the Noted Beattie from Bengal’.

the Note o the Gate (thu-nō’-ō-thu-gā’) n. road through a hill pass on the way to England from Hawick, leading from the Rule valley to Liddesdale. The road branches south off the A6088, about a mile beyond Bonchester. The name also refers to the pass itself, which is at a height of 376 m (1233 ft) in the middle of what is now Wauchope Forest. There was once a toll house near the pass. It was regularly used as a meeting spot for farmers buying and selling bales of wool. Archibald Scott was toll-keeper in 1851 (also sometimes ‘Knot’; it is marked ‘Knott in the Gait’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Not O’ the Gate’ in about 1795; the meaning of the first part of the name is obscure).

Notman (no’-mun) n. James (18th C.) weaver in Kilmknowe in Hobkirk Parish when his children were baptised in 1786 and 1788. He was probably the son of John born in Hobkirk in 1759. His children included James (b.1786) and Isabel (b.1788). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish, probably the son of James born in 1786. He helped with Minto Manse (in 1827), Monto Church (about 1833) and Minto House (in 1837). He started his own architect’s practice about 1850, working on buildings around Edinburgh and beyond. He designed Wilson’s Wool Store in Hawick in 1856, and a Wareroom for William Kedie in 1859. He may also have designed a villa for Hawick manufacturer Walter Wilson in 1859 and the farmhouse at Hawick Moor in 1861. He also submitted an unsuccessful design for Wilton Church. William Burn (b.1817/8) born in Minto Parish, he worked as a clerk in one of the mills. He was living at 47 High Street in 1851. His wife was Joan and their children included Isabella and Robina (formerly ‘Noteman’).

Notman’s Shot (no-’minz-sho’) n. former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. In 1780 it was listed (as ‘Noteman’s Shott’) as part of the eastern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park, and as ‘Notemans Shotts’ among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot in 1779. It was listed as ‘Notman Shot’ in 1811 along with Temple Croft, with a joint value of £76 16s 8d.

nurseries (nu-su-reez) n. Hawick was once famous for its plant nurseries, which supplied a range of plants to a wide area. A record of 1675 mentions the 'plant market' in Hawick. The first large-scale nursery was established at Hassendean by the Dicksons in 1728 and moved to Hawick in 1766 (as well as having premises near Dumfries, Edinburgh and Perth), supplying trees and shrubs to roughly half of the plantations in Scotland. The nurseries were at the east end of town, including land stretching from Oliver Crescent to Dovecote Street and also around Union Street and later extending to near where the Buccleuch Hotel is now. Dickson’s also had nursery land around Dickson Street and Wellfield, which became Dovemount Nurseries in the latter part of the 19th century. The firm of Dickson & Turnbull also used the Wester Nurseries, where the Playing Fields are now, including land later occupied by the cricket field, Parish Church and bowling greens. Many of these areas are marked on Wood’s 1824 map. Forbes Nurseries (also known as the Buccleuch Nurseries) operated near Stonefield from 1879-1968 and were extremely well known in their day, being once a large employer in the town. When they closed it ended a long chapter of Hawick being prominent as a nursery centre, with perhaps the Walled Gardens and success in ‘Britain in Bloom’ being the remaining vestiges.

the Nursery House (th-nur-su-ree-hoos) n. former cottage at Boucherne Bridge. It lay on the east side of the Rule Water, opposite the farm of Langraw. It was also known as Boucherne Haughhead. The name came from the 2 acres of land there, which Thomas Scott of Nether Boucherne set aside for growing young trees. George Adamson lived there around 1800. The farm there was tenanted by the Turnbulls in the 19th century. Sometime in the latter part of the 19th century the cottage was pulled down to build an addition to the blacksmith’s house near the Bridge (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Nut Bank (nu'-bawngk) n. former name for a small piece of land in Minto Parish. This is probably the place transcribed from the Selkirk Protocol Books as ‘Nukland’ in 1531, which the Turnbulls of Minto assigned to Ralph Davidson. It was ‘Nutbank’ in 1779 and in 1780 when said to belong to Robert Irvine (although also said to be included in the lands of Deanfoot liferented to Robert Trotter), with a rent of 10s. It is ‘Nut Bank’ in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, with a value of £1 10s 6d.

Nutt (nu') n. former farmstead in the hills above Harwood-on-Teviot. It is marked on Blaen’s 1854 map, and is possibly confused with ‘the Holt’ or ‘Hott Hill’.

David son of Joe, he was Managing Director with William Lockie’s. He has been Chairman of the Hawick Partnership and organiser of the Reivers Festival. He was Cornet in 1986. James ‘Jim’ (b.c.1820) from England, he was a woolen fuller in Hawick. He was said to be among those who came to Hawick following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. In 1851 he was living on Wilton Place and in 1861 was at the ‘1st House, Weensland’. His wife was Helen and their children included Robert, James, Elizabeth, Daniel and George. Joe (d.1996) doing National Service with the K.O.S.B. he worked for Peter Scott's until 1961, later becoming Managing Director of William Lockie & Co. A keen Common Riding supporter, he was Cornet in Nutter Campbell (nu’-ur-kawm-bul) n. Robert of Kailzie (d.1845) he was sometimes referred to as just ‘Capt. Campbell’. In 1793 he bought the local estate of Weens (including Nether Boczester) from William Oliver of Dingley, but in 1796 sold it to Adm. Thomas Pringle (who passed it in 1804 to Thomas Cleghorn). His purchase also included feu-duities acquired from Kerr of Abbotrule. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir James Montgomery of Stanhope. A portrait of him and his wife was painted by Sir Henry Raeburn.

Oakhill (ōk-hil) n. Victorian villa-style house off the Braid Road.

Oak leaves (ōk-leevz) n., pl. symbolic adornment worn at certain times during the Common Riding, fancifully imagined to harken back to Druidic times. After the Cornet’s Breakfast on the Friday morning sprigs of oak leaves are given to the guests and worn for the remainder of the day. The Drums and Fifes wear them prominently in their hats. Before the mid-19th century, the Cornet and his guests used to march to the Haugh after the dinner to dance the Reel, each bearing an oak twig on his hat and breast. The wearing of ‘chaplets of oak ... by the young men’ was reported to be an old custom by James Wilson in 1850. The practice of wearing oak leaves discontinued after 1855, but was revived in 1886, and has been a part of the Common Riding ever since. The origin is mysterious, and there are many theories, from pagan symbolism to a relationship with trees near Hornshole – ‘What means that youthful band so gay, With oaken boughs in trim array, With frequent shout, and loud hur- ray, Drum, fife, and fiddle?’ [WiS], ‘... An’ wear an oak leaf in ma coat, An’ join in the sang’ [IJ], ‘Ne’er picked a callant that was prooder Tae weer oaken leaf on shooder’ [MB].

the Oak Trei (thu-ōk-tri) n. well-known former landmark on the New Road, near the entrance to the Volunteer car par. Although it marked no boundary, nor had specific historical significance, it was a familiar sight for generations, and a popular turning point for walks along the New Road, particularly before the Park was acquired. It was said to have been the last of a long line of trees that ran over the hill in a southerly direction, perhaps starting near the Howegate. The tree was cut down in 1984 following storm damage, and a replacement planted in the adjoining sports ground – ‘...Till the auld Oak Tree rocks to our glee, for I really believe – don’t you? – It would like to be the Cornet’ [JYH].

the Oak Trei (thu-ōk-tri) n. the Oak Tree, a public house on the north side of Buccleuch Street, also referred to as ‘the Oak’ (e.g. on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map). This building was later the entrance to Elliot’s skinnery.

ocht (ocht) v., arch. to own, pp. owned, possessed of (and usually following the verb ‘to be’) – ‘Quhae’ll bey awucht them (or aa them) a hunder yeir after thys?’ [JAHM], ‘At yeh shop-door a motor stuid, an forrit A gaed to finnd owt whae was ocht eet’ [ECS], ‘Whae’s ocht this? = whos is this’ [ECS] (cf. awe, awnd, aucht, ownd; note the use of the past participle form to mean ‘is possessed of’ rather than ‘possesses’, switching the subject and object compared with English).

ochts (ochts) pron., arch. anything, aught – ‘Neext A speerd if A cood geet ochts ti cat, – if there was a mael o meat ti be bocht’ [ECS], ‘Game for ochts, A smuived steevly on about thirty yards ahiint um’ [ECS], ‘Hei mae be deed for ochts A ken’ [ECS].

O’Connell Street (ó-kó-nil-stree’) n. built around 1837 and named after Irish statesman and reformer Donald O’Connell (1775–1847). A pended house known as ‘the Rambler’s’ was demolished to make the gap in the south side of the High Street. The street has always had a kink in the middle. The upper part of the south side was demolished after WWII, with further buildings being replaced by a garden and car park in 1972. In 1968 Murray Place was incorporated into the street. It is home to a medical centre, previously the Congregational Church, and a fitness centre, which was previously the local British Legion branch. The Drums and Fifes march up here and over to Brougham Place on ‘the Nicht Afore the Morn’.

the October Tryst (thu-ok-tó-bur-trist, -trist) n. former cattle and horse market, happening on the third Tuesday in October from 1780. It was well known as a market for Highland kyloes and held around the foot of the Vertish Hill or Thorterdykes. By the latter part of the 19th century it had become only a horse market.

Od (ōd) interj., arch. emphatic version of God, used as a mild oath – ‘Od! there’s some fowk has a face for onything’ [JoHa], ‘Od, what a struggle lang they’ve had – But opposition brightens trade’ [JoHa].

o’d (ōd, od) contr. of it, often treated as a single word – ‘Ah’im seek o’d’, ‘A’llhev nane o’d’, ‘there’s nac need o’d’, ‘the worst o’d aye es . . .’, ‘ee deh ken the hauf o’d’, ‘A’m gettin’ about sick o’d, this Canadian wunter’s a croused’ [JEDM], ‘The Borderers lang syne geh thersels an awfih leife o’d’ [ECS], ‘It’s oot o sicht; oo canna sei ocht o’d’ [ECS], ‘. . . bit it disneh say whuther the punners or the bookies cam oot o’d best’ [BW1974], ‘. . . but his mother talked um oot o’d and insted hei became a painter and decorator’ [IWL], ‘. . .there’s a we medicinal refreshment at the end o’d . . .’ [CT], ‘. . . Aw can kindeh mind o’d still’ [RM] (cf. the less common o’t).

the Oddfellihs (thu-od-fe-liz) n. the Scottish Order of Oddfellows Loyal Border League, a mutual aid society. A local branch, Lodge ‘Loyal Border’, No. 5 Waverley District existed in Hawick in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. They met in the Buccleuch Hotel for a while, and the insurance money would be collected weekly from the house of each member. Another lodge was started in Denholm in 1843 and named after John Leyden.

Oddfellihs’ Haa (od-fe-liz-haw) n. Oddfellows’ Hall, also known as the Oddfellows Arms. It was a public house at the foot of O’Connell Street, on the east side (Murray Place for a while) in the mid-19th century. The proprietor in the earlier years was Thomas Scott. The building became the Central Tea Rooms and later the Legion.

odds (ode) n., arch. difference, disparity – ‘A didna ken a grain o odds o’d for aa A hedna seen’t threh kens-whan’ [ECS] (often followed by the preposition ‘o’ meaning ‘in’ here; see also what’s the odds).

Oddy (o-dee) n. Arthur taken on as trainee manager at Hawick knittwear manufacturers Pringle’s in 1924. Along with William MacTaggart, who joined a year later, the pair became Directors in 1932 and Managing Directors a year later, managing the firm through the mid-20th century. He resigned in 1945, leaving MacTaggart as sole Managing Director.

the Odeon (thu-ō-dee-in) n. name for the Exchange Buildings when it became part of the Odeon cinema chain in the mid-20th century.

Ode to Hawick (ōd-too-hlk) n. title of probably the first known example of a poem written to celebrate Hawick, penned by Rev. Robert Cunningham in 1710.

Odin (ōdin) n. supreme Norse deity, god of wisdom, art, culture and the dead, traditionally thought of as one of the gods in the Hawick battle cry ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ – ‘Scotia felt thine ire, O Odin! On the bloody field of Flodden’ [JH], ‘The Common-Riding is at hand, That festival sae great and grand, And ower Auld Hawick waves Odin’s wand The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS] (although the myth persists, there is no historical evidence to believe that Norse gods were ever worshipped in the Borders, and the connection between Hawick and Thor and Odin may well be traced to the Victorian attempts to decipher the ‘Teribus’ slogan, perhaps inspired by Hogg’s rhyming of ‘Odin’ with ‘Flodden’.

Ogill (ö-gul) n. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem Ogil’ when he witnessed the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. ‘Joh. Ogill’ witnessed charters for Adam Hepburne of Craigs in Edinburgh in 1501 and 1506 and could be the same man or related.

Ogilvie (ö-gul-vee, -bee) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1656 for Archibald Stewart and in 1661 for Patrick Redford, for John Tudhope, for James E… (along with John Tudhope) and for William Stewart. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Branzholme. His wife Jean Chisholme’s will is recorded in 1684. The fact that he was at Branzholme suggests a connection between this family and the Scotts of Buccleuch a generation earlier than when there were Ogilvie Chamberlains. He may have been brother of William and perhaps Gideon. He was also surely related to Andrew and James, who were tenants in Branzholme farms in the 1690s. He witnessed a baptism for James Baptie in 1678 and another for Patrick Scoon in 1685. Adam of Hartwoodmyres (17th/18th C.) only son of William and Elizabeth Turnbull. He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1708 he was ‘younger’ when he was listed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Selkirkshire. He was probably the ‘younger of Hartwoodmyres’ who was one of the original members of the ‘Hon-est Country Club’ in 1711. In 1708 he married Jean Erskine of Dryburgh, and she died at an advanced age in 1761. Their children included: Margaret (b.1709), who married William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1732; Elizabeth (b.1711); William of Hartwoodmyres (b.1712); James (b.1714), who may have died young; Katherine (b.1718), born in Hawick Parish, who married Walter Griev, tenant at Branzholme Park; and Isabel (b.1720). He may be the unnamed son of William and Elizabeth Turnbull born in Hawick Parish in 1684. His wife is probably the ‘Mrs Ogilvie’ of Hartwoodmyres, who in 1757 witnessed a baptism for Katherine Ogilvie (her daughter) and Walter Grive. Adam of Hartwoodmyres (1745/6–1809) son of William and Elizabeth Elliot. He may also have been referred to as ‘of Chesters’. He was an advocate and was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1775. He helped form the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. He served as an executor for Henry Elliot of Peel, who died in 1780. He paid the land tax on about £460 for Hartwoodmyres in 1785. He served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, taking over from William (his father) in 1787. He was living at Branzholme in 1785–88 when he paid a tax for 2 female servants, increasing to 3 in 1789 and 1790 and 2 again in 1791. He also paid tax on 2 male servants at Branzholme from at least 1785, and 1 in 1788–94. He was recorded at Branzholme on the Carriage Tax Rolls for 1794/5 and 1797/8, as well as farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and for having 4 carriage or saddle horses. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, where his vote is described as ‘partle a liferent vote from Cornelius Elliot, W.S., his brother-in-law’; if this is true then there has been confusion over the identity of his wife. He was also recorded as a voter in Selkirkshire in 1788. In 1791 he witnessed the baptism of one of Lord Napier’s children at Wilton Lodge. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax at Branzholme in 1785–97, when he had up to 4 horses. In around 1802 he paid about £460 in land tax on Hartwoodmyres. He was listed as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1805. He was a trustee for the estate of William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’. In 1806 he consulted with the Council over the appointment of Hawick’s next schoolmaster. He married Anne Renata, daughter of...
Gavin Elliot of Midlem Mill in 1787; they had a large family. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He appears to have served as Chamberlain until around 1808, after which his trustees are referred to, suggesting he died around then. He died at Branxholme. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Greens in Liddesdale. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, along with ‘L., mason’ (probably ‘Little’), to whom he was surely related. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme. He may have been son of James (who was also a resident of Branxholme). In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for William Oliver, ‘servitor’ in Todshawhaugh. He married Isobel Halliday in Hawick in 1707. Their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1708, with witnesses William Elliot in the Sandbed and Henry Orrock. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish, recorded in a legal document in 1721. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Esther Douglas and their children included: Isobel (b.1735); and William (b.1737). Alexander (1715/6–71) resident of the Greens in Castleton Parish. His wife was Elizabeth Little, who died in 1793, aged 56. Their children included William (1768/9–1818), who died at Greens. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Andrew of Newlands (17th/18th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 and 1697 he leased a third of the farm of Branxholme Mains. James, who also leased a third, must have been a close relative, and he was surely also related to Adam, recorded in Branxholme in 1684. How these Ogilvies were related to the later Chamberlains at Branxholme is unclear; however, it is possible he is son of James, who was also a householder in Branxholme (and died in 1706). Probably the same Andrew witnessed baptisms in 1704 for William Scott in Branxholme, in 1708 for James Scott ‘Laird’ and in 1713 for Thomas Anderson in Branxholme Town. He was also recorded in 1719 in a declaration regarding the comonmy between Wauchope and Templehall. In 1719 he was in Branxholme when his servant William Hume got married to Helen Govenlock (servant to William, also at Branxholme). He was father of William, and the pair witnessed a baptism for John Cavers (herd in Branxholme) in 1711. He also witnessed some of the births of the children of William Ogilvie in Hawick, presumably his son. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for James Henderson in Hawick in 1730. It is unclear if his lands of Newlands were those in Lilliesleaf or Castleton. Andrew (18th C.) recorded in 1754 when the Town Council paid for cords to bind him, as well as paying for him to be watched. He was presumably imprisoned for some crime. Rev. Andrew (1731–1805) son of William and Martha Laing, who were from Hawick. He was the 14th child, his father being tenant at Broadhaugh. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Langholm in 1758 and ordained by the Dissenting Church of Newcastle at the Groatmarker Meeting-house. He became minister at Linton in 1781. He married Agnes Lomax from Newcastle in 1767 and she died in 1808. Their children were: Eleanor; Jane; Margaret; William; Joseph; and John. He wrote about the Parish of Linton for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. David of Brieryards (1726-c.83) probably son of William. He paid the window tax for Brieryards in 1748. His daughter Martha married Thomas Turnbull in 1757 and he witnessed baptisms for the couple in 1758 and 1759. He was added to the voters’ roll for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was involved in a court case against Capt. John Douglas of Cavers. He was probably the Ogilvie of ‘Brieryards’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. Brieryards passed to the Turnbulls (through his daughter) in 1783, suggesting that he was deceased by then. George (d.1807) listed as a ‘messenger’ in Hawick on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His death is recorded in the Scots Magazine, where he is also ‘messenger’, presumably meaning he was some kind of agent, possibly a ‘messenger-at-arms’, a lawyer appointed to execute summonses. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1794 for James Scott and Isabel Hogg. He was probably the George who was married to Margaret Learmonth and who had several children born in Hawick: Janet (b.1780); Thomas (b.1781); John (b.1783); Alexander (b.1785); Michael (b.1788); Mary (b.1790); Margaret (b.1792); and George (b.1794). Gideon (17th C.) one of the earliest known members of this Roxburghshire family. In 1656 he married Susannah Scott of Harden (probably daughter of Sir William Scott). Their son William was the first Laird of Hartwoodmyres. Henry (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as proprietor of Hartwoodmyres. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. James (d.1706) indweller in Branxholme. In 1694 he was recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 and 1697 he leased... a third of the farm of Branxholme Mains. Andrew, who also leased a third, must have been a close relative (perhaps his son) and he was surely also related to Adam, recorded in Branxholme in 1684. He is probably the James who (along with Francis Scott in Branxholme) witnessed a baptism for Walter Chisholme in 1684. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for a Grieve in 1698. In 1700 James Scott in Stobice was fined for ‘forestalling of the public market’ by buying a lamb from his servant and then selling it to a butcher. In 1702 he witnessed baptisms for John Scott (also in Branxholme), for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield and for James Laidlaw (in Branxholme Town). He was recorded as tenant in Branxholme (along with John Scott) when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, herd in Branxholme Town. In 1704 he was ‘tenant in Branocholm’ when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson. He received the lands of Hoscote ‘in liferent’ in 1705 from William Scott of Harden. He married Jane Elliot and their son was William, possibly the William born in Hawick around 1670. He witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1701, including one for Bailie Walter Elliot. His daughter Jane died in 1701 (when he gave money to the Parish). Other children were Adam, Andrew (probably the resident of Branxholme) and Alexander. He is probably the James who rented quarter of the farm of Borthaugh in about the period 1690–98. James (18th C.) saddler in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). John (b.1794/5) born in Cavers Parish, he was farmer at Cooms in Ewes Parish. He was there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Jane Common and their children included Janet, Margaret, William, John, Adam, Robert and Sibella. Rev. John H. (19th/20th C.) minister of Lilliesleaf Free Kirk 1926–28, probably its last years. Little (1793/4–1862) stone mason at the Greens in Castleton Parish. He married Jane Little, who died in 1879, aged 81. Their children included: Margaret (1819/20–40); Jane or Janet (1825/6–46); Elizabeth (1826/7–47); Mary (b.c.1827); William (1828/9–1900); Rabina (b.c.1839); Margaret (again, 1842/3–81); and Joan Black (1845/6–1913). He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, and was probably son of Adam from there, who also subscribed. Michael (18th/19th C.) local whip-maker. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Andrew Murray. His sons were John and Andrew, who died in infancy. He could be the spinner Michael whose child died in Hawick in 1815.
Ogilvie

for lands around Newton in Bedrule Parish valued at about £850. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, both times along with his son William. He joined the Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry and served as Deputy Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. He is listed as proprietor of Chesters on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was a friend of the writer Sir Walter Scott. In 1782 he married Hannah (1753–1833), 2nd daughter of Robert Dashwood and widow of Dr. Pasley. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1783); William (b.1785), Chamberlain to Buccleuch; Adam (1792–1872), who married Letitia Keys Spence; George, who died young; Margaret (b.1795); and Jane, who married Donald Horne of Stirkoke. He may be the Thomas ‘Esq’ for whom a child’s baptism appears to be recorded in Hawick in 1786, but crossed out. One of his daughters was probably the inspiration for the tune ‘Miss Ogilvie of Chesters Waltz’, published around 1810. Thomas Elliot of Chesters (1821–1896) eldest son of William and Alexina Falconer. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Hope, only daughter of Henry Reeve. His widow took possession of the estate after his death. William (17th C.) married to Elspeth Turnbull. Their unnamed child was baptised in Hawick in 1684. William of Hartwoodmyres (d.1716) son of Gideon and Susanah Scott of Harden. He was progenitor of the Chesters branch of the family. He could be the William who had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk in 1683 and 1684. He is probably the William who leased the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1691 and who was listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, paying tax on 2 hearths. He was in Todshawhill in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme. He was again listed as tenant of Todshawhill in 1696. He purchased Hartwoodmyres in 1694 and in 1705 bought Brieryyards from the Scotts. In 1695 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. He is probably the Laird of Hartwoodmyres who witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme of Stirches in 1708. He also witnessed a baptism in 1709 for Francis Scott of Newton. He married Elizabeth Turnbull of Tofts and had one son, Adam. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Craik, where he is recorded in at least the period 1713–27. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott of Merrylaw. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, probably included: Andrew (b.1714); Edwart (b.1716); William (b.1716); Alexander (b.1717); Robert (b.1720); Adam (b.1721); an unnamed child (b.1726); and William (again, b.1727). William (c.1670–1755) possibly son of James and Jane Elliot. He was tenant farmer at Broadhaugh. In 1715 he married Martha Laing (c.1680–1735); she was daughter of Bailie William Laing. Most of their children were baptised in Hawick. Their children included: James (b.1716); William (b.1718), probably father of the farmer at Broadhaugh and Whitrope; Jean (b.1720); Walter (b.1721); Janet (b.c.1722), who married John Potts in Castleton; Adam (b.1724); Edward (b.c.1725) died young; David (b.1726) of Brieryyards; Robert (b.c.1727); Alexander (b.c.1728); Martha (1728/9–1825), who married Thomas Turnbull in Hawick and died aged 96; Betsy (c.1730–52); Andrew (b.1731), minister at Linton; and Margaret (b.1735). The witnesses in 1718 were William Laing, ‘lait Bailie of Hawick’ (probably his father-in-law) and John Watson, Clerk (to the Regality). It is possible he is the same man as William of Hoscote. William of Hoscote (18th C.) probably son of Andrew. The pair witnessed a baptism for John Cavers, herd in Branxholme, in 1711 and for Thomas Anderson in Branxholme Town in 1713. In 1718 he is recorded in a baptism being ‘of Dolieridge [perhaps Deloraine], tenant in Branxholm’. In 1718 he was in Branxholme when his servant William Mitchellhill was married. In 1719 he was in Branxholme when his servants Helen Govenlock married William Hume (servant to Andrew, also at Branxholme) and Margaret Grieve married Walter Bowie. He was one of the Commissioners appointed to oversee the construction of the Teviot Bridge in Hawick. He is probably the William ‘in Branxholm of Hahope’ (this being indecipherable, and possible Hoscote is meant) recorded renting from the Duke of Buccleuch in Cavers Parish in 1723; he also rented Meadshaw that same year. In 1731 he obtained the tenancy of Whitchesters from Robert Scott of Falnash. In 1735 he leased Branxholm Park and part of Branxholme Mains from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He also rented Branxholm Park and other properties in 1737. He was one of 4 men to propose building a stillhouse and brewery in 1738, for which Robert Elliot of Fenwick was leased land by the Duke of Buccleuch the following year; this may have become Hawick’s first distillery and brewery on Slitrig Crescent. He witnessed baptisms in 1738 for a daughter of Town Clerk James Weir and for merchant Andrew Riddell. There is a document of 1739 regarding a dispute between him and Walter Scott of Harden over the lands of Hoscote. His daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1728. He may be the same man as the William recorded at Craik in at least 1714–17. It is possible he is the same William as the tenant in Broadhaugh. William of Hartwoodmyres (b.1712) son of Adam and Jean Erskine. In 1741 he was one of the witnesses to the baptism of Walter Scott, last of Crumhaugh. He was Bailie to the Regality of Jedforest and attached baronies, i.e. appointed as factor to the Duke of Douglas for properties in the Southdean area, as well as elsewhere. He is probably the William recorded in Selkirk in receipts ‘for supply’ in 1742 and ‘for burgh cess’ in 1745 and in a discharge of 1744. In 1745 he was visited by members of Prince Charlie’s army on their way to England, and forced to pay a ‘tax’. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch from at least 1756 until about 1786, when he was replaced by Adam (probably his son). He acted as Chamberlain for Melrose, Ettrick Forest, Hассendale and Burnfoot. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for his brother-in-law Walter Grieve, tenant at Branxholme Park. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He appears to have resided at Branxholme from about 1767, the first Chamberlain to do so. In 1777 he had correspondence with William Scott of Woll over shares of the Moss (preserved in the Walter Mason Collection). In 1778 and 1779 he paid tax for having a male servant at Branxholme. In 1745 he married Elizabeth, daughter of William Elliot (who bought Wolfelee). Their children were: Adam (d.1809), also Chamberlain, who died at Branxholme; Thomas Elliot (b.1751); William, who served with the Royal Navy and died in Antigua; and probably Jane (1758–1802), who married Maj. Gen. William Balfour. There are portraits of him and his wife. He (or another William) may also have married a daughter of John Laing of Westerkirk. William (d.1777) younger son of William, Chamberlain at Branxholme. He entered the Royal Navy in 1775 and died of fever in Antigua. William (1768/9–1818) probably son of Alexander and Elizabeth Little. He was farmer at Greens in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. His children included: Elizabeth (Betty, 1796/7–1870), who married Peter Hope; and probably Little (1793/4–1862), stonemason. William ‘Willie’ (1785–1876), J.P., Laird of Chesters, eldest son of Thomas Elliot and Hannah Dashwood. He was born in India, educated at Edinburgh High School, and then trained as an advocate (although he never practised). He became 2nd Lieutenant in the western troop of Roxburghshire Yeomanry in 1803 (although he missed the ‘False Alarm’, being in Edinburgh at college). He was still ‘junior of Chesters’ when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. Before he succeeded to Chesters he lived at Ettrickbank, where it said that Burke and Hare would stop by in 1818 with fresh fish on their wagon (which would later convey a corpse back to Edinburgh). He succeeded to Chesters in 1831 and sold the farm of Newton to Thomas Scott of Peel in 1833. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch at least 1836–76 (replacing Major Riddell of Muselee), dealing with business around Hawick, as well as Teviothead, Jedburgh, Selkirk, Eckford and St. Boswells. He thus continued the tradition of his uncle and grandfather. He was the Chamberlain who was living at Branxholme around 1840 when the castle was renovated. A letter from him protesting about the content of Rev. J.A. Wallace’s sermon in Hawick in 1841 is in the National Archives, as well as further letters relating to the siting of the Free Kirk. He was recorded at Branxholme in the 1841 census, along with a dozen servants. He was still there in 1851, back at Chesters House by 1861, but recorded there as Chamberlain in 1868. He was also Deputy-Lieutenant (from 1827), Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace, Tax Commissioner and member of the Police Board for Roxburghshire. He is said to have been a persuasive canvasser (on the Conservative side) during the elections after the passing of the Reform Bill. He was an original member of the Jedforest Club and was the first President of the Angling Club set up in Hawick in 1858 (but which later folded). He was listed as owner of Chesters and other lands in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. In 1818 he married Alexina, daughter of Alexander Falconer of Woodcot, East Lothian, and she died in 1884 at an advanced age. They had a large family, including Thomas Elliot (who succeeded), William F. (Bengal Army), Alexander, George, Frank and Alexina. He died at Chesters at the age of 91. William (d.1830) said to be brother of Andrew, minister of Linton, and related to the Chesters family. He was probably actually nephew of Rev. Andrew and hence grandson of William, tenant at Broadhaugh. He is probably the William who farmed at Broadhaugh himself. ‘Mr Wm. Ogilvie, Broadhaugh’ is listed among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (18th/19th C.) possibly son of Robert, who was farmer at Broadhaugh in 1797. He farmed at Whitrope as well as Broadhaugh. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1825 he married Janet Byers, who died in 1888, aged 84. Their son was William Robert (b.1827). William Robert (b.1827) son of William and Janet Byers. He farmed at Broadhaugh and Whitrope. He was listed at Broadhaugh in 1866. On the 1851 census he employed 20 labourers, and they had 2 household servants. William Henry ‘Will’ (1869–1963) poet, who wrote many popular Border poems, including ‘The Road to Robertson’, ‘The Raiders’, ‘Ho! For the Blades of Harden’ and ‘The Barefoot Maid’. He was born at Holefield farm near Kelso, where his father George was a reasonably well-off tenant farmer, 3 past generations of his family having served as Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch. He was the eldest boy in a family of 8 and was educated at Kelso Grammar School by a governess, at Prep School in Yorkshire, and at Fettes College. He spent 1889–1901 in Australia working as a drover and breaker of wild horses, and there his poems of the outback life are well-known. He worked at Belalie Station in Queensland and Maroupe Station in South Australia and became a friend of Harry ‘Breaker’ Morant. He briefly lived in America (with an appointment to the Department of Agricultural Literature in State College, Iowa), and returned to Britain in 1905. He later became a journalist in Edinburgh and was Chair of Agricultural Journalism at Iowa University for 2 years. He returned to the Borders and married Madge Scott-Anderson of Ettrickshaws in 1908. They raised their son and daughter at Bowden and then moved to Kirklea in Ashkirk, where he spent the rest of his life. He visited Hawick often, for example as Callants’ Club guest in 1910. He was also a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He wrote for various newspapers and magazines as well as publishing 16 books of verse and 4 volumes of prose, and was appointed official Bard to the Buccleuch Hunt. ‘My Life in the Open’ (1908) is an early autobiography, while ‘Whoop O’ the Rede’ (1909) is an epic poem of over 100 pages, and ‘The Land We Love’ (1910) is a collection. Many of his local poems collected in ‘The Border Poems of Will H. Ogilvie’ (1959, 1993). His ashes were scattered on the ‘Hill Road to Robertson’. Scocha set his poem ‘The Land We Love’ to music in 2004, and used it as the title for their second album. A cairn was erected in his honour in 1993 on the road between Ashkirk and Robertson, with a memorial plaque (sculpted by Bill Landles) and a replica at Bourke in Australia. After being vandalised, a replacement plaque will be placed at Harden. 2019 marked his 150th anniversary, with an exhibition in the Museum, publication of a reproduction version of ‘Whoop o’ the Rede’, the unveiling of the new cairn and a memorial service in Ashkirk Kirk – ‘Your cairn looks down on Ale Water’s vale and the bonny Linns to Hawk’s Nest, Whitslade and Blawearie where the hill road rins’ [GM] (formerly written ‘Ogilvy’, etc. and sometimes ‘Ogilbie’ or ‘Ogilby’).

the Ogilvie Cairn (θu-ò-gul-vè-kàrn) n. memorial cairn erected on the ‘Hill Road to Robertson’ in 1993, with the top sculpted by Bill Landles, depicting an opened book. In 2009 an adjacent stone seat was erected in memory of the founder members of the Will H. Ogilvie committee. The bronze was stolen in 2016.

Old (old) n. Rev. Thomas (1682/3–1737) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1705, he became Chaplain to Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1715 and was ordained at Legerwood in 1717. He married Margaret, daughter of John Fullarton of Auchenhay and their only child was Jane, who married Alexander Fall.

Old Mill Town (old-nil-town) n. also sometimes known as ‘Auld Mill Toon’, a song about Hawick, written by David Finnie in 2001. It appeared on the 2002 CD of his band ‘3D’. It has been sung by Finnie and Debbie Lyons at Common Riding functions regularly since. Originally scored for guitar, it was arranged for piano by Ian Seeley. Although clearly about our Town, the word ‘Hawick’ does not appear in the lyrics. The Old Statistical Account (ˈɑld-ˈstə-tis-ik-əl-kənt) n. published as 'The Statistical Account of Scotland' in 1791–92, it became known as the ‘Old’ or (sometimes ‘First’) ‘Statistical Account’ after the appearance of the ‘New Statistical Account’ in 1834–45. The work was the result of questionnaires sent by Sir John Sinclair of Ulster to over 900 parish ministers, with 160 questions covering geography, population, agriculture, industry and other topics. The individual parish reports, written by the local ministers, offer an invaluable (although clearly biased) picture of Scotland before the changes wrought by the Industrial Revolution. A ‘Third Statistical Account’ was started in the 1950s, with Roxburghshire being the last volume, published in 1992.

Oliphant (ˈəl-ə-fun) n. Adam (d.1746) he was ordained as minister of Glenbuchat in Aberdeenshire in 1718. In 1721 he was one of the preachers who filled in at St. Mary’s Kirk when the incumbent was ill; his name was recorded there as ‘Olifer’. In 1721 he married Margaret, daughter of Bailie Martin of Hawick and she died in 1755. Their children included James (merchant in Edinburgh), Samuel, John, Ann and Margaret.

Margaret Oliphant Wilson (1828–97) Scottish novelist who usually wrote as ‘Mrs. Oliphant’. Born near Musselburgh, daughter of Francis W. Wilson and Margaret Oliphant. She married her cousin Frank Wilson Oliphant. Her husband died of consumption and she had to support her 3 surviving children through her writing. She wrote mainly historical fiction, including ‘Lilliesleaf: Being a Concluding Series of Passages in the Life of Mrs. Margaret Maitland’ (1855), which used the name of the local village, but had no other connection with it.

Oliver (ˈəl-ə-vur, -fər) n. Abraham (17th/18th C.) recorded at Smalldeanfoot on the 1696 Hearth Tax Rolls. He may thus have been related to the famous ‘Ringan’. Adam ‘Adie’ (15th C.) tenant at Nether Dykeraw in 1541, along with James, Michael, John and Robert. Adam ‘Adie’ (16th C.) listed as tenant at ‘Rowntrehil’ in 1541 along with Marion and John, paying 11 shillings. Several other Oivers (John, Robert and Robert ‘the schireff’) were tenants in the other parts of the farm and may be related. Adam (16th C.) listed at Hyndhaughhead among Scotsmen who pledged loyalty to the English Crown in 1544. His name comes after ‘Dande’, in the same place, and so he was probably the son or younger brother. Adam ‘Adie’ (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Dand the Lover’. The pair were listed among Scots and other local men who were accused in 1590 of a raid into England 3 years earlier. His name is recorded as ‘Eddie’, which was often an English transcription of ‘Adie’. Probably the same man was listed as ‘Ady Olipher called the Luther’ when he was declared a fugitive in 1605. Adam (17th C.) recorded in a rental roll of 1669 along with Robert Laidlaw. It is unclear where they were tenants, but perhaps Northbank or Slack. Adam (d.1808) gardener in the ‘East end of the Town’. He died in Hawick. Adam (1774/5–1848) farmer at Chapel in Lilliesleaf. He married Mary Hall, who was from Bowden and died in 1856, aged 65. Their children included: Adam (b.1803); Andrew (c.1810–92); Anne (d.1899), who married Thomas Turnbull; Mary (b.c.1820); and Thomas (b.c.1822). His children were mostly born in Jedburgh Parish. His wife was a widow at Chapel (recorded aged 77) on the 1851 census for Lilliesleaf. He and his wife are buried in the graveyard at Jedburgh Abbey. Adam (1803–77) eldest son of Adam, farmer at Chapel in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was a gardener in Jedburgh. He married Elizabeth Cumming. Their children Adam, Thomas and William emigrated to Australia. Adam (1825/6–86) born in Langholm Parish, son of Robert and Elizabeth Little. He was a joiner on North Hermitage Street in Newcastle upon Tyne. He was probably the Adam who was an elder of Newcastle-U.P. Kirk in the latter part of the 19th century. He married Marion Murray, who died in 1895, aged 68. Their children included: Robert (1847–49); David, who died in infancy; Margaret (1851/2–67); Helen
